Engelhardt, Anton Yevstafyevich (1795-1872) — Russian general; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 454-55, 472
Page me8.597
Engels — Prussian colonel and, from 1851, general; commandant of Cologne (in the 1840s and 1850s). — 268, 400, 527, 528
Page me8.597
Engels, Frederick (1820-1895). — 58, 81, 182, 208, 224, 317, 475, 497-98, 499, 500, 505, 511, 515, 516, 517, 518, 521, 522, 523, 526, 529
Page me8.597
Erbach — Austrian army officer, an aide-de-camp of Windischgrätz; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 479
Page me8.597
Escher, Alfred (1819-1882) — Swiss politician, lawyer, moderate liberal; President of the Great Council of the Zurich canton (1847), federal representative in Tessin: from 1849 repeatedly elected President of the National Council. — 57, 59, 61, 86, 108, 119, 141, 144, 148, 151, 241

Page Break me8.598

Page me8.598
Esser, Christian Joseph (born c. 1809) — German worker, member of the Cologne Workers' Association; editor of its newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit in 1849. — 188, 189, 191-94, 319, 513, 524, 525
Page me8.598
Esser I, Johann Heinrich Theodor — Prussian official, lawyer, clerical; in 1848 Vice-President of the Prussian National Assembly (Centre). — 198

Page me8.598
Esser II, Ferdinand Joseph — Prussian official, clerical; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly in 1848 (Right Centre); President of the Cologne Citizens' Association. — 198
Page me8.598
Esser, J.P. — Prussian judiciary official, counsellor of the Rhenish Court of Appeal in Berlin, democrat; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing); in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber (Left wing). — 197-99
Page me8.598
Este, Maximilian Joseph Johann Ambros Karl, Archduke of Austria (1782-1863) — Master of the Ordnance, chief of the 4th Infantry Regiment of the Austrian army. — 452
Page me8.598
Esterházy of Galántha, Paul Anthony (Pál Antál), Prince (1786-1866) — Hungarian magnate, diplomat in the service of the Austrians, Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Hungarian Government (March-September 1848). — 399
Page me8.598
Eytel, Jules (1817-1873) — Swiss politician, a radical leader in the Waadt (Vaud) canton, deputy to the National Council (1848). — 57, 58, 140, 147, 148
Page me8.598
F
Page me8.598
Falkenheim — German democrat, President of the “Germania” society in Breslau (Wroclaw) (1848). — 315
Page me8.598
Faucher, Léon (1803-1854) — French writer and politician, moderate liberal, Orleanist; Minister of the Interior (December 1848-May 1849). later Bonapartist. — 281
Page me8.598
Fazy, Jean Jacob (James) (1794-1878) — Swiss statesman and journalist, radical, head of government of the Geneva canton (1846-53 and 1855-61); in the 1850s pursued a pro-Bonapartist policy. — 57
Page me8.598
Ferdinand II (1810-1859) — King of Sicily and Naples (1830-59). — 183, 213, 216, 225, 251
Page me8.598
Fischbach — German democrat; took part in the democratic banquet organised in 1849 by the Workers' Association in Mülheim (Rhine Province). — 522
Page me8.598
Fischer, Alois — Swiss conservative politician, member of the Council of States and, from November 1848, of the National Council. — 56, 59
Page me8.598
Fligely, August von (1810-1879) — Austrian colonel, participant in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 461
Page me8.598
Flottwell, Eduard Heinrich von (1786-1865) — Prussian statesman; Finance Minister (1844-46), Oberpräsident of Posen and later of Westphalia; in 1848-49 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right wing). — 383, 385, 388, 389
Page me8.598

Fonton, Felix Petrovich, von (b. 1801) — Russian diplomat; in 1848 counsellor of the Russian Embassy in Vienna. — 211
Page me8.598
Förster, Franz (d. February 1849) — Hungarian patriot, shot by decision of the Austrian court martial. — 416
Page me8.598
Fourier, François Marie Charles (1772-1837) — French utopian socialist. — 260
Page me8.598
Francis Charles (Franz Karl) (1802-1878) — Archduke of Austria, father of Emperor Francis Joseph I. — 92
Page me8.598
Francis (Franz) Joseph I (1830-1916) — Emperor of Austria (1848-1916). — 212
Page me8.598
Franscini, Stefano (1796-1857) — Swiss radical politician and economist of Italian descent; in 1848 deputy to the Federal and the National Councils. — 85-87, 95, 97, 112, 113, 151
Page me8.598
Frederick II (Frederick the Great) (1712-1786) — King of Prussia (1740-86). — 385

Page Break me8.599

Page me8.599
Frederick VII (Frederik Carl Christian VII) (1808-1863) — King of Denmark (1848-63). — 223
Page me8.599
Frederick William III (1770-1840) — King of Prussia (1797-1840). — 31, 75, 99
Page me8.599
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 31, 32, 33, 45, 53, 199, 222, 244, 329, 386, 413, 527
Page me8.599
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German romantic and later revolutionary poet, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49). — 210, 525
Page me8.599
Frey (Frei), Remigius Emil (1803-1889) — Swiss statesman, lawyer; deputy of the Basle canton to the National Council (1848-51). — 57, 98, 108, 141
Page me8.599
Frey-Hérosé (Frei-Herose), Friedrich (1801-1873) — Swiss military man and politician; in 1848 deputy to the Federal and the National Councils. — 57, 85, 87, 98, 113
Page me8.599
Funk — German democrat, member of the Cologne Democratic Society (1848). — 529
Page me8.599
Funk, Alexander Ludwig (1806-1871) — Swiss politician and statesman; President of the Federal Assembly (1848), then deputy to the National Council. — 10, 42, 86
Page me8.599

Furrer, Jonas (1805-1861) — Swiss politician, moderate liberal, lawyer; in 1848 President of the Diet and then of the Swiss Confederation, Burgomaster of Zurich. — 10, 44, 57, 61, 83-86, 98, 113, 114, 136, 144, 150-52, 179, 181
Page me8.599
G
Page me8.599
Gagern, Heinrich Wilhelm August, Baron von (1799-1880) — German politician, from May to December 1848 deputy to and President of the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre), Imperial Prime Minister (December 1848-March 1849). — 51
Page me8.599
Gagern, Maximilian Ludwig, Baron von (1810-1889) — German official, in 1849 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); brother of Heinrich Gagern. — 67
Page me8.599
Gaj, Ljudevit (1809-1872) — Croatian journalist, philologist and politician, one of the leaders of the South-Slav (Illyrian) national movement, advocate of a federation of national regions under the Habsburg monarchy. — 233
Page me8.599
Geiger, Wilhelm Arnold — Prussian police official, examining magistrate (1848) and then Police Superintendent in Cologne. — 192, 483, 527
Page me8.599
Gierke — Prussian official, in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre); Minister of Agriculture in the Auerswald-Hansemann Government (June-September 1848); deputy to the First Chamber in 1849. — 168, 197, 199
Page me8.599
Gioberti, Vincenzo (1801-1852) — Italian politician, philosopher, representative of the liberal-monarchist wing of the national movement; from December 1848 to February 1849 Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont). — 456
Page me8.599
Girardin, Émile de (1806-1881) — French journalist and politician; between the 1830s and 1860s was editor of La Presse several times; notorious for his lack of principles in politics. — 23
Page me8.599
Gladbach, Anton (d. 1873) — German democrat; in 1848 deputy of Mülheim to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing), President of the Democratic Club in Berlin. — 522, 529
Page me8.599
Gläser — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 406, 407, 423, 437
Page me8.599
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 30, 68, 276, 295, 395
Page me8.599
Görgey, Arthur (1818-1916) — military leader of the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, a commander and, from April to June 1849, commander-in-chief of the Hungarian army, War Minister (from May 1849); expressed conservative sentiments of the nobility;

Page Break me8.600

Page me8.600
became an advocate of agreement with the Habsburgs and then of capitulation. — 292, 298, 301, 404-05, 424, 430, 434, 435, 451, 452, 457, 458-60, 466, 468, 473, 480
Page me8.600
Görgey — wife of Arthur Görgey. — 473
Page me8.600
Gottschalk, Andreas (1815-1849) — German physician, member of the Cologne community of the Communist League; President of the Cologne Workers' Association (April-June 1848); represented “Left” sectarian trend in the German working-class movement. — 188-96, 474, 475, 483, 513
Page me8.600
Götz, Christian (1783-1849) — Austrian general, took part in suppressing the Italian national liberation movement and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 292, 400, 404, 405, 424, 425, 434, 458, 459, 466, 480
Page me8.600
Gräff, Joseph — German democrat, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing); in November 1848 acting Burgomaster of Bonn. — 39
Page me8.600
Grammont von Lithal, Franz, Baron (1799-1849) — Austrian general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 302
Page me8.600
Grassalkovich (19th cent.) — owner of a castle in Gödöllö (near Pest). — 473
Page me8.600
Grimm brothers — see Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl and Grimm, Wilhelm Carl
Page me8.600
Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) — German philologist, author of a historical grammar of the German language (Die deutsche Grammatik) and of folklore adaptations; professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin, liberal. — 106
Page me8.600
Grimm, Wilhelm Carl (1786-1859) — German philologist, co-author of his brother in his main works, professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin. — 106
Page me8.600
Groote, von — Prussian judiciary official, witness for prosecution at Gottschalk's trial, — 191, 195, 284
Page me8.600
Guerazzi, Francesco (1804-1873) — Italian writer and politician, moderate democrat; member of the Tuscany Provisional Government (from February 1849), head of executive power in Tuscany (March and April 1848). — 104
Page me8.600
Guffanti, Wiegand — German merchant, democrat; member of the Cologne People's Committee (1848). — 529
Page me8.600
Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874) — French historian and conservative statesman; actually directed home and foreign policy of France from 1840 until the February revolution of 1848. — 66, 129, 307, 421

Page me8.600
H
Page me8.600
Haaf, Chr. — member of the Lausanne Workers' Association (1848). — 506
Page me8.600
Habsburg (-Lothringen), Wilhelm Franz Karl (b. 1827) — Archduke of Austria, held commanding posts in the Austrian army (1848-49) which took part in suppressing the national liberation movement in Italy and in the war against revolutionary Hungary. — 408
Page me8.600
Habsburgs — dynasty of emperors of the Holy Roman Empire from 1273 to 1806 (with intervals), of Austria (from 1804) and of Austria-Hungary (from 1867 to 1918). — 228, 229, 236
Page me8.600
Hampden, John (1595-1643) — English politician during the 17th-century revolution, a leader of opposition to the absolutist regime. — 338
Page me8.600
Hanow, Friedrich — German official; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre); in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber (Left wing). — 175
Page me8.600
Hansemann, David Justus (1790-1864) — German capitalist, a leader of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie; Prussian Finance Minister (March-September 1848). — 30, 151, 157, 158, 160, 163, 167-79, 182, 192, 255, 257, 261, 267, 315, 316, 321, 484
Page me8.600
Hattemer, Heinrich (1809-1849) — German philologist, participant in the Baden republican uprising in

Page Break me8.601

Page me8.601
April 1848; refugee in Switzerland; a leader of the “Hilf Dir” military association. — 242
Page me8.601
Hatzfeldt, Melchior Gustav Paul, Count von H.-Wildenburg (1831-1901) — German diplomat, son of Sophie Hatzfeldt. — 475
Page me8.601
Haugh — judge of the Provincial Court, deputy to the Berlin National Assembly (Centre). — 45
Page me8.601
Haulik, György (1788-1869) — Archbishop of Zagreb, big landowner. — 469, 470
Page me8.601
Hausmann — German worker, took part in the democratic banquet in Cologne on February 24, 1849. — 530
Page me8.601

Hébert, Michel Pierre Alexis (1799-1887) — French lawyer and statesman, Orleanist; Chief Public Prosecutor of the Royal Court (from 1841), Minister of Justice (1847-February 1848). — 307
Page me8.601
Hecker — Prussian judiciary official, Public Prosecutor in Cologne (1848). — 81, 82, 192, 316, 319, 496
Page me8.601
Hecker, Friedrich Karl Franz (1811-1881) — German democrat, a leader of the Baden republican uprising in April 1848; emigrated first to Switzerland and then to the USA. — 67, 72
Page me8.601
Heckscher, Johann Gustav (1797-1865) — German lawyer, Imperial Minister of Justice (July-August 1848) and Minister of Foreign Affairs (August-September 1848); ambassador of the Imperial Government to Italy; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre). — 67
Page me8.601
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 130, 234, 274
Page me8.601
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 33, 71, 130, 256, 272, 366
Page me8.601
Heinrich LXXII (1797-1853) — Prince of Reuss-Lobenstein-Ebersdorf, a tiny German principality (1822-48). — 260
Page me8.601
Helena — see Yelena Pavlovna
Page me8.601
Hengstenberg, Ernst Wilhelm (1802-1869) — German theologian, professor of Berlin University, editor of the Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, extreme conservative. — 106
Page me8.601
Henkel, Karl Heinrich (1802-1873) — German lawyer; elected to the Frankfurt National Assembly in 1848; resigned on July 3, re-elected in March 1849 (Left Centre). — 195
Page me8.601
Henry V — see Chambord, Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie Dieudonné d'Artois, duc de Bordeaux, comte de
Page me8.601
Herczmanovsky — major of the Austrian army, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 302
Page me8.601
Hergenhahn, August (1804-1874) — Public Prosecutor at the Supreme Court of Appeal in Wiesbaden; Prime Minister of Nassau (1848-49); deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); an imperial commissioner sent to Berlin in November 1849 to settle the conflict between the King and the Prussian Assembly. — 65
Page me8.601
Hermes, Johann Timotheus (1738-1821) — German theologian and writer; author of the novel Sophiens Reise von Memel nach Sachsen. — 67
Page me8.601

Herwegh, Georg Friedrich (1817-1875) — German democratic poet; a leader of the German Democratic Society in Paris (1848). — 240
Page me8.601
Herx — leader of the Workers' Choral Society in Cologne. — 530
Page me8.601
Herzog, Karl (1798-1857) — Swiss journalist and liberal politician, editor of the Berner Verfassungs-Freund. — 248
Page me8.601
Heydt, August, Baron von der (1801-1874) — banker in Elberfeld, Prussian statesman; Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works (December 1848-62); deputy to the Second Chamber in 1849. — 160
Page me8.601
Hildebrandt, Johann Andreas Karl (1764-1848) — German writer, author of adventure stories and tales of chivalry. — 168
Page me8.601
Hobbes, Thomas (1588-1679) — English philosopher. — 165
Page me8.601
Hoffmann — Prussian Landrat in Oppeln (1849). — 269
Page me8.601
Hohenzollern — see Frederick William IV

Page Break me8.602

Page me8.602
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 14, 273
Page me8.602
Homberger, Heinrich (1806-1851) — Swiss liberal politician, lawyer; from 1848 deputy of the Waadt (Vaud) canton to the National Council. — 147
Page me8.602
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 68, 143
Page me8.602
Hrabovsky (Hrabovszky) von Hrabova, Johann (Janos), Baron (1779-1852) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal of Hungarian descent; in early 1847 commander of troops in Slavonia and Syrmien; in 1848 headed the Hungarian army fighting against the Southern Slavs; in 1850 was sentenced to death for non-fulfilment of military duties; later the death sentence was commuted to ten-year imprisonment. — 444
Page me8.602
Hungerbühler — Swiss statesman and politician; deputy of the Berne canton to the National Council (1848-75). — 108
Page me8.602
Hünnemann — police inspector in Cologne (1848). — 190
Page me8.602
I
Page me8.602

Imobersteg (Im Obersteg, im Obersteg), Jakob (1813-1875) — Swiss lawyer; deputy to the National Council (1848-58); member of the Supreme Court (1846-49). — 57
Page me8.602
J
Page me8.602
Jablonowsky, Felix, Prince (1808-1857) — Austrian major-general; took part in suppressing the popular uprising in Prague (in June 1848) and in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 405, 424, 480
Page me8.602
Jäde, Karl Heinrich Christian (1815-1873) — German writer, member of the Jena District Committee of Democrats (1848). — 342
Page me8.602
James (Joseph) II (1741-1790) — Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (1765-90). — 421
Page me8.602
James II (1633-1701) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1685-88). — 15
Page me8.602
Jauch, Franz (1807-1867) — Swiss lawyer, liberal, member of the Federal Court (1848-52). — 42
Page me8.602
Jellachich de Buzim (Jellacic), Josef, Count (1801-1859) — Austrian general, Ban of Croatia, Dalmatia and Slavonia (1848-59); took an active part in suppressing the popular uprising in Vienna in October 1848 and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 23, 51, 68, 93, 103, 120, 164, 235, 237, 347-48, 373, 375, 399, 400, 410, 412, 416-17, 425, 428, 434, 438, 447, 452, 470, 479
Page me8.602
Jenni (Jenny) — Swiss radical journalist, editor of the Berne humoristic newspaper Gukkasten. — 249
Page me8.602
John (Johann Baptist Joseph Fabian Sebastian) (1782-1859) — Archduke of Austria; Imperial Regent of Germany (June 1848 to December 1849). — 68, 89, 99
Page me8.602
Jolly — member of the Swiss Federal Court; in 1848 deputy of the Freiburg (Fribourg) canton to the National Council. — 42
Page me8.602
Jovanovich — Serbian major, took part in the Serbian national movement in the Voivodina and in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 441
Page me8.602
K
Page me8.602
Kalbermatten, Wilhelm (1793-1875) — Swiss general; headed the counter-revolutionary coup d'état in the Wallis (Valais) canton in 1844; in 1847 fought for the Sonderbund in the civil war; after its defeat emigrated to Italy, served in the Papal army. — 148

Page me8.602
Kamp — German democrat, attended the democratic banquet in Cologne on February 24, 1849. — 530

Page me8.602
Kamptz, Karl Christoph Albert Heinrich von (1769-1849) — Prussian conservative statesman, Minister of Justice (1832-42). — 381, 382

Page Break me8.603

Page me8.603
Karrer, Karl, von Bumpliz (1815-1886) — Swiss lawyer; deputy of the Berne canton to the National Council (1848-86); member (from 1850) and later President of the Berne Great Council. — 113
Page me8.603
Kasinsky — one of the commanders of the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848 and 1849. — 427
Page me8.603
Katzenmaier (Katzenmayer), Nepomuk — German merchant, participant in the Baden republican uprising in April 1848, later refugee in Switzerland. — 117
Page me8.603
Keisewetter, von — Austrian major, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 404
Page me8.603
Kern, Johann Konrad (1808-1888) — Swiss politician, lawyer and diplomat; from November 1848 deputy of the Thurgau canton to the National Council, from July 1850, President of the National Council; President of the Federal Court (1848-49). — 42, 144, 147
Page me8.603
Kinkel, Johann Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and democratic journalist, participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; fled to London where he became a petty-bourgeois refugee leader and fought against Marx and Engels. — 396
Page me8.603
Kirchmann, Julius Hermann von (1802-1884) — German lawyer, writer and philosopher, radical; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre); in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber, later member of the Progressist Party. — 197, 199
Page me8.603
Kisker — Prussian judiciary official; Minister of Justice in the Pfuel Government (September-October 1848); deputy to the First Chamber (1849). — 321
Page me8.603
Kiss, Ernst (Erne) (d. 1849) — general of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49); executed by the Austrian authorities on October 6, 1849, together with twelve other Hungarian generals. — 479
Page me8.603
Klapka, György (1820-1892) — general of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49); commandant of the Komorn (Komárom) fortress (June-September 1849); emigrated after the revolution; returned to Hungary in 1867. — 460
Page me8.603
Knicanin, Stephan Petrovié (1809-1855) — Serbian politician and statesman; from July 1848 to March 1849 commander of a volunteers' detachment from the principality of

Serbia which took part in the struggle of the Voivodina Serbs against the Hungarian revolutionary army. — 468
Page me8.603
Koller — Hungarian judiciary official (1849), supporter of the Austrian monarchy. — 351
Page me8.603
Kopp, Alois — Swiss politician; member of the National Council (1848). — 57
Page me8.603
Korff, Hermann — Prussian officer, democrat; in 1847 was discharged from the army for his political views; responsible publisher of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); subsequently emigrated to the USA. — 182, 510, 517
Page me8.603
Kortum, Karl Arnold (1745-1824) — German poet and writer, author of the satiric poem Die Jobsiade. — 89, 154
Page me8.603
Kosciuszko, Tadeusz Andrzej Bonawentura (1746-1817) — Polish general and a leader of the national liberation movement; in 1776-83 took part in the American War of Independence; leader of the Polish uprising of 1794. — 372
Page me8.603
Kossuth, Lajos (1802-1894) — leader of the Hungarian national liberation movement; headed bourgeois-democratic elements during the 1848-49 revolution; head of the Hungarian revolutionary Government; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and then to England and America. — 227, 228, 237, 269, 270, 294, 298, 299, 302, 303, 351, 352, 371, 395, 399, 410, 411, 415, 425, 431, 437, 443, 461, 467, 479, 522, 529

Page Break me8.604

Page me8.604
Krahe — German watchmaker; member of the Cologne Workers' Association in 1848-49. — 522
Page me8.604
Krauss, Philipp, Baron von (1792-1861) — Austrian statesman; Finance Minister (1848-51). — 90
Page me8.604
Kühlwetter, Friedrich Christian Hubert von (1809-1882) — Prussian statesman; Minister of the Interior in the Auerswald-Hansemann Government (June-September 1848), later Regierungspräsident in Düsseldorf, Oberpräsident of Westphalia. — 168, 172, 174, 176
Page me8.604
Kulmer, Franz, Baron von (1806-1853) — Austrian politician; viceroy of the Agram (Zagreb) comitat (1840s); from December 1848 Minister without portfolio. — 348
Page me8.604
Kunz (d. October 1848) — Swiss by birth; accountant at Specker's works near Vienna; victim to arbitrary acts of the Austrian military. — 121
Page me8.604

Kurth — German worker, carpenter; in 1848-49 member of the Workers' Association and the Democratic Society in Cologne; took part in the democratic banquet on February 24, 1849. — 529
Page me8.604
L
Page me8.604
Ladenberg, Adalbert von (1798-1855) — representative of Prussian bureaucracy; Minister of Religious Worship, Education and Medicine (November 1848-December 1850). — 32-33, 192, 255, 257, 321
Page me8.604
Lafaurie (Lafourie), Wilhelm Adolf (born c. 1816) — German philosopher; in 1848 member of the District Committee of Democrats in Jena. — 342
Page me8.604
Lamartine, Alphonse Marie Louis de (1790-1869) — French poet, historian and politician; a leader of moderate republicans in the 1840s; from February to May 1848 Minister of Foreign Affairs and de facto head of the Provisional Government. — 66, 124, 125, 126, 213, 214, 362, 363, 414
Page me8.604
Lange, Ferdinand (c. 1823-1849) — candidate of theology; in 1848 member of the District Committee of Democrats in Jena. — 342
Page me8.604
Laroche (La Roche-Stehelin), Benedikt (1802-1876) — Swiss banker; in 1848 Postmaster-General; subsequently held various administrative posts in the Basle canton. — 119
Page me8.604
Lasar, György, Count (1807-1861) — captain of the Austrian army, colonel of the Hungarian revolutionary army; in January 1848 gave himself up to the Austrian command which sentenced him to death, the death sentence being commuted to ten-year imprisonment; released in 1850. — 444
Page me8.604
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German writer and lawyer, petty-bourgeois socialist; in 1848-49 took part in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province; founder of the General Association of German Workers (1863); initiator of the opportunist trend in German Social-Democracy. — 77, 79, 341, 344-46, 463-65, 474, 475
Page me8.604
Latour, Theodor, Count Baillet von (1780-1848) — Austrian conservative statesman; in 1848 War Minister; was killed during the Vienna uprising in October 1848. — 43
Page me8.604
Laugier, K., de — Italian general; in 1848 took part in the national liberation war against Austria as commander of the Tuscan division; later on opposed the republican movement in Tuscany and Rome. — 456
Page me8.604
Ledru-Rollin, Alexandre Auguste (1807-1874) — French journalist and politician; a leader of the petty-bourgeois democrats; editor of La Réforme; Minister of the Interior in the Provisional Government (February-May 1848); member of the Constituent and the Legislative Assembly (head of the Montagnards). — 87, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 129, 213, 529

Page me8.604
Leiningen-Westerburg, Christian Franz Seraphin Vincenz, Count (1812-1856) — Austrian general; participated

Page Break me8.605
Page me8.605
in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 423, 478
Page me8.605
Leopold I (1790-1865) — King of Belgium (1831-65). — 307
Page me8.605
Leopold II (1797-1870) — Grand Duke of Tuscany (1824-59). — 456, 526
Page me8.605
Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729-1781) — German writer, critic and philosopher of the Enlightenment. — 225
Page me8.605
Lessner, Friedrich (1825-1910) — prominent in the German and international working-class movement; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; prosecuted at the Cologne communist trial in 1852; member of the General Council of the First International; friend and comrade-in-arms of Marx and Engels. — 525, 529
Page me8.605
Leuthaus — Prussian judiciary official; examining magistrate in Cologne in 1848. — 46, 192
Page me8.605
Lichnowski, Felix Maria, Prince von (1814-1848) — Prussian army officer; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right wing); killed during the Frankfurt uprising in September 1848. — 82, 504
Page me8.605
Lohbauer, Rudolf — Prussian journalist; in the early 1830s radical, then emigrated to Strassburg; professor in Berne from 1835; in the 1840s returned to Berlin where he contributed to Prussian government and pietist periodicals. — 239, 240
Page me8.605
Louis XI (1423-1483) — King of France (1461-83). — 228
Page me8.605
Louis XVI (1754-1793) — King of France (1774-92); guillotined during the French Revolution. — 15
Page me8.605
Louis Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me8.605
Louis Napoleon — see Napoleon III
Page me8.605
Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orleans, King of the French (1830-48). — 129, 131, 275, 307
Page me8.605

Löwenfels, T.W. — German writer; a refugee in Switzerland; participated in the republican uprising in Baden in September 1848. — 204
Page me8.605
Lubomirski, Jerzy, Prince (1817-1872) — participant in the Slav Congress in Prague; deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet in 1849. — 377
Page me8.605
Lubomirskis — family of Polish princes. — 229
Page me8.605
Lucas — member of the Workers' Association in Mülheim (Rhine Province) in 1849. — 522
Page me8.605
Lüders, Alexander Nikolayevich, Count (1790-1874) — Russian general, in 1848 commander of the occupation corps in Moldavia and Wallachia; in 1849 fought in the war against the Hungarian army in Transylvania. — 436, 472
Page me8.605
Ludwig Joseph Anton (1784-1864) — Archduke of Austria. — 212
Page me8.605
Lusser, Florian (1820-1889) — Swiss Public Prosecutor; deputy of the Uri canton to the National Council (1848-60). — 108
Page me8.605
Luther, Martin (1483-1546) — leader of the Reformation; founder of Protestantism (Lutheranism) in Germany; ideologist of the German burghers. — 35
Page me8.605
Lutter — Prussian official; police inspector in Cologne in 1848. — 190
Page me8.605
Luvini, Giacomo (1795-1862) — Swiss colonel of Italian descent, radical politician, lawyer; in 1847 fought in the war against the Sonderbund; deputy of the Tessin canton to the National Council from 1848. — 114, 115, 118, 140, 141, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 152
Page me8.605
M
Page me8.605
Madarasz, Jozef — Hungarian politician and lawyer, editor of Left newspapers; during the 1848 revolution the Left-wing leader of the Hungarian State Assembly. — 351
Page me8.605
Malkowsky von Dammwalden, Ignaz (1784-1854) — Austrian general of Polish descent; participated in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 472, 473, 478
Page me8.605
Malten, H. — German conservative journalist; editor of the Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung (1848-49). — 421

Page Break me8.606

Page me8.606
Maltheser, Johann — Prussian police spy, bookbinder by trade. — 191, 195, 210
Page me8.606

Malthus, Thomas Robert (1766-1834) — English clergyman and economist, author of the theory of population. — 260
Page me8.606
Mamiani della Rovere, Terenzio, Count (1799-1885) — Italian poet, journalist, philosopher and politician; advocate of constitutional monarchy; Minister of the Interior of the Papal states (May-August 1848). — 103
Page me8.606
Manteuffel, Otto Theodor, Baron von (1805-1882) — Prussian conservative statesman; Minister of the Interior (November 1848-November 1850); deputy to the First and Second Chambers (1849), Prime Minister (1850-58). — 31-33, 38, 47, 51, 53, 65, 99, 255, 257, 259, 261, 269, 270, 446, 450
Page me8.606
Marat, Jean Paul (1743-1793) — a Jacobin leader in the French Revolution. — 530
Page me8.606
Marilley, Étienne (1804-1889) — Bishop of Freiburg (1846-79), instigator of an anti-democratic revolt in Freiburg (Fribourg) on October 24, 1848. — 43, 109
Page me8.606
Märker (Märcker), Friedrich August (1804-1889) — Prussian statesman; Minister of Justice in the Auerswald-Hansemann Government (June-September 1848). — 168
Page me8.606
Marrast, Armand (1801-1852) — French journalist and politician; a leader of moderate republicans; editor of Le National; in 1848 member of the Provisional Government and Mayor of Paris; President of the Constituent Assembly (1848-49). — 23, 104, 125, 143, 214
Page me8.606
Marx, Karl (1818-1883). — 24, 29, 41, 46, 81, 130, 182, 274, 304, 308, 323, 340, 341, 475, 495, 496, 501, 503, 504, 511-14, 517, 522, 523, 527, 529
Page me8.606
Matthys, Andreas, von Rütschelen (1817-1872) — Swiss lawyer, radical; member of the Great Council of the Berne canton from 1846. — 56, 59
Page me8.606
Maurenbrecher, Peter Wilhelm (1777-1861) — Prussian official; Chief Postmaster in Düsseldorf (1817-50). — 77
Page me8.606
Mayerhofer — Austrian top-rank official in the Serbian Voivodina in 1849. — 416
Page me8.606
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — a leader of the national liberation and democratic movement in Italy; in 1849 head of the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic. — 239
Page me8.606
Medem, Pavel Ivanovich, Count (1800-1854) — Russian diplomat, ambassador to Vienna. — 211
Page me8.606
Mellinet, François Aimé (1768-1852) — Belgian general; participant in the democratic movement and the 1830 revolution in Belgium; Honorary President of the Brussels Democratic Association; a defendant at the Risquons-Tout trial. — 189, 530

Page me8.606
Mengen, Karl, Baron von (1774-1851) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 406
Page me8.606
Messenhauser, Caesar Wenzel (1813-1848) — Austrian army officer and man of letters; commander of the national guard and commandant of Vienna during the uprising in October 1848; shot after the city was seized by the Austrian troops. — 249
Page me8.606
Mészáros, Lázár (1796-1858) — Hungarian general; Minister of War in 1848-49; after the suppression of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and then to the USA. — 425, 479
Page me8.606
Metternich, Germain — German democrat; after the September 1848 uprising in Frankfurt emigrated to Switzerland; in May 1849 returned to Germany to take part in the Baden uprising. — 117
Page me8.606
Metternich-Winneburg, Clemens Wenzel Lothar, Prince von (1773-1859) — Austrian statesman and diplomat; Minister of Foreign Affairs (1809-21) and Chancellor (1821-48); an organiser of the Holy Alliance. — 211, 229, 230, 356, 421
Page me8.606
Mevissen, Gustav von (1815-1899) — German banker; in 1848-49 deputy

Page Break me8.607

Page me8.607
to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre). — 255
Page me8.607
Meyendorf (Meyendorff), Pyotr Kazimirovich, Baron von (1796-1863) — Russian diplomat, ambassador to Berlin (1839-50). — 211
Page me8.607
Michel — an editor of Die Evolution. — 205
Page me8.607
Michel, Georg (1804-1867) — Swiss colonel; fought in the war against the Sonderbund; deputy of Graubünden to the National Council (1848-60). — 61, 118, 145, 149, 152
Page me8.607
Mieroslawski, Ludwik (1814-1878) — prominent figure in the Polish national liberation movement; participant in the 1830-31 Polish insurrection, in the preparations for the 1846 uprising in the Polish lands and in the revolution of 1848-49; subsequently a leader of the moderate wing of Polish democratic emigrants; sided with Bonapartism. — 224, 530
Page me8.607
Miguel, Maria Evarist (Dom Miguel) (1802-1866) — King of Portugal (1828-34); head of the clerical-absolutist party. — 20
Page me8.607
Mikhail Pavlovich (1798-1849) — Russian Grand Duke, brother of Nicholas I. — 212
Page me8.607

Milde, Karl August (1805-1861) — Silesian manufacturer; moderate liberal; Minister of Trade in the Auerswald-Hansemann Government (June-September 1848); in May and June 1848 President of the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing). — 168
Page me8.607
Milton, John (1608-1674) — English poet and writer; prominent in the English revolution. — 88
Page me8.607
Minutoli, Julius, Baron von (1805-1860) — Prussian official and diplomat; in 1847-48 Polizeipräsident of Berlin. — 21
Page me8.607
Moga, Johann (János), Prince (1785-1861) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal of Magyar descent; general of the Hungarian revolutionary army; in October 1848 was removed from this post for his refusal to help revolutionary Vienna; after the victory of the counter-revolution sentenced to twenty years of penal servitude. — 444
Page me8.607
Mohammed II (1430-1481) — Sultan of Turkey (1451-61). — 370
Page me8.607
Mohammed IV (1642-1692) — Sultan of Turkey (1648-87). — 370
Page me8.607
Moliére (Jean Baptiste Poquelin) (1622-1673) — French playwright. — 164, 356
Page me8.607
Monk (Monck), George, 1st Duke of Albemarle (1608-1670) — English general and statesman; first monarchist, then general in Cromwell's army; in 1660 helped to restore the Stuarts to power. — 283
Page me8.607
Montecuccoli (Montecuculi), Albert, Count (1802-1852) — Austrian colonel of Italian descent; took part in the suppression of the uprising in Vienna in October 1848 and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 351
Page me8.607
Morison, James (1770-1840) — English quack who amassed wealth through the sale of so-called Morison's pills. — 255
Page me8.607
Morret — Prussian police officer; governor of the prison in Düsseldorf in 1848-49. — 345, 346, 474
Page me8.607
Mosle, Johann Ludwig (1794-1877) — German army officer; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49); imperial commissioner in Vienna (August-October 1848). — 88-90, 92
Page me8.607
Mühler, Heinrich Gottlob von (1780-1857) — Prussian judiciary official; Minister of Justice (1832-44); in 1848 presiding judge of the Supreme Court in Berlin. — 198, 201
Page me8.607
Müller — German worker; took part in the democratic banquet in Cologne on February 24, 1849. — 530
Page me8.607

Müller, Tobias (Tobie) (1795-1875) — Swiss captain and then colonel, served in the Neapolitan army (from 1825); took part in the suppression of the 1848 revolution in Naples and in the war against the Roman Republic in 1849. — 239, 252
Page me8.607
Munzinger, Martin Joseph (1791-1855) — Swiss liberal; member of the Federal

Page Break me8.608

Page me8.608
Council (1848-55); President of the Swiss Confederation (1851). — 83, 86, 113, 119, 136, 141, 179, 181
Page me8.608
N
Page me8.608
Näff, Wilhelm Matthias (1802-1881) — Swiss lawyer and liberal politician; member of the Federal Council (1848). — 57, 86, 113, 184
Page me8.608
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 15, 215, 219, 314, 349, 372, 399, 429, 442
Page me8.608
Napoleon III (Louis Napoleon) (1808-1873) — nephew of Napoleon I; President of the Second Republic (1848-51); Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 23, 69, 104, 125, 213, 238, 281
Page me8.608
Neff, Friedrich (1821-1849) — German artisan; a refugee in Switzerland; took part in the uprisings in Baden in September 1848 and in 1849. — 117, 204
Page me8.608
Nemegey — Hungarian patriot, participant in the revolution of 1848-49. — 407
Page me8.608
Nenstiel, Johann — German merchant; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Centre). — 175
Page me8.608
Nesselrode, Karl Vasilyevich, Count (1780-1862) — Russian statesman and diplomat; Minister of Foreign Affairs (1816-56), Chancellor of State (from 1845). — 66, 211
Page me8.608
Neuhaus, Johann Karl Friedrich (1796-1849) — Swiss moderate liberal; President of the Diet (1841); deputy to the National Council (1848). — 10, 84, 85, 140, 183, 243, 249
Page me8.608
Nicholas I (1796-1855) — Emperor of Russia (1825-55). — 211, 212, 377, 402, 440, 454
Page me8.608
Nicolovius, Georg Heinrich Franz — Prussian judiciary official; Prosecutor-General of the Rhine Province in 1848. — 79, 344, 346, 474-75
Page me8.608
Niethake — German army officer, democrat; member of the Cologne People's Committee in November 1848. — 521
Page me8.608

Niggeler, Niklaus (1817-1872) — Swiss lawyer, radical; editor of the Berner-Zeitung in 1848. — 44, 248
Page me8.608
Nugent, Laval, Count von Westmeath (1777-1862) — Austrian Master of the Ordnance; took part in the suppression of the national liberation movement in Italy in 1848 and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 293, 301, 400, 404, 407, 423, 429, 434, 438, 453
Page me8.608
Nüll, Friedrich van der (died c. 1854) — Austrian colonel and later general; from 1848 commander of the 8th Border Infantry Regiment. — 301
Page me8.608
O
Page me8.608
Ochsenbein, Johann Ulrich (1811-1890) — Swiss statesman and politician; radical and later on liberal; President of the Diet during the war against the Sonderbund; head of the Federal Government (1847-48); in 1848 President of the National Council and member of the Federal Council. — 10, 57-59, 84-87, 98, 108, 113, 117, 137, 179, 181, 205, 240, 248, 249, 252, 253
Page me8.608
Olfers, von — Prussian judiciary official. — 199
Page me8.608
d'Orléans, Louis Philippe Joseph, duc (called Philippe Egalité) (1747-1793) — cousin of the King of France Louis XVI; sided with the Revolution in 1789; deputy to the Convention. — 307
Page me8.608
Ott — German democrat from Worringen (Rhine Province). — 522
Page me8.608
Ottinger, Franz, Baron von (1792-1869) — Austrian general; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 293-94, 302, 409, 425, 427, 428, 433, 479
Page me8.608
Otto, Karl Christian (born c. 1818) — doctor of philosophy; in 1848 member of the Jena District Committee of Democrats. — 342

Page Break me8.609
Page me8.609
P
Page me8.609
Palacký, František (1798-1876) — Czech historian and liberal politician; Chairman at the Slav Congress in Prague in June 1848; deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet in 1848-49; champion of a federation of autonomous Slav areas within the confines of the Habsburg monarchy. — 233, 235, 374
Page me8.609
Palkovicz — Hungarian judiciary official. — 351
Page me8.609
Pallfy, Moris, Count — Hungarian general; sided with the Austrian army and fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1849. — 407

Page me8.609
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, 3rd Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman; Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51), Home Secretary (1852-55) and Prime Minister (1855-58 and 1859-65); a Tory at the beginning of his career, from 1830 onwards, a Whig. — 66, 69, 70, 86, 211
Page me8.609
Paskevich, Ivan Fyodorovich (1782-1856) — Russian general-field marshal; from June 1831 commander-in-chief of the Tsarist army suppressing the Polish insurrection; in 1849 commander-in-chief of the Russian troops participating in the war against revolutionary Hungary. — 372
Page me8.609
Patow, Erasmus Robert, Baron von (1804-1890) — Prussian statesman; Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works in the Camphausen Government (April-June 1848). — 175
Page me8.609
Paul Karl Friedrich August (1785-1852) — Prince of Württemberg. — 212
Page me8.609
Peel, Sir Robert (1822-1895) — English diplomat; son of Prime Minister Sir Robert Peel; chargé d'affaires in Berne (1847-February 1849). — 119
Page me8.609
Perczel, Mór (1811-1899) — general of the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848-49; after the suppression of the revolution emigrated to Turkey and in 1851 to England. — 352, 427
Page me8.609
Pezza, Michele (1771-1806) — Italian merchant; during the Napoleonic wars led the struggle against the French in South Italy; in 1806 was seized and hanged; prototype of Fra Diavolo, the title character in an opera by Auber. — 174
Page me8.609
Pfuel, Ernst Heinrich Adolf von (1779-1866) — Prussian general; Governor of Neuchâtel (1832-48); commandant of Berlin (March 1848); in May 1848 commanded the troops suppressing the uprising in Posen; in September and October 1848 Prime Minister and War Minister. — 7, 14, 17, 38, 75, 175, 176, 269, 321, 334
Page me8.609
Pfyffer, Kasimir (1794-1875) — Swiss lawyer; deputy of the Lucerne canton to the National Council (1848). — 42, 142
Page me8.609
Piattoli — Austrian major of Italian descent; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 302
Page me8.609
Pinder, Julius Hermann (b. 1805) — Prussian official, moderate liberal; in 1848 Oberpräsident of Silesia, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing); deputy to the First Chamber (1849). — 38
Page me8.609
Pinto, Isaac (1715-1787) — Dutch stock-jobber and economist. — 30, 157
Page me8.609

Pioda, Giovan Battista (1808-1882) — Swiss politician of Italian descent; participant in the war against the Sonderbund (1847); deputy of the Tessin canton to the National Council (1848-49). — 59, 61, 118, 142, 143, 148, 150, 151, 152
Page me8.609
Pittet, Benjamin (d. 1863) — Swiss politician and statesman; deputy of the Waadt (Vaud) canton to the National Council (1848-51). — 57, 150
Page me8.609
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 109, 213
Page me8.609
Plougoulm, Pierre Ambroise (1776-1863) — French judiciary official; member of the Chamber of Deputies (1846-48). — 307
Page me8.609
Potockis — family of Polish counts. — 229

Page Break me8.610

Page me8.610
Pottier, Adrien Felix (1793-1855) — Swiss politician; from 1848 to 1855 member of the Great Council of the Freiburg canton and deputy of this canton to the National Council. — 57
Page me8.610
Prinz, W. — member of the Cologne Workers' Association; editor of the newspaper Freiheit, Arbeit; supporter of Gottschalk. — 513
Page me8.610
Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865) — French writer, economist and sociologist, a founder of anarchism; deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848). — 123, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132
Page me8.610
Puchner, Anton, Baron von (1779-1852) — Austrian general; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 350-51, 360, 400, 430, 435-37, 461, 471, 478
Page me8.610
Pustkuchen-Glanzow, Johann Friedrich Wilhelm (1793-1834) — German writer, author of lampoons against Goethe. — 395
Page me8.610
R
Page me8.610
Radetzky, Josef, Count von Radetz (1766-1858) — Austrian field marshal; commander of the Austrian troops in North Italy from 1831; in 1848-49 suppressed the Italian national liberation movement. — 103, 109, 141, 150, 152, 183, 216, 239, 247, 252, 253
Page me8.610
Rajachich (Rajacic), Josef (1785-1861) — Metropolitan of Karlowitz; from 1848 Patriarch of Austrian Serbs; Right-wing leader of the Serbian national movement (1848-49); ruler of the Voivodina from February to August 1849. — 298, 348, 352, 361, 375, 441
Page me8.610

Ramberg, Georg Heinrich, Baron von (1786-1855) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 480
Page me8.610
Raspail, François Vincent (1794-1878) — French naturalist and journalist, socialist; took part in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848; deputy to the Constituent Assembly. — 123, 125, 126, 127, 129
Page me8.610
Raumer, Friedrich Ludwig Georg von (1781-1873) — German historian; in 1848 imperial ambassador to Paris; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre). — 88, 133
Page me8.610
Raveaux, Franz (1810-1851) — German politician, democrat; in 1848-49 deputy of Cologne to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left Centre); imperial commissioner in Switzerland. — 63
Page me8.610
Reiff, Wilhelm Joseph (born c. 1824) — member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League, from which he was expelled in 1850; prosecuted at the Cologne communist trial in 1852. — 513, 526
Page me8.610
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — English economist. — 260
Page me8.610
Riczko — colonel of the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848-49. — 480
Page me8.610
Riedmatten, Augustin (1796-1867) — Swiss army officer; in 1844 headed the counter-revolutionary coup d'état in the Wallis (Valais) canton; in 1848-49 took part in the suppression of the revolutionary movement in Naples and Sicily. — 148
Page me8.610
Rimpler, O. — Prussian retired army officer, from July 1848 commanded the civic militia of Berlin; in November 1848 surrendered to Wrangel's counter-revolutionary army. — 20
Page me8.610
Rintelen, F. Wilhelm von (d. 1869) — Prussian conservative official, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing); Minister of Justice in the Brandenburg Government (November 1848-April 1849); deputy to the First Chamber (1849). — 20, 199-203
Page me8.610
Rittïnghausen, Moritz (1814-1890) — German democratic journalist and politician; contributor to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; member of the Cologne Democratic Society and later of the German Social-Democratic Party. — 475, 529
Page me8.610
Robespierre, Maximilien François Marie Isidore de (1758-1794) — leader of the

Page Break me8.611

Page me8.611
Jacobins in the French Revolution; head of the revolutionary Government (1793-94). — 30, 313, 530

Page me8.611
Rodbertus-Jagetzow, Johann Karl (1805-1875) — German economist; in 1848 leader of the Left Centre in the Prussian National Assembly; subsequently theoretician of “state socialism”. — 4
Page me8.611
Rosa, Šandor — a leader of the Hungarian peasants in their struggle against the feudal lords; on Kossuth's initiative, took part in the war of revolutionary Hungary, fought with his detachment against the Austrian troops; hero of many Hungarian folk songs. — 443
Page me8.611
Röser, Peter Gerhard (1814-1865) — German worker, cigar-maker; a leader of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848-49) and publisher of its newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit; member of the Communist League. — 513, 514, 523, 526, 530
Page me8.611
Rossini, Gioacchino Antonio (1792-1868) — Italian composer. — 91
Page me8.611
Rothe, Karl Gustav (born c. 1823) — German theologian, member of the Jena District Committee of Democrats (1848). — 342
Page me8.611
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical writer, Young Hegelian; in 1848 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing). — 363, 377
Page me8.611
Rukavina, Georg (Dzuro), Baron von Vidovgrad (1777-1849) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal of Croatian descent; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 406, 433, 437, 468, 471
Page me8.611
Rüttimann — Swiss politician; in 1848 deputy of the Zurich canton to the National Council. — 98, 108
Page me8.611
S
Page me8.611
Saedt, Otto Joseph Arnold (1816-1886) — Prussian judiciary official; from 1848 Public Prosecutor in Cologne; conducted prosecution at the Cologne communist trial in 1852. — 396, 397
Page me8.611
Saint-Just, Antoine Louis Léon de (1767-1794) — a Jacobin leader in the French Revolution. — 530
Page me8.611
Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de Rouvroy, comte de (1760-1825) — French utopian socialist. — 260
Page me8.611
Schapper, Karl (c. 1812-1870) — outstanding figure in the German and international working-class movement; a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Communist League Central Authority and of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats; a leader (1848-49) and then President of the Cologne Workers' Association (February to May 1849); after the revolution a leader of a sectarian group in the Communist League; subsequently member of the General Council of the First International. — 41, 46, 340, 341, 475, 501, 503, 513, 514, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 525, 526, 529

Page me8.611
Scharnhorst, Gerhard Johann David von (1755-1813) — Prussian general and politician; War Minister (1807-10) and Chief of the General Staff (1807-13); reorganised the Prussian army. — 116
Page me8.611
Schiess, Johann Ulrich (1813-1883) — Swiss politician and diplomat. — 68
Page me8.611
Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759-1805) — German poet, playwright, historian and philosopher. — 17, 89, 213
Page me8.611
Schinderhannes — see Bückler, Johann
Page me8.611
Schlick zu Bassano und Weisskirchen, Franz Heinrich, Count (1789-1862) — Austrian general, chief of the 4th Hussar Regiment; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 290, 291, 293, 300, 302, 347, 360, 399, 400, 401, 404-05, 424, 425, 433, 434, 438, 451, 452, 458-60
Page me8.611
Schlink — Prussian judiciary official; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing and then the Centre). — 30

Page Break me8.612

Page me8.612
Schmerling, Anton von (1805-1893) — Austrian statesman, liberal; in 1848-49 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); Minister of the Interior (July-September 1848), Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (September-December 1848). — 51, 67-68, 72-74, 89, 90-91, 92, 117, 181
Page me8.612
Schnaase, Karl Julius Ferdinand (1798-1875) — Prussian lawyer and art historian; in 1848 Chief Public Prosecutor in Düsseldorf and subsequently member of the Supreme Court in Berlin. — 315
Page me8.612
Schnapphahnski — see Lichnowski, Felix
Page me8.612
Schneeberger, G. — member of the Lausanne Workers' Association in 1848. — 506
Page me8.612
Schneider II, Karl — German lawyer, democrat; in 1848 President of the Cologne Democratic Society and member of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats; defence counsel of Marx and Engels at the trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on February 7, 1849; in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing). — 24, 29, 41, 46, 307, 317, 325, 340, 341, 501, 503, 519, 520, 521, 529
Page me8.612
Schnyder, Anton — Swiss politician and statesman; deputy to the National Council in 1848. — 57

Page me8.612
Schönlein, Johann Lukas (1793-1864) — German physician, professor of Berlin University; monarchist. — 106
Page me8.612
Schreckenstein, Ludwig Johann Karl Gregory Eusebius, Baron Roth von (1789-1858) — Prussian general; War Minister (June-September 1848). — 168
Page me8.612
Schücking, Levin (1814-1883) — German writer, contributor to the Kölnische Zeitung (1845-52). — 354
Page me8.612
Schultze — Prussian judiciary official; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing). — 176
Page me8.612
Schulzig, Franz Joseph, Baron von (1787-1864) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 424, 458, 459
Page me8.612
Schurter — Austrian general; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 454
Page me8.612
Schwanbeck, Eugen Alexis (1821-1850) — German journalist, an editor of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 347, 354-58, 392, 394, 395, 398-403, 411, 412
Page me8.612
Sedlnitzky, Josef, Count von Choltiz (1778-1855) — chief of the Venice police which was in charge of censorship (1817-48). — 96
Page me8.612
Seiler, Fritz — Swiss colonel; member of the Great Council of the Berne canton (1831-35 and 1838-45); deputy of the Berne canton to the National Council (1848). — 205
Page me8.612
Sethe, Christoph Wilhelm Heinrich (1767-1855) — Prussian judiciary official. — 50, 198
Page me8.612
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English poet and dramatist. — 18, 34, 83, 139, 163, 198
Page me8.612
Sieber, Johann Kaspar (1821-1878) — Swiss teacher and journalist; editor-in-chief of the Murter Wächter and an editor of the Berner-Zeitung. — 252
Page me8.612
Siegel (Sigel), Franz (1824-1902) — army officer from Baden; democrat; participant in the revolutionary movement in Baden; one of the military leaders of the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849; then refugee in Switzerland, England and from 1852 in the USA; took part in the American Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 117
Page me8.612
Siegwart-Müller, Konstantin (1801-1869) — Swiss statesman; President of the Diet (1844); in 1845 Chairman of the Military Council of the Sonderbund; after the latter's defeat fled abroad. — 140
Page me8.612

Simson, Martin Eduard Sigismund von (1810-1899) — Prussian politician and lawyer; in 1848 member and from December 1848 to May 1849 President of the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); in November 1848 was sent as an imperial commissioner to Berlin to settle the conflict between the King and the Prussian Assembly. — 65

Page Break me8.613

Page me8.613
Page me8.613
Simunich, Balthasar, Baron von (1785-1861) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal of Serbian descent; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 351, 400, 407, 408, 434
Page me8.613
Smith, Adam (1723-1790) — Scottish economist. — 259
Page me8.613
Sophia (1805-1872) — Archduchess of Austria, mother of Emperor Francis Joseph I. — 92, 211, 212
Page me8.613
Sossay, Anton, Baron von (1790-1874) — Austrian major-general and subsequently lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 292
Page me8.613
Specker, David (1796-1863) — Swiss director of a works near Vienna; eyewitness of the brutalities of the Austrian soldiery during the suppression of the Vienna uprising in October 1848. — 120, 121
Page me8.613
Spiegel-Borlinghausen, Baron von — Prussian official; Regierungspräsident in Düsseldorf (1848). — 75, 76, 187
Page me8.613
Spöll (d. 1849) — major in the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848-49. — 461
Page me8.613
Stämpfli, Jakob (1820-1879) — Swiss radical; editor of the Berner-Zeitung in the 1840s and 1850s; deputy of the Berne canton to the National Council (1848-54); subsequently President of the Swiss Confederation (1856, 1859 and 1862). — 44, 243, 248
Page me8.613
Standau, Julius — German teacher; participant in the democratic movement in Germany in the 1830s and 1840s; an organiser of the “Hilf Dir” military association in Biel (Switzerland); after the suppression of the revolution emigrated to the USA. — 209
Page me8.613
Steck — Swiss politician; Councillor of State in the Neuchâtel canton in 1848. — 109
Page me8.613
Stedtmann, Karl (1804-1882) — Prussian moderate liberal politician; in 1848 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Centre), member of the commission for signing an armistice in Malmö; imperial commissioner in Schleswig-Holstein (September 1848-March 1849). — 88, 504

Page me8.613
Stehlin (Stehelin), August (1812-1886) — Swiss colonel; deputy of the Basle canton to the Council of States (1848-49); federal representative in Tessin (1848). — 119
Page me8.613
Steiger, Jakob Robert (1801-1862) — Swiss liberal politician, deputy of the Lucerne canton to the National Council (1848-49) and President of the National Council (1848). — 59, 114, 136, 140, 143, 145, 148, 152, 180, 204
Page me8.613
Stein, Julius (1813-1889) — Silesian teacher and journalist; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49 and to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849. — 168, 334, 390, 391
Page me8.613
Stockmar, Xavier (1797-1864) — Swiss radical; deputy of the Jura canton to the National Council in 1848. — 44, 249
Page me8.613
Stoos, Pal (1806-1862) — Hungarian clergyman of Croatian descent; sympathised with the Croatian national movement. — 469
Page me8.613
Stratimirovich, Georg (Dzordze) (1822-1908) — leader of the national movement of the Serbs in the Voivodina, moderate liberal; commander of the Serbian units in the Austrian army; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 298, 347-48, 352, 361, 375, 409, 441
Page me8.613
Streng, Johann Baptist (1808-1883) — Swiss politician; deputy to the National Council in 1848. — 57
Page me8.613
Struve, Amalie (d. 1862) — participant in the democratic movement in Germany in 1848-49; wife of Gustav Struve. — 70
Page me8.613
Struve, Gustav von (1805-1870) — German democrat, journalist; a leader of the republican uprisings in Baden in April and September 1848 and of the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849; after the suppression of the revolution emigrated to the USA. — 67, 69, 74, 136, 180

Page Break me8.614

Page me8.614
Stuarts — royal dynasty in Scotland (1371-1714) and England (1603-49 and 1660-1714). — 263
Page me8.614
Stupp, Heinrich Joseph (1793-1870) — Prussian official, clerical; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing). — 255, 257, 284
Page me8.614
Suleiman II (1642-1691) — Sultan of Turkey (1689-91). — 370
Page me8.614

Šuplikac, Štepán (1786-1848) — Serbian colonel of the Ogulin Border Regiment; subsequently major-general; in October 1848 was elected by the Skupština voivode (commander-in-chief of the Voivodina's troops). — 348, 469
Page me8.614
Sydow, Rudolf von — Prussian diplomat; in 1845-48 Prussian ambassador to Switzerland. — 58
Page me8.614
Szirmay de Szirma, István, Count (1794-1857) — Hungarian aristocrat. — 452
Page me8.614
T
Page me8.614
Tanner, Karl Rudolf (1794-1849) — Swiss poet and politician, President of the Supreme Court in the Aargau canton; in 1848 deputy of the Aargau canton to the National Council. — 57, 144, 148
Page me8.614
Taschereau, Jules Antoine (1801-1874) — French journalist; an editor of Le National; in 1833-38 and 1848 publisher of the journal Revue rétrospective; deputy to the Constituent and the Legislative Assembly (Right wing) in 1848-49; subsequently a Bonapartist. — 421
Page me8.614
Tedesco, Victor André (1821-1897) — Belgian lawyer, socialist; a founder of the Brussels Democratic Association and member of the Communist League; in 1847-48 an associate of Marx and Engels; a defendant at the Risquons-Tout trial. — 530
Page me8.614
Temme, Jodocus Donatus Hubertus (1798-1881) — German democrat; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848 and to the Frankfurt National Assembly in 1849. — 197-200
Page me8.614
Thielemann, G. — participant in the Baden republican uprising in September 1848. — 204
Page me8.614
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman; Prime Minister (1836, 1840); deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848) and to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); hangman of the Paris Commune; President of the Republic (1871-73). — 213, 214
Page me8.614
Thile, Ludwig Gustav von (1781-1852) — Prussian general and conservative statesman; Finance Minister in 1847. — 418, 420
Page me8.614
Thun-Hohenstein, Leo, Count (1811-1888) — Austrian statesman of Czech descent; one of the closest counsellors of Francis Joseph I; Minister of Religious Worship and Education (1849-60). — 374
Page me8.614
Thurn und Taxis, Maximilian Karl von (1802-1871) — German prince; enjoyed hereditary post-office privileges in several German states; owner of the Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung. — 421

Page me8.614
Tilly, Johan Tserclaes, Count von (1559-1632) — commander of the Catholic League's army in the Thirty Years' War. — 297
Page me8.614
Todorovich (Teodorovic), Kusman — Austrian general of Serbian descent; in 1849 took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary. — 293, 353, 400, 406, 416, 423
Page me8.614
Trog, Johann, von Olten (1807-1867) — Swiss lawyer; deputy of the Solothurn canton to the National Council (1848-57). — 57
Page me8.614
Trützschler, Wilhelm Adolf (1818-1849) — German democrat; in 1848-49 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (extreme Left wing); a leader of the Central March Association; was shot in 1849 as a participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising. — 186
Page me8.614
Tschech, Heinrich Ludwig (1789-1844) — Prussian official, democrat;

Page Break me8.615

Page me8.615
Burgomaster of Storkow (1832-41); was executed for an attempt on the life of Frederick William IV. — 413
Page me8.615
U
Page me8.615
Unruh, Hans Victor von (1806-1886) — Prussian engineer and politician; in 1848 a leader of the Left Centre in the Prussian National Assembly; President of the Assembly from October 1848; in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber (Left wing); subsequently a founder of the Progressist Party. — 20, 334
Page me8.615
Urban, Karl, Baron von (1802-1877) — Rumanian colonel and then lieutenant-field marshal in the service of the Austrians; Right-wing leader of the Rumanian national movement in Transylvania; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 423, 472, 480
Page me8.615
V
Page me8.615
Vauthier-Rauchefort — Austrian official; chief engineer of the Ofen (Pest) Board of Works until 1849; sympathised with the Hungarian revolution of 1848-49. — 431
Page me8.615
Veillon, François (1793-1859) — Swiss judiciary official; deputy of the Waadt (Vaud) canton to the National Council (1848-51). — 150
Page me8.615
Vespasian (Titus Flavius Sabinus Vespasianus) (A.D. 9-79) — Roman Emperor (69-79). — 224
Page me8.615

Vetter, Antal (1803-1882) — Hungarian lieutenant-general; Chief of Staff of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49) and its commander-in-chief (March 1849); after the suppression of the revolution a refugee until 1867. — 348
Page me8.615
Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 385
Page me8.615
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro) (70-19 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 31
Page me8.615
Vogel, Karl — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the suppression of the national liberation movement in North Italy in 1848-49. — 405
Page me8.615
Vulpius, Christian August (1762-1827) — German writer, author of Rinaldo Rinaldini. — 69
Page me8.615
W
Page me8.615
Wachter, Karl — German democrat; member of the Cologne Committee of Public Safety in September 1848. — 499, 500
Page me8.615
Waldeck, Benedikt Franz Leo (1802-1870) — German lawyer, radical politician; in 1848 a Left-wing leader and Vice-President of the Prussian National Assembly; subsequently a leader of the Progressist Party. — 197, 198, 199, 390
Page me8.615
Wasa, Gustav, Prince von (1799-1877) — lieutenant-field marshal, from 1831 to 1856 chief of the 60th Infantry Regiment of the Austrian army. — 452
Page me8.615
Weder, Johann Baptist von Oberriet (1800-1872) — Swiss lawyer; deputy to the National Council (1848-51 and 1852-72). — 57
Page me8.615
Weerth, Georg (1822-1856) — German proletarian poet and journalist, member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49. — 19, 504
Page me8.615
Weingart, Johann August (1797-1878) — Swiss radical politician; deputy to the National Council (1848-60); publisher of the Seeländer Anzeiger. — 56, 59, 113, 249
Page me8.615
Weinhagen, Napoleon — German lawyer from Cleve (Westphalia). — 82
Page me8.615
Weisshaar, Jacob — German democrat; participant in the republican uprising in Baden in April 1848; a refugee in Switzerland. — 63
Page me8.615
Welcker, Karl Theodor (1790-1869) — German lawyer and writer, liberal; in 1848-49 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); imperial ambassador to Vienna. — 88, 90, 92

Page Break me8.616

Page me8.616

Page me8.616
Welden, Franz Ludwig, Baron von (1782-1853) — Austrian general; took part in the campaign against the national liberation movement in Italy in 1848; commandant of Vienna after the suppression of the October 1848 uprising; in April and May 1849 commander-in-chief of the Austrian troops fighting against the Hungarian revolution. — 164, 290, 292, 294, 394, 405, 406
Page me8.616
Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, 1st Duke of (1769-1852) — British general and statesman, Tory; Prime Minister (1828-30) and Foreign Secretary (December 1834-April 1835). — 338
Page me8.616
Wessenberg-Ampringen, Johann Philipp, Baron von (1773-1858) — Austrian statesman, Prime Minister (July-November 1848). — 91, 92, 93
Page me8.616
Westermann — member of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848-49). — 513
Page me8.616
Weyers, Peter Wilhelm (born c. 1814) — German worker from Düsseldorf; in 1848 was arrested and committed for trial for carrying on revolutionary propaganda. — 463, 464, 474
Page me8.616
Weyll, Bartholomäus Joseph — German lawyer; in 1848 member of the Democratic Society, the Committee of Public Safety and the People's Committee in Cologne; delegate to the Second Democratic Congress in Berlin (October 1848). — 529
Page me8.616
Wieser, Kaspar (1794-1870) — major of the Austrian army; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 480
Page me8.616
Wildenbruch, Ludwig von (1803-1874) — Prussian diplomat; consul general in Beirut; in 1848 envoy in Copenhagen. — 223
Page me8.616
Wilhelm Franz Karl — see Habsburg (-Lothringen), Wilhelm Franz Karl
Page me8.616
William I (1772-1843) — King of the Netherlands (1815-40). — 263
Page me8.616
William I (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia, King of Prussia (1861-88) and Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 164
Page me8.616
Windischgrätz, Alfred Candidus Ferdinand, Prince (1787-1862) — Austrian field marshal; in 1848 commanded the troops suppressing the uprisings in Prague and in Vienna; in 1848-49 was at the head of the Austrian army fighting against revolutionary Hungary. — 51, 90, 92, 93, 96, 103, 164, 225, 236, 247, 256, 270, 291, 292, 294, 300, 302, 347, 351, 373, 374, 377, 398, 399-400, 402, 404, 405, 408, 410-13, 415, 416, 425, 428, 434, 437, 438, 442, 443-44, 451, 480
Page me8.616

Wittgenstein, Heinrich von (1800-1868) — Prussian official; in 1848 Regierungspräsident (May-September) and commander of the civic militia in Cologne; from November 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) and in 1849 to the First Chamber. — 45, 255, 284
Page me8.616
Wodjaner, Albert — son of Moriz Wodjaner. — 478, 479
Page me8.616
Wodjaner, Moriz, Baron von Kapriora (1810-1885) — Hungarian banker. — 478, 479
Page me8.616
Wöhler — deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly in 1848-49. — 529
Page me8.616
Wolfers, Franz Anton von (b. 1813) — German journalist of Belgian descent, an editor of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 354
Page me8.616
Wolff, Ferdinand (1812-1895) — German journalist, member of the Communist League (1848-49); an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49). — 529-30
Page me8.616
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German proletarian revolutionary, teacher; leading member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; friend and comrade-in-arms of Marx and Engels. — 81

Page Break me8.617

Page me8.617
Wrangel, Friedrich Heinrich Ernst, Count von (1784-1877) — Prussian general, participant in the counter-revolutionary coup d'état in Berlin and the dissolution of the Prussian National Assembly in November 1848. — 17, 18, 51, 75, 157, 223, 261, 296, 321, 334, 357, 447
Page me8.617
Wrbna-Freudenthal, Ladislaus, Count (1795-1849) — Austrian major-general; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 351, 412, 460
Page me8.617
Wulff, Julius — German democrat; President of the People's Club in Düsseldorf (1848); took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849. — 315
Page me8.617
Wysocki, Józef (1809-1874) — Polish politician and general, participant in the insurrection of 1830-31; during the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary commander of the Polish legion in the Hungarian revolutionary army; took part in the Polish uprising in 1863-64. — 443
Page me8.617
Wyss, Franz Salomon (1796-1849) — Austrian major-general; took part in suppressing the October uprising in Vienna (1848) and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 120, 121, 137
Page me8.617
Wyss — architect in Berne, brother of General Franz Wyss. — 137
Page me8.617

Z

Page me8.617
Zayas, Juan Antonio — Spanish ambassador in Switzerland (1848-49). — 137
Page me8.617
Zeisberg, Karl von (1788-1863) — Austrian major-general, subsequently lieutenant-field marshal; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848-49. — 466
Page me8.617
Ziegler, Paul Karl Eduard (1800-1882) — Swiss politician, participant in the war against the Sonderbund (1847); deputy to the National Council (1848). — 60, 61, 149
Page me8.617
Zweiffel — Prussian official; Chief Public Prosecutor in Cologne; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing). — 30, 46, 48, 49, 81, 82, 304, 307, 311-13, 317, 486, 491, 501, 511, 517, 518
Page me8.617
Y

Page me8.617
Yelena Pavlovna (Fridericke Charlotte Marie) (1807-1873) — Russian Grand Duchess. — 212

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me8.617
Achilles — hero of Homer's Iliad; in Greek mythology, one of the Greek leaders in the Trojan War. — 394
Page me8.617
Ajax — a character in Shakespeare's drama Troilus and Cressida. — 139, 149
Page me8.617
Beisele — see Eisele and Beisele
Page me8.617
Cassandra (Gr. Myth.) — a daughter of Priam (King of Troy), prophetess; a character in Aeschylus' tragedy Agamemnon. — 356-58
Page me8.617
Don Quixote — title character in Cervantes' novel. — 68
Page me8.617
Dottore Bartholo — a character in Beaumarchais' comedies Le Barbier de Seville and La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro. — 148
Page me8.617
Eisele and Beisele — main characters in an anonymously published satirical pamphlet by Johann Wilhelm Christern, Doctor Eisele's und Baron von Beisele's Landtagsreise im April 1847. — 89
Page me8.617
Figaro — main character in Beaumarchais' comedy La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro. — 262

Page Break me8.618

Page me8.618
George Dandin — title character of a comedy by Moliére. — 356
Page me8.618
Heracles (Hercules) (Class. Myth.) — hero possessing enormous strength and courage. — 224
Page me8.618
Jehovah (Bib.). — 130
Page me8.618
Jourdain — main character in Moliére's comedy Le bourgeois gentilhomme. — 164
Page me8.618
Jupiter (Rom. Myth.) — supreme god. — 147
Page me8.618
King Lear — title character of a tragedy by Shakespeare. — 83
Page me8.618
Mephistopheles — one of the names of Satan; a character in Goethe's tragedy Faust and one of the main characters in Levin Schücking's Politische Gespräche. — 354
Page me8.618
Moor, Karl, the first — main character, model of the noble knight, in Schiller's drama Die Räuber. — 69
Page me8.618
Rinaldo Rinaldini — title character in a chivalrous romance by Christian August Vulpius. — 69
Page me8.618
Sancho Panza — a character in Cervantes' Don Quixote. — 68
Page me8.618
Sophia — heroine in Johann Timotheus Hermes' novel Sophiens Reise von Memel nach Sachsen. — 67
Page me8.618
Tell, William — hero in a folk tale about the liberation war of Switzerland against Habsburgs at the end of the 13th and the beginning of the 14th century; title character in a drama by Schiller. — 12
Page me8.618
Wagner — a character in Goethe's tragedy Faust and in Levin Schücking's Politische Gespräche. — 354

Page Break me8.619

INDEX OF QUOTED
AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me8.619

Appeal (this volume)— Aufruf. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 147 (second edition), November 19, 1848. — 501, 519

Page me8.619
Appeal (this volume)— Aufruf. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 148 (second edition), November 21, 1848. — 503

Page me8.619
Appeal of the Democratic District Committee of the Rhine Province (this volume)— Aufforderung des demokratischen Kreisausschusses der Rheinprovinz. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 143, November 15, 1848. — 29, 37, 50, 340

Page me8.619
The Bill Proposing the Abolition of Feudal Obligations (present edition, Vol. 7)— Der Gesetzentwurf über die Aufhebung der Feudallasten. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 60, July 30, 1848. — 175

Page me8.619
A Bourgeois Document (this volume)— Ein Bourgeoisaktenstück. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 187, January 5, 1849. — 255-56

Page me8.619
The Bourgeoisie and the Counter-Revolution (this volume)— Die Bourgeoisie und die Kontrerevolution. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 165, 169, 170 and 183, December 10, 15, 16 and 31, 1848. — 279, 336, 358, 484

Page me8.619
The City Council (this volume)— Der Stadtrat. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 148, November 21, 1848. — 53

Page me8.619
Confessions of a Noble Soul (this volume)— Bekenntnisse einer schönen Seele. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 145, November 17, 1848. — 94, 99, 313

Page me8.619
Counter-Revolution in Berlin (this volume)— Die Kontrerevolution in Berlin. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 141, 141 (second edition) and 142, November 12 and 14, 1848. — 30, 48

Page me8.619
A Decree of Eichmann's (this volume)— Ein Erlass Eichmanns. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 147, November 19, 1848. — 502

Page Break me8.620

Page me8.620

Drigalski — Legislator, Citizen and Communist (this volume)— Drigalski der Gesetzgeber, Bürger und Kommunist. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 153, November 26, 1848. — 187, 341, 474, 512

Page me8.620
The First Trial of the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. Speech by Karl Marx (this volume)— Der erste Pressprozess der “Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung”. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 221, February 14, 1849. — 485, 520, 521

Page me8.620
The Frankfurt Assembly (this volume)— Die Frankfurter Versammlung. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 150, November 23, 1848. — 53, 65

Page me8.620
Further Contribution on the Old-Prussian Financial Administration (this volume)— Weiterer Beitrag zur altpreussischen Finanzwirtschaft. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 229, February 23, 1849. — 389

Page me8.620
The June Revolution (present edition, Vol. 7)— Die Junirevolution. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 29, June 29, 1848. — 23

Page me8.620
The “Kölnische Zeitung” on the Elections (this volume)— Die “Kölnische Zeitung” über die Wahlen. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 210, February 1, 1849. — 392
Page me8.620
Lassalle (this volume)— Lassalle. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 219, February 11, 1849. — 341

Page me8.620
Lassalle (this volume)— Lassalle. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 237, March 4, 1849. — 474

Page me8.620
Legal Proceedings against the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 7)— Gerichtliche Untersuchung gegen die “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 37 and 41, July 7 and 11, 1848. — 319

Page me8.620
Manteuffel and the Central Authority (this volume)— Manteuffel und die Zentralgewalt. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 153, November 26, 1848. — 99

Page me8.620
The “Model State” of Belgium (present edition, Vol. 7)— Der “Musterstaat” Belgien. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 68, August 7, 1848. — 138

Page me8.620
Montesquieu LVI (this volume)— Montesquieu LVI. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 201 and 202, January 21 and 22, 1849. — 287, 390

Page me8.620
A New-Year Greeting (this volume)— Eine Neujahrsgratulation. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 190, January 9, 1849. — 261

Page me8.620
No More Taxes!!! (this volume)— Keine Steuern mehr!!! In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 145 (special supplement), November 17, 1848. — 42, 45

Page me8.620
On the Polish Question (present edition, Vol. 6)— Reden über Polen. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung No. 98, December 9, 1847. — 371-72

Page me8.620
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the “Philosophy of Poverty” by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon, Paris et Bruxelles, 1847. — 130

Page Break me8.621

Page me8.621
Prussian Financial Administration under Bodelschwingh and Co. (this volume)— Preussische Finanzwirtschaft unter Bodelschwingh und Konsorten. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 224, February 17, 1849. — 418

Page me8.621
Public Prosecutor “Hecker” and the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 7)— Der Staatsprokurator “Hecker” und die “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 129, October 29, 1848. — 81-82, 304, 496

Page me8.621
The Tax-Refusal Trial (this volume)— Der Steuerverweigerungsprozess. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 218, February 10, 1849. — 344

Page me8.621
The Trial of Gottschalk and His Comrades (this volume)— Prozess gegen Gottschalk und Genossen. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 175 and 176, December 22 and 23, 1848. — 210, 474

Page me8.621
The Victory of the Counter-Revolution in Vienna (present edition, Vol. 7)— Sieg der Kontrerevolution zu Wien. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 136, November 7, 1848. — 23

Engels, Frederick
Page me8.621
The Armistice with Denmark (present edition, Vol. 7)— Der Waffenstillstand mit Dänemark. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 52, July 22, 1848. — 223

Page me8.621
Bulletin No. 22 (this volume)— Das Zweiundzwanzigste Bulletin. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 225 (supplement), February 18, 1849. — 401

Page me8.621
[Debate in the National Council] (this volume). In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 153 (second edition), November 26, 1848. — 136, 141-42
Page me8.621
Debate about the Existing Redemption Legislation (present edition, Vol. 7)— Debatte über die bisherige Ablösungsgesetzgebung. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 67, August 6, 1848. — 175

Page me8.621
Duel between Berg and Luvini (this volume)— Duell zwischen Berg und Luvini. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 160, December 5, 1848. — 147

Page me8.621
Elections. — Sydow (this volume)— Die Wahlen. — Sydow. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 153 (supplement), November 26, 1848. — 58, 113, 136, 141

Page me8.621
Elections to the Federal Court. — Miscellaneous (this volume)— Wahlen für das Bundesgericht. — Verschiedenes. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 150, November 23, 1848. — 95

Page me8.621
The Ex-Principality (this volume)— Das Exfürstentum. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 140, November 11, 1848. — 245

Page me8.621
The First Trial of the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. Speech by Frederick Engels (this volume)— Der erste Pressprozess der “Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung”. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 221, February 14, 1849. — 485, 520, 521

Page me8.621
The Frankfurt Assembly Debates the Polish Question (present edition, Vol. 7)— Die Polendebatte in Frankfurt. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 70, 73, 81, 86, August 9, 12, 20, 26, 1848. — 230

Page Break me8.622

Page me8.622
From the Theatre of War in Transylvania and Hungary (this volume)— Vom ungarischen und siebenbürgeschen Kriegsschauplatze. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 235 (special supplement), March 2, 1849. — 440

Page me8.622
The German Central Authority and Switzerland (this volume)— Die deutsche Zentralgewalt und die Schweiz. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 153, November 26, 1848. — 88

Page me8.622
German Socialism in Verse and Prose (present edition, Vol. 6)— Deutscher Sozialismus in Versen und Prosa. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung Nos. 73 and 74, September 12 and 16, 1847; Nos. 93, 94 and 95, November 21, 25 and 28, 1847; Nos. 96, 97 and 98, December 2, 5 and 9, 1847. — 372

Page me8.622
Joint Sitting of the Councils. — The Federal Council (this volume)— Vereinigte Sitzung der Räthe. — Der Bundesrath. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 156, November 30, 1848. — 113, 180

Page me8.622
Latest News of the Magyars. — Victory on the Theiss. — Brutality of the Austrians. — State of War in General (this volume)— Neueres über die Magyaren. — Sieg an der Theiss. — Brutalität der Österreicher. — Lage des Krieges im Allgemeinen. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 231, February 25, 1849. — 443
Page me8.622
The Magyar Struggle (this volume)— Der magyarische Kampf. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 194, January 13, 1849. — 366

Page me8.622
Measures against German Refugees. — Return of Troops from Tessin. — The Patricians' Commune (this volume)— Die Massregeln gegen deutsche Flüchtlinge. — Die Truppen aus Tessin zurück. — Die Patriziergemeinde. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 180, December 28, 1848. — 250

Page me8.622
Measures Concerning the German Refugees (this volume)— Massregeln wegen der deutschen Flüchtlinge. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 165, December 10, 1848. — 180, 204

Page me8.622
[More News of the Magyars] (this volume). In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 231 (supplement), February 25, 1849. — 428, 443
Page me8.622

The National Council (this volume)— Der Nationalrat. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 165 and 165 (second edition), December 10, 1848. — 59, 136, 179

Page me8.622
News from Switzerland (this volume)— Verschiedenes. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 151 (supplement), November 24, 1848. — 58

Page me8.622
On the Polish Question (present edition, Vol. 6)— Reden über Polen. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung No. 98, December 9, 1847. — 371-72

Page me8.622
[Raveaux's Resignation. — Violation of Swiss Territory] (this volume). In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 154 (supplement), November 28, 1848. — 98, 119
Page me8.622
[Result of the Elections to the National Council] (this volume). In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 152, November 25, 1848. — 59

Page Break me8.623

Page me8.623
Russian Invasion. — Serbs. — Prospects for the Austrians. — News from the Theatre of War (this volume)— Die russische Invasion. — Die Serben. — Aussichten für die Österreicher. — Vom Kriegsschauplatz. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 233, February 28, 1849. — 428

Page me8.623
Sittings of the Federal Council and the Council of States (this volume)— Sitzung des Bundesrats und des Ständerats. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 155, November 29, 1848. — 97

Page me8.623
The State of Germany (present edition, Vol. 6). In: The Northern Star Nos. 415, 417 and 438, October 25 and November 8, 1845, and April 4, 1846. — 372
Page me8.623
The Struggle in Hungary (this volume)— Der Kampf in Ungarn. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 212, February 3 1849. — 300

Page me8.623
Swiss Evidence of the Austrian Army's Heroic Deeds in Vienna (this volume)— Schweizerische Zeugnisse über die Heldentaten der österreichischen Armee in Wien. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 161, December 6, 1848. — 137, 179

Page me8.623
Three New Constitutions (present edition, Vol. 6)— Drei neue Konstitutionen. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung No. 15, February 20, 1848. — 372

Page me8.623
Ursuline Convent. — Recruiting for the Grape-Shot King. — The “Burghers' Commune”. — Commission on a General Customs Tariff (this volume)— Ursulinerinnen Kloster. — Werbungen für den Kartätschenkönig. — Die “Bürgergemeinde”. — Komission wegen eines gemeinsamen Zolltariffs. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 168, December 14, 1848. — 205, 216
Page me8.623
War. — Discord between the Government and the Southern Slavs (this volume)— Der Krieg. — Zwiespalt der Regierung mit den Südslaven. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 219, February 11, 1849. — 409

Page me8.623
The War Comedy (present edition, Vol. 7)— Die Kriegskomödie. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 5, June 5, 1848. — 224

Page me8.623
A Word to the “Riforma” (present edition, Vol. 6)— Ein Wort an die “Riforma”. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung No. 16, February 24, 1848. — 372

Page me8.623
Marx, Karl or Engels, Frederick
Page me8.623
Arrests (present edition, Vol. 7)— Verhaftungen. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 35, July 5, 1848. — 48, 182, 304, 312, 319, 321, 486, 491, 518

Page me8.623
The Downfall of the Camphausen Government (present edition, Vol. 7)— Sturz des Ministeriums Camphausen. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 22 (special supplement) and 23, June 22 and 23, 1848. — 158

Page me8.623
German Professorial Baseness (this volume)— Deutsche Professorengemeinheit. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 156, November 30, 1848. — 133

Page me8.623
Patow's Redemption Memorandum (present edition, Vol. 7)— Patows Ablösungsdenkschrift. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 25, June 25, 1848. — 175

Page Break me8.624

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me8.624
Anneke, M.F. Der Politische Tendenz-Prozess gegen Gottschalk, Anneke und Esser [Köln]. — 189, 191
Page me8.624

Arndt, E.M. Ausmarsch des Jahrs 1815. In: Gedichte, Th. 2, Frankfurt am Main, 1818. — 90
Page me8.624
Auber, D.F.E. Fra Diavolo (a comic opera). — 174
Page me8.624
Bakunin, M. Aufruf an die Slaven. Von einem russischen Patrioten Michael Bakunin. Mitglied des Slavenkongresses in Prag, Koethen, 1848. — 364-65, 369-71, 374, 378
Page me8.624
Beaumarchais, P.A.C. de. La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro. — 148, 262
Page me8.624
BibleThe Old Testament
Job 1:21. — 178
1 Moses. — 49, 90
1 Kings 12:11. — 31
Isaiah. — 67
Habakkuk. — 50
The New Testament
Matthew. — 258
Epistles of St. Paul to Thessalonians. — 38
Page me8.624
Binzer, A. [Lied, verfasst anlässlich der Auflösung der Jenaer Burschenschaft.] — 377
Page me8.624
[Böckh, P.A.] Erklärung von Prorektor und Senat der Königlichen vereinten Friedrichs-Universität, November 21, 1848. In: Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger Nos. 205 and 206, November 25 and 26, 1848. — 106
Page me8.624
Cervantes Saavedra, M. de. Vida y hechos del ingenioso hidalgo Don Quixote de la Mancha. — 68
Page me8.624
[Christern, J.W.] Doctor Eisele's und Baron von Beisele's Landtagsreise im April 1847, Leipzig, 1847. — 89
Page me8.624
Claudius, M. Rheinweinlied. In: Matthias Claudius Werke, Bd. 1, Hamburg, 1819. — 81
(anon.) Deutschland in seiner tiefen Erniedrigung [Nürnberg], 1806. — 88
Page me8.624
Donizetti, G. Belisario (opera). — 117
Page me8.624
Franscini, S. Statistica della Svizzera, Lugano, 1827. — 85— Nuova Statistica della Svizzera, T. 1, Lugano, 1847. — 85

Page me8.624
Goethe, J.W. von. Wandrers Nachtlied. — 295— Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre. — 30, 276
— Zahme Xenien. — 395

Page me8.624

Hegel, G.W.F. Vorlesungen über die Geschichte der Philosophie. — 234, 274
Page me8.624
Heine, H. Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen. — 33, 71, 130, 272, 366— Einleitung zu "Kahldorf über den Adel in Briefen an den Grafen M. von Moltke". — 17, 214

Page me8.624
Hengstenberg, E.W., Schönlein, J.L., Ehrenberg, Ch. G., Böckh, Ph. A., Grimm, J.L.C., Grimm, W.C. u.a. Adresse der Berliner Professoren an den König von Preussen, November 24. In: Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger, November 25, 1848. — 106, 133

Page Break me8.625

Page me8.625
[Hermes, J.T.] Sophiens Reise von Memel nach Sachsen, Bd. 1-6, Leipzig, 1778. — 67
Page me8.625
Hildebrandt, C. Kuno von Schreckenstein, oder die weissagende Traumgestalt, 2. Aufl., Bd. 1-3, Quedlinburg und Leipzig, 1840. — 168
Page me8.625
Hobbes, Thomas. Elementa philosophica. De cive, Basileae, 1782. — 165
Page me8.625
Horatius Flaccus, Quintus. De Arte Poetica, 139. — 290, 401— Carminum, Ode 3. In: Q. Horatii Flacci opera omnia poetica, Halae, 1802. — 143
— Epistolae, Liber primus, Epistola II. — 68

Page me8.625
Kamptz, K.A. Jahrbücher für die Preussische Gesetzgebung, Rechtswissenschaft und Rechtsverwaltung, Bd. 37, Berlin, 1831. — 382
Page me8.625
Kortum, K.A. Die Jobsiade. Ein komisches Heldengedicht. — 89, 154
Page me8.625
Lessing, G.E. Minna von Barnhelm (comedy in five acts). — 225
Page me8.625
[Löwenfels, T.W., Neff, F. u. Thielemann, G.] Die zweite republikanische Aufstand in Baden, Basel, 1848. — 204
Page me8.625
Marseillaise. — 530
Page me8.625
[Maurenbrecher, P.W. Die Erklärung des Düsseldorfer Oberpostdirektors Maurenbrecher.] In: Kölnische Zeitung No. 314 (second edition), November 23, 1848. — 77
Page me8.625
Milton, J. Paradise Lost. A Poem, in twelve books. — 88
Page me8.625
Moliére, J.-B. George Dandin ou le mari confondu (comedy in three acts). — 356— Le bourgeois gentilhomme (comedy in three acts). — 164

Page me8.625
Mourir pour la patrie (Les Girondins). — 530
Page me8.625
Patow, E.R. von. Promemoria, betreffend die Massregeln der Gesetzgebung, durch welche die zeitgemässe Reform der guts- und grundherrlichen Verhältnisse und die Beseitigung der noch vorhandenen Hemmungen der Landeskultur bezweckt wird, Berlin, June 20, 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1848. — 175
Page me8.625
Proudhon, P.-J. Argument á la Montagne. In: Le Peuple No. 5, November 15-21, 1848. — 123— Qu'est-ce que la propriété? Ou recherches sur le principe du droit et du gouvernement, Paris, 1841. — 129
— Systéme des contradictions économiques, ou philosophie de la misére, T. I-II, Paris, 1846. — 129

Page me8.625
Rossini, G. Tancredi (opera). — 91
Page me8.625
Rotteck, K. von. Allgemeine Geschichte vom Anfang der historischen Kenntniss bis auf unsere Zeiten. Für denkende Geschichtsfreunde, Freiburg und Konstanz, 1813-1818. — 157— Staats-Lexikon oder Encyklopädie der Staatswissenschaften, in Verbindung mit vielen der angesehensten Publicisten Deutschlands, Bd. 15, Altona, 1843. — 89

Page me8.625
Schiller, F. von. An die Freude. — 213— Die Jungfrau von Orleans. — 17
— Der Taucher. — 89

Page me8.625
Schücking, L. Politische Gespräche. In: Kölnische Zeitung Nos. 29, 30, 34 and 35, February 3, 4, 9 and 10, 1849. — 354

Page Break me8.626

Page me8.626
Shakespeare, W. As You Like It. — 163— Hamlet. — 34, 198
— King Lear. — 83
— Troilus and Cressida. — 18, 139

Page me8.626
A Thousand and One Nights (Arabian tales). — 287
Page me8.626
Unruh, H.V. von. Skizzen aus Preussens neuester Geschichte, Magdeburg, 1849. — 334
Page me8.626

[Vulpius, Ch. A.] Rinaldo Rinaldini, der Räuber Hauptmann. Eine romantische Geschichte unsers Jahrhunderts in Drei Theilen oder neun Büchern, 2. Aufl., Th. 1-3, Leipzig, 1799. — 69
Page me8.626
[Weerth, G.] Leben und Taten des berühmten Ritters Schnapphahnski. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, August, September and December 1848 and January 1849. — 504—
Die Steuerverweigerung in England bei Gelegenheit der Reform-Bill im Jahre 1832. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 142 (second edition) and No. 143, November 14 and 15, 1848. — 19

DOCUMENTS

Page me8.626
Allerhöchste Kabinetsorder an das Staatsministerium, betreffend den Staatshaushalt und das Staatsschulden-Wesen. De dato den 17ten Januar 1820. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1820, No. 2. — 382, 383, 388
Page me8.626
Allgemeiner Etat der Staats-Einnahmen und Ausgaben für das Jahr 1844. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1844, No. 9. — 380
Page me8.626
Allgemeines Landrecht für die Preussischen Staaten, Berlin, 1817. — 172, 296, 315, 381, 382, 388, 389
Page me8.626
An meine lieben Berliner [des Königs Friedrich-Wilhelm IV. von Preussen vom 19. März 1848]. In: Allgemeine Preussische Zeitung No. 80, March 20, 1848. — 222
Page me8.627
An mein Volk und an die deutsche Nation [des Königs Friedrich-Wilhelm IV, Berlin, den 21. März, 1848]. In Allgemeine Preussische Zeitung No. 82, March 22, 1848. — 222, 447
Page me8.627
An sämtliche Königlichen Regierungen. In: Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger No. 200, November 20, 1848. — 47
Page me8.627
17. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 19, January 23, 1849. — 290-91
Page me8.627
18. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 24, January 28, 1849. — 291, 294, 302
Page me8.627
19. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 27, February 1, 1849. — 300, 303
Page me8.627
20. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 30, February 4, 1849. — 401
Page me8.627
21. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 30, February 4, 1849. — 401
Page me8.627
22. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 38, February 14, 1849. — 401, 402, 404-08
Page me8.627
23. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 42, February 18, 1849. — 423-26, 468
Page me8.627

24. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 45, February 22, 1849. — 437, 459
Page me8.627
25. Armee-Bulletin. In: Wiener Zeitung No. 51, March 1, 1849. — 478, 480
Page me8.627
Armee-Befehl von F.H.E. Wrangel, Potsdam, September 17, 1848. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 109, September 22, 1848. — 176, 261, 334

Page Break me8.627

Page me8.627
Bericht des Ausschusses für die österreichischen Angelegenheiten über die Anträge der Abgeordneten Venedey, Heinrich Simon, Wiesner und Bauernschmied, sowie über mehrere die österreichischen Angelegenheiten betreffenden Petitionen. In: Verhandlungen der deutschen verfassunggebenden Reichsversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main, Bd. 2, Frankfurt, 1849 (Marx and Engels used this report as published in the newspapers). — 88-93
Page me8.627
Der Bericht der Zentralabteilung über Kirche und Schule. In: Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 115 (supplement), November 11, 1848. — 30
Page me8.627
Bundesverfassung der Schweizerischen Eidgenossenschaft, vom 12. September 1848, St. Gallen, 1848. — 42, 44, 87
Page me8.627
Charte constitutionelle, June 4, 1814. In: Le Moniteur universel No. 156, June 5, 1814. — 177
Page me8.627
Code civil — see Code Napoléon
Page me8.627
Code d'instruction criminelle, Paris, 1809. — 464
Page me8.627
Code Napoléon. Edition originale et seule officielle, Paris and Leipzig, 1808. — 262, 327, 399, 416
Page me8.627
Code pénal, ou code des délits et des peines, Cologne, 1810. — 76, 77, 80, 82, 171, 246, 304-14, 317-19, 325, 341, 463, 501, 504, 518
Page me8.627
Compte rendu des séances de l'Assemblée nationale, T. 1-10, Paris, 1849-1850, T. 7 (Marx and Engels used this report as published in the newspapers). — 281, 284
Page me8.627
Constitutio criminalis carolina, Halle, 1900. — 14
Page me8.627
Constitution de la République française, votée par l'Assemblée nationale dans sa séance du 4 novembre 1848, Stuttgart, 1848. — 151
Page me8.627
Declaration au peuple. In: La Réforme No. 310, November 9, 1848. — 123
Page me8.627

Denkschrift über die Verwaltung des Staatsschatres für die Zeit von 1840 bis 1846. In: Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847, 1. Theil, Berlin, 1847. — 389
Page me8.627
Entwurf einer Gemeinde-Ordnung nebst Motiven zu ihrer Erklärung, August 13, 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 2, Berlin, 1848. — 173
Page me8.627
Entwurf eines Gesetzes, betreffend die Aufhebung der Klassensteuer-Befreiungen, July 10, 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1848. — 174
Page me8.627
Entwurf eines Gesetzes, die Aufhebung der Grundsteuer-Befreiungen betreffend, July 20, 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1848. — 174
Page me8.627
Entwurf eines Gesetzes über die Errichtung der Bürgerwehr, July 6, 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1848. — 173
Page me8.627
Entwurf eines Verfassungs-Gesetzes für den preussischen Staat, May 20, 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen

Page Break me8.628
Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1848. — 297

Page me8.628
[Erste Antwortnote des Vororts Bern vom 5. Oktober 1848.] In: Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 275 (second supplement), October 10, 1848; No. 276, October 11, 1848. — 67
Page me8.628
[Erste Note der deutschen Zentralgewalt an den Vorort Bern vom 4. Oktober 1848.] In: Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 267 (special supplement), September 30, 1848. — 67
Page me8.628
Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847, Th. 1-4, Berlin, 1847. Th. 1, 3, 4. — 168, 170-72, 175, 326, 388, 389, 419, 446
Page me8.628
[Das Gesetz wegen Centralisation der Posten.] Bern, 1848. — 98, 113
Page me8.628

Gesetz, betreffend das gerichtliche und Disziplinar-Strafverfahren gegen Beamte. Vom 29. März 1844. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1844, No. 8. — 200-01, 345
Page me8.628
Gesetz, betreffend die Sistirung der Verhandlungen über die Regulirung der gutsherrlichen und bäuerlichen Verhältnisse und über die Ablösung der Dienste, Natural- und Geldabgaben, sowie der über diese Gegenstände anhängigen Prozesse. Vom 9. Oktober 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 45. — 175, 334
Page me8.628
Gesetz über die Errichtung der Bürgerwehr. Vom 17. Oktober 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 47. — 77, 78, 173, 333
Page me8.628
Gesetz zum Schutz der persönlichen Freiheit. Vom 24. September 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 42. — 25, 78, 333
Page me8.628
Gesetzbuch über Strafen, Cöln, 1812 — see Code pénal
Page me8.628
Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten. — 380, 381— 1815. — 166
— 1819. — 307, 310
— 1820. — 166, 382, 383, 388
— 1839. — 264
— 1844. — 200, 345, 380
— 1847. — 166, 387
— 1848. — 25, 77-80, 134, 135, 154, 166, 172, 176, 177, 200, 201, 255-57, 259-67, 271, 295, 323-26, 328-30, 332, 333, 339, 345, 346, 391, 447, 449
— 1849. — 449

Page me8.628
Habeas Corpus Act. — 25, 79, 333
Page me8.628
Magna Charta Libertatum. — 171, 177
Page me8.628
Manifeste électoral du Peuple. In: Le Peuple No. 4, November 8-15, 1848. — 123
Page me8.628
Neujahrsgratulation 1849 an das Heer [des Königs Friedrich-Wilhelm IV vom 1. Januar 1849, Potsdam]. In: Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger No. 3, January 3, 1849. — 222-26
Page me8.628
Note an die dänische Regierung vom 8. April 1848 von L. Wildenbruch. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1848. — 223
Page me8.628
[Österreichische Note vom 4. Februar 1849.] In: Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 36, February 10, 1849, and Kölnische Zeitung No. 37, February 13, 1849. — 398

Page Break me8.629

Page me8.629
Patent die ständischen Einrichtungen betreffend. Vom 3. Februar 1847. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1847, No. 4. — 166, 387
Page me8.629
Patent über die Publikation des Reichsgesetzes, betreffend das Verfahren im Falle gerichtlicher Anklagen gegen Mitglieder der verfassunggebenden Reichsversammlung. Vom 14. Oktober 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 46. — 201
Page me8.629
[Petition des Kölner Gemeinderats an den König.] In: Kölnische Zeitung No. 311 (second edition), November 19, 1848. — 45, 53
Page me8.629
Die Proklamation [des Königs Friedrich-Wilhelm IV. von Preussen vom 11. November 1848]. In: Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 116 (special supplement), November 12, 1848. — 20
Page me8.629
The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 60 Geo. III. and 1 Geo. IV. 1819-1820. And 1 Geo. IV. 1820, London, 1820. — 448
Page me8.629
Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger (Marx and Engels used this report as published in the newspapers). — 75, 99, 154, 169-77, 223, 296, 334
Page me8.629
Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden National-Versammlung zu Frankfurt am Main, Bd. 1-9, Frankfurt a. M. und Leipzig, 1848-1849 (Marx and Engels used this report mainly as published in the newspapers). — 51-52, 65, 68, 99
Page me8.629
Traité de commerce entre la Prusse, la Baviére, la Saxe, le Wurttemberg, la Bade, la Hesse-Electorale, la Hesse-Grand-Ducale, les Etats commant l'union de douanes et de commerce, dite de Thuringe, le Nassau, et la ville libre de Francfort, d'une part, et les Pays-Bas, d'autre part, le 21. Janvier 1839. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1839, No. 10. — 265
Page me8.629
Uebersicht von den Resultaten der Finanz-Verwaltung im Jahre 1847. In: Vorlagen an die National-Versammlung, 1848. — 383, 388
Page me8.629
Verfassungsurkunde für den Preussischen Staat, December 5, 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 55. — 134, 154, 177, 201, 255-57, 259-67, 287, 289, 323, 328, 346, 391, 447, 448
Page me8.629
Verhandlungen der constituirenden Versammlung für Preussen. 1848, Bd. 9 (Suppl.-Bd.), Leipzig, 1849. — 19, 25, 36, 38, 41, 48, 50, 200, 323, 333, 338, 339

Page me8.629
Verhandlungen des zum 2. April 1848 zusammenberufenen Vereinigten Landtages, Berlin, 1848. — 446
Page me8.629
Verordnung, betreffend die Auflösung der zur Vereinbarung der Verfassung berufenen Versammlung. Vom 5. Dezember 1848. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preussischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung, Beilage zum Preussischen Staats-Anzeiger, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1848. — 134, 135
Page me8.629
Verordnung, betreffend die Ausführung des Gesetzes über die Errichtung der Bürgerwehr. Vom 17. Oktober 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 47. — 77-79
Page me8.629
Verordnung, betreffend die Errichtung von Gewerberäthen und verschiedene Abänderungen der allgemeinen Gewerbeordnung. Vom 9. Februar 1849. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1849, No. 6. — 449

Page Break me8.630

Page me8.630
Verordnung über die Bildung des Vereinigten Landtages. Vom 3. Februar 1847. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1847, No. 4. — 166
Page me8.630
Verordnung über die Errichtung von Gewerbegerichten. Vom 9. Februar 1849. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1849, No. 6. — 449
Page me8.630
Verordnung über die zu bildende Repräsentation des Volks. Vom 22ten Mai 1815. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1815, No. 9. — 166
Page me8.630
Verordnung über einige Grundlagen der künftigen Preussischen Verfassung. Vom 6. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 11. — 77, 154, 201, 323-29, 339
Page me8.630
Verordnung wegen Bestrafung schriftlicher Beleidigungen in den Provinzen, wo das französische Strafgesetzbuch vorläufig noch gesetzliche Kraft hat. Vom 5ten Juli 1819. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1819, No. 15. — 307
Page me8.630
Verordnung wegen der künftigen Behandlung des gesammten Staatsschulden-Wesens. Vom 17ten Januar 1820. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1820, No. 2. — 166
Page me8.630
Vorläufiger Entwurf einer Verordnung zur Ergänzung der Allgemeinen Gewerbe-Ordnung vom 17. Jan. 1845. In: Kölnische Zeitung No. 24 (first supplement), January 28, 1849. — 265-66
Page me8.630

Wahlgesetz für die zur Vereinbarung der Preussischen Staats-Verfassung zu berufende Versammlung. Vom 8. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 12. — 154, 166, 271, 296, 323-29, 339
Page me8.630
Wahlgesetz für die zweite Kammer. Vom 6. Dezember 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten, 1848, No. 55. — 271
Page me8.630
[Zirkularnote der preussischen Regierung vom 23. Januar 1849.] In: Kölnische Zeitung No. 25 (special supplement), January 30, 1849. — 297
Page me8.630
[Die Zustimmungs-] Adressen [an die Nationalversammlung in Berlin]. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 148, November 21, 1848. — 39
Page me8.630
[Zweite Antwortnote des Vororts Bern vom 4. November 1848.] In: Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 304, November 13, 1848. — 68
Page me8.630
[Zweite Note der deutschen Zentralgewalt an den Vorort Bern vom 23. Oktober 1848.] In: Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 298 (supplement), November 6, 1848. — 68

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me8.630
Allgemeine Zeitung No. 38, February 7, 1849: “Pesth, 1. Febr.” and “Wien, 3. Febr.” — 368
Page me8.630
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 48 (supplement), February 17, 1849: “Prag, 13. Febr.” — 410— No. 54, February 23, 1849: “Nota des Grafs Almásy.” — 431

Page me8.630
Düsseldorfer Zeitung No. 311, November 24, 1848: “Düsseldorf, vom 22. November.” — 79— No. 336, December 23, 1848: “Münster, vom 20. Dez.” — 200

Page Break me8.631

Page me8.631
Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 314 (supplement), November 24, 1848: “Die Fortdauer der Ueberstände an der Schweizergrenze.” — 117
Page me8.631
Grazer Zeitung No. 54, February 23, 1849: “Temesvár (Correspondenz).” — 461— No. 54, February 23, 1849: “Bulletin” (report). — 468
— No. 56, February 25, 1849: “Ungarischer Kriegsschauplatz: Sieg der Russen in Siebenbürgen.” — 454
— No. 59, February 28, 1849: “Officieller Bericht über das Gefecht bei Kronstadt.” — 472

Page me8.631
Kölnisehe Zeitung No. 11, January 13, 1849: “An die Urwähler.” — 255— No. 24, January 28, 1849: “Die Wahlen zur ersten Kammer.” — 289
— No. 25, January 30, 1849: “Die Wahlen.” — 286
— No. 25 (supplement), January 30, 1849: “Ungarn (Von Kriegs-Schauplatz).” — 290
— No. 35 (first supplement), February 10, 1849: “Ungarn” (report). — 347
— No. 40, February 16, 1849: “Kein Zentrum.” — 392
— No. 41, February 17, 1849: “Der ungarische Krieg.” — 398

Page me8.631
Der Lloyd No. 84 (morning edition), February 18, 1849: “Pesth, 15. Februar.” — 426— No. 99 (evening edition), February 27, 1849: “Pesth, 24. Februar.” — 471

Page me8.631
Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 110, November 5, 1848: “Das Ministerium Brandenburg.” — 3— No. 113, November 9, 1848: “Berlin, den 8. November.” — 14, 16
— No. 115, November 11, 1848: “Aus Breslau, den 8. November.” — 39
— No. 115 (supplement), November 11, 1848: “Der Bericht der Zentral-Abteilung über Kirche und Schule.” — 30
— No. 118, November 15, 1848: “Ob Königtum, ob Republik.” — 32

Page me8.631
Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 48, July 18, 1848: “Bürgerverein” (Düsseldorf). — 314— No. 74, August 13, 1848: “Die Sitzung der Nationalversammlung vom 7. und 8. August.” — 390
— No. 95, September 6, 1848: “Breslau” (Lichnowski). — 504
— No. 102, September 14, 1848: “!!! Frankfurt a. M. den 11. Septbr. 1848. 75. Sitzung der National-Versammlung.” — 504
— No. 211, February 2, 1849: “Wien, 28. Jan.” — 291

Page me8.631
Die Presse No. 50, February 28, 1849: “Kronstadt, den 5. Februar.” — 472— No. 51, March 1, 1849: “Offizielle Nachrichten. 25. Armee-Bulletin.” — 479

Page me8.631
La Presse No. 4517-4521, November 7-11, 1848: “M. Cavaignac devant la Commission d'Enquête sur l'insurrection du 23. juin.” — 23
Page me8.631
Revue rétrospective ou Archives secrétes du dernier Gouvernement No. 3, 1848. [Review of secret archives of the Foreign Ministry of the July monarchy for 1840, 1842, 1844-47.] — 421
Page me8.631
Schweizerisches Bundesblatt No. 6, March 17, 1849: “Angelegenheit der italienischen Flüchtlinge im Kanton Tessin.” — 141-53
Page me8.631
La Suisse No. 291, December 6, 1848: [Circular to the cantonal governments]. — 180

Page me8.631
Wiener-Zeitung No. 32, February 7, 1849: “Proclamation des F.M.G. Puchner. — Nachrichten von Kriegsschauplatze.” — 350— No. 33, February 8, 1849: “Fünfter Armeebericht des F.M.L. Schlick.” — 360
— No. 40 (evening supplement), February 15, 1849: “Ungarn. Pest, 13. Februar. (Amtliches.) Proclamation.” [Windischgrätz's proclamation.] — 415
— No. 44, February 21, 1849: “Siebenbürgen” (report). — 432

Page Break me8.632

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me8.632
L'Alba. Giornale politico-letterario — Italian democratic daily published in Florence in 1847-49. — 397
Page me8.632
Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung — German daily published under this title in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1846 to March 1849, organ of the opposition Catholic circles; in March 1849 it changed its trend and was renamed Neue Oder-Zeitung, and as an organ of German bourgeois democracy it appeared until 1855. In 1855 Marx was its correspondent in London. — 427, 430, 440, 443, 461
Page me8.632
Allgemeine Preussische Zeitung — see Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me8.632
Allgemeine Zeitung — German conservative daily founded in 1798; from 1810 to 1882 was published in Augsburg. — 120, 122, 348, 412, 435, 478
Page me8.632
L'Ami du Peuple en 1848 — French revolutionary-democratic newspaper published in Paris from February 27 to May 14, 1848, under the editorship of François Raspail. — 127
Page me8.632
Arbeiter-Zeitung — see Zeitung des Arbeiter-Vereines zu Köln
Page me8.632
Der aufrichtige und wohlerfahrene Schweizer Bote — Swiss liberal journal founded in 1798; from 1804 was published in Aarau. — 181
Page me8.632
Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung — see Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me8.632
Basellandschaftliches Volksblatt — Swiss liberal weekly published in the canton of Basle from 1835 to 1853. — 181
Page me8.632
Basler Intelligenzblatt — Swiss conservative newspaper published under this title in Basle from 1845 to 1856. — 120
Page me8.632
Berner Intelligenzblatt — Swiss daily published from 1834 to 1919; in the 1840s, organ of the reactionary circles. — 247
Page me8.632

Berner Verfassungs-Freund — Swiss moderate liberal daily published in Berne from 1836 to 1849, when it was renamed Schweizerische Bundeszeitung. — 58, 179, 248, 251, 252, 253
Page me8.632
Berner-Zeitung — Swiss daily published in Berne from 1845 to 1894; in the 1840s, organ of the radical party, was edited by Niklaus Niggeler. — 58, 117, 247, 248, 252

Page Break me8.633

Page me8.633
Die Biene — Swiss politico-humoristic weekly published in Berne in 1848-49 under the editorship of Jenni. — 247
Page me8.633
Breslauer Zeitung — German daily founded in Breslau (Wroclaw) in 1820; repeatedly changed its political orientation; in the 1840s held liberal views; in 1848-49 campaigned against revolutionary Hungary. — 347, 351, 425, 428, 440, 442, 451, 458, 460, 467, 468, 477
Page me8.633
Bundeszeitung — see Schweizerische Bundeszeitung
Page me8.633
Le Charivari — French republican satirical newspaper published in Paris from 1832 to 1934; ridiculed the regime of the July monarchy and in 1848 supported Cavaignac's dictatorship. — 247
Page me8.633
La Concordia — Italian liberal daily published in Turin in 1848-49 under the editorship of Giuseppe Gentille. — 397
Page me8.633
Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen — daily published in German in Prague in 1848-49. — 352, 410, 416, 431, 435, 451, 453, 468, 472, 473, 479
Page me8.633
Constitutionnel Neuchâtelois — Swiss constitutional-monarchist newspaper published thrice weekly in Neuchâtel from 1831 to February 1848. — 8
Page me8.633
Il Contemporaneo — Italian radical daily published in Rome from 1846; was suppressed by the Pope's decree of July 15, 1849. — 397
Page me8.633
Le Courrier Suisse — Swiss conservative newspaper published in Lausanne from 1840 to 1853. — 43
Page me8.633
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung — German newspaper published under this title in Leipzig from 1843 to 1879; until the summer of 1848 was conservative but later adopted liberal views. — 410
Page me8.633
Die Deutsche Reform. Politische Zeitung für das constitutionelle Deutschland — German constitutional-monarchist daily published in Berlin from June 20, 1848, to 1851. — 198, 421

Page me8.633
Deutsche Schnellpost für Europäische Zustände, öffentliches und sociales Leben Deutschlands — newspaper of the German moderate democratic emigrants in the USA published twice weekly in New York from 1843 to 1851. — 210
Page me8.633
Deutsche Zeitung — German daily published in Heidelberg from 1847 to October 1848, and up to 1850 in Frankfurt am Main; organ of the advocates of constitutional monarchy and unification of Germany under Prussian hegemony. — 193, 287
Page me8.633
Düsseldorfer Zeitung — German daily published under this title in Düsseldorf from 1826 to 1926; was liberal in the 1840s. — 79, 199, 200, 516
Page me8.633
Die Evolution. Ein politisches Wochenblatt — revolutionary-democratic workers' weekly, organ of the German refugees in Switzerland, published in Biel (Berne canton) in 1848 and 1849 under the editorship of Johann Philipp Becker; a specimen issue appeared on December 1, 1848, under the title Die Revolution. — 204, 205, 250
Page me8.633
Frankfurter Journal — German daily published in Frankfurt am Main from 1615 to 1903; was liberal in the 1840s. — 179, 342
Page me8.633
Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung — German newspaper published in Frankfurt am Main from 1619 to 1866; during the 1848-49 revolution was the organ of the Imperial Regent and the Imperial Government. — 98, 117, 421

Page Break me8.634

Page me8.634
Der Freie Schweizer — Swiss radical daily published in Berne in 1848 and 1849; in 1849 was renamed Schweizer Zeitung. — 250
Page me8.634
Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit — German newspaper, organ of the Cologne Workers' Association, published twice weekly in Cologne from October 26, 1848. From January 14, 1849, Gottschalk's supporters tried to replace it with the newspaper Freiheit, Arbeit which was disavowed by the Association's leadership. On February 8 the publication of the newspaper was resumed and it appeared until the middle of 1849. — 513, 524
Page me8.634
Gazette de Lausanne et Journal Suisse — Swiss daily founded in Lausanne in 1798, organ of the liberal-democratic party. — 86
Page me8.634
Grazer Zeitung — Austrian daily founded in Graz in 1785. — 454, 461, 468
Page me8.634
Der Gukkasten — Swiss radical humoristic weekly published in Berne from 1840 to the end of 1849 under the editorship of Jenni. — 249
Page me8.634
L'Helvétie fédérale — see L'Helvétie
Page me8.634

L'Helvétie. Journal politique, industriel et littéraire — Swiss radical daily published in Pruntrut from 1832 to 1850; from January to November 1849 appeared under the title L'Helvétie fédérale in Berne. — 248
Page me8.634
Janus. Jahrbücher deutscher Gesinnung, Bildung und That — German pietist yearbook published in Berlin from 1845 to 1848. — 240
Page me8.634
Journal du Valais — Swiss liberal newspaper published in Sion, Wallis (Valais) canton, from 1848 to 1857. — 108
Page me8.634
:"Index1">Karlsruher Zeitung — German daily, official organ of the Grand Duchy of Baden, published in Karlsruhe from 1757. — 193

Page me8.634
Kölnerin — see Kölnische Zeitung
Page me8.634
Kölnische Zeitung — German daily published under this title from 1802 to 1945; organ of the liberal bourgeoisie, exponent of anti-revolutionary trends in 1848-49, waged struggle against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — 19, 29, 35, 79, 166, 193, 210, 254, 255, 257, 286-89, 290, 292, 294, 301, 347, 354-59, 392, 394, 398, 401, 402, 445, 453, 477, 529
Page me8.634
Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen — German newspaper published in Berlin from 1785; in the 1840s held moderate liberal views; also known as the Vossische Zeitung after its owner. — 36
Page me8.634
Közlöny, hivatalos lap — Hungarian daily, organ of the revolutionary Government of Hungary, published in Pest and Debreczin in 1848 and 1849 and in Szegedin from July 1849. — 237, 348, 477, 479
Page me8.634
Kreuz-Zeitung — see Neue Preussische Zeitung
Page me8.634
Leipziger Zeitung — German conservative newspaper published under this title in Leipzig from 1810. — 416, 453
Page me8.634
Der Lloyd — Austrian conservative newspaper appearing twice a day in Vienna from 1848 to 1854. — 426, 471
Page me8.634
Moniteur du Soir — French daily published in Paris from 1831; organ of the supporters of the July monarchy until 1848; organ of the Bonapartists after 1848. — 456

Page Break me8.635

Page me8.635

Le Moniteur universel — French daily, official government newspaper published in Paris from 1789; organ of the revolutionary Government during the French Revolution. — 18, 149, 247
Page me8.635
Murter Wächter — Swiss radical newspaper published in Murten (Freiburg canton) from January 1848. — 252
Page me8.635
Napredak — Serbian newspaper published in Karlowitz (Karlovce) in 1848-49. — 353
Page me8.635
Le National — French daily published in Paris from 1830 to 1851; organ of the moderate republicans in the 1840s. — 66, 84, 124, 213, 281-83, 284
Page me8.635
National-Zeitung — German liberal newspaper published under this title in Berlin from April 1, 1848, to 1915. — 271-79, 446, 448
Page me8.635
National-Zeitung — see Schweizerische National-Zeitung
Page me8.635
Neue Kölnische Zeitung für Bürger, Bauern und Soldaten — German revolutionary-democratic newspaper published in Cologne from September 10, 1848, to July 14, 1849. — 181
Page me8.635
Neue Preussische Zeitung — German conservative daily, organ of the big Prussian landowners and Court circles; was published in Berlin from June 1848; known also as Kreuz-Zeitung because the heading contained a cross bearing the slogan “Forward with God for King and Fatherland!” — 3, 30-34, 36, 99, 174, 222, 254, 259, 261, 265, 313, 325, 339
Page me8.635
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — German daily, organ of the proletarian revolutionary democrats during the German revolution of 1848-49, published in Cologne under Marx's editorship from June 1, 1848, to May 19, 1849 (with an interval from September 27 to October 12, 1848). — 14, 16, 18, 21, 39, 48, 49, 69, 70, 73, 81-83, 85, 94, 138, 142, 154, 159, 161, 168, 182, 188, 192, 210, 254, 256, 262, 268, 276, 286, 291, 304, 311-15, 323, 358, 362, 366, 371, 390, 416, 421, 422, 445, 493, 496, 501, 504, 509-10, 516, 517, 518, 521, 522, 527, 529, 530
Page me8.635
Neue Zürcher-Zeitung — see Zürcher-Zeitung
Page me8.635
The Northern Star — English weekly, central organ of the Chartists, published from 1837 to 1852, first in Leeds and, from November 1844, in London. Its founder and editor was Feargus O'Connor, George Harney being one of its editors. Engels contributed to the paper from 1843 to 1850. — 397
Page me8.635
Nouvelliste Vaudois — Swiss cantonal newspaper founded in 1798 and published in Lausanne until 1914; in the 1840s adhered to radical views. — 43, 58, 248
Page me8.635

Oppelner Kreisblatt — weekly newspaper of the authorities in Oppeln (Silesia), published from 1840. — 269
Page me8.635
Österreichischer Correspondent — daily organ of the Austrian Government, published under this title in Vienna in 1848 and 1849 (from November 1848 to April 1849 in Olmütz). — 426
Page me8.635
Pesther Courier — organ of the Austrian administration in Pest in 1848-49. — 479
Page me8.635
Le Peuple. Journal de la République démocratique et sociale — French social-reformist newspaper published in Paris in 1848-50; from April 1848 it was called Le Représentant du Peuple, from September 1848 to June 13, 1849, Le Peuple and later La Voix du peuple and Le Peuple de 1850; its editor was Pierre Joseph Proudhon. — 123, 128, 129, 130, 132

Page Break me8.636

Page me8.636
Die Presse — Austrian liberal daily published in Vienna from July 1848 to 1896. In 1861 and 1862, when the paper adopted an anti-Bonapartist stand, Marx published articles and reports in it. — 411, 472, 479
Page me8.636
La Presse — French daily published in Paris from 1836; in the 1840s expressed the interests of the circles opposed to the July monarchy; it was the organ of the moderate republicans in 1848-49, and later a Bonapartist newspaper. Émile Girardin was its editor from 1836 to 1857. — 23
Page me8.636
Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger — newspaper founded in Berlin in 1819; under this title was published from May 1848 to July 1851 as an official organ of the Prussian Government. — 36, 106, 133, 199, 240, 379
Page me8.636
La Réforme — daily organ of the French republican democrats and petty-bourgeois socialists published in Paris from 1843 to 1850. Engels published several articles in it from October 1847 to October 1848. — 123-24, 127, 129, 397
Page me8.636
Le Représentant du Peuple — see Le Peuple
Page me8.636
Le Républicain Neuchâtelois — Swiss liberal-republican newspaper published from March 1848 to October 1849 in La Chaux-de-Fonds and from November 1849 to 1856 in Neuchâtel. — 8
Page me8.636
La République — French daily, organ of the radical republicans, published in Paris from February 1848 to December 1851. — 397
Page me8.636
Die Revolution — see Die Evolution
Page me8.636

La Révolution démocratique et sociale — French daily, organ of the democratic republicans, published in Paris from November 1848 to June 1849 under the editorship of Charles Delescluze. — 123, 124-25, 127, 397
Page me8.636
Revue de Genéve et Journal Suisse — Swiss radical newspaper published in Geneva from 1842 and edited by Jean Jacob Fazy; appeared under this title until 1861, when it merged with La Nation Suisse. During the Second Empire in France it adopted a Bonapartist stand. — 11, 43
Page me8.636
Revue nationale — French Christian-democratic journal published by Philippe Buchez and Jules Bastide in Paris from May 1847 to July 1848. — 66
Page me8.636
Revue rétrospective ou Archives secrétes du dernier Gouvernement — French monthly published in Paris from 1833 to 1838; in 1848 appeared irregularly. — 421
Page me8.636
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — German daily founded on January 1, 1842, as an organ of the oppositional circles of the Rhenish bourgeoisie, and published in Cologne till March 31, 1843; Marx was its editor from October 15, 1842, to March 17, 1843; under his influence the newspaper assumed a pronounced revolutionary-democratic character, which led to its suppression by the Government; Engels also contributed to it. — 527
Page me8.636
Der Satellit — supplement to the Kronstädter Zeitung (Transylvanian pro-Austrian newspaper) published in Kronstadt (Brasow). — 453
Page me8.636
Schlesische Zeitung — German daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1742, organ of the constitutional-monarchist circles prior to and during the revolution of 1848-49. — 391, 428
Page me8.636
Der Schweizer Bote — see Der aufrichtige und wohlerfahrene Schweizer Bote
Page me8.636
Schweizerische Bundeszeitung — see Berner Verfassungs-Freund

Page Break me8.637

Page me8.637
Schweizerische National-Zeitung — Swiss daily published in Basle from 1842. — 42, 181
Page me8.637
Der Schweizerischer Beobachter — Swiss liberal daily published in Basle from 1842; in 1848 its editor was Johann Karl Brenner. — 42, 183
Page me8.637
Schweizerischer Beobachter — Swiss newspaper published thrice weekly in Berne from 1833 to 1850. — 183, 247
Page me8.637
Schweizer Zeitung — see Der Freie Schweizer

Page me8.637
Der Seeländer Anzeiger — Swiss weekly, organ of the petty-bourgeois socialists, published in Biel from 1837 to 1841 and in Berne from 1841 to 1852. — 249, 250
Page me8.637
Serbske Noviny — official organ of the Serbian Government published in Belgrade from 1835. — 441
Page me8.637
Siebenbürger Wochenblatt — weekly published in Kronstadt (Brasow). — 454, 455
Page me8.637
Slavenski jug — Croatian newspaper published in Agram (Zagreb) from 1848 to 1850. — 410
Page me8.637
Staats-Anzeiger — see Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me8.637
Staats-Zeitung — see Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me8.637
Südslavische Zeitung — Croatian newspaper, in 1849 organ of the Austro-Slav liberal-monarchist circles, published in German in Agram (Zagreb) from 1849 to 1852. — 347, 352
Page me8.637
La Suisse — Swiss liberal newspaper published in Berne from 1846 to 1860. — 58, 110, 179, 248
Page me8.637
Der Unabhängige — Swiss weekly published in Berne in 1848-49. — 250
Page me8.637
Die Verbrüderung. Correspondenzblatt aller deutschen Arbeiter — workers' journal, organ of the Central Committee of the German Workers, published twice a week in Leipzig from October 1848 to June 1850; up to May 1849 its editor was Stephan Born. — 505
Page me8.637
Verfassungs-Freund — see Berner Verfassungs-Freund
Page me8.637
Vossische Zeitung — see Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen
Page me8.637
La vraie République. Journal quotidien, politique et littéraire — French political and literary daily, organ of the radical republicans; appeared under this title in Paris from March 26 until August 21, 1848, when it was banned. From March 29 to June 13, 1849, it bore the title Journal de la vraie République, its editorial board including Armand Barbés, Pierre Leroux and George Sand. — 125
Page me8.637
Wächter — see Murter Wächter
Page me8.637
Wiener Zeitung — Austrian daily, official government newspaper, published in Vienna from 1780 to 1931. The Wiener Zeitung had several supplements, including Abend-

Beilage zur Wiener Zeitung. — 290, 291, 300, 350, 351, 404, 415, 423, 432, 435, 437, 456, 458, 459, 479
Page me8.637
Zeitung des Arbeiter-Vereines zu Köln — German newspaper published in April-October 1848, organ of the Cologne Workers' Association; until July 1848 it was edited by Andreas Gottschalk, and in July-September by Joseph Moll and Karl Schapper. — 189-90, 195

Page me8.637
Zürcher-Zeitung — Swiss liberal daily published in Zurich from 1780; it appeared under the title Neue Zürcher Zeitung until 1821, when it was renamed. — 144

Page Break me8.638

SUBJECT INDEX
Page me8.638
A
Absolutism — 102, 262, 265, 317, 331, 355
See also Monarchy, absolute
Abstraction, abstract and concrete — 233, 364
Agriculture
— in feudal society — 335
— in capitalist society — 158, 262, 326, 336
— and industry — 229, 326
— its progress with the development of society — 229
Alsace — 376
America — 207
American-Mexican war of 1846-48 — 365
Appearance, semblance — and reality — 275, 282, 284, 334
— as something external — 264
Appropriation — 15
Aristocracy (nobility), Austrian — 228-30, 235
Aristocracy (nobility), English — 161
Aristocracy (nobility), French — 161, 162
Aristocracy (nobility), German — see Nobility, German Aristocracy (nobility), Hungarian — 228-29, 399, 411
Armed uprising — 25, 302, 351
See also June uprising of the Paris proletariat in 1848; Revolution, proletarian
Army
— as a component part of the state apparatus — 262, 264, 265, 316, 335-36, 462 — mercenaries — 216-17, 247, 252, 372-73, 439
— people's militia — 41
— guerillas — 224
— revolutionary — 224-25, 227-28, 237, 298-99, 402, 429, 467

Army, Austrian — 94, 120-22, 229, 236, 237, 291-92, 298, 373, 375, 425-26, 432, 438, 459-60
Army, Hungarian — 237, 293-94, 298, 406, 429, 457, 459
Army, Prussian — 381
— as a weapon of the reactionaries — 157, 164, 219, 225-26, 296, 317, 334, 335
— and the King and country squires (junkers) — 262
— in the pay of the bourgeoisie — 168, 171-72
Army, Russian — 372, 436
Army, Swiss — 85, 116, 117, 149
Association (as collective production) — 266
Austria — 103, 227-32, 236, 298, 356, 374
— political system — 229-30, 356, 374
— national question — 227-36, 298, 375-76, 399, 440, 469-70
— in the period of the 1848-49 revolution — 103, 356, 374-75, 461-62
— and England — 211
— and France — 431
— and Germany — 228
— and Hungary — 227-33, 235-38, 269-70, 367-70, 375-76, 394, 399

Page Break me8.639
— and Italy — 103, 213, 214, 236, 294, 372-73, 431, 439
— and Poland — 229-30, 236, 373, 375, 377, 378
— and Prussia — 211, 264-65, 269-70
— and Russia — 52, 211, 212, 375-76, 438, 440-41
— and the Slavs — 103, 227-38, 298, 366-69, 373-78, 409-11, 416, 430
— and Turkey — 228-29, 231-32
See also Aristocracy, Austrian; Army, Austrian; Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Bourgeoisie, Austrian; Peasantry, Austrian; Revolution of 1848-49 in the Austrian Empire
Austro-Italian war of 1848-49 — 103, 214, 235, 372-73
— and prospects of the development of revolution in Europe — 103, 104
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in the Austrian Empire; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Austro-Turkish wars of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries — 231-32
Avars — 370
Page me8.639
B
Baden republican uprisings
— in April 1848 — 67, 72
— in October 1848 — 74, 180
Bank
— Austrian — 201
— Prussian (Seehandlung) — 173
Barbarians, barbarism — 438, 453, 457, 461
Basis and superstructure — 254, 263, 264, 266, 327, 335
See also Law; Political system; State

Basques — 235
Belgium — 138, 307
— social and political system, constitution — 173, 263
— revolution of 1830-31 — 173, 263
— home policy — 189
— in 1848 — 189
— and France — 376
See also Bourgeoisie, Belgian
Bohemia, Czechs — 233-34
— specific features of its historical development — 367, 368
— German colonisation of — 231-32
— oppression of Czechs by the Austrian Empire — 232, 367, 410
— and revolutions of 1848-49 in Europe — 235, 373-74, 443
— Right wing of the national movement and pan-Slavist agitation — 364-67, 373-76 — revolutionary tendencies in the national movement — 416-17, 431
— and Russian Tsarism — 377
See also Hussite movement; Prague uprising; Slav Congress in Prague; Svornost Boundaries — 365
Bourgeoisie — 162-63
— its rise and development — 337
— its role in the development of productive forces — 263
— its struggle against feudalism, against the feudal aristocracy — 161-62, 201 — material basis for the establishment of its rule — 158
— political domination — 158
— and absolute monarchy — 158-59, 161, 263-64
— and bureaucracy — 158-59, 264
— agreements with reactionaries — 162-63, 266-67, 358-59
— irreconcilability of its contradictions with the proletariat — 214
— and the peasantry — 175
— and legislation and courts — 158, 201
— its ideological exponents — 158, 166
— and religion and Church — 161
— and the national question — 214-15, 232
Bourgeoisie, Austrian — 201, 228-30, 232
Bourgeoisie, Belgian — 266
Bourgeoisie, English — 215, 218, 219
Bourgeoisie, French — 161-62, 168-69, 175, 256, 259, 263, 266
Bourgeoisie, German — 15-16, 160, 162, 178, 219, 221, 229, 232, 266-67, 358-59
See also Burghers; Germany; Petty bourgeoisie, German; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany

Page Break me8.640
Bourgeoisie, Hungarian — 229, 232
Bourgeoisie, Italian — 368, 371
Bourgeoisie, Polish — 229-30
Bourgeoisie, Prussian — 158-60, 162-63, 178, 219, 256, 265-67, 274, 276

Bourgeoisie, Slav — 232
Bourgeoisie, Swiss — 11, 12, 139, 141, 243, 247
Bourgeois revolution in the Netherlands in the sixteenth century — 161
Bretons — 234
Budget (state) — 337, 380
Bulgaria, Bulgarians — 233
Bureaucracy
— as a prop of absolutism — 172, 229, 262, 266, 317, 335, 336, 381
— as a prop of reaction — 15, 134, 158, 164, 168, 172, 219, 229, 235, 262-64, 266, 275, 296, 316, 335-36, 381 — feudal bureaucracy and industrial bourgeoisie — 15, 158-59, 265, 335
— its tutelage over industry — 264-65, 336
See also Officials
Burghers — 228, 229, 372
Byzantium — 228, 231, 234
Page me8.640
C
California — 365, 526
Capital — 170, 173, 264, 266
Capitalists — 120, 158, 262
Castes, the caste system — 203, 259
Censorship — 33, 96, 316, 360, 433, 471
Centralisation, state — 44, 240, 371
See also Switzerland
Chartism
— as an independent political movement of the working class — 215
— in 1848 — 101-02
Child labour — 260
Church — 161, 234
See also Clergy; Monasteries; Papacy; Religion
Citizens' associations in Prussia — 255
Civil code (Code civil) — 261, 327
Civilisation — 139, 252, 365, 367, 369, 438, 457
See also Society, bourgeois
Civil society — 309
Class, classes — 259, 288
— as a product of economic relations — 289
— and property — 161, 262-63
— and production — 266-67, 274
— class interests — 161, 162, 229, 263-64, 271, 289, 336
— in feudal society — 162, 229
— in bourgeois society — 158, 259, 289, 336
— class contradictions, antagonisms between proletariat and bourgeoisie — 214 — ruling, exploiter classes — 215, 223, 249, 272
— middle classes — 214
— reactionary, counter-revolutionary — 167

— exploited, oppressed working people — 170
— revolutionary — 160-61, 289
— progressive — 232
See also Aristocracy (nobility); Bourgeoisie; Class struggle; Peasantry; Petty bourgeoisie; Social relations; Working class
Class struggle
— between proletariat and bourgeoisie — 101, 336
— as a political struggle — 170
— and the national question — 230
See also Chartism; Class; Social relations; Working-class movement
Clergy — 70, 85, 244-45, 385, 469
See also Church; Papacy
Code d'instruction criminelle — 464
Code Napoléon — 327, 399
Code pénal — 76, 80, 82, 171, 246, 304-07, 309-10, 311, 314, 317, 319, 325, 463, 514
Cologne Workers' Association — 189-96, 483, 512-13, 522, 523-24, 525-26
Commerce, trade — 174, 215, 263, 264, 266, 272, 326, 336, 365, 371
Communism
— material premises of the communist transformation of society — 266
— abolition of private property — 262
— and the national question — 215
— and law — 154, 165-66, 197, 316, 342-43

Page Break me8.641
Communist League
— during the revolution of 1848-49 — 24, 46
— criticism of Gottschalk's sectarian stand — 513
— and petty-bourgeois democrats — 24, 46, 522
Competition — 161, 261, 266, 335
Conquest — 369
Constitution — 328
— and division of powers — 331
— constitutionalism, constitutional government — 279, 337
— constitutionalism of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie — 32
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
Corruption — 256
Corvée system — 159
Counter-revolution — 211, 278
See also Coup d'état; Coup d'état in Prussia
Coup d'état — 16, 135, 200, 264, 282, 336
Coup d'état in Prussia (November-December 1848) — 16, 25-26, 31-33, 38, 50, 94, 134, 135, 154, 157-58, 177, 200, 264, 279, 323, 447
Courts, judiciary — 201, 203, 342-43
— feudal — 203
— in bourgeois society — 197, 201-03, 317
— jury court, its class character — 188-89, 310, 318, 463-65

See also Jurisdiction; Jurisprudence; Jurists
Cracow, Cracow Republic (1846) — 373
Credit — 95, 170
Crime — 325
Crises
— social — 265, 285, 328
— commercial — 261
Croatia, Croats — 94, 352, 373, 400, 409, 410, 417, 425, 430-31, 469-70
Culture — 139
Czechs — see Bohemia
Page me8.641
D
Dalmatia, Dalmatians — 367, 431, 469
Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50 — 74, 223, 224, 457
— military operations — 223
— negotiations and armistice in Malmö — 67, 71, 88, 157, 224, 296, 456
— and position of the Frankfurt National Assembly — 67, 157, 504
— and policy of the Prussian Government — 157, 223, 296
See also Schleswig-Holstein question
Democracy, democratic movement
— bourgeois — 362
— petty-bourgeois — 244-45, 362
— revolutionary — 84, 103, 279
— proletarian — 123-25
Democratic Congress in Frankfurt am Main — 190
Despotism, tyranny — 219, 309, 333, 356, 372, 450
Dialect — 233
Dictatorship, military — 356
Diplomacy — 391
Dissenters (dissidents) — 31
Doctrinairism, doctrinaires — 144, 354
Duel — 114, 115, 118
Page me8.641
E
East — 214
Economic crises — 261
Economic relations — 214
Economics and politics — 158-60, 287, 289
See also Basis and superstructure
Education, instruction — 159, 260
Egypt, Ancient — 259
Eighteenth century — 161, 169
Emigration, political — 269-70
England (Great Britain) — 19, 101-02, 214-16, 263, 338, 372
— peculiarities of historical development — 101-02, 338
— political system, constitution — 330

— rule of the bourgeoisie — 215, 263
— courts, judiciary — 307
— industry and finances — 19, 337-38
— trade and industrial monopoly in the world market — 101, 214, 215, 218 — electoral reform of 1832 — 338
— class contradictions — 101, 214

Page Break me8.642
— workhouses (“bastilles for the poor”) — 218-19
— preconditions and prospects of a social revolution — 262
— and revolution in Europe — 214-15
— in 1848 — 101-02, 214-15, 362
— foreign policy — 101-02, 214-15, 265, 362
— and Austria — 211-12
— and Ireland — 214
— and Italy — 372
— and Prussia — 265, 266
— and Spain — 70
See also Aristocracy, English; Bourgeoisie, English; Chartism; English revolution of 1640-60
English revolution of 1640-60 — 160-62, 263, 273, 325, 338 — alliance between bourgeoisie and new nobility — 161
— and the masses — 15, 338
— Long Parliament — 15
Enlightenment — 161
Epoch
— of social progress — 162, 327-28
— revolutionary — 197
Equality — 279
Estates, social — 327, 335, 336, 337
— in feudal society — 164, 177, 259, 263-64, 266, 335, 338
— in bourgeois society — 335, 337
— third estate — 337
— judiciary — 197, 201, 203
— estate system, hierarchy — 257, 262, 263
— estate assembly — 327
— distinctions between estates — 33, 158, 177
Europe — 214, 215, 238
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe
Exploitation
— of labour power by capital — 170
Page me8.642
F
Family and marriage — 161
Federal Diet in Germany — 52, 225, 297
Federation — 138, 362

See also Switzerland
Female labour — 260
Feudalism — 161, 259, 262-63, 326, 335-36, 337
— big landed property as its basis — 326-27
— social relations, social system — 161, 326-28
— primogeniture — 161
— and absolutism — 159, 262-64, 265, 327, 335-37
— towns, burghers — 263
— estates — 259, 263, 266, 335, 337
— classes, class antagonisms — 229, 259
— feudal aristocracy — 259, 262-65
— and the bourgeoisie — 337
— rise of capitalist relations — 337, 338 — collapse of feudalism — 161, 168, 264, 337
— survivals of — 219, 264
See also Burghers; Estates, social; Guilds; Landed property; Middle Ages; Monarchy, absolute; Serfdom; Serf peasants; State
Fleet (German) — 242, 381
Force
— in history — 367, 370
— and revolution — 338
— violent and peaceful means — 38, 338
— reactionary, counter-revolutionary — 38, 338
— force must be opposed by every kind of force — 38, 338
See also Terror
Foreign policy — 336
Fourier's socialism — 260
France — 372
— population — 160-61
— formation of the French nation — 161, 372
— national character — 141
— in the Middle Ages — 228
— under absolute monarchy (seventeenth-eighteenth centuries) — 198, 228
— parliaments — 198
— during the Restoration — 219, 310
— legislation — 190, 399, 445, 448-49
— suffrage — 399

Page Break me8.643
— home policy, domestic situation — 66, 129, 307
— and Austria — 431
— and Belgium — 376
— and England — 215
See also Bourgeoisie, French; French Revolution; Napoleonic wars; Peasantry, French; Petty bourgeoisie, French; Revolution of 1848 in France; Wars of the First French Republic; Working class in France

Frankfurt National Assembly — 51-52, 99, 104, 240, 414, 421
— and imperial regency and ministry — 16, 65, 66-74, 82, 88-93, 99, 138, 179, 242, 297
— and Malmö armistice — 157, 296, 504
— and coup d'état in Prussia — 16, 65
— the Left, Left Centre — 53, 54
Frankish Kingdom — 369
Freedom — 332, 363-65
— political — 159, 164-65, 330
— of speech — 125
— of association — 77, 159, 165, 195, 316
— of the press — see Press
Freemasons — 94
French Revolution
— its character and aims — 160-62
— role of the masses — 161
— and the bourgeoisie — 161-62
— and workers — 161
— revolutionary wars — 237
— Constituent National Assembly — 18, 198
— National Convention — 197
— and religion and Church — 161
— and Germany — 372
— and Switzerland — 43
See also Jacobin dictatorship; Napoleonic wars; Wars of the First French Republic
Page me8.643
G
Galicia — 229, 230-31, 264, 265, 373, 375, 399, 405, 434, 442, 466, 468, 469
— peasant uprisings in 1846 — 230
German Confederation (1815-66) — 269, 525
See also Federal Diet in Germany
Germany — 371-72, 390
— national character of the Germans — 372, 373, 376, 414
— in the Middle Ages — 337
— and the French Revolution and Napoleonic wars — 88, 273, 372
— opposition movement in the early nineteenth century — 376, 377
— fragmentation of the country and the task of its unification — 51, 228 — industry and trade — 370, 372
— agriculture — 174, 326
— philistinism — 67, 168-69, 219, 260, 267, 356
— political system — 178
— constitutions of the German states — 232
— legislation and courts — 269-70
— bourgeois liberalism in the 1840s — 88, 158-59, 168, 172, 390
— democratic movement — 376
— youth, the student movement — 376-77
— education, school — 159, 171, 449

— press, press laws, censorship — 303, 433, 437 — foreign policy, diplomacy — 372, 376-77
— and Argentina — 66
— and Austria — 228-29
— and England — 265, 372
— and Hungary — 270, 367-68
— and Italy — 371-72
— and Poland — 231, 372, 378
— and Russia — 211-12, 372, 378
— and the Slavs — 227-38, 366-78
— and Switzerland — 55, 58-59, 63, 66-74, 98, 109, 116, 119, 136-37, 138, 179, 185
See also Austria; Baden republican uprisings; Bourgeoisie, German; Burghers; Communist League; Federal Diet in Germany; Fleet; German Confederation; Nobility, German; Peasantry, German; Petty bourgeoisie, German; Philistinism; Prussia; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Working class in Germany
Gibraltar — 70

Page Break me8.644
Gold — 419, 526
Greece, Ancient — 259
Greece, Greeks — 230
Guilds, the guild system — 259
— guildsmen — 259
— and bourgeois revolution and the bourgeoisie — 161, 219
— as patriarchal survivals under capitalism — 219, 266, 335
See also Handicrafts
Page me8.644
H
Handicrafts, craftsmen — 266
Hegelianism — 130, 234
“Hilf Dir” military association (Biel, 1848) — 205, 208-09, 242
History, historical development — 51, 104, 230, 234, 274, 316, 365-67, 370
Holy Alliance — 211-12, 362, 438
Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation (962-1806) — 65, 270
Humanism — 213, 365
Hungary — 228, 230
— population — 227, 236-37, 303, 370
— industry and trade — 232
— political system, constitution — 232, 290
— the press — 303
— in 1848-49 — 227-38, 270, 371, 378, 399
— and Austria — 227-33, 235-38, 270, 367, 370, 375-76, 399
— and Germany — 270, 367-68
— and Poland — 230
— and the Slavs — 227-38, 367-71
— and Turkey — 230-31, 233-34

See also Aristocracy, Hungarian; Bourgeoisie, Hungarian; National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary; Peasantry, Hungarian; Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary
Hussite movement — 231
Page me8.644
I
Ideas — 163, 374
Ideology — 166, 233, 235
Individual, person — 263, 327
Industry (large-scale) — 264-66, 328, 336
— machines as the basis of its development — 139
— its capitalist character — 260-61, 326, 336
— its role in social progress — 264, 327
— and taxes — 337
— and commerce — 214-15
— and agriculture — 229, 326
— and classes and the class struggle — 272
— and formation of the proletariat — 260
— and the bourgeoisie's political domination — 263-64, 335, 336, 371
— its development as a material premise of the communist transformation of society — 266
Internationalism, proletarian — 12
Inventions — 261
Ireland — 214
Italy — 197
— Italian nation, national character — 414
— lumpenproletariat (lazzaroni) — 17
— struggle for the country's unification — 414
— duchies of Tuscany, Parma and Modena — 456
— and Austria — 103, 213, 214, 235, 294, 372-73, 431, 439
— and England — 372
— and Germany — 372
— and Russia — 372
— and Switzerland — 84-85, 216-17, 239, 251
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Kingdom of the Two Sicilies; Lombardian-Venetian Region; Papacy; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Page me8.644
J
Jacobin dictatorship, Jacobins — 125, 161, 228
— revolutionary terrorism — 161, 228
Jews, the Jewish question — 32, 94, 232, 415-16

Page Break me8.645
June uprising of the Paris proletariat in 1848 — 16, 23, 103
— and petty-bourgeois democrats — 213
— establishment of Cavaignac's military dictatorship, suppression of the uprising — 23, 101-04 — consequences of its suppression — 23, 66-67, 104, 124-25, 213-14

— its influence on the workers' and the national liberation movement in other countries — 12, 214
— its defeat and strengthening of the European counter-revolution — 16, 23, 101-04, 168, 214, 438
Junkers, Prussian — 261, 273, 381, 385
Jurisdiction — 79, 324-25
See also Courts
Jurisprudence — 129
Jurists — 130, 198
Page me8.645
K
Kingdom of the Two Sicilies (Naples) — 102, 183, 216, 239, 251, 252
Page me8.645
L
Labour — 259-60
Landed property — 161, 262, 326-27, 335, 399
See also Mortgage
Landowner — 161, 262, 288
Language — literary — 233
— Albanian — 233
— French — 8, 139, 149
— German — 68, 139, 233, 370
— German in Switzerland — 68, 139
— Greek — 233
— Hungarian — 233
— Italian — 139, 233
— Romansh — 139
— Rumanian — 231, 233
— old Slav — 233
— Sorbian — 369
Law, right — 330
— as a superstructure — 328
— and production — 328
— and revolution — 154, 165-66, 197, 316-17, 325, 342-43
— might as the basis of right — 6, 50 — international — 69-70, 73
— civil — 389
— criminal — 310, 324-25, 335
— private — 324-25
See also Courts; Jurisprudence; Laws; Legislation; State
Laws — 278, 325, 327-28
Law safeguarding personal freedom — 25, 78-79
Legislation
— its dependence on social and economic relations — 313, 318-19, 327-28, 335-36

— pre-bourgeois — 335-36
— in bourgeois society — 32, 158, 173, 310-11, 318-19
— civil — 389
Liberalism, bourgeois — 158-59, 168, 172, 248
Loans — 173, 174
Logic — 69, 131, 272
Lombardian-Venetian Region — 183, 216, 239
Lorraine — 376
Page me8.645
M
Machines — 266
Magyars — 228, 235-36, 370, 398-99, 412-13
Malmö negotiations and armistice — see Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50
Material, the — 273, 288, 328, 400
— material interests — 336, 371
— material basis — 158, 335
— social relations — 326 — material needs — 336, 377
— production — 337
— material force — 331
— material mode of production — 327
— material means — 266
Material conditions of the life of society — 327
— and political and juridical superstructure — 327, 336
Means of communication — 371
Means of production — 266

Page Break me8.646
Mexico
— political system — 365
— and the USA — 365
Middle Ages, medievalism — 31, 259, 327, 337
See also Feudalism; Monarchy
Military art — 102
Mode of production — 158, 259, 327-28
Monarchy — 161, 162, 336-37, 358, 370
See also England; France; Monarchy, absolute; Monarchy, constitutional; Prussia; Tsarism
Monarchy, absolute (absolutism) — 6, 15-16, 33, 158, 159, 161, 162, 163, 178, 211, 229, 262-64, 274, 317, 327, 331, 336-37, 358
— and the bourgeoisie — 158-59, 161, 263-64
— and workers' struggle — 215, 316-17
See also Despotism
Monarchy, constitutional — 15-16, 151, 159, 161, 163, 178, 262-63, 330-31
Monasteries — 109-10, 183
Money — 227, 261, 265, 419, 449

Moravia — 232
Mortgage — 288
Page me8.646
N
Naples — see Kingdom of the Two Sicilies
Napoleonic wars — 88, 175, 215, 372
— and England — 215, 372
— and Germany — 88, 372
— and Prussia — 99
— and Russia — 372
See also Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and Vienna treaties of 1815
Nation, nationality — 17, 232, 234-36, 369-71
— origin — 234-35
— role of economic relations in the consolidation of nations — 367
— community of territory — 367 — language barrier — 233, 368, 370
— national character — 232, 234
— national culture — 232, 233
— national feelings — 367
— elimination of national isolation under capitalism — 232
— national assimilation — 369-70
See also National question
Nationalism
— national prejudices — 229, 372
— national narrow-mindedness — 229, 233, 246-47, 372
National liberation struggle
— as a component part of bourgeois-democratic revolutions — 371-72
— struggle of oppressed nationalities for independence and the working class — 215, 238
National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary — 236-38, 270, 351, 362, 373, 375, 394
— military operations — 225, 235-38, 270, 290-94, 298-99, 300-03, 347, 350-53, 360-61, 394, 404-08, 412-13, 423-31, 432-44, 451-55, 457, 458-62, 466-68, 471-73, 477-80
— and prospects for the development of revolution in Europe — 294, 431
National question
— national oppression, its social roots and consequences — 214, 371-72
— flaming up of national strife by the ruling classes — 229-30
— liberation of oppressed nations as a component part of struggle for democratic reforms — 214, 371-72, 375
— and the bourgeoisie — 232
— and the working class and workers' movement — 214
— proletarian revolution as a means for the complete abolition of national oppression — 215
Neuchâtel — 7-8, 108, 244-45
Neue Rheinische Zeitung
— organ of the proletarian wing of democracy — 23, 366, 390, 421-22, 509-10

— its persecution by the reactionaries — 48-49, 81-82, 182, 304-22, 495, 496, 504, 510, 511, 516, 517, 518-20, 521, 527-28
Nobility, German — 33, 168, 262, 263, 267, 372, 449
— in the Middle Ages, knights — 228, 229
— and the bourgeoisie — 168, 229, 266
See also Junkers, Prussian

Page Break me8.647
Page me8.647
O
Officials
— as a component part of the oppressors' state apparatus — 26, 134, 170, 201, 263, 265, 288, 309, 313, 322, 383, 385, 464 — need for revolutionary destruction of the old bureaucratic state apparatus — 38, 197, 275, 317, 342-43
See also Bureaucracy
Page me8.647
P
Pan-Germanism — 376
Pan-Slavism — 231, 233-36, 238, 363-68, 371-72, 374-78, 438-39
Papacy — 109, 213
Papal states — see Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Parcella, parcellation — 399
Parliament
— its role and class character — 337
— and the masses — 14-15
— and taxes — 337
Parochialism, provincial narrowmindedness — 10, 12, 205-06, 229, 241, 249
Party, proletarian — 215, 390
See also Chartism; Communist League
Pauperism — 217
Peasantry — 289
— in the bourgeois revolution — 175
— peasant question in colonies — 232
Peasantry, Austrian — 229, 230, 405
Peasantry, French — 175
Peasantry, German — 175, 288, 289, 334, 449
Peasantry, Hungarian — 299, 351, 399
Peasant uprisings, peasant movement — 229, 302, 351
People, popular masses — 230, 233-34
— as a decisive force in the revolution — 14-15, 34, 102, 160-61, 167, 168-69, 176, 197, 275, 329, 342, 362
— its right to the revolution — 165, 166, 339
People's sovereignty, people's government — 107, 328, 330, 331, 336, 337
Petty bourgeoisie — 170, 266, 287-88
Petty bourgeoisie, French — 125-27

See also Democracy
Petty bourgeoisie, German — 67, 262, 266, 274, 287-88
See also Burghers; Democracy; Philistinism; Prussia; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
Philanthropy — 218-19, 255
Philistinism — 141, 161
Pietism, pietists — 43, 526
Plebeians, plebs — 161, 263
Poland — 375, 399
— Polish nation — 367, 375
— feudal aristocracy, its alliance with the oppressors of Poland — 229, 399 — nobility (szlachta) — 229, 399
— peasantry, serfdom — 229-30
— partition of — 229, 369, 372, 438
— national question — 230
— revolutionary and democratic movements — 229-30
— uprising in 1794 — 372, 438
— insurrection of 1830-31 — 270, 372, 399
— and the revolution of 1848-49 — 213, 214, 230, 235-36, 374, 375, 439
— and religion — 230
— emigration — 224-25, 270
— its oppression and plunder by the ruling classes of Germany — 224-25
— and Austria — 229-30, 235, 373, 375, 377, 378
— and Germany — 230-31, 372, 378, 438
— and Hungary — 230-31
— and Prussia — 224-25
See also Bourgeoisie, Polish; Polish question
Police — 7, 157, 170, 172, 220-21, 256, 315
Police and judicial persecutions
— of democrats and workers' leaders — 7, 171, 315-16, 342, 396
— of the leaders of the Cologne Workers' Association — 189-96, 319-21
— Lassalle's case — 341, 344-46, 463-65, 474-76

Page Break me8.648
— prosecution of the press — 315, 445
See also Courts; Neue Rheinische Zeitung; Police; State of siege Polish question
— and revolution in Europe — 375
Political power
— and economic relations — 158-59, 264, 327, 335
See also Class; Power, state
Political system
— as a superstructure — 161, 262-63, 328, 338
— feudal — 161, 262-63, 316-17, 328, 341
— bourgeois — 161, 262-63, 328
See also Economics and politics; State

Posen, Posen uprising (1848) — 224-25
Possibility — and probability — 44, 285
— and necessity — 285
Power, legislative and executive — 325, 330-31, 464
Power, state — 170-71, 263, 265
See also Political power; State
Prague uprising (July 1848) — 225, 230, 235, 374, 411
Pre-proletariat — 161
Press, the
— its essence and social role — 314, 316-18
— freedom of — 159, 165, 195, 313, 316, 318, 330
— bourgeois — 247
— workers' — 317
— of the proletarian party — 247, 477
See also Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Private property
— and law — 161, 201
— feudal — 15, 262
— of monasteries and Church — 109
— bourgeois — 161
— its monopoly as the condition of the rule of the bourgeoisie — 175
— as seen by bourgeois and petty-bourgeois economists — 129
See also Communism; Landed property
Production — 268, 328, 336
Progress — 229
Protectionism — 184, 251
Proudhonism — 123, 127, 129-32
Prussia
— Prussianism — 51, 223, 274
— history — 274
— during the French Revolution and Napoleonic wars — 99, 100, 273 — reforms of 1807-14 — 273, 274, 276
— in 1815-48 — 159
— and the revolution of 1848 in France — 274
— survivals of feudalism — 265
— industry — 158, 264
— guilds, handicrafts, craftsmen — 266
— agriculture — 265
— trade — 158, 219, 267
— finances, budget, taxes — 159, 171, 173, 261, 265, 273, 379-89, 418-20
— political and state system — 3-4, 158, 160, 161-64, 172-73, 178, 262-64, 265-66, 270, 273-74, 280, 329-31, 335-36, 358, 449-50
— militarism — 157, 223
— police system — 7, 172, 173, 190-91, 223, 315
— laws — 25, 77-79, 157, 296, 304-14, 333, 334, 381-83, 388, 389, 485-92

— factory laws — 264
— judiciary — 76, 79, 157, 170, 197-203, 315, 317, 318, 344-46, 463-65, 474-76
— Prussian Law — 171, 296, 309, 315, 381-82, 388-89
— franchise — 154, 157, 166, 324, 328
— Constitution, constitutional question — 154, 177, 193-94, 201, 255-57, 259-60, 261-67, 287-88, 296, 297, 313, 323-24, 328-29
— the press, press laws, censorship — 159, 313, 322, 347, 477
— home policy — 171
— religion and Church — 31, 171
— bureaucracy, officialdom — 15, 26, 38, 134, 157-58, 164, 168, 170-72, 176, 197, 201, 219, 257, 262-65, 267, 275, 288, 296, 309, 312, 313, 317, 318, 322, 335-36, 342, 381-83, 385, 397
— clergy — 385
— financial aristocracy — 257, 262, 267, 288

Page Break me8.649
— petty bourgeoisie — 266
— peasantry — 175, 274, 288
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 171, 211
— and Austria — 52, 211, 264-65, 269-70
— and Denmark — 456
— and England — 264, 266
— and Germany — 51, 99
— and Poland — 224-25
— and Russia — 211-12, 265, 278
— conflict with Switzerland over Neuchâtel — 7-8
See also Army, Prussian; Bourgeoisie, Prussian; Coup d'état in Prussia; Germany; Junkers, Prussian; Prussian National Assembly; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia; Rhine Province of Prussia; United Diet in Prussia; Working class in Prussia
Prussian National Assembly (1848) — 3-4, 14, 15, 17-18, 19, 21, 32, 36-38, 39, 51-52, 99, 176, 200, 296-97, 331, 332, 335-36, 338-39, 355-56
— Right-wing groups — 15, 30 — Left and Right Centre — 278-80, 392
— democratic group — 391
— the Left — 29, 30, 174, 182, 295, 321-22, 390-91
— Agreement Assembly — 75, 134, 154, 157, 165, 174-75, 176, 198, 296, 328, 333-35
Page me8.649
R
Radicalism, radicals
— as the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois political movement and trend — 125, 127, 248-49
— and the working-class movement — 125-27 Refugees
— Italian refugees in Switzerland — 61-62, 86, 112, 141-42, 144-45, 152, 216-17
— German refugees in Switzerland — 8, 12, 179-81
— Polish — 375

Religion — 31
Republic
— as a state system — 289
— of the nobility — 399
— bourgeois, democratic — 138, 289, 358-59, 362
— proletarian (“red”) — 43, 52, 84, 123, 283, 285
Requirements, needs
— and production — 158, 328
— and interests — 159, 328, 336
— and the state — 158-59, 337
— and law — 314, 328
— material — 377
— social — 158-59, 161, 314, 328, 337
— of the bourgeoisie and bourgeois society — 159, 336, 337
— their change and development and appearance of new needs
— 158, 328
— and revolution — 161, 328, 337
Reserve army of labour — 218-19, 266
Revolution — 325, 373, 377
— and the state — 38, 263-64, 316-17, 336-37, 338, 341, 464
— and law — 324-25, 327-28
— revolutionary initiative — 374
— and “legal basis” — 154, 165-66
— world revolution — 230
— of the nobility — 399
— in consciousness — 374
See also Force; Revolution, bourgeois; Revolution, permanent; Revolution, political; Revolution, popular; Revolution, proletarian; Revolution, social Revolutionary movement, revolutionaries — 278, 373, 391
Revolution, bourgeois — 161-62, 264, 327-28, 335-36, 362-63
— its preconditions — 264, 336
— its motive forces — 14-15, 102, 160-67, 169, 175, 275, 329, 342-43, 362 — its limited character — 16, 161-63, 172-73, 278, 316-17, 362-63
— attitude to the old state machine — 172, 316-17, 342, 343
— and law — 154, 165-66, 197, 317
— striving of the bourgeoisie to compromise with feudal reactionaries — 164-65, 175, 279-80 — and the question of property — 161
— and the working class — 161

Page Break me8.650
— and workers' representation in the government — 124
— as a stage for the transition to proletarian revolution — 323
— need for revolutionary methods of struggle to carry it through — 154, 165-66, 197, 228, 342-43
— and the national question — 162, 214, 371-73

— and the peasantry — 175
See also Bourgeoisie; Class struggle; English revolution of 1640-60; French Revolution; Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe; Revolution, popular Revolution of 1848-49 in the Austrian Empire
— uprising in Vienna on March 13, 1848 — 16-17, 162, 201, 235
— people's actions in Vienna on May 15 and 26, 1848 — 102
— uprising in Vienna on October 6, 1848 — 12, 15, 16, 51, 88-93, 94, 101, 104, 157, 168, 177, 214, 225, 227, 228, 235, 297, 356, 362, 373, 375
— Court party — 15, 103
— financial aristocracy — 201
— bourgeoisie — 17, 201, 256
— working class — 17, 122, 201, 256
— students — 17, 122
— army — 120, 121, 372, 447
— national guard — 17
— Imperial Diet — 15
— national question — 17, 230, 352, 373-75
— and Hungary — 228, 230, 232, 235-38, 294, 356, 373, 467
— and Italy — 103-04, 213, 235, 462
— and the Slavs — 15, 94, 103, 225, 230, 232-38, 347, 348, 353, 363, 365, 366, 370, 372
— and the Poles — 15, 230, 231, 233, 235, 373, 375
— and the Czechs — 94, 225, 230, 235, 273-78
— and Russian Tsarism — 233, 373, 437-38, 453, 461-62
— and the Frankfurt National Assembly — 88-93
— preliminary results — 356
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; National Liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary
Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe
— prerequisites and character — 16-17, 161-62, 227, 335-37
— its beginning — 101, 213, 414
— condition for its victory — 215
— and the working class — 8, 12, 214
— and the bourgeoisie — 23, 161, 214
— and national movements — 214-15, 227, 229-30, 238, 373-75, 377-78, 457
— development of the revolution in France as its decisive factor — 16-17, 23, 101-04, 213-15, 227, 238, 284 — counter-revolution and reaction — 16-17, 23, 101-03, 277, 294, 362, 438
— and England — 101-02, 214-15
— and Russia — 157, 214, 373, 438
— and world war — 215, 238, 294, 457
— and loss of democratic illusions — 104, 197, 213, 362-65, 414, 439
— preliminary results by the beginning of 1849 and prospects — 213-15, 438-39
Revolution of 1848 in France. The Second Republic (1848-49) — 16-17
— February revolution — 161, 203, 213
— Provisional Government — 84, 124-25, 213
— people's action on May 15, 1848 — 101, 102, 125
— election of Louis Bonaparte as President — 18, 23, 104, 213-14

— Odilon Barrot Ministry — 214, 278, 280
— National party (moderate republicans) — 66-67
— Réforme party ("Montagnards" of 1848) — 123-28, 131, 213, 362
— dynastic opposition — 214
— petty-bourgeois utopian socialist trends — 123-24, 126-28, 131-32
— and the bourgeoisie — 124, 213-14, 362
— and the petty bourgeoisie — 124, 126-27
— and the working class and its role in — 84, 123-28, 214

Page Break me8.651
— workers' clubs and secret societies — 125, 132
— its impact on European states — 84, 214-15, 238
— prospects of its development — 16-18, 214, 289
See also June uprising of the Paris proletariat in 1848; Proudhonism
Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany
— its prerequisites — 158-59, 326-29
— its character and specific features — 178, 197, 270, 316-17, 358-59, 362, 414
— March revolution — 34, 102, 104, 159-67, 190, 213, 316-17, 342, 362, 414, 465
— and the attitude of the bourgeoisie — 15-16, 160, 162-78, 266-67, 357-59
— and the working class — 162, 170, 174, 189-95, 266
— and the peasantry — 47, 288-89
— and the petty bourgeoisie — 262, 266-67, 288-89
— democratic movement and the attitude of petty-bourgeois democrats — 52, 53, 54, 190, 315-16, 358, 376, 390-91
— and absolutism — 158, 161, 178, 262-64, 358
— liberal professors as champions of bourgeois interests — 51, 52, 106-07, 133, 267 — and struggle against the survivals of feudalism — 358
— and the revolution of 1848-49 in Austria — 88-93, 104
— and the revolution of 1848 in France — 16-18, 23, 214-15, 284-85, 289
— and Hungary — 269-70, 398-403
— and Italy — 414
— and Prussia — 51, 53, 65, 99, 104, 222-26, 269-70
— and Russia — 211-12
— and the Slavs — 214, 373-78
— and Switzerland — 12, 67-74, 88, 138, 179-81, 246-47
— offensive of the counter-revolution and reaction — 104, 178, 277, 315-16, 320, 358, 362
See also Baden republican uprisings; Communist League; Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50; Federal Diet in Germany; Frankfurt National Assembly; Neue Rheinische Zeitung; Prussian National Assembly; Revolution of 1848-49 in the Austrian Empire; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary — 227-28, 230-33, 235-38, 373, 436, 438
— revolutionary events in March 1848 — 235, 399
— anti-feudal agrarian reforms — 399
— landed aristocracy, top-rank officers — 348, 399, 410-11, 443-44
— peasant movement — 237, 292-93, 299, 302, 351, 431

— national question and nationalities policy — 229-30, 233
— and the Slavs — 225, 228, 230, 235, 236, 238, 352, 370-71, 373, 375, 377-78, 409-11, 416-17, 438, 469, 479
— sympathy with the revolution by the oppressed peoples of the Austrian Empire — 231, 351, 373, 375, 425, 442, 469
— and the Vienna uprising in October 1848 — 438
— its prospects and impact on the development of the revolution in Europe — 238, 294, 431
— and Austria — 227-28, 235-36, 294, 299, 375-76, 415-16, 431, 438, 478
— and Prussia — 269-70, 438
— and Russian Tsarism — 373, 402, 425, 430-31, 432-39, 440-41, 453-54
— and German liberals — 394-95, 398-403
See also National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary
Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
— general description and aims — 101, 104, 213, 227, 373, 414, 439
— and lumpenproletariat (lazzaroni) — 17
— in the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies — 17, 102, 104, 213-14, 225, 362, 456
— in the Lombardian-Venetian Region — 372

Page Break me8.652
— developments in Milan — 101, 103, 104, 362
— in the Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) — 103-04
— in the Duchy of Tuscany — 101, 104, 213, 456
— in the Papal states — 101, 103, 104, 213
— Roman Republic (1849) — 414, 456
— and Austria — 103, 213, 456
— and France — 414
— and Germany — 372, 414
— and Switzerland — 216, 239-40, 251, 252
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49 Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
— its prerequisites — 158-59, 223, 326-29, 335-36
— character and distinctive features — 16, 159-67, 168-69, 178, 197, 269-70, 274, 276, 313, 316, 317, 329-30, 334-37, 339, 358-59, 362
— “agreement theory” of the Prussian bourgeoisie — 3, 134, 135, 154, 157, 163-64, 165-67, 328, 331, 334
— drafting of a Constitution — 328, 329
— March revolution — 17, 34, 53, 134, 135, 159-67, 172, 175, 190, 222, 223, 264, 273-78, 296-97, 316-17, 321, 326, 329, 335, 342, 465
— attitude of the bourgeoisie — 15-16, 158-61, 162-78, 182, 188-92, 201, 219-21, 254-67, 273-80, 286-89, 295-97, 315, 357-59, 392-93 — policy of the big bourgeoisie and financial aristocracy — 158, 257, 262, 267, 288
— liberals — 390-91
— Camphausen-Hansemann Ministry — 30, 157-58, 163-67, 169, 296-97, 326, 446, 484
— Auerswald-Hansemann Ministry — 30, 157-58, 160, 167-69, 182, 192, 315, 316, 321
— Pfuel Ministry — 7, 14, 17, 38, 175-77, 270, 321

— role of the working class in its development — 36, 47, 162-63, 164, 170-72, 174, 175, 189-96, 219-21, 255-61, 266, 288-89
— and the peasantry — 47, 175, 288-89, 334, 335, 449
— and the petty bourgeoisie — 266-67, 288-89
— democratic movement and the attitude of petty-bourgeois democrats — 24-25, 29, 41, 46, 47, 50, 52, 53, 172, 174, 177, 182, 190, 195, 279, 288-89, 321-22, 340, 346, 358, 391, 447-50
— and nobility, junkers — 33, 134, 158, 160, 163, 164, 168, 173-77, 257, 262, 263, 267, 273, 275, 288, 315, 326, 335-36, 449
— absolutist feudal party — 3-4, 15, 34, 134, 158-64, 171, 173, 178, 262-66, 274, 279, 326-27, 329, 335-37, 358-59
— bureaucracy — 15, 26, 38, 134, 157-58, 164, 168, 170, 172, 197, 201, 219, 257, 262, 264-65, 275, 288, 296, 316, 335, 342
— jurists, judiciary — 197-203, 267, 342-43, 465, 474-76
— army reserve (Landwehr) — 19, 36, 75, 77-78, 102, 164, 171-73, 176, 296, 321, 333
— struggle against the survivals of feudalism — 32, 168, 171-75, 219, 262-65, 266, 279, 288-89, 334-35, 449 — and the Rhine Province — 19, 38, 45, 65, 99, 160, 174, 296
— developments in Cologne (September 1848) — 75-76
— offensive of the counter-revolution and reaction — 14, 19, 25, 30-34, 37-38, 46, 47, 53, 75-80, 94, 104, 134, 135, 154-58, 167, 170-73, 174-78, 182, 187, 197, 200, 266, 275-76, 277-79, 297, 315-16, 320-26, 333, 336, 339, 342-43, 362, 447-50, 483, 499, 500, 527-28
— Prussian militarism — 17, 25, 157, 164, 168, 170, 172, 176, 187, 219, 223-26, 262, 265, 275, 279, 296, 316, 320, 332, 334-36
— Brandenburg-Manteuffel Ministry — 4, 14, 16, 18, 25-26, 31-32, 38, 46, 47, 50-53, 65, 75, 99, 106,

Page Break me8.653
135, 158, 160, 177, 192, 198, 200, 297, 333, 445-50
— and the movement for refusal to pay taxes — 18-19, 21, 24, 26, 29, 34, 36, 38-41, 45, 47-48, 50-52, 65, 76, 107, 135, 325, 330, 332, 333, 337-41, 358, 391, 446-50
— Prussian Constitution of December 5, 1848 (imposed Constitution) — 134, 154, 177, 193-94, 201, 255-57, 259-67, 287-89, 296, 297, 313, 322, 323, 329, 346
— and Poland — 31, 157, 193, 214, 224-25
— and the national movement in Schleswig-Holstein — 157
— and Austria — 211-12
— and Hungary — 394-95
— and Russia — 211-12
— and Switzerland — 7-8
See also Cologne Workers' Association; Coup d'état in Prussia; Neue Rheinische Zeitung; Posen; Prussian National Assembly; United Diet in Prussia
Revolution, permanent — 16, 123, 228
Revolution, political — 328
Revolution, popular — 316, 342-43
— as a form of carrying through the bourgeois revolution — 165-66, 316, 342-43

— and destruction of the old absolutist state machine — 197, 316-17, 342-43
Revolution, proletarian, socialist
— its historical prerequisites — 266
— as the completion of the permanent revolution — 16
— its international character — 214-15
— need for revolutionary violence — 363
— proletarian party as the condition for its victory — 215
— solution of the national question — 214-15
See also Class struggle; Communism; June uprising of the Paris proletariat in 1848; Party, proletarian Revolution, social — 127, 215
Rhine Province of Prussia — 38, 45, 65, 99, 174
— democratic movement — 41, 46, 160, 522, 529-30
Riot — 12
Roman state — see Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Rome, Ancient — 219, 224, 259
Royal power, royalty — 4, 16-18, 33, 45, 106-07, 134, 159, 160, 163, 194-96, 263-64, 323, 327, 330, 336
See also Feudalism; Monarchy
Rumanians — 351, 352, 406-07, 436, 471
Russia
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 119, 211-12, 456
— and Austria — 211-12, 375-76, 437-38, 440-41
— and Germany — 211-12, 372, 378
— and Hungary — 438-39, 453
— and Italy — 372-73
— and Prussia — 211-12, 265, 456
See also Holy Alliance; Napoleonic wars; Pan-Slavism; Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary; Slavs; Tsarism
Ruthenians — 230, 236, 303
Page me8.653
S
Saint-Simon's socialism — 260
Saxons in Transylvania — 230, 232, 236, 429, 436, 437, 461, 472, 478
See also Transylvania
Schleswig-Holstein question — 88, 223, 504
See also Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50; Frankfurt National Assembly; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia Science — 258-59
— and religion — 31
— in bourgeois society — 106-07
— “evil of privileged erudition” — 107
Scotland — 234
Serbia, Serbs — 298, 352-53, 409-10, 416, 432, 438, 440-42, 469
Serfdom — 159, 335
Serf peasants — 106, 259, 335, 337

Silesia — 25, 160, 174, 265
Silesian weavers' uprising in 1844 — 257
Sixteenth century — 161, 169, 371
Slav Congress in Prague — 364-65, 366-67, 373-74, 376
Slav languages — 231, 233
Slavs, the Slav question — 15, 227, 229, 231-36, 370-71

Page Break me8.654
— specific features of social and economic development — 231, 366-69, 371-72, 399
— German colonisation of Slav lands — 229, 231-34, 367-72
— Hungarian colonisation of Slav lands — 367-72
— revolutionary-democratic movement — 225, 230, 231, 234-35, 363-67, 374, 375, 377
— conservative national movements — 230-31, 234-38, 365-67, 377-78
— assimilation and centralisation of — 230-32, 235, 236, 366-72
— the Slav question and revolution of 1848-49 — 371-73, 375-76
— prospect of the Austrian Slavs participating in the revolution — 371-72
See also Bohemia; Croatia; Moravia; Pan-Slavism; Poland; Serbia; Slovakia; Slovenia
Slovakia, Slovaks — 293, 367, 368, 410, 411, 434, 435, 442, 469
Slovenia, Slovenes — 367
Small countries and nations — 230, 235-36, 238, 366-68
Small-scale production (agricultural) — 335
Socialism (theories and trends)
— Christian — 249
— of Louis Blanc — 84, 123-24, 131
— French — 123-27, 131-32
See also Proudhonism; Saint-Simon's socialism
Socialist movement in France
— during the July monarchy — 124
— during the Second Republic — 123-27, 130-31
Social question — 255-56, 262-63, 288-89
See also Revolution, social; Social relations
Social relations, social system — 326-27
— and production — 259, 327
— and property relations — 161, 259, 262
— and classes — 161, 259
— and political superstructure — 161, 262, 326-28
— and the state — 327
— and law — 327-28
— historical character of — 259
— and social revolution — 161-62, 259, 326-28
— feudal — 161-62, 326-28
— bourgeois — 161-62, 259, 327
— communist — 248
Society, bourgeois — 161, 335-36
— its rise — 327, 337, 338
— and bourgeois revolution — 327

— its economic basis — 326-27, 335
— social relations and the social system — 161, 259, 326-27
— as a society founded on class antagonisms — 336 — classes and social strata — 158, 259, 288-89, 335-36
— and class struggle — 101, 335-36
— and the state — 262-63, 266, 327, 328, 335-38, 358
— preconditions of its inevitable destruction and premises for the rise of a new society — 268
See also Bourgeoisie; Capital; Capitalists; Class; Class struggle; Social relations; State; Working class Society, feudal — see Feudalism
Sonderbund (Switzerland) — 12, 84, 142, 144-47, 149, 152
Spain — 15, 31, 70, 234
— first Carlist war of 1833-40 — 234, 294
— and England — 70
State, the
— as a superstructure — 263
— and the mode of production — 158, 327
— its class essence as a weapon of rule for the exploiters — 265 — and antagonistic society — 337 — state centralisation — 44, 240, 371
— state machinery — 170-71, 265, 316-17, 464
— and revolution — 38, 263, 316-17, 336, 338, 340-41, 464
— bourgeois — 173, 261, 263, 265-66, 331, 337-39
— feudal — 263, 335-38, 414
See also Despotism; Monarchy; Monarchy, absolute; Monarchy, constitutional; Republic
State of siege — 25, 53, 75-76, 177, 276-77, 280, 316, 445, 448-49
Stock exchange — 419
Styria — 228, 231, 369

Page Break me8.655
Superstructure — see Basis and superstructure
Svornost (Bohemia) — 376
Switzerland — 10-12, 44, 85-86, 138-41, 142-43, 246-47, 248-49
— territory and boundaries — 55, 58, 63, 69-70, 109, 116, 139
— population — 139
— the Swiss — 139-45, 147, 148, 247
— in the Middle Ages — 12
— and the French Revolution — 43
— and revolutions of 1848-49 in Europe — 12, 85, 217, 240
— democratic movement in 1848-49 — 7-12, 42-44, 83-85, 138-53, 244-45
— economy — 8, 184, 243, 251
— patriciate — 11, 12, 184, 205-06, 243, 247
— clergy and religion — 85, 109-10, 183, 244-45
— working class — 12, 13, 59
— peasantry — 217

— social and political system — 9-12, 42-44, 84-87, 138-40, 151-52, 239-41, 248, 249, 497
— Constitution — 22, 42-44, 85, 86, 217, 240, 252
— Federal Assembly — 57, 252
— National Council — 10-11, 22, 56, 58-60, 95, 97-98, 108, 111, 112, 113, 138-53
— Council of States — 22, 95, 97, 108, 113
— Federal Council — 22, 57-59, 95, 97-98, 108, 113, 116, 119, 136, 204
— suffrage — 42, 57-59
— legislation, courts — 42, 97-98, 108, 113, 119, 242
— home policy — 83, 86-87, 240, 253
— right of asylum and policy towards refugees — 22, 61, 86, 98, 112, 119, 136, 152, 179-81, 204-05, 247 — political parties (conservatives, liberals) — 9-10, 43, 58, 59, 83-85, 113, 248 — radicals — 9-12, 42-44, 56, 58, 85, 139, 206, 247-49
— the press — 8, 43, 58, 86, 109, 110, 137, 181, 183, 204-05, 246-50, 251, 252
— school, education — 85, 108
— foreign policy — 83-85, 86, 98, 119, 137, 248
— neutrality policy — 83-85, 86, 152, 217, 248, 249, 252-53
— Swiss recruits — 183, 216-17, 239, 251, 252
— and Austria — 12, 86, 144
— and Germany — 55, 58, 63, 66-74, 98, 109, 116, 119, 136-37, 138, 179, 185
— and Italy — 84, 216-17, 239, 251
— and Prussia — 244
— Prusso-Swiss conflict over Neuchâtel — 7-8
— and Russia — 119
See also Sonderbund
Page me8.655
T
Tactics of the proletarian class struggle — 390, 514
See also Party, proletarian; Revolution, proletarian; Working-class movement Taxes, the tax system
— as the economic basis of state power — 260, 261, 265, 337-41, 388
— demand for refusal to pay taxes as tactics of the democrats — 337-38
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
Terror, terrorism
— revolutionary — 122, 227, 375, 378, 461
— during the French Revolution — 161, 227
— of the ruling classes — 120-21, 227
See also Jacobin dictatorship
Thirty Years' War — 297
Town and country — 39-40, 335
Transylvania — 236, 298, 300, 348, 350-51, 360, 402, 404, 406-07, 425, 426, 429, 430, 435-39, 453-55, 461, 468, 469, 471-72, 477-78
Tsarism — 157, 211, 220, 362
Turkey — 233
— wars of conquest in the fourteenth-sixteenth centuries — 228, 232

— decline of the Empire — 229, 232

Page Break me8.656
— and Austria — 229, 232
— and Hungary — 229, 232
— and Russia — 214
Page me8.656
U
United Diet in Prussia — 158-59, 164, 166, 168, 169, 296, 324-27, 339, 446, 449-50
United States of America — 365
See also America; American-Mexican war of 1846-48
Universal suffrage — 256-57, 271-72
Page me8.656
V
Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and Vienna treaties of 1815 — 99-100
Vienna uprising in October 1848 — see Revolution of 1848-49 in the Austrian Empire
Voluntarism
— and revolution — 364
Page me8.656
W
Wallachia, Wallachians — 66, 214, 231, 236, 437, 441-42
War, wars
— and revolution and revolutionary movement — 215, 237-38
— and the working class and proletarian party — 215
— revolutionary — 375
— guerilla — 236, 237-38, 294, 301, 302, 407, 428, 429, 433, 434, 437, 442
— world — 215, 238
See also American-Mexican war of 1846-48; Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Austro-Turkish wars of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50; Napoleonic wars; National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary; Wars of the First French Republic
Wars of the First French Republic (end of the eighteenth and beginning of the nineteenth centuries) — 226, 237, 372, 438
Wealth
— its antagonistic character under capitalism — 267 — national — 263-65
West — 214
Will — 17, 271-72, 364
Working class — 127, 259-60
— industrial proletariat — 274
— as the only consistently revolutionary class — 289
— and the petty bourgeoisie — 127
— as the motive force in the revolution — 161
— and the national movement — 215
Working-class and socialist movement in Switzerland — 11-13, 185, 207-09, 249-50
Working class in France — 123-28, 131, 132, 161

Working class in Germany — 162, 219-21
Working class in Prussia — 219, 274, 288-89
Working class in Switzerland — 12-13, 59
Working-class movement — 170, 215
See also Chartism; Class struggle; Party, proletarian; Tactics of the proletarian class struggle; Working class
Working-class movement in England — see Chartism
Working-class movement in Germany — 8, 11-13, 185, 207-09, 249-50
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Silesian weavers' uprising in 1844
World market — 214, 224
— Britain's domination — 101, 214, 215, 219

Page Break me8.657

GLOSSARY OF GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES†a

Page me8.657

Page me8.657

Agram Zagreb
Breslau Wroclaw
Bromberg Bydgoszcz
EperiesPrešov
Erlau Eger
Esseg (Eszék) Osijek
Fiume Rijeka (Rieka)
Fünfkirchen Pécs
Gleiwitz Gliwice
Gran Esztergom
Grosswardein Oradea
Hermannstadt Sibiu
Karlowitz (Karlovce) Karlovci Sremski
Karlsburg Alba Julia
Karlstadt Karlovac
Kaschau (Kassa) Kosice
Klausenburg (Kolozsvár) Cluj
Komorn (Komarno) Komárom
Kosel Koale
Kronstadt Brasow
Lemberg Lvov
Leopoldstadt Leopoldov
Leutschau (Löcse) Levoca
Marienburg (Földvar) Feldioara
Mediasch Medias
Misox (Moesa) Mesocco
Myslowitz Myslowice

Neheim Neheim-Hüsten
Neuhäusl Nové Zámky
Neutra Nitra
Oberlausitz (Lausitz) Upper Lusatia
Ödenburg Sopron
Ofen Buda
OlmützOlomouc
OppelnOpole
Pancsova Pancevo
Peterwardein Petrovaradin
Plattensee Balaton
Posen Poznan
Pressburg (Pozsony) Bratislava
Raab Györ
RátiborRacibórz
Rimaszombat Rimavská Sobota
Schemnitz (Selmeczbanya) Banska Štiavnica

Page Break me8.658
Schweidnitz Swidnica
Semlin Zemun
Stettin Szczecin
Szegedin Szeged
Szeretfalva Sereth
Temesvár Timisoara
Waag (Vag) Váh
Waitzen (Vácz) Vác
Weisskirchen Bela Crkva
Werschetz (Versecz) Vršac
Wreschen Wrze&sa;nia

Footnotes
Page me8.3
†a In the article "Ministerium Brandenburg" published on November 5, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.7
†a This nickname of the Swiss royalists is an allusion to the fact that the old Swiss cantons preserved patriarchal relations similar to those found in the social organisation of an Arab nomadic tribe, the Bedouin. — Ed.
Page me8.8
†a i.e. the revolutionary-minded population of the mountain canton of Neuchâtel who were engaged mainly in clock- and watch-making. They were given the name by analogy with the representatives of the revolutionary Montagne — the Jacobins — in the French Convention of 1792-93. — Ed.

Page me8.9
†a i.e. the instructions which the deputies of the Swiss Diet received from their cantonal governments and which greatly impeded the adoption of general decisions. — Ed.
Page me8.14
†a This refers to the Hohenzollerns, who became hereditary margraves of Brandenburg in 1417. — Ed.
Page me8.17
†a In the original Schnurrbart in both cases. — Ed.
Page me8.17
†b Schiller, Die Jungfrau von Orleans, Act III, Scene 6. — Ed.
Page me8.18
†a Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, Act III, Scene 3. — Ed.
Page me8.18
†b Outlawing. — Ed.
Page me8.19
†a On November 12, 1848 (special supplement). — Ed.
Page me8.20
†a Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 142, November 14, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.21
†a Eichmann. — Ed.
Page me8.21
†b Minutoli. — Ed.
Page me8.22
†a Berne. — Ed.
Page me8.23
†a Supreme commander. — Ed.
Page me8.23
†b See Karl Marx, “The June Revolution” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 144-49). — Ed.
Page me8.23
†c See Karl Marx, “The Victory of the Counter-Revolution in Vienna” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 503-06). — Ed.
Page me8.25
†a This decision was adopted at the evening sitting of November 12, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.29
†a See this volume, p. 24. — Ed.
Page me8.30
†a This is the title of the sixth book of Goethe's novel Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre. — Ed.
Page me8.30
†b See this volume, p. 15. — Ed.
Page me8.30
†c “Der Bericht der Zentralabteilung über Kirche und Schule”, Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 115 (supplement). November 11, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.30

†d Take notice. — Ed.
Page me8.30
†e In the leading article of the Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 115, November 11, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.31
†a Paraphrased words of Rehoboam, King of Judah. See 1 Kings 12:11. — Ed.
Page me8.32
†a “Aus Breslau, den 8. November”, Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 115, November 11, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.32
†b “Ob Königtum, ob Republik”, Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 118, November 15, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.32
†c Without mincing the matter. — Ed.
Page me8.33
†a That is workers. — Ed.
Page me8.33
†b Heinrich Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Caput VIII. — Ed.
Page me8.34
†a Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act III, Scene 1; these words are written by Marx in English. — Ed.
Page me8.37
†a See this volume, p. 24. — Ed.
Page me8.38
†a An allusion to the Epistles of St. Paul to Thessalonians. — Ed.
Page me8.41
†a See this volume, p. 36. — Ed.
Page me8.43
†a The French name is Vaud. — Ed.
Page me8.43
†b Marilley. — Ed.
Page me8.44
†a The President was Furrer. — Ed.
Page me8.44
†b The Vice-President was Druey. — Ed.
Page me8.45
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me8.45
†b “Petition des Kölnes Gemeinderates”, Kölnische Zeitung No. 311 (second edition), November 19, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.45
†c See this volume, p. 36. — Ed.
Page me8.45
†d The reference is to Haugh and Wittgenstein who left the Assembly — together with other Right-wing deputies — after hearing the King's order transferring its sitting from Berlin to Brandenburg. — Ed.

Page me8.47
†a “An sämtliche königlichen Regierungen”, Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger No. 200, November 20, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.48
†a See this volume, pp. 20-21, 24 and 25-26. — Ed.
Page me8.50
†a See this volume, p. 41. — Ed.
Page me8.53
†a See this volume, p. 45. — Ed.
Page me8.53
†b So much the worse! — Ed.
Page me8.53
†c See this volume, p. 52. — Ed.
Page me8.53
†d So much the better! — Ed.
Page me8.57
†a See this volume, pp. 42-43. — Ed.
Page me8.58
†a See this volume, p. 55. — Ed.
Page me8.59
†a See this volume, p. 56. The difference in the number of votes is explained by the fact that in the previous report Engels quoted the preliminary result of the voting. — Ed.
Page me8.59
†b See this volume, pp. 142-53. — Ed.
Page me8.63
†a Imperial commissioner in Switzerland. — Ed.
Page me8.65
†a Simson and Hergenhahn. — Ed.
Page me8.65
†b See this volume, pp. 51-52. — Ed.
Page me8.66
†a Collected works of the day before. — Ed.
Page me8.68
†a At its sitting on November 18, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.68
†b First words of the line from Horace: “Quidquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi.” — Ed.
Page me8.68
†c Archduke John of Austria. — Ed.
Page me8.69
†a An allusion to Louis Bonaparte. — Ed.
Page me8.70
†a Engels wrote these two words in English. — Ed.
Page me8.71
†a Heinrich Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Caput XXI. — Ed.

Page me8.72
†a Tell that to somebody else. — Ed.
Page me8.73
†a A pun: the German Wesen here means “activity”, Unwesen “excesses”. — Ed.
Page me8.75
†a The words “with God for King and Fatherland” are from Frederick William III's decree of March 17, 1813, on organising the army reserve. — Ed.
Page me8.75
†b The reference is to the sitting of the Prussian National Assembly held to draw up a Constitution by agreement with the Crown. — Ed.
Page me8.77
†a Gatherings. — Ed.
Page me8.79
†a “Düsseldorf, vom 22. November”, Düsseldorfer Zeitung No. 311, November 24, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.79
†b “Neueste Nachrichten. Düsseldorf, 23. November”, Kölnische Zeitung No. 315, November 24, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.81
†a Former. — Ed.
Page me8.81
†b It's genuine Hecker. — Ed.
Page me8.81
†c Matthias Claudius, “Rheinweinlied”. — Ed.
Page me8.81
†d So much for the delicacy of the police! — Ed.
Page me8.81
†e Not to be touched! — Ed.
Page me8.83
†a The National Council and the Council of States which made up the Federal Assembly of Switzerland. — Ed.
Page me8.83
†b An eminently bourgeois appearance. — Ed.
Page me8.83
†c A paraphrase of Lear's words in Shakespeare's tragedy King Lear, Act IV, Scene 6. — Ed.
Page me8.85
†a In the Neue Rheinische Zeitung there is an editorial note: “To be continued in the supplement.” — Ed.
Page me8.86
†a Conceal a shrewd, penetrating mind under a kind-hearted appearance. — Ed.
Page me8.88
†a To their fathers. — Ed.
Page me8.88
†b John Milton, Paradise Lost. The quotation is in English in the German original. — Ed.

Page me8.88
†c See this volume, pp. 67-68. — Ed.
Page me8.89
†a Archduke John of Austria. — Ed.
Page me8.89
†b Paraphrase of a line from Schiller's ballad “Der Taucher”: “Da unten aber ist's fürchterlich.” — Ed.
Page me8.89
†c An allusion to the Staats-Lexikon oder Encyklopädie der Staatswissenschaften, in Verbindung mit vielen der angesehensten Publicisten Deutschlands, hrsg. von Carl von Rotteck und Carl Welcker, Bd. 15, Altona, 1843. — Ed.
Page me8.90
†a These words are from a German folk song well known in Ernst Moritz Arndt's adaptation under the title “Ausmarsch des Jahrs 1815”. — Ed.
Page me8.91
†a From Rossini's opera Tancredi. — Ed.
Page me8.94
†a See this volume, p. 32. — Ed.
Page me8.95
†a See this volume, p. 44. — Ed.
Page me8.97
†a See this volume, p. 95. — Ed.
Page me8.98
†a On the spot. — Ed.
Page me8.98
†b See this volume, pp. 63-64. — Ed.
Page me8.99
†a See this volume, p. 65. — Ed.
Page me8.99
†b Archduke John of Austria. The reference is to the “Proklamation des Reichsverwesers an das deutsche Volk, den Konflikt zwischen der Krone und der Nationalversammlung in Preussen betreffend”, November 21, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.99
†c Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 129, November 28, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.103
†a In August 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.104
†a Louis Bonaparte. — Ed.
Page me8.106
†a “Adresse der Berliner Professoren an den König von Preussen”, November 24, 1848; “Erklärung von Prorektor und Senat der Königlichen vereinten Friedrichs-Universität” in Halle, November 21, 1848 (Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger, November 25 and 26, 1848). — Ed.
Page me8.109
†a Pius IX. — Ed.
Page me8.109

†b On August 6, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.110
†a Persecuted church. — Ed.
Page me8.112
†a See this volume, pp. 61-62. — Ed.
Page me8.113
†a See this volume, p. 98. — Ed.
Page me8.113
†b See this volume, pp. 56 and 59. — Ed.
Page me8.117
†a “Die Fortdauer der Überstände an der Schweizergrenze”, Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 314 (supplement), November 24, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.117
†b Germain Metternich. — Ed.
Page me8.117
†c Informers. — Ed.
Page me8.117
†d Tremble, Byzantium! (Donizetti, Belisario.) — Ed.
Page me8.119
†a This word is given in English in the original. — Ed.
Page me8.119
†b See this volume, pp. 63 and 98. — Ed.
Page me8.123
†a A reference to “Manifeste électoral du Peuple”, Le Peuple No. 4, November 8-15, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.123
†b A reference to “Declaration au peuple”, La Réforme No. 310, November 9, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.123
†c [P.-J. Proudhon,] “Argument á la Montagne”, Le Peuple No. 5, November 15-21, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.124
†a They are bourgeois, those Montagnards. — Ed.
Page me8.126
†a Devotedness. — Ed.
Page me8.127
†a By Citizen. — Ed.
Page me8.129
†a P.-J. Proudhon, Qu'est-ce que la propriété? — Ed.
Page me8.130
†a After all, it is a remarkable work. — Ed.
Page me8.130
†b Heinrich Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Caput XXIII. — Ed.
Page me8.132
†a You can't understand him, but he is a remarkable man. — Ed.
Page me8.133

†a See this volume, pp. 106-07. — Ed.
Page me8.133
†b See Note 95. — Ed.
Page me8.133
†c Issue No. 215, December 5, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.136
†a See this volume, pp. 61-62 and 112. — Ed.
Page me8.136
†b Sent to the Imperial Government on November 4, 1848. See this volume, pp. 67-68. — Ed.
Page me8.137
†a See this volume, pp. 120-22. — Ed.
Page me8.138
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 333-36 and 482-84. — Ed.
Page me8.138
†b Fierce. — Ed.
Page me8.138
†c President of a canton. — Ed.
Page me8.139
†a A drama by Shakespeare. — Ed.
Page me8.139
†b Peasant in his Sunday best. — Ed.
Page me8.141
†a Outward appearance. — Ed.
Page me8.141
†b In essence. — Ed.
Page me8.141
†c See this volume, pp. 59-60, 61-62 and 112. — Ed.
Page me8.141
†d Escher and Munzinger. — Ed.
Page me8.142
†a The newspaper here has an editorial note: “To be continued.” — Ed.
Page me8.143
†a “Illi robur et des triplex circa pectus erat”. (Horace, Carminum, Ode 3.) — Ed.
Page me8.143
†b Excellent. — Ed.
Page me8.143
†c Such as Switzerland needs — Ed.
Page me8.143
†d Merchant tailor. — Ed.
Page me8.146
†a Fiery. — Ed.
Page me8.147
†a See this volume, pp. 114, 115. — Ed.
Page me8.147
†b Quite robust young man. — Ed.

Page me8.148
†a Matten also means “meadows”. — Ed.
Page me8.149
†a The words “maiden speech” are in English in the original. — Ed.
Page me8.149
†b This refers to Éléonore Louis Godefroy Cavaignac. — Ed.
Page me8.151
†a Attempt to win goodwill. — Ed.
Page me8.154
†a Self-styled. — Ed.
Page me8.157
†a An ironical allusion to Allgemeine Geschichte vom Anfang der historischen Kenntniss bis auf unsere Zeiten, by Karl von Rotteck, a well-known work at the time. Its subtitle was: Für denkende Geschichtsfreunde (For Thinking Friends of History). — Ed.
Page me8.158
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 108. — Ed.
Page me8.159
†a “Money has no master.” — Ed.
Page me8.161
†a In the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: “the revolution”. — Ed.
Page me8.163
†a Cf. Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act II, Scene 7. — Ed.
Page me8.164
†a A good face on a bad game. — Ed.
Page me8.164
†b An ironical allusion to the German liberal leaders whom Marx compares with Jourdain, hero of Moliére's comedy Le bourgeois gentilhomme. — Ed.
Page me8.164
†c The reference is to the Prince of Prussia. — Ed.
Page me8.165
†a A robust but malicious fellow (Thomas Hobbes, De cive, Preface). — Ed.
Page me8.167
†a This is evidently a misprint: is should read “the core of the counter-revolution”. — Ed.
Page me8.168
†a A quotation from Hansemann's speech in the first United Diet on June 8, 1847. — Ed.
Page me8.168
†b The reference is to Hildebrandt's novel Kuno von Schreckenstein oder die weissagende Traumgestalt. — Ed.
Page me8.169
†a Black and white were the Prussian colours. — Ed.
Page me8.172
†a Quotations from the speeches made by Kühlwetter and Hansemann in the Prussian National Assembly on August 9, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.174

†a An allusion to the Neue Preussische Zeitung also known as the Kreuz-Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me8.174
†b Fra Diavolo — a sobriquet of Michele Pezza, an Italian bandit; the title character of an opera by Auber. — Ed.
Page me8.175
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 117-18, 290-95 and 327-32. — Ed.
Page me8.178
†a Job 1:21. — Ed.
Page me8.179
†a See this volume, pp. 116-17 and 141-42. — Ed.
Page me8.180
†a La Suisse No. 291, December 6, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.180
†b Note of the Vorort Berne to the Imperial Government (see this volume, pp. 67-68 and 136). — Ed.
Page me8.182
†a "Arrests" (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 177-79) quoted below. — Ed.
Page me8.183
†a i.e. the Government of the canton. — Ed.
Page me8.183
†b Schweizerischer Beobachter. — Ed.
Page me8.185
†a The German National Assembly in Frankfurt. — Ed.
Page me8.186
†a The back of the document bears the address: "To Herr Trützschler, deputy at Frankfurt am Main." — Ed.
Page me8.187
†a See this volume, pp. 75-80. — Ed.
Page me8.187
†b The Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me8.189
†a In the original there is a pun on the words Gewissen (conscience) and Wissen (knowledge). — Ed.
Page me8.189
†b Here and below the indictment is quoted from M.F. Anneke's book Der Politische Tendenz-Prozess gegen Gottschalk, Anneke und Esser, which is named later in this article. — Ed.
Page me8.194
†a Body of the crime. — Ed.
Page me8.198
†a The supreme pontiff. — Ed.
Page me8.198
†b Esser I and Esser II. — Ed.
Page me8.198
†c Sethe. — Ed.

Page me8.198
†d No. 56, December 21, 1848 (morning edition). — Ed.
Page me8.198
†e Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act I, Scene 4. — Ed.
Page me8.199
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me8.199
†b Quoted from the Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger No. 229, December 19, 1848, — Ed.
Page me8.200
†a Quoted from the report "Münster, vom 20. Dez." published in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung No. 336, December 23, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.200
†b "Gesetz, betreffend das gerichtliche und Disziplinar-Strafverfahren gegen Beamten." — Ed.
Page me8.201
†a The reference is to the "Verordnung über einige Grundlagen der künftigen Preussischen Verfassung". — Ed.
Page me8.204
†a See this volume, pp. 180-81. — Ed.
Page me8.204
†b T.W. Löwenfels, F. Neff und G. Thielemann, Die zweite republikanische Aufstand in Baden, Basel, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.205
†a Subsequently it appeared as Die Evolution. — Ed.
Page me8.205
†b See this volume, pp. 183-84. — Ed.
Page me8.208
†a Frederick Engels. — Ed.
Page me8.209
†a Julius Standau. — Ed.
Page me8.210
†a See this volume, p. 191. — Ed.
Page me8.211
†a Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me8.212
†a Franz Joseph. — Ed.
Page me8.212
†b Catherine. — Ed.
Page me8.213
†a Schiller, "An die Freude". — Ed.
Page me8.214
†a Policemen. — Ed.
Page me8.216
†a See this volume, p. 183. — Ed.
Page me8.218

†a Here and below this word is given in English in the original. — Ed.
Page me8.219
†a An allusion to Elba, the island to which Napoleon I was exiled during the Bourbon restoration in 1814. — Ed.
Page me8.222
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me8.222
†b That is Kreuz-Zeitung (Neue Preussische Zeitung). — Ed.
Page me8.223
†a Frederick VII. — Ed.
Page me8.224
†a A reference to Engels' articles “The War Comedy” and “The Armistice with Denmark” (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 42-44 and 266-69). — Ed.
Page me8.224
†b Vespasian. — Ed.
Page me8.225
†a Ferdinand II. — Ed.
Page me8.225
†b Lessing, Minna von Barnhelm, Act I, Scene 2. — Ed.
Page me8.226
†a Posen. — Ed.
Page me8.226
†b Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand. — Ed.
Page me8.227
†a The white terror by the red terror. — Ed.
Page me8.230
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 337-81. — Ed.
Page me8.234
†a See G.W.F. Hegel, Vorlesungen über die Philosophie der Geschichte. Einleitung. — Ed.
Page me8.237
†a From Kossuth's speech in the Hungarian parliament on November 9, 1848 (Közlöny, November 11, 1848). — Ed.
Page me8.238
†a The colours of the Austrian flag. — Ed.
Page me8.240
†a Allgemeine Preussische Staats-Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me8.244
†a The venerable company of pastors. — Ed.
Page me8.245
†a The local nickname of royalist candidates for election to the Swiss National Council (see this volume, p. 7). — Ed.
Page me8.246
†a See this volume, p. 317. — Ed.
Page me8.248
†a The French name is Porrentruy. — Ed.

Page me8.249
†a Mild in manner, radical in substance. — Ed.
Page me8.250
†a See this volume, p. 205. — Ed.
Page me8.252
†a See this volume, p. 136. — Ed.
Page me8.252
†b Father, I have sinned. — Ed.
Page me8.252
†c Sins are committed inside and outside the walls of Ilion. — Ed.
Page me8.254
†a Here follows the statement by the Kölnische Zeitung editors published in their paper on January 20, 1849 (issue No. 17), following the address “To the Primary Electors”. — Ed.
Page me8.254
†b Great minds think alike. — Ed.
Page me8.255
†a In the Kölnische Zeitung: “social questions”. — Ed.
Page me8.255
†b The gods of minor nations. — Ed.
Page me8.255
†c There is the solution of the social problem! — Ed.
Page me8.256
†a See this volume, pp. 218-21. — Ed.
Page me8.258
†a Matthew 11:15. — Ed.
Page me8.260
†a An allusion to Henry LXXII, Prince of Reuss-Lobenstein-Ebersdorf. — Ed.
Page me8.261
†a See this volume, pp. 222-26. — Ed.
Page me8.262
†a Figaro, you would not have found that out! An allusion to “Ah, Figaro, pends-toi; tu n'as pas deviné celui-lá!” (Figaro, hang yourself; you didn't find that one!) from Beaumarchais' comedy La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro, Act V, Scene 8. — Ed.
Page me8.263
†a A quotation from Frederick William III's decree of March 17, 1813, on organising the army reserve. — Ed.
Page me8.267
†a Probably an allusion to the supporters of the Prussian royal house, whose coat of arms featured an eagle. — Ed.
Page me8.267
†b An allusion to Camphausen and Hansemann. — Ed.
Page me8.272
†a Heinrich Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Caput VIII. — Ed.
Page me8.273
†a That is too simple-minded! — Ed.

Page me8.274
†a Marx uses ironically the expression Staat der Intelligenz by which Hegel designates the Prussian state (see G.W.F. Hegel, Vorlesungen über die Geschichte der Philosophie. Vorrede, gesprächen zu Heidelberg den 29-sten Oktober 1816 (Note). — Ed.
Page me8.275
†a On February 24, 1848, Louis Philippe was overthrown in France; March 18, 1848 — the beginning of the revolution in Prussia. — Ed.
Page me8.276
†a Goethe, “Mignon”. From the novel Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre, Book V, Chapter 16. — Ed.
Page me8.279
†a See this volume, p. 178. — Ed.
Page me8.281
†a Louis Bonaparte. — Ed.
Page me8.282
†a Cavaignac's butchers. — Ed.
Page me8.285
†a See this volume, pp. 281-83. — Ed.
Page me8.286
†a Quoted from the article “Die Wahlen”, Kölnische Zeitung No. 25, January 30, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.287
†a See this volume, p. 255. — Ed.
Page me8.288
†a See this volume, pp. 262-63. — Ed.
Page me8.288
†b That is of Brüggemann. — Ed.
Page me8.290
†a “The mountains are in labour and a ridiculous mouse will be born” (Horace, De Arte Poetica, 139). — Ed.
Page me8.290
†b “Ungarn (Vom Kriegs-Schauplatz)”, Kölnische Zeitung No. 25 (supplement), January 30, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.290
†c “17. Armee-Bulletin”, Wiener Zeitung No. 19, January 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.291
†a One German mile is equal to 4.7 English miles. — Ed.
Page me8.291
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 211, February 2, 1849 (a report from Vienna with a reprint of the 18th Army Bulletin from the Wiener Zeitung No. 24, published on January 28, 1849). — Ed.
Page me8.292
†a Let us see! — Ed.
Page me8.292
†b A comitat is a Hungarian county. — Ed.

Page me8.294
†a The French army. — Ed.
Page me8.295
†a Goethe, “Wandrers Nachtlied”. — Ed.
Page me8.297
†a “Entwurf eines Verfassungs-Gesetzes für den preussischen Staat”, May 20, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.299
†a Colours of the Austrian flag. — Ed.
Page me8.300
†a “19. Armee-Bulletin”, Wiener Zeitung No. 27, February 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.300
†b See this volume, p. 291. — Ed.
Page me8.301
†a i.e. the Kölnische Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me8.302
†a This legion was nearly 3,000 men strong and fought against the imperial troops from December 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.304
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, p. 179. — Ed.
Page me8.307
†a These titles are in English in the German original. — Ed.
Page me8.307
†b Schneider II. — Ed.
Page me8.308
†a Expositions by Counsellor of State Berlier, sitting of February 1810. — Ed.
Page me8.311
†a i.e. a deputy of the Prussian National Assembly, called upon to work out a Constitution by agreement with the Crown. — Ed.
Page me8.312
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, p. 179. — Ed.
Page me8.312
†b Not to be touched. — Ed.
Page me8.313
†a See this volume, p. 30. — Ed.
Page me8.315
†a Reference to the report “Bürgerverein” (Düsseldorf), published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 48, July 18, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.317
†a Schneider II. — Ed.
Page me8.319
†a See present edition, Vol. 7, p. 177. — Ed.
Page me8.320
†a “Legal Proceedings against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (see present edition, Vol. 7, p. 187). — Ed.
Page me8.321

†a The reference is to the article “Arrests” quoted at the beginning of this speech. — Ed.
Page me8.329
†a Bölling. — Ed.
Page me8.329
†b Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me8.334
†a See this volume, p. 175. — Ed.
Page me8.334
†b H.V. Unruh, Skizzen aus Preussens neuester Geschichte, Magdeburg, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.340
†a See this volume, p. 41 (Marx's italics here). — Ed.
Page me8.341
†a See this volume, p. 344. — Ed.
Page me8.344
†a See this volume, p. 341. — Ed.
Page me8.344
†b Ebermeier. — Ed.
Page me8.347
†a Kölnische Zeitung No. 35 (first supplement), February 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.347
†b Allgemeine Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me8.347
†c See this volume, pp. 235-36. — Ed.
Page me8.348
†a Here and elsewhere reports from Pest of February 1 and from Vienna of February 2 and 3, 1849, are quoted. They were published in the Allgemeine Zeitung No. 38, February 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.348
†b The Governor or Regent, i.e. Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me8.350
†a Wiener Zeitung No. 32, February 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.351
†a Colours of the Austrian imperial flag. — Ed.
Page me8.351
†b The Hungarian name is Buda. — Ed.
Page me8.351
†c Long live. — Ed.
Page me8.352
†a A quotation from Rajachich's proclamation published in the Südslavische Zeitung and cited by the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 31, February 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.355
†a Kölnische Zeitung No. 33, February 8, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.356

†a You asked for it, George Dandin! (Moliére, George Dandin, Act I, Scene 9). — Ed.
Page me8.358
†a See this volume, pp. 154-78. — Ed.
Page me8.360
†a See “Fünfter Armeebericht des F. M. Z. Schlick”, Wiener Zeitung No. 33, February 8, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.363
†a Appeal to the Slavs. By a Russian patriot Mikhail Bakunin, member of the Slav Congress in Prague. Koethen, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.363
†b In Bakunin's pamphlet: “gegen die alte Unterdrückungspolitik” — “against the old policy of oppression”. — Ed.
Page me8.363
†c A reference to the Vienna Congress of 1814-15. — Ed.
Page me8.363
†d In Bakunin's pamphlet: “zwischen den Nationen” — “among the nations”. — Ed.
Page me8.366
†a See this volume, pp. 233-36. — Ed.
Page me8.366
†b Heinrich Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Caput VII. — Ed.
Page me8.368
†a German mile equals 4.7 English miles. — Ed.
Page me8.369
†a Outlet. — Ed.
Page me8.372
†a Spear-bearers. — Ed.
Page me8.372
†b Germans. — Ed.
Page me8.373
†a The colours of the Austrian flag. — Ed.
Page me8.377
†a A song by August Binzer written in 1819 on the dissolution of a student association in Jena. — Ed.
Page me8.379
†a Here and further quotations are from the report on the sittings of the united estates committees on October 25 and 26 presided by Bodelschwingh published in the Allgemeine Preussische Zeitung Nos. 306 and 307, November 4 and 5, 1842. — Ed.
Page me8.380
†a Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preussischen Staaten 1844, Berlin. — Ed.
Page me8.382
†a K.A. Kamptz, Jahrbücher für die Preussische Gesetzgebung, Rechtswissenschaft und Rechtsverwaltung, Bd. 37, Berlin, 1831. — Ed.
Page me8.382

†b Allgemeines Landrecht für die Preussischen Staaten, 2. Theil, 20-sten Titel, § 333. — Ed.
Page me8.383
†a "Uebersicht von der Resultaten den Finanzverwaltung im Jahre 1847" in Vorlagen an die National-Versammlung, [Berlin] 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.389
†a "Denkschrift über die Verwaltung des Staatsschatzes für die Zeit von 1840 bis 1846" in Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847, 1. Theil. — Ed.
Page me8.389
†b In the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. "17, 127 talers"; in the article "Further Contribution on the Old-Prussian Financial Administration" it was corrected as a misprint (see this volume, p. 418). — Ed.
Page me8.390
†a See this volume, p. 514. — Ed.
Page me8.390
†b "Die Sitzung der Nationalversammlung vom 7. und 8. August", published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 74, August 13, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.392
†a See this volume, pp. 354-59. — Ed.
Page me8.392
†b Reference is to the leading article "Kein Zentrum" signed in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 40, February 16, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.393
†a That does not concern us. — Ed.
Page me8.394
†a Published on February 16, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.395
†a Goethe, "Zahme Xenien" V. — Ed.
Page me8.396
†a Wit. — Ed.
Page me8.396
†b A man new and unknown. — Ed.
Page me8.397
†a For consideration. — Ed.
Page me8.397
†b We request the radical newspapers in Madrid to reprint these lines. — Ed.
Page me8.397
†c The Danish democratic newspapers will gladly inform the Danish public of the above statement which testifies to the truthfulness of the Prussian judiciary officials. — Ed.
Page me8.398
†a Quoted from the leading article "Die österreichische Note vom 4. Februar" published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 37, February 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.398
†b In the leading article "Der ungarische Krieg" published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 41, February 17, 1849. — Ed.

Page me8.398
†c Poor tax-paying plebeians. — Ed.
Page me8.400
†a A district in Vienna. — Ed.
Page me8.401
†a The Kölnische Zeitung has “rebel generals”. — Ed.
Page me8.401
†b See this volume, pp. 404-08. — Ed.
Page me8.401
†c The mountains are in labour and a ridiculous mouse will be born (Horace, De Arte Poetica, 139). — Ed.
Page me8.402
†a Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me8.404
†a In the Wiener Zeitung No. 38, February 14, 1849, and in other Austrian newspapers. — Ed.
Page me8.407
†a Windischgrätz. — Ed.
Page me8.408
†a Soldiers of the Magyar Defence Committee. — Ed.
Page me8.408
†b Engels refers to the leading article in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 33, February 8, 1849, quoted by Marx in his article “The Division of Labour in the Kölnische Zeitung” (see this volume, pp. 354-59). — Ed.
Page me8.409
†a After November 1, 1848. — Ed.
Page me8.409
†b See this volume, pp. 347-49. — Ed.
Page me8.410
†a Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 48, February 17, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.411
†a That is what it means to be a serious savant. — Ed.
Page me8.412
†a Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me8.413
†a From a popular song about Burgomaster Tschech's attempt on Frederick William IV on July 26, 1844:
Page me8.412
Hätte je ein Mann so'n Pech
Wie der Bürgermeister Tschech etc. — Ed.
Page me8.415
†a The right of the sword. — Ed.
Page me8.415
†b Defence Committee. — Ed.
Page me8.416
†a Sign-manual. — Ed.

Page me8.416
†b Engels draws a parallel here with the “citizen and communist” Drigalski (see this volume, pp. 75-80). — Ed.
Page me8.416
†c Chief Otbor. — Ed.
Page me8.417
†a Sabor. — Ed.
Page me8.418
†a See this volume, pp. 379-89. — Ed.
Page me8.420
†a G. (Geld — money) — market rate at which the scrip is in demand; Br. (Brief — letter) — market rate at which the scrip is offered for sale. — Ed.
Page me8.421
†a K.P. Berly. — Ed.
Page me8.421
†b The Frankfurt National Assembly. — Ed.
Page me8.421
†c Below is cited the reprint in the Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung No. 44, February 20, 1849, of the Paris correspondence published in Die Deutsche Reform. — Ed.
Page me8.423
†a Published in the Wiener Zeitung No. 42, February 18, 1849, and in other newspapers. — Ed.
Page me8.425
†a Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me8.426
†a Lloyd No. 84, February 18, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.427
†a Buda (Ofen) and Pest, which were then two independent cities. — Ed.
Page me8.428
†a See this volume, pp. 443-44. — Ed.
Page me8.429
†a Your Majesty, impregnable! — Ed.
Page me8.431
†a See this volume, p. 410. — Ed.
Page me8.431
†b i.e. the government of Croatia during the 1848-49 revolution. — Ed.
Page me8.431
†c i.e. Croatia, Slavonia and Dalmatia. — Ed.
Page me8.432
†a An apparent reference to the report published in the Wiener Zeitung No. 44, February 21, 1849, and given on pp. 435-36 of this volume. — Ed.
Page me8.432
†b A mistake by Engels: Russians did not take part in the battle at Arad. — Ed.
Page me8.435
†a Allgemeine Zeitung No. 54, February 23, 1849. — Ed.

Page me8.435
†b No. 44, February 21, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.437
†a Wiener Zeitung No. 45, February 22, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.440
†a See this volume, pp. 432 and 453-55. — Ed.
Page me8.440
†b Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me8.441
†a Rajachich. — Ed.
Page me8.441
†b Skupština. — Ed.
Page me8.441
†c This comitat, like the Peterwardein regimental district, was part of the Military Border Area. — Ed.
Page me8.442
†a Windischgrätz. — Ed.
Page me8.442
†b Lake Balaton. — Ed.
Page me8.443
†a See this volume, pp. 427-28. — Ed.
Page me8.443
†b Henryk Dembinski, Józef Bem and Józef Wysocki. — Ed.
Page me8.445
†a The Neue Rheinische Zeitung then gave the text of the speech from the throne. — Ed.
Page me8.446
†a Kölnische Zeitung No. 51, March 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.447
†a Oh, nonsense! — Ed.
Page me8.448
†a But we go from surprise to surprise. — Ed.
Page me8.452
†a It's well devised even if it is not true. — Ed.
Page me8.454
†a The reports from this newspaper cited here and below were also published in the Grazer Zeitung No. 56, February 25, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.454
†b Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me8.456
†a Leopold II. — Ed.
Page me8.456
†b Pius IX. — Ed.
Page me8.459
†a Here and above we are quoting from Bulletin No. 24 of the Austrian army published in the Wiener Zeitung No. 45, February 22, 1849. — Ed.

Page me8.460
†a Buda and Pest. — Ed.
Page me8.461
†a Grazer Zeitung No. 54, February 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.465
†a See this volume, pp. 474-76. — Ed.
Page me8.468
†a See this volume, pp. 423-24. — Ed.
Page me8.468
†b Grazer Zeitung No. 54, February 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.469
†a The supreme financial body of Hungary subordinate to the Austrian Emperor and the state treasury in Vienna. — Ed.
Page me8.471
†a Lloyd No. 99, February 27, 1849, evening edition. — Ed.
Page me8.472
†a Grazer Zeitung No. 59, February 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.472
†b Die Presse No. 50, February 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.473
†a Windischgrätz. — Ed.
Page me8.474
†a See this volume, pp. 191-92. — Ed.
Page me8.474
†b See this volume, pp. 344-46. — Ed.
Page me8.479
†a Reprinted in Die Presse No. 51, March 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me8.479
†b State Assembly. — Ed.
Page me8.485
†a "If one or more officials of the administrative or judiciary system during the performance of their official functions or on the occasion of this performance have been subjected to insult by words tending to impugn their honour or delicacy, the person who has insulted them in this way will be punished by imprisonment from one month to two years. — If the insult took place at the sitting of a court or tribunal, the imprisonment will be from two to five years." — Ed.
Page me8.485
†b "As regards insults or insulting expressions which do not contain the imputation of any precise act, but that of a definite vice, if they have been put forward in public places or meetings or inserted in writings, whether printed or not, which have been disseminated and distributed, the punishment will be a fine of from sixteen to five hundred francs." § 376. "All other insults or insulting expressions which do not have this double character of seriousness and publicity will entail only a simple police punishment." — Ed.
Page me8.486
†a Offence. — Ed.

Page me8.486

†b The reference is to the following passage in the incriminated article “Arrests” printed in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: “Chief Public Prosecutor Zweiffel, moreover, is said to have declared that he would within a week put an end to March 19, the clubs, freedom of the press and other outrages of the evil year 1848 at Cologne on the Rhine” (see present edition, Vol. 7, p. 179). — Ed.

Page me8.486

†c The manuscript is indecipherable here. — Ed.

Page me8.489

†a “It will therefore be a question here only of insults which violate public peace, that is to say, insults directed against officials or public agents during the performance or on the occasion of the performance of their functions; in this case it is no longer a private person, it is public order which is harmed.... In this case the political hierarchy will be taken into consideration: one who indulges in insults or acts of violence directed against a government agent is undoubtedly guilty, but he causes a lesser scandal than when he insults a judge.” — Ed.

Page me8.490

†a “Thus anyone who indulges in insults or violence against an official.” — Ed.

Page me8.490

†b “Any person who, even unarmed and without any wounds resulting, strikes an official during the performance of his functions, or on the occasion of this performance, will be punished by imprisonment from two to five years. — If such an act has taken place during the sitting of a court or tribunal, the guilty person will be punished by the pillory.” — Ed.

Page me8.491

†a Blows. — Ed.

Page me8.491

†b Wounds. — Ed.

Page me8.491

†c “Facts, which if they were real facts.” — Ed.

Page me8.491

†d Words. — Ed.

Page me8.491

†e This, evidently, refers to Zweiffel's utterance cited in the incriminated article “Arrests” (see p. 486). — Ed.

Page me8.491

†f Here the manuscript is illegible. — Ed.

Page me8.491

†g “The present provision is not applicable to facts which the law permits to be made public, nor to those which the author of the imputation, owing to the nature of his functions or duties, was bound to reveal or repress.” — Ed.

Page me8.492

†a “When the acts imputed are punishable in accordance with the law and they have been denounced by the author of the imputation, he shall be remanded for proceedings and decision in regard to the offence of calumny during the investigation of these acts.” — Ed.

Page me8.496

†a See the article “Public Prosecutor 'Hecker' and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 485-89). — Ed.

Page me8.497

†a The following phrase: “instituted against me on a charge of instigating to revolt etc., etc.”, is crossed out in the manuscript. — Ed.

Page me8.497

†b See present edition, Vol. 7, p. 593. — Ed.

Page me8.497

†c The following phrase: “calling for an uprising against the German Government etc.”, is crossed out in the manuscript. — Ed.

Page me8.501

†a See this volume, p. 41. — Ed.

Page me8.502

†a See this volume, p. 37. — Ed.

Page me8.503

†a See this volume, p. 46. — Ed.

Page me8.504

†a One must distinguish. — Ed.

Page me8.505

†a A Swiss coin, equal to 30-32 pfennigs. — Ed.

Page me8.509

†a In issues Nos. 176-95 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung this passage reads as follows: “For France, subscriptions will be accepted by the Royal Chief Post-Office in Aachen; for Holland by the royal post-offices and for Great Britain by the Belgian royal post-office in Ostend.” — Ed.

Page me8.512

†a See this volume, pp. 75-80. — Ed.

Page me8.513

†a Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit. — Ed.

Page me8.515

†a The last two sentences are in a different handwriting. — Ed.

Page me8.518

†a See the article “Arrests” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 177-79). — Ed.

Page me8.518

†b See the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 221, February 14, 1849. For the speeches by Marx and Engels at this trial see this volume, pp. 304-22. — Ed.

Page me8.519

†a See this volume, p. 41. — Ed.

Page me8.520

†a For Marx's speech at the trial see this volume, pp. 304-17. — Ed.

Page me8.521

†a Adamski and Niethake. — Ed.

Page me8.522

†a Deputies of the Prussian National Assembly. — Ed.

Page me8.525

†a Friedrich Lessner. — Ed.
Page me8.526
†a Leopold II. — Ed.
Page me8.526
†b See this volume, pp. 529-30. — Ed.
Page me8.527
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me8.529
†a Friedrich Lessner. — Ed.
Page me8.530
†a The patriotic song Les Girondins popular in 1848, which was known more by its refrain “Mourir pour la patrie” (“To die for the fatherland”). — Ed.
Page me8.530
†a This glossary includes geographical names occurring in Marx's and Engels' articles in the form customary in the German press of the time but differing from the national names or from those given on modern maps. The left column gives geographical names as used in the German original (when they differ from the national names of the time, the latter are given in brackets); the right column gives corresponding names as used on modern maps and in modern literature. — Ed.

Author's notes
Page me8.307
†* Article 222 reads textually as follows: “Lorsqu'un ou plusieurs magistrats de l'ordre administratif ou judiciaire auront reçu dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions ou á l'occasion de cet exercice quelque outrage par paroles tendant á inculper leur honneur ou
Page me8.308
leur délicatesse, celui qui les aura ainsi outragés sera puni d'un emprisonnement d'un mois á deux ans.” [“If one or more officials of the administrative or judicial system during the exercise of their functions or on the occasion of such exercise have been subjected to insult by words tending to impugn their honour or delicacy, the person who has insulted them in this way will be punished by imprisonment from one month to two years.”] — Note by Marx.
Page Break me9.i

VOLUME 9

Page Break me9.ii
Page me9.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED
WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me9.iii

FRONTMATTER
Titlepage
Page me9.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
9
MARX AND ENGELS: 1849

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me9.iv

Copyright Page
Page me9.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:

GREAT BRITAIN: Jack Cohen, Maurice Cornforth, Maurice Dobb, E.J. Hobsbawm, James Klugmann, Margaret Mynatt.
USA: James S. Allen, Philip S. Foner, Dirk J. Struik, William W. Weinstone.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — N.P. Karmanova, V.N. Sedikh, M.K. Shcheglova, Y.V. Yeremin; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, A.G. Yegorov, V.Y. Zevin.

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1977

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883
Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.
1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics —
Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895.
Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX39.5.A 16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0509-3 (v. 9)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Contents

PrefaceXV

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
ARTICLES FROM THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG
March 6-May 19, 1849
Page me9.v
March

1. The State of Trade 3
2. From the Theatre of War 9
3. The Military Reports of the Kölnische Zeitung 13
4. The 26th Austrian Army Bulletin 19
5. The English Soldier's Oath of Allegiance 22
6. From the Theatre of War 24
7. The 27th Bulletin. — Military Reports 27
8. Ruge 33
9. The March Association 36
10. From the Theatre of War 38
11. The Model Republic 42
12. Vienna and Frankfurt 47
13. Three New Bills 50
14. Government Provocations55
15. An Austrian Report Published in the Augsburg
Allgemeine Zeitung 58

16. From the Theatre of War 61
17. Austrian Defeats 63
18. The Hohenzollern General Plan of Reform 65

19. The Censorship 70
20. From the Theatre of War 72
21. From the Theatre of War 75
22. From the Theatre of War 76
23. The Milliard 79
24. The Frankfurt March Association and the Neue
Rheinische Zeitung 84
25. Draft Address of the Second Chamber 86
26. From the Theatre of War 90
27. From the Theatre of War 91
28. From the Theatre of War 95
29. Military Dictatorship in Austria 102
30. The 18th of March 108
31. The Neue Preussische Zeitung
on the Occasion of the 18th of March109
32. From the Theatre of War 110
33. Military Reports from Hungary 113
34. From the Theatre of War 121
35. From the Theatre of War 123
36. The Hohenzollern Press Bill 125
37. From the Theatre of War 133
38. From the Theatre of War 134
39. The Debate on the Address in Berlin 135
40. From the Theatre of War. — The Confused Situation in Serbia 144
41. The War in Italy and Hungary 148
42. From the Theatre of War 152
43. From the Theatre of War [Italy] 156
44. From the Theatre of War 158
45. From the Theatre of War [Italy] 164
46. Latest News from Hungary 167
47. From the Theatre of War. — More Russian Troops 168
Page me9.vi
March-April
48. The Defeat of the Piedmontese 169
49. From the Theatre of War 178
50. From the Theatre of War 181

Page Break me9.vii
Page me9.vii
April
51. From the Theatre of War 185
52. From the Theatre of War 188
53. French Foreign Policy 191
54. The Comedy with the Imperial Crown 193
55. The Call-Up of the Army Reserve in Prussia 195
56. Wage Labour and Capital 197

I 197
II 205
III 211
IV 216
V 222
57. The Southern Slavs and the Austrian Monarchy 229
58. The War in Hungary 231
59. From the Theatre of War 237
60. From the Theatre of War 242
61. From the Theatre of War 248
62. Austrian Lamentations 250
63. From the Theatre of War 252
64. From the Theatre of War 255
65. The Extradition of Political Refugees 257
66. From the Theatre of War. — The German Navy 259
67. From the Theatre of War. — Windischgrätz's Comments on the Imposed Constitution 261
68. Rumours of the Extermination of the Rebels 265
69. A Magyar Victory 267
70. A Magyar Victory 268
71. An Austrian Defeat 271
72. From the Theatre of War 277
73. Parliamentary Decisions Are Disregarded. — Manteuffel's Spies 281
74. Statement 282
75. From the Theatre of War 283
76. From the Theatre of War 286
77. From the Theatre of War. — Peasant War in the Bukovina 288
78. Elkemann 291
79. From the Theatre of War 292
80. Sitting of the Second Chamber in Berlin. April 13 295
81. The Slovaks. — The So-Called Dembinski Bulletin 299
82. From the Theatre of War 302

Page Break me9.viii

83. “Magyar Rodomontade” of the Kölnische Zeitung 306
84. The New Croatian-Slavonian-Dalmatian Robber State 307
85. The Russians 311
86. From the Theatre of War 314
87. From the Theatre of War 318
88. The Debate on the Law on Posters 320
89. From the Theatre of War 330
90. From the Theatre of War 333
91. The Hungarian War 335

92. Lassalle 339
93. From the Theatre of War 342
94. Hungarian Victories 346
95. From the Theatre of War 350
96. Hungarian Advances. — Excitement in Vienna 352
97. Magyar Advances 353
98. Dissolution of the Second Chamber 357
99. Posen 359
100. From the Theatre of War363
Page me9.viii
May
101. From the Theatre of War368
102. The Counter-Revolutionary Plans in Berlin 370
103. Lassalle 372
104. A Prussian Kick for the Frankfurt Assembly 377
105. The Dissolution 380
106. From the Theatre of War381
107. Lassalle 383
108. Prohibition of the Meeting of the Rhenish Municipal Councils 389
109. From the Theatre of War390
110. The Congress of Rhenish Towns 392
111. The Third Party in the Alliance 394
112. From the Theatre of War396
113. News from Southern Germany 399
114. News from Hungary 400
115. Longing for a State of Siege 402
116. The Situation in Hungary 404
117. From the Theatre of War406
118. Kossuth's Proclamation 407

Page Break me9.ix
119. From the Theatre of War409
120. The Prussian Army and the Revolutionary Uprising of the People 411
121. A Question to the Workers 413
122. The Tsar and His Subordinate Knyazes 414
123. The Approaching Revolution 416
124. The Deeds of the Hohenzollern Dynasty 418
125. The Situation in Elberfeld 423
126. From the Theatre of War424
127. Counter-Revolutionary Offensive and Victory of the Revolution426
128. The Uprising in Elberfeld and Düsseldorf 428
129. The New Prussian Constitution 430
130. The Sanguinary Law in Düsseldorf 432
131. The Uprising in the Berg Country 434

132. The Venal Baseness of the Kölnische Zeitung 436
133. The Kreuz-Zeitung 437
134. A New Prussian Kick for the Frankfurt Assembly 438
135. The New Martial-Law Charter 440
136. Elberfeld 447
137. The Worthy Schwanbeck 450
138. The Summary Suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung 451
139. Hungary 455
140. “To My People” 464
141. To the Workers of Cologne 467
Page me9.ix
KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
ARTICLES AND STATEMENTS

May-July 1849
142. K. Marx. Letter to the Frankfurter Journal 473
143. F. Engels. The Revolutionary Uprising in the Palatinate and Baden 474
144. K. Marx. The 13th of June 477
145. K. Marx. To the Editor of the Newspaper La Presse 480
146. F. Engels. Repudiation 482

Page Break me9.x
Page me9.x
APPENDICES
1. Report on Marx's Expulsion Sent by the Cologne Government
Authorities to the Minister of the Interior von Manteuffel 487
2. Invitation of the Democratic Association in Solingen to Marx,
Freiligrath, Engels, Schapper and Wolff 489
3. Banquet in Gürzenich 490
4. Letter from the Minister of the Interior von Manteuffel to the Oberpräsident of the Rhine Province, Herr Eichmann, together with a Copy of the Instructions Regarding the Expulsion of Marx
Sent to the Royal Government Authorities in Cologne 492
5. Decisions of the General Meeting of the Cologne Workers'
Association Held on April 16, 1849 494
6. From the Minutes of the Committee Meeting of the Cologne
Workers' Association Held on April 17, 1849 495
7. Letter from the Royal Government Authorities in Cologne to the Oberpräsident of the Rhine Province, Herr Eichmann, Regarding the Expulsion of Marx 496
8. Resolution of Branch No. 1 of the Cologne Workers' Association 498
9. Decisions of the General Meeting of the Cologne Workers'

Association Held on April 23, 1849 501
10. Report on the Convocation of the Congress of Workers' Associations 502
11. From the Minutes of the Committee Meeting of the Cologne Workers' Association Held on May 1, 1849 504
12. Marx's Receipt for a Financial Contribution Towards the Publishing Expenses of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung 505
13. Congress of the Democratic and Workers' Associations 506
14. Engels' Expulsion from Elberfeld 508
15. The Democratic and Workers' Press on Marx's Expulsion and the Suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung 509
16. The Editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung 514
17. Departure of Editor Karl Marx from Cologne 515
18. The Second Trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung 516
19. Trial for Libelling Deputies of the German National Assembly 517
20. Trial for Interference in Official Functions 521
21. From the Editors of the Neue Kölnische Zeitung 523
22. A Warrant of Arrest 524
23. Marx's Arrival in Paris 525
24. Notification of Marx's Expulsion from Paris Issued by the Commissioner of Police 526

Page Break me9.xi

25. Notification Sent by the Commissioner of Police Stating That Marx's Petition Was Rejected 527

Page me9.xi

NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 533
Name Index 595
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 621
Index of Periodicals 635
Subject Index 641
Glossary of Geographical Names 660

Page me9.xi

ILLUSTRATIONS

The first page of Engels' article “Military Dictatorship in Austria” 103
The Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 264, April 5, 1849 with the beginning of Marx's Wage Labour and Capital 199
Engels' article “Hungarian Victories” published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283 (special supplement), April 27, 1849 347
Hungary and Transylvania in 1849 (map) 458-59
The last issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (No. 301, May 19, 1849) which was printed in red ink 469
Passport issued to Marx by the French police on August 24, 1849 529

Page Break me9.xii

Page Break me9.xiii
Page me9.xiii
TRANSLATORS:

JACK COHEN: Articles 70-73
CLEMENS DUTT: Articles 1, 5, 8, 9, 12-14, 18, 19, 23-25, 29-31, 36, 39, 41, 48, 53, 54, 65, 74, 80, 85, 88, 92, 98, 99, 102-05, 107, 108, 110-12, 115, 120-22, 124, 129-36, 140, 142-45; Appendices 2, 3, 5, 6, 8-11, 13-18, 21-25
MICHAEL HUDSON: Articles 34, 35, 37, 38, 40, 42-47, 49, 50, 82, 84, 86, 87, 89-91, 93-97, 100, 101
DOROTHY JAESCHKE: Articles 106, 109, 113, 114, 116-19, 123, 125, 126, 128
HUGH RODWELL: Articles 51, 52, 55, 57-60
BARBARA RUHEMANN: Articles 20-22, 26-28, 32, 33, 62-64, 66-69, 75-79, 81
SALO RYAZANSKAYA: Articles 61, 83, 127, 138, 139, 141; Appendix 12
BARRIE SELMAN: Articles 2-4, 6
CHRISTOPHER UPWARD: Articles 137, 146; Appendices 1, 4, 7, 19, 20
JOAN and TREVOR WALMSLEY: Articles 7, 10, 11, 15-17

Page Break me9.xiv
Page Break me9.xv

Preface

Page me9.xv

Volume 9 of the Collected Works of Karl Marx and Frederick Engels is the last in the group of three volumes which show the activities of the founders of scientific communism during the revolutionary years 1848 and 1849. It covers the period from March 6, 1849 to August 1849.

Page me9.xv

Like volumes 7 and 8, this volume consists in the main of articles written by Marx and Engels for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, an organ of German and European democracy, and in particular of its revolutionary proletarian wing. It was during the last stage of the revolution, when the objective preconditions for uniting the proletariat and creating a proletarian mass party began to take shape, that the proletarian trend of the paper edited by Marx and Engels became especially pronounced. During this period the Neue Rheinische Zeitung played an increasingly important role as the legal centre which directed the activity of the Communist League members and inspired the revolutionary actions of the proletarian masses.

Page me9.xv

Marx's and Engels' strategy and tactics during the revolution were based on their materialist conception of the dialectic of social change and on the theoretical generalisation of the experience gained by the masses in the struggle. Their activities in that period, as in the earlier stages of the revolution, demonstrated the organic unity of revolutionary theory and practice. In the circumstances that arose in the spring of 1849, they brought a new element into their tactics: still seeking to rally all revolutionary forces against the advancing counter-revolution, they tried to promote an independent political line for the working class, and to differentiate it from the general democratic movement by creating a political proletarian mass organisation.

Page Break me9.xvi
Page me9.xvi

The distinctive features of the spring and summer of 1849 were the rearguard actions fought by the revolutionary forces and the increasing attacks made by the counter-revolutionaries on the people's democratic achievements. The reactionary ruling circles in Austria, Prussia and Tsarist Russia were seeking to revive the Holy Alliance in order to crush the revolutionary movement with the help of the French monarchists and the British bourgeois and aristocratic oligarchy. At the same time the people everywhere continued to defend their political and social rights. Proletarian and democratic organisations became increasingly active in spite of police persecutions. A national liberation struggle was waged in Hungary and many parts of Italy. Peasants' uprisings took place in Slovakia, Galicia and the Bukovina. A new clash between proletarian and petty-bourgeois democrats on the one hand and the counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie on the other was imminent in France. All this led Marx and Engels to expect that a new revolutionary surge would soon take place in Europe, Germany included (see, for instance, this volume, p. 57).
Page me9.xvi

They pinned their hopes on the French proletariat taking the revolutionary initiative, for they thought it would be able to repel any attack by international counter-revolution. They expected the working class to play a major part in the next stage of the bourgeois-democratic revolution and that this would make it possible to extend and consolidate democratic achievements vital to the proletariat, and to carry the revolutionary process further and transform it into a proletarian revolution. Writing about the workers of the Rhine Province Engels observed that "the present movement is only the prologue to another movement a thousand times more serious, in which the issue will concern their own, the workers', most vital interests" (see this volume, p. 449). Thus the course of events in 1848 and 1849 helped them shape their ideas about the relations of the bourgeois-democratic and proletarian stages of the revolution. These ideas form part of the Marxist theory of "permanent revolution", which Marx and Engels were to formulate more explicitly and fully later on the basis of analysing the lessons of these events.
Page me9.xvi

Despite the increasingly counter-revolutionary climate in Germany, the militant spirit and revolutionary optimism of their articles in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung continued unabated. The paper constantly called upon the masses to remain vigilant and to fight on against the counter-revolution.

Page Break me9.xvii
Page me9.xvii

It was the altered balance of class forces in the spring of 1849, the treachery of the liberal bourgeoisie, which became more and more evident, and the vacillation of the petty-bourgeois democrats, which led Marx, Engels and their comrades in the Communist League to do everything they could to ensure the ideological and political independence of the proletariat, and its leading role in the revolutionary struggle. They took practical steps to create a working-class political party embracing the whole of Germany, whose core was to be the Communist League — a task which Marx and Engels had put forward already at the beginning of the revolution. They took into account the fact that the months of revolutionary struggle had brought about changes in the political consciousness of the most advanced section of the German workers, that the German workers were beginning to free themselves from the influence of petty-bourgeois ideas and that the labour movement was overcoming its limitations and disunity. Events were destroying the narrow framework of the craft guilds and turning them towards politics. The Workers' Fraternity and other German workers' organisations were becoming politically active. There was a tendency to unite the workers' associations and to set up a single German workers' organisation with social as well as political aims. Marx and Engels were eager to play their part in forming this German workers' organisation. They did all they could to strengthen the Cologne Workers' Association, to establish contacts between it and other workers' associations and to call a Workers' Congress of the whole of Germany (see this volume, pp. 502-03).

Page me9.xvii

On April 14, 1849, Marx, Engels and their associates, supported by the most class-conscious section of the workers, resigned from the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats in order to set up a new and "closer union of the workers' associations" consisting of like-minded people (see this volume, p. 282). Soon afterwards the Cologne Workers' Association under their leadership decided to establish relations with the union of German workers' associations and to withdraw from the Union of the Democratic Associations of the Rhine Province (see this volume, p. 494). However, according to Marx and Engels the ideological, political and organisational separation from the petty-bourgeois democrats did not mean that the working class should refuse to take part in concerted actions with members of the democratic movement. On the contrary, they constantly stressed that all progressive forces must unite more closely in the struggle against the counter-revolution. But they considered that in the given situation united action could not be achieved within the framework of a single organisation.

Page Break me9.xviii

Page me9.xviii

Marx's work Wage Labour and Capital, which is published in this volume, played an important part in preparing the German workers ideologically for setting up an independent political party. The work is based on lectures given by Marx at the German Workers' Society in Brussels in December 1847. He had been prevented from publishing it at the time by the outbreak of the February revolution in France. It was printed in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in April 1849 as a series of leading articles. In these articles Marx emphasised in particular the class nature of the objectives set forth in the newspaper. In his short preface to the series Marx wrote: "Now, after our readers have seen the class struggle develop in colossal political forms in 1848, the time has come to deal more closely with the economic relations themselves on which the existence of the bourgeoisie and its class rule, as well as the slavery of the workers, are founded" (see this volume, p. 198).

Page me9.xviii

Wage Labour and Capital shows how far economic theory had been worked out by Marx at the end of the 1840s.

Page me9.xviii

In this work Marx examines the nature of the production relations in bourgeois society, which are based on the exploitation of wage labour. He points out that capital and wage labour are mutually interdependent, and on the other hand he emphasises the antagonistic nature of these relations and the radical opposition between the interests of capitalists and workers. He shows that capital comes into being only at a definite stage of social development, and that capitalist society is therefore a historical, transient phenomenon. Bourgeois economists for the most part defined "capital" as a sum of material objects and resources, or accumulated labour. In contrast to this superficial view Marx maintained that the transformation of material objects or accumulated labour into capital presupposes definite social relations. Marx writes — and this has become a classical definition of capital in Marxist political economy: "Capital, also, is a social relation of production. It is a bourgeois production relation, a production relation of bourgeois society" (see this volume, p. 212).

Page me9.xviii

Wage Labour and Capital marks an important step in making clear the economic basis of capitalist exploitation. By means of vivid examples Marx shows that the value produced by the worker exceeds the value of the means of subsistence which he receives in the form of wages, and that this excess is the source of the capitalist's profit. After examining various aspects of the problem of wages, Marx states an important law, namely that even under the most favourable circumstances for the worker the relative share of wages in the social product falls compared with the share appropriated by the capitalist. Profit and wages stand in inverse proportion to one another. Marx concludes that the growth of capital and the development of the productive forces in bourgeois society were bound to lead to the increasing exploitation of the wage-workers.

Page Break me9.xix

Page me9.xix

So long as the capitalist mode of production continues, the working class cannot free itself from the oppressive system of wage labour. Marx stressed that as social wealth and the productivity of labour increase in bourgeois society, the proletariat forges for itself "the golden chains by which the bourgeoisie drags it in its train" (see this volume, p. 221).

Page me9.xix

Wage Labour and Capital was written at a time when Marxist political economy had not yet arrived at its mature scientific formulation. In this work Marx still uses the terms "labour as a commodity", "value of labour" and "price of labour", which he took over from the English classical economists, though he gave these terms a new meaning. In 1891, when Engels prepared this work for a mass edition, he changed throughout the term "labour as a commodity" to "labour power as a commodity" etc. All these changes are given in footnotes in this volume. In the Preface to Volume II of Capital, Engels wrote that in working out the theory of surplus value in the 1850s Marx showed that "it is not labour which has a value. As an activity which creates value it can no more have any special value than gravity can have any special weight, heat any special temperature, electricity any special strength of current. It is not labour which is bought and sold as a commodity, but labour power. As soon as labour power becomes a commodity, its value is determined by the labour embodied in this commodity as a social product. This value is equal to the labour socially necessary for the production and reproduction of this commodity" (Karl Marx, Capital, Vol. II, Moscow, 1974, pp. 18-19).

Page me9.xix

Wage Labour and Capital marks an important stage in the working out of a proletarian political economy. And at the same time it exhibits to a marked degree Marx's talent for popularising and explaining complicated economic problems to workers in a language which they can understand. The work greatly helped to spread the ideas of scientific communism among the working class.

Page me9.xix

Wage Labour and Capital as well as other articles and reports on current political questions written by Marx and Engels for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung provided material for political discussions in the workers' associations and helped to make the German workers class conscious. The importance of the paper as a centre which united the forces of the revolutionary proletariat and explained and propagated the programme and tactical principles of the Communist League, was constantly growing. But the victory of the counterrevolution, and the fact that the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was forced to cease publication and Marx and Engels were compelled to leave Prussia cut short their intensive activity and prevented them from putting into practice their plan for creating a workers' mass party.

Page Break me9.xx

Page me9.xx

Marx and Engels expected the liberation struggle of the oppressed nationalities to play a significant role in the revolutionary strategy of the proletariat. They stressed the importance of Poland's liberation for the European democratic movement and constantly returned to the history of Poland's partition and subjugation by the Prussian monarchy, the Austrian Empire and Russian Tsarism (see the article "Posen"). They warmly welcomed the national liberation movements of the Italian and Hungarian peoples. The renewed military operations of the Piedmontese against Austria in the spring of 1849 were regarded by the Neue Rheinische Zeitung as a new indication that the revolution was continuing to develop and as a serious blow at the Habsburg monarchy which was now obliged to wage a war on two fronts, against both Hungary and Italy.

Page me9.xx

Engels analysed the military campaign in Northern Italy in the articles "The War in Italy and Hungary" and "The Defeat of the Piedmontese" and in a series of reports printed under the heading "From the Theatre of War" in the section "Italy". These articles, which express the author's sympathy for the Italian people and call upon them to throw off the Austrian yoke, contain many shrewd observations on the specific features of revolutionary national liberation wars and the conditions required for winning them. In his article "The Defeat of the Piedmontese" Engels writes: "A nation that wants to conquer its independence cannot restrict itself to the ordinary methods of warfare" (see this volume, p. 171). In order to gain victory it has to turn the war into a genuinely revolutionary war supported by the masses of the people.

Page me9.xx

The reason for the reverse suffered by the Piedmontese army was, according to Engels, above all the policies of the liberal and monarchical groups in Piedmont, which were strongly opposed to the transformation of the war into a truly popular war, for they were afraid that this might lead to a revolutionary upsurge and thus undermine their own rule. "There is only one means to counter the treachery and cowardice of the Government: revolution," Engels pointed out (see this volume, p. 151). The defeat of the Piedmontese put the last revolutionary strongholds in Italy, the republics of Venice and Rome, in a very difficult position. Only a European, and above all a French, revolutionary outbreak could, as Engels wrote, save the situation.

Page Break me9.xxi
Page me9.xxi

Hungary was another centre where, in the opinion of Marx and Engels, a revolutionary conflagration might start which could spread to the whole of Europe. The Hungarian liberation struggle entered a new phase at that time. The heroic people's army, directed by Kossuth's revolutionary government, defied the armed forces of the Habsburg monarchy. In the spring of 1849 the Hungarian troops started their successful counter-offensive.
Page me9.xxi

Marx and Engels watched the developments in the Hungarian revolutionary war closely and with great sympathy. In February 1849, at Marx's request, Engels began to write military and political surveys of the Hungarian events. Most of them were published under the heading "From the Theatre of War" in the section "Hungary" of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. The first articles of this series are published in Volume 8 of this edition; the remainder form a significant part of this volume. Engels' article "Hungary", which generalises and partly sums up his analysis of the Hungarian revolutionary struggle, was published in the last issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on May 19, 1849 (see this volume, pp. 455-63).
Page me9.xxi

This series reveals Engels' remarkable talent in military matters. On the basis of Austrian Army Bulletins and reports printed in official Austrian and in German conservative and liberal newspapers, which as a rule were pro-Austrian — that is, on the basis of sources containing very tendentious and contradictory information — Engels, by critically sifting and comparing facts, was able to give a realistic account of the military operations. Closely following the course of events, he created a true and exact, though not a detailed (from the sources available to him this was quite impossible) picture showing the main features of the war. Moreover, many of these surveys (for instance "The Military Reports of the Kölnische Zeitung") contained sharp polemical remarks directed at the enemies of the Hungarian revolution, and also exposed the lies disseminated by the German chauvinistic newspapers. Engels' military reports, masterpieces which passionately defended the just cause of embattled Hungary, did much to spread the truth about the Hungarian national liberation struggle in Germany.
Page me9.xxi

Even when the Austrian counter-revolutionary army, which had occupied a substantial part of Hungary, was still conducting offensive operations and the German conservative press was triumphantly announcing that Austria's final victory was imminent, Engels, assessing the military situation with great acuity, observed that the Hungarian revolutionary forces had sufficient resources not only for defence but also for launching a decisive counter-offensive. This prediction, like many others made by Engels in the military sphere, proved true. The April counter-offensive of the Hungarian army, as Engels noted in several of his articles, clearly revealed the genuinely revolutionary and popular nature not only of the war the Hungarians were waging, but also of their way of conducting military operations. Mobilisation of all national forces to repulse the invaders, energy and mobility, well-concerted action of the regular troops and the widespread guerilla movement, and the fact that the enemy was attacked not only at the front but also in the rear — these were the positive features mentioned by Engels in his analysis of the Hungarian campaign. "The entire might of all the 36 million Austrians has been frustrated and the victorious army which in Welden's words 'amazed half Europe' has been balked by the daring and enthusiasm of a small nation of barely five million people," he wrote in the article "Hungarian Victories". "The imperial forces are learning once again in Hungary the lesson they were taught at Jemappes and Fleurus 50 years ago: it is unwise to make war on revolution" (see this volume, p. 349).

Page Break me9.xxii

Page me9.xxii

When comparing the Austrian and Hungarian military systems Engels emphasised that the former exemplified the clumsiness, the mechanical drill and the stereotyped tactics peculiar to the armed forces of the feudal absolute monarchies, whereas the Hungarians demonstrated the mobility, initiative and tactical versatility, as well as the ability to take quick resolute decisions and to engage in daring manoeuvres, which are characteristic of a popular army welded together in the fire of a revolution. In his article "War in Hungary" Engels wrote, "The Magyars, though inadequately drilled and armed, oppose everywhere the most subtle calculation, the most masterly use of the terrain, the clearest overall view of the situation and the most daring and swift execution to the indolent and mindless but well-drilled mass of the Austrian armies. Superiority in genius is here doing battle with superiority in numbers, weapons and arms drill" (see this volume, p. 232). In its morale, in unity of the front and rear and support from the masses of the people, the Hungarian army far surpassed its enemy. Engels had a high opinion of the political and military leaders of the Hungarian revolution, of Kossuth and his associates, of the volunteers from Austria and especially of Polish commanders, like Bem and Dembinski, who chose to take part in the revolutionary war.

Page me9.xxii

Engels considered that the strength of the Hungarian revolution stemmed from the progressive social and political transformation which had been carried out in the country, i.e. the abolition of many hitherto existing feudal institutions, the introduction of agrarian reforms and the deposition of the Habsburg dynasty. "The Hungarians' first measure was to carry out a social revolution in their country, to abolish feudalism," Engels wrote in the article "Hungary" (see this volume, p. 463). Hungary, he said, showed once again that the national liberation movement acquired both strength and stability when together with the fight for independence there was the radical elimination of all feudal relics from the social and political structure.

Page Break me9.xxiii

Page me9.xxiii

The abolition of feudal obligations and the other measures which the leaders of the Hungarian revolution carried through in the interest of the peasantry, said Engels, not only ensured that the Hungarian peasants supported the revolution and played an active part in it, but also aroused sympathy for the Magyar struggle among the peasantry in various Slav areas of the Austrian Empire, in particular among the Slovaks, the Poles of Galicia and the Western Ukrainians in the Bukovina. At the end of April 1849 Engels wrote: "Fresh support for the Magyars, which just now, on the eve of their probable victory, is of the greatest significance, is the Polish peasant rising which is about to break out in Galicia" (see this volume, p. 345). In another report he observed that the Slovaks joined the Hungarians, after the latter had "abolished the feudal burdens of the Slovak peasants and made a number of concessions with regard to language and nationality" (see this volume, p. 390).

Page me9.xxiii

One of the most important indications of the growing anti-feudal struggle in the Slav areas of Austria was the peasant movement among the Ukrainians in the Bukovina which was led by Lucian Kobylica. Engels welcomed the struggle of the peasants against the nobility in this "most remote corner of the united monarchy" as a symptom of an impending peasant war throughout the Habsburg Empire, and noted the ties which existed between the peasant leaders and the Hungarian revolutionaries (see this volume, p. 289).

Page me9.xxiii

The successes of the Hungarian revolutionary army weakened the hold of the Austrian ruling circles on the subjugated Slav nationalities (Czechs, Croats, Serbs of the Voivodina etc.) in the Austrian Empire. By lies and false promises the Habsburgs had been trying to set one nationality against the other so as to use them as tools in the fight against the revolutionary movements in Hungary and Italy. Engels hoped that the further development of the Hungarian war would lead to changes in the national movements of these peoples and that the pro-Austrian elements would be pushed aside and the progressive forces would prevail, thus transforming these movements from reserve armies of the Austrian counterrevolution and of Tsarism into allies of revolutionary Hungary and of the European revolution as a whole. In his articles he cited facts to demonstrate that the Czechs and Southern Slavs did indeed have revolutionary leanings, sympathised with the Magyars and were growing more and more dissatisfied with the military despotism of the Austrian ruling classes and their bureaucratic and centralising tendencies. It was in this light that the people in the Slav areas regarded the Constitution which was imposed on the "united and indivisible Austrian monarchy" by Francis Joseph on March 4, 1849, and in which the earlier promises of autonomy were cynically flouted. In his brilliant denunciatory article "Military Dictatorship in Austria" (which has reached us in manuscript) Engels wrote in this connection: "The wrath previously felt only by the Germans and Magyars at the Austrian habit of gaining victory by cowardly acts of treachery, and after the victory surpassing in barbarity the most brutal bandits, this wrath was now shared by the Slavs as well. They were ensnared by the prospect of a 'Slav Austria', they were made use of to win victory in Italy and Hungary, and by way of thanks they are now being subjected again to the old Metternich whip" (see this volume, p. 105). In a number of articles, particularly in "From the Theatre of War. — The Confused Situation in Serbia" (see pp. 144-47) Engels quotes newspaper reports about an imminent revolutionary uprising in Bohemia which had prompted the Government to declare a state of siege in Prague; about the declining prestige of the Right-wing Czech leaders and the growing influence of the supporters of a Czech-German-Hungarian revolutionary alliance; and about the tendency observed in members of the Croatian and Serbian national movements to establish closer relations with the Magyars.

Page Break me9.xxiv

Page me9.xxiv

But at the same time Engels criticised the Right wing of the Serbian, Croatian and Slavonian movements which was still intent on union with the Habsburgs and on creating an autonomous Slav state within the framework of the Austrian Empire, although the Austrian ruling clique had thrown off its mask and had openly shown its hostility to Slav national interests (see this volume, pp. 307-10). The national movement of the Southern Slavs did not manage at the time to shake off the domination of these Right-wing sections, which were accomplices of the Austrian counter-revolution. This was partly the fault of the Hungarian leaders, who refused to recognise the national demands of the Serbs and other Slavs incorporated in Hungary under the administrative division in force at the time. Almost to the end of the revolution, the Hungarian Government pursued a national policy based mainly on the principle of Magyarisation and underestimation of the national aspirations of the other nationalities. Only on July 28, 1849, when the Hungarian revolutionary Government was about to fall, did it officially proclaim equality of rights for all the nationalities inhabiting the country.

Page Break me9.xxv

Page me9.xxv

Marx and Engels considered that the consolidation of the European reactionary forces and the attempts to form an Austro-Russian-Prussian counter-revolutionary alliance spelt danger not only to the Hungarian but also the European revolution. They considered that the impending armed intervention by Tsarist Russia in Hungary was fraught with grave danger (see for example "The Third Party in the Alliance", "The Tsar and His Subordinate Knyazes" etc.). Engels' hopes were never realised that the Hungarian revolutionary army would extend its operations into Austria, and that a fresh revolutionary conflagration would occur in Austria itself before Tsarist troops could come to the aid of the Habsburg monarchy. Owing to the defeat of the revolutionary and democratic forces in the other countries, the Hungarian national liberation movement, despite the successes it achieved in the spring of 1849, could not withstand the onslaught of the joint forces of the counter-revolution, and in the beginning of August 1849 the Hungarian revolution was crushed.

Page me9.xxv

Marx and Engels pressed for an intensification of the struggle for a united democratic German republic brought about by a democratic transformation of the existing backward and divided petty states. They strongly opposed plans for the unification of Germany "from above", dominated by junker Prussia or feudal Austria, and were against the Prussianisation of Germany.

Page me9.xxv

The main obstacle to the progressive development of Germany was, in their view, the counter-revolutionary Hohenzollern monarchy in Prussia, the bulwark of the most conservative sections — the aristocracy, the bureaucracy and the military — of the old society, which endeavoured to stifle the revolution completely and to re-establish the pre-revolutionary absolutist regime in a slightly refurbished form and masked by the "granted" Constitution. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung exposed the counter-revolutionary schemes of the Prussian ruling clique and the reactionary court camarilla in a number of articles, for example, "Government Provocations" and "The Counter-Revolutionary Plans in Berlin". Predicting the further course of development in Prussia, Engels wrote that one of the ultimate aims of the Prussian reactionaries was to set up a dictatorship of the sabre and to revise the limited Constitution of December 5, 1848, so as to make it even more conservative. Their intention was "by new dictated measures to get rid of the troublesome fetters which even the martial-law Charter of December 5 still imposed on our counter-revolution" (see this volume, p. 370).

Page Break me9.xxvi

Page me9.xxvi

The anti-democratic Bills introduced by the Brandenburg-Manteuffel Government in Prussia and designed to abolish freedom of assembly and association and freedom of the press and restore the former Prussian patriarchal laws were sharply attacked in Marx's articles "Three New Bills", "The Hohenzollern General Plan of Reform" and "The Hohenzollern Press Bill". Not a single case of coercion and arbitrary police rule escaped exposure in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see "Dissolution of the Second Chamber" "Longing for a State of Siege", "Counter-Revolutionary Offensive and Victory of the Revolution", "The New Martial-Law Charter" etc.).

Page me9.xxvi

The Prussian kings and their myrmidons were branded by Marx and Engels as hangmen of the liberation movement not only in Prussia but in the whole of Germany. Marx called them "the royal terrorists" who "are in practice brutal, disdainful and mean, in theory cowardly, secretive and deceitful, and in both respects disreputable" (see this volume, p. 453). He emphasised that to pursue a counter-revolutionary policy directed against the people was well-established tradition in the house of Hohenzollern. And about Frederick William II, he wrote in the article "The Deeds of the Hohenzollern Dynasty": "It is well known that in 1792 he entered into a coalition with Austria and England to suppress the glorious French Revolution and invaded France" (see this volume, p. 419). The history of rise of this Prussian dynasty, which became firmly established by means of plunder, treachery and violence, is narrated by Marx with biting sarcasm.

Page me9.xxvi

In a number of articles published in this volume — "Draft Address of the Second Chamber", "The Debate on the Address in Berlin", "Sitting of the Second Chamber in Berlin, April 13", "The Debate on the Law on Posters" — Engels deals with the proceedings in the Second Chamber of the Prussian Diet which was convoked on the basis of the "granted" Constitution of December 5, 1848, after the Prussian coup d'état. He exposes the attempts of the Government to consolidate the counter-revolutionary regime by means of the Diet, and then proceeds to criticise the members of the Left opposition, i.e. the liberals and democrats. Engels is indignant because the opposition, including the extreme Left, fail to defend the democratic rights of the people and "moderate their claims to the same extent as those of the Right increase theirs", thus revealing their lack of political principles and their compliant attitude (see this volume, p. 136). For they think that it is possible by parliamentary and constitutional methods to achieve that which in the existing situation can only be achieved by revolutionary means, by the use of arms. "Instead of adopting an extra-parliamentary position in the parliament, the only honourable one in such a Chamber, they make one concession after another to parliamentary expediency; instead of ignoring the constitutional point of view as far as possible, they actually seek an opportunity of coquetting with it for the sake of peace" (p. 136). The wavering and indecision of the Left wing in the German Assembly at Frankfurt were also unreservedly condemned by Marx and Engels (see Marx's articles "The March Association" and "The Frankfurt March Association and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung"). They saw it as dangerous collusion with the counterrevolution.

Page Break me9.xxvii
Page me9.xxvii
Along with their criticism of the constitutional delusions of the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois democrats, Marx and Engels outlined the principles of truly revolutionary parliamentary tactics. The democratic forces should use parliaments — even those composed mainly of reactionary deputies — to expose the intrigues of the ruling circles and to mobilise the people against them. They should combine parliamentary forms of struggle with extensive nonparliamentary mass action, for the latter is the main thing in the fight against counter-revolutionary attacks and in the defence of the people's democratic achievements. And they should recognise that the decisive role in this struggle belongs to the proletariat, a class which, as Engels said, "by its very position ... is revolutionary" and is the main danger to the counter-revolutionary order (see this volume, p. 326).
Page me9.xxvii
The events which followed very quickly confirmed Marx's and Engels' opinion of the groundlessness of constitutional illusions. The Prussian Government, which deemed that oppositional views were being too strongly expressed in the Second Chamber of the Prussian Diet, summarily dissolved it on April 27, 1849.
Page me9.xxvii
The bourgeois-democratic revolution in Germany now entered its final phase, which was marked by mass action in defence of the imperial Constitution drawn up by the Frankfurt National Assembly and rejected by the King of Prussia and the counter-revolutionary governments of the other German states.

Page me9.xxvii

According to Marx and Engels, the imperial Constitution could not as such provide a programme or a banner for the proletariat and the revolutionary democrats. As to the question of German unification, the Constitution not only reflected the readiness of the liberal, Prussophile majority of the Frankfurt National Assembly to resort to compromise but also retained the monarchical form of government. Marx and Engels had been warning for a long time that the anti-revolutionary policy of compromise pursued by the liberals in the National Assembly would end ingloriously, with the dissolution of the Assembly by the counter-revolutionary forces as soon as they felt that they no longer needed it as a protection against the pressure of the popular movement. "On the monument to be erected at the site of its wretched activity," said the article "Vienna and Frankfurt", "the wayfarer will read: 'Perished through its own fault, through cowardice, professorial stupidity and chronic meanness, amid in part the revengeful derision, and in part the complete indifference of the people'" (see this volume, p. 48). In the articles "A Prussian Kick for the Frankfurt Assembly" and "A New Prussian Kick for the Frankfurt Assembly" Marx and Engels depicted the complete political helplessness of the liberals and moderate democrats in the Frankfurt Parliament and their inability to repulse the reaction and to defend their own creation, the imperial Constitution.

Page Break me9.xxviii

Page me9.xxviii

Although Marx and Engels clearly understood the limitations of this Constitution, they emphasised the revolutionary nature of the popular movement that came to its defence. The defence of the Constitution was in fact a fight to preserve the still surviving achievements of the revolution, for though the Constitution was couched in extremely moderate terms, it nevertheless proclaimed a number of civil liberties and paved the way to overcoming the country's political fragmentation. Engels wrote: "The people regard every step, however small, towards the unification of Germany as a step towards abolition of the petty sovereigns and liberation from the oppressive burden of taxation" (see this volume, p. 378). In a series of articles ("News from Southern Germany", "The Prussian Army and the Revolutionary Uprising of the People", "The Approaching Revolution", "The Uprising in Elberfeld and Düsseldorf", "The Uprising in the Berg Country", "Elberfeld" etc.) the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung greeted those who had fought, weapons in hand, in Saxony, the Rhine Province and South-West Germany, spoke of their fighting spirit and examined the democrats' chances of victory, and at the same time they denounced the murderous action of the punitive expeditions and the treachery of the moderate bourgeoisie. The fact that the armies in the Palatinate and Baden went over to the insurgents was in their eyes a reassuring sign, of great significance for the prospects of the revolution (see this volume, p. 399).

Page me9.xxviii

Marx and Engels hoped that the campaign for the imperial Constitution would develop into a national uprising, which, spreading through the whole of Germany, would merge with the

Page Break me9.xxix

Hungarian revolution, the national liberation struggle of the Italian people and the revolutionary action of the French proletariat, to form one mighty stream. Although Marx and Engels did not agree with the political principles and tactics of the petty-bourgeois leaders of the movement in defence of the Constitution, they supported it with all the means at their disposal. Engels and other members of the Communist League took part in the Elberfeld uprising, and later fought in the insurgent army of Baden and the Palatinate against the counter-revolutionary troops.
Page me9.xxix

But the German petty-bourgeois leaders proved incapable of solving revolutionary tasks. Marx and Engels tried in vain to persuade them to act more resolutely and in particular to induce the Left-wing deputies of the National Assembly to summon the revolutionary army of Baden and the Palatinate to Frankfurt, and thus to transfer the main battlefield to the centre of Germany. The uprisings in defence of the imperial Constitution lacked central direction, were isolated from one another and remained localised. They were brutally put down by the counter-revolutionary troops. The last centres of the movement in Baden and the Palatinate were suppressed in July 1849.

Page me9.xxix

The Prussian Government had wanted for a long time to find a suitable opportunity to settle accounts with the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. During the May uprisings of 1849 the angry voice of the newspaper was particularly irksome to the powers that be. As the Chartist Democratic Review wrote, the newspaper proclaimed "in every line 'war to the knife' against his Prussian kingship, and all the oppressors and betrayers of the German people" (see this volume, p. 513).
Page me9.xxix

In order to put an end to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, the Government took advantage of Marx not being a Prussian citizen to expel him from Prussia, and began reprisals against the other editors. The last issue of the paper, printed in red, appeared on May 19, 1849. In it Marx summed up the newspaper's relentless fight for the revolutionary cause. He stressed the paper's role as harbinger of the militant consolidation of the revolutionary forces, defender of working-class interests and herald of the principles of proletarian internationalism (see the article "The Summary Suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung"). He reminded his readers of the newspaper's solidarity with those who fought in the proletarian uprising in Paris and, addressing the men behind the police persecution, said: "Was not the essence of the June revolution the essence of our paper?" (see this volume, p. 453). The Neue Rheinische Zeitung had defended the democratic and national interests of the German people with equal fortitude and consistency. Marx proudly wrote, "We have saved the revolutionary honour of our country" (see this volume, p. 454).

Page Break me9.xxx
Page me9.xxx

The address to the workers of Cologne concludes thus: "In bidding you farewell the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung thank you for the sympathy you have shown them. Their last word everywhere and always will be: emancipation of the working class!" (see this volume, p. 467).

Page me9.xxx

After the suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Marx and Engels used every opportunity to write for the surviving democratic press in the same revolutionary spirit. Several of their articles and statements published in this volume were written for the German democratic papers which were still able to appear.
Page me9.xxx

In his article "The Revolutionary Uprising in the Palatinate and Baden" Engels answered the attempts of the German conservative press to blacken the revolutionaries fighting there. After refuting false accusations, Engels pointed out that the revolutionary struggle in South-West Germany was a component part of the European revolutionary movement. "The Palatinate and Baden," he wrote, "will stand on the side of freedom against slavery, of revolution against counter-revolution, of the people against the sovereigns, of revolutionary France, Hungary and Germany against absolutist Russia, Austria, Prussia and Bavaria" (see this volume, p. 476).
Page me9.xxx

The sketch "Repudiation", written by Engels after the end of the military campaign in Baden and the Palatinate, was aimed at several petty-bourgeois German emigrants in Switzerland who tried to cast aspersions on one of the proletarian units of the insurgent army, a unit in which Engels himself had fought.
Page me9.xxx

Marx's article "The 13th of June", which can also be found in this section, is of special importance. It discusses the political crisis in France which was bound up with the opposition of the Mountain — a petty-bourgeois party — against the Government and President Louis Bonaparte, who in violation of the Constitution had sent an army to Italy to crush the Roman Republic. The leaders of the Mountain, refusing more resolute measures at this crucial moment, called upon the masses to take part in an unarmed demonstration. Marx, who was in Paris at the time, saw the demonstrators being dispersed by troops.
Page me9.xxx

Anticipating in this article the detailed analysis of these events which he was to give in The Class Struggles in France, Marx showed that the fiasco of the "parliamentary uprising" was the logical outcome of the French petty-bourgeois democrats' inconsistencies,

Page Break me9.xxxi which could be traced right back to the anti-proletarianism which the leaders, for instance Ledru-Rollin, had displayed during the rising of the Paris workers in June 1848. "... June 13, 1849 is only the retaliation for June 1848. On that occasion the proletariat was deserted by the 'Mountain', this time the 'Mountain' was deserted by the proletariat" (see this volume, pp. 478-79). Marx regarded the events of June 13, 1849 as a severe blow to the European revolutionary movement as a whole. The defeat suffered by the French petty-bourgeois democrats helped consolidate the political monopoly of the conservative, monarchist forces in France and, in the last analysis, it paved the way for the counter-revolutionary Bonapartist coup d'état of December 2, 1851.

Page me9.xxxi

The Appendices in this volume contain documents illustrating Marx's and Engels' participation in the work of various democratic and proletarian organisations. These give an idea of how Marx and Engels directed the activities of the Cologne Workers' Association, and of how their associates fought sectarian and splitting elements. This section also contains material about the Congress of the Workers' Associations of the Rhineland called in connection with the planned Congress of all the German Workers' Associations — to which Marx and Engels attached great importance, since it marked a new stage in the creation of a mass proletarian party. Also included are documents relating to the persecution of Marx and Engels by the Prussian authorities, and to the legal proceedings against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and its editors, as well as comments of the workers' and democratic press in Germany and England on the closing down of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and Marx's expulsion from Prussia. The police inspector's notification of Marx's expulsion from Paris in the summer of 1849 shows that the harassment of Marx continued and that this time it was organised by the French bourgeois government. All these documents throw light on the situation in which Marx and Engels worked during the last months of the revolution.

Page me9.xxxi

Nearly all revolutionary movements in Europe were defeated in the summer of 1849. The reasons which led to this defeat were pretty thoroughly examined by Marx and Engels in many of the articles published in volumes 7 to 9 of this edition. Again and again they had warned that unless the revolutionary forces succeeded in bringing about a radical change in the course of events, the swing over of a considerable section of the European bourgeoisie to the counter-revolutionary camp and the vacillation of the petty-bourgeois democrats would be fatal to the bourgeois-democratic revolution. In 1848-49 the bulk of the people, including the workers, had not yet reached a sufficient degree of political independence and ideological maturity to enable them ultimately to change the direction of social development in favour of the revolution.

Page Break me9.xxxii

Page me9.xxxii

However owing to the intrinsic laws governing revolutionary processes in general, as Marx and Engels observed later, the events of 1848 and 1849 influenced the historical process not only in this particular revolutionary period, but also at subsequent stages. The revolutions of 1848 and 1849 left unsolved a number of social and political tasks which remained, however, on the agenda of history. These revolutions, moreover, brought about significant changes in the social consciousness of various classes of society.

Page me9.xxxii

The years 1848 and 1849 were of special importance for the future development of Marxism. They confirmed the correctness and viability of its main conclusions and provided material for its further enrichment. On the other hand, none of the doctrinaire and sectarian trends in the revolutionary movement was able to stand the test of revolutionary reality, and the collapse of their illusions, antiquated traditions and utopian doctrines was one of the positive results of the revolution. The defeat of the revolutionary movement could shake neither the methodological basis of the Marxist theory, nor the political ideas and the strategic and tactical principles which Marx and Engels had put forward. For they were truly scientific conclusions drawn from progressive social processes which were actually taking place and which, though at that time they manifested themselves merely as tendencies of social development, later increasingly succeeded in forcing their way into history. Lenin was perfectly justified in saying that "the tactics of Marx in 1848 were correct ... they and only they really provided reliable, firm and unforgettable lessons for the proletariat" (Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 15, p. 47).

Page me9.xxxii

The strategy and tactics worked out by Marx and Engels in 1848 and 1849 is an invaluable asset of the revolutionary labour movement of many countries. Many times has recourse been made — and it will continue to be made — to the lessons of that period.

* * *

Page me9.xxxii

This volume contains not only the writings of Marx and Engels which were published in Volume 6 of the Russian and German editions of their Collected Works, but also many articles and documents discovered as a result of research carried out in the USSR and the GDR during the last few years. A total of 102 articles and reports, amounting to nearly one half of this volume, were only recently published as part of Volume 43 of the Second Russian Edition of the Works of Marx and Engels.

Page Break me9.xxxiii

Page me9.xxxiii

Of the 146 articles forming the main section of the volume, 140 appear in English for the first time and this is noted on each occasion at the end of the translation. Only Wage Labour and Capital, "The Deeds of the Hohenzollern Dynasty", "Counter-Revolutionary Offensive and Victory of the Revolution", "The Summary Suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung", "Hungary" and "To the Workers of Cologne" have been previously published in English. Apart from a passage which appeared in the Democratic Review, the Appendices consist entirely of material not previously published in English. All the texts have been translated from the German except where otherwise stated.

Page me9.xxxiii

Since it has not always been possible to determine whether a given article was written by Marx or by Engels, the author's name at the end of the article appears only where it has been definitely established which one of them wrote the article in question.

Page me9.xxxiii

The titles of the articles are taken, wherever possible, from the tables of contents printed in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Those supplied by the editors of the present edition are in square brackets. If a periodical from which Marx and Engels quote is not available, references to other publications in which the material in question was also published are given in footnotes and also in the index of quoted and mentioned literature.

Page me9.xxxiii

The volume was compiled and the preface and notes written by Velta Pospelova and edited by Lev Golman (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU). The name index, the index of quoted and mentioned literature and the index of periodicals were prepared by Irina Shikanyan with the help of Evgenia Dakhina and Natalia Lapitskaya. For the reader's convenience, there is a glossary of geographical names which, in addition to the form generally used in the German press of the time, gives their modern equivalents. The glossary was prepared by Yury Vasin and the subject index by Vladimir Sazonov (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).
Page me9.xxxiii

The translations were made by Jack Cohen, Clemens Dutt, Michael Hudson, Dorothy Jaeschke, Hugh Rodwell, Barbara Ruhemann, Barrie Selman, Christopher Upward and Joan and Trevor Walmsley (Lawrence and Wishart) and Salo Ryazanskaya

Page Break me9.xxxiv
(Progress Publishers) and edited by Richard Abraham, Maurice Cornforth, Sheila Lynd, Margaret Mynatt (Lawrence and Wishart), Salo Ryazanskaya, Margarita Lopukhina, Vladimir Pavlov and Maria Shcheglova (Progress Publishers) and Norire Ter-Akopyan, scientific editor (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).
Page me9.xxxiv

The volume was prepared for the press by the editor Margarita Lopukhina and the assistant editor Natalia Kim (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me9.1

KARL MARX
and
FREDERICK ENGELS

ARTICLES FROM
THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG

March 6-May 19, 1849

Page Break me9.2

Page Break me9.3
Page me9.3

THE STATE OF TRADE†1

Page me9.3

Cologne, March 6. An Englishman is never more unhappy than when he does not know what to do with his money. Therein lies the secret of all grandiose speculations, all profit-making enterprises, but it is also the secret of all bankruptcies, all financial crises and commercial depressions.
Page me9.3
In 1840, 1841 and subsequent years, it was the new Asian markets, besides the customary commerce with the European continent, which claimed a special share of English export trade. Manufacturers and exporters had every reason to greet Sir Henry Pottinger†2 on the Manchester stock exchange with loud cheers. But the good times quickly passed. Canton, Bombay and Calcutta soon overflowed with unsalable goods, and capital, which no longer found any outlet in that direction, for a change once more sought application inside the country; it was poured into railway construction and so opened up a field for speculation in which the latter was soon rampant to a quite unprecedented extent.
Page me9.3
According to a conservative estimate, the total sum invested in the enterprises could be put at 600 million and it would perhaps have gone still higher if the failure of the potato harvest in England, Ireland and many regions of the Continent, and further the high price of cotton, and as a result of both the reduced sale of manufactured goods, as well as, finally, the excessive railway speculation, had not caused the Bank of England on October 16, 1845 to raise the bank rate by one-half per cent.
Page me9.3
In view of the superstitious fear in which the Britisher holds the omnipotence of his bank, this slight rise in the bank rate or, in other words, this lack of confidence on the part of the bank directors, at once affected the existing level of activity, so that a general mood of dejection set in, and the apparent prosperity was immediately followed by the restriction of credit and numerous bankruptcies. Consequently one of those great commercial crises, like those of 1825 and 1836, would have immediately developed if the repeal of the Corn Laws†3 that followed soon afterwards had not suddenly come to the aid of the falling confidence, and once more stimulated the spirits of the entrepreneurs.

Page Break me9.4
Page me9.4
For the commercial world expected so much from the immediate consequences of this great measure that it found it easy to forget about the tribulations which had just overtaken it. The settlement of the Oregon conflict which promised a continuation of the hitherto extremely flourishing trade with America, and the British victories in the Punjab†4 which ensured peace in Hindustan, played their part, of course, in a revival of spirits. And although the bad harvest of 1845 was followed by a similar one in 1846, although everywhere the reserves of former times had to be drawn upon and a credit for business purposes involved paying 12-15 per cent, despite all this, all the spinning mills of Lancashire and Yorkshire were set in continual motion as though crop failures, railway speculations and glutted markets had now suddenly become mere trifles which could be coped with in a trice.
Page me9.4

This happy state of affairs, however, was not destined to last long, for whereas in September 1847 Dr. Bowring at the Brussels Free Trade Congress was still expounding with such highly comical eloquence the marvellous consequences of the repeal of the Corn Laws,†a it was already noticed in London that even the "all-powerful measures of Sir Robert Peel" were no longer able to save the country from the catastrophe which had so long been feared. One had to submit to fate and the London firms which, like Read Irving and Co., owned landed property worth almost one million pounds on Mauritius, were the first to start a series of bankruptcies — because of the shattered state of affairs in that part of the English colonies — they collapsed, taking with them in their fall numerous smaller East-Indian and West-Indian firms.
Page me9.4
At the same time the big wigs of the factory districts realised that they had been mistaken about the consequences of the repeal of the Corn Laws. Business with all parts of the world was at a standstill and panic spread simultaneously in the City of London and in the stock exchanges of Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds etc.

Page Break me9.5
Page me9.5
Consequently, the crisis of October 1845, which had been delayed by various events, finally broke out in September 1847. Confidence was at an end. Courage had run out. The Bank of England abandoned the banks inside the country; these banks withheld credit from traders and manufacturers. Bankers and exporters restricted their business with the Continent, the continental trader, in his turn, put pressure on the manufacturer who owed him money; the manufacturer, of course, reimbursed himself at the expense of the wholesaler, and the latter fell back on the boutiquier.†a Each one of them hit out at the others and gradually the distress due to the trade crisis affected the whole world, from the giants of the City of London down to the smallest German shopkeeper.
Page me9.5
This was before February 24, 1848! England experienced the worst days in the last four months of 1847. There was a clean sweep of the railway speculators; between August 10 and October 15, twenty of the leading London firms trading in colonial merchandise, with a capital of £5 million, and paying dividends of about 50 per cent, went bankrupt; and in the factory districts the distress reached its peak when in Manchester on November 15, only 78 out of 175 spinning mills were working full-time, and 11,000 workers were out of work.
Page me9.5
So ended the year 1847. It was reserved for the Continent to experience during 1848 the after-effects of this English crisis — after-effects that on this occasion were, of course, all the more perceptible because the political transformations did not exactly help to make good the consequences of this extraordinary English occurrence.
Page me9.5
We now come to the most interesting moment in the recent history of commerce, namely, the influence which the revolutions had on commercial activity.
Page me9.5

The tables of English export trade provide us with the best illustration of this because, in view of the dominant position of England in world trade, the contents of these tables are nothing but an expression in figures of the political and commercial situation or, more correctly, the expression in figures of the ability to pay of the various nations.
Page me9.5

Therefore, when we see that exports in April 1848 fell by £1,467,117, and in May by £1,122,009, and that total exports in 1847 amounted to £51,005,798, and in 1848 to only £46,407,939, conclusions very unfavourable to the revolutions could, it is true, be drawn from this and such an idea could be arrived at all the more easily because exports in January and February 1848, i.e. immediately before the outbreak of revolution, were actually £294,763 higher than in 1847.

Page Break me9.6
Page me9.6

Nevertheless, such a view would be completely erroneous. Because, firstly, the increased exports in January and February, i.e. precisely in the two months separating the peak of the crisis from the revolution, are easily explained by the fact that the Americans, in return for their enormous deliveries of grain to England at that time, took more British manufactured goods than ever before and thus at least for a short while prevented the falling off that would otherwise have arisen. But, in addition, English trade history provides most striking proof that exports do not diminish immediately after a crisis, but only when sufficient time has passed for the crisis to spread also to the Continent.
Page me9.6

The increased export of the first two months of 1848, therefore, should by no means mislead us, and we can turn without misgivings to a consideration of the total decline during the whole year.
Page me9.6

This decline, as we have already mentioned, compared with 1847 amounted to £4,597,859 — certainly a considerable decrease, which in the hands of the reactionaries, who behave in politics like yapping curs and in trade like old women, became an argument against the revolution, one that is only too effectively used towards the uninformed.
Page me9.6

But there is nothing easier than to refute the fallacious assertions of the party of reaction, for one has only to look up the tables of exports for the past 30 years to demonstrate that the decrease in exports in 1848, brought about by the combined influence of a trade crisis and a revolution, bears no comparison with the decline in exports of previous years.
Page me9.6

After the trade crisis of 1825, in which year total exports amounted to £38,870,851, exports dropped to £31,536,724 in 1826. Thus there was a decrease of £7,334,127. After the crisis of 1836, when exports amounted to £53,368,572, exports dropped to £42,070,744 in 1837. The decrease, therefore, was £11,297,828. Nothing can be more striking than that!
Page me9.6

Hence after two trade crises, which, it is true, were caused exclusively by the over-production of manufactured goods but in their extent cannot at all be compared with the crisis just ended, the drop in exports was double that of 1848, a year which was preceded by a glut in the Asian markets, two bad harvests, and speculation on a scale never seen before in the world, and a year when every corner of old Europe was shaken by revolutions!

Page Break me9.7
Page me9.7

In truth, trade got off easily in 1848! The revolutions contributed to the fact that now and then trade stagnated, that sales became difficult and dangerous, and that many persons collapsed under the burden of their obligations. During the past year, however, under Louis Philippe, the same difficulties would have been met with in Paris in discounting a miserable 20,000 or 30,000 francs as under the republic. In Southern Germany, on the Rhine, in Hamburg and in Berlin, with or without the revolution we would have had our bankruptcies; and business in Italy would have been depressed just as much under Pius as under the heroes of Milan, Rome and Palermo.†5
Page me9.7

It is just as ludicrous, therefore, to ascribe the revival of trade to the temporary victories of the counter-revolution. The French are not paying 25 per cent more for wool at the London wool auctions because some of Louis Philippe's Ministers are again in power, — no, they are having to pay more because they need the wool, and they need more of it, their demand is growing, precisely because in the last years of Louis Philippe's rule it had greatly decreased. Such a fluctuation of demand can be observed throughout the history of commerce.
Page me9.7

And the English are once more working a full day in all the mines, foundries, spinning mills, and in all their ports, not because a certain Prince Windischgrätz orders the summary shooting of the Viennese people, — no, they are at work because the markets of Canton, New York and St. Petersburg wish to be supplied with manufactures, because California is opening up a new market which the speculators regard as inexhaustible, because the bad harvests of 1845 and 1846 were followed by two good harvests in 1847 and 1848, because the English have given up railway speculation, because money has returned to its customary channels, and the English will go on working ... until there is a new trade crisis.
Page me9.7

Above all, we must not forget that it was by no means the monarchical countries that in recent years were the chief source of employment for English industry. The country which has almost continuously placed the most colossal orders for English goods and whose demand at the present time, too, is able to empty the markets of Manchester, Leeds, Halifax, Nottingham, Rochdale, and all the great emporia of modern industry, and which can enliven the ocean with its ships — is a republican country, the United States of North America. And it is just now that these states are prospering most of all, when all the monarchical states of the world are collapsing.

Page Break me9.8

Page me9.8

If, however, in the recent period a few branches of German industry have to some extent improved their position, they owe it solely to the English period of prosperity.†a From the whole of the history of commerce the Germans should know that they have no commercial history of their own, that they have to suffer for English crises, while in periods of over-production in England, a minute percentage is all that falls to their lot. But they have nothing to thank their Christian-Germanic governments for except accelerated bankruptcy.

Written on March 6, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 239, March 7, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.9

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR†6

Page me9.9

Yesterday's news of Magyar victories†a has been followed today by an Austrian assurance of victory. The Österreichischer Correspondent reports from Olmütz:

“The following telegraphic dispatch has just reached Olmütz: Field Marshal Prince Windischgrätz defeated the insurgents at Kapolna†7 on February 26 and 27. The enemy fled in two directions. An entire battalion was taken prisoner.”

Page me9.9

The commentary to this report may be found in the following lines, which have also been corroborated from other quarters:

“In Vienna the news of the imperial victory was known on March 2 only as a stock exchange rumour: the letters which arrived by the post from Pest on that day were not released.”

Page me9.9

It can be seen that the news of the imperial victory bears all the marks of a Windischgrätz triumph: the letters which are supposed to confirm it are withheld by the post-office in Vienna. This is the first time that the Vienna Government has had to resort to such methods. The victory must have been a brilliant one indeed!

Page me9.9

Still no news from Transylvania about the battle on the 15th between Bem and Puchner.†8 The latest reports stop at the 14th but indicate that a Magyar victory is likely the following day. An issue of the Lithographierte Correspondenz from Vienna writes:

"At last we again have received letters direct from Hermannstadt up to the 14th, they are however anything but reassuring.
Page me9.9
"Lieutenant-Field Marshal Puchner is evidently still not strong enough to take the offensive against the fanatical bands of the Szeklers†9 and the hordes of Bem. There seems to be some reluctance, for political reasons, to employ Russian aid to the extent that the sorry state of the Grand Duchy demands. The commercial letters from Hermannstadt and Kronstadt sound very miserable. From Temesvar it was reported to Hermannstadt that the Serbs have refused to come to the aid of Transylvania. This is also evident from the irresolute movements of generals Rukavina, Gläser and Todorovich."

Page Break me9.10

Page me9.10
The Austrians have suffered a fresh defeat at the hands of Kossuth, not on the battlefield but at the shopkeepers' counters and the portable stands of the Jewish pedlars. Kossuth saw that the imperial authorities were compelled to redeem his one- and two-gulden notes and immediately arranged the production of 15- and 30-kreutzer notes.†10 Windischgrätz, outraged at this high treason against the royal imperial exchequer, has now issued the following proclamation†a:

"The rebels, who have fled to Debreczin, tireless in confusing even further the already severely disrupted conditions of the country, have, in addition to the banknotes already issued without right or authority, produced 30- and 15-kreutzer notes which are already beginning to circulate. These notes are mainly coming into the hands of the poorer classes of artisans and country people who, almost entirely lacking a livelihood, are already hard-pressed, and should be particularly preserved from harm. For the time being, therefore, and until an order is issued concerning the Hungarian banknotes as well, I declare these completely illegal notes for 30 and 15 kreutzers null and void, and prohibit their acceptance both at public cash-offices and in private exchange."

Page me9.10
As if Herr Windischgrätz could prevent the circulation of the Magyar banknotes as long as Austria is unable to issue any ready money and especially small coins!
Page me9.10
According to Austrian reports, Görgey, whom the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen calls a man "with no talent for generalship" (!!),†b is said to have resigned the command. We need not point out how absurd such rumours are. In the meantime we present the following report from the Austrian Lloyd on the latest operations of this skilful partisan in the Zips†c:

“Until the 18th of last month Lieutenant-Field Marshal Ramberg, who commanded the two brigades of royal imperial troops under General Götz and Prince Jablonowsky in the Zips areas, was continuously engaged in skirmishes with Görgey's insurgent forces. [...] For Görgey had sent his baggage trains with a small escort from Kaschau, an area from which royal imperial troops had withdrawn, to the Theiss in the direction of Debreczin, and in order to protect this transport he used all his forces to halt the troops pursuing him, and therefore retained scarcely two squadrons of hussars in Kaschau. After his rearguard had been forced back from Wallendorf to Margitfalva — when the royal imperial fusiliers captured five cannon (!) — he concentrated his main strength on this road, which, forming a narrow defile in the valley of the River Hernad, severely impeded the advance of the royal imperial troops. On the road to Eperies the smaller corps of Hungarians withdrew hastily, fearing to be cut off on the mountain road by the former garrison of Kaschau. [...] The infantry of the Hungarians is generally appalling, not only because it is neither trained nor disciplined — for these shortcomings would be to some extent compensated for in battle by the phisical agility peculiar to the Magyars and their proven scorn for death — but chiefly because their officers are incompetent and cowardly, collected from all corners of the world, and inspire no confidence in their men. [...] On the other hand, the hussars, whose officers, although mostly promoted NCOs, are ignorant, but at least courageous men, retain their inherent bravery; here in the mountains they could not often be used, but they frequently dismounted from their horses to cover the cannon and encourage the others; on outpost duty they are reckless in their daring and cause the royal imperial troops a good deal of trouble. [...]

Page Break me9.11
Page me9.11
“The engagements between the insurgents and the royal imperial troops were limited in this area to skirmishes and artillery salvoes; as the battalions drew nearer the insurgents retired; on the 19th, they assembled in Kaschau and then tried to reach the Theiss by forced marches in order either to effect a meeting with Dembinski or to flee to Debreczin. (!) [...]
Page me9.11
“The town of Kaschau was illuminated to greet the insurgents, and received Görgey with a torchlight parade, thus saving itself from a levy such as was imposed on Eperies. Now the evil guests have fled, and on the 19th of last month Eperies was re-occupied by the royal imperial troops; and Kaschau, the day before yesterday.†a In the village of Petrovian between Eperies and Kaschau, where the peasants had captured several hussars and taken them over the mountains to the royal imperial troops, the rebels had the local magistrate and a juryman shot as a punishment. We, the Zipsers, got off with a black eye; only the towns and villages on the Kaschau mountain road incurred severe damage during the various skirmishes. The earlier-mentioned attack by the imperial Major Kiesewetter was made on the town of Neudorf to punish it for its treachery, and it is now occupied by four companies of the Slovak Landsturm under Štúr, which naturally cannot be compared with the pleasantness of an occupation by the imperial troops. We are all however disturbed by the presence of a rebel force under the insurgent Colonel Aulich in Lublau, which by all appearances intends to operate in the rear of the imperial army, for men are claiming to have seen hussars first in one place, then in another; meanwhile, to our consolation, General Vogl has advanced from Galicia with 4,000 men via Bartfeld, and he will probably drive these hordes out of the border mountains before long (?).”

Page me9.11

As a counterpart of this we present the following report from Agram of the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen on the South-Slav complications:

“Agram, February 25. In its latest issue, the Napredak [Napredak] discusses the causes of the state of siege which was imposed on Karlowitz; it endorses the view that the activities of the Central Committee†11 gave rise to this military measure. The Napredak excuses the Patriarch†b by whose order the state of war was proclaimed in Karlowitz; the above newspaper further reports that at present the Patriarch is ruling alone, while the Odbor (Central Committee) has relinquished its duties and refrains from intervening publicly in the administration of the voivodeship. The differences between Rajachich and Stratimirovich are — judging by this newspaper — by no means eliminated yet. This is also averred by a member of the Serb constitutional commission recently arrived here, who hardly described things in the Voivodina as being at their best. From the information supplied by this member I am able to report the following to you on the situation there. The majority of the people is for Stratimirovich, only Syrmien and the Peterwardein borders†12 are opposed to him, there Radosavljevich, who was elected regimental commander and confirmed by the Patriarch, has totally paralysed the efforts of Stratimirovich. The Patriarch is reported to have been appointed civil governor, and — which sounds rather strange — also military head of the voivodeship. It has been confirmed that Rajachich has been having repeated conflicts with the commanding officer at Temesvar, with whom he used always to be on friendly terms. The latter is said to be working with all his energy to bring the Banat border under his control, and to restore the old military authority there. In fact several senior officers have apparently banded together whose endeavours are aimed solely at everywhere placing obstacles in the path of the Serbs. Rukavina and Todorovich are said to be at the head of this anti-Serb coterie. The latter is said to have lost the sympathies of all through his gruff, offensive conduct and his exaggeratedly 'black-and-yellow'†a sentiments; his intolerance of everything that does not carry the royal imperial port d'epée apparently goes so far that he intended to grant the Serb national officers only corporals' pay. — The Serb constitutional commission recently commenced its work; the first result of its deliberations is an electoral law for the Voivodina, the draft of which is already completed.”†b

Page Break me9.12

Page me9.12

The “united monarchy” (Gesamtmonarchie) still has a number of strange experiences in store if the pan-Slavist uproar†13 that is now fermenting throughout Slav Austria breaks out some day!

Written by Engels about March 6, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 239, March 7, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.13

THE MILITARY REPORTS OF THE KÖLNISCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.13

The Kölnische Zeitung celebrated yesterday a day of rejoicing, unfortunately subdued by a measure of moral indignation. The cause of its rejoicing was the telegraphic dispatch from Olmütz reporting the alleged victory of Windischgrätz; the moral indignation had naturally been caused by nobody else but us, with our observations about the greater or lesser credibility of the Magyar reports. What! This deplorable paper, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, presumes to maintain that the Kölnische Zeitung "has not yet proved the Magyar reports guilty of a single case of exaggeration", but that the Neue Rheinische Zeitung itself has "critically ascertained the credibility of these reports"! And then three exclamation marks, each more wrathful and indignant than the last.

Page me9.13

Let us leave unruffled the holy zeal with which our neighbouring journalist fights for Truth, Justice and Windischgrätz. Let us be content for today — as the news from Hungary is very meagre — with "critically ascertaining" the "credibility" of yesterday's report in the Kölnische Zeitung.

Page me9.13

The Kölnische Zeitung commences with an important mien:

"Today we are in a position to give more definite news from the two theatres of war." Namely this: "Today we undergo the same experience with regard to the long Magyar victory-report in the Breslauer Zeitung as we so frequently had with regard to these reports: once again we must confirm that it has been nothing but a ridiculous exaggeration. The alleged defeat of Windischgrätz turns out to be a victory for the same; and there is not a word of truth in the reported capture of Hermannstadt by Bem."†a

Page Break me9.14

Page me9.14

That sounds grand enough. At a single stroke two fat "exaggerations" in the Magyar report have thus been supposedly discovered — we beg your pardon, communicated by our neighbouring journalist to his readers at second hand from Austrian newspapers.

Page me9.14

But let us now look at the matter in detail.

Page me9.14

Firstly, the famous Olmütz telegraphic dispatch is reproduced and set up as an authority beyond all doubt. But why, we ask, does the triumphant Cologne newspaper not find it fitting to carry a news item that places this dispatch in a very strange light? On the same day that the Vienna Government distributed in Vienna the news of Windischgrätz' alleged victory, it stopped all letters and newspapers from Pest at the post-office. Probably in joy at the mighty victory of the armed forces of the fatherland. The Kölnische Zeitung must have read this news, as we did, in at least half a dozen East-German newspapers. But in order not to disturb the joy of its readers at the victory of "German arms", it does the same as the Austrian Government and withholds this piece of news. That is a sample of the way the Kölnische Zeitung "critically ascertains" the "credibility" of the Austrian victory dispatches.

Page me9.14

But there is more to come. The Magyars are supposed to have been defeated at Kapolna. This is "significant".

"Kapolna is after all to the east of Gyöngyös; the Hungarians were thus in full backward movement."

Page me9.14

When one is in "backward movement", reasons the worthy Cologne paper, one cannot but be defeated! Our neighbouring journalist has at last cast a glance at the map and discovered that the Magyars must have been defeated at Kapolna because "Kapolna is after all to the east of Gyöngyös"! Yes, very "significant" indeed!

Page me9.14

Further:

"The Schlesische Zeitung, whose reporter incidentally knows nothing about the recent battle, has in this connection (!) been informed from Vienna: 'The Hungarians have withdrawn again on all sides, Prince Windischgrätz will cross the Theiss and march on Debreczin. The big battle must be fought shortly, or (!) Debreczin will be lost, the Rump Parliament†14 dissolved and consequently the whole insurrection at an end.'†a"

Page me9.14

"Prince Windischgrätz will cross the Theiss and march on Debreczin." Prince Windischgrätz says so, and it is the duty of every respectable citizen to believe him implicitly. "Prince Windischgrätz will"! It is now, thank heavens, nearly six weeks since "Prince

Page Break me9.15

Windischgrätz will cross the Theiss" and "march on Debreczin", and he is still in the same place. If, however, like our neighbouring journalist, one knows how to distinguish between "more definite news" and "ridiculous exaggerations", the entire Hungarian war has come to an end with the assurance of "Prince Windischgrätz" that he "will cross the Theiss" and "march on Debreczin". "Debreczin is lost, the Rump Parliament dissolved and consequently the whole insurrection at an end." The matter is settled in the twinkling of an eye. Our neighbouring journalist, who has “crossed” the Theiss and conquered Debreczin so many times already, according to whom more Magyars have already been killed than all Hungary has inhabitants, and who was already rejoicing four weeks ago: “The war in Hungary is coming to an end” — this same journalist has suddenly been re-electrified after a lengthy period of dejection, and is again shouting, “The war is coming to an end, parturiunt montes†a” etc., and these are no “ridiculous exaggerations” but “more definite news”!

Page me9.15
In this manner of making the Austrians win victories, the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen is a dangerous rival to the Kölnische Zeitung. For instance it reports today from Pest:

“A reverse inflicted on the royal imperial troops in Transylvania through infamous treachery is, on the other hand, compensated for by the fact that Komorn is at present being heavily attacked,†15 and a bombardment has already taken place.”†b
Page me9.15
“So much for the main theatre of war. With this renewed Austrian offensive the Hungarian war has entered its second stage here.”

Page me9.15
How many “stages” our neighbour cares to make the Hungarian war enter is of little consequence. More interesting would be an answer to the question: how many “stages” has the reporting of the Kölnische Zeitung on the Hungarian war entered?
Page me9.15
We pointed out right at the beginning of the war, even before the Austrians were in Pest, that the real battle-ground only begins beyond Pest, between the Theiss and the Danube, and that the scene of the final decision will be on the Theiss itself, or perhaps even on the far side of it. Even then we stated that the special proficiency of the Magyars in war, that the particular shortcomings of the Austrians, the difficulty of ensuring supplies and the whole nature of the terrain refer the Magyars to this area.†c On various occasions, and as recently as a few days ago, we have pointed out that all the “backward movements” of the Hungarians towards the Theiss do not determine anything whatsoever, because it is the Theiss that is their natural line of defence, behind which, for the present, they are fairly unassailable. We repeat: the further Prince Windischgrätz advances, the more difficult will his position become, the weaker his army, and the greater the Magyars' chances of victory. Moreover, the longer the decisive moment is postponed, the more time the Magyars have to arm, organise and reinforce their recently created army, while the position of the imperial forces is deteriorating rather than improving.

Page Break me9.16
Page me9.16
Supposing, then, that the Magyar report of the defeat of the Austrians were really false, their “victory” would anyway be restricted to insignificant skirmishes with the Magyar rearguard, whose job it was to cover the retreat of the main army in the direction of the Theiss and Hernad. A commanding officer like Dembinski will not accept a decisive battle before a river when he can fight much better beyond the river, unless he is perfectly sure of the outcome.

Page me9.16

But as stated: hitherto there is no news, and neither the Magyar report nor the telegraphic dispatch have been confirmed in any way. The Vienna letters and newspapers have not reached us, the Breslau papers have likewise failed to arrive because there is no Monday issue, the Berlin papers have nothing new to tell, the Leipzig and Prague papers, which present the news one day later, only contain letters from Pest of the 27th which are still in ignorance of the battle which began on the 26th, and — a remarkable thing indeed — they do not print the Olmütz victory dispatch either.
Page me9.16

Now to continue:

"We lack further news from Transylvania."

Page me9.16

This news, that there is no news, is certainly very "definite"! An excellent fashion in which to repudiate the "ridiculous exaggerations" of the Magyars!

"The Breslauer Zeitung, which is by no means impartial" (a naive remark from the mouth of our Magyarophobe neighbour!), "is surely depicting the position of the Austrians too gloomily, for though it was certainly very precarious earlier on, it has after all improved recently."

Page me9.16

"Surely, after all"! "It has after all improved!" "Surely depicting too gloomily"! Remarkably "more definite" news, in which nothing is "definite" except the tearful admission that the position of the Austrians was "certainly very precarious earlier on"!

Page Break me9.17
"The story of the storming of Hermannstadt is a Magyar invention; for this is supposed to have occurred on February 15, and yet the Vienna Lloyd contains in its columns a letter from Hermannstadt of February 16 whose writer knows nothing of the alleged storming, but on the contrary etc."

Page me9.17

And this letter from Hermannstadt, which is said to be dated the 16th, contains nothing whatsoever about the fate of the defeated Puchner, who rallied his troops again on the 12th outside Hermannstadt, contains nothing of the position of Bem advancing via Mühlbach, but merely drivels on about the raids of the Szeklers, about the few days left to hold out until "the victorious royal imperial troops, approaching ever nearer and nearer and closing in from all sides" (from whence?) eliminate the danger and so on. In short, this letter actually says nothing but what has long been known, and bears all the signs of a document fabricated in Vienna itself. Why are there then no official or semi-official reports available, if private newspapers have news from Hermannstadt of the 16th? And in a fictitious document like this the Kölnische Zeitung places its implicit trust! By means of information like this it “critically ascertains” the “ridiculous exaggerations” of the Magyar reports!

Page me9.17
In addition, the Kölnische Zeitung contains some ludicrous snatches of gossip about the amateur theatres of the officers in Komorn, about the alleged dismissal of Görgey, about the “intentions” of Nugent etc., concluding, as usual, with “a series of noteworthy judgments from the Austrian press on the intervention of the Russians”. When the gentlemen themselves lose their powers of judgment, this series of noteworthy judgments presents itself at the right moment for reproduction by anyone who cares to do so.
Page me9.17
Such are the gentlemen of the Kölnische Zeitung. Too cowardly to indulge in any sort of polemic, which would be bound utterly to expose their hollowness, ignorance and empty-headedness, this literary lumpenproletariat seeks to vent its anger at all the blows it receives on the small Magyar people fighting against a force vastly superior to it. What does it matter to the Kölnische Zeitung that this heroic people of five million led, moreover, by officers who were nothing but traitors, is forced to defend itself against the entire might of Austria and Russia, against whole fanaticised nations, that it has taken on an unequal struggle compared with which the French revolutionary war was child's play. First it abused them as “cowards”, “braggarts” etc., and when these cowards eventually put the whole of mighty Austria to flight, when they forced it humbly to beseech the Russians for aid, like a tiny sixth-rate country, against the few million Magyars, when 20,000 Russians then placed their weight in the scales in favour of Austria, this honourable little paper was unable to restrain its jubilation. And even now, as soon as there comes the slightest piece of news favourable to the imperial murderers, joy reigns in the columns of the Kölnische Zeitung, and it exults at the victory of the side enjoying the most crushing superiority, gloats over the desperate struggle of a small nation of heroic courage against two of the biggest powers of Europe!

Page Break me9.18
Page me9.18
When censorship still existed, in 1831, no German newspaper dared to cheer the Russians as they drew ever tighter circles around Warsaw.†16 Then all was sympathy for Poland, and those who did not agree at least kept quiet. But today we have freedom of the press, and the Kölnische Zeitung may unimpeded throw all its despicable drivel in the face of the Magyars in the most brutal fashion.

Written by Engels on March 7, 1849

First published in the "Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 240, March 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.19

[THE 26th AUSTRIAN ARMY BULLETIN]

Page me9.19

Just now, when the above article had already been written, we have received the following 26th Bulletin, in which the gallant Windischgrätz at last gives us an explanation of his brilliant victory at Kapolna announced by telegraph†a:

"From Gyöngyös, Field Marshal Windischgrätz gave Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick the command to leave Petervasara on February 26 and join the main army by way of Verpeleth, in order to attack the insurgents with combined forces. The corps of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Wrbna and that of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schwarzenberg encountered the enemy outside Kapolna on February 26. At first the latter showed the intention of threatening our left flank by occupying a wooded height with two battalions. He was, however, driven from there by a bayonet attack. Then, he attempted to pierce our centre with his cavalry, but was repulsed there too, and retired at all points towards Kapolna and Kaal. The fall of darkness put an end to the day's fighting. Early on the 27th Field Marshal Windischgrätz ordered the attack to be continued, having heard of the delayed arrival of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick, who had been held up by the enemy's occupation of the narrow defile of Sirok and only succeeded in taking it after a stubborn fight. He pushed back the enemy as far as Verpeleth, where the latter gained a footing, and only surrendered this place after fierce fighting. The enemy again attempted to take Kapolna and made two attacks with numerous heavy guns, which were, however, unsuccessful. After the fighting had gone on all day, the insurgents withdrew and took up a position at Maklar. During the capture of Kapolna the Zanini battalion defending the church was taken prisoner. The casualties on the enemy side were 200-300 killed and 900-1,000 captured; those of the royal imperial troops were slighter, although the exact figures are not yet available."

Page me9.19

It may be seen from this Bulletin:

Page me9.19

1) That on the 26th, as the Magyar "exaggeration" quite correctly observes, the Hungarians had indeed got the better of Windischgrätz. For were it true, as the Bulletin claims, that the imperial forces had been victorious on the 26th, on the following day, having been reinforced by the Schlick-Schulzig corps, they would have been in a position to inflict a severe defeat on the Magyars.

Page Break me9.20

Page me9.20

2) That Windischgrätz' "victory" is limited to an extremely insignificant skirmish, as the small number of casualties on the Magyar side proves. In two days of battle, 300 killed! As for the captured battalion, that means little.

Page me9.20

There are still aristocratic traitors among the officers of the Hungarian army, who are only waiting for an opportunity to position their troops in such a way that they can be captured with due decency. The death-defying bravery of the Magyar soldiers even favours such treachery.
Page me9.20
3) That the imperial forces should know the casualties of the Hungarians so exactly, whereas they have not yet established their own, is likewise highly "significant".
Page me9.20
4) Finally: as far as the definite gains of the imperial forces are concerned, these are limited to exactly one mile†a of captured terrain. The Hungarians engaged in battle at Kapolna and Verpeleth, and are now at Maklar, which lies one mile to the east. Erlau, about the same distance to the north of Maklar, is obviously also still in the possession of the Magyars, supporting their right flank; otherwise the Bulletin would have trumpeted out the recapture of this important town with due exultation.
Page me9.20
5) Summa Summarum: After achieving the purpose of their expedition before the gates of Pest, the Hungarians have withdrawn, without engaging in any decisive battle on terrain that is less favourable to them. They have only fought insofar as it was necessary in order to cover their retreat to the Theiss and Hernad and to keep the imperial forces at a respectable distance. This object has been fully attained.
Page me9.20
The whole tone of the Bulletin, and the fact that the imperial troops, according to their own report, have only advanced one mile, prove this. The result of the Hungarian advance to within six miles of Pest, quite apart from the moral impression, is this: Görgey is reunited with the main army, the comitats between the Hernad, Theiss and the Carpathians have been cleared of Austrians. The Magyars can lean their right wing on the Carpathians and establish direct contact with the Galician revolutionaries†17; they have forced

Page Break me9.21
Schlick away from his base of operations (Galicia), and thus compelled the Austrians to alter their entire plan of campaign.
Page me9.21
Let the Kölnische Zeitung, which as we know has news of the 16th from Transylvania, tell us, though, why the Bulletin says nothing of the events that occurred around Hermannstadt up to the 16th.

Written by Engels on March 7, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 240, March 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.22

THE ENGLISH SOLDIER'S OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Page me9.22

Cologne, March 7. The Neue Preussische Zeitung in great triumph publishes the English army oath of allegiance†a and rejoices immeasurably at the discovery that the English soldier swears loyalty only to the Queen†b but not to the Constitution. Should we then in Prussia, in the youngest constitutional state, should we, contrary to the example of the oldest constitutional country, compel our soldiers to swear allegiance to the Constitution?

Page me9.22

But the Neue Preussische Zeitung forgets to inform the readers how the English soldier stands in relation to civil laws.

Page me9.22

As a matter of course, the British soldier, for all offences which are not mere offences against discipline, is tried by the ordinary courts, the county courts, petty sessions, quarter sessions†18 or assize courts, and in all conflicts with other citizens he is treated simply as a citizen.

Page me9.22

But that is not all. In England every citizen, whether an official, a soldier or whatever he is, is responsible before the law for all his actions and cannot plead as an excuse that the action in question was ordered by his superior. For example, a revolt occurs. Troops are called in. Legal demands to disperse are or are not issued. The people do not disperse. A civilian official (always a justice of the peace or an urban elected official) gives permission for the army to intervene, or does not do so. The soldiers open fire, there are deaths. The findings of an inquest on those killed come before a coroner's jury which establishes the facts in each case. If the jury decides that the intervention of the armed forces was not justified by the circumstances, it brings in a verdict of premeditated murder against all the participants, including therefore the civilian official who gave permission for the intervention of the troops, the officer who gave the order to fire, and all the soldiers who actually opened fire.

Page Break me9.23

Page me9.23

If the civilian official did not give permission for intervention, the consequence is merely that he does not figure in the verdict. Matters remain unaltered as far as the officers and soldiers are concerned.

Page me9.23

This verdict of premeditated murder is a formal indictment, on the basis of which criminal proceedings are instituted before the regular courts with their juries.

Page me9.23

The English soldier, therefore, is by no means regarded by the law as a machine that has no will of its own and must obey without argument any order given it, but as a “free agent”,†a a man possessing free will, who at all times must know what he is doing and who bears responsibility for all his actions. English judges would give a stern reply to an accused soldier if he defended himself by saying that he had been ordered to fire and that he had had to “obey orders”!

Page me9.23
In Prussia things are quite different. In Prussia the soldier declares that his immediate superior gave him the order to fire, and this frees him from all punishment. In Prussia, and likewise in France, the official is assured of complete impunity for every violation of the law when he can prove that the order for it had come from his proper superior in the proper hierarchical way.
Page me9.23
The Neue Preussische Zeitung will probably take our word for it that we do not hold the view that the brief formula of an oath can alter a man and turn a black-and-white†b Guards lieutenant into an enthusiast for “constitutional freedom”.
Page me9.23
In the last twelve months, the gentlemen who are “with God for King and Fatherland”†c have themselves, through their own praiseworthy kith and kin, gained the most pleasant experience of the significance of the oath. We are not at all against the Neue Preussische Zeitung making the army swear allegiance to the king, the Dalai Lama or the man in the moon, so long as “My glorious army”,†19 in the way which has been described above, is put in exactly the same position in relation to the laws as the army in England.

Written on March 7, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 241, March 9, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.24

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.24
Yesterday we already presented an extract from the last (26th) Army Bulletin published in the Vienna Lithographierte Correspondenz.†a Today we have the complete text of the Bulletin before us.†b
Page me9.24
However hard Windischgrätz endeavours to give the action at Kapolna the character of a major battle, however violently he flings about bayonet-charges, cavalry attacks and bombardments — he is soundly defeated in his aim by the figures he himself gives of the dead and captured. 200-300 killed on the Magyar side in a major two-day battle in which “we had to deal with the main force of the enemy at all points”! It can be seen that the Magyars for their part threw no more than a few corps into the fighting which, as we said already yesterday, were at the most intended to cover the retreat of the main army and keep the Austrians at a respectable distance. For a battle between two large armies, particularly one lasting two days, results in far greater losses than a few hundred men.

Page me9.24

But Windischgrätz exaggerates even more ridiculously when he speaks of the "numerical superiority" of the Magyars. The war in Hungary would have been over long ago if the small Magyar nation could even achieve "numerical" equality with the imperial troops — but numerical superiority! The superiority of 5 million over 31 million!!
Page me9.24

One report goes as far as to maintain that 27,000 Austrians defeated twice as many Magyars at Kapolna! But this report is, in addition, so remarkably skilfully and credibly written that it relates in the same breath that, having retired to Erlau, the Magyars were met there by Götz. It is known, however, that Götz is wandering around some 30 miles away in the area of Kaschau and Eperies, and now he is suddenly supposed to have marched all the way to Erlau!

Page Break me9.25
Page me9.25

Otherwise the Bulletin contains nothing new, and we can safely put it aside.
Page me9.25

Now to Transylvania. Here it is true that Bem has not taken Hermannstadt, and that for very simple reasons. After absorbing the 4,000 strong column from Hungary, he marched along the Maros in order to join up with the Szekler Landsturm.†20 While he was advancing from Mühlbach by way of Mediasch, the Szeklers from the opposite direction came to meet him and took Schässburg with 7,000 men on the 16th. The garrison and a part of the civic militia escaped to Hermannstadt; Bem pursued them and is now once again in the vicinity of this town, as a letter of the 18th from Hermannstadt relates. According to one report it is said to have already been evacuated by Puchner.
Page me9.25

From this it is evident that Bem has executed another of those victorious advances across Transylvania in which he has already greatly distinguished himself several times. His connections with the intrepid Szeklers, who live close by the Moldavian border, after being momentarily threatened by Puchner and the Russians, have been restored; Sachsenland†21 is in extreme peril, he "now has the keys of Sachsenland in his hands".
Page me9.25

The Saxons moreover complain of the lack of good leadership from above, and of the Romanians' lack of courage. The latter are said to be displaying extreme cowardice. One report says†a:

"The only trouble is the lack of good leadership from above and the lack of courage and endurance on the part of the Wallachian troops. All the unsuccessful engagements have hitherto been lost through the fault of the Wallachians. At Salzburg the regular Wallachian army threw itself flat on its belly at the first cannon shot, and at Kronstadt the Russians had to form up behind the Wallachians to prevent them from running away. But if the battle is won, they are always the foremost and cruellest in looting, and spare neither the enemy nor their wounded comrades lying on the battlefield."

Page me9.25

This shows what gangs of brigands the royal imperial regime is employing to maintain its authority. Moreover, the Siebenbürger Bote is awaiting the following royal imperial reinforcements:

"According to reports received the corps heading for Transylvania under generals Gläser, Todorovich and Mengen is said to comprise the following troops: 8 battalions of infantry, Leiningen, Rukavina, men from Peterwardein,†22 Romanians, Illyrians, and German-Banat Borderers; 5 squadrons of Uhlans, 300 mounted Serbs, 80 Serezhans; one Congreve battery, one mounted foot-battery, two ordinary foot-batteries, 5 Serbian cannon. A total of 15,000 men."†b

Page Break me9.26

Page me9.26

The Transylvanian Flemings†23 will have to pray many a Lords Prayer before these alleged 15,000 men get through. Unfortunately Damjanich and Vetter on the Lower Maros are still giving them more than enough to do, accordingly they are leaving Transylvania to the Russians.

Page me9.26

From the Banat theatre of war, little news.†24 The Serbs boast of the following heroic deeds:

"Theresiopel has been taken by the Serbs, and on the 25th it is reported from the Sava that a skirmish has occurred at Futtak between the Syrmien provincial battalion and the Magyar garrison of Neusatz as a result of which the former town was reduced to ashes by the Magyars."

Page me9.26

The truth or otherwise of this we leave as a matter for conjecture. At the same time we hear that the great hero Nugent, whom we have assumed to have long since reached the Lower Theiss or the area of Peterwardein, has still not even crossed the Danube, but is only now "thinking of crossing" this river "near Mohacs"!!

Page me9.26

And while he is amusing himself with these thoughts the Magyars are taking the greatest liberties in his close vicinity, in the Tolna comitat, on the right bank of the Danube, at the rear of Ofen. Here, in a region which was — how many times — "cleaned up" by the royal imperial troops, the long-lost Perczel suddenly turns up as a guerilla leader and sets the whole area in motion. Just listen:

"In Battaszek an imperial officer was taken prisoner as a result of this agitation, in Paks an imperial courier was stopped and his escort of two men disarmed. In Dombovar district all cattle belonging to Prince Esterházy were slaughtered. In Laczhaza, too, just as the market was being held, 50 insurgents appeared from Duna Vecse and Solt with their lead-studded whips and seized all the cattle driven there for sale.”

Page me9.26

That was today's news. The victory of Windischgrätz reduced to a pointless and ineffectual attack, Bem's operations in Transylvania as skilful as they are successful, the Serbs in the Banat still standing on the banks of the Maros at a loss what to do, Nugent still unable to cross the Danube and move into the Banat, the area between the Drava and the Danube preparing to revolt against the imperial authorities — that is the résumé of the position of the warring parties according to the latest reports.

Written by Engels on March 8, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 241, March 9, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.27

THE 27th BULLETIN. — MILITARY REPORTS

Page me9.27

We have today a new Austrian Bulletin. Before we examine it more closely, however, we should like to return briefly to the battle at Kapolna and to mention some observations taken from the pro-Metternich Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†a which, coming from that newspaper, are altogether highly “indicative”. This paper, which usually supports so enthusiastically the black-and-yellow†b cause, comes out with the following complaints:

“As is the case with most of the army's communiqués from Hungary, in the communiqué dealing with Kapolna (see below) we unfortunately find that very important points are again missing: one learns nothing about the strength of the respective combating armies, the previous movements of the enemy, the divisions comprising the enemy's forces, the names of their leaders, not even the name of their commander-in-chief. And yet the report otherwise contains many details which are to some extent trivial.”

Page me9.27

And it goes on to say:

“It is equally remarkable that the Bulletin dealing with the battle at Kapolna also talks of the enemy's numerical superiority, although the combined forces of Windischgrätz and Schlick were involved in the fighting there. The Field Marshal can hardly have fewer than 100,000 to 120,000 men under his command in Hungary. It is true that they are widely dispersed throughout the country, and Windischgrätz has to try to encircle the enemy in a wide arc with his various army corps. But neither can the Magyars operate with their combined forces from one central point; Komorn, Peterwardein, Szegedin etc. are still holding out, and there is still fighting in the Banat, in Transylvania and on the Theiss. We have searched in vain through the Vienna, Agram and Temesvar newspapers for information on the questions which thrust themselves upon one in this context."

Page Break me9.28
Page me9.28

Such doubts expressed by the Augsburg Allgemeine martial-law paper make any further comment from us superfluous. Now to turn to the 27th Army Bulletin†a:

"On February 26 and 27 the head of the column of the advancing main army under His Highness Field Marshal Prince zu Windischgrätz attacked the rebels from behind the Tarna between Kapolna and Kaal and drove them back. The columns of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick, which had advanced towards Verpeleth and Erlau, had taken the enemy in the flank and, as a result of this successful move, threatened his line of retreat towards Miskolcz and Tokaj. On February 28 the Field Marshal advanced all along the line and on that day moved his headquarters to Maklar, just after the enemy had left it and retreated towards Mezö-Kövesd.
Page me9.28
"Quickly following the hurried retreat of the enemy the cuirassier regiment of Prince Karl of Prussia came upon the rearguard of the enemy which was concentrated near Mezö-Kövesd, a fierce cavalry battle took place, this being supported by the Wyss and Montenuovo brigades which were moving forward. In this first battle Major Prince Holstein and two officers were wounded. On March 1 the Field Marshal undertook large-scale reconnaissance along the whole line across the whole of the plain, which stretches from Mezö-Kövesd via István to the Theiss, however this did not produce the desired results because of the heavy fog and the snow.
Page me9.28
"In the meantime the corps of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick was operating on the right flank of the enemy, who was thus obliged in the course of that day to evacuate Mezö-Kövesd and retreat via Szemere and Eger Farmos towards Poroszlo. The Deym brigade, from the corps under the command of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick, occupied Mezö-Kövesd.
Page me9.28
"About midday, when the fog had lifted somewhat, the reconnoitring vanguard reported that the enemy had moved off in the direction of the Theiss and his crossing-point at Tisza-Füred. The Field Marshal at once dispatched three brigades along the enemy's line of retreat, and his rearguard was contacted at Szemere.
Page me9.28
"At Eger Farmos the enemy tried once more to offer resistance but was thrown back, and in the evening the place was occupied by our victorious troops. At the same time the Field Marshal had dispatched a brigade of the first army corps, under the command of Major-General Zeisberg, from Besenyö along the road to Poroszlo, and on the morning of March 2, the date of the last report from the headquarters at Maklar, the whole army was advancing towards the Theiss."

Page me9.28

As was to be expected, the Magyars have once more withdrawn beyond the Theiss. We have said it a hundred times: it would have been irresponsible and reckless of them if they had engaged in a decisive battle on the right bank of the Theiss without being quite sure of victory. The superior strength of the Austrians was still too great, a fact which is borne out by the above report from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. The Austrians were able to concentrate their main forces, whilst the Magyars had had to leave a strong reserve force behind, in particular a large part of their young troops at Debreczin, and generally beyond the Theiss. They have demonstrated to the Austrians that they are dealing neither with "cowards" nor with a motley "rabble", and they did well to retreat once more beyond the Theiss after having achieved their aim.

Page Break me9.29

Page me9.29

Just how much respect Herr Windischgrätz now has for the Hungarian army is clear from all his operations. On February 28 he occupies Maklar, i.e. advances by only one hour. On March 1 he has reached Mezö-Kövesd, i.e. he is yet again one mile further on. There he does not attempt anything like a general attack but merely "large-scale reconnaissance"!! We notice that after his immense victory at Kapolna Windischgrätz pursued the Magyars with such vigour that after two or three miles he had already lost trace of them and had to reconnoitre to establish where they were!

Page me9.29

Meanwhile Schlick was operating "on the right flank of the enemy" — and his great achievement, as a result of this, was that the "enemy" retreated to the very point to which he would have had to retreat without this splendid manoeuvre, namely to Tisza-Füred, his main crossing-point on the Theiss. All in all, Schlick, in his flanking movement, which incidentally looks highly peculiar on the map, has apparently treated the withdrawing Magyar army with just as much respect as Windischgrätz has at the front. In short, on March 2 the headquarters of the courageous Windischgrätz was still at Maklar, i.e. exactly one mile further on from the position held by Windischgrätz on the morning of February 26, six days before his great two-day victory!

Page me9.29

From this position, on March 2, the whole army was "advancing towards the Theiss". We know that this is the third time that the imperial troops are "advancing towards the Theiss", and presumably they will have the same success this time that they had previously, and that will mean stopping at the Theiss and having to confine themselves to casting longing glances over to the unattainable Debreczin heath.

Page me9.29

From the north we hear:

“The division of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Ramberg had already pushed its vanguard from Kaschau along the road which forks at Hidas-Nemethy, leading to Tokaj on the left and Miskolcz on the right.”

Page me9.29

In plain language: the above-mentioned division has pushed forward its vanguard exactly four miles, and this along a road where no large enemy forces are roaming about, but at most enemy guerillas, Kossuth hussars. Immense progress, achieved with remarkable bravery!

Page me9.29

The Bulletin goes on to tell of several battles before Komorn,†25 which are more evidence of the courage of the Komorn garrison than of progress on the part of the Austrians. The reader will recall that as early as January the Kölnische Zeitung had the Komorn garrison hoisting the white flag at least ten times. And the alleged “initial bombardment” of Komorn, which was said already to have taken place, is now shown to have meant that, not the Austrians were firing bombs at Komorn, but on the contrary the Komorn garrison fired shells at the Austrians. The Bulletin says:

Page Break me9.30

“At Komorn several battles occurred on the right bank of the Danube between the insurgents and the troops of the Lederer brigade — thus, as early as February 17, the garrison at Komorn made a sortie with nine companies, two guns, and half a squadron of hussars, and protected by brisk cannon-fire launched an attack from the bridgehead upon the left flank of the detachment occupying O-Szöny, under the command of Major Kellner of the Khevenhüller infantry. Major Kellner attacked the insurgents and drove them back, killing seventeen of them. — The garrison attempted a similar sortie on February 24, this time with two battalions of infantry, half a squadron of hussars and three guns. The enemy opened fire briskly on the position of Major Kellner, who was occupying O-Szöny with the second Khevenhüller battalion, half a squadron of Fiquelmont dragoons and half a battery of twelve-pounders. Forty shells hit the place causing fires in five points, as a result of which several houses were burned to the ground. Thanks to Major Kellner's expedient measures and the determination of his troops it was possible to check the fire. When, later, the offensive was begun, actively supported by a division under Captain Schmutz's command from the same regiment, which was dispatched with two cannon to the enemy's right flank, the insurgents, who lost fifty men, were driven back within the range of the garrison's cannon by the brave battalion, which thus managed to repulse this sortie as well. — Now Lieutenant-Field Marshal Simunich's division has arrived there on the left bank of the Danube. The Veigl brigade, which is part of it, is stationed on the left bank of the Waag. The Sossay brigade, which already arrived in N. Tany several days ago, is occupying the island of Schütt, and at Gönyö they are busy trying to construct a pontoon bridge in order to link up the two banks of the Danube for the besieging troops. As the battering train from Leopoldstadt has arrived at Komorn the bombardment of the fortress will begin within the next few days.”

Page me9.30

Finally we learn the following, something which, printed in a royal imperial Army Bulletin, must astonish us:

"According to official reports from Cracow, which are dated March 3, 600 Cossacks are occupying the Russian border on their own territory from Michalovice to the Weichsel and from there to the Pilica. Cracow, which according to other reports was said to have been bombarded and even occupied by the Russians, was quiet, although numerous emissaries and gun-runners were bent on disturbing the peace. Lieutenant-Field Marshal Legeditsch there was perfectly prepared for any eventuality."

Page me9.30

So Cracow is now also part of the theatre of war. When the official royal imperial bulletins start declaring this themselves, one is obliged to draw strange conclusions!

Page me9.30

So much for the official news. From the unofficial sources we report the following:

Page Break me9.31

Page me9.31

The Karlowitz Napredak reports from the Banat:

"Subotica (Theresiopel) has been taken by the Serbs. The battle was fierce. The troops consisted of detachments from Todorovich's forces and a section of the Serbian auxiliary corps under the command of Knicanin. The Serbs lost 144 men, the number of Magyar dead is not yet known. The Magyars have suffered their most significant defeat here."†a

Page me9.31

From Transylvania only one report from Malkowsky has come in, telling of the curious operations at Bistritz. As we have already examined this†b we do not need to touch on it again today. The only thing of interest to us is the following naive aphorism, which appeared in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, referring to the Germans' surprise at the arrival of the Russians:

"The Austrian army wishes, of course, to wage this battle without outside aid, but the Austrian and Russian armies are old comrades in war and have fought side by side countless times on German battlefields. This is something those people apparently wish to forget who talk in such exaggerated terms of Russian support"!!?†c

Page me9.31

Finally, for the amusement of our readers, we include the letter written by the Vladika†d of Montenegro to the Serbian leader Knicanin, to accompany the decoration sent to him:

"To the illustrious Mr. Stephan Knicanin,

Page me9.31

“Oh pride of our nation! You have totally justified the reputation of the heroes of Dushan and Karageorge. I, and every true Serb, owe you the deepest gratitude. Your noble spirit prompted you to sacrifice yourself for your nation and to hasten to the aid of your suffering comrades. For these reasons I shall always love you and hold you in great esteem, and in deepest gratitude for your untiring efforts I am sending you this likeness of the immortal Obilich. It will most fittingly adorn the breast of the victor of Tomasevec and the deliverer of Pancsova. Receive it then, heroic young scion of heroic forefathers, receive it with the same sincerity and delight with which, accompanied by fraternal greetings, it is sent.
Page me9.31
Cetinje, January 28 (February 9), 1849
Vladika of Montenegro, P. Petrovic Njegoš, m.p.”†e

Page me9.31
Moreover, just how close to the verge of bankruptcy Kossuth has brought the Austrians is evident from the following “proclamation”:

“Since the news that Hungarian banknotes in Austria were to be withdrawn from circulation and confiscated has reached wide sections of the public, we wish to reassure the public and to announce that withdrawal or confiscation of Hungarian banknotes does not apply to private transactions in Hungary. Ofen, March 2, 1849. Royal imperial army general headquarters.”†a

Page Break me9.32
Page me9.32
To sum up: At most Windischgrätz will reach the Theiss, the Serbs are at the Maros, Malkowsky is outside Bistritz. — All of them are just as far as they were four weeks ago. This is the “second stage” that, according to yesterday's Kölnische Zeitung,†b the Hungarian war has entered.

Written by Engels about March 9, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 242, March 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.33

RUGE

Page me9.33

Cologne, March 9. The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung contains the following statement of its old contributor Arnold Ruge, the Pomeranian personality and Saxon thinker.

“Berlin, March 5. The present members of the Central Committee of German Democrats,†26 d'Ester, Reichenbach and Hexamer, announce a new democratic newspaper entitled Allgemeine demokratische Zeitung,†a which will be 'in reality' an organ of the party in Berlin. This announcement could arouse the suspicion that the newspapers Reform and Zeitungs-Halle are not really organs of the party, and in the introduction to the announcement it is even fairly clearly indicated that both of them have been suppressed. The passage where the Central Committee proclaims and accepts the suspension by Wrangel as being definitive suppression, reads word for word as follows: 'The severe trials which the Democratic Party in recent months has had to endure in all parts of Germany have convinced it both of the necessity for a strong organisation, and of the need for it to be represented in the press by definite organs belonging to the party. Through their sabre regime the rulers have succeeded in many places' (the 'sabre regime' however exists only in Berlin!) 'in suppressing democratic organs of the press, because the individuals concerned were unable to make such great sacrifices as would render these violent measures ineffective.' Because of the sabre regime, everyone thinks only of Berlin when he reads of the 'many places'. Even democracy as a whole could have made these measures 'ineffective' only by abolishing the sabre, for Wrangel made both Berlin and the Berlin postal service inaccessible to the democratic organs of the press. Let the Central Committee name the means, or the 'sacrifices', by which in our situation it would have been able to make this violence ineffective. Even in Wrangel's opinion, however, the Reform and the Zeitungs-Halle have not been 'suppressed'. However, according to my experience, democrats who have received the circular of the Central Committee, understand it to mean that the Reform and the Zeitungs-Halle would cease to appear and would be replaced by the Allgemeine demokratische Zeitung. I feel compelled to clear up this misunderstanding. The 'Reform' has not been definitively closed down and, as soon as the state of siege in Berlin has been lifted, it will continue to be published in Berlin, and indeed as a real organ of the Democratic Party, one which by virtue of the definite decisions of the Lefts of the dissolved National Assembly†27 and of the former Central Committee of German Democrats no less 'belongs' to the party than the new newspaper imposed from above by two members of the present Central Committee (d'Ester and Hexamer).

Page Break me9.34

The Editorial Board of the Reform
Arnold Ruge”
Page me9.34
Author's postscript: “I request all the highly respected editorial boards of German newspapers to publish this our statement†a in their columns.”

Page me9.34

To our great satisfaction, we learn from this memorable statement that the ci-devant Frankfurt “editor of the rationale of events”†28 and at present book publisher — undoubtedly “as such” — declares that he is by no means satisfied with the imposition of a new democratic newspaper “in Berlin”, a newspaper which is supposed to be “in reality” an organ of the “party in Berlin”.
Page me9.34

Herr Arnold Ruge, Frankfurt “editor of the rationale of events” and Berlin editor of the Reform, maintains “as such” that it was also the organ of the “party in Berlin”; by a decision of the “former” Central Committee of Democrats, the Reform had been (elle avait été, as the French say) “an organ belonging to the party”. True, the “former” Central Committee no longer exists “in reality”. Nevertheless the newly arising Reform can still be a “real” organ of the defunct Central Committee and of the superseded Left of the “dissolved” National Assembly.
Page me9.34

Herr Arnold Ruge may certainly attack the newly imposed Berlin Allgemeine demokratische Zeitung, a rival in the publishing sphere; outside Berlin there will undoubtedly be fewer competitors for the honorary title of an organ of the “party in Berlin”. We were at least never under any misapprehension regarding the Reform as the “real” organ of the “party in Berlin”; we are capable also of fully appreciating patriot Ruge's conquest over himself in connection with the above-mentioned “sacrifices”. But in any case, it remains a most curious contradiction. The worthy printshop proprietor Ruge takes his stand on the basis of legality in order to maintain that his own newspaper, the Reform, is the “real” (patently sans garantie du gouvernement†b) organ of the party. On the other hand, the philosopher Ruge takes his stand on the basis of revolt against the “real” democratic Central Committee in order “really” to be able to make further “sacrifices” in his sense of the word (that of a publisher).
Page me9.34

A fact that might help to solve this contradiction is given below:

Page Break me9.35
Page me9.35

The democratic Central Committee told Ruge that it was prepared to appoint the Reform as its Moniteur†a on condition that Ruge would refrain from all argumentation and writing.

Written on March 9, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 242, March 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.36

THE MARCH ASSOCIATION

Page me9.36

Cologne, March 10. The Frankfurt so-called “March Association”†29 of the Frankfurt so-called “Imperial Assembly”†30 has had the insolence to send us the following lithographed letter:

“The March Association has decided to compile a list of all newspapers which have given us space in their columns and to distribute it to all associations with which we are connected in order that with the assistance of these associations the newspapers indicated will be given preference in being supplied with any relevant announcements.

Page me9.36

“In informing you herewith of this list, we believe it is unnecessary to draw your attention to the importance of the paid 'announcements' of a newspaper as a source of income for the whole enterprise.

Page me9.36

“Further, the Central March Association has decided to recommend the associations to favour with their support the Teutsches Volksblatt, a democratic-constitutional newspaper appearing in Würzburg, edited by Dr. Eisenmann, in view of the fact that this newspaper is under the threat of succumbing to the competition of anti-democratic newspapers, and the editor has stated that he is not in a position to make further sacrifices over and above those he has already made.

Frankfurt, end of February 1849.

The Managing Committee of the Central March Association”

Page me9.36

In the enclosed list of newspapers which “have given space in their columns to the March Association” and to which the supporters of the “March Association” should give preference in supplying “relevant announcements”, one finds also the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, which, in addition, is given the honour of an asterisk.

Page me9.36

We hereby announce to all the left-handed and the extreme left-handed members†31 of this so-called “March Association” of the ci-devant “Imperial Assembly” that the Neue Rheinische Zeitung has never consented to become the organ of a parliamentary party, least of all of a party of the comical Frankfurt imperial club, that our newspaper has never given space in its columns to the so-called

Page Break me9.37

“March Association” of this club, and that in general the Neue Rheinische Zeitung has no knowledge of any “March Association”. If, therefore, the “March Association” in its lithographed report to those newspapers which have really given it space in their columns designates our newspaper as one of its organs, this is simply calumny against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and absurd boasting on the part of the “March Association”. No doubt the patriotic upright men of the “March Association” will know how to reconcile this with their “conscience”.

Page me9.37

The reference of the “March Association” to our newspaper becomes still more ill-mannered owing to the “decision” of the Association to recommend the “democratic-constitutional” newspaper (the Germanic periodical: Teutsches Volksblatt) of “Dr. Eisenmann”. Who would not be touched by the sad fate of the great “Germanic” primeval martyr Eisenmann? What upright man will not feel it as a blow that “Dr.” Eisenmann, who sold his prison reminiscences to the “democratic-constitutional” King of Bavaria†a for 12,000 guldens, cannot make “further sacrifices” and is under the threat of succumbing to the publishing “competition” of the ordinary newspapers that are not imposed and that are against the “March Association”? We leave it to the patriots to calculate into what deep neglect the Teutsches Volksblatt must have fallen if Eisenmann, the martyr with 12,000 guldens and deputy with a 5-taler salary, has to appeal for public “support”. In any case, things must have gone badly, very badly, with the “democratic-constitutional” Eisenmanns if they produce a fictitious begging letter from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, the only newspaper in Germany which has always attacked the “shameless, mean beggars” from among the patriots and imperial-beggarly assemblies.
Page me9.37

To the dirty remark of the profit-greedy competition-goaded patriots about “the importance of the paid announcements of a newspaper as a source of income for the whole enterprise”, we, of course, do not reply. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung has always differed from the patriots not only generally but also in that it has never regarded political movements as a territory for swindlers or a source of income.

Written by Marx on March 10, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 243, March 11, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.38

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.38

There is no news at all from the theatre of war today. The only interesting item concerning the most recent Austrian war operations is another article today in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, the martial-law paper, which proves above all how low our contemporary journalists have sunk. The Kölnische Zeitung is full of enthusiasm for Windischgrätz and goes no further than expressing regret that he is a poor writer of German — as if his intentionally inept style were not ten times more adept than the language of the most profoundly conceived leading articles of the Kölnische Zeitung! If Windischgrätz is “confused” and “obscure” in his reports that is only because he has intentionally made them confused and obscure, whether it be to conceal defeats or to make insignificant “advantages”, which the Magyars granted him of their own accord, appear to be outstanding victories. But the Kölnische Zeitung is not so stupid as it looks.

It finds Windischgrätz's reports contradictory or obscure and confused. And what does it conclude from that? Not that Windischgrätz is a bad commander-in-chief but rather a bad — stylist!

Page me9.38

Whether the Kölnische Zeitung is in the pay of Austria we do not know. But we do know that the Augsburger Zeitung is in Austria's pay. And yet the Augsburger Zeitung is a thousand times more honest than the Kölnische Zeitung.

Page me9.38

Compare, for instance, yesterday's article in that steadfast newspaper†a with the following lines taken from the Augsburg paper, whose lack of principles is well known:

Page Break me9.39

"The complications in the Hungarian revolutionary war are unfortunately continuously growing. Until a few days ago, when he moved his headquarters to Gyöngyös, Field Marshal Prince Windischgrätz remained on the defensive with the main body of the army, whilst the rebels were able to throw all their forces against the weakest points of our line, harass our detached units and often expose them to considerable danger. Whilst the rest of the army stands still, the Serbs, instead of operating concentrically with it, are conquering the Voivodina for themselves and somewhat more besides. Exposed to the bold operations of Bem in the strategically completely neglected Transylvania, Puchner has in his final moment of extreme need to seek Russian help in order to protect the Saxon towns, which alone in Transylvania have remained loyal to the Emperor, and all the victories of the ageing warrior, all the valour of his troops will not suffice to expel the rebel chief, who hour by hour can call upon the spare units of insurgents in Hungary as reinforcements, from the borderlands of that unfortunate country."†a

Page me9.39

The extent to which the Magyar reports boil down to nothing more than "ridiculous exaggerations" is shown by the following fact. The Magyars announced that they had captured Erbach, the Austrians prudently kept quiet about the matter. Now the Deutsche Zeitung in Frankfurt writes on March 6:

"Count Erbach, who, accompanied by only one dragoon, had been sent by General Schlick to Field Marshal Windischgrätz, was attacked by a unit of Magyar insurgents and taken prisoner. He was taken off to Debreczin and has written several letters here from there. He has been treated very well, numerous old comrades received him warmly, and his letters are apt to give us a more favourable idea of the Magyars' activity than one usually deduces from indirect reports."†b

Page me9.39

The remaining news from Hungary is summarised in the following report from Vienna, which the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung publishes:

"The leaders of the Jewish community in Pest had gone to the camp of the Field Marshal to complain that payment of the arrears of the toleration tax†32 amounting to 110,000 florins had been demanded in cash in twenty-florin coins, and that all Hungarian Jewish communities had been made collectively responsible for treasonable crimes of individuals. The Prince dismissed the complaints in very ungracious terms, and particularly strong words are said to have fallen about delegates Fischhof and Goldmark. — The army, which has been brought up to a strength of 700,000 men and has been put on a war footing, costs so much that one could easily be accused of exaggerating when working out the figure; but it certainly costs far more than can be afforded on the basis of the resources of the country without resorting to extraordinary efforts. And only the peasants, who have been released from the personal obligations and land taxes, appear to be in a healthy state, all other classes without exception being sick and infirm. Having new taxes imposed on him would make an illusion of the letters patent of September 7, 1848†33 as far as the peasant is concerned, consequently for the time being the only expedients left are loans and, according to the signs so far, to an even greater extent paper money. The big bankers are constantly buying gold and silver, in the former particular preference being given to ring ducats and gold sovereigns. The Hungarian banknote crisis has by no means rendered this paper worthless, on the contrary, transactions are said to have been completed in Vienna and Pressburg yesterday in 5-florin and 100-florin notes at 86 and 90. That is why an announcement in Pest (see below) had a soothing effect and revived trading in agricultural products, which was transacted almost exclusively in Hungarian banknotes; since no check has, as yet, been carried through on the banknotes already issued this leaves, so to speak, a loophole open for Kossuth's banknote production. This much seems certain: there must be sound reasons for Prince Windischgrätz to show such forbearance and restraint in Hungary in contrast to the procedure adopted in the Austrian provinces."†a

Page Break me9.40

Page me9.40
Incidentally, it is now even more widely acknowledged than ever that the noble Windischgrätz is hand in glove with the Magyar aristocrats such as the Josikas, the Széchenyis, the Esterházys. These are the "sound reasons" that he has. And just a fortnight ago the Kölnische Zeitung was looking for the "higher nobility" in the Debreczin camp. Voilá ce qui s'appelle des savants sérieux!†b
Page me9.40
From the new royal imperial model state, which goes under the name of Serbska Voivodina, we hear the following news:

"Semlin, February 24. At a general meeting held at Temesvar on the 15th of this month the internal administration of the Serbian Voivodina was organised in the following way: administrator and president of the Voivodina: Patriarch Josef Rajachich; vice-presidents: Joseph Rudics, Basil Fogarassy and Stretko Michailovich; heads of sections: 1. matters concerning the church: S. Kacanski, abbot, with four advisers; 2. ecclesiastical affairs and education: Eugen Gjurkovich with four advisers; 3. diplomatic affairs: Jacob Zivanovich with four advisers; 4. political questions: Marcus Popovich with five advisers; 5. economic and financial matters: Johann Šuplikac with five advisers; 6. administration of the law: Thodor Radosavljevic with three advisers. — National secretary and director of the administrative office Johann Stankovich; secretary of the Voivodina Alex Stojackovic. — Supreme Court: chairman Carl Latinovich; vice-president Joseph Mathich with twelve members. Economic and financial department: chairman Georg Warsan; Joseph Iovanovich, treasurer; Franz, vice-controller; Kolarovich, keeper of accounts with four advisers. First national commissioner Michael†c Krestic. Agents Kosta Iovanovich, Svetozazhulitich.

Page me9.40
“From this impartial election one can see that the Serbian deputies, worthy representatives of their constituents, having eliminated every trace of national hatred and religious differences — for Rudics, Fogarassy, Stein, Stminger and Wachtler are not Serbs and are adherents of the Catholic faith — bore strictly in mind only the elected people's qualifications to hold the offices entrusted to them, and that they are intent on establishing equality of status of every nationality in the Voivodina. In addition to the heads of the sections mentioned, the deputies of every Serb community have also been summoned to Kikinda, where 'sub Praesidio Patriarchae'†d they are laying the foundation of the constitution of the Serbian Voivodina and outlining its basic rights, and they will present this for approval to the Austrian Government” (Lloyd).†a

Page Break me9.41
Page me9.41
“Agram. To our great astonishment we have read a report from Constantinople in a Belgrade newspaper published in Serbian†b according to which the Austrian internuncio,†c Count Stürmer, had a conference with the Porte Minister for External Affairs†d on February 7 and asked him: 'What position does the Porte intend to adopt should the Austrian Slavs rise in revolt against the imperial Government?' The answer was that the Porte would remain neutral. However the question raises much more far-reaching considerations in our minds than the answer does. Is it possible that the masses of Russian troops in the Danube principalities are also connected with a similar question of the royal imperial Government?”†e

Written by Engels on March 10, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 243. March 11, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.42

THE MODEL REPUBLIC†34

Page me9.42

Berne, March 10. Just as Belgium is hailed by the constitutional bourgeoisie and ideologists as the "model state"†a so is Switzerland the ideal of the republican bourgeoisie and ideologists. Switzerland is not ruled by a king, there is no nobility, taxes are moderate, the country enjoys a state of profound peace; — the only things that people find to grumble about are matters that have been disposed of, such as Jesuits and separatist [Sonderbund†35] activities. Why, only recently a radical newspaper, the Neue Deutsche, was envying Switzerland its peace and contentment. It grieves us to have to destroy this idyllic view of the happiness and well-being of the Swiss people, and to have to point out ugly blemishes "in that most faithful mirror, which reflects freedom". Let us first of all review a few public meetings. On March 5 at Schönbühl in the canton of Berne a so-called communist meeting took place, which was very well attended by workers. The subjects under discussion were the poor-law administration and the emigration question. The descriptions given by the speakers of the conditions of the working people in Switzerland demonstrated the need for speedy and drastic remedies; however, the way in which this was discussed betrayed a great degree of helplessness and showed that, despite all the republican institutions, the proletariat still has very little understanding of its own position and the means of achieving its own salvation.

Page Break me9.43
The conservatives succeeded in exploiting the social movement for their own ends. The most vehement attacks were directed against the radical Government of Berne and in particular against those in charge of finance, and the defenders of the existing Government were only partially successful in justifying it. A revision of the Constitution†36 was decided upon as a remedy, but several speakers declared that they would follow a legal course only temporarily and tentatively. As a revision of the Constitution is the means by which the conservatives and in particular the patricians of Berne are seeking to oust the present Government, their plan to rouse the proletariat against the Government has for the time being been successful. This truly Jesuit tendency was even more evident at the meeting of the central committee of the Society for Emigration of the Berne canton, which was recently held at the Klösterli at Berne. Delegates from 25 superior bailiwicks, approximately 1,000 people, met to discuss every possible way of solving the emigration problem to the advantage of many thousands of unemployed and hungry citizens. As the Great Council,†a on hearing the report of the government official Schneider, had not pursued the matter with the necessary energy and dedication, here too a revision of the Constitution was proposed without taking into consideration the fact that any attempt to oust the present radical Government would simply make possible the return of the people supporting the old system.
Page me9.43
For this purpose a petition is to be circulated in all bailiwicks, and as soon as the 8,000 signatures required under the Constitution have been obtained, the necessary steps will be taken for resolving this problem. As the emigration question is being argued out and discussed everywhere because of the daily increase in unemployment and the growing scarcity of food, particularly in the Bernese Alps, it is not unlikely that the required number of signatures will be obtained, and that means that the present government will then have a big obstacle placed in its way.
Page me9.43

In St. Gallen too the working-class movement is making progress.

"Whilst," according to the Wächter, "the Arbeiter undertakes theoretical experiments in social communism, they have started to put it into practice in the Gasterland under the presidency of Hofstitter; they intend to reduce the rate of interest to 2 per cent etc."

Page me9.43

In fact where the radicals are now in power, they ought to take care not to repulse the workers through their indifference. The

Page Break me9.44

Swiss proletariat is still largely what one describes as lumpenproletariat, prepared to sell themselves to anyone who will make extravagant promises. The clergy and the aristocrats do not of course remind the starving people of the times when the peasant was forced to pay tithes to the parish and the lord of the manor; they only ask, what is the present government doing for you? And the most loyal supporters of the Government are unable to reply. If the proletariat in Switzerland were strong enough and sufficiently advanced to form an independent party then opposition to the present radicalism would certainly be justified; under the present circumstances, however, every stand that is taken against the radical politicians amounts to a concession towards the conservatives.

Page me9.44

The radicals should be generally much more go-ahead and active. It is not enough to attack reactionary personalities and to make indiscreet jokes about religion; the party whose main concern is foreign policy [Auslandspartei] should oppose the neutralist politicians with the same energy that Herr Ochsenbein and company displayed towards the Jesuits and separatists. It is more dangerous to delay at this stage than it was before. The question of the re-enlistment treaties,†37 which is being resolved by nine-tenths of the Swiss people in opposition to the cowardly and doctrinaire interpretation of the Federal Council, provides the radicals with a weapon capable of quickly putting an end to the present wretched state of things. The report from the political department (Furrer), which was presented to the Swiss Federal Council†a and dealt with the subject of the re-enlistments, and which is being hailed by most newspapers, especially the Neue Zürcher Zeitung, as the ne plus ultra†b of political wisdom, allows us an insight into the small shopkeeper mentality that pervades the Federal Council, which lets a few pennies and the principles of civil law guide it in its foreign policy making:

"Where," asks Furrer, "are we to get the money to pay compensation? It is absolutely impossible for us to pay anything like a substantial portion of this sum from the Federal Treasury. — — — This sum would therefore have to be provided by the cantons. However, if one considers the circumstances calmly and dispassionately and refuses to allow oneself to be carried away by blind enthusiasm, then one will see that getting this money together is also an impossibility, especially as far as the future is concerned, even if one grants that the present can exert such an inspiring influence."

Page me9.44

And elsewhere:

“A large nation which cannot even muster a few regiments will hardly be capable of maintaining independence and political freedom for any length of time.”

Page Break me9.45
Page me9.45

The Italian republics will no doubt one day express their thanks in the appropriate manner to the neighbouring Swiss republic for this official declaration on the part of its highest-ranking functionary. The Neue Zürcher Zeitung, the semi-official organ of the Federal President, had declared that the decision that the ending of the existing re-enlistment treaties is a matter coming under the jurisdiction of the cantons, was taken unanimously by the Federal Council. That is incorrect. The Italian Franscini was not present and the man of “permanent revolution”, Druey, had intended to make proposals to the Federal Assembly according to which “the re-enlistment treaties should be abolished when the position in Italy and Switzerland demanded it”. He moved, moreover, that enlistment in the Neapolitan regiments be stopped until the matter had been resolved, and that is the main point.

Page me9.45

Herr Ochsenbein, the Napoleon of the separatist wars, seeks to introduce not only the Prussian Lohbauer†38 but also the Prussian uniform. However, this laudable intention is being frustrated thanks to the question of cost.

Page me9.45

The offer made by some Frenchmen to set up a casino in Switzerland caused great moral indignation among the virtuous republicans. The casino tenants in Germany must have been frightened by the decision of the venerable National Assembly in Frankfurt, otherwise they would not place the gentlemen governing the separatist cantons in the difficult position of having to choose between great financial advantage and traditional morality. The Great Council at Lucerne has also turned down by 79 votes to 67 a proposal to that effect made by a Herr Bias; the section of the people's association there has also sent a petition to the Federal authorities expressing the same sentiments; consequently the entrepreneurs addressed their requests to Schwyz (Stand) and St. Gallen (Rapperswyl), without seeing their wishes fulfilled however. Those gentlemen will now no doubt have to put up with the energy of the tenant of the casino at Homburg, who stated that his casino would endure longer than all Frankfurt parliaments.

Page me9.45

The Great Council,†a which resumed sitting a few days ago, and which still allows itself to be presided over by Herr von Tillier, despite the fact that he is suspected of high treason, is discussing, article by article, the employment regulations, from which we can find nothing to remark on here except the stipulation that political refugees may follow any occupation without further proof of reciprocity. Moreover, the Department of the Interior has proposed that a sum of 8,000 frs. be earmarked for science, the arts etc.

Page Break me9.46

Written by Engels on March 10, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 246, March 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.47

VIENNA AND FRANKFURT

Page me9.47

Cologne, March 12. It was on the 15th of this month that the Imperial Diet in Kremsier intended to begin its consideration of the draft Constitution completed by the commission. The royal imperial brutes of summary jurisdiction then considered that the moment had come to thrust on the Imperial Diet the Constitution “by the grace of God”, which had been lying ready for a long time, and to put an end to the whole Kremsier comedy of popular representation that had until then been tolerated.†39

Page me9.47

The whole imposition manoeuvre had already been worked out in the summer of last year between the anointed and unanointed counter-revolutionaries in Schönbrunn-Vienna, Potsdam-Berlin, London (where Metternich, as the master-spider of the Holy Alliance, sits at the centre of the web slowly spun around the peoples rising in revolt for their freedom), and Paris. That it was first of all put into operation by the Potsdam King†a was due solely to the situation in Prussia which allowed such a step to be taken earlier than in Austria.†40

Page me9.47

In November, official Austria hurled the blood-stained head of Robert Blum at the feet of the deputies in St. Paul's Church.†b A few days before this, the fine twin-pair of Imperial Commissioners, Welcker-Mosle, had returned from Windischgrätz's antechamber and from gourmandising in Olmütz covered with such disgrace that anyone else but the worthy Welcker-Mosle would have put a bullet through his brain rather than have dared to look anyone on earth in the face. Instead of that, this diplomatic twin-pair even bragged about their roundabout travels.†41

Page Break me9.48

Page me9.48

The majority of the National Assembly was “satisfait” just as the French Chamber under Louis Philippe declared itself “satisfait” even when faced with the vilest actions and the most striking proofs of corruption.

Page me9.48

The blood of the murdered Robert Blum has indeed stained the faces of the deputies in St. Paul's Church. Their cheeks certainly reddened, not however because of shame or fury and an outburst of deepest indignation, but with the colour of pleasure and satisfaction. It is true, fresh Imperial Commissioners were sent to Austria. But the only result they achieved was to redouble the contempt with which the Austrian side had already treated the so-called National Assembly representatives and the Germany they had betrayed.

Page me9.48
"Mocht nix, 's is olles Aans!"†a — this was and is the motto of these gentlemen.
Page me9.48
It will be recalled that shortly before the arbitrary acts of the Prussian Government Bassermann, Simson and, of course, the "noble" Herr Gagern etc. were in Berlin as Imperial Commissioners.†42
Page me9.48
And once again there are Imperial Commissioners in Austria, in Olmütz, while there, just as in Berlin, the Imperial Diet is being dispersed and a Constitution "by the grace of God" imposed on the people by means of Croats, Serezhans, Huzuls†43 etc.
Page me9.48
Wherever freedom of the people is to be destroyed, Commissioners of the so-called Central Authority make their appearance like expectant vultures. Their sense of smell has always proved correct.
Page me9.48
Now at last the Frankfurt frog-pond should realise that its turn will soon come. It itself will be punished for all its sins. On the monument to be erected at the site of its wretched activity the wayfarer will read: "Perished through its own fault, through cowardice, professorial stupidity and chronic meanness, amid in part the revengeful derision, and in part the complete indifference of the people."
Page me9.48
Yet even now some of these miserable wretches dare to boast of the "fundamental rights" emanating from the Frankfurt factory†44 and are proud of them as though they were a great achievement. With the garrulity of washerwomen, they chattered about "fundamental rights" like scholastics in the Middle Ages, while the "fundamental power" of the Holy Alliance and its accomplices became ever more strongly organised and scoffed louder and louder at the chatter of the professors and philistines about fundamental rights. The former affixed their "fundamental rights" to a scrap of paper, whereas the latter, the men of the counter-revolution, inscribed their "fundamental power" on keenly sharpened swords, guns and Slav red-coats.†45

Page Break me9.49
Page me9.49
As soon as the German people in any part of the Germanic fatherlands made use or seemed to want to make use of their original fundamental right, that of revolt against feudal or philistine-constitutional tyranny, Frankfurt with the utmost haste sent "imperial troops" in order to punish the people and make them submissive by billeting troops, by plunder, massacres and military excesses of all kinds, and in order to maintain the tools of the counter-revolution in good condition, that is to say, to fatten them well at the expense of the people and its "fundamental rights" and to fortify them for further heroic deeds.

Page me9.49

In such cases the Frankfurt gentlemen always had the necessary power, since they borrowed it from the ranks of the above-mentioned “fundamental power” of our gracious sovereigns.

Page me9.49

Consequently, it is not surprising that the Frankfurt frog-pond has to maintain an impotent silence and look on helplessly whenever the anointed gentlemen proclaim their “fundamental rights”, even if the fundamental rights of the gentlemen “by the grace of God” are aimed directly against it.

Page me9.49

Hence also it will and must calmly witness that the Austrian Tamerlane†a has now dictated 13 fundamental rights to his beloved “subjects” among whom is a considerable number of Germans by the grace of God and Sophia, and simultaneously with this coup he has once again dealt a rough slap in the face to the Frankfurt heroes. And that according to law and justice!

Written on March 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 244, March 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.50

[THREE NEW BILLS]

Page me9.50

Cologne, March 12. The Prussian monarchical power considers the time has come at last to unfold its full glory. The “unweakened” Crown, by the grace of God,†46 has today imposed on us three new Bills — on associations and meetings, on posters, and on the press — in which the Chambers are invited to burden us with a compact phalanx of the most delightful September-type laws.†47

Page me9.50

Tomorrow we shall publish the texts of these Bills with their preambles insofar as they have reached us. We shall return — more than once — to these magnificent Prussian products.†a Today we give only a brief summary of them!

Page me9.50

I. The law on associations.

“All meetings must be notified 24 hours in advance.”

Page me9.50

Thus, hastily convened meetings in response to suddenly occurring important events are banned, and it is just such meetings that are most important of all. Everyone must be allowed access, consequently it is forbidden to charge an entrance fee to cover the costs of the meeting. At meetings of associations a quarter of the space must be left for non-members of the association, so that the associations will be compelled to obtain larger and more expensive premises and so that paid agents of the police will be able to disrupt all discussion by noise, uproar and rowdy behaviour, and make every meeting impossible. And if all this should not yield the desired result, it is left open to "representatives of the police department" on any pretext to "immediately dissolve" any meeting in the same way as the supreme head of the "police department", His Majesty our most gracious king, "immediately dissolved" the Agreement Assembly.†48 As soon as the police declare a meeting dissolved, all those present must leave at once unless they wish to share the fate of the Berlin paladins of agreement, i.e. if they do not want to be driven from the hall by bayonets.

Page Break me9.51
Page me9.51
True, the associations do not have to obtain any "preliminary permission", but instead they have to comply with such a mass of preliminary announcements and formalities for the local authorities that for that reason alone their activity becomes almost impossible. Public out-door meetings, processions etc., etc., on the other hand, definitely require preliminary police permission. Finally, in order to put an end to the wearing of red ribbons, rosettes and caps, the law further revives the old regulations for persecuting persons wearing black-red-and-gold†a badges.
Page me9.51
Such is the "right of association and assembly" that a year ago the truth-loving Hohenzollern, who keeps his word, guaranteed us with trembling lips!
Page me9.51
II. The law on posters. All posters of a political nature, except for invitations to attend legal, permitted meetings (thus once again all meetings are only most graciously "permitted") are forbidden. Consequently, in troubled times the executive committees of the associations are not even allowed by posters to request the people to keep calm, in order that not a single victim will escape the heroic soldiery! Further: the sale or free distribution of printed matter in public places is also forbidden, unless one has a special licence, which can be withdrawn at any moment! In other words: the Prussian monarchical power wishes to present us with an improved edition of the law on crieurs publics, which in the worst times of Louis Philippe's bourgeois despotism was wrung from the terrified Chamber of Deputies in France.†49
Page me9.51
And what is the motive given for this law? It is that posters and newspaper-sellers obstruct street traffic, and that posters spoil the appearance of many public buildings!
Page me9.51
III. The law on the press. But all that is nothing compared with the charming proposals by which it is intended to gag the press. It is known that in general since 1830 the benefaction of the Hohenzollern to the people consisted merely in ennobling the Prussian fatherly patriarchalism by combining it with the modern artful enslavement after the manner of Louis Philippe. Flogging has been retained and penal servitude added to it; censorship has continued and at the same time the full flower of the September legislation has been bestowed on us. In a word, we have simultaneously been given the benefit of all the advantages of feudal servitude, bureaucratic police administration and modern bourgeois legal brutality. And this is what is called "the world-famous liberalism of Frederick William IV".

Page Break me9.52
Page me9.52
The new Hohenzollern press Bill, after a long series of complicated formal definitions, favours us with a matchless fusion of: 1. the Code Napoléon, 2. the French September laws, 3. and chiefly the laudable Prussian Law.†50
Page me9.52
Para. 9 is borrowed from the Code [Napoléon]: In those provinces where the Prussian Law is in force an attempt, an incitement to commit a crime, even if successful, was hitherto less severely punished than the crime itself. In these areas a provision of the Code [Napoléon] is now introduced by which incitement to commit a crime, when successful, is regarded as equivalent to the crime itself.
Page me9.52
Para. 10. The French September legislation states: Anyone who attacks property and the family, the foundations on which civil society is based, or incites citizens to hatred or contempt for one another, is liable to be punished by imprisonment for up to two years.
Page me9.52
Compare the loi du 9 Sept. 1835, Article 8:

"Toute attaque contre la propriété ... toute provocation á la haine entre les diverses classes de la société sera punie" etc.†a

Page me9.52
The only difference is that the Prussian version: to incite citizens in general to hatred etc. for one another is much more ludicrous.
Page me9.52
All the subsequent paragraphs of the Bill have been drawn up solely in order once more to confer on the Rhine Province the same magnificent features of the Prussian Law which we had enjoyed to the full for 33 years and of which we were deprived shortly after March 18.†51 Among other things, the following new crimes, totally unknown to our own Rhenish legislation, are to be thrust on us.
Page me9.52
1. The arousing of hatred and contempt towards institutions of the state or its government by means of actual falsehoods or of facts that cannot be legally proven.
Page me9.52
2. "Utterances" about a legally existing religious society (under the imposed Constitution†52 even Turks and pagans are legally existing religious societies!), which are calculated (!) to spread hatred and contempt for it.

Page Break me9.53
Page me9.53
These two new crimes introduce among us a) the old-Prussian “arousing of discontent” and b) the old-Prussian concept of insulting religion, and are punished by imprisonment for up to two years.
Page me9.53
3. Lése-majesté and, in particular, want of reverence (!!) for
Page me9.53
a) the king (!)
Page me9.53
b) the queen (!!)
Page me9.53
c) the heir to the throne (!!!)
Page me9.53
d) any other member of the royal house (!!!!)
Page me9.53
e) the supreme head of a German state (!!!!!), is punished by imprisonment of from one month to five years!
Page me9.53
4. The edifying provision that the assertion even of facts that can be proved to be true is to be punished as insult if it demonstrates the intention to insult!
Page me9.53
5. Insult
Page me9.53
1) to either of the Chambers,
Page me9.53
2) to one of their members,
Page me9.53
3) to a state authority (the Code does not recognise any insult to corporations as such),
Page me9.53
4) to an official or member of the armed forces. All this is “in connection with their official function” and is punished by imprisonment of up to 9 months.
Page me9.53
6. Insult or calumny in private life. The Code Napoléon recognises only publicly uttered or disseminated insults or calumnies. The new Bill, on the other hand, intends to subject to the control of the police and Public Prosecutor's office and/or make punishable all utterances made in private conversation, in the home, in the bosom of the family, in private letters, i.e. it intends to organise the vilest, most universal espionage. The military despotism of the all-powerful French empire respected at least the freedom of private conversation; it remained — at any rate in its legislation — outside the threshold of the private dwelling. Prussian paternal constitutional supervision and punishment reaches into the inmost sanctum of the private dwelling, into the most secret refuge of family life, which even the barbarians regarded as inviolable. Yet the same law, three Articles earlier, punishes all attacks against the family by two years' imprisonment!

Page me9.53

Such are the new “achievements” which it is intended to bestow on us. Three of the cruellest laws mutually supplementing one another in order to attain the acme of cruelty and perfidy which is quite unprecedented — such is the price for lifting the state of siege in Berlin over which the “unweakened” Crown wants to strike a bargain with the Chambers!

Page me9.53

The intention is obvious. The press Bill, at least, does not impose anything very new on the old provinces. The Prussian Law was already bad enough. The main anger of the embodiment of the divine grace is turned against us Rhinelanders. They want to reimpose on us the very same infamous Prussian Law which we have hardly got rid of, the removal of which, while we are still chained to Prussia, has at last enabled us to breathe somewhat more freely.

Page Break me9.54

Page me9.54

The wishes of the King by the grace of God are clearly stated through the mouthpiece of his servant Manteuffel in the preamble to this charming document: the King desires “the establishment of a legal system that is as uniform as possible” — i.e. he desires the elimination of the hated French law and the universal introduction of the disgraceful Prussian Law. Further the King desires “to fill the gap” which was caused “in the greater part of the Rhine Province” (just listen!) by the abolition of “the penal law on lése-majesté in consequence of the decree of April 15, 1848”!

Page me9.54

This means that the new penal law is intended to deprive us Rhinelanders of the only thing left to us of the results of the so-called revolution of 1848: The undiminished validity of our own system of law.

Page me9.54

It is intended that we shall become Prussians at all costs, Prussians after the heart's desire of his All-gracious Majesty, with the Prussian Law, arrogant nobility, tyranny of officialdom, rule by the sabre, flogging, censorship and obedience to orders. These legislative proposals are only the very beginning. We have before us the plan of the counter-revolution, and our readers will be amazed at the plans that are being envisaged. We do not doubt that the gentlemen in Berlin will once again be strangely disappointed in the inhabitants of the Rhine Province.

Page me9.54

We shall return again and again to these disgraceful Bills, on account of which alone the Ministers must be put into the dock. But there is something we must already say today: if the Chamber adopts anything looking even remotely similar to these Bills, then it is the duty of the Rhenish deputies immediately to resign from the Chamber, which by such decisions seeks to throw their electors back into the patriarchal barbarism of the old-Prussian legislation.

Written by Marx on March 12, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 244, March 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.55

GOVERNMENT PROVOCATIONS

Page me9.55

Cologne, March 12. The high anointed and unanointed lords want to revenge themselves for their sufferings in March 1848 by redoubled joy in March 1849. To this end they have moved heaven and earth so that on the various anniversary dates of the March events in the German fatherlands disturbances will take place in as many parts of Germany as possible thus offering the counter-revolutionaries new opportunities for acts of violence. For weeks past, therefore, the constitutional and aristocratic newspapers have daily concocted stories about enormous preparations for March insurrections, about repeated incursions of republican volunteer bands across the French and Swiss frontiers — in Switzerland there are about 15 1/2 German republicans; and on each occasion alarm has been aroused in the breasts of worthy philistines by hot air from “reliable sources”, “indubitable indications”, and “authentic reports”. But the jokers endowed with divine grace sit calmly behind the scenes, rejoicing at the effects of their reports á la Santa Claus which are being systematically spread by the whole of the servile press, and they smile in a superior manner when the stupid philistines take these calculated cries of alarm au sérieux.

Page me9.55

In this respect, Baden, i.e. Bekk, had to open the ball. Thereupon the hireling journalists began at once to repeat faithfully this whole litany about incursions, putsches and other foolishness. Then Württemberg and Bavaria had to hasten to perform similar services. Huckstering, venal Frankfurt, which has sold itself, this arrogant and worthless imperial city could not and did not want its “daily press” to lag behind. Hessians also, both the blind and the sighted,†a as well as the Stüve-dominated Hanoverians, and the Brunswick makers of long sausages, and all the other hosts of passion martyrs among the imperial peoples of Germany — they all had to play the same tune. This was performed best of all by most worthy Wrangel-Manteuffel. Four hundred false passports for German refugees in Besançon were prepared, and in addition orders on how to behave and emissaries were dispatched to all corners of the black-and-white territory†a in order to raise the loudest possible hullabaloo in the press and by oral propaganda about the approaching republican March insurrectionists.

Page Break me9.56

Page me9.56

However, many of those Christian-Germanic organs of the press, taking no notice of the very wily directives, made much too loud a noise at the very beginning. They then attempted to correct this mistake by a still stronger beating of drums and still more shameless lies.
Page me9.56
Of course, Herr Hansemann, too, immediately and most willingly gave his support to this vociferous company in his new newspaper.†b While apparently belonging to the opposition in the First Chamber, he makes up for this delusive appearance by printing in his newspaper, as a loyal shield-bearer of Manteuffel-Brandenburg, the most absurd information and correspondents' reports about the threatening March insurrections. We shall give only one example. He prints the following fabrication from Cologne as the very latest news:

"For some days we have been living — so to speak — in a state of complete anarchy. One has only to go into the streets to find that even in broad daylight there are crowds of workers strolling about, partly begging, partly robbing; the ale-houses and tobacco shops in particular are subject to numerous attacks. Matters have gone so far that for several days our town hall had to be guarded by a large force of soldiers. At night no one can feel safe in the streets. The worst feature in all this is that the mood of the workers is being artificially stimulated so as to bring about a full-scale insurrection on March 18."

Page me9.56
Here in Cologne it suffices to reprint this article to expose all its perfidiousness and absurdity.
Page me9.56
What could be seen here in broad daylight, and to an increased extent at night, were incessant bloody fights between troops of different branches of the armed forces. The intention, it seems, is to drown interpellations about "My glorious army"†53 by calumnies against the workers.
Page me9.56
The governments are openly preparing for coups d'état which are intended to complete the counter-revolution. Consequently, the people would be fully justified in preparing for an insurrection. But it knows perfectly well that the complicated situation in France, and especially in Hungary and Italy, will inevitably in the near future provide an opportunity for a rising. It will not therefore allow itself to be decoyed into a clumsily laid trap.

Page Break me9.57

Written on March 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 245, March 14, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.58

AN AUSTRIAN REPORT
PUBLISHED IN THE AUGSBURG ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

Page me9.58

There are no direct reports. The post from Vienna, which was due yesterday, failed to arrive even in Breslau and Berlin, and the post expected for today is missing once again together with all postal deliveries from Berlin. We are therefore printing today several extracts from an article published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung which is well suited to cast a good deal of light on the black-and-yellow†a bragging in which certain German newspapers indulge†b:

"After the slight resistance which the imperial troops encountered as they proceeded through Hungary as far as Pest, the news of the two-day battle at Kapolna, which ended without a decisive result after fierce fighting, came as a considerable surprise. This was the first important battle with the insurgents, who for the first time brought their regular troops into action, men whose acknowledged bravery, under the leadership of a skilful commander like Perczel, was further increased by the fanaticism of the hussars. The battle proved that with more training and discipline the Magyars are fighting with a courage and contempt for death which has characterised this nationality for centuries. Yet, apart from demonstrating this, the battle did not alter matters in any other way, for, according to reports of March 2, the insurgents moved from Maklar to Mezö-Kövesd on February 28 and went back on the road from there to Poroszlo and Tisza-Füred, in orderly line but with the intention of crossing the Theiss; their rearguard fought with imperial troops at Kövesd and then later at two other places, in order to cover their retreat. Prince Windischgrätz brought his headquarters forward as far as Mezö-Kövesd and dispatched General Zeisberg to Tisza-Füred via Besenyö in order, if possible, to cut off the insurgents' retreat across the bridge there; should this manoeuvre prove successful then their leader, General Dembinski, would have to engage his troops in a second general battle in order to force the crossing of the

Page Break me9.59

Theiss; otherwise they could cross the river without any trouble, join forces with the corps of insurgents which was constantly engaged in skirmishes with the imperial Ottinger brigade at Szolnok, and once more offer resistance to the Field Marshal. Anyone who puts together in his mind the present bitter clashes with the hints in the November edition of the Kossuth newspaper, and has read Kossuth's warnings that a retreat on the part of the Hungarian army into the interior of the country, were it to occur, should not be regarded as flight but rather as a strategic plan, anyone who has read his proclamation to the peasants telling them to arm themselves in the rear of the imperial troops, to cut off all supplies and to ambush individual units, and anyone who has read his instructions on conducting guerilla warfare etc., will understand the reasons for the speedy retreat to Pest and for the striking circumstance that Prince Windischgrätz was faced with a force of only 24,000 insurgents under Görgey. The insurgents had abatises and entrenchments built at Pressburg, Wieselburg and Raab, anticipating that these defensive measures would induce the imperial army to procure a fairly large artillery park and the necessary horses for it, and that they themselves would gain time to bring up their recruits from the Slav comitats in the area of the Theiss, to obtain the rifles ordered from Belgium and to train their army. The insurgents retreated as far as Pest almost without striking a blow because they intended to raise a Landsturm in the rear of the imperial troops and to weaken their strength by means of the garrisons left behind at Pressburg, Oedenburg and Raab and of the besieging troops at Komorn."

Page me9.59

The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung then proceeds to a naturally one-sided, Austrian review of the war, and then goes on:

"In the meantime 8 brigades of imperial troops had joined forces at Rimaszombat and advanced on the insurgents — 50,000 men with 120 cannon — who had joined forces at Mezö-Kövesd and Kapolna. Prince Windischgrätz brought several cavalry regiments from Pest to Gyöngyös and took charge of approximately 40,000 imperial troops and, as we are told, 140 cannon for the attack on the insurgents, who had taken up an advantageous position. The hussars fought stubbornly and recklessly, and it was they who for some time held the victory of the imperial army in the balance; the regular infantry, which consisted of barely 8,000 men, fought with courage and tenacity; the men of the army reserve held good for longer than usual but were soon however abandoned by their inexperienced and cowardly officers; the Italian Zanini battalion, which had deserted, was captured by the imperial troops at Kapolna; and the result was that the regular insurgents who continued fighting were no longer a match for the on-rushing columns of imperial troops and had thereupon only to cover the retreat of the whole insurgent force, thus preventing a rout. Just how much such troops can achieve when led by skilful and courageous officers is shown by the Hungarian infantry in Italy which incontestably belongs to the most courageous section of the Austrian army; it is a great pity that in their delusion they are fighting here for an insurrection which causes more harm in Hungary the longer it lasts. Baron Jellachich has gone to Temesvar to assume supreme command over the imperial and Serbian troops; his authority and energy will succeed in restraining the Serbs, who wish to regard the districts occupied with the assistance of the imperial army as their own property, and will succeed in containing their arbitrary behaviour. The Serbs under Knicanin are positioned outside Szegedin, two successive attacks have been repulsed by the Magyars who are weaker in number. In Transylvania Bem appears to have recovered and to be advancing on Hermannstadt, Lieutenant-Field Marshal Gläser, however, is said to be approaching him, in which case his corps could not escape being taken prisoner"(!).

Page Break me9.60
Page me9.60

As to other news items, the following is worth mentioning:

“Pesth, March 3. The Solt district has received an order from Debreczin stating that all men between 18 and 30 years of age are to take up arms and march against the Raizen.†54
Page me9.60
“Several Honved†55 officers, who had promised never again to fight against the imperial troops and were released from the fortress of Esseg, are said to be engaged in organising a popular uprising” (Lloyd).†a

Written by Engels on March 13, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 245, March 14, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.61

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.61
Once more the post from Berlin, which has just arrived and which was due yesterday evening, does not contain any letters or papers from Vienna. Nor were they received in Breslau. March 8 is the last date for which we have direct news from Vienna, and that contains nothing more than rumours from the Hungarian theatre of war. According to an issue of the Lithographierte Correspondenz, Windischgrätz has crossed the Theiss with his troops at Tisza-Füred. According to the Allgemeine Zeitung he was totally beaten straight after that in a great battle.
Page me9.61
All the reports from Transylvania agree on the point that Bem and the Szeklers†56 control the whole country, with the exception of Kronstadt and Hermannstadt. Schässburg is still occupied by the Szeklers. Bem is said to have been summoned to the main army at Debreczin and another audacious Pole, Budinski, to have assumed his command in Transylvania. Just what is true in all these rumours one cannot say. However, the total silence on the part of all the official newspapers does not bode well for the fortunes of the royal imperial forces.
Page me9.61
Reports have been confirmed that Perczel has neither been captured nor gone to Switzerland, but that he is stirring up the population of the Tolna comitat in the rear of the imperial troops. He had just time enough in Pest to pay a few polite visits and escaped to Tolna just as the military authorities began to search for him.
Page me9.61
Whilst the people is thus rising in the Austrians' rear in the South-West the same is occurring in the North-West. Reports from various sides indicate that here, where

Görgey was able for so long to hold up three whole army corps, once again a corps of 10,000-12,000 men is operating against the Slovak mountain towns and has completely destroyed the Czech, Moravian and Slovak volunteer corps under Štúr and Hurban. The leader of the Magyar-Slovak corps (for most of the Slovaks sympathise with the Magyars, and in these regions, which are inhabited almost entirely by Slovaks and Germans, it is quite impossible to raise an army corps without Slovaks) is said to be a certain Clouth. Individual refugees arriving at Miava on the Moravian border have passed this information on to the Slovanská-Lípa†57 at Prague.

Page Break me9.62
Page me9.62
The following item, taken from the Siebenbürger Bote, is likewise entertaining. It is a sample of the "ridiculous exaggerations" of the imperial forces in Transylvania, and it is now going the rounds in all the German papers. Whilst the imperial troops were retreating with all haste to Pest and Losoncz, the Siebenbürger Bote, whose military reports are acknowledged as having "an official character", had them achieve the following glorious victories:

"Hermannstadt, February 22. On the evening of the day before yesterday we received the news that from February 10 to 12 the combined troops of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick and Schulzig had fought a murderous battle against the Hungarian rebels and taken Grosswardein. It was reported that the whole battle-line from Debreczin to Grosswardein was strewn with the innumerable corpses of those who had fallen in battle, which were piled up in heaps. The same news arrived here the day after from three other places"(!!!).†a

Written by Engels about March 14, 1849

First published in the second supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 245, March 14, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.63

[AUSTRIAN DEFEATS]

Page me9.63
The latest newspapers and letters have just arrived from Vienna and Bohemia. The official silence continues. On the other hand it is evident from unofficial reports:
Page me9.63
1) that the imperial troops have been beaten at Szolnok. Instead of crossing the Theiss at Poroszlo, a section of the main Hungarian army set off down the Theiss, and, having joined forces with other Magyar mobile columns, attacked the royal imperial troops stationed outside Szolnok from the rear. At the same time the Magyars who were positioned on the right bank of the Theiss pressed forward over the river. The imperial troops were completely beaten, the railway from Szolnok to Abony was destroyed and the whole area occupied by the Magyars. Szolnok has therefore been snatched from the imperial troops for a second time;

Page me9.63

2) that things do not look very bright for the imperial troops both at their centre and on their left flank: on March 5 a huge number of cannon, Congreve batteries and waggon teams from Kapolna arrived in Pest and were transported to the fortress of Ofen. And the great commander Windischgrätz — he is said to be slightly wounded — has moved his headquarters back to Ofen. He has transferred command to Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick, ordering him to advance across the Theiss without any further delay, to storm Debreczin and put an end to the affair!
Page me9.63

In brief: The imperial forces have been beaten at Szolnok once more and dislodged from the town; Windischgrätz has gone back to Ofen and his artillery and waggon train have followed him; thus the imperial forces must also have been beaten there.

Page Break me9.64
Page me9.64

One defeat of the Austrians is certain, a second one probable — Finis Hungariae!

Written by Engels about March 14, 1849

First published in the second supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 245, March 14, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.65

THE HOHENZOLLERN GENERAL PLAN OF REFORM

Page me9.65

Cologne, March 14. “The exceptional states of siege will be lifted as soon as the general state of siege has been imposed on the entire kingdom by laws and has become part of our constitutional customs. The series of these 'firm' laws will begin with September legislation on associations and the press.”
Page me9.65

These are the words we used to accompany the publication of the speech from the throne (No. 234 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung†a). And what is the content of the first parliamentary act of the Government? It comes before the Chambers and declares:
Page me9.65

"We shall deliver you from the state of siege. In exchange you will impose permanent martial law on meetings, associations and the press."
Page me9.65

We cannot for a moment conceal the fact that from the outset the parliamentary Left by its timid behaviour has made it easier for the Government to go over to the offensive.
Page me9.65

We shall compare en détail the splendid three Bills with the September laws, with the pre-March Bill on criminal legislation, and with the Prussian Law.†58 But first of all we inform our readers of the general plan of the old-Prussian reformers, to which our special supplement†b the day before yesterday already drew attention.
Page me9.65

On the very same day on which the unofficial Berlin newspapers published the three splendid Bills, the Neue Preussische Zeitung, that Moniteur of Brandenburg providence, published an "Opinion on the Essential Tasks of the Present Assembly of the So-called Representation of the People."†a The Hohenzollern dynasty and its Brandenburg Government are of too "noble" a lineage to be hypocritical at moments when the sun of "power" shines on the unweakened Crown.†59 At such moments the royal heart knows no restraint and humiliates the plebeian masses by a rough, unceremonious expression of its most intimate desires and thoughts. It has pleased fate — the fact cannot be concealed —, heartless fate, more than once by a peculiar turn of events to bring to naught prophecies, threats and desires which "our good King", Frederick William IV (the ingenious Frederick William IV, who in putting on the crown used precisely the same words as Napoleon had when assuming the iron crown of Lombardy)†60 uttered at moments of triumphant power, moments of "divine intoxication", as Goethe says.†b But it is well known that iron destiny rules even over the gods. In any case, for a royal heart, just as for a woman's heart, and for every heart, it remains an intoxicating supreme delight to give full vent without hindrance to one's most intimate thoughts, and to attune the world if only by a speech, by a document, to the desires of one's own heart.

Page Break me9.66
Page me9.66

Hence the outpouring of the Neue Preussische Zeitung, which is more or less that of the royal heart, is in itself of great psychological interest; on the other hand, it lets the people know what is expected of them, what if necessary will be obtained by force from them — of course, in their own well-understood interest.
Page me9.66

The Neue Preussische Zeitung (No. 59, supplement), in order to facilitate a survey of the Hohenzollern general plan of reform, has arranged it under headings, which in any case is a commendable condescension towards the public. Was it not at liberty to report the royal decisions in apocalyptic form in the manner of the Revelations of St. John? Let us keep to the headings!

Page me9.66
The "essential tasks of the present assembly of the so-called representation of the people" are sub-divided as follows:
Page me9.66
1) Purging the Chamber from political criminals. A Jove principium.†c The first law for a Chamber which should act in accordance with the wishes of the royal heart, is to transform itself in accordance with the wishes of the royal heart. For the time being, its composition is still a product of disrespectful universal suffrage, even if it is indirect suffrage.
Page me9.66
And what does the royal heart demand?

Page Break me9.67
Page me9.67
The present representation of the people, the Neue Preussische Zeitung divulges, is disfigured by "a blemish" which makes it unworthy and incapable of "being in its entirety an embodiment of Prussian honour, Prussian loyalty and love of the Fatherland". This is a nuisance of which it must rid itself, in order to be "righteous" in the eyes of His Majesty.

"This blemish, this nuisance, consists in the fact that its membership includes persons who took part in the criminal actions of the parliamentary faction headed by Unruh, particularly in the factional decision on refusal to pay taxes."
Page me9.67
"The Government," it goes on to say, "owing to its own regrettable weakness or from distrust of the judiciary, which indeed is to a large exent infected with revolutionary sentiments, did not put those men on trial. To make up for this omission, this mistake, is the task of the Chambers; to press for this is particularly the duty of all judges and lawyers who are members of the Chambers, if only to preserve the vanishing honour of their profession. A motion therefore must be put to the Government — and it should be one of the first actions after the Chamber has been constituted — that the Minister of Justice should now institute a court investigation and punishment of these criminals. Such an expurgation is the first and most urgent requirement for the successful progress of the deliberations."

Page me9.67
It is the dearest wish of the King to see punishment meted out to the tax-refusing evil-doers and desecrators unto the third generation.†a The royal Government was too weak to fulfil this wish. The royal-Prussian people was so shameless, so obstinate that it once more elected evil-doers and sinners as its representatives in open revolt against the Emperor's heart. It is now up to the Chambers to compel the royal Government to carry out the most personal intentions of His Majesty. On bended knees, they must beg the Ministry to allow them to expel from their midst all infected elements who are in a higher sense not presentable at court. And, above all, the theologians and Pharisees, the "judges and lawyers", have to save their "profession", whose "honour" began to vanish from the moment Manteuffel began to harbour the suspicion, of course without foundation, that the Prussian Themis might remain blind to the clear hints of the Crown. But how can a judiciary save its honour in the eyes of the people, for which every fancy of the embodiment of divine grace would not be a law, which would not obey implicitly the orders of the King himself?

Page me9.67

It is well known that in all religions penitence, sacrifice, and if possible self-sacrifice, are the real essence of divine worship, of the cult. The so-called representation of the people, in order to prove that it is a representation of the royal heart — and the royal heart is the vital, individualised incarnation of the real heart of the people — the "so-called" representation of the people must therefore above all sacrifice itself, that is itself as an emanation of the sovereignty of the people, on the steps of the throne.

Page Break me9.68
Page me9.68

It must cast out all members who are obnoxious to His Majesty and deliver them to prison and the executioner as an expiatory offering of the religion of absolute monarchy. In that way it will atone, firstly, for the crime of its original sin, the sin of having been brought into existence by popular sovereignty. At the same time it will expiate a crime-laden past which is defamatory of royalty and therefore blasphemous. It will purify itself to become a true expression of the fullness of royal power. From a "so-called" popular representation it will become a real popular representation — in the higher, royal Prussian sense. The King is the real Prussian people. The real Prussian people — which must in no way be confused, after the bad foreign custom, with the superficial number of inhabitants of the state — therefore elects representatives solely in order that the royal wishes shall be re-echoed to the King as the people's wishes and in this way the most secret demands of his sovereign heart achieve a reality both prosaic and generally accepted in the form of public legislative proposals and decisions of the Chamber.
Page me9.68

Consequently, we expect from the Berlin Chambers that they will commence their cult of the King by self-sacrifice, by casting out the sinners who refuse payment of taxes.
Page me9.68

The Neue Preussische Zeitung does not conceal that even then the Chamber will still not be righteous in the eyes of His Majesty. The other part of the sacrifice, however, cannot be performed by the Chamber as a corporation. It remains dependent on the active consciousness of sin and the self-crucifixion of the individual members concerned.

"It is true that such a purge," says the Neue Preussische Zeitung with a sigh, "would not expel all those members whom, because of their antecedents in politics and statesmanship, it would be desirable to see removed for so long as they fail to realise and repent their share in the misfortune of the Fatherland and to take a vow publicly pledging themselves to check to the best of their ability the crimes†a for which in part they were personally to blame. Nevertheless, it stands to reason that there can be no question of expelling from the Chambers on legal grounds all those persons who have served the revolution, who in particular between March 18 and November 8 as highly placed officials have been used up in this service" (genuine Prussian grammar). "It would however be desirable that their own consciousness should cause them to absent themselves, unless they turn over a new leaf in the way indicated above. Also, in connection with this" (supreme) "wish, in all fairness distinctions make themselves felt, for example, between Rhenish traders, who should become pillars of the state overnight, and men of the old-Prussian" (feudal) "families, whose honourable names have from of old been most closely bound up with the history of our royal house and of the original heart-lands" (is Silesia also an original heart-land?) "of the monarchy."

Page Break me9.69

Page me9.69
We told the "Rhenish traders" about this long ago. It is only with dégoût†a that the feudal house of Hohenzollern chose this bourgeois canaille as a lowly tool and it waits impatiently for the moment when it can get rid of them with kicks in a radical fashion. Hansemann! Camphausen! Kühlwetter! On your knees! Clothed in a penitent's shroud in front of the royal palace, in full view of the people, with ashes strewn on your crime-laden heads, vow and publicly testify that in the most profound remorse you repent having for a moment dared with bourgeois-constitutional intrigues to prepare the counter-revolution, the accomplishment of which befits only "My glorious army"†61 and — you skinflints, haggling serfs, pedantic traders in fats,†62 cunning railway speculators — having not only saved the throne, but having even boasted of this salvation in high-flown woe-begone phrases. On your knees! Don the penitent's shroud! Or get you to a monastery!
Page me9.69
And as regards the "men of the old-Prussian families", nobly-born and favoured by predestination off-shoots of the chosen people, we expect in the near future to read in the Staats-Anzeiger obituary notices of these, of an Arnim, Auerswald, Bonin, Pfuel. Only if they go voluntarily to their death can we believe in their repentance. From a Rhenish trader such as Hansemann, such greatness of soul is not to be expected. Hansemann is a Voltairean of the most objectionable sort, superficial, and above all, hard-hearted in money matters.
Page me9.69
Vanish therefore from the Chambers, leave the stage, you living monuments of March 18, of royal tribulations, humiliations, inconsistencies and weaknesses! Withdraw from the Chambers, or condemn yourselves to be the scapegoats for March 18!
Page me9.69
The Chambers themselves, however, will present the tax-refusers to the royal throne as a hecatomb of their purification and expiation and thus make themselves worthy of fulfilling the further "tasks" dictated by the King to "the so-called representation of the people".

(Continuation follows)†b

Written by Marx on March 14, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 246, March 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.70

THE CENSORSHIP

Page me9.70

Cologne, March 14. The German daily press is certainly the flabbiest, sleepiest and most cowardly institution under the sun! The greatest infamies can be perpetrated before its very eyes, even directed against itself, and it will remain silent and conceal everything; if the facts had not become known by accident, one would never have learnt through the press what splendid March violets have been brought into being by divine grace in some places.

Page me9.70

Last autumn citizen and communist Drigalski†63 tried to reintroduce censorship in Düsseldorf, on the pretext of the state of siege.†a The attempt succeeded for two days; but the storm it aroused in public opinion compelled the sabre-bearing gentlemen immediately to abandon their yearning for censorship.

Page me9.70

But what does the situation look like in the old provinces?†64

Page me9.70

For three months censorship has existed in all its glory in two different districts, but the entire old-Prussian press calmly passes over this scandalous encroachment on its rights!

Page me9.70

Just listen to this:

Page me9.70

Rosenberg, in Silesia, March 7. No. 19 of the Rosenberg-Kreuzburger Telegraph publishes the following statement at the top of the page.

"We ask the readers of our newspaper not to blame us for the delay in the appearance of this issue and its incompleteness, but to take into account that we are still under the state of siege and that the Telegraph — which has recently been under the censorship of the local royal district president, Herr Sack, who has been elected as a deputy to the Second Chamber — after his departure to Berlin has now been placed under direct military censorship.

"The editorial board."

Page Break me9.71

Page me9.71

Furthermore:

Unrestrained censorship has likewise been in existence in Erfurt since November 25. The press there was at first censored by Herr F.W. Huthsteiner, now a police inspector, ex-editor of the Barmer Zeitung that had at one time been liberal under the censorship. Huthsteiner was ostensibly a liberal or democrat, later a subordinate of Duncker and a permanent Prussian policeman. Although this respectable gentleman even deleted articles from the unfortunate Berlin National-Zeitung (!), his official activity was nevertheless considered to be insufficiently Prussian and he was replaced by an officer. Therefore military censorship exists in Erfurt as well.

Page me9.71

But that is not all: censorship is introduced also for newspapers and other publications printed abroad, i.e. outside the area under the state of siege. The Erfurter Adressblatt of February 7 contains the following announcement:

"On orders from the royal Commandant's office here, the Erfurt public is warned, on pain of 'appropriate police punishment' and 'immediate arrest', against the distribution or bill-posting of materials printed outside the town which cast suspicion on government measures or launch malicious attacks against them, and thereby have the effect of alienating the minds of the population from the existing constitutional government, or which tend to provoke animosity against specific classes of the population and, consequently, unrest and friction in our town.

Erfurt, February 5, 1849.
The Municipal Administration, Police Department."

Page me9.71

The restoration of censorship, and the replacement of ordinary by military censorship, are surely things which closely concern the press. Yet the press of neighbouring places — the press of Breslau, Berlin, Leipzig — accept all that as if it were a matter of course! In fact the German press is still the old "good press".

Page me9.71

But we ask our somnolent deputies in Berlin: will they still fail to move that the Ministers be promptly brought to trial?

Written on March 14, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 246, March 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.72

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.72

There is little to add to the reports published this morning. The reports on the battle at Szolnok are extremely vague; but it seems that the Karger imperial brigade stationed there was attacked by the Magyars from the rear at Abony and driven to the opposite (left) bank of the Theiss, which is wholly in Magyar hands. If this is so, the brigade is lost and not a man can escape being killed or taken prisoner. Three battalions were sent from Pest to Abony; but they were too late, of course. Just as they were leaving by train, the defeated General Zeisberg arrived in Pest from Szolnok. He had to go by carriage as far as Abony, since the railway was already destroyed.

Page me9.72

In Budapest new fortifications are being erected.

"The blockhouses at the two bridgeheads of the suspension bridge," writes the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen, "should be completed shortly and offer a firm bulwark against attacks, not easy to take.

Page me9.72

"In spite of the announcement that there can be no question of calling in or confiscating Hungarian notes in private circulation in Hungary, there is a heavy surcharge on the purchase of Austrian banknotes with Hungarian paper money, and the latter's rate of exchange is likely to fall day by day, since the merchants here have to make many more payments of considerable sums to the other patrimonial dominions, in particular to Vienna, than they will be receiving from there. The Israelites of the capital have been given renewed orders to pay the instalments on the notorious arrears of the toleration-tax redemption in silver pieces of twenty, but the community has been granted an extension of a fortnight, or of 18 days, according to another report."†a

Page me9.72

From the comitat of Tolna we learn from the same paper:

"The Tolna county is again in full rebellion, despite its declarations of allegiance. The speeches which Moriz Perczel recently made at public meetings there sowed bad seed, and the military authority was informed too late when he stayed incognito at his father's baronial estate a few days ago. Only his carriage and his innocent valet fell into the hands of the imperial troops."†a

Page Break me9.73

Page me9.73

Nor do things look too brilliant for the imperial arms in the south. Let us quote once more the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen:

"As regards the capture of Alt-Arad a considerable snag has been encountered. General Todorovich wanted to leave his whole corps behind as garrison, but some of the officers regarded three battalions as sufficient for the purpose. So it happened that, when the main body of the Serbs moved into their camp, the defeated Magyars returned across the Maros, and as a result two battalions were driven out and one was partly captured, partly cut down."†b

Page me9.73

When the imperial troops took Esseg, they expected that the garrison would rush to join the imperial army, but of the four companies of former regular troops of the imperial army not one man and of all the Honveds†65 only 16 men were recruited.

Page me9.73

The following news comes from Croatia, on which "independence" has been imposed. The Agramer Zeitung writes:

"We hear from a reliable source that the Ministry of Trade intends in the near future to begin the regulation of the River Sava upstream to Sissek and then the building of a railway from Sissek to Agram and thence to Karlstadt and Steinbrück."†c

Page me9.73

Quite in order. Let the Royal and Imperial Government make rivers navigable there, build railways, bring commerce and industry into the country, and it will discover for how much longer it will then be able to rely on its Croats. No sooner will the Croat exchange the red-coat†66 for the frock-coat, than his enthusiasm for the martial-law emperor†d will automatically cease.

Page me9.73

Ban†e Jellachich has told the Banal Council that he has granted an amnesty to the pro-Magyar Croats — including the six party leaders†67 — who fled to Hungary and were banned when they did not return after being asked three times.

Page me9.73

Lastly, it is reported from the Turkish border that "there is a great deal of activity in Turkey. In Bosnia large bodies of troops are being armed and concentrated at Travnik. Although scouts report that threats against the borderers†68 are sometimes heard being uttered, it is more likely that these preparations are connected with the political intrigue Palmerston is hatching in Constantinople regarding the Danube provinces with no lesser an aim than to drive the Russians from Moldavia and Wallachia and so uncover the Austrian flank to the east. Austria can expect a strong Note with regard to the 10,000 Russian troops protecting Transylvania."†a

Page Break me9.74

Written by Engels about March 14, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 246, March 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.75

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.75

Today there is no news from the theatre of war, except for the Magyar report of the Breslauer Zeitung. It shows that the Austrians were indeed decisively defeated in the battle of Szolnok and forced to retreat towards Pest. Kecskemét is said to be again occupied by the Magyars. The Serezhan Colonel Albert Jellacic, Major Prince Holstein and even the royal imperial General Ottinger are said to have been killed.

Page me9.75

The Magyar report claims that Stuhlweissenburg (on the right bank of the Danube, towards Vienna) is occupied by Magyars, and that in consequence of the Magyars' latest advances Prince Lobkowitz has gone to Debreczin to offer them mediation proposals. More details tomorrow.

Written by Engels on March 15, 1849

First published in the second supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 246, March 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.76

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.76

Today's Breslauer Zeitung carries two Magyar reports, of March 6 and 7, which this time are for once written in a somewhat confused manner.†69 One gets from them a sense of the immense impression which the sudden hasty retreat of the Austrians made in Pest, and the thousand rumours it produced in which facts are mixed up with exaggerations.

Page me9.76

At Mezö-Kövesd, one mile†a beyond Maklar and two beyond Kapolna, a great battle is said to have taken place on March 3, in which Dembinski totally defeated the imperial troops by the masterly use of the terrain and skilful tactical manoeuvres. Their losses are given as 7,000 men and 60 cannon.

Page me9.76

It is quite certain that the Hungarians have by no means retreated across the Theiss, as was trumpeted abroad by Austrian papers, but that on this side of the Theiss something must have happened that looks like a defeat of the imperial troops (even if the above particulars should prove exaggerated). Windischgrätz does not retreat without good reason.
Page me9.76
That the imperial troops were also defeated at Szolnok and that their army corps which was drawn up there has been taken prisoner, as we surmised, is confirmed by the Magyar report of March 6:

"Yesterday morning at 7 a.m. the imperial army received another decisive blow. For the 5,000-strong Grammont brigade in Szolnok on the Theiss was surrounded by a Hungarian army which had crossed the Theiss at Czibakháza, and was taken prisoner along with Lieutenant-Field Marshal Grammont after a terrible carnage.

Page Break me9.77
General Ottinger of the cavalry there received a fatal wound from which he died yesterday in Ofen."†a

Page me9.77
Moreover, the Hungarians did not stop there. According to the Magyar report they advanced to Szégléd and there on the 5th, in bloody fighting, defeated the imperial troops (probably those three supporting battalions which were brought from Pest by Zeisberg). They have also re-occupied Kecskemét, a very important town between the Theiss and the Danube. In consequence of these defeats Jellachich is said to have followed Prince Windischgrätz and also to have left Pest. It is said that the fortifications around Pest are being demolished by the imperial troops themselves; so they do not want to defend Pest itself but merely to dominate it by the cannons from Ofen. The fortress of Ofen is being amply provisioned, but even from here guns of large calibre are being removed, which suggests that a very prolonged defence is not contemplated.
Page me9.77
Thus far the reports of the Magyar correspondent which sound probable. The following appears less probable:
Page me9.77
Görgey is said to be advancing towards Raab with an army corps and to be about to cut off the retreat of the imperial troops — whether this advance is occurring north or south of the Danube is not stated.
Page me9.77
The Magyars are said to have crossed the Danube below Pest and to have occupied Stuhlweissenburg (in the rear of Pest) to cut off the retreat by way of the Fleischhackerstrasse.
Page me9.77
What truth there is in these two rumours cannot be determined. But at any rate they seem exaggerated.
Page me9.77
The Magyar correspondent reports further from the Hungarian camp:

“Travellers from Debreczin relate that on a motion by Kossuth the Hungarian National Assembly has decreed that a Landsturm is to be raised to support the regular army. Most of the deputies have been instructed to organise the Landsturm in their capacity of government commissioners. This extraordinary measure appears to have been taken following the news of the Russian intervention in Transylvania. The same travellers also relate that Minister of Police Ladislaus Madarász has resigned from the Provisional Government in Debreczin.”†70

Page me9.77

From Vienna it is further reported on the 9th:

“The news I gave in my communication of yesterday about the battle at Szolnok is confirmed. The Hungarians have gained a brilliant victory, and they very nearly seized the headquarters. Prince Windischgrätz himself is seriously wounded in one arm. Nothing at all is yet known of the Zeisberg brigade but it is said to have been completely wiped out. The Karger brigade was driven into the Theiss and only a few escaped. General Karger himself owes his escape exclusively to the devotion of three dragoons, who together with him fought their way through. In short, the defeat of the Austrians was general, and even the enemy acknowledges that the leaders of the Hungarian army have demonstrated extraordinary strategic genius. In addition to the names recently given to you, generals Duchatel (probably meaning Duhamel), a Frenchman, Guyon (an Englishman), and Prince Czartoryski (son of Adam Czartoryski) deserve to be commended; they stood courageously by the side of General Dembinski, who was in supreme command.”

Page Break me9.78

Page me9.78

Kossuth has appointed the Serbian leader Stratimirovich Ban of Croatia and voivode of Serbia, a choice which has found general approval since both Serbs and Croats hold this handsome and brave young man in high esteem.

“Postscript. 3 p.m. A traveller coming from Pest, who left the city on the 9th (?), reports that at the time of his departure the city was full of excitement; in Ofen extensive defence measures were being taken and both cities were teaming with a multitude of soldiers; the Magyars, on the other hand, were hourly expecting their compatriots to march in, and in many places the national enthusiasm gave vent to fiery exclamations, in spite of the great number of soldiers who, however, had other things to attend to.”

Page me9.78

Others write also from Vienna:

“The tactics of Prince Windischgrätz towards the fiery Magyars and Poles are the object of much disapproval by the army itself, which appears to be demoralised by them. The many generals commanding the Hungarians are receiving more and more reinforcements, and there is no prospect of an early end without treachery on one side or notable reinforcements on the other."†a

Page me9.78

Windischgrätz has, moreover, declared that unless he receives reinforcements of 50,000 men he cannot cope with the Magyars!!

Page me9.78

Let the Kölnische Zeitung now say what "stage" the Hungarian war has entered with these new Magyar victories and with this statement of Windischgrätz.†b

Written by Engels on March 15, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 247, March 16, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.79

THE MILLIARD

Page me9.79

Cologne, March 15. Already soon after the February revolution there was a shortage of money in Paris. Respect de la propriété†a was proclaimed universally and the poor petty bourgeois thought that this applied to them. The Provisional Government†71 was all the more willing to show its respect de la propriété, since the bank at once lent it 50 million without interest. The Provisional Government consisted mainly of petty bourgeois of the National and was misled by the magnanimity of the bank. The 50 million were soon exhausted. Meanwhile the shareholders and owners of the banknotes had time to make the best use of respect de la propriété by withdrawing all their gold from the bank. The petty bourgeois, who for their part also wished to take advantage of respect de la propriété, went to their banker in order to have their bills of exchange — which had been drawn against their propriété, i.e. against their industrial enterprises, boutiques†b or factories — discounted. The bankers put forward the excuse of lack of money and refused to discount the bills. The petty bourgeois then went to other bankers in order to have their bills endorsed by their bankers and discounted in the bank; the bankers refused their endorsement. Respect de la propriété! It was therefore precisely the bankers who were the first to violate respect de la propriété, although they themselves knew very well how to exploit it. Then a general complaint arose that credit, confiance†c had been lost. On the other hand, the petty bourgeois still did not abandon their respect de la propriété; they thought that if "calm and order" were re-established, confidence also would return and then, their propriété serving as cover, their bills would surely be discounted. It is common knowledge that after the June battle,†72 when calm and order had been restored, all propriété came into the pockets of the bankers, as a result of judicial concordats, and that the petty bourgeois only understood the meaning of "respect", when their "property" had gone. Obviously, it was the workers who suffered most as a result of the financial crisis brought about by the big bourgeoisie. Just at the time when the Provisional Government, in order to solve its own difficulties, invented the notorious 45-centime tax,†73 a poster signed by workers appeared on the walls. It began with the words: avez-vous besoin d'argent? (do you need money?) and it contained a direct proposal to demand the return of the milliard granted to the émigrés in 1825 as compensation. Who were those émigrés? They were the very same people who had incited and supported from abroad the war against France and who had then returned to France in the company of foreigners. Who were to be found among the émigrés who benefited from the compensation? The Duke of Orleans, i.e. the King who had recently been driven out,†a and the legitimists,†74 i.e. the followers of the King who had been driven out long ago.†b The Constituent Assembly and the Convention had decreed the confiscation of the property of the émigré traitors; the kings and émigrés who had returned after both restorations†75 awarded the compensation to themselves and their friends. The kings were again driven out, the decisions of the Constituent Assembly and the Convention regained their full validity, and what could be more natural than that the compensation should again benefit the people. The poster which thus set out the demand for the return of the milliard was read by the workers with general jubilation; they stood round it in thousands and discussed its content in their own way. This continued for a whole day; the next day the poster had vanished from the walls. Recognising the serious danger threatening them, the legitimists and Orleanists†76 had paid large sums to hire persons for the special purpose of destroying all traces of the poster during the night. At that time there was a passion for new organisational plans. Everyone was thinking only of how to invent a new system and to introduce it at once into the "state", in spite of all existing conditions. The Provisional Government hit on the unfortunate idea of inventing the 45-centime tax to be imposed on the peasants. The workers thought that the 45 centimes would have the same effect as the milliard: a tax on landed property — and they abandoned the plan regarding the milliard. The Journal des Débats, as also the stupid National, strengthened them in this opinion, and in their leading articles they argued that real capital was the "earth", original landed property, and that the Provisional Government had every right to levy this tax in favour of the workers. When the tax actually began to be levied, the peasants raised a terrible outcry against the urban workers. "What?" said the peasants, "we are worse off than the workers. We have to borrow capital at high rates of interest in order to cultivate our land and to be able to feed our families, and, besides the taxes and interest paid to the capitalists, are we also to pay for the upkeep of the workers?"

Page Break me9.80

Page Break me9.81
Page me9.81
The peasants turned away from the revolution because, instead of promoting their interests, it was detrimental to their interests. The workers realised how cunning a tax the reactionary party had suggested and only now the meaning of respect de la propriété became clear to them as well: the difference between formal and actual property became evident; it turned out that bourgeois capital had, so to speak, separated the land from the earth, that the formal owner of the land had become a vassal of the capitalist, and that the tax fell only on the indebted vassal. And when, in addition, the real owner of the land made the poor peasants even more conscious of his power, by withdrawing credit, by levying a distress etc., then the revolution became even more hateful to them. The legitimists, who as big landowners possessed great influence in the countryside, exploited this situation, and the intrigues of the royalists on behalf of Henry V then began. In these distressing circumstances for the revolution, May 15†77 arrived. Barbés' demand for the milliard, although advanced in a different form, struck the people once again like a flash of lightning and set them on fire. Even the June battle could not stamp out this thought of the milliard and now that the trial of Barbés has begun in Bourges,†78 this idea has increasingly gripped the peasants. To demand from the legitimists, who were their landlords and blood-suckers, the return of the milliard which they, the peasants, had raised — that was a more attractive bait than Napoleon. The agitation for the repayment of the milliard has already spread throughout France and if it were put forward for decision by universal suffrage, more votes would be cast for it than for Napoleon. The demand for the milliard is the first revolutionary measure to draw the peasants into the revolution. The petitions coming from all parts and the tone in which they are composed prove that this revolutionary measure has already struck deep roots. In Cluny people demand not only the return of the milliard, but also the 3 per cent interest which it had yielded since 1825. From the start of the trial in Bourges these petitions have piled up in such a way that the judges in Bourges as well as the entire reactionary party begin to feel uneasy. Agey, Ancey, Malain, St. Vibald, Vittaux and numerous other communes have today again sent petitions to the Chamber through their parliamentary representatives. Under the headline “Rappel du milliard”,†a the newspapers day by day print the names of fresh communes giving their adherence to this magnificent measure. Soon on all the walls, in all the communes, it will be possible to read: “Rappel du milliard”, and if the forthcoming elections†b are held under this slogan, we shall be interested to see what the capitalists, whether they are called legitimists, Orleanists or bourgeois, can counterpose to this milliard in order to push aside the democratic candidates who intend to enter the new Chamber with the dowry of this milliard in order to use it for the benefit of the peasants and workers. But that is still not all. Louis Napoleon has been promising the peasants everywhere not only the return of the money paid under the 45-centime tax, but a reduction of taxation in general. The petitions generally put forward the demand that the greater part of the milliard be used for this purpose. As for the legal reasons for the return of the milliard, these have already been stated immediately after the July revolution in 1830. At that time paying out the money still remaining from the milliard was suddenly discontinued. If what had already been paid out was not demanded back at that time, it was only because Louis Philippe himself and his family had received a very large part of this money.

Page Break me9.82
Page me9.82
Since it is impossible for the counter-revolutionary party to dispute the justice of this measure, it contents itself for the time being with calling attention to the difficulty of implementing it. The difficulty is said to lie in discovering the persons who have received more or less large sums from the compensation granted. But nothing could be easier. Let us begin with the large sums. At the head of the list is the Duke of Orleans (later Louis Philippe) and his sister, Madame Adelaide, with 50 million, and one had only to take these 50 million from the countless estates which the National Assembly recently restored to the royal family.

Page me9.82
Prince de Condé received 30 million, and who inherited this sum?

Page Break me9.83
The Duke d'Aumale and Madame de Feuchéres. A good beginning, therefore, could be made with this! The royal family owns huge forests and estates in France, and the peasants are already beginning to calculate how much they have lost by the fact that these millions were not returned to them already in 1830.

Written on March 15, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 247, March 16, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.84

THE FRANKFURT MARCH ASSOCIATION AND THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.84
Cologne, March 15. We are returning once more to the unfortunate March Association,†a this fitting offspring of the “March revolution”. We are being reproached “with harming the cause of freedom” since we undermine the March Association. But did we not already in December 1848, to the horror of the Kölnische Zeitung, denounce the March Association as the unconscious tool of counter-revolution?†79 Did we not, therefore, already long ago communicate to the “March Association” our opinion of the “March Association”? Were the March Association an organisation of a revolutionary party, were it even only a logical sound fruit of the March revolt, we would put up with such ineptitude as its speculation with announcements undoubtedly was. In the first place the March Association displays no activity unless perhaps the issuing of addresses ranks as such; further, the March Association is an optimistic simpleton between the constitutionalists (whom we regard as worse supporters of reaction than the club of the Knight von Radowitz†80) and some really worthy democrats who have allowed their sight to be clouded by nebulous ideas of imperial conciliation. The majority in that central commercial association†b will always be governed by the indecision peculiar to it; the Association will perhaps stimulate discontent among the people, but at the decisive moment it will betray them and subsequently bemoan its error. Well, may the commercial association fare well! Its sensitivity in other respects does not move us, and freedom of the press seems still to be understood by these liberal people merely as their personal achievement. Herr Eisenmann, for example, openly declared himself a constitutionalist for all time and an opponent of republicanism at the very same meeting of the March Association where the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was mentioned as a model of "true German disunity". Thus, it is being demanded of us that, out of a doltish desire for unification, we should support the newspaper of a man who, whatever else he may be the devil only knows, is at any rate a German national-minded dolt. For the sake of decency we would "take along with us" these gentlemen as far as they like, if it were not that their task in Frankfurt is to be "irremovable". There are thinking friends of history†81 among these gentlemen. It can hardly have escaped their notice that not merely in Germany but everywhere and at all times, in spite of all March Associations, the Feuillants†82 invariably had to be got out of the way before the outbreak of the real revolution. What use is it to the adherents of the social republic if the very same Vogt, who blustered "above all" against Bonaparte in the manner of the beer drinkers of a small university,†a will become an unsuccessful imperial Barrot of a Bonaparte of the German empire?†83

Page Break me9.85

Written by Marx on March 15, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 248, March 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.86

[DRAFT ADDRESS OF THE SECOND CHAMBER]

Page me9.86
Cologne, March 16. Below we give for the information of our readers the draft Address of the Second Chamber,†84 a pale, servile copy of the speech from the throne.†a Its author is the notorious knight of the red land,†b valiant (!) von Vincke.
Page me9.86
The Commission that drafted the Address

"gratefully recognises" (Old-Testament style) "the establishment" of "legal order through the Constitution of December 5 of last year".†85

Page me9.86
The Commission even expresses this gratitude in the name of the "Prussian people". And why should, according to the Commission, the people be thankful for the December Constitution imposed by the sabre? Because it is “imbued with a longing for the restoration of public legal order”. Unfortunate knight Vincke! He has had to prove that he is the champion of the “legal basis”, which is his speciality. But how is it possible to recognise the “legal basis” when confronted with the Brandenburg Government which shattered this very basis of legality by tearing up the laws of April 6 and 8, 1848†86? Nothing is simpler! The Government has imposed a new legal basis, martial law and simultaneously the Charter, the Code and philosophy of martial law — the Constitution of December 5. First the Government abolishes “public legal order”. Then the Government proclaims some other “public legal order”, the first that comes to hand, e.g. a Croatian one, a legal basis of quelconque.†c Then the Commission for drafting the Address in the name of the Prussian people, and Vincke in the name of the Prussian Commission for drafting the Address, have nothing more urgent to do than to welcome the restoration of some sort (any sort, no matter what) of “public legal order”! The legal basis is dead! Long live the legal basis! If, tomorrow, the Prussian Government is overthrown, if a Comité du salut public†87 is proclaimed in Berlin, then among the first to offer congratulations and invite guests to the wedding there will undoubtedly be a “champion of the legal basis”, some Vincke or other, who in moving tones will recognise the “restoration of” some sort of “public legal order”.

Page Break me9.87
Page me9.87

The Address Commission and the dead ride fast.†a First of all, “gratitude” (according to the prescription of the Neue Preussische Zeitung) for the coup d'état of December 5! Then the martial-law Constitution as the “henceforth valid fundamental law of the Prussian state”! Finally, the vow to carry out the “revision wholly inspired by reverence and loyalty towards Your Royal Majesty”, i.e. a revision in the sense desired by the donor. In this way, it is to be hoped, we shall be led back to the period even prior to the United Diet†88!
Page me9.87

As for Berlin's “state of siege”, the Address Commission will be governed exclusively by the platitude that “true freedom cannot exist without law and order”. People know the battle-cry of “law and order!” from the events in Warsaw.†89 If only Prussia could exist without money or obtain money without these importunate parliamentary chatterers! As for the states of siege sporadically occurring “outside the city of Berlin”, the Address Commission considers it appropriate “to await a further report from Your Royal Majesty's Government”. Meanwhile Erfurt and the districts of Silesia where a state of siege has been declared are left out in the cold. Vincke is satisfait as long as the Erfurt and Rosenberg military censorships†b do not “cross out” his draft Address. There is no danger of that!
Page me9.87

Vincke then makes a promise in the name of the Address Commission, and the commission makes a promise in the name of the Second Chamber, and the Second Chamber makes a promise in the name of the people to fulfil “by strenuous effort” and as satisfactorily as possible the tasks which the royal Prussian Government has entrusted to the “so-called representation of the people”. Good luck!

“We too recognise with joy that the Prussian army has proved its military renown during the days of struggle and its loyalty in the course of severe trials.”

Page Break me9.88
Page me9.88

The Danish campaign of the Imperial Court of Law!†90 The battles at Miloslavl and Wreschen! The victories in Anhalt, in Mainz, in Frankfurt am Main!†91 More than this! Vincke joyfully recognises the loyalty with which “My glorious army” hounded Vincke's predecessor and used the official documents of the old National Assembly as fuel for the stove. Vincke has every reason to rejoice. Without the “loyalty” of the “Prussian army in the course of severe trials”, our Vincke would never have had the opportunity to immortalise himself by this draft Address which he himself drew up. Moreover, we may point out incidentally that in this matter, too, the Address Commission copies in schoolboy fashion the provisions in the Hohenzollern general plan of reform†a as given by the Neue Preussische Zeitung.

Page me9.88

And the German question?

Page me9.88

“Prussia” will shrink from “no sacrifice” in order to seize Little Germany,†b by means other than those with which Frederick the Great seized Silesia. In regard to “conquests”, modern Prussia subscribes to the principle of “peaceful” progress. Moreover, the Address Commission “hopes” that “all the German governments will come to an understanding with the German National Assembly”. We hope that the German governments will not pay much attention to this imperial training-college for teachers.

Page me9.88

The Address Commission further expresses the wish that there be “no disturbance of the peace” as a result of “the termination of the armistice by the Danish King”. Vincke knows very well that this Danish termination of the armistice is not meant to be taken more seriously than the Prussian-Danish war itself.†92 The Prussian troops act as imperial troops in Schleswig-Holstein, the Schleswig-Holstein troops act as imperial troops in South Germany, the former here and the latter there declaring martial law!

Page me9.88

Condolences for the death of Prince Waldemar, and assurances of readiness for self-sacrifice, by means of which von Bodelschwingh, Riedel, von Seckendorf, Arnim, Harkort, Count Renard, Camphausen, Vincke, Grün and suchlike rabble stoop to the role of Prussian Lycurguses and Solons; piety, respect for the law, public spirit, justice, providence, the hearts of the kings and the future of Prussia, “and with it the future of Germany”, — all that is served up as a dessert by the Address Commission through the good offices of von Vincke!

Page Break me9.89
Page me9.89

Idiocy must have rights of citizenship in a national assembly and in a nation which a von Vincke, by means of such a miserable botchwork produced in the name of a commission, in the name of a Chamber, and in the name of the people itself, can dare to turn into the laughing-stock of the European gallery.

Written by Engels on March 16, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 247, March 16, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.90

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.90

Our correspondence and newspapers from Vienna and Prague have again failed to arrive today. Nor do the Breslau, Leipzig and other papers carry a word from the Austrians on the military operations. The Magyar correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung, on the other hand, writes of new fighting in the area of Szegléd, of great masses of wounded who were brought to Pest, and of preparations for retreat. But it does not yet report anything decisive either.

Page me9.90

What is most striking about the Austrian silence is that nothing is reported from anywhere. Formerly, there was always some little corner from which the imperial side could report some small advantage. But now this also has ceased. The Magyars appear suddenly to be developing a quite unexpected energy at all points, placing the most unforeseen obstacles in the way of the advance of the 250,000 imperial troops.

Page me9.90

Since February 16 or 17, that is for four weeks, there has been no news from Transylvania. Not a word of the advance towards Tokaj of the troops of Götz, Ramberg and Jablonowsky. Not a word of Nugent's operations in Syrmien. Not a syllable about the deeds of Rukavina, Todorovich and Gläser in the Banat. If we learn a word here or there, we learn it through unofficial, vague rumours.

Page me9.90

In short, the silence of the official reports is becoming more and more uncanny, and the contents of the unofficial reports are becoming more and more menacing for Austria. On the latter a few details tomorrow.

Page me9.90

According to a report in the Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung, the Austrians are preparing to allow the Russians to march into Cracow, as well as into Transylvania.

Written by Engels on March 16, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 247, March 16, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.91

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.91

Now, following the résumé published in today's special supplement,†a here are the detailed reports from the Hungarian theatre of war.

Page me9.91

First concerning the operations at Pest. The fighting appears to be concentrated in the area of Szegléd, accordingly both the Hungarian and the royal imperial forces must have moved significantly south. At any rate we no longer hear of any fighting in the area of Erlau, Kapolna or Mezö-Kövesd. Jellachich is therefore said to have also moved off to Szegléd. It is confirmed that Windischgrätz, vexed by his ill successes, has moved his headquarters back to Ofen and has thus withdrawn from active command. That he has been wounded is, however, disputed. The great defeated general is now drawing all troops by any means available to himself, even from the Komorn siege corps and from Cracow, so as somehow to maintain his position. — With regard to the latest military operations the Magyar correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung of March 9 writes:

"Yesterday a battle must have taken place in the direction of Szolnok for very many waggons full of wounded were brought in during the night. The fact that still no Bulletin has been issued and also that, on the orders of the military command, the entire front of the Donauzeile facing the fortifications of the Pest bridgehead had suddenly to be cleared and is being occupied by the military, points to a new defeat. For this last measure can only have been taken for the purpose of covering a hasty retreat. Moreover, the higher officers of the Ofen fortress garrison have today sent their wives away. Direct news is entirely lacking, since no traveller from the lower areas is allowed to approach Pest. Another battle is expected today, unless the heavy rain which is falling continually prevents it. If the battle is fought nevertheless, the retreat will involve heavy losses for the defeated side, for the roads there turn into deep mud whenever it rains, making it altogether unthinkable to bring away the guns and baggage. In Pest meat has risen in price by 2 kreutzers per pound because a Hungarian raiding corps drove away a large consignment of oxen from Gödöllö, three hours from here.

Page Break me9.92

From Debreczin we learn that the Hungarian Government has accused of high treason and deposed Johann Hám, the Lord Primate of Hungary, and two other high prelates, who remained in Pest. The clever and liberal Hungarian historian, Horvath Mihaly, formerly Canon, later Bishop of Chanad, has been appointed Lord Primate" (this is also confirmed from another source). "When last night many spectators gathered at the bringing in of the wounded, they were dispersed by a strong patrol sent out for the purpose. Incidentally, all hospitals and barracks are so overcrowded with wounded that newcomers had to be laid on the stairs and in the forecourts."

Page me9.92

Moreover, that the imperial cause is in a very peculiar way can also be deduced from a proclamation of Prince Windischgrätz from Ofen headquarters, dated March 8,†a prohibiting all direct or indirect intercourse with the rebels and the inhabitants of the areas occupied by them for the duration of the state of siege. Similarly, all trading links are disrupted. Anyone acting against these prohibitions is to be dealt with under martial law, as well as all who aid and abet them in any way. The goods, however, are confiscated and sold for the benefit of the state treasury.
Page me9.92

In the rear of the imperial armies things look equally jolly. What stage these gentlemen at Komorn have reached and what illusions they endeavour to spread is shown by the following communication of the government Lloyd from Pressburg:

"While the main army under Field Marshal Windischgrätz, tireless in the pursuit of the enemy, is already active on the other side of the Theiss(!), the second army corps is operating at Komorn, where, according to reliable reports, a great offensive will begin on the 15th of this month(!). For this purpose many(!) steamboats with very many howitzers of every calibre and with fourfold powder supplies have been dispatched there from Vienna, Ofen and Esseg. On our bank of the Danube several tugboats, equipped with cannon and bombs in the manner of warships, are tied up, intended to serve as the main transport of the reserve. It will probably take but a few rocket-throwing exercises to bring the Komorn garrison to its senses and lead to the surrender of the fortress and the re-opening of the waterway between Vienna, here and Pest."†b

Page me9.92

The same article which began with these absurd boasts goes straight on to admit that the Slovak peasants do not want to have anything to do with the royal imperial occupation. For besides other arrests,

"last week 12 peasants from nearby Slovak villages accused of concealment of arms with evil intent, were placed under arrest, brought here, and sentenced to two, three or four years' imprisonment depending on their crime".

Page Break me9.93
Page me9.93

The Slovaks, -who have been vainly incited to rebellion several times already, are so loyal to the Magyars that only 1,400 men out of 2 to 3 million could be recruited for Austria. Read the following report from Leutschau (Zips), which also confirms that the imperial troops are still where they were when Görgey moved to the Theiss:

"Leutschau, March 1. The Slovak Landsturm consists up to now of 15 companies of 90 men each. Three companies form the Leutschau garrison, five that of Eperies; the rest are moving to Kaschau. Yesterday, General Ramberg imposed a war-tax of 20,000 florins on this town. More than 500 people have fled from Eperies for fear of Görgey, many of them as far as Pest."

Page me9.93

From the south we hear only that Szegedin is still in the hands of 40,000 Magyars, and that 30,000 Serbs are standing by ready to take the town.

Page me9.93

Finally, we have received several reports from Transylvania, but which, strangely, still do not go beyond February 16 or 17. According to one of them (a Saxon report), Bem is supposed to be dangerously ill as a result of a wound in his hand; another report, about the Szeklers†93 taking Schässburg, is interesting because of the details which it gives of the strength of the Szeklers at a single point. On February 16, about 8,000 men and 12 cannon from Mediasch, 5,000 men and five cannon from Udvarhely and 3,000 men from Maros-Vásárhely advanced simultaneously on Schässburg. These fighting forces caused the brave Austro-Russian troops under Major von der Heydt and the virtuous civic militia of the town to withdraw without a fight to Hermannstadt and to leave wives, children and property to the mercy of the Szekler robber bands. These are said to have immediately imposed a war-contribution of 30,000 florins on the town:

"a much greater sum would be exacted from the administrative localities. The enemy was looking for lead and tin, as much as could be raised; he even fetched up the cartridges which had been sunk in the wells and dried the powder in the sun to make it usable again."†a

Page me9.93

Finally we quote the following interesting report from Cracow. This shows how completely preconcerted is the plot between Russia and Austria.

"Cracow, March 12. The royal imperial General Legeditsch, in command here, yesterday had Prince Stanislaw Jablonowski summoned before him and informed him quite abruptly that the municipal authority should make an application to the administration asking the Russian troops standing on the border to enter Cracow to maintain calm, since he (Legeditsch) would have to march off to Hungary with all Austrian forces. The Prince, however, replied to the royal imperial General that the people of Cracow would certainly not make such a request and should the town be completely denuded of troops, the citizenry would guarantee to maintain law and order.

Page Break me9.94

Page me9.94

"It will be remembered that General Puchner in Transylvania, before the entry of the Russian troops, made a similar indirect demand to the towns of Kronstadt and Hermannstadt that they should call for Russian aid."

Page me9.94

Finally, on the question of the Hungarian banknotes, the despotism of the sabre had to yield to the necessitas rerum,†a the absence of credit of the royal imperial state.

Part of the Kossuth notes have already been called in, despite the weeping and gnashing of teeth of the Pest petty bourgeoisie.

"In fact Field Marshal Windischgrätz on the 9th of this month issued an announcement in Pest by which Hungarian 100-florin and 5-florin notes were banned from acceptance at public counters. This announcement produced great consternation there and all transactions are at this moment completely disrupted."†b

Page me9.94

The Pest Fair, which is anyway sparsely attended, is therefore unlikely to be held at all. The Hungarian one- and two-florin notes will hardly have any other fate.

Written by Engels on March 16, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 248, March 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.95

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.95

As the Vienna mail has again failed to arrive, we are again without any direct news from Hungary. What has reached us via Prague and Augsburg contains very little that is new.

Page me9.95

The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung carries a report from Pest of the 8th to the effect that Szolnok is again occupied by imperial troops.†a Later reports, as we shall see, sound quite different. The Allgemeine Zeitung, incidentally, admits that the imperial troops have suffered "a considerable defeat" at Szolnok, in which "of two companies barely 40 men were saved". Concerning the fighting, the same paper reports from Abony near Szolnok:

"After the day of Kapolna we advanced as far as Kövesd, and then to Poroszlo. As the cavalry was unable to operate there because of the marshy nature of the ground, we received orders to go to Szolnok. We arrived just in time to put an end to the fighting which 15,000 Hungarians with 40 cannon had begun against two brigades and which cost us dear, for the Karger brigade was driven out of Szolnok. At the moment reinforcements are arriving from Pest and we shall oppose them with 15,000 men and 36 to 40 cannon, but we do not doubt that they will withdraw when they see a significant deployment of strength. The bravery of our troops is very commendable. Szolnok got into Hungarian hands yesterday, it is true, but by tonight we shall surely have it back again."†b

Page me9.95

What we are to think of these boasts about the re-taking of Szolnok is evident from a report from Pest, printed in the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen which says:

"The Ban did indeed start from Pest yesterday, and that at 4 a.m. Unfortunately we know nothing at all about the events in the theatre of war in our immediate neighbourhood, between Szegléd and Abony, it is said. The local secret agitators tell marvels about the strength of the rebel army, nay even that it takes six hours to cross their camp. Of course these rumours are obviously much exaggerated, but it cannot be denied that along the Szolnok route a considerable insurgent army has now already for the second time advanced closer to the capital than is desirable. The anxiety of the loyally-inclined is even more increased by the doubtless necessary measures to safeguard the communications between the fortress of Ofen and the New Edifice, the new and only citadel of Pest. Yesterday afternoon embrasures were made in this construction, in great haste, and the inhabitants of the houses in the neighbourhood received strict orders to hold themselves in such readiness to march that they would be able to leave their quarters with bag and baggage within six hours of receiving notice. Moreover, the buildings, workshops etc. of the company which is building the suspension bridge, situated next to the blockhouses of the suspension bridge, were yesterday hastily demolished on both banks of the Danube. Hence a gloomy mood prevails among the few local loyalists, while the opposing party finds it difficult to hide its secret joy."†a

Page Break me9.96

Page me9.96

How things are going in general for the imperial side is evident even from the fact that Windischgrätz has strictly prohibited all traffic and commerce with the areas occupied by the Magyars so as to cut off their connections. All individuals trafficking there are to be arrested and their goods confiscated. Extraordinary police measures against aliens have also been ordered for the approaching Pest Fair.

Page me9.96

There is still not the slightest news from the left wing of the main army (Schlick). The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung claims, it is true, that he has already been standing 8 hours from Debreczin and that it was not yet known whether he had gone back again.†b But this is a most impudent lie; Maklar, where the imperial armies were standing according to their own reports, is fully 15 German miles†c from Debreczin, and the Theiss, with its milewide belt of swamps, lies between, 10 miles from Debreczin. In the absence of facts the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen boasts as follows†d:

"We confidently expect (!) good results from the operations of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Count Schlick, and in general we may claim with pride (!) that Count Schlick has proved a most excellent general, especially in his plight after the skirmish at Tokaj!"

Page me9.96

The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen also confirms that the Magyars have occupied the southern part of the Pest comitat at Kecskemét. They have even advanced to the Danube and are in contact with the insurgents on the opposite bank (the Tolna comitat):

Page Break me9.97
"One of the main centres of insurgent activity is Kalocsa; they are stirring up the entire neighbourhood, particularly the Tolna comitat, on the other side of the Danube. There the rebels are so bold that they sink every ship that passes on the Danube. The peasants of Földvar and Duna Vecse are distinguishing themselves particularly in this respect. They have not the smallest fear of the royal imperial troops, imagining that 12,000 Honveds are at Kalocsa. They are constantly being made more fanatical by posters from Debreczin."

Page me9.97
It follows from this that along the whole stretch from Duna Vecse to Tolna (9 to 10 miles as the crow flies) both banks of the Danube are in the Magyars' hands and shipping is greatly threatened.
Page me9.97
The following report shows how the war is being conducted in this area and how little prospect the clumsy Austrians have of coping with these elusive bands of rebels.

"The detachment of troops which left a few days ago for Duna Földvar (Tolna comitat) by steamer to suppress the latest revolt has never come face to face with the enemy. Although the tugboat was shot at on landing, the mutineers dispersed like chaff in the wind even before the troops had disembarked. A true guerilla war! The Simunich brigade, according to a rumour, is said to be entering a fortified camp near the Bicske estate of Count Kasimir Batthyány, four hours drive from Ofen, to maintain the security and continuity of the new order of things beyond the Danube."

Page me9.97
From Transylvania not a word.
Page me9.97
From the Banat

"it is expected that simultaneously with the arrival of the Ban†a (in the campaign against Szolnok) the long line of the Austro-Serb troops which extends from Baja to Temesvar will now be set in motion" (Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen).

Page me9.97
Indeed! Now at last we learn that the famous division Lieutenant-Field Marshal Gläser formed from the troops of Rukavina, Todorovich and other generals, greeted with so many newspaper fanfares, which was to conquer Transylvania and Grosswardein, has not even stood its ground on the Maros but has retreated to Temesvar! Magyar reports indeed told us this long ago, but they were not to be believed, of course!
Page me9.97

And in another article in the same paper we read:

"Until yesterday (March 7) neither Szegedin nor Theresiopel (Subotica) were captured, in the neighbourhood of which, as I have already reported, the Serbs won a brilliant victory and literally made hay of the Magyars, and a Magyar corps has advanced in this direction. This is related by travellers who have come from these areas today."†b

Page me9.97

But thereby hangs a tale. The Serbs are to the highest degree dissatisfied with their chiefs. Patriarch Rajachich is making himself daily more unpopular by outlawing Stratimirovich, by his intervention against the National Committee,†94 which he has now disbanded, reconstituted and moved to Becskerek, and by other arbitrary measures. Stratimirovich has disappeared and seems to have gone over to the Magyars. Rukavina and Todorovich are Serbs, it is true, but above all royal imperial generals, who know no other nationality than the Austrian. Moreover, considerable tension exists between the regular troops and the Serb frontier guards and volunteers.

Page Break me9.98

"The Serbs complain of a shortage of cavalry, and, what is more, the imperial troops are in no hurry to leap to the aid of the Rascians,†95 a designation which has become popular again among the military" (Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen).†a

Page me9.98

In short, since Stratimirovich has gone, the Serbs have become obstinate and what is more are negotiating with the Magyars, as even the Vienna papers report. What effect Kossuth's appointment of Stratimirovich as Ban and voivode will have remains to be seen.

Page me9.98

Another blow for the Austrians is being prepared here by the recall of the Turkish Serbs from Hungary. The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen reports on this:

"By a princely decree from Belgrade the Serbs who are fighting on Austrian soil are recalled. Whether Knicanin's corps is included is not known, since the order is couched in too general terms. Our Serbs interpret this measure with suspicion, claiming to know that the Olmütz Court†b has worked for this decree through diplomatic channels. Others see in it purely a matter of organisation and conscription, while we are inclined to connect it with the Turkish armament measures. Certainly, the Serbian irregulars knew nothing better than looting, killing and burning; they were the dregs of Serbia. Their rapacity was quite indiscriminate. They dragged their booty across the Sava by the cartload, and, wherever these hordes broke in, the complaint went up from all sides: Heaven preserve us from these friends, we can cope with our enemies."†c

Page me9.98

The same paper writes in another article on this affair:

“Another untoward circumstance which fills us with gloomy forebodings is the recall of the troops of the Serb Principality from the Voivodina. We are unable to penetrate the secret of this policy. It is said that The Porte, England and France have demanded the recall of these troops. We do not believe this, at any rate they had no right to do so; for the troops who came to our aid from the principality were not regular troops of whom the local government can dispose as it pleases, they are volunteers who came to take part in the liberation struggle of their compatriots. The Serbs, however, had a right to take part in this struggle, for Serbia is a constitutional country, its people are free people. There is no end to the South-Slav troubles, indeed they are increasing with every passing day.”†a

Page Break me9.99

Page me9.99
The following announcement by the Patriarch, dated Gross-Kikinda, February 24, shows moreover that the plundering by the Serbs must be very bad:

“As looting is on the increase by both the auxiliaries and even our regulars, I feel compelled to order: 1) Nobody shall dare to purchase any cattle or other effects taken as booty. 2) In case of violation the purchaser will lose both the booty he has bought and the purchase money handed over. 3) All objects taken as booty will be confiscated wherever found and the matter reported to me through the appropriate authority.”†b

Page me9.99
But what angers the Serbs most, who are, after all, waging a national struggle, is the action taken in the interest of Germanisation by the noble Banus Jellachich, who as Ban is at the same time chief of the Military Border district.†96 The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen received the following report from the Sava dated March 1:

“Ban Jellachich has become the chief talk of the day; his latest action is cloaked in the darkness of secrecy, and the Southern Slavs do not regard him without suspicion. His order to the Patriarch announcing that the German language is to be re-introduced in the local Military Border district, was very badly received here. Indeed, Ban Jellachich has not grasped the implications of this pronouncement. The Serbs kindled the national war solely to rid themselves of the rule of an alien nation, to save from destruction their literature (!), their art (!), their songs, all their national treasures, to which they cling with loyal hearts; the Serbs will not readily obey this order. Whatever may have induced the highly respected Ban to issue it, we do not doubt for a moment that the Patriarch will reject it.”

Page me9.99
Clearly, the noble, gallant Ban is playing a most contemptible role. Sent for a time to Pest, under suspicion, he served the Government to cover all its acts that were unpalatable to the Slavs with his name and position. The noble personage, once having entered into relations with the Austrians, has irrevocably broken with the Magyars. Now, too late, he realises that despite his Slav cunning he has been ignominiously duped by the imperial side and cannot even refuse to sign such a disgraceful declaration as his recent one about his alleged quarrel with Windischgrätz. It serves him right.

Page me9.99

Peterwardein is surrounded. The garrison is said to have taken all its officers prisoner as disloyal and traitorous.
Page me9.99

We have learned more details about the battle in Slovakia against the Czechoslovak volunteers. The fighting took place at Turan on the Waag (at the foot of the Jablunka Pass, already once before so ominous for Messrs. Štúr and Hurban). The Magyar-Slovak corps, 12,000 strong, which was victorious here, is occupying the High Carpathians and is said to be under the command of Klapka and Aulich.

Page Break me9.100
Page me9.100

The Austrian Government is said to have disavowed Puchner's invitation to the Russians to enter Transylvania and insists on their withdrawal as soon as 15,000 Banat troops have arrived in Transylvania as reinforcements. But since the Serbs refuse to march, the Russian corps will surely stay for the time being.
Page me9.100

The following is reported in Pest from Debreczin, according to the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen:

A deputy is said to have proposed that the National Assembly should recognise the Emperor Francis Joseph as the legitimate King of Hungary. Nyáry was the first to support this pacification proposal, and even Kossuth made a brilliant speech in favour of the proposal which was then unanimously adopted.†a

Page me9.100

A letter from Pest the next day adds:

“The news from Debreczin reported yesterday appears to find confirmation, and the National Assembly is indeed said to have recognised the Emperor Francis Joseph as legitimate King of Hungary. This recognition rests, however, on the Pragmatic Sanction, and the demands which Kossuth's party piles up on this basis we still remember from the last Imperial Diet but one.†97 According to reports received it has also been explicitly added that this step had been induced above all by the wish to prove to the European monarchies, especially to the great powers in the immediate neighbourhood, that there was not the least intention to found a united, big, perhaps even red, Sarmato-Magyar republic. This would therefore seem not to be a step towards actual pacification.”†b

Page me9.100

If the Magyars have really taken this decision, such a manoeuvre would basically have little significance. If they are victorious and stand before Vienna, the “legitimate King of Hungary” will soon come to his end.

Page me9.100

Moreover, in another letter from the Drava we read:

“In and around Debreczin everything looks extraordinarily martial and warlike. An imperial officer who was discharged under bond because he did not want to fight against his brothers gave us information from which we single out the following as remarkable. 'Kossuth's army,' he said, 'must amount to about 100,000 men and the artillery to 400 (?) cannon. Rockets of a unique kind are being made. A regular infantry is also available and seven old-style hussar regiments, besides which seven more hussar regiments have been formed, the Kossuth-, Mészáros-, Batthyány-, Madarász-, Hunyadi-hussars etc. There is much drilling and for up to six miles from Debreczin the villages are very strongly fortified, and it would be a great mistake to think of victory over these rebels as easy and rapid'; so far the statements of our informant. As far as our knowledge of the movements on the Theiss goes, we believe that our operations have to be carried out with all seriousness and caution, since skilful manoeuvres will here be necessary, and the troops in Hungary, at least at this present decisive moment, still appear to us insufficient. I do not want to be accused of pessimism. We see among the rebels much energy and among the masses in and around Romania†a a veritable fanaticism; hence we regret the delay in recruitment in the northern provinces, since this hampers the Government in fighting the Magyars.”†b

Page Break me9.101

Page me9.101

With this report, which should make our neighbouring journalist†c rejoice, we conclude for today, still waiting for finem Hungariae.

Written by Engels about March 17, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 249, March 18, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.102

[MILITARY DICTATORSHIP IN AUSTRIA]†98

Page me9.102

Cologne, March 17. The year 1848 was the year of disappointment with revolutionary memories, illusions and other phrases. In 1848 the insurgent people of half Europe let themselves be put off with phrases, colourful rags, addresses and processions; and it was quite consistent that the revolution of 1848 should end in universal counter-revolutionary and military dictatorship.

Page me9.102

The revolution of 1848 however had at least the result that it not only completely enlightened the people everywhere about the previous phrases, but that it also started a conflagration in the old Europe which all the Cavaignacs and Windischgrätzes in the world will be unable to stamp out.
Page me9.102
1849 is the year of disillusion with the omnipotence of military dictatorship.
Page me9.102
The military dictatorship comes to grief above all owing to two things: firstly, its inability to solve any of the complications; secondly, its costliness. It collapses as soon as it has to organise or as soon as it has to find regular sources of finance.
Page me9.102
The first example of this collapse of military dictatorship is afforded by the "time-honoured" Imperial State of Austria, which could only save its existence by the most violent and extreme rule of the sabre. At the present moment Austria is perishing because of rule by the sabre.
Page me9.102
When the revolution was quelled in Vienna with the help of the Slavs, when Pest was captured by the Slav-Austrian army,†99 when the heroes of martial law believed they could easily deal with the remainder of the Magyar revolution, and that within a fortnight they would re-establish the entire old predatory state from the Ticino and Po to the Dnieper and the Carpathians, the Olmütz camarilla quickly prepared a plan. It was intended, as soon as the sabre dictatorship had been introduced throughout Hungary, to dissolve

Page Break me9.103

The first page of Engels' article "Military Dictatorship in Austria"

Page Break me9.104
Page Break me9.105
the Kremsier Imperial Diet, which had been useful previously on account of the Slavs, to cast aside the Slavs as a worn-out tool, to impose pro forma a Constitution which would never be implemented, and to restore the old Metternich system by the old method, the enslavement of one nation by another.
Page me9.105
The defeats of the imperial robber bands at the Theiss delayed the execution of this benevolent project. The Slavs were still needed on the battlefield.
Page me9.105
But the rumour of the imminent imposition of this plan spread. The Imperial Diet became apprehensive. The Slav Club†100 became daily more dangerous for the Ministers. Agreement was reached that on March 15 the draft Constitution should be adopted in its entirety, thus forestalling the imposition of a Constitution. No other course remained for the camarilla but to risk a desperate coup, to steal a march on the Imperial Diet, and prematurely, and in spite of the Slavs, to disperse the Imperial Diet and impose the so-called Constitution.†101

Page me9.105

This martial-law Charter burst like a bomb among the medley of Austrian peoples. The wrath previously felt only by the Germans and Magyars at the Austrian habit of gaining victory by cowardly acts of treachery, and after the victory to surpass in barbarity the most brutal bandits, this wrath was now shared by the Slavs as well. They were ensnared by the prospect of a "Slav Austria", they were made use of to win victory in Italy and Hungary, and by way of thanks they are now being subjected again to the old Metternich whip. Instead of a "Slav Austria" they are being given a so-called "equality of rights of nations", which denotes here an equal lack of rights of all nations in face of the all-powerful camarilla of the higher nobility, which has no nationality at all. Instead of the much vaunted "freedoms", they are being given bayonets, an Imperial Diet whose majority consists of Slavs is being dispersed by cudgel blows, and the holy cradle of pan-Slavism, Prague, is threatened with a state of siege.†a

Page me9.105

That is all the benefit the Austrian Slavs, and particularly the Czechs, have derived from allying themselves with the camarilla in order to achieve their national separatist†102 aims instead of joining the German and Magyar revolutions. The Germans and Magyars often enough warned them of what they would gain as a result; but they have chosen this. A province which, on the pretext of wanting to achieve a special freedom for itself, joins in a conspiracy with the counter-revolution against freedom for the whole country, deserves nothing better than that finally it, too, should be cheated by the counter-revolution and cast aside.

Page Break me9.106

Page me9.106

Little is yet known of the effect of the new counter-revolutionary coup d'état on the Slavs. No news has yet come from the south or from Galicia. The Moravians are a people too demoralised and enfeebled to be likely to regard the matter otherwise than with fatuous indifference. The Czechs, on the other hand, the spokesmen of the Austrian Slavs and the ones most insultingly swindled, have already expressed their feelings. Their rage knows no bounds. They have been so greatly disappointed that public opinion in Prague has been completely revolutionised. The heads of the Slav alliance with the camarilla, the previous idols of the Czechomaniacs, people such as the Palackys, Strobachs, Brauners, are the object of general imprecation. The German-Bohemian deputies were greeted at the railway station in Prague with loud, jubilant cries. Indeed, Borrosch the Germanophil, whose house in Prague had only shortly before been demolished, made a truly triumphant entry into the capital city of pan-Slavism. The Czech students carried him shoulder high from the railway station, innumerable cries of "hurrah" for the German Lefts in the Imperial Diet were uttered, and the assembled people of Prague sang "Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland".†a

Page me9.106

Now the Czechs, too, want to elect deputies to Frankfurt, now when it is too late. But the Austrian Government will probably reply by issuing a decree recalling all the Austrian deputies sitting in St. Paul's Church.†103

Page me9.106

These pronouncements by the Czechs will exert a decisive influence on the way the other Austrian Slavs will react to the martial-law Charter. In spite of all seeming concessions, the Croats and especially the Serbs will grasp the real reason for the imperial gift, and the Galician peasants will pull wry faces when they learn that they must now after all pay compensation for the feudal burdens.
Page me9.106

The enthusiasm for Austria and the Emperor, not only of the Slav enthusiasts for nationalism and freedom, but of the Slav peasants as well, will come to an end through this coup d'état. Within fourteen days Austria will be unable to rely to the slightest degree on the Slavs, any more than it can on the Germans and Italians; Austria has now nothing else to depend on than its 600,000 soldiers and — Russia.
Page me9.106

It is this coup d'état, which is intended to establish irrevocably the unity and indivisibility of the whole predatory state, that will give the impulse for the overthrow of the Austrian monarchy, and perhaps for European wars and revolutions.

Page Break me9.107
Page me9.107

In Hungary, the army has for the second time been thrown back from the Theiss, and the strength of the Magyar revolution is daily growing more formidable; the Serbs are negotiating with the Magyars, and perhaps — even according to Austrian reports — have already gone over to them; in Croatia, dissatisfaction is daily increasing; Vienna is a volcano which can hardly be kept under by 30,000 bayonets; Italy is on the threshold of war, which at this moment has perhaps already broken out, a war in which Radetzky's demoralised bands will find opponents quite different from those of last year; the financial position is daily growing worse, each month bringing a deficit of more than five million guldens; and in addition there is now the break with the Slavs, who have had a gauntlet flung in their face at a time when they were still urgently needed, precisely as if it were desired to provoke Jellachich to lead his Croats and borderers with drums beating into the Magyar camp!
Page me9.107

That is too much for the old Austria. Only the intervention of Russia could save it, and the intervention of Russia, one more step farther than hitherto, means inevitably — a European war.
Page me9.107

Such is the pass to which Austria has been brought by the military dictatorship; it has been brought to the verge of collapse, to the most complete dissolution, to the brink of bankruptcy.
Page me9.107

The sabre can terrorise, but its power goes no further than that. The terrorism exercised by the sabre is the stupidest and most brainless of all. But the fact that a revolution has been put down by grape-shot does not mean that anything has been accomplished; it is easy to proclaim and put into effect a state of siege, but to emerge from it again, that is after all the chief thing, and that requires more than just a moustache.

Page me9.107

Precisely to come out of the exceptional state of siege, to come out of the provisional regime, and in order to “put an end to the revolution”, the aristocratic wielders of the sabre have imposed the Constitution. And precisely this Constitution is the cause that the Austrian revolution is only now really beginning.

Page me9.107

“God save Emperor Francis!”†a

Written by Engels on March 17, 1849

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 43, Moscow 1976

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.108

[THE 18th OF MARCH]

Page me9.108

Cologne, March 18. We confess to our readers that we do not know how to write any leading article for today. The March revolution in Berlin, that feeble echo of the revolution in Vienna,†104 never aroused our enthusiasm. On March 19, 1848, Berlin sang: “In Jesus is my trust!”†a We advise the worthy Berliners this time to say on March 18: “In Wrangel is my trust!”

Page me9.108

The anniversary the Neue Rheinische Zeitung will celebrate will be that of June 25.†105

Page me9.108

And what will the Kölnische Zeitung do, that is to say, the “Cologne bourgeoisie”?

Page me9.108

On March 22, 1848, the chief reproach of the Kölnische Zeitung against Herr von “Arnim” was that he had banned the Rheinische Zeitung. At that time Camphausen was not yet a Minister. We mention this for clarification.

Page me9.108

We still remember the happy time when Camphausen collaborated with us in Cologne.†106 The attitude of Camphausen to us in the past and our present attitude to him — therein lies the secret of the March revolution of 1848.

Written by Marx on March 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 249 (second edition), March 18, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.109

[THE NEUE PREUSSISCHE ZEITUNG
ON THE OCCASION OF THE 18th OF MARCH]

Page me9.109
Cologne, March 18. The organ of Frederick William IV, the Neue Preussische Zeitung, writes as follows on the occasion of March 18, 1849:

"Double woe, however, to the people that solemnly commemorates its revolution; to sin is human, but to take pride in the sin and to celebrate one's crime is of the devil."†a

Page me9.109
In a feature article of the same issue, the newspaper calls the struggle on March 18 and 19 a "bloody farce"! That is the fitting reward "to My people"†107 for having made half a revolution.
Page me9.109
Further, the newspaper reports that a few days ago Wrangel went to "inspect" Friedrichshain.†108
Page me9.109
We shall await what Herr Wrangel will "inspect" on March 18, 1850.

Written by Marx on March 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 249 (second edition), March 18, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.110

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.110
The Vienna papers are missing again tonight. Frankly, we cannot explain this limitless muddle, which is becoming worse every day.
Page me9.110

We have received news from Pest via Breslau up to the 11th of March. No official word from the theatre of war; but Magyar and Austrian reports, though not official, are in the main in complete agreement.
Page me9.110
It is becoming more and more evident every day that for the last fortnight the imperial troops have suffered one defeat after another. At least half the royal imperial Austrian generals have proved to be sheer dolts and Windischgrätz, though no less incompetent, is now throwing them out of the command. Zeisberg has completely disappeared, Karger and Deym, who compromised themselves at Szolnok, are the subject of an enquiry; Wrbna, who according to Magyar reports was chiefly to blame for the defeat of the Austrians at Mezö-Kövesd, is also said to be involved in an enquiry, and, as all reports indicate, has "fallen into disgrace" and "likely to be pensioned off".
Page me9.110
The nature of the so-called victory at Kapolna is revealed in the following report of the Vienna Lithographierte Correspondenz:

"According to the report of the Kapolna notary, who had to arrange for the burial of the fallen in the battle there, the number of dead on the Hungarian side was 1,500 and on the imperial side 4,000."†a

Page me9.110
Moreover, it is evident from Austrian reports that Schlick attended a war council in Ofen and that he is to take over the command of the Northern Army, Ban Jellachich that of the Southern Army, and that

Page Break me9.111
Field Marshal Windischgrätz will remain in Ofen. It seems that people are not completely satisfied that the twin capitals†109 will be maintained.
Page me9.111
The following reports of the Magyar correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung show what impression Windischgrätz's latest measures regarding the Hungarian banknotes†110 have made in Pest:

"Commercial circles in Pest wanted to hold a meeting to consult about this measure, but Prince Windischgrätz would not allow it. The excitement in Pest was so great that the Prince found himself compelled to send 40,000 guldens in small Austrian banknotes to pay the workers' wages. — The Pest Commercial Bank also wanted to issue a circular saying that it would accept Hungarian notes as before, but Windischgrätz prohibited the Bank from accepting these notes. The Josephi Fair now being held in Pest is as good as non-existent because of the confusion over the banknotes, and in the end it is the Austrian merchants who are most hit by this, since they can neither sell nor collect outstanding amounts."

Page me9.111
New evidence of the quite extraordinary measures which the imperial army finds itself compelled to introduce simply to retain the positions it now holds, is to be found in a decree of Windischgrätz from Ofen on March 10, which subjects the nobility and the citizens and also the cities and villages which join the rebellion to military requisitions without claim to compensation; next those sections of the nobility and the citizens which proved inactive in the imperial cause are required to bear the cost of provisioning the army; but in this case receipts will be issued and the claim to compensation is reserved. The faithful and loyal inhabitants have a special claim to full compensation; those who cause damage will incur sequestration of property.

Page me9.111
The Magyar correspondent reports from the comitats of Tolna and Baranya:

"Yesterday the Mohacs mail was returned; Mohacs and Fünfkirchen were occupied by the Hungarians. The Hungarian General Perczel has marched with 10,000 men into Pentele on the Ofen bank of the Danube. Pentele is about 8 miles distant from Ofen. 400 imperial soldiers were driven out of Földvar on the Danube by the village peasants. On the Pest side operations proceed slowly and it appears that the main force of the Hungarians is crossing over to the Ofen bank of the Danube. The Hungarians seem very anxious to save Pest from bombardment, and must therefore direct their main offensive against Ofen, and when that is taken, Pest will fall automatically."

Page me9.111
Reports that Fünfkirchen is in the hands of the Magyars and that a strong Magyar corps is marching to the right bank of the Danube certainly require confirmation.
Page me9.111
The following (Austrian) report comes from Komorn:

"Six thousand sixty-pound bombs have been brought up for the bombardment of Komorn; communication trenches are being dug around the fortress and water is run into them so as to flood the subterranean buildings of the fortress(!). The garrison consists of 10 battalions. The inhabitants must hand over food mostly for nothing, since they cannot give change for the Kossuth 100-florin notes with which the men pay."†a

Page Break me9.112

Page me9.112
"Communication trenches" by means of which "subterranean buildings are flooded" have hitherto been unknown and must be an entirely new royal imperial Austrian invention, rather like the famous balloons which were to bombard Venice.
Page me9.112
The following report comes from Transylvania; it must surely be very painful to the neighbouring journalist who is such a Russophil:

"News has arrived in a roundabout way from Transylvania which brings us up to the 4th of the month. The cities of Kronstadt and Hermannstadt have to produce a sum of 1,000 florins per day for the billeting of Russian troops, about which they have complained to the general in command. Bem is still at Mediasch and Puchner is limited to his previous forces. Without significant Russian support(?) or a diversion from the Banat (!) the pacification of unhappy Transylvania is unthinkable."†b

Page me9.112

A diversion from the Banat! As if the Serbs had not been refusing for six weeks to leave their homeland to save the haggling Flemish Jews in the Transylvanian Sachsenland!†111 And even if they wanted to, as if 40,000 Magyars on the Maros did not give them more than enough to do!

Page me9.112

According to the Ost-Deutsche Post,†c Dembinski is said to have resigned because of a dissension with Görgey, and Görgey is supposed to have become Commander-in-Chief on the Theiss. This news, which must have been sent from Pest on the 10th at the latest, appears to be a pure martial-law rumour, and is not even remotely confirmed by anyone. We give it only for the sake of completeness.

Written by Engels on March 17, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 249 (second edition), March 18, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.113

MILITARY REPORTS FROM HUNGARY

Page me9.113

Cologne, March 19. At last a Bulletin again, the 28th. But we search this document, printed in the Wiener Zeitung of March 15, in vain for reports from the Theiss, the main theatre of war; in vain we ask where Jablonowsky, Götz and their associates have gone; it is precisely on the most important events that the official Bulletin maintains a silence which speaks very loudly. On the other hand, it reports the following mighty advances of the imperial troops:

Page me9.113

1) From Transylvania:

"To put an end to the devastating action of the enemy, who threatens to reduce the Saxon districts to complete ruin by the most oppressive requisitioning of money and victuals, and also to gain the line of the Kokel and thence to advance further towards Maros-Vásárhely and to link up with the corps of Lieutenant-Field Marshal von Malkowsky, who has advanced to Bistritz, the Commanding General, Lieutenant-Field Marshal Puchner, ordered the van der Nüll brigade to advance to Stolzenburg on the 28th of last month, to Markt-Schelken on March 1, to Arbegin and Frauendorf on the 2nd, to which it was followed on the 3rd by the main corps consisting of the two brigades of Stutterheim and Kalliani. After the first brigades had fought a victorious vanguard skirmish on March 2, the next day — when all three brigades had come together — the enemy was gradually driven back from all three positions which the insurgents had occupied (before Kopisch, at the inn of Grossprobsdorf and at Mediasch), with a loss of 300 dead and wounded and 85 prisoners. The insurgents withdrew in great haste to Maros-Vásárhely, whither they were pursued by a cavalry division,†112 an infantry battalion and two guns under Lieutenant-Colonel Bussek after the occupation of Mediasch. Since preparations are now being made for the occupation of Maros-Vásárhely communication with the Malkowsky corps and Colonel Urban as well as with the Bukovina will be restored."

Page me9.113

Even if all this were true it proves merely that the imperial forces, evidently reinforced by the Russians, have taken Mediasch, while Bem was prevented by his wound from taking command. Thereby the imperial forces have gained a few miles of terrain. If the Bulletin boasts of the fact that preparations are being made for the occupation of Maros-Vásárhely and the to-be-expected restoration of communications with Malkowsky's corps in the Bukovina, it must be taken into consideration that Puchner is in Mediasch and Malkowsky at most in Bistritz, and that between these two places there lie 20 to 25 miles of high mountain country, so the boast of preparing to establish communications will mean about as much as if the Italians were to claim that by giving notice to the Piedmontese armistice†113 they had made preparations for "establishing communications" with the Magyars.

Page Break me9.114

Page me9.114

Incidentally, that Bem is seriously ill and that the Szeklers (for good reasons) have imposed really substantial contributions on the Saxon philistines as reward for their black-and-yellow†a enthusiasm is proved by the following communication†b:

"Hermannstadt, February 26. Bem, who is ill, drove to Maros-Vásárhely on the 23rd; his arm is in a very dangerous condition as a result of the amputation of a finger. — Schässburg has had to pay a contribution of 30,000 florins C.M.†114 and recently another 100,000 florins C.M. have been demanded from it and the administrative localities. — All the newspapers have mentioned the 195,000 men of the Romanian Landsturm; I can assure you that this figure exists merely on paper."

Page me9.114

2) The Bulletin reports about Komorn:

"According to reports of the siege command of Komorn the pontoon bridge between Acs and Gönyö is completed and the closer encirclement of Komorn is thereby accomplished. On the 11th of this month the garrison of the Waag bridgehead made a sortie against Hetény, which was, however, beaten back by the Veigl brigade."

Page me9.114

Duroc explained to Napoleon that Komorn was “impregnable”. Short of betrayal, therefore, the imperial forces will not get in, and the Magyars have already taken strong measures to protect themselves against treason.

Page me9.114

3) From the Banat:

“After the entire left bank of the Maros from the Transylvanian border to the Theiss was cleared of the enemy in February by the operations of the imperial Austro-Serbian army corps and the troops under Lieutenant-Field Marshal Baron Rukavina, Commanding General in the Banat, and secured by a well-planned arrangement of our troops in combination with the two fortresses of Arad and Temesvar, it seemed no longer necessary for the Serb auxiliary corps to remain in the Banat and in the Bacska comitat, and General Todorovich was in a position to comply with the wish expressed earlier by the Princely Serb Government, by allowing this brave auxiliary corps to go home to its peaceful occupation. At the beginning of this month the auxiliary corps returned to Belgrade in two steamboats along the Theiss and Danube. On March 1 General Todorovich had his headquarters at Turkish Kanizsa on the Theiss, three hours from Szegedin and Theresiopel, in the direction of which the vanguard troops were moved forward on both banks of the Theiss into the immediate neighbourhood of these towns.”

Page Break me9.115

Page me9.115

Really! The Serb auxiliary corps was no longer necessary! And what, then, has become of the mighty expedition to Transylvania and Grosswardein, which the last Bulletin but two announced with so much pomp?†a After the left bank of the Maros has been cleared, the imperial troops suddenly confine themselves to the defensive, instead of marching on! But there are reasons for this, for which we must not, of course, ask the royal imperial bulletins. On the other hand, the organ of the Slavs, the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen, is enlightening us on this point. This paper carries a letter from the Sava, of March 9†b:

“With every day dissensions increase among us, with every day our situation becomes more oppressive, and we are learning by experience that in this great struggle of the nations we have helped to stage the uncommonly instructive fable of the squeezed lemon. We have not yet recovered from the shock produced by the last order of Ban Jellachich introducing the German language; we have not yet forgotten the profound grief which stirred within us when we heard that all volunteer forces from the Serb principality might return home, and blow after blow new misfortunes are rained upon us. And now Prince Windischgrätz has issued an order to Patriarch Rajachich and General Todorovich to dissolve all national departments which have existed in the Voivodina since its conquest, and likewise to abolish all garrisons except the imperial garrisons, and to restore the old army commands and regiments to their former powers. This order of the Field Marshal caused much suspicion and dissatisfaction, and everyone was anxiously waiting for the reply of the Patriarch which, when it appeared, cheered the gloomy faces and gave room for hope. It said: 'So long as I am the administrator of these lands, I shall and will not admit this dissolution; this must not and cannot be. If you, however, insist on your order, I shall dissolve everything, but I cannot be held responsible for what the nation will say to that.' No less satisfactory was the reply of General Todorovich. A most disagreeable impression has been made by the news of the dissolution of the Kremsier Imperial Diet and the Constitution which has been imposed.†115"

Page me9.115

And when the Bulletin reports on the siege of Peterwardein as follows:

"Master of Ordnance†116 Count Nugent himself is engaged in the negotiations about the surrender of the important fortress of Peterwardein, where among the majority of the troops and of the population such a strong inclination to return to their duties has shown itself that this gives us great hope that we shall again see the royal imperial colours decorate this important military point in a few days, as they do the fortress of Esseg",

Page Break me9.116
Page me9.116

the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen replies with the following South-Slav Miserere:

"From the Drava, March 9. Nugent has moved his headquarters from Dalja to Cerevic in Syrmien, but Dalja must remain occupied since it could serve as a base for a sudden raid. Incidentally, the fact that troop detachments are frequently ordered to two different places and then it turns out that these contradictory orders were given in most pressing circumstances, indicates to some extent how insufficient our armed forces are.
Page me9.116
"At Theresiopel in the Bacska comitat the Magyar troops mentioned yesterday were opposed only by three battalions and they had to yield to too great a superior force.
Page me9.116
"In the operations against Peterwardein we are advancing rapidly. Consignments of siege guns leave Esseg daily in this direction, so there is not a word of truth in the babble about the imminent surrender of the fortress. Everything rests on sanguine illusions, although what has not yet happened will beyond doubt(!) happen, perhaps (!!) soon (!!!). The Austrian Serbs, who are much disgusted at the recall of their brothers from the other side of the border, do not even approve of the imperial troops operating against Peterwardein, for they regard this fortress as their own property and claim that their own national troops should take it. In the light of Stratimirovich's reservations, this reflects a certain mood which is now becoming articulate among the masses and the middle classes in the form of an admission that one wants to see whether Magyars, Swabians or Serbs will rule here. And here too we see that the particularist interests have the upper hand, and that there seems to be more concern for their attainment than for the preservation of the federal empire."†a

Page me9.116

It is quite evident that thunderclouds are gathering in the Serbian Voivodina for the foundering Austrian united monarchy, and that we were right to point out some time ago how little the camarilla can still rely on the Serbs.†b But the following lines show that this does not refer to the Serbs alone, but that all the Southern Slavs share the same discontent with the renewed Austrian perfidy:

"Some Agram papers of the 9th already publish the imposed Constitution and reports on the dissolution of the Imperial Diet. We searched these papers in vain for effusions of joy; on the contrary, the Slavenski jug of the 10th expresses unconcealed resentment, and the Südslavische Zeitung of the 9th contains a few lines deploring this event."†c

Page me9.116

The official Wiener Zeitung moreover contains the following from Agram:

"For several days mobile national guards have been arriving, having arbitrarily left their posts on the cordon, alleging that they have received neither pay nor bread for some weeks. Whether this is really so, and if it is so, whose fault it is, we do not know; but in any case we must regret the return of our guards, who, against all expectations, devoted themselves eagerly to the cordon service, since the distrust aroused in the guardsmen by any withholding of their pay can have incalculably bad consequences. In any case it would be desirable for the worthy Banal Council†117 to discover the reasons for this unauthorised return of the guards, make them public, and finally punish the guilty severely."†a

Page Break me9.117

Page me9.117

All danger to the Magyars from the Slav south has consequently been eliminated, particularly since Knicanin, the most popular Serbian leader after Stratimirovich, has likewise returned to his fatherland, Turkish Serbia.

Page me9.117

4) The Bulletin suddenly admits in the most naive way that, as the Magyar correspondence quite correctly reported, the Hungarian guerillas have again advanced to the Danube in the rear of the Austrians:

"The communication by water along the Danube has only been interrupted by bands of armed Landsturm brought together by hostile fanatics in the area of Kalocsa, Pataj and Solt, who wanted to stir up the right bank of the Danube at Paks and Földvar previously completely pacified. Suitable reinforcements which the garrison of Fünfkirchen has received from Slavonia, under Colonel Reiche, an expedition which three days ago went in 15 tugboats to the disturbed areas of both banks of the Danube on order from His Highness Field Marshal Prince Windischgrätz, and the operations of those troops of the army corps of Master of Ordnance Count Nugent which had been stationed at Szekszard and Mohacs and were commanded by Colonel Baron Lederer, will already have put a stop to these vain enterprises of dispersed enemy hordes and made the threatened areas permanently safe."

Page me9.117

"Will have made safe"! The royal imperial bulletins' habit of never reporting genuinely completed actions but only actions still to be accomplished, is becoming all too repetitive. If Welden does not give up this habit it will probably become impossible even for the Kölnische Zeitung to defend his bulletins.

Page me9.117

In short: that the peasants have rebelled is a fact, and that the Austrians will pacify them is a futurity.

Page me9.117

This is all the Bulletin reports. Fortunately, the silence of this official document does not prevent our receiving other news from the Theiss. A report asserts that Szolnok has again been evacuated by the Magyars. That this is a lie is proved by the silence of the Austrian Bulletin. On the contrary, the imperial troops are in a very difficult position there. The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen wails from Pest on March 10:

"If only the hundredth part of the verbal bulletins of the Magyars is to be believed we shall have the Hungarians in Pest-Ofen on March 15 at the latest. For my part I still rely confidently on the victory of the imperial arms. According to a fairly reliable source the Austrian army was still in Abony yesterday; but according to the reports of the local malcontents the imperial troops have withdrawn far beyond Szegléd and the Hungarians took this place at the point of the bayonet. Today the decisive battle is to be fought. May the God of Victory be with the imperial flag. I do not see ghosts and I do not believe in premonitions, but my heart will beat more calmly when the 15th of March has gone happily by. On that date, according to my blind faith, the last spark of danger for Pest-Ofen will be extinguished. The Hungarians are said to be firmly determined to celebrate this day with a mighty deed of arms."†a

Page Break me9.118

Page me9.118

So there is still danger for Budapest! The Vienna Lithographierte Correspondenz writes, moreover:

"On the other hand, the reports on the stubborn resistance with which the royal imperial army is meeting corroborate each other. The latter has been increased to 148,000 men, it is true; but only a third of this number is used in military operations. The courage and daring of the Hungarian hussars is reported to be excellent and in particular the Wallmoden cuirassier regiment has suffered heavily from them. The inhospitable nature of the region in which the royal imperial troops are now encamped also contributes to making the campaign more difficult."

Page me9.118

Maklar, according to authentic news the most remote village occupied by the imperial troops, was burnt down by them because there five waggons of ammunition have been played into the hands of the Magyars. The alleged culprits, five in number, were executed without ceremony. Such is the civilised conduct of the war by which the noble Windischgrätz seeks to ensure the victory which has hitherto eluded his colours. He also issued the following proclamation, the essential contents of which we indicated yesterday†b:

Pest. “Hereby the following is decreed:
Page me9.118
“1) All requisitioning will from now on be borne by the nobility and citizens who have taken part in the rebellion in Hungary without claim to any compensation or indemnification.
Page me9.118
“2) All cities and villages which join the rebellion or which allow themselves to be misled into joining the Landsturm under any pretext whatever also come into this category.
Page me9.118
“3) The heads of any comitat, district, town and village, as well as all public officials and landowners who leave their posts or residences at the approach of the royal imperial troops and thereby not only make the provisioning of the army more difficult but also lead to the oppression of the poor and innocent classes of the population, will immediately have their entire property, movable or immovable, conscribed and sequestered, and the produce and cattle found will at once be used to provision the royal imperial troops. Individuals and officials causing any damage to the imperial treasury with evil intent, who make loyal subjects of His Majesty the object of persecution or, given the opportunity, fail to prevent this to the best of their ability, come into the same category.
Page me9.118
“4) Whatever else may be required for the provisioning of the royal imperial troops will be collected from that section of the more prosperous noblemen and citizens which has proved inactive in the sacred and just cause of His Majesty our most gracious Emperor and King.†c These requisitions are, however, exacted against receipt and their claim to indemnification is reserved.

Page Break me9.119
Page me9.119
“5) The peasants are obliged, it is true, to deliver immediately and without opposition any objects of requisition which are demanded by the royal imperial troop commanders, but complete compensation is guaranteed them from the properties of the above-mentioned categories 1, 2 and 3.
Page me9.119
“6) In particular all those who have suffered or will suffer damage at the hands of the rebels for showing firm loyalty to His Majesty have a claim to complete. compensation.
Page me9.119
“7) Should the compensation from the properties of the three mentioned categories guaranteed under paragraphs 5 and 6 be insufficient, the damages to those concerned will be conscientiously assessed by impartial commissions, and apportioned to the comitat or the whole land according to circumstances on fair principles.

Page me9.119
Headquarters, Ofen, March 10, 1849.
Alfred, Prince zu Windischgrätz,
Royal Imperial Field Marshal."†a

Page me9.119
The fusillades are also beginning again. Thus the Breslauer Zeitung writes:

"According to reports of the 13th from Pest the Major of the perjured Zanini infantry regiment, who was taken prisoner at Kapolna, has been shot under martial law."

Page me9.119
We hope Kossuth will not fail to take proper revenge for this foul murder.
Page me9.119
These measures, combined with the stubborn silence of "Prince" Windischgrätz, prove more clearly than anything how brilliantly the all-mighty royal imperial army is faring on the Theiss and how soon "the war in Hungary will come to an end".
Page me9.119
Finally we have from the Carpathians the following brief note which only proves how little progress the imperial forces are making there and how much the inhabitants of the Zips dislike the Slovak so-called Landsturm, which consists of mere riff-raff. The mass of the Slovak people, as we have often said already, support the Magyars. The article reads:

"Kaschau, March 3. Field Marshal Ramberg has issued a proclamation by virtue of which the population is ordered to regard the Slovak Landsturm with the same respect as the imperial troops. At the same time the leader of the Landsturm is authorised in accordance with the proclamation issued by Prince Windischgrätz on January 1 of this year to raze to the ground any place that dares to attack them. — Tomorrow Hurban, Štúr and other elected (!) trusted representatives (!) of the Slovak people are going to Olmütz to present to the Emperor the just wishes and grievances (!) of their people."†b

Page Break me9.120
Page me9.120
Messrs. Štúr and Hurban are such good "trusted representatives" of the Slovaks that they have already been chased over the Jablunka Pass to Moravia several times by these selfsame Slovaks!
Page me9.120
Lastly we draw attention to a proclamation of Windischgrätz of the 11th,†a in which he demonstrates how little the cause of the insurgents is a national cause since among 100 prisoners one meets at least 60 individuals of different nationality.
Page me9.120
Quod erat demonstrandum! The Magyars have always had it cast in their teeth that their struggle was not a fight for liberty but a national struggle! Indeed! Nobody is so clever as an Austrian Field Marshal! In the same proclamation the hard-pressed Windischgrätz calls for volunteer corps against the Magyars.

Page me9.120

A fine opportunity for our colleagues, the gentlemen of the Kölnische Zeitung!

Written by Engels on March 19, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 250, March 20, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.121

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.121

Striking evidence of the fortunes of the imperial cause is given by the following report from Vienna:

“The claim made by several newspapers that the situation in Hungary has taken a serious turn has been officially denied. Yet the public firmly believes this to be so.”

Page me9.121

Consequently, the day after the publication of an official bulletin,†a Welden still has to make a point of assuring the people that the situation in Hungary has not “taken a serious turn”! As though such a fact were not itself quite enough!

Page me9.121

In addition, the following martial-law gossip has been disseminated in Vienna:

“The army operating in Hungary is occupying the following positions: Tokaj is occupied by Götz's brigade, Miskolcz by Jablonowsky's brigade; Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick's army corps is at Erlau; and the bulk of the army is concentrated between this area and Szolnok; the Ban has his headquarters at Szegléd, the Prince Field Marshal at Ofen.”

Page me9.121

It is very difficult to deny that Schlick is at Erlau and Jellachich at Szegléd, for already a week ago they were occupying these positions which are situated far in the rear. But it is obviously untrue that Jablonowsky is in Miskolcz and especially that Götz is in Tokaj. The authors of yesterday's Bulletin must surely have known this.

Page me9.121

The Breslauer Zeitung contains the following report from Hungary, which on this occasion, exceptionally, we must regard as very dubious, and at least the first half as nothing but gossip circulating in Pest:

“The Rascians†118 have again been routed by the Hungarians at Theresiopel. As a result, the imperial commandant of the Temesvar fortress, General Rukavina, has sent a courier to Windischgrätz at Pest requesting immediate assistance, as otherwise he would have to surrender. The Hungarian General Görgey has raised the siege of the Komorn fortress, which was already being bombarded by the imperial Lieutenant-Field Marshal Simunich. Simunich has retreated towards Leopoldstadt, leaving behind a great quantity of baggage. Lieutenant-Field Marshal Count Schlick, to whom Windischgrätz entrusted the conduct of the retreat, arrived in Pest yesterday. In private conversation, Schlick expressed the greatest admiration for Dembinski. — Because of the new, extremely tight blockade, we are without reliable information on the present position of the Hungarian army, but the continuing return flow of guns and ammunition clearly indicates that the Hungarians are advancing. Yesterday, a Hungarian patrol entered Promontor, an hour and a half from Ofen, causing the greatest alarm in the Ofen fortress. Most of the Viennese wholesalers who are in Pest for the Josephi Fair currently in progress, have had their goods packed and sent back to Vienna.”

Page Break me9.122

Page me9.122
Through the Austrian correspondent we have received the following reports from Transylvania. We are printing these, too, only with the greatest reservations, for they are excessively biased in favour of the Austrian side.

“Kronstadt, February 22. The local Saxon magistrate, who initially approached General Lüders for Russian help, seems already now not to be very happy about having done so. The Russians here have indeed acted in a rather extraordinary manner. There are reports of things occurring which, if they were confirmed, would indeed make the speedy removal of the Russian auxiliary troops desirable. In Kronstadt a sort of income tax has been levied on the inhabitants for the maintenance of the Russian troops; while we previously thought that this burden would on no account be imposed upon us. — There is talk of large Turkish armies arriving here after marching through Wallachia; more Russian troops are also expected here.”
Page me9.122
“Hermannstadt, February 26. Diverse rumours are circulating here about Bem, proof that there is no precise information about his movements. Today it was said here that Bem had died as a result of the amputation he had undergone (!), which I do not yet believe. What is true is that he is short of munitions. As (!) he is expecting reinforcements and munitions from Hungary via Klausenburg, he is directing his force towards Maros-Vásárhely; for (!) even though Colonel Urban is operating with only four battalions of regulars, Bem is much more afraid of this hero than of all the corps commanders together with the Russian Cossacks. After spending two weeks here in inactivity, the troops were today beginning to move. At this moment two brigades are on the march, one towards Schässburg, the other towards Blasendorf via Mediasch. The Romanian Prefect A. Sever, who was posted in Resinari with 400 Landsturm men, has also received orders to march towards Blasendorf. Assistance from the Banat has still not arrived; on the other hand, there is talk of more Russian troops on their way here. I give the less credence to this as reports from the neighbouring country all agree that large Turkish forces are moving towards Wallachia."

Written by Engels about March 20, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 251, March 21, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.123

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.123

Since the failure of the second attempt of the imperial forces to cross the Theiss, military operations have again come to a halt. Windischgrätz is in Ofen, ostensibly to settle administrative matters; Schlick and Jellachich have held a council of war with him, at which the plan of operations was substantially changed. Schlick remains in command of the army of the North; Jellachich, having vainly sought for months to effect a crossing of the Theiss at Szolnok, will now give this up altogether and move southwards to Theresiopel, to unite his forces with the Serbs and border troops stationed at Szegedin, and will probably try to capture Szegedin, in order then to cross the Theiss there and operate on its left bank against Debreczin. The Magyars will know how to give him an appropriate welcome. It is questionable whether he will succeed in persuading the Serbian Landsturm, which constitutes the bulk of the troops stationed there, to join his army.

Page me9.123

In the Banat of Temesvar, all is quiet. The Serbs, whose awareness of Austria's perfidy, by which they were duped, is growing daily, are not attacking anywhere. But without them, the imperial troops stationed there can do nothing. The Südslavische Zeitung reports from there:

"At Alt-Arad, the insurgents have once again concentrated a considerable body of troops under the command of the insurgent General Damjanich (previously a captain in the Rukavina regiment), General Vetter (previously a major in the Don Miguel regiment) and Colonel Gaal (a pensioned-off royal imperial Lieutenant-Colonel), who is leading the siege of the fortress."†a

Page Break me9.124

Page me9.124

The insurrection in the comitats of Tolna and Baranya is becoming daily more threatening. All available troops have been sent there. It is worth noting that the Baranya comitat, the core of the insurrection, is for the most part populated by Slavs, Serbs and Slavonians.

Page me9.124
In Transylvania, a French officer is said to have assumed command during Bem's illness. The operations at Szolnok are also said to have been directed by a Frenchman named Duchatel.
Page me9.124
We shall return in more detail†a to the Slav “troubles”, which are taking an ever more edifying turn.

Written by Engels about March 21, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 252, March 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.125

THE HOHENZOLLERN PRESS BILL

Page me9.125
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 252, March 22, 1849]

Cologne, March 21. In accordance with our promise†a we return to the Hohenzollern plans to reform the freedom of the press and the right of association, plans which owe their inspiration to the state of siege. Today, a comparison with the previous plans for penal legislation, which were already rejected by the Rhenish Diet†119 under the aegis of the Camphausen opposition, will suffice to show what glorious “achievements” the Rhinelanders owe to the March uprising in Berlin, and what fresh features of the Prussian Law's love of violence have been bestowed on Rhenish legislation†120 by the “unweakened” Crown of the Grand Duke in Berlin.†b
Page me9.125
Two years ago at the United Diet, which as one remembers was brought into being by royal patent,†121 the junker Thadden-Triglaff from the Pomeranian Mancha entered the lists on behalf of freedom of the press. This associate of the Westphalian “valiant” young knight Vincke wielded his lance:

“Yes, public, but really public, proceedings for the gentlemen of the press:
Page me9.125
“Freedom of the press, and along with it the gallows!”†122

Page me9.125
The Bills which the November Government†c seeks to impose represent the re-emergence of these old pre-March patented efforts. The “strong Crown of Prussia” exclaims in reply to the hated provisions of the Code pénal, and to the acquittal verdicts of Rhenish juries against tax refusers and agitators:

Page Break me9.126
Page me9.126
"Yes, public, but really public, proceedings:
Page me9.126
"Freedom of the press, and along with it the gallows, the gallows of the Prussian Law!"
Page me9.126
The provisions of the Code pénal entirely ignore the easily offended susceptibility of the feelings of His Hohenzollern Majesty. In spite of the property qualification and infiltration by the police, it is not possible to find Rhenish jurymen who would punish the unspeakable crime of lése-majesté with anything more than the 5-franc fine for insult to a "private person". The imperial despotism had too high an opinion of itself to state that its majesty could be "insulted", but the Christian-Germanic Father-of-the-people consciousness which understandably can in no way bear comparison with the lofty eminence of Napoleonic pride, feels a "deep-seated need" to re-establish the protection of its old-Prussian dignity in its Rhenish Grand Duchy. The "strong" Crown does not dare to abolish the Rhenish legal system, but it grafts on it the much more promising shoot of the legal concepts of the Prussian Law and exclaims:
Page me9.126
"Public, really public proceedings, and along with them the gallows of the Prussian Law!"
Page me9.126
As regards the "public proceedings" which for the time being are to be imposed on the Rhenish Code para. 22 of the Bill states:

"The police authorities are entitled to confiscate any publication intended for distribution wherever found, even if it has already begun to be issued, insofar as ... its content provides the basis for a crime or offence which can be administratively the subject of prosecution."

Page me9.126
The police is entitled to confiscate newspapers displeasing to it in the post and in offices even if they have "already begun to be issued", that is to say, when the "preventive measures" of the police "as such" are supposed to cease and the matter "legally" comes within the competence of the courts. The police possesses this right of confiscation in all cases where the "content" of publications, newspapers etc. "provides the basis for a crime or offence" which can be "the subject of prosecution" "administratively", i.e. by the police, that is to say, where the police wishes to indulge its Uckermark†123 hankerings to play the role of the Public Prosecutor's office and considers it necessary to justify this inclination by the extremely odd plea of some kind of "crime or offence" or other circumstances which "can be the subject of prosecution". Finally, the police can confiscate all such printed matter, c'est-á-dire all that it suits the lord and his holy Hermandad†124 to confiscate, wherever found, that is to say, it can invade private houses and the secrets of family life, and where there are no grounds for protecting property by means of the state of siege and the Croats, under the power afforded by constitutional legality the private property of law-abiding citizens can be plundered by the police. The Bill, moreover, speaks of all publications “intended” for distribution, “even if” their issue has already begun; this presupposes “as a matter of course” the right of confiscation where the distribution has not yet begun, which cannot yet be the basis for any “crime or offence”, and thus extends police robbery to the private possession of objects which are not legally “liable to prosecution”. The French September laws,†125 the sabrerattling censorship of Cavaignac's military dictatorship, and even the Bills on penal legislation put before the old Provincial Diets and Committees “to the displeasure of His Majesty”, at least respected private property that “still gives no grounds for crime or offence”. The press Bill based on the March achievements in Berlin, on the other hand, organises a public police vendetta against private property and the possessions of citizens and in the name of Christian-Germanic police morality violently drags into public view personal matters that have nothing whatever to do with penal law.

Page Break me9.127
Page me9.127
“Public, really public proceedings, and along with them the gallows of the Prussian Law!”
Page me9.127
The improvement of these public proceedings goes hand in hand with improving the provisions of the Prussian Law.
Page me9.127
The desired enactment concerning lése-majesté is “constituted” in para. 12 in the following way:

“Anyone who by word, writing, printing or signs, by pictorial or other representation, violates respect for the King will be punished by imprisonment of from two months to five years.”

Page me9.127
If the Rhenish subjects do not know what degree of “respect” is demanded from them by their Hohenzollern Grand Duke, who was foisted on them by the haggling over nations at Vienna,†126 they can look up the preamble to the Berlin penal law.
Page me9.127
Up to now, the highest sentence that could be imposed by the Prussian Law†127 for lése-majesté was two years, and for violation of respect one year, of imprisonment or detention in a fortress (Prussian Law [Allgemeines Landrecht], II. 20. paras. 199, 200).
Page me9.127
These provisions, however, do not seem to have been an adequate safeguard for the august feelings of the “strong Crown of Prussia”. Already in the “Bill concerning penal law for the Prussian states” submitted to the United Commissions†128 of 1847, “utterances in words or writing, or by pictures etc., which intentionally violate the honour of the King (para. 101), are punishable by six months' to five years' penal labour". On the other hand, however, "utterances and actions which, although not to be regarded in themselves as insults to the King, nevertheless violate due respect to him (para. 102), are punishable by imprisonment of from six weeks to one year." In the official preamble to this Bill it is stated that while it is true that the Saxon Diet (in connection with a similar Bill of 1843) had proposed that "violation of respect" should be more narrowly defined by the addition of the word "intentional" in order to prevent utterances and actions being brought under the law "in which there was not the remotest intention to violate respect for the King", nevertheless such an addition must be rejected by the Government because it "would blur the distinction between lése-majesté and violation of respect" and because "intentional" violations of "respect" must be regarded as "lése-majesté".

Page Break me9.128
Page me9.128
From these reasons, which are still paramount in regard to the concepts used in the press law which is about to be imposed on us, it follows that "violation of respect", which at the present time like lése-majesté is punished by two months' to five years' imprisonment, consists precisely in "unintentional" lése-majesté.
Page me9.128
At the same time the "preamble" informs us that the maximum length of punishment for "violation of respect" was at that time fixed at one year solely because of a motion by the Rhenish Diet.
Page me9.128
The benefit of the "March achievements" for the Rhinelanders is obvious. The first attempts to adapt the Code pénal to the Prussian Law foisted on the Rhinelanders the new crimes of lése-majesté punishable by two years' imprisonment and "violation of respect" punishable by one year's imprisonment.†129 In the Bills put forward in 1843 and 1847, the value of lése-majesté was increased to five years, whereas, on the motion of the Rhenish Diet, violation of respect had to retain its valuation of one year. By the achievements of the March revolt under the state of siege, punishment for "violation of respect" (even if unintentional) is also increased to five years' imprisonment and by once again introducing new crimes the Rhenish Code of Law is brought closer to the old-Prussian Law.
Page me9.128
"Freedom of the press, public proceedings under the state of siege, and along with them the gallows!"

Page me9.128
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 253, March 23, 1849]
Cologne, March 22.

"There was all the more reason why the provisions concerning lése-majesté could not be omitted," states Manteuffel's preamble to para. 12 of the Bill, "because in the greater part of the Rhine Province the penal laws on lése-majesté had been made invalid by the ordinance of April 15, 1848, and since then this gap has not been filled."

Page Break me9.129
Page me9.129

The Manteuffel preamble states that this part of the Hohenzollern legislation on the press, which surpasses even the old-Prussian Law and His Majesty's revelation in the Bills on penal legislation of 1843 and 1847, appeared essential chiefly with reference to the Rhine Province. The ordinances of April 15, 1848,†a i.e. the promises which the "Crown that had fallen into the dust" (see the Neue Preussische Zeitung of the 20th of this month) condescended to make under the pressure of the March uprising, have "rendered invalid" in the Rhine Province the laboriously imposed adjustment made in the spirit of the Prussian Law and restored the Code pénal in its original defective purity. But in order fittingly to fill this "gap" due to the March achievements and simultaneously to testify to the progressive capacity for expanding the Hohenzollern Majesty's value the "strong" November Government proposes for the Rhinelanders not the old pre-March provisions of the Prussian Law, — no, it proposes a new declaration of respect for the King envisaging a punishment more than double that of all previous penal law projects. Le roi est mort, vive le roi!†b Prior to March 1848, the still "unweakened" dignity of the Father of the people was valued in the Prussian Law at one year's imprisonment; in March 1849 the cost of disrespect to the Crown which had "fallen into the dust" has risen to five years' imprisonment. Prior to March 1848, the Rhenish law was supplemented only by the patriarchal additional provisions of the Prussian Law; in March 1849 the Manteuffel November achievements have been imposed on it:
Page me9.129

"Freedom of the press, sabre-rattling censorship, and along with them the gallows!"
Page me9.129

The "gap" in Rhenish legislation, however, reveals still further depths. Para. 12 of the Berlin press reform continues with the following additions:

"The same punishment" (from two months' to five years' imprisonment) "is incurred by anyone who in the way indicated above" (by word, writing or signs, by pictorial or other representation) "insults the Queen. Anyone who in the same way insults the successor to the throne (?) or any other member of the royal house ... will be punished by imprisonment of from one month to three years."

Page me9.129

As already mentioned, the old-Prussian Law punished insult even to the "supreme head of the state" with only two years' imprisonment. The advance made by the Bill on the press, which lays down the term of imprisonment for insult to persons of lower rank — five years for the Queen, three years for the successor to the throne (?) and "other" members of the "royal house" — is very obvious.

Page Break me9.130
Page me9.130

Rhenish legislation no more recognises insult to the Queen etc. than it does insult to the “supreme head of the state”. Rhenish newspapers hitherto were able with impunity to print stories about “hopes of the court for an unexpected event”, which at times can, however, for medical reasons, amount to impugning the honour of the person involved.
Page me9.130

Finally, the ex-patented Bill on penal legislation of the United Commissions ranked insult to the “Queen” as inferior to insult to the “supreme head of the state”, by threatening it (para. 103) with three years' imprisonment instead of five years. And as regards equal punishment for insults to the “Queen” and insults to other members of the royal family, the 1847 preamble states that the Rhenish, Silesian, Saxon and Pomeranian Diets had already wanted a distinction to be made between these persons but that the Government could not put this lamentable “casuistry” into effect.
Page me9.130

The strong Manteuffel Government did not consider the “casuistry” of the old Rhenish, Silesian and Saxon Diets beneath its dignity. Was not the successful von der Heydt also among the patented casuists of that period? The Manteuffel-von der Heydt press Bill “establishes” the casuistic distinction between the Queen and other members of the royal house; but it does it in accordance with the progressive development of the sovereign's dignity in general in the post-March period. The old Rhenish, Silesian and Pomeranian Diets demanded that a distinction be made between the Queen and other members of the royal family so that the equal punishment of three years' imprisonment for insulting the latter would be reduced. The strong Manteuffel-von der Heydt Government accepts the distinction, not in order to make this reduction but to raise the punishment for insulting the Queen to the newly increased level of punishment for insulting the “supreme head of the state”.
Page me9.130

That the concepts of majesty show a similar capacity for development is proved by the provision appended to the same paragraph, according to which insults to any “German head of state” and likewise insults to the “successor to the throne” are punished by three years' imprisonment.
Page me9.130

According to Rhenish law, insults to other “heads of state” are punished like insults to private persons (a fine of 5 francs), and that only on the demand of the person insulted and not because his public character is the concern of penal law. Under the Bill on penal legislation which had already been rejected by the Rhenish Diet in

Page Break me9.131
1843 thus incurring “the displeasure of His Majesty”, and which was again put forward in 1847, insults to foreign rulers and “their spouses” incurred punishment of from two months' imprisonment to two years' penal labour. The Prussian Diet moved the entire deletion of this provision and the Westphalian opposition of junkers from the backwoods declared the original level of punishment too high. Finally the Manteuffel-von der Heydt Government filled the serious post-March gaps in the Rhenish legislation by increasing to three years the two years' term of punishment which the Westphalians elected on a property qualification were opposing, and by taking up the cudgels on behalf of the Pomeranian Don Quixote of the United Diet:

Page me9.131

“Freedom of the press, really public proceedings, and along with them the gallows!”

Page me9.131

In the plans for press reform inspired by His Majesty, para. 19 has furthermore a noteworthy amusing feature:

“Anyone guilty of insulting 1. either of the two Chambers (“as such”), 2. a member of either Chamber during the course of its sittings, 3. any other political organisation, an official authority, or an official ... by word, writing, printing, signs, by pictorial or other representation, will be punished by up to nine months' imprisonment.”

Page me9.131

While Manteuffel-von der Heydt are using bayonets to disperse “political organisations”, Agreement Assemblies and Chambers, the Rhinelanders are having a botchwork of new crimes for “the protection of these Assemblies” inserted in their Code pénal to fill up its “gaps”. From the divine-royal source of grace, the Manteuffelvon der Heydt Government is foisting on the country a national Constitution in order to introduce into the Rhenish Code of Law a new, hitherto unknown crime in the shape of “insult to the Chambers”:

Page me9.131

“Freedom of the press, public proceedings, and along with them the gallows!”

Page me9.131

Let the Rhinelanders take care before it is too late. The history of previous attempts to adapt the Rhenish Code of Law to the Prussian Law, and the Hohenzollern further elaboration of the March promises, will tell them what they have to expect from the achievements made on the other side of the Rhine.

Page me9.131

The aim of the martial-law attacks against the Code pénal hitherto has been nothing less than the complete incorporation of the Rhine territories in the old-Prussian provinces, an incorporation which was not complete so long as the Rhine Province was not wholly subjected to the cudgel of the Prussian Law. The new Bill, however, under the pretext of filling the “gaps” in the Rhinelanders' own legislation by means of the benefits of the Prussian Law, perfects also the Prussian Law for the old provinces as regards its “gap” of excessive mildness.

Page Break me9.132

Page me9.132

Miserable as the present Chamber is, nevertheless we do not expect it to accept these Bills. But in that case we do expect that there will be imposed on us also the Hohenzollern gallows for the press, and that is precisely what we wish.

Written by Marx on March 21-22, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 252 and 253, March 22 and 23, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.133

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.133

The news from the theatre of war is not very noteworthy today. Jellachich has returned to Pest, after having been defeated, according to the Magyar report, by the Hungarians at Jasz-Bereny. One thousand wounded are said to have already arrived at Ofen. Schlick, too, is still in Ofen. The Magyar report continually declares that Görgey has invaded Slovakia with 30,000 men and occupied the hill towns (though for the time being we are regarding this as a Pest extravagance).

Page me9.133

In the Földvar region, there were 2,000 Honveds†130 and 6,000 peasant insurgents. The ships sent there with the troops returned, however, already on the following day, without having accomplished anything. Mounted bands of rebels are swarming right up to the outskirts of Pest (Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen†a).

Page me9.133

The Austrian Minister Schwarzenberg and the ex-Finance Minister Kübeck are said to be in Pest, to settle the affair of the Hungarian banknotes. (Magyar report.)

Page me9.133

The report of a victory of the Serbs at Theresiopel and of the capture of this town has now been transformed into news of their defeat and the admission that the Magyars have now occupied in addition to Szegedin Theresiopel as well. Great agitation reigns in Syrmien, as among all the Southern Slavs.

Written by Engels on March 22, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 253, March 23, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.134

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.134

According to letters of the 6th of March from the Moldavian border, the Russians stationed in Transylvania have not merely been reinforced by 8,000 men, but another Russian corps is standing on the border of the Bukovina, awaiting the order to move into the Bukovina. Bem has assembled considerable reinforcements and is threatening Hermannstadt for the third time. Malkowsky's corps (commanded by Urban) has had to retreat — to the border of the Bukovina, and once again to surrender the town of Bistritz to the Hungarians.

Written by Engels about March 23, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 254, March 24, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.135

THE DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN BERLIN

Page me9.135

Cologne, March 25. We must confess to our readers that it is only with reluctance that we can resolve to take a closer look at the debates of the so-called Second Chamber†131 in Berlin. The debates of the dissolved Agreement Assembly,†132 meaningless and dull as they were, nevertheless had the interest of being topical. The debates dealt with things which had no influence on the fate of Europe, and with laws which from the outset had no prospect of endurance, but they did deal with matters of immediate interest to us, and they provided a faithful mirror of the mounting reaction in Prussia. The debates of the present Chamber, on the other hand, serve no other purpose than that of legalising the already completed counter-revolution. They do not deal with the present time — that has been excluded by the ban on interpellations — they deal with the past, with the temporary interregnum lasting from December 5 to February 26,†133 and if the Chamber does not unconditionally recognise this interregnum it will be dispersed and once again its activity will have been in vain.

Page me9.135

And people are supposed to take an interest in such deliberations, at a time when the revolution and the counter-revolution are fighting it out arms in hand in Hungary and Italy, when the Russians are stationed on the Eastern frontier and France is preparing for a new world-shaking revolution!

Page me9.135

The debate on the Address is altogether one of the dreariest that we remember ever having read. The whole debate turned, of course, merely on recognition or non-recognition of the imposed so-called Constitution.†134 And what does it matter whether this Chamber, which was elected in circumstances of a state of siege and the crushing effect of a successfully carried out counter-revolution, which deliberates in a corner of Berlin under the state of siege, and which dare not utter a word of dissent if it does not want to be dissolved — what does it matter whether such an Assembly recognised this document or not? As if recognition or non-recognition would make the slightest difference to the course of the European revolution, which will reduce to dust all the imposed and not-imposed constitutions now in force!

Page Break me9.136
Page me9.136
The sole feature of interest in the whole debate is the puerile arrogance of the Right and the cowardly collapse of the Left.
Page me9.136
The royalist gentlemen are incorrigible. As soon as their affairs are temporarily again in better shape thanks to the aid of the obedient soldiery, they imagine themselves back in the promised land and adopt a tone whose impudence surpasses anything the police state has ever shown.
Page me9.136
The gentlemen of the Left, on the other hand, moderate their claims to the same extent as those of the Right increase theirs. In all their speeches, one can discern the broken spirit that is the result of bitter disappointment, that dejection of the ex-member of the Assembly which first let the revolution sink in the mire and afterwards, drowning in the morass of its own creation, perished with the painful cry: The people are not yet mature enough!
Page me9.136
Even the resolute members of the Left, instead of putting themselves into direct opposition to the whole Assembly, do not abandon the hope of achieving something in the Chamber and through the Chamber, and of winning a majority for the Left. Instead of adopting an extra-parliamentary position in the parliament, the only honourable one in such a Chamber, they make one concession after another to parliamentary expediency; instead of ignoring the constitutional point of view as far as possible, they actually seek an opportunity of coquetting with it for the sake of peace.
Page me9.136
The general debate turned on the recognition or non-recognition of the so-called Constitution. The Left, which regarded itself as the continuation of the majority of the former Agreement Assembly which had voted for refusing payment of taxes,†135 ought to have begun with the most emphatic protest against the coup d'état of December 5. But what did it do? It declared that it was prepared to accept the dissolution of the National Assembly as a fact which could no longer be altered, to give up the dispute in principle over the validity of the imposed bastard, to cover all the kicks and insults with the cloak of charity, and to pass at once to the revision!
Page me9.136
The Right, of course, rejected this cowardly offer with the contempt it deserved and forced the Left to take up the dispute over principles.

Page Break me9.137

Page me9.137

The Left suffered the fate it deserved. Why did the gentlemen imagine that they had to achieve something where there was nothing to achieve? Why did they persuade themselves that they were destined to achieve by parliamentary means something that can only be achieved in a revolutionary way, by force of arms? But, of course, these gentlemen "came to the top owing to parliamentary activity", about which deputy Waldeck has so many beautiful things to say, the top where esprit de corps commences and revolutionary energy — s'il y en avait†a — evaporates!

Page me9.137

The first speaker of the variegated party that is called the Left was Herr von Berg. But one should certainly not expect to encounter again the cheerful little abbé of last year, who was able greatly to annoy the gentlemen of the Right with all kinds of piquant witticisms. Herr Berg no longer spoke as an abbé, but as a pastor.

Page me9.137

He was of the opinion that it would have been desirable to draw up the draft Address in such a way that "the greatest possible majority could vote for it". The Chamber ought to have shown the country "that its representatives do not intend to sacrifice the good of the country to mere disputes over principles". In conclusion Herr Berg said that he missed in the draft "the spirit of reconciliation with which we (?) are imbued", the striving for "agreement". He prophesied that by the debate on the Address the Chamber would not "establish in the fatherland peace and the hope of a better future".

Page me9.137

Indeed! Did the electors of Jülich and Düren send Herr Berg to Berlin for him to declare that the struggle for the people's right to decide its Constitution for itself is a mere "dispute over principles", to preach "reconciliation" and "agreement" in pulpit tones, and to drivel about "peace" when it is a question of war?

Page me9.137

You, chaplain Berg, were elected, not because you are a preacher, but because you were a supporter of tax refusal. Your election did not take place in the interests of peace, but was from the outset a declaration of war against the coup d'état. You were sent to Berlin not to propose reconciliation and agreement, but to protest. And now, when you are a deputy, now you declare that the struggle between the sovereignty of the people and the "omnipotence of the Crown" is a mere barren dispute over principles!

Page me9.137

Most of those who supported tax refusal were re-elected not because all their activities between May and November 1848 satisfied the electors, but because by the decision on tax refusal†b they took up a revolutionary position, and because it could be hoped that the kicks the Government had bestowed on them had opened their eyes and shown them how to behave towards the Crown and the Government in order to achieve some result. It was hoped that consequently they would all move a step to the left.

Page Break me9.138

Page me9.138

Instead of this, it has turned out that the chastisement they received in November has borne fruit; instead of moving to the left, these gentlemen have gone farther to the right. With the most well-intentioned zeal typical of the wailers,†136 they preach reconciliation and agreement. They say they want to forget and forgive the maltreatment they received, they propose peace. It serves them right that their proposals have been laughed to scorn.

Page me9.138

The next speaker was Count Renard, a feudal magnate from Silesia.

Page me9.138

Herr Renard imagines that nothing was overturned in March, but only a new factor introduced. The Crown remains the Crown, the only difference being that representation based on the estates(!), with the people having a consultative voice, is added as a "determining factor". Otherwise everything remains as it used to be. (In point of fact that is precisely what with God for King and fatherland†a is to be imposed on us and has to be revised.) The deputy has "to represent the Constitution of the people in its entirety, that is the people with the sovereign, but not the people against the sovereign". (Why then is the sovereign still required if in any case the deputies already "represent" him?) After advancing this new theory of the state, Herr Renard also made the following statement to the Chamber: It does not exist "in order to bargain and haggle with the Crown" — i.e. to reach agreement with it — "to dispute over words or, if you like, even about rights"; the Government and the Chamber are by no means "advocates on behalf of two parties engaged in litigation". Anyone who regards his mandate in any other way "wages civil war in matters of theory".

Page me9.138

Herr Renard speaks plainly enough. In the profane constitutional states, the Chamber rules through its committee, the Government, and the King's only right is that of saying yes and amen, and of giving his signature. That was also the case among us in the period of affliction, in the period of Camphausen, Hansemann and Pfuel. But in the royal Prussian constitutional monarchy by the grace of God the exact opposite holds good. The Crown rules through its Ministers, and woe to the Chambers if they venture to do anything but say yes and amen to the effusions of divine grace!

"The clearest proof," Herr Renard continued, "that there is no rift between Crown and people is afforded by the present moment, when the German question is being spoken of in all the provinces amid universal enthusiasm.... In many of them this enthusiasm ... is largely due to the dignity, the greatness, of our ancient royal house by divine grace, and of the knightly and victorious" (especially in Champagne, at Jena and on March 18, 1848†137) "Hohenzollern dynasty. (Animation and cries of 'bravo'.)"

Page Break me9.139

Page me9.139

Testimony to this enthusiasm was given by the cries of "Down with the German Emperor" coming from 5,000 throats in Gürzenich†a on March 19, the very same day when Herr Renard spoke the words quoted above. Similar testimony was the rejection in Frankfurt a few days later of the King of Prussia as hereditary emperor, and the miserable majority in Frankfurt of four whole votes in favour of a hereditary emperor in general.†138

Page me9.139
No, finally exclaimed Renard, who incidentally is not at all a fox†b:

"No one should or will succeed by corrosive poison in killing the new life in the wound that strives to be healed, or in converting the split that has possibly arisen" (so it is there after all!) "into an unbridgeable gulf!"

Page me9.139
Most worthy Renard! May the evil-minded never succeed "by corrosive poison in killing the new life in the wound" which last spring was inflicted on your purse crammed with feudal privileges, a wound which now thanks to the return of divine grace "strives to be healed", or in "converting into an unbridgeable gulf the split that has possibly arisen" between your income and expenditure!
Page me9.139
Herr Jacoby came to the rostrum. He too, although he spoke more resolutely than Berg and was clearer and more precise in his arguments, could not refrain from practising diplomacy. The recognition of the Constitution in the Address was inappropriate, because it ought not to occur incidentally, and it was untimely, because the Constitution had not yet been revised, definitely sanctioned and given allegiance to by oath. As if the recognition of such a Constitution could ever be appropriate and timely!
Page me9.139
Herr Jacoby, too, "had no wish to renew the old dispute" about the dispersion of the Agreement Assembly; the question whether it was an act of salvation or the aim and goal of a diplomatic scheme he would "leave to impartial history". "Impartial history" will record that the people who spoke so loudly when they had a majority, now, when they are in a minority, behave with the humility of schoolboys who have been punished.

"As far as recognition of the Constitution by the people is concerned, I have to reply that our Assembly is the sole legitimate and the sole authorised organ for such recognition."

Page Break me9.140
Page me9.140
No, Herr Jacoby, your Assembly is nothing of the sort. Your Assembly is nothing but the organ of the electoral delegates selected by means of the grand criterion of "independence"†139 on the basis of the imposed so-called electoral law, it is an organ which in the main owes its existence to government intrigues. Your Assembly may recognise the Constitution, but that is merely a recognition of the imposed Constitution by the imposed Constitution itself. The people will show little concern about that and "impartial history" will quite soon have to register that this so-called Constitution, despite recognition of it — if that were ever to take place — was trampled underfoot in the course of the European revolution and disappeared no one knows how.
Page me9.140

Herr Jacoby probably knows that as well as we do; the Right in the Chamber knows that he knows it; so why all this nonsense about a legal basis, especially when one wants to leave dubious the legal basis of the dispersed Assembly!
Page me9.140
Herr Scherer, a barrister and deputy from Düsseldorf-Elberfeld, was greatly shocked by d'Ester's draft Address. He considered that the deputation which presented such an Address to the King must "entail an armed uprising". People whose actions entail armed uprising, Herr Scherer, speak to kings in quite a different way!
Page me9.140
This draft "casts a flaming torch in the country," but Herr Scherer believes that "it will not cause a conflagration, but only harm its bearers"!
Page me9.140
It is impossible to speak more clearly. Herr Scherer gives the Left the well-meant advice to withdraw the draft, otherwise they will be apprehended one fine day in spite of the article guaranteeing immunity.†140 Very philanthropic of you, Herr Scherer!
Page me9.140
Next Herr Waldeck rose to speak. He proved to be unchanged: on the Left, but not farther to the left than is expedient if one wants to be regarded as possible. Herr Waldeck began by expressing his annoyance that the Right always wanted to make him responsible for the unfortunate dispute over the November coup d'état. Herr Waldeck and "his party" had "clearly stated that in their opinion this dispute over principles ought not to have arisen at all". In his opinion, "the Assembly is unanimous" (that is bad enough!) "about what it ought to do with the Constitution" — namely, to revise it. Herr Waldeck then once more explained why the dispute over principles was superfluous, and again appealed to the better feelings of the Right:

"Cannot you for the time being very well leave this question open?... You will lose nothing as far as your views are concerned, but do spare the views of others!"

Page Break me9.141
Page me9.141
A worthy speech of one of the dispersed "representatives of the people" to the same majority that rubs its hands in glee when it thinks of the successful dispersal of the National Assembly.
Page me9.141
"But do spare the views of others!" The great man begs for mercy.
Page me9.141
When, however, the work on the Constitution has been completed, then the Minister of the future "hopes" that

"this Assembly, owing to its parliamentary activity, will really have reached the high level essential for fully recognising the consequences of such a declaration" (on the validity of the Constitution)!

Page me9.141

Indeed! Do not our new-baked knights of the rostrum, who have hardly seven months of parliamentary activity behind them, already behave as precociously wisely as if they had sat for fifty years on the benches of St. Stephen's Chapel†141 and had been members of all the Paris Chambers from the “introuvable” of 1815 to the “introuvable” of February 24!

Page me9.141

But this is true. In their short career our knights of the rostrum have become imbued with as much parliamentary self-satisfaction, and have become as divested of all revolutionary energy — si jamais il y en avait†a — as if they had grown grey in the grandiloquent proceedings of parliament.

Page me9.141

After Herr Waldeck came a speech from His one-time Excellency, the formerly omnipotent Herr von Bodelschwingh.

Page me9.141

Just like Herr Manteuffel, so too his previous chief has become a constitutionalist “by order of His Majesty”. It is quite amusing to hear the last Prime Minister of the absolutist regime defend constitutional monarchy.

Page me9.141

Prior to February, Herr Bodelschwingh used to be ranked as the best orator of the Government of the time. In the United Diet,†142 he still proved himself the most skilful. But when one reads his present speech, one is alarmed for the sake of the man himself by the silliness and insipidity of this strange disquisition. Herr Bodelschwingh has become a constitutionalist by order; apart from this word, however, he has remained exactly as before, we do not know whether by order or not. He excused himself by saying that he had lived “in rustic seclusion”; but it could really be thought that he has let himself be buried for a whole year.

Page me9.141

He acknowledges that by the extremely innocent draft Address of the Left he “had been enlightened about their views in a manner and to an extent of which he had not even an inkling before his appearance in the Chamber”.

Page Break me9.142

Page me9.142

Quel bonhomme!†a When Herr Bodelschwingh still ruled over Prussia his numerous spies must have kept him remarkably badly informed for our money if he can now believe that since then such views have suddenly appeared out of nowhere!

Page me9.142

The Left had stated that it was here not on the basis of the Charter imposed under martial law, but on the basis of universal suffrage. What did Herr Bodelschwingh reply?

“If our seats are the outcome of universal suffrage, then there is no need for all the formalities” (of the election test). “We need only appear in the market place and say: Elect me! I do not know how many particles of universal suffrage you regard as requisite in order to lay claim to entry in this Chamber. Take as many as you like, in this way it would be easy to obtain sufficient votes; by the acknowledgement of this right the Chamber would soon be so filled that we could no longer remain here; for my part at least I would renounce my seat, and the sooner the better."

Page me9.142

If a Westphalian peasant, or if Herr von Bodelschwingh at the time when he was still a Minister, had uttered this profound wisdom about universal suffrage, we would not have been surprised. The interesting feature of the above-quoted passage is that it proves that one could be a Prussian Prime Minister and in control of the whole carefully scrutinised bureaucracy without "having even an inkling" of the most immediate questions of European interest. But after universal suffrage has been in operation twice in France, after what the Left calls universal suffrage has been in operation twice in Prussia, and has even thrust a seat in the Chamber upon Herr Bodelschwingh himself — after this to be able to indulge in such fabulous fantasies about universal suffrage, one must have been an antediluvian Prussian Minister! However, we must not forget that Herr Bodelschwingh was buried and has only been resurrected in order to enter the Chamber "by order of His Majesty"!

Page me9.142

Herr Bodelschwingh said further:

"Even if we are not at all of the opinion that this Constitution will become valid only through its revision, nevertheless we are completely confident that the Crown will not refuse its sanction ... to the wishes (!) ... of the Chambers ... being conscious that we do not need to quarrel and find fault with the Government as if we faced an enemy, but being convinced instead that we confront a Crown which like ourselves is only concerned for the good of the fatherland ... in good and bad days alike we must be firmly united with our sovereigns ... the foundation for piety, respect for the law, public spirit, etc."

Page me9.142

Herr Bodelschwingh imagined he was still speaking in the United Diet. His basis now as previously is that of confidence. But the man is quite right! What the Left has called universal suffrage has, by means of provisions about independence, indirect elections and Manteuffel's manoeuvres, brought into existence a Chamber which has no need to be ashamed of being addressed as "Exalted United Diet".

Page Break me9.143

Page me9.143

After an unimportant speech by deputy Schulze-Delitzsch, there came to the rostrum His one-time Excellency, Herr Count Arnim. Unlike Herr Bodelschwingh, he has not been asleep during the past year. He knows what he wants.

Page me9.143

It is clear, he said, why we want to recognise the Constitution immediately and in its entirety.

"For is it so certain that the business of revising the Constitution will lead to a result? How is this to be achieved? What fundamental law will then be valid? Precisely, therefore, because in this situation an agreement between the three powers on the points to be revised is doubtful, precisely for that reason we are concerned that even in this case the people should have a Constitution."

Page me9.143

Is that clear enough? That is already the second delicate hint in this one sitting.

Page me9.143

Then deputy d'Ester opposed the Commission's draft. His speech was by far the best coming from the Left in this general debate. The audacity and vigour with which the deputy from Mayen attacked the gentlemen of the Right made a pleasant impression in the midst of this dismal and tedious debate. But d'Ester, too, could not speak without diplomatic concessions and parliamentary contortions. He said, for example, that he fully agreed that the revolution must be ended. While this statement of the deputy might, perhaps, be excused as due to parliamentary considerations, the member of the democratic Central Committee†143 ought never to express himself in this way, and the man who immediately afterwards began a debate with Vincke on the respective "degree of culture" ought not to incur even the suspicion of being capable of such twaddle. Moreover, in any case no one believed him.

Page me9.143

Finally, deputy Riedel sounded a note of triumph because "the Crown has reassumed its right to legislate". An ironic cry of "bravo" made him aware that he had been telling tales out of school. He took fright and added: "Provisionally, of course!"

Page me9.143

A third delicate hint for the deputies!

Page me9.143

The Chamber proceeded to the special debate. We shall save it for tomorrow.

Written by Engels on March 25, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 259, March 30, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.144

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR. — THE CONFUSED SITUATION IN SERBIA

Page me9.144

Today we must begin our reports from Hungary with news of a victory which, if it were true, would spread the greatest joy among the German democrats.

Page me9.144

We have received the following from Breslau:

“Breslau, March 23. Just now, news has arrived from Ratibor that Dembinski has taken Pest by storm. Görgey, who had already occupied the heights of Raab with his army, is marching as a vanguard on Vienna, which Dembinski intends to occupy soon.
Page me9.144
“In Bohemia, the outbreak of a terrible revolution is expected at any moment, which will in the main spread among the oppressed rural population and lead to a veritable civil war. The national hatred between Germans and Czechs has almost completely disappeared; the old Czech deputies Palacky and company have been booed, while the German Left and its Bohemian President Borrosch have received one ovation after another. Moreover, a state of siege has already been proclaimed in Prague.”

Page me9.144
We have received the same news by way of the democratic correspondence in Berlin. According to it, a deputy has received the following communication:

“Ratibor, March 23. Just after winning a major battle, and following a number of previous important victories Dembinski has taken Pest by storm. Görgey, who had previously occupied the heights of Raab with his army corps — to cut off the line of retreat of the Austrian army, in case it escaped — is marching on Vienna as the vanguard of the Hungarian advance. In that city Dembinski will probably disturb the Easter ceremony of washing the feet,†144 and take upon Austria the revenge it so richly deserves.
Page me9.144
“Prague is in a state of siege, with the indispensable 26 guns trained on the city. It is true that a revolution has not broken out there but is expected, and it is to be hoped that in this way it will be provoked. And if that occurs, if Bohemia rises against the Cabinet — post-horses will become expensive in Olmütz.”

Page Break me9.145
Page me9.145
This news was communicated to Minister Manteuffel who, quite alarmed, replied that the Ministry had not yet received any dispatches about it.
Page me9.145
Unfortunately, though, this news is obviously false in the version here available and at the very least premature. The positions of the armies ascertained according to the latest reports do not admit the possibility that the Hungarians have captured Pest by now.
Page me9.145
Our news from Pest goes up to the 18th. The most recent Vienna papers, which could have extended it to the 19th, have not yet come to hand. The Breslauer Zeitung has a Hungarian report of the 18th, which does indeed mention a Magyar victory over Jellachich at Izsak and Alpar. These two places lie to the right and left of the highway which leads from Pest to Szegedin via Kecskemét, about the level of Felegyhaza, where, as we know, Jellachich is supposed to have been defeated once before; though whether this is the same battle or a new action, it is not possible to judge. In any case, as the Magyar report says, the news of this Hungarian victory has been reflected on the Pest money market in a rise of 20 per cent in the Hungarian banknotes. Dispersed corps, as well as large numbers of wounded are also said to have arrived in Pest. Incidentally, the same report adds afterwards that the events of the Magyar war do not seem to have been confirmed to the extent the money market assumed. As regards monetary affairs in Pest the Magyar report writes:

"There is no stock exchange in Pest, and current monetary transactions which have become considerable only since the ban on Hungarian banknotes, were temporarily conducted in a coffee-house. But yesterday the local military authorities had one of the main dealers arrested, and by this argumentum ad hominem brought about a partial stoppage of the exchange of banknotes. Despite this, Hungarian banknotes maintained yesterday's level, though many dealers view the above-mentioned arrest as foreshadowing the complete invalidation of Hungarian banknotes even for private dealings.
Page me9.145
"The contribution which Pest was not scheduled to pay till May must now by order of His Highness Prince Windischgrätz be paid within 24 hours. The imperial salt office now sells only for hard coin."

Page me9.145
In addition, the report talks of an alliance between the Magyars and the Turks, in consequence of which the Magyar operations would be directed not against Pest but towards the Banat and the Turkish borders. But this item sounds rather fantastic. — Palóczy, who retired because of old age, is reported to have been replaced by Paul Almasy as President of the Hungarian National Assembly in Debreczin.
Page me9.145
According to other, Austrian, reports Jellachich is said rather to have gained a victory over the Magyars at Szegedin (or Felegyhaza).

Page Break me9.146
The action in question is obviously the one already mentioned above. But so long as the Austrian Bulletins do not break their obstinate silence about the operations on the Theiss, and so long as their reports of any victories are not confirmed by other, unbiased news, so long we shall believe the Magyar report that Jellachich has suffered a welcome defeat at Felegyhaza.
Page me9.146
What confirms us in this belief is the following item from the Lithographierte Correspondenz published in Vienna under martial-law supervision:

"The news from Hungary is as yet still far from satisfactory: it is known that considerable mishaps have occurred there, and that even officers of the highest rank have been called to account. Among them even Count Wrbna is mentioned."

Page me9.146
Today there is no word from the Banat. Not a word of Jablonowsky, Götz, and the rest of the missing corps of the Austrian army.

Page me9.146

On the other hand, from Transylvania we hear today nothing but compliments for Bem. Thus the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung writes:

"The reports from the camp agree, however, that Bem has proved his ability once more in the latest encounter at Mediasch, for he took up such advantageous positions that during the entire engagement he may be said to have manoeuvred rather than fought."†a

Page me9.146

And even the Siebenbürger Bote, whose war reports, as we well know, express the official view, says:

"Whoever has not seen for himself the impressive bearing of Bem, his tenacity on the field of battle, can have no true conception of this general's ability. While his position seems to be shrouded in a veil, he leaves the ground he occupies only with sudden brisk movements, and if his troops were as reliable as his skill in offering battle from such well-chosen positions — which, as it were, always strikingly display the closest correlation — we would have to fight engagements that are not only interesting but brilliant. Bem fought with his 5,000-6,000 strong force from 9 in the morning till 6 in the afternoon, from three positions, with a tenacity which shows what he can do not only now but in future as well."†b

Page me9.146

The Imperial Government has realised, incidentally, that the Serbs are not to be trifled with. The Napredak (Forward) of Karlowitz writes on March 13 that, late at night on the 8th, a letter from Minister Stadion arrived in Becskerek for the Patriarch,†c in which the Ministry confirms the provisional Serb provincial government and at the same time expresses the wish that the Serb newspapers should say what kind of government the people would want to be installed in the "Voivodina". Moreover, Minister Stadion demands two representatives from the Voivodina; accordingly, Paskowich, Zivanovich and Šuplikac have also been sent off to Vienna, in addition to Bogdanovic. The commission in Becskerek has already begun negotiations about the setting up of the Serb Diet. The majority of the deputies favours an early calling of a National Assembly, at which the voivode should also be elected.

Page Break me9.147

Page me9.147

Several of the Uhlans who recently dispersed the district council in Hatzfeld went on to Kécsa and seized the arms of the Serbs. Then they rode to Serb Crnja intending to dissolve the district court there, but the Serbs declared they would not obey the military command and would defend their rights to the last drop of blood. Had the Uhlans permitted themselves the slightest transgression, blood would have flowed. In Kómlos and Masdorf, too, the Uhlans wanted to dissolve the councils, but the Romanians and Germans there immediately denounced that intention, so that it came to the knowledge of the Patriarch. In this way Rukavina wanted to dissolve the district courts and national offices in the whole area. It was fortunate that he did not go further; had the Uhlans continued to molest the Serbian villages, not one of them would have kept his head on his shoulders. When the Patriarch was informed of the seizure of the arms, he flew into a rage. Now we hear that Rukavina has yielded and the Uhlans (Schwarzenberg) have been put under the command of Todorovich.

Page me9.147

Whether this is the end of the Serbian disorders remains to be seen. In any case, Windischgrätz and Jellachich have been compromised and disowned by the Government, an outcome which we find especially pleasing in the case of the fanatic Jellachich.

Written by Engels about March 26, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 256, March 27, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.148

THE WAR IN ITALY AND HUNGARY

Page me9.148

Cologne, March 27. The war in Italy has begun.†145 By this war the Habsburg monarchy has assumed a burden beneath which it will probably succumb.
Page me9.148

As long as Hungary was not in a state of open war against the monarchy as a whole, but was only in a fluctuating state of war against the Southern Slavs, it was no great feat for Austria to get the better of the Italians, who were only half revolutionised, and were split up and crippled by the triple treachery of the sovereigns. Nevertheless, what an effort it involved! Before Radetzky could win his victories at the Mincio,†146 the Pope†a and the Grand Duke of Tuscany†b had first to withdraw their troops — directly or indirectly — from the Venetian region, Charles Albert and his partly incompetent, partly venal generals had first actually to betray the Italian cause and above all at times the Magyars and at times the Southern Slavs had to be induced by a policy of duplicity and seeming concessions to send their troops to take up positions in Italy. It is known that only the mass transfer of the South-Slav border regiments to Italy rendered the disorganised Austrian army capable of fighting again.
Page me9.148

Furthermore, as long as the armistice with Piedmont continued, as long as Austria had merely to maintain its army in Italy in its former strength without having to increase it excessively, Austria could throw the main body of its 600,000 soldiers against Hungary, it could push back the Magyars from one position to another and, by means of the daily arriving reinforcements, could in the end even succeed in crushing Hungary's armed power. In the long run, Kossuth, like Napoleon, would have had to suffer defeat owing to the superiority of force.

Page Break me9.149
Page me9.149
But the war in Italy considerably changes the situation. From the moment when the termination of the armistice became certain, Austria had to double the number of its troops sent to Italy, it had to divide its newly enrolled recruits between Windischgrätz and Radetzky. Thus it is to be expected that neither of them gets enough.
Page me9.149
Whereas for the Magyars and Italians, therefore, it is only a question of gaining time — time for the purchase and manufacture of arms, time for training the Landsturm and national guards to be soldiers fit for service in the field, time for revolutionising the country — Austria, compared with its opponents, becomes weaker every day.
Page me9.149
While the war itself draws Rome, Tuscany and even Piedmont ever more deeply into the revolution compelling them day by day to display greater revolutionary energy, and while they can wait for the rapidly approaching crisis in France, meanwhile in Austria the third disorganising element, the Slav opposition is daily gaining ground and improving its organisation. The imposed Constitution†147 which, in gratitude for the Slavs having saved Austria, is throwing them back to their condition before the March events, the many insults suffered by the Slavs through bureaucratic and military excesses — these are facts that have occurred and cannot be altered in any way.
Page me9.149
It is understandable that in these circumstances the Kölnische Zeitung is in the greatest possible hurry to make the imperial forces finish off the unpleasant war with Hungary. Accordingly, it announced yesterday that they crossed the Theiss in three columns†a — a report made all the more credible by not being confirmed up to now by any communiqué. Other sources, however, report that, on the contrary, the Magyar army is advancing on Pest by forced marches and evidently intends to raise the siege of Komorn. In spite of being heavily bombarded, Komorn is holding out courageously. During the bombardment the defenders of Komorn did not fire a shot, but when the Austrians tried to take it by storm they were thrown back with heavy losses by a deadly hail of grape-shot. It is said that the Duke of Coburg's regiment of Polish Uhlans went over to the side of the Magyars at the moment when Dembinski, calmly waiting for the attack, ordered the tune of “Poland is not yet lost”†b to be played.

Page Break me9.150
Page me9.150
This is all the news we can give today about the Hungarian theatre of war. The post from Vienna of March 23 has failed to arrive.
Page me9.150
Let us now turn to the Italian theatre of war. Here the Piedmontese army is drawn up in a long arc along the Ticino and the Po. Its front line stretches from Arona via Novara, Vigevano, Voghera to Castel San Giovanni facing Piacenza. Its reserves are situated a few miles farther back, on the rivers Sesia and Bormida at Vercelli, Trino and Alessandria. On the extreme right wing at Sarzana on the Tuscany-Modena frontier a separate corps under the command of La Marmora is stationed, ready to attack Parma and Modena through the Lunigiani passes, to link up on the left with the right wing of the main army, and on the right with the Tuscan and Roman armies, to cross the Po and the Adige if circumstances permit and conduct operations in the Venetian region.

Page me9.150

On the opposite side, on the left bank of the Ticino and Po, stands Radetzky. It is known that his army is divided into two corps, of which one has occupied Lombardy and the other the Venetian region. While no news at all about troop dispositions has come from the Venetian region, we hear on all sides that in Lombardy Radetzky is concentrating his whole army on the Ticino. He has withdrawn all his troops from Parma, and in Modena he has left only a few hundred men in the fortress. Varese, Como, Val d'Intelvi and Valtellina have been entirely denuded of troops, even the frontier customs guards have disappeared.
Page me9.150

The entire fighting force at Radetzky's disposal, 50,000 strong, occupies positions from Magenta to Pavia along the Ticino and from Pavia to Piacenza along the Po.
Page me9.150

Radetzky himself is said to have had the foolhardy plan of immediately crossing the Ticino with this army and, protected by the inevitable confusion of the Italians, of marching directly on Turin. People still remember from last year that Radetzky more than once entertained similar Napoleonic desires†148 and how he fared then. This time, however, the entire War Council opposed him, and it was decided to retreat, without any decisive battle, towards the Adda, Oglio, and, if needs be, even the Chiese, in order to obtain there reinforcements from the Venetian region and Illyria.
Page me9.150

It will depend on the manoeuvres of the Piedmontese and the eagerness for war of the Lombards whether this retreat will take place without losses and whether the Austrians will succeed in holding up the Piedmontese for long. For the southern slopes of the Alps, namely the Como, Brienz and Bergamo Alps, Veltlin (Valtellina) and the Brescia region, now already for the most part abandoned by the Austrians, are highly suitable for national partisan warfare. The Austrians concentrated in the plain have to leave the mountains free. Here by a swift advance with light troops on the Austrian right wing, the Piedmontese can quickly organise guerilla detachments, which will threaten the flank and, in the event of the defeat of a single corps, also the retreat of the imperial troops, cut off their supplies and extend the insurrection as far as the Tritentine Alps. Garibaldi would be in his element here. But presumably he has not the least intention of once more entering the service of the traitor Charles Albert.†149

Page Break me9.151
Page me9.151

The Tuscan-Roman army, supported by La Marmora, will have to occupy the line of the Po from Piacenza to Ferrara, cross the Po as quickly as possible, and after that the Adige, cut off Radetzky from the Austro-Venetian corps and operate on his left flank, or in his rear. However, this army is unlikely to arrive sufficiently quickly to have any influence on the first military operations.

Page me9.151

But more decisive than all this is the attitude of the Piedmontese. Their army is good and bellicose; but if it is betrayed again as it was last year it is bound to be beaten. The Lombards are demanding weapons in order to fight against their oppressors; but if again, as last year, a vacillating bourgeois Government paralyses a mass uprising, Radetzky can once again enter Milan.

Page me9.151

There is only one means to counter the treachery and cowardice of the Government: revolution. And perhaps it is precisely a new breach of his word by Charles Albert, and a new act of perfidy by the Lombard nobility and bourgeoisie, that are required for the Italian revolution to be carried through and, simultaneously with it, the Italian war for independence. But then woe to the traitors!

Written by Engels on March 27, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 257, March 28, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.152

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.152

In spite of all the reinforcements asked for, in spite of all their numerical superiority, fortune refuses to favour the imperial forces. The Ost-Deutsche Post, in a report (?) from Pest dated March 20, spins the following yarn:

"Baron Hammerstein is said to have already crossed the Theiss and advanced to Nyiregyhaza, eight hours from Debreczin. Advancing from the other side, Puchner must already be near Grosswardein, and at this moment the rumour is spreading that Szegedin has surrendered without striking a blow."†a

Page me9.152

"Is said to" — "must" — "the rumour is spreading" — such is the reliable news from the theatre of war which the Ost-Deutsche Post publishes, and which the reliable, "critically sifting", experienced Kölnische Zeitung communicated to its readers in its second edition this morning without further comment.

Page me9.152

In addition the Ost-Deutsche Post and following it the Kölnische Zeitung report:

“According to fairly reliable reports, the Serbs at Szegedin have received orders to join the imperial army stationed on the Theiss. The Ban†b then took over general command of these two united corps and set out on the march to Debreczin with them.”†c (!!!)

Page me9.152

This supposed report from Pest is simply the usual Viennese martial-law gossip, in which there is not a word of truth. The Kölnische Zeitung should know that; firstly, there was no official Bulletin, which would have been issued if there had been any successes however small; and secondly, it could have read, copied in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung and in the original in the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen, a genuine report from Pest of the 20th, in which there is no mention of the “reliable news” printed in the Ost-Deutsche Post. And the worthy Cologne paper still dares to accuse the Breslauer Zeitung, which does not claim to have a critical approach, of lacking a critical approach as far as reports from Hungary are concerned!

Page Break me9.153

Page me9.153

Actually, the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen reports quite the opposite from Pest on the 20th†a:

“The fall of Szegedin has not been confirmed; on the contrary, the imperial forces are said to have relinquished Kecskemét owing to strategic considerations. The enemy appears to have concentrated all his forces at Szegedin, and to regard it as the key to the current Austrian plan of operation. Yesterday reinforcements went also from our side to the battlefield by rail.”

Page me9.153

That is all that this report, which was actually written in Pest, says about the theatre of war.

Page me9.153

True enough, Baron Hammerstein has moved from Galicia down the Hernad to Tokaj with reinforcements — ten battalions, it is said. But he would never have got across the Theiss there without a hard-fought and victorious action — and would not the imperial authorities have trumpeted abroad so important a victory in a Bulletin? From Tokaj to Nyiregyhaza is a good four miles,†b i.e. in this marshy region and in this rainy season, fully two to three days' march for a regular army. And Hammerstein is supposed to have got through to Nyiregyhaza without the official report of his successful crossing of the Theiss some days previously having reached Vienna!

Page me9.153

If Hammerstein had even got as far as Tokaj we would have received Bulletin after Bulletin full of triumphant chants. We would know where Götz is stationed and where Jablonowsky, Csorich and Schlick are stationed. We know nothing whatsoever of all this. Since February 26, the date of the ambiguous battle at Kapolna, that is for almost four weeks, there has been no official mention of the Theiss; and the unofficial reports we receive contradict each other daily.

Page me9.153

Hence the first of the three columns at whose head the Kölnische Zeitung crossed the Theiss existed only in the imagination.
Page me9.153

The second would have to be that of Schlick. But Schlick was still in Szegléd on the 17th or 18th, as the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen has also reported. At Szolnok, the nearest crossing-point, there could be no question of crossing the Theiss. Here even the wits of the noble

Page Break me9.154
Ban and robber chief Jellachich were baffled, and any attempt to cross there was given up. If however he had crossed the Theiss at Tisza-Füred, the only crossing-point in the vicinity, he would first have had to march there, to concentrate his forces there and to wage a battle. All this would have had to have happened in the short period from the 18th to the 20th, and that is impossible for obvious chronological reasons. Schlick's presence in Szegléd, far from proving that a hurried crossing of the Theiss was to take place, on the contrary, in conjunction with other reports, leads to the conclusion that Schlick was purely on a visit of inspection at Szegléd, where the right wing of his army must establish contact with the extreme left wing of Jellachich's corps.
Page me9.154

The third column would naturally have been that of Jellachich. But according to the only news reaching us directly from Pest, it has been withdrawn “for strategic reasons” (as the imperial authorities say every time they are defeated) even beyond Kecskemét. But Kecskemét lies 12 miles from Szegedin, the only possible crossing-point of the Theiss there, and the notorious hinge of Jellachich's operations. Of what use is it to us now if the Serbs have “received orders” to “effect a junction” with him, when he is 14 miles away from them? And what is the meaning of the ridiculous remark that, as a result of this simple plan of joining up with the Serbs, the Ban “is marching directly on Debreczin”, which is 25 miles from Szegedin, the as yet unconquered Szegedin!
Page me9.154

Moreover, the Ost-Deutsche Post writes in a further flight of the imagination, Puchner must by now be already near Grosswardein. Indeed, if the wishes of the imperial side had anything to do with it, he would have been there long ago. But all we know so far is that, while the 30,000 Russians now stationed in Transylvania are keeping a tight rein on the Szeklers,†150 he is operating not in the direction of Grosswardein but in the opposite direction, towards Schässburg and Maros-Vásárhely.
Page me9.154

By the way, the difficulties involved in driving the Hungarians from their strong positions behind the Theiss and capturing Debreczin, especially now that the rainy season is near, are indicated in the following excerpt from the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen:

“It would certainly be better for the military operations on the clayey roads and fields on the Theiss and on this side of it, if the usual rainy season were to arrive a few weeks late. During this season, Debreczin becomes temporarily an island, to which even in peace-time one can make one's way only with great difficulty. This will show you the obstacles of terrain with which our brave troops have to contend even before they reach the seat of rebellion. Moreover, on the way to Debreczin there are pusztas†151 so wide that one must ride for almost a whole day to reach the only well which supplies water for the horses. And on these plains the Austrian cavalry must contend with an enemy who is at home there and whose small, tireless horses may be called the camel of the puszta."

Page Break me9.155

Page me9.155
Hence, first the swamps of the Theiss and Körös, which form a natural trench round the heath of Debreczin, and then the Sahara of Debreczin itself, where the Austrian cuirassiers and Uhlans are supposed to fight the same battle with the Hungarian light hussars that the clumsy French cavalry had to fight against the Arab horsemen in the first years of the Algerian war.†152
Page me9.155
We have learnt from the Banat that a new complication has been added to the old ones in Serbia. The Romanians have been incited against the Serbs — though whether for or against the imperial authorities we do not know. Imperial intrigue is probably at the bottom of it.
Page me9.155
The Temesvar fortress is being heavily armed — not against the Magyars, but against — the Serbs. Obviously ill-feeling among the Serbs must be growing.
Page me9.155
As regards the capture of Peterwardein, "hoped for" repeatedly for some time, this is again dissolving in mist. The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen writes:

"From the Drava, March 18. The Vienna papers reported some time ago that imperial troops had succeeded in storming the fortress of Peterwardein. But Peterwardein cannot be stormed unless one is prepared to see 20,000 or 30,000 men slaughtered in the assault. Anyone who is a soldier and is familiar with the fortress will agree. If the fortress does not surrender hunger is the only thing that can conquer it. Unfortunately, our hopes of its speedy surrender, initially raised by bearers of the flag of truce, are growing dimmer and dimmer, and the officers who have just escaped from the fortress do not hold out an encouraging prospect, for particularly the common soldiers and the Honveds are behaving in a terroristic fashion."†a

Page me9.155
A new revolt is "to be hoped for" in the rear of the imperial forces. The regiment of dragoons that was occupying the Bakony Forest has been called to Pest and has arrived there. The Honved guerillas, who are roaming about in large numbers in the Bakony Forest, will immediately organise a fresh uprising and establish contact with the insurgents of the comitat of Tolna.

Written by Engels about March 28, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 258, March 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.156

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR†153

[ITALY]

Page me9.156

The military operations are beginning to appear in clearer outline. While the Piedmontese have crossed the Ticino at Buffalora, Radetzky has crossed it at Pavia and is stationed between the Ticino and the Po on Piedmontese territory.

Page me9.156

Whether this attack is merely a diversion, or whether Radetzky actually intends to advance on Turin, is not yet clear. The latter is possible if the report sent from Turin on the 21st to the Journal des Débats is accurate†a: that as a result of the addition of the Parma and Modena garrisons his army has increased to 60,000-70,000 men with 120 guns and that so far the Piedmontese have only 55,000 to 65,000 men with 100 to 110 guns to oppose to Radetzky. But these assertions are absolutely false, at least as concerns the Piedmontese army. Furthermore, La Marmora's corps, which has advanced to Parma, will force Radetzky to make further detachments.

Page me9.156

In short Radetzky stands on Piedmontese territory. This is due to the negligence or treachery of the notorious Ramorino, who had already played an ambiguous role in Poland in 1831 and in the Savoy campaign in 1834.†154 He is to be thanked for the fact that the Austrians succeeded in pushing their way along the Po between his division and that of Durando. Ramorino was immediately removed from command and called to account for his action.

Page me9.156

Chrzanowski is making the following dispositions of his forces in response to Radetzky's manoeuvre: Durando from Stradella, Fanti, who has replaced Ramorino, and one of the divisions moving out from the headquarters at Vigevano towards the Po will make a frontal attack on the Austrians, while the division commanded by the Duke of Genoa, a force of 20,000, which has crossed the Ticino at Buffalora, is marching on the Lombardic bank of the river to Pavia, to cut off the Austrians' retreat.

Page Break me9.157

Page me9.157

If Radetzky has insufficient forces to resist the Piedmontese, it may well happen that the old fox will fall into a trap and be encircled and destroyed. But in any case, by his advance he has provoked a decisive battle, the outcome of which we should learn today, or, at the latest, tomorrow.

Page me9.157
The rest of Chrzanowski's plan of operations is quite in accord with that which we indicated yesterday†a as the more probable plan. While La Marmora is stirring up the inhabitants of the Dukedoms†b to rebel and advancing on the extreme left wing of the Piedmontese to the Po, or across it, Favorola's division has advanced via Varese into the Lombard mountains. A Lombard revolutionary committee is accompanying him. The insurrection is spreading at a rapid pace. On the 20th, the insurgents of the Piedmontese border made contact with those from Veltlin and the Upper Comasca in Como. As soon as the Austrians left a locality, the insurrection was organised. All of them are marching upon Milan; individual Austrian detachments are said already to have been attacked and destroyed by the insurgents. On the 21st, a general insurrection was to break out throughout Lombardy. According to the Patrie the uprising has already broken out in Milan, but the Patrie lies notoriously. In any case, preparations have been made in Milan which testify to the Austrian commandant's fears of the insurrection and of reinforcements from the countryside.
Page me9.157
Perhaps the Swiss papers will also bring important news at noon today, and, if so, we will communicate it to our readers under “Latest News”.

Written by Engels on March 28, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 258, March 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.158

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.158
The Kölnische Zeitung will surely have to retreat across the Theiss again with its “three columns”†a; the campaign is taking an increasingly unhappy turn for the imperial forces.
Page me9.158
But let us leave the Kölnische Zeitung to its justified sorrow, and instead turn immediately to Transylvania.
Page me9.158
Hermannstadt has been taken by Bem. There is no doubt: the newspaper of the Vienna Stock Exchange barons, the martial-law Lloyd, publishes the news†b from two separate sources. If it were not true, its publication would under martial law result in the editors being sentenced to several months “trench-digging in light chains”.

Page me9.158

Bem has calmly allowed the worthy Puchner, whom the equally worthy Ost-Deutsche Post had yesterday already advancing into the vicinity of Grosswardein,†c to march against the Szeklers in the Carpathian Mountains, confronting Puchner with only about half his corps to support the Szekler Landsturm. Bem himself, as the Lloyd reports, marched quickly on Hermannstadt with 12,000 men, attacked the Russians and drove them out. The Lloyd asserts that only 3,000 Russians were there, but that is hardly likely, for more than double that number were there; unless the remainder marched with Puchner against the Szeklers, which is indeed possible.
Page me9.158

In Hermannstadt, Bem's troops are said to have wrought “great havoc”, which would be no more than just retribution for the barbarities of the imperial forces and the calling-in of the Russians. After a few hours Bem left the city again; naturally, after he had severely chastised the Saxon philistines,†155 his business there was finished.

Page Break me9.159
Page me9.159

The strategic aim of the campaign is obviously to isolate Puchner once again, and to drive away the imperial forces marching up along the Maros from the Banat. We shall soon hear how the tireless Pole has sported with them, perhaps how he has pursued them deep into the Banat and there attracted reinforcements himself.
Page me9.159

While Puchner with the imperial and Russian forces is fighting the Szekler guerillas deep in the mountains, Malkowsky and the chivalrous hero Urban, the “Jellachich of the Bukovina”, have been completely driven out of Transylvania on the northern side. According to the last Bulletin, Urban was still occupying Bistritz; from there he has been beaten back to Watra Dorna, and from Watra Dorna deep into the Bukovina. The headquarters of Malkowsky, the Supreme Commander, has already been shifted back again to Ober Wikow, fully 20 miles from Bistritz, and only 8 miles from Czernowitz on the Russian border. Thus reports the Austrian correspondent. In Czernowitz itself, he goes on, the greatest anxiety rules; the precautionary measures taken by the imperial authorities, abatis, the occupation of the passes, the call-up of the Landsturm etc. show that the danger is near. But the Hungarians will take care to penetrate into the Bukovina no further than is necessary to secure the border. They know too well that the Russians are only waiting for the signal to invade. In Novoseliza, right on the border between the Bukovina and Russia, there are 10,000 Russian troops, and the whole frontier with Moldavia is swarming with Russians.
Page me9.159

The most important aspect of the matter is simply this:
Page me9.159

(1) Bem can operate independently down the Maros with part of his troops, while the rest of his corps, along with the Szeklers, suffices to keep Puchner and the Russians busy;

Page me9.159

(2) In the north, where previously Bem himself had to drive out the imperial forces every time, the insurrection has spread to such an extent that it can cope with Malkowsky and Urban even without Bem;

Page me9.159

(3) Bem therefore not merely operates in distinguished fashion as a military leader, but at the same time he has also organised the Transylvanian insurrection and made it more formidable than ever;

Page me9.159

(4) The Romanians, the majority of the Transylvanian population, who initially behaved with such fanaticism against the Magyars and Szeklers, either have lost all spirit for further fighting because of the successes of the latter, or must even have joined them, impelled by their hatred of the Russian invasion. Without this, Bem's latest successes would have been quite impossible.

Page Break me9.160

Page me9.160

At last we have some news about the position of the imperial forces on the Theiss. The Lloyd reports from Pest on the 20th that Götz is in Tokaj, Jablonowsky in Miskolcz, Schlick in Erlau, and Jellachich in Szegléd.†a

Page me9.160

This means that in this sector the imperial forces are in precisely the same positions on March 20 as they were on January 20. Compare Army Bulletin No. 19 and our comments on it in No. 214 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.†b

Page me9.160

Hence, for two months the imperial forces have been roaming around in the area between the Danube, the Carpathians and the Theiss, with varying fortunes. When the Theiss was frozen, they were stationed in front of it and tried to advance across the ice; the Magyars drove them back with casualties. Then it was said that the drifting ice prevented them from getting across. It did not prevent the Magyars from following the imperial troops to the right bank. After this, Görgey came, drove Schlick back to the main army, joined with Dembinski, and the two advanced to within a few miles of Pest. That was four weeks ago. They retreated again, the imperial troops followed them, and since the glorious “victory” of Kapolna they have not advanced a step further; Schlick's headquarters, Erlau, is on the battlefield of Kapolna, so to speak.

Page me9.160

Whether Götz is actually in Tokaj or only in its vicinity remains an open question. The positive information we have today from this region comes from the martial-law Lithographierte Correspondenz of the 24th from Vienna and is this: General Hammerstein, whose move from Galicia into Hungary with 10 battalions was so definitely reported by the Vienna newspapers and correspondents from Pest, has still not pressed forward towards Hungary at all!!

Page me9.160

Schlick and Jablonowsky are harmless in their present positions for the time being. The former is said to have already started to move; but what use is that in view of “the slushy weather that has set in” and the imminent season of spring rains which we mentioned this morning?†c

Page me9.160

And to crown all the Ban, the chivalrous, invincible Ban Jellachich! He marched towards Szegedin, he occupied Kecskemét, and set up his headquarters in Felegyhaza, four miles further on; he was said to have so routed the Magyars at Szegedin that the city surrendered; the procession of the inhabitants to the Ban, with maidens clad in white, garlands, flags, music and all the trappings, was already described, and, lo and behold, the South-Slav Don Quixote is suddenly back at the point whence he had set out, on the selfsame spot where he rejoined his troops after they were defeated at Szolnok — at Szegléd in the Pest comitat!

Page Break me9.161
Page me9.161

Moreover, the Olmütz Government appears to be fed up with Windischgrätz's incompetent conduct of the war. It is reported that Windischgrätz will be dismissed, and that Master of Ordnance d'Aspre will take over from him as commander of the army of the Theiss. Certainly, d'Aspre burnt and plundered enough in Italy last year to appear a capable general to a Schwarzenberg-Stadion Government.
Page me9.161

Incidentally, the 50,000 men which Windischgrätz requested as reinforcements to enable him to cope with the Magyars, are supposed to be actually supplied. As the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung reports from Vienna,†a 50,000 men from Vienna, Moravia, Bohemia and Galicia, are said to be marching to the theatre of war, 10,000 of which alone are to reinforce the army besieging Komorn. In addition, six batteries of heavy artillery are said to have been dispatched there from Olmütz a few days ago. Whence all these troops are supposed to be coming the Gods alone may know. It would be very surprising indeed if the Government were able to draw another 50,000 men from the German and Slav provinces, infuriated by the imposition of the Constitution, in addition to the troops (about 350,000 men) already fighting in Hungary and Italy.
Page me9.161

On the 24th, the rumour circulated on the Vienna Stock Exchange that Komorn had capitulated after three days' heavy bombardment. If this were the case, we would first have learnt of it through official reports, as we did of the “victory” of Kapolna, and not through Stock Exchange puffs.
Page me9.161

The only information we have from the Banat comes from statements in the Vienna and Olmütz papers that Baja on the Danube was occupied on the 18th by 4,000 Magyars. Baja is located in the comitat of Bacska, hence in the part of the Voivodina claimed as Serbian, and at the same level as Theresiopel (Subotica), about eight miles away. The garrison crossed over the Danube, i.e. into the insurgent comitat of Tolna; it is attempting to move towards the forces of Colonel Horváth, which are approaching by steamship and tug and are to clear the Danube of guerillas. But probably, nothing more will even be heard of it, as the insurgents are likely to have cut it to pieces already long ago.
Page me9.161

One hears from the Slovakian mountains that Perczel is now at the head of the guerillas organised there, who have already been mentioned several times. A correspondent writes to the Schlesische Zeitung from Vienna on the 22nd that Perczel was recently in Tyrnau, five miles from Pressburg and eleven from Vienna, and was threatening the former town. He has however returned from there to Neutra and is now moving towards the Moravian border to threaten Olmütz. Everywhere he incites the Slovaks to rebellion, and arms and organises guerilla forces. He has laid under contribution all the villages and localities which have provided recruits for the royal imperial army; he is having hanged all those clergymen who previously were in agreement with Hurban.

Page Break me9.162
Page me9.162
It is evident that the so-called Slovak deputation which, with Hurban at its head, was recently in Olmütz,†156 is by no means representative of the Slovaks, and that these on the contrary prefer to side with the Magyars. Soon Perczel is likely to concentrate here the same formidable force with which Görgey conducted his brilliant campaigns.
Page me9.162
To sum up: the imperial forces are suffering defeats everywhere, and what they need to crush the Magyar revolution is nothing more than — 50,000-60,000 Russians!
Page me9.162
But, in addition to the Slav movement and the Italian war, there is something else which may give a different turn to the whole Hungarian revolutionary war and change it into a European conflict, i.e. the Turkish affair. Turkey is Europe's most sensitive spot: movements in Turkey immediately bring England and France into collision with Russia. And it seems that at all events Turkey wants to move against Russian encroachments upon the Romanian provinces, and Russian intrigues in the Slav Danube provinces. A correspondent writes from Czernowitz (Bukovina) on March 16:

"Letters from Jassy bring us the news that the Turks have marched into Galatz as well as Wallachia in significant strength, 100,000 men, it is said, to protest arms in hand against the Russian occupation of the Danube principalities."

Page me9.162
And the Austrian correspondent adds from Zara in Dalmatia on March 13 that considerable military preparations have been going on for a fortnight in the neighbouring town of Mostar, and all men of the region capable of bearing arms have been called to the colours. In April, all men from 16 to 40 years of age are to be called up and only one man is to be left behind with each family for its support. In Zara one does not know what to make of it.†a
Page me9.162
If it is confirmed that the Porte wishes seriously to oppose Russia — and the French papers too have been reporting this for some time — a new and scarcely avoidable impulse will be given to a European war. And this war will be upon us before we realise it and bear the European revolution in its train.

Page Break me9.163

Page me9.163
Postscript. At Hochwiesen (two miles from Schemnitz) a guerilla force which advanced from Komorn under the leadership of Ernst Simonyi has been driven back, the Wiener Zeitung reports.†a This and a few fires is all that this official paper has today about Hungary!
Page me9.163
A correspondent writes from Pest that the general offensive was to have begun on the 20th. Heavy artillery has gone to support Schlick. Theresiopel has not yet been taken, despite the reinforcement of Todorovich there by 5,000 Serbian volunteers. On the other hand, the Honveds are said to have been driven out of Baja again.

Written by Engels about March 29, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 259, March 30, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.164

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

[ITALY]

Page me9.164
As we were able to inform most of our readers yesterday,†a two engagements have taken place simultaneously, at Vigevano and Mortara, in one of which the Austrians gained advantages, in the other the victory went to the Piedmontese.
Page me9.164
Today we have more definite news. We shall relate it in chronological order.
Page me9.164
Ramorino's treachery is, according to a report of the Constitutionnel, beyond doubt. His orders were to prevent the Austrians from crossing the Ticino with the Lombard division from Vigevano. He sent a battalion of riflemen which occupied the crossing. An Austrian regiment made its appearance on the morning of the 20th and was held back for five hours, from 5 a.m. to 10 a.m. In the meantime, instead of the regiment, an entire imperial brigade arrived at the Ticino. The Lombard battalion commander, Manara, astonished still to be left without any aid, retreated to Vigevano, the division's headquarters. Vigevano was deserted by Ramorino's troops. The Lombards retreated still further and eventually met a Piedmontese corps, which they were able to join. During this time, Ramorino had led his division off on marches which flagrantly contradicted the orders he had received. He was, however, arrested on the same day and, let us hope, will be shot.

Page me9.164
As a result of Ramorino's treachery, the Austrians succeeded in concentrating the main body of their forces in the Lomellina, between the Po and the Ticino, thus driving a wedge into the Piedmontese army. Durando and the entire corps stationed south of the Po are cut off from the main army.
Page me9.164
On the 21st, Radetzky with two columns marched north towards Vigevano and Mortara, on the road leading to Vercelli. At Vigevano, one of the columns was halted by Piedmontese troops. For four hours they fought against numerically superior imperial forces at Sforzesca and Gambolo, without retreating. At last, the Savona brigade arrived at about four o'clock and drove back the Austrians with casualties. 1,500 prisoners are said to have fallen into the hands of the Piedmontese.

Page Break me9.165
Page me9.165
Immediately afterwards, at 6 o'clock, Mortara was attacked by the imperial forces; after defending themselves bravely, the Piedmontese eventually withdrew from this position under the protection of the reserve division.
Page me9.165
This division continued the battle into the night, and only then did Mortara fall into the hands of the enemy.
Page me9.165
So much is certain. But from here on the reports are contradictory. According to one, the Duke of Savoy had resumed the offensive on the 22nd, and put two Hungarian regiments to flight; according to another, Radetzky is advancing along the Vercelli road.

Page me9.165
In Paris, a telegraphic dispatch said to have been received on the 26th puts Radetzky only four miles from Turin. Even the Journal des Débats, which is favourably disposed towards the Austrians, has to admit that this report is unfounded and could not possibly have been received in Paris on the 26th.†a It even makes the effort to prove this by comparing the dates and distances involved.
Page me9.165
It further admits that Radetzky has got himself into a position in which one defeat will finish him off.

“If the Piedmontese army has time to concentrate in Radetzky's rear, it will be able to put him into a most difficult position.”

Page me9.165
But this is precisely what the Journal des Débats doubts. Firstly, it says, the Piedmontese army has been drawn up along far too long a line, taking up positions from Novara to Castel San Giovanni, and even having other detached corps at Arona and Sarzana, or now at Parma; and secondly, it must be assumed that Radetzky, when he decided to cross the Ticino, had with him the whole of his available forces, 70,000 men with 120 cannon.

Page me9.165

Firstly, the Piedmontese army has, indeed, been deployed since the 21st in such a way that the corps which directly confronts Radetzky is certainly too weak by itself to withstand him. That is the result of Ramorino's treachery. But this is not the issue. The Duke of Genoa is operating on the right flank of the Austrians, the Piedmontese reserves are stationed on their left flank at Casale and Alessandria, and Durando is in their rear at Stradella. Radetzky is literally encircled, and his retreat in case of a defeat is as good as cut off. It is a curious assumption that these distinct Piedmontese corps would not operate together (and the Duke of Genoa and the reserve corps of the main army are close enough to do so). By his treachery, Ramorino was able to put the Piedmontese at a momentary disadvantage, but he could not thereby decide the outcome of the campaign.

Page Break me9.166
Page me9.166

Secondly, the Austrian army between the Ticino and the Po is by no means 70,000 strong. The Journal des Débats really argues too naively when it asserts: because Radetzky had an alleged 70,000 men under his command between the Adda and the Ticino, he must have led the same number across the Ticino. Clearly, he must have left behind a considerable number on the Lombardic bank of the Po and in Pavia, as well as on the Lambro and the Adda, to cover his base of operations. According to a report in the Basler Zeitung (which enthusiastically supports the imperial cause), the Austrians had 8,000 men at Gallarate, 20,000 at Magenta, 25,000 at Pavia and 25,000 at Piacenza. Only the first three corps, together 50,000-53,000 men, could be taken across the Ticino in case of extreme necessity; the corps at Piacenza barely sufficed to cover the Po from Piacenza to Pavia.
Page me9.166

Even without the outermost formations dispatched to Como via Arona and to Parma via Sarzana, the Piedmontese army will therefore probably completely suffice to hold out against Radetzky.
Page me9.166

Moreover, that Radetzky has left Lombardy largely stripped of troops is clear even from the hasty transfer of the troops from the Venice area, from Verona to Lombardy, from Padua to Verona. In the Tirol a corps of 7,000 riflemen is said to have been mobilised. Venice will thus be fairly denuded of troops, and the encirclement from the landward side will surely soon cease of its own accord.†157
Page me9.166

In Paris, the rumour was circulating on the 27th that the Duke of Genoa had defeated the Austrians. 12,000 Austrians, encircled by three Piedmontese divisions, were said to have laid down their arms. We regard this rumour as scarcely more trustworthy than that spread on the 26th about the defeat of the Piedmontese.
Page me9.166

A letter from Parma says that 7,000 Tuscans and 8,000 Romans have joined La Marmora.

Page me9.166

The Roman general Zambeccari has routed an Austrian corps on the Modena-Bologna border.

Written by Engels on March 29, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 259, March 30, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.167

[LATEST NEWS FROM HUNGARY]

Page me9.167

Hungary. A correspondent writes to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung on March 21 from Pest:

“It appears certain that Kaschau and a few other districts in northern Hungary have been re-occupied by the Hungarians. At least, yesterday's post bound for Kaschau did not get as far as Gyöngyös, and has returned here.”†a

Page me9.167

Gyöngyös is in the rear of Schlick's position at Erlau, and about eleven miles from Pest.

Written by Engels on March 30, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 259, March 30, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.168

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR. —
MORE RUSSIAN TROOPS

Page me9.168

Following Bem's victories, another 20,000 Russians have marched into Transylvania.
Page me9.168
The most recent news from Transylvania brings confirmation of the Magyars' victory. In Hermannstadt, Bem had the building of the General Command and the dwelling of the Saxon Count battered down; after this, he attacked and dispersed the national guards with grape-shot, and then gave the town over to plunder for a couple of hours. He then withdrew from the town and went on to Schässburg, where he wrought even worse havoc. Kaschau has again been occupied by a Magyar raiding party, and in Schemnitz, too, Honveds†158 have once again turned up.

Written by Engels on March 30, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 260, March 31, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.169

THE DEFEAT OF THE PIEDMONTESE

Page me9.169
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 260, March 31, 1849]

Cologne, March 30. Ramorino's treachery has borne fruit. The Piedmontese army has been totally defeated at Novara and driven back to Borgomanero at the foot of the Alps.†159 The Austrians have occupied Novara, Vercelli and Trino, and the road to Turin lies open to them.
Page me9.169
So far any more detailed information is lacking. But this much is certain: without Ramorino, who allowed the Austrians to drive a wedge between the different Piedmontese divisions and isolate some of them, the Austrian victory would have been impossible.

Page me9.169
Nor can there be any doubt that Charles Albert also was guilty of treachery. But whether he committed it merely through the medium of Ramorino or in some other way as well, we shall only learn later on.
Page me9.169
Ramorino is the adventurer who after a more than doubtful career during the Polish war of 1830-31 disappeared during the Savoy campaign of 1834†160 with the entire cash resources for the war on the same day that matters took a serious turn, and who later, in London, for £1,200 drew up for the ex-Duke of Brunswick a plan for the conquest of Germany.

Page me9.169

The mere fact that such an adventurer could even be given a post proves that Charles Albert, who is more afraid of the republicans of Genoa and Turin than of the Austrians, was from the outset contemplating treachery.
Page me9.169

That, after this defeat, a revolution and proclamation of a republic in Turin is expected arises from the fact that the attempt is being made to prevent it by the abdication of Charles Albert in favour of his eldest son.†a

Page Break me9.170
Page me9.170

The defeat of the Piedmontese is more important than all the German imperial tricks taken together. It is the defeat of the whole Italian revolution. After the defeat of Piedmont comes the turn of Rome and Florence.†161
Page me9.170

But unless all the signs are deceptive, precisely this defeat of the Italian revolution will be the signal for the outbreak of the European revolution. The French people sees that to the same extent that it becomes more and more enslaved by its own counter-revolution inside the country, the armed counter-revolution abroad approaches closer and closer to its frontiers. The counterpart of the June victory and Cavaignac's dictatorship in Paris was Radetzky's victorious march to the Mincio, the counterpart to the presidency of Bonaparte, Barrot and the law on association†162 is the victory at Novara and the Austrians' march to the Alps. Paris is ripe for a new revolution. Savoy, which for a year has been preparing its secession from Piedmont and union with France, and which did not want to participate in the war, Savoy will want to throw itself into the arms of France; Barrot and Bonaparte will have to reject it. Genoa, and perhaps Turin, if there is still time for it, will proclaim a republic and call on France for help; and Odilon Barrot will solemnly reply to them that he will be able to protect the integrity of Sardinia's territory.
Page me9.170

But if the Ministry does not wish to know it, the people of Paris knows very well that France must not tolerate the Austrians in Turin and Genoa. And the people of Paris will not tolerate them there. It will reply to the Italians by a victorious uprising and the French army, the only army in Europe that has not been in the open battlefield since February 24,†a will join it.
Page me9.170

The French army is burning with impatience to cross the Alps and measure its strength against the Austrians. It is not accustomed to opposing a revolution which promises it new renown and new laurels, and which comes forward with the banner of war against coalition. The French army is not “My glorious army”.†163
Page me9.170

The defeat of the Italians is bitter. No people, apart from the Poles, has been so shamefully oppressed by the superior power of its neighbours, no people has so often and so courageously tried to throw off the yoke oppressing it. And each time this unfortunate people has had to submit again to its oppressors; the result of all the efforts, of all the struggle, has been nothing but fresh defeats! But if the present defeat has as its consequence a revolution in Paris and leads to the outbreak of a European war, the foretokens of which are everywhere evident; if this defeat gives the impetus for a new movement throughout the Continent — a movement which this time will have a different character from that of last year — then even the Italians will have cause for congratulating themselves on it.

Page Break me9.171

[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 261 (second edition), April 1, 1849]

Cologne, April 1. According to the latest reports from Italy, the defeat of the Piedmontese at Novara is by no means so decisive as was reported in the telegraphic dispatch sent to Paris.
Page me9.171
The Piedmontese have suffered defeat; they are cut off from Turin and thrown back to the mountains. That is all.
Page me9.171
If Piedmont were a republic, if the Turin Government were revolutionary and if it had the courage to resort to revolutionary measures — nothing would be lost. But Italian independence is being lost not because of the invincibility of Austrian arms, but because of the cowardice of Piedmont royalty.
Page me9.171
To what do the Austrians owe their victory? To the fact that owing to Ramorino's treachery, two divisions of the Piedmontese army were cut off from the remaining three, and these three isolated divisions were beaten owing to the numerical superiority of the Austrians. These three divisions have now been pressed back to the foot of the Pennine Alps.
Page me9.171
From the outset it was an enormous mistake of the Piedmontese that they opposed to the Austrians merely a regular army, that they wanted to wage an ordinary, bourgeois, genteel war against them. A nation that wants to conquer its independence cannot restrict itself to the ordinary methods of warfare. Mass uprising, revolutionary war, guerilla detachments everywhere — that is the only means by which a small nation can overcome a large one, by which a less strong army can be put in a position to resist a stronger and better organised one.
Page me9.171
The Spaniards proved it in 1807-12,†164 the Hungarians are proving it now as well.
Page me9.171
Chrzanowski was defeated at Novara and cut off from Turin; Radetzky stood 9 miles from Turin. In a monarchy such as Piedmont, even in a constitutional one, the outcome of the campaign was thereby decided; Radetzky was petitioned for peace. But in a republic the defeat would have been by no means decisive. If it were not for the inevitable cowardice of the monarchy, which never has the courage to resort to extreme revolutionary means — if this cowardice had not held it back from this course — Chrzanowski's defeat could have become fortunate for Italy.

Page Break me9.172
Page me9.172
Had Piedmont been a republic that did not have to pay any regard to monarchical traditions, there would have been a way open to it to end the campaign quite differently.
Page me9.172
Chrzanowski was driven back to Biella and Borgomanero. There, where the Swiss Alps prevent any further retreat, and where the two or three narrow river valleys make any dispersal of the army practically impossible, it was easy to concentrate the army and by a bold advance nullify Radetzky's victory.
Page me9.172
If the leaders of the Piedmontese army had any revolutionary courage, if they knew that in Turin there was a revolutionary government ready to take the most extreme measures, their course of action would have been very simple.
Page me9.172
After the battle at Novara there were 30,000-40,000 Piedmontese troops at Lago Maggiore. This corps could be mobilised in two days and could be thrown into Lombardy, where there are less than 12,000 Austrian troops. This corps could occupy Milan, Brescia and Cremona, organise a general uprising, smash one by one the Austrian corps advancing singly from the Venetian region, and so completely destroy Radetzky's whole basis of operations.
Page me9.172
Instead of marching on Turin, Radetzky would have had immediately to turn round and go back to Lombardy, pursued by the levy en masse of the Piedmontese, who of course would have had to support the uprising in Lombardy.
Page me9.172
Such a really national war, like that which the Lombards waged in March 1848, and by which they drove Radetzky beyond the Oglio and the Mincio — such a war would have drawn the whole of Italy into the struggle and a quite different spirit would have permeated the Romans and Tuscans.
Page me9.172
While Radetzky still stood between the Po and the Ticino, pondering whether he should advance or retreat, the Piedmontese and Lombards could have marched right up to Venice, relieve the siege there, draw in La Marmora and the Roman troops, harrass and weaken the Austrian Field Marshal by countless guerilla groups, split up his forces and finally defeat him. Lombardy was only waiting for the Piedmontese to arrive; it rose up even before their arrival. Only the Austrian fortresses held the Lombardy towns in check. Ten thousand Piedmontese were already in Lombardy; if another 20,000-30,000 had marched in, Radetzky's retreat would have been impossible.

Page Break me9.173
Page me9.173
But a mass uprising and a general insurrection of the people are means which royalty is terrified of using. These are means to which only a republic resorts — 1793 is proof of that. These are means, the application of which presupposes revolutionary terror, and where has there been a monarch who could resolve to use that?

Page me9.173

What ruined the Italians, therefore, was not the defeat at Novara and Vigevano; it was the cowardice and moderation that monarchy forces on them. The lost battle at Novara resulted merely in a strategic disadvantage; the Italians were cut off from Turin, whereas the way to it lay open to the Austrians. This disadvantage would have been entirely without significance if the lost battle had been followed by a real revolutionary war, if the remainder of the Italian army had forthwith proclaimed itself the nucleus of a national mass uprising, if the conventional strategic war of armies had been turned into a people's war, like that waged by the French in 1793.
Page me9.173

But, of course, a monarchy will never consent to a revolutionary war, a mass uprising and terror. It would make peace with its bitterest enemy of equal rank rather than ally itself with the people.
Page me9.173

Whether or not Charles Albert is a traitor — Charles Albert's crown, the monarchy alone, would have sufficed to ruin Italy.
Page me9.173

But Charles Albert is a traitor. All the French newspapers carry news about the great European counter-revolutionary plot of all the great powers, about the plan of campaign of the counter-revolution for the final suppression of all the European peoples. Russia and England, Prussia and Austria, France and Sardinia, have signed this new Holy Alliance.†165
Page me9.173

Charles Albert received orders to start a war against Austria, to let himself be defeated, thereby giving the Austrians an opportunity to restore “peace” in Piedmont, Florence and Rome, and to arrange for martial-law constitutions to be imposed everywhere. In return for this, Charles Albert was to receive Parma and Piacenza and the Russians were to pacify Hungary; France was to become an empire, and thus peace was established in Europe. That, according to the French newspapers, is the great plan of the counter-revolution, and this plan explains Ramorino's treachery and the defeat of the Italians.
Page me9.173

But the monarchy, as a result of Radetzky's victory, has suffered a fresh blow. The battle at Novara and the paralysis of the Piedmontese which followed it prove that in extreme cases, when a people needs to exert all its strength in order to save itself, nothing hinders it so much as the monarchy. If Italy is not to perish because of the monarchy, then above all the monarchy in Italy must perish.

Page Break me9.174
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 263, April 4, 1849]

Now at last the events of the Piedmontese campaign right up to the victory of the Austrians at Novara lie before us frankly and clearly revealed.
Page me9.174

While Radetzky deliberately caused the false rumour to be spread that he would keep on the defensive and retreat towards the Adda, he secretly concentrated all his troops around Sant Angelo and Pavia. Owing to the treachery of the pro-Austrian reactionary party in Turin, Radetzky was fully informed of all Chrzanowski's plans and arrangements and of the entire position of his army. On the other hand, he succeeded in completely deceiving the Piedmontese as to his own plans. This was why the Piedmontese army was drawn up on both sides of the Po, the sole calculation being to advance simultaneously from all sides in a concentric movement against Milan and Lodi.
Page me9.174

Nevertheless, if strong resistance had been offered by the Piedmontese army in the centre, it would have been impossible to envisage the swift success that Radetzky has now achieved. If Ramorino's corps at Pavia had barred his way, there would still have been time enough to contest Radetzky's passage across the Ticino until reinforcements had been brought up. In the meanwhile the divisions on the right bank of the Po and at Arona could also have arrived; the Piedmontese army drawn up parallel to the Ticino would have covered Turin and been more than sufficient to put Radetzky's army to flight. One had, of course, to rely on Ramorino doing his duty.
Page me9.174

But he did not do it. He allowed Radetzky to cross the Ticino, and this meant that there was a break-through in the centre of the Piedmontese army and the divisions on the other side of the Po were isolated. Thereby, in fact, the outcome of the campaign was already decided.
Page me9.174

Radetzky then put his entire force of 60,000-70,000 men with 120 guns between the Ticino and the Agogna and took the five Piedmontese divisions along the Ticino in the flank. Thanks to his enormously superior force, he repelled the four nearest divisions at Mortara, Garlasco and Vigevano on the 21st, captured Mortara thereby compelling the Piedmontese to withdraw to Novara, and threatened the only road to Turin still open to them — that from Novara via Vercelli and Chivasso.
Page me9.174

This road, however, was already lost for the Piedmontese. In order to concentrate their troops and, in particular, to be able to bring up Solaroli's division stationed on the extreme left flank round Arona,

Page Break me9.175
they had to make Novara the nodal point of their operations, whereas otherwise they could have taken up a new position behind the Sesia.
Page me9.175

Being therefore already as good as cut off from Turin, nothing was left to the Piedmontese but either to accept battle at Novara or to go into Lombardy, organise a people's war and to leave Turin to its fate, the reserves and the national guard. In that case, Radetzky would have taken good care not to advance farther.
Page me9.175

But this presupposes that in Piedmont itself preparations were made for a mass uprising and precisely this was not the case. The bourgeois national guard was armed; but the mass of the people were unarmed, however loudly they demanded the arms stocked in the arsenals.

Page me9.175
The monarchy did not dare to appeal to this irresistible force that had saved France in 1793.
Page me9.175
The Piedmontese had, therefore, to accept battle at Novara, however unfavourable their position and however great the enemy's superiority of force.
Page me9.175
40,000 Piedmontese (ten brigades) with relatively weak artillery confronted the entire Austrian army numbering at least 60,000 men with 120 guns.
Page me9.175
The Piedmontese army was drawn up under the walls of Novara on both sides of the Mortara road.
Page me9.175
The left flank, two brigades commanded by Durando, had the support of a fairly strong position, La Bicocca.
Page me9.175
The centre, three brigades commanded by Bés, backed on a farmstead, La Cittadella.
Page me9.175
The right flank, two brigades commanded by Perrone, backed on the Cortenuova plateau (the Vercelli road).
Page me9.175
There were two reserve corps, one consisting of two brigades under the Duke of Genoa stationed on the left flank, the second consisting of a brigade and the guards under the Duke of Savoy, the present King, stationed on the right flank.
Page me9.175
The disposition of the Austrians, judging from their communiqué, is less clear.
Page me9.175
The second Austrian corps under d'Aspre was the first to attack the left flank of the Piedmontese, while behind it the third corps under Appel, as well as the reserves and the fourth corps, were deployed. The Austrians were completely successful in establishing their line of battle and simultaneously delivering a concentric attack on all points of the Piedmontese battle formation with such a superiority of force that the Piedmontese were crushed by it.

Page Break me9.176
Page me9.176
The key to the Piedmontese position was the Bicocca. If the Austrians had captured it, the Piedmontese centre and left flank would have been trapped between the (unfortified) town and the canal, and they could have been either scattered or forced to lay down their arms.
Page me9.176

Hence the main attack was directed against the Piedmontese left flank, the chief support of which was the Bicocca. Here the battle raged with great violence, but for a long time without result.
Page me9.176
A very lively attack was launched also against the centre. La Cittadella was lost several times but several times it was retaken by Bés.
Page me9.176
When the Austrians saw that they were encountering too strong a resistance here, they again turned their main strength against the Piedmontese left flank. The two Piedmontese divisions were thrown back to the Bicocca and finally the Bicocca itself was captured by storm. The Duke of Savoy with his reserves hurled himself on the Austrians, but it was of no avail. The superiority of the imperial forces was too great; the position was lost, and that decided the battle. The only retreat left to the Piedmontese was towards the Alps, to Biella and Borgomanero.
Page me9.176
And this battle, prepared for by treachery and won by superior force, the Kölnische Zeitung, which has so long been hankering for an Austrian victory, calls:

"a battle which in the history of war will shine for all time (!), since the victory won in it by old Radetzky is the result of such skilful combined movements and such truly magnificent bravery that nothing like it has occurred since the days of Napoleon, the great demon of battles (!!!)."†a

Page me9.176
Radetzky or, rather, Hess, his chief of the general staff, carried out his plot with Ramorino quite well, we admit. It is also true that since Grouchy's treachery at Waterloo,†166 certainly no such magnificent villainy has occurred as that of Ramorino's. Radetzky, however, is not in the same class as Napoleon, the "demon of battles" (!), but in that of Wellington; the victories of both of them always cost more ready money than bravery and skill.
Page me9.176
We shall not discuss at all the rest of the lies which the Kölnische Zeitung spread yesterday evening, i.e. that the democratic deputies have fled from Turin, and that the Lombards "behaved like a cowardly rabble" etc. They have already been refuted by the latest events. These lies prove nothing but the joy of the Kölnische Zeitung that great Austria has crushed — and that by means of treachery — little Piedmont.

Page Break me9.177

Written by Engels between March 30 and April 3, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 260, No. 261 (second edition), No. 263, March 31, April 1 and 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.178

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.178

Recent news from the theatre of war is entirely lacking. Only individual details about events of which we already know are at hand. In the following we give the most important of these:

Page me9.178

Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schulzig has been recalled because of his incompetent conduct of operations in Hungary, and transferred to the post of Commandant in Styria. The first of the much vaunted royal imperial Austrian generals of whom an example is made. More are in prospect.

Page me9.178

Jellachich is said to be in Felegyhaza and his outposts four hours from Szegedin, which is said to be encircled and cut off from supplies from the Banat. A glance at any large-scale map giving the location of the swamps around Szegedin shows that this report is an empty boast.

Page me9.178

About 2,500 Hungarian insurgents sought to effect an entry into Galicia in the district of Stryj, but were repulsed with casualties.

Page me9.178

It is learnt that as a rule the cadres of the Hungarian army reserve battalions consist of Polish veterans.

Page me9.178

The most recent order of Field Marshal Windischgrätz that no one can be forced to accept Hungarian banknotes (!!)†a has had no effect at all in Pest.

Page me9.178

In another issue of the Lithographierte Correspondenz from Vienna we read:

"The Hungarians are continually advancing on Pest and will make every effort to relieve Arad, Komorn and Peterwardein, efforts that may be successful, since the Hungarian army is daily growing larger and more enthusiastic, while the imperial troops are reduced in numbers and disheartened as well by strenuous marches, bad provisioning and continuous skirmishes. Most recently a very violent engagement took place at Török Szent Miklos, in which both parties suffered heavy losses, the Hungarians however were left in possession of the battlefield. At Szegedin, a heavy encounter between the Hungarian army of the South under Vetter and Damjanich and the Serbian army corps is expected any day now. The Serbs have actually gone back to Serbia,†a lock, stock and barrel, and the unit numbering about 8,000 men will be greatly missed by the imperial generals. Peterwardein is still occupied by Hungarian troops and, as I learnt yesterday, the force there has resolved, after throwing into the casemates all suspect officers, to blow up the ancient rocks of Peterwardein rather than surrender. Hence the navigation on the Danube may well have been opened from Karlowitz, but not further upstream; for any boat that ventured near Peterwardein, which completely commands the whole Danube, would be sent to the bottom of the river. Komorn has been bombarded since March 17 without any success; large siege artillery is being sent by steamship down to Komorn every day. Bem has taken Hermannstadt and driven out the 3,000 Russians and 2,000 Austrians who were garrisoned there."

Page Break me9.179

Page me9.179

On Bem's capture of Hermannstadt, a Vienna correspondent of the Börsen-Halle writes:

"A look at the map shows the daring with which the insurgent leader has effected this coup, for, as the reports say, he made a 26 hours' forced march with 12,000 men from Vásárhely and attacked Hermannstadt before daybreak, surprised and disarmed the Russian garrison there which in part was still in barracks, and is said to have captured several guns. It is also reported that several Russians have been hanged. The Russian protection, which was promised with the arrival of the Russian relief-force, has consequently been of very little help to the unfortunate inhabitants of Hermannstadt."

Page me9.179

A correspondent, who is an enthusiast of the royal imperial cause, has written as follows to the Breslauer Zeitung from the Hungarian border:

"The rumour of Prince Windischgrätz's resignation is daily growing stronger. For Windischgrätz is said to be not only disgruntled by the unsatisfactory progress of the war, which he attributes to the oft requested but never granted reinforcements to his troops, but to be particularly offended by the tutelage the Ministry has recently found it expedient to impose upon him in respect of the civil administration of the country. The affair of the banknotes caused the first rift in the entente cordiale†b between Windischgrätz and the Ministry, and the dispatch of Baron Kübek to Ofen to superintend the Hungarian finances was not designed to restore the shattered harmony either. It is asserted that Baron Welden in Vienna, recently promoted to the rank of Master of Ordnance, is destined to replace the austere Marshal in Hungary. Welden's post as Governor of the capital city of the Empire will be taken by Master of Ordnance Count Nugent, since the notorious incidents in Friuli in spring last year†167 have made it impossible for this general to remain in the field. — An air of mystery continues to hang over the terrible fate of Maklar. After the battle of Kapolna, this beautiful market town was badly damaged; hence Prince Windischgrätz caused compensation of 1,000 florins to be granted to it. Later it was said to have been razed to the ground because of the alleged hold-up there of five royal imperial ammunition waggons. This report, however, is denied in Hungarian newspapers appearing in Pest under the eye of the Field Marshal, although the facts concerning the destruction of Maklar appear to have been incontrovertibly established."

Page Break me9.180

Page me9.180

The same correspondent sends the following details about Komorn, from which it follows that the capture of the fortress is out of the question. An "assault" on a fortress, particularly one as impregnable as Komorn, an assault to be made before the walls are breached, would be sheer madness. Nevertheless, the correspondent predicts the assault. One sees how the Austrian officers take the journalists in with the craziest nonsense.

Page me9.180

In addition, we learn that the so-called Palatine line, which is supposed to have been taken long ago by the imperial forces, is still in Hungarian hands, and that only now the direct-fire batteries†168 have been brought into action against it. Hence there is still no question of the capture of this outwork.

Page me9.180

The correspondent writes:

"The Komorn fortress has been shelled assiduously since the 20th of this month, but so far with little success. Two thousand shells are intended to be fired into the area of the fortress. Should the garrison still not surrender, a general assault will be ventured, which the royal imperial troops are impatiently awaiting, since their bivouac is not very inviting in 12 degrees of frost and, moreover, the townships in the whole of the surrounding area are so impoverished and plundered of everything that their inhabitants come into the Austrian camp to beg and gladly pay 30 Kr. for a loaf of army bread merely to be able to still their hunger. The batteries set up on the Sandberg alongside the Danube are intended to clear the island and dismantle the enemy guns of the outer works of the Palatine line; another battery is shelling the road running from the bridgehead through Neu-Szöny; long-distance mortars and rocket batteries commanded by First Lieutenant Jäger, well-known from Italy, complete the list. The garrison is courageously defying death, for the fortress commandant Mek, a young man who has risen in nine months from an artillery sergeant†169 to the rank of the Colonel, sees the scaffold in front of him and will sell his life dearly.

Page me9.180

"In Debreczin the insurgent officers lead an extremely gay life, for money is available there in abundance; a glass of punch costs 1 florin C.M., and quite ordinary cylinder clocks which cost 35 florins in Germany, fetch 200 florins there. Gold and silver are also disappearing from circulation in the seat of the Hungarian junta; payments are now made solely in banknotes, not as though the Hungarian Government were short of talers and ducats, not at all; but solely because it is keeping hard cash under lock and key, both to increase Austria's embarrassments and to preserve hard coin ready for all eventualities. As everybody knows, the cunning of the agitator Kossuth has succeeded in getting his emissaries to spread the myth that the National Bank in Vienna is no longer solvent and has suspended payments. Even in Pest the manoeuvre succeeded and Prince Windischgrätz is not a little angered by this successful ruse of the enemy."

Written by Engels about March 31, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 261, April 1, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.181

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.181

Der Lloyd reports — and it is well known that Der Lloyd is an honourable man — that the Magyars under Görgey have moved across the Theiss and are at Neograd.†a Neograd is seven miles†b to the north of Pest and about 20 miles this side of the Theiss. Görgey has also occupied Kaschau and Gyöngyös, that is why the mail dispatched to Kaschau was returned to Pest even before it had reached Gyöngyös. The aim of this campaign is to relieve Komorn.

Page me9.181

The Austrian papers had triumphantly proclaimed that Dembinski had relinquished his command because of disagreements with Görgey. Now the matter is being resolved. After some dissension between the generals, Kossuth succeeded in reconciling them. They have come to the following arrangement — Görgey retains the supreme command of all insurgent armies, while Dembinski becomes chief of the Hungarian general quartermaster staff, and the campaign must be conducted in strict accordance with the plans of operation laid down by him. Vetter, the former Austrian Staff Officer and currently General of the malcontents, assumes supreme command over Dembinski's corps; a Frenchman named Duchatel is in command of the forces at Arad.

Page me9.181

Some time ago Schlick was in real danger of being taken prisoner; he was attacked by several Hungarian hussars and only the arrival of a Croat detachment saved him.

Page me9.181

The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen relates the following information on the Hungarian war, which shows the enormous heroism with which the Magyars are fighting. The Magyar army is not a regular, organised, well-trained army. It has not even enough rifles to arm the newly arriving recruits of the Landsturm. Hence, behind each Magyar front line stands a crowd of unarmed and untrained men, who are only waiting to take up the muskets of those who have fallen and to fill the gaps torn in the Magyar ranks by the Austrian guns. And it is these improvised soldiers who hold at bay the royal imperial army and its Russian allies.

Page Break me9.182

Page me9.182

The well-known story of the recognition of Francis Joseph as King of Hungary by the Debreczin National Assembly has been put into circulation again by the martial-law Figyelmezö (Observer) in Pest. Only this time the actual recognition is said to have been given on the basis of the Pragmatic Sanction, and on condition that the Hungarian Constitution be recognised. It is also said that Kossuth along with 15 others voted against it.†170

Page me9.182

About Transylvania, the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen has received a report from Czernowitz (Bukovina), according to which the whole of Transylvania except Kronstadt was in the hands of the Magyars, and Bem was about to enter this town as well. It is "believed" that Malkowsky will advance towards Transylvania after he has only just been driven out! 30,000 Russians are expected to move in immediately.†a

Page me9.182

Moreover, that Hungary can only be subjugated by the Russians is as good as admitted by the Austrian Ministers. We shall have to wait and see whether they will have the courage to let the Russians come.

Page me9.182

The situation in the Banat looks bad. We quote the following report on the battle of Szolnok, sent from Kecskemét on March 15, from a Slav paper, the Morawské Nowiny (Moravian Newspaper):

"At 8 in the morning on March 5 a great battle was fought at Szolnok. Two battalions of infantry, half a cavalry regiment and three artillery batteries were on our side; but the mass of the enemy troops was enormous. As soon as we confronted them on the battlefield, they assaulted us with guns as well as with their entire infantry. When we realised that it was no longer possible to withstand them, we retreated. Then the enemy began to assail us forcefully from two sides, until we were wedged in between the narrow banks of the rivers Zagyva and Theiss which merge at Szolnok. Now things really began to happen; the hussars rushed upon us and cut into us so terribly that many of our men jumped into the water and were drowned. When we realised the great danger, we put up resistance and fired on the enemy. Luckily, our aim was good, and the hussars literally rained down from their horses and were compelled to retreat. Fortunately we succeeded in fighting our way out of this confined area on the banks of the rivers, where we were as good as captured already. It was terrible to see soldiers and horses drowning, and our men and the Magyars lying in pools of blood. Among our men, barely 34 of a company of 380 were left after this battle, and, although greatly weakened, we are nevertheless advancing. At Szolnok we threw away our knapsacks and reached Kecskemét (by way of Körös), where we are now expecting the enemy at any hour, since Kossuth is only three hours away from us."†a

Page Break me9.183

Page me9.183

Der Lloyd carries the following report about the fighting at Theresiopel:

“Semlin, March 19. After their capture of Zombor, intoxicated with victory, the Serbs under the command of Dragich and Stein and the Serb auxiliary corps under the leadership of Milija Stanojevich set off towards Maria-Theresiopel via Bajmok and Pacs. But the Serbs from the Serb principality, who together with the Austrian Serbs were just about to storm Theresiopel, suddenly received orders to return to their homeland, orders which they obeyed without question. When the Magyars heard of the recall of the Serbs, they sallied out of Theresiopel, which had not yet been cut off from Szegedin whence they obtained substantial reinforcements, and fell on the small Serb force left with the encouraging battle-cry: 'Forward, have no fear, the Turkish Raizen†171 are no longer here!' The battle lasted fully three hours. Our forces had two guns of their own, an eighteen-pounder from Knicanin and a Racksa twelve-pounder, and held on bravely. The enemy simulated a retreat. Deceived by this into abandoning their advantageous positions, the Serbs impetuously pursued the enemy, who turned round unexpectedly, defeated the Serbs and put them to flight, capturing the guns mentioned above. In this battle the Chaikists†172 suffered the heaviest losses, 200 of them ending their lives on the battlefield.”†b

Page me9.183

Incidentally, the spirit that reigns among the Serbs is shown by the following proclamation issued by Lieutenant-Field Marshal Rukavina in Temesvar:

“For some time now, among the population of this area opinions have emerged and remarks are being made openly in nearly all inns and coffee-houses, which show an ill will that can no longer be tolerated. Accordingly, the honourable mayoralty should with all the severity at its command, as the civil police authority, initiate in this respect a supervision which will give full attention to the inns and coffee-houses and will not tolerate in such places anything directed against the person of the Monarch, the Government, or existing conditions in general, and will eradicate any provocations by word or deed; it should make all innkeepers and coffee-house owners responsible for immediately reporting to the local commander and to the civil authorities concerned everyone who allows himself anything of that kind so that such persons can be arrested in good time. Anyone who neglects to make such a report will be punished for the first offence with arrest and a fine of 100 florins C.M., for the second offence with more rigorous detention and a fine of 200 fl., and for any repetition of the offence with trial by martial law and the closing down of his business. Similarly, all citizens who, having knowledge of such traitorous incitements, omit to report them and this comes afterwards to the knowledge of the local authorities, will become subject to martial law. Hereafter, not only will the honourable mayoralty itself take the necessary measures within the fortress, but will also fully inform the lower courts of the contents of this decree and call for its strict application.”†a

Page Break me9.184

Page me9.184

Moreover, the Südslavische Zeitung has a report on the disagreements between Patriarch Rajachich and Lieutenant-Field Marshal Rukavina:

“Becskerek, March 13. The Serb Central Committee†173 and the Constitutional Committee yesterday sent a deputation to the Patriarch with the request that he convene a National Assembly as soon as possible. The Patriarch replied that he could not immediately comply with this request, as many areas in the Banat are still under Rukavina's authority, in particular the comitat of Krasso and the Wallacho-Illyrian regiment. In private conversation the Patriarch expressed the opinion that the National Assembly will probably be convened after Easter. — In some districts petitions to the Patriarch for the early convening of a National Assembly are being signed.”†b

Written by Engels on April 1, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 261 (second edition), April 1, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.185

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.185

The latest news completely confirms our report printed yesterday†a that the Magyars have advanced to the vicinity of Neograd. In the Miskolcz area, Görgey has broken through the dispositions of the imperial army and thereby — according to the Lithographierte Correspondenz from Vienna based on a message from Pest dated the 26th — forced Lieutenant-Field Marshal Ramberg to withdraw as far as Waitzen on the Danube, 20-25 miles beyond Miskolcz.

Page me9.185

This report at last tells us something of Götz's and Jablonowsky's corps, which have been missing for so long, for it is precisely these two brigades which are commanded by Ramberg. They have thus moved to the Theiss by way of Kaschau, and here they have been driven back over the Hernad by the Magyars. While in Vienna the story has been put about that they were in Tokaj they have had to withdraw to Miskolcz — four miles further to the west, to avoid losing contact with the main army. And here all at once they are thrown back to 20-25 miles from Miskolcz thanks to a new, bold march by Görgey. Instead of advancing along the Theiss, the only alternative open to them is to try to obstruct the Magyars in their march on Komorn at the bend of the Danube where it leaves its easterly course to turn south.

Page me9.185

A peculiar fate of all imperial units marching towards the Theiss from the High Carpathians is to be thrown out of their predetermined line of operations and back on to the main army operating from Pest. Schlick was the first to march down the Hernad to Tokaj. He had scarcely arrived when he was expelled by Görgey, who in the course of his brilliant retreat or rather triumphal march through Upper Hungary managed to get into Schlick's rear. Lieutenant-Field

Page Break me9.186
Marshal Schlick had no alternative but to withdraw down the Theiss, unite with Windischgrätz and abandon eastern Upper Hungary to the Magyars. Ramberg thereupon descended the Hernad, and we have seen that he shared the same fate.
Page me9.186
The great strategic advantage which the Magyars have thus gained is the liberation of by far the greatest part of Upper Hungary as far as the mountain towns and the Jablunka, the extension of their right wing to the Carpathians, the connection established with the volunteer corps in North-Eastern Slovakia and the opening of a road for the relief of Komorn. Even if they could not achieve all this without simultaneously bringing about a greater concentration of the imperial army, it is hardly a disadvantage for them in a country like Hungary where, owing to the terrain both in the mountains and on the plain, much more depends upon strategic combinations and success in guerilla warfare than upon large-scale battles. Precisely the deployment of the imperial army into a long battle-line outflanking the Magyars is the danger here, and precisely this deployment of the imperial troops is always disrupted; indeed, the position at present is that the Magyars are threatening to outflank the imperial troops.
Page me9.186
Here, nothing can help the imperial forces once and for all, except reinforcements from Galicia strong enough to hold the Upper Theiss. And these can only be provided by the Russians, either by occupying Galicia and thus giving the royal imperial forces there a free hand, or by participating themselves in the march into Hungary. We recall that Hammerstein was supposed to have marched over the Carpathians with 12,000 Austrians and advanced to the Upper Theiss,†a and that this rumour proved to be false. Now it is being repeated, and indeed in an improved version.
Page me9.186
The Russians themselves are supposed to be on their way to Hungary. The Österreichischer Correspondent writes from Pest:

“A traveller who arrived here by train assured us that he had learned from a reliable source that the Russians had entered Galicia and intended to march immediately from there into Hungary.”

Page me9.186
This may help — nothing else will so easily. Whether these rumours are true or not, in any case they demonstrate the great significance the imperial generals attribute to the possession of Upper Hungary.
Page me9.186
In the course of this new expedition of Görgey's the estates of several Hungarian magnates, among others the Pallavicini estates and those of Count Szirmay, have been utterly devastated. These gentlemen had betrayed their countrymen and intended to organise volunteer corps against the Magyars.

Page Break me9.187

Page me9.187
60,000 Russian troops are said to have marched into Transylvania.
Page me9.187
On the 25th, there were reports in Pest that the fortress of Arad had been stormed and captured by the Magyars under the Frenchman Duchatel. 3,000 Magyars are said to have been killed.
Page me9.187
Moreover, a number of martial-law inspired rumours are circulating in Vienna and Pest. Bem is said to be dead, Dembinski to have lost his right arm etc.
Page me9.187
The following additional report is taken from the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen, which once again only reached us this morning:

In Pest on the 25th, there was not the slightest news either of Schlick or of Jellachich. They were presumed to be remaining inactive and awaiting reinforcements. “Moreover, the current state of the weather is too unfavourable to permit a campaign to be undertaken through the sea of mud of the Hungarian pusztas. The day before yesterday it snowed incessantly, while today and yesterday, a fine rain drizzled from the skies with great persistence. Already yesterday the post was delayed by ten hours.”†a

Page me9.187
On the other hand the regular navigation between Pest and Esseg on the Danube is said to have been re-opened — it remains to be seen for how long. In any case, Jellachich's march on Kecskemét has resulted in cutting off the Tolna comitat insurgents from the main force of the Magyars and apparently frustrating the movement the Magyars certainly intended to make from Szegedin towards the Danube. This movement was designed to achieve the same outflanking on the right wing of the imperial forces as the one Görgey has as good as executed on the left.
Page me9.187
Komorn is still being unsuccessfully bombarded. A battle was fought in the fortress itself; the party inclined to surrender was defeated, and the revolutionary Magyars have now introduced a reign of terror, shooting every traitor. The Austrian siege troops have to endure the greatest hardship, snow and rain. On March 24 the snow lay 4 feet deep.
Page me9.187
The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung has published an article, “Three Months of the Hungarian War”,†b containing admissions all the more important given the dyed-in-the-wool black-and-yellow†c views of the author. We shall return to it.

Written by Engels on April 2, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 262, April 3, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.188

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.188

Today the news that the Hungarians have advanced by way of Gyöngyös into the area of Waitzen, 5 hours from Pest, is reaching us from all directions. Now nobody dares doubt it any more; the Kölnische Zeitung, the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen,†a all agree on this. The Austrians have had to retreat in all haste to Waitzen from Hatvan and Gödöllö on the worst country roads. Their flank is threatened by the Hungarians, who are simultaneously beginning to present a danger to the siege area around Komorn.

Page me9.188

As a result of these successes on the part of the Hungarians the spirits of the inhabitants of Pest have risen again. Proclamations by Madarász, the Debreczin Minister of Police, in which the inhabitants of the two capitals†174 are urged to hold out in view of their impending liberation, have been distributed in great numbers in Pest.

Page me9.188

Görgey has the supreme command of the advancing Magyar corps. The rumour about Dembinski's resignation on the grounds of his disagreements with Görgey is being repeated. Vetter, who together with Bem drafted the original plans of campaign, is said to have assumed command in his place.

Page me9.188

Another piece of news which is similarly beyond doubt now is that of the entry of 30,000 new Russian auxiliaries into Transylvania. The

Page Break me9.189

Lloyd†a and several issues of the Lithographierte Correspondenz from Vienna announced this unanimously and simultaneously, and also the news that the Bukovina too has been occupied by the Russians.

Page me9.189

Incidentally, the Lloyd reports in addition that Bem has been utterly defeated by the Russians and compelled to retreat into Wallachia.†b We are unable to judge whether the first part of this report is true or not, but it can scarcely be doubted that the second part is completely false. Bem had pursued the Russians as far as the Roterturm Pass, but had been unable to force this pass. If he was defeated, then it was only because of the newly arrived Russians, and these, needed precisely at Hermannstadt, had no means of access other than the Roterturm Pass. Thus Bem could not possibly have been expelled to Wallachian territory through this pass. To the right of the Roterturm Pass lie three other passes leading to Wallachia; but to reach these Bem would first have had to take Kronstadt, which was occupied by imperial troops and Russians and in addition covered by Puchner who had taken up positions on the Küküllo (Kokel). Here too, therefore, it would have been impossible for Bem to get across. Finally, the fifth of the Transylvanian-Wallachian passes, the Sill Pass, lies to the left of Hermannstadt. If he had used this pass then he would have been acting like a lunatic. If he was defeated at Hermannstadt the following courses were open to him: 1) the road along the Maros into Hungary, 2) the road to Klausenburg, and 3) the road to Maros-Vásárhely. In all three cases he would be able to remain at the place of battle and fall back upon Magyar corps to reinforce his troops. Crossing the Sill Pass on the other hand would have meant trampling on the most elementary rules of strategy, cutting himself off voluntarily from the Maros, his basis of operations, and crossing the frontier in a fit of dejection as it were. Thus, until we hear that hitherto unknown and unprecedented imperial advances have cut him off from an otherwise secure retreat we can at most believe in his defeat through Russian superiority, but not in his crossing into Wallachian territory.

Page me9.189

No news has been received about the capture of the Arad citadel by the Magyars. On the other hand even the most black-and-yellow†c newspapers admit that a considerable Hungarian army is concentrating in and around Alt-Arad, this "Magyar Saragossa",†175 and that evidently important battles are in preparation there.
Page me9.189

Incidentally, Bem has exercised the same salutary terrorism against the Russians in Transylvania as against the Saxons and the Romanians. Thus among other things he is said to have ordered the hanging of 300 Cossacks captured by his troops in the attacks on Hermannstadt, and to have said of the deed that it had been one of the most satisfying of his life.

Page Break me9.190
Page me9.190

As a punishment for this and other atrocities, the Lloyd reports, the Russians ordered the hanging of six captured staff officers of Bem's after the battle they are alleged to have won.†a
Page me9.190

Komorn and Peterwardein will soon surrender, hopes the royal imperial press. One knows by now how often and how long these facts, so desirable to the imperial side, have been "hoped for". The rain has not let up, the roads are turning more and more into quagmires, the post arrives later every day, and military operations must also be restricted for the present.
Page me9.190

In brief, the state of the royal imperial cause in Hungary is such that the Olmütz Government is seriously considering negotiations. It is said that a peace congress is to be held in Miskolcz. Of this the Ost-Deutsche Post writes:

"The Government appears to have made new decisions concerning Hungary. One of these is said to be the repeated demand for a surrender, in conjunction with the promise of full immunity (amnesty) for all those troops and officers who return to subordination."†b

Page me9.190

The Serbs are growing more and more serious. The following dispatch in the Lloyd shows that they are demanding more than a merely rhetorical independence:

“Semlin, March 21. Besides the deputies sent to Vienna by the Serbian National Congress upon the demand of the Government, about whom I informed you in my dispatch the day before yesterday, a further two elected deputies, Alexander Kostich and Georg Stojakovich, have departed for Ofen to bring back from the Governor's palace all the documents concerning the Serbian nation as well as the Serbian National Funds and other institutions.”†c

Page me9.190

In short, if it were not for the Russians we should be shouting “Finis Austriae!” much sooner than “Finis Hungariae!” Now even the neighbouring journalist†d realises this at last.

Written by Engels on April 3, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 263, April 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.191

FRENCH FOREIGN POLICY

Page me9.191

Cologne, April 3. The sitting of the French National Assembly on March 31 was marked by the speech of the “versatile little man”, Monsieur Thiers, who with cynical frankness and unambiguous clarity defended the Vienna Treaties of 1815†176 and upheld them as the basis of the present political situation of Europe. Was the little man not perfectly justified in ridiculing the contradiction of allowing these treaties to exist in fact while disavowing them in legal phraseology? And that was the cautious course of action of the Provisional Government†177 as it was that of Cavaignac. Barrot's foreign policy was the necessary consequence of Cavaignac's policy, just as Cavaignac's foreign policy was the necessary consequence of Lamartine's policy. Lamartine, like the Provisional Government as a whole, of whose foreign policy he was the agent, betrayed Italy and Poland on the pretext of not hindering the internal development of the French Republic. The clang of arms would have sounded a dissonant note in Lamartine's oratorical propaganda. Just as the Provisional Government pretended that it could abolish the contradiction between the bourgeois class and the working class with a phrase about “fraternisation” and spirit away the class struggle, so it did also with regard to the contradiction between nations and foreign war. Under the aegis of the Provisional Government the oppressors of the Poles, Italians and Hungarians reconstituted themselves simultaneously with the French bourgeoisie, which at the end of June put into effect Lamartine's policy of fraternisation. Cavaignac maintained peace with foreign countries in order calmly to wage civil war within France and not endanger the destruction of the defeated red republic, the workers' republic, by the respectable moderate republic, by the bourgeois republic. Under Cavaignac the old Holy Alliance was re-established in Europe, as in France was the new Holy Alliance of the legitimists, Philippists, Bonapartists and “respectable” republicans. The Government of this duplicate Holy Alliance is that of Odilon Barrot.†178 His foreign policy is the policy of this Holy Alliance. He needs the victory of the counter-revolution abroad, in order to complete the counter-revolution in France itself.

Page Break me9.192
Page me9.192

At the sitting of the National Assembly on March 31 the Provisional Government repudiated Cavaignac. Cavaignac rightly maintains that he is the legitimate offspring of the Provisional Government and, for his part, repudiated Odilon Barrot, who imperturbably takes delight in believing that the meaning of the February revolution lies in the Vienna Treaties of 1815. Flocon states — without being disavowed by Odilon Barrot — that two days ago the Government formally imposed an interdict on Italy, and all Frenchmen, Poles and Italians who want to go there are being refused passports. Does not Barrot deserve to become the Prime Minister of Henry V?
Page me9.192

Incidentally, in his rejoinder to Thiers, Ledru-Rollin admitted:

“Yes, I must confess that I acted wrongly; the Provisional Government ought to have sent its soldiers to the frontiers, not in order to conquer, but to defend our oppressed brothers, and from that moment there would have been no more despots in Europe. But if we hesitated at that time to begin a war, the blame lay on the monarchy, which had exhausted our finances and emptied our arsenals.”†a

Written on April 3, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 263, April 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.193

[THE COMEDY WITH THE IMPERIAL CROWN]

Page me9.193

Cologne, April 3. Herr Brandenburg yesterday told the Second Chamber what the King†a will do about the “German question”. The temptation was too great: “the loyal Eckarts" of the Neue Preussische Zeitung with all their warnings have been ignored. The King of Prussia will accept the proffered crown, and in the near future therefore we may be able to look forward to solemn entry of His Christian-Germanic royal imperial Majesty into the residence of the "Imperial Government".

Page me9.193

But, while accepting the imperial crown from the hands of the plebeian Frankfurt parliament, Frederick William at the same time gives a gentle kick to this parliament and the illusion of its sovereignty.
Page me9.193

The Prime Minister

"recognises that the decision of the Frankfurt Assembly is a big step forward towards the realisation of German unity. But he has to take into account also the rights of the governments. He considers that the decision will take effect only with the voluntary consent of the sovereigns and that it will be binding only for those German states the sovereigns of which have given this voluntary consent. The Prussian Government for its part will make every effort to bring about this voluntary unification".†b

Page me9.193

Very cunning! The imperial crown is always acceptable, particularly when it is an aim in life that has been desired in vain for a long time — compare von Radowitz's well-known pamphlet: How Frederick William IV did not become German Emperor.†c But to the crown proffered by the Frankfurt parliament there adheres too much plebeian dirt, too much unpleasant memory of the unhappy days of the rule of the sovereign people, for a king by the grace of God and, moreover, one who has been rehabilitated, to be able to place it on his head without more ado.

Page Break me9.194

Page me9.194

Only when the other sovereigns, also crowned by the grace of God, have given their consent to it, only then will the new crown be cleansed by the grace of God from all sinful stains caused by the March events and consecrated; only then will he who has been chosen by 290 professors and Höfräte take it into his hands and say, as he did earlier in Berlin: "By the grace of God do I have this crown, and woe to him who encroaches on it!"†179
Page me9.194

What new stage in the German imperial chaos will result from the imperial comedy, and especially from recognition or non-recognition on the part of the individual governments, is a matter which we leave to the wisdom of the Kölnische Zeitung to determine.

Written by Engels on April 3, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 263, April 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.195

[THE CALL-UP OF THE ARMY RESERVE
IN PRUSSIA]†180

Page me9.195

Cologne, April 3. In Posen the whole army reserve of the Grand Duchy has been called up and has already been marched off to Schleswig-Holstein.†181

Page me9.195

In the area of Cleves the army reserve has similarly been called up and sent to Schleswig-Holstein.

Page me9.195

And now — we hear — the whole Eighth (Rhenish) Army Corps is to be mobilised and all army reserves in the Rhine Province are to be called up. It is reported that the Eighth Army Corps is to move to the French border. It is quite impossible to understand what purpose it will serve there.

Page me9.195

However, the reason for the army reserve on the Rhine being called up at all can most certainly be understood. In all those provinces whose loyalty to the House of Hohenzollern and to the Royal Prussian Monarchy by God's Grace is suspect they intend to render harmless all young men capable of bearing arms by placing them in rank and file under the command of Prussian officers and throwing them amongst troops of the line in an army corps. They then intend to send these suspect army reserves, which are thus being kept in check by martial law and other royal Prussian measures, together with other more reliable troops into foreign provinces in order to use them as need arises for suppressing the spirit of recalcitrance, which has recently been gaining ground.

Page me9.195

By law the army reserve is only to be used against external enemies. To make this very law provide the excuse for the Government to trample it into the dirt, the Danish war has been expressly invented. Once the army reserve has been transported to Schleswig-Holstein, then the means will very soon be found to transport it even further, to East Prussia or to Silesia. Our Rhenish young men are to perform the same honourable services there for which the Silesian army reserves were used in Posen last April and May.†182

Page Break me9.196

Page me9.196

The same ethnic baiting, which the royal imperial Austrian Government is pursuing on a grand scale by....

Written by Engels on April 3, 1849

First published (in Russian) in the journal Voprosy istorii KPSS No. 12, 1970

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.197

WAGE LABOUR AND CAPITAL†183

[I]
Page me9.197
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 264, April 5, 1849]

Cologne, April 4.†a From various quarters we have been reproached with not having presented the economic relations which constitute the material foundation of the present class struggles and national struggles. We have designedly touched upon these relations only where they directly forced themselves to the front in political conflicts.
Page me9.197
The point was, above all, to trace the class struggle in current history, and to prove empirically by means of the historical material already at hand and which is being newly created daily, that, with the subjugation of the working class, the class which had made February and March, its opponents were simultaneously defeated — the bourgeois republicans in France and the bourgeois and peasant classes which were fighting feudal absolutism throughout the continent of Europe; that the victory of the "respectable republic" in France was at the same time the downfall of the nations that had responded to the February revolution by heroic wars of independence; finally, that Europe, with the defeat of the revolutionary workers, had relapsed into its old double slavery, the Anglo-Russian slavery. The June struggle in Paris, the fall of Vienna, the tragi-comedy of Berlin's November,†b the desperate exertions of Poland, Italy and Hungary, the starving of Ireland into submission†184 — these were the concentrated expressions of the European class struggle between bourgeoisie and working class, by means of which we proved that every revolutionary upheaval, however remote from the class struggle its goal may appear to be, must fail

Page Break me9.198
until the revolutionary working class is victorious, that every social reform remains a utopia until the proletarian revolution and the feudalistic counter-revolution measure swords in a world war. In our presentation, as in reality, Belgium and Switzerland were tragicomic genre-pictures akin to caricature in the great historical tableau, the one being the model state of the bourgeois monarchy, the other the model state of the bourgeois republic, both of them states which imagine themselves to be as independent of the class struggle as of the European revolution.

Page me9.198

Now, after our readers have seen the class struggle develop in colossal political forms in 1848, the time has come to deal more closely with the economic relations themselves on which the existence of the bourgeoisie and its class rule, as well as the slavery of the workers, are founded.
Page me9.198

We shall present in three large sections: 1) the relation of wage labour to capital, the slavery of the worker, the domination of the capitalist; 2) the inevitable destruction of the middle bourgeois classes and of the peasant estate†a under the present system; 3) the commercial subjugation and exploitation of the bourgeois classes of the various European nations by the despot of the world market — England.
Page me9.198

We shall try to make our presentation as simple and popular as possible and shall not presuppose even the most elementary notions of political economy. We wish to be understood by the workers. Moreover, the most remarkable ignorance and confusion of ideas prevails in Germany in regard to the simplest economic relations, from the accredited defenders of the existing state of things down to the socialist miracle workers and the unrecognised political geniuses in which fragmented Germany is even richer than in sovereign princes.
Page me9.198

Now, therefore, for the first question: What are wages? How are they determined?
Page me9.198

If workers were asked: “How much are your wages?” one would reply: “I get a franc†b a day from my bourgeois”; another, “I get two francs”, and so on. According to the different trades to which they belong, they would mention different sums of money which they receive from their respective bourgeois for a particular labour time or†c for the performance of a particular piece of work, for example,

Page Break me9.199

The Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 264, April 5, 1849 with the beginning of Marx's Wage Labour and Capital

Page Break me9.200
Page Break me9.201
weaving a yard of linen or type-setting a printed sheet. In spite of the variety of their statements, they would all agree on one point: wages are the sum of money paid by the bourgeois†a for a particular labour time or for a particular output of labour.
Page me9.201

The bourgeois,†b therefore, buys their labour with money. They sell him their labour for money.†c For the same sum with which the bourgeois has bought their labour,†d for example, two francs, he could have bought two pounds of sugar or a definite amount of any other commodity. The two francs, with which he bought two pounds of sugar, are the price of the two pounds of sugar. The two francs, with which he bought twelve hours' labour,†e are the price of twelve hours' labour. Labour,†f therefore, is a commodity, neither more nor less than sugar. The former is measured by the clock, the latter by the scales.

Page me9.201

The workers exchange their commodity, labour,†f for the commodity of the capitalist, for money, and this exchange takes place in a definite ratio. So much money for so much labour.†g For twelve hours' weaving, two francs. And do not the two francs represent all the other commodities which I can buy for two francs? In fact, therefore, the worker has exchanged his commodity, labour,†f for other commodities of all kinds and that in a definite ratio. By giving him two francs, the capitalist has given him so much meat, so much clothing, so much fuel, light, etc., in exchange for his day's labour. Accordingly, the two francs express the ratio in which labour†f is exchanged for other commodities, the exchange value of his labour.†f The exchange value of a commodity, reckoned in money is what is called its price. Wages are only a special name for the price of labour,†h for the price of this peculiar commodity which has no other repository than human flesh and blood.

Page Break me9.202
Page me9.202

Let us take any worker, say, a weaver. The bourgeois†a supplies him with the loom and yarn. The weaver sets to work and the yarn is converted into linen. The bourgeois takes possession of the linen and sells it, say, for twenty francs. Now are the wages of the weaver a share in the linen, in the twenty francs, in the product of his labour? By no means. Long before the linen is sold, perhaps long before its weaving is finished, the weaver has received his wages. The capitalist, therefore, does not pay these wages with the money which he will obtain from the linen, but with money already in reserve. Just as the loom and the yarn are not the product of the weaver to whom they are supplied by his bourgeois, so likewise with the commodities which the weaver receives in exchange for his commodity, labour.†b It was possible that the bourgeois found no purchaser at all for his linen. It was possible that he did not get even the amount of the wages by its sale. It is possible that he sells it very profitably in comparison with the weaver's wages. All that has nothing to do with the weaver. The capitalist buys the labour†b of the weaver with a part of his available wealth, of his capital, just as he has bought the raw material — the yarn — and the instrument of labour — the loom — with another part of his wealth. After he has made these purchases, and these purchases include the labour†b necessary for the production of linen, he produces only with the raw materials and instruments of labour belonging to him. For the latter include now, true enough, our good weaver as well, who has as little share in the product or the price of the product as the loom has.
Page me9.202

Wages are, therefore, not the worker's share in the commodity produced by him. Wages are the part of already existing commodities with which the capitalist buys for himself a definite amount of productive labour.†b
Page me9.202

Labour†b is, therefore, a commodity which its possessor, the wage-worker, sells to capital. Why does he sell it? In order to live.
Page me9.202

But†c labour is the worker's own life-activity, the manifestation of his own life. And this life-activity he sells to another person in order to secure the necessary means of subsistence. Thus his life-activity is for him only a means to enable him to exist. He works in order to live. He does not even reckon labour as part of his life, it is rather a sacrifice of his life. It is a commodity which he has made over to another. Hence, also, the product of his activity is not the object of his activity. What he produces for himself is not the silk that he weaves, not the gold that he draws from the mine, not the palace that he builds.

Page Break me9.203
What he produces for himself is wages, and silk, gold, palace resolve themselves for him into a definite quantity of the means of subsistence, perhaps into a cotton jacket, some copper coins and a lodging in a cellar. And the worker, who for twelve hours weaves, spins, drills, turns, builds, shovels, breaks stones, carries loads, etc. — does he consider this twelve hours' weaving, spinning, drilling, turning, building, shovelling, stone-breaking as a manifestation of his life, as life? On the contrary, life begins for him where this activity ceases, at table, in the public house, in bed. The twelve hours' labour, on the other hand, has no meaning for him as weaving, spinning, drilling, etc., but as earnings, which bring him to the table, to the public house, into bed. If the silkworm were to spin in order to continue its existence as a caterpillar, it would be a complete wage-worker.
Page me9.203

Labour†a was not always a commodity. Labour was not always wage labour, that is, free labour. The slave did not sell his labour†a to the slave owner, any more than the ox sells its services to the peasant. The slave, together with his labour,†a is sold once and for all to his owner. He is a commodity which can pass from the hand of one owner to that of another. He is himself a commodity, but the labour†a is not his commodity. The serf sells only a part of his labour.†a He does not receive a wage from the owner of the land; rather the owner of the land receives a tribute from him. The serf belongs to the land and turns over to the owner of the land the fruits thereof. The free labourer, on the other hand, sells himself and, indeed, sells himself piecemeal. He sells at auction eight, ten, twelve, fifteen hours of his life, day after day, to the highest bidder, to the owner of the raw materials, instruments of labour and means of subsistence, that is, to the capitalist. The worker belongs neither to an owner nor to the land, but eight, ten, twelve, fifteen hours of his daily life belong to him who buys them. The worker leaves the capitalist to whom he hires himself whenever he likes, and the capitalist discharges him whenever he thinks fit, as soon as he no longer gets any profit out of him, or not the anticipated profit. But the worker, whose sole source of livelihood is the sale of his labour,†a cannot leave the whole class of purchasers, that is, the capitalist class, without renouncing his existence. He belongs not to this or that bourgeois, but to the bourgeoisie, the bourgeois class,†b and it is his business to dispose of himself, that is to find a purchaser within this bourgeois class.†c

Page Break me9.204

Page me9.204

Now, before going more closely into the relation between capital and wage labour, we shall present briefly the most general relations which come into consideration in the determination of wages.

Page me9.204

Wages, as we have seen, are the price of a definite commodity, of labour.†a Wages are, therefore, determined by the same laws that determine the price of every other commodity.

Page me9.204

The question, therefore, is, how is the price of a commodity determined?

Page Break me9.205

[II]

Page me9.205

[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 265, April 6, 1849]

Cologne, April 5. By what is the price of a commodity determined?

Page me9.205

By competition between buyers and sellers, by the relation of inquiry to delivery, of demand to supply. Competition, by which the price of a commodity is determined, is three-sided.

Page me9.205

The same commodity is offered by various sellers. With goods of the same quality, the one who sells most cheaply is certain of driving the others out of the field and securing the greatest sale for himself. Thus, the sellers mutually contend among themselves for sales, for the market. Each of them desires to sell, to sell as much as possible and, if possible, to sell alone, to the exclusion of the other sellers. Hence, one sells cheaper than another. Consequently, competition takes place among the sellers, which depresses the price of the commodities offered by them.

Page me9.205

But competition also takes place among the buyers, which in its turn causes the commodities offered to rise in price.

Page me9.205

Finally, competition occurs between buyers and sellers; the former desire to buy as cheaply as possible, the latter to sell as dearly as possible. The result of this competition between buyers and sellers will depend upon how the two above-mentioned sides of the competition are related, that is, whether the competition is stronger in the army of buyers or in the army of sellers. Industry leads two armies into the field against each other, each of which again carries on a battle within its own ranks, among its own troops. The army whose troops beat each other up the least gains the victory over the opposing host.

Page me9.205

Let us suppose there are 100 bales of cotton on the market and at the same time buyers for 1,000 bales of cotton. In this case, therefore, the demand is ten times as great as the supply.

Page Break me9.206
Competition will be very strong among the buyers, each of whom desires to get one, and if possible all, of the hundred bales for himself. This example is no arbitrary assumption. We have experienced periods of cotton crop failure in the history of the trade, when a few capitalists in alliance have tried to buy, not one hundred bales, but all the cotton stocks of the world. Hence, in the example mentioned, one buyer will seek to drive the other from the field by offering a relatively higher price per bale of cotton. The cotton sellers, who see that the troops of the enemy army are engaged in the most violent struggle among themselves and that the sale of all their hundred bales is absolutely certain, will take good care not to fall out among themselves and depress the price of cotton at the moment when their adversaries are competing with one another to force it up. Thus, peace suddenly descends on the army of the sellers. They stand facing the buyers as one man, fold their arms philosophically, and there would be no bounds to their demands were it not that the offers of even the most persistent and eager buyers have very definite limits.
Page me9.206
If, therefore, the supply of a commodity is lower than the demand for it, then only slight competition, or none at all, takes place among the sellers. In the same proportion as this competition decreases, competition increases among the buyers. The result is a more or less considerable rise in commodity prices.
Page me9.206
It is well known that the reverse case with a reverse result occurs more frequently. Considerable surplus of supply over demand; desperate competition among the sellers; lack of buyers; disposal of goods at ridiculously low prices.
Page me9.206
But what is the meaning of a rise, a fall in prices; what is the meaning of high price, low price? A grain of sand is high when examined through a microscope, and a tower is low when compared with a mountain. And if price is determined by the relation between demand and supply, what determines the relation between demand and supply?
Page me9.206
Let us turn to the first bourgeois we meet. He will not reflect for an instant but, like another Alexander the Great, will cut this metaphysical knot with the multiplication table. If the production of the goods which I sell has cost me 100 francs, he will tell us, and if I get 110 francs from the sale of these goods, within the year of course — then that is sound, honest, legitimate profit. But if I get in exchange 120 or 130 francs, that is a high profit; and if I get as much as 200 francs, that would be an extraordinary, an enormous profit. What, therefore, serves the bourgeois as his measure of profit? The cost of production of his commodity. If he receives in exchange for this commodity an amount of other commodities which it has cost less to produce, he has lost. If he receives in exchange for his commodity an amount of other commodities the production of which has cost more, he has gained. And he calculates the fall or rise of the profit according to the degree in which the exchange value of his commodity stands below or above zero — the cost of production.

Page Break me9.207
Page me9.207

We have thus seen how the changing relation of demand and supply causes now a rise and now a fall of prices, now high, now low prices.
Page me9.207

If the price of a commodity rises considerably because of inadequate supply or disproportionate increase of the demand, the price of some other commodity must necessarily have fallen proportionately, for the price of a commodity only expresses in money the ratio in which other commodities are given in exchange for it. If, for example, the price of a yard of silk material rises from five francs to six francs, the price of silver in relation to silk material has fallen and likewise the prices of all other commodities that have remained at their old prices have fallen in relation to the silk. One has to give a larger amount of them in exchange to get the same amount of silks.
Page me9.207

What will be the consequence of the rising price of a commodity? A mass of capital will be thrown into that flourishing branch of industry and this influx of capital into the domain of the favoured industry will continue until it yields the ordinary profits or, rather, until the price of its products, through over-production, sinks below the cost of production.
Page me9.207

Conversely, if the price of a commodity falls below its cost of production, capital will be withdrawn from the production of this commodity. Except in the case of a branch of industry which has become obsolete and must, therefore, perish, the production of such a commodity, that is, its supply, will go on decreasing owing to this flight of capital until it corresponds to the demand, and consequently its price is again on a level with its cost of production or, rather, until the supply has sunk below the demand, that is, until its price rises again above its cost of production, for the current price of a commodity is always either above or below its cost of production.
Page me9.207

We see how capital continually migrates in and out, out of the domain of one industry into that of another. High prices bring too great an immigration and low prices too great an emigration.
Page me9.207

We could show from another point of view how not only supply but also demand is determined by the cost of production. But this would take us too far away from our subject.

Page Break me9.208
Page me9.208

We have just seen how the fluctuations of supply and demand continually bring the price of a commodity back to the cost of production. The real price of a commodity, it is true, is always above or below its cost of production; but rise and fall reciprocally balance each other, so that within a certain period of time, taking the ebb and flow of the industry together, commodities are exchanged for one another in accordance with their cost of production, their price, therefore, being determined by their cost of production.
Page me9.208

This determination of price by cost of production is not to be understood in the sense of the economists. The economists say that the average price of commodities is equal to the cost of production; that this is a law. The anarchical movement, in which rise is compensated by fall and fall by rise, is regarded by them as chance. With just as much right one could regard the fluctuations as the law and the determination by the cost of production as chance, as has actually been done by other economists. But it is solely these fluctuations, which, looked at more closely, bring with them the most fearful devastations and, like earthquakes, cause bourgeois society to tremble to its foundations — it is solely in the course of these fluctuations that prices are determined by the cost of production. The total movement of this disorder is its order. In the course of this industrial anarchy, in this movement in a circle, competition compensates, so to speak, for one excess by means of another.

Page me9.208

We see, therefore, that the price of a commodity is determined by its cost of production in such manner that the periods in which the price of this commodity rises above its cost of production are compensated by the periods in which it sinks below the cost of production, and vice versa. This does not hold good, of course, for separate, particular industrial products but only for the whole branch of industry. Consequently, it also does not hold good for the individual industrialist but only for the whole class of industrialists.

Page me9.208

The determination of price by the cost of production is equivalent to the determination of price by the labour time necessary for the manufacture of a commodity, for the cost of production consists of 1) raw materials and instruments of labour,†a that is, of industrial products the production of which has cost a certain amount of labour days and which, therefore, represent a certain amount of labour time, and 2) of direct labour, the measure of which is, precisely, time.

Page Break me9.209

Page me9.209

Now, the same general laws that regulate the price of commodities in general of course also regulate wages, the price of labour.

Page me9.209

Wages will rise and fall according to the relation of demand and supply, according to the turn taken by the competition between the buyers of labour, the capitalists, and the sellers of labour,†a the workers. The fluctuations in wages correspond in general to the fluctuations in prices of commodities. Within these fluctuations, however, the price of labour will be determined by the cost of production, by the labour time necessary to produce this commodity — labour.†b

Page me9.209

What, then, is the cost of production of labour6

Page me9.209

It is the cost required for maintaining the worker as a worker and for developing him into a worker.

Page me9.209

The less the period of training, therefore, that any work requires the smaller is the cost of production of the worker and the lower is the price of his labour, his wages. In those branches of industry in which hardly any period of apprenticeship is required and where the mere bodily existence of the worker suffices, the cost necessary for his production is almost confined to the commodities necessary for keeping him alive.†c The price of his labour will, therefore, be determined by the price of the necessary means of subsistence.

Page me9.209
Another consideration, however, also comes in.
Page me9.209
The manufacturer in calculating his cost of production and, accordingly, the price of the products takes into account the wear and tear of the instruments of labour. If, for example, a machine costs him 1,000 francs and wears out in ten years, he adds 100 francs annually to the price of the commodities so as to be able to replace the worn-out machine by a new one at the end of ten years. In the same way, in calculating the cost of production of simple labour,†d there must be included the cost of reproduction, whereby the race of workers is enabled to multiply and to replace worn-out workers by new ones. Thus the depreciation of the worker is taken into account in the same way as the depreciation of the machine.
Page me9.209
The cost of production of simple labour, therefore, amounts to the cost of existence and reproduction of the worker. The price of this cost of existence and reproduction constitutes wages. Wages so determined are called the wage minimum. This wage minimum, like the determination of the price of commodities by the cost of production in general, does not hold good for the single individual but for the species. Individual workers, millions of workers, do not get enough to be able to exist and reproduce themselves; but the wages of the whole working class level down, within their fluctuations, to this minimum.

Page Break me9.210
Page me9.210
Now that we have arrived at an understanding of the most general laws which regulate wages like the price of any other commodity, we can go into our subject more specifically.

Page Break me9.211

[III]
Page me9.211
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 266, April 7, 1849]

Cologne, April 6. Capital consists of raw materials, instruments of labour and means of subsistence of all kinds, which are utilised in order to produce new raw materials, new instruments of labour and new means of subsistence. All these component parts of capital are creations of labour, products of labour, accumulated labour. Accumulated labour which serves as a means of new production is capital.
Page me9.211
So say the economists.

Page me9.211

What is a Negro slave? A man of the black race. The one explanation is as good as the other.

Page me9.211

A Negro is a Negro. He only becomes a slave in certain relations. A cotton-spinning jenny is a machine for spinning cotton. It becomes capital only in certain relations. Torn from these relationships it is no more capital than gold in itself is money or sugar the price of sugar.

Page me9.211

In production, men enter into relation not only with nature.†a They produce only by co-operating in a certain way and mutually exchanging their activities. In order to produce, they enter into definite connections and relations with one another and only within these social connections and relations does their relation with nature,†b does production, take place.

Page me9.211

These social relations into which the producers enter with one another, the conditions under which they exchange their activities and participate in the whole act of production, will naturally vary according to the character of the means of production. With the invention of a new instrument of warfare, firearms, the whole internal organisation of the army necessarily changed; the relationships within which individuals can constitute an army and act as an army were transformed and the relations of different armies to one another also changed.

Page Break me9.212

Page me9.212

Thus the social relations within which individuals produce, the social relations of production, change, are transformed, with the change and development of the material means of production, the productive forces. The relations of production in their totality constitute what are called the social relations, society, and, specifically, a society at a definite stage of historical development, a society with a peculiar, distinctive character. Ancient society, feudal society, bourgeois society are such totalities of production relations, each of which at the same time denotes a special stage of development in the history of mankind.

Page me9.212

Capital, also, is a social relation of production. It is a bourgeois production relation, a production relation of bourgeois society. Are not the means of subsistence, the instruments of labour, the raw materials of which capital consists, produced and accumulated under given social conditions, in definite social relations? Are they not utilised for new production under given social conditions, in definite social relations? And is it not just this definite social character which turns the products serving for new production into capital?

Page me9.212

Capital consists not only of means of subsistence, instruments of labour and raw materials, not only of material products; it consists just as much of exchange values. All the products of which it consists are commodities. Capital is, therefore, not only a sum of material products; it is a sum of commodities, of exchange values, of social magnitudes.

Page me9.212

Capital remains the same, whether we put cotton in place of wool, rice in place of wheat or steamships in place of railways, provided only that the cotton, the rice, the steamships — the body of capital — have the same exchange value, the same price as the wool, the wheat, the railways in which it was previously incorporated. The body of capital can change continually without the capital suffering the slightest alteration.

Page me9.212

But while all capital is a sum of commodities, that is, of exchange values, not every sum of commodities, of exchange values, is capital.

Page me9.212

Every sum of exchange values is an exchange value. Every separate exchange value is a sum of exchange values. For instance, a house that is worth 1,000 francs is an exchange value of 1,000 francs. A piece of paper worth a centime†a is a sum of exchange values of one-hundred hundredths of a centime. Products which are exchangeable for others are commodities. The particular ratio in which they are exchangeable constitutes their exchange value or, expressed in money, their price. The quantity of these products can change nothing in their quality of being commodities or representing an exchange value or having a definite price. Whether a tree is large or small it is a tree. Whether we exchange iron for other products in ounces or in hundredweights, does this make any difference in its character as commodity, as exchange value? It is a commodity of greater or lesser value, of higher or lower price, depending upon the quantity.

Page Break me9.213

Page me9.213

How, then, does any amount of commodities, of exchange values, become capital?

Page me9.213

By maintaining and multiplying itself as an independent social power, that is, as the power of a portion of society, by means of its exchange for direct, living labour.†a The existence of a class which possesses nothing but its capacity to labour is a necessary prerequisite of capital.

Page me9.213

It is only the domination of accumulated, past, materialised labour over direct, living labour that turns accumulated labour into capital.

Page me9.213

Capital does not consist in accumulated labour serving living labour as a means for new production. It consists in living labour serving accumulated labour as a means for maintaining and multiplying the exchange value of the latter.

Page me9.213

What takes place in the exchange between capital and wage labour†b?

Page me9.213

The worker receives means of subsistence in exchange for his labour,†c but the capitalist receives in exchange for his means of subsistence labour, the productive activity of the worker, the creative power whereby the worker not only replaces what he consumes but gives to the accumulated labour a greater value than it previously possessed. The worker receives a part of the available means of subsistence from the capitalist. For what purpose do these means of subsistence serve him? For immediate consumption. As soon, however, as I consume the means of subsistence, they are irretrievably lost to me unless I use the time during which I am kept alive by them in order to produce new means of subsistence, in order during consumption to create by my labour new values in place of the values which perish in being consumed. But it is just this noble reproductive power that the worker surrenders to capital in exchange for means of subsistence received. He has, therefore, lost it for himself.

Page Break me9.214
Page me9.214

Let us take an example: a tenant farmer gives his day labourer five silver groschen a day. For these five silver groschen the labourer works all day on the farmer's field and thus secures him a return of ten silver groschen. The farmer not only gets the value replaced that he has to give the day labourer; he doubles it. He has therefore employed, consumed, the five silver groschen that he gave to the labourer in a fruitful, productive manner. He has bought with the five silver groschen just that labour and power of the labourer which produces agricultural products of double value and makes ten silver groschen out of five. The day labourer, on the other hand, receives in place of his productive power, the effect of which he has bargained away to the farmer, five silver groschen, which he exchanges for means of subsistence, and these he consumes with greater or less rapidity. The five silver groschen have, therefore, been consumed in a double way, reproductively for capital, for they have been exchanged for labour power which produced ten silver groschen, unproductively for the worker, for they have been exchanged for means of subsistence which have disappeared forever and the value of which he can only recover by repeating the same exchange with the farmer. Thus capital presupposes wage labour; wage labour presupposes capital. They reciprocally condition the existence of each other; they reciprocally bring forth each other.
Page me9.214

Does a worker in a cotton factory produce merely cotton textiles? No, he produces capital. He produces values which serve afresh to command his labour and by means of it to create new values.
Page me9.214

Capital can only increase by exchanging itself for labour,†a by calling wage labour to life. The wage labour†b can only be exchanged for capital by increasing capital, by strengthening the power whose slave it is. Hence, increase of capital is increase of the proletariat, that is, of the working class.
Page me9.214

The interests of the capitalist and those of the worker are, therefore, one and the same, assert the bourgeois and their economists. Indeed! The worker perishes if capital does not employ him. Capital perishes if it does not exploit labour,†a and in order to exploit it, it must buy it. The faster capital intended for production, productive capital, increases, the more, therefore, industry prospers, the more the bourgeoisie enriches itself and the better business is, the more workers does the capitalist need, the more dearly does the worker sell himself.

Page Break me9.215

Page me9.215

The indispensable condition for a tolerable situation of the worker is, therefore, the fastest possible growth of productive capital.
Page me9.215

But what is the growth of productive capital? Growth of the power of accumulated labour over living labour. Growth of the domination of the bourgeoisie over the working class. If wage labour produces the wealth of others that rules over it, the power that is hostile to it, capital, then the means of employment [Beschäftigungsmittel], that is, the means of subsistence, flow back to it from this hostile power, on condition that it makes itself afresh into a part of capital, into the lever which hurls capital anew into an accelerated movement of growth.
Page me9.215

To say that the interests of capital and those of labour†a are one and the same is only to say that capital and wage labour are two sides of one and the same relation. The one conditions the other, just as usurer and squanderer condition each other.
Page me9.215

As long as the wage-worker is a wage-worker his lot depends upon capital. That is the much-vaunted community of interests between worker and capitalist.

Page Break me9.216

[IV]
Page me9.216
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 267, April 8, 1849]

Cologne, April 7. If capital grows, the mass of wage labour grows, the number of wage-workers grows; in a word, the domination of capital extends over a greater number of individuals. Let us assume the most favourable case: when productive capital grows, the demand for labour grows; consequently, the price of labour, wages, goes up.
Page me9.216

A house may be large or small; as long as the surrounding houses are equally small it satisfies all social demands for a dwelling. But let a palace arise beside the little house, and it shrinks from a little house to a hut. The little house shows now that its owner has only very slight or no demands to make; and however high it may shoot up in the course of civilisation, if the neighbouring palace grows to an equal or even greater extent, the occupant of the relatively small house will feel more and more uncomfortable, dissatisfied and cramped within its four walls.
Page me9.216

A noticeable increase in wages presupposes a rapid growth of productive capital. The rapid growth of productive capital brings about an equally rapid growth of wealth, luxury, social wants, social enjoyments. Thus, although the enjoyments of the worker have risen, the social satisfaction that they give has fallen in comparison with the increased enjoyments of the capitalist, which are inaccessible to the worker, in comparison with the state of development of society in general. Our desires and pleasures spring from society; we measure them, therefore, by society and not by the objects which serve for their satisfaction. Because they are of a social nature, they are of a relative nature.

Page Break me9.217
Page me9.217

In general, wages are determined not only by the amount of commodities for which I can exchange them. They embody various relations.

Page me9.217

What the workers receive for their labour†a is, in the first place, a definite sum of money. Are wages determined only by this money price?

Page me9.217

In the sixteenth century, the gold and silver circulating in Europe increased as a result of the discovery of America.†b Hence, the value of gold and silver fell in relation to other commodities. The workers received the same amount of coined silver for their labour as before. The money price of their labour remained the same, and yet their wages had fallen, for in exchange for the same quantity of silver they received a smaller amount of other commodities. This was one of the circumstances which furthered the growth of capital and the rise of the bourgeoisie in the sixteenth century.

Page me9.217

Let us take another case. In the winter of 1847, as a result of a crop failure, the most indispensable means of subsistence, cereals, meat, butter, cheese, etc., rose considerably in price. Assume that the workers received the same sum of money for their labour as before. Had not their wages fallen? Of course. For the same money they received less bread, meat, etc., in exchange. Their wages had fallen, not because the value of silver had diminished, but because the value of the means of subsistence had increased.

Page me9.217

Assume, finally, that the money price of labour remains the same while all agricultural and manufactured goods have fallen in price owing to the employment of new machinery, a favourable season, etc. For the same money the workers can now buy more commodities of all kinds. Their wages, therefore, have risen, just because the money value of their wages has not changed.

Page me9.217

Thus, the money price of labour, nominal wages, do not coincide with real wages, that is, with the sum of commodities which is actually given in exchange for the wages. If, therefore, we speak of a rise or fall of wages, we must keep in mind not only the money price of labour, the nominal wages.

Page me9.217

But neither nominal wages, that is, the sum of money for which the worker sells himself to the capitalist, nor real wages, that is, the sum of commodities which he can buy for this money, exhaust the relations contained in wages.

Page Break me9.218
Page me9.218

Wages are, above all, also determined by their relation to the gain, to the profit of the capitalist — comparative, relative wages.
Page me9.218

Real wages express the price of labour in relation to the price of other commodities; relative wages, on the other hand, express the price of direct labour in relation to the price of accumulated labour, the relative value of wage labour and capital, the reciprocal value of the capitalist and worker.†a
Page me9.218

Real wages may remain the same, they may even rise, and yet relative wages may fall. Let us suppose, for example, that all means of subsistence have gone down in price by two-thirds while wages per day have only fallen by one-third, that is to say, for example, from three francs to two francs. Although the worker can command a greater amount of commodities with these two francs than he previously could with three francs, yet his wages have gone down in relation to the profit of the capitalist. The profit of the capitalist (for example, the manufacturer) has increased by one franc; that is, for a smaller sum of exchange values which he pays to the worker, the latter must produce a greater amount of exchange values than before. The value of capital relative to the value of labour has risen.†b The division of social wealth between capital and labour has become still more unequal. With the same capital, the capitalist commands a greater quantity of labour. The power of the capitalist class over the working class has grown, the social position of the worker has deteriorated, has been depressed one step further below that of the capitalist.

Page Break me9.219
Page me9.219

What, then, is the general law which determines the fall and rise of wages and profit in their reciprocal relation?
Page me9.219

They stand in inverse ratio to each other. The exchange value of capital,†a profit, rises in the same proportion as the exchange value of labour,†b wages, falls, and vice versa. Profit rises to the extent that wages fall; it falls to the extent that wages rise.
Page me9.219

The objection will, perhaps, be made that the capitalist can profit by a favourable exchange of his products with other capitalists, by increase of the demand for his commodity, whether as a result of the opening of new markets, or as a result of a momentarily increased demand in the old markets, etc.; that the capitalist's profit can, therefore, increase by overreaching other capitalists, independently of the rise and fall of wages, of the exchange value of labour†c; or that the capitalist's profit may also rise owing to the improvement of the instruments of labour, a new application of natural forces, etc.
Page me9.219

First of all, it will have to be admitted that the result remains the same, although it is brought about in reverse fashion. True, the profit has not risen because wages have fallen, but wages have fallen because the profit has risen. With the same amount of labour,†d the capitalist has acquired a greater amount of exchange values, without having paid more for the labour on that account; that is, therefore, labour is paid less in proportion to the net profit which it yields the capitalist.

Page me9.219

In addition, we recall that, in spite of the fluctuations in prices of commodities, the average price of every commodity, the ratio in which it is exchanged for other commodities, is determined by its cost of production. Hence the overreachings within the capitalist class necessarily balance one another. The improvement of machinery, new application of natural forces in the service of production, enable a larger amount of products to be created in a given period of time with the same amount of labour and capital, but not by any means a larger amount of exchange values. If, by the use of the spinning jenny, I can turn out twice as much yarn in an hour as before its invention, say, one hundred pounds instead of fifty, then†a I will receive for these hundred pounds no more commodities in exchange than formerly for the fifty pounds, because the cost of production has fallen by one-half, or because I can deliver double the product at the same cost.

Page Break me9.220
Page me9.220

Finally, in whatever proportion the capitalist class, the bourgeoisie, whether of one country or of the whole world market, shares the net profit of production within itself, the total amount of this net profit always consists only of the amount by which, on the whole, accumulated labour has been increased by living labour.†b This total amount grows, therefore, in the proportion in which labour augments capital, that is, in the proportion in which profit rises in comparison with wages.
Page me9.220

We see, therefore, that even if we remain within the relation of capital and wage labour, the interests of capital and the interests of wage labour are diametrically opposed.
Page me9.220

A rapid increase of capital is equivalent to a rapid increase of profit. Profit can only increase rapidly if the exchange value†c of labour, if relative wages, decrease just as rapidly. Relative wages can fall although real wages rise simultaneously with nominal wages, with the money value of labour, if they do not rise, however, in the same proportion as profit. If, for instance, in times when business is good, wages rise by five per cent, profit on the other hand by thirty per cent, then the comparative, the relative wages, have not increased but decreased.
Page me9.220

Thus if the income of the worker increases with the rapid growth of capital, the social gulf that separates the worker from the capitalist increases at the same time, and the power of capital over labour, the dependence of labour on capital, likewise increases at the same time.
Page me9.220

To say that the worker has an interest in the rapid growth of capital is only to say that the more rapidly the worker increases the wealth of others, the richer will be the crumbs that fall to him, the greater is the number of workers that can be employed and called into existence, the more can the mass of slaves dependent on capital be increased.
Page me9.220

We have thus seen that:
Page me9.220
Even the most favourable situation for the working class, the most rapid possible growth of capital, however much it may improve the material existence of the worker, does not remove the antagonism between his interests and the interests of the bourgeoisie, the interests of the capitalist. Profit and wages remain as before in inverse proportion.

Page Break me9.221
Page me9.221
If capital is growing rapidly, wages may rise; the profit of capital rises incomparably more rapidly. The material position of the worker has improved, but at the cost of his social position. The social gulf that divides him from the capitalist has widened.
Page me9.221
Finally:
Page me9.221
To say that the most favourable condition for wage labour is the most rapid possible growth of productive capital is only to say that the more rapidly the working class increases and enlarges the power that is hostile to it, the wealth that does not belong to it and that rules over it, the more favourable will be the conditions under which it is allowed to labour anew at increasing bourgeois wealth, at enlarging the power of capital, content with forging for itself the golden chains by which the bourgeoisie drags it in its train.

Page Break me9.222

[V]
Page me9.222
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 269, April 11, 1849]

Cologne, April 10. Are growth of productive capital and rise of wages really so inseparably connected as the bourgeois economists maintain? We must not take their word for it. We must not even believe them when they say that the fatter capital is, the better will its slave be fed. The bourgeoisie is too enlightened, it calculates too well, to share the prejudices of the feudal lord who makes a display by the brilliance of his retinue. The conditions of existence of the bourgeoisie compel it to calculate.
Page me9.222
We must, therefore, examine more closely:
Page me9.222
How does the growth of productive capital affect wages?
Page me9.222
If, on the whole, the productive capital of bourgeois society grows, a more manifold accumulation of labour takes place. The capitals increase in number and extent. The numerical increase of the capitals increases the competition between the capitalists.

The increasing extent of the capitals provides the means for bringing more powerful labour armies with more gigantic instruments of war into the industrial battlefield.
Page me9.222

One capitalist can drive another from the field and capture his capital only by selling more cheaply. In order to be able to sell more cheaply without ruining himself, he must produce more cheaply, that is, raise the productive power of labour as much as possible. But the productive power of labour is raised, above all, by a greater division of labour, by a universal introduction and continual improvement of machinery. The greater the labour army among whom labour is divided, the more gigantic the scale on which machinery is introduced, the more does the cost of production proportionately decrease, the more fruitful is labour. Hence, a general rivalry arises among the capitalists to increase the division of labour and machinery and to exploit them on the greatest possible scale.

Page Break me9.223
Page me9.223

If, now, by a greater division of labour, by the utilisation of new machines and their improvement, by more profitable and extensive exploitation of natural forces, one capitalist has found the means of producing with the same amount of labour or of accumulated labour a greater amount of products, of commodities, than his competitors, if he can, for example, produce a whole yard of linen in the same labour time in which his competitors weave half a yard, how will this capitalist operate?
Page me9.223

He could continue to sell half a yard of linen at the old market price; this would, however, be no means of driving his opponents from the field and of enlarging his own sales. But in the same measure in which his production has expanded, his need to sell has also increased. The more powerful and costly means of production that he has called into life enable him, indeed, to sell his commodities more cheaply, they compel him, however, at the same time to sell more commodities, to conquer a much larger market for his commodities; consequently, our capitalist will sell his half yard of linen more cheaply than his competitors.
Page me9.223

The capitalist will not, however, sell a whole yard as cheaply as his competitors sell half a yard, although the production of the whole yard does not cost him more than the half yard costs the others. Otherwise he would not gain anything extra but only get back the cost of production by the exchange. His possibly greater income would be derived from the fact of having set a larger capital into motion, but not from having made more of his capital than the others. Moreover, he attains the object he wishes to attain, if he puts the price of his goods only a small percentage lower than that of his competitors. He drives them from the field, he wrests from them at least a part of their sales, by underselling them. And, finally, it will be remembered that the current price always stands above or below the cost of production, according to whether the sale of the commodity occurs in a favourable or unfavourable industrial season. The percentage at which the capitalist who has employed new and more fruitful means of production sells above his real cost of production will vary, depending upon whether the market price of a yard of linen stands below or above its hitherto customary cost of production.

Page me9.223

However, the privileged position of our capitalist is not of long duration; other competing capitalists introduce the same machines, the same division of labour, introduce them on the same or on a larger scale, and this introduction will become so general that the price of linen is reduced not only below its old, but below its new cost of production.

Page Break me9.224

Page me9.224

The capitalists find themselves, therefore, in the same position relative to one another as before the introduction of the new means of production, and if they are able to supply by these means double the product at the same price, they are now forced to supply the double product below the old price. On the basis of this new cost of production, the same game begins again. More division of labour, more machinery, enlarged scale of exploitation of division of labour and machinery. And again competition brings the same counteraction against this result.

Page me9.224

We see how in this way the mode of production and the means of production are continually transformed, revolutionised, how the division of labour is necessarily followed by greater division of labour, the application of machinery by still greater application of machinery, work on a large scale by work on a still larger scale.

Page me9.224

That is the law which again and again throws bourgeois production out of its old course and which compels capital to intensify the productive forces of labour, because it has intensified them — the law which gives capital no rest and continually whispers in its ear: “Go on! Go on!”

Page me9.224

This law is none other than that which, within the fluctuations of trade periods, necessarily levels out the price of a commodity to its cost of production.

Page me9.224

However powerful the means of production which a capitalist brings into the field, competition will make these means of production universal and from the moment when it has made them universal, the only result of the greater fruitfulness of his capital is that he must now supply for the same price ten, twenty, a hundred times as much as before. But, as he must sell perhaps a thousand times as much as before in order to outweigh the lower selling price by the greater amount of the product sold, because a more extensive sale is now necessary, not only in order to make profit†a but in order to replace the cost of production — the instrument of production itself, as we have seen, becomes more and more expensive — and because this mass sale becomes a question of life and death not only for him but also for his rivals, the old struggle begins again all the more violently the more fruitful the already discovered means of production are. The division of labour and the application of machinery, therefore, will go on anew on an incomparably greater scale.

Page Break me9.225

Page me9.225

Whatever the power of the means of production employed may be, competition seeks to rob capital of the golden fruits of this power by bringing the price of the commodities back to the cost of production, by thus making cheaper production — the supply of ever greater amounts of products for the same total price — an imperative law to the same extent as production can be cheapened, that is, as more can be produced with the same amount of labour. Thus the capitalist would have won nothing by his own exertions but the obligation to supply more in the same labour time, in a word, more difficult conditions for the augmentation of the value of his capital. While, therefore, competition continually pursues him with its law of the cost of production and every weapon that he forges against his rivals recoils against himself, the capitalist continually tries to get the better of competition by incessantly introducing new machines, more expensive, it is true, but producing more cheaply, and new division of labour in place of the old, and by not waiting until competition has rendered the new ones obsolete.
Page me9.225

If now we picture to ourselves this feverish simultaneous agitation on the whole world market, it will be comprehensible how the growth, accumulation and concentration of capital results in an uninterrupted division of labour, and in the application of new and the perfecting of old machinery precipitately and on an ever more gigantic scale.
Page me9.225

But how do these circumstances, which are inseparable from the growth of productive capital, affect the determination of wages?
Page me9.225

The greater division of labour enables one worker to do the work of five, ten or twenty; it therefore multiplies competition among the workers fivefold, tenfold and twentyfold. The workers do not only compete by one selling himself cheaper than another; they compete by one doing the work of five, ten, twenty; and the division of labour, introduced by capital and continually increased, compels the workers to compete among themselves in this way.
Page me9.225

Further, as the division of labour increases, labour is simplified. The special skill of the worker becomes worthless. He becomes transformed into a simple, monotonous productive force that does not have to use intense bodily or intellectual faculties. His labour becomes a labour that anyone can perform. Hence, competitors crowd upon him on all sides, and besides we remind the reader that the more simple and easily learned the labour is, the lower the cost of production needed to master it, the lower do wages sink, for, like the price of every other commodity, they are determined by the cost of production.
Page me9.225

Therefore, as labour becomes more unsatisfying, more repulsive,

Page Break me9.226
competition increases and wages decrease. The worker tries to keep up the amount of his wages by working more, whether by working longer hours or by producing more in one hour. Driven by want, therefore, he still further increases the evil effects of the division of labour. The result is that the more he works the less wages he receives, and for the simple reason that he competes to that extent with his fellow workers, hence makes them into so many competitors who offer themselves on just the same bad terms as he does himself, and that, therefore, in the last resort he competes with himself, with himself as a member of the working class.

Page me9.226

Machinery brings about the same results on a much greater scale, by replacing skilled workers by unskilled, men by women, adults by children. It brings about the same results, where it is newly introduced, by throwing the hand workers onto the streets in masses, and, where it is developed, improved and replaced by more productive machinery, by discharging workers in smaller batches. We have portrayed above, in a hasty sketch, the industrial war of the capitalists among themselves; this war has the peculiarity that its battles are won less by recruiting than by discharging the army of labour. The generals, the capitalists, compete with one another as to who can discharge most soldiers of industry.
Page me9.226

The economists tell us, it is true, that the workers rendered superfluous by machinery find new branches of employment.
Page me9.226

They dare not assert directly that the same workers who are discharged find places in the new branches of labour. The facts cry out too loudly against this lie. They really only assert that new means of employment will open up for other component sections of the working class, for instance, for the portion of the young generation of workers that was ready to enter the branch of industry which has gone under. That is, of course, a great consolation for the disinherited workers. The capitalist gentlemen will never want for fresh exploitable flesh and blood, and will let the dead bury their dead. This is a consolation which the bourgeois give themselves rather than one which they give the workers. If the whole class of wage-workers were to be abolished owing to machinery, how dreadful that would be for capital which, without wage labour, ceases to be capital!
Page me9.226

Let us suppose, however, that those directly driven out of their jobs by machinery, and the entire section of the new generation that was already on the watch for this employment, find a new occupation. Does any one imagine that it will be as highly paid as that which has been lost? That would contradict all the laws of economics. We have seen how modern industry always brings with it the substitution of a more simple, subordinate occupation for the more complex and higher one.

Page Break me9.227
Page me9.227

How, then, could a mass of workers who have been thrown out of one branch of industry owing to machinery find refuge in another, unless the latter is lower, worse paid?
Page me9.227

The workers who work in the manufacture of machinery itself have been cited as an exception. As soon as more machinery is demanded and used in industry, it is said, there must necessarily be an increase of machines, consequently of the manufacture of machines, and consequently of the employment of workers in the manufacture of machines; and the workers engaged in this branch of industry are claimed to be skilled, even educated workers.

Page me9.227

Since the year 1840 this assertion, which even before was only half true, has lost all semblance of truth because ever more versatile machines have been employed in the manufacture of machinery, no more and no less than in the manufacture of cotton yarn, and the workers employed in the machine factories, confronted by highly elaborate machines, can only play the part of highly unelaborate machines.
Page me9.227

But in place of the man who has been discharged owing to the machine, the factory employs maybe three children and one woman! And did not the man's wages have to suffice for the three children and a woman? Did not the minimum of wages have to suffice to maintain and to propagate the race? What, then, does this favourite bourgeois phrase prove? Nothing more than that now four times as many workers' lives are used up in order to gain a livelihood for one worker's family.
Page me9.227

Let us sum up: The more productive capital grows, the more the division of labour and the application of machinery expands. The more the division of labour and the application of machinery expands, the more competition among the workers expands and the more their wages contract.
Page me9.227

In addition, the working class gains recruits from the higher strata of society also; a mass of small industrialists and small rentiers are hurled down into its ranks and have nothing better to do than urgently stretch out their arms alongside those of the workers. Thus the forest of uplifted arms demanding work becomes ever thicker, while the arms themselves become ever thinner.
Page me9.227

That the small industrialist cannot survive in a war,†a one of the first conditions of which is to produce on an ever greater scale, that is, precisely to be a large and not a small industrialist, is self-evident.

Page Break me9.228
Page me9.228

That the interest on capital decreases in the same measure as the mass and number of capitals increase, as capital grows; that, therefore, the small rentier can no longer live on his interest but must throw himself into industry, and consequently, help to swell the ranks of the small industrialists and thereby of candidates for the proletariat — all this surely requires no further explanation.
Page me9.228

Finally, as the capitalists are compelled, by the movement described above, to exploit the already existing gigantic means of production on a larger scale and to set in motion all the mainsprings of credit to this end, there is a corresponding increase in earthquakes,†a in which the trading world can only maintain itself by sacrificing a part of wealth, of products and even of productive forces to the gods of the nether world — in a word, crises increase. They become more frequent and more violent, if only because, as the mass of production, and consequently the need for extended markets, grows, the world market becomes more and more contracted, fewer and fewer markets†b remain available for exploitation, since every preceding crisis has subjected to world trade a market hitherto unconquered or only superficially exploited. But capital does not live only on labour. A lord, at once aristocratic and barbarous, it drags with it into the grave the corpses of its slaves, whole hecatombs of workers who perish in the crises. Thus we see: if capital grows rapidly, competition among the workers grows incomparably more rapidly, that is, the means of employment, the means of subsistence, of the working class decrease proportionately so much the more, and, nevertheless, the rapid growth of capital is the most favourable condition for wage labour.

Page me9.228
(To be continued)†185

Written by Marx on the basis of lectures delivered by him in the second half of December 1847

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 264-267 and 269, April 5-8 and 11, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Page Break me9.229

THE SOUTHERN SLAVS
AND THE AUSTRIAN MONARCHY

Page me9.229
Not a word from the theatre of war. Not a syllable confirming the fabulous report of Bem's crossing into Wallachia, which may now be regarded as pure martial-law rumour, since after the arrival of the alleged courier no Bulletin has appeared.
Page me9.229
There is, on the other hand, interesting news of the Austrian Slavs. Among the Czech townspeople and peasants, says the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung,†a Kossuth's name is regarded with the same respect and wonder as Napoleon's, and people were arrested in Prague for raising a cheer for Kossuth. The Südslavische Zeitung writes from Vinkovci, March 24:

“Travellers today brought us the news that extraordinary excitement reigns in Semlin. Street processions in Hungarian costume, Hungarian freedom songs, Eljens and Zivios†b for Kossuth resounding through the town.”

Page me9.229
Todorovich has withdrawn from Kanizsa to Kikinda (between the Theiss and the Maros), and has thus by no means united with Jellachich. The blockade of Szegedin and Theresiopel has therefore been completely raised. This retreat obviously took place as a result of the discontent among the Serbs.

Page me9.229

The cause of this dampening down of the Serbian lust for plunder is Austria's vacillating policy, making promises to the Serbs today, to the Magyars tomorrow, and regarding the rich Hungarian aristocracy (which can easily be restored to power and influence again after an Austrian victory) as a better ally in the long run than the chaos of classes, interests and conditions of the South-Slav and especially the Serbian provinces.

Page Break me9.230

Page me9.230

For the amusement of our readers we print the latest martial-law rumour:

Page me9.230

Kossuth is said to be involved in negotiations with the Government and to be making the following condition for Hungary's complete and immediate submission: the acceptance of the Constitution drafted by the Imperial Diet†186 for the whole monarchy and his appointment as the Governor of Hungary!!!

Page me9.230

Baja has not yet been retaken, Nugent bombarded it in vain.

Page me9.230

Bem has imposed a contribution of 100,000 florins on Hermannstadt. The Romanians are quite discouraged; a Landsturm can no longer be raised.

Written by Engels on April 4, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 264, April 5, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.231

THE WAR IN HUNGARY

Page me9.231

Cologne, April 5. It is a fact that the Austrians, when they win battles in Hungary, only do so because of the longer and more regular arms drill of their soldiers; they win them not because of their commanders but in spite of their commanders. The thoroughly exercised military drill and the coherent compact mass resulting from this is their only strength. This compact military mass has been employed by the generals from the inception of the war until now with a mediocrity, with a lack of talent which is quite unparalleled. There is no grand design, no daring, no dexterity in manoeuvres, no trace of a worked out plan, no attempt to surprise the enemy or to impress him. With a triviality of calculation which does not go beyond the four fundamentals of strategy (s'il y en a†a), the Austrian armies keep marching directly toward the point to be conquered sticking as punctiliously as possible to a straight line, unconcerned about what is happening to the right or to the left of them, and if an unexpected manoeuvre by the Magyars throws them out of this line then they are at a loss and good for nothing until they have once again found some other straight line leading to their appointed goal. Nothing creates a more dreadful impression than to see that even the most unexpected and brilliant manoeuvres of the Hungarian generals are incapable of imparting even the slightest animating thought to the unwieldy body of the Austrian army and of inducing it to produce an adroit idea, however slight. It is nothing but the simple and honest old strategy of the Coburgs, Clerfayts, Wurmsers

Page Break me9.232
& Co., of yore, which has, thank God, for about a hundred years been harping on the axiom that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points.
Page me9.232

Thus while the Austrians slowly but by no means surely plod forward and demonstrate an unparalleled poverty of strategic thought, we find an astounding wealth of strategic genius at the head of the Magyar army. The whole campaign is conducted according to a plan whose mastery becomes daily more evident; and between the individual elements of this great plan a series of episodes occur each of which is more brilliantly contrived and more surprisingly and dextrously executed than the last. The Magyars, though inadequately drilled and armed, oppose everywhere the most subtle calculation, the most masterly use of the terrain, the clearest overall view of the situation and the most daring and swift execution to the indolent and mindless but well-drilled mass of the Austrian armies. Superiority in genius is here doing battle with superiority in numbers, weapons and arms drill. Observing the bold, rapid marches of the Magyar corps, it is hardly possible to grasp how an almost completely untrained, poorly armed and ill-equipped army can undertake such movements and carry them through to completion. We need only recall Görgey's brilliant march from Pest through the Slovakian mountain towns, along the Carpathians, through the Zips to the Theiss and from there back to within six miles†a of Pest again, and Bem's repeated lightning triumphal expeditions through Transylvania.
Page me9.232

Today's reports from the Theiss, admittedly unofficial but nevertheless coming unanimously from the most various sources and therefore less subject to doubt than all the martial-law bulletins, at last permit us to pass sound judgment on the latest movements between the Theiss and the Danube.
Page me9.232

Once again these movements form one of the most brilliant and inspired manoeuvres perhaps ever to figure in the history of war. By means of manoeuvres whose design was as bold and superior as their execution was lightning fast, the Magyar commanders Görgey and Dembinski (and this manoeuvre is the best proof that he still holds his command) have completely disconcerted an army which would certainly have proved superior to them in regular, open pitched battle, they have driven it back a whole 20 miles, frustrated all its plans and even threatened its line of retreat.
Page me9.232

The most recent dispositions of the two armies are known:

Page Break me9.233
Page me9.233

The Magyars on and behind the Theiss: Görgey at Tokaj, Dembinski at Polgar and Tisza-Füred, Vetter at Szolnok, Damjanich at Szegedin.

Page me9.233

The imperial forces on the opposite bank: Ramberg along the Hernad up to Miskolcz, Schlick from Miskolcz to Szegléd, Jellachich from Szegléd to Kecskemét and Felegyhaza.

Page me9.233

Suddenly Görgey broke away from the Theiss, marched by way of a detour (evidently through the Zemplen comitat) north towards Kaschau and threw Ramberg's division (the Götz and Jablonowsky brigades) out of the Sáros and the Abauj comitat. Götz and Jablonowsky — at least so the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung would have it†a — held Eperies and Kaschau, but on the other hand the open country was everywhere swept clean of imperial troops. Only stopping briefly Görgey now proceeded along the Hernad once more towards the south, driving the remnants of Ramberg's troops constantly before him, took Miskolcz and then headed west; by way of Rimaszombat he went to Losoncz, and took up a position on the Ipoly (Eipel) between Losoncz and Balassa-Gyarmat. His vanguard is said to have pushed forward as far as Nograd.

Page me9.233

The heroic Ramberg beat a hasty retreat by way of Hatvan on the very worst roads to Waitzen on the Danube, four miles above Pest. There he immediately built a pontoon bridge to withdraw his corps to the right bank of the Danube and thus put the river between Görgey and himself.

Page me9.233

While Görgey was advancing by way of Miskolcz, Dembinski crossed the Theiss at Czibakháza and with 30,000 men broke through Schlick's disposition at its weakest point between Jasz-Berény and the battlefield of Kapolna, marched through the middle of the country occupied by the enemy and linked up with Görgey on the other side of the Mátra mountains.

Page me9.233

To cover Pest Schlick left part of his forces behind at Hatvan (the same place the Magyars had visited in February). With the other part he “pursued”, as they say, Dembinski's army. What is meant by this “pursuit” is absolutely incomprehensible unless he is anxious to be cut off and thrown back against the Hernad into a purely Hungarian area.

Page me9.233

At the same time Jellachich's army was being pushed back by Damjanich from Szegedin and Vetter from Szolnok. As is well known, Jellachich had occupied Kecskemét and advanced his headquarters another four miles to Felegyhaza. Damjanich expelled him from there, forced him to leave Kecskemét, defeated him at Nagy-Körös and drove him back to Szegléd. According to the latest reports Jellachich is said to have abandoned this place as well and withdrawn his headquarters to Pilis, four miles from Pest.

Page Break me9.234

Page me9.234

Thus the Austrians are being driven back at all points, and the theatre of war is again situated but a few miles from Pest.

Page me9.234

But this time the Magyars are operating with completely different forces, and have taken up a disposition quite different from that of six weeks ago when they stood at Hatvan.

Page me9.234

Then they were drawn up in a line from the Mátra mountains on the right to the Theiss on the left. To begin with they only had the aim of threatening Pest.

Page me9.234

This time things are different. The main thing now is to relieve Komorn and support the insurrection on the right bank of the Danube in the rear of the imperial forces. Hence the much greater degree of daring and the much greater ingenuity in the co-ordination of the movements.

Page me9.234

The Magyars are positioned in two long curved lines, the one drawn up to the north-east of Pest and the other to the south-east of it. The first extends from Erlau and Gyöngyös, occupied by Dembinski, to Balassa-Gyarmat and Neograd, where Görgey is. While Dembinski holds Schlick in check and threatens Pest, Görgey has driven Ramberg over the Danube and presents such a serious threat to the besieged area of Komorn, hardly two days' march distant, that troops from there have already been sent against him and the encirclement of the fortress is at present very slack. At the same time he is in a position to cause the adjoining Magyar comitats on the Danube, particularly Gran, to rise again in revolt, to interrupt river communications between Pest and the besieging army and, in the rear of the Austrians, to call into being an enemy who at the least will force them to weaken their main army. In the event of a defeat he once again has the possibility of a retreat into the Slovakian mountains.

Page me9.234

The second Magyar army is positioned to the south-east of Pest, one flank on the Danube, the other on the Theiss, its centre in Kecskemét, Nagy-Körös, or perhaps by now already in Szegléd. This corps threatens Pest from the other side, and is equally capable of throwing auxiliary troops across the Danube into Stuhlweissenburg and the Tolna comitat to support the insurrection here too. Only some thousand Honveds†187 with light artillery and a few hussars would be needed to rouse the whole of the Bakony Forest from the Danube to the Raab into full rebellion in the rear of the main Austrian army, to isolate the besieging troops at Komorn and to necessitate the detachment of whole army corps against the rebels. Thus weakened, the imperial army would be unable to put up much resistance against the united Hungarian armies.

Page Break me9.235

Page me9.235

And the Hungarians undertake these rapid and daring marches at a time when, thanks to the bad weather and the muddy roads, the Austrian army cannot take a single step forward, but only steps backwards!
Page me9.235

Incidentally, one can see from the whole design that something more serious is intended this time than last. Previously single corps, but now it is the whole main army of the Austrians that has been pressed back under the walls of Pest. Pest itself is obviously the goal. This is recognised very clearly in the town itself. The Hungarian banknotes†188 have risen again. The reserve has been returned to Pest from Gödöllö (three miles away) and its baggage carried over the Danube to Ofen. The garrison of Pest and Ofen was confined all day long to its barracks and to the citadel.
Page me9.235

In short, the Austrians have been forced back towards Pest on all sides, the Magyar army is more concentrated than ever, Szegedin has been liberated, the link-up between Jellachich and the Serbs has been foiled, the siege area of Komorn has been breached, the mountain towns threatened, the guerillas in Slovakia and on the right bank of the Danube supported and Pest more seriously threatened than ever — these are the immediate results of this concentric movement of the four Magyar Theiss corps, its conception was as bold and skilful as its execution has been precise and rapid.
Page me9.235

In Transylvania Bem's situation is also beginning to clarify. First of all Bem defeated Puchner and drove him to Hermannstadt. On March 10 he sent a representative under a flag of truce and demanded surrender. Instead of an answer the Russian general ordered the representative to be whipped with the knout. Thereupon Bem attacked and took the town on March 11. No quarter was given to the Russians, a revolutionary committee was set up and many Cossacks hanged. Puchner escaped to Wallachia, the Russian general is said to have remained. On March 14 Bem marched against Kronstadt. In the meantime 40,000-50,000 Russians marched in by way of the Roterturm and the Törzburg passes (near Kronstadt), attacked Bem and defeated him thanks to their double superiority in numbers. Bem withdrew into Szeklerland.†189 The story of the five hanged Polish officers has been confirmed; their names were Bilski, Prince Woroniecki, Dumanski, Podalecki and Wronski.†a Moreover, another 70 or so officers and NCOs are said to have been hanged by the Russians. The rumour about Bem having been forced to enter Wallachia is scarcely mentioned any more; a second rumour sounds almost as wild, claiming that he has fled to the Magyar Theiss army. The terror inspired in the imperial forces by the name Bem is so great that they are already claiming that it was he who planned and commanded the daring move across the Theiss.

Page Break me9.236
Page me9.236

Nothing new from the Banat, except that Rukavina has conceded the Patriarch†a all his demands concerning Serbian nationhood.
Page me9.236

Komorn and Peterwardein are holding out. Welden himself has left for the former. Nous verrons!†b

Written by Engels on April 5, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 265, April 6, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.237

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.237

No fresh news at all has arrived from the theatre of war. Only from Transylvania do we have two Magyar bulletins today, signed by Bem himself, brought by the Debreczin official Közlöny.†a "1. Hermannstadt Headquarters, March 15. In my dispatch of March 13 I had the fortune to declare that I had sent a corps to the Roterturm Pass (Vöröstorony) in order to sever as far as possible communications with Wallachia. This army corps was unable to advance very far, however, since the whole Austrian army was positioned in Frek, and thus only separated from the defile by a mountain ridge, and so the flank of my advancing troops was threatened. By way of a detour I gained control of this defile, however, and I shall not only hold it, but at the same time press the enemy towards Kronstadt, from where he would only be able to cross the Carpathians with great difficulty, if, that is, he should wish to escape into Wallachia. I shall commence these operations of war this very day.

Page me9.237
"Yesterday our troops once again captured a staff officer, Colonel Kopet. The names of the two staff officers previously captured are Baron Berger (Lieutenant-Colonel) and Teichbert (Major).
Page me9.237
"The capture of Hermannstadt was of inestimable value to us, a great number of weapons have fallen to us from all sides, while the vital artery of the enemy has been severed."
Page me9.237
"2. Roterturm (Vöröstorony) Headquarters, March 16. My operations yesterday designed to dislodge the Russians from the Roterturm Pass were crowned by such good fortune that we had ejected the Russians from this strong position by 11 o'clock the same night. The 'March 15', the anniversary of the Liberty of Nations, could not have been celebrated in more worthy fashion.†190 Today at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the Russians have taken to the wildest headlong flight. Four Austrian generals: Puchner, Pfersmann, Gräser and Jovich have fled to Wallachia with approximately 3 companies. I myself have inspected the Roterturm Pass most carefully, and have made such arrangements that the Russians will find it hard to penetrate here again with hostile intent. I have dispatched another part of my army in pursuit of the Austrians, who according to the statements of prisoners of war are demoralised and making for Kronstadt in disorder. Their main force is at Fogaras, the rearguard, however, has just left Frek. The enemy had demolished the bridge over the Olt behind him, which hindered the energetic pursuit of him for a time. Now that the bridge has been rebuilt I shall continue the pursuit with the utmost vigour. I hope to take Kronstadt within 3 or 4 days, thereby the imperial Austrian army will be partly destroyed, and partly dispersed, and in any case rendered harmless as far as the internal tranquillity of this country is concerned. And then the return to obedience of those Wallachian bands which still operate in isolation will be so much the easier.

Page Break me9.238
Page me9.238
"Post scriptum. After taking Kronstadt I shall immediately leave for Hungary with an army corps."

Page me9.238
(As our readers already know, General Bem did not succeed in taking Kronstadt.)†a
Page me9.238
The extent to which the Pest revolutionaries have been encouraged by the recent gains of the Magyar army may be inferred from the following report in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

"Pest, March 30. A secret committee appears to exist here which is in contact with the Debreczin revolutionary government. For a large number of printed posters in the Hungarian language are daily found in every street, containing partly war bulletins from the Debreczin Government, and partly its orders and decrees. By means of such posters Bem's capture of Hermannstadt was already known here on March 22. The police have not yet succeeded in tracking down these secret information centres. If one is to believe such a poster, countless copies of which were distributed yesterday, then the Hungarian Lieutenant-Colonel Gaal stormed and captured the fortress of Arad on March 23. But the imperial officer commanding the fortress, Lieutenant-Field Marshal Baron Berger, is said to have made good his escape. — The Ban, Master of Ordnance Baron Jellachich, is†b ... here. The plan of advancing on Szegedin has been abandoned. The theatre of war has shifted back about 40 miles nearer the Austrian border, and thanks to this an area of about 300 square miles has been abandoned to the Magyars. The imperial army is now altogether restricted to the defensive. Among the officers the conviction is also generally expressed that without substantial reinforcements a decisive victory is scarcely conceivable. — Yesterday the Jewish community here had to pay a fine of 40,000 guldens because two local Jews were sentenced for deliveries made to Debreczin. — Colonel Horváth is advancing on Baja, which the insurgents have occupied with 4,000 men. His task is to clear the Danube line and to destroy the insurgents' ships."

Page me9.238
According to this, Jellachich, after three or four attempts on the Theiss, has returned to Pest for the fifth time; and just as he previously discovered that the Theiss cannot be crossed at Szolnok and marched towards Szegedin, he has now discovered that Szegedin cannot be taken. These repeated retreats are the “laurels” of the “chivalrous Ban Jellachich”! “Poor Jellachich! Poor Kölnische Zeitung”!

Page me9.238
Herr Welden has issued a bloodcurdling proclamation to the garrison at Komorn, which has the following positive content after many inflated words:

“Wherefore I grant a further grace of 12 hours so that every man may return to the royal imperial flag. Upon the expiry of this grace, however, I shall continue with the destruction of Komorn so long as I have one trusty soldier and my cannon the wherewithal to shoot. God will assist us! Outside Komorn, March 26, 1849.”†a

Page Break me9.239

Page me9.239
The rumour that the Russians have entered Galicia is emphatically contradicted.
Page me9.239
Martial-law reports announce: “We still lack consoling (!!!) news from Hungary.”
Page me9.239
Letters from Jassy announce that in Moldavia great preparations for some war or other are being made, especially as Russian troops in great numbers are arriving from all directions and General Paskevich is expected any day now.
Page me9.239
The Neue Oder-Zeitung today prints a document of the erstwhile Palatine of Hungary, Archduke Stephan,†191 from which it becomes clear that the betrayal of Hungary which is now practically complete was contemplated and projected as early as March last year. The document reads as follows:

“Your Majesty, the condition of Hungary is so critical at the moment that the most violent eruption can be expected any day. Anarchy reigns in Pest. The authorities have been ousted from their spheres of action by committees of public safety, and — while the Governor's Council at least maintains the outward form of its authority under the powerful leadership of Count Zichy — the Exchequer has been reduced to practically nothing. The nobility” (it appears to be implied from the context later on that the rural population is meant, since the nobility has already enjoyed rights) “has rebelled in several places in order to win real rights for itself.
Page me9.239
“In this anomalous and dangerous situation every man expects his salvation from the impending formation of a responsible government.†192
Page me9.239
“Even if we regard this plan as a calamity, the question now at issue, however, is which is the least calamity?
Page me9.239
“I shall now attempt briefly to adduce the three means by which alone I can still hope to achieve anything in Hungary. The first means would be to remove the whole of the armed forces from the country and abandon it to total devastation; passively to observe the destruction and arson, and passively to watch the bitter struggles between the nobility and the peasants.

Page me9.239
“The second would be to negotiate with Count Batthyány (who is now the people's only hero; — if we hesitate for long his star too is likely to fade —) concerning the proposed legislation, in order to save as much as can still be saved. One must know in advance, however, what is to be done if in the event of his dissatisfaction he should perhaps resign.
Page me9.239
“Finally, the third means would be to furlough the Palatine immediately and to send to Pressburg a Royal Commissioner invested with extraordinary powers and accompanied by a considerable military force, who after dissolving the Diet there would leave for Pest and there continue to run the government with a strong hand as long as conditions demand it.
Page me9.239
“I frankly confess that I myself recoil in horror from the first alternative. It is immoral, and it is perhaps also not proper for a government to forsake its subjects completely, some of whom at least are well disposed, and to abandon them as victims to all the cruelties of a rebellion (!). Moreover, the example this would set to the undisciplined rude masses would produce the most damaging effect in the other provinces.

Page Break me9.240
Page me9.240
“The second alternative on the other hand is a good one, and although at first glance it has the semblance of separation, yet for the present it is the only means of retaining this province, provided that the gentlemen to be newly appointed are capable of exercising complete influence over internal developments — which can admittedly no longer be claimed with complete certainty in advance. With the coming of more propitious times much may be organised differently which might cause a separation at present. I am not certain that one might not achieve something by way of proper negotiations through Batthyány and Deák — but solely through them — for if they deliberate in Pressburg†193 everything is to be feared. At this juncture, however, I must, as a faithful servant of the state, make so free as to draw Your Majesty's attention to a circumstance of the greatest significance: what will happen if in the event of unsuccessful negotiations Batthyány should hazard everything and be ready to resign?
Page me9.240
“Here I consider it my duty not to exaggerate but to observe in accordance with the truth that one must be prepared for this eventuality in order to be able to meet with armed force the demonstrations along the Danube and on the road from Pressburg to Vienna which will certainly be instigated by the youth of Pressburg and a section of the nobility. In this case the third alternative would remain, provided that neither the will nor the possibility of its employment were lacking. This third means would have to be used with great dispatch. Four questions arise in this connection, however:
Page me9.240
“a) is there sufficient money available? That is, is it not impossible to send a fairly large military force, by which I understand at least 40,000 to 50,000 men, to Hungary? Or

Page me9.240
“b) is this force available and able to be concentrated quickly? Is, further,
Page me9.240
“c) a Royal Commissioner available who is both willing and fitted to take over this task? Finally, however,
Page me9.240
“d) is there also no doubt that this means is sufficient for achieving the end desired? And whether later in the winter an accommodation will not be brought about, and whether the other hereditary provinces will remain tranquil upon perceiving this? Will one not need a substantial military force in Galicia and in Italy?
Page me9.240
“If to all these questions, which I am unable to judge from my own position, a favourable answer can be given according to which the execution of the plan is possible without illusions and without, for instance, calculations which perhaps later prove to be incorrect, then I have no further comment to add against its being carried out, provided that the settlement with Count Batthyány is attempted, and in addition that the dignitaries of the country, who have to be summoned in any case, are asked.
Page me9.240
“I frankly confess that in the present state of affairs I must pronounce myself to be for the second alternative, and I do not doubt that the dignitaries of the country — although I have not yet spoken with them — are of the same opinion. I have definite knowledge only of the opinion of Supreme Judge of the country Mailáth.
Page me9.240
“If, however, Your Majesty in Your wisdom should consider the first or the third means to be more to the purpose, then Your Supreme Highness will without doubt command me in accordance with the prevailing laws and customary practice as to whether for the time being I shall remain in Vienna in this event or whether I ought to travel elsewhere.

Your Majesty's most faithfully obedient subject, Stephan m. p.†a Vienna, March 24, 1848.”

Page Break me9.241
Page me9.241
We refrain from all further discussion of this document, which is self-revealing indeed. In the margin of the original document there are comments by Archduke Stephan in his own hand and a dispatch note: “Stephanus 23 March 1848” and “Kiads Marcz 24én 1848” (i.e. dispatched on March 24, 1848).
Page me9.241
We have found the following additional information in the papers which have arrived this morning:
Page me9.241
The village of Aszod, four miles from Pest on the road to Hatvan, was captured by the Magyars. They had already left it again the following day, however, in order to advance further in the direction of Neograd and the Waag. The Slovakian guerillas have once again been so encouraged by Görgey's sudden appearance on the Eipel that they are ranging as far as the Moravian border.

Page me9.241

Götz and Jablonowsky are in Waitzen. The report that they had held Eperies and Kaschau against Görgey was therefore untrue. The whole of the Zips, and indeed the whole of Upper Hungary, are thus once more in the hands of the Magyars, and the imperial forces now occupy only the western and southern borders, also the land between the Danube and the Drava and the immediate environs of Pest.

“Ban Jellachich,” states the Pest Observer (Figyelmezö), “is not only a hero, but also an astute diplomatist. He caused a sensation in Kecskemét. He summoned the Gipsy bands of Körös and Kecskemét, marched through the town to the accompaniment of the most genuine Hungarian melodies, and has so enthused the whole population with his Magyar conduct that they declared: 'Even if he were to land us in the middle of the Theiss, we should follow him!!'”†a

Page me9.241

Ban Jellachich is daily revealing himself as more of a buffoon and a Don Quixote.

Page me9.241

The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung reports the following fact, which may once again serve as proof of the genuinely revolutionary character of the Hungarian war:

“While the young Count Esterházy holds a command in the fortress of Komorn and will probably be executed for high treason should this be taken, the old Count Esterházy, the young Count's father, has just presented 160 casks of wine to the siege troops as encouragement for them to storm the fortress!”†b

Written by Engels about April 6, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 266, April 7, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.242

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.242

Today we have gladdening news. Bem's bulletins, which we printed yesterday,†a are confirmed to the very last letter.

Page me9.242

Bem has driven the Russian garrison of Hermannstadt right out of Transylvania, has destroyed the Austrian army and is advancing on Kronstadt. Puchner and his generals have fled to Wallachia.

Page me9.242

Bem had captured Hermannstadt on March 11 and beaten the Russians so soundly that only 2,000 of them found their way over the Roterturm Pass into Wallachia. The remainder, between 2,000 and 6,000 men (the reports are contradictory) were partly cut down, partly taken prisoner. On March 12 and 13 Bem pursued them to the defile.
Page me9.242

In the meantime unlucky old Puchner had set out from Mediasch to pursue Bem. He arrived before Hermannstadt exactly fifteen hours too late and stationed his troops at Frek on the Aluta, to one side of Hermannstadt and the Roterturm. Now, on March 15, Bem drove the Russians right out of the defile and on March 16 he destroyed the Austrian army. The childish old Puchner and his generals Pfersmann, Gedeon and Schurter likewise escaped into Wallachia together with three companies. Command of the defeated corps was assumed by Major-General Kalliani; he fled with his men in great disorder to Fogaras on the Aluta, eight to ten miles from Hermannstadt.
Page me9.242

Bem fortified the Roterturm Pass in such a way that, as he affirms, the Russians will no longer get through. Then he immediately headed for Kronstadt, hoping to take it in 3-4 days. The Russians, who immediately sent considerable forces to Transylvania (20,000 men with 50 cannon are mentioned), will probably arrive too late as they are taking a circuitous route through Wallachia, and perhaps Bem will still succeed in occupying and fortifying the Törzburg, Tömös and Boha passes (two to three miles from Kronstadt) before the Russians get there. That the latter are counting on considerable resistance and only very uncertain success is evident from the fact that they are sending a second corps of occupation into Transylvania by way of the Bukovina.

Page Break me9.243
Page me9.243

The capture of Hermannstadt was of incalculable significance for Bem. All the depots of arms, munitions and provisions of Puchner's army were here. All these supplies have fallen into his hands and such a skilled and active insurrectionary general as Bem, who can obtain soldiers with ease, will be able to make excellent use of precisely these weapons.
Page me9.243

The capture of Kronstadt completes Bem's conquest of Transylvania. He promises, as soon as he succeeds in this enterprise, to head for Hungary with an army. Even if the Russians, who are exerting themselves to the utmost to revenge the humiliating reverse they have suffered, do not permit him to reach the Theiss, it will nevertheless be possible for the fast-moving Bem to create a diversion by marching into the Banat, and just there his presence may prove decisive.†194
Page me9.243

To avoid the suspicion that these facts, which incidentally reach us from all sides simultaneously, are fabricated, we print the few melancholy lines in which the official Wiener Zeitung itself announces them:

“According to reports from Bucharest Master of Ordnance Puchner was in Rimnik (Wallachia) on March 19. Bem had occupied the Roterturm and the Russians the quarantine.†a A courier from Kronstadt brought the news to Czernowitz on March 26 that the royal imperial Transylvanian corps, after arriving too late for the relief of Hermannstadt, had retired to Kronstadt in order to cover the town. On account of illness Master of Ordnance Puchner has handed over the command of this corps to Major-General Kalliani, and he himself has withdrawn to Rimnik with the General Command."

Page me9.243

The martial-law reports of the arrival of two Russian columns by way of the Roterturm and the Törzburg passes†b were thus totally untrue. Unfortunately for the Kölnische Zeitung they were not published by Magyar but by genuine imperial journals. On the contrary, this time the "Magyar boasting" has been corroborated word for word.

Page Break me9.244

Page me9.244

Let us turn from Transylvania to the Banat. Here on March 16 and 18 the Szegedin and Theresiopel Magyars inflicted serious defeats on the Serbs at Kanizsa on the Theiss. After this they are said to have advanced into the Banat as far as Zenta and to have caused great devastation. As a result of these defeats the Patriarch†a ordered the Landsturm to be recalled in the whole of the Voivodina. However, the latest news from this area (Semlin, March 28) mentions a new victory of the Serbs over the Hungarians by which the former are said to have regained their previous advantageous position.†b

Page me9.244

Baja on the Lower Danube is still occupied by a band of insurgents. Colonel Horváth received the order to expel them, to clear the Danube line completely and to this end to destroy the insurgents' ships. These pirate barges appear to be the principal reason for refusing the request of the steamship transport company agency here to be allowed to sail the stretch of the Danube to Esseg.

Page me9.244

Horváth, however, returned with his mission unaccomplished. He does not appear to have got further than Kis-Körös (eight to ten miles from Baja).

Page me9.244

There is very little to be heard from the Theiss today. An Austrian column which had dared advance as far as Losoncz was suddenly attacked by the Honveds and completely wiped out. In an imperial bread store at Gödöllö (three miles from Pest) considerable supplies have been spoilt by the rain. The state of things here may be judged from the following dirge from a Vienna correspondent of the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen:

"I am very much afraid of this Hungarian business, and were I a Minister I should be unable to sleep in peace because of it. Would you find it incredible if I were to report that Windischgrätz will actually be relieved of his command? Things have gone so far that the plans of the battle at Kapolna have been sent to the Emperor at Olmütz to demonstrate the Marshal's incompetence. The officers before Komorn have held their own council of war, and it took Welden's energy and the proven confidence of the troops in him to settle a great many differences. Welden is expected to return tonight and thus we shall already be able to read a report on the operations at Komorn tomorrow evening; my wish is that it may be favourable, but I dare not hope so."†c

Page me9.244

An issue of the Lithographierte Correspondenz from Vienna states that Dembinski has crossed the Danube below Pest with an army corps and is threatening Stuhlweissenburg. This remains to be proved. Several days ago we were already saying that Magyar corps would cross the Danube in this area†a; it is quite possible that they are threatening Weissenburg; but whether merely guerillas are involved or considerable army corps cannot yet be ascertained. In any case it may be assumed that Dembinski is not commanding them; according to the latest reports he and his troops have taken up positions significantly further northwards, on the Zagyva and the Mátra mountains.

Page Break me9.245

Page me9.245

From the camp at Komorn Herr Welden has brought back a long account of the operations against the fortress, which in spite of all its rhetoric and deliberate vagueness does not give the least consolation to the imperial side. Not the faintest prospect of capture. It merely contains a dry enumeration of events to date. The following is an extract from it:

"In the summer of 1848 Komorn was re-equipped, provided with nearly 300 cannon and victuals for at least a year; in the month of September the Magyars raised the red-green-and-white flag†b there and handed over the general command to Baron Jessenak. The garrison of the fortress still comprises the following military units: 6 companies of the Alexander regiment,†195 2 companies of Prussian infantry, 8 Honved battalions, 700 Honved artillery troops and two squadrons of Austrian hussars who changed sides. All attempts at attacking the fortress with the enormous masses of troops under Windischgrätz came to nothing; the encirclement commenced in January with the advance on Leopoldstadt was abandoned as futile, and only towards March 10 did the Austrians make an attack in earnest. Siege equipment, cannon and technical detachments were sent down from Vienna; in vain, however, for the bad weather conditions and the bottomless roads hindered both the transport and the mounting of the cannon. On March 24, 42 twelve- and 18-pound cannon, mortars and howitzers opened a murderous fire on the fortress from the Sandberg. The besieged troops replied likewise with heavy fire and on March 31 in particular tried to hinder the erection of the batteries; on this day the siege troops threw a bridge across the Danube at Nemes-Oers. On the day mentioned the Austrian Lieutenant-Field Marshal Simunich began the closer encirclement of Komorn; he ordered the troops to march in part along the Waag and after they had taken up their positions pickets of the besieged caused considerable damage with intensive small arms fire, to Sossay's brigade in particular. — The damage inflicted on the enemy section which crossed the Danube by the Hungarians with the fire they maintained from 10 o'clock in the morning to 4 o'clock in the afternoon is naturally given out as very slight by the official press. At the same time Veigl's brigade too advanced on the Waag bridgehead in three sections, while the raiding party under Cremeville formed the reserve. The first section moved on Batföldre which the Hungarians had set fire to, the second against the fortified brick wall, and the third moved by way of Lisza on the left bank of the Danube against the powder tower where the fire was liveliest. The Austrian side suffered very considerable losses during this operation. — Thus the western, northern and eastern sides of Komorn were surrounded by a line of fire; finally, 42 pieces of artillery were bombarding the fortress and the Danube bridgehead from the Sandberg. During the night four 24-pounders forced the bridgehead and bombarded the fort with red-hot cannon-balls. In the course of April 1 another 12 heavy cannon and two 60-pound mortars arrived and were disembarked opposite Nemes-Oers."†a

Page Break me9.246

Page me9.246

The only positive thing to emerge from this account is that the Palatine redoubts so often alleged to have been conquered by the imperial forces are still in the hands of the Hungarians, as is also the Danube bridgehead, and that there can be no talk yet of direct-fire batteries, let alone breach batteries.†196

Page me9.246

In Debreczin spirits are high and the mood is very cheerful. Bem has sent seven captured Russian cannon there, which have been decked with garlands and put on public display. It is said that the Debreczin National Assembly has been convoked for April 15 in Pest.†197

Page me9.246

A report has arrived from Croatia which indicates a curiously sudden indulgence of the imperial Government towards the Slavs. As is known the Southern Slavs had protested against the continuation of the military dictatorship in the Military Border area.†198 The imposed Constitution declared that in the border area everything must remain as of old. Hence particularly the discontent of the Croats and the Serbs, who saw their country split by this into two halves set against each other. Now, when the Slavs are needed more than ever, the following poster was suddenly put up on March 30 in Agram:

"We learn from a reliable source that all the decisions of our world-historic Diet†199 of the year 1848 and in particular Article 26 concerning the future state of the Military Border area have been ratified by His Majesty our youthful Emperor and King Francis Joseph. The man to whom, besides the grace of the Emperor, our thanks are most due for this favourable turn of events, will be divined in the heart of every true patriot. Southern Slavs! Dear brothers! Do not despair! We shall thus have a fatherland and consequently love Austria again; then shall the gaping wounds of our people, inflicted on so many battlefields in the struggle for the power and the glory of Austria, be healed. Then, brothers, will it be our glory so courageously to have contributed to reconstruction in the South of Europe in which we shall take our allotted place as members in the free dwelling house of so many nations, and forgetting the pain and tribulation of the past, we shall be able to exclaim: Long live the constitutional King and Emperor Francis Joseph! Long live the darling of the nation, the brave Ban Jellachich!"†b

Page me9.246

There was no signature at all on this poster, but it was considered to have originated with Minister Kulmer and to be semi-official. The decisions of 1848 referred to demanded: subordination of the civil administration of the Military Border area to the ministries concerned, so that only the military organisation should remain with the Ministry of War, and the restriction of the borderers' obligation to service abroad by fixing a definite contingent in proportion to the rest of the monarchy. For hitherto the civil administration in the border area has also been made over to the military authorities, and all borderers between 16 and 60 years of age could be enlisted for active service abroad. It was precisely the borderers thus conscripted whose massive presence decided the war in Austria's favour in Italy in August and in Hungary on the Drava and in the Banat in October last year. If the poster in Agram is not merely a royal imperial Austrian puff, then the trick of being able to stamp soldiers out of the earth has come to an end with it.

Page Break me9.247

Written by Engels about April 7, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 267, April 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.248

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.248
The Hungarian correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung reports today that on March 20 Bem captured Kronstadt and moreover without striking a blow. The remainder of the Austrians and Russians are said to have withdrawn to Wallachia. Hermannstadt and Kronstadt had each to pay 1,000 florins in cash per day to the Russians and in addition they were subjected to the most shameless requisitioning and thieving. Bem has proclaimed a general amnesty in these two towns. The Saxons are said to have at once publicly declared that the Austrians had compelled them to call in the Russians (this is certainly not true).
Page me9.248
On March 29 the imperial forces under Welden are said to have attempted (?) to take Komorn by storm and to have suffered so great a defeat that they have abandoned the siege of Komorn; only an observation corps†200 still remains at Gönyö. Wimpffen's Italian battalion is said to have gone over to the Hungarians. We print these news items with the greatest reservation, although recently the essential facts in the reports of the Hungarian correspondent have as a rule proved correct.
Page me9.248

Banknotes continue to be printed by the Hungarians in Debreczin, for a considerable amount of currency paper has been smuggled in.

"On March 15, the anniversary of the Hungarian insurrection,†201 a great public celebration was held near Debreczin and a large number of people assembled there. Two whole oxen and many pigs and lambs were roasted, there was plenty of wine and Gipsies played Hungarian airs and marches. A number of speeches were made and toasts proposed with the indispensable Eljen.†a There are no troops stationed in Debreczin and the national guards are on duty. They wear bright red ribbons on their shakos and hats. Incidentally, half the companies of every battalion in the country must always be in the field to face the enemy, and after three months they are relieved by the other three companies that stayed at home. This explains the strength of the military forces of the insurgents and also why their battalions are unable to withstand any bayonet charge by the imperial troops" (Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen).

Page Break me9.249

Page me9.249
Schlick and Jellachich are again (for the tenth time) holding a council of war in Pest. According to Austrian reports, General Jablonowsky has advanced towards Losoncz.

"Business letters sent from Lemberg on the 31st of this month have caused a new wave of anxiety. The leading business houses report from there that the entire garrison of Lemberg is expected to leave for Hungary and it is feared that after its departure a revolutionary move or diversion in favour of the Hungarians will take place" (Lithographierte Correspondenz).

Page me9.249
It seems that the Agram poster announcing the concessions†a is all humbug. Up to now no one has come forward to defend it, and it is generally believed to be an imposture.

Written by Engels on April 8, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 267 (second edition), April 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.250

AUSTRIAN LAMENTATIONS

Page me9.250

Not the smallest news item from anywhere, especially since the Breslau newspapers, generally the best informed, did not arrive today because of the recent holiday.

Page me9.250

From Komorn the Wiener Zeitung officially reports the following unenlightening fact:

"In connection with the operations and events at Komorn announced on April 3, we learn from the latest reports:

Page me9.250

"Closer encirclement began on April 2; the remaining heavy guns were brought into No. 8 battery during the night of April 1, and at daybreak the 24-pounders of this very aptly sited battery began firing hot shots against the old fortress. The enemy returned the fire only moderately from the Palatine line, the old fortress, and the bridgehead."†a

Page me9.250

Now even the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen has to admit that the army on the Theiss has been substantially decimated by fever:

"The incidence of sickness in the flooded areas on the Theiss is said to be enormous."

Page me9.250

The same paper reports "From the Drava, March 30" that in the Banat things are also beginning to take a disagreeable turn for Austria. Listen to the lamentations of the royal imperial martial-law correspondent on this most unwelcome "concurrence" of circumstances:

"The terrain of operations has special difficulties; moreover, among the border troops the army has also less experienced ranks and has been weakened by garrisoning. The size of the area of Hungary and Transylvania should likewise be considered and taken into account. The rebels, on the other hand, are more concentrated and are pushing towards the Banat. Hence, the imperial Serbian corps of Major-General Todorovich, which, as I reported last time, had marched from the area of Theresiopel towards Kikinda, is in serious trouble, or even — if the news about Karlowitz is not misleading — dispersed.

Page Break me9.251

Page me9.251

"The siege corps at Peterwardein has received 3 battalions as reinforcements, and is working hard on the entrenchments. When (!) Komorn is taken (!) a considerable number of troops will no doubt be moved to this point, for next to Transylvania no area needs reinforcements more urgently than this one, not only because of the fortress but because of the probability of enemy pressure. The mood in the Voivodina is very black, not among the lower orders, but in the middle and upper strata of society. The extent to which this makes itself felt in the Mitrowic Odbor†202 and the atmosphere there may be judged by the fact that Lieutenant-Colonel Puffer, who when a captain distinguished himself by his resolution during the well-known outrage in Reichenberg, does not think it advisable for him as a German to take up the regimental command of the Peterwardein regiment, although a section of the regiment has petitioned for his appointment as colonel.”†a

Page me9.251

In conclusion, here is the deeply affecting distress call of a Vienna correspondent of the same paper who has at last seen a glimmer of light and already has an inkling of what is going on:

“Now blows are coming thick and fast from Hungary! What used to be whispered here in the night can now be read in plain words in the evening edition of the Wiener Zeitung: the valiant Puchner has been pushed into Wallachia — he does not even appear to have kept his entire corps together, otherwise he would surely have been able to hold his ground at the Roterturm Pass. Where are our friends, the Russians? And why do our troops not push into Transylvania from Hungary? The areas on the Theiss are said to be completely impassable, but how is it that the Magyars find a way through the areas on the Theiss and across it? In Szegedin bread is very dear and in Komorn it is said to be very bad — such is the pass we have come to — but Honveds are still to be had cheaply, in masses, and, it appears, of tolerable quality. 'Oh, Lord in Heaven, behold!' If this goes on, then — ah well, we must not prophesy!”

This is “the Austria of old,
For feats and victories oft extolled!”†b

Written by Engels about April 9, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 268, April 9, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.252

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.252

That Bem is master of all Transylvania is no longer open to doubt. The Austrians who have hurriedly withdrawn from Hermannstadt to Kronstadt and the Russian garrison there, offered no resistance. Allegedly “for lack of ammunition” they also left Kronstadt without striking a blow, and withdrew to Wallachian territory. Some 22,000 men, 3,000 horses and 50 guns are supposed to be there, besides 8,000 Russians, and on the Bessarabian-Moldavian border another corps of 15,000 men which has already received orders to cross the Pruth. Thus reports the Wiener Zeitung.†a

Page me9.252

Whether the information in the Wiener Zeitung is correct remains to be seen. This much is, however, certain: if it is correct, Bem's forces must have swollen enormously to be able to drive out 25,000 Austrians with 50 guns and 6,000 to 10,000 Russians from an area so rich in advantageous positions as the environs of Kronstadt. In spite of the Russians we can therefore be easy about the fate of Transylvania. For nobody will be taken in by the fib that the imperial troops had to flee "for lack of ammunition" when Kronstadt is their second main depot after Hermannstadt.
Page me9.252

All the reports received so far show that the Wiener Zeitung has given only a fifth of the real number of Russian soldiers in Wallachia.
Page me9.252

Quoting an eye witness, a Saxon from Hermannstadt, the Magyar correspondent of the Neue Oder-Zeitung confirms a report carried earlier by the Breslauer Zeitung about the capture of Hermannstadt. Bem is said to have restrained his troops from any excesses and to have promised a general amnesty except for those who called in the Russians. But these are said to have already fled.

Page Break me9.253
Page me9.253

According to a Cracow report in the same paper the "depressing news" which the Royal Imperial Consul in Belgrade, Herr Mayerhofer, is taking to Vienna is said to convey that the Turkish Government has protested against the Russian intervention in Transylvania which is being conducted from Turkish territory, asserting its exclusive right to intervene from its own territory.
Page me9.253

Incidentally, even the royal imperial martial-law reports admit that Bem, far from being threatened in his position, is rather himself threatening Wallachia and Bucharest. Should circumstances indicate an incursion there as appropriate, he will appeal to the suppressed Wallachian revolution†203 and to the ambition of the Turks which has been offended by the Russian invasion. The Russian appetite for the Danube provinces and the alliance of the Austrians and Russians have moreover roused much sympathy for the Magyar cause among the Turks.
Page me9.253

No changes have occurred in the positions of the two armies on the Theiss since yesterday's news. Yet the lamentations of the Austrians are becoming more frequent, and their situation apparently more depressing every day. Some 13,000 soldiers are said to be lying wounded and sick in Pest, and the active army on the Theiss to have dwindled to 45,000 men. Windischgrätz is reported to have handed over the command to Jellachich (?). The courage and power of the Magyars, on the other hand, are growing day by day. They are drawn up in a great semi-circle round Pest from Waitzen to Szegléd; their mobile units patrol as far as Komorn and the Moravian border. Kossuth has had banknotes issued for another 15 million guldens, and thereby covered the costs of his army for a further six months.

Page me9.253

The Imperial Command is making every effort to improve the situation of the army on the Theiss. A corps has withdrawn from the close encirclement of Komorn (where 5,000 Austrians are said to have already died of sickness or in battle) and has marched towards Pest; three battalions have marched from Vienna, and two squadrons of cuirassiers and one regiment and one battalion of infantry from Olmütz. In addition considerable preparations are being made in Moravia and Galicia. Ten thousand Russians are to be called to Lemberg, so that Hammerstein can at last move off to Hungary with the entire Austrian garrison (see under "Poland"†a). The best officers of Radetzky's army, Lieutenant-Field Marshal Baron Hess, generals Benedek and Mayerhofer have been called to Hungary, and in spite of all this the Austrians' hope of success is so slight that they do not intend to "begin operations in Hungary in earnest before May".

Page Break me9.254

Page me9.254

In the south, things are equally disagreeable for the imperial forces. True enough, there is again talk of the victory of the Serbs at Zenta and of the inevitable cruelties which they afterwards committed. On the other hand, the bonds between Serbs and Austrians are now so far dissolved that the latter have to fear the worst.

"Recently, Lieutenant-Field Marshal Rukavina has declared categorically that the three Banat border regiments, and — as regards the internal administration — also the three comitats, Temes, Krasso and Torontal, must obey his orders unconditionally, failing which he would be forced to take the most serious measures against all offenders. This declaration and the half-hearted action of the General Staff excited the greatest hostility among the people, and after fruitless endeavours to win Rukavina back to the national cause, the Patriarch†a yesterday felt obliged to dispatch the courier Jovan Nedeljkovich to His Highness Prince zu Windischgrätz with the request for 20,000 rifles to arm those Serbs who are fit to bear arms, and to instruct generals Rukavina and Todorovich to work more sincerely in the Serbian national cause, failing which he would find himself in the most disagreeable position of having to treat with the Magyars. People are looking anxiously into the future."

Page me9.254

This is how they write to the Austrian papers from Semlin.

Page me9.254

Moreover, the Magyars have made another incursion into Galicia. The Wiener Zeitung writes:

"A band of 800 Hungarian insurgents attacked the village of Brzywka in Sambor district, situated hard on the Hungarian border, drove away all the cattle and then withdrew. The verger, who wanted to raise the alarm by ringing the church bell, was shot by the insurgents."†b

Written by Engels on April 9-10, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 269, April 11, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.255

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.255

Nothing has happened in the theatre of war. The imperial forces have held a big council of war in Pest and have decided to confine themselves to the defensive for the next four weeks and in the meantime round up reinforcements (50,000 men are mentioned!). The Magyars, however, are acting so challengingly that Windischgrätz could not help showing his teeth — loose already — once more, despite this decision. On April 4 he advanced to Gödöllö three miles†a from Pest, and made his headquarters there. The Ost-Deutsche Post concludes from this that a battle is near. At Hatvan and also at Szegléd people say they have heard gun-fire, but what happened there is as yet quite unknown.†204

Page me9.255

Because of an announcement recently disseminated by the insurgents that Kossuth's paper money†205 is to be regarded as legal tender and must be accepted on pain of martial-law treatment, the Government again insists that these money tokens are invalid and worthless and gives particular warning against accepting the ten-florin notes recently issued by Kossuth, since they will not only be subject to confiscation, but anyone on whom they are found is liable to penalties.

Page me9.255

Baja, which had briefly fallen into the hands of the imperial forces, has been regained by the Magyars, who in general seem to be making considerable progress in the Banat. The Austrians can spread as many martial-law rumours as they like, such as that Szegedin has been conquered and is in flames; their own papers are forced to contradict them and to admit that the Magyars are making considerable progress in the Bacska (between the Danube and Theiss).

Page Break me9.256

Page me9.256

Komorn is being heavily bombarded, but what good is that with a fortress in which every building is bomb-proof. To show their contempt for the imperial cannon, the garrison the other day made a man in dressing-gown and white nightcap walk about on the wall and dust it very carefully with a white handkerchief. The imperial cannon-balls whistled by on all sides, but the genial Hungarian did not allow himself to be at all disturbed in his absorbing occupation.

Page me9.256

There is nothing new from Transylvania. A martial-law report asserts that the Russians have invaded in superior strength and retaken the position recently conquered by the Magyars. Such brazen lies have rarely been told. Another report claims that, on the contrary, Bem has already arrived at the Theiss and declared that Transylvania was secure and that he had left 20,000 men there to garrison the country and the passes. The one assertion is as false as the other. Bem holds the whole of Transylvania and is still there, and in a few days he will perhaps hold all the country to the Danube and the Pruth.

Written by Engels about April 11, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 270, April 12, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.257

[THE EXTRADITION OF POLITICAL REFUGEES]

Page me9.257

Cologne, April 12. By the issue of warrants for the arrest of Austrian, German and non-German so-called political criminals, especially Kossuth, Bem, Perczel and other Hungarian heroes, the Prussian Government has already proved the close connection between Prussian constitutional freedom and blood-stained royal imperial martial law. That an entente cordiale between Potsdam and Olmütz†206 existed, despite the question of the imperial crown, the German question, the Schleswig-Holstein and other questions, was a fact which could be overlooked only by the diplomatising literary moles from the Kölnische Zeitung and other shrewd journals. But that this entente cordiale was to sink to the lowest depths of vileness, to the infamy of the extradition of political refugees to the Austrians — that is what our glorious Government still had in store for us.

Page me9.257

If Robert Blum had escaped from Vienna into Prussia, the Prussian Government would have handed him over to his executioners.†207

Page me9.257

On April 4 of this year the Prussian Government handed over the Viennese cadet Höcke, a comrade-in-arms of Robert Blum's, to the bloodhounds of Austrian martial law. The Oberschlesische Lokomotive published the following report from Ratibor dated April 4:

“Yesterday at midday the Viennese cadet Höcke was brought here in a special conveyance under police guard from Breslau, to which town he had fled not long ago, being charged with high treason for his part in the October revolution in Vienna. In a letter to his family in Vienna, Höcke had given his Breslau address. This letter must have shared the fate of many others, i.e. it was opened at some Austrian post station, for soon afterwards the police authorities in Breslau received the order to arrest the aforesaid Höcke at the place where he lived, and to hand him over to the Austrians.

Page me9.257
"Accordingly, the prisoner arrived here at noon yesterday under escort, where a very serious illness, from which he has suffered for a long time, delayed the continuation of his journey to judgment by court martial. He was put in the town gaol

Page Break me9.258
under a strong military guard, but already at 5 a.m. today he was taken across the frontier under the escort of two men of the town guard and a policeman. The much-vaunted Prussian human feeling did not allow him on this last journey of two-and-a-half hours to leave the vehicle even once, although it was a necessity in view of his illness. Nor was he allowed any kind of refreshment, for the purchase of which no money was available although, according to the prisoner's statement, 80 talers were taken from him when arrested in Breslau, and the cost of transport, as we know for certain, amounted to only (!) 30 talers.
Page me9.258
"It is the most urgent duty of German newspapers forcefully to draw the attention of the Austrian fugitives to the danger to which they are exposed by staying on Prussian, and especially Silesian, soil. The old extradition treaty continues to operate in all its old glory.†208 The great German fundamental law, called martial law, is recognised in Prussia just as it is in Austria, and it is being put into effect with relish."

Page me9.258
Such an example from the heroes of martial law in the various countries where a state of siege has been proclaimed should not be given us in vain. Just as they assist one another now, so the democrats of all nations, too, will assist one another when the day of reckoning comes.
Page me9.258
The royal and ministerial scum of half Europe found a safe refuge in England last spring.†209
Page me9.258
We assure Herr Manteuffel, Herr Brandenburg and Co. that in the next revolution which they themselves are so busily expediting, no obstacle will be put in the way of England handing them over to the victorious German people thirsting for revenge. Arrangements for that have already been made.

Written by Engels on April 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 271 (second edition), April 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.259

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR. —
THE GERMAN NAVY

Page me9.259

Schleswig-Holstein. The Danes have left Hadersleben and the town has been re-occupied by the imperial army.†210 A few particulars have come in on the fighting in the Sundewitt area, according to which losses on both sides were fairly high. The imperial army has taken a number of prisoners.

Page me9.259

North-German papers are still largely occupied with that remarkable stroke of luck in the port of Eckernförde.†211 This unique and quite unexpected event will probably figure as the greatest imperial military feat until the next German revolution. It has become clear that the Danes had definite orders to carry out the crazy attempt on Eckernförde. Obviously, in the prevailing circumstances they were bound to suffer such a defeat. Moreover, this whole affair shows what a droll institution the German Navy is. For the German Navy, which still exists only on paper, in spite of all the money, earrings, bracelets and false jewels sent to Frankfurt, is now at last to become a reality. It is to be built from — the wreckage of the Danish battleship Christian den ottende which was blown to smithereens! We are not joking. All Eckernförde, along with the victorious imperial troops stationed there, is busy fishing for splinters, gun-carriages, water kegs, yards, etc. as these are driven ashore, and storing them for the building of the German Navy. The Hamburg Börsen-Halle reports all this with appropriate seriousness. For our part, we predict that the gloriously captured Gefion will be brilliantly recaptured by the Danes as soon as she shows herself on the high sea.

Page me9.259

Four Danish blockade ships, three frigates and a corvette, are already again lying off the Elbe. The frigate Havfruen is lying off the Oder. This is a good opportunity for the German Navy to show itself, but it will fight shy of that. The whole German Navy served no other purpose except for too much boasting and excellent profits for the Hamburg, American and English shipping companies which palmed off their discarded ships on the Frankfurt imperial powerlessness for vast sums of money. The whole flotilla, which is lying in the Elbe and can already be seen in lithographs in all the picture shops, is unseaworthy; still less can the lightly-built ex-merchantmen and ex-steamboats from the Weser, promoted to warships, carry the weight of the guns or withstand the recoil of firing them. Not to mention the elegantly equipped erstwhile transatlantic steamships which the other day brilliantly ran aground and are lying in the Weser.

Page Break me9.260

Page me9.260

The whole story of the German Navy is sheer plagiarism, it has all happened before. Many years ago the Belgian model state (on the water Germany's model state as well) bought from a Liverpool shipping company the steamship The British Queen for 1,200,000 francs in order to open up a steamship line between Antwerp and New York.

On the masts of this ship was hoisted the black-red-and-gold flag which the German fatherland also has in common with the Belgian model state.†212 But what happened? On the very first voyage it became clear that The British Queen was not seaworthy, and this cast-off Liverpool ship was lying in the Antwerp dock ever since until at last, some little time ago, it was resold for 130,000 francs under the description “old wood”.
Page me9.260

That is the German Navy! When the Danes next take a German ship, they will auction it also in Copenhagen for “old wood”.
Page me9.260

That the Germans will never become a naval power is the fault of their geographical position. But they could have a navy which would at least protect their coasts and rule in the Baltic, in spite of Danes and Russians. But even that they will never get so long as the black-red-and-gold and black-and-white†213 imperial trash prevails. A German Navy will only be possible when the red flag is hoisted on its masts.

Written by Engels about April 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 271, April 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.261

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR. — WINDISCHGRÄTZ'S COMMENTS ON THE IMPOSED CONSTITUTION

Page me9.261

As the Breslau and Vienna letters and journals did not arrive tonight, little material is available today on the events of the Hungarian war. The imperial side once again speaks of victories which it claims to have won over the Hungarians. Jellachich is said to have captured 17 guns from the Magyars at Szegléd, Jablonowsky is again said to have advanced to Losoncz, Schlick to have thrown back the Magyars all along the line at Hatvan etc. This was reported to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung from Pest on April 4.†a Other reports of the same date say nothing of this and assert that the Austrian army is still in full retreat and that the Magyars of Pest have never been more cheerful than they are at present. Certainly, the Magyars' resolute advance has remarkably thwarted Windischgrätz's well-intentioned plan to impose a four weeks' truce on the Hungarians until he had received reinforcements of 50,000 men. Windischgrätz realises that he cannot avoid a decisive battle now, decisive for the imperial side if he is beaten, but not at all decisive if the Magyars are beaten. The Hungarians can always retreat into the impassable swamps and the pusztas†214 on the Theiss, behind which they are entrenched as in the most formidable fortress; the imperial troops, who have no basis of operations, having behind them 60 miles of hostile country, must retreat in a rout towards Vienna in case of defeat, just as Napoleon had to retreat towards the Rhine after the battle of Leipzig.†215 Few will escape, and those who do will no longer form an army.

Page Break me9.262
Page me9.262

Moreover, the sole definite advantage which the imperial troops have gained by their concentration at Pest appears to be that Görgey, since he has been joined by Klapka and his corps, which had been roving in Slovakia till then, has given up his plan to advance to Komorn by the side of the mountains. He has marched a little further south, so as to meet Schlick's corps head-on, jointly with the main Magyar force which is at Hatvan and Gyöngyös. The victory of the Magyars in this area is of course much more important than a passing raid, even a highly successful one, against the Komorn siege force.

Page me9.262

In the south, the Magyars have gained decisive advantages at the points where fighting is still in progress, namely in the Bacska. The alleged victory of the Serbs at Zenta has vanished into — the martial-law — thin air. Moreover, we learn now that the Magyars have moved from Theresiopel and Szegedin to the south with irresistible force, driving the Serbs before them; that they have occupied Zombor and Verbasz, conquered the entire Bacska etc. and are threatening the siege area of Peterwardein. Verbasz lies, in fact, only a few miles from Peterwardein, and we shall receive important news from this area shortly. It was Vetter-Damjanich's corps which carried out this surprisingly rapid march, having left behind an observation brigade against Jellachich, who was retreating to the north. This march is of the greatest importance, not only for the relief of Peterwardein, but particularly because of the Serbs. It is known that they are already on very strained terms with the imperial side and have threatened several times to negotiate with the Magyars. And nothing would be more likely to bring these negotiations to a rapid conclusion than just such a sudden and surprising display of strength by the Magyars in the Voivodina.

Page me9.262

In the north, General Hammerstein, who is in command in Lemberg, is said to have started for Hungary with 15 battalions. We recall that news of his departure was carried once before in all the papers; he was reported to have crossed the Theiss and to have advanced to Nyiregyhaza, 8 miles from Debreczin, and there was not a word of truth in it. We refer the reader, by the way, to our report from Lemberg†a of the day before yesterday, which indicated no such rapid departure.

Page me9.262

According to the Lloyd of April 7,†b 20,000 Russians have already started for Transylvania and General Muraviev is approaching in haste from Bessarabia with a corps of 20,000 men. The Turks too have marched to the border to guard Wallachia. The Turkish troops, about 6,000 men who hitherto were garrisoning Galatz and Ibrail, made for Bucharest on March 21 and in a few days a new Turkish garrison is expected in Galatz.

Page Break me9.263

Page me9.263

Needless to say, these reports are again purely martial-law rumours.

Page me9.263

From the Bukovina we learn that Malkowsky, whom various martial-law papers had already drawn up between Bistritz and Maros-Vásárhely, is not on Transylvanian soil at all. So far from advancing, he has, on the contrary, had to send a considerable part of his troops from the Bukovina to Galicia. These are now at Delatyn, about 15 miles from the border of the Bukovina, where a Magyar invasion is feared.

Page me9.263

We conclude with a document which the Pest Figyelmezö†a quotes with the following introductory remark:

"The following explanation of the Austrian Constitutional Charter†216 with reference to Hungarian conditions has been issued. Although it has not reached us officially, it has however been communicated to the Royal Commissioners for distribution in the country, therefore we shall not delay its publication."

Page me9.263

The document itself reads:

"By order of His Majesty Our Emperor and King Francis Joseph I, I, as Plenipotentiary of His Majesty, make hereby known the following declarations and explanations relating to the constitutional Charter in force throughout the Empire from March 4, as far as the Charter concerns Hungarian conditions. His Majesty Our Most Gracious Emperor and King has deigned to issue and to publish a constitutional Charter for the one and indivisible monarchy which intimately links the whole realm in a mutual connection, bestows unity upon the whole while maintaining the independence and capacity for development of the individual parts and at the same time guarantees equal rights to every nation. His Majesty wishes this Charter, accompanied by the Manifesto to His peoples issued by His Majesty, to be made known without delay also to the inhabitants of the Kingdom of Hungary in their language. His Majesty is fully confident in the belief that the peoples of Hungary will recognise the enlargement and guarantee of their political rights, vouched for by this constitutional Charter under which they are authorised to take their constitutional share in the common affairs of the realm, which in future will embrace with the bond of common rights the peoples united under a single ruler by the Pragmatic Sanction.†217 His Majesty expects that His peoples will see in this Charter a strong guarantee of their permanence, of their well-being and of a constitutional future, and will know how to appreciate those beneficial fruits which are bound to result from the welding together of material interests and the community of truly liberal political institutions. In carrying out this great work, which has become the task of His life, it has been the endeavour of the Emperor duly to consider Hungarian conditions; it is His supreme desire that this great work of unification, which commends itself to all the peoples for their own good, should come into force with just consideration of the existing conditions and careful thought for those institutions which time and experience have proved to be beneficial to the community and vitally necessary; that accordingly the legally guaranteed freedom of religious belief be maintained, while the free sphere of action for Hungarian national law should remain untouched and limited only by the power necessary to maintain the unity of the realm and its strong government, and handled in the constitutional spirit; a sphere of action which makes necessary the passing of an internal national reform taking cognisance of the concessions which Our illustrious predecessor†a in government made to the agricultural class in the spring of 1848. No sooner will peace and order be restored and the armed uprising, which unfortunately is still in existence in part of the realm, put down, than His Majesty will assign to Hungarian national law its legal sphere of action. It is for the joint co-operation of His order- and peace-loving peoples with His Majesty and His troops to restore the desired state of affairs with all speed. Until then, His Majesty will regard it as His duty and His right to employ every means with the help of which order, peace and a settled internal administration can be achieved, the numerous wounds inflicted on the unfortunate country can be healed, and a renewal of revolutionary ventures can be made impossible. His Majesty will know how to live with their rights and how to respond to their profession, and He confidently expects that all men of goodwill will endeavour to support Him in this, so that they and their compatriots may participate in the benefits which they must extend to everyone by helping in the rebirth of a great realm and the unification of all forces towards a great aim.

Page Break me9.264

Given at my headquarters in Ofen, March 20, 1849.
Prince Windisch-Grätz, Field Marshal."

Written by Engels about April 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 271, April 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.265

[RUMOURS OF THE EXTERMINATION OF THE REBELS]

Page me9.265

At last we perceive again an official royal imperial sign of life in the Vienna papers which came this morning. The following poster was displayed in Pest and Ofen:

"A brigade of the corps of His Excellency the Ban†a yesterday encountered an enemy detachment on the way from Jasz-Bereny. Although the enemy was numerically superior to our troops, he was at once attacked, dispersed and deprived of 17 guns. This is the beginning of operations which will end with the extermination of the rebels (!!).

Ofen, April 5, 1849
Count Lad. Wrbna,
Lieutenant-Field Marshal and Commander of the 2nd Army Corps”

Page me9.265
A commentary on this bulletin is provided by the Ost-Deutsche Post in a report from Pest, also dated April 5, where we read:

“Yesterday an encounter took place. The air was pregnant with rumours. Commotion grew when about 7 p.m. the pontoons were brought back, followed by ammunition carts, empty gun-carriages and individual small detachments of soldiers. At the same time an order went out to the inhabitants of the houses on the fortified bank of the Danube next to the suspension bridge to keep themselves in readiness for the evacuation of their quarters. Today waggons full of wounded came in and the rumour spread that the Ban had suffered a reverse and the insurgents were closing in on the city from Szegléd. The soldiers coming in were from his corps.”†b

Page me9.265
This looks more like a defeat than a victory, and it is well known that the Ost-Deutsche Post is by no means on the side of the Magyars.
Page me9.265
This then is, in Herr Wrbna's words, “the beginning of operations which will end with the extermination of the rebels”. We therefore have every prospect to learn of more serious fighting shortly. By the way, even the Kölnische Zeitung no longer believes Herr Wrbna's tale of the “extermination of the rebels”.

Page Break me9.266
Page me9.266
It appears that the gentlemen of the Pest War Council are offended that their incompetence is to be alleviated by bringing in allegedly more capable officers from Italy. Á tout prix they want to “exterminate the rebels” before the victors of Novara arrive.†218 Nous verrons.

Written by Engels about April 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 271, April 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.267

[A MAGYAR VICTORY]

Page me9.267

Cologne, April 12. We are publishing a second edition today, not to inform our readers of yesterday's basically quite unimportant debates at Frankfurt but to report something much more important, namely that the Magyars have gained a significant victory over the imperial army, and that the imperial army, beaten all along the line, has withdrawn to below the walls of Pest. (See “Hungary”.†a)†219

Written by Engels on April 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 271 (second edition), April 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.268

[A MAGYAR VICTORY]

Page me9.268

After a prolonged period of depression the Kölnische Zeitung suddenly raises its shrewd head and speaks:

“After a long interval the Austrians have recommenced operations and the blow now about to fall will, in all probability, be decisive.”†a

Page me9.268

Thus the Kölnische Zeitung gratefully refers to the 40,000 Russians and 50,000 Austrians who were recently marshalled against Hungary and who were especially provided in order to extricate the Kölnische Zeitung from the complicated situation in which it had landed itself as a result of its bellicose military operations in Hungary.

Page me9.268

The Kölnische Zeitung proposes but Dembinski disposes.

Page me9.268

A few hours after our worthy paper has ascribed such “decisive”, miraculous powers to the Austrian attack, in strange disregard of the failure of its threefold victorious march to Debreczin, the report has been received in Cologne that “Dembinski has beaten the Austrians all along the line and driven them back to the walls of Pest”.

Page me9.268

“Truly, that's how it is. It really is so. I have had it in writing.”

Page me9.268

Windischgrätz himself does not deny it. Bulletin No. 34 has arrived.†b In it Windischgrätz whines about the superiority of the enemy, especially in light cavalry, which is decisive on the Hungarian plains, and also about the "numerous cannon" at the disposal of the Magyars and declares that he wants to wait for reinforcements from Pest. The Bulletin reads:

Page Break me9.269

"Vienna, April 9. Communications from His Highness Field Marshal Prince Windischgrätz, from Pest on the evening of the 7th, give the outcome of the reconnaissance-in-force — mentioned previously — undertaken against enemy troops on the 4th and 5th of this month and led by the Field Marshal in person. For these enemy troops commanded by Görgey and Klapka, allegedly 50,000 men with a considerable number of cannon and extremely strong in cavalry, had advanced from Miskolcz to Mezö-Kövesd towards Gyöngyös, while their advance guard under Dembinski moved forward almost to Hatvan.

Page me9.269

"It was this which was attacked on the 2nd of this month by Lieutenant-Field Marshal Count Schlick and driven back to Hort with considerable losses in cannon and in prisoners. Another body of insurgents on the right bank of the River Theiss between Szolnok and Jasz Apáti was advancing towards Baron Jellachich, the Master of Ordnance.

Page me9.269

"The 3rd corps under Lieutenant-Field Marshal Count Schlick was drawn up behind the Zagyva while the first corps was deployed near Tapio-Bicske. This being the situation, the Field Marshal wanted to estimate the disposition and strength of the enemy for himself and therefore came to Gödöllö on the 4th, where a part of the 2nd Army Corps had likewise been sent, leaving its left wing in position in Balassa-Gyarmat and Vadkert.

Page me9.269

"The reconnaissance undertaken revealed the whole strength of the enemy who, anticipating an attack, directed his main forces first against the third and then against the first army corps.

Page me9.269

"There must have been approximately four enemy corps which had now joined forces near Gyöngyös and Szolnok and attempted to attack our centre around Tot-Almas.

Page me9.269

"An advance by the third corps, in the enemy's right flank, a splendid encounter near Tapio-Bicske which, as already stated, was fought by Master of Ordnance Baron Jellachich, brought home to the Field Marshal the superiority of the enemy, especially in light cavalry, in a quite open terrain. In order to make contact with his reserves which were coming up from all sides, he issued orders to the first and third corps as well as to the second corps, hitherto held in reserve between Waitzen and Pest, to join forces thus establishing a long concentrated position in front of Pest so that the city would remain encircled by a great arc extending from Palotta and Keresztúr to Soroksar.

Page me9.269
“In the course of this manoeuvre which the enemy followed with great speed and launched his attack especially against the first army corps drawn up near Isaczeg while supposing that he was engaging the third army corps deployed near Gödöllö,†a — battle was joined about midday on the 6th during which the Fiedler Brigade, reinforced by a detachment from the Lobkowitz division, forced the enemy to retreat, which he afterwards sought to cover by a large-scale attack by 12 squadrons of cavalry. But this was thwarted by a flank attack made by two squadrons of Kress' light cavalry and one squadron of Max Auersperg's cuirassiers, as a result six more cannon were captured from the enemy who left many dead on the battlefield, for the well-directed fire of our guns wreaked havoc in his ranks. Master of Ordnance Baron Jellachich, too, made a spirited attack on the enemy and then took up the positions assigned to him.
Page me9.269
“His Highness the Field Marshal is determined there to await reinforcements which at this moment are advancing against Hungary from all sides and since his army is completely concentrated this enables him to operate in all directions with such forces as circumstances may require.”

Page Break me9.270
Page me9.270
We must, alas, reserve our comments on this edifying and, as we hope, final Bulletin of the imperial army until tomorrow owing to lack of space.
Page me9.270
We can merely add today that according to reports in the Breslauer Zeitung, the Magyar army commanded by Dembinski has partly cut off the corps commanded by Jellachich from the main army and that the same is said to have happened to a part of the corps commanded by Schlick. We shall know by tomorrow night to what extent these reports are correct. But this much is certain: since the beginning of the campaign the imperial forces have not suffered two such reverses as those inflicted by Bem in Transylvania and Dembinski near Gödöllö. May it do them good!

Written by Engels on April 13, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 271 (second edition), April 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.271

AN AUSTRIAN DEFEAT

Page me9.271
We are returning to the two Army Bulletins issued by Windischgrätz.

Page me9.271
The 33rd Bulletin†a begins:

"His Highness, Field Marshal Prince zu Windischgrätz had learned that important rebel forces are concentrating between Gyöngyös and Hatvan and has therefore ordered Lieutenant-Field Marshal Count Schlick to undertake a reconnaissance in that area."

Page me9.271
"Had learned"! Windischgrätz undoubtedly "learned" this in a most poignant fashion in the battles which forced his troops to retreat from Kaschau to Waitzen and from Felegyhaza to Pilis, a distance of from 20 to 30 miles, in face of the victorious Magyars.
Page me9.271
But to come to the point.
Page me9.271
This "reconnaissance" by Schlick on April 2 initiated a series of engagements which lasted for five days and ended on the 6th with the general retreat of the imperial forces to the walls of Pest. Let us try to describe the course of these engagements on the basis of the totally inadequate information available and especially on the basis of the imperial Bulletins themselves in order not to ascribe too great an advantage to the Hungarians.
Page me9.271
According to Bulletin No. 34†b the position of the imperial forces was as follows:
Page me9.271
The Austrian army was extended in a long line from Balassa-Gyarmat via Waitzen and Aszod to Szegléd. The second army corps commanded by Ramberg constituted the left wing, and its most advanced brigades (Götz and Jablonowsky) occupied positions not at Losoncz, as was previously boasted, but six miles further back near Balassa-Gyarmat, Vadkert and Waitzen. Schlick with the third corps were in the centre and had taken up positions in the vicinity of Hatvan and Aszod behind the Zagyva. Jellachich with the first corps made up the right wing which was extended from Szegléd to the vicinity of Jasz-Bereny and was likewise behind the Zagyva, but a little further back.

Page Break me9.272
Page me9.272
This was the position of the imperial forces according to the Bulletins.
Page me9.272
Confronting them were two of the main bodies of Magyars. The northern corps under Dembinski, Görgey and Klapka advanced on Schlick from the direction of Gyöngyös. A second corps, whose commanders are not named, confronted Jellachich and was a few miles from his main forces, from Jasz Apáti to Szolnok. The River Zagyva separated the hostile forces along the whole line.
Page me9.272
Schlick moved out of his position on April 2 and crossed the Zagyva near Hatvan. But, as was stated in Bulletin No. 33,

“the strength of the enemy forces was so much superior to his own that he found it preferable to establish himself in a strong position near Gödöllö until the arrival of more reinforcements. In the course of this withdrawal Capt. von Kalchberg of the Prohaska Infantry was ordered to destroy the bridge behind Hatvan.
Page me9.272
“Captain Kalchberg and his very brave company carried out this order with most exemplary endurance under very fierce cannon and small-arms fire, thus delaying the enemy to such an extent that he was hardly able to molest the retreating corps.”

Page me9.272
So — a lost engagement for the Austrians and a retreat halfway back to Pest. All they could achieve was reduced to the fact that “the retreating corps could hardly be molested”.
Page me9.272
The Zagyva near Hatvan is only a small, narrow stream, hardly seven miles from its source. The demolition of the bridge could, at best, only delay pursuit by artillery, perhaps also by the infantry, but certainly not by hussars. And it is precisely pursuit by light cavalry which is most unpleasant for a retreating army in this undulating terrain merging into plains.
Page me9.272
In Bulletin No. 34 this first Austrian reverse is already transformed into a victory.

“It was this” (the Magyar advance guard commanded by Dembinski) “which was attacked on the 2nd of this month by Lieutenant-Field Marshal Schlick and driven back to Hort with considerable losses (!) in cannon and in prisoners (!!).”

Page me9.272
Windischgrätz credits his readers with such short memories that he believes they will already have forgotten by the 9th of April what he had printed on the 7th.

Page Break me9.273
Page me9.273
If this passage means anything at all, it is that “considerable losses in cannon and in prisoners” applies not to the Magyars but to the imperial forces.
Page me9.273
As a result of this reverse, Windischgrätz was compelled to concentrate his forces further. The Csorich division from the left wing (2nd corps) was hurriedly sent for and moved from Waitzen to Gödöllö. Jellachich was ordered to move up and maintain contact with Schlick. Windischgrätz himself went to Gödöllö on the 3rd and to Aszod on the 4th. (This was stated in Bulletin No. 33. According to Bulletin No. 34 Windischgrätz came to Gödöllö only on the 4th. This is how these Bulletins agree!)
Page me9.273
Jellachich moved his corps in a north-westerly direction from Szegléd closer to Gödöllö. It was attacked during the course of this operation near Tapio-Bicske, on the 4th. The Bulletin now declares:

“Major-General Rastic quickly went over to the offensive, attacked the superior advancing enemy forces with the bayonet and threw them back, on this occasion 12 cannon were seized, four of which were harnessed and immediately taken to safety, while the remaining 8 were spiked. We took many more prisoners but we also deplore the loss of brave Major Baron Riedesel and Cavalry Captain Gyurkovics of the Banderial hussars.†220”

Page me9.273

At first, it was 17 cannon that had been captured; then it was 14, finally it was 12, but these were harnessed and taken to safety. Now, at last, it is admitted that although 12 cannon were captured, eight of them had, unfortunately, to be left behind. They were, however, spiked, so it is said. Not much value can be attached to this either. But it is precisely the fact that eight captured cannon had to be left behind, which shows how victorious the action near Tapio-Bicske was. If one is victorious one remains master of the battlefield, and if one is master of the battlefield one is also master of unharnessed cannon on it.

Page me9.273

The “glorious action” near Tapio-Bicske is thus at bottom, once again, a reverse, the second suffered by the imperial forces during their “reconnaissance-in-force”.

Page me9.273

Now however Windischgrätz himself took charge of the army and achieved the following gains:

“On the 5th of this month the Field Marshal launched an attack on the enemy forces stationed near Hatvan in the course of which a division†221 of Civalart's Uhlans and three squadrons of Kress' light cavalry attacked four divisions of enemy hussars with remarkable bravery and gained a brilliant success with the small loss of two dead and ten wounded.

Page me9.273

“Sixty dead hussars, including two officers, were left on the battlefield. In addition the insurgents suffered forty wounded and thirty-two taken prisoner, including one officer.”

Page Break me9.274

Page me9.274

Windischgrätz relates some incidental deeds of heroism performed by a few squadrons of the imperial cavalry on this occasion; but what we are not told is what was the outcome of the whole “attack”. Obviously in this case too an isolated, momentarily favourable episode is singled out from an engagement that was, on the whole, unsuccessful, in order to cover up the adverse results of the whole action.

Page me9.274

The result of this engagement was — the retreat of the imperial forces to the walls of Pest. These engagements, Windischgrätz tells us, brought home to him “the superiority of the enemy, especially in light cavalry, in the quite open terrain” and he was therefore compelled to concentrate, as quickly as possible, all three army corps in the immediate vicinity of Pest.

Page me9.274

Incidentally, this movement of his troops was the result far less of strategical calculations than of dire necessity. Windischgrätz admits that the enemy

"followed him with great speed and launched his attack especially against the first army corps drawn up near Isaczeg while supposing that he was engaging the 3rd army corps deployed near Gödöllö."

Page me9.274

Thus during a hard pressed retreat the only satisfaction Windischgrätz had was that the Magyars routed a different corps from the one they intended.

Page me9.274

In the course of this retreat battle was again joined on the 6th

"during which the Fiedler Brigade, reinforced by a detachment from the Lobkowitz division, forced the enemy to retreat, which he afterwards sought to cover by a large-scale attack by 12 squadrons of cavalry. But this was thwarted by a flank attack made by two squadrons of Kress' light cavalry and one squadron of Max Auersperg's cuirassiers, as a result six more cannon were captured from the enemy who left many dead on the battlefield, for the well-directed fire of our guns wreaked havoc in his ranks".

Page me9.274

Even the Kölnische Zeitung has not written a more colossal piece of nonsense about strategic matters. A brigade, reinforced by a divisional detachment, compels the victorious and overwhelmingly superior Magyars to retreat! In order to cover this retreat the Magyars launch a large-scale attack with twelve squadrons of hussars — against such a small force of infantry! But even better: these twelve Magyar squadrons are put to flight by three squadrons of the imperial cavalry, and, finally, six cannon are captured!! One can see that Windischgrätz, accustomed to victory, was forced once again to single out a few favourable incidents from an engagement which, taken as a whole, ended most unfavourably and so to provide an historical fable much more fantastic than all the Münchausen stories in the world put together.

Page Break me9.275

Page me9.275

Things went no better with the brave Ban Jellachich.

"He, too, made a spirited attack on the enemy and then took up the positions assigned to him."

Page me9.275

These few words provide sufficient proof that Jellachich had to face an arduous engagement and to fight his way through in order to be able to withdraw to Pest. What the losses were we shall soon know.

Page me9.275

Windischgrätz, in this position in front of Pest, is now

“determined to await those reinforcements which at this moment are advancing against the Hungarians from all sides and since his army is fully concentrated, this enables him to operate in all directions with such forces as circumstances may require”.

Page me9.275

Görgey and Dembinski may already have foiled the noble Field Marshal's well-intentioned plan as also his final ludicrous boasting.

Page me9.275

If the two Bulletins are taken together, it emerges that the imperial forces have been driven back all along the line and are confining themselves to the defence of Pest. No doubt we shall soon be hearing about Dembinski's assault of Pest or the measures he is taking in the rear of the imperial forces.

Page me9.275

All non-official dispatches report that the defeats suffered by the imperial forces are far more significant than the Bulletins admit. The sound of uninterrupted gun-fire all along the line has been heard in Pest since the 2nd. The withdrawal in the streets of Pest began from the 3rd and 4th onwards. Munition and pack-waggons, reserve gun-carriages, waggons carrying wounded, individual unarmed men who were not wounded, alternated. Defence measures were taken in the whole town, at various points houses were requisitioned for the military; personnel are held ready to destroy the pontoon bridges at a moment's notice.

Page me9.275

In Pest, Hungarian banknotes rose in value, in Breslau Austrian securities fell, following private letters from Pressburg which spoke of a decisive victory by the Magyars near Gödöllö. We will disregard for the time being the report in the Breslauer Zeitung that Jellachich had been cut off and that Schlick was threatened with the same fate, since the gains made by the Hungarians, already admitted by the imperial forces, are quite sufficient.

Page me9.275

The Kölnische Zeitung threatens that within twelve days 30,000 Italian troops will be arriving in Hungary. We shall examine this tomorrow. In addition, it talks menacingly about the advance of 40,000 Russians on Transylvania and finally about 18 battalions commanded by Hammerstein which are to force their way across the

Page Break me9.276

Zips.†a The Russians are not yet there and Hammerstein has so far only given the order for the mustering of an army corps near Dukla on the Galician-Hungarian frontier. By the time he has finished doing this the Magyars may be far off.

Written by Engels on April 13, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 272, April 14, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.277

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.277

No further definite news has arrived from Pest today. The Vienna Lithographierte Correspondenz reports though that the Austrian army has evacuated Pest completely, has withdrawn to the right bank of the Danube and that the Hungarian generals entered Pest on the evening of the 7th, greeted by a torchlight procession and general jubilation. This report, however, is certainly premature. The battle around Pest which began on the 2nd and which raged right under the walls of Pest on the 5th and 6th, continued on the 7th and, if we may believe one isolated report, still continued on the 8th. It is not hard to grasp that the victory at Pest is not such an unimportant matter as many would like to believe. The imperial forces have two advantages, firstly, their rear is covered by the Danube, the Ofen fortress and by the town itself whose fortified approaches would suffice to hold up the enemy in the event of a retreat while the defeated imperial forces crossed the river. Secondly, their positions are more concentrated than those of the Magyars. They form a semi-circle around Pest and the Magyars, in their turn, form a larger semi-circle around the imperial forces. Added to which is the fact that the clumsy, slow but stubborn and obedient character of the Austrian army makes it pre-eminently suited to a defensive position. It is therefore probable that the imperial forces have continued to fight around Pest for two more days.†222 But that in the end they were cut to pieces and driven across the Danube cannot be doubted in view of the reports coming in from all sides about the unexpected strength and incredible bravery of the Magyar army. The retreat of the imperial baggage trains through Pest and across the Danube was going on continuously for 48 hours. The thunder of gun-fire resounded about the gates of the city.

Page me9.277

At any rate these reports seem to indicate that the Magyars do not want to compel the imperial forces to abandon their position around

Page Break me9.278

Pest by means of strategic manoeuvres but are waging the decisive battle under the walls of Pest itself. In our opinion, and according to reports so far received, success cannot be in doubt.

Page me9.278

It was reported in Vienna that Kossuth is with the Magyar army, that Klapka has been badly wounded; according to other reports he was taken prisoner near Jasz-Bereny etc. If this last report were true we would already have read it in the Bulletins.

Page me9.278

We shall take this opportunity to give some information about Klapka. He is not a Pole as has been asserted here and there, but a Hungarian, a Magyar Slav from Temesvar where his father as mayor was head of the municipal council for many years. While he was still a youth his lust for adventure drew him to military life. He distinguished himself greatly in mathematics and military science in the School of the Bombardier Corps in Vienna and in 1841 was posted to the Hungarian Guard of Nobles. The morale and spirit of this corps were not such as to make a peacetime garrison post on the frontiers of the monarchy — to which he was transferred after six years — seem attractive and he resigned his commission as a first lieutenant. Later we find him in Bucharest offering his services to the Hospodar†a as an organiser of artillery. Even the idea of a journey to India seemed to attract him. But then came March 1848 and by April he was already in Pest, in the closest contact with the Radical Party. He now rose, for he was a most ardent Magyar and after Görgey was the most outstanding talent in the National Army of Insurrection.

Page me9.278

Incidentally, the Magyars seem to have spread out suddenly from all sides. The masses of reserve troops between the Theiss and Maros, which Kossuth trained to become efficient soldiers, have suddenly appeared on the battlefield. The Hungarians are victorious not only in Transylvania, not only around Pest, but also in the Banat and are surging forward with incredible speed. As we wrote yesterday, the Banat as well as the whole of Bacska have been occupied by them. We did not want to report that a Magyar corps under Perczel had fought its way through the besieging Austrians to Peterwardein, because it seemed to us to be too incredible to be true. And yet it seems to be beyond doubt, for the Agramer Zeitung, the organ of the Croat Government, itself prints it. Perczel and Batthyány (ex-commandant of Peterwardein) have broken through the blockading cordon and entered the fortress with fresh troops. The siege appears to have been completely abandoned. Nugent has again turned westwards towards Zombor where the Magyars have occupied the town and its environs. Everything imperial has withdrawn from Peterwardein and its environs to Syrmien and Slavonia.

Page Break me9.279
Page me9.279

As a result of these recent advances by the Magyars, the Serbs in the Banat are completely isolated just as Puchner had been previously isolated in Transylvania. It is clear that this isolation can only have a favourable influence on the negotiations which still continue between the Serbs and the Magyars.
Page me9.279

In Transylvania, finally, Bem's conquests seem to be completely secured. The Austrian soldiers who fled into Wallachia and whose numbers have only now been officially made known, are abandoning any attempt to return to Transylvania. By way of Wallachia they will go to the Banat. Happy journey!
Page me9.279

The following is the official report about this printed in the Wiener Zeitung itself:

“Latest reports from Transylvania say that the royal imperial troops arrived in the vicinity of Hermannstadt on March 13, and were drawn up near Geroldsau in order to link up with the Russians holding the Falmatsch position. On the 15th the royal imperial troops marched towards Kronstadt and the Russians in accordance with the royal imperial quarantine regulations entrenched themselves in the most extreme border area. The Transylvanian headquarters, Lieutenant-Field Marshal von Puchner and several royal imperial generals as well as 1,200 men of the royal imperial infantry who had also withdrawn into Wallachia had set off for Rimnik. The Transylvanian royal imperial army corps arrived in Kronstadt on the 18th with the aim of holding this town which was occupied by the Russians under the command of General Engelhardt. The rebels, under the command of Bem, arrived likewise in the vicinity of Kronstadt. Meanwhile, however, General Lüders had given orders to evacuate Kronstadt. This, together with the fact that the royal imperial troops had no munitions, were short of many other necessities and were exhausted, determined the officer commanding these troops, General von Kalliani, to evacuate Kronstadt and on March 20 to move on to Wallachia together with the Russians. The army corps consisted of 8,140 men of the infantry and artillery, 900 cavalrymen and 42 cannon. Major Baron Hayde, who was in command of 1,200 infantrymen and 240 cavalrymen, hurried towards Törzburg and was expected in Campulung, in Wallachian territory, on March 21. Thus there were now 12,000 men of the royal imperial forces in Wallachia. The main force under General Kalliani is stationed in Campina, Ploesti and Konkurrenz and is to rest for 10 or 12 days. The Government of the country has helped as much as possible with regard to supplies. The former Hungarian Minister of War†a is said to be now in command in Hermannstadt and Bem — to lead the rebels in Kronstadt, from whence it is believed he will seek to march to Bukovina. The number of refugees who have left Transylvania to seek protection in Wallachia is very large. The royal imperial Major von Reichetzer, the Adjutant of the General Command, arrived in Bucharest from Craiova on March 27, in order to organise the march of the royal imperial troops from Campina to the Banat by way of Craiova and Orsova.”†b

Page Break me9.280
Page me9.280

From this it follows: (1) that Bem must have a very considerable army if he was able to defeat over 12,000 Austrians and 10,000-15,000 Russians; (2) that the Russians, too, are at present not keen on returning to the Transylvanian area and thus Transylvania is at last secured and with Transylvania the rear of the Hungarian revolutionary army.
Page me9.280

The 40,000 Russians thus do not seem to be willing to come to the aid of the Kölnische Zeitung.†a But it still has Hammerstein's 15 battalions and Haynau's 30,000 men.
Page me9.280

Eh bien! According to the most recent and direct reports Schlick was still in Lemberg trying to induce its citizens to send him a petition inviting the Russians to come in. At the same time he gave orders for an army corps to be assembled near Dukla, 25 miles from Lemberg. Three or four weeks at least must elapse before this corps can be concentrated there and equipped with munitions, provisions, transport etc. and who knows where the Magyars will be by then.
Page me9.280

As far as Haynau's famous 30,000 men are concerned, who are supposed to arrive on Hungarian soil within 12 days (!), these are even more harmless. Haynau had to abandon the blockade of Venice and advance into Lombardy. We know how the Brescians kept him occupied on March 31 and April 1.†223 We know that he cannot leave his position until he is relieved by Radetzky — and Radetzky is still not able to do this. And when he is finally relieved, he has still to cover between 150 and 170 German miles†b before arriving at Pest. True, part of the journey can be covered by rail, but when it is a matter of transporting 30,000 men along with their artillery, cavalry, baggage train etc., railways do not speed things up very much. The “twelve days” can therefore easily become six weeks and meanwhile the Magyars will have time enough to teach Windischgrätz's army some very serious lessons. Who knows — perhaps the Magyars will meet Herr Haynau halfway!

Written by Engels on April 14, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 273, April 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.281

[PARLIAMENTARY DECISIONS ARE DISREGARDED. — MANTEUFFEL'S SPIES]

Page me9.281

Berlin, April 13. Of course no notice at all is being taken of the motion passed by the Second Chamber that goods up to 5 lbs. should be post-free. The decision has been taken and although it is the custom in constitutional states for the House to decide matters of this kind independently, Herr von der Heydt has different ideas about these things. To date he has not even thought it worth the trouble to express his opinion on the matter in question.

Page me9.281

As is well known, Herr von Meusebach is the most indispensable of all government counsellors. Nobody understands how to make the best and most valuable use of his eyes and ears, as he does, and always to provide his friend Manteuffel with the best and up-to-the minute reports about the frame of mind and intentions etc. of the Berliners. It is quite natural that the author of the “Revelations” should have great skill in matters which in ordinary language are called spying! He makes use of various literary rogues for these noble aims. His most intimate friends and most skilful tools are Gödsche, the well-known columnist of the Kreuz-Zeitung, and Röhrdanz, the writer.†*

Page me9.281

A note has also arrived from Mecklenburg which expresses opposition to the definite acceptance of the imperial crown by the King of Prussia.†224

Written by Marx on April 13, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 273 (second edition), April 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.282

STATEMENT

Page me9.282
Cologne, April 14. Citizens K. Marx, K. Schapper, Fr. Anneke, H. Becker and W. Wolff (as deputy) met today as the District Committee of Rhenish Democratic Associations.
Page me9.282
Citizens Marx, Schapper, Anneke and Wolff issued the following joint statement.
Page me9.282
"We consider that the present organisation of the Democratic Associations includes too many heterogeneous elements for any possibility of successful activity in furtherance of the cause.
Page me9.282
"We are of the opinion, on the other hand, that a closer union of the Workers' Associations is to be preferred since they consist of homogeneous elements, and therefore we hereby from today withdraw from the Rhenish District Committee of Democratic Associations.†225

Fr. Anneke, K. Schapper, K. Marx, H. Becker,
W. Wolff (deputy)"

Written on April 14, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 273 (second edition), April 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.283

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.283

The imperial troops have been driven further and further back; the Magyars have reached the Rakos plain,†226 the field where the Hungarian kings used to be elected, half an hour from Pest, and are offering battle.

Page me9.283

This is the latest news from Pest, of the 8th. The other information received is less certain. For instance, somebody has written to the Breslauer Zeitung that Windischgrätz would not accept battle and had already retreated to Pest with his troops. Those with pro-imperial views believe that the Magyars would not dare attack Pest, on the one hand because of the strong entrenchments thrown up there, on the other so as not to expose their capital to destruction. In the meantime things look grim in Pest. Windischgrätz returned first to Pest, then to Ofen, but without giving any indication of how the battle is going. Of course, this has deeply hurt the "loyal subjects" and greatly cheered the Magyars.

Page me9.283

At the same time Herr Wrbna has had the following proclamation posted up on the 7th of this month:

"The cities of Ofen and Pest are in a state of siege, hence all meetings in squares and streets are prohibited; but as this order has not been observed for some days, I feel compelled to remind the inhabitants herewith that they must stay at home and also avoid unnecessary travel; patrols are authorised to intervene in any gathering with full use of arms. A further consequence of any kind of riotous movement would be the immediate bombardment of the city, for which everything is in readiness."

Page me9.283

Many loyal subjects of His Apostolic Majesty, who no longer feel safe in Pest, have already moved across to Ofen, into the fortress; refugees from Pest have already arrived even in Vienna. The Pest Magyars are jubilant; the Austrians, on the other hand, are threatening. Two loaded twelve-pounders from the Ofen side of the pontoon bridge, and many heavy guns from the Ofen citadel, are aimed at Pest, to give emphasis to Welden's threat.

Page Break me9.284

Page me9.284

The intensity of the Magyar attack is said to exceed all expectations of the Austrians. In particular the countless Magyar hussars have been giving no rest by day or by night to the imperial troops for five days, and the audacity of these hussars is beyond all Austrian calculation.

Page me9.284

The imperial troops, by the way, have mustered everything so as to stand their ground. The garrisons of Waitzen and Vesprim have gone to Pest; reinforcements are approaching by forced marches from Komorn, Vienna etc., but will in any case be too late for the decisive battle.

Page me9.284

On April 11 the news spread at the Vienna Stock Exchange that the Hungarians had been beaten off at Pest. We regard this rumour as a mere speculators' bluff. Not much more trustworthy is another rumour according to which Görgey is said to have relieved Komorn with one Magyar corps, and to have compelled the siege army to march against him and so relinquish the fortress. Nothing is more probable than that Hungarian or Slovak volunteers in the comitats of Neutra, Gran and Nograd are raiding and harassing the Komorn siege corps; but that the main Magyar army should send off Görgey with an important corps while it is waging a decisive battle at Pest, is not credible.

Page me9.284

The matter of Jellachich's victory, announced in the 33rd Bulletin (he thereupon "took up the positions assigned to him", as the comical placard-maker Welden expressed it in the 34th Bulletin), is also given away by the Lloyd, reporting from Pest that the people there had to believe that the Ban was a prisoner, and were much surprised to get further news from him.†a
Page me9.284

Further details are available about the Magyar army. Klapka is not a prisoner, as some papers have maintained, but is in charge of a detachment in the Magyar centre. The left wing of the Hungarian army is led by Damjanich, a Banat Serb, who earlier led an army corps against Nugent and Dahlen in the Baranya comitat and then in the Bacska and at Szegedin. If some martial-law papers say that he has now sold (!) himself to the Magyars, this is a lie as silly as it is contemptible. The earlier Austrian Bulletins are there to prove the contrary.
Page me9.284

The decisive battle was to be fought on the 8th. We know that it was fought, and fought very violently; but as regards the outcome we only have the rumours quoted above.

Page Break me9.285
Page me9.285

If Windischgrätz is driven to the right bank of the Danube, he can immediately withdraw his troops beyond the Raab and relinquish Komorn. He has not a single line of defence as far as the Leitha, and whether he can hold even that will depend entirely on the morale of his beaten army. In any event, with Windischgrätz's defeat Hungary will for the time being be cleared of imperial troops, while a rebuff of the Magyar attack would not take the Austrians further than the Theiss. On the Theiss the old game of trick-track would in the meantime begin again, until royal imperial reinforcements of 50,000-60,000 men arrive.
Page me9.285

It is confirmed in the Banat that the Magyars have conquered the whole of the Bacska and have relieved Peterwardein. The Nugents, pére et fils, have once again made fools of themselves.
Page me9.285

In conclusion we give the following details from a Vienna Lithographierte Correspondenz concerning certain Hungarian generals and the Hungarian army:

Among the Hungarian generals Görgey deserves special mention. He is still very young, but most talented and extremely active, untiring and personally courageous; it is perhaps not saying too much to describe him as the soul of all the military operations, since, as everyone knows, Kossuth, in his career as a lawyer, had little opportunity to distinguish himself in the military sciences. Among the foreigners the Englishman Guyon is outstanding. His daring knows no limit. For instance, recently he stormed a mountain (which can only be reached by a road with seven bends and which was held by an adequate garrison of Austrian troops and guns) at the head of his column, with a loss of 400 men, although it would have been possible to bypass it, but with considerable loss of time.

Page me9.285
The courageous Guyon shrinks from no obstacle and is as cool-headed as he is fearless, one of the most daring partisans of this in its way unique campaign. The Honveds, who initially were poorly clad and fed, are now in much better shape. In the winter it was not uncommon to find some ill-clad Honveds frozen to death by the road. They have learned to bear the hardships of the campaign and fight with the courage of disciplined troops. The lull Windischgrätz granted the Hungarians at the beginning they used in the best possible way, and in particular they proceeded with the training of the Honveds by employing them in small raids so as to accustom them gradually to warfare.
Page me9.285
In the meantime their military training was completed as far as possible. At present the Honveds are significantly advanced in their development and have already distinguished themselves in individual engagements. The main strength of the Hungarian army, of course, is its excellent cavalry which daily arouses more respect in the Austrian cavalry; even the Wallmoden cuirassiers, known for their courage, have often had opportunity to get to know the might of the Hungarian hussars and have succumbed to their impetuous attacks more that once.

Written by Engels about April 15, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 273 (second edition), April 15, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.286

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.286
Still no decisive news from the Rakos plain. On the 8th there appears to have been little fighting; the main battle was expected on the 9th. The most contradictory rumours have been circulating in Vienna. According to one the Hungarians have marched victoriously into Pest; according to another they were beaten and Schlick had encircled 5,000 Honveds†227 and taken them prisoner. What is certain is that neither a Bulletin nor a telegraphic dispatch, nor any other official report has arrived, and that, for the time being, is sufficient proof that as far as the imperial side is concerned matters are not going very well. Moreover, Windischgrätz is said to have sent his son with his resignation to Olmütz. The Supreme Command in Hungary has been offered to both Hess and Welden; both have so far rejected the offer as they have not been given a completely free hand.

Page me9.286

The black-and-yellow†a side in Pest relies on the Hungarians not wishing to subject their own capital to bombardment and flames. Dembinski, moreover, is said to have declared against it, saying that Poland had been vanquished in 1831†228 only because much too great strategic importance had been ascribed there to Warsaw, the capital.
Page me9.286

In the Bacska the Magyars are pressing irresistibly forward. It is confirmed that Perczel and Batthyány have marched into Neusatz. Neusatz lies directly opposite Peterwardein on the other (left) bank of the Danube, and like Peterwardein itself is occupied by the Magyars. The fortifications of Sz. Thomas, so stubbornly defended by the Serbs last year, have been stormed by the Magyars; Zombor and Becse (Base) are also in their hands. They are threatening the left bank of the Theiss; Patriarch Rajachich has had to leave

Page Break me9.287
Becskerek and is going via Pancsova to Semlin. Knicanin has suddenly reappeared on the battlefield to help the Austrians in their predicament.
Page me9.287

Transylvania is safe. The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen reports the following from Czernowitz:

"Czernowitz, April 5. It has been settled, 60,000 Russians are to occupy Galicia and remain there as a garrison. Lieutenant-Field Marshal Baron von Hammerstein is going to Hungary with 25 battalions and a proportionate number of cannon. Today Lieutenant-Field Marshal von Malkowsky is departing to relieve Lieutenant-Field Marshal Puchner who is ill. All Transylvania is barricaded, Bem is commanding an army of 100,000 men, including 10,000 men of the Polish Legion, a legion of Vienna academics†229 and proletarians. The Bukovina is again afraid of an incursion of Hungarians who, according to recent travellers, have a particular sympathy for the Bukovina. Moreover, the departure of the 4th battalion of Baron Sivkovich's regiment has indeed been stopped for the time being, because there appears, after all, to be some inclination to resistance."†a

Page me9.287

For Bem is recruiting very actively among the Transylvanian Wallachians and Saxons. Anyone able to carry arms is put into the Honveds, trained and used against the Austrians. Clearly, Bem is taking heavy vengeance for the Austrian recruiting system which forced Viennese prisoners to fight against Magyars, and Hungarian prisoners to fight against Italians. In Hermannstadt a great banquet was held to celebrate the fraternisation of Wallachians and Magyars.
Page me9.287

As a result of the news from Hungary all the Ministers have been summoned to Olmütz by telegraph.
Page me9.287
Yesterday's Abend-Lloyd†b reports as authentic that Lieutenant-Field Marshal Wohlgemuth has taken over the command of the army corps which is concentrated at Komorn.

Written by Engels about April 16, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 274, April 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.288

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR. — PEASANT WAR IN THE BUKOVINA

Page me9.288
The Magyars have suddenly broken off the fighting at Pest and marched off to Waitzen, leaving their outposts behind. Waitzen is situated north of Pest on the Danube just at the corner where it leaves the eastern direction and turns south. Waitzen, the key to the road to Komorn, has been taken by the Hungarians. Jellachich is on the right bank of the Danube at Szent Endré!
Page me9.288
This news was known in Vienna on the 13th at midday and had a “very depressing effect”. As early as the 14th Welden was supposed to go to the army fighting in Hungary.
Page me9.288
Further details on this new turn in the fighting and this strategically most important success of the Hungarians are still lacking. Hence we cannot know whether the Hungarian army is really marching to Komorn to relieve it or whether it simply wants to entice the imperial troops from their fortified positions at Pest and engage them in battle in the open field without exposing Pest to the danger of bombardment.
Page me9.288
The rest of the news is contradictory to the highest degree. Nothing at all is known either about the position of the Magyar army in the recent battles at Pest, or about the details of the battle itself. Windischgrätz is not allowing anybody to leave the Pest lines. We know only that nothing happened on the 8th (Easter Sunday) except some outpost skirmishes. Nor were any guns fired on the 9th. This was the day when the Magyar main force appears to have started for Waitzen. Two Austrian brigades marched off in the same direction.
Page me9.288

South of Pest, at Raczkeve, the Magyars under Vetter are said to have attempted to throw a bridge over the Danube, but to have been prevented from doing so.

Page Break me9.289
Page me9.289

Otherwise the most fantastic and contradictory rumours are circulating. The fear of the Black-and-Yellows makes Bem arrive from Transylvania with 20,000 men and operate against Kalocsa on the Danube (on the border of the Bacska), so as to go from there to the right bank and to advance in the rear of the Austrians. In this area, by the way, Perczel is taking one important position after another from the Serbs. Peterwardein, recently besieged, is now the main support point of his operations.

Page me9.289

Another rumour born of the Austrians' fear makes Görgey stand already at Bruck on the Leitha, a few hours' march from Vienna!

Page me9.289

Incidentally, the Serb Voivodina has at last been promised by the Government that it shall join the ranks of the independent crown lands. It may be doubted whether this will tend to make the mood of the Serbs — now moving daily further towards unity with the Magyars — more favourable towards the Government. The Serbs no longer trust a Government which has so often tried to trick them. The correspondent of the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen writes from the Drava:

"Perhaps I shall soon write to you while in flight!"†a

Page me9.289

From Transylvania not a word. Just as little news from Galicia concerning the alleged entry of the Russians. On the other hand the long lost nation of the Huzuls†230 has reappeared in the Bukovina, with its peasant king, Kobylica, at its head. Here, in this most remote corner of the united monarchy, the struggle is developing between peasants and nobility which the implementation of the imposed redemption laws†231 is bound to produce everywhere in Austria. Kobylica is directly allied with the Magyars. Just listen to the Bucovina (which appears in Czernowitz) of April 4 on this subject†b:

"The notorious Kobylica with his dangerous agent Birla Mironiuk has reappeared in the mountains among the (Ruthenian†232) Huzuls and is deluding the villages with dangerous misrepresentations; he is egging them on to trespass on the baronial woods and pastures and maintain a rebellious attitude: he would soon come with a Hungarian army to help them. The excitement this has induced has taken on a dubious character particularly in the neighbourhood of Berhometh, hence the District Office has seen fit to dispatch a complete company to this area and to take other energetic measures. In accordance with the instructions of the local District Office the company has been stationed in and around Berhometh. District Commissioner Wex is in charge of the official action which is to comprise, first, prevention of trespass and damage to baronial woods and fenced pastures in the area, questioning and punishing the guilty severely, the instruction and surveillance of the villages, the harshest and most relentless treatment of all disturbers of the peace and agitators, keeping an eye and a tight rein on rural people and capturing Kobylica and his agent Birla Mironiuk. — These strong measures should at last bring about the definitive pacification of the Ruthenian mountain villages."

Page Break me9.290

Page me9.290

Good luck to the Austrian peasant war!

Written by Engels about April 17, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 275, April 18, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.291

ELKEMANN

Page me9.291

Cologne, April 18. Yesterday in Berlin the Second Chamber voted on the question whether the entire Bill to suppress the right of association, brought in by Herr Manteuffel, should be rejected lock, stock and barrel or not. Rejection of the Bill failed by 137 votes to 141. Thus the Left was in a minority of only four votes. Among these four votes, all of which were of the Left Centre, was Pastor Elkemann from Worringen, deputy of the rural constituency of Cologne and Mülheim. One may ask his intermediate and primary electors whether the Pastor, who acted the extreme liberal at the time, was elected by them to help get rid of the few still remaining civil liberties?

Written by Engels on April 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 276, April 19, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.292

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.292

The Hungarians' plan of operations after Windischgrätz was pushed back by them to the Danube is now fairly clear. While Dembinski kept the Austrian centre under Schlick “fully occupied” (Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†a), Görgey with greatly increased strength turned on the imperial army's left wing at Waitzen, commanded by Windischgrätz himself, beat him back and took Waitzen. Almost every report maintains complete silence about what has become of Jellachich and the Austrian right wing. As we wrote already yesterday, one report makes him stationed at Szent Endré, between Ofen and Waitzen on the right bank of the Danube.†b This is today confirmed directly from Pest. He can only have marched there to cover the threatened left wing by abandoning his earlier position on the right wing. Besides the great strength of the Hungarians at Waitzen, the fact that the Croats can no longer be brought into the firing line by the “chivalrous” Ban and show a daily growing respect for the Hungarian hussars, may perhaps explain this otherwise quite inexplicable movement. At the same time, they have been plundering and raping in Pest and its neighbourhood with such gusto that the Croat Don Quixote felt compelled to have a number of those keenest on plundering shot summarily. Also we are still hearing of desertions among the Croats. Evidently, this most charming of all the corps gathered at Pest can therefore only be used as a reserve. This is also confirmed in a Vienna report of the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, according to which 5,000 to 6,000 Croats are said to have been sent to Pest to serve as a reserve.

Page Break me9.293
Page me9.293

On the other hand, the Magyars have by no means kept their left wing, facing the Austrian right wing, inactive. It is beyond doubt that they have already crossed the Danube at least at one point below Pest, and that without meeting with any significant resistance, since all the imperial troops of this area have marched to Pest. Vetter, who is here in command (he was previously a major in the 37th imperial infantry regiment), is operating against Pentele and Földvar, and is according to consistent rumours already on the march to Stuhlweissenburg. In the Bacska Batthyány's and Perczel's main force seems also to be pressing ahead against the Danube and Drava, so as to cut off Nugent and the Serbs from direct contact with the Austrian main army, or to force Nugent to make a hurried retreat to Esseg or Agram.
Page me9.293

Thus, Windischgrätz is threatened on all sides and outflanked both on the left and the right. Tonight we may receive definite information that Görgey is at Gran and Vetter at Stuhlweissenburg. God knows what will become of the imperial troops when both their lines of retreat are thus cut off.
Page me9.293

Now that the Magyars have had time to train, the imperial side speaks with one voice of how they fight. The Ost-Deutsche Post says:

“The fanaticism of our opponents and the money which is apparently at their disposal, attract to them masses where we only have ranks. Like an impetuous mountain torrent they break through the strong wall facing them.”†a

Page me9.293

And the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung:

“The hussars fight with a bravery which makes any advance of the imperial army impossible without considerable reinforcements. These Magyars are no Piedmontese (!), even Radetzky's entire army would find it hard going here.”†b

Page me9.293

The Black-and-Yellows in Pest, on the other hand, are completely demoralised. They flee from Pest in droves, some to Ofen, others in the direction of Gran or even so far as Raab.

Page me9.293

Benedek has arrived in Vienna. He is to command the advance guard of Hammerstein's corps which, according to the Austrian martial-law boasts, is already in Kaschau! Haynau's corps will not go to Hungary. We said at once that it could not be spared in Italy.†c

Page me9.293

Herr Welden, remembered for his incendiarism, the man who wanted to take Komorn by storm like an Italian village, is now to help the imperial troops in their predicament. He has departed for the theatre of war.

Page Break me9.294

Page me9.294

In the Banat and in the Bacska things are likewise daily getting worse for the imperial side. The Südslavische Zeitung bewails the fall of Szent Thomas, christened Srbobran (Serb Bulwark)†a by the Serbs as the scene of their heroic deeds of last year. The Bacska has been abandoned altogether by the imperial troops; Nugent is on the defensive beyond the Danube and will be glad if he can keep Syrmien. The mood of the Serbs is becoming more and more “sinister”; if they formerly hated the Magyars, now this has given place to hatred of the Germans. The bad turn the war has taken is directly ascribed to a deliberate, planned abandonment of the Serbs by the Austrian officers. Knicanin is again expected with Serb auxiliaries; according to others the well-known Vucic is to command them. Moreover, the Austrian Government has at last recalled Rukavina and pensioned him off, and thus initiated a series of concessions to the Serbs.

Page me9.294

Not a word from Transylvania. Yesterday the Kölnische Zeitung had the Russians and Puchner march in again. The news came from the Bukurester Zeitung, it passed from there into the Wiener Zeitung and finally into the Kölnische. But it merely gave the positions which Puchner and the Russians occupied after the capture of Hermannstadt by Bem, before they fled through the Roterturm Pass. The Kölnische Zeitung could have known that as well as we; but in its pleasure at seeing the imperial troops at last advance again at any point, it fell into the trap and promptly reprinted this ancient news, deliberately put into the Wiener Zeitung to confuse the reader. That is how history is made.

Written by Engels on April 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 276, April 19, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.295

SITTING OF THE SECOND CHAMBER
IN BERLIN. APRIL 13

Page me9.295

Cologne, April 19. For a change, let us return once more to our dear Second Chamber in Berlin. It has checked the elections, issued Addresses, produced standing orders, and with quite exceptional interest it has discussed a question which, as is well known, belongs to the feature section of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, i.e. the question of the German Emperor.†233 All this passed quite unnoticed in view of the cannonades at Novara and Pest, and even the "naval battle" at Eckernförde and the storming of the Düppel fortifications†234 made a greater impression than all the speeches from the Right and the Left in the Prussian people's representative body.

Page me9.295

Now, however, when the honourable Chamber is busy with the three gagging laws†235 — the law on posters, the law on associations and the law on the press — when it has already finished dealing with one of them, the law on posters, now the matter more closely concerns us, now it will be more interesting to see how our deputies do their utmost to make up deficiencies in the imposed Constitution.

Page me9.295

Let us look at the verbatim report of the 26th sitting on April 13.†a

Page me9.295

First of all Deputy Lisiecki put a question to the Ministry about the use of the Polish army reserve in the war against Denmark.

Page me9.295

According to § 61 of the law on the army reserve,†236 it can only be mobilised in the event of unexpected hostile attacks on the country. Its entire organisation is so constituted that in general it is only to be employed when the standing army and reserves are insufficient. But now the army reserve is being mobilised in the war against little

Page Break me9.296

Denmark, which can be dealt with by the troops of the line of a single army corps!

Page me9.296

That is not all. Although the allegedly German part of Posen could be tricked into joining the German Confederation only through breach of faith and brutal violence, although, according to all the treaties, the part of Posen lying on the other side of the famous demarcation line has nothing to do with the German Confederation,†237 part of the army reserve sent to Schleswig from Posen has been taken from both sides of the demarcation line.

Page me9.296
These army reserve men of purely Polish nationality, half of whom do not even belong to the German Confederation, are being sent to Schleswig to let themselves be killed there for the greater glory of Germany as German imperial troops with the German black-red-and-gold†a imperial cockade on their helmets!
Page me9.296
The Croats decided the outcome of the "German war" in Lombardy; the Czechs, Ruthenians†238 and, again, the Croats decided the outcome of the "German" struggle against Vienna; the Poles will decide the outcome of the "German" war in Schleswig. It is with such soldiers that nowadays the "victories of German arms" are being won!
Page me9.296
And that is how the King keeps the promise he gave the Poles on April 11 through his plenipotentiary commissioner†b:

"Accordingly, no recruits born in the Grand Duchy of Posen are to be incorporated in a Silesian or other German regiment and, conversely, no German recruits are to be incorporated in a Polish regiment. The training and commanding of troops are to be in their own language ... all arms of the Polish military service are likewise to form a completely independent entity" etc.

Page me9.296
Lisiecki enumerated these various points in a calm, but resolute, tone. In conclusion he drew attention to the special malice shown by recruiting three battalions of the army reserve precisely in the one province which last year had suffered heavily from the civil war imposed on it by Prussia.
Page me9.296
Herr Strotha, Minister of War, rose to speak.
Page me9.296
The Minister delivered a lecture to the Assembly at some length to the effect that

"the entire Prussian army organisation is based on a combination of troops of the line and the army reserve, and in war this combination in the composition of corps and divisions reaches as far as the composition of brigades", that the dispatch of "mere troops of the line without the army reserve to a distant theatre of war essentially hinders the organic formation of several troop units and gives rise to many kinds of serious drawbacks when mobilising the remaining units" etc.

Page Break me9.297
Page me9.297
All this was very suitable for opening the eyes of the philistines and civil officials in the Chamber to the organisation of "My glorious army".†239
Page me9.297
It may be so. It is possible that "the troops of the line of My glorious army" cannot manage without "the army reserve of My glorious army". It may be that the dangerous potato war†240 with Denmark compels the Government to set in motion all the chicanery of the glorious Prussian military organisation. But why is it that precisely the Poles have been made the victims of this fate, which derives from the glorious Prussian military organisation?

Page me9.297
Because — well, “because it is justified by the immediate circumstances!”
Page me9.297
That is all we are told. That is how a Prussian Minister of War answers questions.
Page me9.297
There still remains the reply to the legal question: should not German troops be used in German imperial wars? On this Herr Strotha stated:

1) “The Grand Duchy of Posen, with the exception of a small part ... belongs to Germany.”

Page me9.297
That is the Prussian translation of last year's phrases to the effect that Posen should become Polish, “with the exception of a small part” of the frontier, which must become German. Things have now gone far enough for the phrases to be dispensed with and the perpetrated swindles to be admitted in blunt words.

2) “The delimitation of military areas in the entire Grand Duchy of Posen has so far undergone no change. Accordingly (!), therefore (!), the three mobilised battalions consist to the extent of about half of inhabitants from one side of the demarcation line and one half of inhabitants from the other side of the demarcation line.”

Page me9.297
In plain language that means: the whole farce with the demarcation line merely served to incorporate two-thirds of Posen into Germany directly, and the remaining one-third indirectly. And in order that the Poles finally abandon the illusion that this demarcation line has any practical meaning, we have at this very time recruited our imperial troops from those districts through which the demarcation line passes.

3) “In utilising troops of the line drawn from the Grand Duchy of Posen, no other consideration has ever been taken into account than that demanded by state reasons.”

Page me9.297
And if the solemn pledges of March and April 1848 in regard to the troops of the line have been trampled under foot, then why should not the same happen in regard to the army reserve? Cannot a

Page Break me9.298
Polish army reserve man become as good a “soldier of the imperial troops” as a Polish regular soldier?
Page me9.298
We have taken into consideration only “state reasons”!

Page me9.298

And what are these “state reasons”?

Page me9.298

They are quite obvious. Men capable of bearing arms and trained in the use of arms who live in areas not yet sufficiently merged in the “Prussian fatherland” are to be removed from their homeland. Objectionable primary electors who voted in an un-Prussian way are to be punished. The authorities wish to inculcate in these primary electors a better notion of the duties of a citizen by making them undergo a supplementary course of instruction in the school of “My glorious army”. By this Prussian treatment many a hated elector will be provoked to insubordination and then, with the greatest nonchalance, he can under martial law be awarded 15 years' confinement in irons and perhaps even gunpowder and lead.

Page me9.298

It is for this that the army reserve has been mobilised in Posen and also in part of the Rhine Province and Westphalia. Herr Strotha does not mention the Rhine Province, nevertheless the Clever battalion has already been sent to Schleswig. Or does Herr Strotha want to introduce a demarcation line in the Rhine Province as well and declare: The Rhine Province, “with the exception of a small part”, belongs to Westphalia?

Page me9.298

But what has not yet happened can happen. Although up to now the greater part of the Rhine Province has been spared from mobilisation, we are nevertheless aware that, in spite of all official denials, there exists a firm intention to mobilise also the army reserve of the Eighth Corps, i.e. of the Rhine Province. Preparations for this have already been made, and the order will not be long in coming.

Page me9.298

Of course, this also is dictated by “state reasons” and is justified by the “immediate circumstances”.

Page me9.298

And if the Rhenish deputies put down a parliamentary question, Herr Strotha will reply to them just as he now replies to Herr Lisiecki: the matter “is in fact already settled” since “the Rhenish division is already concentrated at Flensburg”!

Page me9.298

After Herr Strotha had concluded his speech, Herr Lisiecki wanted to make a factual correction. But the standing orders forbid factual corrections to replies by Ministers. And the standing orders are quite right. What un-Prussian insolence to imagine that a ministerial reply could be capable of undergoing factual correction!

Written by Engels on April 19, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 277, April 20, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.299

THE SLOVAKS. —
THE SO-CALLED DEMBI&Na;SKI BULLETIN

Page me9.299

Owing to the non-arrival of the Berlin train we are without any recent news from the theatre of war. The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, which now carries all the news from Vienna and Hungary one day late, has nothing new either, of course. The report of its “reliable” Vienna correspondent on the latest military events contains nothing but nonsense and most glaringly contradicts geography. For example, he says that the insurgents want to erect a bridge “at Szent Endré”,†a though two arms of the Danube and an island four miles†b long and a half mile wide lie between Szent Endré and the Magyars etc.

Page me9.299

The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen yesterday carried a long article “from Slovakia”,†c which in the last analysis amounts to a doleful lamentation about the Austrian Government doing nothing to foster pan-Slavist separatist aspirations against Hungary among the Slovaks. Every line indicates how much they deplore that it is quite impossible to arouse pan-Slavist Magyar hatred in the Slovaks, that the Slovak peasants give their allegiance above all to the party which definitely assures them of liberation from their feudal burdens, that the Magyar nobility is naturally pro-Magyar and the German middle class of the towns is also favourably inclined towards the Magyars. The notorious boasting at the Olmütz Court about the “Slovak trusted representatives”†241 is disowned even here:

“The common people naturally know little or nothing of the election of 'Slovak trusted representatives'; educated Slovaks shrug their shoulders at a blunder that could hardly have been worse. Kollár, the only poet among them, is a name everywhere popular and respected; the rest are lawyers whom not a soul knows in Slovakia, who have never wielded a pen in favour of the Slovaks, never taken a step, never spoken a word which could have given them a claim to the honourable title of 'trusted representatives' of a nation, even if in other respects their honourable private character is in no way disputed. In Slovakia they are, Kollár excepted, 'mistrusted representatives'. To put a Hungarian lawyer in charge of Slovak affairs is an unfortunate idea. Perhaps this was why the Slovenski pozornik (Slovak Observer), mentioning the trusted representatives in its first issue, did not even bother to give their names, Kollár again excepted, to whom due respect is paid.”

Page Break me9.300

Page me9.300

Since last night, an alleged “27th Battle Report of General Dembinski to Kossuth”, dated Gödöllö, April 7,†a is being circulated here in Cologne. This report is printed in Frankfurt, whence false news on Austria has already come more than once. But even if it is not genuine, it is a good imitation made from the available material. Dates and military positions are everywhere sufficiently in accord with those of the Austrian Bulletins; the Bulletin only contains something new on the fighting which took place before April 2. The main content is as follows:

Page me9.300

Dembinski, acting here as commander of the centre and General-in-Chief (Vetter has the right wing, Görgey the left), has first totally defeated an enemy corps at Erlau and then beaten the rearguard again at Gyöngyös. In this second battle the Hungarians are said to have captured 16 cannon and made 1,200 prisoners, which, however, is somewhat exaggerated.
Page me9.300

On the 5th the Austrians were driven from Hatvan to Gödöllö, where a major battle took place on the 6th. Here the Hungarians were completely victorious, took 26 cannon, 7 flags, 38 ammunition carts and 3,200 prisoners, and drove the Austrians back to the walls of Pest. The imperial troops are said to have lost 6,000 dead and wounded, the Hungarians 2,000.
Page me9.300

As can be seen, the Bulletin contains nothing new except that it gives figures; these, even if it were genuine, are probably not too correct. In the first flush of victory enemy losses always tend to be exaggerated.
Page me9.300

So it is really immaterial whether the Bulletin is genuine or simply a fake, since it only gives known results.
Page me9.300

What makes its authenticity very suspect, however, is the date. A Bulletin from Gödöllö dated the 7th could not have been received again on the 10th printed in Debreczin. Had it been printed by the army and distributed in Pest or Ofen, we would have heard the news already in other ways. Moreover, the leaflet gives its source only in the words “translated from the Hungarian”. It neither says where the original was printed nor whence it comes. Even if the content can be accepted as authentic, its form is certainly very suspect. But, as we have said, it is immaterial whether this leaflet is authentic or fabricated, since it reports nothing new at all.

Page Break me9.301

Written by Engels about April 19, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 277, April 20, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.302

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.302

According to the letters and papers which have arrived from Eastern Germany only this evening (Thursday), the Hungarians are masters of the left bank of the Danube to the point at which the Gran flows into it from the north, five miles below Komorn. On the 12th Pest was still besieged by a Hungarian corps which could be observed quite clearly from the roofs with the naked eye, and which is supposed to have occupied the Pest railway station. To avoid exposing it to bombardment, and because from here it would be impossible to effect a crossing of the Danube under the guns of Ofen, this corps has not attacked the city itself.

Page me9.302

The most contradictory rumours are current about the battle at Waitzen, but they all agree that the left wing of the Austrians has suffered a complete defeat there. One report asserts that Götz is not dead but severely wounded and in the hands of the Hungarians. After their defeat, part of the Austrian corps which linked up at Waitzen retreated across the Danube, while another part, two brigades strong, drew back behind the Gran. Here, five brigades of reinforcements, which have arrived from Austria etc., are said to have been stationed for a considerable time (!), the force is estimated at 25,000 men (!!) by the Wanderer. These five brigades are probably not more than a few regiments who marched away from the former siege corps of Komorn, for had five brigades been stationed on the Gran, four miles from Waitzen, they would hardly have remained there while the Hungarian guns thundered at Waitzen!

Page me9.302

The Wanderer is nothing but a martial-law paper printing reassuring news. It had to report that Waitzen had been captured by the Magyars without a battle, and that only one volunteer corps was stationed there, whereas all the other papers speak of a violent battle and it is certain that Götz, Jablonowsky and Csorich were there, not counting the troops which Windischgrätz took with him when he personally went there. The Wanderer further believes that there is no threat at all to Pest (!!), otherwise the imperial forces would surely have removed their wounded and constructed a second pontoon bridge. But the imperial generals have never shown much concern for their wounded, and all they do care for, the baggage, munitions and above all the money, has long been dispatched to Ofen. They have even stolen the gold and silver reserve of the Hungarian National Bank, 1,700,000 guldens C.M.,†242 which were kept as backing for the Hungarian 1- and 2-florin notes, and incorporated them in the state treasury in Ofen. As concerns the second bridge, the Austrians obviously have much greater need of their pontoon trains on the long battle-front from Pest to Waitzen and Gran than in Pest, which no longer forms their centre but their left flank.

Page Break me9.303

Page me9.303

This Wanderer has now also suddenly to estimate the imperial army at 100,000, namely 50,000 men at Pest, plus the above non-existent 25,000 at Gran, plus the 10,000 reinforcements from Galicia under Vogl, plus Nugent's force, a total of 100,000 men; that is supposed to be reassuring. We are quite willing to believe that Windischgrätz had 50,000 men before the recent battles, and now still has 40,000. But the 25,000 men at Gran amount to 10,000 at most, scattered along both sides of the Danube from Raab and Gran to Neuhäusel, the remainder of the siege corps at Komorn, reinforced by newly arrived troops. Vogl is still in Galicia, and Nugent is hard-pressed in Syrmien. The imperial forces were indeed over 200,000 strong at the beginning of the war, but the Hungarians have made a clean sweep and scattered the imperial troops to all points of the compass. Puchner is in Wallachia, Knicanin back in Serbia, the Banat volunteers have gone home, large numbers of Croats have been disbanded, and of the whole army at most 120,000 effective troops are scattered over the wide Hungarian territory; of these, perhaps 50,000-55,000 face the main Magyar army.

Page me9.303

The rumour persists that a Magyar corps has crossed the Danube south of Pest in the Bacska area and is marching on Stuhlweissenburg, but there is as yet no positive information on this corps' position.

Page me9.303

Komorn is already virtually relieved. The siege area has been considerably reduced by the advance of the Magyars. As a substantial part of Windischgrätz's troops had earlier been moved to Pest, the remainder obviously had to march to Gran, to face the Magyars approaching from that direction. Even prior to this, the garrison is said to have made a sortie against the weak besieging troops, scattered them and captured all the siege artillery. Now a report in the Ost-Deutsche Post says, moreover, that Komorn has sufficient provisions for two years, and that its garrison is united and resolved to defend it to the utmost.

Page Break me9.304

Page me9.304

In the small area of Upper Hungary still occupied by the imperial forces, the end of their rule is now approaching. According to the Österreichischer Correspondent, a Magyar column reputed to be composed of 800 infantrymen, 200 cavalrymen and five guns, under the command of a Polish officer, Bernicki, marched into Leutschau on April 4, into Neudorf on the 5th, and into Rosenau on the 6th. One of Welden's battalions garrisoning the neighbouring area was called to Eperies, which was threatened by this movement. Nevertheless, the Magyar corps captured Eperies and drove the royal imperial troops, together with the notorious Slovak Landsturm, into the Carpathians, to the Galician border.

Page me9.304

The name of Bem, who at one time was said to be at Debreczin and at another time already at Kalocsa on the Danube, currently looms like a spectre over the Banat. It is also reported from Alt-Orsova, on the 2nd of the month, that Bem is preparing an expedition of 10,000 against the Banat. Rukavina is, incidentally, not pensioned off there but merely relieved of the civil administration, which has been transferred to the Patriarch.†a Rukavina retains command of the Banat Military Border area,†243 and Major-General Mayerhofer, serving under him, will be in command on the Syrmien border.

Page me9.304

By the way, the Magyars have not rested content with the seizure of the Bacska. They have crossed the Theiss and occupied the districts of Kikinda and Neu-Becse.
Page me9.304

In their hour of greatest need the imperial authorities have no other cure but to take radical measures. The official report of Windischgrätz's dismissal and Welden's appointment to supreme command in Hungary has at last arrived. At the same time, Wohlgemuth has set off with Welden (whom Böhm replaces in Vienna) for Hungary, where he is to command a corps of six brigades. Benedek has gone to Galicia to be given a command in Vogl's corps of 10 battalions; the corps is said to be marching via Eperies. Wrbna is to be retired.
Page me9.304

But not even that is the end of this revolution in the army.
Page me9.304

They have realised that without the Russians they cannot cope with the Magyars. Russian assistance has therefore been directly asked for. 30,000 Russians are expected to arrive in Hungary via Cracow.

Page Break me9.305
Page me9.305

In the Banat also the endangered slogan: svoboda a slavjanstvo (freedom and Slavdom) will be kept up with Russian assistance. Already there is talk of the approach of Russian troops and, to hasten matters, delegates were sent to Duhamel in Bucharest from an assembly held in Semlin on the 5th.
Page me9.305

We may hope that the arrival of the Russians will everywhere be too late, and that they will find that the war has already taken so decisive a turn that the most they will be able to do is to look on while the brave Magyars and the Viennese, who may also soon reappear on the field of battle, prepare an ignominious end for

"the Austria of old,
For feats and victories oft extolled".†a

Page me9.305

Today again the latest Vienna and Breslau papers have not arrived.

Written by Engels on April 19, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 277 (second edition), April 20, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.306

[“MAGYAR RODOMONTADE” OF THE KÖLNISCHE ZEITUNG]

Page me9.306

We have been informed that none of the current issues of the Vienna and Breslau newspapers arrived yesterday evening with the last train from Berlin. Hence the assertion of the Kölnische Zeitung that it has nevertheless received these Vienna newspapers is simply “Magyar rodomontade”.

Written by Engels on April 20, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 278, April 21, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.307

THE NEW CROATIAN-SLAVONIAN-DALMATIAN ROBBER STATE

Page me9.307

Agram. While in Hungary proper the royal imperial united monarchy is being shaken in its very foundations by the victorious Magyar armies, the national separatist movement in the South-Slav countries is continually creating new difficulties for the Austrian Government. The Croats have now conceived the idea of a Croatian-Slavonian-Dalmatian triune kingdom, to serve as the focal point for pan-Slav aspirations in the south. This trinity of Pandours, Serezhans and Haiduks, this kingdom of red-coats, was at once “taken in hand”, to use the Austrian Croat-German phraseology, by the Croatian-Slavonian Committee of the Diet, and the appropriate Bill produced by the Committee is available in print.†244 The document is remarkable.†a There is not a trace in it of hatred for the Magyars or of any precautions against Magyar transgressions. But it plainly bears the marks of hatred for the Germans, of safeguards against German transgressions and of the pan-Slav alliance against the Germans. That is what our constitutional-patriotic wailers of the Holy Roman Empire have got for their enthusiasm for the Croats.†245 We have already earlier informed our readers that the same hatred and the same mistrust of the Germans is prevalent in the Serbian Voivodina.†b

Page me9.307

The trinity of red-coated cut-throats begins its existence at once with conquests. Apart from the fact that it tears from Hungary the whole of Croatia and Slavonia, it demands the Mur Island, i.e. the corner of the comitat of Zala lying between the Drava and the Mur, and the Quarnero islands of the district of Istria and Trieste, i.e. a small fragment of Germany as well as one of Hungary.

Page Break me9.308

Page me9.308
In addition it demands the following rights: (1) the internal relations of Croatia-Slavonia with Dalmatia are to be decided by their respective Diets; (2) their relations with the Serbian Voivodina are to be decided by mutual agreement; (3) also,

"closer political union is to be established with the remaining neighbouring Slav provinces of the Austrian Empire on the basis of mutual agreement",

Page me9.308
i.e. a pan-Slav separatist union†246 to be formed against the Germans and the Magyars within the royal imperial united monarchy. And this right of separatism is, according to the Pandour-Serezhan way of thinking, the first right of man:

"This natural (!) right of union cannot under any pretext be either denied or hindered in either the triune kingdom or in the Austro-Slav areas which wish to unite with the kingdom by reason of" (Croat German!) "the same or related nationality."

Page me9.308
That is, our first, "natural" right of man is the revival of the Prague Slav Congress†247 as the legislative authority. How naive a demand to put to a Schwarzenberg-Stadion Government!
Page me9.308
These conquests and pan-Slav alliances are followed by a solemn declaration:

"The triune kingdom has never been a German country" (Dieu merci!), "nor does it wish to become such or even a part or member of the German Empire, and consequently the triune kingdom cannot in future be drawn, without its express consent, into any kind of union with Germany which Austria may enter into either now or in the future."

Page me9.308
Such solemn declarations vis-á-vis the Germans are considered to be urgently necessary, although to our knowledge no one has ever regarded Croatia and other areas inhabited by cut-throats as a "German country", and although Germany at the moment has not the slightest wish to incorporate the Otocac†248 and Serezhan gentlemen into the German Empire.
Page me9.308
There is not a single mention of the Magyars in the whole document, not a single paragraph designed to safeguard the desired triune robber state against the much-lamented Magyar oppression!
Page me9.308
But the object of the whole thing is quite clear: the united, centralised Austria for which the Government is striving and in which the Germans as the most civilised nation will in the long run certainly be morally dominant, frightens the pan-Slav trinity a thousand times more than the Magyars, whom they consider to be defeated. Moreover, it is clear that among these petty robber nations hatred of the Germans far exceeds their hatred of the Magyars. And yet these petty robber nations are the allies of the Kölnische Zeitung, that German patriot!

Page Break me9.309
Page me9.309
These general principles are then followed by a long series of stipulations with which the South-Slav robber states seek to safeguard themselves against Austrian centralisation, i.e. against German oppression.
Page me9.309
Thus the document proposes that all functions which this law does not expressly assign to the central government shall remain the prerogative of the provincial government. The authority of the central government, however, is only recognised in the following fields: (1) foreign affairs, with the exception of the above proviso regarding relations with Germany, changes in which require a two-thirds majority in the Diet; (2) financial administration, insofar as this is absolutely necessary; (3) military affairs, but only insofar as they concern the standing army; (4) commercial affairs; (5) roads and waterways.
Page me9.309
Furthermore, in addition to representation in the Imperial Diet, the trinity of robber states demands

"consideration for the sons of the triune kingdom in appointments to relevant central government posts on the basis of the population proportions and the necessary qualifications"

(elegant Croat German again!), dealings with the central government to be conducted in the official language, a separate robber-state Minister in the central government, and a separate administrative section for the robber states in every relevant ministry.
Page me9.309
Apart from that, the robber states will be governed by a "State Council of the Triune Kingdom", and the armed forces, the army as well as the Banderial units,†249 the levy in mass and the National Guard will be under the command of the Ban. But the Ban may command only the army according to the orders of the Central Authority; for his command of the remaining sections of the armed forces he is responsible to "the nation".
Page me9.309
In internal affairs, the following changes are demanded: (1) the triune robber state shall provide contingents of troops no larger than any other Austrian province in relation to the size of its population; and (2) in civil matters the Military Border is to be subject to the ordinary civil administration and jurisdiction; the military administration and military jurisdiction operate only for those borderers who are actually under arms. But with that the whole of the royal imperial Military Border will automatically cease to be. We shall return to this.

Page Break me9.310
Page me9.310
This is the draft plan for the new triune Otocac-Pandour-Croat robber state which they want to set up on the south-eastern borders of Germany if the revolution and the Magyars permit it.

Written by Engels about April 20, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 278, April 21, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.311

THE RUSSIANS

Page me9.311
Cologne, April 21. When the Neue Rheinische Zeitung began to be published almost eleven months ago, it was the first newspaper to point out the concentration of Russian armies on our Eastern frontier.†a At that time many virtuous citizens spoke of exaggeration, of unnecessary cries of alarm etc.
Page me9.311
It has become clear whether we were exaggerating or not. The Russians, who at first were merely protecting their frontiers, passed more and more to the offensive as the counter-revolution achieved successes. The June victory in Paris brought them to Jassy and Bucharest; the fall of Vienna and Pest brought them to Hermannstadt and Kronstadt.
Page me9.311
A year ago Russia was not prepared for war; at that time, in the first panic terror at the omnipotence of the sudden revolution, it was easy to drive the 30,000-40,000 Russians out of Poland and establish a free Poland. That was what was called for, but the desire for it was lacking. The Russians were given time to arm, and now a Russian army of 500,000-600,000 men surrounds us from the Niemen to the Danube and Aluta. Along the Prussian frontier alone, according to the Ostsee-Zeitung, some 150,000 men are stationed; the remainder are in the interior, on the Galician frontier, in Moldavia, Wallachia, Lithuania, Podolia and Volhynia, and in the fortresses of Novo-Georgievsk (Modlin), Brest-Litovsk, Demblin and Zamosye, which according to the Ostsee-Zeitung have depots with arms and reserves for 250,000 men.
Page me9.311
The same newspaper writes:

Page Break me9.312

“Food depots are set up with the aid of requisitioning notes, which oblige every landowner to deliver a certain quantity of produce that is to be used as provisions for the army. Next year these notes will be accepted in payment of taxes. This, therefore, is the source of the recently spread rumour that the Russian Government in Poland has ordered taxes to be collected one year in advance.”

Page me9.312

What the state of affairs is as regards the acceptance of these notes we learn from another quarter.

Page me9.312

At the end of last year and the beginning of this year, Polish landlords had to make enormous deliveries, but these were taken into account in the payment of taxes. It was believed that thereby everything was settled, but it turns out now that the taxes until the end of this year have to be paid in advance.

Page me9.312

Even from this compulsory method of ensuring supplies for the army it is evident what enormous masses of Russian troops must be concentrated in Poland.

Page me9.312

Another newspaper, the Posen Zeitung des Osten, reports from Posen on April 13:

“The number of Russian troops in the West is as follows: Within the Polish Kingdom is the Rüdiger Corps — half of the Fourth Rüdiger Corps together with reserves, altogether approximately 120,000 men. In Lithuania is the so-called Grenadier Corps (formerly the Shakhovskoy Corps), and part of the First Corps. The Guards are expected to arrive later — there has been talk of their arrival for several months already. In Volhynia, where the staff headquarters is in Dubno, is the remaining part of the Fourth Chegodayev Regiment. In Kiev there is a Second Auxiliary Corps, in Krzemieniec a mobile corps (Pavlov's) of about 6,000-8,000 men. Finally in Moldavia and Wallachia is the Lüders Corps with about 65,000 men.”

Page me9.312

As to why these troops are there, they themselves very naively make the following admission:

“Rank-and-file Russians, as well as the officers, are less reserved in their conversation. It is noteworthy that to the question why they are stationed on the frontier they all give the same reply, viz: Our Emperor†a is the brother-in-law of the King of Prussia.†b After the French were defeated by the Russians in the great war, all the land right up to Paris belonged to the Emperor; he entrusted the administration to various small German knyazes†c (princes), and appointed his brother-in-law, the Prussian knyaz, as supreme military governor. Now the French and Germans have risen in revolt, and so the German knyazes as well as the supreme governor have asked for help from the Emperor, and that is why we are stationed here on the frontier. If calm is not soon established, we shall cross the frontier and restore order.”

Page me9.312

But that is not all. Emperor Nicholas has ordered another call-up of recruits of eight men per thousand to be carried out in the western part of his Empire. The order lists 21 provinces where recruits are to be called up.

Page Break me9.313
Page me9.313

That is how things look on the other side of the frontier. Half a million armed and organised barbarians are only waiting for an opportunity to fall on Germany and turn us into feudal serfs of the orthodox Tsar.

Page me9.313

Just as Transylvania was once before occupied by the Russians, just as at the present time the incursion of 30,000 Russians into that same region is being demanded, and another 30,000 to be sent across Galicia, just as the Banat Serbs are also imploring the orthodox Tsar for help, so it will be with us. We shall yet reach the point when the Government and the bourgeoisie invite the Russians into our country, as happened recently in Transylvania. And things are bound to go that way. The victory of counter-revolution in Vienna and in Berlin has not sufficed for us. But when Germany has once felt the Russian knout, it will behave somewhat differently.

Page me9.313

The Russians are the true liberators of Germany, we said in June last year.†a We repeat this also today, but today we are no longer the only ones to say it!

Written by Engels on April 21, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 279, April 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.314

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.314

The Wiener Zeitung which failed to arrive the evening before yesterday, and following it, all the Vienna evening papers report:

“The Hungarian insurgents' plan to relieve Komorn has been completely thwarted. The advantage they gained by their temporary occupation of Waitzen has also been wrested from them, for Lieutenant-Field Marshal Csorich's division has driven them out of this position again. With the imposing reinforcements proceeding to the royal imperial army from all directions, a most successful resumption of the offensive by the royal imperial troops already in the very near future can be predicted.”†a

Page me9.314

This royal imperial martial-law report, however, can already now almost certainly be affirmed to be a pure lie. If there were anything in it, a Bulletin would have been issued within the next 24 hours at the latest, and that has not happened. Moreover, all the other reports contradict this assertion, made without either a date or any detail.

Page me9.314

We have no wish to repeat the many rumours circulating in Vienna and Breslau, to the effect that Komorn has been relieved, Görgey is marching on Vienna, Dembinski and Vetter have outflanked the imperial army and cut off its retreat to Vienna, that the Landsturm has been raised in all comitats on both sides of the Danube etc. So long as the postal connection between Pest and Vienna is not cut, little credence can be given to these rumours.

Page me9.314

Up to the 18th, there was no mention of the post from Pest having failed to arrive in Vienna. The latest news from there was dated the afternoon of the 14th. This contains not a word about the recapture of Waitzen.

Page Break me9.315

Page me9.315

It will be remembered that some days ago the Ost-Deutsche Post already reported that Waitzen had been recaptured. It is quite possible that Waitzen had to be taken twice, and that the imperial forces re-occupied it temporarily before finally being driven out. The fact that at a moment of great peril the official paper designed to dispense reassuring news writes with jesuitical reservations about this temporary re-occupation, is quite consistent with the previous practice of the Bulletins.

Page me9.315

On the 14th nothing at all was known in Pest of the alleged capture of Waitzen. On the contrary, the Lloyd in a report of this date wrote:

"For the present, the Hungarians are behaving pretty arrogantly in Waitzen. They send off letters and parcels which pass through and arrive here safely, except that they are first opened and searched and officially sealed by the Hungarian Defence Council.†250 Under such a cover a dispatch arrived here yesterday containing the news that Major-General Götz was buried in the Hungarian camp with full military honours. Twelve battalions are said to have been paraded for the solemn occasion."†a

Page me9.315

All the other Pest news of the same date simply provides further evidence of the fear of the Austrians there. The Spiegel has this report:

"I am writing to you when I am just on the point of bringing my family to safety. Last night it was rumoured that all Germans were to be murdered (!). This and similar rumours are following each other at a frantic pace; the fanaticism of the Magyars threatens to erupt at any moment."

Page me9.315

Visits to the camp are prohibited, the bell-towers are occupied; the Magyars in Pest are said to have intended to ring the alarm at the first attack from outside. Outside Pest itself, little has happened since the 11th. At noon on the 14th a few skirmishes took place when the Hungarian outposts showed themselves in the vicinity. It is also claimed that the thunder of guns has been heard.

Page me9.315

The royal imperial finances appear to be in a bad way too. Windischgrätz announced on the 10th that the imperial authorities are now issuing Hungarian paper money, drafts on the Hungarian revenues, at a fixed rate of exchange, in denominations of 5, 10, 100 and 1,000 florins. With these scraps of paper the royal imperial army will pay for the provisions supplied to them, and so, just before quitting, they will steal a few millions from Hungary. Such a dirty system of robbery as carried on by the honourable friends of the Kölnische Zeitung, a system composed of elements from all levels of civilisation, from the plundering by Croat-Tartar nomads down to the most modern paper-money swindling and fraudulent bill-jobbing, is wholly unprecedented.

Page Break me9.316

Page me9.316

And while even the Austrian banknotes are subject to exchange fluctuation, these notes must be accepted at their full face value in private dealing!

Page me9.316

All these items of news confirm the expectation of an imminent Austrian retreat from Pest rather than the claim that Waitzen has been taken.

Page me9.316

An occupation of Waitzen is moreover almost impossible on strategic grounds. By all reports, the imperial forces have been everywhere thrown back over the Danube and the Gran, Pest being the sole point they hold on the left bank. Pest could not be left without cover; hence the attack could only take place from the right bank, the imperial armies would have had to cross the Danube under fire of the superior Hungarian artillery and then to drive a superior army out of Waitzen. To do all this would be quite impossible; and even if it were possible, it could not be done without a great battle. But no one, not even the Wiener Zeitung, knows anything about such a battle. All this is supposed to have been done by Csorich's division. One division!

Page me9.316

Windischgrätz is happily in Olmütz. Welden is not yet with the army, but he has sent out in advance pompous proclamation to his soldiers, these “heroes (!) on whom the gaze of half the world (!) is fixed”, a proclamation which could have been written by the Kölnische Zeitung in those glorious days of its Theiss manoeuvres. He describes his opponents as “infamous villains”, who have made Hungary into a “tool of venal Poles”, threatens them with destruction, and then adds: “But once more we offer our hand in reconciliation to our brother who has been led astray!”†a Herr Welden therefore wants to negotiate. The Magyars will be much obliged.

Page me9.316

Little is heard of the reinforcements which the Austrians are supposed to have already received. Eight battalions (?) are said to be stationed at Neuhäusel on the Waag; that is how much the five brigades on the Gran†b must have shrunk already.

Page me9.316

Six battalions are reported to be on the march from Vienna and the Fleischhackerstrasse is said to be choked with the waggons on which the reinforcements are arriving.

Page me9.316

A reserve camp of 25,000 men is supposed to be formed on the Marchfeld near Vienna, another at Pettau (Styria) of 15,000 men, and a third of 20,000 to 30,000 men at Tábor and Budweis in Bohemia — everything to be quite ready by the 10th of May! Where are these troops to come from!! Haynau's corps is not coming, Radetzky cannot spare it. Instead he has sent all his light cavalry. Finally, Vogl is said to be expected in Eperies.

Page Break me9.317

Page me9.317

We defer the news from the Banat and Transylvania until the second edition, since it contains nothing of urgency.

Written by Engels about April 21, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 279, April 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.318

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.318

The post from Vienna has failed to arrive; we are therefore able to learn details from the field of battle on the Upper Danube only indirectly, in snatches. , the “best-informed” Vienna correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, also asserts that Waitzen has been re-occupied by the imperial forces, and that only one Magyar battalion was encountered there, because — the bulk under Görgey had already marched off to Komorn! In this way the thing can indeed be explained, and such an occupation of Waitzen is not only possible but even a mistake of the Austrians, who are now threatened in their rear. Welden has not gone to Pest either but to Neuhäusel on the Waag, where indeed some Austro-Moravian rearguard appears to be stationed. He is marching from there against the Magyars who strongly attacked the retreating imperial forces at Gran. The outcome of this engagement is not yet known.†a

Page me9.318

The following report in the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen shows what a lion's den this Hungary is, where the footsteps of many warriors go in but few come out.

“If this thing drags out to the summer, Kossuth's supporters will gain an ally in the fever, which may well be very much more dangerous to the Austrian troops, unaccustomed to the climate, than the Russians, whose entry is expected in the enemy's rear, will be to their opponents. All the proved bravery of our troops is useless against the fever, and it is precisely to the regions where the fever rages most fiercely that the war will shift as soon as the insurgents are forced back from Pest to the east.”

Page me9.318

Very great alarm reigns in the Banat. While from Peterwardein Perczel strikes terror into the countryside and already threatens Slavonia, while the Danube navigation from Pest to Mohacs continues to be disrupted, Bem is recently reported to be advancing on Temesvar with a strong force. He is said to have called upon Temesvar and Arad to surrender to him within a week. The Serbian Voivodina is in its death throes; Knicanin intends to return there with 8,000-10,000 men, but only after Todorovich, Albert Nugent, Bosnich etc. have been retired. Nugent senior†a has already been dismissed; Castiglioni, the bombardier of Cracow,†251 has been appointed as his successor, and one deputation after another is going to Bucharest to seek Russian assistance. Puchner too is on the march to the Banat.

Page Break me9.319

Page me9.319

Transylvania is still wholly in Bem's hands. The Russians have been expelled entirely from their last position at the Roterturm Pass. The Magyar party among the Transylvanian Romanians is conducting a strong agitation in favour of Bem and supports his recruiting drive in the country. The organisation of the army is proceeding at a marvellous pace. Moreover, Bem has captured 21 guns with 6,000 shells and 5,000 rifles with one million rounds of ammunition in Hermannstadt. He has persuaded most of the Transylvanian refugees in Bucharest to return, by declaring a general amnesty and simultaneously threatening to confiscate the property of all who stay behind.

Page me9.319

We learn from Galicia (April 12) that the Hungarians are advancing nearer and nearer to the Carpathians, while nothing is heard of Vogl's alleged advance into Hungary. Almost the entire Cracow garrison has marched off to Hungary. It is expected to be replaced by Russians.

Page me9.319

An indication that the imperial forces no longer feel secure in Slovakia is given by the transfer of their treasury from Schemnitz to Troppau.

Page me9.319

Finally, we give a (Magyar) report from the Neue Oder-Zeitung on the strength of the Magyar army:

The Hungarian army is daily increasing in numbers, daily becoming better organised and more disciplined. According to authentic reports, when the Banat and Transylvanian armies are included as well as the Peterwardein and Komorn garrisons, the army now has 32 regular battalions of infantry and Szeklers,†252 23 regiments of cavalry (hussars, Uhlans, cuirassiers), 105 Honved battalions, 15,000 national cavalry, hence a total of 197,000 infantry and 30,000 regular cavalry, excluding national cavalry, national guards and Landsturm.

Written by Engels about April 21, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 279 (second edition), April 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.320

THE DEBATE ON THE LAW ON POSTERS

Page me9.320
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 279 (second edition), April 22, 1849]

Cologne, April 21. (The debate in the Chamber.) We return to the sitting of April 13.†a After the reply†b to Deputy Lisiecki's question, the next item on the agenda was the debate on the law on posters.†253
Page me9.320
After Herr Rohrscheidt had read the report of the Central Commission, Herr Wesendonck moved an amendment for the rejection of the government Bill en bloc.
Page me9.320
Herr Arnim (Count) rose to speak. He said that the amendment was impermissible, being tantamount to a motion to proceed to the Order of the Day. But government Bills cannot be passed over in this way. That is established by the standing orders.†c
Page me9.320
Now at last the gentlemen of the Left realise what the Right intended by para. 53 of the standing orders. In relation to government Bills the Chamber cannot resolve to proceed to the Order of the Day. This seemingly innocent provision, however, meant neither more nor less than the following: you are not entitled to reject any government motion en bloc, but must debate every one of its paragraphs, even if there were a thousand of them.
Page me9.320
But that was too much even for the Centre deputies. After a rather lengthy debate during which each of the sides displayed the greatest possible acumen in exegesis, the Chairman finally proceeded with the discussion by declaring Wesendonck's amendment permissible.
Page me9.320
The floor was taken by Herr Rupp, the great Rupp, who was suspended from his post, persecuted, at one time hounded by all the newspapers, and expelled from the Gustavus-Adolphus Union†254 of blessed memory. Herr Rupp delivered a speech after which, in the opinion of the Berlin National-Zeitung, which is no less great and no less enlightened than Herr Rupp, there remained little more for the Left to say, not only in the general debate but also in the special debate. Let us take a look at this exhaustive speech of pure reason delivered by Rupp, the Friend of Light.

Page Break me9.321
Page me9.321
This exhaustive speech is, indeed, a true product of the enlightened spirit, of the spirit of the "free communities",†255 i.e. it exhausts nothing but the platitudes which can be uttered on the subject of posters.
Page me9.321
Herr Rupp began his speech by pointing out the difference between the arguments in support of the law on posters put forward by the Government and the Central Commission. Whereas the Government presented the law as a mere police measure in the interests of road traffic and aesthetics, the Central Commission, which eliminated this clumsy Prussian trick, put the political motives in the foreground. This afforded wide scope for declamations by the enlightened preacher.

"Thus this Bill is indisputably one of the most important subjects for discussion by the present Assembly. Now we shall not want to say" (we shall not want to say!) "that it is so much (!) a matter of indifference to us whether there are a few more or a few less posters in the world, since (!) the lofty character of right and freedom consists precisely in the fact that even what seems to be most insignificant, when linked with it, immediately itself acquires a higher significance"!!†a

Page me9.321
Having established the "lofty character" and "higher significance" of posters by this pastoral introduction, and having put his audience in a pious frame of mind, Herr Rupp could calmly give free rein to "the eternally clear, pure and smooth" stream of his pure reason.
Page me9.321
First of all, Herr Rupp made the exceedingly shrewd remark "that very often measures have been taken against imaginary dangers, with the result that real dangers are created".
Page me9.321
This platitude evoked delight and cries of "bravo" from the Left.
Page me9.321
After this, Herr Rupp with equal profundity of thought pointed out that the Bill contradicts ... the imposed Constitution,†256 which Herr Rupp does not recognise at all!
Page me9.321
It is a strange policy of the Left — to appeal to the imposed Constitution and to cite the kicks received in November as arguments against further kicks!

Page Break me9.322

Page me9.322

If the Government considers — Herr Rupp continued — that this Bill does not infringe freedom of the press, but only concerns the use of the streets and squares for the distribution of printed matter, then one could equally well say that freedom of the press prevailed also under the censorship, since it was not the use of the press but only the distribution of its products that was put under control.

Page me9.322

One must have lived in Berlin under the censorship to appreciate the whole novelty of this proposition, which already years ago used to be current among all the pettifogging liberals, and which nevertheless was once more greeted by the Left with hilarity and cries of “bravo”.

Page me9.322

Herr Rupp then quoted the article on freedom of the press in the imposed Constitution and proved in detail that Manteuffel's Bill was in crying contradiction to the Manteuffel Constitution.

Page me9.322

But, my dear Herr Rupp, tout bonhomme que vous êtes,†a have you not yet realised that Manteuffel imposed the Constitution only in order subsequently to annul the few liberal phrases contained in it either by retaining the old gagging laws†257 or introducing new ones.

Page me9.322

Indeed, Herr Rupp even went so far as to explain to the Right with some thoroughness that although later on, during the revision of the Constitution, they could include the law on posters in this Constitution, but at present they must reject it, otherwise they would be anticipating the revision of the Constitution!

Page me9.322

As though the gentlemen of the Right were concerned with consistency, and not with putting the speediest end to the bad press, associations, agitation, commercial distrust, and other more or less revolutionary achievements!

Page me9.322

To these weighty arguments, Herr Rupp then added the following banalities:

Page me9.322

1) Posters are condemned because they spread agitation. But the prevention of agitation is not a matter for the state in which the rule of law prevails but for a police state.

Page me9.322

2) I want a strong government. But a government that cannot tolerate agitation and posters is not a strong government.

Page me9.322

3) Germans like to follow a leader.

Page me9.322

4) The absence of posters did not prevent March 18 (“Neither horse, nor rider”†b — etc.).

Page Break me9.323

Page me9.323

5) Revolutions are the result of despotism.
Page me9.323
From this Herr Rupp drew the conclusion that the law on posters must be rejected in the interests of Manteuffel.

“Gentlemen,” he exclaimed imploringly, “protect the Government from the self-deception to which this law, like every law of a police state, exposes it!”

Page me9.323
According to Herr Rupp, the rejection of Manteuffel's Bill would not be a vote of no confidence in Manteuffel, but, on the contrary, a vote of confidence in him. Herr Rupp wants Manteuffel to become the desired “strong government”, and for that reason he does not want to weaken Manteuffel by adopting the law on posters. You think Herr Rupp is joking? He has no such intention. Herr Rupp is a Friend of Light, and a Friend of Light never jokes. Friends of Light cannot tolerate laughter any more than their worthy cousin, Atta Troll.
Page me9.323
But the last trump card Herr Rupp played set the crown on his whole speech.

“The rejection of this law will contribute not a little to calm that section of the population which cannot agree to recognise the Constitution prior to its revision.”

Page me9.323
Herr Rupp's concern is “to calm that section of the population” which has not yet reached the level of Manteuffel!
Page me9.323
That, however, is the nature of the gentlemen of the Left! They are tired of turbulent movement and since they are now deputies and realise that they can do nothing against the sabre dictatorship, all they want is that the unpleasant questions of principle should at last be settled, the Constitution revised pro forma with a view to declaring it valid, and an oath of allegiance sworn to it, and “the revolution brought to an end”. Then a comfortable life will begin for them, a life of constitutional routine, declamation based on nothing, dealing with nothing, leading to nothing, intriguing, patronage, ministerial reshuffling etc.; that Olympian life of idleness and luxury which the Frenchmen of the type of Odilon,†a Thiers and Molé enjoyed for 18 years in Paris, and which Guizot liked to call the “play of constitutional institutions”. If only the unpleasant revolutionary movement were to recede somewhat, a Waldeck Ministry would indeed no longer be an impossibility! And after all the people are not yet mature enough for a republic!
Page me9.323
After Herr Rupp's speech precisely everything still remains to be said. It was a question in the first place not of restriction of the freedom of the press in general, but above all of restriction of the freedom of the press in regard to posters. What had to be done was to examine the effect of posters, to defend “street literature”, and most particularly to champion the right of the workers to the literature provided free of charge in the form of posters. It was not a matter of glossing over the right of agitation by means of posters, but frankly to champion that right. But Herr Rupp said not a word about this. The old phrases about freedom of the press which we had sufficient opportunity of examining in all its aspects during 33 years of censorship — these old phrases were once more trotted out by Herr Rupp at length in a solemn tone, and because he said everything that the gentlemen from the National-Zeitung know about the subject, that newspaper considers he has exhausted the subject.

Page Break me9.324

Page me9.324

After the "enlightened" Rupp, the "obscurantist" Riedel was given the floor. But Herr Riedel's speech is too good to write about it in haste. A demain donc, citoyen Riedel!†a

Page me9.324
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283, April 27, 1849]

Cologne, April 23. Deputy Riedel certainly delivered the most classic speech of the whole debate. Whereas some restraint was still being shown by the ministerial bench, whereas even Manteuffel still employed certain pseudo-constitutional phrases, and only the clumsy parvenu, von der Heydt, at times forgot his constitutional role, Herr Riedel from Barnim-Angermünde was not in the least embarrassed to speak as a dyed-in-the-wool representative of Uckermark.†258 Never before has an electoral constituency been so worthily represented as that of Herr Riedel.
Page me9.324

Herr Riedel began by asking: what are posters? And he gave the answer:

"Posters in the proper meaning of the word are public statements intended to have a reassuring effect on people's minds."

Page me9.324

That, according to Herr Riedel's etymology, is the "definition" of posters.
Page me9.324

For the time being we do not want to dispute with Herr Riedel about the derivation of the word "poster" [Plakat]. We only draw his attention to the fact that if he had read the Bill attentively, he could have saved himself all his etymological exertions. This Bill is concerned not only with "posters" but also with "pasted notices", which "in the proper meaning of the word" are simply intended to be pasted up.

Page Break me9.325
Page me9.325

Instead of this, Herr Riedel expressed his righteous indignation at the most scandalous misuse of the word "poster".

"As a rule, posters serve merely to inflame passions, to kindle an impure fire of hatred or revenge particularly against the authorities.... As a rule, therefore, posters are precisely the opposite of what their name implies. Hence their use is usually a misuse" (i.e. a misuse of their name) "and therefore the question arises: Ought the local police authorities to help promote this mischief of posters?" (i.e. this misuse of the name "poster"). "Ought the police to make themselves in some measure the accomplices in the mischief caused by the misuse" (of the name) "of posters" (for notices which are in no way posters, i.e. reassuring notices)?

Page me9.325

In short, ought posters in future to be employed "in accordance with their definition" (i.e. in accordance with the definition of the word "poster") or not?

Page me9.325

What a great mistake Manteuffel committed in ascribing the law on posters to motives concerned with police duties and beautifying the streets! What a mistake it was for the Central Commission to advocate the law for political reasons! The law is necessary — for etymological reasons and should really be entitled: a law to return the use of the word "poster" to the "proper meaning of the word".

Page me9.325

In this connection, however, the thorough Herr Riedel has committed a thorough blunder. If we, at the risk of boring our readers to death, were to enter into a discussion with Herr Riedel on etymology, we would, with Diez's grammar in hand, prove to him that the derivation of the [German] word Plakat [poster] is not at all from the Latin placare,†a but is only a distortion of the French placard, which is connected with the French word plaque, which itself is of German origin. Hence Herr Riedel's whole reassurance theory falls to the ground.

Page me9.325

That, of course, is a matter of indifference to Herr Riedel, and rightly so. For this whole reassurance theory is merely a schoolmaster's captatio benevolentiae†b behind which is an outright appeal to the fears of the propertied classes.

Page me9.325

Posters "inflame passions", they "kindle an impure fire of hatred or revenge particularly against the authorities", they "serve as a call to the unreasoning mass to demonstrations which menacingly (!) violate order and go beyond the limits of legitimate freedom".

Page me9.325

And therefore posters must be prohibited.

Page Break me9.326

Page me9.326

In other words: the united feudal lords, bureaucrats and bourgeois successfully accomplished their coup d'état last autumn by force of arms, and now, with the help of the Chambers, want to impose on us the supplementary laws that are still required in order that these gentlemen can enjoy their victory in peace. They are heartily sick of "passions", they will use every means to extinguish "the impure fire of hatred and revenge against the authorities", who for them after all are the most desirable authorities in the world, to establish "order" and to restore "legitimate freedom" to the level that suits them. And what sort of level that is can be judged from the fact that Herr Riedel calls the great majority of the people an “unreasoning mass”.

Page me9.326
Herr Riedel cannot find words bad enough to describe this “unreasoning mass”. He continues:

“These communications” (by means of posters) “are mostly read by just that class of people who are least of all accustomed to written communications, who are not able to test and judge the credibility of written communications with the caution and distrust that is of course displayed by the public accustomed to reading and acquainted with the deceptions of the press....”

Page me9.326
Who then form this unreasoning mass, this class least of all accustomed to written communications? Is it the peasants of Uckermark? By no means: since, firstly, they are the “backbone of the nation”, secondly, they do not read posters, and, thirdly, they elected Herr Riedel. Herr Riedel has in mind none but the urban workers, the proletariat. Posters are a chief means of influencing the proletariat. By its very position the proletariat is revolutionary; being the class which is as much oppressed under a constitutional regime as under absolutism, the proletariat is quite prepared to take up arms again; it is precisely from the proletariat that the chief danger threatens, and therefore away with everything that could keep alive the revolutionary fervour in the proletariat!
Page me9.326
And what is more conducive to keeping alive revolutionary fervour among the workers than posters, which convert every street corner into a huge newspaper in which workers who pass by find the events of the day noted and commented on, the various views described and discussed, and where at the same time they meet people of all classes and opinions with whom they can discuss the contents of the posters; in short, where they have simultaneously a newspaper and a club, and all that without costing them a penny!
Page me9.326
It is just this, however, that the gentlemen of the Right do not want. And they judge correctly. For it is from the side of the proletariat that the greatest, indeed the sole danger threatens them; why should they, who hold the reins of power, not strive by every means to remove this danger?

Page Break me9.327
Page me9.327
No one could raise any objection to this. With God's help we have been living for about six months under a sabre dictatorship. We do not harbour the slightest illusion about the fact of being in a state of open war against our enemies, or about the means by which alone our party can come to power. We shall not be so ridiculous as to make moral reproaches against the present ruling triple alliance of junkers, bureaucrats and bourgeois because they strive in every way to enslave us. If the highly moral preacher's tone and bombastic moral indignation of the wailers†259 were not in any case obnoxious to us, we would beware of such an empty phrase-mongering polemic if only because we still intend to take revenge on our enemies.

Page me9.327
But what we find peculiar is that the gentlemen who are now in power, and who have an official majority, do not speak as frankly as we do. Herr Riedel, for example, is as genuine an Uckermark man as anyone could wish for and yet he could not refrain from asserting at the end of his speech:

"It has certainly never been my intention to put any kind of barrier in the way of free expression of opinion. I regard the spiritual struggle ... for the truth as a sacred right of free peoples, which no one may call in question."

Page me9.327
And in another passage Herr Riedel speaks of his wish

"to allow the distribution of posters on the same basis as that on which literary works in general can be distributed".

Page me9.327
What, after all the preceding explanations, are these phrases intended to mean? The existing government and the constitutional monarchy in general cannot nowadays remain in power in civilised countries, if the press is free. Freedom of the press, free competition between opinions means giving freedom to the class struggle in the sphere of the press. And the kind of order that they ardently desire is precisely the stifling of the class struggle, the gagging of the oppressed classes. Hence the party of law and order has to abolish free competition between opinions in the press; by means of press laws, bans etc., it must as far as possible ensure its monopoly of the market; it must, in particular, wherever possible directly suppress the literature provided free of charge in the form of posters and leaflets. The gentlemen are well aware of all this; why do they not say as much frankly?
Page me9.327
In fact, Herr Riedel, why do you not propose immediate restoration of the censorship? There is no better means for repressing "passions", extinguishing "the impure fire of hatred and revenge against the authorities", and safeguarding "the limits of legitimate freedom"! Voyons, citoyen Riedel, soyons francs!†a After all, it will come to that in the end!

Page Break me9.328
Page me9.328
Herr Riedel resumed his seat. The floor was given to Simons, the Minister of Justice, barrister from Elberfeld, the offspring of a Wuppertal bourgeois family of an equal rank to that of von der Heydt.
Page me9.328
Herr Simons set about his task with tremendous thoroughness. It is noticeable that he is still new to the Ministry of Justice.

Page me9.328

Posters are pasted up in public streets and squares, said the Minister of Justice. Consequently

"one must look for the definition of public streets and squares"!!

Page me9.328

True, Herr Riedel had established the "definition" and "proper meaning of the word" poster in a way deserving our thanks. But that is not the point at all. On the contrary, it is a question of the "definition of streets and squares". And here the Minister of Justice wins immortal laurels.

Page me9.328

Can one imagine a finer school for teaching the ABC than this Chamber where people argue seriously about the definition of streets and squares, about schoolboyish points of grammar, and so forth?

Page me9.328

What then is the "definition of streets and public squares"?

Page me9.328

It is as follows: streets etc.

cannot "be made available for any random and public use", because "such a definition of streets etc. cannot be proved"!

Page me9.328

Hence the reason why we have a so-called Minister of Justice is precisely to give us such profound explanations. In fact, one understands now why Herr Simons found it embarrassing to be presented to the Chamber.

Page me9.328

Of course, after such a brilliant performance, the remainder of the Minister's speech is not worth mentioning. Under the cloak of remarkable erudition in French jurisprudence, Herr Simons brought out some forgotten recollections from his former practice as a Public Prosecutor. Then come statements like the following:

"This question of need must certainly (!) be given an affirmative answer, that at least (!!) is my opinion (!!!), bearing in mind the doubts (!!!!) that have been raised (!!!!!)."

Page me9.328

Finally, Herr Simons wanted

"to sanction the legal foundation for restricting posters".

Page Break me9.329

Page me9.329

To sanction a foundation! Where did you learn such language, Herr Simons?

Page me9.329

After such oratorical feats as those of Herr Riedel and Herr Simons, we cannot, of course, dwell on Herr Berends' speech which followed them. Herr Berends correctly felt by instinct that the ban on posters was aimed directly against the proletariat, but his development of the theme was rather feeble.
Page me9.329
The general debate came to an end. For rejecting the Bill en bloc there were 152 votes, and against it 152 votes. Among others of the Left who were absent without special permission was Herr Kyll from Cologne. If Herr Kyll had been present the Bill on posters would have been rejected out of hand. Hence we owe it to Herr Kyll that the Bill was adopted in part.
Page me9.329
We shall not dwell on the special debate. Its result is well known: the itinerant traders in books have been placed under police surveillance.
Page me9.329
For this they can thank Herr Kyll!

Written by Engels on April 21 and 23, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 279 (second edition) and No. 283, April 22 and 27, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.330

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.330
In the welter of contradictory rumours, some of which are evidently invented by the imperial side, we can be certain of only two facts: firstly, the Magyars have crossed the Gran, and on the left bank of the Danube at Parkány, opposite Gran, have defeated the corps assembled there under Simunich; secondly, they have disappeared from Pest for the second time, and nobody can say where they have gone.
Page me9.330
Hence, little can be said about their present position or intentions. It is most likely that they will station themselves along the left bank of the Danube from Waitzen to Komorn, so as, after successfully relieving Komorn, to cross the Danube under the protection of this fortress's guns and to cut off the retreat of the main imperial army.
Page me9.330
The corps defeated at Parkány was made up of the remnants of the Götz brigade, the Simunich division and troops drawn from the corps besieging Komorn that could be spared there.
Page me9.330

According to remarks made by Austrian officers in Pest, it is more doubtful than ever that Waitzen has been re-occupied by the imperial forces.
Page me9.330

The imperial side is spreading the rumour that Jellachich has defeated the Magyars at Pest and forced them to retreat to Gödöllö. But this rumour is deprived of all significance by the simultaneous and much better established news that the Magyars left Pest during the night, while the peasants in the area kept their watch-fires burning till daybreak to deceive the Austrians.
Page me9.330

One part of the Magyar army is said to have moved to the north from Parkány via Ipolyság, so as to be able together with the volunteer forces raised all over Upper Hungary to prevent the entry of Vogl's corps. According to reports received via Pest and

Page Break me9.331
Pressburg, Vogl is at Zboró (six miles†a from Eperies); direct reports via Cracow and those in the Bohemian and Moravian papers which are best informed on these areas know nothing of this so far. Vogl's entry has moreover been reported so often that by now no one believes in it any longer. In Pest and Ofen, and also among the troops, the rumour is being disseminated by the imperial side that Kossuth has resigned his post as President of the Hungarian Defence Council and taken to flight so as not to stand in the way of the negotiations which are now said to be about to begin (Welden's proclamation may be remembered†b).
Page me9.331

Two days ago it was reported that an imperial sharpshooter on patrol had shot Kossuth in the Hungarian camp. This report appears to have found no credence, hence this new invention.
Page me9.331

The Magyars will take care not to waste precious time on negotiations so that the defeated and weakened Austrians can gather their reinforcements at their leisure and then, supported by 50,000-60,000 Russians, throw their adversaries back across the Theiss again!
Page me9.331

Böhm in Vienna has published the report that Komorn continues to be encircled, and that even the bridge from the citadel to the bridgehead on the right bank of the Danube has been destroyed by the royal imperial artillery. What truth there is in that remains to be seen.
Page me9.331

Transylvania is still in the hands of the Magyars. Under Bem's direction, it has been converted into a gigantic fortress, unassailable from the Moldavian-Wallachian-Bukovina border. The Magyars make sorties from there into the Bukovina. Thus, on April 9, six companies of Szeklers with two guns advanced as far as Pojana-Stampi, beat the Austrians and retreated across the border with 14 oxen and some horses as booty. Clearly, these raids keep the movement among the peasants in the area very much alive. Kobylica has promised to bring in a Hungarian army on the 12th and to make the peasants masters of all the land.
Page me9.331

Perczel still continues to advance in the Bacska. He has invaded the territory of the Chaikist battalion,†260 occupied Gospodincze, and is now in Tschurug on the Theiss, the largest base of the battalion. The Chaikist territory occupies the extreme angle between the Danube and the Theiss, east of Peterwardein.
Page me9.331
Both Puchner and the Russians are said to have arrived at Orsova on the borders of the Banat; 10,000 Russians are expected there. In addition, Stratimirovich has emerged again and is rallying volunteer forces against the Hungarians in the Chaikist battalion.

Page Break me9.332
Page me9.332
On the other hand, a report from Semlin, dated April 13, says:

"The arrival of the steamboat passengers yesterday presented a sorry sight. The entire personnel of the general command of Transylvania, among them General Pfersmann and General Appel, disembarked. Their shabby garments and their pale countenances betrayed their misfortunes. After an hour's rest, they continued their journey to Vienna by way of Agram. They carried with them the substantial war-chest and the archives."†a

Page me9.332
In the Voivodina, Rajachich is to assume the civil and Mayerhofer the military administration. The Serbs intend to hold a grand National Assembly on May 20 and to elect a new voivode. Knicanin has the best chances. We have the draft Constitution of the Voivodina before us; long faces will be pulled over it at Olmütz. We shall return to it.
Page me9.332
We have just received a letter from Lemberg dated April 16; it says nothing at all of Vogl's entry into Upper Hungary.

Written by Engels about April 23, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 280, April 24, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.333

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.333
On the 16th, the Hungarians undertook a reconnaissance along the whole line of the imperial army stationed at Pest. The attack did not begin until four in the afternoon; the bombardment lasted until nearly six. No exchange of infantry fire developed; the losses on both sides were small. The attack began with the Hungarian hussars surprising the imperial forces while cooking, causing great confusion; and when the Austrians had won enough time to bring their artillery into operation against them, the Hungarians disappeared equally suddenly. What purpose the Hungarians sought to achieve by this attack is not yet clear. It is supposed that the battle outside Pest was merely a cover for the Hungarians to cross the Danube, and the Magyar correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung actually claims to know that the attempt was successful. However, perhaps by their sudden reappearance before Pest, the Hungarians merely wished to prevent the imperial forces from drawing off larger sections of troops to Gran and the Komorn road. Nevertheless, Welden, who journeyed on from Pressburg on the 17th, is reported to have ordered 10,000 men from Ofen to Gran on the 18th.

Page me9.333

The fortification of Ofen with woolsacks is still going on.

Page me9.333

We have no further definite news from the theatre of war at Waitzen and Gran. It is still uncertain who is in possession of Waitzen, but probably it is still occupied by the Hungarians.

Page me9.333

Concerning the action at Gran, martial-law reports are again circulating the rumour that the Magyars were defeated there and 2,000 were taken prisoner. Of course, there is not a tittle of truth in this. At most, the imperial forces may have succeeded in holding their ground on the Gran.

Page Break me9.334

Page me9.334

Naturally, the story of Kossuth's alleged flight†a has dissolved again into pure fable. While the Austrian officers talk of negotiations the Magyars attack, and Kossuth has announced that he intends to recruit another 50,000 men (the Magyar correspondent even mentions a figure of 200,000). Everywhere the Landsturm is being called up, and many thousands of them armed with pitchforks and scythes are reported to be marching behind the regular army. The latter is said already to number 35 hussar regiments.

Page me9.334

News comes from the Banat that on the 13th Perczel in the area of the Chaikist battalion was driven back at Titel and Wilowa by Stratimirovich; Todorovich, too, is reported to have sent two battalions there.

Page me9.334

The journal Bucovina paints a heart-rending picture of conditions in that province. Destitution and misery are so intense in the Bukovina that in certain localities there are people who for some weeks past have been living on minced straw or crushed acorns mixed with maize meal.

Written by Engels about April 24, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 281, April 25, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.335

THE HUNGARIAN WAR

Page me9.335

Cologne, April 25. Today we have no new information from the theatre of war. That which we already published yesterday about the departure of a corps of substantial size from Pest to Gran,†a has been fully corroborated, and this is a most important fact. It obviously constitutes the first step towards the abandonment of Pest.

Page me9.335

We do not know the strength of the departed corps, nor how many men still remain in Pest. Some papers report that 10,000 men marched away; if this is so, 5,000-7,000 men at most can have remained in Pest. The Wanderer, a martial-law sheet pur sang,†b which has connections with the military camp, speaks of a "departure of the whole camp" to Gran having occurred during the night, after Welden had been in Pest for some hours and then returned to Gran. The Wanderer relates:

"The march towards Waitzen and the neighbouring area began at 4 a.m. The whole army stationed on the Ofen bank of the Danube as far as Komorn is crossing the river and today will take the offensive against the insurgents at all points, while Schlick and the Ban,†c operating beyond Waitzen, are attacking them in the rear and on the flanks. Already yesterday it was said at headquarters that decisive results were expected within three days."

Page me9.335

The strategic reason which the Wanderer gives for the Austrian withdrawal is more than ludicrous. According to it the plan is for the main imperial army to cross the Danube between Komorn (this is how far the retreat has already gone!) and Gran and attack the Magyars in the front, while Jellachich and Schlick (! i.e. two out of the three army corps!) will cross over to Waitzen and cut off their retreat.

Page Break me9.336

Page me9.336

But if the imperial forces have made such progress that they can already think of such decisive manoeuvres, why do they not remain at Pest, where they are in complete command of the Danube crossing, on the left bank of the river, and march up along that bank towards Waitzen and Balassa-Gyarmat? In this way, with "Schlick and Jellachich's" assistance, they could completely cut off the Hungarians from their base of operations, and totally destroy them after winning one battle, while in case of a defeat their own retreat to Pest could not be cut off?

Page me9.336

However, the Wanderer's glosses are the more certainly pure phrases as the small number of reinforcements arrived in the last few days do not allow the imperial side to think even remotely of resuming the offensive.
Page me9.336
It is as clear as daylight: what is happening is that the imperial forces are retreating from Pest and taking up new positions in the area from Komorn to Gran and Szent Endré along the right bank of the Danube and the Gran so as to oppose the Magyar pressure on Komorn. Incidentally, this very “speedily” performed withdrawal is the best commentary on the supposed imperial victory at Parkány on the Gran.
Page me9.336
What these manoeuvres seem to suggest is that Welden, in the crude fashion in which he conducts warfare, intends to provoke a decisive battle at all costs and as speedily as possible. His rashness will probably end badly for him.
Page me9.336
, the “best-informed” Vienna correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, a black-and-yellow†a bureaucrat and an authority for the Kölnische Zeitung, but otherwise an impudent braggart and extremely ignorant of geography, is again lying with remarkable impertinence when he speaks of two Magyar corps marching with all haste towards Kaschau to meet Lieutenant-Field Marshal Vogl's forces. One of these corps is said to be 30,000 strong, the other to be commanded by Görgey (!) — but Lieutenant-Field Marshal Wohlgemuth is alleged to be following hard on their heels and if he could get to Miskolcz before them (the Austrians are now on the march to Miskolcz!!!), the Magyars would have to retreat over the Theiss!!†b A brilliant strategist, this “best-informed” correspondent of the best-informed Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.

Page Break me9.337
Page me9.337
These lies show the lengths to which those on the imperial side have to go to sustain the spirit of their troops even to some extent.
Page me9.337
In a similar way, they also sought to capture Komorn, the fortress they could not capture by force of arms. They sent spies to spread among the garrison the rumour that Debreczin had long ago been taken by the imperial forces; that Mack was already inclined to capitulate, but Esterházy was not. Fortunately, a Magyar spy got through to Komorn and brought the news of the latest Magyar victories.
Page me9.337
In the Banat, the Magyars are already beginning the encirclement of Temesvar.
Page me9.337
From Galicia, there is still no news at all of Vogl's alleged entry into Hungary with his fictitious twelve battalions, reports of which were so grandly trumpeted abroad. It appears that the plans for the disposition of the troops concerned have been changed so frequently, because Galicia cannot be trusted to keep calm, that they have not yet even been assembled on the border.
Page me9.337
There is nothing new from Transylvania. We shall print only an excerpt from a report about Bem, sent to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung from the Wallachian border.

These admissions from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung are the most striking confirmation of what we have so often said about Bem:

“At this moment, the whole of Transylvania is obedient to the irresistible authority of Bem, a leader who is as bold as he is fortunate, whose genius and exceptional energy have decimated the best troops of two emperors†a and driven them from the country. With relatively few and for the most part inexperienced forces, this extraordinary man has been able to set at nought the immense sacrifices demanded by this unprecedentedly bitter struggle, and to frustrate the brilliant feats of arms of the Austrian troops, nay, even the universally feared Russian intervention. Bem's successes are all the more amazing as he has succeeded in conquering a country in which the majority of the inhabitants, and especially the Saxons and Romanians, without exception, remained loyal to their Emperor and readily made every sacrifice, however hard. In face of so sad an outcome of this war, as protracted as it is destructive, all previous sacrifices, indeed even the summoning of foreign assistance, appear as sheer waste, while the reconquest of the country demands new sacrifices which are the heavier as the tireless Bem has increased his power tenfold by promptly levying soldiers and contributions. The inhabitants of Hermannstadt alone are reported to have been afflicted with a levy of four million florins C.M., payable within three days. What is equally distressing is the fact that this so lamentable misfortune, which could have been averted by prudence and strong measures, has led to an extraordinary cooling off in the sympathies which the populations thus afflicted previously gave so cordially to the Government, while their spirits have been crushed and their energy crippled by the imposed Constitution. All this is very natural, considering the enormous distance between the rights demanded in the well-known petitions of the Romanians and Saxons and those granted in the Constitution of March 4, and the obstinacy with which the Vienna Government

Page Break me9.338
withholds the concessions promised in Olmütz to the Romanian deputation.†261 The common sense of the people sees that fundamentally it is all the same whether its rights are neglected or curtailed by the arrogance of the Hungarians or by an all-powerful Government.”†a

Written by Engels on April 25, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 282, April 26, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.339

LASSALLE†262

Page me9.339

Cologne, April 26. We have to report a fact which testifies that en fait de justice†a there is no longer anything impossible. Herr Nicolovius, Public Prosecutor General, clearly intends to surpass even the laurels which Herr Hecker in his time won for himself.

Page me9.339

From our previous reports†b it will be recalled that during the criminal court trial against Lassalle, von Ammon I, deputy Chief Public Prosecutor in Düsseldorf, for three weeks concealed in his office desk and withheld from the examining magistrate a letter of Lassalle's in which the latter requested a farmer†c from Schönstein to arrange for a reinforcement of some 100 men to march to Düsseldorf in the event of a struggle and that von Ammon only handed the letter to the examining magistrate when the latter informed him that the investigation had been concluded. It will be recalled that because of this letter — which, incidentally, was so far from containing a direct call for an uprising that neither the Court nor the indictment board included it among the grounds for prosecution — the investigation had to be begun afresh, and this was the reason why Lassalle's trial was not already concluded in the previous session of the Assize Court.

Page me9.339

Lassalle protested at the time to the Public Prosecutor General against this deliberate dragging out of the case by Herr von Ammon I.

Page me9.339

The Public Prosecutor General, instead of making any reply to Lassalle, sent the latter's complaint to the Public Prosecutor's office in Düsseldorf with instructions to instigate proceedings against Lassalle for this complaint on the basis of Article 222 because in it Herr von Ammon had been insulted!

Page Break me9.340

Page me9.340

Pends-toi, Figaro, tu n'aurais pas inventé cela!†a

Page me9.340

Thus, a letter to Herr Nicolovius is alleged to constitute an insult to Herr von Ammon within the meaning of Article 222! Already once before, on the occasion of the trial of the press, which we had the pleasure of conducting against Herr Zweiffel and Herr Hecker, we explained that Article 222 does not even apply to public insults by the press but only to insults levelled at officials when they are actually present.†b

Page me9.340

But even if Article 222 were also applicable to insults through printed matter, it would still certainly not occur to anyone to maintain that a letter to a third person could be an insult to an official. According to the practice adopted hitherto in the police courts, it was always requisite that the material containing the insult should be addressed to the insulted person himself or that it should be publicly disseminated. Herr Nicolovius now discovers that if one writes in insulting terms to a third person about an official, that is an insult to the official! It seems, therefore, that one must beware of speaking about officials in a disrespectful tone in one's private correspondence!

Page me9.340

The fact that Lassalle's letter was addressed to the official authority superior to Herr von Ammon and was therefore a complaint, a protest, makes the matter still more impossible.
Page me9.340
For the law even makes it obligatory for complaints against wrongful actions of officials to be addressed to the superior authority. If, therefore, the substance of the complaint was true, it was perfectly in order; if it was false then the Public Prosecutor General should have instituted legal proceedings on the basis of Article 373 — because of a calumniatory complaint. But in that case it would be the easiest thing in the world for Lassalle on the basis of the documents to prove the truth of his complaint, whereas this proof is of no avail to him when brought before a police court on a charge of insulting an official.
Page me9.340
The case came before the Court in Düsseldorf. But this Court, too, found that an insult has to be made either publicly, or in the presence of the insulted person, and dismissed the case. The Public

Page Break me9.341
Prosecutor's office opposed this, and our local Cologne indictment board, which has often been tested and has always proved reliable, actually decided to institute legal proceedings based on Article 222 against Lassalle, who is now happily burdened with a police court case.
Page me9.341
What else will be achieved with the help of Article 222, if things continue in this way?
Page me9.341
Incidentally the Lassalle case will come before the Assize Court on May 3.

Written by Engels on April 26, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283, April 27, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.342

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.342
We begin our news today with the following report from the Neue Oder-Zeitung:

“From private sources we have received the important news that a big battle was fought between Gran and Komorn on the 20th and 21st. Welden led a reserve corps and held the heights near Gran. A large part of the royal imperial forces, including the Jablonowsky and Simunich brigades, was spread out on the plain between Gran and Komorn. The Magyars attacked all the positions of the imperial forces with such fierceness that the latter were thrown into confusion right from the outset. Despite the most courageous defence of the soldiers, Welden had to retreat. In addition to the great loss in dead and wounded suffered by the royal imperial army, 20 guns and 2,000 prisoners fell into the hands of the insurgents.

Page me9.342
"According to another report, which generally confirms the news of the Hungarian victory mentioned above, the immediate consequence of this victory has been the relief of Komorn."

Page me9.342
Evidently, this Job's news is already known in higher circles, for Government Counsellor von Festenburg, who accompanied Master of Ordnance Welden to Hungary, arrived in Vienna as a courier on the night of the 21st, and between then and the departure of the mail on the evening of the 22nd, not a word transpired either on the reason for his arrival or on the content of the dispatches he brought.
Page me9.342
We have to await confirmation of this report, however probable it may seem. The letters from Breslau take us up to the evening of the 23rd; news of the Magyar victory at Komorn on the 21st could hardly have reached Breslau by then. But a letter from another Breslau source also reports that news of the capture of Gran by the Magyars came with the train which arrived there on the morning of the 23rd.
Page me9.342
We were quite correct in our estimate of the butcher Welden. He was eager to mark his arrival in the field at once by a great battle and to spread his fame far and wide. According to all the reports from Vienna, this battle actually took place on the 20th and 21st.

Page Break me9.343
Page me9.343
All the newspapers now unanimously recognise that the departure of the main imperial forces from Pest was actually the beginning of their retreat from the city. It even appears that they have become convinced of the impossibility to hold Ofen, and that they intend to give this up as well. All the woolsacks requisitioned for the ramparts have been returned to their owners and the sand-bagging of the ramparts has also ceased. According to the Magyar correspondent of the Breslauer Zeitung, the Magyars are said to have already occupied Neu-Pest (the first suburb). There are, by the way, not many of them left; their main corps, as we know, departed long ago, the unmounted Landsturm has for the most part been disbanded, and only the mounted Landsturm, armed with the fokos (a strong staff with a small brass axe at one end) are still at Pest, along with some Honveds and a few guns.
Page me9.343
According to , the "best-informed" correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung,†a who, incidentally, cannot spell any Magyar or Serb name correctly, the Magyars are no longer stationed along the Danube but along the Gran, from the Leva down to the confluence of the Gran and the Danube. Their main force is said to be located in Ipolyság (a few miles†b to the rear). Wohlgemuth, who has 5,000 men, is said to be facing their right flank.

Page me9.343

More recent reports state that this right flank has wheeled round, crossed the Gran and advanced towards Neutra, driving Wohlgemuth back to the town. Even the Lloyd admits this.†c There is no definite news of the positions of the imperial forces. Vienna newspapers and Lithographierte Correspondenz still have "Schlick and Jellachich operating beyond Waitzen in the rear of the insurgents", as if it were possible to get "beyond" Waitzen without first getting "into" it! And Waitzen is and will remain in the hands of the Magyars, despite all the martial-law lies of the black-and-yellow press.
Page me9.343

The butcher Welden is ruining himself by his brutal impatience to attack. If he stayed on the defensive, covered by the Danube and the Gran, and if his main force were united with the corps besieging Komorn, he might succeed in holding his ground until the arrival of reinforcements. But he wants to get all the credit for putting down the Magyar revolution, with the result that by now he together with his entire army may have perished.

Page Break me9.344
Page me9.344

For at last we have more definite news about the Galician reinforcements. Some of them are concentrated on the Jablunka Pass. These are said to be under Benedek's command and to be rapidly advancing on the mountain towns. The others — eight battalions, 1,200 cavalry and 15 guns — are reported to have marched from Lemberg on or about the 16th and a reserve force of six battalions, 800 cavalry and nine guns was supposed to be following. These troops, whose numbers are obviously much exaggerated, were supposed to be marching over the Carpathians in three columns, and to be operating directly against the main Hungarian army and not in the direction of the Theiss. But remarkable obscurity still persists as to when they will arrive.
Page me9.344

Hence a report from Breslau that Vogl has been surrounded in the mountains at Munkács and his entire corps destroyed, is false. Munkács lies far to the east of Vogl's line of operations. It is, however, possible that an Austrian column invaded there from Galicia and was beaten.
Page me9.344

Concerning Komorn, the imperial forces also had very philanthropic intentions: The brigadier commanding the corps of sappers and engineers, Major-General von Zitta, who himself had built the Komorn fortress, is said to be leading the last attempt to force the capitulation of the fortress which, according to his own declaration, cannot be taken by assault. It is reported that he is attempting to flood the casemates in order to drive out the garrison from this bomb-proof refuge and confront it with the alternative of either surrendering Komorn or seeking shelter from the devastating rain of fire in the ruins of the town.
Page me9.344

But this kind intention will surely have been frustrated by recent events.
Page me9.344

It is now officially reported that Nugent in the south has very politely but firmly been recalled. His son, who abandoned Zombor to the Magyar Landsturm without a fight, is said to be court-martialled. What a farce! Stratimirovich's victory does not prevent the Magyars from keeping the Bacska occupied; the flight of the Serbs across the Danube and the Theiss is continuing. Mayerhofer is now in command in Nugent's place but is now almost without troops, as they have nearly all been sent to Ofen.
Page me9.344

It is confirmed that Bem is in the Banat. He has equipped the Szekler Landsturm well with arms from the Hermannstadt and Kronstadt arsenals and, leaving to it the guarding of the country, is advancing with 30,000-40,000 of his best troops reinforced with Wallachian and Saxon recruits. He is reported to have already taken Temesvar.

Page Break me9.345
Page me9.345

The new Hungarian banknotes devised by Windischgrätz have now been issued, but no one will accept them. All exchanges and shops are closed. The Magyar report writes about this:

"Despite the martial-law threat, all the banking-houses and merchants have refused to accept the notes. With the Hungarian army in the vicinity, the imperial military authorities have not deemed it advisable to employ force, and further issue of the banknotes has been deferred until better times. But there is already circulating here a decree of the Hungarian Government, branding these banknotes as 'maliciously manufactured, forged bills' and warning everybody against accepting them. Another of Kossuth's proclamations outlaws those commissars installed by Windischgrätz who have dared partially to reintroduce the compulsory labour abolished by the Diet of 1848.†263 The peasants of Duna Vecse, Germans, have already taken advantage of the proclamation and killed one of these commissars."

Page me9.345

Fresh support for the Magyars, which just now, on the eve of their probable victory, is of the greatest significance, is the Polish peasant rising which is about to break out in Galicia. About this movement, which the Cracow martial-law sheet Czas (The Times) seeks as far as possible to conceal, the Vienna Lithographierte Correspondenz writes:

"Forced recruiting has caused a serious situation in the vicinity of Cracow. Three thousand peasants have moved to the large forest near Chrzanov and are camping there. Attempts to persuade them amicably to come out have merely elicited the response: 'We would rather die here than in Hungary; what have the Hungarians done to us?' Many of the young people, who do not wish to serve against the Hungarians either, have fled from Cracow to the forest, and there are fears that this example will prove contagious and that a general rising might develop. It is well known that Cracow is almost totally denuded of troops."

Page me9.345

At this moment talk of Russian assistance is more widespread than ever. The rumours are self-contradictory. But it is a fact that between Kalisch and Bucharest 200,000 Russians are already drawn up and ready to invade Galicia and Hungary so soon as the orthodox Tsar gives the order. 40,000 are stationed at Cracow, 50,000 at Brody (Radziwilow), and the remainder partly further to the rear, partly further to the south in Podolia, Bessarabia and the Danube principalities.

Page me9.345

We had almost forgotten to inform our readers that the first defeat of the Austrians on the Gran has been confirmed. It was Wohlgemuth who was there in command and did not take 2,000 Hungarian prisoners but rather suffered these losses himself. This accounts for his otherwise inexplicable positions at Leva and later at Neutra.

Written by Engels about April 26, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283, April 27, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.346

[HUNGARIAN VICTORIES]†264

Page me9.346

Cologne, April 26. In the confused news reaching us today from the Hungarian theatre of war via Vienna and Breslau, three clear, definite and undeniable facts stand out:

Page me9.346

(1) The imperial forces have evacuated Pest and Ofen;

Page me9.346

(2) The Hungarians have won a victory between the Gran and the Waag;

Page me9.346

(3) Komorn has been relieved.

Page me9.346

The battle itself took place between Leva and Neutra, and it was Wohlgemuth who suffered a complete defeat. He was forced to retreat five miles. Görgey thereupon marched on Komorn with his entire force and, according to the latest news, reached Neuhäusel and Sz. Peter on the Waag, an hour from Komorn.

Page me9.346

No credence can be given to a martial-law report that the encirclement area of Komorn has been re-established.

Page me9.346

The outposts of the Magyar vanguard are reported to be already at Tyrnau, five miles from Pressburg. According to other reports they are two miles from Pressburg, and people claim to have seen them even on the March a few hours from Vienna!

Page me9.346

Ofen and Pest were completely evacuated on the 21st and 22nd. The imperial headquarters was last located in Gran, from there it has probably been transferred to Raab.

Page me9.346

In the south, the Magyars are overrunning wider and wider areas. They are even threatening Semlin on the Turkish frontier, as the Wiener Zeitung admits.

Page me9.346

The Hungarians are reported to have invaded Wallachia from Transylvania and defeated the Russians.

Page me9.346

In short, the Magyar revolutionary army is advancing victoriously on all fronts. The entire might of all the 36 million Austrians has

Page Break me9.347

Engels' article “Hungarian Victories” published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283 (special supplement), April 27, 1849

Page Break me9.348

Page Break me9.349

been frustrated and the victorious army which in Welden's words “amazed half Europe” has been balked by the daring and enthusiasm of a small nation of barely five million people. The imperial forces are learning once again in Hungary the lesson they were taught at Jemappes and Fleurus 50 years ago†265: it is unwise to make war on revolution!

Written by Engels on April 26, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283, April 27, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.350

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.350

We shall briefly supplement the news we published this morning in a special edition.

Page me9.350

When Welden arrived in Gran, where he set up his headquarters, he made, according to the Wiener Zeitung,†a the following dispositions: Wohlgemuth with his alleged “five brigades” — in reality only 16,000 men — in the Neutra area was to prevent the Magyars who were advancing via Leva from reaching Komorn. Further south, between the Danube and the Gran, the Veigl brigade was to protect the Komorn siege corps. The bulk of the imperial forces, concentrated at Gran and Szent Endré, was to attempt to take Waitzen and thereby to reach the Magyars' rear. The official paper admits the superior strength of the Hungarians, especially in light cavalry and artillery.

Page me9.350

At the same time it is admitted that 2,000 Hungarians have crossed the Danube at Duna Földvar and are raising the local area in revolt. Between Földvar and the eastern corner of the Plattensee there are about ten miles of mostly swampy country; if the Magyars have occupied this easily defensible region, they are covered on their right flank by the whole length of the Plattensee (10-12 miles long) and can organise the insurrection quite unhindered behind this natural moat. Burits' imperial brigade, and Horváth's mobile column which has been sent towards Stuhlweissenburg against them, will be unable to do much harm.

Page me9.350

After Wohlgemuth's defeat on the Gran (in which Welden with the bulk of the imperial forces appears to have remained quite calmly at Gran as a “reserve”), and after the relief of Komorn, which now offers the Hungarians an invaluable point of support, Welden must give up his position at Gran and will perhaps have to fight a bloody battle to effect his retreat to Raab, which leads past the guns of the Komorn bridgehead. Raab, the junction of the two roads to Pest, and the line of the River Raab are the only positions south of the Danube which are perhaps still possible for the imperial forces. But here too the closeness of Komorn and the difficult terrain, broken up into a mass of islands by innumerable branches of the Danube, will prevent regular contact between the bulk and Wohlgemuth's corps. There is not a single defensible position other than the line of the March and Leitha, which means retreating to Austrian territory.

Page Break me9.351

Page me9.351

During the departure from Pest and Ofen the greatest confusion prevailed. The “loyal ones” are wailing; the moral impression created by the occupation of the two cities by the revolutionary troops is immense.

Page me9.351

Everywhere the peasants and Jews have been driven into the arms of the Magyars by the Windischgrätz-Stadion tyranny. The Slovak peasants, who are indebted to Kossuth for freeing them from feudal burdens, and upon whom Windischgrätz wanted to reimpose the former compulsory labour, are enthusiastic supporters of the Magyars, and are aiding them everywhere with reports, fire-signals etc.

Page me9.351

The Serb National Committee in Semlin has applied for protection to the consuls of the three great powers in Belgrade. The English Consul has declined, since the Committee is allegedly not a regular legal authority. Mayerhofer is hurrying to Belgrade. To what depths has “venerable” Austria descended!

Written by Engels on April 27, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 284, April 28, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.352

[HUNGARIAN ADVANCES. — EXCITEMENT IN VIENNA]

Page me9.352

Cologne, April 27. Today is Kossuth's birthday; the leader of the Hungarian revolution is 43 years old today.†266

Page me9.352

Today an official royal imperial Bulletin (No. 35) already confirms the reports of Hungarian advances which we published this morning: that Wohlgemuth has been defeated, Pest and Ofen are taken, and Komorn is relieved.†a It is now established that the Hungarians have already passed not only the Gran and the Neutra but even the Waag, and that Wohlgemuth has been driven back to Tyrnau, five miles from Pressburg. Altogether only four comitats in Hungary are still in imperial hands, and on all sides it is conceded that on Hungarian soil not a single defensible position is left to the imperial forces.

Page me9.352

Great excitement prevails in Vienna. The people throng the streets as in the revolutionary days of last year. The military, usually so impudent, have again become remarkably restrained. Vienna is waiting for the Hungarians to cross the Leitha to effect its fifth revolution,†267 a revolution which will not be simply an Austrian, but simultaneously a European one.

Page me9.352

Eljen Kossuth! Eljenek a Magyarak!†b

Written by Engels on April 27, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 284, April 28, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.353

MAGYAR ADVANCES

Page me9.353

Cologne, April 28. No commentary is necessary on the royal imperial Army Bulletin No. 35,†a the main points of which we have already this morning communicated to our readers.†b It reads as follows:

"Concerning events in the army in Hungary. After the movement back towards Pest made by the Austrian army early this month, in order to concentrate in positions protecting the two cities, the enemy almost daily attempted attacks on the same which, though they were without results, nevertheless gave him proof that our main strength was gathered at Pest and Ofen. Soon afterwards he attacked Waitzen, where two brigades were stationed commanded by General Götz — in the fighting the latter died the death of a hero — and advanced up the Danube via Leléd and Kemend. Believing that we were kept sufficiently busy at Pest, the enemy then marched in two strong columns, one on the left bank of the Gran and the other via Ipolyság, towards Leva. Here he assembled about 30,000 of his best troops on the 18th and crossed the Gran in three columns at Kalna, Bars and Sz. Benedek.

Page me9.353

"Lieutenant-Field Marshal von Wohlgemuth — in command of five brigades totalling about 15,000 men from Moravia and Austria, which as a reserve were drawn up behind the Gran — made aware of this movement, left Kemend on the night of the 18th to march toward the enemy between Malas and Bese.

Page me9.353

"Meanwhile the enemy drew up his entire force — outnumbering ours by two to one — in battle order between Verebely and Nagy Sallo. An attack launched on Nagy Sallo by Prince Jablonowsky's brigade was indeed completely successful, one column already having reached the town, when entry had to be given up because the town was ablaze. The enemy took advantage of this to outflank us on our right between the Gran and Nagy Sallo, at the same time attempting a similar manoeuvre against our left flank from Verebely. A most stubborn battle had already raged from early morning till afternoon; with his proven composure, Lieutenant-Field Marshal von Wohlgemuth made a fighting retreat, leading his very tired troops from one position to another; the enemy, on the other hand, extended his outflanking manoeuvre even towards Neutra.

Page Break me9.354

Page me9.354

"Lieutenant-Field Marshal Wohlgemuth had already previously been given orders to continue his retreat behind the Neutra and even back across the Waag, if things took an unfavourable turn, so as to cover both the valley of the Waag and Pressburg, and beyond the Waag to effect a junction, by way of Schütt Island, with the corps besieging Komorn, where in the meantime the bombardment was continued in the most lively manner.

Page me9.354
"The commanding general, Master of Ordnance Baron Welden, who had arrived in Gran on the 17th, convinced that the main force of the enemy could have made the outflanking movement through the mountains to relieve Komorn, immediately ordered the Ban†a to sally forth from Pest with his entire force and to attack the enemy, but not to follow up advantages too quickly. On the 19th, the Ban advanced in all directions (!!!!), but the enemy gave way before him so rapidly that he was not even within reach of our artillery (!).
Page me9.354
"On the 20th, another enemy column, which up to then had been held in reserve at Paszto on the River Ipoly, moved down the right bank of the Gran with the left wing of the enemy towards Kemend and Gran, and immediately attacked the Csorich division, stationed there as a reserve, which, since on that day Lieutenant-Field Marshal Wohlgemuth had already passed Neuhäusel, retreated fighting towards Gran and dismantled the pontoon bridge there so as to defend this point as strongly as possible. The commanding general arrived at Ofen on the 20th.
Page me9.354
"Given this military situation, it appeared to the commanding general that to continue to hold Pest and Ofen would have great disadvantages for further military operations, especially since the Danube from Komorn to Waitzen had been taken by the enemy, and neither city offered a useful pivot for the operations. The Master of Ordnance therefore set about concentrating his troops in a secure position, and is convinced that, with the reinforcements placed at his disposal which are marching to his aid, he will soon be in a position to renew the offensive successfully.
Page me9.354
"Messages from Pest of the 21st of this month report that the enemy made an attack at Czinkota on that day, but after not very stubborn fighting he was forced back everywhere by our troops which were advancing towards him.
Page me9.354
"According to news of the 17th of this month, just arrived from Semlin from the Master of Ordnance Count Nugent, the state of things on the Lower Danube is taking an increasingly favourable turn: the Chaikist area†268 has again been cleared of the enemy; the position at Peterwardein has been much strengthened by the well-placed entrenchments constructed under the energetic direction of Colonel Mamula, and through the troop reinforcements moving on Peterwardein from all directions the corps being formed there will soon be in a favourable position to resume the offensive and advance on Szegedin."

Page me9.354
This Bulletin confirms everything that we have already reported from the theatre of war. Moreover, it is written more clearly than the previous imperial hushing-up proclamations.
Page me9.354

At Komorn, to which fresh troops and fresh cattle for slaughter have been brought by the Hungarians, many guns were left behind by the imperial forces, which, though in part spiked, fell into the hands of the Hungarians. Now, 24 hours after we pointed it out in our newspaper, all the papers bewail the fact that the imperial troops no longer have a single defensible position in Hungary, and will have to withdraw beyond the Leitha and March.

Page Break me9.355
Page me9.355
The imperial authorities have glaringly failed in their attempt to issue the new Hungarian banknotes, alias "forged bills". The Ost-Deutsche Post relates the following story:

"A high-ranking staff officer went into the vault of a money-changer the other day, demanding that he change 2,000 florins of the new paper money into Austrian banknotes, and even offered them at a premium. The money-changer declined to do so, under the pretext that he had only a few Austrian notes. However, he was willing to change a few 100 florins, though without any premium. The officer replied: you are a money-changer, you must have notes, and if you do not change them I will have your vault locked up. After some argument between them the notes were exchanged. On the following day, the money-changer's wife received from that same staff officer a little packet of 5-florin notes in new Hungarian bills. She said that she could not change them. Shortly afterwards, the officer himself appeared, accompanied by an adjutant. In the meantime, the money-changer also arrived and declared that he was certainly willing to change silver money and ducats, but not the banknotes, for, he reasoned, not without logic, if the bills were valid, the General had no need to change them and could use them as well as the money-changer; if they were no good, he did not want to change them, for he could not use them. He had payments to make in Vienna, and he was so far not aware that the new bills would be accepted in payment there. If he were to change them for the General hundreds of people would immediately turn up with similar requests which he would be unable to satisfy. The General replied that it was beneath his dignity (!!!) to answer him, and ordered the mayor to be fetched, instead of whom a town councillor appeared and locked up the vault on the General's order."†a

Page me9.355
The news from Hungary has had a tremendous effect in Vienna:

"As in the days of the barricades last year, crowds were moving up and down the streets. A stranger might suppose that the masses of people swarming hither and thither like ants were there in response to the warm spring weather, but to anyone even moderately familiar with the physiognomy of the capital, it was clear that mighty levers of curiosity, hope and feverish tension must have agitated the Viennese, encouraging them despite the ubiquitous glint of bayonets, despite the vigilance of the police, to a form of passive resistance expressed in crowds gathering at street corners, loud and fearless political beer-hall talk, and a thousand other variations. Former legionnaires†269 in ranks four and five deep marched past the guards as though on parade, with bold provocative glances; former national guards shook hands with one another as though asking 'Well, will it start soon?' while those in favour of 'calm at any price' despondently and fearfully crept along keeping close to the houses as though Kossuth were at the gates of Vienna.

Page me9.355
“That the 'loyal ones' have a guilty conscience was clearly and strikingly shown yesterday. In inns and coffee-houses, cries of Eljen†b were raised to Kossuth. 'I am biding my time, and it will come,' says Perceval to the Queen. Today the tumult seems to have died down somewhat, at least the sound of tramping and the buzzing of voices are not as audible today as yesterday.”

Page Break me9.356

Page me9.356
Another letter from Vienna reports:

“The turn in the Hungarian events has produced a simply indescribable despondency among the majority of the city's inhabitants” (i.e. the bourgeoisie). “The numerous refugees arriving here hourly from Pest increase the anxieties, and only now vent is given to the universal execration of Windischgrätz (!). Already loud shouts of 'treason' can be heard (!!). However, the city is quiet. Both yesterday and today, troop reinforcements have gone from here to the battlefield. On the other hand, the arrival of fresh troops is again expected here; two battalions have already arrived since yesterday.
Page me9.356
“The courier coach with the mail from Pest has already failed to turn up today, and we must be prepared for that city being cut off once again by Kossuth.”

Page me9.356
A third correspondent, who already sees half a step further, makes the following observation:

“A ministerial crisis is inevitable, Schwarzenberg will have to follow Windischgrätz, public opinion must have its victims, otherwise — I doubt if I need say more.”

Page me9.356
It is obvious that it will now be a matter of crises quite different from ministerial crises!
Page me9.356
Important news has come in from the south:
Page me9.356
Vetter has advanced towards Stuhlweissenburg and the Plattensee with a Magyar column.
Page me9.356
Further to the south, Perczel too has crossed the Danube and recaptured Vukovar, on the road to Fünfkirchen.
Page me9.356

Karlowitz in Syrmien has been attacked and bombarded by the Magyars.
Page me9.356
We hear from several quarters that Bem has invaded Wallachia and driven the Russians back to Rimnik Vatitza, three and a half miles from the border.
Page me9.356
In short: the Magyars are advancing victoriously at all points, and the Austrian "united monarchy", the centre of European counter-revolution, will be destroyed within a fortnight, unless a miracle happens.
Page me9.356
But it is on the ruins of the "united monarchy" that the European revolution will arise anew.

Written by Engels on April 28, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 285, April 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.357

[DISSOLUTION OF THE SECOND CHAMBER]

Page me9.357
Cologne, April 28. The rumour already current in the town at midday today was confirmed this evening: the King and his martial-law Government have dissolved the Second Chamber.†270
Page me9.357
The details can be found below, de dato Berlin.†a
Page me9.357
By this act the King and his martial-law Ministers have once again broken their word. According to the imposed martial-law Charter of December 5,†271 the Chambers were expressly convened "to revise the Constitution". Only after the first Parliament convened under this Constitution had revised this botchwork was the latter to be regarded as complete and definitively valid. This is how it was imposed in December of last year.
Page me9.357
Hence the Chambers had at least a partially constitutional mandate. So long as they had not carried out this mandate, so long as they together with the Crown had not revised the Constitution, they could not be dissolved, any more than the Assembly of blessed memory convened to agree upon the Prussian Constitution.†272
Page me9.357
Nevertheless it has been dispersed — this miserable Second Chamber, summoned under the sabre dictatorship and the menace of the bayonet, by means of bribery, intimidation and deception!
Page me9.357

This is what is called “Prussian honour”, “Prussian loyalty”!
Page me9.357
If the Ministers had waited a few more weeks, perhaps the Austro-Hungarian revolution would have spared them the trouble and dispersed both Chambers.
Page me9.357
As for the significance of this new coup d'état, it is quite obvious. We are going to be made to experience the rule of the sabre raised to the second power. We shall have most graciously foisted on us laws on the press, on associations, on civil disturbances, on posters etc., to such an extent that the German philistine's eyes will fill with tears. There will be persecution, disciplinary punishment, arrests; the state of siege will be made universal and, to cap it all, finally a new Constitution will be introduced, and an electoral law with property qualifications as well as a House of Lords, a Constitution in which the present first Chamber will figure as the second.

Page Break me9.358
Page me9.358
In short, things will be pushed as far as Prussian pluck will permit.
Page me9.358
We, for our part, wish only that Herr Manteuffel will once more convene the United Diet†273 of blessed memory.

Written by Engels on April 28, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 285 (second edition), April 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.359

[POSEN]

Page me9.359
Cologne, April 28. Our readers will be thankful to us if from time to time we examine the “splendour and might” of our Hohenzollern royal family and the simultaneous wonderful prosperity of the chief supports of its noble throne, the bug-ridden knights of Brandenburg who have been transplanted into every province.
Page me9.359
In this instructive investigation we deal today with the Polish part†a of our fatherland in the narrower sense. Already last summer, on the occasion of the glorious pacification and reorganisation of Poland carried out by shrapnel and caustic,†274 we tested the German-Jewish lies about the “predominantly German population” in the towns, “the large German landed estates” in the countryside, and the royal-Prussian merit for the growth of general well-being. Readers of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung will recall that we learned from official figures and reports of the Archbishop of Gnesen and Posen†b to the bourgeois transitional Minister Camphausen†c that in the parts of the territory included within the Prussian demarcation lines, not about one half, but hardly one-sixth, of the population is Germans,†d whereas the lying statistics of the Prussian Government step by step increased the alleged German population the more the progress of the counter-revolution seemed to make possible a new division and a new diminution of the Polish part of Posen. We discovered that in connection with these figures the German national simpletons and money-grubbers of the Frankfurt parliamentary swamp always counted as Germans the Polish Jews as well, although this meanest of all races, neither by its jargon nor by its descent, but at most only through its lust for profit, could have any relation of kinship with Frankfurt. We discovered that in fact relatively very few of small German landowners were ensconced in individual districts of Posen, and then only as a result of treacherous Prussian speculation on Polish poverty, since, by the Cabinet Order of 1833, all auctioned estates could be sold exclusively to Prussian junkers from the backwoods, to whom the Government advanced money for that purpose. Finally, we discovered that the benefits and services rendered by the Hohenzollern paternalism consisted in the fact that after the March revolution, out of cowardice, the finest promises were given of a "national reorganisation", and then, with the growth of the counter-revolution, by means of a five times repeated and ever greater partition, the noose was fastened more tightly round the neck of the country, whereupon "reorganisation" was made dependent on "pacification" i.e. the surrender of weapons. Finally, when this condition was fulfilled, "My glorious army"†275 was let loose on the unarmed, trustful country in order in alliance with the Jews to plunder the churches, set fire to the villages, beat the Poles to death in public places with ramrods or brand them with caustic and, after having taken revenge for their belief in the "March promises", pay honour to God and his Christian-Germanic Majesty on this field of corpses.

Page Break me9.360
Page me9.360
Such was the charitable work of Prussian "reorganisation" in Posen. Let us now deal also with the origin of large-scale Prussian landownership, the domains and estates. Their history is no less instructive as regards the "splendour and might" of the Hohenzollern family and the value of its beloved rogue knights.
Page me9.360
In 1793 the three crowned thieves divided the Polish booty among themselves according to the same right by which three highwaymen divide among themselves the purse of a defenceless traveller.†276 Posen and South Prussia on that occasion received the Hohenzollerns as hereditary rulers in exactly the same way as the Rhine Province in 1815 received them as hereditary rulers, — in accordance with the right of trafficking in people and of kidnapping. As soon as this right of trafficking in people and of kidnapping is abolished, the Poles, like the Rhinelanders, will cancel with a red stroke the title-deed of their hereditary Hohenzollern Grand Duke.
Page me9.360

The first thing by which in plundered Poland the Hohenzollern Father of the country manifested his Prussian benevolence was the confiscation of the lands formerly belonging to the Polish Crown and Church. In general we have not the slightest objection to such confiscation; on the contrary, we hope it will soon be the turn of other crown lands. We ask however for what purpose were these confiscated estates used? In the interest of "the general well-being" of the country, for which the Brandenburg paternal regime was so benevolently concerned during the work of pacification and reorganisation in 1848? In the interests of the people whose sweat and blood created those estates? We shall see.

Page Break me9.361
Page me9.361
At that time Minister Hoym, who for twenty years had administered the province of Silesia quite free from any supervision and used that power for the most junker-like swindling and extortions, was entrusted with the administration of South Prussia as well, in reward for his services to God, King and country. In the interests of the "splendour and might" of the dynasty and in order to create a splendid and mighty class of devoted junkers from the backwoods, Hoym proposed to his lord and master†a that he should bestow as many as possible of the confiscated Church and Crown lands to so-called "deserving persons". And that was done. A host of rascally knights, favourites of royal mistresses, creatures of the Ministers, accomplices whom one wanted to silence, were presented with the largest and richest estates of the plundered country and thereby "German interests" and "predominantly German landownership" were implanted among the Poles.
Page me9.361
In order not to arouse royal cupidity, Hoym had as a precaution assessed these estates for the King at a quarter or sixth part of their value, and sometimes even less; he was afraid, and probably not without reason, that if the King were to learn the true value of these estates, he would think of his own "paternal" pocket before anything else. During Hoym's four years of administration after the "pacification",†277 from 1794 to 1798, there were in this manner given away: in the Posen administrative region 22, in the Kalisch, formerly Petrikau, region 19, in the Warsaw region 11, altogether 52 larger and smaller groups of estates, which in total contained not less than two hundred and forty-one separate estates. The King was told that the value of these estates was 3 1/2 million talers, but their true value exceeded twenty million talers.
Page me9.361
The Poles will know from whom during the coming revolution they will have to extract these 20 million talers, that Polish milliard, stolen from them by the right of traffic in people.

Page Break me9.362
Page me9.362
In the Kalisch region alone the area of the estates given away amounted to more than a third of all the Crown and Church lands, and the income from these estates, even according to the miserable estimates of the value of the grants in 1799 alone, was 247,000 talers annually.

Page me9.362

In the Posen administrative region the Owinsk estate with its extensive forests was presented to Tresckow, a haberdasher. At the same time the adjacent Crown estate of Szrin, which had not a single tree, was declared a state domain and had to buy its timber at government expense from Tresckow's forests.

Page me9.362

Finally, in other regions, the deeds of gift expressly freed the estates from ordinary taxes, and moreover freed them “in perpetuity”, so that no Prussian King should ever have the right to impose new taxes on them.

Page me9.362

We shall now see in what manner the stolen estates were given away and to which “deserving persons”. The extent of the services of these junkers from the backwoods, however, compels us for the sake of coherent exposition to deal with this subject in a special article.†278

Written by Engels on April 28, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 285 (second edition), April 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.363

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.363

The imperial army is disintegrating. The Croats have openly rebelled and forced their Ban, Jellachich, to go with them from Pest down the Danube by steamship to the south, probably so that they may protect their homeland. Jellachich had to give way, and hence the whole of the First Army Corps is on the march southwards.

Page me9.363

Welden has indeed withdrawn his headquarters to Raab. Though he insists that Ofen is still garrisoned (by 6,000 men commanded by Schlick, they say), this however is very doubtful.

Page me9.363

Another rumour, though immediately disavowed by other sources, has it that Wohlgemuth, who has just been defeated, has now defeated Görgey!!!

Page me9.363

The Pest mail of the 22nd arrived in Vienna 24 hours late.

Page me9.363

A letter from Pressburg to Breslau of April 24 says

“that the Komorn siege artillery, sailing up the Danube, has just arrived and that the Austrian troops are withdrawing to Pressburg”.

Page me9.363

Finally the correspondent expresses the fear that all correspondence will probably be interrupted quite soon. The last mail was also missing in Pressburg.

Page me9.363

Welden's proclamation, mentioned previously, runs thus:

“To reassure the public we herewith announce that according to news just received from the headquarters of Lieutenant-Field Marshal Baron Welden, Ofen continues to be occupied by an adequate force, and the main army, continuously following the enemy's movements on the right bank of the Danube, is in process of being concentrated. At the same time we announce that Komorn is still under continuous bombardment and is being kept under observation by our troops. In addition, Csorich's division continues to occupy Gran and covers the Danube crossing.

Page Break me9.364

“The Commanding General and Deputy Governor,
Baron von Böhm, Lieutenant-Field Marshal.”†a

Page me9.364

The Austrian retreat towards Vienna is now called “concentration”.

Page me9.364

The martial-law paper Die Presse reports the following on the latest operations:

“The Hungarians were above all concerned to get possession of the left bank of the Danube above Waitzen by a rapid movement under cover of the mountains. Thus they achieved a double purpose: the insurrection gained scope and strength, and they could hope in this way to relieve Komorn, the key to the Danube. The execution of this plan was concealed from the Austrian general by sham attacks on our troops by a few brigades, and since he allowed himself to be deceived it was in the main successful. The insurgents crossed the Eipel and Gran and were thus able to bypass General Wohlgemuth, stationed at Kemend with 15,000 men. This bypassing was executed with far superior numbers of insurgents and could not have been prevented even by Wohlgemuth's most energetic and devoted resistance. The Magyars extended the line of their bypassing to Neutra, and, while their right wing reached the flank of the royal imperial troops between Sallo and the river Gran, their left wing threatened the rear. It seems therefore to have become impossible for General Wohlgemuth to carry out his intention of retreating across the Waag, thus covering Pressburg and occupying the Schütt Island in conjunction with the corps besieging Komorn, for he withdrew to Neuhäusel.”†b

Page me9.364

The (Italian) Mazzuchelli regiment is reported to have gone over to the Hungarians.

Page me9.364

In Pest, a proclamation†c issued by Havas, the royal commissioner, warns the inhabitants against attempts on the departing royal imperial troops, as the destruction of the city would ensue; Havas exhorts them not to place any obstacles in the way of the withdrawal of the troops. — The military hospitals have been placed under the protection of the municipality. The guns have disappeared from Ofen's ramparts. The imperial side must be in a bad way if it has to resort to such proclamations.
Page me9.364

The Hungarian banknotes are — al pari†d; the Austrian notes have dropped considerably.
Page me9.364

The Pester Zeitung has engaged a Magyar editor; the Figyelmezö has ceased to appear.
Page me9.364

The retreat from Pest is said to be the result of a 48-hour cease-fire granted by the Magyar forces outside Pest to the imperial forces.

Page Break me9.365
Page me9.365

The Neue Oder-Zeitung writes:

"The Magyar army is reported to amount to 200,000 men, including the Landsturm. In newly occupied areas, Kossuth likewise calls up the Landsturm, so that his combat forces will soon amount to 300,000 men, etc. etc. The fact is that since March 4 the energy of the Croat troops has declined, and Jellachich is having to employ all his prestige to restrain them."

Page me9.365

General of the Cavalry Hammerstein has not left Lemberg to this day, and the First Deutschmeister battalion†279 marched off to Stryj only on the 14th of this month, to replace a battalion stationed there and destined for Hungary. The report that Lieutenant-Field Marshal Vogl is with the corps which consists of 20,000 men and is already on Hungarian soil has thus proved incorrect. The entire force now on the way to Hungary probably consists of 53 companies of infantry, six squadrons of cavalry and four artillery batteries, formed up in three columns. The first is commanded by Major-General Barco, the second by Major-General Benedek, and the third by Colonel Ludwig. Lieutenant-Field Marshal Vogl is in charge of the operations.
Page me9.365

As a precautionary measure, Lieutenant-Field Marshal Simunich has sent guns to Vienna; but already yesterday they were sent back to Hungary by steamship.
Page me9.365

Since the 25th, more fresh troops have arrived in Vienna and others have marched off. Commercial and banking circles have recovered a little from their fears. In the suburbs, especially Josefstadt and Wieden, considerable excitement prevails, and last night, particularly in the former, people drank immoderately in most inns; nay, Hungarian tunes were demanded and chanted.
Page me9.365

Two days previously, in the Josefstadt transport depot, a detachment of the Hungarian Alexander infantry regiment,†280 which is in process of reorganisation, was worked on by emissaries. But the battalion was quickly sent away, and some of the "agitators"†281 were arrested. Today was the first day of recruiting by the drawing of lots and up to now it has passed off quietly, although in the suburbs those liable to conscription had been greatly incited. The Government has taken stringent police measures to check the throng of "agitators" and to remove strangers. Kossuth's proclamations to the sister nation in Vienna, in which it is called upon to aid in the restoration to the throne of the legitimate Emperor Ferdinand, have been read here. In addition, the rumour was circulating that a cabinet council decided yesterday to reject Russian intervention in the Austro-Hungarian question.

Page Break me9.366
Page me9.366

Although somewhat belatedly, we are reprinting a letter from Pressburg which appeared in the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen, because it contains much that is interesting.

"The stage-coaches to the Upper Comitats were discontinued already last week; soon afterwards, mail also was dispatched only to Neutra, and — yesterday morning it was already reported that the Hungarians had entered Neuhäusel (three to four hours from Komorn). During the day, a traveller arriving here from Tyrnau showed me a proclamation issued by the military commandant there, which refuted the rumour that the Hungarians had entered Neutra as well, but in such a way that from the few lines one might easily infer the opposite. Yesterday afternoon, this doubt was strengthened by the dispatch by train to Tyrnau of a detachment from the garrison here, provided with guns. Late in the evening, I was told by an acquaintance who had arrived the same day from Neuhäusel that this town was already occupied by an insurgent force of nearly 40,000-45,000 men together with a considerable number of guns, and the royal imperial troops, about 12,000-15,000 men, had withdrawn to Sellye (two hours up-river towards Pressburg), because of the great superiority of the enemy. I was still quite unwilling to believe this strange news, when I heard an imperial army sergeant confirm this sad fact. Both agreed that the troops had run out of ammunition and for that reason alone had to retreat. An observation that unfortunately one has had to hear more than once since the beginning of the unhappy civil war in Hungary.
Page me9.366
"Our trades people here were however greatly surprised when this morning they wanted to travel by train to the market in Tyrnau, and found that railway journey there had been suspended. In answer to their enquiries they were told that last night almost the whole of our garrison, together with artillery, had been hurriedly sent off to Tyrnau, for which purpose all the carriages had been requisitioned. — It has become known that a fairly heavy encounter between our troops and the enemy army has taken place at Neuhäusel, on which occasion the Nassau infantry regiment is said to have suffered heavily. It is also said that the Tyrnau railway carriages which left last night will bring back here a large number of royal imperial troops today.
Page me9.366

“A camp of about 18-20 battalions is soon to be formed outside one of the city lines. It is certain that already last week, the innkeeper in the Schlossberg fort which is now fairly heavily fortified, was given definite instruction by the military commandant here to lay in all necessary provisions for at least three to four weeks, and the garrison here is expecting at any moment the order to move into that fort with bag and baggage. — The announced issue of the new compulsory notes naturally did not produce a good mood. The standing questions regarding these notes are: (1) To what amount are they to be issued? (2) Will the Bohemian, Silesian and Austrian industrialists accept them at their full value?
Page me9.366
“Postscript. Just now we hear that the Hungarian advance guard is already at Szered.”†a

Page me9.366
The same newspaper carries a report from Vienna about Transylvanian affairs:

“A considerable number of refugees from Transylvania arrived here recently. Some of them, who came directly from Hermannstadt — directly now means through Wallachia and via Esseg — relate the events there in almost identical terms. The murder stories are in large part invented; looters were shot, and the strictest discipline was soon established. Bem put up to public auction all the belongings of the officers which they left behind, with the exception of General Puchner's belongings and correspondence: these he forwarded to him by some Honveds, together with a polite letter. They were, however, intercepted by the Russians, and none of the refugees was able to say anything about what had happened to either the Honveds or the documents. Incidentally, they depict the condition of the country as deplorable, and the conduct of the Russians towards the refugees as really shocking, but all agree that they were moved by the kindness and considerateness of the Turks.”

Page Break me9.367

Written by Engels about April 28, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 285 (second edition), April 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.368

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.368
No reports of further victories. On the contrary, we hear now that the Austrians are retreating in the greatest confusion on all fronts.
Page me9.368

The brutal butcher Welden has landed himself in a fine mess. He is as good as cut off from Vienna, and the only line of retreat still open to him is that to Styria via Vesprim, along the Plattensee and through the pathless mountains.
Page me9.368
Wohlgemuth, completely cut off from the main body of the army, is in a totally indefensible position between Sellye on the Waag and Bös on the Danube, on the Schütt Island. The path to Pressburg is open to Klapka's right wing, which faces Wohlgemuth there.
Page me9.368
Pest is now actually occupied by the Hungarians (on the evening of the 23rd). The imperial forces were given sufficient time for their retreat, since on that condition they promised not to bombard Pest. The pretence of the imperial forces to wish to defend Ofen is without significance, for Ofen could have been held only by threatening to bombard Pest.
Page me9.368
Welden has again been in Ofen. He obviously does not know where to turn.
Page me9.368
Jellachich's Croats have had to turn back; the Danube below Pest was occupied by the Hungarians with artillery. But they will nevertheless attempt to break through to Croatia.
Page me9.368
Jablonowsky has already passed through Raab with his brigade, which is going to Oedenburg.
Page me9.368
There is great excitement in Vienna. The workers are rejoicing. The mail to Hungary has not been dispatched from there for the past three days.
Page me9.368
Fifty thousand Russians are said to have received orders to march into Transylvania from the north and south.

Page Break me9.369
Page me9.369
The Olmütz Ministry has now certainly requested Russian intervention in Hungary as well.
Page me9.369
The Berlin National-Zeitung quotes the following alleged conditions under which the Hungarians would be willing to conclude peace:
Page me9.369
(1) Recognition of the Kingdom of Hungary in its old boundaries, hence including Croatia, Slavonia and the Military Border.†282
Page me9.369
(2) Union with Transylvania as resolved and determined last year by the Transylvanian and Hungarian Assemblies.†283
Page me9.369
(3) A general amnesty throughout Austria; the immediate release of all the October prisoners†a and compensation for the families of those murdered.

Page me9.369

(4) Demobilisation to Hungary of the Hungarian regiments still serving in Italy and the other parts of the Empire.

Page me9.369

(5) Recognition of the Hungarian Constitution of 1848.†284

Page me9.369

(6) Hungary to remain under the government of a provisional executive power originating from the Assembly, until the succession to the throne is established by law, and the King, who is to be elected, has been crowned in Buda-Pest and has sworn loyalty to the Constitution.

Page me9.369

(7) Galicia to enter into the same relationship to the Austrian union of states in which Hungary stands now and will stand in future, and be called the Polish Kingdom of Galicia; hence Galicia will be linked with Austria in a personal union and will have its own army and its own finances.

Page me9.369

(8) The share of Hungary in the Austrian National Debt to be determined by the Hungarian Assembly by a simple majority.

Written by Engels on April 30, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 286, May 1, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.370

THE COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARY PLANS IN BERLIN

Page me9.370

Cologne, April 30. The plans of our counter-revolutionary Government are gradually being revealed.

Page me9.370

It was intended that a new stage of the Prussian counter-revolution should date from April 27. It was desired to provoke the Berlin people into street fighting, perhaps to allow the insurrection á la Cavaignac to achieve “considerable magnitude”, then to crush it by Cavaignac's means and with superior force such as Cavaignac possessed, to proclaim martial law, to favour a few deputies and a good number of agitators†285 with powder and shot, and finally, by new dictated measures to get rid of the troublesome fetters which even the martial-law Charter of December 5 still imposed on our counter-revolution.

Page me9.370

The provoked uprising would have provided a sufficient excuse for asserting that the people “were not yet mature enough” for the freedom most graciously bestowed on them, and that it was impossible to govern under such an electoral law and such a Constitution.†286 “To avoid bloodshed”, and therefore in the interests of the people, the last remnants of freedom had to be destroyed. “To avoid bloodshed”, a state of siege had to be proclaimed throughout the country with the exception of Further Pomerania! All that could be asserted only after a decent-sized revolt in Berlin, with the requisite disturbances in Breslau, Magdeburg, Cologne etc., had taken place and had been successfully suppressed with the aid of grape-shot.
Page me9.370

Hence the brutal behaviour of the constables against the Left assembled in the Konversationshalle,†287 and the cordon of troops encircling Dönhoff Square; hence the rapid fire on an unarmed peaceful crowd, which could not disperse because all the streets were barred to it.

Page Break me9.371
Page me9.371

The calm behaviour of the people despite all provocation upset the calculations of the counter-revolutionaries. They have no pretext for issuing dictates, but dictate they must. Perhaps this evening already we shall learn what new turn these gentlemen have decided on.
Page me9.371

What extensive plans were envisaged is evident from all the circumstances. Firstly, from the simultaneous dissolution of the Chamber in Hanover, secondly and in particular, from Herr Radowitz's journey to Berlin.
Page me9.371

Herr Radowitz is the heart and soul of the Prussian counter-revolution. He drafted the plan for the counter-revolution of November last, but he himself still remained behind the scenes and intrigued in Frankfurt on behalf of the Prussian hereditary imperial crown. This time Radowitz himself went to Berlin in order, it is said, to come out in the open at last and to become Prime Minister. A Radowitz Government — that is the heart of the matter!†a
Page me9.371

Furthermore, we definitely know the following facts:
Page me9.371

1) In the course of last week all Chefpräsidenten received from their Oberpräsidenten a document informing them of the forthcoming dissolution of the Chamber and directing them to take all necessary precautionary measures.
Page me9.371

2) A ministerial rescript was sent to all government authorities stating:
Page me9.371

1. That all burgomasters are obliged to report daily to the appropriate government authorities about the impression produced by the dissolution of the Chamber. The government authorities, for their part, must present collective reports on this subject to the Ministry.
Page me9.371

2. For the present new elections would not be held; on the other hand, measures will be taken against many members of the “so-called” Left.
Page me9.371
3. All precautionary measures should be taken to suppress any attempt at revolt.
Page me9.371
The rescript is signed: Manteuffel.
Page me9.371
Herr Manteuffel, or rather Herr Radowitz, his superior, could not have rendered a better service to the developing Hungarian-Polish-German revolution than precisely at the present time to come forward openly with his plans for the restoration of the absolutist regime.

Written by Engels on April 30, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 286, May 1, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.372

LASSALLE

Page me9.372
Cologne, May 1. The day after tomorrow the indictment against Lassalle on the charge of direct incitement to take up arms against the royal power will come before the Assizes in Düsseldorf.
Page me9.372
It will be recalled that Lassalle, Cantador (head of the Düsseldorf civic militia) and the street-vendor Weyers were arrested last November when the state of siege was proclaimed in Düsseldorf, and an investigation was begun against them on account of the above-mentioned “crime under Articles 87 and 102 of the Code pénal”.†288
Page me9.372
The investigation proceeded as slowly as possible. Whereas the simultaneously instituted tax-refusal trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats took place already on February 8 in Cologne,†289 one assize period after another elapsed in Düsseldorf before the Cologne indictment board had even referred the case to the Assizes. But Marx, Schneider and Schapper were at liberty, whereas Lassalle was kept in the Düsseldorf remand prison; yet the Code d'instruction criminelle†290 lays down that the case of an arrested person should have priority in being dealt with!
Page me9.372
In prison Lassalle was given a quite special kind of preference. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung has often enough had occasion to report examples of the tenderness with which he was treated by the myrmidons of the royal-Prussian judiciary.†a Whereas all sorts of favours were conferred on Cantador — for, despite his political activity, Cantador had a great many friends among the Düsseldorf bourgeoisie — Lassalle had once again†291 to experience the arbitrary tyranny to which a royal-Prussian prisoner under examination is subjected. Without speaking of the pettier annoyances, we shall merely recall the brutal way in which Herr Morret, the prison governor, treated Lassalle in the presence of the examining magistrate, Herr Ebermeyer (whom we now have the pleasure of having here, in Cologne). Lassalle sent a complaint to the Public Prosecutor's office. The Public Prosecutor General, Herr Nicolovius, decided: the action in question is neither a crime nor an offence and therefore cannot be the subject of legal proceedings!

Page Break me9.373
Page me9.373

We recall further that the physician considered that outdoor walks were absolutely necessary for Lassalle's health, to which the Public Prosecutor's office gave its consent, whereas the government authority prohibited them, although according to the law a prisoner undergoing examination does not come under the jurisdiction of the government authority but solely under that of the Public Prosecutor.
Page me9.373

The difficulties involved in gaining access to Lassalle in the prison, the excuses, evasions etc. are familiar to everyone who has ever tried to penetrate into the interior of the Düsseldorf “institution”.
Page me9.373

The investigation was at last concluded and the case should have gone to the Court. There was then still enough time to bring the case for trial at the last Assizes, which were held in February and March. But they wanted to prevent this at all costs. When the dossiers were submitted to the deputy Chief Public Prosecutor, the “gracious” Herr von Ammon I, for his final conclusion, Herr Ammon suddenly produced a letter from Lassalle to a certain Stangier, a farmer in the Altenkirchen district, in order to base a fresh charge on it. But this letter had for several weeks already lain quietly in the office desk of Herr Ammon, without the idea occurring to him of adding it to the dossiers as a new point in the indictment. Now, when everything was ready and the time for the Assizes was at hand, now Herr Ammon came forward with the letter. Then, of course, new interrogations of witnesses had to take place and the case was delayed for several weeks. And this period was just sufficient to make it impossible for Lassalle's case to be dealt with at the Assizes then about to be held.
Page me9.373

The letter, which Herr Ammon, as he himself admitted, had kept for a fairly long time in his office desk, was moreover so unimportant that neither the Court nor the indictment board paid any attention to it or listed it as an additional reason for indictment!
Page me9.373

In short, the Assizes were successfully avoided, and the next session began only in May. One deputation after another went to the Public Prosecutor General Herr Nicolovius, and asked for the case to be expedited or for an extraordinary session of the Assizes to be called. Herr Nicolovius promised to do all he could and stated that in no case would Lassalle be imprisoned for as much as six months. And now! It is hardly two weeks short of six months.

Page Break me9.374
Page me9.374
The Court at last decided: all three accused were referred to the indictment board. But here a difficulty arose: people were quite convinced that in the whole Düsseldorf Circuit no jury could be found that would convict Herr Cantador. Hence in order to free Cantador, Lassalle also would have to be acquitted, even by people who would otherwise have convicted him. And it was precisely the conviction of Lassalle that was desired by the authorities in Düsseldorf, the Government, and even the very high and supreme camarilla. The hostility to Lassalle "does not even stop short of the throne".
Page me9.374
This is what has happened:

"The indictment board drops the case against Cantador and sets him free, whereas Lassalle and Weyers remain in prison and have to come before the Assizes."

Page me9.374
Yet the charge against Cantador was exactly the same as against Lassalle, except for a single speech which Lassalle made in Neuss.†292
Page me9.374
And it is precisely this speech in Neuss that is seized on and for which Lassalle is committed to the Assizes.
Page me9.374
Let us briefly recall the whole course of events.
Page me9.374
At a time when at any day an open struggle could break out between the now defunct National Assembly and the Crown, Düsseldorf was, as is well known, one of the greatest centres of agitation of all the towns in the Rhine Province. The civic militia here was completely on the side of the National Assembly and, moreover, was led by a democrat. It was ready to turn passive resistance into active resistance as soon as Berlin gave the signal for it. Arms and munitions were available. Lassalle and Cantador stood at the head of the whole movement. They not merely called on the citizens to arm themselves against the Manteuffel Government, they actually provided them with arms. Here, in Düsseldorf, was the centre of their activity. It was here, therefore, if any crime had actually been committed, that this crime must have taken place. But where is it supposed to have taken place? Not in Düsseldorf, but — in Neuss!!
Page me9.374
Lassalle was at a meeting in Neuss and called for armed reinforcements to be sent to Düsseldorf. This call did not even have any result, because matters never reached the point of fighting. And yet Lassalle's crime is supposed to consist in this!
Page me9.374
Consequently, Lassalle has not been committed for trial at the Assizes on account of his main activity, on account of the actual arming, or the actual uprising, that was on the point of breaking out in Düsseldorf. There was no “crime” in that. Even the indictment board, decrepit though it is, had to admit that. The alleged crime consisted in a quite fortuitous, incidental action which was totally dependent on the main action in Düsseldorf and absolutely meaningless apart from it; — it consisted not in the organisation of armed force against the government authorities in Düsseldorf, but in a call to the inhabitants of Neuss to support that organisation!

Page Break me9.375
Page me9.375

But, of course, Cantador was not in Neuss when Lassalle made this terrible speech; Cantador did not call on the inhabitants of Neuss for armed resistance, Cantador merely — organised the inhabitants of Düsseldorf for armed resistance and called on the Düsseldorf civic militia, which is itself part of the Government's armed force, to resist the Government. That is the difference, and that is why Cantador was set free, and Lassalle kept in prison up to the present session of the Assizes.
Page me9.375

But that is not all. Lassalle also directly appealed to the farmer Stangier for armed reinforcements to be sent to Düsseldorf. This letter is in the dossiers and is cited word for word in the indictment (see Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 277, second edition). Did the indictment regard this letter as a reason for committing Lassalle to the Assizes? By no means. Even the Court, which had put forward nine counts against Lassalle, eight of which were dropped by the indictment board, never thought of including this letter among them. But this letter contains exactly the same alleged “crime” as that committed by Lassalle in Neuss.
Page me9.375

Rarely has anything more inconsistent, more contradictory and more incomprehensible been fabricated than this decision of the indictment board to send the case for trial.
Page me9.375

But what is certainly commendable is the following: even according to the decision of the Cologne indictment board, in all the agitation that was carried out in Düsseldorf last November, in the direct call for resistance to the Government, in the arming, in the procurement of ammunition, in the direct and open opposition of the civic militia to the Government, in the oath sworn by the civic militia that they would fight, arms in hand, against the Government and in support of the National Assembly — in all this there was no crime. The Cologne indictment board has said so.
Page me9.375

And it is true that on this point it agrees with the Cologne Court, and indeed with the Cologne Public Prosecutor's office. During the investigation of the case against the Rhenish District Committee, they both calmly ignored the call to arm against the “enemy”, took no notice of the criminal case involved, and confined themselves merely to the fact of a call to revolt punishable by a police court, and it came before the Assizes only because it was issued through the press.

Page Break me9.376

Page me9.376

Lassalle was dealt with much more cunningly. First of all criminal proceedings were instituted, and the police court kept in reserve. For in case he were to be acquitted in connection with the speech made in Neuss, he was committed for trial to the police court on account of his call for resistance to officials (revolt) supposed to be contained in two Düsseldorf speeches.

Page me9.376

We need merely to recall here the course of the trial of the Rhenish District Committee. The case is completely analagous. At that trial it was argued that the matter under consideration was either a crime (the same as that of which Lassalle is accused) or nothing at all, and that it was not possible to call for armed resistance to the Government without at the same time calling for resistance to all the individual officials who constitute the Government. The jury's verdict was an acquittal.

Page me9.376

Lassalle will be in the same position when, after his indubitable acquittal by the jury, he comes before the police court. But meanwhile they have a pretext to apply for the prolongation of the arrest, and in addition it is easier to manipulate the police court than the jurymen!

Page me9.376

Tomorrow we shall deal with the indictment itself, and from it, too, prove the absurdity of this whole trial.

Written by Engels on May 1, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 287, May 2, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.377

A PRUSSIAN KICK FOR THE FRANKFURT ASSEMBLY

Page me9.377

Cologne, May 1. Another new item in the history of the Prussian counter-revolution. The King gives the Frankfurt Assembly a determined kick and contemptuously casts in its face the proffered gold-tinsel crown of an imaginary empire.†293

Page me9.377

If at the right time the Frankfurt Assembly had acted with energy, it could now order the arrest of this Hohenzollern, who is filled with insolence, and commit him to the Assize Court for “insult to the National Assembly” (Law of September 1848, published also in Prussia†294). As yet there exists no “imperial” law that declares the individual sovereigns exempt also from responsibility in regard to the “empire”; and the imperial irresponsibility has been rejected by the Hohenzollern.

Page me9.377

The new Prussian “imperial” Note of April 28 softens the “imperial” kick by a few kind observations about the so-called German imperial Constitution. This innocent botchwork is depicted in the Note as a supreme example of all that is bad and as an extreme product of revolution and secret republicanism “exceeding all bounds”.
Page me9.377

St. Paul's Church as a robbers' cave of carbonari!†295 Welcker and Gagern as secret republicans, “Möros with a dagger under his cloak”†a! Bassermann, the man who sees spectres, himself turned into one of the “Bassermannic characters”†296! That, of course, is flattering for the worthy Frankfurt deputies after all the scorn with which they have been treated by the people, after all the curses heaped on them by the defeated barricade fighters of Frankfurt and Vienna, and there are people of all shades of opinion, right down to Herr Vogt, who are capable of really believing such nonsense.

Page Break me9.378
Page me9.378

The Prussian Note is the last threat to the Frankfurt Assembly even before it is actually dispersed. Once more the stubborn Hohenzollern proffers his hand for a “reconciliation”. And, in point of fact, after the Assembly has gone so far it could truly make one little step further and become completely a tool of Prussia.
Page me9.378

Meanwhile, however, a section of the people, and especially the peasantry and the lower middle class of the small south German states, cling to the Assembly and to the so-called imperial Constitution. The army is favourably disposed towards the imperial Constitution. The people regard every step, however small, towards the unification of Germany as a step towards abolition of the petty sovereigns and liberation from the oppressive burden of taxation. The hatred of Prussia, too, plays a part here. The Swabians even made a revolution in support of the so-called imperial Constitution†297; it was, of course, a storm in a teacup, but all the same it was something.
Page me9.378

Hence, if the worthy Frankfurt deputies possessed the slightest degree of courage, it would not be possible to disperse the Frankfurt Assembly without the use of force. They now have a last opportunity of atoning at least for a small part of the grievous sins they have committed. If simultaneously with the victories of the Hungarians, the break-up of Austria, and the fury of the people in Prussia at the Hohenzollern-Radowitz-Manteuffel betrayals, Frankfurt and South Germany were to rise up openly in defence of the imperial Constitution, they could form a temporary centre for a new revolutionary uprising based on Hungary.
Page me9.378

But then the worthy deputies would not have to shrink from proclaiming civil war either and, in the extreme case, if it comes to making a decision, they would have to prefer a united and indivisible German republic to a restoration of the German Federal Diet.†298

Page me9.378

But anyone who supposes the Frankfurters capable of that is greatly mistaken. These gentlemen will make a little noise, offer a little resistance, enough to satisfy at least to some extent the requirements of decency, and then they will agree to everything that the stubborn Hohenzollern dictates to them. Here and there, perhaps, the people will erect barricades and — will be betrayed as on September 18.†299

Page me9.378

That would be the end of the famous imperial bombastic dramatical performance, if it depended on the Frankfurt gentlemen.

Page Break me9.379

But perhaps the Hungarian hussars, the Polish Uhlans, and the Viennese proletarians will have a word to say, and then matters can nevertheless take a different turn.

Written by Engels on May 1, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 287, May 2, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.380

[THE DISSOLUTION]

Page me9.380

Cologne, May 1. Deputies who arrived here yesterday from Berlin report that the Chambers have been dissolved in Dresden as well.†300

Page me9.380

Hanover, Berlin, Dresden — in Munich there has so far only been an adjournment — do you, honest German citizen, now realise what tune is to be played?

Page me9.380

Last year, when the Frankfurt Assembly was convened, Prussia ordered all the small states to convene their Chambers. Now, exactly one year later, Prussia orders them to dissolve all the Chambers. Then it was Camphausen, now it is Manteuffel. On each occasion there was the same aim, the same intention. Despite all the phrases, Camphausen and Manteuffel go arm in arm.

Page me9.380

And there are still people in Germany who defend the sovereigns!

Written by Engels on May 1, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 287, May 2, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.381

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.381

Cologne, evening of May 1. Reports just received from Berlin and Vienna confirm the continued withdrawal of the imperial troops. In Pressburg, where on the 27th nothing was known about attacks by the Hungarians, there are continuous commotion, confusion and retreat.

Page me9.381

An encounter took place near Komorn. A force consisting of two divisions of imperial troops under Schlick drove the Hungarians from the Sandberg near Acs and this is now presented as a victory. But, on looking at the map and discovering that Acs is situated on the right bank of the Danube, a mile†a from Komorn, the fact emerges that, even according to this official account, the Hungarians have crossed the Danube near Komorn and are in command of the road from Gran to Pressburg. And Schlick still talks about the royal imperial troops surrounding (!) Komorn!!

Page me9.381

Welden's headquarters, transferred from Pest to Kapolna, from Kapolna to Raab, is now moving even further back, to Oedenburg, hard by the Styrian border and to the south of Vienna.

Page me9.381

Jellachich has actually received orders to cut his way through to Croatia and to drum up as many men to escort him as possible.

Page me9.381

North of the Danube, Wohlgemuth has temporarily disappeared from the scene. He was driven off Schütt (the big island in the Danube); and the Csikos (mounted Landsturm) patrolled with impunity from Komorn to Szerdahely, halfway to Pressburg. Wohlgemuth must have withdrawn towards Pressburg and the March.

Page Break me9.382

Page me9.382

From Pressburg and Vienna swarms of black-and-yellow†a supporters are already in flight, some up the Danube, some to Prague.

Page me9.382

It is reported that intervention by the Russians is imminent. One paper even maintains they have taken up positions near Lundenburg, on the border between Austria, Moravia and Hungary, but this is obviously a complete fabrication. It is expected that, as in Transylvania, they will be used as reserve and garrison troops in the towns, thus leaving all the Austrian troops free to concentrate on the Hungarians. It is said that 15,000 Russians are to come to Vienna as a garrison.

Page me9.382

A Prussian staff officer has also arrived in Olmütz “for the purpose of reaching an understanding with the Austrian Government”. When “My glorious army”†301 marches in, the Bohemians will soon discover the meaning of this “understanding”!

Page me9.382

Tomorrow evening we shall probably have news of further decisive Magyar successes.

Written by Engels on May 1, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 287, May 2, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.383

LASSALLE

Page me9.383

Cologne, May 2. Yesterday we promised to return to the indictment against Lassalle.†a

Page me9.383

Lassalle is charged with a “crime under Articles 87 and 102 of the Criminal Code”.†b

Page me9.383

Article 87 is directed against an “attempt or a plot the aim of which is to incite (exciter) the citizens or inhabitants to take up arms against the imperial power”.

Page me9.383

Article 102 imposes the punishments (mainly the death penalty) laid down in the preceding Articles of the section (which includes Article 87) on all those who by speeches in public places or at public meetings, or by the display of posters, incite (excitent) the citizens to commit these crimes. Only in the event of the incitement being unsuccessful is the penalty mitigated to exile.

Page me9.383

Of what is Lassalle being accused?

Page me9.383

Since under a single charge he is alleged to have sinned against Article 87 and simultaneously against Article 102, he can only be accused:

Page me9.383

of having called for the commission of crimes listed in Article 87 in the manner of Article 102, i.e.

Page me9.383

of having incited the citizens to prepare an attempt or a plot the aim of which is an incitement to take up arms against the royal power, i.e.
Page me9.383
of having incited the citizens to incitement to take up arms!

Page Break me9.384
Page me9.384
To the ordinary human mind, that is fairly obvious nonsense. But that is how the Public Prosecutor's office and the indictment board wanted it!
Page me9.384
The point is that Article 102, which makes incitement to commit the crimes envisaged in Articles 86-101 equivalent to the commission of the crime itself, is, if the incitement is successful, quite properly applicable to all of these Articles. It applies even to the remaining items of this same Article 87. For all these Articles are directed against definite actions, to the commission of which instigation is possible. Article 87, for example, which is directed against commission of an attempt or a plot, speaks also about an attempt or plot against the life and person of the Emperor, and about an attempt or plot aimed at altering or destroying the form of government or the order of succession to the throne. All these are things to which one can "incite" people. Incitement to regicide, or to a revolution, is a possible fact; incitement to a plot the aim of which is regicide or a revolution can also occur. But "incitement to prepare an attempt or plot for the purpose of inciting people to take up arms against the royal power", in short, incitement to incitement, is a crime as impossible and as absurd as "an attempt at a remote attempt at high treason", which in the good old times of Prussian Law†302 cost many an unfortunate member of a students' association ten years imprisonment in a fortress, or as the notorious suspect de suspicion d'incivisme (suspected of suspicion of lack of civic sense), which people wearing legitimist spectacles claim to have found in the prison lists of the time of the Terror in 1793.
Page me9.384
Alternatively, if the "incitement to incitement to take up arms" is really a crime that is logically and juridically possible, then for Lassalle to come simultaneously under the passage in question of Article 87 and under Article 102, he should have been indicted not for the speech in Neuss, but for the address to the National Assembly, which states: "We beseech the National Assembly: Issue a call to arms!"†303
Page me9.384
Here is the "incitement to incitement to take up arms". But it has not even occurred to this ne plus ultra of an indictment to see a crime in these words.
Page me9.384
How did it happen that, out of the long series of Articles in the section in question, the Public Prosecutor's office selected and combined with Article 102 precisely the passage to which Article 102 does not apply at all?
Page me9.384
Quite simply. The crime envisaged by Article 87 involves the death penalty. But in the whole of the Rhine Province no jury could be found that would assist in condemning Lassalle to death. The prosecution therefore preferred to include Article 102 as well, which prescribes mitigation of the punishment to exile in cases where the incitement to “crime” is unsuccessful. It was thought that a jury prepared to do this could be found.

Page Break me9.385
Page me9.385
Hence, in order to get rid of Lassalle, the prosecution invented an impossible crime and combined two passages of the law which in combination are sheer nonsense.
Page me9.385
Therefore, either Lassalle is guilty of having violated Article 87, and then one should have the courage to condemn him to death outright, or he is not guilty of having violated Article 87, and then he has not violated Article 102 either, and must certainly be acquitted. But to violate Article 87 in the passage quoted and Article 102 at the same time is an impossibility.
Page me9.385
Note the craftiness of the prosecution. The charge against Lassalle really comes under Article 87 (death penalty). But they do not dare to bring that charge against him; so he is charged under Article 87 in combination with Article 102 (exile). And if that does not succeed, if the jury acquits him, he will be brought before the police court and charged under Articles 209 and 217 (six days' to one year's imprisonment). And all this for one and the same fact, for his activity as an agitator during the movement to refuse payment of taxes!
Page me9.385
Let us now look at the actual corpus delicti — the speech in Neuss on November 21.
Page me9.385
Lassalle is charged with having directly incited the people to take up arms against the royal power.
Page me9.385
According to the statements of the three witnesses referred to in the indictment, Lassalle did directly incite the inhabitants of Neuss to arm themselves, to procure ammunition, to safeguard by force of arms the liberties they had won, to support the National Assembly by effective action etc. However incitement to take up arms in general is by no means an offence, and still less a crime, most certainly not since the revolution and the law of April 6, 1848†304 which guarantees to every Prussian the right to bear arms. According to the Code pénal, incitement to take up arms is punishable only if the arming is directed against individual officials (revolt) or against the royal power, or against another section of the citizens (riot). The present case relates especially to incitement, and indeed to direct incitement to take up arms against the royal power.
Page me9.385
In all three statements of the witnesses, however, there is not a single word about taking up arms against the royal power, they mention only taking up arms to protect the National Assembly. But the National Assembly was a legally constituted, legally existing body, an essential part of the legislative authority, and here indeed an essential part even of the constituent authority. Just as the constituent authority stands high above the executive authority, so the National Assembly stood above the “royal Government”. To call for the universal arming of the people for the protection of this body, which alongside the King is the supreme legislative authority in the country, is regarded by our Public Prosecutors as a serious crime!

Page Break me9.386

Page me9.386

The only passage in which the sensitive nose of a Public Prosecutor could discover a remote reference to the “royal Government” was that concerning the gun-batteries in Neuss. But did Lassalle incite the people of Neuss to arm themselves in order to seize the batteries on the left bank of the Rhine, and in particular did he do so “directly”, as is asserted in the résumé of the indictment and as is required for a conviction?

Page me9.386

On the contrary! Neither “directly” nor indirectly did he incite them to do so. He merely said that the people of Düsseldorf were expecting that the people of Neuss would seize these batteries. And this mere expression of an “expectation” is, in the opinion of the worthy Public Prosecutors, an excitation directe, a direct incitement to take up arms against the royal power!

Page me9.386

Thus, in the quite real arming of Düsseldorf, openly organised for the protection of the National Assembly and clearly directed against none other than the Prussian troops, i.e. against the royal Government (le gouvernement de l'empereur), there is no crime at all, there is merely the offence of resistance to individual officials; but in that mere statement, in those few words, there is a serious crime!

Page me9.386

For what Lassalle did, they do not dare to accuse him; but what he said is supposed to be a serious crime. And what did he say? That it was expected that the people of Neuss would seize the batteries. And who did he say was expecting it? Was it perhaps Lassalle himself? On the contrary, it was the people of Düsseldorf!

Page me9.386

Lassalle said that third persons expect you to do such and such, and according to the logic of the public prosecution that is a “direct appeal” to you actually to do what is expected.

Page me9.386

In Berlin, the Ministers have now dissolved the Chamber and are preparing for further dictatorial measures. Let us suppose that today universal suffrage were to be arbitrarily abolished, the right of association suppressed, freedom of the press destroyed. If we say: We expect that the people will reply to this disgraceful perfidy by erecting barricades — then, according to the Public Prosecutors, we have “directly incited” the citizens of Berlin to arm themselves against the royal power. And if things turn out as the Public Prosecutors desire, we would be sentenced either to death or exile, depending on the circumstances!

Page Break me9.387

Page me9.387

The secret of the whole court action against Lassalle consists in its being an arbitrary trial of a troublesome agitator. In a concealed form it is a trial on a charge of "stirring up discontent"†305 such as prior to the March days we, too, had the pleasure of enjoying here on the Rhine. In the same way, the trial instituted against Weyers is in a concealed form a trial on a charge of lése-majesté. Weyers said: "death to the King" and "the King ought not to be allowed to have the crown a quarter of an hour longer". And these few words, quite innocent from the point of view of the Code pénal, are similarly alleged to contain a "direct incitement to take up arms"!
Page me9.387

And even if Lassalle had actually called for arming against the royal power, what would this mean? Let us adopt the constitutional standpoint and speak in accordance with constitutional ideas. At that time, in November, was it not the duty of every citizen not only to "call for arming", but to take up arms himself in defence of the constitutional representatives of the people against a perfidious "royal Government" which, with the aid of soldiers, drove the Assembly of people's representatives from one building to another, dispersed their sittings, allowed soldiers to use their official documents as spills and for lighting stoves, and finally sent the representatives packing? According to the decisions of the United Diet, and according to Herr Camphausen's famous "legal basis", not to mention the achievements of March 19,†a was not the Assembly an "entity on a footing of equality" with the Crown? And should one not be allowed to defend such an Assembly against encroachments by the so-called "royal Government"?
Page me9.387

Moreover, we have seen that it has become second nature for the "royal Government" to bestow kicks on the people's representatives. Hardly two months after the convocation of the imposed Chambers this same "royal Government" disperses them at the first objectionable decision — disperses the very Chambers which were supposed to revise the Constitution! The Chambers have now recognised the validity of the imposed Constitution, and now we know still less whether we have a Constitution or not. Who knows what will be imposed on us tomorrow?
Page me9.387

And the people who foresaw all that and acted accordingly, who strove energetically to oppose these violent activities of an arrogant camarilla, and who, according to the views of all constitutional countries and especially England, kept completely to a legal basis, these people are arrested on orders from Manteuffel, Simons and Co., held for six months in prison and are finally brought before the Assize Court charged with incitement to riot!

Page Break me9.388

Written by Engels on May 2, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 288, May 3, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.389

PROHIBITION OF THE MEETING OF THE RHENISH MUNICIPAL COUNCILS

Page me9.389

Cologne, May 2. It is with especial satisfaction that we inform our readers that the meeting of the representatives of municipal councils of the Rhine Province convened by the praiseworthy Cologne municipal council has been prohibited by a simple government order.†306 The “good citizens”, who felt so “comfortable” when meetings of democrats were prohibited in September,†307 can now offer thanks to their lords and masters. In September 1848 the democrats' right of assembly was destroyed at least by the respectable violence of the state of siege; the Cologne municipal council's right of assembly, on the other hand, has met its end by a kick at a time when the legal basis is in finest flower.

Written by Engels on May 2, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 288, May 3, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.390

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.390

Cologne, evening of May 2. The Hungarians are taking advantage of the Austrians' hasty retreat and confusion to make a rapid advance on Vienna, on the one hand, and, on the other, to occupy the whole of Upper Hungary up to the Jablunka Pass and the Moravian border. The Slovakian mountain towns are in their hands, and from there they have advanced to the Jablunka Pass. The Pass itself seems to have been taken by them already, for the thunder of artillery has been heard in Neutitschein (near Teschen), indicating that fighting has already occurred on this side of the Carpathians.

Page me9.390

As a result of this swift operation Slovakia has been entirely cleared of imperial troops, the Hungarians thereby gaining an area of 300-350 square miles, with more than 2 million inhabitants providing a source of fresh recruits. The Slovaks, who were formerly in part indifferent, in part even anti-Magyar, are now definitely on the side of the Magyars, since the latter have abolished the feudal burdens of the Slovak peasants and made a number of concessions with regard to language and nationality.

Page me9.390

It is expected that the Magyars will cross the Little Carpathians (border range between Moravia and Hungary) and direct the spearhead of their attack against Olmütz. By dispatching a corps over the Jablunka they could also destroy the railway line to Vienna, thus considerably delaying the Russians' march on that city. Almost all regular troops have been withdrawn from the whole of Moravia; the national guard has replaced them everywhere.

Page me9.390

On the other flank, the Magyars are advancing directly on Vienna and have, according to our Breslau correspondent, already occupied Raab. The Austrian headquarters has been transferred to Oedenburg, and the commissariat from Pressburg to Hainburg (6 miles from Vienna). Here the Austrians are expected to make another stand. Indeed, this position, between the Danube and Neusiedler Lake and behind the Leitha, is the only possible one remaining before Vienna.

Page Break me9.391

Page me9.391

The line along which the Austrians are attempting to rally their forces for a fresh battle is as follows: the right wing is concentrated around Oedenburg, from the southern tip of Neusiedler Lake nearly up to Güns and the Styrian mountains which it touches on the right; the centre stretches from the northern tip of Neusiedler Lake up to the Danube near Hainburg, blocking the road to Vienna; the left wing, Wohlgemuth's corps, on the other side of the Danube near Pressburg, is in a position it cannot possibly hold and from which it will certainly have to withdraw across the River March. As a result the war will be carried into the territory of Austria itself, and Kossuth will continue to wage it there as well. Kossuth has declared his intention of forestalling the Russians and being in Vienna on May 10. And Kossuth has shown that he knows how to keep his word. He wanted to be in Pest on April 24 and he entered it on that very day.

Page me9.391

There is complete obscurity about what has happened to Jellachich. Some sources state that he is already near Mohacs, not far from the Slavonian border (an impossibility since the distance from Pest to Mohacs is much too great). According to other rumours, from black-and-yellow†a sources, he has again taken up his position on the Rakos plain†308 near Pest. The latter is, of course, even less true than the former.

Page me9.391

From the south no direct confirmation has as yet been received of the capture of Semlin by the Magyars. The rest of the news from this area is contradictory; so is that about the arrival of the Russians. All that is certain is that the Russian troops encamped on the Cracow border have been concentrated and are on the point of marching into Austria.

Written by Engels on May 2, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 288, March 3, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.392

THE CONGRESS OF RHENISH TOWNS

Page me9.392

Cologne, May 3. The congress of Rhenish municipal councils will take place after all, although in a less official form, and not until next Tuesday.†309

Page me9.392

It goes without saying that we are expecting nothing at all from this assembly composed of bourgeois elected on the basis of three classes according to the property qualification with the mass of the people debarred from voting. A deputation is to be sent to Berlin, which will not even be allowed into the presence of Herr von Hohenzollern.

Page me9.392

But it may be that the congress will not take place at all. On Sunday various party congresses will be held here in Cologne.†310 The Government is trying at all costs to provoke a conflict between the people and the army, in order to be able to muzzle us Rhinelanders, just as the Berliners have been muzzled.

Page me9.392

It depends on the workers of Cologne whether this subtle Prussian plan will be frustrated. By their calm behaviour, by unshakeable equanimity in the face of the provocations of the soldiers, the Cologne workers can deprive the Government of any excuse for acts of violence.

Page me9.392

Decisive events are at hand. Vienna, Bohemia, South Germany, Berlin, are in a ferment and await the right moment. Cologne can play its part, it can play a very powerful part, but it cannot begin any decisive action.

Page me9.392

Let the workers of Cologne bear in mind, especially next Sunday, that all the provocations of the Government aim only at causing an outburst of such a kind as will occur at a moment unfavourable for us but favourable for the Government.

Page Break me9.393

Page me9.393

Only by great events can revolutions be carried through but if one accepts the challenges of the Government, the most that can result is a revolt.

Page me9.393

Workers of Cologne, remember the 25th of September!†311

Written by Engels on May 3, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 289, May 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.394

[THE THIRD PARTY IN THE ALLIANCE]

Page me9.394

Cologne, May 3. We have pointed out a hundred times that in the coalition of Russia and Austria Herr von Hohenzollern and his Ministry are the “third party in the alliance”.†a A hundred times the honest German citizen has indignantly rejected such an assertion.

Page me9.394

Very well then: it is now firmly established that one of the secret reasons for the dissolution of the Chambers was that, by a secret agreement with the Olmütz knyaz†b and the orthodox supreme Tsar in St. Petersburg,†c the Russians' subordinate knyaz†d in Sans-Souci†312 has pledged his word to put 40,000 Prussians into Bohemia to keep the people there in subjection and as reserves against the Hungarians. This was spoken of openly even in the St. Paul's Church.†e It was impossible to persuade even the deputies of the Centre and part of those of the Right in Berlin to keep silent about it. They were therefore dispersed.

Page me9.394

But that is not all: the Berlin National-Zeitung reported from Berlin on May 1:

We have just learned from a very reliable source: “Yesterday morning the Management Board of the Upper Silesian Railway received a telegram from the Minister of the Interior that 30,000 Russian soldiers would be transferred from Cracow by means of the Upper Silesian Railway (consequently, from Cracow via Mislowitz, Kosel, Ratibor, Oderberg) to Austria. The Board of the Upper Silesian Railway is informed that the royal Prussian Government has no objection to this and it trusts that the Railway Board will not hinder this transport in any way.”

Page Break me9.395

Page me9.395

The telegram was signed: von Manteuffel.†a

Page me9.395

That then is what we have come to: The Government of the imperial Russian subordinate knyaz in Potsdam not only issues warrants for the arrest of Kossuth, Bem and Görgey,†b it even allows 30,000 Russian police agents to be sent by rail through Prussian territory to Hungary — and what is more, it sends 40,000 Prussian soldiers to Bohemia in order to hold down a people which has been contemptuously trampled under foot and which is thirsting for revenge!

Page me9.395

Hear that, Rhinelanders! It is for this, therefore, that we are being subjected to the Russo-Prussian rule of violence, so that our sons and brothers, Rhinelanders like ourselves, shall be sent to Bohemia and perhaps to Hungary, in order that in the service of the Russian Tsar they will help to suppress the last people that is defending the revolution of 1848 arms in hand!

Page me9.395

It is for this we were betrayed to Prussia in 1815, so that the disgrace would fall on us, too, for having allowed the Russians, with bands playing and banners flying, to be marched against the Magyar revolutionary army through our territory, through a country joined with us into a single state.

Page me9.395

It was only by force that we became Prussian subjects and have remained Prussian subjects. We were never Prussians. But now, when we are being led against Hungary, when Russian robber bands are setting foot on Prussian territory, now we feel that we are Prussians, indeed we feel what a disgrace it is to bear the name of Prussian!

Written by Engels on May 3, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 289, May 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.396

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.396

Cologne, evening of May 3. As the flight of the imperial troops from Hungary becomes ever wilder, and the pursuit by the Magyars more inexorable, so much the more confused and contradictory become the reports on events in the theatre of war. They agree only in one respect: that the imperial troops are daily suffering fresh defeats.

Page me9.396

The following facts, however, emerge as pretty well certain:

Page me9.396

Firstly: The battle at Acs, which the imperial forces depicted as a victory, was a defeat. This follows from the fact that Schlick, who claims to have won a victory here, immediately afterwards retreated to Raab. The Lithographierte Correspondenz, too, states that the outcome of the encounter at Acs proved to be disadvantageous for the imperial troops, and that the Zanini regiment, apart from a few officers, went over to the Hungarians.

Page me9.396

Secondly: On April 28, in the region of Hungarian Altenburg (halfway between Raab and Pressburg), the Austrians were defeated again. Various reports concur in stating this. Many wounded were brought across the Leitha and the whole surrounding area is crowded with them. On the 29th and 30th, some 2,000 are said to have been brought to Vienna itself. Some say that Welden's headquarters is in Pressburg, others that it is in Bruck on the Leitha (on Austrian soil). At Raab, too, where Schlick is supposed to have been on the 27th, the pursuing Hungarians are said to have engaged him in a murderous battle.

Page me9.396

From this news it would appear that the bulk of the Austrian army has already been driven out of Hungary. And it is beyond doubt that it is for the most part already on Austrian soil, and in Hungary it merely occupies Pressburg and Oedenburg. In addition, what we predicted is now confirmed, namely that the Hungarians have crossed the Danube at Komorn and are advancing on both sides of this river in a concentric movement against Vienna. The clearance of Slovakia by the Hungarians is now confirmed by the Wiener Zeitung as well.

Page Break me9.397

Page me9.397

Thirdly: It is practically certain that Jellachich, too, has been completely defeated. He himself, as the Wiener Zeitung reports, has already arrived in Esseg, which means that, since he only left Pest on the 23rd or 24th, and was already in Esseg on the 26th, he has made a much quicker journey than his corps. It is said that this corps has been completely destroyed and that the greater part of the survivors have gone over to the Magyars. According to one report, the battle took place at Kis-Bér, but this is impossible since this place, situated a few miles south of Komorn, is quite outside Jellachich's route. Apart from that this report contains also various other impossibilities. The news of Jellachich's defeat, however, appears in all newspapers and correspondents' reports.

Page me9.397

A manifesto issued by Kossuth proclaims the independence of Hungary and its neighbouring territories from Austria and declares the separation of these territories from the Habsburg-Lorraine dynasty because the latter unleashed such a calamitous war against Hungary.†313

Page me9.397

From the south, no news has come of further advances of the Magyars. Perczel is said to have moved with his main army towards Pest. Rukavina has asked for help from the Serbs in order to fortify Temesvar, but the Serbs have refused it. On the contrary, they are demanding the immediate convocation of the Serbian National Assembly for election of the voivode and constitutional establishment of the Voivodina.

Page me9.397

The Hungarians are said to have obtained 80,000 rifles from England via Turkey. The Grosswardein factory supplies them with 300 daily.

Page me9.397

Meanwhile, in Vienna joy and excitement prevail among the people, and consternation in the Government. On April 30, indescribable despondency was evident on the Stock Exchange. Petty traders came from the suburbs and gave accounts of mounting unrest. In the afternoon, well-known barricade personalities were noticed in the streets.

Page me9.397
The Government is in the throes of complete break-up. Not only has Stadion resigned, but it is already the turn of Schwarzenberg, who is to be replaced by Colloredo-Waldsee.
Page me9.397
The Russians are coming. The Russian General von Berg has already travelled via Cracow to Vienna. 12,000-15,000 Russians of all branches of the service, including four squadrons of cavalry and two artillery batteries, were expected in Cracow on May 1 and 2. It is said that the orthodox Tsar†a himself will come to the neighbourhood to supervise the operations.

Page Break me9.398
Page me9.398
The Russians have already marched into the Bukovina, according to a note from Czernowitz of April 28.
Page me9.398
(The Viennese and Prague newspapers have not reached us this evening.)

Written by Engels on May 3, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 289, May 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.399

[NEWS FROM SOUTHERN GERMANY]

Page me9.399
Cologne, May 3. We have today received several letters from various parts of Southern Germany; they are all unanimous in conveying the heartening news that everywhere the people are impatiently awaiting the moment when they can at last confront the barefaced counter-revolution of the rulers “by the grace of God” and their worthy accomplices with a genuine revolution — not like that of March — and avenge the acts of violence and infamy that, day after day, for so long have been perpetrated against the people's rights. Everywhere the people are organising themselves into companies, electing leaders, providing themselves with arms and ammunition etc. It is particularly encouraging, however, to learn that the spirit prevailing amongst the majority of the military there precludes the possibility of once again setting the soldiers like murderous dogs and wild beasts upon their brothers and making them run amuck against their own flesh and blood.

Page me9.399
The justified anger of the people has reached a level that makes an imminent outbreak appear inevitable. It is to be hoped that this time the storm will rage so mightily through all Germany that at last the whole pack of divinely appointed martial-law addicts, robber knights and traitors to the people will be uprooted utterly and finally from German soil.

Written by Engels on May 3, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 289, May 4, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.400

NEWS FROM HUNGARY

Page me9.400
Cologne, May 4. We have received the following reports from Vienna dated May 1:

In the concluding days of last month, and especially yesterday, April 30, an unusual amount of activity could be observed in the streets of the capital. There was general excitement as the news spread about the withdrawals of troops from the Hungarian border. Evidence of the heavy losses and defeats sustained by the Austrian side is provided by the continuous transports of maimed and wounded, who for the past two days have been coming, brought in hundreds of carts, to the military hospitals in Vienna. The latter are already so full that all the corridors and the spaces between the beds are being used to accommodate patients. The men brought back under these conditions are in a wretched state, which cannot but remind one of Napoleon's retreat from Russia — pale, emaciated, tattered apparitions, their wounds are covered with makeshift bandages of rags, they lie on the bare planks of the carts. One cannot look upon this picture of suffering without shedding tears of pity. The majority of the wounded received incurable fatal injuries — many losing their noses and chins — in the course of the Hungarian cavalry attacks. In short, it is impossible to describe how badly these poor devils have been mauled. In addition, ten carts laden with caps of all branches of the service, together with cavalry harness, arrived here yesterday, followed by about 500 unmounted horses which had lost their riders in the battle.
Page me9.400
Altogether, things look very bad for the Austrian cause in Hungary; a week ago the royal imperial troops were still in Pest, and now their headquarters has been in Oedenburg for several days already; the Austrian army is no longer withdrawing but is in full flight; the Oedenburg supply column has just arrived with soldiers of all branches of the service and military baggage. I met a sergeant-major I know who belongs to an Upper-Austrian regiment formerly stationed in Vienna. According to his account there can be no doubt about the Hungarians' victory, since the latter are taking advantage of the Austrian troops' utter confusion, allowing them no time to rally, but continually attacking with fresh energy and forcing them to fall back. The Hungarian army is far superior to them and is fanatically devoted to its cause, whereas the Austrians, as a result of fatiguing and pointless marches, discouraging losses and setbacks, and as a result of bad leadership having been left in the lurch at decisive moments by their officers, are naturally not defending the cause of the dynasty with the necessary determination. The ignorance displayed by the royal imperial generals and officers, on whose training during the pre-March period such a vast amount was spent, is said to be unparalleled; they lead the troops straight to the slaughter-house. Inquiries are already being held on five generals. The Hrabowski Regiment (Upper Austrians), which only recently returned from Italy, has changed sides almost to a man, and so has the Lower-Austrian Hess Regiment; in general it is considered that the German troops are not such reliable tools for the designs of the dynasty as the Slav troops are. Altogether five regiments have changed sides, apart from the countless number of Croats. A quite unprecedented and incredible demoralisation has set in in the army. The war in Hungary is being carried on under the command of the Polish General Dembinski. The Polish contingent consists of ten legions, with a total strength of 36,000 men and about 25 generals; they are said to perform unparalleled feats and the royal imperial troops fear them most of all.

Page Break me9.401

Page me9.401
On Sunday, April 29, there was a big battle near Wieselburg, with the Austrian losses amounting to 6,000 dead and wounded — so that there are grounds for believing that a sensational defeat has been suffered, and that this accounts for the transports of the wounded.
Page me9.401
The army corps commanded by the Ban†a is thought to have been completely routed.
Page me9.401
The Hungarian insurgents have advanced with a force numbering 15,000 men and 30 pieces of ordnance north-westward into the Turocz comitat and at present hold the county town, St. Martin, as well as Mossocz. It is said they intend to cross the Waag, to occupy the Kisuca valley and block the roads from Silesia and Galicia.
Page me9.401
In St. Martin, from which town the Slovakian Landsturm received many volunteers, there is said to be great fear that vengeance will be meted out by the insurgents. Slovakia, too, seems to be falling very much under Magyar influence.
Page me9.401

In Pressburg on the 29th the post from Pest failed to arrive for the fourth day in succession. In the heath on the outskirts of the town earthwork and redoubts are being built.

Written by Engels on May 4, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 291, May 6, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.402

LONGING FOR A STATE OF SIEGE

Page me9.402

Cologne, May 5. It is still being rumoured that on Sunday, on the occasion of the district congresses of the various parties,†314 a state of siege will once again be imposed on the good city of Cologne.

Page me9.402

From all kinds of small preparations by the military authorities, it is clear that at any rate they are preparing themselves for all eventualities. That is not all. Measures are being taken which definitely indicate a desire to provoke disturbances.

Page me9.402

Why otherwise has "My glorious army"†315 been suddenly permitted, to the great astonishment of the soldiers themselves, to remain out of barracks until 10 p.m. instead of 9 p.m.?

Page me9.402

There is likewise again talk of arrests. We are quite ready to believe in it. The desire for such action has been in existence for a long time. Moreover, it is known that already on one occasion by means of such arrests the plan of provoking disorders proved completely successful.

Page me9.402

We repeat, it is of the utmost importance that the democrats, and especially the workers, of Cologne do everything possible so that tomorrow the powers that are eager for a state of siege will not be given even the slightest excuse that will serve them as a cover for their acts of violence.

Page me9.402

It is primarily the bourgeoisie that is endangered by the latest counter-revolutionary actions. The bourgeoisie has convened the congress of the towns. Let the bourgeoisie have the honour of saying the first word. Let us wait to see what these gentlemen will decide on Tuesday. We are convinced that many a worthy democrat will be greatly disappointed by the results of this pompous "congress of the towns".†a

Page Break me9.403
Page me9.403
One thing is certain: if the state of siege is proclaimed before Tuesday then the congress of the towns will not take place and no one will be more pleased at this than precisely the gentlemen who convened it.
Page me9.403
If tomorrow the workers allow themselves to be provoked into disorders they will only be pulling the chestnuts out of the fire for the bourgeoisie, and at the same time for the Government. The question is whether they wish to be used for this purpose at a time when all Germany is on the threshold of civil war, and when perhaps they will soon have the opportunity to come forward with their own demands.

Written by Engels on May 5, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 291, May 6, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.404

[THE SITUATION IN HUNGARY]

Page me9.404
Apart from the news received from our Vienna correspondent (see under Cologne†a) there is a complete lack of definite information about the events in the theatre of war. We are therefore restricting ourselves today to a few items of news from the Hungarian-Moravian border that clearly bear the imprint of fear of the Magyars.
Page me9.404
The Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen writes:

“From the Galician-Silesian border, April 28. The outcome of the clash near Neutra is that the Magyars have penetrated into the Zips as well as into the north-western foot-hills of the Carpathians. Neumarkt, Budatin and Sillein are in their hands. For some days they have been threatening the passes near Csacze and Jablunka, whither the imperial observation corps has been withdrawn. To avert a Magyar invasion of Silesia, an infantry division has been sent to Csacze, the infantry division stationed at Bielitz since last January has been moved to Jablunka, and, finally, a battalion has been withdrawn from Troppau and stationed in the neighbourhood of Friedek. — Since the day before yesterday fleeing Slovaks have been passing through Saybusch and Andrichau; the Imperial Commissioner from Sillein has been in Teschen for the last four or five days.
Page me9.404
“The day before yesterday (the 26th) brisk artillery fire coming from the direction of Sillein or Teplitz could be heard in Saybusch until 6 o'clock in the evening. — However, only those who regard the recent occurrences in Cracow†316 and Görgey's simultaneous advance as parts of a co-ordinated plan think it likely that the Magyars will pay a visit to Galicia.”†b

Page me9.404

In another report from Silesia published by the same paper it is stated:

“From Karwin, a small Prussian town, about two hours' journey from Troppau, reports have been received that from the castletower many beacons could be observed in the Carpathians on the 24th, and it is believed that they were signals to mobilise the Landsturm in Galicia.

Page Break me9.405

Page me9.405

“A host of insurgents, about 15,000 in number, most of them horse-, cattle- and swine-herdsmen, conscripted from their pusztas†317 for the war, and accompanied by several cannon, are said to have advanced up to St. Martin and, on the evening of the same day, even as far as Sillein (about 2 1/2 post stages from Jablunka). Counts Pongrácz and Révay, the royal commissioners, fled to avoid death at the hands of the Magyars; Major Wenk crossed to this side of the Waag and called on all the imperial garrisons stationed in Slovakia to concentrate at certain frontier points so as to maintain communications with Moravia and Silesia.

Page me9.405

“The borders are manned and all men in the towns and villages capable of bearing arms have been mustered for the Landsturm that is to go into action under the command of Archducal Justiciary Peter in the event of an invasion by the Magyars. — Kossuth's supporters are doing all they can to make the Slovaks waver. Thus, a song is going the rounds in which every Slovak loyal to the King, a 'German alien', is called a traitor to his country; some people are unfortunately led astray by this and have been ensnared. These are the bitter fruits of a mistaken policy pursued by a military leader†a who let himself be lulled to sleep by the perfidious Magyar nobility, and whose anti-national measures repressed a people prepared to sacrifice everything in order to humble the Magyars (!?!).”

Page me9.405

From Ofen we learn that the garrison left behind by the imperial troops is thought to consist of four infantry battalions, two to three cavalry squadrons and 83 well-manned pieces of ordnance. The fortress has provisions for six weeks.

Written by Engels about May 5, 1849

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 291, May 6, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.406

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.406

The Hungarians continue to advance. They are said to have already made incursions into Styria (near Fürstenfeld on the Raab), into Moravia (near Friedland on the Jablunka) and Galicia (near Raycza on the Moravian border). On the 29th Raab was still in the hands of the imperial troops; since then it is thought to have been abandoned. Pressburg was fortified by the imperial troops; according to some reports it has already been evacuated.

Page me9.406

In the south, the imperial troops must be in a bad way. They are said to be evacuating Fünfkirchen, between the Danube and the Drava. Jellachich's corps, it now appears, was completely scattered, and two regiments of Croats were taken prisoner and put into the ranks of the Honveds. A report also mentions the encirclement and capture of Simunich.

Page me9.406

Bem's troops are really in the Banat, near Lugos and Karánsebes and are threatening the fortresses of Arad and Temesvar.

Page me9.406

The rumours about the expansion of the Magyar army are beginning to assume fantastic proportions. They say that 250,000 Magyars are under arms. While Görgey was fighting Wohlgemuth with a force of 45,000, 18 battalions attacked Jellachich, and in addition to this, Dembinski's corps, the strongest of all, has not been in action since the battle of Kapolna. Guyon and Klapka are now in command at Raab. The Hungarian Assembly has been convoked for May 10 in Pest. The Russians, 8,000 strong, are said to have entered Cracow.

Written by Engels about May 5, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 291 (second edition), May 6, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.407

[KOSSUTH'S PROCLAMATION]

Page me9.407

We are publishing the following passages from a proclamation by Kossuth, dated Gödöllö, April 7, and taken from the Neue Oder-Zeitung:

“The nation's valiant army has driven out that enemy whose traitorous commissioners in Nograd and Somogy had once more started to subject the people to the yoke of labour services which had been abolished by law and which we shall never permit to be inflicted on you again. It has driven out the enemy who in the past month issued an imperial decree that where the terrier has been abolished, the tenant has to pay half the value of the abolished labour services and tithes out of his own pocket, although the Hungarian law exempted you from this payment. It is our firmest resolve to uphold this law in defence of your freedom.
Page me9.407
“Our valiant army is driving from your borders the enemy whose Emperor†a dared to state: 'Hungary does not exist and will never again exist', and who dared to partition us from our brothers in Transylvania, to tear Croatia from Hungary, to cut up our own fatherland and to turn our most fertile regions into a special Rascian Kingdom,†318 for the benefit of those Rascian robbers with whom he did not scruple to ally himself for the purpose of exterminating the Hungarian nation.
Page me9.407
“Our valiant army is driving from your borders the enemy who, wherever he went in his flight, robbed like a common highwayman, who, not content with stealing as much as he could eat and drink, destroyed and laid waste what he was unable to consume, in order to leave famine in his wake; what is more, with inhuman ferocity and out of sheer predatory, malignant instincts he snatched the pillows from under the heads of your children, scattering the feathers to the winds. He did not even spare your churches; he tore the marble slabs from the altars, gutted the roofs of the chapels, while some of the officers stole the silver spoons from those who gave them food: thus behaves the enemy that the Austrian Emperor sent to our country, to destroy it, to exterminate our nation, and to make our people slaves and beggars!
Page me9.407
“I prophesied to you months ago that Hungary's freedom, autonomy and independence would blossom out of the tyranny of the Austrian Emperor.
Page me9.407
“And, thank God, it is so. Praised be the holy name of the Lord for this, and the nation's blessing and eternal thanks also to the valiant Hungarian army, to those who gladly sacrificed their lives and blood for the fatherland, who with unshaken courage defeated the united force of the enemy and who with their continuing victories are hastening towards the glorious goal, making you, O Hungarian people, by the sacrifice of their heroic blood free and happy! The enemy boasted of fictitious victories in order to deceive the Hungarian people and to plunge them into desperation.

Page Break me9.408
Page me9.408
“That is a characteristic piece of cowardice, for only a coward is capable of lying. The enemy deceived you with lying reports that he had driven our troops out of Transylvania, that Jellachich had taken Szegedin by storm, although he never came anywhere near it.
Page me9.408

“Yes, and what is more — now that the enemy has been defeated four times within five days, and forced out of his strongest position, Windischgrätz, Schlick and Jellachich with their whole army in flight from Poroszlo, Pest and Waitzen — now, while I am writing this in Gödöllö, in the very same room where 24 hours ago Windischgrätz dared to dream of Hungary's subjugation — now, whilst his whole defeated army is on the run and we have snatched the whole of Transylvania, two-thirds of Hungary, from the tyrant's clutches — even now he is still not ashamed of spreading the lies in the venal Pest journals that he won a victory near Jasz-Bereny. To remove any doubt in the matter, I give you — my brothers, my friends! — the comforting assurance that I and the splendid leaders of our heroes are in Gödöllö with our army, whither our intrepid Honveds fought their way at bayonet's point. We are in Gödöllö from whose outskirts our artillerymen went into action, shelling the arrogant enemy out of his positions; in Gödöllö from whose outskirts our hussars pursued the fleeing enemy up to the Danube at Pest. — And over there in Transylvania the imperial enemy no longer exists. This Emperor sent the wild Muscovites against us, but Bem and our Hungarian army in Transylvania expelled the enemy and his Muscovite protectors, down to the last man, from the sacred soil of Transylvania.
Page me9.408
“And down in the Bacska, Perczel took St. Tamas whose capture cost so much blood on other occasions. And he liberated Peterwardein, which was enmeshed by Austrian treachery, and freed the prosperous Alföld from the Rascian robbers. But up here, where the enemy's main force planned to subjugate Hungary, Commander-in-Chief Görgey with his generals Damjanich, Aulich, Klapka and Gaspar defeated Schlick near Hatvan, Jellachich near Tapio-Bicske, Windischgrätz and Schlick rejoined by Jellachich near Isaczeg; and now that they and our victorious troops have taken Gödöllö, they are already standing on the Rakos plain. A few more days, and Hungary will be free and no wicked enemy will violate the soil of our fatherland.
Page me9.408
“This is the joyful news I give you, my brothers! Long live the free Hungarian fatherland!”

Written by Engels about May 7, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 292, May 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.409

FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR

Page me9.409

The Austrian army continues to retreat. On April 28 Raab was evacuated; on the 29th, the Hungarian outposts had reached Hochstrasse, two miles†a from Wieselburg. On the other side of the Danube, the Austrian corps stationed near Dioszeg has also withdrawn to Lanschütz (4 hours from Pressburg). Even on the 30th one could not travel from Pressburg further than Karlsburg (one and a half miles from Pressburg, on the southern bank).

Page me9.409

The Austrian High Command is in Laxenburg, 1 1/2 hours from Vienna.

Page me9.409

Slovakia is now completely in the hands of the Hungarians who were welcomed with open arms by the inhabitants. The Hungarians have found a mass of weapons there since Windischgrätz had disarmed the rural population and the confiscated rifles were collected and piled up in the county towns. There is no sign of the Slovak Landsturm; Bloudek has disappeared, the guerilla commander Janiczek has gone over to the Magyars. From Slovakia the Hungarians threaten Moravia, Austrian Silesia and Galicia. There is talk of an invasion corps numbering 40,000-60,000 men to transfer the theatre of war to Russian and Prussian Poland. A surprise attack on Prerau, the junction of the Polish-Silesian-Austrian railway lines, must certainly be expected.

Page me9.409

In connection with the sudden stoppage in the advance of the Russians, we refer to our report from Breslau.†b It is true that there is still talk about a large Russian corps advancing on Transylvania; for the present, however, all these reports are unreliable.

Page Break me9.410

Page me9.410

It is now confirmed that in the south Bem has invaded the Banat with a considerable force, occupied the mountain passes between the Maros and the Danube, has taken Lugos and is even supposed to have captured Temesvar. As a result of this and the advance of parts of Perczel's corps over the Theiss towards Kikinda District, the Serbian Voivodina has dissolved into thin air.

Page me9.410

Jellachich, whose defeat has been repeatedly confirmed, has been appointed commander with full authority over the Southern Army (Croatian-Slavonian-Banat) that is being formed.

Page me9.410

This “Southern Army” consists on paper of 30,000 men; in actual fact it numbers at the most 8,000 plus a few thousand men from Serbian robber bands.

Written by Engels about May 7, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 292, May 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.411

[THE PRUSSIAN ARMY
AND THE REVOLUTIONARY UPRISING
OF THE PEOPLE]

Page me9.411

Cologne, May 7. The elements now in ferment in Germany are daily becoming more distinct; the situation is becoming more firmly defined.

Page me9.411

While one of the centres of the German counter-revolution, Austria, has its hands more than full in dealing with Hungary, the other centre, Prussia, is sending its armed hordes in all directions against the revolutionary uprising of the people.

Page me9.411

In Dresden, that patient town of art and luxury, the people are taking up arms and replying with barricades and musket-fire to the traitorous proclamations of the royal Government.†319 The greater part of the troops are coming over to the side of the people; the struggle is as good as decided; but suddenly Prussian battalions appear and side with the royal traitor†a against the people.

Page me9.411

In the Palatinate, too, the people are taking up arms against the daily more insolent Bavarian counter-revolution; here, too, Prussian battalions stand ready in order to invade at a suitable moment and put an end both to the Frankfurt Assembly and to the uprising in the Palatinate.

Page me9.411

In whatever direction one looks in North and South-West Germany, everywhere there are Prussian battalions ready to carry through the counter-revolution by force of arms.

Page me9.411

And so that there should be no lack of Prussian battalions, whether in our country or in neighbouring states, recruiting into the army reserve is taking place everywhere†b in accordance with our glorious military organisation.

Page Break me9.412

Page me9.412

Thus the centres of the counter-revolution are in one place the Austrian army, in another the Prussian army. Day by day the new revolution opposes an increasingly vigorous and universal resistance to the counter-revolution.

Page me9.412

The Dresden Provisional Government is still in existence and rallies the forces of the people in the whole country.

Page me9.412

The Palatinate Defence Council†320 is still in existence and every day more and more people of the Palatinate gather around the banner of the revolution.

Page me9.412

Finally, in Rhenish Prussia, the army reserve is refusing to march. Even in Elberfeld, in black-and-white†a Wuppertal, the army reserve is refusing to move beyond its place of assembly.
Page me9.412
And lastly, in Austria the most important occurrence is the Hungarian revolution which is irresistibly advancing. The post from Vienna has not arrived — perhaps because the Magyars have torn up the Moravian railway line. That they have broken into Moravia is definitely established. Reports in writing from Ratibor inform us that already eight days ago bombardments from whole batteries were heard in Golkowitz on the Austrian frontier, and on May 3 in Loslau, and likewise in Prussian Upper Silesia. At all events, the battles must have taken place on this side of the Jablunka.
Page me9.412
Incidentally, the victory of the Hungarians is more certain than ever before. It is quite definite that the Russians will not come. A few more days, therefore, and the Hungarians will be in Vienna, the Hungarian revolution will have been accomplished and the second German revolution will be ushered in in the most magnificent way.

Written by Engels on May 7, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 292. May 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.413

[A QUESTION TO THE WORKERS]

Page me9.413
Cologne, May 7. The Prussian gentlemen seem to be making every effort to provoke a riot.
Page me9.413
The day before yesterday the artillerymen (concerning whom, incidentally, the Government is labouring under a great illusion) were paid 15 silver groschen per man as a “supplement” for the previous month. True, the infantry also received this supplement.

Page me9.413
The officers of one regiment stationed here have directly called on their soldiers to start a riot tomorrow.
Page me9.413
This evening a scuffle between soldiers and civilians has already taken place on Neumarkt Square.
Page me9.413

Once more we ask the workers whether they want to let the Prussian gentlemen dictate the moment for the uprising?

Written by Engels on May 7, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 292, May 8, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.414

THE TSAR AND HIS SUBORDINATE KNYAZES†a

Page me9.414

Cologne, May 8. It is said that the French ambassador†b in Berlin has protested against the entry of the Prussians into Saxony.

Page me9.414

At last, therefore, the French Government has noticed that the East-European counter-revolution menaces it as well, and that the new Holy Alliance†321 has as its ultimate, supreme aim nothing other than the conquest, and this time, perhaps, the partition of France.

Page me9.414

We know positively that in the treaty which has been concluded between the orthodox Tsar and his two subordinate knyazes from Olmütz and Potsdam†c the ultimate aim of the alliance is declared to be the conquest of France, the abolition of the Republic and the elevation of the "legitimate King", the "son of holy Louis", the idiot Henry of Bordeaux to the throne of France and Navarre.

Page me9.414

That Odilon Barrot is involved in this plot is hardly doubtful.

Page me9.414

This is what they expect you to do, Prussian soldiers of the army reserve! You are being called away from your hearths and homes, from your wives and children, in order first of all to fight against your brothers in Germany and Prussia, to help in suppressing the small remnant of the freedom which you won last year — and then to fight against the Hungarians who are coming to the aid of your threatened freedom — and when you have completed this work to the satisfaction of your knyazes and your supreme lord and master, Tsar Nicholas, then you will be led across the Rhine against the nation whose heroic uprisings in 1789-94, 1830, and 1848 procured you all the freedoms you enjoy.

Page Break me9.415

Page me9.415

It is for this that last year as fighters at the barricades, and as the awe-inspiring mass of the people, you won a few liberties for yourselves, so that now, as soldiers of the army reserve, you yourselves will help to suppress these liberties once more and finally, in the service of your supreme master, the Russian Tsar, destroy also the two bulwarks of liberty — Hungary and France!

Written by Engels on May 8, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 293, May 9, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.416

[THE APPROACHING REVOLUTION]

Page me9.416

Cologne, evening of May 8. The revolution is drawing nearer and nearer. While in Dresden the people are displaying the utmost courage in their struggle against the Saxon and Prussian mercenaries,†322 and armed reinforcements are pouring in from all quarters to repulse the Prussian invasion; while in the Palatinate the people are rallying round the Defence Council,†323 the people's militia is mobilising and arming itself, the military are siding with it and the government officials are acquiescing, the whole of Germany is seething with unrest. Franconia is only waiting for the moment when it, too, can break away from Bavaria; the people there are in a state of great unrest, and the peasantry especially wait with impatience the outbreak of the struggle. We shall be in a position to supply details about this tomorrow. In Baden and Württemberg even the military have declared themselves in favour of the imperial Constitution. Similar reports have been received from Thuringia, Hesse-Cassel and Darmstadt.

Page me9.416

Finally in Prussia the movement is gaining momentum with every day that passes and becoming more revolutionary. Breslau is in a state of profound unrest; the minor riots, the mustering of troops, the patrols, the groups of people gathering in the streets, are all harbingers of graver events. The whole of Silesia is in a similar state of tension in anticipation of the news from Hungary and Vienna. Berlin is quiet, held down by the rule of the sabre. On the Rhine and in Westphalia the plans of Hohenzollern despotism are miscarrying because of the resistance of the army reserve which refuses to allow itself to be used as a tool for new coups d'état. The whole of the Berg Country, the District of Hagen, Mülheim an der Ruhr, Krefeld — in short, precisely the regions with the largest number of black-and-white supporters have suddenly gone over to open insurrection.

Page Break me9.417

Page me9.417

The Brandenburg-Manteuffel clique is in the meantime doing its best to provoke the people into revolution. The Staats-Anzeiger†a which arrived today contains a circular addressed to all heads of provincial administrations, calling on them to take energetic measures against all “revolutionary” activities in support of the imperial Constitution, and also correspondence between Imperial Commissioner Bassermann and Herr Brandenburg in which the latter states: 1) Prussia refuses once and for all to recognise the imperial Constitution, and 2) the Central Authority†324 is to abstain from interference in Prussia's internal affairs, such as dissolution of the Chamber, proclamation of a state of siege etc., once and for all.

Page me9.417

We commend these last samples of Hohenzollern arrogance to the people of the Rhine. It seems that through its contemptuous dismissal of even the most trivial concessions the dynasty intends to drive the people into revolution.

Page me9.417

If it comes to another revolution, Herr von Hohenzollern, who knows whether the people will leave it at “Hats off!” this time!†325

Written by Engels on May 8, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 293, May 9, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.418

THE DEEDS OF THE HOHENZOLLERN DYNASTY†326

Page me9.418

Cologne, May 9. It seems that in the last days of its existence and of the existence of the Prussian state, the Government of Herr von Hohenzollern wants once again to justify to the full the ancient reputation of the Prussian and Hohenzollern name.

Page me9.418

Who does not know the description in Heine's poem:

A child with a head as large as a pumpkin,
With the drooping moustache of a grey-haired bumpkin,
With spider-like arms, lengthy but strong,
With the paunch of a giant but guts not so long,
A changeling....†a

Page me9.418

Who does not know the treacheries, the perfidies, the legacy-hunting, by means of which that family of corporals which bears the name of Hohenzollern rose to greatness?

Page me9.418

It is well known that the so-called "Great Elector"†b (as though any "Elector" could ever be "great"!) perpetrated the first betrayal of Poland when he, Poland's ally against Sweden, suddenly went over to the side of the Swedes in order to be able to plunder Poland more thoroughly by the Peace of Oliva.†327

Page me9.418

People are well acquainted with the absurd figure of Frederick I and the brutal coarseness of Frederick William II.

Page me9.418

It is well known that Frederick II, inventor of patriarchal despotism, the friend of Enlightenment with the help of flogging, sold his country by auction to the highest bidders among French entrepreneurs; it is well known that he allied himself with Russia and

Page Break me9.419

Austria in order to carry out the rape of Poland,†328 an act which still today, after the revolution of 1848, remains a permanent blot on German history.

Page me9.419

It is well known that Frederick William II helped to accomplish the rape of Poland and that he gave away the stolen Polish national and church estates to his courtiers.

Page me9.419

It is well known that in 1792 he entered into a coalition with Austria and England to suppress the glorious French Revolution and invaded France; it is likewise well known that his "glorious army" was most ignominiously driven out of France.

Page me9.419

It is well known that he then left his allies in the lurch and hastened to conclude a peace with the French Republic.†329

Page me9.419

It is well known that, while pretending to be enthusiastically in favour of the legitimate King of France and Navarre,†a he bought the crown jewels of this same king for a song from the French Republic and thus profited from the misfortune of his "dear brother".

Page me9.419

It is well known that he, whose whole life was a typical Hohenzollern mixture of opulence and mysticism, senile lasciviousness and infantile superstition, trampled on the free expression of opinions by means of the Bischoffswerder edicts.†330

Page me9.419

It is well known that his successor, Frederick William III, the "Just", betrayed his old allies to Napoleon in exchange for Hanover, thrown to him as a bait.

Page me9.419

It is well known that immediately after this he betrayed Napoleon to these same former allies, when being in the pay of England and Russia he attacked the French Revolution embodied in the person of Napoleon.
Page me9.419

It is well known what the result of this attack was: the unprecedented defeat of the "glorious army" at Jena,†331 the sudden outbreak of a moral sickness of the whole Prussian body politic, a series of acts of treachery, baseness and sycophancy on the part of Prussian officials from which Napoleon and his generals turned away in disgust.
Page me9.419

It is well known that in 1813 Frederick William III, by fine words and magnificent promises, actually induced the Prussian people to believe that they were fighting a "war of liberation" against the French, although it was solely a matter of suppressing the French Revolution and restoring the old rule by the grace of God.†332
Page me9.419

It is well known that the fine promises were forgotten as soon as the Holy Alliance made its triumphant entry into Paris on March 30, 1814.

Page Break me9.420
Page me9.420

It is well known that at the time of Napoleon's return from Elba, the enthusiasm of the German people had already cooled down again to such an extent that the Hohenzollern had to try to revive their flagging zeal by the promise of a Constitution (the Edict of May 22, 1815 — four weeks before the battle of Waterloo).†333
Page me9.420

People recall the promises contained in the Act of Federation and the Vienna concluding document: freedom of the press, a Constitution etc.†334
Page me9.420

It is well known how the "just" Hohenzollern kept his word. The Holy Alliance and congresses for the suppression of nations, Carlsbad decisions, censorship, police despotism, rule of the nobility, arbitrary bureaucratic rule, high-handed administration of justice by ministerial orders, persecution of demagogues, mass sentences, squandering of financial resources, and — no Constitution at all.†335
Page me9.420

It is well known that in 1820 the people were given a guarantee that taxes and state debts would not be increased, and how the Hohenzollern kept his word: by transforming the Overseas Trading Company into a secret loan bank for the state.†336
Page me9.420

It is well known how the Hohenzollern responded to the appeal of the French people during the July revolution: by massing troops on the frontier, by suppressing his own people, by crushing the movement in the smaller German states, and by the final enslavement of these states under the knout of the Holy Alliance.
Page me9.420

It is well known that this same Hohenzollern violated neutrality during the Russo-Polish war†337 by allowing the Russians to pass through his territory and thus to attack the Poles from the rear, by putting the Prussian arsenals and depots at the disposal of the Russians, and by affording every defeated Russian corps a safe refuge in Prussia.

Page me9.420

It is well known that all the efforts of the Hohenzollern subordinate knyaz, in unison with the aims of the Holy Alliance, were directed towards strengthening the rule of the nobility, the bureaucracy and the army, and crushing by brute force all freedom of speech, all influence on the Government exerted by the "limited understanding of the subject"†338 and moreover not only in Prussia but in the rest of Germany as well.

Page me9.420

It is well known that there seldom has been a reign in which such praiseworthy intentions were implemented by more brutal and violent means than that of Frederick William III, particularly in 1815-40. Never and nowhere have there been so many arrests and sentences, never were the fortresses so filled with political prisoners, as under this "just" ruler. Moreover, it should be borne in mind what innocent simpletons these demagogues were.

Page Break me9.421

Page me9.421

Ought we to speak also of the Hohenzollern†a who, according to the monk of Lehnin, "will be the last of his tribe"?†339 Ought we to speak about the rebirth of Christian-Germanic grandeur, about the emergence of ghastly financial distress, about the Order of the Swan, and about the supreme court for censorship, about the United Diet and the General Synod, about the "scrap of paper",†340 about the vain attempts to borrow money, and all the other achievements of the glorious epoch of 1840-48? Ought we to prove, by referring to Hegel, why precisely it will have to be a comedian who closes the series of Hohenzollerns?†341

Page me9.421

It will not be necessary. The data given suffice for a full characterisation of the Hohenzollern Prussian name. True, there was a moment when the splendour of this name was dimmed, but since the pleiad of Manteuffel and Co.†b surrounds the crown, the old grandeur has been revived. Once again, as formerly, Prussia is a vice-regal province under Russian supremacy; once again the Hohenzollern is a subordinate knyaz of the autocrat of all the Russias, and superior knyaz over all the little boyars of Saxony, Bavaria, Hessen-Homburg, Waldeck etc., once again the limited understanding of the subject is reinstated in its old right, that of obeying orders. "My glorious army", as long as the orthodox Tsar†c himself is not making use of it, is allowed to establish in Saxony, Baden, Hessen, and the Palatinate the order which has prevailed for eighteen years in Warsaw, and in its own country and in Austria it is permitted to glue together the pieces of the shattered crowns with the blood of the subjects. We care as little about the word given earlier in a moment of fear and distress as did our deceased forefathers, and as soon as we have set our house in order we shall march with bands playing and banners flying against France and we shall conquer the land where the vines of Champagne grow, and we shall destroy the great Babylon, the mother of all sin!

Page me9.421

Such are the plans of our august rulers; such is the safe harbour towards which our noble Hohenzollern is steering. Hence the ever more frequent dictates and coups d'état; hence the repeated kicks for the cowardly Frankfurt Assembly; hence the states of siege, arrests and persecutions; hence the intervention of the Prussian soldiery in Dresden and South Germany.

Page me9.421
But there exists another power, to which, it is true, the gentlemen from Sans-Souci pay little heed, but which will nevertheless interpose its word like a clap of thunder. That power is the people, the people who, in Paris and on the Rhine, in Silesia and in Austria, in furious anger await the moment for the uprising, and who — who knows how soon — will give their due deserts to all the Hohenzollerns, and all the superior and inferior knyazes.

Page Break me9.422

Written by Marx on May 9, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 294, May 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Page Break me9.423

[THE SITUATION IN ELBERFELD]†342

Page me9.423
“Elberfeld, May 8. After several posters appealing to the people to support the army reserve in their refusal of military duty, as well as a proclamation by the army reserve against the King†a and Government, had been torn down by the police, the latter were attacked and forced to fasten the posters to the offices and doors while the people watched them. Towards the evening, as the crowds grew larger and larger, the rumour spread that troops were on their way. And so the army reserve took up arms and forced the burgomaster to accompany them to the railway station to try and persuade the regular troops to turn back. However, when they were passing the officers' mess von Carnap took refuge in it and the people then demolished the building. Whilst the army reserve marched to the station to prevent the troops from entering the town, the armed forces appeared on the scene, causing confusion among the crowd and lashing out at them to such an extent that a number of casualties had to be carried away.
Page me9.423
“But the crowd gathered again and went to the town hall where the civic militia had in the meantime been mounted to defend the building. It contains a great deal of ammunition, and the demand was raised that this should be handed over. After this demand had been refused, an attempt was made to force an entry, but this was unsuccessful. A hail of stones had in the meantime smashed several window-panes. At 8 o'clock this morning, the army reserve, fully armed, have taken up positions near Böttcher on Engelnberg where they await the arrival of the military.
Page me9.423

“Many proletarians armed with weapons have joined them, as well as army reserve units from other parts. The civic militia are equally active, but will not attack the army reserve and only control the crowd. If the military arrive and attack the army reserve, then alas! They will have to come in large numbers if they are to achieve anything.” D.Z.†b

Page me9.423

(This morning artillery left Cologne at an early hour bound for Elberfeld, in order to riddle with grape-shot the honest workers of the Berg Country who are not willing to be used unlawfully as tools by a traitorous camarilla. We trust that the artillery will do its duty.)

Written by Engels on May 9, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 294, May 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.424

[FROM THE THEATRE OF WAR]

Page me9.424

New victories are reported from the Hungarian border! The news about the defeat of the Austrians near Hochstrasse that we published a few days ago†a has been fully confirmed. The island of Schütt is almost completely in the hands of the Magyars.

Page me9.424

A second defeat has been sustained by the imperial troops near Szered on the Waag, about five miles†b from Pressburg. Here Görgey fought his way across the Waag, driving the imperial troops nearly back to Pressburg.

Page me9.424

In both these battles the Austrian cavalry in particular suffered heavy losses. Galician and German cavalrymen arrived in Vienna in carts and on foot, without their horses and sabres, often shouldering their saddles, their ragged, mud-stained and dejected appearance causing dismay amongst the black-and-yellow†c supporters. The routed and ragged remnants of the Hurban corps also passed through Pressburg.

Page me9.424

In this town general confusion prevailed among the imperial forces; they expected that a decisive battle would take place here on the 4th or 5th of May, and had given up hope of holding the town. Many black-and-yellow supporters fled from it. — Tyrnau, to the north-west of Szered, was also evacuated by the imperial troops and the railway line connecting it with Pressburg was torn up.

Page me9.424

It is certain that the Magyars intend to make Moravia and Lower Austria the theatre of war, i.e. to take Vienna. Even the Vienna

Page Break me9.425
Lithographierte Correspondenz admits that the whole of Lower Austria is ardently awaiting the arrival of the Magyars.
Page me9.425
In the Bukovina, the peasant agitator Kobylica is causing the Government increasing anxiety.
Page me9.425
In the Bacska, Perczel is exacting heavy war-contributions from the Serbs who also have to raise recruits. But at the same time he has guaranteed their language and nationality and abolished the Military Border.†343
Page me9.425
The Austrian reports now maintain that the alleged deposing of the Habsburg dynasty was a bluff originating from the Austrian Government with the aim of inciting the other provinces against the Magyars. According to other sources the National Assembly revoked its decisions because of their adverse effect on the people. Se non é vero é ben trovato.†a
Page me9.425
In the south, according to the Vjestnik [Vyestnik] and the Serbske Novine [Srbske Novine], Perczel has crossed the Theiss, captured Kikinda District, forced the Serbs to retreat everywhere and now threatens Werschetz. Everyone there has fled to Pancsova. A corps is supposed to have advanced to the outskirts of Temesvar (whose capture by Bem is thus not confirmed). Bem is reported to have taken up his position near Orsova, ready to receive the Austrians and Russians advancing from Wallachia. The Serbs have completely lost their confidence in General Todorovich's conduct of the war. The South-Slav papers are unanimous in admitting that the Banat cannot be held and it will be completely reconquered by the Magyars in a few weeks' time.

Written by Engels on May 9, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 294, May 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.426

[COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARY OFFENSIVE AND VICTORY OF THE REVOLUTION]†344

Page me9.426
Cologne, May 9. The counter-revolution is advancing swiftly, but the revolution advances still faster.

Page me9.426

While the counter-revolution has gained advantages in Dresden, which make its victory probable, and has managed to introduce a state of siege, censorship and martial law by successfully provoking a revolt in Breslau,†345 the revolution can point to quite different victories.

Page me9.426

We do not speak of the rapidly growing open rebellion of the army reserve in Rhenish Prussia, involving the most black-and-white†a districts, nor of the South-German movement, which is being betrayed everywhere by the governments, the bourgeoisie and the Frankfurt National Assembly†346; we speak only of those great events which, coming from outside, can give strong support and unity to the small, isolated and deceived German movements — we speak of the Magyar and the French revolutions.

Page me9.426

While the Magyar revolution is gaining one victory after another, and after the next decisive battle (which must have taken place on May 5 or 6 at Pressburg) will march directly on Vienna and liberate the city, France suddenly enters a stage when the movement is developing again openly and in broad daylight. The underground development of the past months comes to a close; the defeat of the French army at Rome†347 has exposed and discredited the entire Government. The people reappears upon the scene — the people, the ultimate, supreme judge. Whether it happens at the elections or in the course of an open revolution, the French people will shortly give an impetus to the movement, an impetus which all Europe will feel.

Page Break me9.427

Page me9.427

The European dynasties will soon see that the chosen people of the revolution has not changed; the French revolution of 1849 will speak to them, not in Lamartinian phrases, but in the language of guns.

Written by Engels on May 9, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 294. May 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Page Break me9.428

[THE UPRISING IN ELBERFELD AND DÜSSELDORF]†348

Page me9.428

Cologne, May 11. From Elberfeld we learn that after twice attacking the people, the soldiery drawn up on the market square were repulsed with several dead and wounded. The colonel of the 16th regiment had his horse shot from under him; he himself was severely wounded. Captain Uttenhoven is reported to have fallen, riddled with bullets in front and — behind (!); it is said that his own men fired at him. The soldiers' attack aroused the most tremendous fury. The majority of the civic militia fought on the side of the people.

Page me9.428

The dissolved town council is said to have been replaced by a committee of public safety, and four members of the former council have joined it. The house of the chief burgomaster, von Carnap, was totally demolished; the mahogany furniture from the Hotel von der Heydt was used to build one of the most valuable barricades. A total of about 40 barricades is supposed to be in the town.
Page me9.428

At the time of dispatch of this news which, however, cannot be vouched for in every point, the town had been evacuated by the troops, and large reinforcements from the surrounding districts were advancing to support the people of Elberfeld.
Page me9.428

When the news that fighting had begun in Elberfeld reached Düsseldorf on the evening of the 9th, a truly heroic struggle was waged at Düsseldorf railway station against the troops who were being sent from Cologne to Elberfeld as reinforcements†a; and there was soon fierce barricade fighting in all streets. The alarm tocsins were rung the whole night through, and the grape-shot fired by the military was answered by the bullets of the people. Towards morning, the soldiery gained the upper hand, however, and it is reported that during the day posters were put up on the street corners proclaiming a state of siege and martial law.

Page Break me9.429
Page me9.429

There are thought to be about 20 dead among the casualties suffered by the people; they include the well-known forwarding agent Hartmann and a Polish painter who, after springing in front of the advancing soldiers and urging them not to fire on their brothers, was cut down by their bullets and fell dead to the ground.
Page me9.429

The military are said to have later shot down defenceless men, women and children, thus marking their victory by even more bloodshed.

Written by Engels about May 10, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 295, May 11, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.430

THE NEW PRUSSIAN CONSTITUTION

Page me9.430

Cologne, May 12. In November of last year, after the dispersal of the people's representatives, the Potsdam member of the Trinity,†349 blessed by divine grace and the state of siege,†a imposed a Constitution which was to be revised by the Chambers soon to be convened. As we know, the new representatives of the people suffered a fate similar to that of the old ones; the latter were dispersed by Wrangel's bayonets, the former received from Manteuffel a simple little notice of dissolution,†350 ordering them to go home. That put an end, too, to the revision of the Constitution.

Page me9.430

Thus the Christian-Germanic sovereign and his accomplices, the whole host of lay-abouts, parasites and vampires sucking the blood of the people, whether of high-born lineage or without ancestry, whether decorated with orders or undecorated, have acquired free scope for planting whatever kind of fruit they like.

Page me9.430

In November of last year, the royalty, bureaucracy and junkers were still compelled to use various hypocritical statements and to accept articles of the Constitution which seemed very liberal. The November Constitution had to be framed in a way that would make it possible to ensnare the numerically large, stupid part of the so-called "Prussian people".

Page me9.430

Now all such subtle diplomatic considerations have become superfluous. Is not brother-in-law Nicholas already on German soil with 20,000 men? Has not Dresden been demolished by artillery shelling? Does there not exist the closest alliance of Prussia with the cowardly fugitive in Königstein, with imperial Max in Munich,†351 with the bulldog Ernest Augustus of Hanover, with the whole counter-revolutionary gang inside and outside Germany?

Page Break me9.431

Page me9.431

Certainly, this moment has been used by the Hohenzollern to the best advantage. He had a new Constitution drawn up for his "beloved" subjects, and he sanctioned and imposed it in Charlottenburg on May 10.

Page me9.431

The latest royal-Prussian Constitution, the only one sincerely intended, which also has the advantage over the November Constitution of consisting of only seventeen paragraphs, reads as follows:....†a

Written by Marx on May 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 297, May 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.432

THE SANGUINARY LAW IN DÜSSELDORF

Page me9.432

Cologne, May 12. The “new Constitution”, the abolition of ordinary laws and law-courts, together with the announcement of murderous privileges conferred by the sovereign†a on “My glorious army”, already came into force in Düsseldorf yesterday.

Page me9.432

After the defeat and massacre of the people, the commander immediately asked Berlin for instructions. From Herr von Hohenzollern's accomplices, Brandenburg-Manteuffel, an order was received by telegraph to proclaim the sanguinary law and to set up murderous military courts.

Page me9.432

By Articles 1 and 6 of the army orders the right of association is abolished, and Articles 5, 6, 7, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, of the imposed “Schnaps” Charter†352 are made invalid.

Page me9.432

Last year, under the rule of “citizen and communist” Drigalski,†353 when a state of siege was proclaimed the Düsseldorf press was put under censorship, a measure which gave rise to loud protests and great indignation even among the majority of the feeble Agreers' company. Today, after the new Hohenzollern achievements, when at the side of the subordinate knyaz in Potsdam there are no Chambers, but instead snub-nosed Cossack kinsmen, today the powers that be are not content with censorship, but proceed simply to suppression of the press.

Page me9.432

According to Article 7, Düsseldorf newspapers, and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung as well, are prohibited in the Düsseldorf area. According to Article 8, nothing but official “information” may be published.

Page Break me9.433

Page me9.433

Under “citizen and communist” Drigalski's rule by the sabre, the victims of arbitrary arrests were at least not removed from the jurisdiction of the ordinary law and its regular judges. Today the law and the courts have been suspended and murderous special military courts have been set up.

Page me9.433

Article 9. Anyone who by word of mouth, in writing, in the press, or in representational form, incites resistance to the legal (!) orders of the authorities will come before a court martial.

Page me9.433

Article 10. Anyone who is caught in open or armed resistance to the measures of the legal authorities, or who by traitorous action exposes the troops to danger or harm, will be summarily shot in accordance with martial law.
Page me9.433
The laurels of the murderer Windischgrätz allow no rest to the reinvigorated Hohenzollern!

Written by Marx on May 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 297, May 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.434

THE UPRISING IN THE BERG COUNTRY

Page me9.434
Cologne, May 12. At the present time the attention of the entire Rhine Province is concentrated on Elberfeld, a place which is now raising the "banner of revolt" higher than any other Rhenish town.†a The dissolution of the Chamber†354 was the signal for the movement in the otherwise so peaceful Wuppertal. The most addle-pated "wailers"†355 and the most miserable "hypocrites" had to admit that the guilt of the reaction exceeded all bounds, and carried away by the enthusiasm of those courageous workers whose energy we have never doubted, they have taken up arms and joined the ranks of those heroes on the barricades who are resolved to wage a struggle to the death against the monarchy.
Page me9.434
In view of the confused reports which reach us from the battle arena itself, it is impossible to separate the truth from the lies. This much at least seems certain: that the whole population has taken up arms, that streets and houses are barricaded, that from neighbouring places — Solingen, Remscheid, Gräfrath, from localities of the Ennepe highway, in short, from the entire Berg Country — armed reinforcements are hurriedly arriving. It seems certain, too, that the insurgents are already not restricting themselves to the occupation of Elberfeld and Barmen but are extending their measures of defence to the most important points of the environs.
Page me9.434
It is confidently asserted that the insurgents also plan to hasten to the aid of Düsseldorf in order to clear that city of Prussian troops. The army reserve, which now for the first time has definitely sided with the people, is playing the main role in these operations. The fighters do not lack munitions and money since several of the richest merchants have readily opened their coffers. Thus, it is said that one trading house alone has given the Elberfeld Committee of Public Safety 500 friedrichsdors.

Page Break me9.435

Page me9.435
Under these circumstances, of course, it is not surprising that the royal mercenaries are getting ready to attack in order wherever possible to crush the people in the Berg Country as well and perpetrate the same atrocities as in Breslau, Dresden, Erfurt etc. It is to be hoped that this time things will turn out differently.
Page me9.435
The artillery parked at Wesel will move from there to Elberfeld. It is said that the attack has been fixed for next Monday.
Page me9.435
We cannot vouch for these reports. But whatever the plans of the counter-revolution may be, Elberfeld will have to face a struggle in which it can truly perform a great service to our country.

Written by Marx on May 12, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 297, May 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.436

[THE VENAL BASENESS OF THE KÖLNISCHE ZEITUNG]

Page me9.436
Cologne, May 13. We draw our readers' attention to the recent issues of the Kölnische Zeitung, in particular to today's issue, that of Sunday, May 13.
Page me9.436
Probably never before has the “most vulgar artlessness” gone so closely hand in hand with venal baseness as in the latest leading articles and reports of our admirable contemporary.
Page me9.436
Only a few days ago, at the congress of the Rhenish municipal councils,†356 we saw the owner of the Kölnische Zeitung, Herr Joseph Dumont, hastily rising to support the decisions adopted there. Today we see the same man, through his henchman Brüggemann, expressing in every line the most brutal pleasure at the failure of the revolts which were precisely the consequence of those decisions of the Rhenish municipal councils.
Page me9.436
In return, however, the Kölnische Zeitung has also the good fortune to be imposed on the Rhenish towns, together with the state of siege, as their sole newspaper.

Page me9.436

Truly, what is being simultaneously imposed on these towns is blood and — dirt!

Written by Marx on May 13, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 297 (second edition), May 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.437

THE KREUZ-ZEITUNG

Page me9.437

Cologne, May 15. The rascally Prussian newspaper does us the special favour of compiling an anthology of unpatriotic expressions published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung about the “imperial-Russian subordinate knyaz in Olmütz” and the “Prussian bug-ridden knights”.†a The selection is limited to the dispatches from Breslau and is accompanied at the end by the following outburst of indignation of the covertly frivolous “crusader”:

“Compared to this Chimborazo insolence, how flat is the announcement of the wedding of the Prussian King published in the French Moniteur in 1793: 'Le jeune tyran de Prusse vient d'épouser une demoiselle de Mecklenbourg'!”†b

Page me9.437

In order to complete as fully as possible the account of the “Chimborazo insolence” of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, we ask the rascally newspaper to be so good as to reprint the Premier-Cologne from No. 294 of our newspaper “The Deeds of the Hohenzollern Dynasty”.†c We hear that Frau von Hohenzollern†d is a zealous reader of the rascally sheet and we do not adopt so “exclusive” an attitude that we begrudge the respectable lady some historical studies on the family of her spouse for her amusement.

Written by Marx on May 15, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 299, May 16, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.438

[A NEW PRUSSIAN KICK
FOR THE FRANKFURT ASSEMBLY]

Page me9.438

Cologne, May 15. No sooner had the Holy Alliance of the knout imposed a brand-new state-of-siege Constitution on Prussia†a than it favoured us today with a second document of no less interest. Those nationally-assembled milksops of Frankfurt, who by their radical philistinism, cowardice and doltishness so faithfully assisted the paid traitors of the German people for a whole year in working for the counter-revolution, are now reaping what they sowed.†357 If it were possible for some glimmer of light to occur in the minds of our National Assembly deputies, and for their breasts to be filled not merely with indignation inspired by March beer, but at least with a small degree of revolutionary indignation and energy, then that ought to be effected by the following "royal order" of the subordinate knyaz in Charlottenburg†358:

"Royal Order

"We, Frederick William, by the grace of God King of Prussia etc. etc., hereby, on the proposal of our Ministry, order the following:

§ 1

"The mandate of the deputies elected in the Prussian state to the German National Assembly on the basis of the Decrees of the German Confederation of March 30 and April 7, 1848, and of Our Order of April 11, 1848, has ceased to be valid.

§ 2

"This Our present Order is to be put before the deputies by Our Plenipotentiary in Frankfurt am Main for their guidance and with the directive to refrain from any participation in the further proceedings of the Assembly.

Page Break me9.439

"Given in Charlottenburg, May 14, 1849

Frederick William
Count von Brandenburg, von Ladenberg, von Manteuffel, von Strotha, von der Heydt, von Rabe, Simons"

Written by Marx on May 15, 1849

First published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 299, May 16, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.440

THE NEW MARTIAL-LAW CHARTER

Page me9.440
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 299, May 16, 1849]

Cologne, May 15. We still have to report on the latest paternal intentions of the subordinate knyaz in Potsdam†a towards his “hereditary” subjects, acquired by plunder and traffic in people. We are referring to the newly imposed martial-law Charter,†b this sole true promise of all the Hohenzollern promises, in which Prussian glory is at last revealed even to the most stupid and credulous simpletons in its fullest natural nakedness, divested of the last traces of its hypocritical comedian's tinsel.
Page me9.440
The dispersal of the inoffensive Berlin Chambers, which were supposed to “revise” the imposed Constitution of December 5, was only, as is well known, the necessary preparation for the Russians' entry into German territory. But the agreement arrived at between the Potsdam Bashkirs and the kindred dog-nosed Cossacks of the orthodox Tsar had another purpose besides that of the notorious Trinity's campaign against Hungary,†359 in which Prussia, true to its cowardly, perfidious nature, stood at the gates like a police agent with orders for arrests, while the Austrian and Russian executioners were intended to institute the murder hunt within the country. The true aim of this Hohenzollern alliance was through the entry of the Russians to inspire the Potsdam hero with the necessary courage to take revenge on the revolution for the confession of cowardice wrung from him in March of last year.
Page me9.440
We have no need to make excursions into history in order to prove the innate and natural cowardice of the Hohenzollerns at all times, nor perhaps do we even need to go back to the ancestors of this noble

Page Break me9.441
clan who ambushed unarmed travellers from behind bushes and hedges, and thus as highwaymen laid the foundations for the “splendour of the dynasty”. Nor do we need to recall the boastful campaign of Frederick William II against the French Republic, in which the great Hohenzollern was the first to turn tail thus betraying the German “imperial troops” in order together with Russia to set about a new rape of Poland†360; still less is it necessary for us to mention the pitiful role his successor, Frederick William III, played in the imperial wars before driving “His people” into battle with the aid of lying promises.†a The history of the “March achievements” was only a continuation of the old “hereditary” cowardice and perfidy. The Agreement Assembly was the first concession made by this cowardice to the revolution, a concession which superseded the famous boasting about a “scrap of parchment”†361; the Assembly was dispersed when the fall of Vienna gave the reinvigorated Hohenzollern the necessary courage for that action. The imposed Constitution with the Chambers that were “to revise” the Constitution was the second act of cowardly hypocrisy, since the “unweakened Crown”†362 at that time still considered a few liberal concessions to be necessary. The [Second] Chamber was dismissed when the conspiracy with the Russian Tsar and master†b had reached the desired conclusion. But only the actual entry of Russians into German territory, only the reliable proximity of the protecting Cossacks, gave the Hohenzollern the courage to come out with the latest plan: abolition of the last hypocritical “constitutional guarantees” by the introduction of the most unrestricted, most arbitrary sabre dictatorship, by the suspension of the old, even the pre-March, laws and law-courts, by revenge with “gunpowder and lead” on the revolution for the cowardice of the Hohenzollerns proclaimed in the March concessions.

Page me9.441

That is the historical origin of the recently imposed martial-law Constitution. Let us now look at its content.
Page me9.441

Under Articles 1 and 2, “for the event of a disturbance” not only every commandant of a fortress can declare his fortress to be in a state of siege, but every “commanding general” can declare the whole area occupied by the army corps to be in a state of siege.
Page me9.441

“For the event of a disturbance”, c'est-á-dire, if the commandant or general sees fit to foresee the “event of a disturbance”. Or is it possible that the Hohenzollern Ministers, in whose stylistic exercises the most remarkably abundant lack of grammatical knowledge usually predominates, intended to say: “in the event of a disturbance”?

Page Break me9.442
The interpretation will be left to the well-tested understanding of the generals and commandants.
Page me9.442

“For the event of a disturbance”, therefore, a commandant can declare his fortress, and a commanding general a whole province, to be in a state of siege. The limits of this “event” are not defined. Whether the “event of a disturbance” must show itself within the fortress or province or needs only threaten the fortress or province from a greater or lesser distance — that, too, will have to be decided only by the “tact” of the general or the commandant, and “tact”, according to the weighty word of Lieutenant-General Tietzen, is the first requirement of a Prussian officer.
Page me9.442

But the power of the general “for the event of a disturbance” has, on the other hand, been most remarkably restricted in the interests of all enthusiasts for the legal basis. Only “for the event of a war” are generals and commandants on their own initiative able to declare provinces and fortresses in a state of siege. “For the event of a disturbance”, however, according to Article 2 of the new Charter, the proclamation of a state of siege emanates from the Ministry; “for this event” the commandant has the right to declare his fortress, and the general his province, in a state of siege only provisionally, subject to being confirmed or (!) rescinded by the Ministry. A pleasant safeguard for subjects threatened by a disturbance! Do we not have “responsible” Ministers? Is not the “legal basis” saved by the merely “provisional power” of the commandant's or general's dictatorship, by the existence of a final instance in the person of the “responsible” Minister? True, under Articles 7 and 13 the “provisional power” of the commandant or general gives them the right provisionally to suspend the ordinary law-courts, provisionally to set up courts martial, which then, likewise provisionally, pass death sentences (Article 8) and provisionally carry out the death sentences within 24 hours (Article 13, § 7). But the “legal basis” is always saved by the final confirmation of the “responsible” Minister — long live the legal basis! Our sole secret wish in this context is that the advocates of the legal basis should be the first to experience provisional execution in the name of God and His Majesty the Christian-Germanic subordinate knyaz.

Page me9.442
[Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 300, May 17, 1849]

Cologne, May 16. Cervantes somewhere talks about a worthy alguacil†a and his clerk, who for the protection of public morality kept two women of no ambiguous reputation.†a These obliging nymphs appeared at big fairs or other festive occasions in such attire that already from far off the bird could be recognised by its plumage. If they managed to entrap some new arrival they immediately contrived to inform their lovers of the hotel to which they had gone. The alguacil and his clerk then broke into the room to the immense fright of the women, created a jealous scene and allowed the stranger to escape only after long pleading and payment of a suitable monetary compensation. In this way they combined advantage for themselves with the interests of public morality, for the victim took care for some time not to give way to his improper inclinations.

Page Break me9.443
Page me9.443
Like these guardians of morality, the Prussian heroes of order have a simplified procedure for ensuring normal tranquillity under martial law. The provocative dispatch of some pillars of legality reeking of liquor, a few provocative sabre blows among the people, and the rebellious desires thereby aroused in some remote town or village provide an opportunity for proclaiming a state of siege and thus safeguarding the whole province against further improper disturbances and cheating it of its last remnant of constitutional rights.
Page me9.443
Under Article 5 of the new martial-law Charter, on the proclamation of a state of siege the “military commander” can district by district invalidate Articles 5-7 and 24-28 of the latest “acquisitions” imposed in December.
Page me9.443
Let us see what still remains when we subtract from the March promises the Articles abolished by the imposition of the new martial-law Charter. “For the event of a disturbance” by the arbitrary decision of a “military commander” there cease to exist:

Article 5 of the December Constitution: “Freedom of the person is guaranteed.”
Page me9.443
Article 6: “The home is inviolable.”
Page me9.443
Article 7: “No one may be deprived of his legally appointed judge.”
Page me9.443
Article 24: “Every Prussian has the right etc. freely to express his thoughts.”
Page me9.443
Article 25: “Offences committed by word of mouth, writing etc. are punishable in accordance with the general penal laws.”
Page me9.443
Article 26: “If the author of a written work is known and within reach of the power of the court, the printer, publisher and distributor are not liable to punishment.”
Page me9.443
Article 27: “All Prussians have the right to assemble peacefully and without weapons in closed premises.”
Page me9.443
Article 28: “All Prussians have the right to unite in societies for purposes which do not contravene the penal laws.”

Page me9.443
As soon as a military commander proclaims a state of siege, “for the event of a disturbance”, “freedom of the person” is no longer

Page Break me9.444
guaranteed, homes are no longer declared inviolable, the “legal” courts, freedom of the press, protection of printers, and the right of association, cease, and even the “societies” of the philistines — casinos and balls — whose “purposes do not contravene the penal laws”, can only exist par grâce de M. le commandant, but not at all by “right”.
Page me9.444
At the same time Article 4 of the new martial-law Charter lays down that

“with the proclamation of the state of siege” (pur et simple) “the executive power is transferred to the military commander, and the civil-administrative and municipal authorities must carry out the orders and commissions of the military commander”.

Page me9.444
By this paragraph all the usual forms of municipal and administrative government are safely abolished and the oxen of the snub-nosed, arrogant bureaucracy harnessed under the yoke of the sovereign military dictatorship as “lackeys for executing commissions”.
Page me9.444
Articles 8 and 9 contain the punishments by which the energetic Hohenzollern intends to defend his safety and order even when he is protected by bayonets and guns.

This new penal law has at any rate the advantage of brevity over all the tediously agreed theories of law.

Article 8: “Anyone who in a place or region declared to be in a state of siege is guilty of deliberate arson, of deliberately causing an inundation” (what prudence!), “or who uses open violence and dangerous weapons to attack or resist the military forces or representatives of the civil and military authorities, will be punished by death.”

Page me9.444

“Resistance to the military forces or representatives of the authorities”! The deeds of “My glorious army” are well known; it is known also that the worthy Pomeranians, Prussians and Upper Silesian Poles, who in the interest of unity are being so zealously grafted into the Western provinces, following the example of His Majesty, derive their courage only from the circumstances and after having disarmed the citizens, as in Düsseldorf, Breslau, Posen, Berlin, and Dresden, they crown the state of siege by the murder of unarmed men, women and children.†a Hence the “hereditary” subjects of the Potsdam Bashkir knyaz are given the highly commendable freedom, after a state of siege has been proclaimed, either to allow themselves to be “lawfully” murdered by the courageous executors of the benevolence of the sovereign, or by offering “resistance” to allow themselves to be shot in accordance with martial law.

Page Break me9.445

Page me9.445

Ought we also to discuss the provisions of Article 9, by which the dissemination of reports which “mislead” the authorities and the violation of any “prohibition issued in the interests of public security” etc. are punishable by up to one year's imprisonment, and even the most ordinary police and gendarme functions are henceforth made more perfect in accordance with martial law?

Page me9.445

Ought we to deal with the cowardly perfidy with which the Hohenzollern sovereign, and his accomplices Simons-von der Heydt-Manteuffel decree the formation of courts martial consisting of three “senior officers” and two civil judges appointed by the military commander, in order to preserve the semblance of “legal” procedure in the eyes of the stupid bourgeois and yet at the same time to be sure of a conviction owing to the preponderance in the number of military executioners?

Page me9.445

Ought we to take note of the various provisions of Article 13 on “procedure at courts martial”, in which there is nowhere any mention of the testimony of witnesses, but under which judgment can obviously be pronounced in the spirit of the murderer Windischgrätz “in accordance with the coincidence of circumstances”?

Page me9.445

Ought we to take note of the provisions that there is no appeal against sentences of courts martial, that death sentences are merely confirmed by the “military commander” and are carried out within twenty-four hours, and lastly that even after the lifting of the state of siege, in cases where sentences of courts martial have not yet been carried out, the “ordinary courts” can only convert the court-martial punishment into a legally imposed punishment, but must “accept the fact as proven” and cannot decide on the correctness or incorrectness of the charge?

Page me9.445
Ought we, finally, to examine the last and best Article of this new Constitution which has been strengthened by the Cossacks, according to which “even apart from the state of siege”, consequently “not for the event of a disturbance”, Articles 5, 6, 24-28 of the December acquisition, “personal freedom”, “inviolability of the home”, “freedom of the press” and the “right of association” can be abolished district by district?
Page me9.445
After all these splendid things there is no need for us to express our heartfelt good wishes to all well-intentioned Prussians on the new, solely true promises, on the finally true outburst of paternal benevolence resulting from the proximity of the Cossacks. We sincerely rejoice at this bloody castigation of the bourgeois who are so frantic for order, and of the miserable dolts who yearn for a basis of legality.

Page Break me9.446
Page me9.446
But the people will soon feel that this new “acquisition” has filled its cup to overflowing, it will wreak vengeance on this lying cowardly race that plagues the land, and the Rhine Province above all will not let slip the long-desired hour when we shall cry out: Ça ira!†363

The pitiful ranks of knights
Will soon be riding off.
They shall be offered a stirrup-cup
From bottles of iron to quaff!†a

Written by Marx on May 15 and 16, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 299 and 300, May 16 and 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.447

[ELBERFELD]

Page me9.447
Cologne, May 16. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung, too, was represented at the Elberfeld barricades.†364
Page me9.447
In order to refute various false rumours, we owe it to our readers to give them a brief report on this matter.

Page me9.447

On May 10, Friedrich Engels, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, went from Cologne to Elberfeld and took with him from Solingen two cases of cartridges which had been captured by the Solingen workers at the storming of the arsenal of Gräfrath. On arriving in Elberfeld, Engels made a report to the Committee of Public Safety on the situation in Cologne, and put himself at the disposal of the Committee. The military commission at once entrusted him with the management of fortification works by issuing the following authorisation:

"The military commission of the Committee of Public Safety hereby empowers Herr Friedrich Engels to inspect all the barricades in the town and to complete the fortifications. All posts at the barricades are hereby requested to assist him wherever necessary.
"Elberfeld, May 11, 1849
(signed) Hühnerbein, Troost"

Page me9.447

On the following day the artillery too was put at his disposal.

"Citizen F. Engels is hereby empowered to instal artillery at his discretion, and also to requisition the artisans necessary for this purpose, the costs involved being borne by the Committee of Public Safety.

"Elberfeld, May 12, 1849

Committee of Public Safety
On behalf of which (signed) Pothmann, Hühnerbein, Troost"

Page Break me9.448
Page me9.448

On his very first day in Elberfeld, Engels organised a company of sappers and completed the building of barricades at several exits from the town. He attended all the meetings of the military commission and proposed that it appoint Herr Mirbach as Chief Commandant, which was unanimously agreed to. In the following days Engels continued his activity, he made changes to a number of barricades, decided on the positions for new ones, and strengthened the sapper companies. From the moment of Mirbach's arrival, Engels put himself at his disposal and took part also in the war councils held by the Chief Commandant.
Page me9.448

During his whole stay in Elberfeld, Engels enjoyed the absolute confidence of the armed workers of the Berg Country and the Mark, as also of the volunteer corps.
Page me9.448

On his very first day in Elberfeld, Engels was asked by Herr Riotte, a member of the Committee of Public Safety, about his intentions. Engels stated that he had come, firstly, because he had been sent there from Cologne; secondly, because he believed that he could perhaps be usefully employed in a military respect; and, thirdly, because, having been born in the Berg Country, he considered it a matter of honour to be there when the first armed uprising of the people of the Berg Country took place. He said that he desired to concern himself exclusively with military matters and to have nothing to do with the political character of the movement, since it was obvious that up to now only a movement under the black-red-and-gold flag†a was possible here, and therefore any action against the imperial Constitution had to be avoided.

Page me9.448

Herr Riotte was in full agreement with this statement.
Page me9.448

On the morning of the 14th, while Engels was accompanying Chief Commandant Mirbach to a general muster on the Engelnberg, Herr Höchster, also a member of the Committee of Public Safety, approached him and stated that although there was absolutely nothing to be said against his behaviour, nevertheless his presence evoked the utmost alarm of the Elberfeld bourgeoisie; they were afraid that at any moment he would proclaim a red republic and that by and large they wished him to leave.
Page me9.448

Engels said that he wanted neither to impose his services, nor cravenly to desert his post, and he requested, without otherwise undertaking any kind of obligation, that the above-mentioned request should be presented to him in black and white, over the signatures of all members of the Committee of Public Safety.

Page Break me9.449
Page me9.449

Herr Höchster put the matter before the Committee of Public Safety and on the same day the following decision was adopted:

"While fully appreciating the activity hitherto shown in this town by Citizen Friedrich Engels of Barmen, recently resident in Cologne, it is requested that he should from today leave the precincts of the local municipality since his presence could give rise to misunderstandings as to the character of the movement."

Page me9.449

Already before the decision was adopted Engels stated that he would comply with the request of the Committee of Public Safety only if Mirbach ordered him to do so. Mirbach had arrived in Elberfeld at his suggestion, and therefore he could not leave before Mirbach had released him.
Page me9.449

On the morning of the 15th, after considerable pressure from the Committee of Public Safety, Mirbach finally signed the requisite order, which was later also made public in the form of a poster.
Page me9.449

The armed workers and volunteer corps were highly indignant at the decision of the Committee of Public Safety. They demanded that Engels should remain and said they would "protect him with their lives". Engels himself went to them and calmed them down, referring them to Mirbach and stating that he did not intend to be the first to refuse obedience to the Commandant who had been invited at his suggestion and in whom, moreover, he had absolute confidence.

Page me9.449
Engels then took part in one more reconnaissance of the environs and, after handing over his post to his adjutant, departed from Elberfeld.
Page me9.449
Let the workers of the Berg Country and the Mark, who have shown such astonishing affection for and devotion to a member of our editorial board, bear in mind that the present movement is only the prologue to another movement a thousand times more serious, in which the issue will concern their own, the workers', most vital interests. This new revolutionary movement will be the result of the present movement and as soon as it occurs Engels — on this the workers can confidently rely — like all the other editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, will be at his post, and no power on earth will induce him to forsake it.

Written by Engels on May 16, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 300 (second edition), May 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.450

[THE WORTHY SCHWANBECK]

Page me9.450
One of the editors of the Kölnische Zeitung, worthy Schwanbeck, has issued a statement†a about his misfortunes in Elberfeld, in which he also alleges that an “editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung”†b acted as an informer against him. All that the editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung referred to knows about the affair is as follows. Whilst holding an official appointment in Elberfeld,†c he was asked by a member of the Committee of Public Safety to identify two gentlemen who claimed to have come from Cologne and who were being detained in the cells at the town hall; one of these gentlemen was none other than worthy Schwanbeck. He declared in the presence of the latter that he would make it his business to see that that gentleman was to be expelled from the town the next morning, which was indeed done. He also recounted to his friend, the member of the Committee of Public Safety, an episode concerning Herr Schwanbeck's connection with Police Inspector Brendamour, which had already been made public by Herr C. Cramer in the Wächter am Rhein.†d That was the extent of the “informing”.
Page me9.450
Incidentally whether, as worthy Schwanbeck maintains, “there is nothing to spy on in Elberfeld”, no one is in a better position to say than the Prussian officer who is still detained as a spy in Elberfeld and who was promptly arrested whilst roaming around there under a false name.

Written by Engels on May 16, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 300 (second edition), May 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.451

[THE SUMMARY SUPPRESSION OF THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG]†365

Page me9.451

Cologne, May 18. Some time ago Berlin demanded that the local authorities re-introduce a state of siege in Cologne. It was intended to use martial law to suppress the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, but this met with unexpected resistance. The municipal authorities of Cologne then turned to the Public Prosecutor's office here in order to achieve the same purpose by arbitrary arrests. But this failed on account of the legal scruples of the judiciary, just as it had failed twice before on account of the common sense of the Rhenish juries.†366 There was nothing for it but to resort to a police ruse, and this, for the time being, has achieved its purpose. The "Neue Rheinische Zeitung" ceases publication for the present. On May 16, its editor-in-chief Karl Marx received the following government note:

"The tendency of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung to provoke in its readers contempt for the present government, and incite them to violent revolutions and the setting up of a social republic has become stronger in its latest pieces" (!). "The right of hospitality" (!) "which he so disgracefully abused is therefore to be withdrawn from its editor-in-chief, Dr. Karl Marx, and since he has not obtained permission to prolong his stay in these states, he is ordered to leave them within 24 hours. If he should not comply voluntarily with this demand, he is to be forcibly conveyed across the frontier.

"Cologne, May 11, 1849
Royal Government
Moeller

To Herr Geiger, Royal Police Superintendent, here."

Page me9.451

Why these absurd phrases, these official lies?

Page me9.451

The trend and tone of the latest pieces of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung do not differ a whit from its first “sample piece”. In that “first piece” we wrote among other things:

Page Break me9.452
Page me9.452

“The project of Herr Hüser” (in Mainz) “is only part of the grand plan of the Berlin reactionaries who seek to ... deliver us defenceless into the hands of the army.”†a
Page me9.452

Eh bien, Messieurs, qu'en dites-vous maintenant?†b
Page me9.452

As to our tendency, did not the Government know it? Have we not declared before the jury that it was now “the duty of the press to undermine the whole basis of the existing order”†c? Regarding the Hohenzollern subordinate knyaz one can read the following in the issue of October 19, 1848:
Page me9.452

“The King is consistent. He would always have been consistent had it not been for the unfortunate fact that the March days interposed that fateful scrap of paper between His Majesty and the people. At this moment His Majesty, just as he did before the March days, seems again to believe in Slavdom's 'legs of iron'; and perhaps the people in Vienna will turn out to be the magician who will transform the iron into clay.”†d
Page me9.452

Est-ce clair, Messieurs?†e
Page me9.452

And the “social republic”? Have we proclaimed it only in the “latest pieces” of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung?
Page me9.452

Did we not speak plainly and clearly enough for those dullards who failed to see the “red” thread running through all our comments and reports on the European movement?
Page me9.452

The November 7 issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung says, “Assuming that arms will enable the counter-revolution to establish itself in the whole of Europe, money would then kill it in the whole of Europe. European bankruptcy, national bankruptcy would be the fate nullifying the victory. Bayonets crumble like tinder when they come into contact with the salient 'economic' facts. But developments will not wait for the expiry of the bills of exchange drawn by the European states on the new European society.
Page me9.452

“The crushing counter-blow of the June revolution will be struck in Paris. With the victory of the 'red' republic in Paris, armies will be rushed from the interior of their countries to the frontiers and across them, and the real strength of the fighting parties will become evident. We shall then remember this June and this October and we too shall exclaim:

Page Break me9.453
Page me9.453

“Vae victis!†a
Page me9.453
“The purposeless massacres perpetrated since the June and October events, the tedious offering of sacrifices since February and March, the very cannibalism of the counter-revolution will convince the nations that there is only one means by which the murderous death agonies of the old society and the bloody birth throes of the new society can be shortened, simplified and concentrated, and that is by revolutionary terror.”†b
Page me9.453
Est-ce clair, Messieurs?
Page me9.453
From the very beginning we did not consider it necessary to conceal our views. During a polemic with the judiciary here, we told you:
Page me9.453
“The actual opposition of the 'Neue Rheinische Zeitung' only begins with the tricolour republic.”†c
Page me9.453
And at that time we were speaking with the prosecution. We summed up the old year, 1848, in the following words (cf. the issue of December 31, 1848):
Page me9.453
“The history of the Prussian bourgeoisie, like that of the German bourgeoisie in general between March and December, shows that a purely bourgeois revolution and the establishment of bourgeois rule in the form of a constitutional monarchy is impossible in Germany, and that only a feudal absolutist counter-revolution or a social republican revolution is possible.”†d
Page me9.453
Did we therefore have to advance our social republican tendency only in the “last pieces” of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung? Did you not read our articles about the June revolution,†e and was not the essence of the June revolution the essence of our paper?
Page me9.453
Why then your hypocritical phrases, your attempt to find an impossible pretext?
Page me9.453
We have no compassion and we ask no compassion from you. When our turn comes, we shall not make excuses for the terror. But the royal terrorists, the terrorists by the grace of God and the law, are in practice brutal, disdainful and mean, in theory cowardly, secretive and deceitful, and in both respects disreputable.

Page Break me9.454
Page me9.454
The Prussian Government's piece of paper goes even to the absurd length of speaking about the “right of hospitality which was disgracefully abused” by Karl Marx, the editor-in-chief of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.
Page me9.454
The right of hospitality which the insolent intruders, the anterior Russians (Borussians), forced upon us, inhabitants of the Rhineland, on our own land — this hospitality was indeed “disgracefully” abused by the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. We believe that we have thereby rendered a service to the Rhine Province. We have saved the revolutionary honour of our country. From now on the Neue Preussische Zeitung alone will enjoy the full right of citizenship in the Rhine Province.

Page me9.454
In parting we should like to remind our readers of the words printed in the first issue we published in January:
Page me9.454
"The table of contents for 1849 reads: Revolutionary rising of the French working class, world war."†a
Page me9.454
And in the East, a revolutionary army made up of fighters of all nationalities already confronts the alliance of the old Europe represented by the Russian army, while from Paris comes the threat of a "red republic".

Written by Marx on May 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 301, May 19, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Page Break me9.455

[HUNGARY]†367

Page me9.455
Cologne, May 18. At a moment when the actual entry of Russian troops turns the Magyar war into a European war, we are compelled to discontinue our reports on its further course. The only thing we can still do is once more to provide a brief survey of the development of this grand East-European revolutionary war for our readers.
Page me9.455
It will be remembered that in the autumn of 1847, even before the February revolution, the Diet at Pressburg,†368 under the leadership of Kossuth, adopted a number of revolutionary decisions, such as those providing for the right to sell landed property, the peasant's right to live where he likes, the commutation of feudal obligations, the emancipation of the Jews and equal taxation of all classes. On the very day the February revolution began in Paris (February 22) the Diet permitted Croats and Slavonians when dealing with their internal affairs to use their own language for official purposes and finally, by demanding a separate responsible ministry for Hungary, it made the first step towards a separate Hungary.
Page me9.455
The February revolution broke out, and with it came the collapse of the resistance of the Viennese Government to the demands of the Hungarians. On March 16, the day after the Viennese revolution, consent was given for the formation of an independent Hungarian Government thereby reducing the association between Hungary and Austria to a mere personal union.
Page me9.455

The now independent Magyar revolution made rapid progress. It abolished all political privileges, introduced universal suffrage, did away with all feudal obligations, labour services and tithes without payment — compensations being payable by the state — brought about the union with Transylvania and compelled the appointment of Kossuth as Minister of Finance and the dismissal of the rebellious Ban Jellachich.

Page Break me9.456
Page me9.456

Meanwhile the Austrian Government recovered from the blow. While the supposedly responsible ministry at Vienna remained powerless, the camarilla at the Innsbruck Court grew steadily more powerful. It relied on the imperial army in Italy, on the national desires of the Czechs, Croats and Serbs and on the stubborn narrow-mindedness of the Ruthenian†369 peasants.
Page me9.456

The Serbian insurrection, instigated with the help of money and emissaries from the Court, broke out in the Banat and Bacska on June 17. On the 20th Jellachich had an audience with the Emperor at Innsbruck and was reappointed Ban. Jellachich returned to Croatia, renounced allegiance to the Hungarian Government and on August 25 declared war against it.
Page me9.456

The treachery of the Habsburg camarilla was plainly evident. The Hungarians tried once more to persuade the Emperor to return to constitutional methods. They sent a deputation of 200 members of the Diet to Vienna; the Emperor replied evasively. Feeling ran high. The people demanded guarantees and forced a change in the Government. Traitors, who sat in the Pest Government too, were removed, and on September 20 Kossuth was appointed Prime Minister.†370 But only four days later the Palatine Archduke Stephan, the representative of the Emperor, escaped to Vienna and on the 26th the Emperor issued the well-known manifesto to the Hungarians†371 in which he declared that the Government was rebellious and dismissed it, appointing the Magyarophobe Jellachich governor of Hungary and encroaching on the most important revolutionary gains of Hungary.
Page me9.456

The manifesto, not having been countersigned by an Hungarian Minister, was declared null and void by Kossuth.
Page me9.456

Meanwhile Jellachich, taking advantage of the disorganisation and treachery prevailing among the nominally Hungarian, but in reality old imperial, officers and general staff, advanced as far as Stuhlweissenburg. There he was defeated by the Hungarian army, despite its treacherous leaders, and driven back into Austrian territory to the very walls of Vienna. The Emperor and the old traitor Latour then decided to send reinforcements to Jellachich and to reconquer Hungary with the aid of German and Slav troops. But the revolution broke out in Vienna on October 6, and for the time being put an end to the royal imperial schemes.
Page me9.456

Kossuth immediately marched with a Magyar corps to the assistance of the Viennese people. At the Leitha he was prevented from moving immediately on Vienna by the indecision of the Vienna Imperial Diet, the treachery of his own officers and the bad organisation of his army, which consisted for the most part of the Landsturm. He was finally obliged to arrest more than a hundred officers, send them to Pest and have some of them shot. Only after this did he dare to attack. But it was too late — Vienna had already fallen, and his undisciplined Landsturm men were thrown back at Schwechat by the regular Austrian troops.†372

Page Break me9.457
Page me9.457
The truce between the imperial troops and the Magyars lasted six weeks. While both armies did their utmost to strengthen their forces, the Olmütz camarilla carried out a coup which it had been preparing for a long time. It forced the idiot Ferdinand — who had compromised himself by concessions to the revolution and was now useless — to abdicate and placed on the throne Sophia's son, the boy Francis Joseph, whom it intended to use as its tool. On the basis of the Hungarian Constitution the Pest Diet rejected this change of sovereigns.
Page me9.457
Finally in the middle of December the war started. Hungary by then was practically surrounded by the imperial army. The offensive was launched from all sides.
Page me9.457
From Austria three army corps, no less than 90,000 strong, under the supreme command of Field Marshal Windischgrätz, advanced southward from the Danube. Nugent with about 20,000 men marched from Styria along the left bank of the Drava. Dahlen with 10,000 men marched from Croatia along the right bank of the Drava to the Banat. Several border regiments, the garrison of Temesvar, the Serbian Landsturm and the Serbian auxiliary corps of Knicanin, totalling 30,000 to 40,000 men commanded by Todorovich and Rukavina, fought in the Banat itself. Puchner with 20,000-25,000 men was in Transylvania as was also Malkowsky with 10,000-15,000 men, who had invaded it from the Bukovina. Finally Schlick with a corps of 20,000-25,000 men moved from Galicia towards the Upper Theiss.
Page me9.457
The imperial army thus numbered at least 200,000 regular, mostly battle-hardened troops, not counting the Slav, Romance and Saxon Landsturm men and national guards who took part in the fighting in the south and in Transylvania.
Page me9.457
Against this colossal fighting force Hungary could pit an army of perhaps 80,000-90,000 trained soldiers, including 24,000 men who had formerly served in the imperial army, and in addition 50,000 to 60,000 poorly organised Honveds†373 and Landsturm men. This army was commanded for the most part by traitors similar to the officers whom Kossuth had had arrested at the Leitha.

Page Break me9.458
Page me9.458

But whereas Austria, a country kept down by force, financially ruined and almost moneyless, could not yield another recruit for the time being, the Magyars still had great resources at their disposal. The Magyars' enthusiasm for liberty, reinforced by their national pride, waxed stronger every day, providing Kossuth with eager fighters in numbers unheard-of for such a small nation of 5 million. The Hungarian printing-press placed inexhaustible financial resources in the form of banknotes at Kossuth's disposal and every Magyar accepted these national assignats as if they were hard silver coin. Rifle and gun production was in full swing. All the army lacked was weapons, experience and good leaders, and all this could be procured in a few months. It was therefore only necessary to gain time, to entice the imperial troops into the heart of the country where they would be worn down by unceasing guerilla warfare and weakened by having to leave behind strong garrisons and other detachments.
Page me9.458

Hence the plan of the Hungarians to withdraw slowly into the interior, to train the recruits in continuous skirmishes and as a last resort to place between themselves and their enemies the Theiss line with its impassable swamps, which form a natural moat around the heart of the Magyar lands.
Page me9.458

According to all calculations, the Hungarians should have been able to hold the area between Pressburg and Pest for two to three months even against the superior strength of the Austrians. But severe frosts suddenly set in, and for several months all rivers and swamps were covered with a thick layer of ice capable of bearing the weight even of heavy guns. This deprived the terrain of all features favouring defence, and made all fortifications built by the Magyars useless and liable to be outflanked. And so it happened that before twenty days had passed the Hungarian army was thrown back from Oedenburg and Pressburg to Raab, from Raab to Mor, from Mor to Pest, and even had to leave Pest and withdraw beyond the Theiss at the very beginning of the campaign.
Page me9.458

The other corps fared no better than the main army. In the south Nugent and Dahlen continued their advance towards Esseg, which was occupied by the Magyars, and the Serbs gradually approached the Maros line; in Transylvania Puchner joined Malkowsky at Maros-Vásárhely; in the north Schlick descended from the Carpathians to the Theiss and made junction with Windischgrätz at Miskolcz.
Page me9.458

The Austrians seemed to have practically put an end to the Magyar revolution. They had two-thirds of Hungary and three-fourths of Transylvania in their rear, the Hungarians were attacked in front, on both flanks and in the rear. A further advance of a few miles†a would have enabled all the corps of the Emperor to make junction and draw the ring tighter until Hungary was crushed in it as in the coils of a boa constrictor.
Page Break me9.458a

Click here to view object in scalable window

Page Break me9.459

Page me9.459

It was essential now — while on the front the Theiss still formed an insuperable barrier to the enemy — to gain some breathing space on one flank or another.
Page me9.459

This was done at two points: in Transylvania by Bem, and in Slovakia by Görgey. Both carried out operations which show that they are the most gifted commanders of our time.
Page me9.459

On December 29, Bem arrived at Klausenburg, the only town in Transylvania still held by the Magyars. Here he quickly concentrated the reinforcements he had brought and the remnants of the defeated Magyar and Szekler†374 troops, and marched to Maros-Vásárhely, defeated the Austrians and drove Malkowsky first across the Carpathians into the Bukovina and from there into Galicia, where he pushed on towards Stanislav. Then, swiftly turning back into Transylvania he pursued Puchner to within a few miles of Hermannstadt. After several skirmishes and a few swift drives in various directions, the whole of Transylvania was in his hands apart from two towns, Hermannstadt and Kronstadt, and these too would have been taken if the Russians had not been called in. The 10,000-strong Russian auxiliary troops tipped the scales and forced Bem to fall back on Szeklerland. There he organised an uprising of the Szeklers, and having succeeded in this, he had the Szekler Landsturm engage Puchner, who had reached Schässburg, while he bypassed Puchner's positions, moved straight on Hermannstadt and drove the Russians out, then defeated Puchner who had followed him, marched on Kronstadt and entered it without firing a shot.
Page me9.459

Transylvania was thus won and the rear of the Magyar army cleared. The natural defence line formed by the Theiss now found its continuation and complement in the Carpathian mountain range and the Transylvanian Alps, from the Zips down to the borders of the Banat.
Page me9.459

Görgey at the same time made a similar triumphal march in North-Western Hungary. He set out with a corps from Pest to Slovakia, for two months kept in check the corps of generals Götz, Csorich and Simunich operating against him from three directions, and finally, when his position became untenable against their superior forces, fought his way through the Carpathians to Eperies and Kaschau. There he appeared in the rear of Schlick and forced him hurriedly to abandon his position and his whole operational base and retreat to Windischgrätz's main army, while he himself was already marching down the Hernad to the Theiss to join the main body of the Magyar army.

Page Break me9.460
Page me9.460

This main army, which was now commanded by Dembinski, had likewise crossed the Theiss and had repulsed the enemy all along the line. It had reached Hatvan, six miles from Pest, when a stronger concentration of enemy forces compelled it to retreat again. After offering vigorous resistance at Kapolna, Maklar and Poroszlo it recrossed the Theiss just at the moment when Görgey reached the Theiss at Tokaj. The union of the two corps was the signal for a new magnificent advance of the Hungarians. Newly trained recruits arriving from the interior strengthened the Hungarian army in the field. Polish and German legions were formed, capable leaders had been trained or enlisted, and in place of the leaderless, unorganised mass of December, the imperial troops were suddenly faced by a concentrated, brave, and numerous army which was well organised and excellently led.

Page me9.460

The Magyars crossed the Theiss in three columns. The right wing (Görgey) moved northwards, outflanked the Ramberg division, which had been following it, at Eperies and quickly drove this division back through Rimaszombat towards the main imperial army. The latter was defeated by Dembinski at Erlau, Gyöngyös, Gödöllö and Hatvan, and hastily retreated to Pest. Finally the left wing (Vetter) dislodged Jellachich from Kecskemét, Szolnok and Szegléd, defeated him at Jász-Berény and compelled him, too, to retreat to the walls of Pest. There the imperial forces stood along the Danube from Pest to Waitzen, surrounded in a wide semi-circle by the Magyars.

Page me9.460

To avoid exposing Pest to bombardment from Ofen, the Hungarians had recourse to their well-tried tactics of dislodging the Austrians from their positions by manoeuvres rather than by open frontal attacks. Görgey captured Waitzen and forced the Austrians to fall back beyond the Gran and Danube; he defeated Wohlgemuth between the Gran and Neutra, thereby relieving Komorn, which was besieged by imperial troops. Since its line of retreat was threatened, the imperial army had to decide on a hurried withdrawal. Welden, the new Commander-in-Chief, retreated in the direction of Raab and Pressburg, and Jellachich was obliged, in order to pacify his extremely refractory Croats, to hastily retreat with them down the Danube into Slavonia.

Page me9.460

During their retreat, which rather resembled a stampede, Welden (and especially his rearguard commanded by Schlick) and Jellachich suffered further considerable reverses. While the latter's hard-pressed corps was slowly fighting its way through the Tolna and Baranya comitats, Welden was able at Pressburg to concentrate the remnants of his army which were by no means capable of offering any serious resistance.

Page Break me9.461

Page me9.461

Simultaneously with these astonishing victories of the Magyars over the main Austrian army, Moritz Perczel pressed forward from Szegedin and Tolna towards Peterwardein, relieved it, occupied Bacska and moved into the Banat, in order to link up there with Bem who was advancing from Transylvania. Bem had already taken Arad and besieged Temesvar; Perczel stood at Werschetz close to the Turkish frontier; the Banat was thus conquered in a few days. The fortified Transylvanian mountain passes were at the same time held by the Szeklers, the passes in Upper Hungary by the Landsturm, and Görgey with a considerable army stood at the Jablunka Pass on the Moravian-Galician frontier.

Page me9.461

In short, in a few more days the victorious Magyar army, driving the remnants of the mighty Austrian legions before it, would have entered Vienna in triumph and put an end to the Austrian monarchy for all time.
Page me9.461

Hungary's separation from Austria had been decided in Debreczin on April 14†375; the alliance with Poland, openly proclaimed since the middle of January, was turned into reality by the 20,000-30,000 Poles who joined the Hungarian army. The alliance with the German Austrians, which had existed since the Viennese revolution of October 6 and the battle at Schwechat, was similarly preserved and sustained by the German legions within the Hungarian army, as well as by the fact that the Magyars were faced with the strategic and political necessity of occupying Vienna and revolutionising Austria so as to secure recognition of their declaration of independence.
Page me9.461

Thus, the Magyar war very soon lost the national character it had had in the beginning, and assumed a clearly European character, precisely as a result of what would seem to be a purely national act, as a result of the declaration of independence. Only when Hungary proclaimed her separation from Austria, and thereby the dissolution of the Austrian monarchy, did the alliance with the Poles for the liberation of both countries, and the alliance with the Germans for the revolutionisation of Eastern Germany acquire a definite character and a solid basis. If Hungary were independent, Poland restored, German Austria turned into the revolutionary focus of Germany, with Lombardy and Italy winning independence — these plans, if carried out, would destroy the entire East-European system of states: Austria would disappear, Prussia would disintegrate and Russia would be forced back to the borders of Asia.

Page Break me9.462
Page me9.462

The Holy Alliance,†376 therefore, had to make every effort to stem the impending revolution in Eastern Europe — the Russian armies rolled towards the Transylvanian and Galician frontiers; Prussia occupied the Bohemian-Silesian frontier and allowed the Russians to pass through her territory towards Prerau, and within a few days the first Russian army corps stood on Moravian soil.
Page me9.462

The Magyars, who clearly understood that in a few weeks they would have to deal with numerous fresh troops, did not advance on Vienna as quickly as was expected at the beginning. They could not take Vienna, just as they could not take Pest, by a frontal attack without shelling the city, and this they were not prepared to do. Again, as at Pest, they were compelled to resort to outflanking manoeuvres, and this required time and the assurance that their own flanks and rear were secure. But it was here that the Russians menaced their rear, while if Vienna were in direct danger strong detachments of Radetzky's army could be immediately expected from the other direction.
Page me9.462

The Hungarians therefore acted very wisely when, instead of advancing swiftly on Vienna, they confined themselves to steadily forcing the imperial armies out of Hungary, enveloping them in a wide arc from the Little Carpathians to the foot-hills of the Styrian Alps, dispatching a strong corps towards the Jablunka, fortifying and covering the Galician mountain passes, attacking Ofen and rapidly proceeding with the recruitment of 250,000 men, especially from the reconquered western comitats. In this way they secured their flanks and rear and assembled an army which had no more need to fear the Russian contingents than the once colossal imperial army. 200,000 soldiers of this redoubtable black-and-yellow†a army had invaded Hungary and barely 50,000 of them had returned; the rest were either killed, wounded, sick, taken prisoner or had changed sides.
Page me9.462

True, the Russians threaten to send even more gigantic armies. Some speak of 120,000 soldiers, others of 170,000. According to the Triester Freihafen, the mobile army in the field is expected considerably to surpass 500,000 men. But Russian exaggerations are well known: of the figures they give only half are on the nominal rolls, and of the numbers on the nominal roll again less than half are really there. If, after deducting the number of troops required for the occupation of Poland, the effective Russian aid amounts to from

Page Break me9.463
60,000 to 70,000 men, the Austrians can be glad. And the Magyars will be able to deal with that number.
Page me9.463

The Magyar war of 1849 has strong points of resemblance with the Polish war of 1830-31.†377 But the great difference is that the factors which were against the Poles at that time now act in favour of the Magyars. Lelewel, as we know, unsuccessfully urged, first, that the mass of the population be bound to the revolution by emancipating the peasants and the Jews, and secondly, that all three partitioning powers be involved in the war and this war turned into a European war, by raising an insurrection throughout the old Polish territories. The Magyars started at the point which the Poles only achieved when it was too late. The Hungarians' first measure was to carry out a social revolution in their country, to abolish feudalism; their second measure was to involve Poland and Germany in the war, thus turning it into a European war. It started with the entry of the first Russian corps into German territory, and will take a decisive turn when the first French battalion enters German territory.
Page me9.463

By becoming a European war, the Hungarian war is brought into reciprocal interaction with all other factors of the European movement. Its course affects not only Germany, but also France and England. The English bourgeoisie cannot be expected to let Austria become a Russian province and it is certain that the French people will not calmly look on while the counter-revolution comes closer and closer to attacking them. Whatever the outcome of the French elections,†378 the army at any rate has declared for the revolution. And the army today is the decisive force. If the army wants war — and it does want it — then war it will be.
Page me9.463

War will come. Paris is on the threshold of revolution, whether as a result of the elections or of the army's fraternisation with the revolutionary party at the ballot-box. While in Southern Germany the core of a German revolutionary army is being formed, which prevents Prussia from taking an active part in the Hungarian campaign, France is on the point of playing an active role in the struggle. A few weeks, perhaps even a few days, will decide everything, and soon the French, the Magyar-Polish, and the German revolutionary armies will celebrate their fraternisation on the battlefield before the walls of Berlin.†379

Written by Engels on May 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 301, May 19, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Page Break me9.464

[“TO MY PEOPLE”]

Page me9.464

Cologne, May 18. “To my people!”†a Not — “To my glorious army!”†380 Have the Russians perhaps been defeated? Has the wind shifted and once again, as in March of last year, knocked the military cap from the head of the “unweakened” servant of Russia? Are the “loyal subjects”, living under a state of siege, once more in full rebellion?

Page me9.464

When in 1813 the old “monarch of blessed memory”†b likewise derived from the advance of the Cossacks the necessary courage to shake off his abject cowardly role and the bloody punishments of the revolutionary empire, then — in spite of the Cossacks, Bashkirs and the “glorious army” made famous by battles at Jena and Magdeburg and by the surrender of Küstrin to 150 Frenchmen — it was only the lying promises of an “Appeal to My People”†381 which made possible the crusade of the Holy Alliance against the successors to the French revolution. And now! Has not the reinvigorated Hohenzollern, as a result of the incursion of the Cossacks into German territory, obtained sufficient courage to renounce his cowardly role of the post-March period and to cancel the “scrap of paper interposed between him and his people” owing to the revolution?†382 Has not “My glorious army” in Dresden, Breslau, Posen, Berlin, and on the Rhine, worthily wreaked vengeance on the revolution by the valiant slaughter of unarmed men, women and children with shrapnel and caustic?†383

Page me9.464

Have not the last cowardly concessions made in March — abolition of censorship, freedom of association, arming of the people — once more been abolished by the recently imposed martial-law Constitution,†a “even apart from the state of siege”?

Page Break me9.465

Page me9.465

No, the son of the hero of Jena and Magdeburg still does not feel safe enough in spite of the alliance with the Cossacks, in spite of the privileges in regard to murder and courts martial afforded to the uncurbed “glorious” military horde. The unweakened Crown is afraid, it appeals “To my people”, it “feels compelled” to address an appeal for help and support against “internal and external enemies” to the downtrodden besieged “people” which has been battered by grape-shot.

“In these difficult times, Prussia is called upon to protect Germany against internal and external enemies. Therefore, I call My people to arms already now. It is a matter of establishing law and order in our state and in the other German states where our help is required; it is a matter of creating Germany's unity, of protecting her freedom from the rule of terror of a party that is ready to sacrifice morality, honour and loyalty to its passions, a party which has succeeded in casting a net of delusion and folly over a section of the people.”

Page me9.465

“That is the gist of the royal address,” exclaims the filthy police agent Dumont,†b and the venal police claqueurs of Dumont have indeed discovered the “gist”.

Page me9.465

“External enemies”! By that is meant the “party of terror”, the party which terrifies the valiant Hohenzollern, the party which demands our interference in the “other German states”. The people of the Rhine Province, Silesia and Saxony are called upon “in the name of German unity” to put an end to the revolutionary movements in the foreign German states of Baden, Bavaria, and Saxony! And to this end the bait with which the Hohenzollern gladdened the hearts of the people in 1813 is repeated, the well-tried “royal word” is pledged once again, promising the “people” a castrated recognition of the Frankfurt Constitution, promising them the “protection of law and liberty” against “godlessness”. “I and My house wish to serve the lord.”†384 Is the well-tried pledge of a “Hohenzollern's royal word” not worth a crusade against the “party which terrifies the Crown that promises so much”?

Page me9.465

The powerful subordinate knyaz of imperial Russia recalled the Prussian deputies from Frankfurt only in order now, in accordance with his March promises, to put himself “at the head of Germany”. The Agreement Assembly and the imposed Chamber were dismissed, the “scrap of paper” was replaced by a martial-law Constitution and murderous military courts solely in order to guarantee the people the “protection of law and liberty!”

Page Break me9.466

Page me9.466

And freedom of the press has been suppressed, censorship has been imposed on the press in Erfurt, newspapers are directly banned throughout Posen, in Breslau, in the Silesian provincial towns, and even the National-Zeitung in Berlin. In Düsseldorf censorship has been re-introduced de jure, but the press has been totally abolished de facto (the Düsseldorf newspapers, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung etc.), and finally only the police cesspool of the Kölnische Zeitung and the rascally newspaper in Berlin†a were imposed on the “free” subjects. All this has been done so that there should not be the slightest doubt about the value of the “royal word”.

Page me9.466
And the word of the Hohenzollern does indeed merit that the people don military uniforms to strengthen the royal courage so as to procure — under the army reserve law — a royal bounty of one taler monthly for the wives they leave behind as a “safeguard against begging”.

Written on May 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 301, May 19, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.467

TO THE WORKERS OF COLOGNE†385

Page me9.467
Finally we warn you against any revolt in Cologne. In the military situation obtaining in Cologne you would be irretrievably lost. You have seen in Elberfeld that the bourgeoisie sends the workers into the fire and betrays them afterwards in the most infamous way. A state of siege in Cologne would demoralise the entire Rhine Province, and a state of siege would be the inevitable consequence of any rising on your part at this moment. The Prussians will be frustrated by your calmness.
Page me9.467
In bidding you farewell the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung thank you for the sympathy you have shown them. Their last word everywhere and always will be: emancipation of the working class!

The Editorial Board of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung

Written on May 18, 1849

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 301, May 19, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Page Break me9.468
Page Break me9.469
Page me9.469

The last issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (No. 301, May 19, 1849) which was printed in red ink

Page Break me9.470
Page Break me9.471

KARL MARX
and
FREDERICK ENGELS

ARTICLES AND STATEMENTS

May-July 1849

Page Break me9.472

Page Break me9.473
Page me9.473

Karl Marx

LETTER TO THE FRANKFURTER JOURNAL

Page me9.473

The esteemed Editorial Board of the Frankfurter Journal is requested to print the following statement in its newspaper in large type and in a prominent position, and if this is only possible on payment for its insertion, please obtain the amount from Herr J. Weydemeyer, editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung.

Bingen, May 31
Dr. Karl Marx

STATEMENT†386
Page me9.473

The Editorial Board of the "Neue Rheinische Zeitung" owes its correspondents and the public the statement that it has nothing in common with the news-sheet published in Cologne under the title Westdeutsche Zeitung. The undersigned editorial board reserves to itself the right to communicate further when and where the Neue Rheinische Zeitung will again make its appearance.

The Editorial Board of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Karl Marx, Ernst Dronke, Friedrich Engels,
F. Freiligrath, Georg Weerth, F. Wolff, W. Wolff

The Statement was published in the Neue Deutsche Zeitung Nos. 129 and 133, June 2 and 7, 1849; and in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung No. 126 (second edition), June 3, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper text checked against the manuscript; the covering letter is printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.474
Page me9.474

Frederick Engels

[THE REVOLUTIONARY UPRISING
IN THE PALATINATE AND BADEN]†387

Page me9.474

Kaiserslautern, June 2. The counter-revolutionary German newspapers try in every way to cast suspicion on the revolution in the Palatinate and Baden. They are not ashamed to assert that the trend of the entire uprising is tantamount "to betraying" the Palatinate, Baden and, indirectly, the whole of Germany "to the French". They thereby seek to conjure up afresh the counter-revolutionary hatred of the French stemming from the so-called good old times, believing that in this way they will be able to deprive us of the sympathy of our brothers in North and East Germany. The filthy, lying newspapers which accuse the Palatinate and Baden of having sold themselves to France happen, however, to be precisely those which are in favour of the Russian invasion of Hungary, the Russians' march through Prussia, and even the new Holy Alliance†388 between Russia, Austria and Prussia. As proof of this, we name only one of these newspapers: the Kölnische Zeitung.

Page me9.474

Thus, the fact that the Russians march into German, into Prussian, territory in order to suppress Hungarian freedom is no betrayal of the country! If the King of Prussia†a concludes an alliance with the Croats and the Russians in order that the last remnants of German freedom shall be trampled under the hooves of Cossack horses, that is no betrayal of the country! If all of us, if the whole of Germany from the Niemen to the Alps is sold by cowardly despots to the Russian Emperor,†b that is no betrayal of the country! But if the Palatinate enjoys the sympathy of the French and especially of the

Page Break me9.475

Alsatian people, if it does not out of foolish self-conceit reject the expression of this sympathy, if it sends persons to Paris to obtain information about the state of feeling in France and about the new turn which will take place in the policy of the French Republic,†389 — that is indeed betrayal of the country, that is high treason, and means selling Germany to France, to the “hereditary enemy”, to the “enemy of the Empire”. That is how the counter-revolutionary newspapers argue.

Page me9.475

It is true, gentlemen “by the grace of God”, that the Palatinate and Baden did do all this and neither of them will be ashamed of its actions. Of course, if that is betrayal of the country, then the entire people of the Palatinate and Baden consists of two-and-a-half million traitors to their country. The people of the Palatinate and Baden did certainly not make a revolution in order to support the despots in the imminent great struggle between the free West and the despotic East. The people of the Palatinate, and those of Baden, made their revolution because they do not want to share the guilt of the despicable acts in the destruction of freedom by which Austria, Prussia and Bavaria have so shamefully distinguished themselves in recent months, and because they have not allowed themselves to be misused for the enslavement of their brothers. The army of the Palatinate and Baden joined the movement without reservations; it disclaimed loyalty to the perfidious sovereigns and has to a man sided with the people. Neither the citizens nor the soldiers want to fight in the ranks of the Croats and Cossacks against freedom. If the despots of Olmütz, Berlin and Munich still find soldiers who have sunk so deep as to put themselves on a level with Bashkirs, Pandours,†390 Croats and similar predatory rabble, and to fight under the same flag as such hordes of barbarians, so much the worse. It may occasion us sorrow, but we shall never treat such mercenaries as German brothers; we shall treat them as Cossacks and Bashkirs, and it will not worry us if a treacherous imperial ex-Minister of War stands at their head.†391
Page me9.475

But at the present time when we are on the threshold of a European war, a people's war, it is altogether ludicrous to speak of “betrayal of the country” and similar accusations smacking of demagogue†392 hunting. In a few weeks, perhaps even in a few days, the huge armies of the republican West and the enslaved East will advance against each other to fight out a great struggle on German soil. Germany — to such lengths has she been brought by her sovereigns and the bourgeois — Germany will not be asked at all for her permission. Germany does not want the war, the war will be brought into this country without its consent and it will be unable to prevent it. Such is the glorious position of Germany in relation to the imminent European war, thanks to the March rulers, the March Chambers, and not least to the March National Assembly. There can be no talk of German interests, of German freedom, of German unity, of German welfare, when it is a question of the freedom or enslavement, of the weal or woe, of the whole of Europe. Here all questions of nationality cease, here there is only one question! Do you want to be free, or do you want to be Russian? And in this situation the counter-revolutionary newspapers still talk of “betrayal of the country”, as if there was still anything that could be betrayed in relation to the Germany that will soon enough be abandoned to the two contending armies as an inert arena! It is true that last year things were different. Last year the Germans could have undertaken the struggle against Russian oppression, could have liberated the Poles and so waged the war on Russian territory and at Russia's expense. Now, on the contrary, thanks to our sovereigns, the war will be waged on our soil, and at our expense; as matters stand now, the European war of liberation is for Germany at the same time a civil war in which Germans fight against Germans.

Page Break me9.476

Page me9.476

We owe that to the treachery of our sovereigns and the supineness of our people's representatives, and if anything is betrayal of the country, it is that! In short, in the great struggle for freedom which is spreading through the whole of Europe, the Palatinate and Baden will stand on the side of freedom against slavery, of revolution against counter-revolution, of the people against the sovereigns, of revolutionary France, Hungary and Germany against absolutist Russia, Austria, Prussia and Bavaria; and if the wailers†393 call that betrayal of the country, in the whole of the Palatinate and the whole of Baden nobody cares two hoots about it.

Written on June 2, 1849

First published in Der Bote für Stadt und Land No. 110, June 3, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.477
Page me9.477

Karl Marx

THE 13th OF JUNE†394

Page me9.477
Paris, June 21

You are sufficiently acquainted with the Paris population to realise a priori the absurdity of the accusation of cowardice. Nevertheless, I can understand that in Germany especially the day of June 13 remains completely enigmatic and is bound to give rise to all kinds of malicious misinterpretations.
Page me9.477

The chief actor in the drama of June 13 was not the people, but the “Mountain”. Behind the “Mountain”, it is true, there was in turn a secret committee,†395 which pushed matters forward and more or less compelled Ledru-Rollin to play that particular role.
Page me9.477

The chief error of the “Mountain” was its certainty of being victorious. It was so sure of this that it believed everything could be achieved by a peaceful demonstration. Thus it afforded the Government the opportunity of defeating it without having to strike a blow against it. The procession which made its way from Château d'eau through the boulevards was entirely unarmed. The Government, for its part, being fully informed on all details by its spies, had quietly and unnoticed arranged for all important points to be occupied by the National Guard, sharpshooters from Vincennes and other troops. The procession was completely encircled and even if it had been armed could not have offered any resistance. How much less could it do so, being unarmed! Changarnier, who had taken all necessary measures, was clever enough not to allow the alarm to be sounded. As if by magic, it was suddenly seen that all decisive points were occupied by troops. You can therefore understand that the unarmed masses quickly dispersed in order to get weapons, but even the arms depots which had been prepared in advance for the eventuality of an uprising were found to have been seized by the Government and put under military guard. The uprising was thus outwitted.

Page Break me9.478
Page me9.478

That is the whole secret of this unprecedented day in the history of the French revolution. You may perhaps have read in the German newspapers of barricades which were said to have been easily captured. These barricades consisted of nothing but a few chairs which were thrown on to the street in order to halt for a moment the cavalry which were attacking unarmed people with their sabres.
Page me9.478

In addition, there were some other circumstances which made the shameful outcome of June 13 inevitable.
Page me9.478

At the very moment when Ledru-Rollin and his colleagues in the Conservatoire des Arts†396 were occupied with constituting themselves as the Provisional Government, the secret socialist committee was engaged on the same task. It wanted to constitute itself as the Commune. Hence, even before the existing power was overthrown, the uprising had already split into two camps, and the important thing is that the People's Party was not the party of the “Mountain”. This fact alone explains a great deal. The secret committee had wanted to start the outbreak already some days previously and by night. In that way the Government would have been taken by surprise. But the “Mountain” and the “Friends of the Constitution” (the party of the National)†397 allied with it were opposed to this. They wanted to have the initiative in their hands. Ledru-Rollin's speech in the Chamber†398 was to be the pledge that the “Mountain” had decided on serious action. Thus on the one hand, those advocating immediate vigorous action were frustrated and preparations were made for a peaceful demonstration. On the other hand, the people who saw that Ledru-Rollin had so strikingly committed himself in the National Assembly, believed he possessed immense connections within the army and a profoundly conceived and far-reaching plan etc. How surprised, therefore, they must have been when it became obvious that Ledru-Rollin's power was a mere illusion and that precautionary measures and preparations for an attack had been taken only by the Government. Thus you see how the two revolutionary parties paralysed and deluded each other. The people's recollections of the more than ambiguous behaviour of the “Mountain” and of Ledru-Rollin in particular during May and June,†399 and finally the cholera, which raged especially in the working-class districts, did the rest. Taken as a whole, June 13, 1849 is only the retaliation for June 1848. On that occasion the proletariat was deserted by the "Mountain", this time the "Mountain" was deserted by the proletariat.

Page Break me9.479
Page me9.479
However grievous June 13 is bound to be for our party throughout Europe, the good thing about that day is that, with the exception of Lyons,†400 the counter-revolutionary party in the National Assembly arrived at sole power without much bloodshed. That party will not only disintegrate, its extreme faction will soon reach a point when it will seek to discard even the irksome semblance of the Republic, and then you will see how it will be blown away with a single breath and there will be a repetition of the February, but on a higher level.

K. M.x.

Written on June 21, 1849

First published in the newspaper Der Volksfreund No. 26, June 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.480

Karl Marx

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWSPAPER
LA PRESSE†a
Page me9.480
Your item published in La Presse of July 26 concerning my stay in Paris, which has been reprinted word for word by other newspapers, contains such erroneous assertions that I am compelled to write a few lines in reply.
Page me9.480
In the first place, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, of which I was the owner†401 and editor-in-chief, was never banned. Its publication was suspended only for five days because of the state of siege. When the state of siege was lifted, the newspaper reappeared, and continued to appear during the following seven months. Since the Prussian Government could not see any possibility of legally prohibiting the newspaper it had recourse to a strange measure: It got rid of the owner, that is to say, it forbade me to reside in Prussia.†b As regards the legality of this measure, this will be decided by the Prussian Chamber of Deputies which is shortly to meet.
Page me9.480
After being forbidden to stay in Prussia, I went first of all to the Grand Duchy of Hesse, in which — as in other parts of Germany — I was not forbidden to reside. I did not go to Paris as a refugee, as your newspaper asserts, but of my own accord with a regular passport and with the sole aim of collecting additional material for my work on the history of political economy, which I had begun already five years earlier.†402

Page Break me9.481
Page me9.481
Neither was I ordered to leave Paris immediately; on the contrary, I was given time to address a complaint to the Minister of the Interior.†a This complaint has been handed in and I now await the result.†403

Page me9.481
Kindly accept etc.,
Dr. K. Marx

Written about July 27, 1849

First published in the newspaper La Presse, July 30, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.482

Frederick Engels

REPUDIATION†404

Page me9.482
It has come to the ears of the undersigned, who served in Willich's volunteer corps during the campaign in the Palatinate and Baden, that the following accusations are being made against that corps:
Page me9.482
1) Willich's corps is said to have deserted Becker's in the Black Forest†405;
Page me9.482
2) it is said not to have acknowledged Becker as commander-in-chief;
Page me9.482
3) it is said to have crossed into Switzerland whilst Becker's corps was still eight German miles†a behind.
Page me9.482
As regards the first accusation, let the following facts speak for themselves: Willich was positioned in Furtwangen with orders to hold the Simonswalder Thal and the defiles leading to the Höllenthal. He advanced the larger part of his troops over the mountains towards Simonswald and St. Märgen. Becker was positioned in Triberg and St. Georgen, on Willich's right. To our great astonishment Becker suddenly appeared in Furtwangen with his whole corps. He explained this strange manoeuvre to Willich by saying that the troops stationed in Triberg had left their posts in defiance of their officers and he himself had gone after them, from St. Georgen, to persuade them to re-occupy Triberg. And in fact Becker and his corps did march off again towards evening. Meanwhile Willich went to headquarters in Donaueschingen to see how matters stood. The enemy, who had broken through to Villingen by crossing Württemberg, had already reconnoitred the territory up the road. In Donaueschingen it was first of all intended to take up a position near Hüfingen, an hour's march further back; later, however, it was decided to retreat to the Swiss frontier and defend the Wutachthal. As soon as this decision was taken, Willich sent two dispatches to Furtwangen. From there the information was passed first to Becker and only then to Willich's companies, which were in advanced positions, although along the difficult mountain tracks it would take longer to reach the latter. By the time Willich's corps had assembled in Furtwangen, Becker could therefore also have arrived there. Willich himself went as far as Neustadt to meet his corps, and there he delayed departure until the arrival of two companies from Becker's corps. From Bondorf he sent another dispatch to Becker notifying him that the enemy was already advancing well towards Lenzkirch and that the route through Bondorf†a was therefore to be preferred. And Becker did in fact take this route and reached Tiengen with his whole corps without being attacked, whilst Willich with one company and four cannon faced the enemy first forming the rearguard based on Stühlingen and later the right flank at Ofteringen and Wutöschingen. It is clear that there can be no question of any “desertion” here.

Page Break me9.483
Page me9.483
The second accusation refers to the fact that the captain of one of Willich's companies stationed in Furtwangen refused to leave the post where Willich had stationed him and to march with Becker. He acted rightly. Willich's corps had formed voluntarily and had put itself voluntarily under Willich's command. It consisted exclusively of men who knew what they were fighting for. It is self-evident that such a corps ceases to exist if it is broken up and dispersed. Furthermore, Willich had been specifically ordered to hold this position with his corps, and the withdrawal of the company in question would have thwarted all his arrangements.
Page me9.483
The third accusation has even less foundation. It is public knowledge that at the last council of war held in Jestetten†406 Becker advocated crossing on to Swiss soil, whereas Willich was for continuing the struggle. It is public knowledge that from Tiengen Becker marched with the main part of the army to Baltersweil while Willich covered his retreat with 350 men and four cannon near Erzingen, and from Baltersweil to Jestetten whilst Willich occupied the position the army had vacated at Baltersweil. It is public knowledge that Willich remained for a further 24 hours with his corps in this position — the artillery had already left him — whilst Siegel crossed into Switzerland at

Rafz and Becker a few hours later at Rheinau; that we only left the position after facing the enemy outposts for several hours without being attacked; that we spent that night still bivouacking on German soil and only entered Swiss territory the following morning†a — the last to do so.

Page Break me9.484
Page me9.484
It is by no means our purpose to become involved in the unedifying disputes which have broken out between the various leaders of the Baden army. We merely ask that false reports should not be circulated about our corps and our leaders.

Canton Vaud, July 26, 1849

Koehler, Captain†b

Written by Engels on July 26, 1849

First published in the Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung No. 2, 1967

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.485

APPENDICES

Page Break me9.486
Page Break me9.487

REPORT ON MARX'S EXPULSION
SENT BY THE COLOGNE GOVERNMENT AUTHORITIES TO THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR
VON MANTEUFFEL

Page me9.487
Meanwhile Marx is still staying here, although furnished with neither residence permit nor card, and the newspaper of which he is editor continues with its destructive tendencies, deriding and ridiculing all that men normally respect and hold sacred, and urging the overthrow of the existing constitution and the establishment of a social republic, and its effects are all the more damaging since its impertinence and humour constantly attract new readers.
Page me9.487

The earlier investigation into his affairs resulted in his acquittal, as did the one subsequently opened against him for direct incitement to rebellion.†407
Page me9.487

The commandant of the local fortress has now called on the police authorities to expel Marx from here as a dangerous person. We enclose the application in question, along with the report of the Police Superintendent,†a and we can only concur with the latter's view that his expulsion from this town without his simultaneous removal from the Prussian state would achieve nothing; nor do we see any objection to proceeding forthwith with Marx's expulsion if he gives any specific cause. Whether on the other hand it would be expedient to expel him at the present moment merely on the grounds of the dangerous tendencies of the newspaper which he has been editing in like manner for some considerable period, appears to be more doubtful. It is possible that taking such a step might provoke a demonstration by the democratic party in sympathy with Marx. For this reason and because the Royal Ministry of the Interior had previously seen fit in its directive of August 12†a last to take note of the measures we have taken regarding Marx,†408 we consider it necessary to assure ourselves of Your Excellency's agreement as to the expulsion of Marx from the state before proceeding.

Page Break me9.488

Written on March 10, 1849

First published in the Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt No. 176, June 27, 1913

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.489

INVITATION OF THE DEMOCRATIC ASSOCIATION IN SOLINGEN TO MARX, FREILIGRATH, ENGELS, SCHAPPER AND WOLFF†409

Page me9.489
Solingen, March 11, 1849

To Herr Karl Marx, Editor-in-Chief of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Cologne

Dear Citizen,

In accordance with the decision of a general meeting of the Democratic Association here, a grand democratic banquet will be held here on the 18th inst. to celebrate the anniversary of the March revolution of last year.
Page me9.489
Because of your devotion to this cause, we take the liberty of inviting you to participate in this festival, together with citizens Freiligrath, Engels, Schapper and Wolff, and ask you to be so good as to inform them, in the hope that you will respond to our invitation.
Page me9.489
With our democratic fraternal greetings,

On behalf of the Festival Committee,
H. Schaeffer
Page me9.489
— P.S. In addition, we ask you to publish the accompanying announcement in the Wednesday issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and to collect the payment for the insertion through the post-office from the undersigned.

On behalf of the above-named Committee,
H. Schaeffer

First published in Der Bund der Kommunisten, Bd. I, Berlin, 1970, S. 919

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.490

BANQUET IN GÜRZENICH

Page me9.490
Cologne, March 20. Yesterday evening a banquet was held in Gürzenich to mark the anniversary of last year's barricade battles in Berlin. Whereas even at the bourgeois concert of March 18 “to celebrate the promise” of a Constitution etc. etc., the biggest hall of our city was fairly well filled, yesterday there was not room enough to hold half the public streaming towards it. While 5,000-6,000 persons stood crowded in the hall side by side, several thousand more tried in vain to get in. The hall had filled so rapidly that even a number of speakers succeeded only after 9 o'clock in forcing their way through.
Page me9.490
Karl Schapper was in the chair and opened the meeting with a toast to the sovereign people, the sole source of all legal power. Further toasts were drunk as follows: H. Becker: to the memory of those who died on March 18 and 19; Citizen Wachter: to the improvement of the German Michel; Citizen Weyll: to the complete revolution, not an incomplete one; Citizen Rittinghausen: to the downfall of the German Emperor; C. Cramer: to the democratic women present at our banquet; W. Wolff, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: to the Italian republics; E. Dronke, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: to the proletarian revolution; P. Nothjung: to the victory of the Magyars and Kossuth; H. Bürgers, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: to the overthrow of Austria; F. Wolff, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: to the accused on trial in Bourges†410; F. Engels, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung: to the June insurgents in Paris; K. Schapper: to the English Chartists and their revolutionary leaders, Ernest Jones and G.J. Harney; Carl Cramer: to the Poles; Chr. Esser, editor of the Arbeiter-Zeitung†a: to the Red Republic.

Page Break me9.491
Page me9.491

The banquet, which went off entirely peacefully and orderly, concluded at about 11 p.m. with unanimous cheers for the Red Republic. In contrast to the concert held by the wailers,†411 in Gürzenich on March 18, we are glad to note that never before has there been a festival in Cologne which has brought together such a numerous and at the same time so judicious a public as that at the banquet held yesterday evening under the auspices of the red flag.

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 251, March 21, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.492

LETTER FROM THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR VON MANTEUFFEL TO THE OBERPRÄSIDENT OF THE RHINE PROVINCE, HERR EICHMANN, TOGETHER WITH A COPY OF THE INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING THE EXPULSION OF MARX SENT TO THE ROYAL GOVERNMENT AUTHORITIES IN COLOGNE

Page me9.492
To the Royal Oberpräsident,
His Honour Herr Eichmann,
at Coblenz

In response to the courteous communication of 29th ult. from Your Honour regarding the expulsion of Dr. Carl Marx, I have today dispatched the instructions to the Royal Government Authorities in Cologne, a copy of which I enclosed herewith for your information.

Page me9.492
At the same time I grant Your Honour full discretion to issue the appropriate instructions to the said Government Authorities concerning those points which you most particularly wish to see observed in case of the expulsion of the aforesaid Marx.

Berlin, April 7, 1849

The Minister of the Interior
v. Manteuffel

Copy
Page me9.492
To the Royal Government Authorities at Cologne
Consequent upon the report of 10th ult.,†a for which the supporting documents are returned enclosed, I would reply to the Royal Government Authorities that I for my part see no objection to the proposed expulsion of Dr. Carl Marx, who is no longer a subject of this polity. The Royal Government Authorities however need no special authorisation to this end; indeed it must be left to the latter to judge whether there is sufficient cause for such a step. It would seem desirable, it is true, to proceed with the expulsion of the aforesaid Marx on the direct occasion of a specific, unequivocal offence on his part; however, such an occasion is unlikely to be wanting, since, as I am informed, he has very recently once again evoked grave suspicion of treasonable activities endangering the state.†412

Page Break me9.493
Page me9.493
Accordingly I simply leave the decision as to further action to the discretion of the Royal Government Authorities, and look forward to receiving a fuller account of the issue of the affair in due course.

Berlin, April 7, 1849

The Minister of the Interior
signed v. Manteuffel

First published in the Zeitschrift für Geschichtswissenschaft, Berlin, 1969, No. 5

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.494

DECISIONS OF THE GENERAL MEETING OF THE COLOGNE WORKERS' ASSOCIATION HELD ON APRIL 16, 1849†413

Page me9.494

The meeting unanimously resolves:

Page me9.494

1. To withdraw from the Union of Democratic Associations of Germany and to join instead the Union of German Workers' Associations, the Central Committee of which is in Leipzig.†414

Page me9.494

2. With the aim of a closer union of the purely social party, to authorise the Committee of the Workers' Association to convene in Cologne a provincial congress of all Workers' Associations of the Rhineland and Westphalia, prior to the holding of the general Workers' Congress in Leipzig.†a

Page me9.494

3. To send delegates to the Congress of Workers' Associations of Germany which will take place shortly in Leipzig.

First published in the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit. Arbeit No. 22, April 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.495

FROM THE MINUTES OF THE COMMITTEE MEETING OF THE COLOGNE WORKERS' ASSOCIATION HELD ON APRIL 17, 1849

Page me9.495

...5. In accordance with the decision of yesterday's general meeting: To convene here on the first Sunday in May a congress of representatives of all the Workers' Associations of the Rhineland and Westphalia.

Page me9.495

For the implementation of this decision, the Committee appoints a provisional provincial committee of six members, consisting of citizens K. Marx, W. Wolff, K. Schapper, Anneke, Esser and Otto, and calls upon it to send invitations, with a statement of reasons, to the Associations concerned....

First published in the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit No. 22, April 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.496

LETTER
FROM THE ROYAL GOVERNMENT AUTHORITIES
IN COLOGNE TO THE OBERPRÄSIDENT
OF THE RHINE PROVINCE, HERR EICHMANN,
REGARDING THE EXPULSION OF MARX

Page me9.496
Cologne, April 19, 1849
re. No. 2474
Page me9.496
To the Royal Oberpräsident of the Rhine Province
His Honour Herr Eichmann,
at Coblenz

We have the honour to communicate to Your Honour a copy, enclosed, of the order issued to the local Police Superintendent relating to the expulsion of the writer Carl Marx, in execution of the directive of 13th inst.

Royal Government
Department of the Interior
Birck Wenzel

Copy
Page me9.496
To the Royal Police Superintendent
Herr Geiger, in Cologne

Following your report of 1st ult., for which the supporting documents are returned enclosed, we decided to ask the Minister of the Interior concerning the expulsion of Dr. C. Marx, informing him at the same time that although we were in no doubt that his expulsion from the state should be carried out forthwith if he gives any specific cause, but that on the other hand it was more doubtful whether his expulsion should take place merely on the grounds of the dangerous tendencies of the newspaper which he has been editing in like manner for some considerable period.†a We hereby send you for your information a copy of the Minister's instructions of 7th inst.,†b as communicated to us, and instruct you to arrange and carry out the expulsion of the aforesaid Marx from the state when direct cause is next given for such action by an unequivocal offence on the part of the aforesaid Marx. We would furthermore observe that we have no knowledge of the allegations which, as we are informed by the Minister, have quite recently brought upon the aforesaid Marx the grave suspicion of treasonable activities endangering the state,†415 and request you to apprise us forthwith of whatever knowledge you may have of them, so that we may determine whether to proceed with the expulsion on those grounds.

Page Break me9.497

Cologne, April 19, 1849

Royal Government
Department of the Interior
(signed) Birck
Copy signed Perker

First published in the Zeitschrift für Geschichtswissenschaft, Berlin, 1969, No. 5

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.498

RESOLUTION OF BRANCH No. 1
OF THE COLOGNE WORKERS' ASSOCIATION†416

Page me9.498

1. Considering that in the newspaper Freiheit, Arbeit Dr. Gottschalk describes Citizen Karl Marx as a friend and co-thinker of Franz Raveaux, deputy of the Assembly in Frankfurt, whereas Citizen Marx stated at the committee meeting of February 8 that, although at present he supported the candidature of Raveaux and Schneider II, he was a long way from agreeing with these persons in principle; that, on the contrary, the first named precisely during the period when he was most prominent was mercilessly attacked in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; but that at the present moment there could be no question of red democrats and colourless democrats, since for the time being the main thing was to oppose the absolute monarchy, and to achieve this aim both red and colourless democrats would have to unite against the wailers;

Page me9.498

2. furthermore, that Dr. Gottschalk took the opportunity of the Democratic Congress in Frankfurt†417 to state that he was able to utilise the Cologne workers just as much for a red monarchy as for a red republic, thus alleging that the workers themselves were merely a machine blindly obedient to him;

Page me9.498

3. that the attacks against Raveaux in the above-mentioned newspaper are of a very base, malicious nature because they make his bodily infirmity a subject of reproach and call it a sham;

Page me9.498

4. that the other attacks in the newspaper are for the most part wholly without foundation, and owing to their silliness are not even worth refuting, but nevertheless betray petty hatred and spite and the base, malicious character of their author;
Page me9.498
5. that Dr. Gottschalk after his acquittal had a plan, about which he spoke to a number of members of the Workers' Association, to re-organise the Workers' Association and for this purpose to place himself (as president), together with five others chosen by him as committee members, at the head of the Association, this betrays a despotic frame of mind and conflicts with the most elementary democratic principles;

Page Break me9.499
Page me9.499
6. that in attempting to set up such a new organisation he has deserted the party of the real proletarians, and has thrown himself into the arms of the petty bourgeois by desiring to raise the monthly subscriptions of members to five silver groschen;
Page me9.499
7. that Dr. Gottschalk made changes in the newspaper of the Association, as a result of which its publication was interrupted for fourteen days,†418 without having been authorised to do so by the Association, in fact without even giving any direct notice of this to the Association or its Executive Committee; this is a violation of the rights of the Association that is totally unjustifiable and because of Dr. Gottschalk's departure shortly afterwards, it even cannot be defended on the grounds of necessity or urgent reasons;
Page me9.499
8. that Dr. Gottschalk, after his acquittal, instead of fulfilling the expectations of the Cologne workers and resuming his previous progressive activity among them, to the astonishment of all went away without saying a single word of farewell to them or thanking them for their loyal support;
Page me9.499
9. that Dr. Gottschalk, owing to excessive sensitivity, went into exile of his own accord, and from Brussels he issued a declaration which certainly could not serve in the least to explain or justify his behaviour, since in it he, a republican, speaks of his being called back either by “the hitherto supreme arbiter in the country” or by “the voice of the people”,†419 therefore considering the supreme arbiter to be something other than the voice of the people as a whole; that by the supreme arbiter in this passage he could only have meant the King,†a thereby putting himself directly on the side of the legitimists and monarchists; that, on the other hand, in this declaration he once again mocks the people by expecting that it would call back someone who acknowledges and appeals to a supreme arbiter other than the voice of the people itself; that he plays the part here of the most ignoble type of time-server, seeking to keep a path open for himself to both the King and the people;
Page me9.499
10. that Dr. Gottschalk has not deigned to give any reply to the request of the Workers' Association that he should explain his so-called declaration, a declaration which is incomprehensible, and especially that he should state what he understands by “the hitherto supreme arbiter”;

Page Break me9.500
Page me9.500
11. that Dr. Gottschalk, without being called back by anyone, nevertheless returned to Germany, whereby the whole story of his voluntary banishment is dissipated into thin air and is bound to seem a badly calculated electoral manoeuvre, bearing in mind that in the meantime his brothers and friends have been working very actively for his election to the Berlin Assembly;
Page me9.500
Considering all this, branch No. 1 of the Cologne Workers' Association declares:

that it in no way approves of Dr. Gottschalk's behaviour after his acquittal by the jury at the trial here, and that it emphatically and indignantly repudiates the imputation that the Workers' Association would allow itself to be misused in the interests of a red monarchy or misled by spiteful personal attacks on individuals, or permit a president with a subservient committee to be foisted on it, or call back a voluntary exile who, in order to be redeemed, appeals for clemency simultaneously to the King and to the people, or in general to allow any individual whoever he may be, to treat the Workers' Association as if it consisted of stupid boys.

First published in the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit No. 24, April 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.501

DECISIONS OF THE GENERAL MEETING
OF THE COLOGNE WORKERS' ASSOCIATION
HELD ON APRIL 23, 1849

Page me9.501
1. The general meeting will be held in future every Wednesday.
Page me9.501
2. The provisional committee, consisting of Karl Marx, Karl Schapper, Wilhelm Wolff, Friedrich Anneke, Esser and Otto, elected by the Committee for the purpose of convening here in Cologne a congress of the Workers' Associations of the Rhineland and Westphalia, is confirmed.

First published in the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit No. 24, April 29, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.502

REPORT ON THE CONVOCATION OF THE CONGRESS OF WORKERS' ASSOCIATIONS

Page me9.502

Recently, a number of its members has resigned from the district committee of the Democratic Associations of the Rhine Province, and simultaneously the Workers' Association here has announced its withdrawal from the Union of Rhenish Democratic Associations.†a This step is due to the conviction that, in view of the heterogeneous elements in the Associations in question, there is little to be expected from them that would be advantageous for the interests of the working class or the great mass of the people.

Page me9.502

The more urgent, therefore, is it firmly to unite the homogeneous elements, and to bring about vigorous cooperation of all the Workers' Associations.

Page me9.502

As the first measure for this purpose, the Workers' Association here considers it necessary to set up a provisional committee of all the Workers' Associations of the Rhine Province and Westphalia, and it appoints the undersigned as members of this committee with the task of undertaking the necessary steps to achieve the above-mentioned aim.

Page me9.502

The provisional committee herewith invites all Workers' Associations and all other associations which, although hitherto not bearing this name, nevertheless resolutely support the principles of social democracy, to send delegates to a provincial congress to be held on the first Sunday of next month (May 6).†b

Page me9.502

The subjects on the agenda will be:

Page me9.502

1. Organisation of the Rhenish-Westphalian Workers' Associations;

Page Break me9.503

Page me9.503

2. Election of delegates to the General Congress of All German Workers' Associations to be held in the month of June in Leipzig;

Page me9.503

3. Discussion and formulation of the proposals to be sent with the delegates to the Congress in Leipzig.

Page me9.503

Delegates elected to the preliminary Congress to be held here are requested to report their arrival, furnished with their mandates, not later than 10 a.m. on May 6 here at Simon's hotel Kranz in the Altenmarkt.

Cologne, April 24, 1849

Page me9.503

K. Marx (absent), W. Wolff, K. Schapper,
F. Anneke, C. J. Esser, Otto

Page me9.503

N. B. It is requested that communications by letter should be addressed to Karl Schapper, President of the Workers' Association, Unter Hutmacher No. 17.

First published in the supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 282, April 26, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.504

FROM THE MINUTES OF THE COMMITTEE MEETING
OF THE COLOGNE WORKERS' ASSOCIATION
HELD ON MAY 1, 1849

Page me9.504

The representatives of the various branches of the Association reported on their situation and activities.

Page me9.504

The former Democratic Association in Deutz too has joined the Workers' Association in Cologne, as branch club No. 10. At the present time it consists of 230 members. [...]

Page me9.504

The president†a announced the receipt of assenting communications from Bingen, Leipzig and Mannheim. The first two of these concern the separation of the Workers' (Social) Party†420 from the democrats; the last one thanks us for sending the article “Wage Labour and Capital” published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and promises that it will be discussed. [...]

First published in the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit No. 28, May 13, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.505

MARX'S RECEIPT FOR A FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION TOWARDS THE PUBLISHING EXPENSES OF THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG†421

Page me9.505

I acknowledge that I have received an advance of 50 talers from Herr von Frisch.

Dr. K. Marx,
Harburg, May 6

First published in the Zeitschrift für Geschichtswissenschaft, Berlin, 1974, No. 4

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.506

CONGRESS OF THE DEMOCRATIC AND WORKERS' ASSOCIATIONS†422

Page me9.506

Cologne, May 6. The Congress of the Democratic Associations of the Rhine Province began early today under the chairmanship of Dr. Becker. Represented were: the Democratic Club in Aachen, the Democratic Association in Bonn, the Democratic Association in Coblenz, the Democratic-Constitutional Association in Neuwied, the Political Association in Opladen, the Democratic Association in Lamersdorf, the Democratic Association in Uckerath, the Democratic Workers' Association in Honnef, the Citizens' Association in Eupen, the Democratic Association in Plittersdorf, the Democratic Association in Lohmar, the Democratic Socialist Association in Hersel, the Democratic Readers' Association in Xanten, the Democratic Association in Kessenich, the Democratic Association in Saarburg, the Democratic Association in Burscheid, the Citizens' Association in Neuss, the Democratic Association in Siegburg, the Democratic Association in Eitorf, the Democratic Association in Winterscheidt, the Workers' Association in Lennep, the People's Association in Eschweiler, the Democratic Association in Mülheim an der Ruhr, the Democratic Association in Sieglar. (46 persons.)

Page me9.506

The Workers' Congress, presided over by Schapper, had delegates from the Associations in Solingen, Eschweiler, Aachen (Workers' Association and Army Reserve Association), Heinsberg, Coblenz, Barmen, Ratingen, Stolberg, Eilendorf, Hamm, Münster, Kreuznach, Hersel, Honnef, Overath, Mülheim an der Ruhr, Scheiderhöhe, Königswinter, Merzenich, Bork, Wiesedorf, Bielefeld, Ems, Bonn, Cologne (Workers' Association and Cigarmakers' Association). (120 persons.)

Page Break me9.507
Page me9.507

In the afternoon the two meetings united for a joint consultation.

Page me9.507

A number of private discussions took place with the Democratic-Constitutional Associations that were in session in Deutz. Many representatives of these Associations declared that in all probability their Associations would be wholly merged in the District Federation of Democrats.

First published in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung, May 8, 1849, reprinted in the journal Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung, Berlin, 1968, No. 2

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.508

ENGELS' EXPULSION FROM ELBERFELD

Page me9.508

Elberfeld, May 15. The state of affairs remains the same, calm and order was not disturbed yesterday; the appearance of the city was unaltered. Today a poster was pasted up at street corners announcing that the Committee of Public Safety has appointed a Herr von Mirbach as Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces†*; another announcement of the Committee declares that Herr Engels, one of the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, has been expelled.†a In another poster the Committee of Public Safety decrees that everywhere only the black-red-and-gold†b flag is allowed to be flown, and it calls on towns and villages in the neighbourhood of Elberfeld for assistance. We learn from Essen that the army reserve men there who have returned from leave have gone to Wesel. The private letter which gave us this information adds that a state of siege has been proclaimed in Essen. According to the announcement of the colonel responsible for this action, the reason for it was that he believed he could not mobilise the army reserve in any other way.

First published in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung No. 113, May 17, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.509

THE DEMOCRATIC AND WORKERS' PRESS ON MARX'S EXPULSION AND THE SUPPRESSION OF THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG

TRIER'SCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.509

Cologne, May 18 .... It is rumoured that all democrats who are not domiciled in Cologne will be deported by police action; this measure is said to be primarily aimed at the editorial personnel of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. It is a fact that Karl Marx was already yesterday served with such an order. At midday yesterday, Fr. Engels left for the Rhine Palatinate.†423

First published in the supplement to the Trier'sche Zeitung No. 120, May 20, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

NEUE KÖLNISCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.509

Cologne, May 19

From out of the dark did the fatal shaft fly,
From ambush blows fell thick and fast —
So now in the flower of my manhood I lie,
A proud rebel that's breathed his last!

F. Freiligrath

“Abschiedswort der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung”†a

Page me9.509

The Neue Rheinische Zeitung has ceased to exist.

Page me9.509

Our issue therefore has a black mourning border.

Page me9.509

The most interesting news items from south and east pale against the sudden mournful tidings that the Neue Rheinische Zeitung has appeared today for the last time.

Page Break me9.510

Page me9.510

And what an appearance it has!!

Page me9.510

Red, red, red was ever its battle-cry, but today the whole garb is red. The red print of the newspaper has greatly surprised its readers, — the spirit which once more blazes out from these breath-taking lines of print has made us profoundly lament that the newspaper has now ceased to exist!

Page me9.510

No other newspaper can henceforth serve us as a substitute for this loss. — We shall seek in vain in the most brilliant periodicals of all countries for articles like those of the blood-stained June of 1848, nowhere shall we find again such conclusive documentation regarding the "good financial administration of Prussia",†a or the "Silesian milliard",†b or "Wage Labour and Capital".†c It must be admitted that by the glorious downfall of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung democracy in the Rhineland has suffered a reverse. We mourn — but Freiligrath's poetry, which has attained its everlasting pinnacle in his "farewell word" today, does not leave us without consolation:

Farewell, brothers, but not forever farewell,
For the spirit they never can slay!
I'll rise up again soon with a rattling of mail,
I'll return better armed for the fray!

First published in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung No. 115, May 20, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

NEUE DEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.510

Cologne, May 19. The last number of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung printed in red ink has just been published here. At last it, too, has succumbed to the blows of divinely-graced Prussianism. Since the Government was unable to get at it by judicial proceedings, and in spite of all provocations it could not find a reason for imposing a state of siege, it finally had to have recourse to deporting its editor-in-chief,†d and it prepared orders for the deportation or arrest of the other editors in case even that measure should not have the desired effect. — Day by day the German people will increasingly learn to appreciate the blessing which their representatives in Frankfurt intended to bestow on them by establishing a Prussian hereditary emperor.

Page Break me9.511

First published in the Neue Deutsche Zeitung No. 119, May 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

DEUTSCHE LONDONER ZEITUNG
Page me9.511
Cologne, May 19. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung has for the time being ceased publication; its last number today is printed entirely in red. The following order has been issued against its editor-in-chief:

“The tendency of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung to provoke in its readers contempt for the present government, and incite them to violent revolutions and the setting up of a social republic has become stronger in its latest pieces. The right of hospitality which he so disgracefully abused is therefore to be withdrawn from its editor-in-chief, Dr. Karl Marx, and since he has not obtained permission to prolong his stay in these states, he is ordered to leave them within 24 hours. If he should not comply voluntarily with this demand, he is to be forcibly conveyed across the frontier”.

“Cologne, May 11, 1849

Royal Government. Moeller

To Herr Geiger, Royal Police Superintendent, here.”†a

Page me9.511
Today a poster has been pasted up in the streets of Cologne, inviting attendance at a meeting to discuss the speedy establishment of a new democratic organ.
Page me9.511
Such, you constitutional Germans, are your new achievements! — A German, a Prussian, is expelled from Germany “because he abuses hospitality” — a newspaper is suppressed because it spoke the truth, because Prussia's reactionary martial-law newspapers were unable to cope with the wit and stylistic acumen of the noble-minded Marx. Yes, Herr von Hohenzollern, the truth told you by the Neue Rheinische Zeitung is painful, very painful — (we shall reproduce in our next issue an article from the newspaper, “The Deeds of the Hohenzollern Dynasty”)†a — and when press trials, and all other acts of trickery, proved of no avail, for eight to ten times the tortures of the Prussian Inquisition came to naught in the face of the sound common sense of a Rhenish jury, recourse was had to the ultimate means — suppression of the newspaper. In vain did the bankrupt brains of Prussian reaction assail the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, they could not get at it by judicial measures. The martial-law newspapers of drunken Frederick William could not refute the exposition which Marx gave of the edicts of the hypocrite in Potsdam,†424 — and worst of all was the fact that the circulation of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung increased so quickly and was so extensive, and that the paper met with universal approval.

Page Break me9.512

Page me9.512
The Hohenzollern on his throne, surrounded by "My glorious army" and with a legion of quill-drivers at his service, trembles before a single democratic newspaper; he cannot sleep in peace because it tells the naked truth — so it must be suppressed.
Page me9.512
Things have come to such a pass with the monarchy that it has to proceed to use brute force to suppress a newspaper which, by the irrefutable pungency of its truth, threatened to give the miserable, ailing existence of the monarchy a still more wretched ending!
Page me9.512
This is the Prussian guaranteed freedom of the press. Such is the interpretation of the Prussian Constitution — of the German Imperial Constitution!

First published in the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung No. 217, May 25, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

DEMOCRATIC REVIEW†425
Page me9.512
... The German kings and princes — gore-dyed with the blood of their "subjects", — are labouring hard for the establishment of the Red Republic. The thrice-perjured King of Prussia†b is determined to earn for himself the title of "Most Infamous". On the 27th of April, the Prussian Chamber of Representatives was dissolved and the same evening, crowds having collected in the streets, the people were fired on and mercilessly butchered. From that time martial law has been the only law throughout Prussia, arrests are continually taking place, and the prisons are crowded. Early in May, insurrections broke out in the Rhine provinces. In some of the insurgent towns, the patriots have been put down, in others they have been sold by the bourgeoisie, and in others they yet maintain their stand.

Page Break me9.513
Page me9.513
That admirable journal, the New Rhenish Gazette, has been forcibly suppressed, and its chief editor, Dr. Marx, expelled from Cologne. The last number of the Gazette appeared on the 19th May, printed in red ink; it proclaimed in every line "war to the knife" against his Prussian kingship, and all the oppressors and betrayers of the German people....

First published in the journal Democratic Review, Vol. 1, June 1849, p. 25

Printed according to the journal

Page Break me9.514

THE EDITORS OF THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.514

Cologne, May 19. ... What has happened to the individual editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung is as follows: for his actions in Elberfeld Fr. Engels is being prosecuted like a criminal†a; Marx, Dronke and Weerth, since they are not Prussian subjects, have to leave Prussia; F. Wolff and W. Wolff are being threatened with judicial proceedings, the former because he has not done military service, the latter because of political offences alleged to have been committed by him earlier in the old provinces. The Court has today refused to free Korff on bail.†b

(Düsseldorfer Zeitung)

Reprinted in the Deutsche Zeitung No. 140, May 22, 1849 and the Trier'sche Zeitung No. 122, May 23, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper text

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.515

DEPARTURE OF EDITOR KARL MARX FROM COLOGNE

Page me9.515

Cologne. Yesterday morning Herr Karl Marx, the former editor-in-chief of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, accompanied by some of the other editors, left Cologne and went to the region of the Upper Rhine; his activity there will be as successful as it has been here.†426

First published in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung No. 116, May 22, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.516

THE SECOND TRIAL OF THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.516

Cologne, May 29. Today the police court passed sentence in a case which has been pending since September of last year concerning a charge of libelling deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly.†427 Summoned before the court were: K. Marx, E. Dronke, G. Weerth, H. Becker, H. Korff, and the printers Dietz and Bechtold. The first three did not attend. With the exception of Korff, all were acquitted. Korff (as former responsible manager of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung) was sentenced to one month's imprisonment and payment of one-seventh of the costs, on the charge of insulting the "comical Stedtmann". The court very incisively rejected the accusation against Weerth in regard to Schnapphahnski-Lichnowski.

First published in the Neue Deutsche Zeitung No. 128, June 1, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.517

TRIAL FOR LIBELLING DEPUTIES OF THE GERMAN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Page me9.517

Proceedings of the session of the Police Court of the Royal Provincial Court in Cologne on May 29, 1849.

Page me9.517

The persons here listed:

Georg Weerth, writer,
Dr. Carl Marx, formerly editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung,
Joh. Wilh. Dietz, proprietor of a printing-press,
Hermann Korff, formerly responsible manager of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Arnold Bechtold, foreman at the Langen printing works,
Dr. Herm. Becker, lawyer,
Dr. Ernst Dronke, writer, were summoned as of today to answer charges of libelling deputies of the German National Assembly. Of the accused, only Dietz, Korff, Bechtold and Becker appeared; the court will therefore find against those absent in contumaciam.†a

Page me9.517

The representative of the Public Prosecutor's office, State Public Prosecutor Bölling, set out the substance of the indictment. G. Weerth, he said, is accused: of having libelled Prince Lichnowski in the short novel entitled Leben und Taten des berühmten Ritters Schnapphahnski [Life and Deeds of the Famous Knight Schnapphahnski], printed in the literary section of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in the months of August and September last year, by imputing to him actions which, if they were true, would bring him into disrepute or render him liable for prosecution. Dr. Carl Marx is similarly accused of libelling Prince

Page Break me9.518
Lichnowski. In No. 95 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung of September 6, 1848, in an article dated Breslau, August 29, Prince Lichnowski was charged with having called upon the electors of his district not to elect any town-dweller as deputy, since such a man would only work for the alleviation of municipal taxes and the increase of rural taxes. The State Public Prosecutor read out some passages from this article and sought to show that it contained insults directed at Prince Lichnowski. Dr. Marx, as editor-in-chief, was necessarily liable for the content of this article, whose author he refused to name. Korff is accused of: 1) having libelled the German National Assembly deputy, Stedtmann, in the article dated Frankfurt, September 12 contained in No. 102, p. 4, col. 4 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung of September 14, 1848, by imputing to him an action which, if it were true, would bring him into disrepute; and 2) having libelled the deputies in the German National Assembly in Frankfurt who voted approval of the armistice with Denmark,†428 by accusing them of having betrayed the nation, in the proclamation which was printed in No. 110, p. 4, col. 2 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung of September 23, 1848. The two articles on which the charge is based were read out. In the first the deputy Stedtmann is specifically accused of incorporating false information in a report on a committee meeting, in the hope of being made a Minister. The indictment brought against Marx and Korff was also extended to include Joh. Wilhelm Dietz as printer of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. The State Public Prosecutor attempted to derive his responsibility for the contentious article from Articles 25 and 26 of the imposed Constitution and from Article 60 of the Rhenish Penal Code. The indictment against Becker, Bechtold and Dronke similarly concerns libel of the deputies who voted for the armistice with Denmark. On September 20, 1848, here in the Eiser Hall a public meeting was held, at which the Malmö armistice was discussed. Dronke was a speaker at this meeting and declared that the deputies who had voted approval of that armistice had betrayed the nation. The meeting adopted this declaration and resolved to publicise it by having it printed and posted at street corners. Dr. Becker had passed the resolution in question to Bechtold for printing, and the latter had printed it.
Page me9.518
The accused, questioned more closely by the presiding magistrate, made the following statements:
Page me9.518
Dietz admitted having printed the contentious articles. He did not know who the authors were. He maintained, however, that he was not responsible for the content of those articles, since the editor and responsible manager of the newspaper were known and living in Prussia. If Dr. Marx had recently been expelled from the country, that was not his fault; the former had in any case been resident in Cologne throughout the investigation.

Page Break me9.519

Page me9.519
Korff conceded he was manager of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. The contentious articles were accepted with his approval. His defence counsel, barrister Rath, sought to demonstrate that there was no libel in the articles concerned. He named their author and maintained that as a result his client was absolved of all responsibility.
Page me9.519
Dr. Becker admitted having passed to Bechtold for printing the proclamation from the Eiser Hall, which had been sent to him by a messenger-boy from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. The content of the proclamation in question had however been unknown to him as he had not been present at the proceedings in the Eiser Hall on September 20. As secretary of the Democratic Association†429 he was charged with attending to all material for printing, and that was why the manuscript had been sent to him. Moreover the proclamation had already been published by the Neue Rheinische Zeitung before he had passed the manuscript to Bechtold. The defendant declared that in certain circumstances he would be ready to assume responsibility for the contents of the proclamation. In his statement he also drew attention to the fact that the indictment had been brought at the request of the Imperial Minister of Justice. The indictment, he submitted, was not directed at specific persons but at a specific party. When he attempted to elaborate on this, the speaker was asked by the presiding magistrate, at the twice repeated instance of the State Public Prosecutor, to keep to the point at issue.
Page me9.519
Bechtold admitted that he had read the manuscript received from Dr. Becker and had forwarded it for printing. His defence counsel, barrister Pheiffer, thereupon argued that as the author of the proclamation was known, the printer could not be punished. If the prosecution intended to adduce Article 60 of the Penal Code, it would have to demonstrate that the accused intended to libel the deputies, and the Public Prosecutor's office had not even attempted to prove this. Moreover, the proclamation did not contain a libel in the legal sense, it did not contain any specific assertion which exposed the deputies to prosecution at law, nor to hatred and contempt; it only expressed a criticism of the resolution concerning the armistice.
Page me9.519
Hereupon the State Public Prosecutor Bölling, in a lengthy speech, sought to justify the indictment and to refute the arguments used by the accused in their defence. In conclusion, he asked that the accused Weerth, Marx, Dronke, and Korff should each be sentenced to a three-month term of imprisonment and to a fine of 1,000 francs, and the remaining accused to a one-month term of imprisonment, and one-seventh of the costs to be imposed on each one of them.

Page Break me9.520
Page me9.520
Hereupon the court adjourned and after deliberations lasting about two hours pronounced judgment to the effect that Korff was sentenced to a one-month imprisonment for libelling the deputy Stedtmann, the charge against Weerth was dismissed because the accusations made in it were not specified, and the remaining accused were acquitted.

First published in the supplement to the Kölnische Zeitung No. 129, May 31, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.521

TRIAL FOR INTERFERENCE IN OFFICIAL FUNCTIONS†430

Page me9.521

On May 30 the former responsible manager of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Hermann Korff, stood again before the police court, accused of having interfered in official functions and having committed an act encroaching on these functions. In an item in the supplement to No. 297 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung of May 13 of this year, Korff had invited people to come to a meeting of the 14th Company of the civic militia and to enter their name on a list. Judicial proceedings were started against Korff for making this call, and he was arrested.

Page me9.521

In the public trial the State Public Prosecutor, Bölling, sought to justify the indictment and asked for the defendant to be sentenced to a two-year term of imprisonment.

Page me9.521

The counsel for the defence, barrister Rath, drew attention to the fact that for some time past similar items concerning the civic militia had been appearing in the local newspapers without there having been any prosecution hitherto. The accusation against Korff, he said, is utterly and completely unfounded. The convoking of the 14th Company in a tavern is not an official function, at most it is an attempt to form a company, that is to say, an attempt at exercising an official function. But assuming that the convocation in question were an official function in the legal sense, only two possibilities were then conceivable: 1) the civic militia is still in existence — and this I maintain is the position in principle; in that case Korff was entitled to convene it. The civic militia had merely been suspended in Cologne during the state of siege†431; with the lifting of the state of siege, all former laws and institutions came back into force; even if not in practice, but legally the civic militia was once more in existence. Or 2) the civic militia was no longer in existence, and this is the view of the authorities and the Public Prosecutor's office; in that case there was no official function either, and in that case the accusation is complete and utter nonsense.

Page Break me9.522

Page me9.522

After the prosecution had replied briefly to the counsel for the defence, barrister Hagen opened his address for the defendant, seeking to demonstrate that the most that could be imputed to him was a remote intention to interfere in official functions, but not in any sense an actual act, actual interference, as is required by Art. 258 of the Penal Code. The court thereupon adjourned for about a quarter of an hour to its committee room and then acquitted the defendant with neither sentence nor costs.
Page me9.522

Despite this acquittal, Korff was taken back into custody by order of the State Public Prosecutor, since he intends to appeal against the verdict of acquittal.

First published in the supplement to the Kölnische Zeitung No. 129, May 31, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.523

FROM THE EDITORS OF THE NEUE KÖLNISCHE ZEITUNG

Page me9.523

On his departure from here, the editor-in-chief of the former Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Herr Karl Marx, has arranged that reports for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung which still continually arrive are to be handed over to the Neue Kölnische Zeitung for its use. We wish to bring this to the notice of the correspondents and we request them, in order to save time, to send their reports directly to our address.

The Editors of the Neue Kölnische Zeitung

First published in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung No. 124, June 1, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.524

A WARRANT OF ARREST

Page me9.524

On the basis of the order for their appearance in Court issued by the royal examining magistrate, I request the civil and military authorities concerned to look out for and, if found, to arrest and bring before me, the following persons:
Page me9.524

1. Friedrich Engels, editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, born in Barmen and last residing in Cologne ...†a who have taken refuge in flight from the investigation instituted against them on account of crimes envisaged in Article 96 of the Penal Code, and whose description I give below.

Elberfeld, June 6, 1849
For the Chief Public Prosecutor
State Public Prosecutor Eichhorn
Page me9.524

Description: 1. Engels. Age 26 to 28; height 5 feet 6 inches; hair blond; forehead smooth; eyebrows blond; eyes blue; nose and mouth well proportioned; beard reddish; chin oval; face oval; complexion healthy; figure slender. Special characteristics: speaks very rapidly and is short-sighted....†b

First published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 137, June 9, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.525

MARX'S ARRIVAL IN PARIS

Page me9.525

Cologne, June 9. The editor-in-chief, Karl Marx, has arrived in Paris.†432

First published in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung No. 132, June 10, 1849

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.526

NOTIFICATION OF MARX'S EXPULSION
FROM PARIS ISSUED BY THE COMMISSIONER
OF POLICE†433

Page me9.526
City of Paris Year eighteen hundred and forty Quartier du Faubourg nine, nineteenth of July
St. Germain

Office of the Prefect of Police†a

NOTIFICATION TO MR. MARX TO RESIDE
IN THE DEPARTMENT OF MORBIHAN
Page me9.526

We the undersigned Commissioner of Police of the Faubourg St. Germain, — notify Mr. Marx (Charles), 29 years of age,†b born at Tréves (Prussia), writer, living at rue de Lille No. 55, of the decision of the Minister of the Interior,†c by which he is required to go to the department of Morbihan in order to reside there, and is obliged to comply with the measure adopted in respect of him.
Page me9.526

Dourlens

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 43, Moscow 1976

Printed according to the manuscript

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.527

NOTIFICATION SENT BY THE COMMISSIONER
OF POLICE STATING THAT MARX'S PETITION WAS REJECTED

Page me9.527
Monsieur Marx, Prussian refugee, rue de Lille
Quartier du Faubourg St. Germain Paris, August 16, 1849

Sir,

In fulfilment of the orders of the Prefect of Police†a I have the honour to inform you that the Minister of the Interior†b has not thought it possible to accede to the petition you have addressed to him requesting him to revoke his decision. Consequently, I require you to leave Paris without delay in order to proceed to the department of Morbihan, where you must reside.
Page me9.527

I have the honour to greet you,

Commissioner of Police of the Quartier du Faubourg

Saint-Germain
Dourlens

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 43, Moscow 1976

Printed according to the manuscript

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me9.528
Page Break me9.529
Page me9.529

Page Break me9.530
Passport issued to Marx by the French police on August 24, 1849 because having been expelled from Paris he intended to go to England. It bears the stamp of Boulogne, the port from which Marx embarked for England, and the date August 26, 1849.
Marx's description is given on the left-hand side of the passport.

Age	32 years	Nose	Ordinary
Height	1m. 71 cm.	Mouth	Medium
Hair	Black	Beard	Black
Forehead	Round	Chin	Round
Eyebrows	Brown	Face	Round
Eyes	Brown	Complexion	Ordinary

Page Break me9.531

NOTES AND INDEXES

Page Break me9.532
Page Break me9.533

NOTES

Page me9.533
†1 In this article, the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung raised the important question of the relation between economic development and the course of the European revolution and of the influence of the economic factor on the revolutionary process. Subsequently, Marx and Engels dealt with this problem on several occasions, particularly in the period when, in the pages of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-Ökonomische

Revue — the journal that continued the traditions of the periodical they had published during the revolution — they summed up the results of the revolutionary battles that had just ended. In the autumn of 1850, they elaborated the ideas expressed in this article when they wrote the following in the "Review [May to October 1850]": "However, this much at least is certain, that the commercial crisis contributed infinitely more to the revolutions of 1848 than the revolution to commercial crisis" (present edition, Vol. 10).

Page me9.533

The Neue Rheinische Zeitung was founded by Marx as a militant periodical intended to exert an effective influence upon the masses, to educate and unite them politically and ideologically and pave the way for the creation of the mass party of the German proletariat. The newspaper provided Marx and Engels with an opportunity to guide the activities of the Communist League founded by them in 1847, which they regarded as the nucleus of the future proletarian party. However, since the League was too weak and numerically small, it could not be directly transformed into the rallying centre of the proletarian forces at the time when the 1848 revolution was at its peak. As the underground activities of the League lost all sense under the conditions of revolution, Marx and Engels instructed its members, who were scattered throughout Germany, to avail themselves of every legal opportunity to join the emerging workers' associations and democratic societies. In this context, a revolutionary proletarian newspaper became the main instrument for directing and co-ordinating the activities of the Communist League members, of mobilising the masses to resolve the tasks of the bourgeois-democratic revolution.

Page me9.533

It was decided to publish the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in Cologne, the capital of the Rhine Province, which was more advanced economically and politically than the other regions of Germany (here the working class was fairly strong and the Code Napoléon was in operation, which provided for somewhat greater freedom of the press than did the Prussian Law). The name, Neue Rheinische Zeitung, was chosen in order to stress the intention to continue the revolutionary-democratic traditions of the Rheinische Zeitung, which was edited by Marx in 1842 and 1843. In view of the specific conditions and the absence of the mass workers' party in Germany, Marx, Engels and their followers entered the political scene as the Left, in fact the proletarian, wing of the democratic movement. This predetermined the stand adopted by the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, which was put out under the subtitle Organ der Demokratie (Organ of Democracy). Only after mid-April 1849, when the German workers' class consciousness underwent certain changes, did the newspaper's editors take steps to set up an independent mass political party of the German proletariat, organisationally separate from petty-bourgeois democracy.

Page Break me9.534

Page me9.534

The first issue came out in the evening of May 31, but was dated June 1, 1848. The editorial board consisted of Karl Marx (editor-in-chief), Heinrich Bürgers, Ernst Dronke, Georg Weerth, Wilhelm Wolff, Ferdinand Wolff and Frederick Engels. In October 1848, the poet Ferdinand Freiligrath became one of its editors. All the editors were members of the Communist League. Common views, a strict division of functions and good co-ordination were characteristic of the work of the editorial board. Besides reading and answering letters and assisting the editor-in-chief, every editor dealt with a specific range of problems. The editorial board had correspondents in various parts of Germany and abroad. It established contacts with a number of democratic periodicals in other countries.

Page me9.534

As a rule, Marx and Engels wrote the editorials, formulating the paper's stand on the most important questions of the revolution. These articles were marked "*Köln" and "Köln". Sometimes editorials marked with one asterisk were printed in other sections of the paper under the heading of News from Italy, France, Hungary, Switzerland and other countries. In addition to editorials, Engels wrote articles on other subjects, such as the progress of the revolutionary and liberation movement in Italy, the revolutionary war in Hungary, the political situation in Switzerland and so on. Wilhelm Wolff contributed articles on the agrarian question, on the condition of the peasants and their movement, particularly in Silesia. He was also responsible for the Current Events section. Georg Weerth wrote feuilletons, and Ernst Dronke contributed various reports (including reports from Paris). Heinrich Bürgers' contribution to the paper was limited to a single article, which was practically rewritten by Marx; he had more success speaking at various meetings as the paper's representative. Freiligrath published his revolutionary verses in the paper.

Page me9.534

The Neue Rheinische Zeitung was a daily (from September 1848 it appeared every day except Monday); it aimed to give its readers prompt information on all the most significant revolutionary developments in Germany and Europe. Often a second edition was put out on the same day; supplements were printed when there was too much material to be squeezed into the four pages of the issue, while special supplements and special editions in the form of leaflets carried the latest and most important news.

Page me9.534

The consistent revolutionary tendency of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, its militant internationalism, and articles that appeared in its columns containing political accusations against the Government, aroused the displeasure of its bourgeois shareholders in the first months of the paper's existence and led to the persecution of its editors by the Government and attacks in the feudal monarchist and liberal bourgeois press. It was particularly the paper's articles in defence of the June 1848 uprising of the Paris proletariat that frightened away the shareholders.

Page me9.534

To make Marx's stay in the Rhine Province more difficult, the Cologne authorities, on instructions from Berlin, refused to restore his Prussian citizenship (which Marx had renounced in 1845), and on several occasions instituted legal proceedings against him and other editors of the paper. On September 26, 1848, when a state of siege was declared in Cologne, several democratic newspapers, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung among them, were suspended. To avoid arrest, Engels, Dronke and Ferdinand Wolff had to leave Germany for a time.

Page Break me9.535

Wilhelm Wolff stayed in Cologne, but for several months he lived in hiding. When the state of siege was lifted, the paper resumed publication on October 12, thanks to the great efforts of Marx who invested all his ready money in the paper. Until January 1849, the brunt of the work, including writing leading articles, fell to Marx, since Engels had to stay in France and later in Switzerland.
Page me9.535

Persecution of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung editors by the judicial authorities and the police became particularly intense after the counter-revolutionary coup in Prussia in November-December 1848. On February 7, 1849, Marx, Engels and Hermann Korff, the responsible manager, had to appear before a jury in Cologne and, the next day, Marx was summoned to court as the leader of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats, together with Schapper and the lawyer Schneider. In both cases, Marx and his associates were acquitted thanks to skilful defence.
Page me9.535

The paper's highly unstable financial position led to Marx continually taking steps to raise the necessary funds for its publication. Towards the end of March 1849, he insisted that Korff, who had considerably entangled the paper's financial affairs, be replaced by Stephan Adolf Naut who was closely associated with the Cologne Communists. In mid-April Marx had to undertake a trip to North-West Germany and Westphalia to raise funds among Communist League members and German democrats. In his absence (he returned to Cologne about May 8), the newspaper was managed by Engels. At the time, in the context of a new rise of revolutionary developments caused by the conflict between the Frankfurt National Assembly and the German governments, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung intensified its campaign for the consolidation of the revolutionary forces by publishing reports on the course of the uprising in Rhenish Prussia, Saxony and South-West Germany in defence of the imperial Constitution drafted by the Assembly. The authorities used this as a fresh pretext to persecute the paper. The number of legal proceedings against its editors rose to 23. However, the authorities' failure to win previous cases induced them to resort to another means of suppressing the revolutionary periodical. In May 1849, under the conditions of the general counter-revolutionary offensive, the Prussian Government issued an order to expel Marx from Prussia on the grounds that he had not been granted Prussian citizenship. Marx's expulsion and new repressions against other editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung resulted in the paper ceasing publication. The last issue, No. 301, printed in red ink, appeared on May 19, 1849. In their farewell address “To the Workers of Cologne”, the editors wrote that “their last word everywhere and always will be: emancipation of the working class” (see this volume, p. 467). — p. 3
Page me9.535

†2 An allusion to the Nanking Treaty concluded by Britain as a result of the 1840-42 war with China (the so-called First Opium War). It was the first of a series of unequal treaties China was forced to conclude with European powers, reducing it to the state of a semi-colony. Under this treaty, Hong Kong was placed under British rule and five Chinese sea ports, including Canton and Shanghai, were declared open sea ports for British commerce. The Treaty was signed by Sir Henry Pottinger, Commander of the British Expeditionary Corps in China. — p. 3
Page me9.535

†3 The Corn Laws — a series of laws in England (the first dating back to the 15th century) that imposed high duties on imported corn with the aim of maintaining high prices for corn on the home market in the interests of the landowners. The struggle between the industrial bourgeoisie and the landed aristocracy over the Corn Laws ended in the adoption of a Bill repealing them in June 1846. — p. 3

Page Break me9.536

Page me9.536

†4 The struggle between Britain and the USA for the Oregon region on the Pacific coast of North America ended in 1846 with its partition between the two powers.

Page me9.536

In 1845-49 Britain waged wars of conquest in Northern India against the State of Sikhs, which resulted in the entire Punjab being annexed by the East India Company. — p. 4

Page me9.536

†5 In 1847, along with other European countries, Italy went through an economic crisis. In an attempt to overcome it, Pope Pius IX proposed a programme of economic and political reforms including a project to set up a customs union of the Italian states. However, the Pope's proposals and measures, supported by the liberals, failed to prevent a revolutionary upheaval in Italy. The revolution started with a popular uprising in Palermo on January 12, 1848 against the absolutist regime of the Neapolitan Bourbons. The movement for a Constitution and liberation from foreign rule spread all over the country. As a result of the popular uprising in Milan in March 1848, the Austrian troops were driven out of the capital of Lombardy which, however, was recaptured by Austrians after the defeat of the Piedmontese troops. From November 1848, the centre of the revolutionary movement shifted to Central Italy, particularly to the Papal states where developments forced Pope Pius IX to flee from Rome. The Roman Republic was proclaimed on February 9, 1849. — p. 7

Page me9.536

†6 The present and following articles on the course of the revolutionary war in Hungary against the Austrian monarchy are the continuation of a series of reports by Engels on the subject which he began in February 1848 (see present edition, Vol. 8). He drew his information mainly from Austrian Command communiqués, i. e. army bulletins published in the official Wiener Zeitung and other Austrian newspapers. At the time Hungarian sources were almost unavailable in Germany. In spite of the biased and incomplete data contained in the Austrian bulletins, Engels managed to present a fairly exact overall picture of the hostilities. Subsequently, in his work Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, Engels pointed out that, by reporting the true development of the revolutionary war in Hungary, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung had contributed more than any other paper to making the Hungarians' cause popular in Germany. The paper had explained the character of the struggle between the Magyars and the Slavs and printed a series of articles on the Hungarian war which had the honour of being plagiarised in nearly every subsequent book on the subject, not excluding those by Hungarians themselves and by “eyewitnesses” (see present edition, Vol. 11).

Page me9.536

Engels also mentions his reports about Hungary in his letters to Marx dated April 3, 1851 and July 6, 1852 and also in his letter to H.J. Lincoln, editor of the Daily News, dated March 30, 1854. At that time he took up a systematic study of military science and the art of war and began to collect additional material on the Hungarian campaign (Memoirs by the Hungarian Commander-in-Chief Görgey, biographies of Hungarian generals, periodicals put out by the Kossuth Government). He also planned to write a book on the history of the revolutionary war in Hungary and Italy — but these plans did not materialise.

Page me9.536

Engels started his military reports at a grievous moment for revolutionary Hungary. On December 16, 1848, the Austrian imperial army, under the command of Windischgrätz, started an offensive and at the beginning of January captured Buda and Pest (two neighbouring cities at the time). The Hungarian revolutionary Government (the Defence Council) headed by Kossuth and Parliament (National Assembly) moved to Debreczin. Simultaneously, counter-revolutionary forces launched an offensive in Galicia (the corps under General Schlick), Silesia, the Banat and other districts. Right-wing circles in Austria and Germany predicted a speedy and final defeat of revolutionary Hungary. However, from the very beginning Engels pointed to her reserves for building up her defences and possibilities for securing a turn in the war. In fact the Defence Council did take a number of energetic steps to strengthen the revolutionary army. Guerilla warfare spread in the enemy's rear. Volunteer detachments arrived from Austria to defend the Hungarian revolution and units consisting of national minorities were formed for the purpose. The Hungarian army was joined by many Polish revolutionary commanders (among them Bem, Dembinski). In February 1849, the Hungarians not only succeeded in stabilising the situation in the central area of hostilities (on the Theiss) and even in forcing the enemy to retreat along some other sectors of the front, but also in starting to concentrate forces for a counter-blow that was delivered early in April 1849. — p. 9

Page Break me9.537

Page me9.537

†7 On February 26 and 27, 1849, a battle between the Hungarian revolutionary army and Austrian troops took place at Kapolna (in Central Hungary between Pest and Debreczin) which, despite the retreat of the Hungarian troops beyond the Theiss, was not a victory for either side. Having received Windischgrätz's report on the victory at Kapolna, Francis Joseph abrogated Hungary's autonomy, which had up to that point been recognised by the Austrian ruling circles, and incorporated her into “the lands of the Austrian Empire” by the Olmütz Manifesto of March 4, 1849 (Olmütz was the seat of the Austrian Court since the people's uprising in Vienna in October 1848). — p. 9

Page me9.537

†8 The 1848-49 struggle between revolutionary and counter-revolutionary forces was accompanied by an exacerbation of national contradictions in Transylvania and in other districts belonging administratively to Hungary but inhabited by other nationalities. The predominant part of the motley population of the region (Romanians, Hungarians and Szeklers, who are their off-shoot, and Germans, mainly settlers from Saxony) consisted of Romanian peasants, who were exploited by Hungarian landowners and Austrian officials. Although the advanced sections of the Romanian bourgeoisie and intelligentsia welcomed the Hungarian 1848 revolution, the erroneous policy of the Hungarian Government in the national question allowed the feudal clerical circles to use social and national antagonisms and stir up Romanians to revolt against Hungary in September 1848. The Romanian legions under the command of Colonel Urban, aided by Austrian troops under Baron Puchner, fought against the Hungarians. However, the Polish emigrant Bem, who was appointed Commander of the Hungarian army in Transylvania in December 1848, succeeded in preventing Puchner from invading Hungary from Transylvania and dealt crushing blows to the counter-revolutionary forces in Transylvania proper during January-March 1849.

Page me9.537

A small detachment of Russian troops sent to Puchner's aid by Lüders, commander of the Tsarist expeditionary corps in Wallachia, failed to stop Bem's advance and by the end of March the latter had cleared nearly all enemy troops out of Transylvania. Bem owed his success to his policy of reconciliation of national contradictions between the Hungarians and the Romanians, in spite of the resistance of Hungarian government representatives, who were spokesmen of the Hungarian nobility (later Marx and Engels stressed this in the article “Bem” written for the New American Cyclopaedia). Calls for joint actions of the Romanians and Hungarians against the Habsburgs were also issued by Balcescu, a Romanian democrat; Janku, the leader of the Romanian poor peasants' guerilla movement, supported this idea.

Page Break me9.538
Page me9.538

The Hungarian revolutionaries from among the bourgeoisie and nobility were, however, too late in realising the necessity of co-operation with the oppressed nationalities and this enabled the Austrian ruling circles in general to use the Romanian national movement in Transylvania, led by the clerical-aristocratic upper sections, as a tool in the struggle against revolutionary Hungary. After the defeat of the Hungarian revolution, the Austrians established a rule of brutal national oppression in Transylvania, despite their demagogic promises to the contrary. — p. 9
Page me9.538
†9 Szeklers (from szek — settlements) — an ethnic group of Hungarians, mostly free peasants. In the 13th century their forefathers were settled by Hungarian kings in the mountain regions of Transylvania to protect the frontiers. The majority of Szeklers sided with the Hungarian revolution. — p. 9
Page me9.538
†10 The reference is to the paper money issued in 1848-49 by the Hungarian revolutionary Government. The notes were first issued in May 1848. Despite the Austrian authorities' repeated ban on the “Kossuth notes”, the Hungarian paper money was a serious competitor to Austrian money, not only within Hungary but also in Austria proper. The “Kossuth notes” were in circulation until almost the end of 1849. — p. 10
Page me9.538
†11 The reference is to the Chief Administrative Committee of the Serbian Voivodeship or the Chief Odbor in Karlowitz — an executive body elected by the Assembly (Skupština) of representatives of the Serbian communities in the South-Slav border regions of the Austrian Empire in May 1848. The Skupština proclaimed the Voivodina an autonomous region within the Empire. In the autumn of 1848, a number of Serbian cities formed local Odbors which were patterned on the Chief Odbor and concentrated all civil and military authority in their hands.

Page me9.538
The Chief Odbor became the scene of struggle between the liberals headed by Stratimirovich (who was elected President) and clerical and feudal group, who professed loyalty to the Habsburgs and opposed liberal reforms. At the beginning of 1849, this group led by Patriarch Rajachich took the upper hand. They directed the Serbian national movement in the Voivodina towards still closer collaboration with the Austrian counter-revolutionary Government which, having made use of the Serbs in the struggle against revolutionary Hungary, broke its promise and, in March 1849, refused to grant them autonomy. — p. 11
Page me9.538
†12 This refers to the southern part of the Austrian-Turkish border (the Military Border area — see notes 22 and 68). — p. 12
Page me9.538
†13 An allusion to the new Constitution of the Austrian united monarchy (Gesamtmonarchie) introduced by Francis Joseph on March 4, 1849. According to the Constitution, the Emperor and his Ministers were vested with full executive authority and the bureaucratic centralisation principle was strictly implemented in the administration of the Empire. Lombardy, Venice, Hungary and Bohemia were proclaimed Austrian crown lands and the autonomous estate institutions that existed in some national regions even before the 1848 revolution were abolished. Croatia, Serbian Voivodina and Transylvania likewise did not receive autonomy, repeated promises notwithstanding; they separated from Hungary administratively and a system of administration similar to that in other crown lands was established there. The Constitution of March 4, 1849, was a step towards the restoration of absolutism (it was finally restored by the imperial patent of December 31, 1851, which repealed constitutional rule) and was unpopular even among the Right-wing elements in the Slav national movement in Austria, who cherished the hope that the Habsburgs would satisfy their national demands. — p. 12

Page Break me9.539
Page me9.539
†14 The reference is to the Hungarian National Assembly which moved to Debreczin early in January 1849 because of the advance of the Austrian troops on Pest. Some of the Right-wing deputies refused to leave for Debreczin and went over to the side of Windischgrätz who captured the capital of Hungary. — p. 14
Page me9.539
†15 The fortified camp and fortress of Komorn in North-Western Hungary remained in the hands of the Hungarians in the rear of the Austrian army during its offensive in late 1848 and early 1849. Later on the fortress, which withstood several sieges by Austrian troops, played an important role in the operations of the Hungarian revolutionary army. — p. 15
Page me9.539

†16 The reference is to the final stage in the suppression of the 1830-31 Polish national liberation uprising by Tsarist troops supported by Prussia and Austria. After Warsaw was outflanked from the west and on September 6 its western suburb seized, the Tsarist command succeeded in forcing the city to capitulate on the night of September 7, 1831. Early in October, the remnants of the Polish insurgent army crossed the border for Prussia and Austria, where they were interned. — p. 18
Page me9.539
†17 By the autumn of 1848, a democratic movement had spread among the Polish population of Galicia that aimed at preparing a national uprising and uniting with revolutionary Hungary. However, the Polish revolutionaries failed to rally adequate forces for an uprising.
Page me9.539
In connection with the victories of the Hungarian troops under Bem in Transylvania in the first months of 1849, in particular with his march on January 5 to South Bukovina, rumours spread in Galicia of an impending advance over the Carpathians by the revolutionary Hungarian army and the Polish legion, and this intensified the revolutionary ferment among the Poles. Many young Polish democrats went secretly to Hungary to serve in the Polish legion. — p. 20
Page me9.539
†18 Petty sessions — a court of the Justices of the Peace in England, tries minor offences according to a simplified legal procedure.
Page me9.539
Quarter sessions — a court held quarterly by Justices of the Peace.
Page me9.539
The expressions “petty sessions” and “quarter sessions” are given in English in the original. — p. 22
Page me9.539
†19 An allusion to the New Year's message of greetings from King Frederick William IV “To My Army” (“An mein Heer”) which he signed in Potsdam on January 1, 1849; it was published in the Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger on January 3, 1849. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung used this to expose the counter-revolutionary actions of the Prussian military (see Marx's article “A New Year Greeting”, present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 222-26). — p. 23
Page me9.539
†20 See Note 9. — p. 25
Page me9.539
†21 A considerable section of the population of Transylvania (over 200,000) were German colonists who had come from Saxony, Flanders and the Rhine lands (known as Teutons, Flemings, Saxons, later all German colonists came to be known as Saxons); they had been settled there by the Hungarian kings and Austrian emperors.

Page Break me9.540
Page me9.540
The majority of the Saxons, who were well-to-do townspeople, came out against the Hungarian revolution and sided with the imperial troops in the armed struggle. — p. 25

Page me9.540
†22 Peterwardein borderers as well as Serezhans and other South-Slav army formations mentioned below performed compulsory military service on the Austro-Turkish border (in the so-called Military Border area). They were named after their regimental or company districts or communities from which the soldiers came. In 1848-49 the Austrian authorities and the Right-wing bourgeois-landowning nationalist elements drew them into the war against revolutionary Hungary. — p. 25
Page me9.540
†23 This refers to the Transylvanian Saxons (see Note 21). — p. 26
Page me9.540
†24 The war between the Serbs and the Hungarians broke out as far back as May 1848, as a result of the conflict between the Hungarian Government and the Serbian national movement which demanded autonomy for the Voivodina. The movement was socially and politically heterogeneous. Liberal bourgeois elements (Stratimirovich and others) and Right-wing conservative landowning elements prevailed in the movement and thus allowed the Austrian ruling circles to make use of it in the struggle against the Hungarian revolution. On the other hand, the Hungarian revolutionaries, who refused to recognise the national demands of the Serbs and other Slav peoples incorporated in the Hungarian state prompted them to side with the Habsburgs. It was only on July 28, 1849, i.e. on the eve of its downfall, that revolutionary Hungary officially declared equality for all nationalities in the country. Having consolidated their domination largely with the help of the Croats, the Serbs of the Voivodina and so on, the ruling circles of the Austrian Empire went back on their promises and not only refused to grant autonomy to the Slav and other peoples of the multinational state, but abolished even the remnants of self-government in the national regions. — p. 26
Page me9.540
†25 See Note 15. — p. 29
Page me9.540
†26 The Central Committee of German Democrats (d'Ester, Reichenbach, Hexamer) was elected at the Second Democratic Congress held in Berlin from October 26 to 30, 1848.
Page me9.540
The Central Committee of Democrats mentioned below was elected at the First Democratic Congress held in Frankfurt am Main from June 14 to 17, 1848. Fröbel, Rau and Kriege were elected to the first Central Committee and Bairhoffer, Schütte and Anneke were their deputies. The Committee had its headquarters in Berlin. However, despite the decision of the Frankfurt am Main Congress to unite all democratic associations and set up the Central and district committees of German Democrats; the democratic movement in Germany still lacked unity and organisation owing to the weakness and vacillation of its petty-bourgeois leaders. — p. 33
Page me9.540
†27 This refers to the Prussian National Assembly convened in Berlin on May 22, 1848, to work out a Constitution and introduce a constitutional system on the basis of an “agreement with the Crown”. It was dissolved on December 5 as a result of the coup d'état in Prussia. The causes behind the coup d'état were the formation of the Brandenburg-Manteuffel counter-revolutionary Government and the publication on November 9 of a decree transferring the Assembly to the provincial town of Brandenburg. Liberal and democratic (Left) deputies failed to offer any real resistance to the instigators of the coup d'état and confined themselves to passive resistance. The introduction of a Constitution “granted” by the King was announced simultaneously with the dissolution of the Assembly. — p. 34

Page Break me9.541

Page me9.541

†28 An allusion to the Wahl-Manifest der radicalen Reformpartei für Deutschland (Election Manifesto of the Radical Reform Party of Germany) written by Ruge not long before the elections to the Frankfurt National Assembly. It proclaimed “editing of the rationale of events” to be the chief task of the Assembly. The Election Manifesto was published by Ruge in Leipzig in his newspaper Die Reform on April 16, 1848. — p. 34

Page me9.541

†29 The Central March Association which had branches in different cities of Germany was set up at the end of November 1848 in Frankfurt am Main by the Left-wing deputies to the Frankfurt National Assembly. The leaders of the March associations, which derived their name from the March 1848 revolution in Germany, were petty-bourgeois democrats including Fröbel, Simon and Vogt. These confined themselves to revolutionary phrase-mongering, were both indecisive and inconsistent in the struggle against the counter-revolution and were sharply criticised by Marx and Engels on this account. — p. 36

Page me9.541

†30 The phrase “Imperial Assembly” refers to the German National Assembly which opened on May 18, 1848 in St. Paul's Church, in the free town of Frankfurt am Main. It was convened to effect the unification of the country and to draw up its Constitution. Among the deputies elected in various German states late in April and early in May were 122 government officials, 95 judges, 81 lawyers, 103 professors, 17 manufacturers and wholesale dealers, 15 physicians and 40 landowners. The liberal deputies, who were in the majority, turned the Assembly into a mere debating club. At the decisive moments of the revolution, the liberal majority in fact condoned the counter-revolution.

Page me9.541

When writing this and other articles on the Frankfurt National Assembly, Marx and Engels made use of the shorthand reports of its sittings which later appeared as a separate publication, Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main, Frankfurt am Main, 1848-49. — p. 36

Page me9.541

†31 An allusion to the Left wing of the Frankfurt National Assembly which consisted of two factions: the Left (Fröbel, Vogt, Venedey and others) and the extreme Left known as the Radical-Democratic Party (Ruge, Schlöffel, Zitz, Trüzschler, Simon and others). Though the Neue Rheinische Zeitung supported the extreme Left rather than the more moderate groups of democrats, it criticised the former for their vacillations and halfway stand on the basic problems of the German revolution — abolition of feudal survivals and unification of the country. — p. 36

Page me9.541

†32 The toleration tax was levied on the Jewish population of the Kingdom of Hungary in 1749. The arrears grew from year to year, and the 1840s witnessed the intensified struggle for the abolition of this humiliating tax. In June 1846 it was repealed on condition that all the arrears, which amounted to 1,200,000 florins, were paid off during the next five years.
Page me9.541
This measure was a certain step towards the emancipation of the country's Jews. — p. 39
Page me9.541
†33 On September 7, 1848 the Emperor sanctioned the law drawn up by the Austrian Imperial Diet (Reichstag) repealing the personal bondage of the peasants and making labour and other services connected with land tenure subject to redemption. The redemption sum was fixed at twenty times the amount of the peasants' annual duties. Two-thirds of this was to be paid by the peasants and one-third by the state (from taxes). Despite the halfway nature of this agrarian reform, which did not satisfy the peasants who continued to fight for the abolition of feudal obligations without redemption, it nevertheless opened the way for the development of capitalist relations in agriculture. — p. 39

Page Break me9.542
Page me9.542
†34 This article is complementary to the series of articles and reports on Switzerland written by Engels during his forced stay there (because of the order for his arrest issued by the Cologne authorities) from November 1848 to January 1849. The series started with the article “The Ex-Principality” and ended with two reports on the foreign policy of the Swiss ruling circles (see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 7-8, 251-53). Engels ceased his writings on Swiss affairs in mid-January 1849, when he returned to Germany. Later on, however, he occasionally wrote on the subject, as this article shows. It is based on data from Swiss and German papers, but the editors of the volume are not in possession of the actual material used by Engels. — p. 42
Page me9.542
†35 Sonderbund — a separatist union formed by the seven economically backward Catholic cantons of Switzerland in 1843 to resist progressive bourgeois reforms and defend the privileges of the church and the Jesuits. The decree of the Swiss Diet of July 1847 on the dissolution of the Sonderbund served as a pretext for the latter to start hostilities against the other cantons early in November. On November 23, 1847, the Sonderbund army was defeated by federal forces. — p. 42
Page me9.542
†36 The reference is to the Constitution of the Swiss Republic adopted on September 12, 1848. The Constitution legalised the results of the victory won by the progressive forces over the Sonderbund and turned Switzerland from a union of individual cantons into a united federative state. In place of the former Swiss Diet, the members of which functioned as representatives of cantons, an all-Swiss Federal Assembly was set up consisting of two chambers — the National Council and the Council of States. The executive power was vested in the Federal Council (the Government of Switzerland) and the chairman of the Federal Council acted as President of the Republic. The Constitution provided for the organisation of a single post and customs department, the introduction of a unified monetary system, and a system of weights and measures. At the same time, cantons retained broad autonomous rights. — p. 43

Page me9.542
†37 In the period from the fifteenth to the mid-nineteenth centuries agreements were concluded between Swiss cantons and European states for the supply of Swiss mercenaries. In many countries they were used by counter-revolutionary monarchist forces.
Page me9.542
In this case, the reference is to the agreements concluded in 1848 by the canton of Berne and some other cantons with the counter-revolutionary Government of Ferdinand II, King of Naples. The use of Swiss troops against the revolutionary movement in Italy aroused profound indignation among the Swiss progressive public, and this eventually led to the annulment of these agreements. — p. 44
Page me9.542
†38 An allusion to the invitation to Berne extended by the Federal Council to Professor of Military Sciences Rudolf Lohbauer, formerly a radical journalist who contributed to Prussian government periodicals. See Engels' article “Herr Müller. — Radetzky's Chicanery towards Tessin. — The Federal Council — Lohbauer” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 239-41). — p. 45
Page me9.542
†39 The reference is to the dissolution of the Austrian Constituent Imperial Diet (Reichstag) by Emperor Francis Joseph on March 7, 1849. He was prompted to do this by his mother Archduchess Sophia and the Court camarilla. The Imperial Diet opened in Vienna on July 22, 1848. Prior to this, on May 15, as a result of the mass revolutionary actions, the Government was forced to recognise the constituent rights of the Imperial Diet to be convened. The majority of its deputies, however, representing the liberal bourgeoisie and landowners (including deputies from the Slav national districts), opposed any extension of the revolution. During the Vienna popular uprising in October 1848, the Imperial Diet transferred its seat to the Moravian town of Kremsier. There, on March 4, 1849 the consultative commission it had set up completed a Draft of Fundamental Rights providing for people's sovereignty, freedom of assembly and the press, equality of estates and nationalities, while retaining the monarchy. The draft, however, was not approved because the coup d'état took place the same day and the new, anti-democratic Constitution (see Note 13) was introduced by royal decree. Three days later the Diet itself was dissolved. — p. 47

Page Break me9.543
Page me9.543
†40 The reference is to the October-November 1848 counter-revolutionary coup d'état in Prussia which resulted in the dissolution of the Prussian National Assembly and the introduction of the Constitution imposed by King Frederick William IV (see Note 27).
Page me9.543
The Holy Alliance — an association of European monarchs founded on September 26, 1815, on the initiative of the Russian Tsar Alexander I and the Austrian Chancellor Metternich, to suppress revolutionary movements and preserve feudal monarchies in European countries. During the 1848-49 revolution and subsequent years, counter-revolutionary circles in Austria, Prussia and Tsarist Russia attempted to revive the Holy Alliance's activities in a modified form. — p. 47

Page me9.543
†41 During the popular uprising in Vienna in October 1848, Welcker and Mosle, liberal deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly (see Note 30), were sent to Vienna to negotiate with the insurgents and the Austrian Court and Government, which moved from the capital to Olmütz. Both of them acted as commissioners of the so-called Central Authority (Zentralgewalt) set up by the Frankfurt Assembly on June 28, 1848 and consisting of the Imperial Regent (Archduke Johann of Austria) and an Imperial Ministry. This provisional Central Authority had neither a budget nor an army of its own, possessed no real power, and was in fact an instrument of the counter-revolutionary German princes. However, Welcker and Mosle never turned up in revolutionary Vienna and confined themselves to fruitless talks with the Austrian Ministers and audiences granted by Emperor Ferdinand and Commander-in-Chief of the counter-revolutionary army Windischgrätz. The mediatory mission of the imperial commissioners was in fact a cover for the treacherous refusal by the liberal majority of the Frankfurt Assembly to support the Viennese insurgents.
Page me9.543
Robert Blum, who represented the Left wing of the Frankfurt Assembly, sided with the insurgents and, despite his parliamentary immunity, was shot on November 9 by an Austrian firing-squad after the uprising was suppressed.
Page me9.543
The correspondence between Welcker and Mosle and the Austrian Ministers was published in the Appendices to the Report of the Committee of the Frankfurt Assembly for investigating Austrian affairs (see Verhandlungen der deutschen verfassunggebenden Reichsversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main, Bd. 2, Frankfurt am Main, 1849, S. 602-19).
Page me9.543
The Neue Rheinische Zeitung responded to the Welcker-Mosle mission with a critical article “Report of the Frankfurt Committee on Austrian Affairs” (see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 88-93). — p. 48
Page me9.543
†42 At the time when the coup d'état was being hatched and implemented in Prussia, the Frankfurt National Assembly undertook to settle the conflict between the

Page Break me9.544
Prussian National Assembly and the Crown. To fulfil this mission, first Bassermann (a liberal leader) and later Simson and Hergenhahn arrived in Berlin as imperial commissioners. Gagern, Chairman of the Frankfurt Assembly, also went to the capital of Prussia to render assistance. The mediation of the imperial commissioners and Gagern proved to be helpful to the counter-revolutionaries, because it diverted the democratic forces in the German state from offering real support to the Prussian National Assembly in its struggle against the Brandenburg-Manteuffel Ministry. — p. 48
Page me9.544
†43 Serezhans — see Note 22.

Page me9.544

Huzuls — Ukrainians living in the Carpathian mountains which formed part of Austrian Hungary. In the first half of the 19th century, up to 1918, they were subjects of the Habsburg Empire. — p. 48

Page me9.544

†44 The reference is to the Grundrechte des deutschen Volkes, a document passed by the Frankfurt National Assembly in December 1848 in the course of drawing up an all-German imperial Constitution ("Verfassung des deutschen Reiches vom 28. März 1849"). It was regarded by the Assembly as a component part of the Constitution and was included in it as Chapter VI. — p. 48

Page me9.544

†45 An allusion to the Austrian special border troops who wore red-coats and caps and were recruited mainly from among the inhabitants of the Empire's Slav provinces (Croats, Serbs of the Voivodina etc.). In 1848 and 1849, they were used by the counter-revolution against the revolutionary movement. — p. 49

Page me9.544

†46 An allusion to Frederick William IV's statement in his speech at the opening of the United Diet on April 11, 1847, that he was "heir to the unweakened crown and must hand it over to his successors in an unweakened state" (see Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847, erster Teil). — p. 50

Page me9.544

†47 In the first half of the 19th century the word poster was used to denote any appeal, announcement or notice posted in the streets for the public to see.

Page me9.544

The September Laws promulgated by the French Government in September 1835 restricted the rights of jury courts and introduced severe measures against the press. They provided for increased money deposits for periodical publications and introduced imprisonment and large fines for publishing attacks on private property and the existing political system. — p. 50

Page me9.544

†48 The Prussian National Assembly dissolved by King Frederick William IV on December 5, 1848 (see Note 27), was ironically referred to by Marx and Engels as the "Agreement Assembly" ("Vereinbarungsversammlung"), because it was guided by the "theory of agreement". According to this, the Assembly was to draw up a Constitution not on the basis of sovereign and constituent rights, but by "agreement with the Crown" (the principle formulated by the Camphausen-Hansemann Government and adopted by the majority of the Assembly). The Crown used this theory of agreement as a screen to cover up preparations for a counter-revolutionary coup d'état. — p. 51

Page me9.544

†49 The so-called law on crieurs publics (street newspaper-sellers) adopted by the Louis Philippe Government in 1834 was intended to restrict the distribution of opposition periodicals. — p. 51

Page me9.544

†50 Code Napoléon (Code civil) — French code of civil law promulgated in 1804. It was introduced by Napoleon in the conquered regions of West and South-West

Page Break me9.545

Germany and remained in operation in the Rhine Province even after its incorporation into Prussia in 1815.

Page me9.545

The expression Prussian Law refers to the Allgemeines Landrecht für die Preussischen Staaten approved and published in 1794. It included the criminal, state, civil, administrative and ecclesiastical law and was strongly influenced by backward feudal juridical standards. — p. 52

Page me9.545

†51 After the Rhineland's union with Prussia in 1815, the Prussian Government strove to introduce Prussian Law standards into various spheres of jurisdiction, in place of the existing French civil code. This was being done through a series of laws, edicts and instructions aimed at restoring the feudal privileges of the nobility (the right of primogeniture), introduction of the Prussian penal code, marriage laws etc. These measures, which met with great opposition in the Rhineland, were repealed after the March revolution by the decree of April 15, 1848. — p. 52

Page me9.545

†52 The Constitution imposed ("granted") by King Frederick William IV on December 5, 1848, dissolved the Prussian National Assembly and introduced a two-chamber system; the First Chamber was transformed by age and property qualifications into a privileged chamber of the nobility. According to the electoral law of December 6, 1848, the right to vote in the two-stage elections to the Second Chamber was granted only to so-called independent Prussians. The Constitution provided for the suspension, in case of war or disorder, of freedom of the individual, inviolability of the dwelling, freedom of the press, assembly, association and so forth. The royal authority was vested with very wide powers — the King was authorised to convene or dissolve the Chambers, to appoint Ministers, declare war or conclude a peace treaty. He was vested with full executive power, while he exercised legislative power together with the Chambers. Later on, anti-democratic revisions of the Constitution were repeatedly made on the initiative of Prussian ruling circles. — p. 52

Page me9.545

†53 See Note 19. — p. 56

Page me9.545

†54 Raizen (Rascians, Rascier) is the name for Serbs of the Orthodox denomination, often used to denote Serbs in general; it probably derives from the ancient town of Rassa, the centre of the Raschka district where the first Serbian tribes settled. — p. 60

Page me9.545

†55 Honved — literally: defender of the homeland; the name given to the Hungarian revolutionary army of 1848-49, which was set up by the decision of the Hungarian revolutionary Government on May 16, 1848, to form ten battalions of Honveds. — p. 60

Page me9.545

†56 See Note 9. — p. 61

Page me9.545

†57 The Slovanská Lípa — a Czech national society founded in Prague at the end of April 1848. The society was under the leadership of moderate liberals (Šafarik, Gauc), who joined the counter-revolution after the Prague uprising was suppressed in June 1848, whereas the provincial branches were mostly led by representatives of the radical Czech bourgeoisie. — p. 62

Page me9.545
†58 The reference is to the Bills on associations and assemblies, and on posters and the press prepared by the Prussian Government.
Page me9.545
The September Laws — see Note 47.
Page me9.545
The Prussian Law — see Note 50. — p. 65
Page me9.545
†59 See Note 46. — p. 65

Page Break me9.546
Page me9.546
†60 After Napoleon was proclaimed "Emperor of the French" in 1804, he assumed the title of king of the vassal Italian state formed from the Cisalpine Republic (Northern Italy), a dependency of France. After being crowned in Milan Cathedral on May 26, 1805 with the traditional iron crown of the Lombard kings who conquered Northern Italy in the sixth century, he uttered the following phrase, "God has given it to me, woe to him who will touch it" ("Dio mi la diede, guai a chi la tocca"). — p. 66
Page me9.546
†61 See Note 19. — p. 69
Page me9.546
†62 An allusion to Camphausen who was formerly an oil and corn dealer. — p. 69
Page me9.546
†63 In the Neue Rheinische Zeitung this ironical expression was used of the commander of a division billeted in Düsseldorf, the reactionary Prussian general Drigalski (see Marx's article "Drigalski — Legislator, Citizen and Communist", present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 75-80) who in November 1848 proclaimed a state of siege in the town and appealed to the citizens to be "communists in the noble sense of the word" and make donations to the poor. The appeal signed "Citizen Drigalski" was published in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung No. 311, November 24, 1848. — p. 70
Page me9.546
†64 The reference is to the eastern provinces of the Kingdom of Prussia (with the exception of Posen) which historically formed its basis. They were known as the old provinces as distinct from the western ("new") provinces — Rhineland and Westphalia, which were incorporated into Prussia in 1815 by decision of the Vienna Congress. — p. 70
Page me9.546
†65 See Note 55. — p. 73
Page me9.546
†66 See Note 45. — p. 73
Page me9.546
†67 The reference is to the so-called party of Magyarisers, or the Croatian-Hungarian party, formed as far back as 1841 and consisting mainly of Croatian-Slavonian nobles and big landowners. The party aimed for a complete merger of Croatia and Slavonia

(which administratively formed part of the Hungarian Kingdom within the Austrian Empire) with Hungary as a means to counteract bourgeois reforms and to retain political and social privileges. Its members waged a bitter struggle against the representatives of "Illyrism", a national trend dominated mainly by liberal landowners and commercial bourgeoisie. The Illyrians aimed at uniting the South-Slav peoples and at securing broad autonomous rights for them within the framework of the Austrian Empire, on a federative basis.
Page me9.546

During the 1848 revolution and the increasingly acute national conflict, many Magyarisers fled to Hungary. On June 5, 1848, the sittings of the Sabor of the Southern Slavs opened in Agram (Zagreb). Representatives of the liberal landowners and the top sections of the commercial bourgeoisie in Croatia and Slavonia who predominated at the Sabor (the Sabor was also attended by delegates from the Serbs of the Voivodina and the Czechs), professed their loyalty to the Habsburgs and restricted the national programme to the demand for autonomy for the united Slav territories within the Austrian Empire. General Jellachich, who was close to the Right-wing Illyrians, was appointed Ban of Croatia in March 1848. After a brief conflict with the Austrian Government, which led to his dismissal, he was reinstated in September 1848. Placing Croatian and Slavonian military units at the service of Austrian reaction, Jellachich took part in the counter-revolutionary campaign against Hungary and in the suppression of the popular uprising in Vienna.
Page me9.546

The Banal Council — an administrative body, headed by the Ban, exercised the functions of the Government of Croatia. — p. 73

Page Break me9.547
Page me9.547
†68 The reference is to the inhabitants of the so-called Military Border area, i.e. the southern border region of the Austrian Empire under a military administration. The area included part of Croatia and southern Hungary. Its population was made up of Serbs and Croats who were allotted land in return for military service, the fulfilment of state obligations and payment of duties. Borderers often rose in revolt against this system of military-feudal oppression (see also notes 22 and 45). — p. 74
Page me9.547
†69 In this item, Engels apparently made use of the material published in the Breslauer Zeitung and reprinted in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 63 (second edition), March 15, 1849. — p. 76
Page me9.547
†70 The reference is to the Defence Council set up on September 22, 1848 under the conditions of the intervention launched against revolutionary Hungary by the army of the Croatian Ban Jellachich. The Council, headed by Kossuth, exercised control over the Count Batthyány liberal Government. After the victory over Jellachich and the resignation of the Batthyány Cabinet the Defence Council was entrusted with governmental functions on October 8. Kossuth, its chairman, was vested with full powers in accordance with war-time conditions. In January 1849, when Austrian troops seized

Pest, the Defence Council and the National Assembly transferred their seat to Debreczin. — p. 77
Page me9.547
†71 The reference is to the French Provisional Government formed on February 24, 1848, as a result of the overthrow of the July monarchy. The posts in this Government were mainly held by moderate republicans (Lamartine, Dupont de l'Eure, Crémieux, Arago, Marie and two men from the National — the opposition republican party — Marrast and Garnier-Pagés). In addition, the Government included three representatives of the petty-bourgeois party of democrat-socialists who grouped round the Réforme — Ledru-Rollin, Flocon and Louis Blanc, and a mechanic Albert (real name Martin). The Provisional Government stayed in power till May 10, 1848 when it was superseded by the Executive Commission formed by the National (Constituent) Assembly. — p. 79
Page me9.547
†72 The reference is to the uprising of the Paris proletariat against the bourgeois regime of the Second Republic (June 23-26, 1848). It was the climax of the 1848 revolution in France and had an impact on revolutionary events in other European countries. Marx and Engels appraised the uprising and its historic significance in a series of articles published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 130-49). — p. 80
Page me9.547
†73 The additional 45-centime tax for every franc of all direct taxes that was introduced by the French Provisional Government on March 16, 1848, became a heavy burden, above all for the peasants who made up the majority of France's population. This measure caused the peasant masses to turn away from the revolution and to vote for Louis Napoleon Bonaparte at the presidential elections on December 10, 1848. — p. 80
Page me9.547
†74 The legitimists — advocates of the Bourbon dynasty overthrown in 1830, who upheld the interests of the big hereditary landowners, and the claim to the throne by the grandson of King Charles X, Comte de Chambord, who took the name of Henry V. — p. 80
Page me9.547
†75 The reference is to the restoration of the Bourbon dynasty in France, first in May 1814 and later in July 1815. After the defeat of Napoleonic France in the war against the sixth coalition, Napoleon had to abdicate in April 1814 and the Bourbons were restored to power. Louis XVIII became King of France. In March 1815, Napoleon regained power but his rule did not last long (the Hundred Days). After his defeat at Waterloo by British and Prussian troops he again abdicated on June 22, 1815 and Louis XVIII was again restored to the throne (July 8) with the help of the foreign armies. — p. 80

Page Break me9.548
Page me9.548
†76 Orleanists — supporters of the Orléans dynasty which held power in France during the July monarchy (1830-48). The Orleanists upheld the interests of the financial aristocracy and the big industrial bourgeoisie. — p. 80
Page me9.548

†77 On May 15, 1848, there was a revolutionary uprising of Paris workers led by Blanqui, Barbés and others against the anti-labour and anti-democratic policy pursued by the Constituent Assembly which opened on May 4. The participants in the mass demonstration forced their way into the Assembly's premises, demanded the formation of a Ministry of Labour and presented a number of other demands. An attempt was made to form a revolutionary government. However, with the help of national guards from the bourgeois quarters and regular troops, the power of the Constituent Assembly was restored. The leaders of the movement were arrested and put on trial. — p. 81
Page me9.548
†78 The trial of the leaders of the Paris workers' revolutionary uprising of May 15, 1848 was held in Bourges from March 7 to April 3, 1849. They were accused of conspiring against the Government. The court sentenced Barbés and Albert to exile and Blanqui to ten-year solitary confinement. The other defendants (among them Sobrier, Raspail) were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment or exile. — p. 81
Page me9.548
†79 The reference is to the article "Ein Aktenstück des Märzvereins" published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 181 of December 29, 1848, which exposed the half-hearted and inconsistent policy of a number of the Frankfurt Left leaders whose actions only helped the counter-revolution. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung called these leaders the "Girondists of our revolution". — p. 84
Page me9.548
†80 This refers to the counter-revolutionary Catholic Union attached to the Frankfurt National Assembly and headed by von Radowitz, an extreme Right-wing leader. — p. 84
Page me9.548
†81 "Thinking friends of history" is a phrase which Marx and Engels ironically used of Camphausen and other liberals, alluding to the subtitle of the then well-known book by the liberal historian Karl von Rotteck, Allgemeine Geschichte vom Anfang der historischen Kenntniss bis auf unsere Zeiten. Für denkende Geschichtsfreunde bearb. von Karl von Rotteck, Bd. 1-9, Freiburg im Breisgau, 1834. — p. 85
Page me9.548
†82 The Feuillants — moderate liberal constitutionalists who, during the French Revolution, withdrew from the Jacobin Club on July 16, 1791, after it had adopted a petition to dethrone the King. They formed their own political club which held meetings in the premises of the monastic order of the same name which was dissolved in 1789. The Feuillants upheld the interests of the big bourgeoisie and liberal nobility and did their utmost to prevent the revolution from developing further. — p. 85
Page me9.548
†83 An allusion to the stand adopted by Karl Vogt and other leaders of the March Association over the future state structure of Germany. At the concluding stage of the debates in the Frankfurt National Assembly on the imperial Constitution, Vogt and other moderate democrats began to be inclined to agree with the pro-Prussian

Page Break me9.549
liberals (Gagern and others) who strove to unite Germany as an empire, with Frederick William IV, King of Prussia, at the head. — p. 85
Page me9.549

†84 The Second Chamber of the Prussian Diet (Landtag) was convened on February 26, 1849, on the basis of the Constitution "granted" by Frederick William IV on December 5, 1848. Despite the fact that elections to it were held under conditions of virtual martial law, introduced in many provinces of Prussia and under the anti-democratic electoral law of December 6, 1848, a strong opposition was formed in the Chamber. It was made up of the majority of Left-Centre and Right-Centre deputies of the dissolved National Assembly. Though the opposition speeches of the Left were rather moderate, the Second Chamber was dissolved by the Government on April 27, 1849.
Page me9.549

The text of the draft Address, as well as the minutes of the debates in the Chamber, were published in Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum "Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger", Bd. 1-2, Berlin, 1849.
Page me9.549

Marx apparently used newspaper reports. — p. 86
Page me9.549
†85 See Note 52. — p. 86
Page me9.549
†86 The reference is to "Verordnung über einige Grundlagen der künftigen Preußischen Verfassung" and to "Wahlgesetz für die zur Vereinbarung der Preußischen Staats-Verfassung zu berufende Versammlung", adopted by the Second United Diet (the first document on April 6, the second on April 8, 1848). The dissolution of the National Assembly by the Prussian Government on December 5, 1848, was in blatant violation of the laws passed by the United Diet. — p. 86
Page me9.549
†87 Comité du salut public (Committee of Public Safety) — revolutionary government of France during the dictatorship of the Jacobins (1793-94). — p. 87
Page me9.549
†88 The United Diet — an assembly of representatives from the eight Provincial Diets of Prussia and similarly based on the estate principle. The United Diet sanctioned new taxes and loans, took part in the discussion of new Bills and had the right to address petitions to the King.
Page me9.549

The First United Diet, which opened on April 11, 1847, was dissolved in June, following its refusal to grant a new loan. The Second United Diet was convened on April 2, 1848, after the revolution of March 18-19 in Prussia. It passed a series of laws pertaining to the principles of a future Constitution and on elections to the Prussian National Assembly, and also sanctioned the loan. The United Diet session was closed on April 10, 1848. — p. 87
Page me9.549
†89 An allusion to the suppression of the Polish national liberation insurrection of 1830-31 by Tsarist troops. — p. 87
Page me9.549
†90 The Danish campaign refers to the war between Prussia and Denmark over Schleswig-Holstein which broke out in April 1848. The national liberation movement against Danish rule arose in the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein inhabited mainly by Germans under the influence of the March 1848 revolution in the German states. Fearful of a national uprising and an extension of the revolution, Prussian ruling circles strove to come to terms with the King of Denmark in the course of the war, at the expense of all-German interests, and this also affected the war manoeuvres of the Prussian army. Engels ironically compared them with the proceedings in the Imperial Court of Law which were marked by unprecedented red tape and confusion (the Imperial Court of Law was the supreme judicial institution in Germany in the 15th-18th centuries). The Imperial Court of Law ceased to exist in 1806 when the so-called Holy Roman Empire of the German nation was abolished. — p. 88

Page Break me9.550

Page me9.550

†91 During the suppression of the national liberation uprising in Posen at the end of April and the beginning of May 1848, Prussian troops suffered a defeat at Miloslavl and shot the Polish insurgents at Wreschen (Wrze&sa;nia) (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 104-05).

Page me9.550

When speaking of the “victories” of the Prussian army, Engels is ironically referring to its savage reprisals against the popular movements in Anhalt-Bernburg in March 1848, in Mainz in May 1848 and its participation in suppressing the revolt in Frankfurt am Main in September 1848.

Page me9.550

“My glorious army” — see Note 19. — p. 88

Page me9.550

†92 The reference is to the armistice concluded on August 26, 1848, in the Swedish town of Malmö between Denmark and Prussia for a term of seven months. The armistice actually preserved the Danish rule in the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein, provided for the replacement of provisional authorities in Schleswig by a new government (in which the puppets of the Danish monarchy prevailed), the separation of the Schleswig and Holstein troops and other terms unfavourable to the national liberation movement in the duchies. The revolutionary-democratic changes that had been introduced there came virtually to nothing.

Page me9.550

Later on, the ruling circles of Prussia, hoping to raise the prestige of the Prussian monarchy by taking part in this popular war and to realise their aggressive plans, resumed hostilities in March 1849 which went on with changing success. However, under pressure from Denmark's allies (England and Russia), Prussia signed a peace treaty with Denmark on July 2, 1850, temporarily abandoned its claims to Schleswig and Holstein and withdrew its military support in the war waged by the duchies. The Schleswig-Holstein troops sustained a defeat and had to give up resistance. As a result, the two duchies remained within the Kingdom of Denmark. — p. 88

Page me9.550

†93 See Note 9. — p. 93

Page me9.550

†94 This apparently refers to the Chief Odbor (see Note 11). — p. 98

Page me9.550

†95 See Note 54. — p. 98
Page me9.550
†96 See Note 68. — p. 99
Page me9.550
†97 The reference is to the Hungarian National Assembly (Diet) convened in Pressburg before the 1848 revolution in the Austrian Empire. The Assembly, in which the liberal nobility predominated, put forward a demand for a Constitution. After the revolutionary demonstrations in Pest on March 15, 1848, the Assembly introduced a parliamentary system. Executive power was vested in the Hungarian Government, but the two states — Hungary and Austria — continued as monarchies under one crown.
Page me9.550
The imperial government at first had to recognise this status of Hungary, but subsequently, as a result of the deepening conflict, tried to demolish it through armed intervention. At the same time, in the Hungarian National Assembly which held its sessions in Debreczin there was the "Party of Pacification" which consisted mainly of aristocratic elements and was striving to find a compromise with the Habsburgs and to secure recognition of the new Emperor Francis Joseph as the King of Hungary. The "Party of Pacification" was opposed by the radicals headed by Kossuth who came out for more resolute action against the Austrian monarchy.
Page me9.550
The Pragmatic Sanction was a royal decree having the force of fundamental law

Page Break me9.551
on succession to the throne. Adopted in the Austrian Empire in 1713, it established the principle of the indivisibility of the Habsburg crown lands and the possibility of distaff succession if the Emperor had no sons. — p. 100
Page me9.551
†98 This article was written by Engels for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung but was not published. It is extant in the manuscript form with slight corrections and deletions in the text made by the author. The most important versions that were crossed out are given in footnotes. — p. 102
Page me9.551
†99 The reference is to the suppression of the popular uprising in Vienna by the counter-revolutionary army of Windischgrätz at the end of October and the beginning of November 1848, and also to the capture of Pest on January 5, 1849 by Austrian troops under his command in an attack on revolutionary Hungary. — p. 102
Page me9.551
†100 Apparently Engels is here referring to the Slav group in the Imperial Diet and, in general, to the representatives of the Slav peoples' national movement who were demanding the unification of the Slav lands and autonomy within the framework of the Austrian Empire. After the publication of the imposed ("granted") Constitution on March 4, 1849, which destroyed all hopes that the national demands might be satisfied, opposition sentiments grew stronger among the Slavs. — p. 105
Page me9.551

†101 The reference is to the conflict of the Austrian Government with the Constituent Imperial Diet and to the Constitution imposed by Emperor Francis Joseph on March 4, 1849 (see Note 39). — p. 105
Page me9.551
†102 See Note 35. — p. 105
Page me9.551
†103 The sittings of the Frankfurt National Assembly were held in St. Paul's Church. Austrian ruling circles were hostile to the elaboration of an all-German Constitution by the Assembly and strove to restore the old German Confederation of 1815, in which Austria played the leading role. Schwarzenberg, head of the Austrian Government, issued a Note imbued with this idea on March 9, 1849, after the dissolution of the Austrian Diet. On April 15, 1849, the Austrian Government officially rejected the imperial Constitution adopted by the Assembly as incompatible with the unity and nature of the Austrian Empire and recalled the Austrian deputies from Frankfurt. — p. 106
Page me9.551
†104 The revolution in Austria began with the uprising of March 13, 1848 in Vienna. It was followed by the March 18-19 revolutionary events in Berlin which started the revolution in Prussia. — p. 108
Page me9.551
†105 On June 25, 1849, the anniversary of the June 1848 uprising of the Paris workers was to be celebrated. — p. 108
Page me9.551
†106 Camphausen was one of the shareholders of the oppositional Rheinische Zeitung which was published in Cologne in 1842 and 1843 and edited by Marx from October 1842 to March 1843. — p. 108
Page me9.551
†107 The reference is to the appeal by Frederick William IV published on March 21, 1848 under the title “To My People and the German Nation” (“An mein Volk und an die deutsche Nation”). Under the impact of the revolutionary events, the King had to give a pledge to be loyal to the tricolour banner of the revolution and to contribute to the unification of Germany. — p. 109

Page Break me9.552
Page me9.552
†108 Friedrichshain — a park in Berlin where those killed in the barricade fighting during the March 18, 1848 uprising were buried. — p. 109
Page me9.552
†109 The reference is to the cities of Buda (Ofen) and Pest which at the time were virtually twin capital cities of Hungary. After a successful counter-attack by the Hungarian revolutionary army and the liberation of the two capital cities from the Austrian invaders on June 24, 1849 the Hungarian authorities announced the unification of Buda and Pest into one city. However, subsequent events prevented this decree from being implemented.
Page me9.552
The official unification of Pest and Buda and the formation of a single city of Budapest took place on January 1, 1873. — p. 111

Page me9.552
†110 See Note 10. — p. 111
Page me9.552
†111 See Note 21. — p. 112
Page me9.552
†112 Cavalry units of the Austrian army included not only squadrons but also larger tactical formations — divisions, which usually consisted of two squadrons. — p. 113
Page me9.552
†113 The reference is to the armistice concluded between Austria and the Kingdom of Sardiniá (Piedmont) on August 9, 1848 after the defeat of the Piedmontese troops at Custozza. The Kingdom of Sardinia was to withdraw its troops from Lombardy, Parma and Venice and cede them to the Austrians.
Page me9.552
On March 20, 1849, under pressure from the masses, King Charles Albert had to declare the armistice cancelled and to resume hostilities against Austria. — p. 114
Page me9.552
†114 C.M. (conventional money, or 20-gulden coins) had existed in Austria since the eighteenth century and, under the respective convention, was also introduced in Bavaria. Its standard was silver (20 guldens were to contain 234 grams of silver). In the eighteenth century, paper money was issued which, from the early nineteenth century, was called "Vienna currency". Transactions were quoted in conventional monetary units. — p. 114
Page me9.552
†115 See Note 39. — p. 115
Page me9.552
†116 The German term used here and elsewhere is Feldzeugmeister which is a higher rank in the Austrian army directly subordinate to Field Marshal. In some other armies it retained its original meaning of artillery commander. — p. 115
Page me9.552
†117 See Note 67. — p. 116
Page me9.552
†118 See Note 54. — p. 121
Page me9.552
†119 The reference is to provincial diets (Landtags) introduced in Prussia in 1823. They consisted of representatives of four estates (princes, nobility, representatives of towns and rural communities). Property and other electoral qualifications secured the majority in the provincial diets for the nobility. The provincial diets were convened by the King and they were competent only to deal with questions of local economy and administration. As consultative bodies they could make proposals on Bills submitted by the Government for discussion. In 1843, under the pretext of introducing unified legislation for Prussia, King Frederick William IV submitted for discussion in the Rhenish Diet a new draft of the penal code which was to replace the more liberal French Code pénal. The seventh Rhenish Diet (1843) rejected the Bill, stating that the existing laws fully conformed to the moral standards, traditions and legal practices of the Rhine Province. — p. 125

Page Break me9.553

Page me9.553
†120 See Note 46.
Page me9.553
The Rhenish legislation refers to the Code civil (see Note 50) and Code pénal — the penal code adopted in France in 1810 and introduced in the conquered regions of West and South-West Germany. It remained in operation in the Rhine Province even after its incorporation into Prussia in 1815. — p. 125
Page me9.553
†121 An allusion to the rescripts (patents) of Frederick William IV of February 3, 1847, on the convocation of the United Diet (on which see Note 88). — p. 125
Page me9.553
†122 At the June 2, 1847 sitting of the United Diet, Thadden-Triglaff, a Right-wing deputy, stated: “My proposal reads as follows: freedom of the press — really public proceedings for the gentlemen of the press and along with them the gallows! I would ask Messrs the stenographers to underline thoroughly both the words 'really' and 'gallows'.” (Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847, vierter Theil, S. 2241.) — p. 125
Page me9.553
†123 Uckermark — a northern part of the Brandenburg Province (Prussia), the mainstay of the reactionary Prussian junkers. — p. 126
Page me9.553
†124 Holy Hermandad — a league of Spanish towns set up at the end of the fifteenth century with the approbation of the King, who sought to make use of the wealthy townspeople in their fight against the feudal magnates in an attempt to establish royal absolutism. From the middle of the sixteenth century, the armed detachments of the Holy Hermandad performed police duties. Thus the police in general has often been ironically labelled the “Holy Hermandad”. — p. 126
Page me9.553
†125 See Note 47. — p. 127
Page me9.553
†126 The reference is to the Vienna Congress of European monarchs and their Ministers (September 1814 to June 1815) which set up a system of all-European treaties after the wars of the European powers against Napoleonic France. The decisions of the Congress helped to restore the feudal system and a number of former dynasties in the states that had been conquered by Napoleon, sanctioned the political disunity of Germany and Italy, the incorporation of Belgium into Holland and the partition of Poland and mapped out measures to combat the revolutionary movement. — p. 127
Page me9.553
†127 See Note 50. — p. 127
Page me9.553
†128 The reference is to the so-called United Commissions of the representatives of the Provincial Diets which met on January 17, 1848 to discuss the Bill concerning penal law (“Entwurf des Strafgesetzbuchs für die preußischen Staaten...”). Convening these commissions, the Prussian Government hoped that the apparent preparations for reform would lessen the growing public unrest. The work of the commissions was interrupted by the revolutionary outbursts that swept through Germany at the beginning of March. — p. 127

Page me9.553
†129 The reference is to the edict issued by the King of Prussia on March 6, 1821 under the title “Allerhöchste Kabinetsorder vom 6ten März 1821, betreffend die Strafgesetze und das Verfahren in den Rheinprovinzen bei Verbrechen und Vergehungen gegen den Staat und dessen Oberhaupt...”. It introduced the Prussian penal code into the Rhine Province with respect to high treason. This was one of the first attempts made by the Prussian Government to limit the jurisdiction of the Code pénal operating in the Rhine Province and introduce the old-Prussian feudal-type penal code. — p. 128
Page me9.553
†130 See Note 55. — p. 133

Page Break me9.554
Page me9.554
†131 The debates in the Second Chamber of the Prussian Provincial Diet (see Note 84) were published in Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum “Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger”, Bd. 1-2, Berlin, 1849. The discussion of the draft Address in reply to the speech from the throne was held on March 13, 1849. — p. 135
Page me9.554
†132 The minutes of the Prussian National Assembly (ironically referred to here as the “Agreement Assembly” — see Note 48) were published in the Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der zur Vereinbarung der preußischen Staats-Verfassung berufenen Versammlung. Beilage zum “Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger”, Bd. 1-3, Berlin, 1848. Later they were published as a separate edition under the title Verhandlungen der constituirenden Versammlung für Preußen. 1848, Bd. 1-8, Berlin, 1848; Bd. 9 (Suppl.-Bd.), Leipzig, 1849. — p. 135
Page me9.554
†133 The reference is to the period between the dissolution of the Prussian National Assembly (December 5, 1848) and the convocation of the Chambers of the Prussian Provincial Diet (February 26, 1849). — p. 135
Page me9.554
†134 See Note 52. — p. 135
Page me9.554
†135 During the coup d'état in Prussia, after a series of delays, the National Assembly adopted on November 15, 1848 a decision to refuse to pay taxes from November 17 onwards in protest against government policy. However, the decision taken under the pressure of the Left deputies and democratic circles was interpreted by the majority of deputies in the spirit of passive resistance, which could hardly be effective measure in the struggle against the counter-revolutionary offensive. — p. 136
Page me9.554
†136 Wailers (Heuler) — the name the republican democrats in Germany in 1848-49 applied to the moderate constitutionalists who, in turn, called their opponents “agitators” (Wühler). See also Note 245). — p. 138
Page me9.554

†137 In January and February 1814, during the war against Napoleonic France, the Prussian and other coalition armies suffered a number of defeats in Champagne (including the battles at Bar-Sur-Aube, Saint Dizier, and Montmirail).
Page me9.554
In the battle at Jena on October 14, 1806, the Prussian army was defeated by the French; the defeat was followed by the surrender of feudal Prussia to Napoleonic France.
Page me9.554
On March 18 and 19, 1848, the imperial troops had to withdraw from Berlin as a result of the victorious uprising of the masses. — p. 139
Page me9.554
†138 The question of electing the King of Prussia to the throne of the German Empire was discussed in the Frankfurt National Assembly on its completion of the draft for an imperial Constitution which, though it proclaimed some civil liberties and introduced all-German central institutions, nevertheless attributed to the united German state the form of a monarchy. The liberal deputies of the Assembly who held pro-Prussian views were particularly insistent on handing over the imperial crown to the Hohenzollerns. They were opposed by the democratic wing, but pro-Prussian tendencies took the upper hand as a result of a compromise between the moderate democrats and the liberals. On March 27, 1849, the imperial Constitution was passed on second reading. On March 28, the Frankfurt Assembly elected the Prussian King Frederick William IV "Emperor of the Germans". Frederick William IV, however, rejected the imperial crown. On the causes of his refusal to accept the crown from the Frankfurt Assembly see Engels' article "The Comedy with the Imperial Crown" (this volume, pp. 193-94). — p. 139

Page Break me9.555
Page me9.555
†139 According to the electoral law of December 6, 1848 (see Note 52) only "independent Prussians" had the right to elect to the Second Chamber. This qualification in fact deprived the poor and the dispossessed sections of the population of all electoral rights. — p. 140
Page me9.555
†140 The imposed Constitution of December 5, 1848, contained reservations which contravened the principle of the immunity of deputies. Article 83 in particular stated that members of both Chambers "may be called to account both for their voting in the Chamber and for the statement of their views there". — p. 140
Page me9.555
†141 St. Stephen's Chapel — part of Westminster Palace, where the House of Commons sat since 1547.
Page me9.555
Chambre introuvable, the name given by King Louis XVIII to the Chamber of Deputies in France which in 1815-16 consisted of extreme conservatives.
Page me9.555
The Chamber of February 24, 1848 — the Chamber of Deputies in France which tried in vain to restrain the growing revolution and preserve the monarchy by replacing Louis Philippe by his grandson — the Count of Paris — in whose favour Louis Philippe abdicated on February 24, 1848. — p. 141

Page me9.555
†142 See Note 88. — p. 141
Page me9.555
†143 See Note 26. — p. 143
Page me9.555
†144 An allusion to the Catholic Easter rites practised at the Viennese, Munich, Madrid and other courts. On the Thursday of Passion Week a religious ceremony of the ablution of the sovereign's feet used to be held in the cathedrals before the liturgy. — p. 144
Page me9.555
†145 On March 12, 1849, the King of Sardinia cancelled the armistice with Austria that had been concluded on August 9, 1848, and hostilities were resumed on March 20. However, the seven-month armistice had not been used by the ruling circles of Piedmont to reorganise and strengthen the army; the key posts were left in the hands of mediocre and counter-revolutionary-minded generals. Despite the national enthusiasm with which the resumption of hostilities was met in Piedmont, in Austrian-ridden Lombardy and all over Italy, the Piedmontese army was defeated by March 23. Charles Albert abdicated. Victor-Emmanuel II, the new king, concluded an armistice with the Austrians on March 26, and on August 6, 1849, a peace treaty was signed on very onerous terms for Piedmont. It sanctioned the restoration of Austrian rule in Northern Italy and the Austrian protectorate over a number of states of Central Italy (Tuscany, Parma). — p. 148
Page me9.555
†146 The reference is to the main battle during the first stage of the Austro-Italian war (which broke out on March 25, 1848, as a result of the national liberation uprising in Lombardy and Venice against Austrian rule) — the battle at Custozza (on the River Mincio) on July 25 and 26, 1848, in which the Austrian army under the command of Radetzky defeated the Piedmontese troops. Then, on August 6, the Austrians captured Milan and on August 9, 1848, an armistice was concluded between Austria and the Kingdom of Sardinia, under which the latter undertook to withdraw its troops from the cities and fortresses of Lombardy and Venice and

Page Break me9.556
cede them to the Austrians. At the beginning, some of the states of Southern and Central Italy (including the Kingdom of Naples, Rome and Tuscany) were forced by the patriots to take part in the war against Austria, but right from the start the counter-revolutionary ruling circles of these states sabotaged the dispatch of army detachments to the front and soon managed either to recall their troops or make them surrender to the Austrians. — p. 148
Page me9.556
†147 See Note 13. — p. 149
Page me9.556
†148 Apparently an allusion to the actions of General Bonaparte (the future Emperor Napoleon) during his Italian campaign of 1796-97. At the beginning of the war, as a result of his bold manoeuvring of large military contingents, Bonaparte succeeded in defeating first the Austrian troops and then their allies, the Piedmontese, in the area of the Gulf of Genoa and, by threatening to march against Turin, in forcing the Kingdom of Sardinia to dissociate itself from the anti-French coalition and sign an armistice on April 28 and a peace treaty with France on May 5, 1796. — p. 150

Page me9.556
†149 In the summer of 1848, during the initial period of the Austro-Italian war, Garibaldi offered help to Charles Albert who, however, rejected it. The command of the Piedmontese army and the provisional government of Lombardy controlled by Charles Albert in no way assisted the volunteer corps formed by Garibaldi, who was left to fight the Austrian troops alone. Though Garibaldi and his corps continued to offer heroic resistance to the Austrians, even after the Austrian-Piedmontese armistice was signed on August 9, 1848, they were compelled by superior enemy forces to retreat to Switzerland. — p. 151
Page me9.556
†150 See Note 9. — p. 154
Page me9.556
†151 Pusztas — the Hungarian plains between the Danube and Theiss. — p. 154
Page me9.556
†152 Engels refers to the liberation war of the Algerians under the command of Emir Abd-el-Kader against the French colonialists who had occupied Algeria in 1830. The war continued from 1832 to 1847 with short intervals. — p. 155
Page me9.556
†153 Several items written by Engels on the war in Northern Italy were published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung under the title “From the Theatre of War” which headed the majority of his reports on the revolutionary war in Hungary. However, the former were printed in the section entitled “Italy” and the latter in the “Hungary” section. To distinguish the Italian items from his Hungarian reports, the former are published in this edition with the subtitle “Italy” supplied by the editors. — p. 156
Page me9.556
†154 During the national liberation insurrection of 1830-31 in Poland, Ramorino, who had emigrated from Italy, was appointed commander of one of the insurgents' corps. After Warsaw was stormed by Tsarist troops early in September 1831, Ramorino withdrew his corps to Austria, where it was interned.
Page me9.556
In 1833, Italian revolutionary emigrants, members of the “Young Italy” association headed by Mazzini, proposed to Ramorino that he should lead the military expedition to Savoy intended to instigate a republican uprising in Piedmont. However, Ramorino embezzled part of the money given him by Mazzini to enlist volunteers and in fact helped to frustrate the insurgents' plan. Instead of a simultaneous entry into Savoy from Switzerland and France, only one group of patriots penetrated Savoy from Grenoble in February 1834, and was dispersed by the Piedmontese carabinieri.
Page me9.556
At the second stage of the Austro-Italian war, Ramorino commanded one of the Piedmontese divisions made up of Lombards. On March 20, 1849, he ordered his troops to retreat from the Ticino lowlands and thus enabled the Austrians not only to enter Piedmont, but even to cut off part of the army from the main forces. After the war, Ramorino was court-martialled and executed. — p. 156

Page Break me9.557

Page me9.557
†155 The reference is to the German section of the population of Transylvania (see Note 21). — p. 159
Page me9.557
†156 On March 20, 1849, the Slovak deputation consisting mainly of Right-wing leaders of the Slovak national movement was received by Emperor Francis Joseph. The visit to Olmütz was prompted by the fact that Slovakia was still deprived of language equality and of other national rights, even after the imposed Constitution was proclaimed on March 4, 1849. The Slovak deputation again demanded the separation of Slovakia from Hungary and autonomy within the framework of the Austrian Empire. The Austrian Court deliberately adopted a delaying policy with the aim of using the Slovaks to fight the Hungarian revolution. However, all their national demands were subsequently rejected. — p. 162
Page me9.557
†157 Venice, where the masses had proclaimed independence and restored the "Republic of St. Mark" as early as March 1848, took an active part in the national liberation struggle against Austrian rule. The Venetians continued to offer resistance to the Austrians even after the armistice was concluded on August 9, 1848, between Austria and Piedmont, and withstood for many months a severe blockade by sea and land. After scoring a new victory over the Piedmontese army in March 1849, the Austrians reinforced their troops besieging Venice, which was finally forced to surrender. On August 22, 1849, the Republic of Venice, the last bulwark of the revolution in Italy, collapsed. — p. 166
Page me9.557
†158 See Note 55. — p. 168
Page me9.557
†159 The battle at Novara between Piedmontese and Austrian troops lasted the whole day of March 22 and ended at dawn on March 23, 1849, in the defeat and retreat of the Piedmontese army. — p. 169
Page me9.557
†160 On Ramorino's part in the Polish national liberation movement and the Savoy campaign of the Italian republicans in 1834, see Note 154. — p. 169
Page me9.557
†161 As Engels expected, the defeat at Novara and the conclusion of a new armistice between Austria and Piedmont cardinally changed the balance of forces in Italy in favour of the home and foreign counter-revolution. In Florence, the revolutionary events in January and February 1849 led to the overthrow of Grand Duke Leopold II and the proclamation of a republic in Tuscany (the official inauguration of a republic did not take place owing to sabotage by moderate liberals). On April 11, a counter-revolutionary coup d'état took place, the democratic provisional government of Guerazzi was overthrown, and the Grand Duke returned to power. He entered the city on May 25, 1849, together with Austrian troops.
Page me9.557

The Roman Republic, proclaimed on February 9, 1849, had to wage a grim struggle against counter-revolutionary insurgents instigated by the Catholic clergy, against Neapolitan troops, Austrians and the French expeditionary corps sent to Italy on April 6, 1849 to restore the power of Pope Pius IX over Rome. On July 3, 1849 the Republic fell under the blows of the foreign interventionists. — p. 170

Page me9.557

†162 On January 26, 1849, Faucher, Minister of Public Works in the Government of the liberal monarchist Odilon Barrot, submitted a Bill on the right of association to the Constituent Assembly. Its first clause ran as follows: “Clubs are prohibited”. The

Page Break me9.558

Bill on the right of association (better known as the Bill on clubs) was adopted on March 21, 1849, by the votes of the monarchists and moderate republicans, despite opposition from Left deputies who accused the Government of a breach of the Constitution and demanded its resignation. This decision dealt a heavy blow to freedom of assembly and association, and primarily to the workers' associations. — p. 170

Page me9.558

†163 See Note 19. — p. 170

Page me9.558

†164 The reference is to the liberation war waged by the Spanish people against Napoleonic rule; a prominent part in this war was played by guerilla fighters. — p. 171

Page me9.558

†165 See Note 40. — p. 173

Page me9.558

†166 During the 1815 campaign in Belgium, Napoleon, after defeating the Prussian army under Blücher at Ligny, ordered Marshal Grouchy to pursue the routed Prussians and prevent them from joining the Anglo-Dutch troops under Wellington. Grouchy, however, could not prevent Blücher's army from appearing, on June 18, on the battlefield of Waterloo at the most crucial moment of the battle. Grouchy with his troops failed to provide support for the French Emperor in time, and this lost them the entire campaign. — p. 176

Page me9.558

†167 The reference is to the march of the Austrian auxiliary army under General Nugent from Triest to help the troops under Field Marshal Radetzky who were in a difficult position as a result of a popular uprising in Lombardy and Venice against Austrian rule in March 1848. Nugent's army left Triest in the second half of April 1848. Moving through the Venetian region, particularly the mountainous district of Friuli, and only meeting resistance from weak volunteer detachments, it plundered everything on its way. On April 21 Nugent barbarously shelled Udine, the main city of Friuli. At the end of May his army joined Radetzky's troops in Verona.

Page me9.558

Master of Ordnance — see Note 116. — p. 179

Page me9.558

†168 Direct-fire batteries (Demontir-Batterien) were intended for demolishing gun emplacements and guns in besieged fortresses.

Page me9.558
Palatine line (Palatine — Hungarian title for a representative of the Emperor) — outer earthwork north-west of the Komorn fortress, between the Waag and the Danube; its construction was started in 1809 by order of the Hungarian Palatine, Archduke Joseph, and continued up to 1848. — p. 180
Page me9.558
†169 The German term used here is Feuerwerker — a rank in the artillery corresponding to that of non-commissioned officer in other arms. — p. 180
Page me9.558
†170 On the recognition of Francis Joseph as King of Hungary on the basis of the Pragmatic Sanction, see Note 97.
Page me9.558
On the Debreczin National Assembly, see Note 14. — p. 182
Page me9.558
†171 See Note 54. — p. 183
Page me9.558
†172 Chaikists — Austro-Hungarian infantrymen who served on small sailing vessels and rowing boats (chaikas) in the Military Border area. They built pontoon bridges and transported troops along the Danube, Theiss and Sava. Recruited mainly from among the Serbs, inhabiting the Chaikist Area in Slavonia, from 1764 onwards they formed a special battalion. — p. 183
Page me9.558
†173 See Note 11. — p. 184

Page Break me9.559
Page me9.559
†174 The reference is to Pest and Buda (see Note 109). — p. 188
Page me9.559
†175 An allusion to the important part Saragossa played in the Spanish national liberation war against Napoleon's rule, when the city was twice besieged by the French (in June-August 1808 and December 1808-February 1809) and won fame for its heroic defence. — p. 189
Page me9.559
†176 The reference is to the decisions of the Vienna Congress of 1814-15 (see Note 126). — p. 191
Page me9.559
†177 See Note 71. — p. 191
Page me9.559
†178 An allusion to the predominance of monarchists in the Government of Odilon Barrot, set up after the election of Louis Bonaparte as President of the Republic on December 10, 1848. Republican officials in the state apparatus were replaced by monarchists. Monarchist factions of legitimists (supporters of the Bourbon dynasty), Orleanists (followers of Louis Philippe) and Bonapartists formed a coalition in the Constituent Assembly, launched a struggle against the moderate republicans for political influence and strove to strengthen counter-revolutionary policy. In the Legislative Assembly convoked on May 28, 1849, this joint “party of order” was in the majority.

Page me9.559

The Holy Alliance — see Note 40. — p. 192

Page me9.559

†179 An allusion to the composition of the Frankfurt National Assembly which on March 28, 1849 resolved to elect the King of Prussia, Frederick William IV, “Emperor of the Germans”. The overwhelming majority of the Assembly's deputies were government and state officials, professors and lawyers (see Note 30)

Page me9.559

At first Frederick William IV agreed to accept the imperial crown proffered by the National Assembly on the condition that the other German states agreed, but on April 25, 1849, he finally rejected the proposal of the Frankfurt National Assembly and the imperial Constitution it had drawn up.

Page me9.559

The phrase “By the grace of God do I have this crown” was pronounced by Frederick William IV on October 15, 1840 when he was crowned King of Prussia. — p. 194

Page me9.559

†180 This article written by Engels for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was not published and has survived as an unfinished manuscript.

Page me9.559

The article was occasioned by the Prussian Government's measures to call up the army reserve. Among the pretexts for this was the war with Denmark resumed in Schleswig-Holstein. The Prussian ruling circles were obviously preparing the armed suppression of the revolutionary-democratic movement in Prussia and the rest of Germany.

Page me9.559

The army reserve (Landwehr) appeared in Prussia during the struggle against Napoleon. “Landwehr-Ordnung” defining the rules of enrolment, recruitment and service was adopted on November 21, 1815. In the 1840s, those to be enrolled in the army reserve had to be under 40 and go through three-years active service and be not less than two years in reserve. In contrast to the regular army, enlistment to the army reserve took place only in case of extreme necessity (war, or threat of war). — p. 195

Page me9.559

†181 On the resumption of war between Prussia and Denmark over Schleswig-Holstein, after the expiry of the truce between them at the end of March 1849, see Note 92. — p. 195

Page me9.559

†182 The reference is to the brutal suppression by Prussian soldiers of the national liberation insurrection in Posen in March-May 1848. — p. 196

Page Break me9.560

Page me9.560

†183 In the second half of December 1847, Marx delivered several lectures on political economy in the German Workers' Society in Brussels and intended to prepare them for publication. A manuscript of the pamphlet prepared at the time and entitled Wages has survived. It is written in Joseph Weydemeyer's hand and its text is almost identical to that published later in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. A draft outline of Marx's concluding lectures, which he had no time to prepare for publication, is extant as a manuscript written in his own hand and also bearing the heading Wages (see present edition, Vol. 6). As regards its contents, it supplements the work Wage Labour and Capital. Later, in the preface to A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (1859) (see present edition, Vol. 30), Marx pointed out that he did not manage to publish the work on “Wage Labour” based on his lectures because of the February revolution of 1848 in France and his expulsion from Belgium.

Page me9.560

This work first appeared as a series of leading articles in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung of April 5-8 and 11, 1849 under the title of Wage Labour and Capital. When undertaking this publication, Marx edited the former text once more and wrote an introduction giving the reasons why it was necessary to discuss economic problems in a newspaper, and primarily to reveal the economic relations on which bourgeois rule and the actual slavery of wage workers were founded.

Page me9.560

By publishing this work, Marx wished to prepare the proletarian readers of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung for the solution of the tasks that had become urgent by that time — the creation of the mass workers' party, and also to define the social aims set by the revolutionary organ which he edited. Marx's work helped to spread the ideas of scientific communism among the advanced section of the German proletariat. On April 11, 1849 the Committee of the Cologne Workers' Association recommended that all its branches should start discussing social problems on the basis of the articles on wage labour and capital published in the newspaper, and called upon other workers' associations in Germany to discuss these articles.

Page me9.560

The work was not published in the newspaper in full. Issue No. 269 announced that there was to be a sequel, but this never appeared because Marx had to leave Cologne for a time on financial and other business connected with the newspaper. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 277 of April 20 carried the following note: “Cologne, April 19. Owing to the temporary absence of the author, the exposition of the relationship between wage labour and capital has had to be interrupted. It will, however, be resumed shortly and then continued to the end without interruption.” This was never done, however, because the Neue Rheinische Zeitung ceased publication. Marx's subsequent intention to put out the work as a separate pamphlet did not materialise either.

Page me9.560

The first separate edition in the language of the original appeared in Breslau in 1880 without Marx's knowledge. In 1881 the pamphlet was republished there. A Russian translation (the first translation into a foreign language) appeared in Geneva in 1883. It was made from the Breslau edition and repeatedly republished illegally.

Page me9.560

After Marx's death, Wage Labour and Capital was published in 1884 in Hottingen-Zurich as a pamphlet with a short introductory note by Engels, dated June of that year. From December 1884 to February 1885, the London newspaper Justice, the organ of the Social-Democratic Federation, published the first English translation made by J. L. Joynes. In March 1885 it appeared as a separate pamphlet and later was repeatedly republished. J. L. Joynes' translation was used in the workers' press of the USA, in particular by the Workmen's Advocate, New Haven (Connecticut), in November 1886-January 1887.

Page me9.560

In 1891 a new edition of the pamphlet appeared in Berlin: Lohnarbeit und

Page Break me9.561

Kapital. Von Karl Marx, Separat-Abdruck aus der Neuen Rheinische Zeitung vom Jahre 1849. Berlin, Verlag der Expedition des Vorwärts Berliner Volksblatt, 1891. It was edited by Engels who wrote the introduction and made certain changes and amendments in order to bring the presentation and terminology into harmony with the further development of Marx's economic teaching after 1849. Engels wrote about this in his introduction:
Page me9.561

"In the forties, Marx had not yet finished his critique of political economy. This took place only towards the end of the fifties. Consequently, his works that appeared before the first part of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (1859) differ in some points from those written after 1859, and contain expressions and whole sentences which, from the point of view of the later works, appear unfortunate and even incorrect. Now, it is self-evident that in ordinary editions intended for the general public this earlier point of view also has its place, as a part of the intellectual development of the author, and that both author and public have an indisputable right to the unaltered reproduction of these older works. And I should not have dreamed of altering a word of them.
Page me9.561

"It is another thing when the new edition is intended practically exclusively for propaganda among workers.
Page me9.561

"In such a case Marx would certainly have brought the old presentation dating from 1849 into harmony with his new point of view....
Page me9.561

"My alterations all turn on one point. According to the original, the worker sells his labour to the capitalist for wages; according to the present text he sells his labour power."
Page me9.561

The 1891 edition, intended by Engels for popular propaganda, was used as the basis for many publications of this work in different languages, in particular for the English translation of 1891 printed in Glasgow by the Socialist Labour Party publishers.
Page me9.561

In this volume, the work is reproduced in a form which was in keeping with the level of Marx's economic teaching in 1849 and in accordance with the text in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. At the same time, all the major amendments made by Engels in the 1891 edition are given in footnotes. The division of the work into sections follows the sequence in which it was published in separate issues of the newspaper. The sections are numbered by the editors of the present edition. The list of misprints given in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 270, April 12, 1849, is also taken into account. — p. 197

Page me9.561
†184 The reference is to the major events of 1848 and 1849: the insurrection of the Paris proletariat on June 23-26; the suppression of the Vienna October popular revolt by Austrian soldiers and the capture of the capital on November 1 by troops under Windischgrätz; the counter-revolutionary coup in Prussia in November, which brought about the dissolution of the Prussian National Assembly on December 5; and the rise of the revolutionary national liberation movement in Poland, Italy and Hungary.
Page me9.561
In 1845-47, Ireland experienced a terrible famine, after continual failure of the potato crop. The real reason for this social calamity was the cruel exploitation of the Irish people under English rule, reduced to destitution by the ruling classes through the enslaving lease system imposed on the Irish peasants by the landlords. About a million died of hunger, and as many were compelled to emigrate. The effects of the famine were felt to the full in subsequent years. — p. 197
Page me9.561
†185 Engels points out in the introduction to the 1891 edition that Marx failed to prepare his lectures on wage labour and capital for the press mainly because of the rapid pace of political events at the time: popular uprisings in response to the refusal by the ruling circles of Prussia and other states to recognise the imperial Constitution (Dresden, Iserlohn, Elberfeld, the Palatinate, Baden) and a new counter-revolutionary advance which led to the suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — p. 228

Page Break me9.562
Page me9.562
†186 The reference is to the draft Constitution drawn up in Kremsier by the Austrian Constituent Imperial Diet. In early March 1849 it was dissolved by the Austrian Government which countered this draft with the Constitution imposed by the Emperor (see notes 13 and 39). The Kremsier draft, though it contained some concessions to the great-power and centralising tendencies of the German aristocratic ruling circles, envisaged a certain administrative independence for a number of national regions of the Empire and introduced provincial diets as representative institutions there. — p. 230
Page me9.562
†187 See Note 55. — p. 234
Page me9.562
†188 See Note 10. — p. 235
Page me9.562
†189 See Note 9. — p. 235
Page me9.562
†190 On March 15, 1848, a popular uprising broke out in Pest. In the middle of the day, the insurgents — craftsmen, workers, students, and peasants who had come to the fair — captured the town, crossed the Danube by the bridge and broke into Buda, where they set political prisoners free. The Austrian garrison was paralysed. The insurgents elected a Committee of Public Safety which provisionally concentrated power in its own hands. A popular meeting adopted the “12 points” drawn up by the radical opposition and demanding administration by parliament and civil liberties. The events of March 15 started the revolution in Hungary against the feudal serf-owning system and for national independence. — p. 237

Page me9.562
†191 The Austrian Archduke Stephan was appointed Palatine of Hungary in 1847. From the very first days of the Hungarian revolution he strove to restore the Habsburgs' rule, disguising his counter-revolutionary designs by concessions to the Hungarian national liberation movement, and aiming at collusion with Hungarian magnates. In September 1848, when the Ban Jellachich, inspired by Austrian court circles, entered Hungary causing a government crisis there, Stephan made an unsuccessful attempt to seize power. On the proposal of Hungarian Right-wing leaders, the National Assembly appointed him Commander-in-Chief of the Hungarian troops. However, Archduke Stephan delayed military action and tried to come to an agreement with the Croatian Ban. Shortly afterwards, feeling himself insecure, he fled from Hungary. On September 29, 1848, Hungarian revolutionary troops defeated Jallachich's army. — p. 239
Page me9.562
†192 The reference is to the "independent and responsible government" of Hungary formed as a result of the March uprising of 1848 and headed by Count Batthyány. The Government was dominated by representatives of the landed aristocracy and nobility, who were afraid that the revolution would be carried further and strove to compromise with the Austrian ruling circles. The radicals were represented in the Government by Lajos Kossuth (Finance Minister) and Bertalan Szemere (Minister of the Interior). The Batthyány Government (its compositon was made public on March 25) held power up to October 1, 1848. Early in October, the National Assembly transferred governmental functions to the Defence Council (see Note 70) headed by Kossuth. — p. 239
Page me9.562
†193 An allusion to the debate on a number of Bills in the National Assembly (Diet) then in session in Pressburg: on the abolition of labour services and tithe. On

Page Break me9.563
March 18, 1848, the Assembly promulgated an agrarian law annulling some of the peasants' feudal services, and passed laws on representation of the people, national independence, the press etc. These Bills were proposed under the impact of the growing revolutionary movement in the country. — p. 240
Page me9.563
†194 The march of Bem's army to the Banat (a district in the Serbian Voivodina, then administratively included in Hungary) took place in April 1849 after his troops had routed the Austrian army and Russian auxiliary detachments and occupied almost the whole of Transylvania. In the Banat, the troops under Bem and the Hungarian General Perczel inflicted a number of defeats on the Austrians and the Serbs of the Voivodina, whom the Austrian Government and pro-Austrian circles of the Serbian nobility and clergy had involved in the war with revolutionary Hungary (see Note 24); but they were unable to achieve any decisive successes. At the end of June 1849, large army contingents from Tsarist Russia entered Transylvania to assist the Austrian counter-revolution and this again made the presence of Bem's troops necessary in the Transylvanian theatre of war. This time he was defeated by the superior Russian troops.
Page me9.563

Later Marx and Engels drew attention to Bem's expedition in the Banat in the article “Bem” written for the New American Cyclopaedia in September 1857. — p. 243
Page me9.563
†195 Up to 1868, regiments and other independent military units in the Austrian imperial army were named after their “patrons” or chiefs (Inhaber). This custom dated back to the mercenary armies when commanders maintained regiments at their own expense and therefore had the right to appoint officers. Later the commanders retained the right to give their names to the regiments, but the state assumed the responsibility of maintaining them. — p. 245
Page me9.563
†196 The Palatine redoubts, direct-fire batteries — see Note 168.
Page me9.563
Breach batteries were installed at the concluding stages of a siege to destroy the bastions and other fortifications of a besieged fortress. — p. 246
Page me9.563
†197 The Debreczin National Assembly — see Note 14.
Page me9.563
This session of the National Assembly was held in Debreczin because only on April 24, 1849 did the Hungarian troops liberate Pest. — p. 246
Page me9.563
†198 See Note 68. — p. 246
Page me9.563
†199 “World-historic Diet” — the reference is to the Sabor of the Southern Slavs in Agram (Zagreb) on June 5, 1848 (see Note 67). Though the Sabor came out in favour of uniting Croatia, Slavonia and Dalmatia and of certain reforms there, on the whole, it sought compromise with the Austrian monarchy and did little to modify the former military feudal order in these regions and the enslaved position of their population. Only a small group of democratic delegates connected the struggle for the national cause with the revolutionary struggle against feudal monarchist regimes. — p. 246
Page me9.563
†200 Observation corps were assigned to watch the enemy on the flanks of the main theatre of military operations. — p. 248
Page me9.563
†201 See Note 190. — p. 248
Page me9.563
†202 The reference is evidently to the Odbor then in session in the town of Karlowitz (see Note 11). — p. 251
Page me9.563
†203 In the summer of 1848, the anti-feudal movement and the struggle for complete liberation from the Turkish Sultan's yoke gained strength in the Danube principalities (Moldavia and Wallachia), which were formally still autonomous possessions of Turkey. The movement in Wallachia grew into a bourgeois revolution. In June 1848, a Constitution was proclaimed, a liberal Provisional Government was formed and George Bibesco, the ruler of Wallachia, abdicated and fled the country.

Page Break me9.564

Page me9.564

On June 28, 1848, a 12,000-strong Russian army corps entered Moldavia and, in July, Turkish troops also invaded the country. In September 1848 the Turkish army, supported by the Tsarist Government, occupied Wallachia and perpetrated a massacre in Bucharest. A proclamation of the Turkish government commissioner Fuad-Effendi declared the need to establish “law and order” and “eliminate all traces of the revolution”. Intervention by Russia and Turkey led to the restoration of the feudal system in the Danube principalities and the defeat of the bourgeois revolution in Wallachia. The desire to completely suppress the revolutionary movement made the two governments, despite acute Russo-Turkish contradictions, conclude a convention in Balta-Liman on May 1, 1849. This cancelled the system of the election of rulers and other progressive reforms introduced in the Danube principalities in 1848, and sanctioned the occupation of their territories by Turkish and Russian troops. The military occupation of the principalities lasted until 1851. — p. 253
Page me9.564
†204 The bombardment of Hatvan on April 2, 1849 opened a new stage in the Hungarian offensive against the Austrian troops. It was prepared for by successful movements in the centre of military operations at the Theiss, Bem's victories in Transylvania, guerilla warfare in areas occupied by the Austrians, and vigorous measures taken by the Kossuth Government (the Defence Council) to strengthen the army and mobilise all its resources for the struggle against the enemy. When Engels wrote this report he had not yet received the news of the battle at Hatvan. Meanwhile, the victory scored by the Hungarian army there and the subsequent blows inflicted by it on the Austrians at Tapio-Bicske (April 4), Isaczeg and Gödöllö (April 5-7), Waitzen (April 10), etc. brought about a radical change in the war in favour of revolutionary Hungary. On April 19, 1849 the Hungarians routed the Austrians in a decisive battle at Nagy-Sallo, advanced further, relieved Komorn on April 22, and liberated Pest on April 24. The defeated Austrian army retreated to the western border.
Page me9.564

The Hungarian command faced the prospect of spreading the revolutionary war into Austrian and German territory. However, because of anti-revolutionary sentiments among a number of high commanders, Görgey in particular, and the fear of diplomatic complications, it was decided to cease the pursuit of the Austrians and to turn the main forces towards the fortress of Buda, which was still held by an Austrian garrison. The siege of Buda was time-consuming (it was captured only on May 21) and this gave the Austrians the respite they needed to bring up new reserves and complete their talks with Tsarist Russia about help in suppressing revolutionary Hungary (the final agreement was reached at the meeting of Francis Joseph and Nicholas I in Warsaw on May 21). All this had fatal consequences for the Hungarian revolution. — p. 255
Page me9.564
†205 See Note 10. — p. 255
Page me9.564

†206 Potsdam — a town near Berlin, the residence of the Prussian kings, where military parades and reviews of the Prussian army were held.
Page me9.564
Olmütz (Olomouc) — a town in Moravia, from October 7, 1848, temporary residence of the Austrian Court which fled from Vienna where the people rose in revolt; centre of counter-revolutionary forces. — p. 257

Page Break me9.565
Page me9.565
†207 An allusion to the shooting of Robert Blum, a German democrat and deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly, by sentence of an Austrian court martial (see Note 41). This crudely arbitrary act on the part of the Austrian military clique was approved by reactionary circles in Prussia. — p. 257
Page me9.565
†208 The reference is to the conventions concerning extradition of criminals, deserters, vagabonds etc. concluded by Prussia with a number of German states (Austria, Bavaria, Württemberg, Saxony, Grand Duchy of Baden etc.) and also with Russia in 1816-20. In practice, these conventions applied to persons accused of political crimes in accordance with the policy of the Holy Alliance powers (see Note 40) which strove for an international union of counter-revolutionary forces in the struggle against the revolutionary movement. — p. 258
Page me9.565
†209 In the initial period of the European revolution of 1848, various reactionary sovereigns and public figures, deprived of throne and power and seeking safety from the people's wrath, found refuge in England. Among them were: ex-King of the French, Louis Philippe (February); ex-Chancellor of the Austrian Empire, Metternich; the Prince of Prussia, Wilhelm (March); and later Lola Montez, an influential favourite of Ludwig I, King of Bavaria who was compelled to abdicate, and others. — p. 258
Page me9.565
†210 The war with Denmark over the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein renewed by Prussia at the end of March 1849 (see notes 90 and 92) was waged in the name of all the states of the German Confederation. Owing to this, military and naval contingents from Schleswig-Holstein were regarded as the nucleus of an all-German imperial army and navy, their formation being stipulated by the imperial Constitution drawn up by the Frankfurt National Assembly. — p. 259
Page me9.565
†211 On April 5, 1849 a German coastal battery fired on the Danish squadron at the harbour of Eckernförde (Schleswig); two damaged Danish ships were captured. This event, which made no essential difference to the course of war with Denmark, was claimed by the official Prussian press as a major victory. — p. 259
Page me9.565
†212 Black-red-and-gold — a symbolic combination of colours signifying the unity of Germany. The Belgian state flag, introduced during the revolution of 1830-31, after the separation of Belgium from Holland, included the same colours but arranged differently (vertical black, gold and red stripes). — p. 260
Page me9.565

†213 An ironical allusion to the strivings of the liberal majority of the Frankfurt National Assembly to place the Prussian King (black-and-white — state colours of the Prussian monarchy) at the head of united Germany (black-red-and-gold — symbol of its unity) as the “Emperor of the Germans” (see Note 138). — p. 260
Page me9.565
†214 See Note 151. — p. 261
Page me9.565
†215 In the battle of Leipzig on October 16-19, 1813 troops from Russia, Prussia, Austria and Sweden won a victory over the army of Napoleon and the states dependent on him. This victory decided the outcome of the 1813 campaign in favour of the sixth anti-Napoleon coalition (England, Spain and some other states also participated in it). As a result, Napoleon's troops were driven out of Germany and military operations moved over into France. — p. 261
Page me9.565
†216 The reference is to the Constitution imposed by Francis Joseph on March 4, 1849 (see Note 13). — p. 263
Page me9.565
†217 See Note 97. — p. 263

Page Break me9.566
Page me9.566
†218 On the battle at Novara between the Austrian and Piedmontese armies, see Note 159. — p. 266
Page me9.566
†219 Here and in the two reports given below, “A Magyar Victory” and “An Austrian Defeat”, Engels writes about the military events in Hungary early in April: the victory won by the Hungarian troops at Hatvan on April 2 and the subsequent blows they inflicted on the Austrian army (see Note 204). — p. 267
Page me9.566
†220 Banderial hussars (from the Latin banderium — banner) — the name given in medieval Hungary to cavalry detachments of nobles that under their own banners formed part of the royal army or of the armies of the big feudal lords. In this instance, the reference is to the regiment of Banderial hussars formed in July 1848 in Croatia. It took part in the marches of Jellachich's army against revolutionary Hungary. — p. 273
Page me9.566
†221 See Note 112. — p. 273
Page me9.566
†222 The battles for Pest were fought from April 6 to 25, 1849. They also continued after the main Austrian forces, beaten by Hungarian revolutionary troops, had been compelled to retreat north-west to the borders of Austria. After Pest was liberated, the Austrian garrison still held out in the fortress of Buda which was besieged by the Hungarians from May 4 to 21, 1849. — p. 277
Page me9.566
†223 In March 1849, the war between Piedmont and Austria was renewed and this served as a new impetus to the national liberation movement in Lombardy, in the rear of the Austrian army. A large popular uprising against Austrian rule took place on March 20 in Brescia. The Austrian garrison was trapped in the fortress. The Austrian troops sent against Brescia consisted partly of those which had taken part in the operations against the Republic of Venice. They were under the command of General Nugent, who was later replaced by a Master of Ordnance, Haynau. The insurgent city was severely bombarded, but continued to resist even after the truce was signed between the King of Piedmont and Austria. Brescia was taken only by a fierce assault on March 31 and April 1. Haynau inflicted brutal reprisals on the insurgents.

Page me9.566

On the blockade of Venice, see Note 157. — p. 280

Page me9.566

†224 The reference is to the response of the ruling circles in one of the small German states, the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg, to the proposal by the Frankfurt National Assembly that the crown of the "Emperor of the Germans" be given to the Prussian King, Frederick William IV (see Note 138). — p. 281

Page me9.566

†225 The Rhenish District Committee of Democrats was set up at the First Rhenish Congress of Democrats held in Cologne on August 13 and 14, 1848, by a decision of the First All-German Democratic Congress in Frankfurt am Main, on the basis of the Central Commission of representatives from the three democratic organisations in Cologne — the Democratic Society, the Workers' Association and the Association for Workers and Employers — formed late in June 1848. Marx, who was on the Central Commission, also became a member of the Rhenish District Committee, together with Schapper, Moll and other prominent figures of the Communist League.

Page me9.566

The President of the Committee was a German democrat, lawyer Schneider II. When he was elected to the Second Chamber of the Prussian Provincial Diet early in 1848, Marx acted as President. Thanks to Marx and his associates, the Committee exerted a considerable influence on the popular movement in the Rhine Province. It successfully organised resistance to the growing counter-revolutionary forces and, in particular, initiated the tax-refusal campaign during the coup d'état in Prussia (November-December 1848). It did not confine its activities to the Rhine Province, but extended them to Westphalia as well.

Page Break me9.567

Page me9.567

Marx and other members of the Communist League decided to withdraw from the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats because of the changes that had taken place in Germany and in the working-class movement there by the spring of 1849. The rising activity of workers' associations and the markedly growing class consciousness of the German proletariat provided the opportunity to create a mass proletarian party. On the other hand, the wavering position of the petty-bourgeois democrats made necessary an ideological and organisational separation from them. Under these conditions, taking the first steps to found a proletarian party, Marx and Engels proposed the task of strengthening the independence of the workers' associations, primarily the Cologne Workers' Association, of freeing them from petty-bourgeois influence, of marshalling their activities in a single direction and achieving a unified revolutionary platform. Their withdrawal from the Committee in no way meant a break with the non-proletarian democratic trends. Marx and Engels continued to call for unity of action with democrats in the struggle against counter-revolution, believing, however, that at that stage it should not be carried out within a single organisation. At the same time, Marx established closer contacts with the representatives of the workers' associations.

Page me9.567
These tasks and the financial problems of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung were the main purpose of Marx's trip to North-West Germany and Westphalia in the second half of April 1849, during which he visited Bremen, Hamburg, Bielefeld, Hamm and other towns. — p. 282
Page me9.567
†226 The Rakos plain — a district on the left bank of the Danube where, until the sixteenth century, Hungarian assemblies of estates were held and Hungarian kings crowned. It is now within the city bounds of Budapest. — p. 283
Page me9.567
†227 See Note 55. — p. 286
Page me9.567
†228 See Note 16. — p. 286
Page me9.567
†229 The reference is to the men of the Vienna mobile guard and the Academic Legion who survived after the capture of Vienna by counter-revolutionary troops (November 1, 1848) and, as part of Bem's army, participated in the revolutionary war in Hungary.
Page me9.567
The Vienna mobile guard was formed by Bem during the October uprising in Vienna. It consisted mainly of artisans and workers and proved itself to be the most disciplined, efficient and audacious section of the insurgents' military forces.
Page me9.567
The Academic Legion was a student militarised organisation set up in March 1848 in Vienna. It also included university lecturers and other intellectuals, mostly radical democrats. The Legion played a significant part in the Austrian revolutionary movement in 1848. When the October uprising in Vienna was suppressed, it was dissolved. — p. 287
Page me9.567
†230 See Note 43. — p. 289
Page me9.567
†231 Under the impact of the March revolution of 1848, the peasants' anti-feudal struggle assumed wide proportions within the Austrian Empire and became combined with the national liberation movement in the national border regions. Disturbances among the Ukrainian peasants of the Bukovina started in the spring of 1848 and became especially intensive when, on April 17, 1848, a law was promulgated in neighbouring Galicia abolishing feudal services. This law did not apply to the Bukovina, though it was administratively part of Galicia. The

Page Break me9.568
Ukrainian peasant, Huzul Lucian Kobylica, was especially prominent among the peasants' leaders. He belonged to the radical democratic wing of the Austrian Constituent Imperial Diet to which he was elected in 1848. He helped the peasants lodge their petitions and complaints and did his best to get the lands seized by the landowners returned to the peasants. For this, Kobylica was deprived of his rights as a deputy.

Page me9.568

In the spring of 1849, the peasants' movement in the Bukovina was rekindled. Peasants' detachments were formed, landowners' estates were seized and their woods felled more often. The peasant leaders, Lucian Kobylica (who may have been in direct contact with the Hungarian emissaries) and Birla Mironiuk, called upon the peasants to store up provisions and fodder for the Hungarian troops and to join them, if the latter entered the Bukovina. The peasants' disturbances in the Bukovina were suppressed by imperial forces.
Page me9.568

The imposed redemption law referred to by Engels was adopted by the Austrian Imperial Diet on September 7, 1848 (see Note 33). — p. 289
Page me9.568
†232 Ruthenian — the name given in nineteenth-century West-European ethnographical and historical works to the Ukrainian population of Galicia and the Bukovina, which was separated at the time from the bulk of the Ukrainian people. — p. 289
Page me9.568
†233 The Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 265, 266, 267, 269 and 271 of April 6, 7, 8, 11 and 13, 1849, carried a series of feature articles by Georg Weerth ridiculing the servility of the liberal majority of the Frankfurt National Assembly who wished to unite Germany under the aegis of Prussia and resolved on March 28, 1849 to elect the Prussian King, Frederick William IV, “Emperor of the Germans” (see Note 138). — p. 295
Page me9.568
†234 The battle at Novara — see Note 159.
Page me9.568

The battle for Pest — see Note 222.
Page me9.568

The battle at Eckernförde — see Note 211.
Page me9.568

On April 13, 1849, the so-called German federal troops stormed the Danish fortifications near Düppel (a village in Schleswig). — p. 295
Page me9.568
†235 “Gagging laws” — the name given to the six exceptional laws passed in England in 1819 after “Peterloo” — when participants in a mass meeting for electoral reforms in St. Peter's Field near Manchester were shot by police and troops; the laws limited the freedom of assembly and the press. — p. 295
Page me9.568
†236 See Note 180. — p. 295
Page me9.568
†237 After the March revolution, an insurrection of the Poles broke out in the Duchy of Posen for liberation from the Prussian yoke. Polish peasants and artisans took an active part in this, along with members of the lesser nobility. The Prussian Government was forced to promise that a reorganising committee would be set up in Posen and that the “reorganisation” would include: formation of a Polish army, appointment of Poles to administrative and other posts, recognition of Polish as an official language, etc. Similar promises were given in the convention of April 11, 1848, signed by the Posen Committee and representatives of the Prussian Government in Jaroslawiec. On April 14, 1848, however, the King of Prussia ordered that the Duchy of Posen be divided into an eastern Polish part and a western “German” part, which was not to be “reorganised” and was to remain formally part of the German Confederation. During the months following the suppression of the uprising by Prussian troops, the demarcation line was pushed further east and the promised “reorganisation” was never carried out.

Page me9.568
The German Confederation — the ephemeral union of German states founded in 1815 by decision of the Vienna Congress. — p. 296

Page Break me9.569
Page me9.569
†238 See Note 232. — p. 296
Page me9.569
†239 See Note 19. — p. 297
Page me9.569
†240 Potato war — the name given ironically to the so-called war for the Bavarian succession between Prussia and Saxony, on the one hand, and Austria, on the other, in 1778 and 1779. The military actions consisted mainly of troop movements and of soldiers' quarrels over potatoes. The war ended with the Peace of Teschen, compelling the Austrian Habsburgs to abandon their claims to Bavarian possessions. — p. 297
Page me9.569
†241 The reference is to the deputation of the Right-wing representatives of the Slovak national movement to the negotiations with Austrian ruling circles in Olmütz in March 1849 (see Note 156). — p. 299
Page me9.569
†242 See Note 114. — p. 303
Page me9.569
†243 See Note 68. — p. 304
Page me9.569
†244 The foundation of a Croatian-Slavonian-Dalmatian triune kingdom was discussed in the Croatian Sabor (see Note 67) as early as the summer of 1848. The scheme under consideration reflected the desire of the top bourgeoisie and landowners in the South-Slav lands for autonomy within the Austrian monarchy and a moderate Constitution. The scheme was regarded as part of a broader programme for integrating all the South-Slav lands of the Austrian Empire. The centralising Constitution imposed in March 1849 dealt a heavy blow to the Right wing of the South-Slav national movement, which cherished hopes of obtaining autonomy in collaboration with the Austrian ruling circles. The latter, however, needed the Southern Slavs for the struggle against revolutionary Hungary and Italy, and therefore supported the illusion that this scheme for autonomy could be put into effect. The Croatian Sabor, in particular, was allowed to negotiate unity with the representatives of Dalmatia. When the uprisings in Hungary and Italy were suppressed, the Austrian authorities curbed all attempts on the part of the South-Slav adherents of autonomy to implement their plans. Engels calls the newly conceived state Raubstaat meaning either a robber state or a dwarfish, dependent state.

Page me9.569
Pandours — irregular infantry units of the Austrian army recruited mainly in the South-Slav provinces of the Austrian Empire.
Page me9.569
Serezhans — see Note 22.
Page me9.569
Haiduks — South-Slav guerillas fighting against Turkish conquerors in the fifteenth to nineteenth centuries. In the Austrian Empire, this name was given to people inhabiting an autonomous district in Hungary who provided special military contingents for the army.
Page me9.569
Red-coats — see Note 45. — p. 307
Page me9.569
†245 An allusion to German moderate constitutionalists (contemptuously called wailers by democratic circles), including members of the Frankfurt parliament, advocates of uniting Germany in the form of the German Empire. Engels ironically compares the state they planned to form with the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation (962-1806) which included, at different times, the German, Italian, Austrian, Hungarian and Bohemian lands, Switzerland and the Netherlands and which was a motley confederation of feudal kingdoms, church lands and free towns with different political structures, legal standards and customs. — p. 307
Page me9.569
†246 An ironical comparison with the Swiss separatist union — Sonderbund (see Note 35). — p. 308

Page Break me9.570
Page me9.570
†247 The reference is to the Congress of representatives of the Slav regions forming part of the Austrian Empire. It met in Prague on June 2, 1848. The Right, moderately liberal wing to which Palacký and Šafarik, the leaders of the Congress, belonged, tried to solve the national problem through autonomy of the Slav regions within the framework of the Habsburg monarchy. The Left, radical wing (Sabina, Fric, Libelt, Štúr and others) wanted joint action with the revolutionary and democratic movement in Germany and Hungary. The radical delegates took an active part in the popular uprising in Prague (June 12-17, 1848) against the arbitrary rule of the Austrian authorities, and were subjected to cruel reprisals. On June 16, the moderate liberal delegates declared the Congress adjourned indefinitely. — p. 308
Page me9.570
†248 Otocac gentlemen (Otocaner) — soldiers of the Austrian border regiment formed in 1746 and stationed in Otocac (Western Croatia). They were recruited mainly from the South-Slav subjects of the Austrian Emperor. — p. 308
Page me9.570
†249 See Note 220. — p. 309
Page me9.570

†250 See Note 70. — p. 315
Page me9.570
†251 When the Austrians heavily bombarded Cracow during the national liberation uprising in April 1848, Castiglioni was military commandant of the Cracow fortress. — p. 319
Page me9.570
†252 See Note 9. — p. 319
Page me9.570
†253 See Note 47. — p. 320
Page me9.570
†254 The Gustavus Adolphus Union — a religious organisation formed in 1832 to help Protestant communities in Catholic regions of Germany; Rupp, formerly pastor in Königsberg (he was removed from his post for criticism of church dogmas), was expelled from this Union in 1846. — p. 321
Page me9.570
†255 "Friends of Light" — a religious trend which arose in 1841 and was directed against pietism; the latter, being supported by junker circles, was predominant in the official Protestant church and was outstanding for its extreme reactionary nature and hypocrisy. The "Friends of Light" movement was an expression of bourgeois discontent with the reactionary order in Germany in the 1840s; in 1846-47 it led to the formation of the so-called free communities, which separated from the official Protestant church. — p. 321
Page me9.570
†256 See Note 52. — p. 321
Page me9.570
†257 See Note 235. — p. 322
Page me9.570
†258 See Note 123. — p. 324
Page me9.570
†259 See Note 136. — p. 327
Page me9.570
†260 See Note 172. — p. 331
Page me9.570
†261 See notes 13 and 39. — p. 338
Page me9.570
†262 Here the Neue Rheinische Zeitung continues its exposure of the legal and police persecution of Ferdinand Lassalle. Lassalle was arrested in Düsseldorf on November 22, 1848 on a charge of incitement to arm against the government during the tax-refusal campaign. The proceedings against him were delayed by the legal authorities of the Rhine Province in every possible way. During the investigation, attempts were also made to bring a case against him for insulting government officials, etc. On Lassalle's request, expressed in his letters to Marx and Engels, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung came out in defence of him and of other Düsseldorf democrats under persecution. The newspaper carried a number of articles exposing the abuses of power and illegal actions by the judicial and prison authorities against Lassalle (see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 463-65, 474-76). Marx and Engels also took part in the efforts of the Cologne democratic organisations to induce the legal authorities to speed up the investigation of the case. Subsequently, the newspaper several times published material exposing this trial (see this volume, pp. 344-46, 372-76 and 383-88) which was held on May 3 and 4. The jury acquitted Lassalle.

Page Break me9.571

Page me9.571

Below, the reference is to the Articles of the Code pénal (see Note 120). — p. 339

Page me9.571

†263 The reference is to the resolutions on abolition of serfdom, labour services and tithes and landowners' courts by the Hungarian National Assembly on March 18, 1848 in the atmosphere of general revolutionary upsurge. The agrarian reform carried out by the Assembly (it was elected before the March revolution according to the principle of estate representation and on the whole expressed the interests of the nobility) was half-hearted, however. The peasants had to pay redemption for the abolition of certain feudal obligations, and the terms of redemption were such that whole categories of landless and land-starved peasants were virtually unable to free themselves of labour services. During the revolution, the radical wing made repeated demands for further measures in favour of the peasants, but met with resistance from the moderate elements among the nobility. Incomplete agrarian reforms were one of the inner causes of the defeat of the Hungarian revolution of 1848-49. — p. 345

Page me9.571

†264 This item, occasioned by the news reaching Cologne that the Hungarian revolutionary army had taken Pest and Buda (here as well as in other military reports, Engels uses its German name — Ofen), was printed in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 283 dated April 27; however, the supplement came out on the morning of April 28, 1849, as is pointed out in Engels' next war review (see this volume, pp. 350-51).

Page me9.571

Hungarian troops occupied the city of Buda; but its fortress still remained in the hands of the Austrian garrison and was captured only on May 21, 1849, after a prolonged siege. — p. 346

Page me9.571

†265 Mentioned here are two big battles during the war waged by revolutionary France against the first anti-French coalition of European counter-revolutionary states — Austria, Prussia, England, Russia and others.

Page me9.571

At Jemappes (Belgium) on November 6, 1792 the French army defeated the Austrian troops.

Page me9.571

At Fleurus (Belgium) on June 26, 1794 the French troops defeated the Austrian army under the Duke of Coburg. This victory enabled the French revolutionary army to enter and occupy Belgium. — p. 349

Page me9.571

†266 Evidently the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung did not have Kossuth's exact biographical data at that time and so availed themselves of the current newspaper information. In fact, Kossuth was born on September 19, 1802. — p. 352
Page me9.571
†267 When Engels expressed his hope for a new revolution in Vienna if the Hungarian army moved further, and called this probable revolt the "fifth revolution", he obviously had in mind the four revolutionary events in the Austrian capital in 1848, namely: the popular uprising of March 13 that started the revolution in

Page Break me9.572
Austria armed risings of workers, artisans and students on May 15 and 26 that compelled the Government to make new concessions to the democratic movement (it extended the suffrage, consented to have a one-chamber Constituent Imperial Diet, annulled orders to dissolve the Central Committee of the National Guard and the Academic Legion, etc.); workers' disturbances on August 23 that led to the collision between workers and bourgeois detachments of the national guards; and the popular revolt on October 6-31, the culminating point of the revolution in Austria and Germany. — p. 352
Page me9.572
†268 See Note 172. — p. 354
Page me9.572
†269 The reference is to the former soldiers of the Academic Legion (see Note 229). — p. 355
Page me9.572
†270 On April 27, 1849 the Prussian Government dissolved the Second Chamber because, at its sitting on April 21, it had approved the imperial Constitution drawn up by the Frankfurt National Assembly. The Chamber took this resolution on the initiative of the opposition deputies, in spite of the head of the Government's statement that the King had definitely decided to reject the imperial Constitution. — p. 357
Page me9.572
†271 See Note 52. — p. 357
Page me9.572
†272 The reference is to the Prussian National Assembly dissolved by the Government on December 5, 1848. For its principle of "agreement with the Crown", see Note 48. — p. 357
Page me9.572
†273 See Note 88. — p. 358
Page me9.572
†274 The reference is to the suppression of the national liberation uprising in the Grand Duchy of Posen in 1848 by Prussian soldiers and to the gross violation of the promise originally given to the insurgents by the Government, namely to introduce national autonomy in the eastern part of the Duchy, i.e. behind the demarcation line (see Note 237). General Pfuel, in command of the Prussian troops in Posen, ordered that all the insurgents who had been taken prisoner be shaved and their hands and ears branded with caustic (in German Höllenstein). This was how he got his nickname Pfuel von Höllenstein in democratic circles. — p. 359

Page me9.572
†275 See Note 19. — p. 360
Page me9.572
†276 In 1793 the second partition of Poland (the first in 1772, the third in 1795) took place. As a result, the Polish feudal state ceased to exist. The Polish lands were incorporated into Prussia, Austria and Russia. The second partition was carried out by the Russian Empress Catherine and the Prussian King Frederick William II. The Austrian Emperor Francis I did not participate in it directly, but his policy facilitated the partition and thus prepared for Austria's participation in the third partition of Poland.
Page me9.572
By the second partition, the Prussian kingdom obtained Torun (Thorn) and Gdansk (Danzig) with adjoining lands, the greater part of Great Poland (provinces of Posen, Gnesen, Kalisch, Plotsk, etc.) and other Polish territories. The annexed part of Great Poland was turned into a new province — South Prussia (mentioned by Engels below), to which Warsaw was joined in 1795 after the third partition.
Page me9.572
By the Treaty of Tilsit in 1807, however, these lands were taken from Prussia by Napoleon who formed them into a vassal Duchy of Warsaw but, in 1815, by decision of the Vienna Congress, part of them — the Great Duchy of Posen — was returned to the Prussian monarchy. — p. 360

Page Break me9.573
Page me9.573
†277 The reference here is to Prussian participation in the suppression of the Polish national liberation uprising of 1794 led by Tadeusz Kosciuszko. The insurgents wanted to restore the independence of Poland, to return the lands taken from it in 1772 and 1793, and to continue the progressive reforms interrupted by the second partition. The uprising was suppressed by troops from Tsarist Russia, Prussia and Austria which, in 1795, partitioned Poland for the third time. — p. 361
Page me9.573
†278 The article mentioned was not published in the next issues of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; evidently, the newspaper was suppressed before Engels managed to write it. — p. 362
Page me9.573
†279 The Deutschmeister regiment of the Austrian imperial army was formed in 1695 and originated with the military religious “Hoch und Deutschmeister” Order. The master of the Order was the regiment's chief. — p. 365
Page me9.573
†280 See Note 195. — p. 365
Page me9.573
†281 See Note 136. — p. 365
Page me9.573
†282 See Note 68. — p. 369
Page me9.573
†283 The reference is to the decisions taken by the National Assemblies (Diets) of Hungary and Transylvania after the March revolution of 1848 to establish union between the two countries and to introduce a single administrative system. In Transylvania, the decision on the union was adopted on May 30 by the Assembly in Cluj that was elected according to the principle of estate representation which secured the predominance in it of Hungarian landowners. This decision attached a one-sided character to the union, it retained the privilege of the Hungarian minority in local administration and school matters and proclaimed Hungarian as the only official language. The ideas of the Romanian and Hungarian democrats, who regarded this union as the formation of a Hungarian-Transylvanian state based on the equality of nations, were actually rejected. This fact was used by the Right wing of the Romanian national movement in Transylvania who aimed at a union with the Habsburgs and helped the latter make use of the Transylvanian Romanians in the struggle against revolutionary Hungary. — p. 369

Page me9.573
†284 The Hungarian Constitution of 1848 — a number of laws promulgated in the second half of March 1848 by the Hungarian National Assembly in the atmosphere of revolutionary upsurge (see Note 193) concerned political organisation in the country. These laws proclaimed Hungary independent of the Austrian Empire in financial and military matters; legislative power was concentrated in the elected National Assembly, and the executive body — the Cabinet Council — was proclaimed responsible to the latter. However, Hungary remained bound to the empire by the common emperor of the Habsburg dynasty and suffrage was limited by a property qualification. Though the new Constitution preserved many of the nobility's privileges, it was an important step towards a bourgeois transformation of the political order in Hungary. — p. 369
Page me9.573
†285 See Note 136. — p. 370
Page me9.573
†286 On the Prussian electoral law and the imposed Constitution (called above the "martial-law Charter of December 5"), see Note 52. — p. 370
Page me9.573
†287 The Konversationshalle at Dönhoff square — a hall in Berlin where, on April 27, 1849, Left-wing deputies assembled after the dissolution of the Second Chamber of the Prussian Provincial Diet. They were turned out by soldiers and constables and the people who gathered near the Konversationshalle came under fire from the troops.

Page Break me9.574
Page me9.574
Constables in Berlin — a special detachment of plain-clothes men formed in summer 1848 for use against street gatherings and popular disturbances and for spying purposes. The name was given by analogy with special constables in England, who were used to break up the Chartist demonstration on April 10, 1848. — p. 370
Page me9.574
†288 See Note 120. — p. 372
Page me9.574
†289 The trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (see Note 225) was held on February 8, 1849. Marx, Karl Schapper and the lawyer Schneider II were brought before the jury and accused of instigation to revolt on the basis of that committee's appeal issued on November 18, 1848 concerning the refusal to pay taxes as a measure of struggle against the counter-revolutionary coup in Prussia. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty. For Marx's speech at this trial see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 323-39. — p. 372

Page me9.574
†290 Code d'instruction criminelle — French Criminal Code which was in force in the Rhine Province of Prussia. In this particular case, reference is to Article 300. — p. 372
Page me9.574
†291 The first time Lassalle was imprisoned from February to August 1848. Legal proceedings were instituted against him on the charge that he had instigated the theft of a box containing documents to be used in the divorce case of Countess Hatzfeld. As a lawyer, he was employed on this case from 1846 to 1854. About Lassalle's second arrest and trial see Note 262. — p. 372
Page me9.574
†292 On November 22, 1848 Lassalle made a speech at the popular meeting in Neuss (near Düsseldorf) in which he called upon the people to give armed support when needed to the Prussian National Assembly in its conflict with the Prussian Government. On the same day he was arrested. — p. 374
Page me9.574
†293 After the dissolution of the Second Chamber, the Prussian Government published a Note of April 28, 1849 signed by Prime Minister Brandenburg and addressed to the Frankfurt National Assembly and the German governments. The Note contained Frederick William IV's final refusal to accept the imperial crown proffered by the Assembly, motivated by the fact that the revolutionary origin and contents of the imperial Constitution made it inacceptable to the King. At the same time, the Note stressed that the Prussian King certainly did not refuse to fulfil the mission of uniting the German lands, in collaboration with other German monarchs. It was suggested that the Frankfurt Assembly should give up the imperial Constitution and promote these dynastic plans. Simultaneously with this Note, the Prussian Government stepped up military preparations in order to put down the growing popular movement in Germany for the introduction of the imperial Constitution. — p. 377
Page me9.574
†294 In September, the Frankfurt National Assembly discussed the Law on the Protection of the Constituent Imperial Assembly and the Officials of the Central Authority ("Gesetz, bettreffend den Schutz der constituirenden Nationalversammlung und der Beamten der Centralgewalt") and adopted it on October 10, 1848. Article V read: "Public insult to the Imperial Assembly, including that made outside its sittings, is to be punished by imprisonment of up to two years." This law was also published in Prussia in Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. — p. 377

Page Break me9.575
Page me9.575
†295 St. Paul's Church — see Note 30.
Page me9.575

Carbonari — members of secret political societies in Italy and France in the first half of the nineteenth century. In Italy they fought for national independence, unification of the country and liberal constitutional reforms. In France their movement was primarily directed against the rule of the restored Bourbon dynasty (1815-30). — p. 377

Page me9.575

†296 In connection with the coup d'état that began in Prussia in November 1848, the Frankfurt National Assembly sent a delegation to Berlin to mediate in the conflict between the Prussian Assembly and the Government (see Note 42). On his return to Frankfurt, Bassermann, a moderate liberal member of the delegation, announced to the Assembly that the Prussian Government had a good reason for taking decisive measures, because savage-looking characters were loafing about in the streets of Berlin as they usually did on the eve of anarchist demonstrations. Hence the ironical expression "Bassermannic characters". — p. 377

Page me9.575

†297 Engels had in mind revolutionary disturbances among the broad masses in the Bavarian Palatinate caused by the declaration made by the Bavarian King Maximilian II and his Cabinet on April 23, 1849. In it they rejected the imperial Constitution and proclaimed loyalty to the former particularism of small states. The movement in the Palatinate soon led to a revolutionary upheaval there, the Palatinate's separation from Bavaria and the formation of a local provisional government. — p. 378

Page me9.575

†298 This refers to the central body of the German Confederation (see Note 237) which consisted of representatives from the German states. Though it had no real power, it was nevertheless a vehicle for feudal and monarchist reaction. After the March 1848 revolution in Germany, Right-wing circles tried in vain to revive the Federal Diet and use it to undermine the principle of popular sovereignty and prevent the democratic unification of Germany. — p. 378

Page me9.575

†299 On September 18, 1848 a popular uprising broke out in Frankfurt am Main against the Frankfurt National Assembly's ratification of the armistice with Denmark concluded in Malmö (see Note 92). The wavering and indecision of the Assembly's Left wing helped defeat the uprising. — p. 378

Page me9.575

†300 The dissolution of the Second Chamber in Prussia on April 27, 1849 was followed by the dissolution of the corresponding chambers in Hanover and Saxony because the ruling circles of these states refused to recognise the imperial Constitution approved by the majority of deputies. In Saxony the Provincial Diet was dissolved by order of King Frederick Augustus II as early as April 28, 1849. This act and the Government's other counter-revolutionary measures sparked off the uprising in Dresden on May 3. It started the armed struggle for the imperial Constitution in a number of regions in Germany. — p. 380

Page me9.575

†301 See Note 19. — p. 382

Page me9.575

†302 See Note 50. — p. 384

Page me9.575
†303 The address quoted here was composed by Lassalle in November 1848 on behalf of the Düsseldorf civic militia and sent to the Prussian National Assembly that same evening. The address was published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 149, November 22, 1848. About Lassalle's speech at Neuss, see Note 292. — p. 384
Page me9.575
†304 See Note 86. — p. 385
Page me9.575
†305 An allusion to the paragraphs in Prussian Law concerning the prosecution and punishment of persons guilty of “stirring up discontent”. — p. 387

Page Break me9.576
Page me9.576
†306 On May 1, 1849 the Cologne municipal council, which consisted mainly of liberal bourgeois representatives, addressed all other municipal councils in the Rhine Province with a proposal to convene a meeting on May 5, 1849 in connection with the new situation that had arisen in Prussia after the dissolution of the Second Chamber. The Prussian Government banned this meeting (the ban was published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 104, May 2, 1849). Even so, the Cologne municipal council convoked a congress of delegates from the Rhine cities on May 8, 1849 in Cologne. The Congress came out in favour of the imperial Constitution and demanded the convocation of the dissolved Provincial Diet. It was made clear that, if the Prussian Government ignored the Congress's resolution, the question of the Rhine Province's secession from Prussia would be raised. This threat, however, was not supported by decisive action and remained merely an empty declaration, because the liberal majority of the Congress rejected the proposal to arm the people and to resist the authorities by force. — p. 389
Page me9.576
†307 On September 26, 1848 the authorities, frightened by the upsurge of the revolutionary-democratic movement in Cologne, declared a state of siege there “to safeguard the individual and property”. The military commandant's office issued an order prohibiting all associations pursuing “political and social aims”, banned all meetings, disbanded and disarmed the civic militia, instituted courts martial and suspended publication of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and a number of other democratic newspapers. A protest campaign compelled the Cologne military authorities to lift the state of siege on October 2. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung resumed publication on October 12. — p. 389
Page me9.576
†308 See Note 226. — p. 391
Page me9.576
†309 See Note 306. — p. 392
Page me9.576
†310 The organisations of the Rhine Province and Westphalia held three congresses in Cologne on Sunday, May 6, 1849: the congress of workers' associations, the congress of democratic associations and the congress of constitutional-monarchist citizens' associations (in Deutz, near Cologne). — p. 392
Page me9.576

†311 On September 25, 1848 the Cologne authorities arrested several leaders of democratic and workers' associations and provoked premature action on the part of the workers, who began to erect barricades in the city. Marx and his associates did their utmost to prevent the Cologne workers from premature and isolated actions. On the next day, a state of siege was declared in Cologne on the pretext of "safeguarding the individual and property" (see Note 307). — p. 393
Page me9.576
†312 Sans-Souci — a residence of the Prussian kings in Potsdam, built at the time of Frederick II. — p. 394
Page me9.576
†313 At the peak of the victorious offensive of the Hungarian revolutionary troops, the National Assembly at its grand meeting in Debreczin on April 14, 1849 adopted, on Kossuth's initiative, a Declaration of Hungary's Independence. The Habsburg dynasty was dethroned and Kossuth elected head of state. In fact, a republican order was established in Hungary though, for foreign policy considerations, the name "Hungarian republic" was not used in official documents.
Page me9.576
The Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 291 for May 6, 1849 published the minutes of the session of the Hungarian National Assembly on April 14, 1849 and the text of the Declaration of Independence adopted by it. It also reproduced the respective article from the Neue Oder-Zeitung, supplying it with the following introductory note by the editors (probably written by Engels): "Cologne, May 5. The Neue Oder-Zeitung contains minutes of the session of the Hungarian National Assembly held in Debreczin on April 14, which decreed separation from Austria and the overthrow of the Habsburg dynasty and nominated Kossuth president of the state. Despite the poor German translation, we reproduce below the whole article word for word." — p. 397

Page Break me9.577
Page me9.577
†314 See Note 310. — p. 402
Page me9.577
†315 See Note 19. — p. 402
Page me9.577
†316 The author of the report cited by Engels is obviously referring to the revolutionary unrest among peasants and townspeople in Galicia, subordinate to Austria. It was caused by rumours spreading in the spring of 1849 about the impending intrusion from behind the Carpathians of the Hungarian army and Polish legions fighting in its ranks. In April 1849, a large group of peasant recruits escaped from Chrzanov (near Cracow) and tried to make their way to Hungary. Some were captured by the Austrian authorities; four were shot in Cracow. — p. 404
Page me9.577
†317 See Note 151. — p. 405
Page me9.577

†318 The reference is to the schemes for a Croatian-Slavonian-Dalmatian state under the auspices of the Habsburgs. These were put forward by the Right-wing leaders of the South-Slav national movement (see Note 244).
Page me9.577
Rascians — see Note 54. — p. 407
Page me9.577
†319 On May 3-9, 1849 an armed uprising took place in Dresden, the capital of Saxony. It broke out because the King of Saxony refused to recognise the imperial Constitution. With workers forming the most active contingent in the barricade fighting, the insurgents occupied the greater part of the city and formed the provisional government headed by a radical democrat Tzschirner. However, the moderate policy of other members of the provisional government, desertion by the bourgeois civic militia, sabotage on the part of the liberal municipal council, the treachery of the bourgeoisie in Leipzig where they suppressed the workers' solidarity movement, weakened the insurgents' resistance to counter-revolution. The uprising was put down by Saxon troops assisted by troops dispatched from Prussia. Active in the uprising were the Russian revolutionary Mikhail Bakunin, a workers' leader Stephan Born and the composer Richard Wagner. — p. 411
Page me9.577
†320 The Palatinate Defence Council was formed at the beginning of May at people's gatherings in Kaiserslautern. Relying on the people's support, it demanded that the Bavarian Government recognise the imperial Constitution. However, the moderate elements on the Council strove to confine the movement to legal resistance. Only the threat of intervention by Prussia made the Palatinate petty-bourgeois democrats take more resolute action. On May 17, a provisional government of the Palatinate was formed and separation from Bavaria proclaimed. — p. 412
Page me9.577
†321 See Note 40. — p. 414
Page me9.577
†322 On the Dresden uprising, see Note 319. — p. 416
Page me9.577
†323 See Note 320. — p. 416
Page me9.577
†324 At that moment Bassermann was commissioner of the provisional Central Authority in Frankfurt (see Note 41) empowered to negotiate with the Prussian ruling circles. Despite the National Assembly's decision, the Austrian Archduke

Page Break me9.578
Johann, head of the Central Authority, supported the activities of the Prussian and other governments against the imperial Constitution. — p. 417
Page me9.578
†325 On March 19, 1848, during the revolutionary events in Berlin, the armed people compelled King Frederick William IV to come onto the balcony of his palace and bare his head before the insurgents who had fallen on the barricades. — p. 417
Page me9.578

†326 This article was reprinted in the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung No. 218, June 1, 1849 (see this volume, pp. 511-12). Later it was published in a slightly abridged form in the newspaper Der Sozialdemokrat (Zurich) No. 2, January 8, 1886 and entitled “Aus dem Ruhmeskranz der Hohenzollern”. The name of the author was mentioned in the editorial introduction.
Page me9.578
The article was first published in English in the book: Karl Marx. On Revolution, ed. by S.K. Padover, New York, 1971 (“The Karl Marx Library” series, Vol. 1). — p. 418
Page me9.578
†327 During the war between Sweden and Poland (1655-60) the Great Elector of Brandenburg, Frederick William, sided now with the one, now with the other, of the warring states. Taking advantage of Poland's military difficulties, he broke off relations with Sweden in 1657 on condition that the Polish King renounced his sovereign rights to Eastern Prussia, which was joined to Brandenburg in 1628 but was dependent on the Polish crown. The Peace of Oliva concluded on May 3, 1660 by Sweden with Poland, Austria and Brandenburg confirmed Eastern Prussia's independence from Poland. — p. 418
Page me9.578
†328 This refers to the first partition of Poland between Prussia, Austria and Russia in 1772. It was initiated by the Prussian King Frederick II. — p. 419
Page me9.578
†329 Early in 1792, supported by England and Tsarist Russia, Austria and Prussia concluded a military alliance against revolutionary France. During the war, this first anti-French coalition was joined by the Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont), England, Holland, Spain, Naples and other states. However, the defeats inflicted by the French army on the allied troops and the growing Austro-Prussian contradictions compelled Prussia to withdraw from the coalition in 1795 and conclude in Basle a separate peace with the French Republic. — p. 419
Page me9.578
†330 In 1788 royal edicts limiting the rights of the press and freedom of worship were issued in Prussia on the initiative of Bischoffswerder, adviser to Frederick William II. — p. 419
Page me9.578
†331 See Note 137. — p. 419
Page me9.578
†332 The wars waged in 1813-14 and 1815 against Napoleonic France after the defeat of Napoleon's army in Russia in 1812 were contradictory in nature. Their character was affected by the counter-revolutionary and expansionist aims and policy of the ruling circles in the feudal monarchical states, and this is implied in this article. At the same time, especially in 1813, when the struggle was aimed at liberating German territory from French occupation, it assumed the character of a genuinely popular national liberation war against foreign oppression. Later in a series of articles entitled “Notes on the War” (1870), Engels stressed the progressive nature of the people's resistance to the French rule and in his work The Role of Force in History (1888) he wrote: “The people's war against Napoleon was the reaction of the national feeling of all the peoples, which Napoleon had trampled on." — p. 419

Page me9.578
†333 On May 22, 1815, Frederick William III of Prussia who, during the war with Napoleonic France, had to respond to the demand for a Constitution, issued a decree promising to convoke an all-Prussia people's representative body. However, according to the law of June 5, 1823, only provincial assemblies of the estates with limited consultative functions were formed.

Page Break me9.579
Page me9.579
The battle of Waterloo — see Note 166. — p. 420
Page me9.579
†334 The reference is to the Federative Act (Bundesakte) which proclaimed an ephemeral German Confederation and virtually sanctioned the political dismemberment of Germany and the maintenance of the monarchist system in the German states. This Act was signed on June 8 at the Vienna Congress and confirmed on June 9 in the Vienna concluding document. It contained vague promises of constitutional reforms and freedom of the press, but these remained a dead letter. — p. 420
Page me9.579
†335 These decisions were drawn up in August 1819 on the initiative of the Austrian Chancellor Metternich at the conference in Carlsbad by delegates of the states forming the German Confederation. They envisaged the introduction of preliminary censorship in all the German states, strict surveillance over universities, prohibition of students' societies and the establishment of a committee of inquiry to suppress so-called demagogues (participants in the opposition movement of that time).
Page me9.579
The congress of the Holy Alliance (see Note 40), which began in Troppau in October 1820 and ended in Laibach in May 1821, openly proclaimed the principle of interference in the internal affairs of other states. Accordingly, the congress in Laibach resolved to send Austrian troops to Italy, and the congress in Verona (1822) to effect French intervention in Spain, with the aim of crushing the revolutionary and national liberation movements in those countries. — p. 420
Page me9.579
†336 According to the law of January 17, 1820 on state debt, state loans could only be made with the consent of the assemblies of estates, but this law was not observed in practice.
Page me9.579
Seehandlung or Preussische Seehandlungsgesellschaft (Prussian Overseas Trading Company) — a trade and credit society founded in 1772 which enjoyed a number of important state privileges. It granted large credits to the Government and actually played the part of its banker and broker. In 1904 it was transformed into the official Prussian State Bank. — p. 420
Page me9.579
†337 The reference is to the suppression of the Polish national liberation insurrection of 1830-31 by the Tsarist Government. — p. 420

Page me9.579
†338 In a letter of January 15, 1838 addressed to the citizens of Elbing who expressed their dissatisfaction with the persecution of seven opposition professors in Hanover, the Prussian Minister of the Interior, Rochow, wrote: “Loyal subjects are expected to exhibit due obedience to their king and sovereign, but their limited understanding should keep them from interfering in the affairs of heads of state.” — p. 420
Page me9.579
†339 Here the reference is to the so-called Lehnin Prophecy (Vaticinium Lehninense) — a poem in Latin which is ascribed to a certain Hermann, a monk of the Lehnin monastery (near Potsdam) who lived circa 1300. It described the crimes of the Hohenzollern dynasty which ruled in Brandenburg and prophesied their ruin in the eleventh generation. — p. 421
Page me9.579
†340 In 1843 Frederick William IV, who wanted to revive the romantic aspect of feudalism, issued a decree on the rebirth of the Order of the Swan, a medieval religious order of knights (founded in 1443 and dissolved during the Reformation). The King's intention did not materialise, however.

Page Break me9.580
Page me9.580
The United Diet — see Note 88.
Page me9.580
The “scrap of paper” — an expression taken from the royal speech of Frederick William IV at the opening of the United Diet on April 11, 1847. The King declared that he would never agree to a Constitution which he derisively called “a written piece of paper”. — p. 421
Page me9.580
†341 Marx probably had in mind the idea repeatedly expressed by Hegel that, in the process of dialectical development, there is an inevitable transition from the stage of formation and efflorescence to that of disintegration and ruin. In particular, Hegel stated in Grundlinien der Philosophie des Rechts that the “history of a world-historic nation contains partly the development of its principle from its latent embryonic stage until it blossoms ... and the period of its decline and fall...” (Part 3, Section 3, § 347). Marx developed this idea in his Contribution to the Critique of Hegel's Philosophy of Law. Introduction (end of 1843-beginning of 1844): “History is thorough and goes through many phases when carrying an old form to the grave. The last phase of a world-historical form is its comedy” (see present edition, Vol. 3, p. 179). — p. 421
Page me9.580
†342 The report which Engels cites from the liberal Düsseldorfer Zeitung and supplements with a call to the Cologne troops to join the popular movement, describes the initial stage of the Elberfeld uprising.
Page me9.580
The Elberfeld uprising of workers and petty bourgeois broke out on May 8, 1849 and served as a signal for armed struggle in a number of cities in the Rhine Province (Düsseldorf, Iserlohn, Solingen and others) in defence of the imperial Constitution. The immediate occasion for the uprising was the attempts by the Prussian Government to use troops to suppress the revolutionary movement on the Rhine, to destroy democratic organisations and the press, and to disarm the army reserve troops it had itself called up which disobeyed its orders and supported the demand for the imperial Constitution. Engels played an active part in the uprising, having arrived in Elberfeld on May 11 together with a workers' detachment from Solingen (later legal proceedings were instituted against him for this — see present edition, Vol. 10). Engels' efforts to secure the disbandment of the bourgeois civic militia, the imposition of a war tax on the bourgeoisie, extensive armament of the workers in order to form the core of the Rhenish revolutionary army and to unite local uprisings, met with opposition from the Committee of Public Safety which was dominated by the representatives of the local bourgeoisie. Under pressure from bourgeois circles, Engels was deported from the city on the morning of May 15. As a result of secret negotiations between a deputation from the city bourgeoisie and the Government and of the capitulatory stand taken by the Committee of Public Safety, workers' detachments including those which came to their support from other places (the Berg Country, etc.) were forced out of the city on the night of May 16 (some managed to break through to the south, to the insurgent Palatinate) and the previous order was restored in Elberfeld. The defeat of the Elberfeld uprising led to the triumph of reaction throughout Rhenish Prussia.

Page me9.580

The Neue Rheinische Zeitung and Neue Kölnische Zeitung devoted several articles to the events in Elberfeld (see, for instance, this volume, pp. 447-49 and 508). — p. 423
Page me9.580
†343 See Note 68. — p. 425
Page me9.580
†344 In English this article was first published in the collection: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Articles from the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. 1848-49, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — p. 426

Page Break me9.581
Page me9.581
†345 The suppression of the uprising in Dresden — see Note 319.
Page me9.581

In response to the dispatch of artillery to suppress the Dresden uprising, workers and democrats in Breslau erected barricades in the city on May 6 and 7, 1849. They were, however, considerably outnumbered by the counter-revolutionary troops and were defeated. Isolated attempts to start a revolt in Saxony (the Prussian province) also failed. In the eastern districts of Prussia, the authorities managed in a very short time to overwhelm the campaign in defence of the imperial Constitution. — p. 426
Page me9.581
†346 Alongside the uprising in Dresden and other towns in the Rhine Province and Westphalia, the most powerful struggle for the imperial Constitution developed in the Bavarian Palatinate and Baden (South-West Germany). Despite the limited nature of this Constitution the popular masses saw it as the only revolutionary achievement still surviving. In the Palatinate and Baden, workers, urban petty bourgeoisie and peasants rose in its defence. Soon they were joined by military units, particularly the lower ranks.

In the middle of May provisional governments were set up there, the Grand Duke of Baden, Leopold, fled from the country, and the separation of the Palatinate from Bavaria was proclaimed. However, the leadership of the movement fell into the hands of moderate petty-bourgeois democrats who were hesitant, refusing to proclaim a republic and carry through a radical agrarian reform in the interests of the peasants. They chose passive defensive tactics which confined the movement to local limits and prevented the uprising from spreading outside the Palatinate and Baden. Nevertheless, the combined Palatinate-Baden insurgent army, in which there were many workers' units, put up a strong resistance to the Prussian-Bavarian-Württemberg mercenary troops who greatly exceeded the insurgents in numbers and strength. Engels took part in the campaigns and battles of this army. He was aide to August Willich, commander of one of the units which covered the retreat of its last detachments to Swiss territory on July 11 and 12. The insurgents' last stronghold — Rastatt — fell on July 23.

Page me9.581

The uprising in the Palatinate and Baden was the culmination of the German revolution of 1848-49. Its character and course were later described by Engels in the essay “The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution” (see present edition, Vol. 10). — p. 426

Page me9.581

†347 In April 1849, President Louis Napoleon and the French Government decided to send an expeditionary corps under General Udino to Italy with the aim of intervening against the Roman Republic and restoring the secular power of the Pope. On April 30, 1849 the French troops were driven from Rome. The main blow was dealt them by Garibaldi's volunteer legion. However, Udino violated the terms of the armistice signed by the French and, on June 3, started a new offensive against the Roman Republic which had just completed a military campaign in the south against Neapolitan troops and was compelled to deliver a rebuff to the Austrians in the north. On July 3, after a month of heroic defence, Rome was captured by the interventionists and the Roman Republic ceased to exist. — p. 426

Page me9.581

†348 Engels' article on the uprising in Elberfeld and Düsseldorf (see Note 342) was obviously written not later than May 10, before he left for insurgent Elberfeld via Solingen, where an armed struggle in defence of the imperial Constitution had also begun. It is possible that Engels sent the report to Cologne from Solingen, where he formed a detachment of armed workers on May 10. The next day he and this detachment arrived in Elberfeld where he stayed till the morning of May 15. The article was published in the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische

Page Break me9.582

Zeitung No. 295, May 11, and probably the editors themselves supplied it with the same date. — p. 428

Page me9.582

†349 Marx has in mind the close bond between the three monarchs — the Prussian King, the Russian Tsar and the Austrian Emperor. — p. 430

Page me9.582

†350 The majority of the Prussian National Assembly which continued its sittings in Berlin despite the King's order to transfer the Assembly to Brandenburg was dispersed by General Wrangel's troops on November 15, 1848.
Page me9.582
The Second Chamber was dissolved on April 27, 1849 (about this see Note 270) on the basis of the Brandenburg-Manteuffel Government's memorandum, sanctioned by the King. — p. 430
Page me9.582
†351 The Saxon King Friedrich Augustus II found refuge in the fortress of Königstein to which he fled from Dresden during the uprising in May 1849.
Page me9.582
Imperial Max in Munich — King of Bavaria, Maximilian II, nominated by certain deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly for German emperorship. — p. 430
Page me9.582
†352 The reference is to the Constitution imposed by the Prussian King on December 5, 1848 (see Note 52). — p. 432
Page me9.582
†353 See Note 63. — p. 432
Page me9.582
†354 See Note 270. — p. 434
Page me9.582
†355 See Note 136. — p. 434
Page me9.582
†356 See Note 306. — p. 436
Page me9.582
†357 Marx's prediction of the Frankfurt National Assembly's inglorious end, which was brought about by its own compromise with and connivance in the counter-revolution, came true. In compliance with the orders of the Austrian, Prussian and other governments which recalled their deputies from Frankfurt, the Assembly's liberal majority, scared by the uprisings in defence of the imperial Constitution and the possibility of a civil war, disavowed this Constitution — their own creation — and resigned. The moderate democrats who thus proved to be in the majority lacked the courage to join the insurgents and continued to cherish hopes of introducing a Constitution by peaceful means. Early in June 1849, when the threat of dissolution arose, the “rump” of the Assembly transferred its sittings to Stuttgart (Württemberg). The imperial regent, who took an openly counter-revolutionary stand, was replaced by a five-man imperial administration (Karl Vogt, Ludwig Simons and others) which, because of its refusal to take revolutionary measures and its wavering and equivocal policy, was a complete failure. On June 18, 1849, the “rump” was dispersed by Württemberg troops. — p. 438
Page me9.582
†358 Charlottenburg — a royal palace in the town of the same name west of Berlin (it became a suburb in the twentieth century); built in 1695 for Sophia Charlotte, wife of the Great Elector of Brandenburg, it later became one of the residences of the Prussian kings and also a place of their burial. — p. 438
Page me9.582

†359 This refers to the joint action taken against revolutionary Hungary by the three monarchs — the Austrian Emperor, the Russian Tsar and the Prussian King. This counter-revolutionary plot is also exposed in Engels' article “The Third Party in the Alliance” (see this volume, pp. 394-95). — p. 440
Page me9.582
†360 In April 1795 Prussia concluded the separate Basle peace treaty with France and withdrew from the first anti-French coalition, and in October of that same year it

Page Break me9.583
signed the Petersburg convention with Russia and Austria on the third partition of Poland (see Note 276). — p. 441
Page me9.583
†361 “Scrap of parchment” — paraphrased expression from the royal speech of Frederick William IV at the opening of the United Diet in 1847 (see Note 340). — p. 441
Page me9.583
†362 See Note 46. — p. 441
Page me9.583
†363 Ça ira! — a popular song during the French Revolution. — p. 446
Page me9.583
†364 See Note 342. — p. 447
Page me9.583
†365 On May 19, 1849 the Neue Rheinische Zeitung came out for the last time. The Government and the police had long awaited a suitable moment to suppress the newspaper. In April and early May 1849, the Minister of the Interior, Manteuffel, repeatedly demanded that the Cologne Public Prosecutor's office and legal authorities bring an action against its editors. By that time, the number of charges against them had grown to 23 (some were later used as a pretext for instituting legal proceedings against Marx and Engels by default, see this volume, p. 516). However, Marx's and Engels' acquittal by the jury in February 1849 and fear of the people's unrest compelled the Public Prosecutor's office to refrain from making the legal proceedings against the paper public. Only after the main uprisings in the Rhine Province had, on the whole, been suppressed, was a long-prepared measure applied against Marx — expulsion from Prussia. He was refused Prussian citizenship in due time, despite the Cologne magistrate's favourable reply to his application for this on his arrival in Cologne on April 11, 1848. After four months' delay, the Royal Government refused to confirm the magistrate's decision, and Minister Kühlwetter, to whom Marx sent a complaint, turned it down (see present edition, Vol. 7, p. 581). Marx continued to remain “a foreigner” who could at any moment be accused of abusing hospitality and be subject to expulsion. The Royal Government's note to this effect followed on May 11, 1849 (see below) and was handed to Marx on May 16. Other editors were also persecuted. Weerth and Dronke, who did not enjoy Prussian citizenship either, were likewise ordered to leave Cologne. Legal proceedings were instituted against Engels for his part in the Elberfeld uprising. The democratic press still surviving in Germany protested against the police measures towards the newspaper's editors (see this volume, pp. 509-13). Forced to cease publication of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Marx and Engels cherished hopes of resuming it shortly in some other place (see this volume, p. 473), but the situation in the country did not allow them to carry out these intentions. The entire issue No. 301 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung which carried this and other articles by Marx and Engels, together with the editors' address to the Cologne workers, was printed in red ink.

Page me9.583

This article was first published in English in the collection: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Articles from the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. 1848-49, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — p. 451
Page me9.583
†366 This refers to the verdicts of the Cologne jury court pronounced on February 7 and 8, 1849. On February 7, Karl Marx, editor-in-chief of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Frederick Engels, co-editor, and Hermann Korff, responsible publisher, were brought before the court on a charge of having insulted the Chief Public Prosecutor Zweiffel and having libelled the policemen who arrested workers' leaders, in the article “Arrests” published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 35, July 5, 1848 (see present edition, Vol. 7).

Page Break me9.584
Page me9.584

On February 8, 1849 the second trial — against the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats — was held. For details see Note 289.
Page me9.584

At both trials, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. For the speeches made by Marx and Engels at the trial, see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 304-22. — p. 451
Page me9.584
†367 In English this article was first published in the collection: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Articles from the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. 1848-49, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — p. 455
Page me9.584
†368 The delegates of the opposition headed by Kossuth submitted a whole programme of progressive reforms to the National Assembly (Diet) of the Hungarian Kingdom convened in November 1847 in Pressburg. However, the demands of the opposition came up against stubborn resistance on the part of the Right aristocratic wing of the Assembly, especially its Upper Chamber, and were implemented only under pressure of the revolutionary masses after the popular uprising in Pest and Buda on March 15, 1848. Even at this stage, the reforms carried out were of a narrow nature (see notes 193 and 263) because the Assembly was dominated by moderate liberal aristocrats inclined to compromise with the Austrian Court and conservative circles. Equality and autonomy were not granted to the oppressed nationalities and this allowed the Habsburg reaction to use their national movements in the struggle against the Hungarian revolution. — p. 455
Page me9.584
†369 See Note 232. — p. 456
Page me9.584
†370 The reference is to the appointment of Kossuth as head of the Defence Council, the actual government of revolutionary Hungary (see Note 70). — p. 456
Page me9.584

†371 Engels is evidently referring to the rescript issued by the Austrian Emperor Ferdinand on October 3, 1848 when he ordered that the Hungarian Assembly be dissolved and its resolutions not sanctioned by the Crown (including that on the formation of the Defence Council) be regarded as invalid. According to this rescript, the Croatian Ban Jellachich was appointed commander-in-chief of all troops and extraordinary government commissioner in Hungary, and martial law was introduced throughout the country. The rescript was published in the Wiener Zeitung No. 275, October 5, 1848. — p. 456
Page me9.584
†372 The battle of Schwechat (near Vienna), in which the Hungarian army was defeated by Austrian troops under Windischgrätz, took place on October 30, 1848, on the eve of the fall of revolutionary Vienna. — p. 457
Page me9.584
†373 See Note 55. — p. 457
Page me9.584
†374 See Note 9. — p. 459
Page me9.584
†375 The reference is to the Declaration of Hungary's Independence adopted by the National Assembly on April 14, 1849 (see Note 313). — p. 461
Page me9.584
†376 See Note 40. — p. 462
Page me9.584
†377 The reference is to the Polish national liberation insurrection of 1830-31. — p. 463
Page me9.584
†378 The reference is to the elections to the French Legislative Assembly held on May 13, 1849. The monarchist groups — legitimists, Orleanists and Bonapartists who formed a joint “party of order” — got the majority. Though the elections were held in an atmosphere of administrative pressure and accompanied by ballot-rigging on the part of the conservative authorities, a major success was scored by a bloc of democrats and petty-bourgeois socialists called the Mountain party. About two million electors voted for their candidates, who received 180 seats in the Assembly. — p. 463

Page Break me9.585
Page me9.585
†379 The expectation of a new upsurge of the European revolution, which is expressed in Engels' article closing his series about the revolutionary war in Hungary, as well as in other items by Marx and Engels in the last issues of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, was fostered by the brilliant victories scored by the Hungarian army, the uprisings in South-West Germany and the maturing conflict between the democratic and counter-revolutionary forces in the French Republic. Hopes of a more extensive and wider revolution did not come true, however. The uprisings in Baden and the Palatinate did not extend beyond local limits and the activities of petty-bourgeois democrats in France in June 1849 failed (see this volume, pp. 477-79). In the Hungarian campaign, a change shortly took place unfavourable to the revolutionary movement. Internal differences intensified between radical circles and the supporters of a compromise with the Habsburgs among the liberal landowners who were afraid that the revolution would go further. The views of the latter were also shared by Görgey, Hungarian commander-in-chief (in May also appointed War Minister), who often acted contrary to the instructions of Kossuth and other radicals. Görgey's strategic error was that he actually refused to undertake operations to capture Vienna and use the main forces for the siege of the fortress of Buda (Ofen), and this gave the Austrian command time to bring up reserves. In mid-June 1849 the Tsarist army under Paskevich entered Hungary to offer help to the Austrian counter-revolution. The Tsarist intervention was carried out according to the agreement concluded by Emperor Nicholas I and Francis Joseph in Warsaw on May 21, and was in fact approved by the ruling circles of France and England who were eager to destroy the revolution in Central Europe. The combined forces of the Habsburgs and the Tsar far outnumbered those of the Hungarians and inflicted several defeats on the latter. On August 13, Görgey, who was in command of the Hungarian main army, signed a capitulation at Világos. The Hungarian revolution was suppressed amid great terror of which many Hungarian military and political figures fell victims. Kossuth, Bem, Dembinski and the head of the last Hungarian Government Szemere who had to flee the country, were sentenced to death by default. — p. 463

Page me9.585
†380 See Note 19. — p. 464
Page me9.585
†381 After the defeat of the Prussian troops by Napoleon's army at Jena and Auerstedt (October 14, 1806), a number of Prussian fortresses capitulated to the French without a fight. The fortress of Küstrin, for instance, surrendered to a small French detachment on October 31 and Magdeburg, with its many thousand-strong garrison and artillery, was surrendered by General Kleist on November 8, after the first salvo fired by the French from light field mortars.
Page me9.585
In the Appeal To My People (An Mein Volk) of March 17, 1813 Frederick William III promised to introduce a Constitution in Prussia, but this remained a dead letter. — p. 464
Page me9.585
†382 See Note 340. — p. 464
Page me9.585
†383 See Note 274. — p. 464
Page me9.585
†384 “I and My house wish to serve the lord” — words from the royal speech of Frederick William IV at the opening of the first United Diet on April 11, 1847. The words “unweakened crown” (see Note 46) are also from that speech. — p. 465

Page Break me9.586
Page me9.586
†385 This address was first published in English in the collection: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Articles from the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”. 1848-49, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — p. 467
Page me9.586

†386 This statement was written by Marx in Bingen (Hesse) during his last days in Germany. Immediately after the suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Marx and Engels went to Frankfurt am Main and then to insurgent Baden and the Palatinate. However, they failed in their attempts to convince the Left deputies of the Frankfurt Assembly and members of the provisional governments of Baden and the Palatinate of the need to give the movement an all-German character, to mount a resolute offensive, to bring the Assembly openly to join the uprising, to compel it to call upon the people everywhere to take up arms, set up an energetic executive power and carry out radical agrarian and other reforms. Their bold revolutionary plan was turned down by the representatives of petty-bourgeois democrats. From Bingen, Marx decided to go to France where new revolutionary events were expected, intending to establish closer ties between the German democrats and the revolutionary circles in Paris. For his part, Engels thought it expedient to return to the Palatinate and join personally the forthcoming struggle against the counter-revolutionary troops that were then concentrating.
Page me9.586

This statement in the press was in reply to the claims of the democratic Westdeutsche Zeitung (which first came out in Cologne on May 25, 1849) to be the successor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Its editorial board announced that the subscribers to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung would receive the Westdeutsche Zeitung instead. The covering letter addressed to the editorial board of the liberal Frankfurter Journal has survived in manuscript form. There are no data about the statement being published in this newspaper, but it was printed in the democratic newspapers of Frankfurt and Cologne. — p. 473
Page me9.586
†387 This article was written by Engels in early June 1849, immediately after his return to Kaiserslautern — the capital of the Palatinate which he and Marx visited in the last ten days of May after the Neue Rheinische Zeitung ceased to appear. In the Palatinate, Engels refused to accept the civil and military posts offered him by the provisional government, because he did not want to take responsibility for the policy of the petty-bourgeois democratic members of the government, a policy which he, a proletarian revolutionary, did not support. He agreed, however, to write a few articles for the government newspaper, Der Bote für Stadt und Land, in defence of the democratic movement against attacks from conservative and moderately liberal papers.
Page me9.586

Engels' second article was not published because of objections that it was too “inflammatory” (see Engels' article “The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution”, present edition, Vol. 10). This induced Engels to cease contributing to the newspaper. On June 13, Engels left Kaiserslautern for Offenbach in order to join the ranks of the Baden-Palatinate army — Willich's volunteer corps. As Willich's aide, he took part in drafting the plan for military operations and supervised the implementation of the most important assignments. He fought in four big battles, in particular at Rastatt. On July 12, 1849, Engels was one of the last fighters to cross the Swiss border. — p. 474
Page me9.586
†388 See Note 40. — p. 474
Page me9.586

†389 An allusion to Marx who, in view of the decisive revolutionary events expected in France, went to Paris about June 2, 1849. He was issued with the mandate of the Central Committee of German Democrats signed by d'Ester, the most active member of the provisional government in the Palatinate, and this empowered him to represent the German revolutionary party before the French democrats and socialists in Paris. — p. 475

Page Break me9.587

Page me9.587

†390 See Note 244. — p. 475

Page me9.587

†391 The reference is to the Prussian General Peucker who, from July 15, 1848 to May 10, 1849, held the post of Minister of War in the so-called Central Authority (see Note 41) and was then in command of the imperial troops sent to the Palatinate and Baden to suppress the movement for the imperial Constitution there. — p. 475

Page me9.587

†392 See Note 335. — p. 475

Page me9.587

†393 See Note 136. — p. 476

Page me9.587

†394 On June 13, 1849, in Paris the petty-bourgeois Mountain party (see Note 378) came out against the Government, on account of the bombardment of Rome by French troops sent to Italy to suppress the Roman Republic. That was done in violation of Article 5 of the French Constitution, which forbade the use of armed forces against the freedom of other nations. The representatives of the Mountain in the Legislative Assembly declared that they would use all possible means to defend the Constitution. At the decisive moment, however, the leaders of the Mountain were frightened of a new armed uprising by the Paris proletariat and called upon Parisians to confine themselves to a peaceful protest demonstration against intervention in Italy. The demonstration took place on June 13 and was dispersed by troops and bourgeois detachments of the National Guard prepared in advance. A state of siege was declared in Paris, massive repressions began against democratic and proletarian organisations, some representatives of the Mountain emigrated, others were arrested and put on trial. The Legislative Assembly was overwhelmed by the conservative “party of order”, a union of monarchist factions, which started a campaign against the democratic freedoms and rights that still survived. The events of June 13 testified to the bankruptcy of the tactics used by petty-bourgeois democrats and inflicted a severe blow to the revolutionary movement in Europe. — p. 477

Page me9.587

†395 The reference is to the revolutionary group within the Commission of the Twenty-Five, the agency of the Paris Democratic-Socialist Electoral Committee. The group included members of workers' clubs and secret societies. The Democratic-Socialist Committee headed the campaign carried on in Paris by the Mountain for the elections to the French Legislative Assembly held on May 13, 1849 (see Note 378). — p. 477

Page me9.587

†396 Conservatoire des Arts — an educational establishment in Paris. — p. 478

Page me9.587
†397 The reference is to the Democratic Association of the Friends of the Constitution, an organisation of moderate bourgeois republicans set up by the members of the National party (see Note 71) during the campaign for the elections to the French Legislative Assembly held on May 13, 1849. — p. 478
Page me9.587
†398 Ledru-Rollin stated in the Legislative Assembly on June 11, 1849, that the Mountain intended to defend the Constitution by force of arms if necessary. — p. 478
Page me9.587
†399 During the proletarian uprising in Paris on May 15, 1848 (see Note 77), Ledru-Rollin persuaded demonstrators who had burst into the premises of the Constituent Assembly to cease from decisive action, clear the premises and allow the Assembly to discuss their demands calmly.

Page Break me9.588
Page me9.588
During the uprising of the French proletariat on June 23-26, 1848, Ledru-Rollin supported the measures taken by the Government and the Constituent Assembly to suppress the insurgents and was one of the first to send a telegraph request for military reinforcements to be dispatched from the provinces to Paris. — p. 478
Page me9.588
†400 The reference is to the brutal suppression of the workers' uprising in Lyons which broke out on June 15, 1849 under the impact of the June 13 events in Paris. — p. 479
Page me9.588
†401 In view of the great financial and organisational difficulties which arose after the introduction of the state of siege in Cologne on September 26, 1848 and the suspension of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see Note 307), Marx was compelled to take financial responsibility for the newspaper's publication upon himself; he invested in it all the cash he had and thus, in fact, became its owner. — p. 480
Page me9.588
†402 Marx began to study political economy at the end of 1843 and, in the spring of 1844, set himself the task of giving critical examination of bourgeois political economy from the standpoint of materialism and communism. The draft written in this connection — Economic and Philosophic Manuscripts of 1844 (see present edition, Vol. 3) — has reached us in an incomplete form. In February 1845, just before his first expulsion from France, Marx concluded a contract with the Leske publishers in Darmstadt for the publication of a two-volume Kritik der Politik und Nationalökonomie, which he continued to work on in Brussels (see present edition, Vol. 4, p. 675). In September 1846, however, Leske informed Marx that, in view of rigorous censorship and police persecution, he would not be able to publish the work. The contract was soon cancelled. Nevertheless Marx did not cease his economic studies and added new material to his notebooks containing extracts on political economy. He set out the results of his economic research in a book directed against Proudhon, The Poverty of Philosophy, in his Speech on the Question of Free Trade, in his Wage Labour and Capital and other works (see present edition, Vol. 6 and this volume, pp. 197-228). Marx did not give up his intention of writing a big treatise on political economy, but during the intensive revolutionary activities of 1848-49, he had to postpone it. Marx managed to resume his economic research on a regular basis only after he moved to London in August 1849. — p. 480

Page me9.588
†403 On July 19, 1849 in an atmosphere of repression against democrats and socialists following the events of June 13 in Paris, the French authorities informed Marx that an order had been issued for his expulsion from Paris to Morbihan, a swampy and unhealthy place in Brittany. Marx protested and the expulsion was delayed, but on August 23 he again received a police order to leave Paris within 24 hours. At the end of August, Marx set off for London where he spent the rest of his life. — p. 481
Page me9.588
†404 This is a rough version of the Repudiation drawn up by Engels on behalf of a group of men who had served in the volunteer corps under Willich (Engels was his aide) and had taken part in the military operations of the Baden-Palatinate army. Willich's corps consisted of eight companies numbering 700-800 people, partly students but mostly workers — German emigrants in Besançon (France), members of workers' associations and gymnastics societies, etc. Two companies were formed from the workers of Rhenish Prussia, participants in the May uprising in Elberfeld and other towns. Engels described them as the most steady and reliable in the insurgent army. At the closing stage of the military campaign, when the insurgents were defeated at the battle at Rastatt. Willich's corps covered the retreat of other insurgent units and on July 12, 1849 was the last to leave German territory. During their stay in Switzerland, the men and officers of the corps were criticised and abused by petty-bourgeois emigrants, leaders of the uprising in the Palatinate and Baden. This compelled Engels, who happened to be in the town of Vevey, in the Swiss Canton of Waad (Vaud), to write this Repudiation.

Page Break me9.589
Page me9.589
On Marx's advice (see his letter to Engels dated August 1, 1849), Engels soon began to write “The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution” directed against the petty-bourgeois democrats. He finished it in February 1850 in London, where he had moved from Switzerland (it took him October and November 1849 to travel to England). The facts given in the rough copy of the Repudiation and pertaining to the moment when the Baden-Palatinate army was retreating towards the Swiss border are found in the concluding part of that work (see present edition, Vol. 10). Engels' manuscript was discovered in the Berne Federal Archives by Rolf Dlubek, an historian from the German Democratic Republic, who published it in 1967. There are many deletions. Judging from the first lines, the document was intended to be signed by several participants in the campaign. At the end of the rough copy, there is the pencilled signature of Captain Koehler. — p. 482
Page me9.589
†405 The reference is to one of the units in the insurgent army, the Baden Landsturm under Becker. During the revolution of 1848-49, Becker played an important role in the republican uprisings in South Germany. At that time he took a revolutionary-democratic stand, but his views on programme and tactics were confined to petty-bourgeois socialism. — p. 482

Page me9.589
†406 The commanders of the Baden-Palatinate army that was retreating before the enemy's superior forces held a council of war in Jestetten on July 10, 1849, on the eve of the crossing on to Swiss territory. At the council, most of the commanders spoke for ending the struggle. Among them was the commander-in-chief Franz Siegel, who was reinstated in this post when on July 1, 1849, the Polish general, Mieroslawski, who had commanded the insurgent army for some time, resigned. — p. 483
Page me9.589
†407 The reference is to the acquittals of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (the accused were Marx, Engels and Korff) and of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (the accused were Marx, Schapper and the lawyer Schneider II) at the trials held on February 7 and 8, 1849 (see notes 289 and 366). — p. 487
Page me9.589
†408 What is meant here is evidently the order issued by the Prussian Minister of the Interior Kühlwetter to the effect that the decision of the Cologne royal government authorities not to grant Prussian citizenship to Marx remained in force (see Note 365, and also the article "The Conflict between Marx and Prussian Citizenship" and the letter from the Minister of the Interior Kühlwetter to Marx dated September 12, 1848, present edition, Vol. 7). — p. 488
Page me9.589
†409 In February and March 1849, a number of democratic banquets were organised in the Rhine Province to mark the anniversaries of the revolutions in France and Germany. Marx and Engels regarded these banquets as a form of revolutionary education for the masses, and gave them their general support. They themselves, however, attended only those that were held under genuinely revolutionary slogans and did not approve the attempts of petty-bourgeois democrats to exaggerate the significance of those revolutionary events that were half-hearted and incomplete in character and thereby sowed constitutional illusions among the masses. Among these events, they believed, was the March revolution in Prussia (see this volume, p. 108). Therefore, having published in the Neue Rheinische

Page Break me9.590
Zeitung (No. 245, May 14, 1849) an announcement of the banquet in Solingen in compliance with its organisers' request, they did not accept an invitation to attend in person. Their refusal to accept this and other invitations was tactfully explained in the editorial note published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 249, second edition, March 18, 1849 which read: "The editorial board of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung has received from many neighbouring towns, both on the left and the right bank of the Rhine, invitations to attend banquets to be held on March 18. We are very grateful to our democratic friends for these kind invitations, but unfortunately having plenty of work to do we could not accept a single one of them." Nevertheless, Marx, Engels and other newspaper editors took an active part in the banquet organised in Cologne at the Gürzenich hall, on March 19, not to celebrate the March revolution but in honour of those who fought on the barricades in Berlin on March 18 and 19, 1848 (see next document, pp. 490-91). — p. 489

Page me9.590
†410 On the trial of Barbés, Blanqui, Raspail and other revolutionary leaders held in Bourges between March 7 and April 3, 1849, see Note 78. — p. 490
Page me9.590
†411 The reference is to the banquet organised by liberals and moderate democrats in Cologne to mark the anniversary of the revolution of March 18, 1848.
Page me9.590
Wailers — see Note 136. — p. 491
Page me9.590
†412 This refers to the attempt by the Minister of the Interior, Manteuffel, to implicate Marx, Engels and their associates in the case against cobbler Hätzel, a member of the Communist League, at whose house in Berlin the Rules of the League, weapons and hand grenades had been found. On March 30, 1848, Manteuffel sent a secret police agent to Cologne to carry out house searches, seize papers and, using the evidence thus obtained, arrest the Cologne leaders of the Communist League. However, this police action misfired owing to lack of evidence. — p. 493
Page me9.590
†413 These decisions by the general meeting of the Cologne Workers' Association were connected with the policy of strengthening the class independence of the workers' organisations and with practical steps to form a mass political party in Germany. Marx, Engels and their associates in the Communist League and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung adopted this policy in view of the changes that had taken place in the country's political situation by the spring of 1849 (see Note 225). Marx and Engels attached great importance to the Cologne Workers' Association in their plans for founding the party. By that time, the Association had become the bulwark of their ideological influence on the workers' movement and one of the initiators of the union of workers' associations in the Rhine Province and throughout Germany.
Page me9.590
The Cologne Workers' Association — a workers' organisation founded on April 13, 1848 by Andreas Gottschalk. By the beginning of May it had up to 5,000 members, most of whom were workers and artisans. The Association was headed by a President and a committee, which included representatives of various trades, and had several branches.
Page me9.590
Most of the leading figures in the Workers' Association (Gottschalk, Anneke, Schapper, Moll, Lessner, Jansen, Röser, Nothjung, Bedorf) were members of the Communist League. After Gottschalk's arrest on July 6, Moll was elected President of the Association, and on October 16, on request of the Association's members, the presidency was temporarily assumed by Marx. From February to May 1849 the post was held by Schapper.
Page me9.590
In the initial period of its existence, the Workers' Association was influenced by Gottschalk who ignored the tasks of the proletariat in the democratic revolution, pursued a policy of boycotting elections to representative institutions and came out against a union with democracy. Gottschalk combined ultra-Left phrases with quite moderate methods of struggle (e.g. petitions) and support for the demands advanced by workers affected by craft prejudices. From the very outset, Gottschalk's sectarian position was opposed by the supporters of Marx and Engels. Under their impact, a change took place at the end of June 1848 in the activities of the Workers' Association, which became a centre of revolutionary agitation among the workers, and from the autumn of 1848 among the peasants as well. Propaganda of scientific communism and study of Marx's works were carried on within the Association. It maintained contacts with other workers' and democratic organisations.

Page Break me9.591

Page me9.591

With the aim of strengthening the Association, Marx, Schapper and its other leaders reorganised it in January and February 1849. On February 25, new Rules were adopted declaring a higher class consciousness on the part of the workers to be the main task of the Association.

Page me9.591

The mounting counter-revolution and intensified police persecution frustrated the Association's activities aimed at unity and organisation of the working masses. After the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was suppressed and Marx, Schapper and other leaders left Cologne, the Association gradually turned into an ordinary workers' educational society. — p. 494

Page me9.591

†414 The reference is to the Central Committee of German Workers that was elected at the Workers' Congress held in Berlin from August 23 to September 3, 1848. At this congress the Workers' Fraternity, a union of many workers' associations, was founded. The programme of the congress was drawn up under the influence of Stephan Born and set the workers the task of implementing narrow craft-union demands, thereby diverting them from the revolutionary struggle. The Central Committee, which included Stephan Born, Schwenniger and Kick, had its headquarters in Leipzig.

Page me9.591

At the end of 1848, under the impact of the revolutionary events and experience drawn from them, the leaders of the Workers' Fraternity began to display certain revolutionary tendencies. They recognised the need to arm the workers and for them to take an active part in the political struggle. There was a great desire to set up an all-German workers' organisation. In the spring of 1849, the Workers' Fraternity and a number of regional congresses of workers' associations proposed that a national workers' congress be convened in Leipzig to found a general workers' union. These plans, however, were frustrated by the developing counter-revolution. — p. 494

Page me9.591

†415 See Note 412. — p. 497

Page me9.591

†416 This resolution criticises the sectarian stand taken by Gottschalk. From the very start of the revolution, it was evident that he did not agree with the tactics pursued by Marx and Engels (see Note 413) and, for that reason, he withdrew from the Communist League at the beginning of May 1848.

Page me9.591

In July 1848, Gottschalk, together with Anneke and Esser, was arrested and put on trial on a charge of "inciting to an armed uprising against royal power". The trial was held on December 21-23. Under public pressure, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. After his release, Gottschalk first went to Bonn and later to Paris and Brussels, but through his associates attempted to cause a split in the ranks of the Cologne Workers' Association and impose sectarian organisational principles and tactics upon it. — p. 498
Page me9.591
†417 The reference is to the participation of Gottschalk, prior to his arrest, in the First Democratic Congress. It was held in Frankfurt am Main from June 14 to 17, 1848 and attended by delegates of 89 democratic and workers' associations from different towns in Germany. The congress decided to unite all democratic associations and to set up district committees under the Central Committee of German Democrats. However, due to the weakness and vacillations of the petty-bourgeois leaders, even after the congress the democratic movement in Germany still lacked unity and organisation, and remained ideologically heterogeneous. — p. 498

Page Break me9.592

Page me9.592
†418 When the Zeitung des Arbeiter-Vereines zu Köln ceased to appear because of police reprisals against the owner of its printing-press, the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit, which began publication on October 26, 1848, became the organ of the Cologne Workers' Association. At the end of December, as a result of Gottschalk's interference in the paper's affairs, its publication was interrupted. From January 14, 1849, the newspaper Freiheit, Arbeit began to appear. Its responsible editor was Prinz, who supported Gottschalk and pursued the latter's policy of splitting the Cologne Workers' Association. Prinz refused to submit to the editorial commission which had been appointed at the committee meeting of the Cologne Workers' Association on January 15 and included Schapper, Röser and Reiff; the committee meeting of January 29 resolved, therefore, that the Freiheit, Arbeit could not be regarded as the Association's newspaper and that the Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit should resume publication with Esser as its editor. The Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit reappeared on February 8 and continued publication up to the middle of 1849. The Freiheit, Arbeit continued to appear until June 17, 1849, carrying a variety of insinuations against Marx and Engels. — p. 499
Page me9.592
†419 In a declaration written in Brussels on January 9, 1849 and published in the Freiheit, Arbeit on January 18, Gottschalk explained his "voluntary banishment" by the fact that, despite his acquittal, many of his fellow-citizens remained convinced of his guilt. He declared that he would come back only if he was called by "the hitherto supreme arbiter in the country" (an allusion to the King, Frederick William IV), or by "his fellow-citizens", by "the voice of the people". — p. 499
Page me9.592
†420 The reference is to the Workers' Fraternity (see Note 414). — p. 504
Page me9.592

†421 This receipt was made at the time of Marx's trip to North-West Germany and Westphalia in mid-April 1849 with the aim of drawing local workers' associations into the preparations for organising a proletarian party, of establishing closer contacts with the members of the Communist League and democrats and of collecting funds to continue the publication of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — p. 505
Page me9.592
†422 Simultaneously with the Congress of Workers' Associations of the Rhine Province and Westphalia (about the preparations for which see this volume, p. 392) on May 6, 1849 in Cologne a congress of the democratic organisations of these provinces, and then a joint sitting were held. Both congresses took place at a time when the authorities were preparing reprisals against those who engaged in revolutionary disturbances. It was expected that a state of siege would be declared in Cologne. The sittings of the congresses were therefore short and reports on their resolutions were not published in the newspapers. These resolutions evidently concerned urgent measures to combat the counter-revolution. The joint sitting of the congresses showed that, despite the organisational break with the petty-bourgeois democrats, the workers' organisations led by Marx and Engels did not reject combined actions with them in the struggle against the counter-revolution.

Page Break me9.593
Page me9.593
Marx and Engels planned that the congress of the workers' associations of Rhenish Prussia, which, as the newspaper report indicates, was attended by a considerable number of delegates, would be a new step towards the convocation of an all-German workers' congress and a union of workers' associations on a country-wide scale. The mounting reaction, however, upset this plan to create a mass political party of the German proletariat. — p. 506
Page me9.593
†423 As the report of May 18 from Cologne published in the Trier'sche Zeitung indicates, the news of reprisals against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was circulating among journalists before May 19, when the last issue of the newspaper appeared. A Cologne correspondent of the constitutional monarchist Deutsche Zeitung put out in Frankfurt am Main wrote as follows about this in a report also dated May 18: “The editor-in-chief of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Herr Karl Marx, has received orders from our Regierungspräsident to leave Cologne within 24 hours, failing which the authorities will be obliged to resort to force. The reason given in the letter from the Regierungspräsident is that by the unbridled language predominating in recent numbers of his newspaper, by deriding and insulting the Royal Government and the authorities, as well as by openly working for the Social Republic, Herr Marx has shamelessly abused the hospitality extended to him. Since orders for the arrest of his other colleagues as well are to be implemented and the latter therefore intend to escape, the last number of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung will appear tomorrow morning, and it will be printed in red. Furthermore, this number will contain a remarkable valedictory poem by Freiligrath. The editors and the workers are said to be intending to proceed to the Palatinate without delay” (Deutsche Zeitung No. 138, May 20, 1849). — p. 509
Page me9.593

†424 The reference is to a number of Marx's items and his speech for the defence at the trial against the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats on February 8, 1849. These were published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and proved that by effecting the coup d'état and dispersing the Prussian National Assembly on December 5, 1848, the Government of Frederick William IV had grossly violated the edicts sanctioned by the King after the March revolution introducing a constitutional system in the country. In his speech for the defence Marx pointed to the "Decision on Some Principles of the Future Prussian Constitution" adopted on April 6, 1848 and the electoral law for the convocation of the National Assembly adopted on April 8, 1848 (see Note 86). — p. 512
Page me9.593
†425 This is an excerpt from the section "Continental Europe" in "The Political and Historical Survey" published in several issues of the Democratic Reviev: The author of the "Survey" was obviously George Julian Harney, editor of the journal. — p. 512
Page me9.593
†426 On the stay of Marx and Engels in South-West Germany (Baden and the Palatinate) after being compelled to leave Cologne, see Note 386. — p. 515
Page me9.593
†427 In September 1848 Marx, Korff and others were accused by the imperial Ministry of having libelled the deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly in: 1) Georg Weerth's series of feuilletons Leben und Taten des berühmten Ritters Schnapphahnski directed against Lichnowski, a Right-wing representative, and published anonymously in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in August, September and December 1848 and January 1849; 2) a report from Breslau in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 95 for September 6, 1848 about Prince Lichnowski's machinations in the electoral campaign; 3) a report from Frankfurt am Main in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 102 for September 14, 1848 exposing false information in the report by Stedtmann, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly, concerning the vote on the armistice with Denmark; 4) a resolution of the public meeting in Cologne published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 110, September 23, 1848, in which the deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly who had voted for the armistice with Denmark were accused of having betrayed the nation (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 588-89). For more details on the trial, see this volume, pp. 517-20. — p. 516

Page Break me9.594
Page me9.594
†428 See Note 92. — p. 518
Page me9.594
†429 The reference is to the Democratic Society in Cologne which was set up in April 1848 and included small businessmen, as well as workers and artisans. Marx, Engels and other editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung who formed the leadership of the Society strove to direct its activities towards a resolute struggle against the counter-revolutionary policy of the Prussian ruling circles and exposure of the liberal bourgeoisie's "agreement" policy. In April 1849 Marx and his supporters, who had in fact begun to organise an independent mass proletarian party, found it necessary to separate from the petty-bourgeois democrats and so withdrew from the Democratic Society. At the same time, they continued to support the revolutionary actions of all the democratic forces in Germany. — p. 519

Page me9.594
†430 This was the third time that the authorities instituted legal proceedings against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. At the first trial of Marx, Engels and Korff, held on February 7, 1849, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty (see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 304-22). At the second trial on May 29, 1849 the Public Prosecutor's office and the police authorities failed to sentence Marx and other newspaper editors in their absence and only Korff, the former responsible manager, was sentenced to a one-month term of imprisonment and to pay one-seventh of the costs (see this volume, pp. 519-20), so the third time it was decided to put only Korff on trial. It was thought that, by condemning him, other leading editors of the newspaper would likewise be morally discredited, above all Marx as editor-in-chief. But the reactionaries miscalculated: Korff was acquitted. — p. 521
Page me9.594
†431 See Note 307. — p. 521
Page me9.594
†432 The news of Marx's arrival in Paris was evidently somewhat delayed in reaching Cologne. Judging from Marx's letter to Engels of July 7, 1849 sent from Paris to Kaiserslautern (the Palatinate), he arrived in the French capital in the first days of June. — p. 525
Page me9.594
†433 On Marx's expulsion from Paris, see Note 403. — p. 526

Page Break me9.595

NAME INDEX
Page me9.595
Page me9.595
A

Page me9.595
Adélaide, Princess of Orléans (1777-1847) — sister to Louis Philippe, King of the French. — 82

Page me9.595
Alexander I (1777-1825) — Emperor of Russia (1801-25); the 2nd Infantry Regiment of the Austrian army was named after him. — 245, 365
Page me9.595
Alexander of Macedon (Alexander the Great) (356-323 B.C.) — general and statesman of antiquity. — 206
Page me9.595
Ali Mehemet Pasa (1815-1871) — Turkish statesman, Minister of Foreign Affairs from 1846 to 1852. — 41
Page me9.595

Almasy, Paul (Almási, Pál) (1818-1882) — Hungarian politician, deputy to the National Assembly in Pest (1848), President of the Hungarian National Assembly in Debreczin (1849); after the revolution was defeated, he emigrated to Paris, but later returned to his homeland. — 145
Page me9.595
Ammon, von — Prussian official, Public Prosecutor in Düsseldorf (1848-49), deputy to the First Chamber (1849). — 339, 340, 373
Page me9.595
Anneke, Friedrich (1818-1872) — Prussian artillery officer discharged from the army in 1846 on political grounds; member of the Communist League; one of the founders of the Cologne Workers' Association in 1848; editor of the Neue Kölnische Zeitung; member of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats; lieutenant-colonel of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army. — 282, 495, 501, 503, 508
Page me9.595
Appel, Christian, Baron von (1785-1854) — Austrian general, participated in the suppression of the 1848-49 revolution in Italy and Hungary. — 175, 332
Page me9.595
Arago, François Victor Emmanuel (1812-1896) — French politician and diplomat, in 1848 member of the Chamber of Deputies, commissary general of the Republic in Lyons, deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies; ambassador to Berlin (1848-52). — 414
Page me9.595
Arndt, Ernst Moritz (1769-1860) — German writer, historian and philologist; took part in the struggle for liberation against Napoleon's rule; supported constitutional monarchy; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre) in 1848 and 1849. — 69, 88, 108, 143, 320
Page me9.595
Arnim-Boytzenburg, Adolf Heinrich, Count von (1803-1868) — Prussian statesman, junker, Minister of the Interior (1842-45); Prime Minister (March 19-29, 1848); a Right-wing leader in the Second Chamber (1849). — 69, 88, 108, 143, 320
Page me9.595
d'Aspre, Konstantin, Baron (1789-1850) — Austrian Master of Ordnance, second

Page Break me9.596
chief of the 1st Infantry Regiment, took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Italy. — 161, 175

Page me9.595
Auersperg, Maximilian, Count (1771-1850) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, commander of the Austrian troops in the Banat (1836), fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849, chief of the 5th Cuirassier Regiment. — 269, 274
Page me9.596
Auerswald, Rudolf von (1795-1866) — Prussian statesman, liberal aristocrat; Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (June-September 1848), Oberpräsident of Western Prussia (from September 1848 to 1850). — 69
Page me9.596

Aulich, Lajos (1792-1849) — Hungarian revolutionary general (from March 1849), executed after the revolution was suppressed. — 11, 100, 408
Page me9.596
Aumale, Henri Eugéne Philippe Louis d'Orléans, duc de (1822-1897) — son of Louis Philippe, King of the French, took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1840s, one of the French troops' commanders. — 83
Page me9.596
B
Page me9.596
Barbés, Armand (1809-1870) — French revolutionary, a leader of secret societies during the July monarchy; deputy to the Constituent Assembly in 1848; sentenced to life imprisonment for his participation in the popular insurrection of May 15, 1848; after amnesty in 1854 emigrated to Belgium. — 81
Page me9.596
Barco, Joseph, Baron von (1798-1861) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49) and in the siege of Komorn (July 1849). — 365
Page me9.596
Barrot, Camille Hyacinthe Odilon (1791-1873) — French politician, before February 1848 leader of the liberal dynastic opposition; from December 1848 to October 1849 headed the Ministry that relied on a monarchist coalition. — 85, 170, 191, 192, 323, 414
Page me9.596
Bassermann, Friedrich Daniel (1811-1855) — German politician, represented the Baden Government in the Federal Diet during the 1848-49 revolution; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre). — 48, 377, 417
Page me9.596
Batthyány — participant in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary, commandant of Peterwardein. — 278, 286, 293
Page me9.596
Batthyány, Kazimir (Kázmér), Count von (1807-1854) — Hungarian statesman, liberal aristocrat, Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Hungarian revolutionary Government of Szemere (1849); after the suppression of the revolution emigrated to Turkey and then to France. — 97
Page me9.596
Batthyány, Lajos, Count von (1806-1849) — Hungarian politician, Prime Minister of Hungary (from March 17 to September 15, 1848), a moderate liberal leader; after the victory of the counter-revolution he was shot by decision of the Austrian court martial. — 100, 239-40
Page me9.596
Beaumarchais, Pierre Augustin Caron de (1732-1799) — French dramatist. — 340
Page me9.596
Bechtold, Arnold — typesetter in the Cologne printing works where the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was published. — 516-19
Page me9.596
Becker, Hermann Heinrich (1820-1885) — German lawyer and journalist, a leader of the Cologne Association for Workers and Employers, member of the Rhenish District

Committee of Democrats, editor of the Westdeutsche Zeitung (from May 1849 to July 1850); member of the Communist League from 1850. — 282, 490, 506, 516-19
Page me9.596
Becker, Johann Philipp (1809-1886) — German revolutionary, participant in the democratic movement of the 1830s-40s in Germany and Switzerland and in the war against the Sonderbund; took an active part in the revolution of 1848-49; was in command of the Baden people's militia during the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; prominent figure in the First International in the 1860s, and delegate to all its congresses; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 482-83

Page Break me9.597

Page me9.597
Bekk, Johann Baptist (1797-1855) — Baden statesman, moderate liberal; Minister of the Interior from 1846 but he lost this post as a result of the spring 1849 revolutionary uprising in Baden. — 55
Page me9.597
Bem, Józef (1795-1850) — Polish general and prominent figure in the national liberation movement, participant in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31 and in the revolutionary struggle in Vienna in 1848. One of the commanders of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49), he emigrated to Turkey after the defeat of the revolution. — 9, 13, 17, 25, 26, 39, 59, 61, 94, 112, 113-14, 122, 124, 134, 146, 158-59, 168, 179, 182, 187, 188-90, 230, 232, 235, 236, 237, 238, 242, 243, 248, 252, 253, 256, 257, 270, 279-80, 287-89, 294, 304, 318-19, 331, 337, 344, 356, 367
Page me9.597
Benedek, Ludwig, von (1804-1881) — Austrian general, took part in the suppression of the peasant uprising in Galicia in 1846 and of the national liberation movements in Italy and Hungary in 1848 and 1849; commander-in-chief of the Austrian army during the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 253, 293, 303, 344, 365.
Page me9.597
Berends, Julius (b. 1817) — owner of a printing works in Berlin, petty-bourgeois democrat, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848, deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849; emigrated to America in 1853. — 329
Page me9.597
Berg, Fyodor Fyodorovich, Count (1790-1874) — Russian general, later field marshal; in 1849 carried out diplomatic missions at the Prussian and Austrian courts in connection with Russian participation in the war against revolutionary Hungary; Governor-General of Finland (1855-63); Deputy Governor of the Kingdom of Poland (1863-73). — 398
Page me9.597
Berg, Philipp Karl Peter von (1815-1866) — Prussian Catholic priest; in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre); in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber. — 137-38, 139
Page me9.597
Berger von der Pleisse, Georg, Baron — Austrian lieutenant-colonel, staff officer of the 34th Infantry Regiment. — 237
Page me9.597

Berger von der Pleisse, Johann, Baron (1768-1864) — Austrian lieutenant field-marshal, later Master of Ordnance, took part in the wars against revolutionary and Napoleonic France (1793-1815); commandant of the Arad fortress (1844-49); after defending it for nine months, he surrendered the fortress to the Hungarian troops. — 238
Page me9.597
Bernicki — Polish army officer, took part in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary. — 304
Page me9.597
Bés, Michelle Giuseppe (1794-1855) — Piedmontese general, participated in the war against Austria in 1848 and 1849. — 175, 176
Page me9.597
Bias — 45
Page me9.597
Bibesco, George Demetrius (1804-1873) — ruler of Wallachia (1843-48), during the revolution of 1848 was obliged to resign and emigrate. — 278
Page me9.597
Bilski — Polish army officer, took part in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary. He was executed by the Austrians in 1849. — 235
Page me9.597
Birck — official of the Royal Government in Cologne. — 496, 497
Page me9.597
Bischoffswerder, Johann Rudolf von (1741-1803) — Prussian general and conservative statesman, exerted considerable influence on Prussia's home and foreign policy under Frederick William II. — 419
Page me9.597
Bloudek, Bedrich (d. 1875) — participant in the Slovak national movement of 1848-49 in the region of Dukla. — 409
Page me9.597
Blum, Robert (1807-1848) — German democrat, journalist, leader of the Left in the Frankfurt National Assembly; in October 1848 he participated in the defence of Vienna; was executed by court martial decision. — 47, 48, 257

Page Break me9.598

Page me9.598
Bodelschwingh, Ernst von (1794-1854) — Prussian statesman, junker; Minister of Finance (1842-45), Minister of the Interior (1845-March 1848); deputy to the Second Chamber (Right wing) in 1849. — 88, 141, 142
Page me9.598
Bogdanovic, Konstantin (1811-1854) — Serbian statesman, writer and journalist, founder of the magazine Vjestnik (Pest, 1848); secretary to Patriarch Rajachich. — 147
Page me9.598
Böhm, Baron von — Austrian general, in April 1849 substituted for Welden as commandant of Vienna. — 302, 331, 364
Page me9.598

Bölling — Prussian officer of justice, Public Prosecutor (1849), prosecutor at the trials of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung editors and contributors held in Cologne on May 29 and 30, 1849. — 517, 518, 519, 521, 522
Page me9.598
Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me9.598
Bonin, Gustav von (1797-1878) — Prussian statesman, Minister of Finance (September-November 1848), Oberpräsident of Posen (1850s-60s). — 69
Page me9.598
Borrosch, Alois (1797-1869) — Austrian politician, bourgeois liberal; bookseller in Prague; participant in the 1848 revolution in Austria, leader of the German-Bohemian group in the Austrian Imperial Diet. — 106, 144
Page me9.598
Bosnich — Austrian army officer, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848 and 1849). — 319
Page me9.598
Bowring, Sir John (1792-1872) — British politician, linguist and man of letters, follower of Bentham, free trader. — 4
Page me9.598
Brandenburg, Friedrich Wilhelm, Count von (1792-1850) — Prussian general and statesman, head of the counter-revolutionary Ministry (from November 1848 to November 1850). — 56, 65, 66, 86, 193, 258, 417, 421, 432, 439
Page me9.598
Brauner, František August (1810-1880) — Right-wing member of the national movement in Bohemia, liberal, doctor of law, deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet (1848-49). — 106
Page me9.598
Brendamour — police inspector in Cologne. — 450
Page me9.598
Brüggemann, Karl Heinrich (1810-1887) — German journalist, moderate liberal, editor-in-chief of the Kölnische Zeitung (1846-55). — 436
Page me9.598
Brunswick, Duke of — see Karl, Friedrich August Wilhelm
Page me9.598
Budinski — participant in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary, Polish by birth, was in command of the revolutionary troops in Transylvania. — 61
Page me9.598
Bürgers, Heinrich (1820-1878) — German journalist, contributor to the Rheinische Zeitung (1842-43), member of the Cologne community of the Communist League (1848); an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; from 1850 member of the Central Authority of the Communist League; later Progressist. — 490
Page me9.598
Burits de Bornay, Johann, Baron (1792-1858) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 350
Page me9.598

Bussek — Austrian army officer, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 113
Page me9.598
C
Page me9.598
Camphausen, Ludolf (1803-1890) — German banker, a leader of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie; Prussian Prime Minister (March-June 1848); Prussian envoy at the Central Authority (July 1848-April 1849). — 69, 88, 108, 125, 138, 359, 380, 387
Page me9.598
Cantador, Lorenz — German merchant, participant in the 1848-49 revolution; commander of the Düsseldorf civic militia (1848); in December 1848 was arrested for calling for armed resistance to the royal power; released in March 1849, he emigrated to the USA. — 372, 374, 375
Page me9.598
Carlier, Pierre Charles Joseph (1799-1858) — Prefect of Paris Police (1849-51), Bonapartist. — 526, 527
Page me9.598
Carnap, Johann Adolph von (born c. 1793) — Prussian official, Chief Burgomaster

Page Break me9.599
of Elberfeld from 1837 to 1851. — 423, 427

Page me9.599
Castiglioni, Heinrich, Count (1790-1853) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, military commandant of Cracow from 1846, took part in suppressing the Polish national liberation movement and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 319
Page me9.599
Catherine II (1729-1796) — Empress of Russia (1762-96). — 360
Page me9.599
Cavaignac, Louis Eugéne (1802-1857) — French general and politician, moderate republican, took part in the conquest of Algeria; after the February 1848 revolution became Governor of Algeria; War Minister of France from May 1848, played a leading part in suppressing the June uprising; head of the executive power (from June to December 1848). — 102, 127, 170, 191-92, 370
Page me9.599
Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de (1547-1616) — Spanish writer. — 442
Page me9.599
Chambord, Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie Dieudonné d'Artois, duc de Bordeaux, comte de (1820-1883) — the last representative of the elder Bourbon line, pretender to the French throne as Henry V. — 81, 192, 414
Page me9.599
Changarnier, Nicolas Anne Théodule (1793-1877) — French general and politician, monarchist; deputy to the Constituent and the Legislative Assembly; commander of the Paris garrison and national guard after June 1848; took part in dispersing the Paris demonstration of June 13, 1849. — 477
Page me9.599

Charles X (1757-1836) — King of France (1824-30). — 80
Page me9.599
Charles Albert (Carlo Alberto) (1798-1849) — King of Sardinia (1831-49). — 148, 151, 169, 173
Page me9.599
Chrzanowski, Wojciech (1788-1861) — Polish general, in March 1849 was appointed chief of staff and actually commanded the Piedmontese army against the Austrians. — 156, 157, 171-72, 174
Page me9.599
Civalart von Happancourt, Karl, Count (b. 1766) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, chief of the 1st Uhlan Regiment from January 1844, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 273
Page me9.599
Clerfayt, Karl, Count (1733-1798) — Austrian field marshal, took part in the war between Austria and Turkey (1788-89), in 1794 and 1795 commander-in-chief of the Austrian army in the war with the French Republic. — 231
Page me9.599
Clever — Prussian army officer, battalion commander during the war with Denmark (1848). — 298
Page me9.599
Clouth — leader of a Magyar-Slovak military unit that operated in March 1849 in North-East Hungary. — 62
Page me9.599
Coburg-Kohary, Ferdinand Georg August, Duke of Saxony (1785-1851) — Austrian general, chief of the 2nd Uhlan Regiment (1822-28). — 149
Page me9.599
Coburg-Saalfeld, Friedrich Josias, Prince (1737-1815) — Austrian field marshal, participated in the war against the French Republic (1793-94). — 231
Page me9.599
Colloredo-Waldsee, Franz, Count (1799-1859) — Austrian statesman and diplomat, ambassador to Russia from 1843 to 1847, envoy in London from the end of 1848 to 1856. — 397
Page me9.599
Condé, Louis Henri Joseph, duc de Bourbon, Prince de (1756-1830) — French aristocrat, emigrated during the French Revolution; in 1825 received compensation for confiscated property, part of which he bequeathed to his favourite Sophie Feuchéres. — 82
Page me9.599
Cramer, Carl — German democrat, publisher and editor of the Cologne democratic newspaper Wächter am Rhein (1848-49). — 450, 490
Page me9.599
Cremeville — Austrian army officer, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 245
Page me9.599
Csorich (Coric), Anton, barun od Monte Creto (1795-1864) — Austrian general, Croat by birth, lieutenant-field marshal (from 1849), second chief of the 15th Infantry Regiment; took part in crushing the October 1848 uprising in Vienna and in the war against revolutionary Hungary. — 153, 273, 303, 314, 316, 354, 363, 459

Page Break me9.600

Page me9.600
Czartoryski — son of Adam Czartoryski. — 78
Page me9.600
Czartoryski, Adam Jerzy, Prince (1770-1861) — Polish magnate; Russian Foreign Minister (1804-06); head of the Provisional Government during the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, later leader of Polish monarchist émigrés in France. — 78
Page me9.600
D
Page me9.600
Dahlen von Orlaburg, Franz, Baron (b. 1779) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second chief of the 59th Infantry Regiment. — 284, 457, 458
Page me9.600
Damjanich, János (1804-1849) — Hungarian general, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, supporter of Kossuth; after the revolution was defeated, he was executed together with twelve other Hungarian generals by the Austrian authorities on October 6, 1849. — 26, 123, 179, 233, 262, 282, 408
Page me9.600
Deák, Ferencz (1803-1876) — Hungarian politician, liberal aristocrat, supporter of compromise with the Austrian monarchy; Minister of Justice in the Batthyány Government (March-September 1848) and an initiator of the Austro-Hungarian agreement of 1867 to transform the Empire into a dual monarchy — Austria-Hungary; leader of the Hungarian ruling party. — 240
Page me9.600
Dembinski, Henryk (1791-1864) — Polish general and prominent figure in the national liberation movement, participant in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, commander-in-chief of the Hungarian revolutionary army (end of January and February 1849) and then of the Northern Theiss army; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and then to France. — 11, 16, 58, 76, 78, 112, 144, 149, 181, 187, 188, 232-34, 245, 268, 269, 270, 272, 275, 286, 292, 300, 314, 401, 460
Page me9.600
Deym, Moritz, Count (1805-1872) — Austrian major-general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 28, 110
Page me9.600
Dietz, Johann Wilhelm — owner of the Cologne printing press where the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was published from August 30, 1848. — 516-18
Page me9.600
Diez, Friedrich Christian (1794-1876) — German philologist, founder of comparative study of the Romance languages, author of Grammatik der romanischen Sprachen. — 325
Page me9.600

Dourlens — police commissioner in the Faubourg St. Germain (Paris) in 1849. — 526, 529
Page me9.600
Dragich — Serbian army officer. — 183
Page me9.600
Drigalski, von — Prussian general, commander of a division in Düsseldorf in 1848. — 70, 432, 443
Page me9.600
Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German journalist, at first “true socialist”, later a member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — 473, 490, 514, 516-19
Page me9.600
Druey, Henri (1799-1855) — Swiss radical statesman, took part in drafting the 1848 Constitution; member of the Federal Council, President of the Swiss Confederation in 1850. — 45
Page me9.600
Duchâtel — participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, general in the Hungarian revolutionary army, French by birth. — 78, 124, 181, 187
Page me9.600
Dufaure, Jules Armand Stanislas (1798-1881) — French statesman, Orleanist; Minister of the Interior (October-December 1848, June-October 1849), Minister of Justice (February 1871-May 1873, March 1875-August 1876) and Prime Minister (March-December 1876, September 1877-February 1879). — 481, 526, 529
Page me9.600
Duhamel, Alexander Osipovich (1801-1880) — Russian general and diplomat, took part in suppressing the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, carried out special diplomatic missions in Moldavia and Wallachia in 1842 and 1849. — 78, 305
Page me9.600
Dumanski — Polish army officer, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; executed by the Austrians in 1849. — 235

Page Break me9.601

Page me9.601
Dumont (Du Mont) Joseph (1811-1861) — German journalist, moderate liberal; in 1831 became publisher of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 436, 465
Page me9.601
Duncker — Prussian official, Police Superintendent in Berlin in 1848. — 71
Page me9.601
Durando, Giovanni (1804-1869) — general of the Piedmontese army fighting against Austria in 1848 and 1849. — 156, 164, 165, 175
Page me9.601
Duroc, Géraud Christophe Michel, duc de Friuli (1772-1813) — French general and diplomat, participated in the campaigns of 1805-06 and 1807 as Napoleon's aide-de-camp. — 114
Page me9.601

Dushan — see Stephen Dushan
Page me9.601
Duvergier, Jean Baptiste Marie (1792-1877) — French lawyer, published collections of French acts of law. — 52
Page me9.601
E
Page me9.601
Ebermeyer (Ebermeier) — Prussian officer of justice in Düsseldorf, in 1849 examining magistrate. — 373
Page me9.601
Eichhorn — Prussian officer of justice, in 1849 State Public Prosecutor. — 524
Page me9.601
Eichmann, Franz August (1793-1879) — representative of old-Prussian aristocratic bureaucracy; Oberpräsident of the Rhine Province (1845-50); Minister of the Interior in the Pfuel Government (September and October 1848); deputy to the First Chamber (1849). — 492, 496
Page me9.601
Eisenmann, Gottfried (1795-1867) — German journalist, physician, editor of the newspaper Teutsches Volksblatt (1848); deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Centre, later Left wing) in 1848 and 1849; deputy to the Second Chamber (Left wing) in 1849. — 36, 37, 85
Page me9.601
Elizabeth (1801-1873) — Queen of Prussia, wife of Frederick William IV. — 437
Page me9.601
Elkemann — pastor, deputy for the rural districts of Cologne and Mülheim to the Second Chamber (Left Centre) in 1849. — 291
Page me9.601
Engelhardt, Anton Yevstafyevich (1795-1872) — Russian general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 279
Page me9.601
Engels, Friedrich (Frederick) (1820-1895). — 447-50, 473, 489, 490, 508, 509, 514, 524
Page me9.601
Erbach — Austrian army officer, an aide-de-camp of Windischgrätz, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 39
Page me9.601
Ernest Augustus (1771-1851) — King of Hanover (1837-51). — 431
Page me9.601
Esser, Christian Joseph (born c. 1809) — German worker, member of the Cologne Workers' Association; editor of its newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit (1849). — 490, 495, 501, 503
Page me9.601
d'Ester, Karl Ludwig Johann (1813-1859) — German socialist and democrat, physician; member of the Cologne community of the Communist League, in 1848 deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing); from October 1848 member of the Central Committee of Democrats in Germany; in 1849 deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing); played a prominent part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, later emigrated to Switzerland. — 33, 34, 140, 143

Page me9.601
Esterházys of Galántha — family of Hungarian nobles. — 40
Page me9.601
Esterházy of Galántha, Miklós, Count — father of Pál Esterházy of Galántha. — 241
Page me9.601
Esterházy of Galántha, Pál, Count (1805-1877) — colonel in the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848 and 1849, one of those who signed the capitulation of the Komorn fortress (September 27, 1849); emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 241, 337
Page me9.601
Esterházy of Galántha, Paul Anthony (Pál Antál), Prince (1786 — 1866) — Hungarian magnate, diplomat for the Austrians, Foreign Minister in the Hungarian Government of Batthyány (March to August 1848). — 26
Page me9.601
F
Page me9.601
Fanti, Manfredo (1808-1865) — Italian general and politician; in the battle at

Page Break me9.602
Novara in 1849 commanded a brigade and later a division. — 156

Page me9.602
Favorola — participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Italy. — 157
Page me9.602
Ferdinand I (1793-1875) — Emperor of Austria (1835-48). — 264, 365, 456, 457
Page me9.602
Festenburg, von — Austrian government counsellor. — 342
Page me9.602
Feuchéres, Sophie, baronne de (1795-1841) — favourite of Prince Louis Henri Joseph Condé. — 83
Page me9.602
Ficquelmont, Carl Ludwig. — 30
Page me9.602
Fiedler, Joseph, von (1788-1876) — Austrian colonel, later major-general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 269, 274
Page me9.602
Fischhof, Adolph (1816-1893) — Austrian liberal politician; took part in the revolution of 1848-49; head of the Vienna Committee of Public Safety (May 1848), deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet (1848); physician. — 39
Page me9.602
Flocon, Ferdinand (1800-1866) — French politician, journalist, democrat, an editor of the newspaper Réforme; in 1848 member of the Provisional Government. — 192
Page me9.602
Fogarassy, Basil — active Right-wing member of the Serbian national movement, deputy head of the local administration in the Voivodina. — 40

Page me9.602
Francis I (1768-1835) — Emperor of Austria (1804-35), as Francis II, last Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (1792-1806). — 360
Page me9.602
Francis Joseph I (1830-1916) — Emperor of Austria (1848-1916). — 49, 73, 100, 106, 118, 182, 239, 240, 246, 263-64, 337, 398, 407-08, 414, 430, 457
Page me9.602
Franscini, Stefano (1796-1857) — Swiss radical politician and economist of Italian descent; in 1848 deputy to the Federal Council and the National Council. — 45
Page me9.602
Franz — Right-wing member of the Serbian national movement; in January 1849 one of the chiefs of the local administration's Finance Department in the Voivodina. — 40
Page me9.602
Frederick I (1657-1713) — as Frederick III, Elector of Brandenburg (from 1688); King of Prussia (1701-13). — 418
Page me9.602
Frederick II (the Great) (1712-1786) — King of Prussia (1740-86). — 88, 418
Page me9.602
Frederick Augustus II (1797-1854) — King of Saxony (1836-54). — 411, 430-31
Page me9.602
Frederick William (1620-1688) — Elector of Brandenburg (1640-88), was called the “Great Elector” by German monarchist historiographers. — 418
Page me9.602
Frederick William II (1744-1797) — King of Prussia (1786-97). — 360-61, 418-19, 441
Page me9.602
Frederick William III (1770-1840) — King of Prussia (1797-1840). — 138, 419-20, 441, 464
Page me9.602
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 47, 52, 54, 66-68, 69, 109, 125, 129, 131, 138, 193-94, 281, 283, 296, 312, 357, 360, 361, 377, 378, 392, 394, 414, 416-18, 421-23, 430-31, 437-38, 440-41, 444, 452, 464-66, 475, 499, 511, 512
Page me9.602
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German romantic and later revolutionary poet, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848 and 1849. — 473, 489, 509-10
Page me9.602
Frisch. — 505
Page me9.602
Furrer, Jonas (1805-1861) — Swiss politician, moderate liberal, lawyer; in 1848 President of the Diet, then President of the Swiss Confederation, Burgomaster of Zurich. — 44
Page me9.602
G
Page me9.602
Gaal, Miklós (1799-1854) — retired Austrian army officer, colonel, then general in the Hungarian revolutionary army; from December 1, 1848, commanded the storming of the

Arad fortress, later discharged for retreating without fighting; after the defeat of the revolution, the Austrians sentenced him to capital punishment, commuted to twenty-year imprisonment. — 123, 238
Page me9.602
Gagern, Heinrich Wilhelm August, Baron von (1799-1880) — German politician, deputy to and President of the Frankfurt

Page Break me9.603
National Assembly (Right Centre) from May to December 1848, Imperial Prime Minister (December 1848 to March 1849). — 48, 377

Page me9.603
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; in 1848 headed a volunteer detachment against the Austrians in Lombardy; chief organiser of the defence of the Roman Republic in April-June 1849; in the 1860s led the national liberation struggle in Italy. — 151
Page me9.603
Gáspár, András (c. 1803-1884) — general of the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848 and 1849; was sentenced to death after the defeat of the revolution, but was pardoned. — 408
Page me9.603
Gedeon, Joseph von (1789-1859) — Austrian general, later lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 242
Page me9.603
Geiger, Wilhelm Arnold — Prussian police official, examining magistrate in 1848, then Police Superintendent in Cologne. — 451, 487, 497, 511
Page me9.603
Genova, duca di — see Savoia, Ferdinando, duca di Genova
Page me9.603
Girardin, Émile de (1806-1881) — French journalist and politician; in the 1830s-60s (with intervals) editor of the newspaper La Presse; notorious for his lack of principles in politics. — 480
Page me9.603
Gjurkovich, Eugen — Right-wing member of the Serbian national movement in 1848 and 1849; in January 1849 became a member of the local administration in the Voivodina. — 40
Page me9.603
Gläser, Joseph von (1777-1849) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 10, 25, 59, 90, 97
Page me9.603
Gödsche, Hermann — Prussian conservative journalist, wrote feuilletons for the Neue Preussische Zeitung (Kreuz-Zeitung). — 281
Page me9.603
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 66
Page me9.603

Goldmark, Joseph (b. 1818) — Austrian radical politician, participant in the 1848-49 revolution; in May 1848 member of the Vienna Committee of Public Safety, deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet (1848); physician. — 39
Page me9.603
Görgey, Arthur (1818-1916) — military leader of the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, a commander and then commander-in-chief (April to June 1849) of the Hungarian army; expressed the conservative views of the nobility, favoured agreement with the Habsburgs and later capitulation; War Minister (from May 1849). — 10, 11, 17, 20, 59, 61, 77, 93, 112, 122, 133, 144, 181, 185, 186, 188, 232-34, 241, 262, 269, 272, 275, 284, 285, 289, 292, 293, 300, 314, 318, 336, 346, 363, 395, 404-06, 424, 459-61
Page me9.603
Gottschalk, Andreas (1815-1849) — German physician, member of the Cologne community of the Communist League, President of the Cologne Workers' Association (April-June 1848); exponent of “Left” sectarian tendencies in the German working-class movement. — 498-500, 508
Page me9.603
Götz, Christian (1783-1849) — Austrian general, took part in suppressing the Italian national liberation movement and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 10, 25, 90, 113, 121, 146, 153, 160, 185, 233, 241, 272, 302, 303, 315, 330, 353
Page me9.603
Grammont von Linthal, Franz, Baron (1799-1849) — Austrian general, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849, commander of a cavalry brigade (1849). — 76
Page me9.603
Gräser. — 237
Page me9.603
Grouchy, Emmanuel, Marquis de (1766-1847) — French marshal, participated in the Napoleonic wars. — 175
Page me9.603
Grün, Karl Theodor Ferdinand (1817-1887) — German journalist, “true socialist” in mid-1840s, petty-bourgeois democrat during the revolution of 1848-49, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly. — 88
Page me9.603
Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874) — French historian and conservative statesman, actually directed France's home and foreign policy from 1840 until the February revolution of 1848. — 323

Page Break me9.604

Page me9.604
Gustavus II Adolphus (1594-1632) — King of Sweden (1611-32) and general; headed the alliance of Protestant states during the Thirty Years' War; one of the Protestant unions founded in Germany in the 1830s was named after him. — 321
Page me9.604
Guyon, Richard Debaufre (1803-1856) — participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, general in the Hungarian revolutionary army, English by birth; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Turkey; in 1852 became a Turkish general known as Khourschid Pasha; fought in the 1853-56 Crimean war. — 78, 285, 406

Page me9.604
Gyurkovics — Austrian army officer, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 273
Page me9.604
H
Page me9.604
Habsburgs — dynasty of emperors of the Holy Roman Empire from 1273 to 1806 (with intervals), of Austria (from 1804) and of Austria-Hungary (1867-1918). — 148, 397, 425
Page me9.604
Hagen — Prussian lawyer, defended Korff at the trial held in Cologne on May 30, 1849. — 522
Page me9.604
Hám, Johann von (1781-1857) — Hungarian Cardinal, Lord Primate, in 1849 the Hungarian Government deposed him for high treason. — 92
Page me9.604
Hammerstein-Ecquord, Wilhelm, Baron von (1785-1861) — Austrian general, took part in suppressing the national liberation movement in Galicia and the Bukovina in 1848 and 1849. — 152-53, 160, 186, 253, 262, 275, 280, 287, 293, 365
Page me9.604
Hansemann, David Justus (1790-1864) — German capitalist, a leader of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie; Prussian Minister of Finance (from March to September 1848). — 56, 69, 138
Page me9.604
Harkort, Friedrich Wilhelm (1793-1880) — Prussian industrialist and liberal politician, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly in 1848 and 1849, then deputy to the Second Chamber (Centre), later Progressist. — 88
Page me9.604
Harney, George Julian (1817-1897) — prominent figure in the English labour movement, a Chartist leader (Left wing); editor of The Northern Star and Democratic Review, associate of Marx and Engels. — 490
Page me9.604
Hartmann — Düsseldorf forwarding agent. — 429
Page me9.604
Haschka, Lorenz Leopold (1749-1827) — Austrian poet, author of the Austrian state anthem. — 107
Page me9.604
Havas, Joseph — in 1849 imperial commissioner in Pest. — 364
Page me9.604
Hayde — Austrian major, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 279
Page me9.604
Haydn, Franz Joseph (1732-1809) — Austrian composer. — 107
Page me9.604

Haynau, Julius Jakob, Baron von (1786-1853) — Austrian Master of Ordnance, took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Italy, commander of the Austrian troops in Hungary (1849 and 1850), initiated butchery of Hungarian revolutionaries. — 280, 293, 317
Page me9.604
Hecker — Prussian officer of justice, Public Prosecutor in Cologne (1848). — 339, 340
Page me9.604
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 421
Page me9.604
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 418, 446
Page me9.604
Heinrich von Bordeaux (Henry V) — see Chambord, Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie Dieudonné d'Artois, duc de Bordeaux, comte de
Page me9.604
Henry V — see Chambord, Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie Dieudonné d'Artois, duc de Bordeaux, comte de
Page me9.604
Hess, Heinrich, Baron von (1788-1870) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, later field marshal; took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Italy; in 1854 and 1855 commander-in-chief of troops in Hungary, Galicia and the Danube principalities. — 175, 253, 286, 401
Page me9.604
Hexamer, Adolf (1801-1874) — editor of Die Reforme (Berlin), physician; attended the first and the second democratic congresses (Frankfurt am Main and Berlin), member of the Central

Page Break me9.605
Committee of German Democrats; after 1849 emigrated to Switzerland and later to the USA. — 33, 34

Page me9.605
Heydt, von der — Austrian major, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 93
Page me9.605
Heydt, August, Baron von der (1801-1874) — Prussian statesman, banker in Elberfeld; Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works from December 1848 to 1862; deputy to the Second Chamber (1848). — 93, 130-31, 281, 324, 328, 428, 439, 445
Page me9.605
Höchster, Ernst Hermann (born c. 1811) — Elberfeld lawyer, petty-bourgeois democrat, Chairman of the Committee of Public Safety in Elberfeld (May 1849); emigrated after the uprising was defeated. — 448-49
Page me9.605
Höcke — Austrian democrat, participant in the October 1848 uprising in Vienna. — 257
Page me9.605
Hofstitter. — 43
Page me9.605

Hohenzollern — see Frederick William IV
Page me9.605
Hohenzollern, Frau — see Elizabeth
Page me9.605
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 51, 65, 66, 69, 88, 125, 126, 129, 131-32, 139, 195, 357-58, 416, 418-22, 440-41, 444
Page me9.605
Holstein, Prince — Austrian major, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 28, 75
Page me9.605
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 15
Page me9.605
Horváth, Mihály (1809-1878) — Hungarian Catholic bishop, participant in the national liberation struggle in Hungary in 1848 and 1849, Minister of Religious Worship and Education in the Szemere Government, first historian to study the Hungarian revolution of 1848-49. — 92
Page me9.605
Horváth-Petrichevich von Széplak, Johann Niklas, Baron (1801-1865) — Austrian colonel, later lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 161, 238, 244, 350
Page me9.605
Hoym, Karl Georg Heinrich von (1739-1807) — Prussian official, from 1770 Minister for Silesia, pursued a policy of Germanising Polish lands. — 361
Page me9.605
Hrabovsky (Hrabovszky) von Hrabova, Johann (Janos), Baron (1779-1852) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, Hungarian by birth; in early 1847 commanded troops in Slavonia and Syrmien; in 1848 headed the Hungarian army fighting Southern Slavs; in 1850, he was sentenced by the Austrian court martial to capital punishment for non-fulfilment of military duty; the sentence was later commuted to ten-year imprisonment. — 401
Page me9.605
Hühnerbein (Hünerbein), Friedrich Wilhelm (born c. 1817) — German tailor; member of the Communist League and of the Committee of Public Safety during the uprising in Elberfeld (May 1849). — 447
Page me9.605
Hunyadi — family of Hungarian nobles. — 100
Page me9.605
Hurban, Josef Miloslav (1817-1888) — Slovak Evangelical pastor, writer and active member of the national movement, associate of L'udovít Štúr; defended national rights of Slovakia against the Hungarian aristocracy's great-power policy; fought in alliance with the Austrians against the Hungarian revolution of 1848-49. — 62, 100, 120, 162, 424
Page me9.605
Hüser, Johann Hans Gustav Heinrich von (1782-1857) — Prussian general, commandant of Mainz (1844-49). — 452
Page me9.605

Huthsteiner, F. W. — police inspector in Erfurt, former editor of the Barmer Zeitung. — 71
Page me9.605
I
Page me9.605
Iovanovich, Joseph — prominent figure in the Serbian national movement; in February 1849 was a member of the local administration in the Voivodina. — 40
Page me9.605
Iovanovich, Kosta — prominent figure in the Serbian national movement; in February 1849 was a member of the local administration in the Voivodina. — 40

Page Break me9.606
J
Page me9.606
Jablonowski, Stanislaw, Prince — Polish landowner, a commander of the Polish national guard in Cracow (April 1848); when the citizens of Cracow rose against the Austrian authorities (April 1848), he concluded an agreement with the latter behind their backs. — 93
Page me9.606
Jablonowsky, Felix, Prince (1808-1857) — Austrian major-general, subsequently lieutenant-field marshal, brigade commander during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 10, 90, 113, 121, 146, 153, 160, 185, 233, 241, 249, 261, 272, 303, 342, 353, 368
Page me9.606
Jacoby, Johann (1805-1877) — German radical writer and politician, physician; a leader of the Left wing in the Prussian National Assembly (1848); deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849; in the 1870s was close to the Social-Democratic Party. — 140
Page me9.606
Jäger — first lieutenant in the Austrian army, took part in the suppression of the revolution in Italy, in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49), and in the siege of Komorn (spring of 1849). — 180
Page me9.606
Janiczek — participant in the Slovak national movement of 1848-49; went over to the Hungarian side (spring of 1849). — 409
Page me9.606
Jellachich de Buzim (Jellacic), Josef, Count (1801-1859) — Croatian statesman, Austrian general; from March 1848 Ban and later commander-in-chief of Croatia and the Military Border area; took an active part in suppressing the popular uprising in Vienna (October 1848) and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 59-60, 73, 77, 91, 95, 97, 99, 107, 110, 115, 121, 123, 133, 145-46, 147, 152, 154, 159, 178, 187, 229, 233, 235, 238, 241, 246, 249, 253, 261, 262, 265, 269-70, 272, 273, 275, 284, 288, 292, 330, 336, 343, 352, 363, 365, 368, 381, 391, 397, 401, 406, 408, 410, 456, 460
Page me9.606
Jellacic, Albert — borderers' colonel, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 75

Page me9.606
Jessenak, Janos, Baron (1800-1849) — participant in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary, he was shot by the Austrians after its defeat. — 245
Page me9.606
Jones, Ernest Charles (1819-1869) — prominent figure in the English labour movement, proletarian poet and journalist, a Chartist leader (Left wing); friend of Marx and Engels. — 490
Page me9.606
Josikas — family of Hungarian nobles in Transylvania known for their pro-Habsburg sentiments. — 40
Page me9.606
Jovich von Siegenberg, Stephan, Baron (1774-1850) — Austrian general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 237
Page me9.606
K
Page me9.606
Kacanski, Sergyë (1813-1859) — bishop in Karlowitz; in 1848 and 1849 member of Skupština in the Voivodina. — 40
Page me9.606
Kalchberg, Wilhelm, Baron von (1807-1883) — Austrian captain, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 272
Page me9.606
Kalliany de Kallian, Joseph, Baron (1786-1859) — Austrian general, participant in the war against revolutionary Hungary; commander of Austrian troops in Transylvania (spring of 1849). — 113, 242, 243, 279
Page me9.606
Karageorge, George Petrovich (also Czerny George) (1768-1817) — leader of the Serbian uprising against Turkish yoke (1804-13), ruler of Serbia (1811-13); was defeated by the Turks and fled the country (1813); in 1817 was murdered on orders from his rival Miloš Obrenovic. — 31
Page me9.606
Karger, Leopold, von (1792-1867) — Austrian major-general, participant in the war against revolutionary Hungary; in 1849 commanded a cavalry brigade. — 72, 78, 95, 110
Page me9.606
Karl, Friedrich Alexander, Prince of Prussia (1801-1883) — Prussian general, son of Frederick William III of Prussia; from

Page Break me9.607
1848 chief of the Austrian 8th Cuirassier Regiment. — 28

Page me9.607
Karl, Friedrich August Wilhelm (1804-1873) — Duke of Brunswick from 1823; early in September 1830 was deposed and forced to emigrate; attempted to regain power and in the 1840s and 1850s maintained contacts with democratic elements; published the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung. — 169
Page me9.607

Kellner — Austrian major, participant in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 30
Page me9.607
Khevenhüller-Metsch, Franz, Count (1783-c. 1863) — Austrian Master of Ordnance, chief of the 35th Infantry Regiment. — 30
Page me9.607
Kiesewetter, Julius, von Wiesenbrunn (1804-1862) — Austrian major, subsequently major-general of the 30th Infantry Regiment, participant in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 11
Page me9.607
Klapka, Georg (György) (1820-1892) — general in the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848 and 1849), commandant of the Komorn fortress (June-September 1849); political refugee after the revolution, returned to Hungary in 1867. — 100, 262, 269, 272, 278, 284, 368, 406, 408
Page me9.607
Klapka, József (1786-1863) — participant in the wars against Napoleonic France; Burgomaster of Temesvar (1819-33); father of Georg Klapka. — 278
Page me9.607
Knicanin, Stephan Petrovic (1809-1855) — Serbian politician and statesman; from July 1848 to March 1849 commanded a volunteer corps from the principality of Serbia; this corps joined the Voivodina Serbs fighting against Hungarian troops. — 31, 59, 98, 117, 287, 294, 303, 319, 332, 457
Page me9.607
Kobylica, Lucian (1812-1851) — Huzul (Ukrainian) peasant, leader of the anti-feudal movement in the Bukovina (1840s); deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet (1848), deprived of his deputy's rights for defending the interests of the peasants; headed an armed peasant detachment (1848-49), was arrested (1850) and deported. — 289, 290, 431
Page me9.607
Kock, Charles Paulde (1793-1871) — French novelist and playwright. — 40
Page me9.607
Koehler — participant in the military operations of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army in the summer of 1849, captain of Willich's volunteer corps. — 484
Page me9.607
Kolarovich — prominent figure in the Serbian national movement; in February 1849 became a member of the local administration in the Voivodina. — 40
Page me9.607
Kollár, Jan (1793-1852) — Slovak poet and philologist, a representative of the Slovak and Czech Renaissance, a leader of the national movement; advocated unity of the Slav peoples within the framework of the Austrian Empire (Austro-Slavism). — 300
Page me9.607
Kopet — Austrian colonel, then general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 237
Page me9.607
Korff, Hermann — Prussian officer, dismissed from the army for his political views (1847); democrat; responsible publisher of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); later emigrated to the USA. — 514, 516-20, 521-22

Page me9.607
Kossuth, Lajos (1802-1894) — leader of the Hungarian national liberation movement, head of the bourgeois democrats during the revolution of 1848-49 and of the Hungarian revolutionary Government; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and later to England and America. — 10, 29, 31, 59, 77, 94, 100, 112, 119, 149, 180-82, 229, 230, 253, 255, 257, 278, 285, 300, 318, 334, 345, 351, 352, 355, 365, 391, 395, 397, 405, 407, 455-57, 490
Page me9.607
Kostich, Alexander — participant in the national movement of the Voivodina Serbs in 1848 and 1849. — 190
Page me9.607
Kress von Kressenstein, Karl, Baron (1781-1856) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second chief of the 7th Light Cavalry Regiment; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 269, 273, 274
Page me9.607
Krestic, Nicolá (1824-1887) — Serbian politician, editor-in-chief of the newspaper

Page Break me9.608
Slavenski jug (1848-49); Ban Jellachich's secretary (1848-49); a member of the local administration in the Voivodina (1849). — 40

Page me9.608
Kübeck, Karl Friedrich, Baron von Kübau (1780-1855) — Austrian statesman, Minister of Finance (1840-48). — 133, 179
Page me9.608
Kühlwetter, Friedrich Christian Hubert von (1809-1882) — Prussian statesman; Minister of the Interior in the Auerswald-Hansemann Government (June-September 1848), later Regierungspräsident in Düsseldorf, Oberpräsident of Westphalia. — 69
Page me9.608
Kulmer, Franz, Baron von (1806-1853) — Austrian politician, Croatian feudal lord, government representative in the Agram (Zagreb) comitat (in the 1840s); Minister without portfolio (from December 1848), mediated between the Ban and the Croatian authorities. — 246
Page me9.608
Kyll, Úlrich Franz — German lawyer, petty-bourgeois democrat, Cologne deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849, later Progressist. — 329
Page me9.608
L
Page me9.608
Ladenberg, Adalbert von (1798-1855) — Prussian official, Minister of Religious Worship, Education and Medicine (November 1848-December 1850). — 439
Page me9.608
La Marmora, Alfonso Ferrero (1804-1878) — Italian general and politician, Minister of War in Piedmont (1848, 1849-55, 1856-59); commander of Sardinian corps in the Crimea (1855); later Prime Minister. — 150, 151, 156, 157, 166, 172

Page me9.608
Lamartine, Alphonse Marie Louis de (1790-1869) — French poet, historian and politician; a leader of moderate republicans in the 1840s; in 1848 Foreign Minister and de facto head of the Provisional Government. — 191, 427
Page me9.608
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German writer and lawyer; petty-bourgeois socialist; participated in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49); founder of the General Association of German Workers (1863); an initiator of the opportunist trend within the German Social-Democratic movement. — 339-40, 372-74, 383-87
Page me9.608
Latinovich, Carl — prominent figure in the Serbian national movement; head of the local administration's Legal Department in the Voivodina in February 1849. — 40
Page me9.608
Latour, Theodor, Count Baillet von (1780-1848) — Austrian conservative statesman, War Minister in 1848; killed during the October 1848 Vienna uprising. — 456
Page me9.608
Lederer, Karl Joseph, Baron von (1800-1868) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal; during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849 commanded a cavalry brigade; took part in the siege of Komorn. — 30
Page me9.608
Lederer, Moriz, Baron von (b. 1809) — Austrian colonel, later lieutenant-field marshal; during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849 commanded a cavalry brigade of the South Army. — 117
Page me9.608
Ledru-Rollin, Alexandre Auguste (1807-1874) — French journalist and politician, a leader of petty-bourgeois democrats; editor of La Réforme; Minister of the Interior in the Provisional Government (February to May 1848); deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (head of the Montagnards). — 192, 477, 478
Page me9.608
Legeditsch, Ignaz von (1791-1866) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second chief of the 2nd Hussar Regiment, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 30, 93
Page me9.608
Leiningen-Westerburg, Christian Franz Seraphin Vincenz, Count (1812-1856) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 25

Page Break me9.609

Page me9.609
Lelewel, Joachim (1786-1861) — Polish historian and revolutionary; participant in the 1830-31 Polish insurrection, a leader of the democratic wing of Polish émigrés; committee member of the Brussels Democratic Association (1847-48). — 463
Page me9.609
Leopold II (1797-1870) — Grand Duke of Tuscany (1824-59). — 148
Page me9.609

Lichnowski, Felix Maria, Prince von (1814-1848) — Prussian army officer, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right wing); killed during the Frankfurt uprising in September 1848; he was the prototype for the main character in Georg Weerth's satirical novel Leben und Taten des berühmten Ritters Schnapphahnski (Life and Deeds of the Famous Knight Schnapphahnski). — 516-18
Page me9.609
Lisiecki, von — legal officer in Posen, Polish by birth; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848, deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849. — 295, 296, 298, 320
Page me9.609
Lobkowitz, Franz Georg, Prince (1800-1858) — Austrian army officer and diplomat; with the rank of colonel, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 75, 269, 274
Page me9.609
Lohbauer, Rudolf — Prussian writer; in the early 1830s radical, was compelled to emigrate to Strassburg; from 1835 professor in Berne; in the 1840s contributed to Prussian government and pietist periodicals. — 45
Page me9.609
Louis XVI (1754-1793) — King of the French (1774-92); guillotined during the French Revolution. — 419
Page me9.609
Louis Napoleon — see Napoleon III
Page me9.609
Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orléans, King of the French (1830-48). — 7, 48, 51, 80, 82
Page me9.609
Lüders, Alexander Nikolayevich, Count (1790-1874) — Russian general, commander of an occupation corps in Moldavia and Wallachia (1848); took part in military operations against Hungarian troops in Transylvania (1849). — 122, 279, 312
Page me9.609
Ludwig, Gottfried von Reschenbach (1792-1880) — Austrian major-general, then lieutenant-field marshal, commanded a cavalry brigade during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 365
Page me9.609
Luise, Auguste Wilhelmine Amalie (1776-1810) — Queen of Prussia, wife of Frederick William III, daughter of Duke Karl von Mecklenburg-Strelitz. — 437
Page me9.609
M
Page me9.609
Mack, József (1810-1868) — took part in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary; from January 1849 lieutenant-colonel in the Hungarian revolutionary army, artillery commander of the Komorn fortress; after the defeat of the revolution fled the country. — 337
Page me9.609

Madarász, László (1811-1909) — Hungarian radical, lawyer, took part in the revolution of 1848-49, acted as Minister of Police in the Defence Council; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Switzerland and later to the USA. — 77, 100, 188
Page me9.609
Mailáth, György (1786-1861) — Hungarian statesman, Supreme Judge (1839-48); President of the Upper Chamber of the National Assembly (1848), advocated compromise with the Habsburgs. — 240
Page me9.609
Malkowsky, von Dammwalden, Ignaz (1784-1854) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, Polish by birth; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 31, 32, 113, 114, 134, 159, 182, 263, 287, 457
Page me9.609
Mamula, Lazarus, Baron von (1795-1878) — Austrian colonel, later lieutenant-field marshal, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 354
Page me9.609
Manara, Luciano (1825-1849) — Italian major, took part in the revolution of 1848-49 and the war against Austria, leader of the Lombardian volunteer corps, defender of the Roman Republic (1849). — 164

Page Break me9.610

Page me9.610
Manteuffel, Otto Theodor, Baron von (1805-1882) — Prussian conservative statesman, Minister of the Interior (November 1848-November 1850), deputy to the First and Second Chambers (1849), Prime Minister (1850-58). — 54, 56, 67, 129-31, 141, 143, 145, 258, 281, 291, 322, 323, 324, 325, 371, 372, 378, 380, 395, 417, 430, 432, 439, 445, 487, 488, 492, 493
Page me9.610
Marx, Karl (1818-1883) — 282, 372, 451, 453, 473, 481, 487-88, 492-93, 495-98, 505, 511-19, 525-27
Page me9.610
Mathich, Joseph — member of the Serbian national movement; Vice-President of the Supreme Court in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40
Page me9.610
Maximilian II (1811-1864) — King of Bavaria (1848-64). — 37, 430
Page me9.610
Mayerhofer von Grünbühel, Ferdinand, Baron (1798-1869) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal, consul in Belgrade (1843-48), from May 1849 commander-in-chief in the Voivodina and the Banat. — 253, 304, 322, 344, 351
Page me9.610
Mazzuchelli, Alois (Luigi), Count von (1776-1868) — Austrian Master of Ordnance, Italian by birth, chief of the 10th Infantry Regiment. — 364
Page me9.610
Mek — colonel in the Hungarian revolutionary army, commandant of the Komorn fortress. — 180
Page me9.610

Mengen, Karl, Baron von (1774-1851) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second chief of the 4th Cuirassier Regiment, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 25
Page me9.610
Mészáros, Lázár (1796-1858) — Hungarian colonel, took part in the revolution of 1848-49; War Minister in the Batthyány Government, member of the Defence Council; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Turkey and later to England and the USA. — 100, 279
Page me9.610
Metternich-Winneburg, Clemens Wenzel Lothar, Prince von (1773-1859) — Austrian statesman and diplomat, Foreign Minister (1809-21), Chancellor (1821-48), one of the founders of the Holy Alliance. — 47, 105
Page me9.610
Meusebach, von — Prussian official, conservative; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848. — 271
Page me9.610
Michailovich, Stretko — member of the Serbian national movement, a leader of the local administration in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40
Page me9.610
Miguel, Maria Evarist (Don or Dom Miguel) (1802-1866) — King of Portugal (1828-34), chief of the Austrian 39th Infantry Regiment. — 123
Page me9.610
Mirbach, Otto von (born c. 1800) — Prussian retired artillery officer. petty-bourgeois democrat, took part in the revolution of 1848-49; commandant of Elberfeld during the May 1849 uprising; emigrated after the uprising was defeated. — 448, 449, 508
Page me9.610
Mironiuk, Birla — participant in the antifeudal movement in the Bukovina in the 1840s, associate of Lucian Kobylica. — 289
Page me9.610
Moeller — official of the Royal Government in Cologne. — 451, 511
Page me9.610
Molé, Louis Mathieu, comte (1781-1855) — French statesman, Orleanist, Prime Minister (1836-37, 1837-39), deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848), deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51). — 323
Page me9.610
Montenuovo, Wilhelm Albrecht, Prince von (1821-1895) — Austrian colonel, from August 1849 major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary, commanded a cavalry brigade (1849). — 28
Page me9.610
Morret — Prussian police officer, prison governor in Düsseldorf (1848-49). — 373
Page me9.610
Mosle, Johann Ludwig (1794-1877) — German army officer; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49), imperial commissioner in Vienna (August to October 1848). — 47
Page me9.610

Muraviev, Nikolai Nikolayevich (Karsky) (1794-1866) — Russian general, commander of a grenadier corps (late 1848); took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 262

Page Break me9.611

N
Page me9.611
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 45, 52, 66, 114, 149, 150, 176, 229, 261, 400, 419, 420
Page me9.611
Napoleon III (Louis Napoleon), Prince (1808-1873) — nephew of Napoleon I, President of the Second Republic (1848-51), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 81, 82, 85, 169
Page me9.611
Nassau, Adolf Wilhelm Karl August Friedrich, Duke of (1817-1905) — cavalry general, chief of the Austrian 15th Infantry Regiment. — 366
Page me9.611
Nedeljkovich, Jovan — confidant of the Voivodina ruler, Patriarch Rajachich. — 254
Page me9.611
Nicholas I (1796-1855) — Emperor of Russia (1825-55). — 312, 337, 345, 394, 395, 398, 414, 415, 421, 430, 440, 441, 474
Page me9.611
Nicolovius, Georg Heinrich Franz — Prussian legal officer; Public Prosecutor General for the Rhine Province in 1848. — 339, 340, 373
Page me9.611
Nothjung, Peter (1821-1866) — tailor; a member of the Cologne Workers' Association and the Communist League; one of the accused at the Cologne trial of Communists (1852). — 490
Page me9.611
Nugent, Albert Eugen Laval (b. 1816) — Austrian colonel, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849; son of Laval Nugent. — 285, 319, 344
Page me9.611
Nugent, Laval, Count of Westmeath (1777-1862) — Austrian Master of Ordnance; took part in the suppression of the national liberation movement in Italy in 1848 and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 17, 26, 90, 115, 117, 179, 230, 278, 285, 293, 294, 303, 319, 344, 354, 457, 458
Page me9.611
Nüll, Friedrich van der (died c. 1854) — Austrian colonel, later general; from 1848 commanded the 8th Border Infantry Regiment. — 113
Page me9.611
Nyáry, Pál (1806-1871) — Hungarian politician of the liberal aristocratic opposition; member of the Committee of Public Safety and of the Defence Council (1848); deputy to the National Assembly. — 100
Page me9.611
O
Page me9.611

Obilich, Milosh — Serbian national hero, killed the Turkish Sultan Murad I in the battle with the Turks at Kossovo in 1389. — 31
Page me9.611
Ochsenbein, Johann Ulrich (1811-1890) — Swiss statesman and politician; radical, later liberal; President of the Diet during the war against the Sonderbund; head of the Federal Government (1847-48); President of the National Council and member of the Federal Council in 1848. — 44, 45
Page me9.611
Orléans, Duke of — see Louis Philippe I
Page me9.611
Ottinger, Franz, Baron von (1792-1869) — Austrian general, commanded a cavalry brigade during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 59, 75, 77
Page me9.611
Otto, Karl Wunibald (born c. 1809) — German chemist; in 1848 and 1849 a member of the Cologne Workers' Association, a member of the Communist League, one of the accused at the Cologne trial of Communists (1852). — 495, 501, 503
Page me9.611
P
Page me9.611
Palacký, František (1798-1876) — Czech historian and liberal politician; Chairman of the Slav Congress in Prague in June 1848; deputy to the Austrian Imperial Diet in 1848 and 1849; supported a federation of autonomous Slav areas within the framework of the Habsburg monarchy. — 106, 144
Page me9.611
Pallavicini, Alfonztól, Count (1807-1875) — Hungarian magnate. — 186
Page me9.611
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, 3rd Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman; Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51); Home Secretary (1852-55) and Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65); a Tory at the beginning of his career, from 1830 onwards a Whig. — 74

Page Break me9.612

Page me9.612
Palóczy, László (1783-1861) — Hungarian politician, deputy to the National Assembly (1848-49), its Chairman till early July 1848 and a member of the Commission of Appeal. — 145
Page me9.612
Paskevich, Ivan Fyodorovich (1782-1856) — Russian field marshal-general; commander-in-chief of the Tsarist army that suppressed the Polish insurrection (from June 1831); in 1849 commander-in-chief of Tsarist troops participating in crushing the revolution in Hungary. — 239
Page me9.612
Paskowich — representative of the Voivodina local administration in Vienna. — 147
Page me9.612

Pavlov, Prokofy Yakovlevich (1796-1868) — Russian general, took part in the suppression of the Polish insurrection of 1830-31 and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849; during the Crimean war of 1853-56 commanded troops on the Danube and in the Crimea. — 312
Page me9.612
Peel, Sir Robert (1788-1850) — British statesman, moderate Tory; Prime Minister (1841-46); repealed the Corn Laws in 1846. — 4
Page me9.612
Perczel, Alexander (d. 1861) — father of Mór Perczel. — 73
Page me9.612
Perczel, Moritz (Mór) (1811-1899) — general in the Hungarian revolutionary army in 1848 and 1849; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Turkey, and in 1851 to England. — 26, 58, 61, 72, 111, 257, 286, 289, 293, 318, 331, 334, 354, 397, 408, 410, 425, 461
Page me9.612
Perker — Prussian official. — 496
Page me9.612
Perrone di San Martino, Ettore (1789-1849) — general in the Piedmontese army, fought against Austria in 1848 and 1849. — 175
Page me9.612
Peter, Archduke — Austrian official. — 405
Page me9.612
Peter II Petrovic Njegoš (1813-1851) — Vladika of Montenegro (1830-51). — 31
Page me9.612
Peucker, Eduard von (1791-1876) — Prussian general and statesman; War Minister in the so-called Imperial Government in Frankfurt (July 1848 to May 1849); took part in suppressing the uprising in Baden and the Palatinate in 1849. — 475
Page me9.612
Pfersmann von Eichthal, Alois (1781-1854) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second chief of the 37th Infantry Regiment; fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 237, 242, 332
Page me9.612
Pfuel, Ernst Heinrich Adolf von (1779-1866) — Prussian general; Governor of Neuchâtel (1832-48); commandant of Berlin (March 1848); suppressed the uprising in Posen in May 1848; Prime Minister and War Minister (September and October 1848). — 69, 138
Page me9.612
Pheiffer, Heinrich — Prussian barrister-attorney, defence counsel for Arnold Bechtold at the trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung editors and contributors on May 29, 1849 in Cologne. — 519
Page me9.612
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 7, 148
Page me9.612
Podalecki — Polish army officer, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; executed by the Austrians in 1849. — 235
Page me9.612
Pongrácz, Baron — royal commissioner in Galicia in 1849. — 405

Page me9.612
Popovich, Marcus — participant in the Serbian national movement, member of the local administration in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40
Page me9.612
Pothmann, Johann (born c. 1823) — German democrat, a member of the Committee of Public Safety and head of the army reserve during the May 1849 Elberfeld uprising; emigrated to Holland after the uprising was defeated. — 447
Page me9.612
Pottinger, Sir Henry (1789-1856) — English diplomat and military figure; commanded English troops during the Opium war with China (1842), Governor of Hong Kong (1843), Governor of Madras (1847-54). — 3
Page me9.612
Prohaska von Guelphenburg, Franz Adolf, Baron (1768-1862) — Austrian general; from 1835 chief of the 7th Infantry Regiment fighting against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 272
Page me9.612
Przyluski, Leon (1789-1865) — Archbishop of Gnesen and Posen (1845-65). — 359

Page Break me9.613

Page me9.613
Puchner, Anton, Baron von (1779-1852) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 9, 17, 25, 39, 94, 100, 112, 113, 114, 152, 154, 158, 159, 189, 235, 237, 242, 243, 251, 279, 287, 294, 303, 319, 331, 366, 457, 458-59
Page me9.613
Puffer, Joseph (b. 1801) — Austrian colonel, later major-general; during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849 commanded the 9th Border (Peterwardein) Infantry Regiment. — 251
Page me9.613
R
Page me9.613
Rabe, Arnold von — Prussian conservative statesman, Minister of Finance in the Manteuffel-Brandenburg Ministry (1848-49). — 439
Page me9.613
Radetzky, Josef, Count of Radetz (1766-1858) — Austrian field marshal; commanded the Austrian troops in Northern Italy from 1831; suppressed the Italian national liberation movement (1848-49). — 107, 148-51, 156, 157, 164-66, 169, 171-76, 253, 280, 293, 317, 462
Page me9.613
Radosavljevic, Thodor — Austrian lieutenant-colonel and politician, Serbian by birth; in 1849 chief of the Peterwardein regimental district in the Military Border area, member of the local administration in the Voivodina; Austrian consul in Belgrade (1851). — 12, 40
Page me9.613

Radowitz, Joseph Maria von (1797-1853) — Prussian general and conservative statesman; a leader of the Right wing in the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49). — 84, 193, 371, 378
Page me9.613
Rajachich (Rajacic), Josef (1785-1861) — Metropolitan of Karlowitz; from 1848 Patriarch; leader of the Right wing in the Serbian national movement (1848-49); ruler of the Voivodina from February to August 1849. — 11, 12, 40, 97, 99, 115, 146, 147, 183, 236, 244, 254, 286, 304, 332
Page me9.613
Ramberg, Georg Heinrich, Baron von (1786-1855) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 10, 29, 90, 94, 185, 233-34, 271, 460
Page me9.613
Ramorino, Gerolamo (1792-1849) — Italian general; fought on the side of the Polish insurgents in 1830 and 1831; commanded the 5th Lombardian Division of the Piedmontese army in 1848 and 1849; his tactics facilitated the victory of the counter-revolutionary Austrian troops; shot by decision of the Piedmontese War Council in May 1849. — 156, 164, 166, 169, 171, 173, 174, 176
Page me9.613
Rastic, Daniel, Baron (1794-1853) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 273
Page me9.613
Rath — Prussian barrister, defence counsel for Korff at the trials of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung editors and contributors held in Cologne on May 29 and 30, 1849. — 519, 521-22
Page me9.613
Raveaux, Franz (1810-1851) — German politician, Cologne deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848 and 1849; in June 1849 one of the five imperial regents; member of the Baden Provisional Government. — 498
Page me9.613
Reichardt, Gustav (1797-1884) — German composer, wrote music for the song “Der Teutschen Vaterland” to words by Ernst Moritz Arndt. — 106, 251, 305
Page me9.613
Reiche — Austrian colonel, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 117
Page me9.613
Reichenbach, Eduard, Count von (1812-1869) — German democrat; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; member of the Central Committee of German Democrats from October 1848. — 33
Page me9.613
Reichetzer, Baron — Austrian major, adjutant of the General Command; fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 279
Page me9.613
Renard, Andreas, Count (1795-1874) — Silesian landowner; deputy to the Second Chamber (Right wing) in 1849. — 88, 138, 139

Page Break me9.614

Page me9.614
Révay, Baron — royal commissioner in Galicia (1849). — 405
Page me9.614
Riedel, Adolf Friedrich Johann (1809-1872) — deputy to the Prussian National Assembly; deputy to the Second Chamber (Right wing) in 1849. — 88, 143, 324-29
Page me9.614
Riedesel zu Eisenbach, Hermann, Baron (d. 1849) — Austrian major, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 273
Page me9.614
Riotte, Karl Nikolaus (born c. 1816) — German democrat, lawyer; deputy to the Second Chamber (1849), member of the Committee of Public Safety during the May 1849 Elberfeld uprising; later emigrated to the USA. — 448
Page me9.614
Rittinghausen, Moritz (1814-1890) — German journalist and politician, petty-bourgeois democrat; participant in the 1848-49 revolution, later member of the German Social-Democratic Party. — 490
Page me9.614
Röhrdanz — German man of letters, was in contact with Right-wing government circles in Prussia. — 281
Page me9.614
Rohrscheidt, von — Prussian official, district president; deputy to the Second Chamber (Centre) in 1849. — 320
Page me9.614
Rudics von Almás, Joseph, Baron — member of the Serbian national movement; a leader of the local administration in the Voivodina (February (1849). — 40
Page me9.614
Rüdiger, Fyodor Vasilyevich, Count (1784-1856) — Russian general, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849; Deputy Governor of the Kingdom of Poland. — 312
Page me9.614
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist, Young Hegelian; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848. — 33-35
Page me9.614
Rukavina, Georg (Dzuro), Baron von Vidovgrad (1777-1849) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, Croat by birth; fought in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 10, 12, 25, 90, 97, 98, 121, 123, 147, 183, 184, 254, 294, 304, 397, 457
Page me9.614
Rupp, Julius (1809-1884) — German pastor, participant in the “Friends of Light” religious movement; deputy to the Second Chamber (Left wing) in 1849. — 320-24
Page me9.614
S
Page me9.614
Sack — Prussian official in Silesia. — 70
Page me9.614

Savoia, Ferdinando, duca di Genova (1822-1855) — son of Charles Albert of Sardinia; fought against Austria in 1848 and 1849. — 156, 165, 166, 175
Page me9.614
Savona — brigade commander in the Piedmontese army (1849), fought against Austria in 1848 and 1849. — 165
Page me9.614
Savoy, Duke of — see Victor Emmanuel II
Page me9.614
Schaeffer, H. — member of the democratic association in Solingen. — 489
Page me9.614
Schapper, Karl (c. 1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League, member of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats; a leader (1848-49) and president (from February to May 1849) of the Cologne Workers' Association. After the revolution, a leader of the sectarian group in the Communist League, later a member of the General Council of the First International. — 282, 372, 489, 490, 495, 501, 503, 504
Page me9.614
Scherer — German barrister; deputy to the Second Chamber (Right wing) in 1849. — 140
Page me9.614
Schlick, zu Bassano und Weisskirchen, Franz Heinrich, Count (1789-1862) — Austrian general, chief of the 4th Hussar Regiment, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 19-21, 27-29, 39, 62, 63, 96, 110, 121, 122, 123, 133, 153-54, 160, 163, 167, 181, 185-86, 187, 233-34, 249, 261, 262, 269-73, 280, 286, 292, 335-36, 343, 361, 381, 396, 408, 457, 458-60
Page me9.614
Schmutz — Austrian captain, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 30
Page me9.614
Schneider, Johannes (1792-1858) — Swiss statesman, member of the Great

Page Break me9.615
Council of the Berne canton and deputy to the National Council (1848-50). — 43

Page me9.615
Schneider II, Karl — German lawyer, democrat, President of the Cologne Democratic Society and member of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats in 1848; defence counsel for Marx and Engels at the trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on February 7, 1849; deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849 — 372, 498
Page me9.615
Schulze-Delitzsch, Franz Hermann (1808-1883) — German economist and liberal politician; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848; a leader of the Progressist Party in the 1860s, author of co-operative projects that detracted workers from the revolutionary struggle. — 143
Page me9.615

Schulzig, Franz Joseph, Baron von (1787-1864) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 20, 62, 178
Page me9.615
Schurter — Austrian general, took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 242
Page me9.615
Schwanbeck, Eugen Alexis (1821-1850) — German journalist, an editor of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 190, 450
Page me9.615
Schwarzenberg, Edmund Leopold Friedrich, Prince zu (1803-1873) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second chief of the 2nd Dragoon Regiment; took part in the suppression of the Italian national liberation movement and in the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 19
Page me9.615
Schwarzenberg, Felix, Prince zu (1800-1852) — Austrian conservative statesman and diplomat; Prime Minister and Foreign Minister (from November 1848 to 1852). — 133, 147, 161, 308, 356, 397
Page me9.615
Seckendorf, August Heinrich Eduard Friedrich, Baron von (1807-1885) — Prussian lawyer and legal officer; deputy to the Second Chamber (Centre) in 1849. — 88
Page me9.615
Sever, A. — prominent figure in the national movement of Transylvanian Romanians, Prefect of the Romanian administration set up in Transylvania in October 1848; a commander of the Romanian volunteers in Transylvania, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 122
Page me9.615
Shakhovskoy, Ivan Leontyevich, Prince (1776-1860) — Russian general. — 312
Page me9.615
Siegel (Sigel), Franz (1824-1902) — petty-bourgeois democrat; supreme commander, then deputy supreme commander of the Baden revolutionary army during the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Switzerland, then to Britain and in 1852 to the USA. — 483
Page me9.615
Simon — hotel owner in Cologne. — 503
Page me9.615
Simons, Ludwig (1803-1870) — German barrister; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848, then Minister of Justice (1849-60). — 328, 329, 439, 445
Page me9.615
Simonyi, Ernst (Ernö) (1821-1882) — participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, after its defeat emigrated. — 163
Page me9.615
Simson, Martin Eduard Sigismund von (1810-1899) — Prussian politician and lawyer; in 1848-49 member and President (from December 1848 to May 1849) of the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); in November 1848 was sent as an imperial commissioner to Berlin to settle the conflict between the King and the Prussian Assembly; later became a National Liberal. — 48

Page me9.615
Simunich, Balthasar, Baron von (1785-1861) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, Serbian by birth; fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 30, 97, 122, 245, 331, 342, 365, 406, 459
Page me9.615
Sivkovich, Johann, Baron von (1779-1857) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, chief of the 41st Infantry Regiment. — 287
Page me9.615
Solaroli, Paolo (1796-1877) — general in the Piedmontese army, fought against Austria in 1848 and 1849. — 174
Page me9.615
Solon (c. 638-c. 558 B.C.) — Greek politician, Athenian legislator. — 88

Page Break me9.616

Page me9.616
Sophia (1805-1872) — Archduchess of Austria, mother of Emperor Francis Joseph I. — 49, 457
Page me9.616
Sossay, Anton, Baron von (1790-1874) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal; commanded a brigade during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 30, 245
Page me9.616
Stadion, Franz, Count von (1806-1853) — Austrian statesman; an organiser of the struggle against the national liberation movement in Galicia and Bohemia; Minister of the Interior (1848-49). — 147, 161, 308, 351, 397
Page me9.616
Stangier, Johann — farmer in the Altenkirchen district, participant in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province. — 339, 373, 375
Page me9.616
Stankovich, Johann — prominent figure in the Serbian national movement, became a member of the local administration of the Voivodina in February 1849. — 40
Page me9.616
Stanojevich, Milija — commander of an auxiliary corps sent by the Principality of Serbia to support the Voivodina Serbs during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 183
Page me9.616
Stedtmann, Karl (1804-1882) — Prussian moderate liberal politician; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Centre); member of the commission for signing an armistice in Malmö (1848) and imperial commissioner in Schleswig-Holstein (September 1848 to March 1849). — 516, 518, 520
Page me9.616
Stein — member of the local administration in the Voivodina (1849). — 40
Page me9.616

Stein — a commander of the Voivodina Serbian troops that fought against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 183
Page me9.616
Stephan (1817-1867) — Austrian Archduke, Palatine in Hungary (1847-48); in September 1848 was appointed commander of the Hungarian army; sabotaged the struggle against Jellachich's counter-revolutionary troops; fled from Hungary. — 239-41, 456
Page me9.616
Stephen Dushan (c. 1308-1355) — King of Serbia (from 1331), recaptured a number of Greek and Slav lands from Byzantium, in 1346 was proclaimed “Tsar of the Serbs and the Greeks”. — 31
Page me9.616
Stminger — member of the local administration in the Voivodina (1849). — 40
Page me9.616
Stojackovic, Alex (b. 1822) — Serbian writer and historian; official of the local administration in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40
Page me9.616
Stojakovich, Georg — participant in the Serbian national movement in 1848 and 1849. — 190
Page me9.616
Stratimirovich, Georg (Dzordze) (1822-1908) — leader of the Serbian national movement in the Voivodina, moderate liberal; commanded the Serbian units in the Austrian army, participated in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 12, 78, 98, 116, 117, 332, 334, 344
Page me9.616
Strobach, Antonín (1814-1856). — Czech lawyer and prominent figure in the national movement, held pro-Austrian views; President of the Austrian Imperial Diet (1848). — 106
Page me9.616
Strotha, Karl Adolf von (1786-1870) — Prussian general, conservative, deputy to the First Chamber, War Minister (November 1848 to February 1850). — 296-98, 320, 439
Page me9.616
Štúr, L'udovít (1815-1856) — Slovak philologist, literary critic and journalist, a representative of Slovak Renaissance and a leader of the national movement; opposing the Hungarian aristocracy's great-power policy, he fought against the Hungarian revolution of 1848-49 in alliance with the Austrians; later advocated pan-Slavism. — 11, 62, 101, 119, 120
Page me9.616
Stürmer, Bartolomäus, Count von (1787-1863) — Austrian diplomat, internuncio in Constantinople (February 1849). — 41
Page me9.616
Stutterheim, Johann, Baron (1803-1870) — Austrian colonel, later major-general, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 113
Page me9.616
Stüve, Johann Karl Bertram (1798-1872) — German politician, liberal; Minister of the Interior of Hanover (1848-50). — 56

Page Break me9.617

Page me9.617
Šuplikac, Johann — prominent figure in the Serbian national movement, member of the local administration in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40, 147
Page me9.617
Svetozazhulitich — member of the Serbian national movement, official of the local administration in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40
Page me9.617
Széchenyis — family of Hungarian aristocrats. — 40
Page me9.617
Szirmay de Szirma, István, Count (1794-1857) — Hungarian aristocrat, opponent of the 1848-49 Hungarian revolution; sentenced to capital punishment by the Hungarian revolutionary Government but the sentence was not executed. — 186
Page me9.617
T
Page me9.617
Tamerlane (or Timur) (1336-1405) — Central Asian soldier and conqueror, founder of a vast state in Asia with its capital in Samarkand. — 49
Page me9.617
Teichbert — Austrian major, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 237
Page me9.617
Thadden-Triglaff, Adolf von (1796-1882) — Prussian landowner from Pomerania, deputy to the United Diet (1847). — 125
Page me9.617
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman; Prime Minister (1836 and 1840); deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848) and the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); head of the Orleanist monarchist party after 1848; crushed the Paris Commune; President of the Republic (1871-73). — 191, 323
Page me9.617
Tietzen — Prussian lieutenant-general. — 442
Page me9.617
Tillier, Johann Anton (1792-1854) — Swiss historian and statesman, President of the Great Council of the Berne canton (1837 and 1848), deputy to the National Council (1848-51); emigrated in 1851. — 45
Page me9.617
Todorovich (Teodorovic), Kusman von (1787-1858) — Austrian general, Serbian by birth; took part in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1849). — 10, 12, 25, 31, 73, 90, 97, 114-15, 147, 163, 229, 251, 254, 319, 334, 425, 457
Page me9.617
Tresckow, Sigismund Otto — German merchant, from 1796 owner of a landed estate in Owinsk (Posen). — 362
Page me9.617

Troost — German democrat, member of the Committee of Public Safety during the May 1849 Elberfeld uprising. — 447
Page me9.617
U
Page me9.617
Unruh, Hans Victor von (1806-1886) — Prussian engineer and politician; in 1848 a leader of the Left Centre in the Prussian National Assembly; President of this Assembly from October 1848; deputy to the Second Chamber (Left wing) in 1849; subsequently a founder of the Progressist Party. — 67
Page me9.617
Urban, Karl, Baron von (1802-1877) — Romanian colonel, later lieutenant-field marshal for the Austrians; commander of the 17th Border (2nd Romanian) Infantry Regiment; Right-wing leader of the Romanian national movement in Transylvania; fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 113, 122, 134, 159
Page me9.617
Uttenhoven (d. 1849) — Prussian army officer, was killed during the May 1849 Elberfeld uprising. — 428
Page me9.617
V
Page me9.617
Veigl von Kriegeslohn, Valentin (1802-1863) — Austrian major-general and then lieutenant-field marshal; commanded a cavalry brigade during the war against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 30, 114, 245, 350
Page me9.617
Vetter, Antal (1803-1882) — Hungarian lieutenant-general, chief of General Staff of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49) and commander-in-chief (March 1849); after the suppression of the revolution a refugee until

Page Break me9.618
1867. — 26, 123, 179, 181, 188, 233, 262, 288, 293, 300, 314, 356, 460

Page me9.618
Victor Emmanuel II (1820-1878) — Duke of Savoy, King of Sardinia (1849-61), King of Italy (1861-78). — 165, 169, 176
Page me9.618
Vincke, Georg, Baron von (1811-1875) — Prussian politician; a leader of the Right wing in the Frankfurt National Assembly in 1848 and 1849; deputy to the Second Chamber (Right wing) in 1849. — 86-88, 125, 143
Page me9.618
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro) (70-19 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 66
Page me9.618
Vogl, Anton (1789-1871) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, took part in the suppression of the national liberation movement in Galicia and the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 11, 303, 304, 317, 319, 330-31, 332, 336-37, 344, 365
Page me9.618

Vogt, Karl (1817-1895) — German natural scientist, vulgar materialist, pettybourgeois democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents (June 1849); emigrated from Germany in 1849; later received subsidies from Napoleon III; libelled Marx and Engels. — 85, 377
Page me9.618
Vucic, Perišic Toma (1786-1859) — Serbian voivode and politician. — 294
Page me9.618
W
Page me9.618
Wachter, Karl — German democrat; a member of the Cologne Committee of Public Safety (September 1848). — 490
Page me9.618
Wachtler — member of the local administration in the Voivodina (1849). — 40
Page me9.618
Waldeck, Benedikt Franz Leo (1802-1870) — German lawyer and radical politician; in 1848 a Left-wing leader and Vice-President of the Prussian National Assembly; subsequently one of the leaders of the Progressist Party. — 137, 140, 141, 323
Page me9.618
Waldemar, Friedrich Wilhelm (1817-1849) — Prussian prince. — 88
Page me9.618
Wallmoden-Gimborn, Ludwig Georg Thedel (1769-1862) — Austrian general, later Master of Ordnance, chief of the 6th Cuirassier Regiment. — 118, 285
Page me9.618
Warsan, Georg — participant in the Serbian national movement, became a member of the local administration in the Voivodina in February 1849. — 40
Page me9.618
Weerth, Georg (1822-1856) — German poet and writer, a member of the Communist League, a founder of proletarian poetry in Germany; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49. — 473, 514, 516, 517, 519, 520
Page me9.618
Welcker, Karl Theodor (1790-1869) — German lawyer, liberal journalist; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre) in 1848 and 1849, imperial ambassador to Vienna. — 47, 377
Page me9.618
Welden, Franz Ludwig, Baron von (1782-1853) — Austrian Master of Ordnance, in 1848 took part in the campaign against the national liberation movement in Italy; commandant of Vienna after the suppression of the October 1848 uprising; in April and May 1849 commander-in-chief of Austrian troops fighting against revolutionary Hungary. — 117, 121, 179, 238-39, 244-45, 284, 286, 288, 293, 304, 316, 318, 331, 333, 335, 336, 342-43, 349-51, 354, 363, 371, 381, 396, 460-61
Page me9.618
Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, 1st Duke of (1769-1852) — British general and statesman, Tory; Prime Minister (1828-30) and Foreign Secretary (December 1834 to April 1835). — 176
Page me9.618
Wenk — Austrian major, fought against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 405

Page me9.618
Wenzel — official of the Cologne Royal Government. — 496
Page me9.618
Wesendonck, Hugo — Prussian lawyer in Düsseldorf; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848 and 1849; deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849. — 320
Page me9.618
Wex — district commissioner in Berhometh. — 289
Page me9.618
Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American labour movement; came

Page Break me9.619
under the influence of "true socialism" in 1846-47; after making the acquaintance of Marx and Engels became their associate; participated in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to the USA after its defeat. — 473

Page me9.619
Weyers, Peter Wilhelm (born c. 1814) — Düsseldorf worker; in 1848 was arrested and tried for spreading revolutionary propaganda. — 372, 374, 387
Page me9.619
Weyll, Bartholomäus Joseph — German lawyer; a member of the Democratic Society, the Committee of Public Safety and the People's Committee in Cologne (1848); delegate to the Second Democratic Congress in Berlin (October 1848). — 490
Page me9.619
Willich, August (1810-1878) — Prussian army officer, retired because of his political views; a member of the Communist League; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising (1849); subsequently a leader of the sectarian group which split from the Communist League in 1850. — 482-83
Page me9.619
Willisen, Karl Wilhelm (1790-1879) — Prussian general and military theorist; royal commissioner in Posen in 1848 and 1849. — 296
Page me9.619
Wimpffen, Maximilian, Baron (1770-1854) — Austrian field marshal, chief of the 13th Infantry Regiment, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849. — 248
Page me9.619
Windischgrätz, Alfred Candidus Ferdinand, Prince zu (1787-1862) — Austrian field marshal, crushed the uprisings in Prague and Vienna (1848); commanded the Austrian army against the Hungarian revolutionaries (1848-49). — 7, 9-10, 13-15, 16, 19, 20, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 38-40, 47, 58-59, 61, 63, 76-78, 91, 92, 94, 96, 99, 102, 110, 111, 115, 117, 118-22, 123, 145, 147, 149, 161, 178, 179-80, 244, 245, 253, 255, 261, 263-64, 268-69, 271, 273-75, 280, 282, 285, 286, 288, 292, 293, 303-04, 315, 316, 345, 349, 354, 405, 408, 431, 445, 457, 458, 460
Page me9.619
Windischgrätz, Alfred Joseph Nicolaus Guntram, Prince (1819-1876) — son of Field Marshal A.C.F. Windischgrätz, major, then lieutenant-field marshal, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849, aide-de-camp at his father's headquarters in 1849. — 286

Page me9.619
Wohlgemuth, Ludwig, Baron (1788-1851) — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, took part in suppressing the revolutionary movement in Italy (1848) and Hungary (1849). — 287, 304, 336, 343, 345, 346, 350-54, 363, 364, 368, 381, 391, 406, 460
Page me9.619
Wolf(f), Ferdinand (1812-1895) — German journalist, a member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848 and 1849. — 473, 489, 490, 514
Page me9.619
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German proletarian revolutionary, a teacher; a member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49), friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 282, 473, 489, 490, 497, 501, 503, 510, 514
Page me9.619
Woroniecki — Prince, Polish army officer, took part in the Hungarian revolution (1848-49); was executed by the Austrians in 1849. — 235
Page me9.619
Wrangel, Friedrich Heinrich Ernst, Count von (1784-1877) — Prussian general, took part in the counter-revolutionary coup d'état in Berlin and the dispersal of the Prussian National Assembly in November 1848. — 33, 56, 108, 109, 430
Page me9.619
Wrbna-Freudenthal, Ladislaus, Count (1795-1849) — Austrian major-general, fought against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 19, 110, 146, 265, 266, 304
Page me9.619
Wronski — Polish army officer, took part in the Hungarian revolution (1848-49); was executed by the Austrians in 1849. — 235
Page me9.619
Wurmser, Dagobert Siegmund, Count (1724-1797) — Austrian field marshal, commander of the Austrian troops in Italy (1796), was defeated by Bonaparte several times and capitulated in the fortress of Mantua. — 231
Page me9.619
Wyss, Franz Salomon (1795-1849) — Austrian major-general; took part in suppressing the October uprising in

Page Break me9.620
Vienna (1848) and in the war against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 28

Z

Page me9.620
Zambeccari, Livio, conte (1802-1862) — Italian military leader, participant in the 1848-49 revolution, head of the volunteer detachments in Modena and Bologna; emigrated after the Republic in Rome was defeated. — 166
Page me9.620

Zanini, Peter — Austrian lieutenant-field marshal, second (1846-48) and then first (from 1848) chief of the 16th Infantry Regiment. — 19, 59, 119, 394
Page me9.620
Zeisberg, Karl, von (1788-1863) — Austrian major-general, later lieutenant-field marshal; fought against revolutionary Hungary (1848-49). — 28, 58, 72, 77, 110
Page me9.620
Zichy, Ferenc, Count (1811-1897) — Hungarian lawyer; Chairman pro tem in the Governor's Council of Hungary (1847), State Secretary in the Batthyány Government (1848), Supreme Commissioner in the Paskevich army fighting against revolutionary Hungary (1849). — 239
Page me9.620
Zitta, von — Austrian major-general, fought against revolutionary Hungary in 1848 and 1849, commander of an engineer corps besieging Komorn in the spring of 1849. — 344
Page me9.620
Zivanovich, Jacob (1808-1861) — participant in the Serbian national movement, a member of the local administration in the Voivodina (February 1849). — 40, 147
Page me9.620
Zweiffel — Prussian official; Chief Public Prosecutor in Cologne; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848. — 340

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me9.620
Atta Troll — a bear, title character of Heine's satirical poem; typifies a philistine playing politics and distinguished by his phrase-mongering, primitive views, misanthropic dislike of jokes and humour. — 323
Page me9.620
Christ, Jesus (Bib.). — 108
Page me9.620
Don Quixote — title character of Cervantes' novel. — 131, 161, 241, 292
Page me9.620
Eckart — hero of German medieval legends loyal guard. In the Tannhäuser legend, he guards the mountain of Venus, warning those who approach it of the danger of Venus' charms. — 193
Page me9.620
Jesus — see Christ, Jesus
Page me9.620
John, Saint (the Apostle) (Bib.). — 66
Page me9.620
Jove — see Jupiter
Page me9.620
Jupiter — supreme Roman deity. — 66
Page me9.620
Lycurgus — legendary legislator of ancient Sparta, said to have lived in the 9th-8th centuries B.C. — 88
Page me9.620

Michel — a name used ironically to denote a German philistine. — 490
Page me9.620
Möros — character from Schiller's ballade “Bürgschaft”. — 377
Page me9.620
Münchausen, Baron — character from German humorous adventure stories collected into book form by the German writer Rudolf Erich Raspe (second half of the 18th century) and published in English as the character's recollections: main character of Karl Immermann's novel Münchhausen, eine Geschichte in Arabesken (1838). — 275
Page me9.620
Perceval (also Percival, Percivale) — character from the epics about King Arthur and his knights. — 355
Page me9.620
Schnapphahnski — main character of Georg Weerth's satirical novel Leben und Taten des berühmten Ritters Schnapphahnski, whose prototype was a Prussian junker, Prince Lichnowski. — 516, 517
Page me9.620
Themis (Gr. Myth.) — goddess of justice. — 67

Page Break me9.621

INDEX OF QUOTED
AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me9.621
The Bourgeoisie and the Counter-Revolution (present edition, Vol. 8) — Die Bourgeoisie und die Kontrerevolution. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 165, 169, 170, 183; 10., 15., 16., 31. Dezember 1848. — 453
Page me9.621
The Deeds of the Hohenzollern Dynasty (this volume) — Die Taten des Hauses Hohenzollern. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 294, 10. Mai 1849; Deutsche Londoner Zeitung Nr. 218, 1. Juni 1849. — 437, 511-12
Page me9.621
Drigalski — Legislator, Citizen and Communist (present edition, Vol. 8) — Drigalski der Gesetzgeber, Bürger und Kommunist. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 153, 26. November 1848. — 70, 432
Page me9.621
Further Contribution on the Old-Prussian Financial Administration (present edition, Vol. 8) — Weiterer Beitrag zur altpreußischen Finanzwirtschaft. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 229, 23. Februar 1849. — 510
Page me9.621
The Hohenzollern General Plan of Reform (this volume) — Der Hohenzollern'sche Gesamtreformplan. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 246, 15. März 1849. — 88, 125
Page me9.621

The Hohenzollern Press Bill (this volume) — Der Hohenzollern'sche Preßgesetzentwurf. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 252, 22. März 1849; Nr. 253, 23. März 1849. — 69
Page me9.621
Lassalle (present edition, Vol. 8) — Lassalle. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 219, 237; 11. Februar, 4. März 1849. — 339, 372
Page me9.621
The “Model State” of Belgium (present edition, Vol. 7) — Der “Musterstaat” Belgien. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 68, 7. August 1848. — 42
Page me9.621
The Proceedings against Lassalle (present edition, Vol. 8) — Lassalle's Prozess. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 238, 6. März 1849. — 339, 372

Page Break me9.622

Page me9.622
Prussian Financial Administration under Bodelschwingh and Co. (present edition, Vol. 8) — Preußische Finanzwirtschaft unter Bodelschwingh und Konsorten. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 224, 17. Februar 1849. — 510
Page me9.622
Public Prosecutor “Hecker” and the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 7) — Der Staatsprokurator “Hecker” und die Neue Rheinische Zeitung. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 129, 29. Oktober 1848. — 453
Page me9.622
Reply of the King of Prussia to the Delegation of the National Assembly (present edition, Vol. 7) — Antwort des Königs von Preußen an die Deputation der National-Versammlung. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 120, 19. Oktober 1848. — 452
Page me9.622
The Revolutionary Movement (present edition, Vol. 8) — Die revolutionäre Bewegung. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 184, 1. Januar 1849. — 454
Page me9.622
Speech on the Question of Free Trade (present edition, Vol. 6) — Discours sur la question du libre échange. Bruxelles, 1848. — 4
Page me9.622
The Victory of the Counter-Revolution in Vienna (present edition, Vol. 7) — Sieg der Kontrerevolution zu Wien. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 136, 7. November 1848. — 452-53
Page me9.622
Wage Labour and Capital (this volume) — Lohnarbeit und Kapital. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 264, 265, 266, 267, 269; 5., 6., 7., 8., 11. April 1849. — 504, 510

Engels, Frederick
Page me9.622
The Economic Congress (present edition, Vol. 6) — Der ökonomische Kongreß. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung Nr. 76, 23. September 1847. — 4
Page me9.622

The Frankfurt Assembly Debates the Polish Question (present edition, Vol. 7) — Die Polendebatte in Frankfurt. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 70, 73, 81, 82, 86, 90, 91, 93, 96; 9., 12., 20., 22., 26., 31. August, 1., 3., 7. September 1848. — 359
Page me9.622
The Free Trade Congress at Brussels (present edition, Vol. 6) — The Free Trade Congress at Brussels. In: The Northern Star No. 520, October 9, 1847. — 4
Page me9.622
[From the Hungarian Theatre of War] (present edition, Vol. 8) — [Vom ungarischen Kriegsschauplatz.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 237, 4. März 1849, Zweite Ausgabe. — 31
Page me9.622
[From the Theatre of War] (this volume) — [Vom Kriegsschauplatz.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 247, 16. März 1849, Außerordentliche Beilage. — 91
Page me9.622
Hüser (present edition, Vol. 7) — Hüser. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 1, 1. Juni 1848. — 452
Page me9.622
A Magyar Victory (present edition, Vol. 8) — Sieg der Magyaren. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 238, 6. März 1849. — 9, 31

Page Break me9.623

Page me9.623
[A Magyar Victory] (this volume) — [Sieg der Magyaren.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 271, 13. April 1849. — 271
Page me9.623
The Struggle in Hungary (present edition, Vol. 8) — Der Kampf in Ungarn. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 212, 3. Februar 1849. — 15

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick
Page me9.623
The First Trial of the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 8) — Der erste Preßprozeß der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 221, 14. Februar 1849. — 340, 452

Marx, Karl or Engels, Frederick
Page me9.623
The Agreement Assembly of June 15 (present edition, Vol. 7) — Die Vereinbarungsversammlung vom 15. Juni. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 18, 18. Juni 1848. — 313
Page me9.623
The Russian Note (present edition, Vol. 7) — Die russische Note. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 64, 3. August 1848. — 311
Page me9.623

Speech from the Throne (present edition, Vol. 8) — Die Thronrede. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 234, 235; 1., 2. März 1849. — 65, 86

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me9.623
Arndt, E.M. Des Teutschen Vaterland. In: Arndt, E.M. Lieder für Teutsche im Jahr der Freiheit 1813, Leipzig, 1813. — 106, 251, 305
Page me9.623
[Bassermann an Brandenburg. Vom 2. Mai 1849.] In: Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger Nr. 125, 8. Mai 1849. — 417
Page me9.623
Beaumarchais, P.A.C. La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro. — 340
Page me9.623
BibleThe Old Testament
Exodus. — 67
The New Testament
The Revelations of St. John. — 66
Page me9.623
Bowring, J. [Speech at the Congress of Economists in Brussels, September 18, 1847.] Summary in: Journal des économistes, t. XVIII, Paris, 1847. — 4
Page me9.623
Brandenburg, F.W. [Speech at the sitting of the Second Chamber, April 2, 1849.] In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Berlin, 1849. — 193
Page me9.623
[Brandenburg an Bassermann. Vom 3. Mai 1849.] In: Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger Nr. 125, 8. Mai 1849. — 417
Page me9.623
Bürger, G.A. Lenore. Ballade. — 87
Page me9.623
Ça ira (French revolutionary song, end of the 18th century). — 446
Page me9.623
Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de. Coloquio de los perros (from Novelas ejemplares). — 443

Page Break me9.624
Page me9.624
Cramer, C. Polizeispione. In: Der Wächter am Rhein Nr. 51, 6. Mai 1849. — 450
Page me9.624
Diez, F. Grammatik der romanischen Sprachen. Th. 1-3, Bonn, 1836-1844. — 325
Page me9.624
Freiligrath, F. Abschiedswort der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung. — 509, 510
Page me9.624
Goethe, J.W. von. Faust. Eine Tragödie. — 371 — Westöstlicher Diwan. — 66
Page me9.624

Harries, H. Lied für den dänischen Unterthan, an seines Königs Geburtstag zu singen. In: Harries, H. Gedichte. Zweiter Theil, Altona, 1804. — 322
Page me9.624
Haschka, L.L. Gott erhalte Franz den Kaiser! Verfasset von Lorenz Leopold Haschka, in Musik gesetzt von Joseph Haydn. Zum ersten Male abgesungen den 12. Februar 1797. Wien, 1797. — 107
Page me9.624
Heine, H. Atta Troll. Ein Sommernachtstraum. — 323 — Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen. — 446
— Der Wechselbalg. Zeitgedicht. — 418
Page me9.624
Horatius Flaccus, Quintus. Ars Poetica, 139. — 15
Page me9.624
Jesus meine Zuversicht! (Prussian religious song, mid-17th century). — 108
Page me9.624
Jeszcze Polska nie zginela (Polish anthem, words by J. Wybicki). — 149
Page me9.624
Kock, P. de L'amant de la lune. Paris, s.a. — 40
Page me9.624
Korff, H. 14. Bürgerwehr-Companie. [Invitation to a Meeting of the 14th Company of the Civic Militia.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 297, 13. Mai 1849, Beilage. — 521
Page me9.624
[Lassalle, F.] [Address on Behalf of the Düsseldorf Civic Militia to the National Assembly, November 19, 1848.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 149, 22. November 1848. — 384
Page me9.624
Lassalle, F. [Letter to Johann Stangier, November 21, 1848.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 277, 20. April 1849, Zweite Ausgabe. — 339, 373, 375
Page me9.624
Ledru-Rollin, A. [Speech in the Legislative Assembly, June 11, 1849.] In: Le Moniteur universel No. 163, 12 juin 1849. — 478
Page me9.624
[Radowitz, J.M.] Deutschland und Friedrich Wilhelm IV, Hamburg, 1848. — 193
Page me9.624
Rajachich, J. [Announcement. Gross-Kikinda, February 24, 1849.] In: Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen Nr. 61, 13. März 1849. — 99
Page me9.624
Ruge, A. Erklärung der Redaction der “Reform”. In: Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung Nr. 67, 8. März 1849, Beilage. — 33-34
Page me9.624
Schiller, F. Die Bürgschaft. Ballade. — 377, 394

Page Break me9.625
Page me9.625
Schumacher, B.G. Heil Dir im Siegerkranz (Prussian anthem). — 322
Page me9.625

Schwanbeck, A. Erklärung. In: Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 117, 17. Mai 1849. — 450
Page me9.625
Vaticinium Lehninense (Latin poem, end of the 17th century). — 421
Page me9.625
Virgil. Bucolica. Ecloga III. Palaemon. — 66
Page me9.625
Weerth, G. Leben und Taten des berühmten Ritters Schnapphahnski. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, August, September u. Dezember 1848, und Januar 1849. — 517
Page me9.625
Wolff, W. Die Schlesische Milliarde. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, März-April 1849. — 510

DOCUMENTS

Page me9.625
Allerhöchste Cabinetsorder vom 13. März 1833 betreffend den Ankauf subhastirter größerer Besitzungen polnischer Gutsbesitzer in der Provinz Posen für Rechnung des Staats und deren Wiederveräußerung an Erwerber deutscher Abkunft. In: Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. 1-9. Frankfurt a. M. und Leipzig, 1848-1849, Bd. 2. — 360
Page me9.625
Allerhöchste Kabinetsorder vom 6ten März 1821, betreffend die Strafgesetze und das Verfahren in den Rheinprovinzen bei Verbrechen und Vergehungen gegen den Staat und dessen Oberhaupt und bei Dienstvergehen der Verwaltungsbeamten. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1821, Nr. 3. — 128-29, 131
Page me9.625
Allgemeines Landrecht für die Preußischen Staaten. Th. 1-2. Berlin, 1794. — 52, 53, 54, 65, 126-29, 131
Page me9.625
An die Königl. Ober-Präsidenten. Vom 7. Mai 1849. In: Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger Nr. 125, 8. Mai 1849. — 417
Page me9.625
19. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 30. Januar 1849. In: Wiener Zeitung Nr. 27, 1. Februar 1849; Die Presse Nr. 27, 1. Februar 1849. — 160
Page me9.625
26. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 3. März 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 107, 3. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Die Presse Nr. 54, 4. März 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 54, 4. März 1849; Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 56, 7. März 1849, Zweite Ausgabe. — 19-21, 24, 25
Page me9.625
27. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 5. März 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 110, 6. März 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe; Die Presse Nr. 55, 6. März 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 55, 6. März 1849; Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 59, 10. März 1849, Beilage. — 28-30, 115
Page me9.625

28. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 14. März 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 125, 15. März 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe; Die Presse Nr. 63, 15. März 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 63, 15. März 1849. — 113-14, 115, 117, 121
Page me9.625
33. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 7. April 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 169, 9. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Österreichischer Correspondent Nr. 82, 11. April 1849, Beilage; Die Presse Nr. 85, 10. April 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 84, 9. April 1849. — 271-75, 284
Page me9.625
34. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 9. April 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 169, 9. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Österreichischer Correspondent Nr. 82, 11. April 1849, Beilage; Die Presse Nr. 85, 10. April 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 85, 9. April 1849, Abend-Beilage; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 85, 10. April 1849. — 268-75, 284

Page Break me9.626
Page me9.626
35. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 24. April 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 195, 24. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Österreichischer Correspondent Nr. 94, 25. April 1849; Die Presse Nr. 98, 25. April 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 97, 24. April 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 98, 24. April 1849, Abend-Beilage. — 352-54
Page me9.626
Bericht über die Verhältnisse vor Comorn. In: Wiener Zeitung Nr. 79, 3. April 1849; Die Presse Nr. 80, 4. April 1849. — 245-46
Page me9.626
Böhm. Kundmachung. Vom 18. April 1849. In: Wiener Zeitung Nr. 93, 19. April 1849; Der Lloyd Nr. 187, 19. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe (summary). — 331 —
Kundmachung. Wien, 24. April 1849. In: Die Presse Nr. 98, 25. April 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 98, 25. April 1849. — 363-64
Page me9.626
Censur-Edict vom 19. December 1788. In: Sammlung Preußischer Gesetze und Verordnungen.... Bd. 1, Abt. 7, Halle, 1823. — 419
Page me9.626
Code civil — see Code Napoléon
Page me9.626
Code d'instruction criminelle. Paris, 1809. — 372
Page me9.626
Code Napoléon. Édition originale et seule officielle. Paris, 1808. — 52-53
Page me9.626
Code pénal, ou code des delits et des peines. Cologne, 1810. — 125, 126, 128, 129-31, 368, 383-85, 387
Page me9.626
Collection compléte des lois, décrets, ordonnances, réglemens et avis du Conseil d'Etat, par J.B. Duvergier, t. 35, année 1835. Paris, 1836. — 50, 52, 65, 127
Page me9.626
Edict vom 9. Juli [1788] die Religions-Verfassung in den Preußischen Staaten betr. In: Sammlung Preußischer Gesetze und Verordnungen.... Bd. 1, Abt. 7, Halle, 1823. — 419
Page me9.626

Entwurf der Constitutionsurkunde nach den Beschlüssen des Verfassungsausschusses. Later published in: Protokolle des Verfassungs-Ausschusses im Oesterreichischen Reichstage 1848-1849. Leipzig, 1885. — 47
Page me9.626
Entwurf des Strafgesetzbuchs für die preußischen Staaten, nebst dem Entwurf des Gesetzes über die Einführung des Strafgesetzbuches und dem Entwurf des Gesetzes über die Kompetenz und das Verfahren in dem Bezirke des Appellationsgerichtshofes zu Köln, Berlin, 1847. — 125, 126-31
Page me9.626
Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847. Th. 1-4. Berlin, 1847, Th. 4. — 50, 125-27, 128, 129-32
Page me9.626
Ferdinand I. [Rescript of October 3, 1848.] In: Wiener Zeitung Nr. 275, 5. Oktober 1848; Journal des Oesterreichischen Lloyd Nr. 232, 6. Oktober 1848; Sammlung der für Ungarn erlassenen Allerhöchsten Manifeste und Proklamationen, dann der Kundmachungen der Oberbefehlshaber der Kaiserlichen Armee in Ungarn, 1. Heft. Ofen, 1849. — 456
Page me9.626
Franz Joseph I. [Manifesto attached to Reichsverfassung für das Kaiserthum Oesterreich, March 4, 1849.] In: Reichsverfassung für das Kaiserthum Oesterreich sammt den Manifesten. Wien, 1849. — 263
Page me9.626
Freudige Nachricht. In: Agramer Zeitung, 31. März 1849; Der Lloyd Nr. 157, 2. April 1849; Österreichischer Correspondent Nr. 77, 4. April 1849. — 246, 249

Page Break me9.627
Page me9.627
Friedrich-Wilhelm III. An Mein Volk. Vom 17. März 1813. Later published in: Urkunden der Deutschen Erhebung, Originalwiedergabe in Faksimiledrucken der wichtigsten Aufrufe, Erlasse, Flugschriften, Lieder und Zeitungsnummern. Als Ergänzung aller Erinnerungsschriften hrsg. von Friedrich Schulze. Leipzig, 1913. — 464— Verordnung über die Organisation der Landwehr. Vom 17. März 1813. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischer Staaten. Jg. 1813, Nr. 7. — 138
Page me9.627
Friedrich-Wilhelm IV. An Mein Volk. Vom 15. Mai 1849. In: Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger Nr. 133, 16. Mai 1849. — 464, 465— An mein Volk und an die deutsche Nation. Den 21. März 1848. In: Allgemeine Preußische Zeitung Nr. 82, 22. März 1848. — 109— Neujahrsgratulation 1849 an das Heer. Potsdam, den 1. Januar 1849. In: Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger Nr. 3, 3. Januar 1849. — 23, 56, 69, 297, 298, 360, 402, 421, 432, 444, 464
— Rede des Königs, gehalten bei der Huldigungsfeier in Berlin, am 15. Oktober 1840. In: Reden Sr. Majestät des Königs von Preußen, Friedrich Wilhelm IV. an sein Volk. Gütersloh, 1847. — 194
— Thronrede am 11. April 1847. In: Der Erste Vereinigte Landtag in Berlin 1847. Th. 1, Berlin, 1847. — 50, 53, 65, 66, 86, 421, 441, 464-66
Page me9.627

Geschäfts-Ordnung für die Zweite Kammer. In: Sammlung sämmtlicher Drucksachen der Zweiten Kammer. Bd. 1, Nr. 1, Berlin, 1849. — 320
Page me9.627
Gesetz, betreffend den Schutz der constituirenden Nationalversammlung und der Beamten der Centralgewalt vom 10. Oktober 1848. In: Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. 1-9. Frankfurt a. M. und Leipzig, 1848-1849. Bd. 4. — 377
Page me9.627
Gesetz-Entwurf, betreffend das Anheften von Anschlagzetteln und Plakaten in Städten und Ortschaften, so wie den Verkauf und das Vertheilen von Druckschriften oder bildlichen Darstellungen in öffentlichen Straßen vom 2. März 1849. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 50, 51, 53, 54, 65, 295, 320-26, 328-29, 358
Page me9.627
Gesetz-Entwurf, betreffend das Recht, durch Wort, Schrift, Druck und bildliche Darstellung seine Gedanken frei zu äußern vom 2. März 1849. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 51-54, 65, 125-32, 295, 358
Page me9.627
Gesetz-Entwurf, betreffend die Verhütung eines die gesetzliche Freiheit und Ordnung gefährdenden Mißbrauches des Versammlungs- und Vereinigungs-Rechts vom 2. März 1849. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 50-51, 53, 54, 125, 295, 358
Page me9.627
Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten.
— 1813. — 138
— 1815. — 420
— 1816. — 195, 295-96, 387, 412, 434, 466

Page Break me9.628
— 1820. — 420
— 1821. — 127-29, 131
— 1848. — 47, 52, 53-54, 86, 87, 129, 131, 140-42, 295, 321-22, 357, 370, 377, 385, 387, 430-32, 438, 440, 441, 445, 518 — 1849. — 430-31, 438, 440-46, 465
Page me9.628
Havas, J. Proclamation vom 22. April 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 197, 25. April 1849; Die Presse Nr. 99, 26. April 1849. — 364
Page me9.628
[Karlsbader Beschlüsse. 1819.] In: Welcker, K. Wichtige Urkunden für den Rechtszustand der deutschen Nation..., Mannheim, 1844. — 420
Page me9.628

Kossuth, L. [Proclamation vom 7. April 1849.] In: Pester Zeitung Nr. 961, 25. April 1849; Neue Oder-Zeitung, beginning of May 1849. — 407
Page me9.628
Landwehr-Ordnung. Vom 21sten November 1815. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1816, Nr. 4. — 195, 295-96, 412, 434, 466
Page me9.628
Motive zu dem Entwurfe eines Gesetzes, betreffend das Anheften von Anschlagezetteln und Plakaten in Städten und Ortschaften, sowie den Verkauf und das Vertheilen von Druckschriften oder bildlichen Darstellungen in öffentlichen Straßen vom 2. März 1849. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 50, 51, 65, 295
Page me9.628
Motive zu dem Entwurfe eines Gesetzes, betreffend das Recht, durch Wort, Schrift, Druck und bildliche Darstellung seine Gedanken frei zu äußern vom 2. März 1849. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 51, 65, 125-32, 295
Page me9.628
Motive zu dem Entwurfe eines Gesetzes zur Verhütung eines die gesetzliche Freiheit und Ordnung gefährdenden Mißbrauchs des Versammlungs- und Vereinigungs-Rechts vom 2. März 1849. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 50, 65, 125, 295
Page me9.628
[Prussian Note of Brandenburg, April 28, 1849.] In: Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger Nr. 117, 30. April 1849. — 377, 378
Page me9.628
[Przyluski, L.] Korrespondenz des Erzbischofs von Posen Przyluski mit dem Berliner Kabinet. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 5, 7, 10, 14, 38, 39; 5., 7., 10., 14. Juni, 8., 9. Juli 1848. Also in: [Brodowski J., Kraszewski J., Potworowski G.] Zur Beurtheilung der polnischen Frage im Großherzogthum Posen im Jahre 1848, Berlin [1848]. — 359
Page me9.628
Reichsverfassung für das Kaiserthum Österreich. Wien, 1849. — 12, 47, 48, 105, 149, 261, 263
Page me9.628
Ruge, A. Wahl-Manifest der radicalen Reformpartei für Deutschland. In: Die Reform Nr. 16, 16. April 1848. — 34
Page me9.628
Sammlung Preußischer Gesetze und Verordnungen, welche auf die allgemeine Deposital-, Hypotheken-, Gerichts-, Criminal- und Städte-Ordnung, auf das allgemeine Landrecht, auf den Anhang zum allgemeinen Landrechte und zur allgemeinen Gerichtsordnung, auf die landschaftlichen Credit-Reglements und auf Provinzial-

Page Break me9.629

und Statutar-Rechte Bezug haben, nach der Zeitfolge geordnet von Carl Ludwig Heinrich Rabe, Bd. 1, Abt. 7, Enthaltend die Jahre 1782 bis 1789, Halle, 1823. — 419
Page me9.629
Schluß Acte des wiener Congresses, vom 9. Juni 1815, und Bundes Acte oder Grundvertrag des teutschen Bundes, vom 8. Juni 1815. Beide... vollst. hrsg. von D. Johann Ludwig Klüber. 2. Aufl., Erlangen, 1818. — 420
Page me9.629
Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Beilage zum Preußischen Staats-Anzeiger. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1849. — 50-54, 65, 86-89, 125-43, 193, 295-98, 320-28, 330, 357, 358
Page me9.629
Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. 1-9. Frankfurt a. M. und Leipzig, 1848-1849. — 360, 377
Page me9.629
Verfassung des deutschen Reiches vom 28. März 1849. In: Verhandlungen der deutschen verfassunggebenden Reichsversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. 4. Frankfurt, 1849. — 377, 378, 465
Page me9.629
Verfassungsurkunde für den Preußischen Staat. Vom 5. Dezember 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1848, Nr. 55. — 47, 52, 86, 131, 135-38, 139-43, 295, 321-22, 357, 370, 387, 430-32, 440-46, 518
Page me9.629
Verhandlungen der constituirenden Versammlung für Preußen, 1848. Bd. 1-8. Berlin, Bd. 9 (Suppl.-Bd.). Leipzig, 1849. — 135, 138
Page me9.629
Verordnung, betreffend die Abberufung der preußischen Abgeordneten von der National-Versammlung zu Frankfurt a. M. Vom 14. Mai 1849. In: Neue Preußische Zeitung Nr. 112, 16. Mai 1849. — 438-39
Page me9.629
Verordnung, betreffend die Auflösung der zweiten und die Vertagung der ersten Kammer. Vom 27. April 1849. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1849, Nr. 13. — 430
Page me9.629
Verordnung, betreffend das Verfahren bei politischen und Pressvergehen in der Rheinprovinz und die Wiederherstellung des Rheinischen Strafrechts und Strafverfahrens bei politischen und Amtsverbrechen. Vom 15. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1848, Nr. 15. — 54, 129
Page me9.629
Verordnung über den Belagerungszustand. Vom 10. Mai 1849. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1849, Nr. 15. — 431-32, 438, 440-45, 465
Page me9.629
Verordnung über die zu bildende Repräsentation des Volks. Vom 22ten Mai 1815. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1815, Nr. 9. — 420
Page me9.629

Verordnung über einige Grundlagen der künftigen Preußischen Verfassung. Vom 6. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1848, Nr. 11. — 86, 385
Page me9.629
Verordnung über die Herstellung des Rheinischen Zivilgesetzbuchs in Betreff der Schließung der Ehe für die zum Bezirke des Rheinischen Appellations-Gerichtshofes gehörigen Landestheile des ehemaligen Großherzogthums Berg. Vom 15. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1848, Nr. 15. — 129
Page me9.629
Verordnung über die Wahl der Preußischen Abgeordneten zur deutschen Nationalversammlung. Vom 11. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1848, Nr. 13. — 438

Page Break me9.630

Page me9.630
Verordnung wegen der künftigen Behandlung des gesammten Staatsschulden-Wesens. Vom 17ten Januar 1820. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1820, Nr. 2. — 420
Page me9.630
Wahlgesetz für die zur Vereinbarung der Preußischen Staats-Verfassung zu berufende Versammlung. Vom 8. April 1848. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. Jg. 1848, Nr. 12. — 86
Page me9.630
Welden, F. An die K.K. Armee in Ungarn. Vom 17. April 1849. In: Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 95, 21. April 1849, Außerordentliche Beilage; Der Lloyd Nr. 183, 17. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Österreichischer Correspondent Nr. 88, 18. April 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 91, 17. April 1849. — 316, 331, 349 — Proclamation. Vor Comorn, 30. März 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 157, 2. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe. — 238-39
Page me9.630
Windischgrätz, A. An die Bewohner Ungarns. Ofen, 11. März. In: Wiener Zeitung Nr. 64, 15. März 1849, Abend-Beilage. — 120
— Kundmachung. Ofen, 21. März 1849. In: Wiener Zeitung Nr. 74, 27. März 1849, Abend-Beilage. — 178
— Proclamation. Ofen, am 23. Februar 1849. In: Pester Zeitung, between February 24 and 27, 1849; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 51, 28. Februar 1849, Abend-Beilage; Der Lloyd Nr. 101, 28. Februar 1849, Abendblatt. — 10
— Proclamation. Ofen, 8. März 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 121, 12. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 61, 13. März 1849. — 92
— Verordnung. Ofen, 8. März 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 121, 12. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe; Wiener Zeitung Nr. 61, 13. März 1849. — 94
— Verordnung. Ofen, 10. März 1849. In: Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 66, 18. März 1849, Zweite Ausgabe. — 118-19
Page me9.630

Wrbna, L. Bulletin. Ofen, 5. April 1849. In: Der Lloyd Nr. 165, 7. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe. — 265
— Kundmachung. Vom 7. April 1849. In: Allgemeine Zeitung (Augsburg) Nr. 103, 13. April 1849; Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 90, 15. April 1849, Zweite Ausgabe; Der Lloyd Nr. 171, 10. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe. — 283

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS
PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me9.630
Allgemeine Zeitung (Augsburg) Nr. 65, 6. März 1849: Oesterreich. — 27
— Nr. 65, 6. März 1849: Wien, 3. März. — 24-25
— Nr. 65, 6. März 1849: Pesth, 26. Febr. — 31
— Nr. 66, 7. März 1849: Wien (näheres über die Schlacht bei Kapolna). — 38-39
— Nr. 68, 9. März 1849: Wien, 5. März. — 58-60
— Nr. 72, 13. März 1849: Abony bei Szolnok, 6. März. — 95
— Nr. 72, 13. März 1849: Pesth, 8. März. — 95, 96
— Nr. 76, 17. März 1849: Wien, 14. März. — 110
— Nr. 84, 25. März 1849: Wien, 21. März. — 161
— Nr. 85, 26. März 1849: Pesth, 21. März. — 167
— Nr. 88, 29. März 1849, Beilage: Drei Monate des ungarischen Kriegs. — 187
— Nr. 91, 1. April 1849: Prag, 25. März. — 229
— Nr. 92, 2. April 1849: Pesth, 27. März. — 188, 233

Page Break me9.631
— Nr. 93, 3. April 1849: Pesth, 29. März. — 241
— Nr. 93, 3. April 1849: Wien, 31. März. — 235
— Nr. 99, 9. April 1849: Pesth, 4. April. — 261
— Nr. 100, 10. April 1849: Pesth, 5. April. — 261
— Nr. 101, 11. April 1849: Pesth, 6. April. — 261
— Nr. 105, 15. April 1849: Wien, 12. April. — 292-93
— Nr. 106, 16. April 1849: Wien, 13. April. — 299
— Nr. 109, 19. April 1849: Wien, 15. April. — 318
— Nr. 110, 20. April 1849: Von der walachischen Gränze, 8. April. — 337-38
— Nr. 112, 22. April 1849: Wien, 19. April. — 336
— Nr. 113, 23. April 1849: Wien, 20. April. — 343
Page me9.631
Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen Nr. 51, 1. März 1849, Beilage: Agram, 25. Februar. — 11-12
— Nr. 52, 2. März 1849: Pest, 25. Febr. — 10
— Nr. 52, 2. März 1849, Zweite Beilage: Wien, 28. Febr. — 15
— Nr. 55, 6. März 1849: Agram. — 40-41
— Nr. 55, 6. März 1849: Maria-Teresiopel (Subotica). — 31
— Nr. 56, 7. März 1849, Erste Beilage: Von der Drave, 27. Feb. — 73, 74
— Nr. 59, 10. März 1849: Agram (A.Z.). — 73
— Nr. 59, 10. März 1849: Pest, 5. März. — 72

— Nr. 59, 10. März 1849: Pest, 6. März. — 73
— Nr. 60, 11. März 1849: Agram, 5. März. — 98
— Nr. 60, 12. März 1849, Zweite Beilage: Pest, 8. März. — 96, 97
— Nr. 60, 12. März 1849, Zweite Beilage: Von der Save, 1. März. — 98-99
— Nr. 61, 13. März 1849: Pest, 9. März. — 95-96, 100
— Nr. 61, 13. März 1849: Semlin, 4. März. — 99
— Nr. 61, 13. März 1849: Von der Drave, 8. März. — 97, 98, 101
— Nr. 62, 14. März 1849: Hermannstadt, 26. Februar. — 114-15
— Nr. 62, 14. März 1849: Pest, 10. März. — 116, 118
— Nr. 62, 14. März 1849, Zweite Beilage: Pest. — 118-19
— Nr. 62, 14. März 1849, Zweite Beilage: Von der Save, 9. März. — 115
— Nr. 63, 15. März 1849: Kaschau, 3. März. — 119
— Nr. 63, 15. März 1849: Von der Drave, 9. März. — 116
— Nr. 65, 17. März 1849: (Ssllv. Z.). — 123
— Nr. 65, 17. März 1849, Beilage: Pest, 13. März. — 133
— Nr. 70, 23. März 1849: Zara, 13. März. — 162
— Nr. 71, 24. März 1849: Pest, 20. März. — 153-55
— Nr. 71, 24. März 1849: Von der Drave, 18. März. — 155
— Nr. 73, 27. März 1849: Temešvar, 17. März. — 183-84
— Nr. 74, 28. März 1849: Beckerek, 13. März (Südsl. Ztg). — 184
— Nr. 74, 28. März 1849: Cernowic, am 21. März. — 182
— Nr. 74, 28. März 1849: Kecskemet, 15. März (M.N.). — 182-83
— Nr. 75, 29. März 1849: Pest, 25. März. — 187
— Nr. 78, 1. April 1849: Pest, 27. März. — 188
— Nr. 81, 5. April 1849: LC Wien, 3. April. — 244
— Nr. 81, 5. April 1849: Semlin, 28. März. — 244
— Nr. 81, 5. April 1849: Von der Drave, 30. März. — 250-51
— Nr. 87, 12. April 1849: Cernowic, 5. April. — 287
— Nr. 88, 13. April 1849: Von der Drave, 7. April. — 289
— Nr. 89, 14. April 1849: Aus der Slovakei. — 299-300
— Nr. 98, 25. April 1849: Preßburg, 22. April. — 365

Page Break me9.632
— Nr. 98, 25. April 1849: Wien, 23. April. — 365-66
— Nr. 103, 1. Mai 1849: Aus Schlesien, 28. April. — 404-05
— Nr. 103, 1. Mai 1849: Von der galizisch-schlesischen Grenze, 28. April. — 404
Page me9.632
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung Nr. 68, 9. März 1849: Wien, 5. März. — 39-40
— Nr. 73, 14. März 1849: Wien, 10. März. — 78
— Nr. 74, 15. März 1849, Beilage: Hermannstadt, 15. Febr. — 93
— Nr. 84, 25. März 1849, Beilage: Hermannstadt, 9. März. — 146
— Nr. 86, 27. März 1849: Pesth, 20. März. — 153-55
Page me9.632
Deutsche Zeitung Nr. 66, 7. März 1849: Graf Erbach. — 39
Page me9.632

Erfurter Adreßblatt, 7. Februar 1849: [Announcement of the Municipal Administration and Police Department.] — 71
Page me9.632
Journal des Débats, 26 mars 1849: Novare, le 19 mars 1849. — 156
— 27 mars 1849: Paris, 26 mars. — 165, 166
Page me9.632
Kölnische Zeitung Nr. 56, 7. März 1849: Vom Kriegsschauplatze. — 13-18, 32
— Nr. 57, 8. März 1849, Außerordentliche Beilage: [Reports from Hungary.] — 25
— Nr. 63, 15. März 1849, Zweite Ausgabe: [Magyar reports of March 6 and 7, 1849 from the Breslauer Zeitung.] — 76-78
— Nr. 64, 16. März 1849, Außerordentliche Beilage: Wien, 12. März. — 95
— Nr. 66, 18. März 1849, Zweite Ausgabe: Wien, 14. März. — 110, 112
— Nr. 73, 27. März 1849: [Report in the section “Ungarn”.] — 149
— Nr. 74, 28. März 1849, Zweite Ausgabe: Pesth, 20. März. — 152
— Nr. 78, 1. April 1849, Zweite Ausgabe: Pesth, 24. März. — 188
— Nr. 79, 3. April 1849: [Report in the section “Italien”.] — 176
— Nr. 88, 13. April 1849: [Report in the section “Ungarn”.] — 268, 276
— Nr. 88, 13. April 1849: Wien, 8. April. — 276, 280
— Nr. 95, 21. April 1849: [27th Battle Report of General Dembinski to Kossuth, Gödöllö, April 7.] — 300-01
— Nr. 118, 18. Mai 1849: Die Ansprache des Königs. — 465
Page me9.632
Közlöny Nr. 59, mártius 22. 1849: Hivatalos tudósitás. — 237-38
Page me9.632
Der Lloyd Nr. 104, 2. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Käsmark, 23. Februar. — 10-11
— Nr. 107, 3. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Semlin, 24. Februar. — 40-41
— Nr. 107, 3. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Von der Save, 26. Febr. — 31
— Nr. 107, 3. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Wien, 3. März. — 24-25
— Nr. 109, 5. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Ofen, 2. März. — 32
— Nr. 110, 6. März 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe: Pesth, 3. März. — 60
— Nr. 119, 10. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Preßburg, 9. März. — 93
— Nr. 140, 23. März 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe: Pesth, 20. März. — 160
— Nr. 143, 24. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Semlin, 19. März. — 183
— Nr. 144, 25. März 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe: Wien, 24. März. — 158
— Nr. 147, 27. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Pesth, 24. März. — 181
— Nr. 147, 27. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Semlin, 21. März. — 190
— Nr. 151, 29. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Neuestes. — 189, 190
— Nr. 152, 30. März 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe: Wien, 29. März. — 189
— Nr. 155, 31. März 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Wien, 31. März. — 241

Page Break me9.633
— Nr. 166, 7. April 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe: Wien, 6. April. — 262
— Nr. 171, 10. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Pesth, 8. April. — 284
— Nr. 173, 11. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Neuestes. — 287
— Nr. 181, 16. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Pest, 14. April. — 315
— Nr. 183, 17. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Semlin, 13. April. — 332

— Nr. 191, 21. April 1849, Abend-Ausgabe: Neuestes. — 343
— Nr. 194, 24. April 1849, Morgen-Ausgabe: [Editorial.] — 343
Page me9.633
Le Moniteur universel No. 91, 1 avril 1849: [Assemblée Nationale. Séance du samedi 31 mars.] — 192
Page me9.633
National-Zeitung Nr. 116, 2. Mai 1849, Beiblatt: Berlin, 1. Mai. — 394-95
Page me9.633
Neue Preußische Zeitung Nr. 54, 6. März 1849: [Report in the section “Berliner Zuschauer”.] — 22
— Nr. 59, 11. März 1849, Beilage: Votum über die wesentlichen Aufgaben der jetzt versammelten sogenannten Volksvertretung. — 66-68
— Nr. 64, 17. März 1849: Jede Revolution. — 109
— Nr. 107, 10. Mai 1849: [Report in the section “Berliner Zuschauer”.] — 437
Page me9.633
Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nr. 95, 6. September 1848: Breslau, 29. August. — 517-18, 519
— Nr. 102, 14. September 1848: Frankfurt, 12. September. — 518, 519
— Nr. 110, 23. September 1848: Um Nachdruck wird gebeten! Proklamation! — 518-19
— Nr. 214, 6. Februar 1849: [Comments on Army Bulletin No. 19.] — 160
— Nr. 221, 14. Februar 1849: Der erste Preßprozeß der “Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung”. — 340, 452
— Nr. 269, 11. April 1849: Lemberg, im April. — 253, 262
— Nr. 277, 20. April 1849, Zweite Ausgabe: Köln, 19. April. — 375
— Nr. 284, 28. April 1849, Außerordentliche Beilage: Köln, 27. April. — 353
— Nr. 285, 29. April 1849, Zweite Ausgabe: Berlin, 28. April. — 357
— Nr. 292, 8. Mai 1849: Breslau, 4. Mai. — 410
Page me9.633
Oberschlesische Lokomotive, between April 5 and 12, 1849: [Report from Ratibor, April 4, 1849.] — 257-58
Page me9.633
Ost-Deutsche Post Nr. 45, 13. März 1849: Wien, 12. März. — 112
— Nr. 54, 23. März 1849: Pesth, 20. März. — 152, 154
— Nr. 59, 29. März 1849: Wien, 28. März. — 190
— Nr. 72, 13. April 1849: Bukowina. Czernowitz, 4. April. — 289
— Nr. 73, 14. April 1849: Pest, 11. April. — 293
— Nr. 74, 15. April 1849: Mitrovic, 5. April. — 294
— Nr. 81, 24. April 1849: Pesth, 21. April. — 355
Page me9.633
Die Presse Nr. 83, 7. April 1849: Pesth, 4. April. — 263-64
— Nr. 98, 25. April 1849: Wien, 24. April. — 364
Page me9.633
La Presse, 26 juillet 1849: [Item on Marx's stay in Paris.] — 480
Page me9.633
Rosenberg-Kreuzburger Telegraph Nr. 19, 1849: [Editorial Statement.] — 70
Page me9.633

Schlesische Zeitung Nr. 53, 4. März 1849, Erste Beilage: Wien, 2. März. — 14

Page Break me9.634

Page me9.634
Der Siebenbürger Bote Nr. 22, 19. Februar 1849: Nachrichten vom Kriegsschauplatz. — 26
— Nr. 24, 23. Februar 1849: Hermannstadt, 22. Februar. — 62
— Nr. 30, 9. März 1849: Mediasch, 7. März. — 146
Page me9.634
Wiener Zeitung Nr. 62, 14. März 1849: Agram. — 117
— Nr. 71, 24. März 1849: Pesth. — 163
— Nr. 81, 5. April 1849: [Report from Vienna of April 4, 1849.] — 252
— Nr. 82, 5. April 1849, Abend-Beilage: [Report in the section “Tagesbericht”.] — 254
— Nr. 82, 5. April 1849, Abend-Beilage: [Report from Transylvania.] — 252
— Nr. 86, 10. April 1849, Abend-Beilage: Siebenbürgen, 9. Apr. — 279
— Nr. 91, 16. April 1849, Abend-Beilage: [Report in the section “Ungarn”.] — 314
— Nr. 97, 23. April 1849, Abend-Beilage: [Report in the section “Wien”.] — 350 — Nr. 103, 30. April 1849, Abend-Beilage: Wien, 29. April. — 397
Page me9.634
Zeitung des Osten, after April 13, 1849: [Report from Posen of April 13, 1849.] — 312

Page Break me9.635

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me9.635
Abend-Lloyd — see Der Lloyd
Page me9.635
Agramer Zeitung — a daily newspaper of the Austrian administration in Croatia published in Agram (Zagreb) from 1826. — 73, 246, 278
Page me9.635
Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung — see Neue Oder-Zeitung
Page me9.635
Allgemeine Zeitung — a German conservative daily founded in 1798; from 1810 to 1882 it was published in Augsburg. — 24, 27-28, 31, 38-39, 58, 59, 95, 97, 110, 161, 167, 187-88, 229, 233, 235, 241, 261, 292, 299, 318, 336-38, 343
Page me9.635
Der Arbeiter — a Swiss workers' newspaper published in St. Gallen (July 1848-1849). — 43
Page me9.635
Arbeiter-Zeitung — see Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit
Page me9.635
Augsburger Zeitung — see Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me9.635
Barmer Zeitung — a German liberal daily published in Berlin from 1834 to 1931. — 71
Page me9.635

Basler Zeitung — a Swiss conservative daily published in Basle from 1831 to 1859. — 166
Page me9.635
Berliner Zeitungs-Halle — a German daily published by Gustav Julius in Berlin from 1846; in 1848 and 1849 it was a leading democratic newspaper. — 33
Page me9.635
Börsen-Halle. Hamburgische Abend-Zeitung für Handel, Schiffahrt und Politik — a German daily published in Hamburg from 1805 onwards. — 179, 259
Page me9.635
Der Bote für Stadt und Land — a German democratic newspaper, official organ of the Palatinate revolutionary Provisional Government during the uprising in May-June 1849; it was published in Kaiserslautern. — 476
Page me9.635
Breslauer Zeitung — a German daily founded in Breslau (Wroclaw) in 1820; it repeatedly changed its political trend: in the 1840s voiced liberal views, in 1848 and 1849 opposed revolutionary Hungary. — 13, 16, 75, 76, 90, 91, 111, 119, 121, 145, 153, 179, 248, 252, 270, 275, 283, 333
Page me9.635
Bucovina. Gazeta romaneasca pentru Politicâ, Religie si Literaturâ — a newspaper published in Czernowitz in 1849 in Romanian and German. — 289, 334
Page me9.635
Bukurester Deutsche Zeitung — a Romanian newspaper published from 1845 in Bucharest in German. — 294
Page me9.635
Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen — a daily newspaper published in German in Prague in 1848 and 1849, opposed the revolution in Hungary. — 10, 11-12, 15, 72-74,

Page Break me9.636
95-96, 97-99, 100-01, 114, 115-16, 117-18, 119, 133, 153-55, 181-82, 187, 188, 244, 249-51,
287, 289, 299, 318, 366, 404
Page me9.636
Constitutionelle Zeitung — a daily liberal newspaper published in Berlin from February 1849 to July 1852. — 56
Page me9.636
Le Constitutionnel — a daily published in Paris from 1815 to 1817, and from 1819 to 1870; in the 1840s it voiced the views of the moderate wing of the Orleanists, and during the 1848 revolution became the mouthpiece for the monarchist bourgeoisie (the Thiers party). — 164
Page me9.636
Czas — a newspaper of the Austrian administration published in Polish in Cracow from the end of 1848. — 345
Page me9.636
The Democratic Review of British and Foreign Politics, History and Literature — a Chartist monthly published by George Julian Harney in London from June 1849 to September 1850; in 1850 Engels was among its contributors. — 512

Page me9.636
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung — a newspaper published under this title in Leipzig from 1843 to 1879; until the summer of 1848 it was conservative but later adopted liberal views. — 33-34, 40, 78, 94, 146, 153, 238, 292
Page me9.636
Deutsche Londoner Zeitung — a literary and political weekly of German refugees living in London, appeared from April 1845 to February 1851, edited by the pettybourgeois democrat Ludwig Bamberger and subsidised by the dethroned Duke Charles of Brunswick. Between 1847 and 1851 the editorial board included Ferdinand Freiligrath and the newspaper carried a number of works by Marx and Engels. — 511-12
Page me9.636
Deutsche Zeitung — a German daily published in Heidelberg from 1847 to October 1848 under the editorship of Georg Gervinus, then, up to 1850, in Frankfurt am Main; it supported the constitutional monarchy and unification of Germany under Prussian hegemony. — 514
Page me9.636
Düsseldorfer Zeitung — a German daily founded in 1745, published under this title in Düsseldorf from 1826 to 1926; in the 1840s voiced liberal views. — 423, 507, 514
Page me9.636
Erfurter Adressblatt — see Wochen- und Adress-Blatt
Page me9.636
Figyelmezö — a political daily published in Hungarian in Pest from August 1848 to January 1850; voiced pro-Austrian views; banned by the revolutionary government, it appeared in Pozsony (Bratislava) from July 2 to August 1, 1849. — 182, 241, 263, 364
Page me9.636
Frankfurter Journal — a German daily published in Frankfurt am Main from the 17th century to 1903; in the 1840s voiced liberal views. — 473
Page me9.636
Freiheit, Arbeit — a German newspaper published in Cologne from January 14 to June 17, 1849, by Andreas Gottschalk's supporters in the Cologne Workers' Association and presented by them as the organ of the Association; pursued a sectarian line and printed insinuations against Marx and Engels. — 498
Page me9.636
Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit — a German newspaper, organ of the Cologne Workers' Association, published twice weekly in Cologne from October 26, 1848. On January 14, 1849, Gottschalk's followers made an attempt to replace it with the Freiheit, Arbeit, a newspaper disavowed by the leaders of the Association; the paper resumed publication on February 8, 1849, and appeared up to the middle of 1849. — 490, 494-95, 498-500, 504

Page Break me9.637

Page me9.637
Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires — a daily founded in Paris in 1789; during the 1848 revolution voiced the views of the counter-revolutionary monarchist bourgeoisie (the so-called party of order). — 81, 156, 165-66
Page me9.637

Kölnische Zeitung — a German daily published under this title in Cologne from 1802 to 1945; the mouthpiece for the liberal bourgeoisie; in 1848 and 1849 advocated anti-revolutionary tendencies and fought against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — 13-15, 17-18, 21, 25, 30, 32, 38, 40, 77, 78, 84, 94, 101, 108, 110, 112, 117, 120, 149, 152, 158, 176, 188, 190, 194, 238, 243, 266, 268, 274-75, 280, 294, 300, 306, 309, 315-16, 436, 450, 465, 474, 520, 522, 524
Page me9.637
Közlöny, hivatalos lap — a Hungarian daily of the Kossuth revolutionary Government published in 1848 and 1849 in Pest, Debreczin and Szegedin. — 237
Page me9.637
Kreuz-Zeitung — see Neue Preussische Zeitung
Page me9.637
Lithographierte Correspondenz — a Vienna official periodical. — 9, 24, 110, 118, 146, 160, 178, 185, 189, 244, 249, 277, 285, 345, 396, 424
Page me9.637
Der Lloyd — an Austrian conservative newspaper published twice daily (morning and evening) in Vienna from 1848 to 1854 under the editorship of Löwenthal. — 10, 24, 31, 41, 60, 92, 158, 160, 181, 183-84, 189, 190, 239, 241, 246, 262, 271, 284, 287, 315, 332, 343, 364
Page me9.637
Le Moniteur universel — a French government daily published in Paris from 1789; organ of the revolutionary government during the French Revolution. — 35, 65, 192
Page me9.637
Morawské Nowiny — a Czech daily published in Brno from November 1, 1848. — 182
Page me9.637
Napredak (Napredak) — a Serbian newspaper published in Karlowitz in 1848 and 1849. — 11, 31, 146
Page me9.637
Le National — a daily published in Paris from 1830 to 1851; in the 1840s, organ of the moderate republicans. — 79, 81
Page me9.637
National-Zeitung — a liberal newspaper published under this title in Berlin from April 1, 1848, to 1915. — 71, 321, 369, 394, 466
Page me9.637
Neue Deutsche Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a democratic daily published from 1848 to 1850, up to April 1, 1849, in Darmstadt, and then in Frankfurt am Main. It was edited by Otto Lüning; from October 1, 1849, Joseph Weydemeyer also became its editor. — 473, 510-11, 516
Page me9.637
Neue Kölnische Zeitung für Bürger, Bauern und Soldaten — a revolutionary-democratic newspaper published in Cologne from September 10, 1848, to June 14, 1849, by Friedrich Anneke and Friedrich Beust. — 508, 509-10, 515, 523, 525
Page me9.637
Neue Oder-Zeitung — a German daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw); first, under the title Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung, it was the organ of opposition Catholic circles. From March 1849 to the end of 1855 it appeared as Neue Oder-Zeitung and was the organ of German democrats; in 1855 Marx was its London correspondent. — 90, 239, 252, 342, 365, 407

Page me9.637
Neue Preussische Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from June 1848; the mouthpiece for junkers and Court circles; also known as Kreuz-Zeitung because the

Page Break me9.638
heading contained a cross bearing the slogan “Forward with God for King and Fatherland!” — 22-23, 65-69, 87-88, 109, 129, 193, 281, 437, 454, 466
Page me9.638
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a daily published in Cologne under the editorship of Marx from June 1, 1848, to May 19, 1849 (with an interval between September 27 and October 12, 1848); organ of the revolutionary-proletarian wing among the democrats during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. Engels was among its editors. — 13, 36-37, 65, 84-85, 108, 160, 262, 281, 295, 311, 340, 353, 357, 359, 372, 375, 410, 431-32, 437, 447, 449-50, 451, 454, 467, 473, 480, 489-90, 498, 503, 505, 509-12, 514-19, 521, 523-24
Page me9.638
Neue Zürcher-Zeitung — a Swiss liberal newspaper published in German under this title in Zurich from July 1, 1821; from 1780 to 1821 came out under the title Zürcher-Zeitung. — 44-45
Page me9.638
Oberschlesische Lokomotive — a German newspaper published in 1849 in Rátibor (Racibórz). — 257
Page me9.638
Ost-Deutsche Post — an Austrian daily of the moderate liberals published in Vienna from 1848 to 1866. — 112, 152, 154, 158, 190, 255, 265, 289, 293, 304, 307, 315, 355
Page me9.638
Österreichischer Correspondent — a daily newspaper of the Austrian Government published in Vienna in 1848 and 1849 (from November 1848 to April 1849 in Olmütz). — 9, 186, 246, 304
Page me9.638
Ostsee-Zeitung und Börsennachrichten der Ostsee — a German daily published in Stettin (Szczecin) from 1835. — 311
Page me9.638
La Patrie. Journal du commerce, de l'agriculture, de l'industrie, de la littérature, des sciences et des arts — a daily published in Paris from 1841 to 1871; during the 1848 revolution voiced the views of the counter-revolutionary monarchist bourgeoisie (the so-called party of order) and later of the Bonapartists. — 157
Page me9.638
Pester Zeitung — a pro-Austrian daily published in German in Pest during the 1840s and the early 1850s. — 10, 264
Page me9.638

Die Presse — a liberal daily published in Vienna from July 1848 to 1896. In 1861 and 1862, when the newspaper held anti-Bonapartist views, it printed a number of articles and items by Marx. — 246, 263, 364
Page me9.638
La Presse — a daily published in Paris from 1836; in the 1840s, mouthpiece for the opposition to the July monarchy; in 1848 and 1849, organ of the moderate republicans, later a Bonapartist paper. From 1836 to 1857 it was edited by Émile Girardin. — 480
Page me9.638
Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger — a German newspaper founded in Berlin in 1819; from 1819 to April 1848 it was a semi-official organ of the Prussian Government; its title was changed several times. — 69, 417, 464
Page me9.638
Die Reform. Organ der demokratischen Partei — a newspaper of the German petty-bourgeois democrats published by Arnold Ruge and H.B. Oppenheim under the editorship of Eduard Meyen from April 1848 in Leipzig, from the summer of 1848 to the early 1850s in Berlin. — 33-35
Page me9.638
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — a German daily founded on January 1, 1842, as an organ of the Rhenish bourgeois opposition and published in Cologne till March 31, 1843. While edited by Marx (from October 15, 1842, to

Page Break me9.639
March 17, 1843), the paper became a mouthpiece for revolutionary-democratic ideas, which led to its suppression. Engels was one of its contributors. — 108
Page me9.639
Rosenberg-Kreuzburger Telegraph — a German newspaper published in Rosenberg-Kreuzburg (Silesia) in 1849. — 70
Page me9.639
Schlesische Zeitung — a German daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1742; the newspaper of the constitutional monarchists on the eve of and during the revolution of 1848-49. — 14, 162
Page me9.639
Serbske Novine (Srbske Novine) — an official organ of the Serbian Government published in Belgrade from 1835. — 41, 425
Page me9.639
Der Siebenbürger Bote — a newspaper published in German in Hermannstadt (Sibiu), Transylvania, in 1848 and 1849. — 62, 146
Page me9.639
Slavenski jug — a Croatian pro-Austrian newspaper published in Agram (Zagreb) from 1848 to 1850. — 116
Page me9.639
Slovenski pozornik — a Slovak newspaper published in 1849. — 300
Page me9.639
Der Spiegel. Zeitschrift für die elegante Welt, Mode, Literatur, Kunst, Theater — an Austrian newspaper published in Pest from 1828. — 315

Page me9.639
Staats-Anzeiger — see Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me9.639
Südslavische Zeitung — a weekly of the Croatian liberal monarchists published in German in Agram (Zagreb) from 1849 to 1852. — 116, 184, 229
Page me9.639
Teutsches Volksblatt — a German newspaper of moderate democrats published in Würzburg in the 1840s. — 36, 37
Page me9.639
Trier'sche Zeitung — a daily founded in Trier in 1757, appeared under this title from 1815; in the early 1840s voiced radical views, and later came under the influence of “true socialists”; during the 1848-49 revolution a democratic newspaper. — 509, 514
Page me9.639
Triester Freihafen — an Austrian newspaper published in Trieste. — 462
Page me9.639
Vjestnik (V'stnik') — a Serbian newspaper published in Pest in 1848 and 1849, and later in Neusatz and Karlowitz. — 425
Page me9.639
Der Volksfreund — a German democratic weekly published in 1849 in Lemgo (Principality of Lippe-Detmold). — 479
Page me9.639
Der Wächter — a Swiss radical newspaper published in Murten (canton of Freiburg) from January 1849 and edited by Johann Kaspar Sieber. — 43
Page me9.639
Der Wächter am Rhein — a democratic newspaper published in Cologne in 1848 and 1849, edited by Carl Cramer. — 450
Page me9.639
Der Wanderer — a daily of the Austrian constitutional monarchists, published in Vienna from 1809 to 1866. — 302, 335-36
Page me9.639
Westdeutsche Zeitung — a democratic newspaper published in Cologne from May 25, 1849, to July 21, 1850, by Hermann Becker. — 473
Page me9.639
Wiener Zeitung — a daily organ of the Austrian Government published in Vienna from 1780 to 1931; had the subtitle Kaiserlich-königlich privilegirte (1800-06) or Österreichisch kaiserliche privilegirte (1807-47 and certain issues of 1848). There were a few supplements, among them Abend-Beilage zur Wiener Zeitung. — 10, 92,

Page Break me9.640
113, 116-17, 120, 163, 178, 243, 246, 250-51, 252, 254, 271, 279, 294, 314, 316, 346, 348, 397
Page me9.640
Wochen- und Adress-Blatt — a German newspaper published twice a week in Erfurt in the 1840s. — 71
Page me9.640

Zeitung des Osten — a democratic daily published in Posen in 1849 by W. Stefanski, a prominent figure in the Polish national liberation movement. — 312
Page me9.640
Zeitungs-Halle — see Berliner Zeitungs-Halle

Page Break me9.641

SUBJECT INDEX
Page me9.641
A

Absolutism — 68, 371, 453, 498
See also Monarchy, absolute
Agitation and propaganda — 50, 188, 326, 365, 372-73, 386
America — 217
Aristocracy (nobility), French — 80
Aristocracy (nobility), Hungarian — 40, 186, 229-30, 299
Army
— Landsturm — 172, 182, 334, 416
— revolutionary — 181-82, 346, 349
Army, Austrian — 148, 175-76, 231-33, 304, 349, 411
Army, English — 22-23
Army, French — 170, 426, 463
Army, German revolutionary (in 1849) — 463
Army, Hungarian revolutionary (in 1848 and 1849) — 181-82, 231-33, 319, 344-45, 346, 406, 459-61, 463
Army, Piedmontese — 150-51, 175
Army, Prussian — 22
— as tool of reaction — 69, 87-88, 195, 402, 411-12, 416, 432, 464-65
— civic militia (Bürgerwehr) — 416, 423
— army reserve (Landwehr) — 195-96, 297-300, 411, 412, 414-16, 423, 426, 434, 466
Artillery — 234, 245, 284, 316, 423, 435
Austria
— political system — 47, 102, 105, 116, 148
— Constitution, constitutional question — 47-49, 105, 107, 149, 246
— finances, financial policy — 94, 107, 275, 303, 315, 345, 355, 364
— national question — 12, 105-07, 116
— during the 1848-49 revolution — 9, 12, 31, 47, 102-07, 368, 378, 456, 458
— peasant movement — 117, 123-24, 289-90
— and England — 351, 463
— and France — 170
— and Germany — 47-49, 461-62
— and Hungary, Hungarian national liberation movement — 9-11, 14, 15-16, 107, 133, 178, 254, 352, 353, 368-69, 391, 397-98, 411, 424-25, 455-62
— and Italy — 107, 247, 461-62
— and Poland — 461

— and Prussia — 257, 382, 394-95, 419, 421
— and Russia — 17, 90, 94, 106, 113, 134, 154, 158, 162, 182, 188-90, 235-36, 237, 253, 279-80, 305, 319, 331, 345, 365, 369, 382, 391, 394, 398, 409, 414, 418
— and Slavs, Slav question — 12, 107, 116-17, 124, 149, 246, 253, 307-09, 456
— and Turkey — 73
See also Army, Austrian; Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Revolution of 1848-49 in Austrian Empire

Page Break me9.642
Austro-Italian war of 1848-49 — 135, 148, 150-51, 156-57, 161, 164-66, 176, 247, 280, 295, 296, 317
— battle at Novara — 169-70, 171-75, 266, 295
— and Germany — 176
— and prospects of revolution in Europe — 149, 151, 170, 171, 172, 173
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in Austrian Empire; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Page me9.642
B
Baden — 55, 416, 421, 465, 474-76
Banat, the — 97, 155, 183-84, 236, 243, 250, 279, 304-05, 313, 334, 337, 344, 406, 410, 425, 456, 461
Bank, banks — 5
— of England — 3, 5
— French — 79
— Hungarian — 303
— Prussian (Seehandlung) — 420
Barbarians, barbarism — 53, 228
Belgium — 42, 198, 260
Bohemia, Bohemians (Czechs) — 106, 161, 229, 382, 392, 394-95
Bourgeoisie — 151, 191-92, 197
— French — 79-82, 191, 197
— Hungarian — 111
— Prussian — 56, 69, 84-85, 108, 322-24, 392, 445, 448, 453, 467
See also Capitalist; Class; Class struggle; Petty bourgeoisie; Social relations; Society, bourgeois
Bourgeois political economy — 215, 222, 226
Bukovina, the — 134, 159, 189, 334, 398 — revolutionary peasant movement in 1849 — 289-90, 331, 425
Page me9.642
C
Campaign for Imperial Constitution in Germany — 378, 392, 399, 411-12, 416-17, 421, 426, 434-35, 447-49, 463, 465, 474-76
— uprising in Dresden (May 3-8, 1849) — 411, 412, 416, 421, 426, 430, 435
— uprising in Rhine Province of Prussia — 412, 426, 428-29, 432-36, 447-49, 467 — uprising in Palatinate — 411, 421, 474-76, 482-84
— uprising in Baden — 421, 474-76

Capital
— definition — 211-12
— prerequisites of — 213
— wage labour as basis of and condition for its development — 198, 203, 213-16, 218-21, 225-28
— its movement as self-expanding value — 224
— its material content and social form — 211
— as social relation of production — 211, 212, 215, 220, 221
— as dominant social force of bourgeois society — 213
— and division of labour — 222-28
— antithesis between capital and wage labour — 3, 198, 203, 213-16, 220-21
— and wages — 222-28
— as sum of commodities — 212
— components of — 212, 213
— concentration of — 222
— migration of — 3, 207-08
— historically transient character of — 212
— bourgeois economists' assertion on community of interests of workers and capitalists — 214, 222, 227
Capitalist, capitalists
— interests and incentives — 214
— as owner of conditions of labour — 202-03
— and worker — 198, 203, 213-15
— and peasant — 81-82
— and development of productive forces of labour — 223-24, 227-28
— big capitalists — 227
— ruin of small capitalists by big ones — 227
— and rentiers — 227
See also Capital; Exploitation
Causality
— necessary, inevitable consequence — 191
— in history, historical causes — 191
— in economics and political economy — 206

Page Break me9.643
Cavalry — 155, 268, 272, 284, 317, 424
Censorship — 51, 53, 70-71, 324, 420, 421, 432, 466
Centralisation of capital — 227
Centralisation of the state — 308-09
China — 3, 7
Civilisation — 216, 315
Civil society — 52
Civil war — 191-92, 403, 476
Class, classes
— as product of economic relations — 197
— class interests — 214, 220-21

— class contradictions, antithesis between proletariat and bourgeoisie — 191, 215, 220-21 — ruling, exploiter, propertied classes — 197, 325, 326
— middle classes, strata and estates — 198
— exploited, oppressed classes — 327
— revolutionary — 198, 326
— working class as the only consistently revolutionary class — 198, 326
See also Class struggle; Peasantry; Petty bourgeoisie; Social relations; Working class
Class struggle
— and economic relations — 197
— between workers and bourgeoisie under developed class relations — 191, 197-98
— as political struggle — 198
— and national question — 197-98
— and revolution — 198
See also Class; Political struggle; Social relations; Working class
Code civil — 52-54
Code penal — 52, 53, 125-26, 128, 129-31, 340-41, 372, 383-87
Cologne Workers' Association — 494, 495, 498-500, 501, 502-03, 504
Commerce, trade
— and competition — 204
— and economic crises — 5-8
— and revolution of 1848-49 — 5-7
See also Foreign trade; World market Commodity — 212-13
— and its price — 205-11
Communism
— international character of communist transformation of society — 198
— and national question — 197-98
Communist League
— the working out of tactical principles — 198, 492-93
— during revolution of 1848-49 — 282, 494, 496, 498-500, 501, 502-03
— critique of Gottschalk's sectarian position — 498-500
— struggle to unite workers in a single proletarian organisation — 282, 494, 495, 501, 502-03
— and Neue Rheinische Zeitung — 451-54, 467
— and petty-bourgeois democrats — 143, 282, 494, 495, 502
Competition
— laws — 223-25
— and division of labour — 225, 227
— and development of productive forces — 222-25
— and wages — 225-26
— among workers — 225-26, 227, 228
— among capitalists — 222, 224, 226
— and machinery — 226-27
— between sellers and buyers — 205-09
— and price of commodity — 205-09

Constitution — 358, 387
— imposed Constitution in Austria — 47-49, 105, 107, 149, 257, 263-64
— imposed Constitution in Prussia — 47, 86, 135-37, 138, 139, 141, 257, 323, 370, 387, 430, 440
— German Imperial Constitution — 416, 417, 512
Consumption — 213
Corn Laws — 4
Cost of production
— components of — 208-09, 219
— factors changing it — 222-23, 225
— of labour power — 208-09
— and value of commodity — 209
— and price of commodity — 207-08, 219
— and labour productivity — 220
— and profit — 207
Counter-revolution — 135-36, 173, 192, 198, 356, 359, 370, 377, 399, 426, 435, 453

Page Break me9.644
See also Coup d'état; Coup d'état in Austria; Coup d'état in Prussia
Coup d'état — 56, 105-07, 357
Coup d'état in Austria (March 1849) — 105-07
Coup d'état in Prussia (November-December 1848) — 48, 51, 87, 136, 137, 197, 326, 371
Credit — 227-28
Crises, trade — see Economic crises
Croatia, Croats — 75, 78, 106, 246, 292, 308, 363, 368, 410, 455
Czechs — see Bohemia
Page me9.644
D
Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50 — 88, 295, 297
— military operations — 259-60, 295
— Malmö armistice — 88
— and policy of Prussian Government — 88
See also Schleswig-Holstein question
Danube principalities — 26, 162, 253, 345
See also Moldavia; Wallachia
Demand and supply — 7, 205-09
— and competition — 205-06
— their proportionality — 205-08
— law of demand and supply of labour and wages — 209
— and price of commodity — 206-09
— and distribution of capital among different branches of industry — 207-08
Democracy, democratic movement — 84, 257, 282, 402
— bourgeois — 498
— petty-bourgeois — 502
— revolutionary — 490-91

— proletarian — 498, 502
Despotism
— as reactionary political rule — 51, 126, 395, 418, 420
— military — 53-54
Dictatorship, military (“rule of the sabre”) — 102-07, 127, 246, 327, 358, 416, 433, 441-46
Page me9.644
E
East — 475
Economic categories — 211-12
Economic crises
— their periodic character — 228
— over-production as their main feature — 6, 8
— and position of working people — 228
— and prospects for revolution — 6-7
— and development of productive forces — 227-28
— and trade — 5-8
— prosperity as phase of the cycle — 8
— trade crises — 4-7
— crisis of 1846-47 — 4-5
Economic laws — 226
— of capitalist production — 224
— law of value — 208-10
— laws of augmentation of value (capital) — 225
— law of the cost of production — 225
— law of production's growth and cheapening — 225
— laws regulating wages — 209, 210, 219-20
— laws determining profit — 219-21
Economic relations
— as material relations — 197
— and classes, class struggle — 197, 198
— and political relations, political superstructure — 197, 198
— in bourgeois society — 197, 198
See also Civil society; Economics and politics; Production relations
Economics and politics — 197-98
Economy
— and rate of profit — 206
Emigration, political — 257-58
— German, in Switzerland — 55
Empiricism — 197
England (Great Britain) — 258, 385
— industry, trade and finance — 3-8
— trade and industrial monopoly in the world market — 5, 198
— economic crises — 3-6
— political system, Constitution — 22, 385
— legislation — 22-23

— in 1848 and 1849 — 3-8
— and revolution in Europe — 6-7, 258
— and China — 3
— and India — 3-4
— and Russia — 197

Page Break me9.645
— and USA — 4, 7
See also Army, English
Estates, social — peasant — 198
— estates representation, assemblies of estates — 125, 127, 128, 130, 138
Europe — 162, 198, 475-76
See also European war; Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe
European war — 107, 163, 171, 455, 476
Exchange
— and production — 211
— of activities — 211
— between labour and capital — 213-15
Exchange value — 212-13
See also Value
Exploitation
— of labour power by capital — 214, 226
— its growth with growth of production — 227
Page me9.645
F
Family and marriage — 52, 53
Foreign trade
— foreign trade balances — 5-7
— and England's monopoly of the world market — 5
See also Commerce; World market
France
— during Consulate and First Empire — 53-54, 420
— during Restoration — 80, 141, 323-24
— during July 1830 revolution — 82, 414
— during July monarchy (1830-48) — 48, 51, 52, 80
— economy — 7
— central representative institutions — 48, 51, 141
— legislation — 52, 53-54
— September Laws on the press — 50, 52, 65, 127
— foreign policy — 191-92
— colonial wars — 155
— in 1848 and 1849 — 191-92
— and Austria — 170, 414
— and Germany — 414
— and Hungary — 191

— and Italy — 170, 191, 192
— and Poland — 191, 192
— and Prussia — 414, 420
— and Russia — 414
See also Bourgeoisie, French; Code pénal; French Revolution of 1789-94; June uprising of Paris proletariat in 1848; Napoleonic wars; Revolution in France. Second Republic (1848-49); Wars of First French Republic
Frankfurt National Assembly — 36-37, 45, 47-49, 88, 193, 360, 377-78, 380, 421, 426, 438, 439, 465, 475, 476
— and coup d'état in Austria — 106
— and coup d'état in Prussia — 193-94, 378
— imperial Constitution — 377, 378, 426, 465
— and question of Germany's unification — 138, 193-94, 377-78
Frankfurt uprising (September 1848) — 88, 377, 378
Freedom
— and right, law — 23
— personal — 443
— political — 445
— of speech — 420, 443
— right of association and assembly — 50-51, 386, 389, 444, 445
— of the press — see Press
Free traders — 4
French Revolution of 1789-94
— role of the masses — 172, 175
— revolutionary wars — 173, 419
— and Austria — 419
— and England — 419
— and Germany — 414, 419
— and Prussia — 419
See also Jacobin dictatorship; Wars of First French Republic
Page me9.645
G
Galicia — 20-21, 106, 178, 186, 239, 253, 263, 289, 311, 313, 319, 337, 344, 401, 409
— peasant movement — 345
German Confederation (1815-66) — 296, 420
Germany
— population — 56

Page Break me9.646
— political system — 8, 49, 453
— industry and trade — 7, 8
— fragmentation and task of unification — 198, 378, 476
— democratic movement — 84, 144
— bourgeois liberalism in 1840s — 85, 321, 323
— opposition movement in early decades of 19th century — 420-21
— and French Revolution and Napoleonic wars — 414

— and July revolution of 1830 in France — 414
Page me9.646
— and revolution of 1848-49 in France — 414
— the press, press laws, censorship — 13-18, 27-28, 33-35, 36-37, 38-40, 42, 55-56, 58, 59, 62, 70-71, 257, 326, 474, 476
— and Austria — 47-49, 461-62
— and Denmark — 88, 260
— and Hungary — 378
— and Prussia — 378
— and Russia — 260, 313
— and Slavs — 307-09
See also Baden; Palatinate; Prussia; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Rhine Province of Prussia
Gold and silver — 217
Page me9.646
H
Hegelianism — 421
Historicism
— historical character of labour — 203
— historical character of production — 211-12
— historical character of economic, production and social relations — 211-12
— historical character of capital — 211-12
History, historical development — 5, 212
Holy Alliance — 192
— its counter-revolutionary role — 47, 48-49, 414, 419, 420, 464
— attempts to revive it in 1849 — 48-49, 394-95, 414, 430-31, 462, 474
Hungary
— population — 458
— industry, trade and finance — 10, 31-32, 94, 107, 111, 133, 145, 178, 235, 248, 253, 255, 275, 303, 364-65
— peasantry — 455
— political system, Constitution — 182, 230, 246, 369, 406
— abolition of feudalism — 455, 456, 463
— national question, national liberation movement — 455
— in 1848 and 1849 — 187, 197, 455-63
— and Austria — 93-94, 96, 100, 110-11, 268, 391, 424-25, 455-62
— and France — 191
— and Galicia — 21
— and Germany — 463
— and Poland — 461, 463
— and Prussia — 394-95, 440
— and Russia — 159, 182, 188-90, 235-36, 237, 248, 252, 268, 415, 455, 459
— and Turkey — 145, 162
See also Aristocracy, Hungarian; Army, Hungarian revolutionary; National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary; Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary
Page me9.646

I
Imperial Constitution in Germany — see Campaign for Imperial Constitution in Germany
Impoverishment of working class (relative) — 216-17, 219-21
Income — of worker and his social position — 220-21
India — 3, 4
Industrial reserve army — 225-26
Industry (large-scale)
— machinery as basis of its development — 226, 227
— its capitalist character — 226
— and competition — 205
— and formation of proletariat — 227
Instruments of labour — 202, 208, 211-12
Interest, interests — 214, 220, 221, 476
Ireland — 197
Italy
— struggle for unification — 151, 169
— national movement — 172
— in 1848 and 1849 — 56

Page Break me9.647
— Savoy and Nice — 170
— and Austria — 107, 247, 461-62
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont); Lombardy and Venetian region; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Page me9.647
J
Jacobin dictatorship, Jacobins — 192, 384
Jews, Jewish question — 112, 351, 360, 455, 463
June uprising of Paris proletariat in 1848 — 81, 170, 453
— and petty-bourgeois democrats — 478
— establishment of Cavaignac's military dictatorship, suppression of uprising — 80, 170, 370
— defeat of uprising and strengthening of European counter-revolution — 170, 197-98, 311, 452-53, 479
— and the proletarian press — 108, 490
Junkers (Prussian) — 54, 420
— and Polish question — 360-62
Page me9.647
K
Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) — see Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Page me9.647
L
Labour — 203, 209, 213, 217, 225
— in class, bourgeois society — 202-03, 225
— as commodity — 201-03

— estrangement of labour — 226
— free labour as wage labour under capitalism — 203
— as source of wealth — 215
— as source of value — 209, 218
— remuneration of compound, skilled labour — 227
— tendency to substitute simple labour for compound labour — 224-26
— as function of labour power under capitalism — 201-03, 213-16
— surrender of labour to capital — 214, 218, 220
— demand and supply of labour — 209
— female labour — 227
— child labour — 227
Labour power
— as commodity — 202-03
— costs of its production and reproduction — 208-09
— "labour-commodity", "value (price) of labour" — 201-03, 209-10
— labour as its function — 201-03, 213-14
— and precapitalist modes of production — 203
See also Exploitation; Labour; Wages; Worker Labour time — 201
— as measure of value — 208
Landed property — 81
Law, laws
— general and special — 209, 210, 219
— criminal — 127
— Prussian — 54, 127, 128, 129
See also Economic laws
Liberalism, liberals — 84-85, 137-38, 149, 456, 474
See also Frankfurt National Assembly; Prussian National Assembly
Lombardy and Venetian region — 66, 150, 151, 157, 280, 461
Lumpenproletariat — 43-44
Page me9.647
M
Machines, machine production
— under capitalism — 211, 222
— and accumulation of capital — 224
— and growing competition among workers — 226, 227
— and division of labour — 222-24
— and wage labour — 225-26
— and productivity of labour — 222
— and workers — 225-26
— and wages — 217, 224-27
— and employment of female and child labour — 226-27
— and growth of industrial reserve army — 225-26

Page Break me9.648
— invention and improvement of machines — 222-28

— bourgeois economists on employment of machines in capitalist production — 226
See also Instruments of labour; Means of production
Malmö negotiations and armistice — see Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50
Man, individual, personality
— his activity — 211
— and nature — 211
— and society, social relations — 211-12
— and production, relations of production — 211-12
— and classes — 203, 209, 210
— in bourgeois society — 203, 210
Market — 3, 6, 7, 205, 220, 228
See also World market
Material, the — 212
— material foundation — 197
— economic relations as material foundation of class struggle — 197
Materialist conception of history — 211-12
See also Class; Class struggle; Economics and politics; Historicism; Production; Production relations; Productive forces
Means of production
— and instruments of production — 224
— material — 212
— and mode of production — 224
— and productive forces — 212, 228
— and relations of production — 211-12
— and division of labour — 223, 224
— and society, social relations — 211-12
— under capitalism — 223-24, 227-28
— and economic crises — 227-28
— their development — 212, 223-25
— and cost of production — 223-25
Means of subsistence
— in social reproduction process — 213-15
— their production and consumption under capitalism — 214
— and wages — 217-18
— and reproduction of labour power — 214-15
— and growth of prices under capitalism — 217
Military art — 181, 185
— and revolution — 346, 349
— strategy — 159, 186, 189, 231-36, 335-36
— tactics — 156-57, 174-76
Military Border area, borderers — 99, 107, 246-47, 304, 308, 425
Military science
— material basis — 211-12
— and social relations — 211-12
Mode of production — 224
Moldavia — 159, 239, 311

Monarchy — 7, 49, 171-74
See also Absolutism; England (Great Britain); Monarchy, absolute; Monarchy, constitutional; Prussia Monarchy, absolute — 141
— and working-class struggle — 197, 326, 498
See also Despotism
Monarchy, constitutional — 138, 141, 171, 198, 326-27, 453
Money
— as social and production relation — 211
Moravia — 106, 161, 404-05, 409, 424
Page me9.648
N
Napoleonic wars — 149, 176, 261, 419-20
— war with third European coalition (1805) — 419
— war with fourth European coalition (1806-07) — 139, 419, 464
— war with sixth European coalition (1813-14) — 149, 419, 464
— war with seventh European coalition (1815) — 149, 176, 420
— war on Iberian Peninsula (1808-13) — 171
— and England — 419
— and Prussia — 419-20
— and Russia — 419
See also Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and Vienna Treaties of 1815
National liberation struggle — 197
— and class struggle — 197-98
— as component part of bourgeois democratic revolutions — 197, 455, 463
— and revolutionary war — 171
— struggle of oppressed nationalities

Page Break me9.649
for independence, and working class — 197
See also National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary; National question
National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary — 17, 57, 120, 135, 148-49, 162, 171, 241, 395, 412, 455-63, 474
— military operations on central front (on the Theiss) — 14, 15-16, 28, 63, 123, 152-54, 160, 185-86, 232-35, 238, 244, 253
— battle at Kapolna — 9, 13-14, 19-20, 24-25, 26, 27, 29, 76, 110
— defence of Komorn — 30, 112, 114, 149, 161, 180, 187, 190, 236, 238, 245, 248, 253, 256, 285, 288, 303, 314, 330, 331, 333, 336, 337, 342, 344, 346, 350-51, 352, 354, 381
— military operations in Transylvania — 9, 17, 25, 26, 31, 61, 62, 94, 112, 113-14, 134, 146, 158-60, 168, 182, 188-89, 235-36, 242-44, 248, 252-53, 256, 262, 270, 278, 279, 319
— military operations in Voivodina and Banat — 26, 31, 97, 114-15, 123, 159, 161, 182, 236, 242, 250-51, 255, 262, 278, 285, 294, 304, 319, 334, 337, 344-45, 406, 410, 425
— Hungarian counter-offensive in spring 1849 — 261, 262, 267, 268-70, 271-75, 277-78, 279, 283-84, 286, 288, 292-93, 300-01, 302-14, 307, 330, 335-37, 343-44, 346, 349, 350, 352, 354, 356, 381, 390-91, 396-97, 400-01, 406, 409, 424-26, 459-62

— and prospects for revolution in Europe — 163, 311, 352, 356, 379, 426, 454, 461-63
See also Hungary; Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary
National question — 197
— class character — 197-98
— liberation of oppressed nations as component part of struggle for democratic reform — 151, 455-56, 461-63, 476
— and bourgoisie — 151
— and working class and workers' movement — 197
— proletarian revolution as way to complete abolition of national oppression — 197-98
Nature — 211, 219
Navy (German) — 259-60
Necessity and chance — 208
Needs — 216, 219, 228
Neue Rheinische Zeitung — 37, 467
— organ of proletarian wing of democracy — 36-37, 84-85, 108, 198, 449, 452-54, 467 — its programme during 1848-49 revolution — 170-71, 172-73, 197-98, 258, 282, 313, 326-28, 352, 356, 378, 392-93, 399, 402-03, 409, 417, 422, 426-27, 448, 449, 452-54, 461, 462-63, 474-75, 502-03 — defence of workers' interests — 80-81, 191, 197-98, 215, 216-21, 225-28, 326-27, 392-93, 402-03, 413, 415, 434, 449, 453, 467, 502
— solidarity with Paris proletarian uprising of June 1848 — 108, 452-53, 479, 510 — and struggle against counter-revolution — 47-54, 56, 65-69, 84, 102-07, 125-32, 191-92, 325-26, 357-58, 359, 370-71, 377-78, 380, 389, 394-95, 402, 411-12, 417, 418-20, 430-31, 435, 440-44, 464-66, 479 — critique of liberals' agreement policy and petty-bourgeois democrats' vacillations — 33-35, 84-85, 143, 191-92, 291, 322-23, 377, 402, 438-39, 477-79
— exposure of the counter-revolutionary press — 55-56, 65-69, 70, 108, 109, 149, 158, 176, 268, 275, 294, 306, 314-15, 336-37, 343, 426-27, 450-51, 474, 476
— and campaign for imperial Constitution — 378, 416-17, 443-49, 474-76
— attitude towards national liberation movements — 151, 162, 170, 171, 172-73, 175, 181-82, 197, 295-98, 305, 307-10, 346, 349, 356, 359-62, 378, 395, 411-12, 426, 461-62, 463 — persecution by reactionaries — 451-54, 480, 487-88, 492-93, 496-97, 509-12, 517-22, 524
Nobility, German — 131
Nobility, Italian — 151

Page Break me9.650

Page me9.650

P

Palatinate, the — 412, 474-76
Pan-Slavism — 12, 105, 106, 308
Papal states — see Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
Parliament
— its role and class character — 136, 137, 138, 141-42, 281

— parliamentary tactics of revolutionaries — 54, 67-69, 71, 136, 137-38
See also Frankfurt National Assembly; Prussian Diet; Prussian National Assembly
Party, proletarian — 327, 479
See also Communist League
Peasantry
— serfs — 203
— in bourgeois revolution — 80-81, 197
— under capitalism — 198
— as commodity producer — 203
Peasantry in Hungary — 455
Peasantry in Poland — 463
Peasantry in Prussia — 326
Peasant uprisings, movements — see Bukovina; Galicia; Revolution of 1848-49 in Austrian Empire
People, popular masses — 326, 378, 427
— as decisive force in revolution — 175, 422
— people's right to revolution — 49, 56
Petty bourgeoisie
— French — 79-80
— German — 378
— Hungarian — 94
Philistinism — 55, 114, 159, 358
Poland
— population — 359-60
— nobility — 360-62
— peasantry, serfdom — 463
— landownership — 360, 361, 362
— and army — 296-98
— partitions of — 370, 371, 418-19, 441, 463
— national question — 359-60
— insurrection of 1830-31 — 18, 87, 169, 286, 420, 463
— and revolution of 1848-49 — 197, 311, 371, 461, 463
— oppression and plunder by German ruling classes — 359-62, 418-20, 441
— and Austria — 360, 461, 463
— and France — 191
— and Germany — 313
— and Prussia — 359-62, 441, 463
— and Russia — 18, 311-12, 360, 441, 462
See also Galicia; Posen
Police and legal persecution
— of democrats and workers' leaders — 50-51, 66-68, 69, 376, 389
— Lassalle's case — 337-39, 372-74, 383-87
— of the press — 50-54, 70-71, 125-32, 451-54, 466
See also Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Political struggle
— economic relations as material basis of — 197-98

— as form of class struggle — 197-98
See also Working-class movement in Germany; Working-class movement in Switzerland
Posen, Posen uprising (1848) — 88, 195-96, 296-98
Possibility and necessity — 223
Press, the — reactionary, its role as mouthpiece for counter-revolutionary forces — 22-23, 31, 38-39, 55-56, 58-60, 62, 65-66, 68, 109, 166, 182, 187, 190, 335-37, 343, 437, 476 — liberal, its narrow-class and great-power tendencies — 13-18, 33-35, 108, 149, 152, 158, 176, 194, 243, 257, 266, 268, 275, 280, 294, 306, 309, 315, 316, 436, 450, 465
— revolutionary — 36-37, 323, 326-27, 447, 449, 452-54, 467, 509-10, 511-12, 513, 523
— freedom of — 18, 84, 125, 131, 323, 327, 386, 444, 445, 466, 512
See also Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Price, prices
— definition — 201, 205-10, 213, 218
— average — 219
— of necessaries — 218
— influence of labour productivity on value and price of commodities — 219-20
— and competition — 205-09

Page Break me9.651
— and cost of production — 207-09, 219
— and wages — 209, 217
— and demand and supply — 206-08
Production
— as man's relation to and influence on nature — 211
— as basis of society, of history — 211-12
— and social relations, social system — 211-12
— and military science — 211-12
— and exchange — 211
— its historical character and development — 211-12
See also Means of production; Mode of production; Production relations; Productive forces Production relations — and production as relation of man to nature — 211
— society, social relations, social system as sum total of production relations — 212
— and productive forces — 211-12
— and means of production — 211-12
— and social relations of production — 211-12
— their historical character, changeability and transformation — 212
— in slave-owning society — 212
— in feudal society — 212
— in bourgeois, capitalist society — 212
— capital as production relation — 212
Productive and unproductive labour — 202, 222-23
Productive capital — 214-15
— form of capital in production process — 215

— and worker — 215, 216, 221, 227
— and wages — 216, 221-28
— and reproduction and accumulation of capital — 215
See also Capital
Productive forces
— people, workers, labour power as productive force — 226
— worker as mere productive force under capitalism — 226
— means of production as productive force — 211-12
— and production relations — 211-12
— and military science — 211-12
— their development — 212
— under capitalism — 223-26
See also Means of production; Production
Productivity of labour — 224
— significance of its rise for individual capitalists and capitalist class as a whole — 224 — its growth as expression of capitalism's progressive role in history as compared with feudal society — 224
— and value (price) of commodity — 220, 222
— and production costs — 220
— and division of labour — 222-26
— and machines, inventions, discoveries — 222, 224, 225
— and workers' condition — 225
Profit
— source and condition of formation — 218, 220
— its laws — 219-21
— and price of commodity — 218
— and wages — 218-21
— and economy on production costs — 207
— net profit of capitalist — 219, 221
See also Exploitation
Proletariat — see Working class
Propaganda — see Agitation and propaganda
Prussia — 281, 291, 440-41
— Prussians, Prussianism — 50, 54, 298, 395, 413, 444, 467
— history — 418-19, 440-41
— during French Revolution and Napoleonic wars — 419, 441
— between 1815 and 1848 — 360, 395, 420-21
— and July revolution of 1830 in France — 420
— landownership — 360-62
— finances, budget, taxes — 361-62, 420, 421
— survivals of feudalism — 52, 139
— peasantry — 326
— political and state system — 51-52, 54, 68, 138, 141, 327, 418-20, 453
— rule of the military, militarism — 392, 420

Page Break me9.652

— bureaucracy, officialdom — 23, 52, 54, 142, 326, 327, 419, 420, 430, 444
— police system — 52, 126-27, 325, 329, 420
— legislation — 22-23, 50-54, 291
— Constitution, constitutional question — 22, 47, 48, 86-87, 131, 135-41, 143, 295, 321-23, 357-58, 370, 387, 420, 430-32, 441-46
— judiciary, judicial system — 67, 88, 373, 384, 420, 432, 433, 451
— laws — 52, 54, 65, 125-32, 384
— electoral law, suffrage — 140, 142, 358, 370, 392
— the press, press laws, censorship — 13-18, 50-54, 65, 70-71, 125-32, 257, 306, 320-29, 358, 419-21, 432-33, 436-37, 466
— as a bulwark of counter-revolution — 47, 48, 55-56, 88, 257, 370-71, 380, 411, 416, 418-19, 430-31, 440-41, 463, 464
— as an obstacle in the way of uniting Germany democratically — 88, 138, 193-94, 377-78, 420, 465-66
— and attempts to revive Holy Alliance in 1849 — 48-49, 394-95, 414, 419, 420, 430-31, 432, 441, 462, 474
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 421
— and Austria — 257, 394, 419, 421, 430, 440, 441, 474
— and England — 419
— and France — 418-19, 441
— and Germany — 395, 417
— and Hungary — 394-95, 440, 462
— and Poland — 359-62, 418-20, 441
— and Russia — 394, 418-19, 430, 440-41, 464, 474
— and Sweden — 418
See also Army, Prussian; Bourgeoisie, Prussian; Germany; Junkers (Prussian); Prussian Diet (1849); Prussian National Assembly; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia; Rhine Province of Prussia; United Diet in Prussia; Working class in Prussia
Prussian Diet (1849) — 65, 66-68, 71, 357-58, 441
— First Chamber — 56, 358
— Second Chamber — 54, 86-89, 135-43, 281, 291, 295-98, 320-29, 357-58, 394, 417, 440
— the Left — 136-37, 140, 142, 143, 320-23, 370, 371
— the Right — 136, 137, 139-40, 141, 322, 326-27, 394
— the Centre — 320, 394
— dispersal of Chambers — 370-71, 386-87, 394, 430, 440, 441, 462
Prussian National Assembly — 33, 65, 135, 136, 141, 357, 374, 385, 387, 430, 441, 465
See also Coup d'état in Prussia (November-December 1848)
Page me9.652
Q
Quality and quantity — labour, commodity, value — 213
Page me9.652
R
Railways — 3, 7
Raw materials — 202, 208, 212

Relativity — 206, 216
— the absolute and the relative — 220-21
— of needs — 216
— relative impoverishment of proletariat — 216-17, 219-21
— relative and absolute wages — 216-21
Rentiers — 227
Republic
— bourgeois, democratic — 7-8, 42, 191-92, 197, 198
— proletarian (“red”) — 100, 191, 448, 452, 454, 490
Revolt — 392-93
Revolution
— and class struggle — 197-98
See also Revolution, bourgeois; Revolution, permanent; Revolution, popular; Revolution, proletarian Revolution, bourgeois
— motive forces — 175
— bourgeoisie's striving to compromise, a deal with feudal reaction — 47-49, 56, 67-69, 84-85, 86-89, 135-43, 295, 322-24, 325-27

Page Break me9.653
— and working class — 191-92, 197, 449, 467
— as a step to proletarian revolution — 449
— need for revolutionary methods of struggle to carry it through — 171
— and national question — 151, 197-98, 462, 476
— and peasantry — 80-81
See also Class struggle; French Revolution of 1789-94; Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe; Revolution, popular Revolution of 1848-49 in Austrian Empire
— uprising in Vienna on March 13, 1848 — 108, 149, 455
— uprising in Vienna on October 6, 1848 — 47, 197, 296, 311, 313, 377, 441, 456, 461
— Court party — 105, 456, 457
— bureaucracy — 149
— bourgeoisie — 111, 299
— working class — 368, 378
— peasantry — 106, 117, 299
— army — 7, 148, 149, 456, 457, 462
— Imperial Diet — 48, 105, 457
— liberal Government — 456
— Constitution, constitutional question — 48, 49, 105-07, 149, 230
— national question — 12, 73, 98, 99-100, 105-07, 116, 123, 146-47, 155
— and revolution in Europe — 352
— and Hungary — 102, 105, 106, 148-49, 352, 357, 378, 455-63
— and Italy — 105, 148-51, 456, 461-62
— and Czechs — 105, 296, 392, 456
— and Poles — 361, 461, 463
— and Slavs — 102-06, 148, 149, 229, 246, 296, 452, 456

— and Russian Tsarism — 107, 311-13, 455, 462
— and Frankfurt National Assembly — 47-49, 106, 377-78
— and appraisal of revolution, prospects in 1849 — 107, 352, 357, 378, 392, 461-63
See also Austria; Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary
Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe — 102, 140
— and bourgeoisie — 197
— and peasantry — 197
— and working class — 197-98
— and national movements — 197
— development of revolution in France as decisive factor — 414-15, 426-27, 454, 463
— and struggle for Germany's democratic unification and revolutionary transformation as its component part — 378, 463, 476
— national liberation movement in Hungary as its important element — 106, 162, 197, 356, 455, 461-62, 463
— and revolutionary struggle for national liberation in Italy — 106, 170-71, 197
— and possibility of a European war — 106, 163, 169, 197-98, 454, 455, 463, 475-76
— and world war — 198, 454
— and counter-revolution and reaction — 169, 172-73, 356, 414, 426-27, 453, 463
— and Austria — 107, 197, 352, 356, 475
— and England — 197, 463
— and Germany — 197, 463, 475-76
— and Prussia — 426, 475
— and Tsarist Russia — 197, 414-15, 454, 455, 474, 476
— and disillusionment of democrats — 103
— preliminary results by beginning of 1849, appraisal and prospects — 5-8, 102, 162, 197-98, 356, 454, 475-76
Revolution in France. Second Republic (1848-49)
— February revolution of 1848 — 79, 197, 453, 455, 479
— Provisional Government — 79-81, 191-92
— popular uprising on May 15, 1848 — 81
— election of Louis Bonaparte as President — 170
— National Assembly — 479
— Odilon Barrot Government — 170, 191-92, 414
— National party (moderate republicans) — 79, 192, 197, 478
— New Mountain party (bloc of democrats and socialists) — 477-79

Page Break me9.654
— Bonapartists — 192
— legitimists — 80, 81, 82, 192
— Orleanists — 80, 82
— and bourgeoisie — 78-82, 191, 197
— and petty bourgeoisie — 79-82
— and working class, its role in revolution — 80, 81, 82, 197, 479
— workers' associations, secret societies — 170, 478
— petty-bourgeois democrats' action on June 13, 1849 — 477-79

— and big landowners — 80-83
— and peasantry — 80-83
— its impact on European countries — 135, 170, 426-27, 452-53, 454, 463
— and prospects for development of revolution — 57, 135, 149, 170
— foreign policy of Second Republic — 173, 191-92
— and Italy — 170-71, 191-92
— European counter-revolution — 170, 414, 415
See also June uprising of Paris proletariat in 1848
Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany — 392-93, 399
— March revolution — 52, 55, 69, 84, 108, 109, 125, 127-29, 139, 194, 197, 399, 475-76
— and attitude of bourgeoisie — 68-69, 108, 197, 313, 325, 327, 402-03, 426, 446, 448, 453, 467
— and working class — 56, 197-98, 282, 324, 326, 329, 392-93, 402-03, 413, 434, 447-49, 467, 494, 495, 498-500, 501, 502-04, 506-07
— and peasantry — 197, 326, 378
— and petty bourgeoisie — 378
— liberal professors as champions of bourgeoisie — 48-49
— democratic movement and attitude of petty-bourgeois democrats — 36-37, 65, 84-85, 136, 137-42, 143, 282, 322-26, 370, 371, 374, 389, 392, 402, 490-91, 494, 498, 502
— and absolutism — 371, 453, 498
— and struggle against survivals of feudalism — 52, 139
— fragmentation of the country and tasks of unification — 85, 88, 138, 193-94, 257, 295, 371, 377-78, 465, 476
— Schleswig-Holstein question — 88, 257, 296, 298
— national question, policy towards oppressed nationalities — 298, 476
— and national liberation of Poland — 296-98, 359, 362, 371, 378, 418-19
— and revolution of 1848-49 in Austria — 108, 441, 452
— and revolution of 1848-49 in France — 57, 108, 135, 414, 426, 443, 463, 474-75
— and revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary — 56, 257, 357, 371, 378, 412, 426, 440, 461-63
— and revolutionary struggle for national liberation in Italy — 57, 296
— and Austria — 378, 412
— and Poland — 88, 296-98, 359-62, 371, 378, 419
— and Prussia — 88-89, 193-94, 257, 377-80, 394-95, 411-15, 421-22, 430-31, 438-40, 464-66
— and Russia — 135, 311-13, 394-95, 412, 414-15, 430, 440, 441, 464, 474, 476
— and Slavs — 452
— counter-revolutionary offensive — 54, 55-57, 69, 86-87, 135-36, 313, 325-26, 327, 357-58, 360, 370-71, 377-80, 386-89, 392-93, 402, 411, 414, 421, 426, 430-31, 432, 438-46, 452, 464-65
— results and appraisal of revolution — 54, 109, 371, 426, 449, 453, 476
See also Baden; Campaign for Imperial Constitution in Germany; Cologne Workers' Association; Communist League; Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50; Frankfurt National Assembly; Frankfurt uprising (September 1848); Neue Rheinische Zeitung; Palatinate; Prussian Diet (1849); Prussian National Assembly; Revolution of 1848-49 in Austrian Empire; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia; Rhine Province of Prussia

Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary
— position on the eve of revolution — 455
— revolutionary events in March 1848 — 455
— anti-feudal agrarian reforms — 351, 390, 456, 463

Page Break me9.655
— landed aristocracy, magnates, toprank officers — 40, 186, 456, 457
— peasant movement — 351
— national question, nationalities policy — 77, 98, 148, 390, 456, 461-62
— and Slavs — 148, 162, 456
— sympathy with revolution on the part of oppressed peoples of Austrian Empire — 93-94, 123-24, 150, 351, 390, 409, 459-61, 463
— and uprising in Vienna on October 6, 1848 — 456, 461
— Constitution, constitutional question — 369, 452
— proclamation of Hungary's independence — 397, 407-08, 425, 461
— prospects for revolution, its influence on development of revolution in Europe — 57, 135, 352, 356, 357, 371, 378, 412, 426, 454, 455, 461-63
— and Austria — 148, 352, 356, 368, 397-98, 412, 426, 440, 455-57, 461, 462
— and Prussia — 371, 394-95, 414-15, 440, 462-63, 475
— and Russian Tsarism — 311, 313, 395, 412, 440, 454, 459, 462, 463, 474
— and German liberals — 149, 474
— results and appraisal of revolution — 171, 395, 414-15, 455, 461-63
See also Aristocracy, Hungarian; Army, Hungarian revolutionary; Banat; Bukovina; Croatia; Galicia; Military Border area; National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary; Serbs of the Voivodina; Transylvania; Voivodina
Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states
— general characteristic and tasks — 7, 57, 135, 148, 149, 151, 169-70, 171-77, 197, 461
— in Lombardy and Venetian region — 148, 150, 151, 172, 175, 461
— in Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) — 148, 149, 151, 169-70, 171-72, 173-75, 177
— in Tuscany — 148, 149, 170, 172, 173
— in Papal states — 148, 149, 170, 172, 173
— Roman Republic (1849) — 170, 172, 426
— in Parma and Modena — 150, 173
— and prospects for revolution in Europe — 170-71, 197
— and France — 170
— defeat of revolution, causes — 148, 169-73, 175, 197-98
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49
Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
— March revolution — 69, 108, 109, 125, 129-30, 139, 194, 360, 387, 415, 440, 441, 443, 452, 465
— attitude of bourgeoisie — 108, 325-27, 392, 446, 448, 453, 467
— policy of big bourgeoisie, of financial aristocracy — 68-69
— liberals — 85
— drafting of Constitution — 140, 357, 430-31
— Camphausen-Hansemann Government — 138, 359, 380
— Auerswald-Hansemann Government — 138

— Pfuel Government — 138
— role of working class in its development — 392-93, 402-03, 413, 434, 449, 467
— and peasantry — 326, 378
— and petty bourgeoisie — 378
— democratic movement, attitude of petty-bourgeois democrats — 84, 136-37, 143, 282, 402, 498
— and nobility, junkers — 69, 325-27, 362, 430
— and absolutism, absolutist feudal party — 68, 371, 430, 453
— and bureaucracy — 52, 325-27, 430, 444
— and jurists, judiciary — 67-68, 339-41, 372-76, 383-88
— and the Prussian military — 88, 357, 392, 433, 442-45
— army reserve (Landwehr) — 195-96, 414-15, 416, 423, 426, 434, 466
— civic militia (Bürgerwehr) — 374, 375, 416, 423
— and Rhine Province of Prussia — 54, 195, 386-89, 392-93, 416-17, 426, 434, 435, 454 — events in Cologne (September 1848) — 389, 393

Page Break me9.656
— offensive by counter-revolution and reaction — 47, 50-54, 69, 86-87, 135-36, 325-27, 357-58, 370-71, 386-89, 402, 411, 430-31, 432-33, 440-46, 464-66
— Brandenburg-Manteuffel Government — 56, 65, 86, 125, 129-31, 380, 421
— and movement for refusal to pay taxes — 67-68, 69, 125-26, 136, 137
— Prussian Constitution of December 5, 1848 (imposed Constitution) — 47, 86-87, 135-36, 139-40, 357, 387, 430, 432, 440-41
— and revolution in Europe — 357, 371, 378, 454
— and revolution of 1848-49 in Austria — 108, 378, 412, 441, 453
— and revolution of 1848 in France — 57, 135, 426, 427, 453
— and revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary — 57, 135, 257, 371, 378, 394-95, 412
— and national liberation of Poland — 88, 296-98, 359-62, 371, 378, 419
— and national movement in Schleswig-Holstein — 88, 195, 257
— and France — 414, 474-75
— and Italy — 57
— and Russia — 135, 311-13, 412, 414-15, 440-41, 464, 476
See also Cologne Workers' Association; Coup d'état in Prussia (November-December 1848); Neue Rheinische Zeitung; Posen; Prussian Diet (1849); Prussian National Assembly; Rhenish District Committee of Democrats; Rhine Province of Prussia; Working class in Prussia
Revolution, permanent — 449
Revolution, popular — 399
Revolution, proletarian, socialist — 198, 467, 490
— peaceful and non-peaceful ways of carrying it out — 453, 454
— and liberation of oppressed nations — 197-98
See also June uprising of Paris proletariat in 1848; Revolution, permanent; Uprising, armed Rhenish District Committee of Democratic Associations — 282, 502
Rhenish District Committee of Democrats — 375

Rhine Province of Prussia — 52, 54, 125-32, 195, 370, 389, 392-93, 394-95, 402-03, 412, 416-17, 423, 428-29, 436, 465-66, 467, 506-10
— legislation — 54, 131
— Congress of Democratic and Workers' Associations — 506-07
— and Prussia — 131, 360, 395, 465, 467
Right
— bourgeois — 127, 360
Romanians — 155, 319
— in Transylvania — 25-26, 159, 190, 230, 319, 457
Royal power, royalty — 42, 137, 171, 362
Russia
— and Austria — 186-87, 394, 414, 415
— and England — 7
— and France — 414
— and Germany — 311, 313, 414-15
— and Hungary — 17-18, 26, 114, 173, 186-87, 188-90, 248, 253, 262, 415, 455, 459
— and Poland — 18, 311, 420
— and Prussia — 394-95, 414, 420-21, 430, 441, 474
— and Turkey — 253, 263
See also Holy Alliance; Napoleonic wars; Pan-Slavism; Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary; Tsarism
Ruthenians — 294, 456
Page me9.656
S
Saxons, in Transylvania — 25, 112, 114, 159, 248, 287, 457
See also Transylvania
Schleswig-Holstein question — 88, 195-96, 257
See also Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50: Frankfurt National Assembly: Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Revolution of 1848-49 in Prussia
Scholastics — 48
Separatism — see Sonderbund (Switzerland)
Serbs of the Voivodina — 78, 97-100, 106, 112, 114-15, 123-24, 133, 146, 155, 183-84, 190, 229, 236, 244, 246, 254,

Page Break me9.657
262, 279, 286, 294, 304, 313, 351, 409-11, 425
Serbs, Turkish — 99, 117
Silesia — 87, 88, 361, 401, 409, 416
Slav Congress in Prague — 308
Slavery, slaves — 203, 211
Slavonia, Slavonians — 124, 307-10
Slavs, the Slav question
— in Austrian Empire — 148, 149, 296, 456
— prospects for Austrian Slavs' participation in revolution — 26
— conservative national movements — 307-09, 452
Slav question in 1848-49 and revolution — 229

See also Banat; Bohemia; Croatia; Moravia; Pan-Slavism; Poland; Revolution of 1848-49 in Austrian Empire; Revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary; Serbs of the Voivodina; Slavonia; Slovakia
Slovakia, Slovaks — 61-62, 93-94, 100, 120, 162, 235, 241, 299, 319, 351, 390, 397, 401, 409
Small countries and nations — 18, 171
Socialists in Germany — 198
Social relations, social system — 211-12
— and man's relation to nature — 211
— and society — 212
— and man, individual — 211
— and production — 211-12
— and productive forces — 211-12
— and means of production, instruments of labour — 211-12
— social production relations — 211-12
— historical character of — 211-12
— and social revolution — 463
— in slave-owning society — 212
— in feudal society — 212, 463
— in bourgeois society — 211-12
— and categories of bourgeois economics — 211-12
— and military science — 211-12
Society, bourgeois — 212
— economic basis — 208, 212, 222
— social relations in — 211-12
See also Capital; Capitalist; Class; Class struggle; Social relations; Working class Society, feudal — 212
— social relations in — 212, 463
Society, slave-owning — 212
Sonderbund (Switzerland) — 42, 44, 45, 106
Sovereignty of the people — 68
Spain — 171
Speculation — 3, 7
State, the — 68
— bourgeois — 198
— feudal, absolutist — 7, 68
See also Absolutism; Monarchy; Monarchy, absolute; Monarchy, constitutional State power
— as tool of bourgeoisie's class domination — 211, 212
Stock Exchange — 5, 145, 161, 316, 395
Strategy (military) — 228-35
Supply and demand — see Demand and supply
Switzerland — 42-46, 198
— and revolutions of 1848-49 in Europe — 55, 198
— and working class — 42-44
— and peasantry — 44

— social and political system — 44, 198
— Federal Council (Government) — 44 — policy towards refugees — 45
— Swiss recruits — 45
— political parties — 43-44
— the press — 44-45
— and Italy — 45
— and Prussia — 45
See also Sonderbund
Szeklers — 9, 17, 25, 61, 94, 114, 154, 158, 159, 331
See also Transylvania
Page me9.657
T
Terror, terrorism
— revolutionary — 173, 187, 190, 235, 453
— during French Revolution — 173, 382
— counter-revolutionary — 190, 235, 453
See also Jacobin dictatorship
Trade balance — 5-7
Transylvania — 21, 25-26, 97, 115, 122, 124, 134, 154, 190, 230, 237-38, 279, 287, 289, 294, 313, 331-32, 337, 346, 366-67, 369, 409, 456, 457, 458-59

Page Break me9.658
Tsarism, Tsarist autocracy (as bulwark of reaction in Europe) — 391, 394-95, 398, 414-15, 419, 421, 440, 441, 462-63
Turkey — 52, 73, 162
— and Austria — 74
— and Hungary — 162
— and Russia — 162, 253, 262
Page me9.658
U
United Diet in Prussia — 87, 125, 143, 358, 387, 421
United States of America — 4, 6-7
— and England — 4
— Oregon conflict — 4
See also America
Uprising, armed — 49, 57, 140, 151, 157, 170, 171, 173, 175, 198, 234-35, 370
See also Campaign for Imperial Constitution in Germany; June uprising of Paris proletariat in 1848; Revolution, proletarian
Page me9.658
V
Value — 218
— and productivity of labour — 219-20
— and cost of production — 208
See also Exchange value

Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and Vienna Treaties of 1815 — 127, 191, 192, 360, 395, 525
Voivodina, the — 40, 98, 116, 147, 161, 244, 289, 307, 319, 332, 410
See also Serbs of the Voivodina
Page me9.658
W
Wage labour — 203
— as basis, condition and result of development of capital — 198, 203, 213-16, 218-20, 226, 228
— conditions for its existence — 203 — distinction from previous forms of labour — 203
— as formally free labour — 203
— antagonism between capital and wage labour — 198, 203, 213-15, 220-21
See also Exploitation; Labour
Wages
— as form of value (price) of labour power — 202-04, 209-10, 217, 227
— and reproduction of labour power — 209-10, 227
— laws of — 209-10, 219-22
— minimum — 210, 227
— as component of cost of production — 209-10, 218
— as income of worker — 220-21
— nominal and real — 217-18, 220
— absolute and relative — 216-21
— pay for compound, skilled labour — 227
— and price of commodity — 209, 217
— and money — 217
— and profit — 217-18, 228
— and demand and supply of labour — 209, 216
— and employment of machinery — 217, 225-27
— and capitalist competition — 225
— and competition among workers — 225-26
— and means of subsistence — 217-18
Wallachia, Wallachians — 189, 229, 237-38, 242, 252-53, 263, 287, 311, 346
War, wars — 173
— and bourgeoisie — 191-92
— and revolution, revolutionary movement — 151, 170, 171, 172, 197, 198, 454, 461-63
— revolutionary — 162, 171, 173, 455, 476
— people's, national — 171-73, 175, 475
— national liberation — 151, 171, 172, 197, 461-62
— guerilla — 117, 151, 155, 159, 162, 171, 176, 241, 458
— civil — 191-92
— colonial — 4, 155
— world — 198
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Danish-Prussian war of 1848-50; Napoleonic wars; National liberation war of 1848-49 in Hungary; Wars of First French Republic

Wars of First French Republic (end of 18th-beginning of 19th centuries) — 80, 139, 173, 419, 441

Page Break me9.659
Worker — 202-03, 213-15, 225
— as owner of “labour power” commodity — 202, 203
— separation, estrangement of workers from means and products of labour and production — 202
— his interests — 220, 221, 449
— his income — 220-21
— his wages — 202
— competition among workers — 225-28
— and capitalist — 198, 203, 213-15
— and productivity of labour — 224
— and machines — 226, 227
— “free” worker — 203
— wage worker — 203, 215
— conditions of his labour — 202
See also Labour; Labour power; Machines; Wage labour; Wages; Working class
Working class — 467
— its augmentation at the expense of other classes and sections of the population — 227
— its numerical growth — 214, 221
— its condition — 221
— economic dependence on the capitalist — 203, 213-15, 219, 221
— use by bourgeoisie of competition among workers — 227
— as the only consistently revolutionary class — 198, 326
— as motive power in revolution — 197-98
— and national liberation movement — 197-98
See also Class; Class struggle; Working class in Prussia; Working-class movement in Germany
Working class in France — 80-81, 191-92, 197, 453, 479, 490
See also June uprising of Paris proletariat in 1848; Revolution in France. Second Republic (1848-49)
Working class in Germany — 56-57, 197-98, 326, 378, 392-93, 402, 403, 423, 434, 448-49, 467, 502-03
Working class in Prussia — 56-57, 326, 392-93, 402-03, 413, 467, 495, 501, 502-03, 506-07
Working-class movement in Germany — 326-27, 494, 498-500, 504
See also Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Working class in Germany
Working-class movement in Switzerland — 42, 44
World market — 3
— England's domination of — 198

Page Break me9.660

GLOSSARY OF GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES†a

Acs	Asc
Agram	Zagreb
Altenburg (Wieselburg)	Mosonmagyaróvar
Alt-Orsova	Orsova
Aluta (Alt)	Olt or Oltul
Andrichau	Andrychów
Arbegin	Egerbegy
Bartfeld	Bardejov
Becse (Base)	Becej
Becskerek (Nagy-Becskerek)	Zrenjanin
Besenyö	Besenyötelek
Bielitz	Bielsko-Biala
Blasendorf	Blaj
Breslau	Wroclaw
Brody (Radziwilow)	Brody and Chervonoarmeisk (two towns)
Budweis	Ceské Budejovice
Cerevich	Cerevic
Crnja	Srpska Crnja
Csacze	Cadca
Czernowitz	Chernovtsy
Dalja	Dalj
Debreczin	Debrecen
Demblin	Deblin
Dioszeg	Diosig
Eipel	Ipoly or Ipel
Eperies	Prešov
Erlau	Eger
Esseg	Osijek
Felegyhaza	Kiskunfelegyháza
Földvar	Dunaföldvár
Friedek	Frýdek-Mistek
Friedland	Frydlant na Ostravice
Fünfkirchen	Pécs
Galatz	Galati
Gnesen	Gniezno
Gönyö	Gonyü
Gran	Esztergom
Gran (river)	Hron
Gross-Kikinda	Kikinda
Grosswardein	Oradea
Güns	Köszeg
Hadersleben	Haderslev
Hatzfeld	Timbolia
Hermannstadt	Sibiu

Ibrail Braila
Ipolyság Šahy
Karánsebes Caransebes
Karlowitz Sremski Karlovci
Karlsburg Tepenec
Karlstadt Karlovac
KarwinKarvina
Kaschau (Kassa) Košice
Klausenburg Cluj
Kokel (Küküllö) Tîrnava
Kokel (Küküllo)
1. Grosse Kokel 1. Târnava Mare
2. Kleine Kokel 2. Târnava Mica
Page Break 661
Page me9.661
Kómlos Sintana
Komorn Komárom and Komárno (two towns)
Kosel Koale
Kremsier Kroméríz
Kronstadt Brasov
Laczhaza Kiskunlacháza
Lemberg Lvov
Leopoldstadt Leopoldov
Leutschau Levoca
Leva Levice
Loslau Wodzislaw-Sleynski
Losoncz Lucenec
Lugos Lugoj
Lundenburg Breclaw
Magyaros Šieu-Magherus
March March or Morava
Margitfalva Margecany
Mark-Schelken Seica-Mare
Maros Marosz or Mures
Maros-Vásárhely Tîrgu-Mures
Masdorf Tószeg
Mediasch Medias
Mitrowitz Mitrovica
Munkács Mukacevo
Myslowitz Myslowice
Neograd Nograd
Neudorf (Iglo) Spišska Nova Ves
Neuhäusel Nove Zámky
Neumarkt Nowy Targ
Neusatz (Ujvidek) Novi Sad
Neutitschein Novy Ticin

Neutra Nitra
Oedenburg Sopron
Oderberg Starý Bohumin
Ofen Buda
OlmützOlomouc
O-Szöny Szöny
Palotta Varpalota
Pancsova Pancevo
Pataj Dunapataj
Peterwardein Petrovaradin
Petrowian Petrovany
Pettau Ptuj
Plattensee Balaton
Posen Poznan
Prerau Prerov
Pressburg (Pozsony) Bratislava
Raab Györ
Raab (river) Rába
Radziwilow — see Brody
RátiborRacibórz
RayczaRajcza
Reichenberg Liberec
Rimaszombat Rimavská Sobota
Rosenau Roznava
Roterturm Turnu
Rosu Sankt Thomas
(Szent Tamas) Srbobran
Schässburg (Segesvar) Sighisoara
Schemnitz Banska
Štiavnica Semlin Zemun
Sillein Zilina
Sissek Sisak
Stettin Szczecin
Stuhlweissenburg Székesfehérvar
Sundewitt Sundeved
Syrmien Szerem
Szegedin Szeged
Szegléd Cegléd
Szent Peter Dolnýpeter
Szerdahely Mercurea
Temesvar Timisoara
Teplitz Teplice
Teschen Cesky Tešin (Czech) and Cieszyn (Polish), two towns
Theiss Tisza
Theresiopel (Maria-

Theresiopel) Subotica
Tömös (Pass) Predeal (Pass)
Törzburg Bran
Törzburg (Pass) Pasal Bran
Tot-Almas Töalmás
Troppau Opava
Turany Turany nad Vahom
Tyrnau Trnava
Verbasz Vrbas
Verebély Vráble
Vesprim Veszprém
Waag (Vag) Váh
Waitzen (Vacs) Vác
Wallendorf Spišske Vlachy
Werschetz (Versecz) Vršac
Wieselburg — see
Altenburg
Zenta Senta
Zombor Sombor

Footnotes
Page me9.4
†a See Engels, “The Economic Congress” and “The Free Trade Congress at Brussels” and Marx, “Speech on the Question of Free Trade” (present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 274-78, 282-90 and 450-65). — Ed.
Page me9.5
†a Retail salesman. — Ed.
Page me9.8
†a This word is in English in the original. — Ed.
Page me9.9
†a See Engels, “Magyar Victory” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 477-80). — Ed.
Page me9.10
†a Windischgrätz's proclamation was first published in the Pesther Zeitung and then reprinted in the evening supplement to the Wiener Zeitung No. 51, February 28, 1849, and in Der Lloyd No. 101 (evening edition), February 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.10
†b “Pest, 25. Febr.”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 52, March 2, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.10
†c The following is the quotation from “Käsmark, 23. Februar” published in Der Lloyd No. 104 (morning edition), March 2, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.11
†a On February 21, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.11
†b Rajachich. — Ed.

Page me9.12
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.12
†b “Agram, February 25”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 51 (supplement), March 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.13
†a Here and below Engels quotes the article “From the Theatre of War” published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 56, March 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.14
†a “Wien, 2. März”, Schlesische Zeitung No. 53 (first supplement), March 4, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.15
†a A reference to “Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.” (Mountains will be in labour, the birth will be a single laughable little mouse.) Horace, Ars Poetica, 139. — Ed.
Page me9.15
†b “Wien, 28. Febr.”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 52 (second supplement), March 2, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.15
†c See Engels, “The Struggle in Hungary” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 290-94). — Ed.
Page me9.19
†a “26. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 3. März.” — Ed.
Page me9.20
†a In this and other articles we have used “mile” when Engels uses the German word Meile. At that time Meile was a linear measure of different length in different German states, but it can be regarded as roughly 4 1/2 miles. — Ed.
Page me9.22
†a Published under the heading “Berliner Zuschauer”, Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 54, March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.22
†b Victoria. — Ed.
Page me9.23
†a These words are in English in the original. — Ed.
Page me9.23
†b The colours of the Prussian monarchy. — Ed.
Page me9.23
†c From the motto of the Neue Preussische Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me9.24
†a See this volume, pp. 19-21. — Ed.
Page me9.24
†b “Wien, 3. März”, Der Lloyd No. 107 (evening edition), March 3, 1849; “Wien, 3. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 65, March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.25
†a Engels quotes from the Kölnische Zeitung No. 57 (special supplement), March 8, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.25
†b “Nachrichten vom Kriegsschauplatz”, Der Siebenbürger Bote No. 22, February 19, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.27
†a The following quotation is from the article “Oesterreich” published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 65, March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.27
†b The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.28
†a “27. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 5. März.” — Ed.
Page me9.31
†a This passage was also published in the newspaper Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 55, March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.31
†b See Engels, “From the Hungarian Theatre of War” and “Magyar Victory” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 471-73 and 477-80). — Ed.
Page me9.31
†c “Pesth, 26. Febr.”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 65, March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.31
†d Ruler and metropolitan. — Ed.
Page me9.31
†e “Von der Save, 26. Febr.”, Der Lloyd No. 107 (evening edition), March 3, 1849. m.p. — abbreviation of “manu propria” — with one's own hand. — Ed.
Page me9.32
†a “Ofen, 2. März”, Der Lloyd No. 109 (evening edition), March 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.32
†b Kölnische Zeitung No. 56, March 7, 1849. See also this volume, p. 15. — Ed.
Page me9.33
†a This paper was never published. — Ed.
Page me9.34
†a “Erklärung der Redaction der Reform”, Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 67 (supplement), March 8, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.34
†b Without government guarantee. — Ed.
Page me9.35
†a Official organ of the French Government. — Ed.
Page me9.37
†a Maximilian II. — Ed.
Page me9.38
†a A reference to the article “Ungarn” in the supplement to the Kölnische Zeitung No. 59, March 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.39
†a This paragraph is taken from the article “Wien (näheres über die Schlacht bei Kapolna)” published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 66, March 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.39

†b “Graf Erbach”, Deutsche Zeitung No. 66, March 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.40
†a “Wien, 5. März”, Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 68, March 9, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.40
†b These are people called real scholars (Paul de Kock, L'amant de la lune). — Ed.
Page me9.40
†c The name is given incorrectly in the newspaper; it should be “Nicolá”. — Ed.
Page me9.40
†d Under the chairmanship of the Patriarch. — Ed.
Page me9.41
†a “Semlin, 24. Februar”, Der Lloyd No. 107 (evening edition), March 3, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.41
†b Serbske Novine (Srbske Novine). — Ed.
Page me9.41
†c Title of the Austrian diplomatic representatives in Istanbul from 1678 to 1856. — Ed.
Page me9.41
†d Ali Mehemet Pasa. — Ed.
Page me9.41
†e Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 55, March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.42
†a Cf. Marx, “The 'Model State' of Belgium” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 333-36). — Ed.
Page me9.43
†a Supreme body of cantonal administration. — Ed.
Page me9.44
†a On February 20, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.44
†b The uttermost point attainable, the summit of achievement, acme. — Ed.
Page me9.45
†a Of the canton of Berne. — Ed.
Page me9.47
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.47
†b The reference is to the Frankfurt National Assembly (see p. 36). — Ed.
Page me9.48
†a It does not matter, it is all one (Vienna dialect). — Ed.
Page me9.49
†a Emperor Francis Joseph I. — Ed.
Page me9.50
†a See this volume, pp. 65-69, 125-32, 320-29. — Ed.
Page me9.51
†a The colours of the movement for the unification of Germany. — Ed.
Page me9.52

†a “Any attack on property ... any attempt to foment hatred between the various classes of society will be punished” etc. (Collection compléte des lois, décrets ... par J.B. Duvergier; á Paris 1836; tome trente-cinquiéme, année 1835.) — Ed.
Page me9.55
†a “Blinder Hesse” (blind Hessian) denotes a weak-sighted or weak-minded person. — Ed.
Page me9.56
†a Prussia. — Ed.
Page me9.56
†b Constitutionelle Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me9.58
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.58
†b There follows a quotation from “Wien, 5. März”, published in Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 68, March 9, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.60
†a “Pesth, 3. März”, Der Lloyd No. 110 (morning edition), March 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.62
†a “Hermannstadt, 22. Februar”, Der Siebenbürger Bote No. 24, February 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.65
†a See article “Speech from the Throne” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 445-50). — Ed.
Page me9.65
†b See this volume, pp. 50-54. — Ed.
Page me9.66
†a “Votum über die wesentlichen Aufgaben der jetzt versammelten sogenannten Volksvertretung”, Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 59 (supplement), March 11, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.66
†b J.W. Goethe, “Westöstlicher Diwan”. — Ed.
Page me9.66
†c A divine principle — from Virgil's Bucolica. — Ed.
Page me9.67
†a Exodus 20:5. — Ed.
Page me9.68
†a In the Neue Preussische Zeitung: “Verderben” (ruin) and not “Verbrechen” (crimes). — Ed.
Page me9.69
†a Distaste. — Ed.
Page me9.69
†b See this volume, pp. 125-32. — Ed.
Page me9.70
†a See Marx, “Drigalski — Legislator, Citizen and Communist” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 75-80). — Ed.
Page me9.72

†a “Pest, 5. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 59, March 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.73
†a “Pest, 6. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 59, March 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.73
†b “Von der Drave, 27. Feb.”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 56 (first supplement), March 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.73
†c The passage is quoted from the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 59, March 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.73
†d Francis Joseph. — Ed.
Page me9.73
†e Ban or Banus — Viceroy or Governor. — Ed.
Page me9.74
†a “Von der Drave, 27. Feb.”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 56 (first supplement), March 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.76
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.77
†a The passages quoted here and below are taken from a report published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 63 (second edition), March 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.78
†a “Wien, 10. März”, Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 73, March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.78
†b See this volume, pp. 15 and 32. — Ed.
Page me9.79
†a Respect for property. — Ed.
Page me9.79
†b Shops. — Ed.
Page me9.79
†c Confidence. — Ed.
Page me9.80
†a Louis Philippe I. — Ed.
Page me9.80
†b Charles X. — Ed.
Page me9.82
†a Return of the milliard. — Ed.
Page me9.82
†b This refers to the elections to the Legislative Assembly which were held on May 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.84
†a See this volume, pp. 36-37. — Ed.
Page me9.84

†b A pun (Kommerz=commerce, März=March) referring to the leading forces of the Central March Association. — Ed.
Page me9.85
†a In Giessen. — Ed.
Page me9.86
†a See present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 445-50. — Ed.
Page me9.86
†b Westphalia. — Ed.
Page me9.86
†c Any kind. — Ed.
Page me9.87
†a "The dead ride fast" from G.A. Bürger, Lenore. — Ed.
Page me9.87
†b See this volume, pp. 70-71. — Ed.
Page me9.88
†a See Marx, "The Hohenzollern General Plan of Reform" (this volume, pp. 65-69). — Ed.
Page me9.88
†b i.e. the whole of Germany apart from Austria. — Ed.
Page me9.91
†a See this volume, p. 90. — Ed.
Page me9.92
†a The proclamation was published in the article "Pest, 9. März" in Der Lloyd No. 121 (evening edition), March 12, 1849, and also in the Wiener Zeitung No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.92
†b "Pressburg, 9. März", Der Lloyd No. 119 (evening edition), March 10, 1849. Below the same article is quoted. — Ed.
Page me9.93
†a "Hermannstadt, 15. Febr.", Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 74 (supplement), March 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.94
†a Force of circumstances. — Ed.
Page me9.94
†b "Wien, 12. März", Kölnische Zeitung No. 64 (special supplement), March 16, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.95
†a "Pesth, 8. März", Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 72, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.95
†b "Abony bei Szolnok, 6. März", Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 72. March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.96
†a "Pest, 9. März", Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.96

†b “Pesth, 8. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 72, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.96
†c See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.96
†d This and the following quotations are taken from two items “Pest, 8. März” published in the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 60 (second supplement), March 12, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.97
†a Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me9.97
†b “Von der Drave, 8. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.98
†a “Agram, 5. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 60, March 11, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.98
†b The Austrian Court fled to Olmütz (Olomouc) during the Vienna uprising in October 1848. — Ed.
Page me9.98
†c “Von der Drave, 8. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.99
†a “Von der Save, 1. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 60 (second supplement), March 12, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.99
†b “Semlin, 4. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.100
†a “Pest, 8. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 60 (second supplement), March 12, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.100
†b “Pest, 9. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.101
†a An allusion to Transylvania. — Ed.
Page me9.101
†b “Von der Drave, 8. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 61, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.101
†c An ironic reference to the journalist who wrote about the war in Hungary for the Kölnische Zeitung (see this volume, pp. 13-18). — Ed.
Page me9.105
†a After this paragraph Engels deleted the following words: “The Czechs who form the vanguard of the Austrian Slavs, are the....” — Ed.
Page me9.106

†a “What is the Fatherland of a German” from Ernst Moritz Arndt's poem “Der Teutschen Vaterland” (music by Gustav Reichardt). — Ed.
Page me9.107
†a L. L. Haschka, National and State Anthem of Austria. Music by Joseph Haydn. — Ed.
Page me9.108
†a Initial words of the song “Jesus meine Zuversicht!” — Ed.
Page me9.109
†a Neue Preussische Zeitung No. 64, March 17, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.110
†a The report was reprinted under the heading: “Wien, 14. März” in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 76, March 17, 1849 and in Kölnische Zeitung No. 66 (second edition), March 18, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.112
†a This report was first published in the Breslauer Zeitung and then under the dateline “Wien, 14. März” reprinted in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 66 (second edition), March 18, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.112
†b Ibid. — Ed.
Page me9.112
†c “Wien, 12. März”, Ost-Deutsche Post No. 45, March 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.114
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.114
†b Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 62, March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.115
†a See this volume, p. 62. — Ed.
Page me9.115
†b Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 62 (second supplement), March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.116
†a Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 63, March 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.116
†b See this volume, pp. 97-98. — Ed.
Page me9.116
†c “Pest, 10. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 62, March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.117
†a Wiener Zeitung No. 62, March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.118
†a Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 62, March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.118
†b See this volume, p. 111. — Ed.
Page me9.118
†c Francis Joseph I. — Ed.
Page me9.119

†a “Pest”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 62 (second supplement), March 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.119
†b “Kaschau, 3. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 63, March 15, 1849. The date of Windischgrätz's proclamation as given by the newspaper is not accurate. It was signed on December 26, 1848. — Ed.
Page me9.120
†a “An die Bewohner Ungarns. Vom 11. März”, Wiener Zeitung No. 64 (evening supplement), March 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.121
†a i.e. the 28th Army Bulletin. See this volume, pp. 113-20. — Ed.
Page me9.123
†a Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 65, March 17, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.124
†a See this volume, pp. 133 and 162. — Ed.
Page me9.125
†a See this volume, p. 69. — Ed.
Page me9.125
†b Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.125
†c i.e. the Brandenburg-Manteuffel Government which carried out the coup d'état in Prussia. — Ed.
Page me9.129
†a “Verordnung über die Herstellung des Rheinischen Zivilgesetzbuchs in Betreff der Schliessung der Ehe...”; “Verordnung, betreffend das Verfahren bei politischen und Pressvergehen in der Rheinprovinz und die Wiederherstellung des Rheinischen Strafrechts und Strafverfahrens bei politischen und Amtsverbrechen.” — Ed.
Page me9.129
†b The King is dead, long live the King! — Ed.
Page me9.133
†a “Pest, 13. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 65 (supplement), March 17, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.137
†a If one has any. — Ed.
Page me9.137
†b See present edition, Vol. 8, p. 36. — Ed.
Page me9.138
†a The words are taken from Frederick William III's decree of March 17, 1813 concerning the organisation of an army reserve. — Ed.
Page me9.139
†a See this volume, pp. 490-91. — Ed.
Page me9.139
†b A pun on Renard — the name of the speaker and the French word for fox. — Ed.
Page me9.141
†a If they ever had any. — Ed.

Page me9.142
†a What a simpleton! — Ed.
Page me9.146
†a “Hermannstadt, 9. März”, Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 84 (supplement), March 25, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.146
†b “Mediasch, 7. März”, Der Siebenbürger Bote No. 30, March 9, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.146
†c Rajachich. — Ed.
Page me9.148
†a Pius IX. — Ed.
Page me9.148
†b Leopold II. — Ed.
Page me9.149
†a Cf. report in the section “Ungarn” in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 73, March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.149
†b From the Polish national anthem. — Ed.
Page me9.152
†a “Pesth, 20. März”, Ost-Deutsche Post No. 54, March 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.152
†b Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me9.152
†c “Pesth, 20. März”, Kölnische-Zeitung No. 74 (second edition), March 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.153
†a This and the following quotation are taken from the report “Pest, 20. März” in the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 71, March 24, 1849; they are reprinted in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung No. 86, March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.153
†b See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.155
†a “Von der Drave, 18. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 71, March 24, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.156
†a This refers to a report published in the Journal des Débats on March 26, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.157
†a See this volume, pp. 150-51. — Ed.
Page me9.157
†b Parma and Modena. — Ed.
Page me9.158
†a See this volume, pp. 149 and 153-54. — Ed.
Page me9.158
†b “Wien, 24. März”, Der Lloyd No. 144 (morning edition), March 25, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.158
†c See this volume, pp. 152 and 154. — Ed.
Page me9.160
†a “Pesth, 20. März”, Der Lloyd No. 140 (morning edition), March 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.160
†b See present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 300-03. — Ed.
Page me9.160
†c See this volume, pp. 154-55. — Ed.
Page me9.161
†a “Wien, 21. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 84, March 25, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.162
†a “Zara, 13. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 70, March 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.163
†a “Pesth”, Wiener Zeitung No. 71, March 24, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.164
†a See this volume, pp. 156-57. — Ed.
Page me9.165
†a “Paris, 26 mars”, Journal des Débats, March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.167
†a “Pesth, 21. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 85, March 26, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.169
†a Victor Emmanuel II. — Ed.
Page me9.170
†a On February 24, 1848 the French monarchy was overthrown. — Ed.
Page me9.176
†a Published in the section “Italien” in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 79, April 3, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.178
†a This order, of March 21, 1849, was published in the Wiener Zeitung No. 74 (evening supplement), March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.179
†a The reference is to the troops sent by the principality of Serbia to the Hungarian front. — Ed.
Page me9.179
†b Friendly understanding. — Ed.
Page me9.181
†a Engels, probably, refers to the article “Pesth, 24. März” in Der Lloyd No. 147 (evening edition), March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.181
†b See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.182

†a “Cernowic, am 21. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 74, March 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.183
†a “Kecskemet, 15. März (M.N.)”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 74, March 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.183
†b “Semlin, 19. März”, Der Lloyd No. 143 (evening edition), March 24, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.184
†a “Temešvar, 17. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 73, March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.184
†b “Beckerek, 13. März (Südsl. Ztg.)”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 74, March 28, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.185
†a See this volume, p. 181. — Ed.
Page me9.186
†a See this volume, pp. 152-53. — Ed.
Page me9.187
†a “Pest, 25. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 75, March 29, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.187
†b Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 88 (supplement), March 29, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.187
†c The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.188
†a Engels refers to the following reports: “Pesth, 24. März”, Kölnische Zeitung No. 78 (second edition), April 1, 1849; “Pesth, 27. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 92, April 2, 1849; “Pest, 27. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 78, April 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.189
†a “Wien, 29. März”, Der Lloyd No. 152 (morning edition), March 30, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.189
†b “Neuestes”, Der Lloyd No. 151 (evening edition), March 29, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.189
†c The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.190
†a “Neuestes”, Der Lloyd No. 151 (evening edition), March 29, 1849. The newspaper mentioned that five officers were to be hanged. — Ed.
Page me9.190
†b “Wien, 28. März”, Ost-Deutsche Post No. 59, March 29, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.190
†c “Semlin, 21. März”, Der Lloyd No. 147 (evening edition), March 27, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.190

†d An allusion to the journalist Schwanbeck reporting the Hungarian war for the Kölnische Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me9.192
†a See Le Moniteur universel No. 91, April 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.193
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.193
†b From the statement made by Brandenburg, the Prime Minister, at the sitting of the Second Chamber on April 2, 1848. — Ed.
Page me9.193
†c [Radowitz, J.M.,] Deutschland und Friedrich-Wilhelm IV, Hamburg, 1848. — Ed.
Page me9.197
†a In separate editions of Wage Labour and Capital, including that of 1891, the dates printed at the beginning of each article are omitted. — Ed.
Page me9.197
†b In the 1891 edition "1848" is added here. — Ed.
Page me9.198
†a The 1891 edition has "the so-called burgher estate" instead of "the peasant estate". — Ed.
Page me9.198
†b 1 franc equals 8 Prussian silver groschen. (In the 1891 edition the word "mark" is used everywhere instead of "franc".) — Ed.
Page me9.198
†c The words "for a particular labour time or" are omitted in the 1891 edition. — Ed.
Page me9.201
†a The 1891 edition has "capitalist" here instead of "bourgeois". — Ed.
Page me9.201
†b The 1891 edition has "capitalist" here and the words "it seems" are added. — Ed.
Page me9.201
†c In the 1891 edition here follows the passage: "But this is merely the appearance. In reality what they sell to the capitalist for money is their labour power. The capitalist buys this labour power for a day, a week, a month, etc. And after he has bought it, he uses it by having the workers work for the stipulated time". — Ed.
Page me9.201
†d The 1891 edition has "the capitalist has bought their labour power" instead of "the bourgeois has bought their labour". — Ed.
Page me9.201
†e The 1891 edition has "use of labour power" instead of "labour". — Ed.
Page me9.201
†f The 1891 edition has "labour power" instead of "labour". — Ed.
Page me9.201
†g The 1891 edition has "so long a use of labour power" instead of "so much labour". — Ed.

Page me9.201
†h The 1891 edition has “the price of labour power, commonly called the price of labour” instead of “the price of labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.202
†a The 1891 edition has here and below “capitalist” instead of “bourgeois”. — Ed.
Page me9.202
†b The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.202
†c The 1891 edition has after this: “the exercise of labour power”. — Ed.
Page me9.203
†a The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.203
†b The 1891 edition has “not to this or that capitalist, but to the capitalist class” instead of “not to this or that bourgeois, but to the bourgeoisie, the bourgeois class”. — Ed.
Page me9.203
†c The 1891 edition has “capitalist class” instead of “bourgeois class”. — Ed.
Page me9.204
†a The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.208
†a The 1891 edition has “depreciation of instruments” instead of “instruments of labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.209
†a The 1891 edition has “the buyers of labour power” and “the sellers of labour power” instead of “the buyers of labour” and “the sellers of labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.209
†b The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.209
†c In the 1891 edition the words “and capable of working” are added here. — Ed.
Page me9.209
†d The 1891 edition has here and in the next paragraph “simple labour power” instead of “simple labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.211
†a The 1891 edition has “not only act on nature but also on one another” instead of “enter into relation not only with nature”. — Ed.
Page me9.211
†b The 1891 edition has “action on nature” instead of “relation with nature”. — Ed.
Page me9.212
†a In the 1891 edition the word “pfennig” is used here and below instead of “centime”. — Ed.
Page me9.213
†a The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.213

†b The 1891 edition has “between capitalist and wage-worker” instead of “between capital and wage labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.213
†c The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.214
†a The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.214
†b The 1891 edition has “The labour power of the wage-worker” instead of “The wage labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.215
†a The 1891 edition has “workers” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.217
†a The 1891 edition has here and in the two paragraphs below “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.217
†b The 1891 edition has “the discovery of richer and more easily worked mines in America” instead of “the discovery of America”. — Ed.
Page me9.218
†a In the 1891 edition Engels changed the part of the paragraph beginning with the words “relative wages” in the following way: “relative wages, on the other hand, express the share of direct labour in the new value it has created in relation to the share which falls to accumulated labour, to capital.
Page me9.218
“We said above, page 14 [see this volume, p. 202]: 'Wages are not the worker's share in the commodity produced by him. Wages are the part of already existing commodities with which the capitalist buys for himself a definite amount of productive labour power.' But the capitalist must replace these wages out of the price at which he sells the product produced by the worker; he must replace it in such a way that there remains to him, as a rule, a surplus over the cost of production expended by him, a profit. For the capitalist, the selling price of the commodity produced by the worker is divided into three parts: first, replacement of the price of the raw materials advanced by him together with replacement of the depreciation of the tools, machinery and other means of labour also advanced by him; secondly, the replacement of the wages advanced by him, and thirdly, the surplus left over, the capitalist's profit. While the first part only replaces previously existing values, it is clear that both the replacement of the wages and also the surplus profit of the capitalist are, on the whole, taken from the new value created by the worker's labour and added to the raw materials. And in this sense, in order to compare them with one another, we can regard both wages and profit as shares in the product of the worker.” — Ed.
Page me9.218
†b In the 1891 edition this sentence reads: “The share of capital relative to the share of labour has risen.” — Ed.
Page me9.219
†a The 1891 edition has “Capital's share” instead of “The exchange value of capital”. — Ed.
Page me9.219

†b The 1891 edition has “labour's share” instead of “the exchange value of labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.219
†c The 1891 edition has “labour power” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.219
†d The 1891 edition has “other people's labour” instead of “labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.220
†a In the 1891 edition the words “in the long run” are added here. — Ed.
Page me9.220
†b The 1891 edition has “direct labour” instead of “living labour”. — Ed.
Page me9.220
†c The 1891 edition has “price” instead of “exchange value”. — Ed.
Page me9.224
†a The 1891 edition has “more profit” instead of “profit”. — Ed.
Page me9.227
†a The 1891 edition has “contest” instead of “war”. — Ed.
Page me9.228
†a The 1891 edition has “industrial earthquakes” instead of “earthquakes”. — Ed.
Page me9.228
†b The 1891 edition has “new markets” instead of “markets”. — Ed.
Page me9.229
†a “Prag, 25. März,” Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 91, April 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.229
†b “Long live!” in Hungarian and Serbo-Croatian. — Ed.
Page me9.231
†a If such there be. — Ed.
Page me9.232
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.233
†a Engels refers to the article “Pesth, 27. März” in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 92, April 2, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.235
†a “Wien, 31. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 93, April 3, 1849. See also this volume, p. 190. — Ed.
Page me9.236
†a Rajachich. — Ed.
Page me9.236
†b We shall see! — Ed.
Page me9.237
†a The following passage is from Közlöny No. 59, March 22, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.238
†a See this volume, p. 235. — Ed.
Page me9.238
†b There is a blank in the newspaper due to bad printing. — Ed.
Page me9.239

†a The proclamation is given in the report “Pressburg, 31. März”, Der Lloyd No. 157 (evening edition), April 2, 1849, and is dated March 30, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.240
†a Manu propria — with one's own hand. — Ed.
Page me9.241
†a A similar account is also published in “Wien, 31. März”, Der Lloyd No. 155 (evening edition), March 31, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.241
†b “Pesth, 29. März”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 93, April 3, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.242
†a See this volume, pp. 237-38. — Ed.
Page me9.243
†a See this volume, p. 279. — Ed.
Page me9.243
†b Ibid., p. 235. — Ed.
Page me9.244
†a Rajachich. — Ed.
Page me9.244
†b “Semlin, 28. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 81, April 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.244
†c “LC Wien, 3. April”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 81, April 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.245
†a See this volume, pp. 234-35. — Ed.
Page me9.245
†b The national colours of Hungary. — Ed.
Page me9.246
†a “Bericht über die Verhältnisse vor Comorn”, Wiener Zeitung No. 79, April 3, 1849; Die Presse No. 80, April 4, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.246
†b “Freudige Nachricht”, Agramer Zeitung, March 31, 1849. Printed also in Der Lloyd No. 157 (evening edition), April 2, 1849 and in Österreichischer Correspondent No. 77, April 4, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.248
†a Long live (in Hungarian). — Ed.
Page me9.249
†a See this volume, p. 246. — Ed.
Page me9.250
†a Wiener Zeitung No. 81, April 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.251
†a “Von der Drave, 30. März”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 81, April 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.251

†b From Ernst Moritz Arndt's poem “Des Teutschen Vaterland” (music by Gustav Reichardt). — Ed.
Page me9.252
†a Wiener Zeitung No. 82 (evening supplement), April 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.253
†a The reference is to a report from Lemberg (Lvov) which was published in the section “Poland” in the same issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me9.254
†a Rajachich. — Ed.
Page me9.254
†b Wiener Zeitung No. 82 (evening supplement), April 5, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.255
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.261
†a The news items mentioned by Engels can be found in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung Nos. 99 to 101, April 9 to 11, 1849 under the datelines “Pesth, 4. April”, “Pesth, 5. April” and “Pesth, 6. April”. — Ed.
Page me9.262
†a Published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 269, April 11, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.262
†b “Wien, 6. April”, Der Lloyd No. 166 (morning edition), April 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.263
†a Reprinted in the article “Pesth, 4. April,” Die Presse No. 83, April 7, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.264
†a Ferdinand I. — Ed.
Page me9.265
†a Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me9.265
†b “Pest, 5. April,” Ost-Deutsche Post No. 68, April 8, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.267
†a See this volume, pp. 268-70. — Ed.
Page me9.268
†a This and the following quotation are taken from a report published in the section “Ungarn” in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 88, April 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.268
†b “34. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 9. April 1849.” — Ed.
Page me9.269
†a See this volume, p. 274. — Ed.
Page me9.271
†a Dated April 7, 1849, published in the Wiener Zeitung No. 84, April 9, 1849 and in Der Lloyd No. 169 (evening edition), April 9, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.271
†b See this volume, pp. 268-70. — Ed.
Page me9.276

†a The reference is to the item “Wien, 8. April” and a report published in the section “Ungarn” in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 88, April 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.278
†a George Bibesco. — Ed.
Page me9.279
†a Lázár Mészáros. — Ed.
Page me9.279
†b “Siebenbürgen, 9. Apr.”, Wiener Zeitung No. 86 (evening edition), April 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.280
†a See this volume, p. 275. — Ed.
Page me9.280
†b See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.284
†a “Pest, 8. April”, Der Lloyd No. 171 (evening edition), April 10, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.286
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.287
†a “Cernowic, 5. April”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 87, April 12, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.287
†b A reference to the item “Neustes” published in Der Lloyd No. 173 (evening edition), April 11, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.289
†a “Von der Drave, 7. April”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 88, April 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.289
†b The following report under the date-line “Bukowina. Czernowitz, 4. April” was also published in the Ost-Deutsche Post No. 72, April 13, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.292
†a “Wien, 12. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 105, April 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.292
†b See this volume, p. 288. — Ed.
Page me9.293
†a “Pest, 11. April”, Ost-Deutsche Post No. 73, April 14, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.293
†b “Wien, 12. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 105, April 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.293
†c See this volume, p. 280. — Ed.
Page me9.294
†a This report of the Südslavische Zeitung was reprinted in the article “Mitrovic, 5. April” in the Ost-Deutsche Post No. 74, April 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.295

†a Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patentvom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Bd. 2, S. 462-65. — Ed.

Page me9.296

†a The colours of the movement for the unification of Germany. — Ed.

Page me9.296

†b Wilhelm Willisen. — Ed.

Page me9.299

†a “Wien, 13. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 106, April 16, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.299

†b See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.

Page me9.299

†c “Aus der Slovakei”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 89, April 14, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.300

†a This report was published in the Kölnische Zeitung No. 95, April 21, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.304

†a Rajachich. — Ed.

Page me9.305

†a From Ernst Moritz Arndt's poem “Des Teutschen Vaterland” (music by Gustav Reichardt). — Ed.

Page me9.307

†a Published in the report “Wien, 16. April”, Ost-Deutsche Post No. 75, April 17, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.307

†b See this volume, p. 294. — Ed.

Page me9.311

†a See the article “The Russian Note” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 307-13). — Ed.

Page me9.312

†a Nicholas I. — Ed.

Page me9.312

†b Frederick William IV. — Ed.

Page me9.312

†c Here and later on Engels uses the Russian word knyaz. — Ed.

Page me9.313

†a See “The Agreement Assembly of June 15” (present edition, Vol. 7, p. 90). — Ed.

Page me9.314

†a Wiener Zeitung No. 91 (evening supplement), April 16, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.315

†a “Pest, 14. April”, Der Lloyd No. 181 (evening edition), April 16, 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.316

†a “An die K.K. Armee in Ungarn.” Proklamation von F. Welden. Vom 17. April 1849. — Ed.

Page me9.316
†b See this volume, p. 302. — Ed.
Page me9.318
†a “Wien, 15. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 109, April 19, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.319
†a Laval Nugent. — Ed.
Page me9.320
†a See this volume, pp. 295-98. — Ed.
Page me9.320
†b Given by the Minister of War K.A. Strotha. — Ed.
Page me9.320
†c “Geschäfts-Ordnung für die Zweite Kammer.” — Ed.
Page me9.321
†a See Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der durch das Allerhöchste Patent vom 5. Dezember 1848 einberufenen Kammern. Zweite Kammer. Bd. 2, Berlin, 1849, S. 467. — Ed.
Page me9.322
†a However credulous you are. — Ed.
Page me9.322
†b From the Prussian anthem Heil Dir im Siegerkranz written by B.G. Schumacher on the basis of the poem “Lied für den dänischen Unterthan” by H. Harries, a Schleswig pastor. — Ed.
Page me9.323
†a Barrot. — Ed.
Page me9.324
†a Till tomorrow, therefore, Citizen Riedel. — Ed.
Page me9.325
†a To placate, pacify, soothe. — Ed.
Page me9.325
†b Attempt to gain favour. — Ed.
Page me9.328
†a Well, Citizen Riedel, let us be frank. — Ed.
Page me9.331
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.331
†b See this volume, p. 316. — Ed.
Page me9.332
†a “Semlin, 13. April”, Der Lloyd No. 183 (evening edition), April 17, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.334
†a See this volume, p. 331. — Ed.
Page me9.335
†a See this volume, p. 333. — Ed.
Page me9.335
†b Thoroughbred. — Ed.

Page me9.335
†c Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me9.336
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.336
†b “Wien, 19. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 112, April 22, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.337
†a Francis Joseph I and Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me9.338
†a “Von der walachischen Gränze, 8. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 110, April 20, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.339
†a As regards jurisdiction. — Ed.
Page me9.339
†b See present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 344-46, 463-65 and 474-76. — Ed.
Page me9.339
†c Stangier. — Ed.
Page me9.340
†a Hang yourself, Figaro, you would not have thought of that! (Beaumarchais, La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro, Act V, Scene 8.) — Ed.
Page me9.340
†b See “The First Trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 304-12). — Ed.
Page me9.343
†a “Wien, 20. April”, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung No. 113, April 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.343
†b See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.343
†c “Neuestes”, Der Lloyd No. 191 (evening edition), April 21, 1849; No. 194 (morning edition), April 24, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.350
†a Wiener Zeitung No. 97 (evening supplement), April 23, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.352
†a See this volume, pp. 350-51. — Ed.
Page me9.352
†b Long live Kossuth! Long live the Magyars! — Ed.
Page me9.353
†a “35. Armee-Bulletin. Vom 24, April.” — Ed.
Page me9.353
†b In the special supplement to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung dated April 28 but issued in the morning of April 29, 1849 (see this volume, p. 352). — Ed.
Page me9.354
†a Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me9.355

†a “Pesth, 21. April”, Ost-Deutsche Post No. 81, April 24, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.355
†b Long live! — Ed.
Page me9.357
†a The reference is to the report published under the date-line “Berlin, 28. April” in the same issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me9.359
†a i.e. Grand Duchy of Posen under Prussian rule. — Ed.
Page me9.359
†b Przyluski. — Ed.
Page me9.359
†c “Korrespondenz des Erzbischofs von Posen Przyluski mit dem Berliner Kabinet.” Neue Rheinische Zeitung Nos. 5, 7, 10, 14, 38, 39 of June 5, 7, 10, 14, and July 8 and 9, 1848. — Ed.
Page me9.359
†d “The Frankfurt Assembly Debates the Polish Question” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 337-81). — Ed.
Page me9.361
†a Frederick William II. — Ed.
Page me9.364
†a “Kundmachung, von Böhm. Wien, 24. April 1849.” — Ed.
Page me9.364
†b “Wien, 24. April”, Die Presse No. 98, April 25, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.364
†c Of April 22, 1849, Der Lloyd No. 197 (evening edition), April 25, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.364
†d At par. — Ed.
Page me9.366
†a “Pressburg, 22. April”, Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 98, April 25, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.369
†a Those arrested when the October 1848 uprising in Vienna was crushed. — Ed.
Page me9.371
†a Goethe, Faust, 1. Teil, 1. “Studierzimmerszene”. — Ed.
Page me9.372
†a See present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 344-46, 463-65, 474-76 and this volume, pp. 339-41. — Ed.
Page me9.377
†a Schiller, “Die Bürgschaft”. — Ed.
Page me9.381
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.382
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.383
†a See this volume, p. 376. — Ed.

Page me9.383
†b i.e. Napoleon's Code pénal which was in force in the Rhine Province of Prussia. — Ed.
Page me9.387
†a i.e. achievements of the March revolution of 1848 in Prussia. — Ed.
Page me9.391
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.394
†a Schiller, “Die Bürgschaft”. — Ed.
Page me9.394
†b Francis Joseph I. — The Russian word “knyaz” means “Prince”. — Ed.
Page me9.394
†c Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me9.394
†d Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.394
†e The German National Assembly met in the St. Paul's Church at Frankfurt. — Ed.
Page me9.395
†a National-Zeitung No. 116 (supplement), May 2, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.395
†b See present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 269-70 and this volume, pp. 257-58. — Ed.
Page me9.398
†a Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me9.401
†a Jellachich. — Ed.
Page me9.402
†a See this volume, p. 392. — Ed.
Page me9.404
†a See this volume, pp. 400-01. — Ed.
Page me9.404
†b This and the following quotations are taken from the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen No. 103, May 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.405
†a Windischgrätz. — Ed.
Page me9.407
†a Francis Joseph I. — Ed.
Page me9.409
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.409
†b “Breslau, 4. Mai”, Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 292, May 8, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.411
†a Frederick Augustus II. — Ed.
Page me9.411
†b See this volume, pp. 195-96. — Ed.
Page me9.412

†a The colours of the Prussian monarchy. — Ed.
Page me9.414
†a “Knyaz” is the Russian word for “prince”. — Ed.
Page me9.414
†b F.V.E. Arago. — Ed.
Page me9.414
†c The Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph and the Prussian King Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.417
†a Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger No. 125, May 8, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.418
†a Heinrich Heine, “Der Wechselbalg” in Zeitgedicht. — Ed.
Page me9.418
†b Frederick William. — Ed.
Page me9.419
†a Louis XVI. — Ed.
Page me9.421
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.421
†b i.e. the members of the Brandenburg-Manteuffel Government. — Ed.
Page me9.421
†c Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me9.423
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.423
†b Düsseldorfer Zeitung. — Ed.
Page me9.424
†a See this volume, p. 409. — Ed.
Page me9.424
†b See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.424
†c The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.425
†a Even if it's not true it's well invented. — Ed.
Page me9.426
†a The colours of the Prussian monarchy. — Ed.
Page me9.428
†a See this volume, p. 423. — Ed.
Page me9.430
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.431
†a There followed the “Verordnung über den Belagerungszustand” (“Decree on the State of Siege”) of May 10, 1849, which the Neue Rheinische Zeitung published under the heading “The Latest Prussian Constitution”. — Ed.
Page me9.432
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.

Page me9.434
†a See this volume, pp. 423 and 428-29. — Ed.
Page me9.437
†a See this volume, pp. 359 and 414. — Ed.
Page me9.437
†b “The young tyrant of Prussia recently married a young lady of Mecklenburg.” (From a report in the section “Berliner Zuschauer” published in the Neue Preussische Zeitung [Kreuz-Zeitung] No. 107, May 10, 1849.) A reference to Luise von Mecklenburg-Strelitz. — Ed.
Page me9.437
†c See this volume, pp. 418-22. The Premier-Cologne — leading article datelined Cologne. — Ed.
Page me9.437
†d Queen Elizabeth, the wife of Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.438
†a See this volume, pp. 430-31. — Ed.
Page me9.440
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.440
†b See this volume, pp. 430-31. — Ed.
Page me9.441
†a See this volume, p. 419. — Ed.
Page me9.441
†b Nicholas. I. — Ed.
Page me9.442
†a A Spanish police agent. — Ed.
Page me9.443
†a M. Cervantes, “Coloquio de los perros” in Novelas ejemplares. — Ed.
Page me9.444
†a See this volume, pp. 429 and 435. — Ed.
Page me9.446
†a Heinrich Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Caput VIII. — Ed.
Page me9.448
†a The colours symbolise Germany's unity, and in this case they denote the unification of the country in accordance with the imperial Constitution. — Ed.
Page me9.450
†a Kölnische Zeitung No. 117, March 17, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.450
†b Frederick Engels. — Ed.
Page me9.450
†c See this volume, pp. 447-49. — Ed.
Page me9.450
†d Cramer, C., “Polizeispione”, Der Wächter am Rhein No. 51, May 6, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.452
†a See the article “Hüser” (present edition, Vol. 7, p. 20). — Ed.

Page me9.452
†b Well, gentlemen, what do you say now? — Ed.
Page me9.452
†c “The First Trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung”; Speech by Karl Marx (present edition, Vol. 8, p. 317). — Ed.
Page me9.452
†d Marx, “Reply of the King of Prussia to the Delegation of the National Assembly” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 474-75). — Ed.
Page me9.452
†e Is that clear, gentlemen? — Ed.
Page me9.453
†a Woe to the conquered! — Ed.
Page me9.453
†b Marx, “The Victory of the Counter-Revolution in Vienna” (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 505-06). — Ed.
Page me9.453
†c Marx, “Public Prosecutor 'Hecker' and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung” (present edition, Vol. 7, p. 488). — Ed.
Page me9.453
†d Marx, “The Bourgeoisie and the Counter-Revolution” (present edition, Vol. 8, p. 178). — Ed.
Page me9.453
†e See present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 124-27, 130-49. — Ed.
Page me9.454
†a Marx, “The Revolutionary Movement” (present edition, Vol. 8, p. 215). — Ed.
Page me9.459
†a See footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.462
†a The Austrian imperial colours. — Ed.
Page me9.464
†a Appeal issued by Frederick William IV on May 15, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.464
†b Frederick William III. — Ed.
Page me9.465
†a See this volume, pp. 440-46. — Ed.
Page me9.465
†b “Die Ansprache des Königs”, Kölnische Zeitung No. 118, May 18, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.466
†a Neue Preussische Zeitung (Kreuz-Zeitung). — Ed.
Page me9.474
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.474
†b Nicholas I. — Ed.
Page me9.480
†a Émile de Girardin. — Ed.

Page me9.480
†b See this volume, p. 451. — Ed.
Page me9.481
†a J.A.S. Dufaure. — Ed.
Page me9.482
†a In the manuscript the word “German” is written in pencil. For the “German mile” see footnote on p. 20. — Ed.
Page me9.483
†a In the manuscript: “Lenzkirch” — evidently a slip of the pen. — Ed.
Page me9.484
†a July 12, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.484
†b The words “Koehler, Captain” are written in pencil and not in the same handwriting as the manuscript as a whole. — Ed.
Page me9.487
†a Geiger. See also this volume, pp. 496-97. — Ed.
Page me9.488
†a Presumably a slip of the pen; it should read September 12. — Ed.
Page me9.490
†a i.e. the newspaper Freiheit, Brüderlichkeit, Arbeit. — Ed.
Page me9.492
†a See this volume, pp. 487-88. — Ed.
Page me9.494
†a See this volume, p. 495. — Ed.
Page me9.497
†a See this volume, p. 451. — Ed.
Page me9.497
†b See this volume, pp. 492-93. — Ed.
Page me9.499
†a Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.502
†a See this volume, pp. 282 and 494. — Ed.
Page me9.502
†b See this volume, p. 495. — Ed.
Page me9.504
†a Karl Schapper. — Ed.
Page me9.508
†a See this volume, p. 449. — Ed.
Page me9.508
†b Colours symbolising Germany's unity, here symbolising adherence to the imperial Constitution worked out by the Frankfurt National Assembly. — Ed.
Page me9.509
†a “Farewell Word of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung”, first published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung No. 301, May 19, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.510

†a Marx, “Prussian Financial Administration under Bodelschwingh and Co.” and “Further Contribution on the Old-Prussian Financial Administration” (see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 379-89, 418-20). — Ed.
Page me9.510
†b W. Wolff, “Die Schlesische Milliarde”, Neue Rheinische Zeitung, March-April 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.510
†c See this volume, pp. 197-228. — Ed.
Page me9.510
†d Marx. — Ed.
Page me9.511
†a See this volume, pp. 496-97. — Ed.
Page me9.512
†a The article was reproduced in the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung No. 218, June 1, 1849. — Ed.
Page me9.512
†b Frederick William IV. — Ed.
Page me9.514
†a See this volume, pp. 447-49. — Ed.
Page me9.514
†b See this volume, pp. 521-22. — Ed.
Page me9.517
†a In their absence. — Ed.
Page me9.524
†a There follow the names of two other wanted men, their occupation and last residence. — Ed.
Page me9.524
†b There follow the descriptions of the two other wanted men. — Ed.
Page me9.526
†a Carlier. — Ed.
Page me9.526
†b Marx was 31 at the time. — Ed.
Page me9.526
†c Dufaure. — Ed.
Page me9.527
†a Carlier. — Ed.
Page me9.527
†b Dufaure. — Ed.
Page me9.660
†a This glossary includes geographical names occurring in Marx's and Engels' articles in the form customary in the German press of the time but differing from the national names or from those given on modern maps. The left column gives geographical names as used in the German original (when they differ from the national names of the time, the latter are given in brackets); the right column gives corresponding names as used on modern maps and in modern literature. — Ed.

Author's Notes
Page me9.281
†* Herr Röhrdanz was suspected of similar activities in Paris as early as 1844 and is hereby challenged to answer these accusations. The Editors of the “Neue Rheinische Zeitung”.
Page me9.508
†* In this connection, we are in a position to report that Herr von Mirbach, for reasons which will later become evident, did not accept the position of Commander-in-Chief, and also that for the same reasons Herr Anneke left Elberfeld voluntarily and was not expelled, as has been reported. Dr. Gottschalk, who is supposed to have shared the fate of expulsion with Anneke, has not been in Elberfeld at all, but is living quite peacefully at Bad Ems. [Editorial note in the Neue Kölnische Zeitung.]

Page Break me10.i

VOLUME 10

Page Break me10.ii
Page me10.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED
WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me10.iii

FRONTMATTER
Titlepage
Page me10.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
10
MARX AND ENGELS: 1849-51

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS

NEW YORK

Page Break me10.iv

Copyright Page
Page me10.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:

GREAT BRITAIN: Jack Cohen, Maurice Cornforth, E. J. Hobsbawm, Nicholas Jacobs.
USA: James S. Allen, Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, Dirk J. Struik, William W. Weinstone.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — N. P. Karmanova, V. I. Neznanov, V. N. Sedikh, M. K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P. N. Fedoseyev, L. I. Golman, A. I. Malysh, M. P. Mchedlov, A. G. Yegorov.

Page me10.iv
Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1978

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Page me10.iv
Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.
Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.
1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. 1. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX 39.5.A16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0510-7 (v. 10)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me10.v

Contents
Page me10.v
PrefaceXIII

Page me10.v
KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
WORKS

September 1849-June 1851

1. F. Engels. The German Social Democrats and The Times 3
2. K. Marx and F. Engels. Announcement of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue 5
3. F. Engels. Letters from Germany 7
I. 7
II. Curious Revelations Concerning the Despots of Germany. — Intended War against France. — The Coming Revolution 10
III. The Prussian King Swearing to the Constitution and "Serving the Lord!" — Grand Conspiracy of the Holy Alliance. — The Approaching Onslaught on Switzerland. — Projected Conquest and Partition of France! 14
4. F. Engels. Letters from France 17
I. 17
II. Striking Proofs of the Glorious Progress of Red Republicanism! 21
III. Signs of the Times. — The Anticipated Revolution 24
IV. The Elections. — Glorious Victory of the Reds. — Proletarian Ascendancy.— Dismay of the Ordermongers. — New Schemes of Repression and Provocations to Revolution 27
V. 30
VI. 33
VII. 34
VIII. 38
5. K. Marx and F. Engels. Announcement 41
6. K. Marx. The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 45

Page Break me10.vi

I. The Defeat of June 1848 48
II. June 13, 1849 71
III. Consequences of June 13, 1849 101
IV. The Abolition of Universal Suffrage in 1850 132
7. F. Engels. The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution 147
I. Rhenish Prussia 154
II. Karlsruhe 172
III. The Palatinate 186
IV. To Die for the Republic! 203
8. F. Engels. To the Hungarian Refugee Committee in London 240
9. K. Marx and F. Engels. Reviews from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue No. 2 241
I. G. Fr. Daumer, Die Religion des neuen Weltalters. Versuch einer combinatorisch-aphoristischen Grundlegung 241

II. Ludwig Simon of Trier, Ein Wort des Rechts für alle Reichsverfassungskämpfer an die deutschen Geschwornen 247
III. Guizot, Pourquoi la révolution d'Angleterre a-t-elle réussi? Discours sur l'histoire de la révolution d'Angleterre 251
10. K. Marx and F. Engels. Review, January-February 1850257
11. F. Engels. The Ten Hours' Question 271
12. K. Marx and F. Engels. Address of the Central Authority to the League, March 1850 277
13. F. Engels. The English Ten Hours' Bill 288
14. K. Marx and F. Engels. Reviews from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue No. 4 301
I. Latter-Day Pamphlets, Edited by Thomas Carlyle — No. I, The Present Time, No. II, Model Prisons 301
II. Les Conspirateurs, par A. Chenu, ex-capitaine des gardes du citoyen Caussidiére. Les sociétés secrétes; la préfecture de police sous Caussidiére; les corps-francs. La naissance de la République en février 1848, par Lucien de la Hodde 311
III. Le socialisme et l'impôt, par Émile de Girardin 326
15. K. Marx and F. Engels. Review, March-April 1850 338
16. K. Marx. Louis Napoleon and Fould 342
17. K. Marx and F. Engels. Gottfried Kinkel 345
18. K. Marx and F. Engels. Editorial Note 348
19. K. Marx and F. Engels. Statement 349
20. K. Marx and F. Engels. To the Editor of The Times 352
21. F. Engels. Two Years of a Revolution; 1848 and 1849 353
22. K. Marx and F. Engels. A Letter to the Prussian Ambassador in London, Baron Bunsen 370
23. K. Marx and F. Engels. Address of the Central Authority to the League, June 1850 371
24. K. Marx and F. Engels. The Prussian Refugees 378

Page Break me10.vii

25. K. Marx and F. Engels. To the Editor of The Spectator 380
26. K. Marx and F. Engels. Prussian Spies in London 381
27. K. Marx. To the Editor of The Globe 385
28. K. Marx and F. Engels. Statement to the Editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung 387
29. K. Marx. To the Chairman of a Refugee Meeting in London 389
30. K. Marx and F. Engels. To the Editors of the Weser-Zeitung 390
31. F. Engels. Letter from Germany. The War in Schleswig-Holstein 392
32. F. Engels. The Peasant War in Germany 397
I. 400
II. 411
III. 428
IV. 441
V. 446

VI. 469
VII. 478
33. K. Marx and F. Engels. Statement on Resignation from the German Workers' Educational Society in London 483
34. K. Marx and F. Engels. A Letter to Adam, Barthélemy and Vidil 484
35. K. Marx and F. Engels. Editorial Comment on the Article "Tailoring in London or the Struggle between Big and Small Capital" by J. G. Eccarius 485
36. F. Engels. On the Slogan of the Abolition of the State and the German "Friends of Anarchy" 486
37. K. Marx and F. Engels. Review, May to October 1850 490
38. K. Marx and F. Engels. Draft Statement by Heinrich Bauer and Karl Pfänder on the Funds of the German Workers' Educational Society in London 533
39. K. Marx and F. Engels. Statement 535
40. K. Marx and F. Engels. Introduction to the Leaflet of L. A. Blanqui's Toast Sent to the Refugee Committee 537
41. F. Engels. To the Editor of The Times 540
42. F. Engels. Conditions and Prospects of a War of the Holy Alliance against France in 1852 542
43. K. Marx. The Constitution of the French Republic Adopted November 4, 1848 567

Page me10.vii
FROM THE PREPARATORY MATERIALS
1. K. Marx. On Germany. Note for the "Review" (May-October 1850) 583
2. K. Marx. Reflections 584

Page Break me10.viii
Page me10.viii
APPENDICES
1. Permit to Leave Switzerland Issued to Frederick Engels 595
2. Appeal for Support for German Political Refugees 596
3. Receipt of the Committee of Support for German Political Refugees in London 598
4. Accounts of the Committee of Support for German Refugees in London 599
5. From the Indictment of the Participants in the Uprising in Elberfeld in May 1849 602
6. Preliminaries to Issue of Shares in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Edited by Karl Marx 605
7. About Engels' Speech at a Banquet Held on February 25, 1850, in Honour of the Second Anniversary of the February Revolution in France (From a Newspaper Report) 607
8. Accounts of the Social-Democratic Refugee Committee in London 608

9. About Engels' Speech at a Meeting of Fraternal Democrats on April 5, 1850, Commemorating Robespierre's Birthday Anniversary (From a Newspaper Report) 611
10. Meeting of Refugee Committee on April 8, 1850 612
11. Universal Society of Revolutionary Communists614
12. Accounts of the Social-Democratic Refugee Committee in London 616
13. The German Refugees in London619
14. Accounts of the Social-Democratic Refugee Committee in London for May, June and July 1850 621
15. About Engels' Speech at a Meeting Organised by Fraternal Democrats on September 10, 1850 (From a Newspaper Report) 624
16. Meeting of the Central Authority, September 15, 1850 625
17. The Resolution of the Central Authority of the Communist League, September 15, 1850 630
18. Accounts of the Social-Democratic Refugee Committee in London from August 1 to September 10, 1850 631
19. Proposal from the London District of the Communist League to the Central Authority in Cologne 633
20. Rules of the Communist League 634
21. About Engels' Speech at a New Year's Party of the Fraternal Democrats Society, December 30, 1850 (From a Newspaper Report) 637

Page me10.viii

NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 641
Name Index 710

Page Break me10.ix

Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 742
Index of Periodicals 760
Subject Index 765

Page me10.ix

ILLUSTRATIONS

1. Cover of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue 43
2. A map of Rhenish Prussia, Baden and the Palatinate during the campaign for the Imperial Constitution (May-July 1849) 192-193
3. A page from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue with verses by Louis Ménard. The introduction by Marx and Engels says: “Our friend Louis Ménard, author of the book Prologue d'une révolution, has sent us the following verses, which he wrote in the wake of the June 1848 events.” 289
4. The first page of Frederick Engels' article “Two Years of a Revolution; 1848 and 1849”, published by The Democratic Review 355

5. A map of the Peasant War in Germany 448-449
6. A map of the Peasant War in Swabia and Franconia (1525) 472-473
7. The first page of Karl Marx's article “The Constitution of the French Republic”, which appeared in Notes to the People 573
Page Break me10.x
Page Break me10.xi
Page me10.xi
TRANSLATORS:

GREGOR BENTON: Article 7
RICHARD DIXON: Article 29, Appendices 7
CLEMENS DUTT: Article 42
FRIDA KNIGHT: Appendices 1, 11
RODNEY LIVINGSTONE: Article 23; Appendices 16, 17, 19, 20
HUGH RODWELL: Articles 2, 9 (II), 10, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 28, 30, 33, 35, 36, 39
PETER AND BETTY ROSS: Article 8
BARBARA RUHEMANN: Articles 38, 40; Appendices 3-6, 8, 12-14, 18
SALO RYAZANSKAYA: From the Preparatory Materials 2
CHRISTOPHER UPWARD: Articles 14, 37
JOAN AND TREVOR WALMSLEY: Articles 5, 18; From the Preparatory Materials 1; Appendices 2, 9, 10

Page Break me10.xii
Page Break me10.xiii

Preface

Page me10.xiii
Volume 10 of the Collected Works of Marx and Engels covers the period from the autumn of 1849 to the summer of 1851.
Page me10.xiii
The bourgeois-democratic revolutions which swept across the European continent in 1848-49 had ended in defeat. The last centres of insurrection in Germany, Hungary and Italy had been suppressed in the summer of 1849. In France, the victory of the counter-revolution was already clearing the way for the coup d'état of Louis Bonaparte on December 2, 1851. Everywhere workers' and democratic organisations were being destroyed and revolutionaries severely persecuted. Yet the events of the preceding years had left their mark. They had struck at the remnants of feudalism in the European countries, given an impulse to the further growth of capitalism and aggravated its contradictions.
Page me10.xiii
Marx and Engels had already embarked upon their scientific analysis of the European revolutions of the mid-nineteenth century, in which the revolutionary energies of the whole of society had become concentrated in the proletariat — the most active and determined force of the revolution. And now they set out to deepen this analysis by defining the general and specific features of the 1848-49 revolutions and drawing the practical lessons for the consolidation of the proletariat as a class. During the immediately ensuing years they concentrated most of their attention on the theoretical summing up and generalisation of the experience of the revolutionary battles, determining the objective laws of class struggle and of revolution, and working out the strategy and tactics of the proletariat in the new conditions. As Lenin was later to point out, “Here as everywhere else, his [Marx's] theory is a summing up of experience, illuminated by a profound philosophical conception of the world and a rich knowledge of history” (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 25, p. 412).

Page Break me10.xiv
Page me10.xiv

In this period Marx and Engels were not, however, solely concerned with theoretical work but with practical tasks of rallying the working-class organisations. They did not at first expect the break in revolutionary battles to last long. And they considered it essential to gather together the dispersed proletarian forces as quickly as possible, and to prepare them for new struggles. By the summer of 1850, however, they had realised that hopes of an early renewal of the revolution were groundless — but they continued to work for the unity of the most conscious elements of the working class and of its supporters, seeing this as a long-term task.
Page me10.xiv

Marx moved to London at the end of August 1849 — and there Engels joined him in November. Straight away, they did their utmost to revive and reorganise the Communist League. They tried to stimulate the work of the London German Workers' Educational Society, whose nucleus consisted of the Communist League's local communities, and joined the Society's Committee of Support for German Refugees, seeking to rally the proletarian revolutionary émigrés around the League. At the same time, they established close contacts with revolutionary leaders — with the Blanquist French émigrés in London and the Left-wing Chartists — joining with them in forming the Universal Society of Revolutionary Communists in the spring of 1850 (see this volume, pp. 614-15). Especially important were their contacts with the revolutionary wing of the Chartist movement under G. Julian Harney and Ernest Jones, and their use of the Chartist journal The Democratic Review to propagate scientific communism and explain events on the Continent to British workers.
Page me10.xiv

The “Letters from Germany” and “Letters from France” — published in The Democratic Review, and which associates of the Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union have recently shown to have been written by Engels — are initial sketches, as it were, for Marx's major political and historical works summing up the results of the 1848-49 revolutions (The Class Struggles in France and The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte), and likewise for Engels' “Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany”. Engels' articles contain the initial formulations of certain important ideas elaborated in these works — the tendency of the bourgeoisie to turn to counter-revolution, the leading revolutionary role of the proletariat, the worker-peasant alliance, and the permanent revolution. In the “Letters from France”, for example, Engels expressed the hope that in the next round of revolutions the working class would have the support of the broad mass of peasants. The peasants, he wrote, were “beginning to see that no government, except one acting in the interest of the working men of the towns, will free them from the misery and starvation into which ... they are falling deeper and deeper every day” (see this volume, p. 21).

Page Break me10.xv
Page me10.xv

Marx and Engels were convinced that to build and strengthen a proletarian party it was essential to have a publication which would continue the traditions of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. And in March 1850 they launched the journal Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — the theoretical journal of the Communist League, with Marx as editor. Its inaugural announcement defined the purpose of the journal: “A time of apparent calm such as the present must be employed precisely for the purpose of elucidating the period of revolution just experienced, the character of the conflicting parties, and the social conditions which determine the existence and the struggle of these parties” (see this volume, p. 5).
Page me10.xv

In its six modest-sized issues, the Revue published Marx's The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 and Engels' The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution and The Peasant War in Germany, which contain a wealth of important ideas. Marx and Engels also contributed book reviews, international reviews, and other articles, all of which appear in the present volume.
Page me10.xv

In The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 (the title given by Engels to its 1895 edition) Marx for the first time applied to a whole period of history the method of analysis and explanation of historical materialism. And it was to contemporary history that he applied it. In his Preface to the 1895 edition Engels described this as “a development as critical, for the whole of Europe, as it was typical”. Marx, he wrote, had set out “to demonstrate the inner causal connection” and so “to trace the political events back to effects of what were, in the final analysis, economic causes”. (This Preface will appear in its chronological place in Volume 28 of the Collected Works.)
Page me10.xv

It was by analysing and drawing conclusions from the practical experience of revolutionary struggle that Marx was able to demonstrate the objective necessity of social revolutions, and to enrich the whole theory of revolution by the idea that revolutions are the “locomotives of history”, accelerating historical progress and stimulating the constructive energy of the masses. He showed how in revolutionary periods history is speeded up — as was the case in France when the different classes of society “had to count their epochs of development in weeks where they had previously counted them in half centuries” (see this volume, p. 97). Examining the course of events in France, where the class struggle had been especially acute, Marx found that the bourgeoisie as a class was losing its revolutionary qualities and that the working class had become the principal driving force of revolution and thereby also of historical progress. In the June uprising in 1848 the proletariat of Paris had acted as an independent force and displayed immense energy and heroism. This, he pointed out in The Class Struggles in France, was the first great battle between the two classes whose division split modern society in two, serving notice that, despite the defeat of the proletariat, former bourgeois demands had given place to "the bold slogan of revolutionary struggle: Overthrow of the bourgeoisie! Dictatorship of the working class!" (see this volume, p. 69).

Page Break me10.xvi

Page me10.xvi

This is the first time Marx used the phrase "dictatorship of the working class" (Diktatur der Arbeiterklasse) in print. And its appearance meant more than simply the use of a single phrase to express the idea of the proletariat winning political power, which Marx and Engels had already formulated in works written before the 1848 revolution. It marked a step forward in the whole conception of proletarian revolution, the "proletarian" or "working-class" dictatorship being envisaged as a genuinely democratic political organisation of society in which political power would represent and express the interests of the vast majority, the working people, as opposed to the dictatorship of the exploiting classes. Revolutionary socialism, Marx maintained, meant establishing the dictatorship of the working class as the effective power to bring about the socialist reconstruction of society.

Page me10.xvi

"This Socialism," he wrote (see this volume, p. 127), "is the declaration of the permanence of the revolution, the class dictatorship of the proletariat as the necessary transit point to the abolition of class distinctions generally, to the abolition of all the relations of production on which they rest, to the abolition of all the social relations that correspond to these relations of production, to the revolutionising of all the ideas that result from these social relations."

Page me10.xvi

The Class Struggles in France contains Marx's classical definition of the tasks of the working-class dictatorship in the decisive field — the economic reconstruction of society, that is to say: "The appropriation of the means of production, their subjection to the associated working class and, therefore, the abolition of wage labour, of capital and of their mutual relations" (see this volume, p. 78). This definition separates off scientific communism from the vague demands for "community of property" characteristic of all varieties of utopian socialism and utopian communism.

Page Break me10.xvii

Page me10.xvii

In The Class Struggles in France Marx also went deeper in his criticism of non-proletarian socialist currents, showing their theoretical weaknesses and their untenability in practice. In particular, he exposed the fallacy in Louis Blanc's idea of class collaboration and state assistance to workers' associations as the means to achieving socialism. In his petty-bourgeois version of socialism, which Marx so exhaustively examined, Blanc had also assured the workers that the rulers of the bourgeois Second Republic were willing to resolve social problems by adopting his plan for the "organisation of labour". Blanc's unreal ideas and conciliatory tactics came to nothing, and Marx saw in their collapse the positive gain that the proletariat was liberated from such harmful illusions.

Page me10.xvii

Other works written by Marx and Engels during this period likewise referred to how bitterly the workers were let down by the various systems of utopian socialism and the empty verbosity of petty-bourgeois democratic leaders. In the “Letters from France”, for example, Engels described the gradual liberation of the working class from the influence of petty-bourgeois ideas: “The people ... will soon find socialist and revolutionary formulas which shall express their wants and interests far more clearly than anything invented for them, by authors of systems and by declaiming leaders” (see this volume, p. 35).

Page me10.xvii

Finally, in The Class Struggles in France, Marx put forward, expounded and justified one of the key principles of the strategy and tactics of workers' revolutionary struggle — that the peasantry and urban petty-bourgeois strata were allies of the proletariat against the bourgeois system. Nothing but the victory of the proletariat, he showed, could deliver the non-proletarian sections of the working people from the economic oppression and degradation brought upon them by capitalism. He demonstrated the necessity for close alliance between the proletariat, the peasantry and the urban petty-bourgeoisie, and at the same time the necessity for the leading political role of the proletariat as the most revolutionary class. And he exposed the limited ideas and impotent politics of the petty-bourgeois democratic leaders, using the failure of the petty-bourgeois Montagne party on June 13, 1849, to prove how incapable was such a party to conduct any revolutionary struggle on its own.

Page me10.xvii

The Class Struggles in France is, indeed, a major work in which, following the experience of the revolutions of 1848-49, Marx achieved a new stage in developing the theory of scientific communism. A popular summary of the main conclusions was provided in Engels' article “Two Years of a Revolution” (see this volume, pp. 353-69). Published in The Democratic Review, this article by Engels is a model of revolutionary propaganda in the British workers' press.

Page Break me10.xviii

Page me10.xviii

The key problems of the theory of revolution and working-class strategy and tactics posed in The Class Struggles in France were also examined in the “Address of the Central Authority to the League” (March 1850), written jointly by Marx and Engels. This document summed up the experience of the revolution in Germany, and marked an important step forward in the elaboration of the programme and tactics of the revolutionary proletariat.

Page me10.xviii

The Address contains a comprehensive and classical definition of the idea of permanent revolution which had been variously formulated in preceding writings by Marx and Engels. Their exhaustive analysis of the 1848-49 revolution showed that the revolutionary reconstruction of society was by nature a long and complex process which would pass through several stages. The objective laws of this process, they found, made feasible an uninterrupted development from the bourgeois-democratic through to the proletarian stage of the revolution. And they concluded that it was in the interests of the working class and its allies that no long period of calm should intervene. The proletarian party should therefore work for the continuous ("permanent") development of the revolution until the working class established its political power — and such a strategy was the most favourable one for the mass of the people and for social-historical progress. "It is our interest and our task," the Address declared, "to make the revolution permanent, until all more or less possessing classes have been forced out of their position of dominance, [and] the proletariat has conquered state power ..." (see this volume, p. 281).

Page me10.xviii

The Address indicates some of the practical measures for effecting the transition from the bourgeois-democratic to the proletarian revolution. The workers had, it says, to create their own centres of working-class power, alongside the official government, in the form of local self-governing bodies, workers' clubs and committees, by means of which the apparatus of government in the bourgeois-democratic revolution could be brought under effective control by the proletarian masses. And to carry the revolution further, Marx and Engels concluded, the workers had to arm themselves and set up an armed proletarian guard.

Page Break me10.xix
Page me10.xix

Later, in the new context of imperialism, Lenin was to draw on the conclusions about permanent revolution, formulated by Marx and Engels in the Address, in his teachings on the passage from bourgeois-democratic to socialist revolution, which carried further the Marxist conception of the strategy and tactics of the proletariat and of the revolutionary Marxist party.
Page me10.xix
In March 1850, when they wrote the "Address of the Central Authority to the League", Marx and Engels were still expecting an early new revolutionary outburst, with the petty-bourgeois democrats coming to power in Germany. This made them consider it doubly urgent to liberate the working class from the political and ideological influence of the petty-bourgeois democrats. The most effective means of doing so was to form an independent workers' party, with both clandestine and legal organisations, and with the underground communities of the Communist League serving as the nucleus of the non-clandestine workers' associations. While urging that the workers' party must dissociate itself both ideologically and in its organisation from the petty-bourgeois democrats, Marx and Engels did not deny the importance of agreements for joint struggle against the counter-revolution. But they insisted that in all circumstances the working class must conduct and consolidate its own independent policy.
Page me10.xix

A second "Address of the Central Authority to the League", in June 1850, lays especial emphasis on creating a strong proletarian party in Germany, and in other European countries, adapted to clandestine activity and yet using all legal opportunities for propaganda and for organising the masses.
Page me10.xix

Two works by Engels, dealing mainly with events in Germany but summarising, directly or indirectly, the experience of the 1848-49 revolutions, were published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. The series of essays entitled The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution were written by Engels in the wake of the Baden-Palatinate insurrection of the spring and summer of 1849, in which he had taken part. On Marx's advice, he wrote these essays as a pamphlet condemning the leaders of the German petty-bourgeois democrats for their chronic indecision and word-mongering. First-hand reports by a participant were blended with a historical study of the last phase of the revolution in Germany. Engels examined the nature of the revolutionary movement itself, the attitudes of the classes and parties involved in it, and the causes of its failure. And he drew his conclusions on the tactics of a revolutionary party in armed uprising or civil war.

Page Break me10.xx
Page me10.xx

Another of Engels' historical works, and one which has long occupied a prominent place in the legacy of Marxist historiography, was written for the Revue — The Peasant War in Germany. Though this dealt with events of a long past epoch, Engels wrote it with the contemporary scene in mind. For the defeat of the 1848-49 revolutions was bringing its inevitable aftermath of fatigue and disenchantment, and Engels sought to renew contemporary revolutionary convictions by reviving past revolutionary traditions of the people and by drawing attention, in particular, to the dormant revolutionary energy of the peasants, since their alliance with the working class would be decisive for any future success of the revolution. He sought to inspire his contemporary readers by his vivid portraits of sixteenth-century revolutionary leaders — Thomas Münzer, the plebeian revolutionary who was herald of the plebeian Reformation, the brilliant peasant general Michael Geismaier, and other indomitable fighters against feudal oppression.
Page me10.xx

The Peasant War in Germany, like Marx's The Class Struggles in France, is a model of how to apply the method of historical materialism to the elucidation of historical events. Throwing new light on a period of world history which was a crucial turning point in the history of Germany, Engels' study combines profound theoretical generalisations with precise political conclusions. He analyses the central problems of German sixteenth-century history, the part played by the anti-feudal peasant and plebeian movements, the specific features of the era when feudalism had already disintegrated, and the transition to capitalism had begun, and the consequences in Germany of the failure of the Peasant War. In most cases, German bourgeois historians had seen nothing but “violent theological bickering” behind the events of 1525 (see this volume, p. 411). But Engels was the first to make clear the profound social and economic causes of both the Reformation and the Peasant War, and to make clear that the political and ideological struggle of that time was, essentially, a class struggle.
Page me10.xx

The Peasant War in Germany is, indeed, organically related to the problems of the working-class and democratic movement in the middle of the nineteenth century. As Engels wrote in a preface to the second edition, in 1870, “the parallel between the German revolution of 1525 and the 1848-49 revolution was much too striking to be entirely renounced at the time”. (The Preface of 1870 will appear in its chronological place in Volume 21 of the Collected Works.)

Page me10.xx

Engels described the Reformation and the Peasant War as the earliest of the bourgeois revolutions, and saw the main reason for the failure of the Peasant War in the vacillation and treachery of the German burghers, whom he regarded as the historical predecessors of the bourgeoisie. The main force in the Peasant War was the peasants themselves along with the urban plebeians. But provincial limitations and the fact that "neither burghers, peasants nor plebeians could unite for concerted national action" were, Engels held, among the reasons for its defeat (see this volume, p. 481). The dispersed state of the revolutionary forces, and their parochial and particularist tendencies, he stressed, had likewise had a distinctly negative effect in the 1848-49 revolution.

Page Break me10.xxi

Page me10.xxi

The present volume contains a number of book reviews and critical articles examining the ideological impact of the revolutionary events of 1848-49, and attacking bourgeois and petty-bourgeois interpretations of the revolution. The revolutionary upheavals had meant a turning point in the evolution of the views of bourgeois ideologists. In face of the militant independent activity of the working class even previously progressive bourgeois historians and political theorists had lost their capacity for scientific evaluation of the process of history. This shift to the right is remarked upon, for example, in the review of Guizot's pamphlet Pourquoi la révolution d'Angleterre a-t-elle réussi? Guizot had previously acknowledged the necessity for revolutions and, in particular, the role of the class struggle of the third estate against the feudal aristocracy in the making of bourgeois society. But now he belittled the significance of revolutionary action. He set up as a model the "Glorious Revolution" of 1688 in England, and made out that the English seventeenth-century revolution (1640-60) had been successful when it had followed the ways of compromise and had, by virtue of its religious character, secured England's further constitutional development without revolutionary explosions and upheavals. Criticising Guizot's reading of history, Marx and Engels produced a classical description of the English seventeenth-century revolution, its peculiarities and significance, and its difference from the French revolution of the eighteenth century.

Page me10.xxi

A similar shift to the right among ideologists of the ruling class is illustrated by the case of Thomas Carlyle — the British Sage of Cheyne Walk, Chelsea. In a review of Carlyle's Latter-Day Pamphlets Marx and Engels demolished his subjective idealist concept of history, the "hero cult", and his counterposing of the "hero" to the masses. By exalting these "heroes", said Marx and Engels, Carlyle was only "justifying and exaggerating the infamies of the bourgeoisie" (see this volume, p. 310).

Page Break me10.xxii

Page me10.xxii

The glorification of personalities was typical of petty-bourgeois democrats as well — of their historians and writers, and also of police-sponsored champions who exaggerated the deeds of the petty-bourgeois opposition movement and thereby inflated their own individual merits as “saviours of society” from dangerous red revolutionaries. Marx and Engels denounced this decking up in false colours of members of the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois opposition in a caustic review of two books by the French police agents Chenu and de la Hodde. Having made it clear that the two authors were nothing but agents provocateurs, Marx and Engels voiced strong objections to the adventurist and conspiratorial tactics which opened the way for provocateurs to penetrate the revolutionary movement. They described the exponents of such tactics as “alchemists of the revolution” who sought only “to bring it artificially to crisis-point, to launch a revolution on the spur of the moment, without the conditions for a revolution” (see this volume, p. 318). This criticism of conspiracy and sectarianism could not have been more timely, since adventurism and adventurist illusions were widespread among the members of the Communist League and the petty-bourgeois emigrants.

Page me10.xxii

In their review of Girardin's Le socialisme et l'impôt Marx and Engels continued their criticism of “bourgeois socialism”, begun in the Manifesto of the Communist Party, and also made a critical examination of anarchist ideas. The latter were fairly widespread at the time in France — notably in the works and utterances of Proudhon — and in Germany too. This review of Girardin's pamphlet concurs with Engels' unfinished manuscript “On the Slogan of the Abolition of the State and the German 'Friends of Anarchy'”, which condemns the anarchist proposals for “abolishing the state”, examines their origin in Germany, and presents a relevant account of Stirner's anarcho-individualist ideas.

Page me10.xxii

The international reviews included in this volume are of much interest, too. They contain a scientific analysis of the more important current economic and political events in Europe and North America, and several predictions which were confirmed by subsequent development.

Page me10.xxii

Until the summer of 1850, Marx and Engels were convinced that the economic crisis which began in 1847 would continue to get worse, and would generate a new surge of revolution. This view was reflected in The Class Struggles in France, the March “Address of the Central Authority to the League”, and in their first and second international reviews. Marx and Engels in fact overestimated the maturity of capitalism — or underestimated its potential of recovery from economic crisis and of further development — and likewise overestimated the revolutionary potential of the working class at that time. It was this, in part, which had led to their over-optimistic predictions of early revolution. “History,” wrote Engels in his introduction to Marx's Class Struggles in France in 1895 (to be included in Volume 28 of the Collected Works), “has proved us, and all who thought like us, wrong. It has made it clear that the state of economic development of the Continent at that time was not, by a long way, ripe for the elimination of capitalist production.” In the summer of 1850, on resuming his economic researches and making a thorough examination of the economic situation, Marx found that the 1847 economic slump had run its course and that a new period of boom had begun. His study of the processes at work in the economy gave him a clearer and more accurate idea of the prospects of revolution. In their third international review Marx and Engels wrote: “With this general prosperity, in which the productive forces of bourgeois society develop as luxuriantly as is at all possible within bourgeois relationships, there can be no talk of a real revolution.... A new revolution is possible only in consequence of a new crisis. It is, however, just as certain as this crisis” (see this volume, p. 510).

Page Break me10.xxiii

Page me10.xxiii

In his subsequent economic research and analysis of social development Marx found that the influence of economic processes on society was not necessarily direct and that economic crisis would not always, or indeed usually, immediately precipitate an outbreak of revolution. Nonetheless, the thought that economic crises exercise a revolutionising influence on society and that, by aggravating the contradictions of capitalism, crises may stimulate the revolutionary movement, is an abiding part of Marxist theory. Lenin drew special attention to the theoretical importance of these propositions (see V. I. Lenin, Précis of the Correspondence between Marx and Engels, 1844-1883, second Russ. ed., 1968, p. 30).

Page me10.xxiii

In their third international review, Marx and Engels described yet another essential feature of the revolutionary process. Though Britain was, as they put it, “the demiurge of the bourgeois cosmos”, the revolution had occurred on the Continent and a new revolutionary explosion should likewise be expected first of all in the continental countries. “Violent outbreaks must naturally occur rather in the extremities of the bourgeois body than in its heart, since the possibility of adjustment is greater here than there” (see this volume, p. 509). So probabilities favoured the beginning of the revolutionary transformation of society not in the centre but on the outskirts of the bourgeois world, in countries with a less developed capitalist economy than in Britain.

Page Break me10.xxiv

Page me10.xxiv

Apart from certain major theoretical works on history, and current book reviews and international reviews, this volume contains articles on current social problems, such as “The Ten Hours' Question” by Engels, “The Constitution of the French Republic” by Marx, and a few others, with their letters and statements to the press exposing the slander and persecution of revolutionary leaders by absolutist and bourgeois governments. “The Constitution of the French Republic”, for example, which appeared in the Chartist Notes to the People, shows up the limited nature and class essence of bourgeois democracy and the flagrant difference between the proclamations of democratic rights and liberties in bourgeois written constitutions and the anti-democratic practices of bourgeois states, along with constitutional reservations which effectively reduced these rights and liberties to nothing.

Page me10.xxiv

Engels' manuscript “Conditions and Prospects of a War of the Holy Alliance against France in 1852” opened a new stage in his elaboration of a Marxist military theory — to which he and Marx attached great importance in the light of the lessons of the 1848-49 revolution. The manuscript examines the material basis of military science, the dependence of the art of war and the military establishment itself on the economy and the social system, the influence of revolutions on the development of warfare, and also the military potentials of the European states in the mid-nineteenth century. Engels wrote, too, about the army of the future socialist state, born in the flames of proletarian revolution — and his ideas about it have proved prophetic. He predicted that it would be unusually strong in combat, highly manoeuvrable, and possess a high degree of striking power since its development would be backed by the rapidly developing productive forces of the new society, its flourishing technology and culture.

Page me10.xxiv

Marx's and Engels' entire elaboration of the theory of scientific communism in the light of the experience of the 1848-49 revolution precipitated sharp ideological clashes inside the Communist League between them and their followers, on the one hand, and the sectarian faction of Willich-Schapper, on the other. The controversy focussed on the prospects of revolution and the related questions of proletarian strategy and tactics. The Willich-Schapper faction was for premature actions, including attempts to seize power, which would have been especially dangerous in that period of revolutionary low tide. The minutes of the September 15, 1850, sitting of the Central Authority of the Communist League (published in the Appendices to this volume) mirror clearly enough the issues involved. Speaking at the sitting, Marx insisted on the great harm which would result for the revolutionary movement from any voluntarist adventurist "playing at revolution" which ignored the real situation and state of the proletarian movement. The tactical errors of the Willich-Schapper faction, he observed, stemmed from the poor theoretical and philosophical equipment of its members. "A German national standpoint," he said, "was substituted for the universal outlook of the Manifesto, and the national feelings of the German artisans were pandered to. The materialist standpoint of the Manifesto has given way to idealism" (see this volume, p. 626).

Page Break me10.xxv

Page me10.xxv

Despite Marx's proposals, which would have dissociated proletarian revolutionaries from the Willich-Schapper group and preserved the unity of the proletarian organisation, the sectarians managed to split the Communist League. They joined forces with other adventurist elements inside the League, and with petty-bourgeois émigrés, to attack Marx and Engels and their followers. In the end, Marx, Engels and their friends decided to resign from the London German Workers' Educational Society and from the Social-Democratic Refugee Committee, and to break off relations with the Blanquist French émigrés, who had sided with Willich and Schapper. The documents included in this volume and its Appendices portray the struggle of Marx and Engels and the proletarian revolutionaries who rallied to their side against adventurers and splitters in the working-class movement of that time.

Page me10.xxv

The section in the volume headed "From the Preparatory Materials" contains rough manuscripts concerning, in the main, Marx's study of political economy.

Page me10.xxv

The 1848-49 revolution and their reflections on it had impressed on Marx and Engels the urgency of working out the economic basis of the theory of scientific communism. And from 1850 onwards this became the principal strand in the development of Marxist thought. In 1850-53 Marx filled twenty-four notebooks with transcriptions of passages from various, mainly economic, works. Only one of this large collection of manuscripts illustrating Marx's understanding of economics at that time and his methods of research has been included in this volume.

Page me10.xxv

The section contains Marx's manuscript entitled “Reflections”, which sets out some of his own ideas, evidently related to his study of Tooke's An Inquiry into the Currency Principle. Taking as point of departure some of Tooke's and Adam Smith's principles on the circulation of commodities and money between different groups of producers and consumers in a bourgeois society (capitalists and ordinary individual consumers), Marx goes on to examine a number of economic problems: the nature of money and its outwardly levelling role which disguises the class character of production relations in capitalist society; the futility of trying to transform capitalist society by reforming the circulation of money; the real causes of economic crises, which stem from the intrinsically contradictory nature of the capitalist mode of production; the superficial and false interpretation of these causes by bourgeois economists, who reduce them to mere swindling in monetary and commercial transactions, speculative fever, and the like. Many of the ideas contained in this manuscript were later developed in Marx's published economic works.

Page Break me10.xxvi

Page me10.xxvi

The Appendices to this volume contain documents illustrating the practical revolutionary activities of Marx and Engels in the period covered. Apart from the already mentioned agreements on the establishment of the Universal Society of Revolutionary Communists, and materials related to the struggle in the Communist League against the Willich-Schapper group, the Appendices also contain appeals and reports by the Social-Democratic Committee of Support for German Refugees, newspaper accounts of Engels' speeches at various meetings, and documents concerning the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. They also contain the Rules of the Communist League drawn up by its new Central Authority in Cologne (the Central Authority was transferred there after the League split in the autumn of 1850), with Marx's marginal notes, other materials of the League, and some papers of a biographical nature.

Page me10.xxvi

Some of the works published in this volume have never before been translated into English. This applies to the second and third international reviews, the article “Gottfried Kinkel”, the June Address of the Central Authority to the Communist League, the Statement against Arnold Ruge, a few of the book reviews and some of the statements and letters to editors of various newspapers, all of which were written jointly by Marx and Engels. Works translated into English for the first time also include Marx's article “Louis Napoleon and Fould”, and Engels' The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution, “On the Slogan of the Abolition of the State and the German 'Friends of Anarchy'", "Conditions and Prospects of a War of the Holy Alliance against France in 1852", and others.

Page me10.xxvi
The materials in the section "From the Preparatory Materials" are also appearing in English for the first time. So are the materials in the Appendices (save for the minutes of the sitting of the Central Authority of the Communist League of September 15, 1850, and the 1850 Rules of the Communist League). And in this volume the documents "Permit to Leave Switzerland Issued to Frederick Engels", "From the Indictment of the Participants in the Uprising in Elberfeld", and some of the transcripts of Engels' speeches, are being published for the first time in any edition of the Works of Marx and Engels.

Page Break me10.xxvii
Page me10.xxvii
Those works that have been previously published in English are given either in new or in carefully revised translations. Particulars about their earlier publications in English are given in the notes. Also described in the notes are peculiarities in the arrangement of the text of certain works, in particular the manuscripts.
Page me10.xxvii
Most of the works appearing in this volume have been translated from the German. Translations from other languages are indicated at the end of the texts, as are reproductions of texts written by the authors in English.
Page me10.xxvii
The volume was compiled and the preface and notes written by Tatyana Yeremeyeva (CC CPSU Institute of Marxism-Leninism). The name index together with the indexes of quoted and mentioned literature and of periodicals were prepared by Valentina Kholopova, and the subject index by Marlen Arzumanov (CC CPSU Institute of Marxism-Leninism).
Page me10.xxvii
The publishers express their gratitude to the editors of Marx/Engels, Gesamtausgabe — MEGA, Bd. 10, erste Abteilung (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC, Socialist Unity Party of Germany), for the loan of materials used in preparing the volume.
Page me10.xxvii
The translations were made by Gregor Benton, Clemens Dutt, Frida Knight, Rodney Livingstone, Hugh Rodwell, Peter and Betty Ross, Barbara Ruhemann, Christopher Upward, and Joan and Trevor Walmsley (Lawrence & Wishart), Richard Dixon and Salo Ryazanskaya (Progress Publishers), and edited by Richard Abraham, Clemens Dutt, Sheila Lynd, Margaret Mynatt, Barbara Ruhemann and Alick West (Lawrence & Wishart), Richard Dixon, Salo Ryazanskaya, Yelena Chistyakova, Natalia Karmanova and Victor Schnittke (Progress Publishers), and Vladimir Mosolov, scientific editor, for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.
Page me10.xxvii
The volume was prepared for the press by Anna Vladimirova and Lyudgarda Zubrilova (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me10.1

KARL MARX
and
FREDERICK ENGELS
WORKS

September 1849-June 1851

Page Break me10.2
Page Break 3
Page me10.3

Frederick Engels

THE GERMAN SOCIAL DEMOCRATS AND THE TIMES†1

Page me10.3

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NORTHERN STAR†a

Sir, — The Times of Friday last†b contains a letter signed "Anti-Socialist", denouncing to the English public, and to the English Home-Secretary,†c some of the "hellish doctrines" developed in the London German Newspaper, by a certain Mr. Charles Heinzen, described as a "shining light of the German Social Democratic party". These "hellish doctrines" consist chiefly of a benevolent proposal for killing, in the next continental revolution, "a couple of millions of reactionaries".

Page me10.3

We may safely leave it with you to qualify the conduct of the editors of The Times, in allowing their columns to be made the receptacle of direct police information and denunciation in political matters. We are however rather astonished to see in the "leading journal of Europe" Herr Heinzen described as "a shining light of the German Social Democratic party". "The leading journal of Europe" certainly might have known that Herr Heinzen, so far from serving as a shining light to the party in question, has, on the contrary, ever since 1842, strenuously, though unsuccessfully, opposed everything like Socialism and Communism. "The German Social Democratic party", therefore, never took, nor is it likely ever to take, the responsibility of anything said or written by Mr. Charles Heinzen.

Page me10.3

As to the danger likely to result from the "hellish doctrines" aforesaid, The Times might have known that Mr. Heinzen, far from trying to put these doctrines into practice during the last eighteen months of revolutionary convulsions in Germany, hardly ever during that time put his foot upon German soil, and played no part whatever in any of those revolutions.

Page Break me10.4
Page me10.4

The idea, Sir, of a man who never did any damage even to the most diminutive of German princes, being able to do harm to the gigantic British empire, would be, in our eyes, an insult to the English nation. We therefore beg leave to move that the whole matter be wound up by The Times giving a vote of thanks to Mr. Charles Heinzen, for the courage malheureux†a with which he combated Socialism and Communism. I am, Mr. Editor,

Yours very obediently,

A German Social Democrat

London, Nov. 28th, 1849

Page me10.4
First published in The Northern Star No. 632, December 1, 1849

Reprinted from the newspaper

Page Break me10.5

Karl Marx and Frederick Engels

[ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG. POLITISCH-ÖKONOMISCHE REVUE]†2
Page me10.5
THE NEUE RHEINISCHE ZEITUNG.
Politisch-ökonomische Revue edited by
Karl Marx
will appear in January 1850.

The periodical bears the title of the newspaper of which it is to be considered the continuation. One of its tasks will consist in returning in retrospect to the period which has elapsed since the suppression of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.†3
Page me10.5

The greatest interest of a newspaper, its daily intervention in the movement and speaking directly from the heart of the movement, its reflecting day-to-day history in all its amplitude, the continuous and impassioned interaction between the people and its daily press, this interest is inevitably lacking in a review. On the other hand, a review provides the advantage of comprehending events in a broader perspective and having to dwell only upon the more important matters. It permits a comprehensive and scientific investigation of the economic conditions which form the foundation of the whole political movement.

Page me10.5

A time of apparent calm such as the present must be employed precisely for the purpose of elucidating the period of revolution just experienced, the character of the conflicting parties, and the social conditions which determine the existence and the struggle of these parties.
Page me10.5

The review will be published in monthly issues of at least five printers' sheets at a subscription price of 24 silver groschen per quarter, payable upon delivery of the first issue. Single issues 10 sgr. Messrs. Schuberth and Co., in Hamburg, will attend to retail distribution through bookshops.

Page Break me10.6
Page me10.6

Friends of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung are requested to circulate subscription lists in their respective areas and to send them without delay to the undersigned. Literary contributions and likewise news items for discussion in the review will be accepted only post-paid.

London, Dec. 15, 1849

K. Schramm
Manager of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung
4 Anderson Street, King's Road, Chelsea

Page me10.6
Published in the Westdeutsche Zeitung No. 6, January 8, 1850

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me10.7

Frederick Engels

LETTERS FROM GERMANY†4

I
Page me10.7

[The Democratic Review, January 1850]

Cologne, Dec. 18th, 1849

"Order reigns in Germany." Such is the present great motto of our rulers, be they princes, aristocrats, bourgeois, or any other fraction of that recently formed party which you might call in English the party of Ordermongers.†5 "Order reigns in Germany"; and yet never was there, not even under the "Holy Roman Empire"†6 of yore, such a confusion in Germany as there is at present under the reign of "Order".
Page me10.7

Under the old system, before the revolution of 1848, we knew at least who governed us. The old Federal Diet of Frankfort†7 made itself felt by laws against the liberty of the press, by exceptional courts of law, by checks imposed even upon the mock constitutions with which certain German populations were allowed to delude themselves. But now! We hardly know, ourselves, how many Central Governments we have got in this country. There is, firstly, the Vicar of the Empire, instituted by the dispersed National Assembly,†8 and who, although without any power, sticks to his post with the greatest obstinacy.†a There is secondly the "Interim",†9 a sort of thing — nobody knows exactly what — but something like a revival of the old Diet, got up under the old prevalent influence of Prussia, and which "Interim" is poking at the old Vicar (who more or less represents the Austrian interest), to resign his place into their hands.†10 In the meantime neither has the slightest power. Thirdly, there is the "Regency of the Empire",†11 elected in Stuttgart by the National Assembly during the latter days of its existence, and the remains of that Assembly, the "Decided Left" and the "Extreme Left", which two Lefts, along with the "Regency", represent the "moderate and philosophical" Democrats and Shopocrats of Germany. This "Imperial" government holds its sittings in a public house in Berne in Switzerland,†a and has about as much power as the two preceding. Fourthly, there is what is called the Three-Kings'-League,†12 or the "Confined (or Refined, I don't know which) Federal State", got up for the purpose of making the King of Prussia†b Emperor over all the lesser states of Germany. It is called the "Three-Kings'-League", because all kings, with the exception of the King of Prussia, are opposed to it! and it calls itself the "Confined Federal State", because, although travailing in birth ever since the 28th of May last,†13 there is no hope of its ever producing anything likely to live!! There are, fifthly, the Four Kings, of Hanover, Saxony, Bavaria, and Wurtemberg,†c who are determined to do as they like themselves, and not to submit to any of the above "Central Impotencies"; and lastly, there is Austria, trying every means to keep up her supremacy in Germany, and supporting, therefore, the Four Kings in their efforts for independence from Prussian ascendancy. The real governments. in the meantime, those who hold the power, are Austria and Prussia. They rule Germany by military despotism, and make and unmake laws at their liking. Between their dominions and dependencies lie, as quasi neutral ground, the four kingdoms, and it will be upon this ground, and particularly in Saxony, that the pretensions of the two great powers will meet each other. There is, however, no chance of a serious conflict between them. Austria and Prussia, both, know too well that their forces must remain united if they want to keep down the revolutionary spirit spread all over Germany, Hungary, and those parts of Poland belonging to the powers in question. In case of need, besides, "our beloved brother-in-law",†d the orthodox Czar of all the Russias, would step in and forbid his lords-lieutenant of Austria and Prussia to quarrel any more amongst themselves.

Page Break me10.8

Page me10.8

This never equalled confusion of governments, of pretensions, of claims, of German Federal Law, has, however, one enormous advantage. The German Republicans were, up to this time, divided into Federalists and Unitarians; the first having their principal force in the south. The confusion ensuing upon every attempt to re-organise Germany into a Federative State, must make it evident that any such plan will prove abortive, impracticable, and foolish, and that Germany is too advanced in civilisation to be governable under any form but the German Republic, One and Indivisible, Democratic and Social.

Page Break me10.9
Page me10.9

I should have liked to have said a few words on the acquittal of Waldeck and Jacoby,†14 but want of room prevents me doing so. Suffice it to say, that for at least some months to come it will be quite impossible for the government in Prussia to obtain in political trials a verdict of guilty, excepting, perhaps, in some remote corners where the jury-class are as fanaticised as the Orangemen of Ulster.†15

Page Break me10.10

II

CURIOUS REVELATIONS CONCERNING THE DESPOTS OF GERMANY. —
INTENDED WAR AGAINST FRANCE. — THE COMING REVOLUTION
Page me10.10
[The Democratic Review, February 1850]
Cologne, Jan. 20th, 1850

The day after I sent you my last, news reached here of the "settlement of the question" who was to rule over all Germany. The "Interim", consisting of two Austrian and two Prussian delegates, have at last prevailed upon old Archduke John to retire from business. They have consequently taken the reins of a power which, however, will not be of long duration. It expires in the month of May next, and there is good reason to expect that even before that term certain "untoward events" will sweep away these four provisional rulers of Germany. The names of these four satellites of military despotism are very significant. Austria has sent M. Kübeck, minister of finance under Metternich, and General Schönhals, the right hand of the butcher Radetzki. Prussia is represented by General Radowitz, member of the Jesuit order, favourite of the king, and principal inventor of all those plots by which Prussia has succeeded, for the moment, in putting down the German revolution; and by M. Bötticher, governor, before the revolution, of the province of Eastern Prussia, where he is fondly (?) remembered as a “putter down” of public meetings and organiser of the spy system. What the doings of such a lot of rogues will be you will not need to be told. I will name one instance only. The Wurtemberg government, forced by the revolution, had contracted with the Prince of Thurn and Taxis — who, you know, has the monopoly of forwarding letters by post and conveying of passengers in a large part of Germany, to the exclusion of the governments — the Wurtemberg government, I say, had contracted with this robber on a national scale to part, for a handsome sum, with his monopoly in favour of the said government. Times having got better for those who live upon national plunder, Prince Thurn and Taxis values his monopoly higher than the sum contracted for, and won't part with it. The Wurtemberg government, freed from the pressure from without, find this change of opinion quite reasonable; and both parties apply — the prince publicly, the government aforesaid secretly — to the “Interim”, which, taking for pretext an article of the old act of 1815, declares the contract void and unlawful. This is all right. It is far better that M. Thurn and Taxis keeps his privilege a few months longer; the people, when they finish with the whole lot of privileges, will take it not only from him without giving him anything, but will, on the contrary, make him give up even the money he has robbed them of up to this time.

Page Break me10.11
Page me10.11

The military despotism in Austria is getting more intolerable every day. The press almost reduced to annihilation, all public liberties destroyed, the whole country swarming with spies — imprisonments, courts-martial, floggings in every part of the country — this is the practical meaning of those provincial constitutions which the government publish from time to time, and which they do not care a straw about breaking in the very moment of publication. There is, however, an end to everything, even to states of siege and the rule of the sword. Armies cost money, and money is a thing which even the mightiest emperor cannot create at his will. The Austrian government have, up to this time, managed to keep their finances afloat by tremendous issues of paper money. But there is an end to this, too; and, in spite of that Prussian lieutenant who once would challenge me to a duel, because I told him a king or emperor could not make as many paper dollars†a as he liked — in spite of that profound political economist, the Emperor of Austria†b sees his paper money, though inconvertible, at the discount of from twenty to thirty per cent against silver, and almost fifty per cent against gold. The foreign loan he intended has dropped to the ground through the exertions of Mr. Cobden. Foreign capitalists have subscribed to the amount of £500,000 only, and he wants fifteen times that sum; while his exhausted country cannot afford to lend him anything. The deficit, fifteen millions and a half at the end of September last, will, by this time, have reached from twenty to twenty-four millions — the greater part of the Hungarian war expenses being payable in the last quarter of 1849. Thus there is only one alternative for Austria: either bankruptcy, or a foreign war to make the army pay itself, and to reconquer commercial credit by battles gained, provinces conquered, and war contributions imposed. Thus Mr. Cobden, in opposing the

Page Break me10.12
Austrian and Russian loans†a on the plea of the preservation of peace, has more than any one else contributed — for Russia is in the same awkward state as Austria — to hasten that coalesced campaign against the French Republic which cannot, under any circumstances, be long delayed.
Page me10.12

In Prussia, we assist at another act of "royal conscientiousness". You know that Frederick William IV, the man who never broke his word, in November, 1848, dispersed by force the national representation, and forced upon his people a constitution†16 after his own heart; that he agreed that this beautiful piece of workmanship was to be revised by the first parliament to be assembled; that in this parliament the Second Chamber (House of Commons) was, even before they got to the revising business, dissolved, another electoral reform forced upon the people, by which universal suffrage was very nicely done away with, and a majority of landed nobility, of government officials, and of bourgeois, was secured. This Chamber, to vote for the election of which every democrat refused, so that it has been elected by one-fifth or one-sixth of the whole number of voters — this Chamber, in conjunction with the old First Chamber, set about revising the Constitution, and made it, of course, even more agreeable to the king than he himself had made it originally. They have now almost done with it. Now, you think, his Majesty will please to accept this amended Constitution, and take the oath prescribed in it? Not he, indeed. He sends his faithful parliament a royal message, stating that he is very much pleased with what his two Chambers have made of his Constitution, but that, before his "royal conscientiousness" permits him to take the oath aforesaid, his own Constitution must be altered in about a dozen points.†17 And what are these points? Why, his Majesty is modest enough not to require any more than the following trifles. 1. The First Chamber, now elected by the large landed proprietors and capitalists, to be a complete House of Lords, containing the royal princes, about one hundred hereditary peers chosen by his Majesty, sixty peers elected by the large landed proprietors, thirty by the large monied interest, six by the universities. 2. Ministers to be responsible to the king and country, not to the parliament. 3. All taxes now upon the budget to be levied for ever, without power of parliament to refuse. 4. A "Star Chamber",†18 or High Court of Justice, to try political offences — no mention being made of juries. 5. A special law to define and restrain the powers of the Second Chamber of parliament, &c. Now what do you think of this? His Majesty forces upon the good Prussians a new Constitution, to be amended by parliament. His parliament amends it by striking out everything like a remnant of popular rights. And the king, not content with that, declares that his "royal conscientiousness" forbids him to accept his own Constitution, amended in his own interest, without the above further modifications. Verily this is a truly "royal" sort of conscientiousness! There is little chance of even this present mock parliament bowing to such impudence. The consequence will be dissolution, and the end of all parliaments for the moment in Prussia. The secret of all this is the anticipation of the great coalition war, mentioned above. The "conscientious" gentleman on the throne of Prussia expects to have his rebellious country overrun by the month of March or April, by a million of Asiatic barbarians, to march, along with "his own glorious army",†19 against Paris, to conquer that fair country which produces his heart-cherished champagne. And the Republic once done away with, the scion of Saint Louis†a restored to the throne of France, what then would be the use of constitutions and parliaments at home?

Page Break me10.13

Page me10.13

In the meantime the revolutionary spirit is rapidly reviving all over Germany. The most inveterate ex-Liberal†b who, after March, 1848, joined the king to combat the people, now sees that — as the saying is in Germany — although he gave to the devil only the end of his little finger, that gentleman has since seized the whole hand. The incessant acquittals by juries in political trials are the best proofs of this. Every day brings a new fact in this way. Thus, a few days ago, the Mulheim workpeople — who, in May, 1849, tore up the railway, in order to stop the sending of troops to insurged Elberfeld — have been acquitted here at Cologne. In the south of Germany, financial difficulties and increased taxation show to every bourgeois that this present state cannot last. In Baden the very same bourgeois who betrayed the last insurrection, and hailed the arrival of the Prussians, are punished and driven to madness by these very same Prussians and by the government, which under their protection drives them to ruin and despair. And the working people and peasantry everywhere are on the qui vive, waiting for the signal of an insurrection which, this time, will not subside until the political dominion and social progress of the proletarians shall have been secured. And this revolution is drawing nigh.

Page Break me10.14

III

THE PRUSSIAN KING SWEARING TO THE CONSTITUTION AND "SERVING THE LORD!" — GRAND CONSPIRACY OF THE HOLY ALLIANGE. — THE APPROACHING ONSLAUGHT ON SWITZERLAND. — PROJECTED CONQUEST AND PARTITION OF FRANCE!

Page me10.14
[The Democratic Review, March 1850]
Cologne, Feb. 18th, 1850

At last His Majesty, the King of Prussia, has taken the oath to the so-called "Constitution".†20 Had it not been for the occasion of making a speech, there is no doubt but that royal farce would never have taken place. But his speech-loving majesty, for the sake of the speech, resolved to swallow the oath, quite as humbly as he has been seen to swallow so many unpalatable things before, such as the celebrated "Hat off!"†21 shouted to him by the people of Berlin on the 19th of March, 1848. The oath is of no consequence. What is the oath of a king, and particularly of a Frederick William IV! The speech is the principal feature, and a precious speech it is. Think of the Prussian Majesty declaring most seriously, and neither him nor any one else in the assembly bursting forth in laughter, that he is a man of honour, and that he is about to give what is dearest to him — his royal word! But, he continues — after a series of most whimsical oratorical efforts — he gives his word on one condition only: that it be made possible for him to govern with this constitution, and to fulfil the promise he made three years ago, viz., “I and my house will serve the Lord!”†22

Page me10.14

What this new-fashioned “man of honour” means by governing with the constitution and serving the Lord, is already becoming pretty clear. His Majesty's ministers have come out since that swearing farce; firstly, with two laws, doing almost entirely away with the liberty of the press and the right of association and of public meeting; secondly, with a demand for eighteen millions of dollars (two millions and a half sterling) for increasing the army. The meaning of this is evident. First destroy in detail the few sham liberties left to the people by the precious mock-constitution, and then raise the army to the war footing, and march with Russia and Austria against

Page Break me10.15
France. There is no doubt of the bourgeois chambers agreeing to all this, and thus making it possible to the king to govern with the constitution, and serve the Lord with his house.
Page me10.15

This Prussian credit for the army “to meet eventualities which might present themselves during spring”, must be taken, together with the other measures of the Holy Alliance,†23 in order to make us see clearly through their plots. Prussia, besides these eighteen millions, is already treating for a loan of sixteen millions — ostensibly for the purpose of constructing the great Eastern Railway. You know, too well, since the Russian loan affair, what a splendid pretext for raising money railways are made by the governments of the Holy Alliance. Prussia, thus, will soon raise five millions sterling, the whole of which will be at the disposal of the war-office. Russia, besides the five millions sterling already raised, is about to contract for another loan of thirty-six millions of roubles silver, or five millions sterling. Austria alone, after the shabby result of her late effort to raise money, must be satisfied with what she can get at home. Her deficit, as I stated in my last, really amounts to two hundred million florins (twenty millions sterling) in one year! Thus, while Russia and Prussia raise money to make war, Austria must make war in order to raise money!
Page me10.15

There is no doubt that if there are no untoward events in France, the “holy” campaign will be opened next month against Switzerland,†a and perhaps Turkey. Russia keeps in Poland, and its vicinity, an army of 350,000 men, ready to march at a moment's notice. She has already contracted for large supplies of victuals, to be delivered next month, not in Poland, but in Prussia, at Dantzic. The Prussian army — about 150,000 now — can in a month be raised to 350,000, by calling in the reserve and the first class of the Landwehr. The Austrian army — about 650,000 — has never been diminished, but, on the contrary, increased by the Hungarian prisoners. The whole of the forces, which may be disposable for a foreign war, may be something like a million; but two-thirds of the Prussians and Austrians are infected with the democratic disease, and would most likely pass to the other side, as soon as an opportunity presented itself.
Page me10.15

The first pretext for attacking Switzerland is the German refugees living in that country. This pretext will soon cease to exist, as the cowardly persecutions of the federal government directly or indirectly force all refugees to leave Switzerland. There are now perhaps 600 German refugees in that country, and even they will soon have to leave it. But then there is another pretext — the demand of Prussia to restore the Prussian king's authority in the ex-principality of Neufchatel, which made itself a republic in 1848.†24 And if even this be complied with, there will be the question of the Sonderbund raised again, in connection with the new federal constitution, which, in 1848, replaced the old reactionary treaty of 1814, guaranteed by the Holy Alliance.†25 Thus, there will be no chance for Switzerland escaping war and foreign occupation.

Page Break me10.16
Page me10.16

But the final aim of the Holy Alliance is the conquest and partition of France. The plan designed to finish at once this great revolutionary centre is as follows: France, once conquered, will be divided into three kingdoms — the South-west, or Aquitania (capital, Bordeaux), will be given to Henry, Duke of Bordeaux†a; the East, or Burgundy (capital, Lyons), will be given to Prince Joinville; and the North, or France proper (capital, Paris), will be awarded to Louis Napoleon, for the signal services he has rendered to the Holy Alliance. Thus France, reduced to the old state of division it was in some centuries ago, would be utterly powerless. What do you say to this pretty scheme, which no doubt originated in the “historical” head of the king of Prussia?
Page me10.16

But, be assured, the People — without whom the Holy Alliance have reckoned — will very soon put a stop to all these plots and schemes, and that as soon, too, as the Holy Alliance commence to put their plans into execution. For the people are wide awake, both in France and Germany, and, fortunately, they are strong enough to put down all their opponents, as soon as matters are brought to a general, decisive, and open contest. And then the enemies of democracy will, to their terror, see that the movements of 1848 and '49 were nothing, in comparison to the universal conflagration which will burn up the old institutions of Europe, and light the victorious nations to a future — free, happy, and glorious.

Page me10.16
Written between December 18, 1849, and February 18, 1850

Published in The Democratic Review in January-March 1850, marked by the editors “From Our Own Correspondent”

Reprinted from the journal

Page Break me10.17

Frederick Engels

LETTERS FROM FRANCE†26

I
Page me10.17
[The Democratic Review, January 1850]
Paris, December 20th, 1849

The great question of the day is the excise upon “potable liquors”, now under discussion in the National Legislative Assembly. This question is of such importance, and contains, in fact, in itself, so much of the whole present situation, that it will not be amiss to devote to it the whole of this letter.
Page me10.17
The tax on potable liquors is of very old date.†a It formed one of the principal features of the financial system under the monarchy of the eighteenth century, and one of the main grievances of the people at the time of the first revolution. It was done away with by that revolution. But Napoleon restored it in a somewhat modified shape about the year 1808, at a time when, forgetting his revolutionary origin, he made the establishment of his dynasty in the midst of the ancient European royal families, his principal aim. The tax was so exceedingly obnoxious to the people, that at the downfall of Napoleon, the Bourbon family promised its immediate repeal, and Napoleon himself, at St. Helena, declared it had been that tax more than anything else which caused his fall, by setting against him the whole of the South of France. The Bourbons, however, never thought of redeeming their promise, and the tax remained as before up to the revolution of 1830, when, again, its abolition was held out to the country. This promise was no more fulfilled than the preceding one; and thus the excise existed when the revolution of 1848 broke out. The provisional government,†27 instead of immediately repealing it and substituting for it a heavy income-tax upon the large capitalists and landed proprietors, only promised either its repeal, or at least its revision; the Constituent Assembly†a even went so far as to continue the tax altogether. It was only in the last days of its existence, when royalism was rifer than ever, that the “honest” and “moderate” members of that Assembly voted the repeal of the tax on potable liquors, to take effect from the 1st of January, 1850.

Page Break me10.18
Page me10.18
It is clear that the tax in question belongs essentially to the monarchical traditions of France. Repealed as soon as the mass of the people got the upper hand, it was restored as soon as either the aristocracy or the Bourgeoisie, represented by a Louis XVIII or a Louis Philippe, held the reins of government. Even Napoleon, though in many points opposed to both aristocracy and Bourgeoisie, and overthrown by the conspiracy of both — even the great Emperor thought himself obliged to re-establish this feature of the ancient traditions of Monarchical France.
Page me10.18
The tax in itself weighs very unequally upon the different classes of the nation. It is a grievous burden upon the poor, while upon the rich the pressure is exceedingly light. There are about twelve millions of wine-producers in France; these pay nothing upon their consumption of wine, it being of their own growing; there are, further, eighteen millions of people inhabiting villages and towns under 4,000 inhabitants, and paying a tax from 66 centimes to 1 fr. 32 centimes per 100 litres of wine; and there are, finally, some five millions inhabiting towns of more than 4,000 inhabitants, and paying upon their wine the droit d'octroi,†28 levied at the gate of the town, and varying in the different localities, but at all events incomparably higher than what is paid by the preceding class. The tax, further, falls quite as heavy upon the most inferior as upon the higher-priced wines; the hectolitre which sells at 2, 3, 4 francs, and the one sold at 12 to 1,500 fr., both pay the same tax; and thus, while the rich consumer of choice champagne, claret, and Burgundy, pays almost nothing, the working man pays to the government upon his inferior wine a tax of 50, 100, and, in some cases, 500 or 1,000 per cent upon the original value. Of the revenue derived by this tax, 51 millions of francs are paid by the poorer classes, and 25 millions only by the wealthier citizens. There cannot, under such circumstances, exist the slightest doubt that this tax is exceedingly injurious to the production of wine in France. The principal markets for this produce, the towns, are to the wine-producer so many foreign countries where he has to pay, before bringing his produce to sale, a regular custom-house duty of from 50 to 1,000 per cent ad valorem.

Page Break me10.19
The other part of the market, the open country, is at least subject to a duty of from 20 to 50 per cent of the original value. The inevitable consequence of this is the ruin of the wine-growing parts of the country. It is true the production of wine has been augmenting in spite of the tax, but the population has outgrown this augmentation at a far quicker rate.
Page me10.19

Why, then, has it been possible to keep up under the middle-class government such an obnoxious tax as this? In England, you will say, even Cobden and Bright would have swept it away long ago. And so they would. But in France, the manufacturers never found a Cobden or a Bright who stood up for their interests with invincible tenacity,†a nor a Peel to give way to their claims.†29 The French financial system, although so much vaunted by the majority of the Assembly, is the most confused and artificial, mixtum compositum,†b that ever was imagined. None of the reforms carried in England since 1842 were attempted in France under Louis Philippe. Postage Reform was considered almost as blasphemy in the blessed time of Guizot. The tariff was, and is now, neither a free-trade nor a mere revenue, nor a protectionist, nor a prohibitive tariff, but contains something of all, except free-trade. Old prohibitions and high duties, that for many years have been to no purpose, nay, that are decidedly injurious to trade, are to be found in all parts of the tariff. Yet no one dared touch them. Local taxation, in all towns of more than 1,000 inhabitants, is indirect, and collected upon the produce brought into town. Thus the freedom of trade even in the interior is interrupted every ten or fifteen miles by a sort of inland-custom-house.
Page me10.19

This state of things, disgraceful even to a middle-class government, remained untouched from different causes. With all this oppressive taxation, with receipts of 1,400 or 1,500 millions of francs, there was a deficit at the end of every year, and a loan after every fourth or fifth year. The stockjobbers of the Paris Bourse found an inexhaustible source of profit-making, jobbing, and peddling in this low state of the Public Exchequer. They and their associates formed the majority in the two Chambers, and were thus the real dominators of the state, and always demanding fresh supplies of money. Financial

Reform, besides, could not have been effected without sweeping measures, which would have brought the budget to its equilibre, changed the allotment of taxes, and, besides taxing these stockjobbers themselves, given a greater political weight to other fractions of the middle classes. And what consequences such a change would have had under the worm-eaten government of Louis Philippe you may judge, from the comparatively trifling pretext which led to the revolution of February.†30

Page Break me10.20
Page me10.20

That revolution brought into office no man able to reform the financial system of France. The gentlemen of the National,†31 who took possession of that department, felt themselves borne down by the weight of the deficit. Many attempts were made at bit-by-bit reform; all proved abortive, excepting the abolition of the tax upon salt and the Postage Reform. At last, in a fit of despair, the Constituent Assembly voted the repeal of the wine tax, and now the "honest" and "moderate" men of order†32 in the present precious Assembly restore it! Nay, more: the Minister†a intends restoring the salt tax, and re-augmenting the Postage; so that the old financial system, with its eternal deficiences and difficulties, and consequent absolute sway of the Paris Bourse, with its jobbing, peddling, and profitmongering, will very shortly be restored in France.
Page me10.20

The people, however, do not seem likely to submit quietly to a measure which restores a heavy tax upon an article of prime necessity for the poor, while it almost exempts the rich. Social democracy has spread wonderfully over the agricultural districts of France; and this measure will convert the remainder of the millions who, twelve months ago,†b voted for that ambitious blockhead, Louis Napoleon. The country once won for social democracy, there will be very few months, nay, weeks, indeed, ere the Red Flag floats from the Tuileries and the Elysée-National.†33 Then only will it be possible to radically upset the old, oppressive financial system, by at one stroke doing away with the National Debt, by introducing a system of direct, progressive taxation; and by other measures of a similarly energetic character.†c

Page Break me10.21

II

STRIKING PROOFS OF THE GLORIOUS PROGRESS OF RED REPUBLICANISM!
Page me10.21
[The Democratic Review, February 1850]
Paris, January 21st, 1850

A great many important events have occurred since my last, but as the generality of readers will have been informed of them from the daily and weekly papers, I shall refrain from going over the same ground from beginning to end, and instead shall limit this letter to some general observations on the state of the country.
Page me10.21

During the last twelve or fifteen months, the revolutionary spirit has made immense progress throughout France. A class, which by its social position was kept apart, as much as possible in civilised society, from taking an interest in public business, which by the old monarchical legislation was shut out from all political rights, which never read a newspaper, and which, nevertheless, forms the vast majority of Frenchmen — this class, at last, is rapidly coming to its senses. This class is the small peasantry, numbering about twenty-eight millions of men, women, and children, counting amongst its ranks from eight to nine millions of small landed proprietors, who possess, in the shape of freehold†34 property, at least four-fifths of the soil of France. This class has been oppressed by all governments since 1815, not excepting the provisional government, which imposed on it the tax of 45 additional centimes upon every franc of the land-tax,†35 which in France is very heavy. This class, borne down also by a band of usurers to whom their property almost without exception is mortgaged at extraordinary high interest, is at last beginning to see that no government, except one acting in the interest of the working men of the towns, will free them from the misery and starvation into which, notwithstanding their land-allotments, they are falling deeper and deeper every day.†a This class, which in a great measure forced the revolution of 1789, and which formed the basement upon which arose the vast empire of Napoleon, has now, in its immense majority, joined the revolutionary party and the working men of Paris, Lyons, Rouen and the other large towns of France. The tillers of the soil now see clearly enough how they have been cheated by Louis Napoleon, to whose presidential majority they at least furnished six millions of votes, and who has repaid them with the re-imposition of the wine and brandy tax. And thus, the vast majority of the French people are now united to overthrow, as soon as a proper occasion shall present itself, the insolent sway of the capitalist class, which, hurled down by the storm of February, has again seized the helm of government, and exercises its rule far more arrogantly than ever it did under its own well-beloved Louis Philippe.

Page Break me10.22
Page me10.22
The history of the last months affords innumerable proofs of this most important fact. Take the circular of Minister d'Hautpoul to the gendarmerie, by which espionage is carried into the very heart of the most obscure village; take the law against the schoolmasters,†36 who, in French villages, are generally the best expression of the public opinion of their localities, and who are now to be placed at the mercy of government, because they now almost all profess social-democratic opinions; and many other facts. But one of the most striking proofs is to be found in the election which has just taken place in the department du Gard.†37 This department is known as the most ancient stronghold of the “Whites” — the Legitimists.†38 It was the scene of the most horrid outrages against the republicans in 1794 and '95, after the downfall of Robespierre; it was the central seat of the “white terrorism” in 1815, when Protestants and Liberals were publicly murdered, and outrages of the most horrible nature were committed on the wives, daughters, and sisters of those victims by Legitimist mobs, headed by the renowned Trestaillon, and protected by the government of legitimate Louis XVIII. Well, this department had to elect a deputy, in the place of a Legitimist, deceased†a; and the result was, a great majority for a thoroughly Red candidate,†b while the two Legitimist candidates were in a signal minority.†c

Page me10.22

Another proof of the rapid progress of this alliance of the working men in the towns and the peasantry of the country, is the new law on public education.†39 The most inveterate Voltairians of the bourgeoisie, even M. Thiers, see there is no way left to oppose that progress but by surrendering their old theories and principles, and by prostrating public education at the feet of the priesthood!

Page Break me10.23
Page me10.23

Again. There is, now, a general rush of all public papers and public characters, that are not exactly reactionaries, to claim the once despised title of "Socialist". The oldest enemies of Socialism now proclaim themselves Socialists. The National, even the Siécle, monarchist under Louis Philippe, declare they are Socialists. Even Marrast, the infamous traitor of 1848, now hopes, though in vain, to get elected by proclaiming himself a Socialist. The people, however, are not thus to be duped, and the rope to hang that vagabond is ready, and only waiting for the occasion.
Page me10.23

To-day they discuss in the National Assembly the law for killing the remaining 468 prisoners of the June insurrection,†40 by transporting them to, and setting them to work in the most unhealthy parts of Algeria. No doubt the law will pass by an immense majority. But before the unfortunate heroes of that grand battle of labour can reach the shore destined to bury them, there is little doubt but another popular storm will have swept away the voters of this law of murder, and carry, perhaps, to that land of banishment, those of the present majority who may have escaped a prompter, more radical, and most righteous revenge on the part of the people.

Page Break me10.24

III

SIGNS OF THE TIMES. —
THE ANTICIPATED REVOLUTION
Page me10.24
[The Democratic Review, March 1850]
Paris, February 19th, 1850

I must limit this letter somewhat in space, but the facts which have occurred in the course of this month are so striking, that they will speak for themselves. The revolution is advancing so rapidly, that every one must see its approach. In all spheres of society it is spoken of as imminent; and all foreign papers, even if opposed to democracy, declare it an unavoidable thing. Nay, more, you may with almost certainty foresee, that if no unexpected events give a turn to public affairs, the great contest between the united Ordermongers and the vast majority of the people, can hardly be postponed beyond the latter end of this spring. And what the result of that contest will be, is a matter admitting of no doubt. The people of Paris are so sure of having very shortly the most splendid case for a revolution they ever had, that there is a general order amongst them — “Avoid all petty squabbles, submit to anything which puts not a vital question to you.” Thus, with all their efforts, the other day, when the trees of liberty were cut down, the government could not excite the working people to even a petty street-row, and the individuals dancing round the tree at the Porte Saint-Martin, which your London Illustrated News depicted in such a terrific manner,†a consisted of a set of police spies who lost all their day's job through the coolness of the people.†41 Thus, in spite of what the government papers say to the contrary, the 24th of this month will pass off very quietly.†b The government would give almost anything if they could have a row in Paris, with some fictitious conspiracies and outbreaks in the departments, in order to inflict the state of siege upon the capital and those departments which, on the 10th of March, will have to elect new deputies in lieu of the condemned of Versailles. A word on the new system of military despotism.†42 To keep the provinces in bondage, the government have invented the new system of commanders-in-chief. They have united a number of the seventeen military divisions of France into four grand districts, each of which is to be under the command of one general, who, thus, has almost the arbitrary power of an eastern satrap or a Roman proconsul. These four military districts are so arranged, that they surround Paris and the whole centre of France, as it were, with an iron circle, in order to keep it down. This measure, illegal as it is, has however been adopted not only on account of the people, but on account of the Bourgeois opposition too. The Legitimist and Orleanist†43 parties now see clear enough that Louis Napoleon is serving them very badly. They wanted him as a means to the re-establishment of monarchy, as an instrument to be shuffled aside when worn out, and they now see him aspiring to a throne for himself, and going a good deal faster than they want. They know well enough that at this moment there is no chance for monarchy, and that they must wait; and yet Louis Napoleon does everything in his power to come to a settlement, and to risk a revolution which may cost him his head, rather than wait his time. They know, too, that neither party, Legitimist or Orleanist, has gained so much ground upon the other as to make the victory of one of the two an undeniable necessity; and as before the 10th of December, 1848, they want another neutral man, who, while they await the course of events, may govern according to the common interests of both. Thus, these two parties, the only important fractions of the Ordermongers, are now against the prolongation of Louis Napoleon's presidency, although four months ago they would have done anything to carry it; they are again, for once, for the neutral ground of the republic, with General Changarnier as president. Changarnier seems to be in the plot; and Napoleon, who does not trust him but dares not dismiss him from his proconsulate at Paris, has put the four military districts as a fetter around him. This may explain why M. Pascal Duprat's (a traitor of June '48, who now courts popularity again) speech†a against the new military system and against Louis Napoleon himself, was very tolerantly listened to by the majority. There occurred two curious incidents on this occasion. When M. Duprat said, according to a newspaper, Louis Napoleon had to choose between the position of his uncle,†a or that of Washington, a voice from the left shouted, “or that of the Emperor Soulouque of Haiti”.†b A general burst of laughter hailed this comparison of the French would-be-emperor to a personage, than whom none offers more matter for ridicule to all the Charivaris of Paris; and yet not even the President of the Assembly interposed.†c You see what even this precious majority thinks of Louis Napoleon! The Minister of War†d then got up, and, turning to the left, concluded a most violent speech with these words: “And now, gentlemen, if you like to commence we are ready!”†e This expression of the Minister will show you more than anything, how generally a violent struggle is expected.

Page Break me10.25

Page Break me10.26
Page me10.26

In the meantime, the Social-Democratic party are actively preparing for the elections. Although there is a chance for the “honest and moderate”, to elect one or two of their candidates in Paris, where some sixty thousand working men have been, under a variety of pretexts, struck off the voting register; yet there is no doubt that the socialists will have a signal triumph in the departments. The government themselves are expecting it. They therefore have prepared a measure for doing away with what is now openly called the conspiracy of “Universal Suffrage”. They intend to make the suffrage indirect; the voters to elect a limited number of electors, who again name the representative. In this the government are sure of the support of the majority. But as this amounts to an open overthrow of the constitution, which cannot be revised before 1851, and by an assembly elected for the purpose, they expect violent resistance on the part of the people. These, therefore, are to be intimidated by the foreign armies making their appearance on the Rhine at the time this measure is brought into the House. If this really come to pass — and Louis Napoleon seems foolish enough to risk such a thing — then you may expect to hear something like the thunder of a revolution. And then, the Lord have mercy upon the souls of all Napoleons, Changarniers, and Ordermongers!

Page Break me10.27

IV

THE ELECTIONS. — GLORIOUS VICTORY OF THE REDS. — PROLETARIAN ASCENDANCY. — DISMAY OF THE ORDERMONGERS. — NEW SCHEMES OF REPRESSION AND PROVOCATIONS TO REVOLUTION†44

Page me10.27

[The Democratic Review, April 1850]
Paris, March 22nd, 1850

Victory! Victory! The people have spoken, and they have spoken so loud that the artificial fabric of bourgeois rule and bourgeois plotting has been shaken to its very foundation. Carnot, Vidal, Deflotte, representatives of the people for Paris, elected by from 127,000 to 132,000 votes, that is the answer of the people to the odious provocations of the government and parliamentary majority. Carnot, the only man of the “National” fraction who, under the provisional government, instead of flattering the bourgeoisie, brought down on his head a handsome share of its hatred; Vidal, an openly pronounced communist of long standing; Deflotte, vice-president of Blanqui's club, one of the foremost, active invaders of the Assembly on the 15th of May, 1848,†45 in June following, one of the leading combatants on the barricades, sentenced to transportation, and now stepping directly from the hulks into the legislative palace — really, this composition is significant! It shews, that if the triumph of the Red party is owing to the union of the small trading class with the proletarians, this union is based upon totally different terms to that momentary alliance which brought about the overthrow of monarchy. Then, it was the small trading class, the petty bourgeoisie, who, in the provisional government, and still more so in the Constituent Assembly, took the lead, and very soon set aside the influence of the proletarians. Now, on the contrary, the working men are the leaders of the movement, and the petty bourgeoisie, equally pressed down and ruined by capital, and rewarded with bankruptcy for their services rendered in June, 1848, are reduced to follow the revolutionary march of the proletarians. The country farmers are in the same position, and thus the whole mass of those classes that now are opposed to the government — and they form the vast majority of Frenchmen — are headed and led on by the proletarian class, and find themselves obliged to rely, for their own emancipation from the pressure of capital, upon the total and entire emancipation of the working men.†a

Page Break me10.28
Page me10.28

The elections in the departments, too, have been very favourable to the Red party. They having carried two-thirds, the Ordermongers one-third of their candidates.
Page me10.28

This party, or aggregation of parties, has admirably understood the broad hint given by the people. They now see certain ruin before their eyes if they allow the general election of 1852 both for the Assembly and the new President to come off with the present system of suffrage. They know, that the people are so fast rallying round the red flag, that it will be impossible for them to carry on the government even until that term. On one side the President and the Assembly†b; on the other, the vast mass of the people every day organising themselves stronger and stronger into an invincible phalanx. Thus the conflict is inevitable; and the longer the Ordermongers wait, the greater hope there will be for the victory of the people. They know it, and therefore they must strike the decisive blow as soon as possible. To provoke an insurrection as soon as possible, and to fight it to the utmost, is the only chance left for them. The “Holy Alliance”, besides, after the elections of the 10th of March, can have no more doubts as to the course they must pursue. Switzerland, now, is out of the question.†c Revolutionary France is again standing up before them in all her terrible grandeur. France, then, must be attacked, and as soon as possible. The “Holy Alliance” are getting low in cash, and there is now very little chance of getting fresh supplies of that desirable commodity. The different armies cannot be maintained at home much longer, they must either be disbanded or they must be made to maintain themselves by quartering upon the enemy. Thus, you see that, if in my last I told you that the revolution and war were fast approaching, events are fully bearing out my prediction.

Page me10.28

The Ordermongers have for the moment again set aside their party squabbles. They have re-united to attack the people. They change the garrison of Paris, of which three-fourths voted for the red list; and, yesterday, a law re-establishing the newspaper stamp, another law doubling the caution money to be deposited by all newspapers, and a third, suspending the liberty of electoral meetings, were laid on the table of the Assembly by the government. Other laws will follow: one to grant powers to the police to expel from Paris any working man not born there; another, to empower the government to transport, without judgment, to Algiers, any citizen who shall have been convicted of being a member of a secret society, and many more, the whole to be crowned by a more or less direct attack upon universal suffrage. Thus, you see, they provoke revolt, by battering down all the rights and privileges of the working classes. Revolt will follow, and the people, united with the mass of the national guard, will very soon hurl down that infamous class government which, in its utter impotency to do anything but odiously oppress, has, nevertheless, the impudence to call itself the "Saviour of Society"!!!

Page Break me10.29

Page Break me10.30

V

Page me10.30

[The Democratic Review, May 1850]

Paris, April 20th, 1850

The outbreak of the revolution, which has become inevitable since the elections of the 10th of March, has been retarded by the cowardice both of the government and of the men who, for the moment, have taken the lead of the Paris movement. The government and the National Assembly were so terror-struck by the vote of the 10th of March, and by the repeated proofs of mutinous spirit in the army, that they dared not come immediately to any conclusion. They resolved upon passing new repressive laws, a list of which I gave you in my last; but if the ministry and some of the leaders of the majority had confidence in these measures, the mass of the members had not, and even the government very soon lost its confidence again. Thus, the more stringent of these repressive laws were not brought forward, and even those that were — the laws on the press and on electoral meetings — met with a very doubtful reception from the majority.

Page me10.30

The Socialist party, on the other hand, did not profit by the victory as it ought to have done. The reason for this is very plain. This party consists not only of the working men, but it includes, now, the great mass of the shopkeeping class too, a class whose socialism is indeed a great deal tamer than that of the proletarians. The shopkeepers and small tradesmen know very well that their own salvation from ruin is entirely dependent upon the emancipation of the proletarians; that their interests are indissolubly tied up with those of the working men. But they know also, that if the proletarians conquered political power by a revolution, they, the shopkeepers, would be entirely set aside, and be reduced to accept from the hands of the working class any thing they might give them. If the present government, on the contrary, be overthrown by peaceful means, the shopkeepers and small tradesmen, being the least obnoxious of the classes now in opposition, would very quietly step in and take hold of the government, giving, at the same time, the working people as small a share of it as possible. The small trading class, then, were quite as much terrified at their own victory as the government was at its own defeat. They saw a revolution starting up before their eyes, and they strove immediately to prevent it. There was a means for this ready at hand. Citizen Vidal, in addition to being elected for Paris, had been elected for the Lower Rhine too. They managed to make him accept for the Lower Rhine, and thus there is to be a new election in Paris. But it is evident, that as long as there is an opportunity given to the people to obtain peaceful victories, they will never raise their cry "to arms"; or if, nevertheless, provoked into an émeute, they will fight with very little chance of victory.

Page Break me10.31
Page me10.31

The new election was fixed for the 28th of this month; and the government immediately profited by the favourable position created by the amiable shopocracy. Ministers disinterred old police regulations, in order to expel from Paris a number of working men, for the moment without work; and showed that they could do even without the proposed law against electoral meetings, by directly putting a stop to all of them. The people knowing that the day before an election, they could not fight to any advantage, submitted. The social and democratic press, entirely in the hands of the shopocracy, of course did every thing to keep them quiet. The behaviour of this press has, ever since the affair of the "trees of liberty", been most infamous. There have been numbers of occasions for the people to rise; but the press has always preached peace and tranquillity while the representatives of the shopocracy in the electoral committee and other organised bodies have always managed to lessen the chances of a street victory, by opening peaceful outlets for the popular exasperation.
Page me10.31

The false position in which the Red party has been forced, and the advantage given by the new election to the Ordermongers, is fully shewn by the names of the two opposing candidates. The red candidate, Eugéne Sue, is an excellent representative of that well-meaning, "soft sawder", sentimental shopocrat-socialism, which, far from recognising the revolutionary mission of the proletarians, would rather mock-emancipate them by the benevolent patronage of the petty trading class. As a political man, Eugéne Sue is a nullity; as a demonstration, his nomination is a step backwards from the position conquered on the 10th of March. But it must be confessed, that if sentimental socialism is to have the honour of the day, his name is the most popular to be put forward, and he has a great chance to be elected.

Page Break me10.32
Page me10.32

The Ordermongers, on the other side, have so far recovered, that they now oppose to Eugéne Sue, whose name signifies nothing or very little, a name which signifies everything — M. Leclerc,†a the bourgeois Lacedemonian of the insurrection of June.†46 Leclerc is a direct reply to Deflotte, and a direct provocation to the working men, more direct than any other name could possibly be. Leclerc, candidate for Paris — that is a repetition of the words of General d'Hautpoul: — “Now, gentlemen, whenever you please to descend into the streets, we are ready!”†b

Page me10.32

The repeated election in Paris, as you see, offers no advantage, but, on the contrary, has already put to a great deal of disadvantage the proletarian party. But there is another fact to be noticed. The election of the 10th of March was carried under the old list; that of the 28th of April is to come off under the new revised list of voters for 1850, which came into force on the 1st of April; and in this revised list there are from twenty to thirty thousand working men struck off under various pretexts.
Page me10.32

However, even if this time the Ordermongers obtain a small majority, they will not be the gainers. The fact remains, that, with universal suffrage, they can no longer govern France. The fact remains, that the army is largely infected with socialism, and only awaits an occasion for open rebellion. The fact remains, that the working people of Paris are in better spirits than ever for putting an end to the present state of things. Never before did they come out so openly as they have done this time in the electoral meetings, till they were suppressed. And the government, forced to attack universal suffrage, will thereby give the people an occasion for a combat, in which there is for the proletarians the certainty of victory.

Page Break me10.33

VI†47
Page me10.33
[The Democratic Review, June 1850]
[End of May 1850]

“If the proletarians suffer the suffrage to be taken from them, they submit to the undoing of the Revolution of February, as far as they are concerned. For them the republic will no longer exist. They will be shut out from it. Will they allow this?
Page me10.33

“The law certainly will pass. Not a tittle of it will be weakened. The will of the majority, upon this point, has already shown itself clearly.†48 And as matters stand to-day, no one can tell what will follow, whether the people will rise and hurl down the government and Assembly, or whether they will wait until another occasion. Paris seems quiet; there is no direct sign of an approaching revolution; but a spark will suffice to call forth a tremendous explosion.
Page me10.33

“That explosion would have taken place before now but for the treacherous conduct of the popular chiefs, who have been doing nothing but preaching 'peace', 'tranquillity', and 'majestic calm'.†a This, however, cannot last long. The situation of France is eminently revolutionary. The Ordermongers cannot stand where they are. They must advance a step every day in order to maintain themselves. If this law should pass without provoking a revolution, they will come out with fresh, more violent, and more direct attacks on the constitution and the Republic. They want an émeute, and they will have a revolution, and have it soon, too. For it must be borne in mind that this is a question of weeks, perhaps days, not of years."

Page Break me10.34

VII
Page me10.34
[The Democratic Review, July 1850]
Paris, June 22nd, 1850

The Electoral "Reform" Law has passed, and the people of Paris have not moved. Universal Suffrage has been destroyed, without the slightest attempt at disturbance or demonstration, and the working people of France are again what they were under Louis Philippe: political Pariahs, without recognised rights, without votes, without muskets.
Page me10.34
It really is a curious fact, that Universal Suffrage in France, won easily in 1848, has been annihilated far more easily in 1850. Such ups and downs, however, correspond much with the French character, and occur very often in French history. In England such a thing would be impossible. Universal Suffrage, once established there, would be won for ever. No government would dare to touch it. Only think of the minister who should be foolish enough to consider seriously re-establishing the Corn Laws.†49 The immense laughter of the whole nation would hurl him down.
Page me10.34
The people of Paris have, undoubtedly, committed a serious mistake, in not profiting of the occasion for insurrection given by the destruction of Universal Suffrage. The army was well disposed, the small trading class was forced to go with the people, and the Mountain,†50 nay, even the party of Cavaignac knew that in case of a defeated insurrection they would inevitably be made to suffer for it, whether they stood with the people or not. Thus, at least, the moral support of the small trading class and of its parliamentary organs, the Mountain, was sure this time, as soon as the insurrection had broken out; and with that the resistance of a large portion of the army would be broken. But the occasion has been missed, partly from the cowardice of the parliamentary chiefs and the press, partly from the peculiar state of mind the people of Paris are in at present.

Page Break me10.35
Page me10.35
The working people of the capital are at present in a state of transition. The different socialist systems which, up to this time, have been discussed amongst them, no longer suffice to them; and it must be confessed, take all French systematic Socialism together, and there is not much in it of a very revolutionary nature. On the other hand the people, so many times deceived by their chiefs, have such a deep distrust towards all men who ever have acted as their leaders — not excepting even Barbés or Blanqui†51 — that they are resolved not to make any movement in order to bring any of these leaders into office. Thus the whole working-class movement is about to take a different, far more revolutionary aspect. The people, once thinking for themselves, freed from the old socialist tradition, will soon find socialist and revolutionary formulas which shall express their wants and interests far more clearly than anything invented for them, by authors of systems and by declaiming leaders. And then, arrived thus at maturity, the people will again be enabled to avail themselves of whatever talent and courage may be found among the old leaders, without becoming the tail of any of them. And this state of the popular mind in Paris accounts for the indifference displayed by the people, at the destruction of Universal Suffrage. The great struggle is postponed for the day in which one or both of the two rival powers of the state, the President or the Assembly, will try to overthrow the Republic.

Page me10.35

And this day must soon arrive. You recollect what was boasted in all the reactionary papers, about the cordial understanding between the President and the majority. Now, this cordial understanding has just resolved itself into the most deadly struggle between the two rivals. The President has been promised, as the price for his adhesion to the Electoral Law, an annual addition to his salary of 3,000,000 fr. (£120,000), which additional pay was most awfully wanted by the debt-ridden Louis Napoleon, besides being considered as the preliminary step to the prolongation of his presidency for ten years. The Electoral Law was hardly passed, when the ministers stepped in and asked for the three millions a year. But all at once the majority got frightened. They, who no longer consider the imbecile Louis Napoleon as a serious pretender, far from being ready to consent to the prolongation of his presidency, on the contrary want to get rid of him as soon as possible. They name a select committee to report on the Bill, and that committee reports against its adoption. Great consternation at the Elysée-National. Napoleon threatens abdication. A most serious collision between the two powers of the state is imminent. The ministry, a lot of bankers, a number of other "friends of order" interpose, with no result. Several "transactions" are proposed; in vain. At last an amendment is come to, which seems to satisfy all parties more or less. The majority, not quite sure as to the consequences of a rupture with the President, and having, as yet, not quite concluded the compact which is to unite the Legitimists and Orleanists into one party, seems to recoil a little, and to be ready to grant the money in another shape. The discussion is to come off on Monday; what the result will be no one can say. However, a serious rupture with Napoleon is, I think, not yet in the line of policy of the royalist majority.

Page Break me10.36

Page me10.36

The compact which is to unite the Orleanists and Legitimists, the younger and the elder branch of the house of Bourbon, is, at present, more than ever spoken of. It is a fact that most active negotiations are carried on with regard to this subject. The journey of Messrs. Thiers, Guizot, and others to the death-bed of Louis Philippe, at St. Leonards, had no other object than this. I shall not repeat to you the various versions as to the state of this affair, and the results obtained by the journey above mentioned. The daily papers have said more than enough about that. A fact, however, it is, that the Orleanist and Legitimist parties are in France pretty much agreed as to the conditions, and that the only difficulty is to have these conditions adopted by the two rival branches. Henry, Duke of Bordeaux,†a is to be made king, and as he has no children, the adoption of the Count of Paris, grandson of Louis Philippe, and heir to the throne by regular succession, is a matter almost of course, and offering no difficulties. The tricolour flag, besides, is to be maintained. The expected death of old Louis Philippe would facilitate this solution. He seems to have submitted to it, and the Duke of Bordeaux, too, appears to have accepted the agreement. The Duchess of Orleans, mother of the Count of Paris, and her brother-in-law, Joinville, are said to be the only obstacles in the way of a settlement. Louis Napoleon is to be paid off with ten millions of hard cash.

Page me10.36

There is no doubt but this, or a similar settlement, will finally be come to; and as soon as this is done, the direct attack upon the Republic will follow. In the meantime, a preliminary engagement is to be commenced by the councils-general of the departments. They have been just called together before their regular time of meeting, and are expected to call upon the National Assembly to revise the constitution. The same thing was considered last year, but thought premature by the councils themselves. There is no doubt they will show considerably more pluck this time, particularly after the successful blow at the Suffrage. And then the occasion will come for the people to show that if they abstained from showing their power for a time, they are not willing to be thrust back to the most infamous epoch of the Restoration.

Page Break me10.37
Page me10.37

P.S. — I have just read a small pamphlet sold at three sous (halfpence) and given out gratis with the République. This pamphlet contains the most astounding disclosures as to the plots and conspiracies of the royalists, as far back as the spring of 1848. It is by one Borme,†52 a witness examined in the trial of Barbés and Blanqui, at Bourges.†53 He confesses himself a paid royalist agent, who at that trial committed gross perjury. He contends that the whole movement of the 15th of May, 1848, originated with the royalists, and many other things of a most curious character. There is something, too, which regards The Times. Borme gives name and address. He lives in Paris. The pamphlet is one which must call forth more disclosures still. I call your most earnest attention to it.

Page Break me10.38

VIII
Page me10.38
[The Democratic Review, August 1850]
Paris, July 23, 1850

As I anticipated in my last, the dotation to Louis Bonaparte finally passed the Assembly — in substance allowing him the sum he wanted, in form humiliating him deeply before the eyes of all France.†54 The Assembly then resumed its work of repression — taking up the press law. Atrocious as this law was when produced from the hand of its originator, M. Baroche, it was innocent and harmless compared with what the spite of the majority has made it. The majority, in its furious and yet impotent hatred against the press, has dealt out its blows almost blindfolded, not caring whether it hits the "good" or the "bad" press. Thus the "law of hatred" has been enacted. The caution money is raised. The stamp is re-established on newspapers. An extra stamp is put upon the "roman-feuilleton", that part of the newspaper which is dedicated to the publication of novels — a measure which would be quite incomprehensible if it was not a reply to the election of Eugéne Sue, the effect of whose socialist novels has not yet been forgotten by the majority. All works published in weekly numbers or monthly parts of less than a certain size, are subjected to the stamp in the same manner as newspapers. And lastly, every paragraph appearing in a newspaper must be provided with the signature of the author.

Page me10.38

This law, as the blind fury of the majority has made it, falls heavily, not only upon the socialist and republican press, but on the counter-revolutionary press: and perhaps far more heavily upon this than upon the opposition press. The names of the republican writers are pretty well known, and it matters little whether they sign their paragraphs or not; but let the Journal des Débats, the Assemblée nationale, the Pouvoir, the Constitutionnel, &c., be obliged to come out with the names of their contributors, and their leaders will immediately lose all influence even upon their class of readers. The name of a great daily paper, particularly an old-established one, is, to respectable people, always a respectable firm; but let these firms, Bertin and Co., Véron and Co., Delamarre and Co., once be dissolved into their literary components, let that mysterious "Co." once decompose into venal "penny-a-liners" of old standing, who, for hard cash, have defended all possible causes, such as Granier de Cassagnac, or into foolish old women calling themselves statesmen, such as Capefigue, let all the little men who raise loud voices and spout big articles once creep out into daylight under the new law, and you will see what a sad figure the respectable press will make.†a

Page Break me10.39

Page me10.39

It is true that, under the new law, by the enhanced price of newspapers a very numerous class of readers will be excluded from this mode of getting information. Both newspapers, cheap periodicals, and other popular publications will be above the reach of numerous working-men, and particularly of the majority of the country-people. But the press was always an auxiliary means merely to agitate the peasantry; this class being far more sensible to their own material sufferings and to the increase of taxation than to the declamations of the press; and as long as the present bourgeois government cannot find out the means — which it never can — to alleviate the weight of usury and taxation upon the peasantry, as long will there be discontent and "revolutionary tendencies", manifested amongst this newly-roused class. As to the working-men in the towns, they cannot be entirely excluded from seeing the newspapers, and if cheap periodical publications are stopped, they will make up for that by increasing secret societies, secret debating-clubs, &c. But if the government, with respect to diminishing the number of revolutionary tracts and periodicals, have obtained some result, they have obtained it at the cost of ruining the whole of the publishing and bookselling trades; for it is impossible that these trades can subsist under the restrictions imposed by the new law. And thus this is very likely to contribute much to breaking up the party of order both in and out of the Assembly.

Page me10.39

As soon as the law on the press was voted, the Assembly proceeded to give Louis Napoleon another broad hint that he was not to exceed the limits the constitution had placed him in. The Bonapartist paper, Le Pouvoir, had an article commenting in not very favourable terms upon the Assembly. An old law of the Restoration was dug up, and the publisher of the Pouvoir, arraigned at the bar for breach of privilege, and sentenced to 5,000fr. (£200)†a fine, which fine was, of course, immediately paid.†55 The penalty was not very severe, but the act of the Assembly was sufficiently significant. “We strike low but we mean to hit higher,” said a member, and was loudly applauded.

Page Break me10.40
Page me10.40

The Assembly then resolved to suspend its sitting for three months, from the 11th of August next. As provided by the constitution, it had to elect a commission of twenty-five members, which is to remain at Paris during the adjournment, and to watch the executive power.†56 The chiefs of the majority, believing Louis Napoleon to be sufficiently humiliated, drew up a list of these candidates, including none but members of the majority, Orleanists, Moderate Legitimists, some Bonapartists, no Republicans nor ultra-Legitimists. But in the vote all the Bonapartists have been thrown out, and in their stead some Moderate Republicans and several ultra-Legitimists have been elected, thus again showing the disposition of the Assembly to have none of the coup d'état which Louis Napoleon is always dreaming of.†b
Page me10.40

I do not expect that there will be anything serious until the experiment is made to upset the Republic; be it by the President, or be it by one of the royalist factions. This would, no doubt, rouse the people from their torpor; and this is an event which must take place between now and May 1852, but at what precise epoch it is impossible to predict.†57

Page me10.40
Written between December 20, 1849, and June 23, 1850

Published in The Democratic Review, January-August 1850, marked by the editors in some issues (January-March, and May): “From Our Own Correspondent”

Reprinted from the journal

Page Break me10.41

Karl Marx and Frederick Engels

ANNOUNCEMENT†58

Page me10.41

Circumstances beyond the control of the editorial board delayed publication of the first issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. The second issue will therefore appear a fortnight after the first at the latest, and will contain amongst others the following articles:

1848-49. II. June 13, 1849. — III. Repercussions of June 13 on the Continent. — IV. Current Situation; England.†59 — By Karl Marx.

Page me10.41

The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution. III. The Palatinate. — IV. To Die for the Fatherland.†60 — By Frederick Engels.

Page me10.41

The third issue will contain among other items:

What Is Bourgeois Property? II. Landed Property. — Lectures given at the German Workers' Educational Society in London,†61 by Karl Marx.

Page me10.41

The Last Days of the German Parliament. By W. Wolff.

Page me10.41

The Financial State of Prussia, etc., etc.†62

Page me10.41

Care will be taken that in future the paper is published between the first and the tenth of each month.

The Editorial Board

Page me10.41

Written in late February 1850

First published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue No. 1, January 1850, London, Hamburg, New York, 1850

Printed according to the journal

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me10.42

Page Break me10.43

Page me10.43

Page me10.43

Cover of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue

Page Break me10.44

Page Break me10.45

KARL MARX

THE CLASS STRUGGLES IN FRANCE
1848 to 1850†63

Page Break me10.46
Page me10.46
Written from January to November 1, 1850

First published in the journal Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5-6, 1850 Signed: Karl Marx

Printed according to the journal checked with the text of the 1895 edition

Page Break me10.47
Page me10.47
With the exception of only a few chapters, every more important part of the annals of the revolution from 1848 to 1849 carries the heading: Defeat of the Revolution!
Page me10.47
What succumbed in these defeats was not the revolution. It was the pre-revolutionary traditional appendages, results of social relationships which had not yet come to the point of sharp class antagonisms — persons, illusions, conceptions, projects from which the revolutionary party before the February Revolution was not free, from which it could be freed not by the victory of February, but only by a series of defeats.
Page me10.47
In a word: the revolution made progress, forged ahead, not by its immediate tragi-comic achievements, but on the contrary by the creation of a powerful, united counter-revolution, by the creation of an opponent in combat with whom alone the party of insurrection ripened into a really revolutionary party.
Page me10.47
To prove this is the task of the following pages.

Page Break me10.48

I

THE DEFEAT OF JUNE 1848

Page me10.48
After the July Revolution,†a when the liberal banker Laffitte led his compére, the Duke of Orleans, in triumph to the Hôtel de Ville, he let fall the words: “From now on the bankers will rule.” Laffitte had betrayed the secret of the revolution.
Page me10.48
It was not the French bourgeoisie that ruled under Louis Philippe, but one faction of it: bankers, stock-exchange kings, railway kings, owners of coal and iron mines and forests, a part of the landed proprietors associated with them — the so-called finance aristocracy. It sat on the throne, it dictated laws in the Chambers, it distributed public offices, from cabinet portfolios to tobacco bureau posts.

Page me10.48

The industrial bourgeoisie proper formed part of the official opposition, that is, it was represented only as a minority in the Chambers. Its opposition was expressed all the more resolutely, the more unalloyed the autocracy of the finance aristocracy became, and the more it itself imagined that its domination over the working class was ensured after the mutinies of 1832, 1834 and 1839, which had been drowned in blood.†64 Grandin, Rouen manufacturer and the most fanatical instrument of bourgeois reaction in the Constituent as well as in the Legislative National Assembly, was the most violent opponent of Guizot in the Chamber of Deputies. Léon Faucher, later known for his impotent efforts to climb into prominence as the Guizot of the French counter-revolution, in the last days of Louis Philippe waged a war of the pen for industry against speculation and its train-bearer, the government. Bastiat agitated in the name of

Page Break me10.49
Bordeaux and the whole of wine-producing France against the ruling system.
Page me10.49

The petty bourgeoisie of all gradations, and the peasantry also, were completely excluded from political power. Finally, in the official opposition or entirely outside the pays légal,†a there were the ideological representatives and spokesmen of the above classes, their savants, lawyers, doctors, etc., in a word: their so-called men of talent.
Page me10.49

Owing to its financial straits, the July monarchy was dependent from the beginning on the big bourgeoisie, and its dependence on the big bourgeoisie was the inexhaustible source of increasing financial straits. It was impossible to subordinate the administration of the state to the interests of national production without balancing the budget, without establishing a balance between state expenditures and state revenues. And how was this balance to be established without limiting state expenditures, that is, without encroaching on interests which were so many props of the ruling system, and without redistributing taxes, that is, without shifting a considerable share of the burden of taxation onto the shoulders of the big bourgeoisie itself?
Page me10.49

On the contrary, the faction of the bourgeoisie that ruled and legislated through the Chambers had a direct interest in the indebtedness of the state. The state deficit was really the main object of its speculation and the chief source of its enrichment. At the end of each year a new deficit. After the lapse of four or five years a new loan. And every new loan offered new opportunities to the finance aristocracy for defrauding the state, which was kept artificially on the verge of bankruptcy — it had to negotiate with the bankers under the most unfavourable conditions. Each new loan gave a further opportunity, that of plundering the public which had invested its capital in state bonds by means of stock-exchange manipulations, into the secrets of which the government and the majority in the Chambers were initiated. In general, the instability of state credit and the possession of state secrets gave the bankers and their associates in the Chambers and on the throne the possibility of evoking sudden, extraordinary fluctuations in the quotations of government securities, the result of which was always bound to be the ruin of a mass of smaller capitalists and the fabulously rapid enrichment of the big gamblers. As the state deficit was in the direct interest of the ruling faction of the bourgeoisie, it is clear why the extraordinary state expenditure in the last years of Louis Philippe's reign was far more than double the extraordinary state expenditure under Napoleon, indeed reached a yearly sum of nearly 400,000,000 francs, whereas the whole average annual export of France seldom attained a volume amounting to 750,000,000 francs. The enormous sums which, in this way, flowed through the hands of the state facilitated, moreover, swindling contracts for deliveries, bribery, defalcations and all kinds of roguery. The defrauding of the state, practised wholesale in connection with loans, was repeated retail in public works. What occurred in the relations between Chamber and Government became multiplied in the relations between individual departments and individual entrepreneurs.

Page Break me10.50
Page me10.50
The ruling class exploited the building of railways in the same way as it exploited state expenditures in general and state loans. The Chambers piled the main burdens on the state, and secured the golden fruits to the speculating finance aristocracy. One recalls the scandals in the Chamber of Deputies, when by chance it leaked out that all the members of the majority, including a number of ministers, had been interested as shareholders in the very railway constructions which as legislators they caused to be carried out afterwards at the cost of the state.
Page me10.50
On the other hand, the smallest financial reform was wrecked due to the influence of the bankers. For example, the postal reform. Rothschild protested. Was it permissible for the state to curtail sources of revenue out of which interest was to be paid on its ever-increasing debt?
Page me10.50
The July monarchy was nothing but a joint-stock company for the exploitation of France's national wealth, the dividends of which were divided among ministers, Chambers,†a 240,000 voters and their adherents. Louis Philippe was the director of this company — Robert Macaire†65 on the throne. Trade, industry, agriculture, shipping, the interests of the industrial bourgeoisie, were bound to be continually endangered and prejudiced under this system. Cheap government, gouvernement á bon marché was what it had inscribed in the July days on its banner.
Page me10.50
Since the finance aristocracy made the laws, was at the head of the administration of the state, had command of all the organised public authorities, dominated public opinion through the actual state of affairs and through the press, the same prostitution, the same shameless cheating, the same mania to get rich was repeated in every sphere, from the Court to the Café Borgne,†a to get rich not by production, but by pocketing the already available wealth of others. Clashing every moment with the bourgeois laws themselves, an unbridled assertion of unhealthy and dissolute appetites manifested itself, particularly at the top of bourgeois society — lusts wherein wealth derived from gambling naturally seeks its satisfaction, where pleasure becomes crapuleux,†b where money, filth and blood commingle. The finance aristocracy, in its mode of acquisition as well as in its pleasures, is nothing but the rebirth of the lumpenproletariat on the heights of bourgeois society.

Page Break me10.51

Page me10.51

And the non-ruling factions of the French bourgeoisie cried: Corruption! The people cried: Á bas les grands voleurs! Á bas les assassins!†c when in 1847, on the most prominent stages of bourgeois society, the same scenes were publicly enacted that regularly lead the lumpenproletariat to brothels, to workhouses and lunatic asylums, to the bar of justice, to the dungeon and to the scaffold. The industrial bourgeoisie saw its interests endangered, the petty bourgeoisie was filled with moral indignation, the imagination of the people was offended, Paris was flooded with pamphlets — La dynastie Rothschild, Les juifs rois de l'époque,†d etc. — in which the rule of the finance aristocracy was denounced and stigmatised with greater or less wit.
Page me10.51

Rien pour la gloire!†e Glory brings no profit! La paix partout et toujours!†f War depresses the quotations of the three and four per cents! the France of the Bourse jobbers had inscribed on her banner. Her foreign policy was therefore lost in a series of mortifications to French national sentiment, which reacted all the more vigorously when the rape of Poland was brought to its conclusion with the incorporation of Cracow by Austria, and when Guizot came out actively on the side of the Holy Alliance in the Swiss Sonderbund war.†66 The victory of the Swiss liberals in this bogus war raised the self-respect of the bourgeois opposition in France; the bloody uprising of the people in Palermo worked like an electric shock on the paralysed masses of the people and awoke their great revolutionary memories and passions.†*

Page Break me10.52
Page me10.52

The eruption of the general discontent was finally accelerated and the mood for revolt ripened by two economic world events.
Page me10.52

The potato blight and the crop failures of 1845 and 1846 increased the general ferment among the people. The dearth of 1847 called forth bloody conflicts in France as well as on the rest of the Continent. As against the shameless orgies of the finance aristocracy, the struggle of the people for the prime necessities of life! At Buzançais, hunger rioters executed†67; in Paris, oversatiated escrocs†a snatched from the courts by the royal family!
Page me10.52

The second great economic event which hastened the outbreak of the revolution was a general commercial and industrial crisis in England. Already heralded in the autumn of 1845 by the wholesale reverses of the speculators in railway shares, staved off during 1846 by a number of incidents such as the impending abolition of the corn duties, the crisis finally burst in the autumn of 1847 with the bankruptcy of the London wholesale grocers, on the heels of which followed the insolvencies of the land banks and the closing of the factories in the English industrial districts. The after-effect of this crisis on the Continent had not yet spent itself when the February Revolution broke out.

Page me10.52

The devastation of trade and industry caused by the economic epidemic made the autocracy of the finance aristocracy still more unbearable. Throughout the whole of France the bourgeois opposition agitated at banquets for an electoral reform which should win for it the majority in the Chambers and overthrow the Ministry of the Bourse. In Paris the industrial crisis had, moreover, the particular result of throwing a multitude of manufacturers and big traders, who under the existing circumstances could no longer do any business in the foreign market, onto the home market. They set up large establishments, the competition of which ruined the small épiciers and boutiquiers†b en masse. Hence the innumerable bankruptcies among this section of the Paris bourgeoisie, and hence their revolutionary action in February. It is well known how Guizot and the Chambers answered the reform proposals with an unambiguous challenge, how Louis Philippe too late resolved on a ministry led by Barrot, how things went as far as hand-to-hand fighting between the people and the army, how the army was disarmed as a result of the passive conduct of the National Guard, how the July monarchy had to give way to a Provisional Government.

Page Break me10.53
Page me10.53

The Provisional Government which emerged from the February barricades necessarily mirrored in its composition the different parties which shared in the victory. It could not be anything but a compromise between the different classes which together had overturned the July throne, but whose interests were mutually antagonistic. The great majority of its members consisted of representatives of the bourgeoisie. The republican petty bourgeoisie was represented by Ledru-Rollin and Flocon, the republican bourgeoisie by the people from the National,†a the dynastic opposition by Crémieux, Dupont de l'Eure, etc.†68 The working class had only two representatives, Louis Blanc and Albert. Finally, Lamartine in the Provisional Government: this essentially represented no real interest, no definite class; for such was the February Revolution, the general uprising with its illusions, its poetry, its imaginary content and its rhetoric. Moreover, the spokesman of the February Revolution, according to both his position and his views, belonged to the bourgeoisie.
Page me10.53

If Paris, as a result of political centralisation, rules France, the workers, in moments of revolutionary earthquakes, rule Paris. The first act in the life of the Provisional Government was an attempt to escape from this overpowering influence by an appeal from intoxicated Paris to sober France. Lamartine disputed the right of the barricade fighters to proclaim a republic on the ground that only the majority of Frenchmen had that right; they must await the majority vote, the Paris proletariat must not besmirch its victory by a usurpation.†b The bourgeoisie allows the proletariat only one usurpation — that of fighting.
Page me10.53

Up to noon of February 25 the republic had not yet been proclaimed; on the other hand, all the ministries had already been shared out among the bourgeois elements of the Provisional Government and among the generals, bankers and lawyers of the National. But the workers were determined this time not to put up with any fraud like that of July 1830. They were ready to take up the fight anew and to get a republic by force of arms. With this message, Raspail betook himself to the Hôtel de Ville. In the name of the Paris proletariat he commanded the Provisional Government to proclaim a republic; if this order of the people were not fulfilled within two hours, he would return at the head of 200,000 men. The bodies of the fallen were scarcely cold, the barricades were not yet cleared away, the workers not yet disarmed, and the only force which could be opposed to them was the National Guard. Under these circumstances the doubts born of considerations of state policy and the juristic scruples of conscience entertained by the Provisional Government suddenly vanished. The time limit of two hours had not yet expired when all the walls of Paris were resplendent with the historic, momentous words:

Page Break me10.54
Page me10.54
République française! Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité!
Page me10.54
Even the memory of the limited aims and motives which drove the bourgeoisie into the February Revolution was extinguished by the proclamation of the republic on the basis of universal suffrage. Instead of only a few factions of the bourgeoisie, all classes of French society were suddenly hurled into the orbit of political power, forced to leave the boxes, the stalls and the gallery and to act in person upon the revolutionary stage! With the constitutional monarchy vanished also the semblance of a state power independently confronting bourgeois society as well as the whole series of subordinate struggles which this semblance of power called forth!
Page me10.54
By dictating the republic to the Provisional Government and through the Provisional Government to the whole of France, the proletariat stepped into the foreground forthwith as an independent party, but at the same time challenged the whole of bourgeois France to enter the lists against it. What it won was the terrain for the fight for its revolutionary emancipation, but by no means this emancipation itself.
Page me10.54
The first thing that the February republic had to do was, rather, to complete the rule of the bourgeoisie by allowing, beside the finance aristocracy, all the propertied classes to enter the orbit of political power. The majority of the great landowners, the Legitimists,†69 were emancipated from the political nullity to which they had been condemned by the July monarchy. Not for nothing had the Gazette de France agitated in common with the opposition papers; not for nothing had La Rochejaquelein taken the side of the revolution in the session of the Chamber of Deputies on February 24. The nominal proprietors, who form the great majority of the French people, the peasants, were put by universal suffrage in the position of arbiters of the fate of France. The February republic finally brought the rule of the bourgeoisie clearly into view, since it struck off the crown behind which capital kept itself concealed.

Page Break me10.55

Page me10.55

Just as the workers in the July days had fought for and won the bourgeois monarchy, so in the February days they fought for and won the bourgeois republic. Just as the July monarchy had to proclaim itself a monarchy surrounded by republican institutions, so the February republic was forced to proclaim itself a republic surrounded by social institutions. The Paris proletariat compelled this concession, too.
Page me10.55

Marche, a worker, dictated the decree†a by which the newly formed Provisional Government pledged itself to guarantee the workers a livelihood by means of labour, to provide work for all citizens, etc. And when, a few days later, it forgot its promises and seemed to have lost sight of the proletariat, a mass of 20,000 workers marched on the Hôtel de Ville with the cry: Organisation of labour! Formation of a special Ministry of Labour! Reluctantly and after long debate, the Provisional Government nominated a permanent special commission†b to find means of improving the lot of the working classes! It consisted of delegates from the corporations of Paris artisans and was presided over by Louis Blanc and Albert. The Luxembourg palace was assigned to it as its meeting place. In this way the representatives of the working class were banished from the seat of the Provisional Government, the bourgeois part of which retained the real state power and the reins of administration exclusively in its hands; and side by side with the ministries of Finance, Trade, and Public Works, side by side with the Bank and the Bourse, there arose a socialist synagogue whose high priests, Louis Blanc and Albert, had the task of discovering the promised land, of preaching the new gospel and of providing work for the Paris proletariat. Unlike any profane state power, they had no budget, no executive authority at their disposal. They were supposed to break the pillars of bourgeois society by dashing their heads against them. While the Luxembourg sought the philosopher's stone, in the Hôtel de Ville they minted the current coinage.
Page me10.55

And yet the claims of the Paris proletariat, so far as they went beyond the bourgeois republic, could win no other existence than the nebulous one of the Luxembourg.
Page me10.55

In common with the bourgeoisie the workers had made the February Revolution, and alongside the bourgeoisie they sought to assert their interests, just as they had installed a worker in the Provisional Government itself alongside the bourgeois majority.

Page Break me10.56
Page me10.56

Organisation of labour! But wage labour, that is the existing, the bourgeois organisation of labour. Without it there is no capital, no bourgeoisie, no bourgeois society. A special Ministry of Labour! But the ministries of Finance, of Trade, of Public Works — are not these the bourgeois Ministries of Labour? And alongside these a proletarian Ministry of Labour had to be a ministry of impotence, a ministry of pious wishes, a Luxembourg Commission. Just as the workers thought they would be able to emancipate themselves side by side with the bourgeoisie, so they thought they would be able to consummate a proletarian revolution within the national walls of France, side by side with the remaining bourgeois nations. But French relations of production are conditioned by the foreign trade of France, by her position on the world market and the laws thereof; how was France to break them without a European revolutionary war, which would strike back at the despot of the world market, England?

Page me10.56

As soon as it has risen up, a class in which the revolutionary interests of society are concentrated finds the content and the material for its revolutionary activity directly in its own situation: foes to be laid low, measures dictated by the needs of the struggle to be taken; the consequences of its own deeds drive it on. It makes no theoretical inquiries into its own task. The French working class had not attained this level; it was still incapable of accomplishing its own revolution.

Page me10.56

The development of the industrial proletariat is, in general, conditioned by the development of the industrial bourgeoisie. Only under its rule does the proletariat gain that extensive national existence which can raise its revolution to a national one, and does it itself create the modern means of production, which become just so many means of its revolutionary emancipation. Only its rule tears up the material roots of feudal society and levels the ground on which alone a proletarian revolution is possible. French industry is more developed and the French bourgeoisie more revolutionary than that of the rest of the Continent. But was not the February Revolution levelled directly against the finance aristocracy? This fact proved that the industrial bourgeoisie did not rule France. The industrial bourgeoisie can rule only where modern industry shapes all property relations to suit itself, and industry can win this power only where it has conquered the world market, for national bounds are inadequate for its development. But French industry, to a great extent, maintains its command even of the national market only through a more or less modified system of prohibitive tariffs. While, therefore, the French proletariat, at the moment of a revolution, possesses in

Page Break me10.57

Paris real power and influence which spur it on to an effort beyond its means, in the rest of France it is crowded into separate, scattered industrial centres, being almost lost in the superior numbers of peasants and petty bourgeois. The struggle against capital in its developed, modern form, in its decisive aspect, the struggle of the industrial wage-worker against the industrial bourgeois, is in France a partial phenomenon, which after the February days could so much the less supply the national content of the revolution, since the struggle against capital's secondary modes of exploitation, that of the peasant against usury and mortgages or of the petty bourgeois against the wholesale dealer, banker and manufacturer, in a word, against bankruptcy, was still hidden in the general uprising against the finance aristocracy. Nothing is more understandable, then, than that the Paris proletariat sought to assert its own interests side by side with the interests of the bourgeoisie, instead of enforcing them as the revolutionary interests of society itself, that it let the red flag be dipped before the tricolour.†70 The French workers could not take a step forward, could not touch a hair of the bourgeois order, until the course of the revolution had aroused the mass of the nation, the peasants and petty bourgeois, standing between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie, against this order, against the rule of capital, and had forced them to attach themselves to the proletarians as their protagonists. The workers could buy this victory only through the tremendous defeat in June.

Page me10.57

The Luxembourg Commission, this creation of the Paris workers, must be given the credit of having disclosed, from a Europe-wide tribune, the secret of the revolution of the nineteenth century: the emancipation of the proletariat. The Moniteur blushed when it had to propagate officially the "wild ravings"†71 which up to that time lay buried in the apocryphal writings of the Socialists and reached the ear of the bourgeoisie only from time to time as remote, half terrifying, half ludicrous legends. Europe awoke astonished from its bourgeois doze. Therefore, in the minds of the proletarians, who confused the finance aristocracy with the bourgeoisie in general; in the imagination of the good old republicans who denied the very existence of classes or, at most, admitted them as a result of the constitutional monarchy; in the hypocritical phrases of the factions of the bourgeoisie which until then had been excluded from power, the rule of the bourgeoisie was abolished with the introduction of the republic. At that time all the royalists were transformed into republicans and all the millionaires of Paris into workers. The phrase which corresponded to this imaginary abolition of class relations was fraternité, universal fraternisation and brotherhood. This pleasant dissociation from class antagonisms, this sentimental reconciliation of contradictory class interests, this visionary elevation above the class struggle, this fraternité was the real catchword of the February Revolution. The classes were divided by a mere misunderstanding and Lamartine baptised the Provisional Government of February 24 "un gouvernement qui suspende ce malentendu terrible qui existe entre les différentes classes".†a The Paris proletariat revelled in this magnanimous intoxication of fraternity.

Page Break me10.58
Page me10.58

The Provisional Government, on its part, once it was compelled to proclaim the republic, did everything to make it acceptable to the bourgeoisie and to the provinces. The bloody terror of the first French republic was disavowed by the abolition of the death penalty for political offences; the press was opened to all opinions; the army, the courts, the administration remained with a few exceptions in the hands of their old dignitaries; none of the July monarchy's great offenders was brought to book. The bourgeois republicans of the National amused themselves by exchanging monarchist names and costumes for old republican ones. To them the republic was only a new ball dress for the old bourgeois society. The young republic sought its chief merit not in frightening, but rather in constantly taking fright itself,†b and in winning existence and disarming resistance by easy compliance and non-resistance. At home to the privileged classes, abroad to the despotic powers, it was loudly announced that the republic was of a peaceful nature. Live and let live was its professed motto. What is more, shortly after the February Revolution the Germans, Poles, Austrians, Hungarians and Italians revolted, each people in accordance with its immediate situation. Russia and England — the latter itself agitated, the former cowed — were not prepared. The republic, therefore, had no national enemy to face. Consequently, there were no great foreign complications which could fire the energies, hasten the revolutionary process, drive the Provisional Government forward or throw it overboard. The Paris proletariat, which looked upon the republic as its own creation, naturally acclaimed each act of the Provisional Government which facilitated the firm emplacement of the latter in bourgeois society. It willingly allowed itself to be employed on police service by Caussidiére in order to protect property in Paris, just as it allowed Louis Blanc to arbitrate wage disputes between workers and masters. It made it a point d'honneur to preserve the bourgeois honour of the republic unblemished in the eyes of Europe.

Page Break me10.59
Page me10.59
The republic encountered no resistance either abroad or at home. This disarmed it. Its task was no longer the revolutionary transformation of the world, but consisted only in adapting itself to the relations of bourgeois society. Concerning the fanaticism with which the Provisional Government undertook this task there is no more eloquent testimony than its financial measures.
Page me10.59
Public credit and private credit were naturally shaken. Public credit rests on confidence that the state will allow itself to be exploited by the wolves of finance. But the old state had vanished and the revolution was directed above all against the finance aristocracy. The tremors of the last European commercial crisis had not yet ceased. Bankruptcy still followed bankruptcy.
Page me10.59
Private credit was therefore paralysed, circulation restricted, production at a standstill before the February Revolution broke out. The revolutionary crisis increased the commercial crisis. And if private credit rests on confidence that bourgeois production in the entire scope of its relations, that the bourgeois order, will not be touched, will remain inviolate, what effect must a revolution have had which questioned the basis of bourgeois production, the economic slavery of the proletariat, which set up against the Bourse the sphinx of the Luxembourg? The raising up of the proletariat is the abolition of bourgeois credit; for it is the abolition of bourgeois production and its order. Public credit and private credit are the economic thermometer by which the intensity of a revolution can be measured. The more they fall, the more the fervour and generative power of the revolution rises.
Page me10.59
The Provisional Government wanted to strip the republic of its anti-bourgeois appearance. And so it had, above all, to try to peg the exchange value of this new form of state, its quotation on the Bourse. Private credit necessarily rose again, together with the current Bourse quotation of the republic.
Page me10.59
In order to allay the very suspicion that it would not or could not honour the obligations assumed by the monarchy, in order to build up confidence in the republic's bourgeois morality and capacity to pay, the Provisional Government took refuge in braggadocio as undignified as it was childish. In advance of the legal date of payment it paid out the interest on the 5 per cent, 4 1/2 per cent and 4 per cent bonds to the state creditors. The bourgeois aplomb, the self-assurance of the capitalists, suddenly awoke when they saw the anxious haste with which it was sought to buy their confidence.

Page Break me10.60
Page me10.60
The financial embarrassment of the Provisional Government was naturally not lessened by a theatrical stroke which robbed it of its stock of ready cash. The financial pinch could no longer be concealed and petty bourgeois, domestic servants and workers had to pay for the pleasant surprise which had been prepared for the state creditors.
Page me10.60
It was announced that no money could be drawn on savings bank accounts for amounts of over one hundred francs. The sums deposited in the savings banks were confiscated and by decree transformed into an irredeemable state debt. This embittered the already hard pressed petty bourgeois against the republic. Since he received state debt certificates in place of his savings bank books, he was forced to go to the Bourse in order to sell them and thus deliver himself directly into the hands of the Bourse jobbers, against whom he had made the February Revolution.
Page me10.60
The finance aristocracy, which ruled under the July monarchy, had its high church in the Bank. Just as the Bourse governs state credit, the Bank governs commercial credit.
Page me10.60
Directly threatened not only in its rule but in its very existence by the February Revolution, the Bank tried from the outset to discredit the republic by making the lack of credit general. It suddenly stopped the credits of the bankers, the manufacturers and the merchants. As it did not immediately call forth a counter-revolution, this manoeuvre necessarily reacted on the Bank itself. The capitalists drew out the money which they had deposited in the vaults of the Bank. The possessors of bank-notes rushed to the pay office in order to exchange them for gold and silver.
Page me10.60
The Provisional Government could have forced the Bank into bankruptcy without forcible interference, in a legal manner; it would only have had to remain passive and leave the Bank to its fate. The bankruptcy of the Bank would have been the deluge which in a trice would have swept from French soil the finance aristocracy, the most powerful and dangerous enemy of the republic, the golden pedestal of the July monarchy. And once the Bank was bankrupt, the bourgeoisie itself would have had to regard it as a last desperate attempt at rescue, if the government had formed a national bank and subjected national credit to the control of the nation.
Page me10.60
The Provisional Government, on the contrary, fixed a compulsory quotation for the notes of the Bank. It did more. It transformed all provincial banks into branches of the Banque de France and allowed it to cast its net over the whole of France. Later it pledged the state forests to the Bank as a guarantee for a loan that it contracted from it. In this way the February Revolution directly strengthened and enlarged the bankocracy which it should have overthrown.

Page Break me10.61

Page me10.61

Meanwhile the Provisional Government was writhing under the incubus of a growing deficit. In vain it begged for patriotic sacrifices. Only the workers threw it their alms. Recourse had to be had to a heroic measure, to the imposition of a new tax. But who was to be taxed? The Bourse wolves, the bank kings, the state creditors, the rentiers, the industrialists? That was not the way to ingratiate the republic with the bourgeoisie. That would have meant, on the one hand, to endanger state credit and commercial credit, while, on the other, attempts were made to purchase them with such great sacrifices and humiliations. But someone had to fork out the cash. Who was sacrificed to bourgeois credit? Jacques le bonhomme, the peasant.
Page me10.61

The Provisional Government imposed an additional tax of 45 centimes in the franc on the four direct taxes. The government press cajoled the Paris proletariat into believing that this tax would fall chiefly on the big landed proprietors, on the possessors of the milliard granted by the Restoration.†72 But in truth it hit the peasant class above all, that is, the large majority of the French people. They had to pay the costs of the February Revolution; in them the counter-revolution gained its main material. The 45 centimes tax was a question of life and death for the French peasant; he made it a life-and-death question for the republic. From that moment the republic meant to the French peasant the 45 centimes tax, and he saw in the Paris proletariat the spendthrift who did himself well at his expense.
Page me10.61

Whereas the Revolution of 1789 began by shaking the feudal burdens off the peasants, the Revolution of 1848 announced itself to the rural population by the imposition of a new tax, in order not to endanger capital and to keep its state machine going.
Page me10.61

There was only one means by which the Provisional Government could set aside all these inconveniences and jerk the state out of its old rut — a declaration of state bankruptcy. Everyone recalls how Ledru-Rollin in the National Assembly subsequently proclaimed with what virtuous indignation he repudiated this presumptuous proposal of the Bourse wolf Fould,†a now French Finance Minister. Fould had handed him the apple from the tree of knowledge.

Page Break me10.62
Page me10.62

By honouring the bills drawn on the state by the old bourgeois society, the Provisional Government succumbed to the latter. It had become the hard pressed debtor of bourgeois society instead of confronting it as the pressing creditor that had to collect the revolutionary debts of many years. It had to consolidate the shaky bourgeois relationships in order to fulfil obligations which are only to be fulfilled within these relationships. Credit became a condition of life for it, and the concessions to the proletariat, the promises made to it, became so many fetters which had to be struck off.

The emancipation of the workers — even as a phrase — became an unbearable danger to the new republic, for it was a standing protest against the restoration of credit, which rests on undisturbed and untroubled recognition of the existing economic class relations. Therefore, it was necessary to have done with the workers.
Page me10.62

The February Revolution had cast the army out of Paris. The National Guard, that is, the bourgeoisie in its different gradations, constituted the sole power. Alone, however, it did not feel itself a match for the proletariat. Moreover, it was forced gradually and piecemeal to open its ranks and admit armed proletarians, albeit after the most tenacious resistance and after setting up a hundred different obstacles. There consequently remained but one way out: to play off one part of the proletariat against the other.
Page me10.62

For this purpose the Provisional Government formed 24 battalions of Mobile Guards, each a thousand strong, composed of young men from 15 to 20 years.†73 They belonged for the most part to the lumpenproletariat, which in all big towns forms a mass sharply differentiated from the industrial proletariat, a recruiting ground for thieves and criminals of all kinds, living on the crumbs of society, people without a definite trade, vagabonds, gens sans feu et sans aveu, varying according to the degree of civilisation of the nation to which they belong, but never renouncing their lazzaroni†74 character; at the youthful age at which the Provisional Government recruited them, thoroughly malleable, as capable of the most heroic deeds and the most exalted sacrifices as of the basest banditry and the foulest corruption. The Provisional Government paid them 1 franc 50 centimes a day, that is, it bought them. It gave them their own uniform, that is, it made them outwardly distinct from the blouse-wearing workers. In part it had assigned them officers from the standing army as leaders; in part they themselves elected young sons of the bourgeoisie whose rodomontades about death for the fatherland and devotion to the republic captivated them.
Page me10.62

And so the Paris proletariat was confronted with an army, drawn from its own midst, of 24,000 young, strong, foolhardy men. It gave cheers for the Mobile Guard on its marches through Paris. It acknowledged it to be its foremost fighters on the barricades. It regarded it as the proletarian guard in contradistinction to the bourgeois National Guard. Its error was pardonable.

Page Break me10.63
Page me10.63

Besides the Mobile Guard, the government decided to rally round itself an army of industrial workers. A hundred thousand workers, thrown on the streets by the crisis and the revolution, were enrolled by the Minister Marie in so-called national ateliers. Under this grandiose name was hidden nothing else than the employment of the workers on tedious, monotonous, unproductive earthworks at a wage of 23 sous. English workhouses†75 in the open — that is what these national ateliers were. The Provisional Government believed that it had formed, in them, a second proletarian army against the workers themselves. This time the bourgeoisie was mistaken in the national ateliers, just as the workers were mistaken in the Mobile Guard. It had created an army for mutiny.
Page me10.63

But one purpose was achieved.
Page me10.63
National ateliers was the name of the people's workshops, which Louis Blanc preached in the Luxembourg palace. Marie's ateliers, devised in direct antagonism to the Luxembourg, offered occasion, thanks to the common label, for a plot of errors worthy of the Spanish comedy of servants. The Provisional Government itself surreptitiously spread the report that these national ateliers were the invention of Louis Blanc, and this seemed the more plausible because Louis Blanc, the prophet of the national ateliers, was a member of the Provisional Government. And in the half naive, half intentional confusion of the Paris bourgeoisie, in the artificially moulded opinion of France, of Europe, these workhouses were the first realisation of socialism, which was put in the pillory with them.
Page me10.63
In their appellation, though not in their content, the national ateliers were the embodied protest of the proletariat against bourgeois industry, bourgeois credit and the bourgeois republic. The whole hate of the bourgeoisie was, therefore, turned upon them. It had found in them, simultaneously, the point against which it could direct the attack, as soon as it was strong enough to break openly with the February illusions. All the discontent, all the ill-humour of the petty bourgeois too was directed against these national ateliers, the common target. With real fury they reckoned up the sums that the proletarian loafers swallowed up, while their own situation was becoming daily more unbearable. A state pension for sham labour, so that's socialism! they grumbled to themselves. They sought the reason for their misery in the national ateliers, the declamations of the Luxembourg, the processions of the workers through Paris. And no one was more fanatic about the alleged machinations of the Communists than the petty bourgeoisie, who hovered hopelessly on the brink of bankruptcy.

Page Break me10.64
Page me10.64
Thus in the imminent skirmish between bourgeoisie and proletariat, all the advantages, all the decisive posts, all the middle strata of society were in the hands of the bourgeoisie, at the same time as the waves of the February Revolution rose high over the whole Continent, and each new post brought a new bulletin of revolution, now from Italy, now from Germany, now from the remotest parts of South-Eastern Europe, and maintained the general ecstasy of the people, giving it constant testimony of a victory that it had already forfeited.
Page me10.64
March 17 and April 16 were the first skirmishes in the big class struggle, which the bourgeois republic hid under its wings.
Page me10.64
March 17 revealed the ambiguous situation of the proletariat, which permitted of no decisive act. Its demonstration originally pursued the purpose of pushing the Provisional Government back onto the path of revolution, of effecting the exclusion of its bourgeois members, according to circumstances, and of compelling the postponement of the election days for the National Assembly and the National Guard.†76 But on March 16 the bourgeoisie represented in the National Guard staged a hostile demonstration against the Provisional Government. With the cry: Á bas Ledru-Rollin!†a it surged to the Hôtel de Ville. And the people were forced, on March 17, to shout: Long live Ledru-Rollin! Long live the Provisional Government! They were forced to take sides against the bourgeoisie in support of the bourgeois republic, which seemed to them to be in danger. They strengthened the Provisional Government, instead of subordinating it to themselves. March 17 went off in a melodramatic scene, and whereas the Paris proletariat on this day once more displayed its giant body, the bourgeoisie both inside and outside the Provisional Government was all the more determined to smash it.

Page me10.64

April 16 was a misunderstanding engineered by the Provisional Government in alliance with the bourgeoisie. The workers had gathered in great numbers in the Field of Mars and in the Hippodrome to prepare their elections to the general staff of the National Guard. Suddenly throughout Paris, from one end to the other, a rumour spread as quick as lightning, to the effect, that the workers had met armed in the Field of Mars, under the leadership of Louis Blanc, Blanqui, Cabet and Raspail, in order to march thence on the Hôtel de Ville, overthrow the Provisional Government and proclaim a communist government. The general alarm is sounded — Ledru-Rollin, Marrast and Lamartine later contended for the honour of having initiated this — and in an hour 100,000 men are under arms; the Hôtel de Ville is occupied at all points by the National Guard; the cry: Down with the Communists! Down with Louis Blanc, with Blanqui, with Raspail, with Cabet! thunders throughout Paris. Innumerable deputations pay homage to the Provisional Government, all ready to save the fatherland and society. When the workers finally appear before the Hôtel de Ville, in order to hand over to the Provisional Government a patriotic collection which they had made in the Field of Mars, they learn to their amazement that bourgeois Paris had defeated their shadow in a very carefully calculated sham battle. The terrible attempt of April 16 furnished the excuse for recalling the army to Paris — the real purpose of the clumsily staged comedy — and for the reactionary federalist demonstrations in the provinces.

Page Break me10.65

Page me10.65

On May 4 the National Assembly,†a the result of the direct general elections, convened. Universal suffrage did not possess the magic power which republicans of the old school had ascribed to it. They saw in the whole of France, at least in the majority of Frenchmen, citoyens with the same interests, the same understanding, etc. This was their cult of the people. Instead of their imaginary people, the elections brought the real people to the light of day, that is, representatives of the different classes into which it falls. We have seen why peasants and petty bourgeois had to vote under the leadership of a bourgeoisie spoiling for a fight and of big landowners frantic for restoration. But if universal suffrage was not the miracle-working magic wand for which the republican worthies had taken it, it possessed the incomparably higher merit of unchaining the class struggle, of letting the various middle strata of bourgeois society rapidly get over their illusions and disappointments, of tossing all the sections of the exploiting class at one throw to the apex of the state, and thus tearing from them their deceptive mask, whereas the monarchy with its property qualifications only let certain factions of the bourgeoisie compromise themselves, allowing the others to lie hidden behind the scenes and surrounding them with the halo of a common opposition.

Page me10.65

In the Constituent National Assembly, which met on May 4, the bourgeois republicans, the republicans of the National, had the upper hand. Even Legitimists and Orleanists†77 at first dared to show themselves only under the mask of bourgeois republicanism. The fight against the proletariat could be undertaken only in the name of the republic.

Page Break me10.66
Page me10.66

The republic dates from May 4, not from February 25, that is, the republic recognised by the French people; it is not the republic which the Paris proletariat thrust upon the Provisional Government, not the republic with social institutions, not the vision which hovered before the fighters on the barricades. The republic proclaimed by the National Assembly, the sole legitimate republic, is a republic which is no revolutionary weapon against the bourgeois order, but rather its political reconstitution, the political reconsolidation of bourgeois society, in a word, a bourgeois republic. This contention resounded from the tribune of the National Assembly, and in the entire republican and anti-republican bourgeois press it found its echo.
Page me10.66

And we have seen how the February republic in reality was not and could not be other than a bourgeois republic; how the Provisional Government, nevertheless, was forced by the immediate pressure of the proletariat to announce it as a republic with social institutions; how the Paris proletariat was still incapable of going beyond the bourgeois republic otherwise than in its fancy, in imagination; how everywhere it acted in its service when it really came to action; how the promises made to it became an unbearable danger for the new republic; how the whole life process of the Provisional Government was comprised in a continuous fight against the demands of the proletariat.
Page me10.66

In the National Assembly all France sat in judgment upon the Paris proletariat. The Assembly broke immediately with the social illusions of the February Revolution; it roundly proclaimed the bourgeois republic, nothing but the bourgeois republic. It at once excluded the representatives of the proletariat, Louis Blanc and Albert, from the Executive Commission†78 appointed by it; it threw out the proposal for a special Labour Ministry, and received with acclamation the statement of the Minister Trélat: “Now it is only a matter of leading labour back to its old conditions.”†a
Page me10.66

But all this was not enough. The February republic was won by the workers with the passive support of the bourgeoisie. The proletarians rightly regarded themselves as the victors of February, and they made the arrogant claims of victors. They had to be vanquished in the streets, they had to be shown that they were worsted as soon as they did not fight with the bourgeoisie, but against the bourgeoisie. Just as the February republic, with its socialist concessions, required a battle of the proletariat, united with the bourgeoisie, against the monarchy, so a second battle was necessary in order to sever the republic from the socialist concessions, in order to officially work out the bourgeois republic as dominant. The bourgeoisie had to refute, arms in hand, the demands of the proletariat. And the real birthplace of the bourgeois republic is not the February victory; it is the June defeat.

Page Break me10.67

Page me10.67

The proletariat hastened the decision when, on the 15th of May, it pushed its way into the National Assembly, sought in vain to recapture its revolutionary influence and only delivered its energetic leaders to the jailers of the bourgeoisie.†79 Il faut en finir! This situation must end! With this cry the National Assembly gave vent to its determination to force the proletariat into a decisive struggle. The Executive Commission issued a series of provocative decrees, such as that prohibiting congregations of people,†80 etc. The workers were directly provoked, insulted and derided from the tribune of the Constituent National Assembly. But the real point of the attack was, as we have seen, the national ateliers. The Constituent Assembly imperiously pointed these out to the Executive Commission, which only waited to hear its own plan proclaimed the command of the National Assembly.

Page me10.67

The Executive Commission began by making admission to the national ateliers more difficult, by turning the day wage into a piece wage, by banishing workers not born in Paris to Sologne, ostensibly for the construction of earthworks. These earthworks were only a rhetorical formula with which to embellish their exile, as the workers, returning disillusioned, announced to their comrades. Finally, on June 21, a decree appeared in the Moniteur which ordered the forcible expulsion of all unmarried workers from the national ateliers or their enrolment in the army.†81

Page me10.67

The workers were left no choice; they had to starve or take action. They answered on June 22 with the tremendous insurrection in which the first great battle was fought between the two classes that split modern society. It was a fight for the preservation or annihilation of the bourgeois order. The veil that shrouded the republic was torn asunder.

Page me10.67

It is well known how the workers, with unexampled bravery and ingenuity, without leaders, without a common plan, without means and, for the most part, lacking weapons, held in check for five days the army, the Mobile Guard, the Paris National Guard, and the

Page Break me10.68

National Guard that streamed in from the provinces. It is well known how the bourgeoisie compensated itself for the mortal anguish it suffered by unheard-of brutality, massacring over 3,000 prisoners.

Page me10.68

The official representatives of French democracy were steeped in republican ideology to such an extent that it was only some weeks later that the significance of the June fight began to dawn on them. They were stupefied by the gunpowder smoke in which their fantastic republic dissolved.

Page me10.68

The immediate impression which the news of the June defeat made on us, the reader will allow us to describe in the words of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung†a:

Page me10.68

"The Executive Committee, that last official vestige of the February revolution, vanished like a ghost in the face of these grave events. Lamartine's fireworks have turned into the incendiary rockets of Cavaignac. Fraternité, the brotherhood of antagonistic classes, one of which exploits the other, this fraternité which in February was proclaimed and inscribed in large letters on the façades of Paris, on every prison and every barracks — this fraternité found its true, unadulterated and prosaic expression in civil war, civil war in its most terrible aspect, the war of labour against capital. This brotherhood blazed in front of all the windows of Paris on the evening of June 25, when the Paris of the bourgeoisie held illuminations while the Paris of the proletariat was burning, bleeding, groaning in the throes of death. This brotherhood lasted only as long as there was a fraternity of interests between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat.

Page me10.68

"Pedants sticking to the old revolutionary tradition of 1793; socialist doctrinaires who begged alms for the people from the bourgeoisie and who were allowed to deliver lengthy sermons and compromise themselves so long as the proletarian lion had to be lulled to sleep; republicans who wanted to keep the old bourgeois order in toto, but without the crowned head; members of the dynastic opposition on whom chance imposed the task of bringing about the downfall of a dynasty instead of a change of government; legitimists, who did not want to cast off their livery but merely to change its style — these were the allies with whom the people had fought their February revolution....

Page me10.68

"The February revolution was the nice revolution, the revolution of universal sympathies, because the contradictions which erupted in it against the monarchy were still undeveloped and peacefully dormant, because the social struggle which formed their background had only achieved a nebulous existence, an existence in phrases, in words. The June revolution is the ugly revolution, the nasty revolution, because the phrases have given place to the real thing, because the republic has bared the head of the monster by knocking off the crown which shielded and concealed it. — Order! was Guizot's war-cry. Order! shouted Sébastiani, the Guizotist, when Warsaw became Russian. Order! shouts Cavaignac, the brutal echo of the French National Assembly and of the republican bourgeoisie. Order! thundered his grape-shot as it tore into the body of the proletariat. None of the numerous revolutions of the French bourgeoisie since 1789 assailed the existing order, for they retained the class rule, the slavery of the workers, the bourgeois order, even though the political form of this rule and this slavery changed frequently. The June uprising did assail this order. Woe to the June uprising!" (N. Rh. Z., June 29, 1848.)

Page Break me10.69

Page me10.69

Woe to June! re-echoes Europe.

Page me10.69

The Paris proletariat was forced into the June insurrection by the bourgeoisie. This sufficed to mark its doom. Its immediate, avowed needs did not drive it to engage in a fight for the forcible overthrow of the bourgeoisie, nor was it equal to this task. The Moniteur had to inform it officially that the time was past when the republic saw any occasion to bow and scrape to its illusions, and only its defeat convinced it of the truth that the slightest improvement in its position remains a utopia within the bourgeois republic, a utopia that becomes a crime as soon as it wants to become a reality. In place of its demands, exuberant in form, but petty and even bourgeois still in content, the concession of which it wanted to wring from the February republic, there appeared the bold slogan of revolutionary struggle: Overthrow of the bourgeoisie! Dictatorship of the working class!

Page me10.69

By making its burial place the birthplace of the bourgeois republic, the proletariat compelled the latter to come out forthwith in its pure form as the state whose admitted object it is to perpetuate the rule of capital, the slavery of labour. Having constantly before its eyes the scarred, irreconcilable, invincible enemy — invincible because his existence is the condition of its own life — bourgeois rule, freed from all fetters, was bound to turn immediately into bourgeois terrorism. With the proletariat removed for the time being from the stage and bourgeois dictatorship recognised officially, the middle strata of bourgeois society, the petty bourgeoisie and the peasant class, had to adhere more and more closely to the proletariat as their position became more unbearable and their antagonism to the bourgeoisie more acute. Just as earlier they had to find the cause of their distress in its upsurge, so now in its defeat.

Page Break me10.70

Page me10.70

If the June insurrection raised the self-assurance of the bourgeoisie all over the Continent, and caused it to league itself openly with the feudal monarchy against the people, who was the first victim of this alliance? The Continental bourgeoisie itself. The June defeat prevented it from consolidating its rule and from bringing the people, half satisfied and half out of humour, to a standstill at the lowest stage of the bourgeois revolution.

Page me10.70

Finally, the defeat of June divulged to the despotic powers of Europe the secret that France must maintain peace abroad at any price in order to be able to wage civil war at home. Thus the peoples who had begun the fight for their national independence were abandoned to the superior power of Russia, Austria and Prussia, but, at the same time, the fate of these national revolutions was made subject to the fate of the proletarian revolution, and they were robbed of their apparent autonomy, their independence of the great social revolution. The Hungarian shall not be free, nor the Pole, nor the Italian, as long as the worker remains a slave!

Page me10.70

Finally, with the victories of the Holy Alliance, Europe has taken on a form in which every fresh proletarian upheaval in France directly involves a world war. The new French revolution is forced to leave its national soil forthwith and conquer the European terrain, on which alone the social revolution of the nineteenth century can be accomplished.

Page me10.70
Thus only the June defeat has created all the conditions under which France can seize the initiative of the European revolution. Only after being dipped in the blood of the June insurgents did the tricolour become the flag of the European revolution — the red flag!
Page me10.70
And we exclaim: The revolution is dead! — Long live the revolution!

Page Break me10.71

II

JUNE 13, 1849

Page me10.71
February 25, 1848, had granted the republic to France, June 25 thrust the revolution upon her. And revolution, after June, meant: overthrow of bourgeois society, whereas before February it had meant: overthrow of the form of government.
Page me10.71
The June fight had been led by the republican faction of the bourgeoisie; with victory political power necessarily fell to its share. The state of siege laid gagged Paris unresisting at its feet, and in the provinces there prevailed a moral state of siege, the threatening, brutal arrogance of victory of the bourgeoisie and the unleashed property fanaticism of the peasants. No danger, therefore, from below!
Page me10.71
The collapse of the revolutionary might of the workers was also a collapse of the political influence of the democratic republicans, that is, of the republicans in the sense of the petty bourgeoisie, represented in the Executive Commission by Ledru-Rollin, in the Constituent National Assembly by the party of the Montagne and in the press by the Réforme.†82 Together with the bourgeois republicans they had conspired on April 16 against the proletariat, together with them they had warred against it in the June days. Thus they themselves blasted the background against which their party stood out as a power, for the petty bourgeoisie can preserve a revolutionary attitude toward the bourgeoisie only as long as it has the backing of the proletariat. They were dismissed. The sham alliance concluded with them reluctantly and secretly during the epoch of the Provisional Government and the Executive Commission was openly broken by the bourgeois republicans. Spurned and repulsed as allies, they sank down to subordinate henchmen of the tricolour-men, from whom they could not wring any concessions, but whose domination they had to support whenever it, and with it the republic, seemed to be put in jeopardy by the anti-republican bourgeois factions. Lastly, these factions, the Orleanists and the Legitimists, were from the very beginning in a minority in the Constituent National Assembly. Before the June days, they dared to react only under the mask of bourgeois republicanism; the June victory made for a moment the whole of bourgeois France greet its saviour in Cavaignac, and when, shortly after the June days, the anti-republican party regained independence, the military dictatorship and the state of siege in Paris permitted it to put out its antennae only very timidly and cautiously.

Page Break me10.72

Page me10.72

Since 1830, the bourgeois republican faction, in the person of its writers, its spokesmen, its men of talent and ambition, its deputies, generals, bankers and lawyers, had grouped itself round a Parisian journal, the National. In the provinces this journal had its branch newspapers. The coterie of the National was the dynasty of the tricolour republic. It immediately took possession of all state dignities, of the ministries, the prefecture of police, the post-office directorship, the positions of prefect, the higher army officers' posts now become vacant. At the head of the executive power stood its general, Cavaignac; its editor-in-chief, Marrast, became permanent President of the Constituent National Assembly. As master of ceremonies he at the same time did the honours, in his salons, of the respectable republic.
Page me10.72

Even revolutionary French writers, awed, as it were, by the republican tradition, have strengthened the mistaken belief that the royalists dominated the Constituent National Assembly. On the contrary, after the June days, the Constituent Assembly remained the exclusive representative of bourgeois republicanism, and it emphasised this aspect all the more resolutely, the more the influence of the tricolour republicans collapsed outside the Assembly. If the question was one of maintaining the form of the bourgeois republic, then the Assembly had the votes of the democratic republicans at its disposal; if one of maintaining the content, then even its mode of speech no longer separated it from the royalist bourgeois factions, for it is the interests of the bourgeoisie, the material conditions of its class rule and class exploitation, that form the content of the bourgeois republic.
Page me10.72

Thus it was not royalism but bourgeois republicanism that was realised in the life and work of this Constituent Assembly, which in the end did not die, nor was killed, but decayed.
Page me10.72

For the entire duration of its rule, as long as it gave its grand performance of state on the proscenium,†83 an unbroken sacrificial feast was being staged in the background — the continual sentencing by courts-martial of the captured June insurgents or their deportation without trial. The Constituent Assembly had the tact to admit that in the June insurgents it was not judging criminals but wiping out enemies.

Page Break me10.73
Page me10.73

The first act of the Constituent National Assembly was the setting up of a commission of enquiry into the events of June and of May 15, and into the part played by the socialist and democratic party leaders during these days. The enquiry was directly aimed at Louis Blanc, Ledru-Rollin and Caussidiére. The bourgeois republicans burned with impatience to rid themselves of these rivals. They could have entrusted the venting of their spleen to no more suitable subject than M. Odilon Barrot, the former chief of the dynastic opposition, the incarnation of liberalism, the nullité grave,†a the thoroughly shallow person who not only had a dynasty to revenge, but even had to settle accounts with the revolutionists for thwarting his premiership. A sure guarantee of his relentlessness. This Barrot was, therefore, appointed chairman of the commission of enquiry, and he constructed a complete legal process against the February Revolution, which process may be summarised thus: March 17, demonstration; April 16, conspiracy; May 15, attempt; June 23, civil war! Why did he not stretch his erudite criminologist's researches as far back as February 24? The Journal des Débats answered†b: February 24 — that is the foundation of Rome. The origin of states gets lost in a myth, in which one may believe, but which one may not discuss. Louis Blanc and Caussidiére were handed over to the courts. The National Assembly completed the work of purging itself which it had begun on May 15.

Page me10.73

The plan formed by the Provisional Government, and again taken up by Goudchaux, of taxing capital — in the form of a mortgage tax — was rejected by the Constituent Assembly; the law that limited the working day to ten hours was repealed; imprisonment for debt was once more introduced; the large section of the French population that can neither read nor write was excluded from jury service. Why not from the franchise also? Journals again had to deposit caution money; the right of association was restricted.

Page me10.73

But in their haste to give back to the old bourgeois relationships their old guarantees, and to wipe out every trace left behind by the waves of the revolution, the bourgeois republicans encountered a resistance which threatened them with unexpected danger.

Page Break me10.74

Page me10.74

No one had fought more fanatically in the June days for the salvation of property and the restoration of credit than the Parisian petty bourgeois — keepers of cafés and restaurants, marchands de vins, small traders, shopkeepers, handicraftsmen, etc. The shopkeeper had pulled himself together and marched against the barricades in order to restore the traffic which leads from the road into the shop. But behind the barricade stood the customers and the debtors; before it the shop's creditors. And when the barricades were thrown down and the workers were crushed and the shopkeepers, drunk with victory, rushed back to their shops, they found the entrance barred by a saviour of property, an official agent of credit, who presented them with threatening notices: Overdue promissory note! Overdue house rent! Overdue bond! Doomed shop! Doomed shopkeeper!

Page me10.74

Salvation of property! But the house in which they lived was not their property; the shop which they kept was not their property; the commodities in which they dealt were not their property. Neither their business, nor the plate from which they ate, nor the bed on which they slept belonged to them any longer. It was precisely from them that this property had to be saved — for the houseowner who let the house, for the banker who discounted the promissory note, for the capitalist who made the advances in cash, for the manufacturer who entrusted the sale of his commodities to these retailers, for the wholesale dealer who had credited the raw materials to these handicraftsmen. Restoration of credit! But credit, having regained strength, proved itself a vigorous and jealous god, for it turned out the debtor who could not pay out of his four walls, together with wife and child, surrendered his sham property to capital, and threw the man himself into the debtors' prison, which had once more reared its head threateningly over the corpses of the June insurgents.

Page me10.74

The petty bourgeois saw with horror that by striking down the workers they had delivered themselves without resistance into the hands of their creditors. Their bankruptcy, which since February had been dragging on in chronic fashion and had been apparently ignored, was openly declared after June.

Page me10.74

Their nominal property had been left unassailed as long as it was of consequence to drive them to the battlefield in the name of property. Now that the great issue with the proletariat had been settled, the small matter of the épicier could be settled as well. In Paris the mass of overdue paper amounted to over 21,000,000 francs; in the provinces to over 11,000,000. The proprietors of more than 7,000 Paris firms had not paid their rent since February.

Page Break me10.75

Page me10.75

While the National Assembly had instituted an enquête into the political guilt, going right up to February, the petty bourgeois, on their part, now demanded an enquête into the civil debts up to February 24. They assembled en masse in the Bourse hall and threateningly demanded, on behalf of every businessman who could prove that his insolvency was due solely to the stagnation caused by the revolution and that his business had been in good condition on February 24, an extension of the term of payment by order of a commerce court and the compulsory liquidation of creditors' claims in consideration of a moderate percentage payment. As a legislative proposal, this question was dealt with in the National Assembly in the form of “concordats á l'amiable”. The Assembly vacillated; then it suddenly learnt that, at the same time at the Porte St. Denis, thousands of wives and children of the insurgents had prepared an amnesty petition.

Page me10.75

In the presence of the resurrected spectre of June, the petty bourgeoisie trembled and the Assembly retrieved its implacability. The concordats á l'amiable, the amicable settlement between debtor and creditor, was rejected in its most essential points.

Page me10.75

Thus, long after the democratic representatives of the petty bourgeois had been repulsed within the National Assembly by the republican representatives of the bourgeoisie, this parliamentary breach received its bourgeois, its real economic meaning by the petty bourgeois as debtors being handed over to the bourgeois as creditors. A large part of the former were completely ruined and the remainder were allowed to continue their businesses only under conditions which made them absolute serfs of capital. On August 22, 1848, the National Assembly rejected the concordats á l'amiable; on September 19, 1848, in the midst of the state of siege, Prince Louis Bonaparte and the prisoner of Vincennes, the Communist Raspail, were elected representatives of Paris.†84 The bourgeoisie, however, elected the Jewish money-changer and Orleanist Fould. From all sides at once, therefore, open declaration of war against the Constituent National Assembly, against bourgeois republicanism, against Cavaignac.

Page me10.75

It needs no argument to show how the mass bankruptcy of the Paris petty bourgeois was bound to produce after-effects far transcending the circle of its immediate victims, and to convulse bourgeois commerce once more, while the state deficit was swollen anew by the costs of the June insurrection, and state revenues sank continuously through the hold-up of production, the restricted consumption and the decreasing imports. Cavaignac and the National Assembly could have recourse to no other expedient than a new loan, which forced them still further under the yoke of the finance aristocracy.

Page Break me10.76
Page me10.76

While the petty bourgeois had harvested bankruptcy and liquidation by order of court as the fruit of the June victory, Cavaignac's Janissaries, the Mobile Guards, found their reward in the soft arms of the courtesans, and as “the youthful saviours of society” they received all kinds of homage in the salons of Marrast, the gentilhomme of the tricolour, who at the same time served as the Amphitryon and the troubadour of the respectable republic. Meanwhile, this social favouritism and the disproportionately higher pay of the Mobile Guard embittered the Army, while at the same time all those national illusions vanished with which bourgeois republicanism, through its journal, the National, had been able to attach to itself a part of the army and peasant class under Louis Philippe. The role of mediator which Cavaignac and the National Assembly played in North Italy in order, together with England, to betray it to Austria — this one day of rule destroyed eighteen years of opposition on the part of the National. No government was less national than that of the National, none more dependent on England, and, under Louis Philippe, the National lived by paraphrasing daily Cato's dictum: Carthaginem esse delendam†a; none was more servile towards the Holy Alliance, and from a Guizot the National had demanded the tearing up of the Treaties of Vienna.†85 The irony of history made Bastide, the ex-editor for foreign affairs of the National, Minister of Foreign Affairs of France, so that he might refute every one of his articles in every one of his dispatches.
Page me10.76

For a moment, the army and the peasant class had believed that, simultaneously with the military dictatorship, war abroad and “gloire” had been placed on the order of the day in France. But Cavaignac was not the dictatorship of the sabre over bourgeois society; he was the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie by the sabre. And of the soldier they now required only the gendarme. Under the stern features of antique-republican resignation Cavaignac concealed humdrum submission to the humiliating conditions of his bourgeois office. L'argent n'a pas de maître! Money has no master! He, as well as the Constituent Assembly in general, idealised this old election cry of the tiers état by translating it into political speech: The bourgeoisie has no king; the true form of its rule is the republic.

Page Break me10.77
Page me10.77

And the “great organic work” of the Constituent National Assembly consisted in working out this form, in producing a republican constitution. The re-christening of the Christian calendar as a republican one, of the saintly Bartholomew as the saintly Robespierre, made no more change in the wind and weather than this constitution made or was supposed to make in bourgeois society. Where it went beyond a change of costume, it put on record the existing facts. Thus it solemnly registered the fact of the republic, the fact of universal suffrage, the fact of a single sovereign National Assembly in place of two limited constitutional chambers. Thus it registered and settled the fact of the dictatorship of Cavaignac by replacing the stationary, non-responsible, hereditary monarchy with an ambulatory, responsible, elective monarchy, with a quadrennial presidency. Thus it elevated no less to an organic law the fact of the extraordinary powers with which the National Assembly, after the horrors of May 15 and June 25, had providently invested its President in the interest of its own security. The remainder of the constitution was a work of terminology. The royalist labels were torn off the mechanism of the old monarchy and republican labels stuck on. Marrast, former editor-in-chief of the National, now editor-in-chief of the constitution, acquitted himself of this academic task not without talent.

Page me10.77

The Constituent Assembly resembled that Chilean official who wanted to regulate property relations in land more firmly by a cadastral survey just at the moment when subterranean rumblings already announced the volcanic eruption that was to pull away the ground from under his very feet. While in theory it demarcated the forms in which the rule of the bourgeoisie found republican expression, in reality it held its own only by the abolition of all formulas, by force sans phrase, by the state of siege. Two days before it began its work on the constitution, it proclaimed a prolongation of the state of siege. Formerly, constitutions had been made and adopted as soon as the process of social revolution had reached a point of rest, the newly formed class relationships had established themselves and the contending factions of the ruling class had had recourse to a compromise which allowed them to continue the struggle among themselves and at the same time to keep the exhausted masses of the people out of it. This constitution, on the contrary, did not sanction any social revolution; it sanctioned the momentary victory of the old society over the revolution.

Page me10.77

The first draft of the constitution,†86 made before the June days, still contained the “droit au travail”, the right to work, the first clumsy formula wherein the revolutionary demands of the proletariat are summarised. It was transformed into the droit á l'assistance, the right to public relief, and what modern state does not feed its paupers in some way or other? The right to work is, in the bourgeois sense, an absurdity, a miserable, pious wish. But behind the right to work stands the power over capital; behind the power over capital, the appropriation of the means of production, their subjection to the associated working class and, therefore, the abolition of wage labour, of capital and of their mutual relations. Behind the “right to work” stood the June insurrection. The Constituent Assembly, which in fact put the revolutionary proletariat hors la loi, outside the law, had on principle to throw the proletariat's formula out of the constitution, the law of laws, had to pronounce its anathema upon the “right to work”. But it did not stop there. As Plato banned the poets from his republic,†a so it banished for ever from its republic — the progressive tax. And the progressive tax is not only a bourgeois measure, which can be carried out within the existing relations of production to a greater or less degree; it was the only means of binding the middle strata of bourgeois society to the “respectable” republic, of reducing the state debt, of holding the anti-republican majority of the bourgeoisie in check.

Page Break me10.78

Page me10.78

In the matter of the concordats á l'amiable, the tricolour republicans had actually sacrificed the petty bourgeoisie to the big bourgeoisie. They elevated this isolated fact to a principle by the legal prohibition of a progressive tax. They put bourgeois reform on the same level as proletarian revolution. But what class then remained as the mainstay of their republic? The big bourgeoisie. And its mass was anti-republican. While it exploited the republicans of the National in order to consolidate once again the old economic conditions, it thought, on the other hand, of exploiting the once more consolidated social relations in order to restore the political forms that corresponded to them. Already at the beginning of October, Cavaignac felt compelled to make Dufaure and Vivien, previously ministers of Louis Philippe, ministers of the republic, however much the brainless puritans of his own party growled and blustered.
Page me10.78

While the tricolour constitution rejected every compromise with the petty bourgeoisie and was unable to win the attachment of any new social element to the new form of government, it hastened, on the other hand, to restore its traditional inviolability to a body that constituted the most hard-bitten and fanatical defender of the old state. It raised the irremovability of judges, which had been questioned by the Provisional Government, to an organic law. The one king whom it had removed rose again, by the score, in these irremovable inquisitors of legality.

Page Break me10.79
Page me10.79

The French press has analysed from numerous aspects the contradictions of M. Marrast's constitution; for example, the coexistence of two sovereigns, the National Assembly and the President, etc., etc.
Page me10.79

The fundamental contradiction of this constitution, however, consists in the following: The classes whose social slavery the constitution is to perpetuate, proletariat, peasantry, petty bourgeoisie, it puts in possession of political power through universal suffrage. And from the class whose old social power it sanctions, the bourgeoisie, it withdraws the political guarantees of this power. It forces the political rule of the bourgeoisie into democratic conditions, which at every moment help the hostile classes to victory and jeopardise the very foundations of bourgeois society. From the ones it demands that they should not go forward from political to social emancipation; from the others that they should not go back from social to political restoration.
Page me10.79

These contradictions perturbed the bourgeois republicans little. To the extent that they ceased to be indispensable — and they were indispensable only as the protagonists of the old society against the revolutionary proletariat — they fell, a few weeks after their victory, from the position of a party to that of a coterie. And they treated the constitution as a big intrigue. What was to be constituted in it was, above all, the rule of the coterie. The President was to be a protracted Cavaignac; the Legislative Assembly a protracted Constituent Assembly. They hoped to reduce the political power of the masses of the people to a semblance of power, and to be able to make sufficient play with this sham power itself to keep continually hanging over the majority of the bourgeoisie the dilemma of the June days: realm of the "National" or realm of anarchy.
Page me10.79

The work on the constitution, which was begun on September 4, was finished on October 23. On September 2 the Constituent Assembly had decided not to dissolve until the organic laws supplementing the constitution were enacted. Nonetheless, it now decided to bring to life the creation that was most peculiarly its own, the President, already on December 10, long before the circle of its own activity was closed. So sure was it of hailing, in the homunculus of the constitution, the son of his mother. As a precaution it was provided that if none of the candidates received two million votes, the election should pass over from the nation to the Constituent Assembly.

Page Break me10.80
Page me10.80

Futile provisions! The first day of the realisation of the constitution was the last day of the rule of the Constituent Assembly. In the abyss of the ballot box lay its sentence of death. It sought the "son of his mother" and found the "nephew of his uncle". Saul Cavaignac slew one million votes, but David Napoleon slew six million. Saul Cavaignac was beaten six times over.
Page me10.80

December 10, 1848, was the day of the peasant insurrection. Only from this day does the February of the French peasants date. The symbol that expressed their entry into the revolutionary movement, clumsily cunning, knavishly naive, doltishly sublime, a calculated superstition, a pathetic burlesque, a cleverly stupid anachronism, a world-historic piece of buffoonery and an undecipherable hieroglyphic for the understanding of the civilised — this symbol bore the unmistakable physiognomy of the class that represents barbarism within civilisation. The republic had announced itself to this class with the tax-collector; it announced itself to the republic with the Emperor. Napoleon was the only man who had exhaustively represented the interests and the imagination of the peasant class, newly created in 1789. By writing his name on the frontispiece of the republic, it declared war abroad and the enforcing of its class interests at home. Napoleon was to the peasants not a person but a programme. With banners, with beat of drums and blare of trumpets, they marched to the polling booths shouting: plus d'impôts, á bas les riches, á bas la république, vive l'Empereur! No more taxes, down with the rich, down with the republic, long live the Emperor! Behind the Emperor was hidden the peasant war. The republic that they voted down was the republic of the rich.
Page me10.80

December 10 was the coup d'état of the peasants, which overthrew the existing government. And from that day on, when they had taken a government from France and given a government to her, their eyes were fixed steadily on Paris. For a moment active heroes of the revolutionary drama, they could no longer be forced back into the inactive and spineless role of the chorus.
Page me10.80

The other classes helped to complete the election victory of the peasants. To the proletariat, the election of Napoleon meant the deposition of Cavaignac, the overthrow of the Constituent Assembly, the dismissal of bourgeois republicanism, the cassation of the June victory. To the petty bourgeoisie, Napoleon meant the rule of the debtor over the creditor. For the majority of the big bourgeoisie, the election of Napoleon meant an open breach with the faction of which it had had to make use, for a moment, against the revolution, but which became intolerable to it as soon as this faction sought to consolidate the position of the moment into a constitutional position.

Page Break me10.81
Napoleon in place of Cavaignac meant to this majority the monarchy in place of the republic, the beginning of the royalist restoration, a shy hint at Orleans, the lily hidden beneath the violets.†87 Lastly, the army voted for Napoleon against the Mobile Guard, against the peace idyll, for war.
Page me10.81

Thus it happened, as the Neue Rheinische Zeitung stated, that the most simple-minded man in France acquired the most multiplex significance.†a Just because he was nothing, he could signify everything save himself. Meanwhile, different as the meaning of the name Napoleon might be in the mouths of the different classes, with this name each class wrote on its ballot: Down with the party of the National, down with Cavaignac, down with the Constituent Assembly, down with the bourgeois republic. Minister Dufaure publicly declared in the Constituent Assembly: December 10 is a second February 24.
Page me10.81

Petty bourgeoisie and proletariat had voted en bloc for Napoleon, in order to vote against Cavaignac and, by pooling their votes, to wrest the final decision from the Constituent Assembly. The more advanced sections of the two classes, however, put forward their own candidates. Napoleon was the collective name of all parties in coalition against the bourgeois republic; Ledru-Rollin and Raspail were the proper names, the former of the democratic petty bourgeoisie, the latter of the revolutionary proletariat. The votes for Raspail — the proletarians and their socialist spokesmen declared it loudly — were to be merely a demonstration, so many protests against any presidency, that is, against the constitution itself, so many votes against Ledru-Rollin, the first act by which the proletariat, as an independent political party, declared its separation from the democratic party. This party, on the other hand — the democratic petty bourgeoisie and its parliamentary representative, the Montagne — treated the candidature of Ledru-Rollin with all the seriousness with which it is in the habit of solemnly duping itself. For the rest, this was its last attempt to set itself up as an independent party, as against the proletariat. Not only the republican bourgeois party, but also the democratic petty bourgeoisie and its Montagne were beaten on December 10.

Page me10.81

France now possessed a Napoleon side by side with a Montagne, proof that both were only the lifeless caricatures of the great realities whose names they bore. Louis Napoleon, with the emperor's hat and the eagle, parodied the old Napoleon no more miserably than the Montagne, with its phrases borrowed from 1793 and its demagogic poses, parodied the old Montagne. Thus the traditional 1793 superstition was stripped off at the same time as the traditional Napoleon superstition. The revolution had come into its own only when it had won its own, its original name, and it could do that only when the modern revolutionary class, the industrial proletariat, came dominatingly into its foreground. One can say that December 10 dumbfounded the Montagne and caused it to grow confused in its own mind, if for no other reason than because that day laughingly cut short with a contemptuous peasant jest the classical analogy to the old revolution.

Page Break me10.82

Page me10.82

On December 20, Cavaignac laid down his office and the Constituent Assembly proclaimed Louis Napoleon President of the Republic. On December 19, the last day of its sole rule, it rejected the proposal of amnesty for the June insurgents. Would revoking the decree of June 27, under which it had condemned 15,000 insurgents to deportation without judicial sentence, not have meant revoking the June battle itself?

Page me10.82

Odilon Barrot, the last minister of Louis Philippe, became the first minister of Louis Napoleon. Just as Louis Napoleon dated his rule, not from December 10, but from a decree of the Senate of 1804, so he found a prime minister who did not date his ministry from December 20, but from a royal decree of February 24.†88 As the legitimate heir of Louis Philippe, Louis Napoleon moderated the change of government by retaining the old ministry, which, moreover, had not had time to wear itself out, since it had not found time to embark upon life.

Page me10.82

The leaders of the royalist bourgeois factions advised him in this choice. The head of the old dynastic opposition, who had unconsciously effected the transition to the republicans of the National, was still more fitted to effect with full consciousness the transition from the bourgeois republic to the monarchy.

Page me10.82

Odilon Barrot was the leader of the one old opposition party which, always fruitlessly struggling for the ministerial portfolio, was not yet used up. In rapid succession the revolution hurled all the old opposition parties to the top of the state, so that they would have to deny, to repudiate their old phrases not only in deeds but even in words, and might finally be flung all together, combined in a repulsive commixture, on the dung heap of history by the people. And no apostasy was spared this Barrot, this incarnation of bourgeois liberalism, who for eighteen years had hidden the rascally

Page Break me10.83

vacuity of his mind behind the serious demeanour of his body.†a If, at certain moments, the far too striking contrast between the thistles of the present and the laurels of the past startled the man himself, one glance in the mirror gave him back his ministerial composure and human self-admiration. What beamed at him from the mirror was Guizot, whom he had always envied, who had always mastered him, Guizot himself, but Guizot with the Olympian forehead of Odilon. What he overlooked were the ears of Midas.

Page me10.83

The Barrot of February 24 first became manifest in the Barrot of December 20. Associated with him, the Orleanist and Voltairian, was the Legitimist and Jesuit Falloux, as Minister of Religious Affairs.
Page me10.83

A few days later, the Ministry of the Interior was given to Léon Faucher, the Malthusian. Law, religion and political economy! The ministry of Barrot contained all this and, in addition, a combination of Legitimists and Orleanists. Only the Bonapartist was lacking. Bonaparte still hid his longing to signify Napoleon, for Soulouque did not yet play Toussaint-Louverture.
Page me10.83

The party of the National was immediately relieved of all the higher posts, where it had entrenched itself. The Prefecture of Police, the office of the Director of the Post, the office of the Procurator-General, the Mairie of Paris, were all filled with old creatures of the monarchy. Changarnier, the Legitimist, received the unified supreme command of the National Guard of the Department of the Seine, of the Mobile Guard and the troops of the line of the first military division; Bugeaud, the Orleanist, was appointed commander-in-chief of the Alpine army. This change of officials continued uninterruptedly under the Barrot government. The first act of his ministry was the restoration of the old royalist administration. The official scene was transformed in a trice — scenery, costumes, speech, actors, supers, mutes, prompters, the position of the parties, the theme of the drama, the content of the conflict, the whole situation. Only the premundane Constituent Assembly still remained in its place. But from the hour when the National Assembly had installed Bonaparte, Bonaparte Barrot and Barrot Changarnier, France stepped out of the period of the republican constitution into the period of the constituted republic. And what place was there for a Constituent Assembly in a constituted republic? After the earth had been created, there was nothing else for its creator to do but to flee to heaven. The Constituent Assembly was determined not to follow his example; the National Assembly was the last asylum of the party of the bourgeois republicans. If all levers of executive power had been wrested from it, was there not left to it constituent omnipotence? Its first thought was to hold under all circumstances the position of sovereignty that it occupied, and thence to reconquer the lost ground. Once the Barrot ministry was displaced by a ministry of the National, the royalist personnel would have to vacate the palaces of the administration forthwith and the tricolour personnel would move in again triumphantly. The National Assembly resolved on the overthrow of the ministry and the ministry itself offered an opportunity for the attack, than which the Constituent Assembly could not have invented a better.

Page Break me10.84
Page me10.84

It will be remembered that for the peasants Louis Bonaparte signified: No more taxes! Six days he sat in the President's chair, and on the seventh, on December 27, his ministry proposed the retention of the salt tax, the abolition of which the Provisional Government had decreed. The salt tax shares with the wine tax the privilege of being the scapegoat of the old French financial system, particularly in the eyes of the countryfolk. The Barrot ministry could not have put into the mouth of the choice of the peasants a more mordant epigram on his electors than the words: Restoration of the salt tax! With the salt tax, Bonaparte lost his revolutionary salt — the Napoleon of the peasant insurrection dissolved like an apparition, and nothing remained but the great unknown of royalist bourgeois intrigue. And not without intention did the Barrot ministry make this act of tactlessly rude disillusionment the first governmental act of the President.
Page me10.84

The Constituent Assembly, on its part, seized eagerly on the double opportunity of overthrowing the ministry, and, as against the elect of the peasantry, of setting itself up as the representative of peasant interests. It rejected the proposal of the Finance Minister, reduced the salt tax to a third of its former amount, thus increasing by sixty millions a state deficit of five hundred and sixty millions, and, after this vote of no confidence, calmly awaited the resignation of the ministry. So little did it comprehend the new world that surrounded it and its own changed position. Behind the ministry stood the President and behind the President stood six millions, who had placed in the ballot box as many votes of no confidence in the Constituent Assembly. The Constituent Assembly gave the nation back its no confidence vote. Absurd exchange! It forgot that its votes were no longer legal tender. The rejection of the salt tax only matured the decision of Bonaparte and his ministry “to end” the Constituent Assembly. There began that long duel which lasted the entire latter half of the life of the Constituent Assembly. January 29, March 21 and May 8 are the journées, the great days of this crisis, just so many forerunners of June 13.

Page Break me10.85
Page me10.85

Frenchmen, for example Louis Blanc, have construed January 29 as the date of the emergence of a constitutional contradiction, the contradiction between a sovereign, indissoluble National Assembly born of universal suffrage, and a President who, to go by the wording, was responsible to the Assembly, but who, to go by reality, was not only similarly sanctioned by universal suffrage and, in addition, united in his own person all the votes that were split up a hundred times and distributed among the individual members of the National Assembly, but who was also in full possession of the whole executive power, above which the National Assembly hovered as a merely moral force. This interpretation of January 29 confuses the language of the struggle on the platform, through the press and in the clubs with its real content. Louis Bonaparte as against the Constituent National Assembly — that was not one unilateral constitutional power as against another; that was not the executive power as against the legislative; that was the constituted bourgeois republic itself as against the instruments of its constitution, as against the ambitious intrigues and ideological demands of the revolutionary faction of the bourgeoisie that had founded it and was now amazed to find that its constituted republic looked like a restored monarchy, and now desired forcibly to prolong the constituent period with its conditions, its illusions, its language and its personages and to prevent the mature bourgeois republic from emerging in its complete and peculiar form. As the Constituent National Assembly represented Cavaignac, who had fallen back into its midst, so Bonaparte represented the Legislative National Assembly that had not yet been divorced from him, that is, the National Assembly of the constituted bourgeois republic.

Page me10.85

The election of Bonaparte could only be understood by putting in the place of the one name its manifold meanings, by repeating itself in the election of the new National Assembly. The mandate of the old was annulled by December 10. Thus on January 29, it was not the President and the National Assembly of the same republic that were face to face; it was the National Assembly of the republic that was coming into being and the President of the republic that had come into being, two powers that embodied quite different periods in the life process of the republic; the one, the small republican faction of the bourgeoisie that alone could proclaim the republic, wrest it from the revolutionary proletariat by street fighting and a reign of terror, and draft its ideal basic features in the constitution; and the other, the whole royalist mass of the bourgeoisie that alone could rule in this constituted bourgeois republic, strip the constitution of its ideological trimmings, and realise by its legislation and administration the indispensable conditions for the subjugation of the proletariat.

Page Break me10.86

Page me10.86

