†e save that we shall jointly criticise the labour association as put into practice after February, and the Pages d'histoire (a reference to L. Blanc's Pages d'histoire de la révolution)
Page me38.303
†a That's worth, or shortly will be worth, an extra £5 a month, apart from future increments.
Page me38.303
†b See this volume, pp. 282, 284.
Page me38.303
†c Conrad Schramm
Page me38.303
†d cowardice
Page me38.303

†e i.e. Fraternal Democrats
Page me38.303
†f Harney
Page me38.304
†a convict sentenced to the galleys; murderer
Page me38.304
†b inciter to murder
Page me38.304
†c 'He's infamous, he must be crushed.'
Page me38.304
†d What's to be done?
Page me38.304
†e See this volume, pp. 287, 299.
Page me38.304
†f retinue
Page me38.305
†a See this volume, pp. 306, 311.
Page me38.305
†b so much the worse for him.
Page me38.305
†c Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.306
†a See this volume, pp. 297-98.
Page me38.307
†a representative of the people
Page me38.308
†a to call him to account
Page me38.308
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me38.308
†c See this volume, pp. 273, 282.
Page me38.309
†a Conrad Schramm and Wilhelm Pieper
Page me38.309
†b In the indictment the following is written over a passage omitted here: 'The following describes how L. Blanc won over his friend Harney with the progressive faction of the Chartists for his banquet.'
Page me38.310
†a The Communist League
Page me38.310
†b In the indictment the following is written over a passage omitted here: 'When, following this, the ill-treatment inflicted on these their friends, who both, according to the above, belonged to the League, has been described, the whole ends thus:'
Page me38.311
†a See this volume, p. 306.
Page me38.311

†b what can be done
Page me38.312
†a lost
Page me38.312
†b Come what may.
Page me38.312
†c more or less
Page me38.313
†a A slip of the pen in the original: February.
Page me38.313
†b F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times'.
Page me38.313
†c But that no longer concerns us.
Page me38.313
†d C. Schramm, 'To the Editor of The Friend of the People', The Friend of the People, No. 14, 15 March 1851 (a protest against the insulting attitude to him and Pieper at the meeting on 24 February 1851).
Page me38.313
†e La Patrie, No. 66, 7 March 1851.
Page me38.313
†f But that's not all.
Page me38.313
†g Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.313
†h Greek (here: cheat)
Page me38.314
†a philistines
Page me38.314
†b probably Marx's uncle Lion Philips of Zalt-Bommel
Page me38.314
†c desperate act
Page me38.314
†d Hermann Becker; see this volume, pp. 273, 282, 308.
Page me38.314
†e Conrad Schramm
Page me38.314
†f it will have its effect (the reference is to the English translation of L.A. Blanqui's toast 'Avies ou people')
Page me38.314
†g The Friend of the People
Page me38.314
†h F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times' (with an English translation of L.A. Blanqui's toast).
Page me38.315
†a Harney
Page me38.315

†b See this volume, p. 314.
Page me38.315
†c C. Schramm, 'To the Editor of The Friend of the People', The Friend of the People, No. 14, 15 March 1851.
Page me38.315
†d in a wrapper
Page me38.316
†a W.F.P. Napier, History of the War in the Peninsula and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to the Year 1814.
Page me38.316
†b Marcus Tullius Cicero, Epistolae.
Page me38.316
†c riddled with minor ailments
Page me38.317
†a See this volume, p. 314.
Page me38.317
†b Deutsche Schnellpost
Page me38.317
†c Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.317
†d i.e. deputies of the Prussian National Assembly of 1848 and the All-German National Assembly of 1848-49 in Frankfurt am Main
Page me38.317
†e i.e. Oskar Reichenbach, not Eduard Reichenbach
Page me38.317
†f Shits, I tell you, shits pure and simple, all this canaille.
Page me38.317
†g man of honour
Page me38.317
†h Greek (here: cheat)
Page me38.318
†a former captain
Page me38.318
†b La Patrie, No. 69, 10 March 1851.
Page me38.318
†c La Patrie, No. 71, 12 March 1851. On the statement of Blanqui and others see this volume, p. 313.
Page me38.318
†d 'We have often asked ourselves, and it is a difficult question to answer, whether the demagogues are notable more for their boastfulness or their stupidity. A fourth letter from London has increased our perplexity. There they are, we do not know how many poor wretches, who are so tormented by the longing to write and to see their names published in the reactionary press that they are undeterred even by the prospect of infinite humiliation and mortification. What do they care for the laughter and the indignation of the public — the Journal des Débats, the Assemblée nationale and the Patrie will publish their stylistic exercises; to achieve this no cost to the cause of cosmopolitan democracy can be too high.... In the name of literary commiseration we therefore include the following letter from “citizen” Barthélemy — it is a novel, and, we hope, the last proof of the authenticity of Blanqui's famous toast whose existence they first all denied and now fight among themselves for the right to acknowledge.' P. Mayer, [Comments on Barthélemy's letter,] La Patrie, No. 71, 12 March 1851.

Page me38.319
†a La Patrie, No. 69, 10 March 1851.
Page me38.319
†b The banquet held on 13 March 1851 to celebrate the anniversary of the revolution in Vienna on 13 March 1848 (The Daily News, 14 March 1851).
Page me38.320
†a there's sure to be someone prepared to nose about in that muck, even at the risk of being thrown out
Page me38.320
†b i.e. Willich's letters to Hermann Becker, see this volume, p. 314.
Page me38.320
†c Conrad Schramm
Page me38.320
†d great heavens
Page me38.320
†e Master-at-arms
Page me38.320
†f We will no longer tolerate sybarites.
Page me38.320
†g Explain that to me
Page me38.321
†a That's promising!
Page me38.321
†b See this volume, p. 319.
Page me38.321
†c Has received neither letter nor anything else from the Beckers and the Schramms.
Page me38.321
†d Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.321
†e the Committee for German Affairs
Page me38.322
†a G. Struve, Grundzüge der Staatswissenschaft, Bd. 1-4.
Page me38.322
†b K. Rotteck and K. Welcker, Das Staats-Lexikon.
Page me38.322
†c K. Rotteck, Allgemeine Weltgeschichte für alle Stände.
Page me38.323
†a Simon Bamberger
Page me38.323
†b Caroline von Westphalen

Page me38.323
†c Edgar von Westphalen
Page me38.324
†a Jenny Marx gave birth to a daughter Franziska on that day.
Page me38.324
†b literally
Page me38.324
†c Louis Bamberger
Page me38.324
†d How terrible!
Page me38.324
†e But that's not all.
Page me38.324
†f So much the worse for him.
Page me38.324
†g in a very few words
Page me38.325
†a The original has March.
Page me38.325
†b clear up
Page me38.325
†c advance payments
Page me38.325
†d cost what it may
Page me38.325
†e And having done that
Page me38.325
†f British Museum
Page me38.325
†g It's beginning to bore me. Basically
Page me38.325
†h 'Correspondence Relative to the Affairs of Hungary 1847-49'
Page me38.325
†i It would be most useful.
Page me38.326
†a She must be exploited.
Page me38.326
†b Franziska
Page me38.326
†c boy
Page me38.326
†d R. Daniels' manuscript 'Mikrokosmos. Entwurf einer physiologischen Anthropologie'.
Page me38.326
†e in the present circumstances
Page me38.326

†f more or less
Page me38.326
†g in view of
Page me38.327
†a it's still a far cry
Page me38.329
†a i.e., during Napoleon's invasion
Page me38.329
†b no more nor less
Page me38.329
†c glorious and undaunted courage
Page me38.329
†d he fought well
Page me38.329
†e until further orders
Page me38.329
†f F. Engels, 'Conditions and Prospects of a War of the Holy Alliance against France in 1852'.
Page me38.329
†g Frederick II
Page me38.329
†h at bottom
Page me38.329
†i what do you say to that?
Page me38.330
†a who is good enough for that
Page me38.330
†b British Museum
Page me38.330
†c See this volume, p. 326.
Page me38.330
†d R. Daniels' manuscript 'Mikrokosmos. Entwurf einer physiologischen Anthropologie'.
Page me38.330
†e if need be
Page me38.331
†a C. von Decker, La Petite guerre, ou Traité des opérations secondaires de la guerre (see this volume, pp. 405-06).
Page me38.331
†b Communist League
Page me38.332
†a F. Engels, 'Conditions and Prospects of a War of the Holy Alliance against France in 1852'.
Page me38.332
†b common sense
Page me38.332

†c A pun on the words musterhaft (exemplary) and meisterhaft (masterly).
Page me38.332
†d could not understand it
Page me38.333
†a W.F.P. Napier, History of the War in the Peninsula...
Page me38.333
†b As the soldier is, so are his politics.
Page me38.334
†a 'Paris, 2. Januar 1851', Die Republik der Arbeiter, No. 2, February 1851.
Page me38.334
†b Amalie Struve
Page me38.334
†c See K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Introduction to the Leaflet of L.A. Blanqui's Toast Sent to the Refugee Committee'.
Page me38.334
†d certificate of poverty
Page me38.334
†e Johann Philipp Becker
Page me38.335
†a in many respects
Page me38.336
†a Wilhelm Wolff (see this volume, p. 333)
Page me38.336
†b Let us not complain too much about our poor following.
Page me38.336
†c A.-J.-M.-R. Savary, Mémoires du duc de Rovigo...
Page me38.336
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.336
†e philistine
Page me38.337
†a In brief
Page me38.337
†b at bottom
Page me38.337
†c friends
Page me38.337
†d Alexander I
Page me38.337
†e A. Thiers, Histoire du Consulat et de l'Empire.
Page me38.337
†f in London in 1851
Page me38.337
†g Wilhelm I
Page me38.337
†h 'Köln, 24. April', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 99, second edition, 25 April 1851.

Page me38.337
†i poor
Page me38.338
†a Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me38.338
†b like a Prusso-bureaucratic Brutus
Page me38.338
†c with drums beating and flags flying
Page me38.338
†d no matter
Page me38.339
†a See this volume, pp. 339-41.
Page me38.339
†b i.e. members of the Central Authority of the Communist League in Cologne
Page me38.339
†c See this volume, p. 333.
Page me38.339
†d Illinois Staats-Zeitung
Page me38.339
†e Bernhard Höffgen
Page me38.340
†a Great Exhibition in 1851
Page me38.341
†a members of the Central Authority of the Communist League in Cologne
Page me38.341
†b See this volume, p. 339.
Page me38.342
†a members of the Central Authority of the Communist League in Cologne
Page me38.342
†b But the curious thing is
Page me38.342
†c We shall ask him for an explanation of this strange fact. At very best it is not a bright idea on this gnome's part.
Page me38.342
†d Hermann Becker
Page me38.343
†a So much the better for us!
Page me38.343
†b Hermann Becker
Page me38.343
†c Wilhelm Pieper
Page me38.343
†d Baroness Rothschild
Page me38.343
†e wonderful to say
Page me38.343

†f This seems to refer to a ticket Conrad Schramm received for visiting the Great Exhibition of 1851.
Page me38.343
†g Deutsche Schnellpost
Page me38.343
†h the wretch
Page me38.343
†i Louis Bamberger
Page me38.344
†a 'Remarkable Discovery — Electricity and Agriculture', The Economist, Vol. III, Nos. 17 and 18, 26 April and 3 May 1845.
Page me38.345
†a There you are
Page me38.345
†b members of the Committee for German Affairs (see this volume, p. 342)
Page me38.345
†c Wilhelm Pieper
Page me38.345
†d Bremer Tages-Chronik
Page me38.346
†a head on Page me38.346
†b Mary
Page me38.346
†c It would seem, then
Page me38.346
†d honourable
Page me38.347
†a an inconceivable blunder (reference to Dronke's signature to the address sent from Geneva to the organisers of the 'banquet of the equal' on 24 February, see this volume, p. 342)
Page me38.347
†b above all no zeal! (words ascribed to Talleyrand)
Page me38.347
†c in political economy
Page me38.347
†d i.e. the Committee for German Affairs (see this volume, p. 342)
Page me38.347
†e This sentence is in a local dialect in the original
Page me38.347
†f 'Köln, 2. Mai', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 106, 3 May 1851.
Page me38.348
†a The original has: June.
Page me38.348
†b decidedly
Page me38.349

†a 'The Debate in the First Chamber...; Germany. Prussia. Berlin, 4 May', The Daily News, 8 May 1851.
Page me38.349
†b Conrad Schramm
Page me38.349
†c All things considered
Page me38.350
†a Wilhelm Pieper
Page me38.350
†b See this volume, pp. 344-45.
Page me38.350
†c The Economist, Vol. III, Nos. 17 and 18, 26 April and 3 May 1845.
Page me38.351
†a members of the Committee for German Affairs (see this volume, p. 342)
Page me38.352
†a simply
Page me38.352
†b with one stamp of the foot
Page me38.352
†c we'll allow them the pleasure!
Page me38.352
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.352
†e all the rest
Page me38.352
†f And then
Page me38.352
†g the exceedingly rich
Page me38.352
†h because we're ruined and shall in any case be ruined
Page me38.353
†a Not a line.
Page me38.353
†b a couple of words
Page me38.354
†a British Museum
Page me38.354
†b F. Freiligrath, 'Der Mohrenfürst'.
Page me38.354
†c Conrad Schramm
Page me38.354
†d The Economist, Vol. III, Nos. 17 and 18, 26 April and 3 May, 1845.
Page me38.355
†a is incomprehensible
Page me38.355
†b See this volume, p. 349.

Page me38.355
†c The reference is to the manifesto 'To the Germans' issued by the Committee for German Affairs (see this volume, p. 342). An excerpt from Johanna Kinkel's letter about Gottfried Kinkel having nothing to do with the manifesto was published in the Kölnische Zeitung, No. 114, 13 May 1851.
Page me38.355
†d Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me38.355
†e K. Marx, 'Gesammelte Aufsätze' and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue.
Page me38.355
†f Hermann Becker
Page me38.355
†g Athenäum
Page me38.356
†a Now, dear friend
Page me38.357
†a Wretch that you are
Page me38.357
†b memorial more enduring than bronze (Horace, Carmina, III, 30, 1)
Page me38.357
†c Illustrierte Zeitung, No. 410, 10 May 1851.
Page me38.357
†d See this volume, p. 309.
Page me38.357
†e The Sun, 17 May 1851.
Page me38.357
†f 'France. Paris, 15 May', Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires, 16 May 1851.
Page me38.357
†g there's no one but Cavaignac
Page me38.358
†a philistine
Page me38.358
†b glory
Page me38.358
†c 'Cologne, 8 May', Frankfurter Journal, No. 111, second supplement, 9 May 1851.
Page me38.358
†d get out, Costa Cabral, so I can take your place (Saint-Simon, Catéchisme politique des industriels)
Page me38.358
†e The original has: José.
Page me38.358
†f Maria II da Gloria
Page me38.358

†g Devil take all these inflated mediocrities.
Page me38.359
†a members of the Central Authority of the Communist League in Cologne
Page me38.359
†b Johanna Kinkel (Gottfried Kinkel's wife)
Page me38.359
†c Marx compares Arnold Ruge to Arnold Winkelried, a semi-legendary fourteenth-century Swiss warrior.
Page me38.360
†a 18 May
Page me38.360
†b It's really too funny!
Page me38.360
†c i.e. democrats and socialists of various trends
Page me38.360
†d out of the question
Page me38.361
†a G. Mazzini, 'Au Rédacteur', Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires, 18 May 1851.
Page me38.361
†b Edgar Marx
Page me38.361
†c lobster
Page me38.361
†d iced champagne
Page me38.362
†a Polish name: &sign;ary
Page me38.362
†b like death
Page me38.362
†c Johanna Kinkel (Gottfried Kinkel's wife)
Page me38.363
†a the majority in the Legislative Assembly
Page me38.363
†b Journal des Débats politique et littéraires
Page me38.363
†c war to the death
Page me38.363
†d a finished nation
Page me38.363
†e Nicholas I
Page me38.364
†a they didn't stir
Page me38.364
†b Lithuanian name: Klaipeda
Page me38.364

†c Polish name: Szczecin
Page me38.365
†a Edgar Marx
Page me38.365
†b See this volume, p. 341.
Page me38.365
†c Hermann Becker
Page me38.365
†d Heinrich Bürgers
Page me38.365
†e the Communist League
Page me38.365
†f 'Cologne, 20 May', Frankfurter Journal, No. 123, 23 May 1851.
Page me38.367
†a Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Page me38.367
†b word
Page me38.367
†c more and more
Page me38.367
†d in principle, in practice
Page me38.367
†e an ink blot in the original
Page me38.367
†f the auspices of Faucher
Page me38.367
†g In any case
Page me38.367
†h we shall see
Page me38.368
†a Here Marx paraphrases a proverb current in Westphalia (see this volume, p. 249).
Page me38.368
†b Good-bye and farewell.
Page me38.369
†a Mary Burns
Page me38.370
†a since mid-November 1850
Page me38.370
†b military aspect
Page me38.370
†c Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see present edition, vols. 8 and 9)
Page me38.371
†a detached forts
Page me38.371
†b J. Bem, Erfahrungen über die Congrevschen Brand-Raketen...

Page me38.371
†c This seems to refer to R. Montecucculi's main work Memorie della guerra ed istruzione d'un generale.
Page me38.372
†a Stieler's Handatlas über alle Theile der Erde...
Page me38.372
†b A. Alison, History of Europe from the Commencement of the French Revolution...
Page me38.372
†c A. Thiers, Histoire du Consulat et de l'Empire.
Page me38.372
†d exploits of French bravery
Page me38.373
†a See this volume, pp. 489-90.
Page me38.373
†b kindly
Page me38.374
†a half-light
Page me38.374
†b members of the London German Workers' Educational Society
Page me38.374
†c 'Der communistische Bund', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 150, 24 June 1851. Instead of 'Schapper' the paper had 'Schopper', on which Engels made a pun by deriving it from 'Schoppen' — 'a pint pot'.
Page me38.374
†d What's new in London?
Page me38.375
†a See this volume, p. 373.
Page me38.375
†b for one has to live
Page me38.375
†c in partibus infidelium - in parts inhabited by infidels. Here: abroad, far from the fray
Page me38.375
†d adventurer, pillar of the taproom
Page me38.376
†a Matthew 6:26.
Page me38.376
†b The original has: Christmann. Marx refers to A. Christ, Ueber den gegenwärtigen Stand der Frage der Schutzzölle.
Page me38.376
†c I. Pinto, Traité de la circulation et du crédit.
Page me38.377
†a infinitely small (an expression used by P.-J. Béranger to describe the men of the Restoration in France, see present edition, Vol. 5, p. 514)
Page me38.377

†b Freiligrath apparently used the neutral instead of masculine gender to stress the amorphous and shallow character of this publication.
Page me38.377
†c lights of the world
Page me38.377
†d F. Freiligrath, 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me38.379
†a We shall see.
Page me38.379
†b This between ourselves.
Page me38.379
†c the Great Exhibition in London in 1851
Page me38.379
†d See this volume, p. 316.
Page me38.380
†a Conrad Schramm and Wilhelm Pieper
Page me38.380
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.381
†a account
Page me38.381
†b 'Toste envoyé par le citoyen L. A. Blanqui á la commission prés les réfugiés de Londres, pour le banquet anniversaire du 24 février', La Patrie, No. 58, 27 February 1851.
Page me38.381
†c L. Blanc, 'To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 20741, 5 March 1851; ['La déclaration de la commission du Banquet des Egaux du 1 mars 1851'], La Patrie, No. 66, 7 March 1851.
Page me38.381
†d E. Barthélemy, 'Au rédacteur en chef du journal La Patrie', La Patrie, No. 71, 12 March 1851.
Page me38.381
†e J. Vidil, ['Letter to the editors of La Patrie,] La Patrie, No. 69, 10 March 1851.
Page me38.381
†f K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Introduction to the Leaflet of L.A. Blanqui's Toast Sent to the Refugee Committee'.
Page me38.382
†a See this volume, p. 320.
Page me38.382
†b Unfortunately, nothing came of it.
Page me38.382
†c on the very morrow of the first victorious insurrection
Page me38.382
†d Hess
Page me38.382
†e Sibylle Hess
Page me38.383

†a Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.384
†a First of all.
Page me38.384
†b 'Der Communisten-Bund', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 156, 1 July 1851, supplement.
Page me38.384
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League', March 1850.
Page me38.384
†d basically
Page me38.384
†e more or less
Page me38.384
†f The original has: Schüler.
Page me38.384
†g 'Der Communistenbund', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 186, 5 July 1851, supplement.
Page me38.384
†h 'Eine Polizei-Ente?', Trier'sche Zeitung, No. 158, 6 July 1851.
Page me38.385
†a luminary
Page me38.385
†b Now Marylebone Road
Page me38.385
†c What do you make of that?
Page me38.386
†a But after all, everyone has his own way of doing things.
Page me38.387
†a a god from the machine (by which in ancient theatre gods were shown in the air); a power or an event that comes in the nick of time to solve difficulty.
Page me38.389
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League, March 1850'.
Page me38.389
†b 'Noch umfassendere Haussuchungen in Aussicht. Umfassende Geständnisse des Schneiders Nothjung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 189, 8 July 1851 (a report from Leipzig with reference to the Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger).
Page me38.389
†c Ernst August
Page me38.390
†a indeed, there could be no mistake about it
Page me38.390
†b the Red Sea must be crossed (see Exodus 13:18; 15:22).
Page me38.390
†c Neue Preussische Zeitung

Page me38.390
†d red terror
Page me38.390
†e 'Kreistags-Lieder, II', Neue Preussische Zeitung, No. 137, 17 June 1851. (In the original the rhyme is based on the words 'Esel' (donkey) and 'Wesel', the name of the councillor.)
Page me38.391
†a See this volume, p. 385.
Page me38.391
†b ibid.
Page me38.391
†c since the latter would have compromised no one but himself
Page me38.391
†d luminary
Page me38.391
†e that's clear
Page me38.391
†f the German Committee (i.e. the Committee for German Affairs)
Page me38.391
†g An ironical comparison of Mazzini's appeal to the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans (New Testament).
Page me38.392
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League, March 1850'.
Page me38.392
†b crossing the Red Sea (see Exodus 13:18; 15:22)
Page me38.393
†a If there is treason
Page me38.393
†b after all, he's the only political brain in Cologne
Page me38.393
†c See M. Stirner, Der Einzige und sein Eigenthum
Page me38.393
†d morrow
Page me38.394
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party
Page me38.394
†b that's what is needed
Page me38.394
†c See this volume, p. 388.
Page me38.394
†d Schulz was responsible editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung at one time.
Page me38.395
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Review, May to October 1850'.
Page me38.395
†b Never has the plant appeared more flourishing.

Page me38.396
†a there's
Page me38.396
†b Simon and Louis Bamberger
Page me38.396
†c 28 July 1851
Page me38.396
†d false
Page me38.397
†a the Communist League
Page me38.397
†b the British Museum
Page me38.397
†c false move
Page me38.397
†d A pun on M. Stirner's Der Einzige und sein Eigenthum
Page me38.397
†e familiar stuff
Page me38.397
†f K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Statement, 27 January 1851'.
Page me38.398
†a Rudolf Schramm
Page me38.398
†b one way or another
Page me38.398
†c at bottom
Page me38.398
†d Industry ought to be more productive than marriage.
Page me38.398
†e F. Freiligrath, 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me38.398
†f not at all patient
Page me38.398
†g rather hard
Page me38.399
†a against their will
Page me38.399
†b P.J. Proudhon, Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle.
Page me38.399
†c Friedrich Lessner
Page me38.399
†d Good-bye and farewell
Page me38.399
†e He's not a Harney.
Page me38.399
†f Reference to Conrad Schramm (see this volume, p. 397).

Page me38.400
†a it's as good a way as any other of getting oneself talked about
Page me38.400
†b confusion
Page me38.400
†c should the occasion arise
Page me38.400
†d See this volume, pp. 373, 489-90.
Page me38.400
†e Louis Bamberger
Page me38.400
†f for after all
Page me38.401
†a disjointedly
Page me38.401
†b See this volume, pp. 409-16.
Page me38.401
†c Notes to the People
Page me38.402
†a a free say
Page me38.402
†b i.e. the Central Committee of European Democracy
Page me38.402
†c Probably Weydemeyer's critical article on A. Christ's Ueber den gegenwärtigen Stand der Frage der Schutzzölle
Page me38.403
†a Rudolf Schramm
Page me38.403
†b lost
Page me38.403
†c Louise
Page me38.405
†a more or less
Page me38.406
†a C. Decker, La Petite guerre, ou Traité des opérations secondaires de la guerre (see this volume, p. 331).
Page me38.406
†b Stieler's Handatlas über alle Theile der Erde ...
Page me38.406
†c After all
Page me38.406
†d apparently Max Joseph Becker
Page me38.407
†a See this volume, p. 391.
Page me38.409
†a See this volume, pp. 436-38.

Page me38.409
†b the Great Exhibition of 1851
Page me38.409
†c Conrad and Rudolf Schramm
Page me38.409
†d See this volume, p. 383.
Page me38.409
†e ibid., p. 399.
Page me38.409
†f skeleton
Page me38.409
†g First Essay.
Page me38.409
†h Second Essay. Is there sufficient reason for revolution in the nineteenth century?
Page me38.409
†i politics
Page me38.409
†j political economy
Page me38.409
†k anarchy of economic forces
Page me38.409
†l the tendency of society towards poverty
Page me38.409
†m in changing, in redressing the evil tendency of society
Page me38.409
†n arbitrary reconstruction
Page me38.410
†a Third Essay. On the Principle of Association.
Page me38.410
†b Collective force is an impersonal act, association is voluntary commitment. Association is by its nature sterile, even harmful, since it impedes the freedom of the worker.
Page me38.410
†c social contract
Page me38.410
†d adequate compensation
Page me38.410
†e the associate who is weak or lazy
Page me38.410
†f production association of any utility
Page me38.410
†g solidarity, joint responsibility
Page me38.410
†h in special conditions, depending on the means employed
Page me38.410

†i Association established with a view to the family tie and the law of dedication, and apart from any external economic consideration — association for its own sake, is purely an act of religion, a supernatural bond, devoid of positive value, a myth.
Page me38.410
†j new relations which are intended to evolve from reciprocity between producers and consumers. Association puts the contracting parties on an equal footing, subordinates their freedom to social duty, depersonalises them.
Page me38.411
†a Fourth Essay. On the Principle of Authority.
Page me38.411
†b The idea of government was born of family custom and domestic experience. The final stage of governmental evolution is democracy.
Page me38.411
†c No more government!
Page me38.411
†d absolute authority
Page me38.411
†e laws
Page me38.411
†f Universal suffrage. The prophetic intuition of the masses
Page me38.411
†g What need have I of mandatories, any more than of representatives!
Page me38.411
†h Pure democracy or direct government
Page me38.411
†i leads to impossibility and absurdity
Page me38.411
†j establishment of public utility
Page me38.411
†k private capital
Page me38.411
†l discount industry
Page me38.412
†a 3. Mortgage Debts. Simple Bonds. 'Interest on all debts, mortgages, simple contract debts, joint-stock shares, is fixed at 1/4 or 1/2 per cent. Repayment claims can be met only by annual instalments. The annual instalment for all sums below 2,000 fr. will be 10 per cent, for sums above 2,000 fr. 5 per cent. In order to facilitate the repayment and replace the function of the former money-lenders a section of the offices of the National Discount Bank will become a mortgage bank, the maximum of its advances will be 500 million per annum.'
Page me38.412
†b 4. Real estate: Buildings. Decree: 'Every payment made in respect of rent shall be entered to the account of the property reckoned as twenty times the rent. With every instalment of rent the tenant will acquire a proportional and joint share in the house he occupies and in the totality of all buildings let for rent and serving as dwellings for the citizens. Property thus paid for will pass by degrees into the hands of the communal administration, which by the fact of the payment will take over the mortgages and prerogatives in the name of the mass of tenants, and will guarantee their domicile to all of them in perpetuity at the cost price of the building. The communes will be able to negotiate separate agreements with the owners for the immediate liquidation and repayment of the leased properties. In this case, and in order that the present generations shall enjoy reduced rents, the said communes will be able immediately to reduce the rent of houses for which they have concluded agreements, in such a way that amortisation be completed only in thirty years. For repairs, fittings and upkeep of the buildings, as in the case of new constructions, the communes will negotiate with the companies of masons or associations of building workers according to the principles and rules of the new social contract. The owners, sole occupiers of their own houses, will retain the property as long as they judge this advantageous to their interests.'

Page me38.413

†a 5. Landed property. 'Every payment of rent for the use of a piece of real estate will make the farmer part-proprietor of it and will count as a mortgage payment by him. When the property has been entirely paid for it will be immediately taken over by the commune, which will take the place of the former owner and will share with the farmer the ownership and the net product. The communes will be able to negotiate separate agreements with the owners who desire it for the redemption of the rents and the immediate repayment of the properties. In that case at the request of the communes steps shall be taken to instal the cultivators, and to delimit their properties, taking care that as far as possible the size of the area shall make up for the quality of the land, and that the rent shall be proportional to the product. As soon as the property has been entirely paid for, all the communes of the Republic will have to reach agreement among themselves to equalise the differences in the quality of the strips of land, and also the contingencies of farming. The part of the rent due to them from the plots in their particular area will be used for this compensation and general insurance. Dating from the same period the old owners who worked themselves on their properties, will retain their title, and will be treated in the same way as the new owners, will have to pay the same rent and will be granted the same rights in such a way that no one is favoured by the chance of location and inheritance and that the conditions of cultivation are equal for all. The land tax will be abolished. The functions of the rural police will devolve on the municipal councils.
Page me38.413

†b As for personal credit, it should be operated in the workers' companies and the agricultural and industrial societies.
Page me38.414

†a without the slightest misgiving, to permit the owner to sell, transfer, alienate or otherwise dispose of his property as he pleases... Given the facility of repayment by annual instalments, the value of a piece of real estate can be indefinitely divided, exchanged, and undergo any conceivable change, without the real estate being in the least affected. Agricultural labour rejects associatory forms.
Page me38.414

†b 3. Division of labour, collective forces, machinery. Companies of workers. Every industry, enterprise or undertaking which by its nature requires the combined employment of a large number of workers with different skills is bound to become the basis for an association or company of workers. But where a product may be obtained without a combination of special skills, through the activity of an individual or family, there is no need for association.

Page me38.414
†c shopkeepers
Page me38.414
†d Every person working in the association possesses an indivisible right in the property of the company; he has the right to perform successively all duties. His education, training and apprenticeship ought therefore to be conducted in such a way that, while he is made to take his share of disagreeable and arduous tasks, he will acquire experience in various sorts of work and fields of knowledge, so that when he reaches mature age he will have a wide range of qualifications and a sufficient income. Posts are subject to election and the rules are adopted by the members of the association. The size of the recompense depends on the nature of the work, the degree of the proficiency, and the amount of responsibility. Every member of the association shares both in the profits and in the expenses of the company in proportion to his services. Everyone is free to resign from the association whenever he wishes, and therefore to settle his accounts and renounce his rights; conversely the company is entitled to recruit new members at any time.

Footnote Page Break 415
Page me38.415
†a two problems: that of collective force, and that of the division of labour
Page me38.415
†b The Determination of Value; the Establishment of a Cheap Market.
Page me38.415
†c the high price of goods
Page me38.415
†d arbitrariness of prices
Page me38.415
†e The fair price accurately reflects: a) a total production cost according to the official average for free producers, b) the merchant's salary or the compensation for the advantages which the seller forgoes by parting with the article.
Page me38.415
†f of several kinds: either the consumers, who wish to have the benefit of a fair price and who are at the same time producers themselves, undertake in their turn to supply the merchant with their own products on equal terms, as is done by the various workers' associations in Paris; or else the said consumers confine themselves to guaranteeing the dealer either a premium, or a sale large enough to guarantee him an income.
Page me38.416
†a on behalf of the interests which it temporarily represents, and the departments and communes on behalf of their respective inhabitants, being desirous of ensuring a fair price and a high standard of goods and services for all, propose to guarantee that the entrepreneurs who offer the most advantageous conditions will receive either interest on the capital and material invested in their enterprises, or a fixed salary, or in appropriate cases a sufficient quantity of orders. In return, the tendering parties will pledge themselves to meet all consumers' requests for the goods and services they have undertaken to supply. Apart from that, full scope is left for competition. They must state the component parts of their prices, the method of delivery, the duration of their commitments, and their means of fulfilment. The tenders submitted under seal within the periods prescribed will subsequently be opened and made public 8 days, 15 days, 1 month or 3 months before the contracts are allocated depending on the importance of the contracts. At the expiry of each contract, new tenders will be invited.

Page me38.416
†b External trade.
Page me38.416
†c to lower the tariffs
Page me38.416
†d Seventh Essay. The Merging of Government in the Economic Organism. Society without authority. Elimination of cults, Justice, Administration, police, Public Education, War, the Navy.
Page me38.417
†a See this volume, p. 408.
Page me38.417
†b secession of the plebs
Page me38.417
†c Menenius Agrippa
Page me38.417
†d priceless
Page me38.418
†a 'Karl Heinzen und die Kommunisten', Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung, No. 77, 26 September 1847. Engels' reply to it were articles 'The Communists and Karl Heinzen'.
Page me38.418
†b Nevertheless
Page me38.418
†c See this volume, p. 425.
Page me38.418
†d Cf. H. Heine, Atta Troll, XXIV — 'no talent but a character' (description of the bear-hero Atta Troll).
Page me38.418
†e What have all these acts of despair led to?
Page me38.418
†f That's a good one!
Page me38.418
†g P.J. Proudhon, Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle
Page me38.418
†h in the final analysis
Page me38.419
†a all the communes in the Republic which come to an agreement regarding mutual compensation for the difference in the quality of their lands, and for the hazards of agriculture
Page me38.419

†b See this volume, pp. 408-09.
Page me38.419
†c P.J. Proudhon, Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle.
Page me38.419
†d workers' associations
Page me38.419
†e should the occasion arise
Page me38.420
†a See this volume, pp. 299-300.
Page me38.420
†b Hence
Page me38.421
†a paper money issued at the time of the French Revolution
Page me38.421
†b Personal credit finds or should find its application in the workers' associations
Page me38.422
†a fair price of the shopkeepers. Four francs, sir, that's the fairest price!
Page me38.422
†b P.J. Proudhon, Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle.
Page me38.423
†a evil tendency
Page me38.423
†b it matters little to us
Page me38.423
†c basically
Page me38.423
†d The reference is to R. Price's An Appeal to the Public on the Subject of the National Debt and Observations on Reversionary Payments...
Page me38.424
†a of rents
Page me38.424
†b Here there is a quid pro quo.
Page me38.424
†c in the final analysis
Page me38.424
†d powerful workers' associations
Page me38.424
†e a large firm of men's clothiers in London
Page me38.425
†a eternal data that must be accepted
Page me38.425
†b See this volume, p. 418.
Page me38.425
†c Jakob Schabelitz (the meeting of émigrés was held on 8 August 1851 — see this volume, pp. 436-38)
Page me38.426

†a Note in the margin: from Berlin (see this volume, p. 418)
Page me38.426
†b man of no consequence
Page me38.427
†a 'An die Deutschen', Bremer Tages-Chronik, No. 534, 28 March 1851.
Page me38.427
†b 'Bonn, 10 May', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 114, 13 May 1851.
Page me38.427
†c Deutsche Londoner Zeitung
Page me38.428
†a seriously
Page me38.428
†b Amand Goegg
Page me38.428
†c Karl Schurz (helped Kinkel to escape from prison in 1850)
Page me38.428
†d Adolf Strodtmann
Page me38.429
†a A pun on the name of the Chinese philosopher Confucius and the word 'confusion'.
Page me38.430
†a The Crystal Palace was built of metal and glass for the first world trade and industrial exhibition in London in 1851.
Page me38.430
†b G. Kinkel, 'Der Brief an die Bürger von St. Louis', Bremer Tages-Chronik, No. 507, 25 February 1851.
Page me38.430
†c Cf. H. Heine, Atta Troll, XXIV — 'no talent but a character' (description of the bear-hero Atta Troll).
Page me38.431
†a petty panjandrums
Page me38.431
†b a venerable body
Page me38.431
†c Cf. Shakespeare, Richard III, Act V, 4.
Page me38.431
†d Frankfurt
Page me38.431
†e A reference to Julius Faucher
Page me38.432
†a The reference is to emigrant meetings in London on 8 and 15 August.
Page me38.432
†b common people
Page me38.432
†c How Do You Do?
Page me38.432

†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League. March 1850'.
Page me38.433
†a At this point the words 'of Magdeburg' have been added in the margin.
Page me38.433
†b P.J. Proudhon, Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle.
Page me38.433
†c Dureau de la Malle, Économie politique des Romains.
Page me38.434
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, Article I.
Page me38.434
†b New-York Daily Tribune
Page me38.434
†c more or less
Page me38.434
†d Anyhow, you can do what you please with it.
Page me38.435
†a power and liberty
Page me38.435
†b By Cod!
Page me38.435
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party (the French translation, made in 1848, was not published).
Page me38.435
†d K. Marx, The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 (published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue).
Page me38.435
†e K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy.
Page me38.435
†f in Frankfurt in 1848-49
Page me38.436
†a Catherine Shaw
Page me38.436
†b what a revelation!
Page me38.436
†c First, many thanks for your article (the reference is to F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Article I).
Page me38.436
†d Now
Page me38.436
†e Albert and Franz Sigel
Page me38.437
†a Ludwig Bauer
Page me38.437
†b Adolf Strodtmann — a pun in the original: Schurz and Furz (fart)
Page me38.437

†c the small fry
Page me38.438
†a That's a good one!
Page me38.440
†a certificate of poverty
Page me38.440
†b indispensable condition
Page me38.440
†c the Communist League
Page me38.440
†d indignation makes the poet — adaptation of facit indignatio versum (indignation makes the verse), Juvenal, Satires, I
Page me38.442
†a chaired by Schapper
Page me38.443
†a and it's true
Page me38.443
†b Good-bye and farewell.
Page me38.444
†a and that is sufficient
Page me38.444
†b F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.445
†a A series of articles Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me38.445
†b First of all.
Page me38.445
†c Franz Sigel
Page me38.446
†a Oskar Reichenbach
Page me38.446
†b statesmen
Page me38.446
†c Eduard Reichenbach
Page me38.446
†d well-known
Page me38.446
†e That's all I have to report for the present.
Page me38.446
†f Now
Page me38.447
†a in confidence
Page me38.447
†b simply
Page me38.447

†c of the Deutsche Schnellpost
Page me38.447
†d Poor
Page me38.448
†a Karl Heinzen
Page me38.448
†b My God
Page me38.448
†c 'Cronique de l'intérieur', La Voix du Proscrit, No 18, 23 August 1851.
Page me38.448
†d In partibus infidelium — literally: in parts inhabited by infidels; figuratively; without any real power.
Page me38.448
†e Ch. Delescluze [see Ch. Delescluze, 'Le conclave démocratique', La Voix du Proscrit, No. 19, 30 August 1851]
Page me38.449
†a Reference to Engels' 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.449
†b probably Hermann
Page me38.449
†c Confound the Exhibition! (i.e. the Great Exhibition in London in 1851.)
Page me38.449
†d Thus passes away the glory
Page me38.449
†e the German Agitation Society and the Refugee club
Page me38.450
†a 'Remarkable Case of Fraud by an Austrian Spy. — Sudden Death of the Impostor', the Daily News, 1 September 1851.
Page me38.450
†b 'Indigo', The Economist, No. 417, 23 August 1851.
Page me38.451
†a may the earth lie lightly upon him
Page me38.451
†b probably Hermann
Page me38.452
†a Karl Schapper
Page me38.452
†b So much the better for him. The reference is probably to Willich.
Page me38.452
†c i.e. the arrested members of the Central Authority of the Communist League set up in Cologne in October 1850
Page me38.453
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Article II.
Page me38.453

†b F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.453
†c Waiting to hear from you.
Page me38.454
†a the queer fellows
Page me38.454
†b needs must when the devil drives
Page me38.454
†c enlightened citizens
Page me38.455
†a probably Hermann Engels
Page me38.456
†a Oskar Reichenbach
Page me38.456
†b Franz Sigel
Page me38.456
†c Marx probably means La Voix du Proscrit
Page me38.456
†d 'Firstly, Dio. They don't want a god. Next, and more serious, they blame Maître Mazzini for working for the Austrian interest by preaching insurrection, i.e. by precipitating it. Finally, they insist on a direct appeal to the material interests of the Italian peasants, and this cannot be made without a corresponding attack on the material interests of the bourgeoisie and liberal nobility, who form the great Mazzinian phalanx.
Page me38.456
†e outright and immediately
Page me38.456
†f tenant share-croppers
Page me38.457
†a will that gentleman
Page me38.457
†b F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Article II.
Page me38.457
†c F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Article II.
Page me38.457
†d such as it is
Page me38.457
†e You'll have to do what you can with it.
Page me38.457
†f probably Hermann
Page me38.458
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Article III.
Page me38.459
†a F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.459

†b Mazzinism
Page me38.459
†c import
Page me38.459
†d Ernst Dronke
Page me38.459
†e Conrad Schramm
Page me38.459
†f 'Maß-regeln vor, während und nach der Revolution', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 225, 19 September 1851.
Page me38.460
†a no matter how much
Page me38.460
†b as best you can
Page me38.460
†c clean sweep
Page me38.461
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Review. January-February 1850'.
Page me38.461
†b Australia was formerly a place of deportation for criminals
Page me38.461
†c honest folk
Page me38.461
†a Kölnische Zeitung and Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me38.463
†b What do you make of that?
Page me38.463
†c Serve him right. See this volume, p. 459.
Page me38.463
†d of 6 September
Page me38.463
†e Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me38.464
†a In Mémorial de Sainte-Héléne by Las Cases Napoleon is reported to have said: 'Dans cinquante ans l'Europe sera républicaine ou cosaque' (In fifty years Europe will be republican or Cossack).
Page me38.465
†a Frederick William IV
Page me38.465
†b Polish name: Wroclaw
Page me38.465
†c In the original: 110,000
Page me38.466
†a There is the solution
Page me38.467
†a should read Stechan

Page me38.467
†b capable of anything
Page me38.467
†c The bible relates that David sent a letter by Uriah condemning the bearer to death (2 Samuel 11:14, 15).
Page me38.468
†a Manuscript damaged
Page me38.468
†b Conrad Schramm
Page me38.468
†c By God, we have enough on our hands
Page me38.468
†d F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Article III.
Page me38.469
†a in a wrapper
Page me38.469
†b See this volume, p. 463.
Page me38.469
†c i.e. during the uprising of May-July 1849 there
Page me38.470
†a But let that pass
Page me38.470
†b 1 German mile is roughly 4-4 1/2 statute miles
Page me38.470
†c risky
Page me38.471
†a under arms
Page me38.471
†b it's dangerous
Page me38.472
†a Roland
Page me38.472
†b K. Marx, 'Statement and Accompanying Letter to the Editorial Board of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, 4 October 1851'.
Page me38.472
†c Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 273, 30
Page me38.472
September 1851 carried in a supplement an item datelined 'Cologne, 26 September' in which the arrests of the Communist league members in Cologne were linked with information allegedly received by Baroness von Beck from Marx.
Page me38.473
†a See this volume, p. 457.
Page me38.473
†b ibid.. p. 439.
Page me38.473
†c Deutsche Schnellpost

Page me38.474
†a G.L. Stechan, 'Hannover, 28 September', Zeitung für Norddeutschland, No. 544, 29 September 1851.
Page me38.474
†b what a stupidity!
Page me38.474
†c What do you think of Haupt?
Page me38.474
†d Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.474
†e the devil — see Dante, The Divine Comedy, 'Hell', XXIII.
Page me38.474
†f Goethe, 'Der Fischer'.
Page me38.474
†g and neither was he
Page me38.475
†a F. Schiller, 'Die Sonntagskinder'.
Page me38.475
†b What's to be done?
Page me38.475
†c lazybones
Page me38.475
†d cajoled
Page me38.475
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.475
†f Friedrich Suchsland
Page me38.475
†g the publishing of Engels' Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me38.475
†h views
Page me38.476
†a P.J. Proudhon, Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle.
Page me38.476
†b How is the commercial crisis going?
Page me38.477
†a There's nothing you can do
Page me38.477
†b See this volume, p. 473.
Page me38.478
†a Cohen
Page me38.478
†b is preposterous
Page me38.478
†c Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.478

†d a good husband, perhaps even a good pater familias!
Page me38.478
†e H. Ewerbeck, L'Allemagne et les Allemands.
Page me38.478
†f F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.478
†g In mid-October 1851 Queen Victoria visited Manchester.
Page me38.479
†a they won't be very wonderful either
Page me38.479
†b at last
Page me38.479
†c he is done for
Page me38.479
†d A law of 31 May 1850 which abrogated universal suffrage.
Page me38.480
†a Reference to the terms for publication of Notes to the People.
Page me38.480
†b but what can I do?
Page me38.480
†c J. MacGregor, Commercial Tariffs and Regulations, Resources, and Trade of the Several States of Europe and America; The Resources and Statistics of Nations.
Page me38.481
†a A. Moreau de Jonnés, Statistique générale de la France.
Page me38.481
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.481
†c [G.J. Harney, Introduction to the Manifesto of the Communist Party,] The Red Republican, No. 21, 9 November 1850.
Page me38.481
†d Louise
Page me38.481
†e Edgar von Westphalen
Page me38.482
†a Caroline von Westphalen
Page me38.483
†a the Baptist
Page me38.483
†b Friedrich Suchsland (see this volume, p. 475)
Page me38.483
†c It's important
Page me38.484
†a The matter is urgent.
Page me38.484
†b See this volume, pp. 475, 478.

Page me38.484
†c La Presse
Page me38.484
†d interviews
Page me38.484
†e electee of universal suffrage
Page me38.484
†f limited suffrage
Page me38.485
†a had already consoled itself for the demise of universal suffrage
Page me38.485
†b he must be given his head
Page me38.486
†a i.e. the members of the Frankfurt National Assembly
Page me38.486
†b F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.487
†a the impending trial of the Communist League members
Page me38.487
†b really
Page me38.487
†c at bottom
Page me38.488
†a See this volume, p. 486.
Page me38.488
†b here: irregularly
Page me38.488
†c refusals
Page me38.488
†d 1 Corinthians 9:22
Page me38.488
†e convulsions
Page me38.489
†a F. Engels, “The Magyar Struggle', 'Hungary' and other articles.
Page me38.489
†b K. Marx, 'The Bourgeoisie and the Counter-Revolution'.
Page me38.489
†c F. Engels, 'The Communists and Karl Heinzen'; K. Marx, 'Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality'.
Page me38.490
†a K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy — German translation planned but not then published.
Page me38.491
†a See this volume, p. 476.
Page me38.491

†b What do you think?
Page me38.491
†c the Communist League members arrested and under investigation
Page me38.491
†d Johann Friedrich Eccarius
Page me38.491
†e For example
Page me38.492
†a How so?
Page me38.492
†b is almost free credit.
Page me38.492
†c Hegelian dialectics
Page me38.492
†d F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.492
†e that there's no means
Page me38.492
†f Conrad Schramm
Page me38.492
†g unparalleled
Page me38.492
†h He won't succeed.
Page me38.492
†i Snapper, i.e. Schapper
Page me38.493
†a See this volume. p. 490.
Page me38.493
†b what would remain of it
Page me38.494
†a K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy.
Page me38.494
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.494
†c then it will be quite a different matter
Page me38.494
†d philistines (here: French political circles)
Page me38.494
†e world stage
Page me38.495
†a resign yourself, which isn't too pleasant
Page me38.495
†b Do be a little businesslike this time!
Page me38.495

†c F. Engels, 'Critical Review of Proudhon's Book Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle'.
Page me38.495
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, The Holy Family, or Critique of Critical Criticism.
Page me38.496
†a Wilhelm Wolff (Lupus)
Page me38.497
†a Wilhelm Pieper
Page me38.497
†b the Communist League members arrested and under investigation
Page me38.497
†c Now
Page me38.498
†a mercilessly
Page me38.498
†b E. Jones, 'What is Kossuth', Notes to the People, Vol. II, No. 31, 1851.
Page me38.498
†c quite simply
Page me38.498
†d Snapper, i.e. Schapper
Page me38.498
†e The continuation is on the third page of Pieper's letter to Marx sent from Brussels on 27 November 1851.
Page me38.499
†a student
Page me38.500
†a Kalb — calf
Page me38.500
†b monopolising
Page me38.500
†c Goethe, 'Die Spinnerin'.
Page me38.500
†d See this volume, pp. 426-33.
Page me38.501
†a deeply convinced
Page me38.501
†b John 20:29
Page me38.501
†c the Refugee Club in London
Page me38.503
†a 'Representatives of France, hold your deliberations in peace!' — from Changarnier's speech in the Legislative Assembly on 3 June 1851 in reply to one by President Louis Bonaparte in Dijon on 1 June containing concealed threats to the Assembly.
Page me38.503
†b at the Bar

Page me38.504
†a Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.504
†b The consulate without the First Consul!
Page me38.504
†c But the people, the people! The people don't care a damn for all this business
Page me38.505
†a Engels quotes the Left-wing deputy Wilhelm Jordan (cf. also Engels' article 'The Frankfurt Assembly Debates the Polish Question').
Page me38.505
†b Louis Bonaparte
Page me38.505
†c Napoleon Bonaparte
Page me38.505
†d That is no concern of ours; that the President and the Assembly should massacre each other is of small moment to us!
Page me38.506
†a philistines
Page me38.506
†b The thunderous voice of the people is not recalling them yet.
Page me38.506
†c the Communist League members arrested and under investigation (see this volume, p. 497)
Page me38.506
†d F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany
Page me38.506
†e Awaiting your news
Page me38.507
†a trunks
Page me38.507
†b Cf. Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part One, Act 5, Scene 4.
Page me38.507
†c Address of the French Exiles to Their Countrymen, by Bernard le Clubiste, Louis Blanc and others, The Daily News, 5 December 1851.
Page me38.507
†d See this volume, p. 492.
Page me38.507
†e The planned publication of The Poverty of Philosophy in German
Page me38.507
†f which is not so
Page me38.507
†g Now
Page me38.508
†a a character in Heine's 'Zwei Ritter', here Louis Bonaparte
Page me38.508

†b the apostles of the democratic trinity, of liberty, equality, fraternity. The poor chaps!
Page me38.508
†c of no account
Page me38.508
†d we know our little fellow
Page me38.509
†a however blase one may be
Page me38.509
†b confidence
Page me38.509
†c any kind of power
Page me38.509
†d that's clear
Page me38.509
†e where war pays for war
Page me38.509
†f War?
Page me38.509
†g An allusion to Louis Napoleon Bonaparte's Des idées napoléoniennes.
Page me38.510
†a i.e. democrats and socialists of various trends
Page me38.510
†b What do you think?
Page me38.511
†a L. Blanc, 'To the Editor of The Daily News', The Daily News, 11 December 1851.
Page me38.511
†b Address of the French Exiles to Their Countrymen, by Bernard le Clubiste, Louis Blanc and others, The Daily News, 5 December 1851.
Page me38.511
†c French people — noble pride — indomitable courage — eternal love of liberty — all honour to courage in adversity
Page me38.511
†d right-about turn
Page me38.511
†e A reference to the section 'Appeal to the Bourgeoisie' in the introduction to Proudhon's Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle.
Page me38.511
†f true people
Page me38.511
†g The fact is
Page me38.511
†h 2 and 3 December 1851
Page me38.512
†a February 1848

Page me38.512
†b uninvolved
Page me38.512
†c in the end
Page me38.512
†d civilian of any description, no matter
Page me38.512
†e businessman
Page me38.512
†f appeal to the people
Page me38.513
†a non compos mentis
Page me38.513
†b Ayes
Page me38.513
†c There's no longer any press
Page me38.513
†d a character in Heine's 'Zwei Ritter', here Louis Bonaparte
Page me38.515
†a Ever
Page me38.515
†b Deutsche Schnellpost
Page me38.516
†a impulsive act of Louis Bonaparte (called Krapülinski after a character in Heine's 'Zwei Ritter')
Page me38.516
†b time is short
Page me38.516
†c Engels refers to a mistake made by Weydemeyer when he used this word instead of 'abolitionists.'
Page me38.517
†a See this volume, pp. 512-13.
Page me38.517
†b basically
Page me38.517
†c high finance
Page me38.517
†d See this volume, pp. 562 and 563.
Page me38.518
†a the English translation of the Manifesto of the Communist Party
Page me38.518
†b with the Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany
Page me38.518
†c Louise
Page me38.519
†a at least

Page me38.519
†b of Die Revolution
Page me38.519
†c See this volume, p. 496.
Page me38.519
†d first articles from Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany by Engels
Page me38.519
†e All yours
Page me38.519
†f Die Republik der Arbeiter
Page me38.520
†a General rule
Page me38.520
†b From the title of Freiligrath's ballad 'Der Mohrenfürst'.
Page me38.521
†a Ida
Page me38.521
†b since the latest events I am more than ever convinced that there will be no serious revolution without a trade crisis.
Page me38.525
†a rotten
Page me38.525
†b Caroline von Westphalen
Page me38.525
†c Jenny Marx's brother
Page me38.527
†a An allusion to Freiligrath's 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me38.528
†a by Hercules
Page me38.528
†b the Bois Sauvage boarding house
Page me38.528
†c forthcoming labours; in September 1845 Jenny Marx gave birth to Laura
Page me38.528
†d immense drawing room
Page me38.529
†a in company
Page me38.529
†b Heinrich Bürgers
Page me38.529
†c encounters
Page me38.530
†a Jenny and Laura
Page me38.530
†b i.e. Mary Burns
Page me38.530

†c petty criticism
Page me38.530
†d an adaptation of Weitling's Die Menschheit, wie sie ist und wie sie sein sollte (Mankind as it is and as it ought to be)
Page me38.531
†a A reference to Moses Hess.
Page me38.531
†b An allusion to Freiligrath's 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me38.532
†a A reference to 'Saint Max', an important part of The German Ideology.
Page me38.532
†b This presumably refers to A. Ruge's article 'Der Rabbi Moses und Moritz Hess' in the collection Die Opposition.
Page me38.533
†a Mary
Page me38.533
†b A character in Douglas Jerrold's Mrs Caudle's Curtain Lectures, a series of humorous sketches published in Punch in 1845.
Page me38.534
†a in The Northern Star
Page me38.535
†a into English of Cabet's Voyage en Icarie
Page me38.536
†a the London German Workers' Educational Society
Page me38.537
†a 28 March
Page me38.537
†b F. Engels, 'The State of Germany. Letter III'.
Page me38.538
†a 'Annual Banquet of the German Democratic Society for the Education of the Working Classes', The Northern Star, No. 431, 14 February 1846.
Page me38.538
†b Der Volks-Tribun.
Page me38.538
†c 'Meeting of the Friends of Poland', The Times, No. 19194, 26 March 1846.
Page me38.539
†a 'The painful impression...', The Times, No. 19188, 19 March 1846.
Page me38.539
†b Mary Burns
Page me38.539
†c Judging by the mention made in the second paragraph of the Paris workers' demonstration, which took place on Friday, 17 March, the letter must also have been written on that date.
Page me38.540
†a town hall
Page me38.540

†b unlawful assemblies
Page me38.540
†c Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me38.540
†d Louise
Page me38.541
†a 'Steckbrief', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 271, 4 October 1848 (see present edition, Vol. 7, p. 593).
Page me38.541
†a Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Page me38.542
†b Probably Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.542
†c Ewerbeck coins a verb from the name Wrangel.
Page me38.542
†d A pun on Napoleon's words: 'In fifty years Europe will be republican or Cossack', cited by Las Cases in Mémorial de Sainte-Héléne.
Page me38.543
†a 'Eine demokratische Volksversammlung', Deutsche Zeitung, No. 262, Supplement, 27 September 1848.
Page me38.543
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Page me38.544
†a The Neue Rheinische Zeitung suspended on 26 September, when the state of siege was introduced in Cologne, resumed publication on 12 October 1848.
Page me38.544
†b Marx, Gigot and Dronke
Page me38.545
†a during Engels' stay in Barmen from mid-April to 20 May 1848
Page me38.546
†a 1 December 1848
Page me38.547
†a Caroline Schöler's sister
Page me38.548
†a Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me38.548
†b Helene Demuth
Page me38.548
†c who is still the same as ever
Page me38.548
†d Roland Daniels and his wife (Amalie)
Page me38.548
†e Postscript by Marx see on p. 202.
Page me38.549

†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Announcement of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politischökonomische Revue' (The Neue Deutsche Zeitung, edited by Weydemeyer, carried it in Nos. 14, 23 and 31, 16 and 26 January and 5 February 1850).
Page me38.549
†b The Kölnische Zeitung published the announcement in the supplement to No. 24, 27 January 1850.
Page me38.549
†c silver groschen
Page me38.549
†d good groschen
Page me38.550
†a Postscript by Marx see on p. 224.
Page me38.550
†b of the Communist League
Page me38.550
†c Rules of the Communist League (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 633-38).
Page me38.550
†d Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me38.551
†a Edgar von Westphalen
Page me38.551
†b 1850
Page me38.551
†c the communist trial in Cologne in the autumn of 1852
Page me38.551
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League. June 1850'.
Page me38.552
†a of the insurgent Baden-Palatinate army in the summer of 1849
Page me38.553
†a Meeting of the Central Authority. 15 September 1850 (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 625-29).
Page me38.553
†b Röser was wrong here, it should be Wilhelm Wolff; but he was in Switzerland at the time and did not sign the minutes.
Page me38.555
†a Louise
Page me38.555
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Page me38.556
†a Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me38.556
†b Heinrich Guido
Page me38.557
†a Conrad Schramm
Page me38.558

†a Freiligrath, 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me38.559
†a Freiligrath, 'Reveille'.
Page me38.559
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung of 19 May 1849
Page me38.560
†a Neue Deutsche Zeitung
Page me38.560
†b Louise
Page me38.560
†c Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me38.560
†d See this volume pp. 246-47.
Page me38.560
†e Hermann Becker (see this volume, p. 320)
Page me38.561
†a Sibylle Hess
Page me38.561
†b Ferdinand Wolff
Page me38.562
†a Conrad Schramm
Page me38.562
†b of the British Museum
Page me38.562
†c See this volume, pp. 518-20.
Page me38.562
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me38.562
†e 19 December 1851
Page me38.562
†f Edgar, Jenny and Laura
Page me38.563
†a See this volume, pp. 515-17.
Page me38.563
†b the library of the British Museum
Page me38.563
†c The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me38.563
†d 18 December
Page me38.563
†e as you please
Page me38.563
†f Presumably Engels' series of articles Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany published in the New-York Daily Tribune over Marx's signature.
Page me38.563
†g K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.

Page me38.563
†h Edgar Marx

Editor's Notes
Page me38.643
†* Asterisks are placed before names of correspondents of Marx and Engels. — Ed.
Page me38.676
†* The asterisk denotes articles which originally had no title or were not published in the authors' lifetime.

Page Break me39.i

VOLUME 39

Page Break me39.ii
Page me39.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me39.iii

FRONTMATTER
Titlepage

Page me39.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
39

MARX AND ENGELS: 1852-55

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me39.iv

Copyright Page

Page me39.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:
GREAT BRITAIN: E.J. Hobsbawm, Nicholas Jacobs, Martin Milligan, Ernst Wangermann.
USA: James E. Jackson, Louis Diskin, Betty Smith, Philip S. Foner, Leonard B. Levenson, William W. Weinstone.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — N.P. Karmanova, V.N. Sedikh, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, A.G. Yegorov.

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1983

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Page me39.iv
Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.

Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX. 39.5 A16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0539-5 (v. 39)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1982

Page Break me39.v

Contents

Page me39.v
PrefaceXVII

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
LETTERS
January 1852-December 1855

Page me39.v
1852

1. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 1 January 3
2. Engels to Marx. 6 January 4
3. Engels to Jenny Marx. 14 January 5
4. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 16 January 7
5. Marx to Engels. 20 January 9
6. Engels to Marx. 22 January 10
7. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 23 January 13
8. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 23 January 15
9. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. Between 23 January and 2 February 19
10. Marx to Engels. 24 January 20
11. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 26 January 21
12. Engels to Marx. 28 January 24
13. Engels to Marx. 29 January 25
14. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 30 January 26
15. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 30 January 27
16. Engels to Marx. 2 February 28
17. Marx to Engels. 4 February 29
18. Marx to Engels. 6 February 33

Page Break me39.vi
19. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 13 February 33
20. Engels to Marx. 17 February 35
21. Marx to Engels. 18 February 37
22. Engels to Marx. 19 February 38
23. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 19 February 39
24. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 20 February 40
25. Marx to Engels. 23 February 43
26. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 23 February 46
27. Marx to Engels. 27 February 49
28. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 27 February 52
29. Engels to Marx. 2 March 55
30. Marx to Engels. 5 March 58
31. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 5 March 60

32. Engels to Marx. 18 March 66
33. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 25 March 70
34. Marx to Engels. 30 March 72
35. Engels to Marx. 1 April 75
36. Marx to Engels. 5 April 76
37. Marx to Engels. 14 April 78
38. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 16 April 79
39. Engels to Marx. 20 April 81
40. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 22 April 83
41. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 23 April 84
42. Marx to Engels. 24 April 85
43. Engels to Marx. 25 April 87
44. Engels to Marx. 27 April 88
45. Engels to Marx. 29 April 90
46. Marx to Engels. 30 April 91
47. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 30 April 94
48. Engels to Marx. 1 May 97
49. Engels to Marx. 4 May 98
50. Marx to Engels. 6 May 100
51. Engels to Marx. 7 May 102
52. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 7 and about 15 May 105
53. Marx to Engels. 13 May 108
54. Engels to Marx. 19 May 109
55. Engels to Marx. 21 May 110
56. Engels to Marx. 22 May 111
57. Marx to Engels. 22 May 112

Page Break me39.vii
Page me39.vii

58. Engels to Marx. 24 May 113
59. Marx and Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 28 May 114
60. Marx to Jenny Marx. 11 June 116
61. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 11 June 118
62. Marx to Adolf Cluss. Before 26 June 122
63. Engels to Marx. 30 June 123
64. Marx to Engels. 3 July 124
65. Engels to Marx. 6 July 127
66. Marx to Engels. 13 July 129
67. Engels to Marx. 15 July 131
68. Marx to Engels. 20 July 134
69. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 20 July 135
70. Engels to Marx. 22 July 137
71. Marx to Gottfried Kinkel. 22 July138
72. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 30 July 139
73. Marx to Adolf Cluss. Beginning of August 144
74. Marx to Engels. 2 August 145

75. Marx to Engels. 5 August 145
76. Engels to Marx. 6 August 147
77. Marx to Engels. 6 August 148
78. Engels to Marx. 9 August 153
79. Marx to Engels. 10 August 153
80. Engels to Marx. 16 August 157
81. Marx to Engels. 19 August 159
82. Marx to Heinrich Brockhaus. 19 August 163
83. Engels to Marx. 24 August 164
84. Marx to Engels. 27 August 166
85. Marx to Peter Imandt. 27 August 167
86. Marx to Engels. 30 August 168
87. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 30 August 172
88. Marx to Engels. 2 September 175
89. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 3 September 176
90. Marx to Adolf Cluss. After 5 September 178
91. Engels to Marx. 7 September 179
92. Marx to Engels. 8 September 181
93. Marx to Engels. 9 September 183
94. Engels to Marx. 14 September 184
95. Marx to Engels. 18 September 185
96. Engels to Marx. 20 September 186

Page Break me39.viii
97. Engels to Marx. 23 September 188
98. Marx to Engels. 23 September 193
99. Engels to Marx. 24 September 196
100. Marx to Engels. 28 September 198
101. Engels to Marx. After 28 September 201
102. Engels to Marx. 4 October 201
103. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 5 October 204
104. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 8 October 205
105. Engels to Marx. 10 October 208
106. Marx to Engels. 12 October 210
107. Engels to Marx. 14 October 211
108. Engels to Marx. 18 October 212
109. Marx to A. von Brüningk. 18 October 213
110. Marx to Engels. 20 October 214
111. Engels to Marx. 22 October 214
112. Marx to Engels. 25 October 215
113. Marx to Engels. 26 October 217
114. Engels to Marx. 27 October 218
115. Marx to Engels. 27 October 220
116. Marx to Engels. 28 October 221
117. Engels to Marx. 28 October 228
118. Engels to Marx. 28 October 229

119. Engels to Marx. 31 October 231
120. Marx to Engels. 2 November 235
121. Marx to Engels. 4 November 236
122. Engels to Marx. 5-6 November 237
123. Marx to Engels. 10 November 241
124. Marx to Engels. 16 November 246
125. Marx to Engels. 19 November 247
126. Engels to Marie Blank. 22 November 248
127. Engels to Marx. 27 November 250
128. Engels to Marx. 29 November 252
129. Marx to Karl Eduard Vehse. End of November 254
130. Marx to Engels. 3 December 255
131. Marx to János Bangya. 3 December 257
132. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 7 December 259
133. Marx to Engels. 14 December 264
134. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 14 December 265
135. Marx to Gustav Zerffi. 28 December 267

Page Break me39.ix
Page me39.ix
1853

136. Engels to Marx. 11 January 271
137. Marx to Engels. 21 January 272
138. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 21 January 273
139. Marx to Engels. 29 January 274
140. Marx to J.G. Mayer. After 3 February 277
141. Engels to Marx. 11 February 278
142. Marx to Engels. 23 February 280
143. Engels to Marx. 10 March 283
144. Marx to Engels. 10 March 287
145. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 10 March 290
146. Engels to Marx. 11 March 292
147. Marx to Engels. 22-23 March 294
148. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 25 March 298
149. Engels to Marx. 10 April 301
150. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 12 April 303
151. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 17 April 312
152. Marx to Engels. 23 April 314
153. Marx to Engels. 26 April 315
154. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 26 April 317
155. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 26 April 318
156. Engels to Marx. 26 April 319
157. Marx to Engels. 27 April 321
158. Engels to Marx. 27 April 322
159. Marx to Engels. 28 April 322

160. Engels to Marx. 20 May 323
161. Marx to Engels. 21 May 324
162. Engels to Marx. Before 28 May 325
163. Engels to Marx. 31 May 328
164. Engels to Marx. 1 June 329
165. Marx to Engels. 2 June 330
166. Engels to Marx. 6 June 335
167. Engels to Marx. 9 June 342
168. Marx to Engels. 14 June 344
169. Marx to Adolf Cluss. About 14 June 348
170. Marx to Engels. 29 June 350
171. Marx to Engels. 8 July 351
172. Engels to Marx. 9 July 352
173. Marx to Engels. 18 July 354

Page Break me39.x
174. Marx to Engels. 18 August 355
175. Engels to Marx. 24 August 357
176. Marx to James Grant, Editor of The Morning Advertiser. 31 August 358
177. Marx to Engels. 3 September 359
178. Marx to Engels. 7 September 363
179. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 15 September 366
180. Marx to Engels. 17 September 368
181. Engels to Marx. 19 September 369
182. Marx to Karl Blind. 26 September 371
183. Marx to Engels. 28 September 371
184. Engels to Marx. 29 September 374
185. Marx to Engels. 30 September 375
186. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. Beginning of October 377
187. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 5 October 378
188. Marx to Engels. 8 October 385
189. Marx to Engels. 12 October 387
190. Marx to Karl Blind. 13 October 389
191. Marx to Adolf Cluss. 18 October 390
192. Marx to Engels. 28 October 393
193. Marx to Engels. 2 November 395
194. Marx to Engels. 6 November 396
195. Marx to Adolf Cluss. Mid-November 397
196. Marx to Engels. 21 November 398
197. Marx to Engels. 23 November 399
198. Marx to Engels. 2 December 400
199. Marx to Engels. About 12 December 402
200. Marx to Engels. 14 December 403

Page me39.x
1854

201. Marx to Engels. 5 January 406
202. Marx to Engels. 10 January 407
203. Marx to Engels. 18 January 408
204. Marx to Engels. 25 January 410
205. Marx to Engels. 9 February 412
206. Marx to Engels. 15 February 413
207. Marx to Engels. 9 March 414
208. Marx to Engels. About 11 March 418

Page Break me39.xi
209. Marx to Engels. 17 March 418
210. Engels to Marx. 23 March 419
211. Marx to Engels. 29 March 421
212. Engels to H.J. Lincoln, Editor of The Daily News. 30 March 423
213. Engels to Marx. 3 April 426
214. Marx to Engels. 4 April 428
215. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 5 April 430
216. Marx to Engels. 19 April 433
217. Engels to Marx. 20 April 434
218. Engels to Marx. 21 April 436
219. Marx to Engels. 22 April 438
220. Engels to Marx. About 24 April 441
221. Marx to Engels. 29 April 442
222. Engels to Marx. 1 May 443
223. Marx to Engels. 3 May 445
224. Marx to Engels. 6 May 448
225. Engels to Marx. 9 May 450
226. Marx to Engels. 22 May 453
227. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 1 June 454
228. Marx to Engels. 3 June 457
229. Engels to Marx. 10 June 459
230. Marx to Engels. 13 June 461
231. Engels to Marx. 15 June 463
232. Marx to Engels. 21 June 464
233. Marx to Engels. 27 June 465
234. Engels to Marx. 6 July 466
235. Marx to Engels. 7 July 467
236. Engels to Marx. 20 July 468
237. Marx to Engels. 22 July 469
238. Marx to Engels. 27 July 472
239. Marx to Engels. 8 August 477
240. Marx to Engels. 26 August 478
241. Marx to Engels. 2 September 479
242. Marx to Engels. 13 September 481
243. Marx to Engels. 22 September 483

244. Marx to Engels. 29 September 483
245. Marx to Engels. 10 October 484
246. Marx to Engels. 17 October 487

Page Break me39.xii
247. Marx to Engels. 25 October 491
248. Marx to Engels. 26 October 492
249. Marx to Engels. 10 November 497
250. Marx to Engels. 22 November 498
251. Marx to Engels. 30 November 500
252. Marx to Engels. 2 December 501
253. Marx to Engels. 8 December 504
254. Marx to Engels. 15 December 505
255. Marx to Moritz Elsner. 20 December 506

Page me39.xii
1855

256. Marx to Engels. 12 January 508
257. Marx to Engels. 17 January 508
258. Marx to Engels. 19 January 510
259. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 23 January 511
260. Marx to Engels. 24 January 514
261. Marx to Engels. 30 January 515
262. Marx to Engels. 31 January 515
263. Marx to Engels. 2 February 520
264. Marx to Engels. 13 February 522
265. Marx to Engels. 3 March 524
266. Marx to Engels. 8 March 526
267. Marx to Engels. 16 March 528
268. Marx to Engels. 27 March 528
269. Marx to Engels. 30 March 529
270. Marx to Engels. 6 April 530
271. Marx to Engels. 12 April 533
272. Marx to Engels. 16 April 534
273. Marx to Moritz Elsner. 17 April 534
274. Marx to Engels. 16 May 535
275. Marx to Engels. 18 May 536
276. Marx to Engels. 15 June 537
277. Marx to Engels. 26 June 538
278. Marx to Engels. 29 June 539
279. Marx to Engels. 3 July 540
280. Marx to Engels. 17 July 542
281. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 28 July 543
282. Marx to Engels. 7 August 544

Page Break me39.xiii
283. Marx to Engels. 1 September 545
284. Marx to Engels. 6 September 547
285. Marx to Amalie Daniels. 6 September 548
286. Marx to Engels. 11 September 550
287. Marx to Moritz Elsner. 11 September 550
288. Marx to Moritz Elsner. 8 November 554
289. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 8 November 556
290. Marx to Engels. 7 December 557
291. Marx to Engels. 11 December 559
292. Engels to Marx. 12 December 560
293. Marx to Engels. 14 December 562

Page me39.xiii
APPENDICES

1. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 7 January 1852 567
2. Jenny Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 9 January 1852 569
3. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 16 January 1852 571
4. Jenny Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 27 February 1852 572
5. Jenny Marx to Adolf Cluss. 15 October 1852 573
6. Jenny Marx to Adolf Cluss. 30 October 1852 576
7. Jenny Marx to Adolf Cluss. 10 March 1853 579
8. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 27 April 1853 581
9. Adolf Cluss to Joseph Weydemeyer. 15 May 1853 582
10. Adolf Cluss to Joseph Weydemeyer. 2 June 1853 583
11. Adolf Cluss to Joseph Weydemeyer. 14 June 1853 584
12. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 9 September 1853 584
13. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 24 November 1853 586
14. Adolf Cluss to Joseph Weydemeyer. 12 December 1853 586
15. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. End of March 1854 588
16. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 13 May 1854 588
17. Jenny Marx to Frederick Engels. 23 May 1854 589

Page me39.xiii
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 593
Name Index 667
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 712
Index of Periodicals 742
Subject Index 751
Glossary of Geographical Names 763

Page Break me39.xiv
Page me39.xiv

ILLUSTRATIONS

Ferdinand Freiligrath 44-45
28 Dean Street, Soho, London, where Marx lived from 1850 to 1856 44-45
Third page of Marx's letter to Weydemeyer of 5 March 1852 63
Adolph Bermbach 252-53
Ernest Jones 252-53
Third page of Engels' letter to Marx of 6 June 1853 337
Die Reform of 2 November 1853 with Marx's article 'Palmerston' translated by Cluss 379
Military road from Constantinople to Nissa (lithographic sketch) 415
Edgar Marx (Musch) 531
Amalie and Roland Daniels 540-41
Moritz Elsner 551
Jenny Marx with her daughter Jenny 572-73
Laura Marx 572-73

Page Break me39.xv
Page me39.xv
Translated by PETER and BETTY ROSS

Page Break me39.xvi
Page Break me39.xvii

Preface

Page me39.xvii

Volume 39 of the Collected Works of Marx and Engels contains their letters to each other and to third persons from 1852 to 1855.

Page me39.xvii

The letters in this volume give us a glimpse of the creative methods of Marx and Engels, the background to their theoretical writings from 1852 to 1855, and of the genesis of many of their theories. These letters cover the period of political reaction that descended on Europe with the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution. From 1852 to 1855 fairly substantial changes took place in the world's economic and political life. The economic boom that had begun at the end of the 1840s in Europe proved unstable. There were already signs, in 1853, of another economic crisis that came to a head in 1857 and reached world dimensions for the first time. The Crimean War broke out in 1853, and this substantially changed the distribution of political forces on the Continent and influenced the internal development of a number of leading European powers.

Page me39.xvii

The economic and political processes that took place in this period did much to determine the nature of the scientific and practical activities undertaken by Marx and Engels. From 1851 their main objectives were the further development of economic theory and research. Marx's scientific studies in this field were temporarily interrupted in 1852, when he and Engels concentrated on the theoretical generalisation of the results of the revolution, on the struggle against police persecution of members of the Communist League, and on the unmasking of the divisive activities of the sectarian elements in the League and the pseudo-revolutionary pronouncements of various petty-bourgeois refugee groups. From 1853 to 1855, Marx and Engels followed with intense and unflagging interest the development of the conflict over the so-called Eastern Question and the course of the Crimean War. Throughout all these years, as in the previous period, they were both still principally concerned with the struggle for the proletarian party, for the organisational and ideological unity and education of the proletarian revolutionaries, and for the preservation and development of the proletariat's international connections.

Page Break me39.xviii
Page me39.xviii
In the personal lives of Marx and Engels, these years were among the most difficult. The harsh privations of life in emigration cost Marx and his wife Jenny the lives of two of their children, the one-year-old Franziska and the eight-year-old Edgar. Extremely difficult conditions constantly undermined Marx's health. Engels at this period was forced to give much of his time to commerce, which compelled him to renounce many research plans; however, this work provided a living not only for himself, but for the Marx family. In addition, as we see from many of their letters, Marx and Engels were preoccupied throughout these years with their comrades and sympathisers living in poverty in emigration or languishing in German prisons.

Page me39.xviii
The letters in this volume, as in Volume 38, reflect the enormous amount of work done by Marx and Engels on the theoretical analysis of the experience of the 1848-49 revolution. During the first months of 1852, Marx wrote one of his outstanding works, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11). The material in this volume makes it possible to trace clearly the story of the publication as well as of the writing of this work, set down immediately after the counter-revolutionary coup in France on 2 December 1851. In addition, the letters contain an analysis of the processes at work after The Eighteenth Brumaire was written, at a time when Louis Bonaparte had consolidated his regime and was preparing to proclaim the Empire (see Engels to Weydemeyer on 30 January, Engels to Marx on 18 March, and Marx to Engels on 23 September 1852).
Page me39.xviii
Marx's letter to Weydemeyer of 5 March 1852 is a very important document that seems directly to continue the theoretical generalisation of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte. In it, Marx briefly outlined the substance of his revolutionary deductions about the world historical role of the proletariat, the innovation that he introduced into the theory of the classes and the class struggle. 'Now as for myself, I do not claim to have discovered either the existence of classes in modern society or the struggle between them.

Page Break me39.xix

Long before me, bourgeois historians had described the historical development of this struggle between the classes, as had bourgeois economists their economic anatomy. My own contribution was 1. to show that the existence of classes is merely bound up with certain historical phases in the development of production; 2. that the class struggle necessarily leads to the dictatorship of the proletariat; 3. that this dictatorship itself constitutes no more than a transition to the abolition of all classes and to a classless society' (see this volume, pp. 62-65). Noting the enormous theoretical value of this letter, Lenin wrote: 'In these words, Marx succeeded in expressing with striking clarity, first, the chief and radical difference between his theory and that of the foremost and most profound thinkers of the bourgeoisie; and, secondly, the essence of his theory of the state' (V.I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 25, p. 411).
Page me39.xix

The correspondence contains much interesting information about the writing of Engels' work, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 11), in which Engels examines the prerequisites, nature and motive forces of the 1848-49 revolution in the German states from the standpoint of historical materialism. The letters in this volume show clearly how much creative contact there was between Marx and Engels in the composition of this work (see, for instance, Engels' letters to Marx of 29 January and 29 April, and Marx's letter to Engels of 18 February 1852).
Page me39.xix

A large part in the life of Marx and Engels in 1852 and the first half of 1853 was taken up by practical revolutionary activity. In an atmosphere reflecting the general decline of the revolutionary movement, Marx and Engels had to wage an intensive struggle against ideas alien to the working class and against revolutionary adventurism; they also had to overcome the pusillanimity, apathy and ignorance of certain members of the movement.
Page me39.xix

Of particular interest in this connection is the correspondence with Weydemeyer and Cluss, Communist League members who had emigrated to the USA. Marx and Engels supported in every way the aspirations of these two men to organise the publication in the USA of a German-language weekly, Die Revolution. Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte and Engels' article 'England' (see present edition, Vol. 11) were specially written for it. Seeing contributions to the magazine as an important party task, Marx, as his wife Jenny wrote to Weydemeyer on 13 February 1852, had 'commandeered on your behalf pretty well all available communist quills', that is to say, Wilhelm Wolff, Georg Weerth, Ferdinand Wolff, Ernest Jones, Wilhelm Pieper, Johann Eccarius and Ferdinand Freiligrath (p. 35).

Page Break me39.xx
Page me39.xx

For nearly three years, Cluss and Weydemeyer drew on letters from Marx and Engels when writing their own articles, which were printed in the American and German-American democratic press, and especially in the newspaper Die Reform, published in New York (see Marx's letters to Cluss of 17 April, about 14 June, 18 October, mid-November 1853, and others).
Page me39.xx

In England, Marx and Engels actively assisted and supported the proletarian publications being brought out by Ernest Jones, leader of the Left-wing Chartists. In Ernest Jones's Notes to the People, Marx wrote, 'you will find all the day-to-day history of the English proletariat' (see this volume, p. 42). They contributed to The People's Paper themselves and induced others to contribute likewise (Eccarius, Pieper, Cluss and their associates), and took part in the actual editorial work (see Marx's letters to Engels of 2 September and 23 September 1852 and 23 November 1853).

Page me39.xx

The advanced development of capitalist industry in England and its huge working class, together with the revolutionary traditions of Chartism, gave Marx and Engels grounds to assume that conditions existed there for the creation of a mass proletarian party. As their letters show, Marx and Engels helped Jones and other Left-wing Chartist leaders during these years to reorganise the National Charter Association, believing that the struggle for the rebirth of the Chartist movement was vital for the political unification of the proletariat in England. It was only natural that they constantly followed the progress of the strike movement of the English working class (see, for example, Marx's letter to Engels of 30 September 1853).

Page me39.xx

The struggle for the independence of the working-class movement and its freedom from other class influences was a matter of constant concern to Marx and Engels. They condemned in the strongest terms the shift towards bourgeois radicalism on the part of George Julian Harney, the former Chartist leader, and had a high opinion of the revolutionary firmness of Ernest Jones, who opposed the efforts of the reformists. 'Jones is moving in quite the right direction,' wrote Engels to Marx on 18 March 1852, 'and we may well say that, without our doctrine, he would not have taken the right path' (see this volume, p. 68). When Jones later began vacillating and seemed inclined to make concessions to the petty-bourgeois democrats, Marx reacted with much disapproval (see Marx's letter to Engels of 13 February 1855).

Page Break me39.xxi

Page me39.xxi

The correspondence reflects the fierce ideological battle fought by Marx and Engels against the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois democrats who were trying to divert the proletarian revolutionaries from the real objectives of the class struggle. Mazzini, Kossuth, Ledru-Rollin and Louis Blanc were all criticised for ignoring the objective economic laws and for their subjectivist approach to crucial decisions, as well as for their extremely limited social programmes and their Bonapartist illusions. Moreover, Marx and Engels firmly rejected the conspiratorial tactics of Mazzini and his adherents (see, in particular, Engels' letter to Marx of 11 February and Marx's letter to Engels of 23 February 1853).

Page me39.xxi

Marx and Engels were implacably hostile to the internal squabbles of the various petty-bourgeois refugee organisations which were turning political activity into careerism and intrigue and were threatening to discredit the revolutionary movement. The letters reveal the background to their joint authorship of the richly comic satirical pamphlet, The Great Men of the Exile (see present edition, Vol. 11) in which they denounced the fatuous self-importance and the futile activities of the leaders of the German petty-bourgeois emigration (Kinkel, Ruge, Heinzen, Struve and others).

Page me39.xxi

The founders of Marxism saw a particular danger at this time in the activities of the Willich-Schapper separatist group which had caused a split in the Communist League in 1850. Its pseudo-revolutionary catch-phrases and adventurism brought down police repression on many League members, especially the German workers. Marx wrote angrily to Engels on 30 August 1852: '...from a secure hiding-place, they are playing into the hands of the German governments, especially the Prussian, for the purpose of pseudo-agitation and self-aggrandisement' (p. 169).
Page me39.xxi

The adventurism of the Willich-Schapper group took a particularly dangerous turn, since in 1852 there began in Cologne a trial trumped up by the Prussian police against the communists. This volume (and Volume 38) illustrates Marx's and Engels' struggle, from the very start of the investigation (in May 1851), against the provocatory nature of its preparation and conduct, and against the inhuman treatment of the detainees. Through press agitation and publicity they did all they could to protect the communists from slander and treachery and to unmask the forgeries and irregularities of the Prussian police and court authorities (see, for example, the letters of Marx to Engels of 24 January, Engels to Marx of 28 January, and Marx to Cluss of 7 and about 15 May 1852).

Page Break me39.xxii
Page me39.xxii

Marx and Engels were particularly active during the trial itself in October and November 1852, when they virtually handled the defence of the accused, supplying the lawyers with the necessary material. A picture of the tremendous work done at the time by Marx, Engels and their comrades in the Communist League is given by a letter from Jenny Marx to Cluss of 30 October 1852, published in the Appendices to this volume. The outstanding contribution to the struggle to expose the Cologne communist trial was Marx's pamphlet, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11), the background to which can be traced in the letters in this volume. Attributing great importance to the publication and distribution of this work, which denounced the entire Prussian governmental system, Marx wrote to Cluss on 25 March 1853: '...at the present moment, we could deal our beloved Prussians no more telling blow' (p. 299).
Page me39.xxii

After sentence had been passed in Cologne on the Communist League members, Marx organised, through Cluss, the collection in the USA of money for assistance to the condemned men and their families. On 7 December 1852, sending Cluss a written appeal for the collection of money, Marx wrote: 'Here it is a matter of ... a definite party aim whose fulfilment is demanded by the honour of the workers' party' (p. 260).
Page me39.xxii

After the Cologne trial, it became clear that it would be inadvisable to continue, under conditions of reaction, the activities of the Communist League as a relatively narrow illegal organisation. On 19 November 1852, Marx informed Engels that, at his suggestion, a resolution had been passed by the London District of the Communist League on the disbanding of the organisation. After the League had been dissolved, Marx, Engels and their associates continued, in other forms, their activities in welding together the ranks of the proletariat so that the best revolutionary and internationalist traditions of the Communist League should be absorbed and spread by successive generations of participants in the proletarian struggle. Their correspondence, in particular, shows that even during the years after the Communist League ceased to exist, Marx and Engels maintained contact with representatives of the proletarian movement in various countries.

Page me39.xxii

As if summing up what had been achieved, and setting up the targets for the proletarian revolutionaries in the period of reaction and the movement's temporary decline, Engels wrote to

Page Break me39.xxiii

Weydemeyer on 12 April 1853: '...German communism ... has passed its matriculation' (see this volume, p. 308). Engels noted the heightened ideological level of Marx's adherents and their preparedness for new revolutionary battles: '...the Marx party does do a good deal of swotting, and one only has to look at the way the other émigré jackasses snap up this or that new catchword, thereby becoming more bemused than ever, to realise that our party's superiority has increased both absolutely and relatively. As indeed it must, for la besogne sera rude [it will be a tough business]' (p. 309). Engels' letter, marking out the line of conduct for the proletarian revolutionaries under the conditions of an expected upsurge in the movement, was an extremely important example of how to decide the tactics of the proletarian party in the bourgeois-democratic revolution.

Page me39.xxiii

After the close of the Cologne trial and the publication of Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, Marx and Engels once again concentrated their main efforts on theoretical research. Their letters from 1853 to 1855 testify to the scope and variety of their scientific interests. Apart from the works and articles published during these years, several dozen of Marx's notebooks have been preserved with plans, copied passages and notes concerned primarily with economic problems and also with the history of Europe, the Orient and Ancient Rome, the problems of the colonial policy pursued by England and other capitalist states, and so on. Engels began studying the theory of war more intensively, and also world history, philology and other sciences.

Page me39.xxiii

The urgent theoretical elaboration of the problems of economics and the criticism of bourgeois political economy were not dictated by scientific interest alone, as Marx had already shown by the mid-40s, but also by the objective demands of arming the revolutionary proletariat ideologically. Economic theory was to introduce the maximum clarity into the understanding of the relationship between labour and capital. Consequently, Engels regarded the completion of Marx's economic research as most urgent. 'You ought to finish your Economy,' he wrote to Marx on 11 March 1853, 'later on, as soon as we have a newspaper, we could bring it out in WEEKLY NUMBERS... This would provide all our by then restored associations with a basis for debate' (p. 293).

Page me39.xxiii

In the first half of the 1850s, Marx made important progress in preparing the ground for a revolution in the science of economics — the discovery of the tendencies underlying the capitalist mode of production. However, as is shown by the above-quoted letter from Engels, and also by Marx's letter to Cluss of 15 September 1853 (p. 367), neither Engels nor Marx himself yet realised how much ground had to be covered before the appearance of the first volume of Capital.

Page Break me39.xxiv
Page me39.xxiv

Meanwhile, the letters in this volume are convincing testimony that certain propositions of Marx's political economy had become known even before the appearance of the first part of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy and Capital. Marx frequently expounded his economic views in his letters to Engels, Lassalle, and also Cluss and Weydemeyer. He endeavoured in this way to arm his associates for the battle of ideas with the petty-bourgeois democrats and their ideologues. For example, in his letter to Weydemeyer of 5 March 1852, already quoted above, in his letter to Engels of 14 June 1853 and in the letters to Cluss of 5 and 18 October 1853, Marx severely criticised the vulgar bourgeois economist Henry Charles Carey, whose views on the 'harmony of classes' in the USA had become fairly widespread by this time. Marx dwelt on certain peculiarities in the development of capitalism in the USA, on its place in the general system of capitalist relations, and on its competitive struggle with English capital and the resulting specific nature of development of American economic thought. Carey's views, wrote Marx, show that 'in the United States bourgeois society is still far too immature for the class struggle to be made perceptible and comprehensible' (p. 62).
Page me39.xxiv

Marx notes in his letters the decline of bourgeois political economy, and the marked tendency among the epigones of the English classical school of economists to distort and vulgarise the teachings of Adam Smith and David Ricardo. Comparing the views of Ricardo and Carey on rent and wages, Marx stressed that Carey's attacks on English political economy in the person of Ricardo expressed only Carey's desire to gloss over the contradictions of capitalist production or to prove the possibility of abolishing those contradictions while preserving the foundations of bourgeois society.
Page me39.xxiv

Revealing the groundlessness of Carey's claims about the harmony and co-operation of the classes in American society, Marx wrote: 'It is par trop [altogether too] naive to suggest that, if the total product of labour rises, the three classes among whom it is to be shared will share equally in that growth. If profit were to rise by 20%, the workers would have to strike to obtain a 2% rise in WAGES' (p. 384).

Page Break me39.xxv
Page me39.xxv

Marx's critique of Carey's views in his letters was published by Cluss as an article ('The “Best Paper in the Union” and Its “Best Men” and Political Economists') in the newspaper Die Reform (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 623-32). It thus became available to a certain section of the American readership. This material of 1852-53 subsequently served Marx as the basis for a more substantial critique of Carey's views and vulgar bourgeois political economy in the Economic Manuscripts of 1857-1858 and in Capital.

Page me39.xxv

Marx invariably passed on to Engels the results of his economic research. Their letters show how closely they followed the economic development of the European countries and America, and how carefully they analysed the statistical material confirming the antagonistic and cyclic nature of capitalist production's development. The elaboration of the problem of crises was of special interest to them, since they associated a new revolutionary upsurge with the end of the prosperous phase and with an inevitable economic decline (see Engels' letter to Marx about this on 24 August 1852 and Marx's letter to Lassalle of 23 January 1855).

Page me39.xxv

From the analysis mainly of English trade and industry, they detected the symptoms of an imminent and inevitable economic crisis which could, under prevailing conditions, serve as a powerful stimulus to the revolutionary movement in Europe (see Engels to Weydemeyer on 27 February 1852, Marx to Engels on 29 January 1853, Engels to Weydemeyer on 12 April 1853, Marx to Cluss on 15 September 1853, and Engels to Marx on 29 September 1853).

Page me39.xxv

Marx and Engels paid great attention to the problems of history. They were stimulated to take up historical research by the desire for a deeper understanding of the processes of social development, especially during the capitalist period, and in order to comprehend the historical factors behind the events and phenomena of their own times. This was important for the development of the correct revolutionary tactics. The letters in the present volume give an idea not only of the range of historical subjects in which Marx and Engels were interested, but of their conclusions and generalisations.

Page me39.xxv

The study of world history enabled Marx and Engels to elucidate certain characteristics in the development of capitalism and also of precapitalist social-economic formations. Thus, dealing with the history of Ancient Rome, Marx disclosed the material causes of the class struggle in ancient society. In his letter to Engels of 8 March 1855, he wrote: 'Internal history resolves itself

Page Break me39.xxvi

PLAINLY into the struggle between small and large landed property, specifically modified, of course, by slavery relations' (p. 527). In his letter to Engels of 27 July 1854, analysing the distinguished French historian Thierry's Essai sur l'histoire de la formation et du progrés du tiers état he traces how the elements of the future capitalist system emerged and developed in the bowels of feudalism, and he notes the part played by the struggle of the Third Estate against the feudal aristocracy during the period of transition from feudalism to capitalism. While acknowledging Thierry's merits, Marx points out the limitations of his views, and his inability to understand the material roots of class contradictions or the nature and character of class antagonisms under capitalism. 'Had Mr Thierry read our stuff, he would know that the decisive opposition between bourgeoisie and peuple does not, of course, crystallise until the former ceases, as tiers-état, to oppose the clergé and the noblesse' (p. 474). This letter of Marx's is of fundamental importance for pinpointing the general methodological shortcomings in the views common to French bourgeois historians during the Restoration and to bourgeois historiographers in general.

Page me39.xxvi

The letter also contains an important formulation on the decisive significance of the alliance between the bourgeoisie and the peasantry in the struggle against feudalism. Lenin laid special emphasis on this idea of Marx's: 'The French bourgeoisie won when it decided to go with the peasants' ('Conspectus of "The Correspondence of K. Marx and F. Engels. 1844-1883"', Moscow, 1968, Russian edition, p. 7).
Page me39.xxvi

In connection with the revolutionary events in Spain in 1854, Marx studied the history of the revolutionary movement of the Spanish people in order to 'discover exactly the springs behind developments' (p. 480).
Page me39.xxvi

On the eve of the Crimean War, when inter-state contradictions became suddenly prominent in Asia Minor and the Balkans, Marx and Engels devoted special attention to analysing the history of Turkey, Persia and the countries of the Arabian peninsula, especially their social and political development, the role of communal landownership, their way of life, culture and religious trends (see Engels to Marx on about 26 May, Marx to Engels on 2 and 14 June, and Engels to Marx on 6 June 1853). These letters illustrate the formation of Marx's and Engels' materialist interpretation of religious movements in the East, showing their connection with the material conditions of life as a result of the transition from the nomadic to the settled life, the changes in trade routes, and so on. The letters in this volume also show the special attention Marx devoted at this time to India, then Great Britain's most important imperial possession.

Page Break me39.xxvii
Page me39.xxvii

Studying the history of these countries enabled Marx and Engels to bring out the salient characteristics of their social development. 'The absence of landed property is indeed the key to the whole of the East. Therein lies its political and religious history,' remarked Engels in a letter to Marx of 6 June 1853 (p. 339). In the same letter, he disclosed the reasons for the weak development of private landownership in all the Eastern countries, especially during the Middle Ages: the natural conditions in these countries necessitated the building and maintenance of irrigation works, and this was only possible within the scope of the central authority. 'In the East, the government has always consisted of 3 departments only: Finance (pillage at home), War (pillage at home and abroad), and travaux publics [public works], provision for reproduction' (p. 339). Marx used this idea and developed it in his article 'The British Rule in India' (see present edition, Vol. 12). The concentration of considerable means of production in the hands of despotic governments, the closed and isolated position of the village commune, the chief economic and social unit of Asiatic societies — these, concluded Marx and Engels, were behind the more retarded historical development of the Eastern countries when the transition from feudalism to capitalism was being accomplished in the West.

Page me39.xxvii

Marx and Engels sharply denounced England's system of colonial domination in India, underlining its destructive consequences. By preserving the worst features of Eastern despotism in the conquered countries, the English had ceased to worry about maintaining irrigation, as a result of which, Engels pointed out, 'Indian agriculture is going to wrack and ruin' (p. 340).
Page me39.xxvii

The process by which the colonial and dependent countries were drawn into the orbit of world capitalism led Marx and Engels to the conclusion that there was a deep mutual relationship and mutual dependence between the destiny of the capitalist countries and that of the colonial world. They became increasingly convinced that the proletarian movement in the metropolitan countries could find its own natural ally in the maturing national liberation movement.
Page me39.xxvii

During these years, Engels' gifts as military theoretician of the proletarian party came to the fore. He gave great attention to the history of the revolutionary wars of 1848-49, intending to write a book on the subject. 'I should like to have time before the next revolution,' he wrote to Weydemeyer on 12 April 1853, 'to study and describe thoroughly at least the campaigns of 1848 and 1849 in Italy and Hungary' (p. 309). He did not carry out this intention, and this gives all the more significance to his letters to Marx of 6 July 1852, 10 June 1854, and a number of others in which he gives a critical analysis of the military operations of the revolutionary armies in 1848 and 1849. A number of letters contain fundamental observations by Engels on military and military-historical science and its theoreticians, Clausewitz, Napier, Jomini, Willisen, and about the generalship of Napoleon, Wellington and others. Engels outlined his approach to the analysis of military operations and military science in a letter to the editor of The Daily News, 30 March 1854. His extensive knowledge of military history and his use of dialectical materialist methodology were demonstrated in his articles for the New-York Daily Tribune during the Crimean War. 'Your military articles,' wrote Marx to Engels on 5 January 1854, 'have created a great stir. A rumour is circulating in New York that they were written by General Scott' (p. 407).

Page Break me39.xxviii
Page me39.xxviii

Philological studies were always among the scientific interests pursued by Marx and Engels. During these years Marx studied Spanish, reading Calderon and Cervantes in the original. Engels studied the Slavonic (including Russian) and Oriental languages, especially Persian, showing outstanding linguistic abilities. Of considerable interest is Engels' outline of the principles of translation when he was analysing a translation of the first chapter of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte done from German into English by Wilhelm Pieper (see Engels' letter to Marx of 23 September 1852).

Page me39.xxviii

The period from 1852 to 1855 was one of intensive political journalism on the part of Marx and Engels. Their articles provide rich and often witty insights into and valuable analyses of the capitalist world of their times. Their journalistic activity was closely bound up with their theoretical studies. Research helped them to understand the underlying causes of current events, and important theoretical generalisations frequently emerged from articles on specific subjects. This mutual interaction of the various sides of their work is clearly reflected in their correspondence.

Page me39.xxviii

A recurrent idea in the letters of Marx and Engels is that of the necessity for using any opportunity during the years of reaction to promote the revolutionary point of view on the most important political questions in order to influence public opinion in the interests of the working class. 'We are not doing our enemies a favour by writting for them. Tout au contraire [Quite the contrary].

Page Break me39.xxix

We could hardly play them a worse trick...” wrote Marx to Cluss on 14 June 1853 (p. 350).

Page me39.xxix

Marx and Engels, who began contributing to the New-York Daily Tribune in 1851, continued writing for it in 1852-55. Marx was the official correspondent for the newspaper, but many articles were written at Marx's request by Engels. At first, as can be seen from the letters in this volume, Marx wrote his articles in German and sent them to Engels in Manchester for translation. In January 1853, Marx himself began writing in English. This enabled him to keep his work as correspondent very much up-to-date. From 1853 to 1855, Marx sent to New York nearly every week or twice weekly his own or Engels' articles, devoted to the most topical and varied problems of the time.

Page me39.xxix

The articles by Marx and Engels for this bourgeois newspaper are a model combination of sober analysis and high principles. Frequently, Marx and Engels even managed to publicise ideas opposed to the views of the newspaper's editors (see Marx's letters to Engels about this on 14 June 1853 and 3 May 1854). The articles aroused great interest among the reading public and Marx's services were frequently acknowledged by the newspaper itself (see, for example, Marx's letter to Engels of 26 April 1853).

Page me39.xxix

However, writing for this newspaper, for all its progressiveness, was not easy. The editors treated the articles with scant ceremony, arbitrary interpolations were frequently allowed, and many articles were printed as unsigned leaders. Marx wrote to Engels on 14 December 1853: 'Needless to say, the Tribune is making a great splash with your articles, POOR Dana, no doubt, being regarded as their author. At the same time they have appropriated “Palmerston” [Marx's work 'Lord Palmerston'], which means that, for 8 weeks past, Marx-Engels have virtually constituted the EDITORIAL STAFF of the Tribune' (see this volume, p. 404). Marx frequently protested against these irregularities (see Marx to Engels on 2 November 1853, 5 January, and 22 April 1854).

Page me39.xxix

From the end of December 1854, a great deal of Marx's journalistic writing went on contributions to the German Neue Oder-Zeitung, one of the few German opposition papers to continue appearing during the years of the reaction. The invitation to contribute to this newspaper gave Marx and Engels the chance of direct contact with the German public, including the proletarian readership. A description of the Neue Oder-Zeitung is contained in Marx's letter to Moritz Elsner, the editor, on 11 September 1855: 'Considering the difficult circumstances and the limited space at your disposal, your paper is, in my opinion, edited with great skill and tact, and in such a way that the intelligent reader may read between the lines' (p. 553).

Page Break me39.xxx
Page me39.xxx

The letters show the extent of Marx's and Engels' creative rapport and day-to-day collaboration. For instance, the details on the activities of the Aberdeen coalition cabinet as given in Marx's letter to Engels of 31 January 1855, were used by Engels for his article 'The Late British Government' (see present edition, Vol. 13). They often edited each other's articles. Engels frequently wrote dispatches instead of Marx, who was busy with urgent party matters (for instance, during the period of the Cologne trial) or was unable to work owing to illness or domestic problems.
Page me39.xxx

In their letters, Marx and Engels paid much attention to England's economic and political position, to describing the various classes of English society and to the struggle of the political parties. Acknowledging that the English political system was at that time more progressive than those of other European countries, Marx nevertheless unmasked the myth of England as a bulwark of constitutional freedoms and civic equality. He tried to show the real class nature of the English constitutional monarchy — the oligarchic domination, tricked out in parliamentary forms, of the landed aristocracy and the bourgeoisie. In a series of letters, Marx stressed the anti-democratic nature of the English electoral system, which deprived the majority of the people of voting rights (see, for example, Marx's letter to Cluss of 20 July 1852).
Page me39.xxx

As far back as 1852, Marx had detected signs of crisis in the English oligarchic system of government — a system which helped the ruling classes give their domination the semblance of free rivalry between two political parties, the Whigs and the Tories. From the formation of the Aberdeen coalition government at the end of 1852 until its fall in 1855, Marx and Engels observed the disintegration of these old bourgeois-aristocratic parties of the ruling oligarchy. Marx's letter to Cluss on 20 July 1852 and one from Engels to Weydemeyer on 12 April 1853 developed the idea that the reform of the state system had become urgently necessary and that the crisis of the existing political parties could be overcome only 'from without by the pressure of the masses' and that it would 'no longer be possible to govern England without considerably extending the pays légal [franchise]' (pp. 136 and 306-07). In this way, Marx and Engels drew attention to the fact that the English working class, despite the decline of its political activities in the first half of the 1850s in comparison with the period of Chartism at its height, was stepping into the arena of the country's political life as a force without whose participation no progressive changes would be possible.

Page Break me39.xxxi

Page me39.xxxi

Marx and Engels showed great interest in the economic and political development of France because they set great store by the revolutionary traditions of the French people and the French working class and did not lose their faith in its vigour and heroism. They foresaw the dangerous consequences for the French and for the whole European proletariat in the consolidation of the Bonapartist dictatorship. The letters disclose the essence of the anti-popular regime of the Second Empire and note the most characteristic feature of Bonapartism — the combination of the traditional policy of crude police and military terror towards the oppressed classes with broad demagogy in social and national questions both in home and foreign policy. The correspondence gives a vivid picture of the stock exchange machinations and speculative ventures of the bourgeoisie during the Second Empire, the corruption and adventurism in the country's economic life as well as in government circles. In 1853, Marx and Engels had already predicted a short life for French industrial 'prosperity', stressing that the government's policy would inevitably plunge the French economy into chaos. They noted with delight the awakening dissatisfaction with the Bonapartist regime on the part of the broad masses and forecast the inevitable collapse of Napoleon III's empire (see Engels to Weydemeyer on 12 April and to Marx on 26 April 1853; Marx to Engels on 12 October 1853 and to Elsner on 8 November 1855).
Page me39.xxxi

The main power which was destined to play a decisive role in the struggle with the Bonapartist regime was, in the opinion of Marx and Engels, the French proletariat. 'So you can see,' wrote Marx to Cluss on 25 March 1853, 'that the proletarian lion isn't dead' — thus drawing attention to the mass anti-Bonapartist demonstration at the funeral of Madame Raspail, wife of the famous revolutionary (this volume, p. 300). At the same time, they also bore in mind the demoralising influence on the workers of Bonapartism's social demagogy. 'They will have to be severely chastened by crises if they are to be good for anything again soon,' wrote Engels to Marx on 24 September 1852 (pp. 196-97).
Page me39.xxxi

As a result of the preparations for and outbreak of the Crimean War, there was a considerable widening of the range of questions with which Marx and Engels were concerned. Above all, they became aware of the need to study seriously the foreign policy of the ruling classes. Marx wrote to Engels on 2 November 1853: 'I am glad that chance should have led me to take a closer look at the foreign policy — diplomatic — of the past 20 years. We had very much neglected this aspect, and one ought to know with whom one is dealing' (p. 395).

Page Break me39.xxxii
Page me39.xxxii

The desire to fathom the mysteries of European diplomacy induced Marx to study it in retrospect. Hence his interest in Chateaubriand's book on the Holy Alliance's Congress of Verona, in the actions of the English and French diplomats during the period of the Seven Years' War and in English diplomacy during the Greek people's war for independence.

Page me39.xxxii

In the letters of this period, Marx and Engels gave great attention to the outbreak of hostilities in 1853 between Russia and Turkey which led, in 1854, to England, France and Turkey making war on Russia. It was from the standpoint of the revolutionary proletariat that Marx and Engels analysed the foreign policy adopted by the European powers during the Crimean War period, the diplomatic negotiations in Vienna, and the actual progress of military operations.

Page me39.xxxii

Disclosing the cause behind the exacerbation of the 'détestable question orientale [wretched Eastern Question]', Marx stressed that it was a clash of the predatory ambitions of the ruling classes of the warring countries (see Marx to Engels on 10 March 1853 and 17 October 1854).

Page me39.xxxii

Marx and Engels gave special attention to unmasking the diplomacy of the English oligarchy and, above all, the invariable chief of the Foreign Office and head of the Cabinet, Palmerston. There are certain shortcomings in Marx's criticism of Palmerston, notably a biased evaluation of his policy as a direct indulgence towards Russian Tsarism (see this volume, p. 395). However, Marx correctly noted what was most important — that England and France had the same counter-revolutionary ambitions in their diplomacy as Tsarist Russia and a fear of revolution that brought them together. From this point of view, as the founders of Marxism noted, the European powers, although rivals of Tsarist Russia in the Middle East and the Balkans, were not interested in weakening Tsarism as a bulwark of reaction. Proceeding from this premise, as early as in the spring of 1854 Marx and Engels expressed the idea that the Western powers would endeavour to localise the war, transfer the theatre of operations to the border regions, and obstruct the development of popular movements (see, for instance, this volume, p. 424). This idea was then substantiated by them in a number of articles for the New-York Daily Tribune in 1854 and 1855.

Page me39.xxxii

Marx and Engels believed that the conflict between the great powers over the Eastern Question and the approaching economic crisis would lead to an upsurge of the democratic and national liberation movements and to a European revolutionary war against Tsarism and other counter-revolutionary forces. Only as a result of a new revolutionary upsurge in Europe, they believed, would the oppressed nationalities of the Austrian and Ottoman empires obtain the opportunity of freely deciding their own destinies. Marx and Engels saw the granting of independence to the Slavonic and other peoples of the Balkan peninsula as a way to the positive settlement of the Eastern Question (see, for instance, this volume, pp. 288-89).

Page Break me39.xxxiii

Page me39.xxxiii

The letters refute the unfounded judgment that Marx's views on foreign policy questions coincided with those of David Urquhart, the English Conservative journalist and Turkophile. Marx and Engels constantly ridiculed Urquhart's idealisation of the Sultan's Turkey, stressing the reactionary nature of his views (see Engels' letter to Marx of 10 March 1853). They regarded the feudal basis of the empire as the greatest brake on the development of its subject peoples. Marx formulated his attitude to Urquhart's views in a letter to Cluss which the latter used as material for an item in the newspaper Die Reform in December 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 12).

Page me39.xxxiii

Marx and Engels passionately denounced Russian Tsarism as one of the main bulwarks of the European counter-revolution at that time. The letters exposed Tsarism's foreign policy of conquest and the intrigues of Tsarist diplomacy. They show up the reactionary essence of pan-Slavist ideas and the attempts by the Tsarist autocracy to use for its own purposes the sympathies of the Slavonic and other peoples of the Balkan peninsula for Russia and the Russian army, whose victories in the war with Turkey objectively promoted the national liberation of these peoples from the Ottoman yoke.
Page me39.xxxiii

During this period, the ideas of Marx and Engels about Russia broadened considerably, and there was an increase in the number of sources from which they drew their knowledge not only of Tsarist foreign policy, but of the state of affairs within the country. This was helped by Engels' studies of the Slavonic languages, especially Russian. The letters in this volume show that Marx and Engels were keen students of Russian revolutionary literature, above all the writings of Alexander Herzen. Marx especially drew Engels' attention to the foundation by Herzen in London of the 'Free Russian Press' in 1853 and to the publication of a collection, Pole Star (see letters from Marx to Engels of 14 June 1853 and 18 May 1855). It was very much under the influence of Herzen's books that Marx and Engels arrived at the opinion that internal contradictions in Russia were growing and resistance to the Tsarist regime was stiffening in that country. On 12 April 1853, Engels wrote to Weydemeyer that should a European revolutionary war break out against Tsarism, 'an aristocratic-bourgeois revolution in Petersburg with a resulting civil war in the interior is a possibility' (pp. 305-06). The letters also contain a number of critical comments on Herzen's conception of 'Russian socialism', which was based on the Utopian idea of the 'rejuvenation' of Europe by means of the Russian peasant commune (see, for instance, this volume, p. 523).

Page Break me39.xxxiv
Page me39.xxxiv

At the same time, Marx and Engels clarified their position concerning the plans of certain circles of the Polish emigration to wrest Byelorussian and Ukrainian lands from Russia. The above-mentioned letter by Engels to Weydemeyer contains the following: 'As to the former Polish provinces on this side of the Dvina and Dnieper, I want to hear nothing more of them, knowing as I do that the peasants there are all Ukrainians, only the aristocracy and some of the people in the towns being Polish, and that to the peasant there ... the restoration of Poland is synonymous with the restoration of the old ruling aristocracy, its powers unimpaired' (p. 306).
Page me39.xxxiv

The period 1852-55 was one of the most difficult in the lives of Marx and Engels, and their letters to each other clearly show how they were helped to survive their tribulations by the friendship which they maintained throughout their lives. This was expressed very touchingly by Marx at a moment of great personal loss: 'Amid all the fearful torments I have recently had to endure, the thought of you and your friendship has always sustained me, as has the hope that there is still something sensible for us to do together in the world' (p. 533).

* * *

Page me39.xxxiv

Volume 39 contains, printed in chronological order, 293 letters written by Marx and Engels from 1852 to 1855. By no means all their letters have been preserved, in particular, Engels' letters for 1855, of which only one survives. The letters were written mainly in German, apart from three in English. Twelve were written in two languages — German and English, German and French, and German and Italian. The overwhelming majority are being published in English for the first time. Only 43 letters (of which 39 in incomplete form) have been published before in English. All these publications are indicated in the notes. The text of former English publications has been checked and improved where necessary.

Page Break me39.xxxv

Page me39.xxxv

The Appendices contain letters written by Jenny Marx on her husband's instructions, and also extracts from the letters of Cluss to Weydemeyer giving the contents of a number of letters from Marx to Cluss which have not come down to us. Most of the material in the Appendices is also being published in English for the first time.

Page me39.xxxv

In the course of work on this volume, the earlier dating of certain letters has been corrected. The letter from Marx to Cluss of 3 September 1852, previously published as a single document, has been divided in this volume into two, dated 3 September and [after 5 September] 1852.

Page me39.xxxv

Study of the correspondence for 1852-55 has made it possible to attribute certain articles to Marx and Engels, and also to date the writing of certain already known articles of that period more accurately. All such attributions and details of dates are mentioned in the notes.

Page me39.xxxv

The authors' own contraction of proper and geographical names and of certain words have been reproduced in full. Obvious errors and inaccuracies have been corrected. Defects in the manuscripts, when the text is missing or illegible, are indicated by three dots in square brackets. If the context allows a presumable reconstruction to be made of the missing or illegible words, these words are also in square brackets. Passages struck out by the authors have, as a rule, not been reproduced, except where they represent variant readings which are given in the footnotes.

Page me39.xxxv

Foreign words and expressions have been retained in the original language and are given in italics; if they were underlined by the authors they are set in spaced italics.

Page me39.xxxv

In the letters written in German, words used by Marx and Engels in English are printed in small caps. Longer passages written in English in the original are placed in asterisks. If a fact or event is referred to in several letters, the same note number is used every time.

Page me39.xxxv

The volume was compiled, the texts of the letters and appendices for 1852-53 prepared, and the preface and the relevant notes written by Velta Pospelova; the texts of the letters and appendices for 1854-55 were prepared and the relevant notes written by Irina Shikanyan; the volume was edited by Valentina Smirnova. The index of quoted and mentioned literature was prepared by Irina Shikanyan, the name index and index of periodicals by Nina Loiko; Vassily Kuznetsov assisted with the references and in compiling a glossary of geographical names. The subject index was prepared by Vassily Kuznetsov (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).

Page Break me39.xxxvi

Page me39.xxxvi

The translations were done by Peter and Betty Ross and edited by E.J. Hobsbawm (Lawrence and Wishart), Richard Dixon, Natalia Karmanova and Margarita Lopukhina (Progress Publishers) and Norire Ter-Akopyan, scientific editor (USSR Academy of Sciences).

Page me39.xxxvi

The volume was prepared for the press by the editors Anna Vladimirova and Svetlana Gerasimenko (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me39.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
January 1852-December 1855

Page Break me39.2
Page Break me39.3

1852

1
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†1
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.3
[London,] 1 January 1852

Dear Weiwi,

A happy New Year to you, and greetings to your wife†a from myself and wife.

Page me39.3

I have not been able to send you the article until now,†2 having been interrupted not only by events coming one on top of another but to an even greater extent by private affairs. Henceforward, I shall be regularity itself.

Page me39.3

Lupus†b has fallen seriously ill and hence has not yet been able to send anything. Red Wolff's†c article seemed to me unusable, hence I did not send it off.†3

Page me39.3

If, which I hope will not happen, your undertaking†d has to be postponed for any length of time on financial grounds, let Dana have the article so that he may translate it into English for his paper.†4 However, I hope this will not be necessary.

Page me39.3

Give Dana my regards. Tell him I have received his newspapers and his letter and shall be sending him a new WORK next week.†5

Page me39.3

As for the Revues,†e since they are not ready to hand but have to be obtained at some expense and trouble from Hamburg, please let me know roughly how many sales you think I can count on in America.†6

Page me39.3

I shall be sending you from here Notes to the People by our friend Ernest Jones, the most important leader of the English party; you should find them a veritable mine when it comes to filling the gaps in your paper.

Page Break me39.4

Page me39.4

Send me at once (and in future regularly) a few copies of your weekly.

Page me39.4

Greeting and fraternity.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.4

Yesterday I hammered away at Freiligrath for all I was worth and he promised me to concoct a poem for you on the most recent occurrences.†a

Page me39.4

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

2
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.4
[Manchester,] 6 January 1852

Dear Marx,

BY THIS TIME, you will, I trust, have completely recovered from your afflictions; I also hope that your wife will no longer be angry with me about the coup d'état which plunged you for two days into such depths of melancholy.†7 At any rate, please give her and your children my kindest regards.

Page me39.4

I shall get an article done for Weydemeyer in time for next Friday's steamer and hope you will let me have something topical for the Tribune, which I shall at once translate. It's really not a paper that calls for any serious exertion. Barnum stalks its columns large as life, and the English is ghastly — but this apart, it has some good qualities which, however, have nothing at all to do with our LINE. If you can see that it reaches me by Thursday — even by the 2nd post — you shall have the translation back in London in time for Saturday's steamer, i.e. by the 2nd post arriving there on Friday. Then, next week, I shall set to work on the articles on Germany and shall soon be done with them.†b

Page Break me39.5

Page me39.5

The lack of originality with which the Austrians have aped Louis Napoleon and promptly abolished their constitution is certainly deplorable. Now there'll be a fine how-d'ye-do in Prussia — there's no doubt that Prussia has been betrayed and sold by Austria and, if it does not likewise abolish its constitution,†8 may very well be crushed by a Russian-Austrian-French alliance.

Page me39.5

In 1851 the English cotton industry consumed 32,000 bales a week as against 29,000 bales in 1850.†a The entire surplus, and a good deal more, went to the East Indies and China; at present Manchester is almost wholly dependent on deliveries to these two markets and to the HOME TRADE, since very little is going to the Continent. This cannot last much longer. They are sailing very near the wind here, and the fact that, e.g., cotton prices are soaring, despite an exceptionally heavy crop, merely in the expectation of even heavier demand, is of itself significant enough.

Page me39.5

Weerth dropped me a few lines today from Bradford inquiring about the insufferable Lüders who has written to him. If you can tell me whether and to what extent this old jackass has been involved in the intrigues there, I should be grateful and it might come in handy. Otherwise, nothing else to report, BUSINESS WITH US SLACK, fog and smoke in abundance.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.5
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

3
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.5
Manchester, 14 January 1852

Dear Mrs Marx,

I would have answered your kind letter†b long ago had I not been totally prevented from doing so by a whole mass of things — in particular the presence of my brother-in-law†c whom I had to keep amused for a whole week, certainly no light task here in Manchester. There could, of course, be no question of work during that time, and only now can I turn my mind to what may be done before next Friday's STEAMER. At all events, either this evening or tomorrow evening something will be ready for the Tribune, nor will Father Weydemeyer go empty-handed. In the meantime I have heard and seen nothing from the latter — I hope that today will have brought you a letter from him telling us about the prospects for the New Year, since the letters that arrived by yesterday's STEAMER were dated up to 1 January.

Page Break me39.6
Page me39.6

I trust that in the meantime the paterfamilias†a will have arisen from his bed of pain and penance, and only hope that the Library†b will not entirely drive the Tribune from his mind. The information about the honourable Lüders was conveyed forthwith to Weerth, likewise as much as was necessary concerning the worthy Kinkel.
Page me39.6

The lambastings received by the great Willich are most pleasing so far as we are concerned, while for him there would appear to be an excellent prospect of repeated applications. Once the spell of inviolability and invincibility cast around himself by the great warrior has been broken by a bonne volée,†c not one blackguard of an émigré, right down to the last Conrad,†9 will rest until he has repeated the experiment and wreaked upon the noble fellow tangible vengeance for his private GRIEVANCES. The great man's courage malheureux†d may then console itself with the thought that those who did the thrashing were all of them 'men of principle'. Thrashings he may have had, but they were 'principled thrashings'.
Page me39.6

I return Cluss' letter herewith.†e As an agent, the fellow's beyond compare. When the business of Willich's mystification†10 comes out, there'll be a fine how-d'ye-do! The philistines will no longer dare to write letters for fear of their falling into our hands. How scurrilously hypocritical it was on Kinkel's part to maintain that he had written to London, telling them to get in touch with us! This fact only goes to show that he has been constantly and most disagreeably 'challenged' on our account in America and that, among the democratic rabble there, we too have a SET of adherents who swear by us, as do the others by Kinkel or Heinzen or Hecker, heaven knows why; these must be adherents á la Magnus Gross, Wilhelmi, etc., people who would only have to spend a short time in our company to be better informed both about us and themselves, and to return to the common fold where they belong.

Page Break me39.7
Page me39.7

I must say, Louis Napoleon grows daily more amusing. While not a single one of those great measures for the abolition of pauperism, etc., has yet managed to see the light of day, the little fellow contrives to provoke all philistines in the world by measures which are merely intended to ensure a temporary consolidation of his authority.†11 No longer does any non-French paper dare speak up for him, even the Sun and the Kölnische remain silent, and only the good-for-nothing correspondent of the Globe continues to deposit his daily scurrilities in the corner allotted to him for the purpose. On top of that, Louis Napoleon has aroused universal suspicion, the whole of Europe resounds with war and rumours of war,†a and even the peaceable Daily News has nolens volens†b to join in the call for NATIONAL DEFENCES. Along with the side of his character which has been most in evidence since 2 December — the GAMBLER — the fellow is gradually beginning to develop another, that of the mad pretender who regards himself as a predestined world redeemer and who swears by his star. And when the time was come, God sent the nephew that he might redeem the world from the bondage of the devil and from the hell of socialism. Luckily parliament will be meeting shortly, which always introduces a little variety into the humbug of politics.
Page me39.7

Warm regards to Marx and the little ones from your

F. Engels

Page me39.7
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd.1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

4
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12

IN NEW YORK
Page me39.7
London, 16 January 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

Today I got up for the first time in a fortnight. From this you will see that my indisposition — not yet wholly overcome — was a serious one. Hence, even with the best will in the world, I could not send you No. III of my article on Bonaparte†a this week. Instead, you will find enclosed a poem†13 and a personal letter from Freiligrath. I beseech you now to: 1. See that the poem is carefully printed, with adequate intervals between the verses and allowing plenty of space for the whole. A great deal is lost if poems are too closely printed and over-compressed. 2. Write Freiligrath a friendly letter. Nor need you be over-fearful of paying him compliments, for poets, even the best of them, are all plus au moins des courtisanes†b and il faut les cajoler, pour les faire chanter.†c In private life our Freiligrath is the most amiable, least pretentious of men who conceals beneath a genuine bonhomie un esprit trés fin et trés railleur†d and whose passion is 'authentic', yet does not render him either 'uncritical' or 'superstitious'. He is a true revolutionary and a man of honour to the marrow, a compliment I would pay to only a very few. Nevertheless a poet, whatever he may be as an homme,†e needs applause and ADMIRATION. This is, I believe, peculiar to the genre as such. I am only telling you all this to remind you not to lose sight, when corresponding with Freiligrath, of the distinction between the 'poet' and the 'critic'. It is, by the by, very nice of him to address his poetical letter directly to you. I think that this will be helpful to you in New York.

Page Break me39.8
Page me39.8

I do not know whether I shall manage to send you another article today. Pieper had promised me to write an article for you. Up till this moment he has not yet turned up and when he does, the article will have to be put to the test — i.e. whether it is consigned to the flames, or is considered worthy of crossing the ocean. I am trop faible encore†f to go on writing. More today week. Regards from my family to yours.
Page me39.8

Lupus is still not fully recovered and hence has not yet sent anything.

Your
K. Marx
Page me39.8

Apropos. Enclosed is yet another 'statement' from a member†14 of our League†15 which you should insert in your paper in small print among the advertisements or below the line.

Page Break me39.9
Page me39.9

Daniels, Becker and Co. have again not been brought up before the January Assizes on the pretext that the investigation was so difficult that it must be begun all over again.†16 They have now been in jug for 9 months.

Page me39.9
First published much abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 29, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

5
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.9
[London,] 20 January 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Only since yesterday have I been up and about again and it was not until today that I again took up my pen.
Page me39.9

Since I was unable to go out and visit Chapman as I had planned, Pieper, with the enthusiasm he habitually displays in the first ten minutes, offered to discount the bill for me. The other evening he brought me the money, only to declare that he would send you the bill so that you could have it discounted in Manchester. I, as well as my wife, told him that we knew you couldn't do so. But he had already written his letter and, since he made it pretty clear that I appeared, for reasons of my own, to be putting obstacles in his way, I gave him his head and be damned to it, feeling sure that you would return the stuff to him. Now, when he informs me of this fait,†a it turns out that he was not in such a hurry after all, but was merely seeking to give himself airs. For me, it was a nasty business, since you might have thought I had been guilty of an indiscretion.
Page me39.9

In France les choses vont á merveille.†b And I hope la belle France will not pass through this school too casually but will have to spend a longer time in class. War, whether it comes a few MONTHS sooner or later, seems to me inevitable. Nous avons eu le Napoléon de la paix.†a Louis†b can BY NO MEANS emulate Louis Philippe. Et alors?†c

Page Break me39.10
Page me39.10

As you know, our people in Cologne have not been brought before the Assizes under the pretext that the case is so difficult that the investigation must be begun all over again.

Page me39.10
Madier has just been here. He proved to me de la maniére la plus crapaude†d that the FRENCHMEN are capable of taking London by breakfast time and assaulting all of England's coasts within five hours. One has too much pitie†e for the poor devils not to hold one's tongue quand ils déraisonnent.†f

Write soon.

Your
K.M.
Page me39.10
How is le commerce?

Page me39.10
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.10
[Manchester,] 22 January 1852

Dear Marx,
Herewith the 7th article for the Tribune. The eighth, etc., will be done tomorrow evening, and today I shall get something ready for Weydemeyer. In his case, I am for a start restricting myself to England,†17 being unable to bring myself to read German newspapers and do something on Germany. Could you not perhaps persuade Lupus, who, I hope, is fit as a fiddle again, to send off something 'From the German Empire'†18? — Weerth will produce something for Weydemeyer next week; this week he cannot. I hope to see him here the day after tomorrow and he may come up to London in a week or a fortnight's time since, out of sheer impatience, he is once again champing at the bit.

Page Break me39.11
Page me39.11
The Pacific having arrived from New York yesterday, there's a chance that tomorrow might bring the numbers†a promised me by Weydemeyer — but I am not counting on this since he may have waited for the regular English MAIL STEAMER. By the way, he should not send so many, 50 copies is too much and will probably cost a mint of money, and who are they all to be sent to? I will find out what the charges are and if needs be — that is, if he can't arrange the business more cheaply through parcels consignment agencies — 10 copies would be quite sufficient; for he cannot after all count on subscribers in Europe. A few in London, perhaps; otherwise maybe only in Hamburg. And that would also call for an agency, which would not pay for itself.

Page me39.11

I trust you'll soon be sending me an article to translate for the Tribune.
Page me39.11

Jones has written to me asking for contributions. I shall do my best and have given him my word.†19 All this means that any spare time I might have for swotting is frittered away piecemeal, and that's bad. I must see how I can arrange things and diddle the office. Jones mentions a dirty trick Harney played on him†20 and says he was cheated out of £15, concerning which you would be able to tell me more — what is all this? He was, of course, VERY BUSY and his letter consists largely of unfinished sentences and exclamation marks.
Page me39.11

As to Pieper's DODGE in the matter of the bill, the whole stratagem was, of course, perfectly plain to me, and Monsieur le bel homme†b will have realised that he needs rather more cunning to conjure eight pounds out of my pocket. Being well aware how he stood financially on 2 January, I chaffed him about his supposed shortage of money, warned him against dishonest and unsound bill-brokers in London, declared that the bill must be dispatched as quickly as possible, and finally advised him to have it cashed through Weydemeyer — in which case, it would again pass through your hands and, upon the arrival of the notification of payment, which would, of course, come to you or me, it would quite spontaneously give rise to a further discounting transaction with this youthful trading house. I owe him 2 pounds, for which he also asked; this I also promised to repay, but not before the beginning of February.
Page me39.11

That the good Louis Napoleon must go to war is clear as day and, if he can come to an understanding with Russia, he will probably pick a quarrel with England. This would have its good and its bad aspects. The French notion that they could conquer London and England in 5 hours is a very harmless one. But what they can do now, is carry out sudden raids with 20, or at the most 30 thousand men, which, however, would nowhere be very effective. Brighton is the one town seriously threatened; Southampton, etc., are safeguarded, not so much by fortifications as by their situation on deep inlets navigable only at high tide and with the help of local pilots. The greatest EFEECT a French landing could hope to achieve would be the destruction of Woolwich, but even then they would have to take damned good care not to advance on London. In the case of any serious invasion, the combined forces of the Continent would inevitably give the English at least A YEAR'S NOTICE, whereas 6 months would suffice to place England in a state of readiness against any attack. The present alarums are being deliberately exaggerated — with the greatest help from the Whigs. All the English have to do to safeguard themselves for the time being is to recall a dozen ships of the line and STEAMERS, fit out another dozen of both kinds which are lying in port half completed, recruit 25,000 more troops, organise volunteer rifle battalions equipped with Minié rifles and, in addition, some militia and some training for the YEOMANRY. But the alarums serve a very good purpose; the government had really excelled itself in allowing things to go to wrack and ruin and this will cease. And then, if it comes to the point, they will be so well armed that they will be able to repulse any attempt at a landing and at once retaliate.

Page Break me39.12

Page me39.12

Otherwise, so far as I can see, there are only 2 prospects open to Louis Napoleon if he wants to start a war: 1. against Austria, i.e. against the entire Holy Alliance, or 2. against Prussia, if the latter is dropped by Russia and Austria. However, the second is very doubtful and, as for his picking a quarrel with the Holy Alliance, this is most questionable. Neither England nor the Holy Alliance will abandon Piedmont, Switzerland and Belgium to him. The business is becoming so prettily entangled that in the end pure chance must decide.
Page me39.12

And á l'intérieur, what splendid goings-on! Attempted assassinations almost a daily occurrence and the measures taken ever prettier. If only Mr de Morny, who still to some degree plays a virtuous hero, were at last thrown out, and if only the noble one†a were to confiscate the property of the Orleans.†21

Page Break me39.13
Page me39.13

It would hardly be possible to pave the way for a Blanqui government more surely than does this jackass.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.13
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

7
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.13
[London,] 23 January 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

Unfortunately my indisposition has up till now prevented me from writing to you this week, i.e. for your paper.†a With much effort I concocted an article for Dana,†b who had received nothing from me for six weeks or more. For years, nothing has so pulled me down as this damned haemorrhoidal complaint, not even the last French fiasco.†c Enfin,†d I shall be all the better for having been forcibly kept away from the library†e for 4 weeks, hard though this was.

Page me39.13
You will be getting two more articles about the 18th Brumaire,†f of which the first will be dispatched, come what may, on Friday next and the other immediately afterwards, if not at the same time.
Page me39.13
Enclosed Pieper's article.†22
Page me39.13
As for Lupus, I have been chivvying him a great deal and he seems to have made up his mind to take a retrospective look at Kossuth's Hungarian carriére†g for your paper. You have made two mistakes, first in failing to name Lupus along with ourselves in your announcement,†23 and secondly in not approaching him direct. Make good the second with a letter which you may enclose in one to myself and in which you urge him to write. No one else among us all has his popular style. He is extrêmement modeste. All the more must one avoid giving the impression that his cooperation is regarded as superfluous.

Page Break me39.14
Page me39.14
Because I live some distance from Freiligrath and because I received Pieper's article only just before the post left, we have today been compelled to send you two letters instead of one.†a This will be avoided next time.
Page me39.14
Enclosed another statement from my friend Pfänder (Bauer no longer belongs to our League). You will have to publish it, since the Windmill Streeters' statement against him appeared in both the American and the European papers.†24 It would be a good idea if, beneath this statement, you were to print the comment that it contains only what could be published under present police conditions (the accounts between Bauer and Pfänder on the one hand and the former League on the other, further, the control exercised by the Central Authority over the administration of those monies, we being in the majority on the C.A. — none of these things can, of course, be published yet); that, counting on the political precautions we, for our part, have to take in Germany, Arnold Winkelried Ruge,†b that old gossip and 'Confusius'†c of European democracy, made an allusion to those matters (i.e. those of Pfänder and Bauer) about which he himself knew only from hearsay at 3rd or 4th hand, in the hope of incriminating myself and Engels in the eyes of the public, although the business was no concern of ours,†d in just the same way as the jackass suggested that it was the Windmill Streeters who threw us out when it was we who had broken with that society,†e as Pfänder's letter also implies.
Page me39.14
You might also announce that a new workers' society has been formed in London under Stechan's chairmanship,†25 which will keep aloof from 'Emigration', 'Agitation'†26 and Great Windmill Street alike, and pursue a serious line.
Page me39.14

Tu comprends, mon cher,†f that this society belongs to us, although we only send our younger people there; I refer to our 'heducated†g people' not to our workers. They all go there.

Page Break me39.15
Page me39.15

Stechan has about him something of the solidity of a guild brother and the fickleness of a small master-artisan, but he is educatable and has considerable influence in Northern Germany. That is why I have also called on him to provide contributions for you.†a We have BY AND BY pushed him into the foreground, which he likes to shun, and into contradiction, which he likes to gloss over. Willich had asked him to guarantee Kinkel's loan†27 but he refused. At first enthusiastically welcomed by Schapper and Willich, and set against us by them, he was soon enabled by his better nature to see through the shabbiness and hollowness of these fellows and their following. And so (with a little help from Lochner and other assistants with whom we had provided him incognito) he openly broke with the rabble.
Page me39.15

Is A. Hentze our Hentze from Hamm? If so, I would write to him, for as it is Willich has done everything to blacken me in his eyes. L'infâme!†b
Page me39.15

Warmest regards from my family to yours.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.15

I am sending material for pamphlets, etc., all in one batch, likewise Jones' Notes.†c Sent piecemeal, they cost too much. The Northern Star is no longer in O'Connor's hands but in those of a Chartist faction which is secretly in touch with the Financial and Parliamentary Reformers.†28

Page me39.15
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

8
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.15
Manchester, 23 January 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,

I hope that in the meantime you will have received my first letter, which I posted on 18 or 19 December in time for the STEAMER Africa.†d It contained an article written in haste and a letter, likewise written in haste. You should have had it long before the 5th, but it may have only gone with the next STEAMER. Meanwhile, last week I sent you by the Niagara an article unaccompanied by a letter,†29 but doubt whether I posted it in time; if it was too late, it will arrive with this one, by the Europa, in which case you will have some material in hand. You'll have already had several things from Marx, an anti-Kinkel poem from Freiligrath†a and also, perhaps, something from Lupus and Pieper. Weerth is very busy just now and has not really settled down in Bradford (Yorkshire); however, he has promised me he will send something by the next STEAMER. I shall probably see him here tomorrow and prod him yet again to make him keep his promise. Unfortunately Marx has been seriously ill for the past fortnight as a result of an almighty binge when I was in London over the New Year, and I was prevented from working until last week, partly because of the fortnight spent in London and partly because of various snags that subsequently cropped up. However, I think I shall be able to send you something regularly each week now, and shortly, perhaps, something for a feuilleton by way of a change.

Page Break me39.16

Page me39.16

I am settled here in Manchester for the present, luckily in a position which, besides much independence, affords me various advantages; Marx and other friends occasionally come up from London to see me and, so long as Weerth is in Bradford, we arrange a regular shuttle-service between here and there, as the railway journey only takes 2 1/2 hours. But now he will probably leave; he cannot abide that beastly hole, Bradford, and he's never happy anywhere if he has to spend more than a year sitting on his backside in the same place. I am considering a trip to the STATES, either next summer or, if there are no political changes in the meantime, the summer after that; to the STATES, New York, and particularly New Orleans. But this depends on my old man,†b not me, and also on how things go in the cotton market.

Page me39.16

Fifty copies of the Revolution is too much and the cost will probably be enormous, i.e. four shillings or more each time. In view of the wholesale arrests, dispersion, etc., and the German press laws, we can count on only a few subscribers here and, in Germany, only one or two at most in Hamburg, hence specimen numbers will be of no use to us. Newspapers, one or more to a wrapper, open at the sides, cost 1d (2 cents) per sheet. So send 4 to me and 6-8 direct to London, for otherwise I have to restamp them from here to London and I can hardly saddle the business with these massive postal charges. Ten to twelve copies will suffice for us and, if there seems to be any prospect of subscribers here, we can organise a regular agency in London to which the back numbers can be sent all at one time and under the same cover to complete the series. I shall discuss the matter with the people in London and see what can be done.

Page Break me39.17

Page me39.17

In France, things are going splendidly. Yesterday evening the Patrie reported that the creation of a Police Ministry for de Maupas would be announced in today's Moniteur.†a De Morny who, along with Fould and a few others, represents the material interests of the bourgeoisie (but not their participation in political power) in the Cabinet, will be thrown out, and the reign of those died-in-the-wool adventurers Maupas, Persigny and Co. will begin. That will be the start of imperial true socialism†30; the first socialist measure will be the confiscation of Louis Philippe's property,†b for the Act of 6 August 1830, by which he left his property to his children instead of to the State as ancient custom demanded, is invalid. The portion of the Condé estates inherited by Aumale is also to be seized. The news might even arrive by next Saturday's STEAMER if things develop quickly enough. In the southern départements, the insurgents are still being hunted like game.†31
Page me39.17

The English Press is now the only reliable one for French news, and occasionally too, the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. The paper in which you will find the best news about France is the London Daily News, which I therefore specially commend to you. The Tribune takes it, and you will certainly also be able to lay hands on it elsewhere, it being far too expensive to take. You will, I am sure, have no difficulty in finding it in the coffee houses of the CITY'S commercial quarter.
Page me39.17

Dronke may soon be paying you a visit; I hear that anyone who has to leave Switzerland is sent via France only to America, not to England. But now he will be compelled to leave; as we have heard nothing whatever from him he must be in hiding.
Page me39.17

Gnam, a former Baden artilleryman and brewer, who went over on the same ship as Heinzen, is a sterling fellow. With them went

Page Break me39.18
Rothacker, a student from Upper Baden; he used to be a good chap but he may have changed and is, moreover, dangerous on account of his versifying. Little Schickel of Mainz, whose address you can get from Cluss (away in the Alleghenies), will exert himself on behalf of the Revolution. Please send him my kind regards, which may be done through Cluss.
Page me39.18

Below, a few supplementary notes on my remarks concerning the prospects for an invasion of England,†32 which will explain things to you:
Page me39.18

1. Any landing west of Portsmouth runs the risk of being forced into the wedge formed by Cornwall — hence impracticable.
Page me39.18

2. Any landing too far north of, or too close to, Dover faces the same hazard between Thames and sea.
Page me39.18

3. London and Woolwich — the first buts d'opération.†a Detachments to be sent against Portsmouth and Sheerness (Chatham). Strong occupation force in London, strong guard posts between the coast and London. Out of a landing force 150,000 strong, at least 60,000 needed for this purpose (and that not enough). Thus continuation of operations could proceed with 90,000 men.
Page me39.18
4. Birmingham the second objective (on account of the arms factories). Secure the area south of the Bristol Channel and the Wash, i.e. a line from Gloucester to King's Lynn; in addition, a strong spearhead aimed at Birmingham. However weak and broken the opposing army might be, I consider this impossible with the 90,000 men available. But assuming it succeeds, no tenable defence position will have been won, particularly if the English Navy bestirs itself. The line will be too long and too weak. Hence it will be necessary to resume the advance.
Page me39.18
5. Manchester the third objective; all country south of Mersey (or Ribble) and Aire (Humber) to be secured and this line to be held. It is shorter and more tenable, but here again the forces greatly weakened by the need to detach troops. Hence, since the defenders still have room and resources enough to reorganise, either the advance must continue, or else there must be an early retreat.
Page me39.18
6. The first tenable line in the relatively narrow part of northern England, either the Tees or even better the Tyne (the line of the Roman wall against the Picts†33) from Carlisle to Newcastle. But then the agricultural, industrial and commercial resources of the Scottish Lowlands still remain in the hands of the defenders.

Page Break me39.19
Page me39.19
7. The conquest of England proper can be regarded as complete, and then only for a time, only after the capture of Glasgow and Edinburgh, the retreat of the defenders into the Highlands, and the occupation of the admirably short strong line between Clyde and Firth of Forth, having an extensive railway system to the rear.
Page me39.19
Only after the conquest, however, would the difficulty, and an unavoidable one, be felt — that of consolidating once communications with France have been cut.
Page me39.19
In such circumstances, how many men are needed to conquer and hold the entire country from Dover to the Clyde, and to present a decent front on the Clyde?
Page me39.19
To my mind, 400,000 would not be too many.
Page me39.19
These CONSIDERATIONS are much too detailed for your paper and I lay them before you as a PROFESSIONAL MAN. Take a look at a map of England and tell me what you think. It is an aspect of the matter that is totally neglected by the English.
Page me39.19
The letters are going off to the post. I must close. Kindest regards to your wife.†a

Your
F.E.

Page me39.19
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 29, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

9
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†34
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.19
London [between 23 January and 2 February 1852]

Dear Weydemeyer,
Stechan sends you the following notes, but do not mention his name. Later he will send the original article over his signature.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me39.20
Page me39.20
Dear Weydemeyer,
Do not print this stuff word for word, only make use of it. It is written in a very philistine style.

Page me39.20
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

10
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.20
[London,] 24 January 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

No more than a few lines, since a letter has just arrived from Bermbach in Cologne which I would like to be in your hands tomorrow. It is essential that you 1. send me a letter TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES on the Cologne affair, together with a few lines which I shall send in advance of the corpus delicti†a; 2. that you do the same in your own name to The Daily News although, of course, the actual corpus delicti, i.e. the insertion itself, will be signed 'A PRUSSIAN' or some such. I think that for The Times 'Doctor' and for The Daily News 'Manchester MERCHANT' would do better, i.e. have more chance of being accepted. Refer to people by their titles. Dr Becker, Dr (!) Bürgers, Dr Daniels, Dr Klein, Dr Jacobi, Otto (a chemist well known in German scientific circles), Röser and Nothjung. The Board of indicting magistrates at Cologne is the nec plus ultra†b of cowardice. By the way, under the terms of the new disciplinary law, judges are, at least nominally, no longer 'irremovable'.

Page me39.20

Your article for Dana†c is splendid.

Page me39.20

Of course I have only been able to send POOR Weydemeyer one more article†d since you were here. This time my piles have afflicted me more grievously than the French Revolution. I shall see what I can do next week. The state of my posterior does not permit me to go to the Library yet.

Page Break me39.21

Page me39.21

Confiscation of the estates begged or stolen by the Orléans! Resignation of Fould! Persigny!†35 Bravo! Ça marche!†a

Page me39.21

It is strange how ARMY, NAVY, COLONIES, FORTIFICATIONS AND THE WHOLE ADMINISTRATION have gone rotten under the rule of this curious regime of an aristocratic clique which the English bourgeois have by tradition lugged along with them at the head of the Executive power ever since 1688.†36 After all that English presumption and liberal outcry inspired by Kossuth, after the cosmopolitan-philanthropic-commercial hymns of peace during the EXHIBITION,†37 in short, after this period of bourgeois megalomania, it is refreshing when the canaille now come to discover that not something, but everything, is rotten in the State of Denmark.†b And then, too, these gents take an altogether too complacent view of the struggles on the Continent.

Page me39.21

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.21

Send back the two enclosed letters by return, Cluss', at any rate.

Page me39.21
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels and K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

11
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON
Page me39.21
[London,] 26 January 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Freiligrath,

The verse you sent me to have a look at is delicious and expresses the corpus delicti in a masterly manner, but I believe it impairs the effect of the whole.†38 D'abord,†c is Kinkel a 'German poet'? I and a great many other bons gens†a venture modestly to express some doubt upon this point. Then: will it not detract from the significant contrast between the 'German poet' and the 'commercial' Babylon to deal yet again with the contrast between the 'free' and the 'servile' poet? The more so as the relationship of the puffed-up man of letters to the world that confronts the 'poet' is already depicted exhaustively in Andersen.†39 Since, as I see it, there is no intrinsic need to bring in Kinkel at this point, your verse would only provide our opponents with the opportunity of coming down on it as the expression of personal pique or rivalry. But as it is so felicitous and ought not to be wasted, you will — if you agree with my view in other respects — certainly have a chance of using it in a different context, in one of the later poetical letters. For the sketch is delicious.

Page Break me39.22
Page me39.22

Since Engels-Weerth have not returned the copy of your first poem†b which I sent them, all I had to offer red Wolff†c yesterday were the few bits I knew by heart which, however, sufficed to bring on one of his fits of enthusiasm.
Page me39.22

Quant á notre ami†d Ebner,†40 he has undoubtedly had letters from Pieper, the best proof being that Pieper possesses a reply from him. Besides, he wrote him another long letter quite recently, excusing my silence on the grounds of my indisposition.
Page me39.22

I have had a letter from Bermbach consisting of some 30 lines. He asks why he has not heard from me for so long. The answer is quite simple. I send about half a sheet to Cologne and, after a very long delay, receive in return a few lines, none of which ever answers my questions. For instance, never a word about Daniels' state of health and the like. You will get this letter as soon as it comes back from Manchester. Engels is going to use it for articles for the English papers.†e There is nothing of importance in the scrawl save the following: The Board of indicting magistrates, remarquez le bien,†f in view of the fact 'that there was no actual evidence of an indictable offence', rules that the investigation must start all over again.†41 First then, on the basis of some stupid presumption, you have to spend 9 months in jug. Next, it transpires that there are no legal grounds for your being in jug. Conclusion: You must remain in jug until the examining magistrate finds himself á même†g to present 'actual evidence of an indictable offence' and, if the 'actual evidence' is not forthcoming, in gaol you remain until you rot.

Page Break me39.23
Page me39.23

Such shameless poltroonery is unbelievable. The main fault lies with the wretched 'Press' which utters not a word. A few articles in the Kölnische Zeitung, the National-Zeitung and the Breslauer Zeitung — and the Cologne Board of indicting magistrates would never have dared do anything of the sort. But the liberals and democrats, like the curs they are, rejoice at the removal of their communist rivals. Did we not stand up for the Temmes and every imaginable variety of democratic riff-raff whenever they found themselves in conflict with the police and the courts?†a Not once does Kinkel, for whom Becker was a hearth and Bürgers a haven,†b render them any thanks in the Lithographische Korrespondenz which he sustains with American funds. Les canailles!
Page me39.23

If I knew of a safe bourgeois address in Cologne, I would write to Mrs Daniels and endeavour to reassure her to some extent about political conditions. From what Pieper tells me, it would seem that every counter-revolutionary advance is exploited by the 'worthy citizens' to alarm and vex her.
Page me39.23

Enclosed a note from Miss Jenny to Master Wolfgang.†c
Page me39.23

Kind regards,

Your
K.M.

Page me39.23
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, 12 April, Stuttgart, 1912 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.24

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.24
Manchester, 28 January 1852

Dear Marx,

Enclosed the thing for The Times.†a All you have to write is:* Sir, I believe the publication of the scandalous facts contained in the annexed letter will contribute to throw some light upon the state of things on the Continent. The correctness of these facts I guarantee,* etc. Name and address.

Page me39.24

Mine to The Daily News will be going off this evening by the second post; if you arrange matters similarly, both letters will arrive at the respective OFFICES at almost the same time and thus may appear in Friday's issue.†42 But post the letter in Charing Cross; there is too much delay at the branch OFFICES.

Page me39.24

I return herewith the two letters from Cluss and Bermbach. The seal on your Saturday's letter†b was once again in a sorry state; I enclose it herewith. What can be afoot?

Page me39.24

In The Daily News I shall simply sign myself A GERMAN MERCHANT.

Page me39.24

Write soon.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.24
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.25

13
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.25
Manchester, 29 January 1852

Dear Marx,

How annoying that one cannot rely on anything being done unless one does it oneself. Owing to our messenger's stupidity, my letter to The Daily News did not go off yesterday; now it's too late. So all I can do is to keep it in abeyance until I see whether yours is in tomorrow's or Saturday's Times. If not, it will go off at once. In the meantime there's one thing to consider: whether Freiligrath is not the right man for The D. News. Were he to write to them, I could try The Weekly Press and The Sun. We 2 have been cold-shouldered by The D.N. once already.†42

Page me39.25

Enclosed another article for Dana.†a It might, perhaps, be divided into two at the point where the Polish business ends — though it would be better to keep it entire. If you split it up, you can send both halves by the same STEAMER, since there is not another sailing before tomorrow week. I will now see that I get on fairly quickly, SAY, 2 articles a week, so as to have done with the SUBJECT. There will be 15-16 articles in all.†43
Page me39.25

No copies†b received from Weydemeyer. No letter either. This surprises me. I shall finish another article†c for him this evening.
Page me39.25

The French are real jackasses. Madier approached me about an industrial matter and, since my brother-in-law,†d who knows the DODGE, happened to be here, I gave him some very useful hints and advice. Now the dolt writes to say that, as a result of silly chatter by some crapaud†e who knows nothing of this matter, he intends to go about it in a different and MOST UNBUSINESSLIKE way, and I am to obtain, not for him, but for his associate, a man whom I have never seen, letters of introduction from my brother-in-law (who, fortunately, is on the Continent)! You will recall that Madier introduced us to a calico printer who was bound for Manchester. The fellow calls on me, I go to immense pains to be helpful, do what I can, treat him with the utmost consideration, and in return for all this the dolt suddenly vanishes without my being able to learn what has become of him. A fine race!

Page Break me39.26

Your
F.E.

Page me39.26
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

14
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.26
[London,] 30 January 1852

28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

Enclosed you will find:

1. A further instalment of my article.†a

Page me39.26

2. A piece by Eccarius,†44 whose grammatical mistakes, punctuation and so forth you yourself will have to correct, since he brought me the thing too late for me to attend to this myself.

Page me39.26

3. Translation of an interesting article in The Times by Lupus†b who, however, does not wish his name to appear, the thing being merely a translation.

Page me39.26

How goes it with the German book-trade in America? Might I find a publisher there for my Economy,†45 now that things have miscarried in Germany?

Page me39.26

Salut.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.26

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.27

15

ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†1
IN NEW YORK

Page me39.27

[Manchester,] Friday, 30 January 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,

I sent you by last Saturday's STEAMER (the Europa, I think) an article together with a letter.†a Herewith a few more lines.†b The issues of the Revolution you promised have not yet turned up, although your last letter of 5 Jan. gave good reason to believe that they would come by the next STEAMER, and since then 1 Southampton and 3 Liverpool STEAMERS have arrived here with mails from New York dated up to 17 Jan. I hope no snags have arisen to prevent publication. At all events, I expect to hear from you by the next STEAMER, the Cambria (out of Boston 21 Jan.), which is due here on Monday 2 Feb.

Page me39.27

My anticipations regarding the confiscation of Louis Philippe's fortune and a Persigny Ministry†c have been confirmed sooner than I could have hoped; given a reasonably well-organised service, news of it must have arrived in New York by way of the Liverpool newspapers at the same time as my letter; hardly was my letter in the post when the telegraphic dispatch about it likewise arrived here. So much the better. The thing's going splendidly and there's better still to come.

Page me39.27

Weerth is on his travels again, will be visiting Holland, France, Switzerland, etc., and must at this moment be in London. I have written and told Marx that he should again chivvy him a little about sending you a few things, although he will hardly have the peace and quiet to do so. When one has spent the whole day tramping round calling on Dutch Jews with samples of wool and linen yarn, one feels small inclination to spend the evening at the hotel in writing that sort of thing. However, if anything is to be extracted from him, Marx is the man to do it.

Page me39.27

The sudden lull in the émigrés' tittle-tattle brought about by the new turn of events in France is truly comical. Not a whisper do I hear about the whole caboodle.

Page me39.27

The prisoners in Cologne are in a serious position. Since there is no charge whatever against them, the Board of indicting magistrates has neither released them nor brought them before the Court of Assizes but — has referred the matter back to the first examining magistrate for a fresh investigation! In other words, they will remain provisionally in clink without books, without letters, without being able to communicate either with one another or with the outside world, until the new state tribunal is ready.†a Just now we are trying to denounce this outrage in the English bourgeois Press.†b

Page Break me39.28

Page me39.28

Many regards.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.28

[On the back of the letter]

Per LIVERPOOL STEAMER Mr. J. Weydemeyer, 7 Chambers' Street, New York (City)

Page me39.28

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

16
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.28
[Manchester,] 2 February 1852

Dear Marx,

Do you recall a refugee by the name of Richter from Torgau (Prussian Saxony), a saddler and upholsterer — who used to be in London? This man, whom I recall having seen in London — tall, fair, the manners of a refugee — suddenly calls on me here, ostensibly having returned from Barmen where, he maintains, he worked for a time without papers; he brings greetings from Hühnerbein, etc. I can call to mind absolutely nothing about him except that I have seen him before. At all events, our register of refugees and Pfänder's or Rings' good memory should be able to tell us more particulars about him. I rather suspect the fellow is a member of Willich's clique†46 — in which case I shall chuck him out at once. The man has already found work here.

Page Break me39.29
Page me39.29

So far, I've been able to discover nothing in The Times about the business of our people in Cologne.†a I am only awaiting your reply to write immediately, s'il y a lieu,†b to The Daily News. The American STEAMER is in but, much to my surprise, no letter from Weydemeyer, or any copies of the paper,†c at least up till now. However, it's still possible that these may arrive tomorrow.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.29

Tell Pieper I shall shortly be sending him his £2, now the new month has begun.

Page me39.29
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

17
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.29
[London,] 4 February 1852†d
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Weerth left this morning for Holland. Where will he go from there? I do not know and neither does Weerth himself perhaps. He was as always very much disgruntled at his lot and, as for ours, the only disagreeable thing about it seemed to him our being forced to remain here in London instead of Cadiz, Saragossa, or some other confounded place in Spain. Indeed, since he's been living in Yorkshire again, Weerth has been saying that the time spent in Spain was the best in his life. He maintains that he can't stand the English climate and may therefore find that of Holland very COMFORTABLE. Let us wish him le bon voyage and wait and see whether he keeps his word and remembers about Weydemeyer.

Page Break me39.30
Page me39.30

My 'LETTER TO THE EDITOR' was sent to The Times last Thursday,†a il y a donc presque une semaine.†b It would seem that this paper, now that it makes a métier of polemicising against Bonaparte, deems it necessary to spare Prussia. So you must approach The Daily News. If that, too, misfires, which I doubt, there still remains The Spectator. Il est presque sûr.†c
Page me39.30

Yesterday G.J. Harney sent me the first issue of his resuscitated and somewhat enlarged Friend of the People.†47 If that's what he withdrew from the world for 8 months and buried himself in melancholy Scotland for...! But un seul passage suffira pour te faire goûter ce fruit délicieux†d:

'Justice — Immutable, Universal, Eternal — proclaims the sublime principle which will be, at once, our guiding star, the rule of our conduct, and the test, etc.'†e

Page me39.30

En voilá assez!†f Bonaparte, however, he has adequately chastised by calling him 'Louis THE BASE'.
Page me39.30

I do not know whether our EXDEAR sent me his little paper in order to wring our hearts or whether, out of spite towards us, he has become even more tritely democratic than we would have believed possible. By the by, alongside the platitudes and the 'JUSTICE IMMUTABLE' there are barefaced tricks played by the TRADING DEMAGOGUE. Against Jones — via the 'SPIRIT OF FREEDOM',†g via that SPOUTER Massey, secretary of the Tailors' Association of Castle Street, lickspittle to the clerics who keep this SHOP. Herald, á tort et á travers of the petits grands hommes†h whom the Continent has spewed out, calumniator of Jones, married to a saltimbanque†i who has duped him into believing that she is clairvoyant — he gets this Massey to have an apologia published for the associations in general and the AMALGAMATED

SOCIETY in particular, a piece which threatens to extend over numerous issues.†48 And Rhadamanthus Harney had told Jones in person that au fond†j he shared his views on the Associations. At the same time he announces: 'KOSSUTH'S RECEPTION AND PROGRESS IN AMERICA',†k although in a letter to Jones he described Kossuth as a HUMBUG. That is what the gentlemen of 'SUBLIME PRINCIPLE' are like. Je ne sais que c'est que des principes, sinon des régles qu'on prescrit aux autres pour soi.†a Harney retired for a while, allowing Jones, with his tempérament fougueux,†b to spoil the broth of popularity and then drink it himself. But even though he may harm Jones, he himself will achieve nothing. The fellow's completely done for as a writer and also, according to Lupus who heard him SPEECH-making in Jones Street,†49 as a speaker, but above all as a man. May the devil take these popular movements, more especially when they are pacifiques. In the course of this Chartist agitation O'Connor has gone mad (have you read about his latest scene in court?),†50 Harney has gone stale and Jones bankrupt. Voilá le dernier but de la vie dans tous les mouvements populaires.†c

Page Break me39.31
Page me39.31

Yesterday 'Colonel Bangya' came to see me. Amongst other things he said: 'Kossuth made the following speech to the Hungarian refugees who had foregathered with him in London: ”I will take care of you all but I demand that you all remain loyal, devoted and attached to me. I am not such a fool as to sustain people who intrigue with my opponents. I demand that everyone declare himself unconditionally.”' Thus the HUMBLE Kossuth behind the scenes. I further learned from Bangya that Szemere, Kasimir Batthyány and Perczel (le général) are coming to London and will set up an anti-Kossuth committee. Lastly, the master mind behind the whole DODGE is Signore Mazzini. He is using Kossuth as a mouthpiece and, in his cabinet, regards himself as something of a Machiavelli. It is he who pulls the strings. But this gentleman is unaware that the puppets he causes to dance are heroes only in his own eyes and in no one else's. Thus he wrote and told Kossuth to get on intimate terms with Kinkel, saying that he personally had been unable to do so because he already had the other lot of German bigwigs sur le bras†d; Kossuth must now really make friends with Kinkel and Kinkel must write in all his letters about his worthy, his eminent friend and “equal”, Kossuth. As for Kossuth, however, his idea is to lean on Germany's dictator, Kinkel, on the one hand, and on Italy's dictator, Mazzini, on the other, and to secure his rear with his ally, the dictator of France, Ledru-Rollin. The poor devil has sunk low.
Page me39.31

A Frenchman, Massol by name, has paid me a visit. For a short spell he was on the Réforme under Lamennais. Formerly one of the civilisateurs†e whom Mohammed Ali had summoned from Gaul,†51 he is also one of the few hommes d'esprit†f still to be found among the French. According to him, Sasonow's stay in Paris (which, by the way he must now leave) is wholly attributable to his possession of a very reliable false passport and to his connections with a few femmes galantes†a who have INFLUENCE in the top circles. You will like Massol.

Page Break me39.32

Page me39.32
In addition I have seen les citoyens†b Valliéres (former Barbésiste and officer at the barricades), Bianchi and Sabatier. Though very refined, the latter is en général not above the usual run.
Page me39.32
Dronke, I hear, is in Savoy.
Page me39.32
Bangya has suggested that Szemere and Perczel should write for Weydemeyer. What are the main points in the Hungarian business (military or otherwise) upon which elucidation should be sought from these gentlemen? It goes without saying that they must not write under their own names, for we do not want to identify ourselves with any coterie. But Perczel is du moins bon républicain,†c and very knowledgeable.
Page me39.32
Be so good — and mind you don't forget — as to send me the Tribunes. Johnson — Freiligrath's friend — wants to read the articles on Germany.†d Lupus wants to write an anti-Kossuth piece for Weydemeyer.
Page me39.32
As for the commercial business, I can no longer make head or tail of it. At one moment crisis seems imminent and the CITY prostrated, the next everything is set fair. I know that none of this will have any impact on the catastrophe. But at the present moment London is not the place in which to observe the current tendency.
Page me39.32
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.32
The matter of the seal is highly suspect.†e Send this one back to me; I have examined it minutely.

Page me39.32
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.33

18
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.33
[London,] Friday, 6 February 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I have just received your article.†a

Page me39.33

I am writing no more than a line or two, being short of time because of the departure of the mail for America and thus unable to go out to inquire about 'Richter'†b until later.

Page me39.33

I would, by the way, be glad if in the meantime you could send me the £2 by postal order. I shall be receiving SOME MONEY next week and shall then deliver the £2 to Pieper in your name. But it is important for me to have it at the beginning of the week whereas to him it can only be a matter of indifference, since he is well provided for just now.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.33
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

19
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†52
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.33
[London,] 13 February 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

Herewith the continuation of my article.†c The thing seems to grow of its own accord, and you will be getting two more articles about it. In addition I shall be sending you by the next post something on Signore Mazzini. But it is high time that we had some copies of your paper.†a After all, to be able to write for a journal one needs to see it, and the zeal of my colleagues is stimulated by seeing their things in print.

Page Break me39.34
Page me39.34

Herewith a note, which you should turn into an article, about the position of our imprisoned friends in Cologne.†53
Page me39.34
These people have now been in jug getting on for ten months.
Page me39.34
In November the case went through the Ratskammer, and was referred to the Court of Assizes. Next the case came up before the Board of indicting magistrates which, before Christmas, delivered a verdict, which was motivated as follows: 'In consideration of the fact that there is no actual evidence of an indictable offence and hence no grounds for sustaining the charge...' (but that, in view of the importance attached to the matter by the government, we fear for our posts if we drop the case against these people) 'we accordingly refer the case back to the first magistrate for instruction on various points.' The chief reason for this procrastination is the government's conviction that, before a jury, it would fail ignominiously. Meanwhile it hopes to see the creation of a High Court for high treason, or at least the withdrawal of JURIES in all cases of political offences, to which end a petition has already been laid before the First Prussian Chamber. Our friends are locked up in cells, cut off from one another and from the world, may receive neither letters nor visits nor even books — things that are never denied common criminals in Prussia.
Page me39.34
The Board could never have pronounced such an outrageous verdict had the Press evinced the least concern for the case. But liberal papers such as the Kölnische remained silent out of cowardice and 'democratic' ones (including the Lithographische Korrespondenz, published by Kinkel with the help of American money) out of hatred for the communists, out of fear of forfeiting some of their own importance, out of rivalry towards 'new' martyrs.†54 Such is the gratitude shown by these curs to the N.Rh.Z., which always stood up for the democratic rabble whenever they clashed with the government (e.g. Temme et al). Such is the gratitude shown by Mr Kinkel to the Westdeutsche Zeitung, in which Becker was his hearth and Bürgers his haven.†b Les canailles! Il faut les attaquer á mort.†c
Page me39.34
Greetings from my family to yours.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me39.35
Page me39.35
[From Jenny Marx]

We all of us long to hear from you, dear Mr Weydemeyer, but alas, one ship after another comes in without bringing news of you, your dear wife,†a your children, your paper, etc., etc. I trust you have safely received all the help sent from London. My husband has commandeered on your behalf pretty well all available communist quills (and has also turned to Germany), and some of these pieces, for instance Freiligrath's poem,†b will assuredly secure circulation for your paper. If you could somehow contrive to publish pamphlets, I would beg you to think it over. We are in a very sad plight here, there being no more hope for us in Europe. My husband believes that his articles on France, which will run to two more,†c are of the greatest topical interest and would thus provide the most suitable material for a small pamphlet, if only as a sequel to his Revue articles.†d If a New York bookseller were able to establish contact with Germany, he could count on not inconsiderable sales there. In any case the thing is written for Europe rather than America. However, we shall, of course, leave this to your own discretion. My husband further asks that you urge Dana to give us the name of a business house here in London where we can collect the fees with the minimum of delay. At this distance, Karl could not possibly give Dana any real idea of our circumstances or the urgency of the matter, since the situation was quite different when Dana knew us in Cologne and such a comfortably situated American has no idea how everything hangs in the balance here, and how ten shillings, coming at the right moment, can often rescue one from a horrifying situation. Sometime or other you may, perhaps, find an opportunity of telling him this personally. With kindest regards and warm greetings to your wife

from Jenny Marx

Page me39.35
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Marx's letter is printed according to the original, Jenny Marx's note according to a copy in unknown hand

Published in English in full for the first time 20

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.35
[Manchester,] 17 February 1852

Dear Marx,
You will be furious with me for being so cursory, but I'll be damned if I know whether I'm coming or going, what with all this work and COMMERCE. Voici les faits†a: 1. Charles†b has gone to Germany and has left me not only with all his own work, but also with a nice little residue of tasks left undone at the year's end; 2. Last year's balance sheet shows a definite loss for my old man which may be a good lesson for him, but means that I am inundated with an unholy mass of vexations, calculations, and jobs of various kinds; 3. One of the Ermens†c has given notice of termination and you can imagine the intrigues and correspondence which that brings in its train. Enough: this evening I shall be stuck in the office until 8 and, instead of being able to write to you at greater length, still have to write a letter to my old man and take it to the POST OFFICE before twelve o'clock tonight; tomorrow evening I must do something for Jones†d and the day after tomorrow I shall see to it that I finish an article for the Tribune.†e For the present there can be no thought of spare time before 7 or 8 in the evening, and the worst of it is that, for some time to come, I shall have to devote my whole attention to filthy commerce, otherwise everything will go wrong here and my old man will cut off my SUPPLIES.

Page Break me39.36

Page me39.36

You will have received the £2. I hope to hear from you soon, even if I don't have sufficient leizure to answer your last letter at length.
Page me39.36

According to today's Daily News Louis Napoleon is certain to exhume Kaspar Hauser and to claim succession to the throne of Baden through his Aunt Stéphanie. Voilá de grandes nouvelles pour le citoyen Seiler dont l'étoile va se lever incessamment.†f Could you not persuade Kaspar Hauser's great historian†g to write to Louis Napoleon and offer him his important sources on this matter? Il y a lá de quoi faire un grand coup.†h

Your
F.E.

Page me39.36

How is it that Weydemeyer sends no word? If a letter doesn't arrive by the Arctic tomorrow morning, I shall despair; something must have gone wrong. So far as I know, he has not written since 5 January, or at least I have heard nothing.

Page Break me39.37

Page me39.37
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

21
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.37
[London,] 18 February [1852]
28 Dean Street, Soho

I shall write to you at length on Saturday. Only a few lines today.
Page me39.37

I have not yet received the money that was promised me from home and so have not yet been able to hand over your £2 to Pieper, but have told him I have had a few lines from you in which you informed me that I should be receiving money for him from you. I hope I shall be able to pay him before the week is out.
Page me39.37
If your time is very much taken up, you would certainly do better to write for Dana than for Jones. The enclosed letter from Weydemeyer†55 will show you even more plainly how essential it is not to interrupt these articles.†a What must be done now is to redouble our attacks in the Tribune on the Frankfurt Left,†56 especially when you come to the 'March Association'.†57 To help you, I am today sending you Bauer's book,†b in which at least a few facts are to be found.
Page me39.37
I again pray you to send me the issues of the 'Tribune' by return, since Johnson is the only Englishman to whom I can turn when in extremis†c — and I hover constantly on the brink. Don't forget it this time!

Page Break me39.38
Page me39.38
How is it that Weydemeyer has not received a single one of your articles†a? You must set an inquiry on foot.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.38
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

22
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.38
Manchester, 19 February 1852

Dear Marx,
Despite tremendous efforts — your letter only arrived this morning — I have still not finished the article for Dana†b and it is now 11 o'clock at night. I have received the Bauer†c — it is coming in very useful. In return, and whatever happens, you will receive 2 articles for Dana for next Tuesday's STEAMER. Since your letters reach Weydemeyer and mine don't, I'd be glad if you would forthwith dispatch the enclosed note to W.†d in one of your own. It's an altogether curious business. It seems that two or three of my letters to my old man have also failed to reach him. Cela n'est pas clair.†e

Page me39.38
Tell Jones he will be getting something from me next week, or write him a note to that effect. God knows why so many snags should crop up all at once and prevent me from getting down to anything. But on Saturday and Sunday I shall shut myself away, and then I hope to get something done.†19

Page Break me39.39
Page me39.39
Why doesn't that accursed Weydemeyer enclose Simon's article†a so that we can attend to it ourselves? A stinging counter-article would soon show Dana that nothing is to be gained by accepting articles that attack us.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.39
Write some time giving me the exact address under which you have written to Weydemeyer.

Page me39.39
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

23
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.39
Manchester, 19 February 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,
To my intense surprise I see from your letter of 6 Feb. per the Arctic that not one of my letters to you has arrived. I have sent you 4, if not 5, articles on England†17 and only desisted a fortnight ago because I had heard absolutely nothing from you: my last article went by the STEAMER which left on Saturday 31 Jan. from Liverpool, and concerned the REFORM BILL to be anticipated from little Russell. The first 2 letters were addressed to Mr J. Weydemeyer, Deutsche Vereinsbuchhandlung, William Street, New York; the others to Mr J.W., 7 Chambers' Street, New York (City). Since this matter requires investigation, I am sending you this through Marx whose letters, it seems, are reaching you; I would ask you, 1. to go to the above places and see whether the letters were presented there; 2. if not, to go and inquire at the N.Y. CITY POST OFFICE. If they are not to be found there, advise me by the first Liverpool STEAMER and I shall see what further steps can be taken here; I can easily get the thing into the newspapers over here if the local postmaster fails to give me a satisfactory answer. I posted several of the letters myself, the rest went with the business mail, and that proves that they were properly attended to, since all our business letters have arrived. Take these steps, I beg you, without delay, for otherwise there is little point in my sending you any more articles when the Revolution comes to life again.

Page Break me39.40
Page me39.40
Make sure you send us L. Simon's Tribune article,†a either a cutting — giving the date of the issue — or the whole issue in a wrapper, since that sort of thing is always good reading.
Page me39.40
My address is still the same.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.40
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

24
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.40
[London,] 20 February 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,
I can send you nothing this week for the simple reason that for a week or more I have been so beset by money troubles that I have not even been able to pursue my studies at the Library,†b let alone write articles.
Page me39.40
However, I think that by Tuesday (the 24th) and Friday (the 27th) I shall be able to send you Nos. 5 and 6 of my article,†c which are the concluding ones.
Page me39.40
I received your letter, along with Cluss' concluding remarks on 18 February. You have been particularly unfortunate in two respects: 1. unemployment in New York; 2. the raging westerlies, which have driven vessels bound from London to America off course.

For, with the exception of the early days, contributions have been sent you from England (by me, Engels, Freiligrath, Eccarius, etc.) as regularly as any newspaper could hope for. However, the people here have begun to flag because no news has arrived from America, albeit a multitude of ships. I did not think fit to inform anyone other than Engels and Lupus of the suspension of your paper.†a It would only make people more dilatory.

Page Break me39.41
Page me39.41
If, by the by, you wish to receive regular support from here, you will have to fulfil the following conditions:
Page me39.41
1. Write every week and give the date of the letters you have received from us.
Page me39.41
2. Keep us fully au courant with everything over there and regularly supplied with relevant documents, etc., newspaper cuttings, etc.
Page me39.41
You will realise, mon cher,†b how difficult it is to contribute to a paper on the other side of the ocean without any knowledge of its readers, etc. But if you fulfil the above conditions I can guarantee you the necessary contributions. I am here at their backs, WHIP in hand, and shall have no difficulty in keeping their noses to the grindstone. From Germany, too, I have received promises on your behalf of contributions and collaboration. If I only knew that the paper would survive, I would have someone in Paris who is READY to send you a weekly contribution gratis. I shall write to the man,†c who is one of my best and most intelligent friends. The worst of it is that no one likes to work pour le roi de Prusse,†d and daily reports lose all value if not published immediately on arrival. Since, then, you are unable to make any payment, it is all the more necessary to convince people that they are doing real party work and that their letters are not being pigeonholed.
Page me39.41
It seems to me that you are making a mistake in having your letters delivered instead of doing what every newspaper must do, that is, advise the Post Office that you will have them collected regularly on the arrival of a vessel. In this way misunderstandings and delays are more easily avoided.
Page me39.41
Apropos. Do not print Hirsch's statement†14 if you have not already done so.
Page me39.41
A mass of blackguards is leaving here for New York (amongst them tailor Lehmann and tailor Joseph Meyer). Some of them will approach you in my name. But don't trust anyone who does not bring with him a few lines in my writing. The fellows will serve well enough to answer questions about Willich, etc. Lehmann and Meyer are devotees of Jesus Willich.

Page Break me39.42
Page me39.42

As for Dana, I think it was foolish of him to accept articles from Simon.†a If my money-box allowed, I should immediately refuse to send him any further contributions. Let him publish attacks on myself and Engels but not by such an impertinent nincompoop. It's sheer stupidity to permit Agitation and Emigration,†26 those twin fictions which exist only on newspaper pages, to be presented to the American public as historical realities by a vain fellow who has imposed upon Germany the Prussian Emperor,†58 the March Associations†57 and the Imperial Regent, Vogt,†59 and now, with his bankrupt accomplices, would like to impose himself afresh upon the people, along with Parliament and a somewhat modified Imperial constitution. Rien de plus ridicule que ce gredin-lá qui du haut des Alpes laisse tomber des paroles d'homme d'état.†b I should have credited Dana with more tact. Ludwig Simon — von Trier! When will this fellow drop his patent of parliamentary nobility?
Page me39.42

Here in London, you know, all these fellows have completely drifted apart. The only thing that keeps them in any way together is the prospect of being redeemed by Gottfried Christ Kinkel's money. On the other hand we have that idiot Ruge, together with Ronge and two or 3 other jackasses, who conceal their lazy still-life by calling it 'agitation', just as a stagnant swamp might be dubbed 'open sea'.
Page me39.42

Europe, of course, is now busying itself with other troubles than these. Ledru-Rollin himself has collapsed here like a punctured balloon since 2 December†c and the arrival of new revolutionary elements from France. Mazzini is making ultra-reactionary speeches, one of which I shall shortly analyse for you.
Page me39.42

As regards Ernest Jones' Notes to the People, in which you will find all the day-to-day history of the English proletariat, I shall send you it as soon as my financial circumstances permit. I have to pay 8 shillings every time I send a parcel to America.

Page me39.42

Give Cluss my warm regards. We are eagerly awaiting his letters. Why haven't you sent us his statement†60?
Page me39.42

I, together with my wife, Freiligrath and wife,†d and Lupus, all send our heart-felt greetings to your wife, whom please assure of our sincere regard. We hope that the new world citizen will make his appearance cheerfully in the New World.

Page Break me39.43

Farewell.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.43

If it does not work out with your newspaper, could you not bring out my pamphlet,†a sheet by sheet or, if possible, in sections as sent to you? Otherwise it will take too long.

Page me39.43
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

25
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.43
[London,] 23 February [1852]

DEAR Frederic,

I must again chivvy you about the Tribune since I am myself being chivvied daily by Johnson.†b I would also ask you to send me such documents as you may have received from Weydemeyer. The address you gave for Weydemeyer was perfectly correct.

Page me39.43

Apropos. By Pfänder's account the Straubinger†61 Richter is a creature of Willich's.

Page me39.43

E. Jones has been puffing your article for all he is worth without, of course, mentioning your name.†c He has been compelled thus to cry his wares by competition from Harney who has got hold of some money, the devil knows where from, and has large advertising waggons driving round the CITY, with the legend 'READ THE FRIEND OF THE PEOPLE', the paper being displayed and on sale in all socialist SHOPS.

Page Break me39.44
Page me39.44

I shall search out and send you the issue of the Tribune in which Mr Simon blows his own trumpet.†55 The incompetent nincompoop! He still goes on signing himself 'Simon von Trier'. The fellow can't make up his mind to dispense with his parliamentary nobility title. Seiler has read the translation of the crap in the Staatszeitung. You know how garbled his accounts always are. So far as I could gather it went something like this: Ludwig Simon von Trier, speaking on behalf of the Swiss émigrés, treats the great controversy between 'Agitation' (the name used by Ruge and Co. to conceal the dullness of their still-life) and 'Emigration',†26 with the most prodigious pomposity, as Europe's question brûlante†a from his 'Alpine height'. At this juncture — and here Willich is also cited as a man of the utmost importance, all manner of diffuse reflections being proffered concerning the acquisition of this hero — he comes to the third of the dangerous parties in London, 'the party of imposition', the leaders of which are Engels and Marx. For we seek to impose 'liberty' on the peoples by force. We are worse tyrants than the Emperor of Russia. We were the first to treat 'universal franchise', etc., with 'scorn and contumely'. And even before that, we ruined everything with our 'lust for imposition'. Le pauvre garçon!†b Did we impose the Prussian Emperor,†58 the 'March Associations'†57 or the Imperial Regent Vogt, on the Germans†59? On him we shall impose a coup de pied.†c So far as these jackasses are concerned, Bonaparte has lived in vain. They still go on believing in 'universal franchise', and are solely preoccupied with paltry calculations as to how they can again impose their rotten personalities on the German people. One can hardly believe one's ears when one hears the fellows indefatigably bawling out the same old tune again. They are proper blockheads, incorrigible blockheads. As to how the vain little rogue found his way into the Tribune, I am in no doubt. Le citoyen Fröbel aura été l'homme intermédiaire.†d He has long been connected with Dana.

Page me39.44

Enclosed a letter from Reinhardt, which contains some pretty cancans.†e

Page me39.44

Russell has been overthrown in the drollest possible manner.†62 I can ask nothing more than that Derby should take the helm. During this short session you will have seen how pitiable the Manchester men†63 can be when not driven by la force des choses.†f I don't hold it against these fellows. Each successive democratic

Page Break me39.44a

Ferdinand Freiligrath

Page Break me39.44b

28 Dean Street, Soho, London, where Marx lived from 1850 to 1856

Page Break me39.45

victory, e.g. the BALLOT,†64 is a concession which, of course, they make to the workers only en cas d'urgence.†a

Page me39.45

Yesterday I was talking to a French MERCHANT just come from Paris. Business wretched. And do you know what the jackass said? Bonaparte fait pire que la république. Les affaires allaient mieux.†b It is truly fortunate that the French bourgeois should always hold their government responsible for commercial crises. No doubt Bonaparte is also to blame for the unemployment in New York and the bankruptcies in London.

Page me39.45

Another very interesting piece of information (tu sens ici l'influence de l'illustre Seiler†c) about Bonaparte. Bangya, as I have already told you, is connected with Szemere and Batthyány.†d He is an agent of the latter's. He confided to me that Batthyány and Czartoryski are in collusion with Bonaparte and see him nearly every day. He wants to secure allies behind the backs of Russia and Austria amongst the aristocratic émigrés and those streaming in from Poland and Hungary and has, moreover, definitely told them that, in spite of Nicholas and all the rest, he is going to invade Belgium and perhaps Baden as well, and this in the near future.

Page me39.45

Ewerbeck has sent me 12 copies of his bulky work, L'Allemagne et les Allemands. One for you. Nothing quite like it has ever been seen or heard of before. The historical part, which begins ab ovo,†e is copied from out-dated primers. You may judge how competent he is as regards more recent history from the following particulars: F. List introduced the doctrine of Free Trade, and Ruge that of social science, into Germany. Hegel has immortalised himself by (literally) enlightening the Germans on the categories of quality, quantity, etc., and Feuerbach has proved that men cannot extend their knowledge beyond the range of human understanding. Pedro Düsar (brother of the Struve woman) is one of the greatest German men of liberty, and Freiligrath made his name as a collaborateur on the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. On top of that a style á pouffer de rire,†f e.g. how Jason's warriors grew from dragon's teeth, which is why the German tribes are perpetually at odds with one another. Romulus Augustulus était un jeune homme doux et agréable,†g and for three hundred years Germans have been used to hearing themselves referred to by their neighbours as des bêtes.†a

Page Break me39.46
Page me39.46

Have you read Mazzini's simple-minded infamous speech?

Your
K.M.

Page me39.46
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

26
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me39.46
London, 23 February 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Lassalle,

I should greatly like to know whether my second letter†65 similarly failed to arrive. Knowing how punctilious you are about answering, I can only attribute the delay in hearing from you to some accident.
Page me39.46
Since I last wrote my state of health has again improved, although I am still having much trouble with my eyes. My social circumstances, on the other hand, have deteriorated. I have had a definite refus†b from the publisher in respect of my Economy†45; my anti-Proudhon manuscript,†c which for the past year has been wandering around Germany, has likewise failed to find a berth; the financial crisis has finally reached a level comparable only to the commercial crisis now making itself felt in New York and London. Unlike the gentlemen of commerce, I cannot, alas, even have recourse to bankruptcy. Mr Bonaparte was in similar straits when he chanced his coup d'état.

Page Break me39.47
Page me39.47
As to this Mr Bonaparte, I feel I can do no better than give you extracts from a letter conveyed to me by a friend in Paris,†a un ami qui est trés sceptique et qui ne partage pas les opinions les plus favorables sur le peuple. Maintenant, écoutez†b:

'All in all, the mood of the Parisian public has experienced a noticeable change and, even though it has as yet not gone beyond resignation, this last is felt all the more genuinely and grimly, and far more generally. The main reason for this, among the middle and lower classes, is that trade and hence employment, despite initial favourable appearances, simply cannot be got going, whereas those same classes had sacrificed all other considerations to the hope that these things would improve. And then the slow-witted majority of the less advanced workers — which places more hope in the Republic than in the monarchies of long and bitter memory — has, as a result of Napoleon's decrees, gradually come to realise that the President is in no way concerned with the preservation of the Republic; and he has done himself great harm in the eyes of property owners by confiscating the Orleans' estates, a measure which, after all, sets a dangerous official example. Chaps such as Fould, de Morny and Dupin — for reasons of private interest of course — have even refused to subscribe to this measure, a fact all the more striking on account of their spotless antecedents, which are more or less common knowledge. As for Dupin, the President of the defunct National Assembly, it has since been learnt that his last pretty move was to suppress, on the morning of 2 December and with the connivance of Bonaparte, a letter from the Archbishop of Paris inviting the representatives to assemble in the church of Notre Dame while he himself intended to stand in the porch to protect them, in their capacity as the representatives of popular sovereignty, against the soldiers of the usurper. This might have given quite a different turn to the whole thing, the more so since the haute cour de justice†c had assembled at the same time and had already begun to register a protest against the coup d'état.
Page me39.47
'As for de Morny, the minister who resigned with Dupin, he was known as the escroc†d of his mistress' (Countess Lehon's) husband, a circumstance which caused Émile de Girardin's wife to say that while it was not unprecedented for governments to be in the hands of men who were governed by their wives, none had ever been known to be in the hands of hommes entretenus.†e Well, at present this same Countess Lehon holds a salon where she is one of Bonaparte's most vociferous opponents and it was she who, on the occasion of the confiscation of the Orleans' estates, let fall the well-known witticism: “C'est le premier vol de l'aigle.”†f Because of this remark of his wife's, Émile de Girardin was expelled. Rémusat's expulsion is attributed to a similar cause. The latter is said to have arrived one morning at the Ministry of the Interior where Morny had installed young Lehon as Chef de Bureau; upon catching sight of Rémusat, Lehon rudely asked him his name, whereat R. replied: “Monsieur, dans ma famille on porte le nom de son pére, c'est pourquoi je me nomme de Rémusat.”†g At much the same time Lehon is said to have had another row, on this occasion in Ham. When he gave General Le Flô official notification of expulsion, the general threw him out, shouting: “Comment, c'est vous, gredin, qui osez venir m'annoncer mon exil?”†a In such circumstances, it is not difficult to assess how much respect a fledgling government will continue to command, even from the most mediocre of honnêtes gens.†b A lady known to me personally, a ward of Napoleon's, who had been in close contact with him ever since she was a child, told him on 2 December that she would have nothing more to do with him, adding that he and his associates were a gouvernement de voleurs et d'assassins.†c True, the real plutocrats continue to adhere to Napoleon as being the only possible expression of authority just now and the last bulwark of existing society, but their faith in the possible durability of his régime has been much undermined by his measures, with the result that, after a brief interval, they have again begun to hug their money, as is evident from the stagnant Bourse and the check to the revival of trade. Thus the President's only real following consists of those who are bound to him by the most blatant self-interest, along with the privileged clerical clique and the army, although considerable dissatisfaction and a feeling of uncertainty and irresolution has crept into the latter as a result of the many dismissals of Orleanist officers, a state of affairs which enormously impairs its power. Moreover, personally and in private, the President is said to be most anxious and downcast. Indeed, in this changed climate of opinion, all that is needed is the removal of his sorry person and everything would be thrown into chaos again without any effort. Little or no attempt would be made at resistance. In this connection the remark by the experienced Guizot, on learning of the successful coup d'état, is worthy of note: “C'est le triomphe complet et définitif du socialisme!”†d

Page Break me39.48
Page me39.48
'Having both before and after fallen out with every party without exception, Bonaparte is seeking a counterbalance by means of this or that popular measure — vast expansion of public works, prospects of a general amnesty for the participants of 2 December, etc. — just as he will soon attempt something similar by means of this or that measure in favour of this or that class, and all without consistency of purpose. And what matters most of all is his failure to win back the masses, since he is unable to give them bread, i.e. any source of labour for their livelihood, and has actually deprived them of their favourite pastime, the innocent consolation they derived from the trees of liberty and the republican inscriptions in the streets; similarly they can no longer while away an hour in the wine and coffee shops, since all political discourse is strictly prohibited there. The peaceable bourgeois are angered by the loss of their hobby-horse, the National Guard... Nor do they fancy those aristocratic routs, the state balls, from which they stay away; thus, apart from foreigners and two or three Parisian exceptions, the only people to attend the last, splendide, Tuileries ball were ladies of doubtful virtue. The reckless squandering that goes on is a source of disquiet to the thrifty citizens, who look ahead to the day when the Orleans funds will be exhausted.

Page me39.48
'What particularly offends all who have a modicum of intelligence is the destruction of the Press.
Page me39.48
'Again, the organisation of the resuscitated Police Ministry and the spy system associated with it generates bad blood throughout the départements. The Parisian salons are again full of distinguished, unsuspected informers, just as in the days of the Empire.
Page me39.48
'And all the time much tripotage†e on the Bourse on the part of those who, in one way or another, arbitrarily grant or withdraw concessions for railways, etc., the instructions about which they alone had knowledge of, and upon which they speculate the previous day. It was believed that a secret college of Jesuits, headed by Montalembert, who had always been on terms of some intimacy with the President, exerted direct and immediate influence on his decisions; but as for Montalembert, it soon emerged that, after availing himself of his advice, Bonaparte suddenly dismissed him from his presence never to receive him again, so that ever since they have been the bitterest of enemies, and M., personally no less misérable, used the Orleans decree merely as a pretext for dissociating himself officially with honour. Now there is talk of nothing but B.'s craving for conquest. It will be his complete undoing.'

Page Break me39.49

Page me39.49
So much for my ami.
Page me39.49
The important news from here is that the Tories have replaced the Whigs, and formed a ministry headed by the Earl of Derby (Lord Stanley).†62 This événement†a is splendid. In England our movement can progress only under the Tories. The Whigs conciliate all over the place and lull everyone to sleep. On top of that there is the commercial crisis, which is looming ever closer and whose early symptoms are erupting on every hand. Les choses marchent.†b If only we can manage tant bien que mal†c through the interim period! It is nearly time for the post. I must close.
Page me39.49
Salut.

K. Marx

Page me39.49
First published in F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

27
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.49
[London,] 27 February 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I see that last time I forgot Reinhardt's letter.†d The article has gone off to Dana,†e who has not yet replied to my request that he advise me of a business house here in London. Despite her promise, I have still heard nothing from my mater.†a Nor has there as yet been any reply to my letters to acquaintances in Germany. A week ago I reached the pleasant point where I am unable to go out for want of the coats I have in pawn, and can no longer eat meat for want of credit. Piffling it all may be, but I'm afraid that one day it might blow up into a scandal. The only good news comes from my ministerial sister-in-law,†b namely the news that my wife's indestructible uncle†c is ill. If the cur dies now I shall be out of this pickle.

Page Break me39.50
Page me39.50

I shall not be writing at length today, being busy with the dictation of an article for Weydemeyer†d and the dispatch and correction of the other contributions for him.
Page me39.50

I see from the Augsburg paper (through the humble offices of Seiler) that Mr Stirner has produced a 'history of the counter-revolution'.†e He tries to prove that the revolution collapsed because it was 'sacrosanct' whereas the counter-revolution prevailed because of its 'egoistical' stance.
Page me39.50

On 25 February the French held a February banquet, or rather a dry MEETING accompanied by tea and sandwiches. I and wife were invited. The rest of the public had to pay 1 franc to go in. Since I neither could nor wished to attend, I sent my wife there with a FRENCHMAN. Ledru, Pyat, Thoré, Martin Bernard, etc., in short the whole Rollinist clique by whom the affair had been mooted, failed to appear because they considered the entrée,†f for the benefit of the refugees, to be beneath their dignity. L. Blanc had also cried off. Only the lowest dregs of the emigration were there, most of whom style themselves Blanquists. But the little pseudo-Corsican†g was waiting in some near-by parlour; after being assured by his spies of the absence of Ledru and Co., he appeared and, in view of the total lack of talent and authority, his natty, steel-blue tail-coat was received with RAPTUROUS APPLAUSE. His speech, after which he immediately departed, sent his enemies into transports. Enchanted them. Vanquished them. And what did THAT LITTLE MAN say, that Johnny Russell of socialism? That here abroad, people were wondering at the strange events in France, that he believed more firmly than ever in the star de la patrie.†h And why? Je veux, said he, vous expliquer le mouvement historique,†i etc. Namely, that in the lives of all great soldiers, e.g. of Frédéric le Grand, of Napoléon le grand, there are des grandes victoires et des grands revers. Eh bien! La France est une nation militaire.†a She has her élans and her catastrophes. Quod erat demonstrandum. What she wanted she has always achieved, feudalism banished in 1789, the monarchy in 1830. Whom did she wish to overthrow in 1848? The bourgeoisie, do you suppose? Certainly not. La misére, la hideuse misére.†b There follows a flood of socialist tears over la misére. La misére, ce n'est pas quelque chose de fixe, quelque chose de saisissable,†c — nevertheless, the French nation will overcome la misére in the new revolution and then la mére ne détruira plus de ses propres mains le fruit de ses entrailles, la petite fille de sept ans ne se 'groupera' plus sous la machine†d and more inanities of the same kind. Such was his prodigality that his speech contained three whole jokes. He called Bonaparte 1. un aventurier, 2. un bâtard and 3. le singe de son oncle.†e This last novelty threw those present into a veritable St. Vitus' dance. Qu'en dis-tu?†f It's enough to make one despair of the crapauds.†g Seen as a whole, their story is epigrammatic, a genuine dramatic work of art, but the fellows themselves! Mon dieu! Mr Blanc's sally reminds me of a joke I was told by Massol. By midnight Bonaparte is invariably befuddled, in the company of the mâles and femelettes†h he collects around him for his orgies. Then he begins to curse and swear. 'Mais c'est un militaire!',†i says one of his lady acquaintances in exoneration.

Page Break me39.51
Page me39.51
Addio.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.51
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.52

28
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.52
Manchester, 27 Feb. 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,

I am glad to see that some of my letters have at last arrived and hence that no further obstacles stand in the way of our correspondence.†66 The first two were addressed to J.W., Deutsche Vereinsbuchhandlung, William Str., New York. The copies of the Revolution and the Demokrat have arrived safely and are being forwarded to London today. Mr Heinzen will be delighted by your riposte.†a You summed him up very neatly. Send all further consignments of printed matter in the same way, open at both ends; the postage costs very little.

Page me39.52

Of my articles, you could at very most include only the one on the invasion†67 in any future miscellany. The others are unsuitable and have already been overtaken by events.

Page me39.52

As for confrére Standau, the fellow's an erstwhile conspirator who fits exactly into the category we depicted in the Revue, in the critique of Chenu†b — very useful in certain respects, very prone to idleness, not always reliable and something of a Rodomonte. Anyhow, give him my regards.

Page me39.52

Schmidt of Löwenberg is conducting a crusade against the Jesuits in the neighbourhood of St. Louis and has for chief ally the ex-trickster and agent of Duchâtel, Mr Börnstein of Parisian fame. What else he is up to I do not know. That Dr Maas is a supporter of the Marx clique is news to me. I know him only as an ex-Palatinate ranter. Fischer, the editor of the New Orleans Deutsche Zeitung, is an acquaintance of mine and was a member of my bodyguard in Kaiserslautern,†68 but this day-dreamer has since become infernally corrupted and Kinkelified, and if Kinkel himself has been in New Orleans, he will have done a great deal of mischief since he will have met with no opposition.

Page Break me39.53

Page me39.53

So far as the question of a war against England is concerned,†a just now it interests me primarily as a military problem which one tries to elucidate and solve in just the same way as an exercise in geometry. But I do not regard a coalition war of this kind as out of the question although for the time being, so long as Derby remains at the helm, it will certainly be deferred. The gentlemen of the Holy Alliance†69 assess their forces today no less incorrectly than was done in the various coalitions from 1792 to 1807. And as for Russia's dependence on England, 1. one cannot expect the Tsar†b to be sensible of it, and secondly, a suspension of trade, while it would result in stagnation, poverty and the spoiling of produce, could, after all, be endured for 2-3 years just as could a commercial crisis of the same duration. Bear in mind that in Russia virtually no money circulates in the country among the peasantry, the vast majority, and that these barbarians' every household necessity can be produced in any village. True, the cities and the aristocracy would suffer, but the Russian Empire is founded on peasants and on petty country gentry. An uprising on the Continent instigated by England presents great difficulties; Spain was helped by her terrain, her great size and sparse population, and the lack of provisions, and also the fact of being surrounded on nearly all sides by the sea. But Hungary and Poland are land-locked countries while Italy, save for the islands, could hardly be held by the English and the insurgents against the superior forces of the coalition. Furthermore, England is not now in a position, and will not be so a year after the outbreak of war, to muster an army like the one sent to Wellington in Spain.†70 But ships without a landing force can never gain a foothold.

Page me39.53

It's a real stroke of luck that the Tories should have taken the helm. As a result of the continual victories in the field of commercial policy and the long era of prosperity, the manufacturers had grown thoroughly indolent. Parliamentary reform, even when more far-reaching than Russell's paltry Bill,†71 failed to arouse the slightest interest. Now, with the devil hard on their heels, they are already scared out of their wits, the more so since every one of the new ministers represents, and most brazenly, some aspect or other of protectionism. The Anti-Corn Law League†72 is being revived here. Parliamentary reform, the extension of the franchise, the equalisation of constituencies, secret ballot, have all become questions of vital moment to the industrial bourgeoisie, whereas before they were of immediate interest only to the philistines. Derby must announce a dissolution and will probably do so as soon as the Army Act and the taxes for the coming year have been voted. In May we shall doubtless have another election. The Protectionists will gain a few votes and in exchange throw out a few Peelites.†73 But they are still in the minority and, should Derby dare to propose the immediate introduction of protective tariffs, he will unquestionably take a tumble. But he may be cunning enough to defer this. At any rate the movement is now FAIRLY under way in England. With Palmerston's dismissal†74 the fun began, as it was bound to do after the endless ministerial defeats of the previous session. Derby is the second act. Dissolution will be the third. As for England's foreign policy under Derby it too, of course, will be reactionary; but little that is decisive will happen; maybe a few prosecutions of refugees, in which the government will fail, attempts to introduce Aliens Bills,†75 which will likewise fail, perhaps support for attempts to form an anti-Louis Napoleon coalition, which will also come to nothing. The Tories are frightfully circumscribed in England and, unless they attempt to restore the Sidmouth-Castlereagh despotism of 1815-21, whereby they could burn their fingers devilish badly for, within the law and on behalf of FREE TRADE, your English bourgeois fights like a tiger — the conservative gentlemen will make sorry fools of themselves. But Derby (formerly, in his father's lifetime, Lord Stanley) is a hot-head and may well have recourse to extreme, if not illegal, measures.

Page Break me39.54
Page me39.54

All that is lacking now is a commercial crisis and, with Derby up, I rather suspect that it will soon be upon us. The rapid succession of English FREE TRADE measures, followed by the opening up of the Dutch colonies, the lowering of tariffs in Spain, Sardinia, etc., etc., and the fall in cotton prices (since Sept. 1850 down to half their former value), are keeping prosperity going longer than might have been expected. But, given the state of the Indian and to some extent the American markets (appreciably fewer manufactures were exported to the United States last month than in the same period last year), the thing cannot be expected to last much longer. If, as seems hardly probable, the crisis comes as early as May, then the fun will begin. But it will hardly be here before September or October.

Page me39.54
My regards to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me39.55
Page me39.55
Shortly an article on the position of the English industrial bourgeoisie and on commercial matters†76 — I shall be very busy for the next fortnight or so.

Page me39.55
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

29
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.55
Manchester, 2 March 1852

Dear Marx,
By now you will have received the £5 I sent off yesterday, half of it direct to you and half under cover to Lupus. My congratulations on the news of the illness of the old Brunswick inheritance-thwarter†a; I trust the catastrophe will at last come to pass.
Page me39.55
According to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, Stirner's Geschichte der Reaktion is a wretched compilation, or rather a patchwork of gleanings from what he has read and from his own published and unpublished newspaper articles — 'rejected leaves and blossoms' on everything in the world and somewhat more — 2 volumes which conclude with the threat that the third will contain 'the groundwork and the system'.†b Far from aspiring to sacrosanctity, his own glosses seem rather to be destined for higher schools for young ladies.
Page me39.55
Little Simon von Trier must inevitably make an absolute ass of himself in Dana's eyes by attributing such ludicrous nonsense to us, when Dana can see for himself that our articles contain ANYTHING BUT THAT.†c It is preposterous of Dana not to send us the Tribune or you the money; I think the best plan would be to set Weydemeyer onto him, he at least would be able to send us the Tribune and at the same time settle the money question by word of mouth. Whether he advises you of a business house in London or sends a bill of exchange is immaterial. My article, which was to have gone by the Southampton STEAMER, missed it since I had miscalculated its departure by one day. Now you will be getting it on Friday, along with another which will bring the thing up to the end of 1848.†a These will be followed by the Prussian Chambers, the campaign for the Imperial Constitution†77 and, finally, the Prusso-Austrian squabbles of 1850/51, lastly the conclusion — altogether the whole may, perhaps, run to another six-8 articles, summa summarum 17-20 articles.

Page Break me39.56
Page me39.56
Charles†b will be back here in a fortnight, when I shall have more time. Until then Jones will have to be patient.
Page me39.56
So Mr Derby declares outright that, á la Sir James Graham, he will again help the Austrians and Co. to lay their hands on any likely bandieras.†78 Hence once again letters will be broken open en masse. The main sufferers will be Mazzini and the Hungarians. We ourselves will be little inconvenienced.
Page me39.56
But what effrontery on Derby's part! 'I hereby declare that given a suitable opportunity, I shall impose a tax on corn. Just when that will be is for me alone to decide. But if you, the majority in the House of Commons, do not wish to be des factieux,†c you must leave me in peace until I have so far consolidated my position and so far toryfied the land that I can undo unperturbed all that has been accomplished during the past twenty years.'†d Poor HOUSE OF COMMONS! In place of a ministry that found itself in a relative minority, they now have one that is in absolute and permanent minority; and they are not even permitted to oppose it. But those milksops, the FREE TRADERS, have got no more than their deserts. The fellows won a battle, captured a new strategic line, and failed to occupy and fortify it, failed, indeed, to profit by their victory and even merely to pursue the enemy. Now they must again join battle on the same ground. The Tory avénement,†e however, has suddenly made these questions abundantly plain to the fellows. Parliamentary reform, taken to the point at which Tories and Whigs, at least in their unadulterated form, are for ever precluded from power and a majority of industrialists in the Cabinet and in Parliament is assured, has now become a vital question to the manufacturers. Here these GENTLEMEN are again very active. At this moment the Anti-Corn Law League†72 is meeting and discussing whether to reorganise itself. Cobden, Bright,

Page Break me39.57
Milner Gibson, etc., are here. No doubt they will at least piece together again the bare bones of the organisation. But not until the dissolution will the real fun begin. The dissolution, however, cannot be long in coming for, despite Derby's honied words and his pacific and conciliatory intentions, clashes are unavoidable.
Page me39.57

Unfortunately there is little prospect of the commercial crisis coinciding with the dissolution. Business here continues splendid. The news from America is exceedingly favourable. What is staving off the crisis, and may continue to stave it off for a little while longer, is 1. California, both the TRADE it provides and the masses of gold coming into circulation, as well as emigration thither, in short, all the stimulus that California exerts upon the whole of the United States; 2. the curb imposed by the high cotton prices of 1849 and 1850 upon the cotton industry which did not experience brisk progress until the spring of 1851; 3. the enormous fall in cotton prices — almost 50% — during the past eighteen months. In New Orleans the price of cotton (MIDDLING — the average kind) on 1 Sept. 1850 was 13 1/2 cents = 7 3/4d in Liverpool; today the price of MIDDLING in New Orleans is 7 5/8 cents = 4 7/8d in Liverpool, and for a time it stood at 7 cents. Obviously this is bound to bring about a considerable increase in consumption. Last year — Jan. and Feb. — here in the cotton district, 29,000 bales were consumed weekly, this year 33,000 and that solely American; in addition there is Surat, Egyptian, etc.†a — If things continue thus, England will consume 800-850 million pounds of cotton this year; 4. the general timidity to speculate and to launch with any persistent enthusiasm even into gold mines and steamships. From everything I see I should say that another 6 months of such intensive production as at present would suffice to inundate the whole world; if another 4 months or so be allowed for the goods to reach their destination and positive news of over-supply to come back, as also for an interim period of reflection before people are seized by panic, — then the most likely time for the onset of the crisis will be somewhere between Nov. 1852 and Feb. 1853. But all this is GUESS-WORK and we could just as well have it in September. It should, though, be a fine how-d'ye-do, for never before has such a mass of goods of all descriptions been pushed onto the market, nor have there ever been such colossal means of production. The foolish ENGINEERS' strike†79 will hold it up for at least a month; virtually no machines are being made now and they are very much in demand. Hibbert, Platt and Sons have hundreds of orders from both here and abroad, not one of which they can, of course, execute. And when this commercial thunderstorm moreover breaks over Mr Derby's head, it will be bad for him!

Page Break me39.58
Page me39.58

The last balance sheet made my old man really hopping mad for it shows him as having lost money, despite the general prosperity, and he is likely to give notice of termination (i.e. of his corporate contract with the Ermens). In which case this business will probably shut down as early as next year. The chaos arising out of all these goings-on has now reached a peak, and is partly why I have such a mass of things to do.
Page me39.58

Don't bother to send me Ewerbeck's book. It's not worth the 6d the postage would cost.
Page me39.58

My warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.58
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

30
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.58
London, 5 March [1852]
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I received the £5 on Monday, although Lupus lives at 3, not 4, Broad Street. Also today your very felicitous article for Dana.†a
Page me39.58

Your package containing the Revolution and the Tribune had been opened. They had not even taken the trouble to do it up again.
Page me39.58

From the enclosed letter you will see how we stand with the police.†80 The facts are wrong, save that Lupus took the chair

Page Break me39.59
instead of myself on 5 February and that the denouncer mistook our letter to The Times†a for a reply to Mrs Daniels.†81 The spy is 'Hirsch' of Hamburg whom we had already thrown out of the League†b a fortnight before. He became a member in Germany and, since I never really trusted him, I never mentioned anything in the least compromising in his presence.
Page me39.59

With regard to Weydemeyer's anti-Heinzen article,†c Jones has sent him by today's post an official letter in which he treats Heinzen avec un dédain suprême†d and enlightens him on the 'WAR OF CLASSES'.†82 The day before yesterday the National Reform League†83 held a big meeting with an audience of at least 2,000. Jones subjected Messrs Hume, Walmsley and Co. to some rough treatment and scored a real triumph. London and Manchester now seem to divide the work between them in such a way that the bourgeois there tend to launch political attacks, and those here commercial ones.
Page me39.59

A few days ago a manifesto by Signore Mazzini written in Italian fell into my hands. He is the holy bourgeois quand même†e and fumes at the 'profane' French bourgeois. He shifts the initiative from Paris to Rome. 'Il materialismo' and 'il egoismo' have ruined France. The workers have inherited both vices from the bourgeoisie. Since 1815 France has no longer been the country of initiative. Italy and Hungary are now the chosen countries.

Page me39.59
While 'signore Mazzini', as Peter the Hermit, castigates the wicked French, he licks the boots of the English FREE TRADERS who doubtless personify 'le dévouement' and 'la foi'. L'imbécile!†f
Page me39.59
Please return the enclosed letter. Only very little today because what with getting things off to America my hands are full.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.59
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. 111, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.60

31
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†84
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.60
London, 5 March 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weywy,
I am afraid there has been a bit of a muddle because, HAVING MISUNDERSTOOD THY LAST LETTER, I addressed the last 2 packages to: Office of the Revolution, 7 Chambers' Street, Box 1817. What caused the confusion was that damned 'Box 1817', since you had written telling me to append this to the 'old address' without drawing any distinction between the first address and the second. But I hope the matter will have resolved itself before this letter arrives, the more so since last Friday's letter†a contained the very detailed fifth instalment of my article. This week I was prevented from finishing the sixth, which is also the last one.†85 If your paper is appearing again, this delay will not prove an obstacle since you have an ample supply of material.
Page me39.60
Your article against Heinzen, unfortunately sent to me too late by Engels, is very good, at once coarse and fine, and this is the right combination for any polemic worthy of the name. I have shown this article to Ernest Jones and enclosed you will find a letter from him addressed to you, intended for publication.†82 Since Jones writes very illegibly and with abbreviations, and since I assume that you are not yet an OUT-AND-OUT Englishman, I am sending you, along with the original, a copy made by my wife, together with the German translation; you should print them both, the original and the translation, side by side. Below Jones' letter you might add the following comment: As to George Julian Harney, likewise one of Mr Heinzen's authorities, he published our Communist Manifesto in English in his Red Republican with a marginal note describing it as 'THE MOST REVOLUTIONARY DOCUMENT EVER GIVEN TO THE WORLD',†b and in his Democratic Review he translated the words of 'wisdom brushed aside' by Heinzen, namely my articles on the French Revolution from the Revue der N. Rh. Z.,†a and in a paper on Louis Blanc he refers his readers to these articles as being the 'true critical examination' of the French affair.†b By the way, in England there is no need to have recourse only to 'extremists'. If, in England, a Member of Parliament becomes a minister, he must have himself re-elected. Thus Disraeli, the new Chancellor, LORD OF THE EXCHEQUER, writes to his constituents on 1 March:

Page Break me39.61

* 'We shall endeavour to terminate that strife of classes which, of late years, has exercised so pernicious an influence over the welfare of this kingdom.*†c

Page me39.61
Whereupon The Times of 2 March comments:

* 'If anything would ever divide classes in this country beyond reconciliation, and leave no chance of a just and honourable peace, it would be a tax on foreign corn.'*

Page me39.61
And lest some ignorant 'man of character'†d like Heinzen should suppose that the aristocrats are for and the bourgeois against the Corn Laws†72 because the former want 'monopoly' and the latter 'freedom' — your worthy citizen sees opposites only in this ideological form — we shall content ourselves with saying that, in England, in the eighteenth century, the aristocrats were for 'freedom' (of trade) and the bourgeois for 'monopoly', — precisely the same attitude as is adopted by the two classes in present-day 'Prussia' towards the 'Corn Laws'.†86 There is no more rabid FREE TRADER than the Neue Pr. Z.
Page me39.61
Finally, if I were you, I should tell the democratic gents en général that they would do better to acquaint themselves with bourgeois literature before they venture to yap at its opponents. For instance they should study the historical works of Thierry, Guizot, John Wade and so forth, in order to enlighten themselves as to the past 'history of the classes'. They should acquaint themselves with the fundamentals of political economy before attempting to criticise the critique of political economy. For example, one need only open Ricardo's magnum opus to find, on the first page, the words with which he begins his preface:

Page Break me39.62

* 'The produce of the earth — all that is derived from its surface by the united application of labour, machinery, and capital, is divided among three classes of the community; namely the proprietor of the land, the owner of the stock or capital necessary for its cultivation, and the labourers by whose industry it is cultivated.'*†a

Page me39.62

Now, in the United States bourgeois society is still far too immature for the class struggle to be made perceptible and comprehensible; striking proof of this is provided by C.H. Carey (of Philadelphia),†b the only North American economist of any note. He attacks Ricardo, the most classic representative†c of the bourgeoisie and the most stoical opponent of the proletariat, as a man whose works are an arsenal for anarchists and socialists, for all enemies of the bourgeois order.†d He accuses not only him, but also Malthus, Mill, Say, Torrens, Wakefield, MacCulloch, Senior, Whately, R. Jones, etc. — those who lead the economic dance in Europe — of tearing society apart, and of paving the way for civil war by showing that the economic bases of the various classes are such that they will inevitably give rise to a necessary and ever-growing antagonism between the latter. He tries to refute them, not, it is true, like the fatuous Heinzen, by relating the existence of classes to the existence of political privileges and monopolies, but by seeking to demonstrate that economic conditions: rent (landed property), profit (capital) and wages (wage labour),†e rather than being conditions of struggle and antagonism, are conditions of association and harmony.†87 All he proves, of course, is that the 'undeveloped' relations in the United States are, to him, 'normal relations'.

Page me39.62

Now as for myself, I do not claim to have discovered either the existence of classes in modern society or the struggle between them. Long before me, bourgeois historians had described the historical development of this struggle between the classes, as had bourgeois economists their economic anatomy. My own contribution was 1. to show that the existence of classes is merely bound up with certain historical phases in the development of production; 2. that the class struggle necessarily leads to the dictatorship of the

Page Break me39.63

Third page of Marx's letter to Weydemeyer of 5 March 1852

Page Break me39.64

Page Break me39.65

proletariat; 3. that this dictatorship itself constitutes no more than a transition to the abolition of all classes and to a classless society. Ignorant louts such as Heinzen, who deny not only the struggle but the very existence of classes, only demonstrate that, for all their bloodthirsty, mock-humanist yelping, they regard the social conditions in which the bourgeoisie is dominant as the final product, the non plus ultra†a of history, and that they themselves are simply the servants of the bourgeoisie, a servitude which is the more revolting, the less capable are the louts of grasping the very greatness and transient necessity of the bourgeois regime itself.

Page me39.65

Select from the above notes whatever you think fit.†88 By the way, Heinzen has adopted our 'centralisation' in place of his 'federative republic', etc.†89 When the views on classes we are now disseminating have become familiar objects of 'sound common sense',†b then the scoundrel will proclaim them aloud as the latest product of his 'own sagacity' and yap his opposition to our onward progress. Thus, in the light of his 'own sagacity', he yapped at Hegelian philosophy†c so long as it was progressive. Now he feeds on its stale scraps, spat out undigested by Ruge.
Page me39.65

Herewith also the end of the Hungarian article.†d It is all the more essential that you should try to make some use of this — assuming your paper exists — because Szemere, the erstwhile prime minister of Hungary, now in Paris, has promised me to write a long article for you, signed with his own name.
Page me39.65

If your paper has come into being, send more copies so that it can be distributed more widely.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.65

Kind regards to you and your wife from all your friends here, especially my wife.
Page me39.65

Apropos. I am sending you the Notes†e and a few copies of my Assizes speech†f (this last for Cluss, to whom I promised it) by the hand of the ex-Montagnard Hochstuhl (an Alsatian).†90 There's nothing to the fellow.

Page Break me39.66
Page me39.66

Herewith the Rules.†91 I would advise you to arrange them in more logical order. London is designated as the district responsible for the United States. Hitherto we have been able to exercise our authority only in partibus.
Page me39.66

If you have not already done so, do not accept 'Hirsch's' statement.†14 He's an unsavoury individual, although in the right where Schapper and Willich are concerned.

Page me39.66
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 31, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in Jungsozialistische Blätter, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

32
ENGELS TO MARX†92
IN LONDON
Page me39.66
[Manchester,] 18 March 1852

Dear Marx,

I return herewith Pixie's†a letter. I am pour le moment entiérement dépourvu†b and would not be able to raise the £2 — at least this month; moreover, his letter is dated the 5th and there is absolutely no knowing whether the money would still reach him. And then it's always a ticklish business sending money to Ewerbeck; the fellow is capable of making superannuated claims for God only knows what old postal expenses, and of pocketing the whole amount or the best part of it. For all these reasons I am unable just now to help the little sprite,†a doubtful though I am that he will be able to extract more than five sous at one go from Monsieur Ewerbeck. Meanwhile, the piccolo†a has left Geneva for Paris and thus will no doubt also come to London, if at the cost of some 'toil and trouble'; and then we shall know just how much his dunning letters mean.

Page Break me39.67
Page me39.67

If the little man†a does come, you will have some difficulty in restraining his pugnacious temperament, surely much exacerbated by prolonged 'toil and trouble'; in this country fisticuffs and brawls cost too much money for him to be permitted to indulge in them.†93 It would be best if you entrusted him to Pieper so that the latter could instruct him in political economy. What you told me about Massol†b is very interesting, and if he stays over there I should very much like to meet him.
Page me39.67

I am delighted by what you tell me about Jones†c — just now I have damnably little time, otherwise I would send him more articles. But Charles†d is not yet back from Germany and then, after toiling all day in the office, it would really be too much to write a regular weekly article for him and/or Weydemeyer on top of the article for the Tribune and the weekly report for my old man. Moreover, I must at long last get to grips with the Slav business.†94 In my previous dilettante fashion, I achieved nothing for a whole year and, having at least made a start and got too far to abandon the thing, I must now regularly devote some time to it. For the past fortnight I have been swotting hard at Russian and have now got the grammar pretty well licked; in another 2-3 months I shall have acquired the necessary vocabulary, and then I shall be able to tackle something else. I must be done with the Slavonic languages this year and au fond†e they are not so very difficult. Apart from the linguistic interest I derive from the thing, there is the further consideration that, come the next big political drama, at least one of us should be familiar with the languages, history, literature and the minutiae of the social institutions of those particular nations with which we shall immediately find ourselves in conflict. In effect, Bakunin only came to anything because no one knew Russian. And a great deal is going to be made of the old pan-Slavic DODGE of transmogrifying the old Slav system of communal property into communism and depicting the Russian peasants as born communists.

Page me39.67

Now that old O'Connor has definitely gone mad, Jones is perfectly right to crowd on all sail. This is his chance and if, in addition, CITIZEN Hip-hip-hurrah†f gives up, his cause is won. From all that I see, the Chartists are in such a state of complete dissolution and disintegration, and at the same time are so lacking in able people, that either they must disband altogether and break up into cliques, i.e. in effect become a mere appendage of the FINANCIALS,†28 or else be reconstructed on a new basis by some competent fellow. Jones is moving in quite the right direction and we may well say that, without our doctrine, he would not have taken the right path and would never have discovered how, on the one hand, one can not only maintain the only possible basis for the reconstruction of the Chartist party — the instinctive class hatred of the workers for the industrial bourgeoisie — but also enlarge and develop it, so laying the foundations for enlightening propaganda, and how, on the other, one can still be progressive and resist the workers' reactionary appetites and their prejudices. MASTER Harney, by the way, is in for a surprise if he continues as he is; the group of enthusiasts which supports him will very soon kick him out, and not even the portraits of Ko&sa;ciuszko and other 'patriots'†95 that adorn his bumf will save him.

Page Break me39.68

Page me39.68

Quoad Napoleonem,†a did the man not tell L. Blanc when he went to France: 'Quand je serai président, je mettrai en pratique vos idées'†b? And now we see how a financial predicament may drive even a true socialist like L.N. to financial measures of an impeccably bourgeois kind, such as the conversion of bonds.†96 Your SHOPKEEPER and small industrialist is prepared to overlook twenty socialist capers in return for this one saving of 18 millions, and The Daily News admires the measure. Anything more stupid or more abject than the Débats' comments on this topic would be hard to imagine.†c The same old story: postal reform = socialism! Conversion of bonds = socialism! FREE TRADE = socialism! My only fear is that Mynheer Napoleon who, for all that he proceeds very diffidently when it comes to his genuinely socialist undertakings and goes no further in the matter of mortgages than the bourgeois Prussian credit institutions, may, in the end, be compelled, by force of circumstances, to transform all his socialist inclinations into simple bourgeois reforms, and then nothing can deliver us but the inevitable financial predicament. The Daily News is right, conversion of bonds is a mesure éminemment pacifique†d as well as being a most ominous indication that L.N. is tending to fall into the ways of bourgeois COMMON SENSE. But when, I ask you, has it ever been possible to rule France with COMMON SENSE, and what a hotch-potch of circumstances would be required to bring together a L.N. and COMMON SENSE! At all events the climate on the Continent does not seem very revolutionary to me, although the little sprite will bring quite different news.

Page Break me39.69

Page me39.69

I do not think that Derby will obtain a majority although this place, where unanimity reigns when it comes to the Corn Laws,†72 is a poor point d'observation. However, I should like him to obtain one, for then things must come about as you say. He is, by the way, a fool for not dissolving Parliament at once. The longer he procrastinates, the greater the risk of the election coinciding with a commercial crisis, and then he'll get fanatical Tories in Parliament who are too rabid even for him, and determined, rapacious MANCHESTER MEN†63 under threat of bankruptcy, these latter probably in the majority and hence the determining element.
Page me39.69

Our CONCERN here seems likely to collapse within the year. In which case, while the liquidation is under way, I shall at first enjoy far more liberty and be less tied down by the regular routine of the office. Later, my old man writes, he might be able to find me a better position — I suspect that he will fall in with my old plan to remove to Liverpool and buy cotton for him there. That would be splendid and, if it comes off and you have completed your preliminary work on economics,†45 you and your whole family must come up for 6 months — we would live by the sea at New Brighton, and you would, besides, save money. At all events, I shall get myself a rise — there's no doubt about that.
Page me39.69

Today, unfortunately, I shall not have a quiet moment in which to do the Tribune article, but an American STEAMER sails next Wednesday, so you shall have it by Monday or Tuesday, and then I'll do another one for Friday's STEAMER.
Page me39.69

Many regards.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.69

This is the first time the seal on your letter has been intact and undamaged.

Page me39.69
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.70

33
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.70

London, 25 March 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

Good luck to the new world citizen! There is no more splendid time to enter this world than the present. Come the day when people can travel from London to Calcutta in a week, both our heads will long since have rolled or started to loll. And Australia and California and the Pacific Ocean! The new world citizens will be unable to comprehend how small our world once was.

Page me39.70

If you did not receive the final instalment†a enclosed herewith a week ago, your total silence is to blame.

Page me39.70

Now in the pamphlet,†97 too, I would like my article to be divided up as it was sent to you, under headings I, II, III, IV, V, VI, VII. These figures serve as sign-posts for the reader. They take the place of titles. At the end of V, add the following words: 'But Bonaparte answered the Party of Order as Agesilaus did King Agis: “I seem to thee an ant, but one day I shall be a lion.”'†98 But the thing must, of course, be brought out now all at once in its entirety.

Page me39.70

Where my wife has failed to leave space enough to indicate the paragraphs, I have marked them with a GG.

Page me39.70

Cluss' statement†60 is splendid.

Page me39.70

Why not — it strikes me as a good idea — include Ernest Jones' letter in your first issue?†82 A couple of introductory words would suffice to explain it.

Page me39.70

Maintenant†b: Cluss will already have told you about the Szemere business.†99 First a publisher will have to be contacted through me and arrangements made for his pamphlet — some 10 sheets — on Kossuth, L. Batthyány and Görgey — to be brought out in German and later in English. You might, if it can be managed, publish the German original as your second instalment without, of course, any other additions. But the publisher must pay for the thing if you don't publish it yourself.

Page Break me39.71

Page me39.71

When this has been arranged — and perhaps even before that — the Revolution will receive 500 dollars from this source, on condition that Bangya comes in as co-editor, i.e. only in the sense that part of the paper is allotted to the Hungarians and run by Bangya, Szemere's agent. But you'll have no difficulty in getting on with him, car il est bon homme.†a

Page me39.71

I am very glad to hear that you have found employment as a surveyor. You will be able to operate with greater confidence and peace of mind.

Page me39.71

One of these days I shall be starting on Mazzini. Whereas Mr Kinkel, whose wisdom, by his own admission, derives from nursery tales, now chooses to see nothing but unity among the 'great men', he finds on his return the battle raging optima forma.†b For Ledru and Mazzini have bought the Brussels daily La Nation for 10,000 fr. drawn from the Italian loan. Mais voilá que†c il Signore Mazzini looses off an opening article, in which he vents all his infamous anti-French, anti-socialist inanities about the initiative lost by France,†d and this so wildly that Ledru now feels compelled — and has, it seems, made up his mind — to take issue with him personally. On the other hand, the socialists L. Blanc, Pierre Leroux, Cabet, Mallarmet, etc., have joined forces and published a venomous retort composed by dear little L. Blanc. At the same time the majority of the French émigrés are violently incensed against Ledru, whom they rightly hold responsible for Mazzini's stupidities. Fire has broken out in the very midst of their camp.

Page me39.71

Should you happen to get hold of Der Tag ist angebrochen, a book by that miserable cleric, Dulon, who fancies himself as a Lamennais, mind you give the cur a good dusting.

Page me39.71

Dronke has been arrested in Paris where he lingered too long on his way here from Switzerland instead of hurrying through.

Page me39.71

I like your selection very much. Pieper's article†e might do well enough for a newspaper. For a pamphlet it was dashed off too hastily and perfunctorily.

Page me39.71

Can you not get news of Edgar†f from Braunfels? We have heard nothing from the lazybones and this is causing his mother†g great anxiety. A crazy lad!

Page me39.71

Cluss' protest†h was greeted with general applause at the League†i meeting here, and both we and Stechan's society†25 found your Revolution to our liking.

Page Break me39.72

Page me39.72

Warm regards from my family to yours.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.72

In case the infamous reply from Willich's society to Pfänder's statement†100 should appear in some paper or other (e.g. Weitling's†a), I am sending you Pfänder's 2nd statement.

Page me39.72

What can red Becker†b be doing? Has he, too, become a Kinkelian?

Page me39.72

Apropos. Some of the engineering workers have come to their senses and sent apologies to Jones. By now the English workers have collected sufficient money for

Jones to bring out a big STAMPED weekly†101 in addition to his Notes.†c The jackass who is to convey these to you has still not left.†d

Page me39.72
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

34
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.72
London, 30 March 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho
Dear Frederic,

Just received your article.†e Enclosed you will find a whole bundle of new stuff from America which would have reached you sooner, had it not been necessary to make copies of some of it for communication to League†f members.

Page Break me39.73
Page me39.73

All sorts of things have been happening here. Gottfried Christ Kinkel is dispatching, or rather has dispatched, the student Schurz and Schimmelpfennig to drum together people from Switzerland, Paris, Germany and Belgium for a congress to be held in London in mid-April, the purpose being to guarantee the revolutionary loan†27 and to lay down definitive regulations for the administration of this exchequer and of the democratic government in partibus. But you must let me have the trash back by Saturday.
Page me39.73

Kossuth, exposed in America by Szemere†102 and completely at odds with the committee he left behind him in London,†103 will be surprised to learn by what schisms the democratic clerics has meanwhile been rent.
Page me39.73

For Mr Mazzini, who for the past 2 years has been pope of the democratic church in partibus, thought the time at last ripe to discharge his venom in the French tongue against socialism and France, to wit in the Brussels Nation which, with Ledru's connivance, he had acquired for 10,000 fr. drawn from the Italian fund. In it he blamed the socialists for the 2nd December, the capture of Rome,†104 in short for the counter-revolution generally and, in his high-flown Dominican style, thundered against heretics, sects, materialism, scepticism, the Romance Babylon, with the same single-mindedness he displays when licking the arse of the English liberal bourgeoisie. France, he said, had lost the revolutionary initiative. The peuple-roi†a no longer existed. Now it was the turn of other nations, etc. In short a veritable bull of excommunication which was done the honour of being taken up by the Patrie and the Constitutionnel. This was altogether too much for the French. Little L. Blanc, who further saw in it an opportunity to rehabilitate himself and thrust himself to the fore, drummed up Cabet, Pierre Leroux, Bianchi, Nadaud and Vasbenter (Proudhonian). In The Morning Advertiser they attacked Mr Mazzini in crudest fashion. The theoretical part of their retort is almost as weak as Mazzini's attack. The personal part, for which Massol gave Leroux the material, annihilates the arrogant theopompos.†b

Page me39.73

Ledru, for his part, felt it incumbent upon him to resign from the European Central Committee in order not to lose all influence. He too has replied in the Nation to the attacks on France. Pitiful. An article with neither head nor tail. Upholds 'France's revolutionary initiative', but in what fashion! C'est pour faire pitié!†c Ledru, it is said, now intends to go to the United States.

Page me39.73

Thus, on the one hand, the idiot Ruge forfeits his European

Page Break me39.74

Central Committee. On the other, Kinkel — who, in America, fawned like a dog on his rival Kossuth — sees the general 'confusion', i.e. fusion of all democratic pretenders under the banner of the now stale catchwords of 1848, e.g. 'democratic republic', 'universal franchise', etc., dissipating. Thus the worthy Willich is drawn into the conflict as a 'communist'.

Page me39.74

Meanwhile each week the English government is shipping the French émigré mob in crowds out to America at public expense. The wretched LITTLE Blanc proposes to exploit a quite fortuitous general demonstration against Mazzini to set himself up as the visible head of the ecclesia pressa.†a In order to thwart his little intrigues, I shall get Massol to egg on Pierre Leroux. Finally, to complete the confusion, Proudhon is coming here.

Page me39.74

How low the official bigwigs sink, you may see from the fact that the delectable Félix Pyat, cet homme artiste†b — an expression used by the French to gloss over an individual's every weakness, his lack of character and intelligence — has written a melodrama on the December days. He has found an English impresario and together they will put on the trash in New York, etc., the murder scenes, expulsions, deportations, etc., etc. Could anyone seek to profit by the misfortunes of his country in a more despicable manner? And the jackass regards this prostitution of France's misfortune as a patriotic act.

Page me39.74

Tripotage†c is the secret key to the historical drama staged by émigré politicians here; thus Siegwart†d Kinkel has acted as procurer between the student Schurz and Mrs Ronge's sister, who is said to be rich.

Page me39.74

The only misfortune is that by their boastful intrigues these jackasses provide the police with a continuous supply of fresh material and make things worse for our friends in Germany.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.74
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.75

35
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.75
[Manchester,] 1 April 1852

Dear Marx,
Got your letter this morning, actually intact. The new address seems to do some good.
Page me39.75
The mirth-provoking émigré documents will be returned to you tomorrow. I shall extract some notes from them.
Page me39.75
Little Dronke seems to have got himself properly caught in Paris, otherwise we should probably have heard from him. Do you suppose that some people belonging to 'the Marxian sect' really foregathered at the Café D.,†a as the Kölnische Zeitung alleges?†b I don't know where these remnants could have come from. In any case it would have been unpardonable of Dronke to have gone to the café and associated publiquement†c with these people. But if he is still at liberty and there is any possibility of corresponding with him, we must certainly do everything we can now to bring him over to London — he is under an expulsion order and the fellows are quite capable of sending him to Algiers for rupture de ban.†d So if we can find out more particulars, I shall see to it that I get hold of the £2, for we must certainly bring the little chap to safety. Write and tell me if you hear anything about him.
Page me39.75
I am going home now to finish another article for Dana which, if it is ready, will go off to you by the second post. Last week I had a terrible cold and still have it, so that for several evenings I have been capable of absolutely nothing. Otherwise, more would have been done.
Page me39.75
Tell Jones that he will be getting something from me next week,†e — all my articles for him have, alas, been wretched, since the brevity of each and the negligible room available make me regularly forget what I wrote the week before — in addition, I have to write quickly and cursorily, and have no time whatever to collect and arrange material on the latest happenings in France. This constant improvisation becomes demoralising.

Page Break me39.76
Page me39.76

Should I not finish the article for Dana this evening, it will be chiefly because I still have to go through the better part of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung for April and March 1849,†a for on this occasion the Frankfurters†b must be given a thorough lambasting. The Bauer†c is not adequate for the purpose.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.76
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

36
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.76
London, 5 April 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho
Dear Frederic,

Enclosed a further consignment from Cluss†105 which I must have back by Wednesday (the day of the League†d meeting).
Page me39.76

The other day, just after you returned his first letter, Dronke wrote to Freiligrath from prison; I had forgotten to tell you. Freiligrath at once sent the letter to Lassalle for the latter to send some money to Paris for him, which could doubtless be done with all the more dispatch since Lassalle could use the letter to touch all the liberal bourgeois of Düsseldorf. Unfortunately, according to the Patrie, compromising letters were found on Dronke. Can he have been stupid enough to carry around testimonia of his fatuous Lyonnais†e and other connections?
Page me39.76

As I foresaw, Louis Blanc is trying to exploit the joint statement against Mazzini to create a new 'réseau d'action'†f and to thrust himself to the fore as head of the revolutionary party. He has even sought to draw me into his fusion of all 'French' socialists and sent me an invitation to meet him. I did not, of course, even deign to answer and instead conveyed to his intermédiaire my amazement at such importunity. Since Proudhon is coming here, an alliance with me just now would have been very convenient for the little man.

Page Break me39.77

Page me39.77

Dana has written at last and paid £9 according to the number of articles published†a As the presidential elections will for the present be taking up every column in the paper, he asks me at the same time to condense the remainder into 5-6 articles and, more especially, to discuss in the last one the PROSPECTS OF REVOLUTIONARY GERMANY. This will provide a splendid chance to castigate the émigrés and in a later letter I shall write to you at length about my views on the matter.

Page me39.77

Szemere is sending me, in 3-4 batches, his (German) manuscript on 'Kossuth, Görgey and Louis Batthyány'. Weydemeyer is to publish it in America,†99 which means excellent business for him, the more so since he will, in addition, probably receive 500 dollars for his paper†b from that quarter.

Page me39.77

But before the thing goes off to America in German, it must be translated into English here so that, after it has appeared in German in America, it can be brought out as a pamphlet for readers over here. You will hardly have the time for this task, even if you neglect Dana for a while. In which case I shall have to give it to Jones. The payment for translation is £1 per sheet.

Page me39.77

Here I have made the acquaintance of Colonel Szerelmey, who is a very cultivated man. In Hungary he took part in 17 battles. Since he is also a first-rate painter, he is now bringing out a magnificent work, with battle reports in the text, and battle illustrations. He himself did the sketches, which were finished off by leading French painters. He has promised me a copy. Each will cost £10. So you will receive an addition to your military library.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.77

As you see, Kinkel has been a good deal more arbitrary than Louis Bonaparte. First he nominates the members of his chamber of deputies, the Guarantors' Congress.†c Next he takes fright at his own creation, keeps neither to the appointed day nor place, but convenes the assembly at a time and place at which only 7 people can attend. Six of those 7 give him a vote of confidence. With these he drafts his constitution. By these he gets himself nominated representative of America, and he makes the committee he has created responsible to them.

Page Break me39.78

Page me39.78
First published abridged in Die Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

37
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.78
London, 14 April 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho
Dear Frederic,

Only a couple of lines to let you know that our little child†a died this morning at a quarter past one.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.78
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.79

38
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.79
Manchester, 16 April 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,

Yesterday received your letter of 30 (?) March, together with the account of the revolutionary assembly.†106 I note that you have begun to stamp your letters, which is nonsensical; this CONCERN, id est Messieurs Ermen & Engels, can pay the postage. The things have been sent on to Marx.
Page me39.79

The day before yesterday I arrived back here from London, where I had spent Easter. Marx's youngest child†a was very ill and, as I now learn from him,†b has since died — the second already in London. As you can imagine, 'his wife is greatly afflicted by it. There has also been some illness in Freiligrath's family, but things are going better there.

Page me39.79

Dronke, as you will know, was arrested on his way through Paris. It was partly his own fault for, despite his earlier expulsion, the little man had lingered there for 3 weeks. Now he writes to say that he has been removed from the Mazas prison and taken back to the Préfecture de Police, to be sent to Boulogne and England on Good Friday evening. But up till now we have heard nothing more of him. The little man shows a remarkable talent for constantly getting INTO MISCHIEF, but no doubt he will turn up one of these days. Then the whole of the N. Rh. Z. will be in England, for Weerth, though he is in Hamburg again just now, still has connection with Bradford and, no matter how he struggles, will always find himself cast up there again.
Page me39.79

It seems probable that our Cologne friends†c will appear before the Court of Assizes in May, since the Board of indicting magistrates was expected to have decided their case by Monday, 5 April, and will certainly not have discharged them. This is just as well; the public prosecutor would immediately have appealed against an acquittal. If a certain Hansen of Cologne, a working man, should arrive in New York, treat him according to his deserts. The fellow, a member of the League since 1848, administered, i.e. drank, the monies collected for the prisoners before absconding to America.

Page Break me39.80
Page me39.80

In the camp of the National Loaners there is considerable dissatisfaction with Reichenbach, the treasurer, for keeping so tight a hold on the purse-strings, since in any case more money has already been spent than can decently be accounted for and, as a well-to-do and respectable citizen, he is faced with the ominous prospect of the forthcoming audit. Hence Kinkel and Willich are furious, but to no effect: Kinkel must return to his tutoring and now, as in the past, Willich is begging and borrowing with an impudence hitherto found only among Polish patriots. Thus, throughout the noble émigré alliance, the most glorious confusion reigns and, if the Guarantors' Congress takes place, or has already taken place, things will come to a very pretty pass. Löwe of Calbe and the rest of the Frankfurters†a are now also at daggers drawn with Kinkel, 'a chap with whom one can but compromise oneself'.
Page me39.80

Has Tellering got his statement into any of the papers?†107 Voilá ce qu'il nous importe de savoir†b for, if so, Marx can attack it. We would, by the way, be very glad if Dana would send us copies of Marx's articles†c; we have only had the first 6 and should be glad to have the following ones. If Dana pleads too much work, the best thing would be for you to get hold of them yourself and send them here. Marx has long been meaning to write to you about this, but just now is probably not in a state to turn his thoughts to it. See what you can do, for we must have a complete set here; later on that sort of thing will also be important as a document.
Page me39.80

My strategical article†d is no longer any good and is all the less suitable for a collection†108 as the essentials were not really in it, but in my letter to you.†e So do not hesitate to file it away. As soon as I have time to work undisturbed and some prospect of publication, I shall send you articles on the development of commerce and on the present state of the English industrial bourgeoisie.†17 For the present I must spend the next fortnight or 3 weeks exclusively on the study of Russian and Sanscrit, in which I am now engaged†f; later, when my material arrives from Germany, I shall turn to military matters, but there is plenty of time for that and as a task it is less arduous.

Page Break me39.81
Page me39.81
The post is about to go — many regards to your wife and to Cluss.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.81
First published in New Yorker Volkszeitung, No. 12, 14 January 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

39
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.81
[Manchester,] 20 April 1852

Dear Marx,
I was grieved to see that my fears concerning your little daughter have been all too soon confirmed. If only there were some means by which you and your family could move into a more salubrious district and more spacious lodgings!
Page me39.81
I would gladly have sent you some money, but while in London†109 I spent so much more than I had anticipated that I shall be pretty short myself until the end of the month, and next month I shall have to pay out at once £12 in bills and for books ordered from Germany. But I shall see if I can get hold of something for you by the beginning of May. I wish I had known beforehand how things stood in London, for in that case I should have foregone what was au fond†a a quite superfluous trip there, and my hands would not have been quite so tied.
Page me39.81
Pindar is here, having failed to find employment in Liverpool. He is looking for a position or for private lessons and I shall, of course, do what I can for him. As a token that I am well disposed towards him I have been taking Russian lessons from him. But if

I am to recommend him here, I must know something more about him, and since such intelligence can only be dragged out of him with the utmost difficulty, I should be glad if you would write and tell me what you know about him and his circumstances, how you became acquainted with him, etc., etc. With his taciturn manner, by the way, it doesn't seem to me as though he'll be lucky here.

Page Break me39.82
Page me39.82

In considering the present state of commerce, particularly as regards India, there is one point that should not be overlooked.†a Despite 3 years of colossal and ever-increasing imports of English industrial goods into India, the news from there has for some time been moderately good again, stocks are gradually being sold and are fetching higher prices. The reason for this can only be that, in the provinces most lately conquered by the English, Sind, the Punjab, etc., etc., where native handicrafts have hitherto almost exclusively predominated, these are now finally being crushed by English competition, either because the manufacturers here have only recently come round to producing materials suitable for these markets, or because the NATIVES have finally sacrificed their preference for local cloths in favour of the cheaper price of the English materials usually exported to India. The last Indian crisis of 1847 and the concomitant sharp DEPRECIATION of English products in India may have contributed greatly to this; and it is already clear from old Gülich that even the parts of India occupied by the English in his day had not for a long time completely abandoned their traditional domestic manufactures.†b This is the only explanation for the fact that the 1847 affair has not long since recurred in more acute form in Calcutta and Bombay. But all this will be changed once the 3,000,000 bales of cotton from the last crop have come onto the market, been processed and consigned as finished goods, predominantly to India. The cotton industry is now so flourishing that, despite this season's crop, which is 300,000 bales more than that of 1848/49, cotton prices are rising both here and in America, that American manufacturers have already bought 250,000 bales more than last year (when they used in all only 418,000 bales), and that manufacturers here are already beginning to maintain that even a crop of 3 million bales would be insufficient for their needs. Up till now, America has exported 174,000 bales more to England, 56,000 more to France and 27,000 more to the rest of the Continent than she did last year. (Each season runs from 1 Sept. to 7 April.)†c And, given prosperity of this order, it is of course easy to explain how Louis Napoleon can prepare at leisure for his bas-empire†110; the surplus of direct cotton imports into France between 1850 and 1852 now amounts to 110,000 bales (302,000 against 192,000), i.e. more than 33%.

Page Break me39.83
Page me39.83

According to all the rules the crisis should come this year and will, indeed, probably do so; but if one takes into consideration the present quite unexpected resilience of the Indian market, the confusion created by California and Australia, the cheapness of most raw materials, which also means cheap industrial manufactures, and the absence of any heavy speculation, one is almost tempted to forecast that the present period of prosperity will be of exceptionally long duration. At any rate it may well be that the thing will last until the spring. But WITHIN SIX MONTHS MORE OR LESS it is, after all, safest to stick to the old rule.

Page me39.83

Many regards to your wife, and write soon.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.83
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

40
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†111
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.83
London, 22 April 1852

... The chief industry, the cotton industry, is doing more splendidly than ever.†a Despite the fact that the present cotton crop exceeds that of 1848/49 by 300,000 bales, cotton prices are rising both here and in America, so that American manufacturers have already bought 250,000 more bales than last year and manufacturers here are already beginning to maintain that even a crop of 3 million bales would be insufficient for their needs. Up till now America has exported 174,000 bales more to England, 56,000 more to France and 27,000 more to the rest of the Continent than she did last year (each season runs from 1 Sept. to 7 Apr.). On the one hand this prosperity explains how Louis Bonaparte can prepare at leisure for his bas-empire. The surplus of direct cotton imports into France between 1850 and 1852 now amounts to 110,000 bales — 302,000 against 192,000, i.e. more than 33%. On the other hand, it explains the flaccid condition of politics in this country. Given such prosperity, the Tories cannot, for their part, compete with the 'blessings of FREE TRADE', even though they are at the helm, while the FREE TRADERS for their part refrain from provoking political agitation because, so long as business is flourishing, the manufacturers do not want political upheavals and disturbances. The thriving state of the cotton industry is due chiefly to the Indian market, whence there has been good news for some time past — despite continuing colossal imports from England. This may be explained by the fact that in the territories most lately conquered by the English, Sind, the Punjab, etc., where native handicrafts have hitherto almost exclusively predominated, these are now finally being crushed by English competition. The last Indian crisis of 1847 and the concomitant sharp DEPRECIATION of English products in India may have contributed to this. This unexpected resilience of the Indian market, California, Australia, as well as the cheapness of most raw materials in the absence of any heavy speculation, give reason to suppose that the period of prosperity will be of exceptionally long duration. It may well be that the thing will last until the spring, etc., etc., etc....

Page Break me39.84

Page me39.84
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 6 June 1852

Published in English for the first time

41
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†112
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.84
[London, 23 April 1852]

... You will realise that Weydemeyer's letter†a made a very unpleasant impression here, particularly on my wife, since it arrived on the day of my youngest child's†b funeral; for two years now she has seen all my enterprises regularly come to grief. The prospect held out by your letter (arrived 19th Apr.) of receiving the 'Bonaparte'†a in print was therefore all the more welcome to me, for by nature she is very resilient and your letter set her up again...

Page Break me39.85

Page me39.85
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 8 May 1852

Published in English for the first time

42
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.85
London, 24 April 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

You cannot imagine what a wretched time I had last week. On the day of the funeral, the money I had been promised from various quarters failed to arrive, so that I was finally compelled to go to some French neighbours in order to pay the English vultures. And on top of this, alas, a letter arrived from Weydemeyer giving reason to suppose that in America, too, all our hopes have been dashed. Cluss, whose letter you will be getting next week, now holds out better prospects. Quoique de dure complexion,†b I was, on this occasion, very hard hit by the wretched business.

Page me39.85

Enclosed a letter from that cur Ewerbeck, who never uses a stamp and consistently robs one of one's last 10d. Then an article by B. Bauer from the Daily New-York Tribune,†c to whose pages your article†d has attracted all the rag-tag and bobtail. Bauer's revelations about 'the armies' will make you laugh. If you are going to send me articles for Dana now, wait until you have several so that I can send them all off at once.

Page Break me39.86

Page me39.86

Mr Tellering is publishing a monthly or weekly in New York; the cur himself sent me the first issue — unadulterated third-form drivel.

Page me39.86

Heise (of the Hornisse) is now an intimate of Willich's. They are as thick as thieves. What can he see in the fellow? Once again they are bragging about a proposed coup in Germany.

Page me39.86

Dronke is a real imbécile. His appetite whetted by the £4 we got for him from the Rhineland, he went to Coblenz in the hopes of extorting some more. It never occurred to the jackass that he would be providing fresh ammunition for use against the people in Cologne.†a The fellow's behaviour is really too disgraceful.

Page me39.86

Apropos. Do not forget to send immédiatement two notes to London as follows: 1. for Liebknecht, empowering him to obtain the £1 from Hain. 2. Write a brief note yourself to Hain, telling your 'good friend' in a couple of lines that, having heard he was doing well, you had referred Liebknecht to him re the £1. We must be careful not to make an enemy of him.

Page me39.86

The fact is that one of our acquaintances, who has hitherto found shelter for the night at Liebknecht's lodgings, was thrown out by the latter's landlords, and not one of us has been able to raise a penny for the poor devil. Accordingly I yesterday sent Liebknecht a note in which I told him you had referred him to Hain re the £1. Mr Hain appeared somewhat incredulous and told Liebknecht he must first see it in your handwriting.

Page me39.86

Let me have a few STAMPS, for I have a mass of stuff to send you.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.86
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.87

43
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.87
Manchester, 25 April 1852

Dear Marx,

Yesterday evening I received a note from Hain which I sent you together with my reply to it. After this, I think, Mr Hain will pay.
Page me39.87

Herewith the STAMPS, more to follow shortly. Also returning the other stuff. Ewerbeck's letter is a worthy pendant to his book.†a 'Pray help me oppose Ribbentrop! I shall denounce him to Democracy as a hypocrite and débaucheur.'†b The man must be in his dotage.
Page me39.87

Nor has friend Bruno increased in wisdom or divine knowledge.†c Il valait bien la peine†d to set the American press in motion from Berlin thus, by this most roundabout route, proclaiming to an astonished world that the continental armies are there to maintain internal peace. Mr Bruno still represents the Hegelian dialectic in its deepest stagnation. At this stage of development, his concept of history goes no deeper than providing circumstantial proof of the most banal platitudes by an ample display of solemnity and pseudo-logical development, and then dishing them up as the brand-new findings of zealous research. All this is tolerable in the case of the distant past, but to be thus bamboozled about the immediate present is really too much and any fool should be able to see that there's nothing at all at the bottom of it. And as for the profound truth that governments are right vis-á-vis revolutions because the latter are still immature, but revolutions are also right vis-á-vis governments because they represent the ideas of the future, admittedly in embryonic and immature form, but nevertheless [...] to a substantial degree — that is an old Hegelian joke whose novelty has certainly worn off even in America! And then the eternal 'ill-temper', 'peevishness', 'fundamental indifference' of the 'bourgeois'. 'In some countries, classes war against classes, in others nations against nations.' Strictly speaking, this prodigiously clever sentence is all that Bruno has learnt from the revolution.
Page me39.87

Mr Tellering has apparently been chased out of France as being

Page Break me39.88
a homeless, vagrant member of the lumpenproletariat and of no use even to the Société du 10 Décembre.†113
Page me39.88
Unless you know positively that Dronke went to Germany of his own free will, I would think it more probable that, having been already once expelled from France, he was this time transported not to any frontier but to the German frontier. But once safely in Nassau, why did the silly fool go to Coblenz when he'd have done far better to go to Hamburg, where no one knows him and he would have found Weerth and Strohn, hence also cash, and from there to England! But Coblenz being so close, he was obviously drawn there from Nassau by the prospect of money, and if he had managed to get through safely, would certainly have gone on to Cologne. At all events, it is fortunate for the Cologne people that they have already been dealt with by the Board of indicting magistrates, otherwise Dronke's arrest would have provided occasion for another six months' examination. But very soon they'll take him to Cologne and maybe attempt to produce him as a witness before the Court of Assizes. This time it serves him perfectly right. He could certainly have found such money as he needed in Frankfurt, or have got Lassalle to send it to him somewhere, but no, the little chap must needs go to Coblenz where he's known to every gendarme and every dog in town. En attendant il est sûrement logé.†a

Your
F.E.

Page me39.88
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

44
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.88
Manchester, 27 April 1852

Dear Marx,
Herewith Weydemeyer's latest, which sounds rather more hopeful. For the time being I am keeping your article†114 here 1. so as to read it, and 2. so as to translate it into English at some later date, which will be easily done, omitting such figures of speech as are comprehensible only to Germans.

Page Break me39.89

Page me39.89
Voilá donc†a Moses Hess, in the Kölnische Zeitung, with a warrant out against him for high treason.†b I'll be hanged if this hasn't happened because Father Dronke was found carrying those idiotic papers concerning their important business in Geneva. Cela valait bien la peine!†c In the meantime Moses again becomes a martyr, which will greatly enhance his otium cum dignitate†d; maybe he will shortly be dispatched to London — est-ce que nous n'échapperons jamais á cet imbécile?†e At any rate, all this can make things extremely awkward again for the poor devils in Cologne and provide new grounds for dragging out their trial; had they already been referred to the Court of Assizes, we should surely have heard about it.
Page me39.89
Freiligrath has written asking for an introduction to my brother-in-law†f — I am sending it to him today; evidently he is determined to look round for a post.
Page me39.89
Warm greetings to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.89
Splendid division on the Militia Bill last night.†115 If the Almighty vouchsafes a few more like it, the new election will be postponed until September or October. SERVES THE WHIGS RIGHT AND THE FINANCIALS†28 TOO! I see that Jones intends after all to bring out his PAPER straight away — it was a mean trick Harney played him over the Star, but it was lucky that Jones did not acquire that doomed, discredited, wretched old paper.†116 Let Harney dig its grave and his own at the same time.

Page me39.89
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.90

45
ENGELS TO MARX†117
IN LONDON
Page me39.90
Manchester, 29 April 1852

D.M.,

Herewith another letter from Weydemeyer. I have not received the newspapers; but the Atlantic was reported by telegraph this morning, and they will probably arrive tomorrow morning. Weydemeyer appears to have misunderstood one or two practical hints I gave him on how to pack and dispatch his things in such a way as not to pay unnecessarily high postal charges; however, I have already pointed out his mistake.†a

Page me39.90

So the Coblenz story about the piccolo†b was a pure fabrication and, if the Kölner Zeitung is to be believed, Father Dronke must already be in London, his adventures have achieved a purpose. Tant mieux pour lui.†c But this makes the business of Moses'†d warrant even more inexplicable. Anyhow, it would seem to imply further vexations for the Cologne people. God knows what sort of scrawl the police have picked up this time. Pauvre†e Moses, fancy becoming SO EGREGIOUSLY and post festum†f a martyr in partibus infidelium!

Page me39.90

Next week I shall write several articles in succession for Dana,†118 and make sure that I take the thing up to the end of the Imperial Constitutional campaign. In order that we may be able to conclude directly, it would be a good idea if you could provide me with a short memorandum for the final articles — THE REVOLUTIONARY PROSPECTS OF GERMANY, and our party's situation during and after the revolution. It is precisely these concluding pieces which are important, and moreover a memorandum of this kind would enable me to write these articles not only better but far more quickly. In this way I could, if I tried hard enough, finish all the 5-6 outstanding articles within a fortnight and meanwhile you could get in touch with Dana about a new series on a subject of greater actualité, soit la France, soit l'Angleterre.†g Since Weydemeyer's pamphlet will probably be coming out soon, it will no longer be possible to sell Dana the 18th Brumaire, even in a different guise; for he will then be able to have it FOR NOTHING and translate it himself. But you could still ask Dana whether he would like to have a modified version in translation, one suitable for the Anglo-American public. In this case the events leading up to 2 December '51 would for the most part be excised and the thing finally brought right up to date, so that successive weekly or fortnightly reports on France would follow straight on.

Page Break me39.91

Your
F.E.

Page me39.91

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

46
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.91
London, 30 April 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

You will receive at the same time as this letter a colossal parcel from America. Today I have also had a letter from Cluss, of which I give excerpts below, as I shall be needing it until next week.

Page me39.91

Dronke has arrived here sain et sauf.†a I like him better than I had feared. He has grown taller and has broadened out as well. This has also made him more self-possessed. For the present he hob-nobs with Anschütz, who welcomed him with open arms. He is going to start up a small business, having contracted in Paris to sell cigar cases and purses over here. 10% commission. And, through Anschütz, he will at once acquire the necessary connections for this TRADE.

Page me39.91

He tells me that the 'worthy' Techow has sent character sketches of us to Switzerland in which he roundly inveighs against us and you in particular. You have aroused the professional jealousy of the military, et je pense†a that one day you will justify leurs pressentiments.†b Further: from Geneva, Schily demanded that the gentlemen come to terms with us. This elicited an authoritative statement signed by Willich, Techow, Schapper and Schimmelpfennig in which, inter alia, it was pointed out that 1. there had been a complete break with this wholly impotent party; 2. there are police spies in our midst who have been reporting everything to the Prussian government.

Page Break me39.92

Page me39.92

I don't know whether I have already told you, or whether you heard during your stay here,†119 that Messrs Kinkel et Co. possess a mere 3,000 dollars in cash all told, that all respectable people such as Löwe of Calbe have all withdrawn, that relations between Willich on the one hand and Kinkel and Reichenbach on the other are very strained, and that the whole dungheap is in process of disintegration.

Page me39.92

You will receive the memorandum on Germany.†c

Page me39.92

Yesterday the curs held a meeting of guarantors here and elected a definitive committee. Mr Ruge wrote a letter of protest. Willich was not present. From the start Reichenbach refused to have anything more to do with the filthy business. The committee will be paid. Those elected are Kinkel, Willich (doubtful that he'll accept), Löwe of Calbe (will in any case refuse), Fickler, Ronge, Schütz of Mainz and one other. They will make up the total from out of their own midst. In his letter, Ruge attacks Kinkel as an agent of the Prince of Prussia†d and a freemason.

Page me39.92
Here is a passage from Cluss' letter:
Page me39.92
Huzel (not to be confused with Huzzelwitt), Cluss' friend, [present as a guarantor] at Kinkel's Cincinnati congress†60 writes and tells Cluss inter alia:

'Kinkel tried to floor me with vulgar invective against Marx and Engels. I succeeded in doing what I wanted, namely in cornering him so effectively that I shall have him at my mercy for some time to come. He tried to cover himself by obtaining my word of honour not to say anything about the incident or to write anything that would get him "into a stink"... In a letter to Anneke a certain Tellering scolds like a fishwife at Marx...'.

Page me39.92
Cluss himself goes on:

'In New York, at the inimitable meeting which I reported in my last letter, the numerous gymnastic clubs†120 constituted themselves a separate body and declared their support for my protest†a and for Weydemeyer's article†b against Kinkel's memorandum.'†121

Page Break me39.93

Page me39.93
Apropos. I gave Bangya a few pen-sketches of the great German men in London for him to pass on to Szemere.†122 This letter, I know not how, has been read to a German publisher without my name being mentioned. He is now asking for 'character sketches' of these gentlemen and, according to Bangya, is prepared to pay £25 for a few sheets. Anonymous or pseudonymous, of course. Well, qu'en penses-tu?†c We would really have to do a humorous piece of this kind together. I have some doubts. If you think I should take this crap on, you will have to make a compilation from my letters and anything else you have which may contain fragments on the peculiarities of these curs. At all events you would have to send me a few notes about Willich 'in action'†123 and 'in Switzerland'.
Page me39.93
Among the things I am sending you, you will find the draft of an advertisement for an illustrated book of battle reports by old Szerelmey. He wants it gingered up a little and done into English as an advertisement, in return for which he promises each of us a copy of his work. Je crois que ça vaut la peine de faire un petit puff.†d
Page me39.93
As soon as I set eyes on Mr Carey's first work in print†e I foresaw that he would bring out an economic work on the 'harmony of interests'.†f
Page me39.93

Mais que dis-tu, mon cher,†g to the fact that, in the Janus we sent you, Ruge seeks — and how he seeks, mon Dieu! — to appropriate communism as the latest product of his 'humanist thought'.
Page me39.93
Have you read the cock-fight between Harney and Jones?†116 If not, I shall send you their mutual philippics.†h Both of them, the one voluntarily, the other involuntarily, descend to the level of German émigré polemics.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me39.94
Page me39.94
Have you ever read more egregious nonsense than B. Bauer's article in the Tribune: 'The Decline of England'? The passage most characteristic of the incorrigible old theologian runs as follows:

'While the English Parliament has hitherto persecuted the Romish policy, and availed itself of the popular impulses for the establishment of its sovereignty — while, in the old Romish spirit, it has taken advantage of internal domestic differences, as for example, the differences of High Church, of Scotch Presbyterianism, and of Irish Catholicism, for the formation and development of its aristocratic art of Government, [...] it has now become a party to the Continental struggle between the peoples and the Governments, and it appears as the advocate for Constitutionalism at the very moment when that is approaching its undeniable downfall.'

Page me39.94
If that's not champion drivel, I don't know what is.

Page me39.94
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

47
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.94
London, 30 April 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

The news of the printing is very welcome.†124 You must not take Lupus' letter†125 so much au sérieux.†a In our very straitened circumstances there is, you know, inevitably a surplus of irritation which must always be 'discounted' if one is to strike a right balance.

Page me39.94

Neither I nor Engels has received your anti-Kinkel article in the Turn-Zeitung.†b I await it with keen interest since your anti-Heinzen polemic was a model of its kind.†c

Page me39.94

I am horrified to learn that Pfänder's statements are appearing in the pamphlet.†126 That sort of thing is all very well for a weekly where what crops up today is submerged tomorrow in the welter of time. In a pamphlet, on the other hand, it acquires altogether too much permanence, looks too much like a party manifesto and, if we want to attack the swine, there are, of course, better and different ways of doing so than in Pfänder's statement. Unfortunately this will arrive too late. — Just now I am negotiating with a bookseller here who is to get your Revolution sent to Germany. More about this next week.

Page Break me39.95

Page me39.95

As regards the newly invented lacquer varnish about which I and Bangya wrote to you,†127 you must not let the thing out of your own hands. It might set you up in funds at one stroke. Write and tell me when the EXHIBITION opens in New York,†128 and all you know about it. You can make use of the opportunity both to strike up acquaintances and to establish all the connections with foreign businessmen necessary to a forwarding agency. Write to me at once, giving full details of the expenses you thereby incur. We must, of course, let you have these en avance. In the first place you will need a fellow to keep a constant eye on the stuff at the Exhibition, since you yourself cannot spend the whole day in the building for the sake of it. Secondly, you will need money for advertisements and announcements in the newspapers. So let us have a detailed estimate of expenses.

Page me39.95

As to Szemere, his pamphlet†a will soon be READY. But since I cannot, as he asks, send him a 'bundle' of copies of the Revolution, and since our enemies may have whispered in his ear that your paper has appeared only twice before submerging again, I cannot just now get any money from that quarter, for the confidence of these people has been shaken. But he is coming here in person and I shall then straighten everything out.

Page me39.95

It would be a pity if your anti-Kinkel polemic were not to appear in the very first number. The fellow is going utterly to pot. A Dane by the name of Goldschmidt lampooned him splendidly in the feuilleton of the Kölner Zeitung, recounting his meeting with him and Schurz in London.†b Dronke, finally released from custody in Paris, has arrived here and is saying that in private friend Schurz declares Kinkel a jackass whom he only intends to exploit. This man, Kinkel's 'modest liberator', has smuggled an article into the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†c in which he proclaims himself

Page Break me39.96
'the only important man among the London émigrés', declares Kinkel and Ruge to be 'out-moded' and, in proof of his own greatness, cites the fact that he is marrying a 'rich' girl, Ronge's sister-in-law, and that, after completion of the nuptials, he will remove to America. Quel grand homme! Quant á Tellering,†a keep me au fait about this individual. As soon as I think fit, I can destroy him, not only in the eyes of our party, but in the eyes of all parties.†b
Page me39.96
Yesterday, then, Mr Kinkel held his Guarantors' Congress.†c Mr Willich did not appear; he is very embittered with Kinkel as a result of the news which we conveyed to him by a roundabout route (we had had it from Cluss). Mr Ruge sent a letter in which he declared Kinkel to be an agent of the 'King of Prussia',†d and gave himself superior airs. Mr Reichenbach declared that he wanted to have nothing more to do with the filthy business. Thus a definitive committee was elected, seven in number — of the alleged communists only Willich, who is unlikely to accept. In addition, Löwe of Calbe, who has already refused. Next, Kinkel, Schütz of Mainz, Fickler. I do not know who the other two are. According to some reports, the curs have 3,000 dollars in cash and, according to others, 9,000. They immediately resolved that the 7 members of the provisional government should receive payment, a fact you must report in the Turn-Zeitung.†129 For the rest, the whole dungheap is disintegrating.
Page me39.96
Keep at least some of the copies of the Revolution READY for Germany until you receive my order.
Page me39.96
I have forwarded your letter to Jones. He cannot possibly pay anything. He is as dépourvu†e as ourselves, and we all write for him gratis. Cluss will have told you about the battle between Jones and Harney. I have sent him details of it.†130 However, the things must be kept from the American Press for as long as possible.
Page me39.96
Big business and industry are now doing better than ever in England and hence on the Continent. As a result of the exceptional circumstances — California, Australia, England's commercial penetration of the Punjab, Sind and other only recently conquered parts of India, it may well be that the crisis will be postponed until 1853. But then its eruption will be appalling. And until that time there can be no thought of revolutionary convulsions.
Page me39.96
The trial of the Cologne people has again been deferred, this time until the July Assizes. By then the Assizes, i.e. the JURIES, will probably have been abolished in Prussia.

Page Break me39.97
Page me39.97
Philistine Lüning, so Dronke tells me, has been here with his spouse in order to unify Agitation and Emigration†26 — fruitlessly, of course.
Page me39.97
Farewell. Warmest regards to your wife from my wife and myself.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.97
Hardly ever have I seen anything more stupid than Bruno Bauer's article on 'the decline of England'.†a
Page me39.97
How did the fellow manage to get in with Dana?

Page me39.97
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

48
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.97
Manchester, 1 May 1852

Dear Marx,
Enclosed a 30/- POST OFFICE ORDER, which is all I can spare for the moment. True, you will not be able to cash the thing tomorrow, on account of its being Sunday, but at least you know that you've got it. Should I find myself able to send off more of the same later on this month, you can be sure you'll get it come what may, but just now I cannot say.
Page me39.97
It's very nice to hear that the little man†b has turned up and is getting on well, and it is all to the good that he has, for the time being, found A FRIEND IN NEED, A FRIEND INDEED in Anschütz. He must visit me some time this summer, once I have seen the back of my old man.
Page me39.97
As to the question of the biographical sketches of the great men,†c I have, oddly enough, long been turning over in my mind a similar idea for an alphabetically arranged collection of such biographies, which could continually be added to and kept in readiness for the great moment 'when it all starts', and then they could all at once be precipitated into the world. As for the publisher's offer, £25 is not to be sneezed at, but we must not forget that, however great the ano- and pseudonymity, everyone will realise de quel côté ces fléches viennent,†a and the responsibility would be laid at both our doors. If published in Germany under the present regime, the thing would seem to be supporting the reactionaries, and not even prefaces expressing the most irreproachable views in the world would make it seem otherwise. And that is always fatal. If the affair were restricted to a few — say, a dozen — of the more noteworthy jackasses, Kinkel, Hecker, Struve, Willich, Vogt and so forth, it might be more feasible, for the omission of our own names would not then matter very much and the things could be taken as issuing direct from the reactionaries. At any rate we ought, if possible, to write it together.†131 So decide what you think is best and nous verrons. £25 valent bien un peu de scandale.†b

Page Break me39.98

Page me39.98

Cluss' letter will be returned next week. I'll do the thing for Szerelmey.†c By midday today the Americans had not yet arrived, maybe they are waiting for me now at home.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.98
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

49
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.98
Manchester, 4 May 1852

Dear Marx,

Your fat American parcel has not yet arrived.†d I have made inquiries at Pickford's, since the houses in my street have been renumbered, which gives rise to confusion. But at Pickford's there is no parcel for me. Either you didn't send the thing off or, if by post, perhaps not in the prescribed manner, or else something has happened to it. So try and find out what has become of the thing.

Page Break me39.99
Page me39.99

I shall be having a visit from my respected pater here this week, when the whole bloody matter of the firm will be settled and my position, too, will be further regulated. Either the contract will be renewed and the firm will continue as it is, which is not very probable, or I shall try so to arrange matters that my old man quits by the end of the year at the latest, and perhaps even by the end of June. Then there'll be the hellish liquidation which, however, should be more or less completed in 6 to 8 months, after which I shall turn my hand to something else, either go to Liverpool or God knows what. This will probably be decided within the next fortnight. I am glad that my old man will soon be here so that the inevitable mess is over as soon as possible and I know where I am.

Page me39.99

I return Cluss' letter herewith. I have Jones' articles here, but not those of Harney, which you might send me some time so that I can acquaint myself with both sides and observe Father Harney in his new role. The industrious Jones will soon drive this indolent cur from the field if only he can hang on for a while. And he will certainly be able to raise the circulation†a to 4,000 a week, which alone means a profit (3,600 covers costs).
Page me39.99

The arrival of my old man will, of course, put back my Dana plans†b by a week or a fortnight. On the other hand you could meanwhile continue, through Szemere, to negotiate with the publisher over the sketches, to look through your correspondence and the N. Rh. Z. (especially votes and speeches in the National Assembly) apropos the heroes to be depicted and, if the matter reaches a favourable conclusion, you could come up here for a week and we'd have a go at the thing.†c I really think it could be done in such a way that no one will discover its paternité,†d and even if they did, little harm would be done.
Page me39.99

According to a letter from Ebner, he is still negotiating over your Economy†45 with Löwenthal, who wants to establish himself in Brussels and in the meantime remains a partner in the Frankfurt business.
Page me39.99

How is Freiligrath progressing with my brother-in-law?†e Don't forget to let me know about Pindar, c'est une bête ennuyeuse et assez confuse.†a Is he a member of the League?†b

Page Break me39.100
Page me39.100

The copies of the Turn-Zeitung advised by Weydemeyer have still not arrived; there must have been some oversight on his part.
Page me39.100

Write soon.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.100

In the case of parcels which do not go by post, it would be best if, instead of the old No. 70, you include the old and new nos. In the address, thus:
Page me39.100

No. 44/70, Great Ducie St., Strangeways, Manchester. Szerelmey's thing†c tomorrow perhaps.

Page me39.100
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

50
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.100
London, 6 May 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

The parcel didn't go off to you because Pickford's demanded 2/6d from my wife. And the whole lot put together isn't worth that much.
Page me39.100

The strange note enclosed herewith is a hastily made copy of a circular sent out by Messrs Kinkel and Willich to their affiliates.†132 The funniest thing about it is that one of their heads of sections invariably carries these scraps to Hebeler, the Prussian Consul-General, who pays him for them. The Prussian government, of course, no less than Kinkel-Willich, possesses the key to these portentous mysteries. Indeed Willich, for all his principles and scruples, has after all accepted a position on the definitive committee. Where the money is, there you will find Willich.

Page Break me39.101
Page me39.101

A coup quelconque†a is intended, so much is certain. General Klapka has already left for Malta, in his pocket a commission signed by Kossuth and Mazzini appointing him general commanding the Italo-Hungarian army. I believe a start is to be made in Sicily. Unless these gentlemen suffer defeat and receive a drubbing twice a year, they feel ill at ease. That world history continues to unfold without their help, without their intervention, and without, indeed, official intervention, is something they refuse to admit. If things go wrong, as they are sure to do, Mr Mazzini will have a renewed opportunity for self-assertion in outraged letters to a Graham quelconque.†b†133 Nor will his digestion suffer in consequence.
Page me39.101

I am now correcting Bangya's translation of Szemere's character-sketches†c written in Hungarian. While the original must be splendid, it has to be laboriously reconstructed from the wretched and often almost incomprehensible translation which is constantly at loggerheads with the rules of grammar and the consecutio temporum.†d This much is clear: the deposition of the Austrian dynasty which, at the time of its proclamation, was unpolitical and pernicious, was engineered by Mr Lajos Kossuth so as to secure for himself the post of governor, for he feared that, if he hesitated, he would later see it devolve unopposed on the victorious Görgey. Lajos was also responsible for the mistake of storming Ofen instead of marching on Vienna, since he was itching to celebrate with his family his triumphant entry into the capital.†134

Page me39.101

Apropos. I have just received a letter from Bangya. The publisher in Berlin has now made a definite offer: £25 for 5-6 sheets of character-sketches, 24 free copies. I shall receive the money from Bangya as soon as I deliver the manuscript to him. But the man wants it quickly.
Page me39.101

My plan is as follows: for the time being I shall do a brouillon†e with Dronke, which will plus ou moins†f obliterate my style. So it might be possible for you and me to get the thing†g READY in a fortnight's time. At all events you must let me have some more information about Willich (during the campaign†a and in Switzerland) in your CURRENT LETTERS.

Page Break me39.102
Page me39.102

Enclosed letter from Cluss.
Page me39.102

Yesterday Freiligrath and I were with Trübner, the bookseller. He believes he can dispose of a number of copies of the Revolution†b here in London and place a further quantity in Germany through Campe. So as soon as Weydemeyer's copies arrive, forward them here. The Turn-Zeitung seems to have gone astray.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.102
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

51
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.102
Manchester, 7 May 1852

Dear Marx,

I return Cluss' letter herewith. In this connection it has occurred to me that now that Mr Dana is in touch with B. Bauer and Simon of Trier and is, at the same time, restricting your space on account of the presidential election, it would certainly not be out of place to give Mr Dana a taste of Yankee medicine. Cluss and a number of others should write to Mr Dana from various quarters inquiring why it is that these INCOMPARABLE articles should appear so rarely and irregularly and expressing the hope that the fault does not lie with the editorial board which, rather, might be expected to correct this situation and find it possible to publish articles by K.M. more frequently, etc., etc. Weydemeyer could very easily organise this; the only reason we need to give him is that Dana wants to restrict your space and hence a demonstration of this kind is called for if we are to continue to have access to this organ. A Barnum, Barnum et demi.†a If you agree, I can put this to Weydemeyer per the next STEAMER.

Page Break me39.103
Page me39.103

The circular sent out by the convention to the sections is exquisite. I'll be hanged if the St Petersburg, Warsaw, Berlin, Rome, etc., sections are situated more than 4 miles from Charing Cross. This carbonari-like, self-important, bustling, order-of-the-dayish attitude again betrays how mistaken these gentlemen are as to their ostensibly organised forces. To propose a coup just now is a bêtise†b and a dirty trick. But truly, 'something has got to happen, something has got to be done'. It would be desirable for the supposed leaders of the thing to be all of them captured and shot; but needless to say the great men will make sure this doesn't happen and the heroic Willich will stay quietly in London so long as there is still money in the cashbox, credit at Schärttner's and free coats and boots ad libitum at the 'tailor's and shoemaker's'. That is what Mr Willich means by supplies for the army!
Page me39.103

As for the matter of the character-sketches,†c so far so good. The thing can be ready in a month's time. But mind you find someone reliable to make a fair copy, so that it goes out in a completely unknown hand. When you come up, bring the Americana, the complete run of the N. Rh. Z. and the necessary manuscript documents. My old man arrives tomorrow and is unlikely to be able to stay here for longer than 8-10 days.
Page me39.103

I've at last received my stuff on military science from Germany. So far I have been able to read only little of it. At this stage, I should say that Mr Gustav von Hoffstetter, of wide renown, is not exactly a Napoleon but rather a thoroughly reliable commander of a battalion or so in a minor engagement. But I haven't yet finished reading his thing.†d Not unpleasing, on the other hand, is a booklet on new fortifications in general by Küntzel, a Prussian captain of engineers†e — both better history and more materialist than anything I have so far read in militaribus.†f
Page me39.103

Now as for Mr Willisen, be it said here that the victory at Idstedt†135 was won, not by the Danes over the Schleswig-Holsteiners, but rather by the usual tactics of common sense over

Page Break me39.104

Hegelian speculation. Willisen's book†a should really be called the philosophy of great wars. This in itself would indicate that it contains more philosophising than military science, that the most self-evident things are construed a priori with the most profound and exhaustive thoroughness and that, sandwiched between these, are the most methodical discourses on simplicity and multiplicity and such-like opposites. What can one say about military science which begins with the concept of art en général, then goes on to demonstrate that the art of cookery is also an art, expatiates on the relationship of art to science and finally subsumes all the rules, relationships, potentialities, etc., etc., of the art of war under the one, absolute axiom: the stronger always overcomes the weaker. Every now and again there are some nice aperçus†b and some useful reductions to basic principles; it would indeed be bad if there were not. As to its practical application, I haven't yet got to that, but it doesn't say much for Willisen that every one of Napoleon's greatest victories was achieved in defiance of Willisen's elementary rules, a result that your orthodox Hegelian can, of course, readily explain away without the least violence being done to those rules.
Page me39.104

I see that Görgey's memoirs have just come out†c — but since they cost 6 talers, I doubt that I can buy them just now. With these, the material on the military aspect of the Hungarian war may be regarded as complete for the time being. At any rate, I shall do something on the Hungarian war, and possibly on all the wars of 1848/49.†136 As soon as I am clear in my mind about earlier military history, I shall look round for a publisher onto whom I can then shift most of the expenditure on sources.
Page me39.104

You will have received the 30/- sent you last Saturday.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.104
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.105

52
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†137
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.105
[London, 7 and about 15 May 1852]

... Herewith you will find a wrapper, in which the contemptible, craven, half-crazed Tellering mailed his defamatory opus. (Address:) CHARLES MARX, THE FUTURE DICTATOR OF GERMANY.†138 Now I ask you, what is to be done with the cur? To start a public row with a lunatic of this sort would be doing him too much honour and is the whole object of his manoeuvre. Could you not send the MANIAC's wrapper to the New York postal service in my name? Or might not a sound thrashing be the simplest course? I leave the whole thing to you. Naturally any packages of the kind will in future be returned. But by indulging in this sort of gutter-snipe's trick, the cur also brings me to the notice of the English police, which, under the Tories, is far from pleasant...

Page me39.105

Ad vocem†a Szemere: I am not by nature inclined to be unduly trusting, least of all when it comes to the official great men of 1848/49. But in Szemere's case, it's quite a different matter. I am correcting the German translation — for he originally wrote in Hungarian — of his 'character-sketches'.†b Every line betrays a superior intellect, and the rage of the democrats may be attributed to the CONTEMPT AND MOCKERY-SYSTEM which he employs with supreme skill. Although, of course, in accordance with the Hungarian line, he places, as in Antiquity, 'the fatherland and the citizen' above all else, his writing is imbued with a fundamentally critical spirit. A man who thinks and writes in this way is no Austrian agent. As for the 'DEAR COLONEL WEBB', he was negotiating with him without knowing who he was, but broke off as soon as he was informed what was afoot. The story of his fortune is very simple. Szemere himself does not possess a centime. But his wife is the daughter of a (now deceased) Austrian 'Hof-agent' (as the Austrian Procureurs du roi†c are called in Hungary); her old man possessed a fortune of a million. Throughout the 1848/49 revolution Mrs Szemere lived in Vienna with her mother. He had even ordered her to refrain from writing to him and to sever all ties with him until the old woman's death, when she could collect her fortune. His old mother-in-law died at the end of 1849 and Mrs Szemere, who was, of course, in no way suspect, surreptitiously sold all her worldly goods and turned them into CASH. In this she was aided by the minister, Bach, her father's lawyer, who seized on this opportunity and surreptitiously took his cut. Once her fortune was liquid, Mrs Szemere converted it into bills on London and English STOCKS, obtained a passport authorising her to visit the water-cure doctor, Priessnitz, in Prussia, but instead travelled to London and thence to her husband in Paris. Those Austrians, however, could lay their hands on nothing with which to gladden their Exchequer. Well, what does all this prove? That Szemere is much too astute to make his enemies a present of a million. I have written to Sz. himself, telling him that, without mentioning Kossuth, he should make a statement about his personal circumstances which I shall get into the New-York Tribune for him.

Page Break me39.106

Page me39.106

The Austrian spies are in Kossuth's immediate entourage, notably Madame Pulszky. This Count Pulszky is a Galician Jew by origin. Madame Pulszky, daughter of an ultra-reactionary Jewish banker in Vienna, writes to her mater each week, and from this source the Austrian government finds out anything it wants. It may even be asked whether Count and Countess Pulszky (The Times regularly derided both these individuals for the ASSUMPTION of their title)†a have not promised to lure Mr Kossuth into the snare in the hope that they may thereby retrieve their confiscated land. It is known for a fact that as a student, Pulszky denounced his comrades' demagogic activities†139 to the Austrian government...

Page me39.106
Enclosed you will find General Klapka's declaration of principles,†140 from which you will see that he, too, is starting to rebel against Kossuth. The last part of the document means nothing more than that Klapka is going to participate in Mazzini's projected coup. I have, if I am not mistaken, already written to you about the plans for a coup hatched by Messrs Mazzini, Kossuth, etc. Nothing could be more welcome to the great powers, especially Bonaparte, and nothing more damaging to ourselves.
Page me39.106
I have just received a letter from Cologne, dated 3 May.†b They are asking for 200 or 250 copies of the Brumaire. So pray ask Weydemeyer to send me forthwith 300 copies via Engels. At the same time, he should advise me of the selling price. I take it that he has already dispatched the 50 copies as promised...†141

Page Break me39.107
Page me39.107
To return to Klapka's document. I would beg you to keep it secret for the time being. It was given me in confidence, but with permission to publish it. I shall send it to the New York Tribune, and I do not want it to come into circulation before then...
Page me39.107
Jones' STAMPED PAPER has come out and the first number has sold surprisingly well. I enclose a cutting from the Notes†a from which you will see that he has knocked Harney out completely. Mr Harney is proceeding down the primrose path. One article in his paper, signed Spartacus,†b attacks Chartism for being only a CLASS MOVEMENT which ought to be replaced by A GENERAL AND NATIONAL MOVEMENT, genuine Mazzinian hot air, etc., etc., etc....
Page me39.107
Extracts from the Cologne letter†c:

'Recently Mrs Daniels was favoured yet again with a domiciliary visit in the certain expectation that it would yield a letter from you. The Prussian police seem to be as putty in the hands of the first jackass to come along. The prisoners' case seems to be approaching its conclusion. The examination has been concluded and, for over two months, the files have been back in the possession of the local public prosecutor at the Court of Appeal where, however, they seem incapable of deciding upon the wording of a petition to the Board of indicting magistrates. It is generally rumoured that the thing will be dealt with before a special Court of Assizes in June.'

Page me39.107
Apropos. Ask Weydemeyer if he has yet been to see Dana, who is waiting for him to pass on the information I sent him about the situation of the Cologne prisoners and the conduct of the Prussian government, before writing a LEADER on the subject.†d He mustn't for God's sake fail to do this, if it can possibly be helped.
Page me39.107

If you manage to bring out Freiligrath's poem against Kinkel et Comp†e as a broadsheet, you will have an assured sale of 500 copies in the Rhineland alone. But the thing must be done quickly. Otherwise it will be trop tard.†f
Page me39.107
Do not allow the articles, etc., in your possession to age so much that they lose their bouquet. If you can't get them printed (Eccarius, Engels, etc.),†142 give them to some paper or other, e.g. the Turn-Zeitung, as you think fit. In any case, it is better they should be read than left unread.
Page me39.107
If you can't get Freiligrath's poem printed, give it to whatever

Page Break me39.108
newspaper you think best.†13 If, as a party, we make no effort to be quick off the mark, we shall always arrive post festum...†a
Page me39.108
Few mortals, other than yourself, can boast of having received letters from me on 4 successive mail days; but I was anxious to show Papa Lupus which of us two is the more punctilious...

Page me39.108
First published in part in Russian in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, 1962 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 31 May 1852

Published in English for the first time

53
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.108
[London,] 13 May [1852]
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
Only a couple of lines today. Old Szerelmey, whose first volume is now ready, chivvies me daily about the advertisement for his book of battle reports.†b If you can't do it now, at least send me back his brouillon†c by return.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.108
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.109

54
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.109
Manchester, 19 May 1852

Dear Marx,

Les affaires vont bien.†a Tomorrow or the day after my old man will be leaving again, very satisfied with his affairs. The business here is to be completely reorganised and will be run on a new basis. I have succeeded in obtaining a rise and, as soon as the contracts have been signed and my old man is out of the way, the banknote I promised you will materialise. The best thing about all this is that I am signing nothing at all; my old man was wise enough not to trust me entirely on the political score, thus perhaps safeguarding himself against becoming involved through me in any further unpleasantness. Moreover, in this case, and providing certain proprieties are observed, I can arrange to be replaced by one of my brothers in such a way that my old man would lose nothing by my departure save, perhaps, a few illusions, and it would be I, not he, who would be making the sacrifice. Let me know by return how your character-sketches†b are going. All these changes are going to saddle me with a fair amount of work for a while, so that there would seem to be no immediate prospect of our doing very much together, and yet I should like very much to see you here as soon as possible. It would therefore be good if you and Dronke could complete the things so far as you are able, after which we could polish them off here in a few evenings. And before you come up I would make the necessary extracts about the people in question (whose names you must give me) from the documents up here, thereby enabling us to get on quickly. It has just occurred to me that it would be best for you to come at Whitsun, i.e. on the previous Friday — the day after tomorrow week — when there are general HOLIDAYS here. If the weather is fine we can go to the Isle of Man or somewhere, and if bad we shall work. But mind you come on your own. I should be very glad to see Dronkius later on, but I have no use for him just now, and he would only disturb our work.
Page me39.109

By the way, the best thing about the new arrangement is that, as

Page Break me39.110
from 1 July, not only shall I have more money, but it will be all mine, so that no one will have any right to ask what use I make of it. Further details when we meet.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.110
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

55
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.110
Manchester, 21 May 1852

Dear Marx,

My old man has left. ALL IS RIGHT. Herewith the first half of the ten-pound note. I hope to see you here at the end of next week. Presumably a letter from you is this moment awaiting me at home but I haven't the time to go there. The second half of the note will follow either today by the second post, or tomorrow.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.110
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.111

56
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.111
Manchester, 22 May 1852

Dear Marx,

I am writing to you today simply to make sure you know that yesterday I sent direct to you by the first post 1/2 a £10 note, and that the 2nd half went off at the same time under cover to Lupus for transmission to you. I trust you have received it all right.
Page me39.111

There is now great ELECTIONEERING ACTIVITY here — two of the WHIG FREE TRADERS†a were put up by the Tories with the intention of ousting Bright and Gibson, and nothing goes on here but canvassing and boozing. Of course the fellows don't stand a chance, but it's going to cost them a mint of money.
Page me39.111
Three weeks ago, as I anticipated, there was a flush of speculation on the cotton market; but since opportunities are not yet sufficiently pronounced and the spinners and merchants here were operating against it, the thing momentarily subsided again. However, it will recur before very long, as soon as the whole weight of the American crop has been delivered. Wool, too, — because of the sudden ruin of the Australian sheep-farmers — lends itself splendidly to speculation and, all things considered, there is every prospect that by the autumn speculation will be in full spate. Railway stocks, etc., etc., are again beginning to rise — the better ones continue to yield more than the 1 to 1 1/2% now still to be had from the banks in respect of deposits. In America, speculation in cotton has been well under way for the past six weeks, and the proliferation of strange new joint-stock companies now being announced all over the place indicates the extent to which capital is feeling around for debouchés†b in all the big money markets. Aprés tout†c the straws in the wind may now be seen rather more clearly and in greater quantity. Cela sera beau.†a

Page Break me39.112
Page me39.112
I hope to receive a letter from you by tomorrow morning at the latest.

Your
F.E.
Page me39.112
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

57
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.112
[London,] 22 May [1852]
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
The first half of the 10-pound note arrived this morning.
Page me39.112

I intend to leave here on Friday,†b this time by ship to Liverpool and thence to Manchester.
Page me39.112
Apropos. Citizen Schramm†c is travelling to America via Liverpool. Well, the fellow proposes, or so he confides to us, to descend upon you on Wednesday or Thursday. You must see if you can give him the slip.
Page me39.112
Willich has had a rather nice adventure. Mrs von Brüningk, who provided him with free board, used to enjoy flirting with this old he-goat, as with the other ex-lieutenants. One day the blood rushes to the head of our ascetic, he makes a brutally brutish assault upon madame, and is ejected from the house with éclat. No more love! No more free board! Nous ne voulons plus de jouisseurs.†d
Page me39.112
Cherval, about whose heroism before the Paris Assizes in the matter of the Complot allemand-français†e†143 you will have heard, has, as you may also have seen in the English papers (Morning

Page Break me39.113
Advertiser), escaped from the catchpolls in prodigiously daring manner — as it later transpired, with the connivance of the police to whom he betrayed everything he knew. Even the Great Windmillers†144 were forced to throw out the hero with whom they had been parading round London.
Page me39.113
The Cologne people have at last been referred by the Board of indicting magistrates to the Court of Assizes. Unless a special Court of Assizes is appointed, they will not appear before July.†16
Page me39.113
Dronke sends his regards.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.113
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

58
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.113
Manchester, 24 May [1852]

Dear Marx,

If you intend to wait till Friday before leaving by boat for Liverpool, you won't be here till Monday evening, perhaps not till Tuesday morning. If you are absolutely intent on coming by sea, arrange to come via Hull — a boat leaves the CITY three or four times a week at 8 o'clock in the morning and the journey doesn't take so long — you would have to leave on Wednesday morning, or Thursday morning at the latest, the FARE to Hull being 6/6d, and from Hull to here 3rd class, some seven or eight shillings. You must be here by Friday afternoon, so that we can leave for Liverpool at about 6 o'clock the same evening. The PARLIAMENTARY TRAIN†145 direct from London leaves too late to be any good to you on Friday. You can take the sea-route from Liverpool on the return journey.

Page Break me39.114
Page me39.114

Well, quoi que tu fasses, il faudra que tu sois ici le vendredi, á 4 heures de l'aprés-midi.†a
Page me39.114

Awaiting further details.†146

Your
F.E.

Page me39.114

The story about Willich is most entertaining. So fate has caught up with that pure and noble man after all!

Page me39.114
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

59
MARX AND ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.114
Manchester, 28 May 1852

Dear Weiwei,

I am staying with Engels for a few days and have found your letter here. Today you must be content with a few lines.
Page me39.114

The main purpose of this letter is to inform you about three individuals who will be arriving in America:
Page me39.114
1. Heise (of the Kassel Hornisse), Willich's agent (who, unbeknown to Kinkel with whom he is on bad terms, is seeking to spread Willich's renown). Apropos. Mr Willich was among the cavaliere servante†b of Baroness von Brüningk who, once a week, provided him, Techow, Schimmelpfennig, etc., with free board. The Brüningk woman is a flirtatious little woman and it amuses her to tease the old he-goat, who plays the ascetic. One day he made a direct carnal attaque upon her and was ignominiously shown the door. Keep an eye on Heise and don't trust him out of your sight.

Page Break me39.115
Page me39.115
2. Schütz from Mainz. Kinkelian. Member of the Committee for the Administration of the European-American National Loan.†27
Page me39.115
3. Conrad Schramm. He has in his hands a credential from us, so worded that without you he cannot take a step. In his relations with his brother†a and the latter's other friends, his conduct has not always been beyond reproach. The confidence you accord him should not be unconditional but rather tempered with caution. In the adverse circumstances here he has, furthermore, gone very much downhill, is quite unreliable and not over-scrupulous in money-matters, tends to swagger and boast like a commis voyageur†b and hence may well compromise those in his surroundings. On the other hand he has a number of good qualities. I feel it my duty to put you au fait in advance. You should also pass on this information to Cluss.
Page me39.115
As to Lupus' letter, you should not take it too literally. Wolff wrote in a moment of agitation and is very well aware of the many obstacles that stood in your way.†c
Page me39.115
Don't forget to send me in your next a detailed report on 'Willich's Corps'†147 in New York.
Page me39.115
My warm regards to your wife. I hope that, 'for all that',†d your affairs will yet progress.
Page me39.115
Dana has written to say he wants to do an essay on the Cologne people†e as soon as you provide him with the necessary information. So go and see him. The Cologne people are to appear before a special Court of Assizes in June. Daniels is said to have consumption and Becker†f to be half blind. Mind you settle the matter quickly with Dana and send me the article. It will provide consolation for Mrs Daniels.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.115
Dear Weydemeyer,

As regards Heise, I first met him in the Palatinate. A democratic loafer who lends a willing ear to bad jokes about Tom, Dick or Harry, but a no less willing hand to Tom, Dick or Harry's pompous, democratic schemes for world conquest and world liberation. Recently — since his arrival in London — he has consorted exclusively with the others, never coming to see us; now, of course, wholly in the others' clutches. No time for any more. Greetings to your wife.

Page Break me39.116

Your
F.E.

Page me39.116
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

60 MARX TO JENNY MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.116
Manchester, 11 June 1852
70 Great Ducie Street
Dear Heart,

I was very pleased to get your letter. By the way, you must never have any qualms about telling me all. If you, my poor little wretch, have to endure bitter reality, it is only fair that I should share that torment, at least in my thoughts. In any case, I know how unendingly resilient you are and how the slightest encouragement is enough to revive your spirits. I hope that the other £5 will reach you this week or on Monday at the latest.
Page me39.116

I did of course pack the Schnellpost. But I haven't got the back numbers in which Ruge deposited the better part of his ordure. The process of curing these stock-fish†a makes us laugh till we cry.
Page me39.116

Though Oswald's package won't yield very much, something may be made of it. Our dear A. Ruge is incapable of writing 3 lines without compromising himself. 'Moute'†b has already been corrected by me, unless I am mistaken.
Page me39.116

The printer in the City seems to be a lesser lumen†c who, not having a superfluity of underlings, will certainly require an unconscionable time to do one sheet. His paper is 3 × worse than the American, and his type likewise, this being clearly quite worn out. But you have managed the business splendidly.

Page Break me39.117

Page me39.117
Harro's pamphlet†a is truly touching in the naivety of its stupidity! Be so kind as to cut Engels' article on Heinzen out of the Brüsseler-Zeitung†b and send it to us, — and that very soon. If the Kosmos doesn't arrive, no matter. We have a letter of mine up here which contains the gist of the thing.†148

Love and kisses to my manikins.
Your
K.M.

Page me39.117
Engels has further pointed out that whereas, throughout the pamphlet, I always deliberately write 'Louis Bonaparte', Mr Weydemeyer has entitled it 'Louis Napoleon'.†149
Page me39.117
P.S.
Dear Jenny, be so kind as to tell Eccarius that he should write a short postscript to his 'Mechanics' Strike',†44 since Weydemeyer is 'considering' publishing it. We should agree to this, if only on Cluss' account.
Page me39.117
Dear Heart, send Jones the 2 enclosed pieces, 'Chevalier Hülsemann's Farewell' and 'John Barney and the French Minister†c', together with the short cutting about 'Cayenne' — preferably by post, unless he comes to see you.†150 I beg you not to bother Mr Pieper with such errands. To him, everything provides occasion for rodomontade and I don't want Jones — who, by the way, was responsible for making him so uppish — to regard him as my alter ego. Since Pieper believes the letters are written for 'the party', he must not henceforward set eyes on any more of them.

Page me39.117
[From Engels]

Prego il Signor Colonello Musch di gradire le mie migliori e piú cordiali felicitazioni.†d

F. Engels

Page me39.117
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.118

61
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.118
Manchester, 11 June 1852

Dear Weydemeyer,

We have received the first issue of the Revolution,†a but we had imagined you would contrive to include Freiligrath's poem about Kinkel,†b which would not after all have increased the cost very much. While the closeness of the print and the large format were unavoidable due to lack of funds, it is a great pity that this should have made it so difficult to read, particularly when misprints distort the meaning. But what surprises us is the difficulty you seem to have about dispatching the 300 copies we ordered other than by post. Your friends over there, Helmich and Korff, must be colossal asses indeed if they can't so much as tell you that the mail steamers also carry parcels and even heavy bales of merchandise, and that all details concerning freight, etc., etc. can be obtained at the steamship offices — not, of course, at the post office. The location of these steamship offices may be found in any newspaper announcement, beneath which there is always the name of a local business house. Moreover there are any number of forwarding agents concerned with handling such things, for example Edwards, Sandford & Co. of Liverpool and London, who also have an office in New York. You simply address the parcel as follows:

(at the top) per ... Steamer care of Messrs Edwards, Sandford & Co., Liverpool

(underneath)
F.E. care of Messrs Ermen & Engels
Manchester

Printed books, not bound.

Page Break me39.119
Page me39.119

That's all, and sent in this way it costs only a few shillings which Ermen & Engels can stand. But it's really too bad that people like Helmich and Korff, who have been in New York so long and who, moreover, also do a certain amount of business, should be ignorant of matters with which any child over here is familiar.
Page me39.119

The copies of the Turn-Zeitung have not yet arrived, either here or in London; you should make inquiries at your post office.

Page me39.119

The printing costs are colossal; for £5 per sheet — scarcely more than you have had to pay — we could get the thing similarly printed in London. Paper should, after all, be cheaper over there, since here it carries a duty of 1 1/2d (3 cents) per lb. Perhaps you could inquire about the price from the local wholesale paper merchants and let us know what it is.

Page me39.119

Just send here anything destined for Europe. Marx has a German bookseller in London who is reliable and upon whom, moreover, he can keep an eye; this man will see to distribution both here, and in Germany, Switzerland, etc., etc., in return for a modest percentage. If, then, when you receive this letter you have not yet sent off the parcel with the 50 copies for London and 250 for Cologne, take the opportunity of including in it as many as you think appropriate, or can spare, for the German bookseller to dispose of. But should it already have gone, send nothing more until we ask for it. We shall, of course, charge a higher price here, if only to defray our costs and the bookseller's commission. 15 silver groschen is well within the means of the German philistine.

Page me39.119

Since the second issue is to be devoted exclusively to Freiligrath's poems, it is presumably already in print. These things, particularly the Kinkel poem, should not be held back a moment longer than is unavoidable. This should really have been published in one way or another†13 after Kinkel's return to New York; but the longer it lingers, the more it loses in topicality and, even for things which are largely written with an eye to immortality, there is a certain period during which they are especially rewarding and at their most topical. But since I deliberately write, not with an eye to immortality, but rather for the immediate present, my article on the English bourgeoisie†a may well be somewhat long-drawn-out, especially since a work of this kind lends itself very well to piecemeal publication amongst other material in a newspaper or weekly; in a review, however, where because of its very length it takes up most of the space, it would not be topical or interesting enough for the American-German public. Besides, Mr Derby may very well topple before August, and that's a ticklish sort of thing to prognosticate.

Page Break me39.120

Page me39.120

While beholden to Korff for his goodwill, Dronke has no intention of going to America since he has just started a wholesale business in cigar cases, etc., etc., as agent for a Parisian house. For that matter, neither Dronke nor any of the rest of us is on the same easy terms with Korff as during the first months of the N. Rh. Z.; we still remember all too clearly the circumstances of Korff's dismissal from the newspaper†151 and how subsequently, in New York, he published my Hungarian articles under his own name.†152. He may be of some use to you in small ways, but you would be well advised not to trust him out of sight, and Marx is particularly anxious that Korff should not come butting in between himself and Dana, having, it seems, already caused some sort of ruction in this respect. In your letter you say that Marx will have been able to see for himself from Dana's letter how unresponsive the Tribune is to our cause; this passage we find totally incomprehensible since Dana had written Marx a most cordial letter in which he requested, not only further instalments of the German article,†a but other contributions as well. It would certainly not suit us if Korff were in any way to thrust himself forward as the representative or CHAMPION of either of us in personal matters.

Page me39.120

Since there is so much delay over the American exhibition,†128 it would be better if you were to take no further steps in respect of the leather business†b until you have again heard from us about it. Marx is up here just now and hence cannot for the time being speak to the Hungarian.†c For he and I are now engaged in a most interesting and amusing piece of work†d which is to be published directly. As soon as we receive the first copies we shall send you one, then we shall also be able to discuss to what extent you can use the thing and, perhaps, make money out of it towards the production of new pamphlets, for this time it's going to be something that will indubitably sell.
Page me39.120

Eccarius has been written to about his final instalment†e; he will have little to add, the workers — as was to be expected — having been beaten.
Page me39.120

Our dear, worthy Willich has suffered a grave misfortune. Once a week Baroness Brüningk used to invite the Prussian lieutenants in London and other such great men to her table, when it was her custom to flirt with these gallant knights. This, it seems, caused the blood to rush violently to the head of our virtuous Willich, who, finding himself one day tête-á-tête with the young lady, was suddenly overwhelmed by a fit of uncontrollable lust and, quite without warning, made a somewhat brutish attack upon her. But this had in no way been madame's intention, and she ordered our paragon of knightly virtue to be thrown out of the house sans façon.†a 'Blessed is he that virtue loves,

Page Break me39.121

Woe to him that's lost it...

A wretched stripling, here am I Chucked out into the street'†b and the morally pure stoic, who as a rule felt a far greater sympathy for fair-haired young tailor's apprentices than for pretty young women, may thank his stars that he did not in the end find himself back 'in the guardroom at Kassel'†c as a result of this involuntary, instinctive outbreak of his physical ego so long kept enchained. The thing has been noted and circulated with great glee throughout London. There is, by the way, some prospect that you may have this gallant fellow in New York before too long. Over here the man 'who enjoyed the respect of all parties and even of his enemies', is daily losing more ground. He maintains relations with Kinkel and Schapper, his right and left hand props, only with reluctance (and in Kinkel's case on pecuniary grounds), for he hates them both and they him; he has several times received rough treatment at the hands of the inferior refugees, since when he has given them up. After this latest business he will never again be allowed into houses where there are young women, in addition to which he has now lost his aura of virtue. On the other hand he hears talk of how the men of Willich's Corps in New York stick together and he has the gallant Weitling there — hence, and more particularly when the flow of money from the loan fund†27 begins to dry up, he will probably make himself scarce. Indeed, he has already sent out an apostle in the shape of Heise from Kassel — this fellow forms part of his personal entourage. In addition he is now dispatching another harbinger, poor old Mirbach, who fell into his clutches through sheer, bitter necessity and, as a result of his total ignorance of the emigration's antecedents and his theoretical confusion, was naturally dazzled by such fine airs. He is au fond†a a very good fellow, a political nonentity, but otherwise honourable and, militarily speaking, I find him 10 times preferable to all the London great men. He used to call on Marx, but never unchaperoned by that lout Imandt and that philistine jackass Schily, so that it was never possible to talk to him frankly.

Page Break me39.122
Page me39.122
In America our Willich would be in his element; the old crew in New York, which by now must have run completely wild and disintegrated into ROWDIES AND LOAFERS, would very soon grow sick of him and beat him black and blue — even over here his relationship with the swine finally degenerated into the low vulgarity of a mob of rogues bickering over plunder — while his friend, that experienced trickster Weitling, would likewise ensure him a brilliant future.
Page me39.122
But I must close now. Marx sends his regards — many regards from us both to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.122
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

62
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†153
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.122
Manchester, [before 26 June 1852]

... Napoleon II†b is getting into more and more of a scrape. Apart from his other new taxes, the jackass has got caught up in the same snare as the provisional government,†154 — that is, by imposing a new tax on the peasants; an increase of 25% on the existing succession duty and the CONVEYANCE OF LANDED PROPERTY. He is moving quickly. True socialism is being achieved by a most fatuous acceptance, if not an intensification of, the old French financial procedures...

Page Break me39.123

Page me39.123
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 13 July 1852

Published in English for the first time

63
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.123
Manchester, 30 June 1852

Dear Marx,

Either you people down there must be working terribly hard at copying out the manuscript†a or something unpleasant must have happened, otherwise I should undoubtedly have heard from you by now. En attendant,†b herewith a letter along with cuttings from Weydemeyer.
Page me39.123

Your little wallet with the letter from Cologne has come to light. I haven't got it with me today, otherwise I should have enclosed it.
Page me39.123

Warmest regards — in haste.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.123
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.124

64

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.124
[London,] 3 July 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I am late, but I have come.†a How the delay came about, you will see from the tale recounted below:

Page me39.124

In London, the manuscript†b was copied out at once. By Monday noon†c it was all ready and complete. I dictated it by turns to my wife and Dronke. At midday on Wednesday I received the money. Bangya deducted the £7 about which you know. Add to that what was owed Dronke for his collaboration. This left an amount that did not even suffice for household needs. Strohn's CIRCUMSTANCES were such that he could not pay. And then came a run of exceptional ill-luck.

Page me39.124

Klose's wife, long ailing and wasting away in hospital, was discharged by the dirty dogs at the precise moment she was entering her final crisis, and died in his house three days ago. Not a centime available, funeral expenses, etc. Freiligrath could do nothing, having just bled all his acquaintances in order to help send Heilberg's wife and child back to Breslau, keep Heilberg himself alive and, finally, get him into hospital. Thus the thing devolved on me, and a vast amount of time and trouble it cost me before it was settled. Maintenant†d all is peace and quiet again.

Page me39.124

The 'gang' are racking their brains over our pamphlet. Notably the Meyen-bug,†e who is in a cold sweat. He is 'quite unable to recall the least trespass against us'. Willich has had me sounded as to whether the Brüningk affair appears in it. The thought makes him exceedingly uneasy.

Page me39.124

'The true course' of this curious happening would now appear to be as follows:

Page me39.124

First, as you know, Willich denied it outright. His 2nd version ran: 'Mrs Brüningk has sought to corrupt him politically. Used Mr von Willich left and right, and other such means of corruption.' It was with 'moral intent', therefore, that he created a diversion in the region of her private parts.

Page Break me39.125

Page me39.125

But now our partisan leader has put yet another construction on the case. 'The Brüningk woman (or so Imandt once told him) is a Russian spy. She tries to entrap young refugees. Old Willich stood in her way. Hence the anecdote intended to ruin him in the eyes of the émigrés. How political, deliberate and diabolical was this trumped-up “anecdote”, emerges from the very fact of its having been Mrs Brüningk's own husband who circulated the rumour of the outrage for the sole purpose of discrediting Willich.'

Page me39.125

But that is not all. The chivalrous Schimmelpfennig maintains that Willich invented the spy story to conceal the insubordination of his 'cazzo'.†a As things now stand, the issue remains undecided between these two worthies, and Willich, taking refuge in one lie after another, is well and truly compromising himself.

Page me39.125

The cuckold Brüningk reminds me of a nice joke I found a few days ago in one of Machiavelli's commedia:

Nicia (cuckold): Chi é San cu cu?
Ligurio: É il piú honorato santo che sia in Francia.†b

Page me39.125

Willich and Kinkel mightily worried about how best to effect a revolution on £1,200. Schurz, Schimmelpfennig, Strodtmann, etc., are drawing further and further away from Kinkel.

Page me39.125

Not even 100 horsepower could drag Willich away from the coffre-fort.†c

Page me39.125

Kinkel, knowing that Imandt and I see each other, calls on Imandt a week ago and says, 'What a pity it was my Economy had not yet come out, so that one might at last have a positive basis to go on.' Imandt questions him about Freiligrath's poem.†d 'Never read such things,' retorts Godofredus.

Page me39.125

The most ludicrous thing about it is that, having existed for years solely by abusing us the curs now declare it beneath 'our dignity' and 'station' to write such t-t-tittle-tattle. Les drôles!†e

Page me39.125

However, a new prospect has opened up before the wretched Willich-Kinkel, the pair who are to effect the revolution. Messrs Rodbertus, Kirchmann and other ambitious ministerial candidates have dispatched a legate to London. For these gentlemen, in imitation of the French, want Vogt to set up a German Carbonari association. Connections with even the most extreme of parties. Paper money is to be issued in Germany to defray the costs. Since they are, however, anxious to emerge more or less unscathed, it is the émigrés, and of 'all' parties, who are to underwrite this paper.

Page Break me39.126

Page me39.126

Schapper has been sounding me and making contrite admissions through Imandt. Replied that he must first break publicly with Willich, and then we should see. That was the conditio sine qua.†a

Page me39.126

You will have read about the new arrests in Paris.†155 The boobies (this time the Ruge clique) naturally had to come up with yet another pseudo-conspiracy. Their correspondent in Paris, as I was informed some considerable time ago, is one Engländer, a notorious police spy (in Paris) who, of course, immediately passes all their letters to the service. Not content with that, the French police have sent Simon Deutsch over here to pump Tausenau. Louis Napoleon must have a conspiracy, cost what it may.

Page me39.126
But he has got one on his hands about which as yet he seems to know nothing. That of the Orleans family, whose agent Mr Bangya (with the assent of the Hungarian 'radicals') has now become. The plan: Bonaparte is to be caught out one evening with his drab, to whom he goes slinking behind the Englishwoman's back. A senior police officer has been suborned. Two generals are said to have been won over. Nemours himself was in Paris a fortnight ago. Large sums paid out for the distribution of anti-Louis Napoleon pamphlets.
Page me39.126
What do you think of it? If one of the Orleans were again to visit Paris and we happened to know when, should we, d'une maniére ou d'une autre,†b denounce the 'vrai prince' to the 'faux prince'†c? Let me have your views on the matter.
Page me39.126
Cherval, the cur, has also handed over to the Prussians the letter sent him by Pfänder.
Page me39.126
Au revoir

Your
K.M.

Page me39.126
Not a word from that blessed Weydemeyer. Bonaparte will probably be in America before my pamphlet about him†d reaches Europe. If possible, send me an article for Dana soon.†e
Page me39.126
Herewith the introduction to the Dubbii amorosi by Pietro Aretino, the forefather (but wittier) of Cassagnac.

Page Break me39.127
Prefazione. Magnifico utriusque Ser Agnello,
Voi qui scribere scitis quare, quia,
Espelle, volte fatte co'l cervello,
Di Bartolo e Baldo notomia,
E le leggi passate co'l castello,
Nella vostra bizarra fantasia,
Questi dubbii, di grazia, mi chiarite
Ch'oggi in Bordello han mosso un gran lite.

_____
Page me39.127
Vi sono genti fottenti, e fottute;
E di potte e di cazzi notomie.
E nei culi molt' anime perdute, etc.†a

Page me39.127
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

65
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.127
Manchester, 6 July 1852

Dear Marx,

It's a good thing that the manuscript†b has gone off. I hope that copies will arrive in 3-4 weeks' time. You must have been really in the soup if, as antidote, you had to take Pietro Aretino's porcherie.†c Cazzo di Dio, queste sono forti.†d
Page me39.127

I am up to my eyes in work here. I still have eleven business letters to write today and it is nearly 7 o'clock. However, I will do an article for Dana,†e if possible today and if not, by tomorrow evening at the latest.

Page Break me39.128
Page me39.128

I am just tackling Mr Görgey. At that time, drawing on Austrian bulletins, we of the N. Rh. Z. made splendidly accurate guesses as to the course of the Hungarian war, and prognostications, if cautious, proved brilliantly correct.†a Görgey's book†b is truly wretched, nothing could be more pettily invidious, infamously mesquin†c and mediocre. The military part is good, Görgey to the life, — sudden transformation of talented ex-lieutenant into general, still bearing unmistakable traces of the company officer and tactical tyro. Hungarians who maintain that Görgey is incapable of having written this are jackasses. The genuine Görgeyesque and Austrian elements are as easily distinguishable here as are the two heterogeneous elements in Chenu.†156 But otherwise the book may — with some caution — very well be used as a source. The fellow's malicious mediocrity is such that he cannot help making a fool of himself, witness the affair of the proclamation of Waitzen†157 in which he reproaches Kossuth for having been shrewder in practice than in his bombastic speeches, or again, the very inept descriptions which lead the author, always involuntarily, into compromising himself. This mediocrity never permits Görgey to draw a true portrait of any one chap, but the thing has some pleasant traits and individual comments on Kossuth and most of the others. Despite the mediocrity of his malice, Görgey — as is everywhere apparent — was after all superior to any of the others — so what must the others be like!
Page me39.128

At all events, I shall write about the Hungarian war.†136
Page me39.128
Judging by the facts, the Paris plot†155 would seem more likely to have emanated from our carrément and crânement†d sinister Barthélemy, etc. — the daring artillery preparation is something qui sent son Willich de vingt lieues.†e It is more than likely that Ruge, etc., also had a finger in the pie, but those cannons fashioned out of gas pipes and draped with tarpaulins are of Hohenzollern origin.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me39.129
Page me39.129
As for the Orleans, pourquoi pas?†a To see the estimable Joinville or whomsoever treated á la duc d'Enghien†158 would be delightful, and pourquoi le neveu ne ferait-il pas fusiller aussi son Bourbon?†b

Page me39.129
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

66
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.129
[London,] 13 July 1852

Dear Engels,
There being no letter from you, I conclude that the worthy Weydemeyer must, for all that,†c be still persevering with his 'system'. The thing's becoming really incomprehensible and, quite aside from the pecuniary loss, which is just now very perceptible, is turning me for good measure into the laughing stock of the émigré vermin and of the booksellers whom I had approached about this unfortunate affair.
Page me39.129
I have not written an article on the elections because I feel it would be better to await the full results.†159 From what I have seen so far, it seems to me that, apart from 5-6 more votes for the Whigs, the old Parliament will rise again unchanged. The fellows are in a cercle vicieux†d from which they cannot break out. The only ones to have suffered any significant losses so far are the Peelites.†73 Meanwhile, in an apologia for Graham, The Morning Chronicle declares that only one alternative remains, that Whigs are as incompetent as Tories, and that the only capable people, apart from Graham and his supporters, are Cobden, Bright and Co. And these should govern together. Curiously enough, the following day — as you may perhaps have seen, — The Times carried an article which likewise contained an apologia for Graham.†e

Page Break me39.130
Page me39.130

The great Techow is emigrating to Australia next week, together with Madame Schmidt-Stirner. But — and this will wound you more deeply — even Damm is no less eager to turn his hand to AUSTRALIAN GOLD-DIGGING. Another few months of peace, and all our 'world underminers'†a will be busily mining for dirt in the dirt of Australia. Only Willich, firmly chained to the coffre-fort,†b remains faithful to his motto: to live but BY NO MEANS work.

Page me39.130

Bangya is now on very close terms with the Orleanist intriguer, 'de Rémusat'. Some Hungarian quelconque†c warned him against the man who is said to have 'betrayed' the Germans during the complot allemand-français.†143 Rémusat has agents right in the Paris Préfecture. So, sans mot dire á M. Bangya†d he writes asking for a report on this gentleman. The reply, which was communicated to me, stated that Bangya was in no way suspect, that he had got out in time, otherwise he too would have been arrested. The traitor was 'un certain Cherval, nommé Frank, mais dont le véritable nom est Crämer.'†e

Page me39.130

From the outset this Cherval is said to have been hand in glove with the police. What is more, Rémusat is receiving original letters written by Cherval to the Prussian Embassy, stating that, in accordance with promises made to him in the Mazas,†160 and now that he had professed the 'principe' of ordre, it was 'leur devoir'†f to provide him with the necessary 'moyens'.†g The Prussian Embassy, however, declared that since he was being paid as a spy by the French, and double emploi†h was out of the question, he could have no claims on the Prussians. He was therefore sent to London to observe the German refugees and, in addition, to 'keep an eye on Claremont'.†161 In the latter capacity he called on Rémusat and offered him his services as an agent. Rémusat, on instructions from Paris, pretended to agree and assigned to him a go-between in the person of a valet at Claremont; this man was now entrusted with the task of misinforming the Paris police through Cherval.

Page me39.130

So well organised is the Orleanist agitation that the fellows possess what amounts to a regular clandestine postal service by which one can send letters, parcels, and pamphlets to France as safely as innocuous matter by ordinary mail.

Page me39.130

My main concern in all this was to procure an original letter of Cherval's relating to his connections with the Prussian Embassy.

Page Break me39.131
Such a piéce could topple the whole fabric of the bill of indictment.†16
Page me39.131

I have arranged with Bangya that, as soon as another copy has been made, you will receive Szemere's pamphlet in manuscript.†a It is a document that is indispensable to your work†b since it contains letters from Görgey, Kossuth, etc., which have not been published anywhere.
Page me39.131
My wife is very poorly, she has a cough and is losing weight. However, the doctor says it is nothing dangerous and has, in addition to medicine, prescribed plenty of porter.
Page me39.131
If you can manage to send me another article†c by Friday, I will try to discount with Johnson the £5 that will then become due from Dana.
Page me39.131
Apropos. The Domenichi 'Orlando Innamorato' riformato is an adaptation. The original is very rare and only to be had in large libraries, as here. Even the Domenichi edition is rare. More readily available is the Orlando, rifatto†d by Berni.†162

Your
K.M.

Page me39.131
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III. Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

67
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.131
Manchester, 15 July 1852

Dear Marx,
As regards Weydemeyer, you concluded rightly. There hasn't been a line from him. Since we wrote and told him exactly how to send the stuff here, he seems to feel it his bounden duty to withhold any further news from us. By the way, things cannot be going very well for him and, when all's said and done, he's got to earn his daily bread.

Page Break me39.132
Page me39.132
Did you read the article 2-3 days ago in The Morning Herald on the various leading men in the Opposition? It could only have been written by Disraeli himself. The 'AND NOW STAND FORTH, THOU MAN OF “UNADORNED ELOQUENCE”, RICHARD COBDEN' is splendid. In it Master John Bright was rightly recognised as the only dangerous fellow, although the gentlemen are not free from illusions in regard to Graham. Precisely now this unscrupulous old ambitieux†a constitutes a very real danger to the Tories.

Page me39.132

Bon voyage to the patriotic gold diggers! Thus the term 'underminer' at last acquires a true meaning and content.†b
Page me39.132

The new connection with Mr Rémusat is excellent. A letter from Cherval to the Prussian Embassy would be a capital document in this trial. Don't fail to get hold of one. What a long face our old friend, le jeune,†c the self-important Saedt will pull,†163 if we thus reduce to chaff the fifty sheets of his bill of indictment which he has already announced to the world through the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung!†d Has Rémusat already got these letters? By the way, it would appear from the news in the papers, not only that Mr Manteuffel proposes to turn the Cologne trial into a magnificent political drama — with, of course, some sort of coup in the wings — but also, on the other hand, that there is absolutely no evidence, and that the weakness of the indictment has to be veiled in a cloud of rumour on the part of the police and lies on the part of their spies. Have you heard nothing more from Bangya? I return herewith the gallant fellow's letter, hitherto forgotten.
Page me39.132

But if you get hold of Cherval's letter, is there any way of attesting it, so that its authenticity is established? Otherwise a presiding judge of this ilk would be capable of prohibiting so much as a reading of the document.
Page me39.132

Since, as I hear, the trial is to take place on the 28th, it is important for us just now to have several reliable links with Cologne. If only we knew to what extent one can count on Bermbach's doing anything! Letters could be safely sent to him via Bradford. If we knew that Weerth was in Hamburg, the thing would be in order. I shall write to Strohn about it this very day. At the same time we might even make use of Naut, if needs be. For, contrary to all my expectations, the latter — who has left Emmanuel's and is now an agent for a small Jewish firm in Bradford — obtained some military stuff for me from a secondhand bookseller in Cologne with the utmost promptitude; the mystery will be cleared up when I tell you that he wants to become an agent for Ermen & Engels and has further asked me to secure him the agency for a local twist house. I have promised him all this and shall recommend him to my old man. We can, therefore, rely on his being punctilious for as long as these negotiations last.

Page Break me39.133
Page me39.133

The military material obtained for me by Naut — clearly the library of a retired artillery officer — is coming in very handy, the more so since it is mainly concerned with the more elementary aspects of military science, the actual day-to-day routine, etc. That was just what was wanting. In addition, some splendid stuff on fortifications, etc., etc. I shall soon have got to the stage when I can venture to advance, even in public, an INDEPENDENT military opinion.
Page me39.133

The Szemere piece†a will be extremely welcome; but I cannot think of working it up as yet.
Page me39.133
Herewith the article for Dana.†b I shall now make haste to conclude the series; but you do something on England as well. If we can extract £3 a week out of the fellow, I'll be damned if we can't manage to send your wife into the country for a spell before the summer's over — that would do her more good than any amount of porter. At all events, I'm glad to hear that her indisposition is not serious.
Page me39.133
Just give me another year's military study, and the democratic lieutenants will get the surprise of their lives.
Page me39.133
Regards to your wife and children and Dronke and Lupus from

Your
F.E.

Page me39.133
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.134

68
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.134
London, 20 July†a 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho
Dear Engels,
Dronke will be bringing you the manuscript on Görgey,†b admittedly a wretched, muddled affair; likewise the Neveu de Rameau and Jacques le fataliste†c in the original.
Page me39.134
Yesterday received a letter from Bermbach in Cologne, the gist of which is as follows:

'Latterly they have been visiting all sorts of people in various places in an attempt to find correspondence from you which, they are convinced, was to be conveyed through the agency of these persons to democrats in the Rhineland. Your friends in Cologne are at last to be brought before the Court of Assizes. The bill of indictment, a most compendious work, has been drawn up, the date for the public hearing has been fixed for the 28th of this month, and the usual preliminaries are under way. They will be tried according to the Code pénal, since their offence antedates the new Prussian Statute Book.†164 As I understand the case they are, legally speaking, in an exceptionally good position but, as you will know, before a jury the moral standpoint is all important, and in this respect there can be no denying the danger for some of the accused. For the principal defendants, Röser, Bürgers, Nothjung and Reiff, have given away far too much: they have admitted a connection with specific tendencies over a definite period; have talked of the enrolment of new members attended by certain formalities and pledges, and other such things, which in themselves do not constitute a crime, but may, depending on circumstances, have an adverse effect on the jurymen, most of whom have been chosen from the peasantry — particularly when there is such evident lack of respect for God and landed property. Grave difficulties will also arise in connection with the defence; the advocates know nothing about such matters, most are hostile on principle and dread the thought of the ten-day sitting fixed for the case. Freiligrath will be beheaded in contumaciam.†d

Page me39.134
'I have just read the bill of indictment which contains no less than 65-70 pages. If they're convicted, these people have only their own statements to blame. I doubt [there] can be any more consummate jackasses than these German working men: Reiff made some statements that were regular denunciations, and various others behaved no less ineptly. One sees what a dangerous business it is to establish connections with working men, when those connections are supposed to be kept secret. Small wonder that the fellows were so much harassed; the longer they were held in solitary confinement, the more satisfactory statements they made. That aside, facts don't come into it and, if the accused had not for the most part themselves talked so readily, there would be nothing whatever to go on. The bill of indictment contains all kinds of incidental details from which it transpires that, with the help of spies and intercepted letters, a fairly accurate knowledge has been gained of certain persons and relationships.'

Page Break me39.135

Page me39.135
So much for Bermbach.
Page me39.135
Vis-á-vis Schimmelpfennig, Willich has retracted his statement about the B[rüningk] woman. Schimmelpfennig has now put it about that he was seeking to destroy Mrs Brüningk's virtue by magnetising her. The vertueux†a Willich.

Page me39.135
A certain Cœurderoy (d'ailleurs trés bon républicain),†b who has already published a little pamphlet against Mazzini, Ledru, L. Blanc, Cabet, etc.,†c is about to bring out what amounts to a book on the entire French emigration.†d
Page me39.135
Proudhon is publishing a new work.†e Religion, the State, etc., having become impossible, only 'individuals' remain, a discovery he has lifted from Stirner.†f
Page me39.135

That jackass W[eydemeyer]'s impardonable procrastination has put me in such straits that today I can't even afford a STAMP for this letter.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.135
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

69
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†165
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.135
[London, 20 July 1852]

... With a difference of at most 10 votes in favour of either Whigs or Tories, the elections here will produce the same old Parliament. The cercle vicieux†g is complete. The same old constituents produce the same old Parliament. In that Parliament what have hitherto been the ruling parties are rotting from within, mutually offsetting and paralysing each other, so that they are compelled to appeal yet again to their constituents and so on, ad infinitum, until the circle is broken from without by the pressure of the masses, and that may soon be the case. At no previous election has the conflict between the real majority and the official majority of voters created by the electoral privileges been so glaringly in evidence. You should know that at every English election voting is done 1. by a SHOW OF HANDS when the whole population votes, and 2. by a POLL, the decisive one, in which only the enfranchised vote. Those NOMINATED by the SHOW OF HANDS do not include a single Member of Parliament, while those returned by the POLL (i.e. really ELECTED), do not include anyone nominated by the SHOW OF HANDS. Take Halifax, for example, where Wood, the Whig Minister (Finance) was opposing E. Jones. At the SHOW OF HANDS, Wood was hissed. Jones received 14,000 votes and was carried in triumph through the town. At the POLL, Wood was elected while Jones received only 36 votes.

Page Break me39.136
Page me39.136
There is little new to report about émigré affairs. But for a few louts, Willich stands more and more isolated, no one believing in his probity any longer. As I have told you, Reichenbach, though he resigned from the committee long ago, refuses to hand out a penny from the loan until a definitive committee has been formed. In his eyes, Willich and Kinkel are as unacceptable as the handful of blackguards who elected them. Reichenbach est un honnête bourgeois, qui prend sa responsabilité au sérieux.†a

Page me39.136

The French emigration has split into 3 camps: 1. Revolution (Ledru). 2. Delegation (the more progressive). 3. 1,500 opponents of both, the plebs or, as the aristocrats used to call them, the 'populean'. A certain Cœurderoy (d'ailleurs trés bon républicain)†b has published a pamphlet against Mazzini-Ledru and Cabet-Blanc and is shortly to bring out something else. You will receive both when they appear.
Page me39.136

Yesterday a letter from Cologne, from which the following†c:

'Latterly they have been visiting various places in an attempt to find correspondence from you which, they are convinced, was to be conveyed through the agency of these persons to democrats in the Rhineland. Your friends are at last to be brought before the Court of Assizes. The bill of indictment, a most compendious work, has been drawn up, the date for the public hearing has been fixed for the 28th of this month, and the usual preliminaries are under way. As I understand the case they are, legally speaking, in an exceptionally good position but, as you will know, before a jury the moral standpoint is all important, and in this respect there can be no denying the danger for some of the accused. For the principal defendants, Röser, Bürgers, Nothjung and Reiff, have given away far too much: they have admitted a connection with specific tendencies over a definite period; have talked of the enrolment of new members attended by certain formalities and pledges, and other such things, which in themselves, however, do not constitute a crime, but may, depending on circumstances, have an adverse effect on the jurymen, most of whom belong to the peasantry, particularly when there is such evident lack of respect for God and landed property. Grave difficulties will also arise in connection with the defence; the advocates know nothing about such matters, most are hostile on principle and dread the thought of the ten-day sitting fixed for the case. It should not be forgotten that, on the occasion of the Assizes, proceedings will be taken in contumaciam†a against F. Freiligrath, at present in London. So Freiligrath will shortly be able to parade round London as a German poet who has been beheaded in effigy. —

Page Break me39.137
Page me39.137
'P.S. I have just read the bill of indictment which contains no less than 65-70 pages. If they're convicted, these people have only their own statements to blame. I doubt there can be any more consummate jackasses than these working men: Reiff made statements that were almost regular denunciations, and various others behaved no less ineptly. Small wonder that the fellows were so much harassed; the longer they have been held in solitary confinement, the more satisfactory statements they made. That aside, facts don't come into it.'

Page me39.137

Voilá our Straubingers,†61 it's tough that world history should have to be made with people such as these...

Page me39.137
First published in part in Russian in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1962 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 6 August 1852

Published in English in full for the first time

70
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.137
Manchester, 22 July 1852

Dear Marx,

Enclosed the article for Dana.†b The information sent by Bermbach is not pleasant; if only those who have not chattered manage to get off! The trial, by the way, is directed autant†c against us as against the Cologne people; we too shall have some rough treatment, especially since le jeune†a Saedt now believes that he will be able to avenge himself with impunity.†163

Page Break me39.138
Page me39.138

Could you perhaps get hold of Cœurderoy's things for me? I.e. if they're worth the trouble, and contain anything more than mere rhetoric.
Page me39.138

Our Worcell, as I learn from Smitt,†b really was a count and a protagonist of the Volhynian insurrection; he distinguished himself by being cut off and leading a kind of robber band in the woods for some 3-4 weeks, until taken off to Poland by Rózzycki; our Sznayde commanded some cavalry — from what I know so far — without distinction. A work by Mieroslawski on the Polish campaign, which came out in Berlin in 1847,†c is very highly spoken of by Smitt.†d This Mieroslawski is certainly the most eminent among Poles and is likely to make a name for himself.
Page me39.138

Mind you don't forget the English article!†e
Page me39.138

I am expecting Drunkel†f this evening, together with a bag of books. I am particularly in need of the N. Rh. Z. just now and hope he is bringing it.
Page me39.138

Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.138
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

71
MARX TO GOTTFRIED KINKEL†166
IN LONDON
Page me39.138
[Rough copy]
[London,] 22 July 1852
5 Sutton Street, Soho
Office of The People's Paper

To Dr J.G. Kinkel

You are alleged, or so I am informed, to have ventured the following statement before Anneke or others at Cincinnati:
Page me39.138

'Marx and Engels...'

Page Break me39.139
Page me39.139

I await your answer by return of post.
Page me39.139

Silence will be regarded as an admission.

Dr K.M.

Page me39.139
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

72
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†167
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.139
[London, 30 July 1852a]

... Huzel's letter†168 was greeted with Homeric laughter. It gave rise to the following intermezzos:

Page me39.139
5 Sutton Str., Soho
Office of The People's Paper

'To Dr Johann Gottfried Kinkel†169

'You are alleged, or so I am informed, to have ventured the following statement before Anneke or other Germans at Cincinnati: ”Marx and Engels etc.” (there follows the treasonable passage). I await your answer by return of post. Silence will be regarded as an admission.

Dr Karl Marx'†a

Page me39.139

This note was kept deliberately vague: 'alleged ... Anneke or other Germans', etc. in order to leave Mr Kinkel plenty of latitude for ambiguities. The following reply arrived by return:

1 Henstridge Villas, St. John's Wood,
24th July 1852

To Dr Karl Marx
Since the article about me was published under your auspices†170 during my imprisonment, I have wanted to have nothing more to do with you. If you believe that you can, through the testimony of Anneke or other honourable men, rather than through anonymous insinuations, provide proof that I untruthfully said or published anything detrimental to your own or Mr Engels' honour, I must point out to you, as I would to anyone with whom I have neither personal nor political contacts, the usual way which, under the law, is open to everyone who feels himself insulted or libelled. Except in this way, I shall have no further dealings with you.

Page Break me39.140

Gottfried Kinkel

Page me39.140

I have not succeeded in making the final stroke of the pen†a as in the original. N'est-ce pas†b very cunning? I am to have recourse to an English court on account of insults offered at Cincinnati. And how coolly everything is rejected that might smack of a duel and the like.

Page me39.140

Since I could only assume that the worthy Gottfried Kinkel, who drops the Johann when in public, would refuse to accept further letters bearing a Soho postmark, I hit upon the following ruse. I asked Ernest Jones to write the address and Lupus to post the letter itself in Windsor, where he had business. Inside the envelope, Gottfried found a second little billet-doux, its margin adorned with a posy of forget-me-nots and roses printed in colour and with the following content:

Page me39.140
24th July 1852
5 Sutton Str., Soho
Office of The People's Paper

'To Dr Johann etc. Kinkel

'In juxtaposition with a written statement, now before me, by your guarantor Huzel, whom at Cincinnati you cravenly required to give his word of honour to keep silent about your mendacious gossip there, a promise which, however, was given only conditionally by Huzel;
Page me39.140

'with a letter, likewise before me, written at some time by Dr Gottfried Kinkel in his own hand to his ex-guarantor Cluss,†171 in which the same Kinkel boasts of his intention to enter into political relations with me:
Page me39.140

'your letter — and this is precisely why it was provoked — provides a new and striking proof that the said Kinkel is a cleric whose baseness is only equalled by his cowardice.

Dr Karl Marx'†172

Page Break me39.141
Page me39.141

This last was self-complacently pocketed by Mr 'Johann etc.' and is now circulating among the ranks of the émigrés. But the cream of the jest will only become plain to Kinkel later on, with the appearance of the first instalment of The Great Men of the Exile. Namely, that, shortly before this fearsome attack on Gottfried, I diverted myself by doing him direct and personal injury, while at the same time justifying myself in the eyes of the émigré louts. To that end I needed something 'in black and white' from Johann etc.
Page me39.141

Now for greater matters. — Mazzini, no less, has for the past few days been dashing round like mad in an attempt to bring about an agreement between all those who officially make up the bourgeois emigration here. Also betook himself to Johann etc. And with the following result: Mazzini, Kossuth, Ledru-Rollin and Kinkel constitute Europe's Executive. Each member of this authority has the right to co-opt 2 subjects of his nationality. However, the decision as to these co-options rests with the majority among the four originals, i.e. Mazzini. Accordingly, co-opted among the Germans are A. Ruge and A. Goegg. Who among the other nationalities, I don't yet know. Kinkel, for his part, is said to have laid down 2 conditions: 1. a demand of 20,000 dollars for his loan. This I hold to be a fabrication. 2. The continued and independent existence of the Kinkel-Willich, etc. finance committee. This is no more than formal deference to Willich, for in fact it has already been decided to transfer the entire loan fund to A. Goegg. Finally, Kinkel & Co. will most humbly recognise the Revolutionary League in America.†173 This is the latest turn of events. How far they have progressed towards concluding this important treaty or whether they are still lingering over the preliminaries I do not know. In any case the thing must be noised abroad in America, with particular emphasis on the following. At the last guarantors' meeting in London, in May 1852, when the Kinkel-Willich committee was definitively elected, Kinkel most solemnly declared on his word of honour that if A. Ruge were elected to the committee, he himself would walk out, for he would never serve on the same committee as a man who had publicly described him as an agent of the Prince of Prussia.†a

Page me39.141

Secondly: What will Weitling & Co. say, if the dollars raised in America by Kinkel are expended by the Finance Minister, A. Goegg? For this is what is intended, in order to subsidies 'K. Heinzen's' Janus and to put into circulation the immortal articles of Ruge, Heinzen, etc.

Page Break me39.142

Page me39.142

As for Mazzini, this wily enthusiast is steadily descending to the level of an Italian 'Gustav Struve' or some such. For the past 4 years he has been shouting 'Action, action'. Now it so happens that the Austrian police in Italy are running in 600 Mazzinists whose correspondence is conducted on pocket handkerchiefs in invisible ink. But these people have no wish to be detained and their family connections are extensive. So Mr Mazzini has received from Italy a letter announcing their intention to take 'action' in real earnest and hit out. All at once, and post festum,†a 'sober reason' stirs in the bosom of the bombastic man of action, and he adjures them for God's sake to lie low, since on their own they can do nothing, the country is swarming with foreign soldiers, and similar loci communes†b none of which are either more or less true now than they were in 1849. Action, action! Italia fará da sé!†c

Page me39.142

A few days ago Lupus met an Italian member of Mazzini's committee and taxed him with most of these absurdities. What of it? retorts the Roman, more than 600 people are killed in a battle. However, since the Italians fear that in this way they will BY AND BY be caught, shot or locked up, and since this or that victim of his exhortations is sending relatives to London, our man of action is afraid that some misunderstanding may lead to his being stabbed by a deluded and frenzied fellow-countryman; so every night he changes his lodgings on the pretext of having to hide from the Austrians. Yet it is not Austrians but 'deluded' Italians from whom he abjectly slinks into hiding. Surely this antipope deserves the gallows? To harass, tease, wear down a nation in this way! The inevitable result, particularly in the case of a people like the Italians, is a state of appalling, passive dejection, of complete and utter collapse.

Page me39.142

Our people were to have appeared before the JURY in Cologne yesterday, but suddenly came the announcement of a further adjournment because one of the witnesses for the prosecution, Schulz, a police official in Berlin, had fallen ill. So if Mr Schulz were to die, the defendants might well remain under preliminary investigation until doomsday.

In the meantime Becker is going blind and Daniels is getting consumption. C'est par trop infâme.†d In all this, the bourgeois press is playing a most abominable role.

Page me39.142

I saw the notice of adjournment in the Kölnische Zeitung.†e A few days earlier I had received the following report from Cologne.†f

Page Break me39.143

'When Becker was arrested the following letters from you were seized; those of 8.2.51, 21.2.51 and 9.4.51. From the latter the ensuing passages have been picked out by the prosecution as exceptionally incriminating: "Herewith the jolly scribble from the School of Kinkel. 15 shillings have accumulated here f.t.l.†a 10 shillings are still outstanding, having been promised but not yet collected. I shall proceed in the manner you indicate. So debit me with £1. For owing to the reduced circumstances of the member who should pay it, five shillings cannot be collected." The prosecution makes out that the letters f.t.l. stand for "For the League", while Becker claims that they are an abbreviation indicating an arrangement made between him and yourself concerning the acquisition of cheaper literature for you in London. That passage constitutes one of the chief items in the indictment, since there is otherwise hardly any evidence, unless fabricated, against B. Again, the indictment, starting in the year 1831, traces the rise of the Communist League from an association of Germans in Paris which underwent various modifications under the names "League of Germans",†174 "League of the Just",†175 but continued uninterruptedly right up to the present society now appearing in the dock. This information apparently derives from data provided by the Hanoverian government. The prosecution attaches no importance whatever to the split in London in 1850†15; in their opinion this was simply a personal squabble, the whole lot of them were, after all, pursuing the same criminal aims and shared the same views and would, moreover, act in concert at the hour of decision. Thus, besides the two addresses previously published in the press, a 3rd has been incorporated in the indictment; this address is said to be dated June or July 1850†176 and to have been intercepted in Leipzig.

Page me39.143

'The only statements of any note are those of the witnesses Haupt, who gave a fairly detailed and comprehensive story, and Hentze, an ex-lieutenant, who to some extent attacked Becker. On Saturday Erhardt, a cashier with Stein, the banker, was arrested on the same charge. He is said to be slightly compromised by reason of the recommendation he gave to Nothjung and of a few letters discovered on the latter which seemed to indicate some understanding between the two... By the way, so nicely have the jurymen been selected that, if you consider the odds, the State could not be better placed.'

Page me39.143

The most important news politically is the treaty concluded between Prussia, Austria and Russia during the Czar's†b visit to Vienna.†177 It was first announced in The Morning Chronicle the day before yesterday. Yesterday there was a reprint of it in The Times,†c so you will be able to read it for yourself. Here the election results are such that the Tories, who will drop the Corn Law question, possess a large counter-revolutionary majority on all other issues and this Cabinet will, I believe, give way before nothing short of a more or less revolutionary manifestation. The bourgeois now realise what a blunder they made in failing to draw the political conclusions from their anti-Corn Law victory in 1846. Ils y penseront.†d My list of printing errors for the Brumaire will soon moulder away; had I realised this would happen, I should have done better to send you for postage the money thus expended. But as Spinoza tells us, it is a comfort to consider all things sub specie aeterni.†a

Page Break me39.144

Page me39.144
First published in part in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1962 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 16 August 1852

Published in English for the first time

73
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†178
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.144
[London,] beginning of August 1852

... Now the secret is out, namely the reason why the Cologne people have yet again failed to appear. The principal witness, Haupt, the traitor from Hamburg, has taken himself off to Brazil. The 2nd most important witness, a journeyman tailor, has likewise shown a clean pair of heels. This leaves the government without even the semblance of a proof. The scoundrels are taking their revenge by prolonging the period of preventive detention....

Page me39.144
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 15 October 1852

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.145

74
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.145
[London,] 2 August 1852

Dear Engels,

Herewith the stuff for Dana.†179 We must assail the fellow from all sides, the more so since that old farceur, Ruge, has actually deposited one of his stylistic excretions in a recent number.†a

Page me39.145

The Cologne affair has been adjourned by the court for 3 months at the request of the public prosecutor.†b In other words, the principal witnesses have slipped through his fingers, Haupt to Brazil and a journeyman tailor to some lieu inconnu.†c

Page me39.145

Do you think that Dana might take offence because of the similarity in the names of the English and American Whigs?†180

Page me39.145

A detailed dispatch, probably, tomorrow.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.145

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

75

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.145

[London,] 5 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Don't forget to let me have the rest of the thing†d by Tuesday. The section on the Tories is too short by itself. This time there is a twofold reason why the portions sent to Dana should not be too niggardly. 1. In Cincinnati that blackguard Heinzen is siding with the Whigs against the Democrats, because he rightly believes this ELECTIONEERING TIME is the best moment at which to sell himself. Greeley reported in the Tribune the speech Heinzen made there, and went on to praise the man.†a So storm clouds are threatening me from that quarter. 2. Having for weeks, and particularly for the past fortnight, been forced to spend 6 hours a day chasing after 6d for grub, on top of which I am again being pestered by my LANDLADY, I had no other alternative but to write to Johnson yesterday inquiring whether he would discount a bill on the Tribune for me. Should the man agree to do what I ask, which is still in dubio,†b I shall have to inform Dana, and if we send him short articles, he will think he is being fleeced and will cast me out of the temple, since he now has such a plentiful SUPPLY from Heinzen, Ruge and B. Bauer. What is even more unfortunate, I see from today's Times that the Daily Tribune is protectionist.†c So it's all VERY OMINOUS. We must send the fellow something as quickly as possible before he countermands. I can't yet send off my dispatch†d since I have a frightful headache — not, however, from the effects of PALE ALE.

Page Break me39.146

Page me39.146

It's regrettable that Dronke will not be here on Saturday.†e Goegg has called a general meeting of refugees for that day and the little man's presence would have been very desirable. For Pieper isn't the right person. At all events, Dronke must see to it that he is here when the rabble arrives from Berlin, for I cannot cope with these blackguards all by myself.
Page me39.146

I have all manner of stuff from Cluss, too, to send you, which you will receive as soon as you send me a few STAMPS; otherwise the trash will cost you double and pour le moment†f I haven't a penny to send.
Page me39.146

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.146
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.147

76
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.147
[Manchester,] Friday, 6 August 1852

Dear Marx,

You will have got back the first half of the article†a in English and German yesterday afternoon. The second†b you shall have on Tuesday morning. As for being thrown out of the Tribune, you need have no worries.†c We are too firmly ensconced there. Furthermore, to the Yankees, this European politicising is mere dilettantism in which he who writes best and with the greatest esprit comes out on top. Heinzen can do us no harm; if he's bought by the Whigs, it means that he will obey them, not that he will give the orders. Ruge, Bauer, etc., etc., in addition to ourselves ensure that the Tribune has an 'all-round' character. As for protectionism, it does no harm. American Whigs are all industrial protectionists, but this by no means implies that they belong to the landed aristocracy, Derby variety. Nor are they so stupid not to know just as well as does List that FREE TRADE suits English industry better than anything else. By the way, I could at a pinch insert a word here and there to that effect with the FREETRADERS, which you could cross out if not to your liking. But there's really no need for it.

Page me39.147

I thought you had long since settled the discounting affair with Johnson and very much hope something will come of it. As for me, I get deeper in the mire financially every day. While I much enjoy having Papa Dronke here, it is impossible to work of an evening, and so a fair amount of money is being frittered away; on top of that there are current DISBURSEMENTS besides £20 owing to the business, which make things very tight. Dronke intends to return next week (at the beginning), after which I shall do a spell of hard work, having sufficient material here, and then, by the end of September, I shall again have some money at my disposal — a few pounds in September†d for sure. Most unfortunately, in an evil hour Mr Pindar also asked me for a loan. He is still keeping afloat on three lessons a week and seems to have fallen touchingly in love — pauvre garçon, il faut l'avoir vu sous l'empire de l'émotion plus ou moins vierge.†a

Page Break me39.148
Page me39.148

Moreover, towards the end of June I was unable, owing to all sorts of circumstances, to charge up to my old man a number of extras which have now been placed to my account. Meanwhile, we are busy with the balance sheet; actually it is no concern of mine, but it will at least give me some indication of how far I can go. If it turns out well — which I shall know in some 4-6 weeks' time, I might be able to chance something, in which case you will at once receive some money. Only this month, because of the £20 or £25 I owe the business, I am absolutely stuck.
Page me39.148

I don't know how I can arrange to do an article on GERMANY for Dana behind Dronke's back — he knows nothing about the matter.†181 At the office I have my hands completely full until 7 o'clock in the evening, so I can't do it there. Cependant je verrai.†b

Page me39.148

Warmest regards to your wife and children from

Your
F.E.

Page me39.148

Enclosed STAMPS to the value of 9/- and a few pence.
Page me39.148

Dronke asks me to tell you that he will probably be coming at the beginning of next week.

Page me39.148
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

77
MARX TO ENGELS†182
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.148
[London,] 6 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
D'abord,†c then, the incident with Johann Gottfried Kinkel.†d
Page me39.148
You will see from one of the enclosed letters from Cluss that Mr Kinkel stated in a BOURGEOIS CIRCLE in Cincinnati: 'Marx and Engels

Page Break me39.149
are no revolutionaries, they're a couple of blackguards who have been thrown out of public houses by the workers in London'.†183 Knowing my Gottfried, I began by sending him the following note in which I pretended to be not quite sure of the facts, thereby giving him fresh occasion for ambiguities:

Page me39.149
'5 Sutton Street, Soho, Office of The People's Paper,
'22 July 1852
'To Dr Johann Gottfried Kinkel
'You are alleged, or so I am informed, to have ventured the following statement before Anneke or other Germans at Cincinnati (the passage follows). I await your explanation by return of post. Silence will be regarded as an admission.

Dr K. Marx'

Page me39.149
Kinkel sent the following note by return:

'To Dr Karl Marx

Since the article about me was published under your auspices during my imprisonment, I have wanted to have nothing more to do with you. If you believe that you can, through the testimony of Anneke or other honourable men, rather than through anonymous insinuations, provide proof that I untruthfully said or published anything detrimental to your own or Mr Engels' honour, I must point out to you, as I would to anyone with whom I have neither personal nor political contacts, the usual way which, under the law, is open to everyone who feels himself insulted or libelled. Except in this way, I shall have no further dealings with you.

Gottfried Kinkel

Page me39.149

Since it was evident from this scrawl that Mr Gottfried would neither accept letters bearing a SOHO POSTMARK nor admit messengers, I got Lupus to post a note to him from Windsor on paper of the kind used for a billet-doux, bearing a posy of roses and forget-me-nots printed in colour, and having the following content:

Page me39.149

'To Dr Johann etc. Kinkel

'In juxtaposition with a written statement, now before me, by your guarantor Huzel whom you cravenly required at Cincinnati to give his word of honour to keep silent about your mendacious gossip there, a promise which, however, was given only conditionally by Huzel;

Page me39.149

'with a letter, likewise before me, written some time earlier by Dr Gottfried Kinkel in his own hand to his ex-guarantor Cluss, in which the same Kinkel boasts of his intention to enter into political relations with me:

Page Break me39.150

Page me39.150

'your letter — and this is precisely why it was provoked — provides a new and striking proof that the said Kinkel is a cleric whose baseness is only equalled by his cowardice.

Dr Karl Marx'

Page me39.150

This last was swallowed in silence by Mr Johann etc. who, since then, has carefully avoided letting us hear anything more from him.

Page me39.150

Kossuth's secret circular, which Cluss speaks of in his last letter, you will find in English in tomorrow's issue of Jones' PAPER.†184 Hence I am not enclosing it.

Page me39.150

The meeting of Kinkel's guarantors took place on Tuesday 3 August. The chief item was the following: Reichenbach is guarding the exchequer like a Cerberus. The £200 so far spent by Kinkel and Willich was received from Gerstenberg, etc., against the revolutionary deposits. Statutorily, they may dispose of these only after at least 3 people have been nominated by the guarantors. And Reichenbach insists on observance of this formality. To remedy the inconvenience, Kinkel and Willich had decided to have Techow as the third nominee. True, Techow is sailing for Australia in 3 weeks' time. But, under the statutes of the loan, once the committee had its full complement of 3 members, it could on its own authority propose two more. Hence, the sole purpose of Techow's nomination was 1. to make Reichenbach hand over the exchequer, 2. to enable them later on to bring in 2 men of straw in Techow's place. However, the meeting immediately decided against Techow on the grounds that he was only being used as a cover and was leaving for Australia. Kinkel and Willich were told that their conduct of affairs was unsatisfactory, that they inspired no confidence and that they must submit a detailed account concerning the expenditure of the £200 before it could be ratified. This last and other decisions are to be SETTLED today, Friday the 6th, at a further guarantors' meeting.

Page me39.150

At the sitting on the 3rd, Reichenbach proposed that the £1,000 be deposited in the Bank of England and left untouched until the outbreak of the revolution. Löwe (in alliance with Ruge) proposed that the money be handed over to the Revolutionary League in America.†173

Page me39.150

And although Kinkel himself stated, in the enclosed note to Huzel, that Ruge falsely suspected him of being an agent of the

Page Break me39.151

Prince of Prussia,†185 and although he, upon the strength of that, pledged his word at the guarantors' meeting last May that he would never sit on the same committee as Ruge, our Gottfried now declares himself ready, for the sake of the cause, to act in concert with Goegg, Ruge, etc. and to administer the money in concert with them, in order to get a hand in the administration at all. Willich, however, now convinced that the £1,000 will not, like the 200 already spent, produce any further windfalls for him is said to have decided to emigrate to America, whither he has already been preceded by the trusty Gebert and Dietz.

Page me39.151

Last week Papa Goegg again convened his Agitation Club.†26 An exact count revealed that it consisted of exactly 8 people, the place of Sigel and Fickler, who had disappeared, being taken by the newly-joined Oswald and Dralle. In addition it was found that, though Goegg had in the meantime acquired great fame as Kossuth's servant and has rendered 'sterling service' as an agitator for the Revolutionary League, he had otherwise not brought back even enough cash to cover the debts 'incurred to defray travelling expenses'. In these doubtful circumstances the agitators†a felt compelled to attempt an alliance with Kinkel, in order that they might with decorum get at the £1,000. Kinkel likewise sees therein the last chance of avoiding an irreversible divorce from the £1,000. With the secret purpose of furthering this design, Goegg has convened a general meeting of refugees for tomorrow, the 7th, at Schärttner's. Ostensibly to report on his grands œuvres.†b In fact, to be swept by general acclaim into an alliance with Kinkel and the £1,000. This may now not be accomplished.

Page me39.151

But a third complication arises now, whose immediate effect is to debar both sides, Kinkel and Goegg, from the 'exchequer'. To be precise, on the one hand, our Eduard Meyen is agitating for the money to be used to launch a big LONDON WEEKLY PAPER. And, on the other, the 'critical' Edgar Bauer, who had barely heard of the predicament in which the £1,000 found itself, before he too crept forth and, taking up position behind Schily, Imandt, Schimmelpfennig, etc., also solicited a newspaper for himself. Imandt, etc., see this as the only means of rescuing the money from Kinkel and Goegg. Edgar Bauer adopts towards these people the appearance of a 'harmless humorist'.

Page me39.151

I shall obtain an exact account of today's sitting since Imandt is now an L.M.†c To revert to the one of the 3rd, I would mention the following: After questions of high policy had been dealt with, the chivalrous Schimmelpfennig arose; certain persons had, he said, put it about that the Brüningk woman was a spy and he now declared them to be vile calumniators. Kinkel denied that he for his part had ever made any such assertion. (He had in fact made it to the whoreson Kamm of Bonn when the latter passed this way.) Willich, on whom all eyes were turned, sat tight and said nothing. Techow declared that it was even more vile when such suspicions were bandied about by persons who, for a whole year, had enjoyed the Brüningk woman's hospitality. It was their duty rather to refute such a talk whenever they got wind of it.

Page Break me39.152

Page me39.152

All eyes were turned on Willich. Willich did not stir, but throughout the whole of this sitting, which saw the fading of so many 'golden' dreams, is said to have been the very personification of 'unhappy consciousness'.

Page me39.152

Well, enough of that crap for today.

Page me39.152

I have just received the enclosed letter from Freiligrath, from which it appears that cur Johnson remains adamant.†a Hence I am utterly at a loss what to do and my position is becoming abominable.

Page me39.152

So honest Goegg has sent Freiligrath an invitation! He's one they can still never do without, but in the end they will have to.

Page me39.152

My regards to the mandrake.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me39.152

It seems unlikely that your letter will arrive today, it being already 2 in the afternoon.

Page me39.152

Enclosed letters from Cluss:
1. 20 June.
2. 4 July.
3. 8 July, with Kinkel's circular.
4. Kinkel's circular of 2 August.
5. Cincinnati, 6 February,†c letter from Kinkel to Huzel.
6. Letter from Hillgärtner to Huzel.
7. Letter from Cluss of 22 July.

Page me39.152
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.153

78
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.153
[Manchester,] Monday evening [9 August 1852]

Dear Marx,

I've done a stupid thing. In its MAIL TABLE the Daily News does not mention any American STEAMER for Wednesday — so I succumbed to the Sunday indolence so natural to a commerçant.†a And today I see from a commercial circular that a STEAMER is in fact leaving the day after tomorrow. I have begun to work,†b but nothing is ready. I have Pindar coming to see me this evening and even if I sent him away, I doubt whether I should get anything done in the few hours before the last post. Donc†c you and I have been duped. But I shall never again make the mistake of believing the commercial intelligence provided by the organ of the bourgeoisie.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.153
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

79
MARX TO ENGELS†182
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.153
London, 10 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho
Dear Engels,
First, I enclose the original text of Kossuth's SECRET CIRCULAR.†184
Page me39.153
Next, the report 1. on the guarantors' sitting of 6 August, 2. on Goegg's meeting of 7 August.

Page Break me39.154
Page me39.154
As to 1. Present: Kinkel, Willich, Reichenbach, Löwe of Calbe, Meyen, Schurz (not Techow this time), Schimmelpfennig, Imandt; I know of no others. Not forgetting Schärttner.
Page me39.154
Kinkel had had the indispensable third member (Techow) of the alliance†a elected in America and Switzerland. There still remained the participation in the election of the 12-15 London guarantors. Here, as I told you, the election of Techow fell through and then he declared that he could not accept as he was leaving for Australia.†b
Page me39.154
Kinkel proposed to proceed with a new election of the third man. Fell through again.
Page me39.154
Löwe of Calbe: First: 'The German loan has miscarried because the political circumstances (May 1852†186) in view of which it was undertaken are no longer present, and the presupposed amount of 20,000 dollars has not been raised.' Second: 'The monies to be returned to the American committees.'
Page me39.154
The first part of this motion was carried, the second rejected.
Page me39.154
Imandt: 'If the majority of the remaining guarantors share my view, the money to hand should be used to publish a German newspaper in London.' 'Reichenbach will remain TRUSTEE of the money.' 'A committee is to be elected consisting of Reichenbach, Löwe and Schimmelpfennig, and Kinkel and Willich will hand over to it the lists of the guarantors in America and Switzerland; the previous committee has nothing more to do with the matter; the new committee will advise the guarantors abroad of the resolutions taken and will obtain their opinion.'
Page me39.154
Reichenbach supported Imandt's motions, all were carried. Kinkel and Willich protested on the grounds that the disposal of the money did not rest solely with the body of guarantors. Only the donors of the money, or respectively the finance committees set up in America, could exercise the right of disposal.
Page me39.154

Sic transit gloria.†c Willich is more determined than ever to go to America, provided he can raise the fare.
Page me39.154
As to 2. Meeting called by Finance Minister Goegg, back from America without finances.
Page me39.154
Present: In the chair: 'Damm' himself (not yet slipped off to Australia). Goegg. Ronge. Dr Strauss. Sigel, the other one.†d Franck (from Vienna). Oswald. Dralle. (These all 'agitators'.†e) Kinkel. Schurz. Meyen. Willich. Imandt. Schily. Becker. One of Schärttner's waiters. The tipsy Lumpenproletarian Herweg from Neuss. Candidate Hentze from Königsberg. Garthe. A stripling (unknown) from Vienna.

Page Break me39.155
Page me39.155
Goegg opened the sitting, described his activity in America, owing to which birth was given to a revolutionary league,†173 an act as a result of which the American Republic was supposed to be 'tumbled' and hence birth to be given to a German-Baden republic — the victory of the American Democrats over the Whigs to be ensured, etc. The modest young man further asserted (an opinion attested by the newly arrived candidate of philosophy Hentze) that Germans in all provinces stood with their eyes fixed on London so that, at the crucial moment when those present at the meeting fell into each other's arms, they could let out a thunderous hurrah that would resound across the ocean a thousand times o'er. Hence he demanded that the meeting constitute itself a branch of the Revolutionary League and no longer leave their poor compatriots to languish in that attitude of expectancy.
Page me39.155
Imandt: Thanked Goegg for his information on American conditions. Suggested moreover that the meeting should disperse, since only a general and publicly convened meeting of refugees could take a decision.
Page me39.155
Damm ruled him out of order.
Page me39.155
Kinkel: (Already during Goegg's eloquent speech, this sensitive poet-martyr had, by rolling his eyes, signified his irrevocable determination to spread out his arms in reconciliation). He, too, was aware that Germany was looking to them. He was in a position to clasp the conciliatory hand. As a sacrifice to the cause, he would forget the grave injustice he had suffered. He, too, was aware that not only the liberation of Germany, but also the revolutionising of America, lay in their hands. None so great, said he, in an allusion to Ruge's 'agent of the Prince of Prussia',†a as he who mastered himself. However he, for his part, demanded that the Revolutionary League should also now guarantee his loan. Even though he and the 'honourable' Willich might not see eye to eye politically, nevertheless they would, he believed, have achieved great things together.
Page me39.155

Imandt: Respected the Christian humility of Kinkel who had forgotten that Ruge had called him an agent of the Prince of Prussia, who had, for sheer love of the revolution, had repressed the indignation in his burning breast which, 2 months earlier

Page Break me39.156
(May), had prompted, in the presence of the guarantors, the solemn declaration: 'as a good republican, he could only regard as injurious to his honour the suggestion that he should go with Ruge, his wicked detractor, and, rather than reconcile himself with the wicked Ruge, would retire from all political activity'. It was out of Christian humility that Kinkel had drained the bitter cup which Fickler had prepared for him with his horribly insulting letters (in one of those letters Fickler had described him as 'a turkey strutting on a dung-heap'); he had become, as indeed Goegg's friends maintained he had always been, simple of heart if he could bring himself to fall into the arms of his American rivals. The 'union' between Messrs Kinkel and Goegg was a fine thing, for although it really had no other purpose than that the former with the help of the latter should strive to get the upper hand in the administration of the loan funds, and that the latter with the help of the former should seek to worm his way into that administration, yet a peace agreement between two men of such stature might nevertheless ensure that the political parties throughout the world similarly became reconciled, that the constitutionalist held out his hand to the republican and the socialist to the republican, that henceforward the proletarians would no longer be exploited by the bourgeois and, in short, that everyone would embrace every one else and shout hip-hip-hurray. For the fact of Kinkel's having said in America that he regarded the proletarians as cannon fodder (as once in Bonn and Cologne he had adulated Cavaignac) and this, despite his alliance with the 'honourable' Willich, did not affect the issue. There was at most one trifling matter outstanding: like all people who, instead of studying the difference between the various parties and championing their interests, indulged in scatter-brained folly about uniting opposing elements, Kinkel could be reproached with a total lack of principle, etc. He would further draw Kinkel's attention to the fact that he could at most conclude agreements on his behalf, but not on behalf of the body of guarantors. Finally, Imandt moved that the Revolutionary League in America be left to its own devices and that all should go home. Whereupon Imandt went.
Page me39.156

Incidents: Damm constantly interrupted Imandt and wanted to rule him out of order. As a Rhinelander, the tipsy Herweg felt obliged, so long as Imandt was present, to manifest approbation and, while Imandt was speaking of 'great men', he 'lorgnetted' the company with his pipe. During the passage about 'the proletarians', the painter, Franck, rose in indignation and said: 'I can't stand it any more. I grunt.' Imandt replied that this was something he had in common with other animals, whereupon Franck decamped. Kinkel denied the 'cannon fodder'. Imandt told the whole story about Schnauffer and the Wecker, whereat Kinkel fell silent. At the word 'Cavaignac', he again broke in: 'Citizen Imandt, when did the Bonner Zeitung appear?' Imandt: It was all the same to him whether it had been before or after the June insurrection. He had read about the thing himself.

Page Break me39.157
Page me39.157

Conclusion: The sitting went on for 2 more hours. Goegg pleaded that they should join the Revolutionary League, at least temporarily. The afore-mentioned stripling from Vienna declared anyone who delayed in joining by so much as an hour to be a 'traitor to his country'. Nevertheless, after the majority had rejected every, I repeat, every motion, the company went home without having founded a branch of the American-European-Australian Revolutionary League.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.157
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

80
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.157
[Manchester,] 16 August 1852

Dear Marx,
This evening I have been promised the £2 borrowed from me a short while ago; if I get it, I shall send you it at once tomorrow by P.O. order and shall also write at great length.
Page me39.157
Since we've heard nothing further from Weydemeyer and, according to Cluss' letters, the things seem at last to have been sent off,†a it might be advisable for us to inquire from Edwards, Sanford and Co. in Liverpool whether they have received any packages. If you hear nothing more (last night the STEAMER had not yet arrived), I, at any rate, could do that.

Page Break me39.158
Page me39.158
From your report it would seem that the resolutions of 3 [August] have for the present snatched the money from Mr Kinkel's grasp.†a Mr Imandt does pretty well for himself after his own fashion. C'est drôle, quand un Schapper nous échappe, un Imandt est toujours sûr de revenir á nous.†b But he is at any rate a deus minimorum gentium, canis domesticus communismi germanici,†c and as such is useful, since we have now learnt to keep lesser folk of this kind on a short rein.
Page me39.158

The noble Willich's bosom must be much lacerated now that separation from the emigration's coffre-fort†d has sprung the last band holding his noble consciousness together. He must, moreover, have notified his trusties over there long ago of his arrival since the latter, on the strength of an important letter from Willich, have already convened big extraordinary general meetings. Mr Willich will become head of the LOAFERS and ROWDIES there, and as such will have a rare opportunity of distinguishing himself. What is more, he will also find his old enemy Schramm†e there, and that will lead to some pretty rows.
Page me39.158

How delectable that Mr Kossuth has actually already caused companies to be drilled and Napoleon-Sigel is playing the instructor of the recruits. What an unspeakable swindler this Kossuth is; driving him out of America was one of the most splendid coups ever perpetrated by Cluss.†184
Page me39.158

By the way I shall very soon be doing the Hungarian campaign†f and shall write direct to Brockhaus this very week. If he has no faith in my military qualifications, I shall arrange previously to do one or two cogent articles for the Gegenwart so that he can see what there is to them. Dronke's connection with Brockhaus is very good and must be exploited. For Brockhaus is after all one of the more tractable booksellers. Nous allons voir.†g
Page me39.158

I was interrupted while writing the article for Dana†h last Thursday and shall, if possible, make up for it by doing 2 this week. I also expect something more from you on England.†187 Last week there could be little thought of work. While Dronke was here

Page Break me39.159
I had neglected much of what I had previously been doing. Now I am gradually getting back in TRAIN.
Page me39.159

Regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.159
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

81
MARX TO ENGELS†188
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.159
London, 19 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I had 10/- handed to me by Dronke. Yesterday £2 by post. However welcome the money was, I find it most ennuyant†a that you should squeeze yourself dry for me, and this at a moment when you yourself are plus ou moins†b in a fix.

Page me39.159

As regards the Hungarian war, you would probably do well to have a look also at the following:

Page me39.159

The Fortress of Komarom (Comorn) during the War of Independence in Hungary, by Colonel Sigismund Thaly. Translated (from the German) by William Rushton. James Madden, Leadenhead Street.

Page me39.159

As regards works on military matters, since you intend to go thoroughly into the whole LINE, I would cite the following in case you might consider one or another of them worth acquiring:

Page me39.159

Carrion-Nisas: Essai sur l'historie générale de l'art militaire etc. Paris 1824.

Page me39.159

Kausler: Kriegsgeschichte aller Völker. Ulm 1825. Wörterbuch und Atlas der Schlachten. 1825 and 1831. (The only two general military histories. Said to be meagre.)

Page me39.159

Guerard: Encyclopädie der Kriegskunst. 2nd ed. Vienna 1833.

Page Break me39.160

Page me39.160

Handbibliothek für Offiziere über das Ganze der Kriegslehre für Eingeweihte und Laien von einer Gesellschaft Preußischer Offiziere. Berlin 1828.

Page me39.160

J.A.M.-r (Millerbacher): Das Kriegswesen der Römer, nach antiken Denkmalen geordnet von Ottenberger. Prague 1824.

Page me39.160

Löhr: Das Kriegswesen der Griechen und Römer. 2nd ed. Würzburg 1830.

Page me39.160

Blesson: Geschichte des Belagerungskriegs. Berlin 1821.

Page me39.160

Hoyer: Geschichte der Kriegskunst. Göttingen 1797.

Page me39.160

Chambray: Die Veränderungen in der Kriegskunst von 1700-1815. German. Berlin 1830.

Page me39.160

Stenzel: Geschichte der Kriegsverfassung Deutschlands, besonders im Mittelalter. Berlin 1820.

Page me39.160
Barthold: George v. Frundsberg. Hamburg 1833.
Page me39.160
Letters have arrived from Cluss which I shall send you as soon as I have shown them to Lupus and the little League.†189
Page me39.160
As regards Weydemeyer, Cluss writes as follows†a:

'Not long ago, after some goading on my part, Weydemeyer wrote that he would have to put serious pressure on Korff who was supposed to have sent off the 50 Brumaires.†b Weydemeyer has, I believe, small sums owing to him from Korff and will therefore have charged him with the dispatch, and/or payment of the postal costs.
Page me39.160
'The remaining 300 Brumaires ... not yet dispatched ... He claims that 500 copies are still held at the printers as a security and he hasn't yet been able to redeem them, etc. ... Financially, for one thing I cannot under any circumstances intervene just now, and for another I would not wish to do so even if I could. For time and again I have been told that such and such a sum would resolve everything, and time and again such and such a sum has been provided and resolved nothing. When the Revolution began, we were told to have faith and send in advance-payments without delay. I at once sent subscriptions to the tune of 10 dollars, which I, of course, subsequently lost... Later it was said that the periodical was being put on its feet again and I was to find 20 dollars to that end; 18 dollars went off forthwith, 15 dollars from me personally and 3 dollars subscriptions. Instead of being used to carry on the business, this went to pay for the same old stupid bag of tricks, i.e. for the first 2 issues which had been sent out at random. The Brumaire arrived. Weydemeyer in despair. I told him I would instantly contribute 25-30 dollars if that would help, otherwise he was to send me the manuscript. Send me 25 dollars, he says; I do so. After a while it transpires that only 500 copies can be printed with the money available; no good, I tell him, how much more would it cost to print 1,000? 20 dollars, comes the reply, and the next day the money is already on its way.
Page me39.160
'Now the poems†c arrive; they are to be printed in New York; when I insist that the nonsense must cease and the printing begin, I get the poems back, it having unfortunately proved impossible to print them just now in New York. I at once have them printed and bound for some 15 dollars (400 copies†a) and send the stuff off in all haste so that it can be disposed of at the choral festival just then taking place in New York. They were touted round by one solitary vendor†b who is said to have actually disposed of 60 (!) copies. So the printing of the 2nd thousand (I had left the type set up), the money for which Weydemeyer had promised to provide as he had already informed me, was, of course, stopped; and in the same way, the whole business appears to have remained inert and lifeless in his hands ever since.

Page Break me39.161
Page me39.161
'I shall write and tell Weydemeyer that, in so far as I am financially involved in this affair, I want you to use it in Europe for further publications in the interests of the party, or in any other way you yourself think fit, hence that so far as my share in all this is concerned, to send no money to America. In the case of the poems, I alone am involved, and so I alone have the final say in the matter.

'I shall therefore stake everything on getting the stuff sent off.'

Page me39.161
Isn't that an exact replica of our Brussels-Westphalian aventure?†190 Last week I wrote to F. Streit in Coburg about the printing of the Brumaire; he deals in articles of this kind.†191
Page me39.161
Apropos. No. 15†c appeared in the Tribune.
Page me39.161
In St Louis, Heinzen is now figuring for a change as an 'aristocrat of the intellect' (sic), ludicrous second-hand rehash of Feuerbach-Stirner; and since the Revolutionary League†173 is going to pot, the 'aristocrat of the intellect' proposes a 'humanist' union.
Page me39.161
In addition I have the following to report:
On the 3rd, Kinkel and the coffre-fort†d were duly divorced. Reichenbach deposited the money in the Bank of England in his own name.
Page me39.161
At this gathering Kinkel feigned ignorance of the meeting convoked by Goegg and hence challenged Imandt in public to read out in public the invitation he had received. On the 6th, however, Goegg, turning to Kinkel, remarked: 'in accordance with the arrangement I made with you at your house'. Willich was not present.
Page me39.161
Hentze, the candidate, endorsed all his own remarks by adding: 'as a D. Phil. I ought to know'.
Page me39.161
Goegg explained how his Revolutionary League 1. provided a stay and support for Germans in America, 2. might, by influencing the elections, sway American policy and induce the United States to adopt a policy of intervention. On the material side, too, a start had been made. Contributions of one cent per week. BOXES in all public houses. Gottfried declared himself in agreement with all this. Only, he opined, contributions of a dollar would be preferable to contributions of a cent, no one in America having sufficient patriotic devotion to count up the cents. He also came out against BOXES.

Page Break me39.162
Page me39.162
Quoth the great Kinkel, staring hard at Imandt the while:

'Despite all the calumnies that have been spread against me, I can stand up with unruffled brow and say that I have never spoken ill of any exiled fellow citizen — not a single one.'†a

Page me39.162

Consequence: Since Kinkel had no money, but only his esteemed person, to offer by way of dowry, the latter was spurned, despite all his boot-licking and self-humiliation. The eight dynasts organised themselves into a Revolutionary League off their own bat and without co-opting Kinkel. The malheureux!†b

Page me39.162

Schmolze, a born painter, is said to have done a rather nice set of cartoons, Kinkel as King Lear and Willich as the Fool. Also a cartoon in which Willich, as a sloth, squats in a fruit-tree while Mrs Schärttner on the ground shakes the tree to dislodge him.

Page me39.162

Willich has been stupid enough to extend his ostracism to the honourable and elderly Mr 'Schily' and to expel him from his little League†189 for all sorts of imaginary crimes. Schily is appealing to a general meeting. Today is the day of the ordeal. For his part Schily accuses Willich of 'unmistakable insanity', as a proof of which he will this evening produce a letter from Heise, Willich's alleged friend in Liverpool, wherein Heise describes Willich as mentally deranged.

Page me39.162

Last week friend Jones came within an ace of losing his newspaper.†c Every week a deficit. At odds with the committee†192 and with the 2 citizens who have so far been putting up the money. Sudden reprieve. MacGowan has taken over publication, will make good the weekly deficit, and Jones is now ensconced in the office of the old Northern Star. MacGowan has sacked Harney, and the idiot bought the old Star from him for £40.

Page me39.162

According to the Gazette Agricole, the next harvest in France will be 1/3 BELOW THE AVERAGE which in France, according to J.B. Say, = FAMINE.†d In Germany a middling harvest. In England there is already an outflow of gold from the Bank for corn purchases. At the same time, wild speculation in the City. Last week, bankruptcies on the STOCK EXCHANGE. Finally, in North America, as I see from the New-York Herald, the wildest of wild speculation in RAILWAYS, BANKS, housing, unprecedented expansion of the credit system, etc. Is that not APPROACHING CRISIS? The revolution may come sooner than we would like. Nothing could be worse than the revolutionaries having to provide bread.

Page Break me39.163

Your
K.M.

Page me39.163

First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

82
MARX TO HEINRICH BROCKHAUS IN LEIPZIG
Page me39.163
London, 19 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Sir,

I am writing to you to ask whether you could use in your Gegenwart a paper on 'Recent Literature on the Economy in England, from 1830-1852'. So far as I am aware, no work of this kind has yet been published either in English or in German. It would cover 1. general works on political economy, 2. specialised writings which appeared during that period, in so far as they relate to really important controversies, for instance on population, the colonies, the banking question, protective tariffs and free trade, etc.
Page me39.163

Should you feel inclined to fall in with this proposal, I should have to know the length prescribed for such a paper by the economics of your publication, since the subdivision of the whole would have to be arranged accordingly.
Page me39.163

Another paper which might perhaps be pertinent just now is 'The Present State of the Parties', i.e. those that will confront each other in the next Parliament. Awaiting your reply, I am

Yours faithfully
Dr K. Marx

Page me39.163
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.164

83
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.164
[Manchester, 24 August 1852]

Dear Marx,

This evening I shall translate the final part of your article†193 and shall do the article on 'Germany'†a tomorrow or Thursday. Charles†b has gone away for a few days and I have a great deal to do in the office so that by evening my mind is often in a whirl.
Page me39.164

Thanks for the suggestions on military history.†c Could you sometime have a look in the British Museum to see if they have 1. The Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift from 1848 onwards, 2. the Prussian Militär-Wochenblatt, the Berlin Wehr-Zeitung, 3. any other military periodicals, especially reviews, including French ones — from 1848 onwards? Also a set of the Augsburg Allg. Ztg., particularly from 1850. I need these things very badly and, if it could somehow be arranged, would find time to work through them there, when I have got to that stage.
Page me39.164

The excerpt from Cluss' letter†d shows up pére†e Weydemeyer in an even more Westphalian light†194 than we had ever expected. Bielefeld tout pur.†f It beats everything.
Page me39.164

Johann Gottfried's†g end is pleasing indeed. All that is left to the noble fellow is the cold comfort of knowing that he has done his duty and swollen the STOCK OF BULLION in the Bank of England. Furthermore, in fixing a new date for the liberation of the world, he had based himself, not on vague trade crises, but on hard, ineluctable fact, namely a spurious document in The Morning Chronicle!
Page me39.164

The Willich-Schily farce†h must have been a hilarious performance. Pauvre†i Willich, how often during his harassment by the philistines must he have wished himself back in red Wolff's†j company!
Page me39.164

So Harney's star of freedom has faded away?†195
Page me39.164

There seems little doubt about the advent of the crisis, even if the recent bankruptcies were no more than precursors. Unfortunately the harvests in north-east Germany, Poland and Russia show signs of being passable, and in places even good. Here the recent good weather has likewise borne fruit. But France is still in the soup, and that's enough to be going on with.

Page Break me39.165
Page me39.165

The minor PANIC in the money market appears to be over, CONSOLS and RAILWAY SHARES are again rising merrily, MONEY IS EASIER, speculation is still pretty evenly distributed over CORN, COTTON, STEAM BOATS, MINING OPERATIONS, etc., etc. But cotton has already become a very risky proposition; despite what is so far a very promising crop, prices are rising continuously, merely as a result of high consumption and the possibility of a brief cotton shortage before fresh imports can arrive. Anyway I don't believe that the crisis will this time be preceded by a regular rage for speculation; if circumstances are favourable in other respects, a few mails bringing bad news from India, a PANIC in New York, etc., will very soon prove that many a virtuous citizen has been up to all kinds of sharp practice on the quiet. And these crucial ill-tidings from overstocked markets must surely come soon. Massive shipments continue to leave for China and India, and yet the advices are nothing out of the ordinary; indeed, Calcutta is DECIDEDLY OVERSTOCKED, and here and there NATIVE DEALERS are going bankrupt. I don't believe that PROSPERITY will continue beyond October or November — even Peter Ermen is becoming worried.

Page me39.165

At all events, whether a revolution is immediately produced — immediately, i.e. in 6-8 months — very largely depends on the intensity of the crisis. The poor harvest in France makes it look as though something is going to happen there; but if the crisis becomes chronic and the harvest turns out after all a little better than expected, we might even have to wait until 1854. I admit that I should like another year in which to swot, having still a good deal of stuff to get through.
Page me39.165

Australia also does some harm. First, directly through her gold and the stoppage of all her other exports, as also through the correspondingly heavier imports of all COMMODITIES and the fact that she is draining off the SURPLUS POPULATION here AT THE RATE OF 5,000 A WEEK. California and Australia are two cases which were not foreseen in the Manifesto†a: creation of large new markets out of nothing. They will have to be included.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.165
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.166

84
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.166
[London,] 27 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederick,

You will find enclosed:

1. Letter from Massol to me. The man upon whom he exerts influence is Proudhon, and the book which he regards as the happy (!) fruit of that influence is the latter's most recent book on Louis Bonaparte.†a I shall be writing about this in one of my next letters.

Page me39.166
2. Cluss' letter, an excerpt from which you have already had.†b
Page me39.166
3. A highly interesting letter from Jakob Huzel about Godofredus.†196
Page me39.166
4. A scribble by Goegg in the Schweizerische National-Zeitung.
Page me39.166
5. and 6. 'Draft of a treaty of union' between Kinkel, Willich and Goegg. A circular letter from the first-named gentlemen to their American committees and guarantors.†197
Page me39.166
The whole is a cry of distress from Kinkel-Willich. They wish 1. to remove the inflexible Reichenbach from the proximity of the Holy Grail†198 so that they may use the funds 'with the utmost dispatch'.
Page me39.166
2. Now that Kinkel no longer has an army behind him he wants to join the so-called Revolutionary League with £1,000 behind him, expecting the said League to show its gratitude by electing him to its highest committee.
Page me39.166
3. Willich, hard-pressed and in an untenable position, wants to go to America once he has, as he puts it, 'solved one more problem'. The problem is to feather a parasitical swindler's nest for himself in America by handing over the £1,000 to the Revolutionary League and by joining same.
Page me39.166
More next time. Salut!

Your
K.M.

Page me39.166
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.167

85
MARX TO PETER IMANDT
IN LONDON
Page me39.167
[London,] 27 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Imandt,

2 truly memorable memoranda!†197 If that's not champion drivel†a ... or however the saying goes.

Page me39.167

However, in your place I would reply to the lads†199:

Page me39.167

At your guarantors' meeting you nominated a committee (provisional), consisting of Reichenbach, Löwe and Schurz, to settle matters. You were to await that committee's report. Kinkel and Willich were in no way empowered either to ask questions or to receive answers. Their threat that anyone in Europe failing to answer by 1 September (extremely short notice) would be held to be in agreement with them, is merely an attempt by them and Co., after their failure at the meeting, to take over the administration of the funds by stealth. You should protest against this procedure and say you will, if necessary, publish your protest with your full reasons for it.

Page me39.167

At the same time I would write to Reichenbach:

Repeat the foregoing and declare that he must see to it that not a centime is paid out until the committee nominated by yourselves has submitted its report. Draw his attention to a few of the chief points of the document, but more especially to the following:

'In order that we may make use of the funds if need arise, we propose that the guarantors in America accord us with the utmost dispatch the right to co-opt a third colleague. In which case we should elect either Goegg or some other local member of the Revolutionary League, etc.'†200

Page me39.167

I.e. what the gentlemen have in mind is to get the money out of Reichenbach's hands 'with the utmost dispatch' because great 'need has now arisen' for Willich and Co. to 'make use of the funds'.

Page me39.167

You could slip into both these letters a few jokes about the 'treaty of union'.†b

Page Break me39.168

Page me39.168

Return me the documents as soon as possible, so that I can send reports to Germany and America (for which the next post leaves on Tuesday†a) 'with the utmost dispatch'.

Page me39.168

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.168

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

86
MARX TO ENGELS†182
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.168
London, 30 August 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

You will have seen from the documents I sent you how Kinkel-Willich are manoeuvring.†b They are ignoring their deposition by the guarantors in their immediate vicinity and are endeavouring to obtain individual votes by stealth, which is partly why Schurz left for America immediately after the 12th. (A further object is to set up kindergartens there, of the Friends of Light.†201) What the gentlemen have in mind is at long last to play a real role in the administration of the funds, from which they threaten to resign if not given their way. The point d'argent†c is this. The chaps have spent £200, which would hardly be ratified here. Hence the attempt to obtain from America, directly and 'with the utmost dispatch', authority to make use of the funds or to co-opt a third colleague so that they may act as a properly constituted body. They have, after their usual fashion, set about things very artfully. First, they sent the documents to America and Switzerland, behind the backs of the London guarantors. Then the letters were delivered to the latter on the 26th (although dated 11 and 12), with the remark that silence would be taken for consent.

Page Break me39.169
Page me39.169

But since there is a possibility that the majority of the guarantors, even in America and Switzerland, might vote against these gentlemen, they have, on the quiet, called a meeting of guarantors (friends of Kinkel) for 14 or 15 September in Antwerp, in order to safeguard themselves against all eventualities by means of an alleged congress resolution.
Page me39.169

The nature of their much-vaunted 'strong' organisations in Germany will be plain to you from the following.
Page me39.169

As you know, Gebert has allegedly left for America. Tout le monde le croit.†a But this is how things really stand.
Page me39.169

At the beginning of this month Kinkel-Willich sent an emissary to Germany, i.e. Gebert, the tipsy journeyman tailor. In Magdeburg he assembled a so-called communist community; for 3 consecutive days discussions were held, 26-30 members taking part; in the chair was one Hammel; during the debates Marx and Engels were attacked with much acrimony; — in addition to various administrative and organisational questions there arose the question of how and in what manner a printing-house might be set up. They succeeded in finding an impoverished printer of books with a business in or near Magdeburg and concluded an agreement with him. He placed his office at their disposal for propaganda, the name of the firm being retained. In return he was paid 100 talers down and given a bill of exchange for 350 talers, maturing in a year's time reckoning from now.

Page me39.169

The police knew about everything, beginning with Gebert's departure, and had him followed everywhere. They had their informant at the loutish gathering in Magdeburg. They don't intend to pull him in until he has completed his mission and compromised as many people as possible. The affair is most unfortunate for our prisoners in Cologne. If Gebert is pulled in, etc., I think the time would be ripe to denounce the fellows publicly and to issue a warning about them, namely that, from a secure hiding-place, they are playing into the hands of the German governments, especially the Prussian, for the purpose of pseudo-agitation and self-aggrandisement. I notified Cologne immediately. I can tell you only by word of mouth how I found out about the business.†202 Over here, too, secrecy of mails is somewhat problematic.

Page me39.169

Willich is quite gone to the dogs. He can no longer borrow from anyone on the strength of the imminence of 'the great day'. A few days ago his friend Schärttner told him coram publico†b that 'free' grub and booze must now cease. He turned red as a turkey-cock and the implacable Schärttner, promptly suiting action to word, insisted on his paying cash for the pots he had just imbibed. However Willich still obtains some, if inadequate, sustenance by tumbling his old philistine of a landlady. That, too, has become notorious and no one any longer believes in the asceticism of this Sancho Panza. When, together with Johann,†a etc., he writes, 'the time of the pen is past, the time of the sword has come',†203 this last should read IN PLAIN GERMAN: 'The time of fencing has come.'†b

Page Break me39.170

Page me39.170

Techow, the revolutionary general, is only sailing for Australia in a few days, accompanied by Madame Stirner†c and his fiancée. As you know, he has for some time been staying here with the Stirner woman. But then his fiancée arrives, a person of substance. Upon becoming aware of this, the Schmidt woman declares she will stand down. But now the fiancée, on learning that Techow has been living with the Schmidt woman, declares she no longer wants him and sends for her potential fiancé, an East Prussian farmer. Nevertheless he lives in the same house as herself, and the fiancé (the other one) an hour away from London. Poor Buridan-Techow!

Page me39.170

A few days ago Pyat (Félix) called a reunion of his French adherents and laid before them a programme which is now to be published. Needless to say, 'God' had had a hand in it. One of those present objected to 'Cod' finding lodgment in a revolutionary programme. In conformity with gouvernement direct,†d Pyat put it to the vote. 'God' got by with a majority of 7. L'être suprême est sauvé encore une fois.†e God doth not forsake his own, as the saying used to go. Now it is: God's own do not forsake him. One good turn deserves another.

Page me39.170

For a long time General Vetter was not seen in London; no one knew where he had gone. The mystére has now been cleared up. Vetter was travelling on an American passport, in which he figures as a painter, accompanied by his mistress, a singer named Ferenczi. He passed for an artist. She gave concerts at all places of importance and thus he travelled from Genoa and Milan to Rome, Naples and Palermo. Mazzini-Kossuth had provided him with PASSWORDS and recommendations. This gave him access to clandestine circles in Italy, while his ostensible TRADE introduced him into the higher cercles.†a He came back here some time ago and submitted a report to the 'European' Central Committee.†103 (Notabene: Darasz died and was buried last week.) In brief, to the great mortification of the 'pious' Mazzini, L'Italie s'est tout á fait matérialisée. On n'y parle que commerce, affaires, soies, huiles et autres miséres mondaines. Les bourgeois calculent d'une maniére terriblement positive les pertes que la révolution de Mars les a fait subir et ne pensent qu'á se reprendre sur le présent. Quant á l'initiative insurrectionnelle ils sont heureux de la laisser aux Français, á ce peuple frivole et sensualiste. La seule chose, dont ils ont peur, c'est que les Français ne se hâtent trop.

Page Break me39.171

Page me39.171

Tu penses bien, mon cher, quel coup de foudre pour l'archange Mazzini. Le général Vetter, nommé déjá comme commandant supérieur des forces Mazzini-Kossuthiennes leur a déclaré que les choses étant ainsi, il ne saurait mieux faire que de passer avec sa maîtresse en Amérique. Au bout du compte, le malheureux Mazzini est convenu avec Kossuth de vouloir bien laisser aux Français l'initiative insurrectionnelle.†b

Page me39.171

Not to the vile multitude,†c however, but to Bonaparte.

Page me39.171

I have had a letter from Paris†d about this and other matters:

'Kiss, Kossuth's ambassador, has entered into relations here, not only with the Orleanists, but also with the Bonapartists. Kiss is acquainted with Jérôme's†e sons. On the strength of this formal acquaintanceship, he was able to bamboozle Kossuth into concluding with the French government an alliance favourable to Hungary. The whimsical agitator fell into the trap and to this end dispatched Kiss to Paris, provided with gulden. Kiss enjoys himself in coffee and other houses, from time to time appears in the antechamber of Pierre Bonaparte, pulls the wool over the latter's eyes, writes splendid reports to Kossuth, and Hungary's liberation is no longer in doubt. These revolutionaries par excellence send agents to conclude a life and death alliance with a “tyrant”!'

Page Break me39.172
Page me39.172
Mais ce n'est pas tout.†a
Page me39.172
I have it from a reliable source that that old fool Lelewel and Thaddäus Gorzowski have been here on behalf of the Polish 'Centralisation'.†204 They submitted to Kossuth-Mazzini an insurrectionary plan of which Bonaparte's co-operation is the PIVOT. These old jackasses of conspirators are always putting their foot in it. They had, and continue to have, as agent here a certain Count Lanckorónski or some such. This lad (lives at 7 Harington Street, Hampstead Road) is a Russian agent, and their insurrectionary plan was done the honour of being amended beforehand in Petersburg.†205

Your
K.M.

Page me39.172
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

87
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†206
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.172
[London, 30 August 1852]

... This is how the gentlemen†b have manoeuvring. They are ignoring their deposition by the guarantors in their immediate vicinity who have seen through them, and are endeavouring to obtain individual votes by stealth, which is partly why Schurz left for America. (A further object is to set up kindergartens there, after the style of the Friends of Light.†201) They, who up till now have been vainly angling for unrestricted access to the administration of the funds — which Reichenbach is withholding from them — are behaving as though they propose to withdraw from it now, unless allowed to do as they please. What they really want is to get at it.

Page Break me39.173
Page me39.173
The point d'argent†a is as follows: The chaps have spent £200, which would hardly be ratified here. By this coup, by the special powers they have received from the other guarantors, they hope to get the money out of Reichenbach's clutches and, above all, to make good the £200. This was their ploy: First, they send the documents of 11 and 12 August to America and Switzerland, behind the backs of the London guarantors. Then the letter was delivered to the latter on the 26th with the instruction that, if they failed to answer by 1 September, their silence would be taken for consent.

Page me39.173

What will Weitling say on learning that the money will now be indirectly finding its way to the worthy Heinzen? The gentlemen were likewise careful not to mention that, despite Kinkel's recommendation and Goegg's pleading, the Revolutionary League's attempt to establish itself over here was a lamentable failure. Not a man allowed himself to be moved by them. What they now call the Revolutionary League in London is Ruge's clearly circumscribed following, seven in number, which formerly went by the name of Agitation Club. The said league comprises the following gentlemen: Ruge, Goegg, Franck (Vienna), Ronge, Tausenau, Sigel (the other one)†b; Oswald, the tobacconist, and the arrogant Tralle have joined in place of Gen. Sigel and Fickler.
Page me39.173

Tralle was denounced by Dulon in person because, at a time of peril, he ratted on his little Bremen paper.†c
Page me39.173

Willich is completely and utterly gone to the dogs. Schärttner has refused him his free meals and publicly shown him the door. He now proposes to go to America, where he hopes to be given a kind welcome from the Revolutionary League in return for his intention to bring them the £1,000 by way of a dowry. Schärttner had been solicitously accepted into the central authority of Willich's league. Willich's position in London has become completely untenable; his parasitical existence is over once and for all. It would do no harm were these plans and grand designs of the patriots made public.
Page me39.173

In the Kinkel-Willich document you will find the beautiful

Page Break me39.174
axiom: 'The time of the pen is past, the time of the sword has come'†203; this should read IN PLAIN GERMAN, and in a higher sense, the time of 'fencing' has come.†a
Page me39.174

In a few days' time the revolutionary general Techow is leaving for Australia with Madame Schmidt (Stirner's wife). He has been living with her in this country for some time. But along comes his fiancée, on learning which Mrs Schmidt declares she will stand down. Then his affianced acquires another 'fiancé' and says she doesn't want Techow any more because of his having lived with the Schmidt woman, and that she is going to marry the other man. Nevertheless he lives in the same house as herself, and the fiancé (the other one) a few miles outside London. Poor Buridan-Techow!
Page me39.174

Madame Pulszky was terribly put out, one of the American papers in which you mentioned her having arrived over here.
Page me39.174

A propos. Szemere has sent his manuscript†b to Webb; but first he got a written agreement that it must be published as it stands. Let me solve the Szemere mystére for you. The chap is very tight-fisted, which is why he would rather get Webb to print his thing than do so himself, as he could perfectly well do...†207

Page me39.174
... A few days ago Félix Pyat called a reunion of his French adherents and laid before them a programme which is now to be published. 'God' had had a hand in it. One of those present objected to God finding lodgment in a revolutionary programme. In conformity with the gouvernement direct principle, Pyat put it to the vote. 'God' got by with a majority of 7. L'être suprême est sauvé encore une fois.†c God doth not forsake his own, the saying used to go. Now it is: God's own do not forsake him. One good turn deserves another...†208

Page me39.174
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1980

Printed according to Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 21 September 1852

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.175

88
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.175
[London,] 2 September 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
From the enclosed pissabed letter from the great Weydemeyer, you will see how matters stand. With it the brute sent 10 copies.†a
Page me39.175
I have not yet had an answer from Mr F. Streit,†b ce qui est de trés mauvais augure.†c There is now some, if little, prospect of its being published in English by a London bookseller. For the time being I am to give him the first chapter by way of a sample. I have therefore had it translated by Pieper. The translation is swarming with mistakes and omissions. However, its correction will not be such an imposition on you as the boring task of translation.†d I would like you to write an English preface of not more than 10 lines, saying that this paper originally appeared in the form of newspaper articles between the end of December and the beginning of February, that it was published as a pamphlet in New York on 1 May, that a 2nd edition is now to appear in Germany,†209 and that it was the first anti-Bonaparte paper to appear; the few details no longer of relevance may be accounted for by its date of origin.
Page me39.175
E. Jones is a thoroughly egotistical rascal. For 2 months he has been dangling before me the promise that he will do a translation (for his journal†e). For my part, I have done him nothing but favours. In spite of my own money bothers I have spent days with him traipsing all over the place in connection with his paper's financial affairs. All the foreign intelligence exclusive to his pauvre†f little paper came from me. Whenever he got into a scrape with his committees,†192 opponents, etc., he came running to me, and my advice invariably got him out of it. Finally, when his journal became altogether too deplorable, I gave him my EDITORIAL SUPPORT for several weeks, and indeed the wretched thing gained some 100 additional subscribers in London.

Page Break me39.176
Page me39.176

He, for his part, does not even observe the common civilities. Help him concoct his journal today and he'll forget to send you a copy tomorrow, but this forgetfulness recurs every seven days since his paper does not come out twice a week.
Page me39.176

I have told him it's all very well to be an egotist but he should be so in a civilised way and not so inanely. Since, however, the paper is the only Chartist organ, I shall not break with him but LET HIM SHIFT FOR HIMSELF for a few weeks.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.176
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

89
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†210
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.176
[London, 3 September 1852]

It has been put about here that Gebert, a bottle-loving journeyman tailor and a myrmidon of Willich's, had left for America. That is not so. At the beginning of August Kinkel and Willich sent him to Germany as their emissary.
Page me39.176

As these people harp on 'organisations' in their circular — the last one to the guarantors — and on the whole have no connections in Germany, the remnants of the Communist League there who for one reason or another have no contact with Cologne were to provide a semblance of, and pretext for, such 'organisations'.†a And then the gentlemen also had to account for the sum of £200. Hence a certain sum of money had to be spent in one quarter or another in such a manner that it could decently be described as 'revolutionary expenditure'. They hoped the remainder of what had been spent could then be more easily passed off. Finally, Marx, Engels and co. were to be destroyed (sic) in the eyes of working men in Germany. Kinkel thought that, having begged and lied his way into the esteem of the remnants of the Communist League, he could palm off the latter on to his bourgeois guarantors as a bourgeois-democratic connection. Willich, the representative imposed upon the German workers by himself and Kinkel, at last saw a chance of creating for himself a real following of workers in Germany.

Page Break me39.177
Page me39.177

To continue. In Magdeburg, Gebert assembled a so-called communist community; for 3 consecutive days discussions were held, 26-30 members taking part; in the chair was one Hammel (nomen omen†a); during the debates Marx and Engels were attacked with much acrimony, the main task laid down being to destroy them, their influence and their 'doctrines'. (Brother Hammel may not find this last so easy.) In addition to various administrative and organisational questions, there arose the question of how and in what manner a printing-house might be set up. They succeeded in finding an impoverished printer of books with a business in or near Magdeburg and concluded an agreement with him. He placed his office at their disposal for propaganda, the name of the firm being retained as it was. In return he was paid 100 talers down and given a bill of exchange for 350 talers, which he is to receive after one year.
Page me39.177

Thus the revolutionary funds are to serve the purpose of propaganda for that creature, Kinkel-Willich, and of promoting intrigue to split up the 'organisations' in Germany.
Page me39.177

But the best is still to come. The Prussian police were informed of everything from the moment the innocuous Gebert left London, whereas everyone here imagined he had slipped off to America. The government had its informant at the loutish assembly at Magdeburg; he took down the entire debate in shorthand. Gebert, who has now gone to Berlin, had a Prussian policeman in train. He is not allowed out of sight for an instant. The government intend to allow him to fulfil his mission, by which time he will have compromised dozens of others besides himself.
Page me39.177

I have this intelligence — Willich, too, has been bragging about his 'agents' in Germany — from a Prussian police headquarters in which I have planted a séid.†b†202
Page me39.177

Qu'en dis-tu?†c So these knaves are providing the Prussian government with an opportunity to introduce fresh complications into the Cologne trial, etc.

Page Break me39.178
Page me39.178

And to what purpose? To cover up their shady accounts, to disguise the pointlessness of all their revolutionary committee doings hitherto, to excite their feeble spirits against their foes, etc., etc. Just now the thing must still be kept secret. But as soon as you see that Gebert has been pulled in, or that arrests of 'communists' have begun, let fire without waiting to hear anything more....

Page me39.178
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 26 March 1853

Published in English for the first time

90
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†211
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.178
[London, after 5 September 1852]

... Enclosed copy of a manuscript from Paris by Häfner†212 (sometime editor of the Constitution, the only tolerable newspaper in Vienna). This man once allowed himself to be misused to bluster against me in the Hamburger Nachrichten in the interests of Kinkel. The manuscript was not addressed to me but to an acquaintance of mine in Paris,†a through whose 'indiscretion' it came into my hands, probably not wholly without the author's prior knowledge. Hence, you can make use of the document if opportunity arises, but only in such a way as to omit everything that might betray its origin, or rather directly indicate it. Though he may have a hump both fore and aft, little Häfner writes and thinks better and has a great deal more to him than many a straight-limbed revolutionary philistine...

Page me39.178
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 28 September 1852

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.179

91
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.179
[Manchester,] Tuesday, 7 September 1852

Dear Marx,

I am having a great deal of trouble over Pieper's translation.†a The beginning is particularly difficult to translate and l'aimable candidat†b Pieper seems to have given rein to charming lightheartedness. If possible, I'll let you have it on Thursday.
Page me39.179

Pindar has been involved in a romance up here. I don't know whether I have already told you this, but recently I went to his house and found his mother there, A VERY RESPECTABLE OLD ENGLISH LADY, with a young lady of very un-English appearance whom I took to be a Russian. Last Friday I asked Pindar whether this krasnávitza (beauté) was his wife or his sister — ni l'un ni l'autre,†c was the reply. On Monday his mother comes to my house: her dear Edward had gone, vanished. I wasn't in but, hearing about it, at once went to see her. Je trouve la digne mére en pleurs†d and am told the following: In Petersburg Pindar fell madly in love with a Swede (or Finn) with whom, it seems, he ran away after his father's death. He married her in England — 'her' being the afore-said krasnávitza. In London he makes the acquaintance of a Frenchwoman — an erstwhile Parisian whore and mistress of an English Grub Street dramatist by the name of Taylor, says his mother who, of course, makes her out to be a thoroughly bad lot. He gives her lessons, and the quiet candidate becomes amorously entangled with her. His wife discovers the affair (in the meantime his mother had come over from Kronstadt with some money and had made her peace with the Swedish woman) and, to wean Pindar from the Frenchwoman, the whole family moves to Liverpool. But again he sends for the lady of joy, and the Swede, evidently a woman of great patience and tenacity, finds out once more. Fresh migration to Manchester, where the mother finally establishes herself and even buys 2 houses (she is living on what remains, after her fritterings, of the former Pindar fortune, made in the TIMBER AND BISCUIT TRADE). Here again, however, Pindar sends for his Frenchwoman — she has undoubtedly visited him three times, as I know from the fact that on each occasion he regularly touched me for a loan and as regularly paid me back afterwards. But last Saturday he brought things to a head by running away with her — as his mother maintains, to Australia, but either New York or simply Paris would seem more probable to me. He took from the FUNDS £190 belonging to him and promptly lost £20 in the omnibus (the waiter in the hotel where the Frenchwoman was staying thinks that she relieved him of it). The fellow had money enough, his mother kept him in everything and he had £100 pocket money.

Page Break me39.180
Page me39.180

Yesterday the Swede followed him to Liverpool. I am curious to know what comes of it.
Page me39.180

For the rest of his life the poor devil will be plagued by this foolish early marriage to his Swedish ideal — voilá ce qui a toujours pesé sur lui.†a With a little more experience and savoir-faire, he could have kept his Frenchwoman very nicely here on his £100, but how is a fellow to gain experience if at 21 he falls madly in love with a Swede, runs away with her and enters into respectable wedlock! If the silly boy had only told me about the affair, it would have been easy enough to straighten things out. But to go and let himself in for a plus ou moins†b enduring, at any rate serious, affair with a Frenchwoman á l'étranger,†c and to run away with her — quelle bêtise! Elle lui en fera voir, ma foi,†d especially if he has really gone to Australia. Besides, his mater is a terribly kind and soft-hearted person and God knows what he couldn't have got her to agree to. But just as Kinkel sees betrothal,†e so Pindar would seem to see elopement, as the essence of every love affair.

Page me39.180

Your news about Vetter, etc. and the London people is splendid. I am returning Massol's letter†f and also Weydemeyer's — Cluss' I shall keep here jusqu'á nouvel ordre.†g What about the articles for Dana? Pindar's absence gives me more time; I am now doing Russian more con amore sine ira el studio,†h and can already manage a little. At the moment things military are AT A DISCOUNT. Office work very lively.

Page Break me39.181
Page me39.181

As soon as I possibly can, i.e. in a few days' time, I shall send you £2 which is all I can screw out for the moment.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.181
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

92
MARX TO ENGELS†213
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.181
London, 8 September 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Your letter today found us in a state of great agitation.
Page me39.181

My wife is ill. Little Jenny is ill. Lenchen†a has some sort of nervous fever. I could not and cannot call the doctor because I have no money to buy medicine. For the past 8-10 days I have been feeding the FAMILY solely on bread and potatoes, but whether I shall be able to get hold of any today is doubtful. Such a diet is not, of course, beneficial in present climatic conditions. I have not written any articles for Dana because I didn't have a PENNY to go and read the papers. By the way, as soon as you send No.

XIX, I shall write and give you my views on No. XX, i.e. a résumé of the present dirty business.†214
Page me39.181
When I was with you†146 and you told me you would be able to find me a somewhat larger sum by the end of August, I wrote and told my wife that to reassure her. Your letter of 3-4 weeks ago†b hinted that there were no great prospects, but still left some. Accordingly I had put off all creditors — who, as you know, are always paid by dribs and drabs — until the beginning of September. Now the storm is breaking out on all sides.

Page Break me39.182
Page me39.182
I have tried everything, but in vain. First I am cheated out of £15 by that cur Weydemeyer. I write to Streit†a in Germany (because he had written to Dronke in Switzerland). The brute does not deign to answer. I approach Brockhaus†b and offer him an article of entirely innocuous contents for the Gegenwart. He sends a very polite letter of refusal. Finally I spend the whole of last week trailing round with an Englishman†c who said he would find someone to discount the bills on Dana for me. Pour le roi de Prusse.†d
Page me39.182
The best and most desirable thing that could happen would be for the LANDLADY to throw me out. Then I would at least be quit of the sum of £22. But such complaisance is hardly to be expected of her. On top of that, debts are still outstanding to the baker, the milkman, the tea chap, the GREENGROCER, the butcher. How am I to get out of this infernal mess? Finally, and this was most hateful of all, but essential if we were not to kick the bucket, I have, over the last 8-10 days, touched some German types for a few shillings and pence.
Page me39.182
You'll have seen from my letters that, as usual, when I myself am in the shit and not just hearing about it at second-hand, I plough through it with complete indifference. Yet, que faire?†e My house is a hospital and so worrying is the crisis that it compels me to devote all my attention to it. Que faire?
Page me39.182
Meanwhile Mr Goegg is again on a pleasure trip to America, STEAMER FIRST CLASS. Mr Proudhon has pocketed a few 100,000 fr. for his anti-Napoleon†f and Papa Massol has been generous enough to leave the miner, fouiller,†g etc., to me.†215 Je le remercie bien.†h

Your
K.M.

Page me39.182
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me39.183

93
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.183
[London,] 9 September 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
Received, the £4 Sperlinge.†a
Page me39.183
I have again written to my mater and think that at least it may do some good.†191
Page me39.183
Besides, I have today made another attempt, which I trust will at long last succeed, to obtain the money on Dana, for I am very hard-pressed, et je n'ai pas á perdre du temps.†b
Page me39.183
The doctor has just been and prescribed something for the whole FAMILY excepté moi.†c My wife is getting better; little Laura's condition is worst of all.
Page me39.183
You have no idea what a silly ass Pieper is!
Page me39.183
Every day he asks me whether you have sent the thing†d back yet and what you had to say about his outstanding piece of work. Of course I couldn't tell him and now the clown imagines that out of envy I am withholding the praises you showered on him.
Page me39.183
Today, when I went out to call the doctor, I ran into the humbug. 'Has Engels written and sent the translation?' Not yet, I told him, to which Pieper replied: 'But he will, for I myself have written to him.' Should you reply you might point out to him that there is no call for him to have any say in my transactions with you.
Page me39.183
Enclosed a memorandum from Paris†212; it fell into the hands of a friend of mine†e there who sent me a copy of it, and I have made a further copy for the Manchester archives.†216

Your
K.M.

Page me39.183
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.184

94
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.184
[Manchester,] 14 September 1852

Dear Marx,

Pieper has written asking me to send him the corrected translation†a by return of post. Cela me convenait bien.†b I had a pain in the abdomen and was unfit for any kind of work. Tell him that if he wants answers to his letters, the least he can do is give his address; Pieper, Esq., is not as well known as all that in London, even if he has become a clerk at 25/- a week. Apart from that, there's no reason why he shouldn't go on with the translation, but he must take a little more trouble or, if he can't, at least leave blank spaces to be filled in by me, when he strikes a difficult patch, which is after all better than writing nonsense out of sheer carelessness. His pretext for writing to me, by the way, was simply that he didn't know whether I thought him capable of doing the thing at all. He shall have a detailed list of his principal mistakes, with comments.†c
Page me39.184

I might be able to get the thing done tonight and tomorrow evening, as I am now feeling better.
Page me39.184

For the rest, his letter faithfully echoed everything he had heard at your house and which I, of course, already knew.
Page me39.184

I take it that Pindar has been to see you? He wrote to me from London and is on his way to Paris. I shall write to him this evening. I have also made the acquaintance of his Swede or Finn; c'est une oie, petite bourgeoise au plus haut degré, qui paraît s'être bientôt consolée du départ de son époux.†d He was right to give the creature the slip. I shall visit his mater once or twice more for appearances' sake and then drop the whole thing; c'est embêtant†e to listen to the cold-blooded little witch maligning her husband.
Page me39.184

I hope the discounting affair turned out all right and that things at home are going a little better. I am now thinking up a new way of saving a few pounds; if it succeeds, I shall probably be able to send you something more by the beginning of next month — i.e. in about 14-16 days. It depends partly on whether my brother-in-law†a comes here and if so, when.

Page Break me39.185
Page me39.185

Enclosed two things from Weydemeyer; you might let me have the Lithogr.†217 back some time for the archives. Häfner's memorandum†212 is interesting, though obviously written for our consumption — c'est une pétition.

Page me39.185
Best wishes to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.185
You'll be glad to see that Heinzen is on his last legs.†218

Page me39.185
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

95
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.185
London, 18 September 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
If you delay sending back the translation†b for another few days, the possibility of getting it taken will be absolutely nil. Interest in Bonaparte, having again attained a peak,†219 is now giving way to fresh topics, as always happens in London.
Page me39.185
The discounting affair has come to naught after a week spent on a wild goose-chase with a rascal from the CITY nommé†c Poenisch. I therefore wrote to Dana yesterday.†191 At the same time I told him that there were only two more articles, 19 and 20, to come ON GERMANY. As soon as you send me 19†d I shall write to you again, giving my views on 20, the concluding one. Within the next few days the Customs Union business, too, will have been decided, and without it 20 cannot be finished.†220

Page Break me39.186
Page me39.186
Physically, my wife is lower than ever before, i.e. sheer debility. On doctor's orders she has been taking a spoonful of brandy every hour for the past 3 days. There is however some improvement, inasmuch as she has at least got up today. She has been in bed for a week. Little Laura is convalescent, the others ALL RIGHT. I shall not be able to write at length before next week. This week has been wasted on abortive business errands and the most nauseous wrangling cum creditoribus.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me39.186
With next week's letter I shall also return the documents.†b Let me have Massol's letter back.

Page me39.186
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

96
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.186
[Manchester,] 20 September 1852

Dear Marx,
I didn't know that you were in such a hurry for the translation†c and let the thing slide for a bit because, as I said,†d I wasn't well, and also because I wanted to tease Pieper a little for having been so pressing. However, I immediately set to work yesterday and would have finished had not the aging Mr Schily†e walked into my room at about 2 in the afternoon. He wishes to open a factory in Liverpool for the production of a purported patent soda which would yield 400-500 per cent clear profit and might, depending on circumstances, produce 4 1/2 million talers a year. He wanted to discuss this fantastic plan with me — and was all ready to fall for the swindle with a few thousand talers which his brother says he will procure for him. Mr Heise is in it too, but is investing nothing but his talents. After the dispassionate advice he has received here, the noble Schily will probably keep his hands off the thing and will take advantage of a possible opening as Liverpool human cargo agent for a fleecer of emigrants in Le Havre. Mr Heise once had a natty little plan whereby the funds of the National Loan were to be used for this soda swindle; the work was to be carried on democratically and the millions thus raked in†a devoted to the liberation of Europe. It is a pity that nothing came of this scheme, which would seem to have foundered largely on the impossibility of mustering thirty refugees able to hold their tongues.

Page Break me39.187
Page me39.187
I was, of course, under an obligation to get the noble Schily tipsy — il n'y avait pas moyen á y échapper.†b It's some time since I encountered such an innocuous beast. The stupidity and ignorance and thoughtlessness of such a man of principle has to be seen to be believed. When he had become a little tipsy — I was engaged in an argument with a third German, Charles'†c cousin — he shouted incessantly, although very good-humouredly: Don't you believe that; Engels believes in nothing, there's nothing at all Engels believes in, none of the fellows of the N. Rh. Z. believe in anything, no one can fathom them. There's nothing at all Engels believes in! I, of course, replied that the fellows of the N. Rh. Z. did not find it in the least difficult to fathom the likes of him. This morning the worthy fellow, after a sober handshake, set course for Liverpool again, and by tonight the translation will be finished. But I get dreadfully held up over the thing since I have to make a new translation of all the more difficult bits without exception — Pieper makes shift with a literal translation in every case, the result being utter nonsense. There are, by the way, some bits which are almost impossible to translate.

Page me39.187

However, I will do my utmost to have finished by tonight so that you can have it tomorrow.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me39.188
Page me39.188

If at all possible, I shall send you another pound within the next few days.

Page me39.188
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

97
ENGELS TO MARX†221
IN LONDON
Page me39.188
[Manchester, 23 September 1852]

Dear Marx,

The day before yesterday I sent you the translation†a and a POST OFFICE order for a pound. A few more pounds will follow at the beginning of October — i.e. in 9-10 days. I should like to send you more at a time because, then even though the total amount is the same in the end, it has the advantage of enabling you to plan your expenditure more methodically, but my own pecuniary circumstances are in such a muddle just now that I never know exactly how much I shall need for the month, and hence pounds only become available singly, so it seems best to send them to you straight away. Next month I shall put things on a business-like footing, after which I shall soon be able to make some rough estimates.

Page me39.188
From the enclosed memorandum you will see that Pieper has made a number of fairly bad howlers — I haven't, of course, enumerated his transgressions against grammar and Donatus,†b cela n'aurait jamais fini.†c You may give it to him if you think it would do any good; otherwise, if it might lead him to abandon the translation, you had better keep it. Should he grumble over this or that correction, you can always use it as an opportunity to point out his imperfections.
Page me39.188
Individual bits are, by the way, almost untranslatable.

Page Break me39.189
Page me39.189
Incidentally, it might also be advisable for the bookseller to see the last chapter in particular; he would then be vastly more impressed; I suggest that Pieper might translate it and you send it straight on to me; having already looked at it with this in mind, I am not wholly unprepared and progress would therefore be rapid. Even if it can't be published now, the translation must be completed; the chap†a will soon become Emperor,†222 and that would provide another splendid opportunity for adding a postscript.
Page me39.189
I am going straight home to finish the article for the Tribune†b so that it catches the 2nd post and you can send it off by tomorrow's STEAMER. What prospect is there of a new English article for Dana?
Page me39.189
I trust the brandy has set your wife on her feet again — warm regards to her and your children, also Dronke and Lupus.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.189
Massol's letter with the article for Dana by the 2nd post — I haven't got it here.
Page me39.189
Did you see the statistics from Horner, the FACTORY INSPECTOR, on the growth of the cotton industry in yesterday's Times and day-before-yesterday's Daily News?†c

Oct. 1850-Oct. 1851 —
2,300 horsepower in newly built factories
1,400 horsepower in extensions to existing factories

_____
3,700 horsepower increase in the Manchester district and the cotton industry alone.†223 The following particulars reveal that during that period there were factories still under construction which would require some 4,000 horsepower and which will now have been completed. Since that time, work has undoubtedly begun on factories of 3,000-4,000 horsepower, more than half of which might be completed by the end of the year; if we assume that the increase between Jan. 1848 and Oct. 1850, i.e. 2 3/4 years, is no more than 4,000 horsepower, the steam-power of the Lancashire cotton industry will have risen between 1848 and the end of 1852 by 3,700 + 4,000 + 1,500 + 4,000 = 13,200 horsepower.

Page Break me39.190
Page me39.190

In 1842 the total steam-power of the cotton industry in Lancashire amounted to 30,000 and in 1845 (end) to 40,000 horsepower; in 1846/47 there was little installed, hence almost 55,000 horsepower, nearly twice that of 1842, will now be in use.
Page me39.190

On top of that there is hydraulic power — about 10,000 horsepower (1842) which has barely increased, hydraulic energy having been fairly well exploited for some time past. From this it may be seen where prosperity's additional capital has gone. For that matter the crisis cannot be very far off, although here excess over-speculation is almost entirely confined to omnibuses.
Page me39.190
Memorandum on the Translation of the 1st Chapter
Page me39.190

Ad generalia†a:

1. Pieper is evidently more used to writing English spontaneously than to translating. Hence, if he wants for a word, he should guard all the more against having recourse to that worst of all known aids, the dictionary, which, in 99 cases out of 100, will regularly provide him with the most inappropriate word and invariably gives rise to a disastrous jumbling of synonyms, examples of which follow.
Page me39.190

2. Pieper should study elementary English grammar, in which he makes a number of mistakes — especially as regards the use of the article. There are also spelling mistakes.
Page me39.190

3. Above all Pieper must guard against falling into the Cockney's petty-bourgeois floridity of style, of which there are some irritating examples.
Page me39.190

4. Pieper uses too many words of French derivation, which are, it is true, sometimes convenient because their vaguer, more abstract meaning is often of help in a quandary. But this emasculates the choicest turns of speech and often renders them completely incomprehensible to an Englishman. In almost every case, where vivid, sensuous images occur in the original, there is a no less sensuous, vivid expression of Saxon derivation, which at once makes the thing plain to an Englishman.
Page me39.190

5. Where there are difficult bits, it would be better to leave blanks to be filled in, rather than — on the plea of literal translation — put in things which Pieper himself knows full well to be sheer nonsense.
Page me39.190

6. The main criticism of the translation, and which sums up 1-5, is gross carelessness. There are passages enough to prove that, if he really tries, Pieper is reasonably capable, but such superficiality, in the first place, makes more work for himself and secondly twice as much for me. Some passages are quite admirable, or could be so, had he tried a little harder.

Page Break me39.191
Page me39.191
Ad specialia†a: schuldenbeladene Lieutnants†b: here the word lieutenant can only mean 'representative'. In English and French a lieutenant is not, as in German, primarily a figure of fun; unmittelbar gegebne, vorhandene und überlieferte Umstände†c: CIRCUMSTANCES IMMEDIATELY GIVEN AND DELIVERED. Pieper himself was very well aware that this translation made nonsense. 'DELIVERED' can here only mean 'delivered of a child';
Page me39.191
Page me39.191
sich und die Dinge umzuwälzen: THE REVOLUTION OF THEIR OWN PERSONS. This revolution can be nothing other than a somersault;
Page me39.191
A NEW LANGUAGE (eine neue Sprache) means a newly invented language. At most, A LANGUAGE NEW TO THEM.
Page me39.191
MIDDLE CLASS SOCIETY for bürgerliche Gesellschaft is not strictly grammatical or logically correct; it is as if one were to translate feudale Gesellschaft as NOBILITY SOCIETY. An educated Englishman would not say this. One would have to say BOURGEOIS SOCIETY or, depending on circumstances, COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, to which one might append the following note: By Bourgeois Society, we understand that phase of social development in which the Bourgeoisie, the Middle Class, the class of industrial and commercial Capitalists, is, socially and politically, the ruling class; which is now the case more or less in all the civilized countries of Europe and America. By the expressions: Bourgeois society, and: industrial and commercial society, we therefore propose to designate the same stage of social development; the first expression referring, however, more to the fact of the middle class being the ruling class, in opposition either to the class whose rule it superseded (the feudal nobility), or to those classes which it succeeds in keeping under its social and political dominion (the proletariat or industrial working class, the rural population, etc., etc.) — while the designation of commercial and industrial society more particularly bears upon the mode of production and distribution characteristic of this phase of social history.
Page me39.191
TO ARRIVE AT ITS OWN CONTENTS (bei ihrem eignen Inhalt anzukommen) can only mean: to arrive AT THE CONTENTS OF ITS OWN STOMACH.

Page Break me39.192

Page me39.192

OLD SOCIETY (alte Gesellschaft) won't do in English and at most means feudal rather than bourgeois society. Owen's writings have been forgotten; and whenever he mentions OLD SOCIETY, it is always accompanied by a plan and elevation (if possible in colour) of the NEW SOCIETY, SO THAT THERE CAN BE NO MISTAKE; WHICH IS NOT TO BE EXPECTED NOW-A-DAYS.

Page me39.192

SET IN FIERY DIAMONDS (in Feuerbrillanten gefasst†a) is nonsensical in English, since in English usage it is diamonds themselves that are set, and FIERY DIAMONDS is in any case something of a hyperbole.

Page me39.192

STORM AND PRESSURE PERIOD does not translate Sturm- und Drangperiode†b†224 but Sturm- und Drückperiode.

Page me39.192

A FUTURE THAT WAS TO COME (die Zukunft, die ihnen bevorsteht†c) is nonsense, as Pieper himself knows (EVERY FUTURE BEING TO COME), and altogether in the style of Moses & Son,†d as in an earlier bit where 'die Geister der Vergangenheit'†e is rendered as THE SPIRITS OF THOSE THAT HAVE BEEN.

Page me39.192

THE CIRCLE SHOULD BE INCREASED (erweitert werden†f p. 4, bottom).†g Un cercle est élargi, il n'est pas AGRANDI.†h

Page me39.192

THE GENERAL INDEX (der allgemeine Inhalt der modernen Revolution†i) means the general list of contents of modern revolution! Le citoyen Pieper le savait, du reste, aussi bien que moi.†j

Page me39.192

AS IT COULD BUT BE, wie es nicht anders sein konnte — lapsus pennae; should read 'AS IT COULD NOT BUT BE'; otherwise it would mean: wie es kaum sein konnte.

Page me39.192

UNWIELDINESS (p. 5, top in the orig.) is Unbehülflichkeit in the passive sense, 'inertia' in physics but, applied to persons, can only mean that they cannot move for fat. Unbeholfenheit, used of persons, in the active sense, means CLUMSINESS. This mistake was suggested to Pieper by his dictionary.

Page me39.192

CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARD (die Nationalversammlung sollte die Resultate der Revolution auf den bürgerlichen Maßstab reduzieren†k). C'est un peu fort†l that, in order to evade the difficulty of translating 'bürgerlich', Citoyen Pieper should everywhere render it as 'CONSTITUTIONAL' because 'konstitutionelle Republik' and 'bürgerliche Republik' are used synonymously. Je demande un peu,†m what does CONSTITUTIONAL mean in this context? It becomes even more delectable later on, when bürgerliche Gesellschaft figures sans façon†a as CONSTITUTIONAL SOCIETY. C'est assommant.†b

Page Break me39.193

Page me39.193
FOR EVER AND THE DURATION (für die ganze Dauer des Zyklus†c). Why not rather FOR EVER AND A DAY, as the saying goes?
Page me39.193
UTOPIAN JUGGLES (utopische Flausen). JUGGLES means legerdemain, not flights of fancy.
Page me39.193
TRANSPORTED WITHOUT JUDGMENT means déporté contre le sens commun, transported in defiance of common sense and should read without TRIAL.
Page me39.193
TO PASS AS A REAL EVENT doesn't mean 'um überhaupt als ein Ereignis passieren zu können',†d but to pass for something that has really happened.
Page me39.193
FOUNDED doesn't mean fondu†e but fondé. It has nothing to do with the illogical but accepted term CONFOUNDED for confondu.
Page me39.193
All these are things which Pieper, if only he paid a little attention, would know as well as I do but, as already mentioned, it is easier to translate difficult things oneself than to correct a translation that is carelessly thrown together and dodges the difficulties. If he tried a little harder, he could translate quite well.

Page me39.193
First published in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

98
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.193
[London,] 23 September 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
Received the £1 and the corrected translation.†f You went to too much trouble over the latter. If the thing is passable (success will depend on this No. 1), you must take it easier: I mean, forget about figures of speech or other inessentials, if difficult to translate.

Page Break me39.194
Page me39.194

Weerth has been here since Sunday. On Saturday he leaves for Manchester where he will spend 3 or 4 weeks before disappearing to the West Indies, etc.
Page me39.194
Enclosed:
1. A letter in Schurz's handwriting, found in the pocket of a waistcoat which Kinkel gave to a refugee of our acquaintance.
Page me39.194
2. Letter from Cluss.
Page me39.194
3. Two excerpts from the revelations about the émigrés, first published in the Karlsruher Zeitung and then reprinted by the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, etc.,†a in case you haven't seen the things yourself.
Page me39.194
Dr Piali (in Paris) writes inter alia:

'Kossuth intends to go into action in October. From here, Kiss has been giving Kossuth all manner of assurances which probably belong to the realm of fable yet could, given the fabulous nature of circumstances here, actually be possible. Kossuth is said to have received a note from Bonaparte in his own hand summoning him to Paris. A word-for-word copy of this note is believed to be circulating throughout the counties of Hungary. Everything in Hungary is in readiness for an all-out blow by Kossuth. Even Royal and Imperial officials are involved in the great conspiracy...'†225
Page me39.194
'Countess Kinski, née Zichy, has been arrested for infanticide. The child was fathered by Dr Chaises,' (our well-known shit†b), 'a Polish Jew, etc. Madame Beckmann (wife of the police spy and newspaper correspondent) will figure as dame de compagnie†c at the hearing before the Assizes.'

Page me39.194
As for the Kossuth affair, it is quite possible that Bonaparte is setting snares for him in order to curry favour with Austria.
Page me39.194
Piali has got Häfner to enter into correspondence with Ruge-Tausenau, so that now it is just as if we were corresponding with Mr Arnold direct. In this way we shall learn at first hand about the mystéres des grands hommes.†d
Page me39.194
The Volksverein,†226 8 man strong, (out of which, according to W's†e letter to you, Ruge, with well-known virtuosity, formed 3 committees) is now (Ronge and Dralle included) trailing round the City on the pretext of simultaneously founding a 'free community'. What the devil has that German-Catholic, Ronge, to do with 'free communities'?†227 A few German-Catholic and, in particular, Jewish merchants have put their names on the list, if only in the form of initial letters, and contributed a few pounds, as was actually envisaged.

Page Break me39.195
Page me39.195

Willich, for his part, now makes a public collection every Saturday at the Great Windmill Street Society,†24 ostensibly towards the cost of correspondence.
Page me39.195
What do you say to the ovations accorded Bonaparte in the provinces?†228 The French are indeed making ignominious fools of themselves.
Page me39.195
The Customs Union†220 seems to me to be on the brink of certain collapse. Austrian bankruptcy shows itself still capable of dealing with Prussian prosperity.
Page me39.195
I see that Dana has accepted the article.†a The Staatszeitung (New York) has already published an excerpt in German.
Page me39.195
Old Wellington's death came at the right time. At a moment of crisis the old bull would still have commanded an authority grown legendary. With him and Peel the COMMON SENSE OF OLD ENGLAND has been DULY buried.
Page me39.195
So our 'people' are to appear on 4 October.†16 Bürgers admits everything, at least so far as he himself is concerned. In keeping with his profession, he will defend himself 'on principle'. During the examination he placed on record a 30-sheet memorandum on the 'essence of communism'.†229 Honi soit qui mal y pense.†230 Daniels is said to be fairly well. The prosecutor will begin by reverting to the St.-Simonists; attorney Schneider will attempt TO BEAT him by beginning with Babeuf. We can consider ourselves lucky if neither of them harks back as far as the Incas or Lycurgus.
Page me39.195
Pindar, whose mystéres†b I found most entertaining, did not come to see me. Your ADVENTURES WITH OLD Schily were exquisite.†c
Page me39.195
Ad vocem†d Jones. Though I personally have little to say in his favour, I and the whole lot of us stood by him last week — he came pestering me again because il y avait crise.†e The other fellows had summoned two or three meetings for the purpose of tabling a motion, namely 'THAT THIS MEETING IS OF OPINION, THAT NO CONFIDENCE CAN BE PLACED IN THE SUCCESS OF ANY DEMOCRATIC MOVEMENT WHILE MR ERNEST JONES IS CONNECTED THEREWITH'.†f They HAVE BEEN BEATEN, and that right thoroughly.†231 The jackasses first tried to throw financial dirt at him. In this they failed. Then they attacked him for the same reason that we support him, because he stirs up 'UNFRIENDLY FEELINGS

Page Break me39.196
AMONGST THE DIFFERENT CLASSES'. For Harney-Holyoake, Hunt of the Leader, Newton (CO-OPERATIVE) et tutti quanti†a have united to found a 'NATIONAL PARTY'. This NATIONAL PARTY wants GENERAL SUFFRAGE, BUT NOT CHARTISM.†232 The same old story. But before they launched their campaign Jones was to BE CRUSHED. They have RATHER miscalculated He has raised the price of his paper†b by a penny without losing a single subscriber.

Your

K.M.

Page me39.196
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

99
ENGELS TO MARX†84
IN LONDON
Page me39.196
[Manchester,] 24 September 1852

Dear Marx,

Encl. I return the envelope of the letter received from you today; an attempt, incidentally abortive, seems to have been made to break it open.
Page me39.196

The translation†c and Massol's letter went off yesterday evening by the 2nd post.
Page me39.196

Cluss' description of Kinkel and Co.'s reception by the German Yankees is really nice. The chaps in the Alleghenies are the very spit of those in the Black Forest and the Taunus.
Page me39.196

I haven't read the revelations in the German papers†d — in fact, yesterday was the first time in some while that I saw a German paper.
Page me39.196

The crapauds†e are in clover.†233 The workers would appear aprés tout†f to have become utterly bourgeoisified as a result of the present PROSPERITY and the prospect of la gloire de l'empire.†g They will have to be severely chastened by crises if they are to be good for anything again soon. Should the next crisis be a mild one, Bonaparte will be able to weather it. But it looks as though it is going to be damned serious. No crisis is worse than when over-speculation develops slowly in the sphere of production, so that its results take as many years to mature as they would months on the stock and commodity exchanges. And it was not just the COMMON SENSE of Old England that was buried along with old Wellington, but OLD ENGLAND herself, in the person of her sole surviving representative. All that remains are SPORTING CHARACTERS without a suite,†a like Derby, and Jewish swindlers like Disraeli — who are caricatures of the old Tories in exactly the same way as is Monsieur Bonaparte of his uncle.†b There'll be a merry dance here when the crisis comes, and one can only hope that it will last long enough to develop into a chronic condition with acute periods, as it did in 1837/42. From what is known of him, by the way, old Wellington would have been a truly formidable military leader in case of insurrection — the fellow studied diligently, read all the military treatises with the utmost zeal and was pretty well-versed in his subject. Nor would he have balked at extreme means.

Page Break me39.197

Page me39.197

From what you tell me, the Cologne trial threatens to be terribly ennuyant.†c Unhappy Heinrich,†d with his defence 'on principle'! He will demand that his 30 sheets be read in court and, if he gets his way, will be perdu.†e The jury will never forgive him for having bored them so. The prosecution, by the way, seems to be out of luck. For Haupt is off to Brazil, the anonymous journeyman tailor has similarly vanished and seems unlike to reappear, and now the police official,†f because of whose illness the whole affair was adjourned in July, must needs go and die on them. But what will such good fortune be worth if Heinrich elucidates the thing from the philosophical standpoint?
Page me39.197

So the gallant Schurz is carping at Kossuth for preaching the gospel of action, after he and Co. have for years eked out a bare living from this same gospel! IT IS ALL VERY WELL to try and settle Kossuth's hash because he takes the lion's share, but it's really very stupid to write things of that sort when the whole world knows better.
Page me39.197

That Kossuth will commit some folly seems most probable; what has le malheureux†g got after all but battered saddles, outranged

Page Break me39.198
muskets, companies drilled by Sigel, and Klapka and Garibaldi? (The latter commands the Italo-Hungarian fleet in the Pacific Ocean to wit one merchantman plying between Lima and Canton under the Peruvian flag.)

Your
F.E.

Page me39.198
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

100
MARX TO ENGELS†234
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.198
London, 28 September 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

You have not had a letter from me for some time. The main cause of this is Weerth who — not I might say, to my unalloyed delight — has plus ou moins†a monopolised my evenings which are usually given over to writing. As you know, I'm very fond of Weerth, mais†b it's embarrassing, when one's up to one's neck in trouble, to have to face so fine a gentleman, auquel il faut cacher les parties trop honteuses.†c Such a relationship creates twice as much gêne†d and I hope he will leave for Manchester tomorrow and will on his return find me in circumstances that will enable me to consort with him franchement.†e However, I don't believe that, aside from my wife's ill-health, he had any inkling of my predicament.

Page me39.198

I have given him a big parcel to take to you. It contains documents that belong in the archives†216; some, if not most of them are already familiar to you.

Page me39.198

Enclosed the extract from a letter from Barthélemy to Willich. Barthélemy gave this letter to a Frenchman by the name of

Page Break me39.199

Durand to take to Willich. Durand, unable to read the signature, asked Dronke if he would see to it that Willich got the letter. Dronke of course agreed, came to my house, and Lupus, who is a great artist in this line, opened the letter most expertly. Dronke copied out all that was of note — the rest mere twaddle. Que penses-tu de ce brave Barthélemy, 'auquel il est impossible de se résigner á laisser Bonaparte jouir paisiblement de son triomphe'.†a Tremble, O Byzantium!†b As to the alleged letter from Blanqui, this strikes me as a piece of melodramatic falsehood on the sinister Barthélemy's part. For what news does he give of Blanqui? That the situation of the prisonniers de Belle-Ile est bien triste.†c If that is all Blanqui had to divulge to him, he would have done better to keep his libri tristium†d to himself. Incidentally, Barthélemy's whole letter shows that he is completely out of touch with the French emigration and the French societies in France.

Page me39.199

In order that you, too, may 'adopt to some extent the standpoint of world history'†e I enclose an article from the Augsburg Allgemeine on the spy A. Majer who, here in London, was actually 'chucked out of the house' by his bosom friends, Willich and Schapper.

Page me39.199

I have, I presume, already told you that Herzen is here and is sending round memoirs against Herwegh,†235 who has not only cuckolded him but has extorted 80,000 fr. from him.

Page me39.199

I have not yet been able to do any work on an article or even on the draft of the final instalment of the German article.†214 So engrossed have I been by the incessant correspondence arising out of my domestic troubles that it is 3 weeks since I went to the library — which I also forbore from doing in order to sustain my wife during what was for her a ghastly time.

Page me39.199

Apropos!
Page me39.199
There is no doubt that the Orleanist conspiracy shows greater activity, scope and prospects every day. The gentlemen have coalesced with Cavaignac, Charras, Lamoriciére, Bedeau. Of L. Bonaparte's aides-de-camp 3 have been bought, i.e. substantial sums have been deposited on their behalf in the Bank of England. The following contract has been entered into with the out-and-out republicans. Firstly: Formation of a provisional government consisting solely of generals. Secondly: By way of guarantee, Cavaignac is to receive Marseilles, Lamoriciére Lyons, Charras Paris, Bedeau Strasbourg. Thirdly: At the preliminary elections the people will be called on by the provisional government to decide whether they want the constitution of 1830 and the Orleans dynasty, or the constitution of 1848 and a president. In the latter case, Joinville will come forward as a candidate.

Page Break me39.200
Page me39.200
The Jew, Fould, is in constant touch with the Orleans. The undertaking has been tentatively fixed for the month of March, when Bonaparte will, if necessary, be assassinated by his aides-de-camp. But they would prefer Bonaparte to have become emperor first and done further damage to himself.
Page me39.200
I myself have talked to the Orleanist agent†a who travels freely to and fro between Paris and London. The day before yesterday he and Bangya went to see the Duc d'Aumale.
Page me39.200
I see from a letter of Piali's that, at a private audience in London, Lord Palmerston told a fugitive Italian noblewoman†b all manner of comforting things about Italy, and held out what was to him the no less 'comforting' prospect of becoming British prime minister within the space of a year. How addicted to lies and vanité is old age! Incidentally on one point at least Mr Palmerston did not mince his words. In case of insurrection Lombardy and Venice must, he said, at once unite with Piedmont. The pipe-dreams of an 'Italian republic' must be left to 'the future'.†236
Page me39.200
Dronke, inmate of the MODEL LODGING HOUSE, says he is sorry he has not written. 'He has his reasons.'

Your
K.M.

Page me39.200
There is no doubt that an attempt, obviously clumsy and unsuccessful, was made to open my last envelope, which you returned to me.

Page me39.200
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.201

101
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.201
[Manchester, after 28 September 1852]

Dear Marx,

Have still not seen or heard anything of Weerth. Why the devil should you feel ill at ease with the fellow? In any case, he knows quite well that you've been down on your luck for years and he also knows how things are now, if only from the fact that you're still stuck in those old lodgings.

Page me39.201

I have been removed, i.e. my old landlady has removed, and has carted me with her sans façon.†a It's two doors away, so in future address letters to No. 48 (new numbering) instead of No. 70.

In haste,
Your
F.E.

Page me39.201
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

102
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.201
[Manchester,] 4 October 1852
48 Great Ducie Street

Dear Marx,

Encl. £2. 10. -. Give the 10/- to Dronke, who has searched out a very valuable Slav book†b for me — the amount by which he beat the fellow down is his commission for the discovery; puisqu'il est commerçant, il faut le traiter selon les principes du commerce.†c But tell him to go and post the book to me at once in a plain wrapper like a newspaper, with 6 STAMPS if it weighs less than a pound, and 12 STAMPS if it weighs more, N.B., if it's 1 volume; otherwise 6 STAMPS for each volume, in which case it would be best to send it in a parcel, unstamped, by Pickford & Co. or Carver & Co. If you can discover Carver & Co's office (I believe they are known down there as Chaplin, Horne & Carver or Chaplin, Horne & Co.), it had best go through them to Friedrich Engels, CARE OF Ermen & Engels — they are our CARRIERS. Indeed, this is always the best way to send me parcels.

Page Break me39.202
Page me39.202
As soon as I can see my way somewhat more clearly this month, you shall get more. There are a few debts to be paid, how many I don't yet know. On this will depend how much I can send you.
Page me39.202
Weerth is in Bradford. He won't be here for a week, yet.
Page me39.202
Le roman Pindar prend une tournure tout á fait bourgeoise.†a The poor boy is already suffering from remorse. Because I have given him no news of his wife and mother since the fifteenth of September, he is bombarding me with letters and threatening to write to them direct for news! The fellow seems to imagine that I spend all my days there, as though the Finnish features and Scandinavian-Germanic heart of his cold-blooded better half were as bewitching to me as they were and still are to him. By his evasion,†b Master Pindar had once more gone up a little in my estimation, but these letters bring him right down again. He is a Slav through and through, sentimental in his frivolity and even in his beastliness, servile and arrogant; and he has nothing of the Englishman save in exaggerated — being a Russian, he must exaggerate — taciturnity. Recently the fellow had grown somewhat more garrulous, yet when the long-closed sluice gates finally opened, nothing came out but fadaise.†c On top of that the lovelorn Pindar has exceedingly unsavoury appetites and likes nothing better than to discuss unnatural discoveries. He's wholly uncultivated and withal pedantic, knowing absolutely nothing except a language or two; en matiére de science,†d even the most ordinary mathematics, physics and other school subjects, and especially in history of the most elementary kind, he is utterly ignorant. Ce n'est que son silence acharné qui ait pu faire croire qu'il soit profond.†e He is ni plus ni moins†f than a little Russian bourgeois with the appetites of the

Page Break me39.203
Russian nobility, lazy, dilettante, soft-hearted, would-be blasé and at the same time, alas, a born pedagogue. For as long as I could, I tried to maintain a good opinion of the fellow, but it can't be done. What can one say of an individual who, on reading Balzac's fiction for the first time (and the Cabinet des antiques and Pére Goriot at that) considers it infinitely beneath him and dismisses it with the utmost contempt as something commonplace and quite unoriginal, yet a week after running away, and apparently in all seriousness, writes from London to his deserted wife in the following platitudious terms: 'MY DEAREST IDA, APPEARANCES ARE AGAINST ME, BUT BELIEVE ME, MY HEART IS STILL ENTIRELY YOURS!' There you have the fellow in a nutshell. Though the Swede may possess his heart, as is proved also by his letters to me, he intends that no one but the Frenchwoman shall be presented with his cock. So far as he is concerned, the real piquancy of the whole affair lies in this clash, this Slavonic, sentimental, vulgar contradiction. The Swede, however, has much more sense; she tells anyone who will listen that he can do what he likes with his heart provided he keeps his carnality at home. Besides, the fellow's lack of ideas and worldly wisdom contrast ludicrously with the spiritual pretensions he harbours as a Russian. He has understood neither the Manifesto†a nor Balzac; of that he has given me ample and frequent proof. He doesn't know German, no doubt of that, since he fails to understand the simplest things. I also greatly doubt whether he knows French. Once the mystére with which he held one's interest has gone, nothing remains but une existence manquée.†b Yet in his letters the fellow tries to spin out the mystére that has long since been unveiled; it's ridiculous. You'll see! Within three months gospodin†c Pindar will be back again, bon fils, bon époux, bon bourgeois, plus taciturne que jamais,†d and will continue as before to squander what remains of his mother's fortune without making the slightest attempt to set his hand to anything or study anything. And a fellow like that goes and runs away with an experienced Parisienne — she'll make him rue the day.

Page me39.203

The latest story about the truthful Willich's falsehood is good indeed.†e

Page Break me39.204
Page me39.204

I am also writing to Dronke so that the book will not get lost.†237

Your
F.E.

Page me39.204
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

103
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.204
London, 5 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Cluss,

Your letter of 16 September†a arrived very late today. I am therefore sending only a few lines in reply, since you ask for an answer by return. Next Friday a rather more substantial report will be going off to you.†b My information about the Brüningk woman (she's not a spy but corresponds with her aunt, the Princess Lieven, in Paris, who is notoriously one) came from Bangya. The latter, however, has very important reasons for not being named. If he were, he would forfeit many 'sources of information' which, being important to us, must be preserved.

Page me39.204

You can write and tell Schnauffer that he merely has to answer that no further authorities need be cited since his (Brüningk's) two friends, Kinkel and Willich, have themselves been spreading it about in London that Mrs von Brüningk has suspect political connections.

Page me39.204

That Willich has been saying things of this kind is so well known that Schimmelpfennig has taken him to task about it. If necessary, witnesses can be cited to support this.

Page me39.204

Kinkel voiced this suspicion outright, e.g. to his friend Kamm, the brushmaker (from Bonn), when the latter passed through here on his way to America. Kamm helped to spread it further.

Page Break me39.205

Page me39.205

(Willich, of course, did not discover that the woman was suspect until after she had dropped him.)

Your
K.M.

Page me39.205

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

104

MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS
IN WASHINGTON

Page me39.205

[London,] 8 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Cluss,

So necessary have your weekly letters become to me that I am far from satisfied with your change of method and, out of vexation at your silence, have likewise remained silent.

Page me39.205

You'll have had my letter about Brüningk.†a We must — et nous sommes dans le vrai†b — repay the shameless Gottfried†c in kind. According to Imandt's last report of the London guarantors' meeting,†d extracts of which appeared in the Wecker, Techow (now departed for Australia) rose and said: '...those in particular who had enjoyed Brüningk's hospitality should be ashamed of themselves for spreading calumnies about Mrs von Brüningk.' Kinkel, of the unashamedly unruffled brow, protested his innocence, although Imandt could have proved that he was lying. Willich sat as though nailed to his seat.

Page me39.205

As regards the second matter, that of remuneration,†e I can do nothing further since my informant, Biskamp (whom I would beg you not to name) has settled in France and I have no correspondence with him. However, salary or no salary, this much is certain:

Page Break me39.206

Page me39.206

1. that Kinkel and Willich spent £200 and failed adequately to account for it to the London guarantors' congress;

Page me39.206

2. Willich, on the pretext of meeting the cost of correspondence, remunerated himself for as long as he could;

Page me39.206

3. that when Kinkel — proof of his purity in money matters — arrived in Paris after his escape†238 he immediately approached one of the leaders of the Slav-German etc. revolutionary committee there and informed him in confidence that it would be desirable if the German democrats in Paris were to give him a welcoming supper which he would then get the press to trumpet abroad. (As in fact later happened.) To the remark: where is the money coming from? Gottfried replied that it could be taken out of the revolutionary committee funds. To the further remark that there was no money in the exchequer but rather a considerable deficit, Gottfried opined that the member (Bangya) to whom he was speaking could advance it, he himself being so frightfully popular in Germany that money would come flowing in. Subsequently this same Kinkel got Bangya to advance him 500 fr. for his personal use on the account of the revolutionary committee. His reçu†a is still in existence. He has not repaid it to this very day.

Page me39.206

I have seen the reçu. But Bangya insists on not being named, likewise Häfner, who was also present. These people are right. The object of Kinkel's policy is by means of bare-faced denials (that the man is lying is proved by the business with me†b and with Dr Wiss, whom he forced to make a public statement by asserting that he had no connection with the 'loan in his name'. See New-Yorker Deutsche Zeitung and Wiss' own statement therein.†239 Cite this last fact), his object, I say, is to compel me to show my hand and BY AND BY to discover whence I draw the information with which to catch him out. This, he thinks, would draw my sting. Ça ne va pas.†c

Page me39.206
You'll be able to follow in the Kölnische Zeitung the proceedings against our friends that opened on the 4th of this month in the Court of Assizes. The jury is damn bad. It consists of big landowners and big capitalists, viz: Regierungsrat von Münch-Bellinghausen, Häbling von Lanzenauer, Freiherr von Fürstenberg, von Bianca, von Tesseler, vom Rath; Joest (the biggest manufacturer — sugar — in Cologne); Herstadt (one of the leading bankers in Cologne), D. Leiden (big capitalist). Finally Leven (wine merchant) and Professor Kräusler.

Page Break me39.207
Page me39.207
Have my last two articles on the GENERAL ELECTION appeared in the Tribune†a? The first two caused a great stir here in England. Jones reproduced them.†b
Page me39.207
Enclosed you will find:
1. Letter from Imandt.
Page me39.207
2. Copy of an article from The Morning Advertiser of 6 October,†c in which the luckless Ruge-Ronge endeavour to assert themselves. The League here†d would now ask you to write by return a letter to The Morning Advertiser (signed Dr Smyth OR SOMETHING LIKE THAT) in which you make fun of the German LONE STAR which has neither LONE nor STAR, and reassure The Morning Advertiser about the threat to America presented by this soap-bubble that has long since burst there. (Copy to be sent to us.)†240
Page me39.207
3. A letter from Massol in Paris,†241 which please return. Massol is one of the cleverest of the older Frenchmen (those of the forties), former St Simonist, Proudhonist, etc. The man and the book he alludes to are Proudhon and his book on Bonaparte.†e
Page me39.207
It seems to me that you people should now go for Heinzen in such a way as to torture him by pointing out how, since '47, this oaf has systematically ignored every attack relating to matters of principle (as, of late, that of Weydemeyer and subsequently your own†242), only to reappear a few months later as much of a charlatan as ever, quasi re bene gesta.†f

Your
K.M.

Page me39.207
N.B. The morsel of erudition (striking in view of Heinzen's well-known ignorance) which he reveals in treating of the historical development of marriage, was borrowed by the unhappy man from G. Jung, Geschichte der Frauen, Part 1, Frankfurt am Main 1850. Jung himself drew his material from:

Page me39.207
C. Meiners, Geschichte des weiblichen Geschlechts, 4 vols. Hanover 1788-1800, and from:

Page Break me39.208
Page me39.208
J.A. de Ségur, Les femmes etc., 3 vols. Paris 1803, and sprinkled it with Hegelian-Young German sauce.
Page me39.208
Meiners and Ségur drew on:
Alexander (W.), History of Women etc., 2 vols. London 1782, 3rd ed.
Page me39.208
Thomas (de l'Ac. franç.), Essai sur le caractére etc. des femmes etc., Paris 1773.
Page me39.208
For the manner in which the Hegelian school finally sums the thing up — that old buffoon Ruge, now apparently in his dotage, is too stupid to count — see:
Page me39.208
Unger (J.), Die Ehe in ihrer welthistorischen Entwicklung. Vienna 1850.
Page me39.208
This 'bibliography' will enable you not only to deprive the unhappy Heinzen of all desire to pass off as new discoveries a few platitudes filched from the socialists but also to provide the German-American public, if interested in the subject, with the sources where the material may be found.

Page me39.208
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

105
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.208
[Manchester,] Sunday, 10 October 1852

Dear Marx,
I am fed up with the perpetual delays over the pamphlet.†a Month after month we are told it will appear and it never does. One excuse after another is trotted out and then dropped. Finally it is said to be definitely coming out at Michaelmas. La Trinité se passe, Marlbrough ne revient pas.†b Quite the contrary, for now we hear the man is dead and Bangya doesn't know what has become of the manuscript. It's too maddening. We must at long last insist on being told the plain truth. The thing's getting more suspicious every day. I don't, and you certainly don't, want our joint work to fall into the wrong hands. We wrote it for the benefit of the public, and not for the private delectation of the police in Berlin or anywhere else, and if Bangya proves intractable, I intend to act off my own bat. Our clerk Charles,†a whom you know, is going to the Continent next week, via Hamburg and Berlin. I have asked him to inquire carefully into the matter in Berlin and, if the week he is spending there should not suffice, to enlist the help of our local agent. But I'll wager that we'll see what's at the bottom of this stink. What is all this about Eisermann or Eisenmann, the bookseller of whom there is no trace whatever in the directory of booksellers? But tracking down the 'editor of the former Constitutionelle Zeitung' should not prove difficult. If things aren't in order, it is absolutely essential that we make a public statement, and that in all the more widely read German papers, so that the same trick won't be played on us as was played on Blanqui with the piéce†b Taschereau.†243 As for Bangya's mystery-mongering, it is, in this instance at least, utterly uncalled-for, and having, for my part, had enough of TERGIVERSATION, I shall now take what steps I think fit.

Page Break me39.209
Page me39.209

Papa Kinkel is coming up here to give German lectures under the auspices of third and fourth rate poetical Jews. Cela sera beau.†c The secretary of the Athenaeum†244 tried to induce me to subscribe with the remark: 'WHEREVER THERE WAS SOMETHING LIKE A CHEQUERED LIFE, WERE IT ONLY AN ESCAPE FROM A SHIPWRECK OR SO, THERE WAS ALWAYS A NATURAL AND FAIR GROUND FOR SYMPATHY.' Voilá les arguments qu'on emploie pour lui mendier un auditoire.†d
Page me39.209

No other news. Write and tell me if you hear anything more about the affair of the pamphlet, but it's hardly likely to affect my decision respecting Charles. Warmest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.209
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.210

106
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.210
[London,] 12 October [1852]

28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

More about your letter later.

Page me39.210

Enclosed:

1. A document, 'The German Loan Star Society', smuggled into the Advertiser†a by Ruge-Ronge.

Page me39.210

2. A cutting from Weydemeyer's Lithographierte Correspondenz about the effect of this dangerous 'SOCIETY' on their League congress at Wheeling.†245

Page me39.210

3. An article for Dana.†246 But the whole of it must go off, as I have a mass of political stuff for next time. I had a bad headache when I was scribbling the thing. So don't be afraid to deal with it FREELY in translating.

Page me39.210

You may have read the infamous article in yesterday's Times, a contribution dated Berlin.†b All the cur has done is to translate from the Neue Preussische Zeitung (the Cologne trial) and add one or two scurrilous comments from his own STOCK.†247

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.210

First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.211

107

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me39.211

[Manchester, 14 October 1852]

Dear Marx,

It is physically impossible to translate the whole article for you. I received it this morning. Have been so busy at the office all day that I didn't know whether I was coming or going. This evening took tea at 7-8 and just glanced through the thing. Then got down to translating. Now — 11.30 — have done the part I am sending you,†a up to the natural break in the article. At 12 o'clock it must be in the post. So, you see, you will get as much as can possibly be done.

Page me39.211

The rest†b will be translated directly — next week you can send it either via Southampton or on Friday.†c In the meantime finish off your next article; part of it might be able to go on Friday, if not, the following Tuesday, when there is another YANKEE STEAMER. So it doesn't really matter. But make sure I get the manuscript early; I am expecting Weerth any day and will then have to try to make best use of my time, since my days are more than fully taken up with business.
Page me39.211
Regards to your wife and children, Dronke, Lupus, Freiligrath.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.211
Mark my word, the Cologne people won't get off. What a cur the presiding judge†d is to bait Bürgers so.†248

Page me39.211
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.212

108
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.212
M[anchester,] 18 October 1852

Dear Marx,
Herewith the remainder of the recent†a article.†b Yesterday I also received the next one.†249 You can at once dispatch VIA LIVERPOOL PER UNITED STATES MAIL STEAMER the piece I am posting you today; the Pacific sails on Wednesday morning. You will be getting some more on Friday.†c
Page me39.212
You really must stop making your articles so long. Dana cannot possibly want more than 1 - 1 1/2 columns, it would be too much for one number. I shall again have to split this new article, but it's difficult to do and I don't yet know where. Five-7 pages in your wife's handwriting is quite enough and if you give more in one article, Dana won't even thank you for it.
Page me39.212
Bürgers and Röser, and perhaps Otto and Nothjung likewise, seem to me pretty well done for. There doesn't appear to be anything at all against Daniels, Becker†d or Jacobi, and I hope that these at least will get off. Becker has extricated himself with great effrontery. The more these are exonerated the greater, I think, will be the zeal with which the judges and jury will set about the compromised men; the injured bourgeoisie and the injured State want their victims.

Page me39.212
The edges of the seals on all the letters I am getting from you show signs of having been gone over with a hot iron but, so far as I can judge, pour le roi de Prusse.†e The gum on the envelope prevents them from getting inside.
Page me39.212
Weerth is here, has brought me the parcel, and sends his regards to you all. Szemere's manuscript on Kossuth is far better than the one on Görgey — he's a match for Kossuth. I have not yet been able to look at Pieper's translation,†a being very busy at the office and dog-tired most evenings.

Page Break me39.213
Page me39.213
Warmest regards to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.213
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

109
MARX TO A. von BRÜNINGK
IN LONDON
Page me39.213
[Rough copy]
[London,] 18 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

To Baron A. von Brüningk
I have received by today's post the Baltimore Wecker dated 27 September 1852, together with your statement. Since I, as one of the correspondents of A. Cluss in Washington, am directly involved in this matter, I would request you to appoint a meeting-place for Thursday or Friday (of this week).†b I for my part shall bring a witness with me and would therefore request you to do likewise, but would point out in advance that the said witness may not be either Ruge, Ronge, Kinkel, or Willich, since these gentlemen are implicated in the matter now pending, nor can it be Mr Schimmelpfennig. When in Paris, that gentleman swore in so many words to 'destroy me by slander of every possible description'. While I do not believe in his destructive ability, I cannot, in view of this assertion, possibly consent to meet him.

Page Break me39.214
Page me39.214

I shall then explain to you my connection with the Baltimore article†250 and, should my explanation not suffice, I shall be prepared to give you the satisfaction customary among gentlemen.

Yours truly
Dr Karl Marx

Page me39.214
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

110
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.214
London, 20 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I recommend most highly to you the bearer of these lines, Colonel Pleyel. Although I am not personally acquainted with him, he is most 'highly recommended' by Colonel Bangya whom, of course, you know.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.214
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

111
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.214
[Manchester, 22 October 1852]

Dear Marx,

If you want to count on receiving the articles for Dana punctually in future, you must take care not to send me Hungarian COLONELS, especially of a Thursday night. Yesterday the fellow†a took up the whole of my evening and intends to come back today — he is pretty well-versed in a number of subjects, military included, and is the most interesting Hungarian I have met so far, but he is also a German-Austrian aristocrat.

Page Break me39.215
Page me39.215

So we are now recognised by the State, and even by the police, as 'intelligent' people, teste†b Stieber. A fine business. The way that stupid Stieber tries to shuffle off responsibility for his own spy, Cherval, onto our chaps!†251 Have you any idea why Kothes and Bermbach have been arrested?†c Those two, of all people — it's ominous! But we shall discipline Haupt.†252 Weerth will find out where he is in South America and, on his arrival there, will unmask him. To that end we shall have to get hold of the Kölnische Ztg. or some other paper containing his statements. Could you not attend to this? Do everything you can; it would really be splendid to make the rascal feel the power of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung as far away as Brazil.
Page me39.215

More in a day or two, and also translations.†253

Your
F.E.

Page me39.215
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel Zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

112
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.215
[London,] 25 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

We must make some other arrangements about our correspondence. We undoubtedly have a fellow-reader in Derby's Ministry. Moreover, there is again someone keeping watch, or at least attempting to do so, outside my house (of an evening). Hence I can write and tell you nothing I deem it inadvisable for the Prussian government to learn at this moment.

Page Break me39.216

Page me39.216

Dana is treating me very badly. I wrote to him about 6 weeks ago, telling him exactly how things stood with me and that I must be paid by return for the articles I had sent. He has regularly published the articles but has not yet sent the money. I, of course, must continue punctiliously, notwithstanding. Otherwise it is I who will suffer in the end.

Page me39.216

Now, as much as 5 weeks ago, I mollified my LANDLORD with my prospects in America. Today the fellow calls and makes a fearful scene in front of me and the HOUSEKEEPER. Upon my finally resorting to the ultima ratio,†a i.e. abuse, he retired, threatening that if I didn't produce any money this week, he would throw me out into the street, but first would land me with a BROKER.

Page me39.216

4-5 days ago 130 copies of the Brumaire arrived from Cluss. As yet I have been unable to get them from the customs because this would mean paying 10/9d. As soon as I've got the stuff out, I'll send it to the place you know and at once draw a bill on the same. With this and the Dana business I now have over £30 outstanding, yet often have to lose an entire day for a shilling. I assure you that, when I consider my wife's sufferings and my own impotence, I feel like consigning myself to the devil.

Page me39.216

Kothes and Bermbach were arrested because I had sent the latter through the former a work necessary to the defence, which (despite thin paper and small pearl type) was somewhat bulky.†254 The government thought it had made a splendid catch. But on the closer examination jeune†b Saedt raised heaven and earth to have the thing suppressed, for the document contained curious STRICTURES on the capability, etc., of jeune Saedt and could, if communicated to the juries, only help to acquit the accusés.†c

Page me39.216

In the Neue Preussische Zeitung, 'G. Weerth' is said to be a member of the Central Authority in Cologne, and, indeed, this is cited from the bill of indictment.

Page me39.216

Tell Weerth that I have heard nothing from Duncker.†255

Your
K.M.

Page me39.216

As soon as the trial is over, and whatever its outcome, we two must bring out one or two sheets, 'For the Enlightenment of the

Page Break me39.217
Public'. No such favourable moment to address the nation en large†a will ever recur. Furthermore, we must not tolerate any semblance of RIDICULE which not even the moral dignity and scientific profundity of the gentle Heinrich†b are capable of dispelling.

Page me39.217
Cherval has himself written to the German Workers' Society in London†24: saying that he 'is a spy, but in the noble sense of ”Cooper's spy”'.†c I have conveyed the necessary explanation to one of the lawyers†d by a safe route.
Page me39.217
We should already start casting about with a view to the publication on the 'Cologne trial' mooted above. I think it would be best if you were to write to Campe asking him to give you the name of a reliable agent, should he himself be too afraid. Since your credit is good, the agent can be told that he will receive the money in, say, 3 months' time (against a bill), if he has not in the meantime repaid himself from the sales (as he certainly will do). For that matter, the cost of printing this sort of stuff would amount at most to 25 talers.
Page me39.217
Vale!†e And think the matter over. We cannot remain silent and if we don't see to the printing in good time, we shall again miss the boat. We should, of course, have to make sure that the agent is not downright dishonest, for the thing will even have 'commercial' value.

Page me39.217
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

113
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.217
[London,] 26 October [1852]

Dear Engels,
Tomorrow morning Weerth will find, along with this scrawl, a letter from me addressed to him at Steinthal's and enclosed in it another to Schneider II,†256 which you should attend to forthwith. The thing is of the utmost importance and must not be delayed for an instant. So please neither of you embark on your daily round until you have read the thing and sent it off.

Page Break me39.218

Your
K.M.

Page me39.218
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

114
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.218
Manchester, 27 October 1852

D.M.,

When I wrote yesterday,†257 I had only cursorily read Stieber's statements and was therefore most agreeably surprised today when your document†a gave a turn to the case which now no longer makes me despair of the acquittal of all the accused. En effet,†b Stieber will be utterly discredited. I made a further copy of the thing and dispatched it to Cologne by 2 different and very good routes†258; I also did what should already have been done in London, namely affixed the 2 notes in Hirsch's handwriting†259 to the original with sealing-wax, at the same time recording the fact by appending my signature so that, if the worst comes to the worst, they cannot be detained unless the whole thing is detained. I have now discovered several more ways of communicating with Cologne and, although there is a 99% chance that the things will reach Schneider safely and on the same day by the first two routes (which, however, cannot be used again), it might be advisable for you to send me a 3rd copy, authenticated by you, with fresh samples of Hirsch's handwriting, which I could then send by yet another route. Anyway, the Prussians cannot detain this thing; it would mean criminal proceedings against those involved.

Page Break me39.219
Page me39.219

Your letter received today had been tampered with, not all 4 corners of the envelope being properly secured by the seal. Whether the one to St.†a had also been tampered with is difficult to say, for the firm had opened the outer cover. But it proved so easy to open that I am inclined to assume that here too someone had already been at it. So the Steinthal address is no longer any good either. Write to our old friend, James Belfield, Golden Lion, Deansgate, Manchester, with 'F.E.', no more, on the inside envelope. In the case of very important and dangerous things, do as I am now doing: Make up a parcel of anything with your letter inside it, and send it to my house per Pickford & Co.; alternatively, per Chaplin, Horne & Carver, addressed to me at Ermen & Engels, unstamped. That is perfectly safe. But see that the addresses, particularly if sent by post, are written by turns in different hands and, when parcels are sent by carrier, don't have them always taken to the office from the same place by the same person. Then the latter way will be perfectly safe. So you must either give me a safe address in London to which I can send things in this way, or get someone with an unsuspicious landlord to assume a false name, á la Williams, or let me know whether Lupus is still at 4 Broad Street and Dronke at the Model Lodging House, and where any of our other reliable people live so that I can use different addresses.

Page me39.219

By employing all these methods alternately we shall achieve adequate security. In addition, to make it less conspicuous, you should send letters containing matters of no consequence direct by post, and I shall do the same.
Page me39.219

Copying out the document has made such demands on my time that I really don't know whether I shall be able to keep my word in the fullest sense as regards Dana and Friday's†b STEAMER. At all events, something will be forthcoming. You might bear in mind that a lengthy spell of more or less uninterrupted chaste living is again causing me to burgeon like mad at a certain spot, and at times prevents me from sitting down; il faut que cela finisse.†c
Page me39.219

The statement made by old Justizrat Müller will have put Stieber into a blue funk over his original minutes.†260 It also reveals how incensed jurists over there must be by the infamies of the police which Stieber, in his old-Prussian ignorance of Rhenish law, judicial procedure and Rhenish public opinion, is so unashamedly proclaiming from the house-tops with childish glee at his own cleverness. C'est de bonne augure.†a

Page Break me39.220
Page me39.220

It's a pretty state of affairs: the police steal, forge, break into desks, perjure themselves, give false evidence and, withal, claim this privilege vis-á-vis communists who are hors la société†b! This, and the way in which the police, at their most rascally, are usurping all the functions of the prosecution, pushing Saedt into the background, and submitting unauthenticated scraps of paper, mere rumours, reports and hearsay, as things legally proven, as evidence — c'est trop fort!†c It's bound to have an effect.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.220
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

115
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.220
London, 27 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I wrote and told you that I would compose a 'Lithographed Circular' about the 'Cologne trial'.†d That 'L.C.' has now become a pamphlet of some 3 sheets.†261 The thing cannot be lithographed now for two reasons: firstly, such an extensive lithograph would prove very expensive while yielding nothing, for one could not in all decency sell a lithographed circular of this kind. Secondly, nobody could read or be expected to read, a lithograph of 3 printed sheets.
Page me39.220

So the only thing to do is to get the thing printed. IMPOSSIBLE in Germany. London is the only conceivable place. It will also be possible to obtain credit if only I am in a position to make a part payment in advance. I would like you to discuss the matter with Weerth and Strohn. But not a day is to be lost. If the thing doesn't come out now, it will no longer be of any interest. My pamphlet is not a vindication of principles, but rather a denunciation of the Prussian government based on the facts and the course of events. Needless to say, I myself am incapable of contributing so much as a centime to the thing. Yesterday I pawned a coat dating back to my Liverpool days in order to buy writing paper.

Page Break me39.221
Page me39.221

The Empire is progressing splendidly.†262 Bonaparte knows better than anyone how to ensure that this time the commercial crisis will hit France even more cruelly than England.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.221
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

116
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.221
[London,] 28 October 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Have received the money and, today, a parcel with the letter.†a In my last to you and Weerth†b I deliberately refrained from mentioning anything which, had the letter been opened, might have further enlightened the Prussian government as to the steps we have taken against them. Today I shall give you a detailed account. I believe we have laid a countermine that will blow the whole governmental humbug sky high. Those Prussians shall see qu'ils ont á faire á plus fort.†c
Page me39.221
On Monday Schneider II will be receiving via Düsseldorf (addressed to a merchant, an acquaintance of Freiligrath's) a letter from me,†263 the content of which is briefly as follows: 1. In 1847,†264 when I was in Brussels, Cherval was admitted into the League†a in London by Mr Schapper and at the latter's suggestion. Not, therefore, in 1848 by me in Cologne. 2. From the late spring of 1848 to the summer of 1850 Cherval lived continuously in London, as his HOUSEKEEPERS can testify. Hence, he did not spend this period in Paris as a propagandist. 3. Not until the summer of 1850 did he go to Paris. The papers found on him and the statements he made before the Paris Assizes prove that he was Schapper-Willich's agent and our enemy.

Page Break me39.222
Page me39.222
That Cherval was a police spy is borne out by the following: 1. His miraculous escape (along with Gipperich) from prison in Paris immediately after sentence. 2. His unmolested stay in London although a common criminal. 3. Mr de Rémusat (I have authorised Schneider to name him if necessary) tells me that Cherval offered him his services as an agent for the Prince of Orleans; thereupon he, Rémusat, wrote to Paris and was sent the following documents (to be kept for a few hours, so that copies might be made; these he showed me), from which it emerges that Cherval was first a Prussian police spy and is now a Bonapartist one. The Prussian police reject his demand for money on the grounds of 'double emploi'†b and the fact that he is being paid by the French.†265

Page me39.222
Finally, I provided Schneider with a few simple explanations on points of theory which will enable him to distinguish between the Schapper-Willich documents and our own and to show how they differ.
Page me39.222
Besides the letter to Schneider II sent off by you,†c the same document went via Frankfurt am Main (where it was posted by old Ebner who obtained a reçu†d) to the lawyer, von Hontheim; this was on Tuesday.†e The same package contained: 1. A letter from Becker to me, with both London and Cologne postmarks, from which it emerges that our correspondence was primarily concerned with the book-trade.†266 2. Two enclosures from Daniels to me in Becker's letter, which relate solely to his manuscript.†267 3. Two excerpts from Hirsch's minutes.†268 4. An excerpt from The People's Paper in which by good fortune Cherval actually gives his address. 5. Letters from Mr Stieber (in his own hand) to me†269 at the time of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; see p. 3 of this letter.

Page me39.222

On Tuesday evening a letter from Schneider arrived with an occasional traveller; from this it transpires that his first, sent by post, was intercepted. However, he received a registered letter from here, written to him at my request by Dronke, in which he was told that 6-8 weeks ago Hentze was over here at Willich's, that Willich was entertained by him and that Willich himself boasted that he had given Hentze instructions about how to proceed against us. Schneider writes that all the lawyers are convinced that the documents are bogus, and he urgently asks for proof of this and, in particular, of the fact that Mrs Daniels never wrote to me.

Page Break me39.223
Page me39.223

For want of money nothing could have been done on Wednesday, but luckily your £2 arrived. I therefore went to the [Great] Marlborough Street POLICE COURT (BEFORE MR WINGHAM, MAGISTRATE OF THE METROPOLITAN DISTRICT, who asked for an account of the affair and furieusement declared himself for us and against the Prussian government) where I had two things authenticated:
Page me39.223

1. The handwriting of Rings and Liebknecht; according to Schneider II's letter they signed nearly all Hirsch's minutes. As you know, Rings is barely able to write and as a taker of minutes was therefore a splendid choice on Hirsch's part.†259
Page me39.223

2. I got the landlord of the pub where we hold our meetings to testify that, since March, the 'SOCIETY OF DR MARX' (I'm the only one the fellow knows), some 16-18 strong, has been regularly foregathering once a week and no more, namely on Wednesdays, and that neither he nor his WAITER[S] have ever seen us put pen to paper. The stuff about Wednesdays was also testified by a neighbour of his, a German baker and householder.
Page me39.223

Both documents, bearing the seal of the POLICE COURT, have been written out in duplicate. The first copy of the same I sent via [...] to G. Jung who, by a stroke of good fortune, wrote to me 3 days ago saying that he was living in Frankfurt am Main, and giving his address. Jung will take the things to Cologne himself or send them by express delivery. The letter he received is addressed to Schneider II and contains, besides the documents mentioned and authenticated by the police court: a) A copy of the first letter to Schneider†270 along with 2 more copies of excerpts from Hirsch's minutes. b) Excerpt from a letter from Becker to myself, the reverse side of which fortunately bears London and Cologne postmarks. To quote Becker's own words (the bit I have sent contains no more than this):

'Willich is sending me the funniest letters; I do not reply, but this does not prevent him from describing his latest plans for a revolution. He has appointed me to revolutionise the Cologne garrison!!! The other day we laughed till the tears came. His idiocy will spell disaster for x people, for a single letter would suffice to guarantee the salaries of a hundred Demagogue†139 judges for three years. As soon as I have completed the revolution in Cologne he would have no objection to assuming the leadership for all subsequent operations. Very kind of him! Fraternal greetings. Your Becker."†271

Page Break me39.224

c) Three letters from Bermbach to me which reveal the nature of our correspondence and one of which (that of March) also contains an answer to my letter†272 about Hirsch, the denunciation of Mrs Daniels and the consequent searching of her house.†a This letter proves that she did not correspond with me. d) Copy of the letter from Stieber. e) Instructions to Schneider, in which I inform him among other things that the authenticated documents (or duplicate) will be sent on Thursday (28 October) by registered post from London direct to his address, and that he will at the same time receive the certificate of registration via Düsseldorf from W., the merchant. So if the government detain it this time, we can show that we have caught them au flagrant délit†b while they, for their part, will have deprived the defence of nothing more than a duplicate.
Page me39.224
In the Advertiser next Saturday (30 October) you will find a short statement on the infamous articles in The Times†c and The Daily News. It will be signed: 'F. Engels, F. Freiligrath, K. Marx, W. Wolff.' Also in several weeklies.†d
Page me39.224
This time, I think, the Prussian government will be discredited in a manner not even they have ever experienced, and will see for themselves that the people they are dealing with are not blundering democrats. Through Stieber's intervention they have saved our fellows. Even Bermbach's arrest is a stroke of luck. For otherwise his letters could not have been sent over there. He would have strenuously objected for fear of being placed in temporary custody. Now that he's in jug everything's ALL RIGHT.
Page me39.224
Pére Barthélemy, born for the galleys, will make the acquaintance of Van Diemen's Land†273 this time for a change.†274 One of this fellow's dirty tricks is his persistent refusal to admit the facts, thereby implicating the seconds yet further. However, 2 have already stated that they were Cournet's seconds. As the gallows loom larger, no doubt the 3rd will forswear his dévouement†e and likewise admit to having been a second.
Page me39.224

A few days ago the guarantors met at Reichenbach's, all being present save for Kinkel and Willich who have been more or less expelled. Reichenbach, Löwe of Calbe, Imandt, Schimmelpfennig,

Page Break me39.225
Meyen, Oppenheim. Reichenbach, and the rest along with him, resolved to return the money to the donors. Reichenbach stated that their main reason was as follows:

'Willich and Kinkel are engaged in downright escroquerie.†a Thousands of notes bearing his (Reichenbach's) signature are still circulating in America and they are disposing of them at a discount through their agents, pocketing the proceeds and using them for private purposes.'

Page me39.225
Only the winding up of the whole filthy business would provide him with the pretext for exposing in public the escroquerie being perpetrated in his name, and forestalling any further embezzlement. You can see what those respectable citizens Willich and Kinkel have come to. Des escrocs ... voilá le dernier mot.†b
Page me39.225
Best regards to Weerth.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.225
Safe-addresses down here in my next.†c

'No. 177 of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung contains a news item from your correspondent in Frankfurt am Main dated December 21 in which a base lie is reported to the effect that being a police spy I went to Frankfurt to try to discover the murderers of Prince Lichnowski and General Auerswald. I was in fact in Frankfurt on the 21st but stayed only one day and as you can see from the accompanying certificate I was engaged in purely private business on behalf of a lady from here, Frau von Schwezler. I have long since returned to Berlin and resumed my work as defence counsel. I would refer you moreover to the official correction in this matter that has already appeared in No. 338 of the Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung of December 22†d and in No. 248 of the Berlin National-Zeitung. I believe that I may expect from your respect for the truth that you will print the enclosed correction in your paper without delay and that you will also give me the name of your slanderous informant in accordance with your legal obligations, for I cannot possibly permit such a libel to go unpunished, otherwise I shall regretfully be compelled to proceed against your editorial board.
Page me39.225
'I believe that in recent times democracy is indebted to no one more than myself. It was I who rescued hundreds of democrats who had been charged from the nets of the criminal courts. It was I who even while a state of siege was proclaimed here persistently and fearlessly challenged the authorities (and do so to this very day), while all the cowardly and contemptible fellows (the so-called democrats) had long since fled the field. When democratic organs treat me in this fashion it is scarcely an encouragement to me to make further efforts.

Page me39.225
'The real joke, however, in the present case lies in the clumsiness of the organs of democracy. The rumour that I went to Frankfurt as a police agent was spread first by that notorious organ of reaction, the Neue Preussische Zeitung, in order to undermine my activities as defence counsel that gave that paper such offence. The other Berlin papers have long since corrected this report. But the democratic papers are so inept that they parrot this stupid lie. If I had wished to go to Frankfurt as a spy it would certainly not be announced beforehand in every newspaper. And how could Prussia send a police official to Frankfurt which has enough competent officials of its own? Stupidity has always been the failing of the democrats and their opponents' cunning has always brought them to victory.

Page Break me39.226
Page me39.226
'It is likewise a contemptible lie to say that years ago I was a police spy in Silesia. At that time I was openly employed as a police officer and as such I did my duty. Contemptible lies have been circulated about me. If anyone can prove that I insinuated my way into his favour let him come forth and do so. Anyone can make assertions and tell lies. — I think of you as an honest, decent man and so I expect from you a satisfactory answer by return of post. The democratic papers are generally in disrepute here because of the many lies they publish. I hope that you are a man of a different stamp.

Respectfully yours,
Stieber, Doctor at Law, etc.,
Berlin, Ritterstrasse 65.
'Berlin, December 26, 1848'†275

Page me39.226
'I herewith certify that last week Dr Stieber travelled to Frankfurt and Wiesbaden on my behalf in order to settle a private lawsuit.

Widow of the late President von Schwezler von Lecton, Dame of the Order of Louise.'†a Seal

Page me39.226
Now I would ask you to write the following message to Schneider, and dispatch it without delay by the 3rd route to Cologne indicated in your letter.†b
Page me39.226
'While it is true that Stieber bought the 14-16 documents belonging to the Willich-Schapper clique, he did at the same time steal them. For he incited a certain Reuter to steal in return for cash. It was some time since Reuter had actually been a 'police official' but he had OCCASIONALLY been a SPY paid á la tâche†c by the Prussian embassy. He had never belonged to a communist society, not even the public German Workers' Society in London.†24 Reuter lived in the same house as Dietz, secretary and archivist to the Willich-Schapper central authority.†276 Reuter broke into Dietz's bureau and handed over the papers to somebody, either Stieber or Schulz. The affair came out long before proceedings began in the Cologne Court of Assizes. For while under arrest in Hanover, Stechan was confronted by the examining magistrate with several letters he had written to Dietz in the latter's capacity as secretary to the refugee committee presided over by Schapper.†277 As everyone knows, Stechan then escaped from prison. Once in London, he wrote to Hanover demanding those letters so that he could proceed against Reuter in the English courts:

Page Break me39.227
Page me39.227
'1. For forced entry and theft.
Page me39.227
'2. For false evidence. For he maintains that in his letter — which has now also been placed before the Cologne jurymen by Stieber — the words “530 talers, 500 for the leaders” are an interpolation for which the police were responsible. At the time, all he had sent to London was 30 talers, nor had he said a word about leaders.
Page me39.227
'Needless to say, the Hanoverian court did not accede to Stechan's demand. The said Reuter stole all the documents by breaking into Dietz's bureau. Dietz and the Schapper clique did not find out about the matter until Stechan arrived here.'
Page me39.227
I have this moment received your parcel, my dear Engels. So there is no need for you to copy out the above. I shall send it myself direct, in one of the envelopes I have received.
Page me39.227
Tell Weerth that he is now permanently assured of one of the 'ministerial' appointments put at my disposal by Stieber, if he doesn't prefer the post of ambassador to Paris that was intended for him.†278

Your
K.M.

Page me39.227
If you have important things to tell me, address the letter to: A. Johnson, Esq., (Bullion Office, Bank of England).

Page me39.227
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.228

117
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.228
Manchester, 28 October 1852

Dear Marx,

Yesterday I sent you a volume of Dureau de la Malle†a and a letter per Carver & Co.†b Enclosed herewith you will find various covers done up to look like commercial ones, and enclosed therein envelopes for Hontheim and Esser I, who are less likely than Schneider to arouse the suspicions of the philistines. If you think it advisable, you can always enclose a sealed envelope for Schneider. However, I don't see why you shouldn't every now and again write a line or two to the other defence counsel to make them feel that they are important. I also enclose a commercial seal; your old one bearing Weydemeyer's arms and the clumsy S are useless. When writing to Manchester also use any other old SIXPENNY seal.
Page me39.228

Every so often send Schneider a relatively unimportant letter by registered post so as to mislead the fellows and make them believe that we have dropped our clandestine methods for want of addresses.
Page me39.228

There can be no doubt that the citizens whose addresses you will find here will see to it that the letters reach their destination.
Page me39.228

You should draw counsel's attention to the obvious CRIMES and délits†c committed by the police and make sure they enter a plea for Stieber's arrest on grounds of perjury and false evidence; the fellow has effectively committed PERJURY in the case of your letter to Kothes.†279
Page me39.228

By this evening's post a letter about more humdrum matters.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.228
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.229

118
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.229
Manchester, 28 October 1852
By the 2nd post

Dear Marx,

Herewith 1 article for Dana — the thing couldn't be broken off at any other point.†a If I manage to finish the whole lot this evening, I shall take it†b to the post later. In the meantime this will do so that you may at least have something on time. For that matter, Dana will have to be content with 3/4 á 4/5 of a column for a change, especially if he pays so slowly.

Page me39.229

It wouldn't surprise me at all if the Cologne trial were to last another month. There does not seem to have been a sitting on Monday, maybe because one of the accused or a couple of jurymen were unwell, or because everyone needed two consecutive days of rest. Especially with all the fine witnesses, none of whom can give any evidence. Mr Hentze has really been taken down a peg; Weerth met the gallant man in Hamburg, whereupon he railed against you most frightfully — cela t'acquitte de toute obligation envers lui.†c Moreover, he admitted frankly that, if he was angry, it was for philistine reasons.

Page me39.229

So write direct — by REGISTERED LETTER — to one of the lawyers, pointing out that the prosecution has been taken completely out of the hands of Mr Saedt and put into those of Stieber, the police spy who, with the Public Prosecutor's tacit consent, is advancing wholly novel legal theories, namely:

Page me39.229

1. that it is a crime if, from abroad, someone morally involved in the trial provides a lawyer with documents and other information for the benefit of the accused, and exposes for what they are the lies of the police told by a fellow like Stieber; that it is likewise a crime to receive such letters;

Page me39.229

2. that the police, on the other hand, have the right not only to permit themselves all manner of crimes, but actually to boast openly before the court and the public of:

Page Break me39.230

Page me39.230

a) Forced entry and theft — the breaking open of Dietz's bureau and the purloining of the documents therein.

Page me39.230

b) Incitement thereto, avowedly by offers of cash; likewise bribery.

Page me39.230

c) Theft of documents belonging to the defence, inasmuch as part of your memorandum to the lawyers was excised and detained; I won't even mention their tampering with letters, because afterwards the fellows did at least try to give it a semblance of legality.

Page me39.230
d) False testimony and perjury, inasmuch as Mr Stieber deliberately represented the Cologne people as being the accomplices and associates of Cherval, etc., as he himself knew better and subsequently admitted it; notably inasmuch as he stated on oath that a letter sent through the post had not reached Cologne until 19 October, when in fact it was already there on the 15th; inasmuch as he cooked up all those lies about the special courier, etc.
Page me39.230
e) Forgery, inasmuch as the alleged minutes were fabricated by the police themselves and submitted as genuine, whereas we were deprived of all means of providing the defence with counter-evidence.
Page me39.230
And so on.
Page me39.230
If the lawyers conduct themselves boldly and adroitly, the case might end, not in a verdict against the Cologne people, but in the arrest of Mr Stieber for perjury and various other Prussian crimes against the godless French Code pénal.†164
Page me39.230
There was something else I wanted to write to you about but I forgot it completely when I started chatting with Weerth, who has just got home.
Page me39.230
I have just heard from him that Mrs Daniels has also been called as a witness for the defence — tant mieux.†a The minutes will come to a glorious end. And ce pauvre†b Bermbach would appear to have been unceremoniously bundled into the dock with the rest. What can they want of this poor, innocent devil?

Your
F.E.

Page me39.230
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.231

119
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.231
[Manchester, 31 October 1852]

Dear Marx,

The way the case has been opened, it can hardly go wrong. The letter from Stieber†a is a discovery that's worth more than all the gold-mines in Australia. What luck that the malheureux†b Nothjung kept these old N. Rh. Z. papers and sent them to London at the time! I only hope the thing arrives; for not even the Chief Public Prosecutor would consider it a crime to suppress stuff of that kind. You'd have done better not to send this letter by registered mail but in some other way. There's still a possibility that something may go wrong between Frankfurt and Cologne and, even though the copy provides a fair amount of proof, the original is still all-important. Somebody should have taken it to Cologne, or else it should have gone by express delivery. However, I hope all will be well.

Page me39.231

The other documents are likewise admirable, and we shall now raise a really tremendous hullabaloo.

Page me39.231

Yesterday, for safety's sake, I sent a letter to v. Hontheim,†280 for posting in Amsterdam, in which I gave him a summary of what you had written in the letter intended for Schneider,†c and told him about the non-arrival of Schneider's letter addressed to Dronke. 4 copies, then, and one summary.

Page me39.231

Today I shall send another copy of Stieber's letter to Cologne by a different route, likewise dispatch to the Rhine Province cuttings containing the article in Friday's Advertiser,†d and the statement in Saturday's,†e and shall in general throw at the bourgeoisie items of information about the crimes of the police.

Page me39.231

Now for some suggestions:

1. In view of the highly equivocal — and, as it now behoves us to show, in passages unequivocal — nature of the only incriminating pieces of evidence, your evidence and that of Lupus, Pieper, etc., etc., if given on oath and authenticated, is of great importance. It does not matter what the Public Prosecutor says, the jury regards ourselves and the accused as GENTLEMEN. Now nothing could be easier than for 2 or 3 of you to go to Wingham and there record on oath those matters relating to London which all of you know about. For example:

Page Break me39.232

Page me39.232

a) that to the best of your knowledge there is no such person as H. Liebknecht, but only a W. Liebknecht, and that you people have never known any H.L.;

Page me39.232

b) that you yourself never received a letter from Mrs Daniels;

Page me39.232

c) that, aside from the Wednesday meetings, you did not hold any other meetings — on Thursdays in any other pub, — and

Page me39.232

d) that you declare the evidence, contained in Hirsch's minutes as to speeches, lectures, etc., etc., allegedly given by yourselves, to be UTTERLY UNTRUE;
Page me39.232
e) that the scrap of paper found with the red catechism and regarded by the Public Prosecutor as being in your handwriting, did not emanate from you†281 —
Page me39.232
and anything else in the latest proceedings and Stieber's first statements which seems untrue and worth refuting.
Page me39.232
When all this has been recorded on oath before Wingham, he will draw up an ordinary affidavit — you might as well take a draft in English along with you — and you should ask him to hand it to a POLICEMAN, who will accompany you to Hebeler, the Prussian consul in the City; the latter must certify Wingham's signature, otherwise he will forfeit his exequatur. 2 copies of this, drawn up as above, can then be dispatched to Cologne and cannot fail to have an effect. I regard this as extremely important, for it means that all the legal formalities have been complied with and that the. thing is a legal document. Should Hebeler nonetheless refuse to sign, go to any NOTARY PUBLIC, who will certify it†282 (the latter procedure was indicated to my old man in a similar case by the Prussian authorities).
Page me39.232
2. Yesterday I received a lengthy dissertation from Dronke about Bangya.†283 I must confess that, in view of those wretched lies about our manuscript,†a in view of Duncker's letter sent you on Tuesday by Weerth,†284 and assuming that it is true he addressed the last letter but one to Kothes, I find no reason to doubt that he is a Prussian spy. The fact that he keeps in with the Hungarians is no proof of the contrary; if he refers us to the Hungarians, he will likewise refer the Hungarians to us. This matter must be investigated without fail and as expeditiously as possible. And if, within vingt-quatre heures,†a Mr Bangya fails to provide satisfactory information as to the whereabouts of the manuscript, the previous address of the alleged Eisermann, giving street and no., and about his highly questionable means of subsistence, I would strongly recommend that counsel in Cologne ask Stieber outright what he knows about a certain Colonel Bangya. After the revelations that have already been made, Mr Stieber will no longer dare to give false evidence, since he cannot know what will be coming next; at the same time Schneider should be informed about the business of the manuscript so that he can pass the story on to the court, after which no further statement need be made for the time being.

Page Break me39.233
Page me39.233
3. A few people from Stechan's workers' society,†25 committee members, etc., might also go to the magistrate, not with little scraps of paper, but with whole pages, or as large samples as possible, of Hirsch's handwriting, and declare on oath that these are in Hirsch's hand. Cela vaut infiniment mieux†b than mere unauthenticated cuttings.
Page me39.233
On Monday we shall see that some more money is sent to you, so that none of you will get into difficulties. Your own affidavit could be dispatched last of all — which would have certain advantages; but we must ensure that everything arrives before the cross-examination of the witnesses is over.

Page me39.233
Don't forget to let me have a few safe addresses as soon as you can.
Page me39.233
Stechan's statement about the forgery†c must also be sworn before a magistrate. Cela pourra avoir de brillants résultats.†d
Page me39.233
Kinkel has today been sneaking round the Exchange here, in tow of a RABBLE of local German Jews. However, we have been putting a few ideas in our people's heads and, here as in Bradford, Weerth will make things pretty hot for him.
Page me39.233
Could you not obtain direct evidence of Kinkel's escroquerie†e from Reichenbach through Imandt or someone, and send copies of it to the Examiner and Times, the Guardian, or the Courier here, and also to the Bradford papers? Such direct evidence, of course, that the fellows need have no fear of a LIBEL action. You might also send it to Dr J.W. Hudson, secretary of the Manchester Athenaeum.†244
Page me39.233
Strohn is back in Bradford, somewhat indisposed, and will be coming here on Wednesday or Thursday. I am writing to him today and will provide him with adequate instructions†285 so that, when you send him things, you can count on his attending to them efficiently and in such a way as not to clash with my arrangements. The main thing is that none of the commercial addresses should be used more than once.

Page Break me39.234
Page me39.234
We must take things to such lengths that in future people will no longer talk about 'stealing' but 'stiebering'.†a
Page me39.234
Then, too, there is the lawyer Schürmann, one of the defence counsel, whose address can be used for enclosures. Schneider is really too risky.
Page me39.234
There's another reason why the Bangya affair is important: Granted that the original minute-book was not in Hirsch's hand, but copied — what then? Stieber has sworn in any case that he doesn't know Hirsch.
Page me39.234
Should the Cologne people be sentenced after all, which I regard as exceedingly unlikely if we go on doing everything in our power to send over all available information and documents, we must write something without fail. If they are acquitted, I believe that this would merely soften down the government's defeat. Meanwhile we can only wait and see. Above all an exact copy must be taken of every document, affidavit, etc., all of them fully authenticated, etc., etc., for these things will provide a splendid series of piéces justificatives.
Page me39.234

Dronke has asked me for 10/- as he is ill and down on his luck. Let him have it, or perhaps a bit more, when the next lot of money arrives, i.e. on Tuesday.
Page me39.234
You had best send me the addresses per Pickford or Carver. Regards to all and write soon.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.234
Up here we are keeping a careful register of all outgoing documents, with dates, how sent, etc.†286

Page me39.234
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.235

120
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.235
London, 2 November 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
Received your letter together with £5. 10/- given to Dronke.
Page me39.235
The time when we had to be coy about writing openly to each other's actual addresses is now past. On Saturday (30 October) the lawyers received the bulk of the documents, on Sunday, the second letter from Frankfurt, and yesterday my last letter with the DECLARATION before the magistrate.†a Today I have sent by registered post direct to Schneider II the declaration†b which appeared in today's Morning Advertiser, not so much because there was still any necessity to do so, as to show the Prussian government that we possess the means to insist on the integrity of its mails or, failing that, to expose it before the London public.
Page me39.235
The lawyers received all they needed in good time, i.e. before the prosecution closed its case. At present I am of the opinion that, unless some incident should prolong the trial and thus necessitate renewed intervention on our part, nothing more should go off to Cologne.

Page me39.235

Herewith a letter from Imandt to Cluss, which contains more details about Kinkel's and Willich's escroquerie.†c Up till now I hadn't had time to read the letter and had done no more than have it copied out for you by Pieper. It went off to Washington last Friday.†d

Page me39.235

Fleury, a merchant in the CITY, says that he can bear witness that he and other businessmen have been invited by Kinkel and Willich to purchase Loan Notes.

Page me39.235

Just now that chevalier d'industrie,†e Willich, is living on the bounty of the Russian, Herzen.

Page me39.235

From what Freiligrath told me yesterday, it would appear that, before his departure for Manchester, Kinkel had been grovelling with renewed zeal before a crowd of CITY ALDERMEN, merchants, etc., in his role of fund-raiser, rhetorician and lesson-giver.

Page Break me39.236

Page me39.236

As for the scrap of paper wrongly attributed to me,†287 all I still need is the address of Moses Hess, who is living in Liége. For I am going to write to him and say: 'Tell me who it was you gave the Catechism to and who hawked it round Germany. Otherwise I shall denounce you as a FORGER in the Indépendance.' Moses is bound to spill the beans, if it transpires that on this occasion it was not the police but Kinkel-Willich who imitated my handwriting, I shall have them up in court here for imitating another's hand.

Page me39.236

Don't forget to send me the last bit for Dana.†a Parliament assembles on Thursday.†b The article is already somewhat out-of-date. But after Friday it will be completely worthless.

Page me39.236

Kind regards to Weerth and Strohn.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.236

The merchant, Fleury, further testifies that, almost every week, Willich extorts pounds from him and his English friends on the plea that he needs this for the refugees. Now, it can be proved that Willich-Kinkel rudely turn away all refugees with the remark that they have not a centime to spare for such purposes. Willich tells them that he hasn't enough himself for his daily bread; Kinkel points with emotion to his children, and at most gives away a waistcoat cast off by the late Julius, the absent Schurz or his own august person.

Page me39.236

First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

121
MARX TO ENGELS†c
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.236
London, 4 November 1852 (?)

Dear Engels,

I am having to dictate these few lines to you today since the perfidious haemorrhoids will not let me sit down.

Page Break me39.237
Page me39.237

Enclosed a letter from Schneider which arrived yesterday evening and 1 letter from Collmann to Bangya†288 which kindly send back.

Page me39.237

As you see, Szemere wants to have his manuscript†a back.

Page me39.237

Vehse told me yesterday that Weerth had arranged an appointment with him in London but had got the date wrong: I duly explained things to him.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.237
[From Mrs Marx]

Warm regards from the secretary, Marx's spouse.
Kossuth is furious with Marx for having told Dana about his DODGE with Bonaparte, Vetter, etc.; Dana has made this material into a fulminating article.†b

Page me39.237
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

122
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.237
[Manchester, 5-6 November,] 1852,†c Friday

Dear Marx,

I am glad to hear that I am not the only sufferer. Strohn was here yesterday and the day before which, of course, meant some hard drinking; he left at three this morning and will have sailed today, I hope. For me this was the coup de grâce and means that today I shall be no good at all. For the same reason you won't get a translation today, not that it matters, since there's bound to be some steamer or other from Southampton which the thing†d can go by and there certainly won't be even a Speech from the Throne in Parliament before the 11th.

Page Break me39.238
Page me39.238

So the documents, including the original of Stieber's letter,†a arrived safely. Things will liven up once the gallant Public Prosecutor has done. One might strain one's faculties to the utmost, yet never succeed in producing inanities such as those uttered by Seckendorf. Because Engels has stated in print that the best communists made the most courageous soldiers,†b it follows that Bürgers must be convicted of conspiracy. What the cross-examination evidently implies is that the accused harboured the intent — suspect de suspicion d'incivisme†c — hence that it is a matter of perfect indifference whether or not the accused belongs to the League†d — in other words, Mr Seckendorf, despairing of a verdict against Daniels and Co., positively invites the jury to acquit Bürgers and Röser too! To have become so utterly addle-pated, the fellow must have been swilling strong BRANDY AND WATER every evening for at least a week. Nowhere in all this mummery is there a single word TO THE PURPOSE. Incidentally, ever since the presiding judge†e released particulars of the cross-examination, I have not for a moment doubted Bürgers' and the others' acquittal. Neither his plaintive manifesto†f nor his circular tour could possibly be transmogrified into an 'enterprise' whereby the constitution, etc.†289 Or are the annals of history to read thus: 'In May 1851, at the time the Crystal Palace†290 was opened in London, the tailor Nothjung travelled from Berlin to Leipzig in order to overthrow the Prussian constitution and start a civil war.' In any case, the minute book has been set aside and, from Strohn's account, some of the jurymen are quite decent, namely v. Rath, v. Bianca, Leven, Leiden, Herstadt and one other.
Page me39.238

I also believe that, in view of the way the case is turning out, we ought at all costs to publish something. But it would be advisable, if not essential, for Schneider and one of the accused to come over to London after the trial, in which case I should arrange to come up there for a Saturday and Sunday. Then, when all has been discussed, you could go back with me and the manuscript could be ready within a few days. Meanwhile, write to old Ebner, asking him whether he couldn't place this little pamphlet with Löwenthal — so far as I am concerned, we could go halves with him, both as regards profits and losses.

Page Break me39.239
Page me39.239
As for Bangya, the most immediate case against him necessarily falls to the ground if it is established that he did not address the last letter but one to Kothes.†a I was completely flabbergasted when Dronke said in his letter that it was Bangya who had addressed the last letter but one, i.e. the last letter to have arrived safely. How did the fiévreuse†b little man come to invent such a story? But the Collmann business looks fishy too.†288 This letter of Collmann's is written in exactly the same hand as the earlier ones from Eisermann†c; I shall send it back to you tomorrow, but it seems to me that we ought to hold on to it. Il y a lá un faux.†d Before long we shall know through Weerth what is the matter with Collmann†e; in the meantime you should ask Bangya to explain how Mr Collmann comes to be writing under a false name, etc., and why 'the man', and what man, died, and how it is that he has now suddenly come to life again. And find out from Mr Bangya the name of 'the commission agent' in London whom he 'knows' according to one of the letters. And, so that Dronke may also have something to do, get him to make inquiries with a German bookseller about Collmann.
Page me39.239
It is most odd that all the letters should arrive by carrier; there's never a postmark on them, and their tone is always so perfunctory and nonchalant that one can't help smelling a rat. This one again has been written from 'a friend's at an inn'. None of this seems at all BUSINESSLIKE, any more than does the absurd evasion that it is his business when the manuscript†f should be published. Enough. Even if in this instance Bangya is acting as honourably as can be expected of a mendacious Slav, it nevertheless seems to me that his friend in Berlin is an archscoundrel. Now, however, everything should be cleared up since Mr C. figures here as the immediate owner of the manuscript, and also as publisher. If there is no bookseller of this name, that clinches the matter.
Page me39.239
Anyway, the notion that a publisher can leave a manuscript lying in his drawer for years is a novel one and hardly smacks of the book-trade. To my mind, that story about the children's books is also a DODGE; in England such muck never comes out at Christmas time. Moreover, it is written in such a vague and disjointed way that Bangya could not possibly infer a firm order from it. Nor does one write at an inn on such rotten paper, which looks more likely to come from a Prussian government office. Enfin, nous verrons.†a

Page Break me39.240
Page me39.240
However, I myself can't possibly write to Bangya at this point, since I have no details of what happened between you and him, what he said to you, what other letters he may have shown you, etc. But we've got him now.

Page me39.240
Saturday, 6 November

For physical reasons I did not manage to send off the foregoing yesterday. Since then I have read another 'Stieberiad' in the Kölnische Zeitung.†b So the original minute-book has been dropped and in its stead H. Liebknecht has risen from the dead in the shape of a cash receipt. Monsieur Hirsch and company — for there must be a number of them — seem to have well and truly done the stupid Prussian police out of a lot of money. Il valait bien la peine,†c their sending a police lieutenant†d to London merely to find themselves imposed upon in this manner and, on top of that, fobbed off with the information about the most secret meeting at your house.†291

Page me39.240

But what is all this about Dronke's friend, Fleury, whom we here find openly and unequivocally described as a police spy? This will deflect some of the little man's wrath from Bangya. It would also seem that someone has blabbed about Stieber's letter, not that it matters; the way Stieber himself is drawing attention to this document and speaking of 'infamous calumnies' can only serve to enhance its effect.

Page me39.240

Weerth is in Liverpool and will not be back for several hours so that I shall have to hold on to the letters from Schneider and Bangya†e until tomorrow.

'By his own admission, Bürgers worked for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung'.†f

Page me39.240

That, of course, is enough to send him to the gallows. I've never heard anything like it before.

Page Break me39.241

Page me39.241

This evening, no doubt, the Kölnische Zeitung will bring the first news that the tide has turned. The lawyers were perfectly right to keep everything back, if only they now really put their shoulders to the wheel.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.241

Don't forget to send me by return copies of Freiligrath's poems about Kinkel.†a We have already people in Bradford who want to ask him to read them aloud.

Page me39.241

Hirsch must still be here, at least, he was positivement†b here last week, for I saw him at the Athenaeum.†244 Another chap who is the spit image of him was here as well and this confused me at first. Perhaps he has a post here, or is looking for one? By the way, when you were last here†292 we met a fellow once in Broughton who cried 'Good morning, Marx', and we couldn't place him. It was Hirsch! So the fellow goes 'on tour'. As soon as the trial is over, he must be given a good drubbing.

Page me39.241

First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

123
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.241
[London,] 10 November 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Enclosed my wife's report†c on yesterday's Robert Blum meeting.†293 She was with Imandt in the gallery of the Freemason's Tavern where it was held.

Page Break me39.242
Page me39.242

As far as Bangya is concerned, just hold on to Collmann's letter. Whenever he inquires after it, I shall say I kept forgetting to ask you to send it back. Had there been intentional deception on Bangya's part he would have supplied the incriminating evidence himself. So much is clear. Originally Bangya was accused of having betrayed the Paris conspiracy†143 and later of double-dealing in the Cologne affair. In both instances the contrary has proved to be the case. According to Schneider's letter, Kothes' address†a would appear to have been betrayed by one of Kothes' own acquaintances.†294 Finally, as regards our pamphlet,†b Weerth will by now have made inquiries about Collmann's address and the thing will inevitably be cleared up. I have given Bangya a letter to Collmann in which I point out that, though his publication date for the pamphlet is contractually agreed, there is no contractual agreement forbidding us to publish the original manuscript — still in our possession — in Brussels or New York, should we so desire. Nor is there any contractual agreement forbidding publication in a fortnight of the 2nd part by another bookseller under a separate title if it is ready and of itself constitutes a complete whole, etc.†295
Page me39.242

Now for the Cologne affair.
Page me39.242

Had I been in Bürgers' etc. place, I should never have allowed Mr Becker†c to flaunt himself so brazenly and at the expense of everyone else as l'homme supérieur,†d or to debase as he did the character of the whole proceedings, much to the delight of the democrats. To defend oneself is one thing but quite another to deliver an apologia for oneself at others' expense. Becker is one of the revolution's epigones, possessed of a great deal of cunning but little intelligence and well able to calculate just how he can trick his way up to become a great man. His talents remain those d'un infiniment petit.†e

Page me39.242

As you already know, the government has, out of sheer desperation, resorted to heroic means, namely Goldheim's retrospective report,†291 only to find itself once again ensnared.

Page me39.242

Goldheim's testimony furnished 2 data: 'Greif' and 'Fleury'.

Page me39.242

I therefore instituted inquiries about Greif (to which end I myself engaged a Prussian informer). In this way I obtained his address and found out that he lived at 17 Victoria Road, Kensington. This, however, is Mr Fleury's house. Hence it was established that Greif lives with Fleury. It further transpired that Greif's official position here is not that of 'police lieutenant' but of attaché to the Prussian

Page Break me39.243

Embassy. Finally, that on Saturday, 6 November, he left here for a few weeks. Probably to go to Cologne. By his own account, he left because he was afraid of the Marxians, because Fleury had swindled him, etc.

Page me39.243

So much was now clear: Greif was Fleury's superior and Fleury Hirsch's superior. And so, indeed, it has turned out.

Page me39.243

On the other hand, Imandt and Dronke called on Fleury on Friday, 5 November, Kölnische Zeitung in hand. He, of course, feigned surprise, said he knew no one by the name of Greif, expressed his readiness to make any statement in the presence of a magistrate, but first wanted to consult his lawyer, made two appointments for Saturday, 6 November, one for 2 and the other for 4 o'clock, but took good care not to turn up and so gained for the police one more day on which we were unable to operate, apart from sending a few preliminary letters to Cologne. Finally, on Sunday, 7 November, Dronke and Imandt extracted from him a statement which you will see in the Kölnische.†296 I shall send you a copy but cannot at this moment lay hands on it. Having his statement safely in their pockets, they told him he was a spy, that Greif was living at his place, that we had known all about it and had been hoodwinking the police, whereas they had believed they were hoodwinking us. He, of course, continued to protest his innocence.

Page me39.243

Finally I sent round some fellows (among them the tipsy General Herweg) to track down Hirsch's lodgings. It transpired that he also lived in Kensington, not far from Fleury.

Page me39.243

One more thing before I go on. The whole of Goldheim's testimony becomes perfectly explicable if you consider that, 1. Goldheim was here on 30 October (Saturday) and, in company with Alberts, secretary at the Prussian Embassy, went to see Greif and Fleury; 2. that on the morning of that same 30 October our statement about the forthcoming revelations†a appeared in 5 English papers; 3. that Fleury had arranged a rendez-vous with Imandt and Dronke for that same 30 October because Dronke was to take over French lesson for him instead of Imandt. 4. But that before Stieber made the revelations about London at his 2nd interrogation and immediately after his first interrogation on the subject of Cherval, etc., I had sent to the Kölnische Zeitung, the Frankfurter Journal and the National-Zeitung, a statement in which Stieber was already threatened with the disclosure of his letter to me.†b Admittedly this statement did not appear in any of the papers. But both post office and police had incontestably taken note of it.†297

Page Break me39.244
Page me39.244
This provides a highly prosaic explanation for Stieber's 'clairvoyance' and the omniscience of his police agents in London. Everything else Goldheim said was 'fabulae.†a I have conveyed such information as is necessary about these things to Cologne by diverse channels, together with Fleury's statement.†b
Page me39.244
But the best is yet to come.
Page me39.244
It was, of course, my intention to take out a WARRANT against Hirsch, for which purpose I made inquiries about his lodgings. But it was not till Saturday that I obtained the address. I felt sure that, if I could get the WARRANT against Hirsch, he would implicate Fleury, and Fleury Greif.
Page me39.244
What happens? On Friday Willich, very secretively, betakes himself with Hirsch to the court in Bow Street where, in Schärttner's presence, he obtains from Hirsch what is purported to be a written confession in triplicate stating that some six months ago he and Fleury fabricated the spurious minutes, he then sends off the 3 documents, 1. to Göbel, the presiding judge at the Assizes, 2. to Schneider, 3. to the Kölnische Zeitung — and gives Hirsch the money to escape, indeed, even has him accompanied to the steamer, ostensibly so that he can confess in person in Cologne.
Page me39.244
We all only heard of this through the inquiry we had set on foot about Hirsch, and partly, too, at Bow Street, where we went to take out the WARRANT. Schapper himself told Liebknecht that Willich had breathed not a word to him of all this. Thus, our intention of initiating proceedings of our own in London was thwarted by Mr Willich's sleight of hand. To what end? The answer is very simple if we reflect that for the past year he has been the merchant Fleury's homme entretenu†c and that in any case, therefore, some highly compromising things must have emerged had we had Fleury apprehended.
Page me39.244
An instance, by the by, of the high esteem in which this man Fleury (I have never set eyes on him) is held by the democrats — Techow, leaving for Australia and already on board ship, wrote him a letter in which he commended him for having both heart and head in the right place.
Page me39.244
The money Hirsch was given for his journey by Willich had undoubtedly been handed to the latter for this purpose by Fleury.
Page me39.244

Hirsch has admitted that he tried to copy Liebknecht's writing and that he was working under the direction of the merchant Fleury (this cur is, besides, a man of substance and has married into a very respectable English Quaker family), just as Fleury himself was under the direction of Greif. This confirms in every particular what I deduced straight away from the content and dates of the original minute-book published in the Kölnische Zeitung, and which none of the lawyers has hitherto duly exploited.†298

Page Break me39.245
Page me39.245
To my mind there is no doubt that the Cologne accused will all, without exception, be acquitted.
Page me39.245
I should be grateful if you could write and tell Strohn that he would greatly oblige me if he could send me a few pounds forthwith. Of the £4.10/- received through you, nearly £3 has been spent on errands, informers, etc. Our impoverished League friends naturally took advantage of the many errands, appointments, etc., to tot up pretty substantial faux frais de production†a for beer, cigars, omnibuses, etc., which I, of course, had to make good.
Page me39.245
You will be receiving Freiligrath's poems.†b
Page me39.245
Apropos, Reichenbach has issued a 'Lithographed Statement'†299 to all American papers in which a dirty trick is played on Willich-Kinkel. It discloses that Kinkel claimed, inter alia, £200 for his journey alone. I shall get hold of the document and let you have it for the archives.†216

Your
K.M.

Page me39.245
Greetings to Weerth. Vehse left yesterday. Have already written to Frankfurt about our pamphlet.†300 Unless we write something, Becker will seize upon all this business ad majorem gloriam Beckeri.†c

Page me39.245
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.246

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.246
London, 16 November 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

If you can, do a Tribune article on the Cologne affair†a for Friday. You are now as familiar with all the material as myself and, for the past 4-5 weeks I have so neglected my domestic pother for the sake of PUBLIC BUSINESS that, with the best will in the world, I shall not be able to get down to work this week.

Page me39.246

You haven't told me whether you received the Reichenbach circular†299 sent off to you last week.

Page me39.246

This evening we are to discuss a statement for the English Press on the Cologne affair.†b There will hardly be time to send it for you to see beforehand. However, if you could do one to reach me by Thursday morning,†c that would be even better.

Page me39.246

Regards to Weerth.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.246

At the Ruge meeting†293 on the 9th, messages were received from Kossuth-Mazzini pleading sickness. However, on the 10th they put in an appearance at the 'Friends of Italy'.†301 Ledru did not make his excuses at all.

Page me39.246

First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.247

125

MARX TO ENGELS†302
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.247
London, 19 November 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Last Wednesday,†a at my suggestion, the League here†b disbanded; similarly the continued existence of the League on the Continent was declared to be no longer expedient. In any case, since the arrest of Bürgers-Röser, it had to all intents and purposes already ceased to exist there. Enclosed a statement for the English papers,†c to complement our first one.†d You should, however, put it into better and CONCISER English. I no longer have the German original.†e303 In addition I am writing for a lithographed article a detailed account of the dirty tricks played by the police,†f and also an appeal to America for money for the prisoners and their families. Treasurer Freiligrath. Signed by all our people.†304

Page me39.247

The article for the Tribune,†g however, is dependent on the time at your disposal. You must return the enclosed statement, or rather an amended version of the same, as soon as possible, since not a day longer is to be lost where the London press is concerned.

Page me39.247

Regards to Weerth.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.247

First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, 12 April, Stuttgart, 1922 and in full in: Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels, Briefwechsel, Bd. 1, Moskau-Leningrad, 1935

Printed according to the author's copy in a notebook for 1860

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.248

126

ENGELS TO MARIE BLANK
IN LONDON

Page me39.248

Manchester, 22 November 1852

Dear Marie,

I really must beg your pardon most humbly for not having already long since replied to your first letter. But at the office where I was formerly in the habit of dealing with my private correspondence, I now have so much to do that there can no longer be any question of that, and at home, mon Dieu,†a my writing materials are always in such poor shape (as, e.g., my calligraphic experiments at the beginning of this letter go to show) that I can hardly bring myself to grapple with them. Nevertheless, I am doing so this evening in the hope that you will marvel at my sense of duty and regard my bad handwriting as yet another token of my brotherly love.

Page me39.248

There was, besides, another reason that prevented me from writing to you. Namely the fact that, when you were in Germany, it occurred to me that there was something I wanted to ask you about; but when you came back I couldn't for the life of me remember what it was. You will understand that such lack of character, or rather such lack of memory, was bound to arouse considerable qualms of conscience in a self-respecting man. In all sincerity I must confess that I could not bring myself to write to you so long as I had not got to the bottom of this weighty matter. But your second letter, and the increased mental activity induced by a WELSH RABBIT and a few glasses of SHERRY, have at last brought me up to the mark again and I now recall what it was I wished to ask you. The matter in question is as follows: Did I, at Christmas or at Easter, leave two cotton shirts at your house? For these have long been missing from my wardrobe and if you have found them I should be quite glad, inasmuch as this would demonstrate that I am not at all a slipshod person.

Page me39.248

You ask me what my wishes are. Ma chére soeur,†b it's some time since I indulged in wishes, for nothing comes of them. Besides which, I really have no talent for it, for if by chance I catch myself being weak enough to wish for anything, it always turns out to be something I can't have and it would therefore be better for me to get out of the habit of wishing altogether. As you see, even on this subject I cannot help relapsing into the moral tone of Ecclesiastes, SO THE LESS WE SAY ABOUT IT, THE BETTER IT WILL BE. If, therefore, you intend to put me under an obligation by providing yet another token of your love this Christmas, my bungling and untutored talent in the matter of wishing is unlikely to be of much assistance to you, though I console myself with the thought that you do not in fact require such assistance, á en juger par le passé.†a

Page Break me39.249

Page me39.249

I am glad to hear that you are all flourishing. Apart from a couple of colds I, too, have been pretty well on the whole; in particular there was no recurrence of toothache with the change of season and I hope it's now a thing of the past. I am still living in Strangeways, though a few doors further away,†b but am considering leaving this district next month and moving a bit closer to Little Germany†305; it really is too lonesome here and this winter I shall, for a change, allow myself a little entertainment, in so far as such a thing is possible in this smoky place. For six months past I have not had a single opportunity to make use of my acknowledged gift for mixing a lobster salad — quelle horreur†c; it makes one get quite rusty. Anyhow, I shall have to write another book next spring, probably in English, about the Hungarian war†136 or the novels of Mr Balzac, lately deceased, or about something else. This, however, is a great secret, otherwise I wouldn't breathe a word to you about it.

Page me39.249

What is Elise†d up to? If she's a good cook, and can darn stockings, she might well come over here after Christmas and keep house for me. Now that Gottfried†e (or is it Franz†f?) the lute-player has set up house on his own, I am virtually under an obligation to follow suit to outshine him, which is very easy, for Elise would undoubtedly be able to do the honours of the house quite famously, while all your old stick-in-the-mud bachelor has is an ancient, crotchety, six-foot-tall, skin-and-bone, intimidating, snarling, blear-eyed, doddery, unkempt, ex-kitchen maid of a housekeeper, but never a wife, despite his gallantries at concerts, balls and suchlike; pauvre bonhomme que Dieu le bénisse!†g

Page me39.249
Come to that, it's time I stopped, for I am beginning to say all manner of horrid things about my fellow-men, if not about a member of the firm, and this one ought never to do unless there's something to be gained by it, as the Quakers say.

Page Break me39.250
Page me39.250
My greetings to Emil,†a Elise and the children and please give my kindest regards to Mr and Mrs Heilgers. The weather was too bad and there was too much work at the office for me to come up for the funeral of the OLD DUKE†b; we only took half a day off. In any case I shall be in town four weeks from now.

With much love,
Your Friedrich

Page me39.250
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 39, Moscow, 1966

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

127
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.250
[Manchester,] Saturday, 27 November 1852

Dear Marx,
Assuming I can raise anything towards the cost of printing the pamphlet,†c it will be at most £2-3 — at the moment I am myself in a fix. But 3 printed sheets will cost between £10 and £12, and even more with stitching, etc., etc. Unless the thing is printed on the Continent for the account of, or at least in partnership with, a bookseller, it will not get round at all. On reaching Prussia, etc., etc., it will be confiscated, and we shall be cheated by the booksellers. So we shall have to regard the money as sacrificed on this business, for there certainly won't be any return in the way of £. s.d. The question now is whether we can spend this amount upon it; or at least, whether it might not be better to condense the thing into 1-1 1/2 sheets, so that the cost is rather more commensurate with our resources. December and January are for me the two most difficult months in the whole year; I can hardly consider making any further contribution to the cost before February. If we have it printed on credit, the printer will, as with Weydemeyer, end up by withholding copies until he has been paid.†306 And whatever we do, we must begin by finding out what prospects there are of its being distributed; at the moment there would seem to be virtually none.

Page Break me39.251
Page me39.251

Weerth is coming up to London tomorrow and sails from Southampton on 2 December. His OUTFIT cost him a great deal of money. Strohn, too, will shortly be travelling to London and thence to the Continent. The travelling expenses he must incur in establishing himself (on foreign capital to boot, or so I hear) are so heavy that we shall not be able to squeeze anything out of him either. So we are all of us in a fix.
Page me39.251

It is my opinion that, unless you have reasonably good channels of distribution through booksellers, the thing won't even be heard of, and, like all literature published by émigrés, will go before anyone in Germany has a chance to see it. And that is very bad — even worse, in some ways, than if nothing were done at all. For it would provide public proof that we are dependent on hole-and-corner German emigrant printing presses and are powerless to get anything done. We were able to disassociate ourselves from the fiasco of Bürgers' circular†a by withdrawing into our literary sanctum, but even this could be compromised were we to admit literary impotence in such a way. The Prussian government would be delighted to see us reduced in matters of publicity to the same expedients as were available to the demagogues of 1831 during their exile,†307 i.e. virtually zero. Lamentable though this is, it would, I think, be better, if we at least did not blazon it abroad. Furthermore, now that the new crime of treasonable correspondence [...] has been recognised by the jury, we could not send a single copy to the Rhine Province, which would be the chief market, without compromising hundreds of people.
Page me39.251

I shall send you the money on 1 or 2 December. Consider the matter once more and, if you still think it would be better to print the pamphlet in this way rather than not at all, you should at least try so to arrange things that we do not run into difficulties over payments for, as I have said, I can commit myself to nothing before February.
Page me39.251

Weerth may already have written and told you that Mr Chr.

Page Break me39.252
Collmann is not to be found at the address indicated, 58 or 59 Neue Königsstrasse or, for that matter, in Berlin, nor does anyone know a bookseller of that name.†a Aprés tout, il paraît pourtant qu'on a voulu nous jouer.†b For the time being I shall not let Mr Bangya have any of the stuff back. So Schulz, the 'commercial traveller', and the dead policeman,†c were one and the same person after all!
Page me39.252

Warmest regards to your wife and children. I shall be in London in somewhat over a fortnight.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.252
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

128
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.252
Manchester, Monday, 29 November 1852

Dear Marx,
I've been toiling over the enclosed article†d until one o'clock in the morning, but another post goes at 9 a.m. I'll try it as an experiment and see whether you get it in time for the STEAMER (Tuesday evening per first MAIL to Liverpool); if not, you'll have to send it by Friday's steamer.
Page me39.252
Tomorrow I have to go out of town. If I'm back early enough I shall send you some money.
Page me39.252
Shall I be getting an article on England for the Tribune soon? I am now able to work again.
Page me39.252
Cobden seems to have been disappointed in the ministerial hopes

Page Break 252(a)

Adolph Bermbach

Page Break 252(b)

Ernest Jones

Page Break me39.253

he had pinned on Graham and Russell; the latter would appear to be giving him the cold shoulder. I can see no other explanation for his rage on Friday.†a Not since 1844 has the fellow spoken with such fury. HE IS A DISAPPOINTED DEMAGOGUE AGAIN for as long as this continues. By the way, it's a good thing the Tories were in a majority, for now we shall get to hear about Disraeli's budget after all.†308 If the chap's knowledge and intelligence were greater and his cunning and thieving propensities less, nothing would be easier than to arrange a FREE TRADE BUDGET for the FREE TRADERS that would make them see stars. If only the fellows hold out until the crisis comes! We are décidément in EXCITEMENT. Although even this is still going very piano piano But no matter. The six pages of JOINT-STOCK prospectuses in today's Daily News — on the strength of which it thinks to outshine The Times — are bound to have an effect, likewise the 50-80 or so foreign railway, gold mining, steamship, etc., etc., companies. Inevitably this will create a taste 'for more'. Fortunately the only circumstance which might have brought over-production in the cotton industry to a premature end has now been eliminated; the new crop will be far in excess of 3 million bales, i.e. the biggest there has ever been, and cotton is again going down; so there'll be no shortage of raw material. Only let the corn harvest fail next year and we shall see a merry dance. But unless it does so, it is difficult to say whether anything decisive will happen as early as next year, given the abnormal conditions, given the mushroom growth of the markets in Australia and California where, as there are hardly any women and children, one individual consumes perhaps four times as much as elsewhere and gold is freely squandered in the towns, given the new market which the Calcutta houses are already exploiting in Burma, given the way Bombay and Karachi are expanding their trade with North-East India and the adjacent territories (particularly so in the case of the latter), etc.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.253
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.254

129
MARX TO KARL EDUARD VEHSE IN DRESDEN
Page me39.254
[Rough copy]
[London, end of November 1852]

Sir,

No doubt you thought it unusual that I, a stranger, should have written to you like an old friend.†191 For this you must ascribe the blame to Weerth and Reinhardt. However, I realise that I was thoroughly mistaken. As an acquaintance of Campe's, that old usurer, parjure†a and maid-wife-widower, you must have been aware that this individual is one of my mortal enemies, and hence you had no right to offer him my pamphlet,†b thereby affording him the opportunity he desired of conveying his impertinences to me indirectly and at no risk to himself. I am not personally acquainted with the individual, although possessed of some specific information about him. The fact that I am engaged in a fight á mort†c with the SHAM LIBERALS is enough to expose me to his intrigues which, il en peut être sûr,†d I shall answer when the time is ripe.
Page me39.254

In the second place you had no right whatever, upon receiving an inquiry from me, to write to Mr Bangya. So far as I am aware, it was I who introduced you to Mr Bangya, but in no sense did I present him as my confident in private matters. And it is strange to have Campe's insolence conveyed to me through a 3rd party whom Mr Campe — I have this on the authority of Weerth here and shall inform Bangya accordingly — declares to be a spy.
Page me39.254

Should this letter cause you offence, you need only come to London; you know where I live and may be assured that you will always find me prepared to give you the satisfaction customary in such cases.

Dr K. Marx

Page me39.254
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.255

130
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.255
London, 3 December 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

You would long ago have had an answer to your letter (enclosing the article for Dana†a), had I not been occupied with the dictation of the final version of my pamphlet,†b and then delayed by visits from Weerth, Strohn, Damm, etc.
Page me39.255

In all probability the pamphlet will be printed in Switzerland by Schabelitz JUNIOR, who has left his old man and set up his own bookshop. Moreover, if Cluss thinks he can recoup the cost of production, he can have the thing printed in Washington. Printed it must be, if only so that it may be available as a public document after the outbreak of the revolution. I have made some further, very interesting discoveries about the Cherval conspiracy, etc., which I hope you will be reading in print.†309
Page me39.255

Weerth called on Sunday evening, and found me very busy and not in the best of moods. He asked me 'what did I propose, actually, to write about the Cologne affair?' — and this in somewhat superior, nasal tones. I asked 'what did he propose to do in the West Indies?' and, after a quarter of an hour or so, he made off. On Tuesday evening he reappeared and said he had not wished to come back, actually, but had yielded to Freiligrath's insistence. For on Sunday I had seemed to him very busy and out of temper. I took the liberty of pointing out to Mr Weerth that, for 9/10ths of the time I had known him, he had always been out of temper and MALCONTENT, which was something he couldn't say of me. After I had given him a piece of my mind, he pulled himself together and became the old Weerth again. He seems to me to have become damned bourgeoisified and to be taking his career too much 'au sérieux'.†c Strohn at least is the same as ever, and pas trop fin.†d

Page Break me39.256
Page me39.256

Today Mr Bangya has received the following letter from me†a:

'I have today received from Engels a letter containing some highly curious pieces of information.†b
Page me39.256

'Engels has not written to the address indicated by you for, as he points out, what is actually proved by an answer to a letter that is sent not direct but only poste restante, through the medium of a second address?
Page me39.256

'Instead, Engels asked some business friends in Berlin to make inquiries. After the most painstaking investigations they now tell him that:
Page me39.256

'1. no such firm as Collmann exists.
Page me39.256

'2. no such person as Collmann exists at the address indicated, 58 or 59 Neue Königsstr.
Page me39.256

'3. no one at all by the name of Collmann is to be found in Berlin.
Page me39.256

'Engels further draws my attention to the fact that the two letters signed Eisermann and the letter signed Collmann were written by the same hand, that all 3 possess the unusual quality of being loose bits of paper bearing no postmark, that in the first two Eisermann, and in the third Collmann, figures directly as publisher, etc., and that on pretexts that are mutually incompatible the thing has been allowed to drag on for nearly 7 months.†310

Page me39.256

'Now that Collmann has proved to be as much of an illusion as was previously the non-existent publisher of the Constitutionelle Zeitung Eisermann, I ask you yourself, how can all these contradictions, improbabilities and mysteries over something so simple as the publication of a pamphlet†c be rationally explained?

Page me39.256

'"Trust" will not conjure away facts, nor do people who respect one another demand unquestioning faith of one another.

Page me39.256

'I confess that, the more I turn this matter over in my mind, the more I am compelled, even with the best will in the world, to find it damned obscure; also that, were it not for my feelings of friendship towards you, I would unhesitatingly echo Engels' concluding remark: "Aprés tout il paraît pourtant qu'on a voulu nous jouer."†d

Yours etc.,
Marx

Page Break me39.257

Page me39.257

'P.S. Engels finally draws my attention to the fact that, even were the manuscript in question to reappear for a few days in London,†311 absolutely nothing would be proved and nothing gained. What could it prove, save the existence and identity of the manuscript, of which nobody is in doubt.'

Page me39.257

Tomorrow we shall see what reply comes from Mr Bangya.

Page me39.257

Bonaparte is spending some glorious months honeymooning with his empire. The fellow has always lived on tick. Simply make loan institutions in France as universal and as accessible as possible to all classes of Frenchmen — and the whole world will believe that the millennium is here. On top of that, a bank of one's own, no less, for STOCKJOBBERY and RAILWAY HUMBUG.†312 The fellow never changes. Not for one moment does the chevalier d'industrie†a deny the pretender, or vice versa. If he doesn't go to war and that right soon, he'll founder on his finances. How good that Proudhon's plans for salvation should find realisation in the only form in which they are practicable — that of the credit racket and more or less barefaced fraud.

Page me39.257

I am looking forward very much to your arrival here.†313

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.257

First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

131
MARX TO JÁNOS BANGYA
IN LONDON
Page me39.257
[Rough copy]
London, 3 December 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Bangya,

I have today received from Engels a letter containing some highly curious pieces of information.†b

Page me39.257

Engels has not written to the address indicated by you for, as he points out, what is actually proved by an answer to a letter that is sent not direct but only poste restante, through the medium of a 2nd address?

Page Break me39.258

Page me39.258

Instead, Engels asked some business friends in Berlin to make inquiries. After the most painstaking investigations they now tell him that:

Page me39.258

1. no such firm as Collmann exists;

Page me39.258

2. no Collmann exists at the address indicated, 58 or 59 Neue Königsstr. and

Page me39.258

3. no one at all by the name of Collmann is to be found in Berlin.

Page me39.258

Engels further draws my attention to the fact that the two letters signed Eisermann and the letter signed Collmann were written by the same hand, that all 3 possess the unusual quality of being loose bits of paper bearing no postmark, that in the first 2 Eisermann, and in the 3rd Collmann, figures directly as publisher, etc., and that on pretexts that are mutually incompatible the thing has been allowed to drag on for nearly 7 months. Now that Collmann has proved to be as much of an illusion as was previously the non-existent publisher of the Constitutionelle Zeitung, Eisermann, I ask you yourself, how can all these contradictions, improbabilities and mysteries over something so simple as the publication of a pamphlet be rationally explained?

Page me39.258

'Trust' will not dispose of facts, nor do people who respect one another demand unquestioning faith of one another.

Page me39.258

I confess that, the more I turn this matter over in my mind, the more I am compelled, even with the best will in the world, to find it damned obscure; also that, were it not for my feelings of friendship towards you, I would unhesitatingly echo Engels' concluding remark: 'Aprés tout il paraît pourtant qu'on a voulu nous jouer.'†a

Yours ever,
K. Marx

Page me39.258

P.S. Engels finally draws my attention to the fact that, even were the manuscript in question to reappear for a few days in London,†311 absolutely nothing would be proved and nothing gained. What could it prove, save the existence and identity of the manuscript, of which nobody is in doubt.

Page me39.258
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.259

132
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†314
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.259
[London,] 7 December 1852

... Enclosed you will find: 1. A manuscript of mine: Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne. This manuscript went off to Switzerland yesterday to be printed there and thence pitched into Germany as étrennes†a for the Prussian gentlemen. You should have it printed locally†315 if you believe that sales in America will enable you to recoup at least the production costs, if more, tant mieux.†b In which case, advance notices should appear in the Press to whet people's curiosity. If the pamphlet does come out in America, it should be published anonymously, as in Switzerland. To appreciate to the full the humour of the thing, you must know that its author, for want of anything decent to wear on his backside and feet, is as good as interned and, moreover, is and continues to be threatened with truly ghastly misére†c engulfing his family at any moment. The trial dragged me even deeper into the mire, since for 5 weeks, instead of working for my livelihood, I had to work for the party against the government's machinations. On top of that, it has completely alienated the German booksellers with whom I had hoped to conclude a contract for my Economy.†45 Finally, Bermbach's arrest has deprived me of the prospect of making anything out of the Brumaires sent through you — 300 had been ordered through him as long ago as May. So it's a pretty kettle of fish.†d
Page me39.259

Here in London I have made it generally known that the pamphlet is to be printed in North America, if only so that we can make an incursion from Switzerland behind the Prussians' backs. They suspect that something is afoot and by now will have ordered the douaniers†e and police in Hamburg, Bremen and Lübeck to be on the qui-vive.
Page me39.259
2. Herewith also an appeal for money for the Cologne prisoners and their families.†a See that it appears in various papers. It might also be a good idea for you to form committees over there. Here it is a matter of a party demonstration. You will observe that Ernest Jones actually appears as a party member. In an introductory note, signed by you both, you might specially emphasise that this is not a case of begging for the revolution Kinkel-fashion, etc., but rather of a definite party aim whose fulfilment is demanded by the honour of the workers' party.

Page Break me39.260
Page me39.260
A longish statement (signed by me, Lupus, Freiligrath and Engels) about the government's infamies at the Cologne trial has appeared in various London papers.†b What especially riles the Prussian Embassy is the fact that the most distinguished and respectable London weeklies, the Spectator and the Examiner, have accepted this unvarnished denunciation of the Prussian government.
Page me39.260
The Morning Advertiser did not print your letter†c; can it have smelt a rat?
Page me39.260
The item from the Abendzeitung received from you today, according to which I, etc., the police, etc., is a scurrility on the part of Mr M. Gross, who has been put up to it by some Willichian or other in New York. You will see from my manuscript what kind of role this 'honourable' Willich plays in the Cologne trial. I have kept a good deal back, partly so as not to impair the literary scheme of the whole, and partly for use as fresh ammunition should the fellow — which I hardly dare hope — have the courage to reply.
Page me39.260
I am tickled by Fickler's letters. Blind, who is now living here with his wife, tells me that, during the industrial exhibition,†316 Fickler, good, honest Fickler, rented a large house and furnished it sumptuously for the purpose of reletting. The speculation misfired. Not only did Fickler make off to America to escape his creditors. He also made off without breathing a word of his plans to his marriageable daughter who lived with him, and without leaving her a single centime. She, of course, was thrown out of the house. What became of her after that, no one knows. Good, honest Fickler!
Page me39.260
As regards Proudhon, you are both right.†317 Massol's delusions were due to the fact that Proudhon, with his usual industrial

Page Break me39.261
quackery, adopted as his 'latest discoveries' some of my ideas, e.g., that there is no such thing as absolute knowledge, that everything is explicable in terms of material conditions, etc., etc. In his book on Louis Bonaparte†a he openly admits what I had to deduce for myself first from his Philosophie de la Misére, namely, that his ideal is the petit bourgeois.†b France, he says, consists of 3 classes: 1. Bourgeoisie; 2. Middle class (petit bourgeois); 3. Proletariat. Now the purpose of history, and of revolution in particular, is to dissolve classes 1 and 3, the extremes, in class 2, the happy mean, this being effected by Proudhonian credit transactions, the final result of which is the abolition of interest in its various forms.

Page me39.261

General Vetter will be looking up Weydemeyer in New York and yourself in Washington.
Page me39.261

Ad vocem†c Kossuth. When I learnt through what you sent about the initial scandal in the German-American Press over my 'PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE' in the Tribune,†d I sent a statement†e to the Tribune, signed 'YOUR PRIVATE CORRESPONDENT' of which herewith a summary†f:
Page me39.261

But to continue. On receiving from you the cutting in which one of Kossuth's secretaries describes me as an infamous calumniator, etc., and at the same time works for Pierre,†g etc., I informed Mr Kossuth of the contents of my first statement to the Tribune and asked the gentleman for a definitive explanation. Whereupon Kossuth replied 1. on his word of honour, that he has no secretary; that possibly Benningsen in America, his one-time clerk of chancery, had arrogated this office to himself; and 2. that the first he had heard of the alleged statement had been through me (I having sent him the corpus delicti, the slip of paper contained in your letter); 3. that he was grateful for my 'WARNING' and would again invite me to meet him somewhere on neutral ground.
Page me39.261

Next Friday I shall convey points 1 and 2 to the Tribune again.†h Keep me au fait with this affair.
Page me39.261

Ad vocem Kinkel. Well, Kinkel has been roving around lecturing on modern poetry, etc., in Bradford and Manchester where, like the clerical, aesthetic, liberal parasite he is, he paid court to the German Jews. People who attended his lectures have informed me on his aesthetic derring-do as follows: he announces that he will be giving a lecture on Goethe's Faust in Bradford, admittance 3/- per head. Hall packed. Great expectations. And what does Gottfried do? Reads them Faust from cover to cover, and calls this a lecture on 'Faust'! Needless to say, Gottfried was wily enough to save up this piece of cheating for the very last lecture. In Manchester Gottfried declared:

Page Break me39.262

'Goethe is no poet, he rhymes “erbötig” with “Venedig”; but Immermann is the greatest of all German poets.'

Page me39.262

And again:

'I would venture to say that, of the more recent German poets, 3 in particular have enjoyed the favour of the public — Herwegh, Freiligrath and — if I would venture to say — Gottfried Kinkel.'

Page me39.262

But easy-going Gottfried also lectured on politics, e.g. on the parties in North America. Here is what he said in Manchester and Bradford:

'True, I announced that I was going to speak about the American parties, e.g. Democrats, Whigs, Free Soilers,†318 etc. But in fact there are no more parties left in America, than there are in Europe. There remains only the one great party of the liberals, as would also become apparent in Germany, if only the defeated party were allowed to resume its former position.'

Page me39.262

Finally Gottfried spoke about the Mormons†319 of whom, among other things, he declared:

'He who wishes to be rid of all earthly cares should betake himself to the Mormons', etc.

Page me39.262

His pronouncements even led people in Bradford to believe that he was a Mormon agent. Be that as it may, Gottfried Kinkel left the two manufacturing towns profoundly convinced that he must never show his face there again.

Page me39.262

At the Assizes in Cologne Becker†a has discredited both himself and the party. It had been mutually agreed from the outset that he would come forward as a non-League†b member, so as not to lose the good-will of the democratic petty bourgeoisie. But being very weak in theory and pretty strong in the matter of petty ambition, he was all of a sudden overcome by vertigo. He wanted to play the great man of democracy at the communists' expense. Not only did he want to get off scot-free, but also carry off in person what laurels were to be won at the trial. He is not only as shameless as ever, he is growing despicable.

Page Break me39.263

Page me39.263

In conclusion, a few words on France. Bonaparte, who has always lived on tick, believes that there is no better way of bringing about the golden age in France than by making loan institutions universal, and as accessible as possible to all classes.†312 His transactions have a twofold advantage: They pave the way for an atrocious financial crisis, and demonstrate what results from Proudhon's credit manoeuvres when they are put into practice and not confined to theoretical day-dreams, namely a stock-jobbing swindle unparalleled since the days of John Law.

Page me39.263

The Orleanists — I know one of their agents†a very well — are tremendously active. Thiers is here at the moment. They have many allies in the army and in Bonaparte's immediate entourage. They intend to murder him (in January) in his bed. Nous verrons.†b At all events, I shall be notified a fortnight before the attempt, and shall in turn notify the revolutionary proletarian party in Paris through the secret society of 'fréres et amis'†c†320 to which I belong. If the Orleanists pull the chestnuts out of the fire, they must in no case be allowed to eat them.

Page me39.263

Should Heinzen, etc., brag about Becker's performance in Cologne, thereby compromising us all, you must publish a statement signed with your name, to the effect that Becker was a member of the communist society†d and that shortly before his arrest, he invited me to write a paper against the democrats, but asked me not to reply to the attacks of Heinzen and Ruge, those wretched allies of Müller-Tellering. Of course, you should only make use of this weapon if absolutely necessary. In which case you declare outright that Becker took the stage as arranged, but grossly over-acted, did not play his part skilfully enough — which is all that he can be reproached with.

K.M.

Page me39.263
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 31, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 6-7 January 1853

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.264

133
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.264
London, 14 December 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Like you, I have been suffering all this while from piles. But this time they did not, in my case, reach the 'perfidious' stage, since they luckily occurred during the time of lean kine. If necessary you should use leeches. C'est le grand moyen.†a
Page me39.264

The money arrived a week ago yesterday.
Page me39.264

From the following copy of a letter from Schabelitz jnr. you will see how things stand with the Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.

'Basle, 11 December 1852

'Dear Marx,
'I received the manuscript intact day before yesterday, and today am already going through the first sheet of proofs. The pamphlet is SPLENDIDLY set in a completely new type and will appear in 16mo. We shall get the proofs as best we can. The whole will amount to 70-80 printed pages and we could, I think, fix the price at 10 silver groschen per copy, since part at any rate of the edition (2,000 copies) is likely to be confiscated. The main consignment will go to the Rhine Province. I feel sure the pamphlet will create a tremendous sensation, for it is a masterpiece. There were four of us reading through the manuscript, two highly competent and discriminating men'

Page me39.264
(do you suppose Schabelitz numbers himself among the 'competent'?)

'and we were all unanimous in our praise of it. It certainly constitutes a ”memorial” to the Prussian government.
'With kind regards to the Marx party.
Yours
J. Schabelitz'

Page me39.264
This last is an allusion to certain misgivings of mine lest Schabelitz should take offence at the rough treatment meted out to the Willich-Schapper party, to which he himself plus ou moins†b belonged.

Page Break me39.265
Page me39.265
Secrecy being all-important if the thing is not to be confiscated as soon as it reaches the German border, I have been putting it about here that a pamphlet on the Cologne affair is to appear in America.
Page me39.265
In order not to overburden you in your present haemorrhoidal condition I got Pieper to translate tant bien que mal†a a critique of Disraeli's budget†b written for Dana and it went off to America last Friday.†c
Page me39.265
Excuse me for not writing more this time. I have the most infernal headache.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.265
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

134
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†321
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.265
[London,] 14 December 1852

... No more than a few lines today. Brüningk has written to me. I replied in writing,†322 telling him that Kinkel and Willich were the instigators of the rumour and that I had alluded to, but not named them, in my letter to you.
Page me39.265
Should Kinkel issue a public denial in the American Press, I shall publish the whole correspondence and/or the record of what happened between him, myself and J. Huzel,†d as proof of his veracity and his courageous vindication of the imputations he had made.
Page me39.265
Should Brüningk demand that you recant or publicly attack you for 'deliberate distortion of the material with which I provided you', confine yourself to the following points: 1. You could perfectly well have concluded that Mrs von Brüningk was an agent whom even her friends suspected her of being one,†e the more so since she was an agent for the notorious Russian agent, Princess von Lieven.

Page Break me39.266
Page me39.266
2. You had all the less reason to stand on ceremony since Schimmelpfennig — Mrs von Brüningk's crony — had established the principle that Marx and Co. were to be calumniated.
Page me39.266
3. You might have issued a statement yourself had Brüningk approached the Wecker direct, and then yourself instead of dragging in the miserable Ruge-Ronges. Ça suffira.†a
Page me39.266
Ad vocem†b E. Jones. Jones is now RISING rapidly. Harney's paper — and J.'s rival — The Star of Freedom, set some 3 weeks ago.
Page me39.266
Ad vocem Kinkel-Willich. The effrontery of these two fellows' anti-Reichenbach statement surpasses all bounds.
Page me39.266
1. Reichenbach acted too leniently in respect of these fellows in concealing the real reason which above all motivated his action.†323 For in America Loan Notes bearing Reichenbach's signature still continue to circulate. Kinkel and Willich got their agents in America to convert them into silver, even at a discount, and send the proceeds direct to them, long after they had been disowned qua financial committee by the London guarantors; similarly, they hawked these notes round London. At no time have they accounted for the sums thus received. It was downright escroquerie†c and Reichenbach deemed a statement necessary in order to clear himself of all responsibility for it.

Page me39.266

2. The German papers applauded the resolution to return the money to America, Kinkel coming in for especial praise. The rascal received these bourgeois plaudits in silence — nor, in Bradford and Manchester, did he show any inclination whatever to confess his opposition to the said resolution. He seeks to appear respectable to bourgeoisie in Germany in order to make money, and poses as a believer in revolution before the revolutionary philistines in America in order to wrest from the clutches of the Cerberus Reichenbach the money he has swindled from them.
Page me39.266

3. Willich pins his faith to the distance between America and London. Over here the fellow is regarded by all the refugees as a proven spy and a rogue unmasked. He believes that in America he will still be able to play the treasurer of the revolution.
Page me39.266

Hirsch has told a working men's club in Blamich Street†d that Willich is his accomplice. He himself, the sly Hirsch (!!!) says, is a spy in the interests of democracy, but Willich in the interests of the police, no less. Willich's society heard about this. Questions were asked, etc. (you may have read about it already in my Revelations).†324 He could think of nothing better than to remove with a minute nucleus of his society to another establishment where visitors were not admitted, and to shift his own domicile to a remote corner of London. These two blackguards must now be unmasked in America as well. Here they are completely done for.

Page Break me39.267
Page me39.267

Ad vocem Goegg. Goegg, who for months was telling everyone that he attended the Wheeling Congress,†245 was in Strassburg at the time, getting together what remained of his fortune, £300. Now, in company with Ronge, he is setting up kindergartens and similar German-Catholic†227 educational establishments.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.267
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Published according to the letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 6-7 January 1853

Published in English for the first time

135
MARX TO GUSTAV ZERFFI

IN PARIS
Page me39.267
London, 28 December 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Friend,

Sincerest thanks for your letter.

Page me39.267

There were two circumstances which enabled Bangya to hoodwink me for so long. Firstly, his acquaintanceship with Szemere, whom I instantly recognised as l'esprit fort†a of Hungary from his manuscript on Görgey, Kossuth, etc.,†b also, your friendship with Bangya, since you inspired me with complete confidence, despite the fact that we have known each other for so short a time. Secondly: So long as I was able, I attributed the inconsistencies, lies, etc., to Bangya's urge, which manifests itself at the slightest occasion, to shroud his activities in mystery and play at hide-and-seek not only with others but actually with himself.

Page Break me39.268

Page me39.268

At this very moment I am still inclined to believe that he is not a true spy; rather, as you rightly say, his function as 'intermediary' between the various parties and as political match-maker has led him into dubious ways.

Page me39.268

But first a point that is of particular concern to yourself.

Page me39.268

Szirmay is certainly an agent of Kossuth's. His mission, or so I have gathered from some unguarded remarks, is to establish contact with Bonaparte through Mr de Maupas. A short time previously Kossuth had tried to raise a loan of 1 1/2 million from the Orleanists through the agency of Bangya and Malingre, his correspondent in Paris, but had met with a rebuff.

Page me39.268

To return to Bangya.

Page me39.268

I have with my own eyes seen a commission made out by Kossuth and countersigned by Szirmay, by which Bangya is appointed prefect of police in partibus, as it were, by Kossuth — as chief of an anti-government counterpolice force. On the one hand, my fears over otherwise suspect contacts and acquaintanceships of Bangya's were allayed by this commission, for it gave them an air of being official connections which, if exploited with skill, could be of use to our party; thus I myself have obtained from him some details of importance concerning the Prussian government. On the other hand, I asked him outright: 'How can you reconcile your relationship with Kossuth and your relationship with Szemere?' He replied very candidly that firstly he was acting in Szemere's interest, and then the latter had authorised his relationship with Kossuth. I therefore never again alluded to the subject.

Page me39.268

Bangya several times invited me on Kossuth's behalf to visit the latter. I replied that I lived at such and such a place and that, if Mr Kossuth wished to speak to me, he need only take the trouble of coming to see me. Kossuth then suggested that we should meet on neutral ground.†a I left the matter pending. In the meantime, however, an article of mine appeared anonymously in the Tribune (New York), in which I attacked Kossuth, Mazzini, etc., with especial reference to the intrigues in Paris conducted through Kiss, etc.†b Frightful hullabaloo in the American Press! Kossuth contacting the tyrant! IMPOSSIBLE! Bangya, questioned by Szirmay, named me as the author, whereupon I personally told Mr Szirmay, that I was indeed the author. Also that, so far as I was aware, I was at complete liberty to write anything I chose about and against Mr Kossuth. Shortly afterwards I received from America newspapers in which Kossuth had had me denounced 'as a calumniator' by a supposed 'private secretary' of Monsieur le Gouverneur. I then, via Bangya, requested Mr Kossuth to state whether this démenti had originated with him, in which case I would chastise him with scorpions, whereas hitherto I had merely touched him with a rod.†a Kossuth replied, through Szirmay, 1. that he knew nothing about the statement, 2. that he had no private secretary, and repeated his invitation, which I ignored, to meet him on neutral ground. I, for my part, published in the Tribune Kossuth's statement to me,†b and there, for the time being, the matter rests, although the entire inept and insipid German-American press is still buzzing with it. Nevertheless, the storm of indignation evoked by his article against me shows that Kossuth will be perdu†c the moment the fact of his alliance with Bonaparte is established.

Page Break me39.269
Page me39.269
I am now wholly of the opinion that we should both of us observe the utmost discretion for, as soon as Bangya knows that we have seen through him, he could do you and Szemere harm, perhaps considerable harm, particularly as regards your remaining in Paris. Moreover, were Bangya to be in any way publicly unmasked before the manuscript†d appears, it could at best only make me look ridiculous. Finally, I believe it is important — until the point has been reached at which we can publicly unmask him — that a close watch be kept on Mr Bangya. This is particularly important while he remains in Paris. He is astoundingly indiscreet and, if only to retain your confidence, will keep you and Szemere informed of every move made by the various parties he serves.
Page me39.269
My attitude towards him, therefore, will be cool and reserved — as he can only expect after his latest coup — but I shall not let him know either the full extent of my suspicion or that I am 'secretly' corresponding with you.
Page me39.269
Bangya himself, in the note enclosed in his anonymous friend's letter, writes:

'I think you are now at liberty to have the work published elsewhere.'

Page Break me39.270
Page me39.270

In giving this advice, which, by the by, is merely the echo of a threat I made him,†a he is, I think, trying to cover his rear.
Page me39.270
However, I fully agree with Szemere and yourself that it is high time this was done. The only difficulty lies in the execution. A pamphlet of mine, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne has just been brought out by a Swiss bookseller.†325 (I shall arrange for 2 copies to be sent to you and Szemere as soon as possible.) This same bookseller is busy with an edition of my 18th Brumaire for Germany.†326 There is no prospect of inducing him to embark on a third undertaking. No bookseller in Germany now dares to publish anything of mine. Hence my only recourse would be to print it at my own expense, which, in my present circumstances, is impossible. And yet the thing is vital. I shall consider what can be done.
Page me39.270
You will see from the Revelations that Greif is a thoroughly infamous creature. In December 1851 he visited Paris in connection with the Franco-German plot†143 and in order to establish a spurious connection between my friends in Cologne and the idiots in Paris.†327
Page me39.270
However, it is true that, while Greif was still here in London, Bangya received money from Berlin regularly on the 3rd or 4th of each month. Do you know from what sources he is drawing this money?
Page me39.270
Our watchword in this business should be: 'á Corsaire Corsaire et demi'.†b Should Bangya show signs of becoming 'dangerous', all we have to do is remind him that his connections with Malingre and the Orleanists have placed him at our mercy.
Page me39.270
Write soon, and assure Szemere that in me he has a sincere admirer.

Yours
Ch. Williams†c

Page me39.270
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.271

1853

136
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me39.271
Manchester, 11 January 1853

Dear Marx,

I had hoped that I might have been able to call in on you again yesterday on my way to the station for, as a result of a somewhat unpleasantly outspoken letter about my prolonged absence†313 and the work accumulating up here, I was compelled all of a sudden to pack my bags and hasten back to the office. Having scandalously neglected my business in the CITY, I had to settle it yesterday at the last moment. This held me up so long that I had no option but to set course recta via†a if I was to appear today, as I needs must, AT A DECENT HOUR at the office; anyhow, I would have turned up at your house at a time in the evening when all your disciples are wont to foregather there, in which case I couldn't have answered for the consequences, i.e. pots at Göhringer's, Zimmermann's, Wood's and other night haunts.

Page me39.271

It would be best if you were to make a PARCEL of the letters from Cluss, etc., etc., American newspapers and other such stuff, and send it per Pickford & Co., or Chaplin, Horne & Co., addressed to me here at Ermen & Engels, so that the firm pays the carriage.

Page me39.271

Waiting for me here was a letter from Madier, in passable English, about a patent of his which might have some impact on our industry. Whether or not the thing is any good, he has all sorts of grand ideas; however, I'll see what I can do. If the invention is a good one, it will earn him a hefty sum, the market being almost unlimited. Should you happen to run into him, tell him I should have written to him one of these days, but I am again more than fully occupied.

Page Break me39.272

Page me39.272

I wish some of our lads in London would really settle down to a plus ou moins†a steady job, for they're becoming inveterate loafers and, once you get that way, it's 10 to one you'll be tipsy for 36 hours at the least, as has twice happened to me, to the great astonishment of my sister.†b

Page me39.272

In the spring or early summer I shall again come up to London.

Page me39.272

Hasn't that thing†c arrived from Schabelitz yet?

Page me39.272

Warm regards to your wife and children and to the tipsy crew likewise.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.272

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

137
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.272
[London,] 21 January 1853

Dear Engels,

If at all possible, kindly translate the whole of the enclosed†d and send it off direct from Manchester (signing it with my name) via Liverpool or Southampton, depending on sailings, to 'A. Dana, One of the Editors of the “New-York Tribune”, New York'.

Page me39.272

This is how matters stand:

Now that our misfortunes here have reached a CLIMAX, I have drawn £20 on Greeley for 10 articles (including the enclosed) and have written, telling him that the copyist has not quite finished copying the article (which must therefore be dated Friday), and that it will be sent off to him on Tuesday. I have charged him £2 per article, which is what Dana promised in his letter of 16 December

Page Break me39.273
1851, a promise he has so far failed to keep (in respect of CURRENT LETTERS).†328

Page me39.273

The little Jew Bamberger has not yet given me a centime but I have his promise and shall by degrees extract at least £15 from him against the bill (pending its arrival).

Page me39.273

Now that we are charging £2, the above article must be sent off in its entirety. The piece about the Duchess of Sutherland will cause an uproar in America.

Page me39.273

Apropos, Blind has already dunned me twice for Herzen's book.†a So you must return it to me.

Page me39.273

It is 2 o'clock in the morning. Hence I cannot now have this letter STAMPED, and must send it off unstamped.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.273
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

138
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†329
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.273
[London,] 21 January 1853

... Yesterday I read a letter from Heinzen to Bamberger. He complains of money troubles and says he has been forced to resign from the Janus. As regards Dr Kellner, he was for a time correspondent of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. You should see if you can't make contact with him d'une maniére ou d'une autre.†b Once Weydemeyer has put out feelers, your first step might be to send him a 'pithy' article... The wretched Willich, who is done for here, sailed for America last week as Kinkel's agent; so it is important that at least those parts of the pamphlet†c which relate to him should appear in the press. It would be best if you could arrange for the pamphlet to be published in magazines; it has already come out in Switzerland, so it is no longer so important. Could not Börnstein, who wants to catch us with 'his bait', also be of some use in this matter? From what I know of him and his compagnon†a Bernays, they will be much tickled by the account of the trickery of the police. I think it politic to establish contact with these people. I can assure you that if Bernays finds the means — and we must provide him with it — to re-establish contact with us, I could have these two chaps eating out of my hand. Have you heard nothing more from Schramm†b or, on the other side, from Tellering?...

Page Break me39.274

Page me39.274
First published in Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 17 February 1853

Published in English for the first time

139
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.274
London, 29 January 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Have received the £3 and the manuscript you returned.

Page me39.274

You must excuse me for not having written for so long, the explanation being PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT.

Page me39.274

About a fortnight ago Willich pushed off to America as Kinkel's agent.

Page me39.274

Mrs von Brüningk was buried a few days since.

Page me39.274

As a result of clumsy manoeuvring by the Parliamentarians Reichenbach and Löwe, and negligence on Imandt's part, the £1,000 have again fallen into the hands of Mr Kinkel in the sense that the money has been deposited in the Bank of England in his name and Reichenbach is to hand over the certificate of deposit to him in May, unless the guarantors should decide otherwise. Such decisions are, of course, now quite worthless.

Page Break me39.275

Page me39.275

Mr Bangya has been in Paris for the past three weeks. Liebknecht has obtained a very good post with the Jew Oppenheim. The rest of the folk, Imandt EXCEPTED, still at a loose end.

Page me39.275

Schabelitz did not have the pamphlet†a ready until 11 January. About 6 sheets. But he seems unwilling to send anything to London until the thing has been successfully dispatched to every part of Germany and receipt acknowledged.

Page me39.275

The gentlemen in Cologne, notably Daniels, persist in maintaining a dignified silence. The answer to our having subordinated all business to their affair for the space of 4-5 weeks.

Page me39.275

In the enclosed cutting from the Arbeiterrepublik†b (editor Weitling) you will see the venom which this tailor king and dictator of the 'Communia' colony†330 expends upon the communist trial in Cologne and the Marx party and Co.

Page me39.275

Yesterday I ventured for the first time to write an article in English for Dana.†c Pieper made some corrections and, once I have a good grammar and write away gamely, I should do passablement†d well.

Page me39.275

Two apropos:

D'abord.†e Blind is incessantly dunning me for Herzen's book.†f

Page me39.275

Second: Don't forget to enclose in your next Reichenbach's circular and his statement of accounts.†299 Dronke needs it to establish himself as a new correspondent.†g

Page me39.275

The state of the winter crops being what it is, I feel convinced that the crisis WILL BECOME DUE. So long as the STAPLE ARTICLE, FOOD, remains tolerably ABUNDANT and cheap, and what with Australia, etc., the thing could have been a long time in coming. Now a STOP will be put to all that. Incidentally, is it not somewhat unusual to find e.g. The Economist vindicating the Bank of England's most recent DISCOUNT REGULATION, on the ground that its purpose is 'TO PREVENT THE EXPORTATION OF CAPITAL'†h? We know very well what is intended. But could one not trouble one's FREE TRADER'S conscience by asking: Do you also wish to PREVENT 'EXPORTATION OF CAPITAL' in the form of COTTONS, YARNS, etc.? Why, then, in the form OF GOLD? Is the FREE-TRADE ECONOMY destined to revert to MERCANTILISM pure and simple and regard the EFFLUX and INFLUX OF GOLD as the nervus rerum†i?

Page Break me39.276
Page me39.276

Since Bonaparte's last speech†a all the talk in the City has been of war. I have also had a letter from old Ebner in Frankfurt in which he speaks of the terror inspired in Germany's pampered puppets, especially the diplomats in Frankfurt am Main, by Bonaparte's wedding speech. The doltishness of our compatriots was brought home to me yesterday by, inter alia, the Frankfurter Journal in which a correspondent writing from Heidelberg remarks that, what with a propagandist war in the offing and Bonaparte throwing in his lot with 'democracy', the authorities must already be ruing their prosecution of the great Gervinus.†331 I fear that Crapulinski†b will be hailed as 'friend and saviour' by German peasants and philistines. Apparently the vocation of this burlesque figure is to stand all traditional ranks and parties on their heads and turn them into a laughing-stock.

Page me39.276

What is the effect of a bad harvest on an incipient war?

Page me39.276

Let me know, too, what the position is in the MANUFACTURING DEPARTMENT, particularly in cotton.

Page me39.276

Jones' paper†c is again en ascendant.†d

Page me39.276

Cobden's pamphlet†e and the MANCHESTER PEACE CONFERENCE†332 are, I feel, utterly nonsensical at the present time. So now you know, says Palmerston's journal, The Morning Post, these bourgeois parvenus are totally incapable of governing a country; that's a thing only the aristocracy can do.†f The Morning Herald publishes a letter addressed to itself and written, or so it asserts, at Bonaparte's own dictation, in which the latter says he would come to England only if the QUEEN needed 200,000 of his 'heroes of order' to combat the perilous growth of democracy. Which democracy, says the Herald, is you, Mr Cobden, you and associates.

Page me39.276

Concerning The Times, I have been given the following, fairly reliable, particulars which may be of interest to you:

Page me39.276

Mr Walter, MP for Nottingham, is still the PAPER'S constitutional monarch, still its PRINCIPAL SHAREHOLDER. Mr Mowbray Morris is The Times's LORD OF EXCHEQUER, its FINANCIAL AND POLITICAL MANAGER — a very adventurous and 'RECKLESS' FELLOW. Mr Delane JUNIOR (a friend of Disraeli's) is SECRETARY FOR THE HOME OFFICE. His father is EDITOR OF THE Morning Chronicle. Mr Dasent is SECRETARY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS. In addition, The Times has A SORT OF PRIVY COUNCIL, the most important member being Mr Lowe, MP for Kidderminster, an albino with pink eyes and white hair. He is said to be very talented and particularly knowledgeable about financial matters. Next to him comes Mr Henry Reeve, an admirer of Orleanist statesmen, who holds a minor post in the STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT of the BOARD OF TRADE. Mr Lampon writes the MONEY ARTICLE, but otherwise has no influence on the direction of the whole.

Page Break me39.277
Page me39.277
According to a letter from Zerffi, it is generally believed in Paris that Bonaparte is plotting with the Sultan against Austria and Russia in the Montenegro affair.†333
Page me39.277
Vale faveque.†a

K. Marx

Page me39.277
[Note written on an enclosed illustration from an unknown Italian book]

Which Italian town does the above female belong to?

Page me39.277
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

140
MARX TO J.G. MAYER†334
IN LONDON
Page me39.277
[London, after 3 February 1853]

Charles Williams presents his compliments to Mr Mayer and he†b takes the liberty to transmit him the enclosed letter for Mr Szemere.

Page me39.277
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.278

141
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.278
[Manchester,] 11 February 1853

Dear Marx,

Well, here it is, the grande affaire†a of Messrs Kossuth and Mazzini.†335 Our news up here is very incomplete but my own view is that tomorrow or on Monday we shall certainly hear that all is over. Milan is first-rate terrain for street-fighting, few straight streets, none connecting with the other, almost everywhere narrow, crooked alleys with tall, massive stone houses, each a fortress in itself, their walls often 3-5 feet or more thick and virtually impossible to breach, the rez-de-chaussée†b windows provided with iron grills (almost invariably) as here and there in Cologne. But much good will all this do — they don't stand a chance. After 1849 Radetzky ordered the restoration of the old citadel's fortifications and, if the work is complete — and there has been time enough for this — Milan will belong to the Austrians so long as they occupy the citadel which is impregnable to insurgents unless abetted by a military insurrection. The fact that no further news is forthcoming from Bellinzona whence, from time immemorial, the Tessinese have inundated the world with lies in support of every Italian movement,†336 argues strongly against the spread of the insurrection in the surrounding region.
Page me39.278

I regard the whole business as very mal á propos†c since its only point d'appui, apart from Austrian tyranny IN GENERAL, is the commotion in Montenegro†333 where also, aprés tout,†d Turkish 'order' is bound to prevail over Homeric Czernogorzan barbarism. Thus these great dictators, having allowed themselves to be bamboozled, altogether á la Seiler, by the usual diplomatic melodramas, invoke the world-historical importance of the 'oriental question'! They are obviously counting on some sort of WINDFALL from Louis Napoleon but, unless everything turns out otherwise than expected, he will leave them to stew in their own juice and treat them as anarchists. It would further seem probable that, as with all insurrections organised in advance, the moment of outbreak is liable to be determined far more by the pettiest of local incidents than by crucial events.

Page Break me39.279
Page me39.279

Mazzini does at least seem to be on the spot; it could hardly be otherwise. However stupid his bombastic proclamation, it may well prove something of a hit with the grandiloquent Italians. On the other hand we have Kossuth, that man of boundless activity! Celui-lá est absolument mort, aprés cela.†a Such absurd pretensions cannot be trumpeted with impunity in the year of our Lord 1853. However preposterous Mazzini's abstract passion for insurrection may appear on this occasion, the man comes off splendidly when compared with the worthy Kossuth, who reassumes the role he played at Vidin†337 and, from the safety of the rear, decrees the liberation of the fatherland from nothing, with nothing, for nothing. The fellow really is a lâche and a misérable.†b
Page me39.279

Now we shall see what the Italian peasants will do; even if, by some unheard of and incredible stroke of luck, pére Mazzini, his bourgeois and his aristocrats, should succeed, they might still be in for something very unpleasant at their hands; and should the Austrians find an opportunity to unleash these same peasants against the aristocracy they will not hesitate to do so.
Page me39.279

The Austrians must still have 120,000 men in Italy; how, in the face of this, a rebellion can be staged unless there are mutinies among the troops, I cannot conceive. And I refuse to believe that there could be Honved†c mutinies in Italy, even on Kossuth's orders,†d this would demand events of greater magnitude, while 3 years of discipline and peace have enabled the Austrians to flog many an unyielding Honved posterior into tractability.
Page me39.279

The whole business is of importance, I think, only as a symptom; a reaction has set in against the state of oppression obtaining since '49 and, naturally, at the most sensitive spot. The thing has made a great impact here, and the philistines are beginning to agree that this year will not elapse without trouble.

Page Break me39.280
Now for a poor CORN AND COTTON harvest, financial difficulties and all that goes with them, and nous verrons!†a
Page me39.280

Have you had the £3 I sent you last week — on Thursday or Friday?

Your
F.E.

Page me39.280
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

142
MARX TO ENGELS†338
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.280
[London,] 23 February 1853

Dear Engels,

I have been sérieusement†b indisposed; for the 'perfidious Prussians' have not permitted me either to stand, sit or lie down. Hence my long silence and my failure so much as to acknowledge the money.

Page me39.280

You will have seen that Kossuth, through an American filibuster, Captain Mayne Reid, has disavowed his alleged Milan proclamation.†c339 Well, yesterday Szemere wrote to me from Paris, saying he knew for certain that the proclamation was authentic, as was evident in any case from its contents. The Leader (pro-Mazzini)

'deems it his duty to caution his readers, that this affair lies entirely between Mr Kossuth and Mr Mazzini and that the latter is absent from England'.†d

Page me39.280

You will yourself have seen, in The Daily News, Della Rocco's statement†e aimed directly at Agostini, but also indirectly at

Page Break me39.281

Kossuth.†340 The par nobile fratrum†a seems to have fallen out. Kossuth is as false as he is cowardly.

Page me39.281

You have rated Mazzini too high if you imagine he was present in person at Milan. At critical moments like these he absents himself from England so that he may be suspected of being in the theatre of war.

Page me39.281

Pitiable finale though the Milan business is to Mazzini's eternal plotting, and despite my conviction that he has done himself personal injury, I am sure that the revolutionary movement as a whole will benefit by what is happening. I.e., by the brutal manner in which the Austrians are exploiting [...]. Had Radetzky followed Strassoldo's example, had he praised the Milanese citizenry for their 'orderly conduct', had he described the whole thing as the wretched uprising of a few 'MISCREANTS' and, as a token of his confidence, appeared to loosen the reins a little, the revolutionary party would have been discredited in the eyes of the whole world. But as it is, by introducing a system of wholesale plunder, he is turning Italy into the 'revolutionary crater' which Mazzini, for all his declaiming, was unable to conjure into existence.

Page me39.281

And another thing. Could any one of us have believed that, after its 4 years of victory, military preparations and rodomontade, reaction should feel itself so infinitely weak that, at the first sign of a riot, it lets out a scream of genuine terror? The fellows' belief in revolution is unshakable. Once again they have testified to the whole world how insecure they feel. Whereas realiter†b the 'emigration' is totally bankrupt and impotent, they loudly proclaim its power through all government papers and encourage the belief that a net of conspiracy is closing in from all sides on the worthy citizens.

Page me39.281

Ad vocem†c Bangya. Is presently in Paris. I now possess actual proof that the gallant fellow is an agent of the Austrian government. He bought his way back to France by accepting a clandestine post in the French Police Ministry. At the same time he is in Paris as official agent for Kossuth, who wants money from Bonaparte. In Paris, by the by, the fellow has woven a net in which he himself will become ensnared. As to our manuscript,†d he sold it to Greif, who was travelling under the name of 'Schulz'. Incidentally, both of them misled the government into believing that they had 'managed to procure' — note the professional term — this 'document' from the archives of a 'secret society'.

Page Break me39.282
Page me39.282

Still no news from Schabelitz, save that the thing†a is circulating in Germany. He still doesn't dare send anything here, for fear that the French police will open the parcel and denounce the business to the Prussian police.
Page me39.282

I have heard from a reliable source, mais c'est un secret†b (which Napoleon doubtless knows as well as I do), that Ledru intends to go into action in Paris in 3-4 weeks. I have been told by an eye-witness that the first news of the rising in Milan created a great sensation in Paris. Gatherings in the streets, etc., not to rebel but to confer. On the whole the FRENCHMEN here are well content that Mr Mazzini should have discredited himself by his 'ACTION'. They see themselves avenged.†c
Page me39.282

Thanks to Cluss our appeal on behalf of the Cologne people†d — 6 lines long — has appeared in all the American papers, in each case under the auspices of the local gymnastic club.†120 Nous [verrons].†e Our dear acquaintances in Cologne itself have as yet given no sign of life. That's caution for you! One of them, ex-lieutenant Steffen, who figured as a defence witness at the Cologne trial, is here and promptly found himself a teaching post in Friedländer's establishment. Blind is dunning me daily for the Herzen,†f as is Dronke for Reichenbach's circular.†299 This is essential to Dronke since he wants to become a correspondent of the Volkshalle in Cologne under another name.
Page me39.282

What do you think of the lively sympathy shown by the clerics of the Established Church towards the unfortunate Ten Hours Movement†341? Always the same old game. On Saturday I'll send you a parcel containing all the remaining newspapers, and letters from Cluss.
Page me39.282

Of all LITTLE FINALITY JOHN'S†g PERFORMANCES, the last was probably the most classical.†342 Even The Times was forced to admit that JOHNNY EXCITES 'MIGHTILY LITTLE ENTHUSIASM'†h
Page me39.282

Mrs Harney†i is dead. Likewise Mrs von Brüningk. A short while ago there was an exchange of letters between myself and

Page Break me39.283
Brüningk, in which everything hinged on Kinkel and Willich.†a As I have already told you, Willich sailed for America 4 weeks ago.
Page me39.283
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.283
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

143
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.283
[Manchester, 10 March 1853]

Dear Marx,
Yesterday I sent off one half of a fiver to you and, at the same time, the other half under cover to Dronke. I'm really in a fix; in February I had to fork out some £50 to repay debts, etc., and there'll be another £30 or so to be paid out this month and next. Otherwise I'd have sent you more. A reform of my PERSONAL EXPENSES is urgently called for and, in a week or a fortnight's time, I shall move into cheaper LODGINGS and also resort to less potent liquor so as to prepare myself for the great moment when the balance is struck. Last year, thank God, I gobbled up half of my old man's profits from the business here. As soon as my old man's arrival becomes imminent, I shall remove to select LODGINGS, buy select cigars and wines, etc., so that we can impress him. Voilá la vie.†b
Page me39.283
By his statements,†c Monsieur Kossuth has utterly ruined himself in the eyes of people up here, German as well as English. Mazzini likewise, by the insurrection itself†335 and by his sordid way of starting a fracas with the cowardly murder of individual soldiers, this being particularly abhorrent to the English. It would be difficult to imagine anything more craven and blackguardly than these two letters of Kossuth's and withal the constant pretension: I AM A PLAIN, HONEST MAN. The gentlemen should, by the way, beware: given the evidence, ce cher†a Aberdeen is just the sort of man to have them locked up and prosecuted without more ado and whether, after all this, they could be quite so sure of an acquittal, I do not know.

Page Break me39.284

Page me39.284

The MINISTRY OF ALL THE TALENTS†343 TURNS OUT A COMPLETE HUMBUG. Johnny,†b more shrunken than ever; the great Gladstone, a self-complacent know-all á la Mevissen; Aberdeen, full of diplomatic-toryistic reminiscences and consummate courtier; the late messiah Peel's apostle John, Sidney Herbert, a wholly incompetent Secretary at War, — they're a fine LOT. At the same time they all feel somewhat out of place, except for shameless old Palmerston, who is at home everywhere and, witness the Mazzini debate in both Houses,†344 as MUTINOUS as ever. Indeed, ever since the debate on Greece,†345 the Militia Bill†62 and the debate on the Address,†346 he has been de facto LEADER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, and it is bitterly ironical that, for form's sake, poor Johnny should be given this post. But when, in this capacity, Johnny goes on to ask for a salary, it is carrying effrontery beyond all bounds; however a new post is, of course, a godsend to both parties. I shall be curious to see Master Gladstone's budget; what he said about the ESTIMATES and Hume's Tariff motion†347 leads one to expect that he will leave everything more or less as it was, which is about all that is likely to result from this patriotic coalition ministry. Meanwhile, the tales of corruption during the last election are really capital and will doubtless necessitate some sort of Reform Bill during the next session. If, by then, TRADE has deteriorated and the Continent bestirs itself, we can expect some fine goings-on.

Page me39.284

I now have at home the book by Urquhart,†c the mad MP who denounces Palmerston as being in the pay of Russia. The explanation is a simple one: the fellow's a Celtic Scot with a Saxon-Scottish upbringing, by inclination a Romantic, by upbringing a FREE-TRADER. This chap went to Greece as a Philhellene†348 and, after 3 years of fighting the Turks, proceeded to Turkey and went into raptures about these self-same Turks. He enthuses over Islam on the principle, 'if I wasn't a Calvinist, I could only be a

Page Break me39.285

Mohammedan'. Turks, particularly those of the Ottoman Empire in its heyday, are the most perfect nation on earth in every possible way. The Turkish language is the most perfect and melodious in the world. All the foolish talk of barbarism, cruelty and absurd barbaric arrogance stems solely from European ignorance of Turkey and from the biased calumnies of Greek dragomans. If a European is maltreated in Turkey, he has only himself to blame; your Turk hates neither the religion of the Frank, nor his character, but only his narrow trousers. Imitation of Turkish architecture, etiquette, etc. is strongly recommended. The author himself was several times kicked in the bottom by Turks, but subsequently realised that he alone was to blame. Contact with Europeans, and attempts at civilisation, have only enervated and disorganised the Turks. The Turkish Constitution in its 'purity' is the finest there is, and is almost superior to the English. The Turk enjoys SELF-GOVERNMENT through customs going back a thousand years and through the Koran. The Sultan, far from being a 'despot', is more circumscribed than the MOST GRACIOUS QUEEN.†a Freedom of religion exists only in Turkey. In this paradise there are no class differences, class struggles or political parties, nor can there be, for in matters of internal politics all are of the same mind. Nowhere is there less centralisation than in Turkey. In short, only the Turk is a gentleman and freedom exists only in Turkey.

Page me39.285

The Czar†b is now intriguing against this happy land through the agency of Greek clerics, and England has constantly allowed this same Czar to lead her by the nose. England must support Turkey, etc., etc., and other commonplaces as hoary as they are trivial. On the whole this book is highly entertaining. The really choice thing about it is that it forms the basis for the entire policy of the English, anti-Palmerston liberals, e.g. all the articles in The Daily News on the Turkish mummery are simply paraphrases of Urquhart who, qua FREE-TRADER, enjoys absolute confidence, although he blames the English for destroying Thessaly's industry with their imports — but in a HIGHLANDER a certain licence may be permitted.
Page me39.285

There is one good aspect to it, namely that The Times, even though primarily in the Russian interest, is at long last attacking the old philistine nonsense about Turkey's integrity.†c The asinine Daily News which, in its blinkered bourgeois way, can see no further than the end of its nose, is whining about betrayal but can offer nothing better to counter it than the same old diplomatic rubbish.†a†349 If the fun goes on much longer, the gentlemen will soon have to resort to other arguments and come round to the view that only a continental revolution can put an end to the mess. Surely even the most egregious philistines must in due course come to realise that, without one, absolutely nothing can be solved.

Page Break me39.286
Page me39.286

The Austro-Prussian tariff business†350 is the only step forward Germany has succeeded in making — et encore†b! The thing has so many strings attached, and so many vital issues have been left to later committees, while the actual tariff reductions are so minimal, that little will come of it. Come the great industrial crisis, and the whole trade agreement will vanish into thin air in the face of the general débâcle.
Page me39.286

Here all that happens is thieving, broken bones on the railways, and flying up in the air. The local philistines are quite dumbfounded by the extraordinary events of the past week. Fortunately cotton is going down, which is why nothing is happening on the Exchange and people can concern themselves to their heart's content with these momentous occurrences. The spinning mills and most of the weaving mills are still fully occupied, but in coarse calicoes (DOMESTICS) there is total stagnation and, as from Monday, all factories in this trade will be working only 3 days a week.
Page me39.286

Regards to your wife and children.
Page me39.286

Dronke will have received the Reichenbach thing.†c

Your

F.E.

Page me39.286
Will get the Herzen†d one of these days; the snag is that just now I'm unable to write to my brother-in-law.†e

Page me39.286
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.287

144
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.287
[London,] 10 March 1853

Dear Engels,
Received the £5.
Page me39.287
This week I was within an inch of kicking the bucket. From hepatitis, or something very similar. This is hereditary in my family. My old man†a died of it. During the 4 years I have been in England there hasn't been a sign of the thing and I thought it had gone for good. But now the worst is over and, what is more, sans médecin.†b But I am still somewhat knocked up.
Page me39.287
Yesterday I received the following 'pleasing' letter from Basle:

'Basle, 7 March 1853. 9 o'clock in the morning.

Dear Marx,
I have just heard that the whole consignment of Revelations,†c amounting to 2,000 copies, which has been lying in a village on the other side of the border for the past 6 weeks, was intercepted yesterday while being conveyed elsewhere. What will happen now, I do not know; first of all, a complaint lodged by the Baden government with the Federal Council, then, no doubt, my arrest or at least commitment for trial, etc. In either case, a terrific shindy! This briefly for your information; further communications, should I be prevented from making them myself, will reach you through a third party. When writing to me, address the envelope: “Mad. Brenner-Guéniard, magasin de modes, Basle” and, on the sealed enclosure for me, simply write “For Jacques”. I shall deposit the manuscript on the coup d'état†d in a safe place. Adieu. Before long, I hope, I shall be able to tell you more than I now know. Let me have a safe address; yours and Bamberger's are probably known.

Yours
Jacques†e

Page me39.287

Well, qu'en pensez-vous, mon cher maître renard?†f Has the 'Suisse'†g sold me to the Prussian government for cash? 6 weeks in a village on the other side of the border, the affectation of fear, not a word about the copies still in Switzerland, not a copy sent here despite my insistence!

Page Break me39.288

Page me39.288

It's enough to put one off writing altogether. This constant toil pour le roi de Prusse†a!

Page me39.288

Que faire?†b For the 'Suisse' must not be allowed to get away with it like this.

Page me39.288

Quant á†c Dana, he has honoured my bill. Originally the 'worthy' Bamberger gave me £5 against it, but then kept me traipsing to and fro between here and the City for a fortnight, and it was not until this week that he finally paid out, after weeks of 'moaning' (literally) on the part of my landlady. Since then I have sent 7 more articles to the Tribune and another one goes off tomorrow.†351 I could now begin to see my way out of the wood but for the accursed dette consolidée†d hanging round my neck. And even this would have been largely paid off had that wretched Swiss not precipitated me again into néant.†e

Page me39.288

To keep in with Dana I shall now be forced to write a somewhat longer article on haute politique.†f In other words, the détestable question orientale, regarding which a miserable YANKEE here is trying to compete with me in the Tribune.†352 But this QUESTION is primarily military and geographical, hence outside my département. So you must once more exécuter.†g What is to become of the Turkish Empire is something I have no clue about. I cannot therefore present a general perspective.

Page me39.288

However, for a newspaper article — in which, by the by, you must do your best to skirt the QUESTION as such in favour of its military, geographical and historical aspects — it seems to me that you should touch on the following basic points, which arise directly out of Montenegro†333:

Page me39.288

1. Despite all the chicanery and the political twaddle in the Press, the question orientale will never be the occasion for a European war. The diplomatists will keep quietly tinkering at it until here, too, a general hullabaloo puts an end to their tinkering.

Page me39.288

2. ENCROACHMENTS OF RUSSIA in Turkey. Austria's greed. France's ambitions. England's interests. Commercial and military significance of this bone of contention.
Page me39.288
3. Should there be a general hullabaloo, Turkey will compel England to come in on the revolutionary side, an Anglo-Russian clash being inevitable in such a case.

Page Break me39.289
Page me39.289
4. Inevitable disintegration of Mussulman Empire. D'une maniére ou de l'autre†a will fall into the hands of European civilisation.
Page me39.289
At the present, you should dwell more particularly on the Montenegro affair, on the deplorable role England is now officially playing in it. The Sultan only yielded because France and England did not pledge their help. In this affair, both countries used the entente cordiale to mask their competing for the favours of the Holy Alliance.†353 You should point out that the ruling oligarchy in England is bound to fall if only because it has become incapable of performing its traditional role abroad, namely maintaining the pre-eminence of the English nation vis-á-vis the Continent.†354
Page me39.289
Tout ça est trés pauvre, mais enfin, il me faut un ou deux articles sur cette question pour tuer mon concurrent.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me39.289
Your translation of my Sutherland article†c is splendid. I myself would seem to possess some talent for writing in English, if only I had a Flügel,†d a grammar, and a better man than Mr Pieper to correct my work.
Page me39.289
Today I shall again write to the Continent. Should I succeed, now that there's nothing doing with Schabelitz, in scraping together at least enough money to ensure my wife's peace of mind until a second bill has been drawn on Dana and returned — this time I intend to get him up to £30 — I might perhaps come and spend a few days with you in April, pour restituer mes forces.†e Then we could, for once, chat undisturbed about present conditions, which in my view must soon lead to an EARTHQUAKE.
Page me39.289
According to The Morning Post, manufacturers in Lancashire have put all their hands on SHORT TIME, PROSPERITY is drawing to an end, etc.†f What is the situation in this respect?

Your
K.M.

Page me39.289

It's already 11.30 and Dronke has still not brought me No. II†g. No doubt the fellow is still in bed. What milksops these chaps are!

Page Break me39.290
With their idleness, lack of stamina and inability to sustain any PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT, they are absolutely hopeless. We must recruit our party entirely anew. Cluss is a good man. Reinhardt in Paris is hardworking. Lassalle, despite his many 'buts', is dur†a and energetic. Pieper would not be without his uses if he possessed less childish vanité and more esprit de suite.†b Imandt and Liebknecht are tenacious, and each is useful in his own way. But that doesn't add up to a party. Ex-lieutenant Steffen, ex-witness at the Cologne trial, at present a schoolmaster in an establishment near London, seems to me efficient. Lupus GROWS FROM DAY TO DAY OLDER AND BECOMES MORE CROTCHETY. Dronke is and ever will be a 'congenial loafer'.

Page me39.290
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

145
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
Page me39.290
London, 10 March 1853†c

I have received your last lines. You will have read Kossuth's various statements.†d Even before Mazzini's statement†e was published I knew that he [Kossuth] had written a most embittered private letter about Kossuth to one of his friends here, an Englishman.†f In connection with this I wrote the following to the Daily New-York Tribune:* 'As Mr Mazzini himself has now broken the ice I may as well state that Kossuth disowned his own document†g under the pressure of his Paris friends. This is not the first symptom, in Kossuth's past career, of vacillating weakness, inextricable contradictions and false duplicity. He possesses all the attractive virtues, but also all the feminine faults, of the Artist character. He is a great artist “en paroles”.†h I recommend Mr

Page Break me39.291
Szemere's lately published biographies 'Batthyány, Görgey and Kossuth to those who, unwilling to bow to popular superstition, are anxious to form a matter-of-fact judgment.'*†a I sign all my articles. Attacks will now follow, so I shall have an opportunity to go deeper en matiére.†b I should be obliged if you would communicate to me in good time any news you hear about the emigrants, particularly as regards the par nobile fratrum.†c With a couple of pieces of such information I can always buy myself the right to deal with the matter itself in the Tribune.

Page me39.291
Quant á†d Zerffi, whom I have not seen for a fortnight, I told him at any rate that if I knew Kossuth personally I would have felt it was my duty to warn him against Bangya. It seems to me that Zerffi is talkative and somewhat indiscreet. But I do not by any means believe that he is to be placed on the same level as Bangya, but that he is much more honourable.
Page me39.291
2,000 copies of my Revelations Concerning the Cologne Trial (sent to Switzerland on 6 December 1852)†e were confiscated on the Baden border 3 months later. I am convinced that Bangya had something to do with that too. C'est un infâme qu'il faut écraser.†f
Page me39.291
Pulszky went to America about 4 weeks ago. I think Kossuth sent him there to restore the renown he has lost with the Press and to intrigue against his opponents. Pulszky will try to get me too a bad name with the New-York Tribune, but I prophesy no great success for him.

I remain yours most respectfully
Ch. Williams

Page me39.291
First published in the journal Magyar Tudomany, No. 4, 1978

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.292

146
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.292
[Manchester, 11 March 1853]

Dear Marx,
You shall have the articles within a few days†a; I see that my CONSIDERATION of Urquhart†b was opportune. Unfortunately it's too late for tomorrow's STEAMER, since I can hardly have finished at the office before 8 o'clock and some preparation is, of course, still necessary. It's grand that pére Dana is now paying £2 and promptly honouring bills; avec ça,†c we shall at last be out of the wood. Incidentally, I would never have believed that you had sent off seven English articles in such a short space of time†d; when you come up here, which I much look forward to, you will learn more English in a week than in 6 weeks with Mr Pieper.

Page me39.292

As for Monsieur Jacques,†e it is more than likely that the little man wants to imitate the trick played on the Baden government by Mr Jenni (whom he greatly resembles), namely sell part of the edition†f to the German governments, and afterwards do business so much the better with what is left. I don't believe he is so bad as to have sold the whole lot outright. Booksellers established in Basle may be justified in feeling nervous; the Basle government won't stand any nonsense and is on neighbourly terms with Baden. But mind you insist on his sending you forthwith per messagerie, i.e. by train, a packet of at least a few copies addressed direct to London or, if you like, to me, CARE OF Ermen & Engels, Manchester. Nobody would think of opening such a packet, and even were this to happen, the cat is in any case already out of the bag. It's fishy that he should so far have refused to let a single copy out of his hands. Surely he must know some manufacturer in Basle who sends ribbons, etc., etc., to London, and could include some in a consignment.

Page me39.292

There's nothing more to the Lancashire story in The Morning Post than what I told you in my yesterday's letter.†g In answer to an inquiry of ours about prices, Houldsworth and Murray, the two leading fine spinners in England, told us yesterday that it was useless to quote any prices since they were booked up a long way ahead and could not accept a single new order. Between them these two have about 150,000-200,000 mule spindles in operation. In coarse WATER-TWIST, on the other hand, No. 6/16, business is very slack precisely because of conditions in DOMESTICS which are sticking not only here but also in America and Germany.

Page Break me39.293

Page me39.293

We must destroy the competing YANKEE†a with a great SHOW of omniscience. I shall take a look at a few more books on Turkey of which there are quite a LOT in the Athenaeum.†244

Page me39.293

It is not very pleasant to hear about the DECLINE of our friends. Nor will it be pleasant if these citoyens†b go into the next affair as wise as, but no wiser than, they emerged from the last one, though when it comes to the point, the 'best' of them will no doubt pull themselves together. After Cluss, Lassalle is by far the most useful of the lot, and will be all the more so from the moment oú les biens du comte Hatzfeldt seront irrévocablement réunis au domaine public.†c†355 He may have his foibles, but he also has esprit de parti et ambition,†d and we are already aware that he will always make official business a pretext for indulging his lesser appetites and pursuing his own little private affairs. As for recruiting, that's the way it is; once we are back in Germany we shall, I think, find plenty of talented young fellows who have, in the meantime, and not without result, tasted the forbidden fruit. If we had had the means to conduct propaganda scientifically and steadily for the space of 2 or 3 years, writing books about n'importe quoi,†e as we did before 1848, we should have been appreciably better off. But that was impossible, and now the storm is already brewing. You ought to finish your Economy†45; later on, as soon as we have a newspaper, we could bring it out in WEEKLY NUMBERS, and what the populus†f could not understand, the discipuli would expound tant bien que mal, mais cependant non sans effet.†g This would provide all our by then restored associations with a basis for debate.

Page me39.293

That Dana is paying £2 per article without demur is the best proof of how firmly ensconced you are at the Tribune. Anyway, there is a certain advantage in our being the only one of all the parties of European revolution to have expounded its ideas before the English-American public. The YANKEES know absolutely nothing about the rest, for all Kossuth's twaddle amounted to was money for, and intervention on behalf of, the great man Kossuth. Doubtless Monsieur Bamberger will advance more against the next bill, the first having been paid so promptly.

Page Break me39.294

Your
F.E.

Page me39.294
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

147
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.294
[London,] 22[-23] March 1853

Dear Engels,

Your article on Turkey†a splendid. Sent off.
Page me39.294

I don't know if you have seen the following comments in a recent number of The Economist on the 'VALUE OF TURKEY'.

* 'While our commerce with Austria and Russia is either stationary or on the decline, with Turkey it is rapidly increasing. We are not able to state what proportion of our exports may find their way to Austria through Germany, but we believe it [is] only small. Our direct trade with Austria is absolutely insignificant. Our exports of British produces to her Adriatic ports (the only ones she has) were not given separately from those to the rest of Italy till 1846, when they reached £721,981. In 1850 they had fallen to £607,755 and in 1851 had risen to £812,942. Our exports to Russia were on the average of 1840 and 1841: £1,605,000, in 1846 and 1847, £1,785,000, and in 1850 and 1851, £1,372,000.' 'Our exports to the

Page Break me39.295
Turkish dominions, including Egypt, Syria, Palestine, Moldavia and Wallachia, have progressed as follows:

	£		£
1840	1,440,592		1844	3,271,333	1848	3,626,241
1841	1,885,840		1845	3,134,759	1849	3,569,023
1842	2,068,842		1846	2,707,571	1850	3,762,480
1843	2,548,321		1847	3,530,589	1851	3,548,959

Our exports are therefore threefold those to Russia and nearly double those to Russia and Austria together.'*†356

Page me39.295
So much for The Economist.†a
Page me39.295
There must be a considerable row going on about the 'TURKISH QUESTION' within the English Ministry itself, for the tune being piped by Palmerston's journal, The Morning Post, is altogether different from that in The Times.
Page me39.295
Disraeli has happily been deposed from his LEADERSHIP of the 'GREAT CONSERVATIVE PARTY' and his place taken by Sir John Pakington, A MOURNFUL MAN OTHERWISE. It is the first time since 1828 that the Tory party has possessed a 'LEADER' no less mediocre than its rank and file.
Page me39.295
You will have seen that during the last division on the Clergy Reserves Bill, when the worthy Russell himself PROPOSED THE OMISSION OF THE 3RD of his 3 original CLAUSES, it was only the votes of the conservative minority that secured victory for the Ministry.†357 A bad sign, that.
Page me39.295
Mazzini has been here for a few days, but for the time being incognito.
Page me39.295
That the 'GOOD ABERDEEN'†b is much inclined to pick on the refugees will be evident to you from the fact that last week the English police took a kind of census of refugees. Two or three detectives IN PLAIN CLOTHES went from SQUARE to SQUARE and from street to street, jotting down information, most of it culled from neighbours or nearby ale-house keepers. In exceptional cases, however — e.g. at Pulszky's, the blackguard himself being now in America — they actually pushed their way into the homes of the refugees on the pretext that a theft, etc., had been committed, and scrutinised their papers.

Page Break me39.296
Page me39.296
The estimable Barthélemy got away with 2 months' imprisonment.†274 The fellow had the effrontery to have Ledru-Rollin informed he would shoot him down like a dog. To this Ledru replied that he would never exchange shots with such a man. Barthélemy, for his part, retorted that, if he wanted to induce a man to exchange shots with him, he knew very well how to do it — tested methods being to box his ears in public, spit in his face, etc. Whereat Ledru sent word that, in such a case, Barthélemy would become acquainted with his stick and with an English MAGISTRATE. This Barthélemy seems intent on becoming the Rinaldo Rinaldini of the emigration. Some ambition!

Page me39.296

Pére Willich has landed in New York. Friend Weitling organised a banquet for him attended by 300 persons, at which Willich appeared in a vast red sash, made a long speech to the effect that bread is worth more than liberty, and was presented by Weitling with a sword. Then Weitling took the floor and proceeded to prove that Jesus Christ was the first communist and his successor none other than the well-known Wilhelm Weitling.

Page me39.296

I have received a letter from Schabelitz, which I enclose and from which it emerges 1. that, though he has not betrayed us politically, he has behaved very stupidly indeed; 2. that he meant, and still means, to swindle me, at least commercially. Originally, and under the contract, he was to run off only 2,000 copies.†a From his letter it appears that he has run off more. How many, he has still not divulged. At the same time Dronke has received an answer from Dr Feddersen to whom he had written about the matter. Feddersen confirms Schabelitz's letter, but at the same time states that, in his opinion, nothing would come of a judicial inquiry concerning Schabelitz. The question is, what is to be done? The Prussian government wants to hush the whole thing up, so much so that the Foreign Minister†b is looking for a Theory of Communism allegedly published by me in Basle. So even the title is to be kept from the public. Que faire?†c

Page me39.296

Schabelitz sent me 2 copies, 1 direct to me and 1 to Freiligrath, which together cost me 15/-. A fine return! So far I have not been able to drag the copies away from the gang. But I think I might succeed in getting hold of one by Wednesday (tomorrow) and will send it with the parcel that has long been waiting to go off to you.

Page me39.296

Zerffi is here. He fled from Paris during the razzia on foreign correspondents. He believes that friend Bangya (who, by the by and en passant, is said to be finding life difficult and intends to return here in May) had denounced him as the author of a number of articles in the Kölnische Zeitung compromising to the 'Blonde Souveraine'.†a Zerffi is a chatterbox, but his opinions on conditions in Hungary are more independent and accurate than any I have yet heard expressed by refugees from that country. This may be due to the fact that he is no Magyar born and bred, but a 'Swabian', and not only a Swabian but the son of a Hanover Jew, whose name was probably Cerf and was magyarised as Zerffi.

Page Break me39.297

Page me39.297

What wretchedly indolent dogs our people in Germany are! Not a word has come through from the fellows. By now they'll have seen from the newspapers that a pamphlet has been published about their case. But they don't so much as inquire about it. There's no responsiveness, no élan about the chaps. Old women — voilá tout.†b

Page me39.297

A funny piece of news in La Nation will hardly have come your way in Manchester. That angel Montijo suffers, it seems, from a most indelicate complaint. She is passionately addicted to farting and is incapable, even in company, of suppressing it. At one time she resorted to horse-riding as a remedy. But this having now been forbidden her by Bonaparte, she 'vents' herself. Ce n'est qu'un bruit, un petit murmure, un rien,†c mais enfin, vous savez que les Français ont le nez au plus petit vent.†d
Page me39.297

Is there no news of Weerth in Manchester yet?

Your
K.M.

Page me39.297

23 March. Yesterday, in response to our appeal†e consisting of three lines and all our names, Freiligrath, the treasurer, received from the gymnastic club in Washington the sum of £20 17s. for the Cologne people.
Page me39.297

Schimmelpfennig has inherited £1,000 from the Brüningk woman.

Page me39.297
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.298

148
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†234
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.298
London, 25 March 1853†a
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Cluss,

Your complaints about our (or at least my) laziness in the matter of writing are not WHOLLY justified. I used to write — save when ill — once a week. It was you who first replaced this with a different system, and often just sent newspapers in the interval instead of letters. There are ALL IN ALL 3 letters from you that have remained unanswered. Of those 3, two came on the same day, one enclosed with the money sent to Freiligrath, one direct to myself. Hence, only 2 unanswered letters.†358 If you go back to writing once every week, whether at length or briefly, I too will again adopt this regular MANNER. Or rather, I shall do so without waiting. But then I shall expect the same of you.

Page me39.298

Schabelitz has now written to me at length. He had printed the Revelations pamphlet 2 months ago and, for the space of 5 weeks, left it lying at Weil, a Baden village on the other side of the border. Instead of posting a reliable man there, the jackass went and left everything to the smuggler who, having gradually extracted from him a substantial sum of money, ended up by giving himself away to the Baden government. The rest you will have seen in the last issue of the Tribune.†b But you will be even more convinced of the interest taken by the Prussian government in this pamphlet, and hence of its importance to the 'Fatherland', when I tell you that the heroic Stieber has not only become police superintendent in Berlin but is co-opted onto every ministerial council concerned with precautionary measures against revolutionaries and revolutionary activities. I am almost beside myself with anger at the pamphlet's temporary suppression. You for your part would not appear to have handled matters on this occasion with your usual felicity. The Neu-England-Zeitung may take a year to get it out by thus printing it in dribs and drabs,†359 whereas it devotes whole columns to the 'figure de fouine'†c of the wretched Ruge who, over here, has still not succeeded in acquiring more than a 'strictly circumscribed train' of 5 persons. Why didn't you put the thing into the Demokrat, a much more widely read organ, to which you yourself contribute? Next time you write you must tell me frankly whether or not the thing can be produced as a pamphlet in America. It would be for European consumption and would be tossed into Prussia via Hamburg. If I were not utterly devoid of means I would arrange for it to be printed in Altona forthwith. It is not partiality to the little lampoon, but my perfect knowledge of conditions in Prussia which prompts me to say that, at the present moment, we could deal our beloved Prussians no more telling blow.

Page Break me39.299
Page me39.299

Don't lose sight of that blackguard Willich. He is the most rabid of enemies and an idiot into the bargain.
Page me39.299

Pulszky has not come among you simply to engage in high politics. He has also been sent across the ocean for the purpose of appeasing General Vetter who, having become DISAFFECTED, is intriguing from America against the 'GREAT Kossuth'. To my amazement I see in the Daily Tribune, received from you today, that it has accepted my attacks upon Kossuth-Mazzini.†a I had thought this highly improbable, the more so since Greeley's WHITE-RED-BLACK FRIEND, the Jew Pulszky,†b is over there.
Page me39.299

Szemere wrote to me from Paris giving me the news I published in the Tribune, namely that there had been a lengthy conference between Kossuth and his Parisian PARTISANS about his now 'DISOWNED PROCLAMATION'†c and that they forced the miserable little man to make a disavowal.
Page me39.299

Barthélemy, Willich's friend, whom you will remember from his duel with Schramm†360 (the latter, by the by, lives in Cincinnati whence he has written once), has received a 2 months' sentence for fighting a duel on English soil in the course of which he killed Cournet. He got off so lightly, despite the sordid DISCLOSURES which were made during the trial, because according to English law, seconds are punished as severely as duellists and also because they didn't want to make the poor devil pay the full penalty for what he had done. The fellow had the effrontery when in prison to have a message sent to Ledru saying that as soon as he came out he would shoot him down like a dog. Ledru replied that he would not exchange shots with such a scoundrel. Barthélemy: He was very well able to induce a man to exchange shots with him by boxing his ears in the open street, and other such tested methods. Ledru (riposte): That being so, he would regale him with his stick.

Page Break me39.300
Page me39.300

The winsome warrior, Schimmelpfennig, has inherited £1,000 sterling†a from the Brüningk woman. Indeed, Monsieur le Lieutenant had appointed himself to the post of sycophant, nursery-maid, fan-bearer, political oracle, companion, admirer, boots, and any other agreeable function you may care to name.
Page me39.300

Reichenbach wants to go to America, as does — up to a point — Kalb of Löwe,†b the first as a farmer, the second as a doctor.
Page me39.300

In the West, the most important, if least conspicuous event, has been the burial of Madame Raspail in Paris†c. The unexpected turn-out of 20,000 proletarians IN FULL DRESS utterly dumbfounded the Bonapartists. So you can see that the proletarian lion isn't dead. For Ledru, too, the event was a most bitter pill. Raspail is his arch-enemy.
Page me39.300

One more FACT. Don't blame me if it is unaesthetic. The 'blonde souveraine', Montijo-Lola,†d is subject to a most repellent constitutional complaint — incessant farting. It is known as tympoptanomania. Formerly she used to combat the 'ACCIDENT' with energetic horse-riding which Bonaparte has now forbidden her on the grounds that it is beneath her station. Thus at several 'réunions' her 'détonations fortes'†e have even brought blushes to the cheeks of braided Décembraillards.†f And that is saying a great deal. Ce n'est qu'un petit bruit, un murmure, un rien†g; mais enfin, vous savez que les Français ont le nez au plus petit vent.†h
Page me39.300

In a year at the most you will, I think, be with us. Les choses marchent.†i

Your
K.M.

Page me39.300
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.301

149
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.301
[Manchester,] Sunday, 10 April [1853]

Dear Marx,

I return herewith Cluss' letter.†361 And there, it seems, the matter will have to rest until we have before us the whole of Hirsch's document,†a and also his first statement†b which Weydemeyer has retained (do you know anything more about this?). The Bangya business isn't very nice; however, au bout du compte,†c it is better to settle it now than later. According to what you write you have full proof against Bangya to hand now, and, of course, there is also Zerffi to vouch for the Greif business.†d Knowing as we do now what is coming, we have time to prepare a proper answer.†e I shall look out Bangya's and the fictitious Collmann's letters.†f So far as I am concerned, the pamphlet†g can be printed in America.
Page me39.301

Some of the things in Hirsch's statement are perfectly correct, e.g. concerning your letter from Manchester.†362 At the same time, of course, he does his fair share of lying and keeping things under his hat. For instance, he forgets to say that he followed you to Manchester, clearly not by accident, and that, meeting us one Sunday in the Bury New Road with another loafer, he called out quite loudly as he went by: 'Good morning, Marx!' You will recall that we wondered who it might be; ce fut notre cher Hirsch.†h Likewise the affair of Mrs Daniels' letter and the domiciliary visit.†260
Page me39.301

It is curious how many spies á la Cooper†363 seem to be turning up just now. Chenu, Cherval, Hirsch. It's a good thing Hirsch now testifies that Bangya was never able to report anything about you except personal tittle-tattle.
Page me39.301

Inquiries must be made about the persons mentioned. Lanckoronski is clearly none other than the 'Count L.' denounced by you as a Russian agent in the Kossuth-Bonaparte article.†a As far as Bangya is concerned, we are fully covered by Kossuth and Szemere and, if he possessed a manuscript of Szemere's,†b why not one of ours?†c It's an excellent thing that we have always kept everything that came our way.

Page Break me39.302
Page me39.302

Apropos. Not long ago Dronke made a terrible fuss about my not providing him AT A MOMENT'S NOTICE with the Reichenbach circular†299 and now, in the parcel of American papers, I find it reproduced at least ten times. Couldn't the lazy devil have searched it out himself?

Page me39.302

Pour revenir.†d I don't believe anything can be done publicly for the time being, i.e. until we've had a thorough examination of the documents; preliminary steps, no more — for instance, finding out where the document came from, the present whereabouts of Hirsch and what he is doing and, if necessary, confronting the fellow in order to extract another written statement from him. I shall also take immediate steps to find out more about the business of Fleury and the theft†364; unfortunately my informant, a personal acquaintance of his, is ill. Mind you send me without delay the requisite personal description, etc., etc.
Page me39.302

Today I have leafed through most of the American papers sent to me. Much is very amusing but, when there's such a pile of them, it's a very trying and stultifying job. By comparison, Cluss' letters are a delight. I see that the Revelations are already appearing in the Neu-England-Zeitung†365; it's really too bad of Weydemeyer not to have got them into the Criminal-Zeitung. The least he can now do is to catch up with the main content — drop him a heavy hint to that effect by the next STEAMER, otherwise it may never occur to him.
Page me39.302

I have not yet read the pile of (New York) Demokrats in which Weydemeyer publishes his articles; I'm saving them up for this evening.
Page me39.302

Between ourselves, I am now pretty well convinced that it was, after all, Monsieur Bangya who betrayed Kothes' address.†e It's a good thing nobody knows about it.
Page me39.302

If the business of Hirsch and Bangya becomes any more involved, there'll be another job for us to do when you come up.

Page Break me39.303
What are your prospects of a visit? I am counting on seeing you here in May at the latest.
Page me39.303

You will have had my Friday's letter†366 and with it £3. Warm regards to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.303
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

150
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†1
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.303
Manchester, 12 April 1853

Dear Weydemeyer,

Herewith Marx's statement on Hirsch's Confessions†a which you should immediately get into as many papers as you can. If you send Cluss a copy at once, he will undoubtedly be able to take over a large part of the task. It would, I think, do no harm if you were to append the words, 'The undersigned express their full agreement with the above, E. Dronke, F. Engels'. As far as the business of the manuscript†b is concerned, and relations with Bangya generally, we are just as responsible as Marx and it would not be right if we were to let him bear the responsibility alone. The copy that was handed over†c is partly in Dronke's hand, the original almost entirely in mine. There is now a prospect of the thing being published in Switzerland.
Page me39.303

This statement was composed solely on the strength of the excerpts made by you and sent to us by Cluss.†d Whether the remainder contains anything that will necessitate a further statement, we cannot, of course, yet say, but doubtless you'll have extracted everything relating to ourselves. In a few days' time you will, I trust, send us the whole thing in print.

Page Break me39.304
Page me39.304

As for Bangya, we have him completely in our power. The fellow's so deeply implicated that he is utterly done for. Fresh grounds for suspicion kept cropping up and, in order to cover himself he was compelled to show Marx little by little his entire hoard of documents from Kossuth, Szemere, etc. This is how I come to possess the original manuscript of Szemere's pamphlet on Kossuth and Görgey. Mr Kossuth, then, has been badly compromised through Mr. Bangya. This magyarised Slav's petty cunning was foiled by Marx's tenacity and the skill with which he implicated him. We, and no one else (save perhaps Szemere, up to a point), now possess complete documentary evidence as to Bangya's character, but what purpose would be served by raising the alarm just now? The fellow is said to be returning to London in May, and then we can press him hard and possibly extract a great deal more useful information. All manner of things have been going on between Willich and Hirsch which are still very far from clear and if, as you maintain, it was through Kinkel's agency that Hirsch's manuscript found its way over there, this again conjures up the most bizarre speculations. Il faut tâcher d'y voir clair,†a and Bangya can be useful there. So don't say anything about it for the moment; that apart, let the Hungarian gentlemen themselves come forward for once and speak their minds, Kossuth in particular. Why should we give them a helping hand? If they make fools of themselves in a public statement, tant mieux,†b then it will be our turn.
Page me39.304

The émigrés are carrying on as disreputably as ever, though with less public offence than hitherto. When I was in London at Christmas-time,†313 we used to mingle sans façon with the crowd in the Kinkel-Willich-Ruge pubs, something we could scarcely have done 6 months earlier without risking a brawl. Often the small fry would come up to us quite amiably and patiently allow us to twit them, particularly the gallant Meyen-Julius Vindex.†c Amongst our own people, everything is still much the same. Lupus is said to be keeping himself very much to himself. Dronke has been angling for a clerk's post these past six months and now there's a scheme afoot to get him one in Bradford, 2 1/2 hours by railway from here. Weerth, when I last heard from him, was in St Thomas in the West Indies, where he had survived the yellow fever season. Red

Page Break me39.305
Wolf†a who, as you know, is a husband and father, takes his wife and child out on jaunts and seldom puts in an appearance. Freiligrath is still living in Hackney and engages in commerce under the auspices of Mr Oxenford.†b As for myself, I have made substantial progress this past winter in Slavonic languages and military affairs and, by the end of the year, shall have a passable knowledge of Russian and South Slav.†c In Cologne I accoutred myself at little expense with the library of a retired Prussian artillery officer and for a time felt myself quite the bombardier again, what with the old Plümicke,†d the Brigade Training Manual and other well-thumbed volumes which you will remember. However, Prussian military literature is positively the worst there is, the only tolerable stuff being what was written with the campaigns of 1813/15 still fresh in mind. But after 1822 this gives way to a repulsively pretentious pedantry, to a bogus omniscience, which is the very devil. Quite recently a number of passable things have again appeared in Prussia, but not many. Unfortunately the French stuff is completely inaccessible to me owing to my unfamiliarity with specialised literature.
Page me39.305
I have swotted up pretty well on the old campaigns (i.e. after 1792); the Napoleonic ones are so simple that it would be difficult to go wrong on them. However, au bout du compte†e Jomini gives the best account of them; despite many fine things, I can't really bring myself to like that natural genius, Clausewitz.†367 For the immediate future, i.e. for us, the Russian campaign of 1812 is the most important, the only one where important strategic problems still remain to be solved; Germany and Italy do not admit of any lines of action other than those laid down by Napoleon, whereas in Russia everything is still very confused. The question whether, originally, Napoleon's plan of operations in 1812 was to march directly on Moscow or, during the first campaign, simply advance as far as the Dnieper and Dvina, repeats itself for us with the question as to what a revolutionary army should do in the event of a successful offensive against Russia. This question — accidents apart, of course, and assuming no more than an approximately equal balance of forces — can be solved, or so it has seemed to me up till now, only by water — in the Sound and in the Dardanelles, at Petersburg, Riga and Odessa. Apart also, of course, from internal movements in Russia — and an aristocratic-bourgeois revolution in Petersburg with a resulting civil war in the interior is a possibility. Mr Herzen has made things much easier for himself (Du progrés des idées révolutionnaires en Russie†a) by positing, Hegel-fashion, a democratic-social-communist-Proudhonist Republic of Russia under the triumvirate Bakunin-Herzen-Golovin, so that it cannot possibly fail. Meanwhile it is by no means certain that Bakunin is still alive and in any case Russia, with its huge expanses and sparse population, is a country that is very difficult to conquer. As to the former Polish provinces on this side of the Dvina and Dnieper, I want to hear nothing more of them, knowing as I do that the peasants there are all Ukrainians, only the aristocracy and some of the people in the towns being Polish, and that to the peasant there, as in Ukrainian Galicia in 1846,†368 the restoration of Poland is synonymous with the restoration of the old ruling aristocracy, its powers unimpaired. In all these countries, outside the kingdom of Poland proper, there are barely 500,000 Poles!

Page Break me39.306

Page me39.306

It is a good thing, by the way, that this time the revolution should have found a respectable antagonist in Russia and not such spineless scarecrows of opponents†b as in the year 1848.
Page me39.306

In the meantime all sorts of symptoms keep appearing. Prosperity in cotton has reached such heights as to become vertiginous, whereas certain branches of the cotton industry (coarse qualities, DOMESTICS) are completely stagnant. Speculators hope to escape this vertigo by promoting it en gros†c solely in America and France (railways with English money), but over here piecemeal in penny packets, thus by degrees spreading the condition to all articles. The quite abnormal weather we've had here during the winter and spring must have damaged the corn and if, as usually happens, the summer is also abnormal, it will spell ruin to the harvest. To my mind the present prosperity cannot last beyond the autumn. In the meantime the 3rd English ministry in 12 months — and, indeed, the last one that will be possible without the direct intervention of the radical bourgeoisie — is falling into disrepute. One after another Whigs, Tories and Coalitionists come to grief as a result, not of a tax deficit, but of a SURPLUS.†369 That typifies the whole policy of the old parties and also their extreme impotence. If the present ministers tumble, it will no longer be possible to govern England without considerably extending the pays légal†a; hence, this is likely to come about at the beginning of the crisis.

Page Break me39.307
Page me39.307

The protracted tedium of prosperity has made it almost impossible for the unhappy Bonaparte to maintain his dignity; the world is bored and he bores the world. Unfortunately he cannot remarry every 4 weeks. This trickster, drunkard and cheat will come to grief through having to make a pretence of putting Engel's Fürstenspiegel into practice. The vagabond as 'father of the fatherland'! He is aux abois.†b Yet he can't even start a war: everywhere serried ranks bristling with bayonets as soon as he makes the slightest move. And then this period of tranquillity affords the peasants most desirable time in which to reflect upon how the man who promised to subdue Paris for the peasants' benefit is now using the peasants' money to embellish Paris and how, despite everything, mortgages and taxes are going up rather than down. In short, this time the thing is being methodically prepared, and that's very promising.

Page me39.307

In Prussia the government has raised a veritable hornet's nest among the bourgeoisie with its income tax. The bureaucrats have increased the rates of tax in the most barefaced manner, and you can imagine the glee with which those egregious quillpushers are now poking their noses into the trade secrets and ledgers of all the merchants. Even my old man, a dyed-in-the-wool Prussian, is fuming with rage. These fellows must now endure to the bitter end the blessings of a constitutional, fatherly, Prussian gouvernement á bon marché.†c Prussia's national debt, — some 67 mill. talers before 1848, — must since have swollen to four times that amount, and already they are wanting to borrow again! One can only assume that the portly monarch†d would cheerfully sweat now, as once he sweated during the March days,†e if only he were to be guaranteed this credit for the rest of his mortal life. Yet Louis Napoleon has helped him set the Customs Union on its feet again, Austria, fearing war, has drawn in her horns,†370 'and now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace into the grave'!†f
Page me39.307

The Austrians are doing everything in their power to set things in motion again in Italy, a country which, before the Milan uprising,†335 was completely given over to commerce and prosperity in so far as this was compatible with taxation; and if everything goes on like this for another few months, Europe will be in a splendid state of readiness, needing only the jog of a crisis. On top of this, one must consider that prosperity, unprecedented in its scope and duration — having begun early in 1849 — has restored the strength of the exhausted parties (in so far as these were not beyond repair, like the monarchist party in France) much more quickly than was the case after 1830, for example, when trading conditions long remained unsettled and, on the whole, indifferent. In 1848, too, only the Paris proletariat, and later Hungary and Italy, were exhausted by severe struggles; after June 1848, the insurrections that took place in France were hardly worth speaking of and, in the final count, ruined only the old monarchist parties. Add to this the curious result produced by the movement in all countries, a result in no way serious or significant save for the colossal historical irony and the concentration of Russian military resources; and in view of all this, it seems to me that, even taking the most sober view, the present state of affairs cannot possibly continue beyond the spring of 1854.

Page Break me39.308
Page me39.308

How splendid it is that on this occasion our party is taking the stage under wholly different auspices. All the socialist stupidities which one still had to advocate in 1848 vis-á-vis the pure democrats and the South German republicans, the vapourings of L. Blanc, etc., and, indeed, even the things we were compelled to propound if only to find points d'appui for our views in the confused state of affairs in Germany — all this is already being advocated by our respected opponents, by Ruge, Heinzen, Kinkel and so forth. The preliminaries to proletarian revolution, the measures by which the field of battle is being made ready and the way cleared for us — a single and indivisible republic, etc., things which originally we had to advocate in the teeth of those whose natural, normal calling it should have been to implement, or at least demand them, — all this is now convenu,†a has been learnt by the gentlemen. This time we shall start off straight away with the Manifesto,†b thanks largely to the Cologne trial in which German communism (most notably through Röser) has passed its matriculation.

Page me39.308

All this, of course, relates merely to theory; in practice we shall, as always, be reduced to insisting above all on resolute measures and absolute ruthlessness. And that's the pity of it. I have a feeling that one fine day, thanks to the helplessness and spinelessness of all the others, our party will find itself forced into power, whereupon it will have to enact things that are not immediately in our own, but rather in the general, revolutionary and specifically petty-bourgeois interest; in which event, spurred on by the proletarian populus and bound by our own published statements and plans — more or less wrongly interpreted and more or less impulsively pushed through in the midst of party strife — we shall find ourselves compelled to make communist experiments and leaps which no one knows better than ourselves to be untimely. One then proceeds to lose one's head — only physiquement parlant†a I hope — , a reaction sets in and, until such time as the world is capable of passing historical judgment of this kind of thing, one will be regarded, not only as a brute beast, which wouldn't matter a rap, but also as bête,†b and that's far worse. I don't very well see how it could happen otherwise. In a backward country such as Germany which possesses an advanced party and which, together with an advanced country such as France, becomes involved in an advanced revolution, at the first serious conflict, and as soon as there is real danger, the turn of the advanced party will inevitably come, and this in any case will be before its normal time. However, none of this matters a rap; the main thing is that, should this happen, our party's rehabilitation in history will already have been substantiated in advance in its literature.

Page Break me39.309
Page me39.309

We shall, by the way, cut a far more respectable figure on the stage than last time. In the first place we are happily rid of all the old idlers in the persons of Schapper, Willich and Co., secondly, we have grown somewhat stronger, thirdly, we can count on the rising generation in Germany (if nothing else, the Cologne trial is enough to guarantee us this), and finally we have all of us benefited substantially in exile. There are, of course, some amongst us who proceed on the principle: 'What need is there for us to swot? That's what pére Marx is there for, it's his business to know everything.' But in general the Marx party does do a good deal of swotting, and one only has to look at the way the other émigré jackasses snap up this or that new catchword, thereby becoming more bemused than ever, to realise that our party's superiority has increased both absolutely and relatively. As indeed it must, for la besogne sera rude.†c
Page me39.309

I should like to have time before the next revolution to study and describe thoroughly at least the campaigns of 1848 and 1849 in Italy and Hungary. Generally speaking, I have a pretty clear notion of the business, despite imperfect maps, etc. But the very accuracy of detail required to depict it calls for a great deal of trouble and expense. On both occasions the Italians behaved like nincompoops. Willisen's account and analysis, while accurate on the whole, is often silly,†a and the total superiority of Austrian strategy, which he stresses as early as 1848, only becomes apparent in the Novara campaign,†371 without doubt the most brilliantly fought affair in Europe since Napoleon's day (outside Europe, however, the feats performed by old General Napier in India in 1842 are of quite another order and, indeed, reminiscent of Alexander the Great; on the whole I regard Charles Napier as the foremost living general). Strange in Italy, just as in Baden in 1849, is the traditional superstitious belief in positions occupied during the campaigns of the 1790s. Nothing would have induced Mr Sigel to fight anywhere save in the position made classical by Moreau, and Charles Albert's belief in the Virgin Mary's virginity was no more steadfast than his belief in the miraculous powers of the plateau of Rivoli. So immutable was this conviction in Italy that the Austrians commenced every important manoeuvre with a feint attack on Rivoli and every time the Piedmontese fell into the trap. The joke is, of course, that the relative positions and lines of communication were quite different.

Page Break me39.310
Page me39.310

Despite everything, Monsieur Görgey remains the only fellow in Hungary who was superior to everyone else and to whom everyone else was hostile out of sheer envy; I think it probable that had not Görgey, despite his great military talents, been a very vain, petty chap, this for the most part stupid hostility would have finally turned him into a traitor. Ever since the Világos affair†372 — entirely justified in military (but not revolutionary) terms — the fellows have subjected Görgey to such a plethora of insane accusations that the chap almost compels one's interest. The actual 'betrayal' took place after the relief of Komarom,†373 before the Russians got there, and for this Kossuth is just as much to blame as Görgey. A cloud of uncertainty still envelops Bayer, Görgey's Chief of the General Staff, who is now in London. From the memoirs of Görgey†b and other sources, it would seem that it was he who inspired Görgey's strategic plans. From what Pleyel told me, Bayer is the principal author of the official Austrian book on the campaign.†c (Bayer was captured in Pest and escaped); it is said to be excellent, but I haven't yet been able to get hold of it. Görgey speaks of Klapka with great respect, but everyone admits that he was very weak. Perczel is regarded as a jackass, the 'democratic' Hungarian general. Old Bem always thought of himself only as a good partisan and commander of a detached corps intended for a definite purpose; so far as I can judge, this is all he was, but to a superlative degree. He did two stupid things, once with his fruitless expedition into the blue after Banat; next, during the great Russian invasion when he repeated, literally, the highly professional manoeuvre he had successfully executed before Hermannstadt and was trounced in consequence.†374 Pére Dembinski, however, was an incorrigible visionary and braggart, a partisan who believed himself born to conduct great campaigns and embarked on the maddest enterprises. Smitt's Polish Campaign of 1831†a contains some good stories about him.

Page Break me39.311
Page me39.311

Apropos. Could you give me a short description of Cologne's fortifications with a few drawings — rough sketches — done from memory? If I remember rightly, the main wall is bastioned and the forts are said to be of the Montalembert type; is that so, and how many of them are there? You can use any military engineering terms, since I have some quite passable manuals and drawings here. Do you know details of any other Prussian fortresses? I am fairly familiar with Coblenz (Ehrenbreitstein, at least), and have seen a plan of Mainz. What interests me particularly is the manner in which the new Montalembert structures are built in Germany; it's impossible to find out anything about this owing to Prussian secretiveness.
Page me39.311

Write soon. Warmest regards to your wife†b and to Cluss from

Your
F. Engels.

Page me39.311
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 31, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.312

151
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†375
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.312
[London, 17 April 1853]

... Today I have received the first 5 numbers†a from New York, whether from Weydemeyer or from Kellner I do not know. With most of them I was already familiar through you. This is at least a decent paper — a rare thing in America — and a working man's paper. However, I cannot say I very much care for the chief editor's affected effusions concerning 'questions personnelles' which are at one and the same time party questions, or for his pseudo-naive gentility and biblical portentousness. But you have to take this newspaper as it comes. What I liked best of all was Weydemeyer's introduction to his 'Ökonomische Skizzen'. Good stuff that. I have approached our people here; Dronke and Pieper have, I think, already sent something. I shall speak to Jones. On the whole it is difficult to get contributions. I myself have too much to do. The others unfortunately are still somewhat put off by their earlier experiences. Lupus is in a wretched state. Eccarius has to work away at his tailoring from 5 in the morning until 8 at night and is in a dangerously hectic condition. Engels, when not stuck in the office, is completely taken up with his studies, and probably he too has not yet got over the wrongs he thinks he has suffered at the hands of the American Press. Our party is, alas, very pauvre.†b I shall also approach ex-lieutenant Steffen, ex-witness for the defence at the Cologne trial, presently a schoolmaster in the vicinity of London. He has more spare time than anyone else and is very capable.

Page me39.312
Pieper has still not finished the articles you want, which explains why you haven't yet had them.†376
Page me39.312
As for the Hirsch affair,†c a statement†d IMMEDIATELY went off to Engels via Engels, which, etc., etc. I've known for 6 months or more that there was something fishy about Bangya. I didn't break with the fellow until, like the jackass he is, he had let me find out all about his connections, handed over all documents that put me in the right and him in the wrong, and generally placed himself at my mercy. I threw him out months ago at Szemere's.

Page Break me39.313
Page me39.313
My suspicions of Willich have only been confirmed by his latest step. D'abord,†a I know that he and Kinkel paid and continue to pay Hirsch out of revolutionary funds! Then, at the Cologne trial, soon after it began, he boasted to Fleury (who in turn passed it on to Imandt) that he had in his possession a letter of mine to Bangya dated Manchester. I challenged Bangya about this at the time. He said he was willing to be confronted with Fleury. On being informed of this by Imandt at my behest, Fleury retracted. Thus at that time Willich was illicitly consorting with Hirsch. He knew that Hirsch was illicitly consorting with Greif and that his friend Fleury was a spy. It was through these fellows that he got hold of my letter. The 'gallant worthy' — for whom, en passant,†b free meat and drink is le dernier but†c — wanted to set a trap for me, and to that end became embroiled in intrigues with mouchards.†d
Page me39.313
True, he sent Hirsch to Cologne. True, I heard later that Hirsch was in Cologne. But why did he send Hirsch to Cologne, and when did he send him there? Firstly, when it was already too late. 2. When the police in Cologne had themselves denounced his friend Fleury. 3. When he himself, having become suspect, wished to rehabilitate himself as a 'magnanimous worthy' by means of this theatrical coup. This was Hirsch's own account of the affair on his return...
Page me39.313
Reichenbach and family, 'clever' Lieutenant Schimmelpfennig complete with wife and Brüningk legacy of £1,000, and lastly, the artist Schmolze, set sail today for America. Bon voyage! But Reichenbach's flight has deprived poor Lupus of the last of his lessons. It's most unfortunate for him. He's no Kinkel. Nor does he know how to lick the boots of the bourgeois like the future 'President of the German Republic' and his 'consort',†e both of them consummate sycophants, humbugs and parasites. The amiable Gottfried has so far succeeded in ingratiating himself that he has been accorded the use of one of London University's lecture rooms to repeat before a London audience his old series of lectures on Christian art in the Middle Ages. He is giving them free and gratis in the hope that he will be able to worm his way into the post of Professor of Aesthetics at London University. He delivers them in ABOMINABLE English, reading from a manuscript. Though welcomed with applause at the beginning of the series, he subsequently proved such a complete failure that not even the organised claque of Jewish aesthetics-mongers could save him. Edgar Bauer, who was present — Kinkel gave his first lecture last Tuesday — told me all about it. It seems to have been a truly nauseating and wretched performance.

Page Break me39.314

Page me39.314
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 3 May 1853

Published in English in full for the first time

152
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.314
[London,] 23 April 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

The Pieper business is true.†377 Bangya is here again, also Stieber and Goldheim. Please return enclosed pencilled note immediately.†a Qu'en dis-tu?†b
Page me39.314

I now have a further £30 to draw on New York. Bamberger refused to budge, but I have something else in prospect. If it materialises, I shall visit you from 1 to 7 May, supposé†c I shan't be in your way.
Page me39.314

If you have the time, I should very much like to have an article on Switzerland†378 by Friday.†d You have dealt with the subject any number of times, whereas I am not familiar with the personalities, etc. But it should be an article without a sequel. One article on Switzerland is enough for a country of that size.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.314
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.315

153
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.315
[London,] 26 April 1853

Dear Frederic,

I fear that nothing will come of my proposed trip.†a Bamberger cannot discount the bill for me and Friedländer, who half-promised to do so, has now definitely refused. I have written to Strohn about it,†379 but look on this as a mere formality which I complied with pour acquit de conscience†b and for my wife's sake, without expecting anything to come of it.

Page me39.315

A paper of mine for the Tribune (which included the first Turkish article)†c about Mazzini's presence here — again denied by his friends but on his orders, I think — was made the basis for a short LEADER on Mazzini's lucky escape, followed by the comment:

* 'In this connection we may properly pay a tribute to the remarkable ability of the correspondent by whom this interesting piece of intelligence is furnished. Mr Marx has very decided opinions of his own, with some of which we are far from agreeing, but those who do not read his letters neglect one of the most instructive sources of information on the great questions of current European politics.'*†d

Page me39.315

As you see, I am firmly in the saddle. I have in addition had a most interesting letter from Cluss with 2 issues containing Hirsch's confessions†e (not yet concluded). I'm not sending the stuff yet since there's still a chance that something might happen to enable me to come myself and bring the things with me. Anyhow, I won't come without notifying you beforehand. When is your old man arriving? I'd rather not cannon into him.

Page me39.315

If only Dana would advise me of a business house here, as I have asked him three times to do, I should at least be over the worst.

Page me39.315

Ad vocem†f Hirsch: Originally I was of the same opinion†g as yourself, but the matter is somewhat different. Stieber and Goldheim are definitely here, their purpose being to 'link'

Page Break me39.316

Kossuth's gunpowder plot with Berlin.†380 The same fellow who wrote me the anonymous scrawl,†a wrote on the same day to Schärttner and Göhringer word-for-word as follows:

'London, 21.4.53
Announcement

Recent arrivals: Police Commissioner Stieber and the Jew Goldheim, a police lieutenant, both of Berlin (P.T.O.)
Description

Stieber	the Jew Goldheim
Medium height (about 5)	about 6'
Hair: black, short	black, short
Moustache: ditto, ditto	ditto, ditto
Complexion: sallow and muddy	sallow, puffy features
Wears dark, narrow trousers, a blue sack, a collapsible stuff hat, and spectacles.	Wears black trousers, a light yellow sack, black hat.

Page me39.316
N.B. Both of them regularly go about together and are accompanied by Hirsch, a commercial assistant from Hamburg, and Haering, a postal clerk from Willich's birth-place. Today Stieber and Goldheim had a meeting with Bangya. Stieber and Goldheim visit the Prussian Embassy regularly every day between 11 and 3.'

Page me39.316
I believe the author to be Henry de L'Aspée, friend and compatriot of O. Dietz, that same aggrieved policeman who, you will recall, was to have [a meeting] with us after your arrival here for the purpose of making further revelations. You can see what headway 'Hirsch' is making. Nothing could be more inopportune for Willich-Kinkel.
Page me39.316
FAREWELL.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.316
As to the pound,†b I shall give them each 10/-, since so far as I know there's some prospect of Pieper's getting his money without a lawsuit. The poor devil is hellish syphilitic and at the same time in rotten CIRCUMSTANCES and too featherbrained to look after himself.

Page me39.316

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel Zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.317

154
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.317
[London, 26 April 1853]

Dear Cluss,

You must by now have received three letters from me.†381 Enclosed a Jones Paper, containing an anti-Times article by 'Englishman'.†a

Page me39.317

If the Cologne Revelations have not yet been printed as a pamphlet, or 'gratis' as such by the Neu-England-Zeitung, do nothing more about it, as it is now too late.

Page me39.317

Willich has written to Herzen (the Russian) to say that everything is going 'splendidly', that he has achieved 'great results' and will soon be returning.

Page me39.317

Mr Hentze, for one, is again implicated in the Berlin business.†b In any case, as Willich-Kinkel's agent, he would have been possessed of old proclamations and revolutionary recipes. Furthermore, he was destined by these great men to be military commander of Berlin.

Page me39.317

The local Rollinists†c are blushing for shame over Ruge's proclamation of which they were informed by us. In no case had Ledru given Ruge permission to publish this discreditable letter. Ruge extorted the letter from Ledru through the latter's ex-servant, the ex-Palatinate lawyer, and ex-French deputy, Savoye — one-time pedlar of German adjectiva.†382 At all events, Ledru has sunk lower than ever before.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.317
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.318

155
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.318
[London,] 26 April 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Weydemeyer,

On 21 April I received the anonymous scrawl set out below. An identical anonymous letter was sent to the democratic tavern-keepers, Schärttner and Göringer. I have ASCERTAINED the facts contained therein. I think you should publish the thing (you may name Schärttner and Göringer) along with a few introductory remarks dated London. Messrs Stieber and Goldheim have come over here in order to 'link' Kossuth's apocryphal gunpowder plot with the Berlin affair.†a From the following you will note to what extent the 'contrite' Hirsch continues to be 'A Victim of Moucharderie'.†b Let us hope the blackguard doesn't succeed in finding fresh victims in Berlin. I think this business will prove his complete undoing in America. Cluss will have received what follows below at the same time as yourself. We were all very taken with your 2 articles in the Reform.†c Only see to it that Kellner doesn't exploit you without a fitting quid pro quo in terms of political influence. Well, here is a word-for-word copy of the letter received by Schärttner, etc.:

'London, 21.4.53

Announcement

Recent arrivals: Police Commissioner Stieber and the Jew Goldheim, a police lieutenant, both of Berlin.

Description

Stieber	the Jew Goldheim
Medium height (about 5')	about 6'
Hair: black, short	black, short
Moustache: ditto, ditto	ditto, ditto
Complexion: sallow and muddy	sallow, puffy features
Wears dark, narrow trousers, a blue sack, a collapsible stuff hat, and spectacles.	Wears black trousers, a light yellow sack, black hat.

Page Break me39.319
Page me39.319

N.B. Both of them regularly go about together and are accompanied by Hirsch, a commercial assistant from Hamburg, and Haering, a one-time postal clerk from Willich's birth-place. Today Stieber and Goldheim had a meeting with Bangya. Stieber or Goldheim visit the Prussian Embassy regularly every day between 11 and 3.'

Page me39.319

Today's Times reports the presence here of Stieber and Goldheim.†a

Page me39.319

Many regards to you and your wife.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.319

As that fire-eater Heinzen has again had the audacity in his Volk to invoke the 'Chartists' — who simply want universal suffrage without having to bother their heads over communists or odious class distinctions, I think it high time you published in the Reform the letter written to you by Ernest Jones.†82

Page me39.319

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

156

ENGELS TO MARX†383

IN LONDON

Page me39.319

[Manchester,] 26 April 1853

Dear Marx,

Herewith the article†378 and pound sterling. Even though one of the two CLAIMANTS†b may suffer, fob him off until next week.

Page me39.319

The sooner you come yourself, the better. The bedroom in my house is ready.

Page me39.319

Trade appears to be falling off already in France. In particular, direct imports of cotton from America have decreased. The figures for American exports are as follows: from 1 September to 6 April of each year.

Page Break me39.320

	1853	1852	1851	1850
To England	1,100,000	930,000	757,000	592,000
" France	257,000	302,000	246,000	192,000
All other countries	204,000	189,000	163,000	105,000

Page me39.320

In other words, France is the only country which, despite the enormous American crop, has taken less than last year and barely more than in 1851, the year of political gloom, oú l'ordre et la société allaient s'engloutir dans le gouffre socialiste.†a Imports in 1852 show the momentarily magical effect of the coup d'état, 1853 shows the reverse. Something was still being shipped from Liverpool to Havre, but not as much as formerly. In other respects too, industry in France would not appear to be exactly flourishing. This time the thing seems to be really serious, and connected especially with the ousting of French articles from foreign markets by domestic manufactures. The colossal proscriptions of workers in 1851/52 are beginning to bear fruit; I am convinced that they have contributed quite specifically to the expansion and improvement of the English and American factories producing Paris articles, bronzes, etc. Today it is a thousand times more difficult than before to drive the proletariat across the border with impunity on the pretext of order. Even if there were complete peace, French industry would inevitably go to the dogs owing to this perpetual exploitation of conspiracy as a moyen de gouvernement,†b and the constantly renewed proscription of the proletariat; the English and the Yankees certainly know how to take advantage of the more useful amongst these.
Page me39.320

When, then, will you be coming?

Your
F.E.

Page me39.320
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.321

157
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.321
[London,] 27 April 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I have just been with Freiligrath to see Gerstenberg and there is some prospect of having the bill discounted by Friday or at least of obtaining an advance on it. No go with Strohn, OF COURSE. So there is still a possibility of coming to you — which I greatly wish to do.
Page me39.321
I should be obliged if you would answer by return the following enquiry little Bamberger asked me to pass on to you (the fellow might come in useful now or at any time):

Madapolams for the Italian market		Good houses to
Printed calicos	ditto }	buy from in
Straw manufacturing houses	ditto	Manchester

Page me39.321
Received the article†378 and £1 for Pieper and Dronke.
Page me39.321
I know now for certain that my information about Mazzini's presence in London†a was correct.
Page me39.321
Hirsch was at the Russian consul's the day before yesterday, and on the same day at Fleury's house with Stieber and Goldheim.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.321
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.322

158
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.322
[Manchester,] Wednesday, [27 April 1853]

Dear Marx,
If there is nothing better you can do about the bill, send it to me by return (in time for Friday's American post). I think I can get it cashed for you by a Yankee or at any rate advance you £10 against it pending receipt of the balance — i.e., you can't have the money before 1 May, but on 2 May you will receive the £10 without fail. Write and tell me whether in these circumstances you will be able to come here, and do come if at all possible; then you can send the money to your wife yourself.

Page me39.322
At any rate, keep me informed, so that I'm NOT OUT OF THE WAY when you arrive.
Page me39.322
P. Ermen's old library will again be at our disposal.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.322
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

159
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.322
[London,] 28 April 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
Today Freiligrath and I went to Gerstenberg's again. He gave me a 'sealed' letter of recommendation to Spielmann in Lombard Street. Refusal. As a prominent Kinkelian, Gerstenberg was not, of course, in earnest.

Page Break me39.323
Page me39.323
I am now sending you the bill which, with the stuff†a that goes off tomorrow, amounts to £32.
Page me39.323
Bamberger is willing to lend me £2 so that I can leave a few shillings with my wife and use the rest for my journey to you. I shall leave on Saturday morning.†b Tomorrow is impossible.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.323
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

160
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.323
[Manchester,] Friday, 20 May 1853

Dear Marx,

Herewith the latest news from America. I still have several copies of the Criminal-Zeitung containing the statements by Weydemeyer and yourself,†c which I shall send at the beginning of next week so that you and the others can make use of them; I shall keep one copy here for Dronke and the archives.

Page me39.323

Freiligrath will, perhaps, be so good as to notify Weydemeyer or Liévre of the receipt of the £25 enclosed herewith,†384 it being too late for me to write to Weydemeyer today. But how the fellows have managed to convert $125 into £25 is a mystery to me, for according to the last New York rate of 4 May sterling was standing at 54d. = 109 3/4 cents, thus, even at 110 cents, $125 = £25. 11s. 4d., hence there has been a loss of 3/2d. for every dollar on the rate of exchange.

Page me39.323

My old man has at last written to me. As I expected: for God's sake avoid a row, wait till he comes and then takes me to the Exchange. Business is too good to permit of an almighty rumpus. So far as I'm concerned that's perfectly in order provided my worthy papa has nothing against it; what do I care about the wretched affair?

Page Break me39.324

Your
F.E.

Page me39.324

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

161

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.324
[London,] 21 May 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Today the bill for £25 goes off to Freiligrath, who will immediately notify Liévre of its receipt.†a

Page me39.324

Herewith Wolff's†b address; he is still sulking. By the by, now that so much has been brought out into the open, I have become convinced that Dronke has been purveying the most abject lies, rumours and gossip at my expense. The only activity, indeed, of which this self-important midget and WOULD-BE Blanqui was capable. His addiction to tittle-tattle had turned him into such a dyed-in-the-wool liar that he himself no longer knew what he was saying or had said.

Page me39.324

Don't for God's sake send me any more copies of Weydemeyer's statement or my own.†c Here alone I have 14 of each which I received the day before yesterday. It would have been more to the point had Weydemeyer sent at least 2 or 3 copies of 'Hirsch's' revelations.†d E.g., Schabelitz could make use of 1 in Switzerland should further proceedings be taken against him. I like the inevitable Weydemeyerian misprint, where Bangya is made to say 'Ähnliches'†a instead of 'Rühmliches'.†b

Page Break me39.325

Page me39.325

Nothing else of interest here. I have not seen Blind recently. Have you sent him his Herzen†c?

Page me39.325

The People's Paper is on the up and up and, for the time being, financially secure. Jones is convening mass meetings for 19 June et seq. at Blackstone Edge, Skurcoat Moor, Mount Sorrell and Nottingham Forest.†385

Page me39.325

Apropos. I was only able to give Pieper 10/-, Strohn having shown me the wrong RAILWAY GUIDE which caused me to miss the PARLIAMENTARY TRAIN,†145 so that I had to travel 2nd class.†386

Page me39.325

Write to me soon.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.325

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

162
ENGELS TO MARX†387
IN LONDON
Page me39.325
[Manchester, before 28 May 1853]

Dear Marx,

So the bomb is at long last about to go off, as you will see from the enclosed scrappy proof†d and Weydemeyer's letter. Willich's manner of extricating himself is strange, at any rate; you will undoubtedly be much amused by these lame circumlocutions and the awkward and embarrassed style. The fellow's been hard hit. But papa Schramm†e would seem to have gravely insulted him in Cincinnati; all grist to the mill. One thing we may be sure of is that the only effect of this statement will be to compromise the chivalrous one even more.

Page Break me39.326
Page me39.326

So just because the New-Yorker-Criminal Zeitung!!!!! has published attacks upon him, the gallant Willich feels compelled to break his heroic silence.
Page me39.326

'Putting the case at its highest†a!' In Willich's case bodies do not fall downwards but upwards! Good-bye to gravity! The fellow's quite mad. The same old tale of assassination too! We shall now see the aforesaid Schramm leap promptly into the lists, statement in hand.†388
Page me39.326

To put your mind at rest, I can inform you that the Neu-England-Ztg. today advised me of the dispatch of 420 copies of Revelations†b to my address, so they may be here tomorrow or, if the parcel didn't go off by the last STEAMER, in a week at the most. The fellows have the effrontery to send me a letter signed semi-anonymously 'Office of the N.-E.-Z.' inviting me to contribute. That's the last straw!
Page me39.326

At all events, it's a good thing that we now possess in the Reform†389 an organ in which, if the worst comes to the worst, we can still make ourselves heard in the polemic against Willich and Co. As a result of the rumpus, Kellner is becoming more and more embroiled.
Page me39.326

Weydemeyer's misprint shouldn't surprise you. After all, you must know that when Weydemeyer does something, it is always 'similar' rather than 'glorious'.†c
Page me39.326

The little fellow†d is coming here next Sunday. I am curious to see how he is shaping as a clerk in Bradford. At all events the good Backup seems to be working him very hard.
Page me39.326
Yesterday I read the book on Arabian inscriptions which I told you about.†390 The thing is not without interest, repulsive though it is to find the parson and biblical apologist forever peeping through. His greatest triumph is to show that Gibbon made some mistakes in the field of ancient geography, from which he also concludes that Gibbon's theology was deplorable. The thing is called The Historical Geography of Arabia, by the Reverend Charles Forster. The best things to emerge from it are:
Page me39.326
1. The supposed genealogy of Noah, Abraham, etc., to be found in Genesis is a fairly accurate enumeration of the Beduin tribes of the time, according to the degree of their dialectal relationships, etc. As we all know, Beduin tribes continue to this day to call themselves Beni Saled, Beni Yusuf, etc., i.e. sons of so and so. This nomenclature, which owes its origins to the early patriarchal mode of existence, ultimately leads up to this type of genealogy. The enumeration in Genesis is plus ou moins†a confirmed by ancient geographers, while more recent travellers have shown that most of the old names still exist, though in dialectally altered form. But from this it emerges that the Jews themselves were no more than a small Beduin tribe like the others, which was brought into conflict with the other Beduins by local conditions, agriculture, etc.

Page Break me39.327
Page me39.327
2. As for the great Arab invasion, you will remember our discussion when we concluded that, like the Mongols, the Beduins carried out periodic invasions and that the Assyrian and Babylonian Empires were founded by Beduin tribes on the very same spot as, later, the Caliphate of Baghdad. The founders of the Babylonian Empire, the Chaldeans, still exist under the same name, Beni Chaled, and in the same locality. The rapid construction of large cities, such as Nineveh and Babylon, happened in just the same way as the creation in India only 300 years ago of similar giant cities, Agra, Delhi, Lahore, Muttan, by the Afghan and/or Tartar invasions. In this way the Mohammedan invasion loses much of its distinctive character.
Page me39.327
3. In the South-West, where the Arabs settled, they appear to have been a civilised people like the Egyptians, Assyrians, etc., as is evident from their buildings. This also explains many things about the Mohammedan invasion. So far as the religious fraud is concerned, the ancient inscriptions in the South, in which the ancient Arab national tradition of monotheism (as with the American Indians) still predominates, a tradition of which the Hebrew is only a small part, would seem to indicate that Mohammed's religious revolution, like every religious movement, was formally a reaction, a would-be return to what was old and simple.
Page me39.327
It is now quite clear to me that the Jews' so-called Holy Writ is nothing more than a record of ancient Arab religious and tribal traditions, modified by the Jews' early separation from their tribally related but nomadic neighbours. The circumstance of Palestine's being surrounded on the Arabian side by nothing but desert, i.e. the land of the Beduins, explains its separate development. But the ancient Arabian inscriptions and traditions and the Koran, as well as the ease with which all genealogies, etc., can now be unravelled, show that the main content was Arab, or rather, generally Semitic, as in our case the Edda†391 and the German heroic saga.

Page Break me39.328

Your
F.E.

Page me39.328
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

163
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.328
Manchester, 31 May 1853

Dear Marx,

The bill on Dana has been paid; we shall have the money tomorrow and shall send it you without delay; Charles†a missed the chap twice today. There will be some loss on the rate of exchange, but less, I think, than if the bill were to be negotiated in London.
Page me39.328

The parcel of pamphlets†b has also arrived and will go off tomorrow. I shall keep 8 or 10 up here. It is fairly heavy and cost £1 16/- which you can add on to the selling price. DUTY alone was 18/-, so, all things considered, it was a good thing it was addressed to me.
Page me39.328

The little man†c was here on Saturday and seems to be making out better than was to be expected. Buckup told Strohn that he was quite satisfied with him and that he had quickly familiarised himself with the work. I gave him a little sermon about punctuality; anyhow, conditions at Buckup's office are as favourable as he could wish. He is already doing book-keeping and, if he continues to do well for 3 or 4 months, will have a secure berth.

Page Break me39.329

Strohn has gone to the Continent again; he left on Saturday. It was a good thing that he was on the spot for the first fortnight.
Page me39.329
Nothing new from America this week.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.329
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

164
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.329
[Manchester, 1 June 1853]

Dear Marx,
Herewith half the £20 note, — P/E 90 138. The other half by the 2nd post as I don't know any other address.
Page me39.329
The fellow who cashed the bill has gone away for a few days, which means we can't get the money. But so as not to keep you waiting I have got hold of this £20. Settlement of the bill, then, will be effected early next week.
Page me39.329
The dirty dog†a has docked us about £18 for cigars and wine bought from him partly by Charles†b as a speculation and partly by me for my own consumption, so this has also involved paying debts.
Page me39.329
Yesterday I read your article on The Times and the refugees (with the quotation from Dante)†c in an old number of the Tribune published at the beginning of April. Je t'en fais mon compliment.†d The English isn't merely good; it's brilliant. Every now and again there's a key word which doesn't fit in quite coulant†e enough, but that's about the worst that can be said of the article. Pieper is hardly in evidence at all and I can't conceive what you still need him for.

Page Break me39.330

Your
F.E.

Page me39.330
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

165
MARX TO ENGELS†84
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.330
[London,] 2 June 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,

The first half of the £20 note has turned up. I am writing this before going to the Museum,†a i.e. at a very early hour.
Page me39.330

I would have sent you long ago the enclosed great Willich's statement to the Neu-England-Zeitung†b had I not assumed that you'd had the thing from Weydemeyer. In conception this second statement is pure, GENUINE Willich. Others write 'essays', he writes 'facts',†392 and only if one has been on a 'personal footing' with him does the calumny lose its sting. It is the manoeuvre of your petty partisan. He does not answer for his own Hirsch.†c Rather, he explains to the public Marx's 'motives' for not refuting his Hirsch. And now he has discovered a terrain where he can operate with a measure of virtuosity. And it is with 'reluctance' that the noble man reveals the facts to the 'public'. Needless to say, he has preferred to whisper them to the philistines in the privacy of the beer-parlour and, for the past three years, to peddle them 'contraband-wise' throughout two hemispheres, juvante Kinkelio.†a Then his manoeuvring to keep the public on tenterhooks. They forget the facts among which he twists and turns and eagerly await the facts which are to demolish the 'critical authors'. And the noble man is 'distinguished' withal, as befits a 'public figure'. When he does reply, it will not be to Marx's uncouth 'agents' but to the 'ingenious' quill-pushers themselves. Finally, he gives the public to understand that what makes his opponents so cocksure is their belief in his 'decision' to retire and, with a roll of drums, this important personage proceeds to announce that he has 'changed' his mind.

Page Break me39.331
Page me39.331

Tout ça n'est pas trop mal pour un vieux sous-lieutenant.†b But as for the style of statement No. 2 — bad as it is, it is nevertheless apocryphal. Other hands have been at work on it, probably those of Madame Anneke. At all events, the necessary supplement to Tellering's pamphlet will now be published by Mr Willich†c and, the dirty business having been once placed before the public, il faut aller jusqu'au bout.†d If Weydemeyer, Cluss and Co. operate with skill, they should now be able to put a spoke in Willich's wheel and ruin the impact and novelty of the surprises he is holding in store for the public. Nous verrons.†e

Page me39.331

The praise you accord to my 'budding' English,†f I find most encouraging. What I chiefly lack is first, assurance as to grammar and secondly, skill in using various secondary idioms which alone enable one to write with any pungency. Mr Tribune has given special prominence to a note about my 2nd article on Gladstone's Budget,†g drawing the attention of readers to my 'MASTERLY EXPOSITION' and going on to say that NOWHERE have they seen 'A MORE ABLE CRITICISM' and do 'NOT EXPECT TO SEE ONE'.†h Well, that is ALL RIGHT. But in the following article it proceeds to make an ass of me by printing under my name a heading of mine†i which is quite trifling and intentionally so, whereas it appropriates your 'Swiss' thing.†j I shall write and tell Dana that, 'flattering' though it may be if they occasionally use my things for a LEADER, they would oblige me by not putting my name to trifles.†393 I have now sent the jackasses, amongst other things, 2 articles on 'China' with reference to England.†a If you have the time and happen to feel like writing about something — Switzerland, the East, France, England or COTTON, or Denmark, say — you should do so on occasion, for I am now slogging away with an eye to the fellow's money-bags in order to make good the 3 WEEKS I have lost. If you send me something from time to time — de omnibus rebus†b — I shall always be able to place it, for as you know, I am the fellows' 'maid of all work', and it's always easy to relate one thing to another and to every day. PantaPanta enen pantapanta.†c

Page Break me39.332

Page me39.332

As regards the Hebrews and Arabs,†d I found yor letter most interesting. It can, by the by, be shown that 1. in the case of all eastern tribes there has been, since the dawn of history, a general relationship between the SETTLEMENT of one section and the continued nomadism of the others. 2. In Mohammed's time the trade route from Europe to Asia underwent considerable modification, and the cities of Arabia, which had had a large share of the trade with India, etc., suffered a commercial decline — a fact which at all events contributed to the process. 3. So far as religion is concerned, the question may be reduced to a general and hence easily answerable one: Why does the history of the East appear as a history of religions?

Page me39.332

On the subject of the growth of eastern cities one could hardly find anything more brilliant, comprehensive or striking than Voyages contenant la description des états du Grand Mogol, etc. by old François Bernier (for 9 years Aurangzeb's physician). He provides in addition a very nice account of military organisation and the manner in which these large armies fed themselves, etc. Concerning both these he remarks inter alia:

'The main body consists of cavalry, the infantry not being so numerous as is commonly supposed si ce n'est qu'avec les véritables gens de guerre, on ne confond tous ces gens de service et de bazars ou marchés qui suivent l'armée; car, en ce cas-lá, je croirais bien qu'ils auraient raison de mettre les 2 et 300 000 hommes dans l'armée seule qui est avec le roi, et quelquefois encore davantage, comme quand on est assuré qu'il sera longtemps absent de la ville capitale; ce qui ne semblera pas si fort étonnant á qui saura l'étrange embarras de tentes, de cuisines, de hardes, de meubles et de femmes même assez souvent, et par conséquent d'éléphans, de chameaux, de boeufs, de chevaux, de portefaix, de fourrageurs, vivandiers, marchands de toutes sortes et de serviteurs qui traînent aprés soi ces

Page Break me39.333
armées, et á qui saura l'état et gouvernement particulier du pays, á savoir que le roi est le seul et unique propriétaire de toutes les terres du royaume, d'oú vient par une certaine suite nécessaire que toute une ville capitale comme Delhi ou Agra ne vit presque que de la milice, et est par conséquent obligée de suivre le roi quand il va en campagne pour quelque temps, ces villes-lá n'étant ni ne pouvant être rien moins qu'un Paris, mais n'étant proprement qu'un camp d'armée un peu mieux et plus commodément placé qu'en rase campagne.'†a

Page me39.333
In reference to the Grand Mogul's march on Kashmir, with an army 400,000 strong, he writes:

'La difficulte est de savoir d'oú et comment peut subsister une si grande armée en campagne, une si grande quantité d'hommes et d'animaux. Il ne faut pour cela que supposer, ce qui est trés vrai, que les Indiens sont fort sobres et fort simples dans leur manger, et que de tout ce grand nombre de cavaliers il n'y a pas la dixiéme, ni même la vingtiéme partie, qui, dans la marche, mange de la viande; pourvu qu'ils aient leur kicheris ou mélange de riz et d'autres légumes, sur lesquels ils versent du beurre roux quand ils sont cuits, ils sont contents. Il faut encore savoir que les chameaux résistent extrêmement au travail, á la faim et á la soif, vivent de peu et mangent de tout, et qu'aussitôt que l'armée est arrivée, les chameliers les mênent brouter á la campagne, oú ils mangent tout ce qu'ils attrapent; de plus que les mêmes marchands qui entretiennent les bazars dans Delhi, sont obligés de les entretenir dans les campagnes, ebenso die petits marchands etc. ... enfin á l'égard du fourrage, tous ces pauvres gens s'en vont rôdant de tous les côtés dans les villages pour en acheter et y gagner quelque chose, et que leur grand et ordinaire refuge est de raper, avec une espéce de truelle, les campagnes entiéres, battre ou laver cette petite herbe qu'ils ont rapée, et l'apporter vendre á l'armée...†b

Page me39.333
Bernier rightly sees all the manifestations of the East — he mentions Turkey, Persia and Hindustan — as having a common basis, namely the absence of private landed property. This is the real clef,†a even to the eastern heaven.

Page Break me39.334
Page me39.334

It would seem to be no go with Borchardt†394; nevertheless I think the fellow might be prepared to try and obtain recommendations for Lupus from Steinthal, etc., to London merchants. So much, at least, you could compel him to do, and it would mean a great deal to Lupus.
Page me39.334
What do you think about the failure of the hudibrastic Rodolpho†b Gladstone's 'FINANCIAL SCHEME FOR REDUCING THE NATIONAL DEBT'?†c
Page me39.334
The day before yesterday the Journal des Débats revealed the true secret of Russia's impudence. The Continent, it says, must either expose its independence to danger from Russia, or it must expose itself to war, and that is 'la révolution sociale'. What the wretched Débats forgets, however, is that Russia is no less afraid of revolution than Mr Bertin, and that the whole question now is who can most convincingly simulate 'non-fear'. But England and France — the official ones — are so abject that Nicholas, if he sticks to his guns, will be able to do what he likes.
Page me39.334
Vale faveque.†d

C.M.

Page me39.334
Have written to Lassalle, who will probably be READY to take receipt of a few 100 copies of the pamphlet†e and distribute them in Germany. The question now is how are we to get them across? When I was in Manchester†386 Charles†a suggested it might be done by including them in a consignment of merchandise. You might ask him about this again.

Page Break me39.335
Page me39.335
P.S. There's been a delay over the posting of this letter and so I can include an acknowledgment of the parcel of books and the other half of the NOTE.

Page me39.335
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

166
ENGELS TO MARX†338
IN LONDON
Page me39.335
Manchester, 6 June [1853,] evening

Dear Marx,

I had intended to write to you by the first post today, but was detained at the office until 8 o'clock. You will have received both Weydemeyer's and Cluss' anti-Willich statements in the Criminal Zeitung,†b i.e. direct from America. If not, write to me at once. As usual, papa Weydemeyer is too long-winded, very seldom makes a point, then promptly blunts it with his style, and unfolds his well-known lack of verve with rare composure. Nevertheless, the man has done his best, the story about Hentze, the 'comrade-in-arms', and the influence of others on Hirsch's pen is nicely fashioned; his incredible style and his composure, regarded over there as impassibility, will appeal to the philistines, and his performance can, on the whole, be regarded as satisfactory. Cluss' statement, on the other hand, pleases me enormously. In every line we hear the chuckle of l'homme supérieur†c who, through 'personal contact' with Willich, has, as it were, become physically conscious of his superiority. For lightness of style, this surpasses everything that Cluss has ever written. Never a clumsy turn of phrase, not a trace of gêne†a or embarrassment. How well it becomes him thus to ape the worthy citizen of benevolent mien who nevertheless betrays the cloven hoof at every turn. How splendid, the sentence about 'revolutionary agencies' being 'a swindle' off which, according to Willich, he lives. The chivalrous one will have been surprised to find among the uncouth 'agents'†395 a fellow who is so dashing, so adroit, so aggressive by nature and yet so unassumingly noble in his bearing, and who returns thrust for thrust a tempo†b so subtly — far more subtly and deftly than himself. If only Willich had the discernment to discover this! But irritation and due reflection will, I trust, give him a little more insight.

Page Break me39.336

Page me39.336

It is obvious that we shall have to see this dirty business through to the bitter end. The more resolutely we tackle it the better. You'll find, by the way, that it won't be so bad after all. The chivalrous one has promised vastly more than he can fulfil. We shall hear of assassination attempts, etc., the Schramm affair will be glamorously tricked out,†c and such chimeras will be evoked as will cause us to stare at one another in amazement, not having the faintest idea what the man is actually talking about; at worst he will tell the story about Marx and Engels arriving drunk one evening at Great Windmill Street†24 (vide Kinkel in Cincinnati, coram Huzelio†d). If he goes as far as that, I shall tell the scandal-loving American public what the Besançon Company†396 used to talk about when Willich and the formosus†e pastor Corydon Rau†f were not present. Au bout du compte,†g what can a brute of this kind find to tax us with? Mark my word, it will be just as pauvre†h as Tellering's smear.†i

Page me39.336

I shall be seeing Borchardt within the next few days. If any recommendations are to be had, you can trust me to get them.†j But I hardly imagine that Steinthal, etc., have connections of the sort in London. It's almost wholly outside their line of business. Besides, if only for fear of making a fool of himself, the fellow will attempt to put off doing anything about it up here. If it were not for Lupus, I'd consign the chap, etc. I can't abide him, with his

Page Break me39.337

Third page of Engels' letter to Marx of 6 June 1853

Page Break me39.338
Page Break me39.339
smooth, self-important, vainglorious, deceitful charlatan's physiognomy.
Page me39.339

If Lassalle has given you a good, neutral address in Düsseldorf, you can send me 100 copies.†a We shall arrange for them to be packed in bales of twist by firms up here; but they should not be addressed to Lassalle himself, since the packages will go to Gladbach, Elberfeld and so on, where they will have to be stamped and sent by post to Düsseldorf. However, we cannot entrust a package for Lassalle or the Hatzfeldt woman to any local firm, because, 1. they all employ at least one Rhinelander who knows all the gossip, or 2. if that goes off all right, the recipients of the bales will get to know about it, or 3. at the very best the postal authorities will take a look at the things before delivering them. We have a good address in Cologne, but are not, alas, very well acquainted with the people who are the principal buyers here for the firm in Cologne, and hence cannot expect them to do any smuggling. Indeed, what we shall tell the people here is that the packages contain presents for the fair sex.
Page me39.339

From all this you will gather that I am once again on passable terms with Charles.†b The affair was settled with great dispatch at the first suitable opportunity. Nevertheless you will realise that the fool derives a certain pleasure from having been given preference over myself in one rotten respect at least, because of Mr Gottfried Ermen's envy of my old man. Habeat sibi.†c He at any rate realises that if I so choose, I can become maître de la situation†d within 48 hours, and that's sufficient.
Page me39.339

The absence of landed property is indeed the key to the whole of the East.†397 Therein lies its political and religious history. But how to explain the fact that orientals never reached the stage of landed property, not even the feudal kind? This is, I think, largely due to the climate, combined with the nature of the land, more especially the great stretches of desert extending from the Sahara right across Arabia, Persia, India and Tartary†398 to the highest of the Asiatic uplands. Here artificial irrigation is the first prerequisite for agriculture, and this is the responsibility either of the communes, the provinces or the central government. In the East, the government has always consisted of 3 departments only: Finance (pillage at home), War (pillage at home and abroad), and travaux publics,†e provision for reproduction. The British government in India has put a somewhat narrower interpretation on nos. 1 and 2 while completely neglecting no. 3, so that Indian agriculture is going to wrack and ruin. Free competition is proving an absolute fiasco there. The fact that the land was made fertile by artificial means and immediately ceased to be so when the conduits fell into disrepair, explains the otherwise curious circumstance that vast expanses are now arid wastes which once were magnificently cultivated (Palmyra, Petra, the ruins in the Yemen, any number of localities in Egypt, Persia, Hindustan); it explains the fact that one single war of devastation could depopulate and entirely strip a country of its civilisation for centuries to come. This, I believe, also accounts for the destruction of southern Arabian trade before Mohammed's time, a circumstance very rightly regarded by you as one of the mainsprings of the Mohammedan revolution.†a I am not sufficiently well acquainted with the history of trade during the first six centuries A.D. to be able to judge to what extent general material conditions in the world made the trade route via Persia to the Black Sea and to Syria and Asia Minor via the Persian Gulf preferable to the Red Sea route. But one significant factor, at any rate, must have been the relative safety of the caravans in the well-ordered Persian Empire under the Sassanids, whereas between 200 and 600 A.D. the Yemen was almost continuously being subjugated, overrun and pillaged by the Abyssinians. By the seventh century the cities of southern Arabia, still flourishing in Roman times, had become a veritable wilderness of ruins; in the course of 500 years what were purely mythical, legendary traditions regarding their origin had been appropriated by the neighbouring Beduins, (cf. the Koran and the Arab historian Novaïri), and the alphabet in which the local inscriptions had been written was almost wholly unknown although there was no other, so that de facto writing had fallen into oblivion. Things of this kind presuppose, not only a SUPERSEDING, probably due to general trading conditions, but outright violent destruction such as could only be explained by the Ethiopian invasion. The expulsion of the Abyssinians did not take place until about 40 years before Mohammed, and was plainly the first act of the Arabs' awakening national consciousness, which was further aroused by Persian invasions from the North penetrating almost as far as Mecca. I shall not be tackling the history of Mohammed himself for a few days yet; so far it seems to me to have the character of a Beduin reaction against the settled, albeit decadent urban fellaheen whose religion by then was also much debased, combining as it did a degenerate form of nature worship with a degenerate form of Judaism and Christianity.

Page Break me39.340

Page Break me39.341
Page me39.341

Old Bernier's stuff†a is really very fine. It's a real pleasure to get back to something written by a sensible, lucid old Frenchman who constantly hits the nail on the head sans avoir l'air de s'en apercevoir.†b
Page me39.341

Since I am in any case tied up with the eastern mummery for some weeks, I have made use of the opportunity to learn Persian. I am put off Arabic, partly by my inborn hatred of Semitic languages, partly by the impossibility of getting anywhere, without considerable expenditure of time, in so extensive a language — one which has 4,000 roots and goes back over 2,000-3,000 years. By comparison, Persian is absolute child's play. Were it not for that damned Arabic alphabet in which every half dozen letters looks like every other half dozen and the vowels are not written, I would undertake to learn the entire grammar within 48 hours. This for the better encouragement of Pieper should he feel the urge to imitate me in this poor joke. I have set myself a maximum of three weeks for Persian, so if he stakes two months on it he'll best me anyway. What a pity Weitling can't speak Persian; he would then have his langue universelle toute trouvée†c since it is, to my knowledge, the only language where 'me' and 'to me' are never at odds, the dative and accusative always being the same.†399

Page me39.341

It is, by the way, rather pleasing to read dissolute old Hafiz in the original language, which sounds quite passable and, in his grammar,†d old Sir William Jones likes to cite as examples dubious Persian jokes, subsequently translated into Greek verse in his Commentariis poeseos asiaticae, because even in Latin they seem to him too obscene. These commentaries, Jones' Works, Vol. II, De poesi erotica, will amuse you. Persian prose, on the other hand, is deadly dull. E.g. the Rauzât-us-safâ by the noble Mirkhond, who recounts the Persian epic in very flowery but vacuous language. Of Alexander the Great, he says that the name Iskander, in the Ionian language, is Akshid Rus (like Iskander, a corrupt version of Alexandros); it means much the same as filusuf, which derives from fila, love, and sufa, wisdom, 'Iskander' thus being synonymous with 'friend of wisdom'.

Page Break me39.342
Page me39.342

Of a RETIRED king he says: 'He beat the drum of abdication with the drumsticks of retirement', as will pére Willich, should he involve himself any more deeply in the literary fray. Willich will also suffer the same fate as King Afrasiab of Turan when deserted by his troops and of whom Mirkhond says: 'He gnawed the nails of horror with the teeth of desperation until the blood of vanquished consciousness welled forth from the finger-tips of shame.'
Page me39.342

More tomorrow.

Page me39.342
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

167
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.342
Manchester, 9 June 1853
Dear Marx,

So that Pieper may see he hasn't been forgotten, inform him of the following. In yesterday's Manchester Guardian there was the offer of a post as CORRESPONDING

CLERK AND BOOKKEEPER. He might contrive to get £180 a year; from what I hear, it is with a Jew here, Leo Schuster. Pieper should at once write a letter addressed to:

Box B 47,
Post Office,
Manchester

and beginning: Monsieur, etc.
Page me39.342

The letter had best be written in French, since French and German are required. He should say he thinks he can fill the post, that he comes from Hanover, is aged such-and-such, and last worked for so-and-so in London, from whom inquiries may be made as to his character and qualifications. He can conduct correspondence in German, French and English and, if needs be, in Italian, is rather less familiar (if indeed this is the case) with bookkeeping; he must say that he lost his post because the partner's son had joined, etc., then what sort of a business it was, but that he could without doubt quickly familiarise himself with all types of merchandise business in the Manchester TRADE. Le tout sans phrase, aussi simplement raconté que possible.

Page Break me39.343
Page me39.343

J'ai l'honneur de me souscrire', or else, 'Mr., votre trés dévoué',†a etc.

Page me39.343

Nothing more. If they consider him, he will probably be summoned to Schuster's London house, and then it will be up to him. But he must write straight away, by the first post tomorrow.
Page me39.343

Herewith £1. 18. 6d., the balance of the £32. The fellow only deducted 18 pence for collecting charges but, on the other hand, all Charles†b and I owed him.
Page me39.343

You will have received the bill from America the day before yesterday.
Page me39.343

Whether Pieper can give Rothschild as a reference, you people in London will be best able to judge; if so, it might do no harm, for the fact that Pieper is no BRED CLERK will emerge at the very first interview when they ask him where he worked before. But he must be sure of what Rothschild is going to say and, perhaps, see him beforehand.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.343
Copie d'Annonce.†c

* Wanted in a Shipping House a Bookkeeper and Corresponding Clerk. A knowledge of German and French absolutely required. Address Box B 47, P. Off. Manchester.*

Page me39.343

[To refer to me would do no good whatever, indeed it might do harm. Pieper, of course, should not let Schuster see that he knows who inserted the advertisement to which he should refer as his reason for applying.]

Page me39.343

First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.344

168

MARX TO ENGELS†338

IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.344

London, 14 June 1853

28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

Having been prevented by all sorts of business and domestic affairs, I have only today got round to replying to your two letters†a and acknowledging receipt of the American money (handed over to Freiligrath),†b likewise the balance of the American Tribune money. If that's the sort of business relationship you and Charles†c had with your 'intermediary', then you've been up to some trick for my sake. For since it was not that fellow, but you, who advanced the money against the bill, you and Charles could just as well have sent the bill to America without the fellow. At least, that's how it seems to me.

Page me39.344

I did not inform Pieper of your news for the following reasons: Pieper was becoming more and more of a wreck and some 8 or 10 days ago I took him to task about the state of his health. It then transpired that his illness was going de pis en pis†d at the hands of his English quack. I therefore suggested I should take him straight to Bartholomew's Hospital — the London hospital at which the foremost and most renowned doctors treat the public for nothing. He came with me. An ancient Hippocrates, after examining the corpus delicti and questioning him about his former TREATMENT, told him: 'YOU HAVE BEEN A FOOL', explaining at the same time that he would be 'DOWN' within three months if he did not follow his instructions to the letter. The efficacy of the new treatment was immediately apparent and in 2 weeks the man will be sain et sauf.†e The case was too serious for the treatment to be interrupted, and anyhow Freiligrath has a post in view for Pieper. If nothing comes of it, I shall let you know.

Page me39.344

Rumpf, our jolly tailor, is now shut up in a lunatic asylum. Some 5 months ago, in order to extricate himself from a social quandary, le malheureux†f married an elderly woman, became excessively respectable, foreswore all spirits and worked like a carthorse. About a week since he took to drinking again, sent for me a couple of days ago, revealed that he had discovered the means of making the whole world happy, that I was to be his minister, etc., etc. He has been in the ASYLUM since yesterday. It's a pity about the fellow.

Page Break me39.345

Page me39.345

In The Leader — which, by the by, has become a purely bourgeois sheet — Ruge has announced that he will be giving lectures on German philosophy in London.†a Needless to say he takes this opportunity to give himself a puff. E.g. 'Where style is concerned, there is only one man whom the German people set alongside him — Lessing.' In the same issue of The Leader, the Russian Herzen advertises his collected works†b adding that, together with the Polish Committee, he is to set up a Russo-Polish propaganda press here in London.†400

Page me39.345

One of the enclosed letters from Cluss†401 will reveal to you the nature of the main blow with which Willich is threatening me. He refers to the £20 borrowed by me from the Refugee Committee at a time when I myself was distrained because my Chelsea landlady,†402 although I had paid her, had not paid her LANDLORD, — a debt which I repaid down to the last farthing by the necessary INSTALMENTS.†403 You must now advise me what tactics to adopt. If that's how the good Willich thinks he's going to do me in, he must be a regular 'bonhomme'.†c

Page me39.345

Carey, the American political economist, has brought out a new book, Slavery at Home and Abroad. Here 'SLAVERY' covers all forms of servitude, WAGE-SLAVERY, etc. He has sent me his book in which he quotes me repeatedly (from the Tribune) now as 'A RECENT ENGLISH WRITER', now as 'CORRESPONDENCE OF THE NEW-YORK TRIBUNE'.†404 As I have told you before, this man, in his earlier works, propounds the 'harmony' of the bourgeoisie's economic foundations and attributes all MISCHIEF to unnecessary interference by the State. The State was his bête noire. He is now playing a different tune. All ills are blamed on the centralising effect of big industry. But this centralising effect is in turn blamed on England, who has made herself the WORKSHOP of the world and has forced all other countries to revert to brutish agriculture divorced from manufacturing. In its turn, responsibility for England's sins is laid on the theory of Ricardo-Malthus, and specially Ricardo's theory of rent. The necessary consequence both of Ricardo's theory and of industrial centralisation would be communism. And to obviate all this, to counter centralisation with localisation and the union, — a union scattered throughout the land — of factory and farm, our ULTRA-FREE-TRADER finally recommends — protective tariffs. To obviate the effects of bourgeois industry, responsibility for which he lays on England, his recourse, as a genuine Yankee, is to speed up this process in America itself by artificial means. For the rest, his opposition to England drives him into Sismondian praise of the petty bourgeoisie in Switzerland, Germany, China, etc. And this is the chap who used to deride France for her resemblance to China. The only thing of definite interest in the book is the comparison between Negro slavery as formerly practised by the English in Jamaica and elsewhere, and Negro slavery in the United States. He demonstrates how the main STOCK of Negroes in Jamaica always consisted of freshly imported BARBARIANS, since their treatment by the English meant not only that the Negro population was not maintained, but also that 2/3 of the yearly imports always went to waste, whereas the present generation of Negroes in America is a native product, more or less Yankeefied, English speaking, etc., and hence capable of being emancipated.

Page Break me39.346

Page me39.346

The Tribune, needless to say, is puffing Carey's book for all it's worth.†a Both, indeed, have this in common, that, in the guise of Sismondian-philanthropic-socialist anti-industrialism, they represent the protectionist, i.e. industrial, bourgeoisie of America. That is also the key to the mystery why the Tribune, despite all its 'isms'†b and socialist flourishes, manages to be the 'LEADING JOURNAL' in the United States.
Page me39.346

Your article on Switzerland†c was, of course, a direct swipe at the Tribune's 'LEADERS' (anti-centralisation, etc.) and their man Carey. I continued this clandestine campaign in my first article on India,†d in which England's destruction of native industries is described as revolutionary. This they will find very SHOCKING. Incidentally the whole administration of India by the British was detestable and still remains so today.
Page me39.346

The stationary nature of this part of Asia, despite all the aimless activity on the political surface, can be completely explained by two mutually supporting circumstances: 1. The PUBLIC WORKS system of the central government and, 2. Alongside this, the entire

Page Break me39.347
Empire which, apart from a few large cities, is an agglomeration of VILLAGES, each with its own distinct organisation and each forming its own small world. A parliamentary report described these VILLAGES as follows†a:

* 'A village, geographically considered, is a tract of country comprising some 100 or 1000 acres of arable and waste lands: politically viewed, it resembles a corporation or township. Every village is, and appears always to have been, in fact, a separate community or republic. Officials: 1. the Potail, Goud, Mundil etc. as he is termed in different languages, is the head inhabitant, who has generally the superintendence of the affairs of the village, settles the disputes of the inhabitants, attends to the police, and performs the duty of collecting the revenue within the village... 2. The Curnum, Shanboag, or Putwaree, is the register. 3. The Taliary or Sthulwar and 4. the Totie, are severally the watchmen of the village and of the crops. 5. the Neerguntee distributes the water of the streams or reservoirs in just proportion to the several fields. 6. The Joshee, or astrologer, announces the seed-times and harvests, and the lucky or unlucky days or hours for all the operation of farming. 7. The smith, and 8. the carpenter frame the rude instruments of husbandry, and the ruder dwellings of the farmer. 9. The potter fabricates the only utensils of the village. 10. The waterman keeps clean the few garments... 11. The barber, 12. the silversmith, who often combines the function of village poet and schoolmaster. Then the Brahmin, for worship. Under this simple form of municipal government the inhabitants of the country have lived from time immemorial. The boundaries of the villages have been but seldom altered; and although the villages themselves have been sometimes injured, and even desolated by war, famine and disease; the same name, the same limits, the same interests, and even the same families, have continued for ages. The inhabitants give themselves no trouble about the breaking up and division of kingdoms, while the village remains entire, they care not to what power it is transferred, or to what sovereign it devolves. Its internal economy remains unchanged.'*

Page me39.347

The post of Potail is mostly hereditary. In some of these COMMUNITIES the LANDS of the VILLAGE CULTIVATED IN COMMON, in most of them EACH OCCUPANT TILLS HIS OWN FIELD. Within the same, slavery and the caste system. WASTE LANDS FOR COMMON PASTURE. Home-weaving and spinning by wives and daughters. These idyllic republics, of which only the VILLAGE boundaries are jealously guarded against neighbouring VILLAGES, continue to exist in well-nigh PERFECT form in the NORTH-WESTERN PARTS OF INDIA only recently occupied by the English. No more solid basis for Asiatic despotism and stagnation is, I think, conceivable. And however much the English may have Irelandised the country, the breaking up of the archetypal forms was the conditio sine qua non for Europeanisation. The TAX-GATHERER alone could not have brought this about. Another essential factor was the destruction of the ancient industries, which robbed these villages of their SELF-SUPPORTING character.

Page Break me39.348

Page me39.348

In Bali, an island off the east coast of Java, this Hindu organisation still intact, alongside Hindu religion, its traces, like those of Hindu influence, discernible all over Java. So far as the property question is concerned, this is a great bone of contention among English writers on India. In the broken mountainous terrain south of the Kistna, however, there appears to have been property in land. In Java, on the other hand, as noted in the History of Java by a former English governor, Sir Stamford Raffles, the sovereign [was] absolute LANDLORD throughout the country 'WHERE RENT TO ANY CONSIDERABLE AMOUNT WAS ATTAINABLE'. At all events, the Mohammedans seem to have been the first in the whole of Asia to have established the principle of 'no property in land'.

Page me39.348

Regarding the above-mentioned VILLAGES, I should note that they already feature in the Manu,†405 according to which the whole organisation rests on them. 10 are administered by a senior COLLECTOR, then 100, then 1,000.

Page me39.348

Write soon.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.348
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. I, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

169
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†406
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.348
[London, about 14 June 1853]

... On the other hand, a reply must be given,†a and that can best be done by third parties. In which case you need feel no compunction about entering into personal matters and regaling the brutal democratic 'temperament' with a few pungent 'anecdotes'...†407

Page Break me39.349
Page me39.349
In dealings with the Reform I would recommend, besides shrewdness, une modération extrême.†a This clever-clever philistine†b who, in Hesse — and Hesse was his world — represented nothing except the demiurge of this, his world: the petty bourgeois, and who now assumes the air of one who, from the very start, has represented the proletariat on a 'materialist basis' — this smiling nonentity who, with Solomon-like dicta, 'stresses' his shrewdness and remarkable composure vis-á-vis rebellious parties — this incarnation of a marginal gloss to 'Heise's articles'; this fellow, then, does not, of course, interest me — he repels me. But you people helped to make the paper. It appears in New York.
Page me39.349
Half Germany will come to New York for the Exhibition.†128 You have no other paper in New York. Might it not, then, be impolitic to throw over Kellner and the paper? It would in the end be doing the fellows another favour. Pretend to be naive. Go on writing; you couldn't do him a worse turn. Do not emancipate him from influences which, as everything goes to show, have been damnably irksome to him. Do as the Prussian bourgeois do. The government and its Manteuffel twist and turn in vain to rid themselves of the friendship of those bourgeois. The latter, for their part, pretend to believe in the constitutionality of their government, and le government est constituonnel malgré lui-même†c: that's worldly wisdom for you.
Page me39.349

The Neu-England-Zeitung is equally unreliable and likely to remain so. Mr Schläger, a pedant replete with platitudes, a presumptious bore who always knows better (á la Kellner, 'le mieux est le plus grand ennemi du bien'†d), has written to Pieper suggesting I write for the N.-E.-Z. about the necessary transition from the bourgeois to the communist mode of production.
Page me39.349

Citizen Marx with his 'schematising and organising' intellect would, it seems, be well suited to this task set him by Citizen Schläger, but Citizen Marx must 'forego his abstract language' and write in the same manner as all, etc. Worthy Citizen Schläger! In the same letter he enjoins Pieper on no account to attack Citizens Ruge and Heinzen (he regularly deletes such passages) since the 'élite of his readers' (just think what the others must be like!) are Heinzenites, and the N.-E.-Z. is destined (literally) to inherit the readers of the Janus. Mighty Citizen Schläger! Almighty Pompey! Nevertheless, I have advised Pieper to go on writing for Schläger.

Page Break me39.350
Le motif est trés simple.†a We are not doing our enemies a favour by writing for them. Tout au contraire.†b We could hardly play them a worse trick...

Page me39.350
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 31, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 28 June 1853

Published in English in full for the first time

170
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.350
[London,] 29 June 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

My sister†c and her newly wedded husband†d, who is sailing from here to the Cape of Good Hope as a GENERAL DEALER, have unexpectedly descended on me. This, combined with the work for the Tribune and some unpleasantness to be cleared up in America, has made considerable demands on my time. The couple set out tomorrow, I believe. I hear from Imandt that your mother is expected in London, from which I conclude that you, too, will turn up soon.
Page me39.350

Enclosed Lassalle's instructions for the dispatch of the copies†e to Germany. My wife will undertake their dispatch to Manchester. I hope that you people will then take care of the matter up there. Haven't you seen anything of Jones? He's roaming about in your part of the world and is said to have brought off a MONSTER MEETING in Halifax.†408

Page me39.350
Last Wednesday, much to my astonishment, I received a very peevish letter from Cluss, in which he said someone had written telling him that Pieper had described him to Schläger — him and Arnold — as 'subordinate agents', and himself, on the contrary, as the one who supplied news 'at first-hand', etc., etc. Fortunately there isn't a word of truth in the whole thing, which is merely an attempt by Willich, Anneke, Weitling and Co.'s party to sow dissension amongst our own ranks, and, more particularly, to neutralise 'that most unpleasant man, Cluss'. The necessary explanations were, of course, dispatched across the water at once.†409 I am unable to find Cluss' first letter, but enclose the 2nd.

Page Break me39.351
Page me39.351
Before leaving for Manchester†410 I borrowed £2 from the little Jew Bamberger. The fellow keeps sending me strongly-worded reminders, if not threats. Mais nous verrons.†a By Friday I shall have £20 to draw on New York. But again the question is how?
Page me39.351
Enclosed the nec plus ultra†b of Heinzen's now sanguinary cowardice and aversion to 'ordinary methods of warfare'.†c
Page me39.351
I was mistaken about the 'Swiss article',†d Dana having divided the thing into two parts,†e but published both under my name.
Page me39.351
Until next time, then. My worthy sister and brother-in-law have just come in. My sister is very stout and will sweat damnably while crossing the Equator.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.351
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

171
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.351
[London,] 8 July 1853

28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Dr Jacobi, the bearer of this note, was one of the accused at the 'communist trial in Cologne'.†16

Page me39.351

I'm at a loss to understand whether your continued silence is due to illness, pique, overwork or what.

Page Break me39.352

Page me39.352

Yesterday I drew £24 on Dana at Spielmann's in Lombard Street; Spielmann will pay me in 5 weeks as soon as the bill is returned. In the meantime I shall have another very bad spell to go through, the more so since a number of valuable things now in pawn will have to be repledged or else they will be forfeited, and that is, of course, impossible dans un moment†a when the wherewithal even for les choses les plus nécessaires†b is lacking. However, I'm now well-accustomed to being in the soup and all that that entails.

Page me39.352

In any case write and tell me why you're not writing. I hope, AT ALL EVENTS, that you are not ill.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.352

[On the back of the letter]

Friedrich Engels. 48 Great Ducie Street, Manchester

Page me39.352

First published (except the text on the back of the letter) in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

172

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me39.352

Manchester, Saturday, 9 July [1853]

Dear Marx,

At four o'clock this morning my old landlady roused me from my slumbers saying there was a gentleman wanting to speak to me. Dragging myself out of bed, I went to the door where I found a little man with a CAB, a colossal trunk and a travelling bag, who told me his name was Jacobi and that you and Pieper had sent him to me. Marx and Pieper! I thought. Who the devil can this

Page Break me39.353
Jacobi be? Is he the illegitimate son of one in Königsberg†a or what? Until finally the little man pulled your letter†b out of his pocket, somewhat taken aback at not being instantly welcomed with open arms, stranger though he was — whereupon it occurred to me that he was, as your letter confirmed, the communist trial Jacobi to whom I hadn't given a thought, believing him long since well and truly lodged in a Prussian prison cell. Que faire?†c I took him in, together with his belongings and, drunk with sleep, chatted with him for half an hour before offering him my sofa to sleep on, for the house was CRAMMED FULL of people. Luckily my old man is out of town until tomorrow and so, this very morning, I took the good party martyr by the collar, engaged lodgings for him and forbade him to show his face here until my old man's departure raises the interdict.
Page me39.353
This warlike†d Westphalian way of behaving, the doltishness of spending a whole week in London and then choosing a train that arrives in the middle of the night and, on the pretext of not knowing what's what, turning a man's house upside down and imposing himself, all this was no more calculated to predispose me in his favour than was the discreet question put to me at the very outset as to how I stood with my old man. Further exchanges have raised the fellow in my estimation a little, but not very much. He proposes to call on Borchardt with letters from you and Kinkel (almost beats Marx and Pieper), to burst in on little Heckscher without ceremony and without an introduction in the hope that the latter will immediately provide him with all possible information about his TRADE and, for sheer joy at the prospect of fresh 'scientific' intercourse, make half his practice over to his new competitor — and other such philistine conceits. His foolishness in going to Kinkel will do him more harm than good. Kinkel gives him letters not to Mr but to Mrs Schunck, a piece of effrontery which is also a gross and direct breach of English etiquette, and again, if Mr Kinkel, who was fed and paid cash for his buffooneries on German literature, if Monsieur Gottfried, I say, believes he can send letters of recommendation (other than fund-raising licences) d'égal á égal†e to these merchants, he's damned well mistaken. Apart from that, Monsieur Jacobi, á ce qu'il me paraît,†f is not the man to make his fortune here.
Page me39.353
As soon as my old man has left, I'll send you some money. I can't very well take anything before that, since I run the risk every day that he will check my accounts, which alone would be enough to provoke a lively argument of the kind I prefer to settle in writing.

Page Break me39.354
Page me39.354
The idea that I am not writing because of 'pique' made me laugh. De quoi donc?†a
Page me39.354

Regards to your wife and children and do your best to stick it out, at least until my hands are free again — within the week, I hope.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.354
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

173
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.354
[London,] 18 July 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

The day before yesterday I got a letter from Lassalle, who is now in a state of suspense, imagining letters have been intercepted, etc. It would have been good had you advised me whether or not the parcel had gone off to him.†b Lassalle is still the only one who dares correspond with London, and we must therefore be careful not to put him off. So I would ask you to let me know what the position is about the parcel. The time of its dispatch is of importance to me in another way, i.e. because upon it depends the time of the RETURN.
Page me39.354

The last mail brought my wife a most friendly and obliging letter from A. Dana†411 in which he states that he cannot possibly advise us of a business house in London and that AT ALL INSTANCES bills drawn by me will be promptly honoured. He says that my articles are 'HIGHLY VALUED BY THE PROPRIETORS OF THE TRIBUNE AND THE PUBLIC', and sets no limit on the quantity we send him.

Page Break me39.355
Page me39.355

In the debate on ADVERTISEMENT DUTY†412 — about a fortnight ago, I think — Mr Bright was loud in his praises of the New-York Tribune and gave an analysis of one of its numbers†a — the very one containing my article on the budget.†b This is what he said about it:

* 'From Great Britain there is an elaborate disquisition on the Right Honourable Gentleman's†c budget, doing him justice in some parts, but not in others, and doing certainly, as far as the Manchester School†63 was concerned, no justice whatever.'*†d

Page me39.355

As regards Jacobi, you must not allow yourself to be deterred by the gaucherie and inexperience of a 23-year-old stripling from the District of Minden who has spent 2 years in jug. He has a good background. I have read his doctoral dissertation†413 and was 'MUCH PLEASED WITH IT'.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.355

Jones has held some very important meetings which have even attracted the attention of the bourgeois press.†414

Page me39.355

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

174
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.355
[London,] 18 August 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Lupus will probably obtain a good post in Liverpool. In which case he will go there via Manchester. The snag is that he won't be paid until the end of the quarter. However, he hopes that you and

Page Break me39.356

Strohn between you may be able to help him. Has Strohn returned?

Page me39.356

Needless to say, that mischief-monger Dronke is writing the most pompous letters to all and sundry, e.g. to Imandt, saying that 'he has made arrangements for Lupus' emigration to America'. Entre nous†a I should say the little shop-assistant, anxious to inflate his own importance at small cost to himself, has given Lupus to understand that it was he rather than you who took the matter in hand. At least I thought I could detect a certain chilliness towards Manchester ON THE PART OF Wolff. Dronke is cancan†b incarnate, NO DOUBT ABOUT THAT. Experto crede, etc.†c

Page me39.356

You absolutely must at once send Pieper at least sufficient to buy himself a coat and trousers. Shabby as he now is, he cannot possibly take advantage of opportunities that come his way, however favourable. He has become unpresentable. Moreover, you promised him this when [you] left.†415 He's putting a brave face on his misfortunes. But there's a limit to everything.
Page me39.356

[I have] been particularly unlucky over money transactions. I now have current bills on America — two of them — amounting to £42 and yet cannot command above 42 farthings, though having to provide means of subsistence not [only] for myself but also for Pieper. The first bill of £24 I gave to Mr Spielmann; he told me to come back in five weeks' time. That was seven weeks ago. Besides, this wretched traipsing to and from the City invariably takes up my Mondays and Thursdays, the very days when I have to be preparing Tuesday's and Friday's articles. Each time Spielmann turns me away with the remark, uttered in Jewishly nasal tones: 'Nah nahtice yet.' In the case of such 'small' amounts, he says, his correspondents write only at their convenience, and, if I had needed the money straight away, I should have said beforehand that I would pay the postage for a special letter, etc., etc. This means daily unpleasantnesses, not only for me but for my wife who, counting on the prompt arrival of the money, had given definite promises to sundry creditors, and now the curs are laying siege to the house. Meanwhile, I am writing away like the devil. It would be fine if you could send me an article or two in between whiles, thus giving me the time to write something better. 3/4 of my time is taken up chasing after PENNIES.
Page me39.356

Heise is here just now; as a person the fellow's not at all bad. Mr Kossuth is presently making a fool of himself as correspondent of the Daily New-York Times. In the Advertiser 4 letters by D. Urquhart on the eastern question†a contained much that was interesting, despite quirks and quiddities. WE HAVE BEEN STRIKING against Jones for the past two weeks.

Page Break me39.357

Your
K.M.

Page me39.357
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

175
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.357
[Manchester,] Wednesday, 24 August 1853

Dear Marx,

I'll send some money tomorrow if I possibly can. Your letter arrived on Saturday too late for anything to be done, this week there have been all sorts of complications, but tomorrow things will, I think, have improved, and our old bookkeeper has been forewarned.

Page me39.357

The little man†b was here on Saturday. That he had been gossiping was evident to me from the moment he wrote to Borchardt. He had sent him Lupus' most discreditable letter in which the latter makes an outright and most earnest appeal to the 'generosity' of the Jews in Bradford. C'était une lettre á brûler de suite†c; Borchardt at once magnanimously sent Lupus alms, to wit the sum of one pound, — not that he wasn't very decent about it, WHICH HE COULD WELL AFFORD to be, seeing that it released him from all his obligations. I must confess that this letter of Lupus' left a very bad taste in my mouth, but not so bad as the little man's tactlessness in letting it fall into Borchardt's clutches. Anyway I duly hauled him over the coals for it.

Page Break me39.358

Page me39.358

Enfin c'est fait.†a If Lupus is going to Liverpool, see to it that he comes here first, if possible on a Friday, in which case I shall arrange a rendez-vous with the little man. If, as Dronke proposes, Lupus first goes to Bradford, the cancan†b will only proliferate.

Page me39.358

You know that Jacobi intends to go to America. The chap's altogether trop mou†c and even philistines get the impression that he's a helpless sort of creature. I don't believe he'll ever obtain a practice, however much he may pine for one. Besides one can't help laughing when one remembers that the chap's still a virgin.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.358
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

176
MARX TO JAMES GRANT,

EDITOR OF THE MORNING ADVERTISER†416
IN LONDON
Page me39.358
London, August 31st, 1853

To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser.

Sir,
You will much oblige me by inserting the following in Your highly esteemed paper.

Your obedient servant
Dr. Karl Marx
(28 Dean Street, Soho)

Page me39.358
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXI, Moscow, 1929

Reproduced from a copy in Mrs Marx's hand

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.359

177
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.359
[London,] 3 September†a 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
I have not written to you for a long-time, even to acknowledge receipt of the £5 (of which £2.10 was paid to Pieper and £1.10 to Lupus), the reason being that a lot of indescribable muck has taken up MY TIME AND MY ENERGIES. On 7 July I gave my bill to Spielmann.†b On 31 August†c the lad told me — after I had been to see him 7 times — that the bill had got lost, that I must make out another one for him, etc. So I had managed for weeks by pawning everything, down to the last item, and had made a further appointment for 31 August†c with all my creditors whom I had been putting off since July. As I have no resources other than the income from the Tribune, you will understand my situation and that I have neither the time nor the inclination for correspondence.

Page me39.359
Tell Jacobi, if he's still there, that I have written to Weydemeyer, etc., on his behalf.†417

Page me39.359

My reason for writing to you today is the following:

Page me39.359

So far as I know you do not read The Morning Advertiser. This paper, which belongs to the 'UNITED VICTUALLERS', carried an apology of Bakunin by a 'FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT' (Mr Golovin, I think).†d In the same Morning Advertiser an anonymous F.M. expressed suspicion that Bakunin was a Russian spy and doing very nicely, etc., etc.†e To this Golovin and Herzen replied, pointing out that this same calumny had already appeared in 1848 in a 'GERMAN PAPER', which PAPER 'HAD EVEN VENTURED TO APPEAL TO THE TESTIMONY OF GEORGE SAND'.†f

Page me39.359

Three days ago 'Dr Arnold Ruge' chipped in, remarking that this German paper was the New Rhenish Gazette†g whose EDITOR, 'Dr

Page Break me39.360

Marx', had known just as well as any other democrat that these calumnies were false.†a

Page me39.360

In yesterday's Morning Advertiser I published a statement†b to the effect that:

MESSRS Golovin AND Herzen had CHOSEN TO CONNECT THE NEW RH. G. EDITED BY ME IN 1848 AND '49 with their polemic with F.M. about Bakunin, etc. Now, I CARE NOTHING ABOUT THE INSINUATIONS OF MESSRS Herzen AND Golovin. But etc., etc. 'PERMIT ME TO STATE THE FACTS OF THE CASE'. There follows an enumeration of the facts:

Page me39.360

'that on 5 July 1848 we received letters from Paris, one from the Havas Bureau, the other from a POLISH REFUGEE (which is what I call Ewerbeck), both STATING that George Sand possesses letters compromising Bakunin AS BEING LATELY ENTERED INTO RELATIONS WITH THE RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT';

Page me39.360

'that on 6 July we published this letter,†c not the one from the Havas Bureau, but from our Paris correspondent';

Page me39.360

'that Bakunin, replying in the Neue Oder-Zeitung,†d prior to our correspondence, states that similar rumours had been circulating in Breslau, that they emanated from the Russian embassies and that he could refute them in no better way than by appealing to George Sand'†418;

Page me39.360

'that on 3 August Ko&sa;cielski brought to the Rheinische Zeitung a letter addressed by George Sand to its editor, which was published the same day†e with the following introductory remarks†f:' (here follows an extract from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung†g);

Page me39.360

'that at the end of August I passed through Berlin, saw Bakunin and renewed my old friendship with him';

Page me39.360

'that on 15 October (or thereabouts) the Rheinische Zeitung stood up for Bakunin against the Prussian ministry which had ordered his expulsion'†h;
Page me39.360
'that in February ('49) the Rheinische Zeitung published a LEADING ARTICLE on Bakunin the opening words of which were, “Bakunin is our friend!”,†i etc.';

Page Break me39.361
Page me39.361
'that in the New-York Tribune I PAID BAKUNIN THE TRIBUTE DUE TO HIM FOR HIS PARTICIPATION IN OUR MOVEMENTS,'†a etc., etc.
Page me39.361
My statement concludes with the words:
'As to F.M. proceeding as he does from the fixed idea that continental revolutions are fostering the secret plans of Russia, he must, if he pretends to anything like consistency, condemn not only Bakunin but every continental Revolutionist, as a Russian agent. In his eyes Revolution itself is a Russian agent. Why not Bakunin?'
Page me39.361
Well, in today's issue the blackguard Golovin does not dare give his name but, under the rubric 'FROM A FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT', publishes the following piece in The Morning Advertiser:

* How to Write History†b
(From a Foreign Correspondent)
Bakunin is a Russian agent — Bakunin is not a Russian agent. Bakunin died in the prison of Schlüsselburg, after having endured much ill-treatment — Bakunin is not dead: he still lives. He is made a soldier, and sent to the Caucasus — no, he is not made a soldier: he remains detained in the citadel of St. Peter and St. Paul. Such are the contradictory news which the press has given in turn, concerning Michael Bakunin. In these days of extensive publicity we only arrive at the true by affirming the false; but, has it at least been proved that Bakunin has not been in the military pay of Russia?
Page me39.361
There are people who do not know that humanity makes men mutually responsible — that in extricating Germany from the influence which Russia exercises over it, we re-act upon the latter country, and plunge it anew into its despotism, until it becomes vulnerable to revolution. Such people it would be idle to attempt to persuade that Bakunin is one of the purest and most generous representatives of progressive cosmopolitism.
Page me39.361
'Calumniate, calumniate,' says a French proverb, and 'something will always remain.' The calumny against Bakunin, countenanced in 1848 by one of his friends, has been reproduced in 1853 by an unknown person. 'One is never betrayed but by one's own connexion', says another proverb: 'and it is better to deal with a wise enemy than with a stupid friend.' The conservative journals have not become the organ of the calumny insinuated against Bakunin. A friendly journal undertook that care.
Page me39.361
Revolutionary feeling must be but slightly developed when it can be forgotten, as M. Marx has forgotten, that Bakunin is not of the stuff of which police-spies are made. Why, at least, did he not, as is the custom of the English papers, why did he not simply publish the letter of the Polish refugee which denounced Bakunin? He would have retained the regret of seeing his name associated with a false accusation.*

Page Break me39.362
Page me39.362

I intend to answer the chap as follows (see below) and would like you to return this to me promptly (by Monday if possible), with the style put to rights.†419
Page me39.362

At the same time the point arises whether you and Dronke, as EDITORS of the New Rhenish Gazette, might not wish to make a statement. Clique versus clique. On the other side are only Ruge, Herzen and Golovin. Bakunin himself has dubbed the latter 'un polisson'.†a One of Nicholas' most zealous admirers in 1843 and '44, he became a democrat because he believed he had become suspect, nor has he dared return to Russia. This last is the sum total of his heroism.
Page me39.362

I for my part suggest a statement, the substance of which would be as follows:
Page me39.362

* It is better to deal with a wise enemy, than with a stupid friend,' Bakunin would have exclaimed, if he was ever to read the letter of the 'foreign' Sancho Pansa who, in your Saturday's paper,†b indulges in his proverbial commonplaces.
Page me39.362

Is he not a 'stupid friend' who reproaches me with not having done by what doing I would according to himself have 'retained the regret of seeing my name associated with a false accusation'?
Page me39.362

Is he not a 'stupid friend' who is astonished of what every schoolboy knows that truth is established by controversy and that historical facts are to be extricated from contradictory statements?
Page me39.362

When the N. Rh. G. brought the Paris letter Bakunin was at liberty. If he was right to be satisfied with the public explanations of the N. Rh. G. in 1848,†c is it not a 'stupid friend' who pretends to find fault with them in 1853? If he was wrong in renewing his intimate relations with the Editor of the N. Rh. G., is it not 'stupid' on the part of a pretended friend to reveal his weakness to the public?
Page me39.362

Is he not a 'stupid friend' who thinks necessary to 'plunge Russia anew in its despotism' as if she had ever emerged from it?
Page me39.362

Is he not a 'stupid friend' who calls the Latin proverb 'calumniare audacter'†d a French proverb?
Page me39.362

Is he not a 'stupid friend' who cannot understand why the 'conservative journals did not like to publish the calumnies' which were secretly spread against Bakunin throughout Germany while the most revolutionary paper of Germany was obliged to publish them?

Page Break me39.363
Page me39.363
Is he not a 'stupid friend' who ignores that 'revolutionary feeling' at its highest pitch made the 'lois des suspects'†420 and beheaded the Dantons and the Desmoulins and the Anacharsis Cloots?
Page me39.363
Is he not a 'stupid friend' who dared not accuse The Morning Advertiser for having inserted the letter of F.M. while Bakunin is incarcerated at St. Petersburg at the same time accusing the N. Rh. G. for having inserted a similar letter in 1848 when Bakunin was free and not yet reduced to the misery of being defended by a 'stupid friend'?
Page me39.363
Is he not a 'stupid friend' who makes the name of Bakunin a pretext for calumniating the friends of Bakunin while he is cautiously withholding his own name?*
Page me39.363
A prompt answer, then. The matter is urgent.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.363
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

178
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.363
[London,] 7 September 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
Your letter did, indeed, arrive too late.†421 I condensed the stuff†a by cutting out unnecessary pathos, tidied it up a bit, and sent it to the amiable organ of the united 'LICENSED VICTUALLERS'†b on Monday. Not inserted. At the same time, however, this highly consistent paper published a short letter 'FROM A NATIVE CORRESPONDENT' (presumably D. Urquhart) in its Monday issue, in which its own 'FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT' was quite plainly unmasked as a 'RUSSIAN AGENT', while

Page Break me39.364
Bakunin himself was not exactly made out to be a saint.†a Probably The Morning Advertiser rejected my riposte†419 because less confused than that of the 'NATIVE'. Now the thing is to come out in The People's Paper.†b
Page me39.364
It was through a mere lapsus linguae†c — out of long habit — that I mentioned Mr Dronke in my letter to you. I don't believe that 'little' Blanqui's†d words are of any consequence, or that we shall gain anything by an appendix.
Page me39.364
The worthy little man has stirred up such a mighty pother that 1. Lupus has never said a word to me about his departure,†422 although I had long since learnt of it through you; 2. that this same Lupus is always very guarded in his references to you; 3. that last night I was treated to a scene which was hardly creditable.
Page me39.364
I was busy at work. Wife and children in the room. In comes Lupus with portentous tread — to take his leave at last, I supposed, for not once in my house had he let fall a word about his impending departure.
Page me39.364
A year earlier I had borrowed a little Spanish grammar from him, by Franceson, maybe 120 pages.†e So far as I could recall, I had returned the trashy object 5 months before. Or else, Dronke had pinched it.
Page me39.364
The old gentleman had already asked my wife and Lenchen about the thing on two previous occasions and had been told that they would look for it.
Page me39.364
Last night, then — the fellow was snappish from the moment he came in — I told him in as soothing tones as possible that I couldn't find the damned thing, that I had looked for it everywhere and believed I had returned it to him, etc., etc. 'You've sold it!' came the boorish, uncouth, insolent reply. (I'd wager a sovereign that nowhere in London could anyone get 2 FARTHINGS for the rubbish.) I, of course, jump to my feet, an altercation ensues, stubborn as a mule he persists in his nonsense, insults me 'au sein de ma famille'.†f As you know, I'm willing to put up with a great deal from an old man in his dotage who has become venerable as a party tradition. However, there are limits. I believe the old fool was taken aback when at last I bared my teeth at him.
Page me39.364
All this is the result of Dronke's intrigues, too constant an indulgence in gin, and the evaporation of the cerebral juices. Perhaps the sea air will have a beneficial effect on his thinking organ. One may, perhaps, lay claim to the privilege of being an 'old blusterer', but one should not abuse it. My own lot is no bed of roses, nor can I in consequence regard his worldly worries as an EXCUSE.

Page Break me39.365
Page me39.365
The hobby-horse presently being ridden by those wretched Russians, in both the Tribune and the London Advertiser (though differing in person and form), is that the Russian people is democratic through and through, whilst official Russia (Csar and bureaucracy) is exclusively German, likewise the aristocracy.†423

Page me39.365
So Germany must be fought in Russia, not Russia in Germany.
Page me39.365
You know more about Russia than I do, — and if you can find time to challenge this nonsense (it's just the same as when the Teutonic jackasses blamed the French for the despotism of Frederick II, etc., as if backward thralls haven't always needed civilised thralls to train them) you would greatly oblige me. In the Tribune, of course.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.365
Write to me at greater length about the state of commerce — in English at once.
Page me39.365
I have made a diplomatic reply to the enclosed letter from Klein, which I send to you for safe keeping.†424 It is impossible to correspond from London. The factory workers should keep themselves entirely to themselves and not make contact with philistines or other handicraftsmen in Cologne, Düsseldorf, etc. If they wish to send someone over here once a year to get good advice, we should have no objection.

Page me39.365
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.366

179
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†425
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.366
[London,] 15 September 1853

... I have today received the latest number of the Reform containing your piece from Quebec,†a and Kellner's apology of the self-same Poesche,†b whose insipid WOULD-BE jokes about the 'cranky' proponents of the 'class struggle'†c appeared in the Neu-England-Zeitung of 3 September, which reached me at the same time. You started sending me extra copies of the Reform at the very time I began to get them again regularly; on the other hand, I haven't been receiving the Tribune regularly and it is important that I should. For example, I haven't got the article in which I refer to the exchange of diplomatic notes on Denmark,†d or the article in which I characterise the relationships of landed property†e....

Page me39.366

I think it is time you made a fresh start in the polemic and picked a few holes in the jejune arguments of Goepp-Poesche, discoverers of the material view though their materialism is that of the man-in-the-street. Our opponents are becoming uppish, something which could not have happened at least in the days of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. That pedant Schläger, who more or [less] took to his heels at the time of the '48 revolution and hawked his genius in America, still regularly sends me his N.-E.-Z., no doubt in order to demonstrate ad oculos†f what fine fellows they are. Has there ever before been a rag in which stupidity and vanity were so nicely coupled with presumption?
Page me39.366

Kellner is too much of a slow-coach, he seems unable to understand that polemics are essential to any journal as long as it has to STRUGGLE. On top of that he has an unfortunate proclivity always to praise his enemies 2 days before they regale him with kicks. Thus Heinzen and Poesche; the latter, by the by, used his sorry article on the circulation of money to convey the sort of information one gets from encyclopedias...†426

Page Break me39.367
Page me39.367

At any rate I find that things have begun to move sooner than I should have liked (I think the COMMERCIAL DOWNFALL will begin in the spring as in 1847). I had always hoped that, before that happened, I might somehow contrive to withdraw into solitude for a few months and work at my Economy.†45 It seems that this isn't to be. I find perpetual hackwork for the newspapers tiresome. It is time-consuming, distracting and, in the end, amounts to very little. However independent one may think oneself, one is tied to the newspaper and its readers, especially when, like myself, one is paid in cash. Purely learned work is something totally different, and the honour of figuring beside an A.P.C.,†a a LADY CORRESPONDENT and an archbishop is CERTAINLY not to be envied.
Page me39.367

Carl Wilh. Klein (of Solingen, a working man) has asked me to put you in touch with him. His address is _____ He's a capable chap. He set up a Working Men's Association and, from what he tells me in his letter, the Gradaus has come under its influence.†424 Pieper writes to him from here and, if you can possibly find the time, you must give him support from Washington.
Page me39.367

Papa Blind is continuing his†b ... articles with much fervour in the N.-E.-Z. and congratulates himself and his EDITOR and vice versa on the unexampled achievements which cannot fail to inspire respect in Brüggemann of the Kölnische Zeitung.
Page me39.367

Only a few lines today. EVENTS there have been none, if you except the onset of cholera morbus in London.

Your

K.M.

Page me39.367
First published in part in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 31, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 3 October 1853

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.368

180
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.368
[London,] 17 September 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,

You're becoming damned taciturn.
Page me39.368

Since I was expecting YOUR ARTICLE yesterday, all I had done was to make up a heading from the most recent news and, since the letter didn't come, one lot of correspondence went by the board.
Page me39.368

I really must ask for your co-operation for the fortnight beginning today. For today Pieper is going, not into a monastery exactly, but into the German Hospital, a sort of medical prison, where he is to spend a fortnight or 3 weeks being thoroughly cured of the painful consequences of his carnal lust. Since I have in any case forfeited 3 or 4 articles through having to traipse off to that rotten Spielmann,†a I must now write something every Tuesday and Friday so that the next bill I draw is not too paltry. There is a possibility of Freiligrath's finding a business friend who will regularly discount them for me.
Page me39.368

If you can manage to do something in between times, I shall send you the other stuff to look through, in which case you will only have to preface or conclude it with the latest news you may have seen about TURKEY in the Débats, say, or some particularly important telegraphic dispatch, before sending the stuff to Liverpool.
Page me39.368

I expect an article†427 from you for Tuesday.†b
Page me39.368

I think it important that something be said about the position of the armies; etc. There's a great deal of nonsense in the English papers, e.g. Omer Pasha is said to be crossing the Danube, etc.
Page me39.368

I have already sent off two articles about the commercial crisis, 1 last Friday week about the Bank of England, its DISCOUNT and the effect of Peel's Act, or rather intended effect.†c 1 last Tuesday on the price of corn, signs OF OVERPRODUCTION, etc.†d

Page Break me39.369
Page me39.369
I think it important to have more details about the MANUFACTURING DISTRICTS.
Page me39.369
Enclosed something further by the Tribune man†a and 'on' him by the EDITORS of the Tribune. It would seem, by the by, that he is not a Russian AFTER ALL, but A GERMAN.
Page me39.369
The abolition of the advertisement duty means that Jones' advertisements now bring him in £3 a week — the PAPER†b IS ARRIVING TO THE PAYING POINT. This could also provide Pieper with a source of income.
Page me39.369
When you write, you must also tell me about Lupus' travels. I heard later that he didn't push off from here until last Saturday.†c
Page me39.369
FAREWELL.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.369
Enclosed another cutting from the worthy Neu-England-Zeitung.†d

Page me39.369
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

181
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.369
Manchester, 19 September 1853

Dear Marx,

What has hitherto been stopping me from working and writing has been the presence of the 'old gent'†e who is temporarily encamped with me. There was no berth to be had on the SCREW-STEAMER and Borchardt was also very much in favour of his trying to get lessons here first; moreover, there were prospects for him in Liverpool as well. Anyway, he intends to try his luck here and, in view of his curmudgeonly behaviour towards you in London,†a I would sooner not let him see how the Tribune articles sometimes come into being. There are a few openings here and, after confabulating with Borchardt and me yesterday, he has set out today to look around, which means that I shall have the evening to myself and hence will be able to concoct for you an article on the state of business hereabout, which will go off by the second post.†427 The Russian one will follow as soon as possible — I believe the author†b to be a German Balt or half Pole; clearly the chap has a great deal of material, so we must be cautious, but all the same we may very well be able to catch him out. Or might it even be Löwe, who wrote to Nesselrode in the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung?†c To judge by the occasional prolixity and the tittle-tattle, here and there, this could well be so.

Page Break me39.370
Page me39.370
The Reform is arriving very irregularly. Have you heard anything from Cluss?
Page me39.370
N.B. Since Lupus, as I see from your letter†d today, made off without any kind of leave-taking, he will naturally not be allowed to set eyes on anything you send me — il reste parfaitement en dehors de tout†e and, were it not for Borchardt, who got together £10 for his journey and is showing him kindness in other ways, my behaviour towards Monsieur Lupus would be somewhat cooler. Especially since the fellow, though as stubborn as ever, has lost his stoicism and become very dependent on those from whom he derives some advantage. Il est même devenu un peu flatteur†f — and how!
Page me39.370
However, we shall see whether a better position, if such is to be found here, doesn't soon bring the old gent to his senses again, in which case he'll have to ask your forgiveness as well.
Page me39.370
Now I am off home to work.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.370
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.371

182
MARX TO KARL BLIND
IN LONDON
Page me39.371
[London,] 26 September 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Blind,

My wife and I were surprised to hear about that piece of infamy in Baden,†a although one could hardly expect anything good to come from such a quarter. You may be assured of our deepest concern regarding all matters affecting you and FAMILY.
Page me39.371

Quant á†b Jones, I fear he has gone away. I haven't seen him for weeks. However, I shall try and find out this very day whether or not and whether he received your letter. More about this tomorrow, I hope. Kind regards from my family to yours.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.371

I should have come out to see you long ago had not a mass of petites miséres†c invariably intervened.

Page me39.371
First published in International Review for Social History, Vol. IV, Leiden, 1939

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

183
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.371
[London,] 28 September†d 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Herewith a letter from Weydemeyer, several from Cluss, a statement of Mr Willich's,†e a letter from Mazzini to Mrs Mott (abolitionist) in America.

Page Break me39.372
Page me39.372

I have split your essay into 2 and rewritten it as 2 essays†a which I have sent to New York, my wife acting as secretary.
Page me39.372
Pieper has had his throat cauterised in the German Hospital. A little board hangs at the foot of his bed bearing the ominous message: Wilhelm Pieper syphilis secundaris. He is subjected to rigorous discipline, which is salutary for him.
Page me39.372
W. Wolff has written to his confidant, Rings. He is going to try his luck in Manchester until the end of October. If he hasn't found anything by then, he will move on. For the time being, he says, he is living at number such and such, Great Ducie Street,†b at 'another's expense'. He does not name you at all, which will give you an idea how obstinate and petty the OLD CHAP can be. After the way he grumbled about you he is, of course, ashamed to admit that he has any obligation towards you. Quant á nous autres,†c I don't know what he may have told Rings in his letter, since the latter says nothing about it.
Page me39.372
I should like to clear up the matter with Mr Dronke,†d having now learnt that he sold Pieper's Ricardo, likewise a German history of political economy belonging to the working man, Lochner, etc., etc. Needless to say this has reinforced my STRONG SUSPICIONS about him.
Page me39.372
Before he left, Mr Wolff gave Imandt also an account — and a very garbled one coloured by philistine indignation — of his insolent onslaught upon me.†e What annoys me is the excessive consideration I have always shown the old blusterer instead of baring my teeth at him.
Page me39.372
Les choses marchent merveilleusement.†f All h[ell] will be let loose in France when the financial bubble bursts.
Page me39.372
In the Reform there is a melancholic, stylised article by Jacobi about the end of the world.†g
Page me39.372
Don't let these lines fall into the wrong hands.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.372
Apropos. Yesterday I received a few lines from Blind. He will now have to reconcile himself to abandoning his democratic hauteur in the knife and fork question.†428 He has lost his case and the whole of his wife's†a fortune has been temporarily sequestered. So there will be no more subsidies. I feel sorry for him, despite the absurd manner he thought fit to adopt.

Page Break me39.373
Page me39.373

Have you been following the story about Bakunin in The Morning Advertiser?†b Urquhart wrote an article in this connection†c in which he suggests that Bakunin is suspect 1. because he's A RUSSIAN and 2. because he's 'A REVOLUTIONIST'; he goes on to assert that there are no honest revolutionaries among the Russians and that their would-be democratic writings (a swipe at Herzen and that polisson†d Golovin) prove absolutely nothing; and finally, he tells the continental revolutionaries that, if they take Russians into their confidence, they are no less traitors than their governments. The Russians, it would seem, then sent into the fray an Englishman (Richards), who nourishes a grudge against Urquhart, the latter having, on grounds of seniority, elbowed him out of the topic 'The Times and Turkey' in The Morning Advertiser. Richards maintains†e that to declare Bakunin a SPY is just as PREPOSTEROUS as TO IMPEACH PALMERSTON FOR BEING BRIBED BY RUSSIA; he invokes the testimony of both Ruge and myself,†f praises Herzen's 'idées révolutionnaires',†g etc. Yesterday it was the turn of A.B., another minion of Urquhart's, who declared†h that he was acquainted with all the writings of 'la jeune Russie',†i and that they proved the rightness of Urquhart's views, pan-slavism, etc.
Page me39.373

At all events, les intrigants russes†j will realise that here it isn't as easy as in the pauvre†k French democracy, to give themselves airs, gain INFLUENCE and behave as though they were a kind of aristocracy within the revolutionary emigration. Here it supposes hard knocks. What service have the jackasses done Bakunin save to have him seriously accused in public while themselves receiving a slap in the face?

Page me39.373
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.374

184
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.374
[Manchester,] 29 September 1853

Dear Marx,

Herewith the article on the Turkish armies.†a If you tell me what you are sending tomorrow on the STRIKES in Lancashire and the STATE OF TRADE,†429 I shall be able to link on to that and let you have a further REPORT on these matters by Tuesday.†b430 The local MANUFACTURERS and MERCHANTS are at great pains to convince one another that things are not too bad, and the Guardian does what it can, but it's ALL SHAM AND HUMBUG. Since last week ordinary yarns are down by between 1/4d and 3/8d per pound, i.e. at 9d a fall in value of 3-4 1/2%, at 8d of 3-6%, at 7d of 4-7%; in the same period COTTON fell by about 1/8. STOCKS are accumulating and the HOME TRADE DEMAND is also falling off. There has been such frightful overspeculation in the Australian trade that 80,000 barrels of American flour were reconsigned to this country from Australia at a freight charge of 8/- per barrel. In 4 weeks' time the Australian CRASH should be well under way. All that the 'good news' from India amounts to is that the rise in prices over there and the fall in prices here added together still leave a loss on exports to that market. Nothing is flourishing save TRADE with America and speculation in corn. In Upbridge, 80/- per quarter is already being paid for first quality wheat. CORN LOOKING UP, YARN LOOKING DOWN, and the Turkish rot IN THE FAIREST POSSIBLE WAY OF BORING OUR MERCHANTS ALL WINTER OVER.

Page me39.374

MANUFACTURED GOODS are also coming down smartly, and here STOCKS are far more catastrophic than in the case of yarn. The manufacturers' decision to stop work thus kills two birds with one stone: 1. it disarms the workers, 2. it cuts down production. The fellows in Preston are sure to receive a general vote of thanks, if not compensation.†431 In Ashton, Stalybridge and Glossop, the manufacturers are also considering a stoppage, and some here as well. However there is a snag to it, namely that it only benefits those who don't stop, and only harms those who do.
Page me39.374

If Borchardt is to be believed, Lupus has some prospect of obtaining a post as corresponding clerk. The old gent is studying Russian and the like and is as enthusiastic as ever over the Turkish question, of which I wish him joy.

Page Break me39.375
Page me39.375

My regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.375

What do you think of Jacobi's melancholic and virtuous views about the end of the world?†a

Page me39.375
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.375
[London,] 30 September 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

Your piece on the war†b is capital. I myself had serious MISGIVINGS about the westward advance of the RUSSIAN FORCES but did not, of course, dare TRUST TO MY JUDGEMENT in such matters. I have already written a whole series of STRIKE articles,†c produced at intervals throughout the 6 months during which the thing has been going on. Now, however, the affair has taken a new TURN. In the article where I used your STRIKE-GENERALITIES,†d I have mentioned a host of

Page Break me39.376
STRIKE-LOCALITIES by name, also the Preston†431 and Wigan†432 affairs. I couldn't get hold of any particulars about Manchester. I have depicted the manoeuvring in Preston (very briefly, mind you) 1. as an attempt by the manufacturers to use the operatives, whose demands are forcing the closure of the MILLS, to cover their retreat from over-production; 2. as an attempt to STARVE THE OPERATIVES INTO SUBMISSION.
Page me39.376

As you can see, my HISTORY OF STRIKES goes no further than last Tuesday†a and doesn't touch on Manchester.
Page me39.376

You might, perhaps, expand somewhat the notes on yarn and COTTON prices and, if possible, the price of GOODS, so that they amount to at least one paragraph of an article.†430
Page me39.376

In each article, besides the subject proper, I naturally have to follow step by step the Russian Notes and England's FOREIGN POLICY (and right brave it is!), since the jackasses in New York consider this to be of prime importance and, AFTER ALL, nothing is easier to write about than this business of HIGH politics.
Page me39.376

Next Tuesday week I shall have finished an article on the 'ORIENTAL CHURCH', and next Friday week the first of three articles on Denmark where next month the various assemblies of estates will be again taking the stage.†433
Page me39.376

Should there be any military MOVEMENT, I shall count on receiving immediate information from the Ministry of War†b in Manchester, and the same applies to COTTONS and YARNS which are wretchedly covered by the papers down here.
Page me39.376

Above all I want to slay the fellows with my pen, the moment being propitious, and if at the same time you keep me supplied with material, I can spin out the various themes over longer periods. What is more, without my secretary†c I feel a little nervous about my English.
Page me39.376

No regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.376
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.377

186
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†434
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.377
[London, beginning of October 1853]

... Blind has suddenly become aware that the knife and fork question†428 is just as important as a South German view of the Turkish question. As you know, this gentleman had grown very grand, very much the homme d'état,†a very much the superior émigré. You will also know that an article of Pieper's poking fun at Russia†b — a frivolous scrawl well-suited to the Neu-England-Zeitung and such as could only have been concocted on the spur of the moment by a homeless waif — caused Blind to loose off in the Neu-England-Zeitung no fewer than 3 articles within 2 months, more or less fraternising (true love never fades) with Heinzen, etc. Hence his relations with us were strained. When I say 'us' I except Mr Lupus, who was naturally drawn to Blind by his Morning Advertiser sympathies and who, for some time past, has generally evinced a curious tendency to snarl at his so-called party friends and sympathise with political philistines. A few days ago then, Mr Blind reappears, bringing my wife a letter to Cluss, i.e. for Wolff who had written him a fond letter of farewell in which he invited him to correspond and left him Cluss' address.†435 Needless to say, my wife informed him that England for the present was still harbouring the great Turkophile.†c But that was not, of course, the reason why our ex-friend of Falstaffian proportions had called. The court in Baden has sequestered the entire fortune of the children by his first marriage (the 2nd was contracted in the 13th arrondissement) until such time as they are handed over to the Jews in Germany to be given a Jewish upbringing. Thus Mr Blind has been reduced to 1/4 of his or his wife's†d income and he now regards the 'knife and fork question' as worthy of consideration, even before the Turkish War has been decided and Petersburg taken by storm. In these much changed circumstances, and needing the assistance of the advocate Jones (Ernest), he once again remembered that I exist, which, of course, is damned flattering to me†a...

Page Break me39.378

Page me39.378
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

187
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.378
[London,] 5 October 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Cluss,

That I have writer's itch, and this in the 'loftier sense of the term', you must needs conclude from the fact that I am writing to you today although — as so often nowadays — I have been working without a break for thirty hours on end.

Page me39.378

D'abord,†b I want you, if it is at all possible, to get the German press to publish my Palmerston article.†436

Page me39.378

On the 17th Jones will be setting forth on another tour of the manufacturing districts and tomorrow evening will call in here to get material for a campaign against that great HUMBUG.†437 It is comic that we are forced to teach the English their own history.

Page me39.378

Willich's journeymen's association (the London one),†c already demoralised since our resignation, has now become too much of a good thing even for that HIPPOPOTAMUS Schapper, who has also withdrawn.

Page me39.378

Quant á†d Carey and Ricardo's theory of rent†438:

1) If we assume — as Carey would have it — that rent is simply another form of profit on capital or, still more precisely, of interest, this does not disprove but merely simplifies Ricardo's theory. The economic antithesis, in the most general sense, would simply coincide with the antithesis of capital and wage labour, PROFIT (and INTEREST) ON ONE SIDE and WAGES ON THE OTHER. The antithesis to capital within property would be eliminated (in so far as we disregard,

Page Break me39.379

Die Reform of 2 November 1853 with Marx's article 'Palmerston' translated by Cluss

Page Break me39.380
Page Break me39.381
d'abord, the antithesis between individual kinds of capital determined by the division of labour, and then, the antithesis between individual capitalists), but the antithesis to property would be all the more comprehensive.
Page me39.381
2) I am of course aware that, in an attempt to complete his theory, the worthy Carey also reduces profit (interest included) to wages in a different form. D'abord, is not Protestantism, for example, merely a different form of religion from Catholicism? Does the antithesis, the contradiction, the struggle between them cease — and that is what you are dealing with — because they are both religions? Thus, even assuming that profit and wages are simply 2 different forms of the return on labour, the result is not to reconcile them but merely to reduce their difference to a simplified expression.
Page me39.381
But how does he define their otherness? Profit is the wages for past labour. Wages are the profit on immediate present labour. Eh bien!†a How does this avail him? For it is precisely from its thraldom, from its slavery to past, materialised labour that present, i.e. actual labour seeks to emerge, and from its thraldom to the product of labour that labour seeks to be emancipated. The old feudal laws were also at one time the present expression of popular activity. Is that any reason why we should be subjugated by them now?
Page me39.381
At best, therefore, he is merely changing the phrase 'oppression of labour by capital', into the phrase 'oppression of present labour by past labour'.
Page me39.381
There still remains the question, 'How do I gain possession of past labour?' By labour? No. By inheritance on the one hand and, on the other, by the fraudulent exchange of past for present labour. If past labour were exchanged for an equal quantity of present labour, the owner of past labour could continue to consume only so long as he had aliquot portions to exchange and, at a given moment, would himself have to start working again.
Page me39.381
3) Carey has himself wholly failed to understand Ricardo's theory of rent when he maintains that it is based on the successive deterioration of land. Ricardo — as I have proved in my book against Proudhon†b — falls into the common error of all other bourgeois economists, when he passes off the form of landed property as an 'eternal natural law' of history in general, whereas it is the product of purely industrial circumstances. His theory is true only of bourgeois society in a condition of full development. Rent, in its commercial form — the only one he mentions — does not otherwise exist at all. It therefore leaves him unaffected to maintain that at various historical epochs it was not the worse, but rather the better, lands that were SUCCESSIVELY cultivated. The historically better land of one period does not count as land at all for the other[s]. Moreover, Ricardo does not speak only of the natural properties of the soil, but also of its situation, a social product, a social attribute.

Page Break me39.382

Page me39.382

The fertility of the soil, as I have likewise already said in the Anti-Proudhon, is something purely relative. Changes in the soil's fertility and its degree in relation to society, and that is the only aspect of fertility with which we are concerned, depend on changes in the science of chemistry and its application to agronomy.
Page me39.382

4) Assuming a given condition of society, not any society, but one of full bourgeois development, with a populous countryside [...] etc., even this part of Ricardo's theory — unessential to his system — is correct.
Page me39.382

Firstly. Types of land, with an equal infusion of capital and equally well situated for markets; how can their rents be differentiated? Merely by their natural fertility. This constitutes the level of rent.
Page me39.382

On this assumption, when will a corn field of inferior quality be cultivated or a less productive coal-mine be exploited? When the price of corn or coal has risen so high as to enable the less productive ones to be cultivated or exploited. Hence the cost of production of the poorer land determines the rent of the richer. (This is Ricardo's Law.)
Page me39.382

Secondly. Does this exclude a constant increase in fertility? Hence, does it include Malthus? By no means.
Page me39.382

If 1 is the best land, followed by 2, 3, 4, etc., and fertility is increased tenfold, the relation between 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., remains as before. Were fertility to become so great as a result of chemical discoveries that 1, 2 and 3 sufficed, land 4 would no longer be cultivated. The cost of production of land 3 (let it = 3) would then determine the rent. When land 4 (let its production costs = 4) still had to be brought under cultivation, the rent of land 1 (let its production costs = 1) = 4 - 1 = 3. The rent of land 3 = 3 - 1 = 2. The rent of land 2 = 2 - 1 = 1. Now, however, the rent of 1 would = 2, that of 2 would = 1 and that of 3 would = 0. Should the fertility of the land so increase that only 1, the best land, had to be cultivated, rent would disappear completely.

Page Break me39.383
Page me39.383

5) Ricardo's theory is based not on the doctrine of rent, but on the law that the price of a commodity is determined by its cost of production. That law, however, should not be understood as meaning that the price of individual commodities is determined by their cost of production. Rather, the commodity produced under the most unfavourable circumstances, and made necessary because of the demand for it, determines the price of all other commodities of the same kind. E.g. if demand is so great that flour, the production price of which is 20/-a QUARTER, can be placed on the market, then a qr. of flour costing 19, 18, 17, 15, etc., to produce is also sold at 20/-. The amount by which the market price, regulated by the cost of production of the dearest QUARTER to be placed on the market, exceeds the production costs of the less expensively produced flour, regulates the rent. What, then, gives rise to rent? Not the land, as supposed by Ricardo, but the market price and the laws by which it is regulated. If the quarter, which costs only 15/-(profit included) were sold, not at 20/-, but at 15, it could not carry a rent of 5. Why, then, does it do so? Because the market price is regulated by the flour the cost of production of which = 20. In order that this may be placed on the market, 20 must be the general market price. Hence, if rent is to be overthrown, it must not be interpreted philanthropically; rather the laws of market price and thus of prices generally and thus the whole FRAMEWORK of the bourgeois economy must be overthrown.

Page me39.383

So much for today on this subject.

Your
K.M.†439

Page me39.383

On types of land having the same properties and an equally favourable situation, the rent will, however, be determined merely by the proportion of capital wedded to the land. Nor does Ricardo deny this. Rent is then merely interest on capital fixe.†a To say that, in cases in which rent does not exist in an actual, specific sense, its specific antithesis to capital and labour does not exist either, is no less true than to say that, where there is neither labour nor investment of capital, no antithesis between capital and wage labour exists. Instead there is, in the case under consideration, an antithesis between profit and interest, between rentiers (in the ordinary sense) and industrial capitalists. The less the tenant pays the man whose capital is wedded to the land, the greater will be his profit and vice versa. The tenant and his LANDLORD (even though the latter simply draws interest on the capital employed on the land) would thus be as much at loggerheads as before.

Page Break me39.384
Page me39.384

The case most favourable to Carey is as follows:

Let the product of labour, the profit and interest = 2, rent = 1, wages = 2. Now if, as a result of a rise in the productivity of labour, the product doubles and = 10, the rent might = 2, profit and interest = 4, wages = 4. To that extent it could be said that every kind of revenue may increase at no expense to labour and without landowner, capitalist and worker being mutually at loggerheads. But:
Page me39.384

1) Assuming this most favourable instance to be real, all it means is that the antitheses — rent, profit, wages — all three, become more marked without losing any of their qualitative position relative to one another;
Page me39.384

2) Relatively they can only rise or fall at each other's expense. In the foregoing example, the proportion = 1:2:2. Does not the ratio remain the same if it = 2:4:4? A change in this relative income would occur if, for example, wages were to = 5, profit = 3, and rent = 2. The profit would then have fallen relatively, although in absolute terms it would have risen.

Page me39.384

3) It is par trop†a naive to suggest that, if the total product of labour rises, the three classes among whom it is to be shared will share equally in that growth. If profit were to rise by 20%, the workers would have to strike to obtain a 2% rise in WAGES.
Page me39.384

4) The conditions that govern an increase in the total product preclude such relatively equal increase from the outset. If the increase is due to a better division of labour, or to a greater employment of machinery, the worker is, from the outset, placed at a disadvantage vis-á-vis the capitalist. If it be due to increased fertility of the soil, the landowner is worse off vis-á-vis the capitalist.
Page me39.384

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original†b

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.385

188
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.385
London, 8 October 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

D'abord†a I must ask you — if you can — to send by return at least a minimum of money. Two weeks ago Spielmann finally paid up after deducting nearly £2. In the meantime, of course, debts had mounted up so much, so many of our absolute essentials had found their way to the pawnbroker's and the family had grown so shabby, that for the past 10 days there hasn't been a sou in the house. I now possess proof that I have been cheated by Spielmann, but á quoi bon†b? At my request the firm in New York returned me the bill together with a letter from which it emerges that payment was made as early as 22 July, whereas I didn't receive the money until the end of September. I now have a further £24 to draw. (Since Pieper's incarceration I have sent in 6 articles, among them a fulminating acte d'accusation†c of Palmerston, in which I trace his career from 1808 to 1832.†d I shall hardly be able to deliver the sequel by Tuesday, since there are a great many Blue Books and Hansards to be consulted and Friday and today were utterly wasted in traipsing around after money. I wrote Friday's article†e during the night, dictated it to my wife from 7 to 11 in the morning, then took Shanks's pony to the City.) Freiligrath has promised — and will do everything he can to that end, i.e. endorse it himself, etc. — to discount the bill for me with Bischoffsheim, but is unable to arrange the matter for another 8 to 10 days. Such is the casus belli. I shall have to see how I can get through the next few days. Credit is not available for food (excepting hot drinks and appurtenances). On top of that there'll be Pieper who will probably come out of hospital tomorrow — peut-être.†a As soon as I got my money I sent him £3, but the jackass entrusted it to Liebknecht for safekeeping and will now find there's not a farthing left.

Page Break me39.386
Page me39.386
Of the many pleasures I have experienced during my years here, the greatest have consistently been provided by so-called party friends — red Wolff,†b Lupus, Dronke, etc. Today Freiligrath told me that Franz Joseph Daniels is in London and had been to see him with red Wolff. He, Daniels, declared he wouldn't come to see me because my association with Bangya had brought about his brother's†c arrest which would not otherwise have occurred. Bangya first called on me in February 1852, and Daniels was locked up in May 1851! A very retrospective effect, then. All this infamous gossip (the reward for my trouble and loss of time, and such-like agreeable consequences of the trial†d) is, of course, eagerly seized upon as an excuse for their own lamentable behaviour towards me and their cowardly retreat. However this vile business is attributable solely to the bandying about of ill-natured remarks by Messrs Dronke and W. Wolff who have kept for themselves the easier part, i.e. cancan,†e being otherwise perfectly content to leave the work to me.
Page me39.386
If my life was an easy, or at least a carefree one, I wouldn't, of course, give a fig for these scurrilities. But when, year after year, the bourgeois mire is laced with this and similar kinds of mire, c'est un peu fort.†f I propose at the next opportunity to declare publicly that I have nothing whatever to do with any party. I no longer feel inclined to allow myself to be insulted by any old party jackass on so-called party grounds.
Page me39.386
You can see how necessary it is to get my pamphlet†g into Germany. Since you can't do it yourself, let me have Strohn's address and I will take the matter up with him.
Page me39.386
I would also much like to hear at last what Mr Dronke has to say about the book.†h As for Mr Lupus, he apparently wishes to make up for his servility towards his bourgeois patrons by being abominably insolent towards myself. I can assure him that he has by no means settled this matter by boasting to Imandt that, on the pretext of coming to say good-bye, he had vented his philistine spleen on me.

Page Break me39.387
Page me39.387
Enclosed a letter from Cluss. In his essay against the Neu-England-Zeitung†a he has — aptly as I think — pieced together sundry passages from my letters about Carey, etc.†438

Your
K.M.

Page me39.387
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

189
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.387
[London,] 12 October 1853

Dear Engels,

£2 received. It was all the more welcome as Oxford, Freiligrath's principal, is not yet back from his travels, and thus the matter has been delayed.†b
Page me39.387

As regards the Tribune, I shall have Article II on Palmerston†c READY for Friday.†d Article III, the final one, which covers the period 1848-53, calls for so many Blue Books and PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES that I can't possibly have it ready by Tuesday,†e particularly with Sunday FALLING OUT AS FAR AS THE BRITISH MUSEUM IS CONCERNED. So it would be of enormous use to me and would also save me time if you could supply me with something for Tuesday. But what? I really don't know. Perhaps current affairs, to which I would simply append the most recent news. Perhaps, if you have kept up with the subject — not very much is WANTED FOR MESSRS GREELEY AND MC ELRATH — the influence of the impending crisis on DOING AWAY WITH THE BONAPARTE REGIME. I think it high time that attention was drawn to France where, after all, the catastrophe will break out. Failure of the corn and grape harvests. Paris, with its lower bread prices, attracting workers from all over France and thus recruiting the revolutionary army, while these new arrivals depress the already falling WAGES of the Parisians. Bread RIOTS in Alsace-Lorraine, Champagne. Grumbling by the peasants over the preference given to Paris, by the workers over the expensive wooing of the army, by the bourgeois over forcible interference with economic laws for the benefit of the workers. Falling demand, particularly for luxury articles. CLOSING of WORKSHOPS beginning. In contrast to the general misére, LAVISH EXPENDITURE and stock-jobbing by the Bonaparte family. HOLLOWNESS of the entire credit system, turned into nothing more or less than a colossal institutionalised racket under the direction of the Lumpenproletariat emperor and the Jew Fould. Bourse, bank, railways, mortgage banks and any other institutionalised racket you may care to name. The last days of the Louis Philippe regime all over again, but with all the beastliness and none of the REDEEMING FEATURES of the Empire and the Restoration.

Page Break me39.388

Page me39.388
PRESSURE of the government on the Bank. Tax collector mulcting the land more rigorously than ever. Vast difference between the advance estimates and the actual budget. All municipal administrations atrociously in debt — because PROSPERITY has to be propped up. Then the influence of the ORIENTAL QUESTION on FUNDS, with the court itself dangerously exploiting fluctuations in the stocks. DEMORALISATION of the army. Special stress should be laid on the fact that none of the manifestos, proclamations, etc., by Ledru, L. Blanc and other kindred spirits of all complexions have succeeded in removing the evil, whereas the social and economic crisis is setting the whole caboodle in motion, etc. etc. I don't know, of course, whether the subject will appeal to you. At any rate let me know whether or not I can expect an articulum†a by Tuesday, so that I can act accordingly.†440

Your
K.M.

Page me39.388
In last week's Economist — (Saturday's, so really this week's) there's all sorts of stuff in its Paris Correspondence.†b

Page me39.388
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.389

190
MARX TO KARL BLIND
IN LONDON
Page me39.389
London, 13 October 1853
28 [Dean Street], Soho

Dear Blind,
Immediately after you called on me, I went to see Freiligrath in order to secure his good offices in getting my bill discounted. Freiligrath did indeed undertake to do this, but has so far not managed to arrange the thing since his principal†a — whom he needs for the transaction and who has been expected back these past 8-10 days — has not yet returned. Thus I am sans sous†b — although I have almost £30 to draw. Yet the thing must be settled within a few days.

Page me39.389

As I was unable to obtain this money against my bill, I looked round elsewhere so that I could send you the £1 forthwith, but was everywhere met with a snub.

Page me39.389

So, like myself, you will have to be patient for a few days and will, I am sure, realise that nothing could be more vexing to me than my present inability to settle the matter immediately.

Page me39.389

Quant á†c Jones, I can't understand anything. Since you were here he has been to see me twice and positively assured me he had written to you. It's not his way to lie about such things. Can his letter have been intercepted? He'll be here again tomorrow, when I shall get him to write to you in my presence. Then I shall myself take the letter to the post. He is leaving on Monday.†d

Page me39.389

Warm regards to you and your wife.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.389

First published in International Review for Social History, Vol. IV, Leiden, 1939

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.390

191

MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†441

IN WASHINGTON

Page me39.390

London, 18 October 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Cluss,

You really did [...] too much in going to the trouble of copying out the Chinese thing.†a AT THOSE EXPENSES I would certainly not have had the impertinence to ask you for the article.†442 Dana copied my stuff almost word for word, watering down this and that and, with rare tact, deleting anything of an audacious nature. NEVER MIND. IT IS A BUSINESS OF HIS. NOT OF MINE. In one of my Indian articles†b he also amended the bit where I speak of cholera as 'THE INDIAN'S REVENGE UPON THE WESTERN WORLD' to 'INDIA'S RAVAGES' which is nonsense. En passant†c Freiligrath solicited that 'revenge' for a poem about cholera upon which he is still at work.

Page me39.390

Again, in another of my articles on India,†d dealing with the princes there, he transmogrified 'THE SKELETON OF ETIQUETTE' into 'THE SECLUSION (PITIFUL!) OF ETIQUETTE'. NEVER MIND! Provided he pays.
Page me39.390

My wife has also compromised me by putting Rinaldo for Ruggiero and Alcide for Alcine†e in the first article on Palmerston. These are 'les petites miséres'†f of an écrivain†g whose own handwriting is illegible.†443 But it's a bitter pill for a man who knows his Ariosto from A to Z in the original. Divino†h Ariosto!
Page me39.390

It's a big jump from Ariosto to Klein, or rather a long fall, and a casus obliquus†i at that. Papa Klein wrote to me — not a word, of course, about his upsets and rows — asking for recommendations to you and Weydemeyer. In my reply (Pieper has not written him a single line quant á vous†j) I did not, of course, in any way suggest that Weydemeyer was unfriendly to me.†a How could anyone suppose me capable of such stupidity and baseness? Mr Klein would have had to conclude from my harmless remark about Cluss' being 'our party's most talented and energetic representative in America',†b that I was denying all talent and energy to Weydemeyer. However, such sophisticated word-juggling is beyond the reach of Klein's intellect. Hence all his remark amounts to is a piece of nonsense invented in order to give vent to his annoyance. NOTWITHSTANDING ALL THIS, YOU ARE RIGHT, SIR, IN HAVING WRITTEN TO MR SNUG.†c

Page Break me39.391
Page me39.391

Klein really does wield some influence over the Solingen workers, and they are the best in the Rhine province. I, pour ma part,†d have never, either drunk or sober, expressed the view that the workers are fit only for cannonfodder, although the louts, among whom little Klein†e is evidently coming to rank himself, are, to my mind, barely fit even for that. It would be as well to treat little Klein with your accustomed DISCRETION as a tool that may perhaps (?), IN TIME OF ACTION, be of use to us.
Page me39.391

Have forwarded the letter to Pieper. There's nothing doing with the Gradaus for it doesn't pay, and Pieper is too badly off to write gratis.
Page me39.391

As regards the Reform, I shall see what I can get the others to do. The only one from whom any real support can be expected is Engels. Red Wolff†f is married and a retailer of HOUSEHOLD WORDS for Prutz, Gutzkow and Cotta, not worth a FARTHING to us just now. Lupus no longer writes; he's so obstinate that he cannot be made to forget the unfortunate business of Weydemeyer's Revolution.†2 Dronke, presently a clerk in Bradford, idle as a grisette. Weerth, travelling about South and North America on business for nearly a year now. Engels really has too much work, but being a veritable walking encyclopaedia, he's capable, drunk or sober, of working at any hour of the day or night, is a fast writer and devilish QUICK in the uptake, so he at least can be expected to do something in this respect.
Page me39.391

I was greatly tickled by Heinzen's heroic deed. Should you people give the fellow another dressing down, concentrate on his crass ignorance, and the pains the wretched man is at to appropriate his opponents' catch-words when they're already stale and fit for nothing. Delectable, the chap's aspirations to dignity, and then his scraps! Serves him right!

Page Break me39.392
Page me39.392
Rent. In the Misére†a I cite an example of how in England, land which, at a certain stage of science, was regarded as barren, is, at a more advanced stage, considered fertile. I can adduce as a general fact that, throughout the middle ages, esp. in Germany, heavy clay soil was cultivated by preference as being naturally more fertile. In the past 4-5 decades, however, owing to the introduction of potatoes, sheep-farming and the resulting manuring, etc., light sandy soil has taken pride of place, esp. since it involves no EXPENSES OF DRAINAGE, etc., and on the other hand its deficiencies can easily be made good by means of chemical fertilisers. From this, then, it may be seen how relative 'fertility' is, even 'natural' fertility, and at the same time how ill-informed Mr Carey is, even from the point of view of history, when he expresses the opinion that the most barren land is always the first to be brought under cultivation.†b What leads him to that conclusion? The fact that tropical swamps are damned fertile but reclaimable only by civilisation. A tropical swamp, however, is productive not so much of herbs as of weeds. Civilisation clearly originates in those regions where wheat grows wild, as was the case in part of Asia Minor, etc. Such land is rightly described as naturally fertile by historians — and not land yielding poisonous vegetation and requiring more strenuous cultivation if it is to become fertile for human beings. Fertility is not, after all, absolute but merely a relation of the land to human requirements.
Page me39.392
Ricardo's law only holds good within bourgeois society. Hence it is where the relationship of the bourgeois to the land is purely that of a bourgeois, and every peasant, — or feudal — or patriarchal, relationship is cast aside that the law applies in its purest form, hence above all in the mining of precious metals, and in colonies where commercial crops, e.g. sugar, coffee, etc., are grown. More about this another time. In both instances the exploitation of the land is regarded and pursued by the bourgeois de prime abord†c as a purely commercial concern.
Page me39.392
Though I'm not afraid of those curs of Russians in so far as

Page Break me39.393
Europe is concerned — they are going to put us Germans in queer street. Between the Kalmuks and the crapauds†a we are in a cleft stick.
Page me39.393
Herewith copy of The People's Paper.

Vale faveque,†b
Your
K.M.

Page me39.393
First published in part in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934 and Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1962 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original†c

Published in English for the first time

192
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.393
[London,] 28 October 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

Mes remerciements pour les deux articles.†d I fear you have been too biassed by Mr Smitt†e in favour of Russia's military achievements. D'abord,†f as regards the 1828-29 campaign, it was a wretched affair in the opinion of most contemporains†g; I base myself inter alia, on the REPORT submitted to the Duke of Wellington by his ADC and published in The Portfolio.†h The fortresses were bought rather than stormed. In general, BRIBERY played a major role in the campaign.

Page Break me39.394
After passing through the Balkans, Diebitsch was not sure whether he had come to conquer or to be miserably cut off and captured. What saved him was BRIBERY, this time of one of the Pashas in command, and the UTTER DISSOLUTION of THE TURKISH ARMY. Russia began the war when the fleet had been destroyed off Navarino†444 and the Turkish army's traditional organisation had been destroyed by Mahmud and no new one had yet been established. In any case, circumstances are different now.
Page me39.394

Over the past 2 weeks the Débats has been publishing articles on the campaigns of '28-'29, which, however, I have not read. I shall look out further material at the library.
Page me39.394

Pieper has been out of hospital for a week — and is doubly occupied, 1. as correspondent of the Washington Union, arranged by Cluss and 2. as CLERK (from 9-5) at 25/- A WEEK with a crapaud†a in the City. Hence of no further use to me. Tant mieux†b for him. I'm glad he's out of the mire.
Page me39.394

I am sending you the continuation of the Palmerston.†c Jones has asked me for the next instalment. I have sent an article for this once†d but with the proviso that he would get no more if he didn't put an end to the abominable printing errors (this time glaring to the point of distortion). The manuscript was written very neatly.

Page me39.394
Rings, stricken by madness, has spent several days in the WORKHOUSE and is still in a critical condition. Drink was to blame, quorum magna pars†e the merry-making Lupus who debauched him with gin AFTER HE HAD SHUT UP HIS SHOP. Withal the man's too full-blooded to remain idle and has not yet succeeded in finding any fresh occupation. It's damnable the way the fellows all go mad on us.
Page me39.394
Herewith Heinzen's tour de force.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.394
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.395

193
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.395
[London,] 2 November 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
You must let me have something by the day after tomorrow, even if only 1 or 2 pages (if you are short of time) on the CROSSING of the DANUBE by the Turks when they took Kalafat. Yesterday I reported the news†a as VERY DOUBTFUL. But it seems likely to be confirmed and tomorrow's papers will at any rate tell you how things stand. Now that scientific opinions are beginning to be expressed on the subject, I can neither remain silent nor discuss it from the standpoint of 'sound common sense'.†b According to the news in the French press, Shamyl has roundly trounced the Russians and is actually threatening Tiflis, while General Vorontsov has written to his government informing it that, once he is threatened from 2 sides, he will not be able to hold Georgia without substantial reinforcements.
Page me39.395
Of late the Tribune has been considerably exercising its annexationist policy. To begin with your first military article was annexed as a LEADER, then my Palmerston,†c further instalments of which are thus foredoomed to annexation. Strange though it may seem to you, by following exactly in the footsteps of the NOBLE VISCOUNT during the past 20 years, I have come to the same conclusion as that monomaniac Urquhart — namely that for several decades Palmerston has been in the pay of Russia. As soon as you have read the further instalments of my article (especially the bits about the Turko-Syrian conflict†d) I would like to have your views on the subject. I am glad that chance should have led me to take a closer look at the foreign policy — diplomatic — of the past 20 years. We had very much neglected this aspect, and one ought to know with whom one is dealing.

Page Break me39.396
Page me39.396

Diplomacy as a whole is nothing but Stieber, Bangya and Co. reproduced on a large scale.

Page me39.396

The New-York Enquirer, edited by General Webb (I haven't read the article myself), has attacked the Tribune LEADER got from you.†a The thing, it says, is scientifically correct, but a Turkish war is waged according to different principles. Turks would go into the attack whatever the circumstances, etc.

Page me39.396

How is the Factory Pro-le-ta-ri-at doing?

Your
K.M.

Page me39.396
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

194
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.396
[London,] 6 November [1853]
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Herewith the great Karl Heinzen's invective against myself and communism in his Herold des Westens.

Page me39.396

Also a letter from Cluss. From it you will see that Willich's fiery rocket†b is arriving by the next post. The worst of it is that the fellows will be peddling their lampoon throughout the whole of Germany while my pamphlet†c reposes quietly in Manchester and London — and that in Heinzen they once more possess a vociferous sounding-board, whereas a few months ago the only organ at Willich's disposal was the Criminal-Zeitung. When the trash arrives I shall let you have it immediately, so that you can write and tell me what you think we ought to do.

Page me39.396

You will see from Cluss' letter how things stand with the Reform.†445 Get the 'old man'†d and Dronke to write for it. They have plenty of WASTE TIME. Whether it would be advisable for us two to contribute direct is a moot point.

Page Break me39.397
Page me39.397

Weerth's letter horriblement insipid, despite all his striving after wit.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.397
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

195
MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†446
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.397
[London, mid-November 1853]

... As regards the Reform, I shall see what can be done in Germany and Paris. Pieper is now in business and spends from 9 in the morning until 8 at night in the City. So what with his work as correspondent for the Union, has little time. He'll do something. If any money is forthcoming, I would suggest that Eccarius get some first so that he doesn't have to spend all day tailoring. In accordance with an agreement made with me, he will now be sending articles regularly. Do try and see that he gets something, if at all possible. With regard to his French articles, Jones is no longer printing them,†447 nor has he returned me the manuscript, which isn't therefore available dans ce moment,†a Jones being away on an agitation tour. I have written to him about it, however.†448 I have also asked Heise. Diversity is desirable and, by consorting with us Heise will, I believe, change for the better. I have asked Lupus and Dronke through Engels.†b Probably little will come of it. In Lupus' case, age and bachelorhood combine to lead him into mischief during this sorry interregnum.

Page me39.397

Not yet seen Willich's damp squib.†c The war news takes up almost my whole attention and there's no time left to think about the great Willich. Despite the electric telegraph, the NEWS arrives late, is very confused and fragmentary and has, moreover, all passed through the hands of the Vienna police — i.e. been censored. The news from Constantinople is of course much delayed. The heroes of democracy are preparing to march. An evil omen for the Turks.

Page Break me39.398

Page me39.398

Quant á†a Willich, I should much prefer it if I could be spared personal statements and my contribution be confined to producing, for the feuilleton of the Reform, a psychological — or rather, phenomenological — genre picture of this shabby philistine's 'form of consciousness'.

Page me39.398

Last Tuesday,†b at the same time as your letter, I received one from Klein which was, I must say, most delightfully written, witty and considered. He tells me that he, too, will make a statement against Willich, since he can prove that the man was a fraud all the time he was in London. Klein is obsessed with the idea that you people are treating him very much de haut en bas. I shall try and smooth out this difference.

Page me39.398

As regards the Tribune, the most ingenious way of handling the thing might have been to make people believe they 'recognised my style'.†449 I have become very thick with Urquhart as a result of the Palmerston article.†c To help me, he has sent me several books — with which, however, I was already familiar...†450

Page me39.398

First published in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 7 December 1853

Published in English for the first time

196

MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.398

London, 21 November 1853

28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Herewith a £2 postal order for Lupus, which I have received for him from Cluss, N.B. in response to my request.

Page me39.398

Also Willich's exceedingly sorry scrawl.†d

Page Break me39.399
Page me39.399
You and Dronke must let me have, by Friday†a at the latest, statements on the bits which refer to myself. I shall include them in my GENERAL ANSWER†b — in the form of statements. We must be as quick off the mark with our answer as the noble Willich was sluggish. Mind you make your statement a very humorous one.
Page me39.399
Thanks for the Turkish article.†c When it arrived, news of the Turkish retreat had already reached me, and I altered the thing accordingly. Do write; it's a month since you answered any of my letters with more than half a dozen lines.†451

Your
K.M.

Page me39.399
Won't you come up to town for Christmas and put up here? I now have a small room for you. You might be able to shake off the old man†d for once.

Page me39.399
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

197
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.399
[London,] 23 November 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
The People's Paper had been overlooked. Enclosed herewith. The five articles that have so far appeared in Jones' paper have been compressed in the Tribune into three.†e
Page me39.399
Whatever calls there may be on your time, I must ask you to let me have for Friday†f at least 2 of (your usual) pages — more is unnecessary — written in English so that I waste no time over translation. It seems to me that the campaign is now over for the winter; and in any case the first phase has been concluded, and hence can be disposed of with a few general remarks. So I count on at least 2 pages.

Page Break me39.400

Page me39.400
The Willich mess calls for speed — in direct contrast to his six months of shilly-shallying.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me39.400
Did the 'old man'†b get the postal order for £2?

Page me39.400
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

198
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.400
London, 2 December 1853
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
Mes remerciements pour le†c BEAUTIFUL ARTICLE.†d In America Mr Dana will be making himself a name as a field marshal.
Page me39.400
That you should be coming here†452 mainly to frequent the philistines again, pleases me not at all.
Page me39.400
Mr Dronke is behaving like a wretched little mischief-monger. He tells Strohn he has sent you his statement and the newspaper,†e and gives you to understand that both have gone to me — have had neither. See to it that the LITTLE MAN returns you the newspapers, at all events. I have a copy of my own here, but none is required in Bradford. Not having received the trash from Dronke, I was rummaging by chance amongst some old letters when I lit upon the corpus delicti with the incriminating passage which I quote verbatim. The letter was addressed to you.†453 Now, should Mr Dronke use adjectival caustic to obliterate factual accuracy, he'll have only himself to blame if I send his letter to New York as proof that I, du moins,†a am accurate. It contains some strange passages which would now undoubtedly embarrass him, e.g. concerning that 'fanatical lout Imandt', maintenant†b an intimate friend to whom he writes twice weekly. Everyone knows how addicted the little man is to mischief-mongering while our backs are turned.

Page Break me39.401

Page me39.401

On Tuesday†c I sent off my rejoinder, The Knight of the Noble Consciousness. He's†d in for a surprise. Your letter†454 and others from Steffen, Miskowsky (together with Kossuth's testimony),†455 etc., all of them, of course, with your signatures, were included as integral parts of the whole.
Page me39.401

Write soon.
Page me39.401

Jones is under attack from The Economist†e and is acquiring fame.
Page me39.401

Apropos. Last Tuesday a Polish meeting.†456 Mazzini and Kossuth didn't come. Inane blather from Worcell. Ruge and Ledru showed themselves worthy of the company. My wife was there.†f Also at Monday's meeting held by Poles of the democratic variety. It was announced that Harney was to be in the chair. Fearsome revolt by the 50 or 60 English working men present. Hisses, 'TRAITOR', 'DRYBONES' (as he called the Chartists), RENEGADE. A fearsome set-to. Harney did not dare take the CHAIR, was terribly mauled, buffeted, abused and, despite half a dozen attempts, never managed to speak. Needless to say, the stupid Waschlapskis†g couldn't understand what was going on and interpreted the whole thing as 'reaction'. This spells Nemesis for Father George Julian Harney.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me39.402
Page me39.402

From the enclosed letter†a you will see that Cluss has unfortunately already answered.†b But since my thing was ready,†c it had to go off. One should not work for Willich for nothing.

Page me39.402
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

199
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.402
[London, about 12 December 1853]

Dear Engels,

From the telegram I received from you this morning I naturally cannot tell:

1. Whether Cluss', etc., answers†d and the issues of the Reform relating to Willich†e have reached you from New York. The contrary would seem possible, since Mr Lupus, in a fatuous letter to Cluss, seeks to conceal his laziness by inveighing against Weydemeyer.

Page me39.402

2. Has Dronke returned the relevant numbers of the Criminal-Zeitung†f? I asked Steffen to get you to send them to him in Chester, since I can't do without the one copy I have down here. When — induced by you — I came in my last letter†g to speak of the odd affair of 'the well-known gentleman, Dr Dronke's' statement, it occurred to me that the immediate upshot would be that I would get no private letters from you until the affair could be assumed to have blown over — say a week or two. At least, that is the method which, since Mr Lupus' arrival in Manchester, you have adhered to with unusual consistency in all matters concerning myself and the two gentlemen. Hence, if our correspondence is not to be reduced to mere telegraphic exchanges, it would be better if both of us were to omit in future all allusions to your friends and protégés up there.

Page Break me39.403

Page me39.403

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.403

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

200
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.403
[London,] 14 December 1853

Dear Frederic,

As you know, everyone gets an occasional bee in his bonnet, and nihil humani†a etc. Needless to say, there was never any question of 'conspiring' and suchlike nonsense.†457 You are accustomed to SOME JEALOUSY and, au fond,†b the only thing that vexes me is our not being able to be together now, to work and have fun together, whereas your 'protégés' have you conveniently to hand.
Page me39.403

Enclosed one copy of the Knight. The other arrived in Washington either today or yesterday. I sent the thing to Cluss so that the 2 statements†c should not conflict, and so that he can delete anything that has already been said. A few small stylistic changes were made in the copy I sent. The last page is missing from the one I sent you; it got mislaid and contains only a few concluding remarks in a humorous vein.
Page me39.403

Although we have heard nothing of him, Willich must be back in London again. Did you see in the Reform the splendid minutes of the meeting presided over by Anneke, in which not a single person declares himself willing to return to Germany as 'a revolutionary fighter under Willich's military leadership'?†a

Page Break me39.404
Page me39.404

Quant á†b Palmerston,†c I could agree to a 'German' version only if I could be sure that the work would subsequently be accepted by a publisher. For I haven't a German MS, since I myself had to write the thing in English, i.e. Anglo-Saxonise the original from the word go. As regards the Tribune I intend to conclude with the TREATIES OF 1840 AND '41,†458 and for this I have at my disposal some very bulky BLUE BOOKS, BESIDES Hansard and the Moniteur. Have left out Palmerston's machinations in GREECE, Afghanistan, Persia and Serbia, as being of lesser importance. That would still leave the revolutionary period†459 for which the BLUE BOOKS again provide important (if considerably curtailed) material, as well as for our 'patriotic' war, etc., in Schleswig-Holstein
Page me39.404

Concerning your Bonaparte as a captain of artillery, or writer thereon, I think you would do best to send a paper of this sort under your own name either to 1. The Daily News, 2. The Examiner, or 3. The Westminster Review. The first would probably be best. An article of this kind would at one fell swoop — par coup d'état†d — put you in such a position vis-á-vis the London Press that you could 'press' it and at the same time, perhaps, get a chance to have your book on the Hungarian compaign†e published in English in London, which would in any case be more profitable and effective than in POOR old Leipzig.
Page me39.404

Needless to say, the Tribune is making a great splash with your articles, POOR Dana, no doubt, being regarded as their author. At the same time they have appropriated 'Palmerston', which means that, for 8 weeks past, Marx-Engels have virtually constituted the EDITORIAL STAFF of the Tribune.
Page me39.404

In addition to your lengthier expositions which are appropriated by them for LEADERS and are feasible only in the case of certain important EVENTS or periods, e.g. the initial phase, then the battle of Oltenitza, etc., I should be grateful if (time permitting) you could — during the less important interludes — let me have a brief summary of the facts — 1-2 pages, say — in English. I have greater difficulties — even from the language standpoint — with the lesser stuff than with profound (!) expositions, especially with material I have long been familiar with by reading in an English context, i.e. English works. I only require this, of course, when there is a dearth of 'great' événements.†a The main difficulty is the uneasiness of my critical conscience in regard to matters with which I feel I am not á la hauteur.†b My competitor†c quite simply copies out the facts (or rather what are given out as such by the London Press).

Page Break me39.405
Page me39.405

What do you think of my brother-in-law Juta's proposal, enclosed herewith, that we should write a monthly article for the Zuid-Afrikaan (Cape Town)?†460 Rotten though Juta's French may be, he's a good, sensible chap. If only you and I had set up an English correspondence business at the right moment in London, you wouldn't be stuck in Manchester tormented by the office, nor I tormented by debts. Incidentally, I believe that if you were to send military articles to the London papers now, you would, within a few weeks, be able to secure a permanent post which would pay as well as the Manchester business and leave you more spare time. At present the DEMAND FOR MILITARY WRITERS exceeds the supply.
Page me39.405

It might even be asked whether The Times itself might not be very glad to hook a MILITARY COLLABORATOR since it is wretchedly served in this respect. It would be worth trying. For we have, of course, now reached the stage at which we regard any English newspaper merely as an emporium and it matters not a rap in which of these emporia we display our 'articles', supposé†d they are not tampered with.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.405
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.406

1854

201
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.406
[London,] 5 January 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Since the day you left,†461 the whole FAMILY has been prostrated by influenza, etc. Musch and I are still very much down. Thus through physical causes I have already been cheated of 3 articles for the Tribune which, considering the weather, is dur.†a Let me know if you can provide me with one article for next week, on any subject you like. But I must know for certain if and when.†b

Page me39.406

Being still confined to my room, I have not, of course, been able to keep up with the newspapers. Pieper tells me that in today's Morning Herald there is a long article on the Russian plan of campaign.†c The main theatre to be Asia, not Europe. They proposed to take Constantinople from the direction of Asia Minor (!) etc., etc.

Page me39.406

Three volumes of Joseph Bonaparte's Memoirs†d have so far come out. The third contains the old Napoleon's correspondence on the Peninsular campaign.†462

Page me39.406

Just now I was interrupted by Musch, who is raving and thrashing about, etc., in a high fever. I hope the little man will soon recover.

Page Break me39.407

Page me39.407

Received a letter from Dana on Monday. Unable to print the article under my name†463 as it would damage the 'prestige' of the paper. Your military articles have created a great stir. A rumour is circulating in New York that they were written by General Scott.†464

Adieu,
Your
K.M.

Page me39.407

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.407
[London,] 10 January 1854

Dear Engels,

Last evening Urquhart sent me from Newry (Ulster) a speech which I got my wife to copy out, then added a word or two at the beginning and the end, and thus produced an article.†a So I shall cancel yours this Friday.†b Should there be any further INCIDENTS that belong here,†c perhaps you would be so good as to advise me of them by Friday morning so that I can give the stuff the finishing touches.
Page me39.407

The whole family, from aa to wö, is still ill.
Page me39.407

The enclosed is from Cluss. I shall send you the other part of it next time, when I shall be writing at greater length.
Page me39.407

That swine Tucker has just sent me a message. The first edition (50,000 COPIES) of 'Palmerston' is sold out. Now the gentleman sends word — he used not to be so condescending — that I should revise the thing for the second edition.†465 Write at once and tell me what you advise me to do.

Page Break me39.408

Your
K.M.

Page me39.408
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

203
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.408
[London,] 18 January 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

You must let me have by Friday†a something of a general nature (it is hardly possible to be specific) about the Battle of Citale or Zitale.†b It seems to me that:

Page me39.408

1. The battle of Oltenitza was a misunderstanding which frustrated the armistice imposed by the Ambassadors on the Porte. Similarly the Battle of Citatea†466 was a misunderstanding which frustrated the peace proposals dictated to the Porte under the guns of the English warships.

Page me39.408

2. The obverse of Oltenitza. In the one case the Turks entrenched, in the other the Russians, etc.

Page me39.408

3. Same result. After a murderous set-to lasting five days, the fellows drew in their respective horns. All I see is the result. I don't know what should have happened. All I do know is that this is not the way Napoleon fought a war.

Page me39.408

So enmeshed in their own webs have the diplomatic intriguers become that a guerre générale†c is imminent. As you know, the EVENT AT Sinope — not to mention Mr Redcliffe's threats — was intended to induce the Turks to accept the Protocol of Vienna and bring Halil and Riza Pasha into the government.†467 Once all this had been engineered, Palmerston resigned.†468 On 19 December, while he was still out of office, the coalition smelt a rat and ordered a demonstration in the Black Sea. Palmerston, doubly discredited, returned to office and effected the decision of the 26th, that the entire fleet was to sail into the Black Sea, but to do no more than assume a neutral role vis-á-vis the two BELLIGERENTS; ostensibly going further than the decision of the 19th, but in fact attempting to thwart it and cut the Turks off from their Asiatic theatre of war. In the meantime, however, Mr Bonaparte, basing himself on the decision of the 19th, has already issued contrary orders and purports to interpret the decision of the 26th merely as an extension of the first. Palmerston, OF COURSE, had to make the best of a bad thing and preserve his reputation as an energetic patriot. In this way the fellows have got themselves into a pretty pickle and their dissimulation will land them in an even worse one, especially since Parliament will have to be shown on the 31st that 'energetic' steps are being taken.†469 The Note which the fellows submitted to the Turks for signature shows that the former were prepared for a total SURRENDER TO RUSSIA and that only 'misunderstandings' frustrated this good intention.†470

Page Break me39.409

Page me39.409

My brother-in-law — le ministre†a — wrote and told my mother-in-law†b that she was unfortunately about to relive her experience of 40 years ago, namely a general war.†471

Page me39.409

I forwarded your letter to Steffen†472 the same day to Brussels where Steffen is still staying with his sister. I fear that, at this particular juncture, your 'Napoleon as Lieutenant of Artillery'†473 will be rejected, as The Times has had orders to refrain from any semblance of anti-Bonaparte polemics. Since he is 'our' ally, every paper will be moved by the same patriotic considerations just now. Anyway, as soon as the thing is ready, and if the papers won't have it, we shall bring it out as a pamphlet. Where my own work is concerned, I feel embarrassed about offering it to a publisher. The same gêne†c would not apply to yours.

Page me39.409
That jackass Weydemeyer has again shelved 'the noble consciousness'.†d The main thing was speed in answering. 6 weeks too late, and the thing's SILLY. I cannot understand Cluss, and why he should always pick on me of all people to be Mr Weydemeyer's victim.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me39.410
Page me39.410
God bless you, Brother Straubinger.†61 A MAN OF HIGHBIRTH HONOUR PEACE PROSPERITY.

SMALL WIT†a

Page me39.410
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

204
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.410
[London,] 25 January 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
Enclosed note for Lupus, who has written to me.†474 Absolution.†b
Page me39.410
As to the war, there will now be some snags, unless 'MISUNDERSTANDINGS' OCCUR that have nothing to do with, or run counter to, diplomacy. Reshid Pasha's Note†475 spells total SURRENDER TO RUSSIA. It even contains more concessions than the ORIGINAL VIENNA NOTE as a result of which Turkey declared war.†476 Palmerston has not returned to office in vain.†c On the other hand, the demonstration in the BLACK SEA would seem to be a DODGE, specially contrived for the MEETING of Parliament: if Russia accepts her own conditions incorporated in Reshid's Note and obtains everything she has demanded, she will appear to have bowed to force supérieure. That, in any case, is the plan. Otherwise, would it not be absurd to inform Nicholas of the entry of the UNITED FLEETS before he had, or could have, pronounced upon the last VIENNA NOTE? Now only an accident of war could bring about a warlike solution. By prior agreement the Czar, far from objecting to the ENTRANCE OF THE UNITED SQUADRON, showed considerable 'TEMPER'.†477 However, there's no vouching for 'MISUNDERSTANDINGS'. They ARE EVER PROBABLE.

Page me39.410
Today's Times contains a further report from the Wanderer on The Battle of Citatea.†d I EXPECT YOUR OBSERVATIONS. The advance the

Page Break me39.411
Russians are said to have made simultaneously at Matchin, Giurgevo and Kalafat and, indeed, the capture of Silistria, would seem MERE HUMBUG. Apropos, one more thing: your opinion, written in English. According to the French newspapers, the Turks intend to fortify Constantinople on the landward side.†a Would this not be a major blow for Russia? The more so as Constantinople will always be able to communicate by sea with the Asiatic and European coasts of its EMPIRE and thus cannot be cut off from its supplies of men and materials? Large-scale fortifications would now seem to be the ANTIDOTE to large-scale warfare á la Napoleon. May this not bring about a reversion to small-scale warfare?
Page me39.411
It is scandalous that Berlin is not being fortified.
Page me39.411
My brother-in-law, le ministre, has written to my mother-in-law warning her that now, in her ripe old age, she is about to go through the same experience as in the days of Napoleon I.†b He believes, then, that there'll be war.
Page me39.411
Cobden, the 'UMBLE' and 'HOMELY MAN' made a considerable ass of himself-in his last speech. He demonstrates that neither he nor the 'UMBLE MEN' who applaud him, are competent to govern England. The Quaker Bright will hear of nothing but the war within. Cobden's discovery that the social structure of England and Russia are analogous because there are Demidovs there and Derbys here, is worthy of a Palatinate revolutionary philistine from Neustadt.†478
Page me39.411
On Saturday Mr Pieper went to visit Meyer in Brighton. Unwelcome though he is to the latter, he is overstaying the time allotted him by Troupeau, because the 'sea air' suits him, and has, it seems, written the bourgeois a fatuous letter. The silly lad mistakes his lack of principles for genial high spirits. From Cluss' letter†479 you will see that this same 'genial' youth wanted to obtain an American passport to Constantinople, probably in the hope of becoming a kennelboy there. It's triste†c that the lad should be so thoroughly pleased with himself as to do one silly thing after another and make a laughing-stock of himself.
Page me39.411
On Tuesday†d Bischoffsheim will be paying me another bill through Freiligrath. In the meantime I can't raise a penny, having exhausted the possibilities of the pawnbrokers, as is regularly the case. So if you could lay your hands on £1, it would be HIGHLY DESIRABLE. Moreover, 100 copies of the 'noble consciousness'†e will be arriving on Friday and I haven't the MEANS to pay the postage, since I shan't be getting any money until Tuesday.

Page Break me39.412
Page me39.412
Apropos. I am negotiating with Tucker. The next pamphlet is to be about Unkiar-Skelessi. So correct the stuff you've got (Nos. IV and V).†480 I shall then make sundry additions and send back the ALTERATIONS for you to look through.
Page me39.412
I have received through Dana an offer from a magazine in New York, £12 per sheet, for articles on the history of German philosophy from Kant TILL NOW.†481 But they must: 1. be sarcastic and amusing; 2. contain nothing AGAINST THE RELIGIOUS FEELINGS OF THE COUNTRY. How to set about it? Now, if we 2 were together — books would be needed besides — we could quickly earn £50-£60. I wouldn't dare attempt the work on my own.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.412
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

205
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.412
[London,] 9 February 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,
I shall be sending you today, at the same time as this, a few copies of the 'Knight'†a and three copies of the 2nd edition of the Polish rubbish,†482 which I have corrected. Give one copy of each to Lupus and Dronke. It was stupid of me not to have corrected the printing errors (Weydemeyer also contributes his fair share) in the Syrian Palmerston thing†b before sending it to you.†483
Page me39.412
I had a meeting with Urquhart.†484 He surprised me with the compliment that the articles†c read as though written by a 'Turk', an opinion in which he was in no way confirmed when I told him that I was a 'REVOLUTIONIST'. He is an utter maniac. Is firmly convinced THAT HE WILL ONE DAY BE PREMIER of England. When everyone else is downtrodden, England will come to him and say: SAVE US, Urquhart! AND THEN HE WILL SAVE HER. While speaking, particularly if contradicted, he goes into FITS which I find all the more comical as I know by heart his every platitude and quotation. This made me regard his 'FITS' as EVEN somewhat SUSPECT and RATHER as a theatrical EXHIBITION. The fellow's most comical idea is this: Russia rules the world through having a specific superfluity of BRAIN. TO COPE WITH HER, a man must have the BRAIN of an Urquhart and, if one has the misfortune not to be Urquhart himself, one should at least be an Urquhartite, i.e. believe what Urquhart believes, his 'metaphysics', his 'POLITICAL ECONOMY' etc., etc. One should have been in the 'EAST', or at least have absorbed the Turkish 'spirit', etc.

Page Break me39.413
Page me39.413
If you can do something by Tuesday,†a it would be very welcome, since I have to write to the Cape of Good Hope on the same day.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me39.413
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

206
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.413
[London,] 15 February 1854
28 Dean St., Soho

DEAR Frederic,
The lithographic sample enclosed herewith is all my own work.†c

Page Break me39.414
Page me39.414
Bonaparte's publication of his LETTER to 'BROTHER' Nicholas shows that he already had a negative answer in his pocket.†485
Page me39.414
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.414
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

207
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.414
[London,] 9 March 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I have not written for a long time because I have had a great deal of TROUBLE at home which has even prevented me from reading the papers properly, so that I don't know whether anything of yours has yet appeared in The Daily News or how the whole thing is going.†a

Page me39.414

As yet I have got nothing, i.e. not a single farthing, out of my 'Palmerston', nor does there seem to be any prospect of my doing so. Mr Trübner has himself told me that, quant á lui,†b it is a PRINCIPLE of his never to pay for the stuff he publishes. Moreover, the thing's out of date au moment.†c

Page me39.414

On Tuesday†d I shall send the last of the sample articles to the Cape.†486 (So you must let me have something for the Tribune, PERHAPS THE GREEK REVOLUTION?)†487 Tuesday will be the last day of regular sailings to the Cape, since the company has fallen out with the government over charges.

Page me39.414

I am faced with the repulsive prospect of enduring throughout the spring and summer the same chronic pressure as in previous years, since it is not possible for me to work off past debts with the

Page Break me39.415

Military road from Constantinople to Nissa (lithographic sketch). Roman figures were written in by Marx earnings from the Tribune alone. From time to time I'm driven wild by the thought that I shall never get out of this mire.

Page Break me39.416
Page Break me39.417
Page me39.417
You have not returned Lassalle's letter as you indicated you had in your last.†488 I don't need it but only want to be sure that it hasn't gone astray in the post or fallen into the wrong hands.
Page me39.417
I have received an invitation from the LABOUR PARLIAMENT†489 to sit as HONORARY DELEGATE in Manchester (Nadaud and Louis Blanc likewise). I wrote today, thanking them for it, and made a few remarks which, according to how they are construed, could be either very extreme or very moderate.†a I sent Jones your office address today.
Page me39.417
The great Ruge intends to found a university (a free one) in America and, as Heinzen announces, 150 dollars has already been collected for this noble purpose.
Page me39.417
The great Franz Sigel has become Dulon's son-in-law. What else has been happening among that crew you will discover from a parcel which will descend on you in a few days' time.
Page me39.417
In yesterday's Advertiser there was a military (?) article by Urquhart†b in which he maintains that the Turks should have sent their main army to the Dobrudja and assaulted the Russians from there. Cites General Valentini. I shall make sure to send you the issue.
Page me39.417
I have written to Lassalle†490 and await further communications from him.
Page me39.417
Tzschirner came to see me, didn't find me in, is going to America on a financial matter with his 80-year-old mother and will then settle over here. Claims he already knows you, or so Imandt says.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.417
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.418

208
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.418
[London, about 11 March 1854]

Dear Frederic,

Enclosed a letter from Lassalle.†491

Page me39.418

You would greatly oblige me by letting me have some military stuff for Tuesday.†a The 2nd edition of The Times, which you'll get on Monday, contains sundry things on Shamyl, etc. If I don't produce anything on military affairs, even though it be only tittle-tattle, A.P.C.†b will steal a march on me; he cribs unblushingly from the London newspapers.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.418
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

209
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.418
[London,] 17th March, 1854

Dear Frederic,

I trust that you promptly consigned to the flames the letter I wrote you yesterday.†492 It was, of course, idiotic to make you in any way, I won't say answerable for Blanc, but even so much as to question you about him. In any case the whole thing's gone to pot et il ne vaut pas†c your ever reverting to it.

Page Break me39.419
Page me39.419

Is the Mr John Petzler of the Labour Parliament that mad brute, the old London Petzler? Ask Heise some time.

Page me39.419

The parcel for you has not yet gone off because I have not yet received Urquhart's article on military affairs.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.419
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

210
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.419
Manchester, 23 March 1854

Dear Marx,

I return Lassalle's letter herewith. At the time I forgot to enclose the first one, which is still here.†493 You'll have received the two half notes yesterday and the day before. T/B 58 166, Newcastle on Tyne, 17 August 1852, £5.

Page me39.419

Lassalle's strategical operations are very diplomatic. His answer to the Enos and Rodosto affair is the foolish platitude, itself merely intended as dust in the eyes, that Constantinople must be protected†494; if the 2 fleets and the Army of the Danube cannot protect it, then neither can 100,000 French and English. From his own standpoint, what he ought to have said was: if they are to be launched against Sevastopol or Odessa, they are, at any rate, closer to hand at Rodosto than in Malta or Toulon.

Page me39.419

The notion that a move into Serbia would place the Austrians 'in the rear of the Turkish Army of the Danube' is basically wrong. The Austrians must make their crossing at Belgrade or not very far below it, or else enter Wallachia via Mehadia along the left bank of the Danube. In the first case they would find themselves in the extension of the Turkish left wing, in the second, to the front of it. That this would mean the immediate sacrifice of Kalafat and Vidin, with the exception of the garrison, is evident — but not that this Turkish left wing would be lost and its remnants compelled to fall back on the Shumla line. Au contraire,†a 1. the correct tactics for the Austrians would be to march immediately on Sofia via Nissa, hence the correct tactics for the Turks would be to withdraw from Vidin, likewise to Sofia. Not having so far to go, they would be there before the Austrians and could either make a stand in the Balkans or withdraw towards Adrianople.†495

Page Break me39.420

Page me39.420
2. Should the Austrians be stupid enough to march on Vidin, the Turks would still make for Sofia. This division of Omer Pasha's principal corps would not involve the fragmentation of his forces, since the new enemy would necessitate a new Adrianople-Sofia-Belgrade-Vidin operational line; thus the Turkish left wing would become an independent army.
Page me39.420
3. But should Lassalle's peculiar strategy COME TO PASS, no amount of falling back on the Shumla line would avail, for the latter, having already been outflanked as a result of the sacrifice of the highway from Belgrade to Constantinople, would, on the contrary, have to be abandoned all the more precipitately in order to assemble all available reserves at Adrianople and advance against the first enemy to pass through the Balkans.
Page me39.420
One can see, incidentally, that these lucubrations all emanate from that 'diplomatic source' which seems to enjoy showing off on the subject of strategic developments.
Page me39.420
Tomorrow I shall be sending The Daily News a description of Kronstadt†496; faulty though much of its fortifications may be, I'm afraid half a dozen screw ships of the line will nevertheless go to blazes before it knuckles under.
Page me39.420
The HIGHWAYMEN have been kind enough to return Lupus his POCKET-BOOK minus 7 Prussian taler notes.†b His philistines mean to do something towards making good the loss of his money and his watch, and he might even get some smart-money into the bargain. Borchardt is attending to his bruises, and so the thing is resolving itself.

'But as for the fright, the fright he got,
There's no compensation for that.'†c

Page me39.420
Which is why he is somewhat caduc†d and snappish, apparently in the belief that Heise and I were responsible for his foolishness, the drubbing he got and all.

Page Break me39.421
Page me39.421
Who is this chap who is getting Heinzen to pass him off as an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung?†a See last batch of Reforms, No. 50 or thereabouts.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.421

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

211
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.421
[London,] 29 MARCH 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I have not yet acknowledged receipt of the £5, or used the money for the intended purpose, or written — all for the same reason. I have been saddled with Pieper. Ten days ago he was thrown out of his lodgings and I OF COURSE had to take him in here. He has drawn a bill on the Union and, if it's not protested, one of the next mails from America should bring him the money. This week Freiligrath has, BESIDES, found him a German lesson which will bring in 15/- A WEEK. And he was to have secured a similar lesson at ABOUT 10/- through Meyer — who has gone back to Germany today and asks me to send you his regards. But he didn't turn up at the appointed place. Instead, he told Meyer that he was fed up with giving lessons. Feels his vocation is to be a writer. Le malheureux!†b
Page me39.421

There's still much I don't understand about Lupus' adventure.†c Did it happen in the street? Doubtless after he'd been out on a drinking spree with you and Heise! What a DEEP IMPRESSION it made on my FAMILY you will gather from the enclosed letter of little Laura's, in which she relates the great événement†d for Jenny and Edgar who were at school.

Page Break me39.422
Page me39.422

The diplomatic part of Lassalle — aside from the information, which is well done — is as bad as his military one. What he says about Palmerston is simply the gossip current on the Continent.†497
Page me39.422

Have you read the SECRET CORRESPONDENCE†498? If the ministers who conducted it are allowed to conduct the war — as everything seems to indicate — the affair can only end in England's utter disgrace, although AT ALL INSTANCES the Continent will be thrown into a welcome confusion.
Page me39.422

Enclosed an article on the war by Urquhart, of yesterday's date,†a and cuttings from an earlier pamphlet on his military plans. I should like your detailed opinion of both.

Page me39.422

One of the Prussian instructors with the Turks, whom I met by chance yesterday, says that the Turkish artillery is excellent but the army as a whole no more than an ornament, inasmuch as any vigorous action has been frustrated by Constantinople.

Page me39.422

In your essay on the Russian RETREAT from Kalafat you say that the purpose of this manoeuvre was to set up camp in Odessa, having regard to the Anglo-French army. According to the latest news, however, it would seem that the Russians have crossed the Danube on the opposite side, or intend to do so. There might be some more detailed information to hand tomorrow, in which case you could let me have something about it the day after.†b In my letter of the day before yesterday†499 I forbade the Tribune, which was really overdoing things, to annex as LEADERS anything except military pieces — or else omit my name altogether, since I don't want it to appear only beneath indifferent STUFF. For it is essential — and now is the moment — to show them by military pieces that they cannot dispense with me.

Page me39.422

If the Times commercial correspondent in Manchester has reported aright,†c business must be in very poor shape. Serious FAILURES are expected down here any day. Likewise in Paris. It goes without saying that concerns which have long been laboriously staving off bankruptcy will choose the time when war is declared to go under with decorum.

Page me39.422

I haven't yet seen your article in The Daily News and have certainly not overlooked it!†496

Page me39.422

The Naval and Military Gazette maintains that the Russians bought a destructive device, invented in France and rejected by Louis Philippe's government, which continues to burn under water, and that they used it at Sinope, this being the explanation for the rapid and thorough destruction of the Turkish ships.

Page Break me39.423

Page me39.423

According to the Hamburger Correspondent, which must be regarded as a semi-Russian organ, Nicholas is to publish further documents, among them letters of Prince Albert.

Page me39.423

No further news here. The 'Mader', mentioned by Mr Heinzen as being an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, is an individual quite unknown to me.†a

Totus tuus,†b
K.M.

Page me39.423

I now have in my possession Hammer's Geschichte des Osmanischen Reichs.†500 Patience is needed to get through it. I've still got about 1/4 left to read. It's at your disposal IF WANTED.

Page me39.423

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

212

ENGELS TO H.J. LINCOLN,
EDITOR OF THE DAILY NEWS†501
IN LONDON

Page me39.423

[Rough copy]

7 South Gate, Manchester,
30 March 1854. St. Mary's

Sir,

Perhaps I am not mistaken in supposing that at the present moment an offer to contribute to the military department of your paper may meet with some favour, even if the party offering his services be not, for the moment, an active member of the military profession, and though he be a foreigner to boot.

Page me39.423

I suppose the actual qualifications of the party will be the main thing. As to these, nothing can show them better than half-a-dozen articles upon various military subjects, which you might submit to any military authority, if you should choose to do so. The higher the authority the better. I would ten times sooner be judged by Sir William Napier than by a subaltern martinet.

Page Break me39.424

Page me39.424

But I cannot expect you to give me even a trial, unless you know something more about me. I beg to state, therefore, that my military school has been the Prussian Artillery, a service which, if it is not what it might be, yet has produced the men who made 'the Turkish Artillery one of the best in Europe' as our friend Nicholas has laid it down. Later on, I had an occasion of seeing some active service during the insurrectionary war in South Germany, 1849. For many years the study of military science in all its branches has been one of my chief occupations, and the success, which my articles on the Hungarian Campaign, published at the time in the German Press, were fortunate enough to obtain, encourages me in the belief that I have not studied in vain. An acquaintance, more or less familiar, with most European languages, including Russian, Serbian, and a little Wallachian, opens to me the best sources of information and may, perhaps, prove useful to you in other respects. How far I am able to write correct and fluent English, my articles, of course, themselves must show. Any other information respecting myself I shall be happy to give, or else you may obtain it from your educational contributor Dr Watts whom I have been acquainted with for more than ten years.†502

Page me39.424

I have for some time past thought of making you an offer of this kind, but, considered the matter hardly worth your while as long as war was not actually declared and the whole critique of Danubian strategy was confined to profound disquisitions as to what share of the blame attaching to the inconceivable proceedings in Bulgaria was due to Lord Aberdeen, and what to Omer Pasha. Now the matter is different. A local war may be a mere simulaerum of a war; an European war must be a reality. Besides this, I avow, another reason restrained me. I was not then prepared, as I am now, with the necessary maps, plans, and special information respecting the theatre of war and the belligerent parties, and I should have been sorry to send you a single line based upon other than the very best information obtainable.

Page me39.424

My absence, not only from the seat of war, but also (for the moment, at least) from your own headquarters circumscribes pretty nearly the sort of contributions I could offer you. They would confine themselves to descriptions of those portions of the theatre of war, where actual hostilities are going on; statements of, and observations on, the military organisation, strength, chances, and possible operations of the belligerent armies; critical remarks on actual engagements, and, from time to time, resumés (to use the French word) of the operations, say of a month or six weeks, according to events. As the fullest information of what has actually happened is necessary to form a correct judgment, I should very seldom have to write on the strength of mere telegraphic dispatches, but have to wait, generally, for the arrival of more detailed news; thus the loss of a day or two would be less important for my contributions, if that would make them better; and therefore my presence in London might, for a time at least, be dispensed with. In case you should wish me to extend my contributions to a wider circle, I should have no objection and await your proposals.

Page Break me39.425

Page me39.425

Should you, however, receive my offer favourably, it may be that in a couple of months I should be enabled to come to London altogether; in the meantime, I might slip over, if desired, to confer with you.

Page me39.425

As to politics, I should mix them up as little as possible with military criticism. There is but one good line of policy in war: to go at it with the greatest rapidity and energy, to beat your opponent, and force him to submit to your terms. If the allied governments do this, I should acknowledge it; if they should cripple or tie the hands of their commanders, I should speak out against it. I do wish the Russians may get a good beating, but if they fight well, I am that much of a soldier, that I should give the devil his due. For the remainder, I should stick to the principle, that military science, like mathematics or geography, has no particular political opinion

Page me39.425

Now for positive proposals. I do not expect that the description of Kronstadt sent herewith will enable you to form any idea of what you may expect from me. But if it should appear to you that I may be of some service to your paper, a provisional arrangement might be come to, by which you would retain your entire liberty to refuse my further collaboration, if found unsuitable, while a fair remuneration was guaranteed to me for my labour and expenses. For you cannot but know that to write on military operations, requires the possession of numerous and expensive maps and books, for which due allowance should be made as entering into the cost of production.
Page me39.425

Supposing, then, I sent you a series of papers giving a full account of the military and naval force of Russia, its organisation, actual strength and efficiency (as far as can be ascertained), together with a military account of the theatre of war, the lines of operation and defence on the Baltic, the Black Sea, Danubian and Polish frontiers, including the system of fortresses. The enclosed Kronstadt article would form one of the series and might be postponed till its place arrived. My information upon these subjects is, I believe, first-rate, derived exclusively from printed (and not from any mysterious) sources. I could furnish an article per week, say one or two columns, and more, if required.

Page Break me39.426
Page me39.426

Should you deem this proceeding too systematical, the account of Kronstadt might be followed up by a similar one of the permanent fortifications of Sevastopol and the other Russian fortified harbours (wherever obtainable), to be concluded by some observations on the chances of naval attacks against land batteries, drawn from history and from the best theoretical sources such as Sir Howard Douglas.†a
Page me39.426

If you require reviews of military works, I could also undertake them. For instance Col. Chesney's Russo-Turkish Campaigns; for this book I am, I may say, admirably provided with materials.
Page me39.426

I conclude this lengthy epistle in offering you, also, a few remarks on the importance or rather non-importance of the Russian passage across the Danube: these are at your service at a moment's notice.
Page me39.426

If you take my offer into consideration, I shall be glad to receive a few lines as soon as possible so as to be enabled to set to work at once. In the meantime, etc.

Page me39.426
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

213
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.426
Manchester, 3 April 1854

Dear Marx,

The crossing of the Danube is of a purely defensive nature. It is proof that the Russians are withdrawing from the greater part of Wallachia. They have had 7 infantry divisions in Wallachia, one in reserve at Ismail and, behind it, Cheodayev's corps, making 3 more divisions. Cheodayev can, at the very best, be at Jassy. The remaining 8 divisions, including cavalry, etc., etc., amount to less than 110,000 men. Hence, with the possibility of an Anglo-French landing in their rear, it behoves them to secure the most favourable position in which they will not be cut off, and with the minimum possible sacrifice of ground. Here they had only 2 alternatives: Either a direct withdrawal to the Sereth, this and the Lower Danube being chosen as the line of defence (Fokshani, Galatz, Ismail) or, 2. a DASH to the Dobrudja, shifting the front to Kustendje, Hirsova, Oltenitza and Bucharest, with Trajan's Wall, Danube and Argish as the first line of defence, Buseo as the second, and Sereth as the third. This, at any rate, is the best plan, especially since new ground would be gained on one wing to make up for that abandoned on the other, and thus the retreat would look like an advance, and military decorum would be preserved. Possession of the Dobrudja would shorten the Russian front and, if the worst came to the worst, would leave open the line of withdrawal to Chotin on the Dniester, even if there were landings at Akkerman or Odessa.†503

Page Break me39.427
Page me39.427

Things seem to be working out with The Daily News. I didn't write until last week,†a after I had observed the English proprieties by obtaining a REFERENCE from father Watts, who also writes for it (father Watts, BY THE BY, has given up his SHOP and is now MANAGING DIRECTOR of a PEOPLE'S PROVIDENT ASSURANCE Co. in which capacity he will shortly be setting himself up in your vicinity, 47 Charing Cross [Road]. He and all his officials are letting their beards grow and look like Wasserpolacken†504). Today I've had a letter from the CHIEF EDITOR, Lincoln, who seems altogether agreeable (I had offered to start off with articles on the Russian army, navy and fortifications), and he is eager for me to send him the articles.†505 So I don't feel at all nervous. That the fellows are in a quandary as regards things military is evident from their acceptance of Schimmelpfennigian nonsense of a kind totally incomprehensible to anyone unacquainted with Bülow's books, and my racily written and unlaboured letter will have opened up for them prospects of quite a different order. Once they have got interested in my stuff (N.B. I asked for money straight away), I intend really to impress the jackasses. Tomorrow I shall send them something no one else can provide: plans of Hirsova, Matchin, Isaktsha and Tultsha. This business has really taken a load off my mind, for a source of cash was absolutely necessary. If all goes well, in the summer, when my old man comes over, I shall chuck up commerce and move to London; but then I shall at any rate be coming over some time before Whitsun to make definite arrangements with the chaps.

Page Break me39.428
Page me39.428

Needless to say, Lupus had been out drinking with us. As usual, staggers off tight as a drum so that there's no holding him, loses his way, finds himself in a low pub at the opposite end of the town from where he lives. Treats 6 maquereaux†a and 2 whores who were at the bar, shows his shekels, exits followed by the maquereaux, and so on. That's his ACCOUNT. However, there's more to the matter than meets the eye; for instance, on coming to his senses he didn't go home but went off with an Englishman, a total stranger, who put him up (not 200 paces from his lodgings) moyennant†b one shilling. In short, il y a lá des choses que M. Lupus veut cacher, sans doute quelque vieille fille.†c
Page me39.428

The story of the Russians' boulets asphyxiants†d is nonsense. The French have something of the kind, but it doesn't destroy ships, merely kills people. You might send me Hammer some time, particularly about the more recent times. About Urquhart one of these days. It's bad luck about Pieper. As regards the money you can, of course, dispose of it as you please. I don't give a damn whether my brother-in-law†e gets it or not.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.428
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

214
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.428
[London,] 4 April 1854
[28 Dean Street, Soho]

Dear Engels,

From Cluss' letter, enclosed herewith,†506 you will see what a worthy trick has been played on him by Dr Kellner and friend Weydemeyer. The latter, instead of enlightening him as to the status quo, has got him into a pretty fix, a service which friend Weydemeyer regularly performs for his friends.

Page Break me39.429
Page me39.429
I am delighted about The Daily News. I shall have a look today and see if they've published anything yet. I HOPE, SIR, YOU WILL LEAVE MANCHESTER, SIR, FOR EVER, SIR. One gets horribly used to this SIR (or rather SAR!) when one is compelled to read the parliamentary debates each week, especially THE SPEECHES OF Lord John Russell. The fellow can be boiled down to just the 2 words: 'Now, SAR!'
Page me39.429
As you will see from the enclosed, Pieper has received his first bill from Washington, and yesterday evening again acquired lodgings of his own. He now struts around like a turkeycock. Not only earns money, but as an author, and not only as an author, but as a politician! For the time being he has, or at least pretends to have, forsworn London's public PETTICOATS and is on the look-out for some healthy paramour. Social standing no object. Nor yet, perhaps, age. But health. THAT IS THE THING. Experience has taught the good youth to regard the sex from a medical point of view. Depicted in a state of undress, the good youth might serve as a cautionary example. Now that he's under his own steam again, I have told him about your offer to help him should he get a negative answer or a protested bill from Weydemeyer. There could no longer be any harm in giving him your message, but the good youth who, all things considered, is bon garçon,†a was deeply impressed.
Page me39.429
At this particular juncture, just when you have opened fire in The Daily News, it is vital you shouldn't leave me in the lurch over the Tribune. Otherwise the fellows, nettled as they are by my recent statement,†b and likewise readers of The Daily News, might well believe that now — when all the newspapers are anxious to make a splash with their military stuff — I am selling THE BETTER PART OF MYSELF in London and the OFFAL in New York. The fellows would be capable of chucking me out, seeing that they already have one correspondent here and one in Liverpool. Their paper would be somewhat the worse for it, but £200 to the good which, after all, is worth the trouble. Hence what is necessary above all is to tempt them once more into printing a military article as a LEADER. Then I can again be sure of them. In one of its recent issues the N.Y. Herald ridicules the 'MILITARY EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE' for prescribing a plan of campaign for Omer Pasha and crying treason now that it is not carried out.
Page me39.429
Palmerston in Three Epochs by Washington Wilks. This book

Page Break me39.430
consists of two epochs. In the first, Washington Wilks has most blatantly and stupidly cribbed from my articles in the Tribune.†a The second is a longer version of the chapter on Hungary from Urquhart's Progress of Russia, padded out with the help of 'Blue Books'. Wretched though the concoction is and betraying at every turn the fellow's total lack of knowledge — true plagiarist's ignorance — it has nevertheless enabled him to shoulder his way into the London MEETINGS, to gain the protection of Urquhart and his clique and to set himself up in London as a 'PUBLIC CHARACTER'.

Page me39.430

The idea of 'betrayal' by the Ministry is beginning to spread among the philistines here and, if the fellows venture to play the same game as in 1840 and '46,†507 there may be trouble.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.430
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

215
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me39.430
London, 6 April 1854
(You know the address)

Dear Lassalle,

Your letter of 7 March safely received. I should like to make a few comments, firstly on your military, and secondly on your diplomatic, VIEWS.
Page me39.430

ad 1. To my comment†508 regarding Enos and Rodosto, you reply — agreeing in this with the English ministerial papers — that

Page Break me39.431
Constantinople must be protected.†a If the two fleets in the Black Sea and the Army of the Danube cannot protect it, then neither can 100,000 French and English. I do not, of course, deny that, if they are to be launched against Sevastopol or Odessa, they are closer to hand at Rodosto than in Malta or Toulon.
Page me39.431

The notion that a move into Serbia would place the Austrians 'in the rear of the Turkish Army of the Danube' does not seem to me quite correct. The Austrians must make their crossing at Belgrade or not very far below it, or else enter Wallachia via Mehadia along the left bank of the Danube. In the first case they would find themselves in the extension of the Turkish left wing, in the second to the front of it. That this would mean the immediate sacrifice of Kalafat and Vidin, with the exception of the garrison which would remain there, is evident — but not that this Turkish left wing would be lost and its remnants compelled to fall back on the Shumla line. Au contraire,†b the correct tactics for the Austrians would be to march immediately on Sofia via Nissa, hence the correct tactics for the Turks would be to withdraw from Vidin, likewise to Sofia. Not having so far to go, they would be there before the Austrians and could either make a stand in the Balkans or withdraw towards Adrianople.

Page me39.431

Should the Austrians allow themselves to be enticed into marching on Vidin, the Turks would still make for Sofia. This division of Omer Pasha's principal corps would not involve the fragmentation of his forces, since the new enemy would necessitate a new Adrianople-Sofia-Belgrade-Vidin operational line. Thus the Turkish left wing would become an independent army.

Page me39.431

Should the strategy you postulate be adopted in spite of all this, no amount of falling back on the Shumla line would avail, for the latter, having already been outflanked as a result of the sacrifice of the highway from Belgrade to Constantinople, would have to be abandoned all the more precipitately in order to assemble all available reserves at Adrianople and advance against the first enemy to pass through the Balkans.

Page me39.431

ad 2. Ad vocem†c Palmerston. Your view of Palmerston is the one prevailing on the Continent and among the liberal majority of the English public.†497 As for myself, I am of the unalterable opinion that Palmerston — en passant Princess Lieven paid his debts for him in 1827, Prince Lieven got him into the FOREIGN OFFICE in 1830 and Canning, on his deathbed, told people to beware of him — is a

Page Break me39.432

Russian agent. I came to this conclusion after the most conscientious and painstaking scrutiny of the whole of his career and, indeed, of the 'Blue Books', the 'Parliamentary Debates' and the pronouncements of his own diplomatic agents.†509 Though far from amusing and very time-consuming to boot, the work has proved rewarding in so far as it provides the key to the secret diplomatic history of the past 30 years. — (En passant. Some of my Tribune articles on Palmerston have again been reprinted in London as separate pamphlets in 50,000 copies.†465)

Page me39.432

Palmerston is no genius, a genius would not lend himself to such a role. But he is a most talented man and a consummate tactician. His artistry does not lie in serving Russia, but rather in contriving to maintain the role of a 'TRULY ENGLISH MINISTER' while so engaged. The only difference between him and Aberdeen is that Aberdeen serves Russia because he doesn't understand her, while Palmerston serves her although he does. Hence the first is Russia's avowed partisan, the second her secret agent, the first gratis, the second in return for fees received. Even if he himself now wished to do so, he could not turn against Russia because he is at her mercy and must live in constant fear of being immolated in Petersburg. This is the man who in 1829 condemned Aberdeen's policy as not pro-Russian enough,†a who was told by Robert Peel in the House of Commons†b that he didn't know whose representative he was, who sacrificed the Poles in 1831, who imposed the Treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi on the Porte in 1833,†510 who abandoned the Caucasus and the Danube estuary to Russia in 1836, who engineered the treaties of 1840 and 1841†458 and a new Holy Alliance against France, who conducted the Afghan War in the Russian interest,†511 who, in 1831, 1836 and 1840, paved the way for the incorporation of Cracow, only to protest against it in 1846, etc.†507 No matter what he engaged in, he worked against his country's commercial interests on the pretext of protecting them. E.g., in the matter of Neapolitan sulphur.†512 He frustrated advantageous trade agreements which were about to be ratified with France. This is the man who delivered up Italy and Hungary.†513 Had he merely worked against revolutionary peoples, it would have been understandable. But in questions involving exclusively British interests, he invariably contrived in the most subtle manner to betray these to Russia. Incidentally, people here are beginning to understand him. Looking forward to hearing from you soon,

Page Break me39.433

Your
K.M.

Page me39.433
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

216
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.433
London, 19 April 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

In Cluss' letter, enclosed herewith, you will note on the one hand Schimmelpfennig's admiration of your military stuff — for which I am given the credit; on the other, his crafty critical reservations.†514
Page me39.433

Should today's report (in The Times) from Gorchakov and the report in the Northern Bee†a on the manoeuvres on the Circassian coast†515 give you occasion to send me a LETTER for the Tribune, you might drop a few anonymous remarks about Schimmelpfennig's opinion which, by the by, is commanding much attention.
Page me39.433

What is the significance of The Times suddenly ceasing its attacks on the ministry (quant á la guerre†b)?
Page me39.433
You will see from the American newspaper cuttings that for six months the 'Central Committee'†103 — of this I received private confirmation yesterday — had had a considerable amount of money at its disposal. The letter from Karger — Ledru's famulus — in the Pionier shows how Ledru, and with him the entire orthodox emigration, are deceiving themselves as to the significance and future prospects of this same Ledru. He and the Germans have agreed that as soon as he is Great Khan of France, he will order a

Page Break me39.434
French army — but under the German command of Ruge-Blind-Goegg — to invade Germany.
Page me39.434
Enclosed also a map of Constantinople which may be of interest to you.
Page me39.434
Schily is off to Paris with official permission. He will represent the 'house' over there and Cornelius here.
Page me39.434
Bangya is in Erzerum — colonel, of course — is called Mohammed Bey, has had himself circumcised, and embraced the Koran. Possibly sent to General Guyon as a spy.
Page me39.434
Damned lovely weather. A pity one can't make better use of it.
Page me39.434
According to a letter received yesterday from Trier, Edgar†a is leaving Texas on a six months' trip to London and Germany.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.434
I can see that this letter will be too bulky, so shall send the cuttings in my next.

Page me39.434
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

IN LONDON
Page me39.434
Manchester, 20 April 1854

Dear Marx,

It's all off with The Daily News†501 and, in fact, I have grounds for assuming that, by his indiscretion, Monsieur Pieper has played me a dirty trick which I shall not forget in a hurry. Everything was ALL RIGHT, only the fee to be settled, my article†b already set up in print — I have the proof copy in my pocket. As long ago as a week last Wednesday I wrote to the fellows saying I would accept their usual terms, and today the answer finally arrives saying that the articles are TOO PROFESSIONAL, that, much as they would like to, they cannot use them and concluding very politely with an offer of two guineas for my TROUBLE and the good advice that I should approach a MILITARY PAPER. Needless to say, I shall accept neither.†516

Page Break me39.435
Page me39.435

I can think of only one explanation for this strange behaviour: Pieper who, to judge by a foolish letter he wrote me a week ago,†517 knew about the thing, must have been talking big about it and thus, by the well-known telegraphic medium of émigré gossip, the story came to the ears of Kinkel or some other wretched German blighter acquainted with The Daily News and then, of course, nothing was easier than to represent Engels, the MILITARY MAN, as no more than a former one-year volunteer, a communist and a clerk by trade, thus putting a stop to everything. The politeness of the refus†a was not for my benefit, of course, but Watts's. The way the letter is written does not preclude my applying again, but only to be relegated to the PENNY-A-LINERS.
Page me39.435

I should be greatly obliged if you could find out who let the cat out of the bag; needless to say, Mr Schimmelpfennig's eulogies†b are a poor SET-OFF for this échec.†c
Page me39.435

On top of that, the shilly-shallying of the Daily News chaps has meant that in the meantime some of my sources here have become known through the German press — the Moltke,†d which I have found enormously helpful, is now scarcely any good to me at all and in a fortnight all the rest will have gone the same way, and I wouldn't dream of risking another £5 on the thing ON SPECULATION.
Page me39.435

I feel very much inclined to finish the articles on Russian military power and send them to The Times. If they published them, what an ass The Daily News would look! But a second échec would have its drawbacks, for then I should look a complete ass. That's why it's so damnable my not being in London, when everything would be perfectly simple. What do you think? Write at once and let me know.†e
Page me39.435

About the other things in a day or two. I can't let you have the article on the Russian bulletin†f before the next sailing; it needs to be closely studied and compared with the map, otherwise one risks making an ass of oneself here as well.
Page me39.435

If only you could screw more money out of the Tribune, I'd turn my back on the whole, rotten English press, where blackguardly German interlopers persuade stupid editors to reject the best articles, and I'd send you one or two Tribune articles every week. But to wear our fingers to the bone writing for £200, c'est trop fort.†a

Page Break me39.436
Page me39.436
Write at once and tell me what you think of this rotten business; the whole affair has put me terribly out of temper. Of all the band there's nobody we can rely on except each other.
Page me39.436
Steffen and Dronke were here at Easter; I didn't at all care for Dronke who has acquired a revolting habit of bragging like a commis-voyageur.†b The fellow's becoming a regular loafer.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.436
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

218
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.436
[Manchester, 21 April 1854]

Dear Marx,
I have just bought Monsieur Schimmelpfennig's pamphlets here.†c If you would like me to review them for the Tribune, let me know soon. You shall have the article on the Danube crossing on Monday, unless something of greater importance crops up.†d
Page me39.436
Do you think Blind capable of playing a trick on me with The Daily News?†e The fellow has his contacts with the paper, if I'm not mistaken. Monsieur Herzen's nonsense in today's issue of the same paper†518 proves that he, too, has connections. Is there any other German officer in London who might be in collusion with the paper?

Page Break me39.437

Page me39.437

Before approaching another newspaper I shall get some more material together, which will mean a delay of perhaps 3 weeks. N'importe,†a the better the stuff I have, the better my chances and, after all, the material will still be there for the Tribune.
Page me39.437

If I weren't so damnably stuck for cash, I'd invite you up here. But just now it's not possible and I must first move into PRIVATE LODGINGS again. Had there been a prospect of clinching matters with The Daily News, I had intended to come to London for Whitsuntide but now the journey would have little point. N'importe, perhaps I shall come all the same.
Page me39.437

What with the war, innumerable military works to be studied, sundry drinking bouts, etc., etc., I have of late fallen very much behind with my work at the office and, precisely because my mind was full of other things, have perpetrated a mass of blunders, all of which end up in goods being refused and other disasters. I shall now have to make up for this, for the very good reason that my old man is coming over in 3 months time; moreover I have been very remiss about corresponding with him; he's still waiting for things he should have had six months ago. I am now having to make up for all this, which means a great deal of effort. However I believe that a fortnight's hard labour in the office will see me through.
Page me39.437

Let me have the newspaper cuttings; without them, Cluss' letter is incomprehensible.†b
Page me39.437

Bangya will be sending the Russians some fine reports from Erzerum. I wish the Prussians would finally go ahead and declare war on England, in which case the farce would be in full swing and my old man would not come over. I have neglected him horribly and in any case the financial aspect has all the makings of a row.
Page me39.437

Enclosed the proof of the Daily News article.†c Let me have it back soon. I'm very glad I've got the thing; the fellows won't be able to make a splash with it now.
Page me39.437

Apropos. Is 'Bericht über die Kriegs-Operationen der Russischen Truppen gegen die Ungarischen Rebellen im Jahre 1849'†d — (published 1851) available in London? And if so, who has it? I have ordered the book but won't get it in under three weeks. If I had it I could at once enter into relations with The Times. It costs 1 1/2 talers, so nothing would really be lost by buying two.

Page Break me39.438

Your
F.E.

Page me39.438
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

219
MARX TO ENGELS†234
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.438
[London,] 22 April 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

Pieper, at any rate, is not to blame for the business with The Daily News,†a because he has had absolutely nothing to do with the émigrés for the past six months. Blind IS CONNECTED WITH THE Advertiser, not The Daily News. Herzen's crew — Krapülinski Worcell,†b and the blackguardly Golovin — have been positivement†c connected with the D.N. ever since Urquhart's influence got them thrown out of the Advertiser. Mr O. von Wenckstern has transferred from The Times to the D.N., but is no longer in London, that JUDICIOUS PAPER having sent him as MILITARY COMMISSIONER to Omer Pasha. The belletristic blighter! It's more than likely that the fellow has introduced other German blackguards out there. However it is the Russians I chiefly suspect. So WISELY MANAGED is The Daily News that, as is shown by the last RETURN of newspaper stamps, its sales have plummeted since 1851 and it now ranks after the Herald in the newspaper hierarchy.
Page me39.438

I consider that you should immediately send the article†d to The Times as it stands and without waiting for one scrap of additional material (I shall see if the 'Bericht über die Kriegs-operationen'†a is available here). The Times will still be short of material next week since the parliamentary recess, though supposed to end on 27 April, will not be over until 1 May. Hence it will be glad of anything it can get and, since the people there possess far more literary and political tact than the bunglers on the D.N. and would be prepared to accept an article from the devil himself if it were interesting enough, I fermement†b believe that they would publish it at once. At the same time it would be your REVENGE on the other rag. But should your approach to The Times misfire — which I doubt — you may be sure that 1. nobody will hear of it, since I shan't tell a soul; 2. the reviews will be sure to take it. Finally, I would again advise you not to wait, but to send this first article quite unchanged to The Times.

Page Break me39.439
Page me39.439

As for Schimmelpfennig,†c I think it would be doing the chap too great an honour to deal with him in the Tribune. I suggest that, in one of your private letters to me, you let me have sufficient to pass on to Cluss for an article in the Reform.
Page me39.439

Of late the Tribune has again been appropriating all my articles as LEADERS and putting my name to nothing but rubbish. It has appropriated, for example, a detailed account of Austrian finances,†d an article on the Greek insurrection,†e etc. On top of that their now 'congenital' habit of making a splash with your military stuff. I positivement intend — as soon as Dana has replied to my last admonition†519 — to ask for a higher fee, citing in particular the EXPENSES incurred in respect of the military articles. Don't you agree? The fellows ought to pay at least £3 per article. They lay out £500 on sending Taylor to India, and the chap's reports from there are worse and shorter — what could he get to know about a country like that on a quick TRIP? — than my own sent them from here on the same subject.†520 £3 per article would enable me to get out of the mire at last.
Page me39.439

There's been an odd business with Urquhart — whom, by the by, I have never once met in London since our first entrevue.†f The ministerial Globe published on SATURDAY†g [a] FURIOUS ONSLAUGHT ON HIM, saying amongst other things that, while he might pick up converts here and there, this wouldn't go on for long.

Page Break me39.440
'Where is Mr Anstey? Where Mr Monteith etc. and where that Goliath of the new revolution, Mr Marx?' 'All these gentlemen have seen the folly of their ways, and returned to the habits of good society.'

Page me39.440

Then, in Thursday's issue of The Morning Advertiser, 'AN URQUHARTITE' declares that:

'If continuing to pose implicit confidence in Mr Urquhart's views be proof of folly these individuals have certainly not recovered their reason, and also must still be without the pale of good society.'

Page me39.440

And then proceeds to specify:

'Mr Marx, however, I am happy to say, is as energetic and valuable [a] supporter as ever of Mr Urquhart's.'†a

Page me39.440

So far I've done nothing about this, but am biding my time. An opportunity will present itself for disowning Mr Urquhart. I find it all the more outrageous as he knows, since I have told him so, that I agree with him in nothing save the matter of Palmerston, and on that point it wasn't he who showed me the way. Mais il faut attendre.†b But there is one difficulty. There is a very stupid Urquhartite by the name of Marx,†c not the one meant by the Globe. If I publicly disown Urquhart, he'll say he didn't mean me, but the other Marx. Incidentally, it is evident from the Globe that Mr Palmerston has been paying me the greatest attention.

Page me39.440
Pieper grows more vapidly complacent every day. Such is his mopping and mowing that his face is more criss-crossed with lines than a map of both the Indies. Old Malvolio! Little Jenny always refers to him now as Prince Charming, the son of Wunderhorn.†d In my next I shall tell you some comical tales about 'Prince Charming' who, as his sister's letters reveal, regards himself as Byron and Leibniz rolled into one.
Page me39.440
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.440
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.441

220
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.441
[Manchester, about 24 April 1854]

Dear Marx,
It's absolutely impossible to do the things for The Times until I have more material, i.e. in a week or fortnight. I shall then finish them off straight away.
Page me39.441
As regards Schimmelpfennig,†a I shall write something with Heise. The thing must be done in such a way that the fellow can't reply, hence very accurately or not at all.
Page me39.441
Something must be done about Heise; matters cannot continue very much longer as they are. So I am writing to Cluss today,†521 asking him to tell me whether he can put Heise in touch with an Anglo-American paper — the fellow writes passable English — and 2. whether the Reform could pay him. Both of these on condition that Eccarius will not suffer as a result, for he, after all, has first claim. I have informed Cluss that if there is any objection of this kind you will advise him by next Tuesday's STEAMER. At the same time I notified Cluss of the Schimmelpfennig article, so that they don't do anything stupid in New York.

Page me39.441
I can't write another word today.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.441
Kossuth — magnificent!†522

Page me39.441
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.442

221
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.442
[London,] 29 April 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
A few days before Heise left I had a scene with him in the presence of others over 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'. He came out against us as the Knight's†a steadfast (secret) supporter or AT LEAST as a venomous INDEPENDENT. The affair brewed up into a scandal. I thought it unnecessary to write to you about it 1. because you knew Heise well enough, 2. because he wrote to me, humbly asking to be recommended to you and I didn't want to give him a letter of Uriah.†b
Page me39.442
The man may, of course, have come over to us altogether, though I cannot regard his attaching himself to us when in need as proof of this. At all events, I feel that you, for your part, shouldn't get too deeply involved with Heise. Temper your trust in him and above all do not write anything jointly with the lad. Before he can be co-opted and thus 'set up' in the eyes of the public, MORE PROOFS OF HIS SINCERITY ARE WANTED. We have had too many beastly experiences not to have become cautious and tant soit peu†c mistrustful.
Page me39.442
Letter enclosed with cuttings from Cluss.†523
Page me39.442

Imandt informs me that Blanc told him you had written to Blanc saying you would be coming up here on a visit. Is there anything in it?

Your
K.M.

Page me39.442
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.443

222
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.443
Manchester, 1 May 1854

Dear Marx,

The business of Heise is really rather disastrous.†a If the chap had behaved dubiously in regard to party matters, you might at least have let me know. As it was, I could only suppose that, for a new convert, he was PERFECTLY SAFE. I hadn't met him before, except for a couple of days in the Palatinate; seeing him in London as part of the intimate circle and, like Meyer, apparently a special favourite of yours, I naturally concluded that the fellow had already done penance down there, had undergone his épreuves†b and earned your good graces. Hitherto I have treated him accordingly and, since he had nothing to do and is in other ways a cheerful sort of chap, I've been going round with him more than with anyone else. Moreover, now that the philistines have got to know that I'm living with Mary†c and this has got to stop, I have taken lodgings NEXT DOOR TO HIM, though I haven't yet moved in. Well, all this is exceedingly difficult to set right now, and I can see only one way of doing it: from your letter I can only conclude that you gave him a letter for me. This I have not received.†d Write to me at once so that I can question him about it.
Page me39.443

There were two reasons why I did the Schimmelpfennig article with him†524: 1. because I wanted the fellow to be given a dressing-down without myself appearing to be working for the Reform, 2. because it was absolutely essential that Heise be given something to do to get him out of his indolent ways. The article is very good and, though marred here and there by Heise's style, gives Mr Schimmelpfennig some rough treatment. The thing can be of no further benefit to Heise, for he'll never be able to write another article of the kind; on the other hand, the business greatly impressed him by showing him how surely and on what a firm 'basis' we operate. However, even this wouldn't have happened had I been informed, and at least the fellow wouldn't have cost me so much; as it is, I have him round my neck and, au bout du compte,†a am more or less responsible for his household debts, etc., etc.

Page Break me39.444
Page me39.444

As regards my visit to London, it seems very questionable. I have far too much to do at the office to be able to get away easily. However, if all had gone well with The Daily News,†b I had indeed intended to come down and clinch the thing by word of mouth. That reason no longer obtains and, since the thing would cost me some £7-£8, which I can ill afford and I could only stay down there 3-4 days at the most, I shan't come if I can help it.
Page me39.444

After Cluss' letter, returned herewith, I shall now send him the article on Schimmelpfennig to be used as circumstances dictate; if he has already become too involved with Schimmelpfennig,†525 it will at least serve to enlighten Cluss privately concerning Schimmelpfennig and at the same time help him not to become too deeply involved. As a soldier, give me Willich any day, rather than that clever-clever Schimmelpfennig who really has nothing to him except sheer vanity and arrogance, and whose entire stock of learning derives from a few common or garden manuals and textbooks.
Page me39.444

I shall let you have another article on Turkey, military or otherwise,†c for next Friday's†d STEAMER. It is time we harked back to our first articles on the subject,†e including the political aspect. Here, too, we have been splendidly vindicated by circumstances; the pertinacity of the Greek insurrection†487 and the evident uneasiness of the Turks in Bulgaria prove, aprés tout,†f that the Christian population is starting to bestir itself and that the Turkish Empire is rapidly approaching its end. On the other hand it is symptomatic of the Turks' great weakness that the larger part of their army, as was always its wont, ran away home during the winter and that as yet no amount of reform†526 has succeeded in instilling in these fellows a soldierly spirit on the European pattern. As regards the Odessa business†527 we shall have to have some more detailed news; up till now everything has been too contradictory. Lupus is fuming at the allies for not having cut the Russians to pieces ad majorem gloriam Aberdeeni et Bonaparti.†g He and Heise now vie with each other in dismaying the philistines with flat contradictions and downright rudeness. One or both of them will get a beating before long; yesterday they came close to it, whereupon I suddenly began talking in a Lancashire accent, which made the philistines laugh and provided the opportunity for a dignified retreat.

Page Break me39.445
Page me39.445

Heise, by the way, won't ever be dangerous, his writing ability is far inferior to little Dronke's, idleness is his speciality. No knowledge whatever, only a strong inclination to acquire the ABC of everything. With great difficulty he succeeded in learning the ABC of Russian, but has already forgotten it again.

Page me39.445
Sûr ce que Dieu l'ait en sa sainte garde, habeat sibi!†a

Your
F.E.

Page me39.445
First published much abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

223
MARX TO ENGELS†234
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.445
[London,] 3 May 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
My use of the term 'letter of Uriah'†b has caused a misunderstanding. I gave Heise no letter — he didn't even take his leave of me and was, incidentally, in far too tipsy a condition to do so. He wrote to me from the hole where he was lodging near Manchester, asking for my help up there. It was in this sense that I would have regarded sending you a report on him as a 'letter of Uriah', if in a somewhat 'bolder' meaning of the term. Maybe Manchester has deprived him of the main INCITEMENT of making himself out to be a 'GREAT MAN', an 'INDEPENDENT' and a 'MALCONTENT' in the eyes of Imandt and Schily. However, all you can do now is to act diplomatically and urge the man gradually to find himself an occupation. The whole time he has been in England he has been living at other people's expense and, whenever he got a chance of earning his keep, soon gave it up. Since he now has a superfluity of time on his hands he might at least write regularly for the Reform which, by the by, has as yet failed to pay even Eccarius so much as a FARTHING. However, if given enough support, it should soon be in a position to pay.

Page Break me39.446
Page me39.446
Your military things — 'retreat of the Russians from Kalafat' and the situation in the Dobrudja†a have, I think, been proved splendidly right. The bombardment of Odessa†527 was, it seems, provoked by the Russians. Unless the English land troops there, little would appear to have been achieved — save to placate the bourgeois here who, inasmuch as the war is manifesting itself in the form of taxes and loans, are becoming wild about the inactivity of the ALLIED FLEETS, — PERHAPS, too, Nicholas needed a demonstration of the kind to give spice to his appeal 'to his people'.†b There can no longer be any doubt about collusion between the Ministry here and Petersburg, now that the suppression of a document in the 'SECRET CORRESPONDENCE' — in which Aberdeen (1844) accepted the Russian proposals — has become common knowledge. I already had an inkling that something of the sort was going on behind the scenes because of the falsification of the dates and endorsements in the 'memorandum'†c alluded to in the HOUSE OF LORDS by the Tories' EX-FOREIGN MINISTER.†d Although the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg itself censures these fellows for their fausse position,†e it is clear from the 'DECLARATIONS IN COUNCIL'†f concerning neutral, and especially Russian, shipping, that they are still agreeing their moves with Russia. Similar 'DECLARATIONS' appeared at the same time in St Petersburg,†528 ALMOST COUCHED IN THE SAME TERMS. Such a thing can't be a coincidence. The element they overlooked in their calculations is Bonaparte. No matter what sort of a chap he may be, the question is one of life and death for him and, being a rogue by profession, he won't allow himself to be duped as was POOR Louis Philippe in 1839 and 1840.†529 When one reads the secret documents of 1830-48, one is left in no doubt that England deposed Louis Philippe and that the worthy National, despite and because of its blind Anglophobia, was unwittingly the principal tool of precisely English policy.

Page Break me39.447
Page me39.447

As you know, the Tribune prides itself on being Christian. I was all the more tickled when the fellows used for a LEADER an article of mine in which one of the chief things I held against the Turks was the fact of their having preserved Christianity,†a although I did not of course say so quite so bluntly. INDEED, one reason why the Turks are bound to come to grief is that they have allowed Byzantine theocracy to develop in a way that not even the Greek emperors would have dreamed of. There are, in effect, only 2 religious peoples left, the Turks and the Greco-Slav population of Turkey. Both are doomed, or at least the latter, along with the clerically ordered society which has been consolidated under Turkish rule.
Page me39.447

I have, besides, sent the Tribune a scandalous story about the 'Holy Sepulchre' and the 'Protectorate' in Turkey,†b in which the historical matter will blind the fellows to the prank I play on Christianity.
Page me39.447

I should be very glad if you could supply me with something for the Tribune,†c since I am very busy studying the history of the New Greek Empire including King Otto,†530 but it will be a couple of weeks, perhaps, before I can present the result in a series of articles. Metaxas, who was Greek ambassador in Constantinople where he engaged in plotting — the Paris Presse published a pretty account of this Russo-Greek Bangyanade — was the principal tool of the INFAMOUS Capodistria.†531
Page me39.447

At odd moments I am going in for Spanish. Have begun with Calderón from whose Magico prodigioso — the Catholic Faustus — Goethe drew not just a passage here or there but whole settings for some of scenes in his Faust. Then — horribile dictu†d — I am reading in Spanish what I'd found impossible in French, Chateaubriand's Atala and René, and some stuff by Bernardin de St-Pierre. Am now in the middle of Don Quixote. I find that a dictionary is more necessary in Spanish than in Italian at the start.

Page Break me39.448
Page me39.448

By chance I have got hold of the Archivio triennale delle cose d'Italia dall'avvenimento di Pio IX all'abbandono di Venezia etc. It's the best thing about the Italian revolutionary party that I have read. Consists of a collection of secret and public documents, intercepted letters, etc. Nicely put together. Palmistone (as Thiers pronounces Palmerston) plays a leading role here as well. The fellow's machinations have been ubiquitous, and at all events his existence has been a very amusing one.
Page me39.448

You still owe me a letter about Mr Urquhart's military stuff.†a The man can be caught out only in the 'positive' SCIENCES. I.e. here and in his economics, the superficiality of which can likewise be tangibly demonstrated.
Page me39.448

Vale faveque.†b

K.M.

Page me39.448
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

224
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.448
[London,] 6 May 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Unfortunately your 'DISPATCH'†c did not arrive yesterday until the post office had closed, and the LETTER could not be sent to New York even against payment of the customary shilling.
Page me39.448

The Pole Miskowsky — vide the 'Knight of the Noble' — has come to a very bad end. The poor devil had long been in the most wretched circumstances, had never succeeded in raising the wherewithal for the trip to Constantinople — AS HE WAS NOT ONE OF THE 'MINIONS' OF THE 'GOVERNOR'†d — and had thus sunk to being a lumpen-proletarian in Whitechapel to whom we in the WEST END FROM TIME TO TIME sent some small aid. A few days ago the pauvre diable,†e together with six other refugees, was burned alive in the wooden shack he occupied with them in Whitechapel.†532 First you're reduced to beggary, then you starve, and finally you're burnt to death; what more can you expect in this 'best of worlds'.†a

Page Break me39.449
Page me39.449

Since Wiss, Doctor of Universal Wisdom, had launched in the Republik der Arbeiter A FURIOUS ONSLAUGHT on our 'corrupt ideas' and mindless 'frivolity',†b I thought it fitting to obtain from Edgar Bauer, whom I see from time to time — a rendez-vous invariably followed by a hangover — some information on this lumen mundi,†c now a shareholder in Weitling's stables of bliss. Briefly, this is what I learned there:
Page me39.449

Mr Wiss apparently arrived in Berlin shortly after your time.†533 He was a vain youth with a marked aversion for 'POSITIVE' knowledge, which is why he never succeeded in passing his medical examinations and threw himself passionately into the universal wisdom which was concentrated in Stehely's.†534 Initially a Brunoist†d and then a Stirnerian, he became a member of Edgar Bauer's society of 'The Free',†535 was much interested in the emancipation of women, and resolved to become 'frivolous'. In pursuance of this aim he tumbled the landlady with whom he lodged — a midwife. The midwife then set to work on the 'frivolous' one's conscience, bemoaning the loss of her 'LESSER WALLACHIA' which damage Wiss, le bonhomme,†e helped make good by cohabiting with her in 'free' marriage. Much though she esteemed Mr Wiss' money-bag, the midwife thought no less highly of the 'natural' bag of a certain working man, a lusty mechanic who lodged in the same house. Here again the great Wiss helped make good the damage by permitting the working man to work the machinery while reserving for himself the pleasure of ennobling the resulting product with the name of 'Proudhon-Fourier Wiss' and, whenever the name Proudhon was mentioned in the society of The Free, it was not the one in Paris they meant but the mechanic's OFFSPRING christened by Wiss.
Page me39.449

Since Mr Wiss spent a great deal of money, learned nothing, and extolled free marriage, his worthy papa ceased to honour his bills, after which he lived on minor literature á la Meyen and loans made to him on his 'espérances'†f by philanthropists in Berlin. Came the revolution. Wiss became a popular orator, and one of the vice-chairmen of the democratic club, helped in by

Page Break me39.450
Edgar Bauer. Next he became a contributor to the Reform but so dim was his light that even Ruge hid it under a bushel. Au bout du compte†a Wiss hastily assumed an 'ironical attitude' to the revolution, married his midwife in bourgeois-ecclesial fashion, made things up with his old man and, together with midwife and Proudhon-Fourier Wiss, departed with his tail between his legs for America where he is prospering as a doctor, philosopher and member of the communia.†330

Your
K.M.

Page me39.450
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

225
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.450
Manchester, 9 May 1854

Dear Marx,

I cannot understand the late arrival of the Tribune article.†b The letter was specially entrusted to the messenger-boy, who took it to the post at a quarter past 7, at the same time as the business letters, all of which arrived punctually. Even if it had not left until the 2nd post, it should have been in your hands by 2 o'clock at the latest. I can only regard it as evidence of Mr Palmerston's solicitude for you. Since the bit about the battle has not materialised in the meantime, I can only hope you haven't sent off the article.
Page me39.450

With regard to Urquhart's military stuff,†c something in my next. I can, of course, deal with this subject only in notes, which I shall write straight off in English for you. You will then have to work them into your article.
Page me39.450

The story of Dr Wiss is most edifying and Cluss will certainly ensure that it reaches the right people.†536
Page me39.450

As for that poor devil Miskowsky, the Noble One†d can now say

Page Break me39.451
after all that he ultimately 'vanished without trace'.†537 When I read the story in the London papers, it immediately struck me that those who had been burnt to death were most certainly refugees.†532
Page me39.451

If at all possible, I shall set Heise to work — which, indeed, he cannot possibly avoid the moment I begin to hold off. The fellow's presently in Bradford, whither he was summoned by the little man†a during the absence of the latter's principal†b and whence, in any case, he returns in an exceedingly tipsy condition, so that he has to spend a few days in quarantine before he's good for anything. I was much tickled by the little man's little article†c because of the care with which he retrieves and repeats all the Neue Rheinische Zeitung's old chestnuts about Schleswig-Holstein, Belgium,†d etc., etc.

Page me39.451

Feldzug der Schleswig-Holsteinischen Armee und Marine 1850, by A. Lütgen, sometime Major, is the first sensible and comprehensive book about the Willisen episode. It confirms everything I had already deduced from preliminary studies of the affair.†e Monsieur Willisen's original plan was a very good one, — if somewhat over-extended — so good that even the botched and belated attempt to revert to it instilled thoughts of withdrawal in the minds of the Danes, who were 36,000 strong against 26,000, almost all of their troops being already committed, whereas the Schleswig-Holsteiners had certainly 1/5 of their troops still uncommitted. But when Monsieur Willisen actually found himself face to face with the enemy, he lost his head amidst the contradictory reports and the even more confused suggestions that were being made to him. Even the night before the battle, he detached his own reserves to a point on the left, right off the battle-field, to face an imaginary enemy and at the same time deferred the order for the attack, upon which all the dispositions had been based. Thus, concentration of reserves on the left where no enemy existed, exposure of the centre, which received the main attack, confusion on the right wing, which was to launch the main counter-attack. This alone is enough to explain the outcome, and even then he might have emerged victorious had he not too hastily — as early as 8 o'clock in the morning — given everything up for lost. Even at 11 he could still have won but his horror on hearing that 2 Danish battalions were in position to the rear of his left flank (2 squadrons and 4 cannon would have sufficed to dispose of them) caused that 'strategic outflanker in maximum force' to recall the dictum 'he who outflanks is himself outflanked' and he now resolved to use all his forces to extricate himself. Our theoretician's antagonist was an old man grown grey in command, if mostly peace-time command, a mediocre pipe-clay general,†a who was answerable not to a petty, philistine, moderate government devoid of power, but to a genuine king†b and ministry and, if only for that reason, stood his ground more doggedly. In this way he won the battle. The success with which the weak Schleswig-Holstein detachments fought the Danes, who outnumbered them two and three to one (even according to the official Danish report), provides ample proof that the 26,000 Schleswig-Holsteiners were fully the equal of the 36,000 Danes. The chaps fought quite splendidly, despite the numerous raw recruits in their ranks, despite the havoc wrought throughout the entire army by Willisen's new regulations introduced only a fortnight before the campaign and, above all, despite the shortage of cadres. This army would happily have trounced twice their number of Prussians.

Page Break me39.452
Page me39.452

The bombardment of Odessa†527 was a must for the allies because of the insult to the flag of truce. Not much damage appears to have been done and, since they didn't land or occupy the city, it was more of a defeat than a victory. Nicest of all is the humbug that they 'sailed in the direction of Sevastopol'.†c Incidentally, with every Russian action and the RETALIATION, at least apparent or attempted, this necessitates, the war is increasingly slipping from the grasp of Aberdeen and Palmerston and will gradually assume a more warlike course. As it is, Bonaparte must soon acquire gloire of a rather more tangible sort, even though his faithful Fridolin, Saint-Arnaud,†d is just the man to push him further into the soup. Had this noble fellow not had a fortune to refaire,†e the fortune he has already squandered away several times since 1851, he would never have gone East. But he and his ilk are just the men to ruin the best of troops by fraudulent supply contracts and then, through military blunders, land them in a regular mess. I expect to see some pretty results from the campaign conducted by this Bayard du bas-empire.†110

Page Break me39.453

Your
F.E.

Page me39.453
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

226
MARX TO ENGELS†234
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.453
London, 22 May 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

It was a good thing you didn't come on Saturday.†a My trouble — now a fortnight old — had come to a head. I could hardly speak and even laughing hurt because of a great festering boil between my nose and mouth, which this morning has at least dwindled to quite reasonable dimensions. My lips, too, which were tremendously swollen, are approximately back to normal again, etc., in short, everything indicates that I shall soon be well again. It's truly devilish, having such a wretched head for a whole fortnight. Beyond a joke. For the past week I've had to give up reading and smoking altogether and today am waiting to see if Freund will allow me to try a cigar.
Page me39.453

To compound the misery, all three children†b have been down with measles since last Friday (Thursday night), which means that the house has become a veritable hospital.
Page me39.453

Herewith Cluss. Collapse of the Reform deplorable.†538

Page Break me39.454
Page me39.454
I rely on you to continue doing the American stint for me during the whole of this week since I am totally incapable of writing and have already lost £6 as a result of this wretched business, which is indeed hard to bear. I hope to have a few lines from you in the meantime.
Page me39.454
The enclosed letter to be communicated to no one but Lupus. It would seem to be Heise's mission to compromise you in Manchester. Beware of the fellow.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.454
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

227
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†539
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me39.454
London, 1 June 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Lassalle,
I have been seriously ill these past 2 or 3 weeks and, on top of that, the 3 children†a went down with the measles, from which they have only just recovered, so that the whole house has been turned into a hospital. I did not start going out again until 2 days ago and, since my head was the worst affected and all conversation exhausted me, I have seen no visitors during this time. The result is that I have heard little or nothing of the émigrés' activities and intentions. As you will be aware, Mazzini is in Switzerland incognito. From letters from Washington I gather that the émigrés are, as always, dreaming ambitious dreams. The confidential reports sent to America by the gentlemen here percolate back to me through a channel in Washington.†b
Page me39.454
In my next I may be á même†c to send you the detailed information you ask for on the doings of the émigrés.†540

Page Break me39.455

Page me39.455

Weerth is at present in California. It is rumoured that he is on the point of marrying a certain Miss Worbs or Worms, of Hamburg, the daughter of one of his former principals.

Page me39.455

Even The Times has been poking some mild fun at the 'Cologne TRICKERS' in London who bellow from a hundred throats — bellow at the English:

'Softly sounding through my mind
Many a delightful chime'†a or else,

'Lonely I am not alone'†b and more in similar vein.

Page me39.455

As regards the 'Palmerston', — he is presently straining every nerve to gain complete control of the War Office, though he has a rival in the Duke of Newcastle, a Peelite —, only the first few of the articles I wrote for the Tribune have been printed here as pamphlets.†c I myself prevented further publication, as pamphlets by Urquhart were appearing alternately in the same series of 'Political Fly-Sheets'†541 and I do not wish to be numbered among the followers of that gentleman with whom I have only one thing in common, viz. my views on Palmerston, but to whom in all other matters I am diametrically opposed, as became apparent at our very first meeting.†d He is a romantic reactionary — a Turk, and would gladly guide the West back to Turkish standards and structures. I have not sent you these few short pamphlets as the cost of posting small parcels is disproportionately high. As for the substance of the matter, you are perfectly right to abide by your opinion until wholly unequivocal facts cause you to change it. What has gone to make up my own view is not this or that isolated fact — each isolated fact admitting of a variety of interpretations — but the concatenation of all the steps taken by this man, the whole context of his activities since 1829. In it I have discovered a consistent plan that assumes various and often seemingly contradictory forms but is always directed towards the same goal, a plan uniformly executed with the same supreme disdain.

Page me39.455

As regards the specific points you raise, my comments are:

1. Pacifico Expedition.†345 In a work by one of Palmerston's former secretaries at the embassy in Athens — 1836 — namely the Diplomatic History of Greece by Mr Parish, you will find to begin with proof that, from 1830 onwards, Palmerston did all he could to turn Greece into a Russian province. In the end the Pacifico Expedition dropped her into Russia's lap. At the same time it also gained Palmerston popularity in England, thereby enabling him to further Russia's interests in the same year by concluding with Brunnow a treaty on the Danish succession, a treaty that was not made effective until 1852.†542 If, having done all the MISCHIEF he wanted, Palmerston gave way to France over this affair — the Greek one —, his compliance was simply 'diplomacy' vis-á-vis the English people. Papers hostile to him were already beginning to point out that in 1840 he had turned England into the ally of Russia and into the antagonist of France.

Page Break me39.456

Page me39.456

2. Recognition of the coup d'état.†a Necessary to get Bonaparte into his toils.†74 Similarly, in connection with the Spanish troubles, he brought the Quadruple Alliance into being earlier in order to get Louis Philippe into the mire.†543
Page me39.456

3. The instruction of 19 June 1839 — wholly justifies my view. It was not London but Paris which suggested that in no circumstances should Russia be allowed to carry out the Treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi†510 (which, by the by, was of Mr Palmerston's making). The proof — a dispatch from Soult to the Baron de Bourqueney, 30 May 1839. Similarly 17 June 1839, etc. Palmerston, who made as if to believe that the Sultan wished to see the Treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi put into effect and the Russians in Constantinople, sent a dispatch to Earl Granville in Paris on 19 June, enclosing his 'PROPOSED INSTRUCTIONS' of even date 'TO THE ADMIRAL, SIR ROBERT STOPFORD', in which, among many other ambiguous and inane proposals, he also instructed the Admiral if necessary 'TO FORCE THE PASSAGE OF DARDANELLES'. Soult, with great bon sens†b (see dispatch from Earl Granville to Viscount Palmerston, Paris, 28 June 1839), drew Palmerston's attention to the fact that it was not the Sultan but Russia who was their enemy, that this forcing of the Dardanelles was inane and that it would suffice if the English and French ambassadors in Constantinople were to ask the Sultan — who desired nothing better — to permit the entry of the United Fleets into the Dardanelles. To this Palmerston could raise no objection, but put forward a proposal even more inane, whereupon Soult wrote:
Page me39.456

'The NOBLE LORD would seem to resign himself WITH GREAT FACILITY TO THE CONTINGENCY OF A RUSSIAN OCCUPATION OF CONSTANTINOPLE'.
Page me39.456

And so it goes on, Palmerston always thwarting French action

Page Break me39.457
against Russia while seeming to rage against Mohammed Ali, until Brunnow arrives in London, and the two of them conclude the treaty of 1840, subsequently ratified in the Dardanelles treaty of 1841, which was no more than a European sanction of the Treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi.†544
Page me39.457

I should be greatly obliged to you if you would write to me often and at length about conditions in Germany, particularly Prussia.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.457

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften. Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

228
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.457
London, 3 June 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

I am back on my feet and the children out of bed again, if not yet out of the house, but now my wife has become very unwell, probably as a result of the night vigils and nursing, and the worst of it is that instead of consulting the doctor which she refuses to do, she is dosing herself — on the pretext that two years ago when she was similarly indisposed, Freund's medicines only made her worse. If matters don't improve I shall finally have to resort to force. Thus I shan't be able to do the correspondence on Tuesday, for on that day Pieper's lessons prevent him from acting as secretary and, with my wife in her present state, I can't bother her with any writing. As you can see, I've become a regular Peter Schlemihl.†a But over the years we have all enjoyed very good health on the whole and will, I hope, do so again when this crisis is past. Au fond,†a we can be thankful that we've all gone down one after the other.

Page Break me39.458
Page me39.458

I wrote an article†b yesterday deriding the plan of campaign published in Thursday's Times.†c However, if the French papers are to be trusted, it would not appear to be an official one. The Moniteur reports that Omer Pasha is hurrying to relieve Silistria.†d Perhaps this is simply a device to keep the Parisians in good humour and to counteract the great Boichot's presence in Paris.†e I can make little of the Russian reports or of Napier's in today's paper.†f Au bout†g the English would again appear to have achieved nothing.
Page me39.458

Yesterday a great raw-boned chap, a democratic loafer, introduced himself to me as Dr Otto. Danish by birth. Ostensibly now expelled from Schleswig-Holstein. Took part in the 1848/49 Schleswig-Holstein and 'Thuringian' movement. Does Lupus, by any chance, possess any particular information about the man?
Page me39.458

Have finished reading the Archivio delle cose d'Italia. The man's Considerazioni†h at the back of the book endeavour to demonstrate the opposite of what emerges from his collection of documents, namely that the Giovane Italia,†545 and CONSEQUENTLY Giuseppe Mazzini, were the soul of the 1848 movement. What is particularly amusing is the final section in which he proves that the movements [must] shed their narrow, national character: FRATERNISATION among the various nations that came to grief in 1848/49 as a result of their isolation; Russia or the UNITED STATES OF EUROPE. At this point comes the following revelation:

'La servitú d'Italia é patto europeo: l'Italia non puó esser libera che in seno a una libera Europa. Allora apparve manifesto doversi sancire, contro l'alleanza dei. pochi oppressori, l'onnipotente alleanza degli oppressi.'†i [Archivio, Vol. I, 560]

Page me39.458

And this 'l'onnipotente alleanza degli oppressi' was effectuated by Mazzini as follows:

Page Break me39.459

'Allora Mazzini compié l'ardua sua missione, dettando con Ledru-Rollin e Darasz e Ruge, un nuovo patto che stringa Italia, non solo alla Polonia e alla Francia, ma alla stessa Germania, serva volente finora, e quasi sacerdotessa della servitú. E cosí, dalle opposte parti e dalle piú nemiche genti giungono i peregrini al santuario commune della libertá.'†a [I. 560]

Page me39.459

Have received newspapers from America, but still no letter. 'Ruge', who has concluded the 'nuovo patto' with Mazzini, declares in Dulon's little sheet†b that, as a result of the war against Russia, there is now a prospect of 'liberal' development in Germany and that, even though no more may be achieved than 'freedom as in England', one ought to participate in it. To adopt a pessimistic view is 'base, idle and Russian'. As you can see, the prospect of his private fortune being exhausted within the year has made the noble man ready to attach himself to any form of 'progress' and, au cas de besoin,†c become 'constitutional'.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.459

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

IN LONDON
Page me39.459
Manchester, 10 June 1854

Dear Marx,

I was very sorry I was unable to send you an article for Tuesday's post,†d but it was a sheer impossibility because of the many jobs to be done at the office which now absolutely preclude my writing articles for you precisely on Mondays or Thursdays. On top of that, my present lodgings are almost 3/4 of an hour's walk away from the post, so that nothing more can be done late at night for the second post. Hence I have to work on Saturdays and on Wednesday evenings. Tomorrow I shall send you a comprehensive article on the siege of Silistria†a which ought to cause a stir; maybe, too, some notes on Napier's absurd naval frolics†546 and on the condition of the army in Bulgaria.

Page Break me39.460
Page me39.460

I am now swotting the Hungarian campaign in real earnest and shall, I think, have worked my way through all the sources by October; come what may, I shall write the book this winter.†b The more I go into it, the prettier the thing gets on both sides. At present I am comparing Görgey and Windischgrätz,†547 and find that in his self-apology the latter is as mendacious as in his bulletins†548 he hasn't the courage to disown. Delightful, how each of the two adversaries tries to make his own army out to be worse than the opposing one. Pére Windischgrätz, incidentally, proves himself the ass we know him to be — HE HAS ACTUALLY WRITTEN HIMSELF DOWN AN ASS — and was most ably abetted in his tomfoolery by men even more stupid, if such a thing is possible, than himself, namely his subordinate generals Wrbna, Csorich and, above all, the chivalrous Banus Jellacic. Görgey's cynicism enables him to record the facts much more frankly and correctly than that mendacious apologist Windischgrätz. However, it is a campaign altogether worthy of the year '48/49.
Page me39.460

Cold feet on both sides, the old armies and the revolutionary forces both discredited. Next week I hope to receive the official Austrian book†c and one of these days I shall go through the Brockhaus catalogues to find what sources are still required. Another thing I need is Klapka†d; then I shall have all the principal stuff.
Page me39.460

The thing for The Times†e will be written next week; I now have all the sources and need only do a little more work on them. Could you find out in London what military periodicals are published there? Just in case of need.
Page me39.460

Now I must go to the bookseller's if I am not to find it shut; let's hear from you soon.

Page Break me39.461
Page me39.461

Dronke, drunk as usual, was run over by a CAB, and is now in bed; will be confined to his room for some 8 or 10 days, otherwise nothing serious.
Page me39.461
I shall make inquiries about Otto.†a

Your
F.E.

Page me39.461
I hope your wife is well again.

Page me39.461
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

230
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.461
London, 13 June 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
Enclosed letters from Cluss which you needn't return since they have already been made known to the competent people and have been answered.
Page me39.461
The article on Silistria†b is splendid. The request made through Austria to Russia†549 that she promise to evacuate the Danubian principalities (the intention being to conclude an armistice and convene a congress in Vienna on the strength of that promise) was of purely Russian inspiration. At the same time it was assumed that Silistria would quickly fall into Russian hands. The English public had been prepared for this event by the entire ministerial press. HENCE Paskievich's haste. The resistance of the Turks at Silistria upset these calculations — just as happened to a similar plan that had matured the previous autumn.
Page me39.461
COLONEL Grach is an acquaintance of mine from Trier; not one of your Prussian instructors, but a talented ADVENTURER who went to Turkey as much as 19 or so years ago to seek his fortune.†550 A crapaud†c in the know tells me that Boichot, who was caught in

Page Break me39.462

Paris,†a had in fact been sent to France as a political emissary by Pyat's clique and not, as Pyat declares in execrable English in the Advertiser,†b to pay a visit to his old mother, whom he hadn't seen for 5 years. It's really repulsive the way the crapauds continually act out of character and remain addicted to these 'melodramatic' lies calculated to appeal to the hearts of the petty bourgeois. C'est dégoûtant.†c
Page me39.462

You will shortly have another consignment of Pioniers. Heinzen, of course, is ranting and roaring dreadfully about the defunct Reform, and has actually managed to trot out a quotation from Catullus, no doubt picked up from a school-book complete with crib. Also contains comical diatribes against Dulon. The great Ruge writes to them both, friend 'Dulon' and friend 'Heinzen'. He informs the latter of his grand design for the foundation of a free university in Cincinnati where Ruge intends to drone away agreeably the remainder of his days as rector magnificus in partibus.†d He can hardly wait to become a professor at last, something which, for all his servility, he was unable to 'wrest' from the Saxon Minister Lindenau or, before that, from the Prussian Minister Altenstein. 'Doctorates' will also be awarded in this glorified contrefaçon†e of a German university. All that is needed is dollars to the tune of 1,000,000 and 6 citizens of Cincinnati to administer the finances. In addition, a prospectus covering all disciplines. A wild omnium gatherum, mixtum compositum†f of headings from Hegel's Encyclopädie and the table of contents from Ersch and Gruber.†g E.g. General Linguistics. (Cf. Ersch and Gruber, Pott's article on the distribution of languages.) The following are to be excluded from professorial chairs: 1. Strauss and Bruno Bauer; 2. the 'Sophists' who make stuff and nonsense of philosophy; 3. not the doctrine of communism, but the 'vile personages who have betrayed the Republic and Liberty'.†551
Page me39.462

In one of his rotten letters Ruge extols 2 anonymous pamphlets on Palmerston — never, of course, suspecting that one of them originated with me.†h
Page me39.462

My wife is now confined to bed. Yesterday I at last managed to persuade her to call Dr Freund. As soon as she is at all fit to do so, he wants her to take a trip to Germany, which accords with the wishes of my mother-in-law†a and has been impossible hitherto only on financial grounds, but will have to be engineered somehow. The children are back at school today.

Page Break me39.463
Page me39.463

Dronke's bad luck†b is tragi-comical. The fellows seem to be playing havoc in Bradford.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.463
First published (except the last paragraph) in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

231
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.463
[Manchester,] 15 June 1854

Dear Marx,

Cluss' letter most amusing. I had wanted to write to you at greater length today, but now find it's too late, so will confine myself to telling you that I have not been able to finish by today, as I had intended, the article on relative strengths and Silistria's chances of relief. That would involve looking up a lot of old stuff and since anyhow, in view of your wife's illness, your greatest difficulty will be to have an article ready for Tuesday's steamer, I shall see what sort of a piece I can concoct for you by then.
Page me39.463

Heise, too, is ill now; I don't yet know what ails him, but he's said to be in bed and to have all sorts of pains in his chest. Pfänder got something in his eye which will prevent him from working for a couple of days. Bad luck everywhere, je n'y vois plus clair.†c Regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.463
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.464

232
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.464
London, 21 June 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Your letter arrived early enough, between 2 and 3. But since I had only waited until 2, and since I had to go out of town on domestic business and my wife saw from the accompanying letter†552 that the article couldn't be sent off as it stood, it is still here. I shall use it for my Friday's article,†553 but would ask you to write to me before then — quite briefly if you are short of time — about the following points:
Page me39.464

1. Is there anything new in the Turkish bulletins which appeared in yesterday's Daily News? Have you any more details about the events of 28 [May]-13 [June] (which is as far, I believe, as the latest, albeit fragmentary, reports go)?
Page me39.464

2. Is there anything of military significance about the operations on the Circassian coast? No doubt the news about Shamyl needs further confirmation.†554
Page me39.464

3. The entry of the Austrians into Wallachia; what can be said about it from the military point de vue?
Page me39.464

From the enclosed letter you will see that I'm over head and ears in bad luck. When my wife's illness was at its worst, the good Dr Freund kept away and sent me a bill for £26 with the request that a 'clear understanding' be reached regarding his 'professional relations' to myself. Since my wife was in a critical — and is still in a serious — condition, I was of course compelled to capitulate to the dear 'friend'†a and promise him in writing that I would pay £8 down at the end of this month and the rest by six weekly instalments. Had the fellow not attacked me so much á l'imprévu,†b he wouldn't have caught me napping like that. But what was I to do? I should have had to pay any other respectable doctor by the visit and anyhow, even were this possible, one can't change doctors like shirts in the middle of an illness, without first inquiring into their competence, etc.
Page me39.464

So I find myself in a FIX. I know that things are tight with you as well. Do you think Dronke might be able to advance me a few pounds for the instalment due at the end of this month? When he was here last, he gave me to understand that he could be approached at a time of real crisis. However, I'd like to have your opinion first. I must in any case pay the fellow the first instalment on the agreed date, and my bill in respect of the past months has already been drawn — all of it spent needless to say, since I had £12 to pay out for the household, and the total received was considerably reduced because of unwritten articles, besides which the chemist's bills alone swallowed up a large part of the budget.

Page Break me39.465
Page me39.465

At the end of this week, if my wife feels strong enough, she, the children and Lenchen are going to spend a fortnight at Mr Seiler's villa at Edmonton. She might then be so far restored by the country air as to manage the journey to Trier.
Page me39.465

I can assure you that these last petites miséres†a have turned me into A VERY DULL DOG.

Page me39.465
Beatus ille†b that hath no family.
Page me39.465
Vale faveque.†c

Your
K.M.

Page me39.465
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

233
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.465
[London,] 27 June 1854

Dear Engels,
I should be grateful if you would write to Dronke forthwith. Even if I manage to get the later instalments deferred, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to do so in the case of the first one, which falls due at the end of the month. A further 8-10 days at the very outside, if I write to Freund saying my bill [of exchange] has not yet arrived.

Page Break me39.466
Page me39.466
I am sending only these few lines, as I am in the midst of concocting my article.†a I was unable to write earlier because of the TROUBLES and the to-ing and fro-ing, etc., occasioned by the FAMILY exodus to Seiler's.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.466
Your letter received today.†555

Page me39.466
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

234
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.466
[Manchester,] Thursday, 6 July 1854

Dear Marx,

I hope the £5 arrived. Enclosed an article for tomorrow, which covers the first phase of the war.†b

Page me39.466

If the fellows are really going to send French troops to the Baltic, they must at least take [the] Åland [Islands]. That would be the best thing.

Page me39.466

Enclosed a hymn. Query:

1. What century?
2. Who wrote it?

Page me39.466

Reply by return, please.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.466
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.467

235
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.467
[London,] 7 July 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

You must excuse me for not having acknowledged receipt of the £5 before. This was due to much TROUBLE at home, since my wife is leaving for Trier tomorrow, an undertaking which has called for indescribable efforts.
Page me39.467
Your article†a arrived just when I myself was concocting a scrawl on Spain.†b I shall therefore put your article by until Tuesday,†c the more so since Pieper is available to act as my secretary on Fridays, while on Tuesdays I now have no one to do the writing.
Page me39.467
I had not yet had time to look at the poem. I shan't be free till after 6, when I shall send you an answer either by telegram or city post.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.467
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.468

236
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.468
Manchester, 20 July 1854

Dear Marx,
To judge by your total silence you must either be hard at work or making tremendous EFFORTS to raise money. En attendant†a I would inform you that, after the brother of Dronke's principal†b has been to Bradford, Dronke will be in a position to shell out some money — just how much, it is impossible to say, but about £3 or £4. The brother arrives this week, so you should be able to rely on it in, say, 3 weeks' time.
Page me39.468
Naut has been in London, here and in Bradford and, until he ran into Dronke in the street, had kept out of everyone's way. Dronke says he is hellish slack; apparently he — Naut — only saw Daniels once or twice in the street and doesn't even know whether he's living in Cologne or out in the country. Bürgers and a tailor — who, he was unable to say — are in Glatz and said to be quite well, and Becker is in Weichselmünde.†556 Otherwise all Naut could find to say was that it would be fine if in Prussia they could have a constitution like the one in England.
Page me39.468

Dronke, by the way, has got himself into a serious scrape, so that the money may not be forthcoming after all. For when he was here 4 or 6 weeks ago he got drunk and, at one o'clock in the morning or thereabouts, made a grab at a female in the street; she, a married, middle-class woman, boxed his ears, whereupon he KNOCKED her DOWN. True, Dronke's own version of the story is slightly different, but that is what seems to have happened. The husband arrived on the scene and went to fetch the police, who didn't want to get mixed up in it. The business was protracted by Dronke's spurious excuses and now he has finally received an ATTORNEY'S letter demanding an APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION, failing which the FOREIGNER is to be made an example of. Since Buckup's brother is just due to come, you can imagine the situation. We shall try and reach an accommodation, but it will probably cost money. Keep the matter under your hat, by the way, otherwise I'll have instant trouble with the little man, since Imandt will promptly write to him about it; in general, by no means everything I write to you is intended for the crew at large.

Page Break me39.469
Page me39.469
In other ways it suits me very well that the swank and swagger of the Heise-Dronke-Imandt trio should come to an inglorious end, for otherwise one would get no respite from these people with their rumbustious drunken contentiousness. Heise, at any rate, has his SETTLER in the shape of a crooked finger which he will probably retain for the rest of his days, and Dronke, too, has doubtless had enough.

SO NO MORE FROM YOUR AFFECTIONATE
F.E.

Page me39.469
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

237
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.469
[London,] 22 July 1854

Dear Engels,
The alternative reason you suggest for my long silence†a is the correct one. It would certainly have been preferable had swotting been the obstacle. I added another £3 to the 5 so as to pay the 'friend'†b the first instalment and I also needed about £8 for my wife's trip, which could no longer be postponed and which called for all manner of new equipment, since she could naturally not arrive in Trier looking shabby. These extraordinary expenses again brought me into conflict with my permanent and 'decent' creditors AND SO FORTH. 'It's the old, old story.'†c

Page me39.469

Not a sign of life from Cluss for four weeks now.

Page me39.469

Que dites-vous de l'Espagne?†d†557

Page me39.469

I must now quite definitely do something further on the military situation in Turkey. Firstly: The mess in Asia. Secondly: What I have been able to glean from the French Press concerning the latest developments on the Danube, though for lack of a map I have no idea whether or not the names are right: Between the 7th and the morning of the 8th there was a battle with the 30,000 strong Russian corps under Soimonov and Khrulov (or should it be e instead of o?). On the evening of the 7th, Khrulov had taken up position to the north of Giurgevo. During the night several Turkish corps passed above and below the town and advanced on the Russians from the rear, with the result that at daybreak Khrulov was compelled to break through, incurring severe casualties in the process. The Russians withdrew, though not in line. One element made for Frateshti, another for Calugemeni (?),†a another eastwards for the Argish. There they took up positions and on the 9th and 10th Selim Pasha and Iskander Bey are said to have carried out a successful attack on the Russians in Frateshti. On the 9th Gorchakov moved to Dzurdzuma (?) with 20,000 men and has been bringing in fresh troops daily. His positions: On the left bank of the Argish, the crossings over which have been fortified at Fulojci (?), Falastock (?), Korotzani (?) and Prczietsheni (?). Positions of the Russian army as a whole: Left wing from Kimpolung and Kimpina (?) along the Argish to Braila and Galatz. Turks: From Kalafat through Turna, Giurgevo to Oltenitza and (?) Kalarash. From Turna to Islaz. Here Selim Pasha in contact with Iskander Bey. Main corps at Giurgevo, corps above Giurgevo constitutes an advanced post on the left of the Argish, Oltenitza and Silistria. Thirdly: The total strength of the Russian army, from an article in The Morning Chronicle†b; but contrary to the article I estimate a battalion at no more than 550 men.

Page Break me39.470

Infantry.

3 divisions of 3rd corps				(Osten-Sacken)
3	“	“	4th “	(Dannenberg I)
2	“	“	5th “	Lüders

---

8 divisions = 16 brigades = 128 battalions
Total approx. 71,000 men

Cavalry. 3 divisions of light cavalry

1 " " " dragoons

---

128 squadrons each of 120 men, over 15,000
Artillery. 46 batteries (each of 10 guns = 460)
" " ([each of] 8 guns = 368)
Servicing crews and drivers =12,000 (?)

Page Break me39.471
In addition: 10 regiments of Cossack regulars with 40 guns, 3 battalions of sappers, train with pontoons or reserve parks. ALL IN ALL:

128 battalions of infantry = 71,000
3 battalions of sappers2,000
128 squadrons 15,000
40 pieces of artillery 13,000 train 3,000
Cossacks 8,000
Wall[achian] militia 6,000

Total 118,000

Fourthly: Items which cannot be treated humorously without a map: the hitherto snail-like progress of the French and English who, it would seem, will not cross the Danube. For what purpose has St-Arnaud ordered his troops to march from Adrianople to Burgas in the present heat? The noble fellow would seem to be perpetually shuttling to and fro between Constantinople and this place or that, simply for the sake of the travelling expenses. What is the truth realiter†a about the English commissariat in Varna, Devna, etc.?
Page me39.471
If you no longer have time to write me an article for Tuesday,†b at least send me a few notes which I can use.
Page me39.471
Apropos. About the poem.†c It probably derives from Gottfried, hight Kinkel, or else from a Silesian poet of the school of Opitz, or was it composed by Heise himself?
Page me39.471
I enclose a manuscript snatched from a young writer; show it to no one but Lupus. Who is this young writer?
Page me39.471
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.471

First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.472

238
MARX TO ENGELS†84
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.472
[London,] 27 July 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Je vous attends†a for Tuesday.†558 How very boastful Mr Herbert was. This same Herbert was Vorontsov's brother-in-law and at the same time English SECRETARY AT WAR. The way the English brag as though Nasmyth and Butler had held Silistria 'single-handed' is grotesque. Have you read about Monday evening's session, when Disraeli so neatly punctured LITTLE JOHN'S†b and the Times' 'Sevastopol' BUBBLE with one prick of the needle?†559

Page me39.472

I am, hélas,†c once again saddled with Pieper who looks like a HALF-STARVED sucking pig seethed in milk, after having lived for a fortnight with a whore he describes as un bijou.†d He has frittered away some £20 in a fortnight and now both his purses are equally depleted. In this heat it is a bore to have the fellow hanging around one du matin jusqu'au soir et du soir jusqu'au matin.†e And it disrupts one's work.

Page me39.472

On Saturday†f I got the following note from Papa Tucker:

* 'Dear Sir, There is a pretty brisk demand for the “Fly-Sheets”†541 just now. Could you send me some articles from the Tribune that could suit the taste of the public? The third on Palmerston would move the other two.†g Faithfully Yours E. Tucker.'*

Page me39.472

Incidentally I have also heard from Freiligrath that that rogue Trübner is advertising these 'Fly-Sheets' under his imprint. You will note that he asks for 'ARTICLES FROM THE TRIBUNE' in order once AGAIN to evade the question of money. Now, 1. So far as he is concerned, not one copy of the Tribune is to be had anywhere in London, since it is sent only to subscribers and back numbers cannot even be ordered from New York; 2. Without substantial additions, none of the articles would now suit. Now I must clear up the matter with the fellow and this 'easy-going' relationship must end. If he is agreeable, and you for your part approve, I would suggest the following:

Page Break me39.473
Page me39.473
1. Of the Tribune articles, I shall give him (for publication) the critique of the 'SECRET CORRESPONDENCE'.†a For this Dronke would only have to send me the 2nd article on this, which was detained by the Post Office here. The latter gratis, 2 and 3 to be paid for in cash and on delivery of the MSS, namely.
Page me39.473
2. A GENERAL pamphlet on Palmerston, beginning with my introduction in the Tribune†b to which I should, however, add a new middle and ending.
Page me39.473
3. A pamphlet that I would have to write in collaboration with you, i.e. on England's DIPLOMACY and MILITARY ACTION since war was declared. The articles which have appeared in the Tribune will provide us with material for both these aspects. If you agree to 3, the question arises:
Page me39.473
How much do we ask?
Page me39.473
After all, my articles do seem to sell better than Urquhart's who is 'happy' if his stuff in the Advertiser is accepted by Tucker for the 'Fly-Sheets'.
Page me39.473
If you agree with all this — (Nos. 2 and 3 would, of course, have to be pungent enough TO PRODUCE A REAL SENSATION in London; moreover, such is the footing we are on with Tucker that we can write anything we choose without worrying about English prejudices) — then compose a letter for me putting these proposals to Mr Tucker. Not being sufficiently adept in business matters, I have deliberately avoided answering him either orally or in writing. But no time is to be lost.
Page me39.473
A book that has interested me greatly is Thierry's Histoire de la formation et du progrés du Tiers État, 1853.†560 It is strange how this gentleman, le pére†c of the 'class struggle' in French historiography, inveighs in his Preface against the 'moderns' who, while also perceiving the antagonism between bourgeoisie and proletariat, purport to discover traces of such opposition as far back as the history of the tiers-état†d prior to 1789. He is at great pains to show that the tiers-état comprises all social ranks and estates save the noblesse and clergé and that the bourgeoisie plays the role of representative of all these other elements. Quotes, for example, from Venetian embassy reports:

Page Break me39.474
'Questi che si chiamano li stati del regno sono di tre ordini di persone, cioé del clero, della nobiltá, e del restante di quelle persone che, per voce commune, si puó chiamare popolo' [Thierry, Histoire..., Vol. I, p. III].†a

Page me39.474
Had Mr Thierry read our stuff, he would know that the decisive opposition between bourgeoisie and peuple does not, of course, crystallise until the former ceases, as tiers-état, to oppose the clergé and the noblesse. But as for the 'racines dans l'histoire ... d'un antagonisme né d'hier',†b his book provides the best proof that the origin of the 'racines' coincided with the origin of the tiers-état. By the same token, this otherwise intelligent critic would have to conclude from the 'Senatus populusque Romanus'†c that in Rome there was never any opposition save that between the senatus and the populus. I was interested to discover from the documents he quotes that the term 'catalla, capitalia', capital, came into being with the rise of the communes. He has, by the by, unwittingly demonstrated that the victory of the French bourgeoisie was delayed by nothing so much as the fact that it did not decide until 1789 to make COMMON CAUSE with the peasants. Although he does not generalise, he depicts very nicely, 1. how from the beginning, or at least since the rise of the towns, the French bourgeoisie has gained undue influence by constituting itself a parliament, bureaucracy, etc., and not, as in England, by commerce and industrie alone. This undoubtedly holds true even of present-day France. 2. From his account it may be readily shown how the class rises as the various forms in which its centre of gravity has lain at different times are ruined and with them the different sections whose influence derives from these forms. In my view, this sequence of metamorphoses leading up to the domination of the class has never before been thus presented — at least so far as the material is concerned. In regard to the maîtrises, jurandes,†d etc., in short, the forms, in which the industrial bourgeoisie develops, he has, alas, restricted himself almost wholly to general, and generally known, phrases, despite the fact that here too he alone is familiar with the material. What he successfully elaborates and underlines is the conspiratorial and revolutionary nature of the municipal movement in the twelfth century. The German Emperors, e.g. Frederick I and Frederick II, issued edicts against these 'communiones',

Page Break me39.475
'conspirationes' 'conjurationes'†a in very much the same spirit as the German Federal Diet.†561 E.g. in 1226 Frederick II takes it upon himself to declare null and void all 'consulats'†b and other free municipal bodies in the towns of Provence:

'Pervenit nuper ad notitiam nostram quod quarumdam civitatum, villarum et aliorum locorum universitates ex†c proprio motu constituerunt juridictiones, potestates' (Potestad), 'consulatus, regimina et alia quaedam statuta ... et cum jam apud quasdam ... in abusum et pravam consuetudinem inoleverunt ... nos ex imperiali auctoritate tam juridictiones etc. atque concessiones super his, per comites Provinciae et Forcalquerii ab eis obtentas, ex certa scientia revocamus, et inania esse censemus' [II, 87].†d

Page me39.475
Further:

Conventiculas quoque omnes et conjurationes in civitatibus et extra ... inter civitatem et civitatem et inter personam et personam seu inter civitatem et personam, omnibus modis fieri prohibemus.' (Constitutio pacis Frederici I.)†e
Page me39.475
'Quod nulla civitas, nullum oppidum, communiones, constitutiones, colligationes, confederationes vel conjurationes aliquas, quocumque nomine censeantur, facere possent;

et quod nos, sine domini sui assensu, civitatibus seu oppidis in regno nostro constitutis, auctoritatem faciendi communiones, constitutiones ... conjurationes aliquas, quaecumque nomina imponantur eisdem, non poteramus nec debebamus impertiri.' (Henrici regis sententia contra communiones civitatum.) [II, 86]†f

Page me39.475

Is that not the raide†g German professorial style to the life — the very same which later graced the fulminations of the 'Central Commission of the Confederation'†562? In Germany, the 'commune jurée'†h penetrated no further than Trier where, in 1161, the Emperor Frederick I put a stop to it:

Page Break me39.476

'Communio quoque civium Trevirensium, quae et conjuratio dicitur, quam nos in civitate destruximus ... quae et postea, sicut audivimus, reiterata est, cassetur et in irritum revocetur.' [II, 88]†a

Page me39.476

The policy pursued by the German emperors was exploited by the French rois†b who secretly supported 'conjurationes' and 'communiones' in Lorraine, Alsace, the Dauphiné, Franche-Comté, the Lyonnais, etc., thus alienating them from the German Empire:

'Sicut ad culminis nostri pervenit notitiam, rex Franciae ... sinceritatem fidei vestrae molitur corrumpere.' (Rodolphus I, epistula ad cives de Besançon.) [II, 94]†c

Page me39.476

The very same policy was used by the fellows to make Italian cities Guelphic.†563

Page me39.476

It's funny how the word 'communio' is often reviled in just the same way as communism nowadays. Thus, for example, the priest Guibert of Nogent writes:

'Communio, novum ac pessimum nomen.'†d

Page me39.476

There's often something rather pathetic about the way in which the twelfth-century philistines invite the peasants to take refuge in the towns, the communio jurata. As, for instance, in the Charter of St Quentin:

'Eux' (the burghers of St Quentin) 'jurérent ensement chescun quemune ayde á son juré et quemun conseil et quemune détenanche et quemune deffense. Ensement nous avons establi que quiconque en notre quemune entrera et ayde du sien nous donra, soit pour cause de fuite ou de paour des anemis ou de autre forfait ... en le quemune entrer porra, car la porte est ouverte á tous; et se son seigneur á tort ses choses aura détenu et ne le voudra détenir á droit, nous en exécuterons justice.' [II, 135]†e

Your
K.M.

Page me39.476
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.477

239
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.477
[London,] 8 August 1854

Dear Frederic,
I have duly received your war 'OBSERVATIONS'†a and incorporated them IN TODAY'S LETTER.†b
Page me39.477
If you can possibly see your way to getting hold of some money for me I would urgently request you to do so. The £11 extra expenditure incurred over the past 6 weeks has plunged me into the utmost DESTITUTION. Moreover, Pieper, who is sans sou,†c has been living and eating here all that time and will certainly be staying for another 2-3 weeks. C'est dur.†d
Page me39.477
Did you see in the papers that the 2 Turkish officers sent to that 'great' democrat Shamyl Bey by the Asiatic army were accompanied by COLONEL Bangya?

Your
K.M.

Page me39.477
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.478

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.478
[London,] 26 August 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

My wife got back on Wednesday,†a quite well. In the Fatherland, she tells me, everyone is down in the dumps on account of the 'uncertain conditions'.

Page me39.478

I cannot imagine what has become of Cluss. The fellow hasn't written for months. Perhaps it's too hot over there.

Page me39.478

It is a very good thing that you are rid of Heise. I don't see that a 'loafer' of this sort can be of any interest. I have not, of course, seen Imandt's correspondence with Dronke and Heise, but I do know that, if he takes part in their childish nonsense, he does so at most in a 'theoretical' sense. Down here, Imandt lives the life of a sober, hard-working citizen.

Page me39.478

I have heard from Lassalle who announces triumphantly that the Hatzfeldt woman's 7, or rather 8, years' war is now over.†355 Enfin!†b 'Victory' for the old woman, who would appear to have emerged from the campaign with her virtue and, what is more, her money bags, 'vierge'.†c Lassalle now intends to move his domicile to Berlin, but has already heard talk about difficulties with the police.

Page me39.478

Meyer writes to tell me that the trial of the Berlin demagogues†564 (in which Gottfried's Gottfried played a part) has been quashed by the court in Berlin (which, he doesn't say), 'because Hentze, the principal witness for the prosecution, was ”questionable”'. Qu'en dis-tu?†d

Page me39.478

I have also had a letter from Miquel in Paris. He intended to come here but first he had cholera and then a haemorrhage, whereupon his doctors suggested that he had better drop the idea of sea travel and make for home overland with all dispatch. Bad luck.

Page me39.478

Cherval, who under the name of 'Crämer' — this time the real name was the pseudonym — had diverse experiences in Switzerland, inter alia engraving plates for Mr Vogt, who had taken him under his wing, is now living in Paris. I have his address.

Page Break me39.479

Page me39.479

Daniels has been seriously ill for months and it seems doubtful whether he'll pull through.

Page me39.479

Reports, particularly in the Débats, suggest that there is a state of splendid anarchy in Spain. So far as I can gather from the papers, the Polish and Hungarian émigrés in the Turkish Asiatic army do nothing but engage in mischief, place-seeking and petty intrigues. Toujours les mêmes.†a

Page me39.479
Vale faveque.†b

Totus tuus†c
K.M.

Page me39.479
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

241
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.479
[London,] 2 September 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
So now you're a member of the Exchange, and ALTOGETHER RESPECTABLE. MY GRATULATIONS. Some time I should like to hear you howling amidst that pack of wolves.
Page me39.479
Heise has written to Imandt, telling him that factory people — where I don't know (nor does he say whether they're workers or manufacturers) — have banded together to appoint him their COMMON INSTRUCTOR, and that he can count on getting £2 a week. Tant mieux pour lui.†d
Page me39.479
My wife — as I had good reason to fear before she left — IS RATHER IN TOO INTERESTING CIRCUMSTANCES, otherwise well.
Page me39.479
Cluss has written again at last. I enclose his letter.
Page me39.479
Has your old man arrived yet?
Page me39.479
It is probably time we said something in the Tribune about military events in Asia. I have made a bit of a howler. In one of my recent LETTERS I declared the NEWS of the total defeat of the Turks at Kars to be a Vienna

Page Break me39.480

INVENTION.†565 True, the telegraphic dispatch was wrong, but it was nevertheless based on fact.†a
Page me39.480
My PRINCIPAL STUDY is now SPAIN. So far I have swotted up, mainly from Spanish sources, the 1808-14 and the 1820-23 periods. Am now coming to the years 1834-43. The thing is not without complexity. It is rather more difficult to discover exactly the springs behind developments. At any rate I made a timely start with Don Quixote.†b The whole thing will amount to about 6 articles for the Tribune, if much condensed.†566 At least it may be counted a step forward that AT THIS MOMENT ONE'S STUDIES are paid for.

Page me39.480
Unfortunately the Library†c is closed from 1-7 September. Apart from other advantages, it's the only cool place in London.
Page me39.480
Entre nous,†d Dronke, for want of other 'intellectual' stimulus, is busily engaged in investigating 'Steffen' and, in his letters to Imandt, tears him to pieces in an attempt to render him politically 'suspect'. I had no difficulty in convincing Imandt of the total absurdity of Dronke's mischievous cavilling. C'est absurde.†e I consider that in Steffen our [party] has made a very good acquisition. He has character and education. His views on comparative geography, in which he has specialised, are quite original. Unfortunately a manuscript in which he elaborated his ideas on the subject was left behind in Cologne.
Page me39.480
What is Lupus doing? Miquel didn't come over from Paris as intended because, having had 2 attacks of cholera followed by a haemorrhage, he was finally ordered by the doctors to make his way back to Germany overland with all dispatch.
Page me39.480
Vale faveque.†f

K.M.

Page me39.480
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.481

Page me39.481

London, 13 September 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Once again I must come knocking at your door, much though I detest doing so, but compelled by PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT. I cannot draw my bills for a few weeks yet, since IN CONSEQUENCE OF some unpleasantness he has had with Bischoffsheim in this connection, Freiligrath is no longer drawing bills of less than £25. On the whole, too, this is preferable, for while the constant drawing of small sums may cover the dette flottante,†a the fixed debt increases. On top of that, I shall have to deduct £8 for Freund from the next bill since, under the present CIRCUMSTANCES, my wife will need rather more care. The EXTRAORDINARY MEANS to which the family is wont to resort at times of crisis are AGAIN exhausted and, just as in the case of the Spanish Budget everything is in pawn.

Page me39.481

By the by, as regards the 'budget' en général, I have reduced total indebtedness to under £50, i.e. about £30 less than it was at the beginning of the year. From this you can see that there have been some great financial sleights of hand. If a NEGOTIATION I have initiated with Lassalle succeeds, and he lends me £30, and you lend me the remainder, I would at last be independent again and reorganise all my domestic arrangements, whereas at present I have to pay out 25 per cent to the pawnshop alone, and in general am never able to get things in order because of arrears. As has once again been demonstrated in Trier, nothing will be achieved with my mater†567 until I can go and importune her in person.

Page me39.481

Dans ce moment†b the total absence of money is the more horrible — quite apart from the fact that FAMILY WANTS do not cease for an instant — as Soho is a choice district for cholera, the MOB is croaking right and left (e.g. an average of 3 per house in Broad Street), and 'victuals'†568 are the best defence against the beastly thing.

Page Break me39.482

Page me39.482

So much for that. I am sending this letter to your private address because some strange combination of circumstances could cause precisely this by no means edifying epistle to fall into the wrong hands at your office.

Page me39.482

As regards the Asiatic business, a considerable stir has been made here by the dispatches from that theatre of operations in The Morning Chronicle, which have also been reproduced in The Observer and other weeklies.†a

Page me39.482

I don't know whether the news about the Zouaves' cry 'A bas les singes! Il nous faut Lamoriciére!'†b has penetrated as far as Manchester. Espinasse, the first victim of this agitation, has been recalled to France.†569

Page me39.482

The party has been having a run of bad luck. Steffen has lost his post in Brighton through the bankruptcy of the schoolmaster in whose establishment he was employed. It is questionable whether he will manage to get the salary already due to him. Pieper has lost his post as correspondent to the Union, since Mr Pierce has likewise gone bankrupt, and his papers get no more money for foreign correspondents. MacGowan, Jones' printer and source of credit, has died of cholera. A blow for Jones. ALL THIS IS NOT VERY PLEASANT.

Page me39.482

I don't remember muck about Imandt. To inquire into it further would only make matters worse. But henceforward I shall break off the moment the gentleman makes any 'reference' to Dronke. Dronke ne vaut pas la peine d'en parler.†c

Your
K.M.

Page me39.482

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.483

243

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.483

London, 22 September 1854

Dear Frederic,

Just a few lines in much haste to acknowledge due receipt. Also of your letter ON THE ASIATIC WAR on Tuesday.†570

Page me39.483

I have had some very important dispatches from America which I shall send you with my next letter. Je vous attends†a ON TUESDAY.†571

Page me39.483

That fat swine Püttmann has been shipped off from here to Australia as a 'colonist', together with FAMILY.

Page me39.483

Ebner has gone mad in Frankfurt. Pauvre diable.†b

Page me39.483

Ernest Jones has found a new printer on cheaper terms. Disraeli has written to tell him that he will bring up all Chartist petitions in Parliament.

Page me39.483
The cholera epidemic, now much abated, is said to have been particularly severe in our district because the sewers made in June, July and August, were driven through the pits where those who died of the plague 1668 (? I think) were buried.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.483
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

244
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.483
London, 29 September 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
The enclosed letter from Dana will tell you about the American crisis AS FAR AS I AM AFFECTED BY IT. Upon my demanding that all or nothing should appear under my name, they replied by confining me solely to EDITORIAL ARTICLES at half the previous rate. For the time being I have written to Dana telling him that I have not yet reached any decision†572 but shall IN THE MEANWHILE go on as before sending 2 articles a week, because of the Sevastopol business,†573 on the one hand, and of my SKETCHES of the Spanish Revolution in the nineteenth century on the other, which must be completed before the Cortes meets. In the meantime we can consider what definite answer to give the gentlemen.

Page Break me39.484
Page me39.484
I cannot write more than this today since I am busy just now dictating my article,†574 but should have written to you at greater length had you not announced last Tuesday week that I would be getting a 'long' letter,†575 which I have been waiting for in order to reply to it.
Page me39.484
Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me39.484
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

245
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.484
London, 10 October†a 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

D'abord mes compliments†b on your exceedingly GLORIOUS and SOUND CRITICISM.†c It's a pity that this 'fait d'armes'†d couldn't have been accomplished in the London Press. A coup of this nature would have assured your position in that field.
Page me39.484

Quant á notre bon†e St-Arnaud who took good care to die at the right moment, I gave the Tribune a detailed biography of him†576 MONTHS AGO. Of this fellow it may assuredly be said: 'Non bis in idem.'†f

Page Break me39.485
Page me39.485

How to explain: 1. that the English failed to station a group of warships off the Yenikale Straits in sufficient strength to prevent the Russians crossing from Anapa, etc.? Was it not perfectly possible, indeed imperative under PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES, to gain control of the SEA OF AZOV with small vessels in order to cut off all reinforcements by water?
Page me39.485

2. Should not a diversion in the direction of Bessarabia have been made (by Omer Pasha) to prevent the Russians from bringing reinforcements into the Crimea from that quarter? Can negligence on this score be explained otherwise than by Anglo-Austrian diplomatic trickery?
Page me39.485

I believe, OF COURSE, that diplomacy on the part of military commanders ceases as soon as they find themselves in a mousetrap as in the Crimea. But in all that concerns the plan as a whole, I do not believe that Palmerston has as yet ceased for one moment to evince at least his 'good will'.
Page me39.485

In one of its recent issues, the Tribune is congratulated by my rival, A.P.C.,†a for its 'SPLENDID CHARACTERISATION' of Espartero.†b The man, of course, has no idea that he is 'complimenting' me, but at the same time a sure instinct has led him to take HOLD of a VERY SILLY concluding sentence that belongs exclusively to the Tribune.†577 Incidentally, they had deleted every one of my jokes about constitutional heroes en général, suspecting that, lurking behind the 'Monk-Lafayette-Espartero' trio, were certain sarcasms aimed at the noble 'Washington'. The paper's uncritical attitude is horrifying. First, they extolled Espartero as the ONLY STATESMAN OF SPAIN. Then they took my articles,†c which treat him if anything as a comic character, and added: From this one can see that nothing is to be expected of Spain. Then, when they got the first article on Spain — mere prolegomena leading up to 1808 — they believed it to constitute the whole and accordingly added on a completely heterogeneous but well-meaning conclusion urging the Spaniards to show themselves worthy of the Tribune's confidence.†578 How they will handle subsequent instalments, I do not know.
Page me39.485

Liebknecht, as you know, has been vacillating most despondently between an Englishwoman who wanted to marry him and a German woman†d in Germany whom he wanted to marry. At last the German descended on him and he married her, — in a religious as well as a civil ceremony. Both of them seem very down-in-the-mouth. His job goes west, since the people are moving away. He spent a wretched honeymoon at No. 14 Church Street in a house where he got himself heavily in debt. But who forced the ass to get married — at this of all times since he was perfectly aware of all these circumstances. The woman had in the meantime already become engaged to someone else in Germany, so at any rate the case was by no means a pressing one.

Page Break me39.486
Page me39.486

If you want to read something really funny you must try and get hold of Saturday's Morning Advertiser, in which the LICENSED VICTUALLERS take the present editorial board of that POTHOUSE PAPER to court.†a Prosecution and defence both equally amusing. The first was conducted by Mr Foster who once figured as a BARRISTER in Baron Nicholson's court.†579 All the thanks Urquhart got for having extolled the LICENSED as England's party above parties were hard words and his dismissal. Never, by the way, has the curtain been raised quite so much to reveal the innermost squalor of the SHOP-KEEPER'S soul.
Page me39.486

I suppose you haven't seen Bruno Bauer's L'Arrogance des pouvoirs occidentaux?†b I haven't yet managed to lay hands on it either.
Page me39.486

Should anything important happen in the military department before Friday,†c send me something to be going on with, for in that case the Spanish article, if it is to be ACCEPTABLE, will have to be preceded by a Russian one.†580
Page me39.486

I look forward to a letter from you soon.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.486
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.487

246
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.487
London, 17 October 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Your enumeration of the Russian armed forces made today is FORMIDABLE.†a BUT THERE REMAINS THIS ONE QUESTION TO BE ANSWERED, whether, even by exerting themselves to the utmost, they were capable of sending more than 200,000 men outside their own country. I am aware of no such instance.
Page me39.487

From the standpoint of the old policy, — and what else do England and France advocate, even though the English Ministry is not in-earnest and Napoleon III a caricature —, a distinction must be drawn between the interests of England and those of France. With the destruction of the Russian fleet in the Black Sea and the Baltic and the Russians driven out of the Crimea, the Caucasus and the provinces they had filched from Persia and Turkey, England would have ensured her supremacy at sea and her hegemony over the most cultivated part of Asia for another 50 years. It would then be just like her old self to let the continentals exhaust themselves in a seven years' and other wars — whose main theatre would be Germany and, to some extent, Italy — and, at the end of the struggle, see neither Russia nor Austria nor France supreme on the Continent. For France, on the other hand, the real struggle would only begin with the destruction of Russia's sea-power and her influence in South Asia. She would be under all the greater compulsion to break Russia's power on land in order to extend her own power on the Continent, and thus be able to cast a corresponding weight onto the scales against England. Is there any guarantee that, once England has destroyed the Russians in the BALTIC and the BLACK SEA and rendered them innocuous to herself, revolutions won't break out on the Continent and be used by England as a pretext for another official alliance with Russia against the Continent?
Page me39.487

However, the real joke is that none of the Englishmen now in power — neither Chathams nor Pitts Jun., AND NOT EVEN Wellingtons — seriously pursue even the destruction of Russian sea-power and Russian influence in Turkey-Persia-Caucasus. If their HALF and HALF MEASURES compel them to do so, they may consider going so far; but their half-measures and villainy will probably land them in trouble, which will provoke MOVEMENTS here at home.

Page Break me39.488
Page me39.488

The following passages, quoted from the Archives des Affaires Étrangéres in Paris — relating to the Seven Years' War†581 — show how English Ministers colluded with the enemy actually during the campaign and in matters relating to it. On 24 June 1762 the French Pompadour marshal Soubise,†a when encamped at Wilhelmstal, had allowed himself to be surprised by the English, Prussian, Hanoverian, etc., allies and driven back across the Fulda. For parliamentary and dynastic reasons, Lord Bute, George III's Prime Minister, desired peace, but, in view of the nation's bellicose mood and its bias in favour of Frederick II, could not propose peace so long as the French persisted in letting themselves be beaten and in retreating instead of advancing. Choiseul, as you know, was then Minister of Foreign Affairs IN FRANCE. In authentic publications from the French archives, which I quote verbatim, we find:

'Aprés l'affaire du 24 Juin les ministres anglais écrivirent á M. de Choiseul: Vous vous laissez battre et nous ne pouvons plus faire la paix, nous n'oserions pas la proposer au parlement. M. de Choiseul, désolé de voir rompue la négociation, engage le roi á écrire á M. de Soubise: “Mon cousin, je vous écris la présente, qu'aussitôt que vous l'aurez reçue vous passiez la riviére du Fulde et que vous attaquiez les ennemis, sans compter sur les dispositions qui vous conviendront et quelque soit le succés, vous n'en serez pas responsable. Sur ce je prie Dieu etc.” M. de Choiseul écrivit: “La lettre du roi, M. le Maréchal, est trop formelle pour que j'aie rien á y ajouter. Mais je puis vous dire que quand l'armée du roi serait détruite jusqu'au dernier homme et qu'il fût obligé d'enlever une nouvelle, Sa Majesté n'en serait effrayée.'”†b

Page Break me39.489
Page me39.489

Here, then, we have the English Ministry demanding outright that an allied army, subsidised by them and consisting partly of Englishmen, should be buffeted by the French. They had earlier meddled in French military operations in the opposite direction because George wanted his Hanover to be spared. For in the same extraits†a we read:

'En 1762 Mrs. d'Estrées et de Soubise ont commandé l'armée du haut Rhin de 150 000 hommes, établie en Hesse, á Goettinguen, Mulhouse et Eisenach; Mr. de Condé a commandé celle du bas Rhin de 30 000 hommes. La cour ne leur demandait que de conserver Cassel de Goettinguen jusqu'á la fin du novembre, d'évacuer ces deux places á cette époque pour se retirer sur l'Ohm en mettant Ziegenhayn en avant de leur premiére ligne. Ce plan de guerre avec puissance égale, avec 180 000 contre 80 000 serait extraordinaire, s'il n'avait pas été fondé sur la promesse, que le ministére anglais nous faisait de conclure la paix avant le mois de juillet, si nous ne ferions point d'incursions dans le Hanovre.'†b

Page me39.489

This latter piece of meddling by London might, at most, be regarded as normal, had the warring powers been on the point of entering into peace negotiations; the first case, on the other hand, would have cost Lord Bute his head and George, such was the mood at the time (THINK ONLY OF WILKES' AND JUNIUS'†c LETTERS†582), his throne but, comme toujours,†d it was almost A CENTURY before the matter came to light. We encounter another such example just before the outbreak of the ANTI-JACOBIN WAR†583 when the 'liberal' Fox sent a secret emissary†e to Catherine II telling her not to be misled by Pitt's threats, but to gobble up Poland at her leisure for, should Pitt try to go to war against Russia, he would be brought down.†584 True, Fox was then in the 'opposition' and not the Ministry, and I adduce this example simply as evidence that the 'OUTS' are no less honourable than the 'INS'.

Page me39.489

Hence I believe that, in assessing the allies' conduct of the war — as indeed you infer from time to time in your articles — the exchanges between Downing Street (especially as long as Palmerston is there) and Petersburg MUST always BE CONSIDERED. I AM SURE that, as soon as the armies find themselves in a critical position, the generals will sh... on the Cabinet and do their best, since Messrs the generals are seldom or never let into secrets and even risk their necks — witness the example of Admiral Byng,†585 whose instructions from the Admiralty of the day were no less deplorable than those of e.g. Dundas now.

Page Break me39.490

Page me39.490

I shall try to get hold of Bauer's latest production†a and send it to you.

Page me39.490

I don't know whether Napier†b and other historians of the Franco-Spanish war have presented in its true light a fact for which there is ample proof in Spanish works, namely that, right up to the end of the war, apart from a brief spell when Napoleon himself was in command in Spain,†586 a fully organised republican conspiracy existed in the French army, aimed at overthrowing Napoleon and restoring the republic. Apropos. Authentic sources suggest that the great 'Mina y Espoz'†c was an egregious rogue, inferior to Joh. Becker, NO MILITARY TALENT AT ALL, but cunning, worldly-wise and avant tout voleur.†d A careful study of Spanish revolutionary history reveals that it has taken the fellows some 40 years to subvert the material basis of the priesthood and the aristocracy, but that during this time they have also succeeded in completely revolutionising the old social order. Incidentally, the provisional governments, etc., there show about as much sense as in France, etc. Considering the hot-bloodedness of the whole race and their indifference to bloodshed, it is typical that, up to the time of the civil war of 1834-40,†587 it was precisely the revolutionary party which claimed to have a monopoly of philanthropic gentleness, and for this it was punished AGAIN and AGAIN.

Page me39.490

Tomorrow Pieper will probably become a RESIDENT MASTER 30 miles from London. Having lost his post as correspondent to the Union, he is forced to accept this appointment. In view of my wife's 'condition' she will be able to do little as a secretary.
Page me39.490
This is deplorable.
Page me39.490
I have had another dunning letter from the 'friendly' Freund, but no reply as yet from Lassalle.
Page me39.490
When your old man leaves again, or if he decides not to come, I should, circumstances permitting, like to come to Manchester for a time.

Page Break me39.491
Page me39.491
Still no answer from Lassalle — nine weeks now. Nothing from Cluss.
Page me39.491
Schnauffer has died.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.491
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

247
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.491
[London,] 25 October 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
Enclosed a letter from Cluss.
Page me39.491
Schnauffer is dead.
Page me39.491
Pieper is a RESIDENT MASTER just outside London, at Eltham, Kent.
SERVANT FOR ALL WORK.
Page me39.491

If you can let me have some military stuff for Friday,†a so much the better. It is time to take a rational attitude to the Allies' conduct of the war.
Page me39.491
The Mademoiselle Bürgers business is very funny.
Page me39.491
As you already know, before she left Cologne she got herself a child, giving out that Lassalle was its father.
Page me39.491
The post is leaving, hence
Page me39.491
Vale.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me39.491
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.492

248
MARX TO ENGELS†588
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.492
[London,] 26 October 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
While studying the Spanish muck I have got to the bottom of the worthy Chateaubriand — a style-specialist who combines in the most repellent manner the refined scepticism and Voltairianism of the eighteenth century with the refined sentimentalism and romanticism of the nineteenth. Stylistically, of course, such a combination was bound to be epoch-making in France, though even the style has an element of spuriousness which, for all his clever tricks, frequently leaps to the eye. As for the political man, he has exposed himself utterly in his Congrés de Vérone,†589 and the only question is whether he received 'cash' from Alexander Pavlovich†a or whether he was bought simply by FLATTERY to which the conceited fop was more susceptible than anyone else. AT ALL INSTANCES he received the Order of St Andrew†590 from Petersburg. Everything about M. le 'Vicomte's' (?) vanitas, notwithstanding his now Mephistophelian, now Christian coquetting with vanitatum vanitas.†b You will remember that, at the time of the Congress, Villéle was Louis XVIII's Prime Minister and Chateaubriand French envoy in Verona. His Congrés de Vérone, which you may at some time have read, contains documents, transactions, etc. Begins with a short history of the Span. revolution of 1820-23. As for this 'history', all I need tell you is that he transfers Madrid to the banks of the Tagus (merely so as to quote the Span. saying that this river cria oro†c) and tells us that Riego led 10,000 men (realiter†d only 5,000) into the field against the 13,000 under General Freire; that Riego, having been beaten, withdrew with 15,000 men. In order to compare him with the hero of La Mancha,†e he sends him to the Sierra Morena instead of the Sierra de Ronda. This I mention en passant as characteristic of his manner. Hardly a date that is right.

Page me39.492
The best part of the joke, though, is Mr Chateaubriand's doings

Page Break me39.493
at the Congress of Verona, after the conclusion of which he became Foreign Minister and directed the invasion of Spain.
Page me39.493
He says d'abord†a:

'Je ne me défends point d'être le principal auteur de la guerre d'Espagne'. [Chateaubriand. Congrés de Vérone, Vol. I, p. 11], 'Mr. de Villéle ne voulait point les hostilités.'†b [I, 73]

Page me39.493
On the contrary. The text of the instructions sent by Villéle to him and Montmorency, who at the outset was also in Verona as French Foreign Minister, reads literally:

'Nous ne nous sommes pas décidés á déclarer la guerre á l'Espagne... [I, 103], Les plénipotentiaires de S.M. doivent surtout éviter de se présenter au congrés comme rapporteurs des affaires d'Espagne. Les autres puissances peuvent les connaître aussi bien que nous... Ce rôle pouvait convenir á l'Autriche au congrés de Laybach,†591 parce qu'elle avait la volonté d'envahir Naples.'†c [I, 102-03]

Page me39.493
The fellows do precisely the opposite of what was contained in their instructions. They 'présentent'†d themselves as 'rapporteurs des affaires d'Espagne'.†e Villéle writes:

'Ils tendront á faire considérer la question d'Espagne dans ses rapports généraux avec l'Europe'†f [I, 104]; they presented it from the outset as a specifically French matter. Villéle writes:

'L'opinion de nos plénipotentiaires sur la question de savoir ce qu'il convient au congrés de faire relativement á l'Espagne, sera que la France étant la seule puissance qui doive agir par ses troupes, elle sera seule juge de cette nécessité.'†g [I, 103]

Page me39.493

Whereas they took the line that:

'C'est sur la forme de ce concours moral' (of the other powers) 'et sur les mesures propres á lui assurer le secours matériel qui peut être réclamé par la suite, que la France croit, en définitive, nécessaire de fixer l'attention de ses augustes alliés.'†h [I, 109]

Page Break me39.494
Page me39.494

From the very beginning, then, Mr Chateaubriand acted directly counter to the instructions he received from Paris. Secondly, he sought to deceive Villéle about the state of affairs in Verona. Thus, for example, he wrote to Villéle:

'Le vœu trés prononcé des puissances est pour la guerre d'Espagne'†a [I, 145];

Page me39.494

He also seeks to deceive him about the prospects of the war:

'Les derniéres dépéches de M. de Lagarde prouvent combien le succés serait facile.'†b [I, 145]

Page me39.494

On the other hand the honest fellow tells us:

'Non seulement le Congrés n'a pas poussé la France á la guerre, mais la Prusse et surtout l'Autriche' [I, 112] (he comments: 'le prince de Metternich, feignant d'être russe en détestant la Russie' [I, 116]) 'y étaient trés opposées; la Russie seule l'approuvait et promettait son appui moral et son appui matériel.' [I, 112]
Page me39.494
'Nous disons au président du conseil que le vœu trés prononcé des puissances est pour la guerre; qu'il ne s'agit pas de l'occupation de la Péninsule; qu'il n'est question que d'un mouvement rapide; nous montrons un succés facile; et pourtant nous savions que le congrés de Vérone ne voulait point la guerre; nous craignions que notre mouvement ne se prolongeât bien au delá de l'Ebre; nous pensions qu'il nous faudrait occuper longtemps l'Espagne, pour faire une bonne besogne, mais nous ne révélions pas tout, afin d'arriver á notre but, et nous nous disions secrétement: “Une fois la Bidassoa†592 passée, il faudra bien que le président du conseil etc, aille de l'avant”.'†c [I, 173-74]

Page me39.494

Thus he deceived Villéle in the name of the Congress, as previously he had deceived the Congress in the name of Villéle. And, not content with that, he proceeded to write to Canning, lying in the name of both and against both.
Page me39.494

As a Minister he acted in the same manner. The following letter was written by Alexander to Pozzo di Borgo, envoy in Paris, for submission to Louis XVIII:

'L'empereur se flatte encore que la modération prévaudrait dans les conseils du gouvernement anglais.' If not etc., 'il regarderait l'attaque dirigée contre la France

Page Break me39.495
comme une attaque générale contre tous les alliés et accepterait, sans hésiter, les conséquences de ce principe... L'Empereur exhorte le roi á consommer ses propres' (!) 'déterminations et á marcher avec confiance contre les hommes des troubles et des malheurs. Agissant dans cet esprit l'Empereur rapelle la question agitée au congrés relative á la réunion d'une armée russe sur les frontiéres occidentales de l'Empire comme moyen de sûreté européenne.'†a [I, 477-78]

Page me39.495
(At the Congress, Austria would not hear of it. For which reason the matter was temporarily dropped.)
Page me39.495
His purpose, Chateaubriand alleges, was to procure glory (gloire) for the Restoration, and thus to pave the way for the violation of the Treaties of Vienna.†593 Russia's support was needed against England. But how little 1. he expected of Russian help and how much 2. he feared the war, is evident from the following utterances:

'En supposant un revers en Espagne, nous avions une révolution en France, et tous les cosaques de la terre ne nous auraient pas sauvés.'†b [I, 113]

Page me39.495
In a letter to La Ferronnays, his envoy in Petersburg, he writes:

'Nous avons mis la monarchie française sur une carte pour faire la guerre.'†c [II, 8]

Page me39.495
(This is dated 21 April 1823.)
Page me39.495
He further admits that they would have fallen flat on their faces if Canning had shipped a regiment or two out to Lisbon. To pave the way for this result they further saw to it that, following a row between War Minister the Duke of Bellune and General Guilleminot, the French Army suddenly found itself sin viveres e sin medios de transporte†d after marching into Spain. Next, the pretty piece of humbug that a French victory in the name of the Holy Alliance and with its appui moral†e would help liberate France from the Vienna Treaties. The 'Vicomte' is not 'si bête'†f as he here makes himself out to be. He knows very well what he is about: 'la Russie n'a point d'ambassadeur á Constantinople'.†g At the time there were underhand dealings with the Greeks;†594 and war between France and England, not to speak of France's commitments in Spain and her defeat there, would have given him a free hand.

Page Break me39.496

'Nous devions surtout prévoir que l'Angleterre pouvait intervenir et se poser en face de nous auprés de l'Espagne.'†a [I, 112]

Page me39.496
To Paris, he writes:

'Si c'est la guerre, c'est la guerre avec l'Angleterre.' [I, 161] 'Guerre qui pouvait devenir européenne, si elle venait á se compliquer d'une guerre en Orient et de l'attaque des colonies espagnoles par les Anglais.'†b [I, 151]

Page me39.496
Nor is he under any illusions about Alexander's intentions:

'Il est certain que notre triomphe inespéré' (!) 'lui donna quelque jalousie, car il s'était secrétement flatté que nous serions forcés de recourir á lui.'†c [I, 383]

Page me39.496
The 'triumph', then, was not what had been agreed. Besides, like the majority of Frenchmen, Chateaubriand believed the French Army to be very 'unreliable' so far as the Bourbons were concerned.
Page me39.496
Moreover, the 'friendship' between Alexander and Louis XVIII was, as Chateaubriand himself relates, all the closer for

'Louis XVIII' having 'refusé, sous prétexte de religion et par quelque motif offensant, le mariage du duc de Berry avec la sœur d'Alexandre'†d [I, 195]

Page me39.496
and for Louis XVIII's having, for his part, known that at the Congress of Vienna (after Bonaparte's return from Elba) Mr Alexander had

'tout á coup demanda aux alliés, s'il ne serait pas bon de donner le duc d'Orléans pour roi á la France, quand on aurait une derniére fois vaincu Napoléon!'†e [I, 196]

Page me39.496
Having a 'grand âme de poéte,'†f the 'Vicomte' makes the following admissions:

'Nous osons dire qu'Alexandre est devenu notre ami.' [I, 223]

Page Break me39.497
'Alexandre est le seul prince pour qui nous ayons jamais éprouvé un sincére attachement.' [I, 224]
'Louis XVIII nous détestait.'†a [I, 243]

Page me39.497

Withal it is highly entertaining to see how this 'Dieu de St. Louis' speechifier, who had to preserve the Spanish throne for a 'petit fils de Henri IV',†b†595 writes most cavaliérement to General Guilleminot telling him not to 'be deterred' from bombarding Cadiz by the fear that Ferdinand VII might be struck by shot, etc.
Page me39.497
At all events, it is hence to this ami intime†c of the great Carrel, Lamennais, Béranger, etc., that the honour belongs of having, over a period of 10 years — in the company of friend Alexander —, created the biggest mess Spain has ever known, and this at the risk of blowing his Bourbons sky-high.
Page me39.497
Another trait of this pilgrim to the Holy Sepulchre†596: In the Congrés de Vérone he himself relates how he forced Louis XVIII and Villéle to send Polignac, whom both abhorred, to London as envoy. Later, under Charles X, when he himself was envoy in Rome, he suddenly and with great brio announced his resignation upon the appointment of Polignac as minister because, he alleged, 'freedom' was doomed.
Page me39.497
If you re-read the book, your contempt for the 'crapauds'†d and their 'grands hommes'†e is unlikely to diminish.
Page me39.497
Adieu.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.497
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. II, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

249
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.497
London, 10 November 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
Article splendid.†f As regards Tuesday or Friday,†g arrange it as you wish, although I don't yet know whether I shall have a

Page Break me39.498

SECRETARY READY, since my wife has been confined to bed for the past three days, partly because of indisposition, partly in a fit of anger, for the worthy Dr Freund has again been bombarding us with dunning letters, which are the more odious for coming just before the impending catastrophe. GENERALLY, THE SITUATION IS NOT PLEASANT.
Page me39.498

Pére Göhringer is in the debtors' prison. His pub is closed. Bankruptcy. Hence the renewed revolutionary ardour which the noble fellow is said to have developed of late.
Page me39.498

Pieper has to work in his institution†a from 6 in the morning until 9 at night and to pray some 20 × during that time, which 'does him good'. No smoking or drinking. Takes the boys to church, etc. He was in town for an hour a few days ago. Looked very well.
Page me39.498

Lupus has invited Dronke to Manchester for Christmas, and Dronke has invited Imandt.
Page me39.498

No other news.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.498
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

250
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.498
London, 22 November 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Received the £2 YESTERDAY.
Page me39.498

Herewith letter from Dana which will show you what use the HUMBUGS are making of the military material. The book he mentions by Ripley on the MEXICAN WAR hasn't reached me yet.†597 I shall have it fetched tomorrow, leaf through it and then send it on to you.
Page me39.498

If you possibly can, send an article on Friday,†b since I wrote about Spain on Tuesday†598 and, under PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES, this can't be done twice in one week. On the other hand, to miss an article in my very difficult financial situation would be bad from every point of view.

Page Break me39.499
Page me39.499

No sooner had the false rumours of the fall of Sevastopol arrived than His Honour, Public Prosecutor Blind, hit on the plan of holding a German meeting — which was also to be made the occasion of a declaration of principles — against Russia and the German 'princhеs' and, more particularly, ad majorem gloriam†a of the Public Prosecutor himself and the German emigration in corpore.†b It was an occasion on which the 'chiefs' of all factions were to foregather PEACEFULLY. I and Freiligrath, of course, beat off this attack, so that at first Blind's plan was frustrated. Mais comme les grands esprits se rencontrent,†c the same thing had occurred to the indefatigable Arnold Ruge — who is presently dumping all manner of rubbish in The Morning Advertiser — and, at his written invitation, a preparatory meeting took place, COMPOSED OF: Vittinghof {chiropodist; 60 years old, a Courlander speaking no known tongue; formerly servant to Count Vittinghof of Courland, now posing as his own master. This Vittinghof, according to Arnold's plan, was to take the chair; a gang of German merchants (Gerstenzweig, etc.) were to provide the money and call the meeting and, under their auspices, German refugees were to be let loose on the platform). Römer (Becker's stepfather and a notorious mouchard†d). Meyen. Buchheim. Ronge. Ruge, Blind. Geck.†e — The upshot of the meeting was that Geck and Ronge more or less 'called each other out'. Public Prosecutor Blind indignantly withdrew from the meeting because Dishcloth Ruge refused to include in the programme the phrase 'republic which unites us all'. Afterwards Blind called to see me — I was out — and complained 'bitterly' to my wife about the 'contempt' in which the 'German emigration' was held, and about our preventing any 'concerted' action. As if any of us were preventing the 7 or 8 jackasses from 'uniting' or 'demonstrating'. (However, if the fellows should cause a stir with their meeting and unduly compromise 'Germany' by licking English boots, it was our secret intention — as yet unknown, by the by, to Staatsrat Blind — to enlist the aid of the London Chartists and perhaps hold a rival meeting.)
Page me39.499

As you can see, the 'Great Men of the Exile' are once again of the opinion that something 'has got to be done'.

Page Break me39.500
Page me39.500

In this connection Blind also then told my wife that 'Baden alone had had the courage to proclaim a republic' etc., etc. No other news.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.500

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition. Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

251
MARX TO ENGELS†234
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.500
[London,] 30 November 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

You forgot to return Dana's letter†a — very important in view of my relations with the fellows. By some oversight the first two pages were omitted from your splendid article of Tuesday's date.†b However the substance was contained in the 5 following ones, so all that suffered was the style.

Page me39.500

I have received from the worthy Dr Freund a third dunning letter which I enclose. How do you think I should reply to the fellow? It seems to me that ce bon ami†c has a mind to take extreme measures. With the positive decline in income from the Tribune, as a result of which I have sunk below the level of the great Dronke, prospects for the noble Freund look gloomier than ever. The worst of it is that I shall be needing him again soon. I have been invited through Tucker to work on a Retrospective Review which is appearing here in London. However have not yet had a detailed reply about the punctum puncti,†d the fee.

Page me39.500

The day before yesterday I finally received the 2 volumes of Ripley's Mexican War, about 1,200 pages, large format. As a military historian, Ripley seems to me — i.e. a strictly lay opinion — to have modelled himself plus ou moins†a on Napier. The book is sensible and, to my mind, not uncritical. Dana has certainly not read it. Otherwise he would have seen that their hero, General Scott, appears BY NO MEANS in a favourable light, NEITHER as a commander-in-chief nor as a GENTLEMAN. The thing is of particular interest to me because not long ago I was reading about Fernando Cortes' campaign in Antonio de Solis' Conquista de Mexico. Some very interesting comparisons might be drawn between the two conquistas. By the by, although the two commanders-in-chief — Taylor as well as Scott — seem very mediocre to me, the whole war was certainly a worthy prelude to the military history of the great land of the Yankees. The vast spaces in which the action took place and the small number of men with which it was conducted — more VOLUNTEERS than REGULAR ARMY at that — impart to it an 'American' originality. As for Taylor and Scott, their only merit seems to have consisted in the conviction that Yankees would always be able to extricate themselves, however great the predicament they might be landed in. I shall send you the 2 volumes early next week. Write and tell me — for they are bulky — whether by post (I am not clear about the new regulations) or PARCEL Co.

Page Break me39.501

Page me39.501
Addio

Your
K.M.

Page me39.501
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx. Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

252
MARX TO ENGELS†599
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.501
[London,] 2 December 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
I THINK NOT, SIR, that your letter†600 or so much as your name, should be linked with the worthy 'friend'.†b (The Jew is so pressing because an exceedingly refined educational establishment, which he has let his wife set up in St John's Wood, has brought him to THE VERY BRINK OF BANKRUPTCY. I have just learnt the details via Cornelius.) Taking my cue from your letter, I have written to him†601 that: 1. I enclose a letter from A. Dana from which he can see how the commercial crisis in America has affected me and, through me, himself; 2. However, to cover the loss, I have established new literary contacts on the strength of which I will undertake in writing to pay him £4 on the 10th of every month, starting in January 1855. The amount still outstanding is about £17. Should Mr Freund not agree to this, then he can prosecute. As he cannot fail to realise, Dana's letter would protect me in any COURT. If I involve you directly, I shall forfeit 1. my whole position vis-á-vis Freund; 2. He will tell (and promptly show my letter to) the teacher in his establishment, Mr Gottfried Kinkel, who will pass it on to Mr Gerstenberg, who will pass it on to every German Jew in the City until it reaches Blanc, which would be BY NO MEANS desirable.

Page Break me39.502

Page me39.502

I had asked Lassalle whether he could not obtain some sort of literary BUSINESS for me in Germany for I must be serious IN REGARD to my decreased income and increased expenditure. Now Lassalle puts forward the following proposal,†602 as to which I should like to have your well-considered opinion. At the beginning of this month his cousin, Dr M. Friedländer will become proprietor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung, but — in co. with Stein and Elsner. I am to become the paper's London correspondent.†603 Friedländer doesn't think he would be able to pay more than 20 talers a month to begin with. But Lassalle believes he might be able to push him up to 30. Voilá la proposition.†a It's a miserable pittance. However, too high a value should not be set on a little bit of work for a German hole-and-corner rag. Even so, one might pick up £40 or £50. But Elsner and Stein — there's the rub! This calls for all the more mature consideration as these gentlemen aren't Conservatives but actually Liberals, and more directly opposed to us than the Neue Preussische Zeitung. THAT IS THE QUESTION.†b Think it over carefully.
Page me39.502

I am sending you a copy of The People's Paper so that you can read about Jones' DODGE†c with Barbés (whom, between ourselves, he took for Blanqui) and his agitation against Bonaparte for the latter's proposed visit to England.†604 The 'authorities' here are seriously concerned about the matter and the police, wherever feasible, have had the posters torn down. Even Reynolds and The

Page Break me39.503
Leader†a have denounced him for his unpatriotic sentiments. He originally had honorary members, amongst whom myself, elected to his comité for the anti-Bonapartist movement. I chaffed him for it, in particular pointing out that if the MOVE was to be effective here and on the Continent, it must maintain its purely English character. He recognised this, as you will see from his remarks at the preliminary meeting with the FRENCH REFUGEES.†605
Page me39.503

On Monday I shall send you the Ripley and Solis' Conquista de Mexico by the PARCEL COMP. you mentioned. Return the latter as soon as you no longer need it, since it doesn't belong to me. I have now read the whole of Ripley (cursorily, of course, this being sufficient for my purpose). I am no longer in any doubt — and Ripley, in his 'restrained' sarcastic style, often makes it plain — that the great Scott is nothing more than a common, petty, untalented, carping, envious cur and HUMBUG who, aware that he owed everything to the bravery of his soldiers and the SKILL of his divisional commanders, played dirty tricks in order to reap the renown himself. He appears to be as great a general as the MANY-SIDED Greeley is a great PHILOSOPHER. Throughout the campaign, the fellow made a hash of things and played the kind of tricks for which any self-respecting court martial would justifiably have had him shot. But he is America's foremost (in terms of rank) general. Which is doubtless why Dana believes in him. Without question Taylor is still worth more than Scott, as the Americ. public seems to have sensed when it made the former President of the United States and rejected the latter

AGAIN AND AGAIN despite all his efforts. General Worth strikes me as the most significant of them, on which point you must let me have your opinion as soon as you have read the thing. Also, and more important, on another point. Is it not CURIOUS that Scott always remains between 2 and 10 miles from the scene of ACTIVE OPERATIONS, that he never appears on the battlefield himself, but is always simply 'OBSERVING THE PROGRESS OF EVENTS' from a safe place in the rear. He himself never appears, as Taylor certainly does, when it is necessary in the interests of the army's 'morale' for the commander-in-chief to appear. After the fierce BATTLE OF Contreras, he and all his STAFF moved up only when the whole thing was over. During the fluctuations of the BATTLE OF Molino del Rey he passed a message to the 'brave' fellows to the effect that they should stand their ground, he himself would perhaps appear in person. His 'diplomatic' talents are matched only by his military ones. If he evinces mistrust, it is always of his more talented divisional commanders, never of Santa Anna who leads him by the nose as though he were an aged child.

Page Break me39.504
Page me39.504
It seems to me to be typical of the war that, despite wrong or inadequate orders from their CHIEF, every division and every single small body of men at all times STUBBORNLY make for their objectives, SPONTANEOUSLY exploiting every incident, so that in the end a measure of wholeness emerges. A Yankee sense of independence and individual proficiency greater, perhaps, than that of the Anglo-Saxons.
Page me39.504
The Spanish are already degenerate. But a degenerate Spaniard, a Mexican, is an ideal. All the Spanish vices, braggadocio, swagger and Don Quixotry, raised to the third power, but little or nothing of the steadiness which the Spaniards possess. The Mexican guerrilla war a caricature of the Spanish,†606 and even the sauve qui peut of the REGULAR ARMIES infinitely surpassed. But then the Spaniards have produced no talent comparable to that of Santa Anna.
Page me39.504
Vale.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me39.504
Have you seen the fulminations against Heine by Jacobus Venedey — Kobes I†b of Cologne — in the feuilleton of Saturday's Kölnische Zeitung? It's a pleasure you should not deny yourself. And Kossuth's promotion to general!!!

Page me39.504
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

253
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.504
[London,] 8 December 1854

Dear Frederic,

I shall be putting an article†607 into the post today, although I know the post won't go. A week today I intend to do a report on Parliament. But still I urgently request you to send me an article on

Page Break me39.505
Tuesday so that I can count on getting £2 more on Friday (when I draw the bill).†608 Even without that, there are various losses to be met. If there's nothing happening, you can do something on Austrian military power.†a
Page me39.505

You must write the pamphlet on the 'Teutonians and Slavism'.†609 You should also read Bauer's England and Russia (written in French). Gustav Diezel, too, has written a 'fat' book on the subject.†b Do you know Freiherr von Bode's 'Statistics on Russia'? (Appeared about six months ago.)†c

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me39.505
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

254
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.505
[London,] 15 December 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I have just received your note and very much look forward to seeing you here in a week's time.†610

Page me39.505

Article received.†d

Page me39.505

Barthélemy's end is a GLORIOUS one.†611 At yesterday's hearing (or rather CORONER'S INQUEST) it was said that important papers, though not relating to the assassination, had been found on him.†e It would be annoying if these included papers from the old days, so that we seemed to be connected with a fellow who — or so the louts boasted — was 'saving up' a bullet for us in the event of our returning to Paris.

Page Break me39.506

Page me39.506

I haven't read the Bauer, so bring it with you.

Page me39.506

Next week I start writing for the Neue Oder-Zeitung. 30 talers a month for the time being. I suppose, however, that the fellows will be satisfied with three articles a week. Not having the money to buy books, I cannot possibly bid adieu to my studies at the Museum†a in return for 30 talers a month. Much though I dislike the thing, I've accepted it for the sake of my wife's peace of mind. Her PROSPECTS, of course, are GLOOMY.

Page me39.506

What I particularly approved of in Ripley†b was his not giving way to enthusiastic hyperbole. The strategic mistakes made in the Mexican War would seem to be self-explanatory in view of the total absence of plan. As for the nicer tactical blunders, I, OF COURSE, understand nothing of such matters. I should think that he took Napier†c for his model, to judge by the way he depicts the Mexicans just as Napier does the Spaniards, and in the second place strives after FAIRNESS towards the opponents.

Page me39.506

Tomorrow I shall be saddled with Blind and wife. This 'shinishter' Russophobe and 'repelbican' still insists that Baden is the real land of the future.

Page me39.506

Salut. And give my regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.506

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

255
MARX TO MORITZ ELSNER
IN BRESLAU
Page me39.506
London, Wednesday, 20 December 1854
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Elsner,

Your letter arrived here on Monday. I myself only got back today after spending a few days visiting Engels and Lupus in Manchester.

Page Break me39.507
Page me39.507

I shall begin work as correspondent on Saturday. To start off right in the middle of the final part of the 'preliminary' parliamentary session WOULD NOT DO. A résumé of this short session would make a better entrée. For the past two years I have been writing — i.e. for publication — only in English. German may give me some trouble at the start.
Page me39.507

As you are aware, I edited a Prussian newspaper†a under censorship — for a whole year. So I am quite familiar with the torments which the Neue Oder-Zeitung may have to endure under a new form of censorship, and it is these difficulties, the UNDERHAND struggle AGAINST THE ESTABLISHED POWERS which incline me to work in the interest of this paper.
Page me39.507

So far as I am aware, and I know pretty well all the important reading-rooms in London, the N.O.-Z. is not available in any of them. Hence, for the time being, you'll have to send it direct to me. I might perhaps be able to introduce it into a reading-room or COFFEE-ROOM.
Page me39.507

You would particularly oblige me if, by way of an exception, you could send me one issue of the Breslauer Zeitung. Although Edgar Bauer comes to see me every week, he has never spoken about his articles and I would like to get to know his views from one 'sample'.
Page me39.507

Since Parliament will be going into recess, and — save for a résumé of its sessions and PERHAPS of FINANCIAL MATTERS — there will be little of importance to report, I shall, if these premises hold good, write a number of consecutive articles providing a review of the conduct of the war in the Crimea so far,†612 concerning which I have seen nothing sensible, i.e. critical, either here or from Germany. Moreover, I suppose that this subject is of the greatest general interest and at the same time least liable to lead to a conflict with the indirect Royal Prussian Censorship.
Page me39.507

Requesting you to convey my kindest regards to your wife whom I have not had the pleasure of meeting.

Yours
K. Marx

Page me39.507
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.508

1855

256
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.508
[London,] 12 January 1855

Dear Frederic,
Yesterday I sent the report on TRADE and COMMERCE to the Tribune†a and must now deliver two more articles if I am to pay off my overdraft with the fellows. There are two sailings next week, on Tuesday and Friday,†b and it would be most desirable if you could let me have an article on un sujet quelconque†c by Tuesday.
Page me39.508
My wife is approaching the catastrophe with a firm tread.
Page me39.508
Nothing new here. Götz has written to Sidney Herbert asking for an 'officer's brevet' in the apochryphal 'Foreign Legion'.†613
Page me39.508
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.508
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

257
MARX TO ENGELS†614
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.508
London, 17 January 1855

Dear Frederic,

I could not, OF COURSE, write to the Tribune yesterday nor can I do so for some time á venir†d because yesterday morning, between

Page Break me39.509
6 and 7 o'clock, my wife was delivered of a bona fide TRAVELLER†a — unfortunately OF THE. 'SEX' par excellence. If it had been a male child, well and good.
Page me39.509

Did you know that red Wolff†b is one of the Augsburger's London correspondents? I found out by chance, namely by reading an article in the said paper†c containing all manner of fatuous elucubrations on 'house' and 'home' and 'abroad' — all this to throw light on the 'ordure' with which the British troops are contending at Balaklava. I saw Freiligrath and told him that in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung I'd read some nonsense of which only Lupus Rufus could be capable. Freiligrath thereupon confirmed that Wolff was the 'REAL, IDENTICAL Kobes'.†d
Page me39.509

I now have Heine's 3 volumes at home. Amongst other things he retails at some length a lie to the effect that I, etc., went to console him†e after he had been 'attacked' in the Augsburg A.Z. for having accepted money from Louis Philippe.†f The good Heine deliberately forgets that my intervention on his behalf took place at the end of 1843†614 and thus could have no connection with FACTS which came to light after the February revolution of 1848.†615 BUT LET IT PASS. Worried by his evil conscience, — the old dog has a monstrous memory for such things, — he is trying to ingratiate himself.
Page me39.509

I expect something from you on FRIDAY,†g then. I can't write any more today, having to send out a mass of cards giving notification of the baby's birth.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.509
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.510

258
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.510
[London,] 19 January 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Agree absolutely — and, indeed, most gratefully — to your scheme.
Page me39.510

The parliamentary thing seems likely to misfire for reasons of time. BUT NEVER MIND.
Page me39.510

Your yesterday's letter†616 didn't reach me until 4 o'clock this afternoon because the ass of a postman (this is the 2nd or 3rd time it has happened, and I shall complain to the POST OFFICE) delivered it to 28 Soho Square instead of 28 Dean Street. In future address your letters to 28 Dean Street, Soho (instead of Soho Square). Because it arrived so late, I can write you no more than these few lines today.
Page me39.510

What's this about Barthélemy? I missed it in the Augsburg paper.†a Probably a fabrication on the part of the miserable 'Oly' or 'Ody', one of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung's correspondents, a blackguard from Switzerland.
Page me39.510

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.510

There's a tremendous panic in the City, and Freiligrath wrote yesterday telling me that even the most 'sanguine' expect things to be very bad until early spring.

Page me39.510
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.511

259
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me39.511
[London,] 23 January 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Lassalle,

This letter would have been written a week ago had not my wife been delivered of a world citizen (female)†a and the consequent TROUBLE left me little spare time, as you can readily imagine. However, both mother and daughter are doing well.

Page me39.511

It is not very pleasant, mon cher,†b to write in such a small [...] au fond,†c all one can do is produce miniature dunghills. Mais [n'importe]†d that the [...] should consider [...] and make no literary pretensions, while also hoping that none will be made.

Page me39.511

As regards the various economic questions you put to me,†617 so far as I know there are as yet no compilations, whether official or scientific. Official figures for corn imports are, of course, to be found in the BOARD OF TRADE TABLES. But nothing else. Undoubtedly there will now be a plethora of works on these matters. A period of crisis in England is also one of theoretical research. I shall at the earliest opportunity compile something for you from my note-books, in which I have collected all sorts of statistical information from various sources.†618 For the present, merely the following, of a quite general nature:

Imports of Wheat and Flour

	Wheat as wheat (quarters)	Flour (reduced to quarters)
1847	2,650,000	1,808,000
1848	1,865,000	351,000
1849	4,569,000	1,129,000
1850	3,778,000	1,102,000

Page me39.511

Thus 8,285,000 [qrs] of wheat imported during the first 2 years of FREE TRADE, and 2,226,000 in the form of flour, in all 10,511,000, or an average of more than 5 million quarters over the 2 years. This amounts to far more than 1/6 of total consumption, reckoned at 1 quarter per person per year.

Page Break me39.512
Page me39.512

Now, can it be said that annual consumption increased to that extent? This clearly depends on the answer to another question: whether the same amount of wheat was produced in England as heretofore? This again can only be answered when we are in possession of the agricultural statistics, upon which work has only just begun. As regards Ireland and Scotland, we know that considerable amounts [of the la]nd have been turned over to pasture, etc., since the abolition of the corn tariffs.†72 [As regards Englan]d, no conclusion can be reached at present save by induction. If in England, a considerable area of land had not been withdrawn from cultivation, how came it that e.g. this year, despite a very good harvest, corn prices are higher than in the protectionist year, 1839, for instance, although the loss of imports from abroad in no way compensates for the difference between a good and a bad harvest, between, say, that of 1854 and that of 1853? How the tendency to withdraw land from cultivation has spread under FREE TRADE — mainly, no doubt, by turning it over to pasture — is evident from the following table, an official one (for Ireland):

1854 (up till November)

	Acres
[Decrease in Ce]reals	91,233
[Green Crops] ([Pot]atoes, roots etc.)	710
Flax	23,607
Clover	13,025
Total decrease in cultivated land	128,575

Page me39.512

Last year (1853), on the other hand, the total decrease was only 43,867 acres. Making, for both years taken together, 172,442. This is all the more striking as the demand for all agricultural produce has risen in the past 2 years.

Page me39.512

Now as regards the 'HANDS' employed in agriculture, we know that, of the 300,000 people who have emigrated every year from Great Britain since 1852, the great majority consisted of agricultural workers. We know that in 1853 the population decreased for the first time instead of increasing. Finally, the best proof that the number of agricultural HANDS has greatly decreased is that in 1853 wages in rural areas rose for the first time since 1815 and that mechanical reapers were more or less generally introduced in order to depress them again.

Page Break me39.513

Page me39.513

(Incidentally, I would point out that the free import of foreign corn has given England's agronomy a tre[men]dous impetus.)

Page me39.513

What [influence] FREE TRADE has had on the price of industrial [products] is absolutely impossible to assess from the material so far available. In the woollen and linen industry, for example, the fluctuations dependent on raw material can hardly have been affected in any way by the REPEAL of the CORN-LAWS. On the whole I believe that the history of prices from 1849 to 1854 will show that the price-relations between all manufactured products and grain, as well as between individual branches of industry and the corresponding raw materials remained the same before and after the repeal of the Corn Laws (likewise the variations within each group).

Page me39.513

As for wages in the factories (figures another time), it can be proved beyond doubt that the repeal of the Corn Laws, 1. has had no influence whatever on absolute wages, 2. has contributed to depress relat[ive] wages. In the year of crisis†a wages [had] been depressed. They were not raised in the relatively good years 1849-52 (the latter included, at least up to the last 1/3 of the year). Why weren't they raised? Because the price of foodstuffs had fallen. In the course of 1852 the great emigration began, while on the other hand demand rose appreciably in the United States, Australia, India, etc. The workers then demanded a 10 per cent rise in wages and for a short time, while prosperity was at its height (until about August 1853), were able to achieve it in almost the majority of branches of industry. However, as you know, they were soon deprived of this 10 per cent rise — remember, e.g., the Preston STRIKE†431 — although corn prices were on average higher in 1853 and 1854 than in the protectionist years 1843-45 and 1830-37. Hence the rise in wages — a very temporary rise, for already short time is being worked again and, generally speaking, the crisis has begun — is in no way attributable to FREE TRADE, but corresponds wholly to the rise that takes place in all years of prosperity. In fact FREE TRADE simply meant that from 1849 to 1852 wages did not rise. Since it was possible to buy more food with the same wages, these were not increased. What did show a relative increase, therefore, was profits. Hence relative wages, i.e. wages in relation to profits, have in fact fallen — a result which I showed to be inevitable in a pamphlet†b (FRENCH) written as long ago as 1847.
Page me39.513

Of course, one cannot deny that the repeal of the Corn Laws may have in some degree contributed (together with the adjustment of the sugar tax, the raising of restrictions on shipping and the repeal of the protective tariffs on British North American timber) to creating new, or enlarging existing, markets for British manufactures abroad. For instance, in the United States the tendency to legislate in favour of free trade was certainly due partly to the REPEAL in England. However, too much importance should not be attached to this, since there was a decrease in English exports e.g. to Russia, whose exports to England increased enormously as a result of the REPEAL. In general, it would appear that, relatively speaking, Europe's importance as a market for English goods is steadily diminishing; since in 1854, 60 per cent of total exports (I mean total exports of British products, disregarding re-exports) were absorbed by the United States, Australia and India alone, a figure which does not include Britain's colonies outside Europe (excepting India).

Page Break me39.514
Page me39.514

I have jotted down the above information to provide a very general answer to your questions. I shall see what I can find in the way of definite statistical material in my note-books. As already mentioned, books will no doubt only begin coming out now...†a

Page me39.514

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

260
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.514
[London,] 24 January [1855]

Dear Engels,

As you will see from today's Times, there is nothing to report about Parliament. No important debate until Thursday evening†b. So there's nothing for it but to write about 'any old sujet'.†619
Page me39.514

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.514
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.515

261
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.515
[London,] 30 January 1855

Dear Frederic,

I shall send you such cuttings from the Tribune as you will need for a characterisation of the Coalition, and fill in the gaps, if any, with a few written comments.†620 I shall hardly get round to it today, since I have to send the Breslau jackasses a résumé of yesterday's frightfully long sitting.†a Also, the BABY†b is in a very critical condition — my wife, however, very well — so that I have been held up by DOMESTIC AFFAIRS until 1 o'clock (now). Which means that in all probability my stuff won't reach you until Thursday morning.

Page me39.515
If Palmerston becomes premier, there'll be some high jinks.
Page me39.515
Did you read Barthélemy's confession in yesterday's Advertiser?

Tout á vous†c
Ch. M.

Page me39.515
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

262
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.515
London, 31 January 1855

Dear Engels,
Enclosed 2 articles on Gladstone's financial policy.†621 In the first one, the chaps have clearly misprinted some figures. However, all you are really concerned with is refreshing your memory as to the SPIRIT of the whole plan.

Page Break me39.516
Page me39.516
Herewith a survey of the Coalition's activities:

Page me39.516
1853

December 16.†a Fall of Disraeli overthrown (by a majority of 19), ostensibly because of the extension of the HOUSE-TAX and the 'EXTENSION OF THE GENERAL AREA OF DIRECT TAXATION'. The determining factor, the Irish Brigade†622
Page me39.516
Coalition formed:

* 'We have now arrived at the commencement of the political millennium'*... (Times).†b

Page me39.516
CHRISTMAS RECESS.
Page me39.516
February 10. Parliament reassembles. Russell's old programme of 1850. No question of a Reform Bill†623 until they reassembled the following winter.

* 'Next session is not quite so uncertain as tomorrow'* (Times).†c

Page me39.516
On the other hand, a mass of practical and administrative reforms promised: law reform, railway regulations, education, etc. Gladstone postpones his budget until after the EASTER RECESS.
Page me39.516
February 18.

* 'It is no longer a Ministry of Reform: It is a Ministry of Progress, every member of which resolves to do nothing. All difficult questions are open questions'* (Disraeli).†d

Page me39.516
21 February. Clarendon FOREIGN MINISTER. Russell Minister without portfolio or salary.
Page me39.516
February 24. Russell's Jewish bill.†624 * 'The Policy of Abstention' proclaimed on the Eastern question, is also the ministerial policy at home.*
Page me39.516
4 April. RUSSELL'S EDUCATIONAL REFORM BILL.
Page me39.516
7 April. Before presentation of the budget: CLADSTONE'S FINANCIAL SCHEME.
Page me39.516
15 April. Debate in the House on the GUNPOWDER PLOT.†380 It transpires that Palmerston is acting as GENERAL INFORMER for the CONTINENTAL POLICE.
Page me39.516
EASTER RECESS (don't know the date).
Page me39.516
31 May. Russell insults Catholics in Parliament.†625 Irish members†e resign from Ministry. Aberdeen's letter to them of 3 June.†f Russell retracts.

Page Break me39.517
Page me39.517
Main items in the spring and summer session:
1. India Bill: Ministry wishes to extend EAST INDIA COMPANY CHARTER (EXPIRING ON APRIL, 1854) by 20 years. Is compelled to drop this, its bill remaining in force only provisionally and for so long as it pleases Parliament. Apart from laying down that APPOINTMENTS IN THE CIVIL SERVICE AND SCIENTIFIC MILITARY SERVICES are to be subject to open competition, this Act confines itself to the following: Sir Charles Wood (President of the BOARD OF CONTROL) is to receive £5,000 instead of £1,200 as previously, 18 DIRECTORS instead of 24. Instead of all being nominated by the COURT OF PROPRIETORS, now 12 to be nominated by the latter and 6 by the Ministry. Salary of DIRECTORS to be once more increased from £300 to £500, those of the CHAIRMAN and DEPUTY CHAIRMAN to £1,000. GOVERNOR-GENERALSHIP of India to be separated from the GOVERNORSHIP of Bengal. New PRESIDENCY ON THE INDUS. Thus, instead of the inexpensive and, as practice has shown, efficient SIMPLE COMMISSIONERS, new GOVERNORS and PRESIDENTS with LUXURIOUS COUNCILS. NEW SINECURES. A few quite insignificant little reforms in the Indian judiciary.

Page me39.517

2. Budget. Many of its FEATURES lifted from Disraeli, but whereas it removes EXCISE DUTIES for the benefit of the town, Disraeli did so ostensibly for the benefit of the FARMERS; thus the tea DUTY business, extension of direct taxation, etc., of Jewish†a origin. Some of the most important decisions forced upon Gladstone after he and his opposition to them had been repeatedly voted down in Parliament. For instance, the abolition of the ADVERTISEMENT DUTY; the SUCCESSION DUTY. LICENSING SYSTEM, NEW REGULATION dropped after undergoing several transformations in the course of the session. Of the budget, which made its début with all the pretensions of a systematic encyclopaedia, nothing remains save a mixtum compositum†b of LITTLE ITEMS. Typical feature: the noble Gladstone includes in his BUDGET a special BILL — abolition of STAMPS ON NEWSPAPER SUPPLEMENTS — intended to buy The Times, in effect making it a present of £30-40,000 a year. Since it alone issues SUPPLEMENTS, consolidates its monopoly.†c The Times gratefully abandons its campaign against his INCOME TAX and today is again demanding his inclusion in the new Cabinet.
Page me39.517

3. Three Irish LANDLORDS and TENANTS BILLS.†626 Introduced by the Tory Napier†d under the Derby MINISTRY Passed on 1 August after

Page Break me39.518
10 months' deliberation in the COMMONS. Aberdeen (9 August) expresses his satisfaction in the LORDS at their having been burked there.†a
Page me39.518

4. * Parliamentary reform, national education reform, law reform (a few trifles apart) etc. postponed. Transportation Bill,†627 Navigation Bill* etc. inherited from the Derby MINISTRY. Jewish bill rejected. Nothing can truly be described as the MINISTRY'S own [save aa] the great CAB ACT which had no sooner crossed the threshold than it required revision by Parliament because 'all the talents' of the chaps had not even sufficed to create hackney carriage regulations. bb) Gladstone's conversion of the PUBLIC DEBT,†b the FAILURE of which he had to admit before Parliament as early as 28 JULY.†628
Page me39.518

August 20. (Day of Parliament's PROROGATION — 27 October.) Palmerston dismisses the Commons with the assurance that they need not worry about the Eastern affair, * 'as far as the evacuation of the principalities was concerned...* their PLEDGE was, “his confidence in the honour and character of the Russian Emperor”, which would move him to withdraw his troops voluntarily from the principalities'.†c

Page me39.518
3 December. Sinope.†629
Page me39.518
12 December. Note of the 4 POWERS to the Porte, in which au fond†d more was demanded of it than in the Vienna Note.†630
Page me39.518
14 December. First, Palmerston agrees in the Conseil†e of Ministers to telegraph Vienna, saying the Sinope affair should not be allowed to upset the negotiations; then, in order to deceive the philistines, on
Page me39.518
15 December, hands in his RESIGNATION, allegedly because opposed to Russell's REFORM BILL. Returns to office, of course, as soon as his end attained.

Page me39.518
1854

Mid-January. Resignation of Sadleir, the BROKER to the Irish Brigade, following SCANDALOUS DISCLOSURES before an IRISH COURT OF LAW. Had been Junior Lord of the Treasury. (Later, the VIRTUOUS Gladstone wishes to dispatch to Australia as Governor his relative, Lawley, speculator in stocks while secretary to the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER and BETTING man. Discredited in Parliament. This same

Page Break me39.519
'virtuous' chap engages O'Flaherty, who makes off with the cash-box, and brings one Hayward into the POOR LAW ADMINISTRATION on the strength of a lengthy lampoon against Disraeli. All the dirt piles up on the virtuous Gladstone.)
Page me39.519
Beginning of February. Parliament reopens.
Page me39.519
6 February. Palmerston announces his intention to introduce a bill for the organisation of the militia in Ireland and Scotland.†a 28 March. War declared. Bill not introduced until end of June.
Page me39.519
13 February. Russell introduces his Reform Bill, which he had made both a condition and an excuse for joining the Coalition. Withdraws it 10 weeks later with 'tears in his eyes'.†b As a token of gratitude, again made President OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL and gets a salary.
Page me39.519
6 March. Gladstone demands

* 'only the sum which would be required to bring back the 25,000 men about to leave the British shores'.*†c

Page me39.519

DOUBLES THE INCOME TAX FOR 6 MONTHS. MAY 8 has again to introduce a new budget.

Page me39.519

Mid-March. The Czar†d forces the chaps to declare war by publishing the 'SECRET AND CONFIDENTIAL CORRESPONDENCE',†631 which opens with a dispatch of 11 January 1853†e and brands as deliberate lies all the statements made by the chaps during 1853.

Page me39.519

7 April. Lord Grey (even then minded to become War Minister; notorious for having, as Colonial Minister, brought every English colony to the verge of rebellion) makes his speech in the LORDS†f complaining about England's lack of military organisation. This merely provides the Ministers with an opportunity — 8 June — of creating one more post and one more salary by separating the MINISTRY FOR WAR†g from the COLONIAL MINISTRY without concentration of DEPARTMENTS. Cholera is likewise used as a pretext to create an INDEPENDENT President of the 'Board of Health' and thus a new ministerial post and salary.

Page Break me39.520

Page me39.520

May 29.

* 'Their'* (the Ministers') * 'measures were kicked overboard in a very unceremonious manner'* (Bright).†a

Page me39.520

Résumé of their domestic activities during this 2nd session: 7 major bills introduced. 3 of them * defeated: bill for the entire change of the law of settlement†632; bill for public education in Scotland; bill on the entire reconstruction of Parliamentary oaths.†633 3 withdrawn: Bribery Prevention Bill; bill for the complete change of the civil service; measure for Parliamentary Reform. 1 bill — Oxford Parliamentary Reform Bill * passed, in very mutilated and modified form.

Page me39.520

August 12. Prorogation of Parliament.

Page me39.520

Extraordinary December session: Bills relating to the FOREIGN LEGION†613 and the Militia.†62

Page me39.520

A perusal of this list will recall enough facts to enable you to ridicule the fellows and, incidentally, cast a few aspersions on the worthy Palmerston in advance (in case he should become Premier).

Page me39.520
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

263
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.520
[London,] 2 February 1855

Dear Frederic,

Many thanks for the article.†634 Russell has been horribly discredited by Newcastle, though that ass waxed altogether too touching at the end of his speech.†b

Page Break me39.521
Page me39.521

My wife is getting on satisfactorily. But all is by no means well with the child,†a I fear.
Page me39.521

Enclosed 1. Letter from Lassalle; 2. from Daniels; 3. the cuttings to which Lassalle refers†635; Goldheim has been prowling about among the workers in Solingen etc. under the name of 'Lassalle'. 4. Letter from Steffen who, however, has omitted to give his Brighton address and will begin to grumble again if, in the circumstances, I don't reply.
Page me39.521

As a result of the Barbés business Jones, of course, got mixed up with the crapauds,†b and with the crapule†c among them at that. So another big banquet of all nations was arranged for the February celebrations.†636 He came to see me, too, and I laughed in his face. Meanwhile his Frenchmen (a quite unknown MOB) had dug up the ex-Schapper Association†637 which did not, OF COURSE, reject such good graces. Moreover the malcontents among the Polish and Italian émigrés — who are not accounted 'superior refugees' — are said to have organised themselves for the purpose of sending delegates to the Committee.†638 For the fun of it, Götz and I let Jones take us to their meeting yesterday, we being designated 'observers'. He introduced us as 'OLD FRIENDS OF THE CHARTIST PARTY' who, doubtless, were entitled to satisfy their curiosity. Who was there? Various crapauds of the basest sort. A Spanish tailor or tobacco manufacturer who had 'convened himself'. Stechan (half crazed) and behind him three notorious German louts. Schapper himself being no longer available, Stechan, tried to ape the former's physiognomy, his morose gravity, his gesticulations, as once the butcher Legendre those of Danton. But that was not all. Herzen the Russian went uninvited to the previous meeting, and (himself) moved that he be nominated a member of the Committee.†639 At the meeting we attended, an obsequious letter from him was read out and, because the politically wise Frenchmen thought him 'un garçon charmant',†d he was admitted without further ado. The meeting, the chattering of the Frenchmen, the glazed expressions of the Germans, the gesticulations of the Spanish tailor were so awful that Jones (CHAIRMAN) 1. proposed that everyone should speak only once and for not more than ten minutes; 2. upon its being remarked that the Spaniard was not an émigré because democracy had triumphed there, he came out with an ambiguous compliment that 'he wished every émigré community in London a similar lot so that thus 'no international committees need be maintained' here.

Page Break me39.522
Page me39.522

Götz and I were treated to a free comedy and we smoked furiously in our role of mute onlookers. Here one could see with one's own eyes the pass to which 'la vraie démocratie'†a has come.

Your
K. Marx

Page me39.522
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

264
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.522
[London,] 13 February 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Firstly an acknowledgement of receipt of the 'BULLION', and secondly of today's splendid article.†b For the past 4-5 days I have been prevented from writing, hence also to you, by a severe inflammation of the eyes which is not yet fully cleared up: also, as a result of the cold weather my USUAL SECRETARY†c has not risen from her bed again as quickly as is her wont. However I think that she will shortly be able to return to her post. My eye trouble was brought on by reading through my own note-books on economics,†618 the intention being, not so much to elaborate the thing, as at any rate to master the material and get it READY to work on.
Page me39.522

I have told you how Herzen elbowed his way on to the 'International Committee'.†d Enclosed is a letter from him in which he proffers thanks for the 'invitation' which 'was never made'. The letter was intended for publication in The People's Paper in order to assert his importance coram publico.†e This miscarried, for I immediately wheedled the scrawl out of Jones. However Herzen has had himself nominated a steward.

Page Break me39.523
Page me39.523

Also enclosed a 2nd letter, in which this committee invites me to the banquet and 'to take part in the MEETING'. I do not want to offend the crapauds,†a still less the Chartists. So the question is: in what form I should couch my refusal. Tell me your view by return. The thing must be declined, 1. because such MEETINGS are, on the whole, HUMBUG; 2. because at this moment it would be to expose oneself uselessly to GOVERNMENTAL PERSECUTION, and Palmerston has his eye on me; 3. because at no time and in no place do I wish to appear alongside Herzen, not being of the view that OLD EUROPE should be rejuvenated with Russian blood.†640 Should one's reply, perhaps, include some reference to Herzen's presence?
Page me39.523

Jones has done something infinitely 'stupid', indeed gone completely off the rails, in leaving the management of the affair to the crapauds and the German louts. He sacrificed everything to the desire to show, at a big PUBLIC MEETING, that the FOREIGN EMIGRATIONS were in the tow of the Chartists. The MEETING will be a large one and create an uproar, but as a result: 1. Urquhart and Co. (likewise The Times if the thing creates a sensation) will denounce the Chartists as being led by Russian agents. This is unavoidable. 2. It will provide the Ministry with a pretext for reviving the Aliens Bill.†75 3. Discord within the Chartist Party. Has already broken out. A section of the London Chartists maintains that Jones has ARBITRARILY departed from the Charter and compromised their whole cause by adopting the slogan 'SOCIAL AND DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC' when forming the branch committee which is to be the CONNECTING LINK between the Chartists and the FOREIGN EMIGRATION.†b There is no denying the extent of Jones' energy, persistence and activity, yet he goes and spoils everything by the way he cries his wares, by his tactless striving after pretexts for agitation and his anxiety to be ahead of the time. If he can't agitate in reality, he seeks an appearance of agitation, improvises MOVEMENTS after MOVEMENTS (so that, of course, everything remains at a standstill) and periodically works himself up into a state of fictitious exaltation. I have warned him, but in vain.
Page me39.523

Mr Golovin — Herzen's fidus Achates†c — has inserted in today's Morning Advertiser, under the heading 'February Revolution', a small notice to the effect that

'he has heard that Herzen is to represent Russia, OR RATHER LIBERAL RUSSIA, at the banquet. His name alone betrays that he is a German, or rather a German Jew.

Page Break me39.524

In Russia the Czar is criticised for making especial use of these people. The emigration should take care not TO FALL INTO THE SAME ERROR'.†a

Page me39.524

If, as the Paris correspondent writes in the 2ND EDITION of today's Morning Chronicle,†b Bonaparte minor†c assumes personally the supreme command of the Army of the Rhine against Prussia, the 'campagne' might end badly for the French.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.524

First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

265

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.524

[London,] 3 March 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

On Tuesday†d you will be hearing from me at some length. Today no more than these few lines to explain the reasons for my silence:

Page me39.524

1. Musch†e has had a dangerous gastric fever which he has still not shaken off (this is the worst of all).

Page me39.524

2. The BABY†f GREW EVERY DAY WORSE and was disturbing the whole household so that a few days ago a change of wet nurse became necessary.

Page Break me39.525

Page me39.525

3. My wife, although splendidly recovered from her confinement, has had a so-called whitlow on the index finger of her right hand. Though a minor affliction, it is extremely painful and irritating. The thing was operated upon yesterday.

Page me39.525

4. First I had my eye trouble, now more or less over; then such a frightful cough that I had to swallow several bottles of medicine and even keep to my bed for a few days.

Page me39.525
So you see the whole house was and, to some extent still is, a hospital.
Page me39.525
I shall get you Herzen's stuff†641; likewise yesterday's People's Paper, in which you can read about Jones' and Herzen's COMMON PROCEEDINGS.†a Should I throw Jones out if he comes again, or should I proceed 'diplomatically'?
Page me39.525
The doctor says I need a change of air, not having left the PRECINCTS OF SOHO SQUARE for 2 years. So I should like to visit Manchester before my wife goes to Trier again. Should you, in view of your old man's impending arrival or for any other reason, find it awkward to put me up, I could take a room in Manchester. I must at any rate — but not, of course, until everything's all right here — get away from this place for a while, since the physical staleness also stultifies my brain.
Page me39.525
Que dites-vous de la mort de Nicholas?†b I like the way The Times insinuates that his death was partly due to fright because 'HIS WORST ENEMY' — Palmerston — has become Premier of England.†c
Page me39.525
Vale faveque.†d

Totus tuus,†e
K.M.

Page me39.525
Have heard nothing from Cluss for months.

Page me39.525
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.526

266
MARX TO ENGELS†234
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.526
[London,] 8 March 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
Received the £5.
Page me39.526

I cannot get away until COLONEL Musch is visibly recovered. However, this week he has made rapid strides towards convalescence, today the doctor was EXCEEDINGLY PLEASED, and next week everything may be ALL RIGHT. As soon as I can depart with a good conscience, I shall write to you. Next week, I imagine.
Page me39.526

Yesterday we were informed of A VERY HAPPY EVENT, the death of my wife's uncle, aged 90.†a As a result, my mother-in-law†b will save an annual impost of 200 talers and my wife will get almost £100; more if the old dog hasn't made over to his housekeeper such of his money as is not entailed. Another question which will be settled is that of the Duke of Brunswick's manuscript on the Seven Years' War, for which old Scharnhorst has already offered large sums. My wife immediately registered a protest against any attempts by her brother†c to make a present of it to 'His Most Gracious Highness'.†d Let the Prussian state acquire it for cash BUT NOT OTHERWISE.
Page me39.526

There is a prospect of another possible source of money. My wife had deposited 1,300 talers with one Grach, a banker in Trier. The fellow went bankrupt and, in her case, had acted fraudulently, since he was already insolvent (although unbeknown to the public) when he accepted her deposit. On the urgent plea of the wife of this Grach, my wife 'relented' and refrained from pursuing the matter in the courts. The Chief Public Prosecutor had stated that Grach would otherwise be brought before the Assizes. This Grach's wife has now inherited a large fortune and, if she keeps her promise, we can count on the recovery of at least part of the loss. In any case this will mean that the 'past' has been discharged once and for all and a weight lifted from our shoulders.
Page me39.526

Napoleon Bonaparte's†e pamphlet — (Girardin denies in La Presse that he is the faiseur†f) — amused me very much.†642 Despite the attempt to present 'le prince' in an imposing attitude, despite the French braggadocio, superficiality, and BLUNDERS in things military, the pamphlet is worth its weight in gold as a memorial to our Leroy, alias St-Arnaud, and generally as typical of the 'IMPERIAL BARNUM'†a and his round table.

Page Break me39.527
Page me39.527

There is one point you might clear up for me about the Crimean business, namely: General Evans declared before the committee†b that the main reason for the MELTING OF THE ARMY before Sevastopol was the absence of a road from the harbour of Balaklava; 1,000 men would have sufficed to build one in 10 days, but — et c'est la question†c — ALL MEN WHO COULD HAVE BEEN SPARED WERE EMPLOYED IN THE TRENCHES, and from the start the extent of the lines to be captured by the English was grossly disproportionate TO THEIR NUMERICAL STRENGTH. The question is: Could the French be regarded as the CONTRIVERS of this MISCHIEF?
Page me39.527

A short while ago I took another look at Roman history (ancient) up to the time of Augustus.†643 Internal history resolves itself PLAINLY into the struggle between small and large landed property, specifically modified, of course, by slavery relations. Debtor-creditor relations, which play so large a part from the origines of Roman history, figure merely as an inherent consequence of small landed property.

Page me39.527

Today I saw an advertisement for 3 works by Forster, a parson, all having in common the title Original Language.
Page me39.527

As you will have seen, Mr Herzen is now having himself puffed in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung also.†d At the same time his SPEECH (at Jones' meeting) is appearing in The People's Paper as a fly-sheet and in pére Ribeyrolles' estimable L'Homme.†e

Your
K.M.

Page me39.527
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.528

267
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.528
[London,] 16 March 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I do not believe that the good Musch is going to get over his illness. You will understand how this prospect affects all of us here. My wife once again altogether DOWN. However, the issue will soon be known.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.528
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

268
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.528
[London,] 27 March 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Musch has been improving visibly for the past few days and the doctor sees every reason for hope. If all goes well, Musch must go into the country straight away. He is, of course, terribly weak and wasted. The fever IS GOT RID OF and the constipation considerably abated. The real question now is whether his constitution is strong enough to undergo the whole treatment. However, I think it is. As soon as the doctor says he is out of danger, I shall come and visit you.
Page me39.528

Dronke has arrived here and is applying for Freiligrath's post, Freiligrath having definitely broken with his principal.†a

Page Break me39.529
Page me39.529

You must forgive me for not writing more than these few lines. I am dog-tired from the long night vigils, since I am Musch's nurse.
Page me39.529

Warmest regards from the whole family, Musch included.
Page me39.529

Tell Lupus that Furrer, the Swiss with whom he used to be in touch, has gone bankrupt and actually done his resident tutor out of £14.
Page me39.529

Vale faveque.†a

Totus tuus,†b
K.M.

Page me39.529
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

269
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.529
[London,] 30 March 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

From day to day I have put off sending you a bulletin†c because the ups and downs of the illness were such that I changed my opinion almost hourly. Latterly, however, the illness has assumed the character, hereditary in my family, of an abdominal consumption, and even the doctor seems to have given up hope. For the past week emotional stress has made my wife iller than ever before. As for myself, though my heart is bleeding and my head afire, I must, of course, maintain my composure. Never for one moment throughout his illness has the child been untrue to his own good-natured, and at the same time independent, self.
Page me39.529

As for you, I cannot thank you enough for the kindness with which you have worked in my stead, and for the sympathy you have shown towards the child.

Page Break me39.530
Page me39.530

Should there be any change for the better, I shall write to you at once.

Totus tuus,†a
K.M.

Page me39.530

Notabene. There's no sailing for America next Tuesday†b and it doesn't do to send the chaps two articles at once every time. So give this Tuesday a miss.

Page me39.530
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

270
MARX TO ENGELS†213
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.530
[London,] 6 April 1855

28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Poor Musch is no more. Between 5 and 6 o'clock today he fell asleep (in the literal sense) in my arms. I shall never forget how much your friendship has helped to make this ghastly time easier for us. You will understand how I grieve over the child. My wife sends her warmest regards. I might, if I come to Manchester, bring her with me for a week, in which case we should, of course, stay at an inn (or perhaps take PRIVATE LODGINGS). At any rate I must find some means of helping her over the first days.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.530
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me39.531
Page me39.531

Edgar Marx (Musch)

Page Break me39.532
Page Break me39.533

271
MARX TO ENGELS†213
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.533
[London,] 12 April 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I am thinking of coming up to Manchester with my wife on Wednesday†a; she must have a change of scene for a few days. Unless I let you know to the contrary, Wednesday will be the day. I shall-at any rate be writing again on Monday.
Page me39.533

Needless to say, the house has been very desolate and bereft since the death of the dear child†b who was its life and soul. I cannot tell you how we miss the child at every turn. I've already had my share of bad luck but only now do I know what real unhappiness is. I feel BROKEN DOWN. Since the funeral I have been fortunate enough to have such splitting headaches that I can neither think nor hear nor see.
Page me39.533

Amid all the fearful torments I have recently had to endure, the thought of you and your friendship has always sustained me, as has the hope that there is still something sensible for us to do together in the world.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.533
My wife has just brought me a line or two for you, which I enclose.

Page me39.533
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me39.534

272
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.534
[London,] 16 April [1855]

Dear Engels,
I shall be leaving with my wife for Manchester on Wednesday morning by the parliamentary train.†145
Page me39.534
Dronke and I have just seen Badinguet crossing Westminster Bridge.†644 A monkey in uniform.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.534
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

273
MARX TO MORITZ ELSNER
IN BRESLAU

Page me39.534
[London,] 17 April 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Elsner,

I shall be away from London for a few days in company with my wife. Dronke has kindly agreed to carry on with the articles during that time. He will today be sending you a report on Bonaparte's arrival.†a In case I don't see him again, I am writing to you separately.

Page me39.534

The 2 enclosed articles†b constitute the beginning of a polemic against pan-Slavism.†609 In my view it is high time that Germany be made seriously aware of the dangers threatening her. You may print these things when you think fit, for they have nothing directly to do with our regular articles. However I'm convinced that there is no time to lose. The alarm must be sounded in Germany.

Page Break me39.535

Page me39.535

In the same context the Berlin 'Critical Criticism'†a will be lambasted for its arrogant stupidity.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.535

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

274
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.535
[London,] 16 May 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

My wife is most unwell; the household in general still very upset. From the day we left Manchester†645 the weather here has been unremittingly awful.

Page me39.535

Dronke, the little fool, refuses to send you the Bruno Bauer†646 until you have sent him his 'rubbers'. The 'Petermann'†b got packed by mistake. Would already have been returned to you if I hadn't wanted to send it at the same time as the Bruno Bauer. Tell me how you wish it done. If you send the little fool his shoes, you might at the same time send me the Decker, which I forgot.†c
Page me39.535
I have written to Breslau.†647 No answer yet. In the meantime write and tell me in greater detail how many sheets — whether in separate volumes or ALL TOGETHER —, charges, etc.†609

Page Break me39.536
Page me39.536
At long last a few more Tribunes from Cluss, together with a couple of lines in which he indicates that he will be writing.
Page me39.536
Herewith 1. The Sunday Times on the 'Soho scorpions'. 2. A cutting from The People's Paper†a in which you may read about Mr Jones' curious negotiations with the City reformers,†648 and 'how he was brought down' (clearly the chaps wanted to have the working plebs standing in the street outside their doors as mere supernumeraries, just for SHOW and to demonstrate their movement's popularity). The business is VERY CURIOUS INDEED.
Page me39.536
Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.536
The Political Fly-Sheets†b have now come out as a book. In the foreword Mr Tucker thanks me by name†c which, with an Aliens Bill†75 in the offing, is NOT QUITE RECOMMENDATORY.

Page me39.536
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

275
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.536

[London,] 18 May†d 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

My wife has been confined to bed since yesterday evening. As I cannot draw a bill before a week on Tuesday (next),†e I should be much obliged if you could send me some money (however little).

Page me39.536

The devil take the Tribune! Certainly it is now absolutely essential that it should adopt an anti-pan-Slav line.†649 If it doesn't, one might be compelled to break with the rag, which would be disastrous.

Page Break me39.537

Page me39.537

As you will have seen in an earlier no. of the Augsburg Allgemeine,†a as from next August, the great Herzen will be bringing out a Russian periodical here, the Polar Star.†b

Page me39.537

My warm regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.537

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

276
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.537

London, 15 June [1855]
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Your article†c just arrived (4 o'clock in the afternoon). Our inebriated postman had already passed the door when Lenchen grabbed him and took away the letter. From Dana's letter,†650 enclosed herewith, you will see that he is asking for 1. a column on the Prussian army for the Tribune, 2. a sheet on all the European armies for Putnam's Review.†d If you have no time to do the latter, you must send me the material and I shall have to do it.†651 It is true that, in the latter case, my unfamiliarity with the subject would make for a sorry result, but I cannot let slip the £10 to be earned in this way, for, on the one hand, no money is yet coming in from the legacy and, on the other, expenses have been very heavy; added to which there has been a loss of earnings, since the worthy Dronke did not keep the Neue Oder-Zeitung supplied during my absence (despite his promise) and, as to the Tribune itself, there was still an overdraft outstanding (only cleared off by today's post†e).

Page Break me39.538
Page me39.538

With regard to the Petermann,†a I sent it to Manchester by Pfänder, together with a note, while you were away in the LAKES. Pfänder is now in Manchester again, so will be able to give you particulars.

Page me39.538

For Lupus: Lost his bet. The pubs here open at 1 o'clock on Sundays, not half past twelve.

Page me39.538

These lines in great haste. More in my next.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.538

Apropos: Bruno Bauer has brought out a pamphlet on the Russian Church.†b

Page me39.538

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

277
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.538
[London,] 26 June 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

I did not send off any article last Friday†c because [articles dispatched] simultaneously from London and Manchester would have aroused the fellows' suspicions. On Tuesday (last)†d I sent off an article of an entirely general nature on Bonaparte's diplomacy, the treaties of 1815 and the Prussian Field Marshal Knesebeck.†e For at the Congress of Vienna the latter cracked some good jokes about the Poles.†f

Page me39.538

Next Friday†g it will be virtually impossible to avoid writing a military piece about the affair at Malakhov and Redan on the anniversary of Waterloo.†652 Tomorrow and the day after I shall go to the library and look up something on the Spanish army. You shall have what I can find by the end of this week in any case.

Page Break me39.539

Page me39.539

Regarding your pamphlet†609 Elsner writes to me:

'You have far too lofty an idea of our booksellers if you believe that any one of them would consent to bring out something written by Engels. All those I asked refused, no doubt because they are afraid of acquiring the reputation of being revolutionary.... Should you intend making inquiries in Berlin, perhaps Alexander Duncker would be most likely to take the work.'

Page me39.539

Weerth could negotiate with Duncker.†653

Page me39.539

The demonstration in Hyde Park on Sunday afternoon had quite a revolutionary air.†654

Page me39.539

This short note is written to the accompaniment of an appalling toothache which has been plaguing me for a week now.

Page me39.539

Salut!

Your
K.M.

Page me39.539

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

278

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.539

London, 29 June [1855]

Dear Engels,

When you have read the accompanying scraps, you will say: multa INSTEAD OF multum.†a And rightly so. I was unable to find the most important item, viz. the number and calibre of guns for Spain, although I leafed rapidly through the whole book of Ordenanzas. You'll find something in this respect about the mountain artillery in one of the notes. To judge by a passage in the Portuguese Revista militar, Spanish artillery is largely on a French footing as regards matériel.

Page Break me39.540

Page me39.540

I have got together all manner of stuff, some of which may be of use.

Page me39.540

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.540

Where Minutoli (Baron) quoted, reference is to his book: Spanien und seine fortschreitende Entwicklung etc., Berlin, 1852.

Page me39.540

I believe it's that swine of a policeman. Was and still may be Prussian Consul General in SPAIN and Portugal.

Page me39.540

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

279

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.540

[London,] 3 July 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

The £5 received on Monday.

Page me39.540

For 3 days I have been rummaging through a mass of stuff at the Museum†651 without finding anything about the Neapolitan army save for the following, which may also be found in MacCulloch's Dictionary Geographical, Statistical etc.
Page me39.540
In 1848 the army NEARLY 49,000 strong (this seems to be its war footing, as I find it given (in a Dizionario Politico, Turin) as 26-27,000 strong in 1840). Of these, 32,000 INFANTRY OF THE LINE, 5,000 CAVALRY, 4,000 ARTILLERY AND ENGINEERS, and 8,000 gendarmes. They claim to be able to increase their army to 64,237 and this is given as the official war footing.

Page Break me39.540a
Page me39.540a

Amalie and Roland Daniels

Page Break me39.540b
Page Break me39.541
Page me39.541
I discovered from Ricciardi that the son of Ferdinand I†a and father of King Bomba†b first engaged the Swiss — in 1824 or 1825 — for 30 years (the Neapolitan army having aped the Spanish and mutinied) at 3 times the pay of the NATIVE ARMY. Since the government of the Two Sicilies relies on Swiss and lazzaroni at home and on the Austrian army abroad, and itself estimates at zero its badly paid, undisciplined, demoralised, cowardly army, I believe that in any survey of the European armies, this estimate made by its own government could be accepted, the army put at zero, and its strength mentioned only en passant.
Page me39.541
There might be something more detailed in Mariotti. But I couldn't get hold of it as it was always 'IN HAND' whenever I asked for it.
Page me39.541
Our family life here is still melancholy. My wife still very unwell. The memory of our poor, dear child†c torments us, and even interposes itself in his sisters'†d play. Such blows can only be mitigated slowly, with the passage of time. To me the loss is as poignant as on the first day and hence I can tell how much my wife is suffering. Should the Scotch money†e arrive in time I shall spend a few weeks in Kent, where plenty of cheap and pleasantly situated places are said to be available.
Page me39.541
The scenes in Hyde Park last Sunday were DISGUSTING, firstly because of the CONSTABLES' brutality, and secondly because of the purely passive resistance put up by the huge crowds.†655 However, things are clearly seething and fermenting and we can only hope that great disasters in the Crimea will bring them to a head.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.541
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.542

280
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.542
[London,] 17 July 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,

Strohn is here and, unfortunately, prevents me from sending an ARTICLE to the Tribune today. I therefore intend to send off on Friday,†a under Tuesday's date, an article on the latest ministerial crisis, and I should be very grateful if, at the same time, you would send me one on, say, the Prussian army (assuming that nothing occurs in the theatre of war),†b so that 2 articles go off at once. For I shall be compelled to draw a bill on the Tribune next week, or rather overdraw and appreciably so at that, as I had already overdrawn last time, and this time several days have been missed.
Page me39.542

A German returning from Yankeeland, Gustav Pöckel, brought me a line or two from Edgar†c and more detailed news about him and other acquaintances. Of late, Edgar had been working as a farm labourer near New York and intended to sell his farm in Texas. Schramm†d is said to be dying of consumption and is also in New York State. Ewerbeck passed through about eighteen months ago on his way to visit Cabet in Nauvoo. Fickler took over the Shakespeare Hotel after Liévre went bankrupt, making the most of the occasion to do the dirty on him. Jacobi's†e affairs are prospering; the Yankees like his 'serious' and 'reserved' manner. Field Marshal Blenker and a few other notorious swindlers from the days of the revolution comedy have bought up real estate with the stolen funds and, as regards swagger and brutality towards their workpeople, are said to put the Yankees completely in the shade. Heinzen has re-established himself in New York with his Pionier. All in all, things are going very badly for the Germans over there, at one and the same time harassed by the Maine Law, KNOW-NOTHINGS†656 and the crisis in agriculture and industry. Hence a substantial re-emigration to Germany, Canada and South America.
Page me39.542

Through the mediation of German merchants in Paris (one of them a supporter of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung) Dronke has received an affirmative reply to his application for permission to return to Paris. He proposes to set off this week, as soon as he has recouped the 'costs of production'.

Page Break me39.543
Page me39.543
Imandt is in Scotland for 4 weeks on a visit to Heise. He has placed his COTTAGE in Camberwell at my disposal in the meantime. The whole FAMILY will move there and avail themselves of the change of air until we can afford something bigger.
Page me39.543
As to the enclosed letters:
No. I. From Lassalle in Paris.
No. II. I send you for your amusement Szeredy's Asiatic Chiefs, together with the fellow's appeal to me.†657
Page me39.543
No. III. Letter from Florencourt (the only one you need return). Contains an account of how things stand with the legacy.†a You will observe on the one hand that the legacy has increased by £515, while on the other all manner of delays are militating against its rapid realisation. This Florencourt is not the notorious one,†b but his brother.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.543
Do you know of any book on the êtres†c of LITTLE Johnny Russell?†658

Page me39.543
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

281
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN PARIS
Page me39.543
London, 28 July 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho†d

Dear Lassalle,
I have been staying in the country for the past few weeks in a cottage lent me by a friend†e who is away in Scotland. That is why I did not get your letter until yesterday. I have, incidentally, taken steps to have my letters forwarded to me immediately from town.

Page Break me39.544
Page me39.544
I am, of course, surprised to hear that, despite your proximity to London, you are not thinking of coming over here, if only for a few days. I hope that you will think it over again and discover how short and cheap the journey from Paris to London is. If France's doors were not hermetically closed against me, I would pay you a surprise visit in Paris.
Page me39.544
I have several friends in Paris, but I shall not be able to send you their addresses (I am not in town at the moment of writing) until I go to Soho, where I keep them.
Page me39.544
Bacon says that really important people have so many relations to nature and the world, so many objects of interest, that they easily get over any loss. I am not one of those important people. The death of my child†a has shattered me to the very core and I feel the loss as keenly as on the first day. My poor wife is also completely BROKEN DOWN.
Page me39.544
If you see Heine again, give him my regards.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.544
First published in the Frankfurter Zeitung, 10 August 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

282
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.544
[London,] 7 August 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
The FAMILY (hence, for the most part, myself also) still in Camberwell. Pieper came and stayed with us for a week. I was thus prevented from writing, save for the necessary pieces for New York AND GERMANY. The article on the 'ARMIES' is splendid.†b
Page me39.544
From the enclosed letter from Steffen you will see what a bad state our friend Daniels and Bürgers are in. I am particularly sorry about the first. I don't know whether, in my résumé of the report by the visitor from Yankeeland,†a I mentioned that Conrad Schramm is consumptive and is taking a cure of ass's milk chez former Field Marshal Blenker.

Page Break me39.545
Page me39.545
In the past weeks I have sent the Tribune a series of articles — i.e. 3 — about Lord John Russell in which the little man is passed in review from the very beginning.†659 However, it will soon be necessary to say SOME WORDS about the war and also, perhaps, about how the affaire is going in Asia.
Page me39.545
Dronke has suffered a bitter disappointment. For it eventually transpired that the issue of a passport to Paris had been due to a misunderstanding on the part of the French Embassy; rather, express instructions had been given that he was not to be admitted into France. In a few days it will be decided whether or not he has obtained a post in Jersey.
Page me39.545
Bonaparte has, within the bounds of pure reason, solved the problem I set him, namely 'to steal the whole of France in order to make a present of it to France again'.†b His manoeuvrings over the loan are significant experiments in that direction.
Page me39.545
What do you think of the Austrian concentration of troops in Italy? Have you seen the 2nd Mémoire d'un Officier Général?†660

Your
K.M.

Page me39.545
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

283
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.545
1 September 1855
3 York Place, Denmark,†c
Camberwell

Dear Frederic,
Imandt has gone off to Montrose and chucked up his whole CONCERN here for the highly dubious prospect of a post in

Page Break me39.546
Arbroath. I have taken over his goods and chattels and shall remain here until the arrival of the Scotch money.†a Then I shall rent some decent lodgings. Until then I shall have to keep the house in Dean Street. The country air has suited the whole FAMILY uncommonly well, my wife especially.
Page me39.546
Received your article†b yesterday. The Russian report is now in all the Hamburg papers as well.
Page me39.546
As regards Putnam's, we must now get a move on. In a letter I got from Dana he already evinced anxiety lest No. 2†c should arrive too late. But it was there on time, as I see from a subsequent letter.†d Putnam has asked for another article on 'THE IMPROVEMENTS IN MODERN WARFARE'. The New-York Times contains criticism which is generally favourable, but clearly grudging: off duty, Englishmen don't wear 'narrow trousers', their squadrons number more than 400 SABRES, and a ? after 'SABRES' too, and, lastly, the writer seems to be unaware that in England flogging is now restricted to 50 strokes and is inflicted only in exceptional cases. The business at Aldershot where, ABOUT 14 DAYS ago, a SOLDIER died from 30 strokes of the lash, is comment enough on the criticus concerning whose nonsense I have sent Dana the requisite observations.†661
Page me39.546
Have you been following Napier's row with Graham? The 1st article was in The Times, the 2nd in the Advertiser and the Herald.†662 Today the Advertiser's first LEADER contains the exchange of letters between Charley and James. A reply from Graham to Napier's first articles is also, it seems, to appear in one of today's papers.
Page me39.546
I wonder whether you have noticed that the Austrians made use of the time they were deploying their armies in Galicia to construct, under Hess' general supervision, railways of solely strategic importance; likewise fortifications directed against Russia.

Page me39.546
I hope that you will now write and tell me something about yourself and your doings.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.546
Unless I am mistaken, our Ko&sa;cielski also appears in Pélissier's battle report.†e

Page Break me39.547
Page me39.547
If Admiral Bruat's account in today's Times†a is to be believed, the Russians are at STARVATION-POINT. At any rate, there would not as yet appear to be any shortage of spirits.

Page me39.547
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

284
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.547
6 September 1855
3 York Place, Denmark Street
(not Hill, which is merely the GENERAL NAME for the whole place)
Camberwell

Dear Engels,

You may already have read about the death of our friend Daniels in the Kölnische Zeitung.†b He is no more nor less than a victim of the infamies of the Prussian Police. I shall be writing a few lines to his wife,†c and you must do the same. Address: Frau Doktorin Amalie Daniels, Schildergasse, Köln. It would be desirable if Lupus did likewise. I know by experience how welcome letters from friends are at such a time. I shall write a short obituary of our poor friend for the Tribune. So far as the German-American Press is concerned, I think the best plan would be to insert in the New York Neue Zeit (nominally edited by Bernhardt, in fact by Löwe of Calbe) a brief obituary notice signed by you, Freiligrath, Lupus and myself. Also to denounce the proceedings against Bürgers.
Page me39.547

You will have heard that O'Connor died a few days ago.
Page me39.547

Jones' wife is mortally ill. The poor devil IS AT THIS MOMENT IN DESPERATE CIRCUMSTANCES.
Page me39.547

A STEAMER is leaving on Tuesday. It is essential in the case of Putnam's that the thing should be in New York by 10th October at the latest. Have you received the copy that was sent you?†a Those inane bits of hair-splitting did not appear in the Tribune but in The New-York Times, the RIVAL PAPER.†b As for Aldershot, the business was simply as follows: About a fortnight ago 2 privates were sentenced, one to 50 lashes, the other to 30, for 'disrespectful' behaviour towards their superiors. As is often the case, the CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS was steeped in urine. The first man had to be sent to hospital after receiving 40 lashes, and the second died shortly after receiving 30. There would appear to be no further question of an inquiry.

Page Break me39.548

Page me39.548
In The Morning Advertiser, Blind continues 'TO SHAKE THE DESPOTIC POWERS OF EUROPE TO THEIR VERY FOUNDATIONS'.
Page me39.548
A German rag has reappeared in London, the actual rédacteur en chef†c being the ill-famed Sigmund Engländer, of Paris police memory. Chief contributors: Ronge, the Russian Herzen and a drunkard by the name of Korn, allegedly an ex-captain.†663
Page me39.548
Vale.†d

Your
K.M.

Page me39.548
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

285
MARX TO AMALIE DANIELS IN COLOGNE
Page me39.548
London, 6 September 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

My Dear Mrs Daniels,
It is impossible to describe the grief I felt on hearing that dear, unforgettable Roland had passed away. Although the latest news reaching me through Steffen had been far from reassuring,†e I did not for all that ever abandon hope of your excellent husband's recovery. His was a sensitive, finely-tuned and altogether noble nature — character, talents and physical appearance in rare harmony. Seen amongst the others in Cologne, Daniels always seemed to me like the statue of a Greek god deposited by some freak of fate in the midst of a crowd of Hottentots. His premature decease is an irreparable loss not only to his family and friends but also to science, in which he gave promise of the finest achievements, and to the great, suffering mass of humanity, who possessed in him a loyal champion.

Page Break me39.549

Page me39.549

I am sufficiently acquainted with your heroic nature to be convinced that imperishable grief will not prevent you from remaining the loyal guardian of the beloved pledges left you by Roland. In his sons you will compensate the world twice over for the loss of the father.
Page me39.549

The news of this new loss has revived in my wife such vivid memories of the death of our only little son†a that her state of mind does not permit of her writing to you just now. She is weeping and lamenting like a child.
Page me39.549

Consolation I will not venture to offer you since I myself am and shall remain inconsolable for [the] loss of a friend who was more dear to me personally than any other. Grief such as this cannot be alleviated, but only shared. As soon as I get over my first stormy emotions, I shall send an obituary to the New-York Tribune for the many friends of the departed in America. It is to be hoped that circumstances will some day permit us to wreak upon those guilty of cutting short his career vengeance of a kind sterner than that of an obituary.
Page me39.549

You will need no assurance on my part that you can always count on me as a loyal and devoted friend.
Page me39.549

With my heartfelt sympathy,

Yours
K. Marx

Page me39.549
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.550

286
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.550
11 September 1855
3 York Place, Denmark Street,
Camberwell

Dear Engels,

Like the Russians, I have been compelled by force supérieure TO EVACUATE THE SOUTHERN SIDE without, however, blowing everything up behind me.†664 Indeed, my garrison will remain quietly here, whither I also propose to return IN A WEEK OR SO. In other words, I am obliged to withdraw to Manchester for a few days and shall arrive there tomorrow evening. I shall have to stay there incognito, so don't let anyone know about my presence — Lupus, OF COURSE, EXCEPTED, should you by chance see him.

Page me39.550

I have amended your letter†a just received, to accord with the latest telegraphic dispatches.

Page me39.550

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.550

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

287

MARX TO MORITZ ELSNER†665
IN BRESLAU

Page me39.550

London, 11 September 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho†b

Dear Elsner,

It was impossible for me to write last week because of legal proceedings taken against me by the worthy Dr Freund. He has actually compelled me to leave London for a week or so. During

Page Break me39.551

Moritz Elsner

Page Break me39.552
Page Break me39.553

the parliamentary recess this does not, of course, impair my efficiency as a correspondent. This month, therefore, you should not put me on your books until 11 September.
Page me39.553
It goes without saying that, should your paper cease to pay yet still remain viable, my contributions will be at your disposal then as now.
Page me39.553
Considering the difficult circumstances and the limited space at your disposal, your paper is, in my opinion, edited with great skill and tact, and in such a way that the intelligent reader may read between the lines. Nothing can be more fatuous than to censure you for receiving 'constitutional' money. Some very 'constitutional' citizens paid in shares for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. If these gentlemen subsequently came to regret it, they were at least never forbidden by the editorial board to go on paying.
Page me39.553
If I were not so afraid of compromising this or that acquaintance by the mere fact of corresponding with him, I should long since have written to the Rhine Province in the interests of your paper. At all events, Lassalle did wrong in failing to draw attention to the Neue Oder-Zeitung in Cologne, etc. Circumstances would have allowed him to do so.
Page me39.553
Should the N.O.-Z. go under, we shall have to console ourselves with the thought that all our present doings, activities and beginnings are purely provisional and no more than a pis aller.
Page me39.553
With kindest regards.

Yours
K.M.

Page me39.553
A German weekly rag has been started in London, its founder being the French ex(?)-policeman and Viennese refugee, Sigmund Engländer. Contributors: the Russian Herzen, Johannes Ronge and a drunkard by the name of Korn, allegedly a capitaine.†663

Page me39.553
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.554

288
MARX TO MORITZ ELSNER
IN BRESLAU

Page me39.554
Manchester, 8 November 1855
34 Butler Street, Green Keys

Dear Elsner,

I have received both your letters,†666 the first somewhat belatedly because my wife accidentally delayed sending it on to Manchester. After receiving your first letter I thought you had resigned from the Neue Oder-Zeitung and for that reason at once ceased to send any articles. When your second letter arrived I was suffering from such a FIT of toothache — which persisted until a few days ago — that I could no more write than I could hear or see.

Page me39.554

I passed on your letter of 7 October not only to friends but also to adversaries, and the latter seemed thoroughly taken aback. That I and my friends are in no way affected by the dogmas of Messrs Temme and Simon of Breslau you will readily believe without any further assurance from me.

Page me39.554

I do not see Hoyoll, but Lupus does — from time to time. Patriotism has led this Hoyoll to introduce the Breslauer Zeitung into the Athenaeum†244 here, a circumstance which threatens to drive our little Wolff†a out of what is virtually the only home of the Muses in Manchester.

Page me39.554

I have conveyed your greetings to Borchardt, whom I know well. Borchardt maintains a regular and intimate correspondence with Citizen Simon of Breslau. Upon his first asking me whether I knew that the N.O.-Z. lived in sin with the constitutionals, I replied: 'Qu'est ce que ça me fait?†b Don't you know that, in my view, constitutionals and democrats, at least of the Prussian variety, are all much of a muchness? And is a distinction now to be drawn between democrats who have accepted one royal imposition while rejecting another and those who, having submitted to the one, also submit to the other?†667 The N.O.-Z. expresses the most extreme views possible in the present condition of the Press. What more do you ask?'

Page me39.554

I have had letters from particularly well-informed people in Paris. According to them, the Empire's stock is sinking lower and lower. In the faubourgs the slogan, 'Celui-ci s'en ira'†a is said to be on everyone's lips. Indeed, the gravity of the situation may be deduced from two PUBLIC FACTS: the speech made by Rouland, the procurateur-général,†b and Granier de Cassagnac's article in the Constitutionnel, 'Sur les terreurs de la Révolution future'.†c The probability of the latter is beyond doubt even to Mr Granier.

Page Break me39.555

Page me39.555

As for the scandal here over the 'refugee question' (Jersey, etc.), there's more smoke to it than fire.†668 PUBLIC OPINION has definitely turned against the GOVERNMENT and, in fact, I believe that this was allowed for in the latter's calculations. So crassly, with such tragi-comical mouthings, did they accede to Bonaparte's first demands, as virtually to demonstrate that further concessions were not within the power of an English government. Had they been in earnest, they would have shown themselves more adroit and not have carried out the grotesque coup so long before the opening of Parliament. Palmerston, OF COURSE, has no love for the refugees, but regards them as wind-bags to be kept to hand so that he may occasionally threaten the Continent with a 'Quos ego!'†d His ministerial position, by the by, is exceedingly precarious. But it will still be difficult to unseat the old fox.

Page me39.555

When you next write, kindly send your letter to my old address, 28 Dean Street, Soho, London, since I don't know how long I shall be remaining here, and letters sent to the above address will in any case come into the hands of my wife. Ronge is running kindergartens in London along with his wife; Kinkel, no less than Johanna,†e hopes that the revolution will not be unduly precipitate; in Brighton, Ruge gives an occasional lecture, leading the English to believe that the German language is the most debased of all; Tausenau, Meyen et tutti quanti†f abuse the French émigré 'riff-raff' (not excluding Victor Hugo) for imperilling the 'right of asylum' of these 'officially authorised conspirators'.
Page me39.555

Engels and Lupus send you their warmest regards. I haven't seen Borchardt for a fortnight.

Yours
K.M.

Page me39.555
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.556

289
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me39.556
Manchester, 8th November 1855
34 Butler Street, Green Keys

Dear Lassalle,

Herewith a very belated answer. In the first place, I did not get your letters†669 until later because I was in Manchester whereas the letters were in London and my wife did not know for certain whether I hadn't already left Manchester. For another thing, I was plagued by the most atrocious toothache, so much so that I experienced what Hegel demands of sensual consciousness at the stage at which it is said to override consciousness of self — viz. the inability to hear, see, and therefore also to write.

Page me39.556

As regards your query about the book entitled: Les mystéres de la Bourse by Coffiniéres, I believe that this miserable concoction is still among the books I left behind in the fatherland. During my first stay in Paris†670 the title misled me first into buying the thing and then into reading it. Mr Coffiniéres is a lawyer who, au fond,†a knows nothing about the Bourse and merely warns against the 'legal' swindles perpetrated by the 'agents de change'.†b So there's nothing to be got out of the book — neither FACTS, nor theory, nor yet even entertaining anecdotes. Moreover, it is now completely out-of-date. 'Sweet Donna, let him go' — i.e. Coffiniéres. 'He is not worthy of thy wrath'.†c
Page me39.556

Weerth is now back in Manchester after a lengthy journey via the Continent (he returned from the West Indies at the end of July). In a week's time he will be off to the tropics again. It's very amusing to hear him talk. He has seen, experienced and observed much. Ranged over the better part of South, West and Central America. Crossed the Pampas on horseback. Climbed Chimborazo. Likewise stayed in California. If he no longer writes feuilletons,†671 he makes up for it by recounting them, and his audience has the benefit of vivacious gesture, mime and waggish laughter. He is, by the by, full of enthusiasm for life in the West Indies and hasn't a good word to say for the human riff-raff and the weather of this northern clime. And, INDEED, things are bad here, very bad.

Page Break me39.557
Page me39.557

You will have read in the papers about the Jersey affair†668 and the general to-do over the refugee question in England. I don't believe that this affair will take a serious turn. Nor, for that matter, do I believe that the government here had a serious end in view. Otherwise the row would have been saved up until just before the opening of Parliament. As it is, PUBLIC OPINION has been given time to swing back and, in many respects, has already done so.
Page me39.557

Send your next letter to my old address in London as I'm not sure how long I shall stay up here with friend Engels. He and Lupus send you their warm regards.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.557
First published in: F. Lassalle, Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

290
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.557
London, 7 December 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

Jones does not appear to be in London. At least, I haven't had an answer, either oral or written, to an urgent written enquiry.†672 Thus, since my arrival here, I have been incarcerated within 4 walls which, after all, I can't spend the whole day haranguing. But just now it would be too risky to venture out of doors.

Page me39.557

The document†a did not go off to the Union Bank until the day before yesterday. The delay was caused by all sorts of little things.

Page me39.557

No reply yet from America, i.e. New York. The gentlemen would appear to be 'deliberating'.†b No letter from Washington, but a Wecker and with it a note, patently by Cluss, attacking Schimmelpfennig. Alas, I used up the Wecker during an unconsidered moment in a place where 'hard words, soft paper, etc.' It contained the assertion that the Germans in America were UTILITARIANS and pursued 'bread-and-butter' because 'Mr Marx is an economist and an abstruse one'. But in Mr Marx's case this could be attributed to the 'Old Testament'. 'By a well-known trick' he had 'turned “our relations” into a philosophical system'. That thoughtful young Germans in America should follow his lead was attributable to the fact that Germans are accustomed 'to echo clever writers belonging to the nation of the Old Testament etc.'

Page Break me39.558

Page me39.558

Since ABOUT the time of my return here, the Advertiser has been the arena for a cockfight between Herzen and an anonymous antagonist. His antagonist reproaches him with being a humbug and having passed himself off as a kind of Russian Silvio Pellico.†a Even the title of his book†673 is said to be a lie, inasmuch as he has never been in Siberia, etc. Feeble reply from Herzen†b: the title was humbug on the PUBLISHER'S part, he [Herzen] had not been responsible for it and had immediately protested in the Globe,†c etc. against the attributes wrongly ascribed to him, etc. Whereupon his antagonist came forth again (yesterday) and gave evidence of fresh lies, also in respect of the Globe.†d Besides this attack, however, there was also a DEFENCE put up by an Englishman†e. Even if Herzen had not been in Siberia and was no Russian Silvio Pellico, his book was nevertheless amusing, an innocuous book: 'an honest man, look you, and soon dasht! He is a marvellous good neighbour in sooth; and a very good bowler; but, for Alisander, alas, you see, how 'tis.'†f Finally, the TUB-TUB PAPER, as is its wont, declared that the contest was becoming too personal, etc., was now over and closed its columns to it.†g At all events this skirmish — even though the assailants were hardly brilliant — will do Herzen a great deal of harm in the eyes of the COCKNEYS.

Page me39.558

Lina†h has informed me of some fresh details concerning the Cologne trial. The list of jurymen given in my pamphlet†i quite wrong, of course. Throughout the trial one of the jurymen — Joest — drew caricatures of the accused, and passed the drawings round in court. During the first week the worthy jeune†a Saedt always had a dagger lying in front of him. At length the ironical laughter of the accused compelled him to 'wear the dagger under his gown'.†b Can one imagine a more affected COXCOMB? Saedt with a dagger! C'est á crever de rire.†c Bürgers whiles away his time sending Mrs Daniels 'endless amounts of paper'. Also writes poetry. Exchanges not a word with his fellow-sufferer.

Page Break me39.559

Page me39.559

Page me39.559

A London daily PENNY PAPER, The Telegraph, is said to have already dropped a number of HINTS about the underhand dealings of Dr Freund and his fellow-swindler, a military man.

Page me39.559

The 2 articles received.†674

Page me39.559

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.559

I almost forgot the most important point. A few weeks ago, 3 I THINK, Zitschke came to see my wife. The conversation turned to Mirbach.†d QUOTH Zitschke: 'That old loafer had a splendid chance of a passage. I had thought him long since at sea. Then I found him sitting again at a table in Bibra's pothouse and looking very down-at-heel.' Liebknecht, too, claims to have seen him recently.

Page me39.559

First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

291
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.559

[London,] 11 December 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,

From Dana's letter, enclosed herewith, you will see that our manoeuvre has succeeded.†675

Page Break me39.560
Page me39.560

Otherwise, everything as before. I still incarcerated. Jones not yet turned up.
Page me39.560

Bürgers will be allowed to move to another fortress if he pays the travelling expenses himself. Weerth had half promised Bürgers' mother in Cologne to send her money for him. Hasn't kept his word.
Page me39.560

Little Dronke corresponds regularly with Freiligrath. Had a great set-to with one of the partners, was on the point of giving up his post. To make himself look important, offered it to Freiligrath.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.560
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

292
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me39.560
Manchester, 12 December 1855

Dear Marx,

Something can be arranged with the good Tribune people after all, you see, and the £200 are assured. So that a start can be made straight away, I shall do a military article this evening, then you must do a political one. Both of them can then go on Friday,†a hoc facit†b £4.
Page me39.560

I return Dana's letter herewith.†675 Au fond,†c it is all to the good that the noble Mirbach has settled down to a life of idleness in London, for after all nothing has been definitely settled with the New Yorkers about the Crimean articles.†676. At all events, I am now relieved of any indirect obligation to the chap, and il ne me regarde plus.†d I have said nothing at all here about the matter, otherwise it would give Lupus qualms of conscience in the end, and next time he would turn rebellious.

Page Break me39.561
Page me39.561

Jmeyer†a wrote to me recently, not so much to inform me that he was still awaiting a letter from you, as to let me know what to say at my brother-in-law's†b at Christmas. He has heard nothing at all from the little man.†c

Page me39.561

We shall bear in mind Mr Karl Joest and his caricatures.†d I believe I shall do an even better caricature of him when he is dangling from a lamp post.

Page me39.561

Whether I shall be able to do an article on Tuesday†e depends, of course, on events, which are now very few and far between. Kars and Omer Pasha will have to be my victims today; if anything happens tomorrow I shall add it on.†677

Page me39.561

The STRIKE is going ahead here. The MASTERS said that they were willing to pay,†f provided the Ashton rates were taken as a basis. The HANDS replied that if the MASTERS chose Ashton, they would choose Oldham and be prepared to accept as a basis the average for the two places. Thereupon the MASTERS gave an evasive answer and proposed yet a third place in the district as a norm. This was refused and there the matter rests. The HANDS seem to me to be completely in the right; but they obviously still have in mind a few old trade union traditions whereby only this or that machine may be operated and only in the specific, time-honoured manner. But they'll soon drop this rubbish. The neighbourhood is beginning to support them.

Page me39.561

The editor†g of the Guardian, whom I've come to know, is a wise man IN HIS OWN MIND and a kind of oracle in the eyes of a number of philistines; apart from that a teller of dirty stories and a moderate carouser. He has obviously heard about me for, whenever I mention some shabby trick, he listens with attention and asks questions which show a desire to know. I shall gradually encourage the man's advances and then draw him out about the people on the Examiner and Times, after which I shall approach the latter rag. Aprés, on avisera.†h

Page me39.561

Warmest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me39.561

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.562

293
MARX TO ENGELS†84
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.562
[London,] 14 December 1855
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,

This confinement to my room is beginning to weigh on me. Not one breath of fresh air yet. Meanwhile, another 1,000 Germans sent off yesterday. Jones supposed to be coming today, at last.
Page me39.562

The day before yesterday evening I had a visit, you'll never guess from whom. Edgar Bauer — whom I hadn't seen for about a year — came to see me, and with him — Bruno. He's already been here a fortnight and intends to remain ABOUT 6 MONTHS 'in order to prove his assumptions' which he can hardly fail to do, considering the way he's begun. The man has aged visibly, his forehead has broadened and the impression he now gives is more or less that of a pedantic old professor. For the present he is lodging with Edgar in a hovel SOMEWHERE ABOUT the far end of Highgate and there he squats, amidst the most profound petty-bourgeois misére, seeing and hearing nothing. This he takes to be London and believes that, apart from the privileged 30,000, all the English live like Edgar Bauer. Hence his hatred and 'contempt' for the country is enormous. In his view, it's like living in 'Treuenbrietzen'.†a To anyone coming from 'Berlin', London is a veritable 'prison'. On the same occasion it also transpired that his present ideal is the 'East Frisian', 'Altenburgian' and PARTLY 'Westphalian peasant,†b those true noblemen. He is, moreover, convinced that these clodhoppers cannot be wished away and will be the ROCKS upon which the modern, egalitarian fiddle-faddle, bemoaned by this man of the 'dissolution', will come to grief. It was most CURIOUS to hear the 'Criticism'†678 make the CONFESSION that, in the final analysis,

Page Break me39.563
Berthold Auerbach is its true cornerstone. He holds that, save for a few 'purely commercial towns', the towns of Germany are in decline, but that 'the country' is prospering fabulously. He knew not a thing about the rise of industry, but quietly bemoaned the fact that nothing is now being done in Germany save 'IMPROVEMENTS'.
Page me39.563

The 'English language' is 'wretched', completely romanicised. For his consolation I proceeded to tell him that the Dutch and the Danes say the same of the German language and claim that the only fellows to have remained truly untainted by Romance are the 'Icelanders'.
Page me39.563

The old boy has devoted much time to languages. He speaks Polish and declares in consequence the Polish language to be 'the most beautiful of all'. His linguistic studies seem to have been highly uncritical. He considers Dobrovský, for instance, to be a far 'more important man' than Grimm,†a and calls him the father of comparative linguistics. Moreover, he has let the Poles in Berlin persuade him that OLD Lelewel has refuted Grimm's Geschichte der deutschen Sprache in a recent paper.
Page me39.563

Apropos. He also told me that a fat volume (of German provenance) had appeared in Germany attacking Grimm's dictionary.†b The whole volume consists of howlers G[rimm] is shown to have perpetrated.
Page me39.563

Despite all his efforts to adopt a humorous attitude, his gloom and despondency over the 'present' kept obtruding. In Germany — HORRIBLE INDEED! — nothing is now read or bought save miserable compilations in the field of the natural sciences. When you come,†679 we shall have great fun with the old boy.
Page me39.563

Köppen has been working for years on a book on Buddhism.†680 Rutenberg is the publisher of the Staats-Anzeiger. Mr Bergenroth, who used to drift about America (North and South) as commissioner (trade), has returned sans argent†c but with an illness.
Page me39.563

I am still waiting for the 2nd edition of The Times or Morning Post. The news may make it necessary to couch the thing on Kars in somewhat more hypothetical terms. However, this would only require quite minor alterations (a few words in the conditional).†681 I, for my part, believe that Kars has fallen.
Page me39.563

Today there is a not uninteresting article in the Herald — or so my wife tells me — about Bonaparte's MISGIVINGS AS TO THE TRUE INTENTIONS OF VISCOUNT Palmerston. That Pam is in very bad odour at court you may see from the Times article against Prince Albert.†a At the same time, again the old manoeuvre of presenting Prince Albert as an encumbrance to the 'Ministry'.

Page Break me39.564
Page me39.564

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me39.564
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.565

APPENDICES

Page Break me39.566
Page Break me39.567

1
JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.567
[London, 7 January 1852]†a

Dear Mr Engels,

How can you imagine that I would have been angry with you over that little drinking spree? I was very sorry not to have seen you again before you left, for that would have enabled you to see for yourself that I was only somewhat sulky in respect of my liege lord. Besides, such interludes often have quite salutory effects, but this time pére Marx must have caught a bad chill during his nocturnal philosophic excursion with 'the archbishop's nephew',†b for he fell seriously ill and has up till now stayed quietly in bed. He may perhaps be able to get up a little today and apply himself to the articles for America.†c However, I don't think he is as much restored as he imagines. For three nights he rambled in his speech and was very poorly. He asks you to convey his regards to Weerth and to tell him that he was very annoyed with him for having written no more than 2 words when forwarding Reinhardt's letter from Paris, and that he must above all fulfil his duty as a former editor of the Neue Rheinische and send out to America some articles from stock.†682 As for that insufferable man,†d here, word for word, is what pére Marx says now:
Page me39.567

'Ever drunk as a lord; boasting about his insinuating ways with women, meaning his being kicked out of bars; from the outset raucously inciting the English public in streets and alleyways, PARLOURS, omnibuses and HA'PENNY STEAMBOATS, to take part in the great debates between Kinkel and Ruge; dragging every German by the ear to the Cranbourne Hotel; one of the most pompous ranters of the Emigrés' Club,†26 and hence also crudely venting his spleen on the out-of-the-way little church of the N. Rh. Z. Should he ask Weerth's protection, the latter must tell him to look for a post in one of the seven ministries to be set up by Kinkel, which should not present any difficulty in view of his great services to the great and only revolutionary party and of his influence on Kinkel's pair of court scribes, Meyen and Oppenheim. Generally speaking, should Weerth be approached by any of the blackguards, he must give them to understand that he, too, belongs to the “small, incorrigible, separatist church” of the N. Rh. Z., as Meyen put it when writing to America.'

Page Break me39.568

Page me39.568

So much for my exalted patient, 'old Crosspatch'.

Page me39.568

Yesterday a very nice letter arrived from Cluss in Washington, from which Kinkel's boundless turpitude again emerges. Unfortunately I cannot enclose it as Freiligrath took it away with him yesterday. We shall send it tomorrow. Pass on bits of it to Weerth.

Page me39.568

Freiligrath has a new story about Kinkel's toadyism towards the democratic grocers here, which I shall now treat you to. Freiligrath applies to a blind German democratic merchant here for a position. He acquaints him with his commercial testimonials, whereupon the cross-eyed cheesemonger tells him: 'I have had the privilege of making Professor Kinkel's acquaintance. I attended one of his lectures, after which the Professor called on me and at once offered to come to my house of an evening and read aloud free of charge the best German poetic works. I, of course, declined this exceptional offer, not being in a position adequately to reward a man like Professor Kinkel for such services. In addition, the gentleman would have had the expense of the omnibus fares, since he lives some distance away. Nevertheless, the Professor came and read aloud to me from German poets. — Amongst which a few little things by yourself, Mr Freiligrath — whereupon he told me that you were really a man of commerce and had already held a position, etc., etc. The Professor's wife†a also called on me and offered to sing and play to me.' — Doubtless the Professor's wife would also have obliged with dances and poses plastiques†b had she not been dealing with a blind connoisseur.

Page me39.568

The future president of the German Republic, who goes chasing after the grocers here in order to read them his divine poetry and sometimes snatch a bite of supper, all but outshines the French Krapülinski.†c

Page Break me39.569

Page me39.569

It will also interest you to hear that your former chief, General Willich, has received a sound thrashing at the hands of the inferior refugees, since the latter are unable to grasp the difference between themselves and the superior refugees, and disapprove of the way the large revolutionary funds are being administered in the interests of the great men. It would further appear from Cluss' letter that Kinkel has used Willich's MYSTIFICATIONS and Schramm's letter†10 to provide proof in America of their connections with Cologne. It will soon be time to come out with the true story. Kinkel has apparently been putting about in America too that Marx's party presents prizes for vice in order not to become moral heroes. Musch sends Frederick his love. The girls have already gone to school. You will, perhaps, remember that Pieper made the boy a present of his fine travelling bag. Yesterday he threatened to take it back and buy him something else instead. This morning the boy hid the bag, and just now he said: 'Moor,†a I've hiddened it well and if Pieper asks for it, I'll tell him I've given it to a poor man.' The slyboots!

Page me39.569

Adieu.

Warmest greetings
Jenny Marx

Page me39.569
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. I, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

2
JENNY MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†12
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.569
[London, 9 January 1852]

Dear Mr Weydemeyer,

For the past week my husband has been very poorly and is for the most part confined to bed. Nevertheless he has managed to finish the enclosed sequel to his article,†b so that there may be no interruption in the printing thereof, supposing a start has really been made on it.

Page Break me39.570
Page me39.570

A few days ago we had a letter from Cluss in Washington — with whom I hope you have already made contact for you will find him in all respects an excellent support — from which Kinkel's boundless turpitude again emerges. For while this hypocrite fawns on Karl's friends in the most barefaced manner and writes to them, saying 'he has emphasised the need to get in touch with Marx and the most capable members of his party' (a downright lie), he seeks in the most perfidious way to blacken my husband's personal character and relates the most edifying tales about him and his friends drawn from Willich's mendacious innuendoes.
Page me39.570

Karl, who doesn't feel strong enough today to write to you himself, asks me to tell you that you should provide some information in your paper†a about our poor friends in Cologne,†b the more so since Kinkel's party, along with its court scribes and its rowdies and its compliant Lithographische Korrespondenz, deliberately passes over their existence and all their sufferings in complete silence, which is all the more infamous as it is precisely to Becker,†c Bürgers and their erstwhile organ†d that Kinkel owes most of his popularity. But our people languish in prisons, are hideously treated, and now will have to spend another three months in jug while the great men of the future are pocketing thousands in the name of the revolution and are already handing out future ministerial posts.

Page me39.570
How was your dear wife†e after the terrible voyage? What are your children doing? Have they all become more or less acclimatised?†683
Page me39.570
But time is getting exceedingly short. I must hurry out and post this letter. Let us hope that the conclusion of his article will be easier for my dear Karl.

Farewell for the present,
Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me39.570
Lupus is now somewhat recovered. He, too, will send something soon, as will Engels. Insistent reminders have also gone off to

Page Break me39.571
Weerth. Red Wolff†a has got married and, being on his honeymoon, cannot let you have anything as yet.

Page me39.571
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

3
JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.571
[London, 16 January 1852]

Dear Mr Engels,
As you see, I am still en fonction†b as secretary. My husband has still not altogether left his bed. He was indeed very poorly. Tomorrow he will attempt to take a short walk. His illness prevented him from getting anything done for America, although he did manage to strike some sparks out of Freiligrath and Pieper. I enclose herewith a most felicitous poem of Freiligrath's.†c Let our friend Weerth have a look at it as well. Perhaps he too will feel inspired to climb onto Pegasus. Send us the Tribune if you have finished with it. Next week you will receive a very nice letter from Cluss. Lupus hasn't got it just now. We hope to hear from you soon and may you enjoy your PALE ALE in the meantime.
Page me39.571
Warm regards from the patient.

Jenny Marx

Page me39.571
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time.

Page Break me39.572

4
JENNY MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†684
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.572
[London, 27 February 1852]

Dear Mr Weydemeyer,

After a week of strenuous nocturnal labours, his days being taken up with domestic affairs, my husband's eyes are so wretchedly sore that he cannot possibly write to you today and I must assume all secretarial functions. He asks me to tell you that he has been unable to read through the whole of Eccarius' article,†a and that you yourself must correct the orphographic mistakes; for this admirable man, who writes excellently, has only just learnt his letters here and knows nothing of full-stops and commas. He is also sending you an article by a Hungarian†b who is familiar with the innermost secrets of the Hungarian émigrés. You yourself must decide whether you can use and publish it at this moment. At all events, it is essential to keep in with the man, since he has promised to provide us later on with original contributions by Perczel, Szemere, etc., whose intimate he is. My husband thinks you should, of course, correct the worst grammatical howlers that crop up in the article, but that a few peculiarities of style which might give it the stamp of a genuine Hungarian product could do no harm at all. He further requests you to return as soon as possible the five instalments of his paper on Napoleon†c if you should not succeed in publishing it. We might, perhaps, be able to bring it out in a French translation, although it would really be a pity about the German version. He would greatly prefer it if you could succeed in America, since the piece is bound to sell and could also be distributed in Germany, providing as it does an historical appreciation of the most important event of the present day. I hope that there will soon be some good news from you, dear Mr Weydemeyer, to wit that your dear wife has come smoothly through the great catastrophe, and that two births have taken place under your roof — a son and a journal. My very warmest greetings to your dear wife.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page Break 572(a)
Page me39.572(a)

Jenny Marx with her daughter Jenny

Page Break 572(b)
Page me39.572(b)

Laura Marx

Page Break me39.573
Page me39.573
So that it will not take so long, you might have each of the individual articles printed separately, because the thing is of immediate interest. Later, they could be combined into one. No. 5 goes off today. Next Friday he will be sending No. 6, the final instalment.†85 As already mentioned, then, try to publish the work as a pamphlet. Otherwise, send the thing back, because come what may, we must get it published.
Page me39.573
Many regards to Cluss also, and write soon telling us just how things are with you.
Page me39.573
Lupus has just brought a brief scrawl on the latest events of the day in London.

Page me39.573
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

5
JENNY MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.573
London, 15 October 1852

Dear Mr Cluss,
Today my husband has appointed me his deputy and I therefore hasten to assume the duties of a secrétaire intime. For my husband is under such PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT AND WITHIN that he has had to traipse round all day on HOME BUSINESS and now, just gone 5, has not yet returned to dispose, more especially, of the affair Brüningk v. Cluss.†a Do nothing, absolutely nothing about this matter until the next STEAMER. Imandt had meant to send a statement today proving that Willich and Kinkel had made insulting remarks about Mrs Brüningk. At the same time he will lay the blame for all the tittle-tattle at the door of that old buffoon, Ruge, presently knight-errant and champion of princely innocence, and will do so all the more easily as the rumour indeed arose and began to spread at the very moment when the old jackass declared Kinkel to be — witness his close friend Gross — an agent of the Prince of Prussia,†b at the same time revealing that Kinkel's release had been the prince's doing, but that Mrs Brüningk had also played a leading role in the affair and had put up the money for it. In Germany, these rumours were both current at once and (if Dronke's memory is to be trusted, though he cannot say for certain) it is said that in the self-same article Ruge spoke of the suspect circles frequented here by Gottfried. Well, this stupid affair is nothing but a conspiracy to avenge themselves on Marx-Cluss by imputing to them vile, anonymous gossip and slander — an art in which these curs have long since been practising with the greatest virtuosity. No sooner had the old Pomeranian†a broken a lance for the princess than he paid a personal call on the great lady. No doubt Heinzen, too, still hopes to supplement his Whiggish source†b by striking and exploiting a princely seam over here for his Janus. But how ridiculous, the way in which the rabble suddenly raises a hue and cry in two continents when, for so long, it has heaped scurrility upon scurrility, tittle-tattle upon tittle-tattle, calumny upon calumny. And withal there is really nothing to the article†250 which, at least, reveals in moderate, discreet, indeed veiled terms, what has been said bluntly and openly by her own guests. The revolting thing about it is that one would sooner keep this scum at a healthy distance than be forced to grapple with them, and over so paltry a matter to boot. My husband himself had intended to send you today an article written in his own name about how your article came to be published in the Wecker. But Imandt thought it absolutely essential that my husband, against whom the whole thing has been cooked up, should be left out of it, which is why he wanted to write the statement himself. Unfortunately it has not yet arrived! But you should do nothing about the matter until you receive further instructions. Meyen was saying today that Dronke, Willich and Kinkel had stated on their word of honour that they had never said anything defamatory about the woman. So the fellows had already been subjected to a cross-examination. As you see, here too, the thing is being conducted as a matter of the utmost importance. By the by, from his own viewpoint Schnauffer's reply†c is excellent, witty and apt and, in truth, the two philosophers ought not to make so much fuss merely because a high-born lady is ill-used. Did anyone ask any questions when Ruge spread the most scurrilous, defamatory and socially ruinous rumours and things about my husband, and this at a time when my husband's lips were sealed by party considerations and out of regard for his friends in Germany.

Page Break me39.574

Page Break me39.575
Page me39.575
Did anyone bother whether all this grieved me almost to death, when my child†a died, having imbibed at my breast torment, grief and care? — oh! and all the other sufferings — yet I was not called princess when I was born — but wherefore all this foolish commotion? We shall extricate ourselves somehow and prove the others responsible. But you must wait, at any rate, just one more posting-day.

Page me39.575

The Brumaires have not yet arrived. My husband will send you by the next post the 2 People's Papers containing your articles.†b

Page me39.575

My brother Edgar has at last written to his mother.†c Thanks to your kind efforts my letter reached him safely.†d Once again, may I say how grateful I am.

Page me39.575

One more thing. Keep Jacobus Huzel on a fairly short rein so that he doesn't kick over the traces.†e There should be no chit-chat with the vermin since their line now is to implicate us and thus erase the memory of their past infamies. Some diplomacy is required in dealing with this bunch of purely objective, principled, honourable, worthy washerwomen.

Page me39.575

You have, I suppose, been following the Cologne trial in the Kölnische. Today we received an account of Becker's†f interrogation. Since there was nothing against him, it had been agreed to leave Becker out of the thing altogether,†g and this will explain to you the manner of his defence, which will be eagerly seized upon by the democrats in order to claim Becker as one of their own and declare him the true hero — free, independent man of the people that he is and no blind follower of a secret society's cut-and-dried doctrine —, precisely because he is the weakest of all and has the greatest amount of democratic blood in his veins. Should that loud-mouthed Heinzen make use of this case to build up Becker, you can at once point out that the defence had been agreed upon beforehand and that, shortly before his arrest, Becker had insistently begged my husband to attack with him in his review†685 all the official democrats — Ruge, Heinzen, Kinkel, Willich, etc., etc. — and hold them up to ridicule. That he also wanted to have

Page Break me39.576

Willich's imbecile letters published.†a Further that, on his release, the democratic gentlemen could expect to fare no better, etc., etc. I am writing in something of a rush.

Page me39.576

I must catch the post.

Farewell and warm regards,

Jenny Marx

Page me39.576

Write again soon. Your letters invariably give us the greatest pleasure. My husband is always saying that if we had a few more chaps like Cluss, we might yet get something done. In the meantime, don't do too much. Best let dog eat dog, otherwise they might band together to combat the 'common enemy', the wicked, infamous blight — Marx and his clique.

Page me39.576

First published abridged in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6
JENNY MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†12
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.576
[London, 30 October 1852]

Dear Mr Cluss,

You will have been following the monster trial of the communists in the Kölnische Zeitung. During the sitting of 23 October the whole thing took such a splendid and interesting turn, and one so favourable to the accused, that we are beginning to regain some of our confidence.†686 As you can imagine, the 'Marx party' is busy day and night and is having to throw itself into the work body and soul. This overloading with work also accounts for my again appearing before you as deputy reporter. Mr Willich's close friend, Mr Dietz, now also in America, has contrived to have all the documents, letters, minutes, etc., etc. of Willich's clique stolen from him. They were produced by the prosecution as evidence of the party's dangerous activities. In order to establish a link between these and the accused, they now proceeded to think up a spurious connection between my husband and the notorious spy Cherval. Thus my husband became the bridge, the spurious link, between the theoreticians of Cologne and the men of action, incendiaries and robbers, in London. Stieber and the prosecution expected wonders of this coup. It burst like a bubble. New effects had to be conjured up, hence the tissue of lies at the sitting of 23 October. Everything adduced by the police is untrue. They steal, forge, break into desks, perjure themselves, bear false witness and, withal, claim this licence vis-á-vis communists, who are hors [de] la société†a! This and the way in which the police, at their most rascally, are usurping all the functions of the prosecution, pushing Saedt into the background, and submitting unattested scraps of paper, mere rumours, reports and hearsay, as real legally proven facts, as evidence, is truly hair-raising. We here had to supply all proofs of the forgery. Hence my husband had to work all day and late into the night. Affidavits had to be obtained from the publicans, and the handwriting of the alleged minute-takers, Liebknecht and Rings, officially authenticated to provide proof of forgery on the part of the police. Then every one of these things had to be copied out 6-8 times and dispatched by the most divers routes to Cologne, via Frankfurt, Paris, etc., since all letters to my husband as well as all letters from here to Cologne†b are opened and detained. The whole thing has now become a struggle between the police on one side and my husband on the other — they blame him for everything, the entire revolution and even the conduct of the trial. Finally Stieber has now declared my husband to be an Austrian spy. In return, my husband looked out a glorious letter, written to him by Stieber in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung days, which is really damning.†c We likewise discovered a letter from Becker in which he makes fun of Willich's imbecilities and his 'military conspiracies'.†d Out of hatred for Becker, Willich gave directions here in London to the witness Lieutenant Hentze, from whom up till now he has been receiving alms. In short, things are about to happen which would seem unbelievable if one wasn't experiencing them oneself. All this business with the police is distracting the public, and hence the jury, from the actual prosecution of the communists, while bourgeois hatred of the dreadful incendiaries is paralysed by the HORROR inspired by the villainy of the police, — so much so that we can now even believe in our friends' acquittal. The struggle against official power, armed as this is with money and every kind of weapon, is not, of course, without interest and will be all the more glorious should we emerge the victors. For on their side there is money, power and everything else, whereas we were often at a loss where to get the paper on which to write our letters, etc., etc.

Page Break me39.577

Page Break me39.578
Page me39.578

The enclosed statement was issued today by Freiligrath, Marx, Engels and Wolff.†a We are sending it to the Tribune today. You could publish it as well.†b
Page me39.578

Excuse me for such a confused letter but I, too, have had some part in the intrigue and have done so much copying that my fingers are afire. Hence the muddle. Your essay in the Turn-Zeitung†c has been much applauded here. My husband thought it first-rate and the style, in particular, exceptionally brilliant. There are others who prefer you in a less theoretical vein and would like you always to remain the same old humorous, light-hearted Cluss.
Page me39.578

We have just received from Weerth and Engels whole parcels full of commercial addresses and pseudo-commercial letters so that we can send off the documents, letters, etc.†d†687
Page me39.578

Another load of tremendous scandal has just arrived with the Kölnische. Two further packages are being dispatched at once to commercial addresses. A complete office has now been set up in our house. Two or three people are writing, others running errands, others scraping PENNIES together so that the writers may continue to exist and prove the old world of officialdom guilty of the most outrageous scandal. And in between whiles my 3 merry children†e sing and whistle, often to be harshly told off by their papa. What a bustle! Farewell, dear Mr Cluss, and write again soon to your friends.

By permission of the higher authorities,
Jenny Marx

Page me39.578

First published considerably abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 31, Stuttgart, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me39.579

7
JENNY MARX TO ADOLF CLUSS†688
IN WASHINGTON
Page me39.579
London, 10 March [1853]

For weeks my dear Karl has been indisposed and, during the past few days, has again been suffering from his old liver complaint which almost developed into hepatitis, a disease I find all the more frightening for its being hereditary in his family and the cause of his father's death.†a Today he is better again, is getting his Tribune article into shape,†b and has asked me to write to you. I must at once plunge into a circumstantial tale of woe which almost equals the bad luck of Weydemeyer and Cluss.†689 Please don't be angry with me if I dilate. On 6 December, at the same time as your manuscript copy of the Revelations,†c my husband sent another one to Schabelitz's son in Basle. Schabelitz was delighted to receive it, wrote saying it was a masterpiece, that it ought to be across the border within a fortnight and that he would run off 2,000 copies, sell them at 15 silver groschen a piece and, after deducting the printing costs (low in Switzerland), share the profits with my husband. We would be justified in counting on at least £30 sterling — with no risk of disappointment. Moreover he intended to send 40 copies to London immediately. For 4 weeks we hear nothing. My husband writes. Answer: the printing was held up by the compositors' Christmas junketing; he intends to be across the border in a fortnight at the latest and to send us 40 copies. All we hear, and this through a third party, is that the smuggling operation has run into unexpected difficulties and that he has had to smuggle across the 1,800 copies in small parcels over a period of 14 days, but that everything will be across by about the beginning of February, when he will charge one of his own clerks with forwarding the pamphlet and distributing it to the booksellers and will send him there, but that he, however, will send us a specimen copy at once. Good. We wait expectantly for 4 weeks. Then my husband writes to inquire, believing that the pamphlets have long since reached the furthest corners of Germany and that all he need now do is draw a bill on him. Then, yesterday, the following letter arrived.†d

Page Break me39.580
'Dear Marx, I have just heard that the whole consignment of Revelations, amounting to 2,000 copies, which had been lying in a village on the other side of the border for the past 6 weeks, was intercepted yesterday while being conveyed elsewhere. What will happen now, I do not know; first of all, a complaint lodged by the Baden government with the Federal Council, then, no doubt, my arrest or at least commitment for trial, etc. In either case, a terrific shindy! This briefly for your information; further communications, should I be prevented from making them myself, will reach you through a 3rd party. When writing to me, use the address: A modiste in Basle, etc.'

Page me39.580

That's all; what do you think of it? He leaves 2,000 copies, i.e. the entire edition, lying in a village for 6 weeks, and then writes to tell us that they have been confiscated. Not a word about the copies for London, nothing about those for Switzerland, etc. Have the things been printed, did the Prussian police buy them for a hefty sum, or God knows what? Suffice it to say that this is the 2nd pamphlet to have been entirely suppressed.†690 Mr Stieber, who has become Chief of Police in Berlin and announced a magnum opus on conspiracies,†a etc., and Mr Willich, owner and administrator of the American funds,†691 come out of the affair sain et sauf†b; the Cologne trial has been utterly obliterated, the party is still not quite cleansed of all taint, and the government is triumphant! At this moment the pamphlet would have had the most tremendous effect. The hearts of the German police would have quaked and trembled at this THUNDERBOLT falling among them. If we had the means, we would have it printed again au moment†c in Altona in order to enrage the government, but that is impossible. All that can be done now is for you to bring it out as a feuilleton in some paper or other. Could not the type then be used to produce a pamphlet which you could at once send over here? Since printing in Europe has become almost impossible but is now entirely a matter of honour for the party, you should at least have it printed á tout prix†d as a feuilleton. The publication of the pamphlet is now a necessity as against all our enemies, and will, more than anything else, further the interests of the Cologne people and sway public opinion in their favour. Interest in them must be reawakened. Becker's†e attempted escape failed only because of lack of interest and outside help. Above all, proof of the pamphlet's existence must be given and this can only be done by its being printed, even if only as a feuilleton on the other side of the ocean.

Page Break me39.581

Page me39.581

You can imagine what effect this news had on my husband's state of health, etc.

Jenny Marx

Page me39.581

First published in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to a letter from Cluss to Weydemeyer of 28 March 1853

Published in English for the first time

8

JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.581
[London, 27 April 1853]

Dear Mr Engels,

It is for me a hateful task to have to write to you about money matters. You have already helped us all too often. But this time I have no other recourse, no other way out. I have written to Hagen in Bonn, to Georg Jung, to Cluss, to my mother-in-law,†a to my sister†b in Berlin. Ghastly letters! And so far not a word from a single one of them. So there's no other course left open to us. I cannot describe what things are like here. My husband has gone to the City to see Gerstenberg. You can imagine what kind of an errand that must be for him. Meanwhile I am writing these lines. Can you send us something? The baker warned us that there'd be no more bread after Friday. Yesterday when he asked: 'Is MR MARX AT HOME?' Musch managed to fend him off by answering: 'No, HE A'NT UPSTAIRS' and then, with three loaves tucked under his arm, shot off like an arrow to tell his Moor about it.
Page me39.581

Farewell.

Jenny Marx

Page me39.581
First published in Der Briefwechsel, zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. I, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.582

9
ADOLF CLUSS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†692
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.582
Washington, May 15th 1853

... Marx has written me a very jolly letter in which he says that everyone was greatly amused by my description of the doings of Willich, that 'brother of the guild of misery'.†693 He says that, amid peals of Homeric laughter, they resolved en grand comité†a to wish his 'life' as unhampered a course as possible. He remarks: 'If the lunacy of this drôle†b were not intermixed and interlarded with cunning calculations as to how best to fill his belly without doing any work, he would long since have found his way to the lunatic asylum.' In return for my report, Marx is going to send me in his next a copy of the passage relating to Willich in The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.582

Revolution and Counter-Revolution. Marx says he has no time for translation; if you or I or someone else will undertake to translate it, and if we let him know where he left off, he will take upon himself to write the whole of the conclusion.†694 Marx is of the opinion that as a pamphlet, the thing will not sell, and certainly not pay for itself; he would be perfectly satisfied with a feuilleton. (So whatever remains to be done would be left to us.)
Page me39.582
Raveaux's former followers — philistines — long in need of another saint, have put red Becker†c in Raveaux's place. Á tout seigneur tout honneur†d...

Page me39.582
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.583

10
ADOLF CLUSS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†695
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.583
Washington, June 2nd 1853

... Today received a letter from Marx's wife which unfortunately I would seem to have placed outside my pocket when on the omnibus. Marx had just returned from Manchester (20th May).†696 He is delighted with your Reform article†a; likewise your introduction†b to Hirsch's statement.†c Marx's only regret is that not all our things are able to appear under your auspices, but that the names of the two ciphers†d from the Hornisse must be given precedence. Otherwise he is satisfied with the Reform. Dronke has at last obtained a post as clerk in Bradford at £10 a month.
Page me39.583
Pieper would appear to have been shown the door by Rothschild†e some time ago; the part he played in the communist trial makes it difficult for him to find a berth elsewhere.
Page me39.583
Rothschild, was at university with him, has paid him nothing to date, but would do so if he possibly could; Pieper must see to this au moment,†f having no other recourse.
Page me39.583
Eccarius is still not restored.
Page me39.583
Lupus, due to PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT, is very ill disposed...
Page me39.583

The Tribune leaders on the EASTERN QUESTION are all by Marx; he wrote them without adding any of the usual NEWS trivialities so that Dana went and changed some of the longer historical expositions, etc., into Tribunese and published them as LEADERS.†g The Tribune is a well-spring from which Marx cannot afford to cut himself off, hence he intends to turn a blind eye and would rather we didn't make any direct reference to the fact, even though he resents it —, that his more objective LOOKING pieces appear without his name, while the articles that do appear under his own name are no more than dregs...

Page me39.583
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.584

11
ADOLF CLUSS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†697
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.584
Washington, June 14th 1853

Dear Weyd.,
Just received your letter. As regards Pieper's article, Marx wrote some time ago — 4 months, perhaps — in reply to my apology for making use of one of his letters, saying that I shouldn't get such silly ideas into my head.†698 Though in no way given to flattery he had found that I only made use of his letters on rare occasions and certainly never for my own personal ends; in any case, they were deliberately written for me to make use of. I shouldn't think him so niggardly of his ideas; Pieper and red Wolff†a are there, writing down everything he says...

Page me39.584
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

12
JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me39.584
[London, 9 September 1853]

Dear Mr Engels,

Imandt was here just now and told us that Dronke was studying Spanish and he believed he had seen him with the little grammar, 'the one that was sold'.†b If, dear Mr Engels, you could question

Page Break me39.585
Dronke about the wretched little book as soon as you receive this letter, Karl would be much obliged to you; for we might thus be able to clear the matter up to the confusion of Isegrim†a before he leaves. To you it may seem funny that we should make a thing of this stupid business, but one must have experienced the whole thing to understand it — such crude, boorish tones, such churlish behaviour, such brutal shouting, such outbursts and anger in front of myself and the children. It would be splendid if the sold booklet were in the hands of a bosom friend! But do not mention Imandt's name. It is already very late and I am addressing these lines to your house to make sure they reach you tomorrow. More pleasant news. Bamberger is threatening to take proceedings over the Swiss affair.†b Schabelitz has asked him to sue my husband because of a passage in a letter in which Karl promised to pay half the expenses if the thing sold. Please send the letter which you still have in the file.†699 Karl likewise begs you yet again to let him have the notes about the Russian and Turkish troop deployment.†c He is continually having to write about the business since it hasn't yet been settled, and the Americans are besotted with the EASTERN QUESTION.
Page me39.585

Today Karl has been forcing himself to write another long article on economics†d and, being very tired, has asked me this evening to take up the pen on his behalf.
Page me39.585

Farewell, and warmest regards from us all.

Jenny Marx

Page me39.585

Lupus, or so we hear, is leaving tomorrow morning. He has not said good-bye to me and the children.

Page me39.585
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.586

JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.586
[London, 24 November 1853]

Dear Mr Engels,

I have made out the POSTAL ORDER to William Wolff, with Charles Marx as the sender.†a

Page me39.586

The statements attacking Willich's scrawl†b will hardly catch tomorrow's steamer since Miskowsky, 'the missing Russian officer', has not as yet been traced. He lives somewhere in Whitechapel and his address has been mislaid. Nor was it known to Kossuth, whom we approached indirectly. A messenger has just left for Whitechapel. Unluckily for the gallant Willich, the man has been back here for some months, possesses a certificate signed by Kossuth to the effect that he fought in the Hungarian campaign, and will now be able to provide a first-hand account of the duel.†700

Page me39.586

Pére is BUSY with the next instalment of the Palmerston article,†c and hopes to receive some small aid tomorrow.

Page me39.586

With warmest regards.

Jenny Marx

Page me39.586
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 1, Berlin, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

14
ADOLF CLUSS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me39.586
Washington, December 12th 1853

Dear W.,

Herewith 1 article 'from Wisconsin'†d; I think you'd be well advised to bring it out in two parts, with 'to be continued' in between.

Page Break me39.587
Page me39.587

Just received 1 letter from Marx, dated 28TH Nov. Dronke, it seems, has sent you a statement which you should hold back if it is not already too late.†a Dronke was supposed to send this statement to Marx in London, instead of which he sent it to you in New York.

Page me39.587
Marx has answered Willich at length,†b in very learned, 'Hegelian' fashion. Splendid, so far as I can see, and plentifully buttressed with documents; I shall probably send you the thing tomorrow, but haven't yet had time to read it through, and so do not know what to do with it. It is voluminous. 20 pages of LARGE NOTE-PAPER. Marx had already written it when my letter arrived informing him that we were taking care of the answer.†c He now considers that, since it isn't every day one meets with such a lying codger as Willich, it would be RATHER DISAGREEABLE if the thing had to be shelved. He authorises me to make deletions if his article repeats what we have already said, or conflicts with ours in matters of detail.
Page me39.587
More about this when I send you the thing.
Page me39.587
The accompanying letter, dashed off in great haste, partly by Monsieur and partly by Madame Marx,†701 concludes as follows:
Page me39.587
'Yesterday evening (27TH Nov.) the Waschlapskis and Schelmufskis†d held a meeting.†702 Harney was IN THE CHAIR. The PEOPLE almost tore him to pieces. DOWN, DOWN, RASCAL, TRAITOR, RENEGADE, and he wasn't permitted to TAKE THE CHAIR. PEOPLE jumped onto the platform, everyone was belabouring everyone else, the Schelmufskis acted as Harney's GUARDS.'
Page me39.587
Again: 'As regards the Reform, Karl has done everything in his power. Pieper, driven by necessity, has gone to work in a French SHOP, where he sells sunshine, i.e. the newly-invented lampe réverbére.†e He cannot write just now. Accordingly Karl has roped in Heise and given him a subscription to the reading room since he hadn't got the required penny. He has also written to Germany asking for help.'

Page Break me39.588
Page me39.588
Treat the bit about Heise as confidential.

Your
Ad. Cluss

Page me39.588
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

15
JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.588
[London, end of March 1854]

Dear Mr Engels,

Karl asks you to send Lassalle's address by return. You did not return Lassalle's first letter,†a which gives it.

Page me39.588

Warmest regards from the whole family.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me39.588
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

16
JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.588
London, 13 May [1854]

Dear Mr Engels,

I am sending you herewith a packet of old abusive paperasse†b; and with it the very latest ordure by Wiss,†c Dulon, etc. Some of it will amuse you. For the past five days Karl has been plagued by rheumatic pains in his teeth, ears and face, so severe that he hasn't been able to sleep a single night and today feels seriously indisposed. Nothing we tried did any good. We went through the whole pharmacopoeia, from Pfänder to Raspail. But still the same terrible pain. Not until tonight was some sweating induced by Spanish fly, opium, etc., and a slight improvement noticeable. He's not in a condition to put pen to paper, but urgently begs you, dear Mr Engels, to be sure and send him an article on Tuesday†a so that we don't miss another whole week, as we did last. Otherwise it would make too big a hole in the money-box. Cordial regards from the whole family and from

Page Break me39.589

Jenny Marx

Page me39.589
Heise and the little man†b have written Imandt a quite crazy letter. It reeked of brandy.

Page me39.589
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

17
JENNY MARX TO FREDERICK ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me39.589
[London, 23 May 1854]
3 o'clock in the afternoon

Dear Mr Engels,
Your article†c has just arrived. It's already been addressed and I shall put it in the post at the same time as this note. Karl was tremendously pleased when he heard the postman's portentous double KNOCK. Voilá Frederik,†d £2, we're saved! he cried. Unfortunately he is still very, very unwell and asks me to tell you that he is

Page Break me39.590
Lazarus and Peterkin Pint-pot rolled into one. There can be no question of writing. He labours over Gladstone's long speeches and is very annoyed at not being able to write just now when he's got enough material on Mr Gladstone and his SCHEMES. If you possibly can, do concoct something again for Friday.†a Anything will do, Karl says. I truly detest bothering you in this way, but send something if possible.
Page me39.590
I enclose herewith the latest dispatch from Cluss and would ask you to return his letter†b and not tell Heise anything about it. The fellow chatters so and, should little Meyen or other eminent men hear anything prematurely, communications to Cluss would at once stop. It's all very amusing and the gentlemen should be allowed to carry on undisturbed.
Page me39.590
In his last letter to Imandt, consisting of a whole lot of little snippings glued together, Heise said he had now again given up the military DODGE since the Russians waged war differently from the way the Tribune said; he intended to apply himself henceforward to doux commerce.†c
Page me39.590

Karl and I send our heartiest thanks for the articles, and the three little ones†d send their love.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me39.590
Our Edgar†e is said to be loafing about in New York again and to be coming here and then going on to Germany! What a band of loafers!

Page me39.590
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me39.591

NOTES AND INDEXES

Page Break me39.592
Page Break me39.593

NOTES

Page me39.593
†1 This letter was first published in English considerably abridged in Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895. A selection. International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 3, 27, 303
Page me39.593
†2 This refers to Chapter I of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, which Marx wrote from December 1851 to March 1852, immediately following the coup d'état in France on 2 December 1851 (see present edition, Vol. 11, Note 64). It is closely linked with other works by Marx and Engels analysing the 1848-49 revolution in France (Engels' Letters from France, Marx's Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850, see present edition, Vol. 10) and was originally intended as a series of articles in the weekly Die Revolution, which Joseph Weydemeyer began preparing in December 1851 for publication in New York.
Page me39.593
Marx and Engels considered this journal highly important for the dissemination of scientific communism and took great pains to provide Weydemeyer with material. They sent him their own articles and those of their associates — Ernest Jones, Wilhelm Pieper, Johann Georg Eccarius, Ferdinand Freiligrath, Wilhelm Wolff and others. In connection with the forthcoming publication of the journal the Turn-Zeitung, No. 3, carried the following announcement on 1 January 1852: 'Die Revolution, a weekly journal edited by J. Weydemeyer associate editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung suppressed by the police in Frankfurt am Main, is published every Saturday in co-operation with the editorial board of the former Neue Rheinische Zeitung (K. Marx, Fr. Engels, Freiligrath, etc.)'.

Page me39.593

Weydemeyer managed to put out only two issues (on 6 and 13 January 1852), following which publication ceased for lack of funds. The first issue reproduced part of 'Review, May to October 1850' published by Marx and Engels in 1850 in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue (see present edition, Vol. 10), and also announced the forthcoming publication of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte and 'Neuste Offenbarungen des Sozialismus oder “Idée générale de la Révolution au XIXe siécle, par P.J. Proudhon”. Kritik von K.M.' (the latter was not written by Marx). The second issue carried the rest of the 'Review' and part of Chapter II of the Manifesto of the Communist Party (see present edition, Vol. 6).

Page Break me39.594
Page me39.594

Weydemeyer received Chapter I of The Eighteenth Brumaire, mentioned here, as well as the rest of the work, when publication had ceased, but with the help of Adolf Cluss he succeeded in bringing out two more issues of the 'non-periodic journal' Die Revolution in May and June 1852 which carried this work and satirical poems by Ferdinand Freiligrath (see Note 13).
Page me39.594

Weydemeyer failed to buy up from the printer even half of the 1,000 copies of the work printed. Only about 150 copies were sent to Europe, and approximately the same number sold in the USA in 1852 and 1853. Cluss and other associates of Marx in the past revolutionary struggle in Germany (Johann Schickel, Conrad Schramm, Franz Arnold and others) greatly contributed to disseminate his work among former subscribers to Die Revolution in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Richmond, Cincinnati, Washington and other large cities. — 3, 391
Page me39.594
†3 Wilhelm and Ferdinand Wolff intended to write articles for Die Revolution. In a letter of 19 December 1851 Marx promised Weydemeyer (see present edition, Vol. 38, p. 519) to send him by the next steamer the following material: 1. The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte by K. Marx; 2. Der Staatsstreich in Frankreich by Ferdinand Wolff; 3. Nemesis by Wilhelm Wolff. Weydemeyer announced this in the first issue of Die Revolution on 6 January 1852, being unaware as yet of Marx's decision not to publish Ferdinand Wolff's article. — 3
Page me39.594
†4 The reference is to the progressive newspaper, the New-York Daily Tribune, to which Marx contributed from August 1851 to March 1862. A large number of articles for this paper were written at his request by Engels, Marx beginning to send his own articles to New York only in August 1852. He wrote the first ones in German, and his friends, generally Engels, translated them into English. By the end of January 1853 he started writing his contributions in English.

Page me39.594

Marx's and Engels' articles in the New-York Daily Tribune dealt with major questions of foreign and home policy, the working-class movement, the economic development of European countries, colonial expansion, and the national liberation movement in oppressed and dependent countries. The articles at once attracted attention by their factual information, acute political judgment and brilliant style. This was acknowledged by the editors of the Tribune, who wrote, in a leading article on 7 April 1853, of the need 'to pay a tribute to the remarkable ability of the correspondent'. They went on: 'Mr Marx has very decided opinions of his own, with some of which we are far from agreeing; but those who do not read his letters neglect one of the most instructive sources of information on the great questions of current European politics.' In a letter to Mrs Marx of 1 July 1853, Charles Dana, one of the editors, wrote that her husband's articles were highly thought of by the Tribune owners and the reading public.
Page me39.594

Articles by Marx and Engels were widely disseminated in America, many of them being reprinted in the Tribune's special editions — the New-York Weekly Tribune and the New-York Semi-Weekly Tribune. Some of the Tribune's articles were translated into German and published in German-language American newspapers. Marx's and Engels' articles in the Tribune were also read in Europe. From 1853 to 1855 Marx wrote regularly for the newspaper sending, as a rule, one or two contributions every week.
Page me39.594

Sometimes the editors of the New-York Daily Tribune tampered with Marx's and Engels' articles, publishing them as editorial leaders and occasionally making insertions in the text. In 1855 all Marx's and Engels' articles were published without the authors' names. Marx repeatedly protested against such practices but his financial circumstances compelled him to accept the editors' terms (see, for instance, this volume, pp. 367, 395, 404). Marx ceased contributing during the Civil War in the USA. — 3

Page Break me39.595

Page me39.595

†5 Marx has in mind Article VII of Engels' series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. These articles were printed in the New-York Daily Tribune over Marx's signature from 25 October 1851 to 23 October 1852. While writing them Engels constantly exchanged views with Marx who read his articles before sending them off to the newspaper.
Page me39.595

Only in 1913, when the correspondence between Marx and Engels was published, it became known that the articles had been written by Engels. Some articles of the series were published in German refugee newspapers in America. The German translation of the first two articles appeared in the New-Yorker Abendzeitung at the end of October 1851 without any reference to the source; a free translation of the beginning of the first article was published in Weitling's Republik der Arbeiter on 1 November 1851. — 3

Page me39.595
†6 In November 1851 Cluss wrote to Marx about the need to disseminate the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue in America, noting that Magnus Gross, the New York distributor, was not giving it sufficient publicity. When Weydemeyer went to America, he accepted Marx's proposal that he should take upon himself the sale and distribution of the Revue (see present edition, Vol. 38, p. 489). On 6 February 1852 he informed Marx that he hoped to sell about 200 copies of it at $1 instead of the $4.50 fixed by the Hamburg publisher Schuberth. Marx, however, was unable to have the necessary number of copies sent over from Europe. — 3
Page me39.595
†7 Engels alludes to his stay at the Marxes' in London from about 20 December 1851 to 3 January 1852 (see also this volume, p. 567). — 4
Page me39.595
†8 The reference is to the special imperial patent of 31 December 1851, which abolished the constitution introduced by the Austrian Government on 4 March 1849.
Page me39.595
When speaking about the Prussian Constitution, Engels has in mind the one promulgated on 31 January 1850, which abolished all the democratic gains of the 1848-49 revolution and was based on high property qualification and unequal representation. — 5
Page me39.595
†9 Probably an allusion to Conrad Schramm who had a duel with Willich in September 1850. — 6
Page me39.595
†10 At the beginning of 1851 Conrad Schramm, wishing to play a joke on Willich, sent him a letter purportedly written by Hermann Becker, a Cologne Communist League member, reflecting the views of the Willich-Schapper group. In reply Willich sent a number of letters to Becker expounding an adventurist plan of 'revolutionising' the Rhine Province. Becker informed Marx of Willich's plans in a letter of 27 January 1851. During the Cologne trial Marx made use of these letters to expose the sectarian adventurist tactics of the Willich-Schapper group (see K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, p. 452). — 6, 569
Page me39.595
†11 Engels describes here the reaction of the European Press to Louis Bonaparte's policy of unrestrained social demagogy on the one hand and increased personal power on the other after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. On 1 January 1852, a solemn service in honour of the President for which 190,000 francs were assigned was held in Notre Dame de Paris; the eagles on state banners (symbol of Napoleon's Empire) were restored. The Prince President moved to the royal palace of the Tuileries, where on 14 January a new Constitution was proclaimed under which all power was concentrated in the hands of the head of the State elected for a term of 10 years, the composition and legislative functions of all the higher state institutions were also placed under his control. A detailed analysis of the methods and essence of the demagogic policy pursued by Bonaparte in the social sphere and of repressions against the democratic and working-class movements is given in Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (present edition, Vol. 11). — 7

Page Break me39.596

Page me39.596
†12 This letter was published in English for the first time, slightly abridged, in Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 7, 15, 40, 52, 79, 94, 569, 576
Page me39.596
†13 The reference is to the first of the two satirical poems by Freiligrath written on Marx's request specially for Die Revolution on 16 and 23 January 1852. The poet ridiculed the so-called German-American loan which Kinkel tried to raise in the USA (see Note 27). Kinkel's activity in America was described by Cluss in his letters to Wilhelm Wolff of 4-6 November and to Marx in mid-December 1851.
Page me39.596
Freiligrath's poems were published in German in the Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser, Nos. 10 and 27, 7 March and 4 July 1852, printed in Stuttgart and Tübingen. The first poem was also published in English in Notes to the People, No. 50, 10 April 1852. Both the Morgenblatt and Notes to the People carried an introduction, the contents of which were not identical in the two publications. The editors of the present edition have insufficient proof that it was Marx who wrote this introduction, though Freiligrath is known to have asked him to do so (Freiligraths Briefwechsel mit Marx und Engels, Berlin, 1968, Bd. I, S. 42-43).
Page me39.596
In America the first poem was published by Cluss in English in the newspaper The National Era, No. 282, 27 May 1852 (reproduced from the Notes to the People) with additions to the introduction made by Cluss, relating it to conditions in America. Die Revolution did not publish the poems until June 1852. — 8, 108, 119
Page me39.596
†14 On 12 January 1852 Hirsch made a statement, but as early as February 1852 he was found to be a Prussian police spy and was expelled from the Communist League. For this reason Marx, in a letter of 20 February 1852 (see this volume, p. 41), asked Weydemeyer not to publish Hirsch's statement. When in the spring of 1853 Hirsch published his anti-Marx and Engels article 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie' in America, in an attempt to justify the splitting activity of Willich and Schapper, Cluss and Weydemeyer, in order to expose Hirsch, published his first statement in the Belletristisches Journal und Criminal-Zeitung, No. 7, 29 April 1853. — 8, 41, 66
Page me39.596
†15 The Communist League was the first German and international communist organisation of the proletariat formed under the leadership of Marx and Engels in London early in June 1847 as a result of the reorganisation of the League of the Just. The programme and organisational principles of the Communist League were drawn up with the personal participation of Marx and Engels. The League's members took an active part in the bourgeois-democratic revolutions in Europe in 1848-49.
Page me39.596

In 1849-50, after the defeat of the revolution, the Communist League was reorganised. In the summer of 1850, disagreements of principle arose in the League's Central Authority between its majority headed by Marx and Engels and the Willich-Schapper separatist group which tried to impose on the League its adventurist tactics of immediately unleashing a revolution without taking into account the actual political situation and the practical possibilities in Germany and other European countries. After 15 September 1850 the Willich-Schapper group broke away from the League and formed an independent organisation with its own Central Authority.

Page Break me39.597

Page me39.597

Owing to police persecutions and arrests of League members in May 1851, the activities of the Communist League ceased in Germany. On 17 November 1852, soon after the Cologne Communist Trial (see Note 16), the London District, on a motion by Marx, declared the League dissolved. However, many of its members, particularly in Germany and America, continued to be active for a long time. — 8, 143

Page me39.597

†16 Members of the Communist League (see Note 15) were arrested by the Prussian police in May 1851 and accused of 'treasonable conspiracy'. The accused remained in detention for about eighteen months. Eleven Communist League members (Heinrich Bürgers, Peter Nothjung, Peter Röser, Hermann Heinrich Becker, Karl Otto, Wilhelm Reiff, Friedrich Lessner, Roland Daniels, Johann Jacob Klein, Johann Erhardt and Abraham Jacobi) were brought to trial which began in Cologne on 4 October and lasted till 12 November 1852. It was rigged by the Prussian police on the basis of fabricated documents and forged evidence which included the so-called Original Minute-book of the Communist League Central Authority meetings and documents stolen by the police from the Willich-Schapper group. The trial was accompanied by an anti-communist hue and cry in the official press of Germany and other countries. On the basis of forged documents and perjury seven of the accused were sentenced to imprisonment for terms of three to six years. Marx, Engels and their friends and associates in England, Germany and America supported the Cologne prisoners in the press and supplied counsel for the defence with documents and material exposing police fabrications. The provocative actions of the prosecution and the contemptible methods of the Prussian police state were exposed by Marx in his pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne and by Engels in the article 'The Late Trial at Cologne' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 9, 113, 131, 195, 351

Page me39.597

†17 The reference is to Engels' series of articles on England written for Die Revolution. Two articles got lost on their way to the USA (see this volume, p. 16). Manuscripts of the last two articles have survived (see present edition, Vol. 11). The first of these was written by Engels on 23 January and published on 15 November 1852 in the Turn-Zeitung (New York) to which Weydemeyer contributed. The second, written on 30 January 1852, was not published during Engels' lifetime, but was used by Weydemeyer in a number of his own writings for the press. — 10, 39, 80

Page me39.597

†18 Engels is expressing the wish that Wilhelm Wolff should write for Die Revolution on current events as he did earlier in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in the column 'Aus dem Reich' ('From the German Empire'). — 10
Page me39.597
†19 Between February and early April 1852, in compliance with Jones' request, Engels wrote for his journal Notes to the People a series of articles, the first of which was entitled 'Real Causes Why the French Proletarians Remained Comparatively Inactive in December Last' (see present edition, Vol. 11). Jones received it on 5 February 1852. — 11, 38
Page me39.597
†20 On 16 January 1852 Jones informed Engels about Harney's sudden refusal to write on foreign policy for The Notes to the People. Harney explained his position by his friendly connections with the supporters of the parliamentary reform (see Note 28). The conflict between Jones and Harney arose at the end of 1850. Jones headed the revolutionary wing of the Chartists and worked to create a mass proletarian party in England, trying to unite all the revolutionary proletarian elements and revive Chartism on a socialist basis. Harney advocated a 'united national party' to be formed on the basis of diverse national associations, including bourgeois ones, to campaign for universal suffrage. Harney's attempts to create a 'mass party of reform' and an independent press organ completely failed by the autumn of 1852. — 11

Page Break me39.598
Page me39.598
†21 The decrees on the resignation of de Morny, Minister of the Interior, and the appointment of Persigny to this post, on the resignation of Fould, Minister of Finance, and on the confiscation of the property of the Orleans were signed by Louis Bonaparte on 22 January 1852 and published in Le Moniteur universel on 23 January and Le Constitutionnel on 24 January. — 12
Page me39.598
†22 Pieper's article 'Die Arbeiter Assoziation in England' was written on 15 January 1852, but as Die Revolution had ceased to appear the article was published in Die Reform, Nos. 41, 42 and 44 on 20, 21 and 31 August 1853. — 13
Page me39.598
†23 The announcement published in the Turn-Zeitung in connection with the starting of Die Revolution (see Note 2), was repeated in two issues of Die Revolution in January 1852. It read: 'Die Revolution is published every Saturday, from January on, under the editorship of the undersigned and in co-operation with the editorial board of the former Neue Rheinische Zeitung (Marx, Engels, Freiligrath, etc.). Its task will be to present as clear a picture as possible of the class struggle which is increasingly concentrating in the Old World, to culminate in the abolition of all class distinctions. It will keep its readers abreast of all the changes occurring in the industrial and commercial relations between the different nations and classes of the people and in their political attitude towards one another, changes which prepare revolutionary explosions.
'New York, January 1852
'J. Weydemeyer'. — 13
Page me39.598

†24 When the Communist League (see Note 15) split, and Marx, Engels and their followers withdrew from the German Workers' Educational Society in London, the spokesmen of the Willich-Schapper faction (located in Great Windmill Street) brought a suit on behalf of the Society against Heinrich Bauer and Karl Pfänder, supporters of the majority of the League's Central Authority, who, as trustees, held part of the Society's money to be used under the Central Authority's control for the needs of the League and to help political refugees. They were accused of stealing this money. A libel campaign against Bauer and Pfänder was started in the press (Schweizerische National-Zeitung, 7 January 1851; Republik der Arbeiter, New York, Nos. 19, 20 and 21 for 23 and 30 August and 6 September 1851). In the statement made on 21 January 1852 and mentioned here, Pfänder refuted the libel and said that on 20 November 1850 the court had acknowledged the charge to be invalid (see present edition, Vol. 38, Note 328).
Page me39.598

The German Workers' Educational Society in London was founded in February 1840 by Karl Schapper, Joseph Moll and other members of the League of the Just. After the reorganisation of the League of the Just in the summer of 1847 and the founding of the Communist League, the latter's local communities played the leading role in the Society. In 1847 and 1849-50 Marx and Engels took an active part in the Society's work. — 14, 195, 217, 226, 336

Page Break me39.599

Page me39.599
†25 This refers to the workers' society founded in London in January 1852 with Marx's support. It consisted of those who had withdrawn from the German Workers' Educational Society (see Note 24) and had the carpenter G.L. Stechan, a refugee from Hanover, as its chairman. An active part in organising this society was also played by Georg Lochner, a worker, Communist League member and close friend of Marx and Engels. The society did not survive long, many of its members, Stechan included, coming under the influence of the Willich-Schapper faction and rejoining their organisation. — 14, 72, 233
Page me39.599
†26 Agitation and Emigration were the names Marx gave to two rival German petty-bourgeois refugee organisations in London which appeared in the summer of 1851 — the Agitation Union headed by Ruge and Goegg and the German Emigration Club headed by Kinkel and Willich. The aim of both these small organisations was to raise money for an 'immediate revolution' in Germany. — 14, 42, 44, 97, 151
Page me39.599
†27 The reference is to the so-called German-American revolutionary loan which Kinkel and other petty-bourgeois refugee leaders tried to raise among the German emigrants in Europe and America in 1851-52 to finance an 'immediate revolution' in Germany. Kinkel's trip to the USA for this purpose in September 1851-March 1852 was a failure. In a number of their works (e.g. The Great Men of the Exile, The Knight of the Noble Consciousness, present edition, Vols. 11 and 12), Marx and Engels ridiculed this idea of Kinkel's and denounced the attempts to produce a revolution artificially when the revolutionary movement was on the wane. — 15, 73, 115, 121
Page me39.599

†28 In January 1852 The Northern Star was sold by O'Connor to A.G. Flemming and D. MacGowan. In 1849 a radical political trend among the Free Traders founded the National Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association to campaign for an electoral reform (the so-called Little Charter) and a taxation reform. By opposing their programme to that of the Chartists and at the same time borrowing some of their demands though in an extremely curtailed form, the bourgeois radicals expected to split the Chartist movement and to influence the workers. The bourgeois radicals, supported in their campaign by Cobden, Bright and the reformist elements among the Chartists under O'Connor, failed and the Association ceased to exist in 1855.
Page me39.599
In writing about a Chartist faction connected with the supporters of the financial and parliamentary reform, Marx has Harney's group in mind (see Note 20). — 15, 68, 89
Page me39.599
†29 The letter to Weydemeyer and two articles of the series on England (see Note 17) which Engels mentions have not been found. — 16
Page me39.599
†30 Engels draws an ironical parallel between the policy of Bonapartism in the social sphere and the views of German 'true socialists' (Karl Grün, Moses Hess, Hermann Kriege and others), who in the mid-1840s indulged in the sentimental preaching of love and brotherhood and of pseudo-socialist ideas, and denied the need for political struggle and a revolution. Marx and Engels criticised this ideological trend of the reactionary German petty bourgeoisie particularly in The German Ideology (see present edition, Vol. 5), and in the Circular Against Kriege, German Socialism in Verse and Prose and the Manifesto of the Communist Party (Vol. 6). — 17

Page Break me39.600
Page me39.600
†31 The Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851 caused a republican uprising of artisans, workers in small towns, local peasants, tradesmen and intellectuals in about 20 departments in South-East, South-West and Central France. The Bonapartists thoroughly concealed the genuine scale of the republican movement. The true character of the movement and its brutal suppression by police and troops became known only in the last years of the Second Empire (see present edition, Vol. 43, Marx to Engels, 19 December 1868). — 17
Page me39.600
†32 Engels has in mind his article 'England' which he intended to send to Weydemeyer with the letter (see Note 17). — 18
Page me39.600
†33 The Roman wall (so-called Hadrian's Wall) was erected in North England in the second century to defend the Roman province of Britannia against the raids of the Picts (tribes then inhabiting the territory of what is now Scotland) and extended between the Solway and the Tyne (from Carlisle to Newcastle) over a distance of about 120 kilometres. After the fall of Roman rule in the fifth century Hadrian's Wall was destroyed. — 18
Page me39.600

†34 These are Marx's covering notes to Stechan's contributions to Die Revolution, which Marx promised to Weydemeyer in his letter of 23 January 1852. The material contained some concrete facts concerning the persecution of the participants in the socialist and communist movements in Germany and the position of the Communist League members, Bürgers, Becker, Daniels, Otto and others, then under investigation in Cologne, but it was not a finished article. The material reached Weydemeyer in New York before 17 February but was not used because Die Revolution had ceased to appear. — 19
Page me39.600
†35 On the confiscation of the property of the Orleans, the appointment of Persigny Minister of the Interior, and the resignation of Minister of Finance Fould, see Note 21. — 21
Page me39.600
†36 The 'glorious revolution' of 1688 in England established a constitutional monarchy based on a compromise between the landed aristocracy and the financial bourgeoisie. — 21
Page me39.600
†37 Kossuth was given an enthusiastic reception on his arrival in England in October 1851. Some bourgeois liberals and government representatives, in particular the Foreign Secretary Palmerston, used this welcome as an excuse to eulogise British constitutional freedoms. This served as a hypocritical cover for the unseemly role played by Britain in supporting the suppression of European revolutions, including that in Hungary.
Page me39.600
The Great Exhibition in London, held from 1 May to 15 October 1851, was the first world trade and industrial exhibition, and was portrayed by some as the beginning of an era of 'universal peace'. — 21
Page me39.600
†38 The reference is to the verse added by Freiligrath to the second poem which he had written for Weydemeyer's newspaper on 23 January 1852 (see Note 13) and sent to Marx on 25 January 1852 to have his opinion:

Das heißt: dafern Du Babel nicht beglücktest
Endlos mit Briefen, Karten, Inseraten,
(Plakaten gar!) — dafern Du Dich nicht bücktest,
Und um ein Wörtlein nur von Deinen Thaten
Feig vor der Presse krochst und so Dich drücktest,
(Gleich Virtuosen oder Akrobaten,)
Daß Dich zuletzt, nach manchem sauern Schritt,
Wirklich in Holz die Illustrierte schnitt!

Page Break me39.601
Here Freiligrath alludes to the fact that Kinkel, by flattery and fawning, succeeded in having an article about himself, together with a portrait, printed in the Illustrated News on 30 November 1850.
Page me39.601

When the poem was published, the additional verse about Kinkel was not included, which means that Freiligrath complied with Marx's recommendation. — 21
Page me39.601
†39 Freiligrath's second poem contained verses addressed to Hans Andersen which Marx mentions here. They were prompted by Freiligrath's grudge against Andersen who, while in London, did not recognise him when they chanced to meet. He felt all the more bitter because the Danish storyteller had enjoyed his hospitality in Germany.
Page me39.601
When the poem was published in Die Revolution the editors supplied the following note to Andersen's name: 'Herr Andersen himself appears here not merely as an individual but as the epitome of a peculiar type of literary lion and parasite to which the revolution seemed to have dealt the death-blow but which is again coming up and boastfully asserting itself everywhere.' In Freiligraths gesammelte Dichtungen published in Stuttgart in 1870 (Bd. 4, S. 5-6) the poem was printed without the 11 verses devoted to Hans Christian Andersen. — 22
Page me39.601
†40 In a letter to Marx of 25 January 1852 Freiligrath quoted a letter from Ebner who expressed surprise at not having received any letters from Marx and Pieper and promised to discuss with the publisher Löwenthal the possibility of printing Marx's works. It later transpired that Ebner was an Austrian police informer, of which Marx and his friends were not aware at the time. — 22
Page me39.601
†41 Marx refers here to the ruling of the Board of indicting magistrates concerning the members of the Communist League arrested and detained under investigation in Cologne (see Note 16). He quotes it probably from the letter of the lawyer Bermbach received in January 1852 (it has not been found). This same letter was also used by Marx when he described the proceedings to Weydemeyer in a letter of 13 February 1852 (see this volume, p. 34). — 22
Page me39.601
†42 The letters of Marx and Engels to The Times and The Daily News on the Cologne Communist Trial were not published in view of the editors' hostility to the leading figures of the revolutionary movement. The original of Engels' letter to The Daily News has not survived. It may be that Engels did not do the final editing (see this volume, p. 29). For Marx's and Engels' letter to The Times see Vol. 11 of the present edition. — 24, 25
Page me39.601
†43 The New-York Daily Tribune published in all 19 articles of Engels' Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. Marx intended to write the last, twentieth, article, but did not do so. — 25
Page me39.601
†44 Eccarius wrote an article about the English machine-building workers' strike (see Note 79) for Die Revolution, but since the latter had ceased publication Weydemeyer proposed to publish the article in the New-Yorker Demokrat. — 26, 117
Page me39.601
†45 Marx refers here to his work on political economy which he started as early as 1843. He conceived it as a critique of bourgeois political economy and an analysis of the economic structure of bourgeois society in his time and its ideological basis. His initial research resulted in the writing of Economic and Philosophic Manuscripts of 1844 (see present edition, Vol. 3) which were to serve as a basis for the whole work. On 1 February 1845, Marx signed a contract with

Page Break me39.602

Carl Leske, a Darmstadt publisher, for the publication of his two-volume 'Kritik der Politik und National-Ökonomie'. This plan did not materialise as a whole, however, because Marx was busy writing other works (The Holy Family, The German Ideology, etc.). The contract with Leske was cancelled in February 1847.

Page me39.602

Marx returned to his economic studies when he was in London, in the period of emigration, after the defeat of the 1848-49 bourgeois-democratic revolutions. From the spring of 1850 onwards he regularly visited the library of the British Museum, where he made a deep and thorough study of the economy of different countries, England in particular, critically analysed works by classic bourgeois economists, and made extracts from books by English, French, American and other economists and from official documents and periodicals. The notes and extracts made by Marx in the 1850s fill several dozen special notebooks. At that period Marx was especially interested in the history of landed property and rent, the history and theory of money circulation and prices, and economic crises.

Page me39.602

In 1851 and 1852 Marx renewed his attempts to find a publisher for his work on economics, but he could not find one either in Germany or in America.

Page me39.602

The vast stock of facts and theoretical material on political economy accumulated between 1850 and 1853 was systematised and arranged in the manuscripts of 1857-58 (also known as the Grundrisse), part of which, after a further revision, was published in 1859 as the first part of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Work on the economic manuscripts of the 1850s was an important stage in Marx's writing his main economic treatise, Capital, published in 1867. — 26, 46, 69, 99, 259, 293, 367

Page me39.602

†46 Here Engels has in mind the Willich-Schapper faction (see Note 15) which existed till early 1853. — 29

Page me39.602

†47 The publication of Harney's weekly, The Friend of the People, the first issue of which appeared on 14 December 1850, was discontinued at the end of July 1851.

Page me39.602

Harney seems to have sent to Marx the proofs of the first issue of the resumed publication, which came out on 7 February 1852. — 30

Page me39.602

†48 The Amalgamated Society of Engineers was founded in 1851. Gerald Massey's article, mentioned by Marx, was published in The Friend of the People, No. 1, on 7 February 1852 and entitled 'The Engineers, Operative and Co-operative'. — 30

Page me39.602

†49 The reference is to Harney's speech at the Chartist meeting in London on 3 February 1852, the opening day of the English Parliament. — 31
Page me39.602
†50 Marx may have had in mind O'Connor's speech in the Court of Chancery (2-5 February 1852) where he and the directors of the Chartist National Land Company founded in 1845 gave evidence on the Company's financial activity, and its compliance with the parliamentary Act of August 1851 which envisaged the disbanding of this Chartist organisation. O'Connor's evidence was published in The Northern Star, No. 744, 7 February 1852. — 31
Page me39.602
†51 The Egyptian Pasha Mohammed Ali, who had actually secured his position as independent ruler of the country and strove to secede from the Ottoman Empire, carried out a number of important socio-economic reforms in the 1820s-30s in the sphere of agrarian relations, organisation of the state apparatus, industry and the navy. In his reforms Mohammed Ali received a certain assistance from French ruling circles who supported him in the struggle against the Sultan in order to strengthen their own position in the Middle East. On Mohammed Ali's invitation a large number of French officers, military instructors and engineers went to Egypt. — 31

Page Break me39.603
Page me39.603
†52 This letter (without Jenny Marx's postscript) was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953 and the journal Masses and Mainstream, New York, 1953, No. 3.
Page me39.603
An extract from Jenny Marx's postscript was first published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 29, Stuttgart, 1906-07. — 33
Page me39.603
†53 Marx wanted someone to start a campaign in the American Press in defence of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (see Note 16). This letter was used by Cluss as a basis for a large article published in Cincinnati in the democratic newspaper, Der Hochwächter, No. 80, 14 April 1852. On Marx's request, Weydemeyer also delivered the material about those accused in Cologne to the New-York Daily Tribune, which published it considerably abridged and with some editorial remarks as a leading article 'Justice in Prussia' in No. 3446, 4 May 1852. — 34
Page me39.603
†54 An allusion to the fact that Kinkel, a participant in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, was taken prisoner and sentenced to life imprisonment. In November 1850, with the help of Carl Schurz, he escaped from the prison in Spandau to England. — 34
Page me39.603
†55 In a letter of 6 February 1852 (with a postscript from Cluss) Weydemeyer informed Marx of the suspension of Die Revolution (see Note 2) and Cluss' and his intention to continue publication of Marx's works written in London, as announced in the first issue of the journal. Weydemeyer also wrote that on 4 February 1852 Dana published in the New-York Daily Tribune an article by Ludwig Simon (a deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly), 'Movements of the German Political Exiles', attacking Marx and Engels. — 37, 44

Page me39.603
†56 The reference is to the former deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly. The Frankfurt Left — the petty-bourgeois Left wing of the National Assembly which was convened after the March revolution in Germany and opened its session in Frankfurt on 18 May 1848. The main aim of the Assembly was to put an end to the political disunity of Germany and draw up an all-German Constitution. However it failed to take a decisive stand on the basic problems of the 1848-49 German revolution and ceased to exist on 18 June 1849. — 37
Page me39.603
†57 March associations (thus named after the March 1848 revolution) were branches in various German towns of the Central March Association, founded in Frankfurt am Main at the end of November 1848 by Left-wing deputies to the Frankfurt National Assembly. Fröbel, Simon, Ruge, Vogt and other petty-bourgeois democratic leaders of the associations confined themselves to revolutionary phrase-mongering and displayed indecision and inconsistency in the struggle against counter-revolution, for which Marx and Engels criticised them sharply in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see K. Marx, 'The Frankfurt March Association and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung', present edition, Vol. 9). — 37, 42, 44
Page me39.603
†58 In writing about the King of Prussia being imposed on the German people Marx had in mind the all-German central government headed by a hereditary emperor and the Imperial Parliament — the Reichstag, which were envisaged by the Imperial Constitution drawn up by the Frankfurt Assembly. On 28 March 1849 the Assembly offered the imperial crown to Frederick William IV of Prussia but he refused to accept it from the 'people's representation'. — 42, 44

Page Break me39.604
Page me39.604
†59 Karl Vogt was a member of the Imperial Regency of five formed in Stuttgart on 7 June 1849 by the rump of the National Assembly which moved there from Frankfurt. The attempts of the Regency to implement by parliamentary means the Imperial Constitution, drawn up by the Frankfurt Assembly and rejected by the German princes, failed. — 42, 44
Page me39.604
†60 Cluss made a statement about the congress of American guarantors of the 'German-American loan' (see Note 27) to be held in Cincinnati on 3-8 February 1852. Cluss protested against being named as one of the guarantors. On Marx's instructions he exposed the adventurism of the whole idea. Cluss dispatched the text of the statement to Marx in London at the end of February 1852 and had it published in the Turn-Zeitung, No. 6, 1 March 1852. — 42, 70, 92
Page me39.604
†61 Straubinger — German travelling journeyman. Marx and Engels ironically applied the name to some participants in the German working-class movement of the time who were connected with guild production and displayed petty-bourgeois sectarian tendencies. — 43, 137, 410

Page me39.604
†62 On 16 February 1852, amidst alarming rumours of Louis Bonaparte's intention to invade the British Isles, Russell moved in Parliament a Local Militia Bill for England and Wales. The government was granted the right, in the event of an enemy attack, to increase the strength of militia detachments previously used only within their respective counties and to subordinate them to the regular army command. When the Bill was discussed in the House of Commons, Palmerston moved an amendment that it should apply also to Scotland and Ireland, and that the word 'Local' be deleted. Palmerston had recently resigned from the Cabinet (see Note 74) and the adoption of the amendment moved by him was considered by Russell as an expression of non-confidence in the government and served as a pretext for Russell's resignation on 20 February 1852. The Tory Cabinet headed by Derby was formed on 23 February 1852. The Bill became law in July 1852. — 44, 49, 284, 520
Page me39.604
†63 This name was given in England to Free Traders who advocated government non-interference in economic life. In the 1840s and 1850s the Manchester men formed a separate political group which joined the Liberal Party as its Left wing in the 1860s. The centre of Free Traders' agitation headed by two textile manufacturers, Richard Cobden and John Bright, was Manchester. — 44, 69, 355
Page me39.604
†64 'Voting by ballot to prevent bribery and intimidation by the bourgeoisie' was the fourth point of the People's Charter published in 1838 as the programme of the General Working Men's Association in London (see F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England, present edition, Vol. 4, p. 518). — 45
Page me39.604
†65 Marx's letters to Lassalle mentioned here have not been found. — 46
Page me39.604
†66 Engels replies to a letter of 9 February 1852 in which Weydemeyer acknowledged receipt of Engels' first letter dated 23 January (see this volume, pp. 15-19); Engels' earlier letters had not reached Weydemeyer. — 52
Page me39.604
†67 Engels has in mind his article 'England. I' written for Die Revolution. About the whole series see Note 17. — 52

Page Break me39.605
Page me39.605
†68 Engels recalls the time when he fought in the ranks of the revolutionary detachments of the Palatinate provisional government (its seat was in Kaiserslautern) against the Prussian troops during the campaign for the Imperial Constitution (see Note 77). Engels was an aide-de-camp of August Willich who commanded a workers' corps. This corps was covering the retreat of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent troops to Switzerland and was the last to cross the border on 12 July 1849. — 52
Page me39.605

†69 The reference is to the counter-revolutionary coalition of European powers — the resurrected Holy Alliance as Engels calls it — formed during the suppression of the 1848-49 revolutions. See Marx's and Engels' article 'The New “Holy Alliance”' (present edition, Vol. 8) and Engels' 'Conditions and Prospects of a War of the Holy Alliance against France in 1852' (Vol. 10). — 53
Page me39.605
†70 British troops under Wellington fought Napoleonic France during the Peninsular War, 1808-14. — 53
Page me39.605
†71 Engels characterised this Bill in his article 'England. II' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 53
Page me39.605
†72 The Anti-Corn Law League was founded in 1838 by the manufacturers Cobden and Bright. In the interests of the industrial bourgeoisie, the League strove to repeal the Corn Laws which were introduced in England in the fifteenth century and limited or banned corn imports for the benefit of the landed aristocracy. The League's aim was to reduce corn prices on the home market and together with them workers' wages. It made wide use of the free trade slogan, demagogically preaching that the interests of workers and industrialists coincided. In 1846 the Corn Laws were repealed, which signified victory for the industrial bourgeoisie, advocates of free trade (see Note 63). That same year the League declared itself dissolved, but in fact its branches continued to exist. In February 1852, in view of the protectionist tendencies of the Derby Ministry, attempts were made to revive the League. — 53, 56, 61, 69, 512
Page me39.605
†73 The Peelites — a group of moderate Tories who rallied around Sir Robert Peel in the 1840s and supported his policy of concessions to the commercial and industrial bourgeoisie in the economic sphere while preserving the political domination of the big landlords and financiers. In 1846, in the interests of the industrial bourgeoisie, Peel repealed the Corn Laws. This caused great dissatisfaction among the Tory protectionists and led to a split in the Tory party and the secession of the Peelites. After Peel's death (1850), the Peelites formed a political group without any definite programme; they participated in the Aberdeen Coalition Ministry (1852-55) and merged with the Liberal Party in the late 1850s and early 1860s. — 54, 129
Page me39.605
†74 Palmerston, Foreign Secretary in the Whig Ministry of Russell, was dismissed because in a conversation with the French ambassador in London he had expressed his approval of the Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851, without consulting other members of the Ministry. The dismissal occurred on 19 December 1851, though in principle the British Government did not disagree with Palmerston's point of view and was the first in Europe to recognise the Bonapartist regime in France. — 54, 456
Page me39.605
†75 Aliens Bills were occasionally passed by the British Parliament on the pretext of guarding British subjects against the allegedly hostile actions of foreigners residing in England. These Bills were in fact directed against members of the international revolutionary-democratic and working-class movement who lived in England as political refugees. — 54, 523

Page Break me39.606

Page me39.606
†76 Engels did not write a special article on this subject for Weydemeyer, but expressed some of his ideas on matters of the cotton industry and the development of world trade in letters to Marx (in particular, on 2 March and 20 April 1852, see this volume, pp. 57-58 and 82-83), who in his turn shared them with his American friends. These ideas were reflected in articles by Cluss and Weydemeyer published in 1852 in American democratic periodicals, e.g. Weydemeyer's 'Die Lage Europa's' in the Turn-Zeitung, No. 10, 1 July 1852. — 55
Page me39.606
†77 The campaign for the Imperial Constitution, which was adopted by the Frankfurt National Assembly (see Note 56) on 28 March 1849, was the last stage of the 1848-49 bourgeois-democratic revolution in Germany. Despite its limited character, the Constitution was a step forward in solving the problem of Germany's unification. But it was rejected by the majority of German governments. In May 1849 popular uprisings in support of the Constitution broke out in Saxony, Rhenish Prussia, Baden and the Palatinate. The insurgents received no support from the Frankfurt National Assembly and the movement was suppressed in July 1849. Engels devoted his work The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution to this subject (see present edition, Vol. 10), but did not fulfil his wish to elucidate this problem in one of the articles of Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. — 56
Page me39.606
†78 In 1844, to satisfy the Austrian Government, Sir James Graham, the British Home Secretary, ordered that the letters of Italian revolutionary refugees should be handed over to the police to be opened. This was the case with the letters of the Bandiera brothers (members of the conspiratorial organisation) to Mazzini containing the plan of their expedition to Calabria. The aim of the expedition was to start an uprising in Italy against the Neapolitan Bourbons and Austrian rule. The participants in the expedition were arrested and the Bandieras executed. — 56
Page me39.606
†79 The machine-building workers' strike which started in late December 1851 in several towns of South-East and Central England was organised by the Amalgamated Society of Engineers (see Note 48) with the aim of abolishing overtime and improving working conditions. The employers responded with a lock-out on a national scale. After three months' struggle the workers were defeated and compelled to resume work on the former terms. — 57
Page me39.606
†80 The anonymous letter of 29 February 1852 informed Marx that he and his friends were under Prussian police surveillance and hinted that there might be a traitor in their organisation. — 58
Page me39.606
†81 Marx's letter to Amalie Daniels has not been found; judging by Marx's letter to Freiligrath (see this volume, p. 23), it could have been written after 26 January 1852. — 59
Page me39.606

†82 Jones' letter to Weydemeyer of 3 March 1852 was intended for Die Revolution. It described the condition of various classes of English society and analysed the development of class struggle in England. Judging by Weydemeyer's letter to Marx of 24 May 1853, the letter was published in the American democratic papers at the end of 1852 or beginning of 1853. — 59, 60, 70, 319
Page me39.606
†83 The National Reform League was founded in London in 1849 by the Chartist leaders Bronterre O'Brien, G.W.M. Reynolds, the Owenite socialist Lloyd

Page Break me39.607
Jones and others. The League campaigned for universal suffrage and social reforms.
Page me39.607
The meeting was reported in The Times, No. 21053, 3 March 1852. — 59
Page me39.607
†84 An abridged translation of this letter was first published in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London, 1934. — 60, 196, 330, 472, 562
Page me39.607
†85 Apparently, while writing the concluding part of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, Marx somewhat changed his plan: the work includes not six, but seven chapters, the last of which he sent to New York on 25 March 1852 (see this volume, p. 70). — 60, 573
Page me39.607
†86 The role of protectionism at the different stages of capitalist development and the influence of the Corn Laws on the economic structure and class relations in capitalist society were the subject of a special economic research by Marx. See in particular 'The Protectionists, the Free Traders and the Working Class', 'Speech on the Question of Free Trade', Marx's speech included into Engels' 'The Free Trade Congress at Brussels' (present edition, Vol. 6) and also Capital, Vol. III, Book III, Part VI, Chapters XXXVII and XLIII. — 61
Page me39.607
†87 Marx analysed H. Ch. Carey's Essay on the Rate of Wages and criticised his views in Capital, Vol. I, Part V, Ch. XVIII and Part VI, Ch. XXII and Vol. III, Book III, Part VI, Ch. XXXVII. — 62
Page me39.607
†88 In 1853 these notes were used by Cluss almost unchanged in the article 'Das ”beste Blatt der Union” und seine “besten Männer” und Nationalökonomen' written against Heinzen and other petty-bourgeois democrats (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 65
Page me39.607
†89 In their polemic articles against Heinzen published in the Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung in 1847 (Engels' 'The Communists and Karl Heinzen' and Marx's 'Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality', see present edition, Vol. 6) Marx and Engels revealed the narrow-minded democratism of the German petty-bourgeois radicals, in particular their failure to understand the need for the centralisation and unification of Germany. — 65

Page me39.607
†90 Hochstuhl's visit to the USA being delayed, Cluss received seven copies of the pamphlet Zwei politische Prozesse only in July 1852 when Conrad Schramm arrived there. — 66
Page me39.607
†91 A reference to the Rules of the Communist League drawn up by the Central Authority in Cologne in December 1850 after the split in the League in September 1850 (see Note 15). — 66
Page me39.607
†92 An abridged translation of this letter was first published in K. Marx and F. Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 66
Page me39.607
†93 An allusion to a duel between Dronke and Sazonov, a Russian emigrant in Geneva, in early August 1851. — 67
Page me39.607
†94 Engels began to study Slavonic languages (Russian, Serbo-Croatian, Slovenian and Czech) at the end of 1850 and wanted to write a comparative grammar of these languages. He studied Russian most thoroughly. Extracts made by Engels from Pushkin's Eugene Onegin and The Bronze Horseman and Griboyedov's Wit Works Woe have survived. In the early 1850s he made extracts from Bowring's Specimens of the Russian Poets on eighteenth- and early nineteenth-century poets and writers: Lomonosov, Derzhavin, Karamzin, Zhukovsky, Krylov and others. He knew many works by Czech and Serbian authors on the history of literature and folk art and also studied the history and culture of the Slav peoples on the basis of books by West European authorities. — 67

Page Break me39.608
Page me39.608
†95 Engels alludes to the portraits of George Washington, John Milton, Robert Blum and others printed in Harney's The Friend of the People. The portrait of Ko&sa;ciuszko (1746-1817), a leader in the Polish liberation movement, was printed in No. 6, 13 March 1852. — 68
Page me39.608
†96 On 14 March 1852 Louis Bonaparte decreed the conversion of the state five per cents. The holders of five per cent papers were offered reimbursement of their nominal value or their exchange for papers of the same nominal price but bringing in 4 1/2 per cent revenue. The measure was carried out with the help of the banking houses. The decree was published in Le Moniteur universel, No. 74, 14 March 1852. — 68
Page me39.608
†97 Marx has in mind the plan suggested by Weydemeyer (in his letter to Marx of 10 March 1852), after the weekly Die Revolution ceased to appear, to publish the manuscripts held by Weydemeyer as separate pamphlets. The first issue was to contain Freiligrath's poems; the second, Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte; the third, Eccarius' article on the English machine-building workers' strike; the fourth, Cluss' article on the campaign for abstention from strong drinks; the fifth, his own article against Kinkel's memorandum; the sixth, Engels' article on England, and so on. However, Weydemeyer managed to issue two pamphlets only (see Note 2). — 70

Page me39.608
†98 Weydemeyer fulfilled Marx's instructions (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 163). Marx relates, not quite accurately, the story told by the Greek writer Athenaeus (2nd-3rd cent. A.D.) in his book Deipnosophistai (Dinner-Table Philosophers). The Egyptian Pharaoh Tachos, alluding to the small stature of the Spartan King Agesilaus, who had come with his troops to the Pharaoh's help, said: 'The mountain was in labour. Zeus was afraid. But the mountain has brought forth a mouse.' Agesilaus replied: 'I seem to you now only a mouse, but the time will come when I will appear to you like a lion.' — 70
Page me39.608
†99 On 23 March 1852, on Marx's instructions, Wilhelm Wolff wrote in a letter to Cluss (to be passed on to Weydemeyer) that, instead of an article against Kossuth, Szemere was going to publish a pamphlet of 10 sheets about Görgey, Batthyány and Kossuth. Attempts to find a publisher in the USA in 1852 failed however, and only in 1853 did the newspaper Die Reform (Nos. 18-28, 1 June-6 July) publish the second section of the article, devoted to Görgey. The book appeared in Hamburg in 1853. — 70, 77
Page me39.608
†100 Marx refers here to the German Workers' Educational Society (see Note 24) dominated at the time by supporters of Willich and Schapper.
Page me39.608
On Pfänder's statement, see Note 24. — 72
Page me39.608
†101 The reference is to preparations to start The People's Paper. — 72
Page me39.608
†102 In February 1852 the Morning Courier and New-York Enquirer published Szemere's letter against Kossuth. Cluss informed Marx and Wolff of this in a letter at the end of February 1852. — 73
Page me39.608
†103 Marx means the Central Committee of European Democracy founded in London in June 1850 on Mazzini's initiative. It included Ledru-Rollin, Darasz and Ruge and united bourgeois and petty-bourgeois refugees from different countries. In March 1852 the Central Committee of European Democracy actually dissolved due to disagreements between Italian and French democratic refugees. — 73, 171, 433

Page Break me39.609
Page me39.609
†104 2 December 1851 — the day of the counter-revolutionary coup d'état in France.
Page me39.609
The capture of Rome was effected by French troops on 1 July 1849 as a result of the intervention of France, Austria, Spain and Naples against the Roman Republic proclaimed on 9 February 1849. After this event the republic ceased to exist. — 73
Page me39.609

†105 Marx refers here to Cluss' letter of 18 March 1852. Cluss reported on the activities of German petty-bourgeois emigrants in the USA and his opposition to the Congress of Kinkel's guarantors in Pittsburgh. This statement, dated 18 February, was published in the Baltimore Wecker and reprinted in the Demokratisches Tageblatt (Cincinnati), No. 145, 20 March 1852, under the title 'Eine verdeckte Batterie'. — 76
Page me39.609
†106 The reference here is to Weydemeyer's letter to Marx and Engels of 6 April 1852. The part addressed to Engels bore no date, thus giving rise to Engels' doubts.
Page me39.609
Engels has in mind here a meeting of the German petty-bourgeois refugees convened in New York on 3 April 1852 by the representatives of the American Revolutionary League (see Note 173) and presided by Fickler. Goegg and Fickler, who vied with Kinkel in raising funds in the USA for the so-called German-American revolutionary loan (see Note 27), tried to make Kinkel's supporters agree to the association of the rival emigrant organisations. This was also reported in Cluss' letter to Wolff of 4-6 April 1852. — 79
Page me39.609
†107 Judging by Weydemeyer's letter to Marx of 11 May 1852 Müller-Tellering's letter containing slanderous attacks on Marx was not accepted by the American newspapers. — 80
Page me39.609
†108 The reference is to the non-periodic journal Die Revolution (see Note 2). — 80
Page me39.609
†109 Engels was in London for a few days in mid-April 1852 (at Easter). — 81
Page me39.609
†110 Bas-empire (Lower Empire) — the name sometimes given in historical literature to the Byzantine Empire and also to the late Roman Empire; it came to denote a state at the stage of decline and dissolution. Here it refers to the proclamation of the Second Empire in France then being prepared by Bonapartist circles and effected on 2 December 1852. — 82, 453
Page me39.609
†111 Only an extract from this letter has survived, quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 6 June 1852. Marx made use of the economic data contained in Engels' letter to him of 20 April 1852 (see this volume, pp. 81-83) supplementing his political conclusion: 'On the other hand, it explains the flaccid condition of politics in this country. Given such prosperity, the Tories cannot, for their part, compete with the “blessings of Free Trade”, even though they are at the helm, while the Free Traders, for their part, refrain from provoking political agitation because, so long as business is flourishing, the manufacturers do not want political upheavals and disturbances.' — 83
Page me39.609
†112 A short extract from this letter has survived, quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 8 May 1852. — 84
Page me39.609
†113 The Society of 10 December — a secret Bonapartist organisation founded in 1849 and consisting mainly of declassed elements, political adventurists and reactionary military. Its members were active participants in and organisers of the coup d'état on 2 December 1851. Marx gave a detailed analysis of this society in The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 88

Page Break me39.610

Page me39.610

†114 The reference here is presumably to the five chapters from Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte dispatched by Marx to Weydemeyer in New York between January and March 1852 and, after the manuscript had been copied, returned enclosed in Weydemeyer's letter of 6 April 1852. — 88

Page me39.610

†115 A reference to the division at the second reading of the Militia Bill (see Note 62) in the House of Commons. — 89

Page me39.610

†116 In the spring of 1852 negotiations were carried on to set up a new editorial board of The Northern Star, a Chartist newspaper published by O'Connor from 1837 onwards. Harney turned down Jones' proposal to publish the Chartist newspaper jointly, would not let Jones buy The Northern Star, acquired it himself and continued the publication first under the title The Star and from 24 April 1852 The Star of Freedom. This revealed the disagreement in principle existing between Jones and Harney, the latter seeking to turn the newspaper into the mouthpiece of the Right-wing Chartists and bourgeois radicals. In May 1852, Jones started a new Chartist weekly, The People's Paper. — 89, 93

Page me39.610

†117 Engels wrote this letter on Weydemeyer's letter to him of 12 April 1852. — 90

Page me39.610

†118 In April 1852 Engels wrote only Article XIV; the next articles (XV-XIX), devoted to the campaign for the Imperial Constitution and the popular uprisings of 1849 in its support, were written in July-September 1852. — 90

Page me39.610

†119 Engels visited Marx in London in the first half of April 1852 and returned to Manchester about 13 April. — 92

Page me39.610

†120 Gymnastic clubs — organisations of German democratic emigrants, including workers, set up in the USA by former participants in the 1848-49 revolution. At a congress in Philadelphia on 5 October 1850 the gymnastic clubs united into a Socialist Gymnastic Association (Sozialistischer Turnverein) which maintained contacts with German workers' organisations in America and published the Turn-Zeitung, a newspaper to which Weydemeyer and Cluss contributed regularly in 1852 and 1853. — 92, 282

Page me39.610

†121 Marx quotes Cluss' letter to him of 15 April 1852. Cluss' previous letter of 4-6 April, mentioned here, was addressed to Wilhelm Wolff and informed him of a meeting of the German petty-bourgeois refugees held in New York on 3 April 1852 (see Note 106). — 93

Page me39.610

†122 The reference is presumably to the copies of Marx's letters of 15-22 August and 2 December 1851 to the journalist Ebner, in which he exposed the activities of Ruge, Kinkel, Willich and others (see present edition, Vol. 38). Later these literary sketches became part of the pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile (see Note 131). Marx's letters to Ebner became known to the Austrian police. — 93
Page me39.610
†123 An allusion to Willich's participation in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849. — 93
Page me39.610
†124 In a letter of 9 April 1852 Weydemeyer informed Marx that, due to the assistance of a German emigrant worker who had donated 40 dollars, the printing of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte had become possible. — 94
Page me39.610
†125 The reference is to a letter Wilhelm Wolff wrote to Weydemeyer on 16 April

Page Break me39.611
1852, immediately after the death of Marx's youngest daughter Franziska, in reply to Weydemeyer's letter describing the difficulties encountered in publishing The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte. — 94
Page me39.611
†126 Weydemeyer wanted to publish Pfänder's statements (see Note 24, and this volume, p. 14) in one of the issues of the planned non-periodic journal Die Revolution; this intention was not carried out. — 94
Page me39.611
†127 This letter has not been found. — 95
Page me39.611
†128 The International Industrial Exhibition in New York was held in July 1853. — 95, 120, 349
Page me39.611
†129 Weydemeyer complied with Marx's request and reported this in the article 'Die Lage Europa's' published in the Turn-Zeitung, No. 10, 1 July 1852. — 96
Page me39.611
†130 Marx presumably wrote to Cluss about the conflict between Jones and Harney (see Note 116) on 30 April 1852. This letter has not been found. Cluss mentioned it in his letter to Marx of 22-24 May 1852. — 96
Page me39.611
†131 It was in early 1851 that Marx and Engels conceived the idea of publishing a satirical exposé of the leaders of the petty-bourgeois democratic emigration. Engels wanted to publish a series of articles about 'continental democracy' in the weekly Friend of the People (see present edition, Vol. 38, p. 278) and in the autumn of 1851 he began writing a satirical article about Karl Schapper. As is seen from Marx's letters to Ebner (see Note 122), he had the literary portraits of Ruge, Kinkel, Willich and others ready as early as 1851. In late April and early May 1852 he continued collecting facts and material on this subject and received great help in this from Cluss and Weydemeyer, who sent him newspaper cuttings describing activities of various emigrant organisations in America.
Page me39.611

On the basis of the facts collected Marx and Engels drew up a political pamphlet during May and June 1852. It was tentatively entitled The Great Men and was to consist of two parts. Only the manuscript of the first part has survived. The pamphlet was not published during the authors' lifetime, but separate chapters became known to the émigré leaders, its 'heroes' (see this volume, p. 124). Some excerpts were sent to Cluss in America in May 1852.
Page me39.611
A proposal to publish the manuscript was made by a Hungarian émigré, Bangya, who, as it turned out later, had been a police spy since 1851 and kept Greif, a Prussian police agent in London, fully informed about Marx. Marx learned about Bangya's actions only at the end of 1852 and publicly exposed them in the article 'Hirsch's Confessions' (see present edition, Vol. 12).
Page me39.611
The manuscript copy that has survived was written mainly by Engels with additions by Marx. The first pages are in Dronke's hand. The pamphlet is published in Vol. 11 of the present edition. — 98
Page me39.611
†132 After Kinkel's return from the USA, the committee which was to organise the 'German-American revolutionary loan' decided at its sitting in London on 16 April 1852 to reactivate the local sections. With this aim in view it distributed an instruction circular drawn up by Kinkel and Willich. Marx writes here about a copy of it made and sent to him by Bangya. On Bangya's spying activities, see Note 131. — 100
Page me39.611
†133 An allusion to the fact that in 1844-45 Mazzini protested in the press against Italian revolutionary emigrants' letters being opened by the police. His pamphlet, 'Italy, Austria and the Pope. A letter to Sir James Graham', was published in May 1845 in periodicals and separately. At that time James

Page Break me39.612
Graham was Home Secretary and it was on his orders that Italian revolutionary emigrants' letters were delivered to the police. — 101
Page me39.612
†134 On 14 April 1849, the Hungarian National Assembly, on Kossuth's initiative, proclaimed the independence of Hungary and the overthrow of the Habsburg dynasty. On 2 May the Defence Council was replaced by a Council of Ministers headed by Szemere. Kossuth was elected ruler of Hungary. The siege of Ofen (Buda) by the Hungarian army under Görgey lasted from 4 to 21 May 1849 and ended in the taking of the fortress. The storm was effected after the defeat of the Austrian troops near Komarom on 22 April 1849, which provided favourable conditions for the Hungarian revolutionary army to march on Vienna. See Engels' appraisal of the military operations during the siege of Buda in his article 'Buda', present edition, Vol. 17. — 101
Page me39.612
†135 The battle of Idstedt (a village in northern Schleswig) was fought on 24-25 July 1850 by the Schleswig-Holsteinian and Danish troops and was the concluding episode of the national liberation uprising in Schleswig-Holstein against Danish rule in 1848-50. Under public pressure the Prussian Government, together with other states of the German Confederation, started a war against Denmark in 1848, but repeatedly betrayed the insurgents and on 2 July 1850 concluded peace with Denmark, leaving the insurgents to fight alone. As a result, the duchies remained within the Kingdom of Denmark. See Engels' detailed analysis of this battle on pp. 451-52 of this volume. — 103

Page me39.612
†136 As from 1852 Engels made a thorough study of the history of warfare, planning to write a military history of the 1848-49 revolutions, the Hungarian and Italian campaigns in particular. For this purpose he studied the works by Clausewitz, Jomini, Willisen, Hoffstetter, Küntzel, Görgey and many others. However, he failed to implement his plan. — 104, 128, 249
Page me39.612
†137 These are extracts from two letters which Marx sent to Cluss in the USA on 7 May and on about 15 May 1852. The extracts were quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 31 May 1852. It cannot be established with certainty when each extract was written. However, the analysis of the letters from Cluss to Marx of 22-24 May 1852 and to Weydemeyer of 25 May 1852 leads to the conclusion that the first paragraphs belong to the second letter and the rest must be from that of 7 May, though passages from the second letter are interpolated; this applies in particular to the passage containing quotations from Bermbach's letter of 3 May 1852, which could not have been received in London earlier than 13 May. — 105
Page me39.612
†138 After his expulsion from the German Workers' Educational Society in London in the spring of 1850, Müller-Tellering (on the exposure of his intrigues in that Society, see present edition, Vol. 38, pp. 229-30) wrote a lampoon — Vorgeschmack in die künftige deutsche Diktatur von Marx und Engels. The inscription on the envelope quoted here by Marx is a direct allusion to that publication. In compliance with Marx's wish Cluss returned to Müller-Tellering everything he had received. — 105
Page me39.612
†139 Demagogues is Germany were the participants in the students' opposition movement after the liberation of the country from Napoleonic rule. The name became current after the Karlsbad Conference of Ministers of the German States in August 1819, which adopted a special decision on the persecution of the demagogues. — 106, 223

Page Break me39.613
Page me39.613
†140 The reference is to György Klapka's 'Political Programme' dated April 1852. Marx wrote the introductory and concluding remarks to it (see present edition, Vol. 11) planning to publish them in the New-York Daily Tribune. But the plan was not realised in this form. In September-November 1852 Marx had the articles 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston' and 'Kossuth, Mazzini, and Louis Napoleon' (see present edition, Vol. 11) published in that newspaper. He warned revolutionary democrats against premature action and maintained that any reliance on support from Louis Bonaparte in the struggle to liberate Hungary and Italy from Austrian rule would only contribute to strengthening the Second Empire. — 106
Page me39.613

†141 In a letter to Marx of 6 February 1852 Weydemeyer promised to dispatch the first 50 copies of The Eighteenth Brumaire published as a special issue of the journal Die Revolution. Since the printing was delayed they were dispatched through Korff much later, but Marx did not receive them. For lack of money Weydemeyer failed to buy up all the copies printed and sent only 10 copies on 13 August 1852, which reached London in early September. At the end of October 1852 Marx received 130 copies more from Cluss. — 106
Page me39.613
†142 See notes 17 and 44. — 107
Page me39.613
†143 In September 1851 arrests were made in France among members of local communities who belonged to the Willich-Schapper group (see Note 15). The conspiratorial tactics of this group enabled the French and Prussian police, with the help of the agent-provocateur Cherval, who headed one of the Paris communities and at the same time was in the pay of the Prussian and French police, to fabricate the case of the so-called Franco-German plot. In February 1852 the accused were sentenced on a charge of plotting a coup d'état. Cherval was allowed to escape from prison. Attempts of the Prussian police to incriminate the Communist League led by Marx and Engels failed. Marx publicly exposed these provocations in his Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne and Herr Vogt (see present edition, vols. 11 and 17). — 112, 130, 242, 270
Page me39.613
†144 The reference is to the members of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 24). — 113
Page me39.613
†145 Parliamentary trains — a name given in England in the nineteenth century to special trains which, by a parliament act of 1844, ran daily with a speed of no less than 12 miles per hour, fares not exceeding one penny a mile. — 113, 325, 534
Page me39.613
†146 Marx arrived in Manchester probably on 27 May 1852 and stayed with Engels till the second half of June. They devoted this time to writing their joint pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile. — 114, 181
Page me39.613
†147 An allusion to the attempts of Willich's supporters (former members of the volunteers' corps during the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising) to form a special military unit in the USA in view of an allegedly imminent revolution in Europe. In a letter to Engels of 17 June 1852 Weydemeyer appraised these actions as an attempt to form one more makeshift organisation of petty-bourgeois emigrants. — 115
Page me39.613
†148 In their pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile Marx and Engels made use of the assessment of the newspaper Der Kosmos and Ruge's and Kinkel's contributions to it which Marx gave in his letters to Engels of 21 and 28 May 1851 (see present edition. Vol. 38). — 117

Page Break me39.614
Page me39.614

†149 The first edition of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte put out by Weydemeyer had The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Napoleon on its title-page. — 117
Page me39.614
†150 The reference is to the cuttings from American newspapers enclosed in Cluss' letter to Marx of 27 May 1852. — 117
Page me39.614
†151 Korff, the responsible publisher of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, was dismissed as from 1 April 1849 for business incompetence, inclination to intrigues and meddling in the management of the newspaper. — 120
Page me39.614
†152 The reference is to the reviews of military operations in Hungary written by Engels and published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung from February to May 1849 (see present edition, vols. 8 and 9). On 1 December 1851 Weydemeyer informed Engels that Korff had published one of these articles in the New-Yorker Staatszeitung in his own name. — 120
Page me39.614
†153 All that has survived from this letter is a short extract quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 13 July 1852. The following passage from Cluss' letter may give an idea of what Marx wrote in the non-extant part of his letter:
Page me39.614
'A few days ago Marx wrote in haste some more lines from Manchester promising details next week. He has only 3 copies of Brumaire left.
Page me39.614
'"The history of the war between mice and frogs" [i.e. the pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile] (the first notebook up to Kinkel's departure to America) will appear anonymously. Marx regrets that he has to interrupt his studies in order to "clear the cesspool". Nevertheless, I think this is very good because it will protect the next revolution to some degree against this joint swindler company. In Marx's opinion, the whole thing is done in a very lively way and will come to us as soon as it is printed. He authorises us, if we think it economically and politically viable, to have it published in America. Think this over for a while.' — 122
Page me39.614
†154 Marx refers here to the French Provisional Government's decree of 16 March 1848 which added an extra 45 centimes to every franc of direct taxes levied on landowners (land tax, taxes on movable property, windows and doors, patents). The tax became a new burden mainly for small peasants and caused them to join the opposition to the Second French Republic. — 122
Page me39.614
†155 In early July 1852 a number of French and German newspapers reported the arrests in Paris of members of a secret organisation who were making preparations for the assassination of Louis Bonaparte and aimed at restoring the republic. According to the newspapers, the arrested were mainly workers, several of whom had taken part in the June 1848 uprising. The newspapers maintained that the plot was directed by refugees in London and Brussels. — 126, 128
Page me39.614

†156 Engels has in mind the fact that Adolphe Chenu, the author of Les Conspirateurs. Les sociétés secrétes; la préfecture de police sous Caussidiére; les corps-francs (Paris, 1850), was simultaneously an organiser of secret societies during the July monarchy and a police informer, and that this was reflected in the book. Marx and Engels published a review of this book in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, No. 4 (see present edition, Vol. 10). — 128
Page me39.614
†157 This refers to two documents issued in Waitzen (Vác) by Görgey, commander of the Upper Danubian Hungarian Corps, after the surrender of Buda to the counter-revolutionary troops of the Austrian Field Marshal Windischgrätz:

Page Break me39.615
'Statement of the Upper Danubian Royal Hungarian Corps' of 4 January 1849 and the address 'To the Upper Danubian Royal Hungarian Corps' of 6 January 1849. In them Görgey unjustly accused Kossuth and the Defence Council headed by the latter of deserting the capital, and in fact counterposed the Corps to the Defence Council and put forward an independent plan of conducting the war. The documents were published in A. Görgei, Mein Leben und Wirken in Ungarn, 1. Bd., Leipzig, 1852, S. 149-54. — 128
Page me39.615
†158 The duc d'Enghien was condemned to death on a charge of conspiring against Napoleon and was executed by firing squad on 21 March 1804. — 129
Page me39.615
†159 Marx may have made up his mind to write on this subject when he was staying with Engels in Manchester from the end of May to second half of June 1852, but he did not carry out his plan until August, when he devoted a few articles for the New-York Daily Tribune to analysing political parties in England and exposing the anti-popular essence of the English electoral system. These articles were 'The Elections in England. — Tories and Whigs', 'The Chartists', 'Corruption at Elections' and 'Result of the Elections' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 129
Page me39.615
†160 The Mazas — a Paris prison. — 130
Page me39.615
†161 Claremont — a house near London, residence of Louis Philippe after his flight from France in 1848; a centre of Orleanist intrigues to restore the Orleans dynasty in France. — 130
Page me39.615
†162 Orlando innamorato — a chivalrous poem by Boiardo, an Italian Renaissance poet, published in Italy in 1495. In the sixteenth century, adaptations of this poem were made by Lodovico Domenichi and Francesco Berni; most popular was that of Berni which appeared in 1541 and was repeatedly republished. Boiardo's poem was republished in London in the 1830s. — 131
Page me39.615
†163 Here Engels alludes to the article 'Saedt' which he and Marx published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 225, 18 February 1849. The article ridiculed the mental limitation of Saedt, a Cologne public prosecutor since 1848, in connection with his poor speech for the prosecution at the trial of Kinkel in February 1849, on a charge of insulting the Prussian garrison at Mainz. — 132, 138

Page me39.615
†164 The reference is to the Prussian criminal code introduced in April 1851. Until then the Code pénal introduced in 1811 in western and south-western Germany occupied by the French had been in force in Rhenish Prussia. The Code pénal determined the penalty for perjury, libel and similar crimes. — 134, 230
Page me39.615
†165 Only a passage of the letter has survived as it was quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 6 August 1852. The date of Marx's letter, 20 July, was given by Cluss.
Page me39.615
An abridged translation of this letter was first published in K. Marx and F. Engels, Selected Correspondence, Moscow, 1965. — 135
Page me39.615
†166 This rough copy of Marx's letter to Kinkel is published according to Marx's letter to Engels of 6 August 1852 (see this volume, pp. 149-50). Marx also quotes it in his letter to Cluss of 30 July 1852 (see ibid., pp. 139, 140). — 138
Page me39.615
†167 Only a passage of this letter has survived in the form of a long quotation in Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 16 August 1852. The date is given by Cluss. — 139

Page Break me39.616
Page me39.616
†168 In a letter to Cluss written at the end of June 1852, Huzel gave an account of Kinkel's slanderous attacks on Marx and Engels. Cluss quoted an extract from it in his letter to Marx of 4-5 July 1852 and Marx copied it in his letter to Engels of 6 August 1852 (see this volume, pp. 149-50). — 139
Page me39.616
†169 Marx ironically calls Gottfried Kinkel Johann after his wife Johanna, who exerted a great influence on him (see Marx and Engels, The Great Men of the Exile, IV and V, present edition, Vol. 11). — 139
Page me39.616
†170 This refers to the article 'Gottfried Kinkel' written by Marx and Engels in April 1850 and published unsigned in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politischökonomische Revue, No. 4, 1850 (see Note 185). — 139
Page me39.616
†171 In a letter of 14 November 1851 Kinkel proposed that Cluss become a guarantor of the so-called German-American revolutionary loan. — 140
Page me39.616
†172 This letter of Marx to Kinkel has survived only as quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 16 August 1852 and is reproduced in Marx's letter to Engels of 6 August 1852 (see this volume, pp. 149-50). The texts are identical, with the exception of italics. — 140
Page me39.616
†173 The American Revolutionary League — an organisation of German refugees in the USA set up in January 1852 by the petty-bourgeois democrats Goegg and Fickler who had arrived in the USA to raise the so-called German-American revolutionary loan (see Note 27). — 141, 150, 155, 161

Page me39.616
†174 The reference is to the secret conspiratorial organisation of German refugees in Paris — the German People's Union (Deutscher Volksverein) set up in 1832. When it was banned in 1834, a new secret revolutionary-democratic organisation of German artisans — the Outlaws' League (Bund der Geächteten) was formed. — 143
Page me39.616
†175 The League of the Just was established between 1836 and 1837 in Paris as a result of the split in the Outlaws' League and was the first political organisation of German workers and artisans. It had branches in Germany, France, Switzerland and England. Its members were greatly influenced by the ideas of utopian socialism, that of Weitling in particular. In 1847 it served as a basis for the creation of the Communist League, the first international organisation of the proletariat (see Note 15). — 143
Page me39.616
†176 The reference is to the Addresses of the Central Authority to the League written by Marx and Engels at the end of March and in June 1850 and to the Address of the Central Authority in Cologne dated 1 December 1850 and drawn up by the associates of Marx and Engels, mainly Bürgers. The Address of the Central Authority of March 1850 and that of the Central Authority in Cologne were published in a number of German bourgeois newspapers (see Kölnische Zeitung, No. 156, 1 June 1851, Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger, No. 177, 28 June 1851, and others). — 143
Page me39.616
†177 The reference is to the convention signed in Vienna on 20 May 1852 by the Austrian and Russian emperors and the King of Prussia in connection with the Bonapartist coup d'état in France on 2 December 1851. The signatories agreed to recognise the Bonapartist regime in France on certain conditions, which included the consent of the head of that regime to restrict the claim for power to his own lifetime and not to try to restore the Bonaparte dynasty. — 143
Page me39.616
†178 Only a short extract of this letter has survived as quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 15 October 1852. — 144

Page Break me39.617
Page me39.617
†179 Marx has in mind the article on political parties in England which he wanted Engels to translate into English. This was in fact Marx's first own contribution to the New-York Daily Tribune. Marx wrote his first articles for the Tribune in German and sent them to Engels to be translated into English. Sometimes Engels divided a long article into two, which Marx then sent to the newspaper as separate articles. In this case too Engels divided the material received into two parts, which Marx sent to New York on 6 and 10 August entitled respectively: 'The Elections in England. — Tories and Whigs' and 'The Chartists' (see present edition, Vol. 11). From the end of January 1853 Marx himself wrote his articles for the paper in English. — 145
Page me39.617

†180 Marx expresses his apprehension that Dana would refuse to print the article, because in the presidential election campaign in 1852 the New-York Daily Tribune supported the candidature of Scott, a representative of the American Whigs.
Page me39.617
The Whigs — members of a political party in the USA mainly representing the interests of the industrial and financial bourgeoisie and supported by some of the plantation owners. The party existed under this title from 1834 to 1854. The intensification of the struggle over slavery caused splits and led to regroupings in the ranks of the Whigs. The majority of them, with a section of the Democratic Party and the farmers' party (Free Soilers), formed the Republican Party, which opposed slavery. The rest of the Whigs sided with the Democratic Party, which defended the interests of the slave-owning planters. — 145
Page me39.617
†181 The series of articles Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany was published in the New-York Daily Tribune over Marx's signature (see Note 5). — 148
Page me39.617
†182 In the margins of this letter there were vertical lines drawn by Marx at some time which has not been ascertained. — 148, 153, 168
Page me39.617
†183 Marx learned of these facts from Cluss' letter of 4-5 July 1852. — 149
Page me39.617
†184 The reference here is to Kossuth's circular of 28 June 1852 which Marx received from Cluss together with a letter of 22 July 1852. In the circular Kossuth urged the German refugees in America, in view of the imminent presidential elections, to demand that the USA should effect an armed interference in order to carry out a revolution in Europe. To expose the adventurist nature of this appeal, Cluss had the circular published in The New-York Herald. This was the immediate reason for Kossuth's departure from America on 14 July 1852 as he had officially declared himself a supporter of non-interference in the home affairs of host countries. The circular was also published in The People's Paper, No. 14, 7 August in the section 'Foreign News' under the title 'Secret Circular by Kossuth'. — 150, 153, 158
Page me39.617
†185 The reference is to Kinkel's letter to Huzel of 6 February 1852 (see p. 152). — 151
Page me39.617
†186 Presidential elections were to be held in France in May 1852 according to the Constitution. The petty-bourgeois democratic emigrant circles hoped that democracy would win in France and Louis Bonaparte would be removed from power because the Constitution stipulated that the outgoing President could not stand for re-election. After the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, however, the question of the President being re-elected practically no longer arose. — 154

Page Break me39.618
Page me39.618
†187 About 16 August 1852 Marx sent Engels a long article, which, while being translated, was divided into two ('Corruption at Elections' and 'Result of the Elections').

On their dispatch to New York they were dated 20 and 27 August respectively (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 158
Page me39.618
†188 This letter was first published in English abridged in K. Marx, On America and the Civil War, McGraw-Hill, New York, 1972. In the margins of the original there were vertical lines drawn by Marx at a time which has not been ascertained. — 159
Page me39.618
†189 The reference here is to the separatist organisation formed by the Willich-Schapper adventurist sectarian group after the split in the Communist League (see Note 15). — 160, 162
Page me39.618
†190 An allusion to the unsuccessful attempt made in 1846-47 to publish Marx's and Engels' work The German Ideology (see present edition, Vol. 5). — 161
Page me39.618
†191 This letter of Marx's has not been found. — 161, 183, 185, 254
Page me39.618
†192 The reference is to the London committee of The People's Paper, set up for financing and distribution of the paper. Its 13 members were Chartists and members of the bourgeois-radical opposition who wanted to use the newspaper in the interests of the latter. — 162, 175
Page me39.618
†193 Engels has in mind the second part of the article on the English electoral system written by Marx about 16 August 1852 (see Note 187). — 164
Page me39.618
†194 On the instructions of Marx and Engels, Weydemeyer took the manuscript of The German Ideology to Westphalia where he failed in his negotiations for its publication with Julius Meyer and Rudolph Rempel, publishers in Bielefeld (see Note 190). — 164
Page me39.618
†195 An ironical allusion to the difficulties encountered in publishing the Chartist newspaper, The Star of Freedom, edited by Harney. It succeeded The Northern Star and ceased publication in November 1852. — 164
Page me39.618
†196 A reference to Huzel's letter to Cluss of 20 July 1852 which Cluss sent to Marx and which contained information about Kinkel's preparations for a congress of guarantors in America in the autumn of 1852, and gave a list of European guarantors of the loan.
Page me39.618
Huzel had a high opinion of Marx's work, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, which he had read thanks to Cluss: 'I am also firmly convinced now that with his philosophy of destruction he will show us many more treasures with which we, despite all the devilish difficulties, can and must conquer the world. — In the Eighteenth Brumaire I find the loftiest ideas expressed in the most revolutionary way.' — 166
Page me39.618
†197 The reference is to the two documents: 'Entwurf des Unionsvertrags' and 'An das Comité zur Förderung der deutschen Nationalanleihe und an die Garanten dieser Anleihe in Amerika. London. 12. August 1852'. The first contained the terms for a preliminary agreement to amalgamate the American Revolutionary League and the German Emigration Club (see notes 173 and 26).

Page me39.618
The second document was an address to the committees and guarantors of the 'German-American revolutionary loan' (see Note 27). Its aim was to secure guarantors' preliminary consent to and approval of the amalgamation of these two organisations, which was to be finally formalised at the congress of the Revolutionary League at Wheeling (West Virginia) on 18 September

Page Break me39.619
1852. On these documents see also this volume, pp. 168-69 and 173. — 166, 167
Page me39.619
†198 The Holy Grail — according to a medieval legend, the cup used by Christ at the Last Supper, the object of quests by mythical figures. — 166
Page me39.619
†199 This is Marx's reply to Imandt's letter of 27 August 1852. With it Imandt sent Marx the 'Entwurf des Unionsvertrags' and the circular to the guarantors of the loan (see Note 197) passed on to him by Kinkel and Willich. Enclosed also was a letter from Kinkel and Willich to Imandt of 26 August in which they asked the latter to give his opinion on the above-mentioned documents not later than 2 September 1852.
Page me39.619
Imandt took part in the guarantors' congress; on his actions towards the exposure of Kinkel's and Willich's adventurist schemes see this volume, pp. 151-52 and 153-57. — 167
Page me39.619
†200 Marx quotes from 'An das Comité zur Förderung der deutschen Nationalanleihe und an die Garanten dieser Anleihe in Amerika. London. 12. August 1852'. — 167
Page me39.619
†201 The Friends of Light (Lichtfreunde) — a religious trend that arose in 1841 and was directed against the pietism predominant in the Lutheran Church and distinguished by extreme mysticism and bigotry. — 168, 172
Page me39.619
†202 Marx learned all these facts from Bangya's letter of 30 August 1852. Bangya, being in the service of the Prussian police, tried by these means to worm his way into Marx's confidence. Marx soon became aware of Bangya's provocative activity and broke off all relations with him (see this volume, pp. 267-70). — 169, 177
Page me39.619
†203 Marx alludes to a passage in the address to the guarantors of the loan issued on 12 August 1852 (see Note 197). In reply to the guarantors' proposal to found a newspaper, the document stated that revolution 'no longer needs the pen but the sword. A newspaper in London is of no use for the revolution'. — 170, 174
Page me39.619
†204 The Centralisation was set up in 1836 as the leading executive organ of the Polish Democratic Society which arose in France in 1832 after the suppression of the national liberation insurrection of 1830-31 and united Left-wing Polish emigrants, the small nobility (szlachta) and the bourgeoisie. Its programme envisaged restoration of Poland's independence, abolition of the feudal obligations and the inequality of social estates, free transfer of land allotments to peasants, and a number of other progressive measures. In the summer of 1849 the seat of the Centralisation was moved to London. — 172

Page me39.619
†205 The material on Vetter, Mazzini and Kossuth was used by Marx in the article 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston' written for the New-York Daily Tribune (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 172
Page me39.619
†206 The only part of this letter that has survived is an extract in Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 21 September 1852. Cluss writes: 'Herewith English notes for the Herald. Lexow will no doubt attend to them if you din it into him that the rotten elements and buffoons have got to be rendered harmless for the revolution. The agent mentioned therein is General Vetter, a generalissimo of the Kossuth-Mazzini army. He vanished from London for a considerable stretch of time, no one knew where to. He was travelling on a passport in which he figured as an American painter, and with a singer by the name of Ferenze (his mistress). She gave concerts in all the important places. The rest you may read in the English. Vetter has now told the “big-wigs” [i.e. Kossuth] that, circumstances being what they are, he thinks he can do no better than go to America with Ferenze. Mazzini et Kossuth are said to be resigned to their fate and to have decided to leave the initiative to the French. — On 14 and 15 September — yet another intrigue conducted by Kinkel behind the backs of the guarantors in London — the pro-Kinkel guarantors are to hold a meeting in Antwerp with a view to adopting a congressional resolution that will, it is hoped, serve as a weapon against the resolution passed by the American and Swiss guarantors.' After this Cluss quotes fragments from Marx's letter which are reproduced here in full.

Page Break me39.620
Page me39.620
'Notes for the Herald' mentioned by Cluss are a version of Marx's article 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston' sent by Marx to Dana presumably after 5 September 1852. When publishing it in the New-York Daily Tribune the editors dated it 28 September 1852. The editors of the present edition have no information whether this material was published in The New-York Herald. — 172
Page me39.620
†207 Here the fragment from Marx's letter ends and is followed by a sentence which reveals to some extent the contents of the lost part of Marx's letter: 'Marx has now received 10 Brumaires and a letter from you. He does not complain about the material damage but solely about that caused him by this troublesome affair from the political and literary points of view; he says he must now fight his way through with fibs.' A few lines further Cluss again quotes Marx: 'I also took notes ... at the section meeting there.' — 174
Page me39.620
†208 Cluss does not say that this paragraph is by Marx, but textually it almost coincides with Marx's letter to Engels of 30 August 1852 (see this volume, p. 170). — 174
Page me39.620

†209 The plans to have Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte republished in Germany and published in English did not materialise at that time. The second edition appeared only in 1869 in Hamburg. — 175
Page me39.620
†210 The only part of this letter that has survived is an extract quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 26 March 1853. — 176
Page me39.620
†211 The only part of this letter that has survived is an extract quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 28 September 1852. — 178
Page me39.620
†212 In a memorandum entitled 'Drei Jahre in Paris', L. Häfner, a German petty-bourgeois refugee, gave his opinion of the German émigrés in Paris in 1849-51. — 178, 183, 185
Page me39.620
†213 This letter was published in English in full for the first time in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 181, 530, 533
Page me39.620
†214 Marx did not carry out his intention to write a concluding article to Engels'

Page Break me39.621
Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany. The last, twentieth, article of the series did not appear in the New-York Daily Tribune. The 1896 English edition and a number of subsequent editions had as the concluding article Engels' 'The Late Trial at Cologne' (see present edition, Vol. 11) which did not belong to this series of articles. — 181, 199
Page me39.621
†215 Marx alludes to a passage in Massol's letter of 25 July 1852. Massol informed Marx that Proudhon had published a book on the coup d'état in France on 2 December 1851 and stressed that Proudhon was only a populariser, while Marx was engaged in a serious analysis of the events: 'Dig, search, keep at it; that is your lot, let French mouths do the vulgarising'. — 182
Page me39.621
†216 The Manchester archives — documents of the Communist League, letters and other materials relating to the revolutionary activity of Marx and Engels kept at Engels' house. — 183, 198, 245
Page me39.621
†217 The reference is to the information bulletin Lithographierte Correspondenz published by Weydemeyer in New York from August to October 1852. — 185
Page me39.621
†218 Engels has in mind the state of Heinzen's New York newspaper Janus which published attacks on the Communist League and carried insinuations against Marx and Engels personally. — 185
Page me39.621
†219 The reference is to the great fuss in the newspapers over Louis Bonaparte's tour of France on 14-16 September 1852, whose purpose was to secure support in the provinces, among the French clergy in particular, for his proclamation as Emperor of France under the title of Napoleon III, which took place on 2 December 1852. — 185

Page me39.621
†220 The Customs Union of the German states was set up in 1834 under the aegis of Prussia because of the need to create an all-German market. During the 1848-49 revolution the Customs Union practically ceased to exist, but in 1853 Prussia managed to revive it and it continued to exist up to 1871.
Page me39.621
By the 'Customs Union business' Marx means a conference on the subject which was to be convened in Vienna on 30 October 1852. — 186, 195
Page me39.621
†221 The first part of this letter was first published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 1, Stuttgart, 1913 and dated 'beginning of September 1852'. The part dealing with the statistics from factory inspector Horner was first published in Marx/Engels, Gesamtausgabe, Abt. III, Bd. 1, 1929 and Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXI, Moscow, 1929 as a separate document mistakenly dated 11 March 1853.
Page me39.621
The whole letter, with the verified date, 23 September 1852, and Engels' memorandum on the English translation of the first chapter of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte made by Wilhelm Pieper, was first published in Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, Moscow, 1962. — 188
Page me39.621
†222 Engels alludes to the active preparations being made by Bonapartist circles to proclaim an empire in France (see Note 219). — 189
Page me39.621
†223 These figures were also used by Marx in his article 'Pauperism and Free Trade. — The Approaching Commercial Crisis' (see present edition, Vol. 11) written on 12 October 1852 for the New-York Daily Tribune. — 189
Page me39.621
†224 Sturm und Drang (Storm and Stress) — a literary trend in Germany in the 1780s. — 192

Page Break me39.622
Page me39.622
†225 Marx received Zerffi's letter at the end of August 1852 and used the facts it contained in the article 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston' (see Note 206). — 194
Page me39.622
†226 The Volksverein — an organisation set up in London on 11 August 1852 in a new attempt to amalgamate various groups of German refugees whose representatives concluded the 'Entwurf des Unionsvertrags' (see Note 197). The agreement was signed by Goegg on behalf of the Revolutionary League in America, and by Kinkel and Willich as members of the managing committee of the so-called German-American revolutionary loan (see notes 173 and 27). The aim of the Volksverein was to attract Englishmen as well as German refugees. However, owing to its adventurism and to persisting discord among the petty-bourgeois emigrants, the Volksverein was as short-lived as other such emigrant organisations before it. — 194

Page me39.622
†227 Two religious opposition movements, the so-called German-Catholicism, and the Protestant 'free communities,' appeared in the 1840s. They sought to establish an all-German national church and rejected the supremacy of the Pope and many dogmas and rites of the Roman Catholic Church. They expressed the German bourgeoisie's discontent with the reactionary system in Germany and its striving to unify the country politically. In 1850 the German-Catholics merged with the 'free communities'. — 194, 267
Page me39.622
†228 The reference is to Louis Bonaparte's tour of France (see Note 219). Zerffi's letter to Marx of 22 September 1852 contained, in particular, details about his reception in Lyons. — 195
Page me39.622
†229 Marx ironically calls Bürgers' manuscript 'Das Wesen des Kommunismus', a pun on Feuerbach's Das Wesen des Christenthums. — 195
Page me39.622
†230 Honi soit qui mal y pense (Shame be on him who evil thinks) — the motto of the Order of the Garter instituted by Edward III of England in 1350. — 195
Page me39.622
†231 In view of the financial difficulties of The People's Paper the bourgeois members of its London committee (see Note 192) tried to obtain control over it and to hinder further development of the revolutionary proletarian tendency which Jones was following more and more thanks to Marx's active assistance. On 15 and 21 September Jones' opponents held two Chartist meetings at which they attempted to substantiate their accusations against Jones. However both meetings expressed confidence in Jones and the Executive of the National Charter Association. — 195
Page me39.622
†232 Harney failed in his attempt to create a 'united national party' in England in the autumn of 1852 in order to campaign for general suffrage at the cost of repudiating the other five points of the People's Charter and the social demands of the Chartists. — 196
Page me39.622
†233 An allusion to the behaviour of the French philistines during Louis Bonaparte's tour of the country (see Note 219). — 196
Page me39.622
†234 An abridged translation of this letter was first published in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 198, 298, 438, 445, 453, 500, 526
Page me39.622
†235 On Herzen's relations with Herwegh see A.I. Herzen, My Past and Thoughts, Part V ['Story of the Family Drama']. — 199

Page Break me39.623
Page me39.623

†236 Marx made use of the facts he learned from Zerffi's letter of 5 September 1852 in writing the article 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 200
Page me39.623
†237 Engels' letter to Dronke has not been found. — 204
Page me39.623
†238 The reference is to Kinkel's escape from prison (see Note 54). — 206
Page me39.623
†239 Wiss' statement is quoted in Marx's and Engels' The Great Men of the Exile (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 303). — 206
Page me39.623
†240 On Marx's request, Cluss sent to The Morning Advertiser on 1 November 1852 his reply to the article 'The German “Lone Star”', in which he criticised the activity of the American Revolutionary League (see Note 173), headed by Goegg, Ruge's supporter. The editors refused to publish it. — 207
Page me39.623
†241 Massol's letter to Marx of 25 July (see Note 215). — 207
Page me39.623
†242 Weydemeyer's article against Heinzen was published in the New-Yorker Demokrat on 29 January 1852, that of Cluss, 'Karl Heinzen und der Kommunismus, oder der fahrende Ritter auf der wilden, verwegenden Jagd nach dem Schatten seines lahmen Kleppers', in the same newspaper at the end of June-beginning of July 1852. — 207
Page me39.623
†243 Piéce Taschereau (the Taschereau document) was fabricated by the French police after the February 1848 revolution in order to discredit Blanqui. It was published on 31 March 1848 in the bourgeois journal La Revue rétrospective edited by Taschereau. — 209
Page me39.623
†244 The Athenaeum — the name of the clubs which existed in a number of cities in England, including London and Manchester, and frequented by men of letters and scientists. — 209, 233, 241, 293, 554
Page me39.623
†245 The Congress of the American Revolutionary League (see Note 173) was held in Wheeling, West Virginia, USA, in September 1852. — 210, 267
Page me39.623
†246 The article written by Marx on 12 October 1852 for the New-York Daily Tribune was translated by Engels into English and sent by Marx to New York on 15 and 19 October as two articles: 'Pauperism and Free Trade. — The Approaching Commercial Crisis' and 'Political Consequences of the Commercial Excitement' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 210
Page me39.623
†247 Marx and Engels attacked The Times and The Daily News for supporting the Prussian reactionaries on the issue of the Cologne Communist Trial (see Note 16) in their 'Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press' written on 28 October 1852 (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 210
Page me39.623

†248 The reference is to the interrogation of Bürgers on 9 and 10 October 1852 during the Cologne Communist Trial. — 211
Page me39.623
†249 An allusion to the article on the political parties in England written by Marx on 16 October 1852. Engels translated it into English and Marx sent it to New York as two articles on 2 and 9 November. The first one was published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 29 November under the title 'Political Parties and Prospects', the second on 25 November without any title (see present edition, Vol. 11; the title 'Attempts to Form a New Opposition Party' was supplied by the editors of the present edition). — 212

Page Break me39.624
Page me39.624
†250 The reference is presumably to Cluss' article in the Baltimore Wecker in which he mentioned false accusations of spying brought against Mrs Brüningk by Kinkel and Willich (see this volume, p. 152). — 214, 574
Page me39.624
†251 Here Engels refers to the attempt of the police agent Stieber, a witness for the prosecution at the Cologne trial on 18 October 1852, to ascribe to the Communist League participation in the so-called Franco-German plot (see Note 143). — 215
Page me39.624
†252 Haupt, a former member of the Communist League, was arrested at the time of the Cologne Communist Trial and gave false evidence during the investigation. The police released him before the trial and he escaped to Brazil. His evidence, damaging to the accused, was cited in Seckendorf's speech for the prosecution on 3 November 1852. — 215
Page me39.624
†253 The translation into English of Marx's article written on 16 October 1852 (see Note 249). — 215
Page me39.624
†254 For details on the arrest of Kothes and Bermbach see Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11). — 216
Page me39.624
†255 On Engels' advice (see this volume, pp. 208-09), Marx tried through Weerth to get information from the bookseller Duncker about a certain Eisenmann with whom Bangya had allegedly negotiated the publication of Marx's and Engels' pamphlet, The Great Men of the Exile. — 216
Page me39.624
†256 Marx's letter to lawyer Schneider II of 26 October 1852 has not been found. — 217
Page me39.624
†257 Engels' letter to Marx of 26 October 1852 has not been found. — 218
Page me39.624
†258 Engels refers to Marx's letter to Schneider II of 26 October 1852 which contained Stieber's evidence (see Marx's letter to Engels of 26 October 1852). Engels sent two copies of it by messengers to Cologne on 27 October: the original in Marx's hand care of Braubach Bros and a copy care of Johann Philipp Becker. Marx himself sent the third and fourth copies, addressed to Hermann Ebner and Georg Gottlob Jung, from London. This is proved by a list of documents dispatched to Cologne during the Communist Trial drawn up by Engels on about 31 October 1852 (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 218

Page me39.624
†259 At the Cologne trial on 23 October 1852 Stieber presented in evidence against the accused the so-called Original Minute-book of the meetings of the Communist League Central Authority, alleged to have been formed again by Marx in London after the arrests in Cologne. According to Stieber's false evidence, the Minute-book was compiled by Rings and Liebknecht. In reality it was fabricated by the spy Wilhelm Hirsch, exposed by and expelled from the Communist League about 19 February 1852. Because of his expulsion it was decided to change the place and day of the weekly meetings of the London District members of the Communist League. Hirsch did not know about this and continued to date the fabricated minutes Thursday, whereas the meetings were then held on Wednesdays. By sending samples of Hirsch's and later Rings' and Liebknecht's handwriting to Cologne, Engels wanted to provide counsel for the defence with documents which would expose the actual author of the 'Original Minute-book'. Thanks to the material supplied by Marx and Engels the police fabrications were exposed and the 'Original Minute-book' was rejected as evidence for the prosecution (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 218, 223

Page Break me39.625
Page me39.625
†260 The 'Original Minute-book' (see Note 259) presented by Stieber to the jury mentioned letters allegedly written to Marx by Mrs Daniels, the wife of one of the accused. On 25 October 1852, the Kölnische Zeitung, No. 273, published a statement made by King's Counsel Müller, father of Mrs Daniels, denying that Mrs Daniels had corresponded with Marx and declaring Stieber's 'Original Minute-book' a 'mystification'. — 219, 301
Page me39.625
†261 The reference is to Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11). Marx began writing the pamphlet at the end of October 1852, when the trial of the Communist League members was still in progress in Cologne, and completed it in early December. On 6 December a copy of the manuscript was sent to the publisher Schabelitz junior in Switzerland, and on the following day a second copy was dispatched to Cluss in the USA. The pamphlet was published in Basle in January 1853, but almost the whole edition (2,000 copies) was confiscated by the police in March in the Baden frontier village of Weill on the way to Germany. In the USA the work was first published in instalments in the democratic Boston Neu-England-Zeitung and at the end of April 1853 it was printed as a separate pamphlet by the same publishers. — 220
Page me39.625
†262 An allusion to the campaign in French government circles for the proclamation of an empire (see Note 219). — 221
Page me39.625
†263 In the list of documents dispatched to Cologne during the Communist Trial this letter of Marx, which has not been found, is dated Monday, 25 October 1852 (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 590). — 222

Page me39.625
†264 This is presumably a slip of the pen, for in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, Chapter III, 'The Cherval Plot' (present edition, Vol. 11, p. 413), it is said that Cherval was admitted to the League of the Just in 1846, i.e. before it was reorganised into the Communit League in June 1847. — 222
Page me39.625
†265 This material was used by the lawyer Schneider II in his speech at the trial on 4 November 1852 and later by Marx in the pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 413, 417 and 418). — 222
Page me39.625
†266 The reference is to Marx's correspondence with Hermann Becker concerning the publication of Marx's works. Negotiations to that effect started in December 1850 and resulted in the publication of the first issue of Gesammelte Aufsätze von Karl Marx in Cologne at the end of April 1851. It contained the article 'Comments on the Latest Prussian Censorship Instruction' and part of the first article from 'Proceedings of the Sixth Rhine Province Assembly' written by Marx in 1842 (see present edition, Vol. 1). Publication was discontinued following Becker's arrest. — 222
Page me39.625
†267 Roland Daniels sent his manuscript 'Mikrokosmos. Entwurf einer physiologischen Anthropologie' from Cologne in mid-February 1851 for Marx to review it. In his letter to Daniels of 20 March (it has not been found) Marx expressed his opinion of the manuscript. Daniels' work remained unpublished because of his arrest in June 1851 in connection with the Cologne Communist Trial. — 222
Page me39.625
†268 Marx has in mind the minutes which Hirsch kept in the Workers' Society presided over by Stechan, a refugee from Hanover (see Note 25). — 222
Page me39.625
†269 Stieber's letter to Marx of 26 December 1848, which Marx quotes below. — 222
Page me39.625
†270 Marx's letter to Schneider II of 26 October 1852 (see Note 256). — 223

Page Break me39.626
Page me39.626
†271 This excerpt from Becker's letter to Marx of 27 January 1851 is quoted by Marx in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 452). — 224
Page me39.626
†272 Marx's letter to Bermbach has not been found. — 224
Page me39.626
†273 Van Diemen's Land — the name initially given by Europeans to the island of Tasmania, which was a British penal colony up to 1853. — 224
Page me39.626
†274 The reference is to the duel between Barthélemy and the French refugee Cournet about 25 October 1852 in which the latter was killed. Barthélemy was sentenced to two months' imprisonment. — 224, 295
Page me39.626

†275 This letter of Stieber's was used by the lawyer Schneider II in his speech at the trial on 4 November 1852 to expose Stieber's past spying activity; Marx quoted this letter in full in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 435-36). — 226
Page me39.626
†276 The separatist Central Authority was set up by the Willich-Schapper group after the split in the Communist League in September 1850 (see Note 15). — 226
Page me39.626
†277 This refers to the Social-Democratic Committee of Support for German Refugees formed at the German Workers' Educational Society in London on 18 September 1849. The Committee included Karl Marx, Heinrich Bauer, Karl Pfänder, Karl Blind, Anton Füster and Frederick Engels (from 3 December 1849). In mid-September 1850 Marx and Engels withdrew from the Refugee Committee because the majority of its members had come under the influence of the Willich-Schapper group. — 227
Page me39.626
†278 Here Marx ironically writes about Stieber's attempt, in his evidence on 18 October 1852, to reduce the disagreements existing between the supporters of Marx and Engels and the Willich-Schapper group to the question of personal rivalry. He ascribed to Marx an aspiration to become a dictator of Germany after a future revolution and to appoint his associates and friends ministers. — 227
Page me39.626
†279 In this connection see K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 422-23). In his speech on 4 November 1852 Schneider II exposed Stieber's falsification of facts connected with the confiscation of Marx's letter to Kothes. — 228
Page me39.626
†280 Engels' letter to von Hontheim of 30 October 1852 has not been found. — 231
Page me39.626
†281 The Red Catechism (Rother Katechismus für das deutsche Volk) and the letter accompanying it were written by Moses Hess who supported the Willich-Schapper group. The letter was faked by imitating Marx's handwriting. Marx exposed this forgery in a statement sent to the editor of The Morning Advertiser and published in that newspaper on 2 November (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 380-81). Schneider II's intention to read this statement of Marx at the trial on 4 November drew a protest from the prosecution, but they were forced to give up the idea of using 'the accompanying letter' against the accused (see also K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 443-45). — 232
Page me39.626
†282 On Engels' advice, Marx gave evidence on the points listed above, had it certified and sent to Cologne where it was used at the trial by Schneider II. — 232

Page Break me39.627
Page me39.627
†283 This refers to Dronke's letter to Engels of 30 October 1852 in which he warned against Bangya's suspicious behaviour. — 232
Page me39.627

†284 On 21 October 1852 Duncker wrote to Weerth that there was no publisher by the name of Eisenmann (see Note 255).
Page me39.627
Kothes was arrested because the police had intercepted a letter which Marx sent to his address to be delivered to Bermbach (on this see Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 422-24). — 232
Page me39.627
†285 Engels' letter to Strohn of 31 October 1852 has not been found. — 234
Page me39.627
†286 The list of documents drawn up by Engels is published in the present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 590-91. — 234
Page me39.627
†287 The reference is to the accompanying letter to the Red Catechism (see Note 281). — 236
Page me39.627
†288 The reference is to a letter of 28 October 1852 composed by Bangya in the name of Charles Collmann, a publisher invented by him, concerning the preparations made for publishing Marx's and Engels' manuscript The Great Men of the Exile. The letter was not written on a publishers' notepaper and had no post marks. It contained Bangya's note dated 3 November 1852 asking Marx to acquaint himself with Collmann's letter. — 237, 239
Page me39.627
†289 The reference is to Bürgers' trip from Cologne to Hanover, Hamburg, Berlin, Breslau and Dresden made in May 1851 on an assignment from the Cologne Central Authority. The prosecution tried to present Bürgers' trip and his participation in drawing up the Manifesto of the Cologne Central Authority of the Communist League, and also Nothjung's journey to Leipzig in May 1851 mentioned below, as proof of their involvement in a communist plot. — 238
Page me39.627
†290 The Crystal Palace was built of metal and glass for the first world trade and industrial exhibition in London in 1851. — 238
Page me39.627
†291 After the 'Original Minute-book' was exposed at the trial as a forgery (see Note 259), Stieber sent police lieutenant Goldheim to London. On his return Goldheim stated at the trial on 3 November 1852 that the book mentioned was not 'a minute-book', but a 'notebook', and that it was actually sold by H. Liebknecht, alleged to be the compiler of the minutes, to the Prussian agent Fleury and contained notes on communists' secret meetings at Marx's house. Goldheim asserted that he had seen a cash receipt in Liebknecht's own handwriting. He also spoke of a 'top secret meeting' at Marx's on 27 October 1852 in connection with the Cologne trial. On 4 November 1852 lawyer Schneider II proved that this evidence for the prosecution was also false. On this see Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 429-35 and 438-39). — 240, 242
Page me39.627
†292 Marx was in Manchester in May-June 1852. — 241
Page me39.627

†293 The meeting in memory of Robert Blum in London on 9 November 1852 was organised by Arnold Ruge and his associates. Speeches were made by Ruge, Tausenau, Ronge and other bourgeois radicals and democrats. — 241, 246
Page me39.627
†294 Marx learned about this from lawyer Schneider II's letter of 1 November 1852. — 242

Page Break me39.628
Page me39.628
†295 On Bangya's provocative role in the matter of publishing Marx's and Engels' pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile see Marx's article 'Hirsch's Confessions' (present edition, Vol. 12).
Page me39.628
The second part of the pamphlet (see Note 131) was probably not written, though the last lines of this work contain a definite hint that the account of German petty-bourgeois refugees' activities will be continued. Marx's pamphlet Herr Vogt, Chapter XII: 'Appendices', Section 6 'The War between Frogs and Mice' contains material on the activity of petty-bourgeois refugee organisations in 1852 (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 313-15). — 242
Page me39.628
†296 Fleury's statement proving the falseness of Goldheim's evidence was not published in the Kölnische Zeitung. Counsel for the defence got possession of it after the trial. Marx quoted it in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 442). — 243
Page me39.628
†297 Marx wrote this statement on 21 October 1852; the text has not survived. Marx explains in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne why the German newspapers refused to publish it (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 436). — 244
Page me39.628
†298 Marx gives these facts in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 442 and 451-52). Additional information about Hirsch's contacts with the Prussian police agents Greif and Fleury, and the role of the Prussian Embassy in London during the Cologne trial, is to be found in Herr Vogt, 'Appendices', Section 4 'The Communist Trial in Cologne' (see present edition, Vol. 17). — 245
Page me39.628
†299 The reference is to the publication in October 1852 of a lithographed statement of accounts and of a statement by Reichenbach who was the treasurer of the so-called German-American revolutionary loan (see Note 27). Reichenbach refused to be in charge of the funds because the idea of the revolutionary loan did not justify itself. Later Marx quoted extracts from Reichenbach's statement in Herr Vogt, 'Appendices', Section 6 'The War between Frogs and Mice' (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 314). — 245, 246, 275, 282, 302
Page me39.628
†300 On Engels' advice Marx wrote to the Frankfurt journalist Ebner asking him whether it would be possible to publish the pamphlet on the Cologne Communist Trial there (see this volume, pp. 238-39 and Note 122). Marx's letter to Ebner has not been found. — 245

Page me39.628
†301 The 'Friends of Italy' — an organisation founded in London in May 1851 by the English bourgeois radicals on Mazzini's initiative in order to interest the English public in Italy's national liberation. — 246
Page me39.628
†302 Only the author's copy of this letter has survived in Marx's notebook for 1860 among material relating to his work on Herr Vogt. — 247
Page me39.628
†303 Marx sent the German original of the statement to Cluss in America on 18 November 1852. Marx's letter has not been found. The statement dated 18 November 1852 was published in the New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 39, 10 December 1852. Its text differed from the English version edited by Engels at Marx's request and published in English papers, dated 20 November 1852. — 247
Page me39.628
†304 The appeal to German workers in America was written by Marx on behalf of a committee founded in London to organise aid to the communists accused in Cologne. It was signed by the members of the recently disbanded Communist

Page Break me39.629
League who were resident in London — Karl Marx, Frederick Engels, Wilhelm Wolff, Ferdinand Freiligrath, Ernst Dronke, Wilhelm Liebknecht and other German refugees, and also by Ernest Jones. The appeal was sent to Cluss on 7 December 1852 and published in American German-language newspapers (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 247
Page me39.629
†305 Little Germany — a name given ironically by Engels to a district in Manchester where German refugees lived. — 249
Page me39.629
†306 The New York printer withheld copies of Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see this volume, p. 160). — 251
Page me39.629
†307 After the 1830 revolution in France, the opposition movement of the so-called demagogues (see Note 139) became more intense in Germany. This caused new police repressions and arrests and increased emigration, especially after an attempt had been made to effect a coup d'état in Frankfurt am Main on 3 April 1833 with the aim of establishing a republic. — 251
Page me39.629
†308 Marx analysed Disraeli's budget in 'Parliament. — Vote of November 26. — Disraeli's Budget' written on 10 December 1852 (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 253
Page me39.629
†309 The reference is to the so-called Franco-German plot (see Note 143) inspired to a great extent by Cherval, an agent of the Prussian and French police. On this see Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 407-20. — 255

Page me39.629
†310 Facts proving Bangya's provocative role in the matter of publishing Marx's and Engels' manuscript The Great Men of the Exile were cited by Marx in the article 'Hirsch's Confessions' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 256
Page me39.629
†311 In a letter to Bangya of 28 October 1852 the fictitious publisher Collmann (see Note 288) expressed readiness, for the authors' reassurance, to place the manuscript at their disposal for 48 hours. — 257, 258
Page me39.629
†312 After the Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851 intensive preparations were made to proclaim France an empire. On 21 and 22 November 1852 a referendum was held on the issue: on 2 December France was officially proclaimed an empire, and the Prince President Louis Napoleon became Emperor Napoleon III. In the period preceding the proclamation of the empire numerous decrees concerning, among other things, the economy and finance were promulgated. Here Marx has in mind two decrees of 18 November 1852: on the foundation of the Société générale du Crédit mobilier and on the handing over of several railways to the Compagnie du chemin de fer de Lyon á Avignon founded on 8 July 1852 (both decrees were published in Le Moniteur universel, No. 325, 20 November 1852). The Crédit mobilier became a big joint-stock bank which acted as intermediary in credit and stockjobbing operations and took part in building railways in France and other European countries. — 257, 263
Page me39.629
†313 Engels went to London in the second half of December 1852 and stayed there until 10 January 1853. — 257, 271, 304
Page me39.629
†314 The original of this letter has not survived. It is quoted in Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 6-7 January 1853.
Page me39.629
This letter was published in English in part in K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to the Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 259

Page Break me39.630
Page me39.630
†315 On the publication of Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne see Note 261. — 259
Page me39.630
†316 A reference to the world trade and industrial exhibition in London (see Note 37). — 260
Page me39.630
†317 In a letter to Marx of 21 November 1852 Cluss expressed doubt whether Massol was right in alleging that Proudhon had taken a revolutionary stand in his new works in contrast to those of the 1840s (Massol's letter of 25 July 1852 was sent to Cluss by Marx for information). Cluss' opinion was shared by Weydemeyer. — 260
Page me39.630

†318 Free Soilers — members of a mass radical-democratic party of US farmers in the 1840s and 1850s; it merged with the Republican Party when the latter was formed in 1854. — 262
Page me39.630
†319 Mormons — members of a religious sect founded in the USA in the 1830s. — 262
Page me39.630
†320 This presumably refers to Marx's contacts with petty-bourgeois circles of French refugees in London.
Page me39.630
Fréres et amis — a form of address used in official documents and public speeches at the time of the French Revolution. Later, royalists used it in referring to republicans. — 263
Page me39.630
†321 The original of this letter has not survived. The text is given according to Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 6-7 January 1853. — 265
Page me39.630
†322 Marx's letter to Brüningk has not survived. — 265
Page me39.630
†323 The reference is to the publication of Reichenbach's accounts and statement (see Note 299). — 266
Page me39.630
†324 Marx spoke of these facts in Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne and 'Hirsch's Confessions' (see present edition, vols. 11 and 12). — 267
Page me39.630
†325 News from Schabelitz (see this volume, p. 264) led Marx to believe that Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne had already been published in Basle. On how matters stood as regards this publication see Note 261. — 270
Page me39.630
†326 Steps to publish Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte in Switzerland failed. — 270
Page me39.630
†327 See present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 417-18. — 270
Page me39.630
†328 In the letter mentioned here Dana informed Marx that he would pay £ 1 for each article, but promised double pay for articles on vital problems of current politics. — 273
Page me39.630
†329 The original of Marx's letter has not been found. This fragment is reproduced as quoted in Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 17 February 1853. — 273
Page me39.630
†330 'Communia' — a colony founded by Weitling's associates in Iowa (USA) in 1849 to put in practice the principles of Weitling's utopian communism. The colony ceased to exist in 1853 owing to inner conflicts and financial difficulties. — 275, 450
Page me39.630

†331 At the beginning of 1853 the German liberal historian Professor Gervinus was brought to trial on a charge of incitement to high treason and an attempted breach of the peace in publishing Einleitung in die Geschichte des 19. Jahrhunderts, a book which reactionary circles considered an apology for the democratic system and a criticism of monarchy. — 276

Page Break me39.631

Page me39.631

†332 The international Peace Congress was convened by the bourgeois pacifist organisation, Peace Society, in Manchester at the end of January 1853. Free Traders were especially active at it. The Congress adopted a number of resolutions against anti-French military propaganda in England and against the increase of armaments.

Page me39.631

Cobden's pamphlet is assessed and the Peace Congress described in Marx's article 'Capital Punishment. — Mr. Cobden's Pamphlet. — Regulations of the Bank of England' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 276

Page me39.631

†333 The reference is to the armed conflict between Turkey and Montenegro which was a vassal possession of the Sultan and sought full independence. In early 1853 Turkish troops invaded Montenegro, but the stance adopted by Russia and pressure from Austria soon compelled the Sultan to withdraw them. — 277, 278, 288

Page me39.631

†334 Marx made this rough note in English on J.G. Mayer's letter of 3 February 1853. Marx used the pseudonym Charles Williams when he sent his letters to Szemere in Paris c/o Mayer. — 277

Page me39.631

†335 A reference to the Milan insurrection started on 6 February 1853 by the followers of the Italian revolutionary Mazzini and supported by Hungarian revolutionary refugees. The aim of the insurgents, who were mostly Italian workers, was to overthrow Austrian rule. The insurrection was badly organised and was soon suppressed. Marx analysed it in a number of articles (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 508-09, 513-16, 532 and 535-37). — 278, 283, 307

Page me39.631

†336 Bellinzona — an administrative town in the Swiss canton of Tessin (Ticino). In the main cities of this canton, a centre of Italian emigration in the nineteenth century, there were print-shops where the supporters of Italy's national liberation had their literature printed. — 278

Page me39.631

†337 Kossuth, who after the defeat of the Hungarian revolutionary army crossed into territory dependent on Turkey and was interned in the fortress of Vidin (Bulgaria), appealed to the insurgents still in the fortress of Komarom on 2 October 1849 to continue the struggle promising speedy support from Britain. However, the Hungarian insurgents had already accepted Austrian terms of capitulation. — 279

Page me39.631

†338 This letter was published in English for the first time, considerably abridged, in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London, 1934. — 280, 344
Page me39.631
†339 Here Marx refers to a letter from Kossuth to Mayne Reid intended for the press. Mayne Reid published a statement in a number of English newspapers (see, e.g., 'M.M. Kossuth and Mazzini and The Times', The Daily News, No. 2105, 18 February 1853) asserting on behalf of Kossuth that the latter did not take part in the Milan insurrection (see Note 335) and declaring that the address 'In the Name of the Hungarian Nation. — To the Soldiers Quartered in Italy' circulated over Kossuth's signature during the insurrection was a forgery. — 280
Page me39.631
†340 Marx quotes this statement of Della Rocco in the article 'The Attack on Francis Joseph. — The Milan Riot. — British Politics. — Disraeli's Speech. — Napoleon's Will' (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 515). — 281

Page Break me39.632
Page me39.632
†341 Marx has in mind here the English workers' movement for observance by the manufacturers of the Ten Hours' Bill adopted by Parliament in 1847, for its application to all categories of workers and for the repeal of the 1850 law, which despite the 1847 Bill established a 10 1/2-hour working day. Marx analyses this movement in 'Parliamentary Debates. — The Clergy Against Socialism. — Starvation' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 282
Page me39.632
†342 Marx refers to the speech made by John Russell, leader of the Whig Party and member of the Aberdeen Coalition Government, at the opening of Parliament on 10 February 1853. Marx analysed this speech in 'The Italian Insurrection. — British Politics' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 282
Page me39.632
†343 A reference to John Aberdeen's Coalition Ministry of 1852-55 (the Cabinet of All the Talents), which consisted of Whigs, Peelites and representatives of the Irish faction. Marx described this Ministry in 'A Superannuated Administration. — Prospects of the Coalition Ministry, &c.' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 284
Page me39.632
†344 A reference to questions in Parliament in connection with rumours that the reactionary governments of the continental powers, Austria in the first place, intended to demand that the British Government should deport political refugees, Mazzini and Kossuth in particular. On 1 March 1853 Palmerston denied in the House of Commons that such demands had been made and declared that, should they be made, the British Government would categorically reject them. However, on 4 March, Aberdeen, head of the Cabinet, stated in the House of Lords that the government was ready to take proceedings against the refugees. — 284
Page me39.632
†345 In June 1850 the British Parliament debated the Anglo-Greek conflict over the so-called Pacifico incident. The house in Athens of this Portuguese merchant, a British subject, was burnt in 1847 and this served as a pretext for Palmerston to send ships to the Greek coast and present an ultimatum to the Greek Government. — 284, 455

Page me39.632
†346 The debate on the Address took place at the opening of Parliament in 1850. The usual procedure of drawing up a reply to the Speech from the Throne was used as a pretext for a comprehensive criticism of Russell's Whig Government, of which Palmerston was a member. — 284
Page me39.632
†347 On 3 March 1853 the radical Hume moved in the House of Commons that all tariffs which were in the slightest degree protectionist should be annulled. Marx expressed his opinion on Hume's motion and on Gladstone's and other Cabinet members' attitude to the question in 'Achievements of the Ministry' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 284
Page me39.632
†348 Philhellene — here non-Greek supporter of Greek independence in 1821-29. — 284
Page me39.632
†349 Engels revealed the essence of the dispute on the Eastern Question between The Times and The Daily News and described Urquhart's views in 'The Turkish Question' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 286
Page me39.632
†350 A reference to the trade agreement concluded between Prussia and Austria on 19 February 1853. Marx analysed it in 'Kossuth and Mazzini. — Intrigues of the Prussian Government. — Austro-Prussian Commercial Treaty. — The Times and the Refugees' (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 537-38). — 286
Page me39.632
†351 Marx has in mind his articles for the New-York Daily Tribune: 1. 'Capital

Page Break me39.633
Punishment. — Mr. Cobden's Pamphlet. — Regulations of the Bank of England' (28 January); 2. 'Defense. — Finances. — Decrease of the Aristocracy. — Politics' (8 February); 3. 'The Italian Insurrection. — British Politics' (11 February); 4. 'The Attack on Francis Joseph. — The Milan Riot. — British Politics. — Disraeli's Speech. — Napoleon's Will' (22 February); 5. 'Parliamentary Debates. — The Clergy Against Socialism. — Starvation' (25 February); 6. article of 1 March with additional information about the attack on Francis Joseph and about Kossuth (presumably not published by the newspaper); 7. 'Forced Emigration. — Kossuth and Mazzini. — The Refugee Question. — Election Bribery in England. — Mr. Cobden' (4 March). The article 'Kossuth and Mazzini. — Intrigues of the Prussian Government. — Austro-Prussian Commercial Treaty. — The Times and the Refugees', which Marx planned to send off on 11 March, was presumably written between 12 and 18 March and published on 4 April 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 288
Page me39.633
†352 A reference to articles by Aurelius Ferenc Pulszky, a Hungarian journalist and supporter of Kossuth. As an émigré in London he contributed to the New-York Daily Tribune from 1853 to 1860. He signed his articles 'A.P.C.', presumably an abbreviation for Aurelius Pulszky's Correspondence. Marx did not learn about Pulszky's contribution to the New-York Daily Tribune until several years later. — 288

Page me39.633
†353 The entente cordiale — an expression used to denote the rapprochement between France and Britain after the July 1830 revolution.
Page me39.633
The Holy Alliance — an association of European monarchs founded in 1815 to suppress revolutionary movements and preserve feudal monarchies in European countries. The Holy Alliance, in which the main role was played by Russia, Austria and Prussia, was dissolved in the late 1820s, but after the 1830 and 1848-49 revolutions attempts were made to resurrect it. — 289
Page me39.633
†354 In compliance with Marx's request Engels wrote for the New-York Daily Tribune between 12 March and early April 1853: 'British Politics. — Disraeli. — The Refugees. — Mazzini in London. — Turkey' (jointly with Marx), 'The Real Issue in Turkey', 'The Turkish Question' and 'What Is to Become of Turkey in Europe?' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 289
Page me39.633
†355 An allusion to Countess Sophie Hatzfeldt's divorce case. Lassalle was in charge of it from 1846 to 1854 and, after the divorce had been granted by the court in July 1851, tried in particular to secure for the Countess her share of the common property of the former couple. — 293, 478
Page me39.633
†356 Engels used this information in the article for the New-York Daily Tribune 'The Real Issue in Turkey' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 295
Page me39.633
†357 A reference to the Canada Clergy Reserves founded in 1791-1840, which consisted of a seventh of the revenue from the sale of lands in Canada and were used chiefly to subsidise the Established and Presbytarian churches. The discontent of other churches with such a distribution of funds compelled the British Parliament to pass a law in 1853 authorising the Canadian legislative bodies to distribute these funds among the different churches according to the proportion of the population professing their respective beliefs. Marx described this Bill and the debate on it in the House of Commons in 'Achievements of the Ministry' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 295
Page me39.633
†358 This letter is a reply to Cluss' letter of 6 March 1853. The unanswered letters were presumably written on 25 February and 2 March 1853. — 298

Page Break me39.634
Page me39.634
†359 Marx has in mind the publication of Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne in the Neu-England-Zeitung by Cluss in the USA (see Note 261). For this Cluss used a second copy of the manuscript sent by Marx to New York on 7 December 1852. The newspaper published only three fragments on 6 March, 2 and 28 April 1853. — 298
Page me39.634

†360 Barthélemy was Willich's second during the latter's duel with Schramm in Ostend in September 1850. See Marx's The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 492-95). — 299
Page me39.634
†361 Cluss' letter to Marx of 24 March 1853. — 301
Page me39.634
†362 A reference to a no-longer-existing letter to Bangya which Marx presumably wrote in Manchester during the period from the end of May to the second half of June 1852 while he and Engels were working on The Great Men of the Exile. — 301
Page me39.634
†363 An allusion to Harvey Birch, the main character in Fenimore Cooper's novel The Spy. — 301
Page me39.634
†364 Hirsch asserted in his confessions that the documents of the Willich-Schapper group had been stolen not by Reuter, as was pointed out by Marx and Engels, but by Fleury (see, in particular, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 390 and 406, and this volume, pp. 226-27). — 302
Page me39.634
†365 On the publication of Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne in the Neu-England-Zeitung, see notes 261 and 359.— 302
Page me39.634
†366 Engels' letter to Marx of 8 April 1853 has not been found. — 303
Page me39.634
†367 Jomini's best known works on the Napoleonic wars are: Histoire critique et militaire des guerres de la Révolution de 1792 á 1801, t. 1-15, Paris, 1819-24; Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, racontée par lui-même au tribunal de César, d'Alexandre et de Frédéric, t. 1-4, Paris, 1827. The first edition of Clausewitz's works, Hinterlassene Werke über Krieg und Kriegführung, was published in ten volumes in Berlin in 1832-37. The Napoleonic wars were dealt with in works in volumes 5-8. — 305
Page me39.634
†368 In February 1846, when an attempt was made to start a revolt in the Polish lands to secure the national liberation of Poland and the insurgents managed to win a temporary victory in Cracow, the Galician peasants also rose in revolt. The oppressed Ukrainian peasants hated the Polish szlachta, and the Austrian authorities succeeded in several places in turning the rebellious peasants against the Polish insurgents. After the suppression of the Cracow revolt, the Galician peasants were also crushed. — 306
Page me39.634
†369 A reference to the Russell Whig Cabinet (July 1846-February 1852), the Derby Tory Cabinet which replaced it (and was in power till December 1852) and the Aberdeen Coalition Cabinet (see Note 343). — 306
Page me39.634
†370 In the early 1850s the struggle between Prussia and Austria for supremacy in Germany again became acute: in particular, Austria, with the support of Russia, hampered Prussia's attempts to restore the Customs Union (see Note 220). After the coup d'état in France in December 1851 a new war threatened Europe because Bonapartist circles wished to restore the frontiers of the First Empire. In connection with this Austria made certain concessions when negotiating a trade agreement with Prussia (see Note 350). — 307

Page Break me39.635
Page me39.635
†371 The spring campaign of 1849 in Northern Italy began after Austria and Piedmont resumed hostilities on 12 March. At the decisive battle of Novara on 22-23 March 1849 the Austrian army under Radetzky defeated the Piedmontese troops. As a result Austrian rule was restored in Northern Italy. — 310
Page me39.635
†372 The Világos affair — the capitulation of the main forces of the Hungarian revolutionary army under Görgey to Paskievich's troops on 13 August 1849. — 310
Page me39.635
†373 The Hungarian revolutionary army relieved Komarom on 22 April 1849 (see Note 134). — 310
Page me39.635
†374 In the spring of 1849 Hungarian troops under Bem marched to the Banat, a district in the Serbian Voivodina, then part of Hungary.
Page me39.635
In speaking of the manoeuvre before Hermannstadt (Sibiu), Engels has in mind the successful operations of Bem's troops during the campaign in Transylvania in February-March 1849. During the general advance of the Russian troops in summer 1849 Bem returned to Transylvania, again marched to Hermannstadt, drove out the Russian garrison but, faced by superior forces of the Russian and Austrian armies, was compelled to retreat. — 311
Page me39.635
†375 The extract from this letter is printed as quoted by Cluss in a letter to Weydemeyer of 3 May 1853. It was published in English for the first time abridged in K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 312
Page me39.635
†376 The reference is to a series of articles by Pieper published under the general heading 'A Critical History of French Socialism' in The People's Paper, Nos. 31-33, 4, 11 and 18 December 1852. Weydemeyer and Cluss planned to publish these articles in Die Reform, but Pieper did not finish the series. — 312
Page me39.635
†377 Here Marx has in mind Pieper's material difficulties. On 18 April 1853 Pieper applied to Engels for help, as he could not receive money due to him for private lessons. On receipt of Pieper's letter Engels propably wrote to Marx between 19 and 23 April 1853 inquiring about Pieper's situation. Engels' letter has not been found. — 314
Page me39.635
†378 Marx received Engels' article on Switzerland on 26 April 1853 and dispatched it with his own article to New York on 29 April 1853. The editors published the material on Switzerland as two articles. The first article, including Marx's material, was entitled 'The Rocket Affair. — The Swiss Insurrection' and was published on 14 May 1853; the second article appeared on 17 May 1853 under the heading 'Political Position of the Swiss Republic'; the date of its dispatch from London — 1 May 1853 — was arbitrarily supplied by the editors (see present edition, Vol. 12). The newspaper published both articles over Marx's name, though the first was written by Marx and Engels, and the second by Engels. — 314, 319, 321

Page me39.635
†379 Marx's letter to Strohn is not extant. — 315
Page me39.635
†380 In April 1853 as a pretext for reprisals against political refugees, the British authorities accused the proprietor of a rocket manufactory in Rotherhithe, in London, of a conspiracy with Kossuth which Marx ironically calls 'Kossuth's gunpowder plot' by analogy with the Catholic gunpowder plot against James I in England in 1605. In March 1853 the Prussian police arrested several liberal and radical bourgeois leaders in Berlin in an effort to trump up a new conspiracy case. These government and police actions are described in Marx's articles 'The Berlin Conspiracy', 'The Berlin Conspiracy. — London Police. — Mazzini. — Radetzky' and Marx's and Engels' article 'The Rocket Affair. — The Swiss Insurrection' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 316

Page Break me39.636
Page me39.636
†381 Marx presumably refers to his letters to Cluss of 25 March and 17 April 1853 (see this volume, pp. 298-300 and 312-14) and one of about 10 April 1853 which is not extant. As emerges from Cluss' letter to Marx of 28 April 1853, Marx dealt in it with the publication in America of Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne as a separate book. — 317
Page me39.636
†382 An allusion to the past of Henri Savoye, professor of German at Louis-le-Grand college in 1841-48 and the author of several works on Germany and the German language. — 317
Page me39.636
†383 An abridged translation of this letter was published for the first time as an editorial note to Engels' letter to Marx of 3 December 1851 in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London, 1934. — 319
Page me39.636
†384 This money was collected in America in compliance with the appeal of Marx, Engels and their associates to help the Communist League members accused in Cologne and their families. — 323
Page me39.636
†385 On 21 May 1853 Jones published in The People's Paper an appeal to organise workers' meetings in favour of the People's Charter. At the time Marx wrote several articles for the New-York Daily Tribune on the revival of the Chartist movement (see present edition. Vol. 12). — 325
Page me39.636
†386 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester from 30 April to 19 May and returned to London on 20 May 1853. — 325, 335

Page me39.636
†387 An abridged translation of this letter was published for the first time in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895, London, 1934. It was erroneously dated 'about 18 May 1853'. In later English publications the date of the letter was verified (see Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1965). — 325
Page me39.636
†388 Willich slanderously represented his duel with Schramm in September 1850 (see Note 360) as an attempt by Marx and Engels to get rid of him by having him killed. Marx refuted this slander in his pamphlet The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 492-95). — 326
Page me39.636
†389 Die Reform was the organ of the American Workers' Association consisting mostly of German emigrant workers. Though officially its editor was the petty-bourgeois democrat Kellner, the newspaper's tendency was determined to a great extent by Weydemeyer, who became the newspaper's actual editor in the summer of 1853. Under his influence the paper retained its commitment to the working class for some time. It often reprinted Marx's and Engels' articles from the New-York Daily Tribune. Marx persuaded his associates (Eccarius, Pieper and Dronke) to co-operate with Die Reform, which regularly published articles and reports by Cluss and Weydemeyer, some based on material from Marx's letters. Towards the end of its existence (1854), the petty-bourgeois influence of its editor-in-chief, Kellner, became dominant. — 326
Page me39.636
†390 Marx and Engels talked about this during Marx's visit to Manchester from 30 April to 19 May 1853. — 326

Page Break me39.637
Page me39.637
†391 The Edda — a collection of Scandinavian mythological and heroic sagas and lays; two versions dating back to the thirteenth century are extant. — 328
Page me39.637
†392 In a statement made shortly after the publication of the final instalment of Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne in the Neu-England-Zeitung, No. 59, 22 April 1853, Willich threatened the imminent exposure of Marx in that newspaper, and the disclosure of facts he had not hitherto wished to make public. However, he only carried out his threat six months later by publishing a slanderous article, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine ”Enthüllungen”', in the Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nos. 33 and 34, 28 October and 4 November 1853. Marx replied with The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 330
Page me39.637
†393 Marx's letter to Dana has not been found. — 332
Page me39.637
†394 A reference to efforts to find a job in Manchester or Liverpool for Wilhelm Wolff, who had lost his last teaching possibilities with Reichenbach's departure to the USA. — 334

Page me39.637
†395 In his statement 'An die Redaktion der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung' of 2 May 1853 published in the newspaper on 13 May, Willich called Cluss Marx's agent. — 336
Page me39.637
†396 A reference to a unit formed by Willich in November 1848 in Besançon (France) out of German émigré workers and artisans. The practices and morals of this unit were satirically described by Marx and Engels in The Great Men of the Exile (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 312-15). — 336
Page me39.637
†397 The ideas expressed by Engels here were used by Marx in 'The British Rule in India' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 339
Page me39.637
†398 Tartary — a name given in the nineteenth century to a part of Turkestan in Central Asia. — 339
Page me39.637
†399 Engels refers to Weitling's lost work 'Allgemeine Denk- und Sprachlehre nebst Grundzügen einer Universal-Sprache der Menschheit', written in the first half of the 1840s. — 341
Page me39.637
†400 In 1853, with the active support of the Polish democratic refugees, Alexander Herzen founded the Free Russian Press in London to evade tsarist censorhip. Pointing to this aspect of Herzen's activity, Lenin wrote in his article 'In Memory of Herzen' that he 'was the first to raise the great banner of struggle by addressing his free Russian word to the masses' (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 18, p. 31). Nikolai Ogarev, another prominent figure among the Russian revolutionary democrats, also took part in the management of the Free Russian Press. Besides a large number of books, pamphlets and leaflets, the Free Russian Press published the periodicals Polyarnaya zvezda (The Polar Star) and Kolokol (The Bell), which played a great part in developing the revolutionary and democratic movement in Russia. In April 1865 the Free Russian Press was moved to Geneva, where it continued functioning up to August 1867. — 345
Page me39.637
†401 A reference to Cluss' letter to Marx of 29 May 1853. — 345
Page me39.637
†402 Marx lived in Chelsea (4 Anderson Street, London, S.W. 3) from August 1849 to April 1850. — 345
Page me39.637
†403 The facts mentioned here were described in greater detail by Marx in a letter to Cluss also written on 14 June 1853 (see Note 407). — 345

Page Break me39.638
Page me39.638
†404 A reference to H. Ch. Carey, The Slave Trade, Domestic and Foreign: why it exists, and how it may be extinguished, Philadelphia, 1853. A quotation from Marx's 'Elections. — Financial Clouds. — The Duchess of Sutherland and Slavery' is given on pp. 203-04 of that book. — 345
Page me39.638

†405 The laws of Manu (Mãnava Dharma — Çãstra) — an ancient Indian collection of instructions defining the duties of each Hindu according to the dogmas of Brahminism. Indian tradition has it that these laws were drafted by Manu, the mythical father of the people, approximately between the second century B.C. and the first century A.D. — 348
Page me39.638
†406 Only an extract of this letter has survived as quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 28 June 1853. Part of it was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 348
Page me39.638
†407 Further Cluss gives the substance of Marx's letter in his own words: 'About the money business Marx says: He has never accepted any financial support; as for the case trumpeted forth by Willich, it was roughly as follows: Marx, it is said, had rented a house in Chelsea (London) as a subtenant, paid his monthly rent regularly, often at the price of great privation. Then the actual owner of the house suddenly turns up and seizes on Marx, as the sublessor has paid nothing for a year. English law authorises this procedure. Marx cannot pay, a broker is installed in the house, etc. Marx in a very unfortunate position. — He is a member of the Refugee Relief Committee. The moneys are paid out weekly to individual refugees. The total sum, however, which is provided for the greater part by our friends in Europe, is lying idle, and so Marx is “saved”, by being granted the necessary sum on condition that he pays it back in fixed instalments when it is required for other refugees — those, it appears, who are alone entitled to relief. This he did conscientiously, and paid back everything, partly out of his own earnings and partly out of money he got from his family. C'est tout [That's all].
Page me39.638
'I have no lack of material to spin this out; on the contrary, there is an abundance of it. The same applies to the sacrifices he made for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, when the bourgeoisie fell away after the June Revolution [proletarian uprising in Paris in 1848], and the democratic petty bourgeoisie after the state of siege was introduced in Cologne. That's quite something. Marx says he spent about 7,000 talers for the N. Rh. Z. ... He says, too, that I can and should make use of all the material he gives me, without however involving him in this business as a witness. Reform: Marx says I am right. He says half Germany will come to New York for the industrial exhibition, and as we have no other publication in this city, we should simply take no notice of the stupidities of the Hornisse gentlemen [the editor of the Reform Gottlieb Kellner and its London correspondent Heinrich Heise published Die Hornisse in Cassel in 1848-50] and prudently steer our own course. As is well known, Talleyrand always called to his statesmen: “Avant tout, pas de zéle, pas de zéle!” [“Above all, not too much zeal, not too much zeal!”].' — 348
Page me39.638
†408 A twenty-five thousand-strong political demonstration was organised by the Chartists in Halifax on 26 June 1853 on the occasion of the funeral of Benjamin Ruston, an old Chartist worker. Marx wrote about this demonstration in the article 'Russian Policy Against Turkey. — Chartism' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 350

Page Break me39.639

Page me39.639
†409 Presumably the reference is to Marx's letter to Cluss sent off about 14 June 1853 (see this volume, pp. 348-50). — 351
Page me39.639
†410 Marx stayed in Manchester from 30 April to 19 May 1853. — 351
Page me39.639
†411 Charles Anderson Dana's letter to Mrs Marx of 1 July 1853. — 354
Page me39.639
†412 Marx analysed this debate and Bright's speech in the article 'The Turkish War Question. — The New-York Tribune in the House of Commons. — The Government of India' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 355
Page me39.639
†413 In April 1851 Abraham Jacobi was awarded the degree of Doctor of Medicine for his dissertation 'Cogitationes de vita rerum naturalium' at Bonn University. — 355
Page me39.639
†414 In a campaign for a revival of the mass movement, leaders of the revolutionary Chartists headed by Jones organised mass meetings all over the country in June and July 1853. Most important were the meeting in Blackstone-Edge (19 June), the meeting and demonstration in Halifax on 26 June (see Note 408), and meetings in Oldham (27 June), Newcastle (3 July) and Mount Sorrel (10 July). — 355
Page me39.639
†415 Engels was in London at the end of July and beginning of August 1853 on the occasion of his mother's visit to England (see this volume, p. 350). — 356
Page me39.639
†416 This is a covering note to Marx's article 'Michael Bakunin' written for The Morning Advertiser and published on 2 September 1853 datelined 30 August (see present edition, Vol. 12). It is extant as a copy in Mrs Marx's hand. The signature and address are in Marx's own writing. — 358
Page me39.639
†417 As Cluss' letter to Marx of 23-24 October 1853 and Pieper's letter to Jacobi of 3 September 1853 show, references for Abraham Jacobi, who intended to leave for the USA, were sent to America in early September 1853. But there is no mention of this in Marx's extant letters to Cluss and Weydemeyer and excerpts from them. — 359
Page me39.639
†418 Bakunin wrote to George Sand on 9 July, and in her letter to Marx of 20 July George Sand refuted the calumnious rumours about Bakunin. — 360
Page me39.639
†419 Marx's statement, a draft of which is quoted below, was not published by The Morning Advertiser. In view of this Marx put it in The People's Paper, No. 71, 10 September 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 12). The texts of the published statement and the draft are not identical. — 362, 364
Page me39.639
†420 The laws on suspects — the decree passed by the French Convention on 17 September 1793 and other measures of the Jacobin revolutionary government which declared all persons suspect and subject to arrest who in any way supported the overthrown monarchy, including all former aristocrats and royal officials who had not testified their loyalty to the revolution. These laws were drawn up in such a way that even people not involved in counter-revolutionary activity could be placed in the category of 'suspects'. — 363

Page me39.639
†421 Engels' reply to Marx's letter of 3 September 1853 containing a request for his comments on Marx's draft statement to The Morning Advertiser (see Note 419) has not been found. — 363
Page me39.639
†422 A reference to Wilhelm Wolff's impending departure for Manchester. He lived there from the first half of September 1853 to the end of his life in 1864. — 364

Page Break me39.640
Page me39.640
†423 Marx refers here to the articles on Russian foreign policy, in particular with respect to Turkey, in The Morning Advertiser (e.g. of 6 and 7 September 1853, etc.) and in the New-York Daily Tribune. Those in The Morning Advertiser were written by Karl Blind and those in the Tribune by Adam Gurowski. — 365
Page me39.640
†424 In a letter of 31 July 1853 sent to Ferdinand Freiligrath who passed it on to Marx on 18 August, the Communist League member Carl Wilhelm Klein reported on the formation of a new Communist League community in Philadelphia, where he was living in emigration at the time. He asked the Communist League members in London to help him establish contacts with the communities in Germany and to send in articles for Gradaus, a German refugees' newspaper close to the Working Men's Association in Philadelphia at the time. Simultaneously, Marx received from Cluss and Weydemeyer, in reply to his inquiry, information about Klein's own unseemly conduct in Philadelphia. Taking into account Klein's influence among the Solingen workers, Marx recommended that Cluss should maintain contact with him. Marx's reply to Klein's letter has not been found. — 365, 367
Page me39.640
†425 An extract from this letter is extant as quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 3 October 1853. — 366
Page me39.640
†426 Presumably an allusion to the fact that Poesche used the article 'Geld' in Meyer's Conversations-Lexicon (Vol. 12, Hildburghausen, Amsterdam, Paris and Philadelphia, 1848, pp. 285-91) as a source for his article. — 367
Page me39.640
†427 The article 'The Western Powers and Turkey. — Imminent Economic Crisis. — Railway Construction in India' was written jointly by Marx and Engels on 19-20 September 1853. — 368, 370
Page me39.640
†428 The knife and fork question — words, which came to symbolise the Chartists' social programme, pronounced by an English priest and Chartist, J.R. Stephens, at a meeting in 1838. See Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England (present edition, Vol. 4, p. 519). — 372, 377
Page me39.640

†429 Presumably Marx mentioned his intention to write articles on these subjects in a no longer extant letter to Engels written between 17 and 28 September 1853. — 374
Page me39.640
†430 Marx's 'The War Question. — Financial Matters. — Strikes' (dated 7 October 1853) suggests that Engels sent in the promised material and Marx worked it up for this article (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 409-15). — 374, 376
Page me39.640
†431 In September 1853 the Preston manufacturers responded with a lockout to one of the biggest strikes by English workers in the 1850s. The strike was started by the weavers and spinners of mills in and around Preston who demanded a ten per cent wage rise; they were supported by workers in other trades. The lockout lasted until February 1854, but the strike continued after that date. To break the strike the Manufacturers' Association started bringing workers to Preston from Ireland and from English workhouses. In March 1854 the leaders of the strike were arrested, and as funds were low the workers were compelled to return to work. The strike ended in May 1854 (see K. Marx, 'Panic on the London Stock Exchange. — Strikes', present edition, Vol. 12). — 374, 376, 513
Page me39.640
†432 Textile mill workers and some 5,000 miners went on strike in Wigan (see K. Marx, 'Panic on the London Stock Exchange. — Strikes', present edition, Vol. 12). — 376

Page Break me39.641
Page me39.641
†433 Marx carried out his plans in February and March 1854 by writing 'Russian Diplomacy. — The Blue Book on the Eastern Question — Montenegro' and 'Declaration of War. — On the History of the Eastern Question' (see present edition, vols. 12 and 13). He wrote two articles on Denmark (21 October and 4 November 1853): 'Arrest of Delescluze. — Denmark. — Austria. — The Times on the Prospects of War Against Russia' and 'Persian Expedition in Afghanistan and Russian Expedition in Central Asia. — Denmark. — The Fighting on the Danube and in Asia. — Wigan Colliers' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 376
Page me39.641
†434 Only part of this letter is extant. — 377
Page me39.641
†435 At first Wilhelm Wolff intended to emigrate to the USA. — 377
Page me39.641
†436 A reference to the first article in the series Lord Palmerston which Marx was working on from early October to early December 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 12). The pamphlet Lord Palmerston was intended for the New-York Daily Tribune. Simultaneously the articles were published in the Chartist People's Paper, which published eight articles from 22 October to 24 December 1853 as a single series, each article being preceded by the editorial note: 'Written for the New-York Tribune by Dr. Marx, and communicated by him to us.' The New-York Daily Tribune published only four articles (their contents corresponded to six articles in The People's Paper) as leaders, outwardly unconnected and with different titles. The sixth and eighth articles of the series were not published in the Tribune at all.

Page me39.641

At Marx's request Cluss translated into German the first article published in the Tribune. It was published abridged in New York in the German-language workers' newspaper Die Reform, Nos. 72, 73, 74, 77 and 78, 2, 3, 4, 8 and 9 November 1853. In December 1853 Cluss translated the second and third articles of the pamphlet from the Tribune and the fourth from The People's Paper. The editors of this edition do not have a complete file of Die Reform for 1854 at their disposal; it is therefore impossible to say whether the publication of the German translation was continued. — 378 †437 On 5 August 1853 the House of Lords rejected the Combination of Workmen Bill which would have granted limited rights to workers' organisations. In this context Marx denounced the anti-working-class policy of both the ruling oligarchy and the liberal and radical bourgeoisie. In the atmosphere of a mass strike movement, the manufacturers created 'an association for the purpose of aiding the trade in regulating the excitement among operatives in the Manchester district' and resolutely opposed the organisation of workers' associations (see K. Marx, 'The War Question. — British Population and Trade Returns. — Doings of Parliament', present edition, Vol. 12). Marx thought it necessary to draw the workers' attention to the fact that the bourgeoisie was consolidating its forces; with this aim in view he wanted to provide Jones with facts before his tour of the strike districts. In an article written on 7 October, i.e. the day after his meeting with Jones, Marx wrote: 'The London press, it appears, was anxious to withhold the fact from the eyes of the world, that the Factory Lords were systematically arraying their class against the class of Labor, and that the successive steps taken by them, instead of being the spontaneous result of circumstances, are the premeditated effects of a deep-laid conspiracy of an organized Anti-Labor League!" (see present edition, Vol. 12, p. 412).

Page me39.641

Page me39.641

To help the strikers a group of Chartists headed by Jones suggested the setting up of a coordinating workers' organisation, The Mass Movement, which was to unite Chartists, members of co-operative associations, trade unionists and unorganised workers (see Note 498). — 378

Page Break me39.642

Page me39.642

†438 In this letter Marx continues to set forth for his associates in America certain propositions of the economic theory he was then elaborating (see Note 45). At the time of writing this letter Marx had received from Cluss his article 'Das "beste Blatt der Union" und seine "besten Männer" und Nationalökonomen' published in the New York workers' newspaper Die Reform in September 1853, for which Cluss had made use of Marx's earlier letters. (For the text of this article and its analysis see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 623-32.) The question of rent was among the problems raised in the article. These notes by Marx are directly related to this subject and to the critique he began earlier of the American vulgar economist H. Ch. Carey. — 378, 387

Page me39.642

†439 Presumably Marx continued this letter the next day, 6 October 1853. — 383

Page me39.642

†440 On Tuesday, 18 October 1853, Marx dispatched to New York 'The Turkish Manifesto. — France's Economic Position'. Engels may have taken part in writing it. — 388
Page me39.642
†441 This letter was known earlier only from a copy of it in Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 2 November 1853 and partly as rendered by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 4 November 1853. The extract published in Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 28, and Marx und Engels, Werke, Bd. 28, included part of Cluss' text by mistake (the last paragraph). — 390
Page me39.642
†442 As the editors did not regularly send copies of the New-York Daily Tribune to him, Marx asked Cluss and Weydemeyer to send him the issues containing his articles. Cluss was compelled to copy out the article 'Revolution in China and in Europe' because he could not buy the newspaper in time.
Page me39.642
Marx's letter (presumably of August 1853) containing a request for this article has not been found. — 390
Page me39.642
†443 Cluss corrected the misprints when this article from Marx's Lord Palmerston was published in Die Reform. — 390
Page me39.642
†444 The Turko-Egyptian fleet was destroyed by combined Russian, English and French squadrons at Navarino (Greece) on 20 October 1827. — 394
Page me39.642
†445 In October 1853 Weydemeyer became editor-in-chief of Die Reform. As Cluss wrote to Marx on 23-24 October 1853, Weydemeyer was compelled 'to write almost the whole newspaper himself'. In view of this Cluss requested Marx to get his associates to contribute to the newspaper. — 396
Page me39.642
†446 Only an extract from this letter is extant as quoted by Cluss in his letter to Weydemeyer of 7 December 1853. — 397
Page me39.642
†447 Eccarius' articles on the economic and political situation in France were published in The People's Paper from September 1852 to May 1853. — 397
Page me39.642
†448 Marx's letter to Jones has not been found. — 397
Page me39.642
†449 Here Marx replies to Cluss' letter of 23-24 October 1853 in which Cluss wrote about the difficulties he had encountered in publishing the translation of Marx's first article from Lord Palmerston (see Note 436) in Die Reform. The Tribune published Marx's work anonymously, as leading articles, so Die Reform prefaced its publication with an editorial note: 'The interest aroused by Palmerston's name at the present time has induced us to print this rendering from the Tribune. This essay reveals a more than average knowledge of British affairs by the author, and though it bears no signature, it is easy to tell who the author is.' — 398

Page Break me39.643

Page me39.643
†450 A few lines below Cluss writes: 'Marx added some notes on Urquhart because Jones, in a paper I am to receive, characterises him in a tactless way as an ally of the Russians [Jones' article 'A Russian Movement in England', The People's Paper, No. 80, 12 November 1853]. Marx writes [this letter is not extant] that he gave Jones a dressing down for this. I have made up a short article out of the "Urquhartiade"'. Marx's article, 'David Urquhart', was published by Cluss unsigned in Die Reform, No. 112, 19 December 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 398
Page me39.643
†451 Engels' letters to Marx of October-December 1853 have not been found. — 399
Page me39.643
†452 Engels arrived in London at the end of December 1853. — 400
Page me39.643
†453 A reference to Dronke's letter to Engels written from Switzerland at the end of July or the beginning of August 1850. An extract from it was quoted by Marx in The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (see present edition, Vol. 12, p. 486). — 401
Page me39.643
†454 On 23 November 1853 Engels wrote a special letter — a statement against Willich, which Marx included in The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 489-93). — 401
Page me39.643
†455 Steffen's letter of 22 November 1853, Miskowsky's letter of 24 November 1853, and Kossuth's certificate of 12 November 1853 concerning Miskowsky were included in Marx's The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 504-05 and 494-95). — 401
Page me39.643
†456 Here and below the reference is to the meetings organised by the Polish refugees in London on Monday and Tuesday, 28 and 29 November 1853, to mark the anniversary of the Polish insurrection of 1830-31. — 401
Page me39.643
†457 Presumably Marx refers to Engels' letter which was written on about 14 December 1853 and is not extant. — 403
Page me39.643
†458 A reference to the London Convention of 15 July 1840 on support for the Turkish Sultan against the Egyptian Pasha Mohammed Ali and to the London Convention of 13 July 1841 which laid down that in peacetime the Straits would be closed to warships of all powers. — 404, 432
Page me39.643
†459 Marx did not realise his plan to continue publishing the series of articles on Palmerston in the New-York Daily Tribune. The last article dispatched to New York and recorded in his notebook on 6 December 1853 was not published in that newspaper. In The People's Paper it appeared as the eighth in the series 'Lord Palmerston' and ended with the words 'To be continued'. — 404

Page me39.643
†460 Marx agreed to J.C. Juta's proposal to contribute to the newspaper Zuid Afrikaan published in English and Dutch. Of the three articles sent by Marx The Zuid Afrikaan published only one — 'The War in the East' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 405.
Page me39.643
†461 Engels went to London for Christmas 1853 and left for Manchester on 1 January 1854. — 406
Page me39.643
†462 A reference to the war of Napoleonic France against Spain in 1808-14 which ended in France's defeat. — 406

Page Break me39.644
Page me39.644
†463 Marx refers to Charles Dana's letter to Mrs Marx of 16 December 1853 in which he presumably wrote about Engels' article 'The War on the Danube' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 16 December as a leader. A week earlier, on 7 December, Dana had published another article by Engels, 'Progress of the Turkish War', also as a leader (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 407
Page me39.644
†464 Dana wrote to Mrs Marx about this on 16 December 1853. — 407
Page me39.644
†465 About 16 December 1853 the London publisher Tucker published anonymously the pamphlet Palmerston and Russia in Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets, No. 1 (a reprint from the Glasgow Sentinel) (see Note 541). The pamphlet reproduced the article of the same title published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 4 November 1853, the second in this newspaper's publication of Lord Palmerston.
Page me39.644
The second edition of Palmerston and Russia, referred to here, was issued with Marx's participation in early February 1854. Marx made some amendments and additions on the basis of the People's Paper publication. On how the whole series of articles Lord Palmerston was written and published see this volume, Note 436, and present edition, Vol. 12. — 408, 432
Page me39.644
†466 Engels analysed the fighting between the Russians and the Turks at Oltenitza (4 November 1853) and Citatea (6 January 1854) in 'The Progress of the Turkish War', 'The War on the Danube' and 'The Last Battle in Europe' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 408
Page me39.644
†467 At the battle of Sinope between Russian and Turkish naval squadrons on 30 (18) November 1853, during the Crimean war, the Turks were defeated.
Page me39.644
After the battle of Sinope, Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, British Ambassador to Constantinople, handed the Sultan a recommendation from the British Government to conclude a three months' armistice with Russia; at the same time he tried to get British squadrons sent immediately to the Black Sea.
Page me39.644

The Vienna Protocol was signed on 5 December 1853 at the conference of representatives of Britain, France, Prussia and Austria. In this Protocol, as in the subsequent Note of 12 December, the four powers offered to mediate in the conflict between Russia and Turkey. As a basis for negotiations they demanded the evacuation of Moldavia and Wallachia by the Russians, renewal of former treaties between Russia and Turkey, guarantee of Christians' rights by special firmans and a reform of the administrative system in Turkey. In a Note of 31 December 1853 the Turkish Government stated its conditions for peace negotiations with the powers mediating: 1) the preservation and guarantee of Turkish territorial integrity; 2) Russian evacuation of the Danubian Principalities; 3) renewal and observance of the London Convention of 1841 (see Note 458); 4) respect of the Sultan's sovereignty. These conditions were approved by a new Vienna conference of the ambassadors on 13 January 1854 and forwarded to the Russian Government. However, Russia refused to accept the mediation of the powers and agreed to direct negotiations with Turkey. The participants in the Vienna conference rejected Russia's proposals. — 408

Page me39.644

†468 A reference to Palmerston's short resignation of his post as Home Secretary (16-24 December 1853). His resignation was not accepted, however (on this see Marx's article 'Palmerston's Resignation', present edition, Vol. 12). — 409

Page me39.644

†469 31 January 1854 was the day of the opening of the British Parliament. — 409

Page Break me39.645

Page me39.645

†470 A reference to the Note signed by the British, French and Prussian Ambassadors in Constantinople on 12 December 1853 and handed to Turkey on 15 December 1853 (see Note 467). — 409

Page me39.645

†471 An allusion to the wars of Napoleonic France and the liberation struggle of the European peoples against its rule waged up to 1814. — 409

Page me39.645

†472 Engels' letter to Steffen has not been found. — 409

Page me39.645

†473 When Engels was in London (see Note 461) he presumably discussed with Marx his plan to write such a work for the English Press. This plan did not materialise. — 409

Page me39.645

†474 Neither Marx's note to Wilhelm Wolff, nor Wolff's letter to Marx has been found. — 410

Page me39.645

†475 The reference is to the Turkish Government's Note of 31 December 1853 (see Note 467). — 410

Page me39.645

†476 By the original (first) Vienna Note Marx means the draft agreement between Russia and Turkey drawn up by the Austrian Prime Minister Buol and adopted at the conference of the French, British and Prussian Ambassadors in Vienna at the end of July 1853. It obliged the Sultan to observe the terms of the Kuchuk-Kainardji (1774) and the Adrianople (1829) treaties on the rights and privileges of the Orthodox Church in the Ottoman Empire. The Turkish Sultan Abdul Mejid agreed to sign the Note but demanded a number of changes and reservations which the Russian Government found unacceptable. — 410

Page me39.645
†477 Marx alludes ironically to the leading article in The Times of 20 January 1854 which stated in particular: 'Nevertheless, to all these considerations the Emperor Nicholas opposes a proud intractable temper, heightened, perhaps, by the religious enthusiasm or hereditary excitability of his family, and stimulated by the enthusiasm of his people, which is mixed with a barbarous contempt for nations whose power they cannot compare with their own.' — 410
Page me39.645
†478 Marx refers to the speeches made by Cobden and Bright at the Manchester Reform meeting on 24 January 1854 and reported in The Times, No. 21647, 25 January. The speeches, dealing mainly with the foreign policy problems, were analysed in Marx's and Engels' article 'Fortification of Constantinople. — Denmark's Neutrality. — Composition of British Parliament. — Crop Failure in Europe' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 411
Page me39.645
†479 Cluss' letter to Marx has not been found. — 411
Page me39.645
†480 Here Marx writes about issue No. II in Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets series being prepared for publication on the basis of Marx's Lord Palmerston (see Note 465). The pamphlet was printed in February-March 1854 anonymously and entitled Palmerston, What Has He Done? It reproduced with slight amendments the text of the fourth (except the first four paragraphs) and the fifth articles of the People's Paper publication. — 412
Page me39.645
†481 This offer was made by Dana in a letter to Mrs Marx of 16 December 1853. These plans did not materialise. — 412
Page me39.645
†482 The reference is to the second edition of the pamphlet Palmerston and Russia in Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets series (see Note 465). In subsequent editions of this series this work was entitled Palmerston and Poland. — 412

Page Break me39.646
Page me39.646
†483 Marx has in mind the articles from his Lord Palmerston published in Die Reform in Cluss' translation. They corresponded to the second and third articles ('Palmerston and Russia' and 'A Chapter of Modern History') in the New-York Daily Tribune and the fourth in The People's Paper (see Note 436). — 412
Page me39.646
†484 Marx wrote about this meeting also in a letter to Ferdinand Lassalle of 1 June 1854 (see this volume, p. 455).
Page me39.646
Marx described Urquhart in his article 'David Urquhart' published in Die Reform on 19 December 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 412

Page me39.646
†485 In a letter to Nicholas I of 29 January 1854, Napoleon III proposed as a condition of preserving peace that Russia should withdraw her troops from the Danubian Principalities. On 14 February 1854 the letter was published officially in Le Moniteur universel, No. 45. Nicholas I's reply, containing a refusal to accept Napoleon III's proposal, was sent off on 9 February 1854 and published in Le Moniteur universel, No. 64, 5 March 1854. — 414
Page me39.646
†486 In a letter to Marx of 27 March 1854 J.J.H. Smuts, editor of The Zuid Afrikaan, refused to accept any further contributions from Marx, for, he wrote, 'the amount of remuneration claimed by [Marx] for such correspondence, entirely exceeds the means which my establishment allows me to apply to such a purpose'. — 414
Page me39.646
†487 At Marx's request Engels wrote on 13 March 'Retreat of the Russians from Kalafat' (see present edition, Vol. 13).
Page me39.646
The Greek revolution — the revolt of the Greek population in Epirus, the mountain regions of Thessaly and other territories still subject to Turkey; Marx assessed these events in the article 'The Greek Insurrection' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 414, 444
Page me39.646
†488 Marx has in mind Lassalle's letter of 10 February 1854. Engels' letter to Marx mentioned here has not been found. — 417
Page me39.646
†489 In 1853, with the growth of a massive strike movement of the British proletariat, a group of Chartists headed by Ernest Jones proposed to create a broad workers' organisation, The Mass Movement, which was to unite trade unions and unorganised workers with the primary aim of coordinating strikes in the various districts of the country. The organisation was to be headed by a regularly convened Labour Parliament consisting of delegates elected at meetings of both unorganised workers and of the trade unions associated with The Mass Movement. The Labour Parliament assembled in Manchester on 6 March 1854 and was in session till 18 March 1854. It discussed and adopted the programme of The Mass Movement and set up an Executive of five members. Marx, elected honorary delegate to the Parliament, sent a letter to it (see present edition, Vol. 13), in which he formulated the primary task of the British labour movement — the necessity to create an independent proletarian mass political party. Marx regarded the convocation of the Labour Parliament as an effort to free the labour movement in Britain from narrow trade union limitations.
Page me39.646
The attempt to found The Mass Movement failed because the majority of the trade union leaders did not approve of associating the trade unions with the political struggle and did not support the idea of creating a single mass workers' organisation. By the summer of 1854 the strike movement had abated and this also cut short the participation of broad masses of workers in the movement. After March 1854 the Labour Parliament never met again.

Page Break me39.647
Page me39.647
Besides the 'Letter to the Labour Parliament', Marx wrote two more articles on the activity of the Labour Parliament: 'Opening of the Labour Parliament. — English War Budget' and 'The Labor Parliament' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 417
Page me39.647
†490 Marx's letter to Lassalle has not been found. — 417
Page me39.647
†491 Presumably Lassalle's letter to Marx of 7 March 1854. — 418
Page me39.647
†492 Marx's letter to Engels mentioned here has not been found. — 418
Page me39.647
†493 Lassalle's letters to Marx of 10 February and 7 March 1854. — 419
Page me39.647
†494 Enos and Rodosto — points on the European coasts of the Aegean Sea and the Sea of Marmara where the British and the French army respectively were to disembark. Marx assessed this plan in the article 'English and French War Plans. — Greek Insurrection. — Spain. — China' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 419
Page me39.647
†495 Engels' ideas expressed here were partly used by Marx in the article 'Russia and the German Powers. — Corn Prices' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 420
Page me39.647
†496 Engels sent his manuscript 'The Fortress of Kronstadt' to The Daily News on 30 March with a letter in which he offered to contribute to this newspaper as a military observer (see this volume, pp. 423-26).
Page me39.647
'The Fortress of Kronstadt' was not published during Engels' lifetime; in the present edition it is included in Vol. 13. — 420, 422
Page me39.647
†497 Marx refers to Lassalle's letter of 7 March 1854 (on it see this volume, p. 419). On Palmerston Lassalle wrote in particular:
Page me39.647
'True, Palmerston never deserved — not by a long shot — the totally usurped reputation which he enjoys, and has lately been even more primitive than before; but neither is he a Russian agent, at least not consciously. His attitude I can best describe to you in the words he said to a friend of his as early as December: Je veux la Russie, je ne dis pas ruiner, mais lui donner un soufflet pour toute sa vie! [I want — I don't say to destroy Russia — but to give it a slap in the face that it would remember for ever!]
Page me39.647
'It is a fact that he pressed for war from December, etc., and answered every objection that Russia could not concede this or that with “Tant mieux!” [“All the better!”]? (F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften herausgegeben von Gustav Mayer. Band III. Der Briefwechsel zwischen Lassalle und Marx. Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922, S. 73). — 422, 431
Page me39.647

†498 The reference is to the secret correspondence of the British envoy to St. Petersburg, Hamilton Seymour, and the British Foreign Secretary Russell, concerning the negotiations between Seymour and Nicholas I on the Turkish question at the beginning of 1853. This correspondence and other documents pertaining to the pre-history of the Crimean War were published as a Blue Book, Correspondence Respecting the Rights and Privileges of the Latin and Greek Churches in Turkey. Presented to Both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. Parts V, VI, London, 1854. Marx gave a detailed analysis of these documents in 'The Documents on the Partition of Turkey' and 'The Secret Diplomatic Correspondence' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 422
Page me39.647
†499 Marx's letter to the editors of the New-York Daily Tribune of 27 March has not been found. It may have been sent off to New York on 28 March 1854 with the article 'Declaration of War. — On the History of the Eastern Question'. — 422

Page Break me39.648
Page me39.648
†500 Marx used the information he got from Hammer's book later when writing 'Reorganisation of the British War Administration. — The Austrian Summons. — Britain's Economic Situation. — St. Arnaud' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 423
Page me39.648
†501 On the outbreak of the Crimean War Engels offered his services as military observer to The Daily News and sent the editors his article 'The Fortress of Kronstadt' (see Note 496) on 30 March, and after 3 April 1854, at the request of the editors, the article 'The Russian Army', which was to open a series of articles on the Russian army and navy. The article was set and Engels probably received the proofs on 12 April 1854, with a letter from the editor H.J. Lincoln, who asked Engels about his terms. Engels pinned great hopes on this collaboration, believing that permanent work on the newspaper would enable him to give up his commercial activity and move to London. However, as can be seen from Engels' letter to Marx of 20 April 1854, Lincoln cancelled the previous contract when he discovered Engels' political views. Some of the propositions formulated in the article 'The Russian Army' were elaborated in 'The Military Power of Russia' (see present edition, Vol. 13) and 'The Armies of Europe' (see present edition, Vol. 14) published in the New-York Daily Tribune and Putnam's Monthly. — 423
Page me39.648
†502 John Watts consented to recommend Engels as chief military correspondent to The Daily News in his letter to Engels of 27 March 1854. — 424
Page me39.648
†503 Marx translated into English this description of the Russian landing at Dobrudja and included it in his article sent to the USA on 4 April. The editors published the lesser part of the article as a leader 'The European War' (it included Engels' text) and entitled the larger part 'The War Debate in Parliament' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 427
Page me39.648
†504 Wasserpolacken — a name applied in the seventeenth century to Poles living in Upper Silesia and engaged in floating timber on the Oder; later the name was used for the whole Polish population of Upper Silesia which was under German rule from the mid-eighteenth century. — 427

Page me39.648
†505 Engels has in mind H.J. Lincoln's letter of 1 April 1854. — 427
Page me39.648
†506 Cluss' letter has not been found. — 428
Page me39.648
†507 This refers to the stand taken by Palmerston as Foreign Secretary on the problem of Cracow which, according to the Vienna Treaty of 1815, was considered a free city. In Parliament and the press Palmerston passed himself off as 'a friend of Poland' but in fact betrayed its interests when in 1840 the population of Cracow protested against the unlawful occupation of that city by Austrian troops since February 1836 and when in November 1846, after the suppression of the national liberation uprising in Cracow, Austria, Prussia and Russia signed an agreement on the annexation of Cracow to the Austrian Empire. Marx exposed Palmerston's actions in his pamphlet Lord Palmerston (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 358-70). — 430, 432
Page me39.648
†508 Marx's reply to Lassalle written between 10 February and 7 March has not been found. — 430
Page me39.648
†509 An allusion to Lord Palmerston (see present edition, Vol. 12). Excerpts made by Marx from Parliamentary (Blue) Books in March-May 1853 and from Hansard's Parliamentary Debates for 1831-48 in July-August and September-November 1853 in connection with this work are extant. — 432

Page Break me39.649
Page me39.649
†510 The Unkiar-Skelessi treaty of defensive alliance was concluded by Russia and Turkey on 8 July (26 June) 1833. It provided for mutual aid in the event of war with a third power. A secret article of the treaty freed Turkey from the obligation to give military aid to Russia in return for an undertaking to close the Straits to all foreign men-of-war on Russia's demand. — 432, 456
Page me39.649
†511 The First Anglo-Afghan war (1838-42) was launched by Britain with the aim of colonising Afghanistan but ended in Britain's defeat. — 432
Page me39.649
†512 In 1838 the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies granted a French company a concession to extract sulphur in Sicily. In April 1840 the British Government, referring to the treaty of 1816 which forbade Naples to grant other countries commercial privileges infringing British interests, ordered its Mediterranean fleet to open hostilities and compelled Naples to cancel its agreement with the French company. — 432
Page me39.649
†513 Marx refers to the attitude of the Whig Government, in which Palmerston held the post of Foreign Secretary, towards Italy and Hungary during the 1848-49 revolution. — 432
Page me39.649

†514 A reference to Cluss' letter to Marx of 4 April 1854. — 433
Page me39.649
†515 The report of Gorchakov, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian army on the Danube, to Nicholas I was reprinted by The Times on 19 April 1854 from a special supplement to the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg of 6 April 1854 and entitled 'The Russian Passage of the Danube'. The same issue of The Times carried an item 'The Russian Fleet in the Black Sea' reprinted from Russkij invalid (and not from Syevernaya as Marx wrote) about military operations on the Caucasian coast. — 433
Page me39.649
†516 Engels refers to H.J. Lincoln's letter of 18 April 1854. Engels' reply has not been found. — 435
Page me39.649
†517 A reference to Pieper's letter to Engels of 12 April 1854. — 435
Page me39.649
†518 The reference is to Herzen's address 'The Free Russian Community to the Russian Soldiers in Poland' printed in the Free Russian Press in London about 25 March 1854 in connection with the outbreak of the Crimean War. Herzen called upon the Russian soldiers 'not to use arms against Poland'. The address was immediately reprinted by a number of English, French, Italian and Polish newspapers, The Daily News (No. 2471, 21 April 1854) among them. — 437
Page me39.649
†519 This letter of Marx has not been found. — 439
Page me39.649
†520 An allusion to Marx's articles on India ('The British Rule in India', 'The East India Company. — Its History and Results' and others — see present edition, Vol. 12) written in 1853, when the British Parliament debated the prolongation of the East India Company Charter. — 439
Page me39.649
†521 Engels' letter to Cluss has not been found. — 441
Page me39.649
†522 Kossuth, jointly with Mazzini and Ledru-Rollin, criticised the US Senate in the press refusing to prolong George Sanders' powers as Consul in London. This American public figure and journalist maintained contacts with petty-bourgeois emigrants in London. The American newspapers, The New-York Herald and The New-York Times in particular, attacked Kossuth for his criticism and accused him of meddling in US domestic affairs. Clippings from the American newspapers were sent to Marx by Cluss in his letter of 4 April 1854. Marx forwarded them to Engels probably in his letter of 22 April. — 441

Page Break me39.650
Page me39.650
†523 A reference to Cluss' letter to Marx of 13 April 1854. — 442
Page me39.650
†524 Weydemeyer, editor of Die Reform, received a review of Schimmelpfennig's book The War Between Turkey and Russia written jointly by Engels and Heise, when the newspaper ceased publication (Weydemeyer to Engels, 16 May 1854). He sent it on to Cluss who wanted to insert it in some other newspaper, preferably Der Deutsch-Amerikaner, a weekly published from March 1854 in Chicago by Eduard Schläger (Cluss to Marx, 25 May 1854). The editors of the present edition have no file of Der Deutsch-Amerikaner for that period and the fate of the review is unknown. — 443

Page me39.650
†525 An allusion to Schimmelpfennig's proposal to contribute military articles to Die Reform. In a letter to Marx of 13 April 1854 Cluss asked for Marx's advice on this point. — 444
Page me39.650
†526 The reference is to a number of reforms carried out in the Ottoman Empire in the spheres of finance, the army, administration and legislation (known as tanzimat) between 1839 and the early 1870s. Their practical implementation met with fierce resistance on the part of feudal reaction, particularly at the first stage, prior to the Sultan's new rescript (hatti-humayouni) in 1856. — 444
Page me39.650
†527 Odessa was bombarded by a united Anglo-French squadron on 22 April 1854. For details see Marx's 'The Bombardment of Odessa. — Greece. — Proclamation of Prince Daniel of Montenegro. — Manteuffel's Speech', present edition, Vol. 13. — 444, 446, 452
Page me39.650
†528 Marx refers to the notice published by the Russian Ministry of Finance in a special supplement to Kommercheskaya gazeta Nos. 40 and 41, 6 (18) and 8 (20) April 1854 and reprinted in the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 377, 8 (20) April 1854. Marx apparently used a report reprinted in The Times, No. 21726, 27 April 1854, from the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg. — 446
Page me39.650
†529 In 1838 and 1839 the great powers held negotiations to regulate relations between the Netherlands and Belgium which had seceded from the Kingdom of the Netherlands as a result of the 1830 revolution. Previously England supported Belgium, jointly with France, but this time it sided with Russia, Austria and Prussia who sought to impose on Belgium the peace terms worked out by the great powers. France found itself isolated and was compelled to agree to these terms. Louis Philippe's diplomatic defeat was regarded in France as a serious foreign policy humiliation.
Page me39.650
In 1839, when the Turkish-Egyptian conflict over Syria, which had been occupied by the Egyptians in 1833, flared up anew, and France supported the Egyptian Pasha Mohammed Ali, Britain, seeking to prevent a growth of French influence in that area, brought diplomatic pressure to bear on France. On 15 July 1840 a convention was signed in London by Britain, Russia, Prussia, Austria and Turkey promising to support the Sultan of Turkey (see Note 458). Louis Philippe, fearing a conflict with this coalition, made a new concession and refused any further support to Egypt. — 447
Page me39.650
†530 Marx's conspectus of H.H. Parish's Diplomatic History of the Monarchy of Greece (London, 1838) made early in May 1854 when he was studying the history of Greece is extant. — 447
Page me39.650

†531 The editors of this edition do not have La Presse at their disposal. Marx may have used a reprint of this material in L'Indépendance belge, No. 123, 3 May 1854. — 447

Page Break me39.651
Page me39.651
†532 Whitechapel — a district in London where many foreign emigrants lived. The fire mentioned in this letter happened in Whitechapel on 29 April 1854. — 449, 451
Page me39.651
†533 Engels lived in Berlin as an army volunteer from September 1841 to about late September 1842. — 449
Page me39.651
†534 Here Marx has in mind the patrons of Stehely's confectionery in Berlin in the 1840s, radical-minded men of letters, students and members of 'The Free' (see Note 535). — 449
Page me39.651
†535 'The Free' — a group of Berlin Young Hegelians which came into being in the first half of 1842. Among its principal members were Bruno Bauer, Edgar Bauer, Edward Meyen, Ludwig Buhl and Max Stirner. The system existing in the country was criticised by 'The Free' in an abstract manner, their statements were devoid of real revolutionary content, their ultra-radical form often compromised the democratic movement. Many of 'The Free' renounced radicalism in the following years.
Page me39.651
For a criticism of 'The Free' see K. Marx and F. Engels, The Holy Family, or Critique of Critical Criticism (present edition, Vol. 4). — 449
Page me39.651
†536 The information on Wiss given in the previous letter was passed on to Cluss by Marx in a letter written probably in the first week of May 1854. Marx's letter has not been found. — 450
Page me39.651
†537 Engels' irony is directed at Willich, who in his article 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”' (Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 33, 28 October 1853) wrote that Schramm's second Miskowsky vanished without trace after the duel between Schramm and Willich (see Note 360). — 451
Page me39.651
†538 In a letter of 30 April 1854 Cluss informed Marx, among other things, that Die Reform ceased publication. — 453
Page me39.651
†539 This is Marx's reply to Lassalle's letter of 20 May 1854 in which the latter asked for information on the plans of the political emigrants in England in connection with the Crimean War and also for Marx's articles on Palmerston which had been published in London as a separate pamphlet (see notes 465 and 480). — 454
Page me39.651
†540 Marx's letters to Lassalle written in the second half of 1854 have not been found. — 454
Page me39.651

†541 A series of twelve pamphlets under the general title Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets was published in London by Urquhart's follower Tucker in 1853 and 1854, exposing Palmerston's foreign policy. The first two issues reproduced some sections of Marx's Lord Palmerston (see notes 465 and 480). In 1855 Tucker reprinted the series in one volume. — 455, 472
Page me39.651
†542 On 8 May 1852 Russia, Austria, Britain, France, Prussia, Sweden and Denmark signed the London Protocol on the integrity of the Danish monarchy, confirming the indivisibility of the Danish Crown lands, including the Duchy of Schleswig-Holstein. Among the legitimate claimants to the Danish Crown the London Protocol mentioned the Russian Emperor (as a descendant of Duke Charles Peter Ulrich of Holstein-Gottorp who reigned in Russia as Peter III). He waived his rights in favour of Duke Christian of Glücksburg who was proclaimed successor to King Frederick VII. The London Protocol thus created a precedent for the Russian Tsar to claim the Danish Crown in the event of the Glücksburg dynasty dying out. — 456

Page Break me39.652
Page me39.652
†543 The Quadruple Alliance was concluded in April 1834 between Britain, France, Spain and Portugal. Even at the time the treaty was concluded, conflicts of interests appeared between Britain and France which later aggravated relations between the two countries. This treaty was formally directed against the absolutist 'Northern Powers' (Russia, Prussia and Austria), but in actual fact allowed Britain to strengthen her position in Spain and Portugal under the pretext of rendering military assistance to both governments in their struggle against the pretenders to the throne, Don Carlos in Spain and Dom Miguel in Portugal. — 456
Page me39.652
†544 A reference to the London conventions of 1840 and 1841 (see Note 458). — 457
Page me39.652
†545 Giovane Italia (Young Italy) — a secret organisation of Italian bourgeois revolutionaries founded by Mazzini. It existed in 1831-34 and 1839-48, its aim being struggle for the independence and unity of Italy. — 458
Page me39.652
†546 Engels apparently refers to Napier's report published in The Times, No. 21758, 3 June 1854. It described the action between an English frigate and steamer and three Russian merchant ships near the fortress of Gustavsvaern on 23 May. Two Russian ships were sunk, the third captured. The report called this 'a very gallant feat of arms'. — 460
Page me39.652
†547 In June 1854 Engels simultaneously made notes from A. Görgei, Mein Leben und Wirken in Ungarn in den Jahren 1848 und 1849 (Bd. I-II, Leipzig, 1852) and from F. Hellwald von Heller, Der Winter-Feldzug 1848-1849 in Ungarn (Wien, 1851) written on Windischgrätz's instructions. — 460
Page me39.652
†548 Engels refers to military reports of the Austrian Command published in the official Wiener Zeitung and also in Der Lloyd, Österreichischer Correspondent, Die

Presse and other Austrian newspapers, mostly over Windischgrätz's signature. Engels used them as his main source when writing articles for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on the course of the 1848-49 revolutionary war in Hungary against the Austrian monarchy (see present edition, vols. 8 and 9). — 460
Page me39.652
†549 The reference is to the demands presented to Chancellor Nesselrode by Austria and Prussia after the signing of the treaty on 20 April 1854 (see present edition, Vol. 13, p. 168) on the immediate evacuation of the Danubian Principalities and other territories occupied by the Russians. — 461
Page me39.652
†550 Marx mentions Colonel Grach here because Engels named him in the article 'The Siege of Silistria' (see present edition, Vol. 13, pp. 240-42). — 461
Page me39.652
†551 An allusion by Ruge to Marx, Engels and their associates in the Communist League. — 462
Page me39.652
†552 Engels' accompanying letter has not been found. — 464
Page me39.652
†553 On Friday, 23 June 1854, the article written by Marx jointly with Engels was sent to New York. The New-York Daily Tribune published part of it on 10 July as a leader, 'The Russian Retreat'; the other part, containing details about military operations at Silistria, was added by the editors to Marx's article dispatched earlier (on 16 June) and published on 8 July 1854 also as a leader, 'State of the Russian War' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 464
Page me39.652
†554 Marx apparently has in mind English Press reports on the move of the Circassian troops to Tiflis (Tbilisi), which began in May, and news about the activity of the Anglo-French mission under Rear Admiral Edmund Lyons. According to The Times, the aim of the latter was to establish contact with the Circassian leaders (primarily with Shamyl) for a joint attack on the Russian towns of Sandjak and Anapa. This aim was attained.

Page Break me39.653
Page me39.653
For an appraisal of these events see Engels' 'The War' and Marx's and Engels' 'The Russian Retreat' (present edition, Vol. 13). — 464
Page me39.653
†555 This letter has not been found. — 466
Page me39.653
†556 Sentenced to six-year imprisonment at the Cologne Communist Trial, Bürgers and Becker served their terms in Glatz and Weichselmünde. — 468
Page me39.653
†557 Marx refers to the fourth bourgeois revolution in Spain (1854-56) which began with a pronunciamento in Madrid on 28 June 1854. Marx analysed the revolutionary events in Spain in several articles written in 1854 (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 469
Page me39.653

†558 Engels complied with Marx's request and sent (by Tuesday, 1 August) material for their joint article 'That Bore of a War' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 472
Page me39.653
†559 At the evening sitting of the House of Commons on 24 July 1854 the leader of the House, John Russell, announced that Sevastopol had been destroyed and captured by the Anglo-French squadron. However, replying to a question by Disraeli, leader of the Tory opposition, he was compelled to take his words back. The false claim of the capture of Sevastopol by the Allies was deleted from the text of Russell's speech published in The Times.
Page me39.653
At the sitting of 25 July 1854 Sidney Herbert, Secretary at War, gave reasons for the unsatisfactory food supply of the British expeditionary army and fleet and did his best to justify the Cabinet and War Administration. The speeches of Russell, Disraeli and Herbert were published in The Times, Nos. 21802 and 21803, 25 and 26 July 1854. Marx attended the debates on the war in the House of Commons on 24 and 25 July and described them in detail in 'The War Debates in Parliament' and 'The Policy of Austria. — The War Debates in the House of Commons' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 472
Page me39.653
†560 The summary of Thierry's book written by Marx in French at that time is extant. — 473
Page me39.653
†561 The Federal Diet — the central organ of the German Confederation formed in 1815. It met in Frankfurt am Main and consisted of representatives of the German states. The Federal Diet was a vehicle of the German governments' reactionary policy. It ceased to exist during the 1848-49 revolution, was restored in 1851, and existed till 1866. — 475
Page me39.653
†562 This is presumably an allusion to the Mainz Central Investigation Commission instituted by decision of the Conference of German states in Karlsbad in 1819 for an investigation into the 'tricks of the demagogues' (see notes 139 and 307), i.e. for the struggle against the opposition movement in the German states. — 475
Page me39.653
†563 The Guelphs — a political party in Italy formed in the twelfth century, during the period of strife between the popes and the German emperors. Consisting mainly of the upper strata of merchants and artisans in the Italian towns who supported the popes, it bitterly opposed the party of the Ghibellines, who supported the emperors. The two parties existed till the fifteenth century. — 476
Page me39.653
†564 See notes 380 and 139, 307. — 478

Page Break me39.654
Page me39.654
†565 The reference is to Marx's part of the article sent to the New-York Daily Tribune on 29 August 1854. The article was tampered with by the editors, who published the part concerning Bomarsund (written by Engels) as a leader in issue No. 4182 for 13 September 1854. A few sentences from Marx's text were included in the news review in the same number. News about Kars, mentioned by Marx here, was included as a separate paragraph in Pulszky's article also published in that number (see present edition, Vol. 13, Note 293). — 480

Page me39.654
†566 In connection with the bourgeois revolution which started in Spain in 1854 (see Note 557), Marx made a thorough study of the history of the nineteenth-century Spanish revolutions. The result was a series of articles, Revolutionary Spain, written between August and November 1854 (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 480
Page me39.654
†567 Marx apparently has in mind the meeting of his mother, Henriette Marx, and his wife, Jenny, in Trier in July-August 1854. — 481
Page me39.654
†568 In the original Lebensmittel, a term used by Marx and Engels as an economic category in a number of works, including The Condition of the Working-Class in England, Manifesto of the Communist Party and Capital. — 481
Page me39.654
†569 Zouaves — French colonial light infantry.
Page me39.654
Les singes (the apes) — a derogatory nickname for the generals who supported Napoleon III.
Page me39.654
On anti-Bonapartist sentiments in the French army, the disturbances among the Zouaves in the French force at Varna in the summer of 1854, see Engels, 'The Attack on Sevastopol' (present edition, Vol. 13, p. 473). — 482
Page me39.654
†570 Engels' article on the military operations in the Caucasian theatre of war sent in by Tuesday, 19 September 1854 (witness entry in Marx's notebook: 'Dienstag. 19 September') was lost, having been dispatched by the Arctic which sank in the Atlantic on 27 September 1854. — 483
Page me39.654
†571 For Tuesday, 26 September 1854, Engels wrote 'The Attack on Sevastopol' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 483
Page me39.654
†572 Marx's letter to Dana has not been found. — 484
Page me39.654
†573 The siege of Sevastopol by the Anglo-French-Turkish forces lasted from 13 (25) September 1854 to 27 August (8 September) 1855. — 484
Page me39.654
†574 Marx refers to an article in the series Revolutionary Spain which was sent to America on 30 September 1854. The Tribune editors published it as two articles in Nos. 4220 and 4222 on 27 and 30 October 1854 as articles IV and V in Marx's series. — 484

Page me39.654
†575 Engels' letter of 25 (Monday) or 26 (Tuesday) September 1854, mentioned by Marx, has not been found. — 484
Page me39.654

†576 Marx wrote about Saint-Arnaud in three articles sent to New York on 6, 9 and 16 June 1854 as emerges from entries in Marx's notebook. The first article has not been found in the issues of the New-York Daily Tribune, New-York Weekly Tribune and New-York Semi-Weekly Tribune available to the editors of the present edition. The material relating to Saint Arnaud in the article of 16 June, 'State of the Russian War', was omitted by the Tribune editors, and hence only part of the biographical essay on Saint-Arnaud is extant in the article 'Reorganisation of the British War Administration. — The Austrian Summons. — Britain's Economic Situation. — St. Arnaud' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 484

Page Break me39.655
Page me39.655
†577 The Tribune editors added the following sentence at the end of Marx's article 'Espartero': 'Our readers can judge whether the Spanish Revolution is likely to have any useful result or not.' — 485
Page me39.655
†578 The Tribune editors added the following sentence to Article I of Marx's Revolutionary Spain (published on 9 September 1854): 'Let us hope that the additions now being made to their annals by the Spanish people may prove neither unworthy nor fruitless of good to themselves and to the world.' — 485
Page me39.655
†579 By 'Baron Nicholson's court' Marx means a club — the Judge and Jury Society — formed by Renton Nicholson in London in 1841. Its visitors staged parody trials presided over by Nicholson himself, who was called Lord Chief Baron. — 486
Page me39.655
†580 This article was probably not written because the entry concerning its dispatch is crossed out in Marx's notebook. — 486
Page me39.655
†581 A reference to the Seven Years' War (1756-63) in which almost all European countries took part. — 488
Page me39.655
†582 In 1763, the English journalist John Wilkes criticised King George III's Speech from the Throne in his newspaper The North Briton. He was expelled from the House of Commons and outlawed. After his forced flight to France, Wilkes returned to England in 1768, was elected to Parliament four times but each time his election was declared invalid. He was not admitted to Parliament until his fifth election.
Page me39.655
In connection with 'Wilkes' case' letters published in the London newspaper The Public Advertiser from 1768 to 1772 and signed Junius became very popular. The author campaigned for Wilkes' rehabilitation and for democratisation of the political system in Britain. In 1772 Junius' letters were published as a book. It was established later that they had been written by the journalist Philip Francis. — 489
Page me39.655
†583 In February 1792 the coalition of European feudal and absolutist states launched a war against revolutionary France. Britain supported this coalition and after France had been proclaimed a republic on 10 August 1792 and King Louis XVI executed in January 1793, it openly entered the war on the side of the coalition in early 1793. — 489

Page me39.655
†584 The suggestion that Robert Adair, British diplomat and Fox's confidential agent, was sent to St. Petersburg with the aim of upsetting William Pitt's plans was made by G. Tomline in Memoirs of the Life of the Right Honorable William Pitt, in 3 Volumes, London, 1821. — 489
Page me39.655
†585 In 1756, at the beginning of the Seven Years' War, Admiral Byng was ordered to lead a squadron to the Mediterranean. The squadron was defeated at the battle of the Minorca on 20 May 1756. The government placed the entire responsibility for this on the admiral, who was brought to England under arrest, sentenced to death and shot in March 1757. — 490
Page me39.655
†586 The reference is to a short period (November-December 1808) during the Peninsular War (see Note 462) when the French forces were led by Napoleon himself. — 490
Page me39.655
†587 In 1833-40 Spain was the scene of the so-called first Carlist war between the reactionary feudal and Catholic forces headed by the pretender to the Spanish throne Don Carlos (brother of Ferdinand VII) and bourgeois-liberal forces

Page Break me39.656
supporting the government of Regent Maria-Cristina. The Carlists were defeated. — 490
Page me39.656
†588 This letter was published in English for the first time abridged in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Literature and Art. Selections from Their Writings, N.Y., 1947, p. 134. — 492
Page me39.656
†589 The Congress of Verona of the Holy Alliance (see Note 353) was held from October to December 1822. It decided in favour of French armed intervention against revolutionary Spain and continuance of Austria's occupation of the Kingdoms of Naples and Sardinia, and condemned the national liberation uprisings of the Greek people against the Turkish yoke. — 492
Page me39.656
†590 The Order of St. Andrew, the highest order in the Russian Empire, was introduced by Peter the Great in 1698. — 492
Page me39.656
†591 The Laibach Congress (January-March 1821) of the Holy Alliance openly proclaimed the principle of interference by the countries of the Alliance in the internal affairs of other states in support of feudal and monarchist regimes. — 493
Page me39.656
†592 The Bidassoa — a river in the Western Pyrenees on the border between France and Spain. The allusion is to the Peace of the Pyrenees concluded by France and Spain on Faisans Island on the Bidassoa on 7 November 1659 which helped France seize supremacy in Western Europe from Spain. — 494

Page me39.656
†593 A system of treaties concluded at the Congress of Vienna (1814-15) as a result of the defeat of Napoleonic France. — 495
Page me39.656
†594 A reference to the diplomatic manoeuvres of the European powers in connection with the national liberation movement of the Greek people against the Turkish yoke (1821-29). — 496
Page me39.656
†595 This is presumably an allusion to Chateaubriand's pamphlet De Buonaparte, des Bourbons, et de la nécessité de se rallier á nos princes légitimes pour le bonheur de la France et celui de l'Europe published in 1814.
Page me39.656
The Spanish branch of the Bourbon dynasty succeeded to the Spanish throne in accordance with the will of the childless Habsburg, King Charles II, in favour of the Duke of Anjou, grandson of Louis XIV and great-great-grandson of Henry IV, who became King Philip V of Spain in 1700. — 497
Page me39.656
†596 Marx alludes ironically to Chateaubriand's journey to Jerusalem, after which he published his three-volume Itinéraire de Paris á Jérusalem in 1811. — 497
Page me39.656
†597 In a letter of 1 November 1854 Charles Dana proposed that Marx should use for his military articles The War with Mexico by R.S. Ripley, a book on the operations of the American army in the war against Mexico in 1846-48. Dana wrote: 'This will gratify the national amour propre of our readers, and convince them still more thoroughly that your articles are written in all probability by Gen. Scott' (see also this volume, p. 407). — 498
Page me39.656
†598 On Tuesday, 21 November, Marx sent an article to New York in the series Revolutionary Spain, as indicated in his notebook: 'Dienstag. 21, November. Spain. Intervention.' The article was not published in the New-York Daily Tribune and the manuscript has not been found. — 498
Page me39.656
†599 See Note 234. An extract from this letter was published in English also in Marx and Engels, On the United States, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1979. — 501

Page Break me39.657
Page me39.657
†600 Engels' letter has not been found. — 501, 510
Page me39.657
†601 Marx's letter to Freund has not been found. — 502
Page me39.657
†602 Neither Marx's letter to Lassalle nor Lassalle's reply has been found. — 502
Page me39.657
†603 Marx contributed to the Neue Oder-Zeitung during 1855, writing his first article for it on 29 December 1854. Marx's articles were published unsigned, but marked 'x'. As there was practically no workers' press during the years of reaction, Marx's contributing to the Neue Oder-Zeitung made it possible to maintain contact with Germany and keep

German readers informed on the vital problems of international and domestic politics, the working-class and democratic movement, and economic development in the capitalist countries, primarily Britain and France. Marx regularly sent articles on the operations in the Crimean War, and made frequent use of entire reports by Engels for the New-York Daily Tribune, translating them into German; he also sent the Neue Oder-Zeitung abridged versions of Engels' articles, with occasional changes and additions. Articles from the Neue Oder-Zeitung are published in vols. 13 and 14 of the present edition. — 502

Page me39.657

†604 The reference is to the Welcome and Protest Committee formed by the Chartists, headed by Jones, for Barbés' expected arrival in Britain after he was amnestied, and against Napoleon III's intended visit. Barbés was released from prison on Napoleon III's order of 3 October 1854 in acknowledgment of the chauvinist stand he took when the Crimean War broke out. Marx and Engels censured Barbés' behaviour in the article 'The Sevastopol Hoax. — General News' written on 5-6 October 1854: 'From this moment Barbés has ceased to be one of the revolutionary chiefs of France' (see present edition, Vol. 13, p. 491). On 18 October 1854 the emigrant L'Homme. Journal de la démocratie universelle, published in London, carried Barbés' letter of 11 October in which he confirmed his attitude to the war but at the same time declared his hostility to the Bonapartist regime. This statement, however, did not save his political reputation and shortly afterwards he gave up politics. — 502

Page me39.657

†605 At one of the meetings held by the Welcome and Protest Committee in London on 26 and 28 November 1854 Jones said among other things that 'the democracy of Britain did not own the word foreigner — it looked on the exiles not as Frenchmen, or Italians, but as men, as brothers... At the same time, it desired to give the forthcoming demonstration a truly national and English character. If exiles were on the committee, it might be said exiles have got up the affair, and that it was not a genuine manifestation of British feeling. Therefore the committee would number only British names though it hoped to gather round itself hearts from every land' (The People's Paper, No. 135, 2 December 1854). — 503

Page me39.657

†606 Marx has in mind the national liberation war in Spain against the Napoleonic rule (1808-14). — 504

Page me39.657

†607 The reference is to the last, the third unpublished article of Marx's series Revolutionary Spain, sent to New York on 8 December 1854. The manuscript has not been found. — 504

Page me39.657

†608 Marx carried out his plans in the article 'Progress of the War' which he wrote jointly with Engels on 14-15 December 1854. — 505

Page me39.657

†609 Engels planned to write a critique of pan-Slavist ideas. Ever since his removal to Manchester in 1850 Engels had been studying the language, literature and history of the Slav peoples. As can be judged from Marx' letters to Engels of 16 May and 26 June 1855, Marx negotiated the publication of Engels' pamphlet in Germany (see this volume, pp. 535 and 539). But these plans of Marx and Engels remained unfulfilled.

Page Break me39.658

Page me39.658
In April 1855 at Marx's request Engels wrote two articles on this subject under the title 'Germany and Pan-Slavism' (see present edition, Vol. 14, pp. 156-62). They were published in the Neue Oder-Zeitung and under changed titles in the New-York Daily Tribune (see Note 649). — 505, 534, 535, 539
Page me39.658
†610 Engels spent Christmas in London. Engels' letter written on about 15 December 1854 has not been found. — 505
Page me39.658
†611 Marx refers to the trial of the French Blanquist worker Emmanuel Barthélemy, accused of murdering two Englishmen. The English Press made a great fuss over the trial, which did not succeed in clearing up the motives behind the murder. Barthélemy was sentenced to death and executed on 22 January 1855. — 505
Page me39.658
†612 In compliance with this plan Marx wrote two articles, on 29 December 1854 and 1 January 1855, which were published in the Neue Oder-Zeitung on 2 and 4 January 1855 under the general title 'Rückblicke' ('In Retrospect'). This marked the beginning of Marx's collaboration with this newspaper (see Note 603). — 507
Page me39.658
†613 The formation of a Foreign Legion for the purpose of reinforcing the British in the Crimea was envisaged by the Enlistment of Foreigners Bill passed in Parliament on 22 December 1854. The Legion was not formed however owing to protests against the use of foreign mercenaries. — 508, 520
Page me39.658
†614 This letter was published in English for the first time abridged in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Literature and Art. Selections from Their Writings, N.Y., 1947, p. 106. — 508
Page me39.658
†615 Marx and Heine met and became friends in Paris at the end of December 1843. Marx supported Heine in his disputes with the radical petty-bourgeois opposition who attacked Heine for his criticism of Ludwig Börne, one of their prominent representatives. — 509
Page me39.658
†616 In reply to attacks in the Allgemeine Zeitung in April 1848 Heine stated in the supplement to No. 144 of the same paper, on 23 May 1848, that he was compelled to accept the pension his French friends (the historian Mignet, in particular) succeeded in obtaining for him as he was in great straits owing to the prohibition of his books in Germany. — 510
Page me39.658
†617 In a letter of 7 January 1855 Lassalle asked Marx to list the works containing official statistical data on the changes in England's economic position after the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846 (see Note 72). — 511
Page me39.658

†618 Marx has in mind his economic notes made from September 1850 to August 1853, when he resumed his economic research (see Note 45). — 511, 522
Page me39.658
†619 In January 1854 Marx wrote the following articles for the Neue Oder-Zeitung: 'The Opening of Parliament' (on the 24th), 'Comments on the Cabinet Crisis' (on the 26th) and 'Parliamentary News' (on the 27th). At Marx's request Engels wrote for the New-York Daily Tribune the article 'The European War' (about 29 January) (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 514

Page Break me39.659
Page me39.659
†620 The reference is to the Aberdeen Coalition Government (see Note 343) which was defeated in the House of Commons on 29 January. On the basis of the material mentioned here and sent by Marx to Engels with his next letter of 31 January 1855, Engels wrote the article 'The Late British Government' for the New-York Daily Tribune on 1 February 1855. The same subject was used by Marx in the articles 'The Defeated Government' and 'Two Crises' for the Neue Oder-Zeitung in early February 1855 (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 515
Page me39.659
†621 In April 1853 and from March to May 1854 Marx devoted several articles to Gladstone's financial policy. They were published in the New-York Daily Tribune, the Neue Oder-Zeitung and The People's Paper. The most detailed analysis of Gladstone's budget is given in 'The New Financial Juggle; or Gladstone and the Pennies', 'Achievements of the Ministry', 'L.S.D., or Class Budgets, and Who's Relieved by Them', 'Riot at Constantinople. — German Table Moving. — The Budget' (see present edition, Vol. 12), 'British Finances. — The Troubles at Preston', 'British Finances' and others (Vol. 13). It has not been established which articles Marx sent to Engels. — 515
Page me39.659
†622 The Irish Brigade — the Irish faction in the British Parliament from the 1830s to the 1850s. With the equilibrium existing between the Tories and the Whigs, the Irish Brigade, alongside the Manchester men (see Note 63), could influence the alignment of forces in Parliament and sometimes decide the fate of the government. — 516
Page me39.659
†623 The reference is to the Franchise Bill. As early as February 1852 Russell made a preliminary statement of his intention to introduce it (see his speech in the House of Commons on 9 February 1852, The Times, No. 21034, 10 February 1852); however, it was never debated in Parliament. — 516
Page me39.659
†624 Marx refers to the 'Removal of Some Disabilities of Her Majesty's Jewish Subjects' Bill, introduced by Russell in the House of Commons on 24 February and aimed at admitting Jews to the House. Russell's Bill passed the House of Commons but was rejected by the House of Lords. Marx assessed it in the article 'Parliamentary Debates. — The Clergy Against Socialism. — Starvation' (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 516
Page me39.659

†625 At the sitting of the House of Commons on 31 May 1853 Russell stated that the British Parliament should not sanction a state subsidy to the Catholic Church in Ireland because the Catholic clergy were not sufficiently committed to the English Crown and the Constitution. Russell's speech was published in The Times, No. 21443, 1 June 1853. — 516

Page me39.659

†626 These Bills were introduced in Parliament in November 1852. Marx analysed and assessed them in the articles 'The Indian Question. — Irish Tenant Right' (see present edition, Vol. 12) and 'From the Houses of Parliament. — Bulwers' Motion. — The Irish Question' (Vol. 14). — 517

Page me39.659

†627 The Transportation Bill, which abolished deportation of criminals to penal colonies, was passed on 12 August 1853. After preliminary detention the transportees were given release certificates granting them the right to reside in Britain under police surveillance, employed as cheap labour for public works. Marx assessed this Bill in 'The War Question. — British Population and Trade Returns. — Doings of Parliament' (see present edition, Vol. 12). — 518

Page me39.659

†628 Marx refers to the proposals on the public debt moved by Gladstone in the House of Commons on 8 April 1853. For details see Marx's articles 'The New Financial Juggle; or Gladstone and the Pennies', 'Achievements of the Ministry',

Page Break me39.660

'Affairs in Holland. — Denmark. — Conversion of the British Debt. — India, Turkey and Russia', 'The Russian Humbug. — Gladstone's Failure. — Sir Charles Wood's East Indian Reforms' (present edition, Vol. 12).

Page me39.660

At the sitting of the House of Commons on 28 July 1853 Gladstone moved a resolution on measures for creating a public consolidated fund to pay for shares of the South Sea Company, which in fact meant the failure of the plan for conversion of the public debt (see K. Marx, 'Financial Failure of Government. — Cabs. — Ireland. — The Russian Question', present edition, Vol. 12). — 518

Page me39.660

†629 Here Marx gives the date of the reception in Constantinople of the news of the battle of Sinope on 30 (18) November 1853 (see Note 467). — 518

Page me39.660

†630 On the Note of the four powers see Note 467; on the Vienna Note see Note 476. — 518

Page me39.660

†631 The reference is to the article 'On the History of the Eastern Question' published in the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 336, 18 February (2 March) 1854 in connection with John Russell's speech in the House of Commons on 17 February 1854. The article alluded to the collusion of the Russian and British governments in the Turkish question supporting its statement by reference to Seymour's secret correspondence in 1853 and the memorandum of 1844. Marx analysed the position adopted by the two powers in the articles 'The Documents on the Partition of Turkey' and 'The Secret Diplomatic Correspondence' (see present edition, Vol. 13). — 519

Page me39.660
†632 Under a law in force in England since 1662 paupers who changed their place of residence or applied to a parish for alms could be returned to their former place of residence by court decision. On 10 February 1854 a Settlement and Removal Bill was introduced in the House of Commons envisaging prohibition of forced settlement of paupers in England and Wales. The Bill was rejected by Parliament. — 520
Page me39.660
†633 Under a law in force in England since the early eighteenth century newly elected MPs were to take an 'oath of abdication' denying the right of any heirs of James II to the throne; the oath contained expressions of loyalty to Christianity. Refusal to take the oath deprived an MP of the right of active participation in the work of Parliament. — 520
Page me39.660
†634 Engels' article 'The Late British Government' (see present edition, Vol. 13 and also Note 620). — 520
Page me39.660
†635 The reference is to Ferdinand Lassalle's letter to Marx of 27 January containing cuttings from the January issues of the Düsseldorfer Zeitung and the Kölnische Zeitung, and Roland Daniels' letter of 16 January 1855. — 521
Page me39.660
†636 Marx writes about the traditional banquets of petty-bourgeois emigrants held to mark the anniversary of the February 1848 revolution in France. — 521
Page me39.660
†637 A reference to the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 24). — 521
Page me39.660
†638 A reference to the International Committee set up by representatives of the London Chartist Organising Committee (as the Welcome and Protest Committee was called since February 1855; see Note 604) and also French, German, Polish, Hungarian, Italian and other petty-bourgeois refugees. Jones was its President. At the end of 1855 the International Committee became an independent organisation; renamed the International Association in 1856, it operated until 1859. — 521

Page Break me39.661
Page me39.661
†639 Judging by extant documents, Herzen did not attend the meeting, but received a written invitation to become a member of the International Committee (see Note 638). — 521
Page me39.661
†640 An allusion to Herzen's view of 'old Europe' and 'young Russia' expounded most clearly in Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie, par A. Iscander, Paris, 1851; La Russie et la vieux Monde. Lettres á W. Linton. Esq., par A. Herzen; Le peuple russe et le socialisme. Lettre á Monsieur J. Michelet, professeur au Collége de France, par

A. Herzen. Seconde édition, 1855, and other works. These publications were used by Marx and Engels. — 523
Page me39.661
†641 This may be a reference to Herzen's reply to Ivan Golovin's slanderous article (see this volume, pp. 523-24): 'Reply to Mr. Golovin. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', published in The Morning Advertiser on 15 February 1855. — 525
Page me39.661
†642 Marx refers to the anonymous pamphlet De la conduite de la guerre d'Orient. Expédition de Crimée. Mémoire adressé au gouvernement de S.M. l'Empereur Napoléon III par un officier général, Bruxelles, 1855. Its authorship was ascribed to several persons, Prince Napoleon (Joseph Charles Paul Bonaparte) among them. Marx assessed it in the articles 'On the History of the French Alliance' and 'The Brussels Mémoire' and Engels in 'Fate of the Great Adventurer' (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 526
Page me39.661
†643 In January and February 1855 Marx read B.G. Niebuhr's The History of Rome, a new edition in three volumes, London, 1847-51, and simultaneously made a summary of it entitled 'Römische Geschichte'. — 527
Page me39.661
†644 Badinguet — a nickname given to Napoleon III because in 1846 he escaped from prison in the clothes of the mason Badinguet. In April 1855 Napoleon III made an official visit to England. — 534
Page me39.661
†645 Marx and his wife returned to London from Manchester about 6 May 1855. — 535
Page me39.661
†646 In 1854, in connection with the Crimean War and the exacerbation of the Eastern Question, Bruno Bauer published several pamphlets, among them De la dictature occidentale, Die jetzige Stellung Rußlands and Rußland und das Germanenthum. It has not been established which of these is referred to here. — 535
Page me39.661
†647 Marx may have had in mind his letter to Elsner of 17 April 1855, but he could have written to him after his return from Manchester, i.e. after 6 May 1855. — 535
Page me39.661
†648 Marx has in mind the supporters of the Administrative Reform Association set up in May 1855 on the initiative of liberal circles in the City. Taking advantage of the alarm in the country caused by the plight of the British army in the Crimea, the Association hoped by means of mass rallies and with the Chartists' support to bring pressure to bear on Parliament and win broader access to government posts for members of the commercial and finance bourgeoisie. The Association failed in its strivings and soon ceased to exist. Marx repeatedly wrote about the Association's activity and its relations with the Chartists; see for instance his article 'The Agitation Outside Parliament' (present edition, Vol. 14). — 536

Page Break me39.662
Page me39.662

†649 Marx considered it essential to publish a critique of pan-Slavist theories in the New-York Daily Tribune in order to counteract the influence exerted on American public by the articles and pamphlets of a pan-Slavist contributor to the newspaper, A. Gurowski. The New-York Daily Tribune published after heavy editing Engels' two articles on pan-Slavism (see Note 609) under the titles 'The European Struggle' and 'Austria's Weakness' on 5 and 7 May 1855 respectively (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 536
Page me39.662
†650 Dana's letter to Marx of 1 June 1855. — 537
Page me39.662
†651 Engels wrote the survey 'The Armies of Europe' (see present edition, Vol. 14) from June to September 1855. He was helped in this work by Marx, who collected material for him on various European armies, the Spanish and the Neapolitan in particular, at the British Museum library. The survey was published unsigned in Putnam's Monthly in August, September and December. — 537, 540
Page me39.662
†652 On 29 June Engels wrote 'From Sevastopol' (see present edition, Vol. 14) about the Allies' unsuccessful storm of Sevastopol on 18(6) June 1855 — the fortieth anniversary of Waterloo. The main French attack was directed against Malakhov Hill and the English against the Redan (Third Bastion). — 538
Page me39.662
†653 In a letter of 13 August 1855 which has not survived, Engels asked Weerth, then in Hamburg, to negotiate with Duncker about his, Engels', pamphlet on pan-Slavism (see Note 609). As emerges from Weerth's reply to Engels of 24 August, his negotiations with Duncker failed. — 539
Page me39.662
†654 A mass demonstration organised by the Chartists was held in Hyde Park on 24 June 1855, in protest against a series of anti-popular measures adopted by Parliament (in particular, the prohibition of Sunday trading). Marx took part in this demonstration with other German revolutionary democrats and described it in 'Anti-Church Movement. — Demonstration in Hyde Park' (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 539
Page me39.662
†655 Marx has in mind the police reprisals against the participants in the second mass demonstration held, despite the police prohibition, in Hyde Park on Sunday, 1 July 1855, in protest against Sunday Trading Bill (on the first demonstration see Note 654). Marx describes the events in which he took part in 'Agitation over the Tightening-up of Sunday Observance' (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 541
Page me39.662
†656 A law prohibiting the sale of spirits had been in force in the State of Maine since 1851.
Page me39.662
Know-nothings — a secret political organisation formed in the USA in 1854 against emigrants; the members of this organisation swore to answer 'I know nothing' to all questions about its activity and aims. — 542
Page me39.662

†657 A reference to Szeredy's letter to Marx of 15 July 1855 containing a request for assistance in publishing and distributing his novel Asiatic Chiefs in Britain and the USA. — 543
Page me39.662
†658 Marx made this request because he intended to write the pamphlet Lord John Russell (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 543
Page me39.662
†659 Marx's pamphlet Lord John Russell was published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 28 August 1855 condensed into a single article. The pamphlet was published in full in German in the Neue Oder-Zeitung as a series of six articles which appeared from 28 July to 15 August 1855 (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 545

Page Break me39.663
Page me39.663
†660 On the first Mémoire see Note 642; the second Mémoire — Deuziéme mémoire adressé au gouvernement de S.M. l'Empereur Napoléon III sur l'expédition de Crimée et la conduite de la guerre d'Orient, par un officier général, Genéve, mai 1855 — was ascribed to the French journalist Tavernier and the Belgian officer, adjutant of the War Minister, T.F. Sterckx. Like the first Mémoire it was aimed at justifying the actions of the French Command in the Crimean campaign. — 545
Page me39.663
†661 Marx's letter to Dana has not been found. — 546
Page me39.663
†662 On 15 June 1855 Charles Napier published in The Morning Advertiser his letters criticising the administrative system in the British Navy, the lack of talent among commanders, and in particular the criminal irresponsibility of James Graham, First Lord of the Admiralty, which came to light during the military operations of the Anglo-French fleet in the Baltic Sea in 1854 and 1855. The Times published Napier's article on 24 August 1855. Marx wrote about Napier's letters and his correspondence with Graham in the articles 'Napier's Letters. — Roebuck's Committee', 'Napier's Letter' and 'Another British Revelation' (see present edition, Vol. 14). — 546
Page me39.663
†663 The information Marx had access to was presumably unreliable. It has not been established what newspaper he meant. Herzen met Engländer in 1849, but he already knew at that time that he was an agent of the French and Austrian police and would have nothing to do with him. — 548, 553
Page me39.663
†664 Here Marx compares his enforced departure for Manchester (see Marx to Moritz Elsner, 11 September 1855, this volume, pp. 550-53) with the evacuation of the Southern Side of Sevastopol by the Russian troops on 28-29 August (8-9 September) 1855. — 550

Page me39.663
†665 This is Marx's reply to Elsner, who wrote in his letter of 4 September 1855 about the financial straits of the Neue Oder-Zeitung to which Marx contributed during that year (see notes 603 and 612). — 550

Page me39.663
†666 Elsner's letters of 3 and 7 October 1855 to Marx. — 554
Page me39.663
†667 The reference is to two Prussian Constitutions. The first was imposed by King Frederick William IV simultaneously with the dissolution of the Prussian National Assembly on 5 December 1848. It introduced a two-chamber system. The King retained the right not only to rescind the Chambers' decisions but also to revise certain articles of the Constitution. The further strengthening of the reaction led in April 1849 to the dissolution of the Second Chamber elected on the basis of the 1848 Constitution, to the replacement of universal suffrage with a three-class electoral system based on a high property qualification and to the introduction of a new, still more reactionary Constitution which came into force on 31 January 1850. — 554
Page me39.663
†668 On 10 October 1855 L'Homme, the French refugee newspaper printed in Jersey, carried an open letter by a leader of petty-bourgeois democratic emigrants, Felix Pyat, to Queen Victoria in connection with her visit to France in August of that year. Anti-Bonapartist in content, this letter was provocative and adventuristic like all Pyat's utterances. It caused a polemic in the English and emigrant press, and serious fears that the so-called Aliens Bill might again come into force (see Note 75). To curry favour with Napoleon III the

Page Break me39.664
Governor of Jersey expelled several French refugees from the island, Victor Hugo among them. — 555, 557
Page me39.664
†669 Lassalle's letters to Marx of 24 September and October (exact date not established) 1855. — 556
Page me39.664
†670 Marx lived in Paris from the end of October 1843 to 3 February 1845 when, on the demand of the Prussian Government, he was expelled from France and compelled to move to Brussels. — 556
Page me39.664
†671 An allusion to Georg Weerth's former activity as a journalist. During the 1848-49 revolution he wrote essays and feuilletons (in verse and prose) for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — 556
Page me39.664
†672 Marx's letter to Jones has not been found. — 557
Page me39.664
†673 The reference is to a book by Herzen which came out in London in early October 1855. It included the second and fourth parts of My Past and Thoughts and was entitled My Exile in Siberia (two volumes, London, 1855). The title was supplied by the publishers, Hurst and Blackett, and on about 17 October Herzen lodged a protest with them against the arbitrary change of the title. Reviews published in The Leader, (No. 290, 13 October), Critic, London Literary Journal (No. 25537, 15 October), Atlas (20 October), Athenaeum (No. 1460, 20 October), The Economist (10 November) and other papers highly appraised Herzen's book. — 558

Page me39.664
†674 Engels' two articles for the New-York Daily Tribune were sent to the USA by the steamer Asia, which sailed from Liverpool and reached Halifax on 19 December. The newspaper published the first article as a leader entitled 'The State of the War' on 21 December 1855 and the second also as a leader, 'The War in Asia', on 26 December 1855. Engels' authorship of these articles was established during the preparation of this volume. — 559
Page me39.664
†675 In his letter of 20 November 1855 Dana informed Marx that the Tribune editors had agreed to publish two articles by Marx every week and to pay him 10 dollars for each. — 559, 560
Page me39.664
†676 Judging by Dana's letter (see Note 675) Marx proposed to organise the dispatch of articles to the New-York Daily Tribune directly from the Crimea probably expecting that the German emigrant O. Mirbach, a former Prussian artillery officer who intended to leave for Constantinople, would be the correspondent. — 560
Page me39.664
†677 The article written by Engels on 12 December 1855 and edited by Marx was sent to the USA by the steamer Pacific on 16 December and published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 29 December 1855 under the title 'The Asiatic Campaign'. Marx's and Engels' authorship of this article was established during the preparation of this volume. — 561
Page me39.664
†678 A nickname given to Bruno Bauer by Marx and Engels in the first half of the 1840s. The Young Hegelians called their own trend 'critical criticism'. See Marx and Engels, The Holy Family, or Critique of Critical Criticism (present edition, Vol. 4). — 562
Page me39.664
†679 Engels stayed in London from about 24 December 1855 to early January 1856. — 563

Page Break me39.665
Page me39.665
†680 The first volume of K.F. Köppen's book appeared in Berlin in 1857 entitled Die Religion des Buddha und ihre Entstehung, and the second volume in 1859 entitled Die Lamaische Hierarchie und Kirche. — 563
Page me39.665
†681 Possible alterations in Engels' article of 12 December 1855 (see Note 677). — 563
Page me39.665
†682 Marx sought to get his associates, former editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, including Weerth, to contribute to Weydemeyer's Die Revolution (see Note 2). — 567
Page me39.665
†683 Joseph Weydemeyer left Europe on 1 October 1851. Owing to autumn storms the voyage lasted 38 days and the ship did not reach New York till 7 November 1851. — 570
Page me39.665

†684 This letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 572
Page me39.665
†685 The reference is to a journal which Becker, Weydemeyer and Bürgers planned to start in the spring of 1851; their plan did not materialise. — 575
Page me39.665
†686 At the sitting of the Cologne jury on 23 October 1852 Stieber presented as evidence a faked 'Minute-book' (see Note 259) which provided the defence with an additional material to expose the false nature of the whole trial. — 576
Page me39.665
†687 Marx and Engels used addresses of several businessmen and trading houses for safe conveyance of the documents to the defence counsel at the Cologne Communist Trial, Schneider II, Esser I and von Hontheim. The list of these addresses is given in Vol. 11 of the present edition, pp. 590-91. See also this volume, p. 218. — 578
Page me39.665
†688 The editors of the present edition do not have the original of this letter at their disposal and it is printed according to a copy in Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer of 28 March 1853. — 579
Page me39.665
†689 An allusion to the fact that financial difficulties prevented Weydemeyer and Cluss from buying up from the printers all the copies of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte printed in New York. — 579
Page me39.665
†690 Jenny Marx presumably refers to the unsuccessful attempt to publish Marx's and Engels' pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile. — 580
Page me39.665
†691 The American funds — money raised for the so-called German-American revolutionary loan (see Note 27). — 580
Page me39.665
†692 The excerpt from Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer given here expounds the contents of part of Marx's letter to Cluss, which has not survived. The letter was probably written on about 1 May 1853, when Marx was visiting Manchester. — 582
Page me39.665
†693 The reference is to Cluss' letter to Marx of 10 April 1853. — 582
Page me39.665
†694 Engels planned to publish Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany in German in Die Reform. The last, twentieth, article of this work did not appear in the New-York Daily Tribune and was probably not written (see Note 214). — 582
Page me39.665
†695 The excerpt from Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer given here contains an account of Jenny Marx's letter to Cluss of 20 May 1853 which has not survived. — 583
Page me39.665
†696 Marx visited Engels in Manchester from 30 April to 19 May 1853. — 583

Page Break me39.666

Page me39.666
†697 This excerpt from Cluss' letter to Weydemeyer gives the contents of part of Marx's letter to Cluss which has not survived. The letter may have been written in February 1853. — 584
Page me39.666
†698 Marx's letter to Cluss has not survived. — 584
Page me39.666
†699 Jenny Marx presumably asks Engels to return Marx's letter to Jacob Schabelitz which she mentions here. The letter, which has not been found, was written at the end of November 1852. In his reply to Marx of 1 December Schabelitz agreed to accept Marx's terms for the publication of the pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne. — 585
Page me39.666
†700 The circumstances of the duel between Schramm and Willich referred to here were distorted by the latter in the slanderous article 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”'. Miskowsky was Schramm's second (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 494-95, and also Note 360). — 586
Page me39.666
†701 Karl and Jenny Marx' letter to Cluss has not survived. — 587
Page me39.666
†702 Probably a slip of the pen. The meetings of Polish refugees were held on 28 and 29 November 1853 (see Note 456). — 587

Page Break me39.667

NAME INDEX

Page me39.667
A

Page me39.667
Abdul Mejid (Abd Ul Medjid) (1823-1861) — Sultan of Turkey (1839-61). — 277, 289
Page me39.667
Aberdeen, George Hamilton Gordon, Earl of (1784-1860) — British statesman, Tory, leader of the Peelites from 1850, Foreign Secretary (1828-30 and 1841-46) and Prime Minister in the Coalition Ministry (1852-55). — 284, 295, 424, 432, 444, 446, 452, 516, 518
Page me39.667
Adair, Robert (1763-1855) — British diplomat, associate of Charles James Fox. — 489
Page me39.667
Agesilaus II (c. 444-c, 360 B.C.) — King of Sparta (c. 401-c. 360 B.C.), brother of Agis II. — 70
Page me39.667
Agis II (died c. 401 B.C.) — King of Sparta (c. 427-c. 401 B.C.). — 70
Page me39.667

Agostini, Cesare (1803-1855) — Italian revolutionary, follower of Mazzini; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Italy; after its defeat emigrated to England; subsequently parted with Mazzini. — 280
Page me39.667
Albert, Prince Consort of Queen Victoria of Great Britain (1819-1861). — 423, 564
Page me39.667
Alberts — secretary at the Prussian embassy in London in the 1850s. — 243
Page me39.667
Alexander I (1777-1825) — Emperor of Russia (1801-25). — 492, 494-96
Page me39.667
Alexander of Macedon (Alexander the Great) (356-323 B.C.) — general and statesman of antiquity. — 310, 341
Page me39.667
Alexander, William — English 18th-century physician; author of The History of Women, from the Earliest Antiquity to the Present Time. — 208
Page me39.667
Altenstein, Karl (1770-1840) — Prussian Minister of Religious Worship, Education and Medicine (1817-38). — 462
Page me39.667
Andersen, Hans Christian (1805-1875) — Danish writer, poet, and author of fairy tales. — 22
Page me39.667
Anneke, Carl Friedrich Theodor (Fritz) (1818-1872) — Prussian artillery officer, discharged from the army for his political views; member of the Communist League; one of the founders and secretary of the Cologne Workers' Association in 1848; editor of the Neue Kölnische Zeitung; lieutenant-colonel in the Baden-Palatinate revolutionary army (1849); after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Switzerland and later to the USA; fought in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 92, 139, 149, 351
Page me39.667
Anneke, Mathilde Franziska (née Giesler) (1817-1884) — German writer, wife of Friedrich Anneke; contributed to German democratic periodicals in 1848-49, and later to German refugee newspapers in the USA. — 331.
Page me39.667
Anschütz — German musician, participant in the democratic movement of the 1840s in Germany, emigrated to London in the 1850s; friend of Ernst Dronke. — 91, 97
Page me39.667
Anstey, Thomas Chisholm (1816-1873) — British lawyer and radical politician; M.P. (1847-52); Attorney General for Hong Kong (1854-59). — 440
Page me39.667
Arconati Visconti, Constanza, Marquise

Page Break me39.668
(1797-1870) — participant in the Italian national liberation movement. — 200
Page me39.668
Arena, Antoine (d. 1544) — French satirist. — 356
Page me39.668

Aretino, Pietro (1492-1556) — Italian Renaissance author of lampoons against the Pope and European monarchs. — 126
Page me39.668
Ariosto, Lodovico (1474-1533) — Italian Renaissance poet, author of L'Orlando furioso. — 390
Page me39.668
Arnim, Ludwig Achim (Joachim) von (1781-1831) — German romantic poet. — 440
Page me39.668
Arnold, Franz — German democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; after its defeat emigrated to the USA, became an associate of Adolph Cluss in the early 1850s, disseminated Marxism in the USA. — 350
Page me39.668
Athenaeus (late 2nd-early 3rd cent.) — Greek rhetorician and grammarian. — 70
Page me39.668
Auerbach, Berthold (1812-1882) — German liberal writer of stories idealising the life of German peasants, later an apologist for Bismarck. — 563
Page me39.668
Auerswald, Hans Adolf Erdmann von (1792-1848) — Prussian general, Right-wing deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly; killed during Frankfurt uprising in September 1848. — 225
Page me39.668
Augustus (Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus) (63 B.C.-A.D. 14) — Roman Emperor (27 B.C.-A.D. 14). — 527
Page me39.668
Aumale, Henri Eugéne Philippe Louis d'Orléans, duc d' (1822-1897) — son of Louis Philippe, King of France; took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1840s, Governor General of Algeria (1847-48); emigrated to England after the February 1848 revolution. — 17, 200
Page me39.668
Aurangzeb, Mohi ud-din Mohammed (1618-1707) — ruler of the Grand Mogul Empire in India (1658-1707). — 332

Page me39.668
B

Page me39.668
Babeuf, François Noël (Gracchus) (1760-1797) — French revolutionary, advocate of utopian egalitarian communism, organiser of the Conspiracy of Equals. — 195
Page me39.668
Bach, Alexander, Baron von (1813-1893) — Austrian statesman, lawyer; Minister of Justice (1848); Minister of the Interior (1849-59). — 106
Page me39.668
Bacon, Francis, Baron Verulam, Viscount St. Albans (1561-1626) — English philosopher, founder of English materialism; naturalist, historian and statesman. — 544
Page me39.668

Badinguet — see Napoleon III
Page me39.668
Bakunin, Mikhail Alexandrovich (1814-1876) — Russian democrat, journalist, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; later ideologist of Narodism and anarchism; opposed Marxism in the First International. — 67, 306, 359-63, 373
Page me39.668
Balzac, Honoré de (1799-1850) — French realist novelist. — 203
Page me39.668
Bamberger, Louis (b. 1821) — German refugee in London, editor of the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung (1848-51). — 273, 321, 585
Page me39.668
Bamberger, Simon — London banker. — 273, 287, 294, 314, 315, 323, 351
Page me39.668
Bandiera brothers, Attilio (1810-1844) and Emilio (1819-1844) — officers of the Austrian Navy; leaders of the Italian national liberation movement, members of the Young Italy society; executed for their attempt to raise a revolt in Calabria (1844). — 56
Page me39.668
Bangya, János (1817-1868) — Hungarian journalist and officer, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; after its defeat Kossuth's emissary abroad and at the same time agent-provocateur; later served in the Turkish army under the name of Mehemed Bey acting as a Turkish agent in the Caucasus. — 31, 32, 45, 71, 93, 95, 101, 120, 124, 126, 130-32, 200, 208, 214, 232-34, 237-42, 252, 254, 256, 257, 267-70, 275,

Page Break me39.669
281, 291, 296, 301-04, 312-14, 316, 319, 325, 386, 396, 434, 437, 477, 572
Page me39.669
Barbés, Armand (1809-1870) — French revolutionary, leader of secret revolutionary societies during the July monarchy; was active in the 1848 revolution, deputy to the Constituent Assembly; sentenced to life imprisonment for participation in the popular insurrection of 15 May 1848, pardoned in 1854; emigrated to Belgium and abandoned politics. — 32, 502, 521
Page me39.669
Barnum, Phineas Taylor (1810-1891) — American showman, exhibited various freaks and rarities. — 4, 103, 527
Page me39.669
Barthélemy, Emmanuel (c. 1820-1855) — French worker, Blanquist, member of secret revolutionary societies during the July monarchy and participant in the June 1848 uprising in Paris; a leader of the Société des Proscrits Démocrates et Socialistes in London; sided with the Willich-Schapper group; executed in 1855 on a criminal charge. — 128, 198, 224, 296, 299, 300, 505, 510, 515
Page me39.669
Barthold, Friedrich Wilhelm (1799-1858) — German historian. — 160
Page me39.669
Batthyány, Kasimir, Count of (1807-1854) — Hungarian statesman, liberal aristocrat, Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Hungarian revolutionary government of Szemere

(1849); after the suppression of the revolution emigrated to Turkey, and then to France. — 26, 31, 45
Page me39.669
Batthyány, Lajos, Count of (1806-1849) — Hungarian statesman, liberal aristocrat; Prime Minister of Hungary (March-September 1848); pursued a policy of compromise with the Austrian monarchy; shot after the suppression of the revolution. — 70
Page me39.669
Bauer, Bruno (1809-1882) — German idealist philosopher, Young Hegelian; author of works on the history of Christianity; radical; national-liberal after 1866. — 37, 38, 76, 85-87, 94, 97, 102, 146, 147, 449, 462, 486, 490, 505, 535, 538, 562
Page me39.669
Bauer, Edgar (1820-1886) — German journalist, Young Hegelian; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; Prussian official after the 1861 amnesty; brother of Bruno Bauer. — 151, 314, 450, 507, 562
Page me39.669
Bauer, Heinrich (1813-c. 1852) — German shoemaker, prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League, treasurer of the Social-Democratic Refugee Committee; emigrated to Australia in 1851. — 14
Page me39.669
Bayard, Pierre Terrail, seigneur de (c. 1475-1524) — French warrior called by his contemporaries the chevalier sans peur et sans reproche. — 453
Page me39.669
Bayer, Joseph August (1821-1864) — Austrian army officer and writer; Chief of Staff of Görgey's army during the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, taken prisoner when the army capitulated in 1849, sentenced to death and later commuted to imprisonment in a fortress, pardoned in 1850. — 310
Page me39.669
Beaumarchais, Pierre Augustin Caron de (1732-1799) — French dramatist. — 38, 297, 300
Page me39.669
Becker, August (1814-1871) — German writer, member of the League of the Just in Switzerland, supporter of Weitling; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; in 1853 emigrated to the USA, where he contributed to democratic newspapers. — 154
Page me39.669
Becker, Hermann Heinrich (1820-1885) — German lawyer and journalist, took part in the 1848-49 revolution; editor of the Westdeutsche Zeitung (May 1849-July 1850); member of the Communist League from 1850; one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), sentenced to five-year imprisonment; later a national-liberal. — 9, 20, 23, 34, 115, 142, 143, 212, 222-24, 242, 245, 262, 468, 499, 570, 575, 577, 580

Page Break me39.670
Page me39.670
Becker, Johann Philipp (1809-1886) — German revolutionary, participant in the democratic movement of the 1830s-50s and the international working-class movement; fought as an officer of the Swiss army in the war against the Sonderbund; prominent figure in the 1848-49 revolution; commanded the Baden people's militia during the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; active member of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 490

Page me39.670
Becker, Max Joseph (d. 1896) — German engineer, democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, after its defeat emigrated to Switzerland and subsequently to the USA. — 72, 582
Page me39.670
Beckmann — Prussian police spy in Paris in the early 1850s, Paris correspondent of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 194
Page me39.670
Beckmann — Beckmann's wife. — 194
Page me39.670
Bedeau, Marie Alphonse (1804-1863) — French general, moderate republican politician; Vice-President of the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 199
Page me39.670
Belfield, James — a friend of Marx and Engels in Manchester. — 219
Page me39.670
Bellune, duke of — see Victor, Claude Victor Perrin, duc de Bellune
Page me39.670
Bem, Józef (1795-1850) — Polish general, prominent figure in the national liberation movement, took part in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31 and the revolutionary struggle in Vienna in 1848; a leader of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49); after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Turkey. — 311
Page me39.670
Benningsen — American clerk in Kossuth's office. — 261
Page me39.670
Béranger, Pierre Jean de (1780-1857) — French poet and song writer, author of political satires; democrat. — 497
Page me39.670
Bergenroth, Gustav Adolph (1813-1869) — German historian and journalist; petty-bourgeois democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution; left Germany in 1850. — 563
Page me39.670
Bermbach, Adolph (1822-1875) — Cologne lawyer, democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly; member of the Communist League; witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); corresponded with Marx; subsequently a liberal. — 20, 22, 24, 106, 107, 132, 134, 135, 136, 137, 142-43, 215, 216, 224, 230, 259
Page me39.670
Bernard, Martin (1808-1883) — French revolutionary, democrat, leader of secret revolutionary societies during the July monarchy, prominent in the 1848-49 revolution, was sentenced to exile after the events of 13 June 1849, fled to England in the early 1850s and returned to France after the 1859 amnesty. — 50
Page me39.670
Bernardin de Saint-Pierre, Jacques Henri (1737-1814) — French author, naturalist and traveller. — 447

Page me39.670
Bernays, Karl Ludwig (1815-1879) — German radical journalist, member of the League of the Just, an editor of Vorwärts!, the German refugees' newspaper published in Paris with Marx's collaboration; emigrated to the USA after the 1848-49 revolution. — 274
Page me39.670
Bernhardt — German democrat, refugee in the USA, an editor of the New York Neue Zeit. — 547
Page me39.670
Berni, Francesco (c. 1498-1535) — Italian Renaissance poet known for his adaptation of Boiardo's L'Orlando innamorato. — 131
Page me39.670
Bernier, François (1625-1688) — French physician, traveller and writer. — 332-33, 341
Page me39.670
Berry, Charles Ferdinand de Bourbon, duc de (1778-1820) — nephew of Louis XVIII of France. — 496
Page me39.670
Bertin, Louis Marie Armand (1801-1854) — French journalist; Orleanist; publisher of the Journal des Débats in 1841-54. — 68, 334
Page me39.670
Bianca, von — Cologne patrician; juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206, 238

Page Break me39.671
Page me39.671
Bianchi, A. — French democrat, emigrant in London in the 1850s. — 32, 73
Page me39.671
Bibra, L. — German innkeeper in London. — 559
Page me39.671
Biscamp (Biskamp), Elard — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated after its defeat; member of the editorial board of Das Volk, London newspaper of German refugees, which was published in 1859 with Karl Marx's assistance. — 205
Page me39.671
Bischoffsheim, Louis Raphaël (1800-1873) — French owner of a joint-stock bank with a branch in London. — 385, 411, 481
Page me39.671
Blanc, Jean Joseph Louis (1811-1882) — French socialist, historian; member of the Provisional Government and President of the Luxembourg Commission in 1848; pursued a policy of conciliation with the bourgeoisie; a leader of petty-bourgeois emigrants in London from August 1848; deputy to the National Assembly of 1871; opposed the Paris Commune. — 50, 51, 61, 68, 71, 73, 74, 76-77, 135, 136, 308, 388, 417, 418, 442, 502
Page me39.671
Blank, Karl Emil (Emilius) (1817-1893) — German merchant in London; held socialist views in the 1840s-50s; married Frederick Engels' sister Marie. — 5, 25, 89, 99, 185, 250, 286, 428, 561
Page me39.671

Blank, Marie (1824-1901) — Frederick Engels' sister, married Karl Emil Blank in 1845. — 272
Page me39.671
Blanqui, Louis Auguste (1805-1881) — French revolutionary, utopian communist, organised several secret societies and plots; active participant in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848, leader of the proletarian movement in France; repeatedly sentenced to imprisonment. — 13, 199, 209, 324, 364, 502
Page me39.671
Blenker, Ludwig (1812-1863) — German ex-officer, bourgeois democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to the USA, fought in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 542, 545
Page me39.671
Blesson, Johann Ludwig Urbain (1790-1861) — German military writer, commander of the Berlin civic militia in June 1848. — 160
Page me39.671
Blind, Friederike — Karl Blind's wife. — 373, 377, 389, 506
Page me39.671
Blind, Karl (1826-1907) — German democratic journalist, active in the 1848-49 revolutionary movement in Baden, a leader of the German petty-bourgeois emigrants in London in the 1850s; a national-liberal in the 1860s. — 260, 273, 275, 282, 325, 367, 372, 436, 438, 499, 500, 506, 548
Page me39.671
Blum, Robert (1807-1848) — German democrat, journalist, leader of the Left wing of the Frankfurt National Assembly; took part in the defence of Vienna in October 1848, court-martialled and executed after the fall of the city. — 241.
Page me39.671
Bode, Adolf Friedrich, Baron (1807-1865) — author of works on forestry, taught at St. Petersburg Forestry Institute in 1840-55. — 505
Page me39.671
Boiardo, Matteo Maria (c. 1441-1494) — Italian Renaissance poet, author of L'Orlando innamorato. — 131
Page me39.671
Boichot, Jean Baptiste (1820-1889) — French republican, deputy to the Legislative Assembly in 1849; took part in the demonstration on 13 June 1849; later an émigré. — 458, 461
Page me39.671
Bonaparte — see Napoleon I
Page me39.671
Bonaparte — dynasty of emperors of France (1804-14, 1815 and 1852-70). — 388
Page me39.671
Bonaparte, Jérôme (1784-1860) — younger brother of Napoleon I, King of Westphalia (1807-13), Marshal of France from 1850. — 171
Page me39.671
Bonaparte, Joseph (1768-1844) — eldest brother of Napoleon I, King of Spain (1808-13). — 406
Page me39.671

Bonaparte, Louis — see Napoleon III
Page me39.671
Bonaparte, Napoleon Joseph Charles Paul, Prince (1822-1891) — son of Jérôme Bonaparte, cousin of Napoleon III. — 526
Page me39.671
Bonaparte, Pierre Napoleon (1815-1881) — cousin of Napoleon III; deputy

Page Break me39.672
to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic. — 171, 261
Page me39.672
Borchardt, Louis — German physician, acquaintance of Engels in Manchester. — 334, 336, 353, 357, 370, 374, 420, 554, 555
Page me39.672
Börnstein, Heinrich (1805-1892) — German democratic journalist, lived in Paris from 1842; edited, with Marx's collaboration, the newspaper Vorwärts! founded by him in 1844; emigrated to the USA in 1849 and edited the Anzeiger des Westens (Chicago). — 52, 274
Page me39.672
Bourbons — royal dynasty in France (1589-1792, 1814-15, and 1815-30), Spain (1700-1808, 1814-68, 1874-1931, and from 1975), and a number of Italian states. — 129, 497
Page me39.672
Bourqueney, François Adolphe, comte de (1799-1869) — French diplomat, envoy (1841-44) and ambassador (1844-48) to Constantinople; envoy (1853-56) and ambassador (1856-59) to Vienna. — 456
Page me39.672
Brunswick (Braunschweig), Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand, Duke of (1721-1792) — Prussian general; commanded (from November 1757) the Prussian and allied forces in the Seven Years' War. — 526
Page me39.672
Brenner-Guéniard — owner of a fashionshop in Basle. — 287
Page me39.672
Brentano, Clemens (1778-1842) — German romantic poet. — 440
Page me39.672
Bright, John (1811-1889) — English manufacturer and politician, a leader of the Free Traders and co-founder of the Anti-Corn Law League. — 56, 111, 129, 132, 355, 411, 520
Page me39.672
Brockhaus, Heinrich (1804-1874) — German publisher, owner and head of F.A. Brockhaus Publishing House in Leipzig. — 158, 182
Page me39.672
Bruat, Armand Joseph (1796-1855) — French admiral, commanded a squadron (1854) and the French Navy (1855) in the Black Sea. — 547
Page me39.672
Brüggemann, Karl Heinrich (1810-1887) — German liberal journalist and economist; editor-in-chief of the Kölnische Zeitung (1845-55). — 367

Page me39.672
Brüningk, A., Baron von — German refugee in London (from 1851), maintained contact with the German petty-bourgeois emigrants through his wife Maria Brüningk. — 124, 125, 204, 205, 213, 265, 573, 574
Page me39.672
Brüningk, Maria, Baroness von (d. 1853) — A. Brüningk's wife, niece of the Russian Princess Darya Lieven. — 112, 114, 120-21, 124, 135, 152, 204, 205, 265, 274, 282, 297, 300, 313, 573, 574
Page me39.672
Brunnow, Philipp Ivanovich, Baron von, from 1871 Count (1797-1875) — Russian diplomat, envoy (1840-54, 1858-60) and ambassador (1860-74) to London. — 456, 457
Page me39.672
Buchheim — German democrat, refugee in London in the 1850s. — 499
Page me39.672
Buckup — Bradford merchant. — 326, 328, 451, 468
Page me39.672
Bülow, Adam Heinrich Dietrich, Baron von (1757-1807) — Prussian army officer and military theoretician. — 427
Page me39.672
Bürgers, Heinrich (1820-1878) — German radical journalist, contributor to the Rheinische Zeitung (1842-43); member of the Cologne community of the Communist League (1848); an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; member of the Communist League Central Authority from 1850; sentenced to six years imprisonment at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 20, 23, 34, 134, 137, 195, 197, 212, 217, 238, 240, 242, 247, 251, 468, 544, 547, 559, 560, 570
Page me39.672
Bürgers, Lene — Heinrich Bürgers' sister. — 491
Page me39.672
Buridan, Jean (c. 1300-c. 1358) — French logician and nominalist philosopher. — 170
Page me39.672
Burns, Mary (1821-1863) — Irish working-woman, Frederick Engels' first wife. — 443
Page me39.672
Bute, John Stuart, Earl of (1713-1792) — British Tory statesman, Prime Minister (1761-63). — 488
Page me39.672
Butler, James Armar (1827-1854) — British army officer, organised the defence of Silistria (1854). — 472

Page Break me39.673
Page me39.673
Butler, Samuel (1612-1680) — English satirical poet, author of the poem Hudibras. — 334
Page me39.673
Byng, John (1704-1757) — British admiral, commanded a squadron in the Minorca expedition (1756); executed for breach of duty. — 490
Page me39.673

Byron, George Gordon Noël, Lord (1788-1824) — English romantic poet. — 440

Page me39.673
C

Page me39.673
Cabet, Étienne (1788-1856) — French lawyer and writer, utopian communist, author of Voyage en Icarie. — 71, 73, 135, 136, 542
Page me39.673
Calderón de la Barca, Pedro (1600-1681) — Spanish dramatist. — 447
Page me39.673
Cammarano, Salvatore (1801-1852) — Italian actor, painter and playwright, wrote librettos for operas of Donizetti and Verdi. — 199
Page me39.673
Campbell, Sir George (1824-1892) — British official in India (1843-74), author of works on India; subsequently M.P., liberal. — 347
Page me39.673
Campe, Johann Julius Wilhelm (1792-1867) — German publisher and bookseller, co-proprietor of Hoffmann & Campe Publishing House in Hamburg from 1823. — 102, 217, 254
Page me39.673
Canning, George (1770-1827) — British statesman and diplomat, Tory; Foreign Secretary (1807-09, 1822-27) and Prime Minister (1827). — 431, 494, 495
Page me39.673
Capo d'Istria, Giovanni Antonio (Joannes), Count (1776-1831) — Greek statesman and diplomat; was in the service of Russia from 1809 to 1822, Second Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Russia (1815-22); President of Greece (1827-31); assassinated by foreign agents. — 447
Page me39.673
Carey, Henry Charles (1793-1879) — American vulgar economist, protectionist, advocated harmony of class interests in capitalist society. — 62, 93, 345, 346, 378, 381, 384, 387, 392
Page me39.673
Carrel, Armand (1800-1836) — French liberal journalist, co-founder and editor of the newspaper La National. — 497
Page me39.673
Carrion-Nisas, Marie Henri François Elisabeth, baron de (1767-1842) — French army officer, political leader and man of letters, took part in the French Revolution; Bonapartist during the Consulate and the Empire; fought in wars of Napoleonic France; author of works on military science. — 159
Page me39.673
Cassagnac — see Granier de Cassagnac, Bernard Adolphe de
Page me39.673

Castlereagh, Robert Stewart, second Marquis of Londonderry (1769-1822) — British Tory statesman; Secretary for War and for the Colonies (1805-06, 1807-09), and Foreign Secretary (1812-22). — 54
Page me39.673
Catherine II (1729-1796) — Empress of Russia (1762-96). — 489
Page me39.673
Catullus (Gaius Valerius Catullus) (c. 87-c. 54 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 462
Page me39.673
Cavaignac, Louis Eugéne (1802-1857) — French general and politician, moderate republican; took part in the conquest of Algeria; Governor of Algeria after the February 1848 revolution; War Minister of France from May 1848, directed the suppression of the June 1848 uprising of Paris workers; head of the executive (June-December 1848). — 157, 199
Page me39.673
Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de (1547-1616) — Spanish writer. — 170, 362, 447, 480, 493
Page me39.673
Chaises, Adolph — physician and democratic journalist, a leader of the democratic associations in Vienna during the 1848 revolution; refugee in Paris in the early 1850s. — 194
Page me39.673
Chambray, Georges, marquis de (1783-1848) — French general and military writer, fought in wars of Napoleonic France. — 160
Page me39.673
Chamisso, Adelbert von (1781-1838) — German romantic poet. — 457
Page me39.673
Chapman — one of Marx's creditors in London. — 9
Page me39.673
Charles X (1757-1836) — King of France (1824-30). — 497
Page me39.673
Charles Albert (Carlo Alberto) (1798-1849) — King of Sardinia and Piedmont (1831-49). — 310

Page Break me39.674
Page me39.674
Charras, Jean Baptiste Adolphe (1810-1865) — French military and political figure, moderate republican; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; took part in suppressing the June 1848 uprising of Paris workers; opposed Louis Bonaparte; banished from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 199
Page me39.674
Chateaubriand, François René, vicomte de (1768-1848) — French writer, statesman and diplomat, Minister for Foreign Affairs (1822-24), represented France at the Congress of Verona (1822). — 447, 492-96
Page me39.674
Chatham — see Pitt, William

Page me39.674
Chenu, Adolphe (born c. 1817) — member of secret revolutionary societies in France during the July monarchy, secret police agent-provocateur. — 52, 128, 301
Page me39.674
Cheodayeff (Cheodayev), Mikhail Ivanovich (d. 1859) — Russian general, took part in the Patriotic war against Napoleon in 1812, commanded a corps and the infantry reserve during the Crimean war. — 427
Page me39.674
Cherval, Julien (real name Joseph Crämer) — Prussian policeman, spy for Prussia and France at the same time in Paris; gained entry into the Communist League and headed a Paris community of the separatist Willich-Schapper group; accused of complicity in the so-called Franco-German plot in Paris in February 1852; escaped from prison with the connivance of the French police; acted as a spy and agent-provocateur under the name of Nugent in 1853 and 1854. — 112, 126, 130, 132, 215, 217, 222, 230, 243, 255, 301, 478, 577
Page me39.674
Chesney, Francis Rawdon (1789-1872) — British army officer, general from 1855. — 393, 426
Page me39.674
Choiseul, Étienne François, duc de (1719-1785) — French diplomat and statesman, ambassador to Rome (1753-57) and Vienna (1757-58); Prime Minister of France (1758-70), and also Minister for Foreign Affairs (1758-61 and 1766-70) and Minister for War and the Navy (1761-66). — 488
Page me39.674
Cicero (Marcus Tullius Cicero) (106-43 B.C.) — Roman orator, statesman and philosopher. — 89
Page me39.674
Clarendon, George William Frederick, fourth Earl of, fourth Baron Hyde (1800-1870) — British statesman, Whig; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (May 1847-early 1852), Foreign Secretary (1853-58, 1865-66 and 1868-70). — 516
Page me39.674
Clausewitz, Karl von (1780-1831) — Prussian general and military theoretician. — 305
Page me39.674
Cloots, Jean Baptiste, baron de (Anacharsis) (1755-1794) — French author and politician, close to the Left Jacobins during the French Revolution, member of the Convention; Prussian by birth. — 363
Page me39.674
Cluss, Adolph (1825-1905) — engineer, member of the German and American working-class movement, member of the Communist League, secretary of the Workers' Educational Society in Mainz (1848); emigrated to the United States (autumn 1848); in the 1850s one of the first propagandists of scientific communism in America; later gave up politics; American architect well known in the late 19th century. — 6, 18, 21, 24, 40, 42, 65, 71, 76, 81, 84, 85, 91, 92, 96, 98, 99, 102, 105-08, 115, 117, 122, 135-37, 139, 140, 144, 146, 148, 149, 152, 157, 158, 160-61, 164, 166, 172-74, 176, 180, 194, 196, 204, 205-08, 213, 216, 235, 255, 259-61, 263, 265-66, 271, 274, 282, 290, 293, 298-302, 303, 311-12, 315, 317, 318, 331, 335, 345, 348, 351, 366, 367, 370, 371, 377, 378, 387,

390, 391, 394, 396, 397, 398, 402, 403, 407, 409, 411, 428, 433, 437, 439, 441, 442, 444, 450, 453, 454, 461, 463, 469, 478, 479, 491, 525, 536, 558, 568, 569-70, 571, 573-76, 578-82, 584, 586-88, 590
Page me39.674
Cobden, Richard (1804-1865) — English manufacturer and politician, a leader

Page Break me39.675
of the Free Traders and co-founder of the Anti-Corn Law League, M.P. — 56, 129, 132, 252, 276, 411
Page me39.675
Coeurderoy, Ernest (1825-1862) — French journalist, republican, revolutionary; shared anarchist views; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in France; emigrated after its defeat. — 135, 136, 138
Page me39.675
Coffiniéres, Antoine Siméon Gabriel (1786-c. 1865) — French lawyer, author of works on civil law. — 556
Page me39.675
Condé, Louis Joseph de Bourbon, prince de (1736-1818) — French general and politician, took part in the Seven Years' War (1756-1763), commanded the French Lower Rhine army in 1762; during the French Revolution commanded detachments of counter-revolutionary émigrés in the wars against the French Republic. — 17, 489
Page me39.675
Cooper, James Fenimore (1789-1851) — American novelist. — 217, 301
Page me39.675
Cornelius, Wilhelm — German radical journalist and businessman, a friend of Marx; refugee in London in the 1850s. — 434, 502
Page me39.675
Cortés, Hernán (Fernando) (1485-1547) — Spanish conqueror of the Aztec state (Mexico) in 1519-21. — 501
Page me39.675
Cotta, Johann Georg, Baron von Cottendorf (1796-1863) — German publisher, owner of a big publishing house from 1832. — 391
Page me39.675
Cournet, Frédéric (1808-1852) — French naval officer, republican, discharged from the Navy for his political views in 1847; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in France; emigrated to London after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; was killed in a duel with Barthélemy. — 224, 299
Page me39.675
Csorich (Coric), Anton, barun od Monte Creto (1795-1864) — Austrian general, Croat by birth, lieutenant-field marshal (from 1849), took part in suppressing the October 1848 uprising in Vienna and in the war against revolutionary Hungary; War Minister in 1850-53. — 460
Page me39.675
Czartoryski, Adam Jerzy, prince (1770-1861) — Polish magnate; close friend of Emperor Alexander I of Russia; Russian Foreign Minister (1804-06); President of the Polish

Government during the insurrection of 1830-31, after its suppression headed the Polish monarchist émigrés in Paris. — 45

Page me39.675
D

Page me39.675
Damm — German democrat; President of the Baden Constituent Assembly in 1849; later emigrated to England. — 154-56, 255
Page me39.675
Dana, Charles Anderson (1819-1897) — American journalist, follower of Fourier, abolitionist; an editor (1848) and then editor-in-chief (1849-62) of the New-York Daily Tribune; an editor of the New American Cyclopaedia (1857-63); editor-in-chief of the New-York Sun (1868-97). — 3, 13, 20, 25, 35, 37, 38, 42, 44, 49, 55, 58, 75-77, 80, 86, 90, 91, 97, 99, 102, 107, 115, 120, 126, 127, 131, 133, 137, 146, 148, 158, 180, 181, 183, 185, 189, 195, 210, 212, 214, 216, 219, 229, 236, 237, 255, 265, 272, 275, 288, 289, 292, 293, 315, 328, 331, 351, 352, 354, 390, 400, 404, 407, 412, 439, 484, 498, 500, 502, 503, 537, 546, 559, 560, 583
Page me39.675
Daniels, Amalie (1820-1895) — wife of Roland Daniels. — 22, 59, 107, 223, 224, 230, 232, 301, 547, 548, 549, 559
Page me39.675
Daniels, Franz Joseph — big wine merchant in Cologne, brother of Roland Daniels. — 386
Page me39.675
Daniels, Roland (1819-1855) — German physician, member of the Cologne Central Authority of the Communist League from 1850, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), acquitted; friend of Marx and Engels. — 9, 20, 22, 115, 142, 195, 212, 222, 238, 275, 386, 468, 479, 521, 544, 547, 549
Page me39.675
Dannenberg, Pyotr Andreyevich (1792-1872) — Russian general, commanded a corps on the Danube and in the

Page Break me39.676
Crimea in 1853-54. — 470
Page me39.676
Dante Alighieri (1265-1321) — Italian poet. — 329
Page me39.676
Danton, Georges Jacques (1759-1794) — prominent figure in the French Revolution, leader of the Right-wing Jacobins. — 363, 521
Page me39.676
Da Ponte, Lorenzo (1749-1838) — wrote librettos for a number of Mozart's operas. — 556
Page me39.676

Darasz, Albert (1808-1852) — prominent figure in the Polish national liberation movement, took part in the 1830-31 insurrection; a leader of democratic organisations of Polish emigrants; member of the Central Committee of European Democracy. — 171, 459
Page me39.676
Dasent, Sir George Webbe (1817-1896) — English philologist specialising in Scandinavian languages, journalist; assistant editor of The Times (1845-70); had contacts with diplomatic circles. — 276
Page me39.676
Decker, Karl von (1784-1844) — German general and military historian, took part in wars against Napoleonic France. — 535
Page me39.676
Delane, John Thaddeus (1817-1879) — English journalist, editor-in-chief of The Times. — 276
Page me39.676
Delane, William Frederick Augustus (d. 1858) — English lawyer, one of the financial directors of The Times, father of John Delane. — 276
Page me39.676
Della Rocco, Heinrico Morozzo — Italian refugee, associate of Mazzini. — 280
Page me39.676
Dembinski, Henryk (1791-1864) — Polish general and prominent figure in the national liberation movement, participant in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, a commander in the Hungarian revolutionary army in the 1848-49 revolution, after its defeat emigrated to Turkey and then to France. — 311
Page me39.676
Demidovs — Russian aristocratic family, owners of minefields and iron and steel works. — 411
Page me39.676
Demuth, Helene (1820-1890) — housemaid and friend of the Marx family. — 181, 364, 465, 537
Page me39.676
Denman, Joseph — candidate for Manchester in the 1852 elections to Parliament. — 111
Page me39.676
Derby, earls of — British aristocratic family, many of them cotton magnates. — 411
Page me39.676
Derby, Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, Earl of (1799-1869) — English statesman, Whig until 1853, later a Tory leader; Prime Minister (1852, 1858-59 and 1866-68), — 44, 49, 53-54, 56, 58, 69, 119, 147, 197, 215, 515
Page me39.676
Desmoulins, Lucie Simplice Camille Benoist (1760-1794) — French writer, prominent figure in the French Revolution, Right-wing Jacobin, friend of Danton. — 363
Page me39.676
Deutsch, Simon (1822-1877) — Austrian bibliographer of Hebrew literature, radical, contributed to the Vienna Der Radikale in 1848; later emigrated to Paris, had connections with the Prussian police. — 126
Page me39.676

Diderot, Denis (1713-1784) — French Enlightenment philosopher, atheist; leader of the Encyclopaedists. — 134
Page me39.676
Diebich-Zabalkansky, Ivan Ivanovich (Diebitsch, Hans Karl Friedrich Anton), Count (1785-1831) — Russian field marshal-general, commander-in-chief (1829) of the Russian army during the Russo-Turkish war of 1828-29 and, from December 1830, of the army which crushed the Polish insurrection of 1830-31. — 394
Page me39.676
Dietz, Oswald (c. 1824-1864) — German architect; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to London; member of the Communist League Central Authority, after the split of the League belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group, was a member of its Central Authority; later took part in the American Civil War on the side of the Union. — 14, 151, 226, 230, 316, 576
Page me39.676
Diezel, Gustav (1827-1864) — German scholar, lawyer. — 505
Page me39.676
Disraeli, Benjamin, Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-1881) — British statesman and writer; sympathised with the Young England group in the 1840s, later a

Page Break me39.677
Tory leader; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852, 1858-59, 1866-68), Prime Minister (1868, 1874-80). — 61, 132, 197, 253, 265, 276, 295, 472, 483, 516, 517, 519
Page me39.677
Dobrovský, Josef (1753-1829) — Czech scholar and public figure, founder of Slav philology; his works contributed to the Bohemian national movement in the first half of the nineteenth century. — 563
Page me39.677
Domenichi, Lodovico (d. 1564) — Italian poet, author of an adaptation of Boiardo's L'Orlando innamorato. — 131
Page me39.677
Donatus, Aelius (4th cent.) — Roman grammarian. — 188
Page me39.677
Donizetti, Gaetano (1797-1848) — Italian composer. — 199
Page me39.677
Douglas, Sir Howard (1776-1861) — British general and military writer, author of works on artillery and fortification. — 426
Page me39.677
Dralle, Friedrich Wilhelm (b. 1820) — German journalist, democrat, refugee in London in the 1850s. — 151, 154, 173, 194
Page me39.677
Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German journalist and writer, “true socialist” and, later, member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); after the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to Switzerland and then to England; supporter of Marx and Engels; subsequently gave up politics. — 17, 32, 66, 71, 75, 76, 79, 86, 88-90, 91, 95, 97, 101, 109, 113, 120, 124, 133, 134, 138, 146, 148, 152, 158, 182, 189, 199, 200, 201, 204, 211, 219, 223, 231, 232, 234, 235, 239, 240, 243, 275, 282, 290, 296, 302,

303, 304, 312, 316, 319, 321, 323, 324, 326, 328, 356, 358, 362, 364, 372, 386, 391, 396, 397, 400, 402, 412, 436, 445, 451, 461, 463, 464, 465, 468-69, 473, 478, 480, 482, 500, 528, 534, 537, 542, 545, 560, 561, 574, 583, 584-85, 587, 589

Page me39.677
Duchâtel, Charles Marie Tanneguy, comte (1803-1867) — French statesman, Orleanist, Minister of Trade (1834-36), Minister of the Interior (1839 and 1840-February 1848). — 52
Page me39.677
Dulon, Rudolph (1807-1870) — German pastor, a leader of the Friends of Light movement, which opposed the official church; emigrated to the USA in 1853. — 71, 173, 417, 459, 462, 588
Page me39.677
Duncker, Alexander (1813-1897) — German publisher. — 539
Page me39.677
Duncker, Franz Gustav (1822-1888) — German politician and publisher. — 216, 232
Page me39.677
Dundas, Henry, Viscount Melville (1742-1811) — British statesman, Lord Advocate for Scotland (1775-83), Home Secretary (1791-94), President of the Board of Control for India (1793-1801); Secretary for War (1794-1801), First Lord of the Admiralty (1804-05). — 490
Page me39.677
Dupin, André Marie Jean Jacques (1783-1865) — French lawyer and politician, Orleanist, deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848-49) and President of the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), later Bonapartist. — 47
Page me39.677
Durand — French democrat. — 199
Page me39.677
Dureau de La Malle, Adolphe Jules César Auguste (1777-1857) — French scholar, philologist and archaeologist. — 228
Page me39.677
Düsar, Pedro — German democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, brother-in-law of Gustav Struve. — 45

Page me39.677
E

Page me39.677
Ebner, Hermann — German journalist, secret agent of the Austrian police in the 1840s-50s. — 22, 99, 222, 238, 276, 483
Page me39.677
Eccarius, Johann Georg (1818-1889) — German tailor, prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, member of the League of the Just and later of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; member of the General Council of the First International; took part in the English trade union movement. — 26, 40, 107, 117, 120,

Page Break me39.678
312, 397, 441, 446, 572, 583
Page me39.678
Elsner, Karl Friedrich Moritz (1809-1894) — Silesian radical journalist and politician, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; an editor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung in the 1850s. — 502, 506, 507, 534, 539, 550, 553-55
Page me39.678
Engel, Johann Jacob (1741-1802) — German writer, critic and philosopher, shared the philosophical views of the 18th-century Enlightenment. — 307
Page me39.678
Engels, Elisabeth Franziska Mauritia (1797-1873) — mother of Frederick Engels. — 350
Page me39.678
Engels, Elise (1834-1912) — sister of Frederick Engels. — 249
Page me39.678
Engels, Friedrich (1796-1860) — father of Frederick Engels, co-founder with Ermen of a cotton firm in Manchester (1837) and later in Engelskirchen. — 16, 36, 38, 57, 66, 69, 97, 99, 103, 109, 110, 133, 148, 232, 283, 307, 315, 323, 339, 353, 428, 437, 479, 490, 525
Page me39.678
Enghien, Louis Antoine Henri de Bourbon Condé, duc d' (1772-1804) — French prince, a Bourbon; fought against the French Republic in the counter-revolutionary émigré army; shot on the order of Napoleon I. — 129
Page me39.678
Engländer, Sigmund (1828-1902) — Austrian journalist, emigrated to France (1848) and later to England; secret police agent. — 126, 548, 553
Page me39.678
Erhard(t), Johann Ludwig Albert (born c. 1820) — German shop assistant, member of the Communist League, one of the accused at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); acquitted. — 143
Page me39.678
Ermen, Franz — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 249
Page me39.678
Ermen, Gottfried — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 36, 249, 329, 339
Page me39.678
Ermen, Peter (Pitt) (born c. 1810) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 165, 322
Page me39.678
Ersch, Johann Samuel (1766-1828) — German bibliographer, professor of geography and statistics in Halle. — 462
Page me39.678

Espartero, Baldomero, duque de la Vittoria (1793-1879) — Spanish general and politician; leader of the Progresista Party; Regent of Spain (1841-43), head of government (1854-56). — 485
Page me39.678
Espinasse, Charles Marie Esprit (1815-1859) — French general, Bonapartist; took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s-40s, in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, and in the Crimean war. — 482
Page me39.678
Espoz y Mina, Francisco (1781-1836) — Spanish general, a guerrilla leader during the War of Independence (1808-14); active participant in the revolution of 1820-23, fought against the Carlists in 1833-36. — 490
Page me39.678
Esser I, Johann Heinrich Theodor — Prussian official, lawyer, clerical; Vice-President of the Prussian National Assembly (Centre) in 1848; counsel for the defence in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 228
Page me39.678
Estrées, Louis Charles César Letellier, comte d' (1695-1771) — French marshal, took part in the Seven Years' War (1756-63), commanded the French army on the Rhine in 1762. — 489
Page me39.678
Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzman, comtesse de Teba (1826-1920) — wife of the emperor Napoleon III. — 276, 297, 300
Page me39.678
Evans, Sir George de Lacy (1787-1870) — British general, liberal politician, M.P.; commanded a division in the Crimea in 1854. — 527
Page me39.678
Ewerbeck, August Hermann (1816-1860) — German physician and man of letters, leader of Paris communities of the League of the Just (1841-46), member of the Communist League, which he left in 1850; Paris correspondent of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49. — 45, 58, 66, 85, 87, 360, 542

Page me39.678
F

Page me39.678
Feddersen — an acquaintance of Ernst Dronke in Switzerland. — 296

Page Break me39.679
Page me39.679
Ferdinand I (1751-1825) — King of the Two Sicilies (1816-25). — 541
Page me39.679
Ferdinand II (1810-1859) — King of the Two Sicilies (1830-59), son of Francis I. — 541
Page me39.679
Ferdinand VII (1784-1833) — King of Spain (1808 and 1814-33). — 497
Page me39.679

Ferenczi — Hungarian singer. — 170
Page me39.679
Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas von (1804-1872) — German materialist philosopher. — 45, 161
Page me39.679
Fickler, Joseph (1808-1865) — German democratic journalist, a leader of the Baden democratic movement in 1848-49, member of the Baden Provisional Government (1849); after the revolution emigrated to Switzerland, later lived in England and America. — 92, 96, 151, 156, 173, 260, 542
Page me39.679
Fischer — German journalist, democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, after its suppression emigrated to the USA, editor of the Deutsche Zeitung in New Orleans. — 52
Page me39.679
Fleury, Charles (real name Carl Friedrich August Krause) (b. 1824) — London merchant, Prussian spy and police agent. — 235, 236, 240, 242-44, 302, 313, 321
Page me39.679
Florencourt, Franz von (1803-1886) — German writer, editor of a number of periodicals, first liberal and later conservative; brother-in-law of Ferdinand von Westphalen (Jenny Marx's step-brother). — 543
Page me39.679
Florencourt — relative of Jenny Marx, brother of Franz von Florencourt. — 543
Page me39.679
Flügel, Johann Gottfried (1788-1855) — German lexicographer. — 289
Page me39.679
Forster, Charles — English theologian and traveller, author of works on Biblical history. — 326-27, 527
Page me39.679
Foster — English lawyer. — 486
Page me39.679
Fould, Achille (1800-1867) — French banker and politician, Orleanist, later Bonapartist, repeatedly Finance Minister between 1849 and 1867, Minister of State and Minister of the Imperial Court (1852-60). — 17, 21, 47, 200, 388
Page me39.679
Fourier, François Marie Charles (1772-1837) — French utopian socialist. — 449
Page me39.679
Fox, Charles James (1749-1806) — British statesman, Whig leader, Foreign Secretary (1782, 1783, 1806). — 489
Page me39.679
Franceson, C.F. — German philologist, author of Spanish language manuals. — 364, 584
Page me39.679
Francis, Sir Philip (pseudonym Junius) (1740-1818) — English journalist and politician, bourgeois radical, author of lampoons against the reactionary regime of George III. — 489
Page me39.679
Francis I (1777-1830) — King of the Two Sicilies (1825-30), son of Ferdinand I. — 541

Page me39.679
Franck, Gustav (d. 1860) — Austrian democrat, a refugee in London in the early 1850s. — 154, 156, 173
Page me39.679
Frederick I ('Barbarossa' or 'Redbeard') (c. 1123-1190) — German King (from 1152), Holy Roman Emperor (1155-90). — 474, 475
Page me39.679
Frederick II (1194-1250) — German King (1212), Holy Roman Emperor (1220-50). — 475
Page me39.679
Frederick II (the Great) (1712-1786) — King of Prussia (1740-86). — 51, 365, 474, 488
Page me39.679
Frederick VII (1808-1863) — King of Denmark (1848-63). — 452
Page me39.679
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 307, 526
Page me39.679
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German poet, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; withdrew from revolutionary activity in the 1850s. — 4, 8, 14, 16, 21-22, 25, 32, 35, 40, 42, 45, 76, 79, 89, 99, 102, 107, 115, 118-19, 124, 125, 129, 134, 137, 152, 160, 161-62, 211, 221, 224, 235, 241, 245, 247, 255, 260, 262, 296, 297, 298, 305, 321-24, 344, 368, 385, 387, 389, 390, 411, 420, 472, 481, 499, 509, 510, 528, 547, 560, 568, 571, 578
Page me39.679
Freiligrath, Ida (1817-1899) — wife of Ferdinand Freiligrath. — 42
Page me39.679
Freiligrath, Wolfgang — son of Ferdinand Freiligrath. — 23

Page Break me39.680
Page me39.680
Freire, Manuel (1765-1834) — Spanish general, took part in the war of liberation from Napoleonic rule (1808-14). — 492
Page me39.680
Freund — German physician in London, doctor of the Marx family in the 1850s. — 453, 462, 464, 465, 469, 481, 490, 498, 500-02, 550, 559
Page me39.680
Friedländer, Max (1829-1872) — German democratic journalist, editor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung and Die Presse, to which Karl Marx contributed in the 1850s-60s; cousin of Ferdinand Lassalle. — 502
Page me39.680
Friedländer — owner of a school in London. — 282
Page me39.680
Friedländer. — 315
Page me39.680
Fröbel, Julius (1805-1893) — German writer and publisher of progressive literature; democrat, later a liberal; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; deputy to the

Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to the USA after the revolution, returned to Europe in 1857. — 44
Page me39.680
Fröhlich, R.A. — Austrian philologist, wrote a manual of Slav languages. — 201, 204
Page me39.680
Furrer, Jonas (1805-1861) — Swiss politician, moderate liberal, lawyer; President of the Diet (1848) and then of the Swiss Confederation, Burgomaster of Zurich. — 529
Page me39.680
Fürstenberg, Baron von — Prussian landowner, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206

Page me39.680
G

Page me39.680
Gallenga, Antonio (pen-name Mariotti) (1812-1895) — Italian journalist, took part in the Italian national liberation movement; from the 1830s lived mostly in England; contributed to the British press; wrote a number of works on the history of Italy. — 541

Page me39.680
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; in the 1830s and 1840s took part in the revolutionary movement in South America and the 1848-49 revolution in Italy; headed the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification in the 1850s-60s. — 198
Page me39.680
Garnett, Jeremiah (1793-1870) — English journalist, a founder and editor (1844-61) of the Manchester Guardian. — 561
Page me39.680
Garthe — German democrat, a refugee in London in the 1850s. — 155
Page me39.680
Gebert, August — Mecklenburg joiner; member of the Communist League in Switzerland and later in London; after the split in 1850 belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group. — 151, 169, 176-77
Page me39.680
George III (1738-1820) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1760-1820). — 488
Page me39.680
Gerstenberg, Isidor (d. 1876) — London banker, adherent of Gottfried Kinkel. — 150, 321, 322, 502, 581
Page me39.680
Gerstenzweig — German merchant in London. — 499
Page me39.680
Gervinus, Georg Gottfried (1805-1871) — German historian, liberal; editor of the Deutsche Zeitung (1847-48); deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre) in 1848. — 276
Page me39.680

Gibbon, Edward (1737-1794) — English historian, author of The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. — 326
Page me39.680
Gibson, Thomas Milner (1806-1884) — British politician and statesman, Free Trader, later liberal; President of the Board of Trade (1859-65, 1865-66). — 57, 111
Page me39.680
Gipperich (Gibberich), Joseph — German tailor, member of a Paris community supporting the separatist Willich-Schapper group after the split of the Communist League; agent of the Prussian police, one of the accused in the case of the so-called Franco-German plot in Paris in February 1852; escaped from prison with the connivance of the police; refugee in England from 1852. — 222
Page me39.680
Girardin, Delphine de (1804-1855) — French writer; wife of Émile de

Page Break me39.681
Girardin. — 47
Page me39.681
Girardin, Émile de (1806-1881) — French journalist and politician; editor of La Presse; notorious for his lack of principles in politics; moderate republican during the 1848-49 revolution, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1850-51), later Bonapartist. — 47, 526
Page me39.681
Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898) — British statesman, Tory and later Peelite; leader of the Liberal Party in the second half of the nineteenth century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852-55, 1859-66), Prime Minister (1868-74, 1880-85, 1886, 1892-94), — 284, 331, 334, 355, 515-19, 590
Page me39.681
Gnam — German democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA in 1850. — 17
Page me39.681
Göbel — presiding judge of the Assizes in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 211, 238, 244
Page me39.681
Goegg, Amand (1820-1897) — German journalist, democrat; member of the Baden Provisional Government in 1849; emigrated after the revolution; later member of the First International. — 141, 146, 151-52, 154-56, 161, 166, 167, 173, 182, 267, 434, 499
Page me39.681
Goepp, Karl (Charles) — American writer of German origin; was close to the German democratic refugees in the United States (1850s); co-author with Theodor Poesche of a book advocating 'united states of the world' under the aegis of the USA (1852). — 366
Page me39.681
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 262, 447, 585
Page me39.681
Gö(h)ringer, Carl (born c. 1808) — innkeeper in Baden; took part in the revolutionary movement there in 1848-49, after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to England; member of the Communist League, after its split belonged to the separatist Willich-

Schapper group; owner of a public house in London which was the meeting-place of German refugees. — 271, 316, 318, 498
Page me39.681
Goldheim — Prussian police officer, secret agent of the Prussian police in London in the early 1850s. — 240, 242, 244, 314-16, 318, 319, 321, 521
Page me39.681
Goldschmidt — Danish journalist, author of an anti-Kinkel article published in the Kölnische Zeitung early in 1852. — 95
Page me39.681
Golovin, Ivan Gavrilovich (1816-1890) — Russian liberal landowner, journalist; emigrated to England, was close to Herzen and Bakunin in the 1840s and 1850s. — 306, 359-61, 373, 438, 523, 524
Page me39.681
Gorchakoff (Gorchakov), Mikhail Dmitrievich, Prince (1793-1861) — Russian general, commanded the Russian army on the Danube (1853-54), commander-in-chief of the Southern army (September 1854-February 1855) and of the army in the Crimea (February-December 1855); Governor-General of the Kingdom of Poland (1856-61). — 433, 470
Page me39.681
Görgey, Arthur (1818-1916) — military leader of the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, commander-in-chief of the Hungarian revolutionary army (April-June 1849), War Minister (from May 1849); voiced the conservative sentiments of the nobility, opposed development of the revolution and advocated agreement with the Habsburgs. — 70, 101, 104, 128, 131, 134, 212, 267, 304, 310-11, 460
Page me39.681
Gorzowski, Thaddäus — Polish refugee, member of the Polish Democratic Society. — 172
Page me39.681
Götz, Theodor — German democrat, refugee in England, a friend of Karl Marx. — 508, 521, 522
Page me39.681
Grach — Trier banker. — 526
Page me39.681
Grach — wife of the banker Grach. — 526
Page me39.681
Grach, Friedrich (1812-1854) — Prussian colonel, served in the Turkish army from 1841, commanded the defence of Silistria in 1854. — 461
Page me39.681
Graham, Sir James Robert George (1792-1861) — British statesman, Whig and later Peelite; Home Secretary in the Peel Government (1841-46), First

Page Break me39.682
Lord of the Admiralty (1830-34, 1852-55). — 56, 101, 129, 132, 252, 546
Page me39.682
Granier de Cassagnac, Bernard Adolphe de (1806-1880) — French journalist, unprincipled politician, Orleanist before the 1848 revolution and later Bonapartist, deputy to the Corps législatif during the Second Empire, contributed to Le Constitutionnel, editor-in-chief of Le Pays in the 1850s. — 126, 555

Page me39.682
Grant, James (1802-1879) — English radical journalist and writer, editor of The Morning Advertiser (1850-71). — 358
Page me39.682
Granville, George Leveson-Gower, Earl of (1815-1891) — British statesman, Whig, subsequently a Liberal Party leader; Foreign Secretary (1851-52, 1870-74 and 1880-85); Lord President of the Council (1852-54, 1855-58, 1859-66), Secretary of State for the Colonies (1868-70, 1886). — 456
Page me39.682
Greeley, Horace (1811-1872) — American journalist and politician; founder and editor of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 146, 272, 299, 346, 387, 503
Page me39.682
Greif — Prussian police officer, one of the chiefs of the Prussian secret service in London in the early 1850s. — 242-45, 270, 281, 301, 313
Page me39.682
Grey, Sir Henry George, Earl of (1802-1894) — British Whig statesman; Secretary at War (1835-39) and Secretary of State for the Colonies (1846-52). — 519
Page me39.682
Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) — German philologist, one of the founders of Germanic philology, author of Die deutsche Grammatik and of folklore adaptations, professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin; liberal. — 563
Page me39.682
Gross, Magnus — German democratic journalist, a refugee in the USA in the 1850s. — 6, 260, 573
Page me39.682
Gruber, Johann Gottfried (1774-1851) — German scholar, literary historian. — 462
Page me39.682
Guérard, Johann — Austrian army officer, author of a reference book on military science. — 159
Page me39.682
Guibert of Nogent (1053-1124) — French historian and theologian. — 476
Page me39.682
Guilleminot, Armand Charles, comte de (1774-1840) — French general and diplomat, took part in the wars of the French Republic and of Napoleonic France, Chief of Staff of the French interventionist army in Spain (1823); ambassador to Constantinople (1824). — 497
Page me39.682
Guillermain — refugee from Lyons. — 76
Page me39.682
Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874) — French historian and statesman, Orleanist; Foreign Minister (1840-48), in 1847 also Prime Minister; expressed the interests of big financial bourgeoisie. — 48, 61
Page me39.682

Gülich, Gustav von (1791-1847) — German economist and historian, author of works on the history of economics. — 82
Page me39.682
Gurowski, Adam, Count (1805-1866) — Polish journalist, emigrated to the USA in 1849, contributed to the New-York Daily Tribune in the 1850s. — 370
Page me39.682
Gutzkow, Karl Ferdinand (1811-1878) — German writer, member of the Young Germany literary group. — 391
Page me39.682
Guyon, Richard Debaufre (1803-1856) — Hungarian general, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, after its defeat emigrated to Turkey and joined the army there, Chief of Staff of the Turkish army in the Caucasus in 1854. — 434

Page me39.682
H

Page me39.682
Häbling von Lanzenauer — German landowner, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206
Page me39.682
Haering — Prussian postal clerk. — 316, 319
Page me39.682
Hafiz, Shams ud-din Mohammed (c. 1300-c. 1389) — Persian poet, Tajik by birth. — 341
Page me39.682
Häfner, Leopold (b. 1820) — Austrian

Page Break me39.683
democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to France, Paris correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung and Kölnische Zeitung; police agent. — 178, 185, 194, 206
Page me39.683
Hagen, Theodor (1823-1871) — member of the Communist League in Hamburg, publisher of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politischökonomische Revue. — 581
Page me39.683
Hain, August — German refugee in London, member of the Communist League, supported Marx and Engels during the split in the League in 1850. — 86, 87
Page me39.683
Halil Pasha (d. 1856) — Turkish military leader and statesman, repeatedly held ministerial posts; Capudan Pasha (Naval Minister) in 1854-55. — 408
Page me39.683
Hammel — member of the Communist League in Magdeburg, belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group, opponent of Marx and Engels. — 169, 177
Page me39.683

Hammer-Purgstall, Joseph, Baron von (1774-1856) — Austrian historian, Orientalist, author of works on Turkish history. — 423, 428
Page me39.683
Hansen — Cologne worker, member of the Communist League, emigrated to the USA in the early 1850s. — 79
Page me39.683
Harney, George Julian (1817-1897) — prominent figure in the English labour movement, a leader of the Chartist Left wing, editor of The Northern Star, Democratic Review, Red Republican and Friend of the People; associate of Marx and Engels; in the early 1850s was close to petty-bourgeois circles and temporarily withdrew from the revolutionary trend in the labour movement. — 11, 30, 31, 43, 60-61, 67, 89, 93, 96, 99, 107, 162, 164, 196, 266, 282, 401, 587
Page me39.683
Harney, Mary (d. 1853) — wife of George Julian Harney. — 282
Page me39.683
Harring, Harro Paul (1798-1870) — German radical writer, emigrated in 1828, lived in various countries of Europe and America including the USA. — 117
Page me39.683
Hatzfeldt, Sophie, Countess of (1805-1881) — friend and supporter of Ferdinand Lassalle. — 339, 478
Page me39.683
Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg, Edmund, Count of (b. 1798) — husband of Sophie Hatzfeldt. — 293
Page me39.683
Haupt, Hermann Wilhelm (born c. 1833) — German shop assistant; member of the Communist League; arrested with other Cologne communists, he turned King's evidence and was released before the trial; fled to Brazil (summer 1852). — 143, 144, 145, 197, 215
Page me39.683
Hauser, Kaspar (1812-1833) — a foundling discovered in Nürnberg in 1828 and placed in the care of the Bavarian state; the story of his origin and tragic death provided the theme for a number of literary works. — 36
Page me39.683
Hayward, Abraham (1801-1884) — British lawyer and journalist; Tory at the beginning of his career, later Peelite; appointed Secretary of the Poor Law Board in 1854. — 519
Page me39.683
Hebeler, Bernhard — Prussian consul-general in London in the 1830s-60s. — 100, 232
Page me39.683
Hecker, Friedrich Franz Karl (1811-1881) — German democrat, a leader of the Baden republican uprising in April 1848, after its defeat emigrated to Switzerland and then to the USA; fought in the American Civil War on the side of the Union. — 6, 98
Page me39.683
Heckscher, Martin — Frederick Engels' physician, a German resident in Manchester. — 353
Page me39.683

Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 45, 65, 87, 104, 306, 462, 556
Page me39.683
Heilberg, Louis (1818-1852) — German journalist; political refugee in Brussels, member of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee (1846) and later of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to London at the end of 1850. — 124
Page me39.683
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German

Page Break me39.684
revolutionary poet. — 61, 121, 276, 401, 438, 455, 469, 504, 509, 544, 568, 587
Page me39.684
Heinzen, Karl (1809-1850) — German radical journalist, for a short time took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; from 1847 onwards, opponent of Marx; refugee in Switzerland, England and, from the autumn of 1850, in the USA. — 6, 17, 52, 59, 60-62, 65, 94, 117, 141, 146, 161, 173, 185, 208, 263, 273, 308, 319, 351, 367, 391, 394, 395, 396, 417, 421, 423, 462, 542, 574, 575
Page me39.684
Heise, Heinrich (1820-1860) — German democratic journalist, an editor of the newspaper Die Hornisse (1848-50); took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, later a refugee in England. — 86, 114, 115, 121, 162, 187, 349, 356, 397, 419, 420, 421, 441-45, 451, 454, 463, 469, 471, 478, 479, 543, 583, 587-89
Page me39.684
Helmich, Julius — Westphalian publisher and bookseller; 'true socialist'; refugee in the USA in the 1850s. — 118, 161
Page me39.684
Henry IV (Henri IV) (1553-1610) — King of France (1589-1610). — 475, 497
Page me39.684
Hentze, A. — German army officer, member of the Communist League, belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group; witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 15, 143, 155, 161, 223, 229, 317, 335, 577
Page me39.684
Herbert, Sidney, Baron of Lea (1810-1861) — British statesman, Tory and later Peelite; Secretary at War (1845-46 and 1852-55) and Secretary for War (1859-60). — 284, 472, 508
Page me39.684
Herstadt — Cologne banker, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206, 238
Page me39.684
Herweg — German democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, refugee in London in the 1850s. — 155, 156, 243
Page me39.684
Herwegh, Georg Friedrich (1817-1875) — German democratic poet, took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to Switzerland; subsequently member of the German Social-Democratic Party. — 199, 262

Page me39.684
Herzen, Alexander Ivanovich (1812-1870) — Russian revolutionary democrat, materialist philosopher, journalist and writer; left Russia in 1847, from 1852 lived in England where he established the Free Russian Press and published the periodical Polyarnaya Zvezda (Polar Star) and the newspaper Kolokol (The Bell). — 199, 235, 273, 275, 282, 286, 306, 317, 325, 345, 360, 362, 373, 436, 438, 521-25, 527, 537, 548, 553, 558
Page me39.684
Hess, Heinrich Hermann Josef, Baron von (1788-1870) — Austrian general, subsequently field marshal; took an active part in crushing the 1848-49 revolution in Italy; commander-in-chief in Hungary, Galicia and the Danubian Principalities in 1854 and 1855. — 546
Page me39.684
Hess, Moses (1812-1875) — German radical writer, a leading 'true socialist' in the mid-40s; member of the Communist League, after its split belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group, later supported Lassalle. — 89, 90, 192, 232, 236
Page me39.684
Hillgärtner, Georg — German democrat, emigrated after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution. — 152
Page me39.684
Hippocrates (c. 460-c. 377 B.C.) — Greek physician, father of medicine. — 344
Page me39.684
Hirsch, Wilhelm — Hamburg shop assistant, Prussian police agent in London in the early 1850s. — 9, 41, 59, 66, 218, 222-24, 232-34, 240-44, 266, 301-04, 312, 313, 315, 318, 319, 321, 324, 330, 335, 583
Page me39.684
Hochstuhl — German democrat, emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 66, 72
Page me39.684
Hodde, Lucien de la (Delahodde) (1808-1865) — French writer, member of secret revolutionary societies during the Restoration and the July monarchy, police agent. — 52
Page me39.684
Hoffstetter, Gustav von (1818-1874) — Swiss army officer and military writer, took part in the war against the Sonderbund (1847), fought in

Page Break me39.685
Garibaldi's army in 1849. — 103
Page me39.685
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 128
Page me39.685
Holyoake, George Jacob (1817-1906) — English journalist, reformist, Owenite and Chartist in the 1830s and 1840s, prominent figure in the cooperative movement. — 196
Page me39.685
Hontheim, Richard von (d. 1857) — Cologne lawyer, counsel for the defence in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 222, 228, 231
Page me39.685

Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 281, 291, 465
Page me39.685
Horner, Leonard (1785-1864) — English geologist and public figure; factory inspector (1833-56), member of the Factories Inquiry Commission in 1833 and of the Children's Employment Commission in 1841; took the side of the workers. — 189
Page me39.685
Hoyer, Johann Gottfried von (1767-1848) — Prussian general and military historian. — 160
Page me39.685
Hoyoll, Philipp (b. 1816) — German artist; émigré in Manchester in the 1850s. — 554
Page me39.685
Hudson, J.W. — secretary of the Athenaeum club in Manchester in the 1850s. — 209, 233
Page me39.685
Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885) — French writer; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic, opposed Louis Bonaparte, banished from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 524, 555
Page me39.685
Hühnerbein, Friedrich Wilhelm (born c. 1817) — German tailor, member of the Communist League and of the Committee of Public Safety during the Elberfeld uprising in May 1849. — 28
Page me39.685
Hülsemann, Baron — diplomatic representative of the Austrian government in the USA at the end of 1851 and in the first half of 1852. — 117
Page me39.685
Hume, Joseph (1777-1855) — British politician, a radical leader, M.P. — 59, 284
Page me39.685
Hunt, Thornton Leigh (1810-1873) — English radical bourgeois journalist, took part in the Chartist movement in the 1840s and 1850s. — 196
Page me39.685
Huzel, Jacob (born c. 1820) — German teacher; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA, sided with Marx and Engels in the early 1850s, friend of Adolph Cluss. — 92, 139, 140, 149, 150, 152, 166, 265, 336, 575
Page me39.685
Huzzelwitt — German refugee in the USA in the 1850s. — 92

Page me39.685
I

Page me39.685
Imandt, Peter (born c. 1824) — German teacher, took part in the Baden uprising of 1849; member of the Communist League; emigrated to Switzerland, later lived in London; supporter of Marx and Engels. — 122, 125, 151, 154-56, 158, 161, 162, 167, 205, 207, 224, 233, 235, 241, 243, 274, 275, 290, 313, 350, 356, 372, 386, 401, 417, 442, 446, 468, 478, 480, 482, 498, 543, 545, 573, 574, 584, 589, 590

Page me39.685
Immermann, Karl Leberecht (1796-1840) — German writer, journalist and critic; prominent figure in the development of the German theatre. — 262
Page me39.685
Iskander Bey (Alexander Ilinski) (1810-1861) — Polish-born Turkish general; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, after its defeat emigrated to Turkey; commanded Turkish troops on the Danube (1853-54), in the Crimea (1855) and in the Caucasus (1855-56). — 470

Page me39.685
J

Page me39.685
Jacobi, Abraham (1830-1919) — German physician, member of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), emigrated to England (1853) and later to the USA, disseminated Marxism

Page Break me39.686
there, fought in the American Civil War on the side of the Union; President of the Medical Academy in New York (1885-89). — 20, 212, 351-53, 355, 358, 372, 375, 402, 403, 542, 587
Page me39.686
Jacoby, Johann (1805-1877) — German radical journalist and politician, a Left-wing leader in the Prussian National Assembly (1848). — 353
Page me39.686
Jellachich (Jellacic), Josef, Count (1801-1859) — Austrian general, Ban of Croatia, Dalmatia and Slavonia (1848-59), took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary and Austria. — 460
Page me39.686
Jenni, Samuel Friedrich (1809-1849) — Swiss publisher, radical, editor of the comic newspaper Der Gukkasten (Berne). — 292
Page me39.686
Jérôme — see Bonaparte, Jérôme
Page me39.686
Joest, Karl — Cologne manufacturer, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206, 559, 561
Page me39.686
Johnson, A. — Bank of England clerk, acquaintance of Ferdinand Freiligrath. — 32, 37, 43, 131, 146, 147, 152, 227
Page me39.686
Joinville, François Ferdinand Philippe Louis Marie, duc d'Orléans, prince de (1818-1900) — French admiral, son of Louis Philippe; emigrated to England after the February 1848 revolution. — 129, 200, 222
Page me39.686

Jomini, Henri, Baron von (1779-1869) — Swiss-born general in the French and later the Russian army, military theoretician, author of works on strategy and military history. — 305
Page me39.686
Jones, Ernest Charles (1819-1869) — prominent figure in the English labour movement, proletarian poet and journalist, Left Chartist leader, editor of The Northern Star, Notes to the People and The People's Paper; friend of Marx and Engels. — 3, 11, 15, 30, 37, 38, 42, 43, 56, 59, 60, 67, 70, 72, 75, 77, 89, 93, 96, 99, 107, 117, 136, 140, 150, 162, 175, 195, 207, 260, 266, 276, 319, 325, 350, 355, 357, 369, 371, 378, 389, 394, 397, 399, 401, 417, 482, 483, 502, 521-23, 525, 527, 536, 547, 557, 560, 562
Page me39.686
Jones, Jane (d. 1857) — wife of Ernest Jones. — 547
Page me39.686
Jones, Richard (1790-1855) — English economist. — 62
Page me39.686
Jones, Sir William (1746-1794) — English Orientalist and lawyer, author of works on Oriental languages and literature. — 341
Page me39.686
Jordan, Wilhelm (1819-1904) — German author, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing and later Centre) (1848). — 199
Page me39.686
Julius, Gustav (1810-1851) — German democratic journalist, 'true socialist'. — 236
Page me39.686
Jung, Georg Gottlob (1814-1886) — German writer, Young Hegelian, responsible publisher of the Rheinische Zeitung, democrat; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848, later a national-liberal. — 207, 223, 581
Page me39.686
Junius — see Francis, Sir Philipp
Page me39.686
Juta, Jaan Carel (b. 1824) — Dutch merchant, brother-in-law of Karl Marx, husband of his sister Louise. — 350, 351, 406
Page me39.686
Juta, Louise (1821-c. 1865) — Karl Marx's sister, Jaan Carel Juta's wife. — 350, 351

Page me39.686
K

Page me39.686
Kamm, Friedrich (d. 1867) — German brushmaker, democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849, emigrated to Switzerland after the defeat of the revolution, member of the German Workers' Society in Geneva, emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 152, 204
Page me39.686
Kant, Immanuel (1724-1804) — German philosopher. — 412
Page me39.686

Karger — German democrat, refugee in the USA in the 1850s, contributor to the German-language newspaper Pionier. — 433
Page me39.686
Kausler, Franz Georg Friedrich von (1794-1848) — German military historian. — 159

Page Break me39.687
Page me39.687
Kellner, Gottlieb Theodor (1819-1898) — German democratic journalist, took part in the democratic movement in Cassel during the 1848-49 revolution, publisher of Die Hornisse (1848-50); emigrated to the USA in 1851, editor of Die Reform (1853-54) and publisher of the Philadelphia Demokrat (from 1856). — 273, 312, 318, 326, 349, 366, 428, 583
Page me39.687
Keogh, William Nicholas (1817-1878) — Irish lawyer and politician, a leader of the Irish Brigade in Parliament, repeatedly held high judicial posts in Ireland. — 516
Page me39.687
Khrulev, Stepan Alexandrovich (1807-1870) — Russian general, army commander on the Danube and in the Crimea during the Crimean war, distinguished himself at the defence of Sevastopol. — 470
Page me39.687
Kinkel, Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and journalist, democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, sentenced to life imprisonment by a Prussian court, escaped from prison and emigrated to England (1850); a leader of petty-bourgeois refugees in London; opposed Marx and Engels. — 6, 15, 16, 21, 23, 31, 34, 42, 52, 71, 72, 73-74, 77, 80, 92, 94, 95, 98, 100, 107, 114, 118, 119, 121, 125, 136, 138-43, 148-57, 158, 161, 162, 164, 166, 167, 170, 172, 173, 180, 194, 196, 205, 206, 209, 213, 224, 233, 235, 236, 241, 245, 260-62, 265-66, 273, 274, 283, 304, 308, 313-17, 322, 331, 336, 353, 435, 471, 555, 567-69, 573-75
Page me39.687
Kinkel, Johanna (née Mockel) (1810-1858) — German writer, wife of Gottfried Kinkel. — 141, 164, 313, 555, 568
Page me39.687
Kinski, Countess (née Zichy) (b. 1824) — Austrian noblewoman. — 194
Page me39.687
Kirchmann, Julius Hermann von (1802-1884) — German lawyer, writer and philosopher; radical; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848; deputy to the Second Chamber in 1849; later member of the Progressist Party. — 125
Page me39.687
Kiss, Miklós (1820-1902) — Hungarian army officer, democrat, refugee, Kossuth's agent in France and Italy; maintained contact with Bonapartist circles. — 171, 194, 268
Page me39.687
Klapka, Georg (1820-1892) — general, commanded one of the Hungarian revolutionary armies in 1848-49, commandant of the Komorn fortress (June-September 1849); emigrated in 1849, maintained contact with Bonapartist circles in the 1850s; returned to Hungary after the amnesty (1867). — 101, 106, 198, 311, 460
Page me39.687

Klein, Carl Wilhelm — German worker, took part in the Elberfeld and Solingen uprisings of 1849, member of the Communist League; emigrated to the USA (1852), helped to organise workers' associations there; active in the working-class movement in Germany in the 1860s and 1870s, member of the First International. — 365, 367, 390, 391, 398
Page me39.687
Klein, Johann Jacob (c. 1818-c. 1896) — physician in Cologne, member of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), acquitted. — 20
Page me39.687
Klose, G. — German refugee living in London, member of the Communist League, supported Marx during the split of the League in 1850. — 124
Page me39.687
Knesebeck, Karl Friedrich, Baron von der (1768-1848) — Prussian field marshal-general, took part in the wars against Napoleon. — 538
Page me39.687
Köppen, Karl Friedrich (1808-1863) — German radical journalist and historian; Young Hegelian. — 563
Page me39.687
Korff, Hermann — Prussian officer; democrat; discharged from the army for his political views (1847); responsible publisher of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); later emigrated to the USA. — 118-20, 160
Page me39.687
Korn, Philipp — Hungarian bookseller and writer, commanded the German Legion of the Hungarian revolutionary army during the 1848-49 revolution; after its defeat emigrated to

Page Break me39.688
Turkey and then to England; returned to Hungary in 1860. — 548, 553
Page me39.688
Ko&sa;cielski, Wladyslaw (1818-1895) — Polish democrat, emigrant, general in the Turkish army under the name of Sefer Pasha (1850s). — 360, 546
Page me39.688
Ko&sa;ciuszko, Tadeusz Andrzej Bonawentura (1746-1817) — prominent figure in the Polish national liberation movement in the 1790s; took part in the American War of Independence in 1776-83; leader of the Polish uprising of 1794. — 68
Page me39.688
Kossuth, Lajos (1802-1894) — leader of the Hungarian national liberation movement, head of the Hungarian revolutionary government during the 1848-49 revolution; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and later to England and the USA; sought support among Bonapartist circles in the 1850s. — 13, 21, 30-31, 70, 73-74, 101, 106, 128, 131, 141, 150, 151, 153, 158, 170, 171, 194, 197, 212, 237, 246, 261, 267-68, 269, 278-81, 283-84, 290, 291, 294, 299, 302, 304, 310, 316, 318, 356, 401, 441, 448, 504, 586
Page me39.688
Kothes, D. — Cologne merchant, democrat; witness for the defence in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 215, 216, 228, 232, 239, 242, 302
Page me39.688

Kräusler — Prussian professor, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 207
Page me39.688
Kriege, Hermann (1820-1850) — German journalist, 'true socialist', member of the League of the Just; from 1845 to 1848 lived in emigration in New York where he founded and edited the newspaper Der Volks-Tribun; active in democratic organisations during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; again emigrated to the USA after its defeat. — 353
Page me39.688
Krogh, Gerhard Christoph von (1785-1860) — Danish general, commander-in-chief of the Danish army (July 1848-April 1849, 1850) in the Schleswig-Holstein war. — 452
Page me39.688
Küntzel, H. — Prussian army officer, military engineer, author of a fortification manual. — 103

Page me39.688
L

Page me39.688
Lafayette (La Fayette), Marie Joseph Paul Yves Roch Gilbert Motier, Marquis de (1757-1834) — French general, took part in the American War of Independence and the French Revolution; a leader of the moderate constitutionalists (Feuillants); took part in the July revolution of 1830. — 485
Page me39.688
La Ferronnays, Auguste Pierre Marie Ferron, comte de (1777-1842) — French politician and diplomat, ambassador to Copenhagen (1817) and St. Petersburg (1819-27), Foreign Minister (1828-29). — 495
Page me39.688
Lagarde, Augustin Marie Balthazar Charles Pelletier, comte de (b. 1780) — French general and diplomat, ambassador to Madrid (1820-23). — 494
Page me39.688
Lamennais (La Mennais), Hugues Félicité Robert de (1782-1854) — French priest, writer, ideologist of Christian socialism. — 31, 71, 497
Page me39.688
Lamoriciére, Christophe Léon Louis Juchault de (1806-1865) — French general, moderate republican; suppressed the June uprising of 1848; War Minister in the Cavaignac Government (June-December 1848); deputy to the Legislative and Constituent Assemblies; banished after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 200, 482
Page me39.688
Lampon — English journalist, contributor to The Times. — 277
Page me39.688
Lanckoronski, Count — Polish refugee in London, agent of the Russian government. — 172, 301
Page me39.688
Landolt, Ernestine — see Liebknecht, Ernestine
Page me39.688

L'Aspée, Henry de — Wiesbaden police official, emigrated to London in the early 1850s, helped to expose provocative methods used by the Prussian authorities in staging the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 316
Page me39.688
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German writer and lawyer; prominent

Page Break me39.689
figure in the German working-class movement; participant in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49); a founder of the General Association of German Workers (1863). — 46, 76, 88, 290, 293, 334, 339, 350, 354, 417-18, 419, 422, 430-33, 478, 481, 491, 502, 511, 514, 521, 543, 553, 556, 557, 588
Page me39.689
Law, John (1671-1729) — Scottish economist and financier, Director-General of Finance in France (1719-20); notorious for his speculative scheme (issuing of paper money), which ended in a complete failure. — 263
Page me39.689
Lawley, Francis Charles (1825-1901) — British journalist, Gladstone's private secretary (1852-54); the Times correspondent in the USA (1854-65). — 518
Page me39.689
Ledru-Rollin, Alexandre Auguste (1807-1874) — French journalist and politician, a leader of the petty-bourgeois democrats, editor of La Réforme; Minister of the Interior in the Provisional Government (February-May 1848), deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies where he headed the Montagne party; emigrated to England after the demonstration of 13 June 1849. — 31, 42, 50, 71, 73, 135, 136, 141, 246, 282, 295, 296, 299, 300, 317, 388, 401, 433, 459
Page me39.689
Le Flô, Adolphe Emmanuel Charles (1804-1887) — French general, politician and diplomat, representative of the Party of Order, deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic. — 48
Page me39.689
Legendre, Louis (1752-1797) — prominent figure in the French Revolution, a leader of the Right-wing Jacobins, friend of Danton. — 521
Page me39.689
Lehmann, Albert — German worker residing in London, leading figure in the League of the Just and the German Workers' Educational Society in London, later member of the Communist League, after its split (1850) belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group and its Central Authority. — 41-42
Page me39.689
Lehon, Charles Amé Joseph, comte de (1792-1868) — Belgian politician and diplomat, envoy to Paris (1831-42), enjoyed protection at the court of the Orleans. — 47
Page me39.689
Lehon, comtesse — wife of Charles Lehon, lived in Paris in the 1830s-1850s, enjoyed protection at the court of the Orleans. — 47
Page me39.689

Lehon, Louis Xavier Léopold, comte de (1832-1879) — French politician, Bonapartist, Chef de Bureau of Minister of the Interior Morny (from 2 December 1851), member of the Corps législatif (from 1856), son of Charles Lehon. — 47-48
Page me39.689
Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm, Baron von (1646-1716) — German philosopher and mathematician. — 440
Page me39.689
Leiden, Kosmos Damian — wine-merchant in Cologne, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 207, 238
Page me39.689
Lelewel, Joachim (1786-1861) — Polish historian and revolutionary, took part in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, a leader of the democratic wing of Polish emigrants in 1847-48. — 172, 563
Page me39.689
Lenchen — see Demuth, Helene
Page me39.689
Leroux, Pierre (1797-1871) — French writer; utopian socialist, representative of Christian socialism; emigrant in England in 1851-52. — 71, 73, 74
Page me39.689
Leroy, Achille — see Saint-Arnaud, Armand Jacques Achille Leroy de
Page me39.689
Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729-1781) — German writer, critic and philosopher of the Enlightenment. — 345
Page me39.689
Leven — Cologne merchant, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 207, 238
Page me39.689
Lichnowski, Felix Maria, Prince von (1814-1848) — Silesian landowner, Prussian army officer, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right wing); killed during the September 1848 uprising in Frankfurt. — 225
Page me39.689
Liebknecht, Ernestine (d. 1867) —

Page Break me39.690
Wilhelm Liebknecht's first wife. — 485-86
Page me39.690
Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, took part in the 1848-49 revolution, member of the Communist League and the First International, one of the founders and leaders of the German Social-Democratic Party; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 86, 223, 232, 244, 275, 290, 386, 485, 559, 577
Page me39.690
Lieven, Darya (Dorothea) Khristoforovna, Princess (1785-1857) — wife of the Russian diplomat Khristofor Andreyevich Lieven; hostess of political salons in London and Paris. — 204, 266, 431
Page me39.690

Lieven, Khristofor Andreyevich, Prince (1774-1839) — Russian diplomat, envoy to Berlin (1810-12), ambassador to London (1812-34). — 431
Page me39.690
Liévre, Eugéne — French democrat, supporter of Hermann Kriege in the 1840s, emigrant in the USA in the 1850s. — 323, 324, 542
Page me39.690
Lincoln, H.J. — editor of The Daily News. — 423-26, 427
Page me39.690
Lindenau, Bernhard August (1779-1854) — astronomer and statesman in Saxony, moderate liberal; Minister of the Interior (1831-34), Prime Minister (1831-43). — 462
Page me39.690
Linton, William James (1812-1897) — English engraver, poet and journalist; democrat; republican; publisher of The Leader; sympathised with the Right-wing Chartists, contributed under the pen-name Spartacus to Chartist publications; lived in the USA from 1866. — 107
Page me39.690
List, Friedrich (1789-1846) — German economist, advocated protectionism. — 45, 147
Page me39.690
Loch, George — candidate for Manchester in the 1852 elections to Parliament. — 111
Page me39.690
Lochner, Georg (born c. 1824) — carpenter; active in the German working-class movement, member of the Communist League and later of the General Council of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 15, 372
Page me39.690
Löhr, Karl — Bavarian army officer, wrote a book on the military art in Ancient Greece and Rome. — 160
Page me39.690
Louis IX, 'Saint' (1214-1270) — King of France (1226-1270). — 497
Page me39.690
Louis XV (1710-1774) — King of France (1715-1774). — 489
Page me39.690
Louis XVIII (Louis le Désiré) (1755-1824) — King of France (1814-15, 1815-24). — 492, 494, 496, 497
Page me39.690
Louis Napoleon — see Napoleon III
Page me39.690
Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orleans, King of the French (1830-48). — 10, 17, 27, 295, 388, 422, 447, 456, 496, 509
Page me39.690
Lowe, Robert, Viscount Sherbrooke (1811-1892) — British statesman and journalist, contributor to The Times; Whig and later Liberal; M.P.; Vice-President of the Board of Trade (1855-58). — 277
Page me39.690
Löwe, Wilhelm (known as Löwe of Calbe, after the Prussian district of Calbe, which he represented in the Frankfurt National Assembly) (1814-1886) — German democratic politician, Vice-President of the Frankfurt National Assembly, adhered to the Left wing; after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution left Germany, but returned after the amnesty of 1861; sympathised with the progressists. — 80, 92, 96, 150, 154, 224, 274, 300, 370, 547

Page me39.690
Löwenthal — Frankfurt am Main publisher in the 1840s and 1850s. — 99, 239
Page me39.690
Lüders, Alexander Nikolayevich, Count (1790-1874) — Russian general, commanded a corps on the Danube (1853-54) and the Southern army (1855); commander-in-chief of the army in the Crimea (early 1856). — 470
Page me39.690
Lüders, Wilhelm — German democratic journalist, contributed to democratic newspapers in the 1840s and 1850s; refugee in London. — 5, 6, 567
Page me39.690
Lüning, Otto (1818-1868) — German

Page Break me39.691
physician and journalist, 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s, national-liberal after 1866. — 97
Page me39.691
Lupus — see Wolff, Wilhelm
Page me39.691
Lütgen, A. — author of Feldzug der Schleswig-Holsteinischen Armee und Marine im Jahre 1850, a book about the war between Schleswig-Holstein and Denmark. — 451
Page me39.691
Lycurgus — legendary Spartan law-giver said to have lived in the 9th-8th centuries B.C. — 195

Page me39.691
M

Page me39.691
Maas, Benjamin (1822-1891) — German physician, utopian socialist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA after its defeat. — 52
Page me39.691
MacCulloch, John Ramsay (1789-1864) — Scottish economist who vulgarised David Ricardo's theories. — 62, 540
Page me39.691
MacGowan, Dougal — English printer; radical; supported the Chartists and printed The Northern Star (1837-45), later became its owner (January-April 1852); a creditor of Ernest Jones. — 162, 482
Page me39.691
Machiavelli, Niccoló (1469-1527) — Italian politician, historian and writer. — 31, 125
Page me39.691
Madier — French mechanic; democrat; emigrated to Britain in the early 1850s. — 10, 25, 271
Page me39.691

Mahmud II (1785-1839) — Sultan of Turkey (1808-39). — 394
Page me39.691
Majer, Adolph (born c. 1819) — German journalist and chemist, agent-provocateur who infiltrated into the Communist League; emissary of the separatist Willich-Schapper group in France in late 1850 and 1851; one of the accused on the case of the so-called Franco-German plot in Paris in February 1852. — 199
Page me39.691
Malingre — Kossuth's Paris correspondent. — 268, 270
Page me39.691
Mallarmet — French worker, socialist, chairman of the Fraternity communist club in Paris in 1848, emigrated to England after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution. — 71
Page me39.691
Malmesbury, James Howard Harris, Earl of (1807-1889) — British statesman, Tory, later Conservative, Foreign Secretary (1852, 1858-59). — 446
Page me39.691
Malthus, Thomas Robert (1766-1834) — English clergyman and economist, author of a population theory. — 62, 345, 382
Page me39.691
Manteuffel, Otto Theodor, Baron von (1805-1882) — Prussian statesman, Minister of the Interior (1848-50), Prime Minister, and Minister of Foreign Affairs (1850-58). — 132, 296, 349
Page me39.691
Mariotti — see Gallenga, Antonio
Page me39.691
Marx, Edgar (Musch) (1847-1855) — Karl Marx's son. — 117, 406, 421, 453, 454, 457, 524, 528, 529, 530, 533, 541, 543, 549, 569, 578, 581, 590
Page me39.691
Marx, Eleanor (Tussy) (1855-1898) — Karl Marx's youngest daughter, prominent figure in the British and international working-class movement; married Eduard Aveling in 1884. — 509, 511, 515, 521, 524
Page me39.691
Marx, Francis Joseph Peter (1816-1876) — British conservative journalist; landowner; friend and associate of David Urquhart. — 360, 361, 363, 439-40
Page me39.691
Marx, Franziska (1851-1852) — Karl Marx's daughter. — 78, 79, 84
Page me39.691
Marx, Heinrich (1777-1838) — Karl Marx's father, lawyer and Counsellor of Justice in Trier. — 287, 579
Page me39.691
Marx, Heinrich Guido (1849-1850) — Karl Marx's son. — 575
Page me39.691
Marx, Henriette (née Pressburg) (1787-1863) — Karl Marx's mother. — 50, 183, 481, 581
Page me39.691
Marx, Jenny (née von Westphalen) (1814-1881) — Karl Marx's wife. — 1, 3, 5, 10, 35, 42, 50, 60, 65, 70, 79, 84, 89, 97, 100, 116, 117, 124, 131, 133, 138, 148, 159, 181, 183-

86, 189, 198, 209, 213, 216, 237, 241, 252, 272, 286, 289, 303, 315, 322, 350, 354, 356, 364, 371, 375, 377, 385, 402, 408, 457, 461, 462-65, 467, 469, 478, 479, 481, 490, 500, 506-08, 511, 515, 521, 522, 525-26, 529, 541, 546, 554, 555, 557, 559, 561, 583, 585-90

Page Break me39.692
Page me39.692
Marx, Jenny (1844-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest daughter; journalist; active in the international working-class movement; married Charles Longuet in 1872. — 23, 181, 421, 440, 453, 454, 541, 569, 578, 590
Page me39.692
Marx, Laura (1845-1911) — Karl Marx's second daughter; married Paul Lafargue in 1868; active in the French working-class movement. — 185, 186, 421, 453, 454, 541, 569, 578, 590
Page me39.692
Marx, Louise — see Juta, Louise
Page me39.692
Massey, Gerald (1828-1907) — English poet, sympathised with the Chartists; editor of the newspaper The Spirit of Freedom (1849); contributed, under the pen-names Bandiera and Spirit of Freedom, to Harney's Chartist publications The Red Republican and The Friend of the People; was influenced by Christian socialism and the reformist cooperative movement; withdrew from the working-class movement in the mid-1850s. — 30
Page me39.692
Massol, Marie Alexandre (1805-1875) — French journalist; utopian socialist; contributed to the newspapers La Réforme and Voix du Peuple (1848-50); friend of Proudhon. — 31, 51, 67, 73, 74, 166, 180, 182, 186, 189, 196, 207, 260
Page me39.692
Maupas, Charlemagne Émile de (1818-1888) — French lawyer, Bonapartist; Prefect of the Paris police (1851); an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of Police (1852-53). — 17, 268
Page me39.692
Mayne Reid — see Reid, Thomas Mayne
Page me39.692
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — Italian revolutionary, a leader of the national liberation movement in Italy, head of the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic (1849); an organiser of the Central Committee of European Democracy in London in 1850; sought support of the Bonapartists in the early 1850s but later opposed Bonapartism. — 31, 34, 42, 46, 56, 59, 71, 73, 74, 76, 101, 106, 107, 135, 136, 141-42, 170, 172, 246, 268, 278-82, 283-84, 290, 295, 299, 315, 321, 371, 401, 454, 458, 459
Page me39.692
McElrath, Thomas (1807-1888) — American lawyer, publisher and politician, supported the abolitionists; co-founder and business manager (1841-57) of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 387
Page me39.692
Meiners, Christoph (1747-1810) — German historian, wrote a number of works on the history of culture. — 207
Page me39.692

Metaxas, Andreas, count (1786-1860) — Greek statesman and diplomat, Prime Minister (1843-44), ambassador to Constantinople (1850-54). — 447
Page me39.692
Metternich-Winneburg, Clemens Wenzel Lothar, Prince von (1773-1859) — Austrian statesman and diplomat, Minister of Foreign Affairs (1809-21), Chancellor (1821-48), organiser of the Holy Alliance. — 494
Page me39.692
Mevissen, Gustav von (1815-1899) — German banker and politician, a leader of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie in the 1840s. — 284
Page me39.692
Meyen, Eduard (1812-1870) — German journalist, Young Hegelian; emigrated to England after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution. — 124, 151, 154, 225, 304, 447, 497, 555, 568, 574, 590
Page me39.692
Meyer — an acquaintance of Marx and Engels. — 411, 421, 443, 478, 561
Page me39.692
Meyer (Mayer), Joseph — German tailor; emigrated to England in the early 1850s; supporter of Willich; emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 41-42, 277
Page me39.692
Mieroslawski, Ludwik (1814-1878) — prominent figure in the Polish national liberation movement, took part in the insurrection of 1830-31 and in the 1848-49 revolution in Poland, Italy and Germany; later, a leader of the moderate wing of Polish democratic emigrants; sympathised with Bonapartism. — 138
Page me39.692
Mill, James (1773-1836) — Scottish philosopher (follower of Bentham), and economist, adherent of Ricardo's theory. — 62
Page me39.692
Miller, Johann Martin (1750-1814) — German poet and writer, representative of sentimentalism in German literature. — 74

Page Break me39.693
Page me39.693
Millerbacher, August Joseph — Austrian postal official, shareholder of a publishing-house in Prague. — 160
Page me39.693
Mina — see Espoz y Mina
Page me39.693
Minié, Claude Étienne (1804-1879) — French army officer, inventor of a new type of rifle adopted by the French army in 1852. — 12
Page me39.693
Minutoli, Julius, Baron von (1805-1860) — Prussian official and diplomat; chief of the Berlin police (1847-48), Consul-General in Spain and Portugal (1853-59). — 540
Page me39.693
Miquel, Johannes (1828-1901) — German lawyer, politician and banker, member of the Communist League up to 1852, later a national-liberal leader. — 478, 480
Page me39.693

Mirbach, Otto von (born c. 1800) — retired Prussian artillery officer, democrat, participant in the 1848-49 revolution; commandant of Elberfeld during the May 1849 uprising; left Germany after its defeat. — 121, 559, 560
Page me39.693
Mirkhond, Mohammed bin Khäwandshäh bin Hahmüd (1433-1498) — Persian historian. — 341-42
Page me39.693
Miskowsky, Henryk Ludvic (d. 1854) — Polish army officer, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; emigrated to Turkey after its defeat, later lived in London. — 401, 448, 450, 586
Page me39.693
Mohammed Ali (or Mehemet Ali) (1769-1849) — Viceroy of Egypt (1805-49), introduced a series of progressive reforms. — 31, 457
Page me39.693
Mohammed (Muhammed, Mahomed) (c. 570-632) — founder of Islam. — 327, 332, 340
Page me39.693
Moltke, Helmuth Karl Bernhard, Count von (1800-1891) — Prussian army officer, subsequently field marshal-general, military writer, ideologist of Prussian militarism and chauvinism. — 435
Page me39.693
Monk (Monck), George, Duke of Albemarle (1608-1670) — English general and statesman; at first a royalist, then served in Cromwell's army; helped to restore the Stuarts to power in 1660. — 485
Page me39.693
Monsell, William (1812-1894) — Irish liberal, a leader of the Irish group in Parliament; Clerk of Ordnance (1852-57). — 516
Page me39.693
Montalembert, Charles Forbes René de Tryon, comte de (1810-1870) — French politician and writer; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; Orleanist, leader of the Catholic party; supported Louis Bonaparte in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 49, 311
Page me39.693
Monteith, William (1790-1864) — British general, diplomat and military historian; fought in the Russo-Persian war (1804-13) on the side of Persia; military and diplomatic adviser to the Persian government during the Russo-Persian war of 1826-28; criticised Palmerston's foreign policy in the 1840s. — 440
Page me39.693
Montez, Lola (1818-1861) — adventuress and dancer, mistress of Ludwig I, King of Bavaria in 1846-48. — 300
Page me39.693
Montijo, Eugénie — see Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzman, comtesse de Teba
Page me39.693
Montmorency, Mathieu Jean Félicité, comte (1822), duc de (1767-1826) — French general and reactionary politician; Foreign Minister (1821-22), participant in the Verona Congress of the Holy Alliance (1822). — 493

Page me39.693
Moreau, Jean Victor Marie (1763-1813) — French general, fought in the wars of the French Republic against the coalition of European states. — 310
Page me39.693
Morny, Charles Auguste Louis Joseph, duc de (1811-1865) — French politician, Bonapartist, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (December 1851-January 1852); President of the Corps legislatif (1854-56 and 1857-65), half-brother of Napoleon III. — 12, 17, 47

Page Break me39.694
Page me39.694
Morris, Mowbray (1818-1874) — English publisher, manager of The Times from the late 1840s. — 276
Page me39.694
Mott, Lucrezia (1793-1880) — public figure in the USA, leader of women's movement for the abolition of slavery in the USA. — 371
Page me39.694
Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus (1756-1791) — Austrian composer. — 556
Page me39.694
Müller, Franz Joseph — legal counsellor in Cologne; conservative; father-in-law of Roland Daniels. — 219
Page me39.694
Müller-Tellering, Eduard von (born c. 1808) — German lawyer and journalist, democrat; contributed to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to England, published slanderous accusations against Marx and Engels; emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 80, 86, 87, 96, 263, 274, 331, 336
Page me39.694
Münch-Bellinghausen, Franz Theodor, Baron (b. 1787) — Prussian official, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206
Page me39.694
Musch — see Marx, Edgar

Page me39.694
N

Page me39.694
Nadaud, Martin (1815-1898) — French bricklayer, journalist, follower of Proudhon; deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), adherent of the Montagne party; was banished after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, lived in England up to 1859. — 73, 417
Page me39.694
Napier, Sir Charles (1786-1860) — British admiral, fought in the wars against Portugal (1810 and 1833-34) and in Syria (1840); commanded the British fleet in the Baltic in 1854; M.P. — 458, 460, 546

Page me39.694
Napier, Sir Charles James (1782-1853) — British general; fought in the Peninsular war (1808-14), commanded the British troops that conquered the Sind (1842-43), ruler of the Sind (1843-47). — 310
Page me39.694
Napier, Sir Joseph (1804-1882) — British politician, Tory M.P., Attorney-General for Ireland (1852) in the Derby Cabinet, Lord Chancellor for Ireland (1858-59). — 517
Page me39.694
Napier, Sir William Francis Patrick (1785-1860) — British general and military historian, fought in the Peninsular war (1808-14). — 424, 490, 501, 506
Page me39.694
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 10, 51, 103, 104, 158, 197, 305, 310, 406, 408, 411, 490, 496, 538
Page me39.694
Napoleon III (Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte) (1808-1873) — Prince, nephew of Napoleon I, President of the Second Republic (December 1848-1851), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 30, 36, 44, 46-49, 51, 54, 68, 70, 77, 82, 84, 106, 122, 126, 166, 171-75, 185, 189, 195, 197, 199, 200, 207, 222, 237, 257, 261, 263, 268, 269, 276-79, 282, 297, 300, 302, 307, 388, 404, 409, 414, 444, 446, 452, 456, 487, 502, 524, 526, 534, 545, 555, 563, 568, 572
Page me39.694
Nasmyth, Charles (1826-1861) — British army officer; war correspondent of The Times at Omer Pasha's headquarters on the Danube (1854); took part in the defence of Silistria. — 472
Page me39.694
Naut, Stephan Adolf — Cologne merchant, responsible publisher of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1849). — 133, 468
Page me39.694
Nemours, Louis Charles Philippe Raphaël d'Orléans, duc de (1814-1896) — son of King Louis Philippe of France; general, took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s and 1840s, emigrated to England after the February 1848 revolution. — 126
Page me39.694
Nesselrode, Karl Vasilyevich, Count (1780-1862) — Russian statesman and diplomat; Foreign Minister (1816-56), Chancellor of State from 1845. — 370
Page me39.694
Newcastle, Henry Pelham Fiennes Pelham Clinton, Duke of (1811-1864) — British statesman, Peelite; Secretary for War and the Colonies (1852-54), Secretary for War (1854-55), and Colonial Secretary

Page Break me39.695
(1859-64). — 455, 520
Page me39.695
Newton, William — British trade-union leader, radical, sympathised with Chartism; co-founder and leader of the Amalgamated Society of Mechanical Engineers. — 196
Page me39.695

Nicholas I (1796-1855) — Emperor of Russia (1825-55). — 44, 45, 53, 143, 285, 334, 362, 410, 414, 423, 424, 446, 518, 519, 524, 525
Page me39.695
Nicholson, Renton (1809-1861) — pub-owner in London, changed his occupation several times. — 486
Page me39.695
Nothjung, Peter (1821-1866) — tailor, member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 20, 134, 137, 143, 212, 231, 238
Page me39.695
Nowaïri (Novaïri), Schéhab-Eddyn-Ahmedibn-Abdulwalhab (c. 1280-c. 1332) — Arabian historian. — 340

Page me39.695
O

Page me39.695
O'Connor, Feargus Edward (1794-1855) — Left-wing Chartist leader, owner and editor of The Northern Star; reformist after 1848. — 15, 31, 67, 547
Page me39.695
O'Flaherty, Edmond — British Treasury official in charge of collecting taxes in Ireland in 1854. — 519
Page me39.695
Omer Pasha (Michael Lattas) (1806-1871) — Turkish general of Croatian origin, commander-in-chief on the Danube (1853-54), in the Crimea (1855) and in the Caucasus (1855-56). — 368, 420, 424, 429, 431, 438, 458, 485, 561
Page me39.695
Opitz, Martin (1597-1639) — German poet and translator, founder and theoretician of classicism in German literature. — 471
Page me39.695
Oppenheim — London banker. — 275
Page me39.695
Oppenheim, Heinrich Bernhard (1819-1880) — German democratic politician, economist and journalist; editor of Die Reform (Berlin) in 1848; refugee in 1849-50; later a national-liberal. — 225, 568
Page me39.695
Orleans — royal dynasty in France (1830-48). — 12, 21, 47-49, 126, 129, 200
Page me39.695
Orleans, Duke of — see Louis Philippe I
Page me39.695
Orleans, prince d' — see Joinville, François Ferdinand Philippe Louis Marie
Page me39.695
Osten Sacken, Dmitry Yerofeyevich, Count (1789-1881) — Russian general; during the Crimean war commander of a corps in the south of Russia (1853-54), and of the Sevastopol garrison (late 1854-55). — 470

Page me39.695
Oswald — German emigrant in London, tobacco merchant. — 151, 154, 173
Page me39.695
Oswald, Eugen (1826-1912) — German democratic journalist; took part in the revolutionary movement in Baden in 1848-49; emigrated to England after its defeat. — 116
Page me39.695
Ottenberger, Joseph (b. 1768) — Austrian scholar, teacher of history in Prague, author of a manual on military science in Ancient Rome. — 160
Page me39.695
Otto I (1815-1867) — King of Greece (1832-62), member of the Bavarian ruling family of Wittelsbach. — 447
Page me39.695
Otto, Carl Wunibald (born c. 1810) — German chemist, member of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848-49) and of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), sentenced to five years imprisonment. — 20, 212
Page me39.695
Otto, Karl Christian (1817-1873) — Danish democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Schleswig-Holstein and Thuringia, emigrated to the USA in 1854. — 458, 461
Page me39.695
Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso) (43 B.C.-c. A.D. 17) — Roman poet. — 199
Page me39.695
Owen, Robert (1771-1858) — British utopian socialist. — 192
Page me39.695
Oxford, Joseph — head of the London firm in which Ferdinand Freiligrath was employed. — 305, 387, 389, 528

Page me39.695
P

Page me39.695
Pacifico, David (1784-1854) — British tradesman of Portuguese origin in Athens. — 456
Page me39.695
Pakington, Sir John Somerset (1799-1880)

Page Break me39.696
— British statesman, Tory, Secretary for War and the Colonies (1852), First Lord of the Admiralty (1858-59, 1866-67), Secretary for War (1867-68). — 295
Page me39.696
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman, Tory, Whig from 1830, Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51), Home Secretary (1852-55), Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65). — 54, 200, 276, 284-85, 295, 373, 378, 385, 387, 390, 392-93, 398, 404, 409-10, 412, 422, 431, 448, 450, 452, 456, 462, 472, 485, 490, 515, 516, 518-20, 523, 525, 555, 586

Page me39.696
Pam — see Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount
Page me39.696
Parish, Henry Headley — British historian in the first half of the nineteenth century. — 455
Page me39.696
Paskievich (Paskiewitsch), Ivan Fyodorovich, Prince (1782-1856) — Russian field marshal-general, fought in wars against Napoleonic France; commander-in-chief (from the summer of 1831) of the Tsarist troops who suppressed the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, Lieutenant (governor) of the Kingdom of Poland from 1832; commander-in-chief of the army which crushed the Hungarian revolution (1849), and of the troops on the western and southern borders of Russia (1854), commanded the Russian army on the Danube (April-June 1854). — 461
Page me39.696
Peel, Sir Robert (1788-1850) — British statesman, moderate Tory, Home Secretary (1822-27, 1828-30), Prime Minister (1834-35, 1841-46), repealed the Corn Laws in 1846. — 195, 284, 368, 432
Page me39.696
Pélissier, Aimable Jean Jacques (1794-1864) — French general, Marshal from 1855; participated in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s-early 1850s; commander-in-chief of the French army in the Crimea (May 1855-July 1856). — 546
Page me39.696
Pellico, Silvio (1789-1854) — Italian writer, arrested in 1820 for his contacts with the Carbonari and sentenced to twenty years imprisonment; released in 1830, published a book describing the hardships of convicts in Austrian prisons (1832); later abandoned politics. — 558
Page me39.696
Perczel, Mór (1811-1899) — Hungarian general, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, after its defeat emigrated to Turkey and in 1851 to England. — 32, 311, 572
Page me39.696
Persigny, Jean Gilbert Victor Fialin, comte (1808-1872) — French statesman, Bonapartist, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (1852-54, 1860-63). — 17, 21, 27
Page me39.696
Peter the Hermit (c. 1050-1115) — French monk and preacher, peasant leader in the First Crusade (1096-99). — 59
Page me39.696
Petermann, August (1822-1878) — German geographer and cartographer, editor of the periodicals Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' Geographischer Anstalt in Gotha (from 1855). — 535, 538
Page me39.696
Petzler, Johann — German democrat; music teacher; refugee in London in the 1850s. — 419
Page me39.696
Pfänder, Karl (c. 1818-1876) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; painter; emigrated to London in 1845, member of the League of the Just, of the Communist League Central Authority, and later of the General Council of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 14, 28, 43, 72, 95, 126, 463, 538, 589

Page me39.696
Piali — see Zerffi, Gustav
Page me39.696
Pieper, Wilhelm (born c. 1826-1899) — German philologist and journalist, member of the Communist League; emigrated to London; was close to Marx and Engels in 1850-53. — 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 16, 22, 23, 29, 33, 37, 67, 71, 117, 146, 175, 179, 183, 184, 186-93, 213, 231, 235, 265, 275, 289, 292, 312, 314, 316, 319, 325, 330,

Page Break me39.697
341, 349, 350-53, 356, 359, 361, 367, 368, 369, 372, 376, 377, 385, 390-97, 406, 411, 421, 428, 429, 434-35, 438, 440, 457, 467, 472, 477, 482, 490, 498, 544, 569, 571, 583, 584, 587
Page me39.697
Pierce. — 482
Page me39.697
Pindar, Eduard — Russian émigré in England in the mid-nineteenth century, an acquaintance of Marx and Engels. — 81, 100, 147, 153, 179, 180, 184, 195, 202, 203
Page me39.697
Pitt, William (the Elder), from 1766 Earl Chatham (1708-1778) — British statesman, a Whig leader; Foreign Secretary and Secretary for War (1756-61), Prime Minister (1766-68). — 487
Page me39.697
Pitt, William (the Younger) (1759-1806) — British statesman, Tory, Prime Minister (1783-1801, 1804-06). — 487, 489
Page me39.697
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 448
Page me39.697
Pleyel — Hungarian army officer, participant in the 1848 revolution in Hungary, emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 214, 215, 310
Page me39.697
Plümicke, J.C. — German army officer, author of Handbuch für die Königlich Preussischen Artillerie-Offiziere. — 305
Page me39.697
Pöckel, Gustav — German refugee in the USA, acquaintance of Edgar von Westphalen. — 542, 545
Page me39.697
Poenisch — acquaintance of Marx in London. — 182, 185
Page me39.697
Poesche, Theodor (1826-1899) — German statistician; democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, after its defeat emigrated to England and then to the USA; co-author with Karl Goepp of a book advocating 'united states of the world' under the aegis of the United States (1852). — 366, 369
Page me39.697

Polignac, Jules Auguste Armand Marie, prince de (1780-1847) — French statesman of the Restoration, Legitimist and clerical; Minister of Foreign Affairs and Prime Minister (1829-30). — 497
Page me39.697
Pompadour, Jeanne Antoinette Poisson le Normant d'Étioles, marquise de (1721-1764) — mistress of King Louis XV of France, protectress of marshal Soubise. — 488
Page me39.697
Pompey (Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus) (106-48 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman. — 349
Page me39.697
Pott, August Friedrich (1802-1887) — German philologist, one of the founders of the comparative-historical method in linguistics. — 462
Page me39.697
Pozzo di Borgo, Karl Osipovich, Count (1764-1842) — Russian diplomat of Corsican descent, envoy (1814-21) and ambassador (1821-35) to Paris, ambassador to London (1835-39). — 494
Page me39.697
Priessnitz, Vincenz (1799-1851) — peasant in Austrian Silesia who discovered and began to use hydropathy. — 106
Page me39.697
Prince of Prussia — see William I
Page me39.697
Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865) — French writer, economist and sociologist; one of the founders of anarchism; deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848). — 46, 74, 77, 135, 166, 182, 207, 257, 260-61, 263, 306, 381
Page me39.697
Prutz, Robert Eduard (1816-1872) — German poet, journalist and literary historian; associated with Young Hegelians; publisher of the journal Deutsches Museum in Leipzig (1851-67). — 391
Page me39.697
Pulszky, Francis (Ferenc) Aurelius (1814-1897) — Polish-born Hungarian politician, writer and archaeologist; participated in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; emigrated after its defeat; contributed to the New-York Daily Tribune in the 1850s; returned to Hungary in 1867 after the amnesty; deputy to the Diet (1867-76, 1884-97). — 106, 289, 291, 293, 295, 299, 367, 369, 405, 418, 485
Page me39.697
Pulszky, Therese (1819-1866) — Hungarian authoress, wife of Francis Pulszky from 1848. — 106, 174, 299
Page me39.697
Putnam, George Palmer (1814-1872) — American publisher and journalist, published (from 1853) Putnam's Monthly Magazine, to which Marx and Engels contributed. — 546

Page Break me39.698
Page me39.698
Püttman, Hermann (1811-1894) — German radical poet and journalist, 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s. — 483

Page me39.698
Pyat, Félix (pen-name Jules Mayret) (1810-1889) — French journalist, playwright and politician; democrat; took part in the 1848 revolution; emigrated in 1849 to Switzerland and later to Belgium and England; was against independent working-class movement; conducted a slander campaign against Marx and the First International; member of the Paris Commune (1871). — 50, 74, 170, 174, 462

Page me39.698
R

Page me39.698
Radetzky, Josef, Count of Radetz (1766-1858) — Austrian field marshal, commanded Austrian troops in Northern Italy (from 1831); suppressed the national liberation movement in Italy (1848-49); Governor-General of the Kingdom of Lombardy and Venetia (1850-56). — 278, 281
Page me39.698
Raffles, Sir Thomas Stamford (1781-1826) — British colonial official; Governor of Java (1811-16). — 348
Page me39.698
Raspail, François Vincent (1794-1878) — French naturalist and writer; socialist; sympathised with the revolutionary proletariat; took part in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848; deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848). — 300, 589
Page me39.698
Raspail (d. 1853) — wife of François Raspail. — 300
Page me39.698
Rath, vom — Cologne manufacturer, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206, 238
Page me39.698
Rau — an officer in Willich's volunteer corps during the 1848-49 revolution. — 336
Page me39.698
Raveaux, Franz (1810-1851) — German politician, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848-49; imperial commissioner in Switzerland, one of the five imperial regents in June 1849; member of the Baden Provisional Government; emigrated to Belgium after the revolution. — 582
Page me39.698
Redcliffe — see Stratford de Redcliffe, Stratford Canning, Viscount
Page me39.698
Reeve, Emilia (d. 1865) — friend and admirer of Alexander Herzen. — 558
Page me39.698
Reeve, Henry (1813-1895) — English journalist and government official, Registrar to the Privy Council in 1853. — 277
Page me39.698
Reichenbach, Oskar, Count (b. 1815) — Silesian landowner; democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49); emigrated to England (1850) and later to America. — 80, 92, 96, 136, 150, 154, 161, 166, 167, 173, 224, 233, 245, 246, 266, 274, 275, 282, 286, 300, 302, 313

Page me39.698
Reid, Thomas Mayne (1818-1883) — British writer. — 280, 290
Page me39.698
Reiff, Wilhelm Joseph (b. 1824) — member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League, expelled from the League in 1850; one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 134, 137
Page me39.698
Reinhardt, Richard (1829-1898) — German poet; emigrated to Paris; Secretary of Heinrich Heine; friend of the Marx family; later a businessman. — 41, 44, 47, 49, 254, 290, 567
Page me39.698
Rémusat, Charles François Marie, comte de (1797-1875) — French statesman and writer, Orleanist, Minister of the Interior (1840), deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; opposed Napoleon III's regime during the Second Empire; Foreign Minister (1871-73). — 47, 130, 132, 200, 222, 263
Page me39.698
Reshid Pasha (1802-1858) — Turkish statesman, repeatedly held the posts of Grand Vizier and Foreign Minister. — 410
Page me39.698
Reuter, Max — Prussian police agent in London in the early 1850s. — 226, 227
Page me39.698
Ribbentrop, Adolph — Prussian legal officer, refugee in Paris in the 1850s, August Ewerbeck's friend. — 87

Page Break me39.699
Page me39.699
Ribeyrolles, Charles (1812-1861) — French democratic journalist and politician, an editor of La Réforme (1846-49); after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to England; editor-in-chief of the newspaper L'Homme (1853-55); emigrated to Brazil in 1858. — 527
Page me39.699
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — English economist. — 62, 345, 372, 378, 381-83, 392
Page me39.699
Ricciardi, Giuseppe, comte (1808-1882) — Italian writer and journalist, took part in the Italian national liberation movement, author of works on the history of Italy. — 541
Page me39.699
Richards, Alfred Bate (1820-1876) — English playwright and journalist, wrote under the pen-name Englishman; opposed Cobden and the Manchester men; engaged in polemics with the Urquhartists in the 1850s. — 317, 373
Page me39.699
Richter — German craftsman, emigrated to England in the 1850s; supporter of Willich. — 28, 33, 43
Page me39.699

Riego y Núñez, Rafael del (1785-1823) — Spanish army officer, participant in the War of Independence (1808-14); a prominent figure in the 1820-23 revolution; executed after its defeat. — 492
Page me39.699
Rings, L.W. — member of the Communist League, refugee in London in the early 1850s, supporter of Marx and Engels. — 28, 223, 372, 394, 577
Page me39.699
Ripley, Roswell Sabine (1823-1887) — American military writer, army officer, general from 1861, took part in the war against Mexico (1846-48). — 498, 500, 503, 506
Page me39.699
Riza Pasha (1809-1859) — Turkish general and statesman, Capudan Pasha (Naval Minister) from December 1853 to January 1854, Seraskier (War Minister) from January 1854 to June 1855. — 408
Page me39.699
Rodbertus-Jagetzow, Johann Karl (1805-1875) — German economist and politician; leader of the Left Centre in the Prussian National Assembly during the 1848-49 revolution; advocated 'state socialism'. — 125
Page me39.699
Roesgen, Charles — employee in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Manchester. — 36, 56, 67, 164, 187, 209, 328, 329, 335, 339, 343, 344
Page me39.699
Römer — German refugee in London. — 499
Page me39.699
Romulus Augustulus (born c. 460) — last Emperor of the West Roman Empire (475-76). — 45
Page me39.699
Ronge, Johannes (1813-1887) — German clergyman, democrat, an initiator of the German Catholics movement; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to England after its defeat. — 42, 92, 96, 154, 173, 194, 207, 210, 213, 266, 499, 548, 553, 555
Page me39.699
Ronge, Bertha Traun (née Meier) — wife of Johannes Ronge. — 74, 555
Page me39.699
Röser, Peter Gerhard (1814-1865) — cigar-maker; prominent figure in the German working-class movement; Vice-President of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848-49); member of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), sentenced to six-year imprisonment; later sympathised with the Lassalleans. — 20, 134, 137, 212, 238, 247, 308
Page me39.699
Rothacker, Wilhelm (1828-1859) — German writer, democrat, member of the Communist League; emigrated to the USA in 1850; editor of the newspaper Hochwächter, editor of the weekly Die Menschenrechte in Cincinnati (from 1853). — 18
Page me39.699
Rothschild, Wilhelm Carl (1828-1901) — one of the Frankfurt Rothschilds, studied at Göttingen University with Wilhelm Pieper. — 343, 583
Page me39.699

Rouland, Gustave (1806-1878) — French statesman, Bonapartist, President of the State Council (1863-64). — 555
Page me39.699
Rózycki, Karol (1789-1870) — Polish army officer, fought in the wars of Napoleonic France and in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, emigrated to France after its defeat. — 138
Page me39.699
Rudolf I (1218-1291) — Holy Roman Emperor (1273-91), founder of the Habsburg dynasty in Austria. — 476

Page Break me39.700
Page me39.700
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist and philosopher, Young Hegelian; published, jointly with Marx, the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher; Marx's ideological opponent after 1844; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; German petty-bourgeois refugee leader in England in the 1850s. — 14, 42, 44, 45, 65, 73, 92, 93, 96, 116, 126, 128, 141, 145-46, 150, 155, 173, 194, 207, 210, 213, 246, 263, 266, 298, 304, 308, 317, 345, 349, 359, 362, 373, 401, 417, 434, 450, 459, 462, 555, 567, 573-75
Page me39.700
Rumpf, E. — German tailor; member of the Communist League; emigrated to London in 1851, supporter of Marx and Engels. — 344
Page me39.700
Rushton, William Lewis — English lawyer and philologist. — 159
Page me39.700
Russell, John Russell, Earl (1792-1878) — British statesman, Whig leader; Prime Minister (1846-52, 1865-66), Foreign Secretary (1852-53, 1859-65), President of the Council (1854-55). — 39, 44, 50, 53, 252, 284, 295, 422, 429, 472, 516-20, 543, 545
Page me39.700
Rutenberg, Adolf (1808-1869) — German journalist, Young Hegelian; member of the editorial board of the Rheinische Zeitung (1842); national-liberal after 1866. — 563

Page me39.700
S

Page me39.700
Sabatier — French emigrant in London in the 1850s; Blanquist. — 32
Page me39.700
Sadleir, John (1814-1856) — Irish banker and politician, a leader of the Irish Brigade in Parliament; Junior Lord of the Treasury (1853). — 516, 518
Page me39.700
Saedt, Otto Joseph Arnold (1816-1886) — Prussian legal officer, Public Prosecutor in Cologne from 1848, prosecutor in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 132, 138, 145, 216, 220, 229, 559, 577
Page me39.700

Saint-Arnaud, Armand Jacques Achille Leroy de (1801-1854) — French general, marshal from 1852; Bonapartist; War Minister (1851-54); an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; commander-in-chief of the French army in the Crimea (1854). — 452, 471, 484, 527
Page me39.700
Sand, George (pen-name of Amadine Lucie Aurore Dupin, baronne Dudevant) (1804-1876) — French writer of social novels; representative of the democratic trend in romanticism. — 359-60, 362
Page me39.700
Santa Anna, Antonio Lopez de (c. 1797-1876) — Mexican general and politician, participant in the War of Independence (1821), President of Mexico (1833-36, 1841-44, 1846-48, 1853-55), commander-in-chief during the war with America (1846-48). — 504
Page me39.700
Sartiges, Étienne Gilbert-Eugéne de (1809-1892) — French diplomat, envoy to Greece, the USA and other countries. — 117
Page me39.700
Sasonow, Nikolai Ivanovich (1815-1862) — Russian journalist, democrat, radical, emigrated in the early 1840s. — 32
Page me39.700
Sassanid (Sassanian) dynasty — ruling dynasty in Persia (3rd-7th cent.). — 340
Page me39.700
Savoye, Henri Charles Joseph (1802-1869) — Palatinate lawyer, democrat; emigrated to France in 1832, taught German there; supporter of Ledru-Rollin; deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 317
Page me39.700
Say, Jean Baptiste (1767-1832) — French economist, representative of vulgar political economy. — 62, 162
Page me39.700
Schabelitz, Jacob Christian (1804-1866) — Swiss publisher and bookseller, father of Jacob Lukas Schabelitz. — 255
Page me39.700
Schabelitz, Jacob Lukas (1827-1899) — Swiss publisher and bookseller, member of the Fraternal Democrats society from 1846, member of the Communist League; maintained contact with Marx and Engels in the late 1840s and the early 1850s. — 255, 264, 272, 275, 282, 287, 289, 292, 296, 298, 324, 579, 585

Page Break me39.701
Page me39.701
Schapper, Karl (1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, a leader of the League of the Just; member of the Central Authority of the Communist League; took part in the revolution of 1848-49 in Germany, a leader of the separatist group after the split in the Communist League in 1850; later a member of the General Council of the First International. — 15, 66, 92, 121, 126, 158, 199, 222, 226, 227, 244, 264, 309, 378, 521
Page me39.701

Scharnhorst, Gerhard Johann David von (1755-1813) — Prussian general and politician; after the defeat of the Prussian army by Napoleon I in 1806, head of the commission for a reform of the army; War Minister (1807-10) and Chief of Staff (1810-13); took an active part in the liberation war of the German people against Napoleonic rule. — 526
Page me39.701
Schärttner — wife of August Schärttner. — 162
Page me39.701
Schärttner, August (1817-1859) — cooper in Hanau, active in the 1848 revolution and the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to London; member of the Communist League, after its split in 1850 joined the separatist Willich-Schapper group and became a member of its Central Authority. — 103, 151, 154, 169, 173, 244, 316, 318
Page me39.701
Schickel, Johann (1827-1909) — shop assistant in Mainz, member of the Communist League; emigrated to the USA in 1849. — 18
Page me39.701
Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759-1805) — German poet, dramatist, historian and philosopher. — 124, 154, 187, 420, 452, 558
Page me39.701
Schily, Victor (1810-1875) — German lawyer, democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to France; member of the First International. — 92, 122, 151, 154, 162, 164, 186, 195, 434, 446
Page me39.701
Schily — brother of Victor Schily. — 187
Page me39.701
Schimmelpfennig, Alexander (1824-1865) — Prussian army officer, democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, left Germany after its defeat; belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group; took part in the American Civil War on the side of the Union. — 73, 92, 114, 125, 135, 151, 154, 204, 213, 224, 266, 297, 300, 313, 427, 433, 436, 439, 441, 443, 444, 558
Page me39.701
Schläger, Eduard — German democratic journalist; refugee in the USA in the 1850s-70s; editor of the Neu-England-Zeitung and publisher of the Deutsch-Amerikaner in the early 1850s; returned to Germany in 1880. — 349, 350, 366
Page me39.701
Schmidt, Ernst Friedrich Franz (d. 1853) — German clergyman, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to the USA after the 1848-49 revolution; supporter of Kossuth. — 52
Page me39.701
Schmolze, Karl Heinrich (1823-1859) — German cartoonist and poet, took part in the 1848-49 revolution; emigrated after its defeat. — 162, 313
Page me39.701
Schnauffer, Karl Heinrich (c. 1823-1854) — German poet and journalist, democrat; took part in the revolutionary movement in Baden in 1848-49, emigrated after the revolution, lived in the USA from 1851, edited the Baltimore Wecker. — 157, 204, 491, 574
Page me39.701

Schneider II, Karl — German lawyer, democrat; President of the Cologne Democratic Society and member of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (1848); deputy to the Second Chamber (extreme Left wing) in 1849; counsel for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 195, 217, 221-24, 226, 228, 231, 234-35, 237, 240, 242, 244
Page me39.701
Schöler, Caroline — friend of the Marx family. — 558
Page me39.701
Schramm, Conrad (Konrad) (c. 1822-1858) — prominent figure in the German working-class movement, member of the Communist League, emigrated to London in 1849; responsible publisher of the Neue

Page Break me39.702
Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 6, 112, 115, 158, 274, 299, 325-26, 336, 542, 545, 569
Page me39.702
Schramm, Rudolf (1813-1882) — German journalist, democrat; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; opposed Marx; supported Bismarck in the 1860s; brother of Conrad Schramm. — 115
Page me39.702
Schulz (d. 1852) — chief of police in Cologne, one of the organisers of the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 142, 197, 227, 252
Page me39.702
Schunck — owner of a Manchester trading firm. — 353
Page me39.702
Schunck — wife of Schunck. — 353
Page me39.702
Schürmann — German lawyer, counsel for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 234
Page me39.702
Schurz, Carl (1829-1906) — German journalist, democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland and then to the USA, subsequently a US statesman. — 74, 95, 125, 154, 167, 168, 172, 194, 197, 236
Page me39.702
Schütz, Jacob Friedrich (1813-1877) — German democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, representative of the Baden Provisional Government in Paris; later a refugee in England, Switzerland and America. — 92, 96, 115
Page me39.702
Schwezler von Lecton — widow of an official resident in Frankfurt am Main. — 225, 226
Page me39.702
Scott, Winfield (1786-1866) — American general, commander-in-chief of the US army (1841-November 1861); during the war against Mexico (1846-48), commanded the army that captured Veracruz and Mexico City. — 407, 501, 503
Page me39.702

Seckendorf, August Heinrich Eduard Friedrich, Baron von (1807-1885) — Prussian legal officer, deputy to the Second Chamber (Centre) in 1849-51; public prosecutor at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 238
Page me39.702
Ségur, Alexandre Joseph Pierre, vicomte de (1756-1805) — French writer. — 208
Page me39.702
Seiler, Sebastian (c. 1810-c. 1890) — German journalist, member of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee in 1846, member of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to London in the early 1850s, moved to the USA in 1856. — 36, 44, 45, 50, 278, 465, 466
Page me39.702
Selim Pasha (Zedlinsky) — Turkish general of Polish descent, commanded the Turkish army on the Danube in 1853-54. — 470
Page me39.702
Senior, Nassau William (1790-1864) — English economist, vulgarised Ricardo's theory. — 62
Page me39.702
Seymour, George Hamilton (1797-1880) — British diplomat, envoy to St. Petersburg (1851-54). — 422, 519
Page me39.702
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English dramatist and poet. — 21, 162, 391, 440, 502, 558
Page me39.702
Shamyl (c. 1798-1871) — leader of the inhabitants of the mountains in Daghestan and Chechnya against the local feudal lords and tsarist colonisers in the 1830s-50s. — 395, 418, 464, 477
Page me39.702
Sidmouth, Henry Addington, Viscount (1757-1844) — British statesman, Tory; Prime Minister and Chancellor of the Exchequer (1801-04); as Home Secretary (1812-21) took repressive measures against the working-class movement. — 54
Page me39.702
Sigel, Albert (1827-1884) — German army officer, journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat, participant in the 1848-49 revolutionary movement in Baden; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to England, and in 1853 to the USA; took part in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 154, 173
Page me39.702
Sigel, Franz (1824-1902) — Baden army officer, democrat; a military leader of the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, then to England and, in 1852, to the USA;

Page Break me39.703
took part in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 151, 158, 198, 310, 417
Page me39.703
Simon, August Heinrich (1805-1860) — German lawyer, journalist and politician; democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; emigrated to Switzerland after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution and became a businessman. — 554

Page me39.703
Simon, Ludwig (1810-1872) — German lawyer, democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents in June 1849; emigrated to Switzerland. — 39, 40, 42, 44, 55, 102
Page me39.703
Sismondi, Jean Charles Léonard Simonde de (1773-1842) — Swiss economist, representative of economic romanticism. — 346
Page me39.703
Smitt, Fyodor Ivanovich (c. 1787-1865) — Russian military historian. — 138, 311, 393
Page me39.703
Soimonov, Fyodor Ivanovich (1800-1854) — Russian general, commanded the Russian army on the Danube and the Crimea during the Crimean war, was killed at the battle of Inkermann. — 470
Page me39.703
Solis y Rivadeneira, Antonio de (1610-1686) — Spanish historian, poet and dramatist. — 501, 503
Page me39.703
Solomon — King of Judaea (c. 974-c. 937 B.C.). — 349
Page me39.703
Soubise, Charles de Rohan, prince de (1715-1787) — Louis XV's favourite; marshal, fought in the Seven Years' War (1756-63), commanded the French army on the Rhine (1761-62). — 488-89
Page me39.703
Soult, Nicolas Jean de Dieu, duc de Dalmatie (1769-1851) — Marshal of France and statesman, commanded the French forces in Spain from 1808 to 1814; War Minister (1830-34, 1840-45), Foreign Minister (1839-40), and Prime Minister (1832-34, 1839-40, 1840-47). — 456
Page me39.703
Spartacus — see Linton, William James
Page me39.703
Spielmann — London banker. — 322, 352, 356, 359, 368, 385
Page me39.703
Spinoza, Baruch (Benedictus), de (1632-1677) — Dutch philosopher. — 144
Page me39.703
Standau, Julius — German teacher; participant in the democratic movement in Germany in the 1830s and 1840s and in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to the USA after the defeat of the revolution. — 52
Page me39.703
Stanley — see Derby, Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, Earl of
Page me39.703
Stechan, Gottlieb Ludwig (born c. 1814) — Hanover joiner, member of the Communist League; belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group after the split in the League (1850); rejoined the supporters of Marx and Engels in December 1851; head of a workers' society in London from January 1852. — 14, 15, 19, 72, 227, 233, 521

Page me39.703
Steffen, Wilhelm — former Prussian army officer; witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); emigrated to Britain in 1853 and afterwards to the USA; closely associated with Marx and Engels in the 1850s. — 282, 290, 312, 401, 402, 409, 436, 480, 482, 521, 544, 548
Page me39.703
Stehely — owner of the confectionery in Berlin where members of The Free group used to meet in the 1840s. — 449
Page me39.703
Stein, Carl — Cologne banker, witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 143
Page me39.703
Stein, Julius (1813-1889) — Silesian teacher and journalist; democrat; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; an editor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung (1850s); editor of the Breslauer Zeitung (from 1862). — 502
Page me39.703
Steinthal — owner of the Manchester trading firm in which Georg Weerth was employed. — 217, 219, 334, 336
Page me39.703
Stenzel, Gustav Adolf Harald (1792-1854) — German historian. — 160
Page me39.703
Stéphanie-Louise-Adrienne (née Beauharnais) (1789-1860) — Grand Duchess of Baden (from 1811), relative of Napoleon III. — 36
Page me39.703
Stieber, Wilhelm (1818-1882) — chief of

Page Break me39.704
the Prussian political police (1850-60); an organiser of and principal witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); jointly with Wermuth wrote the book Die Communisten-Verschwörungen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts. — 215, 218, 219, 222, 224-34, 240, 243, 298, 314-16, 318, 319, 321, 396, 577, 580
Page me39.704
Stirner, Max (real name Schmidt, Johann Caspar) (1806-1856) — German Young Hegelian philosopher, an ideologist of individualism and anarchism. — 50, 55, 135, 161, 170, 174, 449
Page me39.704
Stirner-Schmidt, Marie Wilhelmine (née Dähnhardt) (1818-1902) — Max Stirner's wife. — 130, 170
Page me39.704
Stopford, Sir Robert (1768-1847) — English admiral, Commander-in-Chief of the British fleet in the Mediterranean (1837-41). — 456
Page me39.704
Strassoldo, Julius Cäsar, Count (1791-1855) — Austrian general, took part in suppressing the national liberation movement in Italy in 1848-49; commanded a division stationed in Milan (1853); assistant of Radetzky. — 281
Page me39.704

Stratford de Redcliffe, Stratford Canning, Viscount (1786-1880) — British diplomat, envoy and then ambassador to Constantinople (1810-12, 1825-28, 1841-58). — 408
Page me39.704
Strauss — German democrat, emigrated to London in the 1850s. — 154
Page me39.704
Strauss, David Friedrich (1808-1874) — German Young Hegelian philosopher and journalist. — 462
Page me39.704
Streit, Feodor (1820-1904) — German lawyer, journalist and publisher, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. — 161, 175, 182
Page me39.704
Strodtmann, Adolf (1829-1879) — German writer, democrat; took part in the Schleswig-Holstein revolutionary movement (1848), left Germany in 1850; Gottfried Kinkel's biographer. — 125
Page me39.704
Strohn, Wilhelm — Communist League member; friend of Marx and Engels; refugee resident in Bradford. — 88, 124, 132, 233, 236, 237, 245, 251, 255, 315, 321, 325, 328, 356, 386, 400, 542
Page me39.704
Struve, Amalie (d. 1862) — participant in the German democratic movement (1848-49); Gustav Struve's wife. — 45
Page me39.704
Struve, Gustav von (1805-1870) — German journalist, democrat; a leader of the Baden uprisings in April and September 1848 and of the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated after the defeat of the revolution; a leader of German refugees in England; took part in the American Civil War on the side of the Union; returned to Germany in 1862. — 45, 98, 142
Page me39.704
Sutherland, Harriet Elisabeth Georgiana Leveson-Gower, Duchess (1806-1868) — big Scottish landowner, Whig. — 273, 289
Page me39.704
Szemere, Bartholomäus (Bertalan) (1812-1869) — Hungarian politician and journalist, Minister of the Interior (1848) and head of the revolutionary government (1849); emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 31, 32, 45, 65, 71, 73, 77, 93, 95, 99, 101, 105, 106, 131, 133, 134, 174, 212, 237, 267-70, 277, 280, 291, 299, 302, 304, 313, 572
Page me39.704
Szeredy — Hungarian refugee in London, author of the book Asiatic Chiefs. — 543
Page me39.704
Szerelmey, Miklós (1803-1875) — Hungarian army officer, military engineer and journalist; took part in the July 1830 revolution in France and the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; emigrated to England in 1850. — 77, 93, 98, 100, 108
Page me39.704
Szirmay, Pál, Count (1804-1883) — Hungarian refugee, emissary of Kossuth in Paris in the early 1850s. — 268, 269
Page me39.704

Sznayde, Franz (1790-1850) — participant in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, general of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army in 1849. — 138

Page me39.704
T

Page me39.704
Tacitus (Publius Cornelius) (c. 55-c.

Page Break me39.705
120) — Roman historian and orator. — 180
Page me39.705
Taschereau, Jules Antoine (1801-1874) — French journalist and politician, member of the editorial board of Le National; publisher of Revue rétrospective (1833-37 and 1848), in which a slanderous document against Blanqui appeared; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (Right wing) in 1848-49; later Bonapartist. — 209
Page me39.705
Tausenau, Karl (1808-1873) — journalist in Prague, head of the Central Committee of Democratic Societies in Vienna during the 1848 revolution; emigrated to London in 1849. — 126, 173, 194, 555
Page me39.705
Tavernier — author of anonymous pamphlets (1855) criticising actions of the French army command in the Crimean war. — 545
Page me39.705
Taylor, Bayard (1825-1878) — American traveller, writer and journalist, correspondent of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 439
Page me39.705
Taylor, Tom (1817-1880) — English writer of comedies and journalist; in the 1850s contributor to and in 1874-80 editor of Punch. — 179
Page me39.705
Taylor, Zachary (1784-1850) — American general and politician, big planter and slave-owner; commanded American troops on the Rio Grande during the war against Mexico (1846-48); President of the USA (1849-50). — 501, 503
Page me39.705
Techow, Gustav Adolf (1813-1893) — Prussian army officer, democrat, participant in the revolutionary events of 1848 in Berlin, Chief of the General Staff of the Palatinate revolutionary army; a leader of Revolutionary Centralisation, a refugee organisation in Switzerland; moved to Australia in 1852. — 91, 92, 114, 130, 150, 152, 170, 174, 205, 244
Page me39.705
Tellering — see Müller-Tellering, Eduard von
Page me39.705
Temme, Jodocus Donatus Hubertus (1798-1881) — German lawyer and writer, democrat; Left-wing deputy to the Prussian National Assembly in 1848 and to the Frankfurt National Assembly in 1849; later a progressist. — 23, 34, 554

Page me39.705
Terence, Publius Terentius Afer (c. 190-159 B.C.). — Roman dramatist. — 403
Page me39.705
Tesseler, von — juryman at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 206
Page me39.705
Thaly, Sigismund (1814-1886) — Hungarian engineer, relative and friend of Kossuth, took part in the 1848-49 revolution, chief of the Komarom fortifications; left Hungary after the fall of the fortress; returned after the amnesty in the 1860s. — 159
Page me39.705
Thierry, Jacques Nicolas Augustin (1795-1856) — French liberal, historian of the Restoration. — 61, 473-76
Page me39.705
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman; Prime Minister (1836, 1840); deputy to the Constituent Assembly in 1848; head of the Orleanists after 1848; organised the suppression of the Paris Commune; President of the Republic (1871-73). — 171, 263, 448
Page me39.705
Thomas, Antoine Léonard (1732-1785) — French man of letters, shared views of the eighteenth-century Enlightenment philosophers; member of the French Academy (from 1767). — 208
Page me39.705
Thoré, Étienne Joseph Théophile (1807-1869) — French politician, lawyer and journalist, democrat, took an active part in the 1848 revolution; emigrated to England after the events of 15 May 1848; returned to France in 1860. — 50
Page me39.705
Tolstoi, Yakov Nikolayevich (1791-1867) — Russian man of letters; emigrated to Paris in 1823; from 1837 correspondent of the Ministry of Public Education and secret agent of the 3rd Department (a political police department set up under Nicholas I). — 437

Page me39.705
Torrens, Robert (1780-1864) — English economist, vulgarised Ricardo's teaching. — 62

Page Break me39.706
Page me39.706
Trübner, Nikolaus (1817-1884) — German bookseller and publisher in London. — 94, 102, 414, 472
Page me39.706
Tucker — London publisher. — 407, 412, 472, 473, 500, 536
Page me39.706
Tzschirner, Samuel Erdmann (c. 1812-1870) — German lawyer, democrat; extreme Left leader in the Saxonian Diet, an organiser of the May 1849 uprising in Dresden, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland after the defeat of the revolution, member of the Revolutionary Centralisation Central Committee; later moved to England. — 417

Page me39.706
U

Page me39.706
Unger, Joseph (b. 1828) — Austrian lawyer and politician, author of works on civil law. — 208
Page me39.706
Urban, Karl, Baron von (1802-1877) — Austrian army officer of Rumanian extraction, general from 1850; took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary. — 460
Page me39.706
Urquhart, David (1805-1877) — British diplomat, writer and politician, Turkophile, carried out diplomatic missions in Turkey in the 1830s; exposed the foreign policy of Palmerston and the Whigs, M.P. (1847-52); founder and editor of The Free Press newspaper. — 284, 292, 357, 363, 364, 373, 395, 398, 407, 412, 413, 417, 419, 422, 428, 430, 438, 440, 448, 450, 455, 473, 486, 523

Page me39.706
V

Page me39.706
Valentini, Georg Wilhelm, Baron von (1775-1834) — Prussian general and military writer, fought in the wars against the French Republic and Napoleonic France; served in the Russian army (1810-11), fought in the Russo-Turkish war of 1806-12. — 417
Page me39.706
Valliéres — French revolutionary, democrat, supporter of Barbés; emigrated to London in the 1850s. — 32
Page me39.706
Vasbenter, Louis — French democrat, an editor of the Proudhonist newspapers La Voix du Peuple, Le Peuple and others (1850); emigrated to England and later to the USA. — 73
Page me39.706
Vehse, Karl Eduard (1802-1870) — German historian, acquaintance of Georg Weerth. — 237, 245, 254
Page me39.706
Venedey, Jakob (1805-1871) — German radical journalist and politician, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; liberal after the 1848-49 revolution. — 504, 509
Page me39.706
Vetter, Antal (Doggenfeldi) (1803-1882) — Hungarian general, associate of Kossuth in 1848-49; emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 170, 180, 237, 261, 299
Page me39.706
Victor, Claude Victor Perrin, duc de Bellune (1764-1841) — French marshal, participant in the wars of Napoleonic France; War Minister (1821-23); an organiser of the French intervention in Spain (1823). — 495
Page me39.706

Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 276, 285, 446
Page me39.706
Villéle, Jean Baptiste Séraphin Joseph, comte de (1773-1854) — French statesman of the Restoration, Legitimist; Prime Minister (1822-28). — 492-94, 497
Page me39.706
Vindex, Gaius Julius (d. 68) — Roman procurator of Lugdunensis, one of the three provinces of Gaul; a Gaul by birth; raised a revolt of Gallic troops against Nero (67) offering power to Galba, Roman governor of Spain; committed suicide after the quelling of the revolt. — 304
Page me39.706
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro) (70-19 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 394, 523, 555

Page Break me39.707
Page me39.707
Visconti — see Arconati Visconti, Constanza, Marquise
Page me39.707
Vittinghof — German refugee in London, supporter of Arnold Ruge. — 499
Page me39.707
Vogt, Karl (1817-1895) — German natural scientist, vulgar materialist, petty-bourgeois democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents (June 1849); emigrated to Switzerland in 1849; received subsidies from Napoleon III in the 1850s and 1860s; exposed by Marx in his pamphlet Herr Vogt. — 42, 44, 98, 125, 478
Page me39.707
Voltaire, François Marie Arouet (1694-1778) — French philosopher, writer and historian of the Enlightenment. — 291, 449
Page me39.707
Vorontsov, Mikhail Semyonovich, Prince (1782-1856) — Russian statesman, general, took part in the wars against Napoleonic France, commander-in-chief of the Russian forces in the Caucasus and Governor of the Caucasus (1844-54). — 395, 472
Page me39.707
Vulpius, Christian August (1762-1827) — German writer, author of the novel
Page me39.707
Rinaldo Rinaldini. — 296, 390

Page me39.707
W

Page me39.707
Wade, John (1788-1875) — British journalist, economist and historian. — 61
Page me39.707
Wakefield, Edward Gibbon (1796-1862) — British statesman and economist. — 62
Page me39.707
Walmsley, Sir Joshua (1794-1871) — British radical politician, M.P. — 59.

Page me39.707
Walter, John (1818-1894) — British publisher; chief owner and editor of The Times; moderate Liberal, M.P. — 276
Page me39.707
Washington, George (1732-1799) — American statesman; commander-in-chief of the North American army in the War of Independence (1775-83); first President of the USA (1789-97). — 485
Page me39.707
Watts, John (1818-1887) — British journalist, at first utopian socialist and follower of Owen, later a bourgeois liberal. — 424, 427, 435
Page me39.707
Webb, James Watson (1802-1884) — American journalist and diplomat; owner and publisher of the Morning Courier and New York Enquirer (1829-61); US plenipotentiary in Vienna (1849-50). — 105, 174, 396
Page me39.707
Weber, Carl Maria von (1786-1826) — German composer. — 453
Page me39.707
Weerth, Georg (1822-1856) — German proletarian poet and journalist; shop assistant; member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); friend of Marx and Engels. — 5, 6, 10, 16, 22, 27, 29, 79, 88, 132, 194, 198, 201, 202, 211, 215, 216, 217, 221, 225, 227, 229, 230, 232, 233, 236, 237, 239-42, 245-51, 254, 255, 297, 304, 391, 397, 455, 556, 560, 567, 568, 571, 578
Page me39.707
Weitling, Wilhelm (1808-1871) — one of the early leaders of the working-class movement in Germany, a tailor by trade; member of the League of the Just, a theoretician of utopian egalitarian communism; emigrated to the USA in 1849. — 72, 121, 122, 141, 173, 275, 296, 341, 351, 449
Page me39.707
Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, Duke of (1769-1852) — British general and statesman, Tory; commanded the British army in the wars against Napoleon I (1808-14, 1815); commander-in-chief (1827-28, 1842-52), Prime Minister (1828-30), Foreign Secretary (1834-35). — 53, 195, 197, 250, 393, 487-88
Page me39.707
Wenckstern, Otto von (1819-1869) — German journalist, member of The Times and Daily News editorial board

Page Break me39.708
in the early 1850s; Prussian spy in London. — 438
Page me39.708
Westphalen, Anna Elisabeth Franziska — Jenny Marx's sister. — 581
Page me39.708
Westphalen, Caroline von (d. 1856) — Jenny Marx's mother. — 71, 409, 411, 463, 526, 575
Page me39.708
Westphalen, Ferdinand Otto Wilhelm Henning von (1799-1876) — Prussian statesman, Minister of the Interior (1850-58); Jenny Marx's step-brother. — 409, 411, 526

Page me39.708
Westphalen, Gerhard Julius Oscar Ludwig Edgar von (1819-1890) — Jenny Marx's brother, member of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee (1846); lived in America in 1847-65. — 71, 434, 542, 575, 590
Page me39.708
Westphalen, Heinrich Georg von (1768-1855) — Jenny Marx's uncle. — 50, 55, 526
Page me39.708
Westphalen, Louise von (1805-1861) — Ferdinand von Westphalen's wife. — 50
Page me39.708
Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; a responsible editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung (1849-50); emigrated to the USA in 1851; fought in the Civil War on the side of the Union; disseminated Marxism in the USA; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10-11, 13-19, 20, 25-29, 32, 33-43, 50, 52, 54, 55, 59-62, 65, 67, 70-72, 77, 79, 80, 81, 85, 88, 90, 94, 95, 96, 100, 102, 103, 106-08, 114, 117-20, 123, 126, 129, 131, 135, 137, 157, 160, 161, 164, 174, 175, 178, 180, 182, 185, 207, 210, 228, 251, 261, 263, 273, 301, 302, 303, 304, 311, 312, 314, 318, 323-24, 325, 330, 331, 335, 350, 359, 367, 371, 377, 401-03, 409, 412, 429, 569-72, 579, 580-84, 586-88
Page me39.708
Weydemeyer, Louise — Joseph Weydemeyer's wife. — 3, 19, 34, 35, 42, 54, 65, 81, 97, 116, 311, 319, 570, 572
Page me39.708
Whately, Richard (1787-1863) — English theologian, philosopher and economist; liberal. — 62
Page me39.708
Wilhelmi, Franz — German democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; after its defeat emigrated to the USA, fought in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 6
Page me39.708
Wilkes, John (1727-1797) — English journalist and radical politician, M.P.; author of lampoons against George III's absolutism. — 489
Page me39.708
Wilks, Washington (c. 1826-1864) — English radical journalist, an editor of The Morning Star. — 429
Page me39.708
William I (Wilhelm I) (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia, King of Prussia (1861-88), Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 94, 96, 141, 151, 155, 573, 574
Page me39.708
Williams, Charles — pseudonym used by Karl Marx for reasons of security. — 277, 291
Page me39.708
Willich, August (1810-1878) — Prussian officer, resigned from the army on account of his political views, member of the Communist League, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, a leader of the separatist group that split away from the Communist League in 1850; emigrated to the USA in 1853, general in the Union army during the Civil War. — 6, 15, 29, 42, 44, 66, 72, 74, 80, 86, 92, 93, 96, 98, 100, 101, 103, 112, 114,

115, 120-21, 126, 128, 130, 135, 136, 141, 150, 152, 154-56, 158, 161, 162, 164, 167, 169, 172, 173, 195, 203, 206, 213, 222, 226, 235, 236, 244, 245, 260, 264, 265-66, 273, 274, 283, 296, 299, 304, 309, 313, 316, 317, 319, 325, 326, 330, 331, 335-36, 342, 345, 348, 351, 371, 378, 396, 398, 402, 403, 442, 444, 450, 569, 570, 573-77, 580, 582, 586, 587

Page Break me39.709
Page me39.709
Willisen, Karl Wilhelm, Baron von (1790-1879) — Prussian general and military theorist; royal commissioner in Posen (1848); commander-in-chief of the Schleswig-Holstein army in the war against Denmark (1850). — 103, 104, 310, 451, 452
Page me39.709
Windischgrätz, Alfred, Prince zu (1787-1862) — Austrian field marshal; commanded the army that crushed the uprising in Prague and Vienna (1848), led the Austrian army against the Hungarian revolution (1848-49). — 460
Page me39.709
Wingham — London magistrate. — 223, 232, 235
Page me39.709
Winkelried, Erni (Arnold) (d. 1386) — semi-legendary hero in the liberation war of the Swiss against the Habsburgs; legend has it that he sacrificed his life to secure victory over Duke Leopold of Austria in the battle of Sempach (1386). — 14
Page me39.709
Wiss, Georg Eduard — German physician and journalist, Young Hegelian, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to London in the early 1850s and then to the USA; editor of Der Deutsche Correspondent (Baltimore). — 206, 449-50, 588
Page me39.709
Wolff, Ferdinand (Red Wolff) (1812-1895) — German journalist, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); emigrated after the 1848-49 revolution; supported Marx and Engels; subsequently gave up politics. — 3, 22, 164, 305, 386, 391, 509, 571, 584
Page me39.709
Wolff, Pius Alexander (1782-1828) — German actor and dramatist. — 455
Page me39.709
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German teacher, proletarian revolutionary, prominent figure in the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); took an active part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to Switzerland after the revolution and later to England; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 3, 8, 10, 13, 14, 16, 26, 31, 32, 42-43, 55, 58, 94, 108, 111, 115, 133, 140, 142, 149, 160, 189, 199, 211, 219, 224, 231, 260, 290, 304, 312, 313, 324, 334, 336, 355-58, 364, 369-72, 374, 377, 386, 391, 394, 396, 397, 398-400, 402, 410, 412, 420, 421, 428, 444, 454, 458, 471, 480, 498, 506, 529, 536, 538, 547, 549, 554, 560, 570, 573, 578, 584, 586
Page me39.709
Wood — innkeeper in London. — 271
Page me39.709

Wood, Sir Charles, Viscount Halifax (1800-1885) — British statesman, Whig; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1846-52), President of the Board of Control for India (1852-55), First Lord of the Admiralty (1855-58) and Secretary of State for India (1859-66). — 136, 517
Page me39.709
Worcell, Stanislaw (1799-1857) — Polish revolutionary, utopian socialist, took part in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, a leader of the democratic wing of Polish emigrants, member of Centralisation and of the Central Committee of European Democracy. — 138, 359, 401, 438
Page me39.709
Worth, William Jenkins (1794-1849) — American general, commanded American forces in the war against Mexico (1846-48). — 503
Page me39.709
Wrbna — see Urban, Karl, Baron von

Page me39.709
Z

Page me39.709
Zerffi, Gustav (pseudonym Piali) (1820-1892) — Hungarian journalist, emigrated to Turkey after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution, refugee in Paris from 1851 and in London from the spring of 1853; secret agent of the Austrian police. — 171, 178, 183, 194, 196, 200, 267-70, 277, 291, 296-301
Page me39.709
Zimmermann — German refugee in London, innkeeper. — 271
Page me39.709
Zitschke — creditor of Marx in London. — 559

Page Break me39.710

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me39.710
Abraham (Bib.). — 326
Page me39.710
Achates — character in Virgil's Aeneid, Aeneas' loyal fellow-traveller, whose name is symbolical of true friendship. — 523
Page me39.710
Afrasiab — character in old Persian legends, King of the legendary Turin; was repeatedly defeated in wars with Persia. — 342
Page me39.710
Alcina — character in Ariosto's L'Orlando furioso. — 390
Page me39.710
Bazile — character in Beaumarchais' Le barbier de Seville. — 297, 300
Page me39.710

Birch, Harvey — character in J.F. Cooper's novel The Spy. — 217
Page me39.710
Cerberus (Gr. myth.) — three-headed dog guarding the entrance to Hades; the name came to signify a fierce guard. — 150, 266
Page me39.710
Christ, Jesus (Bib.). — 41, 42, 73, 296
Page me39.710
Corydon — shepherd suffering from unrequited love in pastoral poetry. — 336
Page me39.710
Don Quixote — title character in Cervantes' novel. — 493
Page me39.710
Faust — title character in Goethe's tragedy. — 262, 447
Page me39.710
Fridolin — character in Schiller's ballad Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer, a kindly and modest enamoured youth. — 452
Page me39.710
Goliath (Bib.) — a Philistine giant slain by David during the war between the Philistines and the Israelites. — 440
Page me39.710
Isegrim — a wolf in Goethe's poem Reineke Fuchs. — 585
Page me39.710
Jason (Gr. myth.) — leader of the Argonauts in quest of the Golden Fleece, which was guarded by a dragon. — 45
Page me39.710
Jesus (Bib.) — see Christ, Jesus
Page me39.710
John (Bib.) — one of the Twelve Apostles, Christ's favourite disciple. — 284
Page me39.710
King Lear — mythological King of Britain, hero of a legend that provided the theme for Shakespeare's tragedy. — 162
Page me39.710
Kobes I — a philistine, title character in a satirical poem by Heine; also nickname of Jakob Venedey (Kobes means Jakob in a dialect spoken in Cologne, where Venedey was born). — 504, 509
Page me39.710
Krapülinski (Crapülinski) — one of the main characters in Heine's poem Zwei Ritter, a spendthrift Polish nobleman (the name comes from the French word crapule meaning gluttony, hard drinking and also scoundrel, idler). — 276, 438, 568
Page me39.710
Lazarus (Bib.). — 590
Page me39.710
Leporello — Don Giovanni's servant in Mozart's opera Don Giovanni. — 556
Page me39.710
Ligurio — character in Machiavelli's comedy Mandragola. — 125
Page me39.710
Malvolio — character in Shakespeare's comedy Twelfth Night. — 440

Page me39.710
Manu — legendary law-giver of ancient India; the Laws of Manu were compiled by Brahmins between the first and fifth centuries. — 348
Page me39.710
Mary (Bib.). — 310
Page me39.710
Nemesis (Gr. myth.) — goddess of retributive justice. — 402
Page me39.710
Nicia — character in Machiavelli's comedy Mandragola. — 125
Page me39.710
Noah (Bib.) — patriarch, said to have survived the Deluge in a wooden ark built on an order from God. — 326

Page Break me39.711
Page me39.711
Pangloss, Doctor — character in Candide, a philosophical novel by Voltaire. — 449
Page me39.711
Pegasus (Gr. myth.) — winged horse; to mount Pegasus, an expression that originated in the fifteenth century in Europe on the basis of later myths, means 'to be inspired'. — 571
Page me39.711
Prince Charming. — 440
Page me39.711
Ralpho — character in Samuel Butler's satirical poem Hudibras. — 334
Page me39.711
Renard — a cunning fox in ninth-century fables and in the later collections Le Roman de Renard widely known in Flanders, France, Germany and other countries. — 287
Page me39.711
Rhadamanthus (Gr. myth.) — son of Zeus and Europa; one of the judges of the dead in the lower world. — 30
Page me39.711
Rinaldo Rinaldini — robber, title character in the chivalrous romance by Christian August Vulpius. — 296, 390
Page me39.711
Rodomonte — character in Ariosto's poem L'Orlando furioso, a boastful knight. — 52, 117
Page me39.711
Ruggiero — character in Ariosto's poem L'Orlando furioso. — 390
Page me39.711
Sancho Panza (Pansa) — a character in Cervantes' Don Quixote. — 170, 362
Page me39.711
Schelmufski — character in works by the German satirist Christian Reuter (1665-after 1712); a liar and braggart, who liked to make up stories about his travels and adventures; Heine used this character in his poem Zwei Ritter. — 587
Page me39.711
Schlemihl, Peter — character in Chamisso's Peter Schlemihl's wundersame Geschichte, who exchanged his shadow for a magic purse. — 457

Page me39.711
Siegwart — hero of Johann Miller's sentimental novel Siegwart. Eine Klostergeschichte. — 74
Page me39.711
Snug — character in Shakespeare's comedy A Midsummer Night's Dream. — 391
Page me39.711
Uriah (Bib.) — husband of Bathsheba, a Hittite officer in the Israelite army. David who coveted his wife, contrived his death in battle. — 442, 445
Page me39.711
Waschlapski — character in Heine's poem Zwei Ritter, a Polish nobleman who leads a life of idleness in emigration. — 401, 587

Page Break me39.712

INDEX OF QUOTED AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me39.712
Achievements of the Ministry (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3753, April 27, 1853. — 334
Page me39.712
Affairs in Holland. — Denmark. — Conversion of the British Debt. — India, Turkey, and Russia (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3790, June 9, 1853. — 334
Page me39.712
[Arrest of Delescluze. — Denmark. — Austria. — 'The Times' on the Prospects of War Against Russia] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3917, November 5, 1853. — 376
Page me39.712
The Attack on Francis Joseph. — The Milan Riot. — British Politics. — Disraeli's Speech. — Napoleon's Will (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3710, March 7-8, 1853. — 288, 292, 299
Page me39.712
[Attempts to Form a New Opposition Party] (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3622, November 25, 1852. — 212, 215, 219, 229, 236, 237
Page me39.712
Austrian Bankruptcy (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4033, March 22, 1854. — 439
Page me39.712
British Finances (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4086, May 23, 1854. — 515
Page me39.712

The British Rule in India (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3804, June 25, 1853. — 346
Page me39.712
Capital Punishment. — Mr. Cobden's Pamphlet. — Regulations of the Bank of England (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3695, February 17-18, 1853. — 275, 288, 292
Page me39.712
The Chartists (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3543, August 25, 1852. — 136, 145-47, 153, 207
Page me39.712
The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10) — Die Klassenkämpfe in Frankreich 1848 bis 1850 (published in 1850 under the title 1848 bis 1849). In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Erstes Heft, Januar 1850; Zweites Heft, Februar 1850; Drittes Heft, März 1850; Fünftes und Sechstes Heft, Mai bis Oktober 1850. — 35

Page Break me39.713
Page me39.713
The Commercial Crisis in Britain (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4297, January 26, 1855. — 508
Page me39.713
Corruption at Elections (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3552, September 4, 1852. — 195, 207
Page me39.713
Declaration of War. — On the History of the Eastern Question (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4054, April 15, 1854. — 376, 447
Page me39.713
Defense. — Finances. — Decrease of the Aristocracy. — Politics (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3699, February 23, 1853. — 288, 292
Page me39.713
[The Details of the Insurrection at Madrid. — The Austro-Prussian Summons. — The New Austrian Loan. — Wallachi] (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4136, July 21, 1854. — 467
Page me39.713
The Documents on the Partition of Turkey (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4045, April 5, 1854. — 473
Page me39.713
Eccentricities of Politics (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4437, July 10, 1855. — 538
Page me39.713
The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Der 18-te Brumaire des Louis Napoleon. In: Die Revolution, Erstes Heft. New York, 1852. — 3, 8, 13, 20, 26, 33, 35, 40, 43, 50, 60, 70, 85, 88, 91, 95, 96, 102, 106, 118-19, 126, 143, 157, 160, 161, 175, 183-88, 216, 259, 270, 287, 545, 567, 569-73, 575

Page me39.713

Elections. — Financial Clouds. — The Duchess of Sutherland and Slavery (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3686 and 3687, February 8-9, 1853. — 272, 274, 289, 345
Page me39.713
The Elections in England. — Tories and Whigs (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3540, August 21, 1852. — 147-48, 207
Page me39.713
English Prosperity. — Strikes. — The Turkish Question. — India (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3809, July 1, 1853. — 375, 376
Page me39.713
Espartero (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4161, August 19, 1854. — 485
Page me39.713
[Evacuation of the Danubian Principalities. — The Events in Spain. — A New Danish Constitution. — The Chartists] (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4162, August 21, 1854. — 477, 485
Page me39.713
[Evacuation of Moldavia and Wallachia. — Poland. — Demands of the Spanish People] (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4166, August 25, 1854. — 485

Page Break me39.714
Page me39.714
Financial Failure of Government. — Cabs. — Ireland. — The Russian Question (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3844, August 12, 1853. — 375
Page me39.714
The First Trial of the 'Neue Rheinische Zeitung' (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Der erste Pressprozess der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung. In: Zwei politische Prozesse. Verhandelt vor den Februar-Assisen in Köln. Köln, 1849. — 65
Page me39.714
Forced Emigration. — Kossuth and Mazzini. — The Refugee Question. — Election Bribery in England. — Mr. Cobden (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3722, March 22, 1853. — 288, 291, 299
Page me39.714
[The Formation of a Special Ministry of War in Britain. — The War on the Danube. — The Economic Situation] (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4105, June 14, 1854. — 458
Page me39.714
The Greek Insurrection (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4039, March 29, 1854. — 439, 447
Page me39.714
Hirsch's Confessions (present edition, Vol. 12)
— Hirsch's Selbstbekenntnisse. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 8, 5. Mai 1853. — 301, 303, 312, 323-24
Page me39.714

[In the House of Commons. — The Press on the Eastern Question. — The Czar's Manifesto. — Denmark] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3847, August 16, 1853. — 366
Page me39.714
In Retrospect (present edition, Vol. 13)
— Rückblicke. In: Neue Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 1, 5; 2., 4. Januar 1855. — 507
Page me39.714
The Italian Insurrection. — British Politics (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3701, February 25, 1853. — 288, 292
Page me39.714
The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (present edition, Vol. 12)
— Der Ritter vom edelmüthigen Bewußtsein. [New-York, 1854.] — 330, 399, 401-02, 403, 409, 411, 412, 442, 448, 587
Page me39.714
[Kossuth and Mazzini. — Intrigues of the Prussian Government. — Austro-Prussian Commercial Treaty. — 'The Times' and the Refugees] (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3733, April 4, 1853. — 288, 292, 298, 329
Page me39.714
Kossuth, Mazzini, and Louis Napoleon (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3627, December 1, 1852. — 261
Page me39.714
L.S.D., or Class Budgets, and Who's Relieved by Them (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, No. 51, April 23, 1853. — 515
Page me39.714
Letter to the Labour Parliament (present edition, Vol. 13). In: The People's Paper, No. 98, March 18, 1854. — 417
Page me39.714
Lord John Russell (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4479, August 28, 1855. — 545

Page Break me39.715
Page me39.715
Lord Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, Nos. 77-81, 84, 85, 86; October 22, 29, November 5, 12, 19, December 10, 17, 24, 1853. — 394, 395, 399, 404, 412, 414, 586
— I. Palmerston; II. Palmerston and Russia; III. A Chapter of Modern History; IV. England and Russia. In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3902, 3916, 3930, 3973; October 19, November 4, 21, 1853, January 11, 1854. — 385, 387, 394, 395, 398, 399, 404, 412, 430-32, 455, 462, 472, 473, 586
— Palmerston. In: Die Reform, Nr. 72, 73, 74, 77, 78; 2., 3., 4., 8., 9. November 1853. — 378, 379, 390, 408
— Palmerston and Russia. 1 ed. London, 1853. 2 ed. London, 1854. — 455
— Palmerston and the Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi. London, 1854. — 455
Page me39.715
Michael Bakunin. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser' (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19406, September 2, 1853. — 360-61, 373

Page me39.715
The 'Model Constitutional State' (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Der 'Konstitutionelle Musterstaat'. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 123, 22, Oktober 1848. — 451
Page me39.715
The 'Model State' of Belgium (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Der 'Musterstaat' Belgien. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 68, 7. August 1848. — 451
Page me39.715
Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality. A Contribution to German Cultural History. Contra Karl Heinzen (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Die moralisierende Kritik und die kritisierende Moral. Beitrag zur deutschen Kulturgeschichte. Gegen Karl Heinzen. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung, Nr. 86, 87, 90, 92, 94; 28., 31. Oktober, 11., 18., 25. November 1847. — 65, 395
Page me39.715
Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3590, October 19, 1852. — 237, 261, 268, 302
Page me39.715
The New Financial Juggle; or Gladstone and the Pennies (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, No. 50, April 16, 1853. — 334
Page me39.715
[Panic on the London Stock Exchange. — Strikes] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3900, October 17, 1853. — 372, 375-84
Page me39.715
Parliament. — Vote of November 26. — Disraeli's Budget (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3650, December 28, 1852. — 265
Page me39.715
Parliamentary Debates. — The Clergy Against Socialism. — Starvation (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3716, March 15, 1853. — 288, 292
Page me39.715
Pauperism and Free Trade. — The Approaching Commercial Crisis (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3601, November 1, 1852. — 211
Page me39.715
[Persian Expedition in Afghanistan and Russian Expedition in Central Asia. — Denmark. — The Fighting on the Danube and in Asia. — Wigan Colliers] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3928, November 18, 1853. — 376

Page Break me39.716
Page me39.716
Political Consequences of the Commercial Excitement (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3602, November 2, 1852. — 211-12
Page me39.716
Political Movements. — Scarcity of Bread in Europe (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3886, September 30, 1853. — 368
Page me39.716

Political Parties and Prospects (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3625, November 29, 1852. — 212, 214, 219, 229
Page me39.716
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon. Paris-Bruxelles, 1847. — 261, 381, 392
Page me39.716
The Prussian Counter-Revolution and the Prussian Judiciary (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Die preußische Contrerevolution und der preußische Richterstand. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 177, 24. Dezember 1848. — 23, 34
Page me39.716
[Reorganisation of the British War Administration. — The Austrian Summons. — Britain's Economic Situation. — St. Arnaud] (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4114, June 24, 1854. — 484
Page me39.716
A Reply to Kossuth's 'Secretary' (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3656, January 4, 1853. — 261, 269
Page me39.716
Result of the Elections (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3558, September 11, 1852. — 164, 207
Page me39.716
Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozeß zu Köln. Basel, 1853. — 217, 220, 221, 238, 247-51, 255, 259-60, 264, 267, 270, 272, 273, 275, 282, 287, 292, 296, 297, 299, 324, 386, 396, 558, 579-81, 584
— [Boston, 1853] — 259, 260, 267, 273, 299, 317, 326, 328, 334, 339, 350, 354, 386, 558
— In: Neu-England-Zeitung, März-April, 1853. — 273, 299, 302, 317, 579-81
Page me39.716
Revolution in China and in Europe (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3794, June 14, 1853. — 332, 390
Page me39.716
Revolutionary Spain (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 4179, 4192, 4214, 4220, 4222, 4244, 4250 and 4251; September 9 and 25, October 20, 27 and 30, November 24, December 1 and 2, 1854. — 480, 484, 485, 498
Page me39.716
Riot at Constantinople. — German Table Moving. — The Budget (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3761, May 6, 1853. — 331, 355
Page me39.716
Rise in the Price of Corn. — Cholera. — Strikes. — Sailors' Movement (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3873, September 15, 1853. — 375-76
Page me39.716
[Russian Diplomacy. — The Blue Book on the Eastern Question. — Montenegro] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4013, February 27, 1854. — 376

Page me39.716
The Russian Humbug. — Gladstone's Failure. — Sir Charles Wood's East Indian Reforms (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3801, June 22, 1853. — 334
Page me39.716
Russian Policy Against Turkey. — Chartism (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3819, July 14, 1853. — 375-76

Page Break me39.717
Page me39.717
The Russo-Turkish Difficulty. — Ducking and Dodging of the British Cabinet. — Nesselrode's Last Note. — The East India Question (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3828, July 25, 1853. — 390
Page me39.717
The Secret Diplomatic Correspondence (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4050, April 11, 1854. — 446, 473
Page me39.717
Soap for the People, a Sop for 'The Times'. — The Coalition Budget (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, No. 52, April 30, 1853. — 517
Page me39.717
[The Spanish Revolution. — Greece and Turkey] (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4148, August 4, 1854. — 485
Page me39.717
Speech on the Question of Free Trade (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Discours sur la question du libre échange, prononcé á l'Association Démocratique de Bruxelles, dans la séance publique du 9 janvier 1848. [Bruxelles, 1848.] — 513
Page me39.717
To the Editor of 'The People's Paper' (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, No. 71, September 10, 1853. — 362-64
Page me39.717
The Trials at Cologne. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser' (present edition, Vol. 11). In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19145, November 2, 1852. — 235
Page me39.717
The Trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (present edition, Vol. 8) — Prozeß des Kreis-Ausschusses der rheinischen Demokraten. In: Zwei politische Prozesse. Verhandelt vor den Februar-Assisen in Köln. Köln, 1849. — 65
Page me39.717
Turkey and Russia. — Connivance of the Aberdeen Ministry with Russia. — The Budget. — Tax on Newspaper Supplements. — Parliamentary Corruption (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3814, July 8, 1853. — 517
Page me39.717
[The Vienna Note. — The United States and Europe. — Letters from Shumla. — Peel's Bank Act] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3881, September 24, 1853. — 368, 585
Page me39.717

The War Debate in Parliament (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4055, April 17, 1854. — 446
Page me39.717
The War. — Debate in Parliament (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4126, July 10, 1854. — 466
Page me39.717
War. — Strikes. — Dearth (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3925, November 15, 1853 — 395
Page me39.717
The War Question. — Doings of Parliament. — India (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3838, August 5, 1853. — 366, 390
Page me39.717
The War Question. — Financial Matters. — Strikes (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3904, October 21, 1853. — 385
Page me39.717
[The Western Powers and Turkey] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3988, January 28, 1854. — 407
Page me39.717
[The Western Powers and Turkey. — Imminent Economic Crisis. — Railway Construction in

Page Break me39.718
India] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3889, October 4, 1853. — 368, 370
Page me39.718
[The Western Powers and Turkey. — Symptoms of Economic Crisis] (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3892, October 7, 1853. — 372

Engels, Frederick
Page me39.718
The Antwerp Death Sentences (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Die Antwerpner Todesurteile. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 93, 3. September 1848. — 451
Page me39.718
The Armies of Europe (present edition, Vol. 14). In: Putnam's Monthly, Nos. XXXII, XXXIII, XXXVI; August, September and December 1855. — 539-40, 544, 546, 548
Page me39.718
The Armistice 'Negotiations' (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Die Waffenstillstands-'Unterhandlungen'. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 54, 24. Juli 1848. — 451
Page me39.718
Armistice Negotiations with Denmark Broken Off (present edition, Vol. 7) — Waffenstillstandsunterhandlungen mit Dänemark abgebrochen. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 58, 28. Juli 1848. — 451
Page me39.718
The Armistice with Denmark (present edition, Vol. 7)

— Der Waffenstillstand mit Dänemark. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 52, 22. Juli 1848. — 451
Page me39.718
The Attack on the Russian Forts (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4162, August 21, 1854. — 477
Page me39.718
The Battle of the Alma (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4219, October 26, 1854. — 484
Page me39.718
The Battle of the Chernaya (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4494, September 14, 1855. — 546 — Die Schlacht an der Tschornaja. In: Neue Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 409, 411; 3., 4. September 1855. — 546
Page me39.718
The Battle of Inkermann (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4261, December 14, 1854. — 500
Page me39.718
The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die deutsche Reichsverfassungs-Campagne. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Hefte 1-3, Januar, Februar, März 1850. — 238
Page me39.718
The Campaign in the Crimea (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4246, November 27, 1854. — 497
Page me39.718
The Communists and Karl Heinzen (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Die Kommunisten und Karl Heinzen. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung, Nr. 79, 80; 3., 7. Oktober 1847. — 65, 117
Page me39.718
The Danish-Prussian Armistice (present edition, Vol. 7)

Page Break me39.719
— Der dänisch-preußische Waffenstillstand. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 99, 10. September 1848. — 451
Page me39.719
Democratic Pan-Slavism (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Der demokratische Panslavismus. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 222, 223; 15., 16. Februar 1849. — 360
Page me39.719
England. I, II (present edition, Vol. 11). Manuscripts intended for Die Revolution. Only 'England', I was published abridged in Weydemeyer's article 'Die Aussichten für einen Angriff des englischen Exconstablers auf das Centrum des Handels und Industrie'. In: Turn-Zeitung, Nr. 15; 15. November 1852. — 4, 10-11, 15, 18, 25, 27, 38, 39, 52, 80, 107
Page me39.719
The European War (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3992, February 2, 1854. — 406, 407, 446

Page me39.719
The 'Faedreland' on the Armistice with Denmark (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Das Fädreland über den Waffenstillstand mit Dänemark. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 51, 21. Juli 1848. — 451
Page me39.719
The Fall of Sevastopol (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4506, September 28, 1855.
— Zur Einnahme von Sewastopol. In: Neue Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 429, 14. September 1855. — 550
Page me39.719
A Famous Victory (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4098, June 6, 1854. — 589
Page me39.719
The Fortress of Kronstadt (present edition, Vol. 13). Manuscript. — 420, 422, 426, 437-39
Page me39.719
The Frankfurt Assembly Debates the Polish Question (present edition, Vol. 7) — Die Polendebatte in Frankfurt. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 70, 73, 81, 82, 86, 90, 91, 93, 96; 9., 12., 20., 22., 26., 31. August, 1., 3., 7. September 1848. — 199
Page me39.719
Germany and Pan-Slavism. I, II (present edition, Vol. 14). Article I. The European Struggle. Article II. Austria's Weakness. Published distorted. In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 4382 and 4383, May 5 and 7, 1855. — 534
— Deutschland und der Panslavismus. I, II. In: Neue Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 185, 189; 21., 24. April 1855. — 534
Page me39.719
The Holy War (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3925, November 15, 1853. — 393
Page me39.719
Hungary (present edition, Vol. 9)
— Ungarn. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 301, 19. Mai 1849. — 120, 128
Page me39.719
'The Kölnische Zeitung' on the Magyar Struggle (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Die Kölnische Zeitung über den magyarischen Kampf. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 225, 18. Februar 1849. — 120, 128
Page me39.719
The Late Trial at Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3645, December 22, 1852. — 246-47, 252, 255

Page Break me39.720
Page me39.720
The Military Power of Austria (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4281, January 8, 1855. — 505
Page me39.720
The Military Power of Russia (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4223, October 31, 1854. — 487

Page me39.720
Movements of the Armies in Turkey (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3919, November 8, 1853. — 393
Page me39.720
Napoleon's War Plans (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4431, July 2, 1855. — 537
Page me39.720
News from the European Contest (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4084, May 20, 1854. — 444, 448
Page me39.720
Political Position of the Swiss Republic (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3770, May 17, 1853. — 319, 323, 331, 346, 351
Page me39.720
Position of the Armies in Turkey (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4065, April 28, 1854. — 446
Page me39.720
The Present Condition of the English Army — Tactics, Uniform, Commissariat, &c. (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4102, June 10, 1854. — 590
Page me39.720
The Progress of the Turkish War (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3934, November 25, 1853. — 399
Page me39.720
Ratification of the Armistice (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Die Ratifikation des Waffenstillstandes. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 107, 20. September 1848. — 451
Page me39.720
Real Causes Why the French Proletarians Remained Comparatively Inactive in December Last. I-III (present edition, Vol. 11). In: Notes to the People, Nos. 43, 48 and 50, February 21, March 27 and April 10, 1852. — 36, 38, 43, 75
Page me39.720
The Real Issue in Turkey (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3740, April 12, 1853. — 444, 583
Page me39.720
Retreat of the Russians from Kalafat (present edition, Vol. 13). In: The People's Paper, No. 98, March 18, 1854.
— The Russian Retreat. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4040, March 30, 1854. — 422, 446
Page me39.720
Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3282, 3284, 3292, 3293, 3297, 3311, 3389, 3395, 3403, 3406, 3407, 3425, 3432, 3438, 3517, 3537, 3564, 3576, 3594; October 25 and 28, November 12 and 28, 1851; February 27, March 5, 15, 18 and 19, April 9, 17 and 24, July 27, August 19, September 18, October 2 and 23, 1852. — 3, 4, 6, 11, 13, 20, 25, 32-44, 49, 56, 58, 72, 76-77, 80, 85, 90, 92, 99, 102, 120, 126, 127, 131, 133, 137, 148, 158, 161, 164, 181, 185, 189, 199, 361, 582
Page me39.720

The Russian Army (present edition, Vol. 13). — 434, 437
Page me39.720
The Russians in Turkey (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3900, October 17, 1853. — 374, 375, 395, 396

Page Break me39.721
Page me39.721
The Siege of Sevastopol (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4236, November 15, 1854. — 491
Page me39.721
The Siege of Silistria (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4115, June 26, 1854. — 460, 461
Page me39.721
The Struggle in the Crimea (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4323, February 26, 1855. — 522
Page me39.721
The Turkish Question (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3746, April 19, 1853. — 444, 583
Page me39.721
The Turkish War (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4080, May 16, 1854. — 436
Page me39.721
Two Years of a Revolution; 1848 and 1849 (present edition, Vol. 10). In: The Democratic Review, April-June, 1850. — 61
Page me39.721
The War (present edition, Vol. 13). In: The People's Paper, No. 108, May 27, 1854.
— The Exploits in the Baltic and Black Seas. — Anglo-French System of Operations. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4101, June 9, 1854. — 589
Page me39.721
The War Comedy (present edition, Vol. 7)
— Die Kriegskomödie. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 5, 5. Juni 1848. — 451
Page me39.721
The War in Italy and Hungary (present edition, Vol. 9)
— Der Krieg in Italien und Ungarn. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 257, 28. März 1849. — 120, 128
Page me39.721
The War on the Danube (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3952, December 16, 1853. — 399-400
Page me39.721
The War on the Danube (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4139, July 25, 1854. — 466, 467
Page me39.721
War Prospects (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4459, August 4, 1855. — 542
Page me39.721

What Is to Become of Turkey in Europe? (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3748, April 21, 1853. — 444, 583

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick
Page me39.721
Address of the Central Authority to the League, March 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die Zentralbehörde an den Bund, London, März 1850 (distributed in handwritten copies). — 143
Page me39.721
Address of the Central Authority to the League, June 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die Zentralbehörde an den Bund, London, Juni 1850 (distributed in manuscript copies). — 143
Page me39.721
[Appeal for Support of the Men Sentenced in Cologne] (present edition, Vol. 11). In: California Staats-Zeitung, Januar 1853. — 247, 259-60, 282

Page Break me39.722
Page me39.722
[Appeal for Support of the Representatives of the Proletariat Sentenced in Cologne, and Their Families] (present edition, Vol. 11) — Aufruf zur Unterstützung der in Köln verurteilten Vertreter des Proletariats und ihrer Familien. In: New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 45, 21. Januar 1853. — 282, 297
Page me39.722
British Politics. — Disraeli. — The Refugees. — Mazzini in London. — Turkey (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3736, April 7, 1853. — 294, 315, 444, 579
Page me39.722
Erklärung. London, den 18. November 1852. In: New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 39, 10. Dezember 1852. — 247
Page me39.722
A Final Declaration on the Late Cologne Trials (present edition, Vol. 11). In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19168, November 29, 1852. — 246-47, 260
Page me39.722
From Parliament. — From the Theatre of War (present edition, Vol. 13)
— Aus dem Parlamente. — Vom Kriegsschauplatz. In: Neue Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 53, 1. Februar 1855. — 515
Page me39.722
The German Ideology. Critique of Modern German Philosophy According to Its Representatives Feuerbach, B. Bauer and Stirner, and of German Socialism According to Its Prophets (present edition, Vol. 5) — Die deutsche Ideologie. Kritik der neuesten deutschen Philosophie in ihren Repräsentanten Feuerbach, B. Bauer und Stirner, und des deutschen Sozialismus in seinen verschiedenen Propheten. — 161
Page me39.722
Gottfried Kinkel (present edition, Vol. 10). In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nr. 4, 1850. — 139, 149

Page me39.722
The Great Men of the Exile (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Die großen Männer des Exils. — 92-99, 101, 103, 109, 116, 120, 123-24, 127, 141, 208, 232, 233, 239, 242, 254, 256, 258, 269, 281, 301, 302, 303, 580, 582
Page me39.722
The Late British Government (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4321, February 23, 1855. — 515, 520
Page me39.722
Manifesto of the Communist Party (present edition, Vol. 6) — Manifest der Kommunistische Partei. London, 1848. — 60, 165, 203, 308
Page me39.722
Progress of the War (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4276, January 1, 1855. — 505
Page me39.722
[Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press] (present edition, Vol. 11). In: The People's Paper, No. 26; The Examiner, No. 2335; The Morning Advertiser, No. 19143; The Leader, No. 136; The Spectator, No. 1270, October 30, 1852. — 224, 231, 243, 247, 578

Page Break me39.723
Page me39.723
[Reviews from the 'Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue', No. 4, April 1850]. Les conspirateurs par A. Chenu, ex-capitaine des gardes du citoyen Caussidiére. Les sociétés secrétes; la préfecture de police sous Caussidiére; les corps-francs, Paris, 1850. La naissance de la République en février 1848, par Lucien de la Hodde, Paris, 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Rezension aus der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. Viertes Heft, April 1850. 'Les conspirateurs', par A. Chenu, ex-capitaine des gardes du citoyen Caussidiére. — Les sociétés secrétes; La préfecture de police sous Caussidiére; Les corps-francs, Paris, 1850. La naissance de la République en février 1848, par Lucien de la Hodde, Paris, 1850. — 52, 128
Page me39.723
The Rocket Affair. — The Swiss Insurrection (present edition, Vol. 12). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3768, May 14, 1853. — 319, 323, 331, 351
Page me39.723
The Russian Retreat (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4126, July 10, 1854. — 464
Page me39.723
[Statement on Resignation from the German Workers' Educational Society in London] (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Erklärung über den Austritt aus dem deutschen Bildungsverein für Arbeiter in London. — 14
Page me39.723
To the Editor of 'The Times' (present edition, Vol. 11). Manuscript. — 20, 24, 25, 27-30, 59
Page me39.723

The War Question in Europe (present edition, Vol. 13). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4019, March 6, 1854. — 413

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me39.723
A.B. Revolutionary Russians. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19427, September 27, 1853. — 373
Page me39.723
Aberdeen, G. [Speech in the House of Lords on 9 August 1853.] In: The Times, No. 21503, August 10, 1853. — 518 — [Letter to Mr Monsell, 3 June 1853.] In: The Times, No. 21447, June 6, 1853. — 516
Page me39.723
Alexander, W. The History of Women, from the Earliest Antiquity to the Present Time. The third edition. In two volumes. London, 1782. — 208
Page me39.723
Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste. Hrsg. von J.S. Ersch und J.G. Gruber. In 167 Bände. Leipzig, 1818-1890. — 462
Page me39.723
Arena, A. [Poems.] — 356
Page me39.723
Aretino, P. Dubbii amorosi, altri dubbii, e sonetti lussuriosi. — 126
Page me39.723
Ariosto, L. L'Orlando furioso. — 30, 52, 390
Page me39.723
Arnim, L.A. von und Brentano C. Des Knaben Wunderhorn. — 440
Page me39.723
Athenaeus. Deipnosophistai. Ex Recensione Guilielmo Dindorfii. Lipsiae, 1827. — 70
Page me39.723
Bakunin, M. [Open Letter.] In: Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 151, 12. Juli 1848. — 360

Page Break me39.724
Page me39.724
Balzac, H. de. Le cabinet des antiques. — 203
— Le pére Goriot. — 203
Page me39.724
Barthold, F.W. George von Frundsberg oder das deutsche Kriegshandwerk zur Zeit der Reformation. Hamburg, 1833. — 160
Page me39.724
Batthyány, K. The Hungarian Revolution. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 20998, December 30, 1851. — 26
Page me39.724
Bauer, B. The Decline of England. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3423, April 7, 1852. — 94
— De la dictature occidentale. Charlottenbourg, 1854. — 486, 490

— Deutschland und das Russenthum. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 535
— Die jetzige Stellung Rußlands. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 535
— The Present Impossibility of War. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3417, March 31, 1852. — 85
— La Russie et l'Angleterre. Trad. de l'Allemand. Charlottenbourg, 1854. — 505-06, 535
— Die russische Kirche. Charlottenburg, 1855. — 538
— Rußland und das Germanenthum. Zweite Abtheilung. Die deutsche und die orientalische Frage. Charlottenburg, 1853. — 535
— Der Untergang des Frankfurter Parlaments. Berlin, 1849. — 37, 38, 76
Page me39.724
Beaumarchais, P.A.C. La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro. — 38
— Le barbier de Séville, ou la précaution inutile. — 297, 300
Page me39.724
Bell, A. Reception and Progress of Kossuth in the United States. In: The Friend of the People, No. 2, February 14, 1852. — 30
Page me39.724
Bernier, F. Voyages contenant la description des états du Grand Mogol, de l'Indoustan, du Royaume de Cachemire, etc. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1830. — 332-34, 341
Page me39.724
Bertin, A. Paris, 14 mars. In: Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires, 15 mars 1852. — 68
Page me39.724
Bible — 7, 558
The Old Testament
Ecclesiastes — 249, 492
Genesis — 327
1 Kings — 269
2 Samuel — 442, 445
The New Testament
Luke — 307
Matthew — 7
Page me39.724
Blesson, L. Geschichte des Belagerungskrieges oder der offensiven Befestigungen. Eine Skizze. Berlin, 1835. (The date in the original is inaccurate.) — 160
Page me39.724
Bode, A. Notizen, gesammelt auf einer Forstreise durch einen Theil des Europäischen Russlands. In: Beiträge zur Kenntnis des Russischen Reiches und der angränzenden Länder Asiens, Bd. 19, St. Petersburg, 1854. — 505
Page me39.724
Boiardo, M.M. Orlando innamorato. — 131
Page me39.724
Bonaparte, J. Mémoires et correspondance politique et militaire du roi Joseph. Publiés, annotés et mis en ordre par A. du Casse. T. I-III. Paris, 1853-1855. — 406
Page me39.724
Bright, J. [Speech in the House of Commons on 1 July 1853.] In: The Times, No. 21470, July 2, 1853. — 355

— [Speech at the meeting in Manchester on 24 January 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21647, January 25, 1854. — 411

Page Break me39.725
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 29 May 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21754, May 30, 1854. — 520
Page me39.725
[Bürgers, H.] Die Freisprechung Kinkels. In: Westdeutsche Zeitung, Nr. 107, 5. Mai 1850. — 23
— (anon.) Die Logik in dem Prozesse Kinkels und Genossen. In: Westdeutsche Zeitung, Nr. 102-104, 30. April, 1., 2. Mai 1850. — 23
Page me39.725
Butler, S. Hudibras, a Poem Written in the Time of the Civil War. Vols. 1-3. London, 1757. — 334
Page me39.725
Ça ira (French revolutionary song. End of the eighteenth century). — 555
Page me39.725
Calderón de la Barca, P. El Mágico prodigioso. — 447
Page me39.725
Carey, H. Ch. Essay on the Rate of Wages: with an Examination of the Causes of the Differences in the Condition of the Labouring Population Throughout the World. Philadelphia-London, 1835. — 62, 93, 345
— The Harmony of Interests: manufacturing and commercial. Philadelphia, 1851. — 93, 345
— The Past, the Present, and the Future. Philadelphia, 1848. — 392
— The Slave Trade, Domestic and Foreign: Why It Exists, and How It May Be Extinguished. Philadelphia, 1853. — 345-46, 387
Page me39.725
Carrion-Nisas. Essai sur l'histoire générale de l'art militaire, de son origine, de ses progrés et de ses révolutions. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1824. — 159
Page me39.725
Cervantes Saavedra, M. de. Vida y hechos del ingenioso hidalgo Don Quixote de la Mancha. — 170, 447, 480
Page me39.725
Chambray, G. Ueber die Veränderungen in der Kriegskunst seit 1700 bis 1815. Berlin, 1830. — 160
Page me39.725
Chamisso, A. von. Peter Schlemihl's wundersame Geschichte. — 457
Page me39.725
Chateaubriand, [F.R.] de. Atala. — 447
— Congrés de Vérone. Guerre d'Espagne. Négociations. Colonies espagnoles. Tomes I-II. Bruxelles, 1838. — 492-97 — René. — 447
Page me39.725
Chenu, A. Les Conspirateurs. Les sociétés secrétes. La préfecture de police sous Caussidiére. Les corps-francs. Paris, 1850. — 52, 128

Page me39.725
Chesney, F.R. Précis of a Report on the Russian Campaign of 1828 and 1829, drawn up for the information of the Duke of Wellington. In: The Portfolio, No. 26, July 20, 1836. — 393
— The Russo-Turkish Campaigns of 1828 and 1829: with a view of the present state of affairs in the East. London, 1854. — 426
Page me39.725
Cicero, M.T. Oratio pro Sextio. — 89
Page me39.725
Cluss, A. An den Garanten-Congress des deutschen Anleihens in Cincinnati. Washington, Jan. 23. In: Turn-Zeitung, Nr. 6, 1. März 1852. — 42, 71, 92
— An die Redaction der 'N. Yorker Criminal-Zeitung'. Washington, 17 Mai. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 10, 20. Mai 1853. — 335
— Das 'beste Blatt der Union' und seine 'besten Männer' und Nationalökonomen. In: Die Reform, Nr. 48, 49, 50, 51; 14., 17., 21., 24. September 1853. — 387
— Karl Heinzen und der Kommunismus, oder der fahrende Ritter auf der wilden, verwegenden Jagd nach dem Schatten seines lahmen Kleppers. In: New-Yorker Demokrat, end of June or beginning of July 1852. — 207

Page Break me39.726
— Die materielle Kritik und der moralisierende Standpunkt. In: Turn-Zeitung, Nr. 13, 1. Oktober 1852. — 578
— (anon.) Our American Correspondence. Washington, September 20, 1852; Washington, September 30, 1852. In: The People's Paper, Nos. 23 and 24; October 9 and 16, 1852. — 575
— (anon.) Der Staat Wiskonsin. In: Die Reform, Nr. 109, 15. Dezember 1853. — 586
— (anon.) White Mountains (Summit-House), 21 August 1853. In: Die Reform, Nr. 44, 31. August 1853. — 366
Page me39.726
Cobden, R. [Speech at the meeting in Manchester on 24 January 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21647, January 25, 1854. — 411
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 26 November 1852.] In: The Times, No. 21284, November 27, 1852. — 253 — 1793 and 1853. In Three Letters. London, 1853. — 276
Page me39.726
Cœurderoy, E. De la révolution dans l'homme et dans la société. Bruxelles, 1852. — 135-36, 138
Page me39.726
Cœurderoy, E., Vauthier, O. La Barriére du Combat qui vient de se livrer entre les citoyens Mazzini, Ledru-Rollin, Louis Blanc, Étienne Cabet, Pierre Leroux, Martin Nadaud, Mallarmet, A. Bianchi (de Lille) et autres hercules du Nord. Bruxelles, 1852. — 135-36, 138
Page me39.726
Coffiniéres, A.-S.-G. De la Bourse et des spéculations sur les effets publics. Paris, 1824. — 556
Page me39.726

Cooper, J.F. The Spy. — 217, 301
Page me39.726
Dante, A. La Divina commedia. — 329
Page me39.726
Decker, C. Der kleine Krieg, im Geiste der neueren Kriegführung. Oder: Abhandlung über die Verwendung und den Gebrauch aller drei Waffen im kleinen Kriege. Berlin und Posen, 1844. — 535
Page me39.726
De la conduite de la guerre d'Orient. Expédition de Crimée. Mémoire adressé au gouvernement de S.M. l'Empereur Napoléon III par un officier général. Bruxelles, février 1855. — 526
Page me39.726
Della Rocco. Mazzini's Proclamation. (To the Editor of The Daily News.) In: The Daily News, No. 2107, February 21, 1853. — 280
Page me39.726
Derby, E. [Speech in the House of Lords on 27 February 1852.] In: The Times, No. 21050, February 28, 1852. — 56
Page me39.726
Diderot, D. Jacques le fataliste et son maître. Tomes I-III. — 134
— Le Neveu de Rameau, dialogue. — 134
Page me39.726
Dietz, O. An die deutschen Arbeiter-Vereine. In: Schweizerische National-Zeitung, Nr. 5, 7. Januar 1851. — 14
Page me39.726
Diezel, G. Rußland, Deutschland und die östliche Frage. Stuttgart, 1853. — 505
Page me39.726
Disraeli, B. [Address to His Constituents.] In: The Times, No. 21052, March 2, 1852. — 61
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 18 February 1853.] In: The Times, No. 21356, February 19, 1853. — 516
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 24 July.] In: The Times, No. 21802, July 25, 1854. — 472

Page Break me39.727
Page me39.727
Donizetti, G. Belisario. Opera. Libretto by S. Cammarano. — 199
Page me39.727
Douglas, H. A Treatise on Naval Gunnery. London, 1820. — 426
Page me39.727
[Dronke, E.] Der Besuch. In: Neue Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 183, 20. April 1855 (Mittagblatt). — 534
Page me39.727
Dronke, E. Naturgeschichte der Demokratie. In: Die Reform, 12. April 1854. — 451
Page me39.727
Dulon, R. Der Tag ist angebrochen! Zweite Aufl. Bremen, 1852. — 71
Page me39.727

Dureau de La Malle, A.J. Économie politique des Romains. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1840. — 228
Page me39.727
[Eccarius, J.G.] Our Paris correspondence. In: The People's Paper, Nos. 21, 39, 40, 41, 44, 45, 49, 50 and 53; September 25, 1852; January 29, February 5 and 12, March 5 and 12, April 9 and 16, May 7, 1853. — 397
— (anon.) A Review of the Literature on the Coup d'État. In: The People's Paper, Nos. 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 32 and 33; October 2, 9, 16 and 23; November 6 and 13; December 11, 18, 1852. — 397
Page me39.727
Die Edda. — 328
Page me39.727
[Engel, J.-J.] Fürstenspiegel. Berlin, 1798. — 307
Page me39.727
Evans, G. de Lacy. [Evidence given before the Committee of Inquiry into the Condition of the British Army in the Crimea.] In: The Times, Nos. 21994 and 21995, March 6 and 7, 1855. — 527
Page me39.727
Ewerbeck, H. L'Allemagne et les Allemands. Paris, 1851. — 45, 58, 87
— (anon.) Bakunin. [Report from Paris.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 36, 6. Juli 1848. — 360, 362-63
Page me39.727
Flügel, J.G., Sporschil, J. Vollständiges Englisch-Deutsches und Deutsch-Englisches Wörterbuch. Th. 1-2. Leipzig, 1830. — 289
Page me39.727
Forster, Ch. The Historical Geography of Arabia; or, the patriarchal evidences of revealed religion. In two volumes. London, 1844. — 326
— The One Primeval Language Traced Experimentally Through Ancient Inscriptions in Alphabetic Characters of Lost Powers from the Four Continents. Vol. 1-3. London, 1852-1854. — 527
Page me39.727
Franceson, C.F. Grammatik der spanischen Sprache nach einem neuen System bearbeitet. Leipzig, 1822. — 364, 386, 584
Page me39.727
[Francis, Sir Philip.] Letters. In: The Public Advertiser, 1768-1772. — 489
Page me39.727
Freiligrath, F. An Joseph Weydemeyer. I. London, den 16. Januar 1852. — 8, 16, 22, 35, 107, 118-19, 125, 160, 161, 241, 245, 571
— An Joseph Weydemeyer. II. London, 23. Januar 1852. — 22, 35, 107, 118-19, 125, 160, 161, 241, 245
— Trotz alledem! — 115, 129
Page me39.727
Fröhlich, R.A. Kurzgefaßte tabellarisch bearbeitete Anleitung zur schnellen Erlernung der vier slavischen Hauptsprachen. Wien, 1847. — 201, 204
Page me39.727

Gibbon, E. The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. London, 1776-1788. — 326

Page Break me39.728
Page me39.728
Gladstone, W.E. [Speech in the House of Commons on 8 April 1853.] In: The Times, No. 21398, April 9, 1853. — 518
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 28 July 1853.] In: The Times, No. 21493, July 29, 1853. — 519
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 6 March 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21682, March 7, 1854. — 518
Page me39.728
Goethe, J.W. von. Faust. — 262, 447
— Reineke Fuchs. — 585
Page me39.728
[Golovin, I.] Europe. — A Single Man. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19394, August 19, 1853. — 359, 373
— How to Write History. (From a Foreign Correspondent.) In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19407, September 3, 1853. — 361, 362, 373
— To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, February 13, 1855: February Revolution. — 523-24
Page me39.728
Golovin, I., Herzen, A., Worcell, S. The Russian Agent, Bakunin. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19398, August 24, 1853. — 359, 373
Page me39.728
Görgei, A. Mein Leben und Wirken in Ungarn in den Jahren 1848 und 1849. Bände I-II. Leipzig, 1852. — 104, 128, 310, 460
Page me39.728
Goldschmidt, M. [Einige Skizzen aus seiner Reise nach England während der Zeit der großen Ausstellung.] In: Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 100, 25. April 1852. — 95
Page me39.728
Graham, J.G. Sir Charles Napier and Sir James Graham. The Napier and Graham Controversy. Sir James Graham and Sir Charles Napier. In: The Times, Nos. 22149, 22150, 22152 and 22154; September 3, 4, 6 and 8, 1855. — 546
Page me39.728
[Greeley, H.] A German View of American 'Democracy'. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3505, July 13, 1852. — 146
Page me39.728
Greeley, H. Isms. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3747, April 20, 1853. — 346
Page me39.728
Grey, H.G. [Speech in the House of Lords on 7 April 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21710, April 8, 1854. — 519
Page me39.728
Grimm, J. Geschichte der deutschen Sprache. Leipzig, 1848. — 563
Page me39.728

Grimm, J., Grimm, W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. Bd. 1. Leipzig, 1854. — 563
Page me39.728
Gülich, G. Geschichtliche Darstellung des Handels, der Gewerbe und des Ackerbaus der bedeutendsten handeltreibenden Staaten unserer Zeit. Bd. 3: Die gesammten gewerblichen Zustände in den bedeutendsten Ländern der Erde während der letzten zwölf Jahre. Jena, 1842. — 82
Page me39.728
Guerard, J. Encyklopädie der Kriegskunst zu Lande. Bd. 1-2. Wien, 1833. — 159
Page me39.728
Hammer, J. Geschichte des Osmanischen Reiches, grossentheils aus bisher unbenützten Handschriften und Archiven. Bd. I-X. Pest, 1827-1836. — 423, 428
Page me39.728
Handbibliothek für Offiziere, oder Populaire Kriegslehre für Eingeweihte und Laien. Bearbeitet und hrsg. von einer Gesellschaft preußischer Offiziere. 1. Band. Berlin, 1828. — 160
Page me39.728
[Harney, G.J.] [Marginal note to the English translation of the 'Manifesto of the Communist Party' by Marx and Engels.] In: The Red Republican, No. 21, November 9, 1850. — 60

Page Break me39.729
— Prologue. In: The Friend of the People, No. 1, February 7, 1852. — 30 — Review of: Blanc, L. 'Historic Pages from the French Revolution of February, 1848.' (Pages d'histoire de la révolution de février 1848). In: The Democratic Review, May 1850. — 61
Page me39.729
Harney, G.J. To the Readers of 'The Star', and the Democrats of Great Britain and Ireland. In: The Star, No. 753, April 17, 1852. — 93, 99
Page me39.729
Harring, Harro. Historisches Fragment über die Entstehung der Arbeiter-Vereine und ihren Verfall in Communistische Speculationen. London, 1852. — 117
Page me39.729
Hegel, G.W.F. Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse.
Page me39.729
Heidelberg, 1817. — 462
Page me39.729
Heine, H. Atta Troll. Ein Sommernachtstraum. — 61
— Klagelied eines altdeutschen Jünglings. In: Neue Gedichte, Romanzen. — 121
— Kobes I. In: Vermischte Schriften. Bd. 1, Hamburg, 1854. — 504, 509
— Lyrisches Intermezzo. 39. Gedicht. — 469
— Neuer Frühling. 6. Gedicht. — 455
— Retrospektive Aufklärung (August 1854). In: Vermischte Schriften, Bd. 3, Th. 2. Hamburg, 1854. — 509
— Zwei Ritter (Romanzero). — 276, 401, 438, 568, 587
Page me39.729

Heinzen, K. Doktor Nebel, oder: Gelehrsamkeit und Leben. Lustspiel in 5 Aufzügen. Köln, 1841. — 65
— Mord und Freiheit. New York, 1853. — 351
Page me39.729
[Heller von Hellwald, F.] Der Winter-Feldzug 1848-1849 in Ungarn. Unter dem Oberkommando des Feldmarschalls Fürsten zu Windischgrätz. Wien, 1851. — 460
Page me39.729
Herbert, S. [Speech in the House of Commons on 25 July 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21803, July 26, 1854. — 472
Page me39.729
Herzen, A. Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie (first edition). Nice, 1851. — 273, 275, 282, 286, 306, 325, 373
— (anon.) The Free Russian Community to the Russian Soldiers in Poland. In: The Daily News, No. 2471, April 21, 1854; The Leader, No. 213, April 22, 1854. — 436-37
— My Exile. In two volumes. London, 1855. — 558
— My Exile in Siberia. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, December 1, 1855. — 558
— Reply to M. Golovin. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19861, February 15, 1855. — 525
— To the Editor of the 'Globe'. In: The Globe and Traveller, October 25, 1855. — 558
— [Speech at the meeting in London on 27 February 1855.] In: The People's Paper, No. 148, March 3, 1855. — 525, 527
— [Speech at the meeting in London on 27 February 1855.] In: L'Homme, No. 14, 7 mars 1855. — 527
Page me39.729
[Hess, M.] Rother Kathechismus für das deutsche Volk. New York und Boston, [1849]. — 232, 236
Page me39.729
Hirsch, W. Erklärung [of 12 January 1852]. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 7, 29. April 1853. — 8, 41, 66, 301, 583 — Die Opfer der Moucharderie. Rechtfertigungsschrift. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 3, 4, 5, 6; 1., 8., 15., 22. April 1853. — 301, 302, 303, 304, 312, 315, 318, 324, 330

Page Break me39.730
Page me39.730
Hodde, L. de la. La naissance de la république en février 1848. Paris, 1850. — 52
Page me39.730
Hoffstetter, G., von. Tagebuch aus Italien, 1849. Zürich-Stuttgart, 1851. — 103
Page me39.730
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Satires. — 281, 291
— Epodon. — 465
Page me39.730
Hoyer, J.G. Geschichte der Kriegskunst seit der ersten Anwendung des Schießpulvers zum Kriegsgebrauch bis an das Ende des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts. Bd. I-II. Göttingen, 1797-1800. — 160

Page me39.730
Huzel, J. Über die Flüchtlinge in London. In: Anzeiger des Westens, September 1852. — 575
Page me39.730
Jacobi, A. Ueber den Untergang der Erde. In: Die Reform, Nr. 44, 45, 46, 47, 48; 31. August; 3., 7., 10., 14. September 1853. — 372, 375
Page me39.730
Jones, E. An Appeal for the Judgment of the People. In: Notes to the People, No. 52, April 24, 1852. — 93, 99
— (anon.) Continental Notes. In: Notes to the People, No. 43, February 21, 1852. — 43
— (anon.) Current Notes. In: The People's Paper, No. 1, May 8, 1852. — 107
— Political Felony. Infamous Chicanery and Fraud of the Administrative Reform Association. In: The People's Paper, No. 158, May 12, 1855. — 536
— [Speech at the meeting in London on 27 February 1855.] In: The People's Paper, No. 148, March 3, 1855. — 525, 527
Page me39.730
Jones, W. A Grammar of the Persian Language. London, 1828. — 341
— Poeseos asiaticae commentariorum libri sex. In: Works, Vol. II: De poesi erotica. London, 1774. — 341
Page me39.730
Jordan, W. [Speech at the sitting of the Frankfurt National Assembly on 24 July 1848.] In: Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden National-Versammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. II, Nr. 47. Frankfurt am Main, 1848. — 199
Page me39.730
Jung, G. Geschichte der Frauen. Erster Theil. Frankfurt am Main, 1850. — 207
Page me39.730
Junius — see Francis, Sir Philip
Page me39.730
Junius II — see Löwe
Page me39.730
Kausler, F. Atlas der wichtigsten Schlachten, Treffen und Belagerungen der alten, mittleren und neuern Zeit. Carlsruhe und Freiburg, 1831. — 159
— Historisches Wörterbuch der Schlachten, Belagerungen und Treffen aller Völker. Bd. I-IV. Ulm, 1825-1833. — 159
— Versuch einer Kriegsgeschichte aller Völker, nach den Quellen bearbeitet. Bd. I-IV. Ulm, 1825-1830. — 159
Page me39.730
[Kellner, G.T.] Die neue Welt. In: Die Reform, Nr. 44, 31. August 1853. — 366
Page me39.730
Klapka, G. Memoiren. April bis Oktober 1849. Leipzig, 1850. — 460
Page me39.730
Knesebeck, F. Denkschrift, betreffend die Gleichgewichts-Lage Europa's, beim Zusammentritte des Wiener Congresses verfaßt. Berlin, 1854. — 538
Page me39.730
Koran — 285, 328, 340, 434

Page me39.730
Kossuth, L. Secret Circular by Kossuth. New York, June 28, 1852. In: The People's Paper, No. 14, August 7, 1852. — 150, 153
Page me39.730
Küntzel, H. Die taktischen Elemente der neuen Fortificationen. Potsdam, 1851. — 103

Page Break me39.731
Page me39.731
[Linton, W.J.] (Spartacus). The Sense of the Country. In: The Star of Freedom, No. 1, May 8, 1852. — 107
Page me39.731
Löhr, K.A. Das Kriegswesen der Griechen und Römer. Erster Bd. Zweite umgearbeitete und stark vermehrte Auflage. Würzburg, 1830. — 160
Page me39.731
[Löwe.] An den Graf Nesselrole. In: Deutsche Londoner Zeitung, Nr. 264, 266; 19. April, 3. Mai 1850. — 370
Page me39.731
Lütgen, A. Feldzug der Schleswig-Holsteinischen Armee und Marine im Jahre 1850. Kiel, 1852. — 451
Page me39.731
MacCulloch, J.R. A Dictionary, Geographical, Statistical and Historical, of the Various Countries, Places and Principal Natural Objects in the World. Vol. 1-2. London, 1841. — 540
Page me39.731
Machiavelli, N. Mandragola (Commedia). — 125
Page me39.731
Malmesbury, J. [Speech in the House of Lords on 31 March 1854.] In: The Times, No. 21704, April 1, 1854. — 446
Page me39.731
[Marx, F.] The Russian Agent, Bakunin. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19397, August 23, 1853. — 359, 363, 373
Page me39.731
[Marx, Jenny.] Der Volksbund für zerschiedene Welten in Poesie. Pfingstfest der Revolution. In: Philadelphier Demokrat, December 1, 1852. — 241
Page me39.731
Massey, G. The Engineers, Operative and Co-Operative. In: The Friend of the People, No. 1, February 7, 1852. — 30
Page me39.731
Mayne Reid — see Reid, Thomas Mayne
Page me39.731
Mazzini, J. Italy, Austria, and the Pope. A Letter to Sir James Graham, Bart. London, 1845. — 101
Page me39.731
Meiners, C. Geschichte des weiblichen Geschlechts. Theile I-IV. Hannover, 1788-1800. — 207
Page me39.731

Mieroslawski, L. Kritische Darstellung des Feldzuges vom Jahre 1831 und hieraus abgeleitete Regeln für Nationalkriege. Bd. 1. Berlin, 1847-1848. — 138
Page me39.731
Miller, J.M. Siegwart. Eine Klostergeschichte. — 74
Page me39.731
M[illerbache]r, A.J. [Hrsg.] Das Kriegswesen der Römer größtentheils nach antiken Denkmalen. Bd. 1. Prag, 1824. — 160
Page me39.731
Minutoli, J. Spanien und seine fortschreitende Entwickelung mit besonderer Berücksichtigung des Jahres 1851. Berlin, 1852. — 540
Page me39.731
Mirkhond, Mohammed. Rauzât-us-safâ. — 341
Page me39.731
Moltke, [H.K.B.] von. Der russisch-türkische Feldzug in der europäischen Türkei 1828 und 1829. Berlin, 1845. — 435
Page me39.731
Mozart, W.A. Don Giovanni. Opera in two acts. Libretto by Lorenzo da Ponte. — 556
Page me39.731
[Müller-] Tellering, F. Vorgeschmack in die künftige deutsche Diktatur von Marx und Engels. Cöln, 1850. — 331, 336
Page me39.731
Napier, Ch. [Military reports.] In: The Times, No. 21758, June 3, 1854: The Baltic Fleet. — 458

Page Break me39.732
— Sir Charles Napier on the Bombardment of Sweaborg. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 22141, August 24, 1855. — 546
— Sir Charles Napier and Sir James Graham. The Napier and Graham Controversy. Sir James Graham and Sir Charles Napier. In: The Times, Nos. 22149, 22150, 22152 and 22154; September 3, 4, 6 and 8, 1855. — 546
Page me39.732
Napier, J. [Speech in the House of Commons on 22 November 1852.] In: The Times, No. 21280, November 23, 1852. — 517
Page me39.732
Napier, W.F.P. History of the War in the Peninsula and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to the Year 1814. Vol. I-VI. London, 1828-1840. — 490, 506
Page me39.732
Napoleon III. [Speech in the Senate on 22 January 1853 on the occasion of his marriage to Eugénie de Montijo.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 23, 23 janvier 1853. — 276
Page me39.732
Newcastle, H. [Speech in the House of Lords on 1 February 1855.] In: The Times, No. 21967, February 2, 1855. — 520
Page me39.732
Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso). Tristia. — 199
Page me39.732
Palmerston, H.J. [Speeches in the House of Commons]

— 1 June 1829. In: G.H. Francis. Opinions and Policy of the Right Viscount Palmerston. London, 1852. — 432
— 20 August 1853. In: The Times, No. 21513, August 22, 1853. — 518
— 6 February 1854. In: The Times, No. 21658, February 7, 1854. — 519
Page me39.732
Parish, H.H. The Diplomatic History of the Monarchy of Greece, from the Year 1830, Showing the Transfer to Russia of the Mortgage Held by British Capitalists over Its Property and Revenues. London, 1838. — 455
Page me39.732
Peel, R. [Speech in the House of Commons on 16 February 1830.] In: G.H. Francis. Opinions and Policy of the Right Viscount Palmerston. London, 1852. — 432
Page me39.732
Pélissier, A. [Report on the battle of the Chernaya. 18 August 1855.] In: The Times, No. 22146, August 30, 1855. — 546
Page me39.732
Petermann, A. [Hrsg.] Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' geographischer Anstalt über wichtige neue Erforschungen auf dem Gesammtgebiete der Geographie. Gotha, 1855. — 535, 538
Page me39.732
Pieper, W. Die Arbeiter Assoziation in England. In: Die Reform, Nr. 41, 42, 44; 20., 21., 31. August 1853. — 13, 71
— A Critical History of French Socialism. In: The People's Paper, Nos. 31, 32 and 33, December 4, 11 and 18, 1852. — 312
— London, 31. Mai. In: Die Reform, Nr. 22, 15. Juni 1853. — 377
Page me39.732
Plümicke, J.C. Handbuch für die Königlich Preußischen Artillerie-Offiziere. Berlin, 1820. — 305
Page me39.732
Pösche, Th. Die 'Klassenkämpfer'. In: Neu-England-Zeitung, 3. September 1853. — 366, 369
Page me39.732
Poesche, Th., Goepp, Ch. The New Rome. The United States of the World. New York, 1852. — 366
Page me39.732
Proudhon, P.J. La révolution sociale démontrée par le coup d'état du 2 décembre. Paris, 1852. — 135, 166, 182, 207, 261

Page Break me39.733
— Systéme des contradictions économiques, ou Philosophie de la misére. T. I-II. Paris, [1846]. — 261
Page me39.733
[Pulszky, F.] [An article dated 7 September 1854 and signed A.P.C.] In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4190, September 22, 1854: The State of Europe. — 485
Page me39.733
Pulszky, F., Pulszky, Th. White, Red, Black Sketches of Society in the United States During the Visit of Their Guest. In three vols. London, 1853. — 299

Page me39.733
Pyat, F. The Arrest of Sergeant Boichot, at Paris, by the French Government. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19646, June 9, 1854. — 462
Page me39.733
Pyat, F., Caussidiére, M. et Boichot, J.B. Lettre au peuple français. London, 1852. — 170
Page me39.733
Raffles, Th. S. The History of Java. In two vols. London, 1817. — 348
Page me39.733
[Reeve, E.] To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, December 6, 1855. — 558
Page me39.733
Reid, Thomas Mayne. To the Editor of 'The Leader'. In: The Leader, No. 152, February 19, 1853. — 280 — To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Leader, No. 152, February 19, 1853. — 280
Page me39.733
Ricardo, D. On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation. 3 ed. London, 1821. — 62
Page me39.733
[Richards, A.B.] The Base and Brutal Times. In: The People's Paper, No. 51, April 23, 1853. — 317
Page me39.733
Richards, A.B. Michel Bakounine and His Accuser. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19426, September 26, 1853. — 373
Page me39.733
Ripley, R.S. The War with Mexico. In 2 vols. New York, 1849. — 498, 500-01, 503, 506
Page me39.733
[Rouland, G.] Discours de M. le Procureur Général. Le 3 novembre 1855. In: Journal des débats politiques et littéraires, le 5 novembre 1855. — 555
Page me39.733
Ruge, A. Michael Bakunin. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19404, August 31, 1853. — 360, 373
— The Public Law of Europe. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3506, July 14, 1852. — 145
Page me39.733
Russell, J. [Speeches in the House of Commons]
— 31 May 1853. In: The Times, No. 21443, June 1, 1853. — 516
— 13 February 1854. In: The Times, No. 21664, February 14, 1854. — 519
— 11 April 1854. In: The Times, No. 21713, April 12, 1854. — 519
— 24 July 1854. In: The Times, No. 21802, July 25, 1854. — 472
Page me39.733
Sand, George. [Letter to the Editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 64, 3. August 1848. — 360, 362
Page me39.733
Say, J.B. Cours complet d'économie politique pratique. Paris, 1840. — 162
Page me39.733
Schiller, F. von. An die Freude. — 187

— Die Bürgschaft. Ballade. — 154, 559
— Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer. — 452

Page Break me39.734
— Das Lied von der Glocke. — 420
— Die Piccolomini. — 124
Page me39.734
Schimmelpfennig, A. The War between Turkey and Russia. A Military Sketch. Philadelphia-London, 1854. — 436, 439, 441, 443, 444
Page me39.734
Ségur, J.A. de. Les Femmes, leur condition et leur influence dans l'ordre social chez différents peuples anciens et modernes. Tomes I-III. Paris-Hambourg, 1803. — 208
Page me39.734
[Seiler, S.] Kaspar Hauser, der Thronerbe von Badens. Zürich, 1840. — 36
Page me39.734
Seymour G.H. to Lord J. Russell. St. Petersburg, 11 January 1853. In: The Times, No. 21693, March 20, 1854. — 519
Page me39.734
Shakespeare, W. Hamlet. — 21, 502
— King Lear. — 162
— Love's Labour's Lost. — 558
— A Midsummer Night's Dream. — 391
— Twelfth Night; or, What You Will. — 440
Page me39.734
Simon, L. Movements of the German Political Exiles. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3369, February 4, 1852. — 39, 40, 42
Page me39.734
Slick, J.B. To the Editor of 'The Morning Herald. In: The Morning Herald, No. 22361, January 5, 1854. — 406
Page me39.734
Smitt, F. Geschichte des polnischen Aufstandes und Krieges in den Jahren 1830 und 1831. Theile I-III. Berlin, 1839-1848. — 138, 311, 393
Page me39.734
Solis, A. de. Historia de la conquista de Mexico, poblacion y progressos de la America septentrional, conocida por el nombre de Nueva España. Madrid, 1732. — 501, 503
Page me39.734
Spinoza, B. Ethica ordine geometrico demonstrata et in quinque partes distincta. Amsterdam, 1677. — 144
Page me39.734
Stenzel, G.A. Versuch einer Geschichte der Kriegsverfassung Deutschlands vorzüglich im Mittelalter. Berlin, 1820. — 160
Page me39.734
Stirner, M. Der Einzige und sein Eigenthum. Leipzig, 1845. — 135
— Geschichte der Reaction. Berlin, 1852. — 50, 55
Page me39.734

Szemere, B. Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth. Politische Characterskizzen aus dem Ungarischen Freiheitskriege. Hamburg, 1853. — 70, 77, 95, 101, 105, 131, 133, 134, 212, 237, 267, 302, 304
Page me39.734
Szeredy, J. Asiatic Chiefs. London, 1855. — 543
Page me39.734
Tacitus (Publius Cornelius Tacitus). Annales. — 180
Page me39.734
[Tavernier.] Deuxiéme mémoire adressé au gouvernement de S.M. l'Empereur Napoleón III sur l'expédition de Crimée et la conduite de la guerre d'Orient par un officier général. Genéve, mai 1855. — 545
Page me39.734
Tellering — see Müller-Tellering, E.
Page me39.734
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer). Heautontimorumenos. — 403
Page me39.734
Thaly, S. The Fortress of Komárom (Comorn), During the War of Independence in Hungary in 1848-1849. London, 1852. — 159

Page Break me39.735
Page me39.735
Thierry, A. Essai sur l'histoire de la formation et des progrés du tiers état. 2-éd. T. I-II. Paris, 1853. — 473-76
Page me39.735
Thiers, L.A. [Speech in the Legislative Assembly on 24 May 1850.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 145, 25 mai 1850. — 171
Page me39.735
Thomas, A.L. Essai sur le caractére, les mœurs et l'esprit des femmes dans les différens siécles. Paris-Lousanne, 1772. — 208
Page me39.735
Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets. Nos. I-XII. London, 1853-1854, 1855. — 455, 472-73, 536
Page me39.735
Unger, J. Die Ehe in ihrer welthistorischen Entwicklung. Wien, 1850. — 208
Page me39.735
Urquhart, D. How is the War to Be Carried on? To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19583, March 28, 1854. — 422
— (anon.) Indeed? In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19408, September 5, 1853. — 364, 373
— Progress of Russia in the West, North, and South. 2nd ed. London, 1853. — 430
— The Relative Power of Russia and Great Britain. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19390, August 15, 1853. — 357 — Time in Diplomacy. — The 'European Recognition'. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19388, August 12, 1853. — 357
— (anon.) Turkey and Its Resources: Its Municipal Organization and Free Trade; the state and prospects of English commerce in the East, the new administration of Greece, its revenue and national possessions. London, 1833. — 284

— War between England and France. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19391, August 16, 1853. — 357
— What Means 'Protection' of the Greek Church? To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19387, August 11, 1853. — 357
— What the Governments of England and Turkey Ought Severally to Do. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 19566, March 8, 1854. — 417
Page me39.735
Virgil. Aeneid. — 394, 523, 555
Page me39.735
Voltaire, F.M.A. Candide. — 449
Page me39.735
Vulpius, Ch. A. Rinaldo Rinaldini. — 296
Page me39.735
Wermuth/Stieber, W. Die Communisten-Verschwörungen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts. Theile I-II. Berlin, 1853-1854. — 580
Page me39.735
Weydemeyer, J. [Article against Heinzen.] In: New-Yorker Demokrat, Nr. 311, 29. Januar 1852. — 52, 59-60, 94, 207
— Der 'demokratische' Mouchard. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 7, 29. April 1853. — 323, 324, 326, 583
— Nationalökonomische Skizzen. In: Die Reform, April-August 1853. — 312, 318, 583
— Die revolutionäre Agitation unter der Emigration. In: Turn-Zeitung, Nr. 6, 7, 8; 1. März, 1. April, 1. Mai 1852. — 93, 94
— Weiters in der Willich-Hirsch'schen Angelegenheit. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 10, 20. Mai 1853. — 335

Page Break me39.736
Page me39.736
Weydemeyer, J., Cluss, A., Jacobi, A. An die Redaktion der 'New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung.' In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 37, 25. November 1853. — 402, 403, 587
Page me39.736
Wilks, W. Palmerston in Three Epochs: a comparison of facts with opinions. London, 1854. — 429
Page me39.736
Willich, A. An die Redaktion der 'N. Yorker Criminal-Zeitung'. Louisville, den 2. Mai 1853. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 9, 13. Mai 1853. — 325
— An die Redaktion der 'Neu-England-Zeitung', Louisville, den 2. Mai 1853. In: Neu-England-Zeitung, Nr. 62, 13. Mai 1853. — 330
— Doctor Karl Marx und seine 'Enthüllungen'. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 33, 34; 28. Oktober, 4. November 1853. — 396, 397, 398, 400, 402, 451, 586 — [To the Editors of the Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung. 28. August 1853.] In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 25, 2. September 1853. — 371

Page me39.736
Willisen, W. Der italienische Feldzug des Jahres 1848. Berlin, 1849. — 310
— Theorie des großen Krieges angewendet auf den russisch-polnischen Feldzug von 1831. In zwei Theilen. Berlin, 1840. — 103-04
Page me39.736
Wiß, E. Die elementaren Richtungen der Zeit. In: Republik der Arbeiter, Nr. 12-22, 24; 18., 25. März; 1., 8., 15., 22., 29. April; 6., 13., 20., 27. Mai; 10. Juni 1854. — 449, 588
Page me39.736
Wolff, P.A. Preciosa. — 455

DOCUMENTS

Page me39.736
Anklageschrift gegen 1) Peter Gerhard Roeser, 2) Johann Heinrich Georg Bürgers, 3) Peter Nothjung, 4) Hermann Heinrich Becker, 5) Carl Wunibald Otto, 6) Roland Daniels, 7) Wilhelm Joseph Reiff, 8) Johann Jacob Klein, 9) Abraham Jacobi, 10) Ferdinand Freiligrath. [Köln, 1852.] — 131-32, 134-35, 137, 142-43
Page me39.736
Ansprache der Kölner Zentralbehörde [1. December 1850]. In: Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger, Nr. 171, 22. Juni 1851; Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 150, 24. Juni 1851. — 143, 238, 251
Page me39.736
Archivio triennale delle cose d'Italia dall' avvenimento di Pio IX all' abbandono di Venezia. Serie Ia. Vol. 1-2. Capolago, 1850-1851. Vol. 3. Chieri, 1855. — 448, 458-59
Page me39.736
Bonaparte, L.N. [Decree of 22 January 1852 on the Confiscation of Louis Philippe's property.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 23, 23 janvier 1852. — 17, 21
— [Decree of 22 January 1852 on the creation of a Police Ministry under de Maupas and the decree on the resignation of the Minister of the Interior de Morny and appointment of Persigny.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 23, 23 janvier 1852. — 17, 21

Page Break me39.737
— [Decree of 25 January 1852 on the resignation of the Minister of Finance Fould.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 26, 26 janvier 1852. — 21
Page me39.737
Code pénal, ou code des délits et des peines. Cologne, 1810. — 134, 230
Page me39.737
Correspondence Respecting the Rights and Privileges of the Latin and Greek Churches in Turkey. Presented to Both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. London, 1854 [published in several parts]. — 422, 446, 519
Page me39.737

Fifth Report from the Select Committee on the Affairs of the East India Company, 1812. — 347
Page me39.737
[House of Commons: Accounts and Papers.] Return of Stamps at ld. issued to each newspaper published in London, Dublin and Edinburgh, Quarterly, 1851 to 1854. — 438
Page me39.737
The Manifesto of the Cologne Central Authority of the Communist League, December 1, 1850. In: Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger, No. 171, 22. Juni; Kölnische Zeitung, No. 150, 24. Juni 1851. — 238, 251
Page me39.737
Napoléon III. [Letter to Nicholas I of 29 January 1854.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 45, 14 février 1854; The Times, No. 21665, February 15, 1854. — 414
Page me39.737
Nicholas I. [Letter to Napoleon III of 28 January (9 February) 1854.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 64, 5 mars, 1854; The Times, No. 21681, March 6, 1854. — 414
— Manifesto of the Emperor of Russia [April 11 (23)]. In: The Times, No. 21732, May 4, 1854. — 446
Page me39.737
[Notice by the Russian Ministry of Finance. April 1854.] Kommercheskaya gazeta Nos. 40, 41; 6, 8 aprelya 1854 r.; Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 337, 8 (20) avril 1854. — 446
Page me39.737
Sammlung der für Ungarn erlassenen Allerhöchsten Manifeste und Proklamationen, dann der Kundmachungen der Oberbefehlshaber der kaiserlichen Armee in Ungarn. Buda, 1849-1850. — 310, 460
Page me39.737
Statuten des communistischen Bundes (1 Dezember 1850) (present edition, Vol. 10). In: Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger, Nr. 171, 22. Juni 1851. — 66
Page me39.737
Strafgesetzbuch für die Preußischen Staaten. Vom 14. April 1851. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten, Jg. 1851, Nr. 10, Berlin, 1851. — 134
Page me39.737
[Tolstoi, Y.] Bericht über die Kriegs-Operationen der Russischen Truppen gegen die Ungarischen Rebellen im Jahre 1849. Th. 1-3. Berlin, 1851. — 437, 439
Page me39.737
Traité d'Unkiar-Iskelessi entre la Russie et la Porte Ottomanne, signé á Constantinople le 8 juillet 1833. — 432
Page me39.737
Victoria, R. A Proclamation. March 29, 1854. In: The Times, No. 21702, March 30, 1854. — 446

Page Break me39.738

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS
PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me39.738
Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 119, 28. April 1848 (Beilage): [Report from Paris of 22 April]. — 509
— Nr. 56. 25. Februar 1852 (Beilage): Buchmacherei. — 50, 55
— Nr. 108, 17. April 1852: Hansestädte. Hamburg, 13. April. — 95
— Nr. 195, 13. Juli 1852: Der Communisten-Proceß. — 132
— Nr. 255-257, 11.-13. September 1852: Baden. Die deutsche revolutionäre. Propaganda in London und die Revolutionsanleihe. — 194, 196
— Nr. 9, 9. Januar 1855 (Beilage): Die Assisenverhandlung gegen Barthélemy. — 510
— Nr. 9, 9. Januar 1855: Ein Beitrag zur Charakteristik der Engländer. — 509
— Nr. 63, 4. März 1855: [Der Russe Herzen.] — 527
— Nr. 130, 10. Mai 1855: Großbritannien. London, 6 Mai. — 537
Page me39.738
Baltimore Wecker, September 27, 1852: [A. Brüningk's Statement]. — 214, 574
Page me39.738
The Daily News, No. 1790, February 17, 1852: France. Paris, Sunday, Evening. — 36
— No. 1975, September 20, 1852: Progress of Cotton Manufactures. — 189-90
— No. 2105, February 18, 1853: M.M. Kossuth and Mazzini and 'The Times'. — 283, 290
— No. 2115, March 2, 1853: A Letter from Mazzini. — 290
— No. 2117, March 4, 1853: A Letter from Kossuth. — 283, 286, 290
Page me39.738
The Economist, No. 437, January 10, 1852: The Spirit of the Annual Trade Circulars. The Year That Is Past. — 57
— No. 491, January 22, 1853: The Bank of England and the Rate of Discount. — 275
— No. 498, March 12, 1853: Turkey and Its Value. — 294-95
— No. 528, October 8, 1853: Foreign Correspondence. — 388
— No. 535, November 26, 1853: The Labour Parliament. — 401
Page me39.738
Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung, Nr. 338, 22. Dezember 1848: Frankfurt, 21. Dec. Berichtigung. — 225
Page me39.738
Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 336, 18 février (2 mars) 1854: [On the Eastern Question]. — 519
— 4me Série, No. 351, 7 (19) mars 1854 (leader). — 446
Page me39.738
Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires, 25 août 1854: Madrid, 20 août. — 479
Page me39.738
Karlsruher Zeitung, Nr. 208, 209, 210, 212, 214, 217, 218, 219, 220, 224; 3., 4., 5., 8., 10., 14., 16., 17., 22. September 1852: Die deutsche revolutionäre Propaganda in London und die Revolutionsanleihe. — 194, 196
Page me39.738
Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 74, 26. März 1852: *Paris, 24. März; +Paris, 24. März. — 75
— Nr. 99, 24. April 1852: Amtliche Bekanntmachungen. — 89
— Nr. 183, 27. Juli 1852: *Köln, 26. Juli. — 142

— Nr. 262, 14. Oktober 1852: Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes. — 575
— Nr. 272, 24. Oktober 1852: Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und

Page Break me39.739
Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes. — 576-77
— Nr. 273, 25. Oktober 1852: Erklärung. — 219
— Nr. 283, 4. November 1852: Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes. — 215, 240, 243
— 25. November 1854. — 504
— 30. August 1855. — 547
Page me39.739
The Leader, Vol. IV, No. 152, February 19, 1853: Kossuth and the Milan Revolt. — 280
— Vol. IV, No. 168, June 11, 1853: Arnold Ruge. — 345
— Vol. IV, No. 168, June 11, 1853: A Russian Democratic Printing Office in London. — 345
— Vol. V, No. 243, November 18, 1854: The British Democrats — Louis Napoleon. — 503
Page me39.739
Le Moniteur universel, No. 151, 31 mai 1854: [Report from Belgrade of 29 May 1854.] — 458
Page me39.739
The Morning Advertiser, No. 19122, October 6, 1852: The German 'Lone Star'. — 207, 210
— No. 19142, October 29, 1852: Germany. From our own correspondent. Cologne, Oct. 27. — 231
— No. 19603, April 20, 1854: Mr Urquhart and 'The Globe'. To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser'. — 440
— No. 19615, May 4, 1854: The Black Sea. The Bombardment of Odessa. — 452
— No. 19749, October 7, 1854: The Incorporated Society of Licensed Victuallers. — 486
— January 29, 1855. — 515
— September 1, 1855 (leader). — 546
— November 29, 1855: To the Editor of 'The Morning Advertiser' [Letter signed 'One who had been deceived'.] — 558
— December 6, 1855: Mr Herzen's Case [Letter signed 'Deceived'.] — 558
— December 6, 1855: An Editors' Statement. — 558
Page me39.739
The Morning Chronicle, No. 26689, July 9, 1852 (leader). — 129
— No. 26705, July 28, 1852: The French Empire. — Secret Treaty of the Three Northern Powers. — 143
— No. 27321, July 21, 1854: Prussia. (From our own correspondent). — 470
— No. 27365, September 7, 1854: The Battles of Bayazid and Kuruk-Dere. — 482
— No. 27499, February 13, 1855: Express from Paris. — 524
Page me39.739
The Morning Post, No. 24681, January 28, 1853: London, Friday, Jan. 28. 1853. — 276
— No. 24682, January 29, 1853: The Peace and Arbitration Conference. — 276

— No. 24712, March 5, 1853: Manchester Manufactures. — A Grave Fact. — 289
Page me39.739
National-Zeitung, Nr. 248, 24. Dezember 1848: Deutschland. Frankfurt, 21. Dezbr. — 225
Page me39.739
Neue Preußische Zeitung, Nr. 148, 20. Dezember 1848: Berliner Zuschauer. — 226
— Nr. 233, 7. Oktober 1852: Assisen-Procedur in der Anklage über Hochverrath gegen Dr. Becker und Genossen. — 210
Page me39.739
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie, Nr. 64, 3. August 1848: Französische Republik. Paris, 31. Juli. [Editorial introductory remarks to George Sand's letter.] — 360

Page Break me39.740
— Nr. 115, 13. Oktober 1848: Deutschland. Berlin, 10. Oktbr. [Report on Bakunin's Expulsion, 10 October]. — 360
— Nr. 177, 24. Dezember 1848: Dr. Stieber. — 225
Page me39.740
New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3446, May 4, 1852: Justice of Prussia — 107, 115
— No. 3736, April 7, 1853 (leader). — 315
— No. 3761, May 6, 1853: The American Art-Union Investigation. — 331-32
— No. 3771, May 18, 1853: Slavery and Emancipation; New Publications. — 346
Page me39.740
The Observer, September 10, 1854: The Battles of Bayazid and Kuruk-Dere [reproduced from The Morning Chronicle]. — 482
Page me39.740
La Patrie, No. 19, 19 janvier 1854: [Report from Constantinople of 2 January 1854]. — 411
Page me39.740
The People's Paper, No. 14, August 7, 1852: Secret Circular by Kossuth. Consequent Sudden Departure of the Latter. — 150
— No. 21, September 25, 1852: Defeat of Faction. — Triumph of Principle. — 195
— No. 135, December 2, 1854: Welcome and Protest Committee for the Reception of Barbés in London. Fraternisation of the French Democracy in London. — 502
— No. 145, February 10, 1855: The Alliance of the Peoples. The International Committee. — 523
— No. 148, March 3, 1855: Immense Demonstration in St. Martin's Hall. — 525, 527
Page me39.740
Die Reform, Nr. 87, 19. November 1853: Werbungen in New-York. — 402
— Nr. 88, 21. November 1853: Das Wirken der 'Militär-Kommission'. — 402
— Nr. 91, 24. November 1853: [Report from Newark.] — 404
Page me39.740
Republik der Arbeiter, Nr. 52, 25. Dezember 1852: Schlußbemerkung zum Kölner Kommunistenprozeß. — 275
Page me39.740
The Times, No. 20955, November 10, 1851 (leader). — 106
— No. 21003, January 5, 1852: State of Trade. Manchester, Jan. 3. — 5

— No. 21052, March 2, 1852: London, Tuesday, March 2, 1852. — 61
— No. 21094, April 20, 1852: Commercial Intelligence. New York, April 7. — 82
— No. 21164, July 10, 1852 (leader). — 129
— No. 21180, July 29, 1852: Secret Treaty of the Three Northern Powers. — 143
— No. 21186, August 5, 1852: The Approaching Election in the United States. — 146
— No. 21227, September 22, 1852: Cotton Manufactures. — 189-90
— No. 21243, October 11, 1852: Prussia. From our own correspondent — 210, 224
— No. 21316, January 4, 1853 (leader). — 516
— No. 21348, February 10, 1853: In the Name of the Hungarian Nation. — To the Soldiers Quartered in Italy (February 1853). — 279, 280, 283, 290
— No. 21349, February 11, 1853 (leader). — 516
— No. 21350, February 12, 1853 (leader). — 282
— No. 21365, March 2, 1853 (leader). — 285
— No. 21369, March 7, 1853 (leader). — 285
— No. 21412, April 26, 1853: [Report from a Berlin correspondent of 22 April.] — 319
— No. 21647, January 25, 1854: Krajova, Lesser Wallachia. Jan. 11. — 410
— No. 21700, March 28, 1854: [Report on the cotton market in Manchester.] — 422
— No. 21702, March 30, 1854: France. — 446

Page Break me39.741
— No. 21719, April 19, 1854: The Russian Fleet in the Black Sea. — 433
— No. 21719, April 19, 1854: The Russian Passage of the Danube. — 433, 435
— No. 21731, May 3, 1854: Turkey and Russia. — 446
— No. 21734, May 6, 1854: Latest Intelligence. — 452
— No. 21756, June 1, 1854 (leader). — 458
— No. 21758, June 3, 1854: The Baltic Fleet. — 458
— No. 21801, July 24, 1854 (leader). — 472
— No. 21829, August 25, 1854: Foreign Intelligence. — 480
— No. 21925, December 15, 1854: The Inquest. — 505
— No. 21992, March 3, 1855 (leader). — 525
— No. 22148, September 1, 1855: [Paris, 30 August 1855.] — 547
— No. 22237, December 14, 1855 (leader). — 564

Page Break me39.742

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me39.742
Abendzeitung — see New-Yorker Abendzeitung
Page me39.742
Advertiser — see The Morning Advertiser
Page me39.742
Allgemeine Zeitung — a conservative daily founded in 1798; published in Augsburg from 1810 to 1882. — 17, 50, 55, 95, 132, 164, 194, 196, 199, 509, 510, 527, 537
Page me39.742
Allg. Ztg; Augsburger; Augsburger Zeitung; A.Z. — see Allgemeine Zeitung

Page me39.742
Baltimore Wecker — a German daily, an organ of the Socialist Gymnastic Association in the USA, published from 1851 to 1877; its founder and editor was Karl Heinrich Schnauffer. — 157, 205, 214, 266, 558, 574
Page me39.742
Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung — a weekly founded by German petty-bourgeois emigrants in New York in 1851 and published under the title New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung. From 18 March 1853 to 10 March 1854 it appeared as Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung. — 302, 315, 323, 325, 335, 396, 400, 402
Page me39.742
Bonner Zeitung — a petty-bourgeois democratic daily published from 7 May 1848 to April 1849 under the editorship of Gottfried Kinkel; from January 1849 it appeared as the Neue Bonner Zeitung. — 157
Page me39.742
Bremer Tages-Chronik — see Tages-Chronik
Page me39.742
Breslauer Zeitung — a German daily founded in Breslau (Wroclaw) in 1820; in the 1850s it followed a conservative line. — 23, 507, 554
Page me39.742
Brüsseler-Zeitung — see Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung
Page me39.742
Die Constitution. Tagblatt für constitutionelles Volksleben und Belehrung — a democratic newspaper published in Vienna from March to October 1848; its editor was Leopold Häfner. — 178
Page me39.742
Le Constitutionnel — a daily published in Paris from 1815 to 1870; from 1819 it appeared as Le Constitutionnel, journal du commerce, politique et littéraire; in the 1840s it spoke for the moderate Orleanists, during the 1848 revolution for the

Page Break me39.743
monarchist bourgeoisie (the Thiers party), and after the coup d'état of 1851 for the Bonapartists. — 73, 555
Page me39.743
Constitutionelle Zeitung — a liberal daily published in Berlin from February 1849 to July 1852. — 209, 256, 258
Page me39.743
Courier — see Manchester Courier
Page me39.743
Criminal-Zeitung — see Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung
Page me39.743
Daily New-York Times — see The New-York Times
Page me39.743
The Daily News — a liberal newspaper of the British industrial bourgeoisie; published under this title in London from 1846 to 1930. — 7, 17, 20, 24, 25, 29, 30, 36, 68, 153, 189, 224, 253, 280, 285, 404, 414, 420, 422, 423, 427, 429, 434-37, 438, 439, 444, 464

Page me39.743
The Daily Telegraph — an English liberal, and from the 1880s a conservative newspaper; published under this title in London from 1855 to 1937. — 559
Page me39.743
Daily Tribune — see New-York Daily Tribune
Page me39.743
Débats — see Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires
Page me39.743
The Democratic Review of British and Foreign Politics, History and Literature — a Chartist monthly published by George Julian Harney in London from June 1849 to September 1850; in 1850 Engels was among its contributors. — 60-61
Page me39.743
Demokrat — see New-Yorker Demokrat
Page me39.743
Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung — a newspaper founded by the German political refugees in Brussels and published from January 1847 to February 1848. From September 1847 Marx and Engels regularly contributed to it and under their influence it became an organ of revolutionary communist propaganda. — 117
Page me39.743
Deutsche Londoner Zeitung. Blätter für Politik, Literatur und Kunst — a literary and political weekly published by German refugees in London from April 1845 to February 1851. It was edited by the petty-bourgeois democrat Ludwig Bamberger and supported financially by the deposed Duke Charles of Brunswick. Ferdinand Freiligrath was a member of the editorial board from 1847 to 1851. The newspaper carried a number of works by Marx and Engels. — 370
Page me39.743
Deutsche Schnellpost für Europäische Zustände, öffentliches und sociales Leben Deutschlands — an organ of the German moderate democratic émigrés in the USA published twice weekly in New York from 1843 to 1851. In 1848 and 1851 its editor was Karl Heinzen; in 1851 Arnold Ruge was also on its editorial board. — 116
Page me39.743
Deutsche Volkshalle — a clerical daily in opposition to the Prussian Government, published in Cologne from 1849 to 1855. — 282
Page me39.743
Deutsche Wehr-Zeitung, Militärische Wochenschrift, herausgegeben von einer Gesellschaft deutscher Offiziere und Militär-Beamten — a conservative military newspaper published under this title twice weekly in Berlin from 1848 to 1850; it appeared as Preußische Wehr-Zeitung. Militärische Zeitschrift in Potsdam from 1851 to 1854. — 164

Page Break me39.744
Page me39.744
Deutsche Zeitung — a daily, and later a weekly newspaper published in New Orleans from 1847 to 1907; a newspaper of petty-bourgeois democrats in the 1840s and 1850s. — 52
Page me39.744

Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger — a daily newspaper published in Dresden from 1848 to 1904; initially of a liberal trend, from October 1848 became an official organ. — 238
Page me39.744
The Economist — an economic and political weekly published in London from 1843, mouthpiece of the big industrial bourgeoisie. — 275, 294-95, 388, 401
Page me39.744
The Examiner — a liberal weekly published in London from 1808 to 1881. — 224, 243, 260, 404
Page me39.744
Examiner and Times — a liberal newspaper founded in 1848 as a result of the merger of the Manchester Times and Manchester Examiner; in the 1840s and 1850s it supported the Free Traders; the newspaper appeared under different titles until 1894. — 233, 561
Page me39.744
Frankfurter Journal — a daily newspaper published in Frankfurt am Main from the seventeenth century to 1903; in mid-nineteenth century it followed a liberal line. — 243, 276
Page me39.744
Frankfurter Oberpostamts-Zeitung — a newspaper published in Frankfurt am Main from 1619 to 1866. During the 1848-49 revolution it was the organ of the Central Authority — the Imperial Regent and the Imperial Government; in the 1850s, organ of the Federal Diet. — 225
Page me39.744
The Friend of the People — a Chartist weekly published by George Julian Harney in London from 7 December 1850 to 26 July 1851 and from 7 February to 24 April 1852. — 30, 43
Page me39.744
Für die freien Gemeinden — a journal published by German petty-bourgeois democrats in New York in the 1850s. — 459
Page me39.744
La Gazette agricole — a newspaper published in Paris from 1842. — 162
Page me39.744
Die Gegenwart. Eine encyclopädische Darstellung der neuesten Zeitgeschichte für alle Stände — miscellanies on various problems of social history published by F.A. Brockhaus in Leipzig from 1848 to 1856. — 158, 163, 182
Page me39.744
The Globe and Traveller — a daily published in London from 1803 to 1921; mouthpiece of the Whigs until 1866, and later of the Conservatives. — 7, 440, 558
Page me39.744
Gradaus. Social-demokratisches Wochenblatt — a German-language newspaper published in Philadelphia in the 1850s by a local Volksunion, its editor was Nikolaus Schmitt. — 367, 391
Page me39.744
Guardian — see The Manchester Guardian
Page me39.744
Hamburger Correspondent — see Staats- und Gelehrten- Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartheyischen Correspondenten

Page me39.744
Hamburger Nachrichten — a daily published from 1792; during the 1848-49 revolution was the mouthpiece of the bourgeoisie demanding an Imperial

Page Break me39.745
Constitution, and later supported the Prussian monarchy; official organ of Bismarck at the end of the century. — 178
Page me39.745
Herald — see The Morning Herald
Page me39.745
Herold des Westens — a German-language weekly published in Louisville (USA) in 1853; its editor was Karl Heinzen. — 396
Page me39.745
L'Homme: journal de la démocratie universelle — a weekly published by French petty-bourgeois refugees on the Island of Jersey and in London from 1853 to 1856. — 527
Page me39.745
Die Hornisse — a German democratic satirical newspaper published by Heinrich Heise and Gottlieb Kellner in Cassel from 1848 to 1850. — 86, 114, 583
Page me39.745
L'Indépendance belge — a liberal daily founded in Brussels in 1831. — 236
Page me39.745
Janus — a German-language newspaper of petty-bourgeois democratic refugees in the USA published by Karl Heinzen in New York in 1851 and 1852. — 93, 141, 273, 349, 574
Page me39.745
Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg — a daily newspaper of the Russian Ministry for Foreign Affairs, published in French from 1825 to 1914. — 446
Page me39.745
Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1944; during the 1848 revolution it voiced monarchist views; after the 1851 coup d'état, an organ of the moderate Orleanist opposition. — 68, 334, 368, 394, 479
Page me39.745
Karlsruher Zeitung — a daily published from 1757. — 194, 196
Page me39.745
Kölnische; Köln. Zeit.; K.Z. — see Kölnische Zeitung
Page me39.745
Kölnische Zeitung — a daily published in Cologne from 1802 to 1945; in the 1850s it voiced the interests of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie. — 7, 23, 34, 75, 89, 90, 95, 142, 206, 215, 238, 240, 243, 244, 297, 367, 504, 547, 575, 576, 578
Page me39.745
Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger — a daily newspaper of the Prussian Government published under this title in Berlin from 1851 to 1871. — 563
Page me39.745
Der Kosmos — a weekly of German refugees in England; it was published by Ernst Haug in London in 1851 (only six numbers appeared); Gottfried Kinkel and other leaders of petty-bourgeois democrats contributed to it. — 117

Page me39.745
The Leader — a liberal weekly published in London from March 1850 to June 1860. — 196, 224, 243, 280, 345, 502-03
Page me39.745
Lithographierte Correspondenz — information bulletins published by J. Weydemeyer in the USA in 1852. — 185, 210
Page me39.745
Lithographische Korrespondenz — an edition published by Gottfried Kinkel in London in the early 1850s. — 23, 34, 570
Page me39.745
Manchester Courier — a conservative daily published from 1825 to 1916. — 233

Page Break me39.746
Page me39.746
The Manchester Guardian — a daily founded in 1821; a newspaper of the Free Traders, and from the mid-nineteenth century of the Liberal Party. — 233, 342, 343, 374, 561
Page me39.746
Militärische Zeitschrift — see Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift
Page me39.746
Militär-Wochenblatt — a weekly published in Berlin from 1816 to 1943. — 164
Page me39.746
Le Moniteur universel — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1901; from 1799 to 1869 it was an official government newspaper; it appeared under this title from 1811. — 17, 404, 458
Page me39.746
The Morning Advertiser — a daily published in London from 1794 to 1934; in the 1850s it was a newspaper of the radical bourgeoisie. — 73, 112-13, 207, 210, 224, 231, 235, 243, 260, 357, 359, 364, 373, 377, 417, 438, 440, 462, 473, 486, 499, 515, 523-24, 546, 548, 558
Page me39.746
The Morning Chronicle — a daily published in London from 1770 to 1862; the newspaper of the Whigs, in the early 1850s of the Peelites, and then of the Conservatives. — 129, 143, 164, 276, 470, 482, 524
Page me39.746
Morning Courier and New-York Enquirer — a newspaper of the Whig Party, published in New York from 1829 to 1861 first twice weekly and from 1832 weekly; its publisher and owner was James Webb. — 396
Page me39.746
The Morning Herald — a conservative daily published in London from 1780 to 1869. — 132, 276, 406, 438, 546, 563
Page me39.746
The Morning Post — a conservative daily published in London from 1772 to 1937; in the mid-nineteenth century it was the mouthpiece of the Right wing of the Whig Party grouped round Palmerston. — 276, 289, 292, 295, 563
Page me39.746

La Nation, organe quotidien démocrate socialiste — a newspaper of Belgian petty-bourgeois democrats published in Brussels from 1848 to 1856. — 71, 73, 297
Page me39.746
Le National — a daily published in Paris from 1830 to 1851; the newspaper of the moderate republicans in the 1840s. — 447
Page me39.746
National-Zeitung — a daily published in Berlin from 1848 to 1915; it followed a liberal line in the 1850s. — 23, 225, 243
Page me39.746
National-Zeitung (Basle) — see Schweizerische National-Zeitung
Page me39.746
The Naval and Military Gazette — a weekly dealing with military problems and colonial policy, published in London from 1833 to 1886. — 422
Page me39.746
Neu-England-Zeitung — a German-language daily published by the petty-bourgeois refugees in Boston (USA) from 1846 to 1853; one of its editors was Eduard Schläger, and among its contributors were Adolf Cluss and Joseph Weydemeyer. — 298, 299, 302, 317, 326, 330, 349, 369, 377, 387
Page me39.746
Neue Oder-Zeitung — a German democratic daily published under this title in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1849 to 1855; in the 1850s it was the most radical paper in Germany; in 1855 Marx was its London correspondent. — 360, 502, 506, 507, 515, 534, 537, 553-54
Page me39.746
Neue Preußische Zeitung — a daily newspaper of the Prussian junkers and Court circles, published in Berlin from June 1848 to 1939; also known as Kreuz-Zeitung because the heading contained a cross bearing the device 'Forward with God for King and Fatherland!' — 61, 210, 216, 226, 502

Page Break me39.747
Page me39.747
Neue Pr. Z. — see Neue Preußische Zeitung
Page me39.747
Neue Rheinische; N. Rh. Z. — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Democratie
Page me39.747
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Democratie — a daily newspaper of the revolutionary-proletarian wing of the democrats during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; it was published in Cologne under the editorship of Marx from 1 June 1848 to 19 May 1849, with an interval between 27 September and 12 October 1848. — 34, 45, 76, 79, 99, 103, 120, 128, 138, 187, 215, 222, 225, 231, 240, 273, 360, 362, 366, 421, 423, 451, 542, 553, 567, 568, 577
Page me39.747
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — a theoretical journal of the Communist League; it was founded by Marx and Engels in December 1849 and published till November 1850. — 3, 34, 52, 61
Page me39.747

Neue Zeit — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees in New York from 1855 to 1858. — 547
Page me39.747
New Rhenish Gazette — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Democratie
Page me39.747
New-York Daily Tribune — a newspaper founded by Horace Greeley in 1841 and published until 1924; till the mid-1850s it was a newspaper of the American Left-wing Whigs, then of the Republican Party; in the 1840s and 1850s it opposed slavery. Marx and Engels contributed to it from August 1851 to March 1862. The newspaper had several special issues, among them the New-York Semi-Weekly Tribune and the New-York Weekly Tribune. — 3, 4, 6, 10-11, 13, 17, 32, 36, 37, 40, 43, 44, 55, 58, 67, 69, 85, 94, 97, 106, 120, 145, 147, 161, 189, 207, 212, 246, 247, 252, 261, 268, 272, 288, 293, 298, 299, 315, 329, 332, 334, 345, 346, 350, 355, 359, 361, 365, 366, 369, 387, 395, 396, 398, 399, 404, 406, 414, 422, 429, 432, 433, 436, 437, 439, 447, 450, 455, 472, 473, 479, 485, 500, 508, 515, 536, 537, 542, 547, 548, 549, 559, 560, 571, 578, 579, 583, 586, 590
Page me39.747
New-York Enquirer — see Morning Courier and New-York Enquirer
Page me39.747
The New-York Herald — a daily newspaper of the Republican Party published from 1835 to 1924. — 162, 429
Page me39.747
The New-York Times — a daily newspaper of the Republican Party founded in 1851. — 357, 546, 548
Page me39.747
New-York Tribune — see New-York Daily Tribune
Page me39.747
New-Yorker Abendzeitung — a petty-bourgeois democratic newspaper published by German refugees in the USA in the 1850s. — 260
Page me39.747
New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung — see Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung
Page me39.747
New-Yorker Demokrat — a German-language newspaper published by the petty-bourgeois refugees in the USA from 1848. — 52, 299, 302
Page me39.747
New-Yorker Deutsche Zeitung, herausgegeben von Freunden des Fortschritts — a daily published in 1851 by Karl Heinzen, organ of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in the USA. — 206
Page me39.747
New-Yorker Staatszeitung — a German-language democratic daily founded in 1834; later an organ of the US Democratic Party. — 44, 195
Page me39.747
The Northern Star — a weekly, central organ of the Chartists; published from 1837 to 1852, first in Leeds, and from November 1844 in London. Its founder and editor was Feargus O'Connor, George Julian Harney being one of its editors.

Page Break me39.748

Engels contributed to it from 1843 to 1850. From 20 March to 24 April 1852 it appeared as The Star and then up to November 1852 as The Star of Freedom. — 15, 89, 107, 162, 164, 266

Page me39.748

Notes to the People — a Chartist weekly edited by Ernest Jones and published in London in 1851 and 1852; Marx and Engels supported the journal, took part in editing and publishing it, and printed a number of articles in it between June 1851 and April 1852. — 3, 15, 38, 42, 65, 72, 75

Page me39.748

The Observer — an English conservative weekly published in London since 1791. — 482

Page me39.748

Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift — a military journal published in Vienna once or twice monthly from 1808 to 1870 (with intervals). — 164

Page me39.748

La Patrie. Journal du commerce, de l'agriculture, de l'industrie, de la littérature, des sciences et des arts — a daily published in Paris from 1841 to 1871; in 1850 spoke for the Party of Order (the monarchist bourgeoisie) and later took a Bonapartist stand. — 17, 73, 76

Page me39.748

The People's Paper — a Chartist weekly, founded in London in May 1852 by Ernest Jones and published until 1858; Marx and Engels contributed to it from October 1852 to December 1856 and helped with its editing. — 72, 89, 99, 107, 139, 140, 149, 150, 162, 175, 195, 207, 222, 224, 243, 266, 276, 317, 325, 364, 369, 399, 482, 483, 502, 522, 525, 527, 536, 575

Page me39.748

Philadelphier Demokrat — a German-language democratic newspaper published under different titles from 1839 to 1918. First it appeared as Der Demokrat; under the above title it was published by L.A. Wollenweber and J.L. Hoffmann from 1847 to December 1853. — 241

Page me39.748

Der Pionier — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees published in New York (1854-58) and Boston (1859-79); its editor-in-chief was Karl Heinzen. — 433, 462, 542

Page me39.748

Polyarnaya zvezda (Polar Star) — a literary and socio-political yearly voicing revolutionary-democratic views; it was published in London by A.I. Herzen from 1855 to 1862 and in 1869; eight books in all came out. — 537

Page me39.748

The Portfolio — a collection of diplomatic papers and documents published by David Urquhart in London. The series The Portfolio; or a Collection of State Papers was published in 1835-37; and another, The Portfolio. Diplomatic Review, in 1843-45. — 393

Page me39.748

The Press — a Tory weekly published in London from 1853 to 1866. — 25

Page me39.748

La Presse — a daily published in Paris from 1836 to 1866; mouthpiece of the opposition to the July monarchy in the 1840s; newspaper of the moderate republicans in 1848 and 1849, and later of the Bonapartists; from 1836 to 1857 it was edited by Emile de Girardin. — 447, 526
Page me39.748
Putnam's Monthly Magazine of American Literature, Science, and Art — a mouthpiece of the Republicans published in New York from 1853 to 1870; in 1855 it carried Engels' series of articles, The Armies of Europe. — 537, 546, 547

Page Break me39.749
Page me39.749
The Red Republican — a Chartist weekly published by George Julian Harney in London from June to November 1850; it carried the first English translation of the Manifesto of the Communist Party by Marx and Engels. — 60
Page me39.749
Die Reform — a German-language newspaper of the American Workers' Association, which consisted mostly of the German emigrant workers; it was published in New York from 5 March 1853 to 26 April 1854 first once a week, then twice a week, and from 15 October 1853 daily. Joseph Weydemeyer was its co-editor and Adolf Cluss a permanent contributor; it frequently printed articles by Marx and Engels from the New-York Daily Tribune. — 312, 318, 326, 366, 370, 372, 391, 396, 397, 402, 403, 421, 439, 441, 443, 446, 450, 453, 462, 583, 587
Page me39.749
La Réforme — a daily newspaper of democratic republicans and petty-bourgeois socialists published in Paris from 1843 to 1850. — 31
Page me39.749
Republik der Arbeiter — a workers' weekly published by Wilhelm Weitling in New York from 1850 to 1855; it voiced the views of egalitarian communists. — 72, 275, 449
Page me39.749
Revista militar — a military journal published in Lisbon from 1849 to 1916. — 540
Page me39.749
Die Revolution — a communist journal published by Joseph Weydemeyer in New York in 1852; two weekly issues appeared — on 6 and 13 January; two 'non-periodic' issues appeared in May and June. — 3, 8, 11, 19, 25, 27, 29, 41, 43, 52, 58, 60, 65, 71, 72, 77, 95, 96, 102, 118, 120, 157, 160, 391, 570, 572
Page me39.749
Reynolds' Newspaper — a radical weekly published in London from 1850; supported Chartists in the early 1850s. — 502
Page me39.749
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — a daily founded on 1 January 1842 as an organ of the Rhenish bourgeois opposition; it was published in Cologne till 31 March 1843 and was edited by Marx from 15 October 1842 to 17 March 1843; it assumed a strongly pronounced revolutionary democratic complexion, which led to its suppression. Engels was one of its contributors. — 507
Page me39.749

Schnellpost — see Deutsche Schnellpost für Europäische Zustände, öffentliches und sociales Leben Deutschlands
Page me39.749
Schweizerische National-Zeitung — a liberal daily published in Basle from 1842 to 1858. — 166
Page me39.749
Severnaya pchela (Northern Bee) — a semi-official government and literary newspaper published in St. Petersburg from 1825 to 1864. — 433
Page me39.749
The Spectator — a weekly published in London from 1828; first liberal and later conservative. — 30, 224, 243, 260
Page me39.749
The Spirit of Freedom — an English newspaper close to the Chartists; it was published by Gerald Massey in 1849. — 30
Page me39.749
Staats-Anzeiger — see Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me39.749
Staats- und Gelehrten-Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartheyischen Correspondenten — a monarchist daily published in Hamburg from 1814 to 1868. — 423
Page me39.749
Staatszeitung — see New-Yorker Staatszeitung
Page me39.749
The Star; The Star of Freedom — see The Northern Star

Page Break me39.750
Page me39.750
The Sun — a liberal daily published in London from 1798 to 1876. — 7, 25
Page me39.750
The Sunday Times — a weekly published in London from 1822; a mouthpiece of the Whigs in the 1850s. — 536
Page me39.750
Tages-Chronik — a democratic newspaper published in Bremen from 1849 to 1851. It was edited by Rudolph Dulon; from January 1851 it appeared under the title Bremer Tages-Chronik. Organ der Demokratie. — 173
Page me39.750
Telegraph — see The Daily Telegraph
Page me39.750
The Times — a daily founded in London in 1785 under the title Daily Universal Register; appears under the above title from 1 January 1788. — 20, 25, 26, 30, 59, 61, 106, 129, 143, 146, 189, 210, 224, 253, 276, 277, 282, 285, 295, 317, 319, 329, 355, 373, 405, 409, 410, 418, 422, 433, 435, 438, 439, 441, 455, 458, 460, 472, 514, 516, 518, 519, 523, 525, 546, 547, 564
Page me39.750
Tribune — see New-York Daily Tribune
Page me39.750

Die Turn-Zeitung. Organ des socialistischen Turnerbundes — a newspaper of German democratic emigrants in the USA; it was published from 1851 to 1861 monthly and later fortnightly, first in New York and from 1 November 1853 in Philadelphia; Cluss and Weydemeyer were among its contributors. — 94, 96, 100, 102, 107, 119, 578
Page me39.750
Union — see The Washington Union
Page me39.750
Das Volk — a German-language newspaper published by the petty-bourgeois democrat Karl Heinzen in the USA in the 1850s. — 319
Page me39.750
Volkshalle — see Deutsche Volkshalle
Page me39.750
Der Wanderer — a constitutional monarchist daily published in Vienna from 1809 to 1866. — 410
Page me39.750
The Washington Union — a newspaper of the Democratic Party in the USA published from 1846 to 1858; Wilhelm Pieper contributed to it in 1853 and 1854. — 394, 397, 421, 482, 490
Page me39.750
Wecker — see Baltimore Wecker
Page me39.750
The Weekly Press — see The Press
Page me39.750
Wehr-Zeitung — see Deutsche Wehr-Zeitung
Page me39.750
Westdeutsche Zeitung — a democratic newspaper published by Hermann Becker in Cologne from 25 May 1849 to 21 July 1850. — 34, 570
Page me39.750
The Westminster Review — a quarterly published in London from 1824 to 1914. — 404
Page me39.750
De Zuid-Afrikaan or The Zuid Afrikaan — a newspaper published in English and Dutch in Cape Town from 1830 to 1930; Karl Marx contributed to it in 1854. — 405, 414

Page Break me39.751

SUBJECT INDEX

Page me39.751
A

Abyssinians (Ethiopians) — 340
Adventurism (political) — voluntarist attitude towards revolution, 'play at revolution' — 73, 85, 101, 103, 106, 125, 127-29, 140-42, 154-56, 158, 161, 168-70, 172, 187, 197, 224, 225, 279, 280-81, 577

See also Communist League — struggle against sectarian tactics of the Willich-Schapper group, split in the League
Afghanistan, Afghans — 327, 404
See also Anglo-Afghan war, 1838-42 Agitation club (Union) (1850s) — 14, 42, 44, 97, 151, 173
Agriculture
— and industry — 345
— and price formation — 164-65, 253, 512-13
— and application of chemistry — 382, 392
— and natural conditions — 339
See also Agronomy
Agronomy — 382, 513
Alsace — 388, 476
Anglo-Afghan war, 1838-42 — 432
Anglo-Sikh wars, 19th cent. — 82, 84, 96
Anti-communism (critique and exposure by Marx and Engels)
— persecution and slander of communists — 22, 220, 575-76
See also Cologne Communist Trial — of petty-bourgeois ideologists — 34, 308, 570
Anti-Corn Law League — 53, 56
Arabs — 326-27, 332, 339-41
Aristocracy — see Nobility
Army
— Austrian — 279, 460, 541, 546
— British — 12, 21, 53
— Danish — 451-52
— French — 48, 263, 388, 452, 490, 495, 496, 524
— Indian — 332-33
— Neapolitan (of the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies) — 540
— Russian — 427, 470-71, 495
— Schleswig-Holstein — 451-52
— Turkish — 374, 394, 422, 444, 479
See also Artillery
Artillery — 422, 424, 539-40
Asia, Asiatic mode of production — 333, 339, 346-48
Assyria — 327
Australia
— immigration — 165, 513
— foreign trade — 165, 374, 514
— discovery of gold in — 83, 84, 96, 130, 165, 231
Austria — 5, 105, 195, 495
— trade — 286, 294-95
— and the Italian states, their oppression — 314-17, 343, 493, 545
— and France — 5, 11-12, 44, 195, 277, 308, 494
— and Prussia — 5, 56, 143, 195, 286, 307
— and Russia — 5, 143, 463, 546

See also Army — Austrian; Austro-Italian war, 1848-49; Crimean war, 1853-56 — and Austria

Page Break me39.752
Austro-Italian war, 1848-49 — 309-10

Page me39.752
B

Babylon — 327
Bank(s) — 111, 257, 388
— of England — 150, 161, 162, 164, 199, 274, 275, 368
Beduins — 327, 340
Belgium — 12, 45
Bible — 249, 326, 327, 492, 558
Bonapartism
— and bourgeoisie — 47, 48, 68
— and working class — 47, 197, 320
— Bonapartist (imperial) 'socialism' — 17, 68, 123
See also France — Second Empire (1852-70)
Bourgeoisie — 62, 65, 68, 191, 473-74
— American — 346
— English — 21, 53, 55, 59, 61, 68, 119, 143, 474
— French — 17, 45, 48, 51, 59, 68, 261, 387, 474
— Italian — 171, 279
— Prussian — 307, 349
Bourgeois political economy — 61-62, 163, 345-46, 382, 383
— Carey's economic views, Marx's criticism of — 62, 93, 345-46, 378, 381, 384
See also Ricardo, Ricardian school
Bulgaria — 444, 460
Byzantium — 447

Page me39.752
C

California — 57, 83, 84, 96, 165, 253, 556
Caliphate of Baghdad — 327
Campaign of 1812 in Russia — 305
Capital
— and wage-labour — 378, 381, 383
— and division of labour — 381
Capitalist mode of production
— its historical necessity — 65
— antagonistic contradictions — 62
— as the basis of bourgeois society — 191, 345
— bourgeois conceptions of — 61-62, 65, 345-46

Catholicism — 381
Central Committee of European Democracy — 73, 171, 433
Chaldeans, the — 327
Chartism, Chartists
— as first independent political party of working class — 3
— and bourgeois and petty-bourgeois radicals — 107, 196, 536
— in the 1850s — 15, 31, 59, 68, 196, 324-25, 350, 355, 483, 502, 521, 523, 525
— Chartist press, the — 15, 42, 60-61, 72, 89, 99, 107, 162, 176, 196, 265-66, 276, 325, 502
— Marx's and Engels' participation in Chartist movement — 11, 68, 75, 96-97, 175, 196, 414, 502, 521
See also Labour Parliament
China — 5, 165, 346
Christianity — 341, 447
See also Bible; Catholicism; Protestantism
Civilisation — 289, 392
Civil war — 62, 305-06
Classes, class struggle — 59, 61-62, 65, 68, 87, 191, 285, 473-74
See also Lockouts; Preston strike, 1853-54
Cologne Communist Trial
— Marx's and Engels' defence of the accused and exposure of the provocative methods used in staging the trial — 9, 10, 20, 25, 27-29, 34, 59, 79, 96, 107, 115, 132, 134-35, 136-37, 138, 142-44, 211-12, 215-24, 226-38, 240-45, 246-47, 250-51, 252, 259-66, 270, 275, 281-82, 287-88, 301, 302, 323, 324, 326, 558, 570, 575-80 — and the Willich-Schapper group — 74, 112-13, 170, 177, 222-24, 236, 244, 260, 264, 313, 326, 330-31, 335-36, 576 — class character of the trial — 134, 136-37, 143, 206, 212
— conduct of the accused at the trial — 134, 137, 195, 197, 212, 242-43, 262-63, 308, 559, 575-76

Page Break me39.753
— and the bourgeois press — 23, 30, 34, 142, 210
— relief organised by Marx and Engels for the accused and their families — 247, 259-60, 282, 297 — historic significance and consequences for the international working-class movement — 247, 308, 309
Commune (medieval) — 474-76
Communism, scientific; communist movement — 308, 476
See also Communist League; Marxism (general characteristics)
Communism, utopian; non-scientific conceptions of communism — 67, 345-46
See also Owenism; Saint-Simonism; Weitling Communist League, the — foundation — 143
— in the 1848-49 revolution — 308, 553
— after defeat of 1848-49 revolution — 8, 14, 59, 66, 71, 73, 75, 76, 79, 151, 160, 176-77, 207, 244-45, 247

— Rules of 1850 — 66
— elaboration of tactical principles — 308-09
— struggle against sectarian tactics of the Willich-Schapper group, split in the League — 15, 44, 74, 86, 92, 100-01, 103, 125-26, 143, 151-52, 162, 169, 173, 177-78, 226-27, 244, 260, 264, 266, 296, 309, 317, 325-26, 330-31, 351, 378, 403-04, 575-76
— and petty-bourgeois democracy — 14, 262-63, 308, 575-76
— dissolution of Communist League, causes of — 247
See also Cologne Communist Trial; German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1919); League of the Just Community, the — old Slav — 67
— oriental — 339, 347-48
Consciousness
— as understood by Hegel — 556
Corn Laws — 61, 69, 143, 512-13
See also Anti-Corn Law League
Crafts, craftsmen — 82, 84 Credit
— state — 257, 263, 388
— in Proudhon's theory — 261, 263
Crimean war, 1853-56
— causes and character — 288, 487
— preparations for the war, plans and forces of belligerents — 406, 425, 427, 435, 470-71, 487
— and diplomacy of European states — 408-10, 461-62, 518, 519
— and prospects for revolution — 422, 487
— battle of Sinope, 30 November 1853 — 408, 423, 518
— military operations in Danubian theatre of war, 1853-54 — 368, 395, 411, 422, 426, 427, 446, 460, 469-71
— battle of Oltenitza, 4 November 1853 — 404, 408
— battle of Chetatea, 6 January 1854 — 408, 410
— siege of Silistria, 1854 — 411, 458, 460, 461, 463, 472
— military operations in the Crimea, 1854-55 — 444, 446, 451-53, 472, 484, 485, 499, 507, 509, 538, 541, 550
— naval operations — 409, 410, 460, 466, 485
— and England, foreign policy and diplomacy — 408-09, 446, 452, 472-73, 485, 487, 500, 518
— and France, foreign policy and diplomacy — 409, 487
— and Turkey — 408, 410, 422, 444, 518
— and Russia, foreign policy and diplomacy — 409, 410, 446, 461
— and Austria — 419, 431, 461, 464, 485
Customs Union (Germany, 1834-71) — 186, 195, 307

Danish-Prussian war, 1848-52 — 404, 451-52
Danubian Principalities — 461, 518
See also Moldavia; Wallachia

Page Break me39.754
Democracy, petty-bourgeois (political trend) — 65, 73-74
— relations between Marx and Engels and petty-bourgeois democrats — 14, 34, 236, 290-91, 439-40
See also Communist League — and petty-bourgeois democracy; Emigration, emigrants — bourgeois-democratic, petty-bourgeois
Denmark — 366, 376, 456
See also Army — Danish; Danish-Prussian war, 1848-52; Schleswig-Holstein question, the Dictatorship of the proletariat
— as a result of developing class struggle — 62, 65
— as the State in the period of transition from capitalism to communism (socialism) — 62, 65
Diplomacy — 395, 432
Division of labour — 381, 384
Doctrinairism, doctrinaires — 388

Page me39.754
E

Eastern Question, the — 278, 516
— nature of — 288
— as a source of international discord — 487
— aggravation in early 1850s — 288, 388
See also Crimean war, 1853-56; Egyptian crisis, 1839-41; Russo-Turkish war, 1828-29
East India Company — 517
East, the (specific features of economic and social development) — 327, 332-33, 339-41
See also Asia, Asiatic mode of production; Community (oriental); State, the (oriental) Economic crises
— and condition of working people — 374, 376, 388, 512-13
— and prospects of socialist development and revolution — 163, 165, 197, 388
— forecasting of, by Marx and Engels — 32, 54, 83, 96, 162-63, 164-65, 190, 275, 286, 306, 367, 372, 387 — chronic character — 165, 197
— and trade — 45, 46, 49, 53, 54, 57, 69, 165, 221, 368
— and market situation — 82, 83, 84, 165, 253
— and bourgeois state — 263
Economics and politics — 62, 339-40
Egypt — 295, 340
See also Egypt, ancient; Egyptian crisis
Egypt, ancient — 327
Egyptian crisis, 1839-41 — 456

— London conventions of 1840 and 1841 — 404, 432, 447, 457
Emigration club (1850s) — 14, 42, 44, 97
Emigration, emigrants
— as a consequence of capitalist development — 165, 320, 512, 542
— aristocratic — 45
— bourgeois-democratic, petty-bourgeois — 73-74, 141, 281, 521, 523
— revolutionary — 42, 373
— English — 165, 512
— French — 42, 50-51, 70-71, 73, 74, 76-77, 135, 136, 141, 171, 174, 199, 281, 295-96, 317, 320, 367, 388, 434, 462, 502, 521, 555
— German emigrants in England — 6, 74, 93, 95-96, 121-22, 124-26, 128, 130, 136, 139-41, 146, 148-49, 154-56, 187, 194-95, 236, 266-67, 283-84, 304-05, 309, 433, 498-99, 569
— German emigrants in Switzerland — 44
— German emigrants in the USA — 6, 41, 52, 86, 92, 122, 139, 148-49, 158, 161, 282, 296, 297, 351, 367, 542; see also German-American revolutionary loan — Hungarian — 30-32, 56, 73, 101, 106, 126, 141, 150, 151, 153, 158, 171, 194, 232, 261, 267-69, 279, 280, 281-82, 283-84, 290-91, 297, 304, 572
— Italian — 521; see also Mazzini
— Polish — 80, 172, 345, 401, 479, 521
— Russian — 306, 345, 359-63, 365,

Page Break me39.755
438, 521, 522-23, 553
Engels, Frederick
— on himself — 424
— friendship with Marx and family — 69, 81, 530, 533
— joint work with Marx — 4, 37, 86, 90, 109, 120, 147-48, 188-89, 209, 211, 217, 238, 246, 272, 288-89, 332, 368, 370, 372, 374, 375-76, 414, 429, 463, 464, 477, 515-20, 537-41
— Marx on Engels — 376, 391, 407, 423-25, 529-30, 533
— before 1850 — 293, 424
— between 1850 and 1855 (general) — 11, 16, 67, 75, 427-28, 435
— language studies — 67, 80, 180, 305, 341, 424
See also Chartism, Chartists — Marx's and Engels' participation in Chartist movement; Democracy, petty-bourgeois — relations between Marx and Engels and petty-bourgeois democrats; Marx, Karl; Military science — Marx's and Engels' study of military history and problems of military theory
England (Great Britain) — 21, 54, 334-35, 345
— industry — 5, 57, 82-84, 96, 147, 188-90, 253, 276, 285-86, 289, 293, 306, 320, 345, 374
— agriculture — 253, 275, 306, 512-13
— trade — 5, 54, 57, 82-84, 96, 165, 294-95, 374, 434, 511-13, 514; see also Corn Laws; East India Company — finances, budget, taxation — 162-63, 253, 274-76, 284, 306, 333, 355, 515, 517-18, 519; see also Bank(s) — of England

— social and political system, class relations — see Bourgeoisie — English; National Reform League (England, from 1849); Nobility, aristocracy — English; Parliament, British; Working class — in England; Working-class movement in England — oligarchic character of government — 21, 276, 289
— political parties of ruling classes, crisis of (1850s) — 129, 135-36, 197, 306; see also Free traders (England); Peelites (England); Tories (England); Whigs (England) — electoral system, electoral reforms — 54, 56, 136, 284, 516, 518-20
— coalition 'Cabinet of all the Talents', 1852-55 — 284, 518
— foreign policy, diplomacy — 54, 288, 376, 431-32, 446, 456-57, 487-90, 516; see also Crimean war, 1853-56 — and England, foreign policy and diplomacy
— and France — 10, 11-12, 54, 276, 432, 447, 456, 487-89, 495-96, 554-55
— and Greece — 284, 404, 455-56
— and Italy — 53
— and Prussia — 437
— and Russia — 53, 285, 288, 432-33, 446, 456-57, 487, 489
— and Spain — 53, 456, 495
— and Turkey — 285, 288, 432
See also Anglo-Afghan war, 1838-42; Anglo-Sikh wars, 19 cent.; Army — British; Emigration — English; India — colonisation by Britain and its consequences; Ireland; Literature — English; Navy — British; Scotland

Page me39.755
F

Feudalism — 191, 339, 381, 392, 474, 490
See also Society — feudal
Feuerbach, his philosophy — 45
Fortification — 411
France
— French, the; national character — 51, 171
— in the Middle Ages — 475-76
— during the Consulate and First Empire (1799-1814) — 388, 490; see also Napoleonic wars
— during the July monarchy (1830-48) — 17, 200, 307, 388, 447, 492-97
— Second Empire (1852-70) — 96, 221, 334, 387-88; see also Bonapartism; Crimean war — and

Page Break me39.756
France, foreign policy and diplomacy — coup d'état of 2 December 1851 — 7, 42, 46-48, 91, 320, 456
— industry — 306, 320
— agriculture — 162, 165, 388
— trade — 47, 82, 83, 320
— finances, financial policy — 68, 122, 257, 263, 372, 388, 545
— internal situation, home policy — 7, 12, 17, 27, 45, 47-49, 68-69, 122, 126, 263, 306-07, 320, 388, 545

— corruption of ruling circles — 48-49, 257, 388
— monarchist groups — 126, 129, 130, 172, 200, 263, 307, 308
— growth of oppositional sentiments in French society — 44, 47-49, 126, 128, 200, 263, 307, 387-88, 555
— Bonapartist regime and wars — 7, 10, 11-12, 257, 276, 307
— and Austria — 5, 12, 45, 194, 277, 307, 494
— and Belgium — 12, 45
— and England — 10, 12, 54, 276, 432, 447, 456-57, 487-89, 496, 555
— and Germany — 36, 44, 276
— and Hungary — 45
— and Piedmont — 12
— and Poland — 45
— and Prussia — 5, 12, 307, 494, 524
— and Russia — 5, 11-12, 45, 277, 416, 456-57, 487, 492, 494, 495, 496
— and Spain — 490, 492-97
— and Switzerland — 12
— and Turkey — 277, 289, 456-57
See also Army — French; Bourgeoisie — French; Emigration, emigrants — French; French revolution (18 century); Literature — French; Peasantry — French; Revolution of 1848 in France; Second Republic (1848-52); Working class — in France
Free trade — and bourgeois political economy — 275, 346; see also Free traders (England)
— and working class — 513
Free traders (England) — 56, 59, 84, 111, 147, 253
See also Anti-Corn Law League; Manchester School
French Revolution (18th century) — 51, 474

Page me39.756
G

Galicia — 546
Geographical environment — influence on development of society — 339, 392
German-American revolutionary loan — 42, 72, 77, 80, 92, 96, 101, 126, 136, 141, 149-51, 154-57, 158, 161-62, 165, 166, 169, 172-73, 176-77, 206-07, 225, 245, 266, 274-75
German philosophy — 345, 412
See also Feuerbach; Hegel; Young Hegelianism
German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1919) — 14, 113, 195, 217, 226, 336, 521
Germany — 309, 459
— history — 45, 305, 474-76
— economy — 162-63, 164-65, 195, 286, 346, 563
— bourgeois liberalism — 502
— democratic movement — 65, 73-74, 251, 308-09
See also Austria; Customs Union (Germany, 1834-71); Emigration — German emigrants in England, — German emigrants in Switzerland, — German emigrants in the USA;

German philosophy; Literature — German; Peasantry — German; Poetry — German; Prussia; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; United Diet (Germany); Working-class movement in Germany Gold
— as money — 162, 253
— social and economic consequences of its discovery in Australia and America (California) — 57, 83, 84, 96, 165, 253, 275
— as viewed by mercantilists — 275-76
Greece — 447

Page Break me39.757
— insurrection in Greek provinces of Turkey, 1854 — 414, 444
— and England — 284, 404, 456
— and Russia — 285, 447, 456

Page me39.757
H

Hegel, Hegelianism — 45, 65, 87, 104, 208, 306, 462, 587
See also Consciousness — as understood by Hegel
Hinduism — 348
Historical approach — 62, 65, 103, 473-74
Historiography
— in the Middle Ages — 341, 476
— reactionary romantic — 492
— bourgeois, in 19th cent. — 62, 65, 305, 473-76, 500, 503, 506
— French, of the Restoration period — 62, 65, 305, 473-76
Holy Alliance — 12, 53, 289, 432
— congresses — 492-97
Hungary — 31, 53, 105, 432
See also Emigration, emigrants — Hungarian; Revolution of 1848-49 and national liberation war in Hungary

Page me39.757
I

India
— natural conditions — 339
— before British conquest — 327, 332-33
— crafts, home industry — 82, 84, 347
— agriculture — 339, 346-47
— village communities, their stagnation — 347-48
— colonisation by Britain and its consequences — 5, 82, 84, 96, 165, 253, 339, 346, 347, 374, 514, 517
See also Anglo-Sikh wars, 19 cent.; Army — Indian; East India Company; Hinduism Internationalism, proletarian — 259-60

Ireland — 512, 517, 518
See also Parliament, British — Irish MPs ('Irish Brigade')
Islam — 284, 327, 332, 340, 348, 432
See also Koran
Italy
— history — 305, 432, 476
— economy — 307
— Austrian domination — 278-81, 307, 493, 545
— national liberation movement — 73, 101, 142, 281-82, 283-84, 307, 458-59
See also Austro-Italian war, 1848-49; Bourgeoisie — Italian; Emigration — Italian; Kingdom of the Two Sicilies; Literature — Italian; Mazzini; Nobility, aristocracy — Italian; Peasantry — Italian; Piedmont; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states

Page me39.757
J

Jamaica — 346
Java — 348
Jews — 326, 327, 332
Judaism — 326, 327, 341

Page me39.757
K

Kingdom of the Two Sicilies (Naples) — 541
See also Army — Neapolitan
Koran — 285, 328, 340

Page me39.757
L

Labour Parliament (England) — 417, 419
League of the Just, the — 143 Literature — style — 492
— American — 217, 301
— ancient Scandinavian — 328
— Arabian — 328
— English — 440
— French — 74, 203, 209, 249, 297, 332-33, 341, 447, 492-97
— German — 296, 307, 328, 353, 390, 440, 447, 457, 563, 568
— Hebrew — 327
— Hungarian — 543
— Italian — 125-27, 131, 390
— Persian — 341

Page Break me39.758
— Slav — 67
— Spanish — 447, 480, 492
See also Poetry
Lockouts — 374, 561
Lorraine — 388, 476

Page me39.758
M

Machines
— and wages — 513, 561
Manchester School, Manchester men — 44, 69, 355
See also Anti-Corn Law League (England); Free traders (England)
Market price — 383
Marx, Karl
— on himself — 507
— friendship with Engels — 403-04, 530, 533
— joint work with Engels — 4, 37, 80, 84, 109, 120, 147-48, 188-89, 209, 211, 217, 238, 246, 272-73, 288-89, 332, 368, 370, 372, 374, 375-76, 414, 417, 429, 463, 464, 477, 515-20, 537-41
— Engels on Marx and his role in the international working-class movement — 308 — work on treatise on political economy — 28, 46, 62, 99, 125, 163, 259, 293, 367, 522
— contributions to New-York Daily Tribune — 4, 32, 41-42, 55, 107, 115, 120, 147, 261, 272, 288, 292, 299, 315, 329, 331-32, 345, 346, 355, 367, 368, 375, 385, 387, 390, 395, 404, 406-07, 414, 422, 429-30, 432, 436, 439, 447, 472, 484, 485, 502, 536, 537, 544, 560, 588
— language studies — 275, 331, 447
— living conditions in London — 35, 40, 42, 50, 85, 181-82, 216, 221, 270, 289, 385, 414, 439, 464-65, 500, 501-02
— police persecution — 216, 235, 576-78
— his family — 181, 182, 186, 199, 216, 385, 406, 421, 453, 454, 464-65, 515, 525, 528, 529-33, 541, 578, 581
See also Chartism, Chartists — Marx's and Engels' participation in Chartist movement; Democracy, petty-bourgeois — relations between Marx and Engels and petty-bourgeois democrats; Engels, Frederick; Military science — Marx's and Engels' study of military history and problems of military theory
Marxism (general characteristics) — 62, 65, 68, 308-09
Mazzini, Mazzinists — 31, 42, 46, 56, 59, 71, 74, 76-77, 101, 107, 141-42, 170-72, 278-82, 283-84, 290, 458-59
See also Young Italy
Mercantilism — 311
Mexicans — 504
Military science — 103-04, 133, 425, 452

— Marx's and Engels' study of military history and problems of military theory — 12, 18-19, 52-53, 80-81, 103-04, 128, 133, 138, 158, 159-60, 164, 305, 309-11, 393-94, 405, 419-20, 424-26, 431-32, 451-52, 460, 500-01, 504
See also Fortification
Mode of production — 191, 349
See also Asia, Asiatic mode of production; Capitalist mode of production; Feudalism; Slavery
Mohammedanism — see Islam
Moldavia — 295
Monetary system — and mercantilism — 275
Mongols, the — 327
Monotheism — 327

Page me39.758
N

Napoleonic wars — 305, 406, 409, 411, 490, 538
See also Campaign of 1812 in Russia; Spain — first Spanish revolution (1808-14) and struggle against Napoleonic rule Nation
— national consciousness, national feeling — 340
National Reform League (England, from 1849) — 59
Navy
— British — 12, 18, 21, 408

Page Break me39.759
— Russian — 422, 427, 487
— Turkish — 394
Negroes — 346
Nobility, aristocracy — 191, 473
— English — 20, 61, 276
— Italian — 279
— Russian — 53, 203, 365
— Spanish — 490

Page me39.759
O

Opera — 199, 455, 556
Owenism — 192

Page me39.759
P

Palestine — 295, 327

Pan-Slavism — 67, 373, 534, 536
Parliament, British — 61, 94, 135
— House of Commons — 56
— Irish MPs ('Irish Brigade') — 516, 518
Party, proletarian
— Marx's party, 'our party' — 90, 96, 108, 275, 290, 293, 309, 312, 569, 570
— after defeat of 1848-49 revolution — 43-44, 259-60
— and petty-bourgeois democracy — 308-09, 349
— significance of party press and publications — 41, 293, 309
See also Communist League; Internationalism, proletarian Peasantry
— its role in a bourgeois revolution — 474
— under capitalism — 191
— French — 122, 307, 388, 474
— German — 276
— Italian — 279
— Russian — 53, 67, 305-06
Peelites (England) — 54, 129, 455
Period of transition from capitalism to communism (socialism) — 65
Persia — 333, 339-41, 487
Piedmont — 12 Poetry
— revolutionary — 8
— German — 4, 8, 16, 22, 107, 118, 119, 241, 245, 262, 390, 471
— Persian — 341
Poland
— population — 306
— agriculture — 164
— insurrection of 1830-31 — 138
— and Russia — 489
— and policy of European powers — 45, 53, 432, 489
See also Emigration — Polish
Popular masses, People, the — 473-74
Preston strike, 1853-54 — 374, 375-76, 513
Price(s)
— determination of — 383
— and wages — 388, 513
— and demand and supply — 5
See also Agriculture — and price formation; Market price Production — development, historical character — 62
See also Mode of production Profit
— and wages — 381, 384, 513
— as interpreted by bourgeois economists — 62, 378, 381
See also Rent of land — relation between wages, profit (interest) and rent

Protectionism
— and trade agreements — 285-86
— critique of bourgeois economists' views — 345, 346
See also United States of America — protectionism
Protestantism — 381
Proudhon, Proudhonism — 147, 257, 260-61, 381
See also Credit — in Proudhon's theory Prussia
— economy — 307
— home policy development — 5, 56
— and Austria — 5, 56, 143, 195, 286, 307
— and England — 440
— and France — 5, 12, 307, 494, 524
— and Russia — 5, 143
See also Bourgeoisie — Prussian; Danish-Prussian war, 1848-52; Schleswig-Holstein question, the

Page Break me39.760
Page me39.760
R

Railways — 388
Reform, bourgeois — 44, 68
Religion — 327, 332, 340, 381
See also Christianity; Islam; Judaism; Monotheism Rent of land
— as a product of capitalist mode of production — 381, 382, 392
— conditions giving rise to — 382-84
— source of — 382-83
— and difference in location and fertility of land — 348, 381-83, 392
— relation between wages, profit (interest) and rent — 378, 383-84
— in Ricardo's theory — 378, 381-83, 392
— in Carey's theory — 62, 378, 384
Republic, bourgeois — and working-class movement — 308
Revolution — 164, 334, 388
See also Adventurism (political) — voluntarist attitude towards revolution, 'play at revolution'; French Revolution (18 century); Revolution, bourgeois, bourgeois-democratic; Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe; Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Spain — bourgeois revolutions in Spain, 19th cent.
Revolutionary League in America (1850s) — 141, 150, 153-57, 161-62, 166, 167, 173
Revolution, bourgeois, bourgeois-democratic — 388, 474 Revolution, proletarian, socialist — prerequisites for — 308
See also Period of transition from capitalism to communism (socialism)

Revolution of 1848-49 and national liberation war in Hungary — 77, 101, 104, 105, 128, 158, 159, 249, 308, 309-11, 424, 460, 586
Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe — 306, 308
Revolution of 1848 in France. Second Republic (1848-52) — 51, 157, 200, 308, 509
Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany — 37, 56, 90, 307, 308, 424, 449, 458
Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states — 307-08, 458
Ricardo, Ricardian school — 62, 345, 383
See also Rent of land — in Ricardo's theory
Rome, ancient — 527
Russia (Russian Empire)
— population — 53, 306
— agriculture — 164
— trade — 53, 295, 514
— revolutionary movement — 305
— relations between Marx and Engels and Russian revolutionaries in the 1840s-50s — 306, 359-63
— and revolutionary movement in Europe — 305-06, 308, 334, 361, 495
— annexation of the Caucasus — 395, 432, 487
— tsarist policy in Poland — 489
— and Austria — 5, 143, 461, 546
— and England — 53, 285, 288, 432-33, 446, 456-57, 487, 490
— and France — 5, 11-12, 45, 277, 414, 456, 487, 492, 495, 496
— and Germany — 361, 365, 392-93
— and Greece — 285, 447, 456
— and Prussia — 5, 143
— and Turkey — 285, 288-89, 487; see also Russo-Turkish war, 1828-29; Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi, 1833
See also Army — Russian; Campaign of 1812 in Russia; Crimean war, 1853-56; Emigration, emigrants — Russian; Navy — Russian; Nobility, aristocracy — Russian; Peasantry — Russian Russo-Turkish war, 1828-29 — 394

Page me39.760
S

Saint-Simonism, Saint-Simonists — 195 Schleswig-Holstein question, the — London protocol of 1852 — 456 Science — and politics — 425
— and philosophy — 104, 260
See also Military science
Scotland — 512, 519
Serbia — 404, 419, 431
Seven Years' War (1756-63) — 487-88
Shares, joint-stock companies — 111, 165, 253

Page Break me39.761
Slavery, slave trade — 527
— in the USA — 346
Slavs — 67, 447
See also Community — old Slav; Literature — Slav; Pan-Slavism
Social-Democratic Refugee Committee (late 1840s-early 1850s) — 345
Social estates — 473
Social relations — 62
Social system — 500
Society — 192
— and mode of production — 191
— and classes — 62, 65
— bourgeois — 62, 65, 191, 192, 381, 382, 392
— feudal — 191, 192
See also Social relations; Social system Spain
— Spanish nation, national character — 500, 504
— social system — 500
— bourgeois revolutions in Spain, 19th cent. — 480, 484, 500
— first Spanish revolution (1808-14) and struggle against Napoleonic rule — 53, 500
— second Spanish revolution (1820-23) and French intervention — 492-97
— first Carlist war (1833-40) — 456, 490
— fourth Spanish revolution (1854-56) — 469, 479, 485
— and England — 53, 496
— and France — 490, 492-97
See also Nobility, aristocracy — Spanish
Speculation (in money, in stock)
— speculation fever — 165, 197, 263, 306
— in raw materials — 111, 165
— Stock Exchange as the centre of speculation and corruption — 162, 257, 388 — and economic crises — 197
— in railway stock — 162, 257, 306, 388
Spinozism — 144
State, the (oriental) — 333, 339-40, 346-48
— Asiatic despotism — 347
Statistics — 189-90, 511-12
Stock Exchange — 162, 257, 286, 388, 518
Switzerland — 12, 346
— Swiss mercenaries — 541
Syria — 295

Page me39.761
T

Tartars, the — 327

Taxes, taxation system — 122, 388
Theory and practice — 263, 308
Tories (England)
— general characteristics, class character of the party — 49, 53-54, 56, 69, 105, 135, 143, 145, 197, 306, 518 — and free trade — 53-54, 84, 143, 253
— and foreign policy of England — 54
Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi, 1833 — 412, 432, 456, 457
Turkey
— Turks, national character — 285
— specific features of historical development — 333
— decline of the Ottoman Empire — 288-89, 444
— trade — 294-95
— and European civilisation — 285, 289
— Christian population, oppression of — 278, 444, 447; see also Greece — insurrection in Greek provinces of Turkey
— and England — 285, 288, 432
— and France — 277, 288, 456-57
— and Russia — 285, 288, 487; see also Russo-Turkish war, 1828-29; Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi, 1833
See also Army — Turkish; Crimean war, 1853-56; Eastern Question, the; Islam; Navy — Turkish

Page me39.761
U

Ukraine, Ukrainians — 306
United Diet (Germany) — 475
United States of America
— development of capitalism — 62, 111, 162-63, 306, 346
— industry — 57-58, 320

Page Break me39.762
— agriculture — 320
— trade — 54, 57, 82-83, 111, 320, 374, 514
— social system — 62, 191
— classes and class struggle — 62
— home policy — 514
— protectionism — 146, 147, 346
— political parties — 145-47, 154-55, 262
See also California; Slavery, slave trade — in the USA; US-Mexican war, 1846-48
Urquhartism, Urquhartists — 284-85, 373, 395, 412-13, 422, 430, 439-40, 448, 455
US-Mexican war, 1846-48 — 498, 500-01, 503-04

Page me39.762
W

Wages — 62, 378, 384, 388, 513, 561
Wallachia — 295, 419, 426, 431, 464
War(s) — 410-11, 425-26
— influence on economic and social development — 340
— threat of European war in the 1850s — 7, 9-10, 11-12, 53, 409, 411
See also Army; Military science; Navy
Weitling, Weitlingians — 122, 275, 296, 449
Whigs (England) — 49, 56, 89, 129, 135-36, 145, 306
Working class
— position in bourgeois society — 191, 384
— world-historic role — 65
— concentration of workers in industrial centres — 388
— in England — 42, 44, 67-68, 72, 513, 561; see also Working-class movement in England
— in France — 47, 59, 197, 261, 300, 307, 320, 388
Working-class movement in England — 57, 512-13, 539, 541, 561
See also Chartism; Labour Parliament (England); Preston strike, 1853-54
Working-class movement in Germany — 308-09, 365, 367
World market — expansion of — 57, 82-83, 84, 165, 253

Page me39.762
Y

Yemen — 340
Young Hegelianism, Young Hegelians — 87, 449, 534-35, 562-63
Young Italy — 458

Page Break me39.763

GLOSSARY OF GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES†a

Page me39.763

Adrianople	Edirne
Akkerman	Belgorod-Dnestrovsky
Argish	Arges
Braila	Brlila
Breslau	Wroclaw
Buseo	Buzau
Calugereni	Calugareni
Constantinople	Istanbul
Erzerum	Erzurum
Fokshani	Foksani
Frateshti	Fratesti
Galatz	Galati

Giurgevo	Giurgiu
Hermannstadt	Sibiu
Isaktsha	Isaccea
Kalarash	Calarasi
Kimpina	Câmpina
Kimpolung	Câmpulung
Komarom (Comorn)	Komárom and Kamarno (two towns)
Königsberg	Kaliningrad
Kustendje	Constanta
Matchin	Maçin
Navarino	Pylos
Nissa	Niš
Ofen	Buda
Oltenitza	Oltenita
Rodosto	Tekirdag
St. Petersburg	Leningrad
Shumla	Shumen
Tiflis	Tbilisi
Tultsha	Tulcea
Turna	Turnu-Magurele
Waitzen	Vác
Yenikale Str.	Straits of Kerch

Footnotes

Page me39.3

†a Louise

Page me39.3

†b Wilhelm Wolff

Page me39.3

†c Ferdinand Wolff

Page me39.3

†d the publication of Die Revolution

Page me39.3

†e Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue.

Page me39.4

†a See this volume, p. 8.

Page me39.4

†b This presumably refers to Article VII of Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.

Page me39.5

†a 'State of Trade. Manchester, Jan. 3', The Times, No. 21003, 5 January 1852.

Page me39.5

†b See this volume, pp. 567-69.

Page me39.5

†c Emil Blank

Page me39.6
†a Karl Marx
Page me39.6
†b of the British Museum
Page me39.6
†c sound thrashing
Page me39.6
†d discomfited courage
Page me39.6
†e See this volume, pp. 568-69.
Page me39.7
†a Matthew 24:6.
Page me39.7
†b willy-nilly
Page me39.8
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, III.
Page me39.8
†b more or less courtesans
Page me39.8
†c they have to be cajoled to get them to sing
Page me39.8
†d a wit very subtle and very mocking
Page me39.8
†e man
Page me39.8
†f still too weak
Page me39.9
†a fact
Page me39.9
†b things are going splendidly
Page me39.10
†a We have had the Napoleon of peace (Louis Philippe's nickname)
Page me39.10
†b Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.10
†c What then?
Page me39.10
†d in the most philistine manner
Page me39.10
†e pity
Page me39.10
†f when they talk nonsense
Page me39.11
†a of Die Revolution
Page me39.11
†b Mr Handsome

Page me39.12
†a Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.13
†a Die Revolution
Page me39.13
†b F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution, VII.
Page me39.13
†c An allusion to Louis Bonaparte's coup d'état of 2 December 1851.
Page me39.13
†d Well
Page me39.13
†e of the British Museum
Page me39.13
†f K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, III and IV.
Page me39.13
†g career
Page me39.14
†a See next letter.
Page me39.14
†b Arnold Ruge is ironically compared with Arnold Winkelried — a semi-legendary hero of the Swiss war of liberation against the Austrian yoke in the fourteenth century.
Page me39.14
†c A play on the resemblance between Confusius (confusion) and Confucius, the name of the Chinese philosopher.
Page me39.14
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Statement' (present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 535-36).
Page me39.14
†e See K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Statement on Resignation from the German Workers' Educational Society in London' (present edition, Vol. 10).
Page me39.14
†f You will understand, my dear fellow
Page me39.14
†g Marx uses Berlin dialect: jebildeten.
Page me39.15
†a See this volume, pp. 19-20.
Page me39.15
†b The scoundrel!
Page me39.15
†c Notes to the People
Page me39.15
†d This letter has not been found.
Page me39.16
†a F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I.
Page me39.16
†b Friedrich Engels senior, Engels' father

Page me39.17
†a The decree of 22 January 1852 on the creation of a Police Ministry under de Maupas and the decree of 22 January on the resignation of the Minister of the Interior de Morny and appointment of Persigny were printed in Le Moniteur universel, No. 23, 23 January 1852.
Page me39.17
†b The decree of 22 January 1852 on the confiscation of Louis Philippe's property was printed in Le Moniteur universel, No. 23, 23 January 1852.
Page me39.18
†a objectives
Page me39.19
†a Louise
Page me39.20
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times' (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 210-11).
Page me39.20
†b the extreme
Page me39.20
†c F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, VII.
Page me39.20
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, II.
Page me39.21
†a Things are moving.
Page me39.21
†b Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act I, Scene 4.
Page me39.21
†c Firstly
Page me39.22
†a good people
Page me39.22
†b F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I.
Page me39.22
†c Ferdinand Wolff
Page me39.22
†d As for our friend
Page me39.22
†e See this volume, p. 20.
Page me39.22
†f note it well
Page me39.22
†g in a position
Page me39.23
†a Marx refers, in particular, to his article written for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, 'The Prussian Counter-Revolution and the Prussian Judiciary'.
Page me39.23

†b Pun in the original on the name of Becker and 'hat gebacken' (has baked — figuratively, set up in the world) and the name of Bürgers and 'hat geborgen' (went security for). During the legal proceedings in May 1850 the Westdeutsche Zeitung, whose editor was Hermann Becker, came out in defence of Kinkel by publishing Bürgers' articles 'Die Logik in dem Prozesse Kinkels und Genossen' and 'Die Freisprechung Kinkels', Nos. 102-104, 107, 30 April, 1, 2 and 5 May 1850. See also this volume, pp. 34 and 570.

Page me39.23

†c Marx's daughter to Freiligrath's son

Page me39.24

†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times'.

Page me39.24

†b See this volume, pp. 20-21.

Page me39.25

†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, VIII and IX.

Page me39.25

†b of Die Revolution

Page me39.25

†c F. Engels, 'England', II.

Page me39.25

†d Emil Blank

Page me39.25

†e philistine (literally: toad)

Page me39.26

†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, III

Page me39.26

†b Presumably K. Batthyány's article 'The Hungarian Revolution. To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 20998, 30 December 1851.

Page me39.27

†a F. Engels, 'England', I (see also this volume, pp. 15-19).

Page me39.27

†b F. Engels, 'England', II.

Page me39.27

†c See this volume, p. 17.

Page me39.28

†a See this volume, p. 22.

Page me39.28

†b ibid., pp. 20, 24, 25, 29 and 30.

Page me39.29

†a See this volume, p. 24.

Page me39.29

†b if necessary

Page me39.29

†c Die Revolution

Page me39.29

†d The original has 1851.

Page me39.30
†a See this volume, p. 24.
Page me39.30
†b i.e. nearly a week ago
Page me39.30
†c It is almost a certainty.
Page me39.30
†d But a single passage will suffice to give you the flavour of this delicious fruit
Page me39.30
†e [G.J. Harney,] 'Prologue', The Friend of the People, No. 1, 7 February 1852.
Page me39.30
†f That's enough!
Page me39.30
†g An allusion to the journal Spirit of Freedom edited by Massey.
Page me39.30
†h without rhyme or reason; petty panjandrums
Page me39.30
†i a charlatan
Page me39.30
†j basically
Page me39.30
†k A. Bell's article 'Reception and Progress of Kossuth in the United States', The Friend of the People, No. 2, 14 February 1852.
Page me39.31
†a I don't know what principles are unless rules which one prescribes for others for one's own benefit.
Page me39.31
†b fiery temperament
Page me39.31
†c That is the ultimate end of life in all popular movements.
Page me39.31
†d on his hands
Page me39.31
†e civilisers
Page me39.31
†f men of wit
Page me39.32
†a women of easy virtue
Page me39.32
†b the citizens
Page me39.32
†c at least a good republican
Page me39.32
†d F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.32
†e See this volume, p. 24.

Page me39.33
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, X.
Page me39.33
†b See this volume, p. 28.
Page me39.33
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, IV.
Page me39.34
†a Die Revolution
Page me39.34
†b See this volume, p. 23.
Page me39.34
†c The scoundrels! They must be fought to the death.
Page me39.35
†a Louise
Page me39.35
†b F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.
Page me39.35
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte. See also this volume, p. 40.
Page me39.35
†d K. Marx, The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850.
Page me39.36
†a Here are the facts.
Page me39.36
†b Roesgen
Page me39.36
†c Gottfried
Page me39.36
†d F. Engels, 'Real Causes Why the French Proletarians Remained Comparatively Inactive in December Last', I.
Page me39.36
†e for the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany
Page me39.36
†f That's great news for Citizen Seiler, whose star will be constantly in the ascendant
Page me39.36
†g An allusion to Sebastian Seiler's work Kaspar Hauser, der Thronerbe von Badens.
Page me39.36
†h A great deal could be made of that.
Page me39.37
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.37
†b B. Bauer, Der Untergang des Frankfurter Parlaments.
Page me39.37
†c in extreme need

Page me39.38
†a F. Engels, 'England'.
Page me39.38
†b for the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.38
†c B. Bauer, Der Untergang des Frankfurter Parlaments.
Page me39.38
†d See this volume, pp. 39-40.
Page me39.38
†e It's not clear (Beaumarchais, La folle journée, ou le mariage de Figaro, Act. V, Scene 16).
Page me39.39
†a L. Simon's 'Movements of the German Political Exiles', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3369, 4 February 1852. See also this volume, p. 37.
Page me39.40
†a See this volume, p. 39.
Page me39.40
†b of the British Museum
Page me39.40
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.41
†a Die Revolution
Page me39.41
†b my dear fellow
Page me39.41
†c R. Reinhardt
Page me39.41
†d for the king of Prussia, i.e. for nothing
Page me39.42
†a In particular L. Simon's 'Movements of the German Political Exiles', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3369, 4 February 1852.
Page me39.42
†b There's nothing more ridiculous than this scoundrel who, from Alpine heights, lets fall these statesmanlike pronouncements.
Page me39.42
†c coup d'état in France on 2 December 1851
Page me39.42
†d Ida
Page me39.43
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.43
†b See this volume, pp. 32 and 37.
Page me39.43
†c F. Engels, 'Real Causes Why the French Proletarians Remained Comparatively Inactive in December Last'. See also [E. Jones,] 'Continental Notes', Notes to the People, No. 43, 21 February 1852.

Page me39.44
†a burning question
Page me39.44
†b Poor chap!
Page me39.44
†c a kick
Page me39.44
†d Citizen Fröbel will have acted as intermediary.
Page me39.44
†e gossip. Excerpts from Reinhardt's letter see on pp. 47-49 of this volume.
Page me39.44
†f force of circumstances
Page me39.45
†a in case of need
Page me39.45
†b is doing worse than the Republic. Business used to be better.
Page me39.45
†c here you may descry the influence of the illustrious Seiler
Page me39.45
†d See this volume, p. 31.
Page me39.45
†e from the egg — from the very beginning
Page me39.45
†f to make one split one's sides
Page me39.45
†g was a nice, gentle young man
Page me39.46
†a beasts
Page me39.46
†b rejection
Page me39.46
†c K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy.
Page me39.47
†a Reinhardt
Page me39.47
†b a friend who is very sceptical and does not have the highest opinion of the people. Now, listen:
Page me39.47
†c High Court of Justice
Page me39.47
†d swindler
Page me39.47
†e kept men
Page me39.47

†f 'It is the first flight (theft) of the eagle.' (This witticism and Madame de Girardin's remark cited above are used by Marx in The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 196-97.)
Page me39.47
†g 'In my family, sir, we bear our father's name. That's why I am called de Rémusat.'
Page me39.48
†a 'What, it's you, you scoundrel, who dares to come and tell me of my expulsion?'
Page me39.48
†b respectable people
Page me39.48
†c government of thieves and murderers
Page me39.48
†d 'It is the total and definitive victory of socialism!'
Page me39.48
†e sharp practice
Page me39.49
†a event
Page me39.49
†b Things are moving.
Page me39.49
†c somehow
Page me39.49
†d See this volume, pp. 47-49.
Page me39.49
†e F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XI.
Page me39.50
†a Henriette Marx
Page me39.50
†b Louise von Westphalen
Page me39.50
†c Heinrich Georg von Westphalen
Page me39.50
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, V.
Page me39.50
†e An anonymous review of M. Stirner's Geschichte der Reaction in Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 56, 25 February 1852, supplement: 'Buchmacherei'
Page me39.50
†f entrance fee
Page me39.50
†g Louis Blanc
Page me39.50
†h of the fatherland
Page me39.50
†i I wish, said he, to explain historical tendencies to you.

Page me39.51
†a Frederick the Great, Napoleon the great, there are great victories and great reverses. Well, France is a military nation.
Page me39.51
†b Poverty, hideous poverty.
Page me39.51
†c Poverty is not something permanent, something tangible
Page me39.51
†d the mother will no longer destroy with her own hands the fruit of her womb, the little seven-year-old girl will no longer 'huddle' beneath the machine
Page me39.51
†e 1. an adventurer, 2. a bastard and 3. his uncle's (i.e. Napoleon I's) pantograph
Page me39.51
†f What do you say to that?
Page me39.51
†g philistines
Page me39.51
†h males and little females
Page me39.51
†i 'But he's a soldier.'
Page me39.52
†a An allusion to Weydemeyer's article against Heinzen, New-Yorker Demokrat, No. 311, 29 January 1852.
Page me39.52
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Reviews from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, No. 4: 'Les Conspirateurs, par A. Chenu', 'La naissance de la République en février 1848, par Lucien de la Hodde'.
Page me39.53
†a See this volume, pp. 18-19.
Page me39.53
†b Nicholas I
Page me39.55
†a Heinrich Georg von Westphalen
Page me39.55
†b Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 56, 25 February 1852, supplement: 'Buchmacherei'.
Page me39.55
†c See this volume, pp. 37 and 43-44.
Page me39.56
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XII and XIII.
Page me39.56
†b Roesgen
Page me39.56
†c sedition-mongers
Page me39.56
†d Engels ridicules Derby's speech in the House of Lords on 27 February published in The Times, No. 21050, 28 February 1852.

Page me39.56
†e accession
Page me39.57
†a Engels takes statistical data from 'The Spirit of the Annual Trade Circulars. The Year That Is Past', The Economist, No. 437, 10 January 1852.
Page me39.58
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XII.
Page me39.59
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times'
Page me39.59
†b the Communist League
Page me39.59
†c See this volume, p. 52.
Page me39.59
†d with supreme disdain
Page me39.59
†e all the same
Page me39.59
†f 'devotion' and 'faith'. The idiot!
Page me39.60
†a Jenny Marx's letter to Joseph Weydemeyer of 27 February 1852. See this volume, pp. 572-73.
Page me39.60
†b The Communist Manifesto was published in English in The Red Republican, Nos. 21, 22, 23, 24 of 9, 16, 23 and 30 November 1850. It was on this occasion that Marx and Engels were first named as its authors. In this letter Marx gives the quotations in English followed by the German translation.
Page me39.61
†a K. Marx, The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850. Published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. By the English translation of this work Marx means Engels' review of the first chapter published under the title 'Two Years of a Revolution; 1848 and 1849' in The Democratic Review, April-June 1850.
Page me39.61
†b [G.J. Harney,] Review of Louis Blanc's Historic Pages from the French Revolution of February 1848 in The Democratic Review, May 1850, pp. 465-66.
Page me39.61
†c Here and below Marx quotes from Disraeli's 'Address to His Constituents' published under the date-line: 'London, Tuesday, 2 March 1852', The Times, No. 21052, 2 March 1852.
Page me39.61
†d Presumably an allusion to Heine's satirical poem Atta Troll, Chap. XXIV — 'kein Talent, doch ein Charakter' (Talent none, but character).
Page me39.62
†a D. Ricardo, On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation, Third Edition, London, 1821, p. V.
Page me39.62

†b See H. Ch. Carey, Essay on the Rate of Wages...
Page me39.62
†c Above 'representative' Marx wrote 'interpreter'.
Page me39.62
†d See also this volume, pp. 345-46.
Page me39.62
†e ibid., pp. 378-84 and 392.
Page me39.65
†a the uttermost point
Page me39.65
†b An allusion to Heinzen's expression 'sound common sense' (der gesunde Menschenverstand). See K. Marx, 'Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality', present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 317, 330 and 337.
Page me39.65
†c An allusion to Heinzen's comedy Doktor Nebel, oder: Gelehrsamkeit und Leben, Cologne, 1841. See K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile, present edition, Vol. 11, p. 277.
Page me39.65
†d See this volume, p. 32.
Page me39.65
†e Notes to the People
Page me39.65
†f K. Marx, 'The First Trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung' and 'The Trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats' in Zwei politische Prozesse, Cologne, 1849.
Page me39.66
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me39.66
†b At the moment I am completely penniless
Page me39.67
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me39.67
†b See this volume, pp. 31-32.
Page me39.67
†c ibid., p. 59.
Page me39.67
†d Roesgen
Page me39.67
†e at bottom
Page me39.67
†f Harney
Page me39.68
†a As regards Napoleon
Page me39.68
†b When I am President, I shall put your ideas into practice.
Page me39.68

†c This refers to the article by Armand Bertin 'Paris, 14 mars', Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires, 15 March 1852.
Page me39.68
†d eminently peaceable measure
Page me39.70
†a of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, VII
Page me39.70
†b Now
Page me39.71
†a for he's a good fellow
Page me39.71
†b for all it's worth
Page me39.71
†c But now
Page me39.71
†d See this volume, p. 59.
Page me39.71
†e W. Pieper, 'Die Arbeiter Assoziation in England'.
Page me39.71
†f Edgar von Westphalen
Page me39.71
†g Caroline von Westphalen
Page me39.71
†h A. Cluss, 'An den Garanten-Congress des deutschen Anleihens in Cincinnati'.
Page me39.71
†i the Communist League
Page me39.72
†a Republik der Arbeiter
Page me39.72
†b Presumably Max Joseph Becker.
Page me39.72
†c Notes to the People
Page me39.72
†d Hochstuhl
Page me39.72
†e Presumably, XIII for the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.72
†f the Communist League, see also this volume, pp. 71-72
Page me39.73
†a regal nation
Page me39.73
†b divine envoy
Page me39.73
†c It's pitiful.
Page me39.74

†a church oppressed
Page me39.74
†b that artistic man
Page me39.74
†c Intrigue
Page me39.74
†d Title character from J.M. Miller's book Siegwart. Eine Klostergeschichte.
Page me39.75
†a du Danemark
Page me39.75
†b '* Paris, 24. März' and '+ Paris, 24. März', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 74, 26 March 1852.
Page me39.75
†c publicly
Page me39.75
†d violation of the ban
Page me39.75
†e 'Real Causes Why the French Proletarians Remained Comparatively Inactive in December Last', III.
Page me39.76
†a A reference to the material for Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XIII
Page me39.76
†b former deputies to the Frankfurt National Assembly of 1848-49
Page me39.76
†c B. Bauer, Der Untergang des Frankfurter Parlaments.
Page me39.76
†d the Communist League
Page me39.76
†e Guillermain
Page me39.76
†f action network
Page me39.77
†a Engels' series of articles, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.77
†b Die Revolution
Page me39.77
†c See this volume, p. 73.
Page me39.78
†a Franziska
Page me39.79
†a Franziska
Page me39.79
†b See this volume, p. 78.
Page me39.79
†c the Communist League members arrested and detained under investigation

Page me39.80
†a former deputies to the Frankfurt National Assembly of 1848-49
Page me39.80
†b That is what it is important for us to know
Page me39.80
†c Engels is referring to his series of articles, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.80
†d F. Engels, 'England', I.
Page me39.80
†e See this volume, pp. 18-19.
Page me39.80
†f ibid., p. 67.
Page me39.81
†a at bottom
Page me39.82
†a See also this volume, pp. 83-84.
Page me39.82
†b G. Gülich, Geschichtliche Darstellung des Handels, der Gewerbe und des Ackerbaus der bedeutendsten handeltreibenden Staaten unserer Zeit, Bd. 3, S. 263-64.
Page me39.82
†c Engels may have used the article 'Commercial Intelligence. New York, 7 April' in The Times, No. 21094, 20 April 1852, but the figures given by him somewhat differ from those in the newspaper.
Page me39.83
†a Cf. this volume, pp. 82-83.
Page me39.84
†a See this volume, p. 85.
Page me39.84
†b Franziska
Page me39.85
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.85
†b Although by nature tough
Page me39.85
†c B. Bauer, 'The Present Impossibility of War', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3417, 31 March 1852.
Page me39.85
†d F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.86
†a the Communist League members arrested and detained under investigation
Page me39.87
†a H. Ewerbeck, L'Allemagne et les Allemands.
Page me39.87
†b Ewerbeck to Marx, 21 April 1852.
Page me39.87

†c See previous letter.
Page me39.87
†d It was well worth while
Page me39.88
†a Meanwhile he is out of harm's way.
Page me39.89
†a Here we have
Page me39.89
†b 'Amtliche Bekanntmachungen', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 99, 24 April 1852.
Page me39.89
†c It was well worth while!
Page me39.89
†d dignified leisure (Cicero, Oratio pro Sextio, 45)
Page me39.89
†e shall we never escape this imbecile?
Page me39.89
†f Emil Blank
Page me39.90
†a See this volume, p. 79.
Page me39.90
†b the little one (Ernst Dronke)
Page me39.90
†c So much the better for him.
Page me39.90
†d Hess. See this volume, p. 89.
Page me39.90
†e Poor
Page me39.90
†f after the event
Page me39.90
†g topicality, either France or England
Page me39.91
†a safe and sound
Page me39.92
†a and I think
Page me39.92
†b their presentiments
Page me39.92
†c See this volume, p. 90.
Page me39.92
†d Cf. this volume, p. 573.
Page me39.93
†a A. Cluss, 'An den Garanten-Congress des deutschen Anleihens in Cincinnati. Washington, Jan. 23', Turn-Zeitung, No. 6, 1 March 1852.
Page me39.93

†b J. Weydemeyer, 'Die revolutionäre Agitation unter der Emigration', Turn-Zeitung, No. 6, 1 March 1852.
Page me39.93
†c what do you think of it?
Page me39.93
†d I think it warrants the trouble of a little puff.
Page me39.93
†e H. Ch. Carey, Essay on the Rate of Wages...
Page me39.93
†f H. Ch. Carey, The Harmony of Interests... In a letter of 15 April 1852 Cluss wrote Marx about the second edition of this book.
Page me39.93
†g But what, my dear fellow, do you say
Page me39.93
†h G.J. Harney, 'To the Readers of The Star, and the Democrats of Great Britain and Ireland', The Star, No. 753, 17 April 1852 and E. Jones, 'An Appeal for the Judgment of the People', Notes to the People, No. 52, 24 April 1852.
Page me39.94
†a seriously
Page me39.94
†b J. Weydemeyer, 'Die revolutionäre Agitation unter der Emigration', Turn-Zeitung, No. 6, 1 March 1852.
Page me39.94
†c Weydemeyer's article in the New-Yorker Demokrat, No. 311, 29 January 1852.
Page me39.95
†a The pamphlet was published later, in 1853, under the title: B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth. Politische Charakterskizzen aus dem Ungarischen Freiheitskriege.
Page me39.95
†b M. Goldschmidt, ['Einige Skizzen aus seiner Reise nach England während der Zeit der großen Ausstellung',] Kölnische Zeitung, No. 100, 25 April 1852.
Page me39.95
†c An anonymous article ['Hansestädte. Hamburg, 13 April'] in Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 108, 17 April 1852.
Page me39.96
†a What a great man! As for Tellering
Page me39.96
†b See this volume, p. 105.
Page me39.96
†c ibid., p. 92.
Page me39.96
†d ibid., pp. 92 and 573.
Page me39.96
†e penniless
Page me39.97
†a See this volume, pp. 85 and 87.

Page me39.97
†b Ernst Dronke
Page me39.97
†c See this volume, p. 93.
Page me39.98
†a which direction these barbs are coming from
Page me39.98
†b we shall see. £25 is well worth a bit of a row.
Page me39.98
†c See this volume, p. 93.
Page me39.98
†d See this volume, pp. 91 and 100.
Page me39.99
†a of The People's Paper
Page me39.99
†b i.e. work on the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.99
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.99
†d here: authorship
Page me39.99
†e Emil Blank (see this volume, p. 89).
Page me39.100
†a a tedious and rather muddle-headed creature
Page me39.100
†b the Communist League
Page me39.100
†c See this volume, p. 93.
Page me39.101
†a some coup or other
Page me39.101
†b some or other
Page me39.101
†c B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth. Politische Charakterskizzen aus dem Ungarischen Freiheitskriege.
Page me39.101
†d sequence of tenses
Page me39.101
†e rough draft
Page me39.101
†f more or less
Page me39.101
†g K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.102
†a Willich's service in the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army in the spring of 1849.
Page me39.102

†b The issue of Die Revolution, in which Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte appeared.
Page me39.103
†a A Barnum, Barnum et demi (Against one Barnum one and a half) is modelled on such an expression as 'á Corsaire Corsaire et demi', the idea of which is roughly 'to beat someone at his own game'.
Page me39.103
†b piece of stupidity
Page me39.103
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.103
†d Gustav von Hoffstetter, Tagebuch aus Italien, 1849.
Page me39.103
†e H. Küntzel, Die taktischen Elemente der neuen Fortificationen.
Page me39.103
†f in the military sphere
Page me39.104
†a W. Willisen, Theorie des großen Krieges angewendet auf den russisch-polnischen Feldzug von 1831.
Page me39.104
†b insights
Page me39.104
†c A. Görgei, Mein Leben und Wirken in Ungarn in den Jahren 1848 und 1849.
Page me39.105
†a As to
Page me39.105
†b B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth. Politische Charakterskizzen aus dem Ungarischen Freiheitskriege.
Page me39.105
†c King's prosecutors
Page me39.106
†a The Times, No. 20955, 10 November 1851, leader.
Page me39.106
†b Bermbach's letter to Marx of 3 May 1852; the original has 11 May.
Page me39.107
†a [E. Jones,] 'Current Notes', The People's Paper, No. 1, 8 May 1852.
Page me39.107
†b Spartacus [pseudonym of W.J. Linton], 'The Sense of the Country', The Star of Freedom, No. 1, 8 May 1852.
Page me39.107
†c Below is an extract from Bermbach's letter to Marx of 3 May 1852.
Page me39.107
†d New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3446 of 4 May 1852 used this material for its leader 'Justice of Prussia'. See also this volume, p. 115.
Page me39.107
†e F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.

Page me39.107
†f too late
Page me39.108
†a after the event
Page me39.108
†b See this volume, p. 93.
Page me39.108
†c rough draft
Page me39.109
†a Things are going well.
Page me39.109
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.111
†a Joseph Denman and George Loch
Page me39.111
†b outlets
Page me39.111
†c After all
Page me39.112
†a It will be a fine how-do-you-do.
Page me39.112
†b 28 May
Page me39.112
†c Conrad Schramm
Page me39.112
†d We want no more sybarites.
Page me39.112
†e Franco-German plot
Page me39.114
†a whatever you do, you must be here by Friday, at four o'clock in the afternoon
Page me39.114
†b knights in attendance
Page me39.115
†a Rudolf Schramm
Page me39.115
†b commercial traveller
Page me39.115
†c Wilhelm Wolff's letter to Weydemeyer of 16 April 1852.
Page me39.115
†d An allusion to F. Freiligrath's verse 'Trotz alledem!' published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on 6 June 1848.
Page me39.115
†e Reference to the leading article 'Justice of Prussia', based on the material sent in by Marx and published in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3446, 4 May 1852.
Page me39.115
†f Hermann Heinrich Becker

Page me39.116
†a Marx refers here to his and Engels' work on The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.116
†b The misprint which cropped in The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, VII published in Die Revolution, should read: Toute.
Page me39.116
†c luminary
Page me39.117
†a Harro Harring, Historisches Fragment über die Entstehung der Arbeiter-Vereine und ihren Verfall in Communistische Speculationen.
Page me39.117
†b F. Engels, 'The Communists and Karl Heinzen' (published in Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung).
Page me39.117
†c Etienne Gilbert Sartiges
Page me39.117
†d Will Colonel Musch please accept my best and most cordial felicitations.
Page me39.118
†a containing K. Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.118
†b F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.
Page me39.119
†a See this volume, p. 55.
Page me39.120
†a Engels' series of articles, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.120
†b See this volume, p. 95.
Page me39.120
†c Bangya
Page me39.120
†d The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.120
†e See this volume, p. 117.
Page me39.121
†a without further ado
Page me39.121
†b Heine, 'Klagelied eines altdeutschen Jünglings' (Romanzen).
Page me39.121
†c ibid.
Page me39.122
†a at bottom
Page me39.122
†b Napoleon III, whom Marx ironically calls 'the second'.
Page me39.123
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.123

†b Meanwhile
Page me39.124
†a The German original is reminiscent of Schiller, Die Piccolomini, Act I, Scene 1.
Page me39.124
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.124
†c 28 June
Page me39.124
†d Now
Page me39.124
†e Eduard Meyen (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 306).
Page me39.125
†a 'organ'
Page me39.125
†b Nicia: Who is St. Cuckoo? Ligurio: The most venerated saint in France. (Machiavelli, Mandragola, Act 4, Scene IX.)
Page me39.125
†c safe
Page me39.125
†d F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.
Page me39.125
†e The rogues!
Page me39.126
†a indispensable condition
Page me39.126
†b one way or another
Page me39.126
†c 'true prince', 'false prince'
Page me39.126
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.126
†e Presumably, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XV.
Page me39.127
†a O twice magnificent Ser Agnello,
You who of all the why and wherefore know,
Whose mighty mind can grasp the fate
Of Bartolo's and Baldo's earthly frame
And whose keen fancy apprehends the laws
Of heavenly bodies and their course!
Dispel for me the doubts, I pray,
Which in the brothel raised strife today.

_____

Some folks seduce and others are seduced
But one and all by lust are ruled.
How many souls through arses go astray...
Page me39.127
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.127
†c obscenity
Page me39.127
†d God's prick, this is strong meat.
Page me39.127
†e Probably article XV from Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.128
†a F. Engels, 'The Kölnische Zeitung on the Magyar Struggle', 'The War in Italy and Hungary', 'Hungary' and also reviews of military operations in Hungary published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung from February to May 1849.
Page me39.128
†b A. Görgei, Mein Leben und Wirken in Ungarn in den Jahren 1848 und 1849.
Page me39.128
†c mean
Page me39.128
†d fairly and squarely
Page me39.128
†e which smells of Willich 20 leagues away
Page me39.129
†a why not?
Page me39.129
†b why shouldn't the nephew have his Bourbon shot too?
Page me39.129
†c from Freiligrath's 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me39.129
†d vicious circle
Page me39.129
†e The Times, No. 21164, 10 July 1852, leader.
Page me39.130
†a The original has Weltumwühler by analogy with Wühler (agitators), the name the bourgeois constitutionalists in Germany in 1848-49 applied to republican democrats.
Page me39.130
†b safe
Page me39.130
†c or other
Page me39.130
†d without a word to Mr Bangya

Page me39.130
†e a certain Cherval, known as Frank, but whose real name is Crämer
Page me39.130
†f principle of order, it was their duty
Page me39.130
†g means
Page me39.130
†h double employ
Page me39.131
†a B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth. Politische Charakterskizzen... The reference is to the German translation, which Marx helped to edit.
Page me39.131
†b See previous letter.
Page me39.131
†c Next article from the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany.
Page me39.131
†d redone
Page me39.132
†a ambitious man
Page me39.132
†b See this volume, p. 130.
Page me39.132
†c the young
Page me39.132
†d 'Der Communisten-Proceß', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 195, 13 July 1852.
Page me39.133
†a See this volume, p. 131.
Page me39.133
†b F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XV.
Page me39.134
†a August in the original.
Page me39.134
†b B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth... (reference to a part of the MS).
Page me39.134
†c by Denis Diderot
Page me39.134
†d for refusal to obey the summons
Page me39.135
†a virtuous
Page me39.135
†b in other respects a very good republican (an allusion to cœur du roi — king's heart)
Page me39.135

†c E. Cœurderoy, O. Vauthier, La Barriére du Combat qui vient de se livrer entre les citoyens Mazzini, Ledru-Rollin, Louis Blanc, Étienne Cabet, Pierre Leroux, Martin Nadaud, Mallarmet, A. Bianchi (de Lille) et autres hercules du nord.
Page me39.135
†d E. Cœurderoy, De la révolution dans l'homme et dans la société.
Page me39.135
†e P.J. Proudhon, La révolution sociale démontrée par le coup d'état du 2 décembre.
Page me39.135
†f An allusion to M. Stirner's Der Einzige und sein Eigenthum.
Page me39.135
†g vicious circle
Page me39.136
†a is an honest bourgeois who takes his responsibility seriously
Page me39.136
†b in other respects a very good republican (an allusion to cœur du roi — king's heart)
Page me39.136
†c Marx quotes here Bermbach's letter of 9 July 1852 (see also this volume, pp. 134-35).
Page me39.137
†a for refusal to obey the summons.
Page me39.137
†b F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XVI.
Page me39.137
†c as much
Page me39.138
†a the young
Page me39.138
†b F. Smitt, Geschichte des polnischen Aufstandes und Krieges in den Jahren 1830 und 1831.
Page me39.138
†c L. Mieroslawski, Kritische Darstellung des Feldzuges vom Jahre 1831.
Page me39.138
†d F. Smitt, op. cit., Dritter Theil, S. XI-XII.
Page me39.138
†e See this volume, p. 145.
Page me39.138
†f Ernst Dronke
Page me39.139
†a See also this volume, p. 149.
Page me39.140
†a An imitation of the flourishes in Kinkel's signature.
Page me39.140
†b Is it not
Page me39.141

†a See this volume, pp. 96 and 150-51.
Page me39.142
†a after the event
Page me39.142
†b commonplaces
Page me39.142
†c Italy will manage on her own!
Page me39.142
†d It's too iniquitous.
Page me39.142
†e [Report from Cologne of 26 July,] Kölnische Zeitung, No. 183, 27 July 1852.
Page me39.142
†f Below is a passage from Bermbach's letter to Marx of mid-July 1852.
Page me39.143
†a Here 'F.d.B.' in German means 'für die Bücher'. Below it is taken to mean 'für den Bund'.
Page me39.143
†b Nicholas I.
Page me39.143
†c 'Secret Treaty of the Three Northern Powers' (from The Morning Chronicle, No. 26705, 28 July 1852), The Times, No. 21180, 29 July 1852.
Page me39.143
†d They'll think of it.
Page me39.144
†a from the viewpoint of eternity
Page me39.145
†a A. Ruge, 'The Public Law of Europe', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3506, 14 July 1852.
Page me39.145
†b Saedt
Page me39.145
†c place unknown
Page me39.145
†d See previous letter.
Page me39.146
†a 'A German View of American “Democracy”', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3505, 13 July 1852.
Page me39.146
†b in doubt
Page me39.146
†c 'The Approaching Election in the United States', The Times, No. 21186, 5 August 1852.
Page me39.146
†d for Engels to translate (see this volume, p. 145)
Page me39.146
†e 7 August

Page me39.146
†f for the time being
Page me39.147
†a K. Marx, 'The Elections in England. — Tories and Whigs'.
Page me39.147
†b K. Marx, 'The Chartists'.
Page me39.147
†c See previous letter.
Page me39.147
†d December in the original.
Page me39.148
†a poor lad, you ought to see him in the throes of more or less virginal emotion
Page me39.148
†b However, I shall see.
Page me39.148
†c To begin with
Page me39.148
†d See this volume, pp. 138-39.
Page me39.151
†a members of the Agitation Club
Page me39.151
†b great works
Page me39.151
†c Communist League member
Page me39.152
†a See this volume, p. 147.
Page me39.152
†b Ernst Dronke
Page me39.152
†c April in the original
Page me39.153
†a businessman
Page me39.153
†b Apparently on the English translation of Marx's article, 'The Chartists'.
Page me39.153
†c So
Page me39.154
†a A paraphrase of the expression 'in eurem Bunde der dritte' from Schiller's poem 'Der Bürgschaft'.
Page me39.154
†b America in the original. See this volume, p. 150.
Page me39.154
†c Thus passes the glory.
Page me39.154
†d Albert Sigel
Page me39.154

†e members of the Agitation Club
Page me39.155
†a See this volume, pp. 150-51.
Page me39.157
†a Copies of the Revolution containing Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, see this volume, p. 160.
Page me39.158
†a See this volume, pp. 149-50.
Page me39.158
†b It's curious, whenever we lose a Schapper, an Imandt is always sure to come back to us (pun on Schapper and échappe).
Page me39.158
†c god of the minor nation, house-dog of German communism
Page me39.158
†d strong-box
Page me39.158
†e Conrad Schramm
Page me39.158
†f See this volume, pp. 104 and 128.
Page me39.158
†g We shall see.
Page me39.158
†h for the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany
Page me39.159
†a annoying
Page me39.159
†b more or less
Page me39.160
†a Cluss to Marx, 5 August 1852.
Page me39.160
†b K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.160
†c F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.
Page me39.161
†a Cluss says 1,000 in his letter.
Page me39.161
†b Helmich
Page me39.161
†c F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XV.
Page me39.161
†d strong-box
Page me39.162
†a Indirectly addressing to Marx in this way, Kinkel tried to justify himself in the face of the accusations moved against him, see this volume, p. 149.
Page me39.162
†b Poor thing!

Page me39.162
†c The People's Paper
Page me39.162
†d J.B. Say, Cours complet d'économie politique pratique, Paris, 1840, p. 394.
Page me39.164
†a for the series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany
Page me39.164
†b Roesgen
Page me39.164
†c See this volume, pp. 159-60.
Page me39.164
†d ibid., pp. 160-61.
Page me39.164
†e Father
Page me39.164
†f pure, unalloyed
Page me39.164
†g Gottfried Kinkel is ironically called after his wife 'Johanna'.
Page me39.164
†h See this volume, p. 162.
Page me39.164
†i Poor.
Page me39.164
†j Ferdinand Wolff
Page me39.165
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me39.166
†a P.J. Proudhon, La révolution sociale démontrée par le coup d'état du 2 décembre.
Page me39.166
†b See this volume, pp. 160-61.
Page me39.167
†a Marx uses the German saying: 'Wenn das nicht gut für die Wanzen ist, so weiß ich nicht, was besser ist.'
Page me39.167
†b See this volume, p. 166.
Page me39.168
†a 31 August
Page me39.168
†b See this volume, p. 166.
Page me39.168
†c money matter
Page me39.169
†a Everybody believes this.
Page me39.169
†b in public

Page me39.170
†a Kinkel
Page me39.170
†b Play on the word Fechten, which, besides 'fencing', can also mean 'door-to-door begging'.
Page me39.170
†c wife of Caspar Schmidt, whose pen-name was Max Stirner
Page me39.170
†d direct government
Page me39.170
†e The Supreme Being is saved once again.
Page me39.171
†a circles
Page me39.171
†b Italy has grown wholly materialist. The sole topics of conversation there are commerce, business, silks, oils and other wretchedly mundane things. The bourgeois reckon in the most dreadfully positive way the losses they incurred as a result of the March revolution and think only how they may recoup them from the present. As for insurrectionary initiative, they are glad to leave this to that frivolous and sensual people, the French. Their only fear is that the French might be in too much hurry.
Page me39.171
You can imagine, my friend, what a thunderbolt this was to the Archangel Mazzini. General Vetter, already appointed commander-in-chief of the Mazzini-Kossuthian forces, told them that in the circumstances he could do no better than betake himself to America with his mistress. In the final count, the unfortunate Mazzini agreed with Kossuth that insurrectionary initiative was best left to the French.
Page me39.171
†c These words were used by Thiers in his speech in the Legislative Assembly on 24 May 1850, Le Moniteur universel, No. 145, 25 May 1850.
Page me39.171
†d from Zerffi
Page me39.171
†e Jérôme Bonaparte
Page me39.172
†a But that's not all.
Page me39.172
†b Kinkel and Willich
Page me39.173
†a money matter
Page me39.173
†b Albert Sigel
Page me39.173
†c Bremer Tages-Chronik
Page me39.174
†a Play on the word, Fechten, which, besides 'fencing', can also mean 'door-to-door begging'.

Page me39.174
†b B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth...
Page me39.174
†c The Supreme Being is saved once again.
Page me39.175
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.175
†b See this volume, p. 161.
Page me39.175
†c which is a very bad sign
Page me39.175
†d See this volume, p. 179.
Page me39.175
†e The People's Paper
Page me39.175
†f wretched
Page me39.176
†a See this volume, p. 169.
Page me39.177
†a The name is significant (Hammel means sheep).
Page me39.177
†b a devoted follower
Page me39.177
†c What do you say to that?
Page me39.178
†a Zerffi
Page me39.179
†a See this volume, p. 175.
Page me39.179
†b the amiable candidate
Page me39.179
†c neither the one nor the other
Page me39.179
†d I find the worthy mother in tears
Page me39.180
†a that's what has always weighed him down
Page me39.180
†b more or less
Page me39.180
†c abroad
Page me39.180
†d how stupid! Upon my soul, she'll lead him a pretty dance
Page me39.180
†e Allusion to the facts from Kinkel's biography made fun of in the pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.180

†f See this volume, pp. 166 and 182.
Page me39.180
†g until further order
Page me39.180
†h with love, without undue zeal (the latter part from Tacitus, Annals, I, i)
Page me39.181
†a Helene Demuth.
Page me39.181
†b See this volume, pp. 147-48.
Page me39.182
†a See this volume, p. 161.
Page me39.182
†b ibid., p. 163.
Page me39.182
†c Poenisch
Page me39.182
†d Literally: for the king of Prussia, i.e. for nothing
Page me39.182
†e what's to be done?
Page me39.182
†f P.J. Proudhon, La révolution sociale démontrée par le coup d'état du 2 décembre.
Page me39.182
†g digging and rummaging
Page me39.182
†h I thank him very much.
Page me39.183
†a Marx wrote Sperlinge (sparrows) instead of 'sterling'.
Page me39.183
†b and I must lose no time
Page me39.183
†c except me
Page me39.183
†d Translation into English of the first chapter of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte made by Pieper (see this volume, p. 175).
Page me39.183
†e Zerffi
Page me39.184
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see this volume, pp. 175 and 183).
Page me39.184
†b That suited me very well.
Page me39.184
†c See this volume, pp. 190-93.
Page me39.184

†d she's a goose, petty bourgeois to the marrow, who seems quickly to have consoled herself for her husband's departure
Page me39.184
†e it's a bore
Page me39.185
†a Emil Blank
Page me39.185
†b of the first chapter of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see this volume, pp. 175 and 183)
Page me39.185
†c named
Page me39.185
†d F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XIX.
Page me39.186
†a with creditors
Page me39.186
†b See this volume, p. 185.
Page me39.186
†c into English of the first chapter of K. Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.186
†d See this volume, p. 184.
Page me39.186
†e Victor
Page me39.187
†a An ironical reminiscence of Schiller's words 'Seid umschlungen, Millionen!' in his ode 'An die Freude' ('To Joy').
Page me39.187
†b there was no escaping it
Page me39.187
†c Roesgen
Page me39.188
†a into English of the first chapter of K. Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.188
†b Fourth-century Roman grammarian.
Page me39.188
†c there'd have been no end to it
Page me39.189
†a Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.189
†b F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XIX.
Page me39.189
†c 'Cotton Manufactures', The Times, No. 21227, 22 September 1852; 'Progress of Cotton Manufactures', The Daily News, No. 1975, 20 September 1852.
Page me39.190

†a In general
Page me39.191
†a In particular
Page me39.191
†b debt-ridden lieutenants (this expression was omitted in the 1869 second German edition of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte)
Page me39.191
†c circumstances immediately given, existing and handed down
Page me39.192
†a set in sparkling brilliants
Page me39.192
†b Storm and Stress period
Page me39.192
†c the future that is in store for it
Page me39.192
†d A hint at Moses Hess.
Page me39.192
†e the spirits of the past
Page me39.192
†f be widened
Page me39.192
†g Here and below Engels refers to the first edition of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, published in New York in 1852.
Page me39.192
†h A circle is widened, it is not increased.
Page me39.192
†i the general content of modern revolution
Page me39.192
†j For that matter Citizen Pieper knew it as well as I do.
Page me39.192
†k the National Assembly was to reduce the results of the revolution to the bourgeois scale
Page me39.192
†l That's too bad
Page me39.192
†m I ask you
Page me39.193
†a without more ado
Page me39.193
†b It's infuriating.
Page me39.193
†c for the entire duration of the cycle
Page me39.193
†d to be able to pass for an event at all
Page me39.193
†e melted

Page me39.193
†f See previous letter.
Page me39.194
†a 'Die deutsche revolutionäre Propaganda in London und die Revolutionsanleihe', Karlsruher Zeitung, Nos. 208-210, 212, 214, 217-220, 224; 3-22 September 1852. And also in the Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 255-257, 11-13 September 1852.
Page me39.194
†b As pronounced by Germans, 'Chaises' closely resembles Scheiße — shit.
Page me39.194
†c lady companion
Page me39.194
†d mysteries of the great men
Page me39.194
†e presumably Wolff
Page me39.195
†a Marx probably means his article 'Corruption at Elections'.
Page me39.195
†b mysteries
Page me39.195
†c See this volume, pp. 186-87.
Page me39.195
†d As for
Page me39.195
†e there was a crisis
Page me39.195
†f 'Defeat of Faction. — Triumph of Principle', The People's Paper, No. 21, 25 September 1852.
Page me39.196
†a and all the rest
Page me39.196
†b The People's Paper
Page me39.196
†c into English of the first chapter of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me39.196
†d See this volume, p. 194.
Page me39.196
†e philistines
Page me39.196
†f after all
Page me39.196
†g imperial glory
Page me39.197
†a following
Page me39.197

†b Napoleon I
Page me39.197
†c tedious
Page me39.197
†d Bürgers (see this volume, p. 195)
Page me39.197
†e lost
Page me39.197
†f Schulz
Page me39.197
†g the unfortunate man
Page me39.198
†a more or less
Page me39.198
†b but
Page me39.198
†c from whom the most shameful aspects must be concealed
Page me39.198
†d embarrassment
Page me39.198
†e frankly
Page me39.199
†a What do you think of the honest Barthélemy 'who finds it impossible to resign himself to allow Bonaparte to enjoy his triumph in peace'.
Page me39.199
†b Words from Donizetti's opera Belisario, libretto by S. Cammarano, Act II, Scene 3.
Page me39.199
†c the prisoners on Belle-Ile is very sad.
Page me39.199
†d tale of woe (an allusion to Ovid's Tristia)
Page me39.199
†e From Jordan's speech in the Frankfurt National Assembly (July 1848) (see 'The Frankfurt Assembly Debates the Polish Question', present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 360-64).
Page me39.200
†a Rémusat
Page me39.200
†b Marquise Visconti
Page me39.201
†a without more ado
Page me39.201
†b R.A. Fröhlich, Kurzgefaßte tabellarisch bearbeitete Anleitung zur schnellen Erlernung der vier slavischen Hauptsprachen.
Page me39.201
†c Since he's a businessman he has to be treated in accordance with business principles.

Page me39.202
†a Pindar's romance is taking an altogether bourgeois turn.
Page me39.202
†b running away
Page me39.202
†c fiddle-faddle
Page me39.202
†d in the field of science
Page me39.202
†e It's only his obstinate silence which has lent him a semblance of profundity.
Page me39.202
†f neither more nor less
Page me39.203
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me39.203
†b wasted existence
Page me39.203
†c Mr
Page me39.203
†d a good son, a good husband, a good bourgeois, more taciturn than ever
Page me39.203
†e See this volume, p. 195.
Page me39.204
†a 26 September in the original.
Page me39.204
†b See next letter.
Page me39.205
†a See previous letter.
Page me39.205
†b and we are in the right
Page me39.205
†c Kinkel
Page me39.205
†d See this volume, pp. 161-62.
Page me39.205
†e ibid., p. 96.
Page me39.206
†a receipt
Page me39.206
†b See this volume, pp. 149-50.
Page me39.206
†c That won't do.
Page me39.207
†a K. Marx, 'Corruption at Elections' and 'Results of the Elections'.
Page me39.207

†b K. Marx, 'The Elections in England. — Tories and Whigs' and 'The Chartists' published in the New-York Daily Tribune and reproduced in The People's Paper, Nos. 22 and 23, 2 and 9 October 1852.
Page me39.207
†c 'The German “Lone Star”', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19122, 6 October 1852.
Page me39.207
†d The London District of the Communist League
Page me39.207
†e P.J. Proudhon, La révolution sociale démontrée par le coup d'état du 2 décembre (see this volume, p. 166).
Page me39.207
†f just as though nothing had happened
Page me39.208
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.208
†b Trinity goes by but Marlbrough does not return (from a French satirical song composed during the War of the Spanish Succession).
Page me39.209
†a Roesgen
Page me39.209
†b document
Page me39.209
†c That will be nice.
Page me39.209
†d Such are the arguments used to obtain an audience for him.
Page me39.210
†a 'The German “Lone Star”', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19122, 6 October 1852. Here Marx puns on the title of the article and the attempt of the American Revolutionary League to raise a loan.
Page me39.210
†b 'From our own correspondent' in the section 'Prussia', The Times, No. 21243, 11 October 1852.
Page me39.211
†a K. Marx, 'Pauperism and Free Trade. — The Approaching Commercial Crisis'.
Page me39.211
†b K. Marx, 'Political Consequences of the Commercial Excitement'.
Page me39.211
†c 22 October
Page me39.211
†d Göbel
Page me39.212
†a Barely legible in the original.
Page me39.212
†b K. Marx, 'Political Consequences of the Commercial Excitement'.
Page me39.212

†c 22 October
Page me39.212
†d Hermann Becker
Page me39.212
†e literally: for the king of Prussia; figuratively: in vain
Page me39.213
†a into English of Marx's Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, I
Page me39.213
†b 21 or 22 October
Page me39.215
†a Pleyel
Page me39.215
†b witness
Page me39.215
†c See this volume, p. 216.
Page me39.216
†a last resort
Page me39.216
†b young
Page me39.216
†c accused
Page me39.217
†a nation at large
Page me39.217
†b Bürgers
Page me39.217
†c Harvey Birch, character in F. Cooper's Spy.
Page me39.217
†d Schneider II. The letter has not been found.
Page me39.217
†e Farewell.
Page me39.218
†a See previous letter.
Page me39.218
†b Indeed
Page me39.219
†a Steinthal, see this volume, p. 217.
Page me39.219
†b 29 October. Engels had in mind the translation of Marx's two articles: 'Political Parties and Prospects' and 'Attempts to Form a New Opposition Party'.
Page me39.219
†c this must cease
Page me39.220
†a It's a good portent.
Page me39.220
†b outside society

Page me39.220
†c it's too much!
Page me39.220
†d See this volume, p. 217.
Page me39.221
†a See this volume, pp. 218-20.
Page me39.221
†b ibid., p. 217.
Page me39.221
†c that they're up against somebody stronger
Page me39.222
†a the League of the Just
Page me39.222
†b double employ
Page me39.222
†c See this volume, pp. 217 and 218.
Page me39.222
†d receipt
Page me39.222
†e 26 October
Page me39.224
†a See this volume, p. 107.
Page me39.224
†b red-handed
Page me39.224
†c 'From our own correspondent' in the section 'Prussia', The Times, No. 21243, 11 October 1852.
Page me39.224
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press'.
Page me39.224
†e loyalty
Page me39.225
†a swindling
Page me39.225
†b Swindlers ... that's all there is to be said.
Page me39.225
†c The text of Stieber's letter to Marx is in Mrs Marx's hand.
Page me39.225
†d The letter has 21. The newspaper of 22 December carried a news item datelined 'Frankfurt, 21. Dec. Berichtigung'.
Page me39.226
†a Here Marx wrote 'Verte' (see over).
Page me39.226
†b See this volume, pp. 218-19.
Page me39.226
†c by the job

Page me39.228
†a A.J. Dureau de La Malle, Économie politique des Romains.
Page me39.228
†b See this volume, pp. 218-20.
Page me39.228
†c offences
Page me39.229
†a K. Marx, 'Political Parties and Prospects'.
Page me39.229
†b K. Marx, 'Attempts to Form a New Opposition Party'.
Page me39.229
†c that relieves you of any obligation towards him
Page me39.230
†a so much the better
Page me39.230
†b that poor
Page me39.231
†a See this volume, pp. 225-26.
Page me39.231
†b unhappy
Page me39.231
†c See this volume, p. 217.
Page me39.231
†d 'Germany. From our own correspondent. Cologne, Oct. 27', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19142, 29 October 1852.
Page me39.231
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press'.
Page me39.232
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.233
†a twenty-four hours
Page me39.233
†b That is worth infinitely more.
Page me39.233
†c See this volume, p. 227.
Page me39.233
†d That could have splendid results.
Page me39.233
†e Swindle
Page me39.234
†a In the original there is a pun on Diebereien (thefts, stealing) and Stiebereien from the name Stieber.
Page me39.235
†a Wingham
Page me39.235
†b K. Marx, 'The Trials at Cologne. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser'.

Page me39.235
†c swindle
Page me39.235
†d 29 October
Page me39.235
†e swindler
Page me39.236
†a K. Marx, 'Attempts to Form a New Opposition Party'.
Page me39.236
†b 4 November
Page me39.236
†c The letter is written in Mrs Marx's hand. Marx himself inserted only the year with a question mark and signed the letter.
Page me39.237
†a B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth...
Page me39.237
†b K. Marx, 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston'.
Page me39.237
†c The year was added later by Engels.
Page me39.237
†d K. Marx, 'Attempts to Form a New Opposition Party'.
Page me39.238
†a See this volume, pp. 225-26.
Page me39.238
†b Engels refers to the words 'the most resolute Communists made the most courageous soldiers' in his work The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution (see present edition, Vol. 10, p. 226).
Page me39.238
†c under suspicion of suspected civic disloyalty
Page me39.238
†d the Communist League
Page me39.238
†e Göbel
Page me39.238
†f The Manifesto of the Cologne Central Authority of the Communist League of 1 December 1850 drawn up by Bürgers and others. The text of the Manifesto was confiscated during the arrest of the Communist League members and published in the Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger, No. 171, 22 June and the Kölnische Zeitung, No. 150, 24 June 1851.
Page me39.239
†a See this volume, pp. 216 and 232.
Page me39.239
†b feverish
Page me39.239
†c See this volume, pp. 237 and 256.

Page me39.239
†d There's a forgery there.
Page me39.239
†e See this volume, pp. 251-52.
Page me39.239
†f K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.240
†a Anyway, we shall see.
Page me39.240
†b 'Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 283, 4 November 1852.
Page me39.240
†c It was hardly worth the trouble.
Page me39.240
†d Goldheim
Page me39.240
†e See this volume, p. 237.
Page me39.240
†f 'Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen...'
Page me39.241
†a F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.
Page me39.241
†b positively
Page me39.241
†c [Jenny Marx,] 'Der Volksbund für zerschiedene Welten in Poesie', Philadelphier Demokrat, 1 December 1852.
Page me39.242
†a See this volume, p. 232.
Page me39.242
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.242
†c Hermann Becker
Page me39.242
†d the superior man
Page me39.242
†e of an infinitely small one
Page me39.243
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press'.
Page me39.243
†b See this volume, pp. 225-26.
Page me39.244
†a fabrication
Page me39.244
†b See this volume, p. 235.
Page me39.244
†c kept man

Page me39.245
†a false expenses
Page me39.245
†b F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', I and II.
Page me39.245
†c to the greater glory of Becker
Page me39.246
†a F. Engels, 'The Late Trial at Cologne'.
Page me39.246
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'A Final Declaration on the Late Cologne Trials'.
Page me39.246
†c 18 November
Page me39.247
†a 17 November
Page me39.247
†b the London District of the Communist League
Page me39.247
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'A Final Declaration on the Late Cologne Trials'.
Page me39.247
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press'.
Page me39.247
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Erklärung', London, 18 November 1852, New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 39, 10 December 1852.
Page me39.247
†f K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.247
†g F. Engels, 'The Late Trial at Cologne'.
Page me39.248
†a My God
Page me39.248
†b My dear sister
Page me39.249
†a to go by the past
Page me39.249
†b Strangeways, 48 Great Ducie Street. See this volume, p. 201.
Page me39.249
†c how frightful
Page me39.249
†d Engels' sister
Page me39.249
†e Gottfried Ermen
Page me39.249
†f Franz Ermen
Page me39.249
†g may God bless him, poor fellow
Page me39.250

†a Blank
Page me39.250
†b The Duke of Wellington
Page me39.250
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.251
†a The Manifesto of the Cologne Central Authority of the Communist League of 1 December 1850 drawn up by Bürgers and others. See also this volume, p. 238.
Page me39.252
†a See this volume, p. 239.
Page me39.252
†b It looks as though they have been trying to hoodwink us after all.
Page me39.252
†c A pun on Schultz — the name and Polizeischulz — a police official.
Page me39.252
†d F. Engels, 'The Late Trial at Cologne'.
Page me39.253
†a R. Cobden, [Speech in the House of Commons on 26 November 1852,] The Times, No. 21284, 27 November 1852.
Page me39.254
†a perjurer
Page me39.254
†b Apparently K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.254
†c to the death
Page me39.254
†d he may be sure of it
Page me39.255
†a F. Engels, 'The Late Trial at Cologne'.
Page me39.255
†b K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.255
†c seriously
Page me39.255
†d not too clever
Page me39.256
†a See this volume, pp. 257-58.
Page me39.256
†b ibid., p. 252.
Page me39.256
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.256
†d 'It looks as though they have been trying to hoodwink us after all.'
Page me39.257
†a swindler
Page me39.257

†b See this volume, p. 252.
Page me39.258
†a 'It looks as though they have been trying to hoodwink us after all.'
Page me39.259
†a New Year's gifts
Page me39.259
†b so much the better
Page me39.259
†c poverty
Page me39.259
†d The original has 'Holland in Not' (Holland in distress) — an expression used by the Dutch during the struggle for independence (1572-1609), to call out their fellow-countrymen to pierce the dykes and drive away the Spanish invaders.
Page me39.259
†e customs men
Page me39.260
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Appeal for Support of the Men Sentenced in Cologne'.
Page me39.260
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'A Final Declaration on the Late Cologne Trials'.
Page me39.260
†c See this volume, p. 207.
Page me39.261
†a P.J. Proudhon, La révolution sociale démontrée par le coup d'état du 2 décembre.
Page me39.261
†b K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy (see present edition, Vol. 6, p. 190).
Page me39.261
†c re
Page me39.261
†d K. Marx, 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston'. On details see this volume, pp. 268-69.
Page me39.261
†e K. Marx, 'Kossuth, Mazzini, and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me39.261
†f Note by Cluss in the original: (there follows the piece you know).
Page me39.261
†g Pierre Napoleon Bonaparte.
Page me39.261
†h K. Marx, 'A Reply to Kossuth's “Secretary”'.
Page me39.262
†a Hermann Becker
Page me39.262
†b The Communist League
Page me39.263
†a Presumably, F.M. Rémusat.
Page me39.263

†b We shall see.
Page me39.263
†c brothers and friends
Page me39.263
†d the Communist Leauge
Page me39.264
†a That's the drastic means.
Page me39.264
†b more or less
Page me39.265
†a as well as he was able
Page me39.265
†b K. Marx, 'Parliament. — Vote of November 26. — Disraeli's Budget'.
Page me39.265
†c 10 December 1852
Page me39.265
†d See this volume, pp. 139-40 and 149-50.
Page me39.265
†e ibid., pp. 125, 152, 204 and 205.
Page me39.266
†a That will be enough.
Page me39.266
†b re
Page me39.266
†c swindle
Page me39.266
†d In the original there is a question mark above this word.
Page me39.267
†a brains
Page me39.267
†b B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth...
Page me39.268
†a See this volume, p. 261.
Page me39.268
†b K. Marx, 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston'.
Page me39.269
†a A reference to 1 Kings 12:11.
Page me39.269
†b K. Marx, 'A Reply to Kossuth's “Secretary”'.
Page me39.269
†c lost
Page me39.269
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.270
†a See this volume, pp. 257-58.

Page me39.270
†b Set a thief to catch a thief.
Page me39.270
†c Marx's pseudonym
Page me39.271
†a direct
Page me39.272
†a more or less
Page me39.272
†b Marie Blank
Page me39.272
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see this volume, p. 264).
Page me39.272
†d K. Marx, 'Elections. — Financial Clouds. — The Duchess of Sutherland and Slavery'.
Page me39.273
†a A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie.
Page me39.273
†b in one way or another
Page me39.273
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.274
†a companion
Page me39.274
†b Conrad Schramm
Page me39.275
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.275
†b 'Schlußbemerkung zum Kölner Kommunistenprozeß', Republik der Arbeiter, No. 52, 25 December 1852.
Page me39.275
†c K. Marx, 'Capital Punishment. — Mr. Cobden's Pamphlet. — Regulations of the Bank of England'.
Page me39.275
†d passably
Page me39.275
†e Firstly.
Page me39.275
†f A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie.
Page me39.275
†g See this volume, p. 282.
Page me39.275
†h 'The Bank of England and the Rate of Discount', The Economist, No. 491, 22 January 1853.
Page me39.275

†i prime mover
Page me39.276
†a [Speech of Napoleon III in the Senate on 22 January 1853 on the occasion of his marriage to Eugénie de Montijo,] Le Moniteur universel, No. 23, 23 January 1853.
Page me39.276
†b i.e. Napoleon III thus called after a character in Heine's satirical poem 'Zwei Ritter'.
Page me39.276
†c The People's Paper
Page me39.276
†d in the ascendant
Page me39.276
†e R. Cobden, 1793 and 1853. In Three Letters.
Page me39.276
†f 'London, Friday, Jan. 28, 1853' (leader), The Morning Post, No. 24681, 28 January 1853; 'The Peace and Arbitration Conference', The Morning Post, No. 24682, 29 January 1853.
Page me39.277
†a Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.277
†b Here the words 'will be much obliged' are crossed out in the original.
Page me39.278
†a great affair
Page me39.278
†b ground floor
Page me39.278
†c untimely
Page me39.278
†d after all
Page me39.279
†a After this the man will be completely and utterly done for.
Page me39.279
†b a coward and a wretch
Page me39.279
†c soldiers of the Hungarian national army during the 1848-49 revolution; here: Hungarian soldiers serving in the Austrian army.
Page me39.279
†d An allusion to the so-called Milan proclamation 'In the Name of the Hungarian Nation. — To the Soldiers Quartered in Italy (February 1853)', The Times, No. 21348, 10 February 1853 (see this volume, pp. 280, 283 and 290).
Page me39.280
†a we shall see
Page me39.280
†b seriously
Page me39.280

†c 'In the Name of the Hungarian Nation. — To the Soldiers Quartered in Italy (February 1853)', The Times, No. 21348, 10 February 1853.
Page me39.280
†d Cf. 'Kossuth and the Milan Revolt', The Leader, No. 152, 19 February 1853.
Page me39.280
†e Della Rocco, 'Mazzini's Proclamation. (To the Editor of The Daily News)', The Daily News, No. 2107, 21 February 1853.
Page me39.281
†a noble pair of brothers (Horace, Satires, II, 3)
Page me39.281
†b in reality
Page me39.281
†c re
Page me39.281
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.282
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.282
†b but it's a secret
Page me39.282
†c See this volume, p. 73.
Page me39.282
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Appeal for Support of the Men Sentenced in Cologne', New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 45, 21 January 1853.
Page me39.282
†e We shall see.
Page me39.282
†f A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie.
Page me39.282
†g Nickname given by the Radicals to John Russell who qualified the 1832 Parliamentary Reform as finality of Britain's constitutional development.
Page me39.282
†h The Times, No. 21350, 12 February 1853 [leader].
Page me39.282
†i Mary
Page me39.283
†a See this volume, pp. 213-14.
Page me39.283
†b That's life.
Page me39.283
†c Two statements by Kossuth published in various English newspapers in February and March 1853 which denied his participation in the Milan uprising. See, in particular, 'M.M. Kossuth and Mazzini and The Times' and 'A Letter from Kossuth', The Daily News, Nos. 2105 and 2117, 18 February and 4 March 1853.
Page me39.284
†a that dear

Page me39.284
†b Russell
Page me39.284
†c [D. Urquhart,] Turkey and Its Resources: Its Municipal Organization and Free Trade...
Page me39.285
†a Victoria
Page me39.285
†b Nicholas I
Page me39.285
†c The Times, Nos. 21365 and 21369, 2 and 7 March 1853, leaders.
Page me39.285
†a The Daily News, No. 2117, 4 March 1853 (see this volume, p. 283).
Page me39.286
†b Here: and that's not much.
Page me39.286
†c See this volume, pp. 245 and 275.
Page me39.286
†d A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie (see this volume, pp. 273 and 275).
Page me39.286
†e Emil Blank
Page me39.287
†a Heinrich Marx
Page me39.287
†b without a doctor
Page me39.287
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.287
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.287
†e Schabelitz
Page me39.287
†f What do you think of it, dear Master Renard?
Page me39.287
†g Swiss
Page me39.288
†a for the king of Prussia, i.e. for nothing.
Page me39.288
†b What's to be done?
Page me39.288
†c As for
Page me39.288
†d consolidated debt
Page me39.288
†e void

Page me39.288
†f high politics
Page me39.288
†g put yourself out
Page me39.289
†a One way or another
Page me39.289
†b All this is very weak, but after all I must have one or two articles on this question to dispose of my rival [Pulzsky].
Page me39.289
†c K. Marx, 'Elections. — Financial Clouds. — The Duchess of Sutherland and Slavery'.
Page me39.289
†d J.G. Flügel, J. Sporschil, Vollständiges Englisch-Deutsches und Deutsch-Englisches Wörterbuch.
Page me39.289
†e to restore my strength
Page me39.289
†f 'Manchester Manufactures. — A Grave Fact', The Morning Post, No. 24712, 5 March 1853.
Page me39.289
†g The other half of the £5 note (see this volume, p. 283).
Page me39.290
†a hard
Page me39.290
†b singleness of mind
Page me39.290
†c The original has 1852.
Page me39.290
†d Two statements published in various English newspapers denied his participation in the Milan uprising. See in particular: 'M.M. Kossuth and Mazzini and The Times', 'A Letter from Kossuth', The Daily News, Nos. 2105 and 2117, 18 February and 4 March 1853. See also this volume, pp. 283-84.
Page me39.290
†e 'A letter from Mazzini', The Daily News, No. 2115, 2 March 1853.
Page me39.290
†f Mayne Reid
Page me39.290
†g L. Kossuth, 'In the Name of the Hungarian Nation. — To the Soldiers Quartered in Italy (February 1853)', The Times, No. 21348, 10 February 1853.
Page me39.290
†h in words
Page me39.291
†a K. Marx, 'Forced Emigration. — Kossuth and Mazzini. — The Refugee Question. — Election Bribery in England. — Mr. Cobden' (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 532.)

Page me39.291
†b into the matter
Page me39.291
†c noble pair of brothers (Horace, Satires, II, 3)
Page me39.291
†d As for
Page me39.291
†e See this volume, pp. 264-65.
Page me39.291
†f He is the infamous thing that must be crushed. — From the expression Ecrasez l'infâme frequently repeated by Voltaire in his letters of 1759-68. By the infamous thing he meant the Catholic Church.
Page me39.292
†a See this volume, pp. 288-89.
Page me39.292
†b ibid., pp. 284-85.
Page me39.292
†c with that
Page me39.292
†d See this volume, p. 288.
Page me39.292
†e Schabelitz (ibid., pp. 287-88).
Page me39.292
†f K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.292
†g Engels to Marx, 10 March 1853, see this volume, p. 286.
Page me39.293
†a Pulszky (see this volume, p. 288).
Page me39.293
†b citizens
Page me39.293
†c when Count Hatzfeldt's property reverts irrevocably to public ownership
Page me39.293
†d party spirit and ambition
Page me39.293
†e no matter what
Page me39.293
†f people
Page me39.293
†g disciples would expound after a fashion but not, however, without profit
Page me39.294
†a See section on Turkey in the article by Marx and Engels, 'British Politics. — Disraeli. — The Refugees. — Mazzini in London. — Turkey'.
Page me39.295
†a 'Turkey and Its Value', The Economist, No. 498, 12 March 1853.
Page me39.295

†b Marx quotes Louis Philippe.
Page me39.296
†a of Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me39.296
†b Presumably Manteuffel.
Page me39.296
†c What's to be done?
Page me39.297
†a Eugénie Montijo, Napoleon III's wife
Page me39.297
†b that's all
Page me39.297
†c A paraphrase of Don Bazile's words in Beaumarchais' Le barbier de Séville, ou la précaution inutile, Act II, Scene VIII.
Page me39.297
†d It's only a noise, a faint murmur, a nothing, but then, you know, the French are sensitive to the slightest puff of wind.
Page me39.297
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Appeal for Support of the Men Sentenced in Cologne' (see also this volume, p. 282).
Page me39.298
†a In the original, 1852.
Page me39.298
†b K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Mazzini. — Intrigues of the Prussian Government. — Austro-Prussian Commercial Treaty. — The Times and the Refugees'.
Page me39.298
†c weasel-like features
Page me39.299
†a K. Marx, 'The Attack on Francis Joseph. — The Milan Riot. — British Politics. — Disraeli's Speech. — Napoleon's Will'.
Page me39.299
†b An allusion to F. and Th. Pulszky, White, Red, Black Sketches of Society in the United States During the Visit of Their Guest, Vols. 1-3, London, 1853.
Page me39.299
†c K. Marx, 'Forced Emigration. — Kossuth and Mazzini. — The Refugee Question. — Election Bribery in England. — Mr. Cobden's (see also this volume, p. 280).
Page me39.300
†a For 'sterling', Marx wrote in jest 'Sperling' — sparrow.
Page me39.300
†b Marx jokingly transposed personal and place-names, misspelling the latter, to give 'Calf of Lion'.
Page me39.300
†c on 13 March
Page me39.300

†d An analogy between the Empress Eugénie and Lola Montez, a well-known dancer and adventurer.
Page me39.300
†e loud reports
Page me39.300
†f Omnibus word meaning 'loud-mouthed men of December' (the time of Louis Napoleon's coup).
Page me39.300
†g A paraphrase of Don Bazile's words in Beaumarchais' Le barbier de Séville, ou la précaution inutile, Act II, Scene VIII.
Page me39.300
†h It's only a small noise, a murmur, a nothing; but then, you know, the French are sensitive to the slightest puff of wind.
Page me39.300
†i Things are moving.
Page me39.301
†a W. Hirsch, 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie. Rechtfertigungsschrift', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nos. 3-6, 1, 8, 15 and 22 April 1853.
Page me39.301
†b W. Hirsch, 'Erklärung [of 12 January 1852]', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 7, 29 April 1853.
Page me39.301
†c after all
Page me39.301
†d See this volume, pp. 242-45.
Page me39.301
†e K. Marx, 'Hirsch's Confessions'.
Page me39.301
†f See this volume, pp. 239, 256 and 258.
Page me39.301
†g K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.301
†h It was our dear Hirsch.
Page me39.302
†a K. Marx, 'Movements of Mazzini and Kossuth. — League with Louis Napoleon. — Palmerston'.
Page me39.302
†b B. Szemere, Graf Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgei, Ludwig Kossuth...
Page me39.302
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.302
†d To return.
Page me39.302
†e See this volume, pp. 232 and 239.
Page me39.303

†a K. Marx, 'Hirsch's Confessions'.
Page me39.303
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me39.303
†c to Bangya
Page me39.303
†d excerpts from Hirsch's article 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie. Rechtfertigungsschrift', then being prepared for the press.
Page me39.304
†a We must try to clarify this
Page me39.304
†b so much the better
Page me39.304
†c An analogy between Eduard Meyen and the Roman general Julius Vindex.
Page me39.305
†a Ferdinand Wolff
Page me39.305
†b i.e. Oxford
Page me39.305
†c Serbo-Croat
Page me39.305
†d J.C. Plümicke, Handbuch für die Königlich Preußischen Artillerie-Offiziere.
Page me39.305
†e in the final analysis
Page me39.306
†a A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie.
Page me39.306
†b governments of numerous German states
Page me39.306
†c wholesale
Page me39.307
†a franchise
Page me39.307
†b at bay
Page me39.307
†c cheap government
Page me39.307
†d Frederick William IV
Page me39.307
†e of 1848 (beginning of the revolution in Prussia)
Page me39.307
†f Luke 2:29
Page me39.308
†a agreed
Page me39.308
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.

Page me39.309
†a physically speaking
Page me39.309
†b stupid
Page me39.309
†c it will be a tough business
Page me39.310
†a W. Willisen, Der italienische Feldzug des Jahres 1848.
Page me39.310
†b A. Görgei, Mein Leben und Wirken in Ungarn in den Jahren 1848 und 1849.
Page me39.310
†c Presumably Sammlung der für Ungarn erlassenen Allerhöchsten Manifeste und Proklamationen, dann der Kundmachungen der Oberbefehlshaber der kaiserlichen Armee in Ungarn.
Page me39.311
†a F. Smitt, Geschichte des polnischen Aufstandes und Krieges in den Jahren 1830 und 1831.
Page me39.311
†b Louise
Page me39.312
†a of Die Reform
Page me39.312
†b poor
Page me39.312
†c See this volume, pp. 301-02.
Page me39.312
†d K. Marx, 'Hirsch's Confessions'.
Page me39.313
†a In the first place
Page me39.313
†b in passing
Page me39.313
†c the ultimate aim
Page me39.313
†d police spies
Page me39.313
†e Johanna Kinkel
Page me39.314
†a See this volume, p. 316.
Page me39.314
†b What do you say to that?
Page me39.314
†c supposing
Page me39.314
†d 29 April
Page me39.315

†a See this volume, pp. 303 and 314.
Page me39.315
†b to salve my conscience
Page me39.315
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'British Politics. — Disraeli. — The Refugees. — Mazzini in London. — Turkey'.
Page me39.315
†d New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3736, 7 April 1853.
Page me39.315
†e W. Hirsch, 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie. Rechtfertigungsschrift', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, presumably Nos. 3 and 4, 1 and 8 April 1853.
Page me39.315
†f re
Page me39.315
†g See this volume, pp. 301-02.
Page me39.316
†a See this volume, p. 314.
Page me39.316
†b Reference to the help given to Dronke and Pieper.
Page me39.317
†a 'The Base and Brutal Times', The People's Paper, No. 51, 23 April 1853. Englishman — pen-name of Alfred Richards.
Page me39.317
†b See this volume, pp. 315-16.
Page me39.317
†c followers of Ledru-Rollin
Page me39.318
†a See this volume, pp. 315-16.
Page me39.318
†b An allusion to Hirsch's 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie...'
Page me39.318
†c Weydemeyer, 'Nationalökonomische Skizzen'.
Page me39.319
†a [Report from a Berlin correspondent of 22 April,] The Times, No. 21412, 26 April 1853.
Page me39.319
†b Dronke and Pieper, see this volume, p. 321.
Page me39.320
†a when order and society were about to be swallowed up in the socialist abyss
Page me39.320
†b means of government
Page me39.321
†a See this volume, p. 281.
Page me39.323

†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'The Rocket Affair. — The Swiss Insurrection', and F. Engels, 'Political Position of the Swiss Republic'.
Page me39.323
†b 30 April. Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester till 19 May.
Page me39.323
†c J. Weydemeyer, 'Der “demokratische” Mouchard', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 7, 29 April 1853, and K. Marx, 'Hirsch's Confessions'.
Page me39.324
†a See previous letter.
Page me39.324
†b Wilhelm Wolff
Page me39.324
†c J. Weydemeyer, 'Der “demokratische” Mouchard' and K. Marx, 'Hirsch's Confessions'.
Page me39.324
†d W. Hirsch, 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie...'
Page me39.325
†a similar
Page me39.325
†b glorious
Page me39.325
†c A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie.
Page me39.325
†d Proofs of Willich's statement published in Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 9, 13 May 1853.
Page me39.325
†e Conrad Schramm
Page me39.326
†a Case in German = Fall. The pun cannot be reproduced in English.
Page me39.326
†b K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.326
†c See this volume, p. 325.
Page me39.326
†d Ernst Dronke
Page me39.327
†a more or less
Page me39.328
†a Roesgen
Page me39.328
†b Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne published in Boston.
Page me39.328
†c Ernst Dronke
Page me39.329

†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me39.329
†b Roesgen
Page me39.329
†c K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Mazzini. — Intrigues of the Prussian Government. — Austro-Prussian Commercial Treaty. — The Times and the Refugees'.
Page me39.329
†d I congratulate you.
Page me39.329
†e smoothly
Page me39.330
†a The library of the British Museum.
Page me39.330
†b A. Willich, 'An die Redaktion der Neu-England-Zeitung, Louisville, den 2. Mai 1853', Neu-England-Zeitung, No. 62, 13 May 1853.
Page me39.330
†c An allusion to Willich's help in publishing Hirsch's 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie...' (For details see K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness', present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 481 and 498-99).
Page me39.331
†a with Kinkel's assistance
Page me39.331
†b Not too bad for an old second lieutenant.
Page me39.331
†c E. [Müller-]Tellering, Vorgeschmack in die künftige deutsche Diktatur von Marx und Engels.
Page me39.331
†d it must be taken to its conclusion
Page me39.331
†e We shall see.
Page me39.331
†f See this volume, pp. 329-30.
Page me39.331
†g K. Marx, 'Riot at Constantinople. — German Table Moving. — The Budget'.
Page me39.331
†h New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3761, 6 May 1853, leader. See also present edition, Vol. 12, Note 57.
Page me39.331
†i Section 'The Rocket Affair' in Marx's and Engels' 'The Rocket Affair. — The Swiss Insurrection'.
Page me39.331
†j F. Engels, 'Political Position of the Swiss Republic' published over Marx's signature.
Page me39.332
†a K. Marx, 'Revolution in China and in Europe'. The Tribune editors may have included both articles in this one publication.

Page me39.332
†b anything under the sun
Page me39.332
†c All in all.
Page me39.332
†d See this volume, pp. 326-28.
Page me39.333
†a 'unless all those serving-people and bazaar or market folk who follow the army are taken for true warriors; for, if such were the case, there would, I think, be good reason to put at 2 to 300,000 men the strength of that army alone that is with the king, and sometimes even more, as, for example, when it is known that he will be long absent from the capital city; which would not, indeed, seem so very surprising to anyone familiar with all the strange impedimenta of tents, kitchen, clothing, furniture, and even women quite often, and, consequently, elephants, camels, oxen, horses, porters, foragers, sutlers, merchants of all kinds and servants who follow in the wake of these armies, nor to anyone familiar with the conditions and government peculiar to the country, namely that the king is the sole and unique proprietor of all the lands in the kingdom, whence it necessarily follows that every capital city, such as Delhi or Agra, fixes almost wholly on the militia and is therefore obliged to follow the king whenever he goes campaigning for a time, these cities neither being, nor indeed able to be, in any respect a Paris, but being really nothing but an army encampment rather better and more commodiously situated than if it were in the open country.' (Marx's italics.)
Page me39.333
†b 'How and upon what so great an army can subsist in the field, or so large a concourse of men and animals, is difficult to conceive. To that end one can only surmise, and such is indeed the case, that the Indians are very sober and very simple in what they eat and that, of this great number of horsemen, not one tenth, nay, not even one twentieth, eats meat during the march; provided they have their khichri, or mess of rice and other vegetables, whereon they pour brown butter when cooked, they are content. It should also be known that camels are extremely resistant to work, hunger and thirst, live on very little and eat anything and that, as soon as the army reaches camp, the camel-drivers lead them out to graze in the countryside, where they eat everything that comes their way; further, that the same merchants that keep the bazaars in Delhi are obliged to keep them in the field also, likewise the lesser merchants, etc. ... finally, concerning forage, all these poor people go roving in every direction to the villages to buy the same and to earn something there, and that their chief and habitual recourse is to scratch up whole stretches of country with a kind of trowel, pounding and washing the little herbs thus scratched up, and taking them to the army for sale...'

Footnote Page Break 334
Page me39.334
†a key
Page me39.334
†b An allusion to Ralpho — a character in Samuel Butler's satirical poem Hudibras.

Page me39.334
†c Marx described Gladstone's financial schemes in 'The New Financial Juggle; or Gladstone and the Pennies', 'Achievements of the Ministry', 'Affairs in Holland. — Denmark. — Conversion of the British Debt. — India, Turkey and Russia', 'The Russian Humbug. — Gladstone's Failure. — Sir Charles Wood's East India Reforms'.
Page me39.334
†d Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.334
†e K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (Boston edition).
Page me39.335
†a Roesgen
Page me39.335
†b J. Weydemeyer, 'Weiters in der Willich-Hirsch'schen Angelegenheit'; A. Cluss, 'An die Redaktion der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 10, 20 May 1853.
Page me39.335
†c the superior man
Page me39.336
†a constraint
Page me39.336
†b in good time
Page me39.336
†c See this volume, pp. 325-26.
Page me39.336
†d in Huzel's presence (ibid., pp. 148-50)
Page me39.336
†e comely
Page me39.336
†f Officer Rau is compared to shepherd Corydon, a character in pastoral poems who suffers from unrequited love.
Page me39.336
†g Come to that
Page me39.336
†h poor
Page me39.336
†i An allusion to [Müller-]Tellering's Vorgeschmack in die künftige deutsche Diktatur von Marx und Engels.
Page me39.336
†j See this volume, p. 334.
Page me39.339
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see this volume, p. 334).
Page me39.339
†b Roesgen
Page me39.339

†c Let him have it.
Page me39.339
†d master of the situation
Page me39.339
†e public works
Page me39.340
†a See this volume, p. 332.
Page me39.341
†a F. Bernier, Voyages contenant la description des états du Grand Mogol, de l'Indoustan, du Royaume de Cachemire, etc. See also this volume, pp. 332-34.
Page me39.341
†b without appearing to be aware of it
Page me39.341
†c universal language ready-made
Page me39.341
†d W. Jones, A Grammar of the Persian Language.
Page me39.343
†a The whole without frills and told as simply as possible. 'I have the honour to sign myself', or else, 'I am, sir, your most obedient'.
Page me39.343
†b Roesgen. See this volume, p. 344.
Page me39.343
†c The memo is in pencil; the last paragraph is barely legible.
Page me39.344
†a of 6 and 9 June
Page me39.344
†b See this volume, p. 323.
Page me39.344
†c Roesgen
Page me39.344
†d from bad to worse
Page me39.344
†e safe and sound
Page me39.344
†f the wretched man
Page me39.345
†a 'Arnold Ruge', The Leader, Vol. IV, No. 168, 11 June 1853.
Page me39.345
†b 'A Russian Democratic Printing Office in London', The Leader, Vol. IV, No. 168, 11 June 1853.
Page me39.345
†c simpleton
Page me39.346
†a See reviews 'Slavery and Emancipation' and 'New Publications', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3771, 18 May 1853.
Page me39.346

†b An allusion to Horace Greeley's article 'Isms' in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3747, 20 April 1853.
Page me39.346
†c F. Engels, 'Political Position of the Swiss Republic'.
Page me39.346
†d K. Marx, 'The British Rule in India'.
Page me39.347
†a Marx quotes presumably from the Fifth Report from the Select Committee on the Affairs of the East India Company, 1812.
Page me39.348
†a to Willich. See this volume, pp. 330-31.
Page me39.349
†a extreme moderation
Page me39.349
†b Gottlieb Kellner
Page me39.349
†c and the government is constitutional despite itself
Page me39.349
†d the better is the greatest enemy of the good'
Page me39.350
†a The reason is very simple.
Page me39.350
†b Quite the contrary.
Page me39.350
†c Louise
Page me39.350
†d Jaan Carel Juta
Page me39.350
†e K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.351
†a But we shall see.
Page me39.351
†b uttermost
Page me39.351
†c K. Heinzen's pamphlet Mord und Freiheit.
Page me39.351
†d See this volume, p. 331.
Page me39.351
†e K. Marx and F. Engels. 'The Rocket Affair. — The Swiss Insurrection'; F. Engels, 'Political Position of the Swiss Republic'.
Page me39.352
†a at a moment
Page me39.352
†b the most necessary things
Page me39.353
†a Dr Johann Jacoby

Page me39.353
†b See previous letter.
Page me39.353
†c What's to be done?
Page me39.353
†d Marx uses the word 'kriegisch', which may mean 'warlike' or may be a pun on the name 'Kriege'.
Page me39.353
†e as between equals
Page me39.353
†f or so it seems to me
Page me39.354
†a What about?
Page me39.354
†b See this volume, p. 350.
Page me39.355
†a New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3761, 6 May 1853.
Page me39.355
†b K. Marx, 'Riot at Constantinople. — German Table Moving. — The Budget'.
Page me39.355
†c Gladstone
Page me39.355
†d J. Bright, Speech in the House of Commons on 1 July 1853, The Times, No. 21470, 2 July 1853.
Page me39.356
†a Between ourselves
Page me39.356
†b gossip
Page me39.356
†c Experto crede Roberto. — Trust Roberto who has had experience (from a comic poem by Antoine Arena).
Page me39.357
†a D. Urquhart, 'What Means “Protection” of the Greek Church?', 'Time in Diplomacy. — The “European Recognition”', 'The Relative Power of Russia and Great Britain', 'War between England and France', published as letters to the editor in The Morning Advertiser of 11, 12, 15 and 16 August 1853.
Page me39.357
†b Ernst Dronke
Page me39.357
†c It was a letter that ought to have been burnt forthwith.
Page me39.358
†a Well, it's done.
Page me39.358
†b gossip
Page me39.358
†c too soft

Page me39.359
†a The original has '2 September'.
Page me39.359
†b See this volume, pp. 352 and 356.
Page me39.359
†c The original has 'September'.
Page me39.359
†d [I. Golovin,] 'Europe. — A Single Man', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19394, 19 August 1853.
Page me39.359
†e F.M. [Francis Marx], 'The Russian Agent, Bakunin. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19397, 23 August 1853.
Page me39.359
†f I. Golovin, A Herzen, S. Worcell, 'The Russian Agent, Bakunin. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19398, 24 August 1853.
Page me39.359
†g Neue Rheinische Zeitung
Page me39.360
†a A. Ruge, 'Michael Bakunin. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19404, 31 August 1853.
Page me39.360
†b K. Marx, 'Michael Bakunin. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19406, 2 September 1853.
Page me39.360
†c [H. Ewerbeck,] 'Bakunin', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 36, 6 July 1848.
Page me39.360
†d M. Bakunin, [Open Letter,] Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung, No. 151, 12 July 1848. This was the title under which the Neue Oder-Zeitung appeared in 1846-49.
Page me39.360
†e Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 64, 3 August 1848.
Page me39.360
†f ibid.
Page me39.360
†g See present edition, Vol. 12, p. 285.
Page me39.360
†h [Report on Bakunin's Expulsion, 10 October,] Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 115, 13 October 1848.
Page me39.360
†i F. Engels, 'Democratic Pan-Slavism', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 222, 15 February 1849 (see present edition, Vol. 8, p. 363).
Page me39.361
†a F. Engels, Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, XVIII, New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3576, 2 October 1852 (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 90). Engels' articles were published over Marx's signature.
Page me39.361

†b Golovin's item in The Morning Advertiser, No. 19407 of 3 September 1853 is copied in Pieper's hand.
Page me39.362
†a a lout
Page me39.362
†b [I. Golovin,] How to Write History (From a Foreign Correspondent.)
Page me39.362
†c A reference to George Sand's letter of 20 July 1848 and the editorial introductory remarks published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 64, 3 August 1848. See also this volume, p. 360.
Page me39.362
†d calumniate boldly
Page me39.363
†a See previous letter.
Page me39.363
†b The Morning Advertiser
Page me39.364
†a D. Urquhart, 'Indeed?' [From a native correspondent,] The Morning Advertiser, No. 19408, 5 September 1853.
Page me39.364
†b K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The People's Paper'.
Page me39.364
†c slip of the tongue
Page me39.364
†d i.e. Dronke's
Page me39.364
†e C.F. Franceson, Grammatik der spanischen Sprache.
Page me39.364
†f in the bosom of my family.
Page me39.366
†a [A. Cluss,] 'White Mountains (Summit-House), 21 August 1853', Die Reform, No. 44, 31 August 1853.
Page me39.366
†b In the article 'Die neue Welt' published in the same issue of Die Reform G.T. Kellner gave a review of The New Rome. The United States of the World by Th. Poesche and Ch. Goepp.
Page me39.366
†c Th. Poesche, 'Die “Klassenkämpfer”.'
Page me39.366
†d K. Marx, 'In the House of Commons. — The Press on the Eastern Question. — The Czar's Manifesto. — Denmark'.
Page me39.366
†e K. Marx, 'The War Question. — Doings of Parliament. — India'.
Page me39.366
†f unmistakably
Page me39.367

†a Pulszky
Page me39.367
†b Insertion by Cluss: illegible.
Page me39.368
†a See this volume, p. 356.
Page me39.368
†b 20 September
Page me39.368
†c 9 September. K. Marx, 'The Vienna Note. — The United States and Europe. — Letters from Shumla. — Peel's Bank Act'.
Page me39.368
†d 13 September. K. Marx, 'Political Movements. — Scarcity of Bread in Europe'.
Page me39.369
†a Pulszky (see this volume, p. 288).
Page me39.369
†b The People's Paper
Page me39.369
†c 10 September
Page me39.369
†d Presumably Th. Poesche's 'Klassenkämpfer', Neu-England-Zeitung, 3 September 1853.
Page me39.369
†e Wilhelm Wolff
Page me39.370
†a See this volume, pp. 364-65.
Page me39.370
†b Adam Gurowski (see this volume, p. 365).
Page me39.370
†c 'Junius II' [Löwe], 'An den Graf Nesselrode', Deutsche Londoner Zeitung, Nos. 264 and 266, 19 April and 3 May 1850.
Page me39.370
†d See this volume, p. 369.
Page me39.370
†e he's left out of absolutely everything
Page me39.370
†f He's even become a bit of a flatterer
Page me39.371
†a See this volume, pp. 372-73 and 377-78.
Page me39.371
†b As for
Page me39.371
†c little tribulations
Page me39.371
†d The original has 'August'.
Page me39.371

†e A. Willich, [To the Editors of the Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, 28 August 1853], Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 25, 2 September 1853.
Page me39.372
†a K. Marx, 'The Western Powers and Turkey. — Symptoms of Economic Crisis', 'Panic on the London Stock Exchange. — Strikes' written in co-authorship with Engels.
Page me39.372
†b at Engels
Page me39.372
†c As for the rest of us
Page me39.372
†d See this volume, p. 364.
Page me39.372
†e ibid., pp. 364-65.
Page me39.372
†f Things are going splendidly.
Page me39.372
†g A. Jacobi, 'Ueber den Untergang der Erde', Die Reform, Nos. 44-48, 31 August, 3, 7, 10 and 14 September 1853.
Page me39.373
†a Friederike Blind
Page me39.373
†b See this volume, pp. 359-63.
Page me39.373
†c D. Urquhart, 'Indeed?', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19408, 5 September 1853.
Page me39.373
†d lout
Page me39.373
†e A.B. Richards, 'Michel Bakounine and His Accuser. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19426, 26 September 1853.
Page me39.373
†f K. Marx, 'Michael Bakunin'.
Page me39.373
†g A. Herzen, Du développement des idées révolutionnaires en Russie.
Page me39.373
†h A.B., 'Revolutionary Russians. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19427, 27 September 1853.
Page me39.373
†i young Russia
Page me39.373
†j the Russian intriguers
Page me39.373
†k poor
Page me39.374
†a F. Engels, 'The Russians in Turkey'.

Page me39.374
†b 4 October
Page me39.375
†a A. Jacobi, 'Ueber den Untergang der Erde'.
Page me39.375
†b F. Engels, 'The Russians in Turkey'.
Page me39.375
†c K. Marx, 'English Prosperity. — Strikes. — The Turkish Question. — India', 'Russian Policy Against Turkey. — Chartism', 'Financial Failure of Government. — Cabs. — Ireland. — The Russian Question', 'Rise in the Price of Corn. — Cholera. — Strikes. — Sailors' Movement', 'Panic on the London Stock Exchange. — Strikes'.
Page me39.375
†d K. Marx, 'Panic on the London Stock Exchange. — Strikes' (written in co-authorship with Engels) (see this volume, p. 372).
Page me39.376
†a 27 September
Page me39.376
†b i.e. Engels
Page me39.376
†c Pieper
Page me39.377
†a statesman
Page me39.377
†b Probably Pieper's report from London of 31 May in Die Reform, No. 22, 15 June 1853.
Page me39.377
†c See this volume, pp. 369-70 and 372.
Page me39.377
†d Friederike
Page me39.378
†a See this volume, pp. 371 and 372-73.
Page me39.378
†b First
Page me39.378
†c German Workers' Educational Society
Page me39.378
†d As for
Page me39.381
†a Well!
Page me39.381
†b K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon. On critique of Ricardo's theory of rent see Chapter II, § 4: 'Property or Rent'.
Page me39.383
†a fixed capital
Page me39.384

†a altogether too
Page me39.384
†b The original is kept in the Marx Memorial House in Trier.
Page me39.385
†a First
Page me39.385
†b what's the use?
Page me39.385
†c indictment
Page me39.385
†d K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston'. First Article written on 4 October 1853 was published in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3902, 19 October 1853 as a leading article 'I. Palmerston'.
Page me39.385
†e 7 October. K. Marx, 'The War Question. — Financial Matters. — Strikes'.
Page me39.386
†a perhaps
Page me39.386
†b Ferdinand
Page me39.386
†c Roland Daniels
Page me39.386
†d Cologne communist trial
Page me39.386
†e malicious gossip
Page me39.386
†f it's a bit too much
Page me39.386
†g K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.386
†h See this volume, p. 364.
Page me39.387
†a A. Cluss, 'Das “beste Blatt der Union” und seine “besten Männer” und Nationalökonomen', Die Reform, Nos. 48-51, 14, 17, 21 and 24 September 1853.
Page me39.387
†b See this volume, p. 385.
Page me39.387
†c K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston', Art. II sent on 14 October was published in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3916, 4 November 1853 as a leading article under the title 'II. Palmerston and Russia'.
Page me39.387
†d 14 October
Page me39.387
†e 18 October
Page me39.388
†a article

Page me39.388
†b 'Foreign Correspondence', The Economist, No. 528, 8 October 1853.
Page me39.389
†a Oxford
Page me39.389
†b penniless
Page me39.389
†c As for
Page me39.389
†d 17 October. See this volume, p. 378.
Page me39.390
†a K. Marx, 'Revolution in China and in Europe'.
Page me39.390
†b K. Marx, 'The War Question. — Doings of Parliament. — India' (see present edition, Vol. 12, p. 216).
Page me39.390
†c By the way
Page me39.390
†d K. Marx, 'The Russo-Turkish Difficulty. — Ducking and Dodging of the British Cabinet. — Nesselrode's Last Note. — The East India Question' (see present edition, Vol. 12, p. 200).
Page me39.390
†e Rinaldo Rinaldino — title character in the novel by August Vulpius; Ruggiero and Alcina — characters in L'Orlando furioso by Ariosto.
Page me39.390
†f little miseries
Page me39.390
†g writer
Page me39.390
†h sublime
Page me39.390
†i oblique fall. A pun, the German word Fall meaning either 'fall' or 'case'.
Page me39.390
†j concerning you
Page me39.390
†a See this volume, p. 365.
Page me39.391
†b Cf. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer, 19 December 1851, present edition, Vol. 38, p. 519.
Page me39.391
†c Klein, ironically called Snug after a character in Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
Page me39.391
†d for my part
Page me39.391
†e A play on the words klein (little) and Klein (personal name).

Page me39.391
†f Ferdinand Wolff
Page me39.392
†a K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon.
Page me39.392
†b H. Ch. Carey, The Past, the Present, and the Future, Philadelphia, 1848, pp. 48-49.
Page me39.392
†c first and foremost
Page me39.393
†a Marx used this word for French philistines.
Page me39.393
†b Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.393
†c The original is kept in the Marx Memorial House in Trier.
Page me39.393
†d My thanks for the two articles (F. Engels, 'Movements of the Armies in Turkey' and 'The Holy War').
Page me39.393
†e F. Smitt, Geschichte des polnischen Aufstandes und Krieges in den Jahren 1830 und 1831.
Page me39.393
†f To begin with
Page me39.393
†g contemporaries
Page me39.393
†h F.R. Chesney, 'Précis of a Report on the Russian Campaign of 1828 and 1829, drawn up for the information of the Duke of Wellington', The Portfolio, No. 26, 20 July 1836.
Page me39.394
†a philistine
Page me39.394
†b So much the better
Page me39.394
†c K. Marx, Article III of the 'Palmerston' series: 'A Chapter of Modern History', New-York Daily Tribune.
Page me39.394
†d K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston', Art. III, The People's Paper.
Page me39.394
†e a large part being played by Virgil, Aeneid, II)
Page me39.395
†a K. Marx, 'War. — Strikes. — Dearth'.
Page me39.395

†b An allusion to Heinzen's 'der gesunde Menschenverstand' (sound common sense). See K. Marx, 'Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality', present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 317, 330 and 337.
Page me39.395
†c F. Engels, 'The Russians in Turkey'; K. Marx, 'I. Palmerston', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3902, 19 October 1853. An allusion to the fact that the newspaper editors had not named the author.
Page me39.395
†d K. Marx, Article III of the 'Palmerston' series: 'A Chapter of Modern History', New-York Daily Tribune.
Page me39.396
†a F. Engels, 'The Russians in Turkey'.
Page me39.396
†b A. Willich, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine ”Enthüllungen”', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nos. 33 and 34, 28 October and 4 November 1853.
Page me39.396
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.396
†d Wilhelm Wolff
Page me39.397
†a at the moment
Page me39.397
†b See this volume, p. 396.
Page me39.397
†c A. Willich, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”'.
Page me39.398
†a As regards
Page me39.398
†b Probably 8 November.
Page me39.398
†c K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston'.
Page me39.398
†d A. Willich, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”'.
Page me39.399
†a 25 November
Page me39.399
†b K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.399
†c F. Engels, 'The Progress of the Turkish War'.
Page me39.399
†d Wilhelm Wolff
Page me39.399
†e K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston', I-V in The People's Paper, corresponding to 'I. Palmerston', 'II. Palmerston and Russia' and 'III. A Chapter of Modern History' in the New-York Daily Tribune.

Page me39.399
†f Engels' article 'The War on the Danube' was sent to New York on Friday, 2 December 1853.
Page me39.400
†a See this volume, pp. 396, 397 and 398.
Page me39.400
†b Wilhelm Wolff
Page me39.400
†c Thanks for the
Page me39.400
†d F. Engels, 'The War on the Danube'.
Page me39.400
†e Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung containing Willich's article 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine ”Enthüllungen”'.
Page me39.401
†a at least
Page me39.401
†b now
Page me39.401
†c 29 November
Page me39.401
†d Willich
Page me39.401
†e 'The Labour Parliament', The Economist, No. 535, 26 November 1853.
Page me39.401
†f See this volume, p. 587.
Page me39.401
†g Marx calls the petty-bourgeois émigrés who attended the Polish meeting of 29 November 1853 'Waschlapskis' (Dishcloths) after a personage in Heine's satirical poem 'Zwei Ritter'.
Page me39.402
†a Cluss to Marx, 13 November 1853.
Page me39.402
†b J. Weydemeyer, A. Cluss, A. Jacobi, 'An die Redaktion der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 37, 25 November 1853.
Page me39.402
†c K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.402
†d See previous letter.
Page me39.402
†e 'Werbungen in New-York', 'Das Wirken der “Militär Kommission”', Die Reform, Nos. 87 and 88, 19 and 21 November 1853.
Page me39.402
†f containing Willich's 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”'
Page me39.402

†g See this volume, pp. 400-01.
Page me39.403
†a Homo sum, humani nihil a me alienum puto (I am a man and I think nothing human is alien to me), Terence, Heautontimorumenos.
Page me39.403
†b at bottom
Page me39.403
†c J. Weydemeyer, A. Cluss, A. Jacobi, 'An die Redaktion der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung' and K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.404
†a [Report from Newark,] Die Reform, No. 91, 24 November 1853.
Page me39.404
†b As for
Page me39.404
†c K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston'.
Page me39.404
†d by a coup d'état
Page me39.404
†e See this volume, pp. 104 and 309-10.
Page me39.405
†a events
Page me39.405
†b here: fully familiar
Page me39.405
†c Pulszky (see this volume, p. 288)
Page me39.405
†d providing
Page me39.406
†a hard
Page me39.406
†b In compliance with Marx's request Engels wrote 'The European War' on 8 January.
Page me39.406
†c J.B. Slick, 'To the Editor of The Morning Herald', The Morning Herald, No. 22361, 5 January 1854.
Page me39.406
†d J. Bonaparte, Mémoires et correspondance politique et militaire du roi Joseph.
Page me39.407
†a K. Marx, 'The Western Powers and Turkey'.
Page me39.407
†b 13 January
Page me39.407
†c The reference is to the subjects dealt with in Engels' 'The European War'.
Page me39.408
†a 20 January.
Page me39.408

†b Marx took the wrong spelling from the English newspapers; should be Citatea as below.
Page me39.408
†c general war
Page me39.409
†a Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me39.409
†b Caroline von Westphalen
Page me39.409
†c embarrassment
Page me39.409
†d K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.410
†a Postscript in a childish hand.
Page me39.410
†b See this volume, p. 386.
Page me39.410
†c ibid., p. 409.
Page me39.410
†d 'Krajova, Lesser Wallachia. Jan. 11', The Times, No. 21647, 25 January 1854.
Page me39.411
†a [Report from Constantinople of 2 January 1854,] La Patrie, No. 19, 19 January 1854.
Page me39.411
†b See this volume, p. 409.
Page me39.411
†c sad
Page me39.411
†d 31 January
Page me39.411
†e K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.412
†a K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.412
†b K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston', Fourth Article in The People's Paper.
Page me39.412
†c K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston'.
Page me39.413
†a 14 February. In compliance with Marx's request Engels sent him on 13 February the material which provided the basis for their joint article 'The War Question in Europe'.
Page me39.413
†b i.e. for the paper De Zuid-Afrikaan in Cape Town (see this volume, p. 405).
Page me39.413
†c See illustration facing p. 414.
Page me39.414

†a See this volume, p. 404.
Page me39.414
†b as for him
Page me39.414
†c by now
Page me39.414
†d 14 March
Page me39.417
†a K. Marx, 'Letter to the Labour Parliament'.
Page me39.417
†b D. Urquhart, 'What the Governments of England and Turkey Ought Severally to Do. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19566, 8 March 1854.
Page me39.418
†a 14 March
Page me39.418
†b Aurelius Ferenc Pulszky
Page me39.418
†c and it's not worthwhile
Page me39.420
†a On the contrary
Page me39.420
†b See this volume, pp. 421 and 428.
Page me39.420
†c Probably a misquotation of Schiller's 'Das Lied von der Glocke'.
Page me39.420
†d decrepit
Page me39.421
†a See this volume, p. 423.
Page me39.421
†b Unfortunate man!
Page me39.421
†c See this volume, pp. 420 and 428.
Page me39.421
†d event
Page me39.422
†a D. Urquhart, 'How is the War to Be Carried on? To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19583, 28 March 1854.
Page me39.422
†b See this volume, pp. 426-27.
Page me39.422
†c [Report on the cotton market in Manchester,] The Times, No. 21700, 28 March 1854.
Page me39.423
†a See this volume, p. 421.
Page me39.423

†b All yours
Page me39.426
†a H. Douglas, A Treatise on Naval Gunnery, London, 1820.
Page me39.427
†a See this volume, pp. 423-26.
Page me39.428
†a pimps
Page me39.428
†b at a charge of
Page me39.428
†c there are things here that Mr Lupus wants to hide, doubtless some old maid
Page me39.428
†d asphyxiating shot (see this volume, pp. 422-23)
Page me39.428
†e Emil Blank
Page me39.429
†a a good lad
Page me39.429
†b See this volume, p. 422.
Page me39.430
†a K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston'.
Page me39.431
†a See also this volume, p. 419
Page me39.431
†b On the contrary
Page me39.431
†c as for
Page me39.432
†a Palmerston, [Speech in the House of Commons on 1 June 1829,] G.H. Francis, Opinions and Policy of the Right Viscount Palmerston, London, 1852, pp. 123-26.
Page me39.432
†b Probably Robert Peel's Speech in the House of Commons on 16 February 1830, ibid., p. 138.
Page me39.433
†a Severnaya pchela
Page me39.433
†b as regards the war
Page me39.434
†a Edgar von Westphalen
Page me39.434
†b F. Engels, 'The Russian Army'.
Page me39.435
†a refusal
Page me39.435
†b See this volume, p. 433.
Page me39.435

†c failure
Page me39.435
†d H. von Moltke, Der russischtürkische Feldzug in der europäischen Türkei 1828 und 1829.
Page me39.435
†e See this volume, pp. 438-39.
Page me39.435
†f ibid., p. 433.
Page me39.436
†a it's too much
Page me39.436
†b commercial traveller
Page me39.436
†c A. Schimmelpfennig, The War between Turkey and Russia. A Military Sketch.
Page me39.436
†d On Monday, 24 April, Engels wrote 'The Turkish War'.
Page me39.436
†e See this volume, p. 438.
Page me39.437
†a No matter
Page me39.437
†b See this volume, p. 433.
Page me39.437
†c F. Engels, 'The Russian Army'.
Page me39.437
†d written by Y. Tolstoi, published anonymously
Page me39.438
†a See this volume, pp. 423-26 and 427.
Page me39.438
†b Worcell is thus called after a character in Heine's satirical poem 'Zwei Ritter'.
Page me39.438
†c definitely
Page me39.438
†d F. Engels, 'The Fortress of Kronstadt'.
Page me39.439
†a See this volume, p. 437.
Page me39.439
†b firmly
Page me39.439
†c See this volume, p. 436.
Page me39.439
†d K. Marx, 'Austrian Bankruptcy'.
Page me39.439
†e K. Marx, 'The Greek Insurrection'.
Page me39.439
†f interview (see this volume, pp. 412-13).

Page me39.439
†g 15 April
Page me39.440
†a 'Mr Urquhart and The Globe. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19603, 20 April 1854.
Page me39.440
†b But we must wait.
Page me39.440
†c Francis Marx
Page me39.440
†d Character in the introductory lines to 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn', a nineteenth-century collection of folk songs compiled by Arnim and Brentano.
Page me39.441
†a See this volume, pp. 436 and 439.
Page me39.442
†a Willich
Page me39.442
†b 2 Samuel 11:14, 15.
Page me39.442
†c just a little
Page me39.443
†a See this volume, p. 442.
Page me39.443
†b tests
Page me39.443
†c Mary Burns
Page me39.443
†d See this volume, pp. 442 and 445.
Page me39.444
†a in the final count
Page me39.444
†b See this volume, pp. 423-26 and 427.
Page me39.444
†c F. Engels, 'News from the European Contest'.
Page me39.444
†d 5 May. See this volume, p. 448.
Page me39.444
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, 'British Politics. — Disraeli. — The Refugees. — Mazzini in London. — Turkey'; F. Engels. 'The Real Issue in Turkey', 'The Turkish Question', 'What Is to Become of Turkey in Europe?'
Page me39.444
†f after all
Page me39.444
†g for the greater glory of Aberdeen and Bonaparte
Page me39.445
†a Certain that God has him in his safe keeping — let him have him.

Page me39.445
†b See this volume, p. 442.
Page me39.446
†a F. Engels, 'The European War', 'Retreat of the Russians from Kalafat', 'Position of the Armies in Turkey'.
Page me39.446
†b Marx took the report about the appeal of 23 (11) April 1854 from the telegraphic dispatch 'Turkey and Russia' in The Times, No. 21731, 3 May 1854.
Page me39.446
†c K. Marx. 'The Secret Diplomatic Correspondence' (see present edition, Vol. 13, p. 99).
Page me39.446
†d Malmesbury, [Speech in the House of Lords on 31 March 1854,] The Times, No. 21704, 1 April 1854. On this see K. Marx. 'The War Debate in Parliament', present edition, Vol. 13, pp. 134-35.
Page me39.446
†e false position. Marx probably refers to the leading article in the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, 7 (19) March 1854, reprinted in The Times, No. 21702, 30 March 1854: 'France'.
Page me39.446
†f Victoria R. 'A Proclamation, 29 March 1854', The Times, No. 21702, 30 March 1854.
Page me39.447
†a K. Marx, 'The Greek Insurrection'.
Page me39.447
†b K. Marx, 'Declaration of War. — On the History of the Eastern Question'.
Page me39.447
†c See this volume, p. 448.
Page me39.447
†d horrible to relate
Page me39.448
†a See this volume, p. 422
Page me39.448
†b Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.448
†c F. Engels, 'News from the European Contest'.
Page me39.448
†d Lajos Kossuth
Page me39.448
†e poor devil
Page me39.449
†a Voltaire, Candide.
Page me39.449
†b E. Wiß, 'Die elementaren Richtungen der Zeit', Republik der Arbeiter, No. 15, 8 April 1854. The article was published in instalments from March to June 1854.
Page me39.449

†c light of the world
Page me39.449
†d supporter of Bruno Bauer
Page me39.449
†e the worthy fellow
Page me39.449
†f expectations
Page me39.450
†a in the end
Page me39.450
†b See this volume, p. 448.
Page me39.450
†c ibid., pp. 422 and 448.
Page me39.450
†d August Willich
Page me39.451
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me39.451
†b John Buckup
Page me39.451
†c E. Dronke, 'Naturgeschichte der Demokratie', Die Reform, 12 April 1854.
Page me39.451
†d Articles by Marx and Engels: 'The War Comedy,' 'The Faedreland on the Armistice with Denmark', 'The Armistice with Denmark', 'The Armistice “Negotiations”', 'Armistice Negotiations with Denmark Broken Off', 'The Danish-Prussian Armistice', 'Ratification of the Armistice', 'The “Model State” of Belgium', 'The “Model Constitutional State”', 'The Antwerp Death Sentences', etc. (see present edition, Vol. 7).
Page me39.451
†e See this volume, pp. 103-04.
Page me39.452
†a Gerhard Krogh
Page me39.452
†b Frederick VII
Page me39.452
†c See 'The Black Sea. The Bombardment of Odessa', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19615, 4 May 1854; 'Latest Intelligence', The Times, No. 21734, 6 May 1854.
Page me39.452
†d Saint-Arnaud is compared to a character in Schiller's ballad 'Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer'.
Page me39.452
†e remake
Page me39.453
†a 20 May
Page me39.453
†b Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me39.454

†a Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me39.454
†b Cluss
Page me39.454
†c in a position
Page me39.455
†a Heine, 'Neuer Frühling', 6. Gedicht.
Page me39.455
†b P.A. Wolff, Preciosa, Act II, Scene 2. The drama provided the libretto for Weber's opera of the same title.
Page me39.455
†c K. Marx. 'Palmerston', II, III.
Page me39.455
†d See this volume, pp. 412-13.
Page me39.456
†a Bonaparte's coup d'état of 2 December 1851 in France.
Page me39.456
†b good sense
Page me39.457
†a Chamisso, Peter Schlemihl's wundersame Geschichte.
Page me39.458
†a At bottom
Page me39.458
†b K. Marx, 'The Formation of a Special Ministry of War in Britain. — The War on the Danube. — The Economic Situation'.
Page me39.458
†c The Times, No. 21756, 1 June 1854, leader.
Page me39.458
†d [Report from Belgrade of 29 May 1854,] Le Moniteur universel, No. 151, 31 May 1854.
Page me39.458
†e Marx derides the pseudo-revolutionary activity of the French petty-bourgeois democrats. See this volume, pp. 461-62.
Page me39.458
†f Reports in Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg of 26 May 1854 and Napier's military reports in the section 'The Baltic Fleet' of The Times, No. 21758, 3 June 1854.
Page me39.458
†g In the end
Page me39.458
†h Comments
Page me39.458
†i 'Italy's servitude is a European compact: Italy can be free only in the bosom of a free Europe. Then it became manifest that an omnipotent alliance of the oppressed must be formed to oppose the alliance of the few oppressors.'
Page me39.459

†a 'Then Mazzini accomplished his arduous mission, concluded a new pact with Ledru-Rollin and Darasz and Ruge, binding Italy not only to Poland and France but to that same Germany, up till now the willing handmaiden, if not the priestess, of servitude. And thus pilgrims belonging to opposing sides and the most hostile peoples will unite before the common shrine of liberty.'
Page me39.459
†b Probably the journal Für die freien Gemeinden.
Page me39.459
†c in case of need
Page me39.459
†d 6 June
Page me39.460
†a F. Engels, 'The Siege of Silistria'.
Page me39.460
†b See this volume, pp. 309-10.
Page me39.460
†c Probably Sammlung der für Ungarn erlassenen Allerhöchsten Manifeste und Proklamationen, dann der Kundmachungen der Oberbefehlshaber der kaiserlichen Armee in Ungarn.
Page me39.460
†d G. Klapka, Memoiren. April bis Oktober 1849.
Page me39.460
†e See this volume, pp. 435 and 437-38.
Page me39.461
†a See this volume, p. 458.
Page me39.461
†b F. Engels, 'The Siege of Silistria'.
Page me39.461
†c philistine
Page me39.462
†a See this volume, p. 458.
Page me39.462
†b F. Pyat, 'The Arrest of Sergeant Boichot, at Paris, by the French Government', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19646, 9 June 1854.
Page me39.462
†c It's disgusting.
Page me39.462
†d vice-chancellor in exile
Page me39.462
†e here: version
Page me39.462
†f a crazy mixture
Page me39.462
†g Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste published by J.S. Ersch and J.G. Gruber.
Page me39.462

†h K. Marx, 'Palmerston and Russia'.
Page me39.463
†a Caroline von Westphalen
Page me39.463
†b See this volume, p. 461.
Page me39.463
†c I'm quite bemused
Page me39.464
†a A pun on the name Freund, which also means 'friend'.
Page me39.464
†b unexpectedly
Page me39.465
†a petty miseries
Page me39.465
†b Blessed is he (Horace, Epodon, II, 1).
Page me39.465
†c Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.466
†a K. Marx, 'The War. — Debate in Parliament'.
Page me39.466
†b F. Engels, 'The War on the Danube'.
Page me39.467
†a F. Engels, 'The War on the Danube'.
Page me39.467
†b K. Marx, 'The Details of the Insurrection at Madrid. — The Austro-Prussian Summons. — The New Austrian Loan. — Wallachia'.
Page me39.467
†c 11 July
Page me39.468
†a Meanwhile
Page me39.468
†b Buckup
Page me39.469
†a See this volume, p. 468
Page me39.469
†b Dr Freund. (Freund in German — friend.)
Page me39.469
†c Heine, 'Lyrisches Intermezzo', 39.
Page me39.469
†d What do you think of Spain?
Page me39.470
†a Should be Calugereni.
Page me39.470
†b 'Prussia. From our own correspondent', The Morning Chronicle, No. 27321, 21 July 1854.
Page me39.471

†a in actual fact
Page me39.471
†b 25 July
Page me39.471
†c See this volume, p. 466.
Page me39.472
†a I expect [something from] you
Page me39.472
†b Lord John Russell
Page me39.472
†c alas
Page me39.472
†d a jewel
Page me39.472
†e from morning to night and night to morning
Page me39.472
†f 22 July
Page me39.472
†g A reference to the third, fourth and fifth articles from Marx's Lord Palmerston which were published as two separate pamphlets.
Page me39.473
†a K. Marx, 'The Documents on the Partition of Turkey' and 'The Secret Diplomatic Correspondence'.
Page me39.473
†b K. Marx, Lord Palmerston, first and second articles (entitled 'Palmerston' in the New-York Daily Tribune).
Page me39.473
†c the father
Page me39.473
†d Third Estate
Page me39.474
†a 'These that call themselves the Estates of the realm are of three orders of persons, that of the clergy, of the nobility, and of the rest of those persons who, in common parlance, may be called the people.'
Page me39.474
†b 'roots in history ... of an antagonism born yesterday'
Page me39.474
†c the Senate and Roman people
Page me39.474
†d guilds, corporations
Page me39.475
†a communes, secret associations, sworn confederacies
Page me39.475
†b municipal councils
Page me39.475
†c The original has 'in comitatibus ipsis degentes' instead of 'ex'.

Page me39.475

†d 'It has recently been brought to our notice that the guilds of certain cities, market towns and other places have, of their own accord, constituted tribunals, authorities (the Podesta), consulates, administrations and certain other institutions of this kind ... and because, among certain of them ... such things have already developed into abuses and malpractices ... we hereby, in virtue of our imperial power, and by our sure knowledge, revoke these tribunals, etc., and also the concessions in regard to them obtained through the Counts of Provence and Forcalquier and declare them null and void.'

Page me39.475

†e 'We likewise prohibit conventions and sworn confederacies of whatever kind within the cities and without ... between city and city or between person and person or between city and person.' (Peace Charter of Frederick I.)

Page me39.475

†f 'That no city and no market town may organise communes, constitutions, unions, leagues or sworn confederacies of any kind, by whatever name they may be referred to, and that, without the assent of their lord, we neither can nor should allow the cities and market towns in our Empire the right to establish communes, constitutions ... sworn confederacies of any kind, whatever names may be conferred on them.' (Decree of King Henry against city communes.)

Page me39.475

†g stiff

Page me39.475

†h sworn commune

Page me39.476

†a 'The commune of the citizens of Trier, which is also called sworn confederacy and which we have abolished in the city ... and which as we have heard was later set up anew, shall also be dissolved and declared null and void'.

Page me39.476

†b kings

Page me39.476

†c 'According to the information which has reached our Highness, the King of France ... is seeking to corrupt the sincerity of your loyalty.' (Rudolph I, Letter to the citizens of Besançon.)

Page me39.476

†d 'Commune, a new and thoroughly bad appellation'.

Page me39.476

†e 'They' (the burghers of St Quentin) 'have jointly sworn each to give common aid to his confederate and to share with him common counsel and common responsibility and common defence. We have jointly determined that whoever shall enter our commune and give us his aid, either by reason of flight or for fear of his enemies or for some other offence ... shall be allowed into the commune, for the gate is open to all; and if his lord had unjustly withheld his chattels and does not wish to detain him lawfully, we shall see that justice is done.'

Footnote Page Break 477

Page me39.477
†a F. Engels, 'The Attack on the Russian Forts'.
Page me39.477
†b K. Marx, 'Evacuation of the Danubian Principalities. — The Events in Spain. — A New Danish Constitution. — The Chartists'.
Page me39.477
†c penniless
Page me39.477
†d It is hard.
Page me39.478
†a 23 August
Page me39.478
†b At last!
Page me39.478
†c intact
Page me39.478
†d What do you think of that?
Page me39.479
†a Always the same.
Page me39.479
†b Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.479
†c All yours
Page me39.479
†d So much the better for him.
Page me39.480
†a Marx presumably refers to the item 'Foreign Intelligence. Wednesday evening', The Times, No. 21829, 25 August 1854.
Page me39.480
†b See this volume, p. 447.
Page me39.480
†c of the British Museum
Page me39.480
†d between ourselves
Page me39.480
†e It's absurd.
Page me39.480
†f Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.481
†a floating debt
Page me39.481
†b At this moment.
Page me39.482
†a 'The Battles of Bayazid and Kuruk-Dere', The Morning Chronicle, No. 27365, 7 September 1854, also reproduced in The Observer on 10 September.
Page me39.482

†b 'Down with the monkeys! We want Lamoriciére!' 'Singes' also means 'bosses'.
Page me39.482
†c isn't worth discussing
Page me39.483
†a I expect [something from] you
Page me39.483
†b Poor devil.
Page me39.484
†a November in the original.
Page me39.484
†b First, my congratulations
Page me39.484
†c F. Engels, 'The Battle of the Alma'.
Page me39.484
†d feat of arms
Page me39.484
†e As for our good
Page me39.484
†f Never twice on the same subject.
Page me39.485
†a [F. Pulszky,] An article dated 7 September 1854 and published in the section 'The State of Europe' of the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4190, 22 September 1854.
Page me39.485
†b K. Marx, 'Espartero'.
Page me39.485
†c See K. Marx, 'The Spanish Revolution. — Greece and Turkey', 'Evacuation of the Danubian Principalities. — The Events in Spain. — A New Danish Constitution. — The Chartists', 'Evacuation of Moldavia and Wallachia. — Poland. — Demands of the Spanish People'.
Page me39.485
†d Ernestine Landolt
Page me39.486
†a 'The Incorporated Society of Licensed Victuallers', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19749, 7 October 1854.
Page me39.486
†b Presumably B. Bauer's De la dictature occidentale.
Page me39.486
†c 13 October
Page me39.487
†a F. Engels, 'The Military Power of Russia'.
Page me39.488
†a An allusion to Marshal Soubise's liaison with Jeanne Antoinette Pompadour.
Page me39.488
†b 'After the affair of 24 June, the English Ministers wrote to M. de Choiseul: You are permitting yourselves to be beaten and we can no longer make peace; we would not dare propose it to Parliament. M. de Choiseul, distressed at seeing negotiations broken off, urged the King to write to M. de Soubise: “Dear Cousin, I am writing to you so that, immediately on receipt of this letter, you should cross the River Fulda and attack the enemy without heed for such dispositions as you might think fit and, whatever the result, you will not be held responsible. As to which, I pray God, etc.” M. de Choiseul wrote: “The King's letter, M. le Maréchal, is too explicit for me to have to add anything. But I can tell you that, should the King's Army be destroyed down to the last man and His Majesty be obliged to raise a new one, he would not be dismayed at it”.'

Page me39.489

†a extracts

Page me39.489

†b In 1762 Messieurs d'Estrées and de Soubise were in command of the Army of the Upper Rhine numbering 150,000 men, stationed in Hesse, at Göttingen, Mülhausen and Eisenach; M. de Condé commanded that of the Lower Rhine, numbering 30,000 men. All that the Court asked of them was to hold Cassel and Göttingen until the end of November, to evacuate those two places at that time and withdraw to the Ohm, having Ziegenhayn before their front line. Even assuming equal strengths, let alone 180,000 against 80,000, this plan of campaign would have been extraordinary had it not been based on a promise made to us by the English Ministry to conclude peace before the month of July, provided that we made no incursions into Hanover.'

Page me39.489

†c Philip Francis

Page me39.489

†d as always

Page me39.489

†e Robert Adair

Page me39.490

†a Presumably De la dictature occidentale (see previous letter).

Page me39.490

†b W.F.P. Napier, History of the War in the Peninsula and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to the Year 1814.

Page me39.490

†c Espoz y Mina

Page me39.490

†d above all a thief

Page me39.491

†a 27 October. Engels wrote 'The Siege of Sevastopol' later, on 30 October.

Page me39.491

†b Farewell.

Page me39.492

†a Alexander I

Page me39.492

†b Vanitas vanitatum et omnia vanitas — vanity of vanities, Ecclesiastes 1:2.

Page me39.492

†c breeds gold

Page me39.492

†d in reality

Page me39.492
†e Don Quixote
Page me39.493
†a at first
Page me39.493
†b 'I do not deny having been the principal author of the war in Spain.' 'Mr. de Villéle did not want hostilities.'
Page me39.493
†c 'We have not made up our minds to declare war on Spain... H.M.'s plenipotentiaries must above all avoid presenting themselves to the Congress as experts on Spanish affairs. The other powers may know as much about them as we do... Such a role may have befitted Austria at the Congress of Laibach because she was willing to invade Naples.'
Page me39.493
†d present
Page me39.493
†e experts on Spanish affairs
Page me39.493
†f 'Their aim must be to ensure that the Spanish question is considered in its general relationship to Europe'
Page me39.493
†g 'The opinion of our plenipotentiaries on the question of what it behoves the Congress to do in regard to Spain shall be that France, being the sole power having to engage its troops, shall also be sole judge of that necessity.'
Page me39.493
†h 'It is to the nature of this moral co-operation' (of the other powers) 'and to the measures calculated to assure her the material aid which may subsequently be demanded, that France deems it necessary finally to draw the attention of her august allies.'
Page me39.494
†a 'The powers are very strongly in favour of war in Spain.'
Page me39.494
†b 'The last dispatches from M. de Lagarde prove how easy success would be.'
Page me39.494
†c 'Not only did the Congress not urge France to go to war, but Prussia and, above all, Austria' (he comments: 'Prince Metternich, pretending to be Russian while detesting Russia') 'were much opposed to it; Russia alone was in favour and promised her moral support and her material support.'
Page me39.494
'We tell the Prime Minister that the powers were strongly in favour of war; that it is not a question of occupying the Peninsula; that it is only a question of a quick move; we point to an easy success; and yet we knew that the Congress of Verona did not want war; we feared that our move would carry us far beyond the Ebro; we thought that we should have to occupy Spain for a long time to make a good job of it, but in order to achieve our aim, we did not reveal all and secretly told each other: “Once the Bidassoa has been crossed, the Prime Minister etc. will be forced to go ahead.”'
Page me39.495

†a 'The Emperor continues to hope that moderation will prevail in the councils of the English government.' If not etc., 'he would regard an attack directed against France as a general attack upon all the allies and would accept without hesitation the consequences of that principle... The Emperor exhorts the King to implement his own' (!) 'decisions and to march confidently against the trouble-makers and mischief-makers. Acting in this spirit, the Emperor recalls the question raised at the Congress relating to the mustering of a Russian army on the western borders of the Empire as a means of ensuring the security of Europe.

Page me39.495

†b Assuming a reverse in Spain, we would have had revolution in France, and not all the Cossacks in the world would have saved us.'

Page me39.495

†c 'We have staked the fate of the French monarchy in order to wage war.'

Page me39.495

†d without victuals and without means of transport

Page me39.495

†e moral support

Page me39.495

†f so stupid

Page me39.495

†g 'Russia has no ambassador in Constantinople'

Page me39.496

†a 'Above all we had to foresee that England might intervene and range herself against us and alongside Spain.'

Page me39.496

†b 'If it is war, it is war with England.' 'A war which might become a European one if complicated by war in the East and an attack upon the Spanish colonies by the English.'

Page me39.496

†c 'There can be no doubt that our unexpected' (!) 'triumph gave him some cause for jealousy, for he had secretly flattered himself that we would be compelled to have recourse to him.'

Page me39.496

†d 'Louis XVIII's' having 'refused, on religious grounds and for some offensive reason, to sanction the marriage between the Duke of Berry and Alexander's sister'

Page me39.496

†e 'suddenly asked the allies whether it would not be advisable to make the Duke of Orleans King of France, once Napoleon had been defeated for the last time!'

Page me39.496

†f great poetic soul

Page me39.497

†a We venture to say that Alexander has become our friend.' 'Alexander is the only prince for whom we have ever felt a sincere attachment.' 'Louis XVIII detested us.'

Page me39.497

†b Henry IV's grandson

Page me39.497

†c intimate friend
Page me39.497
†d philistines
Page me39.497
†e great men
Page me39.497
†f F. Engels, 'The Campaign in the Crimea'.
Page me39.497
†g 14 or 17 November
Page me39.498
†a See this volume, p. 490.
Page me39.498
†b 24 November
Page me39.499
†a to the greater glory
Page me39.499
†b as a body
Page me39.499
†c But as great minds think alike
Page me39.499
†d police informer
Page me39.499
†e Fop, possibly ironical for Amand Goegg.
Page me39.500
†a See this volume, p. 498.
Page me39.500
†b F. Engels, 'The Battle of Inkermann'.
Page me39.500
†c this good friend
Page me39.500
†d the crucial point
Page me39.501
†a more or less
Page me39.501
†b Dr Freund
Page me39.502
†a That's the proposal.
Page me39.502
†b Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act III, Scene 1.
Page me39.502
†c 'Welcome and Protest Committee for the Reception of Barbés in London. Fraternisation of the French Democracy in London', The People's Paper, No. 135, 2 December 1854.
Page me39.503
†a 'The British Democrats. — Louis Napoleon', The Leader, No. 243, 18 November 1854.

Page me39.504
†a Farewell.
Page me39.504
†b Title character of a satirical poem by Heine on Venedey published in Vermischte Schriften.
Page me39.505
†a F. Engels, 'The Military Power of Austria'.
Page me39.505
†b Presumably, G. Diezel, Russland, Deutschland und die östliche Frage.
Page me39.505
†c A. Bode ('Rhode' in the original), 'Notizen, gesammelt auf einer Forstreise durch einen Theil des Europäischen Russlands', Beiträge zur Kenntniss des Russischen Reiches und der angränzenden Länder Asiens.
Page me39.505
†d Engels' part of the article 'Progress of the War' written jointly with Marx.
Page me39.505
†e 'The Inquest', The Times, No. 21925, 15 December 1854.
Page me39.506
†a the Library of the British Museum
Page me39.506
†b R.S. Ripley, The War with Mexico, in two volumes.
Page me39.506
†c W.F.P. Napier, History of the War in the Peninsula and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to the Year 1814, vols. I-VI.
Page me39.507
†a Rheinische Zeitung
Page me39.508
†a K. Marx, 'The Commerical Crisis in Britain', I and II.
Page me39.508
†b 16 and 19 January
Page me39.508
†c some subject or other
Page me39.508
†d to come
Page me39.509
†a Eleanor
Page me39.509
†b Ferdinand Wolff, also referred to below as Lupus Rufus meaning in Latin 'red wolf'
Page me39.509
†c 'Ein Beitrag zur Charakteristik der Engländer', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 9, 9 January 1855.
Page me39.509
†d A comparison with the German journalist Venedey lampooned by Heine in his poem 'Kobes I' in 1854.
Page me39.509

†e Heine, 'Retrospektive Aufklärung', August 1854 (Vermischte Schriften, Bd. 3. Th. 2, S. 144).
Page me39.509
†f [Report from Paris of 22 April,] Allgemeine Zeiting, No. 119, 28 April 1848, supplement.
Page me39.509
†g 19 January
Page me39.510
†a i.e. 'Die Assisenverhandlung gegen Barthélemy', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 9, 9 January 1855, supplement.
Page me39.511
†a Eleanor
Page me39.511
†b my dear fellow
Page me39.511
†c at bottom
Page me39.511
†d But no matter
Page me39.513
†a 1847
Page me39.513
†b K. Marx, 'Speech on the Question of Free Trade'.
Page me39.514
†a The end of the letter has not been preserved.
Page me39.514
†b 25 January
Page me39.515
†a i.e. 'From Parliament. — From the Theatre of War' for the Neue Oder-Zeitung.
Page me39.515
†b Eleanor
Page me39.515
†c All yours
Page me39.516
†a 1852
Page me39.516
†b The Times, No. 21316, 4 January 1853, leader.
Page me39.516
†c The Times, No. 21349, 11 February 1853, leader.
Page me39.516
†d B. Disraeli, [Speech in the House of Commons on 18 February 1853,] The Times, No. 21356, 19 February 1853.
Page me39.516
†e Keogh, Sadleir, Monsell
Page me39.516
†f G. Aberdeen, [Letter to Mr Monsell of 3 June 1853,] The Times, No. 21447, 6 June 1853.

Page me39.517
†a An allusion to Disraeli. The original has 'Israelite'.
Page me39.517
†b miscellany
Page me39.517
†c See K. Marx, 'Soap for the People, a Sop for The Times. — The Coalition Budget', 'Turkey and Russia. — Connivance of the Aberdeen Ministry with Russia. — The Budget. — Tax on Newspaper Supplements. — Parliamentary Corruption'.
Page me39.517
†d J. Napier, [Speech in the House of Commons on 22 November 1852,] The Times, No. 21280, 23 November 1852.
Page me39.518
†a G. Aberdeen, [Speech in the House of Lords on 9 August 1853,] The Times, No. 21503, 10 August 1853.
Page me39.518
†b Gladstone, [Speech in the House of Commons on 8 April 1853,] The Times, No. 21398, 9 April 1853.
Page me39.518
†c Palmerston, [Speech in the House of Commons on 20 August 1853,] The Times, No. 21513, 22 August 1853.
Page me39.518
†d basically
Page me39.518
†e Council
Page me39.519
†a Palmerston, [Speech in the House of Commons on 6 February 1854,] The Times, No. 21658, 7 February 1854.
Page me39.519
†b Russell, [Speeches in the House of Commons on 13 February and 11 April 1854,] The Times, Nos. 21664 and 21713, 14 February and 12 April 1854.
Page me39.519
†c Gladstone, [Speech in the House of Commons on 6 March 1854,] The Times, No. 21682, 7 March 1854.
Page me39.519
†d Nicholas I
Page me39.519
†e Sir G.H. Seymour to Lord J. Russell. St. Petersburg, 11 January 1853, The Times, No. 21693, 20 March 1854.
Page me39.519
†f Grey, [Speech in the House of Lords on 7 April 1854,] The Times, No. 22720, 8 April 1854.
Page me39.519
†g The Office of the Secretary of State for War and Colonies was divided into the War Office and the Colonial Office in 1854. The Office of the Secretary of State at War was abolished. The term 'ministry', though used by Marx, was unusual in English in this context.

Page me39.520
†a J. Bright, [Speech in the House of Commons on 29 May 1854,] The Times, No. 21754, 30 May 1854.
Page me39.520
†b H. Newcastle [Speech in the House of Lords on 1 February 1855,] The Times, No. 21967, 2 February 1855.
Page me39.521
†a Eleanor
Page me39.521
†b philistines (see this volume, p. 502)
Page me39.521
†c dregs
Page me39.521
†d a charming fellow
Page me39.522
†a true democracy
Page me39.522
†b F. Engels, 'The Struggle in the Crimea'.
Page me39.522
†c Jenny Marx
Page me39.522
†d See previous letter,
Page me39.522
†e publicly
Page me39.523
†a philistines
Page me39.523
†b A reference to 'The Alliance of the Peoples. The International Committee', The People's Paper, No. 145, 10 February 1855.
Page me39.523
†c faithful Achates (Virgil, Aeneid)
Page me39.524
†a I. Golovin, 'To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', in the section 'February Revolution', The Morning Advertiser, 13 February 1855.
Page me39.524
†b 'Express from Paris', The Morning Chronicle, No. 27499, 13 February 1855.
Page me39.524
†c nickname of Napoleon III given to him by Victor Hugo
Page me39.524
†d 6 March
Page me39.524
†e Edgar
Page me39.524
†f Eleanor
Page me39.525

†a 'Immense Demonstration in St. Martin's Hall', The People's Paper, No. 148, 3 March 1855.
Page me39.525
†b What do you say to the death of Nicholas?
Page me39.525
†c The Times, No. 21992, 3 March 1855, leader.
Page me39.525
†d Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.525
†e All yours
Page me39.526
†a Heinrich Georg von Westphalen
Page me39.526
†b Caroline von Westphalen
Page me39.526
†c Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me39.526
†d Frederick William IV
Page me39.526
†e Joseph Charles Paul Napoleon Bonaparte
Page me39.526
†f maker
Page me39.527
†a meaning Napoleon III
Page me39.527
†b G. Evans de Lacy, [Evidence given before the Committee of Inquiry into the Condition of the British Army in the Crimea,] The Times, Nos. 21994 and 21995, 6 and 7 March 1855.
Page me39.527
†c and that is the question
Page me39.527
†d i.e. 'Der Russe Herzen', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 63, 4 March 1855.
Page me39.527
†e Discours d'Alexandre Herzen, exilé russe, prononcé au meeting tenu le 27 février 1855 dans St. Martin's Hall, á Londres, en commemoration des grands mouvements révolutionnaires de 1848 [s. l., s. a.], published on the Island of Jersey; L'Homme, No. 14, 7 March 1855.
Page me39.528
†a Oxford
Page me39.529
†a Good-bye and farewell.
Page me39.529
†b All yours
Page me39.529
†c on Edgar Marx's condition
Page me39.530

†a All yours
Page me39.530
†b 3 April
Page me39.533
†a 18 April
Page me39.533
†b See previous letter.
Page me39.534
†a [E. Dronke,] 'Der Besuch', Neue Oder-Zeitung, No. 183, 20 April 1855.
Page me39.534
†b F. Engels, 'Germany and Pan-Slavism'.
Page me39.535
†a Bruno Bauer (see also Note 535)
Page me39.535
†b Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' geographischer Anstalt über wichtige neue Erforschungen auf dem Gesammtgebiete der Geographie, edited by A. Petermann.
Page me39.535
†c C. Decker, Der kleine Krieg, im Geiste der neueren Kriegführung, Oder: Abhandlung über die Verwendung und den Gebrauch aller drei Waffen im kleinen Kriege.
Page me39.536
†a i.e. E. Jones, 'Political Felony. Infamous Chicanery and Fraud of the Administrative Reform Association', The People's Paper, No. 158, 12 May 1855.
Page me39.536
†b See this volume, pp. 407-08, 432, 455 and 473.
Page me39.536
†c Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets, London, 1855, p. 1.
Page me39.536
†d March in the original.
Page me39.536
†e 22 May
Page me39.537
†a 'Großbritannien. London, 6 Mai', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 130, 10 May 1855.
Page me39.537
†b Polyarnaya zvezda
Page me39.537
†c F. Engels, 'Napoleon's War Plans'.
Page me39.537
†d Putnam's Monthly
Page me39.537
†e by Engels' article 'Napoleon's War Plans'
Page me39.538
†a Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' geographischer Anstalt...
Page me39.538
†b B. Bauer, Die russische Kirche, Charlottenburg, 1855.
Page me39.538

†c 22 June
Page me39.538
†d 19 June
Page me39.538
†e K. Marx, 'Eccentricities of Politics'.
Page me39.538
†f A reference to F. Knesebeck's Denkschrift, betreffend die Gleichgewichts-Lage Europa's, beim zusammentritte des Wiener Congresses verfaßt..., pp. 13-14.
Page me39.538
†g 29 June
Page me39.539
†a Non multa, sed multum (not many, but much)
Page me39.541
†a Francis I
Page me39.541
†b Ferdinand II
Page me39.541
†c Edgar (see this volume, p. 530)
Page me39.541
†d Jenny and Laura
Page me39.541
†e an allusion to the Scottish origin of the Westphalens; see also p. 526.
Page me39.542
†a 20 July
Page me39.542
†b On Marx's request Engels wrote 'War Prospects'.
Page me39.542
†c Edgar von Westphalen
Page me39.542
†d Conrad Schramm
Page me39.542
†e Abraham Jacobi
Page me39.543
†a See this volume, pp. 526 and 541.
Page me39.543
†b Franz von Florencourt
Page me39.543
†c life and doings
Page me39.543
†d The letter is written in Camberwell near London but datelined London.
Page me39.543
†e Peter Imandt (see previous letter)
Page me39.544
†a Edgar
Page me39.544
†b F. Engels, 'The Armies of Europe'.

Page me39.545
†a Pöckel (see this volume, p. 542)
Page me39.545
†b Marx quotes from his Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 195).
Page me39.545
†c Should be: Denmark street (see this volume, pp. 547 and 550).
Page me39.546
†a See this volume, p. 526.
Page me39.546
†b F. Engels, 'The Battle of the Chernaya'.
Page me39.546
†c F. Engels, 'The Armies of Europe', Second Article.
Page me39.546
†d Dana to Marx, 7 August 1855. Dana's second letter has not been found.
Page me39.546
†e A. Pélissier, [Report on the Battle of the Chernaya. 18 August 1855,] The Times, No. 22146, 30 August 1855.
Page me39.547
†a The Times, No. 22148, 1 September 1855.
Page me39.547
†b Kölnische Zeitung, 30 August 1855.
Page me39.547
†c See this volume, pp. 548-49.
Page me39.548
†a Putnam's Monthly for August 1855, containing the first article in Engels' series 'The Armies of Europe', which is referred to here.
Page me39.548
†b See this volume, p. 546.
Page me39.548
†c chief editor
Page me39.548
†d Farewell.
Page me39.548
†e See this volume, pp. 544-45.
Page me39.549
†a Edgar
Page me39.550
†a F. Engels, 'The Fall of Sevastopol'.
Page me39.550
†b The letter is written in Camberwell but datelined London.
Page me39.554
†a Wilhelm Wolff
Page me39.554
†b What's that to me?
Page me39.555

†a 'This fellow will go' (paraphrase of the eighteenth-century French revolutionary song Ça ira!).
Page me39.555
†b [G. Rouland,] Discours de M. le Procureur Général, Journal des débats politiques et littéraires, 5 November 1855.
Page me39.555
†c 'On the terrors of the future revolution'.
Page me39.555
†d 'Those whom...' (cf. Virgil, Aeneid, I, 135).
Page me39.555
†e Kinkel's wife
Page me39.555
†f and all the rest
Page me39.556
†a at bottom
Page me39.556
†b stockbrokers
Page me39.556
†c Words of Leporello in Mozart's Don Giovanni, Act I (libretto by Lorenzo da Ponte).
Page me39.557
†a Presumably concerning Mrs Marx's inheritance (see this volume, p. 526).
Page me39.557
†b See next letter.
Page me39.558
†a 'To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser' signed 'One who had been deceived', The Morning Advertiser, 29 November 1855.
Page me39.558
†b A. Herzen, 'My Exile in Siberia. To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser', The Morning Advertiser, 1 December 1855.
Page me39.558
†c A. Herzen, 'To the Editor of the Globe', The Globe and Traveller, 25 October 1855.
Page me39.558
†d 'Mr Herzen's Case' (letter signed 'deceived'), The Morning Advertiser, 6 December 1855.
Page me39.558
†e [E. Reeve,] 'To the Editor of The Morning Advertiser' signed 'Content and not deceived', ibid.
Page me39.558
†f Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, V, 2.
Page me39.558
†g An Editors' Statement was published in The Morning Advertiser on 6 December 1855.
Page me39.558
†h Caroline Schöler

Page me39.558
†i K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.559
†a young
Page me39.559
†b from F. Schiller, Die Bürgschaft
Page me39.559
†c It's enough to make you split your sides with laughter.
Page me39.559
†d See this volume, p. 560.
Page me39.560
†a 14 December
Page me39.560
†b that makes
Page me39.560
†c At bottom
Page me39.560
†d he's no longer any concern of mine
Page me39.561
†a Joseph Meyer
Page me39.561
†b Emil Blank
Page me39.561
†c Ernst Dronke
Page me39.561
†d See this volume, p. 559.
Page me39.561
†e 18 December
Page me39.561
†f In the original Engels wrote arbeiten (to work) above zahlen (to pay).
Page me39.561
†g Jeremiah Garnett
Page me39.561
†h Afterwards we shall see.
Page me39.562
†a Small town in Brandenburg symbolising provincialism.
Page me39.562
†b Pun on Bauer — a peasant and Bauer the name of Edgar.
Page me39.563
†a Jacob Grimm
Page me39.563
†b Publication of the Deutsches Wörterbuch was started by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm in 1852, and completed in 1961 in the GDR.
Page me39.563
†c without money
Page me39.564

†a The Times, No. 22237, 14 December 1855, leader.
Page me39.567
†a This date is established on the basis of Engels' letter to Marx of 6 January 1852 (see this volume, pp. 4-5). When Engels was putting his archives in order he dated it 'Beginning of January 1852'.
Page me39.567
†b A humorous reference to Engels.
Page me39.567
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me39.567
†d Lüders
Page me39.568
†a Johanna Kinkel
Page me39.568
†b living sculpture
Page me39.568
†c Louis Bonaparte (called after a character in Heine's 'Zwei Ritter')
Page me39.569
†a Marx's nickname
Page me39.569
†b K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, II.
Page me39.570
†a Die Revolution
Page me39.570
†b Communist League members arrested and detained under investigation in Cologne
Page me39.570
†c Hermann Becker
Page me39.570
†d Westdeutsche Zeitung. See also this volume, pp. 21-22 and 34.
Page me39.570
†e Louise
Page me39.571
†a Ferdinand Wolff
Page me39.571
†b acting
Page me39.571
†c F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', II.
Page me39.572
†a See this volume, p. 26.
Page me39.572
†b Bangya. See also p. 32.
Page me39.572
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, I-V.
Page me39.573
†a See this volume, p. 213.

Page me39.573
†b ibid., p. 92.
Page me39.574
†a Arnold Ruge
Page me39.574
†b See this volume, pp. 145-46.
Page me39.574
†c Editorial Statement about A. Brüningk's letter in the Baltimore Wecker, 27 September 1852. See also this volume, p. 204.
Page me39.575
†a Heinrich Guido
Page me39.575
†b [A. Cluss, Articles on Presidential Elections in the USA published in the section,] 'Our American Correspondence', The People's Paper, Nos. 23 and 24, 9 and 16 October 1852.
Page me39.575
†c Caroline von Westphalen
Page me39.575
†d See this volume, p. 71.
Page me39.575
†e A reference to J. Huzel's article 'Über die Flüchtlinge in London', Anzeiger des Westens, September 1852.
Page me39.575
†f Hermann Becker
Page me39.575
†g See this volume, pp. 212 and 242.
Page me39.576
†a See this volume, pp. 223-24.
Page me39.577
†a outside society
Page me39.577
†b London in the original
Page me39.577
†c See this volume, pp. 225-26.
Page me39.577
†d ibid., pp. 223-24.
Page me39.578
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press'.
Page me39.578
†b The New-York Daily Tribune did not publish this statement. Its German translation was printed in the New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 37, 26 November 1852 and the Republik der Arbeiter, No. 49, 4 December 1852.
Page me39.578
†c A. Cluss, 'Die materielle Kritik und der moralisierende Standpunkt', Turn-Zeitung, No. 13, 1 October 1852.
Page me39.578

†d In the original there follows a copy made by Wilhelm Wolff of the statement mentioned above.
Page me39.578
†e Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me39.579
†a Heinrich Marx
Page me39.579
†b Probably Marx's and Engels' 'British Politics. — Disraeli. — The Refugees. — Mazzini in London. — Turkey'.
Page me39.579
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me39.579
†d See also this volume, p. 287.
Page me39.580
†a Wermuth/Stieber, Die Communisten-Verschwörungen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts.
Page me39.580
†b safe and sound
Page me39.580
†c at once
Page me39.580
†d at all costs
Page me39.580
†e Hermann Becker
Page me39.581
†a Henriette Marx
Page me39.581
†b probably Anna Elisabeth Franziska von Westphalen
Page me39.582
†a in full committee
Page me39.582
†b rascal
Page me39.582
†c probably Max Joseph Becker
Page me39.582
†d Honour to whom honour is due.
Page me39.583
†a J. Weydemeyer, 'Nationalökonomische Skizzen'.
Page me39.583
†b J. Weydemeyer, 'Der “demokratische” Mouchard'.
Page me39.583
†c W. Hirsch, 'Erklärung' [of 12 January 1852], Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 7, 29 April 1853.
Page me39.583
†d Gottlieb Kellner and Heinrich Heise
Page me39.583

†e probably Wilhelm Karl Rothschild
Page me39.583
†f presently
Page me39.583
†g On the Tribune editors' tampering with Marx's and Engels' articles see also this volume, pp. 331-32.
Page me39.584
†a Ferdinand Wolff
Page me39.584
†b C. Franceson, Grammatik der spanischen Sprache. See this volume, p. 364.
Page me39.585
†a Wilhelm Wolff (a pun: Isegrim — a wolf, character in Goethe's 'Reineke Fuchs').
Page me39.585
†b See this volume, pp. 579-80.
Page me39.585
†c ibid., p. 365.
Page me39.585
†d K. Marx, 'The Vienna Note. — The United States and Europe. — Letters from Shumla. — Peel's Bank Act'.
Page me39.586
†a See this volume, p. 398
Page me39.586
†b A. Willich, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”'.
Page me39.586
†c 'Lord Palmerston', IV published in the New-York Daily Tribune under the title 'England and Russia'.
Page me39.586
†d 'Der Staat Wiskonsin' by Cluss was published in Die Reform, No. 109, 15 December 1853.
Page me39.587
†a See this volume, pp. 399 and 400-01.
Page me39.587
†b K. Marx, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me39.587
†c J. Weydemeyer, A. Cluss, A. Jacobi, 'An die Redaktion der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung', see also this volume, p. 402.
Page me39.587
†d An allusion to petty-bourgeois refugees, using names of characters in Heine's satirical poem 'Zwei Ritter'. See also this volume, p. 401.
Page me39.587
†e lamps with reflectors
Page me39.588
†a See this volume, pp. 414-17.
Page me39.588
†b waste paper

Page me39.588
†c Probably E. Wiß, 'Die elementaren Richtungen der Zeit', see also this volume, p. 449.
Page me39.589
†a 16 May. Engels wrote 'A Famous Victory' on 15 May.
Page me39.589
†b Ernst Dronke
Page me39.589
†c F. Engels, 'The War'.
Page me39.589
†d That's Frederic.
Page me39.590
†a 26 May. Engels wrote 'The Present Condition of the English Army — Tactics, Uniform, Commissariat, etc.' on 25 May.
Page me39.590
†b Probably Cluss' letter to Marx of 30 April 1854.
Page me39.590
†c gentle commerce
Page me39.590
†d Jenny, Laura and Edgar
Page me39.590
†e Edgar von Westphalen
Page me39.763
†a This glossary includes geographical names occurring in Marx's and Engels' letters in the form customary in the press of the time but differing from the national names or from those given on modern maps. The left column gives geographical names as used in the original; the right column gives corresponding names as used on modern maps and in modern literature.

VOLUME 40

Page Break me40.ii
Page me40.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me40.iii

FRONTMATTER
Titlepage

Page me40.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume 40

MARX AND ENGELS: 1856-59

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me40.iv

Copyright page

Page me40.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:

GREAT BRITAIN: E.J. Hobsbawm, John Hoffman, Nicholas Jacobs, Monty Johnstone, Martin Milligan, Jeff Skelley, Ernst Wangermann.
USA: Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, James E. Jackson, Leonard B. Levenson, Betty Smith, Dirk J. Struik, William W. Weinstone.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — A.K. Avelichev, N.P. Karmanova, V.N. Sedikh, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, A.G. Yegorov.

Page me40.iv
Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1983

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Page me40.iv
Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.

Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX39.5.A 16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0540-9 (v. 40)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me40.v

Contents

Page me40.v
PrefaceXVII

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
LETTERS

January 1856-December 1859

Page me40.v
1856

1. Marx to Engels. 18 January 3
2. Engels to Marx. 7 February 5
3. Marx to Engels. 12 February 8
4. Marx to Engels. 13 February 12
5. Marx to Engels. 29 February 15
6. Marx to Engels. 5 March 19
7. Engels to Marx. 7 March 26
8. Marx to Engels. 25 March 28
9. Marx to Engels. 10 April 30
10. Engels to Marx. 14 April 34
11. Engels to Wilhelm Steffen. 15 April 36
12. Marx to Engels. 16 April 37
13. Marx to Engels. 26 April 42
14. Marx to Engels. 7 May 43
15. Marx to Engels. 8 May 43
16. Marx to Engels. 23 May 45

17. Engels to Marx. 23 May 49
18. Engels to Marx. 26 May 51

Page Break me40.vi
19. Marx to Engels. 29 May 52
20. Marx to Engels. 5 June 53
21. Marx to Engels. 6 June 54
22. Marx to Jenny Marx. 21 June 54
23. Marx to Isaac Ironside. 21 June 57
24. Marx to William Cyples. 22 July 58
25. Marx to Engels. 28 July 59
26. Marx to Engels. 1 August 61
27. Engels to Marx. 4 August 64
28. Marx to Jenny Marx. 8 August 66
29. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 11 August 67
30. Marx to Engels. 22 September 67
31. Marx to Engels. 26 September 70
32. Engels to Marx. Not before 27 September 72
33. Marx to Engels. 16 October 74
34. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 23 October 76
35. Marx to Engels. 30 October 79
36. Marx to Engels. 30 October 80
37. Engels to Marx. 17 November 82
38. Marx to Engels. 2 December 85
39. Marx to Engels. 22 December 87

Page me40.vi
1857

40. Marx to Engels. 10 January 89
41. Marx to Engels. 14 January 92
42. Marx to Engels. 20 January 93
43. Engels to Marx. About 22 January 96
44. Marx to Engels. 23 January 97
45. Marx to Engels. 6 February 99
46. Marx to Engels. 16 February 100
47. Marx to Engels. 24 February 102
48. Engels to Ferdinand Freiligrath. Not later than 25 February 103
49. Engels to Marx. 11 March 103
50. Marx to Engels. 18 March 106
51. Engels to Marx. 20 March 109
52. Marx to Engels. 24 March 110
53. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 25 March 112
54. Marx to Engels. 31 March 113
55. Engels to Marx. 31 March 114

Page Break me40.vii
56. Engels to Marx. 2 April 117
57. Marx to Engels. 9 April 118
58. Engels to Jenny Marx. About 16 April 121
59. Marx to Engels. 21 April 122
60. Engels to Marx. 22 April 122
61. Marx to Engels. 23 April 125
62. Marx to Engels. 8 May 128
63. Engels to Marx. 11 May 129
64. Engels to Marx. 20 May 130
65. Marx to Engels. 22 May 132
66. Marx to Engels. 23 May 134
67. Engels to Marx. 28 May 135
68. Engels to Marx. 5 June 137
69. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. About 10 June 138
70. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. After 10 June 138
71. Marx to Engels. 15 June 139
72. Marx to Engels. 29 June 140
73. Marx to Engels. 3 July 140
74. Marx to Engels. 3 July 141
75. Marx to Engels. 6 July 141
76. Marx to Engels. 8 July 143
77. Engels to Marx. 11 July 143
78. Marx to Engels. 11 July 145
79. Marx to Engels. 14 July 145
80. Marx to Engels. 16 July 147
81. Marx to Engels. 24 July 148
82. Engels to Marx. 29 July 149
83. Marx to Engels. 9 August 150
84. Marx to Engels. 15 August 151
85. Engels to Marx. 21 August 153
86. Engels to Marx. 25 August 156
87. Marx to Engels. 26 August 158
88. Engels to Marx. 8 September 160
89. Engels to Marx. 10 September 162
90. Engels to Marx. 11 or 12 September 164
91. Marx to Engels. 15 September 168
92. Marx to Engels. 17 September 169
93. Engels to Marx. 18 September 171
94. Marx to Engels. 21 September 173

Page Break me40.viii
95. Engels to Marx. 21 September 174
96. Engels to Marx. 22 September 176
97. Marx to Engels. 23 September 181
98. Engels to Marx. 24 September 182

99. Marx to Engels. 25 September 186
100. Engels to Marx. 6 October 187
101. Engels to Marx. 19 October 190
102. Marx to Engels. 20 October 191
103. Engels to Marx. 29 October 195
104. Marx to Engels. 31 October 197
105. Marx to Engels. 13 November 199
106. Engels to Marx. 15 November 200
107. Engels to Marx. 16 November 204
108. Engels to Marx. 17 November 207
109. Marx to Engels. 24 November 208
110. Engels to Marx. 7 December 211
111. Marx to Engels. 8 December 214
112. Marx to Conrad Schramm. 8 December 217
113. Engels to Marx. 9 December 218
114. Engels to Marx. 11 December 220
115. Engels to Marx. 17 December 222
116. Marx to Engels. 18 December 224
117. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 21 December 225
118. Marx to Engels. 22 December 227
119. Marx to Engels. 25 December 228
120. Marx to Engels. 30 December 233
121. Engels to Marx. 31 December 233

Page me40.viii
1858

122. Marx to Engels. 1 January 237
123. Marx to Engels. 5 January 237
124. Engels to Marx. 6 January 239
125. Engels to Marx. 7 January 241
126. Marx to Engels. 7 January 242
127. Marx to Engels. 11 January 244
128. Engels to Marx. 14 January 247
129. Engels to Marx. 15 January 248
130. Marx to Engels. 16 January 248
131. Marx to Engels. 23 January 251

Page Break me40.ix
132. Engels to Marx. 25 January 252
133. Engels to Marx. 28 January 254
134. Marx to Engels. 28 January 254
135. Marx to Engels. 29 January 256
136. Engels to Marx. 30 January 257
137. Marx to Engels. 1 February 258
138. Engels to Marx. 8 February 261

139. Marx to Engels. 10 February 262
140. Engels to Marx. 11 February 263
141. Marx to Engels. 14 February 265
142. Engels to Marx. 18 February 267
143. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 22 February 268
144. Marx to Engels. 22 February 272
145. Engels to Marx. 24 February 274
146. Engels to Marx. 1 March 276
147. Marx to Engels. 2 March 277
148. Engels to Marx. 4 March 279
149. Marx to Engels. 5 March 282
150. Engels to Marx. 11 March 285
151. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 11 March 286
152. Marx to Engels. 15 March 288
153. Engels to Marx. 16 March 288
154. Engels to Marx. 17 March 289
155. Marx to Engels. 19 March 294
156. Engels to Marx. 26 March 294
157. Marx to Engels. 29 March 295
158. Marx to Engels. 2 April 296
159. Engels to Marx. 9 April 304
160. Engels to Jenny Marx. 14 April 307
161. Engels to Marx. 22 April 308
162. Marx to Engels. 29 April 309
163. Engels to Marx. 30 April 311
164. Marx to Engels. 1 May 312
165. Engels to Rudolf Schramm. 6 May 312
166. Engels to Jenny Marx. 11 May 313
167. Engels to Jenny and Laura Marx. 11 May 314
168. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 31 May 315
169. Marx to Engels. 31 May 317
170. Marx to Engels. 7 June 319

Page Break me40.x

171. Engels to Marx. 9 June 320
172. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 10 June 321
173. Marx to Engels. 2 July 323
174. Engels to Marx. 14 July 325
175. Marx to Engels. 15 July 328
176. Engels to Marx. 16 July 331
177. Marx to Engels. 20 July 333
178. Marx to Engels. 25 July 334
179. Marx to Engels. 8 August 335
180. Engels to Marx. 10 August 337
181. Marx to Engels. 13 August 338
182. Marx to Engels. 18 August 340

183. Marx to Engels. 21 September 341
184. Engels to Marx. 7 October 343
185. Marx to Engels. 8 October 345
186. Engels to Marx. 21 October 348
187. Marx to Engels. 22 October 350
188. Marx to Engels. 2 November 351
189. Marx to Engels. 10 November 352
190. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 12 November 353
191. Marx to Engels. 24 November 355
192. Marx to Engels. 29 November 357
193. Marx to Engels. 11 December 359
194. Marx to Engels. 16 December 361
195. Marx to Engels. 17 December 362
196. Marx to Engels. 22 December 364
197. Marx to Engels. 28 December 364
198. Marx to Engels. 30 December 365

Page me40.x
1859

199. Marx to Engels. 6 January 366
200. Marx to Engels. 8 January 367
201. Marx to Engels. Between 13 and 15 January 367
202. Marx to Engels. 21 January 369
203. Engels to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 25 January 370
204. Marx to Engels. 26 January 371
205. Engels to Marx. 27 January 372
206. Marx to Engels. 28 January 373
207. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 1 February 374

Page Break me40.xi

208. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 2 February 378
209. Marx to Engels. 2 February 379
210. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 4 February 380
211. Marx to Engels. 8 February 383
212. Marx to Engels. 9 February 384
213. Engels to Marx. 10 February 386
214. Engels to Marx. 14 February 386
215. Marx to Engels. 15 February 387
216. Marx to Engels. About 22 February 389
217. Marx to Engels. 22 February 390
218. Marx to Franz Duncker. 23 February 390
219. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 23 February 391
220. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 25 February 391
221. Marx to Engels. 25 February 393
222. Marx to Engels. 25 February 394

223. Marx to Engels. 3 March 398
224. Engels to Marx. 4 March 399
225. Marx to Engels. 10 March 400
226. Engels to Ferdinand Lassalle. 14 March402
227. Marx to Engels. 16 March 403
228. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 16 March 404
229. Marx to Franz Duncker. 17 March 405
230. Marx to Engels. 22 March 406
231. Marx to Engels. 25 March 407
232. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 28 March 407
233. Marx to Engels. 1 April 410
234. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 4 April 411
235. Marx to Engels. 9 April 412
236. Engels to Marx. 11 April 414
237. Marx to Engels. 12 April 414
238. Marx to Engels. 16 April 416
239. Marx to Engels. 19 April 417
240. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 19 April 418
241. Engels to Elisabeth Engels. 20 April 422
242. Marx to Engels. 22 April 425
243. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 5 May 429
244. Marx to Engels. 6 May 430
245. Marx to Max Friedladie;nder. 16 May 433
246. Marx to Engels. 16 May 433

Page Break me40.xii
247. Marx to Engels. 18 May 434
248. Engels to Ferdinand Lassalle. 18 May 441
249. Marx to Franz Duncker. 21 May446
Page me40.xii
250. Engels to Marx. 23 May 447
251. Marx to Engels. 24 May 448
252. Marx to Engels. 25 May 450
253. Marx to Engels. 27 May 451
254. Marx to Engels. 28 May 453
255. Marx to Franz Duncker. 28 May453
256. Marx to Franz Duncker. 30 May454
257. Marx to Engels. 1 June 455
258. Marx to Franz Duncker. 2 June 456
259. Marx to Engels. 7 June 457
260. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 10 June 459
261. Marx to Engels. 10 June 461
262. Marx to Franz Duncker. 22 June462
263. Marx to Engels. 14 July 463
264. Engels to Marx. 15 July 465
265. Marx to Engels. 18 July 466

266. Engels to Marx. 18 July 467
267. Marx to Engels. 19 July 469
268. Engels to Marx. 20 or 21 July 471
269. Marx to Engels. 22 July 472
270. Engels to Marx. 25 July 474
271. Marx to Engels. 1 August 476
272. Engels to Marx. 3 August 478
273. Marx to Engels. 8 August 479
274. Engels to Marx. 10 August 481
275. Marx to Engels. 13 August 482
276. Marx to Engels. 26 August 484
277. Marx to Engels. 5 September 485
278. Engels to Marx. 8 September 486
279. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 17 September 486
280. Marx to Engels. 21 September 489
281. Engels to Marx. 22 September 490
282. Marx to Engels. 23 September 491
283. Engels to Marx. Between 24 and 26 September 492
284. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 26 September 493
285. Marx to Engels. 27 September 495

Page Break me40.xiii
286. Marx to Engels. 28 September 496
287. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. Not before 2 October 497
288. Engels to Marx. 3 October 499
289. Marx to Engels. 5 October 501
290. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 8 October 504
291. Marx to Engels. 10 October 506
292. Marx to Engels. 26 October 508
293. Engels to Marx. 28 October 509
294. Engels to E.J. Faulkner. 2 November 510
295. Marx to Engels. 3 November 511
296. Engels to Marx. 4 November 514
297. Engels to Jenny Marx. 5 November 517
298. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 6 November 518
299. Marx to Engels. 7 November 523
300. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 14 November 524
301. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 15 November 526
302. Marx to Engels. 16 November 527
303. Engels to Emil Engels. 16 November 528
304. Marx to Engels. 17 November 529
305. Engels to Marx. 17 November 530
306. Marx to Engels. 19 November 532
307. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 22 November 536
308. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 23 November 539
309. Marx to Engels. 26 November 542

310. Engels to Marx. 28 November 544
311. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. About 30 November 546
312. Marx to Engels. 10 December 547
313. Engels to Marx. 11 or 12 December 550
314. Marx to Engels. 13 December 551
315. Engels to Marx. 19 December 553
316. Marx to Engels. 20 December 554
317. Engels to Jenny Marx. 22 December 555

Page me40.xiii
APPENDIX

1. Jenny Marx to Engels. 28 March 1856 561
2. Jenny Marx to Engels. About 12 April 1857 563
3. Jenny Marx to Engels. 31 July 1857 563
4. Jenny Marx to Engels. About 14 August 1857 565
5. Jenny Marx to Conrad Schramm. 8 December 1857 566

Page Break me40.xiv

6. Jenny Marx to Engels. 9 April 1858 569
7. Jenny Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 9 April 1858 570
8. Jenny Marx to Marx. About 9 May 1858 571
9. Jenny Marx to Engels. After 13 August 1859 572
10. Jenny Marx to Engels. 4 November 1859573
11. Jenny Marx to Engels. 23 or 24 December 1859 573

Page me40.xiv
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 579
Name Index 646
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 690
Index of Periodicals 723
Subject Index 731

Page me40.xiv
ILLUSTRATIONS

Frederick Engels. 1856. Manchester 6-7
The second and third pages of Marx's letter to Engels of 16 April 1856 39
The first page of Engels' letter to Marx of 23 May 1856 47
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London, where Marx lived from October 1856 to 1868 77
Chart of cotton prices from 1 January 1857 compiled by Engels 205
The reading-room of the British Museum, London, where Marx worked 245
The second page of Marx's letter to Engels of 2 April 1858 299

Jenny Marx, daughter of Karl Marx. Late 1850s-early 1860s 316-17
Chetham's Library in Manchester where Marx worked in the 1840s and Engels in the 1840s-60s. General view and part of the reading-room 468-69
Wilhelm Liebknecht, Conrad Schramm, Ferdinand Lassalle 488-89

Page Break me40.xv
Page me40.xv
Translated by PETER and BETTY ROSS

Page Break me40.xvi
Page Break me40.xvii

Preface

Page me40.xvii
Volume 40 of this edition contains the correspondence of Marx and Engels from 1856 to 1859. The latter half of the 1850s rounded off the period of political reaction that had set in in Europe after the Revolution of 1848-49. The first capitalist world economic crisis (1857-58) heralded a new rise of the democratic and working-class movements.
Page me40.xvii
During these years, Marx and Engels continued to develop their revolutionary teaching. They set out to arm the proletarian party, then in the process of formation, with the theory for the forthcoming battles. 'I hope to win a scientific victory for our party,' Marx wrote to his friend Joseph Weydemeyer on 1 February 1859 concerning the main goal he had set himself in his economic research (this volume, p. 377).
Page me40.xvii
The letters in this volume reflect the further development of Marxist theory, of its three component parts — political economy, philosophy and the theory of the communist transformation of society — and the advance of Marxist thought in various other fields. They give an idea of the progress Marx was making in his economic studies. In 1857, he began to collate and sum up the vast material on political economy he had accumulated over many years. In 1857 and 1858, he wrote a series of economic manuscripts which form the first rough draft of Capital. In these manuscripts Marx worked out the theory of money in general terms and outlined his theory of surplus value, which Engels called Marx's second great discovery, the first being the materialist conception of history. These two discoveries turned socialism into a science.
Page me40.xvii
The letters show what titanic labours these manuscripts cost him. The economic crisis, and the certainty that it would be followed by profound revolutionary upheavals, made him hasten the work in every way. 'I am working like mad all night and every night collating my economic studies so that I at least get the outlines clear before the déluge,' he wrote to Engels on 8 December 1857 (p. 217). The correspondence shows that Marx made very great demands on himself as a scholar. Grudging in his judgments of his own achievements, he wrote to Engels with satisfaction on 16 January 1858: 'I had been overdoing very much my nocturnal labours.... I am, by the way, discovering some nice arguments. E.g. I have completely demolished the theory of profit' (p. 249).

Page Break me40.xviii

Page me40.xviii

The Economic Manuscripts of 1857-58, also known as the Grundrisse der Kritik der Politischen Ökonomie (they will be found, together with A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Part One, 1859, in Vols. 29 and 30), testify that in his economic works too Marx was enriching other areas of social science, especially philosophy, and was also perfecting his method of research into social phenomena. Marx attached great importance to dialectics, reinterpreted in the materialist spirit on the basis of a critical understanding of Hegel's philosophy. Marx even had the intention, which he unfortunately never carried out, of writing a book on this subject. 'If ever the time comes when such work is again possible, I should very much like to write 2 or 3 sheets making accessible to the common reader the rational aspect of the method which Hegel not only discovered but also mystified' (p. 249).

Page me40.xviii

As Marx built up his new economic theory, he was also developing the structure of his future economic work. The letters give us an idea of the scope and comprehensive nature of the work he planned, which was to cover the economic foundations and political superstructure of the capitalist system. His letters to Ferdinand Lassalle of 22 February and to Engels of 2 April 1858, and also the letter to Joseph Weydemeyer of 1 February 1859, show that Marx intended to publish the work in six books: 1) On Capital, 2) On Landed Property, 3) On Wage Labour, 4) On the State, 5) International Trade, 6) World Market (p. 270). Even while the first book was being written, some changes had to be made in this plan. Marx was unable to fit in all the material, so he decided to divide it into two parts, the first on the commodity and money, the second specifically on capital (the production of surplus value, etc.).

Page me40.xviii

A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Part One, which came off the press on 11 June 1859, was a major event in the history of economic thought. Although, because of its limited range, the book could not include Marx's fundamental work on the theory of surplus value, it did contain the scientific prerequisites for it in the shape of a new theory of money and value. As can be seen from the letters, Marx considered it extremely important to popularise this work. The first successful attempt in this direction was undertaken by Engels, whose review is mentioned in the correspondence.

Page Break me40.xix

Page me40.xix

Marx began work on the second part shortly after sending the manuscript of the first to the publishers (Marx to Engels, 21 February 1859). However, he soon realised that he would need to do more research on a number of important aspects of surplus value and its transmuted forms (profit, interest and rent). The work dragged on and grew beyond the limits initially marked out for it. Furthermore, as the letters of 1859 show, Marx repeatedly had to break off in order to attend to urgent practical matters (the publication of the newspaper Das Volk, etc.). Subsequent letters give an idea of the further stages in his work.

Page me40.xix

Marx kept Engels constantly informed of the progress and results of his economic research. Engels readily helped him with advice, gave freely of the knowledge and experience he had acquired in long commercial practice, and supplied Marx with valuable material.
Page me40.xix

The correspondence published in this volume also gives some idea of Marx's and Engels' work in other fields of knowledge during this period, and of the variety and scope of their interests. They exchanged opinions on world history, the history of diplomacy, the history of various countries and peoples (among them Russia, Prussia and Poland), philology (especially in connection with Engels' study of the Slavonic languages), world literature, the natural sciences, and so on.
Page me40.xix

Prominent in Engels' work of the 1850s and early 1860s were studies in military history and the theory of warfare, for he was aware of the importance to proletarian revolutionaries of mastering military knowledge for the expected new outburst of revolutionary struggle. On 15 November 1857, Engels wrote to Marx that, should another revolution break out in Europe following the economic crisis, this would at once give 'a more practical slant' to his military studies (pp. 203-04).
Page me40.xix

Engels continued to publish reviews of current military events in periodicals, and also wrote a series of articles on the art of war and military history for The New American Cyclopaedia (see present edition, Vol. 18). The letters in this volume show that he did this in close cooperation with Marx. The two friends helped one another in finding sources and selecting material, and some of the articles for the Cyclopaedia were, in effect, written by them jointly. Besides doing all the articles on specifically military problems, Engels constantly helped Marx by handling the military questions in the articles that Marx wrote for the Cyclopaedia, especially in the biographical essays on military and political leaders (Barclay de Tolly, Bem, Blücher and others). Marx used some of Engels' letters (pp. 163-64, 166-68, 178-80) as preliminary drafts of articles. For his part, Marx looked up references for Engels in the British Museum Library and copied out extracts from various sources.

Page Break me40.xx
Page me40.xx

Engels' articles for The New American Cyclopaedia, especially on general subjects, such as 'Army', 'Artillery', 'Cavalry', 'Fortification' and 'Infantry', were an important contribution to Marxist military science. Marx believed that in them Engels had given further proof of the universal relevance of the materialist conception of history. 'Your “Army” is capital,' he wrote to Engels on 25 September 1857. 'More graphically than anything else the history of the army demonstrates the rightness of our views as to the connection between the productive forces and social relations' (p. 186). He also praised Engels' other articles (see, for example, his letters to Engels of 10 June and 10 October 1859).

Page me40.xx

Marx valued his friend's ability to discuss questions of military history in the context of the political tasks that faced the proletarian revolutionaries, and to substantiate revolutionary tactics militarily. A case in point is Engels' pamphlet Po and Rhine (1859), in which military analysis serves to prove the need for a proletarian approach to the problem of Italy's unification, as well as to denounce the policies of the French Bonapartists and the Prussian and Austrian ruling circles. 'Have read it all; exceedingly clever; the political side is also splendidly done and that was damned difficult,' Marx wrote to Engels after he had gone over the pamphlet (p. 400).
Page me40.xx

Observing the spectacular development of the natural sciences in the mid-19th century, Marx and Engels considered it essential to interpret the latest scientific achievements in the light of their revolutionary world outlook. They regarded progress in these fields as expanding the scientific basis of their theories.
Page me40.xx

Engels' letter to Marx of 14 July 1858, containing an extensive programme for the study of the latest findings of science, shows that Engels had already conceived the idea of giving a philosophical generalisation, from a dialectical materialist position, of the development of physics, chemistry, biology and the other sciences, which he eventually realised in his Dialectics of Nature.

Page Break me40.xxi
Page me40.xxi

Engels was one of the first to grasp the enormous significance of Darwin's theory of evolution. He read On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection in 1859, when the book was published, and wrote to Marx as follows: 'Darwin ... whom I'm reading just now, is absolutely splendid. There was one aspect of teleology that had yet to be demolished, and that has now been done. Never before has so grandiose an attempt been made to demonstrate historical evolution in Nature, and certainly never to such good effect' (p. 551).

Page me40.xxi

In the years covered by this volume, political journalism remained for Marx and Engels their most important means of disseminating revolutionary ideas, and substantiating proletarian revolutionary tactics on crucial social and political problems. The correspondence reflects their intensive journalistic activities during this period. In many letters they discuss the contents of articles for the New-York Daily Tribune and other periodicals. Economic processes in the capitalist world were increasingly attracting their attention. Observing the rapid growth of capitalist production, Marx compared the 1850s with the dawn of the capitalist era, which was marked by abrupt changes in economic and social relations. 'There is no denying that bourgeois society has for the second time experienced its 16th century,' he wrote to Engels on 8 October 1858 (p. 346). Marx and Engels also saw the reverse side of the rise of the capitalist economy: the deepening of its inherent contradictions and the inevitability of periodic economic crises.

In many letters they pointed to the world-wide scale of the 1857 crisis and noted the gradual involvement of different countries in it, its spread to various spheres of the economy, and the grave effect it had on the position of the masses. Apart from the series of articles on the crisis published in the New-York Daily Tribune, Marx intended to write, jointly with Engels, a pamphlet on the subject (Marx to Engels, 18 December 1857). However, the plan did not materialise.

Page me40.xxi

Marx and Engels followed current events very closely, especially the social and political shifts caused by the 1857 crisis. Although it did not lead directly to revolutionary upheavals, its revolutionising effect on society was very considerable. 'Taken all in all, the crisis has been burrowing away like the good old mole it is,' Marx wrote to Engels on 22 February 1858 (p. 274).

Page Break me40.xxii

Page me40.xxii

Marx and Engels considered it highly important that the 1857 crisis should have hit industry and finance in England, the most economically developed country in the capitalist world of that time. In a letter to Engels dated 8 December 1857 Marx pointed out that despite all the attempts by bourgeois economists and political writers to represent England's economy as stable and invulnerable, catastrophe had descended on this citadel of capitalism (p. 215). The economic upheaval in England was aggravating its internal situation and intensifying the dissatisfaction of the masses with the obsolete oligarchic system. As can be seen from the letters, Marx and Engels did not rule out the possibility that the economic crisis might give rise to violent political conflicts and demonstrations against the ruling class by broad social sections, especially the proletariat. As a result, England might be drawn into revolutionary events should they occur again in Continental Europe. As early as 31 March 1857, when the first symptoms of the economic difficulties appeared, Marx wrote to Engels: 'England is entering upon a sérieuse crisis ... and if the move is resumed on the Continent, John Bull will not maintain the stance of supercilious detachment he adopted in 1848' (p. 113).

Page me40.xxii

The economic crisis had an even greater effect on France. The entrepreneurial fever prevalent in the Second Empire, the unbridled Stock Exchange speculation, the corruption at all levels of the state machinery, and the predatory policy of the banks, such as the Crédit mobilier, resulted in the economic crisis being particularly destructive. Marx wrote to Engels on 18 December 1857 about 'the general rottenness of the bankrupt State' (p. 225). Marx and Engels held that during the economic crisis Napoleon III's empire had taken yet another step towards its inevitable collapse, as was manifest, particularly, in the growing anti-Bonapartist mood everywhere. In a letter to Marx on 17 March 1858, Engels pointed to the ferment among the Paris workers, who openly displayed their republican convictions and their sympathies for Orsini, the Italian patriot executed for an attempt to assassinate Louis Napoleon. Deportations and arrests, he wrote, had borne as little fruit as the workers' settlements and the national workshops. The government's police measures and attempts to pose as a patron of the working class were unable to arrest the growing movement against the Bonapartist dictatorship (p. 289).

Page me40.xxii

Developments in Germany, which were also considerably influenced by the crisis, seemed to give an indication of the changes that were in the offing. Marx and Engels were particularly interested in the position of Prussia. In their opinion, the virtual restoration of absolutism there after the Revolution of 1848-49, an absolutism only scantily veiled by pseudo-constitutional institutions, had been a consequence of the German bourgeoisie's cowardly half-measures. In the 1850s, too, the bourgeoisie, with its constitutional-monarchy illusions and its fear of the masses, continued to display a timid circumspection. 'The bourgeois and philistines have, at any rate, got even worse since 1848,' Engels wrote to Marx on 17 March 1858. '... Plainly your good, honest German has not yet emerged from the hibernation that followed the strenuous exertions of 1848' (p. 292). However, the rapid growth of industry and trade, which Marx and Engels noted in their letters more than once, was deepening the conflict between the demands of economic and social development and the semi-feudal political system and making the fragmentation of the country more and more intolerable. In Prussia and the other German states all this was sowing the seeds of further conflict between the forces of progress and reaction.

Page Break me40.xxiii

Page me40.xxiii

In their letters of 1858 and subsequent years, Marx and Engels noted that Russia was becoming one of the hotbeds of revolutionary ferment in Europe. The crisis of the feudal serf system, aggravated by defeat in the 1853-56 Crimean War, and growing peasant unrest which drove the ruling circles to look for a solution in peasant reform, were seen by Marx and Engels as evidence that major revolutionary events were imminent in Russia. In a letter to Engels on 29 April 1858, Marx expressed the hope that should such events take place, the Tsarist autocracy's position would be undermined both within the country and internationally. 'The movement for the emancipation of the serfs in Russia strikes me as important in so far as it indicates the beginning of an internal development that might run counter to the country's traditional foreign policy' (p. 310).

Page me40.xxiii

The ideologists of the working class were coming round to the idea that a revolutionary Russia was arising in opposition to the Tsarist autocracy — the revolutionary movement's worst enemy — and they welcomed it as a powerful force for social progress and as a major factor in the struggle for the revolutionary renewal of the whole of Europe.

Page me40.xxiii

Events in the colonies were a further important topic of the correspondence. In the 1850s, Marx and Engels repeatedly denounced the capitalist colonial system in the press. Aware of the importance of working out a programme on the national and colonial question, and of the need to define the attitude of the working class to the national liberation movement of the oppressed peoples, Marx and Engels unmasked the policy of colonial expansion, to which more and more Asian and African countries were falling victim, and the savage rule of the capitalist 'mother countries' in the colonies.

Page Break me40.xxiv

Page me40.xxiv

Engels' letter to Marx of 23 May 1856 in which, from personal knowledge, he describes the consequences of the English landlords' and bourgeoisie's domination in Ireland is a powerful expression of his views. He wrote that the country had been utterly ruined by wars of conquest, by punitive police measures and by the ruthless exploitation of the working people. '... Through systematic oppression,' Engels wrote, the Irish 'have come to be a completely wretched nation...' (p. 50). The famine of 1845-47, the mass emigration which completely depopulated the country, and the landowners' transition to large-scale sheep-breeding, accompanied by the expulsion of small tenant farmers (the 'clearances'), were an appalling tragedy for the Irish masses. Ireland had been reduced to an agrarian adjunct of capitalist England. Engels wrote that 'Ireland may be regarded as the earliest English colony and one which, by reason of her proximity, is still governed in exactly the same old way; here one cannot fail to notice that the English citizen's so-called freedom is based on the oppression of the colonies' (p. 49).
Page me40.xxiv

Marx and Engels witnessed a series of new colonial wars unleashed by the ruling classes of West European countries: the Anglo-Persian war of 1856-57, the Anglo-Franco-Chinese war of 1856-60, the Spanish-Moroccan war of 1859-60. In their letters they characterised these as wars of annexation and plunder. Engels called the British government's colonial actions 'military ventures' (p. 115). Marx gives similar descriptions (see his letters to Engels of 24 March and 22 May 1857).
Page me40.xxiv

The correspondence gives an idea of the sympathy with which Marx and Engels followed the development of the mass struggle against foreign oppression in the colonies and dependent countries. They showed particular interest in the great popular uprising of 1857-59 in India, which shook English rule there, and made references to it in many of their letters (Marx to Engels, 6 and 14 July, 23 September, 20 October 1857 and 14 January 1858; Engels to Marx, 24 September and 29 October 1857). In the uprising, started by the sepoys in the Bengal army, Marx and Engels saw indications of a true national liberation struggle, a sign of mounting resistance to the colonialists by the oppressed peoples. Although the insurgents were defeated, Marx and Engels regarded their action as a portent of the future collapse of colonialism under the blows of the anti-colonial movement.

Page Break me40.xxv
Page me40.xxv

The Indian uprising convinced Marx of the correctness of his earlier conclusion that the national liberation movement and the proletariat's struggle against the capitalist system were closely interlinked. The blows dealt to capitalism in the colonies were shaking its position at home and making it more difficult for capitalism to use colonial resources for strengthening its domination, and facilitating the triumph of the proletarian revolution. 'In view of the drain of men and bullion which she will cost the English, India is now our best ally,' Marx wrote to Engels on 16 January 1858 (p. 249).

Page me40.xxv

As in the preceding years, Marx and Engels devoted much attention in their letters to a wide range of problems concerning the foreign policies pursued by the ruling classes of the European powers and the history of diplomacy. In assessing the international situation after the Crimean War of 1853-56, Marx and Engels found it fraught with new complications and wars. They saw the Bonapartist Second Empire as the main source of military danger. Its rulers combined adventurism and ambitions for conquest with blatant demagogy in the national question, their purpose being to exploit the national movements in the interests of Bonapartist France. The proletarian revolutionaries regarded the denunciation of this 'most repulsive combination of Bonapartism and drivel about nationalities' (Marx to Lassalle, 22 November 1859) as one of their main tasks (p. 537).

Page me40.xxv

This became particularly urgent in view of the war of France and Piedmont against Austria, which broke out in April 1859. The interference of Napoleon III in Italian affairs was motivated by the desire to avert a revolutionary explosion on the Apennine Peninsula, to strengthen the Second Empire's hegemony in Europe and, by external successes, to consolidate the shaky Bonapartist regime in France itself. The Piedmontese liberal-monarchist circles were acting in alliance with the Bonapartists, with whose aid they were trying to unify Italy under the House of Savoy, which ruled Piedmont (see Marx's letter to Lassalle of 4 February 1859). At the same time, the war against the Austrian monarchy, Italy's age-old oppressor, was welcomed by patriotic forces as a signal for the liberation struggle. Popular uprisings occurred in a number of Italian states. This drove Napoleon III to conclude a hasty peace with the Austrians, which Marx and Engels described as discreditable (see Engels' letter to Marx of 15 July 1859). As a result, Italy remained fragmented.

Page Break me40.xxvi

Page me40.xxvi

As can be seen from their letters, Marx and Engels considered it essential to show that French Bonapartism was as big a barrier to the national liberation and unification of Italy as the Austrian Empire, that the Bonapartist regime was a threat to all progressive forces in Europe, and that it was, in particular, an obstacle to a united Germany.

Page me40.xxvi

During the Italian crisis, when even democrats in Europe had fallen for Bonapartist propaganda and 'the confusion presently reigning in men's minds has reached a curious peak' (p. 436), Marx and Engels worked out clear-cut tactics to turn what was on both sides a dynastic war of annexation into a revolutionary war of liberation by the Italian and German peoples. They elaborated their views on the war in a number of writings published at the time (see, for example, Engels' Po and Rhine and Marx's 'On Italian Unity' in Vol. 16 of the present edition). The main points were also elucidated in the letters included in this volume.

Page me40.xxvi

