Marx and Engels held that both Italy and Germany should be united 'from below', by revolutionary action on the part of the masses, and regarded the defeat of Bonapartism — the main opponent of a democratic solution to the Italian and German national problems — as the most urgent task. Hence the states in the German Confederation should not remain neutral; they should come out against Bonapartist France. According to Marx and Engels, this was in no way tantamount to supporting Austria. In their opinion, a war for the German people's national interests was bound to assume a revolutionary character and therefore contribute to the liberation of Italy, and rouse the revolutionary forces in other European countries, including France. Disclosing the essence of this tactic, Marx wrote to Engels on 6 May 1859 that it was absolutely essential that the proletarian revolutionaries 'do not identify' their cause 'with that of the present German governments' (p. 431). They should strive for a development of events that would lead to an all-European revolution, and it was particularly important that things should 'come to a head in Paris' (p. 430). The ideas on the 1859 Italian crisis contained in the letters of Marx and Engels hold an important place in the tactical arsenal of proletarian parties.

Page me40.xxvi

This volume also throws light on the efforts of Marx and Engels to create a proletarian party. They were above all concerned with the ideological education of their followers and comrades-in-arms, the proletarian revolutionaries who had been members of the Communist League and who were to form the nucleus of the future party. Without predetermining its organisational structure, for they believed that this must depend on the actual conditions in which the working-class movement developed, Marx and Engels were working both to rally the proletarian forces internationally and, wherever possible, to unite the working class on a national scale. They thought it vital to strengthen the ties among the working-class leaders of various countries and, as can be seen from their correspondence, did everything to this end.

Page Break me40.xxvii

Page me40.xxvii

German workers and intellectuals wrote to Marx, seeking his advice on tactical matters. Thus, in the spring of 1856, he was approached from Germany by Johannes Miquel, a former member of the Communist League (Marx to Engels, 26 April and 7 May 1856). At the end of February that year, Gustav Levy visited Marx with a message from the workers of Düsseldorf, and Marx explained the need for meticulous organisation and propaganda, warning him of the danger of premature local uprisings in the midst of a general lull in the revolutionary movement (Marx to Engels, 5 March 1856).

Page me40.xxvii

Information on the state of the working-class movement in the USA was supplied to Marx and Engels by Joseph Weydemeyer. The organisers of the Communist Club in New York also kept in touch with Marx (Marx to Engels, 13 August 1858 and 9 February 1859, and Engels to Marx, 18 July 1859).

Page me40.xxvii

Marx and Engels pinned great hopes on the revolutionary wing of the English working-class movement, as represented by the Left Chartists led by Ernest Jones. Their activities opened up prospects for establishing a mass working-class party in England. It was with this in mind that Marx advised Jones to transfer the centre of agitation directly into the midst of the industrial proletariat. Jones 'should begin by forming a party, for which purpose he must go to the manufacturing districts,' Marx wrote to Engels on 24 November 1857 (p. 210).

Page me40.xxvii

However, these hopes were not justified. By then, the Chartist movement was steadily losing support among the masses. Jones' ideological vacillations, especially his tendency to follow the lead of the radical bourgeoisie, were a disturbing symptom. Marx repeatedly warned the Chartist leader about his mistakes (Marx to Engels, 24 November and 22 December 1857 and 14 January 1858). At one point, Marx and Engels even temporarily broke with Jones.
Page me40.xxvii

Jones' political vacillations reflected the rise of a reformist trend within the English working-class movement. Marx and Engels saw it as the result of a privileged section forming in the English working class. On 7 October 1858, Engels wrote to Marx: '... The English proletariat is actually becoming more and more bourgeois, so that the ultimate aim of this most bourgeois of all nations would appear to be the possession, alongside the bourgeoisie, of a bourgeois aristocracy and a bourgeois proletariat. In the case of a nation which exploits the entire world this is, of course, justified to some extent' (p. 344). This development of a labour aristocracy, a new phenomenon detected by Engels and, at the time, characteristic only of England, was made possible by England's industrial and colonial monopoly, which enabled the English bourgeoisie to use part of its super-profits to buy off a section of the working class. 'In both respects,' Lenin wrote, referring to England's vast colonies and monopoly profit in the context of this passage in Engels' letter, 'England at that time was an exception among capitalist countries, and Engels and Marx, analysing this exception, quite clearly and definitely indicated its connection with the (temporary) victory of opportunism in the English labour movement' (Collected Works, Vol. 23, p. 112).

Page Break me40.xxviii
Page me40.xxviii

However, despite the decline of Chartism, Marx and Engels were convinced that the revolutionary trend in the English working-class movement would in some form be reborn and carry on Chartism's finest traditions. They therefore considered it essential to help to awaken the revolutionary energy of the British working class in every possible way.
Page me40.xxviii

The new development in the working-class movement in the late 1850s — the spread of strikes, the emergence of new professional and other organisations, and the workers' participation in political campaigns — stimulated Marx and Engels to step up their efforts to strengthen the nucleus of the future proletarian party. The situation demanded vigorous action, the intensified propagation of revolutionary theory and closer contact with the masses. Marx in particular resumed his participation in the London German Workers' Educational Society, in which sectarian and adventurist elements had prevailed for a period. By this time, however, Marx's comrades had regained their influence in the society.
Page me40.xxviii

Marx was seeking new ways of popularising the principles of the proletarian party then being formed. He thought it possible also to use Europe's progressive bourgeois press to this end. 'Times have changed,' he wrote to Lassalle on 28 March 1859, 'and I now consider it essential that our party should secure positions wherever possible, even if only for a time, so that others should not gain possession of the terrain' (p. 409). The long negotiations

Page Break me40.xxix
Marx held with the editors of the Viennese liberal newspaper Die Presse on work as a correspondent reflect this attitude, as do the ideas he expressed on the terms under which a journalist committed to the cause of the proletariat could contribute to a bourgeois press organ (Marx to Engels, 16 April and 16 and 18 May 1859; to Lassalle, 22 February 1858, 28 March and 5 May 1859, and to Friedländer, 16 May 1859). Marx's main stipulation was the right to express his own views on political issues, without adapting to editorial policies.
Page me40.xxix
It was at this time that Marx endeavoured to start a proletarian paper. From the letters published in this volume it can be seen how much energy he spent on converting the newspaper Das Volk, which had been published by the German Workers' Educational Society and other German workers' organisations in London from May 1859, into a mouthpiece of the proletarian party (see, in particular, his letters to Engels of 18 May and 10 June 1859).
Page me40.xxix
From the beginning of July, Marx was its de facto editor, handling all administrative and business matters, whose management until then had left 'a great deal to be desired', as he had earlier written to Engels (p. 457). Under Marx's management, and thanks also to Engels' cooperation, the paper became a real communist propaganda organ, a medium for explaining the principles of the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolutionaries. However, it proved impossible to regularise its finances, and, after the sixteenth issue on 10 August 1859, the paper ceased publication.
Page me40.xxix
The process of forming a working-class party inevitably involved the dissociation of the proletarian revolutionaries from the proponents of sectarian and reformist ideologies alien to them. Marx's and Engels' relationship with Ferdinand Lassalle, the father of a special brand of petty-bourgeois socialism and of an opportunist trend in the German working-class movement, provides a good illustration of this, and their correspondence with him is most revealing in this respect.
Page me40.xxix
Lassalle first met Marx and Engels in Germany during the Revolution of 1848-49 and kept in touch with them in the years that followed. In his letters to Marx he called himself the latter's pupil. For some time, Marx and Engels considered him a man close to their own circle, though they had been hearing about the dissatisfaction of workers in the Rhine Province with Lassalle's arrogance and overweening behaviour (Marx to Engels, 5 March and 10 April 1856). However, they valued his energy and his talent as a propagandist and orator, and hoped that he would overcome these failings.

Page Break me40.xxx

Page me40.xxx

Early in 1858, after reading Lassalle's two-volume work, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos, Marx came to the conclusion that Lassalle's views were far removed from the revolutionary materialist world outlook. 'Heraclitus, the Dark Philosopher by Lassalle the Luminous One is, au fond, a very silly concoction,' he wrote to Engels on 1 February, stressing that essentially Lassalle confined himself to restating some of the propositions of Hegel's idealistic philosophy, of which, moreover, he only had a superficial understanding (p. 259). In a letter to Lassalle, on 31 May 1858, Marx tried to explain the need for a critical mastery of Hegel's dialectics, for a review of its idealistic basis, for divesting it of the 'mystical aura' given it by Hegel (p. 316).
Page me40.xxx

It soon turned out that Lassalle also had differences with Marx and Engels on politics and tactics. In March 1859, he sent them his historical drama, Franz von Sickingen, which dealt with the uprising of the Swabian and Rhenish knights against their feudal lords in 1522-23, on the eve of the great Peasant War (1525). In analysing the drama Marx and Engels formulated some cardinal propositions of Marxist aesthetics. The letters to Lassalle from Marx on 19 April and from Engels on 18 May 1859 disclosed the essence of realism as the most progressive method of portraying life in art. Discussing the faults and merits of Lassalle's work, Marx and Engels reproached him above all for his departure from realism, for using abstract rhetoric in place of a truthful and visual portrayal of the characters, thus turning them into 'mere mouthpieces for the spirit of the times' (p. 420). The main character, Sickingen, has none of the traits of a rebellious knight. He epitomises the insoluble and therefore tragic contradiction between the leaders and the masses, a contradiction which Lassalle held to be a feature of any revolution. Lassalle's drama, in Engels' words, was 'too abstract, not realistic enough' (p. 444). Marx and Engels also held that Lassalle's inability to give a true picture of the historical situation betrayed itself in the way he virtually ignored the social background of the events he depicted — the peasants and the plebs in the grip of revolutionary ferment.
Page me40.xxx

According to Marx and Engels, the characters in realistic works should be both individual and typical, and should reflect the nature of the class to which they belong. Moreover, realist authors should not express their ideas as reasoned arguments, but through full-blooded characters and lively action. In Marx's and Engels' view, Lassalle shared, in an exaggerated form, a weakness of the great poet and dramatist Schiller — his inclination to abstract didacticism. A realist writer, however, should, as Engels pointed out, try for 'the complete fusion of greater intellectual profundity, of a consciously historical content', typical of Schiller's dramas, 'with Shakespearean vivacity and wealth of action', with Shakespeare's ability to portray true human passion and suffering, the complexity and contradictory aspects of human nature (p. 442).

Page Break me40.xxxi

Page me40.xxxi

In their letters, Marx and Engels touch on the problem of the writer's political position, and on the connection of literature and art with life. Believing that a definite ideological and political orientation is inherent in any work of art, the founders of Marxism always deplored attempts to separate art and politics — the theory of 'art for art's sake'. It was at that time that they condemned the tendency of the poet Ferdinand Freiligrath to oppose literary interests to party obligations (Engels to Marx, 28 November 1859, Marx to Engels, 10 December 1859). In the opinion of Marx and Engels, it was the organic combination of ideology and artistic mastery which made art and literature such a powerful lever of social progress.

Page me40.xxxi

Marx and Engels regarded as quite legitimate Lassalle's endeavour to make his drama topical, to link it with the vital task of uniting Germany, but they held that its political tendency was profoundly wrong. It was obvious to them that Sickingen, the knight, was in effect a reactionary whose movement aimed at a return to the era of feudal injustice and club-law, and that Lassalle was aggrandising the historical predecessor of the German Junkers, representing him as the true champion of national unification. Marx pointed this out to Lassalle: 'Have not you yourself — like your Franz von Sickingen — succumbed, to some extent, to the diplomatic error of regarding the Lutheran-knightly opposition as superior to the plebeian-Münzerian?' (p. 420).
Page me40.xxxi

The preference for chivalry and the burgher opposition Lassalle showed in his drama reflected his view of the part played by their historical successors — the Junkers and the bourgeoisie — in the cause of German unity. He underestimated the role of the masses in this process and had a nihilistic attitude to the peasants, whom he attributed to the reactionary mass. In contrast, Marx and Engels considered that only vigorous action by the working class and its ally, the peasantry, could give the struggle for national unity a truly democratic revolutionary character, and that the consolidation of this alliance would open up prospects for a transition to the socialist stage of revolution. 'The whole thing in Germany will depend on whether it is possible to back the Proletarian revolution by some second edition of the Peasants' War' (p. 41).

Page Break me40.xxxii
Page me40.xxxii

Lassalle's position on the unification of Germany was laid wide open when in May 1859 he published the pamphlet Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. By aligning himself with the Prussophile bourgeoisie and the Junkers, Lassalle was virtually urging Prussia to avail itself of Austria's defeat to carry out its plans for unification, plans which envisaged no changes in the political or social system. Meanwhile, Lassalle depicted Napoleon III's Italian policy as objectively progressive.
Page me40.xxxii

These views were completely at odds with those of Marx and Engels. Characterising the essence of their political differences, Lenin wrote: 'Lassalle was adapting himself to the victory of Prussia and Bismarck, to the lack of sufficient strength in the democratic national movements of Italy and Germany. Thus Lassalle deviated towards a national-liberal labour policy, whereas Marx encouraged and developed an independent, consistently democratic policy hostile to national-liberal cowardice' (Collected Works, Vol. 21, p. 141).
Page me40.xxxii

'Lassalle's pamphlet is an enormous blunder,' Marx wrote to Engels on 18 May 1859 (p. 435). In a letter of 10 June that year, he told Lassalle that the pamphlet 'in no way corresponds with my own view or that of my party friends in England' (p. 460). Marx was particularly angered by Lassalle's posing as the spokesman of the party. He regarded it as a breach of party discipline to make statements in the press on behalf of the party without ascertaining the views of other members (p. 435).

Page me40.xxxii

Marx saw that Lassalle's position was very close to that of the liberal bourgeoisie, and also of pro-Bonaparte and Prussophile vulgar democrats such as Karl Vogt. Lassalle 'in point of fact was piping the same tune as Vogt', he wrote to Engels on 26 November 1859 (p. 542). Marx considered that Lassalle attempted to obstruct the public denunciation of Vogt as a Bonapartist agent and a slanderer of the proletarian revolutionaries because Vogt and Lassalle held identical views. In his work Herr Vogt, published in 1860 (this edition, Vol. 17), he therefore not only dealt a crushing blow at the political concepts of Vogt but, without mentioning Lassalle by name, attacked his views too.

Page me40.xxxii

Lassalle's literary and political activities were making his unreliability as a comrade-in-arms increasingly clear to Marx and Engels. Nevertheless, they had not yet finally lost hope of setting him on the right road, of stimulating him to act at least as a fellow-traveller of the proletarian revolutionaries. Subsequent events, however, widened the rift and led to a final rupture.

Page Break me40.xxxiii

Page me40.xxxiii

The letters in this volume contain valuable biographical material on the life of Marx and his family and of Engels in these years.

Page me40.xxxiii

The second half of the 1850s were hard years for Marx. As before, he was in serious financial difficulties and fighting for his very existence. 'I would not wish my worst enemy to have to wade through the quagmire in which I've been trapped for the past two months, fuming the while over the innumerable vexations that are ruining my intellect and destroying my capacity for work,' he wrote to Engels at a moment of extreme distress (p. 331). The moral and political atmosphere that surrounded the revolutionary refugees was also oppressive. After Orsini's assassination attempt, refugees in England were put under political surveillance and their letters were opened (see the letters of Marx to Engels of 2 and 5 March and Engels' letter to Marx of 4 March 1858). They had to face repeated insinuations in the bourgeois press, slanderous allegations by their enemies among the vulgar democrats (Kinkel, Heinzen, Vogt), the cowardly apostasy of their allies (Blind) and the withdrawal from politics of former friends (Dronke, Cluss and Freiligrath).

Page me40.xxxiii

Marx, however, bore all his trials with courage and remarkable fortitude. The letters in this volume are permeated with optimism and the expectation of new revolutionary events.

Page me40.xxxiii

The letters show vividly how the unique friendship between Marx and Engels strengthened with the years and how great was their mutual attachment. In Engels this manifested itself in his selfless willingness time and again to come to the aid of Marx and his family, to spend his energies on 'accursed commerce' (Engels to Marx, 17 November 1856) in order to be able to give Marx material support, and to take upon himself a considerable part of Marx's journalistic work so as to free him for economic research; while on Marx's part, it expressed itself in infinite gratitude, respect and trust. Whenever anything went amiss with Engels, Marx would be seriously alarmed. His friend's illness in the summer of 1857 caused him a great deal of worry. 'Nothing could please me more than to hear that your health is progressing,' he wrote to Engels on 21 September that year, having heard that there were signs of an improvement (p. 173).

Page me40.xxxiii

Marx and Engels treated their comrades-in-arms with touching attention and great sensitivity. They grieved over the losses unavoidable under the harsh conditions of life in emigration, and especially over the death of the proletarian poet Georg Weerth (see, in particular, the letter from Engels to Marx, written not before 27 September 1856, and the letters from Marx to Lassalle, 21 December 1857 and 22 February 1858). On the death of Conrad Schramm, an eminent member of the working-class movement, Engels wrote in sorrow to Marx on 25 January 1858: 'Our old guard is rapidly dwindling away during this long spell of peace' (p. 253). Marx and Engels showed unfailing concern for their old comrades in the Communist League, and kept up friendly relations with Wilhelm Wolff (Lupus), Friedrich Lessner, Georg Eccarius, Joseph Weydemeyer, Wilhelm Liebknecht, Peter Imandt and others.

Page Break me40.xxxiv

Page me40.xxxiv

The outstanding quality of Marx's relationship with his wife is illustrated by his remarkable love letter to Jenny Marx (21 June 1856) in Trier, where she had gone to visit her dying mother.

* * *

Page me40.xxxiv

Volume 40 contains 317 letters by Marx and Engels, of which 307 were written in German and 10 in English. The great majority of the letters are being published in English for the first time. Only 73 appeared in English before (53 of these in incomplete form). These publications are indicated in the notes. The 11 letters by Jenny Marx included in the Appendix are given in English translation for the first time. The two letters by Karl Marx to Collet Dobson Collet written in June 1857 and Jenny Marx's letter to Engels of 31 July 1857 have never been published in any language before.

Page me40.xxxiv

The dating of some of the letters was ascertained in the course of the preparation of this volume. Information on undiscovered letters mentioned in the text will be found in the notes. If a fact or event is referred to in several letters, the same note number is used each time.

Page me40.xxxiv

Obvious slips in the text are corrected without comment. The authors' contractions of proper and geographical names and individual words are given in full. Defects in the manuscripts, where the text is missing or illegible, are indicated by three dots in square brackets. If the text allows a reconstruction of the missing or illegible passages, this is also given in square brackets. Anything crossed out by the authors is reproduced in the footnotes only where the disparity in meaning is considerable. If a letter is a rough copy, an extract quoted elsewhere, etc., this is marked either in the text itself or in the notes.

Page Break me40.xxxv

Page me40.xxxv

Foreign words and phrases in the letters are given in italics. If they were underlined by the authors they are in spaced italics. Words written in English in the original are given in small caps. Longer passages written in English in the original are placed in asterisks.

Page me40.xxxv

The volume was compiled, the text prepared and the notes written by Stanislav Nikonenko (letters from January 1856 to mid-February 1858), Natalia Martynova (letters from mid-February 1858 to early February 1859) and Tatyana Andrushchenko (letters from early February to December 1859 and the Appendix). Tatyana Andrushchenko also wrote the Preface. The volume was edited by Lev Golman and Tatyana Yeremeyeva (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU). The name index and the index of periodicals were prepared by Yelena Vashchenko, the index of quoted and mentioned literature by Natalia Martynova, and the subject index by Tatyana Andrushchenko (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).

Page me40.xxxv

The translations were made by Peter and Betty Ross and edited by E.J. Hobsbawm, Nicholas Jacobs (Lawrence & Wishart), Richard Dixon, Lydia Belyakova and Victor Schnittke (Progress Publishers), and Larisa Miskievich, scientific editor (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).

Page me40.xxxv

The volume was prepared for the press by the editor Mzia Pitskhelauri.

Page me40.xxxv

Note: The name of the late Margaret Mynatt was unfortunately omitted from the list of editors who worked on Volume 38, the first of the thirteen volumes devoted to the correspondence of Marx and Engels.

Page Break me40.xxxvi

Page Break me40.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
January 1856-December 1859

Page Break me40.2
Page Break me40.3

1856

1
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.3
[London,] 18 January 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

Today I emptied the 6th and last medicine-BOTTLE. Pretty well again on the whole, save for persistent and highly perfidious piles.

Page me40.3

I haven't touched on Cobden's pamphlet†2 in my ARTICLES, because I have devoted many tedious columns exclusively to the HISTORY of the DANUBIAN PROVINCES and Sweden.†3 I should be very glad if you would take on Cobden.

Page me40.3

I shall add a short piece to your article†a as soon as I have seen the 2nd edition of The Times. Its ANNOUNCEMENT yesterday AS TO THE 'UNCONDITIONAL ACCEPTANCE'†4 was a sheer Stock Exchange swindle which brought it in a great deal of money. As early as 1772, at the Congress of Focsani,†5 Catherine II had already proposed to the Turks 'THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE PRINCIPALITIES UNDER THE COMMON PROTECTION OF THE PRINCIPAL POWERS OF EUROPE'. At the Library†b I discovered a work of Herrmann's which appeared in Germany in 1841.†c He got hold of a manuscript of Field Marshal Münnich's on the Crimean campaign under Anna†6 in one of the German libraries and published it with a foreword. I shall make excerpts from it for you if you are interested.

Page me40.3

You may, perhaps, have seen in the Augsburger the high praise Fallmerayer accords to Muralt for his history of Byzantium from the 6th to the 16th century, which won a Petersburg Academy prize.†d

Page Break me40.4
Page me40.4

Have seen Bruno†a again on various occasions. Romanticism increasingly turns out to be a 'prerequisite' for the critical criticism. In economics expresses enthusiasm for the Physiocrats, whom he misconstrues, and believes in the specifically beneficial effects of landed property. Moreover he rates very high the economic fantasies of Adam Müller, the German romantic.†7 In military science his summus princeps†b is the 'genius' Bülow. I told him that these latest disclosures of his had fully enlightened me regarding his arduous work of ratiocination. As TO RUSSIA he says that the old state of affairs in the West must be swept away and that this could only be done from the East, since the Easterner alone feels real hatred — for the Westerner, that is — and Russia is the only close-knit power in the East, BESIDES being the only country in Europe where there is still 'cohesion'. As to our illusions about internal class struggles, he maintains that 1. the workers feel no 'hatred'; 2. if they did feel hatred, they would never have achieved anything by it; 3. they are a 'rabble' (who have no interest in the Synoptics†8) and ought to be curbed and directed solely by force and cunning; 4. with them one silver groschen rise in pay is enough to settle 'the whole caboodle'. In any case, no one who was not a 'descendant of the conquerors' could play an historical role, except in the field of theory. And there something had doubtless been done during the past 16 years, though only in Germany and, indeed, by Bruno alone. It was thanks to him that 'scientific' theology had ceased to exist in Germany, the only place where it had existed, and that 'Tholuck was writing no longer'. Voilá un résultat immense.†c In other respects, a pleasant old gentleman. Proposes to stay a year in England. I believe he is planning to introduce into England the 'scientific theology' which has ceased to exist in Germany. He declares Humboldt to be a complete ass because he has fraudulently arrogated to himself abroad the fame due to Bruno.

Page me40.4

You should write to old Harvey about your ears. He is also treating Lina†d from afar and, having heard that she is merely a GOVERNESS in spe,†e has not even charged her a centime. Herewith Lina's first report, which you should return.

Page me40.4

I am sending you a scrawl of Urquhart's†f which they sent me before the paper came out.†9 The 'revelations' about the HISTORY OF CHARTISM [are] INDEED highly naive, since Urquhart turns out to be an English police spy while deluding himself that he played Cicero to Catiline. I see in the Berlin National-Zeitung that Bucher, Prussian minister in spe, has even adopted Urquhart's 'philosophy' which he repeats parrot-fashion. That's trés fort†a for a GERMAN.

Page Break me40.5

Page me40.5

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.5

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

2
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.5
Manchester, 7 February 1856

Dear Marx,

You will be most annoyed with me for not having written for so long. But until I've coped with a number of jobs at the office which will keep me busy for the next fortnight or so, I shall hardly be in a position to turn my mind to anything else. On top of that my old man†b keeps pestering me frightfully over purchases of yarn, etc., on his behalf, and I have to send him a confidential report at least twice a week.†10
Page me40.5

Enclosed Pan-Slavism No. II, in which want of substance is at least partially offset by verbosity.†11 With No. III I shall at last get in medias res.†c
Page me40.5

You should now read the Guardian's Paris correspondent regularly; very odd things are happening there.†12 Over the past few days the correspondent of the Examiner & Times has provided even fuller and better particulars. I have just tried to buy the latest issues for you but they had all been sold out. Perhaps I can get them from Belfield.

Page Break me40.6
Page me40.6

Bonaparte is VERY FAST ON THE DECLINE. That Drouyn de Lhuys is missing from the official list of senators for this year you will have seen, but not, I imagine, that recently, apropos a sensational act of opposition, he left his card on an Orleanist (Rémusat, if I'm not mistaken) with a bold line drawn through the title: vice-président du Sénat. Recently, the infantry were called out against the students escorting Monsieur Nisard home. At the cry: Vive la ligne!†a the troops ordered arms and had to be speedily withdrawn lest fraternisation should become a fait accompli. The recent conspiracy in the south-west, on account of which 5,000 arrests (according to a Bonapartist statement) were made, had wide ramifications in the army; the NCO school at La Fléche was completely disbanded. Almost all the students were implicated and had to be returned to their regiments; IN FACT, it is said to have been very difficult to find reliable regiments to which they could be posted. When Bonaparte was at the Odéon recently with his spouse,†b the university students who filled the pit sang the Sire de Franc Boissy†13 throughout the evening, carefully intoning some of the more embarrassing bits. In Paris the workers are singing a little ditty, having the refrain:

Voilá qu'il part, voilá qu'il part,
Le petit marchand de moutarde,
Voilá qu'il part pour son pays
Avec tous ses outils.†c

Page me40.6

In order that there should be no doubt about the identity of the petit marchand de moutarde, the police have banned the song.†d

Page me40.6

All these impudent manifestations of oppositional and positively anti-Bonapartist impulses, and Mr. Bonaparte's corresponding feebleness are proof that a great change is under way. The measures adopted during the coup d'état†14 will no longer do, and the courage to apply them is no longer there. You will have seen that even The Times, on two successive days, first described Napoleon personally as a mere stopgap so far as France was concerned — BECAUSE NOT ONE SINGLE MAN WAS TO BE FOUND IN WHICH THE NATION COULD PLACE ITS CONFIDENCE AND ESTEEM — and then characterised his entire general staff of ministers, etc., as swindlers and scoundrels.†e In today's Guardian there is another nice story about

Page Break me40.6a

Frederick Engels. 1856. Manchester

Page Break me40.6b

Page Break me40.7

that rascal Fiorentino, Bonapartist court feuilletonist and Knight of the Legion of Honour. Mr Espinasse, too, had to decamp from Paris; he has been involved in scandals, concerning which I shall probably hear more in a day or two. Something is also afoot with de Morny; the fellow has more or less fallen out with his worthy brother†a and is once more intriguing on his own account.

Page me40.7

This Bonaparte, for whom in the past everything, however stupid, craven and infamous, turned out so well, will now discover that henceforward everything will go badly for him. This he is already discovering in the war and peace question; everyone blamed him for the war, no one thanks him for the peaceful turn of events. Incidentally, the matter of the peace is far from being settled. The preliminaries to the preliminaries contain, au fond,†b nothing but the Bessarabian clause, and that is offset by a total disregard for Kars.†15 All the rest consists of nothing but bogus concessions. Moreover Bonaparte no longer cares a rap about the conditions upon which he makes peace. For him it is now his bread and butter that is at stake, as once with old Dolleschall,†c and I'm convinced that the Russians know this better than he does himself. Never before have the French been so wholly indifferent to their gloire; since 1848 the fellows have been concerned with other things than the traditional gloire and parliamentary swindling.

Page me40.7

So it seems as though we have safely weathered the Aliens Bill†16 — au train que les choses vont en France,†d there will soon be no further need to worry one's head about the aspirations of Palmerston and Co. The Bonapartist house of cards will most likely collapse this summer just as did Louis Philippe's in the year of scandal 1847, and exactly when the gust of wind comes that completely demolishes the walls is a matter of mere chance. I now lead a very sober life, but on that day I shall get drunk in Manchester, probably for the last time.

Page me40.7
Don't be long in telling me something more about old Bruno†e; the fellow's new romantic turn is too amusing. Kindest regards to your wife and children.
Page me40.7
Your
F.E.

Page me40.7
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.8

3
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.8
[London,] 12 February 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,
I am still being plus ou moins†a persecuted by State haemorrhoids and consequent DULLNESS of spirits. On top of which Pieper has just been playing me some music of the future.†17 C'est affreux†b and makes one afraid of the 'future', including its poetical music.
Page me40.8
At the Museum†c I have made a number of historical discoveries about the end of the 17th and the early decades of the 18th centuries concerning the struggle between Peter I and Charles XII and the decisive role played in that drama by England. At that time the foreign policy of the Tories and Whigs differed quite simply in that the former sold themselves to France, the latter to Russia. This venality was taken for granted and is discussed and declared 'a matter of course' by contemporary writers. From the start, William III harboured MISGIVINGS about Sa Majesté Czarienne,†d as is proved by his offensive and defensive treaty with Charles XII. Under him the ministers acted contrary to his inclination. From George I onwards things were easy for the Whigs since the ELECTORS of Hanover were already pursuing a foolish dynastic policy and regarded Verden and Bremen as the focal points of European interest. That mainly England contributed to turning Russia into a BALTIC POWER is, perhaps, less interesting than the fact that, as early as the beginning of the 18th century, this policy was already being denounced, and the future growth of the MUSCOVITE EMPIRE predicted with remarkable accuracy. Despite the unexampled indulgence of the official British and the direct aid they accorded Peter, the latter was at the same time engaging in underhand dealings with the Pretender.†e In this his personal physician (Erskine), a relation of the Comte de Mar, acted as go-between. The main sources for the whole of this mysterious story are:

Page me40.8
a) Truth is Truth, as it is timed, or Our Ministry's present Measures against the Muscovite vindicated by Plain and Obvious reasons, tending to prove that it is no less the interest of Our British trade, than that of Our State, that the Czar be not suffered to retain a Fleet, if needs must that he should [have] a Sea Port in the Baltick etc. London 1719.

Page Break me40.9
Page me40.9
The author†a was ambassador in Petersburg from 1710-1715 and, as he says, was

* 'dismissed the service because the Czar desired it; for that he had learnt, that I had given Our Court such Light into his affairs as is contain'd in this Paper',* etc.

Page me40.9
b) Mémoire présenté á Sa Maj. Britannique par M. Wesselowsky, Ministre de Sa Maj. Czar. London 1717.
Page me40.9
An apologia by the Russians respecting their underhand dealings with the Pretender, especially remarkable for being altogether in the style (although not yet with quite the polish) of Pozzo di Borgo and Co.,†18 hence evidence that qualitatively Russian diplomacy has made no progress since Pierre I.
Page me40.9
c) The defensive treaty concluded in the year 1700 between His late M. King William of Glorious Memory and His Present Swedish Maj. King Charles XII, etc., to which some queries are appended (1716).
Page me40.9
d) The Northern Crisis, or Impartial Reflections on the Policies of the Czar.... 'Parvo motu primo mox se attollit in auras'.†b London 1716.
Page me40.9
One of the most extraordinary pamphlets ever written. Might, with minor MODIFICATIONS, have appeared in the year 1853. Contains, as do also a) and c), evidence of English treachery. In a postscript the anonymous author†c says:

* 'I flatter myself, that this little History is of that curious Nature, and on Matters hitherto so unobserved, that I consider it with Pride, as a valuable New-Year's Gift to the present world; and that posterity will accept it, as the like, for many years after, and read it over on the Anniversary, and call it their Warning-Piece. I must have my Exegi Monumentum†d as well as others.'*

Page me40.9

e) An Inquiry into the Reasons of the Conduct of Great Britain with Relation to the Present State of Affairs in Europe. London 1727.†e

Page me40.9

Interesting only because it reveals that Ripperda, the Spanish diplomatic chevalier d'industrie, subsequently a minister, 'HAD A VERY PARTICULAR INTIMACY WITH THE RUSSIAN MINISTER', etc. Likewise the other leading double-dealer in the diplomatic world of the time, Baron Görtz.

Page me40.9

f) Tagebuch Peters des Grossen vom Jahre 1698 bis zum Schlusse des Neustädter Friedens, aus dem russischen Original übersetzt, so nach denen im Archive befindlichen und von Seiner Kaiserlichen Majestät eigenhändigen ergänzenden Handschriften gedruckt worden. With a prefatory note by the Russian editor, Prince Mikhail Shcherbatov () (Petersburg, 2 August 1770), in German, Berlin and Leipzig 1773.

Page Break me40.10

Page me40.10

Although Catherine II naturally had this diary censored before publication, it nevertheless contains much that confirms the FACTS given in the above-mentioned pamphlets.

Page me40.10

g) Copies and Extracts of several letters written by the King of Sweden and his Ministers relating to the Negociations of Baron Görtz etc., published at Copenhagen by order of the King of Denmark. London 1717.

Page me40.10

h) Letters which passed between Count Gyllenborg, the Baron Görtz, Sparre etc., published by authority. London 1717.

Page me40.10

g) and h) are, of course, well known to all historians who, however, lack the key to the proper understanding of the same. Both publications turn more especially on Charles XII's plan, conceived as an act of vengeance upon England, to land a Swedish army on the English coast and proclaim the Pretender.

Page me40.10

Besides these pamphlets there are a number of other writings which occasionally refer to the Swedish-English-Russian business, or English pamphlets obviously inspired by the Swedish ambassador Gyllenborg, as, for instance, Remarks on Mr Jackson's Memorial etc.

Page me40.10

You can see what kind of means the Whigs resorted to from their having put it about

* 'that the King of Sweden was a Roman Catholic and that the Czar was a good Protestant'*.

Page me40.10

No one can fail to notice that, at the very time the English were making such a ridiculous hullaballoo about Austria setting up the Compagnie des Indes at Ostend, they formally placed their fleet at Peter's disposal and helped him found his ports in the Baltic. Yet from the complaints of the English BALTIC MERCHANTS of that time it transpires that Monsieur Peter was very far from gentle with them. England was, moreover, the first great European power to recognize his imperial title, etc. What the above-mentioned pamphlets prove above all is that she was acting neither under an illusion nor out of ignorance.

Page me40.10

The following anecdotes about Peter from the Memoirs of Frederick the Great's Sister†a will amuse you. Peter and the Czarina†b were paying them a visit at Potsdam.

Page Break me40.11

'La Czarine débuta par baiser la main á la reine†a qu'il voulut embrasser, mais elle le repoussa. Elle lui présenta ensuite le duc et la duchesse de Mecklenbourg†b qui les avaient accompagnés et 400 soi-disant dames qui étaient á sa suite. C'était pour la plupart, des servantes allemandes, qui faisaient les fonctions de dames, de femmes de chambre, de cuisiniéres et de blanchisseuses. Presque toutes ces créatures portaient chacune sur les bras un enfant richement vêtu; et lorsqu'on leur demandait, si c'étaient les leurs, elles répondaient en faisant des salamalecs á la Russienne: Le Czar m'a fait l'honneur de me faire cet enfant. La reine ne voulut pas saluer ces créatures' etc.†c

Page me40.11

In one of the rooms at Potsdam there stood a Priapus

'dans une posture trés indécente. Le Czar admira cette statue beaucoup et ordonna á la Czarine de la baiser. Elle voulut s'en défendre, il se fâcha et lui dit en allemand corrompu: Kop ab.... La Czarine eût si peur qu'elle fit tout ce qu'il voulut. Il demanda sans façon cette statue et plusieurs autres au roi†d qui ne put les lui refuser' etc.†e

Page me40.11

I should like to put to some use the curious items I have discovered at the Museum. They are too retrospective for a newspaper. So I shall try 'Putnam'. But first you must let me know when the 'IMPROVEMENTS IN MODERN WARFARE' can be ready, since Putnam will, of course, insist on having the goods he ordered first†19 before he considers any fresh offers.

Page me40.11

I was most interested in the French business and would ask you to send me the Examiner whenever it contains similar stuff. Here the Guardian may be seen at Wylde's. Writing for the papers is at present very onerous, since nothing is happening in England and the turn economic affairs are taking is still far from clear. Crucial in this respect just now are the stock market swindles, concerning which the necessary material is wanting.

Page me40.11

Have since seen Bruno†f once or twice. The fellow clearly has something in mind, having come sans le sou†a to his cher frére.†b He's a thorough-going old bachelor, anxiously concerned for his own conservation and preservation, and not without secret MISGIVINGS about his attitude to the present. Little by little he is discovering that London is a remarkable place, that in it there are 'contrasts between poor and rich' and other suchlike 'discoveries'. His would-be gentility and repudiation of the world on the one hand, and his childish curiosity and rustic astonishment at EVERYTHING and ANYTHING on the other, provide a far from edifying contrast. At present he is engaged mainly in mugging up English. As soon as I have another encounter with him I shall tell you about it.

Page Break me40.12

Page me40.12

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.12
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

4
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.12
London, 13 February 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Fred,

According to a letter I've had from Imandt, Heise is gradually approaching extinction as a result of the undue amount of 'oil' he has been pouring on the lamp of life.†c Imandt himself grumbles a great deal about the Scots, with whom it is impossible to have more than 12 lessons to teach them German, whatever ruses he adopts. The fellows are keen on “grasping” out of avarice.

Page Break me40.13
Page me40.13

But the great event, the event which has caused me to send this second epistle following hard on the heels of the first, is the Seiler event. You will recall what the auspices for this Sebastian Sheetanchor†a looked like when last you were here. The old GREENGROCER proved RATHER adamant, and Seiler himself, with the happy instinct characteristic of the man, soon discovered that it would be altogether foolish to lay out some £200 on amortising the past rather than greasing the wheels of the future. So he takes the heroic decision to advise his father-in-law not to pay one single creditor, but rather look on unconcernedly should he be locked up. His intention, then, was to pass through the COURT OF INSOLVENCY and, thus purged, start a new career with the old man's help. This seemed very practical to the old man. Seiler for his part was tempted by the prospect — once initiated into the crapuleuse†b company of the Queen's Bench†21 — of keeping open board thanks to generous supplies from wife and mother-in-law and, incidentally, of completing his immortal work on Alexander II — consisting of extracts from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, upon which he has spread an equivocal syrup. The matter was AT ONCE put in hand. There began a golden era of farniente†c and 'business errands' into town. But what was particularly embarrassing was that, despite the WARRANTS taken out against him and despite the OSTENTATIOUS EXHIBITION of his worthy person in the streets of London, not a single creditor took steps to have Sebastian arrested. The old GREENGROCER, whose faith in the 'personality' of his son-in-law was in no way reinforced by the latter's inviolability, told him the time had come to vacate the house and withdraw with his wife to a distant COTTAGE. During the actual removal some of the effects were confiscated by vigilant creditors, among them 7 pairs of boots belonging to Sebastian. Sebastian himself took care that there should be no secret about the COTTAGE either, since a quiet and secluded existence with his cabbage of a wife had no place whatsoever in his plans. In short, to such good effect did he intrigue with the cabbage, the mother-in-law and the GREENGROCER, that it has been decided to despatch him to the 'New World' — New York, OF COURSE — whither his spouse is to follow him once he has secured a 'position'. The matter now turns — he is expected to leave this week — on the number of £s he is to take with him for his travelling expenses. He is asking for £60. The GREENGROCER reckons that half as much will suffice. Sebastian plans, once in America, to extract one 5 pound note after the other from his dear spouse, to pamper his belly, to publish his Kaspar Hauser and Alexander II, and, as a grass widower, never to forego the sweet melancholy of separation from his cabbage. It would be interesting if a creditor did catch him after all. At all events he has succeeded in leaving England too as a 'financial' fugitive, only in more respectable CIRCUMSTANCES than those attending his departure from Germany, Belgium and Switzerland. His plan was that Pieper should go with him as companion. Pieper had only pretended to fall in with this plan so as to get a share of the 7 pairs of boots, but in the event he was forestalled by the BROKERS.

Page Break me40.14
Page me40.14
Pieper was here one evening not long ago giving lessons to the children when the POSTMAN knocked at the door downstairs. A letter for Pieper in a female hand. Invitation to a rendezvous. Since he was unfamiliar with the hand and equally with the signature, he gave himself over to great expectations and passed the letter to my wife to read. From the signature she at once recognised our ex-nurse, the fat old Irish slattern, who cannot write herself and therefore had the letter written by a third hand. You can imagine how we teased Fridolin†a with our laughter. But he kept his rendezvous with the cow. Such, then, are his ADVENTURES. O King Visvamitra, what an ox you are!†b
Page me40.14

Don't forget the Pan-Slavism.†11
Page me40.14
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.14
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.15

5
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.15
[London,] 29 February 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
For the whole of this week I've had a visitor in the person of G. Levy from Düsseldorf, sent over as their delegate by the workers there. He only left yesterday and took up all my spare time, so that despite the best of intentions I did not succeed in writing to you. Further on I shall give you an account of the news, some of it important, of which he was the CARRIER.†a
Page me40.15
Not one of the 3 books you asked for was available at Norgate and Williams. I have ordered the Lay of Igor†22 but wanted to let you know about the other two first.
Page me40.15
Dobrowsky's 'Slavin', Hanka edition, is very far from fulfilling the expectations aroused by its title. The book falls into 2 parts as regards the contents, if not the arrangement, viz.:
Page me40.15
1. Short ESSAYS on Slavonic linguistic studies which, in view of more recent studies, could at most be of antiquarian interest (e.g. sample from the Wendish New Testament, Slavonic declension, on the Slavonic translation of the Old Testament, etc.).
Page me40.15
2. An attempt, wholly devoid of polemic bite, to reconstitute the character of the Slav peoples in integrum.†b This is done by taking excerpts from sundry works, mostly German writings. Here is a list of these essays, which make up the bulk of the book†c:
Page me40.15

'Slawische Völker'. (From Herder's Ideen†d etc.)
Page me40.15
'Sitten der Croaten'. (From von Engels' Geschichte von Dalmatien, Croatien, Slavonien. Halle 1798.)
Page me40.15
'Sitten und Gebräuche der Illyrier, der Morlaken etc.' (From ditto.)
Page me40.15
'Charakter der Illyier'. (From Taube's Beschreibung des Königreichs Slavonien. Leipzig 1777.)
Page me40.15
'Die Tracht der Illyrier'. (From Hacquet's Beobachtungen auf einer Reise nach Semlin.†e)

Page Break me40.16
Page me40.16
'Prokops Schilderung der Slawen und Anten'. (From Stritter's 'Geschichte der Slawen nach den Byzantinern' in Schlözer's Allgemeine Nordische Geschichte.)
Page me40.16
'Auszüge aus des Herrn Professor B. Hacquet's Abbildung und Beschreibung der südwest- und östlichen Slawen'.
Page me40.16
'Volkstümliches der Russen'. (From Dupré de St. Maure, Observations sur les moeurs et les usages russes. Paris 1829. 3 vols.)
Page me40.16
'Charakter und Kultur der Slawen im Allgemeinen'. (From Schaffarik, Geschichte der slawischen Sprache, etc. Ofen†a 1826.)
Page me40.16
That's about all. Appended is 'Der böhmische Cato' in Czech, 'from an old manuscript described by the late Voigt in Acta litteraria'.†23
Page me40.16
Dobrowsky writes in a bumbling, good-natured, naive style, with the greatest cordiality towards his German colleagues, whether 'late' or still living. All that seemed of interest to me in the Slavin were a few passages in which he directly recognises the Germans as the fathers of Slavonic historical and linguistic studies.
Page me40.16
As regards linguistic studies, he cites among others 'Schlözer, Vorschlag zu einer allgemeinen vergleichenden slawischen Sprachlehre und Wörterbuch'.†24 Further, 'Schlözer, Vorschlag, das Russische vollkommen richtig und genau mit lateinischer Schrift auszudrücken'. In general 'Herr Hofrat Schlözer' would appear to be the patriarch of whom the others profess to be the disciples.

'Schlözer's Nestor: A work indispensable to anyone wishing to acquaint himself with the critical approach to Slavonic history in general and the Russian annals in particular.'

Page me40.16
Of Voigt's Geschichte Preussens:

'Was the first to acquaint the Bohemians with the monuments of Antiquity.'†25

Page me40.16

Also cited:

'Johann Leonhard Frischen's Programmen von der slawischen Literatur', 1727-1736,

'which has elucidated the history of several Slavonic dialects'.

Page me40.16

'Slawischer Bücherdruck in Würtenberg im 16ten Jahrhundert. Ein literarischer Bericht von Chr. Friedr. Schnurrer, Prof. in Tübingen, 1799' —

'a very valuable book which contains the finest and most important contributions to the history of Wendish and Croat bibliography'.

Page me40.16

Others cited are: Schlözer, Allgemeine Nordische Geschichte. Joh. Christoph de Jordan, De originibus Slavicis opus etc., Vienna 1745, fol. 2. Father Gelasius Dobner, ad Hajek, Annales Bohemorum, Prague 1761 and '63. (Of this Schlözer remarks: primus delirare desiit.†a) Stritter, Memoriae populorum ad Danubium e Script. Byzantinis, Petersburg 1774. Gercken, Versuch in der ältesten Geschichte der Slaven, Leipzig 1771. Gatterer's Einleitung in die synchronistische Universalhistorie, Göttingen 1771, and Gebhardi, Allgemeine Welthistorie, 1789.

Page Break me40.17

Page me40.17

Of all these works only the titles are given, with the exception of the opinions extracted above. Voilá le 'Slavin'.†b

Page me40.17

As regards the 3rd work, the title is: Dr. M.W. Heffter, Der Weltkampf der Deutschen und Slaven seit dem Ende des 5ten Jahrhunderts, 1847 (costs 7/-). Even in his preface the author admits that he only has a detailed and first-hand knowledge of Slavonic history in so far as it refers to the Prussian 'Fatherland'. More than 3/4 of his book of 481 pages is devoted to the period between the end of the 5th century and 1147. Only here and there does the remainder go beyond the 13th, or at latest the 14th, century, and then quite cursorily.

Page me40.17

Having given you an opinion on these two works, I await your instructions whether or not to order them. Another book by Heffter has been published: Das Slawentum, Leipzig 1852 (45 pages or so). Constitutes the 10th booklet in the Brockhaus series Unterhaltungen, Belehrungen etc.†c A popular compendium of Slavonic history. It was from this little book I learned that in 1849 Nicholas issued a ukase by which 'all his subjects were strictly forbidden to take part in Pan-Slavism'.

Page me40.17

At the Museum I discovered, and made extracts from, 5 manuscript folio volumes on Russia (18th century only). They are part of the literary legacy of ARCHDEACON Coxe, known for his zeal as a collector.†26 They contain many original (hitherto unpublished) letters from English ambassadors in Petersburg to the Cabinet here, some of them VERY COMPROMISING INDEED. Amongst the papers dated 1768 there is a manuscript by one of the Embassy attachés on 'the character of the Russian nation'.†d I shall send you some extracts from it. There is also interesting information on the Russian 'artels' by the Embassy chaplain, a cousin of Pitt's.†e

Page Break me40.18

Page me40.18

Although anti-Russian, recent French writings are, with few exceptions, almost all tinged with Pan-Slavism. Thus Desprez,†a but more particularly Cyprien Robert who, in Paris in 1848, published the journal, La Pologne. Annales contemporaines des peuples de l'Europe orientale, etc. The same man has published, among other things, Les Slaves de la Turquie, édition de 1844, précédée d'une introduction, etc., 8°, Paris 1852. Further, Le Monde slave, son passé, son état présent et son avenir, Paris 1852. A Parisian author,†b whose nom de guerre is Edmond, but who is said to be a Pole, is exceptional in having published an exceedingly venomous attack on Russian pretensions to socialism, and comments on their communes, etc. I haven't yet been able to trace this, but shall have a look at the Revue des deux Mondes which apparently contains extracts from it.

Page me40.18

I began this letter today with the intention of sending you masses of gossip. But, having strayed off in another direction and time being short, I shall leave that till tomorrow and confine myself for today to telling you that Heise, under the influence of strong liquor (so Imandt writes), is rapidly approaching his end†c; that Oswald — of tobacco and refugee fame — who doesn't speak a word of French, has been appointed Professor of the French Language at UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, London; that Ruge's friends are putting it around that he's suffering from 'dropsy' though it's probably nothing but water on the brain; that a number of German worthies (Faucher, Meyen, Franck, Tausenau, etc.) will be meeting tomorrow chez mine host Kerb, in order to achieve an entente cordiale as to the Fatherland's requirements, and that 'Meyen' has expressed the 'hope' that he can persuade Bucher to 'take part' in this confabulation; finally, that Proudhon has become a director of the royal imperial French railways.

Page me40.18

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.18

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.19

6
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.19
[London,] 5 March 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,

Next week I shall take a closer look at the Heffter.†a If there's anything to it, I shall order it. Eichhoff's Histoire de la langue et de la littérature des Slaves, Paris 1839, is very poor indeed. Apart from the grammatical section, which I'm unable to assess (but I notice that the Lithuanians and Letts are said to be Slavs. Isn't that NONSENSE?), the rest is mostly plagiarisms from Schaffarik.†b The fellow also gives samples of the Slavs' vernacular poetry in the original, together with a French translation. Indeed, it was amongst these that I found Igor's expedition.†22 In essence, the poem is a call for unity on the part of the Russian princes just before the invasion by the Mongol hordes proper. The poem contains a curious passage, 'Voici les jolies filles des Gothes entonnent leurs chants au bord de la Mer noire'.†c From this it would seem that the Getae or Goths celebrated the victory of the Turkish Polovtsians†27 over the Russians. The whole poem is epic-Christian, although heathen elements are still strongly in evidence. The Bohemian epic Zaboi (Samo?), in the anthology of Bohemian epic poetry in a German translation published by Hanka and Swoboda,†28 is, on the other hand, fairly polemical and fanatically anti-German. Appears to be directed against a German capitano of Dagobert's who was beaten by the Bohemians. But it is a call for vengeance as much upon Christianity as upon the Germans, who are reproached in the most naively poetical terms with having, amongst other things, sought to compel the worthy Bohemians to be satisfied with only one wife. Other folk poetry I discovered (the Poles have none save for Adalbert's Prayer to the Mother of God†29) are:

Page Break me40.20
Page me40.20

Götze, Fürst Vladimir und seine Tafelrunde,†a 1819. Stimmen des russischen Volkes, 1828.

Page me40.20

Kapper (Siegfried), Slavische Melodien, Leipzig 1844. By the same, Die Gesänge der Serben, 1852. (More comprehensive than [those] of Jakob.†b Lastly, by Vuk Stephanovitsch, Serbische Hochzeitslieder. German by E. Wesely. Pest 1826.

Page me40.20

Works which I have noted and shall be looking through for you next week are, besides the Cyprien and the Desprez†c: Südslavische Wanderungen im Sommer 1850, 2 vols, Leipzig 1851.†d (Has also been translated into English.) Betrachtungen über das Fürstenthum Serbien, Vienna 1851. Die serbische Bewegung in Südungarn, 1851 Berlin. Slawismus und Pseudomagyarismus. Von aller Menschen Freunde, nur der Pseudomagyaren Feinde, Leipzig 1842. Die Beschwerden und Klagen der Slaven in Ungarn, Leipzig 1843.

Page me40.20

I don't remember whether the Neue Preussische Zeitung is to be had in Manchester. At present it is very interesting. The Prussian government has now, as once Louis XVIII, got its chambre introuvable, and the bureaucratic government is beginning to be afraid of the backwoods squires, who are taking their victory au sérieux.†30 During debates on rural parish, rural court, and land tenure relations, when, as old Dolleschall said, 'it's his bread and butter that is at stake'†e — the clashes in the Prussian Chamber are becoming serious. You will have seen, among other things, that Count Pfeil claimed for landowners the privilege of flogging their people, and boasted of having himself performed heroic deeds in this line. Now the Left has dug up posters of 1848, signed by this same Pfeil in 1848, and altogether in the style of the 'crazy year'.†31 There have even been duels between the two sides, and today the Neue Preussische Zeitung carries a LEADER†f roundly declaring that there are 'depraved scoundrels' in its party just as there are very 'noble' people in the Liberal Party. It preaches 'moderation', 'conciliation', 'a battle of principles, but no personalities'. The Left is adjured to reflect that 'the Mountain will always swallow the Gironde'†32 and to consider that 'peace or no peace, for Prussia there lies ahead a time of very great confusion, at home or abroad' and that at this moment a 'party split' means 'suicide'. Capital, is it not? And withal no one in Prussia cares a rap about the Chamber and its splits. All the more significant, then, this admission of fear. Father Leo delivered a lecture before the King†a on Münzer (part of which was printed in the Neue Preussische†b). One might almost think it was a direct riposte to your essay in the Revue der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung.†c Essential, of course, that the Reformation be absolved of the responsibility of having given birth to the Revolution. Münzer was a 'fanatic' who said: 'intelligo ut credam'.†d Luther said: 'credo ut intelligam'.†e The Spenersche's†f reply was that in his later years Luther repented, etc., of the abject role he had played in politics. As you see, the ferment is at work even in official circles.

Page Break me40.21

Page me40.21

Apropos the Reformation, it was Austria who, from the start, laid the foundations of the Slav peril at a time when all races save the Russian were inclined to support the Reformation. With the Reformation came the translation of the Bible into all the popular Slav dialects. And thereby of course awakening national consciousness. On the other hand, deep-rooted alliance with the German Protestant North. Had Austria not suppressed this movement, Protestantism would have provided not only the foundations for the dominance of the German spirit, but also and equally, bulwarks against Greek-Orthodox Russia. Not a pitfall but Austria has driven the Germans into it and, in Germany as in the East, she paved the way for the Russians.

Page me40.21

Did you read about last Friday's parliamentary sitting,†g at which Evans reproached Palmerston for feigning incredulity when, 3 1/2 months ago, he warned him about Kars†15; at which he said that Panmure in the despatch informing Simpson, 'You ARE NOMINATED SUCCESSOR OF RAGLAN', added 'TAKE CARE OF DOWB'. The unfortunate Simpson replied: 'REPEAT YOUR DESPATCH', whereat Panmure ('Lord Carnot' as Evans calls him), 'TAKE CARE OF DOWBIGGIN', a cousin of his†33; at which, finally, Lord Hamilton slated Evans for having, after the battle of Inkerman,†34 advised Raglan to abandon cannon and TRENCHES and to embark the British army. The day before yesterday, poor Evans made amende honorable.†a That there was a betrayal at Kars would seem to be pretty clear from the written account of a certain Swan,†b recently returned from the East — a betrayal which took place not during the last few days but earlier, in order to bring the situation about.

Page Break me40.22

Page me40.22

Now for Seiler. Threatened with prosecution by the SHERIFF, he set off for America some 3 weeks ago by the Southampton STEAMER, fully intending on arrival in Halifax to telegraph the New-Yorker Staatszeitung (for which he once wrote) as follows: 'Sebastian Seiler, the famous author of Kaspar Hauser, has landed safely on the west coast of the Atlantic Ocean.' The great man left behind his Alexander II, 55 pages, mostly extracts from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, one copy of which was to be sent on immediately in his wake. For it is to appear on both sides of the Atlantic. This gossipy rubbish he surrounded with a great deal of humbug, having parts of it copied out by his wife, sister-in-law, etc., so that one and all they were astounded by POOR Sebastian's untiring industry. Negotiations with the London booksellers over this Alexander II served to give a veneer of erudition to his 'business errands' to town where every day he carefully investigated the quality of the LOBSTER and suchlike, not forgetting the French 'omelette'. Besides this Alexander, he has left other unpleasant surprises behind. You will remember that Liebknecht signed a bill for him, lured on by the foolish hope that Seiler would deduct a few pounds in his favour from the amount discounted. The bill fell due but was not presented. Seiler made out that he had paid it. He had only renewed it. Two days after he left, Liebknecht got a letter from a lawyer in the City requiring him to pay the bill. Pieper, whom Seiler's green-bespectacled sister-in-law loves for the sake of his glassy eyes, was despatched to the GREENGROCER. Consternation in the FAMILY. For Sebastian had already received the money to pay the bill, but had poured it down his gullet. Love, however, overcomes all obstacles, and his wife is convinced that she can lay claim to love only once, and then only from Sebastian. Hence she is trying to arrange matters. But the GREENGROCER is grave and glum, becoming daily more enlightened as to the WHEREABOUTS OF HIS DEAR SON-IN-LAW. The thing is still pending. Meanwhile fresh bills, allegedly honoured, keep arriving every day.

Page me40.22

Levy. Sent here by the Düsseldorf workers with a twofold mission.

Page Break me40.23

Page me40.23

1. Denunciation of Lassalle. And, having considered the matter very carefully, I think they are right. Since the countess†a got her 300,000 talers,†35 Lassalle has changed completely; deliberately repulsing the workers, a sybarite, coquetting with the Blues.†b He is further accused of having constantly exploited the party for his filthy personal ends and wanting to make use of the workers themselves for personal crimes in the interests of the law-suit. The law-suit ended as follows: Count Hatzfeldt's head clerk, Stockum who, as you know, was subsequently sentenced at the Assizes to 5 years' penal servitude, had quarrelled with the count. He gave Lassalle to understand that he had in his possession documents which could have the count put in chains for perjury, forgery, etc. Lassalle promises him 10,000 talers. On the other hand, Lassalle persuades Kösteritz, the Chief Public Prosecutor (who has been compelled to resign as a result of this affair), to let Count Hatzfeldt know that there's a bill of indictment hanging over his head. Hatzfeldt is making a bolt for Paris when Lassalle hands him the incriminating documents in return for his signing the settlement with the countess, and withdraws the bill of indictment. (Kösteritz, of course, was acting purely as his INSTRUMENT.) Hence it was not his legal acumen that brought the law-suit to a sudden close, but a quite vulgar intrigue. Lassalle did not pay Stockum the 10,000 talers, and the workers are right in saying that such a breach of faith would be excusable only if he had handed over the money to the party instead of fraudulently keeping it for the countess. They report a host of personal dirty tricks which I cannot repeat because too many to remember. For instance, Lassalle gambled in foreign government paper with Scheuer of Düsseldorf, who advanced him the money for the purpose. They lost. Meanwhile Scheuer went bankrupt. Lassalle wins the law-suit. Scheuer demands the money he advanced Lassalle. The latter contemptuously draws his attention to § 6 of the Code, which forbids gambling on foreign Exchanges. The workers say they turned a blind eye to everything done by Lassalle because of his plea that he was involved in the law-suit for reasons of honour. Now, having won, instead of getting the countess to pay him for his work and achieving independence, he is, they say, living shamefully under her thumb as homme entretenu,†c WITHOUT ANY PRETEXT WHATEVER. He had always boasted about what he would do as soon as the law-suit had been won and now he was casting them aside, deliberately and defiantly, as redundant instruments of no further use. He had attended one more (private) meeting on New Year's Day because a French colonel was present. To everyone's astonishment, he addressed 60 working-men exclusively on the subject of 'the struggle of civilisation against barbarism', the Western Powers versus Russia. Apparently he had planned to go to Berlin, play the grand gentleman there and open a salon. On his return, he promised the countess in Levy's presence to set up 'a court of literati' for her. Likewise in Levy's presence, he was constantly reiterating his 'dictatorial aspirations', etc., etc. (he seems to see himself quite differently from the way we see him, regarding himself as able to subdue the world because of his ruthlessness in a private intrigue, as though a man of real worth would sacrifice 10 years to such a bagatelle). An instance, by the by, of how dangerous he can be: in order to smuggle a labour party man into the police, ostensibly as a spy, he gave him one of my letters with instructions to say he had stolen it from Lassalle to establish his credibility. The workers further say that, being the diplomat he is, he would not have behaved so brusquely towards them had it not been his direct intention to go over to the bourgeois party. At the same time, he believes his influence is such that if he climbed onto a table at a moment of insurrection and harangued the masses, etc., he could talk them round. According to Levy, he is so much hated that, whatever we might decide, the workers would massacre him should he be in Düsseldorf at the moment of action. They are, by the by, convinced that he would lose no time in placing himself at the disposal of the other side should he hear of anything suspicious.

Page Break me40.24

Page me40.24

These are nothing but isolated points, deduced from what I heard, and only partially retained. The whole thing made a distinct impression on myself and Freiligrath, however prejudiced in Lassalle's favour and mistrustful of workers' tittle-tattle I may have been. I told Levy that it was, of course, impossible to reach any conclusion on the strength of a report from one side only; suspicion was in place whatever the circumstances; they should continue to keep an eye on the man but for the time being avoid any public row; we might perhaps find some opportunity of forcing Lassalle to make his position clear, etc., etc.
Page me40.24

Qu'en pensez-vous?†a I should like to have Lupus' opinion too.
Page me40.24

2. The second purpose of Levy's mission was to give me information on how things stand with the workers in the Rhine Province. The Düsseldorf workers are still in contact with the

Page Break me40.25
Cologne people, amongst whom there are no longer any 'gentlemen'. But those chiefly concerned with propaganda are now the factory workers in Solingen, Iserlohn and district, Elberfeld and the ducal-Westphalia area. In the iron districts the fellows are all for force, and are held back only by the prospect of a French revolution and the fact that 'the Londoners think the time is not yet ripe'.†36 If the thing drags on much longer Levy believes that a rising will be difficult to prevent. But whatever the circumstances, an insurrection in Paris would be the signal. These people seem to be firmly convinced that we and our friends would instantly hasten to join them. They naturally feel the need for political and military leaders. Not that one can in any way blame the chaps for that. But I fear that, with their exceedingly artless plans, they would be smashed to smithereens before we had so much as a chance of leaving England. At all events, we owe it them to point out exactly what is and what isn't feasible from the military point of view. I have, OF COURSE, declared that, circumstances permitting, we would range ourselves with the Rhenish workers; that any uprising, undertaken off their own bat, without prior initiatives in Paris or Vienna or Berlin, would be idiotic; that, should Paris give the signal, it would be advisable, whatever the circumstances, to risk all, since then even the ill-effects of a momentary defeat could themselves be no more than momentary; that I and my friends would seriously consider what direct action might be taken by the working population of the Rhine Province, and that in due course they should again send someone to London, but do nothing without prior agreement.
Page me40.25

The tanners of Elberfeld (or Barmen?) who were pretty reactionary in 1848 and '49, are now particularly eager for revolution. Levy assures me that the workers in the Wupper valley regard you, personally, as 'their' man. It would seem, by the way, that on the Rhine the belief in a revolution in France is fairly widespread, and even the philistines are saying: 'This time it will be different from 1848. This time there'll be people like Robespierre, etc., instead of the chatter-boxes of 1848.' On the Rhine at least, democracy's reputation has sunk very LOW.
Page me40.25

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.25
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.26

7
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.26
Manchester, 7 March 1856

Dear Marx,

Much obliged to you for your exhaustive letter ad Slavica.†a Eichhoff is already known to me as a philological quack who has actually out-quacked Klaproth (who did know something). I shall look into the business of the Goths in Igor†22 as soon as I have got the book. However, it has been established that a number of Goths remained in the Crimea until the 10th, and possibly the 11th, century; at least they figure as Goths in Byzantine [sources]. Could you let me know the title and price of Hanka and Swoboda's Bohemian anthology?†28 It is sure to be highly uncritical, for they are both complete asses. — Polish folk songs were published somewhere or other during the 40s. — I have found quotations from Götze, Wladimir,†b etc., in Grimm's translation of Wuk's Serbische Grammatik with the comment 'unfortunately without the Russian text'. Kapper is a Prague Jew who published his Südslavische Wanderungen in the Bohemian constitutionalist paper†c in 1848/49. He's a writer of belles lettres, but whether his translations are any good I couldn't say — j'en doute cependant.†d All the Serbian wedding songs have been translated by the Jakob woman.†e The political works you mention on the Hungarian and Turkish Serbs might be worth looking at if they are in the Museum.†f

Page me40.26
The Neue Preussische Zeitung isn't available in Manchester, but I followed the Pfeil business in the Kölner and the Augsburger†g and derived much joy from it. However the penitent LEADER in the N. Pr.†h was, of course, new to me; really too delightful, the sudden discovery that despite all the feudal gewgaws, nobility and bourgeoisie are today au fond†i one.
Page me40.26
What you say about Austria in regard to the Slavs and Protestantism is perfectly right. Fortunately a very strong form of Protestantism has survived in Slovakia, and has greatly contributed to the inaction of the Slovaks against the Hungarians,†a while in Bohemia every serious national movement other than the proletarian will in addition receive a strong admixture of Hussite historical memories which in turn will weaken the specifically national element. Pity about the Slovenian peasants who fought so splendidly in the 15th century.

Page Break me40.27
Page me40.27
I shall read about the Kars affair. What is Swan's piece called?†b
Page me40.27
The course taken by the Seileriad will assuredly please everyone except Liebknecht and the GREENGROCER. An unpleasant whiff of the cesspit.
Page me40.27
Lassalle. It would be a pity about the fellow because of his great ability, but these goings-on are really too bad. He was always a man one had to keep a devilish sharp eye on and as a real Jew from the Slav border was always to exploit anyone for his own private ends on party pretexts. And then his urge to push his way into polite society, de parvenir,†c if only for appearance's sake, to disguise the greasy Breslau Jew with all kinds of pomade and paint was always repulsive. However all these were simply things which made it necessary to keep a sharp eye on him. But if he gets up to the kind of tricks that will actually result in his changing parties, I can't blame the Düsseldorf workers for the hatred they have conceived against him. I shall go and see Lupus this evening and put the matter to him. None of us ever trusted Lassalle but we did, of course, protect him against stupidities emanating from H. Bürgers. To my mind, everything should be allowed to proceed in the manner you prescribed for the Düsseldorfers. If he can be induced to commit a direct and OVERT ACT against the party, then we shall have him. But as yet there would seem to be none of that and in any case a row would be quite out of place.
Page me40.27
The business of the Hatzfeldt woman and the 300,000 talers†35 was quite new to me. I imagined she was simply receiving something monthly or yearly. He can never be forgiven for having saved Hatzfeldt from the black and yellow jacket.†d I shall come back to the other matters.
Page me40.27
Your

F.E.

Page me40.27
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.28

8
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.28
[London] Tuesday [25 March 1856]†37

Dear Engels,

In one of my next letters I shall reply to your last. Today simply an inquiry, to which I should like, if possible, an answer by return. I did not send any article to the Tribune today because I hadn't finished reading the BLUE BOOK†38 on Kars†a — I only got hold of it late yesterday evening. I have to send off my article†b on Friday, at the same time as the one I am expecting from you. Well, ad rem†c:
Page me40.28

A large part of the BLUE BOOK is of a purely military nature; you will be able to see later whether anything can be done with it. But there's one point on which I want your critical OPINION, since it is also material to the political-diplomatic aspect of the matter and I have got to discuss it in this Friday's article. At the end of June the Turks proposed to send reinforcements to Redoute-Kaleh†d in order to operate from there in the direction of Kutais,†e etc. The British government, on the other hand, wanted to send a relief force to Erzerum via Trebizond and, it seems, to abandon Kars as a place of little importance, regarding Erzerum as the centre of resistance. At all events this dispute meant that the moment propitious for action was irretrievably lost. So that you may be FULLY informed on the QUESTION I append here the crucial EXTRACTS.
Page me40.28

Stratford de Redcliffe to Clarendon. 28th June, 1855.

* 'The Turkish ministers, who had talked of sending 10,000 men from Batoum†f to Erzeroum, now, in their embarrassment, incline to another plan. They propose to form an entrenched camp at Redoute-Kaleh, and to concentrate there the corps of General Vivian — completed by a draft of 10,000 men from the Bulgarian army — that of General Beatson, and the detachment from Batoum, reduced to 7,000 men. The total of these combined forces would be about 30,000 of all arms. Stationary they might operate as a diversion in favour of the army at Kars or Erzeroum; advancing by Kutais or Georgia they might either attack the Russians in the rear or force them to retreat.'*

Page Break me40.29
Page me40.29
Id to id., 30th June, 1855.

* 'The meeting which I had previously announced, took place this morning at the Grand Vizier's†a house on the Bosphorus. In addition to his Highness, the Seraskier†b and Fuad Effendi were present. I was accompanied by Brigadier-General Mansfield.... It appears, that the Russians advancing from Gumri†c with an amount of force varying from 20-30,000, had presented themselves before Kars; that a partial engagement of Cavalry had taken place, followed two days later by an attack, which had been repulsed, on the part of the enemy, and that the town was threatened with a siege.... It was clear, to all present, that whether the Russians besieged or turned Kars, the Turkish army required an effort to be made for its relief with all practicable despatch, and that of 3 possible modes of acting for that purpose, the only one likely to prove effective was an expedition by Kutais into Georgia. To send reinforcements by Trebizond would be at best a palliative. To establish an entrenched camp at Redoute-Kaleh, would, at this unhealthy season, be equivalent to consigning the troops to destruction. The real question was, whether a force numerically sufficient, and in all respects effective, could be collected in time at Kutais to make an excursion into Georgia and threaten the communications of the Russian army.... The Turkish ministers proposed that the expeditionary force should be composed of 12,000 men from Batoum and the neighbouring stations; of the troops made over to General Vivian, and estimated at 10,000 of all arms; of General Beatson's Irregular Cavalry, of 10,000 men to be detracted from the army in Bulgaria as the complement of the Turkish contingent; of 5,000 more derived from the same source; of an Egyptian regiment of horse now here, and of another regiment expected from Tunis. To these the Seraskier proposed to add 2,000 Albanians by way of riflemen. These several forces ... would present a total of 44,000 men, not perhaps to be reckoned with prudence at more than 36,000 effectives.'*

Page me40.29
Id. to id., 1st July, 1855

* '...the proposed diversion at Redoute-Kaleh originated with the Porte.'*

Page me40.29
Clarendon to Stratford de Redcliffe. July 13th, 1855.

* '...Her Majesty's†d government are of opinion, that the wiser course would be to send reinforcements to the rear of the Turkish army, instead of sending an expedition to the rear of the Russian army. The reinforcements might go to Trebizond, and be directed from thence upon Erzeroum. The distance from Trebizond to Erzeroum is less than that from Redoute-Kaleh to Tiflis,†e and the march is through a friendly instead of through a hostile country; and at Erzeroum the army would meet supporting friends instead of opposing enemies, and supplies instead of famine. If the army at Kars cannot maintain that position against the Russians, [...] it will be easier to defeat them by the whole force collected, than by divided portions of that force; and a defeat would be the more decisive, the further it took place within the Turkish frontier. Trebizond is a place where supplies of all kinds might be landed etc.'*

Page me40.29

Id. to id., 14th July, 1855 (telegraphic).

* 'The plan for reinforcing the army at Kars contained in your despatch of the 30th June and 1st inst., is disapproved. [...] Trebizond ought to be the base of operations, and if the Turkish army of Kars and Erzeroum cannot hold out at the latter place against the Russians, it might fall back on Trebizond, where it would easily be reinforced.'*

Page Break me40.30

Page me40.30

Id. to id., 16th July, 1855.

* 'If, indeed, Omer Pasha ... should determine to take any part of his own army, with Tunisians and Albanians to Redoute-Kaleh, Her Majesty's government would have nothing to say to that proceeding, but as regards the contingent under General Vivian and General Beatson's Horse, Her Majesty's government abide by their opinion that they should be directed through Trebizond or Erzeroum.'*

Page me40.30

Lord Panmure to General Vivian, 14th July, 1855.

* '...I place such full reliance on your professional ability, that I feel no anxiety lest you should undertake any expedition of a nature so wild and ill-digested as that contemplated by the Porte.... A coup de main by means of suddenly throwing an army on the coast to threaten, or even to attack an enemy's stronghold, is one thing, but a deliberate expedition to invade an enemy's country, and on his own territory to make war upon him, is quite another.'*

Page me40.30

I must confess that Clarendon's strategy strikes me as curious in the extreme, as does also the fine distinction drawn by Lord Panmure Carnot favouring the Sevastopol 'coup de main' against the Turkish plan for a strategic move in Georgia.

Page me40.30

If possible, then, an answer to these points by return.

Page me40.30

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me40.30
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

9
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.30
[London,] 10 April 1856

DEAR Frederic,

It is high time I wrote again. I've been prevented from doing so by all kinds of domesticities.
Page me40.30

Enclosed 1 letter from Levy to me, from Düsseldorf. The Touroute mentioned in the letter is a French ex-colonel. He called yesterday while I was out and so I shall not be seeing him for several days as he has gone to Liverpool. He had a longish conversation with my wife, the quintessence of which is contained in enclosure 2,†39 composed by Madame herself. The M. mentioned in Levy's letter is Miquel.

Page Break me40.31
Page me40.31

In a few days' time you will receive Igor,†22 which has now arrived; Russian-German; the BLUE BOOK†a; Destrilhes, Confidences sur la Turquie and a cutting from L'Homme, which I have mislaid and hence cannot send today, viz. a letter from a déporté in Cayenne, Tassilier by name, to M. le Ministre de la Marine,†b in which the frightful abominations to which Boustrapa†40 subjects the deportees are revealed.†41 You would have had the BLUE BOOK long ago but d'abord†c the PRESSURE of daily events has several times compelled me to suspend work on my articles†d on this subject and write about other themes, so that I was unable to do without the book. Then the friends whom you know arrived. They wanted to have the NOVELTY just for one day, and had not yet returned it a week later.
Page me40.31

AS TO THESE KARS PAPERS, The Times, in three fulminating LEADERS,†e gave a rehash of the section covering August 1854 to ABOUT February 1855, i.e. did not so much as touch on the really interesting and crucial period. The object of this is, of course, to shift all RESPONSIBILITY from the Ministry onto Redcliffe and the Turkish pashas in Asia. The best of it is that the English government, as you will see from Destrilhes, forcibly kept at the helm Redcliffe's rotten Turkish ministry, thus partly condoning and partly bringing about the abominations of which Williams complains. That, however, is only a minor matter. By a procedure similar to the one used in Stieber's case†f — namely, by producing proof of FALSIFIED DATES AND FORGED PASSAGES — I have, in my view, proved irrefutably that the responsibility for planning the fall of Kars and for the systematic execution of that plan, lay with the British GOVERNMENT, which furthermore had the good fortune this time to figure in Bonaparte's eyes as zealous 'in the cause'. I have not, OF COURSE, gone into the military aspect proper, i.e. the DEFENCE OF KARS; I have some MISGIVINGS, however, about the 'stature' of Williams.

Page Break me40.32
Jones, to whom I have shown my manuscript, intends IF POSSIBLE — i.e. if he can get together enough money to take St. Martin's Hall†a — to LECTURE on the FALL OF KARS at the said venue before the debate on it in Parliament begins.
Page me40.32
* There is now going on a bitter controversy between the Chartists and the Urquhartites at Newcastle upon Tyne, London, Birmingham, and several other places.*†42 As you will have heard, Jones, with Finlen for shadow, has proclaimed himself dictator of Chartism and set up a new organisation which, INDEED, is in process of growing but has, on the other hand, evoked a great storm of indignation against him.†43
Page me40.32
The 'speculation upon speculation' — not in ideas but in shares — which has invaded the Rhine Province and Berlin from France would appear to be proliferating as viciously there as on the other side of the Rhine. Jeremiads about this social MISCHIEF, this infatuation, are appearing in the Ministry's Preussische Correspondenz, in which the imminence of an 'inevitable' and general financial crisis IS SERIOUSLY AND EMPHATICALLY hinted at.
Page me40.32
You will know about Heine's death, but not about Ludwig Simon of Trier pissing — passing water, I mean — on his grave in the New York Neue Zeit run by Löwe, quondam lion†b of the Parliament of the 'Cherman' Nation†44 after its retreat to Stuckert.†c This poet or minnesinger of the female Yid, Madame Hohenscheisse-esche or-linden of Frankfurt am Main, is naturally of the opinion that Heine was no poet; he had 'no sensibility', was full of 'malevolence' and calumniated not only Kobes I,†d but even Berne's†e lady friend, the great Berne's 'mouse', muse or moose — the Strauss woman.†f
Page me40.32
Down here there is A SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF SMALL TRADESMEN. This SOCIETY publishes a weekly rag†g for the said protection. In that weekly our friend Seiler 'along with his wife' is pilloried as a 'SWINDLER'.
Page me40.32
BUT greater things are afoot. Pieper, thanks to his genius, has again been living a freebooter's existence since January and, despite the not inconsiderable SUBSIDIES provided by me, has been daily on the qui vive vis-á-vis his LANDLADY. Now it has suddenly occurred to him that all he requires to become a great man is a little capital. Seiler's SISTER-IN-LAW, the GREENGROCER'S 2nd daughter, a tallow-candle in green spectacles, has long been mortally in love with the said Pieper. Her entire person green like verdigris rather than veg., and GREENS to boot without ANY MEAT or FLESH WHATEVER. While declaring her to be ugly as the day, Pieper has nevertheless discovered that she is not without intelligence, of which she gives incontrovertible proof by regarding our Hanoverian lambkin as a German Byron manqué. So, the day before yesterday, therefore, Pieper, to whom this person clings, not simply like a burr but like a CATERPILLAR, resolved to pour out his heart to Seiler's father-in-law. He did not wish to do so in front of his 'beloved' for fear he might have to kiss her, which indeed is HARD WORK for an occidental unaccustomed TO FEED UPON TALLOW. But in true Pieper-fashion, the declaration of love was combined with — a touch for a loan. Pieper could not disburden his heart to the GREENGROCER without inviting the GREENGROCER to disburden his POCKETS, not to say his till. On the grounds, that is, of his needing a little capital, SAY 20-40 POUNDS, TO CREATE HIMSELF A POSITION as a FASHIONABLE tutor. Meanwhile he intends to let his 'beloved' enjoy the pleasures of widowhood while still betrothed, nor will his compassion ever permit him to marry her. GREENS or no GREENS, the whole business is most unsavoury, but Pieper imagines he will come out of it as a man of honour, i.e. AT A CERTAIN EPOCH LOOMING IN THE FUTURE repay down to the last farthing the advances he 'hopes' to obtain from his would-be father-in-law, generously leaving him his daughter into the bargain. Since that fateful day he has been back to my house only once, for a minute, while I was out. Called himself a 'happy man'. Little Jenny called him 'BENEDICK THE MARRIED MAN',†a but little Laura said: 'BENEDICK WAS A WIT, HE IS BUT “A CLOWN”, AND “A CHEAP CLOWN” TOO.' The children are constantly reading Shakespeare.

Page Break me40.33
Page me40.33
Liebknecht has at last achieved something, to wit, a little Liebknecht.
Page me40.33
By 'His Majesty's supreme and special command' my wife has received a passport from Berlin. In May she will travel to Trier with the whole FAMILY for 3-4 months.
Page me40.33
Salut. Regards to Lupus.

K.M.

Page me40.33
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.34

10
ENGELS TO MARX†1
IN LONDON
Page me40.34
Manchester, 14 April 1856

DEAR Marx,

I eagerly look forward to the BLUE BOOK.†a But since I shall not have time for the process of chronological comparison to which you subjected it, you might give me a few hints some time as to the main snags; I shall have to confine myself solely to the MILITARY side, which I shall go through carefully, comparing it with Sandwith's book†b when possible. Up here we've heard absolutely nothing about Jones' coup d'état†43 and the consequent pother; I must certainly start getting The People's Paper again.

Page me40.34

Never before has the speculation shown such sparkling form in Germany. Mevissen is king of the Rhine Province, has bought the Indépendance jointly with Morny, and is setting up an international (HURRAH!) bank in Luxembourg (!). I have seen the jeremiad in the Preussische Correspondenz. However, steps have been taken to ensure that neither Manteuffel nor von der Heydt suppresses the swindle; Crédits mobiliers†45 are being set up in Hanover, Leipzig et al. and what these fail to accomplish is sure to be made good by unofficial crookery. The final phase of the gamble is now beginning: Russia is importing capital and speculation and, given these distances, these hundreds of miles of railways, the gamble may well develop in such a way as to come to an early and sticky end. Once we hear of THE GRAND IRKUTSK TRUNK LINE WITH BRANCHES TO PEKIN, etc., etc., that will be the moment for us to pack up. This time the CRASH will be quite unprecedented; all the ingredients are there: intensity, universal scope, and the involvement of all propertied and ruling social elements. What I find funniest is your worthy Englishman's unshakable conviction, that, in view of the 'sound' state of TRADE, nothing like that could possibly happen here. It is clear enough that no one is speculating heavily in industrial production, it being common knowledge that a modest amount of investment in direct production could bring about saturation in all markets within a year, and this particularly so long as the colossal calls on capital for communications persist. But as a result of speculation in communications, even industrial production is increasing out of all proportion, though more slowly than e.g. in 1833-36 or 1842-45. This year cotton prices are rising rapidly despite a hitherto unprecedented crop of 3,500,000 bales, which looks no larger this year than e.g. 2 1/2 million bales would have looked in 1850. Moreover, relative to England, the Continent is taking almost 3 times as much as 5 years ago, as is proved by the following table of exports from America between 1 September and 1 April each year (in thousands of bales):

Page Break me40.35

	1856	1855	1854	1853
Export to England over 7 months	1,131	963	840	1,100 to France
over 7 months	354	249	229	255
to other European ports over 7 months	346	167	179	204†a

Page me40.35

So the Continent which, in 1853, took 45/110 = 1/3 of the English figure, took 70/113 = 5/8 in 1856. And to this must be added what was obtained by the Continent from England. As you can see, the growth of the industry on the Continent is out of all proportion to that in England, and the worthy British, BEING RATHER ON THE DECLINE, have every reason not to OVERTRADE in their cotton industry; 1853 and 1856, however, provide the best comparison, since in both years the crop was a very large one — 3,300,000 and 3,500,000 bales. The substantial exports to France are purely fictitious, for a portion goes from Le Havre to Switzerland, Baden, Frankfurt and Antwerp. But it is in this enormous leap forward of industry on the Continent that the most viable embryo of English revolution lies.

Page me40.35

While I see the rag Protection for Trade from time to time, I didn't, alas, have a chance to admire amicum†b Sebastian†c therein.

Page me40.35

The Pieperiad is becoming distinctly distasteful. This little tale has some very amusing aspects, but also some nasty twists, and the thread of vanity running through it creates a disagreeable impression. Only let the fellow out of your sight for the space of 2 minutes and he'll go and do something idiotic on the assumption, shared by no one else, that he's a genius. I hope that he'll have to marry his tallow candle and that he doesn't get that little sum; it would serve him right.

Page Break me40.36

Page me40.36

Should the case arise, we must demonstrate our gratitude for the gallantry shown to your wife by supreme and special command.†a Whatever happens he†b must be given his ALLOWANCE of champagne in his cachot.†c

Page me40.36

I found the Lassalliads†39 most entertaining; the ringleted Jewish noddle must look charming indeed above the red nightshirt and the 'marquisian' drapery, while his every movement betrays the Polish Izzy. All things considered, the fellow must produce a most sordid and repulsive impression.

Page me40.36

I am keeping Levy's letter here†d and shall write to you, tomorrow if possible, about sundry matters concerning the workers' business. It would, by the way, be advisable to secure letters containing this sort of stuff with sealing wax. At the same time I shall return you Levy's letter.

Page me40.36
I have already told you that I can hear again; three abscesses burst in my ear one after the other, and that did the trick.
Page me40.36
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.36
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

11
ENGELS TO WILHELM STEFFEN IN BRIGHTON
Page me40.36
Manchester, 15 April 1856

Dear Steffen,
Can you recommend a good map of Germany suitable for military studies and not too expensive — scale about 1:100,000 or, better still, 1:80,000, 1:60,000, etc. In addition a map, in rather more detail (1:60,000 to 1:40,000 would, of course, do), of the Rhine Province and Westphalia — a good one, however, and not too dear; the Prussian General Staff maps are, I believe, fearfully expensive and as yet incomplete. Even 1:150-200,000 might do for the map of Germany, that is not so important as that it should be good and really suitable. Provided it enables one to distinguish the general features of a battlefield, e.g. at Jena or Austerlitz,†46 even without an auxiliary plan, I shall be satisfied. The one for the Rhine Province and Westphalia should, of course, show what is shown on the 1 inch to the mile (about 1:60,000) English ORDNANCE MAP.

Page Break me40.37
Page me40.37
Little that's new up here. Lupus has a great deal to do at the moment, but for him, too, the lean holiday period is approaching. Is there a chance of your coming up to these parts in the summer?
Page me40.37

Your
F. Engels

Add. as before:
Care of Mchr. Ermen & Engels

Page me40.37
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

12
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.37
London, 16 April 1856

DEAR Frederic,

A packet went off to you today through the usual PARCELS company. It contains: 1. Kars PAPERS.†a 2. Igor.†22 3. Destrilhes, Confidences sur la Turquie. 4. 2 issues of L'Homme; in one, the letter from Cayenne, in the other, Pyat's litany to Marianne,†47 which he read aloud on 25 February of this year at a Chartist meeting in honour of the French Revolution. The good fellow was, of course, hoping to see a repetition of the row caused by his 'lettre á la reine'.†16 Was disappointed, however. From this you will also gather how subordinate is the attitude adopted by the French would-be revolutionaries here vis-á-vis 'Marianne'. 5. 2 cuttings from The People's Paper, my first 2 articles on the Kars PAPERS.†a Shall also send you third and final instalments. Since the original of Article I had gone astray, and time, not to mention Ernest Jones, was pressing, I had to do a hasty rehash of the Tribune article out of my head, so that sundry bits of nonsense have crept in which will certainly not elude your keen nose. BUT NEVER MIND THAT! I mention it simply to let you know why I didn't send you the thing straight away.

Page Break me40.38
Page me40.38

The day before yesterday a little banquet took place to celebrate the anniversary of The People's Paper. On this occasion, the times seeming to require it, I accepted the invitation, the more so since (AS ANNOUNCED IN THE PAPER) I alone of the whole emigration was invited, and the first toast also fell to me, i.e. I was asked to propose one to the souveraineté du prolétariat dans tous les pays.†b So I made a short SPEECH in English, which, however, I shall not allow to appear in print.†48 The end I sought has been achieved. Mr Talandier — who had to pay 2/6d for his TICKET — is now convinced, like the rest of the French and other émigré crews, that we are the Chartists' only 'intimate' allies and that, though we may hold aloof from public demonstrations and leave it to the FRENCHMEN to flirt openly with Chartism, it is always in our power to resume the position already allotted to us by history. This had become all the more necessary because, at the above-mentioned meeting of 25 February presided over by Pyat, the German lout Scherzer (OLD BOY) spoke and, in truly dreadful Straubingerian style,†49 denounced the German 'scholars', the 'intellectual workers', for having left them (the louts) in the lurch, thus forcing them to make fools of themselves in the eyes of the other nationalities. You will remember Scherzer from Paris days. I have met friend Schapper again several times and have found him very much the repentant sinner. The retirement in which he has been living for the past 2 years would seem RATHER to have sharpened his wits than otherwise. As you will realise, there are all sorts of contingencies in

Page Break me40.39

The second and third pages of Marx's letter to Engles of 16 April 1856

Page Break me40.40
Page Break me40.41
which it might be advantageous to have the man to hand AND STILL MORE, to have him out of the hands of Willich. Schapper is now furiously angry with the Windmill†50 louts.
Page me40.41
I shall forward your letter to Steffen. You ought to have kept Levy's letter†a there. Do so in general with all letters I don't ask you to return. The less they go through the post THE BETTER. I fully agree with you about the Rhine Province. As for us, the worst of it is that, LOOMING IN THE FUTURE, I see something that looks like 'high treason'. Whether we are forced into the same kind of position as the Mainz Clubbists†51 in the old revolution will largely depend on the tournure†b things take in Berlin. Ça sera dur.†c We, who are so ENLIGHTENED about our good fréres from across the Rhine! THE WHOLE THING IN GERMANY will depend on whether it is possible TO BACK THE PROLETARIAN REVOLUTION BY SOME SECOND EDITION OF THE PEASANTS' WAR. In which case the affair should go swimmingly.
Page me40.41
I have heard nothing whatever about Stieber II. Write and tell me what you know on this score.
Page me40.41
Now for the chronique scandaleuse.†d
Page me40.41
The Pieper comedy came to an end as abrupt as it was bitter. On the one hand, he got a letter in which the old GREENGROCER turned him down out of hand and forbade him the house. On the other, the green-bespectacled screech-owl — an indescribably hideous piece of baggage — turned up at our house in search of 'her' Pieper. She proposed that they should elope together. With great tact he refused quite unequivocally. So the comedy is over. It is to be hoped that this bitter experience, the result of his irresistibleness, will have some salutory effect upon Prince Charming.

Page me40.41
Enclosed a letter from Seiler. As soon as this Falstaff arrived in New York he caught Edgar†e just as the latter was about to set out for Texas. Edgar has in the meantime come into some money from the inheritance. The nasty consequences of this meeting with Seiler will be apparent to you from the letter.
Page me40.41
A fine pair, Seiler and Conrad Schramm!
Page me40.41
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.41
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.42

13
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.42
London, 26 April 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,
Enclosed you will find
1. 2 Kars PAPERS, third and final instalments.†a
Page me40.42
2. An article on the Duke of York†b which I gave Jones, and in which I imitate OLD Cobbett's manner tant bien que mal.†c Sent especially for Lupus' information.
Page me40.42
3. The SPEECH made by Frost, the old Chartist, in New York.†d
Page me40.42
4. A letter from Miquel. This last to be returned. For I have not yet replied, as I should like to have your detailed 'OPINION' before doing so. It's a somewhat ticklish matter. 'Questions, sometimes insidious',†e and when replying it is difficult to know how far one can properly go.†52

Page me40.42
Que dites-vous du discours de M. de Walewski?†f†53 Everyone in London is furious with the GOVERNMENT and even the SHOPKEEPERS are mouthing revolutionary slogans.
Page me40.42
If you can, send Pieper something. It is now possible that he will get a job as CORRECTOR on The People's Paper. All I can do now is keep him in commons. I have taken him seriously to task for his silly antics, which have landed him on the streets again. I could tell you a thing or two about politics down here, but to do so by post might be risky.
Page me40.42
The news from Paris in today's Advertiser contains a brief but interesting report on an action brought against some members of Marianne†47; they're conducting themselves splendidly.
Page me40.42
In the Presse (Paris) some edifying aspersions on Bonaparte's législateur poéte — Belmontet — by Pelletan, in which the latter has so insulted the 'empereur'†a that he will probably be expelled.

Page Break me40.43
Page me40.43
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.43
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

14
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.43
[London,] 7 May 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

I have another letter from Germany to send on to you. But since you haven't yet acknowledged receipt either of the PARCEL or of the letter enclosing Miquel's,†b I don't know whether these things have reached you. Let me know by return. In the case of compromising letters, it's essential to be sure they are delivered.
Page me40.43
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.43
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

15
MARX TO ENGELS†54
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.43
[London,] 8 May†c 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

DEAR Frederic,
Received your letter.†55 My PRESSURE upon you in YESTERDAY'S LETTER explicable d'abord†d by the fact that an earlier parcel of my wife's did not arrive in Manchester, although sent by post. Secondly, however, you know how a man feels when he's kept on the hop by piles. And such a man am I.

Page Break me40.44
Page me40.44
I am glad to hear that you and Lupus are entirely of my opinion with regard to Miquel's letter†52 — the attempt to digest this 'wisdom' fairly 'turned my stomach'.
Page me40.44
Unless something goes wrong with the pecuniary arrangements I have made, my family will be leaving in 10 to 14 days at the latest.†a A pity you are so overworked, otherwise we might have done un petit tour†b to Scotland.
Page me40.44
I shall carry out your commissions at the Museum†c as soon as I go there again.
Page me40.44
Enclosed:
2 letters, 1. from Imandt; 2. from Cologne.†56 Would it not be best if I replied to the Cologne people through my wife? THERE EXISTS SOME JEALOUSY between Cologne and Düsseldorf AS TO THE LEADING OF THE PROLETARIAN MOVEMENT. BESIDES, I don't know whether the Cologne people are aware that the Düsseldorfers have completely broken with Lassalle who has fallen into general disrepute among them.

Page me40.44
Yesterday the following comical missive arrived from Sheffield:

* Council Hall, Sheffield,
May 6th, '56.

Doctor,
The Sheffield Foreign Affairs Committee†57 instructs me to convey to you an expression of their warm thanks for the great public service you have rendered by your admirable exposé of the Kars Papers published in The People's Paper.†d I have the Honour etc.

Cyples, Secretary.*

Page me40.44
That is magnanimous, there being war to the death between The People's Paper and The Free Press, as between Chartism and Urquhartism generally.†42 The great Ironside went one step further and decreed THAT THE THANKS OF THE COUNTRY WERE DUE TO DR. M.†e ETC. It would have been much better had the chaps sent me the money they made out by reprinting the Palmerston articles under the title Story of the Life etc. (in pamphlet form).†58
Page me40.44
From New York Seiler has sent me — came today — 'Das Recht deutscher vereinigter Staatenbürger in Europa' in the Democrat.†f Will never be read, not in this world at any rate.
Page me40.44
Since handing over your £2 to Pieper I haven't set eyes on him. Moreover, Jones has sent word that, up till yesterday evening, he had not delivered the work he had accepted for The People's Paper.

Page Break me40.45
Nous verrons.†a If he wilfully throws away this opportunity as well, let him go to the devil. Now's his chance, the silly ass.
Page me40.45
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.45
Apropos! Have seen Heine's will†59! A return to the 'living God', and a 'Recantation before God and man' if ever he wrote anything 'immoral'!
Page me40.45

Didn't see Colonel Touroute again before he left for Germany.
Page me40.45
Enclosed letters not to be returned. Regards to Lupus.

Page me40.45
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

16
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.45
[London,] 23 May 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
The family went off yesterday.†b I have been incapable of work this week, partly because of the TROUBLE in the house, partly because of a rheumaticky back such as I have never experienced before.
Page me40.45
Herewith Bazancourt — the 'Napoleonic' account of the Crimean business.†c Might not something be made of it for Putnam's?†60 It's urgent that I obtain the services of this firm since the money and gear needed for the journey have compelled me to accept through Zitschke a sole bill for £30 on myself, payable in 3 months' time. A man from Putnam's has been to see Freiligrath, and they are willing to take articles.
Page me40.45
I have only read the excerpts from Bazancourt that were published in the French papers. To judge by them, it would appear to provide much amusing matter. The thing cannot, I think, be treated other than flippantly. If done, it should not be made too short, but solely with the idea of filling up space.

Page Break me40.46
Page me40.46
Trübner, who looked like accepting my Swedish stuff two months ago but then gave no further sign of life, wrote yesterday and arranged an entrevue†a on Tuesday to discuss the matter. That would provide 20 sheets of work.†61
Page me40.46
I am in a SERIOUS DILEMMA as to whether or not I should now go on a TRIP. On the one hand I've got to slog away at making money. On the other the doctor†b has told me — and I believe he's right — that I should travel a bit and have a change of air, as my liver is again functioning irregularly. I AM NOT YET DECIDED what I should do. It's not as though staying here were especially economical, since I also have Pieper round my neck. But the main thing is my work.

Page me40.46

As TO Bazancourt, let me know whether you need the first part as well. If nothing can be made of the thing it would be better not to buy it.
Page me40.46

I am incapable of writing today, but must nevertheless ask you to clear up a philological doubt. In Henry IV, Shakespeare used the word 'hiren' for 'siren' and, according to a note made by that pedant, Johnson,†c the form 'hiren' also occurs in other early English writers.†d The substitution of h for s is QUITE in order, but might there not be some connection between 'hiren' and 'Hure',†e and hence also 'siren'? Or with 'hoeren', auris,†f etc.? You can see TO WHICH LOW STATE OF SPIRIT I am DEPRESSED today from the great interest I show in this matter.
Page me40.46

I have received some very curious information about Ruge's tragedy, the Neue Welt, in which 'the tragedy of love turns into a farce'. Shall tell you about it in my next.
Page me40.46

Herzen is going to Switzerland. I await your COMMUNICATIONS on Ireland.
Page me40.46

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.46
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.47
Page me40.47

The first page of Engels' letter to Marx of 23 May 1856

Page Break me40.48
Page Break me40.49

17
ENGELS TO MARX†62
IN LONDON

Page me40.49
Manchester, 23 May 1856

Dear Marx,

During our trip to Ireland†63 we travelled from Dublin to Galway on the West Coast, then 20 miles north and inland, on to Limerick, down the Shannon to Tarbert, Tralee and Killarney, and back to Dublin. In all approx. 450-500 English miles within the country itself, so we have seen approx. 2/3 of the entire country. With the exception of Dublin, which is to London what Düsseldorf is to Berlin, bears altogether the stamp of having been a small royal seat and is, moreover, built entirely in the English style, the whole country and particularly the towns give one the impression of being in France or Northern Italy. Gendarmes, priests, lawyers, bureaucrats, lords of the manor in cheerful profusion and a total absence of any and every industry, so that one could barely conceive what all these parasitic plants live on, were there no counterpart in the wretchedness of the peasants. The 'iron hand' is visible in every nook and cranny; the government meddles in everything, not a trace of so-called SELF-GOVERNMENT. Ireland may be regarded as the earliest English colony and one which, by reason of her proximity, is still governed in exactly the same old way; here one cannot fail to notice that the English citizen's so-called freedom is based on the oppression of the colonies. In no other country have I seen so many gendarmes, and it is in the CONSTABULARY, which is armed with carbine, bayonet and handcuffs, that the bibulous expression of your Prussian gendarme reaches its ultimate state of perfection.
Page me40.49

Peculiar to the country are its ruins, the oldest 5th and 6th century, the most recent 19th, and every stage in between. The earliest, all churches; from 1100, churches and castles; from 1800, farmhouses. Throughout the west, but particularly the Galway region, the countryside is strewn with these derelict farmhouses, most of which have only been abandoned since 1846. I had never imagined that famine could be so tangibly real.†64 Whole villages are deserted; in between the splendid parks of the smaller LANDLORDS, virtually the only people still living there, lawyers mostly.

Page Break me40.50
Famine, emigration and CLEARANCES†65 between them have brought this about. The fields are empty even of cattle; the countryside is a complete wilderness unwanted by anybody. In County Clare, south of Galway, things improve a bit, for there's some cattle at least and, towards Limerick, the hills are excellently cultivated, mostly by Scottish FARMERS, the ruins have been cleared away, and the country has a domesticated air. In the south-west, numerous mountains and bogs but also marvellously luxuriant woodland; further on, fine pastures again, especially in Tipperary and, approaching Dublin, increasing signs that the land is occupied by big farmers.
Page me40.50

The English wars of conquest from 1100†a to 1850 (au fond†b they lasted as long as this, as did also martial law) utterly ruined the country. With regard to most of the ruins, it has been established that the destruction took place during these wars. Thus the very people have acquired their unusual character and, for all their fanatical Irish nationalism, the fellows no longer feel at home in their own country. IRELAND FOR

THE SAXON! That is now becoming a reality. The Irishman knows that he cannot compete with the Englishman, who comes armed with resources in every respect superior to his own; emigration will continue until the predominantly, indeed almost exclusively, Celtic nature of the population has gone to pot. How often have the Irish set out to achieve something and each time been crushed, politically and industrially! In this artificial manner, through systematic oppression, they have come to be a completely wretched nation and now, as everyone knows, they have the job of providing England, America, Australia, etc., with whores, day labourers, maquereaux,†c pickpockets, swindlers, beggars and other wretches. Even the aristocracy are infected by this wretchedness. The landowners, wholly bourgeoisified everywhere else, are here completely down-at-heel. Their country seats are surrounded by huge and lovely parks but all around there is desolation and where the money is supposed to come from heaven only knows. These fellows are too funny for words: of mixed blood, for the most part tall, strong, handsome types, all with enormous moustaches under a vast Roman nose, they give themselves the bogus martial airs of a colonel en retraite,†d travel the country in search of every imaginable diversion and, on inquiry, prove to be as poor as church mice, up to their eyes in debt, and living in constant fear of the ENCUMBERED ESTATES COURT.†66

Page Break me40.51
Page me40.51
About England's method of governing this country — repression and corruption (long before Bonaparte tried them) — more very shortly if you don't come up soon. What are the prospects?
Page me40.51
Your
F.E.

Page me40.51
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

18
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.51
Manchester, 26 May 1856

Dear Marx,
Herewith the article,†11 but you should read it over first. Today the office again prevented me from doing so myself.
Page me40.51

Bazancourt†a will be of some use — Bonaparte's Batrachomyomachia.†67 But Vol. I absolutely essential. I shall send you 6/- worth of stamps for it tomorrow, or rather, they are enclosed herewith.
Page me40.51
I would advise you to pack your bags at once, taking such papers as are absolutely necessary. Then you can work here as well as in Scotland, at least on certain subjects. We could do Bazancourt ±†b together.†60 Admittedly, you would have to do most of the work for, with business expanding rapidly, commerce is making such demands on me that there can be no thought of regular and sustained work. If you finished this thing here (1 article would of course suffice), you could always either do parliamentary articles here, or else take a trip to Scotland and get down to some hard work here on your return. Until the Pan-Slavism is finished I should be reluctant to saddle myself with any other promises which I might eventually be unable to fulfil; but after all, your health is also a consideration and, as to that, I think I have something good for you — viz. light Bavarian beer and another dozen or so bottles of Bordeaux. Better, at all events — with a change of air — than HALF AND HALF, etc.

Page Break me40.52
Page me40.52
I may drop you another line tomorrow. Let me know what you decide to do.
Page me40.52
Your
F.E.

Page me40.52
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

19
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.52
[London,] 29 May 1856†a
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
I shall hardly be able to leave here before the end of next week, since the business with Trübner†b will not have been decided before then and I must, besides, have a word with Zitschke, who is unlikely to be back in London until then. At all events I shall let you know beforehand when I shall be leaving.
Page me40.52

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.52
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.53

20
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.53
[London,] 5 June 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

I leave for Scotland at the end of this week, and shall come on to you from there after an interval of 6 days, but will of course give you prior notice. Should you write to me during this week, address the letters 'C. Marx, CARE OF P. Imandt, 29 Cowgate, Dundee'. There was a twofold reason for my decision to come to you via Scotland:
Page me40.53

1. Medical, because I know that the sea-voyage will put me to rights and it was only the day before yesterday that I got rid of my rheumatism. Moreover, there have been other unpleasantnesses, including excessive bleeding at stool. I have, of course, also consulted my SURGEON.
Page me40.53

2. Pieper. He will accompany me to Scotland and then return to London. Had I not agreed to this arrangement, the lad — he obtained the money for the trip from his former pupil, A. Rothschild — was fully determined to make his way to Paris on a false passport, allegedly with the intention of proceeding from there to Geneva on foot. You will realise what a strange and compromising end SUCH AN EXPEDITION LIKELY WAS TO ARRIVE AT.
Page me40.53

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.53

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.54

21
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.54
[London,] 6 June 1856

Dear Engels,
PLAN AGAIN CHANGED. Why, when we meet. Pieper will accompany me to Hull, then return to London. I shall come on to you from Hull.†68

Your
K.M.

Page me40.54
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

22
MARX TO JENNY MARX†20
IN TRIER†69
Page me40.54
Manchester, 21 June 1856
34 Butler Street, Greenheys

My darling Sweetheart,
I am writing to you again because I am alone and because it is irksome to converse with you all the time in my head without you knowing or hearing or being able to answer me. Bad as your portrait is, it serves its end well enough, and I now understand how it is that even the least flattering portraits of the mother of God, the 'Black Madonnas',†70 could have their inveterate admirers — more admirers, indeed, than the good portraits. At any rate, none of these 'Black Madonna' portraits has ever been so much kissed and ogled and adored as your photograph which, while admittedly not black, has a crabbed expression and in no way reflects your dear, lovely, kissable, dolce†a countenance. But I put right what the sun's rays have wrongly depicted, discovering that my eyes, spoiled though they are by lamplight and tobacco smoke, can nevertheless paint not only in the dreaming but also in the waking state. There you are before me, large as life, and I lift you up in my arms and I kiss you all over from top to toe, and I fall on my knees before you and cry: 'Madame, I love you.'†a And love you I do, with a love greater than was ever felt by the Moor of Venice.†b Falsely and foully doth the false and foul world all characters construe. Who of my many calumniators and venomous-tongued enemies has ever reproached me with being called upon to play the romantic lead in a second-rate theatre? And yet it is true. Had the scoundrels possessed the wit, they would have depicted 'the productive and social relations' on one side and, on the other, myself at your feet. Beneath it they would have written: LOOK TO THIS PICTURE AND TO THAT.†c But stupid the scoundrels are and stupid they will remain, in seculum seculorum.†d

Page Break me40.55
Page me40.55

Temporary absence is good, for in a person's presence things look too much alike for them to be distinguished. At close quarters even towers appear dwarfed, whereas what is petty and commonplace, seen close at hand, assumes undue proportions. So, too, with the passions. Little habits which, by their very proximity, obtrude upon one, and thus assume the form of passions, vanish as soon as their immediate object is out of sight. Great passions which, by the proximity of their object, take on the form of little habits, wax large and resume their natural proportions under the magical effect of distance. So it is with my love. Mere spatial separation from you suffices to make me instantly aware that time has done for my love just what the sun and the rain do for plants — made it grow. My love for you, as soon as you are away from me, appears for what it is, a giant, and into it all the vigour of my mind and all the ardour of my heart are compressed. I feel myself once more a man because I feel intense passion, and the multifariousness in which we are involved by study and modern education, no less than the scepticism which inevitably leads us to cavil at every subjective and objective impression, is calculated to render each one of us petty and weak and fretful and vacillating. But love, not for Feuerbachian Man, not for Moleschottian metabolism, not for the proletariat, but love for a sweetheart and notably for yourself, turns a man back into a man again.

Page Break me40.56
Page me40.56

You will smile, my dear heart, and wonder 'why this rhetoric all of a sudden?' But if I could press your sweet white bosom to mine, I would be silent and say not a word. Since I cannot kiss with my lips I must kiss with my tongue and frame words. I could, indeed, even frame verse, German Books of Sorrow after the manner of Ovid's Libri Tristium. He, however, had merely been banished by the Emperor Augustus; I have been banished from you,†a and that is something Ovid could not understand.
Page me40.56

There are, indeed, many women in the world, and a few of them are beautiful. But where else shall I find a face of which every lineament, every line even, reawakens the greatest and sweetest memories of my life? In your sweet countenance I can read even my infinite sorrows, my irreplaceable losses,†b and when I kiss your sweet face I kiss away my sorrow. 'Buried in her arms, revived by her kisses' — in your arms, that is, and by your kisses — and let the Brahmins and Pythagoras keep their doctrine of re-birth, and Christianity its doctrine of resurrection.

Page me40.56

To conclude with SOME FACTS. I have today sent Isaac Ironside the FIRST PAPER OF THE SERIES†61 and have, in addition, made notes (i.e. on the text of the despatches) in my own hand and in my own English.†c I must say I felt a bit anxious when Frederic,†d with that little quizzical look he has, calmly read through the stuff†e before it was sent off. Mais pour la premiére fois†f he was quite astonished and exclaimed that this important work ought to be published in another form and, above all things, to be published in German. I shall send the first issue to you and to old Schlosser, the historian, in Germany.
Page me40.56

Apropos. I see from the Augsburger,†g which refers directly to our circular letters†h discussed at the communist trial in Cologne,†71 that another circular letter, 'reputedly' from the same source, has been sent out from London. It is a forgery, a miserable gallimaufry of our things, put together by Mr Stieber who, not having been accorded due honour in Prussia of late, now seeks to set himself up as a great man in Hanover. Engels and I intend to publish a counter-statement in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.†72

Page Break me40.57
Page me40.57

Farewell my dear heart. A thousand kisses to you, and the children too, from

Your Karl

Page me40.57
First published in Annali, an. I, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

23
MARX TO ISAAC IRONSIDE†73
IN SHEFFIELD
Page me40.57
[Draft]
Manchester, [21 June 1856]
34 Butler St., Greenheys

Dear Sir,

I received your letter d.d. June 14 this morning only, as it had to be sent to me here to Manchester where I shall stay for some weeks.

Page me40.57

I have duly considered your proposal, and, on the whole, accede to it.†74 In a matter like this, it is impossible to mention expressly every small particular, to agree upon the size of type pp., neither can I anticipate that any difficulties may arise therefrom, nor from the reservations to make as to 'copy used'.

Page me40.57

I shall therefore provide you in time for next Saturday's but one's publication with fully 2 columns of matter and keep you amply supplied every week to that extent.

Page me40.57

It would be most convenient to me (if your arrangements admit of it) to receive a remittance say after every fresh weekly publication.

Page me40.57

As to your reprinting the papers in your serials, I have no objection, reserving to myself, of course, the right of using the materials, later on, in any way I may see it fit to use them.

Page me40.57

As I am sure that you will not suppress historical truth out of prejudice or party-consideration [...]†a

Page me40.57

As to the latter point you will think it only just, that should any points be suppressed, which in my conviction are of decisive historical importance, I shall consider myself obliged to stop the publication.

Page Break me40.58

Page me40.58

In thanking you for the serials you were so kind to send me, I cannot but regret that you did not think fit to communicate to me the proof-sheets of the 'Story of the life of Lord Palmerston'.†58 Sentences, historical data, quotations from Palmerston's speeches — everything is so disfigured by errata that, in my opinion, the pamphlet, in its present form, is not only useless but positively mischievous.

Page me40.58

A few words on the plan of the whole publication†a will suffice. I do not adopt the usual manner of opening the whole theme by general considerations, but on the contrary commence with facts.†b

Page me40.58

In contradistinction to the usual manner of historical writers, I shall not commence this publication with general considerations, but with facts. The first chapter will be composed of despatches belonging to different epochs of that century, in order to show up the Russian spirit of English diplomacy during the 18th.†c

Page me40.58

I hope I need not tell you that I am no 'commercial' writer and that no [...]†d

Page me40.58

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

24
MARX TO WILLIAM CYPLES†75
IN SHEFFIELD
Page me40.58
[Draft]
[London,] 22 July 1856

Dear Sir,

I write again myself to show that I bear not the least ill will against you for which, indeed, there would be no cause. In your letter d.d. July 19,†a you say: 'It could not be satisfactory etc.' Now as to my own satisfaction please to leave it altogether out of the question. As to Mr Ironside's 'satisfaction' I'll quote you the exact words of his 'note'.†b Having told you, that already the first article had 'overdosed' him, he continues as follows:

Page Break me40.59

'They' (Dr Marx's articles) 'are entombing the paper. This must not be. They must be brought to a close forthwith. You must not have more than two more doses — this week and the next. You had better write him at once to that effect.'

Page me40.59

I positively decline making myself guilty of manslaughter by administering another 'dose' to Mr Isaac Ironside and 'entombing' him in the sheets of his own paper.

Yours etc.
Dr K.M.

Page me40.59
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Reproduced from the original

25
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.59
London, 28 July 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederic,

A letter from my wife received today via Manchester brings news of her mother's†c death on July 23. This will hasten her return to London.

Page me40.59

At the same time a letter from Miquel, who is thinking of coming over here in a week or 10 days' time. Highly inconvenient just now.

Page me40.59

Pieper lost his job a fortnight ago. Not his fault this time. He kept the thing secret so long as Lupus was here. The compositors conspired together to bring in a chap who belongs to their FRIENDLY SOCIETY.†76

Page Break me40.60

Page me40.60

As regards Sheffield, the matter stands as follows:

In the last issue the fellows made some disgraceful cuts, whereupon Pieper wrote to Cyples: 'I am directed by Dr Marx to inform you that he cannot congratulate you upon the emendations, etc.'†77

Page me40.60

Then the following letter arrived from Ironside†a:

* Free Press Office, Sheffield,
July 19, 1856

Dear Doctor,
It could not be satisfactory either to us or to yourself to close your article in the abrupt way which you on the instant proposed. I am sorry that I was so unsuccessful in cutting down last week's contributions, and should have hesitated in doing so had it not unfortunately happened that there was really no other alternative. As to Mr Ironside's note, permit me to say that in another letter since received from him, he expresses regret that you should have construed his scrap as he did not intend it, and intimates a doubt that I have in some way offended you? I see no reason why our professional intercourse may not continue and be pleasant; and I venture to hope to receive the usual packet of copy for next week's issue. You will be so good as to excuse my tardiness in writing. I have been so busy. Your etc. Cyples.*

Page me40.60
Reply
* 'July 22, 1856

'Dear Sir, I write again myself to show that I bear not the least ill will against you for which, indeed, there would be no cause. In your letter d.d. July 19, you say: “It could not be satisfactory etc.” Now as to my own satisfaction please to leave it altogether out of the question. As to Mr Ironside's “satisfaction” I'll quote you the exact words of his “note”. Having told you, that already the first article had “overdosed” him, he continues as follows:

“They” (Dr Marx's articles) “are entombing the paper. This must not be. They must be brought to a close forthwith. You must not have more than two more doses — this week and the next. You had better write him at once to that effect.”

Page me40.60

'I positively decline making myself guilty of manslaughter by administering another “dose” to Mr Isaac Ironside and “entombing” him in the sheets of his own paper. Yours etc.

Dr K.M.'*

Page me40.60

Since then the correspondence has lapsed. But still no sign of any money. Jones tells me I could have taken the fellows to court over the whole affair AT THE OUTSET.

Page Break me40.61

Page me40.61

As you can imagine, I am like a cat on hot bricks. I shall have to do something about lodgings when the FAMILY arrives, but have no idea how to get out of the old ones or move into new, having neither the MEANS nor any immediate prospects. My electric brush strives vainly to make my hair darker, for atra cura†a is making it whiter than ever. Zitschke has decamped, so at least I am excused sine die from paying him.

Page me40.61

Espartero and Pucheta in the Spanish farce — never before has history so nicely confronted the hero of the liberal bourgeoisie with the hero of the 'mob'.†78

Page me40.61

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.61

Freiligrath has no one above him now apart from the BOARD OF DIRECTORS, which meets every Saturday.

Page me40.61

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

26
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.61
[London,] 1 August 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear E.,

The £5 note most gratefully received but not as yet the letter you promised me. Herewith a letter from the crazy Mirbach, which I have received — via Berlin!
Page me40.61

No money from Sheffield yet. Today I got Pieper to send a dunning letter. Meanwhile there has been the following incident: Yesterday Urquhart's bulldog — THE CELEBRATED Collet — appeared at my house. He had come, he said, at the behest of the Grand Cophta†79 himself. Urquhart was very sorry, regretted, indeed, very much that Mr Ironside had interfered at all with my articles etc., which he thought of extraordinary value etc. Then he asked me to tell him how the matter had come about. Mr Urquhart imagined that the principal cause of the quarrel was the suppression of some parts of the copy etc. I then told him what had happened†75 and showed him the written corpora delicti.†a Next, he asked me whether I was willing to enter upon any compromise, which question I flatly denied, telling him that I was no penny-a-liner and not to be treated like the London literary vagabonds. It seemed he was only awaiting this statement in order to tell me with EXTRAORDINARY SOLEMNITY that Urquhart thought The Free Press 'inadequate'. Mr Ironside was placed on the horns of a dilemma because The Free Press was, indeed, but an extract from the Sheffield Free Press — a paper, by the bye, twice the dimensions of the F.P. — and what was suited to the wants of the readers of the Sh. F.P. was not all palatable to the readers of the F.P. and vice versa. Mr Urquhart had, therefore, resolved upon starting in about a month a diplomatic journal at London. He hoped that I would let him have the whole of the Revelations†80 and not bear him a GRUDGE. I returned a vague answer capable of being construed in the affirmative but leaving me free — if the conditions should prove too poor or the paper too crazy — to refuse. It will all depend on the nature of the paper. In London things are rather different from Sheffield, and, should Urquhart come out with his counter-revolutionary nonsense in such a way that collaboration with him would discredit me in the eyes of the revolutionaries here, I would be obliged, of course, hard as it would be under the present miserable circumstances, to decide against it. However, nous verrons.†b At all events I have now received adequate satisfaction as regards my LITERARY POINT OF HONOUR, in as much as the chief has all but disowned his LIEUTENANT. This is a satisfactory dénouement, if only on account of Bucher and the democratic riff-raff.

Page Break me40.62
Page me40.62

There will now be much wrangling within the Urquhartite camp itself. It seemed to me that they evinced a bad TENDENCY to make a SCAPEGOAT of poor Cyples. E.g., Collet said he wasn't sure whether it was with Ironside's knowledge that Cyples had sent me the former's letter. To this I replied that Cyples seemed to be an honest fellow who had heard 'SECRET DIPLOMACY' so greatly decried that he naturally assumed 'PUBLIC DIPLOMACY' to be the rule at the F.P. OFFICE.

Page Break me40.63
Page me40.63

Received a letter today from my wife. She seems greatly affected by the old lady's†a death. She will have to spend a week or 10 days in Trier in order to put up for auction what little in the way of effects her mother has left and to share the PROCEEDS with Edgar.†b She has proposed the following scheme: After spending a few days more in the vicinity of Trier with a woman friend of hers, she will travel to Paris and thence direct to Jersey, having decided that we ought to spend September and October there. First, so that she herself can recuperate; secondly, because it's cheaper and pleasanter than London and, finally, so that the children should learn French, etc. She doesn't, of course, know anything about what has been taking place here. For the present I have written to say that it's a splendid scheme, although I cannot in fact see how it can be put into effect. Yesterday I again saw the New-York Tribune (WEEKLY). The whole paper is filled with nothing but the ELECTORAL DODGE and so it will be for months to come. We cannot hope seriously to tackle the N.-Y.T. until the presidential business is over.

Page me40.63

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.63

P.S. At Blind's, saw 2 volumes of Simon of Trier's émigré jeremiad.†c Watered-down twaddle, every other word a solecism, callow botchery, weak-kneed affectation, foppish naive pretension, a mess of Grünian Jew's ears in beggar's broth, one long platitude — nothing of the kind has ever before appeared in print. All that was needed to give the 'German Parliament'†44 the final kick in the arse was this self-exposure on the part of one of its heroes. Needless to say, I did no more than leaf through it. I'd sooner swill soap-suds or hobnob with Zoroaster over mulled cow's piss than read through all that stuff. He and Co. are perpetually haunted by our ghost. L. Blanc, Blanqui, Marx and Engels are his Unholy Quadrinity which he never forgets. We two — the propounders of 'equal economic rights' — are said inter alia to have advocated 'Armed (!) appropriation of capital'. Even the jokes we cracked about Switzerland in the Revue 'fill him with indignation'. 'No Civil List, no standing army, no millionaires, no beggars'†d —

Page Break me40.64

'Marx and Engels hope that Germany will never sink to such depths of degradation'. It's exceedingly odd, the way he speaks of us in the singular — 'Marx and Engels says', etc.

Page me40.64
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

27
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.64
Manchester, 4 August 1856

Dear Marx,

The letter that didn't arrive must have melted in the heat. I don't know whether you down there too have suddenly been assailed by this tropical heat which has brought everything to a standstill, apart from the continuous sluicing and bathing of the outer man with water and the inner man with a variety of other fluids. Yesterday I was totally incapable of anything and barely in a condition to go out. I haven't stopped sweating since Thursday, even in my bath; and the sordid work at the office is so exhausting that afterwards one feels utterly down. Moreover the nights are equally stifling.
Page me40.64

It's most satisfactory that the Urquhart business should have turned out as it did.†a There's no doubt that what most impresses the rabble is our resolute manner. I hope it will be possible for the pieces†b to appear in Urquhart's thing, nous verrons.†c

Page me40.64

I'm daily awaiting a letter from my mater summoning me to London. I am arranging matters in such a way as to be able to leave on Saturday, should the summons come. I shall be moving out of here on Saturday though I haven't yet taken new lodgings, and still don't know whether I shall do so or spend a week knocking about, since I intend on my return to engage in all kinds of mad escapades.

Page Break me40.65
Page me40.65

My brother-in-law†a has been here — a good chap, communist out of principle, bourgeois out of interest, as he himself most naively puts it, but he always uses 'we' when referring to communist matters; tried to talk me into making tentative approaches to the Prussians about an amnesty, whereupon I, of course, gave a very determined answer and finally he, too, saw that 1. I couldn't do so, and 2. that the Prussians would tell me to shove it, etc. — The man seemed to have few illusions about my frame of mind and certainly had even fewer when he left. However, he was very surprised to find me so cheerful.

Page me40.65
I shall write to Mirbach as soon as it gets a little cooler; it's too much to expect just now. 24 degrees Réaumur is no joke when one has to traipse round in clothes proper to the Exchange.
Page me40.65
If the Jersey scheme can be carried out — it certainly has its good points and is not entirely impossible — make sure that while in Paris, your wife finds out exactly how things stand regarding route and communications, for otherwise she might get into serious difficulties. I believe that Saint-Malo is the only place in France to which steamers go from Jersey. Get one or two of the crapauds†81 to tell you what the position is. After all, you know several who have been there.
Page me40.65
You can give the great Pieper my assurance that I read his great 'filtered' article on Spain in The People's Paper†b before the original appeared in the Tribune,†c HANG IT! C'est beau.†d By the way, the P.P. deserves to be relegated to the W.C. Just consider this stinker: WE REGRET TO LEARN THAT LORD SO AND SO HAS CUT HIS FINGER, etc. You really must get Jones to give his SUB-EDITOR a damned good dressing-down for permitting such drivel.
Page me40.65
On no account let the rabble in Sheffield sit on the money — they'll have to shell out in any case.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.65
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.66

28
MARX TO JENNY MARX†82
IN TRIER
Page me40.66
[London,] 8 August 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

My one and only Sweetheart,

This morning, at the same time as your letter, I received a note from Frederic†a containing 15 talers for Lenchen.†b Acknowledge it, as he is most meticulous in such matters. More tomorrow; today I have the 'IMMORTAL COLLET' here in the room with me and am keeping him in check by saying 'I am obliged to write some lines to Mrs Marx'.
Page me40.66
LILY-WHITE SANDY is settled IN REALITY, not IN FANCY.
Page me40.66
Much though I hanker after you and the children — and this QUITE indescribably — I should like you to stay on in Trier for another week. It would do you and the children no end of good. More tomorrow.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.66
P.S. The Urquhartites are being damned importunate.†c A good thing financially. But I don't know whether, POLITICALLY, I ought to get too involved with the fellows. A thousand kisses, my beloved sweetheart.
Page me40.66
P.S.II. Lina†d has got the famous post. Won't be taking it up for weeks yet.
Page me40.66
It's ghastly for me, having to play the man of fashion chez Liebknecht now. HANG IT! On top of that, I have Pieper sleeping with me in your stead. HORRIBLE. In the same room, at any rate. Engels is coming next week.†83 That's a relief. For 3 weeks I've been as hypochondriacal as the devil.

Page me40.66
First published in Annali, an. I, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me40.67

29
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET
IN LONDON
Page me40.67
[Draft]
London, 11 August 1856
28 Dean St., Soho

Dear Sir,
I approve, of course, of the suggestions of your letter of the 8th inst. regarding the headings per 'chapters' and the cyphering of the notes at the bottom of the text.†a As to the cutting of chapters into parts, you must of course use your discretion as called for by the exigences of space etc. The alterations considered necessary in Chapter II will be forwarded in the course of the week.

Y.f.
K.M.

C.D. Collet, Esq.

Page me40.67
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

30
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.67
[London,] 22 September 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Engels,
I would have ACKNOWLEDGED your last letter before this, but for ABOUT a fortnight past the whole day from morn till night has been spent in search of lodgings. In no circumstances could we remain in the old hole. At last we found a place — a whole house which we have to FURNISH ourselves. It is 9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, Hampstead Road. Rent £36. We are to move in on 29 September; this week we have to furnish it. We are in something of a quandary, as we have ABOUT £26 to pay out in town, and a great deal more for the new set-up. I.e. we are short of £10-£15 — if only for the time being, since there is still a sizeable sum due to my wife from her brother†a in Berlin as a result of the Trier legacy.†84 Yesterday he wrote to say that he couldn't send the money because the Lower Silesian Railway Bonds in which the capital due to my wife is invested could be sold dans ce moment†b only at a considerable loss. As M. le Ministre sadly remarks:

Page Break me40.68

'It is, to be sure, an unfavourable moment just now, since all genuine securities such as these have fallen sharply as a result of frenzied speculation in Crédit mobilier†45 and limited liability companies.'

Page me40.68

If you can supply part of what is wanted, I think I can manage the remainder with the help of the pawnshop until the money arrives from Berlin. The worst of it is that there's no time to be lost.
Page me40.68
I was terribly affected by the news of Weerth's death,†85 which I found hard to believe. Freiligrath, too, has already written to me about an obituary. But I must confess that I can't think of a likely paper in Germany. The only possibility might be an obituary in the Tribune until the times permit us to do something bigger and better. WHAT IS YOUR OPINION?
Page me40.68
Today I have been invited to dine with the Putnam's chap†c who is over here again. I don't know whether I shall go. My poor spoken English might put me to shame.
Page me40.68
The Tribune has returned me the unpublished articles. These are, ALL IN ALL, Pan-Slavism†11 and my articles on the DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.†3 Mr Dana says in his letter that, if I cannot place the things elsewhere, they will be legally responsible for any 'LOSS' incurred, since they failed to register their objections soon enough. In the opposite case, they expect to get PART of their EXPENSES back. Nous verrons.†d
Page me40.68
Bruno Bauer is bringing out 2 volumes of England.†86 No doubt he will write at length about his cher frére's†e PIGSTY. I don't know what else he has seen in England.

Page Break me40.69
Page me40.69
Pieper, whom I threw out on my wife's return, found his way back and settled in again 2 days later which, just now, is far from pleasant. When I move into our new home, I shall leave him behind, safely installed on my surety in the little hole you know in Dean Street.
Page me40.69
A Prussian amnesty is expected on 15 October. Otto's mother died leaving 2,000 talers; these were confiscated by the Prussian government to pay the 'costs of the Cologne trial'.†71
Page me40.69
Strohn was here last Friday. The fellow has put on an enormous amount of weight, in consequence of which his spirits seem to have improved SOMEWHAT at the expense of his wits. Nor is his expression now so wry — benevolent, RATHER.
Page me40.69
I have heard all sorts of details concerning Heine, recounted to my wife in Paris by Reinhardt. Shall write about these at length some other time. For the present only that 'Eight had barely struck, yet she Was quaffing wine with laughter free'†a came true LITERALLY in his case. While his corpse was still in the mortuary — on the day of the funeral — the maquereau†b of Mathilde the mild, angelic child, did in fact appear on the doorstep and fetch her away. The worthy 'Meissner', who doled out such sloppy rubbish about Heine to the German public,†c was paid in cash by 'Mathilde' to sing the praises of this trollop who had tormented POOR Heine to death.

Page me40.69

But now for another story about Moses Hess. That lad's fame WAS DUE TO A GREAT PART — TO Sazonov. When Hess and the Moses woman†d arrived in Paris, this Russian was in very sore straits, very down at heel, without money or credit and consequently very plebeian and revolutionary and receptive to ideas of world subversion. Sazonov heard that Moses was not without 'ducats'. He therefore took his stand behind Moses and in front of the Moses woman. The latter he bedded, the former he extolled AS A GREAT LITERARY LUMEN, putting him in touch with the editorial boards of reviews and newspapers. Vladimir,†e OF COURSE, had a finger in every pie and a foot in every door. Thus he extracted enough ducats from the tight-fisted Moses to enable him to 'shine' again and to put out decoys for further credit. And with these Sazonov enticed a rich old Jewess with whom he entered into kosher WEDLOCK. From then on, however, he became a man of fashion again and turned his back on Moses, declaring him to be A VERY COMMON AND SUBORDINATE FELLOW. The Moses woman, however, was heartlessly abandoned and she is now running round Paris, scolding and cursing and telling anyone who will listen about the perfidious Muscovite's betrayal. Such, in a manner of speaking, is the story of the Grandeur et Décadence de la Maison Moses.†a

Page Break me40.70
Page me40.70

Have you seen Golovin's paper, Russia etc., now appearing in London?
Page me40.70

Faute de moyens,†b L'Homme has temporarily ceased publication. La Nation has ceased to exist. The only thing still in the same LINE, though much poorer, is Le National.
Page me40.70

Kindest regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.70
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.70
London, 26 September 1856
28 Dean Street, Soho

Dear Frederick,

FIRST, I must ACKNOWLEDGE with THANKS RECEIPT of the money. I would have done so yesterday had we not been in a veritable HURLY-BURLY with our removal. It remains doubtful, moreover, whether we shall be out of here before Monday since, even with your money and what the pawnshop has yielded, we still haven't QUITE got the requisite amount. The present crisis on the European stock exchanges has come at an awkward time for us personally.
Page me40.70

No news apart from what you may already know, namely that Stirner has died. A letter has also reached London, or so

Page Break me40.71
Freiligrath tells me, from his 'ex-sweetheart'†a in Australia, in which she says that she has married again but has at the same time turned religious and, by harping on the 'better life to come', has contrived to drive her novum hominem†b into the 'madhouse'. This last is meant verbatim.
Page me40.71

Well, I went to souper with the Putnam's man.†c Besides myself, the only people present were Freiligrath and an old Yankee. The Putnam's man was a quiet, genial soul, the other Yankee a jaunty, witty chap. Putnam wants us if possible, after the Bazancourt,†60 to revert to the 'SHIPS AGAINST WALLS' question, as being of special interest to Americans in connection with the recent war.†d Then again, something on floating batteries and gunboats; light or heavy guns, etc. All this seems to be with an eye to an American war, at a closer or more distant time, against England. Besides these militaribus I am then to write on Heine. In short, we can now engage in REGULAR INTERCOURSE with this very 'good' house.
Page me40.71

Considering the rent, the house I have taken is very nice and could hardly have been let so cheaply were not the immediate neighbourhood, roads, etc., SOMEWHAT UNFINISHED. When you come up to London you'll find a complete HOME.
Page me40.71

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THE ASPECT OF THE MONEY MARKET? There is no doubt that the increases in the discount rate on the Continent are partly associated with the appreciation of silver against gold due to the Californian and Australian gold (the Belgian Bank is now giving only 19 frs. 40 c. — silver — for one napoléon d'or†e) and hence bullion dealers everywhere where gold and silver are the legal STANDARD are withdrawing the latter from the banks. But whatever the reason for the increases in the discount rate, these are at least precipitating the DOWNFALL of the vast speculative transactions and, more specifically, of the GRAND PAWNINGSHOP AT PARIS.†f I don't believe that the great monetary crisis will outlast the winter of 1857. Those stupid asses, the BRITISHERS, imagine that this time all is SOUND over here, as opposed to the Continent. Apart from the intimate connection between the OLD LADY OF THREADNEEDLE STREET and the Paris concern,†87 the asses overlook the fact that a large part of English capital is tied up in continental credits and that their 'SOUND' OVERTRADING (exports this year are expected to reach £110 million) is based on the Continent's 'UNSOUND SPECULATION, just as their civilisational propaganda of 1854-56 was on the coup d'état of

Page Break me40.72
1851. This time, however, as opposed to earlier crises, France has discovered the form in which speculation could be and has been propagated throughout the whole of Europe. In contrast to the Gallic raffinement of St. Simonism,†88 STOCKJOBBERY and imperialism, your English speculator at home appears to have reverted to the primitive form of simple and UNMITIGATED FRAUD. Witness Strahan, Paul and Bates, the TIPPERARY BANK OF SADLEIR MEMORY, the GREAT CITY FRAUDS OF Davidson, Cole and Co., now the ROYAL BRITISH BANK and, finally, the Crystal Palace affair†89 (4,000 bogus shares put into circulation). The BRITISHERS abroad speculate under continental COLOURS, those at home revert to fraude simple, and that's what the chaps call a 'SOUND STATE OF COMMERCE'.†90
Page me40.72
This time, by the by, the thing has assumed European dimensions such as have never been seen before, and I don't suppose we'll be able to spend much longer here merely as spectators. The very fact that I've at last got round to setting up house again and sending for my books†91 seems to me to prove that the 'mobilisation' of our persons is AT HAND.
Page me40.72
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.72
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

32
ENGELS TO MARX†92
IN LONDON
Page me40.72
[Manchester, not before 27 September 1856]

[....] As regards Weerth†85 I shall write to [....] in Berlin, who might perhaps get something into a paper, n'importe†a which, so long as it appears. For 10 days and more after my return from London†83 Lupus did not breathe a word of the news and not until quite late, just before 11 o'clock on the eve of my old man's arrival, did he come out with it. You can imagine how staggered and annoyed I was at this idiotic conduct. For the next 8-14 days I hardly had a moment to myself and couldn't even go and see Steinthal to find out more, let alone turn my thoughts to an obituary or the like. He has probably left some written work and I shall make sure I get a sight of it.

Page Break me40.73
Page me40.73
You might send me the Pan-Slavism†11 when you have an opportunity. As soon as I have the time I shall revise the thing and knock it into reasonable shape — for Putnam's (?) or anything else that might turn up in the meantime. Now, while the mischief is still in progress, I would offer the 'PRINCIPALITIES'†3 to an English paper or MONTHLY. How are things going on with Urquhart [....]†61 very doubtful about it [....] I can see no possibility so far. In any case, we shall not be affected by the amnesty.
Page me40.73
The stories about Moses†a and the Moses woman†b made us laugh a great deal.†c So, just like Ewerbeck, il s'est acheté une place au Pére-Lachaise de la littérature française.†d†93
Page me40.73
Have not seen Golovin's Russia. You might send one or 2 issues so that I can see what it's like; it's quite unknown up here.
Page me40.73
Bazancourt still on the stocks.†60 I think I shall finish it in about 10 days or a fortnight. It's not going so quickly after all, you see, I had no time to do any preparatory work. If only I had my Tribune articles on the war†94! Now all the material has to be got together again. After this, we can offer them SHIPS AGAINST WALLS and then we should manage to keep the ball rolling all right.
Page me40.73
That gold has depreciated against silver is no longer in any doubt. However it is also a fact that silver has vanished, but where to, I cannot quite make out. Such is the state of confusion that a great deal must have been buried or tucked away in China. Again, the BALANCE OF TRADE has recently been extremely favourable to India and China vis-á-vis England, the Continent and America taken together. At all events it must be highly gratifying for John Bull to find that he is already worth 6d IN THE POUND less.
Page me40.73
The clouds gathering over the money market are sombre indeed, and the Constitutionnel's old 'HORIZON POLITIQUE' may well come into its own again.†95 Last Tuesday's affair at the Bank, when 1 million in gold was withdrawn, is significant. It almost looks as though the storm is about to break, but this might, of course, be no more than a prelude. In theory, the crash cannot come until Russia is right up to the neck in speculation, but this is hardly to be expected and perhaps it is better so. Another thing which considerably restrains speculators over here is the high price of all raw materials, particularly silk, cotton and wool, where it is far from SAFE to do anything at all. When the CRASH comes, however, there'll be a rude awakening for the English. I should like to know how many of the Continent's speculative shares have found their way to England — vast numbers, I imagine. This time there'll be a dies irae†a such as has never been seen before; the whole of Europe's industry in ruins, all markets over-stocked (already nothing more is being shipped to India), all the propertied classes in the soup, complete bankruptcy of the bourgeoisie, war and profligacy to the nth degree. I, too, believe that it will all come to pass in 1857, and when I heard that you were again buying furniture, I promptly declared the thing to be a dead certainty and offered to take bets on it.

Page Break me40.74
Page me40.74
Adieu for today; cordial regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.74
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

33
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.74
London, 16 October 1856
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,
After receipt of the POST OFFICE order we moved out†96 and, for the first 2 weeks, had to do a frightful lot of running to and fro between here and town in order to put things more or less straight in the house. Hence my silence.

Page Break me40.75
Page me40.75
Herewith an excerpt from a book by Mieroslawski.†a As you know he's not without esprit.†b But there's also much esprit de mauvais aloi†c in his writing, in particular a great deal of the style amphigourique†d which the French have been at such tremendous pains to acquire since they became 'profound' and ceased being superficial Voltairians. Also much of that enthusiastic unguent used by 'unappreciated' nationalities to glorify their passé.†e Hatred of Russia and even more of Germany; anti-Pan-Slavism but, on the other hand, free CONFEDERATION of Slav nations with the Poles as the peuple Archiméde.†97 Distinct emphasis on social revolution in Poland as the basic condition of the political one; but seeks to show by means of historical deduction, which proves exactly the reverse, that orthodoxy lies in restoring the old agrarian communes (gmina = the Russian commune latinised).

Page me40.75

In the past few weeks I have been studying the question of silver in greater detail and shall in due course give you an account thereof.
Page me40.75

In my view Bonaparte will hardly be able to avoid the SUSPENSION OF CASH PAYMENTS and then, va la Galére!†f
Page me40.75

Guardian received. More very soon. Otto has been pardoned.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.75

As regards the Urquhartites (who, until the week before last, with intervals, were reprinting my old stuff revised by me†98) have made no progress at all as yet. However the matter must be decided before the week is out. Urquhart has been playing the oracle in The Morning Herald by disgorging these things, which are wholly new to him, as though they were long-cherished secrets of his. In the National-Zeitung the great Bucher — appropriating my very words — spoke of 'interesting revelations', but suppresses my name, giving the impression that they came from the English side. You can see how envious and irritating these scoundrels are.

Page me40.75
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.76

34
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET†a
IN LONDON
Page me40.76
[Draft]

[London,] 23 October 1856

Dear Sir,

Having been absent from London during the last month, and seeing that your paper professed to be wanting space, I have deferred the continuation of my articles until to day. In transmitting the inclosed new manuscript it occurs to me that, from the difference in size between the old and new Free Press,†99 it would be desirable to come to a new understanding as to the terms on which my contributions to your paper are to take place.

Page me40.76

In answer to your last letter I have to state that it is indifferent to me whether you reprint the old pamphlets in large or small type, but as to documents never before published I consider it would be spoiling the case to put them in small type. Concerning the alleged desirability of my own comments not taking the form of notes, you will see that this is being done only where really expedient, and that under the form of introductions to the different chapters they occupy already the space of the text. Lastly as to the suggestion of drawing parallelisms between the epoch I treat upon and the present time, it has been anticipated to a certain extent in the chapters you published. To trace systematically these parallelisms more would be altering my plan, which is rather to give new materials for a new history, than new reflections on well-known materials. To satisfy the wants of his readers in that respect I hold to be rather the duty of the editor.

Page me40.76

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.77

Page me40.77

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London, where Marx lived from October 1856 to 1868

Page Break me40.78

Page Break me40.79

35

MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.79

[London,] 30 October 1856

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Haverstock Hill

DEAR Frederic,

I am at this moment dictating an article on Persia.†a Hence no more than a line or two. Your £5 received. Could you possibly send me some military stuff on Switzerland before the week is out, for that is what's holding me up and preventing me from getting on with my articles. Will write at greater length very shortly.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.79

Ruge is publishing:

1. Stories of the Chase for Children.†b

Page me40.79

2. Philosophical considerations on the religion of Ancient Egypt. He told this to Blind, who on the same occasion discovered that Papa Ruge hadn't so much as heard of Röth's book.†c

Page me40.79

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.80

36

MARX TO ENGELS†100

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.80

[London,] 30 October 1856

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

The article on Bazancourt†60 is splendid. Enclosed the last bit of the Mieroslawski.†a If I have seemed lazy about writing it is largely because my wife has been ill these past few months.

Page me40.80

As you will yourself observe in the Mieroslawski, 1. the very man who holds un royaume diplomatique†b in Poland to be impossible, wanted to bring about une révolution diplomatique there, i.e. under the AUSPICES OF Louis Bonaparte and Palmerston; 2. the fate of the 'democratic' gmina of the Lechites†c in Poland is an inevitable one; the actual dominium†d is usurped by the Crown, aristocracy, etc.; the patriarchal relations between dominium and peasant communities lead to serfdom; optional land-division creates a kind of peasant middle estate, the ordre équestre,†101 to which the peasant can rise only so long as wars of conquest and colonisation are still in progress, though both these necessarily tend to accelerate his DOWNFALL. As soon as the borderline is reached, this ordre équestre, incapable of sustaining the role of a true middle estate, turns into the lumpenproletariat of the aristocracy. A similar fate overtakes dominium and peasant among the Romanic population of Moldavia, Wallachia, etc. This type of development is interesting in that it shows how serfdom comes into being as a result of purely economic factors, without the intermediate link of conquest or racial dualism.

Page me40.80

Your Manchester Guardian has the singular distinction of being regarded as the immediate cause of Bonaparte's statement against the English press. Please send me X†e from time to time. Having discovered that Bonaparte's 1847 is approaching, Palmerston is bending every effort to jockey him into precisely the same position as he jockeyed Louis Philippe during the Sonderbund War†102 — into an alliance with Russia against England. Whereas on the one hand he takes him in tow against Austria in the filthy Neapolitan affair, in Turkey he sides against him with Austria.†103 Once again the French newspapers are full of MISGIVINGS about the machinations of perfidious Albion. The commercial crisis would certainly seem to have reached its consummation in the Russian railways. The bankruptcy of the CONTRACTORS to the 'palace of international industry'†104 affords a GLIMPSE into the participation of English capitalists in continental enterprises. In Germany the setting-up of industrial and banking undertakings goes on briskly. The Berlin National-Zeitung contains whole columns devoted solely to enumerating the names of these CONCERNS.

Page Break me40.81

Page me40.81

I learnt from Putnam's man, Olmsted, and an American travelling companion who was with him that Gurowski (the Pole) had acquired much influence with Dana. At the same time these gentlemen told me that the said worthy fellow received regular cash grants direct from the Russian ambassade†a in Washington. This Gurowski advocated Pan-Slavism in opposition to ourselves, which was the only reason why your article†11 was rejected. When returning my manuscript on the Danubian Principalities,†3 Mr Dana forgot TO BLOT OUT a comment written in French by this self-same Gurowski, who remarks on my statistical data relating to the Romanian population:

'Tous ces chiffres sont exagérés pour faire mousser l'idée de nationalité Roumaine. Ils sont démentis par les faits, l'histoire et la logique.'†b

Page me40.81

So we can boast of having, or rather of having had, our articles inspected and censored directly by the Russian embassy. In the end Dana appears also to have seen through Gurowski.

Page me40.81

Today a letter from Collet to whom I had sent some new stuff.†61 The fellow agrees to everything, except that he doesn't say anything about MONETARY TERMS although I expressly asked him about this point in my last letter. So I shall have to PUT ON THE SCREW all over again, since this is the only point of interest to me in my INTERCOURSE WITH THOSE CALIBANS.†c

Page Break me40.82

Page me40.82

Write to me soon concerning yourself and those about you. With kindest regards from my wife and children.

Page me40.82

Children very well.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.82

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

37

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.82

Manchester, 17 November 1856

Dear Marx,

Day after day this accursed COMMERCE has prevented me from writing. I now have three lads to keep in control and am forever checking, correcting, telling off and giving orders. Add to this the running battle with manufacturers over bad yarn or late delivery, and my own work. I wish it might occur to Mr Bonaparte to rid France of his own person and me of all this turmoil.

Page me40.82

Come to that, the said Bonaparte is in damned hot water. The spate of stories about placards and the unrest among the workers sent in by the Times correspondent, after the Moniteur article†a had led to his being ordered de parler plus haut,†b have made an enormous impression on the English philistines here.†105 Everyone believes in his SPEEDY DOWNFALL. The explanation for the sudden discovery that, au fond,†c the fellow is after all an ass and indeed of a very ordinary kind, is as follows: he used to be a genius but has now so ruined himself by his profligate way of life that it has affected his brain. While there may, of course, be something in this, the fellow's behaviour has on the whole been quite consistent, and only the English philistines can see any qualitative difference between the man he used to be and the man he is now.

Page Break me40.83
Page me40.83

Today's Guardian contains some interesting statistics about bankruptcies in France; I am sending it to you.
Page me40.83

It looks as though the financial crisis will linger on through the winter, becoming gradually more acute though with occasional ups and downs. This means that in the spring it will be considerably worse than if it had broken out in acute form now. The greater the capital paid in to companies hitherto existing largely on paper and the greater the extent to which floating capital becomes fixed, the better. So long as the discount rate doesn't fall below 7 per cent — and the recent rise shows that it will have to be raised yet further — there is no prospect that even half the speculative companies will be able to obtain payment for their third or fourth calls. The Austrian Crédit mobilier†106 can't even collect the money for its second call, and yet the government enters into agreements in Austria, by which the Bank is compelled to resume CASH PAYMENTS! — I'd like to have the money Bonaparte has probably spent over the past 6 weeks to keep government stocks above 66 per cent; precisely because of the great efforts made towards that end, I shall account the day a turning-point when government stocks first drop below 66.†107
Page me40.83

The longer this chronic PRESSURE goes on, the more numerous will be the revelations concerning the dirty work of the Bonapartist clique and the greater the rage of the working-men who could not previously have been aware of the details. This chap Morny is really a prime example of a suitier,†a nor would he seem to have any wish to return to Paris; for him, certainly, there could be no more appropriate way to invest his money than in Russian railways and government paper.
Page me40.83

Never again, perhaps, will the revolution find such a fine tabula rasa as now. All socialist DODGES exhausted, the compulsory employment of labour anticipated and EXPLODED 6 years since, no opportunity for new experiments or slogans. On the other hand, however, the difficulties will be starkly in evidence; the bull will have to be taken literally by the horns, and I'd dearly like to see how the next French provisional government will set about cutting its teeth. Nothing, luckily, can be done this time except by dint of the most reckless courage, for we no longer have any reason to fear as swift an ebb as in 1848.

Page Break me40.84
Page me40.84

Strohn has been here recently; had heard sundry things about the little man†a; entre nous, the fellow is thinking seriously about setting up in business on his own! He imagines his patter will serve to entice customers away from his present principal.

Page me40.84

I have in front of me at this moment James' Naval History of England, 1792-1820, mainly for the sake of SHIPS AGAINST WALLS.†b It shows that the English had to fight very hard to gain NAVAL SUPERIORITY over the French and, more especially, the Spanish. Given parity of strength, the French and Spanish, during the early years of the war, were a match for the English on almost every occasion, and a mass of vessels was captured from the latter.†108 Though I haven't yet got beyond 1796, I can already see that under Napoleon the French fleet reached an absolute nadir, for which he was probably partly to blame. — The superiority of the English at sea lies chiefly in their better gunnery; the French always fired too high, though the Spanish were much better. The story about the Vengeur, said to have gone down on 1 June 1794 au cri de vive la république†c is, by the way, a myth. The Vengeur surrendered to the English but, before she was actually seized, several French vessels again began to close; she rehoisted the French flag, the rescuers were beaten off and the English approached, but the ship went down, most of her crew being saved. She sank 4-6 hours after the end of the battle.

Page me40.84

Kindest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.84

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.85

38

MARX TO ENGELS†1

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.85

[London,] 2 December 1856
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Frederic,

My wife is still dosing herself continually and hence the house is always in such a disarray that it is difficult for me to settle down and write.

Page me40.85

As regards the Mieroslawski,†a a providential 'apportionment' would appear to have taken place, most of the excerpts intended for you (there were ABOUT two sheets) having been torn out of the middle of the manuscript, probably for spills. However, you haven't lost much. I afterwards read Lelewel's Considérations — not to be confused with his popular history.†b He, together with Maciejowski (?) (I cite the name from memory), provides most of the material upon which Mieroslawski exercises his mind. By the by, in my recent studies of Polish history, what led me décidément to plump for Poland was the historical fact that the intensity and the viability of all revolutions since 1789 may be gauged with fair accuracy by their attitude towards Poland. Poland is their 'external' thermometer. This is demonstrable en détail from French history. It is conspicuous in our brief German revolutionary period, likewise in the Hungarian. Of all the revolutionary governments, including that of Napoleon I, the Comité du salut public†109 is an exception only in as much as it refused to intervene, not out of weakness, but out of 'mistrust'. In 1794 it sent for the employé†c of the Polish insurgents†d and asked this citoyen†e the following questions:

'How is it that your Kosciusko, a popular dictator, tolerates the existence alongside himself of a king†f of whom, moreover, he cannot but know that he was put on the throne by Russia? How is it that your dictator does not dare effect the levée en masse of the peasants for fear of the aristocrats, who do not wish to be deprived of any of their “hands”? How is it that the revolutionary complexion of his proclamations pales in proportion to the distance his march removes him from Cracow? How is it that he immediately punished with the gallows the popular insurgents in Warsaw, whereas the aristocratic “traîtres de la patrie”†a are allowed to remain at large, or are given refuge in the lengthy formalities of a trial? Answer!'

Page Break me40.86

Page me40.86
Whereat the Polish 'citoyen' could only remain silent.
Page me40.86
Que dites-vous de Neuchâtel et Valangin?†b†110 This CASE has led me to try and remedy my highly inadequate knowledge of Prussian history. INDEED AND INDEED, never has the history of the world produced anything so sordid. How the nominal kings of France came to be real kings is also one long recital of petty struggle, betrayal and intrigue, but it is the history of the birth of a nation. Austrian history — the founding of a dynasty by a vassal of the German Empire — acquires interest from the circumstance that the vassal defrauds himself in his capacity as Emperor, from involvement in the East, Bohemia, Italy, Hungary, etc., and finally, too, from the circumstance that dynasty assumes such dimensions as to arouse fears in Europe of its becoming a universal monarchy. Nothing of all this in Prussia. She failed to subdue so much as one powerful Slav nation, and took 500 years to acquire Pomerania, and then only by 'barter'.†111 Come to that, the Margraviate of Brandenburg — as it was when taken over by the Hohenzollerns — hasn't been able to boast a single conquest, with the exception of Silesia. Perhaps it is because this was her one and only conquest that Frederick II's sobriquet is 'the One and Only'.†112 Petty theft, BRIBERY, outright purchase, succession intrigue, and such like shabby dealings is all that Prussian history really boils down to. What is interesting in feudal history elsewhere — the struggle of the monarch against his vassals, double-dealing with the towns, etc. — is all of it here dwarfed to a caricature because the towns are boringly small-minded, the feudal lords boorishly insignificant and the monarch himself a nonentity. During the Reformation, as during the French Revolution, she oscillated between perfidy, neutrality, separate peace treaties and snatching at scraps tossed to her by Russia in the course of partitions organised by the latter — vide Sweden, Poland, Saxony. Withal, a dramatis personae of rulers with only 3 masks — the Pietist,†113 the non-commissioned officer, the clown — succeeding one another as surely as night follows day, the only irregularity consisting not in the introduction of fresh characters but in the varying order of their appearance.

Page Break me40.87
What has kept the State on its legs nonetheless is mediocrity — aurea mediocritas†a — meticulous book-keeping, an avoidance of extremes, the preciseness of the drill book, a kind of homespun vulgarity and 'ecclesial institutionalism'.†114 C'est dégoûtant!†b
Page me40.87

How is trade in Manchester just now? Can you let me have some particulars about the state of BUSINESS in the MANUFACTURING DISTRICTS?
Page me40.87

I haven't yet informed you that papa Heise passed through on his way from Utrecht. Has now rejoined Imandt. He has filled out and looks better than ever.
Page me40.87

Götz, too, suddenly turned up here again. Disappeared with equal suddenness. Freiligrath very satisfied with his business and with himself. Valdenaire — the 'agreer'†115 manqué — is over here on a visit from Trier. For what purpose, more in my next.
Page me40.87

Finally, I have a ticklish matter to put to you. At the end of December I have some fairly substantial sums to pay out. Could you possibly let me have something before then? My wife's money has largely gone on setting up house and making up for very substantial losses in income.
Page me40.87

When are you coming down here? What is Lupus doing?

Your
K.M.

Page me40.87
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

39
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.87
[London,] 22 December 1856

Dear Engels,
You would oblige me greatly if you could send me the money before the week is out. I have just been to see Freiligrath and asked him whether he could advance me anything against my bill on America, which is drawable only in 2 or 3 weeks' time, mais impossible! I was expecting the money from Putnam's today; hasn't arrived. The TRANSACTIONS with Urquhart's wretched rabble — on whom I have claims — are still in suspense.†a If I'm late with the first payment to my LANDLORD, I shall be entiérement discrédité.

Page Break me40.88
Page me40.88
In great haste.
Page me40.88
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.88
P.S. Can you send me any bon mots on the military aspects of the Prussia-Neuchâtel conflict?†110 They would be very timely. I have dealt with the diplomatic part myself.†b
Page me40.88
Red Wolff†c is in Blackburn, Lancashire,†d with his family. Schoolmaster at a salary of £60.

Page me40.88
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.89

1857

40
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.89
[London,] 10 January 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

DEAR Frederic,

D'abord†a my best wishes for the New Year, albeit retrospective. As a result of watery ink and several nights' writing, one of my eyes is so inflamed that writing is irksome to me.

Page me40.89

Both the £5 (the second) and the MOUNTAIN WARFARE†b received. For both of them MY BEST THANKS.

Page me40.89

Is it true that Lupus has again been attacked and robbed by Manchester highwaymen? Or is the rumour circulating here simply an indiscriminate rehash of the old story?

Page me40.89

The best thing old Hill can do is retire, either to paradise or to some idyllic Swiss HILL, so that he has to be replaced once and for all in your office and can no longer saddle you with double the work under the FALSE PRETENCE of his 'temporary' illnesses.

Page me40.89

The Neuchâtel question†110 isn't quite so close to settlement as some papers make out. Both sides may already have gone too far with their braggadocio. Both have already brought discredit upon themselves: our Hohenzollern†c with his déférence for Bonaparte, the Swiss with their 'dignified' attitude. Thus the rascals have deported several hundred factory workers to Piedmont because of their propagandist demonstrations. In this way the 'lenders'†d hope to secure the esteem of Bonaparte and of Austria, TOO. What do you make of Lamoriciére and Bedeau offering their épées†e to the Swiss burghers? Obviously just an anti-Bonaparte gesture, since the fellows could be sure the lenders of Switzerland would not take them at their word.

Page Break me40.90

Page me40.90

There is great excitement in the petite démocratie. Just the kind of clash they want. On top of that, of course, your South German patriot regards the Swiss as kinsmen and in fact sees in the present clash nothing but a sequel to the 1849 campaign for the Constitution.†116 In addition, risings are expected in the Black Forest, etc. The Prussian, for his part, is certainly doing everything in his power to prevent A 'BREACH OF THE PEACE'. That is why Fatty†a wrote to his brother-in-law†b in Petersburg in terms reminiscent of the man who bade his wife stay him lest he jump out of the window. 'Stay me!' is a call our hereditary monarch has addressed to each of the great powers in turn. The question is whether they want to 'hold him back' and whether East and West, delighting equally in his discomfiture, will not add fuel to the flames. Whichever way the thing turns out, there will be no lack of red faces.

Page me40.90

Proudhon is in process of bringing out an 'economic bible'†c in Paris. Destruam et aedificabo.†d The first part, or so he says, was set forth in the Philosophie de la misére.†e The second he is about to 'reveal'. The scribble is appearing in German, translated by Ludwig Simon now duly installed as clerk with Königswärter (or some such name, the well-known banker to the National) in Paris. I have here a recent piece by one of Proudhon's disciples: De la Réforme des Banques par Alfred Darimon, 1856. Same old tale. The démonétisation de l'or et de l'argent, or rather que toutes les marchandises should be transformed into instruments d'échange au même titre que l'or et l'argent.†f The piece has an introduction by Emil Girardin and betrays evident admiration for Isaac Péreire. Hence it enables one to get some idea of the kind of socialist coups d'état Bonaparte thinks himself capable of resorting to, even at the eleventh hour.

Page me40.90

I have a whole LOT [OF] PAMPHLETS written by Bruno Bauer during the Russian war.†117 Feeble and pretentious. In company with his brother Egbert the worthy fellow has now rented from the Berlin municipality 50 acres of land outside Berlin. The intention is that the London Edgar's†g mother-in-law — an old washerwoman or SOMETHING OF THE SORT — should look after the 'market side'. Bruno has written to Edgar telling him that this is the way to 'independence'. He is paying a rent of 5 reichstalers PER ACRE, i.e. 250 reichstalers a year. It's old fallow land. Bruno hopes that the profit and the produce from this land will enable him to write at leisure his Geschichte des Urchristentums,†118 intended as an 'historical' test-piece for his critique of the Gospels.†a Nice critical fantasies these, and to some extent Bruno may have been influenced by the recollection that in Part 2 Faust becomes a land-owner.†b Only he forgets that Faust obtained the money for that transformation from the Devil.

Page Break me40.91

Page me40.91

Lallerstedt, La Scandinavie, ses craintes et ses espérances, Swedish pendant to Mieroslawski's book.†c Contains one or two FACTS of interest. In particular Lallerstedt recognises that, during the last century, England was constantly playing Russian tricks on Sweden. Recounts how Admiral Norris, sent by England on an ostensibly anti-Russian mission after the death of Charles XII, was bribed by Peter I with a precious stone of great value. Also has new material that throws light on the behaviour of Bernadotte.

Page me40.91

Nothing new here. I go out little and hear little.

Page me40.91

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.91

Mr Faucher from Berlin is one of the PRINCIPAL SUB-EDITORS of The Morning Star. In a diatribe against Lupus in the London Illustrated News, Horace Mayhew writes inter alia:

'Symptoms of being a confirmed old Bachelor: When a man cannot go anywhere without his umbrella, that's a symptom. When a man thinks every one is cheating him, that's a symptom. When a man does all the shopping himself etc.'†d

Page me40.91
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.92

41
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.92
[London,] 14 January 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

Edgar von Westphalen has sent over a man — address enclosed — with two letters, one for me, and one for you. This man Erich wishes to establish connections with London business men and then return to New York. He has recommendations from New York, but none from England. With regard to Edgar's letter, he has given you and myself as references, you as an English merchant, me as correspondent of the New-York Tribune. I told him that we couldn't possibly provide information about his financial circumstances, since we knew nothing of them. REPLY: neither were we required to do so, but only to confirm, if asked, that he was 'Erich' of New York and had been 'recommended' to us from that quarter. IT IS ALTOGETHER A SILLY BUSINESS of the kind often initiated by Edgar. The fellow seems to be a decent sort of chap and I couldn't, of course, tell him that a recommendation from my brother-in-law was likely to be more of a hindrance than a help, even in our case. As regards yourself, I naturally made no promises but merely undertook to send you Edgar's letter, at the same time informing you that the 'recommendation', if requested, should au fond†a be restricted to confirming the man's identity.
Page me40.92

Cornelius will shortly be leaving London. Is to be manager of a joint stock mining company in Nassau. He has offered Roesgen's cousin what is said to be a good position (in an emigration agency) in Le Havre. Guardians received. The FACT concerning the floods is INTERESTING.†119
Page me40.92

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.92
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.93

42
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.93
[London,] 20 January 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

I really have monumentally bad luck! For the past 3 weeks or so Mr Dana has been sending me the daily Tribune — obviously with the sole intention of showing me that they aren't publishing any more of my stuff. Except for some 40 lines on the MOVES of the Banque de France,†a not a single line of mine has been included. Week after week I have put off drawing anything on the Tribune in the belief that the articles would sooner or later appear. BUT NOTHING OF THE SORT. My articles on Prussia, Persia, Austria all regularly REJECTED.†b Having for some 4 years printed all my things (and yours TOO) under their own name, the curs have succeeded in eclipsing the name I was making for myself among the Yankees and which would have enabled me to find another paper, or to hold over their heads the threat of transferring to one. Que faire?†c Good advice is valuable IN THESE CIRCUMSTANCES. As soon as I draw something they will make it a pretext to get rid of me once and for all; and writing two articles a week in the hope of having perhaps one in ten published and paid for is a procedure too ruinous to carry on. And how can I draw anything unless something is published?
Page me40.93

And then another piece of bad luck. I've had a look at the November, December and January numbers of Putnam's. No sign of the article on†d Bazancourt.†60 Either it has got lost (although I took it to the main POST OFFICE myself) or it will not be coming out until later. I can't believe that the fellows had got the thing, don't want to publish it and fail to notify me out of sheer bad manners!
Page me40.93

I have not yet succeeded in arranging any definite terms with the Urquhartites,†a and besides, theirs is a tiny little sheet which may bring out short fragments of an article over a month and often not finish it off for 5 to 6 weeks.†61 At best they can serve only as a small, secondary source of income. The Tribune, in exceedingly poor and insipid LEADERS, is moreover adopting a view almost diametrically opposed to all that I write. RUSSIAN INFLUENCE is unmistakable.†b

Page Break me40.94
Page me40.94
So here I am, without any prospects and with growing domestic liabilities, completely stranded in a house into which I have put what little cash I possessed and where it is impossible to scrape along from day to day as we did in DEAN STREET.†120 I am utterly at a loss what to do, being, indeed, in a more desperate situation than 5 years ago. I thought I had tasted the bitterest dregs of life. Mais non! And the worst of it is that this is no mere passing crisis. I cannot see how I am to extricate myself.
Page me40.94
The miserable collapse of Switzerland's braggadocio†121 was only to be anticipated. In no way were the fellows driven TO EAT DIRT by force supérieure. For, as Cornelius saw with his own eyes in Paris, the discontent, not only among Parisians, but in the army as well, was so great that in no circumstances could Bonaparte have permitted the Prussians to carry out serious military operations — on the French frontier least of all. Hence his EFFORTS to settle the affair. The discredit of the Swiss is only matched by that of Bonaparte, who first offered to stand surety for Switzerland vis-á-vis the Prussians and vented his spleen in the Moniteur when Switzerland repudiated his authority; then offered to stand surety for Prussia vis-á-vis Switzerland, and now finds himself compelled to admit, in little semi-official articles, that Prussia refuses to enter into any obligation towards himself. He has virtually endorsed the démenti he received from the Neue Preussische Zeitung.†122 So low has the fellow sunk. In the meantime his half-brother, Morny, has had the foresight to secure for himself a post in the Russian service.
Page me40.94
I don't know whether you've seen that Mr Ledru-Rollin has publicly invited the French 'Republicans' to take part in the elections of Boustrapa's†40 Corps législatif†123? So he has descended to the naïveté of legal opposition. While this shows on the one hand that he has relinquished the grandiloquent title of pretender, it shows beyond a doubt on the other that opposition is again considered feasible actually inside France, and that the bourgeois Republicans are hastening to resume, along with the Orleanists,†124 a position in parliament that will enable them to shuffle the next revolution under the carpet.

Page Break me40.95
Page me40.95
I think I have already told you that the Brussels Nation has gone under, being now replaced by its rival the National, an inane, uninteresting Belgian gossip sheet. The noble L'Homme, too, has breathed its last. In its stead there appeared a Journal des Proscrits which proved incapable of surviving for more than a fortnight. In addition, diminutive pamphlets after the manner of Pyat's Ave Maria are published from time to time by the French réfugiés — inflated, hollow verbiage — printed crinoline save that they cost less to produce and are harder to sell.

Page me40.95
The Tribune has discovered that, during the past 30 years (up till 1851), France has enriched herself far more than England and thus is now also her superior politically.†a The proof: In France, the value (i.e. nominal) of landed property has increased twofold, in England not so much. True, the French estimate included houses while the English one did not; but since the English population increased by only 33 per cent in the area concerned, the same could be assumed of the number of houses (which the Tribune appears to equate with their value).
Page me40.95
Erich has achieved his purpose here without any need for further references.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.95
Your military exposé†125 WAS BEAUTIFUL. The Augsburger contained an article in which the passage at Constance is described as very difficult.†b I have only skimmed over it.

Page me40.95
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.96

43
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.96
[Manchester, about 22 January 1857]†126

Dear Marx,
Your letter arrived like a bolt from the blue. I had believed that everything was going splendidly at last — you in a decent house and the whole BUSINESS settled; and now it turns out that everything's in doubt. What damned stingy fellows these Yankees are; the people on the Tribune seem to imagine that, having squeezed you like a lemon, they must now proceed to squeeze another one. But the manner in which they are trying to break things off is particularly mean and cowardly. They want to force you to take the initiative. Furthermore, ever since Cluss fell so strangely silent, we've not had one reliable man in the whole of America.

Page me40.96

Que faire cependant?†a Since the Tribune is definitely intent on breaking with you this time, I think the best thing would be to establish connections with another New York paper. Might not something be arranged with the Herald or the Times?†b In your place I would at once make a move and keep the chaps on the Tribune dangling until everything is arranged. In view of the fellows' shabby behaviour you need only consult your own interests and show no consideration for them. If you think that an indirect move would be better, let me know. I will gladly carry out the negotiations in my name, so that you shan't be compromised; I could write saying I have reason to believe that you don't get on as well as you used to with the Tribune people and that some arrangement might perhaps be made, etc., etc. Enfin,†c anything you want, pourvu que quelque chose soit faite.†d
Page me40.96

I wouldn't put it beyond the Tribune fellows to have stirred up trouble with Putnam too. I should write at once to Putnam to clear the matter up. One doesn't even know whether to write the article on coastal fortifications or not.†e At all events it would be advisable to keep this source of income open as well.
Page me40.96

I shall send you £5 early in February and for the time being you can count on getting this every month. Even if it means my facing the new financial year with a load of debts, c'est égal.†a I only wish you had told me about the business a fortnight earlier. For my Christmas present my old man gave me the money to buy a horse and, as there was a good one going, I bought it last week. If I'd known about this business of yours I would have waited a month or two and saved the cost of its keep. But NEVER MIND, that doesn't have to be paid for straight away. But I'm exceedingly vexed that I should be keeping a horse here while you and your family are down on your luck in London. It goes without saying, by the way, that you shouldn't let the promise of £5 a month deter you from approaching me again in case of hardships, for if anything can be done I shall do it. Anyhow, I've got to turn over a new leaf; I've been leading far too frivolous an existence of late.

Page Break me40.97
Page me40.97

Warm regards to your wife and children and let me know soon what you propose to do and how things stand.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.97
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

44
MARX TO ENGELS†82
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.97
[London,] 23 January 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,
D'abord,†b very many thanks for your kind letter.
Page me40.97
I wrote to Olmsted about 10 days ago; am therefore awaiting his reply. It strikes me that Dana's annoyance over Freiligrath's blabbing his secret has something to do with the Tribune's behaviour, or rather with the fact that Dana has not brought his influence to bear.†127

Page Break me40.98
Page me40.98
To work for The New-York Herald is out of the question; The New-York Times is the one to go for. I am thinking of approaching them unobtrusively through Dr Abraham Jacobi, who is at least discreet and whose quiet manner seems to impress the Yankees GENERALLY. I intend to write to him next Tuesday, and at the same time to Dana in such a manner as will at any rate involve him in a contretemps more disagreeable than he had bargained for. I should be grateful if you could let me have by Tuesday — after Tuesday I shall probably discontinue the articles for the Tribune pending further news from New York — a military article on Persia.†a No need for much detail this time. Just a few general strategic VIEWS. The Tribune probably imagines that, now they have turned me out, I shall resign myself to abandoning the American camp altogether. The prospect of their 'military' and 'financial' monopoly going over to another paper is hardly likely to please them. Accordingly, I have today sent them a 'financial' piece.†128 An introduction to the Persian war,†129 however cursory, would be important because it would give them to understand that we still have a 'WAR' up our sleeves with which other papers could be helped to make a splash. The (military) prospects of the Russians and English need only be hinted at, of course.
Page me40.98
So I shall postpone any outright rupture until I find out whether I can fix anything up elsewhere in New York. If I cannot and the Tribune, for its part, does not change its attitude, then the break will have to be made, of course. But in a sordid contest like this I believe it important to gain time. It seems to me the Tribune has come to believe that, since the 'great turn' taken by events in America,†130 it can dispense with all special editions (European ones, at least). It's truly nauseating that one should be condemned to count it a blessing when taken aboard by a blotting-paper vendor such as this. To crush up bones, grind them and make them into soup like PAUPERS in the WORKHOUSE — that's what the political work to which one is condemned in such large measure in a CONCERN like this boils down to. I am aware I have been an ass in giving these laddies more than their money's worth — not just recently but for years past.

Page me40.98
Pieper is taking a schoolmaster's post SOMEWHERE between Portsmouth and Brighton; has been chasing after something of the kind for months.

Page Break me40.99
Page me40.99
What about that ADVENTURE of Lupus'? You forgot to say anything about it.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.99
P.S. I envy fellows who can turn somersaults. It must be a splendid way of ridding the mind of vexation and bourgeois ordure.
Page me40.99
I saw in The Morning Advertiser an excerpt, strategic in content, from the Grenzboten concerning the Persian business.

Page me40.99
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

45
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.99
[London,] 6 February 1857

Dear Engels,
An ACKNOWLEDGMENT, in great haste, of the pounds that arrived today.
Page me40.99
Enclosed a letter from Miquel. I wrote to him at once. The situation as regards the Tribune is as I foresaw. Once again not a word. So today I wrote the fellows a forthright letter as I had originally intended but did not tell them that meanwhile — until their answer arrives — I shall discontinue my articles entirely.
Page me40.99
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.99
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.100

46
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.100
[London,] 16 February 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Engels,

Enclosed a letter from Olmsted in reply to my inquiry. So this particular ARTICLE wasn't accepted.†131 However, even after this letter I believe that they will be glad to publish 'SHIPS AGAINST WALLS'.†a The question is, have you got the time to write it? No doubt we ought to try Putnam again before giving up altogether. At any rate it was exceedingly impertinent of that gentleman not to let me know what the position was until after 4 months. Since I shall in any case have to write to Olmsted, see if you can make out his Christian name from this letter.
Page me40.100

You will probably have had Miquel's letter. Freiligrath tells me that, besides Ruge and Hess, Oppenheim and other disreputable good-for-nothings write for the Jahrhundert.
Page me40.100

Freiligrath requests you not to let the matter of Weerth remain dormant. Assuming that that Jew Steinthal has got his hands on Weerth's diaries (about which the noble Campe has already written to Weerth's brother†b), there is the additional danger that, should Weerth's relations get hold of them, they might in usum delphini†c publish them amended and censored. It is to be hoped that Weerth's brother will approach you direct. If the diaries eventually turn up, this would also mean that you could appeal to the philistines' consciences. Incidentally, it is exceedingly mean of Steinthal to have no more than bluntly notified the old woman†d of Weerth's death, without any details and without either preamble or postscript. That haggler with his saccharine smirk!
Page me40.100

I have been rereading (but haven't quite finished) your essays on Pan-Slavism,†11 partly for my own edification, partly in order to note the passages which, in the event of a German version, would necessitate your referring to sources not readily available in

Page Break me40.101
England save at the British Museum. While thus engaged I discovered that the same unknown hand (provisionally I make so bold as to ascribe it to the Polish renegade Gurowski) which wrote above my rejected DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES articles,†a 'Tout ces chiffrés sont éxagérés',†b etc., etc. (nice French), has also adorned the Pan-Slavism articles with marginal glosses, viz.: ad†c article I. At the end: Vs. C'est ni bon.†d (What the Vs is supposed to be (German C?) is beyond me.) (Nice French sentence! C'est ni bon. Period.)
Page me40.101
Page me40.101
ad article IX. Written at the top: Changéz l'introduction†e and, as heading: 'Southern Slavi'.
Page me40.101
Again, re the sentence, 'BY THIS LOGIC ETC. IT WOULD FOLLOW THAT THE HINDOOS ARE THE MOST YOUTHFUL PEOPLE ETC.' he comments, 'THIS DEDUCTION IS ILLOGICAL'.
Page me40.101
On the statistical survey of the Serbian race: 'GERMAN (instead of GERMAN) INFLUENCES DESTROYED THEM IN OTHER BRANCHES UNDER AUSTRIAN DOMINION.' (Nice English!) Again, on your censure of Montenegrin BRIGANDAGE, 'THIS (instead of 'TIS) NOT TRUE'.
Page me40.101
Again, on 'CROATIA ETC. HAVE FOR CENTURIES PAST BEEN ANNEXED TO HUNGARY', he comments, 'BUT HUNGARY IS A COMPOUND OF THOSE VARIOUS LANDS'.
Page me40.101
The passage about the Mohammedan Bosnians, 'THEY WILL HAVE TO BE EXTERMINATED, NO DOUBT ABOUT THAT' is distorted in true Russian fashion by striking out the next passage: 'THESE ARE, HOWEVER, BUT THE INTERNAL DIFFICULTIES OPPOSING THE ERECTION OF A SOUTH SLAVONIC EMPIRE ETC.'
Page me40.101
That these notes are all of Russian inspiration is obvious. Likewise, that no Frenchman could have written French with this kind of ACCENTUATION and such mistakes; likewise and no less, that a Yankee would never talk about 'Southern Slavi' and would express himself altogether differently. Hence I should say that the provenance of these notes is beyond doubt. And if, as Olmsted's (Yankee) travelling companion maintained in front of myself, Freiligrath and Olmsted, Gurowski is in the direct pay of the Russian Embassy in Washington, the whole crisis with the Tribune becomes perfectly explicable. By the by, from the notes and deletions it transpires that originally it was still intended to publish a modified version of the articles on Pan-Slavism (up to and perhaps including No. 9), and that the idea was not completely abandoned until the fellow realised what we were driving at. Hence, too, Dana's belated decision.

Page Break me40.102
Page me40.102

Since, in the midst of my own crisis, it is very edifying for me to hear about crises, drop me a few lines telling me how things are in the industrial districts. Not at all well, according to the reports in the London papers.
Page me40.102

The two final volumes of Tooke's History of Prices — from 1849 onwards — have come out. It is, of course, a pity that in his unrelenting battle with the CURRENCY chaps and Peel's Acts,†132 the old gentleman is too exclusively concerned with the question of circulation. Still, it's interesting at this particular juncture.
Page me40.102

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.102
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

47
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.102
[London,] 24 February [1857]
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

Are you laughing, are you weeping, are you waking, are you sleeping?†a Have had no reply to the various letters I have sent to Manchester over the past 3 weeks. However, I assume they have arrived. Send me back what I enclosed in my last — Olmsted's letter — since I must answer it ONE WAY OR THE OTHER.
Page me40.102

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me40.102
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.103

48
ENGELS TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH†133
IN LONDON
Page me40.103
[Manchester, not later than 25 February 1857]

... The only literary piece of Weerth's that has arrived here so far is a humoristic history of trade (a fragment from the Brussels-Bradford period, 1845-47),†a but Steinthal is expecting a further packing case of papers. I shall most willingly do all I can to get the things, but it is important that Weerth's brother†b should write a letter for me, so that I shall have some kind of authorisation. There should hardly be much difficulty; Steinthal is perfectly willing to help. But as regards details probably more than one point of disagreement will crop up.
Page me40.103
The diaries, as far as my knowledge of them from Weerth's last stay here goes, contain only matter-of-fact notes.
Page me40.103
Meanwhile, as I have already said, as soon as I am authorised to collect the things, I shall certainly make sure that I get everything....

Page me40.103
First published in: M. Häckel, Freiligraths Briefwechsel mit Marx und Engels, Teil I, Berlin, 1968

Printed according to the manuscript of Freiligrath's letter

Published in English for the first time

49
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.103
Manchester, 11 March 1857

Dear Marx,

It's rather as though God and the universe had conspired to stop me writing to you. Whenever I think I have caught up to some extent with my commercial rubbish, I discover a whole pile of unsuspected arrears, am overrun by chaps, have to reply to hundreds of business queries on behalf of my old man and pander to fresh whims of Mr Gottfr.'s.†a Just to make sure that I am sitting really fast, Freiligrath saddles me with Prussian ex-lieutenants, dabblers in bonds, who spend the entire day trying to borrow money (something he, Freiligrath, himself thought fit to warn me against) and who, after their departure, send me pawn tickets so that I can redeem their watches at my own expense. I am not in the least obliged to Freiligrath for landing me with the importunate fellow.†b What is more I wrote to him today about my adventure with the brute. Let him clear the business up himself.

Page Break me40.104

Page me40.104

Last Friday†c Mr Ernst Dronke turned up at the office all of a sudden from Glasgow. He was here for only an hour or two on business. I saw him almost exclusively in the presence of Charles,†d when it wouldn't have done to argue with him or treat him roughly. On top of that his arrival was so sudden that I was unable to recall all of his intrigues. I treated him with reserve, just as I would treat an ordinary commercial traveller with whom I was only superficially acquainted and confined my remarks to trifling matters, and he was extremely careful to avoid any subject relating to the party. He shoved off during the afternoon and intends to come back in May, at which time I shall probably be in London. I hope he will remain a commerçant all his days; he certainly looks the part and the carefree existence seems greatly to his liking.

Page me40.104

I presume you got the £5 note I sent you last Friday (or was it Thursday?).

Page me40.104

The TORIES, FREETRADERS and Peelites could have done Pam no greater favour than put him in a minority over this question.†134 What luck the fellow has and how stupid are his opponents! There is a great deal of agitation up here just now, but since 4,000 new VOTERS are on the register, all small SHOPKEEPERS and CLERKS and OVERLOOKERS, and therefore predominantly pro-Bright, it is unlikely that there will be any change. Bob Lowe and Sir J. Potter (A BORN ALDERMAN†135 and once a mighty wencher) are to be nominated here. WILL NOT DO. You could probably let me have some details about Bob Lowe's early exploits in Australia and elsewhere. These would be very useful just now.†136

Page Break me40.105

Page me40.105

What is the price of Mieroslawski's thick book on Poland?†a It's really essential to have a compendium of this kind — and what is the price of Lelewel's work on which it is based,†b if you can find this out?

Page me40.105

I shall, by the way, send you a few more Guardians, they contain some really capital witticisms. I suppose you got the six copies I sent you recently (IN 2 LOTS)? Morny has already smelt a rat good and proper; these purchases the fellow is making in Russia must worry Bonaparte to death. That was also a fine to-do over the Docks Napoléon, Berryer jeune†c and Fox, Henderson & Co.†137 — you must have read about it in The Times.†d
Page me40.105
I'm most anxious to hear how the Tribune affair is progressing and likewise what you wrote to Olmsted. I think that I shall shortly be able to start work again and will see whether anything can be made out of China. The affair is bound to yield some interesting military aspect.†e But no hope of that so long as I have to slave away in the office until 8 o'clock each evening and can't start work till 10 o'clock, after SUPPER, etc., etc., is over. At present I have to be at the office by 10 o'clock in the morning at the very latest and ACCORDINGLY go to bed at about one. C'est embêtant!†f Just when one has really got into one's stride, one has to go to bed; cela ne va pas. Enfin, nous verrons.†g This summer things have got to be reorganised, otherwise there'll be a rumpus at the office. I intend to organise myself in such a way that I work from 10 to 5 or 6 and then leave and be damned to the business.
Page me40.105
Warm regards to your wife and children. You are all well, I hope?
Page me40.105
Tout á toi.†h

F.E.

Page me40.105
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.106

50
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.106
London, 18 March [1857]
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

You must excuse me for not having acknowledged receipt of the £5 or of your letter before now. My wife is very unwell and our domestic arrangements generally are in such a state of crisis that I am quite bemused and cannot write.
Page me40.106
Guardians received today. No answer yet from the New-York Tribune. The only thing I could say to Olmsted, of course, was that if he had failed to place the article†60 with Harper, he should send it back.
Page me40.106
Proudhon's new book on economics, not yet to hand, has already run into 7 editions.†a
Page me40.106
How Miquel could believe I could write for the Jahrhundert is beyond my comprehension — a weekly rag whose contributors are Ruge, L. Simon, Meyen, B. Oppenheim, M. Hess, etc. I haven't read any of it but have seen the cover of No. 1, Vol. 2, on which is printed the following list of contents: 'Nach dem Kriege, vor der Entscheidung. IV. Von Arnold Ruge'. 'Briefe aus Paris, der Schweiz und London' (i.e., L. Simon, Kolatschek, Meyen). 'Der Geist unserer Zeit; zum Neujahrsgruss. Von Arnold Ruge'. 'Naturwissenschaft und Gesellschaftslehre. V. Von M. Hess'. 'Erziehung zum Glauben und Erziehung zur Humanität'. 'Notiz'.
Page me40.106
Edgar Bauer is putting out a book, Englische Eindrücke.†b Should be splendid.
Page me40.106
I shall find out the price of Mieroslawski's and Lelewel's books (the latter's first volume nothing but a children's history).†c
Page me40.106
Concerning the blackguard — Bob Lowe — I have no information at present, but might find out something this week. He's the kind of fellow who would have been at home in the Société du dix Décembre.†138

Page Break me40.107
Page me40.107
Every day brings fresh revelations about Pam's 'liberal' foreign policy. First, the 'SECRET TREATY' with Austria.†139 Now, the fact that he has given Bonaparte his word to suppress any kind of revolution in Naples. The latter, however, wanted this done only in so far as a 'Murat' restoration†140 was not subsumed under the heading 'revolution'. It was this 'MISUNDERSTANDING' which scuppered the Naples expedition.†103 In the COMMONS yesterday Pam denied the charge in a very 'AMBIGUOUS MANNER'.†a But this week is likely to see the appearance of further documents which will give him the lie.
Page me40.107
The Russians haven't acted with quite their usual circumspection this time. The first Continental paper since the crisis in Parliament†134 to defend Pam as a 'TRULY BRITISH MINISTER'†141 is the Nord, which usually affects a fanatical hatred of Pam. Even the Neue Preussische Zeitung speaks of 'UNPRINCIPLED COALITION'.
Page me40.107

The Persian affair has fizzled out as I supposed: England has gained nothing, apart from a few nominal concessions; rather she has given way to the Persian court on the main issue.†129 Russia, on the other hand, has obtained a small piece of territory, as Layard yesterday confided to the gaping COCKNEYS. Needless to say, he did not have the courage to place these two FACTS in their correct causal nexus. He also repeated the assertion (already made by Disraeli in the Lower House without eliciting a word from Pam in reply) that, during the war with Russia, Pam forbade the Persians to take an offensive stand against the Russians as had been their intention. For at the time the fellows had hopes of recapturing the provinces that had been wrested from them. He had had the same admonition conveyed to them at the time of the Polish revolution (1830).
Page me40.107

In order to assess correctly the Persian, as also the Chinese fracas, both should be compared with Pam's earlier doings in these REGIONS, since both are merely repetitions.†142 So long as he was at the helm, the first Chinese war was conducted in such a way that it could have gone on for 100 years without any result save an increase in the RUSSIAN OVERLAND TEA-TRADE and a growth of Russian influence in Pekin. It was only under Sir Robert Peel that this war was given an 'English' twist by Ellenborough.

Page Break me40.108
Page me40.108

It is to be hoped — and is indeed probable — that this time a parliament will be returned which will pledge itself to nothing save passive obedience to Pam. The dissolution of the former parties expressed as a coalition ministry, like that of Aberdeen,†143 seemed rather to make the MIDDLE CLASS feel able to rest on its laurels than to alarm it. This same dissolution expressed as Pam's dictatorship is bound to lead, not only to the most gratifying fiascos and complications abroad, but also to the most violent agitation if not to revolution at home. The old boy, who was partly responsible for the Manchester 'massacre en miniature' and helped to draw up the 6 'GAGGING ACTS',†144 won't so much as turn a hair. Mutatis mutandis, Pam's DICTATORSHIP will be to the coalition ministry what the rule of the Royalists, who coalesced in the last French Assemblée, was to the rule of Bonaparte.†145 In England, things will at last be brought to a head.
Page me40.108

Apropos Bangya. Since 1855 this same Bangya has been Sefer Pasha's adlatus.†a He has married the daughter of a Circassian chief (which must be equally gratifying to his lawful wife in Pest and his unlawful one in Paris), and is now himself a Circassian chief. Through his connections in London he has recruited 300 Poles and shipped them to the BLACK SEA together with supplies of ammunition, etc. According to the news in the papers, they have run the gauntlet of the Russian CRUISERS and safely reached Sefer Pasha. WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THAT? The fellow, realising that his role was played out in the West, has embarked on a new one in the Orient. Whether again as a democratic mouchard†b or in good faith is another question.
Page me40.108

Write soon, as your letters are now essential TO [help me] PLUCK UP. The SITUATION is horrible.

Page me40.108
Salut (to Lupus as well).

Your
K.M.

Page me40.108
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.109

51
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.109
Manchester, 20 March 1857

Dear Marx,
It had already occurred to me that you might once again be in something of a hole. Whatever can be done by me, will be done. If at all possible I'll send you another five-pound note next week or, if I can't get hold of one, a POST OFFICE ORDER. In the latter case, be sure to let me know at what POST OFFICE I should make it payable. I've had very heavy debts to pay this month, with people tracking me down to the office, so that there was no option but to stump up. Otherwise you'd have had the five pounds straight away. It's lucky, by the way, that this parliament business has begun, with China thrown in for good measure†134; at this juncture the Tribune will need help again and will be forced to come to TERMS.
Page me40.109
I've been sounding the Guardian chap about the possibility of making contact with REVIEWS and MAGAZINES up here. But this chap, too, seems to be hunting round in the hope of fixing up something for himself and there's not much to be got out of him. However, I shall see. Since he knows my opinion of Palmerston and declares it to be PREPOSTEROUS he is all the less likely to give us a recommendation in politicis.†a All the same, I have a certain HOLD ON THE FELLOW but as yet haven't devised any way of exploiting it.
Page me40.109
I share your view of Palmerston's intentions and prospects in the new parliament. Bonapartist despotism wielded by Pam together with a Corps législatif.†123 We shall see what that leads to.
Page me40.109

According to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung,†b the Circassians (which, not specified) have actually appointed Bangya 'head of the house'; he was selected for this snug berth precisely because he is a foreigner, so that none of the native chiefs could complain of having been slighted. What has become of Sefer Pasha (a man of quite a different stamp to Ko&sa;cielski) is far from clear. I regard the whole thing as a stroke of genius on the part of the Russians, and we shall probably hear no more of the 300 Polish Spartans.†146

Page me40.109

The Nord must have changed its mind again. The Guardian's Brussels correspondent quotes passages that are violently anti-Palmerston.

Page Break me40.110

Can you let me have the most relevant bit? That sort of thing never comes my way here and in any controversy I must always have CHAPTER AND VERSE immediately to hand.

Page me40.110

While putting my old newspapers in order recently, I discovered the loss of one of the main bundles of English papers and cuttings from the Guardian, Free Press, etc., etc. Nothing, luckily, connected with our party archives — they are safely stored away. But everything, with a few exceptions, relating to Palmerston — Tucker's pamphlets,†147 the cuttings containing your articles you had sent me (many of these are also being sat on by Lupus, etc.). I needed and was looking for them precisely in order to refresh my memory as to detail. Have you got any duplicates you could send me, likewise the full text of your articles which appeared in Urquhart's London paper†61? These should be fairly easy to get hold of. I would find the things particularly handy just now.

Page me40.110

Bob Lowe's prospects up here are poor. Some of the philistines have come out against Bright; however I believe he will scrape through this time. Lowe will make an ass of himself as soon as he arrives here. But it would be splendid were he to get in.†136

Page me40.110

Warm regards to your wife and children. Write again soon and tell me how your wife is.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.110

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

52
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.110
London, 24 March 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

Herewith some anti-Palmerstoniana, viz.: 1. Betrayal of England, 2 COPIES. (NB. The self-same Coningham who here reproduces excerpts from Anstey's speech†a is now an ultra-PALMERSTONIAN candidate in Brighton.) 2. TUCKER-PAMPHLETS,†147 8 COPIES. 3. Anstey's speech.†b 4. Palmerston for Premier. 5. Palmerston in Three Epochs.†c (With the exception of the Hungarian affair, cribbed from Urquhart, the remainder has been lifted by Mr Wilks — just like him, of course — from my articles in the Tribune.†148) No need for you to preserve numbers 1 and 2; but possibly numbers 3, 4 and 5. Tomorrow, if I can find them, I shall send a few other pamphlets. As TO THE Nord, note that the Post itself (in one of the numbers appearing between 4 and 9 March) carried the article I have mentioned.†d Later, however, it changed its tune.

Page Break me40.111
Page me40.111

Now for PRIVATE AFFAIRS. D'abord†e a letter has arrived from the Tribune, which I shall send you as soon as I have answered it. My threat to write to another paper has worked after all, at least up to a point. Despite its very friendly tone, the letter shows that I was not mistaken about these gentlemen. For what they propose is to pay for one article a week, whether or not they print it; the second I send at my own risk, and draw on it if printed. Thus they are au fait†f cutting me down by one half. However I shall agree to it and must agree to it. Also, if things in England take the course I think they will, it won't be long before my income reaches its former level again.
Page me40.111

I'm very sorry that, in the meantime, I must continue to depend on you, having so greatly fallen into arrears that everything that could be pawned has been pawned and the drop in income cannot be made up until I have found some new resource. On top of that, and since I cannot after all withhold the FACT from you, my wife is IN HIGHLY INTERESTING CIRCUMSTANCES. However, all I intended in my last was to explain why I hadn't answered for so long — certainly not ANYTHING ELSE. You will understand that even the most equable of men — and in a mess such as this I do INDEED possess a great deal of equanimity — will sometimes lose patience and let himself go, especially vis á vis his friends.
Page me40.111

I should be most grateful if you could let me have a few 'humorous' LINES, SAY 50 OR 100 ONES, on the Orlandian bravery†g evinced by the English in Persia and before Canton.†134 The Bushire expedition,†149 as you will have seen, pivoted mainly on the espionage of one Captain Jones, who was sent to Bushire under FALSE PRETENCES as POLITICAL AGENT. Probably more tomorrow, as I want to send you the pamphlets today.

Page Break me40.112
Page me40.112
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.112
NB. It does after all make a difference whether one stages a coup d'état first and elections afterwards, or elections first with a subsequent coup d'état in view. Without doubt Palmerston, or at least his PAPERS, have OVERDONE THEIR PART. Take the Advertiser, for instance, wallowing in filth up to its eyebrows. This has, OF COURSE, evoked a measure of reaction.

Page me40.112
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

53
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET
IN LONDON
Page me40.112
[Draft]
[London,] 25 March 1857

Dear Sir,
Enclosed Chapter V of the diplomatic relations.†61 The forwarding of the gratification due for the printed contributions would oblige me. Should your time permit, you would oblige me by calling at my house any day except Friday. I have to communicate you some highly important information.†a
Page me40.112
The illness of Mrs Marx does not allow me seeing you at Ampton-place.

Yours truly etc.

Mr D. Collet

Page me40.112
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1929

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.113

54
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.113
London, 31 March 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,
Received the £5.
Page me40.113
I should like you to send me some Manchester Examiners if convenient. The BRIGHT PARTY'S EXPLANATIONS are of interest to me just now. It is only through their defeat that the election has acquired any historical POINT.†134 Palmerston's position will become dangerous only now, when he has a commanding majority inside Parliament, whereas outside Parliament there is a recrudescence — for the first time since the Anti-Corn Law League†150 — of SERIOUS ANTI-MINISTERIAL AGITATION. England is entering upon a sérieuse crisis — as The Times already intimates, with its reference to the CLOUD WHICH IT SEES GATHERING†a — and if the MOVE is resumed on the Continent, John Bull will not maintain the stance of supercilious detachment he adopted in 1848. Pam's victory marks the culmination of events which began in June 1848.†151 Amongst the more intelligent members of the London PUBLIC the news from Manchester, accompanied as it was by a commentary in the shape of Pam's brazen address and speech,†b was greeted with a kind of stupefaction. Seen from here — and all are unanimous on this point — Manchester has brought disgrace, serious disgrace, upon itself. Had Punch not been bought by Pam — Taylor, a chief editor thereof, has been given a post at the General Board of Health at a salary of £1,000 — Potter, Turner, and Garnett, at any rate, would have figured in it next Wednesday. Send me some particulars about these laddies and their WHEREABOUTS.
Page me40.113
Mr Dronke has written to Freiligrath telling him that he 'will break with his Jew and set up as an independent agent'.
Page me40.113
I have provided Urquhart with some notes on Bangya†c — in view of the latter's connections with Constantinople and Circassia.

Page Break me40.114
Page me40.114
Enclosed a cutting from Reynolds about the editor of The Morning Advertiser — Mr Grant. Every word of it true.
Page me40.114
Also Dana's letter. Let me have it back. In his enumeration of the articles published he mentions only the last ones,†a and even some of these he didn't publish until 5 or 6 weeks after their arrival in New York when he saw that things were taking a new turn.†152 His proposal re money is the best possible indication that I was not mistaken about the gentleman's intentions. His remark about the length of the articles suits me well. I shall have all the less to send. What strikes me, though, is that for months past he has been able to find 2 or 3 columns for the most insipid London GOSSIP.
Page me40.114
In Prussia too there is a minor parliamentary crisis. Once AGAIN the dictum 'Geniality leaves off where money matters begin'†153 would seem to be proving true there.
Page me40.114
It seems highly probable that the Swiss will agree to expel all the refugees.
Page me40.114
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.114
Did you take note of the bubbles that burst last week — the Australian Agricultural Company, the London and Eastern Bank, and the North of Europe Steam Company, one of the directors being Mr Peto?

Page me40.114
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

55
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.114
Manchester, 31 March 1857

Dear Marx,

You will have received the £5 note, K/S 84562, this morning. As regards 'depending on' me, don't give it another thought. I should take umbrage if you were not to inform me when the SOVEREIGNS' armed intervention is required. I shall see how my finances go in April; I think I shall be able to manage a bit more during the second half, at any rate.

Page Break me40.115

Page me40.115

The Tribune's proposal is most cunning and, since the chaps are practically certain to print only one article a week, I shouldn't send two save on special occasions such as the present elections, etc., etc. However, circumstances will come to your aid, and in all probability the good Yankees will have no reason to complain about the DULLNESS OF EUROPEAN POLITICS this summer and autumn, while their own merry-go-round will gradually come to a halt.

Page me40.115

I have hardly followed the Persian and Chinese military ventures†a at all, indeed there has been a great dearth of detail. About Captain Jones I know nothing. It would now be utterly impossible to get together the necessary material, but when we get fuller news about the last big cavalry attack in Persia I shall see what can be done.

Page me40.115

The pamphlets have arrived.†b If only I could get hold of your old Tribune articles!†148 Most of the stuff is in them. Washington Wilks†c and Palmerston for Premier contain only generalities, and Chisholm Anstey's speech†d is fearfully décousu†e though very important, more especially by reason of the personal matters relating to the Portfolio†154 but also, here and there, by reason of its contents. The only really cogent pamphlets are your two Tucker pamphlets, especially Unkiar Skelessi.†147 If you can supply me with any more material, tant mieux.†f I have taken steps to improve the storage arrangements.

Page me40.115

The eight thousand philistines who voted for the fattest man in Manchester (Potter) because he makes up for his lack of brains by the size of his bottom, are already ashamed of their victory. All the same, the elections have made an enormous impression here, and the 'Manchester' Party†134 is beginning to take stock of its performance over the past 6 years and to discover in what it has failed. I don't think we shall hear very much more of PEACE-PARTY TALK†155 for the time being, while on the other hand Bright (if he rallies) will, with one or two others, undoubtedly advocate a more far-reaching electoral reform and, before long, Jones may well receive some propositions from these bourgeois. For Pam the most gratifying thing must be his triumph over Bright, Gibson, Cobden,

Page Break me40.116

Miall and Fox (Oldham); I am inclined to believe that the fellow will get a WORKING MAJORITY of 60-100. But be that as it may, nous aurons du Palmerston tout pur,†a and WITH A VENGEANCE

Page me40.116

I've found one of the passages from the Nord in The Morning Post, but only eulogising his abilities.†b The one in which he appears as a 'TRULY BRITISH MINISTER'†141 is not to be found.

Page me40.116

Our local Palmerstonians and bourgeois offered Bob Lowe, should he be defeated here, the sum of £2,000 to cover his election expenses in some other wretched hole. The ass refused, preferring the safety of Kidderminster, only to be trounced there. But never again will he be able to come to Manchester; he has behaved like a real blackguard — first he allows the philistines to compromise themselves on his behalf, then cries off and, at the same time, writes an article for The Times in which he says it would be scandalous if Manchester were not to return Bright.†c

Page me40.116

This time Philistia was tremendously divided. The vast majority of the bourgeoisie, a small majority of the lower-middle class, against Bright and Gibson. Quakers†156 and Catholics for Bright to a man; the Greeks likewise; the established Germans against him. A drunken anti-Bright man shouted: 'WE WON'T HAVE HOME POLICY, WE WANT FOREIGN POLICY.' What the rationale of the local elections more or less amounts to is: To hell with all questions of reform and class matters. After all, we philistines form the majority of voters, cela suffit.†d The clamour against the aristocracy, etc., is tedious and produces no tangible result. WE DEARLY LOVE A LORD FOR ALL THAT. We've got FREE TRADE and as much bourgeois social reform as we require. We're flourishing like mad, especially since Pam reduced war INCOME TAX. So let's all foregather on territory where we are all equal, and let's be ENGLISHMEN, John Bulls, under the leadership of that TRULY BRITISH MINISTER Pam. Such is the present mood of the majority of philistines.

Page me40.116

What is piquant about the business up here is the burial of the Anti-Corn Law League†150; Smith P. Robinson (HON. SEC.) and George Wilson, 'THAT RESPECTABLE FIXTURE' are being thrown out of Newalls Buildings†157 and the GREAT LIBERAL PARTY is casting about for a new organisation. G. Wilson loses his snug berth and his status on the strength of which he rose to be CHAIRMAN of the Lancashire and Yorkshire railways at a salary of £1,000 per annum — another snug berth that will soon go west, permitting

Page Break me40.117

Wilson to go back to starch manufacturing as in the days of PROTECTION. But your Manchester philistine — even if a partisan of Bright — heaves a sigh of relief at the long-awaited demise of that old incubus, THE LEAGUE†136!

Page me40.117

Apropos, I believe that the Ch. Anstey pamphlet contains only a small part of Pam's reply†a — the debate lasted 4 days. Couldn't you get hold of the rest? And could you send me a copy of Urquhart's new rag, The Free Press†99 or whatever it's called? What is there in it by you?

Page me40.117

NB. You might also, s'il y a lieu,†b send me the titles of anything else of any use concerning the Pam affair; I could then get them myself up here.

Page me40.117

Hearty congratulations on your family prospects. What are the girls doing? They must be quite big by now. I look forward very much to seeing them at Whitsun. Warm regards to them and your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.117

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

56
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.117
Manchester, 2 April 1857

D.M.,

Potter is a great big, enormously fat fellow, aged about 46 years, red haired and red faced, has been mayor of Manchester 3 times, VERY JOLLY, HAS NO BRAINS, but plenty of belly and bottom, introduced robes into the corporation here on the occasion OF THE QUEEN'S VISIT, for which he was dubbed a knight, is a lifelong whoremonger (a BACHELOR still), on particularly intimate terms with the celebrated Miss Chester (alias Polly Evans) whose brothel he has twice fitted out and towards whose LAW EXPENSES he allegedly contributed £50 when she appeared before the Liverpool Assizes on a charge of abortion and was acquitted. A man who will greatly please the COUNTRY SQUIRES and whose reputation rests solely on the fact that his father, Sir Thomas Potter, KNIGHT, was once leader of the local liberal movement and introduced Milner Gibson here. He himself is popular with whores, CAB-DRIVERS, PUBLICANS, street urchins and the less respectable variety of philistine GENERALLY. While he was MAYOR the police left the whores in peace. Views — moderate liberal.

Page Break me40.118

Page me40.118

J.A. Turner is a respectable philistine who has never forgotten that he once went bankrupt and who, within his restricted circle, makes himself plus ou moins†a useful as chairman of the COMMERCIAL ASSOCIATION (the rival of the more liberal CHAMBER OF COMMERCE). Might also gain some influence in the House of Commons by his detailed knowledge of commercial questions. Is a Tory (moderate) and very rich. His elder son, Jack Turner, COMMONLY CALLED THE FAT BOY, is a great toper and a good billiards player. His second, an impudent lad, is a FOXHUNTER with considerable pretensions to good horsemanship, an ugly mug and red moustache. To the horror of his family, he married the ballet dancer Annie Payne.†158

Your
F.E.

Page me40.118
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

57
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.118
London, 9 April 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

You must excuse me for being so late in answering. For a fortnight my wife has been in worse health than for many months past, and there has been great TROUBLE in the house. Be so good as to let me have Dana's letter back.

Page Break me40.119
Page me40.119

I am sending you through the parcels company a small bottle of eye lotion. Cornelius brought me a bottle of it from Paris, where he had had trouble with his eyes. For several weeks I had myself been suffering from inflammation of the eyes due to intensive work at night. The lotion put me right within a few days and will do you a similar service. All you have to do is put a few drops into the bad eye on getting up and on going to bed.
Page me40.119

Conrad Schramm has died in Philadelphia of a chest complaint. I hear that in New York the Neue Zeit announcing his death has published an obituary of sorts. I haven't yet seen it.†159
Page me40.119

The apparent improvement on the Stock Exchanges is again petering out. Bank rate is rising again. Crédit mobilier†45 and French rentes are again going DOWN, while revelations of commercial sharp practice by joint stock companies in London and Paris are becoming increasingly frequent. In the latter place, I'm glad to say, the government is directly involved. You have, I suppose, read about the row between Péreire and Féline? I'd have copied it out for you had I not assumed that The Manchester Guardian's [woman] correspondent CHRONICLES everything of that nature. I now see the Paris Figaro from time to time, the only real journal of the Empire; it has cast off all semblance of respectability.

Page me40.119

I don't know whether I have already drawn your attention to the two new pieces of evidence against Pam. First, Herbert told his CONSTITUENTS in South Wilts†a that he had given orders for the bombardment of Odessa†160; upon his resigning, Pam sent an order written with his own hand to SPARE it. Secondly, Russell told the City electorate†b that Palmerston had given him written instructions on how to conduct himself at the Congress of Vienna,†161 instructions which Clarendon forbade him to make public and in the execution of which LITTLE JOHN so splendidly BROKE DOWN. It's typical of old Pam to keep harping in his newspapers on Herbert's Odessa TREASON (it was Pam's popular rag, the Advertiser, that first drew attention to Herbert's family ties with Vorontsov†c) and on Russell's Vienna TREASON.†162

Page Break me40.120

Page me40.120

I shall search out more anti-Palmerstoniana for you. Pam's speech against Anstey (a fat pamphlet) ought to be in my possession if Pieper hasn't pinched it from me. Lengthier works are Parish, Diplomatic History of Greece and Urquhart, Central Asia.†a On the first topic you might also read the EXPOSITIONS by Thiersch†b and Maurenbrecher†c which came out in 1836 (?). (It's a long time since I set eyes on them.) Of all the Blue Books,†38 the one that has impressed me most strongly is that on the second Syro-Turkish War.†d

Page me40.120

I've only had 5 articles in The Free Press.†61 Liebknecht, etc., have filched them from me. However I'll get them together for you. In the last one I used the text of one of your articles, in which you speak of Peter I.†163 I've only just completed the introduction. But at first the chaps dragged their feet for months. Later, they brought it out rather more quickly. But now, when the first payment is due, I dun them in vain. If they don't do better on this POINT than hitherto, I shall have to sever the CONNECTION ALTOGETHER. They have given me a new contract, but what good is a contract to me if they don't abide by it in puncto puncti†e?

Page me40.120

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.120

Regards to Lupus. Tell him that in Grimm†f I have found the scientific derivation of Farina, the Eau de Cologne manufacturer, viz. Sanscrit: vâri†g — Gen. vârinas.

Page me40.120
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.121

58
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX†164
IN LONDON
Page me40.121
[Manchester, about 16 April 1857]

Dear Mrs Marx,

Herewith the article,†a and at the same time 4 Guardians. A new map of London has now at last enabled me to locate your Grafton Terrace. You really are right out in the country, at the foot of Hampstead Hills and, if the hachures on the map are correct, in a highly romantic district. But if the result is nothing but ill-health, toothaches, swellings of the head and digestive upsets, it doesn't say much for country air and romanticism. At all events, I hope that both you and the Moor are by now feeling very much better.
Page me40.121

Lupus suggests that the Moor's etymology of Farina is quite wrong and that the Sanscrit vârinas is, rather, the root of Varina shag.†b This answer will certainly come as no surprise to the Moor and should therefore not be withheld from him. A new chapter is about to open in old Lupus' life. Don't be alarmed — it isn't marriage. On the contrary, it's divorce, for he's leaving the LANDLADY he's been with for 3 years, and moving closer to where I live. The old gent is now very popular with a group of German clerks who come to the Chatsworth from time to time, and over whom he presides with great dignity every Sunday night. They simply couldn't live without Lupus, any more than the English philistines who patronise the pub.
Page me40.121

All eyes up here are fixed on fat Potter in anticipation of the day when he seconds the address in Parliament; a fine spectacle that will be!
Page me40.121

Again, best wishes for your recovery. Warm regards to the girls — the air out there will undoubtedly suit them better. How they must have grown!
Page me40.121

With warm regards,

Your
F. Engels

Page me40.121
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.122

59
MARX TO ENGELS†82
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.122
[London,] 21 April 1857

Dear Engels,

Be so kind as to write by return, telling me how to reply to the enclosed letter from Dana.†165 I must send off an answer by Friday's post.
Page me40.122

By following Christ's precept 'if thy tooth offend thee, pluck it out',†a I have at last found relief, at the same time discovering that this wretched tooth was the source of all the other ailments that have been plaguing me for months. You have located our house correctly. The title of Mr Edgar's†b book is not Englische Eindrücke but Englische Freiheit.†c 1/4 of it is said to be about Mormonism. The whole claims to provide the physiognomy OR, IF YOU LIKE, physiology of the national character. I haven't read any of it. Will write to you IN SOME DAYS.
Page me40.122

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.122
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

60
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.122
[Manchester, 22 April 1857]†166

Dear Moor,

This business of the Cyclopaedia†165 has come as a real boon to me, and to you too, no doubt. Voilá enfin†d a prospect of making good your loss of earnings and, for me, a prospect of a regular occupation in the evenings. La paix allait me démoraliser†a; ever since there have been no more articles to write for the Tribune I have been doing far too much loafing, for which there is every inducement up here. As to the militaria, Dana must provide an immediate answer to the following questions:

Page Break me40.123
Page me40.123

1. How many volumes, roughly, will the whole amount to and how far does he propose to get in Vol. 1 or Vols. 1 and 2?
Page me40.123

2. Are the military articles to be confined primarily to defining technical terms, e.g. ARTILLERY, CASTRAMETATION, COLUMN, with historical notes and a brief synopsis of the individual branches of military science — thus e.g. artillery: 1. Definition. 2. History and present state. 3. Résumé of the branches of the modern science of artillery (gunnery, personnel, transport, use in the field and before fortresses, etc., etc.)?
Page me40.123

3. Or is the intention to have additional articles on military history, e.g. under the HEAD Austerlitz, Arbela, etc., etc., brief comptes rendus†b of the actual battles, and under Alexander, Caesar, Carnot, etc., etc., military biographies together with particulars in each case of any epoch-making progress?
Page me40.123

Next, you must write to Steffen at once and ask him for the title or author of an encyclopaedia of military science, as short and complete as possible; one that has the most but also the shortest articles would be best, since all I want is to know at once what articles to do and to have the alphabetical material as complete and HANDY as possible. As soon as I have this I can start work on Letters A and B — perhaps even sooner, since I can do a lot of articles from Brockhaus†c alone and a few more without it.
Page me40.123

The PAY is quite profitable, even at $2 per large page; a lot of the stuff will only have to be copied or translated and the longer articles won't involve a great deal of work. I shall take a look at one or two English encyclopaedias straight away to see what military articles they contain, but then concentrate on Brockhaus which, after all, not only provides a better basis but is also more complete and is evidently looked upon by Dana as a model.
Page me40.123

Should there be any philological sections for the taking, e.g. the Germanic languages, Middle High German, Old High German, etc., etc., literature (likewise in the Romance languages, especially Provençal), no harm would be done. Either the Jakob woman or Mr Gurowski will have taken on the Slav things; the former knows more about those languages than I do.

Page Break me40.124
Page me40.124

Which articles shall you be taking on? German philosophy, at any rate — biographies of modern English and French statesmen? Some financial pieces? Chartism? Communism? Socialism? Aristotle — Epicurus — Code Napoléon — and the like. Themes certainly harder to handle without any PARTY TENDENCY WHATEVER than the good old military stuff, where needless to say one always sides with the victor.
Page me40.124

Take as many articles as you can and set up an office by degrees. Mr Pieper can toil away, too; he will do well enough for biographical pieces and will, at the same time, get some plain wholesome information into his genius' noddle. Lupus might also be prepared to do something in the early classical field; je verrai!†a
Page me40.124

Even though the work won't be very interesting (most of it, at any rate), I'm immensely tickled by the whole thing since it will mean an enormous LIFT for you. I was really hellish anxious this time about how the Tribune business would turn out, particularly when Dana tried to put you on half-pay. But now everything is going to be all right again and even though there's no immediate prospect of payment, it's still a very secure berth and one need have no qualms about doing one or two letters of the alphabet in advance; the money will arrive in its own good time.
Page me40.124

Haven't you heard anything from Olmsted about Putnam's? I should very much like to have the article on Bazancourt†60; maybe I can do something with it here through Acton. Apart from that there may be a possibility of doing something further with Putnam's — PROGRESS IN THE ART OF WAR, IMPROVEMENTS IN ARTILLERY, SMALL ARMS, etc., etc., SHIPS AGAINST STONE WALLS; I'm willing to do anything so long as the fellows undertake to publish it. Dana would certainly arrange it to make you less dependent on the Tribune. By the way, get the EDITOR of Putnam's to write in person, cela vaut mieux.†b
Page me40.124

You must also find out from Dana whether the articles should in general take up more or less space than e.g. in Brockhaus, and whether the whole is intended to be bigger or smaller than Brockhaus. Then we shall know what we are about. Also when they will pay — and by when the job must be completed. It's as well to know all this.
Page me40.124

In your place I should offer to do the whole encyclopaedia alone; we could manage it all right. At all events, take whatever you can get. If we have 100 to 200 pages in each volume it won't be too much. We can easily supply that amount of 'unalloyed' erudition so long as unalloyed Californian gold is substituted for it.

Page Break me40.125
Page me40.125

But now, warm regards to your wife and children; let me hear from you again soon.

Your
F. Engels

Page me40.125
Most obliged for the eye lotion. I'm still having some trouble but think it's because I've recently been drinking more port than usual — DROP THAT!

Page me40.125
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

61
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.125
London, 23 April 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Fred,
I shall write to Dana not later than tomorrow. For me, the thing has come as a godsend, as you can imagine. It has also reassured my wife, which is important in her present SITUATION. I shall write to Steffen straight away (the fellow has changed his lodgings without notifying me, but is still in Brighton). Pieper, as you will remember from one of my previous letters,†a has been a schoolmaster in Bognor since Christmas, AND I SHALL CERTAINLY LEAVE HIM THERE. He was becoming daily more vacuous, idle, useless and expensive. Under the iron rod of the parson in whose service he now is, he will again come to his senses. Moreover, the laddie left me just at a time when, because of my wife's condition, he thought himself indispensable and did not seem averse to the idea of my pressing him to remain on more favourable terms. I DID NOTHING OF THE SORT but merely expressed my satisfaction at his having at long last found a post. In the event, it transpired that his 'indispensability' was merely a figment of his own imagination. My wife fulfils the function of secretary without all the BOTHER created by the noble youth. As tutor to the girls he was quite unsuitable. So both parties have benefited from the change and, if the fellow again becomes serviceable, as I am convinced he will, he'll be much fortified by the realisation that I do not need him in any way.

Page Break me40.126

Page me40.126

Hence there can be no question of setting up an office in London. There is no one here who is any good. It's possible — and this I shall know within a day or two — that Dana has approached Freiligrath direct. Our Freiligrath is again MALCONTENT with his post though it enables him to earn £300 very comfortably with little or nothing to do. What he finds tedious is, for one thing, the moaning and groaning of the shareholders, who vent their displeasure on him, and, for another, his admittedly ambiguous position, which places a great deal of responsibility on him while allowing him barely a semblance of autonomy. That, AT LEAST, is the interpretation he himself puts on his FEELINGS. What in fact LURKS beneath all this is, or so it seems to me, a general distaste for RESPONSIBILITY. A clerical post which would relieve him of it, as at Hood's, is and always will be his dream. Then, too, he is tormented by the conflict between his renown as a poet and the rate of exchange. So far as I can gather from his occasional CONFESSIONS, all these Crédits mobiliers†45 are privily assailed by considerable MISGIVINGS. He was assured by an old hand on the Stock Exchange that never, in a practice of 40 YEARS STANDING, had he experienced a chronic state of crisis such as now prevails. I haven't yet got round to it, but some time I must really investigate the relationship between the rate of exchange and BULLION. The role played by money as such in determining the bank rate and the MONEY MARKET IS SOMETHING STRIKING AND QUITE ANTAGONISTIC TO ALL LAWS OF POLITICAL ECONOMY. Worthy of note are the 2 newly published volumes of Tooke's History of Prices. A pity the old man's head-on collision with the CURRENCY PRINCIPLE chaps†132 should lead him to give such a one-sided TURN to all his disquisitions.
Page me40.126

I wrote to Dana as much as a fortnight ago asking for the return of your Bazancourt.†60
Page me40.126

The Urquhartites — who have asked me to send them a detailed BILL — have paid me £10 on account†a; this was most welcome, since

Page Break me40.127
I owed that much to baker and butcher alone. The girls are growing up very quickly and their education, too, is becoming expensive. At the LADIES SEMINARY they frequent, they are having PRIVATE LESSONS with an Italian, a Frenchman and a DRAWING MASTER. Now I have also got to find a chap for music. They learn extraordinarily fast. The youngest one — the BABY†a — is an astonishingly witty little thing and claims that SHE HAS GOT TWO BRAINS.
Page me40.127

For my own part I would much prefer to supply Dana with articles on, say, Ricardo, Sismondi, etc. That sort of thing does at least admit of objective treatment from the Yankee point of view. German philosophy is difficult to write about in English. However, I shall suggest various things to Dana and leave the choice to him.
Page me40.127

For the past six months I've been constantly having to call in the doctor for my wife. She is, indeed, very much run down.
Page me40.127
Apropos. Dr Freund has passed through the court of bankruptcy — assets £200, debts £3,000.
Page me40.127
The Bright and Cobden party cannot help but thrive now that Faucher is the foreign editor of their London paper, The Morning Star. I'm now on speaking terms with the chap since I can't help encountering him sometimes at Edgar Bauer's. The man considers himself the finest fellow in the world. 'Bruno Bauer has lost his self-confidence. He feels that it is I, not he, who will conquer Prussia.' He is A CURIOUS FREETRADER TOO, who doesn't even know what the MIDDLE CLASSES are. Prussia is, and ought to be, ruled by 'the officer and the student', 'I bowl over any English meeting at which I speak', 'I have made history. It was I who drew up Cobden's Canton MOTION',†167 to cite only a few of his tropes. The chap's a veritable Munchausen of mendacity, a veritable Ancient Pistol†b of braggadocio, and once in 6 months it's amusing to listen to his boasting.
Page me40.127
Have you — or Lupus — heard anything about a Römische Geschichte published somewhere near Heidelberg, which is said to contain much that is new†c?
Page me40.127
How goes it with the landlord of the Golden LION?
Page me40.127
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.127
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.128

62
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.128
[London,] 8 May 1857

DEAR Frederick,

The £5 received.
Page me40.128
Herewith a letter from Lassalle†a which, when Lupus has seen it, you should return to me at the beginning of next week. What should I do about fellow? Reply or not reply? You'll be amused by the comical vanity of the laddie, who will do anything to become famous and, entirely without provocation, writes 75 sheets on Greek philosophy.†b
Page me40.128
I have written to Dana in exactly the terms you suggested. As regards your Bazancourt,†60 I had already urged him to return it. Steffen doesn't know of any book such as you require; he himself appears to be engaged on an English translation of Rüstow's Cäsars Heerwesen.
Page me40.128
Pieper is on the point of falling back into his former foolishness. Has written me a 'genius's' letter. The enthusiasm — not the enthusiasm inspired in him by his new post, but that which he inspired in his new post cum attendant principal — appears AS USUALLY to have waned. He wishes to go to Switzerland as a 'courier', or else sever connections with his principal at mid-summer and once again cut a dash in London with £20 in his pocket. When I next write I shall pour cold water on the genius. If he is ever to become 'serviceable' again this young man must endure the parson's lash for some while yet.
Page me40.128
Have you read the Crédit mobilier's†45 last report? It was in The Times.†c Indicates a DECLINE.
Page me40.128
Pam AS REFORMER! He'll reform those boys WITH A VENGEANCE.
Page me40.128
If you possibly can, write a military piece on Persia or China next week. My wife is drawing ever closer to the catastrophe and is finding her secretarial duties increasingly onerous.
Page me40.128
As regards your toothache, I would advise you to have recourse to the same means as I did after eighteen months' hesitation. Pull the bugger out! I, too, always supposed my toothache to be rheumatic. Yet in the end a corpus delicti was discovered after all. When are you coming down here?

Page Break me40.129
Page me40.129
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.129
With the coming of spring the children always go down with various ailments. So it has been again, first the youngest†a and Laura and now it's little Jenny's turn.

Page me40.129
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

63
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.129
[Manchester,] Monday, 11 May 1857

My dear Moor,

I return Lassalle's letter herewith. Effery eench the puerile Jew. What a pretty compilation it must be, likewise the thing that is going to 'set things alight' and about which he is so mysterious.†168

Page me40.129

We know, of course, that there is nothing to the fellow but it is difficult to find any positive reason for breaking with him, particularly as we have heard nothing further from the Düsseldorf workers.†b From this letter he would appear to have ceased all intercourse with them, or rather they with him, since he finds nothing positive to say about how things are going with the workers in Germany. But whether he wouldn't again make use of a letter from you to regain some kudos in their eyes is another matter. In your place I should write to him — you can't very well do otherwise — but ask him outright how things stand with the workers' movement on the Rhine and especially in Düsseldorf, so working your letter that he will keep his mouth shut about it and must either plus ou moins†a declare himself or be deterred from corresponding with you. Lupus was much amused by the letter but our discussion on the subject was interrupted. I should, by the way, also make a point of asking him how he comes to slip your letters into the hands of the police.

Page Break me40.130

Page me40.130

There is absolutely nothing to say about Persia; the campaign itself was rotten and the accounts are even more so. There was, of course, something to be said about China on the arrival of the last MAIL as there still is, but now, ten days after the last MAIL, it's too late to do anything. So I shall wait until the next MAIL arrives, when I shall at once set to work so that the article†b will reach you in time for Friday or the following Tuesday. As far as possible, then, make your arrangements accordingly. I think the MAIL arrives at the end of this week.

Page me40.130
WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH THE CHILDREN? I trust little Jenny is ALL RIGHT again. Warm regards to them all and also to your wife.
Your
F.E.

Page me40.130
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

64
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.130
Manchester, 20 May 1857

Dear Marx,
As you will no doubt see from the enclosed article,†b it was written UNDER DIFFICULTIES. Each time I propose to do a Tribune article, it seems to bring out all the evil humours latent in my frame. On this occasion I'm sitting at home with linseed poultices on the left-hand side of my face in the hope of getting the better of a nasty abscess; I've been put on a frugal diet and forbidden beer, but by good fortune ordered to take a glass of wine. It's alleged that I've been eating too much roast beef; at all events I have had continual trouble with my face for the past month — first toothache, then a swollen cheek, then more toothache and now the whole thing has blossomed out into a furuncle, as little Heckscher calls it. In addition, I have to drink mineral water and — great fun, this — go out at 7 o'clock each morning.

Page Break me40.131
Page me40.131
Everyone up here is an art lover just now and the talk is all of the pictures at the exhibition. The thing is proving plus ou moins†a a FAILURE, financially, at any rate. Admittedly there are some very fine pictures, though most of those by the better or very best artists are no more than SECOND-RATE. Among the finest is a magnificent portrait of Ariosto by Titian. The later German and French schools very poor, hardly represented at all. Three-quarters consists of English trash. Best represented are the Spanish and Flemish and, after them, the Italians. S'il y a moyen,†b you and your wife ought to come up this summer and see the thing. It wouldn't do to write about it for the Tribune; and I wouldn't know where to begin — the Tribune can find the usual chit-chat in any paper.
Page me40.131

Lupus, as I believe I told you, has moved out and is again fighting the good fight with his LANDLADY. To make matters worse, his new LANDLADY was brought to bed a week after he moved in. Next door there's a chap who not only has a fiddle which he plays badly but also a French horn which he plays completely out of tune. Hence the study of the pedagogic sciences is attended by enormous difficulties, so that the old chap is spending more time than usual at the Chatsworth.
Page me40.131
I shall be in London in a fortnight or 3 weeks' time, either during Whitsuntide or the week after.†169
Page me40.131
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.131
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.132

65
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.132
[London,] 22 May 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,
It may be some consolation to you to learn that for the past 3 weeks right up to this very day, I have been submerged in pills and potions as a result of my old and, as I believe, hereditary LIVER COMPLAINTS. Only by dint of the utmost exertions have I been able to supply the 'goods' — for the Tribune I mean — being otherwise QUITE DISABLED. In order that my time should not be entirely wasted I have, faute de mieux,†a been mastering the dansk sprog†b and am presently applying myself to Af mit Livs og min Tids Historie, a colossal state haemorrhoid, af†c (ex-minister) &sign;rsted. Opening oysters would be an altogether more amusing proposition. However, if the doctor's promises are anything to go by, I have prospects of becoming a human being again next week. Meanwhile I'm still as yellow as a quince, and vastly more crabbed.
Page me40.132

As regards your own tribulations, I am firmly convinced that they all stem from a hollow tooth which ought to come out and which, by a series of concatenations, underlies all the other unpleasant symptoms. Heckscher will deny this, OF COURSE. However, when you come down here — which I greatly look forward to — it can do you no harm at least to accompany me to a really first-rate dentist and get him to examine your teeth. My view is based on the fact that two years ago, when I was suffering from very much the same trouble, Dr Freund also declared I had been eating too much meat, yet a few months ago a courageous visit to the dentist at last uncovered the source of the trouble. Your intermittent toothache is, of course, the main factor in my argument.
Page me40.132

My wife expects to be confined at the end of the month, this time in not altogether agreeable CIRCUMSTANCES. It will be a long time now — another 3 weeks at very best — before I have accumulated enough to be able to draw on the Tribune. I tried to draw a bill on myself to cover the interim period, but failed with éclat. The actual HOUSEHOLD debts I can put off paying, but in the case of the rates this is possible only up to a certain point, and besides, the afore-mentioned circumstances call for certain preparations which have to be paid for on the nail.

Page Break me40.133
Page me40.133

As you will have seen in the papers, a second director of the Crédit mobilier†45 — the first was Place — viz. the BANKER Thurneyssen, has decamped leaving massive debts of ABOUT 30-40 million frs. This splendid institution's latest report†170 — that of 28 April ultimo†a — reveals that, although the NET PROFIT still amounts to 23%, it has nevertheless fallen by about a half compared with 1855. According to Mr Péreire, the fall is due 1. to the ordre in the Moniteur of March 1856 by which Bonaparte forbade the Crédit to skim the cream off the excessive speculation then going on in France; 2. to the fact that, by an oversight, this 'ordre de la sagesse suprême'†b extended only to sociétés anonymes,†c thus laying the Crédit open to highly improper competition in the shape of sociétés de commandite†d; 3. to the crisis during the last 3 months of 1856. True, the Crédit sought to exploit that crisis to bring off a few financial coups de main, but was obstructed in this 'patriotic' work by the NARROW SELFISHNESS of the Banque de France and the syndicate of Paris BANKERS headed by Rothschild; 4. Bonaparte has still not permitted them to make the statutory ISSUE of 600 millions in paper money of their own devising. That issue is still looming in the future. Péreire seems to be exerting severe pressure on Bonaparte. Should the latter shrink from giving his authorisation, a MIDDLE COURSE would seem to be envisaged, namely to turn the Banque de France into the instrument of the Crédit by loftier means, i.e. new draft legislation. From this report it further transpires that the Crédit's business is still vastly disproportionate to its capital and that it has used the capital loaned by the public exclusively to further its gambles on the Bourse. As a quasi-state institution of Bonaparte's on the one hand, the Crédit mobilier declares that it is called upon to maintain the prices of FUNDS, SHARES. BONDS, in short, of all securities on the national Bourse, by advancing the money borrowed from the public to COMPANIES or INDIVIDUAL STOCK-JOBBERS for their operations on the Bourse. As a 'private institution', on the other hand, its main business consists in speculating on the rises and falls in the stock-market. Péreire reconciles this contradiction by something Moses Hess might well call 'social philosophy'.†171

Page Break me40.134
Page me40.134

I have omitted only one or two small items from your China-Persia article,†a and altered an expression here and there. I agree with the whole thing, only I don't think that the troops stationed in Persia will be sent to China so soon. The treaty expressly stipulates that they will not leave Persia until the Persians evacuate Herat.†129 Pam won't spare them the hot season. That his instructions in this respect were again highly 'incomprehensible' would seem to follow from the fact that the Governor-General of India — Canning — tendered his resignation at the same time as the British general and the British admiral†b committed suicide. Meanwhile, as announced in the Vienna newspapers, the main object has been attained. Persia has ceded two STRIPS OF LAND to Russia.

Page me40.134

I have heard from Mickel†c and shall send you his letter one of these days. Trusting I shall soon hear that you are fit and well again.

Page me40.134

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.134

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

66
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.134
[London,] 23 May 1857

Dear Engels,

The enclosed arrived from Dana this morning. It puzzles me how the Yankee can expect the stuff for Vol. I†165 to be in New York by the beginning of July if he doesn't let us know what he wants until the end of May.

Page Break me40.135

Page me40.135

You might reconsider which articles one should offer to do, apart from the military. Philosophical stuff is, in fact, too badly paid and also difficult when it has TO BE DONE IN ENGLISH. Do you know if there happens to be any German or French book on the biographies of big industrialists?

Page me40.135

I'm equally puzzled as to how aesthetics is to be dealt with in 1 PAGE, FUNDAMENTALLY, and on a Hegelian basis.

Page me40.135

Does Lupus feel inclined to take something on?

Page me40.135

Enclosed also a letter from Miquel. I do not, in fact, understand his theory of 'non-overproduction' and yet of 'lack of the wherewith to pay for production', unless it be that the utterly superficial blather of the utterly wretched CURRENCY chaps†132 has taken root in Germany.

Page me40.135

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.135

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

67
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.135
Manchester, 28 May 1857

Dear Marx,

Dana must be out of his mind to stipulate 1 page for aesthetics. Nor has the chap any inkling of military matters. See list of articles overleaf, occurring to me exclusively from Brockhaus and from memory. But since I must first check it against an English military encyclopaedia it can't be final; how could anyone remember all the technical expressions which in English begin with A? Apropos, there is an encyclopaedia of this kind by a hack of the most wretched variety, one J.H. Stocqueler.†a Could you make inquiries about price, scope, etc., etc.?

Page Break me40.136

Page me40.136

And then, if you please, he wants to have the articles — of the desired thoroughness and brevity — over there by 1 July. Once again, typical Yankee. Anyway, it proves that they are counting more on SHOW than on real substance, as is already evident from the $2 per page.

Page me40.136

Send Dana the list — as a provisional one — and point out that since it's impossible to work ON SPECULATION at this PAY, he must say what he wants. (It's precisely these patched together articles, being the easiest, that make the PAY acceptable.) A 2nd list of technical expressions for A will follow very shortly. Once this is SETTLED he might just as well let us have the list up to D, E or G so that we can get on with it.

Page me40.136

I know nothing about Airey's (General) former career. You might look it up in an ARMY LIST, which will at least provide the bare bones.

Page me40.136

I know nothing about the Spanish Armada either, but this could be found — likewise Ayacucho.

Page me40.136

I'm not yet in sufficiently good shape to be able to come up tomorrow, and propose to leave on Saturday.†169 Can one take a CAB from Camden STATION (to which one books the TICKETS) to your place? And how far is it?

Page me40.136

I shall bring Miquel's letter with me; because of my illness I haven't seen Lupus for a whole week.

Page me40.136

More when we meet. As you can imagine, I have my hands really full, what with arrears, etc., etc.

Page me40.136

Your

F.E.

Page me40.136

* Abensberg (battle of 1809) 1/4 p.
Abukir ditto 1/4 p.
Axle (artillery) 1/8 ditto
Acre (St. Jean-d'-Siéges of) 1/4 ditto á 1/2
Actium (battle of) 1/8-1/4
Adjutant 1/4-1/2
Afghanistan (invasion by English) 2
Åland Isles see Bomarsund
Albuera (battle) 1/4
Aldenhoven ditto 1797 1/4
Alessandria (fortress and sieges) 1/4 Algeria (French conquest of and English bombardment of) 2-3

Almeida (siege of in Peninsular War)1/4
Amusette (artillery) 1/10

Page Break me40.137
Anglesey (Marquis of) 1/2
Attack (in battle and siege) 1/2
Antwerp (fortress & sieges) 1
Approaches 1/2 fully Arbela (battle of) 1/4
Arquebusier 1/8
Aspern and Essling (battle 1809) 3/4
Augereau (Marshal) 1/2
Advanced guard 1/2* 172

Page me40.137
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx-Engels Gesamtausgabe, Abt. III, Bd. 2, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

68
ENGELS TO MARX†173
IN LONDON
Page me40.137
[London,] Friday morning
[5 June 1857]

Dear Moor,

Instead of coming to see you I am once more condemned to no less than four days of hot poultices. My face is again very bad and the whole business has begun all over again. But this time I intend to get rid of it for good. This will, of course, postpone my departure for Manchester ad infinitum. If the thing clears up quickly I might be able to go out for a bit on Monday.
Page me40.137

In case you have any news for me in the meantime, drop me a line. The address you know: 7 Grove Hill, Camberwell.
Page me40.137

I am RATHER annoyed by this business, as you can imagine, but que faire†a?
Page me40.137

Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.137
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.138

69
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET
IN LONDON
Page me40.138
[Draft]
[London, about 10 June 1857]†174

Dear Sir,

According to your wish I send you the account for my contributions to The Free Press.†a They fill somewhat more than 27 columns. You will excuse me for having interrupted. Since I had the pleasure to see you last, I was constantly labouring under serious liver complaints, and thus forced to interrupt my contributions to The Free Press which, however, I hope to be able to resume next week.

Yours truly
D.K.M.

Page me40.138

Contributed to the London Free Press 26 columns; the column at 1/2 Guinea; makes 13 Guineas. Received on them 10£. St.; remains due to me 3£. St. 13sh.

Page me40.138
Published for the first time

Reproduced from the original

70
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET†175
IN LONDON
Page me40.138
[Draft]
[London, after 10 June 1857]

Dear Sir,

Having myself not made up, but only copied the account forwarded to you, I felt, on receiving your note, very anxious, indeed, lest my claims should have been overstated. Consequently,

Page Break me40.139
I reexamined the reckonings. The case is simply this, that you make 22 1/3 columns, that you have omitted No. 34,†a and that the only mistake on my part consists in having put down 4 columns for No. 34, which really amounts to 5 1/2 columns.

Yours truly
K. Marx

D. Collet, Esq.

Page me40.139
Published for the first time

Reproduced from the original

71
MARX TO ENGELS
[IN LONDON]
Page me40.139
[London,] 15 June 1857

Dear Engels,
Are you laughing or are you weeping,
Page me40.139
Are you waking or are you sleeping?†b We here are seriously concerned about you. So write and tell us how you are. I hope you aren't being given any more hot poultices which, as a method of treatment, is quite out-of-date and has now more or less fallen into disrepute. But assuming you are using internal remedies only — as is rational and up-to-date — I fail to see why you have to keep yourself so anxiously secluded.
Page me40.139
My wife very unwell. But she sounded the bugle too soon and as yet nothing has happened.
Page me40.139
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.139
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.140

72
MARX TO ENGELS†176
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.140
[London,] 29 June 1857

Dear Engels,

From the enclosed letter you will see that Dana is expecting the manuscript soon.†a What am I to tell him? I can't plead sickness, since I am continuing to send ARTICLES to the Tribune. It's a very awkward CASE.

Page me40.140

My wife is still in the status quo. On top of that, a nasty cough and domestic worries, serious ones. I hope you are recovering. Steffen was here yesterday.

Page me40.140

Your
K.M.

Page me40.140
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

73
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.140
[London,] Friday, 3 July [1857]
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

Shall be writing tomorrow. This is just to inform you that the second half of the note had still not arrived by this evening. Considering the bad luck which has been dogging me of late, it may well have got lost. I couldn't go to Williams' since my wife's condition has meant — pretty well ever since you left†169 — that I can't leave her on her own.

Page Break me40.141

Your
K.M.

Page me40.141
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

74
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.141
[London,] 3 July [1857]

DEAR Frederic,
I am writing again TO GAINSAY my earlier note. No. II arrived on the stroke of 6. No letter has ever arrived so late before, and hence I wrote in order to avert possible MISCHIEF.
Page me40.141
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.141
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

75
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.141
[London,] 6 July 1857

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

Rüstow†a is not to be had at Williams'. And I wouldn't care to write to Steffen on this score for, being himself engaged on an English rendering of the book, he tends to be mistrustful. So far as the ancient world is concerned, I believe you could restrict yourself to a few generalities and simply say — in the article itself†a — that these themes are to be discussed under the headings 'Greek Army' and 'Roman Army'. This will save time, during which it will be possible not only to procure Rüstow but also to send you a mass of other data, for I have now discovered at the Museum,†b after prolonged searching, a complete list of sources on the military history of Antiquity. But at the moment speed is the main consideration. As you know, I took your advice and sent Dana a second list.†177 So what excuse can I offer the man? I cannot plead illness, for if I do I shall have to interrupt my writing for the Tribune altogether and so reduce to nothing my already exiguous income. At a pinch Dana could have recourse to the man who already provides him with some of the military articles. In which case I would be elbowed out. To obviate this I shall have to write on Friday. But the difficulty is, what?

Page Break me40.142

Page me40.142

As you will understand, nothing could be more distasteful to me than TO PRESS UPON YOU while you are ill; nor, indeed, when you left here did I have any inkling that, in the state you are in, you would at once resume — and so SERIOUSLY at that — your work in the office.

Page me40.142

My own situation is such that everything depends on whether I can persuade little Bamberger to discount a bill on myself this week. The end of the quarter has come, and all hell will now be let loose.

Page me40.142

Freiligrath has written me a note from which I can see the Crédit mobilier's scare.†45 The constant fall in securities on the Paris Bourse, despite the prospect of a good harvest, has given rise to a veritable PANIC amongst the financiers.

Page me40.142

The Indian affair is delicious.†178 Mazzini's putsch quite in the old official style.†179 The ass might at least have avoided dragging in Genoa!

Page me40.142

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.142

There is a cheap Dictionary of Military Science by Campbell.

Page me40.142
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.143

76
MARX TO ENGELS†82
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.143
[London,] 8 July 1857

Dear Frederic,

My wife has at last been brought to bed. The CHILD, however, not being viable, died immediately. In itself, this was no disaster. Yet partly because of the circumstances immediately attendant on it, which have branded themselves on my mind, and partly because of the circumstances responsible for this result, it is agonizing to look back upon. Nor is it possible to go into such matters in a letter.
Page me40.143

Salut. Give my regards to Lupus and pass on the news to him.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.143
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

77
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.143
Manchester, Saturday, [11] July 1857†a

Dear Marx,

It was only this morning that your short note was brought to me from the office. The WAREHOUSEMAN who generally brings me my mail thought it more convenient to run his errand the next morning instead of the previous night. I was deeply affected by the contents of your letter, cryptic though it was, knowing how painful it must be for you to write like that. You yourself may be taking the child's death stoically, but hardly your wife. How she is, you don't say, and hence I assume that all is well, but let me know for certain or I shan't have a moment's peace of mind. In this respect, your mysterious insinuations leave too much room for conjecture. Providing she herself is well it is perhaps better that it should now all be over.

Page Break me40.144
Page me40.144
Today I can definitely promise you the manuscripts for Dana for Friday, i.e. the articles 'Alma', 'Abensberg', 'Adjutant', 'Ammunition' and more such small stuff, thus pretty well finishing off the whole of A (except 'Algeria' and 'Afghanistan') up to Ap and Aq.†a I have got together the material for all this and should be able to work without interruption since, as a result of my breathing fresh air again, my illness has suddenly taken a turn for the better, which in all likelihood will finally put paid to the thing. This turn took place last night and, since I've been ordered to take exercise in the open air outside the town, I shall not be going to the office until Thursday. As soon as I've finished these first articles, I'll tackle 'Army' (modern times, 1300 to 1850) and 'Artillery'; the first part of 'Army' I shall do last and, at the same time, let you have the list of B's. 'Artillery' will be ready to go off on Friday week, 'Army' as well perhaps. I may send you some of the shorter things tomorrow for Tuesday's post.
Page me40.144
A couple of days ago Lupus left for France and Switzerland. The French vice-consul here, a businessman, gave him a passport without further ado. On his return he will probably pay you a visit (in approx. 3 weeks).
Page me40.144
I dare not show my face at the office, but as soon as I can put in an appearance there I shall send you some more money.
Page me40.144
Give my warm regards to your wife and assure her of my sincerest sympathy. Love to the girls, and see that they keep in good health.

Your old friend,
F.E.

Page me40.144
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.145

78
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.145
[London,] 11 July 1857

DEAR Frederic,

The chief thing for you at present is naturally to recover your health. I shall have to see how I can put Dana off again. Don't worry your head about it. Next week I'll send you something on the military systems of Antiquity.

Page me40.145

Hastings, or so I hear, is the only resort in England that is of real benefit to complaints like yours. So that's where you must go, the time having come to tackle your illness seriously. — The use of iron to inhibit further development of the malady is at any rate rational, WHATEVER MR HECKSCHER MAY THINK OF IT. You ought to consult yet a third doctor about this too. Assuming that none of the chaps knows more than half of his job, it's advisable to check one against the other.

Page me40.145

My wife is getting better. However, her condition still makes it difficult for me to leave the house.

Page me40.145

The revolution marches on apace AS SHOWN BY THE MARCH OF THE Crédit mobilier†45 and Bonaparte's FINANCES IN GENERAL.

Page me40.145

With best wishes for your recovery,

Your
K.M.

Page me40.145
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

79
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.145
[London,] 14 July 1857

Dear Engels,

You may be certain that despite all mishaps I and my wife (who, by the by, is well on the way to recovery) found our own AFFAIRS less disquieting than your latest report on the state of your health. While delighted beyond measure that you should be improving, I am thoroughly alarmed to learn that you intend to return to the office — and to do so this very week. If nothing else, the whole course of your illness should have shown you that what you needed physically was to rest, recuperate and temporarily shake off the dust of the office. You must go to the seaside AS SOON AS POSSIBLE. If, at this crucial moment, you should be so childish (pardon the expression) as to shut yourself up in the office again, you will suffer further relapses, and your resistance to the disease will at the same time be progressively impaired. Such relapses might ultimately lead to an infection of the lungs, in which case all attempts at a cure would be fruitless. Surely it is not your ambition to go down to posterity as one who sacrificed himself on the altar of Ermen & Engels' office? One would feel sorry for a person with your complaint if he were compelled by circumstances to chain himself anew to his business rather than restore his health. In your case, however, all that is needed is a vigorous decision to do what is medically necessary. Only consider how long the trouble has been dragging on already, and how many relapses you've had, and you will see how necessary it is FOR SOME TIME TO LET MR ERMEN SHIFT FOR HIMSELF and to restore your health by breathing the sea air and enjoying relative leisure. I hope you will take the thing seriously and abandon your former mistaken system of alternating between medicine bottle and office. It would be unpardonable for you to persist in it.

Page Break me40.146
Page me40.146
I can only relate verbally the circumstances that attended my wife's confinement and UNNERVED ME FOR SOME DAYS. I cannot write about such things.
Page me40.146
I have received your articles.†a MY BEST THANKS FOR THEM.
Page me40.146
The Indian revolt†178 has placed me in something of a quandary. As far as the Tribune is concerned, I am EXPECTED TO HAVE SOME SUPERIOR VIEW OF MILITARY AFFAIRS. If you can supply me with a few general axioms, I can easily combine them with the stuff I've already got together to make a readable article.†b The situation of the insurgents in Delhi and the MOVES of the British army are the only points on which a few military generalities are needed. All the rest is MATTER OF FACT.
Page me40.146
Mr Bamberger has kept me dangling for the past fortnight by making bogus rendezvous at which he never appears. I shall now give the laddie up, of course.

Page Break me40.147
Page me40.147
Jones' wife died last April; he seems to be keeping relatively well.
Page me40.147

A letter received from Imandt today. He has the EXPECTATION of a post which he puts at £300 a year. Regarding Dronke he tells me that he is said to be living en famille with a woman who is pregnant by him. It isn't Miss Smith, however.
Page me40.147
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.147
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

80
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.147
[London,] 16 July 1857

Dear Frederic,
I have today sent you the Rüstow,†a which you should return as soon as possible, since Steffen is working on it just now. I told him I wanted it for myself.
Page me40.147
The enclosed notes are of little value, EXCEPT PERHAPS for a quotation or two.†180 I did, in fact, take a look at the Encyclopaedia Britannica but there was no time to read it properly. I fear that the notes will contain little that is new to you. Were taken from: Ersch and Gruber: Encyclopédie universelle;†b Pauly: Realencyclopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft (1844-52). Impossible for me to read the works themselves just now. Pity I didn't apply myself to them sooner. The Encyclopaedia Britannica seems to have been copied pretty well word for word from the German and French works and hence is difficult to get away from unless one reads the specialised writings.

Page Break me40.148
Page me40.148
My wife better physically; however still in bed; also extraordinarily out of temper for which, au fond de coeur†a and UNDER PRESENT AUSPICES, I don't blame her though I find it wearisome.
Page me40.148
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.148
I trust your health keeps improving.

Page me40.148
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

81
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.148
[London,] 24 July 1857

Dear Engels,
Received the Cyclopaedia stuff TO-DAY.†b181
Page me40.148
If at all possible will you send me some money? On Monday I'm threatened with the BROKER on account of rates and LANDLORD. Besides this the total WANT OF CASH during the past fortnight has made it impossible to obtain the small COMFORTS the doctor has prescribed for my wife, whose RECOVERY is very slow — indeed, she would seem to be getting weaker every day.
Page me40.148
During this time I have been trying with conspicuous lack of success either to discount a bill or, as is quite customary in London, to raise a LOAN from a LOAN SOCIETY.†182 The latter operation calls for two respectable guarantors and my attempts to find them have been a total failure.
Page me40.148
The money outstanding to me from the Tribune is so insignificant that I cannot think of drawing a bill on them for another 2 weeks. It would have been more if, on the one hand, I hadn't been previously compelled to overdraw and, on the other, the troubles at home had not caused some loss of earnings.

Page Break me40.149
Page me40.149
Nothing could be more distasteful to me than to burden you with my woes during your illness, but I'm so completely isolated that there is nothing else I can do.

Page me40.149
I trust that, at the seaside, you will soon recuperate. Don't forget to let me have your address straight away.
Page me40.149
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.149
Have attended to the enclosed letter for Imandt.

Page me40.149
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

82
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.149
Waterloo near Liverpool,
29 July†a (Wednesday) 1857

Dear Marx,
Here I am at last at the seaside, where I have been since the evening of the day before yesterday.†183 It's 3 miles beyond New Brighton, but to the north of the Mersey. Unfortunately I arrived with a raging cold which has temporarily aggravated the glandular trouble, caused me a great deal of pain and spoilt my sleep. The worst of it is that for a day or two I shall be pretty well incapable of work, my daily report for Heckscher and other such unavoidable notes being as much as I can manage. In the evening I'm in such intense pain and so enervated that up till now I haven't even been able to read. That this damned thing should have had to happen now! Thus, since Friday evening or Saturday morning all my time has been wasted first by interruptions, then by my illness. I'm one of your really miserable figures, stooped, lame and weak and — e.g. as at present — beside myself with pain.

Page Break me40.150
Page me40.150
I had a hamper of wine sent to you from Manchester which will do your wife good: 6 bottles of Bordeaux, 3 of port, 3 of sherry. It should be there by now if the thing was properly attended to. Let me know the colour of the seals on the port and sherry so that I can keep a check on my wine merchant. Sherry ought to be yellow, port, I think, green. The Bordeaux bears the label Co. Destournel; I have just imported it.

Page me40.150
You will have the militaria†a as soon as at all possible. Unfortunately I don't know whether the post reaches London in 1 day; I shall only discover that from experience within the next few days.
Page me40.150
I hope that the sea air will soon make me fit again for the usual drudgery. As things are now, I'm bored to death.
Page me40.150
Warmest regards to your wife and daughters.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.150
You'll have received the £5 note.

Address: F.E., care of Mr Swingwood,
Bath St., Waterloo near Liverpool

Page me40.150
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

83
MARX TO ENGELS
IN WATERLOO NEAR LIVERPOOL
Page me40.150
[London,] 9 August 1857

Dear Engels,
Today I am prevented from writing more than a few lines — just my best wishes for your recovery. My ANXIETY for your

Page Break me40.151
BODILY welfare is as great as if I myself were ill — greater, perhaps.
Page me40.151
How are things in regard to 'coughing'? So far as I can judge from your letters, at least you're not much troubled with it.

Page me40.151

My doctor, who has treated a great many CASES such as yours, says that if a patient's condition does not permit of his bathing in the sea, he has successfully prescribed washing all over in heated (TEPID) sea water, the temperature being gradually reduced.

Page me40.151

Let me know whether you are taking iron. In cases such as yours, as in many others, iron has proved stronger than the affliction.†a

Page me40.151

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.151

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

84

MARX TO ENGELS†184

IN WATERLOO NEAR LIVERPOOL

Page me40.151

[London,] 15 August 1857

Dear Frederick,

I am delighted to hear that the sea is doing you good, as was to be expected. As soon as you are fit enough to bathe, it will take effect even more quickly.

Page me40.151

The sea itself is, of course, the principal remedy. However, some medicaments ought to be taken internally, partly preventive, partly curative, so as to introduce into the blood those substances it lacks. As opposed to your assumptions in your letter to my wife†185 and basing myself on the most recent French, English and German literature, which I have been reading on the subject of your illness, I put forward the following, which you may submit to the scrutiny of any college of physicians or pharmacists:

Page Break me40.152

Page me40.152

1. Whereas cod-liver oil requires 3 months to take effect, iron does so in 3 weeks.

Page me40.152

2. Cod-liver oil and iron are not mutually exclusive but complement each other during treatment.
Page me40.152
3. A temporary iron shortage in the blood is the primary characteristic of your disease. Besides bathing in the sea, you must take iron, even should there no longer be any outward sign of the disease.
Page me40.152
4. In your case the therapeutic element in cod-liver oil is iodine, since the oil's fattening properties are of no moment to you. Hence IODIDE OF IRON combines both the elements you need, one of which you would obtain from cod-liver oil. At the same time, it would spare your stomach the extra ballast inevitable in the case of cod-liver oil.
Page me40.152
Voilá mes théses,†a and I hope you will give them your serious consideration so that, once cured, you do not suffer subsequent relapses which are said to be EXCEEDINGLY disagreeable.
Page me40.152
As to the Delhi affair, it seems to me that the English ought to begin their retreat as soon as the RAINY SEASON HAS SET IN in real earnest. Being obliged for the present to hold the fort for you as the Tribune's military correspondent,†b I have taken it upon myself to put this forward.†186 NB, ON THE SUPPOSITION that the REPORTS to date have been true. It's possible that I shall make an ass of myself. But in that case one can always get out of it with a little dialectic. I have, of course, so worded my proposition as to be right either way. The persistent rumours about the fall of Delhi are being circulated throughout India by the government in Calcutta, no less, and are intended, as I see from the Indian papers, as the chief means of preventing unrest in the Madras and Bombay PRESIDENCIES. For your diversion I enclose herewith a plan of Delhi which, however, you must let me have back.
Page me40.152
From most of the reports of the Banque de France†c it is already apparent that, in place of d'Argout, there is a Bonapartist†d at the helm who makes little difficulty about discounting operations and note issues. The financial débâcle in France must inevitably assume vast proportions, since a frenzied activity is contributing to it on every hand.
Page me40.152
Imandt's presence has seriously disrupted my work. The POT is in effect the only medium through which one can establish any rapport with these SPIRIT-RAPPERS.

Page Break me40.153
Page me40.153
With best wishes for your health from myself and wife.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.153

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

85
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.153
Waterloo, 21 August 1857

Dear Moor,

You will have received the articles this morning.†187

Page me40.153

I do, indeed, regard your theses as OPEN TO SOME OBSERVATIONS. That iron takes effect in 3 weeks as compared with 3 months for cod-liver oil is surely not to be taken literally. There could be absolutely no question of a disease of this kind being cured in 3 weeks; on the contrary, I should say that, iron or no iron, cases have more often been known to take 3 years rather than 3 weeks to cure.

Page me40.153

That lack of iron in the blood is a primary characteristic of scrofula is certainly news to me. But whatever the literature on the subject, there is no doubt that, for some time past, it has become increasingly the fashion to reduce all diseases to lack of iron in the blood, a fashion which is already beginning to evoke a reaction; as to the disease of which, more than any other, this is known to be the primary characteristic — anaemia — some Frenchmen have latterly declared that iron has nothing at all to do with it. Exactly what the primary characteristic of scrofula is would seem to be still far from clear.

Page me40.153

That iodine is one amongst others of the principal elements responsible for the effect of cod-liver oil is not in doubt. But it is by no means the only one. If one takes iodine in other forms one doesn't make such good progress. Besides, cod-liver oil contains chlorine and bromine, both of which have a direct or indirect effect on the disorder, and to what extent that effect is helped by the gall constituents and volatile fatty acids has not yet been established. All I know is that Norwegian cod-liver oil, which has the bitter taste of gall, has done me more good than the Newfoundland or English product, which does not taste of it.

Page Break me40.154

Page me40.154

I took iron iodide all the time I was in Manchester (in between London†169 and Waterloo†183) along with cod-liver oil, and the inflammation grew steadily worse until finally it became chronic. Since I have been here I haven't taken any more iron iodide and Heckscher and I agreed long ago that either iron iodide or Quévenne's iron should be used in after-treatment.

Page me40.154

The fat in cod-liver oil is, pour le moment,†a by no means useless ballast so far as I am concerned. Since regaining my strength, I am again accumulating fat. Needless to say, my diet may contain only a small proportion of ready-formed animal fats. Consequently I have to eat more starch flour and, in fact, I sometimes feel a positive craving for bread; I am eating twice as much meat, but four times as much bread as I usually do. The fat in cod-liver oil is an invaluable aid to this battening process, being taken in an exceedingly innocuous form and less of an irritant than animal fat or things cooked in fat.
Page me40.154

So you see, iron has never been completely out of our view and, even after I had been taking it for more than 3 weeks without any result (and it may, indeed, in the then circumstances, have made matters worse), we have nevertheless already reserved it for my after-treatment. Heckscher, to whom I spoke about iron last Sunday, was definitely against my taking it again at this juncture, in view of previous experience, and I must agree with him. Later, of course. I repeat that, despite the unanimity of the literature on the subject, I shall continue to entertain grave doubts about the reduction of all diseases to iron shortage until we know more than we now do about the condition and the normal level of iron in the blood. At all events, I had sufficient iron in my blood at the start of this business, as any of the doctors who saw me at the time can testify. I am perfectly willing to believe that people of definitely scrofular habit — pallor, transparent skin, etc. — may be suffering from a shortage of iron.

Page Break me40.155
Page me40.155

But admis†a that this is the basic character, the INDISCRIMINATE and immediate use of iron is by no means indicated. It is extremely difficult to introduce iron into the blood otherwise than in the small amounts contained in ordinary food. Assuming, then, that the nature of my disease was the inability of the blood to assimilate the iron in food, how much less would it assimilate the iron in medicine? Sea air and sea bathing so invigorate the system as to restore the blood's ability in this respect. Thus it again assimilates the iron in meat and bread and, since I am eating more than formerly, concomitantly more iron. It is now, when this ability has been restored, that iron taken medicinally can help, although I believe that 9/10 of it passes through the body unused and, even if one accepts the iron theory, the use of iron during every phase of the disease has been shown to be incorrect. On top of which one has to consider the wide variety of individual cases and constitutions. I myself, for instance, appear to be particularly sensitive to all metals; even the external application of quicksilver to prevent the local spread of the inflammation took effect very rapidly in my case, and it is quite possible that iron iodide, taken at a time when my blood was too disorganised to assimilate it, helped aggravate the inflammation.
Page me40.155

At all events, and even admitting the iron theory, I don't see how your theses materially confute the assumptions in my previous letter,†b in which I was, by the way, considering only the immediate use of iron, not in any specific form, and ruling out cod-liver oil.

Page me40.155

Today I bathed in the sea for the first time. It did me no end of good and made me ravenously hungry. For the time being I am to bathe only every other day.
Page me40.155

But now it's time for the post. Am working on 'Army'. Many regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.155
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.156

86
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.156
Waterloo, 25 August 1857

Dear Marx,

My last letter was abruptly broken off because the post was leaving. I had meant to tell you about Lupus' adventures in France. He had neither time nor money enough to stop in London and therefore travelled straight through to Manchester, arriving with 2/- in his pocket. At Lille he was spotted by the French police and from then on they harried him. With his usual luck he arrived slap in the middle of the elections and a nice little assassination plot. He went to a small hotel near the Louvre, intending to visit Versailles. On this trip 2 mouchards†a took possession of him, pushed their way into his carriage both on the way there and on the way back, and never let him out of their sight. Back at the hotel two mouchards, one an Alsatian Jew, sat at his table while he ate supper, and passed remarks about him in German, French and broken English. 'That chap eats with much appetite and his head is not worth a farthing. The telegraphic despatch has just arrived',†b etc. Lupus kept mum — compelled, of course, by his bad political conscience, else he'd have been dragged off to clink and made to establish in the Préfecture what kind of a wolf he was — and drowned his anger in drink, after which he went up to his room and stationed himself by the window — au premier.†c From there he caught sight of his Versailles friends in the gateway. The gang, growing ever larger, shouted loud remarks to him while their chief parleyed with the landlady. Subsequently the fellows took over the whole house and roistered and caroused half the night through. They occupied the rooms above and to the left and right of Lupus who, as you can imagine, was in a fine STEW — on top of which it was stiflingly hot. The fellows woke him early in the morning, banging on the walls on either side and dragging tables, beds, etc., etc., across the floor above so that he almost took leave of his senses. Presently Lupus plucked up sufficient courage to visit the w.c. The Jew and his mate were sitting on the stairs and in a loud voice the Jew said 'The fellow's going for a shit now'. He ordered breakfast in his room and inquired when the train left for Strasbourg. One by one the fellows disappeared, for it was the day of the by-elections and they had achieved their aim of hounding Lupus out of Paris. Once again his Versailles friend was on the train and accompanied him in the same carriage as far as the fourth or fifth station, where another man took over. So conspicuously did the fellows push their way into the packed carriage that a French philistine jocularly remarked: 'Il y a donc un criminel parmi nous?'†a In this way he was escorted to Lyons, the Versailles chap having reappeared on the steamer from Châlons on the Saône. At Lyons Lupus went to the first hotel but discovered that waiters and all were on the pay-roll, pointed him out and notified the chaps by telegraph when he was arriving. Whenever he left the room the waiter gave a whistle while the man in the office shouted out: 'Le voilá!'†b, whereupon he was compelled to pass in review before the mouchard élite. They continued to harry him on the train to Seyssel as far as the point at which a line branches off in the direction of Plombiéres, where Mr Bonaparte happened to be. From then on, as soon as they saw that he was not going to Plombiéres, Lupus was free. On the return journey he wasn't harried at all.

Page Break me40.157
Page me40.157
One can see what Mr Bonaparte has set in train with the Société du dix Décembre.†138 There is no mistaking the types, particularly as regards their roistering and the playful manner in which they make life a misery for suspects visiting Paris. Had Lupus not left, one of them would probably have started a brawl so as to have a pretext for taking him to the Préfecture. Just imagine how many chaps must be on the pay-roll if an entire cohort can be set on to Lupus, who is COMPARATIVELY unknown to them. And then the roping in of landlords, waiters, BOOTS, etc., etc., as collaborators.
Page me40.157
I have just been bathing again which, while generally most invigorating and refreshing, seems at first rather to aggravate the inflammation. But that was only to be expected. On the whole I feel very well and the sores don't trouble me much. My old man is probably in Manchester by now; I shall know definitely tomorrow, in which case I shall at once go to Manchester and then, within a few days, to a more bracing seaside resort, possibly the Isle of Man. So write to Manchester in the meantime. As soon as I'm completely recovered and no longer require such regular sea-bathing I intend to take a sea trip, probably by STEAMER via Dublin to Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight, where we could hold a council of war together. But that will depend on circumstances.

Page Break me40.158

Page me40.158
'Army' is making progress; Antiquity is done, Middle Ages will be short and then modern times. However, Antiquity alone will run to 6 or 7 pages; I shall have to see what further deletions can be made. But we can't be bound too strictly by Mr Dana's conditions. It won't be possible to let you have the thing by Friday because of the disruption caused by my old man — but by Tuesday, I hope. Apropos, hasn't Dana said anything at all about the manuscripts or the list for B? Why, I wonder? It would certainly be curious if one were not to hear anything at all from him. Kindest regards.
Page me40.158
Your
F.E.

Page me40.158
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

87
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.158
[London,] 26 August 1857

Dear Engels,
Herewith a note for you from Schramm. Drop him a line or two. I don't suppose there's much hope for him now.†188
Page me40.158
Lupus' adventure most amusing.
Page me40.158
Why not go to Hastings, which is famed for its efficacy in cases like yours. It's the only specific watering-place of the kind in England. The Isle of Man, in so far as I had the pleasure of seeing it in your company — not much of it, to be sure — is remarkable chiefly for its stench.

Page Break me40.159
Page me40.159
The situation in regard to Dana is a little awkward. During the acute phase of your illness I thought it inopportune to keep you informed of the details of the affair. It was quite some time ago that Dana sent me the enclosed B list (in which there are only two non-military articles, 'Blum' and 'Bourrienne'). On the same occasion he said that the sooner they got the contributions to the ensuing volumes, the better they would be pleased, while I, for my part, could always receive my fee immediately after sending in the articles. But what was I to do, at a time when the contributions to A could not be sent off, and any failure to respond to so urgent a request — on terms so favourable to myself — would inevitably have aroused suspicion? My only recourse was to refrain for a time from writing to New York, and then do so only at longish intervals — SAY, EVERY FORTNIGHT — so that later on it would still be open to me to tell them with some plausibility that domestic TROUBLES and my own indisposition had made any sort of writing very difficult for me, as the paucity of my contributions to the paper†a also went to show. To send your B list to Dana in such circumstances would have been QUITE inexpedient and would have placed me in an even more invidious position. In the meantime I had also learned that Major Ripley†b had become co-editor of the Tribune, so that in case of need Dana had a pis aller†c for the Cyclopaedia.

Page me40.159

WELL, on 24 July I despatched your first pieces.†181 August was nearly upon us and your condition seemed to have deteriorated again. On 11 August another package arrived from you.†d Instinct warned me that a letter from New York was now imminent and would place me in something of a quandary since your illness meant that it was OUT OF [THE] QUESTION to speed up the work. So in order to leave a loophole for myself, I sent the package off to Dana together with a letter†189 in which I 1. informed him that the BULK of the contributions had gone off on 7 August (to make him think the manuscript had gone astray), at the same time telling him that the tardiness and delay were due to an indisposition which had not yet quite SUBSIDED. I took this step because it covered any eventuality. Thus, when Dana protests (probably at the beginning of September) the manuscript for A either will or will not be ready. In the first case, he either will or will not still be able to use it. If the former, nothing will have been lost. If the latter, the blame will be seen to attach to the post office. If not READY at all, then all the more need for him to be hoodwinked.

Page Break me40.160
Page me40.160

On 17 August†a I received the enclosed letter from Dana.
Page me40.160

As regards B, there can now be no question of adding to the list; rather, it must be polished off as quickly as possible. Otherwise we'll have to abandon the whole thing.
Page me40.160

As a result my economic position has become completely untenable and even my position on the Tribune has grown precarious.
Page me40.160

Be so good as to return the plan of Delhi and write and let me know what you think of the INDIAN AFFAIR.†b
Page me40.160

Your
K.M.

Page me40.160
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

88
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.160
Ryde, Isle of Wight, 8 September 1857
Kelston Cottage, Trinity St.

Dear Marx,

I finally arrived today at my new lodgings†183 in the middle of a frightful downpour and tomorrow shall at once get down to the army again. Yesterday in Portsmouth I noted what was worth seeing on the military side, so all that now remains is the navy, which at this moment looks distinctly sparse. My health continues good and if the weather improves I hope I shall soon be completely cured. It takes half an hour to get here from Portsmouth and it's a very aristocratic little spot, though lodgings are not as dear as in Waterloo. At the end of the week I shall doubtless know what the situation is as regards food. However the hotels, etc., etc., are scandalously expensive.

Page Break me40.161
Page me40.161

In Portsmouth one might almost be at home in Germany. One is barely aware of the NAVY in the town, which, by contrast, is lorded over by the subaltern — the false dignity, the affectation of reserve and the strangulated English that go to make up your OFFICER AND GENTLEMAN. Moreover, almost everyone goes around in uniform. I watched the 47th Regiment drilling, all of them bemedalled veterans of the Crimea,†a newly arrived from the Mediterranean. The more simple evolutions were passable but the intricate 'model' manoeuvres, of which there are so many in the English manual, were carried out very shakily. Square formation from marching in open order, each file proceeding diagonally, thus /////, was botched completely and the most hellish confusion arose. By contrast the march past in line, with the entire battalion deployed, was very well done. The commanding officer was very calm but as with us there was cursing and swearing within the companies. All movements were executed at the same gait as ours, somewhat longer paces perhaps, but performed rapidly though with great nonchalance on the part of individual men. A Prussian lieutenant's comment would be: The chaps lack drill. Still very poor at the double. Shoot as though half-asleep. Conclusion: Manual rotten, men better than manual. So far little learnt from the French in the Crimea. The modern stuff either not introduced at all or else rottenly done.

Page me40.161
I shall send you 'Army' as soon as it is finished. Warmest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.161
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.162

89
ENGELS TO MARX†190
IN LONDON
Page me40.162
[Ryde,] 10 September [1857,] Thursday

Dear Marx,
Herewith 'Bennigsen' and 'Barclay'.†a I am taking a closer look at the Napoleonic generals, who will follow tomorrow or the day after. 'Army' ready shortly.

Your
F.E.
Page me40.162
All that I know about Bennigsen is that in 1807, at the beginning of the campaign under Kamenski, he commanded the First Army (there were 2 of them, the 2nd under Buxhövden); on 26 December 1806, he was attacked by Lannes near Pultusk and, having the superiority in numbers, he held out (because Napoleon attacked the other army with the main force) and then, assuming himself to be the victor, wanted to attack in strength. He was soon given the supreme command and attacked Napoleon's winter quarters at the end of January 1807; was soon pressed hard and by mere chance evaded the trap which Napoleon had set for him; he fought at Eylau on 7 and 8 February.†191 On the 7th Napoleon captured Eylau (Barclay de Tolly, who directed the defence, distinguishing himself), and on the 8th the main engagement took place, Bennigsen being obliged to give battle in order to evade hot pursuit by Napoleon, and being saved from total defeat only by the toughness of his troops, the arrival of the Prussians under Lestock and the slowness with which Napoleon's individual corps appeared on the battlefield. In the spring Bennigsen entrenched himself at Heilsberg, because he was the weaker; he did not attack Napoleon while part of the French army was absent, engaged in the siege of Danzig†192; but when Danzig had fallen and the French army was united, he attacked (!), let himself be held up by Napoleon's vanguard, which had only 1/3 the strength he had, and then be manoeuvred back into his entrenched camp by Napoleon. This Napoleon attacked without success on 10 [June] with only 2 corps and several battalions of the Guard, but on the very next day he forced Bennigsen out of his camp and caused him to beat a hasty retreat; however, Bennigsen suddenly went over to the offensive without waiting for a corps of 28,000 men, which was already in Tilsit, occupied Friedland and established himself there, with his back to the river and therefore with only one line of retreat, the Friedland bridge (always wrong to give battle before a defile). Instead of advancing rapidly before Napoleon could concentrate his corps, he let himself be held up for 5-6 hours by Lannes and Mortier ('coupe-gorge dans lequel Bennigsen s'était engagé',†a says Jomini of this position) until at about 5 o'clock†b Napoleon was ready and gave the order for the attack. The Russians were thrown back to the river, Friedland was captured, the bridge having been destroyed by the Russians themselves while their whole right wing was still on the other side and escaped only over fords and with the loss of its artillery. 20,000 men lost. Bennigsen

Page Break me40.163

'avait fait fautes sur fautes dans cette journée ... il y eut dans sa conduite un mélange d'imprudence téméraire et d'irrésolution'.†c

Page me40.163
In 1812 he followed Russian headquarters around inveighing against Barclay in order to get his place, intriguing against him until Alexander relieved Bennigsen of his post. In 1813 he was ordered to lead the reserve army out of Russia into Bohemia, and when it arrived it was disbanded and Bennigsen disappeared.
Page me40.163
Barclay de Tolly commanded a brigade at Eylau, etc. (see above); in 1812 commanded the First West Army and was War Minister; after Alexander's departure until Kutuzov's arrival was General-in-Chief, directed the retreat of the Russian army skilfully and had the great merit of resisting the clamourous demands of the Russians and of the whole headquarters to give battle. When he had to fight, as at Smolensk, he took up such a position that he could not be involved in a decisive battle,†193 and when this could no longer be avoided — shortly before Moscow — he selected a position by Gzhatsk which was almost impregnable from the front and could be bypassed only by a very big detour. The army had already occupied this position when Kutuzov arrived, and naturally he would not agree to it because it was not he who had chosen it, and so the Russians had to fight in the unfavourable position at

Page Break me40.164
Borodino.†194 In 1813 and 1814 Barclay commanded not an independent corps, but all the Russians in the Allied Army under Schwarzenberg, and as these were in separate corps and often split up, it was an administrative and diplomatic rather than a combatant position,†195 and he proved himself, as earlier, to be one of the better of the average generals — having bon sens†a and staying power — and at any rate the best of the older generals that the Russians had.

Page me40.164
First published: the first paragraph in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929; the rest of the text in: Marx and Engels. Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 44, Moscow, 1977

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

90
ENGELS TO MARX†196
IN LONDON
Page me40.164
[Ryde, 11 or 12 September 1857]

[...] Berthier was a mere CLERK without an idea in his head, but frightfully zealous in the service and punctilious; when Napoleon sent him to Bavaria in 1809 to organise the troops before his own arrival, his ordres et contreordres†b split the army into three. Half of it was with Davout at Regensburg, the remainder with Masséna at Augsburg, and the Bavarians in between at Abensberg, so that a rapid advance by Archduke Charles would have enabled him to defeat the various corps one by one. It was only Napoleon's arrival and the slowness of the Austrians that saved the French.
Page me40.164
In 1813 Bernadotte was not a general at all but a diplomat. He prevented the generals under him from attacking and when, in contravention of this order, Bülow won his two victories at Grossbeeren and Dennewitz,†197 Bernadotte stopped the pursuit. He was in constant touch with the French. When Blücher marched to the Elbe to join up with him and to force him at last to act, he continued to prevaricate until Sir Ch. Stewart (the English commissary in his camp) told him that if he didn't march immediately, he wouldn't pay out another penny. This helped — nevertheless it was purely honoris causa that the Swedes appeared in the firing-line at Leipzig,†198 and during the whole campaign they lost less than 200 men in battle. — In 1798 Bernadotte was French ambassador in Vienna; to celebrate the anniversary of a victory over the Austrians he hoisted the tricolor, whereupon the populace stormed his residence and burned the flag. He left, but Napoleon decided against him and persuaded the Directory†199 TO LET THE MATTER DROP.†a [...]

Page Break me40.165
Page me40.165
[...] Jomini, Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, t. II, p. 60 qq. (Napoleon says)†b

'Bernadotte ... un homme fin, d'un extérieur brillant; les plans d'opération qu'il avait faits comme ministre de la guerre, prouvaient qu'il était meilleur lieutenant, que général en chef'†c [p. 60].
Page me40.165
'Marmont, jadis mon aide de camp et officier d'artillerie' [pp. 60-61].
Page me40.165
'Davout, qui avait reçu une bonne éducation, avait la tête fortement organisée et des idées de guerre trés justes. Ses maniéres rudes et un caractére á la fois soupçonneux et dur lui ont fait beaucoup d'ennemis, et dans les graves circonstances oú il s'est trouvé, I'esprit de parti s'est déchaîné contre lui avec une grande injustice. Sévére, mais juste envers ses subordonnés, mieux qu'aucun autre il sut maintenir la discipline parmi ses soldats; aucun de mes maréchaux n'exigeait plus de ses subordonnés, et aucun ne les fit servir avec tant d'exactitude' [p. 61].
Page me40.165
'Soult, d'un physique mâle, d'un esprit étendu, laborieux, actif, infatigable, avait fait preuve de talents supérieurs' [p. 61].
Page me40.165
'Lannes; couvert de gloire et de blessures, ce brave manquait de principes faits sur la guerre; mais il y suppléait par un jugement admirable et sur le champ de bataille il ne le cédait á aucun de ses collégues' [p. 61].
Page me40.165
'Ney. Lannes fut peut être aussi brillant que lui dans maintes attaques; mais la force d'âme que Ney déploya dans le grand désastre de 1812 oú il commanda successivement tous les corps de l'armée, lui assigne le premier rang parmi les braves de tous les jours. De même que plusieurs de ses collégues il n'entendait point la guerre en grand sur la carte†d; mais sur le terrain, rien n'égalait son assurance, son coup d'oeil et son aplomb' [p. 62].
Page me40.165
'Murat, qui avait dû á sa bonne mine, á son courage et á son activité l'honneur d'être mon aide de camp et mon beau-frére, n'a jamais été á la hauteur de la réputation colossale que je lui avais faite. Du reste, il avait de l'esprit naturel, un courage brillant et une grande activité' [p. 63].
Page me40.165
'Masséna reçut de la nature tout ce qui fait un excellent homme de guerre, doué d'un grand caractére, d'un courage éprouvé et d'un coup d'oeil qui inspirait les résolutions les plus promptes et les plus heureuses, on ne peut lui refuser une place distinguée parmi les capitaines modernes. Cependant il faut avouer qu'il brillait plus dans les combats que dans le conseil' [p. 63].
Page me40.165
'Brune ne manquait pas de certain mérite, c'était pourtant pour tout prendre un général de tribune bien plus qu'un militaire redoutable'†e [p. 64].

Page Break me40.166
Page me40.166
'Mortier, moins brillant, était pourtant plus solide, son calme et son sang-froid, passés en proverbe parmi les soldats, lui avaient valu plus d'un succés et il était du nombre de ceux qui pouvaient conduire un corps sous ma direction' [p. 64].

Page me40.166
'Bessiéres avait fait ses preuves prés de moi á l'armée d'Italie oú il commandait mes guides á cheval. Il n'avait pour lui qu'un grand esprit d'ordre et une valeur reconnue. Il était méthodique et d'une timidité exessive dans le conseil' [p. 64].
Page me40.166
'Lefebvre, duc de Dantzic, était un vrai grenadier. Enfant de la nature, il ne devait rien qu'á son esprit naturel, á une grande bravoure, et á un caractére simple et naif. Il savait se faire aimer du soldat et le mener droit á une position; c'était tout son mérite' [p. 64].
Page me40.166
'Jourdan avait dû á la fortune une grande partie de sa réputation. Bon administrateur, laborieux, homme d'ordre et intégre. Et ayant de l'instruction, il eût été fort bon chef d'état major d'une grande armée sous un chef qui l'eut bien dirigé' [p. 64].
Page me40.166
'Macdonald ... avait fort mal manoeuvré á la Trebbia' [...]†a [p. 65].

Page me40.166
Berthier is not mentioned in this collection.
Page me40.166
Apropos: what about your material on Bem? Of him it must be said that he excelled in command of smaller corps of 5-10,000 men and could inspire younger troops with self-assurance by good use of natural cover and [artillery] support; that he particularly distinguished himself in the small [mountain] warfare into which the whole of the first Transylvanian campaign†200 developed, but that he had A CONSIDERABLE DASH OF THE PARTISAN, which made him incapable of commanding bigger armies. In the second Transylvanian campaign, when masses of Russians invaded, he operated again with rash raids after the manner of partisans without any consideration for the relative strength of the opposing forces and thus lost not only Transylvania but the whole of his army too. His march into the Banat (before the second Transylvanian campaign) achieved nothing†201; he seems to have been unable to cope with the greater masses he was in command of. Praise is due to his great fortitude and his art of arousing the men's confidence in his otherwise unmartial-looking person. He could quickly achieve superficial organisation and discipline, but was satisfied at that. He neglected to build up a body of picked troops, for which the first Transylvanian campaign provided time enough and which was the greatest necessity, and hence all the outward organisation — and relative discipline — disappeared at the first setback. His bigger campaign plans all bear a heavy empreinte†a of partisan warfare; the basic features are mostly correct but presuppose far different means from those available, and even supposing that they were available they could be put to better use. E.g. his plan to abandon Hungary and break through to Italy via Trieste. Had the means for this been at his disposal and capable of being concentrated, the forces would thus have been provided with which to defeat Haynau, whereupon the Russians, instead of concentrating, would have been obliged to split up in order to hold what they had captured, and hence could have been defeated piecemeal. It must not be forgotten, however, that in an insurrectionary war these partisan methods are partially justified precisely because of the uncertainty concerning the means really available; the bigger the scale of the war, however, the less appropriate they become.†a

Page Break me40.167

Page Break me40.168

Page me40.168

[...] Can you find out what Bockbrücken (ponts á chevalets†b) are in English? I should also like to have a description of the Austrian Birago pontoons and a brief excerpt — merely an outline — on the design of pontoons in the various armies (SEE Sir Howard Douglas, Military Bridges), also whether the Russians and Prussians still have canvas pontoons. I have no material here, and such as I have in Manchester is very old. I have something on English pontoons [...].

Page me40.168
First published abridged in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Published in this form for the first time

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

91
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RYDE
Page me40.168
[London,] 15 September [1857]

Dear Engels,

You must excuse my silence and non-ACKNOWLEDGMENT of your various packages, due firstly to a great deal of work and secondly to numerous time-consuming errands in which 'inner compulsion' played no part whatever. I trust your health continues to improve despite the bad weather, and have still not abandoned the NOTION that you will be taking iron in the end. Only I'm afraid all this writing may be harmful to you.
Page me40.168

I expect a letter from Dana on Friday. Today I sent him 'Barclay', 'Berthier', 'Blum', 'Bourrienne'†202 and your contributions.†c It is important that I should send off the 2nd lot of B's next week. I have certain queries to put to you in my next about the

Page Break me40.169
French generals who are next on my list. As to Bem's Polish DEEDS have found the following†a:

'Distinguished himself at the battle of Iganin, when he engaged 40 Russian heavy calibre cannon with 12 light and 4 heavy guns, and subsequently at the battle of Ostrolenka.†203 Here he galloped his battery up to the line of Russian skirmishers, subjected the detachments which had crossed the Narev to devastating fire, withstood a hail of shot from 80 guns, and forced the enemy to withdraw. After this engagement promoted to colonel, shortly afterwards to command of the entire artillery and, when the Polish forces were concentrating at Warsaw, to general. During 5 and 6 September Bem committed all his guns to battle, siting his field pieces between the separate defensive works of the outer line. On the 6th, he advanced with 40 guns until he was just below Wola, already in Russian hands, but, having neither infantry nor cavalry in support, was compelled to retire. When the Polish army fell back on Praga during the night of the 7th, he occupied the bridge with 40 guns. On the morning of the 8th, however, he was informed of the agreement made with the Russians and of Malachowski's order to proceed with the artillery to Modlin. Cf. his memoir, Allgemeine Augsburger Zeitung, 1831, in which he discusses recent developments and attacks Krukowiecki.'†b

Page me40.169

I don't trust the above authority an inch and would therefore ask you to investigate and to do me a short, amended version of the passage concerned, if possible putting it straight into English.

Page me40.169

I shall look up the information you ask for at the Museum tomorrow.†c

Page me40.169

Your

K.M.

Page me40.169

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

92

MARX TO ENGELS

IN RYDE

Page me40.169

[London,] 17 September†d [1857]

Dear Engels,

'Bernadotte' is a difficult subject. The French generals who wrote under Louis Philippe are mostly his unqualified PARTISANS, just as the present writers under Boustrapa†40 are his unqualified opponents. The main points at issue upon which I should appreciate information from you are:

Page Break me40.170

Page me40.170
1. His part in the battle of Austerlitz†204 as a consequence of the manoeuvres he executed before the same.
Page me40.170
2. His conduct at the battle of Jena†46; and before the battle of Eylau.†191
Page me40.170
3. His conduct at the battle of Wagram.†206
Page me40.170
As regards his embassy in Vienna, things were not quite as you present them.†a It has been shown (by inter alia Schlosser, Zur Beurtheilung Napoleons) that the Bonapartist journals in Paris denounced Bernadotte as a royalist because he did not hang out the French flag. They drove him into taking the step which Bonaparte subsequently disavowed.
Page me40.170
All in all, Bonaparte sensed that Bernadotte was the 'statesman' amongst his generals and one intent on pursuing his 'own plans'. He, and more notably his brothers, by their base and petty intrigues against Bernadotte, gave him greater prominence than he could otherwise have laid claim to.
Page me40.170
Napoleon was, in general, beastly to anyone he suspected of 'self-seeking'.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.170
Blücher. I'd like you to write something about his principal battles, his military qualities generally and, finally, the tactical merits upon which Griesheim lays so much stress.†b
Page me40.170
Bessiéres, Brune, Brown, Bugeaud, ditto.
Page me40.170
Bosquet in the Crimean campaign.
Page me40.170
Let me have Dana's list of B's as I have lost my copy.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.170
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.171

93
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.171
Ryde, Friday, 18 September 1857

Dear Marx,

Your letter arrived yesterday afternoon, too late for me to get anything done for B. Moreover, I was in Portsmouth when the letter got here, so that more time was lost, otherwise I'd have been able to translate the Bem thing for you.†a You seem to be having bad weather; here it's persistently fine, only too hot; last week there was an occasional heavy shower, but apart from that it was fine and warm all the time. The climate here is really marvellous and the vegetation, except for things needing very hot sunshine, is so southern one might almost be in Naples. The hedges are laurel. I'm improving rapidly, the actual complaint is quite over, there's no longer a sign of inflamed glands and my one concern now is the process — admittedly a lengthy one — of patching up, getting the sores to heal, and putting on flesh and fat. Bathing does me a great deal of good and I find I can swim like a fish again — proof of how well my treatment is going. I've been to see Pieper at Bognor; quite a nice little place, but not a patch on Ryde; I wonder how long he'll stay there — he's lucky, but for that very reason his 'yeenius' is again reasserting itself; he attributes his luck to personal merit and already half fancies himself king of Bognor. He's coming over on Sunday and Steffen too, perhaps. I am going to Brighton SOMETIME NEXT WEEK and sailing from there to Jersey; Schramm is also going there,†188 or so he writes. Why don't you slip down to Brighton and, if it can be fitted in with the work, come to Jersey too? Anyhow the sea-trip would do you good. What do you think? I shall stay here until Tuesday at any rate, perhaps even longer: je verrai.†b
Page me40.171

As to Bem, all I should say is this:

* At the battle of Iganin, where he commanded the artillery, he was noticed for the skill and perseverance with which he fought it against the superior Russian batteries. At Ostrolenka, he again commanded the artillery in this capacity†c; when the Polish army had been finally repulsed in its attacks against the Russians who had passed the Narev, he covered the retreat by a bold advance with the whole of his guns.†203 He was now created colonel, soon after general and called to the command in chief of the whole Polish artillery. When the Russians assaulted the entrenchments of Warsaw and took Wola, Bem advanced with forty guns against this, the principal work of the whole line, but the superior force of Russian artillery opposed to him prevented the Polish infantry from returning to the assault and compelled Bem to retire.*†a

Page Break me40.172
Page me40.172

The other matters are quite trivial. I have no material to hand about Iganin; it was a quite unimportant engagement, the defence of a dam, rendered fruitless as usual by an outflanking movement — the 40 cannon of heavy calibre are certainly a figment, likewise the Russian retreat at Ostrolenka, which can only have referred to tirailleurs†b and soutiens,†c or a couple of exposed battalions. What I have said above puts the thing in the most favourable light, for Diebitsch forbade any pursuit.
Page me40.172
Many thanks for the thing on bridges.†d Wholly adequate. On Sunday or Monday I shall be sending you 'Battle', 'Battery' and any other B's I have finished, and then get on smartly with the remainder. I shall also let you have something on Blücher one of these days, as soon as I've read through Müffling.†e
Page me40.172
Which French generals and which of their exploits do you wish me to investigate more particularly? Allow me as much time as possible since I can't work very well for more than 2 hours at a stretch.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.172
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.173

94
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RYDE
Page me40.173
[London,] 21 September 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,
Nothing could please me more than to hear that your health is progressing.
Page me40.173
Last Friday, a letter arrived from Dana, cool and curt. I replied that I would complain to the POST OFFICE at once. Further, having 'Algeria' and 'Ammunition' to hand, I sent them off†207 with the comment that I had copies of them; also that I had 'Army' in the original, and would send it off immediately a fresh copy had been made (I did this because in recent letters you have several times mentioned that 'Army' was almost finished); also, that 'Artillery' would for the most part come under the HISTORY OF CANNON and that I no longer had the manuscript. The only A's now remaining — and these I would send on the off-chance, although it is probably by now too late — were, all told, 'Army', 'Armada' and 'Ayacucho'. I mentioned the last 2 because you can keep them quite short, while the material I have sent you will provide some original stuff on the Armada and Ayacucho (about Espartero). That's how matters stand.

Page me40.173
Tomorrow I shall send off 3 more biographies.†a
Page me40.173
My circumstances won't permit me to come to Brighton, still less accompany you to Jersey.
Page me40.173
On closer examination I find that all I want from you on the generals under B is an answer to my question about Bernadotte together with the essentials concerning Blücher, Bugeaud, Bosquet (in the Crimean War). I have enough on the other Frenchmen. Finally, Sir G. Brown, about whom I know nothing. Not much needed on the man.
Page me40.173
I have sent Dana your B and C lists.
Page me40.173
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.173
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.174

95
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.174
Ryde, 21 September 1857

Dear Marx,
Steffen and Pieper have been here in company with a friend of Pieper's and, as the two last have only just left, I've hardly any time before the post goes to take a look at the enclosed article†a or write to you about 'Bernadotte'.
Page me40.174

Austerlitz.†204 He was sent to Iglau†b by Napoleon in order to keep an eye on the Archduke Ferdinand in Bohemia. Having received in good time Napoleon's order to come to Brünn,†c which he did, he was placed with his corps between Soult and Lannes (in the centre) where he helped repulse the outflanking movement of the allied right wing. I don't recall any particularly important action of Bernadotte's on this occasion, nor can I find anything in Jomini.†d

Page me40.174

Jena.†205 Here it is a fact that Bernadotte did indeed receive orders from Napoleon to march from Naumburg to Dornburg while Davout, who was also in Naumburg, was to march to Apolda. The order received by Davout stated that, if Bernadotte had already joined him, they might both march to Apolda together. Davout was in favour of the latter, having reconnoitred the Prussian lines of advance in person and satisfied himself that Bernadotte wouldn't meet the enemy in the Dornburg direction. He even offered to place himself under Bernadotte's command. The latter, however, insisted that, in the orders he had received, the passage relating to Apolda did not appear, and he moved off. The result was that on the 14th he spent the whole day marching round without meeting the enemy, while Davout was compelled to fight alone at Auerstedt. Had Bernadotte been there, or had he simply marched towards the thunder of the cannon on the 14th, this au fond†e indecisive victory could have been every bit as decisive as the one at Jena. Only because of the meeting of the Auerstedt Prussian army with the fugitives from Jena and also because of the strategic preparations Napoleon had made for the battle, did the affair prove decisive after all in its consequences. Why Bernadotte did this nobody has ever found out. Jomini calls it une exactitude trop scrupuleuse.†a Probably Bernadotte was glad to discredit Napoleon by sticking rigidly to his instructions, for in this instance the latter had undoubtedly acted on false premises.

Page Break me40.175

Page me40.175

Eylau.†191 When Bennigsen moved off to engage Ney's troops, who had ventured too far forward, Bernadotte being to their left rear, Napoleon laid a trap for him. Ney withdrew to the south and Bernadotte to the south-west with orders to lure Bennigsen towards the Vistula, while Napoleon marched north from Poland towards Bennigsen's communications. An orderly officer carrying written orders for Bernadotte was captured by the Cossacks and in this way Bennigsen learnt of the impending danger, which he just managed to elude. Bernadotte, on the other hand, remained without instructions as a result of the same incident and accordingly stayed to the rear of the line. I don't see that there is anything to reproach him with on this score.

Page me40.175

Wagram.†206 On the first day of the battle

'Eugéne†b déboucha prés de Wagram; mais, donnant ici au milieu des réserves ennemies, et n'étant pas soutenu par Bernadotte qui ne s'était engagé ni assez tôt ni assez franchement, il fut attaqué de front et en flanc, et ramené vertement jusqu'á ma garde.'†c

Page me40.175

I can discover nothing of special moment about Bernadotte on the 2nd day of the battle.
Page me40.175
At all events Monsieur Bernadotte was not a great general; nowhere did he distinguish himself and even as a politician there was much of the Gascon in him — what an idea, wanting to become Emperor after Napoleon!†d
Page me40.175
I have absolutely nothing to say about Bessiéres save that for the most part he was in command of the Guard, in particular the cavalry, a post that hardly demanded a superfluity of intelligence. He was brave, voilá tout.†e
Page me40.175
I intend to finish B this week if possible, or at any rate break the back of the letter, after which I shall send you what is needed on Blücher. It's time for the post now.

Page Break me40.176
Page me40.176
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.176
What's the position as regards your trip?
Page me40.176
Havelock seems to be the best chap in India, and it is a really tremendous feat to have marched 126 miles in a week in that climate, not to mention fighting 5 or 6 engagements. That it would end in a general outbreak of cholera might have been predicted.

Page me40.176
I hardly see The Times at all here, otherwise I could write to you at greater length about India, but getting hold of newspapers to read here is altogether too difficult.

Page me40.176
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

96
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.176
Ryde, 22 September 1857

Dear Marx,

Here is a bit more about Bernadotte at Wagram†206: On 5 July, when the French attack had been halted — largely as a result of his irresolute conduct — Bernadotte was occupying the village of Aderklaa in the centre, and slightly in advance of the French line. On the morning of the 6th, when the Austrians moved up for a concentric attack, he was out in the open plain in front of Aderklaa instead of occupying the village in strength and positioning his front to the rear of it. When the Austrians arrived on the scene he thought this position too hazardous (on the previous day his troops had ultimately suffered severe losses owing to his irresolute conduct) and withdrew to a plateau behind Aderklaa, yet left the village unoccupied, whereupon Bellegarde's Austrians promptly occupied it in strength.
Page me40.176

This endangered the French centre, and Masséna, who commanded it, sent forward a division which recaptured the place only to be thrown out by d'Aspre's grenadiers. Then Napoleon himself arrived, assumed command and devised a new battle plan, thereby foiling the manoeuvres of the Austrians. If Jomini's account is at all accurate,†a there can be absolutely no dispute about Bernadotte's blunders on this occasion.

Page Break me40.177
Page me40.177

'Army' is finished, so far as the historical side is concerned, up to the French Revolution. I shall now get on with the modern period and questions of organisation generally, with which I conclude, and then, as soon as possible, go back to doing B's so that you can keep on sending stuff, thus putting Mr Dana into a better humour. Meanwhile I have received a little more money and enclose a £5 note. Perhaps you will manage to spend one or two days in Brighton after all; I shall stay here a day or two longer and let you know when I am going there.
Page me40.177

Bugeaud. Most of this is already implicit in the article 'Algeria'. He was a mediocre general whose victories in Algeria and Morocco are of no great significance. That he conquered Algeria with 100,000 men, adapted his conduct of the war there to the terrain and the enemy, and broke, or rather suppressed, the resistance of the Arabs (not the Kabyles), does not, to my mind, earn him a very high rating, for I don't believe he was responsible for the plans. He was something of a sabreur†b and, on the Tafna,†208 showed not only that he was venal but also that he was irresolute when in a tight corner. With 100,000 men and subordinates such as Lamoriciére, Changarnier, Cavaignac, Négrier and Duvivier, who had ten years of warfare behind them, he would not need very much natural ability to achieve something — especially since the French General Staff is very good; furthermore, his activity was largely confined to making dispositions (where there's no knowing how much was done for him by the staff) and to commanding the reserve, since only individual divisions and brigades were operating at any one spot.
Page me40.177

Bosquet. On the Alma†209 he led the French right wing in an outflanking movement against the Russian left wing with a determination and speed which earned the recognition of the Russians; he even succeeded in getting the artillery onto the plateau up trackless defiles regarded as impassable. For this he would deserve high praise had he not been facing a numerically very much inferior opponent. — At Balaklava he was immediately at hand to help disengage the English right wing, thus enabling the rest of the English light cavalry to withdraw under cover of his troops and discouraging the Russians from advancing any further. At Inkerman,†34 in the early hours of the morning, he was ready to intervene with 3 battalions and 2 batteries, but, his help having been refused, he placed 3 brigades in reserve behind the English right wing (on the Chernaya slope) and at 11 o'clock moved up with 2 of them into the firing line, whereupon the Russians began to withdraw. The English had committed all their troops whereas the Russians still had 16 battalions at their disposal and, but for Bosquet, the English would have been lost. The 16 intact Russian battalions covered the retreat. There could be little question of pursuit in this case, there being no more than 3,000 paces between the battle field and the edge of the plateau. On each occasion, then, Bosquet showed himself quick off the mark, alert, active, in short, an exemplary corps commander — as he did also throughout the time he led the covering corps on the Chernaya slope.†a Whether he's up to much as a général en chef is hard to say; he has a number of qualities and if, as in his case, a man is a first-rate vanguard general, all that remains is for him to prove his strategic ability, but for this there was not much opportunity throughout the whole of the Sebastopol campaign.†210

Page Break me40.178
Page me40.178
Blücher. During the 1794 campaign in the Palatinate†211 he distinguished himself as an outpost general and light cavalry commander. The best proof of this is to be found in his published diary, still regarded as a classic despite the bad German.†b He kept the French constantly on the qui vive, while providing his headquarters with first-rate intelligence on the movements of the enemy, and he was continually carrying out coups de main and surprise attacks, for the most part successfully. At Auerstedt in 1806,†205 when his cavalry charge miscarried, his advice that it be repeated using all available reinforcements was rejected (this from memory). His withdrawal to Lübeck and the stubborn stand he put up is one of the few honourable episodes in this affair, though during the course of it his strategic moves were often of the Hussar type. Nor was it his fault that he was finally captured for, like the whole of the Prussian army, he was cut off and had, moreover, the longest detour to make round the rearguard. During the period up to 1813 he was regarded by Scharnhorst and the Tugendbund†212 (being one of its known leaders,

Page Break me40.179
Gneisenau remained throughout his life SUSPECT in the King's†a eyes) as the only possible and suitable leader and was dubbed a hero by them, as Hecker was by Blind and Co.†213 Nor could they have picked on a better man. He was, as Müffling says,†b THE MODEL OF A SOLDIER while at the same time sharing to the full the intense popular antipathy to Napoleon and the French. Plebeian in his appetites, dialect, turns of phrase and manners, he had a tremendous gift for inspiring the common soldier with enthusiasm. As a soldier he possessed reckless courage, a keen eye for terrain, quickness of decision and enough intelligence to discover for himself what was best in more simple situations, and to rely on Gneisenau and Müffling in more complex ones. Of strategy, he had no inkling.

* 'It was no secret to Europe, that Prince Blücher who had now, 1815, passed his 70th year, understood nothing whatever of the conduct of a war; so little, indeed, that when a plan was laid before him for approval, even relating to some unimportant operation, he could not form any clear idea of it or judge whether it was good or bad.'*

Page me40.179

For he was quite incapable of reading a map, a strategical disability he shared with almost half of Napoleon's marshals. On the other hand he had Gneisenau, whom he trusted implicitly. Without Blücher, the campaign of 1813 and 1814 would have ended very differently; no other general of that time could have done what he did — namely, by means of a victory and a skilfully conducted pursuit (Katzbach†c) weld the most refractory elements (Langeron and York in open rebellion against him) into a homogeneous army†214 capable of anything and with which, on his own responsibility, he could risk marching on Wartenburg and the Saale — militarily a most audacious but politically (because of Bernadotte) an essential move, thereby abandoning all his communications and compelling the sluggish large army (which he had saved in Silesia after the battle of Dresden,†215 by pursuing the French as far as Bautzen so that Napoleon had to turn against him) to chance its arm too at Leipzig.†198 Altogether it was a somewhat rebellious time, and Blücher had agreed with 3/4 of the Army of the North (Bülow, Tauentzien, Wintzingerode) that if Bernadotte made no move they would, on their own responsibility, join up with Blücher. After the battle of Leipzig, Blücher was the only one who applied himself in any way to the pursuit, though even this wasn't what it should have been — he was hampered by the presence of the princes. The strategic blunders that were so severely punished in the Montmirail region in 1814 must be laid at the door of Gneisenau and Müffling,†216 while the decision to march on Paris, coûte que coûte,†a which resolved the campaign, must be credited to Blücher. The march on Waterloo in 1815 after the battle of Ligny†217 is another considerable feather in Blücher's cap; here he is almost without equal and no general except Blücher could have spurred his troops on to such EFFORTS — namely, to embark forthwith on the exemplary pursuit to Paris which ranks equally with that from Jena†46 to Stettin†b as a classic prototype. That Blücher was able to overawe even abler generals is evident from his attitude to Langeron (who had commanded a large army against the Turks and was a cultivated French émigré) and to York, both of whom, for all their initial refractoriness, not only soon submitted to him, but actually went right over onto his side, becoming his best subordinates. Au fond†c Blücher was a cavalry general; that was his speciality and in it he excelled because this is a purely tactical role which does not presuppose any strategic knowledge. He asked a great deal of his troops but they did it, and willingly, and I don't suppose any other 19th-century general save Napoleon and, more latterly, Radetzky, could have exacted from them what Blücher did. It should further be recognised that nowhere and at no time did he lose head or heart, that he was as dogged in defence as he was resolute in attack and that in difficult situations he was quick to make up his mind. Enfin,†d in the 1813-15 war, which was half way to being an insurrectionary war, he was quite the right man and was well complemented by his staff; and such being the case he was a very dangerous adversary.†e

Page Break me40.180

Your
F.E.

Page me40.180
Note O/H 06012, Manchester, 15 Jan. 1857

Page me40.180
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.181

97
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RYDE
Page me40.181
[London,] 23 September [1857]

Dear Engels,
Very many thanks for the letter and enclosure.
Page me40.181
I would, of course, very much like to see you before you leave. If at all feasible I shall come down to Brighton. The trouble is that the end of the quarter brings an accumulation of all the DIFFICULTIES one has been staving off throughout the summer. The main thing — and the only way out of my quandary — is to get on quickly with the Cyclopaedia. The coming of autumn also means redeeming this and that from the pawnshops.
Page me40.181
I hope to have done with the biographies (all of them) by next week.†218 (Is there anything to be said about that jackass, Sir G. Brown?)
Page me40.181
I have begun a SERIES in the Tribune on the Bonaparte régime's deeds of financial derring-do.†219 To this I devote the days when there is no Indian news. I should like also to have a personal discussion with you about India, MAP IN HAND. Up till now I have always managed instinctively to hit the nail on the head. But soon it will be time for me to provide a kind of general military summary of the affair.

Page me40.181
A few days ago, on my way to the Museum,†a I came such a purler that my forehead is still complaining.
Page me40.181
I trust you are taking iron. A day or two ago I was talking to Dr Lichtenberg at the German hospital, a very knowledgable little chap. He said that it was indispensable in after-treatment.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.181
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.182

98
ENGELS TO MARX†220
IN LONDON

Page me40.182

Page me40.182
Ryde, 24 September 1857

Dear Marx,
Depicted above is the castle where Cromwell incarcerated Charles I for a while. I shall inspect it more closely on Sunday.
Page me40.182
Your wishes concerning India coincided with an idea I had that you might perhaps like to have my views on the business. At the same time I took the opportunity of going over the contents of the latest MAIL map in hand and voici ce qui en résulte.†a
Page me40.182
The situation of the English in the middle and upper reaches of the Ganges is so incongruous that militarily speaking the only right course would be to effect a junction between Havelock's column and the one from Delhi, if possible at Agra, after each had done everything possible to evacuate the detached or invested garrisons in the area; to man, besides Agra, only the neighbouring stations south of the Ganges, especially Gwalior (on account of the Central Indian princes) and to hold the stations lower down the Ganges — Allahabad, Benares, Dinapur — with the existing garrisons and reinforcements from Calcutta; meanwhile to escort women and non-combatants down river, so that the troops again become mobile; and to employ mobile columns to instil respect in the region and to obtain supplies. If Agra cannot be held, there must be a withdrawal to Cawnpore or Allahabad; the latter to be held at all costs since it is the key to the territory between the Ganges and the Jumna.

Page Break me40.183
Page me40.183

If Agra can be held and the Bombay army remains available, the armies of Bombay and Madras must hold the peninsula proper up to the latitude of Ahmedabad and Calcutta and send out columns to establish communications with the north — the Bombay army via Indor and Gwalior to Agra, the Madras army via Saugor and Gwalior to Agra, and via Jubbulpore to Allahabad. The other lines of communication would then run to Agra from the Punjab, assuming it is held, and from Calcutta via Dinapur and Allahabad, so that there would be 4 lines of communication and, excluding the Punjab, 3 lines of withdrawal, to Calcutta, Bombay and Madras. Concentrating the troops arriving from the south at Agra would, therefore, serve the dual purpose of keeping the Central Indian princes in check and subduing the insurgent districts astride the line of march.
Page me40.183

If Agra cannot be held, the Madras army must first establish communications with Allahabad and then make for Agra with the Allahabad troops, while the Bombay army makes for Gwalior.
Page me40.183

The Madras army would seem to have been recruited exclusively from the ragtag and bobtail and to that extent is reliable. In Bombay they have 150 or more Hindus to a battalion and these are dangerous in that they may disaffect the rest. If the Bombay army revolts, all military calculations will temporarily cease to apply, and then nothing is more certain than that there'll be one colossal MASSACRE from Kashmir to Cape Comorin. If the situation in Bombay is such that in future also the army cannot be used against the insurgents, then at least the Madras columns, which will by now have pushed on beyond Nagpur, will have to be reinforced and communications established as speedily as possible with Allahabad or Benares.
Page me40.183

The absurdity of the position in which the English have now been placed by the total absence of any real supreme command is demonstrated mainly by 2 complementary circumstances, namely, 1. that they permit themselves to be invested when dispersed over a host of small, far flung stations while 2. they tie down their one and only mobile column in front of Delhi where not only can it do nothing but is actually going to pot. The English general who ordered the march on Delhi†a deserves to be cashiered and hanged, for he must have known what we have only just learned, viz. that the British had strengthened the old fortifications to the point where the place could only be taken by a systematic siege, for which a minimum of 15-20,000 men would be required, and far more if it was well defended. Now that they are there they will have to stick it out for political reasons; a withdrawal would be a defeat and will nevertheless be difficult to avoid.†b

Page Break me40.184

Page me40.184

Havelock's troops have worked wonders. 126 miles in 8 days including 6 to 8†c engagements in that climate and at this time of year is truly superhuman. But they're also quite played out; he, too, will probably have to let himself be invested after exhausting himself still further by excursions over a narrow radius round Cawnpore. Or he will have to return to Allahabad.
Page me40.184

The actual route of reconquest will run up the valley of the Ganges. Bengal proper will be easier to hold since the population has so greatly degenerated; the really dangerous region begins at Dinapur. Hence the positions at Dinapur, Benares, Mirzapur and particularly Allahabad are of the utmost importance; from Allahabad, it would first be necessary to take the Doab (between the Ganges and the Jumna) and the cities on these two rivers, then Oudh, then the rest. The lines from Madras and Bombay to Agra and Allahabad can only be secondary lines of operations.
Page me40.184

The main thing, as always, is concentration. The reinforcements sent up the Ganges are scattered all over the place and so far not one man has reached Allahabad. Unavoidable, perhaps, if these stations were to be made secure and then again, perhaps not.†d At all events, the number of stations to be held must be reduced to a minimum and forces must be concentrated for the field. If C. Campbell, about whom we know nothing save that he is a brave man, wants to distinguish himself as a general, he must create a mobile army, coûte que coûte,†e whether or not Delhi is abandoned.

Page Break me40.185
And where, summa summarum, there are 25-30,000 European soldiers, no situation is so desperate that 5,000 at least cannot be mustered for a campaign, their losses being made good by the garrisons withdrawn from the stations. Only then will Campbell be able to see how he stands and what kind of enemy is actually confronting him. THE ODDS ARE HOWEVER, that LIKE A FOOL he will se blottir devant†a Delhi and watch his men go to pot AT THE RATE OF 100 A DAY, in which case it will be all the more 'brave' simply to stay there until everyone has cheerfully met his doom. Now as in the past brave stupidity is the order of the day.†b
Page me40.185

Concentration of forces for the fighting in the north, vigorous support from Madras and, if possible, from Bombay, that's all. Even if the Mahratta princes†221 on the Nerbudda defect it can do little harm save by way of an example, for their troops are already with the insurgents. Certainly the very most that can be done is to hold out until the first reinforcements arrive from Europe at the end of October. But if a few more Bombay regiments revolt, that will be the end of strategy and tactics; it's there that the decision lies.†222
Page me40.185

I leave for Brighton on Tuesday at the latest and set out from there for Jersey at 10 o'clock on Wednesday night, but will let you have further details, and hope that you will come. Tomorrow shall start on 'Battery', etc.†223 Today I drove round the island and, as I again slogged away until 3 o'clock yesterday, now propose to have a good long sleep.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.185
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.186

99
MARX TO ENGELS†224
IN RYDE
Page me40.186
[London,] 25 September 1857

Dear Engels,

I presume you will have received today my letter of the day before yesterday acknowledging the £5. I cannot understand the delay, having myself taken it to the post on time.
Page me40.186

Your 'Army' is capital; except that I was thunderstruck by the sheer bulk of it — so much work can't possibly be good for you. And if I'd known that you would work late into the night I would rather have let the whole thing go to the devil.
Page me40.186

More graphically than anything else the history of the ARMY demonstrates the rightness of our views as to the connection between the productive forces and social relations. Altogether, the ARMY is of importance in economic development. E.g. it was in the army of Antiquity that the salaire†a was first fully developed. Likewise the peculium castrense in Rome, the first legal form according recognition to the movable property of others than fathers of families. Likewise the guild system in the corporation of the fabri.†225 Here too the first use of machinery on a large scale. Even the special value of metals and their USE as money would seem to have been based originally — as soon as Grimm's Stone Age was over — on their significance in war. Again, the division of labour within a branch was first put into practice by armies. All this, moreover, a very striking epitome of the whole history of civil societies. If you ever have the time, you might work the thing out from that point of view.
Page me40.186

The only points I think you have overlooked in your account are: 1. the earliest manifestation of a ready-made mercenary system on a large scale AND AT ONCE among the Carthaginians (for our own PRIVATE USE I shall take a look at a work — previously unknown to me — by a Berlin man on the Carthaginian armies†b); 2. the development of the army system in the 15th and early 16th centuries in Italy, where tactical ruses, at any rate, were perfected. Likewise an extremely humorous description of Machiavelli's

Page Break me40.187
(which I shall extract for you) in his History of Florence†a of how the condottieri†226 fought. (But if I come and meet you in Brighton (when?),†227 perhaps I had better bring you the Machiavelli. The History of Florence is a masterpiece.) Lastly, 3. the Asiatic military system as it first appeared in Persia and subsequently in various much modified forms among, inter alia, the Mongols and Turks.
Page me40.187
In writing my biographies, etc., I naturally had to consult all sorts of encyclopaedias, including German ones. In so doing I discovered that, under the headings 'Labour', 'Classes', 'Production', etc., much had been systematically if stupidly cribbed from us. On the other hand, everyone had eschewed all mention of ourselves, even when devoting whole columns to Mr Edgar Bauer and other such panjandrums. Tant mieux pour nous.†b The biographies in the German encyclopaedias are written for children under 8 years of age. The French, if biased, are at least urbane. The English encyclopaedias crib systematically from the French and German. In the latter, the same fellows appear to unload the same twaddle onto different publishers. Ersch and Gruber†c not much good except in the later volumes, wherein many learned articles.
Page me40.187
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.187
Pauly's Realencyclopädie des Alterthums is reliable.

Page me40.187
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

100
ENGELS TO MARX†228
IN LONDON
Page me40.187
St. Hélier, Jersey, 6 October 1857

3 Edward Place

Dear Marx,

L'affaire Harney resolved itself when the noble fellow called on Schramm yesterday evening while I was there. He has grown a big, jet-black beard thereby giving himself a strange appearance in some ways not unlike that of the greasy Jew in the boat that brought us ashore from the STEAMER; CERTAINLY an IMPROVEMENT. He made rather light of his Jersey POLITICS, saying he got A GREAT DEAL OF FUN out of them, etc.†229; the more serious view he certainly takes of them will no doubt emerge later on. Afterwards he and I went on a mild spree and I got him to tell me about the constitution, etc., etc., here; not a word was said about the old days. For the time being he seems DAM'D GLAD to have withdrawn from high politics into his little royaume des aveugles. As a borgne†a he's king of the opposition here, on his right THE FIRST GROCER, on his left THE FIRST TALLOW-CHANDLER IN THE TOWN. The battles are fought out in Royal Square and it was here that the GROCER knocked DOWN the rédacteur en chef of the Impartial de Jersey, a Bonapartist spy called Lemoine, the upshot of which was a lawsuit that has gone on for the past year and is to be decided on Monday. The Impartial has been suspended since the beginning of the monetary crisis in Paris and, so long as this lasts, will remain so. In Harney's view the whole history of Jersey may be divided into 2 periods: before and after the Hejira, or the expulsion of the crapauds.†230 They are noteworthy for the fact that nothing happened during either of them.

Page Break me40.188

Page me40.188

Schramm is busy with plans for new lodgings but will probably stay where he is after all. I urged him to move further south but, like most people in his condition, he tends to be contrary and also says that it is a question of money and that his relatives were already doing what they could. From Harney's description it's often downright cold here in winter when there's an east wind, and Schramm lives on the side of the town most exposed to the north-west winds. If, as he says, his difficulty in walking is no greater than it was three years ago, the disease may of course drag on for some time yet. Proof that here, too, people can contract consumption and die of it is provided by a case in this very house, for the daughter of my fat landlady succumbed to it. I hardly like to speak to him any more about moving south; it rubs him up the wrong way and he is after all very tetchy, as is only natural. As things stand I have not yet got down to work and there is also a mass of letters to be written; but tomorrow I shall make a start.

Page Break me40.189

Page me40.189

Yesterday I walked to the north coast — 5 or 6 miles from here, very good roads, a pretty avenue here and there, magnificent blackberries en masse and a few very lovely small inlets on the coast. The island forms a plateau and once you're on top, it rises very gently almost as far as the north coast, and the beds of the streams are quite shallow. From the northern end you can see a long stretch of France (west coast of the Département de la Manche) and the island of Sark. I couldn't see Guernsey.

Page me40.189

Schramm's brother†a has informed him that a friend of his, a (probably Prussian) lawyer by the name of Berger,†b about 50 years old, will be arriving in a few days and will spend the winter here. Do you know this individual? Presumably the fellow lives in London, and it is always as well to be informed to some extent about Mr Rudolf Schramm's acquaintances. I have a vague recollection that a fellow of this description bumped into us once in London.

Page me40.189

I have also tracked down Steffen's guerrilla warfare in respect of Berg and the Mark: Holleben, Militairische Betrachtungen aus den Erfahrungen eines preussischen Offiziers. This book is his chief authority and maintains that the hedge and ditch country in parts of the Mark and Cleves recalls La Vendée,†231 and is admirably suited to a people's war. Not so the people who live there, unfortunately — this being the flat, agricultural part of the Mark. For the rest the book is a good one, but just the thing to encourage Steffen's predilection for skirmishes and guerrilla warfare; it leans too far in this direction.

Page me40.189

Enclosed the list for C with comments†232

Page me40.189

Kindest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.189

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.190

101

ENGELS TO MARX†233

IN LONDON

Page me40.190

[St. Hélier,] Jersey, 19 October 1857

3 Edward Place

Dear Marx,

Herewith the BALANCE of the old sins of omission, also the original notes on the Armada. I couldn't quite decipher some of the names, which you will have to try and fill in.†234 I am now going on to the HISTORY OF CANNON.†235

Page me40.190

Schramm seems to me to be getting rather worse, though his condition changes from day to day. At present he has Berger†a with him, a philistine sent by his brother,†b who has taken lodgings in the same house and to whom he is giving English lessons. He's a dirty-minded old Prussian who tells lewd jokes devoid of wit about all the court rabble in Berlin, que le diable l'emporte!†c I haven't seen FRIEND Harney for a week. He's awfully stupid and feels very COMFORTABLE indeed in his philistine role here, although even on his PAPER†d he is clearly subject to the owner's censorship. He anticipates, of course, that sooner or later the English workers will do something or other, but that it won't be at all in the Chartist line, and anyway what he says is so much theoretical hot air and he would undoubtedly detest being jolted out of his petty philistine agitation here. HE IS VERY BUSY, BUT BUSY DOING NOTHING. His friend the GROCER, who thrashed the French spy,†e has been fined £5.

Page me40.190

Besides the HISTORY OF CANNON, I intend to do a few of the shorter things and send them to you from time to time so that Dana may see that we're keeping the ball rolling. But do send me those notes about which I wrote to you, and the list of military articles for D. I presume you got the letter containing the copy of the C list,†232 and also the article 'Military Bridges'†f sent off later.

Page me40.190

I have firmly resolved to return to Manchester in a fortnight's time. Business has taken a very nasty turn and it's important for me to be there. Moreover, my health is now good; yesterday, I spent 7 hours in the saddle, and I have also bidden farewell to virtue.

Page Break me40.191

Page me40.191

Your

F.E.

Page me40.191

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

102

MARX TO ENGELS

IN ST. HÉLIER IN JERSEY

Page me40.191

[London,] 20 October 1857

DEAR Frederick,

You must excuse my long silence. In the first place, we've had a visitor for the past week, to wit Imandt junior (aged 13), who has arrived here from Trier en route to his uncle,†a and I have had to show the lad round. In the second, much work.

Page me40.191

Now d'abord,†b your plan to return to Manchester. You must know whether or not your presence is necessary. It certainly won't do your health any good, for the weather over here is ABOMINABLE. Allen thinks that you owe it to yourself to spend far more time recuperating in a better climate than the Manchester ONE, since any relapse might be fatal. But it must be supposed that you consult your doctor†c before coming to a decision.

Page me40.191

The American crisis — its outbreak in New York was forecast by us in the November 1850 Revue†d — is BEAUTIFUL and has had IMMEDIATE repercussions on French industry, since silk goods are now being sold in New York more cheaply than they are produced in Lyons. The lamentations of the English MONEY ARTICLE WRITERS, who complain that, while their English TRADE is SOUND, their customers abroad are UNHEALTHY, are as original as they are diverting. How are the Manchester manufacturers getting on? Those in Glasgow have, it now transpires, sent off a great deal on consignment.

Page Break me40.192

Page me40.192

What do you think of the English in India? As usual the chaps are lucky even in adversity. I now have a pretty detailed list of their troop shipments since 18 June, along with the dates on which, by the government's reckoning, they ought to arrive and the locus†a of arrival. The following is a resumé:

Page Break me40.193

Page me40.193

Page me40.193

The 30,899 men are composed of:

INFANTRY: 24,739
ARTILLERY: 2,334
CAVALRY: 3,826

Page me40.193

Of the ARTILLERY, only 100 men arrive at Calcutta in October. The actual ARRIVALS commence on 15 November. The first cavalry arrives on 10 November.†a

Page me40.193

Now that I'm onto figures, here are a few more particulars about Bonaparte's economy. The FUNDED DEBT authentic. The FLOATED for 1856 and 1857 based on an AVERAGE estimate; for the other years, the Moniteur. (The French maintain that this FLOATED DEBT is 2,000 mill., which is what it seems to work out at.)

FUNDED DEBT

Louis Philippe
(18 years)

Year	Mill. frs
1831	162 1/2
1832	150
1841	187 1/2
1844	325
1847	87 1/2
Total	912 1/2

AVERAGE for 18 years: 50

Bonaparte
(6 years 1852-57)

Year	Mill. frs
DECREE OF APRIL 1852	100
MARCH 1853	250
DECEMBER 1854	500
JULY 1855	750
August 1855 (Filiated from EXCESS of the SUBSCRIPTION)	31 1/4
1857 (BANK OF FRANCE COIN)	100
Total	1,731,250,000

AVERAGE for 6 years:
NEAR 300

Page Break me40.194
Page me40.194
FLOATING DEBT

	Mill. frs
Louis Philippe ABOUT	1,000
Republic end of 1851 no more than	700

Increases under Bonaparte

	Mill. frs
1852	50

1853	262 1/4
1854	205 3/4
1855	152 1/4
1856-57	335 1/8
Total	1,005 and FRACTION
Increases since the time of the Republic	700
	1,705 mill.

Page me40.194

In addition, all MUNICIPAL and DEPARTMENTAL treasuries also up to their eyes in debt, par ordre de Muphti.†a

Page me40.194

If one reflects that, at the fellow's accession, the FUNDED DEBT was ABOUT 4,000 mill. frs — i.e. from the time of the First Republic's Tiers consolidé†b onwards — and that in 6 years he increased the FUNDED and FLOATING DEBT by ABOUT 2,700 millions, there can be no contesting that his stay in London was a fruitful one. Moreover, in his estimate of the dette flottante such curious tricks are played with the SINKING FUND, etc., that the AUDITING is exceedingly equivocal. But the fellow is not without a certain gambler's humour. By his reckoning there was no deficit whatever and no FLOATING DEBT in 1852 — the 1st year of the imperial millennium. For he placed 50 million frs to the ACCOUNT of 1851 (in accordance with the absurd French practice, the 1851 budget was FIXED in August 1850, but not CLOSED until 1854), and debited 1853 with the balance. Unlike Louis Philippe, he ushered in his régime with a No DEFICIT, but in 1853, the very next year, unblushingly presented the biggest FLOATING DEBT France had known since 1800. When in 1849 the Finance Minister, Passy, proposed that he limit and fund the FLOATING DEBT, he dismissed him forthwith and appointed Achille Fould. Come to that, his financial system is the same as Louis Philippe's save that it is sans gêne,†c is taken to extremes, and SLEIGHTS OF HAND are the rule.

Page me40.194

I shall send you what you require for the Cyclopaedia as soon as I have a moment to spare.

Page me40.194

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.195

Page me40.195

Thank you for sending the articles.†a The one name you failed to decipher was Lord Burleigh.

Page me40.195

Best regards to Schramm.

Page me40.195

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

103
ENGELS TO MARX†236
IN LONDON
Page me40.195
[St. Hélier,] Jersey, 29 October 1857
3 Edward Place

Dear Marx,

I shall be returning to Manchester a week from today,†183 but don't yet know what route I shall take. Your letter induced me to question Heckscher again (I had, of course, already consulted him concerning my return) about the possibility of a fatal relapse. From his reply I can only conclude that he believes a relapse might be fatal only if the lungs were affected, and is willing to guarantee that this will not be so in my case. At all events, he doesn't think Jersey is of much benefit to me any more; either the thing's over, or I must go much further south, and should anyhow return to Manchester, if only as an experiment, since I can always go away again. Now I'm simply waiting for some money and then I'll be off. By that time the HISTORY OF CANNON†235 will be finished and I'd rather do the other things — with possibly a few small exceptions — in Manchester where my books are. I should like to have the D list soon, otherwise Mr Dana will steal a march on us. What else does the noble fellow have to say, or haven't you heard from him?
Page me40.195

So drastically has the iron acted on my blood that my pulse has begun racing madly and the blood is always rising to my head; it's as though I'd been drinking — I feel quite fuddled and my excitation is such that I can't sleep at night. So for the time being I've had to stop taking it again. When I go back onto it in Manchester I shall have to reduce the dose considerably.

Page Break me40.196
Page me40.196

The advancing season is having a most debilitating effect on Schramm. Needless to say, he can only go out very little now and seldom comes into the town and only at the cost of considerable effort. The old philistine†a sent to him by his brother†b is a very bawdy fellow, who knows all the Berlin gossip, but in other ways stupid and boring. However, he'll be able to pester Konrad's worthy brother on Konrad's behalf, and this he has promised me to do. Schramm has had a door made in the wall between his bedroom and living-room which enables him to heat the former a bit and avoid going out into the hall in winter. This has put an end to the house-hunting. He'll hardly outlast the spring, poor devil.

Page me40.196
Harney grows more stupid every day. Considering the nature of the feudal arrangements here,†237 he should be able to make A DEAL OF POLITICAL CAPITAL out of them, but he doesn't even begin to understand them and, moreover, ruins all the best points made by the little lawyer who supplies him with material and even complete articles. There is, by the way, much that is funny about this dead-and-alive feudal set-up, and the whole business is preposterous to a degree. A modern lawyer†c for Seigneur and St. Hélier SHOPKEEPERS for vassals — the masquerade is altogether grotesque. Just now the fellows are holding feudal courts of justice; the prévôt†d du Seigneur is a CARVER and GILDER who doesn't know a word of French and, although he's the second personage here, hasn't an inkling of what's going on. The Seigneur threatens to confiscate the houses of his unruly vassals, who make up some 60-70 per cent of the total number, while the vassals — DRAPERS and TALLOW-CHANDLERS — threaten to meet force with force. Voilá†e the present state of affairs.
Page me40.196
If you write to me on Monday, but IN TIME FOR THE MAIL, your letter will still find me here; whether I shall still be here on Thursday, I am not quite sure.
Page me40.196
Warmest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me40.197
Page me40.197
The Sepoys must have defended the ENCEINTE of Delhi very badly†238; the real joke was the house-to-house fighting when, presumably, the NATIVE TROOPS were sent in first. So the actual siege — what came afterwards could hardly be described as such — lasted from the 5th to the 14th, long enough for breaches to be made in the unprotected wall by heavy naval guns firing at a range of 300-400 yards. These were already in position by the 5th or 6th. The cannon on the walls do not appear to have been effectively manned, otherwise the English wouldn't have been able to make so swift an approach.
Page me40.197
The AMERICAN CRASH is superb and not yet over by a long chalk. We still have to see the collapse of the better part of the import houses; so far only one here and there would appear to have crashed. The repercussion in England would seem to have begun with the Liverpool Borough Bank. Tant mieux.†a That means that, for the next 3 or 4 years, commerce will again be in a bad way. Nous avons maintenant de la chance.†b
Page me40.197
I haven't got a STAMP in the house and it is now midnight.

Page me40.197

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

104
MARX TO ENGELS
IN ST. HÉLIER IN JERSEY
Page me40.197
[London,] 31 October 1857

DEAR Frederic,

Have received two letters from Dana. Says first, that 'Army' arrived in good time. Secondly, that, because of the COMMERCIAL CRISIS, notice has been given to all European correspondents except for myself and Bayard Taylor; I, however, am to confine myself STRICTLY to 1 ARTICLE PER WEEK — lately I had been trying to break through this limitation — and for the time being write exclusively about the INDIAN WAR and the FINANCIAL CRISIS.

Page Break me40.198
Page me40.198

If you could let me have the HISTORY OF CANNON†235 by Friday, IT WOULD BE A GREAT BOON. As soon as the next mail arrives from India, you must write to me at some length about the Delhi affair or rather, IF POSSIBLE, do the whole article†a since this time it has to be purely technical.
Page me40.198

I sent the chaps ABOUT 8 sheets under the heading 'Blücher', the same being sub-titled 'THE SILESIAN ARMY IN THE CAMPAIGNS ETC.'.†239 As I had to spend so much time reading Clausewitz, Müffling,†b etc., some degree of compensation was called for.
Page me40.198

So far as your resolution as to Manchester is concerned, it seems to me QUITE RATIONAL, within Heckscher's LIMITATIONS. Allen, too, says that fatal consequences are likely to result only if the lung is affected but that, in the early days after such a business, it behoves anyone to take care of himself.
Page me40.198

The doses of iron may have been somewhat too strong. At all events it should have an excellent effect on your BODY. The weather here has improved during the past few days.
Page me40.198

I SHOULD MUCH LIKE, OLD BOY, TO SEE YOU BEFORE YOUR RETURN TO MANCHESTER. There is a certain irony of fate in my being personally embroiled in these damned crises. What SATISFACTION it would give Heinzen s'il le savait†c!

Page me40.198
The news AS TO Schramm is no less saddening for being predictable. What do you say to Cavaignac's DEATH and the idiocy of our liege-lord†d?
Page me40.198
With warm regards from the WHOLE FAMILY.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.198
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.199

105
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.199
[London,] 13 November 1857

Dear Engels,
A week ago on Thursday†240 I waited at both the appointed places — which, however, was one too many — from 11 o'clock to 3. Then I gave the whole thing up IN DESPAIR.
Page me40.199
I can write no more than a line or two, the article†a having left me only a few minutes until posting time. Let me know definitely when I can have 'Cannon'.†235 It's a matter of getting the goods off to America at what is (for me) a crucial moment.
Page me40.199
Meanwhile I haven't written a word about India. I have got to have some accurate military stuff on the subject, EVENTS having to some extent discredited myself and the Tribune.†241
Page me40.199
Though my own FINANCIAL DISTRESS may be dire indeed, never, since 1849, have I felt SO COSY as during this OUTBREAK. Furthermore you can set Lupus' mind at rest by telling him that, NOW THAT THE WHOLE STATEMENT IS BEFORE US, I have written an exhaustive ARTICLE for the Tribune†a in which I show, if only on the basis of the table of DISCOUNT-RATES for 1848-54, that the crisis ought by rights to have set in 2 years earlier. Moreover the DELAYS are now explicable in such rational terms that even Hegel might, to his great SATISFACTION, have rediscovered the 'concept' in the 'empirical diversity of the world of finite interests'.

Page me40.199
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.199
Go on sending me, as you started to do, as many Manchester papers as possible. Not only for the Tribune. I am thinking of writing about the crisis for the benefit of the fatherland.

Page me40.199
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.200

106
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.200
Manchester, 15 November 1857

Dear Marx,
I'm sorry about your waiting for me last Monday — I didn't arrive at Euston Square until after 6, THANKS TO BAD ARRANGEMENTS OF THE RAILWAY COMPANY IN BRIGHTON, and travelled on to Manchester the same evening.
Page me40.200
I'm in good health and everyone, even Heckscher, is surprised that I should have recovered so well. My memory is still poor, the DULLNESS persists to some extent, and alcohol no longer agrees with me. My last sore is healing up beautifully, a process which riding and a reduction of work at the office cannot fail to help; as to the latter I have agreed with our factory to put myself on SHORT TIME.
Page me40.200
You should have 'Cannon'†235 for certain by next Friday's post. It can't be done before that and will amount to about 10 full sheets. The rest of C ought to follow shortly; most of it is trifling stuff which can be done quickly with the books I have here.
Page me40.200

As soon as I can see daylight in my financial affairs (now in great confusion) I shall send you some money.
Page me40.200

This time the crisis is developing in rather a curious way. For almost a year now, speculative share dealings in France and Germany have been in a state of what might be described as pre-crisis; only now, with the collapse of the main speculative share dealings in New York, has everything come to a head. As always, of course, the Yankees have been doing their swindling with foreign capital, but the really remarkable thing is that this time the capital has come predominantly from the Continent. The bureaucrats and rentiers in Germany, who have been eagerly buying up everything provided it was American, will be well and truly bled. Because of the above-mentioned pre-crisis and the few direct points of contact between continental and American stock-exchange swindles, the destructive repercussions of the latter are not immediately making themselves felt. But they soon will.
Page me40.200

Speculation has affected not only shares but all raw materials and colonial produce, hence also all manufactured goods where the cost of the raw material is still strongly reflected in the price; hence the closer they are to the raw material and the dearer the raw material, the more they are affected. Yarns more than grey goods, the latter more than printed or coloured goods, silk goods more than cotton goods. Here, we have had a pre-crisis in silk since August; approximately 20 manufactures have failed for an amount I would hesitate to put at less than £200,000 and of which only 35% to 40% at the most will be recovered. We are in for £6,000, which makes my share £300!!! or, taking the most optimistic view, £180 after payment of dividends. In these circumstances I shall probably have to come to a new agreement with my old man. That is by the way. The crisis in silk continues. The failure of Bennoch, Twentyman & Rigg (competitors of Blank's) has caught 5 silk ribbon manufacturers in Coventry to the tune of £100,000, the biggest sum being £40,000 and the smallest £6,000. In addition T.S. Reed & Co. of Derby, important silk spinners, doublers and manufacturers, became insolvent immediately after, and in consequence of, Bennoch's failure. In Glasgow a whole crowd of small and medium firms, besides those mentioned in the papers, have come a cropper without eliciting the least comment or inquiry. Whether the Maison Ernst Dronke is among them I don't know. Maybe he didn't have the sense to take advantage of the moment to make an honourable exit.

Page Break me40.201
Page me40.201

The enclosed chart,†a which I have prepared from official printed reports supplied by our broker, will show you how the cotton market has fared this year. Whenever the horizontal black line passes between two of the eighths this means that the price was midway between, or 1/16th, thus e.g. between 7 3/8d and 7 1/2d means 7 7/16d.
Page me40.201

As far as industrial production itself is concerned, America's excess stocks would seem to be mainly in the west; from all I hear, stocks of manufactured goods in the eastern ports are very low. But that these are already A DRUG ON THE MARKET is borne out by the return of entire shipments from New York to Liverpool. 3/4 of the local spinners are making for stock and only 1/4 at the most have orders on their books. SHORT TIME pretty well general. A very active yarn commission house here, which 3 weeks ago had contracts worth £45,000, now has only £3,000 worth, so quickly have the spinners been able to deliver, despite SHORT TIME.

Page me40.201

The peculiarly favourable advices from Madras and Bombay (sales with profit, which has not been the case since 1847) have revived the Indian trade. Everyone who possibly can is rushing into it. To the annoyance of the other commission houses, S. Mendel, INDIAN agent, has the whole of his big WAREHOUSE lit up until 10 o'clock every night and sends out stuff for all he's worth. No DOUBT hundreds of spinners and weavers are shipping goods there on consignment. So we have a reserve crisis up our sleeve there in case this first impact proves incapable of overturning the old muck.†242

Page Break me40.202
Page me40.202

The general appearance of the Exchange here was truly delightful last week. The fellows are utterly infuriated by my sudden and inexplicable onset of high spirits. INDEED, the Exchange is the one place where my current DULLNESS is transformed into resilience and BOUNCING. On top of that my predictions are, of course, always gloomy, which makes the asses doubly furious. On Thursday the situation was at its most dismal, on Friday the gentlemen were mulling over the possible effects of the suspension of the Bank Act†132 and, with COTTON rising another ld., word went round that the worst was over. By yesterday, however, the most delectable DESPONDENCY again prevailed; all the hosannas had been so much hot air and, since hardly anyone wanted to buy, the market here remained as bad as ever.
Page me40.202

What promises this crisis a brilliant future is the immediate necessity of suspending the Bank Act at the first impact. The direct effect of this will be to land the Bank itself in Queer Street. In 1847 it was still possible to let things drag on as they had done since 1845, and not to resort to this measure until the very last and grimmest moment.
Page me40.202

The extension and prolongation of the crisis are also assured. The combination of SHORT TIME and the silk crisis, which latter has already deprived the vast mass of the silk (HAND-LOOM) weavers of their livelihood, will of itself suffice to ruin the HOME TRADE completely this winter — up till the end of October it was still doing well. The American crisis is playing havoc with the Barmen and Elberfeld SMALLWARE MANUFACTURERS, the Elberfeld, Krefeld and Lyons silk manufacturers and the German, French and Belgian cloth manufacturers. The SMALLWARE MANUFACTURERS of Barmen are suffering particularly also due to Bennoch and Twentyman, while Draper, Pietroni & Co. are causing difficulties in Italy, especially Milan, the Duchies,†a Bologna, etc.
Page me40.202

Unless cotton comes down to 6d per pound even a momentary revival of the cotton industry here is out of the question. And at present it is still as high as 7 to 7 1/4d.

From this you will see how remote here is the prospect of any change in the state of affairs. Nevertheless a momentary change in the spring is possible and, indeed, probable. Not that this will mean 'good business', but rather that business can again be done so that the machinery of trade keeps turning and doesn't rust up. Never before has any crisis exhausted itself so rapidly and abruptly, and this one, coming after 10 years of prosperity and speculation, is least apt to do so. Nor is there another Australia or California to come to the rescue, while China will be in the doldrums for the next 20 years.†243 However the violence of this initial blow shows what colossal dimensions the thing is assuming. And in view of the recent enormous output of gold and the correspondingly vast expansion of industry, it could not be otherwise.

Page Break me40.203
Page me40.203

We can only hope that this 'improvement' in the crisis from the acute to the chronic stage sets in before a second and really decisive blow falls. A period of chronic pressure is needed to get the people's blood up. The proletariat will then fight better, with better connaissance de cause†a and in greater unison, just as a cavalry attack succeeds much better if the horses have to cover the first 500 paces at the trot before arriving within charging distance of the enemy. I shouldn't care for anything to happen prematurely before Europe as a whole has been affected; the subsequent struggle would be harder, more tedious and fluctuating. Even May or June would be somewhat too early. The long period of prosperity is bound to have made the masses damned lethargic. However, sight drafts for a revolution will now be presented to us by our friends Kinkel & Co. for payment; that is to be expected, but NEVER MIND, we shall honour them soon enough, as these gentlemen will see.
Page me40.203

It's capital that you should be collecting material on this crisis. I am sending you another 2 Guardians today. You shall have it regularly, and the Examiner and Times too now and again. I shall also advise you as frequently as possible of everything I learn so that we have a good STOCK OF FACTS.
Page me40.203

I must say I feel just as you do. When the bubble burst in New York I grew very restless in Jersey and in the midst of this GENERAL DOWNBREAK I fell tremendously cheerful. The bourgeois filth of the last seven years has undoubtedly clung to me to some extent; now it will be washed away and I shall become a changed man. Physically, the crisis will do me as much good as a bathe in the sea; I can sense it already. In 1848 we were saying: Now our time is coming, and SO IN A CERTAIN SENSE it was, but this time it is coming properly; now it's a case of do or die. This will at once give a more practical slant to my military studies. I shall apply myself without delay to the existing organisation and elementary tactics of the Prussian, Austrian, Bavarian and French armies, and apart from that confine my activities to riding, i.e. fox-hunting, which is the best school of all.

Page Break me40.204
Page me40.204

My kindest regards to your wife and children. They, too, will be in high spirits despite your bad luck. Day and night I worry over my inability to get you out of it.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.204

In Failsworth, 4 miles from here, a manufacturer by the name of Liddle was yesterday hanged in effigy optima forma†a while a weaver dressed as a parson read the BURIAL SERVICE. In place of the words 'MAY THE LORD HAVE MERCY UPON YOUR SOUL' he read: 'MAY THE LORD BLAST YOUR SOUL'. — NOW IS THE TIME FOR JONES, if only he knows how to make use of it.

Page me40.204

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

107
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.204
Manchester, 16 November 1857
7 Southgate

Dear Marx,

Enclosed the table†b I forgot yesterday. I have just seen that today's Guardian has everything on Delhi. I'm going home now (6 o'clock) and shall do my best to go through it and get the article,†c if only a short one, done for you; it can go off by the 2nd post as I think I shall have finished it by 12 o'clock. At such short NOTICE there can be no question of tidying it up or correcting the style.

Page Break me40.205
Page me40.205

Movements in the Price of Middling Orleans Cotton since 1 January 1857

Two dates per month shown up to the end of July, 3 dates thereafter. Lowest level on 12 November when the Western Bank of Scotland disposed of its stocks á tout prix. On 13 November approximate level 7d; brokers were not quoting

[Engels' explanation to the chart]

Page Break 206
Page Break me40.207
Page me40.207

In these circumstances it's most doubtful whether I shall be able to send you 'Cannon'†235 by Thursday. I have only two evenings left and I can't write every evening without my head starting to spin. So it will have to wait until a week today.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.207
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels and K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

108
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.207
Manchester, 17 November 1857
7 Southgate

Dear Marx,

I doubt whether yesterday's article†a reached you soon enough. When I went to the post it had just turned midnight and the BOX was closed, so I dropped it in the EXTRA BOX, which means it must have left here at 9.15 this morning and arrived in London at 3:45, hence been delivered to you at about 6 o'clock.
Page me40.207

About a month ago there was a share CRASH in Vienna, on which occasion 105 houses are said to have failed there to the tune of Fl. 14,000,000, or £1,400,000.
Page me40.207

Nothing has been done here today. Tomorrow you will receive a whole bundle of Guardians and also some money from me, I hope.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.207
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.208

109
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.208
[London,] 24 November 1857

DEAR Frederick,

You must excuse me for not having acknowledged receipt either of the money, or of the article†a or of various letters. The comings and goings connected with DOMESTIC AFFAIRS have made such demands on my time that little was left for work.
Page me40.208

The MONETARY PANIC in London has SUBSIDED to some extent during the past few days but will soon begin afresh with the assistance of, among others, Fould, who has come over here with a French bank director in order to regulate the export of gold from England to France. The actual SUSPENSION of the Bank Act†132 could, of course, only be effective in so far as it did away with the PANIC SURPLUS artificially created by the Bank Act. The BANKING DEPARTMENT should have had to declare itself insolvent the following day since the reserve fund amounted to no more than four or five hundred thousand pounds, whereas DEPOSITS — PUBLIC and PRIVATE — exceeded 17 millions. On the other hand this danger was created solely by the Act itself in that the metal reserve in the ISSUING DEPARTMENT was not much below one-third of the ISSUED NOTES. The Act precipitated the outbreak of the MONEY PANIC, thereby perhaps reducing its intensity. However, lendings by the Bank up to a maximum of 10% (on FIRST-RATE PAPERS) will keep a mass of transactions going which must ultimately lead to another CRASH. If, for instance, the price of corn, sugar, etc., is currently being maintained it is because their OWNERS are discounting the bills drawn on them for the same instead of selling the commodities. A fall in the price of these commodities seems to me inevitable and hence I believe that these chaps are simply heading straight for serious bankruptcies. That was EXACTLY THE CASE [IN] MAY 1847. As distinct from earlier crises, what is still to some extent supporting the so-called MONEY-MARKET in London is the existence of JOINT-STOCK BANKS which didn't really begin to expand until the last ten years. The interest they pay the philistines, small rentiers, etc., is 1% less than the Bank of England's official rate. The lure of 9% is too great to meet with any serious resistance. So the City mob has the philistines' small capital at its disposal to a greater degree than ever before. If just one of these BANKS were now to collapse, there would be a general uproar. Hence it is greatly to be regretted that the ROYAL BRITISH BANK should have crashed prematurely.

Page Break me40.209

Page me40.209

As for America, it seems almost certain that the PROTECTIONISTS will prevail as a result of the crisis. This will have lasting and disagreeable repercussions so far as the worthy English are concerned.
Page me40.209

I don't know whether Steffen has already told you that he is leaving England. This is because the crisis has caused his sister (how, I don't know) to lose what little money she had. He is going to Germany to join forces with her, so that they can scrape along together. I think he's doing quite the wrong thing. I have it from a reliable source that Mrs Ruge (all she speaks is a kind of Saxon patois) is the only teacher of German in Brighton and, so greatly does demand exceed supply, that she is now launching her daughter†a in the same TRADE. So Steffen's sister would find good EMPLOYMENT in Brighton were Steffen himself able to get on better with people. Apropos Ruge. Some months ago the old jackass sent out a prospectus for the resuscitation of the ci-devant†b Deutsche Jahrbücher,†244 the main object of which is to combat materialism in the natural sciences and in industry; idem the proliferation of comparative linguistics, etc. — everything, in short, that calls for exact knowledge. To carry out his scheme he requires 1,000 subscribers á 10 talers. Over a period of 2 months summa summarum 40, I repeat 40, enthusiasts for 'intellectual freedom' have come forward. The muster-roll of his adherents in Germany is, CONSEQUENTLY, far from creditable.
Page me40.209

I know nothing about Mr Dronke save that some months ago he urged Freiligrath to play the middleman (viz. the discounter) in a kite-flying operation upon which he thought to embark with old Naut. Freiligrath, of course, sent him away with a flea in his ear. Shortly afterwards he wrote saying that, though his circumstances were 'quite good', he was prepared to work anywhere as a clerk at a salary of £200-250, and asked Freiligrath to look out for a post of this kind. All this would seem to indicate that he is about to make his exit from the world of commerce.
Page me40.209

Becker†c has been released from prison; Bürgers, on the other hand, has been subjected to additional restrictions.
Page me40.209

In one of your letters you say that the manufacturers will be able to make headway only when cotton is at 6d.†d But won't the substantial curtailment of production soon bring COTTON prices down to that point anyway?

Page Break me40.210
Page me40.210

Jones is playing a very inane role. As you know, long before the crisis and with no particular end in view unless to provide a pretext for agitation during the lull, he proposed to hold a Chartist conference to which bourgeois radicals (not just Bright, but even men like Cunningham) were also to be invited.†245 The general idea was to come to a compromise with the bourgeois whereby they were to be given the BALLOT and, in return, accord MANHOOD SUFFRAGE to the workers. This proposal gave rise to splits in the Chartist Party and these in turn involved Jones even more deeply in his project. Now, instead of making use of the crisis and substituting genuine agitation for an ill-chosen pretext for agitation, he clings to his NONSENSE; he shocks the working-men by preaching co-operation with the bourgeois while in no way inspiring in the latter the slightest degree of confidence. To complete his ruin he is being cajoled by some of the radical papers. In his own sheet†a that old ass Frost, whom he himself proclaimed a hero and appointed chairman of his conference, has attacked him in a brutally outspoken letter in which inter alia he tells him that if he considers that the co-operation of the MIDDLE CLASS is necessary — and nothing can be done without it — he should speak out bona fide. Who, Frost goes on to ask, gave him the right to draw up the programme for the conference without consulting his allies, and who empowered him to appoint Frost chairman and himself to play the dictator, etc.?†b So now he's in hot water and, for the first time, is playing a role that is not merely inane but also ambiguous. I haven't seen him for some while but now intend to call on him. I believe him to be an honest man and, since in England it is impossible for A PUBLIC CHARACTER to render himself 'impossible' by his stupidities, all he has to do is extricate himself as soon as he can from his self-laid snare. The ass should begin by forming a party, for which purpose he must go to the manufacturing districts. Then the radical bourgeois will come to him in search of compromise.

Page me40.210

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.210
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.211

110
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.211
Manchester, 7 December 1857

Dear Marx,

Last week, what with prices eternally fluctuating and stocks building up, I was forced by the crisis to do a great deal of quill-pushing and so couldn't write to you but only send you Guardians.

Page me40.211

In your last there's a SLIGHT MISTAKE. You say that if 'the price of corn, sugar, etc., is currently being maintained it is because their OWNERS are discounting the bills drawn on them for the same instead of selling the commodities'.†a They, as the drawees, cannot discount the bills; all they have to do with bills is accept them and pay them when they fall due. The HOLDERS of commodities can only protect themselves against forced selling by obtaining advances on the commodities. UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES this will be difficult, and in any case the amount of these advances will be reduced by the tremendous fall in the price of commodities (35% in the case of sugar!) and the certain knowledge that, as soon as some degree of forced selling becomes unavoidable, the value of the commodities will fall still further. So whereas the HOLDERS formerly received advances amounting to 2/3 or 3/4 of the higher value of the commodities, they will now receive at most 1/2 of the reduced value, i.e. about half the previously obtainable advance. This will inevitably precipitate the crash. But there is also a possibility that the MINCING LANE AND MARK LANE TRADE†b will continue a little longer in a slow decline before a few major bankruptcies occur. And come they will, as surely as in Liverpool and other ports. The amounts being lost on sugar, coffee, cotton, hides, dye-stuffs, silk, etc., etc., are colossal. The whole LOT of the 1857 cotton crop, estimated at 3 mill. bales (will be 3 1/4), is now worth £15,000,000 less than in September. One of the houses here has in transit 35,000 sacks of coffee on each of which there will be a loss of £1. The loss on Indian cotton is just as great — 33%. As the bills drawn in respect of these goods fall due, bankruptcies cannot fail to occur.

Page Break me40.212

Page me40.212

The big American house which, after 2 days of negotiation with the Bank of England, recently obtained a million-pound advance, thereby saving its skin, belonged to Mr Peabody, the 4TH JULY ANNIVERSARY DINNER man.†246 Latterly even Suse & Sibeth, the soundest of houses and the only people besides Frühling & Göschen whose bills continued to be negotiable in India after 1847 without a bill of lading as guarantee, have allegedly been compelled to appeal to the Bank for help. This firm, S. & S., are the greatest skinflints and so easily scared that they'd rather do no business at all than run any kind of risk.

Page me40.212

Here things still look much as they did before. Some 8 to 10 days ago Indian and Levantine buyers suddenly appeared in the market, procured what they wanted at the lowest prices and thus helped some manufacturers heavily overstocked with cotton, yarn and cloth out of the worst of their predicament. Since Tuesday (Nov. 4th?†a) everything has been quiet again. As for the manufacturers their expenses go on, SHORT time AND FULL TIME, coal and lubricants, etc., etc., remain just as before, and only WAGES have been reduced by 1/3 to 1/2. Moreover, nothing is being sold, most of our SPINNERS AND MANUFACTURERS are getting very short of FLOATING CAPITAL and many of them are rotten to the core. 8 to 9 of the smaller ones have already come a cropper in the past few days, but that is only the first sign that the crisis has caught up with this class. Today I heard that the Cookes, who own the huge factory in Oxford Road (Oxford Road Twist Company), have sold their HUNTERS, FOXHOUNDS, GREYHOUNDS, etc., etc., and that one of them has dismissed his servants and left his palace, which is now TO BE LET. They haven't gone bust yet, but will undoubtedly be in for it soon. Another fortnight, and the dance will really be in full swing here.

Page me40.212

Sewell's and Neck's failure will have serious repercussions in Norway, which has not been affected hitherto.

Page me40.212

Things in Hamburg look splendid. Ulberg and Cramer (Sweden), whose debts when they failed amounted to 12,000,000 banco marks (of which 7 mill. were bills on themselves!), had a capital of not more than 300,000 marks!! A whole lot of chaps have got into hot water simply for want of sufficient cash when a single bill fell due, although they might have had in their desks a hundred times that amount in currently worthless bills. Never has panic assumed so perfect and classic a form as in Hamburg just now. Everything is worthless, utterly worthless, save for silver and gold. Last week also saw the failure of Christ. Matth. Schröder, a very old and wealthy house. J.H. Schröder & Co., London (his brother), telegraphed saying that if 2 million banco marks would be enough, he would send the equivalent in silver. Came the reply: 3 millions or nothing. He couldn't spare the 3 millions and Christian Matthias crashed.†247 We have debtors in Hamburg and have no idea whether they still exist or whether they've gone bust. In Hamburg the whole imbroglio is the result of the most colossal kite-flying operations that have ever been seen. They were at their most outrageous in the dealings between Hamburg, London, Copenhagen and Stockholm. Then, with the American CRASH and the fall in the price of goods, the whole business came to light and, for the moment, Hamburg is done for commercially. The German industrialists, especially those in Berlin, Saxony and Silesia, will be very hard hit.

Page Break me40.213

Page me40.213

Cotton is now 6 9/16d for MIDDLING and will no doubt soon come down to 6d. But the mills here will only be able to go on full time again provided increased production does not promptly force the price above 6d. Yet that is what would immediately happen just now.

Page me40.213

Among our local philistines the crisis has induced a strong desire for the bottle. No one can bear to stay at home alone with his cares and his family. The clubs are livening up and the consumption of LIQUOR is rising sharply. The worse of a jam a chap is in, the more frenzied his efforts to cheer himself up. And then, the morning after, what more striking example of remorse, both alcoholic and moral!

Page me40.213

This week I shall again apply myself to the Cyclopaedia and do as many of the C articles as possible. Just now I can't work much or for very long at a stretch, but I'll do what I can.

Page me40.213
Warmest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.213
Lupus is also involved in the crisis — but it will be his luck: his Samson has gone bankrupt, so his mornings are free.

Page me40.213
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.214

111
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.214
[London,] 8 December 1857

DEAR Frederick,
While I was upstairs busy writing my last letter to you,†a my wife down below was besieged by hungry wolves all of whom used the PRETEXT of the 'HEAVY TIMES' to dun her for money which she had not got. (Luckily £15 arrived from Germany a few days afterwards, thus enabling us TO SHIFT OFF THE EVIL DAY FOR A WEEK OR A FORTNIGHT.) WELL, in the above-mentioned circumstances I may have been a RATHER confused correspondent, but not too confused to recall my confusion that self-same evening, after posting the letter, and remark to my wife what a wry face you would pull at my bit about debtors receiving money on bills payable by themselves, etc. Ever since I have been keeping up her spirits, which have been much depressed by this 'petite guerre'†b with sundry scoundrels, by reflecting on how you would break it to me in the most gracious possible way. But I could hardly go so far as to expect that you would tone down the RIDICULOUS BLUNDER to a 'SLIGHT MISTAKE'.†c MY BEST THANKS FOR THIS GRACE, SIR.
Page me40.214
But to return to the matter in hand. According to The Economist it is true that the chaps in Mincing Lane and Mark Lane†d had again been receiving LOANS on their PRODUCE, but this MOVE ceased last Wednesday or thereabouts. Corn, in particular, even showed an UPWARD TENDENCY for a day or two, but (flour actually) then dropped 3/- per 280 lbs as a result of the FRENCH DECREES permitting the free export of corn and flour, and significantly so yesterday as a result of the DOWNBREAK of corn prices in the Baltic. (Nota bene: In France, Bonaparte's measure had no more than a transient effect; though prices rose a little there, the rise immediately resulted in INCREASED SUPPLIES, which have still to find their way on to the French market.) A few corn merchants have failed here, but as yet only insignificant houses and then only OPERATORS UPON GRAIN FOR DISTANT DELIVERY. The big American SHIPMENTS arrive in the SPRING; the French will bombard England with corn AT ANY PRICE as soon as PRESSURE over there grows MORE SERIOUS. In my opinion — and always supposing that, in accordance with the old adage, there are several good autumns in succession — only now will the effects of the REPEAL of the CORN LAWS†150 begin to tell on LANDLORDS and FARMERS in England and the ANTIQUATED AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS recur in no mean fashion. The satisfactory state of the HOME TRADE resulting from industrial PROSPERITY, and the succession of bad autumns have combined to make the experiment of 1847-57 inoperative and turn REPEAL TO A DEAD LETTER.†248

Page Break me40.215
Page me40.215

I've had a gratifying experience with the Tribune. On 6 November I wrote an exposé for them of the 1844 Bank Act,†132 in which I said that the next few days would see the FARCE of SUSPENSION, but that not too much should be made of this MONETARY PANIC, the real affaire being the impending INDUSTRIAL CRASH.†a The Tribune published this as a LEADER. 3 DAYS LATER The New-York Times (which has entered into a feudal relationship with the London Times) replied to the Tribune to the effect that, firstly, the Bank Act would not be suspended, extolled the Act after the manner of the MONEY-ARTICLE WRITERS of Printing House Square,†b and declared the TALK of an 'INDUSTRIAL CRASH' in England to be 'SIMPLY ABSURD'. This was on the 24th. The following day the N.Y.T. received a telegram from the Atlantic with the news that the Bank Act had been suspended, and likewise news of 'INDUSTRIAL DISTRESS'. It's nice, by the by, to see Loyd-Overstone coming out with the true reason for his fanatical advocacy of the 1844 legislation — because it permitted the 'HARD CALCULATORS' to squeeze 20-30% out of the COMMERCIAL WORLD.†c
Page me40.215

Nice, too, that the capitalists, who so vociferously opposed the 'droit au travail',†d are now everywhere demanding 'public support' from their governments and hence advocating the 'droit au profit†e at public expense in Hamburg, Berlin, Stockholm, Copenhagen and even England (in the form of SUSPENSION of the Acts). Also, that the philistines of Hamburg should have refused to hand out any more alms to the capitalists.
Page me40.215

The astonishing thing about the whole business is the affaire in France and the attitude adopted towards it by most of the English press. Just as, after the American COLLAPSE, John Bull was represented as the calm, SELF-POSSESSED MERCHANT vis-á-vis his brother

Page Break me40.216
Jonathan, so now Jacques Bonhomme vis-á-vis John Bull. The Paris correspondent of the London Economist comments most ingenuously:

'There has been not the slightest disposition to have a panic, though circumstances certainly appeared to justify one, and though the French have heretofore been extremely ready to rush into panics on the smallest pretexts.'†a

Page me40.216
The PANIC now felt by the French bourgeoisie, despite their sanguine temperament, at the very notion of panic, is surely the best indication of what panic means in France on this occasion. The virtuous disposition of the Parisian bourgeois will, however, prove no more effective than the Hamburg ASSOCIATION FOR DISCOUNTING THE PANIC.†249 Last Sunday's Observer relates how the dissemination of horrible rumours about the Crédit mobilier†45 sent everyone rushing to the Bourse to rid themselves á tout prix†b of their SHARES. French capital, despite the cosmopolitan nature therein descried by Mr Péreire, is still timid, niggardly and cautious in actual COMMERCE as it has always been. Crooked dealing (which, to be sure, has IN ITS TURN become the sine qua non of respectable trade and industry) actually exists only in branches in which the State is the real EMPLOYER, whether directly or indirectly. But there is no doubt that even an inherently — or, as Hegel would say, 'in himself' — bankrupt capitalist of the magnitude of the French GOVERNMENT can make SHIFT for rather longer than a PRIVATE CAPITALIST. The police measures against BULLION EXPORTS, now pretty well IN FULL VIGOR in France, and to an even greater extent the export, AT WHICH PRICES WHATEVER, of the products of the corn, silk and wine harvests, etc., have put off for a week or two the drain of BULLION from the Bank of France. Nevertheless, THE DRAIN WILL SET IN and even if, as in 1856 (October), it gets no further than the gutter, the catastrophe will be complete. Meanwhile French manufacturers are treating their workers as ruthlessly as though there had never been a revolution. THIS WILL DO GOOD. On the other hand Mr Bonaparte is using the bank as an entrepreneur for the construction of railways, now at a standstill. Doubtless the next step will be the issue of assignats†c as soon as the DRAIN begins. If the fellow has the courage, and always providing he can pay the army properly, we may yet witness a pretty prologue.
Page me40.216
Your information about conditions in Manchester is of the greatest interest to me, the newspapers having chosen to draw a veil over them.

Page Break me40.217
Page me40.217
I am working like mad all night and every night collating my economic studies so that I at least get the outlines clear before the déluge.†250
Page me40.217
Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me40.217

How is your health? It's a long time since you supplied a bulletin.

Page me40.217

Since Lupus keeps a regular record of our crisis forecasts, tell him that last Saturday's Economist maintains that, during the final months of 1853, throughout 1854, the autumn of 1855 and 'THE SUDDEN CHANGES OF 1856', Europe has never had more than a HAIR-BREADTH ESCAPE from the IMPENDING CRASH.†a

Page me40.217

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

112

MARX TO CONRAD SCHRAMM†251

IN ST. HÉLIER IN JERSEY

Page me40.217

London, 8 December [1857]

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Hampstead

Dear Schramm,

Write soon and tell us how Jersey suits you. I did not see Engels when he passed through London on his return journey because he gave me the wrong time for our meeting at the RAILWAY STATION.†b Did that ass Reventlow reply? Not that I suppose there's anything at all to the whole affair, since in any case these AMERICANS are incapable of paying just now; I only ask because of the BEHAVIOUR of this mighty hero. And how about Mr Faucher? Has he paid up yet? That CRAZY Berlinois†c GROWS FROM DAY TO DAY STUPIDER. WITNESS THE FOREIGN

Page Break me40.218

NEWS OF THE MORNING STAR, a name that bears a certain analogy with lucus a non lucendo.†a In fact the entire English press gets worse every day, even without German assistance. Quite apart from the seismic effects of the GENERAL CRISIS which must delight every connoisseur, it is truly a relief when one is no longer forced to listen every day to the ENGLISH SELF-LAUDATIONS AS TO THE 'BRAVERY' OF 'THEIR ENGLISH IN INDIA'. It was really getting on one's nerves, this overtrading in other people's courage on the part of the English paterfamilias and penny-a-liner who lives quietly at home and is uncommonly averse to anything threatening him with the remotest chance of obtaining military glory.

Page me40.218
Apart from the family circle, I am now pretty well cut off here. I seldom see my few acquaintances nor, on the whole, is this any great loss. The life you lead in Jersey can hardly be much quieter. I fear that as time goes on you will weary of your stay, or have you struck up acquaintanceships OF ANY KIND? True, Harney is SO FAR quite a companionable fellow, but toujours perdrix†b is, of course, apt to pall. I hope to see you again in the spring, provided you don't move further south. In any case DROP ONE OR TWO LINES.
Page me40.218
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.218
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

113
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.218
Manchester, 9 December 1857

Dear Moor,
In haste, a few more particulars about the crisis. In Hamburg, where the crisis has been grossly exacerbated by the pedantry of the old and much-famed clearing bank, this is what has happened: Schunck, Souchay & Co. here had drawn bills on Hamburg. So as to be really on the safe side, and although the bills were on goods, etc., etc., they sent the drawees BANK OF ENGLAND SEVEN DAY BILLS. These were indignantly returned AS SO MUCH WASTE PAPER, and the bills drawn on Hamburg duly protested with the comment that only silver now had any value! Bills bearing the endorsements of Schunck, Souchay & Co. and 2 other equally good houses, maturing in 2 months, could not be discounted last week at less than 12 1/2 per cent.

Page Break me40.219
Page me40.219

NB. If I give you the names of the houses concerned, it is on the understanding that this remains strictly between ourselves. I could get into the devil of a row if such an abuse of confidential information were to come to light.
Page me40.219
The Liverpool and London PRODUCE houses will come a cropper before long. Things look grim in Liverpool; the chaps are stone broke and can't even summon up the energy to go bankrupt, while at the Exchange, or so I am told by someone who was there on Monday, faces are three times as long as they are here, though here too the storm clouds are growing steadily darker. Spinners and manufacturers are paying wages and buying coal with the money they get in for their goods and when that's gone they're sure to collapse. Yesterday the market was more listless and depressed than it had ever been before.
Page me40.219
Someone told me he knew of 5 or 6 Indian houses whose stocks are such that they cannot fail to go to the wall in the very near future.
Page me40.219
Only now are the fellows beginning to realise that the monetary speculation was the least important factor in the crisis, and the more they see this, the gloomier they look.
Page me40.219
Health good. More tomorrow or the day after. Herewith a bundle of Guardians. Take a look at the little bits of local news, in which you'll find some very interesting facts.
Page me40.219
Your
F.E.

Page me40.219
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.220

114
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.220
Manchester, 11 December 1857

Dear Moor,
Still VERY BUSY with bad debts and price reductions.
Page me40.220

Never before has overproduction been so general as during the present crisis, and there's no denying that this applies to colonial produce and also to corn. That's what's so splendid, and is bound to have tremendous consequences. After all, so long as overproduction was confined to industry the thing was only half-way there, but as soon as agriculture is also affected, and in the tropics as well as in the temperate zone, it will become spectacular.

Page me40.220

The outward and visible sign of overproduction is more or less always expansion of credit, but this time it's especially kite-flying: This system of making money by means of drafts on bankers or 'bill-brokers', which are either met or not before maturity according to how the thing has been arranged, is the rule on the Continent and among the continental houses in England. The commission houses here all do it. The system was taken to the most enormous lengths in Hamburg, where bills amounting to more than 100 million banco marks were in circulation. But there was some fearful kite-flying elsewhere and it was because of this that Sieveking, Sillam, Karr, Josling & Co., Draper, Pietroni & Co. and other London houses went under. For the most part they were the drawees in this LINE. Among the manufacturing businesses over here and in the HOME TRADE the thing was so arranged that instead of paying CASH IN A MONTH the fellows negotiated bills on themselves at 3 months and paid the interest. In silk manufacturing the practice increased proportionately to the rise in the price of silk. In short everyone operated in excess of his resources, OVERTRADED. Admittedly OVERTRADING is not synonymous with overproduction, but it amounts to exactly the same thing. A MERCANTILE COMMUNITY which has a capital of £20,000,000 thereby possesses an ability to produce, trade and consume measured by this sum. If, on this capital and as a result of kite-flying, it does business presupposing a capital of £30,000,000, production will rise by 50% and consumption will also rise as a result of prosperity, but by no means to the same degree, disons†a 25%. At the end of a certain period there will inevitably be an accumulation of goods of an order 25% in excess of bona fide, i.e. of average requirements, even at a time of prosperity. This alone would be bound to precipitate the crisis, even if the money market, the weathercock of trade, were not already pointing in that direction. All that's needed is a CRASH and then, in addition to this 25%, a further 25% at least of STOCKS of all NECESSARIES will become A DRUG ON THE MARKET. The present crisis provides an opportunity for a detailed study of how overproduction is generated by the expansion of credit and by OVERTRADING. There's nothing new about the thing as such, save for the remarkably clear-cut lines along which it is now developing. In 1837-42 and 1847 they were by no means so clear-cut.

Page Break me40.221

Page me40.221

That is the pretty situation in which Manchester and the cotton industry now find themselves. Prices are low enough to permit of what the philistines call A SOUND BUSINESS. But as soon as there is the slightest increase in production, cotton will start going up, since there's none to be had in Liverpool. So they'll have to carry on working SHORT TIME, orders or no orders. Now admittedly there are orders, but they're from places that have not yet felt the intensity of the crisis; the commission houses know this and so they aren't buying, for to do so would involve endless wrangles, and bad debts into the bargain.

Page me40.221
Today the market was again very depressed. Yarn worth 14 to 14 1/2d is offered at 11 1/4d and anyone offering 10 3/4d can have it. The Indians are out of the market. The Greeks are stuck with their corn — almost all of them deal in this, it being their chief return freight (from Galatz and Odessa). The Germans can't buy for the reasons just mentioned. The HOME TRADE houses have forbidden their BUYERS to order anything at all. AMERICA OUT OF THE QUESTION. Italy is suffering from the general fall in price of her raw materials. Another month, and there'll be a very nasty situation here. Small spinners and manufacturers are going under every day.
Page me40.221
Mercks in Hamburg only survived because of the 15 mill. advance from the government and on one day at least their house here sent away the spinners whose accounts were due. Mercks' head man in Hamburg is the ex-imperial minister Dr Ernst Merck, a lawyer but also partner.

Page Break me40.222
Page me40.222
Kindest regards to your wife and children. There's been no time today to go into your letter about France, etc., etc; il faudrait trop réfléchir.†a
Page me40.222
Your
F.E.
Page me40.222
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

115
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.222
Manchester, 17 December 1857

Dear Marx,
This crisis is keeping me hellishly en haleine.†b Prices falling every day. Moreover we ourselves are already beginning to feel it. My old man was in a fix not long ago and we had to advance him money. However I don't imagine that it will prove serious, but that's neither here nor there just now.
Page me40.222

Manchester is becoming ever more deeply involved. The effect of the constant pressure on the market is really tremendous. Nobody can sell anything. Every day we hear of lower offers, and anyone with a sense of the proprieties stops offering his goods for sale. Things look grim among the spinners and manufacturers. Yarn agents are no longer selling to factories except for CASH or against security. A few of the smaller people have already come a cropper but that's nothing compared with what's in store.†252

Page me40.222

Despite two substantial subventions, Mercks are in a complete fix, both here and in Hamburg. They are expected to go under any day, and only an extraordinary fluke could save them. The capital of the Hamburg house is said to total 4 to 5 million banco marks against LIABILITIES of 22 million (13 marks = £1). According to other reports the crisis has already whittled down the capital to 600,000 marks.

Page Break me40.223

Page me40.223

We shall have 4 more distinct crises: 1. colonial produce, 2. corn, 3. spinners and manufacturers, 4. HOME TRADE — this not before next spring. In the woollen districts things are already beginning, and very nicely too.

Page me40.223

Don't forget to make a note of the BALANCE-SHEETS of the firms that have failed — Bennoch, Twentyman, Reed of Derby, Mendes da Costa, Hoare, Buxton, etc. All of them most edifying.

Page me40.223

Your views on France have since been borne out by the newspapers almost to the letter. There is sure to be a CRASH over there and the first to be involved will be the speculators of central and northern Germany.

Page me40.223

You will presumably have made a note of the proceedings relating to Macdonald, Monteith, Stevens (London and Exchange Bank).†a The story of the London and Exchange Bank and the BORROWED NOTES counting as SECURITY is the most splendid I have ever read.

Page me40.223

Apart from Hamburg, northern Germany has hitherto hardly been drawn into the crisis at all. But it's beginning there now too. Heimendahl (silk doubler and merchant) has gone under in Elberfeld, and Linde & Trappenberg (SMALL WARE MANUFACTURERS) in Barmen. Both respectable firms. So far the north Germans have suffered virtually nothing but losses; in their case, as over here, the temporary disruption of the money market has a less severe effect than the protracted period over which goods have been unsaleable.

Page me40.223

Vienna's turn will also come.

Page me40.223

Lupus is eating humble pie; we were right.

Page me40.223

Distress has also begun to set in among the proletariat. There are as yet few signs of revolution, for the long period of prosperity has been fearfully demoralising. The unemployed on the streets continue to beg and to idle away their time. ROBBERIES by garrotters are on the increase, but not to any serious extent.
Page me40.223
I now have to do so much running round seeing people in order to keep track of the crisis that there's damned little time left to do any work for Dana. That, too, must be attended to in the intervals. What has he to say? And how are his payments going?
Page me40.223
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me40.224
Page me40.224
The Guardian always publishes the Manchester market reports on Wednesdays and Saturdays. A whole bundle goes off to you today. This morning it also published some more labour statistics.
Page me40.224
Congratulations on your prediction about the Bank Act.†a

Page me40.224
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

116
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.224
[London,] 18 December 1857

DEAR Frederick,
Just a few lines written in great haste. I've just received a 3rd and final warning from the rotten rate collector to the effect that, if I haven't paid by Monday, they'll put a BROKER in the house on Monday afternoon. IF possible, THEREFORE, send me a few pounds before Monday. Financial PRESSURE is now even greater than is USUALLY the case with me because, for ABOUT 3 weeks, I have had to pay for everything in cash and ANYTHING LIKE CREDIT has ceased, while at the same time 2/3 of all the money I receive immediately goes to meet floating DEBTS. Moreover, there is only a very little coming in, since I have hitherto been unable to send the Tribune more than one article.†b So FAR AS TO PRIVATE MATTERS.

Page me40.224

I am working enormously, as a rule until 4 o'clock in the morning. I am engaged on a twofold task: 1. Elaborating the outlines of political economy.†250 (For the benefit of the public it is absolutely essential to go into the matter au fond,†c as it is for my own, INDIVIDUALLY, TO GET RID OF THIS NIGHTMARE.)
Page me40.224

2. The present crisis. Apart from the articles for the Tribune, all I do is keep records of it, which, however, takes up a considerable amount of time. I think that, somewhere ABOUT the spring, we ought to do a pamphlet together about the affair†253 as a reminder to the German public that we are still there as always, and ALWAYS THE SAME. I have started 3 large record books — ENGLAND, GERMANY, FRANCE. All the material on the American affair is available in the

Page Break me40.225
Tribune, and can be collated subsequently. By the by, I should be glad if you would send me the Guardian, if possible, every day. It not only doubles the work but also disrupts it if I have to deal with a week or so's arrears all at once.
Page me40.225

In France, and specially at Havre,†a the fun (commercial) will probably be started by the 'Germans', whom one cannot altogether help taking into account now. Moreover — apart from the GENERAL ROTTENNESS of the bankrupt State — trade itself would seem to be exceptionally rotten in Marseilles and Bordeaux, everywhere, that is, where infiltration and intervention by foreign elements has stung the beastly crapauds†81 out of their lousy, mean pennypinching and TIMIDITY. Au fond,†b only in such an immobile country was a Crédit mobilier†45 both possible and inevitable. THE MORE YOU BECOME ACQUAINTED WITH THE MESSIAS OF NATIONS', THE LESS YOU LIKE HIM.
Page me40.225

Write to me whenever you have the time, for later on you're sure to forget all the 'chronique scandaleuse' of the crisis which is so invaluable to us. I make excerpts from your letters and enter them in the principal record books.
Page me40.225

Salut. Kind regards to Lupus. Pieper has the satisfaction of knowing that his ex-principal Saalfeld, with whose wife he had such a tremendous row, HAS GONE TO THE WALL.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.225
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

117
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†82
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me40.225
London, 21 December 1857
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Of the various letters you mention I have received only one, that sent via Freiligrath. I didn't answer, or rather was awaiting a private occasion for answering which, for reasons that cannot very well be committed to paper, did not present itself. I would point out, by the by, that it was you who first broke off the correspondence by failing for such a long time to answer a letter dated Manchester.†a

Page Break me40.226
Page me40.226

MY THANKS FOR Heraclitus.†b I have always felt a great TENDERNESS for this philosopher, whom I prefer above all the Ancients save Aristotle. [Later]†c philosophy — Epicurus (him in particular), Stoa and Scepticism — [I] had made the object of special study,†d but for [political] rather than philosophical [...] reasons. While [tendering] my thanks, [I] must at the same time [say] that the work has not yet reached me.
Page me40.226

Doubtless [Nutt's] will send it as soon as it comes into their [...]
Page me40.226

[...] to write [... Mi]nistry. My views on Palmerston you know, and these have not changed. Besides, I know nothing whatever about the paper†e since Austrian journals are nowhere on display here, and am thus quite ignorant of its general line. Whatever the case, I should be interested to see one or two numbers.†254
Page me40.226

I live in great isolation here, all my friends except Freiligrath having left London. Anyway, I have no desire for intercourse. Relativement parlant,†f Freiligrath is doing quite well as MANAGER of the Swiss Bank and is still the same good-natured, sterling fellow he has always been. Lupus and Engels are in Manchester as before. We still lament the loss of Weerth.
Page me40.226

The present commercial crisis has impelled me to set to work seriously on my outlines of political economy,†250 and also to prepare something on the present crisis. I am forced to fritter away [...] my days earning a living. [Only] the nights remain free for real work and that is disrupted by ill-health. I [have] not yet looked round for a publisher as I know from experience the [...] come of it [...] when I [...]. I cannot send you any news, living as I do like a hermit. Throughout last winter and summer my wife was very unwell, but has now recovered in some measure.

Page me40.226
If you know Dr Elsner's address please send him my regards.

Page Break me40.227
Page me40.227
That old ass Ruge has, I am told, made an attempt to resuscitate his Deutsche Jahrbücher.†244 History will not put the clock back far enough to make this feasible.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.227
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

118
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.227
[London,] 22 December 1857

DEAR Frederick,
Thou hast triumphantly snatched me out of the clutches of the Exchequer, praised be thy name — halleluiah!
Page me40.227
Herewith a letter (with enclosure) from the great Lassalle†254 who now positively assures me that he is SERIOUSLY beginning to be known in Berlin by reason of his fame. These EFFUSIONS of a beautiful soul will amuse you and Lupus. The worthy Lassalle took up philosophy and Heraclitus†a as he took up the Hatzfeldt case†35 and, if he is to be believed, eventually won his 'case'. It would, indeed, seem that the old school — both philologists and Hegelians — were surprised to see such a posthumous blossoming of a by-gone epoch. But we shall be seeing the thing for ourselves and, gift-horse or no, shall look it long and searchingly in the mouth — ON THE EXPRESS CONDITION, OF COURSE, that Heraclitus doesn't reek of garlic. Fancy only this fellow going up and down the streets of Berlin and 'asking for himself' strutting like a peacock, a stride and a stand: biting his lips, with 'a political regard' as who should say: 'This is the man who has written Heraclit.' The laddie might be of some service to us in finding a publisher, unless, perhaps, he's afraid that competition might endanger the reputation to which he also aspires in the field of economics, thereby losing him his 'case'. I have replied to Friedländer through Mr Lassalle saying that, while I, too, am 'anti-French', I am no less 'anti-English', and that the last thing I could do would be to write in favour of 'Lord Pam'. So I have turned the thing down. Should Friedländer send me the Presse so that I can see beforehand whose spiritual offspring it is, and if the fellows want no more than one MONEY ARTICLE a week — for which they would, of course, have to shell out — I might perhaps agree. There can be no question of POLITICS in this CASE.

Page Break me40.228
Page me40.228

I have written to Lassalle, brief and cool, to say that, while I had received the letter sent through Freiligrath, I hadn't answered it for reasons that could hardly be committed to paper. For the rest a few words, no more.†a
Page me40.228

Schramm has written to my wife from Jersey; an extremely witty letter. For his sins, Kosmos Leiden has lost 3 of his children; 2 daughters (including Mrs Mevissen) died of consumption and one of his sons went down with the Pacific.
Page me40.228

In last Sunday's issue of Reynold's there is a significant attack upon those APOSTATES who advocate UNION with the MIDDLE CLASS. Meaning Jones. I haven't seen the laddie for a long time. He seems to be avoiding me, for which he must have his 'raysons'. However, I shall probably surprise him — ONE FINE MORNING.
Page me40.228

Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.228
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

119
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.228
[London,] 25 December 1857

DEAR Frederick,

Since our first task now is to get a clear idea of conditions in France, I have been re-examining all my extracts on FRENCH

Page Break me40.229
COMMERCE, INDUSTRY AND CRISES and reached certain conclusions which I shall briefly outline for you:
Page me40.229
1. English, North European and American crises have never directly given rise in France to a 'French crisis'; rather the effects have been entirely passive — chronic DISTRESS, LIMITATION OF PRODUCTION, STAGNATION OF TRADE, and GENERAL UNEASINESS. The reason: France has a favourable balance of trade with the United States, the HANSEATIC TOWNS, England, Denmark. With Sweden and Norway the balance is unfavourable, but this is more than offset by Hamburg. CONSEQUENTLY these crises can never generate a DRAIN OF BULLION from France and hence will not create A PROPERLY SO-CALLED MONETARY PANIC there. If the Bank, notwithstanding, increases the bank rate, as has happened this time, it does so merely to prevent the capitalists from placing their money more advantageously in those countries. But so long as the EXPORT OF BULLION is the inevitable consequence, not of the balance of trade but simply of the avarice of the PROFITMONGERS, it can, as Bonaparte has now once more demonstrated, be stopped by the gendarmerie. If the country with the favourable balance of trade has not granted long-term credits or ACCUMULATED PRODUCE FOR THE EXPORT TO THE CENTRES OF THE CRISES — and both are repugnant to the PEDLAR-like†a nature of your French manufacturer and merchant — it will have to endure losses, etc., but not an acute crisis. Louis Philippe, too, was misled by the apparent good fortune with which France emerges from the first phase of a GENERAL CRISIS. In his inaugural address before the Chambers on the eve of the February revolution, he congratulated 'la belle France' UPON THIS PRIVILEGE.
Page me40.229
2. Admitting all this, the first phase of the crisis has already affected FRENCH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE more seriously than on any similar occasion in the past.
Page me40.229
3. In France the first effect of the crisis — AGREEABLE TO THE NATURE OF THE crapaud†81 — is the timorous curtailment of EXPENDITURE and BUSINESS. Hence an accumulation of money in the Bank of France coinciding with a huge drop in the circulation of BANK DISCOUNTS. Hence — owing to the circumstance that crises always happen in the autumn and that every French government fears political disturbances at the year's end should the bank rate be high at the SETTLEMENT of ACCOUNTS — reduction of the bank rate in December. In December 1847 Louis Philippe ordered the Bank to reduce the bank rate to 4%.

Page Break me40.230
Page me40.230
4. The greater availability of capital in COMMERCE and industry simultaneously gives rise to greater BUOYANCY on the Bourse. This has been the case under Boustrapa†40 to an even greater extent than under Louis Philippe because he compelled the Bank by the Decree of 1852 to make ADVANCES ON RAILWAY SECURITIES and fonds†a and Crédit foncier papiers, to rediscount the speculative BILLS discounted by the Comptoir National d'escompte,†255 and likewise to make him a further advance on the SECURITIES on which that institution had made advances already. Hence, e.g. the high price of French RAILWAY SHARES and BONDS although the RECEIPTS of the French railways since the outbreak of the crises in England have fallen disproportionately more than those over here. E.g. Orleans Railway RECEIPTS dropped by 24% between 29 October and 26 November and subsequently even further. Nevertheless on 22 December Orleans Railway was quoted at 1,355 whereas on 29 October it was at 2,985.†b It also emerges from the MONTHLY REPORT of the BANK OF FRANCE for December that, while DISCOUNTS in December have dropped by 94,236,520 frs compared with October and 49,955,500 compared with November, ADVANCES ON RAILWAY SECURITIES have risen.†c

Page me40.230

5. The French crisis proper does not break out until the GENERAL CRISIS has attained a certain level in Holland, Belgium, the Zollverein,†256 Italy (including Trieste), the Levant and Russia (Odessa), because in these countries the balance of trade is distinctly unfavourable to France; hence the direct effect of PRESSURE is MONETARY PANIC in France. Once it has hit France, it recoils on those countries d'une maniére vraiment admirable.†d With Switzerland, France is on the same footing as the United States with England. The short-term balance of trade is consistently in France's favour. But since France is substantially in debt to Switzerland, the latter is always apt HEAVILY TO DRAW UPON IT in times of crisis.

Page me40.230

6. When the French crisis proper breaks out, it will play the very devil both with the SECURITY MARKET and the SECURITY of that market, the State. (This will also TELL UPON England, which AT THE

Page Break me40.231

PRESENT MOMENT is again gambling in FOREIGN SECURITIES in a manner splendid to behold.) The swindling, which in Hamburg, England, the United States has been the province of PRIVATE CAPITALISTS, is practised in France by the State itself, and the French PEDLARS IN TRADE were all of them GAMBLERS on the Bourse. The RECOIL from the Anglo-American crisis sufficed to bring the railways TO A DEAD-LOCK. What does Mr Bonaparte do? Compels the Bank TO BECOME IN FACT [A] RAILWAY CONTRACTOR and to make advances to the fellows on the BONDS they were authorised to ISSUE by the SETTLEMENT of 30 November 1856. In 1858 these BONDS will run to ABOUT £9 million. Thus the Crédit mobilier,†45 which on 3 December was up to its ears in trouble, is preparing to amalgamate with the Crédit foncier and the Comptoir National d'escompte. Why? Because both the latter are legally entitled to receive ADVANCES from the Bank on their SECURITIES and to have their DISCOUNTS REDISCOUNTED. So Boustrapa's plan is clear, namely to make the BANK OF FRANCE the entrepreneur for all his fraudulent schemes with the help, not of its own capital, but of the capital which it has merely on deposit and which will drain away ON THE FIRST SIGNAL GIVEN IN THE NEIGHBOURING COUNTRIES. IN FACT, this is also an admirable way of ruining the Bank. However it would hardly occur even to Mr Bona to have the CALLS of the SHAREHOLDERS paid by the BANK OF FRANCE. In 1858 these CALLS will amount to over £10 million for French railways alone under the SETTLEMENT of 30 November 1856. They will run to at least £30 million for the host of speculative concerns SUCH AS the MERCANTILE AND INDUSTRIAL CO OF MADRID (Rothschilds), the French-American Shipping Company, the Victor Emmanuel Railway, Herserange Ironworks Co., Austrian Railways, Saragossa Co., French-Swiss Railway, LAUSANNE-FRIBOURG RAILWAY, NASSAU COMPANY, Société Générale des Tanneries, Compagnie de la Carbonisation des Houilles, CHIMAY TO MARIENBOURG RAILWAY, Lombard-Venetian RAILWAY, South American STEAM NAVIGATION Co., etc. The French haven't an earthly hope of paying these CALLS. Moreover the GERMANS, HOLLANDERS, SWISS, the LARGE HOLDERS OF FR[ENCH] SECURITIES, will sell them AT ANY PRICE on the Paris Bourse at the first sign of SERIOUS ALARM, be it in France or due to PRESSURE AT HOME. So it seems that Boustrapa will hardly be able to extricate himself in 1858 unless he holds out for a bit longer with the help of martial law and assignats.†a The whole rotten old structure is falling to pieces and the ludicrously rash surge hitherto manifested

Page Break me40.232
by the SECURITY MARKET in England, etc., will likewise end in disaster.†257
Page me40.232
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.232
Pieper arrived today on a visit.
Page me40.232
As regards the Comptoir National d'escompte de Paris, be it also noted that this institution, which was set up by the provisional government for the purpose of making bills discountable on the basis of only two signatures and similar less stringent requirements, was empowered by Boustrapa in 1851, only a day or two after the coup d'état, TO MAKE ADVANCES ON Rentes Françaises, les actions et obligations industrielles ou de crédit constituées en sociétés anonymes.†a Advances on these SECURITIES amounted to £940,000 in 1854/55 and nearly £1,500,000 in 1855/56. Moreover, in 1851 it was given the right TO ESTABLISH un 'Sous Comptoir des Chemins de Fer',†b whose sole BUSINESS was to make advances on RAILWAY SHARES and BONDS. At the end of JUNE 1852 its ADVANCES were £520,000, at the end of 1852 £1,240,000, 1852/53 — £3,600,000; at the end of 1854: £4,560,000, i.e. ABOUT 9×the ADVANCES in 1851. It's the same delectable business that broke the neck of the Scotch Exchange Banks in 1846/47.

Page me40.232
Has Dr Borchardt not yet suspended his payments?
Page me40.232
I trust you won't go out tippling too much during the holiday and these exciting times in Manchester and that you'll pay due attention to your health. Warmest regards to Lupus.

Page me40.232
WHAT IS FRIEND CHARLEY†c about? and OLD Hill?

Page me40.232
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow. 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.233

120
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.233
[London,] 30 December [1857]

Dear Frederick,
Come what may I shall have to deal with the Lucknow-Oudh affair on FRIDAY (1ST OF JANUARY). Could you let me have ANY ARTICLE, HOWEVER SHORT, on this subject by the day after tomorrow.†a IT WOULD BE EXTREMELY SEASONABLE.
Page me40.233
A happy New Year to you.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.233
The enclosed greetings are not to be handed to Lupus until New Year's Day.

Page me40.233
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition. Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

121
ENGELS TO MARX†184
IN LONDON

Page me40.233
[Manchester,] 31 December 1857

Dear Moor,

I have searched the whole town for newspapers containing INDIAN NEWS, having sent you my Guardians on the subject the day before yesterday. I can't get hold of the relevant numbers, either from the Guardian itself or from the Examiner & Times, nor has Belfield any left. I thought you had already dealt with this affair on Tuesday. In the circumstances I cannot do the article,†b which is all the more vexing in that this is the first afternoon in 4 weeks on which I'd have been able to do it without having to neglect urgent business. In future, let me know as early as possible what your intentions are as to military articles; just now 24 hours makes quite a difference to me.

Page Break me40.234
Page me40.234

In any case, detailed information is so frightfully scarce, what there is being based almost wholly on telegraphic despatches from Cawnpore to Calcutta, that it's virtually impossible to write a critical analysis.†258 The only points I can think of are these: It is 40 MILES from Cawnpore to Lucknow (Alam Bagh) — Havelock's forced marches show that in India 15 miles a day over a protracted period is a very long march. Accordingly, with only 2-3 marches ahead of him, Colin†a ought to have arrived at Alam Bagh no later than the 3rd day after his departure from Cawnpore, WITH PLENTY OF DAYLIGHT STILL LEFT TO ATTACK AT ONCE. It is by these standards that Colin's march must be judged; I can no longer recall the dates. 2. He had, after all, some 7,000 men (far more had been counted on, so between Calcutta and Cawnpore the march must have gone atrociously badly and a great many men been lost) and if he beat the Oudhi with approximately 7,000 men (including the garrisons of Alam Bagh and Lucknow), it was no great feat. An army of 5-7,000 Englishmen has always been thought fully sufficient to go anywhere and do anything in the open field in India. That stamps the opponents at once. A further consideration is that the Oudhi, although the most warlike race of the Ganges valley, were greatly inferior to the Sepoys as regards discipline, cohesion, weapons, etc., etc., precisely because they had never come under direct European organisation. Hence the main battle took the form of a running fight, that is to say a skirmishing engagement in which the Oudhians were pushed back from post to post. Now it is true the British are, with the Russians, the worst light infantry in Europe, but they have learnt something in the Crimea, and at all events they had this great advantage over the Oudhians that their line of skirmishers was properly and regularly supported by pickets and lines the whole under one individual commander and cooperating towards a single end; while their opponents in the normal Asiatic manner, dispersed in irregular clusters, everyone pressing to the front, thus offering a sixfold aim to the British, having no regular supports or reserves and each cluster commanded by its own clannish chief, acting independently of every other clan. For it must be repeated, up to now we have not heard in a single instance that any insurrectionary army in India had been properly constituted under a recognized chief. No other indication as to the nature of the fighting is given in the despatches nor, for that matter, any description of the terrain or particulars about the employment of troops, so that it's absolutely impossible for me to say anything further (let alone from memory).

Page Break me40.235

Page me40.235

As to France, you are right IN EVERY PARTICULAR, SO far as I can judge. There, too, things have taken a normal course up till now. Over here the affair is in its infancy so far as HOME TRADE is concerned; it is to this category that the two London houses in the Manchester TRADE belong. But that's only a beginning. This kind of firm can only become seriously embroiled when the pressure has lasted for 8-12 months. The course of the present crisis would seem to me to have more affinity with that of 1837-42 than with any other — if one disregards the splendid universality and all-embracing nature of the present one. Just now people here are deluding themselves into thinking that THE CRISIS IS OVER because the first phase, the monetary crisis with its immediate consequences, is over. Au fond†a each individual bourgeois still believes that his particular branch of business, and notably his own business, has been THOROUGHLY SOUND and, being able to measure themselves against the STANDARD of such splendid swindlers as Monteith, Macdonald, etc., etc., they naturally imagine themselves to be uncommonly virtuous. Nevertheless, this will not compensate Mr. Troost for losing 2/3 to 3/4 of his fortune on his 35,000 sacks of coffee, nor Mr SENATOR Merck for the fact that his shipments and other such operations to the tune of 22 million banco marks will eat up the whole of his capital. John Pondu, a Scot who has shot up here like a gigantic mushroom over the past 5 years, has, together with 5 others, 7,000 bales of silk in transit on which the loss will be £300,000. All this will not come to a head until March or April, and the tremendous efforts to push up prices on the commodity market will be frustrated at regular intervals as vessels arrive. It would seem that icy weather and east winds are at present preventing ships from arriving here. Should this continue for a week or a fortnight, the price of all produce will undoubtedly rise, only to fall all the more precipitously as soon as a west wind brings in an entire fleet. Voilá ce qui s'appelle l'offre et la demande en temps de crise.†b STOCKS of cotton, too, are beginning to pile up in Liverpool — 400,000 bales by today's count, A RATHER MORE THAN AVERAGE STOCK. There's still better to come and COTTON is sure to fall again in the spring; it has just risen 1/2d because de Jersey & Co. — a local firm which supplies almost the whole of the Russian market — having heard last week that their cancellation of all the orders they had placed in America had duly arrived — went and bought about 6,000 bales in Liverpool. That livened up the market, and any spinners who could afford to do so went in and bought something so as to supply their needs at the low prices. This alarmed, or rather put heart into, some other houses here and they, too, bought yarn and cloth so as to come in at the 'bottom'. It won't last long; to start with we shall, I think, have moderate UPS AND DOWNS here, the tendency being generally downward, perhaps also rising a little — one can't say exactly — until somewhere or other the lightning strikes again. At all events, there's a bad year ahead for spinners and manufacturers, if only because of insufficient demand and excessive supply. Stagnating pressure — that is the greatest danger so far as our local bourgeois are concerned. Monetary crises are of small account here, since all credits are extremely short-term (2-6 weeks).

Page Break me40.236

Page me40.236
On Saturday I went fox-hunting — 7 hours in the saddle. That sort of thing always keeps me in a state of devilish exhilaration for several days; it's the greatest physical pleasure I know. I saw only 2 out of the whole FIELD who were better horsemen than myself, but then they were also better mounted. This will really put my health to rights. At least 20 of the chaps fell off or came down, 2 horses were done for, 1 fox killed (I was in AT THE DEATH); otherwise no mishaps. Admittedly there were no real fox-hunters at the meet; they ride far better than I do, of course. I shall pass your thing on to Lupus.
Page me40.236
And now, a happy New Year to all your family and to the year of strife 1858.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.236
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.237

1858

122
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.237
[London,] 1 January 1858

Dear Engels,
No article having arrived from you today, I have sent none to New York and shall therefore send 2 next week. I hope you will have one READY by Tuesday,†a it being absolutely essential to write about India since a great STRUGGLE over military no less than commercial matters is taking place between the Tribune and The New-York Times. The Times, you see, RETAINS the London Times.
Page me40.237
Enclosed:
1 Star,

1 Daily News,
1 Overland Mail (the most recent not yet out).
Page me40.237
No doubt this will be sufficient.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.237
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

123
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.237
[London,] 5 January [1858]

Dear Engels,
Have had your note. You don't say whether you have received my letter enclosing those of Lassalle and Friedländer.†b I'd like to be sure that both will be preserved.

Page Break me40.238
Page me40.238
As to C, I am IN FACT in a considerable quandary. Nothing more has been sent to Dana since 27 November,†259 as I finished my own share of it (i.e. the non-military stuff) long ago. If circumstances in Manchester don't admit of your seriously applying yourself to the business this month, I shall have to give it up altogether and tell Dana on some PRETEXT or other that I can't go on with the Cyclopaedia. The fact that I send him long, new lists before polishing off the old ones cannot fail in the end to arouse his suspicions and compromise me. CONSEQUENTLY he's not even answering, let alone sending anything fresh. Nor can work of this kind be remunerative when there are constant hiatuses of a month or more.
Page me40.238
STILL, I try to avoid mentioning the matter to you because the last thing I want is to subject you to any strain that might damage your health. YET sometimes it seems to me that, if you could manage to do a little every two days or so, it might act as a CHECK on your junketings which, from what I know of Manchester and AT THE PRESENT EXCITED TIMES, seem to me 'unavoidable' and far from good for you.
Page me40.238

Nor can there be any question at present of my taking over the military stuff, which would entail spending a great deal of time at the Museum†a to no real effect, for it's absolutely essential that I should finish off my other work†250 — and it takes up all my time — even if the house should come tumbling about my ears!
Page me40.238
So, my boy, try to come to a definitive resolution — one way or the other.
Page me40.238
Warm regards.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.238
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.239

124
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.239
Manchester, 6 January 1858

Dear Moor,
You will have had the article†a in good time, at any rate, as I posted it before midnight on Monday, which means that it must have been delivered between 12 and 1 o'clock.
Page me40.239
I received Lassalle's letter and also wrote to tell you how amused Lupus and I were at the man who wrote Heraclitus.†b Can my letter have gone astray?†260
Page me40.239
During the worst of the crisis it was absolutely impossible for me to think of anything but the GENERAL CRASH. I could neither read nor write and was, moreover, still irritable as a result of my illness. Then came the HOLIDAYS with fox-hunting and other such frivolities, but now that's all over and I am beginning to feel in need of a quieter occupation and way of life. Such being the case — with the added inducement of a good bout of catarrh — the letter C has come as a boon to me, and I shall embark on it this very evening. I don't imagine it will take me very long; at any rate I shall put my best foot forward and you will be able to send something off each week. Come to that, if 'Army' arrived in October and in time for Volume I†261 then surely C, arriving in January, will be in time for Volume III. In view of the crisis the chaps won't be hurrying into print, otherwise Dana would have written long ago. If you hear from him, by the way, let me know.

Page me40.239

Incidentally the crisis, presently at a standstill, is about to take a new turn, at least so far as Manchester and the COTTON industry are concerned. On Monday a great many spinners went to Liverpool and bought 12,000 bales in order to restock to some extent, since many of them had nothing left. This pushed up the price of cotton, and at the same time the Greeks entered the market here and bought a fair amount, which brought about a corresponding rise locally. In Manchester and in Liverpool, the price has already risen by 3/4d (per lb) above the lowest point. Now the buyers are shying away again but, if the easterlies persist, cotton and yarn will get even lower before the arrival of full shiploads round about February or March. What a thing to do, pushing up the price of yarn and cotton WITH FACTORIES ON SHORT TIME! It can only result in restricting demand more than ever and, if this has no immediate effect on prices, it is merely because production rises and falls with demand. The price of MIDDLING is again somewhere between 6 1/4 and 6 3/8 — today probably 6 1/2d, although I haven't yet seen the closing prices.

Page Break me40.240
Page me40.240

As regards produce, too, the difficulty of investing money seems to have enabled the chaps to effect once again a small, temporary rise which will last until the wind goes round to the west.
Page me40.240

The vast amount of surplus capital in the market is, by the way, truly astounding and proves yet again what colossal dimensions everything has assumed since 1847. It would not surprise me in the least if, even before the crisis has passed through its remaining phases, this superfluity of FLOATING CAPITAL were to bring about renewed speculation in shares. This superfluity of disposable capital has undoubtedly helped to keep speculation going in France, and to such good effect that now, having survived the panic, the Crédit mobilier†45 can claim to be one of the soundest institutions in the world.
Page me40.240

The letter about Lassalle must have reached you; have another look for it. I wrote it 2 or 3 days after receiving Lassalle's letter.
Page me40.240

Enclosed with my day-before-yesterday's article were a few lines from Lupus to your wife and the girls. Cordial regards to them from me.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.240

Today a line or two from Schramm saying that he had been rather worse but has now improved again. His worthy brothers now seem to be making the crisis a pretext for leaving him very much in the lurch. He talks of going either to Krefeld or to Virginia so as not to have to worry about where his next meal is coming from! I shall send him five pounds.

Page me40.240
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.241

125
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.241
Manchester, 7 January 1858

Dear Moor,

Herewith the beginning of C.†262 I shall try and do a few more articles tomorrow evening. It seems to me that there are only 2 articles for which material will be difficult to obtain — perhaps impossible in sufficient quantity — namely, CAPS (PERCUSSION)†263 and 'CAMP' (ROMAN, HEBREW, GREEK). The excerpts I made from Rüstow about Caesar's camp†a amount to very little for, though I had ordered my own copy of Rüstow, the bookseller supplied an altogether different book. In the case of PERCUSSION CAPS, what I chiefly need is the story of the discovery of potassium tetrachlorate and its explosive qualities, likewise the dates when percussion fire-arms were introduced into the various armies. These two things would be useful to have. If you could manage to go to the British Museum and rout out something on this for me I could soon have these articles ready also, otherwise they'll hang fire since the libraries I use up here have no information on the subject.
Page me40.241

If, by the way, Monsieur Dana can't be bothered to reply when we send him our lists, he has only himself to blame. He could have sent a list for D long ago. Now I shall make one out myself. At all events the chap seems to be taking the whole business very lightly; I only hope he's sent you some money for it, otherwise it's high time to start kicking up a fuss.
Page me40.241

Charley†b is in Holland and will be going to Switzerland. Luckily the shortage of orders makes it possible for me to leave most of the tasks connected with the year's end to the office boys, so that I'm not unduly burdened with work. THAT'S ONE GOOD JOB.

Page me40.241

I enclose today's Guardian from which you will see that there is still a lot of SHORT TIME here. Next week it may ease again somewhat. At present I am sending you only those Guardians in which there's something of commercial interest.
Page me40.241
I am reading, inter alia, Clausewitz's Vom Kriege. An odd way of philosophising, but per se very good. On the question as to whether one should speak of the art or the science of war, he says that, more than anything else, war resembles commerce. Combat is to war what cash payment is to commerce; however seldom it need happen in reality, everything is directed towards it and ultimately it is bound to occur and proves decisive.†a

Page Break me40.242
Page me40.242
Many regards to your wife and little ones.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.242
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

126
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.242
[London,] 7 January 1858

DEAR Frederic,
I received your article†b at 5 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. It is HIGHLY AMUSING and will delight the Yankees. The news from India, by the by, is no longer quite so favourable to the worthy English. POOR Havelock!
Page me40.242
I have definitely not had your letter about Lassalle.†c So it has either got held up somewhere in Manchester or has been intercepted down here.†260
Page me40.242
Lupus' letter to the family, who send you their regards, HAS PRODUCED A GREAT SENSATION.
Page me40.242

Pieper was here during the Christmas holidays. He arrived in a state of alcoholic remorse and was more vapid and boring THAN EVER. The older the fellow grows the worse he becomes. He seems to have acquired the pleasant habit of drinking first thing in the morning, not tea or coffee, but a PINT [OF] STOUT, which gives him A SHEEP'S EYE for the rest of the day. Indeed, the combination of dilettantism and sententiousness, fadaise†d and pedantry makes him ever harder to stomach. And, as often in the case of such laddies, there lurks, beneath an apparently sunny temperament, much irritability, moodiness and crapulous despondency. He has presented the children with two daguerreotypes of his charming person which are truly sublime and might be entitled 'Pieper with countenance exposed'. Both confected on the very morning of his arrival by rail in London. The first, still drunk with sleep, A MOST ABJECT PICTURE OF MENTAL AND MORAL DEJECTION: great, big mouth, flaccid jowl, blurred, sprawling features, in his eyes A STUPENDOUS EXPRESSION OF NOTHINGNESS. In the 2nd our friend had already pulled himself together and remembered that he was the handsome and aimable Pieper. It is the awakening of complacency and its victory over UTTER DEGRADATION. The first portrait — PIEPER AS HE IS, the 2nd AS HE APPEARS TO HIMSELF and the world in general. As little Jenny aptly remarked, all that was wanting to put the fellow in a nutshell was his drama, WHAT IS THE MATTER?

Page Break me40.243
Page me40.243
I enclose an interesting document which the Urquhartites, with that IMPERTURBABLE importunity of theirs, have extracted from the BOARD OF TRADE.†264 In addition to the BAD STATE of England's balance of trade during the past 3 years, it will show you inter alia how much money was being made by Prussia at the time of the Russian war; further, that our HANSA TOWNS are AT THE HEAD of those regions whose balance of trade favours England.
Page me40.243
The momentary LULL in the crisis is, or so it seems to me, most advantageous to our interests — PARTY INTERESTS, I mean. Even in 1848, after the first LULL, England suffered some very severe blows at 2 or 3 INTERVALS, and at that time the crater had already shifted from where it had been in April 1847, etc.
Page me40.243
The 'Neapolitan Question',†103 which has caused earnest politicians such a lot of head-scratching, has now been resolved by the EARTHQUAKE IN A MOST DELIGHTFUL MANNER. At least that's what the POT-HOUSE POLITICIANS OF THE MORNING ADVERTISER say.
Page me40.243
You won't forget to send the Guardian, will you?
Page me40.243
Above all I beg you to take care of your health. Times will get better and will make considerable CLAIMS on your BODY. So temper it and see that it comes to no harm.
Page me40.243
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.243
Apropos. In his last number of the Pionier Heinzen remarks that, while it was quite comprehensible that the stultified workers in Germany should have been deluded by two sophists into believing they formed a distinct class because they plied a plane, it was altogether too much of a good thing when, as now, the cry of class was raised among the workers at every MEETING in America! He shouts about the obfuscation of the masses, who are not susceptible of wisdom. Proclaims 'spiritual revolution' and, in opposition to the class prophets, a new triumvirate — Goethe, G. St.-Hilaire and Karl Heinzen!!!

Page Break me40.244
Page me40.244
In recent weeks the Crédit mobilier†45 has pushed up the price of its shares to an exceptional height by the ANNOUNCEMENT OF A DIVIDEND OF 25 P.C., THIS TIME undoubtedly paid OUT OF CAPITAL.

Page me40.244
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

127
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.244
[London,] 11 January [1858]

Dear Frederick,
'Campaign', etc.†262 received. In the next day or so I shall go to the Museum†a to look up the matters in question.†b
Page me40.244
Affairs in India — with Windham for HERO — are again taking an interesting TURN. If we have fuller particulars this week, by Wednesday or thereabouts, I shall have to send off something on the subject to the Tribune.†265
Page me40.244

In elaborating the PRINCIPLES of economics†250 I have been so damnably held up by errors in calculation that in DESPAIR I have applied myself to a rapid revision of algebra. I have never felt at home with arithmetic. But by making a detour via algebra, I shall quickly get back into the way of things.
Page me40.244
Your health bulletins are too cursory. I'd like you to go into more detail, FOR INSTANCE, have all your sores healed up?
Page me40.244
More in my next.
Page me40.244
Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.245
Page me40.245

The reading-room of the British Museum, London, where Marx worked

Page Break me40.246
Page Break me40.247
Page me40.247
I hunted through Clausewitz,†a more or less, when doing Blücher. The fellow possesses a COMMON SENSE bordering on the ingenious.

Page me40.247
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

128
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.247
Manchester, 14 January 1858
7 Southgate

Dear Marx,
Herewith the article,†b though it has just occurred to me that by a ludicrous slip I have written Wilson throughout instead of Inglis; perhaps you would alter this as there's no time to do so now.
Page me40.247

I shall do a few more C's for Tuesday, and finish 'Cavalry', which should make a good article and also be somewhat longer.
Page me40.247
Apropos, have you done 'Coehoorn' (Baron)? If not I have some excellent material.
Page me40.247
NB. I've no material whatever on 'Catapults' — there should be something in Ersch and Gruber.†c
Page me40.247
The Lucknow garrison's greatest act of heroism consisted in the fact THAT THEY HAD TO FACE EVERY DAY THE 'COARSE BEEF' COOKED BY THE LADIES, 'ENTIRELY UNAIDED'. Must have been damned badly cooked. The Daily News has something on Windham, but not enough.
Page me40.247
Kindest regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.247
My health is good. The sores have all been healed for the last 6 weeks. Heckscher is very satisfied with the way the thing is progressing, but he's still limiting what I eat and drink — not so much in quantity as in kind.

Page Break me40.248

Page me40.248
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

129
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.248
[Manchester,] 15 January 1858

Dear Marx,
Judging by the enclosed letter from Harney, it seems most doubtful whether Schramm is still alive. I wrote to Harney straight away. As soon as I hear anything further I shall let you know.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.248
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

130
MARX TO ENGELS†266
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.248
[London,] 16 January 1858

Dear Frederick,

You, too, will have had a letter from Harney about friend Schramm. There was no prospect of recovery. A pity, though, that money worries — for which the fat London philistine†a is to blame — should have clouded his last days.

Page Break me40.249
Page me40.249

Your article†a is SPLENDID and IN STYLE and MANNER altogether reminiscent of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in its heyday. As for Windham, he may be a very bad general, but on this occasion the man was undone by what was the making of him at the Redan†267 — unseasoned troops. I am generally of the opinion that in terms of bravery, self-reliance and STEADINESS this, the second army England has committed to India (and of which not a man will return), will not be able to hold a candle to the first, which seems to have dwindled away almost entirely. As regards the effect of the climate on the troops, while temporarily in charge of the military DEPARTMENT I showed in various articles by exact calculations that mortality was DISPROPORTIONATELY higher than stated in the official English despatches.†268 In view of the DRAIN OF MEN and BULLION which she will cost the English, India is now our best ally.
Page me40.249

On Monday I shall again visit the Museum,†b after which I shall send you 'Catapult' — along with the other stuff you ask for — drawn from the best sources. I have not done 'Coehoorn', as it would have taken me too much time to unearth the correct sources.
Page me40.249

I am EXCEEDINGLY glad to learn that your health is progressing WELL. For the past 3 weeks I, too, have again been dosing myself and only stopped doing so today. I had been overdoing very much my nocturnal labours, accompanied, it is true, by mere lemonade on the one hand, but AN IMMENSE DEAL OF TOBACCO on the other. I am, by the way, discovering some nice arguments.†250 E.g. I have completely demolished the theory of profit as hitherto propounded. What was of great use to me as regards method of treatment was Hegel's Logic at which I had taken another look BY MERE ACCIDENT, Freiligrath having found and made me a present of several volumes of Hegel, originally the property of Bakunin. If ever the time comes when such work is again possible, I should very much like to write 2 or 3 sheets making accessible to the common reader the rational aspect of the method which Hegel not only discovered but also mystified.

Page me40.249

Of all recent economists, Monsieur Bastiat with his Harmonies économiques represents the very dregs of fatuity at their most concentrated. Only a crapaud†81 could have concocted an harmonious pot-au-feu†c of this kind.

Page me40.249

What do you think of our friend Jones†245? I still refuse to believe that the chap has sold himself. Perhaps his experience of 1848 lies heavy on his stomach. So great is his faith in himself that he may think himself capable of exploiting the MIDDLE CLASS or imagine that if only, ONE WAY OR THE OTHER, Ernest Jones could be got into Parliament, world history could not fail to take A NEW TURN. The best of it all is that — out of SPITE against Jones, OF COURSE — Reynolds is now posing in his paper†a as the most rabid opponent of the MIDDLE CLASS and of all compromise. Mr B. O'Brien has likewise become an IRREPRESSIBLE CHARTIST AT ANY PRICE. Jones' only excuse is the enervation now rampant among the working class in England. However that may be, if he goes on as at present he will become either DUPE of the MIDDLE CLASS or RENEGADE. The FACT that he should now seek to avoid me as anxiously as he once used to consult me over the merest trifle is evidence of anything but a good conscience.

Page Break me40.250

Page me40.250

Herewith a letter for Lupus from Laura and Jenny. The two GIRLS naturally imagine that you might take umbrage at Lupus appearing to be preferred as a correspondent. Hence they have earnestly admonished me not to forget to tell you THAT YOURS SHALL BE THE NEXT TURN.

Page me40.250

I shall wait another 3 weeks until the situation has pretty well come to a head and then write to Mr Dana saying that I cannot go on working for the Tribune if I'm restricted to 4 articles a month, and that 6 is the minimum. In fact I am now invariably obliged to compress into 1 article sufficient material for 2, and hence am doing double the work for HALF THE PRICE. THIS WILL NEVER DO.

Page me40.250

Did you enclose Lassalle's and Friedländer's letters†b in the one about Lassalle†260 which went astray? For political reasons, it would be desirable to preserve them.

Page me40.250

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.250
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.251

131
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.251
[London,] 23 January 1858

Dear Engels,

I have received: 1. Copies of the Guardian; 2. C ('Carabine', etc.†269). You have not told me whether you got my letter, together with an enclosure for Lupus, sent off a week ago today.†a

Page me40.251

Herewith a letter from Dana which you must return as it has not yet been answered. One disagreeable consequence so far as I am concerned is that I am already considerably in the fellows' debt, having miscalculated what was due to me and drawn a further amount after sending off 'Cannon'.†235 The PAY, by the by, isn't even A PENNY THE LINE.

Page me40.251

As regards the new B articles Dana is asking for — and for me the main thing is to pay off as quickly as possible what I have overdrawn on Appleton, otherwise I shall be unable to draw anything on the Tribune and hence be stone broke — they are, with one exception, taken from the list you drew up. As regards that one exception — 'THE HISTORY OF THE BENGAL REBELLION' — I suggest the most appropriate course would be tell Dana straight out it can't be done. How get hold of the sources at such short notice? Since it 'SHALL BE SENT AT ONCE' and must be 'AS BRIEF AS POSSIBLE', the work involved would be out of all proportion to the PAY and it would simply prevent us from getting on with the other articles. What is your opinion? The military side is the more important, but it seems to me that the whole, whether military or political, has not yet reached the stage where it could be 'sent AT ONCE'.

Page me40.251

I cannot recall the MISTAKE IN [THE] BATTLE OF 'ALBUERA' to which Dana refers.†270

Page me40.251
Freiligrath writes to say that the great Ernst Dronke has arrived in London from Paris, having left the latter place for the first time on account of the attempted assassination.†271
Page me40.251
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.252
Page me40.252
There were some nice things from the Paris correspondent in The Manchester Guardian you sent me. How is business in Manchester? Everything seems to be going better than expected.

Page me40.252
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

132
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.252
Manchester, 25 January 1858

Dear Marx,
The letters have all arrived safely. It will be utterly impossible to do the BENGAL REBELLION in the time stipulated and I would advise you, while you are about it, to point out to Mr Dana that, had he been more prompt in agreeing to our proposals and the list we sent him, he would have had all these articles long ago. He can perfectly well fit in BENGAL REBELLION as HINDUSTAN REBELLION or something of the sort.†272 As to the alleged howler,†270 I can't look into it this moment, there being no time, but shall do so tomorrow. The item was taken from Brockhaus,†a so it will probably be correct.
Page me40.252
Lassalle's letter is still up here.
Page me40.252
I have the material ready for 'Blenheim', 'Borodino' and many more and you will be receiving a LOT on Friday, provided the Indian MAIL doesn't necessitate my doing an article, which seems unlikely judging by the telegraphic despatch. I shall have to look up 'Bidassoa', etc. But what is all this about Dana saying he had already asked for these articles? It's the first I've heard of it.

Page me40.252
Harney will have written to tell you that poor Schramm died a week ago on Friday. I have no details yet. I wrote and asked

Page Break me40.253
Harney,†273 should he find anything in your handwriting or mine, to take it away and hold it at our disposal — it would be too bad if anything of that kind were allowed to fall into the hands of Mr Rudolf,†a who has become an out-and-out Prussian. I had not thought Schramm would have any serious attacks before the spring. The poor fellow was putting up a splendid fight against the disease while I was there and, from what I hear, continued to do so until the end. Our old guard is rapidly dwindling away during this long spell of peace!
Page me40.253
Business here is very shaky. Every fortnight an attempt is made to push up cotton prices, the moment chosen being when a few spinners have to buy. It succeeds for three or four days and then prices fall again. Generally speaking we are now 5/8d above the lowest point. It's much the same with ourselves. As soon as prices become thoroughly depressed as a result of a fortnight's stagnation, the Indian and Levantine buyers step into the market and force everything up; after that no one wants to buy and prices gradually fall again. Everything is still far from normal. The spinners are going on to full time, not because there is any real demand, but because others are doing so and because they're heartily sick of SHORT TIME. On the whole the spinners' position has deteriorated because the difference in price between raw cotton and yarn has diminished. The Germans are still buying very little. Prospects here are far from brilliant; every day trade suffers a CHECK because of attempts to force up prices and, if that doesn't happen, they say that THERE IS AN IMPROVED FEELING IN THE MARKET. IMPROVED BE DAMNED!
Page me40.253
The enclosure for Lupus was a source of great pride and joy to the old man.†b He sends his warmest regards to the writers. By the way I hardly saw him at all last week; we kept missing one another and later he had a slight touch of tic douloureux.†c
Page me40.253
Warm regards to the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.253
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.254

133
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.254
Manchester, 28 January 1858

Dear Moor,

Herewith 3 B articles.†274 I had meant, if possible, to do Windham†a as well today, but in the first place the PARTICULARS are still very confused and it is absolutely essential to wait for the official report on the affair, for hitherto everything has been glossed over; and, secondly, I had no time this afternoon, was barely able to look over the 3 articles. Also, I have too bad a cold to risk going into town at midnight to post the letter. Tell Dana that the material is still incomplete.
Page me40.254

Have you sent Dana my C list? If not, do so now so that he can reply in good time. Once again his C is LUDICROUSLY INCOMPLETE.
Page me40.254

Unfortunately I couldn't make 'Borodino' any shorter since all previous accounts of the battle have been quite wrong.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.254
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

134
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.254
[London,] 28 January [1858]
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

DEAR Frederick,

The freezing weather which has set in here and the real shortage of coal in this house compels me — although there's nothing in the world I loathe more — to impose on you again. I have brought myself to do so only after HEAVY PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT. My wife has pointed out to me that you had miscalculated through having sent a remittance from Jersey earlier than usual, and hence would not send anything this month unless I wrote expressly; that she had pawned her SHAWL, etc., etc., and was at a loss where to turn. In short, I must write, which is why I am doing so. Indeed, if these conditions persist, I'd sooner be miles under the ground than go on scraping along in this way. Always to be a burden on others while constantly tormented oneself by beastly trifles becomes unbearable in the long run. I personally can bury myself in my work and escape the misére by devoting my attention to universalities. My wife, OF COURSE, has no such refuge, etc., etc.

Page Break me40.255
Page me40.255
Lassalle's book arrived today†a; it cost 2/ — not the book, but the carriage. This circumstance ensured it a bad reception. 2 volumes of 30 sheets EACH. Have no more than squinted at it. In his preface the fellow deludes readers into believing that he has been gestating it since 1846. Seems altogether Old Hegelian. Very possibly the legal tradition of hermeneutics came in useful for the interpretation and comparison of passages. Nous verrons,†b though the thing's too bulky to be read from cover to cover.
Page me40.255
I have also heard from Mr Pieper. He imparts the interesting secret that, while here, he was suffering from 'abdominal difficulties' and hence 'may' have seemed a bore.
Page me40.255
The Orsini, etc., conspiracy†271 might well put paid to the Prussian amnesty.†275 The day before yesterday the police here forced their way into Orsini's rooms at midnight, and INVEIGLED his maid†c into accompanying them to Scotland Yard, where she was interrogated by Mr Richard Mayne and some French mouchards.†d This escapade, besides compromising Mr Pam, failed in its purpose even more lamentably in that Martin Bernard has taken possession of all letters addressed to Orsini in London since the latter's arrest, Orsini himself having burned all the rest before leaving here.
Page me40.255
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.255
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.256

135
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.256
[London,] 29 January 1858

DEAR Frederick,

The 3 B articles received.†a It's excellent that you should have made 'Borodino' longer. Since the fellows' columns are so IMMENSE and their PAY so bad, the only remedy is to lengthen the articles. I hope that when you come to do 'Cavalry' you will spin it out as much as possible so that I can get rid of my DEBTS to those curs.
Page me40.256

In France things are splendid. The COOLNESS with which the épiciers†b responded to the news of the attempted assassination†271 has exasperated the fellow.†c The secret of this indifference of the épiciers is doubtless the unspoken desire of many of them that some sudden political event should get them out of their mess. The majority of the laddies had had their bills renewed by the Bank, Discount Association, etc., which were acting on the ORDERS of Boustrapa.†40 However, to put off is not to write off. A large number of French bourgeois, with commercial ruin staring them in the face, are anxiously awaiting the day of reckoning. They now find themselves in much the same STATE as Boustrapa before the coup d'état.†276 ANY POLITICAL PRETEXT FOR MAKING AN HONOURABLE EXIT WILL, CONSEQUENTLY, BE EAGERLY SEIZED UPON BY THE DAMNED FELLOWS — just as it was 10 years ago. Boustrapa knows this and now wishes to act the real 'despot'. Nous verrons.†d If he pins his faith on Magnan, Castellane, etc., he will be left high and dry.†277
Page me40.256

In my economic work†250 I have now reached a point at which I could do with some information on practical matters from you, since nothing of the kind is to be found in theoretical writings. I mean, the circulation of capital — how it varies in various kinds of business; the effect of the same on profit and prices. If you can provide me with any information on the subject, it would be VERY welcome.
Page me40.256

Mr Lassalle, in his preface to Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos, says inter alia:

'All but a small part of the same' (the book) 'was completed early in 1846, and I was on the point of putting the concluding touches to it when suddenly an interest of a different kind — how true in every respect is Sophocles' dictum:

Page Break me40.257
“pollapolla tata deiuadeiua, koudeukoudeu auqrwpouauthröpou deiuoteroudeiuoterou peleipelei”†a — precipitated me into a welter of practical strife and prevented me over a period of nearly 10 years from devoting myself to the completion of this work.'

Page me40.257

Do you suppose that Sophocles' verse, put into German by Lassalle, means: 'There's no more frightful specimen of humankind than the Countess Hatzfeldt!'†35

Page me40.257

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.257

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

136

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.257

Manchester, 30 January 1858

Dear Marx,

Your two letters arrived together this morning. I enclose a fiver; unfortunately I'm very tight for money myself and Schramm touched me for five pounds at the beginning of January — in the circumstances there was absolutely no question of refusing, but in consequence I was even more broke. 'Windham'†b will be ready for Tuesday.

Page me40.257

Apropos, would you send me another copy of the B articles Dana asked for (both the original ones and those subsequently ordered) as I have mislaid mine.

Page me40.257

How goes it with 'Camp', 'Catapults' and 'Caps' (Percussion)?†263

Page me40.257

Well, the would-be assassins†271 may not have bagged Bonaparte, but they caught K. Heinzen all right. You will recall his bloodthirsty threats of destruction in 1848 and his big talk about the deadly weapons of modern science concerning which he, of course, knew nothing. Kossuth is a great man, but Kossuth forgot fulminating silver, etc. Eh bien,†a after this business we shall hear no more of fulminating silver. I said at once, judging by the appalling number of injured and relatively few dead, that the bombs had been overfilled and had therefore burst into a mass of small splinters, none of which had much force. The asses went about it with more stupidity than cunning. With a filling of ordinary powder the bombs would inevitably have had a much greater effect. Instead they cram in as much fulminating mercury as the things will hold, thereby producing a hail of small, relatively innocuous splinters. Dr Larrey confirms my view. So MUCH FOR Heinzen.

Page Break me40.258

Page me40.258

On the 21st courant†b there was another attempt on Bonaparte's life in the Bois de Boulogne, with a pistol; the fellow was arrested before he could pull the trigger. The affair has been hushed up. As soon as I can dispense with the relevant Guardian you shall have it.
Page me40.258

I shall send for Charras' Cent jours.†c Mightn't we go in for literary criticism in America? An article on the subject would certainly be interesting and not difficult to do.
Page me40.258

Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.258
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

137
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.258
[London,] 1 February 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Frederick,

£5 arrived. The simultaneous arrival of two letters, of which I sent off one on Thursday, the other on Friday, would seem to indicate that refugees' letters are being held back, examined, etc., by the Post Office.

Page Break me40.259

Page me40.259

New B's are: 'Bidassoa' (BATTLE OF), 'Blenheim' (ditto), 'Burmah' (WAR IN), 'Bomarsund' (SIEGE), 'Borodino' (BATTLE), 'Brescia' (ASSAULT), 'Bridge-head', 'Bülow', 'Buda' (SIEGE OF), 'Beresford', 'Berme'.†a When Dana says, 'MOST OF THEM I ASKED YOU BEFORE', he is mistaken, and is confusing your list of B's with his own. All he himself ordered was:

Page me40.259

'Barbette', 'Bastion', 'Bayonet', 'Barclay de Tolly', 'Battery', 'Battle', 'Bem', 'Bennigsen', 'Berthier', 'Bernadotte', 'Bessiéres', 'Bivouac', 'Blindage', 'Blücher', 'Blum', 'Bolivar', 'Bomb', 'Bombardier', 'Bombardment', 'Bomb (Ketch, Proof, Vessel)', 'Bonnet', 'Bosquet', 'Bourrienne', 'Bridge' (pontoon), Brown (Sir George), 'Brune', 'Bugeaud'.†a (The ass has received the lot.)

Page me40.259

I have done 'Catapult' for you (not very much). Likewise the better part of 'Castrum'†b (but I still have to look up Greek camps in Wachsmuth, Hellenische Alterthumskunde, and Jewish in de Wette†c). It's a lengthy business where PERCUSSION CAPS†263 are concerned because there are so many different types of gun-locks, etc., to be listed. I'd have already finished the job if it hadn't been for the new order from Dana. I'll send you all the rubbish at the same time. Besides, whenever I'm at the Museum,†d there's such a LOT of stuff to look up that it's closing-time (now 4 o'clock) before I've so much as looked round. Then there's the journey there. So much time lost.

Page me40.259

Heraclitus, the Dark Philosopher by Lassalle the Luminous One is, au fond,†e a very silly concoction. Every time Heraclitus uses an image to demonstrate the unity of AFFIRMATION and NEGATION — and this is often — IN STEPS Lassalle and makes the most of the occasion by treating us to some passage from Hegel's Logic which is HARDLY improved in the process; always at great length too, like a schoolboy who must show in his essay that he has thoroughly understood his 'essence' and 'appearance' as well as the 'dialectical process'. Once he has got this into his speculative noddle, one may be sure that the schoolboy will nevertheless be able to carry out the process of ratiocination only in strict accord with the prescribed formula and the formes sacramentales.†f Just so our Lassalle. The fellow seems to have tried to puzzle out Hegelian logic via Heraclitus, nor ever to have tired of beginning the process all over again. As for learning, there is a tremendous display of it. But, as any well-informed person will know, provided one has the time and the money and, like Mr Lassalle, can have Bonn University Library delivered ad libitum to one's home, it is easy enough to assemble such an array of quotations. One can see what an amazing swell the fellow himself thinks he is in this philological finery, and how he moves with all the grace of a man wearing FASHIONABLE DRESS for the first time in his life. Since most philologists are not possessed of the speculative thinking dominant in Heraclitus, every Hegelian has the incontestable advantage of understanding what the philologist does not. (It would, by the by, be strange indeed if, by learning Greek, a fellow were to become a philosopher in Greek without being one in German.) Instead of simply taking this for granted, Mr Lassalle proceeds to lecture us in a quasi-Lessingian manner. In long-winded, lawyer's style he vindicates the Hegelian interpretation as opposed to the erroneous exegeses of the philologists — erroneous for want of specialised knowledge. Thus we are accorded the twofold gratification, first, of having dialectical matters which we had all but forgotten expounded to us at considerable length and, secondly, of seeing this 'speculative heritage' vindicated (qua special province of Mr Lassalle's philological-jurisprudential astuteness and erudition) vis-á-vis the unspeculative philologists. Despite the fellow's claim, by the way, that hitherto Heraclitus has been a book with 7 seals, he has to all intents and purposes added nothing whatever that is new to what Hegel says in the History of Philosophy.†a All he does is to enlarge on points of detail which could, of course, have been accomplished quite adequately in two sheets of print. Still less does it occur to the laddie to come out with any critical reflections on dialectics as such. If all the fragments by Heraclitus were put together in print, they would HARDLY fill half a sheet. Only a chap who brings out his books at the expense of the frightful 'specimen of humankind'†b can presume to launch upon the world 2 volumes of 60 sheets on such a pretext.

Page Break me40.260

Page me40.260

Heraclitus, the Dark Philosopher, is quoted as saying in an attempt to elucidate the transformation of all things into their opposite: 'Thus gold changeth into all things, and all things change into gold.' Here, Lassalle says, gold means money (c'est juste†c) and money is value.†d Thus the Ideal, Universality, the One (value), and things, the Real, Particularity, the Many. He makes use of this surprising insight to give, in a lengthy note, AN EARNEST OF HIS

Page Break me40.261

DISCOVERIES IN THE SCIENCE OF POLITICAL ECONOMY. Every other word a howler, but set forth with remarkable pretentiousness. It is plain to me from this one note that, in his second grand opus, the fellow intends to expound political economy in the manner of Hegel.†278 He will discover to his cost that it is one thing for a critique to take a science to the point at which it admits of a dialectical presentation, and quite another to apply an abstract, ready-made system of logic to vague presentiments of just such a system.

Page me40.261

But, as I remarked immediately after receipt of his first self-complacent letter, the Old Hegelians and philologists must indeed have been PLEASED to discover such old-fashioned virtues in a young man who passes for a great revolutionary.†a On top of that, he bows and scrapes to all and sundry in the hope of assuring himself a favourable reception. As soon as I've skimmed through the stuff, I'll send it too.

Page me40.261

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.261

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

138
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.261
Manchester, 8 February 1858

Dear Moor,

At times last week I wasn't well. There would seem to be some slight vestige of my former complaint which, though too mild to take a serious hold, plagues me with all kinds of little miseries — a peculiarly sensitive skin, cuts slow to heal, abscesses on the fingers, and similar boring and idiotic things. Fortunately there is no longer any sign at all of septic glands, so I have nothing to fear on that score. These little miseries crop up whenever I have a cold, and will doubtless continue to bother me off and on until I go to bathe in the sea again. Pending that I shall, at any rate, have to be careful. My piles, by the way, which have become something of a problem since I got back, act as a diversion; this may help at the time, but makes sitting impossible for the next day or two, except on horseback. Hence my silence last week and the dearth of contributions since Monday. Most evenings I could only lie down. However my cold is now SUBSIDING — so much so that yesterday I was again able to ride 28 miles, which means we shall be able to pitch in again tomorrow.

Page Break me40.262
Page me40.262

Au fond†a Mr Lassalle doesn't seem to have taken much trouble over the dark Heraclitus. Lupus was much amused by your description of his method; it gave him some satisfaction to learn that Greek scholarship is not this gentleman's forte. When the book†b arrives I shall let him study it.
Page me40.262

Today friend Belfield again presented himself for election to the city council and suffered a resounding defeat. 196 votes against 143 in his favour.
Page me40.262

I still have a few Guardians at home with some nice reports from Paris and shall send them to you in the next few days.
Page me40.262

Warm regards to the FAMILY. There'll be some more Cyclopaedia stuff for Friday.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.262
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

139
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.262
[London,] 10 February [1858]

Dear Engels,
That ass Dana (in a letter which I shall send you later and in which he leaves it UNDECIDED WHETHER OR NOT to honour the bill I drew at the end of December) writes inter alia: 'In the article ”Artillery” in speaking of the equipment of the Prussian army, you use the words seam-horses; what are they? I do not find them in any dictionary.' Answer by return, so that I can write to the ass about it on Friday.

Page Break me40.263
Page me40.263
I suspected that all was not quite well with you. You really must take care of yourself. You've been overdoing things during the Manchester 'period of Sturm und Drang'.†279 More soon.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.263
Did Harney DEAR send you also his Independent†a NONSENSE? Who do you suppose concocted Schramm's life story? Harney makes out that THE CELEBRATED POET Freiligrath — alongside whom Engels ESQ. looks odd — was the publisher of the Revue der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung.†b

Page me40.263
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

140
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.263
Manchester, 11 February 1858

Dear Moor,

Dana can't read — the word is TEAM-HORSES, i.e. THE HORSES HARNESSED TO ANY GUN OR CARRIAGE IN ORDER TO DRAW IT. The expression 'TEAM' crops up frequently elsewhere in the article†c and if he wants an authority let him look up the article on 'Artillery' in the Encyclopaedia Britannica.
Page me40.263

Unfortunately I can't send you anything today. Yesterday I let myself be talked into attending a COURSING MEETING at which hares are hunted with greyhounds, and spent 7 hours in the saddle. All in all, it did me a power of good though it kept me from my work, and I haven't got far enough with the stuff I've begun — 'Burmah', etc., etc. — to have a hope of getting it ready in time for tonight. It's sickening to read long works on 'Burmah', yet be unable to make a decent job of the thing, AS IT MUST BE PRETTY SHORT. But I shall have my revenge with 'Cavalry'. Dana will be getting Griesheim†a in toto in so far as it applies.

Page Break me40.264
Page me40.264

Lupus has apparently retired from the world of pubs. During 4 visits to the Chatsworth, his regular haunt, I only ran into him once. Since I only go there on his account, it has been a great waste of time and something will have to be done about it.
Page me40.264

I too have been sent Harney DEAR'S rubbish.†b For this Harro Harring, who lives in Jersey (though I never saw him), must take the chief blame. The description of Krefeld is killing. Real vintage Harney. He has turned Schramm's death into yet another great melodramatic spectacle, the principal role being played by G.J.H.†c of course. The whole affair, funeral and all, his letters headed HASTE! IMMEDIATE!, etc., and then the presumption of asking me to come to Jersey to figure among the crapauds†81 and Waschlapskis†d — I find the whole affair repugnant. He's a rotten little blighter and Jersey is just the right place for him; moreover he is absolutely delighted at having involved his paper in a libel action brought by François Godfrey, Jersey's feudal lord.†237
Page me40.264

The 'Engels ESQ' certainly does look very odd. I ought never to forgive Harney, if only because the best he has to say of me boils down to Esq. Grosse bête!†e
Page me40.264

Jones, too, is evidently up to some pretty tricks. The obese Livesay, whom he appointed CHAIRMAN of his conference,†245 is a wretched little bourgeois who swears by Miall and who, in company with Sturge & Co., engineered the COMPLETE SUFFRAGE SECESSION as long ago as 1842 when all the petty bourgeois withdrew.†280
Page me40.264
But NEVER MIND. Mr Bonaparte travaille pour nous.†f The way he is running things, we couldn't possibly ask for anything better. Espinasse, Minister of the Interior! THAT BEATS COCK FIGHTING. And on top of that, the idiocy of publishing those addresses.†281

Page Break me40.265
Page me40.265
By the way, so that you don't start getting wrong ideas about my physical condition, let me tell you that yesterday I took my horse over a hedge and bank measuring 5 feet and some inches, the highest jump I've ever done. Clearly, EFFORTS of this kind presuppose moderately sound limbs if they are to be made without discomfort. After all, we want to show the Prussian cavalry a thing or two when we get back to Germany. The gentlemen will find it difficult to keep up with me for I've already had a great deal of practice and am improving every day. I'm getting quite a reputation, as time goes on. But only now am I getting to grips with the real problems of riding over difficult country; it's a highly complicated business.
Page me40.265
Kind regards to your wife and children. A few articles at any rate will arrive by Monday. As regards India I think we might wait for one more mail, unless anything of real interest crops up.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.265
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

141
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.265
[London,] 14 February 1858

Dear Engels,

You had promised to send me the Guardian. I was therefore expecting to get it today since France is now the only possible topic for reports and the fellows prefer a few gossipy anecdotes to ANY AMOUNT OF IDEAS. I assume the numbers you promised me will arrive tomorrow but would most urgently beg that in future you always let me have the things for Thursday or for Friday at the latest. After the appointed day they are, OF COURSE, no longer of any use to me for my reports.

Page me40.265

For 3 days I shall now be on tenterhooks until I know whether or not my bill, which does not appear to have been despatched from here until several weeks AFTER ITS DRAWING, has been honoured. At very best I shan't be able to draw anything more on the Tribune against the articles I have sent in until the matter with Appleton is SETTLED.†a My estimate of the value of the last goods despatched to him was badly out. Moreover, a longish article on 'Bolivar'†b elicited objections from Dana because, he said, it is written IN A PARTISAN STYLE and he asked me to cite my AUTHORITIES. This I can, of course, do, although it's a singular demand. As regards the PARTISAN STYLE, it is true that I departed somewhat from the tone of a cyclopaedia. To see the most dastardly, most miserable and meanest of blackguards described as Napoleon I was altogether too much. Bolivar is a veritable Soulouque.†282

Page Break me40.266

Page me40.266

I CONGRATULATE YOU UPON YOUR EQUESTRIAN PERFORMANCES. Only don't take too many breakneck jumps, as there will soon be more important occasion for risking your neck. You seem TO RIDE SOMEWHAT HARD THIS HOBBY-HORSE. In any case I don't believe that the CAVALRY is the speciality in which you will be of the greatest service to Germany. I would venture another little objection, viz. whether OVER-EXERTION IN ANY LINE is compatible with your health. Aurea mediocritas†c in all types of exertion, or so at least a doctor assures me, should remain the norm for you for some time yet.

Page me40.266

The Bonaparte affair†271 had indeed put a sorry end to the proposed Prussian amnesty.†275 Louis, by the way, is merely aping his putative uncle.†283 He is, in fact, not only Napoléon le Petit (in Victor Hugo's sense†d as opposed to Napoléon le Grand) but he PERSONATES IN A MOST ADMIRABLE WAY THE LITTLENESS of the great Napoleon. I have looked up Cobbett for 1802-03 where I discover that the 'DEN OF ASSASSINS' AND ALL THAT LITERALLY appeared in the Moniteur of that time.†284 Inter alia, the Moniteur of 9 August 1802 declares word for word:

'Either the English government authorises and tolerates these public and private crimes, in which case it cannot be said that such conduct is consistent with British generosity, civilisation, and honour; or it cannot prevent them, in which case it does not deserve the name of government; above all, if it does not possess the means of repressing assassination and calumny and protecting social order.'†e

Page me40.266
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.267
Page me40.267
If you haven't yet sent off the back numbers of the Guardian, try and let me have them by Monday, and the next ones by Friday.

Page me40.267
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

142
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.267
[Manchester,] 18 February 1858

Dear Moor,
Every day this week I have meant to write to you, and every day the steady rise in prices has stopped me from doing so. You will remember my telling you†a that 6d for Middling Orleans was the highest price compatible with FULL TIME. Now, with Middling Orleans at 5 3/4d, 7/8 of all spinners have gone on to FULL TIME, and the result of this asininity is that, out of sheer impatience, they've pushed Middling Orleans up to 7 3/4d in 6 weeks! Yarn and cloth haven't followed in the same proportion, of course; the manufacturer's MARGIN between the price of his raw material and the finished product has been reduced to below cost price and now the asses want to revert to SHORT TIME, which they ought never to have abandoned!
Page me40.267
The Guardians will go off today at the same time.
Page me40.267
I trust that your bill has been honoured. Since you had in any case advised them so long in advance, they should certainly have told you long ago had there been any intention of returning it.
Page me40.267
Enclosed another little thing for Dana.†285 If the fellow wants to lay down the law on the strength of his paltry 2 dollars, then he deserves some rough words. At all events he can't expect more than we are already providing — largely original work instead of the measly compilations he is getting from elsewhere. Urge him to pay better and que puis nous verrions.†b As regards Badajos,†270 the wretched Brockhaus†c really led me astray.

Page Break me40.268
Page me40.268

'Burmah' is A VERY LABORIOUS ARTICLE. Could you not take over 'Bülow' and 'Beresford'? Up here even the bare bones of the biographies are lacking, but I could let you have the chief points on the military side.

Page me40.268

I shall discuss equitation another time. Au fond†a the thing is the material basis for all my military studies, as you know. The crapauds†81 regard the sordid Bonaparte as a hero because he sits elegantly on a horse though only a passable rider; there are plenty of witnesses over here who know that he is A VERY INDIFFERENT FENCER†b and that he shirks many an obstacle which YOUR HUMBLE SERVANT would tackle without a second thought. Moreover riding is the only physical accomplishment in which I have acquired a modicum of competence and anyway the element of danger in hunting and jumping is so small (probability 1:10,000) that it has an irresistible attraction. Anyway, sois tranquille,†c if I break my neck it won't be by falling off a horse. Warm regards to all the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.268
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

143
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†286
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me40.268
London, 22 February 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Nutt has now sent me Heraclitus.†d As soon as I have read it all I shall let you have my opinion. But you will have to wait a while since I have exceptionally little spare time just now. As regards the Stoics, I did not myself study their relationship to Heraclitus in the matter of natural philosophy, because of the novice-like earnestness of their approach to this discipline. Of Epicurus, on the other hand, it can be shown en détail that, although he bases himself on the natural philosophy of Democritus, he is for ever turning the argument inside out. Cicero and Plutarch can hardly be blamed for not having grasped this since it has eluded even men of intellect such as Bayle, not to speak of Hegel ipsissimus.†a Nor, for that matter, could one expect Hegel, the first to comprehend the entire history of philosophy, not to commit errors of detail.

Page Break me40.269
Page me40.269
From the papers you will have seen that Palmerston has fallen. Those best acquainted with the old rascal are generally inclined to suspect that his last BLUNDERS were deliberate, so that he could make his exit pro tempore. They affirm that le dernier but de toute sa vie†b was to engineer a war between England and France, that he now believes he has managed to do so, that at first other hands are to be concerned with the execution of his plan and that, when the imbroglio has become sufficiently involved and is far enough advanced, THE NATION WILL BE FORCED TO CALL AGAIN UPON HIM. This latter opinion may be too recherché, but that Pam did not resign in any way against his will seems to me unquestionable.
Page me40.269
Now, as to your cousin,†c there's one thing I am willing to do, but the Presse, I assume, would not.†254 All I could commit myself to would be one article a week on trade, finance, etc., in any one of the three countries, England, France and the United States of America, depending on which is INTERESTING. This is also the most practicable form in which to attack Bonaparte. It is also a form which would permit me to have absolutely nothing to do with the Presse politically. It seems to me that just now there is widespread ignorance, especially about French financial affairs and French economic conditions in general. The question is whether the subject will be of sufficient interest to the Presse, or RATHER, to its readers. They, of course, must be the best judges of that. For a weekly article of this kind I would ask £1 STERLING. Moreover, it would be necessary for me to have a few copies of the Presse beforehand so that I could see whether MY PRINCIPLES would at all permit me to work for the paper. HOWEVER THAT MAY BE, will you thank your cousin on my behalf for having remembered me in this connection.

Page Break me40.270
Page me40.270
Now let me tell you how my political economy†250 is getting on. I have IN FACT been at work on the final stages for some months. But the thing is proceeding very slowly because no sooner does one set about finally disposing of subjects to which one has devoted years of study than they start revealing new aspects and demand to be thought out further. On top of which I am not master of my time but RATHER its slave. Only the nights are left for my own work, which in turn is often disrupted by bilious attacks or recurrences of liver trouble. All things considered it would be most convenient for me to bring out the whole work in instalments without any rigid datelines. This might also have the advantage of making it easier to find a publisher, since less working capital would be tied up in the venture. You would, OF COURSE, oblige me by trying to find someone in Berlin prepared to undertake this. By 'instalments', I mean fascicles similar to those in which Vischer's Aesthetik came out.

Page me40.270

The work I am presently concerned with is a Critique of Economic Categories or, IF YOU LIKE, a critical exposé of the system of the bourgeois economy. It is at once an exposé and, by the same token, a critique of the system. I have very little idea how many sheets the whole thing will amount to. Had I the means, the time and the leisure to finish the whole thing off completely prior to placing it before the public, I would condense it a great deal, a method for which I have always had a predilection. But printed thus, in successive instalments — easier for readers to understand perhaps but certainly detrimental to the form — it is bound to be rather more diffuse. Nota bene: As soon as you know definitely whether or not the thing can be done in Berlin, kindly write to me, since if it's no go there I'll try Hamburg. A further point is that I must be paid by the publisher who takes the thing on — a stipulation over which it might come to grief in Berlin.
Page me40.270

The presentation — the manner of it, I mean — is entirely scientific, hence unobjectionable to the police in the ordinary sense. The whole is divided into 6 books: 1. On Capital (contains a few introductory CHAPTERS). 2. On Landed Property. 3. On Wage Labour. 4. On the State. 5. International Trade. 6. World Market. I cannot, of course, avoid all critical consideration of other economists, in particular a polemic against Ricardo in as much as even he, qua bourgeois, cannot but commit blunders even from a strictly economic viewpoint. But generally speaking the critique and history of political economy and socialism would form the subject of another work, and, finally, the short historical outline of the development of economic categories and relations yet a third. Now that I am at last ready to set to work after 15 years of study, I have an uncomfortable feeling that turbulent movements from without will probably INTERFERE AFTER ALL. NEVER MIND. If I finish too late and thus find the world no longer attentive to such subjects, the fault is clearly MY OWN.

Page Break me40.271
Page me40.271

I was greatly amused by your remarks about Rudolf Schramm.†a Sad to say, a worthier Schramm, Conrad, brother of the above and one of my best friends, died of consumption in Jersey some 4 weeks ago. The death within the past few years of Weerth, Schramm and Dr Daniels has been a blow to their friends, amongst whom I was happy enough to count myself.
Page me40.271

There are turbulent times in the offing. If I were merely to consult my own private inclinations, I would wish for another few years of superficial calm. There could, at any rate, be no better time for scholarly undertakings and, after all, what has happened over the last ten years must have increased any RATIONAL BEING'S contempt for the masses as for individuals to such a degree that 'odi profanum vulgus et arceo'†b has almost become an inescapable maxim. However all these are themselves philistine ruminations which will be swept away by the first storm.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.271
The connection between the latest events in France†271 and the commercial crisis is, perhaps, apparent only to a few. It becomes EVIDENT, however, if one considers 1. THE REAL ECONOMICAL STATE PRODUCED IN FRANCE BY THE LAST CRISIS; 2. asks oneself and consciencieusement†c answers, why the attempted assassination brought forth the effects it did, effects which APPARENTLY STOOD IN NO PROPORTION WHATEVER, AND EVEN IN NO NECESSARY RELATION TO THE ALLEGED CAUSE.

Page me40.271
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me40.272

144
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.272
[London,] 22 February 1858

Dear Engels,
Herewith a letter from Lassalle, INTERESTING on account of the bit about Rudolf Schramm. What the chap says about my 'logic' amounts to nothing more than a refusal to understand me. All I did was simplement inform him that I hadn't written to him because MATTERS HAD COME TO A POINT at which a verbal explanation was necessary if written INTERCOURSE were to continue. IN FACT I had DONE this ticklish PASSAGE IN A VERY DIPLOMATICAL STYLE.†a
Page me40.272
In my reply I asked him, of course, to look round for a publisher in Berlin. It is my intention to bring the thing out by instalments,†b having neither the time nor the means to complete the whole of it at leisure. This initial form may be detrimental to the form. Better for distribution, at any rate. Also makes it easier to find a publisher.
Page me40.272
As for the lousy Yankees nothing, of course, could have given me greater pleasure than to write and tell Messrs Dana and Appleton to —. But the STATE OF AFFAIRS IS SIMPLY THIS:

Page me40.272

I had overdrawn £20 on Appleton. According to my reckoning, the amount overdrawn was at most £5. However I had no alternative, since some accounts which were due at the end of December had to be paid. WELL. For the time being Mr Dana has now credited the á compte†c of the Tribune with £20 — a sum which I was to draw on the Tribune EXACTLY TOMORROW — in this way virtually cutting off all my resources until the manuscript sent to Appleton has paid off the damned thing. So until then I am IN A DEADLOCK. As soon as this chap Appleton has been paid in kind, thus enabling me to dip into the Tribune's treasure-chest again, I am all for dropping him altogether — more especially if the Vienna Presse accedes to my suggestion of a weekly article on finance.†254 At all events I am of the opinion THAT EVEN THE MENACE TO STOP SUPPLY WOULD BRING ROUND DANA AND APPLETON, AND INDUCE THEM TO OFFER A BETTER PAYMENT. But this move can only be made when the present DEADLOCK has been resolved. By my reckoning some 30 or 32 columns will still remain to be sent if the swine have taken 'Bolivar'. Until then I shall be quite literally in the air. Moreover, the rascals know that they now have me in their power. Hence, none of the stuff that now remains to be done should be condensed more than is absolutely necessary to avoid making it insipid.

Page Break me40.273

Page me40.273

As far as 'Bülow' and 'Beresford' are concerned, I can write the biographies, but the military part should be written entirely by you, in English, in order that these articles should not stand out from the rest. Besides, mere indications are of no use to me in this case since following them up would, after all, involve research — an impossibility just now. As soon as you have finished with B, you must get to work on 'Cavalry', since this will pay off the debt.

Page me40.273

SUCH, MY BOY, IS THE SITUATION. Fortunately events in the outside world offer a good deal of solace just now. Otherwise, in private I THINK I lead THE MOST TROUBLED LIFE THAT CAN BE IMAGINED. NEVER MIND! What could be more asinine for people of wide aspirations than to get married at all, thus letting themselves in for the petites miséres de la vie domestique et privée.†a

Page me40.273

What will the good Guardian say now? The REVENGE of Milner Gibson and Bright is INDEED classic.†287 Between ourselves, I think that Pam HAD his 'raysons'†b for dissolving his own ministry and that all the apparent BLUNDERS which led to this RESULT were calculated ones so far as he was concerned.

Page me40.273

From a PAPER which recently appeared in the Moniteur it transpires that, IF COMPARED WITH 1855 and '56, the STORED UP COMMODITIES IN THE FRENCH CUSTOMS entrepôts†c are enormous,†d while the Economist's correspondent declares outright that Bonaparte caused the Bank TO MAKE ADVANCES on the same and thus ENABLED THEIR HOLDERS TO RETURN THEM. But with the approach of spring they will inevitably BE THROWN ON THE MARKET, AND THEN, THERE IS

NO DOUBT, THERE WILL BE A CRASH IN FRANCE, ANSWERED BY CRASHES IN BELGIUM, HOLLAND, RHENISH PRUSSIA ETC.†e
Page me40.273
In Italy the economic situation is truly frightful. Side by side with INDUSTRIAL CRISIS, AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS. (This last, according to the CONCLUSIONS of an AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS IN FRANCE, very bad there too. The congress declared that THEY COULD NOT GO ON WITH 17 FRS. THE HECTOLITRE OF WHEAT.†288)

Page Break me40.274
Page me40.274
TAKEN ALL IN ALL, the crisis has been burrowing away like the good old mole it is.†a
Page me40.274
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.274
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

145
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.274
[Manchester,] 24 February 1858

Dear Moor,
Enclosed a fiver†b — unfortunately I couldn't shell out yesterday, otherwise you would have had it 24 hours earlier — and the article 'Brescia'. Now there are only 'Burmah' (half-finished — it's long job searching out the reports on the latest war†289) and 'Bomarsund' to be done for B, and after that the two biographies. As to these I can soon get together what is needed on 'Beresford', but I'm in a quandary with 'Bülow' because I find it absolutely impossible to get hold of a good book on the wars of liberation.†c His resolution at Grossbeeren (he beat the French against Bernadotte's wishes) is to be commended and the victory at Dennewitz was a most remarkable one: 40,000 Prussians beat 70,000 Frenchmen.†197 However I shall have another look round. Once the stuff for B is finished I shall go on to 'Cavalry'.
Page me40.274

I don't agree with the idea of dropping Appleton — unless that is, we have to go to the Continent. I find the encyclopaedic course most useful and, after all, the thing is going so slowly that it could be done entirely at one's leisure were financial circumstances not so pressing. Anyway you should threaten to resign as soon as the situation permits. I too believe that it would prove instantly beneficial.

Page Break me40.275
Page me40.275
In these circumstances the great Lassalle might be very useful. I trust he does what is necessary as regards the political economy, and likewise the Vienna Presse. He must have been very dilatory in the latter case, seeing that you had already written to him before about the financial article. I am keeping his letter here to show Lupus, since you've answered it anyway.
Page me40.275
The historical irony whereby Mr Pam received his notice at the hands of Gibson and Bright is very pretty.†287 What the Guardian has to say about it you will be able to see from the 3 copies I am sending off at the same time as this letter. Pam, by the way, evidently intends to eliminate any possibility of his return — the prosecution of the wretched little publisher†a in London, the witch hunt that ended in the cellar in Birmingham (see day before yesterday's Sun, A CAPITAL HOAX) and other gestures of subservience to Bonaparte that crop up every day cannot fail in the long run to infuriate John Bull.
Page me40.275
In Italy the outlook can't be so very bad after all. Admittedly there are complaints about the delay in recovering outstanding debts but on the whole it's no worse than here in the HOME TRADE. We don't have very many more overdue accounts than is usually the case in Italy. Indeed the fellows are starting to order more freely again. Admittedly our own article can't be regarded as an absolute criterion, but it nevertheless provides a few pointers. Business is still bad over there, of course, but not exceedingly so. But all that can still come.
Page me40.275
The Bonapartists must have become tremendously nervous. At Fould's bal masqué 75 sergents de ville†b were ON THE PREMISES dressed as dominos. See the Guardian.
Page me40.275
Warmest regards to the whole FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.275
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.276

146
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.276
Manchester, 1 March 1858

Dear Marx,

On Wednesday, 24 February, I sent you a registered letter containing R/J 56641, Manchester, 16 Jan. 1857; a five-pound note. I trust that it reached you. If not, STOP PAYMENT at the Bank IMMEDIATELY. This evening I shall also send DIVERSE Guardians; another batch went off last Wednesday at the same time as the letter. In today's you'll find some interesting stuff about Orsini.
Page me40.276

The shabby way in which Pam, as he made his exit, unleashed all manner of political persecution — first Bernard and Allsop and now that poor devil of a PUBLISHER†a — was quite a lark. But even this hasn't put John Bull off his TRULY BRITISH MINISTER,†141 just a little grumbling here and there about the 2 cives Romani in Naples.†290 VERILY, the fellow has left an offensive stench behind him.
Page me40.276

In today's Guardian you will see that in Preston, etc., etc., SHORT TIME is still the order of the day. Will soon be general again. At present prices MANUFACTURERS are losing on most things, while spinners are just able to subsist, and to subsist well in the case of a few articles. As soon as rising prices CHECK demand (hitherto the fear of still higher prices has momentarily increased it), that too will cease and the fun begin all over again.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.276
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.277

147

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.277
[London,] 2 March 1858

Dear Frederick,

I sent you by return a note acknowledging receipt of the £5. The scrawl contained nothing else save a few political comments, ALTOGETHER NOT 20 LINES.†291 But all the same, I find it exceedingly irritating that the post office here should be taking an immediate interest in my correspondence. Not long ago I wrote to Collet, that most respectable of men, and the letter vanished. Complaints availed me nothing. I SHALL NOW WATCH THE PROGRESS OF POST OFFICE INTERFERENCE. If there is a 3rd CASE of this kind I shall proclaim the fact above my signature in the London press. The canaille are welcome to read what I write about POLITICS. But my PRIVATE AFFAIRS are not such that I would care to have any old German POST OFFICE SPY go poking his nose into them; 50 swine of various nationalities are, it seems, regularly employed as interpreters by the London cabinet noir,†292 AT LEAST. THE URQUHARTITES SAY SO.

Page me40.277

The information I sent you recently about the STATE of TRADE IN ITALY, and Milan in particular, was taken from the Turin papers, which are well supplied with correspondents in that region. While it is, of course, in the interests of Turin to paint the situation in Austrian Italy in the blackest possible colours, the reports from Milan went into details which had the real ring of truth. — As regards the STATE of FRENCH TRADE, you should read the contribution from the Paris CORRESPONDENT in today's Times.†a True, the chap now seems to be blaming the thing on Orsini and the FRENCH COLONELS, mais c'est ridicule.†b

Page me40.277

I enclose a wretched scrawl by Pyat, Talandier and Co.,†c which laddies couldn't rest for the fame accorded to Ledru-Rollin and Mazzini and Bernard, whereas they themselves had apparently been quite passed over by the French government. They believe that a revolution is in the offing and after all their 'activity' in London — Talandier had shouted himself as hoarse as quondam

Page Break me40.278

Bornstedt — it was INDEED galling for the great men to have the attention of revolutionary Europe diverted from them by other INCIDENTS. Therefore, JUST IN THE NICK OF TIME, THEY ISSUED the clap-trap enclosed herewith.†293 No style, no sense, not even French, altogether in the style of the Porte St. Martin streetwalker so typical of the former Charivari contributor and COMPOSITOR of little TOASTS.†294 In order that this publication should not fail in its purpose, they sent the beastly little thing to all the PAPERS. Persigny-Palmerston Jenkins OF THE MORNING POST was instantly CAUGHT in the TRAP. In a LEADER written by himself he denounced the chaps and their opusculum TO THE HONOURABLE MR WALPOLE and, as an additional precaution, HE DID THE WHOLE PAMPHLET INTO BAD ENGLISH. More than that. In his INAUGURAL SPEECH Derby informed the HOUSE OF LORDS that the CROWN advocates had been instructed to look into the thing and see if legal proceedings could be taken against it.†a In this way CITIZENS Talandier, Pyat and Besson have, with their insane concoction, succeeded in puffing themselves TO A DEGREE they could hardly have dared hope for.

Page me40.278

As for Bernard, he will presumably have to spend a little longer in jug.
Page me40.278

The insolence and IMPUDENCE with which Pam has placed himself at the head of the liberal opposition and nominated himself an HONOURABLE GENTLEMAN OPPOSITE,†295 IS TRULY WONDERFUL, but he can, of course, do exactly what he pleases with a House of Commons of his own creation.
Page me40.278

Apropos. Can you tell me how often machinery has to be replaced in, say, your factory? Babbage maintains that in Manchester THE BULK OF MACHINERY IS RENOVATED on average EVERY 5 YEARS.†b This seems to me somewhat STARTLING and not QUITE TRUSTWORTHY. The average period for the replacement of machinery is one important factor in explaining the multi-year cycle which has been a feature of industrial development ever since the consolidation of big industry.
Page me40.278

What is Lupus up to? Give him my regards.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.279
Page me40.279

Another BATCH OF Guardians arrived today. 'Bidassoa' also received last week.

Page me40.279
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

148
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.279
Manchester, 4 March 1858

Dear Moor,

So once again the cabinet noir†292 has well and truly honoured you with its attentions. I had expected something of the sort but it's a bit steep to go and intercept letters. I think you would do better to have the address done in another hand, in which case they will only open the letters sent to you. I was expecting an acknowledgment from you and therefore took PARTICULAR care to ask our messenger daily and in so many words whether there were any letters for me — each time the answer was in the negative. And yet we have the asinine Félix Pyat announcing to the world qu'il n'y a pas de police politique proprement dite, en Angleterre.†a Rarely have I come across a more bungled concoction, style and all.†293 Still the same old faith in the Constitution of 1848; one might almost be face to face with our own jackasses of the Imperial Constitution.†296 And what a ghastly style! Aprés tout†b the idiots have achieved their aim and will, perhaps, earn themselves a cheap form of martyrdom. Cette bête de†c Derby, falling straight into the trap like that, and allowing the riff-raff to have their way.

Page me40.279

As to the question of machinery, it's difficult to say anything positive; at all events Babbage†d is quite WRONG. The most reliable criterion is the PERCENTAGE by which a manufacturer writes down his machinery each year for wear and tear and repairs, thus recovering the entire cost of his machines within a given period. This PERCENTAGE is normally 7 1/2, in which case the machinery will be paid for over 13 1/3 years by an annual deduction from profits, i.e. will be replaceable without loss. E.g. I have £10,000 worth of machinery. At the end of the first year, when I draw up my balance-sheet, I enter

Page Break me40.280

£10,000 from which I deduct 7 1/2% for wear and tear » 750

_____
£9,250

Expenditure on repairs £100

_____
Cost of machinery £9,350

At the end of the 2nd year I deduct
7 1/2% [of] £10,000, and 7 1/2% [of] £100 » 757 10

_____
£8,593 10

Expenditure on repairs » 306 10

_____
Present cost of entire machinery £8,900
==========

etc. Now, 13 1/3 years is admittedly a long time in the course of which numerous bankruptcies and changes occur; you may enter other branches, sell your old machinery, introduce new improvements, but if this calculation wasn't more or less right, practice would have changed it long ago. Nor does the old machinery that has been sold promptly become old iron; it finds takers among the small spinners, etc., etc., who continue to use it. We ourselves have machines in operation that are certainly 20 years old and, when one occasionally takes a glance inside some of the more ancient and ramshackle CONCERNS up here, one can see antiquated stuff that must be 30 years old at least. Moreover, in the case of most machines, only a few of the components wear out to the extent that they have to be replaced after 5 or 6 years. And even after 15 years, provided the basic principle of a machine has not been superseded by new inventions, there is relatively little difficulty in replacing worn out parts (I refer here to spinning and flyer frames), so that it is hard to set a definite term on the effective life of such machinery. Again, over the last 20 years improvements in spinning machinery have not been such as to preclude the incorporation of almost all of them in the existing structure of the machines, since nearly all are minor innovations. (Admittedly, in the case of carding, the enlargement of the carding cylinder was a major improvement which supplanted the old machines where good qualities were concerned, but for ordinary qualities the old machinery will be perfectly adequate for a long time yet.)

Page Break me40.281
Page me40.281

Babbage's assertion is so absurd that were it true, England's industrial capital must continually diminish and money simply be thrown away. A manufacturer who turns over his capital 5 times in 4 years, hence 6 1/4 times in 5 years, would, in addition to his average profit of 10%, have to earn annually a further 20% on approximately 3/4 of his capital (the machinery) if he was to recoup without loss his outlay on the old machinery — i.e. would have to make 25%. This would, of course, vastly increase the cost price of all articles — more, almost, than it would be increased by wages — in which case where is the advantage of machinery? Annual WAGES amount to perhaps 1/3 the cost of the machinery — undoubtedly less in the case of the smaller spinners and weavers, and wear and tear is supposed to amount to 1/5 — the thing is ludicrous. There is certainly not a single establishment in England in the regular LINE of big industry which replaces its machinery in 5 years. Anyone foolish enough to do so would go to the wall at the first CHANGE; the old machines, even though much inferior, would certainly have the advantage over the modern ones and would be able to produce much more cheaply, for the market follows not the people who charge 15% for wear and tear on every pound of twist, but those who charge only 6% (approx. 4/5 of an annual depreciation of 7 1/2%) and hence sell at cheaper prices.
Page me40.281

Ten to twelve years are enough to bring about changes in the character of the BULK of machinery, thereby necessitating its replacement to a greater or lesser extent. The period of 13 1/3 years will vary, of course, depending on bankruptcies, breakage of essential parts where a repair would prove too expensive, and similar contingencies, so one could make it a bit shorter. But certainly not less than 10 years.

Page me40.281

I had finished 'Burmah' when I was compelled to make DIVERSE necessary ADDITIONS from another source. So I haven't done with it yet and the thing will have to wait until Tuesday. It will run to nearly 3 pages. There are still a few details to be looked up for 'Bomarsund'. On top of that I have to snatch whatever opportunity I can, since library hours are so similar to office hours that I can't always get there. As soon as I've dealt with these wretched things — likewise 'Bülow' and 'Beresford', which suffer from the same snag — I shall again have A FAIR GALLOPING COUNTRY ahead of me and be able to clap on spurs with 'Cavalry', etc.

Page Break me40.282

Page me40.282

Many regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.282

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

149

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.282

[London,] 5 March 1858

DEAR Frederic,

As regards the enclosed, which has clearly been delayed,†297 you might be so good as to discuss with Lupus the kind of answer you think would be suitable. Don't return the thing (but keep it) because such things are safer with you than with me just now. At present London is a gathering-point for mouchards†a of all nations. Hardly a day goes by when the curs aren't plus ou moins†b lynched.

Page me40.282

MY BEST THANKS FOR YOUR éclaircissements†c about machinery. The figure of 13 years corresponds closely enough to the theory, since it establishes a unit for ONE EPOCH OF INDUSTRIAL REPRODUCTION which plus ou moins coincides with the period in which major crises recur; needless to say their course is also determined by factors of a quite different kind, depending on their period of reproduction. For me the important thing is to discover, in the immediate material postulates of big industry, one factor that determines cycles. In considering the reproduction of machinery, as distinct from capital circulant, one is irresistibly reminded of the Moleschotts who also pay insufficient attention to the period of reproduction of the bony skeleton, contenting themselves RATHER, like the economists, with the average time taken by the human body to replace itself completely. Another question in respect of which I require only one example (approximate), is how, e.g. in your own mill or RATHER manufacturing business, FLOATING CAPITAL is apportioned over raw material and WAGES, and what portion on average you leave with your BANKER. Further, how you calculate turnover in your books. Here the theoretical rules are extremely simple and SELF-EVIDENT. But it is nevertheless just as well to have some inkling of how the thing looks in practice. The method of calculation used by businessmen is, of course, PARTLY based on illusions even greater than those of the economists; on the other hand it rectifies the latter's theoretical illusions by means of practical ones. You speak of 10% profit. I SUPPOSE THAT YOU DO NOT TAKE INTO ACCOUNT THE INTEREST and that this is doubtless shown along with the profit. IN THE 'FIRST REPORT OF THE FACTORY COMMISSIONERS' I have found the following STATEMENT, which serves as an average example:

Page Break me40.283

*Capital sunk in building and machinery £10,000
Floating capital £ 7,000
£500 interest on 10,000 fixed capital
£350 interest on floating capital
£150 Rents, taxes, rates
£650 Sinking fund of 6 1/2 p.c. for wear and tear of the fixed capital

_____
£1,650
1,100 contingencies (?), carriage, coal, oil

_____
£2,750
£2,600 wages and salaries

_____
£5,350
£10,000 for about 400,000 lbs raw cotton at 6d

_____
£15,350*

Page me40.283
16,000 for 363,000 LBS TWIST SPUN. VALUE 16,000. Profit 650, OR ABOUT 4.2 P.C. Hence WAGES of OPERATIVES here ABOUT 1/6.
Page me40.283
It is true that in this case the total profit only amounts to ABOUT 10%, including interest. Mr Senior, however, who after all represents the manufacturers' interests, states that in Manchester the average profit including interest amounts to 15%.†a It is a great pity that the above STATEMENT does not show the number of operatives, or the proportion of actual WAGES to what appears as SALARIES.

Page me40.283
By the by, the manner in which even the best economists, SUCH AS Ricardo ipsissimus,†b descend into sheer juvenile poppycock

Page Break me40.284
whenever they find themselves on the treadmill of bourgeois thought, struck me very forcibly in the following passage of Ricardo's, which I happened to come across yesterday. You will recall that A. Smith, who is still very old-fashioned, declares that by comparison with trade at home, overseas trade only gives ONE HALF OF THE ENCOURAGEMENT TO THE PRODUCTIVE LABOUR OF A COUNTRY ETC. To this Ricardo replies with the following example:

'Smith's argument appears to me to be fallacious; for though two CAPITALS, one Portuguese and one English, be employed, as Smith supposes, still a capital will be EMPLOYED in the foreign trade, double of what would be employed in the home trade. Suppose that Scotland employs a capital of a thousand pounds in making linen, which she exchanges for the produce of a similar capital employed in making silks in England, two thousand pounds, and a proportional quantity of labour will be employed by the two countries. Suppose now, that England discovers that she can import more linen from Germany, for the silks which she before exported to Scotland, and that Scotland discovers that she can obtain more silks from France in return for her linen, than she before obtained from England, — will not England and Scotland immediately cease trading with each other, and will not the home trade of consumption be changed for a foreign trade of consumption? But although two additional capitals will enter into this trade, the capital of Germany and that of France, will not the same amount of Scotch and of English capital continue to be employed, and will it not give motion to the same quantity of industry as when it was engaged in the home trade?'†a

Page me40.284
The assumption that in such circumstances Germany would buy her silks in England instead of France, and France her linen in Scotland instead of Germany is hardly what one would expect OF A FELLOW LIKE RICARDO.
Page me40.284
Friend Thomas Tooke has died, and with him the last English economist OF ANY VALUE.
Page me40.284
Did you overlook, in one of the Guardians you sent me, the item in which David Urquhart figures as an infanticide? The FOOL treated his 13-month-old baby to a Turkish bath which, as chance would have it, contributed to congestion of the brain and hence its subsequent DEATH. The CORONERS INQUEST on this CASE lasted for 3 days and it was only by the skin of his teeth that Urquhart escaped a verdict OF MANSLAUGHTER. Quel triomphe pour†b Pam.
Page me40.284
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.284
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.285

150
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.285
[Manchester,] 11 March 1858

Dear Moor,
Herewith something on 'Beresford' which I've been able to abstract from Napier.†a I couldn't find anything about his expedition to Buenos Aires at the beginning of the century, but it was a glorious one and would be worth investigating. He capitulated, RUMP AND STUMP, with the whole English force.†298
Page me40.285
'Bülow' is IN HAND. Ditto 'Cavalry'. Still some particulars to be looked up on 'Bomarsund'. In India there's another article brewing for which I shall be on the qui vive.
Page me40.285
Charras' Campagne de 1815 is no longer obtainable in Brussels; said to be out of print and with no definite prospect of a reprint. In other words, Bonaparte has bought the publisher.†b If you can run to ground a cheap (i.e. not exorbitant) copy in London, I'd like you to let me know; just now I'm studying this campaign.
Page me40.285
I suspect that friend Dana is abridging our articles considerably, otherwise you couldn't possibly have miscalculated so badly. Go to Trübner's some time and have a look at the Cyclopaedia.
Page me40.285
No news here, except that it's a ghastly winter; the weather changes I don't know how many times a day. Health very good. Am also taking iron.
Page me40.285
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.285
A bundle of Guardians goes off today. As often as not there's nothing from their foreign correspondents just now. In today's more statistics on the UNEMPLOYED.†c

Page me40.285
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.286

151
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†299
IN BERLIN
Page me40.286
London, 11 March 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,
I was confined to bed when your letter arrived, [hence]†a the delay in replying. Now I am ALL RIGHT again. D'abord,†b whatever the outcome of the NEGOTIATION ini[tiated] by you, whether successful or otherwise, I would like to express my warmest thanks for your exertions whose value is doubled by the fact that you yourself were in poor health. I hope that you are now perfectly well again. Friend Quételet†c has calculated that, after Petersburg and Madrid, Berlin is the most insalubrious capital in Europe — as, indeed, having lived there 5 years, I personally can confirm by comparison with London, Brussels and Paris.
Page me40.286
But to come to business. You will, perhaps, permit me to reply to question 4 first and then proceed in reverse.
Page me40.286
1. The publisher shall have the right to cease publication on receipt of the second instalment, always provided I am given due notice. A proper contract, assuming he intends to publish more than one instalment, shall not be concluded before delivery of the third.†d
Page me40.286
2. As regards the fee, I shall, if necessary, agree to a minimum of 0 for the first instalment, for while I certainly cannot write the whole work gratis, I am even less prepared to see its publication come to grief over the question of money. I have no idea what authors are paid in Germany. But if you do not think 30 talers per sheet is too much, that is what you should ask. — less, if you think it excessive. Once the thing has been launched we shall see on what conditions the publisher can and will go on with it.

Page Break me40.287
Page me40.287

3. Minimum length of the instalments SAY 4 sheets; maximum 6. It is to be desired, of course, that each instalment should form a relative whole. But the separate sections vary greatly in length.

Page me40.287

Whatever the circumstances, the first instalment would have to constitute a relative whole and, since it lays the foundations for all that follows, it could hardly be done in under 5 or 6 sheets. But that is something I shall find out when I come to finish it off. It contains 1. Value, 2. Money, 3. Capital in General (the process of production of capital; process of its circulation; the unity of the two, or capital and profit; interest). This constitutes a pamphlet in its own right. As you yourself will have discovered from your economic studies, Ricardo's exposition of profit conflicts with his (correct) definition of value, thus giving rise among his followers either to a complete departure from his basis, or to the most objectionable eclecticism. I believe that I have cleared the matter up. (On closer examination the economists will, to be sure, find that ALTOGETHER IT IS A DIRTY BUSINESS.)

Page me40.287

4. As to the total number of sheets I am myself very much in the dark since, in my notebooks, the material for the work is entirely in the form of monographs,†250 many of which go into a wealth of detail that would disappear in the course of compilation. Nor is it my intention to elaborate to an equal degree all the 6 books into which I am dividing the whole, but rather to give no more than the broad outline in the last 3, whereas in the first 3, which contain the actual nub of the economic argument, some degree of amplification will be unavoidable. I hardly think that the whole can be done in under 30 or 40 sheets.

Page me40.287

With kind regards.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.287

PS. If the publisher is agreeable, I could arrange for him to have the first instalment ABOUT the end of May.

Page me40.287

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me40.288

152
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.288
[London,] 15 March [1858]

Dear Frederick,

'Burmah', 'Beresford', Manchester Guardian received. You haven't mentioned receiving a letter from me enclosing one from New York,†297 etc. Considering how things are with the post just now, it's important that I should know. DROP, THEREFORE, TWO LINES.

Page me40.288

A longer letter soon.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.288
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

153
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.288
[Manchester, 16 March 1858]

Dear Moor,

The letter with enclosure from New York†a arrived here safely — when I sent off 'Beresford' last week I was in such a hurry that I completely forgot to acknowledge its receipt.

Page me40.288

For the same reason I haven't yet been able to see Lupus and at this moment my head is again so full of damned COMMERCE that I can hardly summon what few wits I have, let alone work on Appleton's things. I shall finish 'Bomarsund' and if possible 'Bülow' in time for Friday, i.e. send off 'Bülow' tomorrow if possible, so that you'll have time to add the biographical part; the only sources I have, by the way, are Siborne and Jomini.†a For 'Bomarsund' I have to refer to the press again; there's nothing further about it in my papers.

Page Break me40.289

Page me40.289
Then I'll set to work with a will on 'Cavalry'. Unfortunately I can't lay my hand on anything about the Seven Years War,†300 the heyday of the cavalry. However, nous verrons.†b
Page me40.289
I'm annoyed at being unable to get through the things faster; but the second lot of B's was really a very tiring job and I quite definitely cannot work far into the night without suffering from insomnia for several days afterwards. Two evenings in succession is the maximum I can manage but, all the same, it's easier now than it was in the beginning.
Page me40.289
Since Saturday, nothing whatever from Paris in the Guardian.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.289
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

154
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.289
[Manchester,] 17 March 1858

Dear Moor,
When you get this letter and today's Guardian, sent off at the same time, give your wife the Paris report to read. It gives one quite a turn to hear a Bonapartist and official relate how 100,000 ouvriers†c in the Faubourg St. Antoine responded to Orsini's execution†271 with the cry 'Vive la République'.†d So deportations and arrests á tort et á travers†e have borne as little fruit as the cités ouvriéres†f and the national atéliers en gros,†g and it is gratifying, on the eve of the grand ball, to see such a roll-call take place and hear 100,000 men reply, 'Present!' I'm only sorry Orsini couldn't hear that cry.

Page Break me40.290
Page me40.290

A local philistine who was lately in Paris has returned with the news that since Orsini's attempt on Monsieur Boustrapa's†40 life two more had been made. The first was also mentioned in the English press; the fellow was arrested in the Bois de Boulogne at the moment he took aim with his pistol; the second was news to me; it appears that the fellow shot at or tried to stab him in the Tuileries gardens and was summarily shot by soldiers of the Guard in the gallery of June 1848 fame beneath the terrasse du bord de l'eau.†a†301

Page me40.290

It seems that all threadbare patriotic notables want to make fools of themselves: mad old Landor must needs go and write to The Times today.†302 All that remains now is for Venedey to protest against Orsini.

Page me40.290

But Boustrapa has indeed come to a pretty pass, and it is a pity that the Constitutionnel should no longer be in a position to declare that l'horizon politique s'obscurcit.†b†95 What could be funnier than to find in the Moniteur, no less, a story about the officers at Châlon who, before risking rank and skin for the empereur, hurried to the sous-préfet to ask whether or not a republic had really been proclaimed in Paris?†c But one can also see how, even in the army, the only genuine Bonapartists are the men at the top because these are compromised and lured on by the prospect of truly splendid bounties. For, after all, what has Boustrapa to offer the bulk of subalterns? The blackguard doubtless knows as well as we do that, aside from his Guard, there are few troops he can rely on. Unfortunately the Guard is strong and knows that, under any other government, it would either be relegated to the line or disbanded. It consists, as far as infantry is concerned, of 4 regiments of grenadiers, 2 of riflemen, 1 of gendarmes, 1 of Zouaves, 1 battalion of light infantry (17 infantry battalions all told); further, 2 regiments of cuirassiers, 2 of dragoons, 1 of mounted grenadiers, 1 of hussars, 1 of chasseurs — 21 squadrons and a strong force of artillery. In all 18,000-20,000 men with 40-50 cannon, a nucleus solid enough to stiffen a somewhat wavering line. In addition everything has been so organised as to provide for a speedy concentration of troops from the Provinces (you only have to look at a railway map of France) so that a movement, if anticipated, would undoubtedly find itself confronted by 60,000-80,000 men. Victory over such vast numbers is to be achieved in 2 ways only: either by secret societies within the army itself — and these are said to be numerous — or by a determined anti-Bonapartist stand on the part of the bourgeoisie, as in February.†a I don't believe that victory is possible in the absence of one, let alone both, of these conditions. There is no doubt that the lower echelons of the army are undermined by reds and the higher by Orleanists†124 and Legitimists,†303 nor that the loi des suspects†304 in conjunction with other repressive measures is making life impossible for the bourgeoisie. Boustrapa's mounting difficulties are daily forcing him into ever more desperate straits; he dare not risk war with Prussia, he has shut himself out of Italy; no one any longer believes in Boustrapian socialism; Algeria has no more campaigns to offer. All diversions being excluded, reste la répression croissante,†b i.e. the virtual driving of the bourgeoisie into revolution. For the Orleanists and Legitimists the restoration of the constitutional republic under their joint rule must already be LOOMING IN THE DISTANCE as the most probable pis aller†c should circumstances not hold out an immediate prospect of victory for either party. Le cas de soulévement donné†d — and it's bound to come in the course of this year — there is every chance that they will follow the pattern of February 1848, sauf á lancer plus tard les troupes sur les faubourgs.†e And we know what will happen then. As soon as their fear of Bonaparte has made the troops unsteady enough to render the success of the insurrection inevitable, their fear of the prolétaires will make them induce the troops to put down the insurrection — trop tard†f! — the flood will surge over them regardless, the troops will stand gaping — and then we shall see how much ground the water has gained since the last springtide of 1848.

Page Break me40.291

Page me40.291

Fortunately commerce in France is in such a state that it cannot improve until the chronic crisis has culminated in political revolution. I don't believe that the state of trade in France can possibly improve so long as Boustrapa remains at the helm. While the crisis lasts all the talk about 'confidence' being undermined by Orsini, Espinasse, etc., is mere idle euphemism; but under a régime of this nature it will become sober truth should the conditions responsible for the crisis cease to obtain. By the way, I have quite come round to your opinion that in France the Crédit mobilier†45 was no haphazard swindle but an altogether necessary institution, and that Morny's pilferings which it spawned were no less inevitable, for it was only the prospect of getting rich quick which made the Crédit mobilier viable in France. Under these circumstances it's a TOSS-UP which falls first — Boustrapa or the Crédit mobilier. — The prolongation of bills must inevitably give rise to enormous losses. The use of such means to overcome a crisis can be of avail only if the reprise des affaires†a is a real one in industry too, but the mere fact of an EASY MONEY-MARKET cannot help anyone who has no credit — and I believe that in France credit is no longer accorded save by prolonging what has already been given.

Page Break me40.292

Page me40.292

Things in Prussia look pretty rotten to me. The tinpot little Chamber has greatly inflamed the parochial Prussian patriotism of the philistines there and even the arch-philistine, I fear, looks forward with assurance to the advent, along with the English marriage,†305 of an English constitution, albeit democratised. If only the corporal†b were to make a fool of himself, and that right soon! In Prussia, I fear, it won't be too easy to get rid of the ROYAL FAMILY — unless, that is, the proletariat has made really enormous strides. The bourgeois and philistines have, at any rate, got even worse since 1848. In German Austria, too, nothing much seems to be happening. Plainly your good, honest German has not yet emerged from the hibernation that followed the strenuous exertions of 1848. Slav insurrections and the loss of Hungary and Italy will, by the way, serve their turn in Austria, and on top of that, in the big towns and industrial districts, the crisis will have repercussions which, just now and at this distance, are impossible to gauge. Aprés tout,†c it's going to be a hard struggle.

Page me40.292

But what if Boustrapa were to subdue the first big attempt at an uprising? I regard this as practically impossible, precisely because the measures he has adopted are such that things would not become serious save on a really major occasion. But supposing Boustrapa were to succeed, he'd be doubly in the soup. Pélissier would be empereur. The troops of the line, who would in any case show signs of weakness and irresolution, would be declared non grata and the Guard alone remain in favour — indeed more so than ever before. A sure means of fostering conspiracy in the army. Next, Boustrapa would have to go directly for the Orleanists and Legitimists, nor would Thiers get away with a couple of days in the Mazas burnishing his Brown Bess.†306 A sure means of utterly ruining commerce. If Boustrapa were ever to triumph, his downfall would be all the more assured.

Page Break me40.293
Page me40.293

I only hope the fellow won't be assassinated. In which case I believe things would turn out in the way Morny once described to him: 'Nous commencerions par jeter tous les Jérôme par la fenêtre et puis nous tacherions de nous arranger tant bien que mal avec les Orléans.'†a Before the faubourgs had had time to collect their wits, Morny would have effected his palace revolution and, although the revolution from below would only be postponed for a short while, its basis would no longer be the same.

Page me40.293

To return to our own private affairs, I've been able to find virtually nothing about Bülow in Jomini and Cathcart†b and must see if I can unearth some other source. I shall try and get 'Bomarsund' done tonight. These two articles are preying on my mind.

Page me40.293

As soon as the Indian mail brings details about Campbell's Lucknow expedition (in maybe a week or a fortnight's time), send me all the material you can lay hands on, so that I can make an immediate start. I shall be able to buy The Times up here, but not the other London papers, i.e. in single numbers.

Page me40.293

Warm regards to your wife and children. I'd like to send you some more money but shall have to wait and see what further payments I shall have to make this month; as soon as I get some idea of this I shall do what I can, you may be sure of that.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.293

Lupus has the solemn document from New York.†297 Isn't Kamm that Kinkelian 'proletarian' who used to run a brothel? F. Jacobi is a ridiculous little barrister from Münster who was the butt of everyone's jokes in Switzerland.

Page me40.293

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.294

155
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.294
[London,] 19 March [1858]

Dear Engels,
My article†a leaves no time for a letter today. Only this much. Rather than let yourself be held up any longer by a search for material, DROP 'Bülow', about whom I have sufficient for A COMMON BIOGRAPHY (brief), and get ON WITH 'CAVALRY'. Periculum in mora.†b Secondly, I enclose a few delectable DOCUMENTS on the ITALIAN CONGRESS HOAX from the Star.†307
Page me40.294
Your letter of today†c largely used in my article.
Page me40.294
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.294
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

156
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.294
[Manchester, 26 March 1858]

Dear Moor,
Herewith a five-pound note, number as below.†d 'Cavalry' progressing well. I have again found some good stuff in Mommsen's Römische Geschichte (Hannibal's cavalry). Unfortunately it's difficult to get hold of anything about the Seven Years War.†300

Page Break me40.295

Page me40.295

You'll have received the Guardians I sent off yesterday. They were the only ones containing reports from Paris or anything at all of special interest.

Page me40.295

In haste — it's half past seven — and the office-boys are waiting to lock up.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.295

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

157
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.295
British Museum
[London,] 29 March 1858

DEAR Frederic,

The £5 most gratefully received.

Page me40.295

Today a letter from Lassalle.†a Duncker is prepared to publish my political economy on the following conditions. Every few months I am to supply instalments of 3 to 6 sheets (this was my suggestion). He is to have the right to cancel the arrangement at the third instalment. Indeed, no contract is to be definitely concluded until then. In the meantime he is to pay 3 friedrichsdors per sheet. (According to Lassalle, professors in Berlin get only 2.) The first instalment†b is to be READY at the end of May, i.e. the manuscript.

Page me40.295

In my next I must let you have an outline of the first instalment so that you can tell me what you think of it. For the past two weeks I have again been VERY SICKLY and have been taking medicine for my liver. I have been much subject to relapses of late owing to prolonged work by night and, by day, a multitude of petty annoyances RESULTING FROM THE ECONOMICAL CONDITIONS OF MY DOMESTICITY.

Page Break me40.296

Page me40.296

I hope that you are quite well again. Write to me about this POINT.

Page me40.296

Have had a letter from Harney today, returning my wife's letter to Schramm,†a which is nice. The little man seems annoyed at my failure to write. He no longer addresses me as DEAR M. but as Dr M. WELL. Maybe I shall send him 4 lines or so, TO CONSOLE THE LOUSY LITTLE FELLOW.

Page me40.296

In France, the dance is proceeding most satisfactorily. Conditions are very unlikely to remain peaceful throughout the summer. What do you think of the 5 pashaliks?†308 Originally it was intended to make Pélissier their supreme CHIEF. But on closer consideration Bonaparte decided THAT THIS WOULD BE IN FACT AN ABDICATION OF POWER ON HIS PART. So it's only a half-measure, and one whereby the Spanish institution of CAPTAIN-GENERALSHIP†309 has been introduced into France lock, stock and barrel. Now doesn't this imply a collapse of centralisation and, IN FACT, a diminution of the power of the army? WE MUST HOPE that the French business won't take a SPANISH TURN, but rather that this decentralisation will merely reduce the resistance to be encountered by the revolution.

Page me40.296

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.296

Have you ATTENDED [noticed] that of late most of the French companies set up on the pattern of the Crédit mobilier†45 have appeared before the tribunal criminel?

Page me40.296

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

158

MARX TO ENGELS†1

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.296

[London,] 2 April 1858

DEAR Frederick,

The Guardian stories highly AMUSING.†b A correspondent of the Daily Telegraph (DIRECTLY UNDER PAM'S AUSPICES) writes of the great danger of being 'DEAF' in Paris, and says that all 'DEAF ENGLISHMEN' were being hounded by the police as Allsops. Also that ENGLISHMEN were leaving Paris en masse, partly because of police chicanery, partly for fear of an outbreak. For if the latter were to happen and the Bonapartists be victorious, the John Bulls feared they might be massacred by the MADDENED SOLDIERS, whereat the correspondent himself naively comments that IN SUCH A CASE [HE] SHOULD LIKE TO BE ANYWHERE ELSE BUT IN PARIS. This DESERTION by the Bulls AT THIS MOMENT OF COMMERCIAL DEPRESSION is queering the pitch of the Parisian épicier†a and householder, whores, etc. Have you seen that 300 million francs have AVOWEDLY 'DISAPPEARED' FROM THE BUDGET, AND NOBODY KNOWS WHAT HAS BECOME OF THEM? There will, BY AND BY, be further REVELATIONS about Bonapartist FINANCE, and then the asses on the Tribune will realise the wisdom of not having published the very ELABORATED ARTICLES I sent them on the subject six months ago.†219 The fellows are asses and anything which is not, in the crudest sense, a 'question of the day' they tend to cast aside as UNINTERESTING, only to go and compile the most egregious rubbish about the selfsame subject as soon as it does become á l'ordre du jour.†b

Page Break me40.297
Page me40.297

Nota bene: in the military clubs here it is being rumoured that EVIDENCE has been discovered among the papers left by Raglan that, 1. at the battle of the Alma†209 he rightly suggested to attack the Russians, not from the direction of the coast, but from the opposite flank, and drive them into the sea; 2. that he proposed to advance on Simferopol after the battle of the Alma; 3. that at Inkerman†34 it was only by dint of the most urgent pleas and MENACES that he extorted from Canrobert the order for Bosquet to hasten to his [Raglan's] assistance. It is further said that, if the boasting on the other side of the Channel were to continue, these PAPERS would be published, providing proof that the French were ever ready TO BETRAY THEIR DEAR ALLIES. Indeed, a few HINTS which de Lacy Evans dropped in the HOUSE OF COMMONS seem to indicate something of the kind.
Page me40.297

I've been so ill with my bilious complaint this week that I am incapable of thinking, reading, writing or, indeed, of anything SAVE the ARTICLES for the Tribune. These, of course, cannot be allowed to lapse since I must draw on the curs as soon as possible. But my indisposition is disastrous, for I can't begin working on the thing for Duncker†c until I'm better and my fingers regain their VIGOUR and GRASP.

Page Break me40.298
Page me40.298

The following is a SHORT OUTLINE OF THE FIRST PART. The whole thing is to be divided into 6 books: 1. On Capital. 2. Landed Property. 3. Wage Labour. 4. State. 5. International Trade. 6. World Market.
Page me40.298

1. Capital falls into 4 sections. a) Capital en général. (This is the substance of the first instalment.) b) Competition, or the interaction of many capitals. c) Credit, where capital, as against individual capitals, is shown to be a universal element. d) Share capital as the most perfected form (turning into communism) together with all its contradictions.

The transition from capital to landed property is also historical, since landed property in its modern form is a product of the action of capital on feudal, etc., landed property. In the same way, the transition of landed property to wage labour is not only dialectical but historical, since the last product of modern landed property is the general introduction of wage labour, which then appears as the basis of the whole business.
Page me40.298

WELL (IT IS DIFFICULT FOR ME TO-DAY TO WRITE), let us now come to the corpus delicti.†a
Page me40.298

I. Capital. First section: Capital in general. (Throughout this section wages are invariably assumed to be at their minimum. Movements in wages themselves and the rise and fall of that minimum will be considered under wage labour. Further, landed property is assumed to be zero, i.e. landed property as a special economic relation is of no relevance as yet. Only by this procedure is it possible to discuss one relation without discussing all the rest.)
Page me40.298

1. Value. Simply reduced to the quantity of labour; time as a measure of labour. Use-value — whether regarded subjectively as the USEFULNESS of labour, or objectively as the UTILITY of the product — is shown here simply as the material prerequisite of value, and one which for the present is entirely irrelevant to the formal economic definition. Value as such has no 'substance' other than actual labour. This definition of value, first outlined by Petty and neatly elaborated by Ricardo,†b is simply bourgeois wealth in its most abstract form. As such, it already presupposes 1. the transcending of indigenous communism (India, etc.), 2. of all undeveloped, pre-bourgeois modes of production which are not in every respect governed by exchange. Although an abstraction, it is an historical abstraction and hence feasible only when grounded on a specific economic development of society. All objections to

Page Break me40.299

The second page of Marx's letter to Engels of 2 April 1858

Page Break me40.300
Page Break me40.301
this definition of value derive either from less developed relations of production or else are based on confused thinking, whereby the more concrete economic definitions from which value has been abstracted (and which may therefore also be seen, on the other hand, as a further development of the same) are upheld as against value in this its abstract, undeveloped form. In view of the uncertainty of messieurs les économistes themselves about the precise relation of this abstraction to later, more concrete forms of bourgeois wealth, these objections were plus ou moins†a justified.
Page me40.301

The contradiction between the general characteristics of value and its material existence in a particular commodity, etc. — these general characteristics being the same as those later appearing in money — gives rise to the category of money.
Page me40.301

2. Money.

Some discussion of precious metals as vehicles of the money relation.
Page me40.301

a) Money as a measure. A few comments on the ideal measure in Steuart, Attwood,†310 Urquhart; in more comprehensible form among the advocates of labour money (Gray, Bray,†b etc. An occasional swipe at the Proudhonists). The value of a commodity translated into money is its price. For the moment price appears only in this purely formal distinction between it and value. Thus, in accordance with the general law of value, a specific amount of money merely expresses a specific amount of objectified labour. In so far as money is a measure, the variability of its own value is of no importance.
Page me40.301

b) Money as a means of exchange, or simple circulation.
Page me40.301

Here we need only consider the simple form of circulation as such. All the other conditions by which it is determined are external to it, and hence will not be considered till later (presuppose more highly developed relations). If the commodity be C and money M then, although simple circulation evinces the two circuits or final points: C — M — M — C and M — C — C — M (this latter constituting the transition to c), the point of departure and the point of return in no way coincide, save by chance. Most of the so-called laws put forward by economists do not consider money circulation within its own confines, but as subsumed under, and determined by, higher movements. All this must be set aside. (Belongs in part to the theory of credit; but also calls for consideration where money appears again, but further defined.) Here, then, money as means of circulation (coin). But likewise as realisation (not simply evanescent) of price. From the simple statement that a commodity, in terms of price, has already been exchanged for money in theory before it is so exchanged in fact, there naturally follows the important economic law that the volume of the circulating medium is determined by prices, not vice versa. (Here, some historical stuff on the polemic concerning this point.) Again it follows that velocity may be a substitute for volume, but that a certain volume is essential to simultaneous acts of exchange in so far as the relation of these themselves is not that of + and -, an equalisation and consideration which will only be touched on at this juncture by way of anticipation. At this point I shall not go further into the development of this section and would only add that the lack of congruence of C — M and M — C is the most abstract and superficial form in which the possibility of crises is expressed. If the law concerning the determination of circulating volume by prices be developed, it will be found that the assumptions made here are by no means applicable to all states of society; hence the fatuity of comparing e.g. the influx of money from Asia into Rome and its effect on prices there tout bonnement†a with modern commercial relations. On closer examination, the most abstract definitions invariably point to a broader, definite, concrete, historical basis. (OF COURSE, since to the extent that they are definite they have been abstracted therefrom.)

Page Break me40.302

Page me40.302

c) Money qua money. This is a development of the formula M — C — C — M. Money, the independent existence of value as opposed to circulation; material existence of abstract wealth. Already manifested in circulation in so far as it appears, not only as a means of circulation, but as realising price. In this capacity c), in which a) and b) appear to be no more than functions, money is the universal commodity of contracts (here the variability of its value acquires importance: value being determined by labour time); it becomes an object of HOARDING. (This would still seem to be an important function in Asia, as formerly in the ancient world and in the Middle Ages GENERALLY. Now persists only in a subordinate capacity within the banking system. In times of crisis money in this form again acquires importance. In this form money considered along with the world-historical DELUSIONS which it engenders, etc. Destructive properties, etc.) As the realisation of all higher forms in which value will appear; definitive forms in which all relations of value are externally concluded. Money, however, once fixed in this form, ceases to be an economic relation which is lost in its material medium, gold and silver. On the other hand, in so far as money comes into circulation and is again exchanged for C, the final process, the consumption of the commodity, again falls outside the economic relation. The principle of self-reproduction is not intrinsic to simple money circulation, which therefore implies something extrinsic to itself. Implicit in money — as the elaboration of its definitions shows — is the postulate capital, i.e. value entering into and maintaining itself in circulation, of which it is at the same time the prerequisite. This transition also historical. The antediluvian form of capital is commercial capital, which always generates money. At the same time the emergence of real capital, either from money or merchant capital, which gains control of production.

Page Break me40.303
Page me40.303

d) This simple circulation, considered as such — and it constitutes the surface of bourgeois society in which the underlying operations which gave rise to it are obliterated — evinces no distinction between the objects of exchange, save formal and evanescent ones. Here we have the realm of liberty, equality and of property based on 'labour'. Accumulation, as it appears here in the form of HOARDING, is merely greater thrift, etc. On the one hand then, the fatuity of the economic harmonists, modern free traders (Bastiat, Carey,†a etc.), in upholding this most superficial and most abstract relation of production as their truth, as against the more advanced relations and their antagonisms. Fatuity of the Proudhonists and suchlike socialists, in contrasting the ideas of equality, etc., corresponding to this exchange of equivalents (or presumed AS SUCH), to the inequalities, etc., to which this exchange reverts and from which it emanates. In this sphere, appropriation by labour, the exchange of equivalents, appears as the law of appropriation so that exchange simply returns the same value in another material form. In short, while everything may be 'lovely' here, it will soon come to a sticky end and this as a result of the law of equivalence. For now we come to

Page me40.303

3. Capital.

This is really the most important part of the first instalment and one on which I particularly need your opinion. But today I can't go on writing. My bilious trouble makes it difficult for me to ply my pen, and keeping my head bent over the paper makes me dizzy. So FOR NEXT TIME.

Page Break me40.304

Page me40.304

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.304

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

159

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.304

Manchester, 9 April 1858

Dear Moor,

The study of your ABSTRACT of the first half-instalment†a has greatly exercised me; IT IS A VERY ABSTRACT ABSTRACT INDEED — inevitably so, in view of its brevity, — and I often had to search hard for the dialectical transitions, particularly since ALL ABSTRACT REASONING is now completely foreign to me. The arrangement of the whole into 6 books could hardly be better and seems to me an excellent idea, although the dialectical transition from landed property to wage labour is not yet quite clear to me. The development of the monetary business, too, is really excellent, though again there are individual bits I can't quite make out, at least until I have looked up the historical background. However, I think that I shall get a better idea of the DRIFT when I've had the last part of capital in general, and shall then write to you at greater length about it. The abstract, dialectical tone of your synopsis will, of course, disappear in the development.

Page me40.304

Yesterday I sent you two more Guardians. Now that the price has been reduced to 1d, the chaps are evidently cutting down on all expenses such as foreign correspondents, etc. Their attempt to produce a FIRST-CLASS PROVINCIAL PAPER failed completely. Hence the dearth of foreign news and the rarity of contributions from Paris.

Page Break me40.305
The thing about Fould in yesterday's Guardian isn't bad. But what's even better is the COTTON SUPPLY ASSOCIATION'S†311 report. How splendid that, 10 years after its introduction, FREE TRADE†150 should be repudiated outright by the free traders themselves. For all that this COTTON SUPPLY ASSOCIATION amounts to is an institution set up by these selfsame free traders with the object of boosting the cultivation of cotton everywhere in the world where soil and climate are not entirely unsuitable — and this, in direct opposition to FREE TRADE principles, by means of rewards, advances, gifts of seed, loans of machinery, etc., etc. If the State does something of this sort, it's all wrong, but if the MANCHESTER COTTON SPINNERS, who are much further removed from the NIGGERS, Bedouins, etc., in Africa than their own monarch, do the selfsame thing, then IT'S ALL RIGHT. This report is as pretty a satire on laissez-faire†312 clap-trap generally as one could hope to find. Very pretty, too, the admission that the import of English goods manufactured from American cotton has disrupted cotton cultivation in almost all other countries and that this last will now have to be restored by artificial means! These wretched English regard their monopoly in cotton spinning and weaving as something fine and natural to which no one could object; whereas the cotton-growing monopoly of the United States, engendered by the selfsame world market, must be smashed, even if this means ANTI-FREE TRADE measures. The thing ought to be called Association for enabling the single spinners to buy cotton in the dearest market, the collective spinners paying the producer the difference between the market value and his cost of production. Of course, this is to go on only until subsidised cotton growing can stand on its own legs; but after all that is exactly what Monsieur List is also seeking to do with his protective tariffs! The thing might supply you with material for an article, since the Yankees have a direct interest in it and the Tribune, too, is ANTI-FREE TRADE.
Page me40.305
My prognostications that fluctuations in produce would be entirely dependent on the east and west winds and that, with MIDDLING ORLEANS COTTON above 6d, there could be no question of trade being either normal or brisk, have proved remarkably accurate.†a As regards cotton, the fulfilment of my first prognostication will be apparent from the enclosed table which is a continuation of the one I sent you earlier on the price of Middling Orleans, and brings it up to date.†b Sugar, coffee and tea have gone

Page Break me40.306
the same way, save that the existence of considerable stocks inhibited the temporary steep rise which the shortage of stocks made possible in the case of cotton. As for the second prognostication, there's still quite a lot of SHORT TIME, STRIKES, and stoppages due to unprofitable production and, since the crop will provide 3,000 M†a bales whereas full production would now demand a minimum of 3,500 M (same ratio for other cotton producing countries), any attempt at revival by the cotton industry up to the end of this year will be hampered — quite aside from political convulsions — by the rising price of raw material, as indeed already happened at the end of February and the beginning of March (see table). Prices in general — even though there may be an initial fall — will rise, but at the same time there will be a CHECK to production proportionate to the rise. This, always SUPPOSING THAT [THERE IS] NO ROW ON THE CONTINENT, though the latter is a virtual certainty.

Page me40.306

In one week, 19-26 February, only 62 bales of cotton of all qualities arrived in Liverpool! Normally they are counted in thousands.
Page me40.306

What's this about the 300 million francs which are admitted to have vanished? All I remember having read is that, instead of a surplus of 40 million, Magne has a deficit — but I don't know the details. It really is priceless. Now the 'prince impérial'†b is also to be given his own household and a dotation — CASH MUST BE DEVILISH SCARCE!
Page me40.306

I hope your bilious trouble is better. Obviously all this excitation caused by the crisis is to blame. In the evenings I am sometimes plagued by toothache as a result of the weather; but nothing worse.
Page me40.306

Kind regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.306
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.307

160
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX†313
IN LONDON
Page me40.307
Manchester, 14 April 1858

Dear Mrs Marx,

I trust that Moor is at last on the road to recovery and will soon be able to return unhampered to his labours on political economy.†250 I was also plagued with toothache last week. By Sunday it had gone, only to return with added virulence this evening just as I was settling down to sort out some preliminary stuff on the conquest of Lucknow†a for the Tribune. Whether I shall succeed in these circumstances seems very doubtful. At any rate I shall try and read up the subject this evening and if possible concoct something, even if not much, tomorrow midday while I'm at the office. But it would at any rate be a good idea if Moor were to have a sujet in petto†b so that, if the worst comes to the worst, there's something to send the fellows.

Page me40.307

I still find working in the evenings very tiring and, if I go on for too long or for two evenings running, I get over-excited and suffer from insomnia, particularly when I've had a lot of writing to do during the day. And I also feel very stupid and lethargic in the evenings until I wake myself up by forcing myself to concentrate on some subject. My memory is better on the whole, although every day I still find that things I have done or heard the day before vanish so completely from my mind that they might never have happened, and it's only when I've been reminded of individual details that it all comes back to me. Otherwise I am physically strong and healthy again, able to stand up to strains and stresses and — sauf le†c TOOTHACHE — to any kind of weather.
Page me40.307

Lupus is still very lame and is having to spend more on CABS in one week than he usually does in a year. But he is improving visibly and in a week's time he'll probably again be able to stand a certain amount of walking. He sends everyone his best wishes.
Page me40.307

How do you like the Bernard trial†314? The French mouchards†d and their worthy confrére MR Rogers are cutting a pretty figure.

Page Break me40.308
Yesterday's Morning Post drew a very nice picture of the trial's physiognomy. That Chevalier Estien was excellently portrayed.†a
Page me40.308

I have today received from DEAR Harney 3 more Independents†b from which it transpires that his arch-enemy, Seigneur Godfrey, has begun a fresh libel suit against him.†237 The man will soon be thinking himself as 'greet' as the 'greet'†c Lassalle.
Page me40.308

'OUR FAITHFUL ALLY'†d is now weighing on English commerce like a nightmare. Nobody wants to speculate or buy more than his immediate requirements because the whole of Philistia is expecting war, revolution or even more outlandish things in France.
Page me40.308

Very best wishes to the girls and Moor,

Yours ever,
F. Engels

Page me40.308
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

161
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.308
Manchester, 22 April 1858

Dear Moor,

I wrote to your wife last week and the following day sent an article on Lucknow†e and also Guardians (or cuttings, I don't remember exactly). I hope everything arrived safely. 2 more Guardians go off today. Russell's report in Tuesday's Times†f did not have the makings of an article, but I'm saving it up until the arrival of the next mail; this is sure to bring the last part of the Lucknow story, when the whole thing can be polished off all at one go — with, I hope, the help of Campbell's despatches as well. Meanwhile I have thrown myself into 'Cavalry' again — shall leave open bits of the historical section for the present until I can unearth the relevant sources, and shall get on with the tactical side. The article will probably take up 10 or 12 of my long double pages, and maybe more.

Page Break me40.309
Page me40.309

The affaire Bernard†314 will greatly mortify Monsieur Bonaparte and make quite an impression on the refugee crapauds†81 in London. James' speech, by the way, was feeble and décousu†a and as usual old Campbell's summing up went against the PRISONER. The old donkey is vexed at losing the chance of an interesting legal case when he could have presided over 15 other judges.
Page me40.309

The revelations made by Cavour and La Marmora†b about their relations with Cavaignac and the latter's fear of Austria†315 will be of interest to the républicains purs. The more that comes to light about the National's period of supremacy, the more pitiful it seems.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.309
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

162
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.309
London, 29 April 1858

DEAR Frederick,

My long silence can be explained in one word — inability to write. This existed (AND TO SOME DEGREE EXISTS STILL) not only IN THE LITERARY, but IN THE LITERAL SENSE OF THE WORD. The few obligatory articles for the Tribune†c were dictated to my wife, but even that was only possible by APPLYING STRONG STIMULI. Never before have I had such a violent attaque of liver trouble and FOR SOME TIME there was a fear that it might be sclerosis of the liver. The doctor wanted me to travel but d'abord†a that was incompatible with the STATE OF FINANCE, and secondly I hoped from day to day to be able to start work again. The persistent urge to get down to WORK coupled with inability to do so helped aggravate my condition. However there's been an improvement during the past week. But I'm not yet capable of working. Whenever I sit down and write for a couple of hours I have to lie quite fallow for a couple of days. I hope to heaven that this state of affairs comes to an end next week. It couldn't have happened at a more inconvenient time. Obviously I overdid my nocturnal labours last winter. Hinc illae lacrimae.†b

Page Break me40.310
Page me40.310

Your letters and Guardians arrived safely.
Page me40.310

A book has appeared by Louis Blanc on the revolution of 1848.†c Evinces the most candid admiration for the 'petit'†d which, or so he says, is what the workers call him. If read carefully, however, it makes the fellow look an ass for it shows that on every crucial occasion the workers acted without his knowledge or consent and generally returned him sentiment for 'sentiment', taking the view that they had thereby paid the oracle of Luxembourg his FULL PRICE.†316
Page me40.310

The movement for the emancipation of the serfs in Russia strikes me as important in so far as it indicates the beginning of an internal development that might run counter to the country's traditional foreign policy. Herzen, of course, has discovered afresh that 'liberty' has emigrated from Paris to Moscow.
Page me40.310

Friend Bangya, AS IT SEEMS, has been caught out by Sefer Pasha's son†e engaging in unauthorised correspondence with Philipson, the Russian general. It is said that he HAS BEEN SHOT together with a number of his Hungarian and Polish accomplices.†317
Page me40.310

Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.310
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.311

163
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.311
Manchester, 30 April 1858
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

If travel you must, why not travel to Manchester, THAT'S EASY ENOUGH. Should the note I sent you yesterday have already disappeared, ce qui serait bien possible,†a let me know; for 21/- you can now get an 8-day RETURN TICKET FIRST CLASS, and then, of course, you just disregard the RETURN. I shall try and arrange for a spare bed at my house, which should be possible for a few days, anyhow. For the rest we shall see. If you still have the money for the journey, come up straight away. We shall immediately send off to your wife anything you borrow from her; I've had no time to get a POST OFFICE ORDER today. I shall give the necessary instructions when I get home this evening. Come straight to No 6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road. If you don't actually leave tomorrow evening (there's a train at about 5 o'clock), let me know on Monday morning when you are arriving and I'll pick you up at the station — but say whether by NORTH WESTERN or GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.
Page me40.311

If you are arriving on Sunday, telegraph me tomorrow — it costs 2/6d for 20 words excluding the address. Send the telegram to my house.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.311
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.312

164
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.312
[London,] 1 May [1858]

DEAR Frederick,

*I shall part on Thursday†a by the Great Northern, leaves London at half past 2, arrives at Manchester at 7 p.m.†318

Yours*
K.M.

Page me40.312

Since yesterday I have been feeling much better and au fond†b it was my intention to start work sérieusement on Monday. However AFTER CONSULTATION WITH THE DOCTOR, who thinks that I still need a week of gadding about, I have let my duty go hang.

Page me40.312
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

165
ENGELS TO RUDOLF SCHRAMM
IN LONDON
Page me40.312
[Draft]
Manchester, 6 May 1858

To Mr R. Schramm in London

I have just received your note dated the 3rd.

Page me40.312

After the death of my friend, Conrad Schramm,†188 I instructed Mr Harney to return to us, not you, the letters from Marx and myself found among his papers,†c since those letters were not intended for you. And this indeed was done.

Page me40.312

I can see no reason whatever why I should discuss with you matters which concerned no one but myself and my late friend and party comrade. While Conrad was still alive your own friends were surprised at the indifference you showed towards his financial circumstances.

Page Break me40.313
Page me40.313
In so far as I had anything to say about the disposal of Conrad's effects, I have said it to his only possible executor, Mr Harney.
Page me40.313
As to my 'sense of justice', which has nothing whatever to do with the case, you may perhaps have occasion to become better acquainted with it some day in Germany.
Page me40.313
I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

F.E.

Page me40.313
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

166
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.313
Manchester, 11 May 1858

Dear Mrs Marx,
Moor has been out riding for two hours today and feels so well after it that he's waxing quite enthusiastic about the thing. He has left town and gone home, and has asked me to drop you a line about that fool Cluss.†a He thinks it might be a good thing for you to go and see Pfänder, who would probably elicit something from him. The main thing is that Monsieur Cluss should come up here, for we have got to know how we stand with him, and either he must declare himself IN A SATISFACTORY MANNER or else we must break with him. What good is the ass to us if he's so unreliable as first to come to you, his heart brimful and overflowing, stay for 3 hours with no other apparent object than to get back on to the old footing again, and then suddenly write you a letter as confused as it is ill-bred in which he retracts? We're only sorry that, in the midst of what is a far from rosy spell, such dolts should come and add to your troubles.

Page Break me40.314

Page me40.314
If at all possible, see that the man comes up here so that we at least have the satisfaction of telling him exactly what we think of him.
Page me40.314
I hope that Moor will persevere with his riding, for if he does he'll be able to write again in a week. Lupus' leg is much better too.

Your devoted
F. Engels

Page me40.314
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

167
ENGELS TO JENNY AND LAURA MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.314
Manchester, 11 May 1858

Dear Jenny and Laura,
I cannot allow this note to go off to your mama without thanking you for the two lovely portraits which you asked Moor to bring me. They have found a temporary home on the CHIMNEY-PIECE in front of the looking-glass, but in a day or two will be given a splendid place of their own on the wall.
Page me40.314
I hope Mr. Schleiden suits you all right†a; the man's far more solemn than you are, and I only hope you won't see fit to imitate him.
Page me40.314
Dai ritratti vedo con piacere che avete molto grandito tutte le due e che, benché siate grande signorine adesso, vi sono sempre le vecchie faccie piene di franchezza ed ingenuitá; e credete pure ché anch' io per voi saró sempre il vecchio†b

Engels

Page me40.314
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.315

168
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†82
IN BERLIN
Page me40.315
London, 31 May 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Post tot discrimina rerum†a at long last a sign of life. As for me, what's been happening since my wife wrote to you†b is simply this:

Page me40.315

Having been totally incapable of writing — not only IN A LITERARY, BUT IN THE LITERAL SENSE OF THE WORD — for several weeks, and striven in vain to rebel against my illness; having, moreover, been pumped full of medicine and all TO NO USE, I was positively assured by my doctor that I must have a change of air, secondly that I must DROP all INTELLECTUAL LABOUR FOR SOME TIME and, finally, engage in riding as the main form of treatment. In itself the illness wasn't dangerous — enlargement of the liver — but on this occasion the accompanying symptoms were particularly revolting; moreover, in my family it has nasty implications in that it was the starting-point of the illness which led to my father's death. WELL. With the utmost reluctance I eventually gave way to the insistence of doctor and family, joined Engels in Manchester,†318 went in for riding and other physical EXERCISES and, after spending a month up there, finally returned to London fully restored. The illness — altogether a very expensive LUXURY in my circumstances — was all the more inopportune in that I had already begun to prepare the first instalment†c for publication. I shall now settle down to this with a will. I trust you will be so kind as to tell the publisher†d all about these ADVENTURES. You will readily be able to imagine the state of mind I was in during my illness when I tell you that liver complaints as such tend to make one hypochondriacal and that, in addition, my life was bedevilled by all manner of domestic circumstances, not to speak of the hitch over publication. Now I have recovered my accustomed good humour.

Page Break me40.316
Page me40.316

During this time of tribulation I carefully perused your Heraclitus.†a Your reconstruction of the system from the scattered fragments I regard as brilliant, nor was I any less impressed by the perspicacity of your polemic. In so far as I have any fault to find, it is largely formal. I believe your exposé could have been rather more condensed without in any way jeopardising the import. I should, moreover, have liked to find in the text proper some critical indications as to your attitude to Hegelian dialectic. This dialectic is, to be sure, the ultimate word in philosophy and hence there is all the more need to divest it of the mystical aura given it by Hegel. Finally, there are some details upon which I do not agree with you; e.g. your interpretation of Democritus' natural philosophy. These, however, are all minor points. I am all the more aware of the difficulties you had to surmount in this work in that ABOUT 18 years ago I myself attempted a similar work on a far easier philosopher, Epicurus†b — namely the portrayal of a complete system from fragments, a system which I am convinced, by the by, was — as with Heraclitus — only implicitly present in his work, not consciously as a system. Even in the case of philosophers who give systematic form to their work, Spinoza for instance, the true inner structure of the system is quite unlike the form in which it was consciously presented by him. It is incomprehensible to me, by the by, how you found the time in the midst of all your other work to acquire so much Greek philology.

Page me40.316

On the whole the present moment of time is a pleasing one. History is clearly about TO TAKE AGAIN A NEW START, and the signs of dissolution EVERYWHERE ARE DELIGHTFUL FOR EVERY MIND NOT BENT UPON THE CONSERVATION OF THINGS AS THEY ARE.
Page me40.316

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.316
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me40.316a
Page me40.316a

Jenny Marx, daughter of Karl Marx. Late 1850s-early 1860s

Page Break me40.316b
Page Break me40.317

169
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.317
London, 31 May 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

DEAR Frederick,

It took me a week to acclimatise myself again; moreover, the abrupt discontinuation of riding did me no good to begin with. Not until this very day have I at last begun to feel as fit as I did on the day I left Manchester. I am now IN WORKING ORDER and shall at once start getting the stuff ready for publication.†a All I wrote last week was 2 articles for the Tribune.†b The rest of the time I kept constantly on the move, since the feeling of heaviness in my head and trouble with my bowels made me fear a relapse.

Page me40.317

Ad vocem†c Cluss. Before leaving, this young man visited Schapper again. When he got back from my house the worthy fellow discovered to his dismay that he had brought something back with him from Paris, viz. a chancre with all sorts of nasty secondary symptoms. He took to his bed and this, he told Schapper, was the reason for his withdrawal from the civilised world.

Page me40.317

Ad vocem Pélissier. What we jokingly suggested in Manchester, namely that Pélissier would promptly enter into relations with the Orléans, has now happened IN REAL GOOD EARNEST, and become the talk of the town here.

Page me40.317

What do you think of Bonaparte's thirst for confiscation?†319

Page me40.317

During my absence a book by Maclaren covering the entire history of CURRENCY came out in London†d; to judge by the excerpts in The Economist it is FIRST-RATE.†e The book isn't in the library†f yet — nothing ever turns up there until months after publication. I, of course, am bound to read it before writing my treatise. So I sent my wife to the PUBLISHER†g in the City. To our dismay, however, we discovered that it costs 9/6d — more than the whole of our fighting funds. Hence I should be most grateful if you could send me a POST OFFICE ORDER for that amount. There probably won't be anything that's new to me in the book, but after all the fuss The Economist has made about it and the excerpts I myself have read, my theoretical scruples won't permit me to proceed without having looked at it.

Page Break me40.318

Page me40.318

Don't you think you might have sufficient material to do something general on the STATE OF THE BRITISH FORCES IN INDIA and also something conjectural for Friday? IT WOULD BE A GREAT BOON FOR ME since reading over my own manuscript†a will take me the better part of a week. The damnable part of it is that my manuscript (which in print would amount to a hefty volume) is a real hotchpotch, much of it intended for much later sections. So I shall have to make an index briefly indicating in which notebook and on which page to find the stuff I want to work on first.

Page me40.318

I have at long last written to Lassalle.†b You must grant me absolution for the plaudits I was obliged to accord Heraclitus, the Dark Philosopher. In a few unobtrusive asides — for praise is taken seriously only when offset by censure — I have to some extent, if very piano-piano, hinted at the real shortcomings of the entreprise.

Page me40.318

Tomorrow or the day after I shall be getting some more Bangya numbers,†c 2 of which I shall send to Manchester, 1 for you and 1 for Lupus. Apropos, in an issue of the Tribune I see that Pulszky is endeavouring to forestall the nauseous REVELATIONS by representing Bangya as Metternich's spy and as one who betrayed General Stein.†d So statesman Blind, WHILE GIVING A TESTIMONIUM PAUPERTATIS TO KOSSUTH, 'THE ILLUSTRIOUS GOVERNOR OF HUNGARY', in the Advertiser, nevertheless found himself obliged to invite him in so many words to make a 'counter-statement'. Kossuth, OF COURSE, held his tongue.
Page me40.318
How is Gumpert progressing in the noble art of equitation? As for me, the pity of it is that I always have to break off just when I'm again making enough progress to take an interest in the thing.
Page me40.318
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.318
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.319

170
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.319
[London,] 7 June 1858

DEAR Frederick,
Enclosed 2 Bangya numbers,†a ONE FOR YOU, THE OTHER FOR Lupus.
Page me40.319
Have received from you 1. letter with the POST OFFICE NOTE; 2. SECOND LETTER; 3. ARTICLE FOR THE TRIBUNE (VERY AMUSING ONE, TOO†b). Did not acknowledge receipt before because each day I was expecting the 2 Bangya numbers; also a lot of PRIVATE TROUBLES which took up my time.
Page me40.319
Enclosed a letter from Lassalle.†c It's an extremely odd business. I cannot reply until I have your own and Lupus' opinion. So I should like you to consult together at once and send me your avis†d without delay. My own view is that Lassalle should not engage in a duel with that ass Fabrice and that, even from the standpoint of the duel, the assault by the two gentlemen from the 'High Court' has put any duelling OUT OF THE QUESTION. GENERALLY, it is my view — though having to decide whether or not the duel as such accords with principle seems to me ludicrous, OF COURSE — that in the PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES, AT THIS PARTICULAR JUNCTURE, etc., etc., in contemporary history, members of the revolutionary party may respond to their PRIVATE ENEMIES with clubs, kicks and punches, but not engage in duels. But it would seem to me totally wrong if, after he has come out so categorically against all duelling, Lassalle WOULD ALLOW HIMSELF TO BE BULLIED by feudal GOSSIP.

Page me40.319

Schapper came to see me yesterday. Told me, inter alia, that friend Caussidiére, arriving drunk in a disreputable alley in New York one evening, apparently attacked a wench with his stick; her yells attracted half a dozen LOAFERS who promptly set upon Caussidiére and beat him almost to death. The fat lout was PICKED UP unconscious by the police early next morning and it was 6 weeks before he was fit enough to be up and about again.
Page me40.319

Seiler had a CASE [attack] of paralysis; at death's door for

Page Break me40.320
10 weeks; but weeds are indestructible. Heise is said to be dangerously ill again.
Page me40.320

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.320
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

171
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.320
[Manchester,] 9 June 1858

Dear Moor,

I return Lassalle's letter herewith.†a Borchardt had already told me on Saturday with a look of triumph that our little Jew Braun had been in a brawl. It's extremely useful to know these details. As for our opinion, it's as clear as day that, by making so despicable an attempt on a person's life, both the gentlemen, the Intendanturrat no less than the Assessor, have adopted in toto the standpoint of the bludgeon, and that the only duel one might engage in with such laddies has already taken place during the brawl itself. If 2 chaps waylay a third and both of them set on him, I don't believe that any duelling code in the world would permit a subsequent duel with such riff-raff. If Mr Fabrice intended forcibly to provoke a duel by means of the horse-whip affair, either Mr Bor mann ought to have looked on purely passively as a witness, or his presence was altogether superfluous. But when two men simultaneously set upon one, then we are dealing with canaille†b for whom honour and FAIR PLAY do not exist and who have given proof that A FAIR DUEL cannot be fought with them. Indeed one would run the risk of being treacherously murdered.

Page me40.320

So much for my own and Lupus' opinion, if we are to take the duelling code as the basis in law.

Page Break me40.321
Page me40.321

This apart we share your view that 1. duels are, on the whole, untimely for revolutionaries just now and 2. that Lassalle, having declared himself unequivocally against duelling 'on principle', would be greatly discredited were he now to engage in a duel.
Page me40.321

So far as we are concerned, therefore, you can safely go ahead and tell our Ephraim Artful†a not to fight but rather tranquilly restore his 'unshakable determination' with the help of the bottle, take the moon by the horns again as soon as may be and risk annihilation for the hundred and first time. As to the discovery that he appears to possess an adequate store of vanity, silence is, I think, the best form of congratulation.
Page me40.321

Did you read the story about Fould's son†b? He decamped to London with Mademoiselle Valérie†c of the Gymnase and 1,600,000 francs. His old man†d wrote to Pélissier and told him that he should au cas de besoin, user d'autorité.†e Pélissier invited the loving couple to déjeuner†f and told them: Je vous donne ma bénédiction†g and wrote to the old man: Que voulez-vous? Les jeunes gens seront toujours de jeunes gens!†h Whereat old Fould became the laughing-stock of Paris.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.321
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

172
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†82
IN BERLIN
Page me40.321
London, 10 June 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

You would have had an immediate answer to your letter, but it seemed to me advisable — not in order to formulate my own views but because tres faciunt collegium†a — to put the CASE to Engels and Lupus in Manchester and obtain their opinion. Since their views and my own coincide at every point, you may regard the following as our unanimous OPINION.

Page Break me40.322
Page me40.322

1. From the standpoint of the duel. It is as clear as day that by their despicable attack in the street the two gentlemen, the Intendanturrat and the Assessor, have adopted in toto the standpoint of the bludgeon and that the only duel which one might engage in with such laddies has already taken place during the brawl itself. If 2 chaps waylay a third and both of them set on him, we don't believe that any duelling code in the world would permit a subsequent duel with such riff-raff. If, by flourishing a horse-whip, Mr Fabrice intended forcibly to provoke a duel, either Mr Bormann ought to have looked on purely passively as a witness, or his presence was altogether superfluous. But when two men simultaneously set upon one, and one of them actually operates IN THE REAR of the person attacked, then we are dealing with canaille†b who have given proof that A FAIR DUEL cannot be fought with them.
Page me40.322

2. Principle of the duel. We don't believe that, generally speaking, an affair as relative as a duel can be subsumed under the category good or bad. That duelling as such is not rational there can be no doubt. Nor that it is a relic of a bygone stage of civilisation. However, a concomitant of the one-sidedness of bourgeois society is that, in opposition to the latter, certain feudal forms maintain the rights of the individual. The most striking proof of this is to be found in the United States where duelling is a civil right. Individuals may become locked in a mutual conflict so insupportable that a duel seems to them the only solution. However such deadly tension is not IN FACT possible vis-á-vis an indifferent person such as an Intendanturrat, an Assessor, or a lieutenant. This would demand a significant personal relationship. Otherwise a duel is an utter farce. It is invariably a farce when performed in deference to so-called 'public opinion'.
Page me40.322

3. We therefore regard duelling as being purely dependent on circumstances; hence recourse may be had to it as an exceptional pis aller†c in exceptional circumstances. In the CASE under discussion, however, all the circumstances argue quite emphatically against it, even if the attack in the street had not put it ALTOGETHER OUT OF THE QUESTION.

Page me40.322
4. The really decisive factor is that you are not only opposed to all duelling on principle but have proclaimed this principle, and in

Page Break me40.323
Fabrice's presence at that. So you would discredit yourself were you nevertheless to engage in a duel through fear of 'public opinion'.
Page me40.323
5. In the case under discussion, a duel would have absolutely no meaning save as the observance of a conventional formality recognised by certain privileged classes. Our party must resolutely set its face against these class ceremonies and reject with the most cynical contempt the presumptuous demand that we submit to them. The present state of affairs is far too serious to permit of your consenting to such puerilities and it would be sheer puerility to engage in a duel with Mr Fabrice because he is an 'Intendanturrat' and belongs to the clique qualified to fight duels, whereas if e.g. a tailor or cobbler were to set about you in the street, you would simply hand him over to the courts without any infringement of 'honour'. In the case under consideration you would not be fighting a duel with Fabrice, an individual who is indifferent to you, but with the 'Intendanturrat' — which would be an absurd manoeuvre. In general, the fellows' insistence that differences with them must be settled by a duel as a privilege due to them — and all FASHIONABLE duels fall under this head — should be laughed to scorn. To acknowledge this claim would be altogether counter-revolutionary.
Page me40.323
I have given you our view in nuce.†a We shall be interested to hear how the affair progresses.
Page me40.323
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.323
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

173
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.323
London, 2 July 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

The delay in acknowledging your 'Cavalry'†320 due to great domestic TROUBLE. For weeks our youngest child†b has been suffering from HOOPING-COUGH, a most alarming illness, besides which my wife is very seedy. So my work has been damnably disrupted by this and all kinds of other domestic upsets.

Page Break me40.324

Page me40.324

You will remember that, while our friend Schramm was in Jersey, I secured him the position of correspondent to an American paper. Now that he's dead and after he had dunned them on several occasions, his fee of SOME 6 POUNDS has arrived and has, of course, fallen to Mr Rudolf†a as pocket-money.

Page me40.324

Otherwise nothing new here. That little London German rag once run by Gumpert has, I believe, now fallen to 'united democracy', sub auspiciis†b of the great Blind under the title Neue Welt.†c

Page me40.324

I assume you have read the statements made in the Star by Mr Türr and by the Hungarian émigrés in Constantinople. If not, I shall send you The Free Press.†d Meanwhile Kossuth still remains obdurately silent. Our excerpt from Bangya's story has appeared in the Tribune.†e The row in New York will force Kossuth to speak. Thus I may have to come right out into the open in this matter. Pulszky had de longue main†f provided a loophole in the Tribune when he described Bangya as a former spy of Metternich's (!).†g Klapka, whom I met for a moment or two at Freiligrath's, remarked drily of Bangya: 'Finis coronat opus.'†h He seems to be very blasé about Kossuth. Is presently dabbling in Turkish shares. Herewith two letters from New York.†321

Page me40.324

I have had no word from Ephraim Artful†i for a fortnight. Being convinced, OF COURSE, that there was small likelihood of my letter being put to discreet use by him, I worded it with the utmost caution SO THAT IT WILL BE EXTREMELY DIFFICULT FOR HIM TO ABUSE IT. Apart from the special CIRCUMSTANCES of the CASE, concerning which I gave him your opinion pretty well verbatim, I censured duelling only in so far as it is claimed as privilege of caste by fellows who believe that their insults must be punished otherwise than those of a tailor, cobbler, etc. The revolutionary thing to do, I told him, when confronted with such inane presumption and laddies of this ilk, was to adopt the 'standpoint of the lout' and the 'code of the bludgeon'. On the other hand, in reply to Ephraim's pedantry, I said that duelling was among the things Aristotle described as being 'indifferent' and which one could either take or leave as one pleased; I told him he was right in saying that it was a relic of a bygone stage of development but that, 'given the one-sidedness and narrow-mindedness of bourgeois relations, individuality could sometimes assert itself only in feudal form'.†a

Page Break me40.325

Page me40.325
I trust that, come what may, you will send me an article on India†b next week. There is ample material for an article for the Tribune, which will otherwise reprint stuff from The Times, etc. Anyway, all that matters is that articles should be sent.
Page me40.325
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.325
Regards to Lupus.
Page me40.325
Humboldt has published a very 'flattering' letter in the Tribune addressed to Fröbel,†c who has published a book of his American travels.†d

Page me40.325
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

174
ENGELS TO MARX†1
IN LONDON
Page me40.325
Manchester, 14 July 1858

Dear Moor,
Up here we are now in the middle of the balance-sheet and hence I haven't had the leisure to write to you at greater length. I hope that your little Tussy†e is better. Gumpert tells me that in the English climate whooping-cough is seldom dangerous and, though usually chronic, is benign. All the cases they've had in the hospital so far have ended well. He gave me both the reports (Marei's) this hospital has so far produced. They are highly scientific and I wish

Page Break me40.326
I had had material of this kind when I was writing my book.†a I also have copies of it for you which I shall be sending; individual bits may come in useful for your chapter on wage labour. No doubt you will derive some amusement from Marei's grandiose conception and sanguine expectations.
Page me40.326

Have neither seen nor heard of the statements by Mr Türr, etc. The Star is not much read up here. So I'd be glad if you would just send The Free Press†b and also, if possible, a copy for Lupus, who is still in Buxton, whither he was sent by Borchardt, and where, out of boredom, he may well do more walking than is good for his leg.
Page me40.326
The two letters from New York which you mention in your last were not enclosed.†321
Page me40.326
Apropos. Kindly let me have Hegel's Philosophy of Nature†c as promised. I am presently doing a little physiology which I shall combine with comparative anatomy. Here one comes upon highly speculative things, all of which, however, have only recently been discovered; I am exceedingly curious to see whether the old man may not already have had some inkling of them. This much is certain: were he today to write a Philosophy of Nature, subjects would come flocking in on him from all directions. One has no idea, by the way, of the progress made in the natural sciences during the past 30 years. Two things have been crucial where physiology is concerned: 1. the tremendous development of organic chemistry, 2. the microscope, which has been properly used only during the past 20 years. This last has produced even more important results than chemistry; what has been chiefly responsible for revolutionising the whole of physiology and has alone made comparative physiology possible is the discovery of the cell — in plants by Schleiden and in animals by Schwann (about 1836). Everything consists of cells. The cell is Hegelian 'being in itself' and its development follows the Hegelian process step by step right up to the final emergence of the 'idea' — i.e. each completed organism.
Page me40.326
Another result that would have delighted old Hegel is the correlation of forces in physics, or the law whereby mechanical motion, i.e. mechanical force (e.g. through friction), is, in given conditions, converted into heat, heat into light, light into chemical affinity, chemical affinity (e.g. in the voltaic pile) into electricity, the latter into magnetism. These transitions may also take place differently, backwards or forwards. An Englishman†a whose name I can't recall has now shown that these forces pass from one to the other in quite specific quantitative proportions so that e.g. a certain quantity of one, e.g. electricity, corresponds to a certain quantity of each of the others, e.g. magnetism, light, heat, chemical affinity (positive or negative — combining or separating) and motion. The idiotic theory of latent heat is thus disposed of. But isn't this splendid material proof of how the reflex categories dissolve one into the other?

Page Break me40.327
Page me40.327
This much is certain — comparative physiology gives one a healthy contempt for man's idealistic arrogance in regard to other animals. At every step it is forcibly brought home to one how completely his structure corresponds to that of other mammals; he has basic features in common with all vertebrates and even — if less distinctly — with insects, crustaceans, tapeworms, etc. Here too Hegel's stuff about the qualitative leap in the quantitative sequence fits in very nicely. Finally, with the most primitive infusoria, one reaches the original form, the single cell existing independently, which again is not perceptibly distinguishable from the lowest vegetable life (single-celled fungi such as those causing disease in potatoes, the vine, etc., etc.) or, at a higher stage of development, from the germ right up to and including the human ovum and spermatozoon, and is identical in appearance to the separate cells in the living body (blood corpuscles, the cells of the epidermis and mucous membrane, secreting cells in the glands, kidneys, etc., etc.).

Page me40.327

Some time you might also let me know what sort of a disease dyspepsia crapulosa†b is. This isn't, as it happens, a bad joke but a scientifically recognised term.
Page me40.327

If The Times has any particulars about India tomorrow, we shall see what can be done for the Tribune, otherwise it will be no go. So you'll see from tomorrow's Times more or less what can be expected.
Page me40.327

Warm regards to the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.327

The acceptance business successfully concluded.

Page me40.327
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.328

175
MARX TO ENGELS†82
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.328
[London,] 15 July 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park

Dear Engels,

D'abord†a I would beg you not to take fright at the contents of this letter since it is not in any way intended as an APPEAL to your already unduly overloaded exchequer. On the other hand it behoves us to put our heads together to see if some way cannot be found out of the present situation, for it has become absolutely untenable. It has already resulted in my being COMPLETELY DISABLED from doing any work, partly because I have to waste most of my time running round in fruitless attempts to raise money, and partly because my abstract thinking — due rather, perhaps, to my being physically run down — is no longer a match for domestic miseries. The general unpleasantness has made a nervous wreck of my wife, and Dr Allen who, of course, suspects where the shoe PINCHES but doesn't know the real state of affairs, has now told me repeatedly and positively that he cannot rule out brain fever or something of the sort unless she is sent to a seaside resort for a longish stay. I for my part know that circumstances being what they are, this course, even if feasible, would do her no good so long as she continues to be the victim of daily pressures and haunted by the spectre of final and unavoidable catastrophe. This last, however, cannot be long postponed and, even if it be staved off for a few weeks, there still remains the unbearable day-to-day struggle for MERE NECESSARIES and a general situation such as will inevitably bring everything to wrack and ruin.

Page me40.328

There are in London so-called LOAN-SOCIETIES†182 which advertise LOANS of £5-200, without SECURITIES and on the strength of REFERENCES alone. I therefore attempted an operation of this kind, Freiligrath and an épicier†b having offered to act as REFEREES. The result was that some £2 went on FEES. The final, negative, answer arrived the day before yesterday. I don't know whether I should make a further attempt of this kind.
Page me40.328

To give you an idea of the real state of affairs, I have asked my wife to draw up a statement in respect of the £20 advanced by you and the £24 I drew on the Tribune (of which £2 were overdrawn) on 16 June. From it you will see that, as soon as a fairly substantial sum such as this arrives, not a penny is left over even for the most urgent day-to-day expenses, let alone enjoyment of any kind; that exactly the same sickening STRUGGLE recommences the following day, and within a very short time the creditors, having received only the most meagre payments on account, once more begin to exert exactly the same pressure in respect of other bills which have accumulated in the meantime. At the same time you will see that my wife hasn't spent a FARTHING on clothes, etc., for herself, while the situation as regards the children's summer DRESSES is sub-proletarian. I think it is essential that you should go through these particulars since it would not otherwise be possible to arrive at a correct opinion of the CASE.

Page Break me40.329

Statement in respect of £20 received 19 May. Paid out:

Rates (water, gas) £7 —
Pawnshop, interest 3 —
Redeemed from pawnshop, for 1 10
Wages 2 —
TALLYMAN (who had to be paid weekly for a coat and trousers) — 18
Shoes and hats for the children 1 10
Baker 1 —

Butcher 1 10
Epicier 1 —
CHEESEMONGER — 10
Coal — 10
Page me40.329
Statement in respect of £24 received 16 June from the 'Tribune'

School for QUARTER February, March, April £8 —
Loaned by Schapper for daily expenses over
4 weeks, repaid 3 —
Linen redeemed from pawnshop 2 —
Wages 1 —
TALLYMAN 1 4
Butcher 2 —
Epicier 2 —
GREENGROCER 1 —
Chemises, dresses, etc., for the children 2 —
Baker 2 —

Page Break me40.330
Page me40.330

Thus, after 17 June there was again not a single penny in the house and, to cover for four weeks day-to-day expenses which had to be paid in cash, we borrowed £4 from Schapper, about £2 of which, however, went on the abortive LOAN OPERATION IN FEES.

Page me40.330

The full state of indebtedness, as it now stands in London, is as follows. (It will show you that a large part of the same consists in debts to small épiciers who have stretched their credit as far as it will go.)

Rates, due 25 June £9 —
School, due 2 August 6 —
Newspaper man (for a year) 6 —
TALLYMAN 3 9
Butcher 7 14
Baker 6 —
Epicier 4 —
GREENGROCER and coal 2 —
Milkman 6 17
Owing to previous milkman and baker in Soho 9 —
Dr Allen (£7 paid out of last but one Tribune money) 10 —
Lina Schöler 9 —
Schapper 4 —
Pawnshop 30 —
Page me40.330

Of these debts, the only ones I don't consider urgent are those owing to Dr Allen, Lina Schöler, the old creditors in Soho and part of what is due to the pawnshop.
Page me40.330

Thus the whole business turns on the fact that what little comes in is never earmarked for the coming month, nor is it ever more than just sufficient — after deducting regular outgoings on house, school, rates and pawnshop — to reduce debts to a level that will preclude one's actually being thrown out into the street. In some 4-5 weeks' time I shall have ABOUT £24 to draw on the Tribune. Of this £15 will immediately go on rates and rent alone. If only a minimum is paid out in respect of other debts — and it is very questionable whether the BUTCHER, etc., will be prepared to wait so long — the predicament will, on the other hand, again be compounded by the 4 weeks which have to be got through d'une maniére ou d'une autre.†a The LANDLORD is himself being harried by creditors and is dunning me for all he's worth. I fail to see what I am to do, unless it is possible to obtain a LOAN from a LOAN-SOCIETY or

Page Break me40.331
LIFE-INSURANCE SOCIETY. Even were I to seek to reduce expenditure to the utmost — e.g. take the children away from school, move into a wholly working-class lodging, get rid of the maids, live on potatoes — not even the auction of my household goods would suffice to satisfy the creditors in the vicinity and ensure an unhampered removal to some hidey-hole. The SHOW of RESPECTABILITY which has so far been kept up has been the only means of avoiding a collapse. I for my part wouldn't care a damn about living in Whitechapel,†322 provided I could again at last secure an hour's peace in which to attend to my work. But in view of my wife's condition just now such a metamorphosis might entail dangerous consequences, and it could hardly be suitable for growing girls.

Page me40.331

I HAVE NOW MADE A CLEAN BREAST OF IT and I assure you that it has cost me no small effort to do so. But enfin,†a I must speak my mind to somebody. I know that you yourself can do nothing to help. All I ask is your opinion on WHAT TO DO. I would not wish my worst enemy to have to wade through the QUAGMIRE in which I've been trapped for the past two months, fuming the while over the innumerable vexations that are ruining my intellect and destroying my capacity for work.
Page me40.331

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.331

I shall send you the things you ask for.†b

Page me40.331
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

176
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.331
Manchester, 16 July 1858

Dear Moor,

It is very decent of you to have laid your difficulties plainly before me. Obviously there is need for immediate action. By my reckoning then, about £50 á £60 is urgent, and the rest can wait a while. I could at once raise £30 towards this amount by means of a fresh acceptance, provided the fellow agrees to make out the acceptance at 4 months minimum, otherwise I wouldn't be in a position to find the money. If he is willing it might also be possible to draw £20 at 4 months and another £20 at 6 months (plus interest) so that I should have to pay in November and January and you would at once get £40 clear. So go and see Freiligrath straight away and find out what can be done. It is, of course, absolutely essential that the discounter retains the acceptances in his own portfolio, otherwise I shall be ruined. The rascal ought not to ask more than the 20% I am calculating on, which already represents a loss of nearly £5.

Page Break me40.332
Page me40.332

In this way, or so it seems to me, you would be covered to the extent that you could, at a pinch, wait until it's time to draw your next bill. But in view of your wife's state of health even more will be needed, of course, and unfortunately I can't manage it. I can't even step across to Watts here in connection with his Provident Institution as I've fallen out with the fellow. However he only has a BRANCH-OFFICE up here; the head-OFFICE is in London and you can look it up in any DIRECTORY. The business is called the PEOPLE'S PROVIDENT ASSURANCE SOCIETY AND LIFE AND EQUITABLE INSTITUTION†323 Freiligrath will easily get hold of a prospectus, TERMS, etc., for you and if there is anything to be done, which I doubt, he could also set the matter in train.
Page me40.332

Though I've racked my brains I can think of no other method of raising money in England. It seems to me that the moment has come for you to have a go at your mater†a or one or other of the Dutchmen.†b Ultimately it is a question of wiping the slate clean and making A FRESH START; all this business of LOANS merely puts matters off and ultimately leads to an even worse crisis, quite apart from all the money — what with FEES, etc. — and time that is expended in attempts to raise the cash. Moreover, an acceptance on my part anticipates the money which I would otherwise have been able to send you over a period in small amounts and, although a lump sum is worth more to you than the ODD five-pound note now and again, this will certainly mean a corresponding loss of regular income.

Page me40.332

You must really cast aside any reservations — s'il y en aurait†c — in this case and attempt a coup. It's a question of finding a further

Page Break me40.333

£50 or so and I can see absolutely no way of getting it other than through your relations.

Page me40.333

Meanwhile I shall mull the thing over for a couple of days and see if anything occurs to me. At all events it would be as well to burn this correspondence so that the matter remains between ourselves.

Page me40.333

Your

F.E.

Page me40.333

If absolutely necessary I would accept £20 at 3 months and £20 at 6; anything shorter wouldn't do. Interest on top of this, so you would have £40 net.

Page me40.333

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

177

MARX TO ENGELS†20

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.333

London, 20 July 1858

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

When your letter arrived on Saturday I did not reply immediately because I first wanted to see what response I got to another 'ATTEMPT' before taking advantage of the authorisation you gave me. On Monday, however, I received an answer in the negative. Hence any further delay seemed impracticable. Accordingly to Freiligrath. Today he informed me in writing that the thing could be proceeded with on the TERMS you proposed, but not until 3 August since his USURER was unable to go ahead any earlier. I shall therefore write and tell him to put the business in hand by 3 August.

Page me40.333

On Saturday I had a long letter from my mother. For I had asked Mrs Liebknecht, who was going to Germany, to take the old girl a portrait of our youngest child†a with a brief note in which I mentioned my being frequently ill but said nothing about our other circumstances.†324 The old girl's letter is such as to suggest the possibility of a meeting between us a few weeks hence. IF SO, I SHOULD ARRANGE THINGS. But I mustn't be too pressing IN THIS RESPECT. Otherwise she will promptly draw BACK.

Page Break me40.334
Page me40.334
Thank you for the Tribune article.†325 More tomorrow.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.334
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

178
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.334
[London,] 25 July [1858]

Dear Engels,
From the enclosed letter of Freiligrath you will see that further DIFFICULTIES have arisen. But the 'new' terms seem to me au fond†a better than the old, for though payment is nominally required in 3 months it need, IN FACT, only be made in 6 and the cost is 10% less.
Page me40.334
Kindly reply at once ONE WAY OR THE OTHER. The matter is PRESSING. If it can be arranged in this way I shall, AT ANY RISK, immediately send my wife to a nearby seaside resort for a couple of weeks and, in the meantime, see what I can fix up with my mater — after the more unruly creditors have been placated, OF COURSE.
Page me40.334
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.334
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.335

179
MARX TO ENGELS†326
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.335
London, 8 August 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

If I haven't written before, this was because it wasn't till yesterday that the matter was decided for certain and, indeed, in the affirmative. Every time I sat down to write to you, another letter arrived from the City to say there was nothing doing and that I should try and carry out the transaction with SOMEBODY ELSE. However, I wanted to tell you something definite ONE WAY OR THE OTHER. After he had negotiated with 6 different USURERS, and every time the fellows went back on their promise when it came to the point, Freiligrath eventually discounted the bill with his own tailor, after he had agreed to act as collateral. He had, ab initio,†a made it payable at his own bank. The old chap went to a great deal of trouble over the matter, even to the extent of taking certain steps not altogether in keeping with his 'professional' status. So if you should happen to write to him, give him a little PAT on the back, an action to which he is not wholly impervious. The bill has been deposited with Freiligrath himself. The tailor declares that he is prepared to renew it, whatever the circumstances. But he would prefer to receive £20 in November so that he would only have to make out a new bill for the remaining £20 payable in January. (After receiving your letter,†327 I immediately informed Freiligrath that the thing could not be proceeded with unless there was a certainty of renewal.)
Page me40.335

To my alarm I saw from your letter that you were ill again, and in the circumstances it was all the more embarrassing to me to have ANNOYED you. Please write by return saying how you are, or else get Dr Gumpert to write.
Page me40.335

After receiving the money, I promptly paid off as much as possible and yesterday sent my wife to Ramsgate, since there was not another day to be lost. She really is extraordinarily unwell. If Ramsgate isn't too expensive, and she is thus able to have several weeks of sea bathing, I believe all will soon be RIGHT again.

Page Break me40.336
MEANWHILE I shall see if there's anything to be done with my mother. How I should answer the old girl in regard to my relations with Prussia is a very ticklish point. It's just possible that she might fork out if she thought my inheritance was under threat from the authorities. But again it's just possible — since she seems to me to be making her will — that she might in that case put everything in the care of the Dutchman,†a which wouldn't suit me at all. Que faire dans cette situation?†b She writes saying her days are numbered, but I believe that's just a manner of speaking. She probably wanted me to invite her to London, as indeed I would certainly have done had my time not been precious to me just now. For the past 2 months I have hardly been able to work, and the Duncker business is becoming urgent.†c
Page me40.336
I have written a lot for the Tribune of late so as to replenish my account a bit, but I'm getting damnably short of material. India isn't my department. Cherbourg†328 would have provided me with ample opportunity for political epigrams, except that I'm too ignorant of military matters to give the thing the proper depth. To me — though it's an altogether subjective opinion, not to say a prejudice — Cherbourg would seem to be no more than a DODGE, like all Boustrapa's†40 grand doings, a mere SLEIGHT OF HAND. At any rate, the Moniteur, no less, contained certain ominous hints to the effect that the military authorities are by no means happy about the choice of the spot and have raised a host of circumstantial objections to the lay-out of the works. It is, furthermore, FAR FROM BEING FINISHED and, in its present state, represents rather what's to be than what is. The only thing that is completely finished is the big equestrian statue of Napoleon. In Central India, or so it seems to me, the fall of Gwalior settles the matter. The Indian papers are all very hostile to Campbell and critical of his 'tactics'.
Page me40.336
Enclosed a letter from Lassalle.†d Ephraim Artful is a curious fellow. He demands of me AN IMMENSE DEAL OF DISCRETION and puts on a great show of secrecy, yet the whole scrawl†e appears substantially in the Kölner Zeitung! There's a vein of absurd grandiloquence running through the man's letters. 'Then I addressed, etc., a trenchantly cutting memoir, etc.' 'I set Böckh and Humboldt in motion.' Humboldt wrote 'a fulminating letter'. 'I myself made a complaint direct to the Prince†f couched in the bluntest German.' 'Truly foudroyant†g arraignment of the minister†h.' 'Urgent plea.' 'In absolute confidence.' 'My biggest pistol.' 'Hopeless.' 'Utmost secrecy and discretion.' 'If that's not sauce for the gander, etc.'

Page Break me40.337
Page me40.337
Our friend Bürgers will soon be out of prison again now. His main idea, it seems, is to play father to Daniels' children and to that end, first take over the post of bedfellow to Mrs Daniels. The latter has, however, written to Lina†a saying that Bürgers isn't to be compared with her husband.
Page me40.337
Apropos, Lupus will be interested to hear that little Jenny has received THE FIRST GENERAL PRIZE IN THE FIRST CLASS (which also includes the English prize), and little Laura the second. They are the youngest in the class. Jenny also got the prize for French.

Page me40.337
Salut. I hope to hear some good news about your STATE OF HEALTH.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.337
The Telegraph (enclosed) is also to be kept.

Page me40.337
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

180
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.337
Manchester, 10 August 1858
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,
Back at the office again since yesterday. I wasn't ill, by the way, merely wounded SURGICALLY and, though the wound is not yet quite healed, the purpose has been achieved. In no circumstances shall I be in a condition to do a Tribune article before next week.
Page me40.337
How's the Appleton affair going? You once wrote saying you were enclosing two letters from America,†321 but you forgot to do so. Did they have any bearing on it? In a fortnight's time I shall probably be going to the seaside, where I might be able to get down to some hard work on the thing.

Page Break me40.338
Page me40.338
Ephraim's†a letter is strange indeed. How can anyone be so stupid as to part with something like that, actually put down in black and white? That's what I really call dubbing oneself a fool á perpétuité.
Page me40.338

Lupus and I send our hearty congratulations to the two girls†b on their achievements. The old chap was delighted about it. His leg is still not up to much. Borchardt undoubtedly treated the thing the wrong way and Lupus has mucked up matters by undue zeal and unnecessary foot-slogging. The thing might have other disagreeable, if not serious, consequences later on. He was in Buxton and then in Devonshire where he again had to endure the horror of bad hotels, got nothing to drink and was colossally fleeced.

Page me40.338

I hope your wife, too, is now better. The tailor will be able to have half the amount in October.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.338

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

181

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.338

[London,] 13 August 1858

Dear Engels,

I am delighted to hear that my fears about your health were unfounded.

Page me40.338

Of the two letters I meant to send you, one was from Weydemeyer (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) and the other from one A. Komp (New York), both of which arrived under the same cover. I had put them down on the table (my writing-table) to enclose them in my letter to you, forgot, and then couldn't find them. They are probably tucked away in one of the many notebooks that are strewn around, and will reappear when I leaf through them.†321

Page Break me40.339

Page me40.339

I know nothing about the Cyclopaedia save that I've seen an advertisement for the second volume in the Tribune.†a So it's still coming out and, if you have the leisure, you might occasionally do something for C. — subject, however, to two reservations: 1. I cannot go to the Museum†b just now; 2. it would be of more immediate advantage to me to increase my balance at the Tribune. This has already decreased slightly since my wife went away and I cannot in any case write twice for them myself, as it's impossible for me to deal with subjects such as India, Montenegro, China, Bonaparte's military railway system and his installations at Cherbourg.†328 Hence, as soon as time permits (and, OF COURSE, without physical HARM to yourself), I would greatly prefer it if, in the immediate future, you were to write more often for the Tribune, ON ANY SUBJECT WHATEVER.

Page me40.339

The sea is doing my wife a lot of good; at the beginning of this week she sent for all the children and Lenchen.†c SO FAR SO GOOD; the only snag is that, UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES, I shall hardly be able to let her stay there beyond next week. Mentally she is very much refreshed, but physically (save that her nerves are stronger) she is not yet all that she might be. In Ramsgate she has made the acquaintance of refined and, horribile dictu,†d clever Englishwomen. After years during which she has enjoyed only inferior company, if any at all, intercourse with people of her own kind seems to agree with her.

Page me40.339

Have you read the review in The Times of Gladstone's book on Homer?†e There is much that is amusing in it (the review). A work such as this is, by the by, typical of your Englishman's incompetence in matters of 'philology'.

Page me40.339

I presume that TRADE IN MANCHESTER is again LOOKING UP? Indeed, over the past few weeks the world has grown damned optimistic again.

Page me40.339

Mr Pyat, still oppressed by the fact that his name was not given due prominence during the recent political prosecutions, has published a fresh 'lettre'†f about his 'lettre' to the Parliament, containing a vindication of 'regicide'.†329 In order to compel the government to prosecute, he has flouted police regulations by letting the scrawl come out without the printer's name. But the government is inexorable. Pyat is not to be made a martyr, even to the tune of a 2/6d fine with COSTS in a magistrate's court. Le pauvre Sire!†a

Page Break me40.340

Page me40.340

Warm regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.340

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

182
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.340
[London,] 18 August 1858

Dear Engels,

If at all possible, let me have 1 ARTICLE on India or Cherbourg by Friday.†328 It's absolutely impossible for me to carry on any longer without an entremets of this kind. You will understand how bereft of material I am when I tell you that yesterday I wrote (via Ramsgate, where the fair copy was made†b) about the SLAVE-TRADE in Cuba.†330 On the other hand, it is now more than ever essential that I should jack up my credit a little.

Page me40.340

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.340

Apropos. I inserted — not directly, but through a channel viz. that of Liebknecht, who himself made use of yet another channel — Kinkel's advertisement of a trip to the LAKES in the

Page Break me40.341

Neue Zeit (a German rag in London).†a The thing caused a scandal. Kinkel now denies it. Important you should write to me about it.

Page me40.341

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

183
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.341
[London,] 21 September 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Haverstock Hill

DEAR Frederick,

You must exercise your customary forbearance and excuse my long silence. The indisposition from which I was suffering even before leaving Manchester again became chronic — persisting throughout the entire summer — so that any kind of writing costs me a tremendous effort. For the same reason my manuscript†b is only now about to go off (IN 2 WEEKS), but there will be 2 instalments AT ONCE. Even though I had nothing to do but correct the style of what had already been written, I might sometimes sit for hours before getting this or that phrase right. For ABOUT 8 DAYS, by the by, I have been much better and on the whole I find the cooler time of year more beneficial. Moreover, there is every prospect that, with my mother's help, I shall be able to put my domestic affairs entirely in order and also start to take HORSE EXERCISE again. The latter will be my prime concern, as soon as the BUSINESS has been attended to.

Page me40.341

Meanwhile I have been writing very regularly for the Tribune, as I have no desire to make these chaps a gift of any money.

Page me40.341

Find out from Lupus or (directly or indirectly) from Borchardt whether they know a Mrs von Paula (might sign herself Paulaw) who once lived in Breslau.†c If so, I have something curious to tell you.

Page Break me40.342

Page me40.342

Re Bangya, I had in my possession (but, alas, only for a few hours) some material relating to him — letters from Constantinople as well as cuttings from the Constantinople papers. The excerpts in The Free Press don't give such a clear idea of the thing.†a It's the affaire of the 'CHIEF of the dynasty'†b all over again. Kossuth would appear to be directly compromised. I have now SUMMONED him in the Tribune†c TO DECLARE HIMSELF!

Page me40.342

Apropos. I've had an amusing experience with the Tribune. By way of evaluating the 'REPORT of the COMMITTEE'†d on the late crisis I sent the paper several articles specifically relating to banking, CURRENCY, etc., which they published as LEADERS.†331 Along comes a BANKER, a self-styled 'BULLIONIST', and writes a letter to the Tribune†e in which he says 1. that never has so COMPREHENSIVE A SUMMARY of the whole subject been PENNED, etc., but 2. raises all kinds of objections and challenges the editors to reply. So reply the POOR DEVILS must needs do†f and INDEED VERY SAD WORK they made of it. But such incidents can only do me good.

Page me40.342

Our friend Jones HAS DECIDEDLY SOLD HIMSELF (BUT AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICE) TO THE BRIGHT COTERIE. The idiot has ruined himself politically without rescuing himself commercially. I'll cut out the articles relating to him in Reynolds's and send them to you. But how little his apostasy — the laddie is preaching UNION OF THE MIDDLE AND WORKING CLASSES — has availed him (he has sold

The People's Paper to the Morning Star fellows, has retained a mere couple of columns in the sheet for himself and is, moreover, already at loggerheads with his new allies over the financial terms) will be evident to you from the fact that the day before yesterday he went to Freiligrath and handed him a letter in German in which he asked for £4, failing which he would be 'locked up'. Freiligrath told him to address himself 'TO OUR FRIEND GILPIN'. That Gilpin is MANAGING DIRECTOR of the SWITZERLAND BANK and of the paper with which Jones has incorporated himself.
Page me40.342
If you possibly have time, write ANYTHING for Friday. I wrote about the Chinese Treaty yesterday.†332
Page me40.342
Lina†g is now STAYING with us, having lost her position again.
Page me40.342
Salut. Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.343
Page me40.343
Come what may, you must arrange to spend a few days here over Christmas or the New Year.
Page me40.343
According to the latest report in The Economist, French trade has got worse rather than better over recent months.†a (Give the enclosed to Lupus.)

Page me40.343
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

184
ENGELS TO MARX†1
IN LONDON
Page me40.343
Manchester, 7 October 1858

Dear Moor,
No doubt you will be writing about the Canning despatch tomorrow†333; THE THING IS OUT OF MY LATITUDE ALTOGETHER. I have not read the newspapers at all regularly of late and have had a great deal to do, since Ermen has been over there for the past fortnight and I am having to cope with the whole shop on my own. Business here is tremendously good; for the past 6 weeks the spinners have been making 1d á 1 1/4d more per pound on coarse and medium counts than for the past 3 years and — quite unprecedented this — the local market in yarn rose 1d before the Liverpool chaps were able to get another 1/4d for cotton. During the past 10-12 days the rise has slowed down somewhat, but all the spinners are booked up well ahead and demand is still quite strong enough to sustain prices. If it goes on like this much longer there'll be MOVEMENTS for increased wages. In France, too, the cotton spinners have for sometime been earning more than in recent years (this is positive; I have it from a cotton agent who was over there himself); how things look in other branches of commerce there I can't say exactly, but the state of the Bourse suggests a considerable improvement. All this looks damned rosy and the devil only knows how long it will last unless there is substantial overproduction with India and China in view. Trade must be absolutely splendid in India just now; the last Bombay MAIL but one advised sales — over a 14-day period — of 320,000 pieces of cotton cloth, and the last one a further 100,000. The chaps have already sold the whole lot forward, knowing only that it had been purchased in Manchester and not yet even shipped. Judging by the way the local philistines are talking and also by the state of the market, it seems to me that India and China will provide an immediate excuse for overproduction and, if we have a good winter, it may confidently be expected that kite-flying and the unbridled granting of credit will again go ahead merrily in the spring.

Page Break me40.344
Page me40.344

The Jones business is most distasteful. He held a meeting here and the speech he made was entirely in the spirit of the new alliance.†334 After that affair one might almost believe that the English proletarian movement in its old traditional Chartist form must perish utterly before it can evolve in a new and viable form. And yet it is not possible to foresee what the new form will look like. It seems to me, by the way, that there is in fact a connection between Jones' NEW MOVE, seen in conjunction with previous more or less successful attempts at such an alliance, and the fact that the English proletariat is actually becoming more and more bourgeois, so that the ultimate aim of this most bourgeois of all nations would appear to be the possession, alongside the bourgeoisie, of a bourgeois aristocracy and a bourgeois proletariat. In the case of a nation which exploits the entire world this is, of course, justified to some extent. Only a couple of thoroughly bad years might help here, but after the discoveries of gold these are no longer so easy to engineer. For the rest it is a complete mystery to me how the massive overproduction which caused the crisis has been absorbed; never before has such heavy flooding drained away so rapidly.
Page me40.344

Reynolds will become a prominent personage thanks to Jones' manoeuvre; he is the only 'educated' man (vulgo 'scholar') who still poses as the representative of the proletariat — au fond†a he is as bourgeois as Monsieur Jones has now become, though in a different way. For him this is a GODSEND. Be sure to send me the cuttings from his paper†b you promised me.
Page me40.344

There is still something wrong with Lupus' leg; he still can't walk fast without suffering for it, though he is walking passably well again.

Page Break me40.345
Page me40.345
The little German poetaster whose account of his adventures with Kinkel and Freiligrath appeared last summer in the Augsburger is called Isaak Levi, alias Julius Rodenberg, a schoolfellow of Gumpert's.
Page me40.345
If at all possible I shall come up for Christmas. It's splendid to hear that you will be arranging money matters with your mater. I hope this has meanwhile been done or is at least cut and dried. I am writing to Freiligrath today about the bill.
Page me40.345
Warm regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.345
Has the manuscript gone off†a?

Page me40.345
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

185
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.345
London, Friday, [8 October†b] 1858

DEAR Frederick,
You will today be receiving two packages AT ONCE since not all the stuff could go into one letter. It consists of:
Page me40.345
1. Cuttings from Reynolds's relating to Jones. You will see for yourself where Reynolds is conveying FACTS, and opinions based on FACTS, and where he is venting his spleen. Reynolds is a far greater rogue than Jones, but he is rich and a good speculator. The mere FACT THAT HE HAS TURNED AN OUT AND OUT CHARTIST shows that this position must STILL be a 'profitable' one. I have read the speech Jones made in Manchester.†334 Since you did not see his earlier SPEECHES in Greenwich, etc., you couldn't have detected that he is making another TURN and seeking again to bring the 'alliance' more into accord with his former attitude.

Page me40.345
2. Pyat's new lettre,†c which contains one or 2 FACTS that are INTERESTING, otherwise in his former manner.†329 The marks in the margin have been scribbled by my BABY†a and do not, therefore, have any bearing on the contents.

Page Break me40.346
Page me40.346
3. Mazzini's new manifesto.†b Still the same old jackass. Save that now he is gracious enough not to consider le salariat†c any longer as the absolute and final form. There's nothing funnier than the way he contradicts himself, on the one hand saying that in Italy the revolutionary party is organised according to his views and, on the other, proving after 'his own' fashion not only that it has the nation behind it, but also that there is every outward prospect of success — and finally fails to explain why, despite Dio e Popolo AND MAZZINI INTO THE BARGAIN, all is calm in Italy.
Page me40.346
4. A little cutting from the Cincinnati Hochwächter containing a letter from 'General' Willich.
Page me40.346
Considering the optimistic turn taken by world trade AT THIS MOMENT (although the vast accumulations of money in the BANKS of London, Paris and New York show that things cannot by any means be ALL RIGHT yet), it is some consolation at least that the revolution has begun in Russia, for I regard the convocation of 'NOTABLES' to Petersburg†335 as such a beginning. Similarly in Prussia things are worse than they were in 1847, and the ridiculous DELUSIONS AS TO THE MIDDLE CLASS PROPENSITIES OF THE PRINCE OF PRUSSIA will be exploded in an outburst of rage.†336 It will do the French no harm to see that, even without them, the world 'mov't' (Pennsylvania-fashion).†d At the same time exceptional movements are on foot amongst the Slavs, notably in Bohemia, which, though counter-revolutionary, yet provide ferment for the movement. The Russian war of 1854-55,†e wretched though it was and little though its consequences damaged the Russians (but rather the Turks), nevertheless clearly precipitated the present turn of events in Russia. The only circumstance which turned the Germans into mere satellites of France so far as their revolutionary movement was concerned, was the ATTITUDE of Russia. This absurdity will cease with an internal movement in MOSCOVY. As soon as the thing assumes clearer shape there, we shall have proof of the full extent to which the worthy Regierungsrat Haxthausen has allowed himself to be hoodwinked by the 'authorities' and by the peasants those authorities have trained.†337
Page me40.346
There is no denying that bourgeois society has for the second time experienced its 16th century, a 16th century which, I hope, will sound its death knell just as the first ushered it into the world. The proper task of bourgeois society is the creation of the world market, at least in outline, and of the production based on that market. Since the world is round, the colonisation of California and Australia and the opening up of China and Japan would seem to have completed this process. For us, the difficult QUESTION is this: on the Continent revolution is imminent and will, moreover, instantly assume a socialist character. Will it not necessarily be CRUSHED in this little corner of the earth, since the MOVEMENT of bourgeois society is still in the ASCENDANT over a far greater area?

Page Break me40.347

Page me40.347

So far as China in particular is concerned, I have, by carefully analysing the movement of trade since 1836, established first that by 1847 the surge in English and American exports between 1844 and 1846 had proved a complete fraud and that, in the 10 years that followed, the average remained pretty stationary whereas imports from China into England and America rose enormously; secondly, that the only result of the opening up of the 5 ports†338 and the annexation of Hong Kong was a shift of trade from Canton to Shanghai. The other 'EMPORIUMS' do not count. The main reason for the FAILURE of this market would seem to be the opium trade — to which, indeed, every increase in the export trade to China has invariably been confined; however, another factor is the country's internal economic organisation, its MINUTE AGRICULTURE, etc., to demolish which will take an enormously long time. England's present TREATY with China†332 which, in my view, was worked out by Palmerston jointly with the cabinet in Petersburg and was given to Lord Elgin to take with him on his journey, is A MOCKERY FROM BEGINNING TO END.
Page me40.347

Can you give me your sources for the PROGRESS of the Russians in Central Asia? I shall use the article†a for The Free Press, at any rate.
Page me40.347

My mother has suddenly and unexpectedly withdrawn into what, to me, is an inexplicable silence. I am inclined to think that third persons have put a spoke in the wheel. But the matter will resolve itself.
Page me40.347

Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.347
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.348

186
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.348
Manchester, 21 October 1858

Dear Moor,

For the past fortnight I've been VERY MUCH PUT OUT OF THE WAY by sundry slings and arrows — a rumpus at my LODGINGS necessitating a move and all that entails and, for good measure, a mass of other tiresome happenings. I haven't even found new LODGINGS yet and am hardly likely to be out of the TROUBLE before the end of next week.

Page me40.348

Much obliged for the stuff relating to Jones, Mazzini and Pyat, likewise the 'enthusiastic general'.†a The latter seems to have surrendered entirely to the vulgar German-American day-dream; habeat sibi,†b let him go hang. Quoad†c Jones, I should say that Reynolds's is a bit short on FACTS and presupposes some degree of familiarity with preceding events. This turn things have finally taken is hardly surprising in view of the contemptible way Monsieur Jones has already long been behaving. But simply to throw oneself away like that! Duncombe did at least get his debts paid and a good position into the bargain.

Page me40.348

Pyat and Mazzini, even by comparison with formerly, are distinguishing themselves by a surprising poverty of intelligence.

Page me40.348

Prospects for Mr Rudolf Schramm seem exceedingly poor. Now as always, the corporal†d is confiscating newspapers and, if the telegraphic despatches are to be believed, did not even swear an oath on the Constitution yesterday. At any rate, the joyous day-dream which the Prussian bourgeois have deluded each other into believing will very soon evaporate, but I agree with you when you say that this won't be the end of the affair.†336 However, I'm not yet clear as to what course it will take. I should say that the bourgeoisie has not yet got over 1848 and 1849 to such an extent as to summon up sufficient courage simultaneously to confront on the one hand the aristocracy and bureaucracy, and, on the other, proletarian unrest. However, it's possible that, so long as nothing is going on in France, the proletarian movement will for a time seem too slight a threat to be very intimidating; but in that case its progress will have to be damned slow. If nothing happens in France — which, in view of the present state of the Crédit mobilier's†45 shares, is hardly to be expected — Prussia might, of course, see the formation of a movement similar to the one in Italy during the years 1846-48, with a proletarian background. But otherwise I'm afraid the bourgeoisie may come round again before it's too late.

Page Break me40.349

Page me40.349

The Russian affair is turning out very well.†335 There is unrest in the South now, too. Apropos. Could you obtain for me from Tchorzewsky, or whoever Herzen's agent is now, a few of his more recent publications? After all, these ought to contain something, e.g. his Golosa iz Rossii (Voices from Russia) and the Kolokol (Bell). Some material might be found in them, though hardly very much — but certainly now and again in the correspondents' reports, etc., etc.

Page me40.349

My sources for the Central Asiatic stuff were Brockhaus' new volume Unsere Zeit†a (partly copied from the Preußisches Wochenblatt) and Petermann's geographical Mittheilungen.†b The material is all derived from Russian state papers. If you like I could write an article about the Russian treaty with China†339 (what a slap in the face for England and France!) for Tuesday, or thereabouts,†c i.e. if not prevented by my exodus. Let me know, and also send your further comments on the connection you suspect exists between the Elgin treaty and Pam.†d Or perhaps you have already dealt with this yourself?
Page me40.349

India is now quite outside my LATITUDE. From the military point of view nothing at all remains to be said. So desultory has everything become that it's not even possible to do a survey of one month's events. Altogether, I'm in a quandary about subjects for articles to send you.
Page me40.349

What's the position about the manuscript for Duncker†e? Now's YOUR TIME. Come what may, there'll be a new ministry which will probably be rather more hesitant about making its début with the confiscation of a scientific work. I hope it has gone off. But let me know for sure, so that I can reassure Lupus too. Last Sunday he arrived at my place very much the worse for drink, but was safely escorted home. Since then his leg has been rather worse again; no doubt it took a knock.

Page Break me40.350
Page me40.350

For the past four weeks, trade here has been going through a sticky period during which the spinners have had their profits cut by 1/2d per lb as a result of a fall in yarn and a rise in cotton. However, they are still doing good business and, if cotton again comes down a bit, as is quite possible, it will take only a minimal increase in demand to restore the situation. Moreover, there are signs here and there of moves by the workers to obtain higher wages and, if business continues good, these will gather force.
Page me40.350

How are things going with your mater? Best regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.350
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

187
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.350
[London,] Friday [22 October 1858]†340

Dear Engels,

I haven't a moment to lose today, for it's already 2 o'clock and I've still not begun the article.†341 I am just writing you these few lines to inform you that you must send something next week. Two articles a week means my spending an enormous amount of time hunting for material. Write about China. Another subject might be the ludicrous RIFLED CANNONS article in today's Times.†a

Page me40.350

Yesterday, after ages of silence, a letter arrived from Pieper — from the hospital in Dalston (London).

Page me40.350

My mother has written me a fatuous letter. She has postponed our discussion until such time as I 'shall' visit her. Obviously there has been interference by a third party.

Page Break me40.351

Page me40.351

The manuscript†a has not gone off yet and, Lupus or no Lupus, it will be weeks before I am able to send it.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.351

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

188
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.351
[London,] 2 November 1858

DEAR Frederick,

'Montalembert'†b WILL DO. Yesterday I wrote about Quasimodo's goings-on with the Portuguese.†342

Page me40.351

Enclosed you will find works by the great Blind, who now functions as a 'united' friend of the people. The £100 has also been remitted to him by Kinkel. Keep the stuff. You will observe that Pyat and Mazzini still stand head and shoulders above these German democrats in the matter of style, etc. Blind has also set his hand over here to the trade he learnt on the Mannheimer Abendzeitung. He gets a couple of acquaintances in Hamburg to send to English papers letters (composed by himself) in which mention is made of the stir created by his anonymous pamphlets.†343 His friends then write more letters, this time to the German press, saying what a fuss has been made by the English papers, etc. That, you see, is what it is to be a man of action.

Page me40.351

Paid a visit to 'unhappy' Pieper in hospital. Has a syphilitic boil on his forehead. Otherwise the same old Pieper. Probably won't be cured before the end of December, when he proposes to take a trip to Hanover.

Page Break me40.352

Page me40.352

I have the most damnable toothache and so can't write any more today.

Page me40.352

Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.352

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

189

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.352

[London,] 10 November 1858

DEAR Frederick,

For the past 10 days I have had the most appalling toothache and ulcers all over my mouth, i.e. inflammation of the gums, etc. HENCE IN VERY BAD HUMOUR, these having come on top of all my other troubles.

Page me40.352

Your article†a went off yesterday as of Friday, since I had sent nothing on that day. I myself wrote about the new Prussian ministry. Have now sent about six articles on Prussia dated Berlin to the Tribune.†b So I don't imagine that you will be able to have ANY NEW MATTER concerning Prussia for next Tuesday. One subject that might be worth writing about, though in this case I fear our COMMON MATERIAL GOES NOT VERY FAR, would be the growth of industry in Prussia over the last 10 years. But WHENCE obtain the 'material'? As regards Japan I imagine the Yankees know more about it than we do, though in fact their knowledge is always exceedingly superficial. Those engaged in high politics (e.g. Mr Pulszky in the Tribune) are blathering away about a possible war in Italy between Austria on the one hand and Bonaparte and Piedmont on the other. I regard all that as nonsense. Might it not, on the whole, be a good idea to say something sensible for once about Bonaparte's military position vis-á-vis Germany generally? If you don't like that topic, do something on France, say, or Russia, or ANYTHING ELSE.

Page Break me40.353

Page me40.353

I had forgotten to enclose Blind's 'pamphlets'.†343 Unfortunately I can't lay my hands on the most idiotic one, Aufruf an Schleswig-Holstein — yes, here it is at last. In addition I am sending you a speech by that clown Edgar Bauer from the London Neue Zeit.†a Keep the things.

Page me40.353

Next week I have to pay more than one pound interest at the pawnshop. As it's impossible for me to draw on the Tribune just now, I'd be grateful if you would send me the pound.

Page me40.353

Mind you write and tell me your opinion of Mr E. Bauer's 'Philosophy of History'.

Page me40.353

Salut. Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.353

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

190

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN

Page me40.353
London, 12 November 1858
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Post tot pericula!†b My answer to your last letter†c was held up by an infamous toothache. I didn't answer your letter from Frankfurt†d because you gave no address.
Page me40.353

Well, d'abord: beatus ille†e who is not seen through Köster's eyes but who sees with the eyes of Köster. I and Freiligrath had explained at length to Köster himself that throughout the summer the most severe liver trouble had virtually incapacitated me for work. And as for my 'splendid circumstances', Freiligrath and I had deemed fit to conjure up the brightest of pictures for the benefit of this average German bourgeois, while altogether concealing the darker side, since we both opined that even the best bourgeois of this type could not fail to derive a certain malicious satisfaction from the knowledge of what the fuorusciti's†a circumstances were really like. SO FAR Köster.

Page Break me40.354
Page me40.354

As regards the delay in sending off the manuscript,†b I was first prevented from doing so by illness, and subsequently had to catch up on the other 'bread and butter' work. But the real reason is this: the material was to hand and all that I was concerned with was the form. But to me the style of everything I wrote seemed tainted with liver trouble. And I have a twofold motive for not allowing this work to be spoiled on medical grounds:
Page me40.354

1. It is the product of 15 years of research, i.e. the best years of my life.
Page me40.354

2. In it an important view of social relations is scientifically expounded for the first time. Hence I owe it to the Party that the thing shouldn't be disfigured by the kind of heavy, wooden style proper to a disordered liver.
Page me40.354

My aim is not to produce an elegant exposé, but only to write as I usually do, which, during these months of sickness, was impossible — at least on this subject, although over the same period I was compelled to write, and hence did write, the equivalent of at least 2 printed volumes of English leading articles de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis.†c
Page me40.354

I believe that even if someone less intelligent than you were to acquaint Mr Duncker with this state of affairs, he could not but sanction a mode of conduct which, so far as he as a publisher was concerned, merely signified the endeavour to give him the best value for his money.
Page me40.354

I shall have finished about 4 weeks from now, having only just begun the actual writing.

Page me40.354

There is a further circumstance which, however, you should not put to him until the arrival of the manuscript. The first section, 'Capital in General', is likely to run to 2 instalments since I have discovered while elaborating it that here, at the very juncture where the most abstract aspect of political economy is to be discussed, undue brevity would render the thing indigestible to the public. But on the other hand this second instalment must come out at the same time as the first. This is demanded by their intrinsic coherence, and the whole effect depends upon it.

Page Break me40.355

Page me40.355

Apropos. In your letter from Frankfurt you said nothing about your economic work.†278 As far as our rivalry is concerned, I don't believe that the German public suffers from an embarras de richesses in this field. IN FACT economics as a science in the German sense of the word has yet to be tackled and to that end not just the two of us but a dozen will be needed. I hope, at any rate, that my work will result in drawing a number of better brains into the same field of research.

Page me40.355

I should be infinitely obliged to you if you could write to me from time to time about conditions in Prussia and send me the relevant newspaper clippings.

Page me40.355

My wife sends her regards and says she is afraid Köster is as mistaken about 'her beauty' as he is about her husband's health.

Page me40.355

Freiligrath likewise sends his regards. He is completely immersed in his profession of banker. Hence you should not hold his silence against him.

Page me40.355

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.355

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

191
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.355

[London,] 24 November 1858

DEAR Frederick,

Yesterday I wrote about Prussia.†a So for Friday you have all the rest of the world at your disposal.

Page me40.355

Have received the £1. The 'particular' pickle in which I find myself at the moment arises from the fact that I was compelled to pay out all AT ONCE more than £8 to the newspaper man, who had been giving me credit for over a year. I'm stone broke, which in this weather is not COMFORTABLE. In Trier, my sister†a would now seem to have frustrated my mother's perfectly rational INTENTIONS, or at least to have postponed THEIR REALISATION sine die.

Page Break me40.356

Page me40.356

Blind was here the day before yesterday with wife.†b It was over a year since I had seen this FAMILY. From them I learnt sundry pieces of gossip.

Page me40.356

1. Mrs Kinkel threw herself out of the window a week ago last Monday and has since been buried. Gottfried,†c with a sublimity all his own, attended the post-mortem and delivered an 'oration' at the graveside. Freiligrath is so moved that he'll shun me, as a 'frivolous' man, for a fortnight at least.

Page me40.356

2. Fröbel is over here. Has married a rich wife. Is returning to America. According to him Russia and America must share the world between them, a point of view that makes him feel very superior. He enthuses over American 'luxury' and GENTLEMANLIKENESS, despises the Germans and gives practical proof of this by engaging in the German slave trade to Central America. It's really too comical that, because deeply impressed by bourgeois society in its American reality, this son of Rudolstadt should believe himself more 'advanced' than the 'REST OF EUROPE'. Once they HAVE FOUND THEIR BREAD AND CHEESE, all these scoundrels require is some blasé pretext to bid farewell to the struggle.

Page me40.356

3. Asinine Ruge, in a piece for Prutz, has proved that 'Shakespeare was not a dramatic poet' because he 'had no philosophical system', whereas Schiller, being a Kantian, is a TRULY 'dramatic poet'.†d Prutz then wrote a 'vindication of Shakespeare'.†e In addition, Ruge described Moleschott in the American papers as 'a silly ass', whereupon Heinzen sacked him from the Pionier. However, the old bounder is now finding a place for his inanities in Börnstein's Anzeiger des Westens.

Page me40.356

4. The foolish Ewerbeck returned to Paris two years ago, corresponds regularly with Blind. Had let himself be inveigled by Ribbentrop into marrying Ribbentrop's maid, only to discover that the former was tumbling the latter, after which came divorce, lawsuit, etc. He was assistant in a Paris library, and was sacked by the priests. Writes to say he only has 1,200 frs left, threatens to come to England having read in the Univers, etc., that 'socialism and atheism' are flourishing in the latter country.

Page Break me40.357
Page me40.357

5. Dr Freund is said to be so down on his luck that he has allegedly approached people in the street for a shilling.

Page me40.357

6. Loutish Landolphe has reappeared in England as a beggar and through Blind's intervention, has been engaged by Dr Bronner at a German school in Bradford.

Page me40.357

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.357

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

192
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.357
[London,] 29 November 1858

DEAR Frederick,

ARTICLE received,†a VERY GOOD. Quoad†b Bonaparte, I have lately dealt with two separate points — the SHAM PROVOCATION of England in the Portuguese affair†342 and how the fellow is GENERALLY avenging Waterloo†217 only in so far as he can do so by SHAM DEMONSTRATIONS within the 'limits of the English alliance' and hence, IN FACT, with the permission of the English government, although he is, in reality, England's underling. Secondly, his edict re the CORN-GRANARIES,†c by which this 'socialist' proposes to remedy the ruinously LOW PRICES OF CORN — dangerously low, in view of the grumbles of the PEASANTRY — by creating an artificial demand at the BAKERS' expense.†d GENERALLY, A VERY DANGEROUS EXPERIMENT THIS, TO RAISE THE PRICE OF CORN THROUGH GOVERNMENT UKASES. Increasing the cost of bread will do more harm to his popularity in the towns than it can do good in the country.

Page Break me40.358
Page me40.358

I have not written about the GENERAL RISING of the bourgeoisie in Europe but did, of course, allude to it in what I wrote about Prussia. I have dealt with the Russian peasant movement ABOUT twice in 6 months,†a the second time simply to show that on the first occasion my diagnosis was correct.

Page me40.358

As regards the reform movement in England, all I have discussed latterly is Bright's meeting in Birmingham,†b the gist of the article being THAT HIS PROGRAMME IS A REDUCTION OF THE PEOPLE'S CHARTER TO THE MIDDLE CLASS STANDARD.†344 Earlier on, ABOUT 8-12 WEEKS ago (I think Parliament was actually still sitting), a piece to the effect that WHIGGISM MUST DISSOLVE AND COALESCE WITH TORYISM INTO THE PARTY OF THE ARISTOCRACY.†c That is all.

Page me40.358

My wife is copying the manuscript†d and it's hardly likely to go off before the end of this month. The reasons for the delay: long intervals of physical indisposition which, with the cold weather, has now come to an end. Too much domestic and financial TROUBLE. Finally, the first section is now longer because the two initial chapters, of which the first, The Commodity, did not appear at all in the rough draft while the second, Money, or Simple Circulation, was only sketched in the briefest outline, have been written at greater length than I originally planned.

Page me40.358

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.358

Mr Edgar Bauer is now the real, and Mr Lout and Weitlingian Scherzer the nominal, editor of the London Neue Zeit. Mr Edgar, of course, has a great deal to say on the subject of Mr Edgar and his lectures to the working men,†e for he himself writes about everything concerning Mr Edgar. This CLOWN deems it necessary to take a revolutionary TURN. He presided at the Robert Blum ceremony. In an essay in the last issue the CLOWN makes the discovery that 'imperialism' has now been introduced into Prussia in constitutional form.†a This same issue is not uninteresting by reason of an article from Struve's Sociale Republik†b which was, however, written over here by a certain Feibel and in which Freiligrath, on the occasion of the publication of his poems in America, had himself extolled AS THE TRUE HERO OF THE PROLETARIAN PARTY.

Page Break me40.359

Page me40.359

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

193
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.359
[London,] 11 December 1858

Dear Engels,

Can you let me have an account of Bright's MEETING by Tuesday, so worded as to make it clear THAT THE WRITER WAS AT MANCHESTER?

Page me40.359

Herewith Kinkeliana.†345 Freiligrath seems to think that, because the Kinkel woman has broken her neck, her husband has become a great man, or at very least a noble one. So melodramatically did Kinkel organise the funeral — with 'trembling hand' and 'laurel wreath', etc. — that Freiligrath, who could not wring from his lyre a single note of sorrow for the 'tragic' events, either in his own party (as at Daniels' death) or in the world GENERALLY (Cayenne,†346 Orsini AND SO FORTH), suddenly goes and hymns the wretched humbug. From The Daily Telegraph cutting you will see how the coterie is exploiting the death of the NASTY, 'acrimonious shrew' (for such was the affected, speciously clever, essentially coarse personage whose meanness was GLARINGLY displayed in, e.g., her ingratitude to Strodtmann and to Mrs von Brüningk once she had squeezed the latter dry, etc.) in just the same way as the creature herself exploited 'KINKEL'S HAT, SHOT THROUGH AND THROUGH', and wrote to Germany from London: 'Have you an idea what it is to be looked upon as a sort of mother to all emigrants?' That was what the creature wrote at a time when she and Gottfried, AS A SORT OF BEGGAR, were knocking at the doors of all the Jews in the City.

Page Break me40.360

Page me40.360

And there's something else I don't like in the palliative letter Freiligrath wrote me. I am expected to regard his opposition to the general craze for amnesty, i.e., IN FACT, to Rudolf Schramm's idiosyncrasy, as something revolutionary. But a few weeks ago our Freiligrath got himself naturalised English and would be a fool indeed were he to yearn nostalgically for the post of a badly paid clerk in Germany so long as those nice Crédits mobiliers†45 LAST. Very vividly do I remember Mrs Freiligrath — at a time when people were already drivelling about amnesty but the GENERAL BANK OF SWITZERLAND had as yet no place in the ROYAL EXCHANGE BUILDINGS — most earnestly seeking to persuade me not to raise any objection to the acceptance of amnesty.

Page me40.360

All these people sense THAT THERE IS SOMETHING MOVING AGAIN. And, of course, are pushing their way onto the stage bearing banners of liberty.
Page me40.360

Keep the enclosed poem and letter.
Page me40.360

In this house things look MORE DREARY AND DESOLATE THAN EVER. Since my wife cannot even arrange Christmas festivities for the children — instead, she is beset on all sides by dunning letters, on top of which she is having to copy my manuscript†a and, in between whiles, to run errands to the pawnshop in town — the atmosphere is gloomy in the extreme. Moreover, my wife is quite right when she says that, after all the misére she has had to go through, the revolution will only make things worse and afford her the gratification of seeing all the humbugs from here once again celebrating their victories over there. Women are like that. And the womanish behaviour of Freiligrath, etc., and other acquaintances justly embitters her. Á la guerre comme á la guerre,†b she says. But THERE IS NO guerre. It's day-to-day routine.
Page me40.360

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.360
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.361

194
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.361
London, 16 December 1858

Dear Engels,

MY BEST THANKS. How welcome the money was you will see from the enclosed letter, which arrived at the same time. It is my belief that Schapper and I and 100 others know better what it is to 'fight' in London than do the 'scattered remnants' beside the old harridan's†a grave. The Heckscher story calls for further investigation.

Nice of Freiligrath to give the signal for a Kinkel REVIVAL in Germany. For Lupus' amusement I enclose some of my Berlin GOSSIP articles†b which I have cut out of the Tribune; also your article on Montalembert, which Dana included under 'Paris', so that in that particular issue of the Tribune we represent the whole of Europe AT ONCE.†c
Page me40.361
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.361
News will soon reach Lupus that the manuscript†d has gone off, but I'll be blowed if anyone else in similar circumstances and with as rotten a liver could have got it done as soon.

Page me40.361
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.362

195
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.362
[London,] 17 December [1858]

DEAR Frederick,
£2 received with THANKS.
Page me40.362
I knew about Blind's confection (just the kind of thing, as he told me himself, that Hecker used to do), although I wasn't, of course, aware of some of the nicer details. D'abord,†a this Telegraph Morning Express is edited by several English Seilers, and all its telegraphic despatches, or at any rate the better part of them, are reprinted from London morning papers. I can vouch for the FACT that Blind smuggled a bogus 'TELEGR. DESPATCH' (dated Brussels) into The Morning Advertiser. This was, OF COURSE, instantly appropriated by the Telegraph Morning Express. Secondly, Dr Bronner is not merely an but the agent of Blind, [he] having 'no other' to send. I also believe it was he himself who 'decreed' that [the missive] be sent to Lupus, since Bronner never does anything [without] official sanction. In today's Daily Telegraph also, you will find in the letter from Berlin: 'Similar petitions have been presented to the (Holstein) Diet by the German merchants resident at Bradford and Liverpool.' The industry of these little Baden fleas hatched in the democratic midden is touching. Even the Ancients indulged in sundry edifying reflections on the subject of flea jumps.

Page me40.362

I've had a satisfying experience with the Tribune. For months that rotten sheet had published as LEADERS all my articles on China (a complete history of Anglo-Chinese trade,†b etc.) and had even been complimented on them. But when the official text of the Anglo-Chinese treaty†332 was finally released, I wrote an article in which I said inter alia that the Chinese 'would now legalise the import of opium, likewise put an IMPORT DUTY on opium and, LASTLY, might even permit the cultivation of opium actually in China', and thus the 'SECOND OPIUM WAR' would SOONER OR LATER deal a DEADLY BLOW to the English OPIUM TRADE, and notably to the INDIAN EXCHEQUER.†c WELL! Mr Dana printed this article as being from an 'OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT' in London, and himself wrote a bombastic LEADER

Page Break me40.363
refuting his 'OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT'.†a Now, [the day before yesterday]†b (on Monday, RATHER), my predictions were confirmed word for word in the HOUSE OF COMMONS by Fitzgerald and Stanley in the name of the Ministry.†347 So on Tuesday, qua 'OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT' I wrote a SOMEWHAT mocking though, of course, restrained piece about my 'castigator'.†348
Page me40.363

Apropos. My brother-in-law,†c a tall and tedious if worthy Dutchman, is coming up to Manchester on business. And notably to ascertain the solvency of certain individuals. Send me your private address, as he wishes to contact you. But avoid any allusion to my PRIVATE AFFAIRS.
Page me40.363

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.363

Little by little philistine Freiligrath is coughing up sundry things about Gottfried.†d 1. that Gottfried is sending Gerstenberg to see various MERCHANTS in the City, suggesting they subscribe to the Hermann. After all, says he, the poor man has got to 'live' and make up for the 'loss' incurred through the death of his wife. 2. He tells me that Gottfried, immediately after the Mockel woman's death, approached him and asked whether (and how big) a deal might be done with Cotta over her literary estate. 'After all', says Gottfried, 'I enjoy the favour of the public.'
Page me40.363

It could be that Blind himself is again hoodwinking The Morning Advertiser and getting friend Schütz to send bogus telegraphic despatches from Brussels.
Page me40.363

Cluss has married someone he met at Dr Wiss's in Baltimore.
Page me40.363

Apropos, on the strength of Blind's recommendation, Bronner has found Landolphe the grec†e a schoolmaster's post in Bradford.
Page me40.363
Mr Liebknecht has introduced Edgar Bauer into the Workers' Society.†50 I WATCH HIM.

Page me40.363
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.364

196
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.364
[London,] 22 December 1858

Dear Engels,
Yesterday I wrote about Buchanan's MESSAGE†349 — REVIEWED the English PAPERS' criticism thereof.†a I should be very glad if you could let me have an article by Friday on, say, Campbell's latest campaign, or ANYTHING ELSE. Since the manuscript†b must go off to Duncker before the end of this year there is, quite literally, no time to lose.
Page me40.364
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.364
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

197
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.364
London, 28 December 1858

A Happy New Year!
Ditto to Lupus.
Page me40.364
HOW WITH SERVIA?†350
Page me40.364
Salut.

K. Marx

Page me40.364
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.365

198
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.365
[London,] 30 December 1858

DEAR Frederick,
Of COLONEL Hodges it has been observed — and this puts the seal on Pam's participation in the Serbian affair — that he was a sort of Palmerstonian Bangya.
Page me40.365
I shall for a time again be writing articles on economics for the Tribune and also on Prussia,†a so all the rest of the world is at your disposal. In addition, yesterday I wrote about Ireland and the CONSPIRACIES there and the government's DODGE.†b Whenever I deal with a theme other than the two mentioned above I shall always advise you.
Page me40.365
Will you be so good as to send me Lupus' private address.
Page me40.365
Salut, and for the 2nd time, this time seasonably, a Happy New Year.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.365
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the manuscript

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.366

1859

199
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.366
[London,] 6 January 1859†a

Dear Engels,

Will you be so good as to send me Lupus' address.

Page me40.366

If you have done with Serbia,†350 there is fresh material READY to hand in the (proposed) changes in the Landwehr in Prussia, on which I shall have to report.†351 Today's Times contains a detailed account dated Vienna of the latest brouhaha in Serbia.†b

Page me40.366

While Mr Edgar Bauer is editor†c under THE AUSPICES of Scherzer and is even adopting 'class contradictions' and giving them a Berlin twist, Mr Gottfried Kinkel, who can't afford to let slip the opportunity presented by the Kinkel REVIVAL, is bringing out a weekly in London, to wit, the Hermann (not the Cheruscan, I presume, but Goethe's SIMPLETON).†352 Freiligrath, or so it seems from a brief note he sent me, is already REPENTANT of the BLUNDER†d he committed. If you write, tell him (but most politely, OF COURSE, for he complains about the crude, brash tone of your letters) that in Manchester there is much talk among the Germans about his alliance with Kinkel; you might also slip in Heckscher's anecdote, quoting your source. At this particular time it is of moment to us that Freiligrath should break with these swine for good.

Page me40.366

Apropos, Willich is now editing the gymnasts' paper in Cincinnati.†e Was 'selected' as editor there. He accepted the appointment (doubtless obtained for him by Cluss so as to rid himself of the man) in a superb circular letter in which he says that the time has come for him to take charge of propaganda since the people are not in need of military leaders just now.

Page Break me40.367

Page me40.367
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.367
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

200
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.367
[London,] 8 January 1859

DEAR Frederick,
Herewith letter from Freiligrath. (I had written him something about the Kinkel affair.) Prospectus for the Hermann.†353 Mr Willich's letter.
Page me40.367
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.367
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

201
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.367
[London, between 13 and 15 January 1859]†354

Dear Engels,

If possible, let me have an article by Tuesday (I would then do next Friday's†a); this is crucial, as I'd like to be able to send Duncker my manuscript†a by Wednesday, which would be impossible unless I have Tuesday free.

Page Break me40.368
Page me40.368

The manuscript amounts to ABOUT 12 sheets of print (3 instalments) and — don't be bowled over by this — although entitled Capital in General, these instalments contain nothing as yet on the subject of capital, but only the two chapters: 1. The Commodity, 2. Money or Simple Circulation. As you can see, the part that was worked out in detail (in May, when I was staying with you†318) is not to appear at all yet.†355 This is good on two counts. If the thing is a success, the third chapter on capital can follow very soon. Secondly, since the matter in the published part will, by its very nature, prevent the curs from confining their criticism solely to tendentious vituperation, and since the whole thing has an EXCEEDINGLY serious and scientific air, the canaille will later on be compelled to take my views on capital RATHER SERIOUSLY. Besides, I believe that, all practical considerations apart, the chapter on money will be of interest to experts.
Page me40.368

I have had to alter your article on Bonaparte-Italy†b somewhat, having myself written about the same subject on Tuesday.†c Among the AGENCIES which are egging Bonaparte on you forget Russia. Pam did not visit Paris for nothing, nor were the Russian MOVES IN ITALY without significance, nor yet Russia's coquetry with Bonaparte since the Peace of Paris.†356 If Russia does no more than compel the Austrians, through Bonaparte, to sack their minister Buol and replace him with a Pan-Slav Russian agent, she will have achieved a great deal.
Page me40.368

As Berlin correspondent I have promised an article on the Prussian army which you might do ONE OF THESE DAYS.†351
Page me40.368

In the American press Ruge is emerging as the fanatical champion of the Prince of Prussia. Schramm†d has been given permission to return to Prussia (the warrant against him having been withdrawn) and to appear before a new jury without undergoing preventive detention.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.368
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.369

202
MARX TO ENGELS†82
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.369
[London,] 21 January [1859]

Dear Engels,

The ill-fated manuscript†a is ready but can't be sent off as I haven't a FARTHING for postage or insurance. This last is essential since I have no copy of it. Hence I must ask you to let me have a little money by Monday (POST OFFICE IN TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD CORNER). If you could send £2 it would be most welcome as I have put off paying various small tradesmen until Monday, after which any further postponements will be absolutely out of the question. As you can imagine, it is far from pleasant for me to burden you again just now when you have paid, or have got to pay, Freiligrath's bill. BUT IRON NECESSITY. Next week — as I am giving myself a week's holiday quoad†b the next part of the manuscript — I shall see if I can't manage to pull off some financial coup or other. I don't suppose anyone has ever written about 'money' when so short of the stuff. Most autores on this SUBJECT have been on terms of the utmost amity with THE SUBJECT OF THEIR RESEARCHES.
Page me40.369

Should the thing prove a success in Berlin, there's a chance that I might get out of all this mess. It's HIGH TIME I did.
Page me40.369

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.369

If the thing proves a success in Berlin, it might be possible to strike a bargain with a London publisher in respect of an English translation, and there's no comparison between what one is paid over here and in Berlin. Besides, such an EVENT would dreadfully annoy our worthy enemies. The canaille believed that we were both of us done for — the more so just now when Mr Clown 'Edgar Bauer' has 'supplanted' us 'in the eyes of working-men', as Gottfried Kinkel is telling all and sundry in the City. With every word they publish, the canaille are making out their own death warrants and well may they wonder what 'SORT OF LIFE' we have preserved.

Page Break me40.370
Page me40.370

I'm uncertain whether I should mark the thing 'THE AUTHOR RESERVES TO HIMSELF THE RIGHT OF TRANSLATION'. (As you know, there's a copyright agreement between Prussia and England.) My aversion to all humbug and semblance of vanity or pretentiousness says 'No'. On the other hand my own interests say 'Yes'. The more so since some scrawl about monetary matters is published almost weekly in England. WHAT DO YOU THINK, SIR? This point requires an immediate answer since I myself must decide by Monday.

Page me40.370
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

203
ENGELS TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH†357
IN LONDON
Page me40.370
[Draft]
Manchester, 25 January 1859

Dear Freiligrath,

The bloody boy who was to have got the POST OFFICE ORDER yesterday idled away the time instead, which is why the 22/- will only arrive today. Many thanks for your trouble and for the outlay.

Page me40.370

As to the Neueste Rheinische Zeitung,†358 due provision has been made, never fear. We have in the meanwhile learnt a great deal and forgotten nothing,†359 and that's more than the others can say. Of this you could find no better illustration than the Hermann (clearly a misprint for Gottfried, otherwise the title's meaningless†a), which you recently described as the Rheinische Zeitung's John the Baptist. It's a long time since I've read rubbish as insipid, namby-pamby, tail-wagging, lavish of compliments, conciliatory, propitiatory and atrociously written as is found in this, the latest product of the pseudo-noble sometime Maikäfer†360 which, to judge by its style and content, is aimed solely at and tailored to the tastes of the Camberwell philistines and the German ditto in the City. The man has even forgotten what little he managed to pick up in 1848 and has become a real bourgeois windbag. Now, since it was you who brought up the topic of this cheery customer, presently touting round his 'grief', I will not conceal from you the fact that I have recently been asked by various philistines how it is that you have formed such a bond of friendship with Monsieur Kinkel. Though an exaggeration, this placed me, as you can imagine, in something of a quandary. Needless to say, I attributed it largely to the malicious exaggeration with which Kinkel and clique had seized on what was a mere encounter with you and blazoned it in all the papers as an offensive and defensive alliance — directed against us — and this I roundly denied. As for your social intercourse with the worthy citizen, all I could do was crack bad jokes, such as that, since poets live in a world apart, Kinkel could only pass himself off as a poet by citing his intercourse with you, etc. Suffice it to say that, although a poor diplomat, I succeeded well enough in defending the party's position. Moreover, it eventually transpired that one of the Jewish females who patronised the gentle Gottfried when he was last up here, had said: 'Ah, just let Kinkel, the naughty man, visit Manchester again — he seduced a girl of good family in London and keeps her as his mistress, and that's the reason why his wife....'†a

Page Break me40.371

Page me40.371
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

204
MARX TO ENGELS†361
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.371
[London, 26 January 1859]

DEAR Frederick,

The £2 safely received; the manuscript†b gone off; wrote ECONOMICAL REVIEW for the Tribune yesterday.
Page me40.371

More tomorrow, and SOMETHING VERY AMUSING TOO.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.371
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.372

205
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.372

[Manchester,] 27 January 1859

Dear Moor,

I look forward keenly to your communication. Meanwhile herewith some bits of Paris gossip.

Page me40.372

Yesterday I wrote to Freiligrath about Kinkel, the pretext being provided by the good fellow himself. I had written to him about the matter of the bill, adding a few comments on the political and economic aspects of the international situation, and this inspired him to declare: 'The Hermann will undoubtedly be followed one day by a Neueste Rheinische Zeitung.'†358 What led him to mention Kinkel's rag I cannot imagine, unless he hoped to induce me to speak my mind on the subject of Johann Gottfried,†a in which case he was not disappointed. I must say that his attempt to establish some sort of connection between ourselves and that rotten little paper annoyed me very much. The day before yesterday I tried twice to write him a letter,†b but it was too crude, I was too angry, so I left the thing over until yesterday. I treated him very decently, but Monsieur Gottfried with considerable asperity. I told him that Kinkel was exploiting him in order to establish his credentials as a poet, since his own literary fame, spuriously acquired as a result of his wife's importunate advertising, would not otherwise endure; that the Hermann had only served to increase the contempt I had always felt for this vacuous, affected, dandyish jackanapes, and that I'd not forgiven the 'cur' the dirty tricks which he had played on you and me in America and was too cowardly to admit.†362 It was a three page letter; as I said, Freiligrath can have no complaint about the way I treated him but, indirectly and by reading between the lines, he will learn a great deal. I'm curious to see what he will do.

Page me40.372

I have had another visitor in the person of a Wuppertal poet and distant relation†c of mine; in London he made straight for Freiligrath, of course, who wrote saying that he seemed to be a nice chap. I replied that he was at any rate robust, healthy and neither vain nor affected — qualities which, modern German poets being what they are, made up for a comparative lack of talent. Freiligrath told this chap that his salary was a thousand pounds.

Page Break me40.373

Page me40.373

I was terribly annoyed at Freiligrath's surreptitious introduction of the Hermann into his letter, but he'll never play another trick of that kind on me, you may be sure of that.

Page me40.373

Many regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.373

Just for a joke I enclose one of the rejected drafts of my letter to Freiligrath.

Page me40.373
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

206
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.373
[London,] 28 January 1859

DEAR Engels,

All manner of TROUBLES prevented me from writing to you yesterday. Today is article day.†a Till tomorrow, then. But I enclose the 'joke'.
Page me40.373

I am writing today about Clotilde mild, angelic child.†363 I expect an article from you on Tuesday. Couldn't you write about the cotton trade, industrial prospects, etc., in Manchester? I deliberately left this field open in my economic article on Tuesday.†361
Page me40.373

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.373

Freiligrath showed me your letter. It's splendidly written.

Page me40.373
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.374

207
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†1
IN MILWAUKEE
Page me40.374

London, 1 February 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Weiwi,

Your letter is dated 28 February 1858, arrived here (or at any rate reached me) at the end of May and is being answered in February 1859.†321 This is easily explained: During the whole of the spring and summer I suffered from liver trouble and it was only with difficulty that I found time for essential work. Hence such writing as was not absolutely necessary was OUT OF THE QUESTION. Later in the year, however, I was overwhelmed with work.

Page me40.374

Well, to start with, I must convey cordial regards to you and yours from all members of the family, likewise from Engels, Lupus and Freiligrath. In particular I would wish to be most kindly remembered to your dear wife.

Page me40.374

Engels is still in Manchester, also Lupus, who is giving lessons and doing moderately well; Freiligrath is MANAGER of a branch of the Swiss Crédit mobilier†364 in London; Dronke is a commission agent in Glasgow; Imandt (I'm not sure if you know him) is a teacher in Dundee; our dear friend Weerth died in Haiti,†365 alas, — an irreplaceable loss.

Page me40.374

Things have gone badly rather than well for me during the past 2 years; for on the one side the good old Tribune made the crisis a pretext for halving my income although in times of prosperity they never gave me an extra penny; on the other, the time demanded by my work on political economy (of which more anon) compelled me (if with a heavy heart) to turn down very remunerative offers made me in London and Vienna. But I have got to pursue my object through thick and thin and not allow bourgeois society to turn me into a MONEY-MAKING MACHINE.

Page me40.374

Mr Cluss was over here last May. I happened to be staying with Engels in Manchester at the time. Cluss called on my wife and accepted an invitation for the following day; and who failed to put in an appearance? Why, Cluss! He [dis]appeared from London and never showed his face again. Instead he sent my wife a scrawl to which 'embarrassment' had given an uncouth tournure.†a He didn't turn up in Manchester either. Subsequently we learned that he had allied himself with Mr Willich. This, then, also explains the mysterious discontinuation of his correspondence. If we were conceited we would feel duly chastened by the news that a fool like Willich had been able to oust us from the good graces of a shrewd chap like Cluss. But as it was, the whole story was so funny that it eliminated any bitter feelings.

Page Break me40.375

Page me40.375

I have broken with Ernest Jones.†245 Despite my repeated warnings, and although I had predicted exactly what would happen — namely that he would ruin himself and disorganise the Chartist Party — he took the course of trying to come to terms with the BOURGEOIS RADICALS. HE IS NOW A RUINED MAN, but the harm he has done to the English proletariat is incalculable. The fault will, of course, be rectified, but a most favourable moment for action has been missed. Imagine an army whose general goes over to the enemy camp on the eve of battle.

Page me40.375

You'll have heard that Mr Kinkel has become a famous man again because Mrs Kinkel fell out of a window and broke her neck. The 'cheery' customer — never has he felt so jolly as since the death of the old Mockel woman — promptly decided to tout round his 'grief'. Freiligrath allowed himself to be misled by Gottfried's melodramatic scenes into writing a poem about Johanna†b which he already regrets. For he has come to realise, firstly, that Gottfried is merry as a grig, and secondly that he immediately used the poem to disseminate to all and sundry the lie that Freiligrath had entered into an alliance with him and broken with us. A week later, in an attempt to exploit the Kinkel REVIVAL sparked off by his wife's death, Gottfried published in London a weekly dubbed the Hermann; unless this is the Hermann sung by Schönaich†c and crowned by Gottsched,†366 the title ought to be Gottfried. In the first place the rag preaches peace with God and the world,†d and secondly it is nothing more than a puff for Mr Gottfried vis-á-vis German Philistia in the City of London. Nothing more pitiful has ever seen the light of day, and we can thank our stars that the 10 years of exile have so completely laid bare the hollowness of our democratic friends. The Kölnische Zeitung is witty and daring by comparison.

Page Break me40.376
Page me40.376

What is really choice about Kinkel's exploitation of his wife's death is that the latter creature, who was suffering from heart disease, was outraged because our suave parson had seduced a Jewess by the name of Herz, and generally treated her 'coldly'. In Manchester the Jewish women swear that this is the reason why Johanna Mockel of blessed memory fell out of the window. Anyhow, this would show that, inane though Gottfried may be in other respects, he is cunning enough to exploit public CREDULITY. But that's enough about this humbug.
Page me40.376

The wind of revolution which is blowing across the Continent of Europe has, of course, awakened all the great men†367 from their winter sleep.
Page me40.376

At the same time as this letter, I am sending one — indeed, my first — to Komp. I have given up associations — organised ones. They were, I thought, compromising for our friends in Germany. Over here, on the other hand, after the dirty tricks I have suffered at the hands of the louts who have allowed themselves to be used as mere tools against myself by a Kinkel, a Willich or some other such humbug, and since the Cologne trial,†71 I have withdrawn completely into my study. My time was too precious to be wasted in fruitless endeavour and petty squabbles.
Page me40.376

And now for essentials. My Critique of Political Economy is to be published in instalments (the first ones in a week or ten days' time†a) by Franz Duncker of Berlin (Bessersche Verlagsbuchhandlung). It was only thanks to Lassalle's extraordinary zeal and powers of persuasion that Duncker was induced to take this step. He has, however, left himself a loophole. A firm contract depends on the sale of the first instalments.

Page me40.376
I divide the whole of political economy into 6 books.
Page me40.376
Capital; landed property; wage labour; the State; foreign trade; world market.
Page me40.376
Book I, on capital, comprises 4 sections.
Page me40.376
Section I: Capital in general comprises 3 chapters, 1. The Commodity; 2. Money, or simple circulation; 3. Capital. 1 and 2, ABOUT 10 sheets, make up the contents of the first instalments to be published. You will understand the political motives that led me to hold back the third chapter on 'Capital' until I have again become established.
Page me40.376
The contents of the instalments now being published are as follows:

Page Break me40.377
Page me40.377
Chapter One: The Commodity
Page me40.377
A. Historical notes on the analysis of commodities. {William Petty (Englishman, Charles II's reign); Boisguillebert (Louis XIV); B. Franklin (first of his early works 1729)†a; the Physiocrats; Sir James Steuart; Adam Smith; Ricardo and Sismondi.}
Page me40.377
Chapter Two: Money or simple circulation
Page me40.377
1. Measure of value
Page me40.377
B. Theories of the standard of money. (Late 17th century, Locke and Lowndes, Bishop Berkeley (1750)†b; Sir James Steuart; Lord Castlereagh; Thomas Attwood; John Gray; Proudhonists.)
Page me40.377
2. Medium of circulation
a) The metamorphosis of commodities
b) The circulation of money
c) Coin. Token of value
Page me40.377
3. Money
a) Hoarding
b) Means of payment
c) MONEY OF THE WORLD
Page me40.377
4. The Precious metals
Page me40.377

C. Theories of the medium of circulation and of money. {Monetary system; Spectator,†368 Montesquieu, David Hume; Sir James Steuart; A. Smith, J.-B. Say; Bullion Committee,†c Ricardo, James Mill; Lord Overstone and school; Thomas Tooke (James Wilson, John Fullarton).}
Page me40.377
In these two chapters the Proudhonist socialism now FASHIONABLE in France — which wants to retain private production while organising the exchange of private products, to have commodities but not money — is demolished to its very foundations. Communism must above all rid itself of this 'false brother'.†d But apart from all polemical aims, the analysis of simple money forms is, you know, the most difficult because the most abstract part of political economy.
Page me40.377
I hope to win a scientific victory for our party. But the latter must itself now show whether its numbers are great enough to buy enough copies to banish the publisher's 'moral scruples'. The continuation of the venture depends on the sale of the first instalments. Once I've got a firm contract, everything will be ALL RIGHT.

Page Break me40.378
Page me40.378
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.378
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 32, 1906-07 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

208
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†82
IN BERLIN
Page me40.378
London, 2 February 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,
The manuscript†a went off from here on 26 January; by 31 January notification had already got back here from Berlin that the manuscript had arrived. The parcels company received this notification from their correspondent. On the other hand there is your letter dated 31 January in which you say the manuscript hasn't arrived. So whatever the circumstances the Prussian government — friend Stieber perhaps — has spent 3 days rummaging through†b the manuscript. Legally, so far as I am aware, all they were empowered to do was ascertain whether the parcel contained Brussels lace, other parcels being no concern of theirs. Who is going to assure me that some junior official hasn't amused himself by using a page or 2 for spills?

Page me40.378
I presume that, in its own interest, the Prussian government hasn't taken any FALSE STEPS with my manuscript. Otherwise I should see to it that all hell was let loose in the London press (Times, etc.).

Page Break me40.379
Page me40.379
I shall write you a proper letter tomorrow or the day after. This is simply a business notification, and it's nearly time for the post.
Page me40.379
Your piece, BY THE BY, pleased me enormously.
Page me40.379
My wife sends her kindest regards; now that her cher frére has been dismissed,†a she believes that manuscripts, at any rate, may safely be sent to Berlin.
Page me40.379
Salut.

Your
K. Marx

Page me40.379
I may bring out an English version of the first instalments straight away. Duncker must put on the title-page: 'The author reserves to himself the right of translation'.

Page me40.379
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

209
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.379
[London,] 2 February 1859

DEAR Frederick,
The Constitutionnel wins since, according to The Times, the author was none other than Mr Boustrapa.†369

Page me40.379

Today came a letter (which I'll send you later) from Lassalle saying that the manuscript†b has not yet arrived. Now take note: It went off on Tuesday (25); I was notified as early as 30th January by the PACKET COMPANY here that the manuscript had arrived in Berlin. Lassalle's letter is dated 31 January. Hence the government has been holding back my manuscript for 3 or 4 days at least (if Duncker got the manuscript after Lassalle's letter went off). Maybe Mr Stieber has been rummaging through†c it, or Mr von Patow has been endeavouring to make a hasty acquaintance with economics.

Page Break me40.380

Wrote to Lassalle straight off. Your philistines have intercepted the stuff you were sending me (for Tuesday). It didn't arrive. I waited until 3 in the afternoon. Then I dashed off another article.

Page me40.380

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.380

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

210

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†100

IN BERLIN

Page me40.380

London, 4 February 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

I've not yet had an acknowledgment of receipt from Mr Duncker and am therefore still in doubt whether the manuscript†a is yet out of the clutches of the authorities. You will see from the enclosed note that it left London on 26 January.

Page me40.380

Ad vocem bellum†b: The general view here is that war in Italy is inevitable.†370 This much is certain: Mr Emmanuel†c is in earnest and Mr Bonaparte was in earnest. What has swayed the latter is 1. Fear of Italian daggers.†371 Since Orsini's death, he has been constantly engaged in secret intrigues with the Carbonari, the go-between being Plon-Plon, the husband of 'Clotilde'.†d 2. An exceedingly bleak financial situation: it is, in fact, impossible to go on feeding the French army 'in peacetime'; Lombardy is fat and fertile. Moreover a war would again make 'war loans' possible. Any other loan is 'impossible'. 3. Over the last two years Bonaparte's repute has dwindled daily amongst all parties in France, and his diplomatic TRANSACTIONS have also been a succession of FAILURES. So something has got to happen if his prestige is to be restored. Even in the rural areas there is a great deal of grumbling about the ruinously low price of grain and Mr Bonaparte has tried in vain to push up the price of wheat artificially by means of his decrees on granaries.†a 4. The parvenu in the Tuileries is being egged on by Russia. Given the Pan-Slav movement in Bohemia, Moravia, Galicia, southern, northern and eastern Hungary, Illyria, etc., and a war in Italy, Russia would almost certainly break the resistance that Austria continues to offer her. (Russia regards the prospect of an internal agrarian revolution with horror, and war abroad might come as a welcome diversion to the government, quite apart from any diplomatic objectives.) 5. Mr Plon-Plon, son of the ex-King of Westphalia,†b and his clique (headed by Girardin and a very mixed bag of Hungarian, Polish and Italian pseudo-revolutionaries) are doing all in their power to force the issue. 6. A war against Austria in Italy is the only one in which England, who cannot take a direct stand for the Pope, etc., and against so-called liberty, would remain neutral, at least at the start. Russia, however, would keep Prussia in check should the latter feel inclined, which I doubt, to intervene at the very outset of the campaign.

Page Break me40.381
Page me40.381

On the other hand one may be perfectly sure that Mr Louis Bonaparte is devilishly afraid of a really serious war. 1. The man is always full of misgivings and, like all gamblers, is far from resolute. He has always inched his way to the Rubicon,†372 but those standing behind him have invariably had to chuck him in. In every case — Boulogne, Strasbourg, December 1851†373 — he was, in the end, forced to proceed in earnest with his plans. 2. The exceptionally cool reception accorded his scheme in France is not encouraging, of course. The masses appear to be INDIFFERENT. On the other hand there have been outright and earnest remonstrations against it on the part of high finance, trade and industry, the clerical party and, finally, the senior generals (Pélissier, for example, and Canrobert). Indeed, prospects on the military side are far from rosy, even if the braggadocio in the Constitutionnel†c is taken at its face value. Assuming France can muster all in all 700,000 men, 580,000 of these, at the very highest estimate, will be fit for military service. Deduct 50,000 for Algiers; 49,000 gendarmes, etc.; 100,000 (minimum) for guarding the cities (Paris, etc.) and fortresses of France; 181,000 at least for the army keeping watch on the Swiss, German and Belgian frontiers. This leaves 200,000 which, even if you add the minuscule Piedmontese army, is by no means AN OVERWHELMING FORCE to employ against the Austrians in their fortified positions on the Mincio and the Adige.

Page Break me40.382
Page me40.382

However that may be, if Mr Bonaparte draws back now, he will be done for so far as the bulk of the French army is concerned; and this might ultimately induce him to go ahead after all.

Page me40.382

You apparently believe that in the event of such a war Hungary would rise. I very much doubt it. Austria will, of course, place a corps on the Galician-Hungarian frontier to observe the Russians, and this will simultaneously keep the Hungarians in check. The Hungarian regiments (in so far as they have not — and many of them already have — been dispersed among their enemies, e.g. the Czechs, Serbs, Slovenes, etc.) will be stationed in German provinces.

Page me40.382

The war would, of course, have serious, and without doubt ultimately revolutionary consequences. But initially it will maintain Bonapartism in France, set back the internal movement within England and Russia, revive the pettiest nationalist passions in Germany, etc., and hence, in my view, its initial effect will everywhere be counter-revolutionary.

Page me40.382

Be that as it may, you should expect nothing of the émigrés here. Apart from Mazzini who, at least, is a fanatic, they're a bunch of confidence tricksters whose one ambition is to extract money from the English. Mr Kossuth has positively sunk to the level of an itinerant LECTURER who hawks the same old nonsense round the various PROVINCES of England and Scotland and sells it over and over again to ever new audiences.†a

Page me40.382

The scoundrels here have all become so conservative that they would indeed deserve to be amnestied. Mr Gottfried Kinkel, for example, is publishing a weekly here, Hermann by name, compared with which even the Kölnische Zeitung is a daring and witty paper. (By indulging in sundry flirtations with aesthetic Jewesses, the suave, melodramatic parson is said, amongst other things, to have driven his wife to fall out of the window and break her neck. Freiligrath, being a kind-hearted fellow, was so taken in by the scenes of grief that he wrote a poem about the late Johanna Mockel,†b only to discover a day or two later that the grief was merely feigned and that never had Mr Gottfried felt so FREE and EASY as since the death of his spouse.) The fellow preaches 'optimism' in a namby-pamby, hat-doffing, somewhat breathless manner. The paper should be called Gottfried. For my part I would rather write under Manteuffel's yoke than under that of the German philistines in the City of London. To Mr Kinkel, however, the yoke is all the sweeter and lighter for the fact of his being not one jot superior to the said philistines where character and insight are concerned. The to-do made by the 'Lewald' woman, alias 'Stahr', about the late Mockel has compromised the latter person still further.†374

Page Break me40.383

Page me40.383

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me40.383
It would be a great help to me if you could obtain in Breslau,†a and let me have as soon as possible, particulars about a person of the female sex by the name (allegedly) of von Paula-Kröcher, who used to live there and is now over here.

Page me40.383
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

211
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.383
[London,] 8 February 1859

Dear Engels,
It's a fortnight ago today since I sent the manuscript†b to Berlin; since then 2 letters have gone off to Lassalle; up to this moment I've had no acknowledgment of receipt. Moreover, I had made this 'acknowledgment of receipt' a condition for the despatch of the preface. As you can imagine, one begins to lose all patience when everything goes so wrong. I am quite ill with vexation.

Page Break me40.384
Page me40.384
Herewith Lassalle's letter. Let me have it back.
Page me40.384
Today I have written about Bonaparte's rotten speech and his pamphlet.†a†375
Page me40.384
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.384
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

212
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.384
[London,] 9 February 1859

Dear Engels,

At last a letter from Duncker today. He didn't receive the manuscript†b until 1 February. Not printed this week, because just completing some work or other — I don't know which — of Lassalle's.†c

Page me40.384

Enclosed a letter from Eccarius and Pfänder from which you will see that poor Eccarius is down with consumption. This is the most tragic thing I have yet experienced here in London.

Page me40.384

Pieper, who had been discharged as cured, is back from Bognor again and in the German hospital. This time starvation treatment. SERVES HIM RIGHT.

Page me40.384

I meant to send you the enclosed letters from Weydemeyer and Komp long ago.†321 I have at last replied to them.†d

Page me40.384

Dronke has been to Bonn, where one of his brothers was dying. Having obtained Flottwell's permission, he attended a ball given by his [students'] 'corps' in Bonn. The little man†a has written to Dingelstedt (of Fulda), through whom he hopes to arrange a performance of a play he himself has written. In addition, the little man writes 'Glasgower Briefe' for Prutz's Museum.†b I had all this news from philistine Freiligrath.

Page Break me40.385

Page me40.385

From the latter, who came to see me yesterday (I myself being confined to the house with a bad throat), I also learned that Gottfried's — or Hermann's†c — behaviour towards ladies is invariably so ludicrous (the buffoon now supposes he need only throw down his handkerchief) that he has become an object of general dégoût.†d Moreover, Freiligrath has now also tumbled to the fact that Gottfried feels exceptionally 'FREE AND EASY' now that the Mockel woman†e is dead and — strangest of all — it now transpires that, even before the day of the funeral, philistine Freiligrath and wife had discovered brother Hermann's 'lack of concern'.

Page me40.385

According to Gottfried, the Hermann, to which the Prussian government has, as the Berlin National-Zeitung announces, granted a licence for postal distribution, is to cover the 'loss' to his funds occasioned by his wife's death.

Page me40.385

In due course, no doubt, Mrs Daniels will become Mrs Bürgers. She has written to Lina†f saying that 'Bürgers has grown still more energetic and self-confident'. In proof of that 'self-confidence' she writes, 'we are delighted by Freiligrath's poem about Mrs Kinkel,†g which was mutilated by the “perfidious” Kölnische Zeitung'.

Page me40.385

Steffen has written to Freiligrath asking for your address and mine as he has lost them. Steffen's address is: W. Steffen, Harrison Square near Boston, Mass. U. St.

Page me40.385

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.385

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.386

213

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.386

Manchester, 10 February 1859

Dear Moor,

The news about Eccarius is truly staggering. What a heroic letter he wrote you!†376 That such a fine chap should come to such a pitiful end! We are losing our best men during this wretched period of peace, and the new blood is very pauvre.†a Herewith Lassalle's letter. I'm glad the manuscript†b has arrived.

Page me40.386

Page me40.386

What did Freiligrath have to say concerning my letter about Kinkel†c? To me he wrote, 'ALL RIGHT, ALL RIGHT' and said he had given his answer to you. So you still owe it to me.

Page me40.386

I am going home now and shall get an article on the Austrian and German federal army†d done in time for the 2nd post.

Your

F.E.

Page me40.386
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

214
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.386
Manchester, 14 February 1859

Dear Marx,

Something I forgot to mention. Certainly you must reserve the translation rights on your book.†e Even if only to stop some jackass or industrialist from massacring the thing. Moreover it is now a mere legal formality which anyone can accomplish without any hesitation.

Page Break me40.387
Page me40.387

Statesman Blind has a friend in the telegraph office who occasionally sends the provincial papers some pretty tall stories by telegraph. More about this anon.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.387
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

215
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.387
[London,] 15 February 1859

Dear Engels,

Herewith:

1. Letter from my brother-in-law (the CAPE MAN)†a from which you will see that the fellow will be landing in London tomorrow. Since I am sans sou†b (only last Saturday I had to pawn my wife's last 'spare' skirt in order to send Eccarius SOME COMFORTS) and have got to entertain the man decently — he is going to Trier and carries some weight in the TRANSACTIONS with my mother†c — I must once again press you to mail me AT LEAST £1. Luckily I have what is known as mumps, which means that I only have to entertain the man here at home and, as an invalid, can refuse to do any gadding about.

Page me40.387

2. Letter from Eccarius. I had told the latter (who seemed, I thought, to be improving a little) that if he needed wine he was to let me know. So you should send him ABOUT 2 BOTTLES OF port wine.

Page me40.387

3. 2 enclosures from The Free Press (the more important for having been reprinted from The New York Herald) will give you some idea of the Chinese war†332 and Mr Palmerston's policy.†d

Page Break me40.388

Page me40.388

Ad vocem†a Freiligrath. I came, most opportunely for him, on the very day he got your letter.†b He gave it to me to read and excused himself for the non-political nature of the poem†c on the grounds that he was a 'poet'. Also said he had written to you about the Hermann simply as a 'joke'.†d WELL, AFTER THESE VERY MEAGRE EXPLANATIONS, he said he would write and tell you that he had made everything ALL RIGHT with me. By the by, your letter 'tickled' him tremendously. I told him that it was 'very well written' and he, of course, couldn't help laughing at me for looking to 'style' first of all ON SUCH AN OCCASION. The FACT is, Freiligrath realises that Kinkel has used him and, having used him, is actually becoming somewhat uppish towards him. (Thus, to Freiligrath's intense annoyance, the 'Schriften von Gottfried und Johanna Kinkel' figure in large type among the Hermann's advertisements and, under the same heading, 'F. Freiligraths Gedichte' in small type, so that Freiligrath's poems are annexed to the works of Gottfried and Johanna. This greatly riles our philistine.) On the other hand, Freiligrath is very much beholden to Kinkel for having, apparently against all expectations, again put him in the way of a political purgative which, BY THE BY, and if I am not mistaken, has earned him high praise and even, it is said, presents from philistines in Germany. Nota bene: Mrs Daniels wrote to Lina†e (in reply to some quips about the Kinkel CASE the latter had sent her): 'We' (she and Heinrich, the quiet one†f) 'are delighted and entranced by Freiligrath's poem' and the day-dreaming Heinrich, who had grown 'still more self-confident and still more energetic', had actually discovered that 'the perfidious' Kölnische Zeitung had suppressed the 'most important verse', a verse which existed only in Heinrich's Olympian imagination.

Page me40.388

What's this about Blind?

Page me40.388

Apropos. Did you and Lupus see in the papers (maybe a month or six weeks ago) that Madame Bangya in Paris had been sentenced to six months hard labour for soliciting?
Page me40.388
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.388
I've lost Lupus' address again. It's 59 Boundary Street, Greenheys, isn't it? At any rate I sent him a letter to that address.†377

Page Break me40.389
Page me40.389
Schapper's wife has produced a son, and the old fool, who now goes in for phrenology, has discovered that the seven days'-old IMP has a sanguine-choleric temperament.

Page me40.389
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

216
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.389
[London, about 22 February 1859]†378

DEAR Frederick,
My brother-in-law†a will be travelling to Manchester on Thursday and will probably come and see you on Friday. But you must let me have your exact address. On closer acquaintance, by the by, Juta proves to be a far from [healthy]†b chap. He suffers damnably from his liver, and hence must go to Carlsbad.†c I should be glad if Gumpert would examine him and, since his liver is presently giving him a great deal of pain, do something to alleviate this. But if the thing is really serious, Gumpert must not give any indication of the fact.
Page me40.389
Tomorrow I am writing about the FACTORY REPORT,†d and expect an article from you, the more so as I am now working out Capital.†355

Your
K.M.

Page me40.389
Nota bene.
I have written asking Dana whether he can find me a YANKEE for the English edition of the Political Economy.†e In which case, if the thing looks like being lucrative, I should have to spend a few weeks in Manchester, putting it into English with you.

Page Break me40.390

Page me40.390
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

217
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.390
[London,] 22 February 1859

Dear Engels,
The bearer of these lines is my brother-in-law Juta, whom I most warmly recommend to you.

Your
K. Marx

Page me40.390
Eccarius received the wine on Saturday and believes he can already feel the benefit of it. It seems probable that the wine will help him pull through.

Page me40.390
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

218
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me40.390
London, 23 February 1859

Dear Sir,
The 'Preface'†a enclosed herewith.

Yours very faithfully,
Karl Marx

Page me40.390
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. X, Part 1, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.391

219
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me40.391
London, 23 February 1859

Dear Lassalle,
I have today sent off the preface†a to Duncker. Perhaps you would be good enough to ensure that I am sent the fee as soon as the manuscript has been printed. I would certainly not write to you about this point had it not become a question brûlante†b due to unforeseen circumstances.
Page me40.391
I hope to have a letter from you soon and, notwithstanding your coyness, something about 'conditions in the homeland', or at least the gossip there, this being essential for forming an opinion.
Page me40.391
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.391
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

220
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†1
IN BERLIN
Page me40.391
London, 25 February 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,
Iterum Crispinus.†c
Page me40.391
It is Engels' intention to publish — anonymously to begin with — a short pamphlet entitled Po and Rhine.†379

Page Break me40.392
Page me40.392
Main content: Military proof, i.e. based on military science, that all the reasons advanced to the effect that Austria must have the Mincio line in order to protect Germany, correspond precisely to the argument that France must have the Rhine frontier in order to protect herself; further that, whereas Austria's interest in the Mincio line is considerable, that of Germany, as a single power, is nil, and that Italy will always be dominated militarily by Germany so long as the whole of Switzerland isn't French. The thing is mainly directed against the strategists of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, but otherwise against Mr Bonaparte — from a national viewpoint, of course.
Page me40.392
I am willing to stake all my 'powers of discernment'†a on the fact that the publication of this pamphlet, which will entail hardly any outlay because consisting of only a few sheets, would, at the present time, actually be a speculation (IN THE EMINENT SENSE OF THE WORD) for a bookseller.
Page me40.392
Since taking part in the Baden campaign,†380 Engels has made military matters his special study. Added to which his writing, as you know, is exceedingly plausible.
Page me40.392
However, the publisher must preserve the secret of the writer's identity until the AUTHOR himself chooses to disclose it. You may be sure that the most eminent military writers of Prussia will be suspected of being at the bottom of the thing.
Page me40.392
Now here we have something the publication of which is intimately related to the times — a question of the day. Hence it must be pushed through quickly. Do you think that Duncker will agree to do it? It would undoubtedly be in his own interests. One can never know in the case of purely scientific stuff whether and to what extent the philistines will buy it. Where questions of the day such as these are concerned, this can be calculated with almost mathematical exactitude.

Page me40.392

Should Duncker agree, Engels authorises you to conclude the transaction in his name and on whatever terms you think fit. Should he refuse, might there not be some other possibility? I know a publisher in Hamburg who would take it.†b But this fellow was always personally hostile to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, as he plainly told our friend Heine, and hence it would vex me sorely were he to obtain so much as a single line from any of us. Besides, he treated our never-to-be-forgotten and irreplaceable friend Weerth in the most outrageous fashion.

Page Break me40.393
Page me40.393

Let me have an answer as soon as possible, and please don't begrudge the considerable time and effort I cost you. I can only plead the GENERAL PARTY INTEREST.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.393
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

221
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.393
[London,] 25 February†a 1859

Dear Engels,

Po and Rhine is a first-class idea and must be put in hand straight away.†379 You must set to at once, time being everything in this case. I have written to Lassalle this very day and am sure that little Jew Braun will put the thing through.
Page me40.393

The pamphlet (HOW MANY SHEETS? Let me have the answer to this by return) must first appear anonymously so that the public believes the author to be an eminent general. In the second edition, which you may account a certainty provided the thing comes out on time, you will reveal your identity in a 6-LINE foreword, and then it will be a triumph for our party. In my 'Preface'†b I have done you a few honneurs; and thus it is all to the good if you yourself take the stage immediately afterwards.

Page me40.393
Those dogs of democrats and liberal riff-raff will see that we're the only chaps who haven't been stultified by the ghastly period of peace.
Page me40.393
In any case, you'll get the copies of the Tribune. Not one of the military articles†c has so far been published. Mr Dana didn't print the first, which you wrote A LONG TIME AGO, but will probably do so now. I too constantly experience the like. It's often three months before the asses discover that we've foretold EVENTS for them, whereupon they print the relevant articles.

Page Break me40.394
Page me40.394
My brother-in-law's†a address is correct save that he forgot to add 'CITY (NEAR THE GENERAL POST OFFICE)'. But I imagine he'll be in Manchester by now and able to tell you about himself.
Page me40.394
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.394
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

222
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.394
[London,] 25 February 1859

Dear Engels,
I am writing to you again this evening because TIME PRESSES. I am morally convinced that, in view of what I've written to Lassalle, Duncker will accept the pamphlet.†b Admittedly, little Jew Braun hasn't written to me since my manuscript†c arrived, and that was over four weeks ago. For one thing, he was busy with the publication of his own immortal, 'inflammatory' work†d (STILL, the little Jew, even his Heraclitus,†e although atrociously written, is BETTER THAN ANYTHING THE DEMOCRATS COULD BOAST OF), and then he will probably have to do the final proof-reading of my scrawl. For another thing, he may be a trifle stunned by the terrible knock on the head dealt him indirectly by my analysis of money. For his Heraclitus contains the following note which I shall now quote verbatim despite its interminable length (you've got to read it, though):

'If we remarked above that in the said fragment Heraclitus has specified the true nature and function of money in political economy' (Heraclitus in fact says:

Page Break me40.395
'pnroVpnros tt'antameibesdaiantameibesdai pantapanta kaikai purpur apantwgapantög woperöoper crusouchrusou crhmatachrëmata, kaikai crhmatwnchrëmatön crusoVchrusos'†a), 'this, we need hardly point out, is not to make a political economist of him, and hence it is far from our intention to suggest that he had grasped any of the wider implications of that fragment. But although this science neither existed nor could have existed at that time and therefore was not the object of Heraclitus' thought, it is correct to say that, precisely because he never goes by reflex categories but only by the speculative concept, Heraclitus has, in that fragment, discerned the nature of money in all its profundity and this more truly than many a modern economist. And it may not be altogether without interest or, indeed, so irrelevant as might at first appear, to observe how what is simply a consequence of that thought automatically gives rise to the modern discoveries in this field.'†b (Nota bene. Lassalle doesn't know the first thing about these discoveries.)
Page me40.395
'When Heraclitus suggests that money as a medium of exchange is the antithesis of all real products entering exchange and owes its real existence solely to the same' (I underline where Lassalle has underlined), 'this is not to say that money as such is itself a product invested with a material value of its own, one commodity among other commodities, as Say's school' (a nice Continental DELUSION that there is such a thing as Say's school) 'persists in regarding coin up to this very day; rather it is but the ideal representative of circulating real products, a symbol of value for the latter, which merely stands for them. And that is only in part a conclusion drawn from the fragment, in part only the concept implicit in it for Heraclitus himself.
Page me40.395
'But if all money is merely the ideal unit or expression of value of all real circulating products and owes its real existence solely to these, which are at one and the same time its antithesis, it follows from the very consequence' (nice style! It follows from 'the very consequence') 'of this concept that a country's sum of values or its wealth may be increased only by an increase in real products, but never by an increase in money since money, of course, far from being even merely a factor of wealth and value' (now we have wealth and value; before it was sum of values or wealth), 'never expresses, as an abstract unit, more than the value which is situated in the products' (and a nice district, too†c), 'and is real only therein. Hence the error of the balance of trade system.' (This is worthy of Ruge.) 'It further follows that All money is always equal in value to all circulating products, since it merely reduces the latter to an ideal unit of value, hence merely gives expression to their value; hence that, by an increase or decrease in the amount of money available, the value of this total sum of money will never be affected and will always remain equal only to that of all circulating products; that strictly speaking it is never possible to talk of the value of all money as compared with the value of all circulating products, because such a comparison supposes that the value of money and the value of products are two values in their own right, whereas only one value exists, which is realised in concrete form in the material product, and expressed as an abstract unit of value in money; or rather, value itself is nothing but a unit abstracted from real things, in which it does not exist as such, and finding its special expression in money; not only, then, does the value of all money remain equal to the value of all products but, properly speaking, all money is only the value of all circulating products.' (This ultra-bold type is the author's.) 'Hence it follows that, with an increase in the quantity of coin, since the value of the total remains the same, that of each individual coin can only fall, just as it will rise again with a decrease in the quantity of coin. It further follows that, since money is merely the unreal theoretical abstraction of value and represents the antithesis of real products and materials, money as such does not need to have any intrinsic reality, i.e. need not consist of any truly valuable material, but may equally be paper money, and it is precisely then that it corresponds most closely to its concept. All these and many other conclusions, which have only been reached, and along entirely different lines, since Ricardo's studies and have by no means found universal acceptance, follow from the mere consequence of that speculative concept discerned by Heraclitus.'

Page Break me40.396

Page me40.396
I, of course, paid not the slightest heed to this Talmudic wisdom but roundly slated Ricardo for his theory of money which, by the way, did not originate with him but with Hume and Montesquieu. So Lassalle may feel this to be a personal insult. There was actually no harm in it, for in my anti-Proudhon piece†a I myself adopted Ricardo's theory. But I'd had a perfectly ridiculous letter from little Jew Braun in which he said that he had 'the early publication of my manuscript at heart, although he himself was engaged in writing a major work on political economy'†278 for which he had 'allocated two years'. But if I were to 'deprive him of too much that was new, he might abandon the whole thing'. WELL, to this I replied that there was no fear of rivalry since this 'new' science could accommodate himself and me and a dozen more besides.†b My disquisition on money will now show him, either that I know nothing of the subject — although if I'm wrong, so is the whole history of the monetary theory — or else that he is an ass, since, with a few empty abstract expressions such as 'abstract unit', he presumes to lay down the law about empirical matters which, if one wishes to hold forth about them, call for study, and prolonged study INTO THE BARGAIN. For this reason he may, in the innermost recesses of his heart, be nourishing something of a grudge against me just now. But — and this is what I have been leading up to — firstly, Lassalle has really too great a stake 'in the cause' and, secondly, he is too much of an 'Ephraim Artful' not to keep in with us coûte que coûte,†c which is all the more necessary to him because of his quarrel with the Düsseldorf people.†d Moreover, living in Berlin has made him see that, for an energetic fellow like himself, the bourgeois party holds out no prospects whatever.†381

Page me40.396

So with clever MANAGEMENT the man will be ours, body and soul, no matter how much he indulges in 'inflammatory' antics or makes

Page Break me40.397

Heraclitus pay for being the most succinct of philosophers by providing him with the most prolix of commentaries. For the same reason I am sure that en cas de besoin†a he will force Duncker to take your pamphlet. I have, by the by, so framed my letter that he can show the whole of it to Duncker. It was, in fact, written for Duncker rather than Lassalle, though for all his artfulness Ephraim is unlikely to notice the fact.

Page me40.397

Hence I consider it certain that Duncker will take the pamphlet, so the main thing now is for you to set to work on it at once, for this is like a newspaper article. There's no time to be lost. For the same reason — immediacy of impact — I believe you shouldn't exceed 4 or 5 sheets (if as much is needed). So you may regard yourself as totally absolved from the Tribune work (unless some martial occurrence steals a march on your pamphlet, which is improbable), until you've finished the thing. The most sensible thing to do would be to plead sudden illness and stay away from the office, so as to write the thing all at one go.

Page me40.397

Amicus Engels Senior, amicus Ermen (Gotofredus!), sed magis amicum toto froneinphronein'.†b

'feupheu, feupheu, froneinphronein wVös deinondeinon, enqaentha mhmë telhtelë lueiluei fronountiphronounti,'†c as your old man might say to you, like Tiresias did to King Oedipus, to which, however, you would reply that he

'«enen toiVtois kerdesikerdesi mononmonon dedorkededorke, thntën tecnhntechnën dd'efuephu tufloVtuphlos»'.†d

Page me40.397

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.397

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.398

223
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.398
[London,] 3 March 1859

Dear Engels,

From the enclosed letter of Lassalle's†382 you will see that I know my men and what MANAGEMENT means.

Page me40.398

As regards the letter, I would make the following observations:

1. You must now really follow my advice and shun the office altogether for a few days. I did, of course, put the thing in such a way as to suggest that I'd already read your manuscript.†a A few days here or there are of no importance, but if you only work in the evenings you won't finish in time.

Page me40.398

2. In your position you cannot agree to the small fee but must, if only honoris causa, settle for the alternative of half the net profits.

Page me40.398

3. Lassalle's direction that you send the title (i.e. not write it on the manuscript), the foreword (which I'd suggest you don't write) and the table of contents to him personally (F. Lassalle, 131 Potsdamer Strasse, Berlin), is a sensible one. For parcels are being opened by the Post Office, and the government mustn't know the title, which would give them the key to the whole secret.

Page me40.398

The manuscript, on the other hand, I shall send from here, as I sent my own manuscript†b (i.e. insured), to Duncker via Fräulein Ludmilla Assing. Only I'll get Pfänder to put himself down as the sender.

Page me40.398

4. You should indeed include something national, anti-Bonapartist, but the tone should be careful and gentlemanly. You can the more readily employ this colour in that the intention of your pamphlet is, IN FACT, a great victory for Mazzini vis-á-vis the National Assembly of 1848 (Radowitz†c-Mincio),†383 and you enable Germans for the first time to interest themselves with a good conscience in Italy's emancipation.

Page me40.398

Now, GOOD-BYE, OLD BOY.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.399
Page me40.399

In his latest Gottfried Mr Gottfried†a kow-tows to Suse-Sibeth, whom he describes as a model merchanting house, likewise to that wretched publisher, Trübner, who has compiled a worthless American bibliography.†b Macte puer virtute.†c

Page me40.399
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

224
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.399
[Manchester,] 4 March 1859

Dear Moor,

Little Jew Braun†d has managed things well; I agree to half the net profits. The work is going ahead fairly quickly,†e 9 long double pages of the kind I send you for the Tribune are ready, 2 or 3 more will see the finish of the Po and then comes the Rhine, which won't be as long — barely 3 sheets in all. This evening, Saturday and Sunday will certainly dispose of the better part of the thing, and I shall let you have it by Wednesday, provided all goes smoothly. However I must be on my guard since I'll have all the official military writers against me, and if they can pick any holes in the thing they'll certainly do so. So better too short than too long, and the historical examples can be done quite briefly. Besides, if the manuscript arrives in Berlin at the end of next week, it will be soon enough; after all, there's going to be war.†370 So there's no need to worry about time. It's impossible just now to absent myself from the WAREHOUSE for several days. There's no real need and it wouldn't be much help. What holds one up is poring over the map, which must be done staccato,†a otherwise one gets bemused.

Page Break me40.400
Page me40.400

I'm not doing a foreword. That would be asking for too much.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.400
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

225
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.400
[London,] 10 March 1859

Dear Engels,

Pamphlet†b received. Will run to about 4 printed sheets if not more, considering the way pamphlets are printed. Have read it all; EXCEEDINGLY CLEVER; the political side is also splendidly done and that was damned difficult. THE PAMPHLET WILL HAVE A GREAT SUCCESS.

Page me40.400

I've deleted nothing but one short sentence about Reuss-Schleiz; not where you discuss the 'natural frontiers' of that state†c but in the first passage where it makes for double emploi†d and detracts from the effect.

Page me40.400

I suggest that the subtitle 'Military Studies' detracts from the effect and should be deleted.

Page me40.400

Should you be writing to Lassalle tomorrow I'd like you to do something in your own name which I can't do in mine. The FACTS are as follows: Last Monday (7 March) something arrived from Berlin! What do you think it was? The first proof-sheet†e and since then I have not had another. Contrary to what Mr Duncker expressly said in his letter, they did nothing at all about my manuscript for 6 weeks and would now seem to be printing 1 sheet a week. When your manuscript arrives they'll perhaps break off again and thus the thing may drag on for months. I find this quite deplorable, and you might DROP SOME WORDS in your own name to Lassalle about the matter.†a Do the fellows want to put the piece off until the very eve of war,†370 thereby ensuring that it comes to nothing and giving Mr Duncker an excuse to refuse the sequel?

Page Break me40.401

Page me40.401

Besides, I was counting on the money, and this delay has rendered intolerable my already distressing mode of existence. On this occasion Freiligrath (who is seeking IN EVERY WAY to reestablish himself)†b was decent enough to try and negotiate bills for me here in London. However the thing came to nothing.

Page me40.401

Apropos the Tribune. For the past 6 weeks they have not published one article either of yours or mine. The intrigues associated with a presidential election are already BEGINNING. In the light of experience I should say that the omission of our articles was a preliminary manoeuvre enabling them to notify me that they will only be requiring one article per week for the time being.

Page me40.401
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.401
I believe there will be war. However, a diplomatic intermezzo is necessary, partly on account of the clamour in Germany, partly on account of the vociferousness of the French bourgeoisie, lastly on account of the English Parliament; perhaps also in order that Russia may in the meantime extort sundry concessions from Austria. The Russians have achieved one main object. In 1846, when, for the first time, Austria's finances showed no deficit, Russia used the Cracow affair†384 to plunge her back into the most appalling financial predicament. In 1858 the Austrians appeared to have got their finances in some sort of order and announced an immediate payment by the Bank, which is why Bonaparte was promptly sent into the field and Austria's finances are back where they were in 1848. The dissolution of Parliament, the absence of government here in the interim, and subsequently Palmerston as FOREIGN MINISTER†385 are similarly moves required by Russia for the purpose of war.

Page me40.401
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.402

226
ENGELS TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me40.402
Manchester, 14 March 1859
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Street

Dear Lassalle,
First of all my thanks for your bons offices†a with Duncker, which have met with such outstanding success and will, for the first time in nearly ten years, give me the opportunity of appearing before the German public. I sent the manuscript to Marx last Wednesday†b and he will have forwarded it on Thursday. The title page should read simply Po and Rhine, Berlin, Published by ... etc., etc. Marx and I both consider it better that the thing should first appear anonymously because specialised and, at the start, the name of a civilian could only be detrimental to a military paper. If the thing is successful, as I hope, it will be time enough to put my name to it. There's no need for a table of contents, the sections being merely numbered. Nor have I written a foreword.

Page me40.402

Marx thinks it will amount to 4 sheets, which I doubt, but it all depends on the printing, of course.
Page me40.402

As regards terms, I have decided in favour of half the net profits; it goes without saying, of course, that there should be the usual number of free copies, one of which you must naturally bespeak in advance. They can be sent through publisher's channels, though I'd like one (or else proofs) to be sent direct to me by post. I might bring it out in English. The matter lends itself less readily to a French translation which would, furthermore, be difficult to place; however, I shall see.
Page me40.402

How is the printing of Marx's manuscript†c getting on? So far I've only heard of one sheet having been printed, and yet the manuscript has been in Berlin for over a month. This seems to me very slow. One or two instalments at least should be out in time for the Leipzig Fair†386 and there's not long to go.
Page me40.402

Reiterated promises notwithstanding, Marx hasn't yet sent me your Heraclitus,†d which I greatly look forward to seeing, although both my Greek and the speculative concept have grown exceedingly rusty. I am equally anxious to read your play,†e which I have seen advertised. Despite your versatility, I would never have expected you to take up this speciality as well.

Page Break me40.403
Page me40.403

Since I've been here I have been devoting myself largely to militaria, also dallying at intervals with an old love, comparative philology. But when one has engaged in noble commerce all day long, it's impossible to go beyond sheer dilettantism in so vast and extensive a discipline. And even though I once cherished the brash idea of writing a comparative grammar of the Slavonic languages, I gave it up long ago, the more so since Miklosich†a has undertaken the same thing with such brilliant success.
Page me40.403

So once again very many thanks and kind regards from your

F.E.

Page me40.403
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

227
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.403
[London,] 16 March 1859

DEAR Frederick,
£5 received. THANKS.
Page me40.403
Yesterday proof sheet II†b arrived. If it goes on like this it'll take them three months. There can't possibly be more than one type-setter employed on this affair.
Page me40.403
I don't know what to write about on Friday. Can you do something — on Armstrong's GUN, perhaps?
Page me40.403
Mr Bruno Bauer has, I am told, written a pamphlet on the 'question of the day', pro-Russia and France and anti-Austria and England. He is now the ally of Manteuffel, in support of whom he has already written recently in the Zeit.†c
Page me40.403
I am sending you that CLOWN Edgar Bauer's paper. The man has become a great communist and working men's representative. He and his little rag are almost finished. The first article, 'Zank',†d is a direct attack on me. I am, it seems, quietly to join up with Mr Edgar and emerge from my 'surly' and 'distrustful' isolation. The CLOWN has turned into a real preacher. He doesn't dare attack the Hermann for fear the fellows may disclose his 'PAST'.

Page Break me40.404
Page me40.404
Kinkel's paper is doing excellent business. Prudently, he has quite given up writing himself. The money comes partly from a Dr Juch and partly from the Portuguese Jew, Castello (an old Portuguese financial house), who was talked into it by the great Gerstenberg.†a

Page me40.404
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

228

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me40.404
London, 16 March 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Your latest work†b and accompanying letter have not yet arrived, nor are they to be here so soon. Despatch through publisher's channels is about as expeditious as if you were to send me the things via Petersburg, Kamchatka and North America.

Page me40.404

If it's not too late, get them to print 'THE RIGHT OF TRANSLATION IS RESERVED' on the last manuscript†c I sent you. Otherwise some of the German clowns over here might massacre the thing.

Page me40.404

Owing to circumstances which I can't go into today (for I am dictating an article in English†d while writing this note to you), I am very hard pressed for money. Might it be possible for you to carry out some sort of bill transaction for me in Berlin having a currency of a few weeks, in return for which you could subsequently take the fee Duncker owes me?

Page Break me40.405

Page me40.405

Yesterday I had a visitor from Paris, a man by whose judgment I set tremendous store. Speaking of war,†370 he said: 'Il n'y a pas deux opinions á Paris. Nous avons la guerre.'†a He was quite convinced that, were Bonaparte to draw back, he would crack up and, LIKE the Empereur Soulouque, would be betrayed by the army itself. Even the Parisian bourgeois, though rabid for peace, are already beginning to mutter that the fellow has no more courage than Louis Philippe.

Page me40.405

There's one factor, by the by, which you must not overlook; Russia is stirring up the whole thing, and her ally, Palmerston (you only have to look at The Times) is doing all he can to drive Bonaparte to war. On top of that there'll soon be a change of ministry here, and then Palmerston will run the thing direct.†385 The pro-Poerio, etc., demonstrations here are wholly inspired by him. He has placed his son-in-law, Lord Shaftesbury, at the head of these, AS RESPONSIBLE EDITOR.†387

Page me40.405

I am now, AFTER ALL, beginning to believe that the war might hold out some prospects for us as well.

Page me40.405

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.405

Don't forget, by the by, that if you write to me about certain conditions,†b it will benefit a vast public, amongst whom a great many Germans. The Tribune numbers some 200,000 regular subscribers.

Page me40.405

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

229

MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER

IN BERLIN

Page me40.405

[London,] 17TH MARCH 1859

Dear Sir,

I am returning the proofs†c in an envelope because advised by the Post Office over here that, while proofs may be sent from

Page Break me40.406

Berlin to London, they must go from London to Berlin as letters.

Page me40.406

Page 32, in the final lines I forgot to amend 'more profound economic differences between English and French, etc., political economy' to 'more profound fundamental, etc.'

Page me40.406

My memory may be deceiving me, but it seems to me that the beginnings of the sentences on p. 33, both in the text and in the first note, were missing on p. 32.

Yours very faithfully,

K.M.

Page me40.406

First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. X, Part 1, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

230

MARX TO ENGELS†388

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.406
[London, 22 March 1859]

Dear Engels,

Herewith Eccarius' letter. Unfortunately he had to return to his tailor's sweat-shop for which, or so it seems to me, he is by no means sufficiently recovered.

Page me40.406

I wrote about the Reform Bill today†389; you should write (if your eyes [are alright], as I hope — otherwise, OF COURSE, DON'T THINK OF IT) about the likelihood of war.†a This I regard as necessary, if the rascals on the Tribune are not to reprint anything.†390 Nothing from Berlin. Only 3 proof-sheets received†b in 8 weeks.

Page me40.406

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.406
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.407

231
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.407
[London,] 25 March [1859]

Dear Engels,

I think you have misunderstood Lassalle's letter.†a

Page me40.407

All he says is:

'I'm most anxious to see what the pamphlet†b contains. Marx's work†c will also be appearing soon, etc.' By this he means he has not read your pamphlet. Voilá tout.†d The same affectation as in the case of my manuscript which he purports not to have read. I had a letter from him this morning which I shall send on to you later. Had your manuscript not arrived he would at least have told me.

Page me40.407

Your manuscript left London the same day as it arrived. Pfänder was given a receipt for it. Anyway it is sure to have arrived. Duncker is A SLOW COACH. To date (8 WEEKS) I have had only 3 proof-sheets.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.407
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

232
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†20
IN BERLIN
Page me40.407
London, 28 March 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Ad vocem†e financial predicament: D'abord†f many thanks for your offers of help. In the meantime, however, I have tried other means, namely writing to my mother asking her if she will lend me the money for a few weeks. Je verrai.†a Here in London a bill could have been negotiated only through Gerstenberg. But the latter, a petty pompous gentleman and Kinkel's patron, shall not have the gratification of being asked to do me a service, even a purely formal one.

Page Break me40.408
Page me40.408

Ad vocem Duncker: This Wednesday (day after tomorrow), the man will have had the manuscript†b for almost 9 weeks. So far I've been sent only 3 proof-sheets. Between ourselves I should say quite frankly that Duncker is regretting having undertaken the business and that's why he is handling it in this dilatory, Wetzlar chancellery fashion.†391 If he goes on like this the thing won't even be out by Easter. And this puts me in another quandary. I am negotiating with an Englishman over the English rendering of these first instalments. This last depends, of course, on the publication of the work in German, and since everything is done at high pressure in London, the Englishman is growing mistrustful. You absolutely cannot make an Englishman understand the German way of doing business.
Page me40.408

You will see that the first section does not comprise the principal chapter, i.e. the 3rd, on capital. I thought this advisable on political grounds, for it's in III that the battle really begins and it seemed to me better not to frighten people de prime abord.†c
Page me40.408

Ad vocem telegraphy: I ACCEPT THE OFFER.†392 The matter isn't as simple as you think. Obtaining the information is nothing, but takes up a great deal of time. I shall set up office near the Exchange (where the telegraphic companies who despatch the things also have their offices). However, your cousin†d must now let me know: 1. By what route does he want the despatches sent? There are 3 companies, one sends via France, the second via Ostend and the third via Antwerp. The only things which should be sent via France, I think, are those for which no French censorship can present a danger. This is, incidentally, the shortest route. 2. What does he want telegraphed? Different papers base their views of what is important on very different principles. 3. How frequently does he want me to telegraph? 4. Besides NEWS from England, do these people want news from America, in short, from outside Europe? He must give me exact instructions about all this since telegraphy demands first and foremost that all non-essentials should be omitted. 5. Finally, I must know at what hour of the day the Presse prefers to receive its news (in the English provinces, at any rate, this varies with individual newspapers, according to the time they come out). In the case of extraordinary events no time could, of course, be laid down, as it could, presumably, for ordinary despatches. For stock-market news I would, of course, have an exceptional source of information in Freiligrath.

Page Break me40.409
Page me40.409

Ad vocem 'Presse': I accept this offer, too: Firstly, because, unlike last time, no conditions are imposed on me as regards the treatment of specific political personalities. I make it an absolute principle never to assent to a condition. On the other hand, every newspaper has a right to expect tact of its correspondents. Secondly, because times have changed and I now consider it essential that our party should secure positions wherever possible, even if only for a time, so that others should not gain possession of the terrain. For the time being, of course, it must be used cautiously, but the most important thing is to acquire influence at various points against more crucial contingencies. I never received the copies of the Presse which you say Friedländer sent me, probably because they were wrongly addressed. I ought, by the by, to be sent a few numbers immediately; one has to find out from the actual paper how, not what, one should write for the Viennese public.
Page me40.409

Ad vocem your writing for the 'Presse'. I am quite convinced you should write for them. True, it would be 'improper' for you, as a Prussian, to write for an Austrian paper just now. But on principle we should, as Luther says of God, 'use a thief to catch a thief',†a and whenever we get the chance, contribute to the general state of disintegration and confusion. Before the start of the present troubles I would neither have written for the Presse myself, nor have advised you to do so. But the fermentation process has begun and now it's up to everyone to do what he can. It is now advisable to infiltrate poison, no matter where. Should we confine ourselves to writing for papers which on the whole share our viewpoint, we'd have to postpone all journalistic activity indefinitely. And should one really allow so-called 'PUBLIC OPINION' to have nothing but counter-revolutionary stuff pumped into it?

Page me40.409
Ad vocem 'Tribune': You certainly misunderstood me if you thought I was asking you to take the Tribune's subscribers into account. The fact of the matter is this: My real business with the Tribune consists in writing leaders about anything I choose. Here, England heads the bill and France comes second. Much is of an economic nature. But since the change of course in Prussia,†336 I have amused myself on the sly by writing an occasional report from 'Berlin' and owing to my 'internal' ties with the Hohenzollern homeland I have been able to assess conditions there with great assurance. Among the said subscribers to the Tribune there are a great many Germans. Moreover, the German-American newspapers, whose name is legion, reprint stuff from it. This being so, it was important for me to give local colour to the occasional article I wrote from 'Berlin' in order that my polemic with the Prussian State might also be pursued in the New World. A little gossip is indispensable to local colour of this kind. Besides, present Prussian history consists largely of chronique scandaleuse. Hinc illae lacrimae.†a In this respect your last letter served me to good purpose.

Page Break me40.410
Page me40.410
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.410
P.S. Have just received a letter from Nutt, the City booksellers, advising me that your parcel has arrived. I shall collect it without fail today.
Page me40.410
What is happening about Engels' pamphlet†b? I sent it off on the 10TH OF MARCH. I'd have thought this kind of thing could have been done in 5 days.

Page me40.410
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

233
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.410
[London,] 1 April 1859

Dear Engels,

Herewith letter from Lassalle. Herewith letter from Dana, which you must return. I shall wait to hear from you before answering it.†393

Page Break me40.411
Page me40.411

Have written articles on the Reform Bill, MINISTRY.†389 My article for next week: Indian Finances.†a All the rest of the world is therefore at your disposal.
Page me40.411

So Palmerston, as was decided at Compiégne†356 (but in effect at Petersburg), is to return to the MINISTRY whatever its denomination. Without him Russia could not allow a war. Now, as in 1852 and 1855, Bright and Russell have pulled the chestnuts out of the fire for him.†394
Page me40.411

By the by, the debate in parliament was very funny. The Whigs and Radicals attacked the Tories largely on the grounds of their being REVOLUTIONISTS. Here, Bright's and Gibson's role most abject. (The latter even went so far as to declaim romantically against ELECTORAL DISTRICTS.†395) On the other hand, the farce of Tories, in the name of the MIDDLE CLASS, advocating their own rubbish in opposition to Whigs and MIDDLE CLASS, who advocate theirs in the name of the WORKING CLASS. A sign of great progress in England.
Page me40.411

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.411
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

234
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me40.411
London, 4 April 1859

Dear Lassalle,

All my attempts to raise money have failed. I have also had an answer in the negative from home — you know how much attached old people are to 'things finite'. Unpleasant though it is for me to approach you — since your own funds are on the ebb just now — I have no other choice. If 20 friedrichsdors is too much, send less. But draw the money from Duncker later on.

Page Break me40.412
Page me40.412
Has Engels' pamphlet†a come out?
Page me40.412
I shall write to you from here at length next week (this week there's absolutely no time). In the meantime my thanks for the play†b and the accompanying letter.
Page me40.412
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.412
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

235
MARX TO ENGELS†396
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.412
[London,] 9 April 1859

Dear Frederick,
Have written to Dana telling him he can have the articles if he pays better.†397
Page me40.412
Pieper, finally cured and out of hospital (after a serious relapse), is off to Bremen. He has an ugly inflammation on his forehead.
Page me40.412
Have you been following the exposure of Palmerston over the Italian question (1848)?†c
Page me40.412
Anstey is back from Hong Kong and is threatening to have his revenge on Palmerston. As an opponent, the latter will find Anstey not a little dangerous — more so, at any rate, than Urquhart.†398
Page me40.412

The financial muddle in India must be seen as the real result of the Indian Mutiny.†178 A GENERAL financial BREAKDOWN seems inevitable unless those classes are taxed which to date have been England's most solid supporters. However, even that will be of no substantial help. The joke is that John Bull will now have to pay out annually between 4 and 5 million cash in India in order to keep the wheels turning, and will in this nice roundabout way restore his national debt to the proper progressive RATIO. It must certainly be admitted that the Indian market is being paid a damned high price for Manchester COTTONS. According to the report of the Military Commission 80,000 EUROPEANS as well as some 200,000 to 260,000 NATIVES will have to be maintained in India for years to come. This costs ABOUT £20 million and the total NET REVENUE amounts to no more than £25 million. Moreover, the mutiny has added a PERMANENT DEBT of £50 million or, according to Wilson's calculations, a permanent annual deficit of 3 million. In addition, there is the GUARANTEE of £2 million per annum to the RAILWAYS until they are running and, indefinitely, a smaller sum if their NET REVENUE falls short of 5%. So far (apart from the short stretch of railway that has been completed) India has got nothing out of the thing save the privilege of paying English capitalists 5% for their capital. But John Bull has cheated himself, or rather has been cheated by his capitalists. India's payments are merely nominal, whereas those of John Bull are real. E.g. a substantial part of Stanley's LOAN†399 was simply to be used for paying 5% to English capitalists, even in respect of railways the building of which has not yet begun. Finally, the revenue from opium, amounting hitherto to £4 million per annum, is under serious threat as a result of the Chinese treaty.†400 Whatever happens the monopoly is bound to collapse and in China itself the cultivation of opium will soon be in full swing. Revenue was derived from opium precisely because it was an article of contraband. To my mind the present financial catastrophe in India is a more serious affair than was the war in India.

Page Break me40.413
Page me40.413
What do you make of Duncker? Was there ever such a rascally slow coach?
Page me40.413
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.413
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.414

236
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.414
[Manchester,] Monday, 11 April 1859

D.M.,

Article for Friday on war.†a The Austrians evidently intend to seize the initiative after all. Very sensible. If I'm not mistaken I have already sent the plan of the war to the Tribune†b: An Austrian offensive to defeat, first, the Piedmontese and then the invading French severally as they debouch from Mont Cenis, Mont Genévre, the Col di Tenda and Bocchetta — was that it? I can no longer remember exactly. It'll be a very jolly affair.
Page me40.414

What clever-clever SLOW COACHES they are in Berlin. They can't even print a pamphlet†c! I've heard absolutely nothing more — it's enough to drive one insane.
Page me40.414

En attendant, vive la guerre!†d In 10 days' time they will, I hope, be at each other's throats in Alessandria or Casale, and then who knows what kind of foxes I shall be hunting next SEASON!

Your
F.E.

Page me40.414
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

237
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.414
[London,] 12 April 1859

Dear Engels,

Yesterday Lassalle wrote to me about your pamphlet†e as follows:

Page Break me40.415
'Engels' pamphlet came out 3 days ago. Today I am sending him two copies by book post, as I shall do each day for 6 days in succession. For this is the only way we could devise'

(!) 'of avoiding heavy postal charges on the one hand and, on the other, preventing certain persons from guessing who was the pamphlet's author. Write and tell him this.'†a

Page me40.415

Have you ever known such tomfoolery? To distract attention from you, they send you copies by book post '6 days in succession'!

Page me40.415

Of the thing itself Lassalle writes:

'The pamphlet is truly impressive by reason of the pungency and sterling quality of the strategic knowledge evinced therein.'

Page me40.415

(The 'pungency' of 'knowledge' may be regarded as a lapsus pennae.†b)

Page me40.415

As to my own affair,†c Lassalle writes:

'Duncker tells me that the instalments will be ready by mid-May.'

Page me40.415

(So that's another month's delay.)

'He maintains he is getting on with the printing as quickly as he can. At any rate you are utterly wrong in supposing that he is deliberately dragging his feet. He's always rather slow.'

Page me40.415

What I do know, however, is that another 10 days have gone by without my getting a proof-sheet.

Page me40.415

Apropos. The Neue Zeit is on its last legs. Mr Edgar, who actually ended up by gracing its columns with a short story of his own contriving,†d resigned a week ago — realising that the world was thoroughly unamenable to his genius. Last Saturday†e it came out as a half number, and this week will probably see the end of it. The Hermann, too, according to current rumour, will soon depart this life. A good thing the curs snatched so eagerly at the opportunity of thus shamelessly laying bare their nonentity before all the world. Kinkel has KILLED the Kinkel humbug with his own hand. The CLOWN,†f for his part, has found out just how 'easy' it is to take our place in communist literature.

Page me40.415

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me40.416

Page me40.416
You explained the Austrian plan of attack in the Tribune†a just as you describe it.
Page me40.416
Pas trop de zéle!†b

Page me40.416
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

238
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.416
London, 16 April [1859]

Dear Engels,
I trust that by the time you get this note your toothache will have gone. It's a fiendish thing.
Page me40.416
MEANWHILE I have made arrangements which, within a short time, will double my income and thus put an end to the habitual misery. Friedländer, Lassalle's cousin (sometime editor along with Elsner and Co. of the Neue Oder-Zeitung), present editor of the Presse in Vienna (which, en passant, has 24,000 subscribers), offered, in January 1858, to appoint me correspondent to his paper.†254 I turned this down at the time because he stipulated that only Bonaparte, not Palmerston, be attacked. Now he has renewed the offer, ALL CONDITIONS LAID ASIDE. Since, however, this will as a rule involve only 1 article (20 frs) per week, it is comparatively unimportant. But I am at the same time to be their despatcher of telegrams (in French), 10 frs per telegram, and this, though time-consuming, is lucrative.
Page me40.416
The only point that remains to be settled is that of instructions to a banking house in London, since telegraphing necessitates considerable expenditure. Negotiations — before the terms were SETTLED — extended over 3 weeks. It was only yesterday that I sent a definite answer to a letter received the same day from Vienna. So it will be 8-10 days before the thing gets under way.

Page Break me40.417
Page me40.417
MEANWHILE the interest on our most valuable silver, watches, etc., is due for payment next Tuesday. By private TRANSACTIONS with the PAWNBROKER my wife has already put off the date of foreclosure for 3 weeks, but Tuesday is the ultimus terminus. So my request that you send me a few pounds goes hand in hand with the hope that this will definitely be the last time and the tax upon you will cease for good.

Page me40.417
Be so kind as to send 1 copy†a for me. As soon as you are in possession of several, Freiligrath and Pfänder ought each to have one.
Page me40.417
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.417
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

239
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.417
[London,] 19 April [1859]

Dear Engels,
1. £5 ARRIVED. BEST THANKS.
Page me40.417
2. I shall look out the Tribunes for you and send them IN THE COURSE OF THIS WEEK.
Page me40.417
3. The Tribune which arrived today (dated 5 April) contains an attack (enclosed),†b probably by some idiot of a Hungarian, which you should answer by Friday at the latest. The ANSWER of the '14TH INST'†c to which the idiot alludes is not to hand. However his own REPETITION will tell you everything he said in 'HIS SHORT ANSWER'.†401
Page me40.417
4. What did the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung say about your Tribune articles†402?

Page Break me40.418
Page me40.418

5. Yesterday I saw Duncker's advertisement for Po and Rhine in the Hamburger Correspondent.
Page me40.418
6. I myself have so far received 8 proof-sheets.†a So the thing's approaching its end, but no doubt it will be another fortnight before Duncker sends any more.
Page me40.418
7. Ad vocem†b Lassalle, I shall deal with this inter alia in a longer letter tomorrow.
Page me40.418
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.418
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

240
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†403
IN BERLIN
Page me40.418
London, 19 April 1859

Dear Lassalle,
I sent no separate acknowledgment of the £14 10/- because the letter was registered. But I should have written earlier had I not been plagued by a damned 'cousin from Holland',†c who laid claim to my surplus working time in THE MOST CRUEL MANNER.
Page me40.418
HE IS NOW GONE, and so I can breathe again.
Page me40.418
Friedländer has written to me.†d The terms are not as favourable as those originally communicated to you, but are nonetheless 'RESPECTABLE'.†254 Once a few subsidiary points have been settled between us — which will, I think, be done in the course of this week — I shall write to him.
Page me40.418
Here in England the class struggle is progressing in a most gratifying way. Unfortunately there is no longer any Chartist paper in existence and hence I had to give up literary collaboration with that movement ABOUT two years ago.
Page me40.418

Now I come to Franz von Sickingen. D'abord,†e I must applaud

Page Break me40.419
both composition and action, and that's more than one can say of any other modern German play. IN THE SECOND INSTANCE, and aside from any reactions of a purely critical nature, the work excited me very much at the first reading and hence will induce this reaction to an even greater degree in more emotionally inclined readers. And that is another and very important aspect.
Page me40.419

Now for THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MEDAL: Firstly — and this is purely a question of form — since you have chosen to write in verse, you could have put a touch more artistry into the iambics. However, though your neglecting to do so might well shock a professional poet, I regard it by and large as a merit, our breed of poetical epigones having retained nothing but formal polish. Secondly, the implicit conflict is not just tragic; it is the tragic conflict upon which the revolutionary party of 1848-49 justly foundered. Hence making it the fulcrum of a modern tragedy can only meet with my wholehearted approval. But then, I ask myself, is the theme in question suitable for the portrayal of that conflict? Balthasar may indeed imagine that had Sickingen not pretended that his rebellion was a knightly feud, but had instead raised the standard of opposition to the emperor and open war against the princes, he would have won. But are we able to share that illusion? Sickingen (and with him Hutten, more or less) went under, not because of his cunning, but because, as a knight and as representative of a declining class, he rebelled against existing reality, or rather against the new form of existing reality. Strip Sickingen of the appurtenances of the individual and his particular education, natural disposition, etc., and you have — Götz von Berlichingen. In this latter, miserable fellow the tragic opposition between knights on the one hand and emperor and princes on the other is adequately personified and that is why Goethe rightly made him his hero.†a In so far as Sickingen — and even Hutten up to a point, although in his case, as in that of all ideologists of a class, such assertions call for substantial modification — is fighting the princes (he turns against the emperor†b only because the emperor of knights has become the emperor of princes), he is, in fact, nothing more than a Don Quixote, if with some historical justification. The fact that he begins his rebellion in the guise of a knightly feud merely means that he begins it in knightly fashion. Were he to begin it in any other way, he would have to appeal directly and at the very outset to the towns and the peasants, i.e. the very classes whose development = the negation of knighthood.

Page Break me40.420
Page me40.420

Unless, therefore, you wished to reduce the conflict to no more than what is portrayed in Götz von Berlichingen — and such was not your plan — Sickingen and Hutten were bound to go under because they imagined themselves to be revolutionaries (which cannot be said of Götz) and, just like the cultivated Polish aristocracy of 1830, turned themselves on the one hand into the organs of modern ideas while on the other actually representing a reactionary class interest.†404 The aristocratic representatives of revolution — behind whose catch-words of unity and liberty there still lingers the dream of the imperial past and of club-law — ought not in that case to monopolise the interest as you make them do; rather the representatives of the peasants (of these in particular) and of the revolutionary elements in the towns should provide an altogether significant and dynamic background. This would have enabled you to give expression in far greater measure precisely to the most modern ideas in their most unsophisticated form; whereas, in fact now, the dominant idea, apart from religious freedom, is civic unity. Then you would automatically have had to 'Shakespearise' more, whereas your principal failing is, to my mind, 'Schillering', i.e. using individuals as mere mouthpieces for the spirit of the times. Have not you yourself — like your Franz von Sickingen — succumbed, to some extent, to the diplomatic error of regarding the Lutheran-knightly opposition as superior to the plebeian-Münzerian?

Page me40.420

Again, I miss what is characteristic in the characters. I except Charles V, Balthasar and Richard of Trier. And was there ever a time of more robust character traits than the 16th century? To my mind Hutten is, to far too great a degree, merely a representative of 'enthusiasm', which is boring. Wasn't he also witty, an infernal wit, and hence hasn't he been done a grave injustice?
Page me40.420

The extent to which even your Sickingen — who, by the way, is portrayed much too abstractly — suffers as a result of a conflict that is quite independent of all his personal calculations is evident from the necessity he is in of urging friendship with the towns, etc., upon his knights and, on the other hand, from the satisfaction with which he himself imposes club-law upon those same towns.
Page me40.420

To come down to details, I would censure the sometimes excessive preoccupation of individuals with themselves — the result of your predilection for Schiller. E.g. on p. 121, when Hutten is telling Marie the history of his life, it would have been quite natural to make Marie say:

Page Break me40.421
'The whole gamut of sensations', etc., up to the words,

'And weighs more heavily on me than did the years'.

Page me40.421

The preceding verses, from 'They say' to 'grown older', might follow at this point, but the comment, 'The virgin in a single night matures into a woman' (although showing that the love Marie knows is more than a mere abstraction), is completely pointless; still less should Marie have begun by reflecting upon her own 'ageing'. After recounting all that she had said during the 'one' hour, she might have given general expression to her feelings in the phrase about her “ageing'. Again, what offends me in the lines that follow is: 'I thought it was my right' (i.e. happiness). Why give the lie to the ingenuous view of the world which Marie has hitherto professed to hold, by turning it into a doctrine of rights? Maybe some other time I shall give you my opinion in greater detail.
Page me40.421

I consider the scene between Sickingen and Charles V to be particularly felicitous, although the dialogue on both sides is rather too much in the nature of pleading; also the scenes in Trier. Hutten's lines about the sword I thought very fine.
Page me40.421
Well, that's enough for this time.
Page me40.421
You have made my wife into a special admirer of your play. Only Marie doesn't satisfy her.
Page me40.421
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.421
Apropos. There are some bad misprints in Engels' Po and Rhine. I append a list of them on the last page of this letter.†a

Page me40.421
First published in: F. Lassale. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me40.422

241
ENGELS TO ELISABETH ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me40.422
Manchester, 20 April 1859

Dear Mother,
At last a modicum of peace and quiet in which to write to you again. I got both your dear letters and am glad to hear that you are all well and that the Blank children have recovered from the measles. I am very well; my back teeth are gradually breaking up, but not too painfully on the whole, otherwise there's absolutely nothing wrong with me; my appetite and digestion are first-rate and there hasn't been a trace of the old troubles.
Page me40.422
So little Delius has finally been unable after all to help coming the Bradfordian over you. I should have thought he would mind his p's and q's a bit more, but since he has evidently begun to stir up these little troubles, I can only tell you that in Bradford talking big is in the very air, and that, in the long run, it's a sheer impossibility for a Bradfordian to tell the truth. Now that the little chap shares lodgings with Wilhelm Kutter, who is the greatest tall story teller under the sun, he seems increasingly to be acquiring the same virtue. If a Bradfordian were to tell me that twice two makes four, I would immediately begin to doubt the accuracy of the multiplication table. I'm warning you of this in advance, so that you're not too hard on the little chap; Bradfordians are all alike, they're fluent liars. The story about the horse originated simply from my having told the owner that, if he would sell the animal for less than £120, he was to let me know — nothing more. It's a long way from there to buying. Were it now to be offered me at £120, I would think twice before giving £100 for it, since it is in fact rather too light for me and for the same money I could get a very fine, strong hunter. Come to that, it's not such a tall story about his bolting into a shop. Any horse that's really mettlesome and has done little or nothing for a whole week will, with an indifferent rider, engage in all manner of strange antics, and whether the pair of them break their necks is entirely a matter of luck. But no horse is going to find it easy to take me into a shop against my will, you may be sure of that.

Page me40.422

The other story, the one about Carl Siebel, is still more of a fabrication. Far from leading a dissipated life, he spends nearly every evening at home, hardly ever goes out and has hardly any acquaintances. I don't believe there are twenty young men of his age in the whole of Manchester who live as soberly as he does. True, in the early days he did once or twice drink a glass too many, and indulged in all kinds of childish pranks but, being in the company of myself and a few acquaintances and seeing that we found nothing to admire in these puerilities, he gave it up. Altogether he's still half a child, terribly immature and incapable of coping with the most everyday problems. But time will take care of that. We Barmen lads all seem to have this in common — that it takes us a long time to emerge from uncouth adolescence; I must have been just as queer a fish when I was 23. His parents, by the way, must have gone about it very oddly if they could do nothing with the lad, for he has an excellent side to him, namely awareness of his own weaknesses, and, far from being self-willed, is on the contrary very amenable to persuasion. What prepossesses me in his favour is that, despite all the fulsome praise that has been lavished on his verses, he knows at the bottom of his heart that these are nothing but immature, unfinished, superficial affairs, and the nice young chap was awfully grateful to me when I explained this to him good-humouredly but no less clearly for that; for after he had presented me with the whole of his immortal works, I told him outright that, while they showed talent, it was wasted talent, and that none of his stuff was of any value as a work of art. The lad must really have been very much of a dilettante in Berlin, and in danger of going to the dogs among the belletristic riff-raff of the literary world there. Whenever I see him, I regularly take him to task on the subject and tell him he should turn his back on versifying for a time and make a thorough study of the classical poets of all nations in order to educate his very confused taste a little, and to learn German, of which he still knows nothing. If he does this, he may yet become a very steady sort of chap. His parents, by the way, ought to have sufficient gumption to place themselves on a rational footing with him — one that he can tolerate — or so arrange matters that he can gradually find the means and the opportunity of setting himself up, here or elsewhere, as an independent business man. The boy knows that he can at any time earn sufficient to live on by his writing, and if his dear papa has neither the intelligence nor the tact to treat him like a grown-up person, he has only himself to blame if the chap finally gets sick of the whole thing and decides to do nothing but write, when he would quite certainly go completely to the dogs. Old Siebel may perhaps imagine that I'm putting all kinds of nonsense into his son's head, but he can rest assured that I am bringing my whole influence to bear on him to deter him from over-much writing (because the boy isn't yet ripe for it) and to make him realise that there's no more wretched existence than dependence on earnings from literary work, and that the sooner he comes to terms with his prosaic, bourgeois trade, the better (for without it, since he is au fond†a reluctant to learn, there would be nothing to restrain him and he'd go to the dogs altogether). If he does this and gains a little more experience of life and sheds his awkwardness, I have no doubt he will become a very steady sort of chap and achieve something worthwhile in the literary field too. I like the boy very much since he is exceedingly good-natured, not at all conceited and very frank and straightforward. I normally see him twice a week or so.

Page Break me40.423

Page Break me40.424
Page me40.424
I didn't know that E. Blank was in London and hope that he'll come up here one of these days; anyhow, a few months ago he promised he would. War or no war, by the way, let nothing prevent you from coming over here this summer — I'm counting firmly on it. As you know, we're bound for Scotland this summer, and in the meantime you can take another look at your Walter Scott so that you'll know what's what.
Page me40.424
But now I must stop as it's 7 o'clock and I still have sundry business letters to write. I had really meant to enclose a note for Father, but it is absolutely impossible and I must have the statements done for him as well. So I'll write to him as soon as I can, in two or three days' time.
Page me40.424
Meanwhile give him my love, and also to my brothers and sisters and their families.
Page me40.424
With much love from your son, Friedrich

Page me40.424
You needn't, of course, tell Mrs Siebel every word I've said about Carl.
Page me40.424
From the bottom of my heart I wish you many happy returns of the day, and hope that I shall be able to do so many, many times again.

Page me40.424
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 2, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.425

242
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.425
[London,] 22 April 1859

Dear Frederick,
I have MODIFIED your ARTICLE†a to accord with the latest NEWS.
Page me40.425
You didn't, I suppose, waste your time (as I was obliged to do) wading through last Monday's parliamentary debates.†b Their GIST was as follows:
Page me40.425
1. England has been duped throughout the negotiations.
Page me40.425
2. England is decidedly pro-Austrian.
Page me40.425
ad 1. The English ministers had announced once before that everything was SETTLED. This was when the news of the evacuation of Rome†405 was appearing in all the papers. From statements made in the House of Lords it follows: that the Pope†c really had requested that his territory be evacuated. France had repeatedly complained to the English about the falsity of her position in Rome. She had wished to withdraw but was prevented, on the one hand, by the Pope's apprehensions and, on the other, by the Austrians' refusal similarly to withdraw. This was actually the official PRETEXT Boustrapa†40 gave England to justify the scene with the Austrian ambassador on 1 January.†406 WELL, the Pope scotched that PRETEXT. Austria ACTUALLY withdrew 2 battalions from Bologna and had given ORDERS for the remaining troops to leave. Then Bonaparte discovered a pretext for not evacuating, and thus the whole business fell through. This put Mr Derby into a very BAD TEMPER and, TO SOOTH HIM, Bonaparte unbosomed himself about the 'ITALIAN QUESTION' to Lord Cowley, who telegraphed London saying he found his demands 'SATISFACTORY'. Thereupon Cowley was sent to Vienna bearing Bonaparte's demands which England had accepted. (This man Cowley is the selfsame swine who, in Vienna in 1848/49, intrigued against the German revolution.) This was at the end of February. Austria, being exceedingly reluctant to engage in a war and having at the time not progressed nearly so far in the matter of armaments as by the middle of March, accepted

Page Break me40.426
everything. When Cowley arrived in London on his way back to Paris, both 'he' and the 'Ministry', as Derby himself says, were fully convinced that everything was SETTLED, and again discredited themselves by making a fresh statement to that effect before Parliament. So Cowley departs in sanguine mood for Paris. Here he learns that they've been playing blind man's buff with him and that, at Russia's suggestion, Boustrapa has agreed to A GENERAL CONGRESS at which, again at Russia's suggestion, only the 5 great powers were to be represented, i.e. Sardinia was to be excluded. Derby declared outright that Russia's intervention (although agreed with France; but Bonaparte, of course, could not reject CONDITIONS put to Austria by England in his name) was alone to blame for the fact that peace had not been achieved. On the same day Palmerston said in the House OF COMMONS that he didn't (OF COURSE) blame Russia; had England's mediation been successful Russia would not have played the role she would certainly play at a congress and which was her due where European questions were concerned. Although with very bad grace, Derby accepted the Russian proposal under certain conditions, of which THE PRINCIPAL was that the TERRITORIAL SETTLEMENTS of the Treaty of Vienna of 1815†407 should not be infringed. Austria, who had already assumed that everything was settled, now clearly perceived that war had been decided upon and that an attempt was being made to lead her by the nose. Hence her reply to the new English proposal was the outrageous demand that, by way of a preliminary to the congress, Sardinia must disarm. Whereupon Derby proposed to Bonaparte that Sardinia should be induced to consent to this outrage on condition that both France and England simultaneously undertook to guarantee her against a breach of the peace by Austria during the congress. That ass Bonaparte rejected this. Had he accepted he could have got his agents to stage some sort of fracas on the Austro-Piedmontese border, when England would have been BOUND DOWN TO AN OFFENSIVE TREATY WITH FRANCE AND SARDINIA AGAINST AUSTRIA, and Palmerston would have certainly compelled the Tories TO BE AS GOOD AS THEIR WORD. The Austrians, for their part, were alarmed by the ease with which, under certain circumstances, England was prepared to enter into an offensive alliance against them. They therefore promptly declared themselves in favour of the English proposal, and made Sardinia's disarmament a general disarmament. Then came the row as to whether disarmament should take place before the MEETING of the CONGRESS, as maintained by Austria, or after it, as maintained by Bonaparte, and then as to whether or not Sardinia should be admitted, etc. In short, all the new difficulties stemmed from Bonaparte, 1) the QUIBBLES about disarmament; 2) after all, he and Russia had proposed the exclusion of Sardinia from the congress. So enraged was Derby last Monday that he is said to have literally shouted when he declared that England would now make one more, ULTIMATE proposal; but he was weary of TRIFLING and if that one failed he would no longer act as mediator, etc.

Page Break me40.427
Page me40.427
ad 2. Bonaparte could accept these latter proposals since they were detrimental solely to Austria in so far as she was in the lead with her armaments. He had to accept them if Derby was not to be given a pretext for taking an outright stand against him. Austria had to reject them if she was not to deprive herself of every advantage, etc. Bonaparte, who had counted on Derby's fall and Palmerston's accession, was IN A PLIGHT THE WORSE since in their speeches Derby and Disraeli had plainly indicated that they were tired of being duped by Bonaparte and Russia and had, moreover, definitely sided with Austria. Malmesbury said he failed to understand upon what pretext Bonaparte had intervened in the Italian imbroglio. Derby said that England would at first observe ARMED NEUTRALITY, but turn against any power which 'for no good reason' instigated a war. Derby said that England's interests in the Adriatic did not permit him to look on with folded arms; and that he would regard an attack on Trieste almost as a casus belli. Disraeli said that Austria had behaved with 'DIGNIFIED MODERATION' and that Sardinia was 'AMBIGUOUS, VEXING AND EVEN AMBITIOUS'. Finally they all said that the treaties of 1815 must be MAINTAINED, and repeatedly emphasised, with immediate reference to the TERRITORIAL SETTLEMENT IN ITALY, that those treaties 'INTENDED PUTTING A CHECK UPON THE ENCROACHING AMBITION OF FRANCE'.

Page me40.427

This much is certain: The ruse whereby Derby, instead of resigning, consigned Parliament to the devil, thus temporarily banishing Palmerston into private life, has placed the Russo-French game in a serious dilemma.

Page me40.427

There are only two alternatives.

Page me40.427

Either Austria allows herself to be intimidated by minatory TELEGRAMS from London and Berlin, and WITHDRAWS Gyulay's ultimatum to Piedmont,†408 in which case not even God will be able to help Bonaparte. For then he will, IN FACT, be compelled to disarm and be treated by the army as a Soulouque. As it is, the workers in Paris have been infuriated by the turpitude of Blanqui's deportation to Cayenne.†409 Or else Austria wearies of diplomatic trifling and marches on Turin. In which case Mr Bonaparte has won a diplomatic victory in as much as Austria will have been the first to declare war; but that diplomatic victory will have been bought at the expense of AN UGLY MILITARY DEFEAT. In which case I don't give 4 MONTHS PURCHASE FOR HIS CROWN AND DYNASTY.

Page Break me40.428

Page me40.428

I'll send you the Tribunes tomorrow.

Page me40.428

Apropos.

Page me40.428

The great imperial Vogt†410 has written Freiligrath an epistle in which he informs him that this imperial gang is bringing out a new newspaper in Zurich (or Berne, I forget which).†411 He invited Freiligrath to write for the feuilleton and to enlist the profound Bucher as political correspondent.

Page me40.428

The platform upon which imperial Vogt proposes to build a new 'party' and which has, as he himself puts it, been most warmly welcomed by A. Herzen, is this: Germany surrenders her extraterritorial possessions. Does not support Austria. French despotism is transitory, Austrian permanent. Both despots to be allowed to bleed to death. (Even some predilection for Bonaparte in evidence.) Armed neutrality for Germany. A revolutionary movement in Germany, as Vogt 'knows on the best authority', is not to be thought of DURING OUR LIFETIME. CONSEQUENTLY, as soon as Austria has been ruined by Bonaparte, the fatherland will experience the spontaneous beginnings of a moderate, liberal-national development á la imperial Regency, and Vogt may yet become Prussian court jester. From Vogt's letter it is evident that he believes Freiligrath to be no longer connected with us in any way. The ignorance of this imperial Vogt about the people he is dealing with! Bucher, as an Urquhartite, is an Austrian. The great Blind, ON THE OTHER HAND, finding himself in the dilemma of being anti-Bonaparte as a German and anti-Austria as , is AT THE PRESENT MOMENT convening a 'German Parliament',†a as the telegraph will soon announce in Manchester.†412

Page me40.428

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.428
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.429

243
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†82
IN BERLIN
Page me40.429
London, 5 May 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

From the enclosed letter dated April 12,†a which I should like to have back, you will see that there is a very considerable difference between the terms offered me by your cousin Friedländer and the terms you originally communicated to me.†b Nevertheless I replied by return accepting them.†413 I merely noted:
Page me40.429

1. that I could not make disbursements for telegrams, a point, by the by, that hardly needed mentioning and had been anticipated in your letter;
Page me40.429

2. that, if we came to an arrangement, I should like (though I did not make it a conditio sine qua†c) to be able to draw on them with a BANKER here for articles, etc., sent, as is done in the case of the Tribune.
Page me40.429

So far there has been no answer, which I find strange. If the editors have changed their minds, they might have had the decency to inform me. As you are aware, I did not in any way thrust myself forward in this matter. But, having accepted, I made one or two preliminary approaches to English newspapers, etc., and I am specially anxious not to be compromised in the eyes of these people and other acquaintances whom I have informed of the matter for business reasons. That I, for my part, have not yet sent off any article is only natural, since there is still no firm engagement.

Page me40.429
The elections here have not, alas, turned out to be sufficiently Tory.†385 Had this been the case there would, BY and BY, have been the beginnings of a revolutionary movement here. Palmerston's return to the FOREIGN MINISTRY can now, AFTER SOME SHUFFLING, be regarded as certain and hence Russia will again be in direct control of English policy.

Page Break me40.430
Page me40.430
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.430
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

244
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.430
[London,] 6 May 1859

DEAR Frederick,
Your article received.†414 You will have seen from a telegraphic despatch that Hess has come out against Gyulay's plan (perhaps one should describe it as absence of plan). Looked at from our — i.e. a revolutionary — POINT OF VIEW, it would be by no means undesirable if Austria were to begin either by suffering a reverse or, which is morally the same thing, by withdrawing into Lombardy again. This will greatly complicate matters and thus allow sufficient time for things to come to a head in Paris. All in all the state of affairs is such that, no matter on what side BLUNDERS occur, they will necessarily redound to our advantage. If, at the outset, Austria were to beat the Piedmontese army, take Turin and thrash the French as they debouched from the Alps, Russia might immediately turn against Bonaparte†415 — having in any case not yet actually entered into any obligations against Germany, and our rotten Prussian government would be extricated from the only dilemma that might cost it its neck. Again: Such a devastating defeat at the very beginning could bring about a mutiny in the French army and an anti-Bonaparte revolution in Paris. What then? At this juncture the upshot would be victorious armed intervention by the Holy Alliance†416 against a potential revolutionary government in Paris, something which certainly doesn't come into our calcul.†a

Page Break me40.431
Even Radetzky had the revolutionary ardour of 1848 in his veins. On the other hand I believe that on both sides, Austrian and French, the war will now be conducted with reactionary mediocrity.
Page me40.431

It was wrong of you not to have sent us at least two more pamphlets†a — for Pfänder, who sent off your manuscript under his own name, and for Freiligrath. It would also be fitting to send a copy to P. Imandt (DUNDEE SEMINARY, Dundee). You must pay some heed to party relations and keep the chaps in good humour.
Page me40.431

Apropos, I deleted the whole of the preamble to your last Friday's article,†b firstly because I had my MISGIVINGS about the Austrians; secondly because it is absolutely essential that we do not identify our cause with that of the present German governments.
Page me40.431

In my view, the worthy Palmerston will very shortly be back at the helm as FOREIGN MINISTER or War Minister. Those dolts of Tories are indeed making things too easy for him. First they go and spoil the Austrians' game by their miserable SHOW OF MEDIATION. Then, as soon as the Franco-Russian treaty has been made known, they bend every FORCE to deny its existence, so as to prove THAT THEY HAVE NOT BEEN TAKEN BY SURPRISE. This in turn gives The Times the opportunity to deride them and adopt a patriotic attitude towards Russia.†c But the LONG AND SHORT of it is that The Times, like all the rest of Palmerston's papers (though these, depending on their allotted role, either oppose or support the various powers involved), is hinting at the necessity of reappointing THE TRULY BRITISH MINISTER†141 (The Morning Advertiser and The Daily Telegraph, which write for the MOB, are saying it openly). The wretched Tories ought instead to have 'lent credence to' the Russo-French treaty and seized on the chance of going for Pam. They had the best of OPPORTUNITIES. Firstly, Pam was in Compiégne†356 when the whole plan was hatched. Secondly, Mr Whiteside, speaking on behalf of the ministry, had in fact already told silly old John Bull†d what had long been apparent from the Blue Books,†38 namely that in 1848 Austria approached Palmerston and offered to relinquish the whole of Lombardy but to install an Italian government in Venice under an Austrian ARCHDUKE, if he would mediate.†e Piedmont had approached him at the same time, France ditto. What did Pam do?

Page Break me40.432
He rejected the proposal, on the PRETEXT that Venice, too, must be given up altogether. He gave this answer after a three weeks' silence. As soon as Radetzky was victorious he called upon the Austrians to carry out the plan they had divulged to him. In the Hungarian affair (with reference this time to the CONDITIONS upon which the already desperate Hungarians were willing to submit) he performed the same manoeuvre. The fellow's return to the ministry constitutes A REAL DANGER. In Germany, by the by, the fellows are beginning to see through him. In a book by Prof. Wurm of Hamburg (a history of the war in the East),†a and a book on Nicholas by another German, whose name I can't recall, Pam is attacked outright as a Russian agent.

Page me40.432
Ad vocem BUSINESS.†b That ass Friedländer wrote to me on 12 April but had forgotten the crucial point, i.e. instructions to a banking-house. Instead, he spoke of an 'advance'. This last is NONSENSE. £8-10, and often £15, will be needed each week for telegrams. I wrote and told the ass so. Up till now no answer, although he regularly sends me the Vienna Presse (from which I gather that it now has 26,000 subscribers). Yesterday I wrote Lassalle a fulminating letter.†c I see from the Presse that Lassalle has embarked on his articles and telegraphic despatches for that paper with great zeal albeit small talent. However he did not accept this post until I had 'given him permission' in writing,†d not wanting — or so he says — to take the political risk without my CONSENT. It would be a rum business, would it not, if all the transaction led to was Lassalle's installing himself in that quarter? It's possible, however, that the delay is due to Friedländer's difficulty in arranging the financial side in Vienna during the present TROUBLES. MEANWHILE, out of impatience, I am devoting myself to algebra.
Page me40.432
Salut.
Page me40.432
Is Lupus in Manchester?

Your
K.M.

Page me40.432
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.433

245
MARX TO MAX FRIEDLÄNDER IN VIENNA
Page me40.433
London, 16 May 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sir,

I have been receiving the Vienna Presse regularly and my debt to you for sending it is the greater in that it throws light on conditions in Austria at this important juncture.
Page me40.433
I have not yet had a reply to the letter I wrote you some weeks ago.†413 If, by chance, the proposed arrangement†a has come to nothing as a result of the DERANGEMENTS of the Vienna money market,†417 I would beg you to advise me of this by return, for I have made certain agreements regarding telegrams with newspapers over here which commit me to financial outlays and which I shall accordingly terminate forthwith.
Page me40.433
Yours very truly,
Dr K. Marx

Page me40.433
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

246
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.433
[London,] 16 May 1859

Dear Engels,
From the enclosed letter of Lassalle's,†418 which I must have back by return, you will see how far things have progressed with the

Page Break me40.434
Vienna BUSINESS. I wrote to Friedländer at once. The fact is that Lassalle doesn't know that I get the Presse every day — I enclose a few excerpts from it — and thus have seen that, up to the time of my letter,†a he regularly contributed to the paper, but that the latter stopped his telegrams from Berlin on account of their inordinate length; moreover his articles were inept and would be something of an embarrassment to any paper. It is possible that the whole business is off, but it is also possible that the COMMERCIAL PANIC in Vienna, comparable only to the one in Hamburg,†419 has so far prevented the chaps from making any ARRANGEMENT. Nous verrons.†b
Page me40.434
More in my next — highly comical, too. This much today: our†c ex-gérant†d Korff has been sentenced in New Orleans to 12 years penal servitude for FORGERY OF A BILL.
Page me40.434

Ex-imperial regent Vogt†410 has sold himself to Bonaparte.†420
Page me40.434
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.434
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

247
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.434
[London,] 18 May 1859

Dear Engels,
Lassalle's letter†418 contains several POINTS upon which I shall haul him over the coals. D'abord,†e the laddie talks about what he 'is to do for me'. But all I asked of him was that he, who set the whole thing in train and whose articles I was constantly seeing in the Presse, should enlighten me as to the mysterious silence from Vienna.†f This was his BUSINESS. Secondly, he makes it look as though he had contributed to the Presse only after a tremendous struggle, on 'my' insistence. But at one point in the same letter he admits that he had already begun sending articles to Vienna before I had stated my case. Then, however, he proceeds to reverse the 'nexus'. When he sent me Friedländer's offer he drivelled away for two pages about whether or not he should write to Vienna, and made the thing dependent on my decision. D'abord, it went without saying that, if I thought writing for the Presse good enough for me, I wouldn't think it beneath Lassalle. Moreover, I could see from his letter how anxious he was to obtain my CONSENT. Why then do we now have this self-aggrandizing misrepresentation of the causal nexus? What he says about 'bias' and having written to Friedländer 'telling him off' about it, is NONSENSE. As Austrian papers go and considering the circumstances, the Vienna Presse is edited cleverly and fairly, with far greater tact than Lassalle would be able to command. Finally, I did not invite the laddie's instructions as to what is or is not 'worthy' of me. I consider it RATHER ARROGANT of him to drop hints to me on the subject. If Friedländer manages to SETTLE the financial side, I shall positivement stand by my decision, which is in no way altered by the fact that Lassalle's articles don't seem to suit Friedländer. From recent issues of the Presse I see that the number of its subscribers has risen to 27,000.

Page Break me40.435

Page me40.435

Lassalle's pamphlet†a is an ENORMOUS BLUNDER.†421 The publication of your 'anonymous' pamphlet†b made him envious. Admittedly the position of the revolutionary party in Germany is difficult at present, yet a little critical analysis of the CIRCUMSTANCES suffices to make it plain. As regards the 'governments', it is clear from all points of view, if only in the interests of Germany's existence, that they must be urged not to remain neutral but to be, as you rightly say, patriotic. But the affair can be given revolutionary pertinence simply by stressing opposition to Russia more strongly than opposition to Boustrapa.†40 That's what Lassalle should have done vis-á-vis the Neue Preussische Zeitung's anti-French clamour. Indeed, it is this point which, as the war goes on, will in practice involve the German governments in high treason and at which it will be possible to seize them by the throat. Incidentally, if Lassalle takes it upon himself to speak in the name of the party, he must in future either resign himself to being publicly disavowed by us, since circumstances are too grave to take account of feelings, or else he must first ascertain the views held by others besides himself before following the joint inspiration of fire and logic.†422 We must now absolutely insist on party discipline, otherwise everything will be in the soup.

Page Break me40.436
Page me40.436

The confusion presently reigning in men's minds has reached a curious peak. D'abord, THERE IS that traitor to the Empire, the 'imperial regent',†410 who has received cash payments from Paris.†420 In the Hamburg Freischütz, Mr Meyen praises Vogt's piece.†a There is a type of vulgar democrat (some sincere ones among them believe that an Austrian defeat, complemented by revolution in Hungary + Galicia, etc., would bring about revolution in Germany. The dolts forget that revolution in Germany now = disorganisation of her armies and would benefit, not the revolutionaries, but Russia and Boustrapa), a type, I say, of vulgar democrat who delights in being able to pipe the same tune as the decembristising†138 Hungarians (Bangyas all) and Poles (in the Prussian chamber a few days ago Mr Cieszkowski called Nicholas the Poles' 'great Slav ally') and Italians. Another lot — e.g. Blind who seeks to combine patriotism and democratism — are making asses of themselves (and old Uhland too among their number) by demanding war with Austria against Bonaparte and, at the same time, an imperial parliament. D'abord, the asses fail to see that the conditions for the fulfilment of this repellent wish are entirely wanting. Secondly, however, they pay so little heed to what is really happening as to be wholly unaware that, in the only part of Germany which counts, namely Prussia, the bourgeois are proud of their Chambers, whose power is bound to grow with the growing embarrassment of the GOVERNMENT; that these bourgeois are justifiably (as recent transactions in the Chambers go to show) disinclined to be dictated to by Badeners and Württembergers under the style of 'parliament', just as the Prussian government is reluctant to be ruled by Austria under the style of 'Federal Diet'†423; that these bourgeois know from the experience of 1848 that a parliament alongside their Chambers destroys the power of the latter while itself remaining nothing more than a phantasm. In fact there is much more revolutionary purchase in the Prussian

Chambers, which have to vote budgets and which, in certain EVENTUALITIES, have part of the ARMY and the Berlin mob behind them, than in a DEBATING CLUB under the style of 'Imperial Parliament'. That Badeners, Württembergers and OTHER SMALL DEER take a different view because of their own importance goes without saying. There is a very real fear among our own party friends and other sincere revolutionaries that war against Boustrapa would mean a reversion to 1813-15. Finally, those who speak for the Crédit mobilier†45 in Germany (Kölnische Zeitung, Fould-Oppenheim, etc.) naturally share the democrats' apprehensions and pin their hopes on the Prussian dynasty's traditional short-sighted perfidy (Peace of Basle,†424 etc.). On the other hand, a section of the democratic and revolutionary party feels bound for patriotic reasons to adopt a Jahn-Arndtian tone. In view of all these CONFUSIONS, and since I believe that Germany's fate is hanging in the balance, I think it behoves the two of us to issue a party manifesto.†425 If the Vienna business†a is settled, you must come up for the purpose at Whitsun. If not, I shall come to Manchester.

Page Break me40.437
Page me40.437
From these GENERAL THINGS I NOW come to the STATE OF PARTIES (German) in London, and here I must recapitulate certain matters which I considered too boring to recount to you so long as they were still in progress.
Page me40.437
First, you will recall that Mr Liebknecht introduced the CLOWN E. Bauer into the so-called Communist Society†426 just when I had publicly broken with Bauer and that the CLOWN took over the Neue Zeit in which the ignorant blockhead, by his EXAGGERATION of the few communist catch-phrases he had picked up from Scherzer, turned our party into a laughing-stock. For me it was a most disagreeable affair — not because of the few louts in London, but because of the malicious glee of the democratic crew, because of the FALSE APPEARANCES evoked by smartly sending COPIES of the filthy rag to Germany and the UNITED STATES, because of the knowledge the CLOWN gained of the rotten state of the party; finally, because of the contacts he made with the International Committee here.†427 Throughout the time the CLOWN was editing the Neue Zeit and lecturing to the Society, Mr Liebknecht remained in the latter and, moreover, talked a great deal of nonsense about having to defend me against the great odium felt for me by the workers (i.e. louts), etc. Well, after only half a number (I sent it to you) of the Neue Zeit had appeared because of lack of money, Liebknecht acted as CHAIRMAN at a meeting to which the various associations had been invited for the purpose of saving the paper.†428 The result, of course, was nil. After this performance, I convened our people (a small gang, Pfänder, Lochner, etc., and a few newcomers, whom Liebknecht had for a long time — ever since my removal out of town†429 — treated as his private club) and took the occasion to pitch into Liebknecht in a manner far from pleasing to him until he declared himself a contrite sinner. He said that an attempt had been made to bring out the Neue Zeit again, but had been frustrated by his vigorous intervention. I was therefore surprised to receive, a day or two later, what appeared to be a successor to the Neue Zeit, entitled Das Volk.†430 However, the matter was elucidated in a curious way, as follows (see also enclosed letter):

Page Break me40.438

Page me40.438

Mr CLOWN had finally written to Biskamp (you have a letter to him from Biskamp) saying that Kinkel had ruined the Neue Zeit by his intrigues, appeared to be seething with vindictive feelings, etc. WELL. Biskamp comes up to London and is d'abord STARTLED BY THE FACT that one of his own articles intended for the Neue Zeit has appeared in the Hermann somewhat watered down. He hurries to the CLOWN, who seems far from PLEASED to see him, says he is ill, simulates disillusionment and ends up by telling him that the whole thing is a mess, that he (Biskamp) should not get involved in it, that Kinkel is too strong, etc. But Biskamp, struck by the fact that Kinkel had transferred his Hermann to the Neue Zeit's press, having given up his former press, and that he was printing his manuscripts, hastily sought out Hirschfeld at the press where he discovered — Edgar Bauer's manuscript and proof corrections. IN ONE WORD, Mr Edgar had used the Neue Zeit to sell himself to Kinkel and — evidence of the man's fecundity — made the most of the occasion by printing Biskamp's manuscripts as contributions of his own. That oaf Kinkel! He seeks to ruin the Neue Zeit, not by giving the CLOWN money and allowing him to continue as editor, but by buying the said CLOWN who, throughout his editorship, had eschewed all polemic! But in this way Gottfried thought to rid himself once and for all of competition, however small. One more word about the activities of this same Gottfried. A third German paper made its appearance here, first under the title Londoner Deutsche Zeitung, then under the title Germania. This paper, edited by a certain Ermani, had Austrian leanings. Gottfried revealed that the editor had committed some felony, got Dr Juch to threaten him, bought up his paper and press for a mere song (whether out of the Revolutionary Fund or with money supplied by the Prussian Embassy isn't known) and, they say, intends to continue publishing the sheet under Juch's management and a different title. Kinkel's paper has 1,700 subscribers, is coming to be a source of income, and the fellow wishes to secure it against any competition or polemics.

Page Break me40.439
Page me40.439

After the CLOWN'S betrayal, Biskamp, etc., founded Das Volk, and he and the louts first approached me indirectly through Liebknecht. Then Biskamp came to see me.
Page me40.439

I told him that we could not contribute directly to a small paper nor, for that matter, to any party paper which we did not ourselves edit. However, the latter was a move for which every prerequisite was lacking at the moment. On the other hand Mr Liebknecht might give Biskamp the benefit of his collaboration. I appreciated, of course, that Gottfried has not been left in command of the field and that his dirty schemes should be BAFFLED, but all I would undertake to do was to let them have from time to time 'published' Tribune ARTICLES which they could use; to urge my acquaintances to take the paper; and, finally, to give them verbally any information that reached me and 'pointers' about this and that. On the other hand I stipulated that Biskamp should forthwith publish (he will do so in the very next number) a documented account of Bauer's and Kinkel's dirty work.†a (I shall thus have killed 2 birds with one stone, even if the little paper ceases publication.) Further, that the CLOWN'S objective heights must be abandoned and that the tone adopted must IN EVERY RESPECT be aggressive and polemical and, indeed, as amusing as possible.

Page me40.439

CONSEQUENTLY, I would ask you, Lupus, Gumpert and anyone else you can get hold of (point out that our only interest in the thing is that it's anti-Kinkel) to subscribe to Das Volk, OFFICE: 3 Litchfield Street, Soho. (Quarterly subscription 3/6d post free.) Gumpert and Biskamp both come from Hesse-Cassel and since the former may have an occasional bon mot up his sleeve, he might send it to his compatriot. Finally, let me have the name of some fellow (a STATIONER) in Manchester to whom Das Volk could be sent for distribution. (Write to the Bradfordian†b as well.)
Page me40.439

I consider Das Volk to be a dilettante rag like our Brussels and Paris papers.†c But covertly and without intervening directly, we can use it to worry the life out of Gottfried, etc., etc. Again, the moment may come, and that very soon, when it will be of crucial importance that, not just our enemies, but we ourselves should be able to publish our views in a London paper. Biskamp works for nothing and hence is all the more deserving of support.
Page me40.439

What is really choice is that in No. 18 of the Hermann, the CLOWN wrote a highly inane, piddling sort of article in which he 'proves' that, because of 'England's neutrality', the present war is condemned to be a 'hole and corner war'.†a 'Conclusive' deeds are no longer possible on the unhappy Continent, which is the reason why noble England remains 'neutral'. In No. 19 the CLOWN is given a dressing-down by Blind from the indignant democratic-patriotic standpoint and by Bucher from the Urquhartite and thus, having been stamped upon by all parties, he will doubtless soon get the sack, even from the Hermann.†b

Page Break me40.440
Page me40.440

This has been a very good lesson for the louts. Scherzer, that old-Weitlingian jackass, imagined that he could nominate party representatives. At my meeting with a deputation of the louts (I have refused to visit any association, but Liebknecht is CHAIRMAN of one and Laplander†c of another†431) I told them straight out that we owed our position as representatives of the proletarian party to nobody but ourselves; this, however, had been endorsed by the exclusive and universal hatred accorded us by every faction and party of the old world. You can imagine how taken aback the oafs were.
Page me40.440

If you haven't any Po and Rhine left, you must order some. COPIES are also needed for Steffen, Weydemeyer and several reviews here.
Page me40.440

Might it be possible to send poor Eccarius, who is again going to pieces in his sweat-shop, a fresh consignment of port?
Page me40.440

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.440
Have received a letter from Weydemeyer and Komp.†432 Shall send it you very soon. Thanks to them Duncker has already had orders for about 100 copies of my Economy†d from the UNITED STATES.
Page me40.440
Tell Lupus that, FROM THE BEGINNING, Beta (Bettziech), editor of How do you do?, was also Gottfried's real editorial factotum.

Page me40.440
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 2, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.441

248
ENGELS TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†433
IN BERLIN
Page me40.441
Manchester, 18 May 1859
6 Thorncliffe Grove

Dear Lassalle,
You will have found it somewhat strange that I haven't written to you for so long, the more so since I owe you an opinion on your Sickingen.†a But that is precisely what has kept me from writing to you for so long. With the current and universal barrenness of fiction I seldom have a chance to read such a work, and for years I have never had a chance to read one of this kind in such a way that the reading of it resulted in a detailed judgment, a precisely stated opinion. The rubbish isn't worth the trouble. Even the few better English novels I read from time to time, e.g. those of Thackeray, have never been able to elicit this interest in me, despite their undeniable literary and cultural significance. But, having lain fallow for so long, my judgment has lost most of its edge and I need a good deal of time before I can permit myself to express an opinion. Your Sickingen, however, deserves better treatment than that sort of stuff and so I've taken my time. The first and second readings of what is in every sense, both as regards material and treatment, a German national drama, stirred my emotions to the extent that I was compelled to put it aside for a while, the more so as my taste has become so vitiated in these lean times that it has reduced me, I'm ashamed to say, to a state in which sometimes even stuff of inferior quality inevitably has some effect on me at the first reading. So in order to be wholly unbiassed, wholly 'critical', I put Sickingen away, i.e. allowed a few of my acquaintances to borrow it (there are still a few Germans here who are more or less knowledgeable about literature). Habent sua fata libelli†b — if they're borrowed one rarely sets eyes on them again, and so I actually had to recover my Sickingen by force. I can tell you that, after the third and fourth readings, my impression has remained unaltered and, in the knowledge that your Sickingen can stand up to criticism, I shall now speak my mind.

Page Break me40.442
Page me40.442

I know that I am not paying you any particular compliment when I state the fact that not one of Germany's present official poets would be remotely capable of writing such a play. However, fact it is and one all too characteristic of our literature not to be voiced. Taking the formal aspect first, your skilful manipulation of the plot and the thoroughly dramatic nature of the piece came as a very pleasant surprise. Admittedly you have taken a good many liberties with the versification but this is more bothersome in the reading than it would be on the stage. I should very much like to have read the stage version†434; as the play stands here it could certainly not be performed; I have had with me here a young German poet (Carl Siebel), a distant relative who hails from my neighbourhood, and has had a good deal to do with the stage. He may be coming to Berlin as a reservist in the Prussian Guard, in which case I may take the liberty of giving him a note for you. He thought highly of your play but considered a performance quite impracticable by reason of the long speeches in which only one actor is occupied while the others may run through their entire miming routine 2 or 3 times so as not to stand there like dummies. The last two acts give adequate proof that you experience no difficulty in making your dialogue brisk and lively and since, with the exception of a few scenes (as happens in any play), the same thing would seem to be feasible in the first 3, I don't doubt you have taken this circumstance into account in your stage version. The intellectual content must, of course, suffer as a result — but that's inevitable, and the complete fusion of greater intellectual profundity, of a consciously historical content (both of which you ascribe, not without reason, to the German drama†435), with Shakespearean vivacity and wealth of action will probably not be achieved — and perhaps not even by the Germans — until some time in the future. Indeed, that, to my mind, is where the future of the drama lies. Your Sickingen is entirely on the right lines; the chief protagonists in the action are representative of certain classes and tendencies, hence of certain ideas of their time, and derive their motives not from the petty appetites of the individual but from the very historical current by which they are borne along. But there is one advance that might yet be made in that these motives should emerge more of themselves, in a live, active, as it were spontaneous manner, more through the development of the action, while on the other hand reasoned debate (in which, by the way, I rediscovered with pleasure your old eloquence before the Assizes and the popular meeting†436) becomes increasingly superfluous. You yourself seem to recognise this ideal as a goal, since you draw a distinction between stage drama and literary drama; I admit that Sickingen could be turned into a stage drama along the lines indicated, difficult though this would be (for it is truly no mean accomplishment). The characterisation of the protagonists is linked with this. You quite rightly oppose the cheap individualisation now prevalent, which amounts to nothing more than petty intellectual fireworks and is an essential characteristic of ineffectual imitative literature. At the same time it seems to me that a person is not characterised merely by what he does, but also by how he does it; and in this respect it would, I think, have done the intellectual content of the play no harm had clearer distinctions and stronger contrasts been drawn between individual characters. The characterisation of the ancients no longer suffices today, and it is here, I think, that you might to your own advantage have paid rather more attention to the importance of Shakespeare in the historical development of the drama. But these are minor points which I bring up only to show you that I have also concerned myself with the formal aspect of your play.

Page Break me40.443

Page me40.443

Now, as regards the historical content, you have presented what to you were the two most important aspects of the movement of that period very vividly and with justifiable reference to subsequent developments: the national aristocratic movement represented by Sickingen, and the humanist-theoretical movement, with its more extensive ramifications in the theological and ecclesiastical field, the Reformation. The scenes I like best are those between Sickingen and the Emperor†a and between the Legate and the Archbishop of Trier†b (here, in the contrast between the narrow-minded German prince of the church and the worldly Legate with his aesthetic and classical culture and political and theoretical foresight, you have, too, pulled off a nice piece of individual characterisation which nevertheless stems directly from the representative character of the two protagonists); in the scene between Sickingen and Charles the characterisation is also very striking. However, in making Hutten tell his life-story,†c the content of which you rightly describe as essential, you have chosen a desperate means of introducing that content into the play. Also of great importance is the conversation in Act V between Balthasar and Franz during which the former remonstrates with his master about the genuinely revolutionary policy he should have followed. It is here that the real tragedy becomes apparent; and, precisely because of this significance, it seems to me that it should have been rather more strongly indicated as early as Act III, in which there are several opportunities for this. But again I digress.

Page Break me40.444

Page me40.444

The attitude of the towns and the princes at that time is likewise portrayed more than once with great clarity, thereby pretty well exhausting what might be called the official elements of the movement as it then was. But something upon which I should say you had failed to lay due emphasis are the non-official, plebeian and peasant elements, with their concomitant theoretical representation. In its own way the peasant movement was just as national, just as hostile to the princes, as that of the aristocracy, and the colossal dimensions of the struggle in which it succumbed contrast most significantly with the levity with which the aristocracy, leaving Sickingen in the lurch, gave itself up to its historical calling of sycophancy. Even allowing for your concept of the drama which, as you will have seen, is rather too abstract, not realistic enough, in my opinion, I should say that the peasant movement deserved closer attention; certainly, the peasant scene with Joss Fritz is true to type and the individuality of this 'agitator'†437 is very accurately portrayed but, relative to the aristocratic movement, it does not represent with sufficient force what was then already a surging torrent of peasant agitation. In accordance with my view of the drama, which consists in not allowing the ideal to oust the real, or Schiller to oust Shakespeare, the introduction of society's plebeian section, so wonderfully colourful at the time, would have provided material of a quite different kind with which to animate the play, an incomparable backdrop for the national aristocratic movement going on down-stage, which would itself thus appear in its true light for the first time. What bizarre portraits does this period of dissolving feudal ties not bring forth! Vagabond beggar kings, hungry mercenaries and adventurers of all kinds — a Falstaffian†a backdrop which, in a historical play in this sense, must needs be even more effective than in Shakespeare! But apart from that, I should say more particularly that neglect of the peasant movement is what has led you to give an incorrect idea, or so it seems to me, of one aspect of the national aristocratic movement also, while at the same time allowing the truly tragic element in Sickingen's fate to escape you. In my view, it never occurred to the bulk of the nobility then subject directly to the emperor to form an alliance with the peasants; their dependence on the income deriving from oppression of the peasants did not admit of this. An alliance with the towns would have been rather more feasible, but this did not come about either, or only in isolated instances. The national aristocratic revolution could, however, only have been effected by means of an alliance with the towns and the peasants, particularly the latter; and to my mind the tragic element lies precisely in the fact that this essential condition, alliance with the peasants, was impossible; that the policy of the aristocracy was therefore necessarily petty; that at the very moment when the aristocracy sought to take its place at the head of the national movement, the bulk of the nation, the peasants, protested against its leadership and hence ensured its downfall. To what extent there is any historical foundation for your assumption that Sickingen really did have some contact with the peasants, I am not able to judge, nor is it in any way relevant. So far as I can recall, by the way, whenever Hutten's writings are addressed to the peasants, they skate over the ticklish question of the aristocracy and seek to focus the peasants' wrath primarily on the clergy. But in no way do I dispute your right to portray Sickingen and Hutten as though it had been their intention to emancipate the peasants. However, this immediately presented you with the tragic contradiction whereby these two found themselves placed between the aristocracy on the one hand, who definitely did not want this, and the peasants on the other. Here, in my view, lay the tragic clash between the historically necessary postulate and the impossibility of its execution in practice. By discarding this element you reduce the tragic conflict to the fact that Sickingen does not join battle straight away with Emperor and Empire, but with one prince only†a (although here too your tact rightly leads you to introduce the peasants), while his downfall is made to ensue from nothing more than the indifference and pusillanimity of the aristocracy. This would, however, have been quite differently motivated had you laid more stress at an earlier stage on the mounting peasant movement and the mood of the aristocracy, inevitably grown more conservative as a result of the earlier Bundschuh and Poor Konrad movements.†438 All this, incidentally, represents only one way in which the peasant and plebeian movement might be brought into the play; one could think of at least ten others which would be just as good, if not better.

Page Break me40.445

Page me40.445
As you can see, I am judging your work by a very high standard, indeed the highest there is, from both the aesthetic and the historical point of view, and the fact that I have to do so in order to raise an objection here and there will provide you with the best proof of my appreciation. Between ourselves criticism has, of course, for years been necessarily as outspoken as possible in the interests of the party itself; but this aside, it is always a great pleasure to me and all of us when we are given fresh proof that our party, irrespective of the field in which it makes an appearance, invariably does so with distinction. And that is what you, too, have done on this occasion.

Page Break me40.446
Page me40.446
In other respects it would seem that world events are about to take a truly delectable course. It would be difficult to imagine a better basis for a thorough-going German revolution than that provided by a Franco-Russian-alliance. The water has to be right up to our necks before we Germans are gripped en masse by the furor teutonicus†a; and this time we would seem to be in sufficient danger of drowning. Tant mieux.†b In such a crisis all existing powers must necessarily be ruined and all the parties crumble one after another, from the Kreuz-Zeitung to Gottfried Kinkel, and from Count Rechberg to 'Hecker, Struve, Blenker, Zitz and Blum'†439; in such a struggle the moment must necessarily come when only the most ruthless and resolute party is in a position to save the nation and, at the same time, the conditions be given which alone make it possible to jettison completely all the old trumpery — internal dissension on the one hand and, on the other, the Polish and Italian appendages which are the legacy of Austria. We must not cede an inch of Prussian Poland and what...†c

Page me40.446
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 18, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

249
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me40.446
London, 21 May [1859]

Dear Sir,

From a communication I have received from North America†432 I see that about 100 copies of the first instalment†d have been ordered by party friends of mine. Whether you have already received the order, I do not know. However, I was advised at the same time that we can count on 100 more copies being ordered in the same circles as soon as the price is known. I would therefore request you to advise me of the latter by return. This does not, of course, mean that the work could not be advertised for the benefit of the general public in North America at some later date.

Page Break me40.447

Page me40.447

The slowness with which the matter is being handled would not appear to be in your own interest. It is certainly not in mine.

Page me40.447

In the list of printer's errors for the sheets I have had I would request you to include the following: ...†a

Page me40.447

First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. X, Part 1, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

250

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me40.447

Manchester, 23 May 1859

Dear Moor,

I entirely agree about the manifesto.†b What ought we to do about printing it? It will probably have to be printed in London; make some inquiries about costs and other PARTICULARS so that we can launch it immediately it's been written.†425

Page me40.447

The Völkchen†c business is very amusing, very satisfactory, and may turn out to be extremely useful.†430 As regards its distribution here, the following should be noted: While I could easily find an English 'STATIONER', he would never stand a chance of catching even a STRAY subscriber. To get hold of them we must have recourse to the FOREIGN BOOKSELLERS here, Dunnill and Palmer, Princess Street, and Franz Thimm, Princess Street. Lupus is taking out a subscription with Dunnill and Palmer, Gumpert and I with Thimm, who is our bookseller. The Hermann is very much on the wane here and there is a whole load of back-numbers; Thimm's manager, who doesn't seem overfond of Kinkel, tells me that the subscribers get fewer every week. So send Thimm a dozen copies of the early numbers, particularly the one dealing with the Kinkel affair,†a and another half-dozen or so to Dunnill and Palmer; as soon as it appears I shall set that chatterbox Heckscher in motion and he will start the thing circulating here as sure as 2 × 2 = 4. But the stuff for Thimm must be sent direct to the Thimm up here; the London chap would be perfectly capable of intercepting the things. Then, as soon as Thimm gets subscriptions here, the local salesmen will perhaps take a greater interest in the matter.

Page Break me40.448
Page me40.448
I shall deal with the battle of Casteggio next Friday; the affair is too insignificant to warrant 2 articles and the telegrams are too vague to permit of anything worthwhile being said about it.†b Your old map of Lombardy has stood me in very good stead, the scale being approx. 1/160,000, hence quite large. Unfortunately the delineation of the ground is very poor.
Page me40.448
Many regards,

Your
F.E.

Page me40.448
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

251
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.448
[London,] 24 May 1859

Dear Engels,
If you could possibly let me have some 'TIN', you would greatly oblige me. That wretched Duncker, whom I had been counting on, appears to be putting the thing†c off ad infinitum. Once again 11 days have gone by without my receiving anything from the dolt. Who do you think it is STOPS MY WAY? None other than Lassalle. First, my thing was held up for 4 weeks on account of his Sickingen. Now that it is nearing its conclusion, the fool must needs cut in yet again with his 'anonymous' pamphlet,†a which he only wrote because your own 'anonymous' pamphlet†b gave him no respite. Can't the scoundrel see that decency, if nothing else, demands that my thing be brought out first? I shall wait a day or two, but after that write a really filthy letter to Berlin.

Page Break me40.449

Page me40.449

I have seen to your orders for Manchester. If you can possibly find the time tomorrow, write 20-30-40 lines for me in German on the subject of the war; I shall pass them on to Dishrag Liebknecht, not in your writing but by dictating them. There is no time to be lost since the Volk boasts only one type-setter and everything has to be ready by the morning of each Friday.
Page me40.449

A point not to be overlooked. With something more original from the theatre of war we ought TO CATCH at least 50 more customers in London.†c I shall MANAGE the thing in such a way that initially you and I are not directly responsible.
Page me40.449

You will be able to judge Gottfried's†d manoeuvres from the fact that last week in the East End the parson was selling his Hermann to the Whitechapel†322 public for a HALFPENNY, solely in order to stop the sale of the Volk. But where did the fonds†e come from? Schapper tells me that Willich has been over here. In which case the fellows must have shared out the money and flung the small change to watchdog Heinzen, for the dog has ceased to bark. We shall get to the bottom of it.
Page me40.449

As regards the business of publishing our manifesto†f I SHALL LOOK OUT.†425
Page me40.449

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.449

Imandt is marrying his landlady's daughter, a Scotswoman. A nice district, too.†g

Page me40.449
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.450

252
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.450

[London,] 25 May 1859

Dear Fred,

As things stand here just now, it's doubtful whether I shall be able to leave London, certainly not at the beginning of next week.

Page me40.450

It is now a whole fortnight, or so I see from a note in my DIARY, since I sent that scoundrel Duncker the last 3 proof-sheets (i.e. sheets 9-11). The thing†a was ready, therefore, and all the chap had to do was send me the clean proofs of the last 3 sheets for the list of misprints. Instead of that, what do I get? Lassalle's pamphlet†b and, as we hadn't any money in the house and pretty well everything has been pawned that can be pawned, I had to send my last wearable coat to the pawnshop since there was 2/- to pay on this rubbish, which might perhaps cost 8d in Berlin. But to come to the point:

Page me40.450

It is now EVIDENT, then, that a further fortnight's embargo has been placed on my thing in order to make way for Mr Lassalle. The work still to be done on it would take 3 hours at the most. But that infernal and conceited fool has decreed the embargo in order to secure the undivided attention publici.†c Duncker, the swine, is happy as a sandboy, however, since it gives him a further excuse to postpone payment of my fee. I shan't forget the trick the little Jew has played. The speed with which his tripe was printed shows that he was magna pars†d responsible for our stuff being delayed. Besides the oaf is so enamoured of his laborious emanations that he takes it for granted that I'm burning with impatience to see his 'anonymous' pamphlet and am 'objective' enough to take the killing of my stuff as a matter of course.

Page me40.450

The confounded Jew in Vienna†e hasn't written either.

Page me40.450

Lupus is greatly mistaken about Liebknecht if he imagines that this worthy citizen could himself have composed a piece such as 'Der Reichsregent'.†410 Biskamp wrote it†f (I gave him the FACTS) and it must be Biskamp that writes everything. Nothing is attributable to Liebknecht save the 'Politische Rundschau', dated London with the symbol pp, and not even all of that.†a Liebknecht's uselessness as a writer is only equalled by his unreliability and weakness of character, about which I shall have more to say later. The fellow would have been kicked out for good this week had there not been special circumstances that necessitated his being kept on for a while as a scarecrow.

Page Break me40.451

Page me40.451

Even if my private circumstances — apart from waiting for Duncker — were not likely to preclude my coming up to Manchester next week, there would be the further consideration that, were I to abandon my post, everything might easily go to rack and ruin in view of the vast intrigues being conjured up here, there, and everywhere by the émigré democrats, the merchants of Camberwell, the Weitlingians, etc., etc., and in view of the extraordinary feebleness of the people who are supposed to represent us here. Yesterday, by the by, I got Pfänder to give categoric instructions to that inert hunk of flesh, Schapper, to the effect that if he did not rejoin the Workers' Society (the so-called communist one)†50 forthwith and take over the MANAGEMENT thereof, I would sever all 'connections' with him. This is the one sphere in which we could make use of the hippopotamus, yet the fool thinks it beneath him. Mais nous verrons.†b Never have we had a poorer STAFF. Pieper would have been very useful just now, instead of which he is in Bremen and doesn't even write.

Page me40.451
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.451
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

253
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.451
[London,] 27 May [1859]

Dear Engels,
£5 received.
Page me40.451
You must COLOUR YOUR WAR-ARTICLES A LITTLE MORE seeing that you are writing for A GENERAL NEWSPAPER, not for a scientific military journal.

Page Break me40.452
Something more descriptive and individual could easily be gleaned from the Times CORRESPONDENT, etc. I can't interpolate it myself as this would lead to unevenness of style. Failing this Dana will go and insert some utter nonsense off his own bat.
Page me40.452
Today I am sending you 2 numbers (the last ones) of the Presse as samples, so that you can see whether you can use the PAPER.
Page me40.452
At 7 o'clock yesterday evening Mr Liebknecht turned up with 6 lines for Das Volk having, by his failure to appear (and the idiot is always taking on all manner of things), thrown the entire setting INTO DISORDER, or so Biskamp tells me. I had told the blockhead exactly which bits of your pamphlet†a were to be reproduced. Instead he tries to make a LEADER of it, in which, of course, he doesn't succeed. Bürgers redivivus†b but far WORSE, since Bürgers could at least be used for purposes of attack in societies, etc.

Page me40.452
Garibaldi has, in my opinion, deliberately been consigned to a position that will spell his ruin.
Page me40.452
Unlike Kossuth who, with Klapka, has already 'recognised' 'Constantine' as the Russian king of Hungary, Mazzini (undoubtedly a greater authority on Italian patriotism than Mr Lassalle) is behaving very well.†440 I shall try and lay hands on the last, concluding number of his Pensiero ed Azione.†c Send me your last copy of Po and Rhine for Mazzini. I shall write a short accompanying note, or better still, write it yourself.
Page me40.452
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.452
Still nothing from Berlin today. I.e. 16 days to correct the misprints in the last 3 sheets†d!

Page me40.452
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.453

254
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.453
[London,] 28 May [1859]

Dear Engels,
Herewith a letter I have received from Dana. What should I answer?
Page me40.453
Apropos. I have just learned from Biskamp, on the authority of the CLOWN†a himself, that Bruno Bauer was definitely in the pay of Russia. He received 300 friedrichsdors from von Budberg, the Russian ambassador. The CLOWN was brought in as accomplice. Bruno dropped the thing because Budberg didn't treat him 'respectfully' and left him to chambrer†b in the antichambre. He came to England for the purpose of attempting, with his brother — par nobile fratrum†c — a similar transaction with the English government. Fell through, OF COURSE. WHAT DO YOU SAY TO THIS?

Page me40.453

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.453
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

255
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me40.453
London, 28 May 1859

Dear Sir,

You have not thought fit to reply to the letter in which I requested you to advise me of the price of the book.†d Since the American mail leaves only twice a week, I have thus been

Page Break me40.454
prevented from replying to my friends.†432
Page me40.454

After your receipt of my manuscript a fortnight elapsed before I got any acknowledgment. In it you said that printing was to commence a week later. That week turned into more than three weeks. About eight weeks ago Lassalle wrote to say that the thing would be finished by the middle of May. More than three weeks ago I received the last three proof-sheets. The amendments that were called for could easily have been made in a single day. Instead, work would again seem to have been completely suspended during that time, although printing was complete. I hereby declare that I am tired of this systematic and deliberate procrastination and that I hereby demand, and indeed categorically, that you desist from these machinations, the purpose of which seems to me exceedingly suspect. All my acquaintances in England are of the same opinion and have earnestly enjoined me to take the above step.

Yours faithfully,
Dr K. Marx

Page me40.454
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. X, Part 1, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

256
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me40.454
[London,] 30 May 1859

Dear Sir,

I can find no misprint in the sheets sent to me.†a

Page me40.454

I am sending you the enclosed envelope so that you may, if you deem it worth while, have the postage refunded by the Prussian post. I paid 4/- and some d for this parcel and 2/-, etc., for the last but one. The envelope of the latter is in the hands of the English postal authorities, who declare that all such items, even if stamped, must be paid extra unless sent via Calais.

Yours faithfully,
Dr K. Marx

Page me40.454
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.455

257
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.455
[London,] 1 June 1859

Dear Engels,

Enclosed 1 copy of the Presse containing some particulars that may be of interest to you. No answer from that fellow, Friedländer,†254 needless to say. However, my present explanation for this is as follows: When he lectured Friedländer about bias,†a Lassalle did so, OF COURSE, not only in his but also in my name. Friedländer believes that I am hand in glove with Heraclitus the Dark Philosopher.†b So he naturally can't imagine that under PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES I can write for a Viennese paper. Every day the Vienna Presse contains veiled attacks upon the Berlin wiseacre. Thus, for instance, in a leading article on 29 May:

'But how can one demand a sense of national self-respect of those speculative minds which see in Napoleon III the avenging arm of history and, in his alleged genius for liberating the peoples, complacently admire the reflection of the ineptitude, pedantry and aridity of their own categorising intellects.'

Page me40.455

The very insistence with which Lassalle required of me not to write any more to his cousin†c is evidence that the fellow carried on his intrigues in my name also. Thus the blockhead has frustrated the best prospect I had for the summer. Besides, in certain eventualities it would be a good thing if I had some say in the Vienna Presse.

Page me40.455

When you next write about Garibaldi, WHATEVER MAY BE HIS FATE, crack a joke about the curious position in which only 'his uncle's nephew'†d could have found himself, namely that beside him the leader of the volunteer corps figures as a HERO. Can you imagine anything of the kind happening under the old Napoleon? By the by, in today's Times the Paris correspondent writes that the Bonapartists are already GRUMBLING loudly about Garibaldi's 'fame', and that 'A FEW SELECT POLICE' have been smuggled into his corps and send in detailed reports about him.†e Adhering strictly to Mazzini's instructions, Garibaldi omitted all mention of Bonaparte in his proclamation.†441 Mazzini's latest thing†f is not, by the by, as good as

Page Break me40.456

I thought. I had only run my eye over some excerpts. His old complaints about socialism. We can do nothing with him direct. But he could with advantage be used as an authority against Kossuth, etc. By the by, in his last number,†a which I shall send you at the end of this week, you will reacquaint yourself with Mr Karl Blind's importance.

Page me40.456

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.456

Incidentally, Blind is no longer with the Hermann, but is greatly mistaken if he's hoping to get onto the Volk. Feeble though the little sheet may be, it has made the entire emigration down here froth at the mouth with rage. Among others Tausenau and Co., who are paid by Kossuth-Bonaparte to form German 'OPINION' in London.

Page me40.456

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

258
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me40.456
London, 2 June 1859

Dear Sir,

I am indeed very sorry if I wrote you an offensive letter.†b Please allow me, therefore, to say a few words in extenuation. To begin with I have in fact been away from Germany for too long and have grown too accustomed to conditions in London to form a correct estimate of the way business is conducted in Germany. Secondly, as I informed Lassalle some two months ago,†c I am engaged in negotiations with a London publisher with regard to an English rendering of the first instalment.†d The constantly misleading information which I, constantly labouring as I was under a false assumption, have been forced to give this man regarding the appearance of the book, has more than sufficed to show me up as a REGULAR HUMBUG in the eyes of the aforesaid John Bull. The repeated and impatient inquiries of my friends and in the end, the rumour that the thing will not be coming out at all — a rumour carefully disseminated, out of what motives I cannot say, by a Berlin clique here — finally proved too much for my patience.

Page Break me40.457
Page me40.457

Lastly, I trust that, in consideration of these reasons, you will regard my letter merely as the hasty expression of an irritability aroused by all manner of circumstances and absolve me of any intention of wishing to give offence.

Yours very faithfully,
Dr K. Marx

Page me40.457
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. X, Part 1, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

259
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.457
[London,] 7 June [1859]

Dear Frederick,

You must excuse me for not writing to you before, and only these few lines. My time has been completely taken up with work and with running private and party errands.
Page me40.457

D'abord†a I was delighted to hear that you liked the first instalment,†b for your opinion is the only one I value in this matter. To my wife's considerable AMUSEMENT, I awaited WITH SOME ANXIETY YOUR JUDGMENT.
Page me40.457

Ad vocem†c 'Volk': Admittedly its administration leaves a great deal to be desired, since there is only one type-setter, no errand-boy, etc., on top of which not a single 'trustworthy' despatch clerk has yet presented himself, and above all, no money. Nevertheless, recent issues have been virtually sold out and if ways and means can be found of appointing a reasonably reliable despatch clerk, the thing will survive. Moreover, the 'little sheet', although only indirectly given a TURN by us, has set the whole of democracy by the ears. Not just here, but also in Switzerland, where Vogt-Kinkel have pitched into me in the Handels-Courier with one of those blackguardly little articles with which you are familiar.†a I'll get them to reproduce it in the next number.†b

Page Break me40.458
Page me40.458

I shall speak to Biskamp on the Manchester question. For his part, he asked me yesterday to write and tell you that not a single copy had been ordered in Manchester. It looks to me as though Hollinger (the printer) has already been bribed by Kinkel. Nous verrons.†c
Page me40.458

Kinkel, following an audience with Kossuth and money payments from Vogt, has gone over to the camp of high treason. Bucher and Blind have resigned in 'indignation'. Kinkel's colleagues are now as follows: Bamberger, Ed. Bauer, Beta (How do you do?) and Born†d (our ex-Born's†e brother). A fine lot. Add to which one or two old whores.
Page me40.458

Ad vocem Freiligrath. Between ourselves, a rotter. Having now seen that things are taking a revolutionary TURN (you must have heard about the labour RIOT in Berlin†442) and that Kinkel is becoming DISRESPECTABLE, he reviles him. But the sixth and last volume of his collected works (3/4 of it translated rubbish) published in America, which he has just received and sent me, concludes with the poem about Johanna Mockel,†f whereas he has suppressed the anti-Kinkel poem.†g This is a filthy thing to do and it was with very sceptical mien that I listened to his excuses on the subject. The devil take the bardic profession.
Page me40.458

Ad vocem Vogt. Has placed himself at Prussia's 'disposal' in the Volks-Zeitung (Berlin).
Page me40.458
Ad vocem Duncker. That dolt Duncker, to whom I had written in exceedingly rude terms about his dilly-dallying, has sent me a letter admitting outright that the last delay of 3 weeks (when everything had been completed save for the list of misprints) was due to the publication of the 'anonymous pamphlet',†h the one concocted of 'sweat, fire and logic'.†422 I deliberately divulged to the press the fact that you were the author of Po and Rhine,†443 because

Page Break me40.459
I had good reason to suppose that the author of the 'anonymous pamphlet' was quietly 'switching places' with you. I must say, it's a bit thick, Mr Lassalle placing an embargo on me at will! The thing is coming out in Berlin this week — my first instalment, I mean.
Page me40.459
Finally, whatever happens and as soon as the MEANS READY, I shall come to Manchester for a few days as we have all sorts of things to settle.†444
Page me40.459
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.459
Regards to lupullum.†a
Page me40.459
Tomorrow I shall send you copies of the Presse (in which quarter the 'anonymous one' has put a spoke in my wheel good and proper).
Page me40.459
The rotten STAFF here is no joke, I assure you. Biskamp at least writes quickly and has a ready wit. Liebknecht is AN AWFUL NUISANCE. Due to his over-ingenious manoeuvrings, the little sheet was only able to publish the gossip about Kinkel and Bauer in a much attenuated form.†b
Page me40.459
Your article†c appeared in the Volk on the same day it arrived. The last number contains the preface to my affair,†d i.e. with such omissions as Mr Biskamp thought fit.

Page me40.459
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†20
IN BERLIN
Page me40.459
[London,] 10 June 1859

Dear Lassalle,

Since I wrote to you last I have had to prepare and send off 15 printed sheets for the English-American cyclopaedia, which is appearing in New York.†a This is no joke, what with my other work. Today is the day for the Tribune articles.†b So there's not a minute to spare. Hence I'm merely writing to let you know that I got your letters as well as the pamphlet.†c

Page Break me40.460
Page me40.460

This much for the present:

Ad vocem†d Sickingen: Shall read it as soon as I have time and let you have a reply.†445
Page me40.460

Ad vocem pamphlet: In no way corresponds with my own view or that of my party friends in England. It is probable, by the by, that we shall express our view in print.
Page me40.460

Ad vocem Duncker: Have written to tell him I'm sorry if my letter offended him. However it's a scandalous piece of procrastination. I received the last proof-sheet†e as much as 5 weeks ago. You can't expect me — once I have a contract — to behave towards a publisher or permit myself to be treated by him as though he were printing the thing only as a 'favour' to yourself. One good turn he has already done me, and that is to lose me my English publisher until further notice.
Page me40.460

Ad vocem Vogt (Imperial bailiff)†410: We possess evidence, not only that the man has received money for himself from Bonaparte, but also money to suborn Germans in the interests of Franco-Russian propaganda.†420 Up till now he has succeeded only in the case of that politically negative quantity, Gottfried Kinkel.
Page me40.460

Ad vocem Proudhon: Is said to have gone out of his mind and been put in a lunatic asylum in Brussels.
Page me40.460

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.460
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.461

261
MARX TO ENGELS†20
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.461
London, 10 June 1859

Dear Frederick,

Two manuscripts received today. One of them splendid — yours on 'fortification', though I must say I feel some twinges of conscience about having made such demands on the little spare time you have. One grotesque, viz. Lassalle's reply to myself and you respecting his Sickingen.†445 A whole sheaf of closely written pages. Incredible that at this season and in the present historical circumstances, a man should not only find time to produce stuff of this kind himself, but actually presume that we have time to read it.
Page me40.461

Ad vocem†a Volk. Should your booksellers actually deliver the little paper to you, which I doubt, you and Lupus will be surprised to see in tomorrow's issue an announcement that there is some 'prospect' of our, etc., collaboration.†b The diplomatic reasons which decided me to take this step will be communicated by word of mouth.
Page me40.461

Duncker: Nothing yet received, neither money nor copies.†c Tell Lupus about this; he'd already have had one otherwise.
Page me40.461

Ad vocem Schramm†d: This great man was a failure in Berlin. His wife's family council therefore decided that he should take a minor commercial post in Krefeld. Thereupon the 'failure' addressed a long scrawl to the Ministers in Berlin saying he had considered it his political duty to join combat with Minister Manteuffel, whom he abhorred, but now, having fulfilled that duty, and finding that Prussia was not á sa hauteur á lui,†e requested to be released from the commonwealth of subjects. Granted, and Schramm arrived in London along with the other PARCELS. Now intends, as he warned the Hohenzollern cabinet, to get himself 'naturalised' an Englishman. The worst blow that has befallen Prussia since the battle of Jena.†46
Page me40.461

Ad vocem Lassalle. In reply to his gigantic manuscript, wherein, by the by, he also mentions the 'anonymous' pamphlet†f he wrote

Page Break me40.462
'in the name of the party', I sent him (today) a letter about 1/3 as long as the present one.†a As regards the pamphlet, all I said was: 'Not our view at all. No point in writing about it, as we should be expressing our opinion publicly in print.'†446

Page me40.462
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.462
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

262
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me40.462
Manchester,†444 22 June [1859]

Dear Sir,
I would request you to send the balance of the fee for my book†b without delay to my wife in London.
Page me40.462
In the letter you wrote me at the end of May you said that the book would come out and the fee be paid 'next week'. Neither the one nor the other was done until today, 22 June. Your principle would seem to be that a 'strictly scientific work' can never come out too late and, more particularly, that one should wait until such time as the general spread of the war†370 has stimulated a 'strictly scientific' interest.
Page me40.462
The same circumstances as have induced you to sanction this further postponement might, perhaps, justify a postponement until 1860, particularly in view of what you say in your letter, namely that, in the case of scientific works in respect of which there is no undertaking as to the time of publication, it is customary for German publishers to place an embargo on their appearance in favour of topical works whenever this would seem to be opportune.

Page Break me40.463
Page me40.463
Since it is impossible for me to reply privately to the many inquiries I receive — in connection with these delays — I shall, after waiting a few days longer, issue a public statement.†447

Yours very faithfully,

Dr K. Marx

Page me40.463
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. X, Part 1, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

263
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.463
[London,] 14 July 1859

DEAR Frederick,

You must have been wondering about my long silence, but there was a perfectly natural explanation for it. During the first week†448 I had to scurry round like mad in an attempt to get Das Volk into some kind of order, and this week PRIVATE MATTERS obtruded.
Page me40.463

WELL. The state of the Volk when I got back was as follows: Kinkel had been felled by our latest quips. (Since then I have gone on with the 'GATHERINGS'.†449 In the current issue I'll do this section by myself. Unless, of course, some piece of news gives Biskamp occasion to introduce a few more drolleries.) But at the same time Das Volk showed every sign of disintegrating, and it was doubtful whether it would continue to appear. During my absence debts had been contracted amounting to over £6, since the 'agents', printer,†a old Uncle Tom Cobley and all suspected that my return would put an end to the fun. Biskamp was IN THE MOST DEJECTED STATE. He had been given notice by the Kölnische†b (having been denounced by a competitor); to receive charity from Speck went against the grain, and he had therefore spent several nights camping out in the 'park'. Finally, the printer had been approached by 'genuine democrats, likewise socialists, but moderate, and inimical to any kind of personal politics (Blind?)', who were prepared to take over Das Volk and provide the necessary subsidies. SUCH WAS THE GENERAL STATE OF THINGS WHEN I ARRIVED AT LONDON.

Page Break me40.464
First I gave Biskamp £3, at the same time persuading him to accept a schoolmaster's post in Edmonton which, since he won't be required to live in, do any supervision or give more than 4 lessons, will permit him to write just as much for the paper as hitherto. OTHERWISE he would soon have been DISARMED by misfortune and idleness. He is moving there on the first of August. Actually he won't be any further away from London than I am.†429 On the other hand, it will be better for me if he is not present in person when I myself have more to do with the paper, as I intend to do BY and BY. I only paid out £1 5/- for the paper (debts) and compelled Garthe, Speck and a few louts to get together the sum of £3 15/- as part payment for Hollinger. In addition I had to repay Mr Liebknecht the 16/- he had advanced to Hollinger during my absence. Hence £5 1/- had to be expended before 'current' operations began. These included 15/- paid to Carstens,†a 5/- for rent of the despatch room, 4/- for STAMPS, 2/6d advanced to Mr Hollinger in respect of No. 9. So as you can see, I've pretty well scraped the bottom of the barrel before I've begun. However, if we maintain the pressure for a few more weeks there is every prospect that the Hermann will go under and leave us in complete possession of the field. Moreover, with the new despatch arrangements the thing will become SELF-PAYING. I am of the firm opinion that, even if we have to set the little paper's sights rather lower for a time, we must, AT A CERTAIN MOMENT, give it a meaningful line. Should the Hermann go under we shall change over to Hirschfeld's press. (Cheaper, gives more credit, more expeditious.) FOR THE MOMENT, however, it's absolutely essential that a few more subsidies be sent from Manchester.

Page me40.464

Napoleon's peace†450 exceeds all my expectations. Yesterday the French revolutionary gang in London were all of them exultant and Louis Blanc was running around like a madman; the Italians, however, are gnashing their teeth. Even Mazzini, although he foretold the result 6 weeks before the end of the war, succumbed AFTERWARDS all the same to the illusion that Bonaparte would at least throw THE AUSTRIANS out of Italy. I have read a letter (PRIVATE LETTER) from an Irishman who sleeps with the Duchesse de Padua in Paris. According to this man, the secret articles of the treaty stipulate two Turkish provinces for Austria; the amalgamation of the Prussian Rhine Province and Belgium into a 'Catholic state', or rather the use of this 'new empire' as a pretext for snapping up the delicious titbits.

Page Break me40.465
Page me40.465

The over-ingenuity of Prussia, with the support of Lassalle,†a etc., has got Germany (and Prussia) into such hot water that the only hope of salvation lies in a ferocious revolution.
Page me40.465

I would draw your attention to the first article in The Free Press,†b which I am sending you.
Page me40.465

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.465
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

264
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.465
[Manchester,] Friday, 15 July†c 1859

Dear Moor,

I'd have written something about the peace†450 for the Volk, but since I neither see nor hear anything of what's going on, I conclude that you are dealing with the subject yourself and hence that my article would be double emploi.†d
Page me40.465

Excepting the continuation of the war, nothing could be more welcome to us than this peace. Prussia discredited, Austria discredited, Bonaparte discredited, Sardinia and vulgar Italian liberalism discredited, England discredited, Kossuth ruined, Vogt & Co. discredited, no gains for anybody except the Russians and the revolutionaries, i.e. what little Jew Braun†e would call a 'tidy revolutionary situation'.†451 But His Excellency Ephraim Artful†e is the most discredited of all.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.465
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.466

265
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.466
[London,] 18 July 1859

DEAR Frederick,

Since the last number of the Volk proved so very exiguous, I intend this week to put something in about Russia. It would please me greatly if an article by you could appear at the same time. Wouldn't it be possible to do something military summing up the campaign, or else ridiculing the whole affair?†a But it would have to be here by Thursday. If the little sheet fails to appear on Friday, it always means a serious loss of revenue; last time this fell off appreciably, another reason being that we suddenly had to change all our agents and get rid of Scherzer among others. The CLOWN Edgar Bauer (an admirer of Bonaparte) has uttered a mighty threat, viz. that we are to be attacked in the next Hermann. Nous verrons†b....

Page me40.466
Have you seen my book†c advertised anywhere yet?
Page me40.466
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.466
Little Jenny has been awarded THE GENERAL PRIZE, Laura two special prizes.

Page me40.466
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.467

266
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.467
Manchester, 18 July 1859

Dear Moor,
I shall send you tomorrow or the day after the £5 still required to pay off the Volk's arrears. It was too late for me to do it today, and besides I have the company of the 'little man', scilicet†a Dronke, who sidled up to me at the Exchange; the little chap's business seems to be doing passably well. Apart from current day-to-day gossip, on which he holds forth like a pothouse politician, he seems reluctant to talk about politicis, particularly of the past, and this I encourage, for after all I treat him as an extraneus.†b His knowledge, however, has not increased, and the profundity of his politics may be summed up in his remark that the Italians 'have got to hit out now, or they're not worth a thing'.
Page me40.467
But to revert from the little man to the Volk; we must at once discuss what is to be done. If the £7 you took with you has vanished so quickly, and the louts' £3 15/- as well, the £3 I have in reserve will doubtless soon be gone too. Que faire?†c I've heard nothing about Strohn's return. There's not much more to be done with Borchardt. As soon as Lupus returns — but heaven knows where he is — I shall at all events get him to carry out a reconnaissance. Before that I wouldn't care to approach him personally. Nor do I run across him any more, though I've several times kept half an eye open for him in Oxford Road.

Page me40.467

At any rate you must let me know sometime exactly how matters stand financially under the new administration, so that I can have an answer ready to eventual queries. How many copies are now being sold? Have you cut down the newsboys, etc., to 1/2d per copy? What do the total weekly expenses amount to and what is the income — hence what is the deficit?
Page me40.467

Mr Thimm has been talked round very nicely. Das Volk is now displayed in his window IN A CONSPICUOUS POSITION, a much better one than the Hermann and the Kolokol, which flank it. A few more 'Gatherings' and the last-named†d will doubtless be done for altogether.†449 The way in which Kinkel has suddenly taken to his heels is very funny.†a

Page Break me40.468
Page me40.468

Next week's LEADER on the peace ought to be done by you. It's important, I think, since we've been lucky enough to get hold of the secret articles,†b that this point be fully exploited. As you are making a Tribune article†c out of it anyway, that should be easy for you. This point may well give the Volk a significance of quite a different order, and exact for it a position in the press. Think this over.
Page me40.468

Let me know also by return what you people would like me to write about this week; then I shall do it on Wednesday evening.
Page me40.468

I have sent for the Portfolio and am studying these and other Russian documents and Palmerstoniana; shall also get hold of as many BACK NUMBERS of The Free Press as possible. It's really high time I went through the stuff, seeing what importance the thing is now assuming. Can you tell me where the Russian memorandum on Russian policy†d originated and which Prussian ministerial crisis brought it to the light of day†452? So far as I am concerned the internal EVIDENCE and the classic phraseology are, of course, more than sufficient, but I need these FACTS for the debate with Philistia; anyway it is stupid of Urquhart to be so unnecessarily secretive.
Page me40.468

Is there anything to be wormed out of Blind quoad†e Vogt†420? The 'little man' doesn't believe the thing, of course, and asks 'why, then, didn't we see to it that the documents were printed'?
Page me40.468

Generally speaking the documents in Vol. 1 of the Portfolio are not the most important, though there are some nice things among them, particularly those by Pozzo di Borgo and the memorandum to the German governments.†f What idiots they are and how the Russians must laugh at them!
Page me40.468

The memorandum in The Free Press is a true classic from start to finish, including the almost comical way in which the worthy diplomats make out that regicide is at once self-sacrifice and a republican virtue. Still, it seems to be going a bit far when Nicholas†g gives his son†h this kind of lesson with regard to the Chetham's Library in Manchester where Marx worked in the 1840s and Engels in the 1840-60s. General view and part of the reading-room

Page Break me40.468a

Page Break me40.468b
Page Break me40.469
murder of his own father; I should say this passage has been altered.†453
Page me40.469

Is it not possible to get hold of the complete document? Dronke tells me that in Glasgow there is a STATIONER by the name of Love in St. Enoch Square who sells the Hermann and would be a very suitable man to sell Das Volk. It might be a good idea to send him a few copies and a letter.
Page me40.469

Have you sent it to America? It's about time you did. To Weydemeyer, Steffen and the chap in New York†a who once wrote to you about communist matters.†297
Page me40.469

Warmest regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.469
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

267
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.469
[London,] 19 July 1859

DEAR Frederick,

I would gladly have written the article on the peace, for it would simply have meant combining last Friday's and today's articles for the Tribune.†b They were, moreover, good articles, for ira facit poetam.†c However, as Biskamp has begun the thing, has already announced No. II,†d and is effectively, or at least nominally, in command, decency precludes one interfering in this way. Once he is in Edmonton, his very remoteness will ensure that at crucial moments such as this the LEADER can be taken out of his hands without hurt to his amour propre — which is all he gets out of it.

Page Break me40.470

Page me40.470

But what the two of us can do to put some stiffening into the next issue, is support him on his left and right flanks. On the pretext of discussing Urquhart's document,†a I shall briefly sum up Russia's PART in this tragi-comedy and at the same time disparage Bonaparte.†454 You, on the pretext of writing a final article on military affairs,†b must also set about Bonaparte, etc. (and on the same occasion take a swipe at Prussia). In my view it is of the utmost importance morally that a belief in Bonaparte's greatness should not be allowed to arise among the Germans. As for Austria, the agreed LINE we have adopted of blaming everything on the sovereign†c is SUFFICIENT.

Page me40.470

Ad vocem†d the document. Fell into the hands of the 'Prince of Prussia'†e during the regency crisis on the occasion of Manteuffel's sudden removal.†336 More than that is not to be coaxed out of Urquhart's idiots. Certain passages have been forged because they didn't get hold of the complete document.†452 The authenticity of the whole is vouched for by the style peculiar to all, even 'secret', Russian documents, in which certain stereotyped, conventional untruths take turn and turn about. It is a LINE even Pozzo di Borgo adopts in his writing. The plain truth about Russia's machinations comes to light only with the chance publication of the documents of Russian agents not in the direct employ of the Russian state. E.g. Theyls' (a Dutchman) and Patkul's (came out in Berlin in 1796) memoirs and correspondence.†f

Page me40.470

Portfolio. I shall obtain for you (and myself) from Paris the complete edition published there of the PAPERS of which the Portfolio was allowed to contain only those authorised by Palmerston.

Page me40.470

Volk. Agents' remuneration reduced to 1/2d. Expenditure has been heavy because Biskamp required personal sustenance; because the rows the fellows were having with each other during my absence†444 meant that the administration was at sixes and sevens; because the entire staff has been changed since my return. By the end of the week I shall have a full statement of accounts. This involves a great deal of work in view of the way the thing has been run hitherto. £4-£5 worth of advertising will have to be obtained this week in order to liquidate the debt to Hollinger for Nos 9 and 10.

Page Break me40.471

Page me40.471

Biskamp wanted to write a short review of my Critique of Political Economy, etc. I dissuaded him, for he knows nothing about the subject. But since he has undertaken (in the Volk) to say something about it, I should like you to do it for him†a (say next week, but not this). Briefly on the method and what is new in the content. In this way you would set the tone for the correspondents down here. And likewise help frustrate Lassalle's plan to KILL me.

Page me40.471

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.471

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

268

ENGELS TO MARX†455

IN LONDON

Page me40.471

[Manchester, 20 or 21 July 1859]

Dear Moor,

Herewith the article.†b If it's too long cut it short somewhere and return me the manuscript of the unprinted portion so that I know where to start again.

Page me40.471

Also a POST OFFICE order made out to you, this being the three pounds for the Volk.

Page me40.471

The little man†c pushes off tomorrow. He has bought the entire Free Press for 1859 as I have, ditto 1858. However much the Piccolo may chew away at it he won't digest a great deal. I asked him whether any money could be raised for the Völkchen in Glasgow; he thought not. I did this deliberately en passant. However, if you think it would serve some purpose I shall write to him; since he has just been partially restored to grace, it may perhaps bear fruit and he can fork out at least a few pounds himself. But I wouldn't care to do this without consulting you, for there's no knowing what boasts the little fellow might not subsequently make with a letter like that in his pocket. This apart, pére Freiligrath, too, ought to fork out a £5 note. If the louts can pay, so can he, and after all if our party has to support the paper out of its own money for the present, the fat philistine must also do his bit.

Page Break me40.472

Page me40.472

Many regards to the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.472
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 2, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

269
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.472
[London,] 22 July 1859

Dear Engels,

£3 received. Immediately paid out £2 to Hollinger and 15/- to Lessner. Out-of-town subscriptions are increasing (there are already 60) but are not payable until the end of the quarter and call for a weekly outlay on STAMPS. I am now convinced, 1. that there was a debt of ABOUT £7 of which I was not told before I left for Manchester†444; 2. that the advertisements (instead of £5, receipts were ABOUT 20/-) and Mr Scherzer's London subscriptions — I have sacked him — were just a piece of private skulduggery. With proper MANAGEMENT, which is now under way but whose results won't make themselves felt for weeks to come, the advertisements alone will pay for the little sheet. Since more money is needed immediately, write to Dronke. If you tell the little man that for the time being the paper can only exist by party sacrifices and hence we are asking all party members to make such sacrifices, he can, if he wishes, get the letter printed. I am convinced that, within 6 weeks, the thing will be on a solid footing. But there can be no question of giving it up now that Gagern and

Page Break me40.473
Co., in short the entire 1848 gang, are again taking the stage. Thimm has asked us to put his name in the paper as our distributor in Manchester. I could not carry out my intention this week, for I was overcome by a kind of cholera as a result of the heat and was vomiting from morning till night. Being able to write again today, I have written for the Tribune, A GLORIOUS VINDICATION of your military article,†a basing it on Francis Joseph's and Bonaparte's manifestos.†b The paper had been so much intimidated that it suppressed all your articles for a time. During my absence Blind was scheming to gain control of the Volk. I wrote him an exceedingly rude letter, which was followed by an INTERVIEW. After that, however, there'll be no dunning the man for money for a while. Philistine Freiligrath hasn't even paid his subscription, although pressed twice. Instead, when speaking to Mr Juch, he deprecated the 'undignified' tone of the Volk, although he tells us that he is 'delighted' with it. By and by we shall take our revenge upon these diplomatical fellows.

Page me40.473

You forgot to let me know whether you wish to do a review of my piece.†c There is great rejoicing among the fellows here. They imagine the thing's a failure because they are ignorant of the fact that Duncker hasn't even advertised it yet. Should you write something, don't forget, 1. that it extirpates Proudhonism root and branch, 2. that the specifically social, by no means absolute, character of bourgeois production is analysed straight away in its simplest form, that of the commodity. Mr Liebknecht informed Biskamp that 'never has a book disappointed him so much', and Biskamp himself told me that he didn't see 'á quoi bon'.†d Is Lupus back?

Page me40.473

In your second article on the war†e you will not, I am sure, forget to stress the inadequate strength of the pursuit after victory had been won, and the pitiful whining of Bonaparte, who had at last got to the point where Europe did not, as hitherto, out of fear of revolution, permit him to play the old Napoleon within given limits. In this connection it would be pertinent to recall the 1796-97 campaign, when France was not able to take her time preparing all her resources for 'A LOCALISED WAR' but, with her finances completely disrupted, had to fight not only beyond the Rhine, but also beyond the Mincio and the Adige. Bonaparte is actually complaining that his 'succés d'estime' are now begrudged him.

Page Break me40.474

Page me40.474

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.474

Can't anything be got out of Heckscher? Have you written to Duncker? Ask Dronke to write for us as well.

Page me40.474

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

270
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.474
Manchester, 25 July 1859

Dear Moor,

Have written to Duncker.†456 Also about the total absence up till now of any advertisements of your book†a in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung and Kölnische Zeitung. I can't possibly do an article on it this week; it is quite an undertaking and I should have had NOTICE of it somewhat earlier. Besides, I've begun the military article†b and want to get it finished quickly. However, I promise to do the article for next week.†c
Page me40.474

Some nonsense was edited into my last article. I said that, during the march from Pavia, the 5th corps so exerted itself on the 3rd and 4th†d that, had the 4 1/2 hours lost through the halt been put to use, the result would not have been materially different, nor would the corps have arrived on the battle-field appreciably earlier. In print it says that it was the halt alone which made that exertion possible, which 1. is just the opposite and 2. is nonsense. In the first place the troops were not in the least tired at 6 o'clock in the morning of the 3rd, having only just moved off, so that the halt could be of no benefit to them, and secondly the halt deprived them of the cool hours of the morning and forced them to march when the midday heat was at its greatest. To any military man, the sentence as it now stands would seem quite preposterous. Much good all these stylistic improvements do me anyway, if printing errors are responsible for the most egregious nonsense, e.g. rest for thrust (!) and so forth. My articles are particularly distinguished by this kind of nonsense, the remainder being tolerably well corrected.

Page Break me40.475
Page me40.475

How, by the way, could you permit Herwegh's lousy poem†a to be included?
Page me40.475

Quanto al danaro,†b Dronke will be back here again in a fortnight's time (about 10 days from now, that is), so I shall have to put everything off till then. Nor have I any news of Lupus. Where to get money from in the meantime is difficult to say. I'll try Heckscher, but just now I have my hands full and a great deal of my time is taken up with the article on your book. If only Strohn were here! Gumpert is at home, confined to bed with laryngitis and unable to speak. However, I shall see; if at all possible Heckscher will have to keep the paper going this week. But the miserly Freiligrath should certainly be made to cough up.
Page me40.475

How funny that you should have obtained so flattering an opinion from Mr Liebknecht too.†c It's just like these folk. The gentlemen are so used to our doing their thinking for them that invariably and without exception they want to have everything presented to them not only on a platter, but already pre-digested, not only the quintessence in the smallest possible space, but also a detailed exposition, READY COOKED AND DRIED. One is expected to perform miracles, ni plus ni moins.†d What does an ass of that species really want? As though he couldn't discover for himself from the first 3 lines of the preface that this first instalment was to be followed by at least 15 others before he got to the final conclusions. Naturally, the solutions to ticklish monetary problems, etc., mean nothing whatever to Liebknecht, seeing that such problems simply don't exist for him. But the least one could ask of such a blockhead is that he should take in at least those few points that happen to suit his book. However, what recks a cow of Sunday?

Page Break me40.476
Page me40.476
The Russian document†452 ought not to be reprinted in such short BITS, otherwise one completely loses the thread.†a Mr Petersen's lucubrations also become tedious in the long run.†b†457 It's true you were in difficulty last week.
Page me40.476
Mr Bonaparte's speeches get ever more comical. The one he made before the diplomatic corps is really too funny.†c And the fellow kept clapping his hand to his sword all the while! The fool seems quite seriously determined to impose himself on the world as the 'old one',†d at least so far as le dehors†e is concerned.
Page me40.476
Kossuth has been spreading it about that he's been away in Lussinpiccolo!†f
Page me40.476
Many regards.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.476
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

271
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.476
[London,] 1 August 1859

DEAR Frederick,

D'abord†g I must acknowledge the £2 10/-. This time I myself corrected the proofs of your article.†h If it still contains misprints, the printer is the only one to blame. Herwegh's rotten poem†a got in without my knowing about it. I therefore compelled Biskamp to give an explanation in the last issue†b and, INTO THE BARGAIN, I got him to publish the Landwehr soldier's song (as a fitting sequel to Herwegh).†458

Page Break me40.477

Page me40.477

What is catastrophic so far as I'm concerned is that Biskamp isn't going to Edmonton but (it would seem) has accepted the post of tutor chez Bibra (the innkeeper) in the middle of the West End. If this is so I shall press for a written agreement with the gentleman. For, like all professional humorists he's a capricious, hysterical old woman, and we're not going to right the apple-cart so that someone else can drive it away. We must make sure we get possession of the thing.

Page me40.477

Lina†c is back here from Cologne. Bürgers has grown quite 'high-minded' since his release. He reprobates the Volk's 'reversion' to the old manner of using 'bad jokes' to split the 'party'. For him, it would seem, the 'party' comprises anyone who is 'not' official, and that includes Vogt and Kinkel. Needless to say these 'hints' were given merely out of tender regard for 'me'. 'One' copy of my work†d had arrived at Bermbach's for the dozen or so party friends in Cologne. Bürgers hadn't read it, of course, nor will he, 'but in my interests' expressed his indignation that the thing should be coming out 'by dribs and drabs' and not all 60 sheets AT ONCE. For the rest, he's tutor at some 'merchant's', which only takes up a few hours each morning, and apart from that he gives one other lesson. All in all, he earns 700 talers. His 'work' is confined to mornings. After the midday meal he starts 'recovering' from his half day's work and lounges about chatting by the hour at Mrs Daniels' house where, however, he has a serious rival in Dr Klein. But in the evenings he hurries to Löllchen's to preside with great dignity over the Cologne debating club until far into the night. He 'esteems' Lassalle's activities but hasn't 'read' anything of his, not even Franz von Sickingen. The spurious pretext of having contracted a serious chest complaint during his time in prison has provided him with a splendid means of masking his habitual idleness. In addition, the 'high-minded man' frequents 'music clubs'. As regards the Cologne trial†71 he actually repeated to Lina several most infamous and far from unwitting lies, e.g. that it was us not him and the other asses in Cologne who sent that ass

Page Break me40.478

Nothjung to Germany as emissary.†459 He has, it seems, grown 'even more handsome' than he used to be. En passant, Georg Jung has become a gambler and has apparently pretty well dissipated his fortune. A few weeks ago Countess Hatzfeldt again took up residence in Berlin.

Page me40.478

As soon as you have some hours to spare, it would be a good thing to go ahead with 'Infantry'.†a My finances are closely linked with this. I should like to send my wife to the seaside for a few weeks. But that would be feasible only if I could draw an additional sum on America.

Page me40.478
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.478
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

272
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.478
Manchester, 3 August 1859
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,
Herewith the beginning of the article about your book.†b Take a good look at it and, if you don't like it in toto, tear it up and let me have your opinion. Through lack of practice I have grown so unused to this sort of writing that your wife will be greatly tickled by my awkwardness. If you can knock it into shape, do so. A few convincing examples of the materialistic viewpoint would not come amiss, in place of my indifferent reference to the February revolution.†c
Page me40.478
As soon as I've done with this thing, I shall set to work on 'Infantry', which will, however, demand a good deal of time and trouble, despite Rüstow, who must, of course, be treated with some reserve.†a

Page Break me40.479
Page me40.479
Can you shed any further light on the particulars contained in Crawshay's letter in The Free Press of 27 July regarding the Russian document?†b Surely the 'German' isn't Mr Bucher? And in which German paper is the thing supposed to have appeared?†460
Page me40.479
When you saw Blind, did you speak to him about the Vogt affair?†461 N'y avait-il rien á faire?†c
Page me40.479

The gentle Heinrich†d is acquitting himself well in his new role. Gloomy as ever, but all the lazier for that, redeeming the world by his courageous and intelligent GRUMBLING.
Page me40.479
Lupus has had another adventure, this time with a parson who swapped travelling bags with him. The deadly earnestness of the affair was, however, alleviated by the fact that the bag that had been left behind contained the said parson's MAIDEN SERMON which he was due to rattle off the following day. This lent the thing certain humorous extérieurs,†e otherwise Lupus was again on the point of exclaiming: 'There are so many rogues in this country, and not of the working class, but of the middle class.'
Page me40.479
Your
F.E.

Page me40.479
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

273
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.479
[London,] 8 August 1859

Dear Engels,
As a result of an attack of vomiting that has now lasted for two whole days, I am as weak as a fly and hence cannot write more than a few lines.

Page Break me40.480
Page me40.480
Would it be possible to scrape together some money for the Volk by Wednesday morning?
Page me40.480
Last Monday (Monday is always settlement day; i.e. a week ago today) the total deficit had been reduced to no more than about £2. (This did not, of course, include the charge for No. 13, which only has to be met today, and still less for No. 14, where payment doesn't fall due until today week. The issues are, of course, only charged at the end of the week following publication.) So things are in good shape. But today there is further expenditure to be met, in addition to the usual £1 extra (15/- for Lessner, 5 for the OFFICE). I myself am under so much PRESSURE that I cannot at this moment advance a single FARTHING and am, moreover, wasting an inordinate amount of time over the business. As for philistine Freiligrath, he imagines that he is giving adequate proof of his 'convictions' by maintaining a 'neutral' attitude towards ourselves and the Hermann.

Page me40.480

Ledru and L. Blanc have united to publish a paper, the Union Républicaine. It is to appear at the beginning of next month from the same press as the Volk, and would benefit the latter in as much as Hollinger would then print by machine instead of by hand as heretofore.†462 It makes the continued existence of the Volk all the more essential, by the by.
Page me40.480

Later on (as soon as I'm fit again), I shall write to Germany about the business. And to Borchardt too?
Page me40.480

To make the thing a PAYING proposition more quickly, fresh outlays would be necessary in a town like London: errand-boys besides Lessner, etc.
Page me40.480

Strohn not back yet? No answer yet from Duncker, the swine? Regards to Lupus and Gumpert.
Page me40.480

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.480
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.481

274
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.481
Manchester, 10 August 1859

Dear Moor,

Just now I'm in such a jam, paying off private debts which have accumulated in respect of the new financial year, that only in the case of direst need shall I be able to advance any money to the Volk during the next few weeks. I neither see nor hear anything of Strohn, but should know at once if he returned to Bradford. If the worst comes to the worst you could always write to Borchardt — I don't see why not. Then you could let me know and, if necessary, Lupus might also drop in on him. I neither see nor hear anything of Borchardt.

Page me40.481
Yesterday evening, when about to write the 2nd article on your book,†a I was interrupted in such a way as to preclude further work. I shan't be able to make up for lost time today and so the article will have to be put off till next week, greatly to my annoyance.
Page me40.481
I was out of town from Saturday to Monday, and on Monday evening found the enclosed scrawl from Duncker.†463 The note I enclose will enable you to obtain the 6 copies of Po and Rhine; send me those you don't need. Freiligrath has had one. It's really high time the fool was forced to adopt a less equivocal position, or at very least to shell out.
Page me40.481
Duncker is frankly trying to do me down. Lassalle mentioned 2,000 copies; now he claims to have printed only 1,000. Siebel, who is back here again, tells me that, to judge by his own experience of the pamphlet's success with booksellers, this must be a lie. Que faire?†b
Page me40.481
What do you think of the pretty excuse for failing to advertise your book?
Page me40.481
So Mazzini has finally made his diplomatic revelations in a frightful tirade in The Times.†c All the same, the facts are important and confirm our information and conclusions. Perhaps this will shake Urquhart's view that Mazzini's a RUSSIAN.†464

Page Break me40.482
Page me40.482
Salut.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.482
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.482
[London,] 13 August 1859

Dear Engels,

I received the enclosed note†a on Thursday afternoon. I therefore hastened into town. Matters could only be arranged by my borrowing £4 from Garthe, which will have to be returned. On Monday I shall write to Borchardt. To abandon the paper now would seem to me foolish on several counts: 1. because this would save the now foundering Gottfried†b; 2. because after the King of Prussia's†c death there will be radical changes in Germany, when we must have a paper of our own; 3. because of the growing number of subscribers (although for the time being this is simply a disadvantage financially, since the cost in STAMPS increases weekly while payments aren't due until the end of the quarter). The Volk already wields considerable influence in the United States. For instance the preface to my book†d has been reprinted from the Volk and variously commented on by German papers from New England to California.

Page me40.482

You couldn't, I suppose, arrange to let me have your article†e by Wednesday, there being nothing 'topical' about it this time?

Page Break me40.483

Page me40.483

Might it be possible to raise some money from German business employees in Manchester through your cousin Siebel?

Page me40.483

I shall certainly succeed in getting some money out of Berlin and New York. But there's the next 6 to 8 weeks to be taken care of.

Page me40.483

As TO Freiligrath, just come and TRY extracting one shilling from him if you can!

Page me40.483

Incidentally, and between ourselves, we'd have done better over money if new deficits hadn't continually arisen as a result of renewed thefts. But these were perpetrated by the old agents. Beginning with Scherzer, I've thrown out all those who had compromised themselves. But what remained of the old leaven†a wasn't any good and, even if these uncouth louts have been well-behaved hitherto, they blot their copybook when they make their exit. I finally threw out the last of them — Mr Lange — last week. It would have been relatively much easier to start up a completely new paper from scratch rather than, as Biskamp and Liebknecht did, continue, if only nominally, the existence of an organ that was rotten through and through.†b

Page me40.483

Herewith a letter from Dana.

Page me40.483

Though I don't think much of his POETRY, could your RELATIVE Siebel do some little piece of verse for the Volk? But nothing sublime, please! So as to nettle Freiligrath, we simply must unearth some poet or other, even if we have to write the verse for him ourselves.

Page me40.483
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.483
Copies of Po and Rhine next week.

Page me40.483
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.484

276
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.484
London, 26 August [1859]

DEAR Fred,
'Das Volk' is no more. I had already advanced to Hollinger the £2 you sent at the end of last week, for otherwise last Friday's issue (a week ago today) would not have come out. I have therefore paid it back to myself. In addition I owe Garthe £4 (for the paper) and ABOUT £2 more to Lessner, £6 in all. Moreover in Hollinger's case the deficit has accumulated — which doesn't, of course, concern us so immediately. However, it ought not to be allowed to grow any more. This can only be charged when the money for the subscriptions has come in. The French paper is not going to appear because of the amnesty.†465
Page me40.484
Borchardt, the braggart, wrote to say there was nothing doing in Manchester. First, because of the peace, then because of the amnesty. But more especially — and this was something he had not himself felt able to refute — because Das Volk was a scurrilous paper (oh, you idiot of a philistine!). I.e. not nice enough for the Steinthals and other such Ikeys. On the other hand a letter arrived at the same time from Lupus in which he spoke very highly of Das Volk. But the FACT is that as the paper improved, losses increased and readers fell off. Besides, that idiot Biskamp, with all sorts of people on at him, appeared to be jealous on account of his dwindling importance on the paper.

Page me40.484

Lastly, in view of Liebknecht's ineptitude and Biskamp's instability and weakness, it would have become increasingly necessary for me to intervene directly in the editorial work (for if sales were low among the louts, they were correspondingly high among the German diplomatic haute volée†a in London). Distances being what they are here, the thing was in any case taking up too much of my time, and my own circumstances ARE IN SUCH A DESPERATE STATE THAT I MUST LOOK TO THEM.

Page Break me40.485

Page me40.485

That wretch Dronke hasn't even subscribed for one copy. Your cousin Siebel, however, as you will see from the enclosed, is the Hermann's bard under Beta's management.†a

Page me40.485

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.485

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

277

MARX TO ENGELS†466

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.485

[London, 5 September 1859]

Dear Engels,

Could you possibly send me a military piece on China by Friday? I have written today (but not last Friday since I had a tiresome visitor) about Italy and Hungary.†b The purely political stuff is AT AN END until the opening of Parliament.

Page me40.485

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.485

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.486

278
ENGELS TO MARX†467
IN LONDON
Page me40.486
Manchester, [8 September 1859]
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

Unfortunately the article can't be sent today. It's now 7 o'clock and I still have at least half an hour's work at the office; it takes me 1/2 hour to get home and, what is more, I haven't yet set eyes on The Times, nor should I be able to borrow it for this evening. I'd have to finish the whole thing by 11.30 at the latest if I were to get it off — it's clairement impossible, particularly in the case of names which have been wrongly telegraphed and can only be deciphered after one has spent ages poring over the map. However, I'll go over the material for Tuesday and, should the Calcutta MAIL be in by Monday, rectify it accordingly.

Page me40.486
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

279
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LONDON
Page me40.486
London, 17 September 1859

Dear Liebknecht,

I should ere now have returned Blind's letter of 8th September,†468 which you passed on to me, had not various passages therein made it necessary for me to take further steps to ascertain the facts of the case.
Page me40.486

In this letter Blind maintains that he had had 'nothing whatever to do with the problem in question' (i.e. with the public denunciation of Vogt). He further maintains that 'the remarks' he made 'in the course of a private conversation...'†461 (implying that he's only spoken about Vogt 'in private') 'were completely misinterpreted'. The words

Page Break me40.487
'completely misinterpreted' are used with reference to myself. It was I who 'completely misinterpreted' Blind's 'remarks made in the course of a private conversation' and hence 'completely misrepresented' them to you and Biskamp. The misrepresentation in question is not witting, deliberate misrepresentation, but misrepresentation due either to the inherent difficulty of Blind's account, or to the feebleness and natural perversity of my powers of comprehension.
Page me40.487

As to which I would observe:

1. Vogt was a tool used by Bonaparte to corrupt liberals in Germany and German revolutionaries abroad. Vogt further offered 30,000 gulden to a certain liberal writer in Germany in order to win him over in the interests of Bonapartist propaganda. — These two on-dit†a were imparted to me IN THE MOST SERIOUS MANNER by Blind on 9 May, the day of Urquhart's first meeting. He imparted them to Freiligrath. He imparted them to others. He repeated, or rather reaffirmed, them in your presence, in Hollinger's presence, in my presence, on the day we all three of us had AN INTERVIEW with him. In regard to these two points, therefore, there can be no question of any interpretation, false or otherwise. They have been admitted. They can be proved by evidence. They are FACTS in so far as we consider Blind's statements as FACTS.
Page me40.487

2. Now as to Blind's 'interpretation' — minus the name Vogt qua agent of Bonapartist corruption, and minus the affair of the 30,000 gulden — it is to be found in an article in the London Free Press dated 27 May with the heading: 'The Grand Duke Constantine to be King of Hungary'. Blind is the author of this article in which he says that he 'knows the name of a Swiss Senator to whom he (Prince Jerome Napoleon) broached the subject', and even knows what Plon-Plon DID BROACH TO THE SWISS SENATOR; in which he further knows of 'the attempts made ... to win over to the Russo-Napoleonic scheme some of the exiled German Democrats, as well as some influential Liberals in Germany'; in which he further KNOWS that 'large pecuniary advantages were held out to them as a bribe'; and in which, finally, he is 'glad that these offers were rejected with indignation'. This 'interpretation' is printed and did not therefore occur 'in the course of a private conversation'. Again, it would seem from this that Blind, far from having had nothing to do with 'the problem', played the part of initiator.
Page me40.487

3. Add together 1. the facts related, and admitted to have been related, by Blind and 2. the 'interpretation' which Blind had printed and which is legally verifiable as such, and what do you get?

Page Break me40.488
Page me40.488

The anonymous pamphlet Zur Warnung minus a few irrelevant phrases. Whether or not Blind composed this pamphlet is therefore completely immaterial. He is responsible for publishing the elements which go to make it up.
Page me40.488

He mentioned the name Vogt and the affair of the 30,000 gulden 'in the course of a private conversation'. Not only with me but with Freiligrath and others. And not as a private and 'confidential' matter but as political denunciation. He himself had the 'interpretation' relating to these two POINTS printed.
Page me40.488

It is quite immaterial, therefore, whether or not the pamphlet which subsequently came out was composed by him! All it contains is the sum total of verbal Blind and printed Blind. It is Blind added together. Hence it was not only I who regarded him as its author. Freiligrath did too. He even questioned him about it.
Page me40.488

Author or otherwise, it in no way alters the case. He is still the instigator responsible.
Page me40.488

You will recall that at the above-mentioned meeting he stated on his word of honour that he had not composed the pamphlet. Composing and writing are in effect two separate things. I now have documentary, legally valid evidence (which is at your disposal) to the effect that the pamphlet was printed by F. Hollinger, was handed to him by Blind, was written in Blind's hand, and was regarded by F. Hollinger as Blind's product.†469
Page me40.488

What remains, then, is my interpretation, described not merely as a 'misinterpretation' but a 'complete misinterpretation'.
Page me40.488

As regards the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, the relationship between myself and that paper has always been one of outright hostility. What is at issue in the law-suit that is to be heard in open court at Augsburg on the 28th of October†470 is not a QUARREL between the A. A. Z. and Vogt but a legal ruling on the relationship between the German ex-imperial regent†410 Vogt and the French EMPEROR Louis Bonaparte. In my view, then, what is at issue for every German revolutionary, even if not a member of a 'Fatherland Association',†471 is not, in this instance, 'the affairs of a newspaper with which he had nothing whatever to do'; rather it is his own affair. That, however, is a matter of taste. De gustibus, etc.†a
Page me40.488

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.488
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.488a
Page me40.488a

Wilhelm Liebknecht

Page me40.488a

Conrad Schramm

Page me40.488a

Ferdinand Lassalle

Page Break me40.488b
Page Break me40.489

280
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.489
[London,] 21 September 1859

Dear Engels,

I have received your letter†472 together with the enclosure. My domestic AFFAIRS, by the by, have again reached the inevitable point of crisis, worse this time than ever before, because I can't see any way out. A go at my brother-in-law†a ended IN NOTHING. Freiligrath's business is WINDING UP. Whether the Swiss will set up a new London agency, and for him, in 1860 is still in doubt. So he now has a better excuse than ever to refuse to handle any bill transactions. Dana has warned me about OVERDRAWING. Consequently I'm in a complete FIX. Apart from minor hazards (e.g. this week they are threatening to cut off the gas and water) the more considerable debts have all been mounting up and a substantial portion of these can no longer be put off. E.g. house, school, etc.
Page me40.489

As I shall have to write to Duncker shortly about the second instalment, let me know whether he has advertised the first instalment in the press. It seems to me that he would gladly let THE WHOLE MATTER DROP.†473
Page me40.489

The damnable thing about it is that I no longer have a Bamberger in London. Otherwise I could certainly arrange a few ACCOMMODATION BILLS which I would subsequently pay with the money from America. In these CIRCUMSTANCES it can never be a question of anything but [MAKE]SHIFTS.
Page me40.489
You must forgive me for telling you this tale of woe. But down here there is absolutely no-one to whom I can freely unburden myself.
Page me40.489
As I've already told Lupus in my letter,†474 you will both be hearing from me shortly about some odd political scandals.
Page me40.489
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.489
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.490

281
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.490
Manchester, 22 September 1859

Dear Moor,
Lupus has just brought me your letter. I only got back the evening before last from a tour of Scotland with my parents†a and have now packed them off home again.
Page me40.490
A day or two before my old man arrived I had the most damnable bit of bad luck. At a drunken gathering I was insulted by an Englishman†b I didn't know; I hit out at him with the umbrella I was carrying and the ferrule got him in the eye. The chap immediately put the matter in the hands of his LAWYER, I made the necessary counter-moves, and since his eye wasn't permanently damaged and he has now recovered, it at first seemed probable that the affair would be settled — though I would still be responsible for the costs. Now, however, the swine has suddenly done a volte-face and is threatening me with an ACTION; and if it came to that the thing would cost me over two hundred pounds, on top of which there would be a public scandal and a ROW with my old man, who would have to put up the money. However I still hope to get round the JOBBING LAWYERS; if all goes really well the DRUNKEN BRAWL will cost me forty or fifty pounds. The worst of it is that I'm completely in the hands of this swine and his SOLICITOR, can do nothing to force the issue and must put up with everything to avoid a scandal, otherwise the costs will be even heavier. Needless to say these blasted English don't want to deprive themselves of the pleasure of getting their hands on a BLOODY FOREIGNER.

Page me40.490

So this time my troubles have certainly not come singly. I simply don't know what to do until I can see how the business is going to turn out. My English acquaintances are behaving very honourably and instantly took the thing up, but I'm going to be bled, that's certain, and how much, heaven only knows.
Page me40.490

At all events I shall send you a five-pound note about Saturday or Monday to prevent the worst happening; meanwhile I can get it carried over to the October account. You may rest assured that I shall do whatever I can, but as you can see for yourself I don't really know where I am myself at the moment.

Page Break me40.491
Page me40.491

Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.491
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

282
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.491
London, 23 September [1859]

DEAR Frederic,

BAD NEWS. This time I'm in some doubt whether the business down here CAN BE GOT OVER. There are very nasty difficulties in the way.
Page me40.491

I'm also in some doubt about your own affaire. Apart from the scandal — if the fellow's eye is better, if it can be proved that he OFFENDED you first and, further, that he had already agreed to your compromise, etc. — I don't see that, under English law, there is very much he can do. In London you would at worst be fined £2-£5. It seems to me that the purpose of the whole thing is TO OBTAIN MONEY ON FALSE PRETENCES.

Page me40.491

If the situation here is not to get any worse, I believe it essential that I should be able to send off 'Infantry' to Dana in ABOUT a week or 10 days from now. Although he said 15 September it certainly won't be too late and in any case he must admit that we have shown good will. The main thing is that it should be not so much profound as prolix.
Page me40.491

If, immediately after your arrival in Manchester†475 and after having made inquiries about the 'Englishman',†a you had departed again, for London, say, and made it known to the swine through a third party that you were on your way to the Continent, you would have been able to come to any arrangement you wanted. This might still be possible for, judging by Allen, etc., all Englishmen now believe that there will be a GENERAL AMNESTY†476 on the Continent and hence are afraid that their debtors will QUIT THE COUNTRY. (After all, the Prussian amnesty is to be on the 15th of October.) Every stratagem should be used against a chap like that.

Page Break me40.492
Page me40.492

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.492
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

283
ENGELS TO MARX†477
IN LONDON
Page me40.492
Manchester, 7 Southgate
[between 24 and 26 September 1859]

Dear Moor,

Enclosed fiver B/B 95281 Manchester, 1 January 1859.
Page me40.492
Shall deal with the other matters very shortly.
Page me40.492
For the present just one more point to which an answer is required by return if possible.
Page me40.492
1. How much money is needed to return to those subscribers to the Volk who have paid direct, the few pence due to them in respect of undelivered copies?
Page me40.492
2. What arrangement was made about this with Thimm and others? Have the booksellers deducted what was not delivered, OR HOW? Or not paid at all yet?
Page me40.492
I must have clarification of these matters, if possible at once, and I shall, if possible, raise the money — it can't amount to much — to settle the sorry business of the direct subscribers. Up here the bourgeois are complaining like mad that they've been cheated, and Lupus and I have to swallow it all. So let me have an answer at once. The day before yesterday Lupus was involved in a row on this account and I shall have to see the 'third party' as soon as possible.
Page me40.492
'Infantry' is in hand and if at all possible I shall finish it before the week is out.

Page Break me40.493
Page me40.493
As to my own affair up here, surely you don't imagine that I, for my part, didn't also have SENSE enough to hand the thing over to a LAWYER and listen to his opinion. It's not a case of some miserable fine imposed by a magistrate but of an ACTION AT NISI PRIUS FOR DAMAGES, in which the costs alone could be as high as £200. You surely don't imagine that I shall let myself be swindled like this without lifting a finger; as to running away, I need hardly say that, my circumstances being what they are, there can be no question of it, even for a fortnight; and being as well known in Manchester as I am, no one here would imagine that I would run away from the firm, etc., in order to escape a lawsuit of this sort.
Page me40.493
The real joke is that the use of pretty well any instrument gives a LAWYER a HANDLE with which to sway a BRITISH JURY, namely moral indignation at BLOODY FOREIGNERS who don't use their fists, etc. In which case the verdict goes against the FOREIGNER as sure as $2 \times 2 = 4$, and on top of that he has to fork out the costs. Anyway you can count on it that I shall fork out no more than is absolutely necessary. As yet the affair hasn't progressed an inch but I hope it will soon be settled so that I may at least get a clear idea of what can be done to help you through the crisis.
Page me40.493
Many regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.493
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

284
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE†478
IN PARIS
Page me40.493
London, 26 September 1859

My dear Franck,

In reply to your letter d.d. Sept. 23 I beg to state: 1) On the arrival at London of the N.Y.T. containing P's declaration, which to sign with his name he had not dared,†a I sent the

Page Break me40.494
N.Y.T. two letters with a full statement of the case. Simultaneously, I addressed a private note to the Editor in which I insisted upon the necessity of exposing the manoeuvres and intrigues of the wide-mouthed charlatan.†479 We shall, by and by, ascertain, whether or not my letters were published by the N.Y.T.†a
Page me40.494

As to the great London Daily Papers, it is quite out of the question to induce them to give publicity to a full exposure of Kossuth. The statement, in the first instance, would imply a libel case, which to stand the editors are, or at least affect to be, afraid of, considering the difficulty to prove such charges of bribery, and to summon the witnesses before a British tribunal. In the second instance, Kossuth is too unmitigated a humbug to not share the secret sympathies of the venal London press-gang. I have, however, put down a summary for the 'Free Press' (the Urquhartite paper which appears on the last Wednesday of every month)†b I have authorised them, if they think it necessary, 'to dress the salad' in their own style, and I think myself warranted in supposing that the 'thing' is to come out this very week. In that case I shall forward you a copy. Although circulated among a very exclusive public, the Free Press finds its way to all the cabinets and capitals of Europe. It is well known at Constantinople. Besides, the statement having once appeared in the Free Press, some London correspondents, connected with the German press, and more or less influenced by me, will find it easier to transplant the thing to the Teutonic soil.
Page me40.494

I enclose Asboth's declaration from the N.Y.T.†c The turn now given to K's proceedings is, that that 'illustrious' patriot attempted only to prevent 'a premature rising in Hungary', and that the clever 'statesman' altogether succeeded in this 'difficult' task.
Page me40.494

Some time ago, Urquhart had his correspondence with Kossuth (which I alluded to, as you will recollect) translated into Italian, and copiously distributed throughout Italy.†d
Page me40.494

2) In regard to the wine-affair, I became informed, soon after your departure from London, that my brother-in-law†e was not to return to Amsterdam before October. I have, therefore, not yet written to him on the business.
Page me40.494

For England I have till now vacillated between two men, both of whom, though in different ways, appear fit for undertaking the task. The one is a German, without capital, but very energetical, speculative, and industrious. The other is an Englishman, who deals in French and German wines, a 'respectable' merchant, although no large one. At all events, he has contrived to get on with his wine-business and to rise, in the short period of 6-7 years, from very small beginnings to comparative affluency. The former candidate would have been exclusively given to the business in question; the latter has the advantage of greater means, a settled concern, and established connexions. If, as will be decided in a few days, the German is, for the present, not yet ready to enter on the affair (and I have reason to think so), I shall make a conditional offer to the Englishman. You will then be informed of his conditions and may decide yourself.

Page Break me40.495

Yours truly
A. Williams†a

Page me40.495

P.S. At this moment I receive your second letter. I think it is already answered by the preceding lines.
Page me40.495

27. Sep. The proof-sheet of the 'thing' in the Free Press has been forwarded to me.

Page me40.495
First published in Revue d'histoire compareé, t. IV, Nos. 1-2, 1946

Reproduced from the original

285
MARX TO ENGELS†480
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.495

[London, 27 September 1859]

Dear Engels,

Your letter with enclosure received.

Page me40.495

I knew as soon as the letter had gone off that some of my critical remarks were idiotic.†b

Page me40.495

I myself am involved in a COUNTY-COURT PROCESS on account of the Volk. As regards the 'direct' subscribers in Manchester, these were only Lupus and a 'cobbler' who had already cancelled his order before the paper ceased to be.

Page Break me40.496

Page me40.496

Thimm has not yet paid and was, moreover, requested to pay only for the NUMBERS RECEIVED. How can we have done anything to the prejudice of the philistines in Manchester when they have not yet paid a single FARTHING?

Page me40.496

Send the names of the fellows with claims. Tell Thimm (on Biskamp's behalf) that he must not send another FARTHING here until he hears from us again. You may instruct him to pay 'bona fide' claimants in Manchester.

Page me40.496

Biskamp has now taken lodgings at my expense here in Hampstead. The POOR DEVIL has had an operation for PLEURISY at the German hospital, where he spent 1 1/2 weeks — sans sou.†a All in all a nice state of affairs.

Page me40.496

Today is article day, so I shall close.

Page me40.496

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.496

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.496
London, 28 September [1859]

Dear Engels,

Yesterday evening I had a visit from Lessner, whom I had sent for in connection with the Manchester subscribers to the Volk.

Page me40.496

Like Biskamp, he assures me that (apart from Lupus) there wasn't a single direct subscriber to the Volk. And up till now no one has sent a FARTHING to London.

Page me40.496

After the Volk ceased publication Thimm wrote to Lessner asking for an account. Lessner replied that he could send him an account only in respect of the period in which he, Lessner, had been despatch clerk. He then sent him an invoice for the individual numbers. Up till yesterday there had been no reply from Thimm.

Page Break me40.497

Page me40.497

So I'd like to know what fellows are kicking up the fuss in Manchester and on what PRETEXT.

Page me40.497

Down here we (and I especially) have unpleasantnesses enough in respect of the Volk without that.

Page me40.497

The 'Particulars' about Kossuth in The Free Press are mine. (I have made 2 articles out of them for the Tribune†479 and shall see whether they are accepted.) I got them from Szemere, partly in writing, partly by word of mouth. Szemere was here a few weeks ago.

Page me40.497

Salut. Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.497

It's doubtful whether Biskamp will pull through. The poor devil is as low as can be. We seem to attract every damned spot of bother that's going.

Page me40.497

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

287
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†481
IN BERLIN
Page me40.497
London, [not before 2 October 1859]
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

It is very good of you to be the first to take up the pen again, and this in a matter touching my interests, despite the fact that appearances speak against me.
Page me40.497

As for my silence, let me say briefly:

First, I didn't get either of your letters until weeks after their despatch, namely on my return to London from a journey to Scotland via Manchester, made for business reasons.†444 Meanwhile events had moved so fast that they had, as it were, removed the point of our debate.†a For the POINT IN QUESTION did not relate — nor, between you and me, could it have related — to the nationalities issue, but rather to the most suitable policy to be pursued by the German revolutionaries towards their own governments and other countries. Now I would nevertheless have sent a reply, if a belated one, had there not been fresh grounds for delay. In one of your letters you asked for evidence relating to Vogt. That evidence was in the hands of Karl Blind. The 'worthy democrat', however, though privately inclined to play at moral indignation as well as stir up scandal, resisted all expostulations TO COME OUT. Consequently I broke with him. (He even denied authorship of Zur Warnung, the anonymous pamphlet published in London†461 and reproduced in the Augsburger.†b However, I have succeeded in obtaining documentary evidence against him (Blind) in this matter,†469 to which I shall revert 'at the right time and the right place'.) This provided a fresh occasion for prolonging my silence. And, since 'the evil deed is accursed in that it must constantly engender evil'†c my silence itself became an obstacle to my breaking it. On top of that — and I beg you not to regard this simply as a figure of speech — there was a whole series of domestic complications, as yet by no means eliminated, which in fact robbed me of all desire to write. So much for my silence, which, however, and despite all APPEARANCES TO THE CONTRARY, was in no way motivated by ill-will.

Page Break me40.498
Page me40.498

Now as to Duncker,

on my return to London I found a letter from him which apparently rendered it impossible for me to make any further direct approach to the man regarding the sequel.†473 On the other hand, not having written to you for so long, I couldn't possibly start off by suddenly writing to you about my own concerns. So I let the matter DROP, on the tacit assumption that, if I hadn't heard from Duncker by a certain date, I should have to approach another publisher.

Page me40.498

However, one of your earlier letters led me to suppose that Duncker had undertaken to publish 2 instalments, or rather the first section ('Capital in General') in its entirety.†d But on the other hand the first instalment†e was much more compendious than had been originally planned, nor, for that matter, did I want him to be a 'publisher malgré lui†a'. However, since the first 2 instalments form a whole, it would be desirable for them at least to appear under the same imprint.

Page Break me40.499

Page me40.499

I shall now be obliged to remodel the thing completely, as the manuscript for this second instalment is already a year old†250; and, since my circumstances do not permit me to devote much time to the matter just now, I hardly think I shall be able to finish it before the end of December. That, however, would be at the very outside.

Page me40.499

I am busy with an English rendering of the first instalment and this, too, has been disrupted by a bad domestic spell. At any rate I am assured of a better reception in England than in Germany where, so far as I am aware, nobody inquires after the thing or gives a straw for it. All I want is to place the whole of this first section, at least, before the German public. Should the latter continue to pay no heed to the work, I intend to put all subsequent sections straight into English and no longer concern myself with the German philistines.

Page me40.499

Vale faveque.†b

K.M.

Page me40.499

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. II, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

288

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me40.499

Manchester, 3 October 1859

Dear Moor,

What you wrote and told me about Das Volk was most welcome news. It now transpires that the philistine who raised an outcry had taken out a subscription with Thimm aprés tout.†c
Page me40.499
What's this about proceedings in the COUNTY COURT†d?

Page Break me40.500
Page me40.500
Because of sundry interruptions and an (otherwise insignificant) inflammation of the left eye which prevents me doing much writing by gas-light, 'Infantry' is not quite finished. You'll get it by Friday for sure.
Page me40.500
My quarrel not settled yet and might still be damnably long-drawn-out. But I've got the scoundrel†a pretty well pinned down and believe I can now stand back and watch; whatever happens, though, it's going to cost money — that's the most annoying thing about it; moreover, the LAW being what it is here, one can never be quite sure of one's case. At all events, things look a good deal better now.
Page me40.500
The Free Press hadn't arrived the day before yesterday; I shall go and have another look presently. What sort of a branch is it that Urquhart has opened in Berlin?
Page me40.500
So it now transpires that the Russian memorandum appeared in the Preussisches Wochenblatt! (I've only just seen the August number of The Free Press.)†482 Apart from what's in The Free Press,†b have you any other scandalous stuff about great men†367?
Page me40.500
Your
F.E.

Page me40.500
Have a complete account made out for Thimm as soon as possible, i.e. covering the pre-Lessner period as well; the fellow apparently intends to pocket the money. But send me a full list of the people who subscribed through Thimm, so that I can keep a check on reimbursements and send round a circular telling people that they can reclaim their money from Thimm.
Page me40.500
Siebel's indifferent verse†c was sent to the Hermann behind Siebel's back by a chap in Germany to whom he had written enclosing it. He promptly wrote to the editors, and only then did he learn how this had come about.

Page me40.500
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.501

289
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.501
[London,] 5 October [1859]

Dear Engels,

In view of the way things are managed here (Speck has gone bankrupt and disappeared; Garthe, the cashier, is in Brighton) and always have been managed so far as the Volk is concerned, it is impossible to obtain an accurate account AS TO FOREIGN [out-of-town] SUBSCRIBERS during the pre-Lessner period. Biskamp maintains that, with the exception of the very first issues, Thimm was always sent a dozen copies.
Page me40.501

Hollinger is suing me for £12 and a couple of shillings arrears in respect of Das Volk, together with the type for the last issue, which did not appear. The dirty dog is trying to make out all of a sudden that I'm the 'proprietor', although the whole business, I won't say foundered (for your philistine here is a hopeless proposition), but closed down with a deficit because I wasn't the proprietor and was unable to knock the slipshod management into shape despite all the time I spent on it. Still less did I ever give the chap a legal guarantee. I think his account is wrong, for apart from the other moneys received, the fellow had had £7 from me for the 3 penultimate issues alone (his account covers the last 2 issues). — The 15/- for Lessner did not go through his hands but was paid direct by me. — However, I'm not going to engage in any controversy on the subject since I would thereby immediately acknowledge his right to sue me. The dirty dog will swear on oath and get one of his type-setters to swear on oath that I gave a guarantee. (Even were this the case he should have sued Biskamp first.) I shall call in Biskamp, etc., to give counter-evidence. Had I the means, I should have avoided all public proceedings, not by paying Hollinger, but by buying the debt he incurred with one Lisle, Hollinger's LANDLORD and owner of the press. Hollinger owes this man some £60 and has never paid him a FARTHING.
Page me40.501

But circumstances being what they are, there can be no question of anything of the kind.
Page me40.501

Unless I bring off some sort of coup — and I simply cannot see how I can do so — my position will become completely untenable. Freiligrath made another attempt at negotiating a bill. But yesterday evening, at the same time as threatening letters from the LANDLORD, etc., etc., a letter arrived from him saying it was definitely no go. The enclosed letter from Lassalle, which I answered by return,†a looks like good news to me. The thing†b appears to be selling despite the conspiration de silence. Otherwise I wouldn't have received this indirect request from Duncker. I shall, by the by, be totally incapable of going on with the thing†473 until I've CLEARED up the worst of the domestic mess d'une maniére ou d'une autre.†c Your articles on my affair†d have been reprinted in German papers from New York to California (with the tiny little Volk we hooked the whole of the German-American press). To show you the kind of rubbish that's appearing in Germany, I enclose a cutting of the advertisements in the Vienna Presse. Il suffit†e TO READ the index. (BY THE BY, I am giving lectures about the first instalment to a select circle of artisans.†f It seems to interest the chaps a great deal.†483)

Page Break me40.502

Page me40.502

Lastly, a report on two 'great men'.†367

Page me40.502

Ad vocem†g R. Schramm. Some while ago this pitiful blockhead was in Ostend, whence he sent a contribution to the Hermann.†h Not that I'm in the habit of reading that trashy sheet; I heard about this through Freiligrath. In his contribution R. Schramm declares that one could gauge the depths to which the Germans had sunk simply by listening to their conversations on the beach. Thus he had, for instance, overheard two ladies chattering away in broad Wuppertal accents and one of them had addressed the other as 'Mrs Engels'. So that's the kind of revenge this wretch takes! But by way of retribution the blockhead recently lost £2,000 (teste†i Freiligrath), having, like a fool, entered the 'precious stones business'. This had, moreover, frustrated his scheme of starting a German paper of his own in London (was to have come out this month). To the chap's intense annoyance and as a riposte to his childish MALICE, I got Biskamp to see that the FACTS — non-appearance of the paper, gem trade and loss of money — were published in the Weser-Zeitung.

Page me40.502

Ad vocem K. Blind. With regard to this homme d'état, I must go into greater detail.

Page me40.502

About a fortnight after my return to London from Manchester, Biskamp told me that Blind had proposed, through Hollinger, that he (i.e. Das Volk) amalgamate with Blind and company but that I, and the communist element generally, must go. In our stead — sensible socialism. At that time I had, as you know, written nothing for the Volk save for a pleasantry or two.†a However, I forthwith wrote Blind, not a letter, but a communication of ABOUT 10 LINES†484 in which I called him amongst other things an 'homme d'état' and an 'important man', and alluded to his henchman 'Fidelio'†b (i.e. Hollinger). Next day along comes Liebknecht, and tells me that Blind and Hollinger are sitting in the pub on the corner. The former, he said, was expecting me. I therefore went there with Liebknecht. Blind gave his word of honour that there was nothing in the thing. That swine Hollinger ditto. Hence I could only believe them. However, the meeting gave me a chance of finding out about other machinations of Blind's. Inter alia, the conversation came round to Vogt. Blind assured me on his word of honour (as he had already assured Freiligrath, though omitting his word of honour) that he had neither written the anonymous Zur Warnung nor launched it upon the world. I said this surprised me, since it contained no more than what he had told me by word of mouth on the occasion of Urquhart's meeting on 9 May.†461 I reminded him that he had assured me at the time that he possessed tangible evidence, knew the name of the man to whom Vogt had offered 30,000 or 40,000 gulden, but 'unfortunately' could not divulge it, etc. Well, Blind hadn't the face to deny this but expressly admitted it more than once in Liebknecht's and Hollinger's presence.

Page Break me40.503

Page me40.503

WELL! A few weeks ago the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung wrote to Liebknecht, who had sent them Zur Warnung. Liebknecht came to me.†470 I told him to go and find Blind, and that I should await the homme d'état 'in the pub at Blind's corner'. Blind was at some resort — St. Leonard's, I think. Liebknecht wrote to him; wrote once, twice. At last a letter from the homme d'état. In the coolest and most 'diplomatic' manner the latter regretted that 'I' should have called to see him in vain. Liebknecht, he went on, must understand that he (Blind) had no desire to intervene in the affairs of a 'paper with which he had absolutely nothing to do' and in a matter with which he had absolutely nothing to do. As for Liebknecht's allusions to 'remarks' let fall 'in the course of a private conversation', these could only be attributed to a 'complete' misunderstanding. And that, or so the 'homme d'état' imagined, was that.

Page Break me40.504
Page me40.504

I now took Liebknecht with me to Collet. I recalled that The Free Press of 27 May ('The Grand Duke Constantine',†440 etc., p. 53) had contained a paragraph which I immediately suspected to be Blind's handiwork and which, taken in conjunction with Blind's verbal admissions before Liebknecht, Hollinger and myself, constituted the entire contents of the anonymous pamphlet, besides providing proof that it was not just en passant, in the course of a 'private conversation', that Blind had touched on this 'matter with which he had absolutely nothing to do'. Hence to Collet, who instantly declared Blind to be the AUTHOR. He still had Blind's letter in which the latter had enclosed his card but had asked that his name should not be disclosed. This was convincing evidence.
Page me40.504

By a series of manoeuvres which it would take too long to describe here, I further extracted the enclosed (which you must let me have back by return. I have also shown it to Freiligrath). So much for the respectable citizen's 'word of honour'!
Page me40.504

Well, last Saturday Liebknecht sent the homme d'état a letter (modelled on a letter from myself to Liebknecht in which I had summed the matter up in somewhat forceful terms†a). We are awaiting the answer and will let you know the details.
Page me40.504

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.504

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

290
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE†478
IN PARIS
Page me40.504
London, 8 October 1859

My dear Franck,

I have received your last letter, in which you appear to suppose that, as yet, nothing has been done in the affair K. Now, this is altogether a mistake.

Page Break me40.505
Page me40.505

1) On Thursday (Sept. 29), I sent you a copy of the London Free Press d.d. 28 Sept., containing a statement headed: Particulars of K's Transaction with L.N. On the very day of its issue that number of the F.P. was forwarded to all the newspaper offices of London. The Times published its article in K's favour†a only after having made sure from the F.P., that K. is as venal a fellow as the Times writers.
Page me40.505

For the case of the number of the F.P., sent to you, having been intercepted by the French Post-Office, I enclose the article above said in this letter.
Page me40.505

2) The statement of the F.P. has been reprinted in English, Scotch and Irish provincial papers. A literal translation of it has, by friends of mine, been inserted in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†b and the Bremer Weserzeitung. Another German translation is said to have appeared in the Berlin 'Nationalzeitung'.
Page me40.505

3) Simultaneously with your letter, I received to-day the New York Tribune d.d. September 24 which, under the title 'K. and L.N.', brings an elaborate article of mine, filling two and a half columns, and put forward in a prominent place of the paper. The Tribune having always had a faible†c for K., and P. being its London correspondent, this publication is a real success, the more so, since P. is nominally denounced in the article, and the apologetical passages of his own letter to the New Y.T.†d are ridiculed. There exist at least some hundred smaller American papers, published in the English language, which receive their mot d'ordre†e from the Tribune, and, consequently, will reprint that article. The German American press, from New York to San Francisco, will, by this time, have translated the article into the Teutonic vernacular.
Page me40.505

Moreover, it should not be forgotten that New York is the centre of the Hungarian emigration in America.
Page me40.505
If you [should] be unable to get the Tribune d.d. Sept. 24., I shall send you the article on the condition of your remitting it, since I possess no other copy, and stand in need of it should it be replied to by P.
Page me40.505
4) K's letter to Mac Adam,†f on which the Times leader remarks, has been generally ridiculed by the London papers, so much so that K. induced that same Mac Adam to declare in the same papers, that the letter was a private letter and not meant for publication.†a As a specimen, of the manner in which K's letter was handled, I enclose a leader from the London Daily Telegraph.

Page Break me40.506
Page me40.506
5) If you can forward me any further particulars on K's proclamations and intrigues in Hungary, they will be very welcome, and are sure to find their way into the Press.
Page me40.506
6) My stationer was unable to get the Times' copies you ask for. Generally, some days after their issue, London Daily papers are difficult of procuring.
Page me40.506
7) The remark on Perczel in the F.P. article is based on a public declaration of his. I thought fit to allude to it, in order to throw confusion into the ranks of K's partisans as to the source from which the information proceeds.
Page me40.506
8) From the note enclosed, you will see that the English merchant, on further consideration, declines entering upon the wine-affair. The German, I spoke of, has returned to the Continent. Thus I see no prospect of pushing on this affair in England.
Page me40.506
As to my brother-in-law,†b I have written to him, but not yet received his answer.

Yours truly
Williams†c

Page me40.506
First published in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, Nos. 1-2, 1946

Reproduced from the original

291
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.506
London, 10 October 1859

DEAR Frederick,

The money arrived on Saturday and really 'saved our lives', for on that day the gang of creditors, or part of it, launched a concerted attack. MY BEST THANKS. Likewise for the manuscript.†d

Page Break me40.507
Page me40.507

I enclose herewith my Tribune article on Kossuth.†a Let Lupus have a look at it as well. Then send it back to me. There'll be a major rumpus, since Pulszky is the Tribune's London correspondent. The words†b I cite re 'AUSTRIAN SYMPATHIES', 'ANTI-NAPOLEONIC RAGE', etc., are taken from Pulszky's LETTER in the Tribune in which he sought to defend Kossuth and Co.†c IN FACT I'm surprised that, in THESE CIRCUMSTANCES and in view of its general faible for Kossuth, the Tribune printed the article. True, I enclosed a brief note in German which put heart into Dana.†479
Page me40.507

Collet has sent Kossuth 5 COPIES of the last Free Press. The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung has reproduced the thing.†d Likewise the Weser-Zeitung.
Page me40.507

Collet came to see me yesterday. Statesman Blind had called on him and complained forcefully about his (Collet's) having failed to preserve editorial secrecy vis-á-vis myself. He (Collet) must call on me to prevent my doing any more MISCHIEF. The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung was 'A RUSSIAN (!) ORGAN', which was why he (Blind) would not hold out a helping hand to it.†470 To me, Collet said: 'At the outset, he made upon me the impression of a very sneakish fellow.' Statesman Blind, like the gentleman he is, has not deigned to answer Liebknecht, and imagines he's been able to spike my guns through Collet. THE FOOL! At the same time he tried to get Collet to tell him who had written about Kossuth in the [Free] Press.
Page me40.507

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.507
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.508

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.508
[London,] 26 October 1859

Dear Engels,

I trust that you aren't ill or that some other misfortune hasn't befallen you, but would beg you, whatever the case, TO DROP SOME LINES since your protracted silence worries me.

Page me40.508

Do please return me the cutting from the Tribune†a which I enclosed in my last.

Page me40.508

Duncker has now definitely declared himself willing to bring out the second instalment.†473 Lassalle speaks of his 'Italian' tactics quasi re bene gesta†b and, in the course of pressing me to make a statement, lets fall the modest hope that perhaps I have revised 'my' opinion.†485

Page me40.508

The Kinkel or Schiller festival here, a festival, by the by, that will turn out to be an altogether wretched affair, is something Freiligrath, 'as a German poet', could not but associate himself with, though I warned him that he was required simply as an accessory to Gottfried.†486

Page me40.508

As regards the Volk I have avoided the COUNTY COURT PROCESS†c by sacrificing ABOUT £5 while, on the other hand, getting Hollinger to recognise Biskamp as PROPRIETOR on the receipt; he (Biskamp) is therefore responsible for the balance, but since he possesses no property whatsoever, he is absolved of any further liability. This step — a highly unpleasant one under the ACTUAL CIRCUMSTANCES — had to be taken because Kinkel's gang was only waiting for the case in order to raise a public scandal, and not one of the paper's hangers-on was presentable enough to be exhibited in court.

Page me40.508

At the request (ENCOMPASSED in two very plaintive, abject letters) of the Augsburger Zeitung I sent them the document relating to Blind.†487 It served the laddie right, the more so because he went to Collet and 1. tried to make use of him for sundry subterfuges, 2. denounced Liebknecht to Collet as 'BELONGING TO THE COMMUNIST PARTY' and, finally, in order to blacken him completely, 3. described the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung as a 'Russian' organ.

Page Break me40.509

Page me40.509

Remind Thimm to settle his account with us.

Page me40.509

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me40.509
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

293
ENGELS TO MARX†a
IN LONDON
Page me40.509
Manchester, 28 October 1859

[...] The Blind affair is very funny indeed; it's always a particularly agreeable spectacle when a would-be diplomatic wiseacre comes a cropper. The fellow could be terribly discredited as a result. Needless to say he gave his 'word of honour' simply IN THE DIPLOMATIC SENSE OF THE WORD, just as it is no insult to call someone a swine IN A PARLIAMENTARY SENSE.†b This enrichment of the language by Blind is worthy of recognition. What would be nicest of all, by the way, would be to discover that Mr Blind's 'evidence' had no basis other than hot air which, this sinister saviour of his country being what he is, I think highly probable.
Page me40.509
Lupus is in despair over the deterioration of BITTER BEER, which is forcing him to drink PORTER and HALF AND HALF; this apart, he is keeping pretty well and is still living in Chatsworth.
Page me40.509
Not long ago Siebel had a letter from a ludicrous German literatus†c who, for lack of money, was seeking to sell himself to the revolution and wanted him to negotiate the deal, I being supposedly the purchaser. At the same time he threatened, should the revolution refuse to buy him, to throw himself into the arms of the Jesuits. They, however, wouldn't accept him gratis, for I need hardly tell you that the fellow is a colossal blockhead.

Page Break me40.510
Page me40.510
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.510

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

294
ENGELS TO E.J. FAULKNER
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.510
[Draft]
Manchester, 2 November 1859

Dear Faulkner,

Will something like the enclosed do? I shall call here again before 7 o'clock.

Yours

F.E.†a

Page me40.510
Mr Daniells

Sir,

After what happened between you and me on a certain evening,†b I should have been the first to make to you that apology which one Gentleman owed to another under the circumstances, if you had not at once taken such steps as precluded me entirely from doing so. Indeed I at once requested a friend of mine to call upon you for the purpose but when he arrived it was too late. If Mrs Daniells as I hear feels aggrieved at anything I may have said, I should be very sorry not to withdraw most emphatically any expression which may have given umbrage to a lady whom I have not the honour of knowing and upon whose character it could therefore never enter into my intention to cast the slightest imputation.

Page Break me40.511
Page me40.511

As to the other matter between you and me, I am only sorry that it ever should have occurred and am prepared to pay to you £30. — in the shape of compensation.
Page me40.511

I am Sir

Your obedient servant

Page me40.511

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

295
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.511
[London,] 3 November 1859

Dear Frederick,

Lessner hasn't got the names of the people to whom Das Volk was sent. All he knows is the number of copies (12) which he regularly despatched to Thimm.
Page me40.511

Biskamp maintains that the books he ordered from Thimm were not for his own account but for that of the parson who employed him as a schoolmaster. Nor, come to that, had Thimm ever said a word about the matter. He will be writing to him about it, likewise about Panzer's acquisitive propensities. A few days ago he was taken on by the Weser-Zeitung at 50 talers a month.
Page me40.511

My work is making poor progress.†473 I'm plagued by too many domestic disruptions and too many worries. You'll have heard about the 'grand' Schiller festival here.†486 Freiligrath and Kinkel, or rather Kinkel and Freiligrath, are to be its heroes. Seeing that the whole thing emanated from the Kinkel clique here and that even the invitations to form a committee were sent out by that wretch Beta, Gottfried's factotum, I wrote to Freiligrath weeks ago saying I hoped HE WOULD KEEP ALOOF FROM THE KINKEL DEMONSTRATION.†488 In reply I received a not exactly unequivocal letter from the fat philistine in which, inter alia, he said:

'Even should Kinkel secure Briseis in the shape of the festive address, this would be no reason for Achilles to withdraw sulking into his tent.'

Page Break me40.512
Page me40.512

So Kinkel is Agamemnon and Freiligrath Achilles†a! Moreover, he says that the festival 'is relevant in more ways than one' (in what ways we shall presently see), and finally that he has written a poem on Schiller†b commissioned by the city of Boston (United States).
Page me40.512

Later I discovered from the Hermann that Freiligrath was acting as a member of the committee and that there was some talk of his having written a cantata on Schiller (set to music by Pauer)†c; in other words, that the philistine had kept something back from me. Later still I got another letter from him in which he said I would seem to have been right after all, though his participation had partially frustrated Gottfried's plans.

Page me40.512

Well, when I saw the man he told me with bated breath about all that had happened. Beta and Juch, Kinkel's agents, had heard from America that Freiligrath had written the poem on Schiller for Boston. Gottfried had, besides the address, reserved the festive cantata for himself. Believing, however, that non bis in idem,†d and that it wouldn't be feasible to co-opt Freiligrath without conceding, or rather offering, him the poetic part (though they counted on his turning down the offer), Juch and Beta invited Freiligrath, on behalf of Kinkel's committee, to join that committee and write the cantata. Freiligrath said he had already composed a poem for Boston, gave an inconclusive reply but promised to serve on the committee. This last treated the matter as a mere formality and did not renew its request. Freiligrath, however, hastily sets to work (no such difficulties here as in the case of the Volk for which he never could manage as much as 3 lines), writes a cantata (in the same metre as Schiller's dithyrambs†e; he read me the stuff — pomp and circumstance), hurries to Pauer, has it set to music and, through his friends in the Schiller festival choir, compels Kinkel and Co. to renew their invitation to him. Then he sends them the rubbish which, 'by an anachronism', happened to be already finished and complete, not only written but actually set to music, and likens himself at the end of his epistle to a 'menial' who has served his 'master' without waiting for orders (Messrs Kinkel, Beta, Juch and Co.)! (And it's the philistine himself who tells me this.)

Page Break me40.513
Page me40.513

However the 'tension' between him and Gottfried was not yet at an end. Freiligrath attended the committee, where Gottfried behaved very coolly towards him. Now Freiligrath — 'quite fortuitously' or so he says — had introduced into his cantata a passage during which it was 'essential' for Schiller's bust to be unveiled. Gottfried, no less fortuitously, had arranged for the climax of his sermon to coincide with the 'moment of unveiling'. After a prolonged tussle, throughout which philistine Freiligrath sat in silence and let his friends (riff-raff of all kinds) do the talking, it was at length decided that the 'unveiling' should fall to Freiligrath, whereupon Gottfried, sighing heavily, declared that in that case he would now be obliged to address his entire oration to 'the veiled portrait'. Whereupon one of Freiligrath's pals rose to his feet and said that this difficulty could be overcome if Kinkel were to make his speech after the cantata. Gottfried, however, voiced his unqualified opposition to this, declaring with the utmost indignation that 'he had already made so many concessions over the affair that this could not possibly be demanded of him'. And that was the end of that. So the sermon will come first.
Page me40.513

And Freiligrath told me all this rubbish with great seriousness and gravity; on the other hand he finds it perfectly natural that he should never have breathed a word to the committee about the Kinkel gang's having taken it for granted that his (Freiligrath's) supposed 'party friends' should not be invited to join the committee, thus making a Kinkel demonstration of it. Though he knew perfectly well that I wouldn't attend, he should never have permitted such 'ostracism' on the part of a committee on which he himself sits. Blind is on it, of course.

Page me40.513

Ever since his poem about the Mockel woman,†a Freiligrath has treated us 'strictly in private' as his friends while openly walking arm-in-arm with our enemies. Qui vivra verra.†b

Page me40.513

Ad vocem†c Blind: The scoundrel has now been to see Hollinger. For the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung had written to him saying that, if he persisted in his reticence, he would be brought out into the open in the most unpleasant manner, and that they possessed a document incriminating him.†487 He accused Hollinger of having let the cat out of the bag. Hollinger, with justice, said quod non†d and asked why Blind refused to admit responsibility for it. The latter told him that, while he had indeed written the manuscript, a friend of his had composed it. The fact of the matter is that while Blind wrote and composed it, Goegg supplied the most inculpating bits. Now the respectable Goegg is 'apparently' Vogt's friend, as he needs must be since Fazy, through the Swiss bank, owns shares worth 25,000 frs in his looking-glass factory and generally serves him as BANKER. Hence Goegg's indignation at the act of 'high treason' can only be ventilated sotto voce. Such are the 'serious republicans'.

Page Break me40.514

Page me40.514

Couldn't you do me an ARTICLE on the recent changes in the Prussian army†a?

Page me40.514

Regards to Lupus.

Page me40.514

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.514

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

296

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me40.514

Manchester, 4 November 1859

Dear Moor,

Freiligrath really deserves to be severely chastised for once and I hope that an opportunity will present itself before the Schiller nonsense is over (or its after-pains).†486 Such poet's vanity and literary presumption combined with toadyism is altogether too much, and on top of that the Augsburger†b credits him with political virtue!
Page me40.514

I suppose you read about Vogt's law-suit†470 in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 297 et seq.†c? The thing went quite well, but Biskamp's letter is shockingly discreditable. The fellow could perfectly well have dealt with his private affairs in a separate note but, as things are, it is exceedingly distasteful that the editor of the Volk should send the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung a testimonial, begging to be taken on as correspondent, and that this should appear in print.†a Vogt will make a great noise about it. Why do we always have such tactless idiots hanging round us?

Page Break me40.515
Page me40.515

But most satisfactory is the discrediting of Blind. The statement in your letter†b and the document†487 have now obliged the worthy diplomat to come creeping out into the open, if only to save himself being discredited still further. He has boasted about the evidence he possesses and, if he holds his tongue, will seem an unmitigated liar.
Page me40.515

Vogt is in no less nice a mess. Case dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, ordered to pay all the costs, and referred to a jury — what can he do?
Page me40.515

He will have to sue either the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung before a Bavarian jury — in which case he will be doomed in advance — or the Volk — and then Blind will be SUBPOENAED — or else Blind himself. In any case, it will turn out badly for him, and I don't see how he can do anything but discredit himself still more.
Page me40.515

All this is most consoling.
Page me40.515

Garibaldi would seem to be playing a somewhat ambiguous role. A general of that ilk is in a difficult position. Once he had been forced to compound with the devil, there was no turning back. For Victor Emmanuel the obvious thing is, of course, first to exploit Garibaldi and then ruin him. Altro esempio†c of how far you get with a 'practical attitude' in a revolution. It's a pity about the chap, though. Excellent, on the other hand, that Piedmont should lose its spurious character as representative of Italian unity.†489
Page me40.515

I shall do you an article about army reform in Germany when this affair has progressed a little further. Far-reaching things are happening in the sphere of military organisation, not only in Prussia but elsewhere, in Austria, etc. Everywhere the French style of uniform, etc., is being adopted, and in many respects this even means quite definitely putting the clock back. But so far everything's still rather confused; as soon as I can clarify my ideas a little I'll do the article for you.†d
Page me40.515

I also hope that soon there'll be something further for me to report on in China and the Far East GENERALLY. Likewise Morocco.†490

Page Break me40.516
But none of this has come to a head yet. About Morocco next week perhaps.†a Have you already written about it, or could you, perhaps, let me have some political information ad vocem†b Pam on the subject so that I am au fait.
Page me40.516
At the moment I'm deep in Ulfilas.†491 It was really high time for me to polish off that damned Gothic, which I'd always been so desultory about. To my surprise I find I know far more than I thought; if only I can get hold of another reference book, I think I shall polish this off completely in a fortnight. Then I shall go on to Old Norse and Anglo-Saxon, with which I've never been on more than nodding terms. So far, I've been working without a dictionary or other reference book save the Gothic text and Grimm.†c However, that old fellow is really splendid.
Page me40.516
What I need badly here is Grimm's Geschichte der deutschen Sprache. Could you let me have it back?
Page me40.516
I think I shall see Lupus this evening.
Page me40.516
We are having a Schiller festival up here too (programme enclosed). Needless to say, I have nothing whatever to do with the thing. Mr Alfr. Meissner is sending a prologue, and Siebel will do the epilogue, straightforward recitation, of course, but done in proper form. In addition, this flâneur is producing a performance of 'Wallensteins Lager'†d; I've been to two of the rehearsals and, if the chaps keep their nerve, it might be quite passable. The committee members are, without exception, a bunch of fools; among the public Borchardt plays at being in opposition. He's no less negatively pompous than the others are positively so, except that his negation is based on the same point of view as the position of the others, i.e. he admits that he is essentially one of their number.
Page me40.516
Salut.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.516
Nil novi ab Ephraim Artful?†e

Page me40.516
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.517

297
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX†a
IN LONDON
Page me40.517
Manchester, 5 November 1859

Dear Mrs Marx,

I must really beg you to forgive me for having been so shockingly remiss that Moor finally had to get you to extract the article in question†b from me. However, I had no idea that it was needed for anything except staving off possible ructions on Mr Pulszky's part and hence was in no hurry at all about returning it.†c But this time it really is enclosed.

Page me40.517

Freiligrath, the fat philistine, is really behaving in a most disgraceful way and deserves to be well and truly chastised, for which an opportunity will, I trust, soon present itself. Most amusing is the Trojan War over the momentous question as to who should have the cantata and who the festive speech, and which is to come first, the speech or the cantata.†d The philistines up here are greatly vexed by Lupus' and my refusal to get mixed up in the Schiller do. Only yesterday evening I had another sparring match with three enthusiastic Schillerians. These folk are quite unable to comprehend how anyone could fail to jump at such a beautiful opportunity for self-advertisement. They want to found a 'Schiller Institute'†492 here, i.e. a German club in which to read, eat, drink, hold lectures, do gymnastics, act plays, make music and goodness knows what else. Borchardt was silly enough to attend the preliminary meeting and to speak against it (he urged me to go too but for that very reason I stayed away) and when it was put to the vote, Hoyoll the crippled painter and one other man voted with him, and Borchardt, of course, suffered a spectacular defeat. Subsequently he subscribed £4 10/- to the thing, which makes him a member for 3 years. You have no idea what German erudition has suddenly come to light here on this occasion. There's a Dr Götze, a Dr Marcus, a Dr Dolch, a Dr Samelson, all fellows of whom one had never heard before. These and a few aesthetic Jews have taken charge of the whole thing, and once again erudition plays mentor to the Jews — save in the case of Samelson, he's a doctor who, for the past four years, has 'quite recently settled in Manchester'. Nothing but self-advertisement and tittle-tattle, and they actually expect one to take part in it.

Page Break me40.518

Page me40.518

For that matter, I myself am indulging in tittle-tattle, as you see, and hence it would be best for me to break off altogether. Please give my warmest regards to the girls, and do not forget Moor.

Your
F. Engels

Page me40.518
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

298
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†20
IN BERLIN
Page me40.518
London, 6 November 1859

Dear Lassalle,

You'd have had a reply from me sooner if my spare time hadn't been entirely taken up with a mass of repulsive domestic business.

Page me40.518

1. Thank you for your good offices with Duncker.†493 You're mistaken, by the by, if you think that I expected glowing tributes from the German press, or gave a rap for them. I expected to be attacked or criticised but not to be utterly ignored, which, moreover, is bound to have a serious effect on sales. Considering how vehemently these people have, at various times, railed against my communism, it was to be expected that they would now unleash their wisdom against the theoretical argument in support of the same. For after all, Germany is not without its specialised journals on economics.

Page me40.518

In America the first instalment†a was discussed at length in the entire German press from New York to New Orleans. I only fear that it is too theoretical in tone for the working-class public there.

Page me40.518

2. ad vocem†b Vogt.

Page Break me40.519
Page me40.519

You'll have been surprised by the information in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung concerning Vogt's law-suit†470 and by the strange company in which I find myself in that journal.†a

Page me40.519

Here, in brief, is the story:

Besides the Hermann, there used to be a so-called working-men's paper here, Die Neue Zeit, whose last editor was Edgar Bauer. One of his colleagues on that paper was Biskamp, who was a schoolmaster out in the country. The paper was opposed on what is called principle to the Hermann. For Edgar Bauer thought it was time he played at being a communist. I, needless to say, had nothing to do with this. Bauer wrote and told Biskamp that, in order to rid himself of a rival, Kinkel had transferred his sheet to the printer of the Neue Zeit†b which last, depending as it did on that printer's credit, was completely in his power. On receipt of this letter, Biskamp rushed up to London to discover, not only that Kinkel had destroyed the Neue Zeit by swapping printers, but also that Edgar Bauer, the editor of the so-called 'working-men's paper', had joined the editorial staff of the Hermann and gone over to Kinkel.

Page me40.519

A brief note re Biskamp: He was at one time a co-publisher of the Hornisse. He edited the Bremer Tages-Chronik in company with Dulon and Ruge. In Switzerland he joined the Communist League.†494 His relationship with Ruge meant that we never saw each other while he was in London. I took no notice of him, but he occasionally took notice in a polemical way of me. This man is a strange mixture of noble instincts, innate (and also physical) weakness, asceticism and idleness, Kantian moral consciousness and tactless whimsicality. His nervous irritability makes him liable to surrender any position 'on principle', to precipitate himself suddenly into the most hopeless situation, to endure it passively and stoically for a while, and then suddenly perpetrate stupidities bordering on the iniquitous. The man as I paint him here is not, of course, the man I used to know. I am painting a portrait which experience has gradually pieced together for me.
Page me40.519

But to return to my story. Biskamp at once gave up his schoolmaster's post to take up 'the struggle of labour against capital' (i.e. Kinkel), started Das Volk without any means whatsoever except subsidies from a workers' society, etc. So long as the thing lasted he was, of course, on the verge of starvation. He had secured work as correspondent to a couple of papers in Germany, but lost this as soon as his new function became known. A few private lessons barely enabled him to eke out the life of a Bohémien.

Page Break me40.520
Page me40.520

Before continuing I should point out that I have had no connection whatever with any of the public workers' associations (including the so-called communist one†50) since 1851. The only workers with whom I foregather are 20-30 picked men to whom I give private lectures on political economy.†483 Liebknecht, however, is chairman of the workers' society which helped Biskamp to start Das Volk.
Page me40.520

A few days after the birth of this paper Biskamp and Liebknecht came to see me and invited me to collaborate. At the time I declined outright, partly for want of time and partly because I was about to leave London for a longish spell.†444 All I promised was to obtain a few financial contributions from friends in England, which in fact I did. On that same day I related to both of them what Blind had told me with great moral indignation the day before about Vogt, and also named my source. Biskamp used this for an article,†a as I later saw. During my absence he reprinted in Das Volk Blind's anonymous pamphlet,†b which was printed by the same press as Das Volk. At the same time Liebknecht sent a copy of the pamphlet to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†470 for which he supplies the English article. (As to this last circumstance, I should point out that the refugees here contribute to all papers indiscriminately. I believe myself to be the only exception to this, as I do not contribute to any German paper. Be it noted, by the by, that Palmerston, through the channel of the Prussian embassy, which in turn used Williams — the English bookseller — for its organ, has tried to get Liebknecht removed from the A.A.Z. on account of his ANTI-GOVERNMENTAL tendencies.)

Page me40.520

After my return to London, Das Volk received from myself and Engels various contributions wholly unrelated to the affaire Vogt. Apart from a few attacks on Schleinitz's diplomatic circulars,†c all I supplied was a humorous comment or two on Kinkel's aesthetic dissertations in the Hermann, viewed from a grammatical standpoint.†d Life here in London is too tough for one not to indulge in distractions of this kind every 8 years or so.

Page Break me40.521
Page me40.521

The paper came to a sudden end, mainly for lack of money. Biskamp, besides being wholly without means of subsistence, contracted a painful disease and had to go into the German hospital. When he was discharged he must literally have starved to death if I hadn't taken care of him. During this period he wrote to several German papers in the hope of becoming their correspondent, but to no effect. Then he got a letter from the editorial board of the A.A.Z., whereupon he wrote them that shockingly discreditable epistle — behind the backs of his friends, of course.†a Naturally he believed he was writing a private letter. The idiot is now overcome with contrition and for a couple of days has neither eaten nor slept. I don't know what will become of him. If I have told you all this at some length, it is not in order to justify the man's behaviour, but to explain it. If he were so venal a fellow as most of the 'democrats' here, he wouldn't have precipitated himself into a situation which he hadn't the strength to endure.
Page me40.521

As to my statement in the A.A.Z.,†b the circumstances are as follows:

As you know, Blind published his denunciation of Vogt. At the same time an anonymous article by him†c appeared in the London Free Press (Urquhart's PAPER), containing much the same information — I enclose the article with this letter — but omitting Vogt's name and sundry other particulars.†440 Now when Vogt brought his action against the A.A.Z., and the latter appealed to Liebknecht, he, being responsible to the A.A.Z., naturally appealed to me and I to Blind. The latter refused to answer for his statements. It was all due to a misunderstanding, he said. The whole thing had nothing to do with him. He even went so far as to give his word of honour that he had had nothing to do with the anonymous pamphlet. Repeated requests were of no avail. This conduct was all the more infamous in that the worthy fellow knew that Vogt was citing me — privately in London and publicly in Switzerland — as the source of the denunciation so as to represent the whole thing as deriving from the malicious ill-will borne by the communist towards the 'eminent democrat' and 'ex-imperial regent'.†410 I therefore began by turning to Collet, who made no bones about stating that Blind had written the article in The Free Press. Next, I obtained a statement from the type-setter†d who had set the type for the pamphlet.†487 Blind's duplicity called for castigation. I had absolutely no intention of pulling this 'republican's' chestnuts out of the fire for him. Indeed, it is only by forcing him and Vogt to attack one another that the truth will come out. Finally, like any paper which accepts a denunciation of this kind, the A.A.Z. deserves to be supplied with any information that can possibly help to throw light on the facts.

Page Break me40.522
Page me40.522
I shall now have the whole of Germany's vulgar democracy about my ears, and Biskamp's folly will make this all the easier for them. Needless to say, it would never occur to me to skirmish in insignificant journals with all these insignificant scoundrels. However, I believe it necessary to make an example of one of them, namely Mr Eduard Meyen of the Freischütz,†a pour encourager les autres.†b I'm sending one copy to the A.A.Z., one to the Reform†c in Hamburg and I'd like the copy I sent you to appear in a Berlin paper.
Page me40.522
I must save up my exposé of the Italian war,†485 an affair upon which I have in no way changed my views, for my next letter†d (shortly).
Page me40.522
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.522
P.S. Much as I detest alluding to this point, my financial affairs are in a dangerously critical state — so much so that I can hardly find time for my articles for the Tribune, let alone the political economy.†473 Admittedly I shall be receiving over £40 in 8 to 10 weeks' time. But for me the essential and crucial point is to anticipate its receipt. Can you help me with a bill transaction towards that end? In 8, or at most 10, weeks' time I shall be good for £50.

Page me40.522
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me40.523

299
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.523

London, 7 November 1859

Dear Engels,

I shall send you the Grimm.†a

Page me40.523

I have not written anything yet about Morocco,†490 or about the Caucasus,†495 or any military stuff on Asia. I have no diplomatic particulars about Morocco, so you will have to pick up your pen again. My circumstances are such as to preclude my doing sufficient work on the 2nd instalment, which I regard as of crucial importance.†473 It does, in fact, contain the pith of all the bourgeois stuff.

Page me40.523

Biskamp's letter†b is infinitely discreditable; in view of his situation one can explain but not excuse it. The whole of vulgar democracy is seeking to hush up the Blind affair in the German press while assailing me. E.g. Mr Meyen, present editor of the Freischütz.†c I have now sent a sharply-worded statement to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung and the Reform in Hamburg.†d I shall bring Vogt and Blind face to face even if it has to be done at gun point.

Page me40.523

In a couple of lines in the Tribune the wretched Pulszky dismisses my letter†e as emanating from the camp of the 'CRACKED' Urquhart.†f The fellows dare not open their traps. For they don't know what kind of evidence we have at our disposal. For Kossuth, or so Szemere wrote and told me, secretly decamped after the treaty of Villafranca without a word to Klapka and the other officers. For he was afraid of being handed over to the Austrians.†496 Hence the greatest animosities against him in the Hungarian camp. I shall give Pulszky a thorough lambasting.

Page Break me40.524

Your
K.M.

Page me40.524

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

300

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†20

IN BERLIN

Page me40.524

London, 14 November 1859

9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

I am answering your by return.

Page me40.524

It isn't a question of your finding the money, but of a bill transaction. Would you allow me to draw on you at 3 months? If so you would be provided with security (guaranteed not only by myself, but also by Engels) before the bill fell due. It's a question, therefore, of an accommodation bill or, to put it more crudely, kite-flying. It still remains very doubtful, of course, whether I could manage to negotiate a bill of this kind over here. However there might be some CHANCE of it. Engels would have procured what was necessary had not all his liquid assets been tied up as a result of an action for causing bodily harm to an Englishman.†a The affair is costing more than £100 and accommodation bills drawn in London on Manchester are only possible between businessmen.

Page me40.524

I think it is now too late to insert the anti-Meyen statement.†b Assuming the Reform and the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung accept it, it would arrive too late in Berlin.†c Assuming they don't accept it, it will in any case be too late for any consideration of the great Meyen's article,†d which will by then be outdated.

Page Break me40.525

Page me40.525

As regards Vogt, it behoves our party — as opposed to vulgar democracy — to force him to pick up the gauntlet thrown down by Blind. Both gentlemen seem to be equally anxious to keep their distance. It was very clever of Vogt to make me out to be the source of the denunciation, but also to select as his target the A.Z. in Augsburg rather than the Volk in London. As regards myself, he can attribute the thing to rancour, if only because of the erstwhile opposition to him on the part of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. (You are doubtless aware that, when Lupus came to the National Assembly in Frankfurt, he opposed Uhland's vote of thanks to John, the imperial regent. Vogt seized this opportunity to vent his spleen and made an abusive speech attacking the N. Rh. Z. en général and Lupus in particular.†497 Lupus thereupon called him out. But Vogt thought his skin too valuable to the Fatherland to risk it in this way. Lupus thereupon threatened to box his ears publicly in the street. Thereafter Vogt never made an appearance unless flanked by his sister on one side and a woman acquaintance of his sister's on the other. And Lupus was too courteous, etc.) But again, Mr Vogt knew that Germany's vulgar democrats regard me as their bête noire. Furthermore, had he sued Das Volk instead of the A. Z., Blind, etc., would have been legally compelled to give evidence on oath and the matter would have been bound to come to light. Finally, it was one thing to break a lance with a revolutionary paper direct, and quite another to do so with the reactionary A. Z. The way in which the 'noble' Vogt (Vogt the 'well-rounded', as his barrister described him,†498 is rather more TO THE POINT) attacked me in the Biel Handels-Courier†a rejoiced my heart. I am, it seems, in communication with 'the police', live off the workers, and such-like inanities.

Page me40.525

As to Kossuth, all the particulars about his transaction with Bonaparte were provided by Szemere (formerly Hungarian Prime Minister, presently in Paris).†479 I sent him my anti-Kossuth article†b in the Tribune and shall let you have it as soon as he returns me the cutting from Paris. The nicest part of it is that Kossuth's agent, Pulszky, is the Tribune's London correspondent.

Page me40.525

The Schiller festival here was a Kinkel festival.†486 Freiligrath himself, who took part in it despite my warning, now realises that Gottfried used him simply as a tool. He told me that Kinkel's melodramatic speech was a veritable farce which literally had to be seen to be believed. You'd laugh heartily were I to tell you what went on behind the scenes between Kinkel and Freiligrath before the public performance actually took place.†a In the days of the N. Rh. Z. Gottfried invariably figured in the press with a travelling-bag for attribute. Later on, it was a musket, then a lyre, then a distaff. Now our parson never does so without a black, red and gold flag.†499 The so-called 'working men' whom he has gathered round him belong to a guild; article 1 of the rules of their society runs: 'In accordance with the rules, all politics are to be excluded from the society's debates.' Before 1848 these same fellows enjoyed Bunsen's patronage.

Page Break me40.526

Page me40.526

Well, enough of gossip, for this note was simply intended to be de re pecuniaria.†b

Page me40.526

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.526

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

301
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN

Page me40.526

[London,] 15 November 1859

Dear Lassalle,

Could you possibly get the Volks-Zeitung to publish the following reply†c to Blind's declaration in No. 313 of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung? If so, please send me 2 COPIES of it. En passant, I would draw your attention to the hymn of self-adulation struck up by Gottfried Kinkel in the latest Hermann†d to the accompaniment of general rejoicing on the part of the Germans in London.
Page me40.526
In haste.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.526
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.527

302
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.527
[London,] 16 November 1859

Dear Engels,
I hope that a Morocco will arrive from you on Friday.†a Apart from everything else, this is the time of the presidential elections, and in any case I fear that restrictions will again be put on the quantity of articles to be delivered. This fate will befall me all the sooner if, given the present shortage of material, I don't write about THEMES like this that interest the fellows.
Page me40.527
You must also write something for me, PRIVATELY, OF COURSE, not for the Tribune, about the Schiller tomfoolery in Manchester. In my next I shall tell you about the Kinkel festival down here. Just now Freiligrath is deeply resentful of Gottfried. Meanwhile you should read the latest number of the Hermann†b and see with your own eyes how 'Parson Charming' drools over himself.
Page me40.527
The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung has not, it seems, accepted my declaration because it was apparently rendered superfluous by the one sent to them by Blind.†c I have now sent them an answer to this slyboots from Baden with a positive demand — for I refer at the same time to the letters they wrote me†d — that they print my answer.†e
Page me40.527
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.527
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.528

303
ENGELS TO EMIL ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me40.528
Manchester, 16 November 1859

Dear Emil,

Our procedure and method of adjustment are simply as follows: The rollers are removed and the yarn laid over them, after which they are replaced; the upper roller is then moved upwards by means of screws (one at either end of the machine) until there is sufficient tension on the yarn.
Page me40.528

1. The rollers are made of iron with rectangular pegs at the ends which fit into rectangular apertures (in the axle). This, however, applies only to the lower roller, which is rotated by the machine; the upper one rests in a simple socket and runs automatically with the other.
Page me40.528

2. As already said, the screws are at either end of the upper roller and are tightened by the machine, not by hand.
Page me40.528

3. The brushing cylinder has fixed mountings for its axle so as to ensure that it is in the right position immediately the yarn is in place and tightened. For all but the very fine counts we now have cylinders clothed alternately with brushes and wooden slats which rub against the yarn.
Page me40.528

4. Your final question — how the connection is effected between the roller one inserts and the part that rotates — is not clear to me; however I think it has already been answered under 1.
Page me40.528

It's impossible for me to make you a sketch of the machine, as I can't describe the wheels from memory. But you'll have no difficulty in making one of your own, since to the best of my knowledge all the essential parts correspond exactly to yours, and we use the same machine both for coarse and fine counts, altering the PULLEYS, if anything, in order to reduce the speed. For normal use the average diameter of the PULLEYS for the brushes is 20 inches and for the rollers 14 inches, the speed of the shaft being 163.90 revolutions per minute. For really fine counts we increase the diameter of the PULLEY for the rollers to 18 inches. The screws are driven by an 'OPEN AND CROSS STRAP'.

Page me40.528

Our machines are made partly by ourselves, partly by Wren & Hopkinson; you wouldn't be able to buy a complete machine or individual parts over here unless you approached G. Ermen.

Page Break me40.529
Page me40.529

Tell Father that I shall make inquiries on behalf of Linkenbach, though with little prospect of success until he comes over himself. Young fellows who come over with good recommendations (and he should bring as many as possible to different houses) generally fix themselves up before long, whereas no one does so by remaining over there. However there's always a risk in coming here on the off chance.
Page me40.529

My love to Lottchen,†a Father, Mother, Elise,†b Adolf,†c and the two families, also to all the cholera refugees should still lodging with you. My new horse is a splendid goer.

Your Friedrich

Page me40.529
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

304
MARX TO ENGELS†500
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.529
[London, 17 November 1859]

Dear Engels,

If you have nothing ready on Morocco†d by tomorrow, there will be time enough until Saturday (i.e. via Cork†e). I am writing today (not having written on Tuesday) about the Suez question.†501 The Morocco affair must follow. Otherwise they'll be compelled to copy from The Times.

Page me40.529
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.529
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.530

305
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.530
Manchester, 17 November 1859

Dear Moor,
As though it wasn't enough to be saddled with a Russian, I have a Genevan arriving today, and Ermen shows an increasing tendency to foist onto me the onerous side of representing the firm. Nevertheless I still had hopes this morning of finding time for an article, but it proved utterly impossible. Next Tuesday, however, you will get an article on Morocco,†a you may be sure of that. This will be followed as soon as possible by more on the RIFLE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT,†502 Prussian army reform†b and diverse other matters.
Page me40.530
The business of the ASSAULT has been settled.†c Thirty pounds damages and twenty-five costs. It's been paid — partly by borrowing. The action was brought in London and, quite apart from the scandal up here, the publication in the German papers of The Times report of the affair would have been a nice juicy titbit for Kinkel & Co.
Page me40.530
Schiller festival. Programme enclosed, likewise the original poetical creations consisting, as you will observe, of

Prologue by Meissner,
Catalogue by Samelson,
Epilogue by Siebel.

Page me40.530
Pro- and epi- only saved by the antithesis of the catalogue.
Page me40.530

The first part went OFF in a resounding failure. Dr Marcus (bankrupt woollen merchant with an Erlangen†d doctorate á 66 talers, 20 silver groschen) read the committee's report in a lachrymose voice, Siebel declaimed the prologue passably well, but indistinctly, Theodores spoke flowery nonsense very indistinctly indeed, all that one could hear being rrrrrr — the choir sang splendidly — Morell delivered himself of platitudes in English, but audibly and fluently — 'Die Kraniche des Ibykus'†e sent the entire audience to sleep. Fortunately this made everything so late that a full performance of the programme would have lasted until 1 o'clock in the morning. Samelson's stanzas were therefore consigned to the lumber room. The 'Armada'†a was excellently recited by one Link, then came the play.†b A very nice stage, but bad acoustics, excellent grouping, much — almost too much — activity constantly going on up stage. All in all, the lads acted quite well but were difficult to understand on account of the unduly voluminous beards they wore in front of their mouths and also because they didn't address the audience properly. The friar was good (Dolch, a former corps student, author of a Geschichte des Deutschen Studententhums, a fool and a donkey). Siebel's epilogue, delivered by Link in a most melodious voice and with much decorum, was effective. In short, part 2 saved the day; in the second part and in the piece dropped from the first the lads predominated (also indirectly attributable to a good deal of 'UNDERHAND INFLUENCE' on my part, for the introduction to Wallensteins Lager was composed from data supplied by me and was actually very good); the first was dominated by the wiseacres and self-assertive philistines and schoolmasters.

Page Break me40.531
Page me40.531
Now they propose to found a Schiller Institute†492 with the surplus, the surplus, however, being a deficit of £150!
Page me40.531
On Saturday a festive guzzle which I didn't attend. Numerous toasts and readings of all the REJECTED ADDRESSES.
Page me40.531
On Friday night the singers and actors went on carousing until four o'clock in the morning — a very merry affair.
Page me40.531
Your
F.E.

Page me40.531
What is all this about a brawl at the Crystal Palace†503?

Page me40.531
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.532

306
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.532
London, 19 November 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

Today I'm sending you all sorts of curious things: 1. a letter†a from philistine Freiligrath to me; 2. a letter from Orges (of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung) to Biskamp; 3. an issue (No. 43) of the Gartenlaube,†b published in Leipzig, and 4. a letter from Imandt to me together with a cutting from the Trier Volksblatt.†504 Finally, I would advise you to buy today's Hermann as it contains the story, devised by Mr Beta, of the Schiller festival here and casts a strange light on the conduct of our friend Freiligrath.†c
Page me40.532

Before going into these matters and in case I forget, I would mention that the Hungarians in New York, Chicago, New Orleans, etc., have held meetings at which they resolved to send Kossuth a letter suggesting he vindicate himself with reference to my article in the New-York Tribune.†d Otherwise they would renounce their ALLEGIANCE to him. I don't know whether I have told you about the latest news I have received from Szemere.†e D'abord,†f that after the peace of Villafranca, Kossuth decamped from Italy without a word to his officers, amongst whom Klapka. Kossuth was afraid Bonaparte would hand him over to Francis Joseph.†496 Originally, so Szemere now writes, this same worthy had not been included in the Bonaparte business. Klapka, Kiss and Teleki had, off their own bat, agreed with Plon-Plon to instigate a revolution in Hungary. Kossuth got wind of it and, from London, threatened to denounce them in the English press should they not include him in the compact. SUCH ARE THOSE WORTHIES.
Page me40.532

In some ways I envy you for being able to live in Manchester, cut off as you are from the war between mice and frogs.†505 Down here I have to wade through all this ordure and do so in circumstances which already consume too much of the time I should be devoting to my theoretical studies. Conversely, I'm glad that you only have to put up with all the ordure at second hand.

Page Break me40.533
Page me40.533

Last Thursday I received the enclosed letter from Freiligrath. What follows will help you understand the full extent of his depravity and pettiness. Throughout the time when that fellow (Blind) was playing his perfidious role vis-á-vis ourselves, he was on the most intimate terms with Freiligrath. He acted as his homme d'affaires — in the matter of the great Kinkel-Freiligrath controversy — on the organising committee for the Schiller festival. At that festival the Blind and Freiligrath families sat cheek by jowl throughout the performance. Well, on the following morning†a The Morning Advertiser carried a report in which Freiligrath's poem was described as 'ABOVE MEDIOCRITY'†b. The same critical sense (whereof, indeed, not much is needed to strip student Blind of his mask of anonymity) which told me that Blind, and Blind alone, had written the anti-Vogt paragraph in The Free Press,†c also told me that he was the author of this article. The only thing which surprised me was that the obsequious sycophant had had the courage to speak about Freiligrath IN THIS COOL MANNER. I sent the latter the cutting. Whereupon I received from him the enclosed letter which, if one reads between the lines, more or less voices the suspicion that I was responsible for introducing a forgery into student Blind's EXERCISE — namely, the quip about Freiligrath. On Saturday I went to see Freiligrath. I didn't yet know about the statement he had made in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung (to wit, that he was not one of Vogt's accusers, nor had he ever written a line for the 'Volk').†d He was careful, too, not to breathe a word to me about it. I told him de prime abord†e that I thought it by no means a crime on Blind's part to consider Freiligrath's poem as 'ABOVE MEDIOCRITY', for this was an aesthetic judgment; but that it did seem to me altogether too much when he allowed Blind to bamboozle him into thinking I had amended Blind's task for him — through some mysterious third party — and interpolated the quip about himself (Freiligrath). Greatly embarrassed, the philistine now admitted, d'abord,†f that he had shown Blind my letter, and proceeded to show me the two letters from Blind. In the first, student Blind describes a person frequently seen near me at the Urquhartite meeting of 9 May†420 and who had skulked round him at the Crystal Palace (10 November).†503 In the second letter (Freiligrath was condescending enough to write to Blind saying he couldn't believe I had interpolated the insulting bit) Blind declares that that wasn't really what he'd meant to say. I next told the philistine that the only two Germans or, for that matter, persons, who had accosted me more than once on the platform on 9 May had been Blind and Faucher and NOBODY ELSE. Well now, Blind knows Faucher, whom he asked to be introduced to on the Schiller committee and whom he thanked on Freiligrath's behalf for backing Freiligrath's 'cantata' against the 'speech'.†a Again, the slyboots from Baden failed to mention Faucher's name. (I immediately informed the latter of the fact.) For Faucher knows EDITOR Grant of The Morning Advertiser, and might help to get Blind kicked out of the LICENSED VICTUALLER PAPER were he to demand that Blind make a personal statement as to whether he (Faucher) had got him (Grant) to interpolate something in Blind's article, which is why student Blind is capable of remembering what Faucher's FEATURES were like on 9 May. He recalls that they were the same FEATURES that skulked round him at the Crystal Palace on 10 November. But he forgets that this individual he knows so well is that selfsame Faucher.

Page Break me40.534
Page me40.534
This whole business is so rotten — tortuous — and so typical of philistines Freiligrath and Blind that I had to go into this nonsense at some length. It's altogether typical of philistine Freiligrath that he should not deem himself accountable to me for his appearance in public with Kinkel and Co., for his statement in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, for his coquetry with the Hermann, for his intercourse with Blind at a time when he knew about that scoundrel's 'word of honour',†b etc. — but believes that everything should revolve round somebody's having had the audacity to find his poem (I enclose it) 'ABOVE MEDIOCRITY' instead of crying it up AS THE VERY INCARNATION OF THE BEAUTIFUL AND SUBLIME.

Page me40.534

I told him I didn't give a fig for that affair, compared with which there were far more important things at stake between myself and Blind, etc.
Page me40.534

As for the 'machinations' against him on the part of Kinkel, etc., he had only himself to blame. Why demean himself with the fellows?
Page me40.534

Finally I wanted to know what was contained in No. 43 of the Gartenlaube.†c It then transpired that Mr Freiligrath was on very close terms with Mr Beta, had entertained him in his own house and had 'suffered' Beta to write a fulsome biography of himself and an apotheosis of his family, and was irritated only at Beta's having concluded (at Kinkel's instigation, of course) with the suggestion that Freiligrath's poetry, like his character, was being ruined — by me. It was I who was to blame for the fact that Mr Freiligrath, never particularly prolific in the matter of original work, had for years pursued the business of banking rather than the business of poetry. Mr Freiligrath showed no feeling of shame in my presence for having demeaned himself by consorting with that scoundrel Beta, one-time sub-editor of Louis Drucker's How do you do? Nor for the gross flattery ladled out by that abject creature. What shocked him was to be publicly portrayed as 'influenced' by me. He wasn't sure whether he oughtn't to make some statement on the subject, being deterred from doing so only by his fear of a counter-statement on my part. The fellow thinks it 'in the nature of things' that, if he lets out a fart, it should cause a great flurry; that on the one hand he should serve Mammon and, on the other, be 'priest to the Muse'; that his want of character in practice should be hailed as 'political virtue' in theory. The man is sensitive to the tiniest pin-prick. His petty histrionic bickerings behind the scenes with Gottfried†a he treats as weighty intrigues. On the other hand he considers it quite in order that my family should forego, not just recognition but even notice, of a closely reasoned work such as the instalment on money,†b and that, as a result of my uncompromising political attitude, they should have to endure much misére and, in fact, lead a joyless existence. The man thinks that my wife should, moreover, gratefully bear with the slights publicly inflicted on myself in the knowledge that Mrs Freiligrath is eulogised and extolled and that even his Käthchen,†c a SILLY GOOSE who doesn't understand a word of German, is commended to your German philistines. The man has not a vestige of fellow-feeling. Otherwise he would see how my wife is suffering, and how much he and his spouse contribute thereto. How false and ambiguous his behaviour is, both from the personal and the party point of view.

Page Break me40.535
Page me40.535

Nevertheless, I cannot and dare not risk any kind of éclat†d with the fellow. He sees to my bills on the Tribune, something I'm bound to regard as a favour (although the standing thus gained with Bischoffsheim is to his advantage, not mine). Otherwise I should find myself in the same old quandary about how to get my money from the Tribune. On the other hand, nothing would please Kinkel and Co. — the whole of vulgar democracy (including Mrs Freiligrath) — more than that this row should take place. If only for that reason it shouldn't be allowed to happen just now. However, it will be hard for me to take all these slights lying down.

Page Break me40.536
Page me40.536
About the happenings at the Crystal Palace and subsequently on the Schiller committee in my next.
Page me40.536
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.536
Another thing you should note in the latest rotten Hermann is the way Mr Blind commends himself as a prophet.†a
Page me40.536
The 'UPSHOT' of all the Hermann's revelations from Berlin re Stieber is that Duncker, the old policeman, is again trying to take the place of Stieber, his rival and enemy (since 1848).†b Moreover, in the last issue but one of the Hermann, the reinstatement of Police Superintendent Duncker was declared by the Berlin correspondent to be the true aim of modern world history.†c

Page me40.536
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

307
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†506
IN BERLIN
Page me40.536
[London,] 22 November 1859

Dear Lassalle,

For one thing today is mailing day for America†d; for another I have taken medicine. So writing is difficult either way. Hence I shall be quite brief.

Page Break me40.537
Page me40.537

1. THANKS for your last letter but one. I shall, however, probably succeed in arranging a bill on myself here in London, at an exorbitant rate of interest.

Page me40.537

2. You had best abandon your anti-Vogt statement now that the Reform has already printed a statement of mine.†a My chief concern now is to compel Mr Vogt to pursue the matter in London.†b

Page me40.537

3. I have told Freiligrath that you have praised his poem on Schiller and criticised his conduct towards you.†507 He will now write to you. Read No. 43 of the Gartenlaube wherein Kinkel's sycophant, Mr Beta (sometime editor of the How do you do? published here by Louis Drucker, and presently faiseur-en-chef†c of the Hermann, whose EDITORS are all recruited from the literary Lumpenproletariat), makes the discovery that Freiligrath 'seldom sang any more' after he had been 'inspired' by me.†d During recent years Freiligrath has been whoring too much after the idols of Babylon, so great is his thirst for popularity. His wife may not be an altogether beneficent influence IN THIS RESPECT. I will dilate no further on this theme, except to say that I show more consideration for old personal and party friends than seems right to many very clever people in our party.

Page me40.537

4. Ad vocem†e Bonaparte. So far as I can see, the Italian war†370 has temporarily strengthened Bonaparte's position in France; betrayed the Italian revolution into the hands of the Piedmontese doctrinaires and their henchmen; made Prussia exceptionally popular with the liberal vulgus†f by virtue of her Haugwitzian policy; increased Russia's influence in Germany; and, finally, propagated demoralisation of an unprecedented kind — a most repulsive combination of Bonapartism and drivel about nationalities. I for my part fail to see any reason why members of our party had to give dialectical support to these nauseous, counter-revolutionary illusions of philistine-liberal provenance. It is my belief that, from the moment when Disraeli publicly admitted the existence of an alliance between Bonaparte and Russia,†415 and more especially from the moment when Russia sent out her shameless circular note to the German courts,†g the battle-cry should have been raised against the Russo-French alliance. Opposition to Russia would instantly have disposed of the delusion that there was anything anti-liberal about a turning against France.

Page Break me40.538

Page me40.538

Schleinitz's despatches,†a which I have studied in detail, together with the statements made by the ministers over here, some direct to Parliament, some in the press, confirm my view that Prussia had no intention of intervening so long as the German frontier was not violated. Bonaparte, as the protégé of Russia and England, had at the time been given permission to conduct a 'localised' war in order to keep him in France. Prussia would not have dared lift a finger and, had she done so, there would have been war between Germany and Russia, than which nothing could be more desirable. But IN FACT there was no question of it, because Prussia would never have had the courage to take such a step. Rather it was a question, partly of exposing the Prussian government in all its miserable weakness, partly and above all of unmasking Bonapartist DELUSIONS. Nor would the game have been too difficult, since all the representatives of the revolutionary party from Mazzini to Louis Blanc, Ledru-Rollin and even Proudhon would have joined in. This would have meant that the polemic against Bonaparte's imposture could not have acquired the appearance of hostility to Italy or France.

Page me40.538

I am not, of course, going into the matter thoroughly here, but merely jotting down a few points. However, I shall, with your permission, make one further observation. There is a possibility that things will come to a head again soon. In that case one of two things must prevail in our party: either no one speaks for the party without prior consultation with the others, or everyone has the right to put forward his views without any regard for the others. Now this last is certainly not to be recommended, since a public polemic would in no way benefit so small a party (which, I hope, makes up in vigour for what it lacks in numbers). I can only say that, during my travels through England and Scotland (this summer)†444 — for our old party friends are scattered about the country — I did not find anybody here who would not have wished you had modified your pamphlet†b in many respects. I see a quite simple explanation for this, namely that foreign policy, in particular, presents a very different aspect according to whether you view it from English soil or from the Continent.

Page Break me40.539
Page me40.539

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.539
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

308
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON
Page me40.539

[London,] 23 November 1859

Dear Freiligrath,

I have just received a copy of your letter to Liebknecht†a in which the following passage occurs:

'I possess only one letter from Vogt,†508 dated 1 April 1859. This letter, as Marx conceded only last Saturday, does not contain a single syllable that might be used to substantiate a charge against Vogt.'

Page me40.539

Since accuracy is desirable in matters of this kind, I must register a formal protest in regard to this passage.

Page me40.539

Firstly, I conceded nothing. To concede (concédere) presupposes a debate in which one of the assertions originally put forward is withdrawn and the opposing view accepted. Nothing of the kind happened between us. The initiative was mine. I told you something; I conceded nothing. The facts were as follows:

Page me40.539

I recalled that you yourself had asked Mr Blind whether he was the author of the anonymous pamphlet,†b since both the tone and the content of his verbal account tallied entirely with the pamphlet.†461 I stressed that, before encountering Mr Blind at Urquhart's meeting of 9 May,†420 I knew nothing of Vogt's participation in the Italian imbroglio, save only for his letter to you. I reminded you that, on the evening you showed me that letter, it never remotely occurred to me to infer therefrom that Vogt had been bribed, or anything of the kind. All I found in the letter was the same old, all too familiar, superficially liberal pot-house politics of his. If I laid any emphasis on all this, it was — á tout seigneur tout honneur†a — so as not to detract in any way from Mr Blind's merit in uncovering Vogt's high treason.

Page Break me40.540

Page me40.540

Secondly, however, it never occurred to me to say that 'Vogt's letter did not contain a single syllable that might be used to substantiate a charge against Vogt'. All I said was that, having read the letter, it would not occur to me to draw such a conclusion. But the immediate subjective impression made upon me by the letter is very far removed from an objective judgment on the content of the letter, or even on conjectures which might be made about it. I never had either the occasion or the opportunity to subject the letter to the critical examination necessary for such an objective judgment. That Mr Blind put a different construction on, for instance, the letters Vogt addressed to you, him, etc., is and was known to you. E.g. in his article in The Free Press (27 May)†b these letters are expressly mentioned as corpora delicti,†c even though no names are given. This is again the case in his statement in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.†d

Page me40.540

From Mr Vogt I now come to Mr Beta, whose No. 43 I bought after getting your letter.†e Having perused the opus, I decided to do exactly what I have been doing for the past 10 years, namely ignore such stuff. But I have today heard from two very close friends (not in London) urging me to make a statement in the interests of the party. I shall first deliberate the pros and cons for twice 24 hours. If, after mature deliberation, I should decide to speak, my statement would contain essentially the following:
Page me40.540

1. If an attempt were made wrongly to attribute to me any influence over you, this could at most apply to the brief life-span of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, at which time you were writing what was truly splendid and indisputably your most popular poetry.
Page me40.540

2. A biographical sketch in a few sentences of Mr Betziege,†f alias Hans Beta, starting from the time when he wrote for a blackmailing theatrical rag in Berlin, going on through his editorship of the How do you do? under Louis Drucker, vintner and clown (including my visit to the How do you do's lair†509) and his subsequent activities in Leipzig, when he simultaneously libelled me in the Gartenlaube, i.e. reproduced the tripe from the How do you do? and appropriated my anti-Palmerston pamphlets,†a and ending up with his present occupation of factotum to Gottfried Kinkel. It might, perhaps, do some good if the German public were to be shown what a scoundrelly bunch of lumpenproletarians it is that is croaking loudest in the foul swamp of current German literature.

Page Break me40.541
Page me40.541

3. Two letters from Heine to myself which will enable the public to decide between the authority of Heine and the authority of Beta.
Page me40.541

4. Finally, a couple of letters written to me by Johann Kinkel†b and Johanna Kinkel at the time of the N. Rh. Z. I would use these to unseat the melodramatic parson from the high horse upon which this Father Brey†c (it is in that sense that your version of Goethe should be amended) is charging me in what is for him the typical arena of a Gartenlaube.
Page me40.541

I am telling you all this so that, as is fitting between friends, you will have been informed in advance should I decide to make a statement.†510
Page me40.541

As for Liebknecht, Kolb is clearly seeking to justify himself in Cotta's eyes by using your letter to sacrifice Liebknecht as a scapegoat, for his own, not Liebknecht's quid pro quo. Peccant reges, plectuntur Achivi†d still holds good.
Page me40.541

To obviate all misunderstanding I have, at the same time as this letter to you, sent Liebknecht a copy of the passages in it relating to the Vogt affair.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.541
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, 1911-1912

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.542

309
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.542
London, 26 November 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

On Monday I sent you a long letter about the wrangles down here. On Tuesday I sent you the Gartenlaube†a and Beta's article.†512 Well, every day I've been waiting to hear from you since, in AFFAIRS of this kind, it is only your letters that revive my wife's DROOPING SPIRITS. One can simply laugh off such rubbish if the rest of one's life is tolerable.
Page me40.542

But in my CIRCUMSTANCES THEY WEIGH HEAVILY UPON THE FAMILY.
Page me40.542

Well, today I'm sending you:
Page me40.542

1. A letter from Lassalle to myself.†513 The 'statement' I sent the Volks-Zeitung is the same as appeared in No. 325 of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.†b (Another, two columns long, about my attitude to vulgar democracy, etc., appeared in No. 139 of the Hamburg Reform.†c I took the opportunity of naming you as the author of Po and Rhine, a fact obstinately kept dark by that same vulgar democracy.) From Lassalle's letter you will see that he, who IN POINT OF FACT was piping the same tune as Vogt, would much rather the Berlin public did not know about my opposition to Vogt and his propaganda.
Page me40.542

From the same letter you will see that he at last intends to set to work on his 'Political Economy',†278 but is clever enough to wait another 3 months until he is in possession of my second instalment.†473 The motives for the consistent failure, even on the part of one who is 'friendly', to break the conspiration de silence are now plain.
Page me40.542

I have taken the opportunity of giving Lassalle a brief outline of my views on the Italian question,†d at the same time telling him that, should anyone wish at such a critical moment to speak in the name of the party, the following alternatives must hold good. Either he consults the others beforehand, or the others (euphemistic for you and me) have the right to put their own view before the public, without regard for that anyone.

Page Break me40.543
Page me40.543
2. A letter from Liebknecht to Freiligrath. You will have seen from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung that Freiligrath declared, firstly, that he had been made out to be Vogt's accuser 'without his knowledge and consent'; secondly, that 'he had never written a line for the Volk' (doesn't write at all).†a Mr Kolb, who had wrongly construed a private letter from Liebknecht to himself and had been told off by Cotta after this statement of Freiligrath's, naturally sacrificed Liebknecht as a scapegoat.†511 But Freiligrath, who is a SUBALTERN of Fazy's, was outraged and wrote an exceedingly rude letter to Liebknecht.†b I enclose Liebknecht's reply to it.†c
Page me40.543
Now Freiligrath's letter to Liebknecht contained the following passage:

'I possess only one letter from Vogt, dated 1 April 1859.†508 This letter, as Marx only last Saturday conceded' (I UNDERLINE), 'does not contain a single syllable that might be used to substantiate a charge against Vogt. Why on earth, then, should I be trying to prove him guilty of attempted bribery?'

Page me40.543
Now although on the one hand Freiligrath is indispensable to me for drawing bills on New York, although on the other I wish for political reasons to avoid a breach with him, and, lastly, am fond of him personally WITH ALL HIS FAULTS, I could not do otherwise — it was absolutely essential — than send him a formal protest about the above lines. For who is to guarantee that he will not write the same thing to Vogt and that the latter will not have it published?
Page me40.543
The matter he misrepresents was as follows:
During my meeting with him, at which the topic was Blind, not Vogt,†d I told him (there was no question of a debate, and still less of his calling me to account, as might be inferred from the words 'Marx conceded') that he himself had considered Blind to be the author of the pamphlet,†e the latter having told him what he had told me; also that, before my meeting with Blind on 9th May,†420 I had known nothing at all about Vogt's activities, save his letter to Freiligrath from which — as he, Freiligrath, would recall — I did not infer bribery, but rather found therein the same old, all too familiar, superficially liberal pot-house politics of his. This is, after all, not at all the same thing as 'conceding that the letter did not contain a single line that might be used to substantiate a charge'. I pointed this out to him, at the same time expressing my astonishment at his failure to call Blind to account for having, in The Free Press,†a treated similar letters (including Freiligrath's) as corpora delicti.†b So far I have had no answer from him, although he usually replies at once. It is possible — and this would be disastrous — that he has taken this opportunity to sever old party ties which, or so it would seem, have long become irksome to him. HOWEVER THAT MAY BE, I was bound to protest against his account of the affair.

Page Break me40.544

Page me40.544
Enough of this rubbish.
Page me40.544
Yesterday a Tory journalist told me it was his intention to provide evidence next week in a TORY WEEKLY (the WEEKLY MAIL, I THINK) to the effect that Garibaldi was receiving money from Bonaparte while still a merchant in South America. Nous verrons.†c
Page me40.544
Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.544
Apropos. In my article in the Tribune†d yesterday I said that I would shortly be writing about the RIFLE MOVEMENT over here. So I should be glad if you would write about it.†502

Page me40.544
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

310
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.544
Manchester, 28 November 1859
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,
If I didn't write last week it was because I had given Lupus all the papers; nor did I recover them for several days having, in the interval, repeatedly failed to get hold of him. Lupus is of the same opinion as myself, namely that Freiligrath's behaviour hardly admits of further party relations with him, but that on purely party grounds, and aside from your personal position, you are absolutely justified in avoiding any breach for the present s'il y a moyen†a — it would be a triumph for Kinkel and Co. which they would trumpet abroad and exploit for all they were worth. But it's something we shan't forgive the weak-minded ass. If his relationship with Fazy really compelled him to make a statement at all, Freiligrath ought to have consulted you, which would at any rate have resulted in something other than the inane affair which he caused to be published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.†b He would seem to be dead keen on an amnesty, to judge by his strenuous denials of all participation in the Volk. But his getting on to personal terms with Mr Bettziech, receiving him in his own house, is something which Lupus, who went with Freiligrath to see Bettziech at the time of the How do you do? affair,†509 will never forgive him. And it really is a dirty trick. As things are now, however, it seems questionable whether we can go on much longer without an open breach with Freiligrath; he is increasingly subject to the literary man's itch, nor will madame†c fail to point out morning, noon and night that Mr Beta, Kinkel and company do at least praise him publicly, whereas all he gets from us even privately is a MODICUM of recognition, and we can never be relied on to make him 'known by reason of his fame'.†d However, Freiligrath is all too well aware that, while Kinkel and Co. may be of use to him in peacetime, he would be nothing without us at the moment of battle, and that he could never ally himself with our enemies without running all manner of unpleasant risks. He will, I think, take care not to go too far and will finally pin his hopes on our forbearance.

Page Break me40.545

Page me40.545

Your 'Declaration' in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†e will put Blind into a very nasty position. How, without discrediting himself, he will lie his way out of the pass his lies have brought him to, I fail to see.

Page me40.545

These shabby goings-on must indeed be a sore trial to your wife. However, this rubbish, too, will pass and, I hope, soon. Within a few weeks it will no doubt be possible to drop Mr Freiligrath and leave him to stew in his own juice. But now I must say goodbye for today; I am about to go home and shall send an article on the RIFLE MOVEMENT†502 by the night mail. There will be several of them, at any rate.

Page Break me40.546

Page me40.546

Warm regards to your wife and the YOUNG LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.546

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

311
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH†514
IN LONDON
Page me40.546
[London, about 30 November 1859]

Dear Freiligrath,

I am neither Liebknecht's letter-writer, nor his ATTORNEY. I shall, however, send him a copy of that part of your letter which relates to him.

Page me40.546

I have decided against the statement I had briefly envisaged, bearing in mind that 'odi profanum vulgus et arceo'.†a

Page me40.546

While the statement was certainly against Beta, it was for that very reason bound to be also about you, as you will have seen from the SUMMARY. If only for that reason, I gave you notice of it, quite apart from the intimacy in which your family and his appear in his opusculum.†b

Page me40.546

You find it unpleasant to have your name mixed up in the Vogt affair. I don't give a damn for Vogt and his infamous lies in the Biel Handels-Courier,†c but I will not have my name used as a mask by democratic tricksters. As you know, if someone is forced to call upon witnesses, no other person can 'object' to being cited as a witness. In accordance with ancient English legal USE, RESTIVE WITNESSES may, horribile dictu,†d actually be crushed to death.

Page Break me40.547

Page me40.547

Finally, as regards party considerations, I am used to being treated on behalf of the whole party as target for mud-slinging by the press, and to seeing my private interests constantly damaged by party considerations; on the other hand, I am equally used to being unable to reckon on any kind of private consideration towards myself.

Page me40.547

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.547

First published in Die Neue Zeit, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, 1911-1912

Printed according to the manuscript of Marx's letter to Engels of 10 December 1859

Published in English for the first time

312
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.547
London, 10 December 1859

Dear Engels,

Article received.†a I trust your health has improved.

Page me40.547

As to the Freiligrath business, more in the course of this letter. I presume you saw the Hermann of a week ago today containing 'Vorletzte Sitzung des Schiller-Comités',†b a self-portrait of the scoundrelly bunch of lumpenproletarians which has gathered round Gottfried Kinkel. The article was written by the worthy Beta.

Page me40.547

What do you make of Mr Lassalle's notifying me ALL AT ONCE of his 'Political Economy'.†278 Does this not explain why my work†c was, firstly, so much delayed and, secondly, so badly advertised? Lassalle lives in Duncker's house, or so I am told by Fischel of Berlin (was in England for a few days; editor of the Berlin Portfolio†482 — Urquhartite — of which Nos. 1 and 2 contain excerpts from my anti-Palmerston PAMPHLETS on Poland and Unkiar-Skelessi†d). In Berlin, it would seem, he (Lassalle) is noted for his vanity. The stick with which he was given a drubbing†a was his own — a memento bought in Paris, Robespierre's stick bearing the device, liberté, égalité, fratérnité!

Page Break me40.548

Page me40.548

I wrote and asked Lassalle whether he might not be able to get hold of some money for me (against a bill on myself which I would give him).†b He replied saying that he himself was living on credit until July, and had appropriated Duncker's FLOATING SURPLUS. Then he suggested I draw a bill on him (Lassalle), discount it here, and send him the money before it fell due. But over here the name of Lassalle is not, of course, worth 1/100 of a FARTHING. I have latterly been cited at the COUNTY COURT by sundry fellows — quite small ones, such as the MILKMAN, etc., and can, in fact, see no way out of the crisis which has grown steadily worse for the past half year. Extra expenses, e.g. ABOUT £5 for the rotten Volk lawsuit, and Mr Biskamp, whom I have fed for three months (and am not yet quit of), have, indeed, contributed their mite to the predicament. But all in all that made little odds. What is really devilish is not having a Bamberger here in London any more, for there are at present considerable possibilities in regard to bill transactions. Had fat philistine Freiligrath so wished, he might even have procured me a LOAN, for after all the philistine had the security to hand. But the fellow imagined (and no doubt actually boasted) that he was doing a great deal if, a week before I drew a bill on the Tribune, he loaned me £2 for a week. I have, by the by, made various other attempts to find a usurer. BUT TILL NOW WITHOUT ANY RESULT.

Page me40.548

I know that you yourself are in a fix as a result of being taken to court recently,†c and hence am telling you about the STATE OF THINGS only because I feel a need to discuss it with SOMEBODY. I hope that our domestic misfortunes won't deter you from coming up here for a few days. It's absolutely essential for my girls to have a 'human being' in the house again for once. The poor children have been too early tormented by domestic misery.

Page me40.548

Now ad vocem†d Freiligrath.

Page me40.548

Having waited a week, the philistine wrote the following letter:

'Dear Marx,

'I have received your letter of the 23 inst.' (November)†e 'and Liebknecht's of the same date and, in order to simplify matters, am replying to both in this letter to you.

Page Break me40.549

Page me40.549

'As far as Liebknecht's letter is concerned, neither its presumptuous and impertinent tone, nor its content — an unsuccessful attempt to turn the tables — could surprise me! Very nice, I must say! The London correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung thinks fit to put my name at Mr Kolb's disposal ad libitum and without previously notifying me†a; but I, if I protest against that abuse, must first give due notice!! The argument used by Liebknecht in support of this pretty doctrine is so jejune that it calls for no serious refutation on my part. I would simply remark that, in no circumstances and for no personal or party considerations whatsoever, shall I put up with arbitrary actions of this nature.

Page me40.549

'That's all about and for Liebknecht!

Page me40.549

'And now for your letter.

Page me40.549

'I gladly allow your objection to the word “conceded” used in my letter to Liebknecht (of 21 November). I set no store by that word. Nor did it conceal any implication of any kind, and I might just as well have used “remarked” or “said”. So without further contention I concede your “conceded”. If we were both of the same opinion from the start, so much the better!'

Page me40.549

(The slyboots doesn't tumble to the fact that he is thereby conceding my opinion of Vogt and Blind.)

'As regards your anti-Beta statement you must, of course, do exactly as you think fit. All the same, I believe that your first impulse to ignore the thing was the better one and more worthy of you! Now that you have had more than twice 24 hours for deliberation, you will have decided one way or the other. Whether this way or that is quite immaterial to me!

Page me40.549
'That you should have wished to inform me beforehand, “as is fitting between friends”, of your anti-Beta statement is most deserving of thanks. For that matter your statement, so far as I can see, was to be directed against Beta, not against myself, and hence scarcely called for prior notification of your intention
Page me40.549
'At all events let me not omit to mention en revanche†b that I myself shall probably be publishing another statement in which I shall repeat, once and for all, that I object to the use of my name in connection with the Vogt affair.

Your

F. Freiligrath.'

Page me40.549

UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES I could, of course, only reply IN A VERY MODERATE TONE to this letter, 'malicious' in intent and adorned with so many!! I therefore wrote by return:
Page me40.549

'Dear Freiligrath,†c

'I am neither Liebknecht's letter-writer, nor his ATTORNEY. I shall, however, send him a copy of that part of your letter which relates to him.
Page me40.549

'I have decided against the statement I had briefly envisaged, bearing in mind that “odi profanum vulgus et arceo”.†d
Page me40.549

'While the statement was certainly against Beta, it was for that very reason bound to be also about you, as you will have seen from the SUMMARY. If only for that reason, I gave you notice of it, quite

Page Break me40.550
apart from the intimacy in which your family and his appear in his opusculum.†a
Page me40.550

'You find it unpleasant to have your name mixed up in the Vogt affair. I don't give a damn for Vogt and his infamous lies in the Biel Handels-Courier,†b but I will not have my name used as a mask by democratic tricksters. As you know, if someone is forced to call upon witnesses, no other person can “object” to being cited as a witness. In accordance with ancient English legal USE, RESTIVE WITNESSES may, horribile dictu,†c actually be crushed to death.
Page me40.550

'Finally, as regards party considerations, I am used to being treated on behalf of the whole party as target for mud-slinging by the press, and to seeing my private interests constantly damaged by party considerations; on the other hand, I am equally used to being unable to reckon on any kind of private consideration towards myself.
Page me40.550

'Salut.

Your
K.M.'

Page me40.550
To this Freiligrath has not replied, and I don't know EXACTLY what footing we are on now.
Page me40.550
Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.550
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

313
ENGELS TO MARX†515
IN LONDON
Page me40.550
[Manchester, 11 or 12 December 1859]

Dear Moor,
Herewith POST OFFICE ORDER for £5 payable at Camden Town. Beta is the dirtiest dog I have ever come across. The infamous article†d put me into a real rage. Unfortunately the chap's such a cripple already that no amount of beating could make him more misshapen than he is. However, sometime we shall have to wreak personal vengeance on the rascal. At any rate, some satisfaction can be derived from the fact that Kinkel's beautiful soul is forced to seek its mate in a filthy pig of this kind. Just think what it takes to produce one single Bettziech! Whole generations of crippled moles having, by the Darwinian process of NATURAL SELECTION, evolved to the highest degree the faculty to live on dung, with shit for their chosen element. Filthy, blatant lies and impotent malice — such are the tools with which that mendacious parson Kinkel's bad conscience seeks to keep on its legs. LET US GET THESE FELLOWS ONCE FACE TO FACE AGAIN, and you'll see what becomes of the gang of scoundrels.

Page Break me40.551
Page me40.551

Darwin, by the way, whom I'm reading just now, is absolutely splendid.†a There was one aspect of teleology that had yet to be demolished, and that has now been done. Never before has so grandiose an attempt been made to demonstrate historical evolution in Nature, and certainly never to such good effect. One does, of course, have to put up with the crude English method.
Page me40.551
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me40.551
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

314
MARX TO ENGELS†516
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.551
[London,] 13 December 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,
MY BEST THANKS FOR THE £5. You can imagine how opportune it was, for in a day or two my wife has to pay an instalment to some fellow at the COUNTY COURT. Yesterday I attempted one last FAMILY coup which may, perhaps, succeed. In which case there would be a chance of our being able to breathe again.

Page Break me40.552
Page me40.552
In Russia the movement is progressing better than anywhere else in Europe. On the one hand the constitutionalism of the aristocracy versus the Tsar, on the other of the peasants versus the aristocracy. Moreover, having at long last realised that the Poles have not the least inclination to be dissolved in Slav-Russian nationality, Alexander blustered frightfully. Thus the extraordinary successes of Russian diplomacy during the past 15 years, notably since 1849, are more than counter-balanced. Come the next revolution and Russia will oblige by joining in.
Page me40.552

You have, I imagine, read Bonaparte's uneasy document addressed to the préfets in which he demands that exact returns be made of, inter alia, all respectable Orleanists,†124 Legitimists,†303 republicans and socialists, but more especially of 'reliable' Bonapartists?
Page me40.552
From the enclosed note you will see that that louse, Juch — PROPRIETOR of the Hermann — feels entitled to approach me about the Stieber affair.†517 The rotten swine had deleted from Eichhoff's denunciation of Stieber in the Hermann†a everything relating to our trial,†71 the 'small, insignificant party' being alluded to only en passant. I shall give the low scoundrel a proper dressing-down while, of course, doing everything in my power to damage that rascal Stieber. Eichhoff, by the by, was simply a tool where all these Stieber revelations were concerned. The business originated with ex-policeman Duncker in Berlin, whose removal in 1848 was largely brought about by Stieber's yapping from the democratic camp. From then on Duncker got his private police to watch Stieber's every step until he finally thought the moment had come for him to be kicked out. Furthermore, that ass Eichhoff was stupid enough to show his ass's ears in his last article from Berlin in the Hermann, in which HE WOUND UP HIS DENUNCIATIONS AGAINST STIEBER — WITH WHAT? WITH THE REQUEST OF THE RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM OF VIRTUOUS Police Superintendent Duncker.†b
Page me40.552
Nothing but fools and rapscallions, all these chaps, against whom Freiligrath bears no grudge, even if they do 'take liberties with his name'.

Page Break me40.553
Page me40.553
UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES I HOPE TO SEE YOU HERE FOR SOME DAYS.
Page me40.553
Regards to Lupus.
Page me40.553
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.553
Little Jenny has made a copy of a Raphael Madonna especially for you, and of 2 wounded French soldiers for Lupus.

Page me40.553
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

315
ENGELS TO MARX†518
IN LONDON
Page me40.553
Manchester, [19 December 1859]
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

I slaved away all day so as to have the afternoon free for the article and, when I came to light the gas, it burnt so low that the whole office had to stop work. At home it's been worse if anything for almost a week now; the prolonged spell of frost and fog has so increased the consumption of gas during the day that by the evening there's no pressure at all and hence no light. This makes it impossible for me to do the article today, and anyhow it may well gain by my having to wait until the day after tomorrow or Thursday, since the move from Ceuta against Tetuan should begin any day now.†519 Admittedly, this will be pretty awful for you, since it means you'll have to slave away tomorrow when you had been counting on me.
Page me40.553

Siebel has been to Hamburg, where he was told by the literary Bohemians that 'Freiligrath has broken with Marx'. So you can see how Mr Kinkel is still carrying on the business of article-writing, self-advertising tittle-tattle even now that Mockel†a is dead. Mr Strodtmann, presently on the Hamburg Freischütz, has apparently reverted to being a faithful disciple of Johann Gottfried.†b

Page Break me40.554
Page me40.554

My eyes are aching so I'll stop. Warm regards to your wife and children. I can't come at Christmas. G. Ermen has again been making changes at the office and this makes it impossible for me to go away, especially at the year's end, without incurring very great RESPONSIBILITY. I shall come for certain at Easter or Whitsun.
Page me40.554

Your
F.E.

Page me40.554
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

316
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.554
[London,] 20 December 1859

Dear Engels,

You do not appear to have read both Freiligrath's and Blind's statements in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung (supplement, of presumably 8, 9, 10 or 11 December).†a This shows that the rumour that 'Freiligrath has broken with Marx' could have got about without Kinkel's help.

Page me40.554

I have had a meeting with Juch about the Stieber proceedings in Berlin†517 (the charge against Eichhoff concerns only his comments about the communist trial — the case comes up on the 22nd — so that the whole of that trial will be re-enacted before the public in Berlin. I've sent Eichhoff my pamphlet.†b If Schneider, Bürgers, etc., weren't so spineless, they could now take a lovely revenge); he also asked me about the Blind-Freiligrath alliance, of which I was then not yet aware. Unfortunately I am compelled for the time being (on material and 'possibly' political grounds) to show some égards†c for the chap.

Page Break me40.555
Page me40.555

In the last issue of the Hermann, student Blind got 'Borkheim'†a to describe him (Blind) as the Kinkel of South Germany.†520

Page me40.555

I must now do my article. Don't know what about.

Page me40.555

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me40.555
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

317
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX
IN LONDON
Page me40.555
Manchester, 22 December 1859

Dear Mrs Marx,

I take the liberty today of sending you a dozen bottles of wine for the festive season in the hope that they will be to your liking and contribute to the FAMILY'S cheer.
Page me40.555

The champagne and Bordeaux (Château d'Arcins) can be drunk at once, while the port wine should be allowed to rest a little and won't be in proper condition until about New Year.
Page me40.555

I have been frankly annoyed here by the Freiligrath goings-on.†b It's forever the same old thing with that belletristic lot; they always want the newspapers to pay them homage, always want their names kept before the public, and the most inept little couplet of their own devising is of greater moment to them than the most tremendous historical event. Since none of this is attainable unless organised by a coterie, it goes without saying that the latter becomes the prime requirement, and we poor communists are, alas, completely useless in that respect; worse still, we are fully alive to the swindle, deride this organisation du succés, and ourselves feel almost criminally averse to becoming popular personalities. Now it shows great stupidity if, for these reasons, such a poet feels ill at ease in such a party, for here there is absolutely none of the competition which he is bound to encounter everywhere else — and it shows even greater stupidity if he throws in his lot with a bunch in which competition from a Kinkel is a foregone conclusion. Mais que voulez-vous?†a In order to exist a poet requires incense, a great deal of incense, and Mrs Poet consumes even more. Competition or no competition, Mrs Poet will always be in raptures for the side which daily parades before the public her noble genius of a Ferdinand, herself, her interesting offspring, her cats, dogs, rabbits, canaries and other vermin, and indeed, showers them with Bengal lights, sentimentality and romantic lies. And what Mrs Poet wants, Mr Poet must needs want also, and this all the more in that madame gives expression to his own innermost thoughts. Das Volk, INDEED! The Gartenlaube is a very different kind of paper, and unctuous Bettziech a very different kind of man from the communists.†b After all in the Gartenlaube they still treat us as a poet's family and accord us a weekly mention, nor does crooked Bettziech ever let slip an opportunity to pay us a little compliment or give us a puff. — True, Kinkel is praised far more highly for his poetry, which is greatly inferior to ours, and they publish many more anecdotes about him, but the man is Bettziech's patron after all, and everything will come right in the end. And then, take the Schiller festival! These communists despise and deride Schiller, so how could one run a Schiller festival with them? But the Schiller festival is more important than all the rest of history put together and, after all, why was Schiller born a 100 years ago if not for us to write a cantata about him today?†c

Page Break me40.556
Page me40.556

And then there is the further consideration that the noble Ferdinand's poetry pretty well dried up years ago and the little he still manages to extract from his noddle is appallingly bad. This necessitates thinking up DODGES such as collected editions, etc., and that's something that can't be done every day. So, in order that one should not be forgotten, a puff becomes daily more of a necessity. Who, IN FACT, ever talked about Freiligrath between 1849 and 1858? Nobody. It was Bettziech who first rediscovered this classic writer, who had been so lost from mind that he was used only as Christmas and birthday presents and no longer figured in literature but in the history of literature. And, of course, nobody was to blame for all this save Karl Marx, with his 'inspiration'. But once F. Freiligrath has been thoroughly warmed up by the incense of the Gartenlaube, then you'll see what poetry will come bubbling out of him!

Page Break me40.557
Page me40.557

How petty, shabby and paltry are the doings of these poets! Give me Siebel any day; he may be a rotten poet, but he does at least know that he is a thorough humbug and all he asks is to be allowed to advertise himself — nowadays a necessary procédé without which he would be a complete nonentity.
Page me40.557

But you really mustn't take all this bickering too much to heart. As a 'personage'†a Freiligrath is bound sooner or later to betray weaknesses such as will put him into our hands when the time is ripe. Meanwhile, no breach if it can be avoided.
Page me40.557

I am very sorry that I shan't be able to come up on Friday, but there are such a lot of changes going on here that yesterday, for instance, I had to slave away till 9.45 at night, and there can be no question of getting away.
Page me40.557

My warmest regards to Moor and the YOUNG LADIES.†b

Your
F. Engels

Page me40.557
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.558

Page Break me40.559

APPENDIX

Page Break me40.560
Page Break me40.561

1
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†521

IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.561
[London, 28 March 1856]

Dear Mr Engels,

Moor wants to know whether you are coming here for Easter as we would all so very much like. In that case he would not send you the BLUE BOOKS.†38 Please drop us a line to say whether you are coming. Then we could take the thing to the PARCELS COMPANY on Monday. I have just posted your article.†522 Chaley†a IS VERY BUSY with the KARS PAPERS†b and is dictating to a somewhat seedy-looking Pieper. What do you make of the scandals in Berlin? Have you read the report from the Berlin correspondent†c in today's Times?†d Now we know the reason for the Kreuz-Zeitung's sackcloth-and-ashes LEADERS.

Page me40.561

I also have a bone to pick just now with the Minister of the Interior†e about the little business of my inheritance. You will remember that my late uncle's†f effects included a mass of letters and manuscripts belonging to my grandfather,†g who was War Minister to the Duke of Brunswick. The Prussian State, with Mr von Scharnhorst for intermediary, had already entered into negotiations with my father†h with a view to purchasing these manuscripts which contain material on the military history of the Seven Years War.†300 Then along comes my brother — and in the final statement relating to the estate I find the following curious entry: As regards the books which were found, the Minister of

Page Break me40.562

State has, 'on grounds of piety', taken over the same for the sum of 10 talers. He had the comparatively worthless portion sold by auction in Brunswick for 11 talers and now, without asking, takes over, out of piety, the more valuable, which he has valued at 10 talers, but debits me with the cost of carriage from Brunswick to Berlin. Funny sort of piety! But now for the real casus belli. In addition, he gets Florencourt, the chief clerk, to write:

'Besides the books, a large number of papers, amongst them a number of the late Landdrost von Westphalen's manuscripts — some on military history — have also come to light. The latter are, however, for the most part exceedingly incomplete and defective and it seems improbable that the same are of any real literary interest.'

Page me40.562

So they imagine that, without sending me a legal inventory and without having the papers valued, they can appropriate them by a coup de main. I strongly suspect that my brother, fired by patriotic zeal, promptly presented the manuscripts to the State, the more so in view of my mother's†a letter, in which she tells me she had already written to them about the value of the papers and asked what they intended to do with them. Their silence is very peculiar. He believes that I, like the rest of my submissive sisters,†b will simply leave everything to him, the mighty 'Cheeef' of the family. But there he's mistaken.

Page me40.562

I have begun by making 'discreet inquiries' so that bit by bit I can lay claim to my 'PROPERTY'.

Page me40.562

I shall be curious to see what they answer. With Berlin in its present state of excitation it would be very easy for us to create a scandal. But out of consideration for my mother we shall tread somewhat cautiously before we start one.

Page me40.562

We hope to see you here next week.

With cordial regards, yours,

Jenny Marx

Page me40.562

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.563

2

JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†523

IN MANCHESTER

Page me40.563

[London, about 12 April 1857]

Dear Mr Engels,

One invalid is writing for another by ordre du mufti.†a Chaley's†b head hurts him almost everywhere, terrible tooth-ache, pains in the ears, head, eyes, throat and God knows what else. Neither opium pills nor creosote do any good. The tooth has got to come out and he jibs at the idea. Now I am appealing to you to step into the breach with an article for Friday. No matter what subject. There was, for instance, the sending of troops and ships for China, there was also a change in the organisation of the Russian army, or Bonaparte or Switzerland or yarn or anything else. One column will do.†c Assuming, of course, that you've got over your own eye-trouble. If you possibly can, drop us a note to let us know whether you are able to do the article. Did the eye lotion help at all?

Warm regards from

Jenny Marx

Page me40.563

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

3
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†524
IN WATERLOO NEAR MANCHESTER
Page me40.563
[London, 31 July 1857]

Dear Mr Engels,

The wine has just arrived. The children's exultation knew no end. The girls examined the bottles very closely and found the sherry sealed in green and the port in pale lilac. The Bordeaux cheers us with its red smile. Tussy†a set to work at once on the hamper and now she is sitting in it as in a little hut packed in straw and hay. Let me convey to you, dear Mr Engels, our warmest thanks for your great kindness. I am so weak and wasted. The wine will do me a world of good.

Page Break me40.564
Page me40.564

We are all so very worried about your indisposition and this fresh cold you have caught. But a cold is unavoidable at the beginning of a stay by the seaside. The evenings are already quite cool. So see that you dress especially warmly in the evenings. Karl is very much affected by your indisposition. He would very much like to go and see you but it is absolutely out of the question just now and that annoys him so much. Just leave the 'drudgery' for the time being.
Page me40.564

Karl is BUSY shaping the INDIAN NEWS into an article.†b Dear little Jenny and Laura are now replacing me in my capacity as secretary. They have ousted me altogether with the chi-i-ief of the household.
Page me40.564

On Tuesday morning†c a cab stopped in front of our door, and who do you think stepped out? Conrad Schramm, whom we thought dead long ago. That FOOL Seiler had already written an obituary notice about him in the evening papers. The poor fellow is very very unwell. A real picture of misery. Yesterday Karl got him admitted to the German hospital, where he is being very well looked after for £1 a WEEK. In his mind, by the way, Schramm is the same as of old, just as he was in his early, good period, when we all liked him for his buoyancy and FRANKNESS. He is continually cracking very good jokes about God and the world. But of the latter, so he thinks, he must soon take his leave. Fortunately he has kept free of the 'American clarity' by which old Mirbach and my brother Edgar distinguished themselves so very much.
Page me40.564

Karl will be writing tomorrow.†d Warmest greetings from all of us.

Your Jenny Marx
Page me40.564
Published for the first time

Printed according to the original

Page Break me40.565

4
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†525
IN WATERLOO NEAR LIVERPOOL
Page me40.565
[London, about 14 August 1857]

Dear Mr Engels,

We are all so pleased to hear that you are getting better again and feeling stronger. But Moor still insists that the real way to cure your illness is prolonged dosage with iron. He has been conscientiously studying medicine at the Museum,†a and all modern doctors prescribe it and rate it above cod-liver oil; they are thus wholly in agreement with English doctors who, after years of practice, have come to the same opinion. By the by, he begs you most urgently not to overtax your brain with the work for Dana. Loafing and dozing and doing nothing are just as necessary as IRON.
Page me40.565

No doubt you will have had the two further letters he addressed to Manchester.†b One contained NOTICES about ARMIES, the other about the Armada.†180
Page me40.565

A few evenings ago that clown Edgar Bauer came to see us; truly a dried cod — without any cod-liver oil and on top of that with pretensions to wit. So frightful were his EFFORTS that I almost fainted, while Karl was sick — not just figuratively but in fact.
Page me40.565

Jones has lost his wife and is now happy as a sandboy; he hails all INDIANS as Kossuths and applauds the INDIAN PATRIOTS.†526 His opponent, the high-minded Richard Hart, a PAID Urquhartist, is now a lawyer at the Coal Hole. Karl heard him pleading there.

Page me40.565

I hope your next letter will bring yet more good news. We are all so very anxious about you.
Page me40.565

The wine suits me splendidly. The sherry is truly excellent. The port seems not quite so good, but I like it particularly on account of its sweetness. It will put me to rights again.
Page me40.565

With warm regards,

Jenny Marx

Page me40.565
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und. K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.566

5
JENNY MARX TO CONRAD SCHRAMM†a IN ST. HÉLIER, JERSEY
Page me40.566
[London,] 8 December [1857]
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Hampstead

Dear Mr Schramm,

It is so long since we have heard from you that we are all most eager for news. We often talk about you and, more keenly than anything else, regret our inability to help beguile and enliven somewhat your long, solitary winter days and hours.
Page me40.566

If it isn't too much trouble, do let us have a sign of life some time. — What do you feel about the general mess? Wouldn't you say there was something really quite exhilarating about the way the rotten old structure is crashing and tumbling down? It is to be hoped that your relations aren't yet using the crisis as a pretext for turning their backs on you and hence that you yourself have not as yet suffered any material ill-effects. Though the American crisis has touched our purse all too appreciably, in as much as Karl is writing for the Tribune only once instead of twice a week, all its European correspondents except Bayard Taylor and Karl having been given their notice, you can nevertheless imagine how HIGH UP†b the Moor is. He has recovered all his wonted facility and capacity for work, as well as the liveliness and buoyancy of a spirit long since blighted by great sorrow, the loss of our beloved child,†c whose death I shall never cease to mourn in my heart. By day Karl works for his living and by night at the completion of his political economy.†250 Now, when the times require this work, and it has come to be a necessity, it will, no doubt, find some wretched publisher. Already not only we, but also Lupus and Steffen have felt the immediate impact of the crisis. The former has lost the better part of his lessons because the house has gone bankrupt, and the latter was no longer able to remain in Brighton because the Indian business†178 put an abrupt end to his instruction of the Indian CADETS. On top of that, his sister lost what little money she had through the faillite†d of a banker. Little Dronke has started up a business of his own in Glasgow. I believe that all the ranting in the Glaswegian press against 'unscrupulous people who start up businesses without any capital whatsoever' is directed against the little fellow. For the moment Freiligrath is still securely ensconced in his diminutive Crédit mobilier.†364 But if the sinister rumours about the Parisian Crédit mobilier and its steady decline prove true, he too will soon go tumbling after and have to bid farewell to his manager's desk. So far, the crisis would not appear to have made any deep impression on our good, honest friend Liebknecht, or at least n'a-t-elle pas encore frappé son physique†a; he still retains unimpaired his notorious, fearsome, famous, fabulous appetite and his pristine love for a RASHER [OF] BACON.

Page Break me40.567
Page me40.567

Yesterday we heard from Engels in Manchester.†b He says:

Among our local philistines the crisis has induced a strong desire for the bottle, no one can bear to stay at home, alone with his cares and his family, the clubs are livening up, and the consumption of liquor is rising sharply. The worse of a jam a chap is in, the more frenzied his efforts to cheer himself up. And then, the morning after, what more striking example of remorse, both alcoholic and moral! In Manchester, 8 or 9 manufacturers have already come a cropper in the past few days. But nowhere do things look so splendid as in Hamburg. Never has panic assumed so perfect and classic a form. The house of Ulberg and Cramer, whose debts when they failed amounted to 12,000,000 banco marks (of which 7 million were bills on themselves!), had a capital of not more than 300,000 marks!! Everything there is now worthless, utterly worthless, save for silver and gold. Last week also saw the failure of Christian Matthias Schröder. J.H. Schröder & Co. in London telegraphed saying that, if 2 million marks would be enough, he would send the equivalent in silver. Came the reply: 3 millions or nothing; he couldn't spare the 3 millions and Christian Matthias crashed. The big American house which, after 2 days of negotiation with the Bank of England, recently obtained a million-pound advance, thereby saving its skin, belonged to Mr Peabody.
Page me40.567

This 4th JULY ANNIVERSARY DINNER MAN†246 calls to mind that lout Heinzen. Although the crisis has whittled down his Pionier to half its former size (despite the collaboration of student Karl Blind, that greatest of revolutionary statesmen), the rascal still continues to maintain that 'crises are mere Marxian inventions and figments of the brain'. Again, this gobbler-up of communists calls to mind

Page Break me40.568
red Becker,†a who has now been released, and this means, dear Mr Schramm, that willy-nilly you will have to make giant strides across the ocean with me, from Europe to America and back again, since with red Becker we are back once more in the dear Fatherland, the violet which will not, on this occasion, escape with a black, or rather blue, eye — back, indeed, in dear old Cologne, so that I cannot resist telling you something about our old friend Mevissen and his family. Quite a short while since, old Leiden lost 2 children from consumption, then Mrs Mevissen, while one of his sons lost his life when the Pacifique went down.

Page me40.568
You can imagine how sullen and sulky all the democrats are at the moment. For now that they are again faced with the much abhorred knife-and-fork problem, and can no longer lay all the blame on princes and tyrants, there must needs be an end to political fiddle-faddle and ale-house oratory.
Page me40.568
But now my chatter has lasted so long that it's time for me to bid you adieu. Warmest regards from myself and the girls, who are growing up to be so sweet and lovable and charming.

Your Jenny Marx

Page me40.568
Apropos. We have photographs of Freiligrath and Engels. If it's not too much trouble, will you have one done of yourself for us? Karl would so much like to have likenesses of his best friends around him.

Page me40.568
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.569

6
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†527
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.569
[London, 9 April 1858]

Dear Mr Engels,
For the past week Karl has been so unwell as to be quite incapable of writing. He believes you will already have deduced from the laboured style of his most recent letter†a that his bile and liver are again in a state of rebellion. I trust his medicines will finally take effect. The worsening of his condition is largely attributable to mental unrest and agitation which now, of course, after the conclusion of the contract with the publisher†b are greater than ever and increasing daily, since he finds it utterly impossible to bring the work to a close. I now also intend to write straight away to the little Berlin Jew†c who this time has proved a CLEVER manager. The children are well. Unfortunately they had to stay indoors all through the Easter holidays. The weather was too ghastly and the perpetual rain made our clayey soil so soft and muddy that it was like having the whole of Böckeburg clinging to one's soles. The Guardians with the two very interesting articles on France arrived today. From this we gather that you, too, are in Manchester and haven't risked an Easter TRIP. But fox-hunting no doubt?

Page me40.569
Warmest regards from us all.

Your Jenny Marx

Page me40.569
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.570

7
JENNY MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†528
IN BERLIN
Page me40.570
London, 9 April 1858†a

Dear Mr Lassalle,
Since Karl last wrote to you†b the liver complaint from which he was already suffering at the time — unfortunately it recurs every spring — has got so much worse that he has had to dose himself constantly. Today he feels quite incapable of writing and has therefore asked me to convey to you his heartfelt thanks for your kind efforts on his behalf. Nor can I help but express my pleasure at the successful conclusion of the contract, from which I gather that you are not yet completely engrossed in theoretical works and that, besides immersing yourself in Heraclitus (which I, too, have been studying a little), you have still retained your practical aptitudes and remained, as the English say, 'A CLEVER MANAGER'. Karl would long since have written to you at length about your work, but it's so difficult for him to write at all. The mental unrest and agitation he feels through not being able to bring his work to a close all at one go contribute greatly, of course, to the aggravation of his condition, likewise the tiresome work for our 'DAILY BREAD', which is another thing that certainly can't be deferred. However we hope that he'll be able to deliver the manuscript†c on time.
Page me40.570
As soon as he feels a little better he will write to you and, in the meantime, perhaps you will make do with this brief note of mine.
Page me40.570
With warm regards

Jenny Marx

Page me40.570
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.571

8
JENNY MARX TO MARX†529
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.571
[London, about 9 May 1858]

My darling Karl,

I'm sorry I haven't anything better to send you than Sch[...]†a Koller's†b letter; I kept it back yesterday but maybe you ought to see it after all.
Page me40.571

I hope that you will reach some definite POINT OF FACT with Friedländer; nothing much is ever to be got out of a German newspaper and it's beyond me how you could ask the enormous rate of £1 10/- for more than one article, especially since they have a correspondent†254 for their regular BUSINESS; they certainly can't want more than an enjolivement.†c The most that can be extracted from the Presse, as an AVERAGE MAXIMUM, will be £2 — don't delude yourself on that score. Engels is sure to say 'you'll be able to make at least £10 a week out of it'; though such delusions may be very agreeable at the time, they are often doomed to disappointment in the event.
Page me40.571

The course of the revolution in Prussia†336 tickles me tremendously; particularly the 'ships, sails, masts and [waves]' speech made by liquor Prince Smith on his Baltic estate, and the rapturous applause it received. And on top of that the Kölnische Zeitung's transports over von der Heydt, and the admiration evinced even by the Presse for the energy and determination shown by the democratic press in Berlin??!!
Page me40.571

The girls would have written to you long ago, but little Jenny declared that she detested the idea of what was simply a private letter being subjected to threefold censorship. Hence her silence.

Page Break me40.572
Page me40.572

Karl dear, it's frightful that I should have to BOTHER you amidst all your other tribulations; but, with Easter upon us, the fellows are growing rabid. Can't you manage to raise something, if only for Withers? They are the worst....
Page me40.572
The others are better — they can still be staved off for a while. I went to see Miss Morton yesterday and explained matters to her.

Your Jenny

Page me40.572
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

9
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†530
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.572
[London, after 13 August 1859]

Dear Mr Engels,
Moor has just gone to the Museum†a and has asked me to thank you for the £5 note you sent so promptly. And now, on top of all our other misfortunes, comes the COUNTY COURT. The affair's all the more vexing because I arrived just 5 minutes too late, otherwise the judge would certainly have granted me the right to make monthly payments as on the first occasion. You cannot conceive, dear Mr Engels, how painful it is for Karl and me to be such a constant burden on you and, with every letter, to despatch a fresh jeremiad appealing to your friendship and kindness.
Page me40.572
Karl has had 6 copies of Po and Rhine for some time now. He forgot to tell you. Of those 6 copies he has given away 3 to acquaintances (Imandt, Juta and Cavanagh). I shall be sending you the rest next week.
Page me40.572
The girls — just now they are practising a duet together and

Page Break me40.573
singing very nicely indeed — send you their love, to which I too add my warm regards.

Your Jenny Marx

Page me40.573
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

10
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†531
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.573
[London, 4 November 1859]

Dear Mr Engels,

Szemere is constantly pestering Moor for the Tribune article†a he promised him. Another dunning letter arrived this morning. Karl, who is struggling with Friday's article, begs you to send him the Kossuth article as soon as possible.
Page me40.573

Warmest regards from the girls and myself.

Your Jenny M.

Page me40.573
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

11
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS†532
IN MANCHESTER
Page me40.573
[London, 23 or 24 December 1859]

My dear Mr Engels,

My most heartfelt thanks for the Christmas HAMPER. The champagne will be a tremendous help in tiding us over the otherwise gloomy holiday, and will ensure a merry Christmas Eve. The sparkling bubbles of the champagne will make the dear children forget the lack of a little Christmas tree this year, and be happy and jolly for all that.

Page Break me40.574

Page me40.574

I have been terribly irritated by fleshy philistine Freiligrath and his Westphalian rectitude and respectability. On the other hand I was greatly amused today by your letter about the fat man and the lean woman,†a and I cannot understand why I sometimes let the wretches' behaviour upset me so. Had we been 'BETTER OFF' this year, I'd have seen the funnier side of all this trouble, but humour goes by the board when one is constantly having to struggle against the pettiest misére; never have I found it so oppressive as now, when our dear little girls, who are blossoming so sweetly, have to endure it too. And then, on top of that, the secret hopes we had long nourished in regard to Karl's book†b were all set at naught by the Germans' conspiration de silence, only broken by a couple of wretched, belletristic feuilleton articles which confined themselves to the preface and ignored the contents of the book. The second instalment†473 may startle the slugabeds out of their lethargy and then they will attack its line of thought the more ferociously for having kept silent about the scientific nature of the work. Nous verrons.†c I am, too, particularly curious to see what Ephraim Artful†d is going to hatch out. For his conduct in the matter is not altogether clear; Prussian Blue, like Ferdinand the Pure,†e must be treated with great circumspection just now, and an official breach with the latter must still be postponed. He's only so thick with Blind because the latter was his MAN-SERVANT in the great Kinkel affair and stood up for his rights on the boozy Schiller committee. Because Blind helped by seeing to it that the bust of Schiller was unveiled (the green serge cover positively refused to come off until 4 men had tugged at and tussled with it) during his cantata†f and not during the LOW COMEDIAN'S SEMAPHORING,†g he now has to stand publicly side by side with the arrant liar and cover the latter's mendacity and cowardice with his own political loyalty and purity. Fazy's miserable lackey! But enough of these dratted people! I am also sending you my brother's book†h through Chaplin. It might interest you and provide you with matter for a review. Actually mon cher frére†a has virtually done us out of the legacy and it was a downright lie when he wrote and told me some years ago that these papers were nothing but useless disjointed notes with which absolutely nothing could be done, and which didn't even have any 'exchange value'.†b I have ample cause to pick a quarrel with him, nor would anything be easier, in view of his present precarious political position, than to compromise him thoroughly. The Schleinitzes and Dunckers would be glad to take up the matter. Well, last week, without Karl's knowledge, I approached him about money. Since every attempt Karl had made to raise money had failed, I resolved in this extreme EMERGENCY to take the unpleasant step which I had hitherto avoided, even in the darkest days. Although Ferdinand refused to make me an 'advance', 'himself restricted to his pension', my letter has put me in a FALSE POSITION in regard to him, and my hands are completely tied. For the present I shall have to confine myself to reproaching him for the peculiar way he has treated my father†c in the preface. Even the crazy, egoistic brother,†d who embittered my father's existence and, up to the last year of his life, extorted from my mother†e a yearly allowance paid out of her small widow's income, is dealt with better, more decently and in greater detail than our humane, truly noble and magnanimous father. The latter, it is true, 'knew his Shakespeare better than his Bible', a crime which is not forgiven him even in the grave by his pietistic†113 son. Moreover it was exceedingly strange that, touching as he did on our family circumstances, he should have omitted all mention of my father's second marriage and failed to name the second mother, who was the light of my father's life and who tended and nurtured her step-children with loyalty and love and devotion such as a woman's own children seldom meet with. This enabled him skilfully to cheat my brother Edgar and myself of her existence which he found intrusive. But this last is a matter of complete indifference and affects me very little; only father and mother should not have been treated and passed over in this way — and for that he must do penance. I am anxious to know what you will have to say about the military part of the book. Today little Jenny is copying the article†533 in my place. I believe my daughters will soon put me out of business, and I shall then come on the register of 'those entitled to assistance'. A pity that there's no prospect of getting a pension after my long years of secretarial duties. Goodbye for today. Warmest regards from all, including your

Page Break me40.575

Page Break me40.576

Jenny Marx

Page me40.576
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 29, Moscow, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me40.577

NOTES AND INDEXES

Page Break me40.578
Page Break me40.579
NOTES

Page me40.579
†1 This letter was first published in an abridged English translation in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. — 3, 8, 19, 34, 37, 85, 208, 258, 296, 325, 343, 345, 374, 391, 393, 434
Page me40.579
†2 This refers to Robert Cobden's pamphlet What Next and Next? published in London in early 1856. It attacked Britain's foreign policy during the Crimean War waged by Britain, France, Turkey and Piedmont against Russia (1853-56). In particular, Cobden condemned the draft peace treaty with Russia as failing to guarantee stable peace. — 3

Page me40.579
†3 This presumably refers to Marx's articles on the Danubian Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia written for the New-York Daily Tribune. As can be seen from Marx's letter to Engels of 22 September 1856 (this volume, p. 68), they were not published, and have never been found. The articles touched on Swedish history, probably in connection with the conclusion on 21 November 1855 of a defence treaty aimed at Russia between the Kingdom of Sweden and Norway on the one hand, and Britain and France on the other.
Page me40.579
Marx contributed to the New-York Daily Tribune from August 1851 to March 1862. At his request many of the articles for the Tribune were written by Engels. In fact it was not until August 1852 that Marx began sending his own articles. By agreement with the editors some of the articles dealing with individual European countries were datelined Paris, Berlin or Vienna (see this volume, pp. 352, 361, 368 and 410).
Page me40.579
Marx's and Engels' articles in the New-York Daily Tribune dealt with key issues of foreign and domestic policy, the working-class movement, the economic development of European countries, colonial expansion, and the national liberation movement in colonial and dependent countries. Many of them were reprinted in the Tribune's special editions — the New-York Weekly Tribune and the New-York Semi-Weekly Tribune — and were quoted by other American newspapers, in particular by The New-York Times. Some were reproduced in the Chartist People's Paper, London. The Tribune editors sometimes took liberties with the articles, printing them unsigned in the form of editorials, and making insertions, some of which were in direct contradiction to the content of the articles (see, e.g., this volume, pp. 81 and 100-01). A number of articles were not printed at all. Marx repeatedly protested against these practices. In the autumn of 1857 he was forced to reduce the number of his contributions in view of the Tribune's financial difficulties resulting from the economic crisis in the USA. After the outbreak of the American Civil War, he ceased contributing altogether, mainly because the Tribune had come under the sway of people who advocated a compromise with the slave-owning states and abandoned its initial progressive stand. — 3, 68, 73, 81

Page Break me40.580
Page me40.580
†4 Marx quotes a leading article from The Times, No. 22267, of 18 January 1856, which discussed the preliminary conditions for a peace treaty with Russia. The paper commented on the report, received the day before, about Russia's acceptance of the peace proposals put to her by her opponents in the Crimean war, and urged extensive military preparations to force Russia into 'unconditional acceptance' of the demands made on her. — 3
Page me40.580

†5 A congress held at the Romanian town of Focsani in July and August 1772 aimed at ending the Russo-Turkish war started by Turkey in 1768. The Russian delegation proposed, in particular, that Wallachia and Moldavia should be granted independence under the joint protection of the European powers. No agreement having been reached at the congress, hostilities were resumed and continued until 1774. — 3
Page me40.580
†6 This refers to an episode in the Russo-Turkish war of 1735-39, which had been provoked by incursions, in 1735, of the Crimean Tartars into the Ukraine and the invasion of the Caucasus by the Crimean Khan, a vassal of the Sultan. In May-June 1736, a Russian army under Field Marshal B.C. Münnich entered the Crimea and occupied the Western part of the peninsula, including Bakhchisarai, the Khan's capital. However, a shortage of provisions, forage and water and the outbreak of epidemics forced Münnich to withdraw to the Ukraine. — 3
Page me40.580
†7 The principal works of Adam Müller, who belonged to the romantic school in political economy, are Die Elemente der Staatskunst. Theile I-III, Berlin, 1809 and Versuche einer neuen Theorie des Geldes mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Grossbritannien, Leipzig und Altenburg, 1816. Marx discussed Müller's views in Vols. I and III of Capital (present edition, Vols. 31 and 33). — 4
Page me40.580
†8 Synoptics — the writers of the first three Gospels. Marx refers to Bruno Bauer's book Kritik der evangelischen Geschichte der Synoptiker. Bd. 1-2, Leipzig, 1841; Bd. 3, Braunschweig, 1842. — 4
Page me40.580
†9 On 19 January 1856, David Urquhart's Free Press (No. 15) published under the heading 'The Chartist Correspondence' a number of documents on the Chartists' activities in 1839-41, including Urquhart's correspondence with the then British Prime Minister Lord Melbourne, Home Secretary Normanby and others. The letters show that Urquhart had abused the Chartist leaders' trust by giving the British government detailed information of Chartist plans and intentions.
Page me40.580
While publishing some works attacking the foreign policy of the British ruling circles, in particular that of Lord Palmerston, leader of the Whig oligarchy, in The Free Press and other Urquhartite publications, Marx emphatically dissociated himself from Urquhart's conservative views and criticised them in the press. — 4
Page me40.580
†10 This refers to Engels' duties as corresponding clerk and general assistant in the Ermen & Engels firm in Manchester, of which his father was co-owner. He assumed the post in the early 1850s, largely because he wanted to be able to give material aid to the Marx family, and kept it until 1870. Engels' confidential business reports to his father mentioned in the letter have not come down to us. — 5

Page Break me40.581
Page me40.581

†11 Between January and May 1856 Engels wrote a series of articles on Pan-Slavism for the New-York Daily Tribune, which did not print them. The manuscripts have not been preserved. — 5, 14, 51, 68, 73, 81, 100
Page me40.581
†12 Further in his letter Engels cites facts showing that opposition to Napoleon III's regime in France was mounting. Marx used them in his article 'The American Difficulty. — Affairs of France', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 25 February 1856 (present edition, Vol. 14, pp. 602-04). — 5
Page me40.581
†13 Sire de Franc Boissy — a French song containing satirical allusions to royalty and the government. — 6
Page me40.581
†14 A reference to the repressions that were part of the Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851 in France. — 6
Page me40.581
†15 Engels here refers to the discussion of the so-called Five Points or preliminary terms for peace between Russia and the coalition that fought Russia in the Crimean war (Britain, France, Turkey and Piedmont). The Five Points were presented to the Russian government through Austria in the form of an ultimatum by the Allied Powers in December 1855. They called for replacement of the Russian protectorate over the Danubian principalities by a protectorate of all the contracting parties, a revision of the Bessarabian border involving Russia's relinquishment of the territory along the Danube, neutralisation of the Black Sea, closure of the Straits to warships, a ban on the maintenance by Russia and Turkey of arsenals and navies in the Black Sea, and collective protection of the Sultan's Christian subjects by the Great Powers. The Allied Powers also reserved themselves the right to impose additional demands. The terms were accepted by the Russian government and provided the basis for the Paris peace talks.
Page me40.581
The Turkish fortress of Kars in Transcaucasia was captured, after a long siege, by the Russians on 28 November 1855. The fall of Kars, the last major event of the Crimean war, speeded up the termination of hostilities. Under the Paris peace treaty (March 1856) Kars was returned to Turkey in exchange for the evacuation of Sevastopol and the other Russian towns held by the Allies. — 7, 21
Page me40.581
†16 The Aliens Bill authorised the deportation of aliens from England at any time by decision of the British government. Enacted by Parliament in 1793, it was valid for one year and was renewed in 1802, 1803, 1816, 1818 and, in connection with revolutionary events on the Continent and Chartist demonstrations in England, in 1848. In later years too, conservative circles repeatedly sought its renewal. In particular, the question was discussed for several months from the autumn of 1855, following the publication on 10 October by L'Homme, a refugee newspaper appearing in Jersey, of an open letter by the French petty-bourgeois democrat Félix Pyat to Queen Victoria on the occasion of her visit to France in August of that year. The letter sharply attacked Britain's alliance with the Second Empire and was used as a pretext for the expulsion of the publisher of L'Homme and some other French refugees from the island and for press attacks on refugees in general. However, protests by progressive circles forces the authorities to refrain from further steps. On

Page Break me40.582

1 February 1856 Palmerston declared in the House of Commons that the government would not seek renewal of the Aliens Bill. — 7, 38

Page me40.582

†17 This may be an ironic reference to Richard Wagner, who — in his Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft (1856) and other writings — called his works the 'music of the future'. — 8

Page me40.582

†18 Marx refers to the diplomatic correspondence between Pozzo di Borgo, the Russian Ambassador to France, and Count Nesselrode, the Russian Chancellor of State. Marx knew of it from diplomatic documents published under the title The Portfolio, or a Collection of State Papers by David Urquhart in London from 1835 to 1837, and from the book Recueil des documents relatifs á la Russie pour la plupart secrets et inédits utiles á consulter dans la crise actuelle, Paris, 1854. — 9

Page me40.582

†19 This work, intended by Engels for Putnam's Monthly, which published his series The Armies of Europe in the second half of 1855, was presumably never written. — 11

Page me40.582

†20 This letter was first published in an abridged English translation in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 12, 30, 45, 54, 61, 67, 70, 93, 110, 128, 132, 224, 227, 254, 265, 319, 333, 359, 407, 430, 448, 459, 461, 518, 524

Page me40.582

†21 Queen's Bench — here the reference is to a London jail intended mainly for insolvent debtors. — 13

Page me40.582

†22 Marx means The Lay of Igor's Host, a monument of old Russian literature describing the ill-starred campaign undertaken by Igor, Prince of Novgorod Severski, against the nomadic Polovtsians in 1185. The work was published in German several times. One edition appeared in Berlin in 1854 under the title Lied vom Heerzuge Igors. As follows from Marx's later letters to Engels, he found the Lay, in the language of the original and in French translation, in F.G. Eichhoff's book Histoire de la langue et de la littérature des slaves..., and later also a bilingual German edition, which he sent to Engels in Manchester. — 15, 19, 26, 31, 37

Page me40.582

†23 Acta litteraria Bohemiae et Moraviae, Pragae, 1774-1783, were literary and historical collections published by the Czech Enlightenment historian Mikuláš (Adauctus) Voigt. — 16

Page me40.582

†24 Marx means Schlözer's recommendations, quoted on p. 261 of Dobrovský's book, for the study of the Slavonic languages and the compilation of Slavonic dictionaries. The recommendations are contained in Schlözer's book Allgemeine Nordische Geschichte, p. 330. — 16

Page me40.582
†25 Dobrovský's words, taken from his book Slavin (p. 419), actually refer to Acta litteraria Bohemiae et Moraviae published by Mikuláš (Adauctus) Voigt, not to Johannes Voigt's Geschichte Preußens. — 16
Page me40.582
†26 Archdeacon William Coxe, traveller, historian and writer, left his vast collection of manuscripts and books to the British Museum. Marx made excerpts from the following manuscript letters and reports of British diplomats in Russia: Various Papers on the Genius and Character of the Russians, Rondeau to Walpole, Dispatch from Mr. Fuch (Finch) to Lord Harrington, Sir George Macartney to the Earl of Sandwich, and Sir James Harris to Lord Grantham. He made ample use of them in his Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 17

Page Break me40.583
Page me40.583
†27 Polovtsians (Kipchaks or Cumans) — Turkic nomadic tribes who inhabited the South-Russian steppes from the eleventh to the thirteenth century. Following the Mongol invasion in the mid-thirteenth century some of them fled to Hungary and the Balkans, where they were absorbed, while those remaining were subjugated by the conquerors and merged with the peoples inhabiting the Golden Horde, the medieval Tartar-Mongol state. — 19
Page me40.583
†28 This refers to the so-called Königinhof manuscript, a collection of patriotic poems glorifying Bohemian antiquity, which the Czech philologist and poet Vaclav Hanka claimed to have discovered in a church in the village of Králowé Dwore (in German: Königinhof) in 1817. It was published in Czech under the title Kralodvorský Rukopis in 1819, and in 1829 in Czech and in German, translated by the Czech poet Vaclav Alois Swoboda. Marx probably had the latter edition in mind.
Page me40.583
In the 1880s the manuscript was revealed to be a recent imitation. — 19, 26
Page me40.583
†29 This apparently refers to 'Bogarodzica', a medieval Polish hymn to the Virgin first recorded in 1407. It is attributed to Adalbert (Wojciech), Bishop of Prague (957-997). — 19
Page me40.583
†30 Chambre introuvable was the name given by King Louis XVIII to the French Chamber of Deputies, which in 1815-16 consisted of extreme conservatives. It attacked the government from the right and was eventually disbanded by the King because of its arch-reactionary views.
Page me40.583
Here Marx calls the Prussian Chamber of Representatives Chambre introuvable because it was dominated by the Junkers, whose extreme reactionary attitudes were worrying the government which feared they might provoke revolutionary tendencies. — 20
Page me40.583

†31 The expression 'the crazy year' ('das tolle Jahr') was first used by Johann Heinrich von Falkenstein in a chronicle published in 1739 to describe the popular unrest in Erfurt in 1509. Later it was widely used in literature to designate the revolutionary year 1848. — 20
Page me40.583
†32 This refers to the struggle in the French 'National Convention (which met on 20 September 1792) between the Girondists, i.e. the party of the big bourgeoisie (a number of whose leaders came from the department of Gironde), and the Montagnards, commonly referred to as the Mountain, who occupied the upper seats in the Convention, i.e. the Jacobins, which represented the progressive bourgeoisie and the masses. As a result of the popular uprising of 31 May-2 June 1793, the Girondist government was overthrown and the Jacobin revolutionary democratic dictatorship was established. — 21
Page me40.583
†33 The words 'take care of Dowb' were originally used by, and then popularly added to the name of, the British Secretary of War Panmure who, in an official dispatch of June 1855 informing General Simpson of his appointment as commander-in-chief in the Crimea, asked him to look after Panmure's nephew, the young officer Dowbiggin. — 21
Page me40.583
†34 At the battle of Inkerman in the Crimea (5 November 1854) the Anglo-French forces defeated the Russian army, but the latter's vigorous action prevented the Allies from storming Sevastopol, to which they lay siege instead. Engels describes the battle in detail in his article 'The Battle of Inkerman' (see present edition, Vol. 13, pp. 528-35). — 21, 178, 297
Page me40.583
†35 From 1846 to 1854 Ferdinand Lassalle handled Countess Sophie von Hatzfeldt's divorce suit against Count Edmund Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg. The divorce was agreed to in July 1851. Later, the countess received 300,000 talers under the property settlement. — 23, 27, 227

Page Break me40.584
Page me40.584
†36 Gustav Levy's visit to Marx in London in late February 1856 was preceded by another, in the second half of December 1853, when he also came with a message from Düsseldorf workers. This shows that after the 1848-49 revolution the proletarian circles in the Rhine Province continued to regard Marx and Engels as their leaders. Already during his first visit Levy maintained that an uprising was needed in Germany and that the factory workers were ready for it. Marx, then too, argued that, with reaction rampant in Germany, an uprising would be premature, as would a resumption of the activities of the Communist League in Germany urged by Levy. — 25
Page me40.584
†37 The letter is only dated 'Tuesday', but Marx's intention, mentioned in the letter, to send an article on Kars to New York on Friday is evidence that the letter was written on Tuesday, 25 March, since the article appeared in the New-York Daily Tribune on 8 April 1856 and had to be mailed in London not later than Friday, 28 March, to arrive in time for that issue. — 28
Page me40.584

†38 Blue Books — periodically published collections of documents of the British Parliament and Foreign Office. Their publication began in the seventeenth century. — 28, 120, 431, 561
Page me40.584
†39 'Enclosure 2' has been preserved. Written in Jenny Marx's hand, it is the record of a talk she had with Colonel Touroute, who related a number of facts compromising Lassalle. He pointed out, in particular, that the extravagant life Lassalle led in Countess Hatzfeldt's house, his use of her money for stock-exchange speculation, his arrogance towards workers, his self-assurance and dictatorial demeanour roused the indignation of the Düsseldorf workers. — 31, 36
Page me40.584
†40 Boustrapa — nickname of Louis Bonaparte, composed of the first syllables of the names of the places where he and his supporters staged Bonapartist putsches: Boulogne (August 1840), Strasbourg (October 1846) and Paris (coup d'état of 2 December 1851). — 31, 94, 170, 230, 256, 290, 336, 425, 435
Page me40.584
†41 Marx drew on Tassilier's letter for his article 'The France of Bonaparte the Little' (present edition, Vol. 14, pp. 615-20). Cayenne, in French Guiana, South America, a place of penal servitude for political prisoners, was dubbed the 'Dry Guillotine' on account of the high mortality among convicts caused by the harsh prison regulations and the unhealthy tropical climate. A translation of Tassilier's letter, sent by Marx to the Chartist People's Paper, was published on 12 April 1856. — 31
Page me40.584
†42 Marx means the polemics between the Chartists and the Urquhartites, which had been exacerbated by the publication in Urquhart's Free Press (19 January 1856) of 'The Chartist Correspondence' (see Note 9). The Urquhartites' hostility towards the revolutionary trend in the British working-class movement found expression in attempts to represent the Chartists as demagogues and agents of the Russian Tsar. The Chartists, for their part, described the Urquhartites as reactionaries advocating a restoration of the customs and practices of the Middle Ages. A sharp controversy developed, in particular, over the future of Parliament. The Chartists held that it should be reformed on democratic principles and used as an instrument of social change, whereas the Urquhartites advocated total abolition of the representative system and a return to patriarchal forms of government. — 32, 44

Page Break me40.585
Page me40.585
†43 In February and March 1856 Ernest Jones, the Chartist leader, attempted to reorganise the activities of the National Charter Association. Writing in The People's Paper, he suggested that the Association should no longer hold conferences or elect leaders, but that he, Jones, and James Finlen should be recognised for life as the only members of its Executive. Jones believed that this form of centralisation would make for greater efficiency. His proposals were endorsed by the majority of the Chartist members, but led only to a temporary increase in membership (to about 2,000 by the beginning of March 1856) and local activation of Chartist propaganda. At the same time, Jones' attempts to act as the Association's only leader caused serious discontent among Manchester Chartists.

Page me40.585
Marx and Engels, who maintained close ties with revolutionary Chartists, criticised Jones' efforts to galvanise the Chartist movement by such artificial measures, which, they predicted, could not ensure lasting success. — 32, 34
Page me40.585
†44 This refers to the German National Assembly convened in Frankfurt am Main in May 1848 for the purpose of unifying Germany and drawing up an Imperial Constitution. Its mostly liberal deputies turned the Assembly into a mere debating club. In early June 1849 the Right-wing deputies and the moderate liberals left the Assembly after the Prussian King and other German monarchs had rejected the Constitution it had drafted. What remained of the Assembly moved to Stuttgart, where it was dispersed by Württemberg troops on 18 June 1849.
Page me40.585
The petty-bourgeois democrat Löwe von Calbe was a deputy to the Assembly in 1848-49. — 32, 63
Page me40.585
†45 Engels means the establishment of banks similar to the Société générale du Crédit mobilier, a big French joint-stock bank founded by the Péreire brothers in 1852. The Crédit mobilier was to mediate in credit transactions and help in setting up industrial concerns and building railways in France, Spain, Austria, Russia and other countries. It was closely associated with Napoleon III's government and under its protection engaged in large-scale speculation. It went bankrupt in 1867 and was liquidated in 1871. — 34, 68, 119, 126, 128, 133, 142, 145, 216, 225, 231, 240, 244, 291, 296, 349, 360, 437
Page me40.585
†46 At the battle of Jena (14 October 1806) the French army, commanded by Napoleon, routed the Prussian army, thus forcing Prussia to surrender.
Page me40.585
At Austerlitz (Czech name: Slavkov) Napoleon's army defeated the Austrians and Russians on 2 December 1805. — 37, 170, 180, 461
Page me40.585
†47 Marianne, founded in 1850, was a secret republican society which opposed Napoleon III during the Second Empire. — 37, 42
Page me40.585
†48 On 14 April 1856 Marx was invited as an official representative of the revolutionary refugees in London to a banquet commemorating the fourth anniversary of the Chartist People's Paper. In his address he spoke of the German and other proletarian revolutionaries' solidarity with the revolutionary wing of the Chartist movement, concentrating in particular on the historic role of the proletariat. The banquet was also addressed by the German Communist Wilhelm Pieper. The other speakers were mostly Chartists (James Finlen, Ernest Jones and others). Marx did not intend to publish his speech, but it was included in the newspaper report that appeared on 19 April 1856 under the heading 'Fourth Anniversary Banquet of The People's Paper' (present edition, Vol. 14, pp. 655-56). — 38

Page Break me40.586
Page me40.586
†49 Straubingers — German travelling journeymen. Marx and Engels often ironically gave the name to backward elements of the German working-class movement who were still influenced by guild prejudices and mistrusted the revolutionary intelligentsia. — 38
Page me40.586
†50 A reference to the German Workers' Educational Society in London, which was founded in February 1840 by Karl Schapper, Joseph Moll and other leaders of the League of the Just (in the 1850s the Society had its premises in Windmill Street, Soho). After the reorganisation of the League of the Just in the summer of 1847 and the founding of the Communist League, the latter's local communities played a leading role in the Society. In 1847 and 1849-50 Marx and Engels took an active part in the Society's work, but on 17 September 1850 they and a number of their followers withdrew because the Willich-Schapper sectarian and adventurist faction had temporarily increased its influence in the Society and caused a split in the Communist League. Later Schapper realised the faultiness of his position and took steps towards a reconciliation with Marx. The resultant weakening of the sectarians' influence made it possible for Marx and Engels to resume their work in the Educational Society in the late 1850. In 1918, the Society was closed down by the British government. — 41, 363, 451, 520
Page me40.586
†51 This refers to the German republican democrats who, following the capture of the fortress of Mainz by the French army in October 1792, formed the Friends of Liberty and Equality Society on the pattern of the Jacobin Club. The Mainz Clubbists joined the new administration (the Mainz Commune) and carried out a number of progressive reforms (abolition of feudal obligations, social-estate privileges and the guild system). Under the Clubbists' influence, the Rhenish German National Convention, convoked in Mainz in March 1793, proclaimed the merger of Mainz with the French Republic. The Clubbists' activity was violently terminated in July 1793, when the French army was driven out by the forces of the counter-revolutionary European coalition. — 41
Page me40.586
†52 In his letter of 6 April 1856 Johannes von Miquel, a former member of the Communist League, asked Marx to state his views on the attitude the proletariat should take to bourgeois parties in the event of a revolution in Germany. Miquel's own statements on this question testified to a retreat from the consistently revolutionary standpoint. He limited the tasks of the revolution to establishing a united centralised state and ignored the need for social change. He maintained that the proletariat should ally itself not only with the petty-bourgeois democrats but also with the bourgeois liberals and refrain from such revolutionary measures as might frighten the bourgeoisie away from the revolution.
Page me40.586
No answer by Marx to Miquel is extant. — 42, 44
Page me40.586
†53 On 8 April 1856 Count Walewski, Foreign Minister of France, made a counter-revolutionary speech at a plenary session of the Congress of Paris convened to work out the peace terms following the Crimean war. He declared that British and French troops would continue to occupy Greece, while French and Austrian troops would remain in the Papal states to combat 'anarchy' (i.e. the national liberation movement). He attacked the Belgian press, describing its support for the French republicans and criticism of Napoleon III as incitement to 'insurrection and murder'. — 42

Page me40.586
†54 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in K. Marx and F. Engels, Literature and Art, New York, 1947. — 43

Page Break me40.587
Page me40.587
†55 This letter of Engels to Marx has not been found. — 43
Page me40.587
†56 The reference is to a letter of 25 April 1856 in which A. Hamacher conveyed greetings from Cologne, Elberfeld and Solingen workers and expressed their desire to maintain contact with Marx. — 44
Page me40.587
†57 The Foreign Affairs Committees were public organisations set up by the Urquhartites in a number of English cities between the 1840s and 1860s, mainly with the aim of opposing Palmerston's policy. — 44
Page me40.587
†58 In 1856 Marx's series of articles Lord Palmerston, originally intended for and partly published in the New-York Daily Tribune (see present edition, Vol. 12), appeared in Sheffield under the title The Story of the Life of Lord Palmerston (The Free Press Serials, No. 5, 1856). This was a reproduction of the series as published under the same title between December 1855 and February 1856 in several issues of The Free Press, the Urquhartites' London paper. Apart from this, one of the articles, published in The Sheffield Free Press in November 1855, appeared as a pamphlet in Sheffield in 1856 (The Free Press Serials, No. 4a). — 44, 58
Page me40.587
†59 This refers to Heine's third will, which he dictated to notaries F.L. Ducloux and Ch. L.E. Rousse on 13 November 1851. — 45
Page me40.587
†60 Engels made excerpts from Bazancourt's book between June and September 1856. In the autumn of that year he summed up the results of his critical analysis in an article entitled 'Saint-Arnaud'. Marx sent the article to the American journal Putnam's Monthly, but the editors returned it unpublished. — 45, 51, 71, 73, 80, 93, 106, 124, 126, 128
Page me40.587
†61 This refers to a work planned by Marx on the history of British and Russian diplomacy in the eighteenth century, of which he only completed five chapters of the Introduction. For these he made use of pamphlets, diplomatic documents and unpublished manuscripts, mostly of the period of the Northern War (the Russo-Swedish war of 1700-21), which he found in the British Museum Library. His negotiations with Nikolaus Trübner for publication of the work ended in failure. The chapters of the Introduction appeared by instalments in Urquhart's Sheffield Free Press from late June to early August 1856 as they were sent in by Marx. Eventually publication was stopped because of arbitrary editorial abridgements and printing errors. In June 1856 the London Free Press began reprinting the text from the Sheffield paper, and on 16 August 1856 it started reproducing the chapters from the beginning, with publication continuing until 1 April 1857. In both papers the unfinished work was printed under the title Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century (see present edition, Vol. 15).

Page me40.587
In 1899 Eleanor Aveling, Marx's daughter, published it in London in book form under the heading Secret Diplomatic History of the Eighteenth Century. — 46, 56, 73, 81, 94, 110, 112, 120
Page me40.587
†62 This letter was first published in English in Labour Monthly, No. 10, 1932, London. — 49
Page me40.587
†63 Engels and his wife, Mary Burns, made a trip to Ireland in mid-May 1856. — 49
Page me40.587
†64 Between 1845 and 1847 potato blight caused widespread famine in Ireland. The poverty of the small tenants ruthlessly exploited by the big landowners had made the bulk of the population almost entirely dependent on a diet of potatoes grown on their own small patches. About one million people starved to death, and the wave of emigration caused by the famine swept away another million. Large areas of Ireland were depopulated. The abandoned land was turned into pastures by the English and Irish landlords. — 49

Page Break me40.588
Page me40.588
†65 This refers to the mass eviction of Irish tenants, a policy pursued by the English and Irish landlords since the late 1840s to turn ploughland into pasture. It was stimulated by the falling demand for Irish corn owing to the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846, and by England's growing need for Irish cattle and animal produce. — 50
Page me40.588
†66 The Encumbered Estates Court was to enforce the Encumbered Estates Act for Ireland, passed by Parliament in 1849. This act was supplemented by a series of other acts in 1852 and 1853. The 1849 Act provided for the sale of mortgaged estates by auction if their owners were proved insolvent. As a result, the land of many ruined landlords passed into the hands of usurers, middlemen and rich tenants. — 51
Page me40.588
†67 Engels compares Bazancourt's description of the Crimean war to Batrachomyomachia (The Battle of the Frogs and Mice), an Ancient Greek anonymous mock-heroic poem parodying Homer's Iliad. — 51
Page me40.588
†68 Marx and Wilhelm Pieper travelled to Hull on 7 June 1856. From there Marx went to see Engels in Manchester, while Pieper returned to London to carry out a number of commissions for Marx, who returned to London about 20 July 1856. — 54
Page me40.588
†69 Marx's wife Jenny and their three daughters stayed in Trier from 22 May to about 10 September 1856. She went there to visit her sick mother, Caroline von Westphalen, who died on 23 July. Marx's letter was sent from Manchester, where he was staying with Engels. — 54

Page me40.588
†70 Black Madonna — a name given by some art specialists to early wood carvings of the Virgin Mary. It was used, in particular, by Karl Friedrich von Rumohr in his book Italienische Forschungen (Berlin, 1827), from which Marx made excerpts in Bonn in 1842 for his planned treatise on Christian art. — 54
Page me40.588
†71 The Cologne Communist Trial (4 October-12 November 1852) was a trial of a group of Communist League members charged with 'treasonable conspiracy'. It was rigged by the Prussian police on the basis of forged documents and fabricated evidence, which were used not only against the accused but also to discredit the whole proletarian organisation. Seven of the twelve defendants were sentenced to prison terms of three to six years. Marx directed the defence from London, sending material revealing the provocative methods used by the prosecution. After the trial he and Engels exposed its organisers (see Engels' article 'The Late Trial at Cologne', published in the New-York Daily Tribune, and Marx's pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 388-93 and 395-457). — 56, 69, 376, 477, 552
Page me40.588
†72 The Allgemeine Zeitung did not publish this counter-statement. — 56
Page me40.588
†73 Only part of the draft of Marx's letter to Isaac Ironside, editor of The Sheffield Free Press, has reached us. The beginning, up to and including the words 'I shall consider myself obliged to stop the publication', is written in pencil in Engels' hand with changes in ink by Marx. The rest of the text, with much struck out, is in Marx's writing. That the draft was written on 21 June 1856 can be seen from Marx's letter to his wife written on the same day. Ironside answered the letter on 23 June 1856. — 57

Page Break me40.589
Page me40.589
†74 This refers to the publication of Marx's Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century in The Sheffield Free Press (see Note 61). Further on Marx speaks of Ironside's intention to publish this work in the Urquhartites' Free Press Serials, an intention which failed to materialise. — 57
Page me40.589
†75 This letter was written in reply to one from William Cyples, a member of the Sheffield Free Press staff, which Marx reproduced, together with his reply, in a letter to Engels on 28 July 1856. Marx's relations with the newspaper had been complicated by the arbitrary changes made by the editors in his Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century, which soon led him to stop publication of the work in this paper (see Note 61).
Page me40.589
The letter was first published in English as part of Marx's letter to Engels of 28 July 1856 in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx. 1844 bis 1883. Herausgegeben von A. Bebel und Ed. Bernstein. Verlag von J.H.W. Dietz, Bd. II, Stuttgart, 1913. — 58, 62
Page me40.589

†76 The Friendly Societies were workers' organisations whose main purpose was to provide material aid to their members in the event of disability and old age, pay funeral expenses and the like. This was done out of membership dues. — 59
Page me40.589
†77 This refers to Marx's conflict with The Sheffield Free Press over the publication of his Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century (see Note 61). The following draft of a letter by Wilhelm Pieper to William Cyples has survived:
'28 Dean Street, Soho
London, 17 July 1856
'Sir,
'I am directed by Dr. Marx to inform you that he cannot congratulate you on the emendations you have thought fit to introduce in the copy destined for Saturday's publication.
Page me40.589
'Passages that might safely have been omitted — for the sake of space — have been carefully preserved, while the most characteristic portions analyzing the policy of Peter I have been suppressed. This explains why he has interpolated about three lines of absolute importance for the understanding of the reader, in substitution for the same number of lines suppressed in another place, out of consideration for the pressure of space you allege in your letter to Dr. Marx.' — 60
Page me40.589
†78 Marx means the concluding events of the fourth bourgeois revolution in Spain (1854-56): the resignation of Espartero's liberal government on 14 July 1856, the coming to power of the counter-revolutionary General O'Donnell, and the popular uprising, led by the ex-toreador Pucheta, against the new government in Madrid and a number of other cities. Espartero's refusal to support the insurgents and the weakness of their leaders contributed to the defeat of the movement. On 17 July the uprising was suppressed in Madrid and soon after in the other cities too. Marx described these events in his articles 'The Revolution in Spain' (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 61
Page me40.589
†79 The Grand Cophta was the name of an omnipotent and omniscient priest who headed the non-existent Masonic 'Egyptian Lodge' which the famous eighteenth-century impostor 'Count' Cagliostro (Giuseppe Balsamo) claimed to have founded. — 61
Page me40.589
†80 Contrary to Urquhart's intention to reserve the new publication of Marx's Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century for his projected journal, the five chapters of the Introduction that had been written were republished in The Free Press, the Urquhartites' London paper (see Note 61). — 62

Page Break me40.590
Page me40.590
†81 Crapauds (literally: toads) was the nickname of a group of opportunist deputies (the 'Bog') in the French Convention (1793-95) who vacillated between the Right and the Left wing. Marx and Engels in their letters often used the name in reference to French philistines, in particular French petty-bourgeois refugees, some of whom lived in Jersey until 1855 and later in Guernsey. — 65, 225, 229, 249, 264, 268, 309

Page me40.590
†82 This letter was first published in English in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 66, 97, 122, 143, 225, 315, 321, 328, 369, 378, 429
Page me40.590
†83 In the second half of August Engels went to London to meet his mother, who was visiting England. — 66, 72
Page me40.590
†84 This refers to the legacy left to Jenny Marx by her mother, Caroline von Westphalen. Part of it consisted in shares which, at the time of the mother's death, were in the hands of her step-son, the Prussian Minister of the Interior Ferdinand von Westphalen. — 68
Page me40.590
†85 Georg Weerth died of jungle fever on 30 July 1856 in Havana while on a tour of West Indian countries as agent of a German commercial firm. Marx and Engels did not learn of their friend's death until much later. — 68, 72
Page me40.590
†86 Marx's information was inaccurate. The book on England, Englische Freiheit, was written not by Bruno, but by Edgar Bauer. Marx referred to it later in his letters to Engels of 18 March and 21 April 1857 (see this volume, pp. 106 and 122). — 68, 122
Page me40.590
†87 The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street — a name for the Bank of England situated in Threadneedle Street, London.
Page me40.590
By the Paris concern Marx means the Banque de France. — 71
Page me40.590
†88 An allusion to the French bankers Isaac and Emile Péreire, who in the 1820s and 1830s adhered to the Saint-Simonist school. In 1852 they set up the joint-stock bank, Crédit mobilier (see Note 45), which they falsely claimed gave effect to the Saint-Simonist idea of overcoming class contradictions and achieving prosperity for all by introducing a new, rational system of public credit. The practical application of the scheme, which had the support of Napoleon III and was called ironically 'Bonapartist socialism' by Marx, led to an orgy of stock-exchange speculation and corruption in France.
Page me40.590
Marx uses the term 'imperialism' further on in the sense of 'Bonapartism'. — 72
Page me40.590
†89 The Crystal Palace — a structure of metal and glass in London's Hyde Park built for the 1851 Great Exhibition and used for various displays and shows later. — 72
Page me40.590
†90 Marx used the data on the state of the European money market cited in this letter in a number of articles on the approaching economic crisis in Europe which he wrote for the New-York Daily Tribune in late September and the first half of October 1856 (see present edition, Vol. 15). These articles opened the long series of his contributions on the 1857 world crisis. — 72

Page me40.590
†91 This refers to Marx's private library which he had built up in the 1840s and left in Cologne in May 1849 in the care of his friend Roland Daniels, a member of the Communist League, when Marx was expelled by the Prussian authorities. Shortly before his arrest in 1851, Daniels hid the books in the storehouse of his brother, a wine merchant. Acquitted at the Cologne Communist trial at the end of 1852, Roland Daniels came out of prison a sick man and died of tuberculosis in August 1855. In early 1856 his widow undertook to send the books to Marx but, owing to the high carriage costs and other difficulties, Marx did not receive his library until December 1860 after some books had got lost. — 72

Page Break me40.591
Page me40.591
†92 The beginning of this letter has been torn off, the manuscript is damaged in a number of places (indicated by three dots in square brackets). Written in an unknown hand in the upper left corner is the date '27/28 Sept. 1856'. Being a reply to Marx's letters of 22 September and 26 September, the letter could not have been written before 27 September 1856. — 72
Page me40.591
†93 An allusion to Ewerbeck's inordinate literary vanity, on which Engels also commented in a letter to Marx of 15 October 1851 in connection with the publication of Ewerbeck's book L'Allemagne et les Allemands, Paris, 1851 (cf. present edition, Vol. 38, p. 478).
Page me40.591
The Pére-Lachaise is a cemetery in Paris where many famous writers and artists are buried. — 73
Page me40.591
†94 Engels means the regular reviews of the Crimean war which he wrote for the New-York Daily Tribune in 1855 and 1856 (see present edition, Vols. 12-14). Since Engels was not an official correspondent of the Tribune, the reviews were sent to New York by Marx. Most of them were published as leaders. Engels made no copies of the manuscripts he sent to Marx, while issues of the Tribune carrying his articles could not always be obtained in Manchester. — 73
Page me40.591
†95 In the period immediately preceding the 1848 revolution in France the Constitutionnel newspaper announced almost daily: 'L'horizon politique s'obscurcit' ('The political horizon is darkening'). Marx cited this cliché in his article 'Bonaparte's Present Position', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 1 April 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 73, 290
Page me40.591
†96 The Marx family moved to 9 Grafton Terrace, London, about 1 October 1856. — 74
Page me40.591

†97 An allusion to Mieroslawski's theory that the Poles had a special mission of liberation and were called upon to serve as an instrument of universal social change (Marx plays on Archimedes' famous words: 'Give me a fulcrum and I will move the earth'). — 75
Page me40.591
†98 Marx means the republication in the London Free Press of the part of the Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century which had earlier been published with abridgments and numerous misprints in The Sheffield Free Press, and in the same form in The Free Press (see Note 61). — 75
Page me40.591
†99 This refers to the continued publication of Marx's Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century in The Free Press (see Note 61). From 16 August 1856 the paper was increased from four pages to eight. Marx and Engels called the enlarged edition the new Free Press (see, e.g., Engels' letter to Marx of 31 March 1857, this volume, p. 117). — 76, 117
Page me40.591
†100 Part of this letter was first published in English in Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 80, 380
Page me40.591
†101 The ordre équestre (literally: the order of horsemen) — the social estate of the knights. In medieval Poland peasants who turned up for military service with a warhorse and arms of their own were enlisted in the cavalry, which entitled them to be elevated to knightly status. — 80

Page Break me40.592
Page me40.592
†102 In November 1847 Switzerland was plunged into a civil war unleashed by the Sonderbund, a separatist union of seven economically backward Catholic cantons which resisted progressive bourgeois reforms. The Guizot government of France, supported by the governments of Austria and Russia, came out in support of the Sonderbund and the Catholic Church. However, Lord Palmerston, the British Foreign Secretary, seeking to weaken France, prevented her direct intervention in Swiss affairs and thereby contributed to her further rapprochement with Russia. The rout of the Sonderbund army by the Federal forces on 23 November deprived the European powers of a pretext for further diplomatic moves in the Swiss conflict. — 81
Page me40.592
†103 In October 1856 France and Britain, fearing that the reign of reaction and terror in the Kingdom of Naples (the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies) might set off a revolutionary explosion, demanded that Ferdinand II, the Neapolitan King, should pursue a more flexible policy. Ferdinand II, confident of Austria's backing, refused to comply, whereupon France and Britain put their naval squadrons in the Mediterranean on the alert. However, the planned expedition against Naples did not take place owing to differences caused by Napoleon III's intention to instal a prince of the Bonaparte dynasty on the Neapolitan throne.
Page me40.592

By the autumn of 1856, the struggle had intensified for the union of the Danubian Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia and for an end to their dependence on the Ottoman Empire. The British government, apprehensive of France's intention to instal a member of the Bonaparte dynasty as head of the united state, and fearing the growth of Russian influence in the principalities, actively supported Austria's and Turkey's opposition to the movement for unification (this is what Marx had in mind speaking about Palmerston's alliance with Austria on the Turkish issue). However, despite the diplomatic complications and the resistance of the reactionary aristocrats, the principalities merged in 1862 to form the single state of Romania. — 81, 107, 243
Page me40.592
†104 This refers to the Crystal Palace in London (see Note 89). — 81
Page me40.592
†105 The symptoms of economic crisis, the rise in unemployment and in the cost of living, the shortage of housing and food, and the increased taxation led to more frequent manifestations of the workers' discontent in Paris and other French cities, to which the government responded with mass arrests. Those arrested were accused of putting up posters in the streets threatening property owners, landlords, usurers and even Emperor Napoleon III.
Page me40.592
The article in the Moniteur mentioned by Engels (it appeared on 24 October 1856) protested against attacks in English newspapers on the French government and some of Napoleon III's entourage. It had broad repercussions in the British press. — 82
Page me40.592
†106 Banks patterned on the French Crédit mobilier (see Note 45) were established with the latter's participation in a number of Central European countries. — 83
Page me40.592
†107 Marx used the data contained in Engels' letter and in The Manchester Guardian of 17 November 1856, also sent by Engels, in his article 'The Crisis in Europe' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 6 December 1856 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 83
Page me40.592
†108 Engels means the wars Britain waged almost incessantly as a member of various anti-French coalitions against revolutionary and Napoleonic France in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries (from 1793, when the French Republic officially declared war on it, up to the final fall of Napoleon's empire in 1815). Spain, which originally fought against France and suffered a number of defeats, concluded a separate peace with the French in 1795 and, under pressure from the French Directory, and later from Napoleon, twice sided with France in the war against Britain (1796-1802 and 1804-08). — 84

Page Break me40.593
Page me40.593
†109 Le Comité du salut public (the Committee of Public Safety) — the central body of revolutionary government in France during the Jacobin dictatorship (2 June 1793-27 July 1794). — 85
Page me40.593

†110 In September 1856 there was a royalist uprising in Neuchâtel. Many of the insurgents were arrested by the Swiss authorities. The King of Prussia insisted on their release. In reply, Switzerland demanded that he should relinquish his title to Neuchâtel. Under the pressure of France, on whose initiative a European conference on the issue was held in March 1857, Prussia was forced to renounce her claims.
Page me40.593
In the eighteenth century the principality of Neuchâtel and Valangin (in German: Neuenburg and Vallendis) was under Prussian rule. It was ceded to France in 1806, during the Napoleonic wars. In 1815, by a decision of the Vienna Congress, it was incorporated into the Swiss Confederation as its 21st canton, while remaining a vassal of Prussia. On 29 February 1848 a bourgeois revolution in Neuchâtel put an end to Prussian rule and a republic was proclaimed. Prussia, however, laid constant claims to Neuchâtel up to 1857, thus causing an acute conflict with the Swiss Republic. — 86, 88, 89
Page me40.593
†111 Marx presumably alludes to the fact that under the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna (1815) Prussia received what was known as Swedish Pomerania from Denmark. Denmark received in compensation the duchy of Lauenburg from Prussia. — 86
Page me40.593
†112 The Polish region of Silesia, part of the Austrian Empire from 1526, was seized by Prussia during the War of the Austrian Succession (1740-48) caused by the claims of several European powers, above all King Frederick II of Prussia, to the Habsburg domains, which, in default of a male heir at the death of Emperor Charles VI, went to his daughter, Maria Theresa. — 86
Page me40.593
†113 Pietism was a trend in the Lutheran Church that emerged in Germany in the seventeenth century. Distinguished by extreme mysticism, it rejected rites and attached special importance to personal religious experience. — 86, 575
Page me40.593
†114 Marx developed these ideas on Prussia's history in his article 'The Right Divine of the Hohenzollerns' (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 87
Page me40.593
†115 An allusion to the fact that in 1848 Valdenaire was a deputy to the Prussian National Assembly, in which the liberal majority favoured a constitution 'by agreement (Vereinbarung) with the Crown'. Marx and Engels ironically called the members of the Berlin Assembly 'agreers'. — 87
Page me40.593
†116 Marx means the Imperial Constitution adopted by the Frankfurt National Assembly on 28 March 1849, but rejected by most of the German governments and in the first place by the King of Prussia. In May 1849 uprisings in defence of the Constitution flared up in Saxony, Rhenish Prussia and the South German states of Baden and Palatinate. In the last two a united insurgent army was formed, in which Frederick Engels fought. The movement was led by petty-bourgeois democrats, whose vacillation and passive defence tactics doomed it to defeat. The movement was finally suppressed in July 1849. Engels described it in The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution and Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany (see present edition, Vols. 10 and 11). — 90

Page Break me40.594
Page me40.594
†117 On the eve of and during the Crimean war Bruno Bauer published the following pamphlets: Rußland und das Germanenthum, Charlottenburg, 1853; Rußland und das Germanenthum. Zweite Abtheilung. Die deutsche und die orientalische Frage, Charlottenburg, 1853; Deutschland und das Russenthum, Charlottenburg, 1854; Die jetzige Stellung Rußlands, Charlottenburg, 1854; Rußland und England, Charlottenburg, 1854 (French edition: La Russie et l'Angleterre, Charlottenburg, 1854). These works, particularly the last two, were criticised in Marx's unfinished draft 'Pamphlets über die russische Kollision von B. Bauer', written in January 1857 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 90
Page me40.594
†118 This study by Bauer was first published in Berlin in 1874 under the title Philo, Strauss und Renan und das Urchristenthum. — 91
Page me40.594
†119 In the spring of 1856 floods occurred in the valleys of the Rhône and the Loire. Feigning concern for the victims, Napoleon III visited a number of the affected towns and villages in a boat and personally handed out money. He also directed a message to the Minister of Public Works recommending measures to prevent such calamities. — 92
Page me40.594
†120 The Marx family lived in Dean Street, Soho, an overcrowded and unhealthy London district where poorer refugees lived, from December 1850 to the autumn of 1856. — 94
Page me40.594
†121 Marx means the concessions made by Switzerland to Prussia in the conflict over Neuchâtel (see Note 110).
Page me40.594
Initially, the Swiss government had flatly refused to comply with Prussia's demand for the release of the arrested royalists who had rebelled in Neuchâtel in September 1856, and declared it was prepared to resist the threatened Prussian invasion. However, under pressure from Napoleon III, who did not want a war near the French frontier, the Swiss government released those arrested on 16 January 1857. The King of Prussia replied by rescinding the mobilisation order. The conflict was settled through diplomatic channels. — 94
Page me40.594
†122 Marx presumably means the Swiss government's official report to the Federal Diet on the Prusso-Swiss conflict over Neuchâtel (see Note 110) published in the Neue Preussische Zeitung on 1 January 1857. It maintained, in particular, that contrary to the assurances of the French government, the King of Prussia had assumed no commitments vis-á-vis the Emperor of France concerning renunciation of his claims to Neuchâtel and Valangin. — 94
Page me40.594
†123 The Corps législatif was established, alongside the State Council and the Senate, under the Constitution of 14 February 1852, following the Bonapartist coup d'état of 1851. The members of the State Council and the Senate were appointed by the head of state, while the Corps législatif was an elected body, the elections being supervised by state officials and the police, so that a docile majority was always ensured. As its powers were confined to endorsing bills drawn up by the State Council, the Corps législatif was, in effect, a screen for Napoleon III's unlimited rule. — 94, 109

Page me40.594
†124 The Orleanists were supporters of the Orleans dynasty which held power in France during the July monarchy (1830-48). They upheld the interests of the financial aristocracy and the big industrial bourgeoisie. — 95, 291, 552
Page me40.594
†125 Marx means the second of Engels' articles entitled 'Mountain Warfare in the Past and Present' (see present edition, Vol. 15). The New-York Daily Tribune did not publish it. A copy of the article, written in Marx's hand, has reached us. Engels discusses the possibility of hostilities breaking out in the Swiss Alps, particularly in the area between the city of Constance, near the Lake Constance, and Basle, in the event of the Prusso-Swiss conflict over Neuchâtel (see Note 121) growing into war. — 95

Page Break me40.595
Page me40.595
†126 The letter is undated. But since it is Engels' reply to a letter from Marx of 20 January 1857 and was answered by Marx on 23 January, it was presumably written on 21 or 22 January. — 96
Page me40.595
†127 Marx alludes to the influence exerted on the New-York Daily Tribune editors by Count Gurowski, a Polish pan-Slavist journalist, of which he had been informed by Olmsted, an agent of Putnam's Monthly. Marx attributed to his influence the Tribune editors' rejection of some of his own and Engels' articles, and the delay in publishing others (see this volume, p. 81). — 98
Page me40.595
†128 The New-York Daily Tribune did not publish the article. — 98
Page me40.595
†129 This refers to the colonial war Britain was waging against Persia (Iran) in 1856-57. In October 1856 Persian troops seized the city of Herat, the centre of the principality of Herat, claimed by Persia and Afghanistan. Britain took advantage of this to declare war on Persia with a view to further expansion in the Middle East, directed against both Persia and Afghanistan. In November a British naval force captured several Persian strong points on the coast of the Persian Gulf. However, growing popular discontent in India compelled the British to hasten the conclusion of a peace treaty in March 1857, under which Persia relinquished her claims to Herat (later annexed to Afghanistan), while Britain withdrew her forces from the area. — 98, 107, 134
Page me40.595
†130 Marx probably means the formation, in 1854, of the US Republican Party, which put forward a programme to limit Negro slavery in the Southern states, and the considerable success it scored in the 1856 Presidential election, its candidate getting over 300,000 votes, one-third of the total. Howard Greeley, the publisher of the New-York Daily Tribune, was one of the party's leaders. — 98

Page me40.595
†131 A reference to the article 'Saint-Arnaud', which Engels wrote on the basis of C.L. Bazancourt's book L'expédition de Crimée (see Note 60). — 100
Page me40.595
†132 Marx means the supporters of the currency principle, one of the schools of the quantity theory of money widely subscribed to in Britain in the first half of the nineteenth century. According to this theory, the value and price of commodities are determined by the quantity of money in circulation, and economic crises are caused mainly by violations of the laws of money circulation. The proponents of the quantity theory sought to maintain the stability of money circulation by means of obligatory gold backing of bank notes. The theory provided the economic justification for Peel's Bank Acts (introduced in England in 1844, and in Scotland in 1845). Under the 1844 Act, the Bank of England was divided into a Banking Department and an Issue Department and fixed proportions were laid down between the amount of bank notes issued and the bullion required to back them. However, the actual demand for currency forced the government to suspend the Act in 1847 and 1857 and to issue paper money in excess of the fixed limit.
Page me40.595
Marx showed the untenability of the currency principle in A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (present edition, Vol. 30). He discussed the 1844 Bank Act in a number of articles (present edition, Vols. 12, 15 and 16). — 102, 126, 135, 202, 208, 215
Page me40.595
†133 The original of the letter has not been found. Only an excerpt reproduced in Freiligrath's letter of 26 February 1857 to Karl Weerth, a high school teacher in Detmold and brother of Georg Weerth, who died in Havana in July 1856, has reached us. Engels' letter was written in reply to Freiligrath's request of 11 February for enquiries to be made about Georg Weerth's papers, including his diaries, which his relatives wanted to publish in Germany. In a letter to Engels on 16 February Marx also mentioned Freiligrath's request (see this volume, pp. 100-01). On receipt of Engels' reply, Freiligrath, as he said in his letter to Karl Weerth, at once wrote to Detmold. It may therefore be assumed that Engels' letter was posted shortly before, probably about 25 February. — 103

Page Break me40.596
Page me40.596
†134 Engels means the vote of no confidence in Palmerston's government after a debate on the Anglo-Chinese conflict in the House of Commons lasting from 26 February to 3 March 1857. The conflict has been provoked by the bombardment of Canton in October 1856 in retaliation for the Chinese authorities' arrest of a contraband vessel sailing under the British flag. The bombardment was the prelude to another colonial war by Britain — later in alliance with France — against China, the Second Opium War (1856-60). After the vote Palmerston dissolved Parliament, and in the new election his candidates, who supported the aggression against China, beat the Opposition even in their stronghold, Manchester, securing a majority for Palmerston in the House of Commons. Marx dealt with these events in several articles published in the New-York Daily Tribune in March and April 1857 (see present edition, Vol. 15).

Page me40.596

The Free Traders advocated non-interference of the state in the economy. Their stronghold was Manchester (hence the Manchester School and the Manchester Party). In the 1840s and 1850s the Free Traders were an independent political group which later formed the Left wing of the Liberal Party.

Page me40.596

The Peelites were moderate Tories advocating concessions to the commercial and industrial bourgeoisie. The repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846 by their leader, Robert Peel, caused a split in the Tory party, with the Peelites forming an independent group that allied itself with the Whigs. In the late 1850s they joined the Liberal Party. — 104, 107, 109, 111, 113, 115

Page me40.596

†135 Aldermen — members of local government in Britain chosen by borough and county councils. — 104

Page me40.596

†136 The facts connected with the election campaign in Manchester and some data concerning Robert Lowe, John Potter and other candidates for Parliament related by Engels in this letter and those of 11, 20 and 31 March were used by Marx in his article 'The Defeat of Cobden, Bright and Gibson' (present edition, Vol. 15). — 104, 110, 117

Page me40.596

†137 The fraudulent machinations of the Docks Napoléon joint-stock company and the breach by Napoleon III's government of its promise to keep young Arthur Berryer, who was implicated in the machinations, out of trouble if his father, the well-known lawyer Pierre Antoine Berryer, refrained from denunciations embarrassing to the ruling quarters, were later discussed by Marx in his article 'Portents of the Day' (present edition, Vol. 15). — 105

Page me40.596

†138 The Société du dix Décembre (Society of December 10) was a secret Bonapartist society consisting mainly of déclassé elements and political adventurists. Set up in 1849, it owed its name to the election of Louis Napoleon to the Presidency of the French Republic on 10 December 1848. Marx gives a detailed description of the Society in The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 149-51, 180-82, 186, 193-96). — 107, 157, 436

Page Break me40.597

Page me40.597

†139 The secret treaty guaranteeing Turkey's frontiers was signed by Britain, France and Austria in Paris on 15 April 1856. — 107

Page me40.597

†140 From 1806 to 1808 the King of Naples was Joseph Bonaparte, elder brother of Napoleon I, and from 1808 to 1815 Joachim Murat, one of Napoleon's marshals. — 107

Page me40.597

†141 “Truly British Minister” — an allusion to Lord Russell's description of Palmerston as a champion of British interests in his House of Commons speech of 20 June 1850, in which he sought to justify Palmerston's military and diplomatic moves against Greece in connection with the burning in Athens in 1847 of the house of the merchant Pacifico, a Portuguese Jew and British subject. Lord Russell argued that Palmerston was motivated by the need to uphold the prestige of British citizens. The actual aim of Palmerston's moves was to make Greece surrender several strategic islands in the Aegean. — 107, 116, 276, 431

Page me40.597
†142 Marx means the policy of Britain's ruling quarters towards Persia, Afghanistan, China and other Asian countries during Palmerston's first term as Foreign Secretary (1830-41). Thus the British government declared the siege of Herat in November 1837 by Persian troops an act of hostility towards Britain and took advantage of it to send a naval squadron to the Persian Gulf. The Shah of Persia was forced to lift the siege in August 1838 and later to conclude a trade agreement with Britain advantageous to the latter.
Page me40.597
Palmerston was also Foreign Secretary when Britain unleashed what came to be known as the First Opium War (1840-42), which marked the first stage in turning China into a semi-colony of West European capitalist states. — 107
Page me40.597
†143 The Aberdeen coalition ministry (1852-55) consisted mainly of Peelites (break-away group of Tories) and Whigs. Junior posts were held by Radicals and leaders of the Irish faction in the House of Commons. Marx and Engels described the bankruptcy of this government of 'All the Talents' in the article 'The Late British Government' (present edition, Vol. 13, pp. 620-26). — 108
Page me40.597
†144 Marx means the massacre by government troops of participants in a mass meeting for electoral reform in St. Peter's Field near Manchester on 16 August 1819. By analogy with the battle of Waterloo it was called Peterloo.
Page me40.597
The 6 gagging acts — the six exceptional laws passed by the British Parliament in 1819 after the massacre in St. Peter's Field. Introduced by the Tory ministry, of which Palmerston was a member, they virtually abolished habeas corpus and freedom of the press and of assembly. — 108
Page me40.597
†145 An allusion to the power struggle in France that preceded the Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851. Louis Bonaparte, President of the Second Republic, was in conflict with the party of Order, the bloc of the two monarchist factions — the Legitimists, supporters of the Bourbons overthrown in 1830, and the Orleanists (see Note 124), who supported the junior (Orleans) branch of the Bourbon dynasty. The party of Order was the strongest force in the French Legislative Assembly which was disbanded by Bonaparte's supporters on 2 December 1851. — 108
Page me40.597
†146 Engels ironically compares the Polish émigrés in the Turkish service who fought on the side of the North Caucasian mountaineers against Russia to the 300 Spartans who, headed by King Leonidas, defended the Pass of Thermopylae against the army of the Persian King Xerxes I in 480 B.C. — 109
Page me40.597
†147 Engels means Tucker's Political Fly-Sheets, a series of 12 issues published by the Urquhartite Tucker in London in 1853 and 1854 and republished in 1855.

Page Break me40.598

Issues 1 and 2 contained the pamphlets 'Palmerston and Russia' and 'Palmerston and the Treaty of Unkiar-Skelessy', reproducing the content of articles 3, 4 and 5 of Marx's 8-article series on Palmerston published in The People's Paper in 1853 (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 341-406). The other issues carried mostly articles by David Urquhart also attacking Palmerston's foreign policy. — 110, 111, 115

Page me40.598

†148 This refers to those articles of Marx's series Lord Palmerston which appeared in the New-York Daily Tribune. In contrast to The People's Paper, which published all eight articles and as a consecutive whole (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 341-406), the Tribune carried only six articles, in the form of four separate leaders under different titles: 'Palmerston', corresponding to articles 1 and 2 in The People's Paper (NYDT, 19 October 1853), 'Palmerston and Russia', corresponding to article 3 (NYDT, 4 November 1853), 'A Chapter of Modern History', corresponding to articles 4 and 5 (NYDT, 21 November 1853), and 'England and Russia', corresponding to article 7 (NYDT, 11 January 1854). — 111, 115

Page me40.598

†149 Marx means the seizure by British naval forces of the Iranian port of Bushire in the Persian Gulf during the 1856-57 Anglo-Persian war (see Note 129). — 111

Page me40.598

†150 The Anti-Corn Law League was founded in 1838 by the Manchester manufacturers and Free Trade leaders Richard Cobden and John Bright. It advocated the abolition of the high import duties on agricultural produce imposed — in the interests of the landed aristocracy — by a series of Corn Laws to maintain high prices for that produce on the home market. The struggle between the industrial bourgeoisie and the landowners over the Corn Laws ended in their repeal (June 1846), after which the League announced its dissolution. Some of its branches, however, continued in existence for several years. — 113, 116, 215, 305

Page me40.598

†151 Marx means the June 1848 uprising of Paris workers, whose defeat largely predetermined the failure of the 1848-49 revolution and the subsequent period of political reaction in Europe in the 1850s. — 113

Page me40.598

†152 In his letter of 5 March 1857 Charles Dana wrote that of all of Marx's articles only the second instalment of the article on mountain warfare had not been published, and this because interest in the Swiss question had subsided. The two articles on Persia, he wrote, had been merged into one and published, while the second article on Austria's trade had been set and would be published as soon as space permitted. However, it was not until 4 August 1857 that this article entitled, like the first, 'The Maritime Commerce of Austria' actually appeared in print. — 114

Page me40.598

†153 'Geniality leaves off where money matters begin' — this remark was addressed to the King of Prussia by David Hansemann, a leader of the liberal Rhenish bourgeoisie, on 8 June 1847 at a sitting of the First United Diet, from which the government was vainly trying to obtain endorsement of a fresh loan. — 114

Page me40.598
†154 In a speech in the House of Commons on 23 February 1848 Anstey presented the facts relating to the publication in 1835, in Urquhart's series The Portfolio, of secret documents from the archives of the Grand Duke Constantine, Viceroy of Poland. The documents had been seized by Polish insurgents in 1830 and were later handed over by Polish refugees to Palmerston. It was only at the insistence of King William IV that Palmerston made them available for publication (for details see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 386-87). — 115

Page Break me40.599
Page me40.599
†155 The Peace Party or the Peace Society (Society for Promoting Permanent and Universal Peace) was an organisation founded by the Quakers in London in 1816. It was strongly supported by the Free Traders, who held that, given peace, free trade would enable Britain to make full use of her industrial superiority and thus gain economic and political supremacy. — 115
Page me40.599
†156 The Quakers (or Society of Friends) — a religious sect founded in England during the seventeenth-century revolution and later widespread in North America. The Quakers rejected the Established Church with its rites, and preached peace. — 116
Page me40.599
†157 Newalls Buildings — premises in Manchester where the Anti-Corn Law League met from 1838 onwards. — 116
Page me40.599
†158 The information contained in this letter of Engels and in those of 11, 20 and 31 March 1857 was intended for use by Marx in his articles for the New-York Daily Tribune. — 118
Page me40.599
†159 The rumour about Schramm's death proved to be false. — 119
Page me40.599
†160 The bombardment of Odessa by an Anglo-French squadron took place on 22 April 1854, soon after Britain and France joined Turkey in the war against Russia (the Crimean war, 1853-56). It was essentially a military demonstration. — 119
Page me40.599
†161 Marx refers to the Vienna Conference of 1855, which was to work out the terms for peace between the participants in the Crimean war (1853-56). It was attended by representatives of Russia, Britain, France, Austria and Turkey and lasted, with intervals, from 15 March to 4 June 1855. The conference was preceded by several rounds of talks between the Ambassadors held in 1853 and 1854 on the initiative of Austrian Foreign Minister Buol, who sought to mediate between the belligerents. The conference produced no results.
Page me40.599
Britain was represented by its Special Envoy Lord John Russell. — 119
Page me40.599

†162 The facts mentioned in this paragraph were dealt with in greater detail by Marx in his article 'Result of the Election', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 22 April 1857. — 119
Page me40.599
†163 Marx probably means one of the articles on Pan-Slavism written by Engels for the New-York Daily Tribune but not published (see Note 11). — 120
Page me40.599
†164 Engels wrote this letter in reply to Jenny Marx's of 12 April (see this volume, p. 563). The manuscript is not dated. However, the article 'Changes in the Russian Army', which was enclosed in the letter and was published in the New York Daily Tribune on 6 May 1857, was presumably sent to New York from London not later than Friday, 17 April, so the letter was probably written on about 16 April. — 121
Page me40.599
†165 A reference to Dana's letter to Marx of 6 April 1857 inviting him to contribute to The New American Cyclopaedia, 'a popular dictionary of general knowledge' prepared by a group of progressive bourgeois journalists and publishers on the New-York Daily Tribune editorial staff and edited by Charles Dana and George Ripley. It was published in 16 volumes by D. Appleton and Company, New York, in 1858-63 and reprinted in 1868-69. A number of prominent US and European scholars wrote for it. On Engels' advice Marx agreed to contribute a number of articles. But Engels wrote most of them himself so that Marx could complete his economic research. Marx wrote mainly biographical essays on military and political figures with help from Engels in dealing with the military aspect. Marx and Engels wrote their articles from revolutionary-proletarian, materialist positions notwithstanding the condition laid down by the editors that they should not express their party point of view. Because of this condition Marx limited the range of his subjects mainly to military matters and to studies on different countries, renouncing his initial intention of writing essays on the history of German philosophy, the Napoleonic Code, Chartism, socialism and communism. He held that these subjects could not be dealt with in a spirit of even apparent neutrality. It may have been for this reason also that Marx did not contribute the article 'Aesthetics', as originally planned.

Page Break me40.600
Page me40.600
The articles in The New American Cyclopaedia were published anonymously, and only volumes II, V and XVI contained lists of the authors of major articles. Marx was mentioned as the author of the articles 'Army', 'Artillery', 'Bernadotte', 'Bolivar', 'Cavalry', 'Fortification', 'Infantry', and 'Navy' (actually these articles, except for 'Bernadotte' and 'Bolivar', were written by Engels). Marx's and Engels' authorship of other articles has been established on the basis of the Marx-Engels correspondence, Charles Dana's letters to Marx, Marx's notebooks, which recorded the despatch of articles to New York, and of other archive material (conspectuses, extracts for articles, etc.). In all, the authorship of 81 articles has been established.
Page me40.600
Marx and Engels contributed to The New American Cyclopaedia from July 1857 to November 1860, their articles (those we know of) appearing in volumes I-V, VII, IX and XII. They were also included, unchanged, in the 1868-69 edition of the Cyclopaedia but were not reprinted any more during the authors' lifetime. They were collected and published in 1933 in the Soviet Union in Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XI, Part II. The most complete publications of these articles are to be found in Volumes 14 (1959) and 44 (1977) of the Second Russian Edition of the Works of Marx and Engels and in Vol. 18 of the present edition (1982). However, these publications did not include the articles 'Austerlitz', 'Augereau' and 'Badajos', of which Engels was erroneously regarded as the author. When preparing the Russian edition, the editors established the true authors of a number of articles wrongly attributed to Marx and Engels by some bibliographers. Thus the articles 'Abd-el-Kader' and 'Chartism' were written by William Humphrey, 'Austerlitz' by Henry W. Herbert, 'Epicurus' by Hermann Raster, 'Socialism' by Parke Godwin, and 'Hegel' by Henry Smith. The article 'Aesthetics' cannot be by Marx either, for it conflicts with the views on the subject expressed in his works. — 122, 134

Page me40.600
†166 The letter is not dated. Since it was in reply to Marx's letter of 21 April 1857 and Marx answered it on 23 April, Engels must have written it between these dates. — 122
Page me40.600
†167 On 26 February 1857, speaking in the House of Commons about the British government's unlawful actions in the Anglo-Chinese conflict, Cobden tabled a resolution condemning Britain's military operations in China. After a long debate the motion was adopted, resulting in a vote of no confidence in Palmerston's government (see Note 134). — 127
Page me40.600
†168 While working on Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos, Lassalle was also writing a historical drama, Franz von Sickingen. In a letter to Marx on 26 April 1857 he said that it would in a sense 'set things alight'. — 129
Page me40.600
†169 Engels arrived in London early in June 1857 and returned to Manchester at the end of the month. — 131, 136, 141, 154
Page me40.600
†170 Marx analysed this report in two articles ('Crédit mobilier') published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 30 May and 1 June 1857 (present edition, Vol. 15). — 133

Page Break me40.601
Page me40.601
†171 'Social philosophy' ('Sozialphilosophie') was the term Moses Hess used in his works of the 1840s to denote the teachings of the French Utopian socialists (Saint-Simon, Fourier and others) and the petty-bourgeois social doctrines of Proudhon. — 133
Page me40.601
†172 Most of these articles were soon written and published in The New American Cyclopaedia (in the present edition they are in Vol. 18). In addition, Engels undertook to write other 'A' articles ('Alma', 'Ammunition', 'Airey' and 'Army' — all ordered by Dana in his letter to Marx of 8 May 1857). Some articles mentioned in the list ('Axle', 'Approaches', 'Advanced Guard') were not published in the Cyclopaedia and probably not written by Engels. The articles 'Abukir', 'Anglesey' and 'Augereau' were in all probability written by other authors. — 137

Page me40.601
†173 On coming to London in early June 1857, Engels had a relapse of the ailment about which he wrote to Marx on 20 May (this volume, pp. 130-31). He probably stayed with his brother-in-law Emil Blank, husband of his sister Marie.
Page me40.601
Engels gives only 'Friday morning' as the date of this letter. In earlier editions it was dated 12 June 1857. But since it was written in early June and not later than 10 June (as can be seen from the fact that Marx wrote the draft of his letter to Collet on the back of this letter not later than 10 June — see Note 174), and moreover on a Friday, the letter can only have been written on 5 June. — 137
Page me40.601
†174 The extant draft of the letter (on the back of Engels' letter to Marx of 5 June 1857) is not dated. However, since Collet replied to Marx on 10 June 1857, it may be assumed that the letter was written about 10 June. — 138
Page me40.601
†175 The draft letter is not dated. It was written in reply to Collet's letter to Marx of 10 June, presumably immediately after it was received. — 138
Page me40.601
†176 This letter is written on Dana's letter to Marx of 11 June 1857, which Marx mentions in the first lines. Dana wrote telling Marx that he was returning the manuscript of the article 'Saint-Arnaud' (see Note 60) rejected by Putnam's Monthly; Dana did not advise him to write the article 'Ships against Walls' because the editors refused to guarantee its publication. He also wrote that he hoped to be receiving articles for The New American Cyclopaedia soon. — 140
Page me40.601
†177 Marx means the list of articles for The New American Cyclopaedia which he sent to Dana following the one drawn up by Engels on 28 May 1857 (see this volume, pp. 136-37). This list is not extant. — 142
Page me40.601
†178 Marx refers to the Indian uprising of 1857-59 against British rule. It flared up in May 1857 among the Sepoy units of the Bengal army and spread to large areas of Northern and Central India. (Sepoys were mercenary soldiers recruited from among the Indians and serving under British officers.) Its main strength was provided by the peasants and the poor artisans. Directed by local feudal lords, the uprising was put down owing to the country's disunity, religious and caste differences, and the military and technical superiority of the colonialists. — 142, 146, 413, 566
Page me40.601
†179 Mazzini, who secretly arrived in Genoa at the end of June 1857, and other supporters of revolutionary action, attempted to start an uprising in Italy with a view to liberating and uniting the country. A detachment of revolutionaries led by Pizacono seized a ship bound for Tunis from Genoa and landed in the Kingdom of Naples. Attempts were also made to start uprisings in Leghorn and Genoa but, like the expedition to the South, they also failed. Pizacono and many of his associates perished in clashes with Neapolitan troops. Mazzini managed to avoid arrest and return to London. — 142

Page Break me40.602

Page me40.602
†180 This refers to excerpts which Marx made from the various sources on the military history of antiquity for Engels, who was working on the article 'Army' for The New American Cyclopaedia. The notes from the encyclopaedias of Ersch-Gruber and Pauly mentioned below in the text are extant. Marx also made excerpts, probably later, from Wilkinson's three-volume Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, London, 1837. — 147, 565
Page me40.602
†181 A reference to the second batch of 'A' articles which Engels wrote for The New American Cyclopaedia in accordance with his list (see this volume, pp. 136-37). Judging by an entry in Marx's notebook made on 24 July 1857, Marx sent these articles to New York with the first batch of 'A' articles received from Engels on 14 July (see this volume, p. 146). — 148, 159
Page me40.602
†182 The Loan Societies — a variety of the Friendly Societies in England (see Note 76) — granted workers low-interest loans repayable in instalments. Their funds, like those of the Friendly Societies, consisted of membership dues. Loans could be made to non-members, provided they had two reliable guarantors. — 148, 328
Page me40.602
†183 From 27 July to 8 November 1857 Engels underwent medical treatment at the seaside: at Waterloo near Liverpool (until the end of August, when he returned to Manchester for a fortnight in view of his father's arrival there), at Ryde on the Isle of Wight (from the 8th to the end of September), and in Jersey (until 8 November), whence he returned to Manchester. — 149, 154, 160, 195
Page me40.602
†184 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in K. Marx and F. Engels, The First Indian War of Independence 1857-1859, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow [1959]. — 151, 233
Page me40.602
†185 The letter Engels sent to Jenny Marx from Waterloo, presumably about 11 August 1857, has not been found. It was written in reply to Marx's letter to Engels of 9 August. — 151
Page me40.602
†186 Marx based his assumption of the possible retreat of the British troops from Delhi on the numerical superiority of the insurgents, who had captured this important fortress in the middle of May 1857, soon after the beginning of the Indian uprising (see Note 178). But the insurgents, who adhered to the tactics of passive defence and were demoralised by the treacherous behaviour of the local feudal lords, failed to take advantage of their superiority. This enabled the British to hold out until they received reinforcements. In mid-September they took Delhi. — 152
Page me40.602

†187 The reference is presumably to articles for The New American Cyclopaedia or to material for articles which Marx intended to write for it with Engels' help on military questions. — 153
Page me40.602
†188 Conrad Schramm, a member of the Communist League and a close friend of Marx and Engels, was ill with tuberculosis. In 1852 he went to the USA hoping to earn a living and improve his health. In the summer of 1857 he returned to London and, his condition having worsened, he was immediately placed in a hospital for German refugees. On 20 September he moved to Jersey where

Page Break me40.603
Engels too soon came for treatment. Schramm died on 15 January 1858. — 158, 171, 312
Page me40.603
†189 The letter, written presumably on 11 August 1857, when Marx despatched articles for The New American Cyclopaedia, has not been found. — 159
Page me40.603
†190 This letter was published in earlier editions without the notes on Bennigsen and Barclay which Engels made for Marx's biographical articles for The New American Cyclopaedia (see Note 165). The notes were first published — separately from the letter — in 1977, in Vol. 44 of the Second Russian Edition of the Works of Marx and Engels, under the editorial heading 'Bennigsen and Barclay'. In the present edition the letter is published in full with the notes for the first time. — 162
Page me40.603
†191 Here and below Engels describes events during the war of the Fourth Coalition (Britain, Russia, Prussia and Sweden) against Napoleonic France. After the defeat of the Prussian army by Napoleon in the spring of 1806 the main theatre of war shifted to East Prussia, where Napoleon encountered stubborn resistance from the allied army of Russia and Prussia.
Page me40.603
The battle of Preussisch-Eylau on 7-8 February 1807 between the French army and Russian and Prussian forces was indecisive. — 162, 170, 175
Page me40.603
†192 The French laid siege to Danzig (Gdansk) in March 1807. The garrison, consisting of Prussian troops and a Russian detachment, offered stubborn resistance. The fortress surrendered to superior enemy forces at the end of May 1807. — 162
Page me40.603
†193 The battle of Smolensk, during the Patriotic War of Russia against Napoleon, took place on 16-18 August 1812. Units of the First and Second Russian armies (commanded by Barclay de Tolly and Bagration) which had joined up on 3 August rebuffed the attacks of Napoleon's troops to cover the withdrawal of the main forces. At the cost of heavy losses Napoleon captured the city, which was abandoned by the Russian rearguard after the main forces had withdrawn. — 163
Page me40.603
†194 This passage reflects the tendentious presentation of the events of the Patriotic War of Russia, 1812, in Jomini's Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon (Vols. 1-4, Paris, 1827) and other books (e.g. Bernhardi's Denkwürdigkeiten aus dem Leben ... des Grafen von Toll, Vols. 1-4, Leipzig, 1856), which Engels used as sources. In particular, they contain inaccuracies in explaining why Mikhail Kutuzov, newly appointed commander-in-chief of the Russian army, abandoned the position at Gzhatsk (more precisely at Tsarevo-Zaimishche), which it had occupied since 29 August 1812, and withdrew to Borodino. Kutuzov did so because he intended to give decisive battle with a more favourable balance of forces, for which it was necessary to win time and bring up reinforcements. The battle of Borodino was fought on 7 September. It brought about a turn in the war in Russia's favour, despite the forced but expedient abandonment of Moscow. — 164

Page me40.603

†195 In the final version of their article 'Barclay de Tolly' Marx and Engels gave a more accurate description of Barclay's role. There the remark concerning the predominance of administrative and diplomatic functions in Barclay's activities during the war of the Sixth Coalition (Russia, Austria, Prussia, Britain, Spain, Sweden and other countries) against Napoleonic France, applied only to the 1814 campaign, and Barclay's role as military commander in a number of battles during the 1813 campaign is noted. — 164

Page Break me40.604

Page me40.604

†196 Published here are three short texts by Engels, probably fragments of a letter to Marx of 11 or 12 September 1857 which has not been preserved in full. Like other letters written at the time, they reflect Engels' help to Marx in writing biographical articles for The New American Cyclopaedia.

Page me40.604

The first and third fragments (written on separate sheets) were published in the Second Russian Edition of the Works of Marx and Engels as the letter in question. The second fragment (written on two sheets) has never been published before. The approximate date of writing has been established on the basis of the previous letter of Engels to Marx, written on 10 September, and Marx's replies written on 15 and 17 September 1857.

Page me40.604

The order in which the fragments are presented in this volume is the order in which they are assumed to have been written. — 164

Page me40.604

†197 At the battle of Grossbeeren on 23 August and of Dennewitz on 6 September 1813, the Prussian corps under Bülow defeated the French. Both battles took place during the war of the Sixth Coalition (Russia, Austria, Prussia, Britain, Spain, Sweden and other countries) against Napoleonic France. In the 1813 campaign Bernadotte commanded the allied Northern Army, which included Bülow's corps. — 164, 274

Page me40.604

†198 At the battle of Leipzig (16-19 October 1813) the allied armies of Russia, Austria, Prussia and Sweden defeated Napoleon and his allies. This 'battle of the nations' led to Germany's liberation from Napoleon's rule. — 165, 179

Page me40.604

†199 The Directory (consisting of five directors of whom one was re-elected every year) was the leading executive body in France set up under the 1795 Constitution. It governed France until Bonaparte's coup d'état of 1799 and expressed the interests of the big bourgeoisie. — 165
Page me40.604
†200 Engels refers to the military operations in Transylvania (then part of Hungary) of a revolutionary army against the Austrian forces, Romanian detachments, provoked into action against Hungary by the Austrian authorities, and a Russian detachment sent by the Tsarist government to help the Habsburg Empire. Started under Bem's command in December 1848, during the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, this campaign ended a few months later in the practically complete liberation of Transylvania from the counter-revolutionary forces. However, in the second Transylvanian campaign (mentioned below) called forth by a new concentration of counter-revolutionaries in the summer of 1849 and the arrival of fresh contingents of Tsarist troops, Bem's entire army was routed at the end of July 1849 and he himself had to flee to Turkey. — 167
Page me40.604
†201 Bem's march into the Banat (a region in the Serbian Voivodina, then part of Hungary) was undertaken in the spring of 1849 to put down the Serbian movement for autonomy incited by the Austrian authorities and influenced by the Serbian big bourgeoisie, nobility and clergy. As in Transylvania, the struggle in the Banat with its population of Hungarians, Germans and Romanians as well as Serbs, was complicated by clashes between Serbians and non-Serbians, and the erroneous stand adopted by the Hungarian bourgeois and aristocratic revolutionaries on the national question. Only on 28 July 1849, shortly before the fall of the Hungarian Republic, did they officially agree to recognise the equality of all nationalities inhabiting Hungary. — 167
Page me40.604
†202 The last two of these articles, 'Blum' and 'Bourrienne', were not ready for

Page Break me40.605
despatch to New York that day. As is seen from Marx's notebook, they were sent off to Charles Dana on 22 September 1857. — 168
Page me40.605
†203 Here and below Marx writes about Bem's participation in the Polish national liberation uprising of November 1830-October 1831. The majority of its participants were revolutionary gentry (szlachta) and its leaders came mostly from the aristocracy. It was suppressed by the Russian army with the support of Prussia and Austria.
Page me40.605
At the battle of Iganin on 10 May 1831 the Polish insurgents were victorious in a clash with Russian troops.
Page me40.605
At the battle of Ostrolenka on 26 May 1831 the Polish insurgents were defeated by Russian forces under Dibich. The final blow was delivered when the Russians captured Warsaw (see below) after storming its suburb Vola on 6 September. The remnants of the insurgent army fled to Prussia and Austria. — 169, 172
Page me40.605

†204 The battle of Austerlitz (see Note 46) was an important event in the war of the Third Coalition (Austria, Russia, Britain and Sweden) against Napoleonic France (1805). — 170, 174
Page me40.605
†205 On the battle of Jena on 14 October 1806 see Note 46. The same day Marshal Davout's army defeated the main Prussian forces at Auerstädt. The defeat of Prussia in these two battles led to the quick occupation of the Kingdom of Prussia by the French and to the retreat of the remnants of the Prussian army to the eastern frontier.
Page me40.605
These battles occurred during the war of the Fourth Coalition against Napoleonic France (see Note 191). — 174, 178
Page me40.605
†206 At the battle of Wagram (Austria) on 5-6 July 1809 during the war of the Fifth Coalition (Austria, Britain), Napoleon's army defeated the Austrians. — 170, 175, 176
Page me40.605
†207 An entry in Marx's notebook shows that he sent Engels' articles 'Algeria' and 'Ammunition' to New York on 18 September 1857. — 173
Page me40.605
†208 A reference to the Treaty of the Tafna of 30 May 1837 between Bugeaud and Abd-el-Kader, the leader of the Algerian liberation war which lasted, with short intervals, from 1832 to 1847. The French had resumed operations against Abd-el-Kader in 1835 in violation of the peace treaty concluded a year earlier. Under the treaty of the Tafna France again recognised the independence of Abd-el-Kader's state in Western Algeria, except for a few coastal towns. In 1839 the peace was again violated by the French, and the Algerian liberation struggle was resumed. When working on the article 'Bugeaud', Marx took into account Engels' opinion of this general. In particular, enlarging upon Engels' remark about Bugeaud's venality, Marx wrote: 'A secret article, not reduced to writing, stipulated that 30,000 boojoos (about $12,000) should be paid to Gen. Bugeaud' (present edition, Vol. 18, p. 212). — 177
Page me40.605
†209 The battle of the Alma took place on 20 September 1854 between the Russian forces and the numerically superior allied forces of the French, British and Turks. It was the first battle after the Allies' landing in the Crimea (at Eupatoria) on 14 September. The defeat and withdrawal of the Russian forces left the road to Sevastopol open for the Allies.
Page me40.605
The battle of Balaklava (mentioned below in the text) between the Russian and the allied Anglo-French and Turkish forces took place on 25 October 1854. Units of the Russian army tried to cut off the English and Turkish troops taking part in the siege of Sevastopol from their base in Balaklava. They succeeded in inflicting serious losses on the enemy, especially on the English cavalry, but failed to achieve their main objective. — 177, 297

Page Break me40.606
Page me40.606

†210 A reference to the siege of Sevastopol by the French and British troops during the Crimean War (1853-56) which lasted from September 1854 to August 1855 (349 days). — 178
Page me40.606
†211 This campaign took place during the war of the European coalition (Austria, Prussia, Britain, the Netherlands, Spain, Piedmont, Naples and other monarchies) (1792-97) against the French Republic. Prussia, a member of the coalition from 1792, concluded a separate peace with France in Basle in 1795. — 178
Page me40.606
†212 The Tugendbund (Union of Virtue) — one of the patriotic societies founded in Prussia after its defeat by Napoleonic France in 1806-07. It united representatives of the liberal nobility and the bourgeois intelligentsia and aimed at spreading the idea of an anti-Napoleonic liberation war and supporting moderate liberal reforms in Prussia. The Tugendbund was banned on Napoleon's demand on 31 December 1809 by Frederick William III, who also feared its activities. However, it continued to exist secretly until the end of the Napoleonic wars. — 178
Page me40.606
†213 An allusion to the 1848-49 revolutionary movement in Baden. The German petty-bourgeois democrat and journalist Blind took part in it, while the German republican Hecker was a military leader in the Baden uprising in April 1848. — 179
Page me40.606
†214 The battle of the Katzbach (Silesia) was fought on 26 August 1813 during the war of the Sixth Coalition (Russia, Prussia, Austria, Britain, Sweden, Spain and Portugal) against Napoleonic France. The Silesian army, commanded by Blücher and consisting of a Prussian corps under York and two Russian corps under Langeron and Sacken, defeated the French army of Marshal Macdonald. — 179
Page me40.606
†215 At the battle of Dresden on 26-27 August 1813 Napoleon's army routed the allied forces of Austria, Prussia and Russia (the Bohemian or chief army), commanded by the Austrian Field Marshal Schwarzenberg. — 179
Page me40.606
†216 In a number of battles in the Montmirail region (east of Paris) Napoleon defeated separate units of Blücher's Silesian army in mid-February 1814 by taking advantage of their isolation from one another. — 180
Page me40.606
†217 At the battle of Waterloo on 18 June 1815 the Anglo-Dutch and Prussian forces commanded by the Duke of Wellington and Blücher defeated Napoleon's army, thus deciding the allies' final victory over Napoleonic France. The outcome of the battle of Waterloo is credited to Blücher's army which was defeated by Napoleon at Ligny on 16 June but managed to escape French pursuit and join up with the Anglo-Dutch forces. — 180, 357
Page me40.606
†218 Marx's notebook contains an entry of 29 September 1857 about the despatch to New York of his article 'Bessiéres' and the articles 'Bem' and 'Bosquet' written jointly with Engels. — 181
Page me40.606

†219 As is seen from Marx's notebook, in September and October 1857 he wrote for the New-York Daily Tribune a series of five articles on the state of the Second Empire's finances and Napoleon III's financial policy. The articles were not printed. The manuscripts have not been found. — 181, 297

Page Break me40.607
Page me40.607
†220 The letter is written on notepaper bearing a picture of the ruins of a castle and the inscription: 'Carisbrooke Castle, Isle of Wight'.
Page me40.607
On the first English publication of this letter see Note 184. — 182
Page me40.607
†221 The Mahratta principalities (the Mahrattas or Marathas inhabited a large territory in Western India) were formed on the territory of the Mahratta state, which arose in the latter half of the seventeenth century during the struggle against the Empire of the Great Moguls. Later, particularly in the 1730s and 1740s, it underwent a process of feudal decentralisation. The confederation of the Mahratta principalities thus formed disintegrated in the second half of the eighteenth century. Weakened by the struggle with the Afghans and internal strife the principalities fell prey to the British East India Company which annexed a considerable part of their territories in the three Anglo-Mahratta wars (1775-82, 1803-05 and 1817-18) and made the remaining princes its vassals. — 185
Page me40.607
†222 Marx used the contents of Engels' letter for his two articles, 'The Revolt in India', written on 29 September and 6 October 1857 (see present edition, Vol. 15). The purely military evaluation of possible British operations intended by Engels for Marx's information was supplemented with the political assessment of the aims of the Indian national liberation movement and the efforts of the British colonialists to preserve their rule in India. — 185
Page me40.607
†223 As is seen from entries in Marx's notebook, on 29 September 1857 he sent to New York, besides 'Battery', three articles received from Engels: 'Bivouac', 'Blindage' and 'Bonnet'; on 6 October, he despatched one more batch of 'B' articles: 'Bomb'; 'Bomb-Ketch', 'Bomb-Proof', 'Bomb Vessel', 'Bombardier' and 'Bombardment'. — 185
Page me40.607
†224 An abridged English translation of this letter was first published in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. The letter was published in full in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 186
Page me40.607
†225 Peculium castrense (lit. camp property) (Roman law) — property given by fathers to sons during and for military service and which they could dispose of as they liked independently of their fathers' will.
Page me40.607

Fabri — craftsmen in the Roman army engaged in building bridges, putting up defence and siege works, making arms, etc. They were formed into special detachments. — 186
Page me40.607
†226 Condottieri — leaders of mercenary troops in the service of princes, city republics and Popes in Italy in the fourteenth to sixteenth centuries. Some of them usurped power in individual Italian states and founded new princely dynasties. — 187
Page me40.607
†227 Engels' letter to Marx of 24 September 1857 shows that he proposed to stay in Brighton on 29-30 September, on his way to Jersey to complete his medical treatment (see Note 183). Available sources do not establish with certainty whether Engels and Marx met at the appointed time, but we know from Marx's own words (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 85) that he and Engels visited their sick friend Conrad Schramm in Jersey, most probably at the beginning of October 1857. — 187

Page Break me40.608
Page me40.608
†228 The letter is written on notepaper bearing a view of the Gulf of St. Catherine in Jersey from the pier. — 187
Page me40.608
†229 Harney, the former leader of revolutionary Chartism, withdrew from the labour movement in the first half of the 1850s, when there was a general decline in the English proletariat's political activity. In the autumn of 1855 he went to St. Hélier, the capital of Jersey, to convey an address of solidarity from British radicals to Victor Hugo on the occasion of the British decision to expel him and other French emigrants from the island (see Note 16). Harney settled there and in mid-1856 became editor of The Jersey Independent, whicn he devoted almost entirely to local problems, criticising the local system from bourgeois-radical positions. — 188
Page me40.608
†230 Hejira (or Hegira) — the flight of Mohammed and his followers from Mecca to Medina in 622, from which the Mohammedan era is dated.
Page me40.608
Here Engels alludes to the expulsion of French petty-bourgeois democratic refugees from Jersey in the autumn of 1855 (see Note 16), and calls them crapauds (philistines) (see Note 81). — 188
Page me40.608
†231 Vendée — a department in the west of France. During the French Revolution it was the centre of a royalist revolt in March 1793 in which the local peasant masses took part. The revolt was suppressed in 1795 but attempts to revive it were made in 1799 and later. — 189
Page me40.608
†232 Engels refers to the list of articles beginning with 'C' for The New American Cyclopaedia which Dana sent Marx. Neither the list nor Engels' comments on it have been preserved. — 189, 190
Page me40.608

†233 The letter is written on notepaper bearing a picture of a cave on the Gréve au Lançon in Jersey. — 190
Page me40.608
†234 Engels refers to the preliminary draft of the article 'Armada' for The New American Cyclopaedia which he wrote on the basis of excerpts made by Marx from various sources. Marx put the finishing touches to Engels' text. The material Engels sent for the Cyclopaedia presumably included also the article 'Ayacucho', to which Marx added a final paragraph before sending it and the article 'Armada' to New York on 23 October 1857, as an entry in his notebook shows (for these articles see present edition, Vol. 18). — 190
Page me40.608
†235 This refers to the article 'Artillery', which Charles Dana asked Marx to write for The New American Cyclopaedia early in May 1857. Engels undertook to write the article but, busy with 'Army' and smaller articles for the Cyclopaedia, he did not begin it till after 19 October. Marx and Engels did not expect that the article could still be included in the current volume with the 'A' articles and thought, as this and the following letters show, that it could be inserted in some other volume, under the title 'Cannon' or as a historical part of the corresponding article ('The History of Cannon'). However, the article was finished by the end of November, despatched to New York on the 27th of that month, and included in Vol. II of the Cyclopaedia under the original title 'Artillery'. — 190, 195, 198, 199, 200, 207, 251
Page me40.608
†236 The letter is written on notepaper with a picture of Princes Tower in Jersey. On the first English publication of this letter see Note 184. — 195
Page me40.608
†237 Many remnants of feudalism still survived in Jersey at the time. Local big landowners, lawyers and bankers (François Godfrey in particular) controlled all administrative institutions and the Royal Court. The radical Reform League

Page Break me40.609
(consisting of local traders, small shipowners and bank clerks), founded by Harney in September 1857, and The Jersey Independent edited by him, came out against their arbitrary rule and encroachments on the interests of tenants. — 196, 264, 308
Page me40.609
†238 Further on Engels describes the siege and storming of the insurgent-held fortress of Delhi by British troops during the Indian uprising of 1857-59 (see Note 178). The city fell on 19-20 September 1857. Engels dealt with these events in his article 'The Capture of Delhi' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 5 December 1857 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 197
Page me40.609
†239 The New American Cyclopaedia carried the article 'Blücher' by Marx and Engels without any sub-titles (see present edition, Vol. 18). — 198
Page me40.609
†240 Marx proposed to meet Engels who was returning from Jersey to Manchester via London after his long stay at the seaside (see Note 183). The two friends did not meet, probably because of the 'bad arrangements of the railway Company in Brighton', as Engels wrote to Marx on 15 November 1857 (see p. 200). Marx may also have confused the date of Engels' arrival in London: he was to be there on 9 November (Monday) and not on the 5th (Thursday). So Marx's remark 'a week ago on Thursday' seems to be a mistake. Besides, from the above-mentioned letter of Engels it transpires that it was on the Monday that their meeting was to take place. — 199

Page me40.609
†241 Marx seems to refer to his two articles ('The Revolt in India') published as leaders in the New-York Daily Tribune on 13 and 23 October 1857. When Marx wrote them, at the end of September and the beginning of October, he did not have sufficient information on the British siege of Delhi (which was finally captured on 20 September) and assumed that a successful storm of Delhi was hardly possible. — 199
Page me40.609
†242 Engels' information on the rapid increase in exports of English textile goods to India was used by Marx in his article 'The Financial Crisis in Europe', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 22 December 1857 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 202
Page me40.609
†243 The discovery of gold in California in 1848 and in Australia in 1851 helped to overcome the 1847 economic crisis and its aftermath. The temporary revival of industry and trade after the crisis was also due, to a certain extent, to European and American goods gaining access to the Chinese market as a result of the Anglo-Chinese war of 1840-42 (known as the first Opium War). In 1857, however, this access was hampered by a new military conflict of the European powers with China (see Note 134). — 203
Page me40.609
†244 Ruge's intention to publish a new periodical to succeed to the Deutsche Jahrbücher für Wissenschaft und Kunst (published in 1841-43) did not materialise. — 209, 227
Page me40.609
†245 Ernest Jones proposed as early as April 1857 to hold such a conference and to invite bourgeois radicals. In calling for an alliance with the radicals in order to campaign jointly for electoral reform Jones hoped to revive the mass Chartist movement on this basis. However, he made serious political concessions to the radicals when working out a common platform for uniting with them. Of the six points of the People's Charter (universal suffrage, annual Parliaments, vote by secret ballot, equal constituencies, abolition of property qualifications for candidates to Parliament, and payment of M.P.s) he retained only the demand for universal manhood suffrage. Jones' conciliatory policy caused discontent among the rank-and-file of the National Charter Association. After repeated postponements a joint conference of Chartists and bourgeois radicals was convened in London on 8 February 1858. Marx and Engels regarded Jones' conciliation with the radicals as a manifestation of his political vacillation and broke off their friendly relations with him until a few years later, when Jones again adopted a revolutionary stand. — 210, 249, 264, 375

Page Break me40.610
Page me40.610

†246 George Peabody was a big American financier. From 1851 onwards, he gave annual dinners in London to British aristocrats and American guests to mark the anniversary of US independence (proclaimed on 4 July 1776). — 212, 567
Page me40.610
†247 Engels' information on Hamburg bankruptcies was reproduced almost word for word by Marx in his article 'The Crisis in Europe', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 5 January 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 213
Page me40.610
†248 Marx dealt in greater detail with the consequences of the repeal of the Corn Laws during the crisis in his article 'The Financial Crisis in Europe', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 22 December 1857 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 215
Page me40.610
†249 This refers to the Hamburger Garantie-Diskonto-Verein founded at the end of November 1857 in connection with the money crisis in Hamburg, to facilitate the circulation of bills and banknotes bearing the stamp of this association. — 216
Page me40.610
†250 In the summer of 1857 Marx began to write a series of economic manuscripts in order to sum up and systematise the results of his extensive economic research started in the 1840s and continued most intensively in the 1850s. (In the first half of the 1850s he filled 24 paginated and several unpaginated notebooks with excerpts from the works of bourgeois economists, books of statistics, documents and periodicals.) These manuscripts were preliminary versions of an extensive economic work in which he intended to investigate the laws governing the development of capitalist production and to criticise bourgeois political economy. Marx outlined the main points of this treatise in an unfinished draft of the 'Introduction' (one of the first manuscripts of the series) and in letters to Engels, Lassalle and Weydemeyer (see pp. 298-304, 269-71, 286-87, 376-78). Further economic study prompted Marx to specify and change his original plan. The central place in the series is occupied by the extensive manuscript, Critique of Political Economy (widely known as the Grundrisse), on which Marx worked from October 1857 to May 1858. In this preliminary draft of his future Capital Marx expounded his theory of surplus value. After the first instalment had been prepared for publication in 1859 under the title A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, Marx added several more manuscripts to the series in 1861.
Page me40.610
The manuscripts of 1857-61 were first published in German by the Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU in 1939 under the editorial heading Grundrisse der Kritik der politischen Ökonomie (Rohentwurf). These manuscripts and A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Part One are included in Vols. 29 and 30 of the present edition. — 217, 224, 226, 238, 244, 249, 256, 270, 287, 307, 499, 566.
Page me40.610
†251 This is a postscript to Mrs Marx's letter of 8 December 1857 to Conrad Schramm (see pp. 566-68). — 217
Page me40.610
†252 Marx slightly changed the wording of this passage in his article 'The Crisis in

Page Break me40.611

Europe' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 5 January 1858, quoting it as a passage from a private letter from Manchester (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 222
Page me40.611
†253 This idea did not materialise. — 224
Page me40.611
†254 In his letter of 17 December 1857 to Marx, Lassalle enclosed a letter from his cousin Max Friedländer to Marx inviting him to contribute to the Vienna newspaper, Die Presse. Friedländer became one of its editors in 1856. Previously he had taken part in publishing the democratic paper Neue Oder-Zeitung, to which Marx also contributed throughout 1855. Not knowing the political line of Die Presse at the time, Marx did not agree, one of the reasons being probably the condition imposed by Friedländer: to criticise Napoleon III's policy and abstain from attacking Palmerston. In 1859 negotiations with Friedländer were resumed and lasted for a long time. Their success was hampered, on the one hand, by Lassalle's pro-Bonapartist statements during the Italian war of 1859 which evoked dissatisfaction on the part of Friedländer, who for a time thought that Marx approved of these statements, and on the other hand, by the editors' tendency to be duped by the pseudo-constitutional demagogy of the new Austrian government of Schmerling, which put Marx on the alert. Only in October 1861 when Die Presse criticised the government did Marx agree to be its London correspondent. — 226, 227, 269, 272, 416, 418, 455, 571
Page me40.611
†255 Crédit foncier (Land Credit) — a French joint-stock bank set up in 1852 on the basis of the former Paris Land Bank. It granted short- and long-term loans on the security of immovable property at a definite interest. The Crédit foncier received considerable subsidies from the government.
Page me40.611
Comptoir national d'Escompte de Paris (National Discount Bank of Paris) was founded in 1848 by the Provisional Government of the French Republic. Originally it discounted bills and granted credits on the security of goods stored in public warehouses. Under Napoleon III it became a joint-stock society (in 1853) and acquired the privilege of making advances on government bonds and shares of industrial and credit companies. — 230
Page me40.611
†256 The Zollverein, a union of German states which established a common customs frontier, was set up in 1834 under the aegis of Prussia. Brought into being by the need to create an all-German market, the Customs Union subsequently embraced all the German states except Austria and a few of the smaller states. — 230
Page me40.611
†257 Some of the thoughts expressed by Marx in this letter were developed in his article 'The Crisis in France', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 12 January 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 232
Page me40.611
†258 Further Engels refers to an episode in the Indian uprising of 1857-59 (see Note 178). After the fall of Delhi and Cawnpore in the summer of 1857, the centre of resistance to the British shifted to Oudh. A British garrison was besieged in Lucknow, the capital of that state, by the remnants of the Sepoy army and Oudh insurgents. General

Havelock's force sent to relieve the garrison reached it in September but was compelled to remain besieged with it. It was not until November 1857 that the garrison was relieved by a force under General Colin Campbell from Cawnpore (Engels describes this episode). However, the insurgents' successful operations in Campbell's rear compelled him to leave Lucknow and return to Cawnpore. Campbell undertook another campaign to Lucknow three months later and captured the city on 19 March 1858. — 234

Page Break me40.612
Page me40.612
†259 According to Marx's notebook, on 27 November 1857 he sent two articles to The New American Cyclopaedia: Engels' 'Artillery' and his own 'Bugeaud'. — 238
Page me40.612
†260 Engels' reply to Marx's letter of 22 December 1857 (see this volume, pp. 227-28) has not been found. — 239, 242, 250
Page me40.612
†261 Engels' article 'Army' for The New American Cyclopaedia (on Marx's and Engels' contribution to the Cyclopaedia see Note 165) was published not in Vol. I but in Vol. II, which appeared in 1858. — 239
Page me40.612
†262 On 7 January 1858 Engels sent Marx three 'C' articles: 'Campaign', 'Cannonade' and 'Captain', which, according to an entry in Marx's notebook, were despatched to New York the next day with Marx's articles 'The Siege and Storm of Lucknow' and 'Bolivar y Ponte'. — 241, 244
Page me40.612
†263 The article 'Caps (Percussion)' was not printed in The New American Cyclopaedia. — 241, 257, 259
Page me40.612
†264 Marx refers to statistical data on England's balance of trade and the cost of her imports and exports during the Crimean war, 1854-56. He obtained these figures from a report of the Manchester Foreign Affairs Committee (see Note 57), which was sent to him by the editors of the Urquhartite newspaper The Free Press before it was published. The Free Press itself did not publish it until 13 January 1858. Marx used these figures in his article 'British Commerce' (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 243
Page me40.612
†265 During the march of General Campbell's troops from Cawnpore to Lucknow in November 1857 to relieve the garrison besieged by the Indian insurgents (see Note 258), General Windham's force, left behind to protect Cawnpore, was defeated by the insurgents on 27 November. This forced Campbell to return hastily to retake Cawnpore instead of consolidating in Lucknow. Later Engels described these events in the article 'Windham's Defeat', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 20 February 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 244
Page me40.612
†266 The original letter is dated 14 January 1858, which is an obvious slip of the pen. In fact the letter could not have been written earlier than 16 January for in it Marx informed Engels of Conrad Schramm's death on 15 January 1858, acknowledged receipt of Engels' article 'The Relief of Lucknow' despatched from Manchester to London on 14

January, as we see from Engels' letter of that date, and answered questions put to him in that same letter. Besides, in a letter to Engels on 23 January 1858 Marx mentioned this letter, saying it was 'sent off a week ago today', i.e., 16 January.
Page me40.612
On the first English publication of this letter (datelined 14 January 1858) see Note 1. — 248
Page me40.612
†267 Marx refers to the Great Redan, Bastion No. 3 of the Sevastopol fortifications, which was attacked by the British at the time of the allies' decisive storm of the fortress on 8 September 1855, during the Crimean war (1853-56) of Britain, France, Turkey and Piedmont against Russia. The storm was repulsed by Sevastopol defenders. On this episode and Windham's role in it see Engels' article 'The Great Event of the War' (present edition, Vol. 14).
Page me40.612
On Windham's defeat by the Indian insurgents in November 1857 see Note 265. — 249
Page me40.612
†268 Marx wrote about this in his articles on the Indian national liberation uprising, in particular in those published in the New-York Daily Tribune: 'The Revolt in India' (4 August 1857), 'Indian News' (14 August 1857), 'State of the Indian

Page Break me40.613
Insurrection' (18 August 1857), etc. (present edition, Vol. 15). — 249
Page me40.613
†269 On 22 January 1858 Marx made an entry in his notebook about the receipt from Engels and the despatch to New York of the second batch of 'C' articles for The New American Cyclopaedia, in particular 'Carabine', 'Carabineers', 'Carcass', 'Carronade', 'Cartouche', 'Cartridge' and 'Case Shot' (see present edition, Vol. 18). The article 'Carabineers' was not published in the Cyclopaedia nor has the manuscript been preserved. — 251
Page me40.613
†270 At the end of his article 'Albuera' Engels noted that the siege of the French-held fortress of Badajos (Southwestern Spain) by the allied forces of Britain, Spain and Portugal was raised the day after their victory over the French at Albuera on 16 May 1811 (see present edition, Vol. 18, pp. 10-11). In fact the fortress was besieged by the allies three times during the Peninsular War between Britain and Napoleonic France. The first siege in May 1811 was lifted before the battle of Albuera because of the approaching French reserves. On 25 May, following the victory at Albuera, the allies resumed the siege but they were forced to raise it on 17 June. The allies laid siege to Badajos for the third time in March 1812 and took it on 6 April. As Engels pointed out in his letter to Marx on 18 February 1858 (see this volume, p. 267), the inaccuracy in the article 'Albuera' is accounted for by a mistake in one of the sources he used. — 251, 252, 267
Page me40.613
†271 Marx refers to an attempt on the life of Napoleon III by the Italian revolutionary Felice Orsini on 14 January 1858. Orsini hoped thus to give an impetus to revolutionary actions in Europe and activate the struggle for Italy's unification. The attempt failed and Orsini was executed on 13 March of that year. — 251, 255, 256, 257, 266, 271, 289

Page me40.613
†272 No special article on the 1857 national liberation uprising in India was written for The New American Cyclopaedia. Later the description of this uprising was included in the article 'Hindoostan' published in the Cyclopaedia. — 252
Page me40.613
†273 Engels' letter to Harney has not been found. — 253
Page me40.613
†274 As can be seen from an entry in Marx's notebook, on 29 January 1858 he sent to New York the following articles received from Engels together with this letter: 'Berme', 'Blenheim' and 'Borodino'. In view of a new request from Dana for 'B' articles, which Marx forwarded to Engels on 23 January (see this volume, p. 251), Engels put off 'C' articles and began fulfilling this request. — 254
Page me40.613
†275 The amnesty of political emigrants who had taken part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany was not proclaimed by the Prussian government until early 1861. — 255, 266
Page me40.613
†276 Marx refers to the position of Louis Bonaparte as President of the French Republic before the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. His term as president was to expire early in May 1852, and according to the republic's Constitution a person could be elected to the post a second time only after a four-year interval. So Louis Bonaparte was in danger not only of losing his power and salary but also of being prosecuted for numerous debts. — 256
Page me40.613
†277 Marx developed these ideas in his article 'An Attempt on Bonaparte' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 22 February 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 256
Page me40.613
†278 Lassalle's book on political economy was published in Berlin only in 1864 under the title Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der Ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. — 261, 355, 396, 542, 547

Page Break me40.614
Page me40.614
†279 Marx alludes to the peak of the 1857-58 economic crisis experienced by the Manchester businessmen. He calls it the 'Sturm- und Drangperiode' by analogy with the well-known literary movement in Germany in the last three decades of the 18th century, which reflected the discontent of progressive sections of society with the feudal absolutist systems in German states. — 263
Page me40.614
†280 In 1842 bourgeois radical Free Traders made attempts to obtain control of the Chartist movement. To divert the workers from the Chartists' social and political programme they put forward a vague demand for what they called 'complete suffrage'. Joseph Sturge, Edward Miall, Joseph Livesay and other radicals, supported by some conciliatory-minded Chartist leaders (Lovett and others), managed to convoke two conferences of bourgeois radicals and Chartists in Birmingham in 1842 to discuss a joint campaign for electoral reform. However, the Chartist majority at the conferences rejected the proposal to substitute a new 'Bill of Rights' and the 'complete suffrage' demand for the People's Charter, which led to a break between the Chartists and radicals. — 264

Page me40.614
†281 After Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III on 14 January 1858, Le Moniteur universel and other official newspapers began publishing chauvinistic addresses of loyalty by higher social and military circles. Many of them accused Britain of granting asylum to terrorists and assassins like Orsini and demanded that they be persecuted in their 'den'. The publication of these addresses was regarded in Britain as an indirect threat and caused an aggravation of Anglo-French relations in 1858. — 264
Page me40.614
†282 When Marx wrote the article 'Bolivar y Ponte', the history of the Latin American countries' war for independence (1810-26) had not yet been adequately studied. Books and memoirs by European adventurers who had taken part in the war out of mercenary motives were widely read at the time (among them Ducoudray Holstein, a Frenchman who had become Bolivar's personal enemy, and the Englishman G. Hippisley). The authors of these books attributed numerous vices to Bolivar (perfidity, arrogance, cowardice) and presented his struggle against federalist and separatist elements for the unification of the Latin American republics as a striving for dictatorship. In reality, Simon Bolivar played an outstanding role in the struggle of several Latin American countries for liberation from the Spanish yoke, the establishment of republican forms of government and for progressive bourgeois reforms.
Page me40.614
Marx had only the above-mentioned biassed sources at his disposal. Hence his inevitably one-sided view of Bolivar's personality in his article, in this letter and in Herr Vogt written later (see present edition, Vol. 17): His attitude to Bolivar was to a certain extent determined by the fact that the sources he used exaggerated Bolivar's striving for personal power, and over-emphasised the Bonapartist features against which Marx and Engels were then waging a relentless struggle. Nevertheless, Marx pointed out the progressive aspects of Bolivar's activity, such as his emancipation of Negro slaves, and on the whole appreciated the revolutionary anti-colonial struggle for national liberation in Latin America. — 266
Page me40.614
†283 Marx alludes to the rumours about the illegitimate birth of Napoleon III, whose official father was Napoleon I's brother Louis Bonaparte, King of Holland in 1806-10. — 266

Page Break me40.615
Page me40.615
†284 Marx refers to an article in Cobbett's Annual Register. From July to December, 1802 (Vol. II, London, 1810, columns 128-33) on the aggravation of Anglo-French relations during Napoleon's consulate because of the anti-Napoleonic statements in the press by French political refugees in England. Later Marx used this article and passages quoted in it from Le Moniteur universel, No. 320, 9 August 1802, for his article 'The French Trials in London' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 27 April 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 266

Page me40.615
†285 Engels presumably refers to his articles 'Camp' and 'Catapult' for The New American Cyclopaedia. Marx helped Engels to collect material for them (see, for example, Marx's letter to Engels of 1 February 1858). There is no entry in Marx's notebook about their despatch to New York. It is quite possible that Engels sent Marx the article 'Coehorn' with 'Camp' and 'Catapult'. — 267
Page me40.615
†286 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955 and in full in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 268
Page me40.615
†287 After Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III, Count Walewski, Foreign Minister of France, sent the British government a despatch on 20 January 1858 expressing his discontent at Britain's granting asylum to French political refugees. The despatch served as a pretext for Palmerston to introduce a new Aliens Bill, also called Conspiracy to Murder Bill (see Note 16), on 8 February 1858. According to this Bill, anyone living in the United Kingdom, an Englishman or a foreigner, who took part in a conspiracy to murder a person in Britain or any other country, was to be tried by an English court and severely punished. During the second reading of the new Aliens Bill the radicals Milner Gibson and John Bright, who had been defeated at the parliamentary elections in March 1857, when the Whigs, Palmerston's adherents, came to power, but were re-elected in the autumn of that year, moved an amendment censuring Palmerston's government for failing to give a fitting reply to Walewski's despatch. The House of Commons adopted the amendment by a majority vote, rejected the Bill and compelled Palmerston's government to resign. — 273, 275
Page me40.615
†288 Marx analyses the state of France's economy, including agriculture, in early 1858 in his article 'The Economic Crisis in France' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 12 March 1858 (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 273
Page me40.615
†289 A reference to the second Anglo-Burmese war (1852) which resulted in the British capture of the Province of Pegu. — 274
Page me40.615
†290 By '2 cives romani [Roman citizens]' Engels means the British Prime Minister Palmerston and Napoleon III. (He alludes here to the Latin expression 'civis Romanus sum' — 'I am a Roman citizen' cited by Palmerston in his speech in the House of Commons on 25 June 1850.) Engels has in mind in particular their intention to send an English and a French squadron to the shores of Naples at the end of 1856 under the pretext of bringing pressure to bear on the reactionary regime there (see Note 103), and their repressive measures against democrats in France and Britain after Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 276
Page me40.615

†291 Neither this letter, sent off apparently at the end of February 1858, nor Marx's letter to Collet mentioned below have been found. — 277

Page Break me40.616
Page me40.616
†292 A cabinet noir (black bureau) — a secret Post Office institution in France, Prussia, Austria and other states to inspect private correspondence. It existed at the time of absolute monarchies in Europe. — 277, 279
Page me40.616
†293 In their 'Letter to the Parliament and the Press' of 24 February 1858 (an English translation was published in London as a separate booklet), Pyat, Besson and Talandier stated that the crowned personages who usurped political power as Napoleon III had done, deserved to die a violent death and that their assassination would be a justified historical act. The letter caused excitement among British ruling circles and in the British press. Marx sharply criticised such adventurist statements by French petty-bourgeois refugees and their terroristic ideas. — 278, 279
Page me40.616
†294 An allusion to Félix Pyat, who contributed to the French satirical journal Le Charivari in the 1830s and 1840s and wrote a number of plays for the Théâtre du Port Saint-Martin (Paris). — 278
Page me40.616
†295 The Honourable Gentleman opposite — a form of address used in the British Parliament in respect of an M.P. in the opposition. — 278
Page me40.616
†296 Engels means the German liberals and petty-bourgeois democrats who supported the German Imperial Constitution of 1849 (see Note 116). — 279
Page me40.616
†297 Marx refers to a letter he received from Friedrich Kamm dated 19 December 1857. Kamm, a German refugee in America, wrote that he and his friends had set up a Communist Club in New York and asked Marx to send him information about the communist movement in Europe, certain theoretical works and Communist League documents. He also asked for practical advice in organising the work of a newly founded club. Marx's reply has not been found, but his letter to Joseph Weydemeyer of 1 February 1859 shows that he corresponded with Albrecht Komp, another leader of the New York Communist Club (see this volume, p. 376). — 282, 288, 293, 469
Page me40.616
†298 In 1806, an English expedition under Captain Popam and General Beresford was sent to capture Buenos Aires, which belonged to Spain, then an ally of Napoleonic France. Meeting with no serious resistance from the Spanish colonial authorities, Beresford's force seized Buenos Aires but was surrounded and compelled to surrender by the Argentine patriots. — 285
Page me40.616
†299 This letter is Marx's reply to Lassalle's letter of 3 March 1858, containing a number of questions regarding the publication of Marx's economic work (see this volume, pp. 269-71).
Page me40.616

On the first English publication of Marx's letter see Note 82. — 286
Page me40.616
†300 The Seven Years War (1756-63) — a war of Britain and Prussia against Austria, France, Russia, Saxony and Sweden. As a result of it France ceded many of its colonies (including Canada and almost all its possessions in the East Indies) to Britain, while Prussia, Austria and Saxony were obliged to recognise in the main its pre-war frontiers. — 289, 294, 561
Page me40.616
†301 Engels refers to the underground gallery connecting the Tuileries Palace with the Seine embankment, where some participants in the June 1848 uprising in Paris were detained after its defeat. — 290
Page me40.616
†302 In his letter to the Editor of The Times, published in the newspaper on 17 March 1858 (issue No. 22943), the English poet W.S. Landor refuted the evidence of some witnesses concerning his participation in Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III, expressed indignation at this, 'the basest of crimes', called the Emperor 'the most legitimate sovran in the universe', and declared that he 'detests and abominates democracy'. — 290

Page Break me40.617
Page me40.617
†303 The Legitimists — supporters of the Bourbon dynasty overthrown in 1830. They upheld the interests of the big hereditary landowners.
Page me40.617
During the Second Republic the Orleanists (see Note 124) and the Legitimists formed the 'party of Order', an influential conservative bloc in the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), which Engels has in mind when he speaks, further on in the text, about the joint rule of these groups under the constitutional-republican system. — 291, 552
Page me40.617
†304 A reference to La loi relatif á des mesures de sûreté générale (Law on Public Security Measures) known as La loi des suspects (Suspects Law) adopted by the Corps législatif (see Note 123) on 19 February and promulgated on 28 February 1858. It gave the Emperor and his government unlimited power to exile to different parts of France or Algeria or to banish altogether from French territory any person suspected of hostility to the Second Empire. — 291
Page me40.617
†305 Engels refers to the marriage in London on 25 January 1858 of Frederick William, the son of Prince William of Prussia (later King and Emperor William I), and the English Princess Victoria Adelaide Marie Louise, Queen Victoria's eldest daughter. — 292
Page me40.617
†306 In 1848, during the Second Republic, the monarchist Louis Adolphe Thiers actively supported Louis Bonaparte's candidature for the presidency. But later, as a leader of the Orleanist wing of the 'party of Order' plotting the restoration of the Orleans dynasty, he and other members of the party entered into conflict with Louis Bonaparte and his entourage. During the Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851 Thiers was arrested and, after a short detention in the Mazas prison in Paris, was banished from France. Upon his return in August 1852 he became a member of the 'society opposition'. — 292

Page me40.617
†307 Marx refers to a conference of the delegates of the Italian National Constitutional League, the liberal-minded big bourgeoisie and nobility, held in London on 1 March 1858. It adopted a number of mainly declarative resolutions, proclaiming the necessity to form a federation of Italian states, introduce a Constitution preserving the monarchic government, and carry out a number of liberal reforms. A special resolution condemned Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 294
Page me40.617
†308 Under Napoleon III's decree of 27 January 1858 the whole of French territory was divided into five military districts, with Paris, Nancy, Lyons, Toulouse and Tours as their centres and Marshals Magnan, Baraguay d'Hilliers, Bosquet, Castellane and Canrobert as their commanders. Marx calls these districts pashaliks (a comparison earlier used by the French republican press), to emphasise the similarity of the unlimited powers of the reactionary Marshals and the despotic power of the Turkish pashas. — 296
Page me40.617
†309 Captain-generalships — administrative districts set up in Spain and its colonies in the sixteenth century, during the period of absolute monarchy. Civil and military power in these districts was concentrated in the hands of captain-generals, who acted as royal governors. — 296
Page me40.617
†310 Thomas Attwood's views on the ideal unit of money were set forth in the book The Currency Question. The Gemini Letters, London, 1844, written anonymously by T.B. Wright and J. Harlow who called themselves 'Gemini'. — 301

Page Break me40.618
Page me40.618
†311 The Cotton Supply Association — a Free Trade organisation founded in Manchester in 1857 to promote the import of cotton from India, Africa and other countries. — 305
Page me40.618
†312 Laissez-faire, laissez-aller — the formula of economists who advocated Free Trade and non-intervention by the state in economic relations. — 305
Page me40.618
†313 This is the reply to Mrs Marx's letter to Engels of 9 April 1858 (see this volume, pp. 569). — 307
Page me40.618
†314 Surgeon Simon Bernard, a Frenchman living in London, was tried as an accomplice in Felice Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III (manufacture of bombs and so on). The trial took place in London from 12 to 17 April 1858. Bernard was acquitted by the Central Criminal Court on 17 April. — 307, 309
Page me40.618
†315 In April 1858 the Chamber of Representatives of the Kingdom of Piedmont discussed a conspiracy bill. Introduced at the request of Napoleon III's government, it envisaged measures against attempts on the life of foreign monarchs. During the debate on 16 and 17 April, Prime Minister Cavour and General La Marmora recalled the summer 1848 events and exposed the policy of the bourgeois republican general Cavaignac, then head of the executive in France, who refused to support revolutionary Italy in her struggle against Austria. — 309

Page me40.618
†316 Marx refers to the Government Commission on the Workers' Question which met at the Palais du Luxembourg and was presided over by Louis Blanc. The Commission was set up on 28 February 1848 by the Provisional Government of the French Republic under pressure from workers who demanded a Ministry of Labour. It consisted of workers and employers and acted as a mediator in labour conflicts, often taking the side of the employers. On the very next day after the mass actions of 15 May 1848, the government disbanded the Luxembourg Commission. — 310
Page me40.618
†317 Later Marx wrote two articles on this subject: 'A Curious Piece of History' and 'Another Strange Chapter of Modern History', published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 16 June and 23 September 1858. — 310
Page me40.618
†318 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester from 6 to about 24 May. To recover his health he practised sport, riding, etc. While in Manchester Marx continued working on the economic manuscript of 1857-58 (see Note 250), intending to complete his research and begin preparations for publication of the first part of his work, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. — 312, 315, 368
Page me40.618
†319 Marx refers to Napoleon III's representation to the Council of State on the introduction of a law on confiscation of landed property of philanthropic institutions and converting it into state interest-bearing securities.
Page me40.618
Marx discussed this problem at length in his article 'Bonaparte's Financial Manoeuvres. — Military Despotism' (present edition, Vol. 15). — 317
Page me40.618
†320 Marx received Engels' article 'Cavalry', written for The New American Cyclopaedia, by 22 June 1858 and, as seen from an entry in his notebook, sent it off to New York the same day. — 323
Page me40.618
†321 Marx means J. Weydemeyer's letter of 28 February 1858 from Milwaukee and A. Komp's letter of 15 June 1858 from New York, both written to him. Marx did not enclose them in his letter to Engels and they were mislaid among his papers. Some time later, Marx found them and replied to Weydemeyer on 1 February 1859 (see this volume, pp. 374-78). His letter to Komp has not been found but we may judge of its contents by the above-mentioned letter to Weydemeyer. Komp was a leader of the New York Communist Club, and his letter to Marx contained information and requests similar to those contained in a letter from Friedrich Kamm, another leader of the Club, written on 19 December 1857 (see Note 297). After replying to his American correspondents, Marx forwarded their letters to Engels on 9 February 1859 (see this volume, pp. 384-85). — 324, 326, 337, 339, 374, 384

Page Break me40.619

Page me40.619
†322 Whitechapel — a working class district in London's East End. — 331, 449
Page me40.619
†323 The People's Provident Assurance Society was founded by John Watts, an English reformer and Owenite, in London in 1853. In 1857 a branch-office was opened in Manchester. — 332
Page me40.619
†324 Marx's letter to his mother has not been found. — 334
Page me40.619
†325 This presumably refers to Engels' article written between 16 and 20 July 1858 and published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 13 August. Marx made an entry in his notebook on 27 July about the despatch of the article to New York, giving its heading as 'Transport of Troops to India' (see present edition, Vol. 15). The Tribune editors introduced changes into the article and printed it under the heading 'How the Indian War has been Mismanaged'. — 334
Page me40.619
†326 The original letter is dated 4 August 1858, which is presumably a slip of the pen, for in it Marx mentions events about which he could have learned from the newspapers only later: the opening of the Cherbourg naval port after its reconstruction and the actions of Napoleon III's government in connection with this. Engels' reply of 10 August 1858 warrants the assumption that Marx wrote the letter on 8 August.
Page me40.619
On the first English publication of the letter see Note 20. — 335
Page me40.619
†327 This seems to refer to Engels' letter in reply to Marx's letter of 25 July 1858 (see this volume, p. 334). The letter has not been found. — 335
Page me40.619
†328 Marx refers to the festivities on the occasion of the opening, on 4 August 1858, of the Cherbourg naval port after its reconstruction.
Page me40.619
On the invitation of the French government, Queen Victoria of the United Kingdom and the Prince Consort Albert attended the ceremony. According to Napoleon III's plans, the reception given them was to relax the tension in Anglo-French relations after Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III (see Note 271). However, the demonstration of France's naval strength in Cherbourg aroused new British apprehensions. In this connection Napoleon declared in a Note of 7 August 1858 that the reconstruction of the naval port did not pursue any hostile aims towards Britain. — 336, 339, 340
Page me40.619
†329 Félix Pyat's letter was written on 14 July 1858 and published separately under the title Lettre au jury. Défence de la lettre au Parlement et á la Presse. It supplemented the letter of 24 February 1858 by Pyat, Besson and Talandier (see Note 293). — 339, 345
Page me40.619

†330 The article on the slave trade in Cuba written by Marx for the New-York Daily Tribune was not published. — 340
Page me40.619
†331 Marx refers to his articles 'The English Bank Act of 1844' and 'Commercial Crises and Currency in Britain', printed in the New-York Daily Tribune on 23 and 28 August 1858 as leaders, and 'British Commerce and Finance', published on 4 October. — 342
Page me40.619
†332 Marx refers to the unequal treaties signed in Tientsin in June 1858 by Britain and France with China during the second Opium War (1856-60). The treaties made new ports available to foreign trade; foreign diplomatic representatives were authorised in Peking; foreigners were allowed to travel freely in the country for commercial or other purposes; Britain and France received economic privileges through the introduction of new commercial rules legalising the opium trade, and were paid indemnities.

Page Break me40.620

Page me40.620

Marx discussed these treaties in his articles written in August and early September for the New-York Daily Tribune: 'History of the Opium Trade' and 'The Anglo-Chinese Treaty' (see present edition, Vol. 16). However, the article mentioned in this letter was not published in the Tribune. — 342, 347, 362, 387
Page me40.620
†333 Engels refers to the official despatches of Lord Canning, Governor General of India, of 17 June and 4 July 1858 to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors of the British East India Company (they were published in The Times, No. 23117, 6 October 1858).
Page me40.620

In these despatches Canning defended his proclamation of 3 March 1858 on the confiscation, in favour of Britain, of the lands of Oudh, including the estates of the local feudal lords who had joined the Indian uprising. (Marx assessed this proclamation in his article 'The Annexation of Oudh' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 28 May 1858; see present edition, Vol. 15.) Canning's point of view was not shared by a number of prominent colonial officials and M.P.s who favoured a more flexible policy towards the Indian feudal lords and hoped to win them over with promises to leave their domains intact.
Page me40.620

Marx did not write any article about Canning's despatches. — 343
Page me40.620
†334 Engels seems to refer to Jones' speech at a Chartist meeting in Manchester on 4 October 1858, a brief account of which was published in The Leader, No. 446, 9 October 1858, in the 'Political Foreshadowings' section.
Page me40.620

About Jones' temporary vacillations and his policy of compromise with bourgeois radicals see Note 245. — 344, 345
Page me40.620

†335 Marx writes here about the revolutionary situation in Russia after her defeat in the Crimean war (1853-56). Fearing the growing peasant unrest, Alexander II's government was forced to start preparations for the abolition of serfdom. On 3 January 1857 a Secret Committee consisting of high government officials and headed by the Emperor was formed to discuss the peasant question. In January 1858 the Committee was made public and renamed the Chief Peasant Question Committee.
Page me40.620
To discuss the draft peasant reform, it was proposed to hold in St. Petersburg a congress of deputies of the Gubernia Landowners' Committees, called by Marx the 'convocation of notables' by analogy with the convocation of notables in France on the eve of the French Revolution. The congress took place in the autumn of 1859. — 346, 349
Page me40.620
†336 In view of the insanity of Frederick William IV of Prussia the question arose of appointing Regent his brother, Prince William of Prussia (later King and Emperor William I). The Prussian bourgeoisie hoped that the Regency would lead to liberal reforms and remove Manteuffel's reactionary ministry, although the reactionary measures taken by the Prince of Prussia in 1848 gave little ground for such hopes. Nevertheless, similar illusions about the advent of 'a new era' were widespread among liberal monarchist circles. Prince William was appointed Regent on 7 October 1858. — 346, 348, 410, 470, 571
Page me40.620
†337 In his book Studien über die innern Zustände, das Volksleben und insbesondere die

Page Break me40.621
ländlichen Einrichtungen Russlands (Th. 1-3, Hannover-Berlin, 1847-52), the Prussian official and writer August Haxthausen who toured Russia in the 1840s, gave a false idea of the material well-being of the Russian peasantry. He advocated preservation of the peasant commune arguing that this was the only way to save Russia from the revolutionary consequences of its toiling people becoming proletarian. He thought that the abolition of serfdom should be carried out gradually because, he wrote, the necessary conditions for the wage labour system did not exist in Russia. — 346
Page me40.621
†338 This refers to one of the main provisions of the Nanking Treaty Britain concluded with China as a result of the Anglo-Chinese war of 1840-42 (known as the first Opium War). It was the first of a series of unequal treaties imposed on China by the Western powers, treaties that reduced it to the status of a semi-colony. Under the Nanking Treaty five Chinese cities — Canton, Shanghai, Amoy, Ninbo and Fuchon — were opened to English trade. — 347
Page me40.621
†339 Under the Aigun Treaty of 28(16) May 1858, the left bank of the Amur, from the confluence of the Shilka and the Argun to the sea, was recognised as Russian territory, while the question of the Ussuri Area, from the confluence of the Ussuri and the Amur to the sea, was left open until the final fixing of the frontier between Russia and China. Navigation on the Amur, Sungari and Ussuri was prohibited to all states except Russia and Ching China. The treaty thus returned to Russia the left bank of the Amur developed by the Russians in the seventeenth century and taken from it under the Nerchinsk Treaty of 1689. Besides, it thwarted the British diplomats' attempt to exacerbate Russo-Chinese relations and closed the Amur to West-European shipping. The treaty was ratified by Russia on 8 June 1858. — 349

Page me40.621
†340 This letter is dated only 'Friday'. The exact date of its writing was established on the basis of facts mentioned in it, in particular Marx's reference to an article on rifled cannon published in The Times on 22 October 1858. — 350
Page me40.621
†341 Marx seems to refer to his article 'Mr. John Bright' printed in the New-York Daily Tribune on 12 November 1858 as a leader, without any heading. It bears signs of the editors' interference (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 350
Page me40.621
†342 A reference to the conflict between France and Portugal caused by the seizure of the French merchant vessel Charles et Georges by the Portuguese authorities in Mozambique on 29 November 1857. The vessel had on board a number of East-African Negroes who were to be shipped, allegedly as free emigrants, to the French island of Réunion.
Page me40.621
The Franco-Portuguese talks continued for almost a year but brought no results. On 13 October 1858 Napoleon III, whom Marx calls here Quasimodo (a character from Victor Hugo's Notre-Dame de Paris), sent a special Note to the Portuguese Government demanding the return of the confiscated vessel and the release of its captain. The demand was backed by the despatch of two French warships to the Portuguese capital. Portugal was compelled to yield.
Page me40.621
Marx touches on the subject in his article 'The French Slave Trade' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 1 December 1858 with considerable editorial changes (see present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 621-23). — 351, 357
Page me40.621
†343 This presumably refers to Blind's articles published anonymously in 1858 under the general heading Flügblätter des Vereins 'Deutsche Einheit und Freiheit' in England. — 351, 353
Page me40.621
†344 John Bright, a British radical and Free Trade leader, put forward a programme for electoral reform. Of the six points of the People's Charter (universal suffrage, annual Parliaments, vote by secret ballot, equal constituencies, abolition of property qualifications for candidates to Parliament, and payment of M.P.s), he retained only the demand for vote by secret ballot. The other demands were either omitted altogether or drastically moderated. Thus Bright suggested that suffrage should be granted only to persons paying property tax; in place of equal constituencies he suggested fairer representation for the existing constituencies. — 358

Page Break me40.622
Page me40.622

†345 Marx refers to Freiligrath's letter to him of 6 December 1858 and Freiligrath's poem 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis' (written on 20 November 1858 on the occasion of the death of Cottfried Kinkel's wife, Johanna Kinkel, and published in Die Neue Zeit, No. 24, 11 December 1859). — 359
Page me40.622
†346 Cayenne — a place in French Guiana where political prisoners were sent for penal servitude. The high mortality caused by the hard prison conditions and the unhealthy tropical climate earned it the nickname of the 'Dry Guillotine'. — 359
Page me40.622
†347 Marx is mistaken here. Fitzgerald and Stanley could not have spoken in the House of Commons on Monday, 13 December, for Parliament did not meet from 2 August 1858 to early January 1859. On 14 December The Times (No. 23176) reprinted excerpts from Lord Stanley's speech of 13 December 1858 before the young cadets of the Manchester military school, one of the topics being the situation in India. (The speech was reported in greater detail in The Manchester Guardian.) Fitzgerald too may have spoken at this meeting. This warrants the assumption that Marx actually meant these speeches. — 363
Page me40.622
†348 Marx means his new article on the Anglo-Chinese Treaty. It was not published by the New-York Daily Tribune. — 363
Page me40.622
†349 In his Message to the XXXVth Congress of 6 December 1858, President James Buchanan expressed US aggressive intentions as regards Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Brazil, Paraguay and other countries of Central and South America and US strivings for supremacy on the American continent. In the sphere of home policy, Buchanan asked Congress to increase allocations for the navy and the Postal Department in 1858 and urged the construction of a Pacific railroad.
Page me40.622
Marx's article about Buchanan's message was not published by the New-York Daily Tribune. — 364
Page me40.622
†350 Marx had asked Engels to write an article for the New-York Daily Tribune about the events in the principality of Serbia. On 30 November 1858 the so-called St. Andrew Skupština met after a long interval. At the session, the liberals, who had joined forces with the supporters of the Obrenovic dynasty, clashed with the ruling Ustavobranitelji (Defenders of Constitution) group representing the big landowners, traders and the top officialdom. The conflict led to the deposition of Alexander Karageorgievic and the reinstatement of Miloš Obrenovic, who agreed to carry out a number of liberal reforms. The St. Andrew Skupština abolished the oligarchic council set up under the 1838 Constitution, restored the Skupština as a permanent legislative body, and declared freedom of the press. Though the liberal reforms were moderate and short-lived, the fall of the Ustavobranitelji regime gave an impulse to Serbia's economic and cultural development.
Page me40.622
It is unknown whether Engels wrote the article on Serbia. — 364, 366
Page me40.622

†351 Presumably Engels did not write any article on the proposed changes in the Prussian army. Later, when France and Piedmont were on a collision course with

Page Break me40.623

Austria, he wrote the article 'German Resources for War' (on 10 February 1859) in which he also described the state of Prussia's armed forces (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 366, 368

Page me40.623

†352 Gottfried Kinkel called his weekly after Arminius (Hermann), the leader of the Germanic tribes' struggle against Roman rule in the first century A.D. Marx hints at the coincidence of this title with the name of the hero of Goethe's poem 'Hermann und Dorothea', a simple, patriarchally-minded man striving for peace and a domestic idyll. — 366

Page me40.623

†353 The prospectus for the Hermann was an advertisement announcing the forthcoming publication of the weekly, dated 24 December 1858 and signed by Kinkel.

Page me40.623

Marx's letter to Freiligrath about 'the Kinkel affair' has not been found. — 367

Page me40.623

†354 The letter is not dated. The approximate time of its writing has been established on the basis of the facts mentioned in it, in particular the reference to Marx's rewriting of Engels' article on Napoleon III's policy, as a result of which the article 'The Money Panic in Europe' virtually written by them both, was sent to New York, its final version having been written on 13 January 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 16). The letter could hardly have been sent off to Manchester later than 15 January because, judging by its opening lines, Marx was expecting a new article for the New-York Daily Tribune from Engels by Tuesday, 18 January. — 367

Page me40.623

†355 Marx means the 'Chapter on Capital', which constitutes the bulk of his economic manuscripts of 1857-58 (see Note 250) and was written from October 1857 to May 1858 (see present edition, Vols. 29 and 30). — 368, 389

Page me40.623

†356 In the autumn of 1858, Palmerston, then head of the Whig opposition to the Derby-Disraeli Tory Cabinet, was invited by Napoleon III to Compiégne in order to clarify his position on the impending Franco-Austrian war. At the meeting Palmerston did not object to the Austrians being expelled from Italy, but in his speech at the opening of Parliament on 3 February 1859 he condemned France's action.

Page me40.623

On Russia's influence on Napoleon III's policy see Marx's article 'The War Prospect in France' (present edition, Vol. 16).

Page me40.623

The Peace Treaty of Paris concluded the Crimean war (1853-56). It was signed at the Congress of Paris on 30 March 1856 by Austria, Britain, France, Prussia, Sardinia and Turkey, on the one hand, and Russia, on the other. Under the treaty, Russia ceded the mouth of the Danube and part of Bessarabia, renounced its protectorate over the Danubian principalities and its protection of Christians in Turkey, agreed to the neutralisation of the Black Sea and returned the fortress of Kars to Turkey in exchange for Sevastopol and other Russian towns held by the Allies. By skilfully exploiting the differences between Britain and France the Russian diplomats at the Congress blocked the attempts to impose even more onerous peace terms on Russia. — 368, 411, 431

Page me40.623
†357 This draft of Engels' letter to Freiligrath was enclosed by Engels in his letter to Marx of 27 January 1859 (see this volume, p. 373). As follows from that letter, a three-page fair copy was sent to Freiligrath on 26 January. Neither the fair copy nor the other draft versions which Engels made while writing the letter have been preserved. — 370
Page me40.623
†358 In a letter to Engels that has not reached us Freiligrath probably wrote about

Page Break me40.624
the projected publication of a new revolutionary newspaper which was to be a sequel to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, organ of the proletarian wing of the democratic movement during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. Freiligrath seems to have given an incorrect interpretation of the trend of the future newspaper as against that of the petty-bourgeois weekly Hermann which Gottfried Kinkel began to publish on 1 January 1859. — 370, 372
Page me40.624
†359 Engels paraphrases the dictum 'They have learned nothing and forgotten nothing', which during the restoration of the Bourbons (1815-30) was often applied to their conservative supporters who had failed to draw any lessons from the French Revolution. The dictum was first used, also in referring to the French extreme royalists, by Rear Admiral Chevalier de Panat in a letter to the journalist Mallet du Pan in 1796. In later years it was often attributed to Charles Talleyrand. — 370
Page me40.624
†360 The handwritten weekly Der Maikäfer, eine Zeitschrift für Nicht-Philister (May-Bug, a Journal for Non-Philistines) was founded by Gottfried Kinkel and Johanna Mockel in Bonn in 1840, at the time when the literary May-Bug Club was set up. With the outbreak of the revolution in Germany in 1848, both the journal and the club ceased to exist. Marx and Engels gave an ironic characterisation of the periodical and the club in the pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 244). — 370
Page me40.624
†361 The letter is not dated. The approximate time of its writing has been established on the basis of a reply letter from Engels. The article mentioned below was not published by the editors of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 371, 373
Page me40.624
†362 Between September 1851 and March 1852 Gottfried Kinkel toured America in an attempt to raise a so-called German-American revolutionary loan. It was to be floated among German refugees and Americans of German extraction and used to begin an immediate revolution in Germany. During the tour Kinkel conducted a slanderous campaign against Marx and Engels. The attempt to distribute the 'revolutionary loan' failed. Marx and Engels in a number of works and letters denounced the undertaking as an adventurist attempt to produce a revolution artificially during a period when the revolutionary movement was on the wane. — 372

Page me40.624
†363 Marx's description of Princess Clotilde, daughter of King Victor Emmanuel of Piedmont (Sardinia), as a 'mild, angelic child' is clearly ironic. When writing about her forthcoming marriage to Napoleon III's cousin, Jerôme Bonaparte (nicknamed Plon-Plon), in his article 'Louis Napoleon's Position' mentioned in this letter, Marx notes that Clotilde, 'despite her young years, is very strong-minded' (Vol. 16, p. 169). — 373
Page me40.624
†364 See Note 45. — 374, 567
Page me40.624
†365 Marx is mistaken here: Georg Weerth died in Havana, Cuba (see Note 85). — 374
Page me40.624
†366 In 1751 J. Ch. Gottsched published in Leipzig an epic poem by Ch. O. von Schönaich devoted to Arminius (Hermann), the leader of the Germanic tribes that had revolted against Roman rule. Gottsched supplied the poem with a laudatory preface, and on his recommendation the Leipzig University crowned Schönaich with the laurels of a poet in 1752. — 375
Page me40.624
†367 The 'great men' (die 'großen Männer') was the nickname Marx and Engels

Page Break me40.625
applied to German and other refugees, primarily petty-bourgeois democrats, who after the 1848-49 revolution engaged in pseudo-revolutionary activities, organised plots, raised 'revolutionary loans', formed governments in exile, and the like. In their joint work The Great Men of the Exile (present edition, Vol. 11) Marx and Engels gave a satirical description of some of them. — 376, 500, 502
Page me40.625
†368 In its issue of 19 October 1711, The Spectator propounded the idea that the price of commodities depended on the mass of money in circulation, a view shared by Montesquieu and Hume. In criticising this view in his A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, Marx referred to this issue of the journal (present edition, Vol. 30). — 377
Page me40.625
†369 In his article 'The French Army' sent to the New-York Daily Tribune on 31 January 1859, Engels opposed his calculations concerning the strength of the forces France could field in Italy in case of war to the exaggerated figures contained in Louis Boniface's article datelined Paris, 29 January 1859, which appeared in the Constitutionnel, No. 30, on 30 January 1859. Engels pointed out that the Constitutionnel data had been furnished by the Emperor himself (see present edition, Vol. 16, p. 171). A report of 31 January from Paris, published in The Times, No. 23219, on 2 February 1859, stated outright that Napoleon III, whom Marx calls in this letter Mr Boustrapa (see Note 40), was the author of the article in the Constitutionnel. — 379
Page me40.625
†370 This refers to the war preparations of the Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) and France against Austria. The war (29 April to 8 July 1859) was launched by Napoleon III, who under the banner of the 'liberation of Italy' strove for aggrandizement and needed a successful military campaign to shore up the Bonapartist regime in France. Piedmont ruling circles hoped that French support would enable them to unite Italy under the aegis of the Savoy dynasty. The war caused an upsurge of the national liberation movement in Italy. The Austrian army suffered a series of defeats. However Napoleon III, frightened by the scale of the liberation movement in Italy, abruptly ceased hostilities. On 11 July, the French and Austrian emperors concluded a separate preliminary peace in Villafranca. France received Savoy and Nice; Lombardy was annexed to Sardinia; the Venetian Region remained under the Austrians. — 380, 399, 401, 405, 462, 537

Page me40.625
†371 Marx refers here to the Carbonari, members of secret political societies in Italy and France in the first half of the nineteenth century. In Italy they fought for national independence, unification of the country and liberal constitutional reforms.
Page me40.625
In the latter half of the 1850s a number of attempts were made on the life of Napoleon III, including one by the Italian revolutionary Orsini (see Note 271). Some of these attempts were attributed to the desire to teach Napoleon III a lesson for the breach of his commitments to the Carbonari organisation, of which he was a member in 1831. Part of the questions touched upon in this letter are discussed in the articles 'The Money Panic in Europe' by Marx and Engels, 'Louis Napoleon's Position' by Marx and 'The French Army' by Engels (all three are in Vol. 16 of the present edition). — 380
Page me40.625
†372 The Rubicon — the name of a river in Northern Italy, on the boundary between Umbria and Cisalpine Gaul, which Caesar crossed with his army in 49 B.C. thereby starting a civil war with Pompey. To cross (or pass) the Rubicon — to embark on an undertaking from which one cannot turn back. — 381
Page me40.625
†373 Marx refers to the abortive Bonapartist coups in Boulogne on 6 August 1840

Page Break me40.626
and Strasbourg on 30 October 1836, and to the coup d'état in Paris on 2 December 1851 which led to the establishment of Napoleon III's dictatorship and the proclamation of the Second Empire in 1852. — 381
Page me40.626
†374 Marx probably means the tribute to Johanna Mockel, Gottfried Kinkel's wife, published in The Daily Telegraph by the German writer Fanny Lewald (Stahr). Marx mentions it in his letter to Lassalle of 3 March 1860 (see present edition, Vol. 41). — 383
Page me40.626
†375 The New-York Daily Tribune did not publish this article by Marx. — 384
Page me40.626
†376 On 8 February 1859 Georg Eccarius wrote to Marx saying it had been definitely established that he had consumption. While expressing his readiness to endure his misfortune with fortitude, he wrote about his apprehensions concerning the possible consequences of his disease for his family. In conclusion he asked Marx to send him books for self-education. — 386
Page me40.626

†377 The letter has not been found. — 388
Page me40.626
†378 The letter is not dated. The approximate time of its writing can be deduced from Marx's mentioning that his brother-in-law, Johann Carl Juta, would be travelling to Manchester, and from the fact that on 22 February 1859 Marx wrote a letter of recommendation to Engels for him. — 389
Page me40.626
†379 Engels informed Marx of his intention to write the pamphlet Po and Phine (see present edition, Vol. 16) in a letter written in the second half of February 1859 (it has not reached us). In the same letter he obviously outlined the content of the planned work, which Marx then set forth in this letter to Lassalle. Engels finished the pamphlet by 9 March 1859. — 391, 393
Page me40.626
†380 Engels took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising in June-July 1849 with the detachment of August Willich, whose adjutant he was. He participated in four battles, including the big one at Rastatt. — 392
Page me40.626
†381 Marx refers to the fact that Ferdinand Lassalle was close to the opposition elements of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie grouped round the Berlin Volks-Zeitung. On 31 January 1859 Lassalle, who became disappointed in the newspaper, wrote to Marx as follows: 'The Volks-Zeitung, the only halfway democratic newspaper in Berlin, has rushed over to the ministerial camp and plays a role unique for its unworthiness in the history of the democratic press.' — 396
Page me40.626
†382 In this letter, written at the end of February 1859, Lassalle informed Marx that he had reached an agreement with Franz Duncker regarding the publication of Engels' Po and Rhine. He stated the terms and suggested that the pamphlet should be published in French translation too. — 398
Page me40.626
†383 In his speech in the Frankfurt National Assembly on 12 August 1848 General Radowitz asserted that Austria's boundary along the Mincio (in other words, continued Austrian rule in Northern Italy) guaranteed Germany against French invasion. This doctrine was refuted in Engels' pamphlet Po and Rhine and in Marx's article 'The War Prospect in Prussia' (see present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 216, 235 and 270). — 398
Page me40.626
†384 A reference to the national liberation and anti-feudal uprising in the city of Cracow, which had been under the joint control of Austria, Russia and Prussia from 1815. The insurgents seized power on 22 February 1846 and set up a National Government, which issued a manifesto abolishing feudal services. The uprising was put down in early March 1846. In November 1846, Austria, Prussia and Russia signed a treaty incorporating Cracow in the Austrian Empire. — 401

Page Break me40.627
Page me40.627

†385 Further events showed that Marx's forecast was true. In April 1859 the British Parliament was dissolved and new elections in June 1859 brought to power a government headed by Palmerston, who had been in opposition until then.
Page me40.627
The ideas expressed by Marx in this and other letters of that period concerning the situation in Europe in view of the maturing military crisis, were developed in his article 'The War Prospect in France' written for the New-York Daily Tribune (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 401, 405, 429
Page me40.627
†386 Engels means one of the three annual fairs in Leipzig, the spring fair, at which all German publishing houses used to exhibit their books. — 402
Page me40.627
†387 After a long imprisonment, the Italian liberal Carlo Poerio and his associates, participants in the 1848-49 revolution, were expelled by the Neapolitan authorities and placed on a ship bound for America. On the way, the captain set them free at a British port. On 12 March 1859 The Times (No. 23252) published a letter to the editor by Lord Shaftesbury hailing Poerio and his friends as 'honest and heroic men'. To support them a committee was set up in London with Lord Shaftesbury as President. Palmerston, too, was a member. — 405
Page me40.627
†388 The letter is not dated. The time of its writing is clear from the enclosed letter of Eccarius to Marx, written on 20 March 1859, and from Marx mentioning his article on the Reform Bill, which was presumably sent to New York on 22 March, Tuesday, one of the two weekdays when articles were despatched to America. — 406
Page me40.627
†389 Besides 'The New British Reform Bill' (see present edition, Vol. 16), Marx wrote two more articles on the 1859 Reform Bill, on 22 March and 1 April 1859, but they were not published in the New-York Daily Tribune and have not reached us. — 406, 411
Page me40.627
†390 Marx has in mind cases when the New-York Daily Tribune reprinted articles from the London Times. — 406
Page me40.627
†391 From 1693 to 1806 Wetzlar was the seat of the Reichskammergeriecht (Imperial Court of Justice) which examined disputes between the lands, complaints connected with taxation, and other questions. It was also the highest court of appeal for the lands and cities comprising the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation. It was notorious for procrastination and red tape. — 408
Page me40.627
†392 Marx means the new proposal Max Friedländer had made to him in the course of negotiations on Marx's work for the Vienna newspaper Die Presse (see also Note 254). It was forwarded to him by Lassalle in a letter written at the end of March 1859, and Marx's letter is the reply to it. This time Friedländer did not stipulate that Marx should abstain from criticising Palmerston and proposed that, besides articles, Marx should send telegraphic despatches on current events. In his letter Lassalle also asked Marx for advice concerning his own work for the paper. Marx wrote about the negotiations also in his letter to Engels of 16 April 1859 (see this volume, p. 416). — 408

Page me40.627
†393 On the letter from Lassalle see Note 392.
Page me40.627
In his letter of 15 March 1859 Charles Dana informed Marx that it was impossible to find a publisher in America for the English translation of A

Page Break me40.628
Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy and offered his help in selling 50-100 copies of the German edition of the book in America. Dana also requested Marx to write articles on 'Fortification' and 'Infantry' for The New American Cyclopaedia. Both articles were written by Engels (see present edition, Vol. 18). — 410
Page me40.628
†394 In 1852 the Tory government of Derby was brought down by the Free Traders led by Bright, and Palmerston became Home Secretary in the new coalition government of Aberdeen. The fall of the Aberdeen government in 1855, caused by setbacks in the Crimean War, cost Russell the post of Foreign Secretary, while Palmerston headed the new, Whig government. During the second Derby ministry (1858-59), opposition by Bright and Russell contributed to the government's resignation, clearing the field for Palmerston's second cabinet. — 411
Page me40.628
†395 On 31 March 1859 the House of Commons rejected, after a second reading, the Reform Bill proposed by the Tory government of Derby-Disraeli, which led to the government's fall. In the preceding debate, on 24 March, Bright and Gibson spoke against the Bill. Gibson quoted Bright, who said in one of his earlier speeches that 'there was no Bill so revolutionary as a bad Bill'. While favouring the preservation of some elements of the obsolete system of 'rotten boroughs', Gibson opposed the new distribution of electoral districts proposed by the government.
Page me40.628
The ideas expressed in this letter were probably discussed in greater detail in Marx's article on the Reform Bill written on 1 April 1859, which was not published by the New-York Daily Tribune editors. — 411
Page me40.628
†396 The letter was first published in an abridged English translation in K. Marx, On Colonialism and Modernization, New York, 1969. — 412
Page me40.628
†397 This letter to Charles Dana has not been found. — 412
Page me40.628
†398 While a member of the House of Commons, Thomas Chisholm Anstey, together with David Urquhart, repeatedly criticised Palmerston's foreign policy. As Attorney-General of Hong Kong in 1854-58, he came out against corruption and abuses by the British colonial administration, for which he was virtually removed from office. Upon his return to England in 1859, The Times printed, on 9 April, a statement by M.P. Edwin James announcing his intention to publish documents bearing on Anstey's dismissal. — 412
Page me40.628

†399 Marx refers to the India Loan Bill introduced in the British House of Commons on 14 February 1859 by Secretary of State for the Affairs of India Stanley. The loan of £7,000,000 was required to cover the extra expenses of the British administration in India. Marx wrote about the Bill and India's financial position in general in his article 'Great Trouble in Indian Finances' (present edition, Vol. 16). — 413
Page me40.628
†400 Marx means the Shanghai Anglo-Chinese trade agreement of 8 November 1858, which supplemented the Tientsin Anglo-Chinese Treaty of 1858. It established general rules of trade and listed goods free from export and import duties (articles of consumption intended for foreigners) and those subject to duties. The import of opium into China was formally allowed only in the form of foreign medicine which, however, was tantamount to the legalisation of the opium trade, though on a restricted scale. — 413
Page me40.628
†401 On 5 April 1859 the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5602, printed a reader's letter signed 'Asbóth' with comments on Engels' article 'Chances of the Impending

Page Break me40.629
War' (see present edition, Vol. 16). The author referred to an earlier letter of his, about Engels' article 'The Austrian Hold on Italy' (see Vol. 16). That other letter, signed 'A', appeared in the Tribune, No. 5581, on 11 March 1859 (in Asbóth's second letter the date was given incorrectly as '14th inst'). The later letter largely repeated the first. Asbóth considered the assessment of Austria's possibilities in the impending war given by Engels in his two articles insufficiently thorough and exaggerated. — 417
Page me40.629
†402 In a letter which has not reached us, Engels may have informed Marx of a review of American newspapers published in a supplement to the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 102, on 12 April 1859. Much space in the review was devoted to the New-York Daily Tribune which, in the words of the author, had published 'a number of interesting military-scientific articles on the North Italian theatre of war'. The review stressed that the Tribune editors were strongly influenced by the ideas of German revolutionaries. — 417
Page me40.629
†403 Marx wrote this letter in reply to one from Lassalle of 8 April 1859. In his letter Lassalle forwarded a postal order to Marx, informed him of the publication of Engels' pamphlet Po and Rhine and asked for Marx's opinion on his drama Franz von Sickingen. He had sent Marx three copies of his drama (for Marx, Engels and Freiligrath) on 6 March 1859, together with a note explaining the 'tragic idea' of the drama. The aesthetic principles formulated in the note and in the preface to Sickingen, and embodied in the drama, were at variance with the demands Marx and Engels made upon realistic art, namely, truthfully to depict in the idiom specific to it the concrete reality of a definite social environment at a given period of history. Lassalle saw the essence of drama in the tragic conflict of the hero — the bearer of a certain abstract idea, in this case a revolutionary one — with the masses, who are incapable of grasping this idea in an adequate form owing to their backwardness and ignorance. This compells the hero to deviate from his ideals in practice and resort to 'cunning' (Pfiffigkeit), and ultimately dooms him to defeat.
Page me40.629

In his reply Marx gave a critical analysis of Sickingen from a dialectical-materialist standpoint and, in effect, argued against Lassalle's principles and the political tendency of the drama.
Page me40.629
In English this letter was published, abridged, in Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955, and in full in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, 1979. — 418
Page me40.629
†404 This refers to the Polish national liberation uprising of November 1830-October 1831. Its participants belonged mostly to the revolutionary gentry, and its leaders to the aristocracy. The uprising was crushed by Tsarist Russia aided by Prussia and Austria. Lack of support by the peasants, due to the leaders' refusal to abolish serfdom, contributed to its defeat. See also Engels' speech 'On the Polish Question' (present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 549-52), and his The Peasant War in Germany, where he writes about the failure of the nobility to win over the peasants in Germany in 1522 and in Poland in 1830 (Vol. 10, p. 444). — 420
Page me40.629
†405 This refers to the withdrawal of the French troops that had occupied Rome during the suppression of the Roman Republic in 1849 and stayed on in subsequent years, as did the Austrians, who in 1849 had occupied the territory of the Legations, Marke and part of Umbria, belonging to the Roman Republic. — 425

Page Break me40.630
Page me40.630
†406 At a reception of the diplomatic corps in the Tuileries on 1 January 1859, Napoleon III said to the Austrian Ambassador J.A. Hübner: 'I regret that our relations with your Government are not as good as formerly.' This statement led to a diplomatic conflict with Austria, war against which had been decided on much earlier: in July 1858, in Plombiéres, a secret agreement had been reached between France and Piedmont, under which France was promised Savoy and Nice in exchange for participation in the forthcoming war against Austria. — 425
Page me40.630
†407 A reference to the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna held by European monarchs in 1814-15. Signed on 9 June 1815, it laid down the frontiers of European states and their regimes — based on the principle of legitimism — as decreed by the victor powers. The Final Act sealed the political fragmentation of Germany and Italy. — 426
Page me40.630
†408 Marx refers to the ultimatum the Austrian government presented to Piedmont on 19 April 1859 in a letter by Count K. Buol-Schauenstein, Austria's Foreign Minister, to Count Cavour, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Piedmont (published in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 116, supplement, 26 April 1859). It demanded that Piedmont should disarm within three days and disband the detachments of Italian volunteers. Refusal to comply with these demands would be regarded as a casus belli. On 29 April the Austrian army under Field Marshal Gyulay crossed the frontier river Ticino, thus starting the Austro-Italo-French war of 1859. — 427

Page me40.630
†409 Louis Auguste Blanqui was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for his part in the 1848 revolution. In the spring of 1859, having served his term in Belle-Île and Corsica, he was deported to Algeria. Following the amnesty of 16 August 1859, he returned to Paris. — 427
Page me40.630
†410 Ridiculing Karl Vogt, Marx often puns on his name. Vogt or Landvogt was the name of provincial governors or other officials in the German Empire in the Middle Ages.
Page me40.630
By calling him 'the great imperial Vogt', Marx alludes to the fact that he was one of the five members of the Regency of the Empire (Reichsregentschaft) formed in Stuttgart in early June 1849 by the 'Rump' of the Frankfurt National Assembly. The Regency's attempts to enforce the Imperial Constitution (see Note 116) by parliamentary means ended in failure. — 428, 434, 436, 450, 460, 488, 521
Page me40.630
†411 Vogt and his followers intended to publish a weekly, Die Neue Schweiz, in Geneva. Later that title was dropped in favour of Neue Schweizer Zeitung.
Page me40.630
On Vogt's letter to Freiligrath and the 'Programme' appended to it see Marx's exposé Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, p. 115). — 428
Page me40.630
†412 Marx alludes to Blind's call for the union of 'the leaders of all German popular parties' contained in his article published in the Hermann on 16 April 1859. According to Blind, this was to put an end to the confusion of opinions on the Italian crisis. Blind himself pronounced against both the pro-Austrian and pro-Bonapartist stand in this article. — 428
Page me40.630
†413 Marx's reply to Friedländer's letter of 12 April 1859 has not been found. — 429, 433
Page me40.630
†414 The New-York Daily Tribune did not publish this article by Engels, which presumably dealt with the Austro-Italo-French war, then in its early days. — 430

Page Break me40.631
Page me40.631
†415 The reference is to the secret Paris treaty of 19 February (3 March) 1859 concluded between France and Russia. Russia undertook to adopt a 'political and military stand which most easily proves its favourable neutrality towards France' and not to object to the enlargement of the Kingdom of Sardinia in the event of a war between France and Sardinia on the one hand and Austria on the other. Information about this secret treaty leaked into the press but the Russian Foreign Minister Gorchakov officially denied the existence of any written obligations to France. Marx refers to this treaty in his article 'The Financial Panic' (present edition, Vol. 16). — 430, 537

Page me40.631
†416 The Holy Alliance — an association of European monarchs founded in September 1815, on the initiative of the Russian Tsar Alexander I and the Austrian Chancellor Metternich, to suppress revolutionary movements and preserve feudal monarchies in European countries. During the 1848-49 revolution and subsequent years, counter-revolutionary circles in Austria, Prussia and Tsarist Russia attempted to revive the Holy Alliance in a modified form. — 430
Page me40.631
†417 Marx refers to the commercial panic in Vienna started by the bankruptcy on 5 May 1859 of the big firm of Arnstein & Eskeles. Marx deals in detail with this subject in the article 'Highly Important from Vienna' (present edition, Vol. 16). — 433
Page me40.631
†418 A reference to Lassalle's undated letter to Marx written in all probability in mid-May 1859. Marx discusses it in this letter and in one to Engels dated 18 May 1859. — 433, 434
Page me40.631
†419 Marx compares the commercial panic in Vienna in the spring of 1859 (see Note 417) to that in Hamburg during the economic crisis in the autumn of 1857. — 434
Page me40.631
†420 On 9 May 1859 Marx, while attending a public meeting organised by Urquhart in connection with the Italian war, was told by the German democrat Karl Blind that Vogt was in receipt of subsidies from the French government for Bonapartist propaganda and had offered bribes to some writers to induce them to come out in support of Napoleon III (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 116-17). — 434, 436, 460, 468, 533, 539, 543
Page me40.631
†421 In his anonymous pamphlet Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie, published in May 1859, Lassalle advocated the dynastic unification of Germany under the aegis of the Prussian monarchy, as against the idea of Germany's unification as a democratic republic put forward by Marx and Engels in 1848. Lassalle also tried to justify the neutrality of Prussia and other German states in the Austro-Italo-French war of 1859, an attitude which, he argued, contributed to the weakening of Austria, Prussia's rival, and the establishment of Prussian hegemony. At the same time he justified the policy of Napoleon III, in particular his demagogy on the nationalities question (the so-called principle of nationalities), and hailed the Bonapartist Second Empire as the potential 'liberator' of Italy. — 435
Page me40.631
†422 Marx uses Lassalle's words here. In a letter to him Lassalle described his work on the pamphlet about the Italian war as follows: 'In the last few days, writing nights through, I have tried to weave from logic and fire something ... which will not be lost on the people in any case...” — 436, 458
Page me40.631
†423 The Federal Diet — a representative body of the German Confederation, an ephemeral union of German states, founded in 1815 by decision of the

Page Break me40.632

Congress of Vienna. Though it had no real power, it was nevertheless a vehicle for feudal and monarchical reaction. During the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, reactionary circles made vain attempts to revive the Federal Diet, intending to use it to prevent the democratic unification of Germany. After the defeat of the revolution, the Federal Diet received its former rights in 1850 and survived till 1866. — 436
Page me40.632
†424 The Peace of Basle was concluded on 5 April 1795 separately between France and Prussia, the latter being a member of the first anti-French coalition. The treaty was the consequence of the French victories as well as of the differences between the members of the coalition, in particular between Prussia and Austria. — 437
Page me40.632
†425 No manifesto was issued. — 437, 447, 449
Page me40.632
†426 Marx refers to the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 50). — 437
Page me40.632
†427 The International Committee was set up in London on 25 January 1855 on the initiative of Ernest Jones. On 6 May 1856 it was renamed the International Association. It included English Chartists and French, German, Polish, Italian, Hungarian, Spanish and Russian political refugees in London. The Association's political and ideological heterogeneity hampered the performance of its main function, promotion of the international cooperation of democratic forces. The Association ceased to exist in 1859. — 437
Page me40.632
†428 The last two issues of the weekly Die Neue Zeit — Nos. 41 and 42 of 10 and 16 April 1859 — had only two pages instead of the usual four. It was one of these issues that Marx sent Engels.
Page me40.632
The meeting mentioned by Marx was held at the London hotel Germania on 1 May 1859 on Liebknecht's initiative. Attended by members of German workers' societies in London, it decided to start publication of Das Volk, a weekly representing the views and interests of the German workers in Britain. — 437
Page me40.632
†429 Early in October 1856 the Marx family moved to a London suburb. — 438, 464
Page me40.632
†430 Das Volk — a German-language weekly published in London from 7 May to 20 August 1859 — was founded as the official organ of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. Its first issue appeared under the editorship of the German journalist and petty-bourgeois democrat Elard Biskamp. Beginning with issue No. 2 Marx took an active part in its publication: he offered advice, edited articles, organised material support, and so on. In issue No. 6 of 11 June, the Editorial Board officially named Karl Marx, Frederick Engels, Ferdinand Freiligrath, Wilhelm Wolff and Heinrich Heise as its contributors (see present edition, Vol. 16).
Page me40.632
Marx's first article in the paper — 'Spree and Mincio' — was printed on 25 June. Under Marx's influence Das Volk began to turn into a militant revolutionary working-class newspaper. In the beginning of July Marx became its virtual editor and manager.

Page me40.632
Das Volk carried Marx's preface to his work A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, six of his articles, seven articles by Engels and his review of Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.632
Das Volk reflected the elaboration by Marx and Engels of questions concerning the revolutionary theory and tactics of the working-class struggle, described the class struggles of the proletariat, and relentlessly fought the exponents of petty-bourgeois ideology. It analysed from the standpoint of proletarian internationalism the events of the Austro-Italo-French war of 1859 and the questions of German and Italian unification, exposed the foreign policy of Britain, Prussia, France, Russia and other states, and consistently opposed Bonapartism and its overt and covert supporters.

Page Break me40.633
Page me40.633
In all, sixteen issues appeared. The newspaper ceased publication for lack of money. — 438, 447
Page me40.633
†431 This refers to a branch of the German Workers' Educational Society in London and to an association, close to it, formed by German refugee workers in London's East End in November 1858. — 440
Page me40.633
†432 In his letter of 24 April 1859 from New York, Albrecht Komp told Marx that there were favourable opportunities for selling copies of the first instalment of his book, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, in the USA. Enclosed was a letter from Joseph Weydemeyer of 27 March 1859 confirming Komp's information. — 440, 446, 454
Page me40.633
†433 On 21 March 1859 Lassalle wrote to Engels telling him that he had sent copies of his drama Franz von Sickingen to England for him, Marx and Freiligrath. In this connection Lassalle referred to his letter to Marx of 6 March where he had explained his motives for writing the drama, and the aesthetic principles underlying it. He probably meant the note — appended to that letter — in which he elucidated his concept of the 'tragic idea' (see Note 403).
Page me40.633
This letter of Engels', with the critical analysis of Lassalle's play, continued the polemic, started by Marx in his letter to Lassalle of 19 April 1859 (see this volume, pp. 418-21), on the evaluation of the historical events and characters presented in the drama, on its political message and on problems of aesthetics and art.
Page me40.633
On the first English publication of Engels' letter see Note 100. — 441
Page me40.633

†434 In early 1858 Lassalle published anonymously a stage version of his drama Franz von Sickingen. But when the Royal Court Theatre refused to put it on, Lassalle published it as a literary drama (at the beginning of 1859). — 442
Page me40.633
†435 Here and below Engels refers to ideas Lassalle put forward in the preface to his Franz von Sickingen. Engels argues against them in one form or another. — 442
Page me40.633
†436 Engels refers to the trial of Lassalle on 3-4 May 1849. He was arrested in Düsseldorf on 22 November 1848 on a charge of inciting people to offer armed resistance to the government in his speech at a popular meeting in Neuss (near Düsseldorf). The proceedings against him were delayed by the legal authorities in every possible way. At Lassalle's request, expressed in his letters to Marx and Engels, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung came out in defence of him and of other persecuted Düsseldorf democrats (see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 344-46, 463-65, 474-76; Vol. 9, pp. 339-41, 377-78, 383-88). Marx and Engels also took part in the efforts of democratic organisations to speed up the investigation. The jury acquitted Lassalle. — 442
Page me40.633
†437 Engels calls the leader of the peasant movement of the early 16th century an ”agitator” (Wühler), the name moderate constitutionalists in Germany in 1848-49 applied to republican democrats. — 444
Page me40.633
†438 The Bundschuh and the Poor Konrad were secret peasant associations whose activities prepared the Peasant War in Germany in 1525 (see Engels' The Peasant

Page Break me40.634
War in Germany, present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 431-38, 440 and 441). — 445
Page me40.634
†439 A reference to the German Republicans and petty-bourgeois democrats, the names of whose leaders occur in the refrain of a song popular in South Germany during the 1848-49 revolution:

'Hecker, Struve, Blenker, Zitz und Blum,
Bringt die deutschen Fürsten um!'
('Hecker, Struve, Blenker, Zitz and Blum, Slay the German princes!').
Page me40.634
With these lines Engels opens his work The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution, in which he criticises the petty-bourgeois democrats' attitude during the revolution (see present edition, Vol. 10, p. 149). — 446
Page me40.634
†440 The Free Press, No. 5, of 27 May 1859 carried Karl Blind's anonymous note 'The Grand Duke Constantine to Be King of Hungary' exposing the plans for giving the Hungarian throne to the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia. Marx mentioned this article in his Herr Vogt (see Vol. 17, pp. 122-24). Blind also hinted at the possibility of some refugee German democrats and liberals being bribed by the Bonapartists.
Page me40.634

The same issue of the journal carried an excerpt from a private letter comparing Kossuth's tendency to yield to Bonapartist demagogy in the nationalities question with Mazzini's critical attitude to it. Marx may have drawn on the two items for the facts he relates to Engels. — 452, 504, 521
Page me40.634
†441 This refers to the proclamation which Garibaldi addressed to the local population upon the entry of his volunteer corps into Lombardy in May 1859 (see 'Garibaldi's Proclamation to the Lombards', The Times, No. 23319, 30 May 1859). — 455
Page me40.634
†442 The reference is probably to the workers' demonstrations for better living conditions held in Berlin on 1 and 4 June 1859. Some of the participants were arrested. — 458
Page me40.634
†443 On 14 May 1859 Das Volk (issue No. 2) announced the publication of the pamphlet Po and Rhine. On Marx's initiative, the announcement suggested that the author of the pamphlet was a prominent member of the proletarian party. In its issue No. 5 of 4 June Das Volk carried an editorial on the publication of Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. It contained extracts from the Preface to the book and for the first time named Engels as the author of Po and Rhine. — 458
Page me40.634
†444 Marx came to Engels in Manchester approximately on 12 June 1859 to discuss questions connected with the publication of Das Volk. From Manchester he went to Scotland to visit former members of the Communist League Peter Imandt and Heinrich Heise, with whom he discussed the financing of the paper. Marx returned to London about 2 July. — 459, 462, 470, 472, 497, 520, 538
Page me40.634
†445 This refers to Lassalle's letter to Marx and Engels of 27 May 1859, in which he replied to the criticism of his drama Franz von Sickingen contained in Marx's letter of 19 April and Engels' letter of 18 May 1859 (see this volume, pp. 418-21 and 441-46). In essence Lassalle argued against Marx's and Engels' view of the principles of drama and artistic creation and against their conception of the historical events presented in his drama. Lassalle tried to justify his attempts to glorify the German nobility and play down the historical role of peasant uprisings, describing the peasantry as class with reactionary tendencies, and Thomas Münzer, the ideologist of the plebeian peasant masses, as a religious fanatic. — 460, 461

Page Break me40.635
Page me40.635
†446 Marx and Engels refrained from openly attacking Lassalle's pamphlet in the press. However, indirect polemic against him could be found in their newspaper articles, in Engels' pamphlet Savoy, Nice and the Rhine and in Marx's Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vols. 16 and 17). It concerned the appraisal of the Austro-Italo-French war of 1859, the policy of the ruling classes of France and Prussia and the ways of unifying Italy and Germany. — 462
Page me40.635

†447 Marx did not have to issue a public statement because his book, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (see present edition, Vol. 30), had appeared, as he soon learned, on 11 June 1859. — 463
Page me40.635
†448 Marx means the first week after his return to London. He came back about 2 July 1859 (see Note 444). — 463
Page me40.635
†449 Das Volk regularly published 'Gatherings from the Press', a column with quotations from and critical comments on Kinkel's weekly Hermann. Besides Marx, Elard Biskamp took part in writing it (see present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 625-34). Marx's biting 'Gatherings' forced Kinkel to resign from the editorial board of the weekly. He announced his resignation in the Hermann, No. 26, 2 July 1859. — 463, 468
Page me40.635
†450 On 8 July 1859 the emperors of France and Austria held a separate meeting — without the King of Piedmont — in Villafranca, at which they reached an agreement on an armistice. The meeting was initiated by Napoleon III, who feared that the protracted war might give a fresh impulse to the revolutionary and national liberation movements in Italy and other European states. On 11 July France and Austria signed a preliminary peace under which Austria was to cede to France its rights to Lombardy and France was to transfer this territory to Piedmont. Venice was to remain under the supreme power of Austria, and the rulers of the states of Central Italy were to be restored to their thrones. It was intended to create a confederation of Italian states under the honorary chairmanship of the Pope.
Page me40.635
The Villafranca preliminaries formed the basis of the peace treaty concluded by France, Austria and Piedmont in Zurich on 10 November 1859. — 464, 465
Page me40.635
†451 Presumably an allusion to Lassalle's letter to Marx and Engels of 27 May 1859 (see Note 445), in which he asserted that 'a collision ... that constantly recurred in all or almost all the past revolutions, and is bound to recur in future ones, is the tragic collision of the revolutionary situation itself'. — 465
Page me40.635
†452 In publishing the 'Memoir on Russia' on 13 July 1859 the editors of The Free Press wrote that the document had been discovered during the 'Prussian ministerial crisis'. This put Engels on his guard and made him, like Marx (see his letter to Engels of 19 July 1859, this volume, p. 470), doubt the authenticity of some of the passages.
Page me40.635
And indeed, from subsequent issues of The Free Press (of 27 and 31 July 1859) it appeared that the publication was based not on the original document but on material published in the German conservative newspaper Preussisches Wochenblatt zur Besprechung politischer Tagesfragen, Nos. 23, 24 and 25, June 9, 16 and 23, 1855. This publication quoted neither the source from which the document had been taken nor its title or the full text. Later Bismarck in his memoirs (Gedanken und Erinnerungen, Stuttgart, 1898, Bd. 1, S. 111-112) stated outright that the publication had been a forgery.

Page Break me40.636

Page me40.636

Though Marx and Engels were sceptical about the document, they did not know that it was completely false. Therefore Marx had it reprinted, from The Free Press, in the New-York Daily Tribune (early August) and in Das Volk (late July-early August 1859) prefacing it with an 'Introductory Note' (see present edition, Vol. 16, p. 415). — 468, 470, 476
Page me40.636
†453 The 'Memoir on Russia, for the Instruction of the Present Emperor', published in The Free Press, said that Russia's interests demanded the murder of Prince Alexei (son of Peter I) and Peter of Holstein, i.e., Peter III. — 469
Page me40.636
†454 Marx means his series of articles “Quid pro Quo”, which he began publishing in Das Volk (see present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 445-64). The series remained unfinished as the newspaper ceased publication. In the published instalments the 'Memoir on Russia' was not dealt with. — 470
Page me40.636
†455 The letter has no date. It was written in reply to Marx's letter of 19 July 1859 (this volume, pp. 469-71) and answered by Marx on 22 July (pp. 472-74). So the letter must have been written between these dates. — 471
Page me40.636
†456 Engels' letter to Duncker has not been found. — 474
Page me40.636
†457 From late June to 20 August 1859 Das Volk published a series of articles entitled 'Feierstunden-Arbeit eines Arbeiters' ('Spare-Time Work of a Worker'). The author advocated schools for workers and disparaged the bourgeois phrases about the sanctity of private property, the need for forgiveness and conciliation with one's enemies.
Page me40.636

The earlier instalments appeared unsigned but the last three were marked by the letter 'P'. The series was written by the Danish refugee N. Petersen. — 476
Page me40.636
†458 In its 'Feuilleton' column, Das Volk, No. 13, 30 July 1859, carried a poem by a Landwehr soldier from Frankfort on the Oder describing the mechanism of the needle gun. The editors supplied it with ironical comments. — 477
Page me40.636
†459 Early in May 1851 Peter Nothjung was sent on a tour of Germany as an emissary of the Cologne Central Committee of the Communist League. On 10 May he was arrested in Leipzig. The documents seized from him enabled the authorities of Prussia and other German states to arrest more League members. — 478
Page me40.636
†460 Crawshay's letter, published in The Free Press, No. 8, 27 July 1859, stated that the 'Russian Memoir' had been published in 1855 in a German newspaper (it was the Preussisches Wochenblatt zur Besprechung politischer Tagesfragen — see Note 452) and that it had been translated for The Free Press by 'a German'. The letter gave no indication as to the identity of that 'German'. — 479

Page me40.636
†461 About the middle of July 1859 Marx talked with Blind, Liebknecht and Hollinger, the owner of the print-shop in which Das Volk was printed, about the anti-Vogt anonymous pamphlet Zur Warnung (A Warning) which had been reprinted in Das Volk, No. 7, 18 June and the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 173, 22 June. The pamphlet exposed Vogt as a bribed Bonapartist agent. During the conversation, Marx gave it as his opinion that the pamphlet had been written by Blind as it contained facts which the latter had related to him at a public meeting on 9 May 1859 (see Note 420); Marx also pointed out that the proofs of the pamphlet, discovered by Liebknecht in Hollinger's print-shop in mid-June and sent by him to the Allgemeine Zeitung contained corrections in Blind's handwriting. However, Blind, unwilling openly to attack Vogt, denied his authorship. His attitude was later condemned by Marx in his polemical work Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 122-32). — 479, 486, 498, 503, 539

Page Break me40.637
Page me40.637
†462 The project to publish the Union Républicaine did not materialise. See this volume, p. 484. — 480
Page me40.637
†463 Engels means Duncker's letter of 3 August 1859, which was in reply to Engels letter, no longer extant, of 25 July. Duncker wrote that he had sent six copies of Engels' pamphlet Po and Rhine, and would advertise Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy in German papers several weeks after its publication because, he maintained, this would make for better sales. — 481
Page me40.637
†464 The Urquhartite Free Press had been suggesting that Mazzini was a 'Russian agent'. This idea had been expressed, in particular, in the note 'Kossuth and Mazzini' published in The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.
Page me40.637
By Mazzini's 'diplomatic revelations' Engels means his assertions in The Times (No. 23381, 10 August 1859) about the existence of a secret agreement between Bonapartist France, Tsarist Russia and the Austrian Empire on combating national liberation movements in Europe. — 482
Page me40.637
†465 Marx means the Union Républicaine, which was to be published by Ledru-Rollin and Louis Blanc (see this volume, p. 480).
Page me40.637
Napoleon III's amnesty for political offenders (16 August 1859) was to ensure his government the support of liberal circles. — 484
Page me40.637
†466 The letter is not dated. The time of its writing may be established by reference to Marx's mentioning his article about Italy and Hungary. He probably means the article 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon' published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 24 September (No. 5748) and dated 5 September 1859. It is quite possible that Marx sent Engels the letter on the same day. — 485
Page me40.637

†467 The letter is not dated. But since it was in reply to Marx's letter presumably written on 5 September 1859 (see Note 466), the time of its writing can be approximately established by comparing the two letters. Marx asked Engels to send him by Friday (i.e., 9 September) 'a military piece on China' (probably in connection with the resumption of the Western powers' second Opium War against China). Being unable to supply the article by the appointed day, Engels informed Marx of this on the eve, i.e., on 8 September. — 486
Page me40.637
†468 Blind's letter to Liebknecht of 8 September 1859 is quoted in full in Marx's Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 122). — 486
Page me40.637
†469 Marx means the written declaration given to him on 17 September 1859 by August Vögele, the compositor, testifying that the pamphlet Zur Warnung had been set in Fidelio Hollinger's print-shop, that the manuscript was in Blind's hand and that Hollinger had named Blind as the author of the pamphlet (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 123, 124-25 and 319). — 488, 498
Page me40.637
†470 On 22 June 1859 the Allgemeine Zeitung reprinted the pamphlet Zur Warnung, which induced Vogt, in July, to bring an action for libel against the paper. The case was heard on 24 October 1859. In early August the editors of the Allgemeine Zeitung had asked Liebknecht for proof of the accusations against Vogt contained in Zur Warnung. Liebknecht requested Marx to help him obtain Blind's admission that he, Blind, was the author of the anonymous pamphlet. Marx considered such an admission necessary also because Vogt had declared

Page Break me40.638

Marx to be the author of the pamphlet. Besides, Marx wanted to expose the cowardice of this petty-bourgeois democrat who dared not challenge Bonaparte's agents openly and was, as it were, aiding and abetting Vogt in his dispute with the Allgemeine Zeitung. Though Marx emphatically condemned the paper's conservative views, in this case he assisted it in the interests of the common struggle against Bonapartism. The court dismissed Vogt's action (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 111-32, also pp. 3 and 8-9). — 488, 503, 507, 514, 519, 520
Page me40.638
†471 Marx refers to the Friends of the Fatherland Society (Vaterlandsfreundegesellschaft) — a republican association of German refugees in London that existed in the 1850s and 60s. Karl Blind, Ferdinand Freiligrath and Fidelio Hollinger were among its members. — 488
Page me40.638
†472 The letter has not been found. — 489
Page me40.638
†473 After the publication, in June 1859, of the first instalment of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (see present edition, Vol. 30), Marx intended, as previously agreed with the Berlin publisher Duncker, to prepare for the press and publish as the second instalment the 'Chapter on Capital', which constitutes the bulk of his main economic manuscript of 1857-58; and then publish the remaining parts of his economic work (see Notes 250 and 355).

Page me40.638
As he proceeded with his plan, however, he realised that he would have to do more research to formulate the basic propositions of his economic theory. But his journalistic activity and other party obligations, above all the need to refute publicly Vogt's slanderous allegations against proletarian revolutionaries, temporarily diverted him from his economic studies. It was not until 1861 that he resumed them in earnest. Later Marx decided to publish his researches not as the second and further instalments of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy but as a large independent work. — 489, 498, 502, 508, 511, 522, 523, 542, 574
Page me40.638
†474 The letter has not been found. — 489
Page me40.638
†475 Marx means Engels' return to Manchester on 20 September 1859, after accompanying his parents on a short tour of Scotland (see this volume, p. 490). — 491
Page me40.638
†476 Speculation of this kind probably stemmed from the amnesty for political offenders demagogically granted by Napoleon III on 16 August 1859 (see Note 465) and from the expectations of a similar amnesty in Prussia in connection with the forthcoming enthronement of William I. — 491
Page me40.638
†477 The letter is not dated. It was written in reply to Marx's letter of 23 September 1859. Marx answered it, presumably, on 27 September (see Note 480). So this letter seems to have been written between these two dates. — 492
Page me40.638
†478 Marx's letters of 26 September and 8 October 1859 to Bertalan Szemere, the former Prime Minister of the Hungarian revolutionary government, is evidence of his desire to strengthen contacts with refugee Hungarian revolutionary democrats. In these letters Marx criticises Kossuth's attitude in the years of emigration, in particular his tendency to take Napoleon III's demagogy in the nationalities question at face value, and his illusions concerning the possibility of using the French Emperor as an ally in the struggle for Hungary's liberation. This criticism does not extend to Kossuth's activity during the 1848-49 revolution, when he headed the revolutionary forces fighting for Hungary's national independence and, in the words of Engels, was 'a truly revolutionary figure, a man who in the name of his people dares to accept the challenge of a desperate struggle' (Vol. 8, p. 227). — 493, 504

Page Break me40.639
Page me40.639
†479 On 23 August 1859 the New-York Daily Tribune published an anonymous item marked 'From Our Own Correspondent' (written by the Hungarian emigrant Ferenc Pulszky) which was an attempt to justify Kossuth's ties with Napoleon III. Early in September Marx sent two articles to the paper exposing the ties of both Kossuth and his followers, including Pulszky, with Bonapartist circles. The facts testifying to Kossuth's dealings with Napoleon III, which Marx cited in the two articles were given to him by Bertalan Szemere on 1 September 1859 when the latter visited him in London. The Tribune published, on 24 September, one article by Marx on the subject, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon' (present edition, Vol. 16), possibly combining the two he had sent. Whether Marx's private letter to the Tribune editor, Charles Dana, was used in it is not known, for the letter has not been found. On 28 September the London Free Press published Marx's article 'Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon', which was a condensed version of the Tribune article. — 494, 497, 507, 525

Page me40.639
†480 The letter has no date. The approximate date of its writing has been deduced from Marx's acknowledgment of the money Engels sent him in a letter written between 24 and 26 September (see Note 477), and from the fact that Marx wrote it on an 'article day', i.e., a day when he sent material to the New-York Daily Tribune. In this case it was, most likely, Tuesday, 27 September. It has also been taken into account that this letter preceded the one Marx wrote to Engels on 28 September 1859. — 495
Page me40.639
†481 The letter is not dated. It is the reply to Lassalle's letter of 30 September 1859. In sending the latter on to Engels on 5 October 1859, Marx wrote that he had answered it 'by return' (see this volume, p. 502). Taking into account the time letters took to get from Berlin to London, it may be assumed that Marx received Lassalle's not earlier than 2 October.
Page me40.639
On the first English publication of Marx's letter see Note 20. — 497
Page me40.639
†482 The article 'The New Portfolio' published in The Free Press, No. 9, 31 August 1859 reported the forthcoming publication in Berlin of a collection of diplomatic documents and materials corresponding to the Portfolio series published by David Urquhart in London (see Note 18). The German series, edited by Eduard Fischel, appeared in Berlin in 1859-60 under the title Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Dokumente und Aktenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte. The above-mentioned article also said that the 'Memoir on Russia' first appeared, in German, in the Preussisches Wochenblatt and that the publication in The Free Press was a translation from the German (see Note 452). — 500, 547
Page me40.639
†483 Marx means the lectures on political economy he gave in the German Workers' Educational Society in London in the autumn of 1859, after the publication of his A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. The draft of one of the lectures has been published in the present edition under the title 'On the Division of Labour' (Vol. 16, pp. 617-18). — 502, 520
Page me40.639
†484 This communication has not been found. — 503
Page me40.639
†485 In a letter to Marx written in October 1859 Lassalle again tried to prove the correctness of the tactics he had advocated in his pamphlet Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens (see Note 421). Marx replied to him on 22 November, supplementing his criticism of Lassalle's anti-proletarian, pro-Bonapartist position on this question with fresh arguments (see this volume, pp. 536-39). — 508, 522

Page Break me40.640

Page me40.640
†486 Marx refers to the festivities to mark the centenary of Schiller's birth on 10 November 1859. The preparations in London were handled by a jubilee committee consisting of petty-bourgeois refugees headed by Gottfried Kinkel, who hoped to use the festival for his own publicity purposes. — 508, 511, 514, 525
Page me40.640
†487 This refers to August Vögele's written declaration (see Note 469), which Marx sent to the editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung on 19 October 1859 in connection with Vogt's law-suit against the paper (see Note 470). — 508, 513, 515, 521
Page me40.640
†488 Marx's letter to Ferdinand Freiligrath has not been found. — 511
Page me40.640
†489 Engels seems to refer to the planned march of Romagnese and Tuscan volunteers under Garibaldi to Central and South Italy with a view to reactivating the struggle for Italy's unification. The plan had been put forward by Italy's democrats headed by Mazzini, who were not satisfied with the Villafranca treaty (see Note 370). The march was to take place in late October or early November 1859.
Page me40.640
Victor Emmanuel, King of Sardinia, and his liberal following at first sought to exploit Garibaldi for the unification of Italy under the aegis of the Sardinian dynasty, but fearing an outbreak of popular unrest in Central Italy they succeeded in having the expedition cancelled. — 515
Page me40.640
†490 In the summer of 1859 hostilities resumed in the second Opium War in China (1856-60).
Page me40.640
In October 1859 Spain declared war on Morocco and invaded the country. This colonial incursion met with stubborn resistance and brought the Spaniards no success. The fighting continued until March 1860. In April a peace treaty was concluded under which Spain received indemnities and insignificant territorial concessions. — 515, 523
Page me40.640
†491 At the time, Engels was studying the Gothic translation of the Bible made by the Visigothic bishop Ulfilas. The extant fragments of Ulfilas' Bible, the main written monument of the Gothic language, were available in a number of editions prepared by different German scholars. — 516
Page me40.640
†492 The Schiller society, founded in Manchester in November 1859 in connection with the centenary of Schiller's birth, was conceived as a cultural and social centre of the city's German colony. At first Engels was critical of the society and kept aloof from it. But after certain amendments were made in the Rules, he became a member of its board, in 1864, and later President of the society, devoting much time to it and exercising a considerable influence on its activities. — 517, 531
Page me40.640

†493 Marx means Lassalle's negotiations with the Berlin publisher Duncker on the publication of the second instalment of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (see also Note 473). — 518
Page me40.640
†494 The Communist League — the first German and international communist organisation of the proletariat formed under the leadership of Marx and Engels in London early in June 1847, as a result of the reorganisation of the League of the Just (a secret association of workers and artisans that appeared in the 1830s and had communities in Germany, France, Switzerland and England). The League's members took an active part in the bourgeois-democratic revolution in Germany in 1848-49. In 1849 and 1850, after the defeat of the revolution, it was reorganised and continued its activities. In the summer of 1850 disagreements arose between the supporters of Marx and Engels and the sectarian Willich-Schapper group, which resulted in a split within the League. Owing to police persecutions and arrests of League members in May 1851, the activities of the Communist League as an organisation practically ceased in Germany. On 17 November 1852, on a motion by Marx, the London District announced the dissolution of the League.

Page Break me40.641
Page me40.641
The Communist League played an important historical role as the first proletarian party based on the principles of scientific communism, as a school of proletarian revolutionaries, and as the historical forerunner of the International Working Men's Association. — 519
Page me40.641
†495 Marx refers to the war waged by the mountaineers of Daghestan and Chechnya under Shamil against Tsarist Russia. Having defeated Shamil's main forces and taken him prisoner (August 1859), the Russians were breaking the resistance of separate detachments of Shamil's followers. — 523
Page me40.641
†496 During the Italian war of 1859 Kossuth was in Italy where, on his initiative, a Hungarian legion has been formed to fight against Austria on the side of Piedmont and Bonapartist France. He hoped to win independence for Hungary with the help of the latter.
Page me40.641
On the Villafranca peace see Note 450. — 524, 532
Page me40.641
†497 On 26 May 1849 Wilhelm Wolff, who shortly before had taken over the seat of a moderate deputy in the Frankfurt National Assembly, spoke in the Assembly against the adoption of an address to the German people drawn up by the poet Uhland in the name of moderate democrats, and proposed declaring the Imperial Regent of Germany, Archduke John of Austria, and his ministers traitors to the people. His speech was sharply criticised by bourgeois deputies, Karl Vogt in particular. — 525
Page me40.641
†498 Marx puns on the phrase abgerundete Natur ('an intellectually mature character') used by barrister K. Hermann, who represented Vogt in his lawsuit against the Allgemeine Zeitung (see Note 470). The phrase can also mean 'well-rounded character' (in the physical sense), and it is in this sense that Marx later used it in his polemical work Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 28). — 525

Page me40.641
†499 Marx and Engels ridiculed these attributes of Kinkel in their satire The Great Men of the Exile (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 252-55).
Page me40.641
Black, red and gold symbolise the unity of Germany; petty-bourgeois democrats associated the colours with the idea of a union of autonomous lands in the manner of the Swiss Confederation. — 526
Page me40.641
†500 The letter is not dated. By its contents it is close to Marx's letter to Engels of 16 November 1859. Marx's mentioning that he wanted an article about the war in Morocco 'by tomorrow', and that he was writing an article about the Suez question, 'not having written on Tuesday', suggests that 'tomorrow' means Friday (Tuesday and Friday being the days when Marx sent articles to the New-York Daily Tribune), and that this letter was written on Thursday, 17 November. — 529

Page Break me40.642
Page me40.642
†501 Marx's article about the events connected with the building of the Suez Canal, which had aggravated the contradictions between Britain and France, was not published by the New-York Daily Tribune. — 529
Page me40.642
†502 The rifle volunteer movement started in Britain at the end of 1850 as a reaction to Napoleon III's aggressive policy, which was seen as holding the threat of a French invasion of the British Isles. Progressive circles believed that the movement could also help reform the extremely conservative British military system.
Page me40.642
An article by Engels on the volunteer movement in Britain appeared in the New-York Daily Tribune later (see F. Engels, 'The British Volunteer Force', present edition, Vol. 17). Engels also wrote a series of articles on the subject for the Manchester weekly The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire (present edition, Vol. 18). — 530, 544, 546
Page me40.642
†503 On 10 November 1859 the Crystal Palace (see Note 89) was the scene of festivities to mark the centenary of Schiller's birth, with German petty-bourgeois refugees, above all Kinkel, playing the main role. — 531, 534
Page me40.642
†504 The cutting from the Volksblatt presumably was a report on Vogt's lawsuit against the Allgemeine Zeitung (see Note 470) containing slanderous attacks on Marx and his followers. — 532
Page me40.642
†505 Marx alludes to Batrachomyomachia (The Battle of the Frogs and the Mice), an old anonymous Greek parody of Homer's Iliad. — 532
Page me40.642

†506 This letter is the reply to two letters by Lassalle, dated mid-November and 20 November 1859. Marx reverts to the disagreements with Lassalle over the assessment of Napoleon III's policy and the tactical line on the question of Italy's and Germany's unification, and answers Lassalle's attempts to prove the correctness of his stand formulated in a letter written in October 1859 (see Note 485). — 536
Page me40.642
†507 In a letter to Marx written in mid-November 1859 Lassalle praised Freiligrath's poem 'Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London' and at the same time expressed offence at Freiligrath's failing to acknowledge his drama Franz von Sickingen, which Lassalle had sent him for comment. — 537
Page me40.642
†508 At the beginning of April 1859 Vogt sent Freiligrath and others his political 'Programme' calling on the states of the German Confederation to maintain neutrality in the war France and Piedmont were preparing against Austria. Vogt urged political leaders to support his 'Programme' in the press (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 115). — 539, 543
Page me40.642
†509 On 19 August 1851 Marx, accompanied by Ferdinand Freiligrath and Wilhelm Wolff, visited the offices of the London German weekly How Do You Do? and demanded satisfaction of the publisher Louis Drucker and the editor Heinrich Beta, who had printed an item containing insulting allusions to Marx's connection with the Prussian Minister of the Interior, Ferdinand von Westphalen (Jenny Marx's stepbrother). — 540, 545
Page me40.642
†510 Marx decided against making his statement (see this volume, p. 535). — 541

Page Break me40.643
Page me40.643
†511 On 15 November 1859 the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung published Freiligrath's statement (see this volume, p. 533) appending to it a note by Gustav Kolb, the Editor-in-Chief, claiming that in his letter to the newspaper Liebknecht had named Freiligrath among the persons who could come forward with charges against Vogt. Actually, Liebknecht had only written that Freiligrath could, together with Marx, confirm that Blind was the author of the pamphlet Zur Warnung (see Note 461).
Page me40.643
Cotta was the publisher of the Allgemeine Zeitung. — 543
Page me40.643
†512 The long letter mentioned by Marx has probably not been preserved. Another letter containing the Gartenlaube and Beta's article was sent, most likely, on 19 November 1859 though that was a Saturday, not a Tuesday (see this volume, pp. 532-36). — 542

Page me40.643
†513 This refers to Lassalle's letter of 20 November 1859, written in reply to Marx's letter of 15 November (see this volume, p. 526). In this letter Lassalle tried to persuade Marx not to publish his declaration against Vogt and Blind in the Volks-Zeitung (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 8-9). — 542

Page me40.643
†514 This letter to Freiligrath is quoted in full in Marx's letter to Engels of 10 December 1859 (see this volume, pp. 548-49) and has come down to us only in this form. When reproducing the letter Marx did not date it, but he wrote it, as he informed Engels, immediately upon receiving Freiligrath's reply to his letter of 23 November. Freiligrath's reply is also quoted in full in the above-mentioned letter to Engels. Freiligrath, however, had not answered Marx's letter at once but, as Marx wrote, had done so after 'having waited a week', i.e., on 30 November. Marx's letter to Freiligrath quoted in his letter to Engels was written at about this time too. — 546
Page me40.643
†515 The letter is not dated, but it may be assumed from its contents that it was written in reply to Marx's letter of 10 December 1859. Marx answered on 13 December. So Engels must have written his letter between these two dates. — 550
Page me40.643
†516 This letter was first published in English in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. — 551
Page me40.643
†517 The note mentioned is a letter to Marx from A. Peza, a London bookseller, of 11 December 1859, communicating Hermann Juch's request to appoint the place and time for a meeting. Juch, the proprietor of the London weekly Hermann, wished to see Marx in order to get information on the Cologne Communist trial (see Note 71) which he needed because Wilhelm Stieber, the chief of the Prussian political police and the central figure in that trial, had lodged a complaint in a Berlin court against Karl Eichhoff, the Berlin correspondent of the Hermann, who had denounced Stieber on its pages (see this volume, p. 536).
Page me40.643
In May 1860 Eichhoff was sentenced to 14 months' imprisonment. — 552, 554
Page me40.643
†518 The letter is not dated, but since Marx answered it on 20 December 1859, it may be assumed that it was written the day before. This is confirmed by Engels' mentioning that he had been unable to write the article on Morocco for the day when material was usually despatched from London to New York, in this case Tuesday, 20 December. The last day when an article due to get to London from Manchester by December 20 ought to have been written was December 19, and that was the day when Engels wrote this letter. — 553

Page Break me40.644
Page me40.644
†519 Engels refers to the events of the Spanish-Moroccan war of 1859-60 (see Note 490). His next article on the subject published in the New-York Daily Tribune — 'The Moorish War' — was written in mid-January 1860 (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 553
Page me40.644
†520 In a letter published in the Hermann on 17 December, Borkheim maintained that Blind enjoyed the same prestige in Baden and Württemberg as Kinkel in Prussia. — 555

Page me40.644
†521 The letter is not dated, but it has much in common in content with Marx's letter to Engels of 25 March 1856. Mrs Marx's mentioning of the report 'from the Berlin correspondent in to-day's Times' is evidence that she wrote the letter on 28 March. — 561
Page me40.644
†522 Probably one of Engels' articles on Pan-Slavism for the New-York Daily Tribune not published by the editors (see Note 11). — 561
Page me40.644
†523 The letter is not dated. Jenny Marx's asking whether the eye lotion had helped Engels, and the fact that Marx had notified him of the despatch of the lotion in a letter of 9 April 1857 warrant the assumption that Jenny was writing a few days after 9 April. Engels answered her letter about 16 April 1857 (see this volume, p. 121). — 563
Page me40.644
†524 The letter is not dated. Judging by its contents, it was in reply to Engels' letter to Marx of 29 July 1857 and the parcel he had sent the Marx family in London (see this volume, pp. 149-50). Of great help in dating the letter is Jenny's mentioning that Marx was busy 'shaping the Indian news into an article'. Judging by an entry in Marx's notebook, the article was despatched to the New-York Daily Tribune on 31 July 1857. — 563
Page me40.644
†525 The letter is not dated. It is the reply to Engels' letter to Mrs Marx of about 11 August 1857, which has not been found. Marx mentions Engels' letter to Jenny in his letter to him of 15 August (see this volume, p. 151). Mrs Marx presumably answered Engels' letter shortly before that date. — 565
Page me40.644
†526 Jenny Marx means Jones' statement in the press in support of the popular uprising in India (see Note 178). — 565
Page me40.644
†527 The letter is not dated. But since Jenny Marx mentions her intention 'to write straight away' to Lassalle, and her letter to him is dated 9 April 1858, there is good reason to believe that her letter to Engels was written on the same day. This assumption is corroborated by Jenny's mentioning the arrival of the Manchester Guardians sent by Engels to London on 8 April, of which he informed Marx the next day (see this volume, pp. 304-05). — 569
Page me40.644
†528 This is the reply to Lassalle's letter to Marx of 26 March 1858, in which Lassalle wrote that he had come to terms with the Berlin publisher Duncker on the publication of Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. — 570
Page me40.644
†529 The letter is not dated. As can be seen from its contents, it was written during Marx's stay with Engels in Manchester in May 1858 (see Note 318). Jenny probably wrote a few days after Marx's arrival there (6 May), since she mentions the enclosure of Cluss' letter to Marx which she had received after Cluss had visited her. On 11 May Engels communicated to Jenny a request by Marx concerning Cluss which probably had something to do with Cluss' letter which Jenny had forwarded to Marx (see this volume, p. 313). — 571

Page Break me40.645
Page me40.645
†530 The letter is not dated. It was obviously written after 13 August 1859 since Jenny mentions the receipt by Marx of six copies of Engels' pamphlet Po and Rhine and Marx's intention to send some of them to Manchester the following week. Marx had promised to send copies of the pamphlet in a letter to Engels of 13 August 1859 (see this volume, p. 483). — 572
Page me40.645
†531 The letter is not dated. It may be assumed that it was written on 4 November 1859, because Engels answered it on 5 November 1859 (see this volume, p. 518) and because Jenny writes about Marx's 'struggling with Friday's article'. 4 November was a Friday, one of the two days when Marx sent articles to the New-York Daily Tribune. — 573
Page me40.645
†532 This letter, written in reply to Engels' letter of 22 December 1859, is not dated. As can be seen from its contents, Jenny wrote it a day or two before Christmas, i.e., on 23 or 24 December 1859. — 573
Page me40.645
†533 This article of Marx's for the New-York Daily Tribune has not been found. — 575

Page Break me40.646

NAME INDEX

Page me40.646
A

Page me40.646
Aberdeen, George Hamilton Gordon, Earl of (1784-1860) — British Tory statesman; leader of the Peelites from 1850; Foreign Secretary (1828-30, 1841-46); Prime Minister of the Coalition Government (1852-55). — 108
Page me40.646
Acton — one of Engels' acquaintances in Manchester. — 124
Page me40.646
Airey, Richard, Lord Airey (1803-1881) — British general; quartermaster-general of the forces in the Crimea (1854-55) and of the whole British army (1855-65). — 136
Page me40.646
Alexander I (1777-1825) — Emperor of Russia (1801-25). — 163
Page me40.646
Alexander II (1818-1881) — Emperor of Russia (1855-81). — 13-14, 22, 90, 468, 552
Page me40.646
Alexander of Macedon (Alexander the Great) (356-323 B.C.) — general and statesman of antiquity. — 123
Page me40.646

Ali Mehemet Pasha (1815-1871) — Turkish statesman, ambassador to London (1841-44), Foreign Minister (1846-52), Grand Vizier (July 1855-October 1856). — 29
Page me40.646
Allen — English physician, doctor of the Marx family. — 191, 198, 310, 312, 315, 328, 330, 491
Page me40.646
Allsop, Thomas (1795-1880) — English democrat, Chartist; was persecuted on suspicion of being an accomplice in Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III in 1858; later collaborated with Marx in helping refugees of the Paris Commune. — 276, 297
Page me40.646
Ammonius Saccas (c. 175-c. 242) — Greek philosopher. — 397
Page me40.646
Anders, Albert August (the Laplander) (b. 1802) — German journalist; emigrated to London, member of the Communist League, a leader of the West End branch of the London German Workers' Educational Society (from the end of 1858). — 440
Page me40.646
Anglessey, Henry William Paget, Marquis of (1768-1854) — British general, field marshal from 1846; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France; Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (1828-29, 1830-33), Master-General of the Ordnance (1827-28, 1846-52). — 137
Page me40.646
Anna (Anna Ivanovna) (1693-1740) — Empress of Russia (1730-40). — 3
Page me40.646
Anson, George (1797-1857) — British general, commander-in-chief of the British forces in India (1856-57). — 184
Page me40.646
Anstey, Thomas Chisholm (1816-1873) — British lawyer and politician, radical

Page Break me40.647
M.P. (1847-52), Attorney General for Hong Kong (1854-59). — 111, 115, 117, 120, 412
Page me40.647
Appleton, William Henry (1814-1899) — American publisher, from 1848 head of D. Appleton and Company (New York); published The New American Cyclopaedia in 1858-63. — 251, 266, 272, 274, 288, 337
Page me40.647
Archimedes (c. 287-212 B.C.) — Greek mathematician and engineer. — 75
Page me40.647
Argout, Antoine Maurice Apollinaire, comte d' (1782-1858) — French statesman and financier, Director-General of the Bank of France (1834-57). — 152
Page me40.647
Ariosto, Lodovico (1474-1533) — Italian poet of the Renaissance, author of L'Orlando furioso. — 111, 131
Page me40.647
Aristotle (384-322 B.C.) — Greek philosopher. — 124, 226, 324, 397
Page me40.647

Arminius (Hermann) the Cheruscan (17 B.C.-A.D. 21) — leader of the resistance of Germanic tribes to Roman rule, annihilated a Roman army in the Teutoburg Woods in A.D. 9. — 366, 375
Page me40.647
Armstrong, William George, Baron of Cragside (1810-1900) — English inventor of rifled cannon. — 403
Page me40.647
Arndt, Ernst Moritz (1769-1860) — German writer, historian and philologist; took part in the national struggle against Napoleonic rule; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre) in 1848-49. — 437
Page me40.647
Arrighi de Casanova, duchesse de Padoue — wife of the French senator Ernest Louis Henri Hyacinthe Arrighi de Casanova, duc de Padoue (1814-1888). — 464
Page me40.647
Asbóth, Sándor (Alexander) (1811-1868) — Hungarian colonel, took part in the revolution of 1848-49 in Hungary; emigrated to the USA in 1851; general of the Northern states during the Civil War (1861-64). — 417, 494
Page me40.647
d'Aspre, Constantin Karl van Hoobreuck, Baron (1761-1809) — Austrian general, took part in the wars against the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 177
Page me40.647
Assing, Ludmilla (1821-1880) — German authoress, Lassalle's friend and Marx's acquaintance. — 398
Page me40.647
Attwood, Thomas (1783-1856) — English banker, economist and radical politician. — 301
Page me40.647
Augereau, Pierre François Charles, duc de Castiglione (1757-1816) — French general, marshal from 1804; took part in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 137
Page me40.647
Augustus (Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus) (63 B.C.-A.D. 14) — Roman Emperor (27 B.C.-A.D. 14). — 56

Page me40.647
B

Page me40.647
Babbage, Charles (1792-1871) — English mathematician, engineer and economist. — 278, 279, 281
Page me40.647
Bakunin, Mikhail (1814-1876) — Russian democrat, journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; an ideologist of Narodism and anarchism in later years; opposed Marxism in the First International. — 249
Page me40.647

Balthasar — see Slör, Balthasar
Page me40.647
Bamberger, Louis (b. 1821) — German journalist; in the 1850s emigrated to London, where he was engaged in financial operations at his father's bank. — 142, 146, 458, 489, 548
Page me40.647
Bangya, János (1817-1868) — Hungarian journalist and army officer; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; later Kossuth's emissary abroad and at the same time a secret police agent; under the name of Mehemed Bey served in the Turkish army and was a Turkish agent in the Caucasus (1855-58). — 108, 109, 112, 113, 310, 318, 319, 324, 342, 365, 436

Page Break me40.648
Page me40.648
Barclay de Tolly, Mikhail Bogdanovich, Prince (1761-1818) — Russian general and military figure, Scottish by birth; field-marshal general from 1814; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France and Sweden; War Minister (1810-12); commanded a Russian army in the campaign of 1812 against Napoleon and Russian and Russo-Prussian troops in 1813-14. — 162-64, 168, 259
Page me40.648
Barss, Franciszek (1760-1812) — Polish lawyer, representative of Polish insurgents in France in 1794. — 85
Page me40.648
Bastiat, Frédéric (1801-1850) — French economist and politician. — 249, 303
Page me40.648
Bates, Robert Makin (born c. 1791) — English banker, partner of a firm which went bankrupt in June 1855; was sentenced to penal servitude for financial machinations. — 72
Page me40.648
Bauer, Bruno (1809-1882) — German philosopher and writer, Young Hegelian. — 4, 7, 11, 68, 90, 91, 127, 403, 453
Page me40.648
Bauer, Edgar (1820-1886) — German philosopher and writer, Young Hegelian; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; editor of the London newspaper Die Neue Zeit (1859); Bruno Bauer's brother. — 12, 68, 90, 106, 122, 127, 187, 353, 358, 363, 366, 369, 403, 415, 437, 438, 440, 453, 458, 459, 466, 519, 565
Page me40.648
Bauer, Egbert — German journalist, Young Hegelian, publisher in Charlottenburg; brother of Bruno and Edgar Bauer. — 90
Page me40.648
Bayle, Pierre (1647-1706) — French sceptic philosopher, critic of religious dogmatism. — 269
Page me40.648
Bazancourt, César Lecat, baron de (1810-1865) — French military writer, Bonapartist. — 45, 51, 71, 73, 80, 93, 124, 126, 128
Page me40.648

Beatson, William Ferguson — British general; commanded a Turkish cavalry detachment on the Danube (1854) and in the Crimea (until September 1855). — 29, 30
Page me40.648
Beauharnais, Eugéne de, prince (1781-1824) — French general, stepson of Napoleon I; took part in the wars of Napoleonic France; Viceroy of Italy (1805-14). — 175
Page me40.648
Becker, Hermann Heinrich ('Red Becker') (1820-1885) — German lawyer and journalist, member of the Communist League from 1850; sentenced to five-year imprisonment at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); in later years a national-liberal. — 209, 568
Page me40.648
Bedeau, Marie Alphonse (1804-1863) — French general and moderate republican politician; Vice-President of the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; expelled from France after the coup d'état of December 2, 1851. — 89
Page me40.648
Beethoven, Ludwig van (1770-1827) — German composer. — 503
Page me40.648
Belfield, James — Marx's and Engels' acquaintance in Manchester. — 5, 233, 262
Page me40.648
Bellegarde, Heinrich Joseph Johannes, Count von (1756-1845) — Austrian field marshal; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 177
Page me40.648
Belmontet, Louis (1799-1879) — French poet and journalist; Bonapartist. — 43
Page me40.648
Bem, Józef (1795-1850) — Polish general; took part in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31 and in the revolutionary struggle in Vienna in 1848; one of the commanders of the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49); later served in the Turkish army. — 166-67, 168-69, 171, 172, 259
Page me40.648
Bennigsen, Levin August Theophil (Leonti Leontievich), Count (1745-1826) — general in the Russian army; came from Hanover; participant in the assassination of Paul I; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France; in the campaign of 1812 against

Page Break me40.649
Napoleon was chief of the Russian General Staff (August-November). — 162, 163, 173, 175, 259
Page me40.649
Beresford, William Carr, Viscount (1768-1854) — British general and Tory politician; took part in the Peninsular war (1808-14); commander-in-chief of the Portuguese army from 1809 to 1820. — 259, 268, 273, 274, 281, 285, 288
Page me40.649
Berkeley, George (1685-1753) — Irish subjective idealist philosopher; bishop; in economic works regarded labour as the main source of wealth; exponent of the nominalistic theory of money. — 377
Page me40.649

Berlichingen, Götz (Gottfried) von (1480-1562) — German knight; took part in the peasant uprising of 1525; elected the leader of the Gay Bright Troop of the Odenwald peasants, he betrayed them at the crucial moment. — 419, 420
Page me40.649
Bermbach, Adolph (1821-1875) — Cologne lawyer, democrat; member of the Communist League; witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); liberal in later years. — 477
Page me40.649
Bernadotte, Jean Baptiste Jules (1763-1844) — Marshal of France, took part in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France; heir to the Swedish throne and regent of Sweden in 1810; fought in the war against Napoleon I in 1813; King of Sweden and Norway as Charles XIV John (1818-44). — 91, 164, 165, 166, 169-70, 173-77, 179, 259, 274
Page me40.649
Bernard, Martin (1808-1883) — French democrat, a leader of secret societies during the July monarchy; participant in the 1848-49 revolution, was sentenced to exile, fled to England in the early 1850s; returned to France after amnesty in 1859. — 255
Page me40.649
Bernard, Simon François (Bernard le Clubiste) (1817-1862) — French republican; emigrated to England after the defeat of the 1848 revolution; in 1858 he was accused by the French Government of being an accomplice in Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III but was acquitted by the British Court. — 276-78, 307, 309
Page me40.649
Berryer, Arthur — agent of the French Government in the joint-stock company, Docks Napoléon; son of lawyer Pierre Antoine Berryer; in March 1857 was sentenced to two-year confinement for participating in the money machinations of the company's governors. — 105
Page me40.649
Berthier, Louis Alexandre, prince de Neuchâtel, duc de Valengin, prince de Wagram (1753-1815) — Marshal of France, took part in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France; chief of Napoleon I's General Staff. — 164, 166, 168, 259
Page me40.649
Besser, W. — publisher in Berlin. — 376
Page me40.649
Bessiéres, Jean Baptiste, duc d'Istrie (1768-1813) — Marshal of France, took part in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 166, 167, 170, 175, 259
Page me40.649
Besson, Alexandre — French refugee in London; fitter; joined a group of republicans, supporters of Félix Pyat; later a member of the First International. — 277, 278
Page me40.649
Beta (pen-name of Bettziech, Johann Heinrich) (1813-1876) — German journalist, refugee in London, follower of Gottfried Kinkel. — 440, 458, 485, 511, 512, 532, 534, 537, 540, 545, 546, 547, 549-51, 556
Page me40.649
Bettziech, Johann Heinrich — see Beta
Page me40.649

Bibra, L. — owner of a German hotel in London. — 477
Page me40.649
Birago, Karl, Baron von (1792-1845) — Austrian military engineer, worked out a system of pontoon bridges. — 168
Page me40.649
Bischoffsheim, Louis Raphaël (1800-1873) — owner of a French joint-stock bank with a branch in London. — 535

Page Break me40.650
Page me40.650
Biskamp (Biscamp), Elard — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated after the defeat of the revolution; member of the editorial board of Das Volk. — 438-39, 450, 452-53, 458, 463, 464, 469, 471, 473, 477, 483, 484, 487, 496, 497, 501, 502, 508, 511, 518, 520-23, 548
Page me40.650
Blanc, Jean Joseph Louis (1811-1882) — French petty-bourgeois socialist, historian; member of the Provisional Government and President of the Luxembourg Commission in 1848; pursued a policy of conciliation with the bourgeoisie; a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees in London from August 1848. — 63, 310, 464, 480, 538
Page me40.650
Blank, Karl Emil (1817-1893) — German merchant in London, closely connected with socialist circles in the 1840s-50s; husband of Frederick Engels' sister Marie. — 65, 422, 424
Page me40.650
Blank, Marie (née Engels) (1824-1901) — Frederick Engels' sister, Karl Emil Blank's wife from 1845. — 422
Page me40.650
Blanqui, Louis Auguste (1805-1881) — French revolutionary, utopian communist. — 63, 427
Page me40.650
Blenker, Ludwig (Louis) (1812-1863) — German democrat, officer; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; subsequently emigrated to the USA and fought in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 446
Page me40.650
Blind, Friederike (née Ettlinger) — Karl Blind's wife. — 356
Page me40.650
Blind, Karl (1826-1907) — German democratic journalist; took part in the Baden revolutionary movement in 1848-49; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in London in the 1850s; national-liberal in the 1860s. — 63, 79, 179, 318, 324, 351, 353, 356, 357, 362, 363, 388, 428, 436, 440, 456, 458, 463, 468, 473, 479, 486-87, 488, 498, 502-09, 513, 515, 521, 523, 544
Page me40.650
Blücher, Gebhard Leberecht von, Prince von Wahlstatt (1742-1819) — Prussian field-marshal general, took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 164, 170, 172, 173, 176, 178-80, 198, 247, 259
Page me40.650

Blum, Robert (1807-1848) — German democratic journalist; leader of the Left in the Frankfurt National Assembly; took part in the defence of Vienna against counter-revolutionary forces in October 1848; court-martialled and executed after the fall of the city. — 158, 168, 173, 259, 358, 446
Page me40.650
Böckh, Philipp August (1785-1867) — German philologist and historian of antiquity; professor and for the number of years rector of Berlin University. — 336
Page me40.650
Boisguillebert, Pierre Le Pesant, sieur de (1646-1714) — French economist, predecessor of Physiocrats, founder of classical political economy in France. — 377
Page me40.650
Bolivar y Ponte, Simón (1783-1830) — South American politician, one of the chief leaders of the South American Spanish colonies in their war of independence; President of the Republic of Colombia (1819-30). — 259, 266
Page me40.650
Bona — see Napoleon III
Page me40.650
Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me40.650
Bonaparte, Eugéne Louis Jean Joseph (1856-1879) — son of Napoleon III, got the title of Imperial Prince at his birth. — 306
Page me40.650
Bonaparte, Jérôme (1784-1860) — youngest brother of Napoleon I; King of Westphalia (1807-13), Marshal of France from 1850. — 170, 293, 381

Page Break me40.651
Page me40.651
Bonaparte, Joseph (1768-1844) — eldest brother of Napoleon I; King of Naples (1806-08) and of Spain (1808-13). — 170
Page me40.651
Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul (1822-1891) — son of Jérôme Bonaparte, cousin of Napoleon III; adopted the name of Jérôme after the death of his elder brother (1847); commanded a corps in the Italian war of 1859; went by the name of Plon-Plon and the Red Prince. — 381, 487, 532
Page me40.651
Boniface, Louis (b. 1796) — French journalist, Bonapartist. — 381
Page me40.651
Borchardt, Louis — German physician, one of Engels' acquaintances in Manchester. — 232, 320, 326, 338, 341, 467, 480-82, 484, 516, 517
Page me40.651
Borkheim, Sigismund Ludwig (1825-1885) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated after its defeat; London merchant from 1851. — 555
Page me40.651
Bormann — assessor of commissariat in Berlin; took part in Fabrice's attack on Lassalle in May 1858, was prosecuted. — 319, 320, 322

Page me40.651
Born, David — Stephan Born's brother. — 458
Page me40.651
Born, Stephan (real name Buttermilch, Simon) (1824-1898) — German type-setter, member of the Communist League; leaned towards reformism during the 1848-49 revolution; turned his back on the workers' movement after the revolution. — 458
Page me40.651
Börne, Karl Ludwig (1786-1837) — German writer and critic; advocated Christian socialism towards the end of his life. — 32
Page me40.651
Bornstedt, Adalbert von (1808-1851) — German journalist, founder and editor of the Deutsche-Brüsseler Zeitung (1847-48); supported the adventurist plan of a revolutionary legion's invasion in Germany; member of the Communist League until his expulsion in March 1848; a secret agent of the Prussian police in the 1840s. — 278
Page me40.651
Börnstein, Heinrich (1805-1892) — German democratic journalist, founder and editor of Vorwärts! in Paris (1844); emigrated to the USA in 1849; publisher of the Anzeiger des Westens in the 1850s. — 356
Page me40.651
Bosquet, Pierre Joseph François (1810-1861) — French general, Marshal of France from 1856; took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s-1850s, commanded a division (1854) and then a corps in the Crimea (1854-55). — 170, 173, 177-78, 259, 297
Page me40.651
Bötticher, Johann Friedrich Wilhelm (1798-1850) — German philologist and historian. — 186
Page me40.651
Bourrienne, Louis Antoine Fauvelet de (1769-1834) — French diplomat and politician, personal secretary of Napoleon Bonaparte (1797-1802), chargé d'affaires in Hamburg (1804-13), went over to the Bourbons. — 158, 168, 173, 259
Page me40.651
Boustrapa — see Napoleon III
Page me40.651
Braun — see Lassalle, Ferdinand
Page me40.651
Bray, John Francis (1809-1895) — English economist, utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen; supporter of the theory of 'labour money'. — 301
Page me40.651
Bredt, Charlotte — see Engels, Charlotte
Page me40.651
Bright, John (1811-1889) — English manufacturer and politician, a leader of the Free Traders and founder of the Anti-Corn Law League; M.P. (from 1843). — 104, 110, 113, 115, 116-17, 127, 210, 275, 342, 358, 359, 411
Page me40.651
Brockhaus, Heinrich (1804-1874) — German publisher, owner of F.A. Brockhaus Publishing House in Leipzig. — 17

Page Break me40.652
Page me40.652
Bronner, Eduard — German physician, petty-bourgeois democrat; deputy to the Baden Constituent Assembly in 1849; emigrated to England. — 357, 362, 363
Page me40.652
Brown, Sir George (1790-1865) — British general; took part in the Peninsular war (1808-14) and in the Crimean war (1853-56). — 170, 173, 181, 259
Page me40.652
Brune, Guillaume Marie Anne (1763-1815) — Marshal of France, Right Dantonist Jacobin during the French Revolution, later Bonapartist; took part in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 165, 167, 170, 259
Page me40.652
Brüningk, Maria, Baroness von (d. 1853) — wife of Baron A. von Brüningk; helped Gottfried Kinkel to escape from prison in 1850; maintained ties with petty-bourgeois refugees in London from 1851. — 359
Page me40.652
Brunswick, Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand, Duke of (1735-1806) — ruler of Brunswick (1780-1806), field-marshal general of the Prussian army; participant in the Seven Years War (1756-63) and in the wars against revolutionary and Napoleonic France. — 561
Page me40.652
Buchanan, James (1791-1868) — American statesman; member of the Democratic Party; President of the United States (1857-61); advocate of slave-owners' interests. — 364
Page me40.652
Bucher, Lothar (1817-1892) — Prussian official and journalist; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848; refugee in London (1850-61); correspondent of the Berlin National-Zeitung, shared foreign policy views of David Urquhart in the 1850s; in later years a national-liberal. — 5, 18, 62, 75, 428, 440, 458, 479
Page me40.652
Buck, Hermann (born. c. 1807) — Prussian official and businessman, Rudolf Schramm's friend. — 189, 190, 196
Page me40.652
Budberg, Andrei Fyodorovich, Baron (1817-1881) — Russian diplomat; chargé d'affaires in Frankfurt from January 1848, envoy to Berlin (1852-56, 1858-62) and Vienna (1856-58), ambassador to Paris (1862-68). — 453
Page me40.652
Bugeaud de la Piconnerie, Thomas Robert (1784-1849) — Marshal of France, Orleanist; an organiser of the wars of conquest in Algeria and Morocco, author of works on military questions. — 170, 173, 177, 259
Page me40.652
Bülow, Friedrich Wilhelm, Count von Dennewitz (1755-1816) — Prussian general, took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 4, 164, 179, 259, 268, 274, 281, 285, 288, 293, 294
Page me40.652
Bunsen, Christian Karl Josias, Baron von (1791-1860) — Prussian diplomat, writer and theologian; envoy to London (1842-54). — 525
Page me40.652

Buol-Schauenstein, Karl Ferdinand, Count von (1797-1865) — Austrian statesman and diplomat, Prime Minister and Foreign Minister (1852-59). — 368
Page me40.652
Bürger, Gottfried August (1747-1794) — German poet. — 102, 139
Page me40.652
Bürgers, Heinrich (1820-1878) — German radical journalist, contributor to the Rheinische Zeitung (1842-43); member of the Communist League (1848), an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; member of the Communist League Central Authority from 1850; one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); subsequently a liberal. — 27, 209, 337, 385, 388, 452, 477, 479, 554
Page me40.652
Burleigh — see Cecil, William, Baron Burgley
Page me40.652
Busse, von — translator into German of texts included in the book Fürst Wladimir und dessen Tafelrunde. — 20
Page me40.652
Buxhöwden, Fyodor Fyodorovich (Friedrich Wilhelm), Count von (1750-1811) — Russian general; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France in 1805 and 1806. — 162

Page Break me40.653
Page me40.653
Byron, George Gordon Noel, Lord (1788-1824) — English romantic poet. — 33

Page me40.653
C

Page me40.653
Caesar (Gaius Julius Caesar) (c. 100-44 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman. — 123, 141, 241
Page me40.653
Campbell, E.S.N. — British army officer, author of a military dictionary. — 142
Page me40.653
Campbell, John, Baron (1779-1861) — British lawyer, Whig M.P., Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench (1850-59), Lord Chancellor (1859-61); handled a lawsuit against Simon Bernard in 1858. — 309
Page me40.653
Campbell, Sir Colin, Baron Clyde (from 1858) (1792-1863) — British general, field marshal from 1862; took part in the Crimean war in 1854-55; Commander-in-Chief of the British army during the Indian national liberation uprising of 1857-59. — 184, 185, 234, 293, 308-09, 336, 364
Page me40.653
Campe, Johann Julius Wilhelm (1792-1867) — German publisher and bookseller, co-proprietor of the Hoffmann & Campe Publishing House in Hamburg from 1823. — 100, 392

Page me40.653
Canning, Charles John, Earl (from 1859) (1812-1862) — British statesman, Tory and subsequently Peelite; Governor-General of India (1856-62); organised the suppression of the Indian national liberation uprising of 1857-59. — 134, 343
Page me40.653
Canrobert, François Certain (1809-1895) — Marshal of France, senator, Bonapartist; an active participant in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; commander-in-chief of the French army (September 1854-May 1855) in the Crimea; commanded a corps in the Italian war of 1859. — 297, 381
Page me40.653
Carey, Henry Charles (1793-1879) — American economist, advocated harmony of class interests in capitalist society. — 303
Page me40.653
Carnot, Lazare Nicolas (1753-1823) — French mathematician, political and military figure in the French Revolution, Jacobin; took part in the Thermidor coup in 1794. — 21, 30, 123
Page me40.653
Castellane, Esprit Victor Elisabéth Boniface, comte de (1788-1862) — Marshal of France, Bonapartist; an active participant in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 256
Page me40.653
Castello — Portuguese banker. — 404
Page me40.653
Castlereagh, Robert Stewart, Marquis of Londonderry, Viscount (1769-1822) — British statesman, Tory; Secretary for War and for the Colonies (1805-06, 1807-09), Foreign Secretary (1812-22). — 377
Page me40.653
Cathcart, Sir George (1794-1854) — British general and military writer. — 293
Page me40.653
Catherine I (1684-1727) — second wife of Peter I (from 1712); Empress of Russia (1725-27). — 10
Page me40.653
Catherine II (1729-1796) — Empress of Russia (1762-96). — 3, 10
Page me40.653
Catherine Ivanovna (1691-1723) — niece of Peter I, from 1716 wife of Karl Leopold, Duke of Mecklenburg. — 11
Page me40.653
Catiline (Lucius Sergius Calilina) (c. 108-62 B.C.) — Roman politician, organiser of a conspiracy against the aristocratic republic. — 5
Page me40.653
Caussidiére, Marc (1808-1861) — French democrat, took part in the Lyons uprising of 1834; Prefect of the Paris Police after the February 1848 revolution; deputy to the Constituent Assembly; emigrated to England in June 1848 and later to the USA. — 319
Page me40.653
Cavaignac, Louis Eugéne (1802-1857) — French general and politician, moderate republican; took part in the conquest of Algeria; War Minister of France (May-June 1848), directed the suppression of the June 1848 uprising of the Paris workers; head of the executive (June-December 1848); was

Page Break me40.654
in opposition to Napoleon III's government after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 177, 198, 309
Page me40.654
Cavanagh — one of Marx's acquaintances in London. — 572
Page me40.654
Cavour, Camillo Benso, conte di (1810-1861) — Italian statesman, head of the Sardinian government (1852-59, 1860-61); pursued a policy of unifying Italy under the supremacy of the Savoy dynasty relying on the support of Napoleon III; headed the first government of united Italy in 1861. — 309
Page me40.654
Cecil, William, Baron Burgley (or Burleigh) (1520-1598) — British statesman, Chief Secretary of State (1558-72), Lord High Treasurer (1572-98) and Chief Minister of Queen Elisabeth. — 195
Page me40.654
Chamfort, Sébastien Roch Nicolas, dit de (1741-1794) — French writer. — 545
Page me40.654
Changarnier, Nicolas Anne Théodule (1793-1877) — French general and politician, monarchist; took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s and 1840s; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (1848-51); expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 177
Page me40.654
Charles I (1600-1649) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1625-49); beheaded during the English Revolution. — 182
Page me40.654
Charles II (1630-1685) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1660-85). — 377
Page me40.654
Charles V (1500-1558) — Holy Roman Emperor (1519-56) and King of Spain under the name of Charles (Carlos) I (1516-56). — 419-21, 443, 445
Page me40.654
Charles XII (1682-1718) — King of Sweden (1697-1718). — 8, 10, 91
Page me40.654
Charles Louis (Karl Ludwig Johann) (1771-1847) — Archduke of Austria, field marshal, took part in the wars against the French Republic and Napoleonic France; War Minister (1805-09). — 164
Page me40.654
Charras, Jean Baptiste Adolphe (1810-1865) — French military writer, moderate republican; opposed Louis Bonaparte; expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 258, 285
Page me40.654
Cheney, Eliza (born c. 1832) — Felice Orsini's housemaid. — 255
Page me40.654
Chester (alias Polly Evans) — mistress of Potter, Mayor of Manchester. — 118

Page me40.654
Chojecki, Karol Edmund (pseudonym — Charles Edmond) (1822-1899) — Polish journalist, writer and dramatist, lived in France from 1844. — 18
Page me40.654
Cicero (Marcus Tullius Cicero) (106-43 B.C.) — Roman statesman, orator and philosopher; helped expose Catiline's conspiracy in 63 B.C. — 5, 269
Page me40.654
Cieszkowski, August, Count (1814-1894) — Polish philosopher and economist, owner of an estate in the Posen district from 1847; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; member of the Prussian Provincial Diet (from 1852). — 436
Page me40.654
Clarendon, George William Frederick Villiers, Earl of, Baron Hyde (1800-1870) — British statesman, Whig, later Liberal; Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (1847-52); Foreign Secretary (1853-58, 1865-66, 1868-70). — 28-30, 119
Page me40.654
Clausewitz, Karl von (1780-1831) — Prussian general and military theoretician. — 198, 241, 247
Page me40.654
Clotilde, princesse de Savoie (1843-1911) — daughter of Victor Emmanuel II of Sardinia; wife of Prince Joseph Napoléon (Plon-Plon) from 1859. — 373, 380
Page me40.654
Cluss, Adolf (1825-1905) — German engineer; member of the Communist League; emigrated to the USA (1848), where, in the 1850s, he was a member of German-American workers' organisations; one of the first propagandists of scientific communism in America. — 96, 313, 317, 363, 366, 374, 375, 571

Page Break me40.655
Page me40.655
Cobbett, William (c. 1762-1835) — British politician and radical journalist; published Cobbett's Annual Register from 1802. — 42, 266
Page me40.655
Cobden, Richard (1804-1865) — English manufacturer and politician, a leader of the Free Traders and founder of the Anti-Corn Law League, M.P. — 3, 115, 127
Page me40.655
Coehorn (Cohorn or Coehoorn), Menno, Baron van (1641-1704) — Dutch general and military engineer. — 247
Page me40.655
Colin — see Campbell, Sir Colin, Baron Clyde
Page me40.655
†*Collet, Collet Dobson — English radical journalist and public figure, editor and publisher of The Free Press, organ of Urquhart's followers (1856-65). — 61, 62, 66, 67, 76, 81, 112, 138, 277, 504, 507, 508, 521
Page me40.655
Coningham, William (b. 1815) — English radical M.P.; author of the anti-Palmerston pamphlet The Betrayal of England; delegated to the Chartist conference in February 1858. — 111, 210

Page me40.655
Constantine (Konstantin Nikolayevich) (1827-1892) — Grand Duke of Russia, second son of Nicholas I, Admiral-General, head of the Naval Department (1853-81) and commander-in-chief of the Navy (1855-81). — 452
Page me40.655
Cookes — owners of textile factory in Manchester. — 212
Page me40.655
Cornelius, Wilhelm — German radical journalist, refugee in London in the 1850s; one of Marx's friends. — 92, 94, 119
Page me40.655
Cotta, Johann Georg, Baron von Cottendorf (1796-1863) — German publisher, owner of a large publishing house in Augsburg in 1832-63, publisher of the Allgemeine Zeitung. — 363, 541, 543
Page me40.655
Cowley, Henry Richard Charles Wellesley, Earl of (1804-1884) — British diplomat; ambassador to Paris (1852-67). — 425-26
Page me40.655
Coxe, William (1747-1828) — English historian and traveller, archdeacon in Wiltshire from 1804; collected and published historical documents. — 17
Page me40.655
Crawshay, George — English journalist, supporter of David Urquhart; an editor of The Free Press (1856-60). — 479
Page me40.655
Cromwell, Oliver (1599-1658) — leader of the English Revolution; Lord Protector of England, Scotland and Ireland from 1653. — 182
Page me40.655
*Cyples, William (1831-1882) — English journalist and politician, Urquhartite; contributor to The Sheffield Free Press and Secretary of the Sheffield Foreign Committee (1856). — 44, 59, 60, 62

Page me40.655
D

Page me40.655
Dagobert I (born c. 605-639) — Frankish king (629-39). — 19
Page me40.655
Dähnhardt, Marie Wilhelmine — see Stirner-Schmidt, Marie Wilhelmine
Page me40.655
Dana, Charles Anderson (1819-1897) — American journalist, an editor and in 1849-62 editor-in-chief of the New-York Daily Tribune, an editor of The New American Cyclopaedia (1857-63). — 68, 81, 93, 97, 101, 114, 119, 122-28, 134, 136, 140, 142, 144-45, 158-60, 168, 170, 173, 177, 190, 195, 197, 223, 238, 239, 241, 250-52, 254, 257, 259, 262, 263-64, 266, 267, 285, 361, 362, 389, 393, 410, 412, 452, 453, 483, 489, 491, 494, 507, 565
Page me40.655

Daniells — a man from Manchester who started a lawsuit against Engels in 1859. — 490, 491, 500, 510, 524
Page me40.655
Daniels, Amalie (née Müller) (1820-1895) — Ronald Daniels' wife. — 337, 385, 388, 477

Page Break me40.656
Page me40.656
Daniels, Roland (1819-1855) — German physician, member of the Communist League, from 1850 member of its Cologne Central Authority; defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); acquitted by the jury; friend of Marx and Engels. — 271, 337, 359
Page me40.656
Darimon, Louis Alfred (1819-1902) — French politician, journalist and historian; shared and propagated Proudhon's views. — 90
Page me40.656
Darwin, Charles Robert (1809-1882) — English naturalist, founder of the theory of natural selection of species. — 551
Page me40.656
Davout (Davoust), Louis Nicolas, duc d'Auerstaedt, prince d'Eckmühl (1770-1823) — Marshal of France, participant in the wars of Napoleonic France. — 164, 165, 166, 174
Page me40.656
Delius — one of Engels' acquaintances in Bradford. — 422
Page me40.656
Democritus (c. 460-c. 370 B.C.) — Greek philosopher, a founder of the atomistic theory. — 269, 316
Page me40.656
Demuth, Helene (Lenchen) (1820-1890) — housemaid and devoted friend of the Marx family. — 66, 339
Page me40.656
Derby, Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, Earl of (1799-1869) — British statesman, Tory leader; Prime Minister (1852, 1858-59, 1866-68). — 278, 279, 425-27
Page me40.656
Desprez, Félix Hippolyte (1819-1898) — French diplomat, historian and journalist. — 18, 20
Page me40.656
Destrilhes — author of the book Confidences sur la Turquie (1855). — 31, 37
Page me40.656
Dibich-Zabalkansky, Ivan Ivanovich (Diebitsch, Hans Karl Friedrich Anton), Count (1785-1831) — Russian field marshal, commander-in-chief of the army during the Russo-Turkish war of 1828-29, and of the troops which crushed the Polish insurrection of 1830-31. — 172
Page me40.656
Dingelstedt, Franz, Baron von (from 1876) (1814-1881) — German poet and novelist, court dramatist. — 385
Page me40.656

Disraeli, Benjamin, Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-1881) — British statesman and writer, a Tory leader; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852, 1858-59, 1866-68); Prime Minister (1868, 1874-80). — 107, 427, 537
Page me40.656
Dobner, Job Felix (Gelasius) (1719-1790) — Czech monk, author of works on the history of Bohemia. — 17
Page me40.656
Dobrovský, Josef (1753-1829) — Czech scholar and public figure; founder of the scientific philology of the Slavonic languages. — 15, 16
Page me40.656
Dobrowsky — see Dobrovský, Josef
Page me40.656
Dolch, Oskar — a participant in the Schiller festivals in Manchester in November 1859. — 517, 531
Page me40.656
Dolleschall, Laurenz (b. 1790) — police official in Cologne (1819-47); censor of the Rheinische Zeitung. — 7, 20
Page me40.656
Douglas, Sir Howard, Baronet (1776-1861) — British general and military writer, author of works on artillery and fortification. — 168
Page me40.656
Dowbiggin — British officer, participant in the Crimean war, Lord Panmure's nephew. — 21
Page me40.656
Dronke — Ernst Dronke's brother. — 384
Page me40.656
Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German journalist, at first a 'true socialist', later a member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; emigrated to Switzerland and then to England after the 1848-49 revolution; subsequently withdrew from politics. — 83, 104, 113, 147, 201, 209, 251, 374, 384-85, 467, 469, 471-73, 475, 485, 566
Page me40.656
Drouyn de Lhuys, Édouard (1805-1881) — French diplomat and politician; Orleanist in the 1840s, Bonapartist after 1851; Foreign Minister (1848-49, 1851, 1852-55, 1862-66). — 6

Page Break me40.657
Page me40.657
Drucker, Louis — German journalist, democrat; publisher of the comic weekly How Do You Do? in London. — 535, 537, 540
Page me40.657
Duke of Brunswick — see Brunswick, Karl Wilhelm Ferdinand
Page me40.657
Dulon, Rudolph (1807-1870) — German pastor, a leader of the Friends of Light movement opposing the official church; editor-in-chief of the Bremer Tages-Chronik (1849-51); emigrated to the USA in 1853. — 519

Page me40.657
Duncker — Prussian official, Police Superintendent in Berlin in 1848. — 536, 552, 574
Page me40.657
*Duncker, Franz (1822-1888) — German politician and publisher, founder and editor of the Volks-Zeitung. — 295, 297, 315, 336, 349, 354, 364, 367, 376, 379-80, 384, 390, 391-92, 394, 397, 398, 400-01, 402, 404, 405, 407, 408, 412, 413, 415, 418, 440, 446, 448, 450-51, 453, 454, 456, 458, 460-62, 473-74, 480, 481, 489, 498, 502, 508, 548, 569
Page me40.657
Duncombe, Thomas Slingsby (1796-1861) — British radical politician; participated in the Chartist movement in the 1840s, M.P. — 348
Page me40.657
Dupré de Saint-Maure, Jean Pierre Emile (1772-1854) — French writer and politician; several times travelled to Russia. — 16
Page me40.657
Dürr, Alphonse — publisher in Leipzig. — 285
Page me40.657
Duvivier, Franciade Fleurus (1794-1848) — French general, participant in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s-40s; took part in suppressing the June 1848 uprising in Paris. — 177

Page me40.657
E

Page me40.657
Eccarius, Johann Georg (1818-1889) — German tailor; prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, journalist; member of the League of the Just and later of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, member of the General Council of the First International; subsequently took part in the British trade union movement. — 384, 386, 387, 390, 406, 440
Page me40.657
Eichhoff, Frédéric Gustave (1799-1875) — French philologist. — 19, 26
Page me40.657
Eichhoff, Karl Wilhelm (1833-1895) — German socialist, journalist; in the late 1850s exposed Stieber as a police spy in the press and was brought to trial for this; member of the First International and one of its first historians. — 536, 552, 554
Page me40.657
Elgin, James Bruce, Earl of Elgin and Kincardine (1811-1863) — British diplomat, envoy extraordinary to China (1857-58, 1860-61). — 347, 349
Page me40.657
Ellenborough, Edward Law, Earl of (1790-1871) — British statesman, Tory, member of the House of Lords; Governor-General of India (1842-44), First Lord of the Admiralty (1846), President of the Board of Control for India (1858). — 107
Page me40.657

Elsner, Karl Friedrich Moritz (1809-1894) — Silesian radical journalist and politician, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; an editor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung in the 1850s. — 226, 416
Page me40.657
Emmanuel — see Victor Emmanuel II
Page me40.657
Engel, János Keresztély (Jahann Christian von) (1770-1814) — Hungarian historian. — 15
Page me40.657
Engels, Charlotte (née Bredt) (1833-1912) — wife of Emil Engels, Frederick Engels' brother. — 529
Page me40.657
*Engels, Elisabeth Franziska Mauritia (née van Haar) (1797-1873) — mother of Frederick Engels. — 422, 424, 490, 529
Page me40.657
*Engels, Emil (1828-1884) — brother of Frederick Engels, a partner in the

Page Break me40.658
Ermen & Engels firm in Engelskirchen. — 528, 529
Page me40.658
Engels, Friedrich (1796-1860) — father of Frederick Engels. — 5, 65, 72, 97, 104, 146, 157, 158, 222, 397, 424, 490, 529
Page me40.658
Ephraim — see Lassalle, Ferdinand
Page me40.658
Epicurus (c. 341-c. 270 B.C.) — Greek materialist philosopher. — 124, 226, 269, 316
Page me40.658
Erich — American businessman. — 92, 95
Page me40.658
Ermani — editor of the German emigrant newspaper Germania published in London in April-May 1859. — 438
Page me40.658
Ermen, Gottfried — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 37, 104, 146, 343, 397, 528, 530, 554
Page me40.658
Ersch, Johann Samuel (1766-1828) — German bibliographer, professor of geography and statistics in Halle, a publisher of Allgemeine Encyclopädie. — 147, 187, 247
Page me40.658
Erskine (Areskine), Robert (Robert Karlovich) (mid-17th cent. — 1718) — Scottish physician, physician-in-ordinary of Peter I. — 8
Page me40.658
Espartero, Baldomero, duque de la Vittoria (1793-1879) — Spanish general and politician, leader of the Progresista Party; Regent of Spain (1841-43), head of government (1854-56). — 61, 173
Page me40.658

Espinasse, Charles Marie Esprit (1815-1859) — French general, Bonapartist; actively participated in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; after Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III (January 1858) was Minister of the Interior during five months. — 7, 264, 291
Page me40.658
Estien, François — police inspector in Paris, eye witness of Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III, testified at Simon Bernard's trial (April 1858). — 308
Page me40.658
Etheridge (d. 1857) — British admiral, commanded the British navy in the Anglo-Persian war (1856-57); committed suicide. — 134
Page me40.658
Eugéne — see Bonaparte, Eugéne Louis Jean Joseph
Page me40.658
Eugéne, prince — see Beauharnais, Eugéne de, prince
Page me40.658
Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzmán, comtesse de Teba (1826-1920) — Empress of France, wife of Napoleon III. — 6
Page me40.658
Evans, Sir George de Lacy (1787-1870) — British general and liberal politician, M.P., took part in the Crimean war. — 21, 22, 297
Page me40.658
Ewerbeck, August Hermann (1816-1860) — German physician and writer, lived in Paris; member of the Communist League until 1850. — 73, 356

Page me40.658
F

Page me40.658
Fabrice — counsellor of commissariat in Berlin; with Bormann's participation attacked Lassalle in May 1858, for which he was prosecuted. — 319, 320, 322-23
Page me40.658
Fallmerayer, Jakob Philipp (1790-1861) — German historian and traveller. — 3
Page me40.658
Farina, Giovanni Maria (1686-1766) — Italian businessman, founder of the first factory of eau de Cologne. — 120
Page me40.658
Faucher, Julius (Jules) (1820-1878) — German writer, Young Hegelian; refugee in England from 1850 till 1861; contributor to The Morning Star. — 18, 91, 127, 217, 534
Page me40.658
*Faulkner, E.J. — one of Engels' acquaintances in Manchester. — 510
Page me40.658
Fazy, Jean Jacob (James) (1794-1878) — Swiss journalist and statesman, radical; head of government of the Geneva Canton (1846-53, 1855-61); founder of the Swiss State Bank, pursued a pro-Bonapartist policy in the 1850s. — 514, 543, 545, 574

Page Break me40.659
Page me40.659
Feibel, Heinrich — German journalist, President of the Workers' Educational Society in Wiesbaden in the 1840s; in 1852 was sentenced to one-year penal servitude by the Wiesbaden court; a refugee in England. — 359
Page me40.659
Féline. — 119
Page me40.659
Ferdinand Karl Joseph von Este (1781-1850) — Archduke of Austria, field marshal, took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 174
Page me40.659
Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas (1804-1872) — German philosopher. — 55
Page me40.659
Finlen, James — Chartist, member of the Executive of the National Charter Association in 1852-58. — 32
Page me40.659
Fiorentino, Pier Angelo (1809-1864) — Italian writer; lived in Paris from 1835; contributed to the Bonapartist press in the 1850s and 1860s. — 7
Page me40.659
Fischel, Eduard (1826-1863) — German journalist, editor of the Berlin Urquhartist journal Das Neue Portfolio (1859-60); criticised the foreign policy of Palmerston and Napoleon III. — 547
Page me40.659
Fitzgerald, John David, Lord (1816-1889) — Irish lawyer and liberal politician, M.P.; held high judicial posts in British administration in Ireland. — 363
Page me40.659
Florencourt, Franz von (François Chassot de) (1803-1886) — German writer, editor of a number of periodicals; first liberal and later conservative; brother-in-law of Ferdinand von Westphalen. — 562
Page me40.659
Flottwell, Eduard Heinrich von (1786-1865) — Prussian statesman, Minister of Finance (1844-46), Oberpräsident of Posen and later of Westphalia; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848-49; Minister of the Interior (1858-59). — 384
Page me40.659
Fould, Achille (1800-1867) — French banker and politician, Orleanist, subsequently Bonapartist; several times was Minister of Finance and held other governmental posts from 1849 to 1867. — 194, 208, 275, 305, 321, 437
Page me40.659
Fould, Gustave Eugéne (1836-1884) — Achille Fould's son. — 321
Page me40.659
Fox, William Johnson (1786-1864) — English politician and journalist, Free Trader, M.P. — 116
Page me40.659
Francis Joseph I (1830-1916) — Emperor of Austria (1848-1916). — 470, 473, 532
Page me40.659
Franck, Gustav (d. 1860) — Austrian democrat; refugee in London in the 1850s. — 18

Page me40.659
Franklin, Benjamin (1706-1790) — American physicist, economist and politician; took part in the American War of Independence. — 377
Page me40.659
Frederick II (the Great) (1712-1786) — King of Prussia (1740-86). — 11, 86
Page me40.659
Frederick William I (1688-1740) — King of Prussia (1713-40). — 11
Page me40.659
Frederick William III (1770-1840) — King of Prussia (1797-1840). — 179
Page me40.659
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 21, 33, 36, 89, 90, 198, 482
Page me40.659
Frédérique Sophie Wilhelmine — see Wilhelmine Friederike Sophie, Margravine of Bayreuth
Page me40.659
*Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German revolutionary poet, member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); clerk of the London branch of the Swiss Bank in the 1850s. — 24, 45, 61, 68, 71, 87, 97, 100, 101, 103, 104, 113, 126, 142, 209, 225-26, 228, 249, 251, 263, 324, 328, 332-35, 342, 345, 353-55, 359-61, 363, 366, 367, 369, 370, 372-75, 382, 385-86, 388, 401, 409, 417, 428, 431, 458, 472, 473, 475, 480-81, 483, 487, 488, 489, 501-04, 508, 511-14, 517, 526, 527, 532-35, 537, 539, 542-50, 552-57, 567, 568, 574

Page Break me40.660
Page me40.660
Freiligrath, Ida (née Melos) (1817-1899) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's wife. — 360, 385, 536, 537, 545, 556, 574
Page me40.660
Freiligrath, Käthe (Käthchen) (1845-1904) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's daughter. — 535
Page me40.660
Freund — German physician in London, doctor of the Marx family in the 1850s. — 46, 127, 132, 148, 151, 310, 357
Page me40.660
*Friedländer, Max (1829-1872) — German democratic journalist, member of the editorial boards of the Neue Oder-Zeitung and Die Presse (Vienna); Ferdinand Lassalle's cousin. — 227, 237, 250, 269, 408, 409, 416, 418, 429, 432-35, 450, 455, 571
Page me40.660
Frisch, Johann Leonhard (1666-1743) — German linguist and naturalist. — 16
Page me40.660
Fröbel, Julius (1805-1893) — German radical writer and publisher of progressive literature; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to America in 1849; returned to Germany in 1857. — 325, 356
Page me40.660
Fröbel, Karolina (née von Armansperg) (1821-1888) — Julius Fröbel's wife. — 356
Page me40.660

Frost, John (1784-1877) — English radical, joined the Chartist movement in 1838; sentenced to deportation for life to Australia for organising a miners' uprising in Wales in 1839; was pardoned in 1856 and returned to England. — 42, 210
Page me40.660
Fuad Pasha, Mehemmed (1814-1869) — Turkish statesman, repeatedly held the posts of Grand Vizier and Foreign Minister in the 1850s and 1860s. — 29
Page me40.660
Fullarton, John (1780-1849) — British economist, author of works on money circulation and credit; opposed the quantitative theory of money. — 377

Page me40.660
G

Page me40.660
Gagern, Heinrich Wilhelm August, Baron von (1799-1880) — German politician, moderate liberal; deputy to and President of the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre). — 472
Page me40.660
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; chief organiser of the defence of the Roman Republic (April-July 1849); led the Italian people's struggle for national independence and the unification of the country in the 1850s-60s; headed the Alpine riflemen in the Italian war of 1859. — 452, 455, 515, 544
Page me40.660
Garnett, Jeremiah (1793-1870) — British journalist, a founder of The Manchester Guardian, its editor from 1844 to 1861. — 113
Page me40.660
Garthe — German democrat, a refugee in London in the 1850s; cashier of Das Volk. — 464, 482, 484, 501
Page me40.660
Gatterer, Johann Christoph (1727-1799) — German historian, professor in Göttingen from 1759. — 17
Page me40.660
Gebhardi, Ludwig Albrecht (1735-1802) — German historian. — 17
Page me40.660
Geoffroy Saint-Hilaire, Étienne (1772-1844) — French zoologist, a forerunner of Darwin's theory of evolution. — 244
Page me40.660
George I (1660-1727) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1714-27). — 8
Page me40.660
Gercken, Philipp Wilhelm (1722-1791) — German historian. — 17
Page me40.660
Germiny, Charles Gabriel Le Bégue, comte de (1789-1871) — French statesman and financier, Bonapartist, Governor of the Crédit Foncier (1854-56) and Director-General of the Bank of France (1857-63). — 152
Page me40.660

Gerstenberg, Isidor (d. 1876) — banker in London, a supporter of Gottfried Kinkel. — 363, 404, 408
Page me40.660
Gibson, Thomas Milner (1806-1884) — British statesman, Free Trader, later

Page Break me40.661
liberal, President of the Board of Trade (1859-65, 1865-66). — 115, 116, 118, 273, 275, 411
Page me40.661
Gilpin, Charles — managing director of the London branch of the Swiss Bank, creditor of The People's Paper; M.P. — 342
Page me40.661
Girardin, Émile de (1806-1881) — French journalist and politician; editor of La Presse (the 1830s-60s, with intervals); moderate republican during the 1848-49 revolution, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1850-51), later Bonapartist, lacked principles in politics. — 90, 381
Page me40.661
Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898) — British statesman, Tory and later Peelite, a leader of the Liberal Party in the latter half of the century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852-55, 1859-66) and Prime Minister (1868-74, 1880-85, 1886, 1892-94). — 339
Page me40.661
Gneisenau, August Wilhelm Anton, Count Neithardt von (1760-1831) — Prussian field-marshal general; an organiser of the liberation struggle against Napoleonic rule, Chief of Staff of Blücher's army in 1813-14 and 1815. — 179, 180
Page me40.661
Godfrey, François — lawyer, big landowner and banker in Jersey. — 196, 264, 308
Page me40.661
Goegg, Amand (1820-1897) — German democratic journalist, member of the Baden Provisional Government (1849); emigrated after the revolution; later member of the First International. — 513-14
Page me40.661
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 91, 244, 366, 419, 541
Page me40.661
Golovine (Golovin), Ivan Gavrilovich (1816-1890) — Russian liberal landowner, journalist; emigrated to England, was close to Herzen and Bakunin in the 1840s and 1850s. — 70, 73
Page me40.661
Görtz, Georg Heinrich von, Baron von Schlitz (1668-1719) — Swedish statesman, held several ministerial posts from 1715. — 10
Page me40.661
Gottfried — see Kinkel, Gottfried
Page me40.661
Gottsched, Johann Christoph (1700-1766) — German writer and critic of the early Enlightenment. — 375
Page me40.661
Götz, Theodor — German democrat, refugee in England, a friend of Marx. — 87

Page me40.661
Götze — a participant in the Schiller festivals in Manchester in November 1859. — 517
Page me40.661
Götze, Peter Otto von (Piotr Petrovich) (1793-1880) — Russian official and writer; Baltic German by birth; translated Serbian and Russian folk songs into German. — 20, 26
Page me40.661
Grant, James (1802-1879) — English radical journalist and writer, editor of The Morning Advertiser (1850-71). — 114, 534
Page me40.661
Gray, John (1798-1850) — English economist, utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen, an author of the 'labour money' theory. — 301, 377
Page me40.661
Griesheim, Adolf von (1820-1894) — German manufacturer, partner in the Ermen & Engels firm, husband of Elise, Frederick Engels sister. — 529
Page me40.661
Griesheim, Elise (née Engels) (1834-1912) — Frederick Engels' sister, Adolf von Griesheim's wife. — 529
Page me40.661
Griesheim, Karl Gustav Julius von (1798-1854) — Prussian general and military writer. — 170, 264
Page me40.661
Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) — German philologist, author of a historical grammar of the German language and of folklore adaptations; professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin; liberal. — 26, 120, 186, 516, 523
Page me40.661
Groombridge — publisher in London. — 317
Page me40.661
Gruber, Johann Gottfried (1774-1851) —

Page Break me40.662
German historian of literature, a publisher of Allgemeine Encyclopädie. — 147, 187, 247
Page me40.662
Grün, Karl Theodor Ferdinand (pen-name Ernst von der Haide) (1817-1887) — German journalist, 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; petty-bourgeois democrat during the revolution of 1848-49; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing). — 63
Page me40.662
Gumpert, Edouard (d. 1893) — German physician in Manchester, a friend of Marx and Engels. — 318, 324, 325, 335, 345, 389, 439, 447, 475, 480
Page me40.662
Gurowski, Adam, Count (1805-1866) — Polish journalist; betrayed the national liberation movement; emigrated to the USA in 1849; contributed to the New-York Daily Tribune in the 1850s, disseminated pan-Slavist ideas. — 81, 94, 101, 123
Page me40.662
Gyllenborg, Carl, Count (1679-1746) — Swedish statesman, envoy to London (1715-17), Secretary of State from 1718 and Prime Minister (1739-46). — 9, 10

Page me40.662
Gyulay, Franz (or Gyulai, Ferenc), Count von Maros-Németh und Nadaska (1798-1868) — Austrian general, Hungarian by birth; took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Italy; War Minister (1849-50); during the Italian war of 1859 commanded the Austrian army (April-June 1859). — 427, 430

Page me40.662
H

Page me40.662
Hacquet, Belsazar (Balthasar) (1739-1815) — Austrian scientist and ethnographer. — 16
Page me40.662
Hájek z Libocan, Václav (c. 1500-1553) — Czech chronicler, priest. — 17
Page me40.662
Hamelin, François Alphonse (1796-1864) — French admiral, commander-in-chief of the French fleet in the Mediterranean and the Black Sea (1853-54); Minister of the Navy (1855-60). — 31
Page me40.662
Hamilton, Lord Claud (1813-1884) — British politician, M.P. from 1839. — 21
Page me40.662
Hanka, Václav (1791-1861) — Czech philologist and historian; held conservative pan-Slavist views. — 15, 19, 26
Page me40.662
Hannibal (c. 247-183 B.C.) — Carthaginian general. — 294
Page me40.662
Harney, George Julian (1817-1897) — a leader of the Left-wing Chartists, editor of The Northern Star and other Chartist periodicals; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels; at the end of 1851 temporarily distanced himself from the labour movement and drew closer to democrats. — 188, 190, 196, 218, 248, 252-53, 263, 264, 308, 312-13
Page me40.662
Harper, James (1795-1869) — American publisher, founder and head of the Harper and Brothers publishing firm. — 106
Page me40.662
Harring, Harro Paul (1798-1870) — German writer, radical, emigrated in 1828. — 264
Page me40.662
Hart, Richard — English journalist, Urquhartite, lawyer in Coal Hole. — 565
Page me40.662
Harvey — English physician. — 4
Page me40.662
Hatzfeldt, Sophie, Countess von (1805-1881) — German aristocrat who broke with her husband; friend and follower of Lassalle. — 23, 24, 27, 227, 257, 260, 478
Page me40.662
Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg, Edmund, Count von (1798-1874) — Sophie Hatzfeldt's husband. — 23, 27
Page me40.662

Haugwitz, Christian August Heinrich Kurt, Count von (1752-1832) — Prussian statesman, Foreign Minister (1792-1804, 1805-06). — 537
Page me40.662
Havelock, Sir Henry (1795-1857) — British general, took part in several colonial wars and in suppressing the national liberation uprising in India in 1857. — 176, 182, 184, 234, 242

Page Break me40.663
Page me40.663
Haxthausen, August Franz Ludwig Maria, Baron von (1792-1866) — Prussian official and economist, author of works on the agrarian system and the peasant commune in Russia. — 346
Page me40.663
Hecker, Friedrich Karl Franz (1811-1881) — German democrat, a leader of the Baden republican uprising in April 1848; after its defeat emigrated to Switzerland and later to the USA where he fought in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 179, 362, 446
Page me40.663
Heckscher, Martin — Frederick Engels' physician, a German resident in Manchester; helped Das Volk with money. — 131, 132, 145, 149, 154, 191, 195, 198, 200, 247, 361, 366, 448, 474, 475
Page me40.663
Heffter, Moritz Wilhelm (1792-1873) — German historian and philologist. — 17, 19
Page me40.663
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 135, 199, 216, 249, 255, 259-61, 316, 326, 327
Page me40.663
Heimendahl — German merchant and manufacturer, owner of a silkspinning factory in Elberfeld. — 223
Page me40.663
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 14, 32, 42, 45, 55, 69, 71, 392, 541, 557
Page me40.663
Heine, Mathilde (née Mirat) (1815-1883) — Heinrich Heine's wife. — 69
Page me40.663
Heinzen, Karl (1809-1880) — German radical journalist, took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated to Switzerland, later to England and, in the autumn of 1850, to the USA. — 198, 243-44, 257, 356, 449, 567
Page me40.663
Heise, Heinrich (1820-1860) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to England; friend of Marx and Engels. — 12, 18, 87, 320
Page me40.663
Henry IV (1553-1610) — King of France (1589-1610). — 218
Page me40.663
Heraclitus (c. 540-c. 480 B.C.) — Greek philosopher, a founder of dialectics. — 227, 259, 260, 262, 268-69, 315, 394-96, 455, 570
Page me40.663

Herbert, Sidney, Baron of Lea (1810-1861) — British statesman, at first Tory and later Peelite; Secretary at War (1845-46, 1852-55), Secretary for War (1859-60); nephew of Prince Vorontsov. — 119
Page me40.663
Herder, Johann Gottfried von (1744-1803) — German writer and literary theorist of the Enlightenment; a founder of the Sturm-und-Drang trend. — 15
Page me40.663
Hermann — see Arminius
Page me40.663
Herrmann, Ernst Adolf (1812-1884) — German historian, author of works on the history of Russia. — 3
Page me40.663
Herwegh, Georg Friedrich (1817-1875) — German democratic poet. — 475, 477
Page me40.663
Herzen, Alexander Ivanovich (1812-1870) — Russian revolutionary democrat, materialist philosopher and writer; emigrated in 1847. — 46, 310, 349, 428, 467
Page me40.663
Hess, Heinrich Hermann Josef, Baron von (1788-1870) — Austrian general, later field marshal, took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Italy; commanded the Austrian army (June-July 1859) in the Italian war of 1859 after Gyulay's retirement. — 430

Page me40.663
Hess, Moses (1812-1875) — German radical, writer, a 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; member of the Communist League; sided with the separatist Willich-Schapper group; Lassallean in the 1860s. — 69, 73, 100, 106, 133
Page me40.663
Hess, Sibylle (née Pesch) (1820-1903) — Moses Hess' wife. — 70, 73
Page me40.663
Heydt, August, Baron von der (1801-1874) — Prussian conservative statesman, Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works (December 1848 to 1862). — 34, 571
Page me40.663
Hill — employee at the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels in the 1850s-60s. — 89, 232

Page Break me40.664
Page me40.664
Hirschfeld, Rudolph — owner of a print-shop in London, which printed Die Neue Zeit and the weekly Hermann; Marx's pamphlet Herr Vogt was printed here in 1860. — 438, 464
Page me40.664
Hoadley, Benjamin (1676-1761) — English bishop. — 9
Page me40.664
Hodges, George Lloyd (1792-1862) — British colonel and diplomat, Consul General in Serbia (1837-39), then in Egypt (1839-40); Palmerston's protégé. — 365
Page me40.664
Hohenscheisseesche (Hohenscheisselinden). — 32

Page me40.664
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian Kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 86, 88, 93, 410
Page me40.664
Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, Karl Anton, Prince von (1811-1885) — Prussian general and statesman, Prime Minister (November 1858 to 1862). — 461
Page me40.664
Holleben, Heinrich von (1789-1864) — Prussian general and military writer, participant in the wars against Napoleonic France, took part in suppressing the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. — 189
Page me40.664
Hollinger, Fidelio — German refugee, owner of a print-shop in London which printed Das Volk. — 458, 464, 471, 472, 480, 484, 487, 488, 501-04, 508, 513, 519
Page me40.664
Homer — semi-legendary Greek epic poet, author of the Iliad and the Odyssey. — 339, 512
Page me40.664
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 9, 271, 353, 453, 541, 546, 549
Page me40.664
Hoyoll, Philipp (b. 1816) — German painter, a participant in the Schiller festival in Manchester in November 1859. — 517
Page me40.664
Hübner, Joseph Alexander, Count von (1811-1892) — Austrian diplomat, envoy (1849-56) and ambassador (1856-59) to Paris. — 425
Page me40.664
Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885) — French writer, republican; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies, opposed Louis Bonaparte in 1848-51; emigrated to Jersey after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; deported by the local authorities at the end of 1855. — 266
Page me40.664
Humboldt, Alexander, Baron von (1769-1859) — German scientist, naturalist and traveller. — 4, 325, 336
Page me40.664
Hume, David (1711-1776) — Scottish philosopher, historian and economist, an early adherent of the quantitative theory of money. — 377, 396
Page me40.664
Huss, Jan (Hus, John) (c. 1369-1415) — Bohemian religious reformer and ideologist of the national (Hussite) movement, burnt at the stake as a heretic. — 27
Page me40.664
Huth, Friedrich — head of a German commercial firm in London, where Ferdinand Freiligrath worked in 1846-48. — 126
Page me40.664
Hutten, Ulrich von (1488-1523) — German poet, advocate of the Reformation, ideologist and participant in the knights' uprising in 1522-23. — 419-21, 443, 445

Page me40.664
I

Page me40.664
Ibrahim Karabatir, Prince — son of the Circassian prince Sepher Pasha, participant in the wars of the Caucasian mountaineers against Tsarist Russia. — 310
Page me40.664
Igor Svyatoslavovich (1150-1202) — Novgorod-Seversky prince, was defeated by the Polovtsians in 1185. — 19
Page me40.664
Imandt, Peter (b. 1824) — German teacher; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; emigrated first to Switzerland and, in 1852, to England; member of the Communist League; supporter of Marx and Engels. — 12, 18, 44, 53, 87, 147, 149, 152, 374, 431, 449, 532, 572

Page Break me40.665
Page me40.665
Inglis, Sir John Eardley Wilmot (1814-1862) — British general; took part in suppressing the national liberation uprising in India in 1857-59. — 247
Page me40.665
*Ironside, Isaac — English journalist, Urquhartite, editor of The Sheffield Free Press and an editor of the London Free Press (1856-64). — 44, 56-62

Page me40.665
J

Page me40.665
Jacobi, Abraham (1830-1919) — German physician, member of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), acquitted; later emigrated to the USA. — 98
Page me40.665
Jacobi, Fritz (d. 1862) — German democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 293
Page me40.665
Jahn, Friedrich Ludwig (1778-1852) — German writer, organised the sports movement (Turn- und Sportbewegung) in Germany, prominent in the German people's liberation struggle against Napoleon's rule; nationalist. — 437
Page me40.665
Jakob — see Robinson, Therese Albertine Luise
Page me40.665
James, Edwin John (1812-1882) — English lawyer, M.P.; counsel for the defence at Simon Bernard's trial in April 1858. — 309
Page me40.665

James Stuart, so-called James III (1688-1766) — son of James II; pretender to the English throne. — 8-10
Page me40.665
James, William (d. 1827) — English military writer. — 84
Page me40.665
John (Johann) (1782-1859) — Archduke of Austria, field marshal; fought in the wars against Napoleonic France; Imperial Regent of Germany (June 1848-December 1849). — 525
Page me40.665
Johnson, Samuel (1709-1784) — English lexicographer, compiler of a dictionary of the English language (1755); published an eight-volume edition of Shakespeare's works (1765). — 46
Page me40.665
Jomini, Antoine Henri, Baron (1779-1869) — Swiss-born general serving in the French and later in the Russian army; military theoretician, author of several works on strategy and military history. — 163, 165, 174-75, 177, 289, 293
Page me40.665
Jones, Ernest Charles (1819-1869) — English proletarian poet and journalist, Left-wing Chartist leader, editor of the Notes to the People and The People's Paper; friend of Marx and Engels; in 1858 came to an agreement with bourgeois radicals, which was the cause of Marx's and Engels' temporary break with him (till 1860). — 32, 34, 38, 42, 44, 60, 65, 115, 204, 210, 228, 250, 264, 342, 344, 345, 348, 375, 565
Page me40.665
Jones, Jane (née Atherley) (d. 1857) — Ernest Jones' wife. — 147, 565
Page me40.665
Jones, John Felix (d. 1878) — English naval officer and military topographer; agent in Bushire (1855-58). — 112, 115
Page me40.665
Jordan, Johann Christoph — German historian, author of a book on the origin of the Slavs (1745). — 16
Page me40.665
Joss, Fritz from Untergrombach (died c. 1525) — organiser of secret peasant alliances and conspiracies in South Germany. — 444
Page me40.665
Joule, James Prescott (1818-1889) — English physicist, experimentally substantiated the law of conservation of energy. — 327
Page me40.665
Jourdan, Jean Baptiste, comte (1762-1833) — French general, marshal from 1804, fought in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 166, 167
Page me40.665
Juch, Hermann — German journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat, refugee in London, Kinkel's supporter, editor of the Hermann (from July 1859). — 404, 438, 473, 512, 552, 554

Page Break me40.666
Page me40.666

Jung, Georg Gottlob (1814-1886) — German democratic journalist, Young Hegelian, a manager of the Rheinische Zeitung; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848. — 478
Page me40.666
Juta, Johann Carl (1824-1886) — Dutch merchant, husband of Karl Marx's sister Luise, bookseller in Cape Town. — 363, 387, 389, 390, 394, 418, 489, 494, 506, 572
Page me40.666
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis) (born c. 60-died after 127) — Roman satirical poet. — 391, 469

Page me40.666
K

Page me40.666
Kamenski, Mikhail Fedotovich, Count (1738-1809) — Russian field-marshal general. — 162
Page me40.666
Kamm, Friedrich (d. 1867) — German artisan, petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated first to Switzerland and, in 1852, to the USA; an organiser of the Communist Club in New York (1857). — 288, 293, 469
Page me40.666
Kant, Immanuel (1724-1804) — German philosopher. — 356, 392, 519
Page me40.666
Kapper, Siegfried (1821-1879) — Czech writer and poet, translator of Slavic legends and songs into German. — 20, 26
Page me40.666
Karadzic, Vuk Stefanovic (1787-1864) — Serbian philologist, historian and folklore specialist, founder of the modern Serbian literary language. — 20, 26
Page me40.666
Karl Leopold (1679-1747) — Duke of Mecklenburg (1713-28). — 11
Page me40.666
Karstens — see Lessner, Friedrich
Page me40.666
Kerb — owner of a tavern in London. — 18
Page me40.666
Kinkel, Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; sentenced to life imprisonment by Prussian court; in 1850 escaped and emigrated to London, a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees; editor of the Hermann (1859); opposed Marx and Engels. — 203, 293, 340, 345, 351, 356, 359, 361, 363, 366, 367, 369, 370, 371, 372, 375, 376, 383, 385, 386, 388, 399, 404, 408, 415, 438-40, 446, 447-48, 449, 458-60, 463, 468, 477, 482, 508, 511-13, 519, 520, 525-27, 530, 533-36, 537, 541, 545, 547, 551, 553-56, 574
Page me40.666
Kinkel, Johanna (née Mockel) (1810-1858) — German writer, wife of Gottfried Kinkel. — 356, 359, 361, 363, 371, 372, 375, 382, 385, 388, 458, 513, 541, 553

Page me40.666
Kiss, Miklós (1820-1902) — Hungarian army officer, democrat, refugee, Kossuth's agent in France and Italy. — 532
Page me40.666
Klapka, György (1820-1892) — general in the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49); emigrated in 1849; maintained contact with Bonapartist circles in the 1850s. — 324, 452, 523, 532
Page me40.666
Klaproth, Heinrich Julius (1783-1835) — German philologist, orientalist and traveller. — 26
Page me40.666
Klein, Johann Jacob (c. 1818-c. 1896) — Cologne physician, member of the Communist League, one of the accused in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), acquitted. — 477
Page me40.666
Koenigswarter, Maximilien (1815-1878) — French banker, deputy to the Corps législatif (1852-63). — 90
Page me40.666
Koesteritz von — Chief Public Prosecutor in Düsseldorf, took part in the divorce case of Countess Hatzfeldt. — 23
Page me40.666
Kolatschek, Adolph (1821-1889) — Austrian journalist and politician; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49); petty-bourgeois democrat. — 106

Page Break me40.667
Page me40.667
Kolb, Gustav Eduard (1798-1865) — German journalist, editor-in-chief of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung (1837-65). — 541, 543, 549
Page me40.667
Komp, Albrecht — German refugee in the USA, an organiser of the Communist Club in New York (1857); Joseph Weydemeyer's friend. — 338, 376, 384, 440
Page me40.667
Korff, Hermann — Prussian ex-officer, democrat; manager of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); later emigrated to the USA. — 434
Page me40.667
Ko&sa;cielski, Wladislaw (1818-1895) — Polish democrat; took part in the Posen national liberation movement (1848), maintained ties with the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; general in the Turkish army (1850s). — 109
Page me40.667
Ko&sa;ciuszko, Tadeusz Andrzej Bonawentura (1746-1817) — Polish general and leader of the national liberation uprising of 1794; took part in the American War of Independence (1776-83). — 85
Page me40.667
Kossuth, Lajos (1802-1894) — leader of the Hungarian national liberation movement; head of the revolutionary government (1848-49); after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and later to England and the USA; sought for support in the

Bonapartist circles in the 1850s. — 258, 318, 324, 342, 382, 452, 456, 458, 465, 476, 494, 497, 505-07, 523, 525, 532, 565, 573
Page me40.667
Köster, Heinrich (1807-1881) — German philologist and teacher, an acquaintance of Ferdinand Lassalle and Ferdinand Freiligrath. — 353-55
Page me40.667
Krosigk, Lisette von (Louise Friederike Ottilie Caroline) (née von Westphalen) (1800-1863) — Jenny Marx's stepsister. — 562
Page me40.667
Krukowiecki, Jan (c. 1770-1850) — Polish general, Governor-General of Warsaw during the 1830-31 Polish insurrection, headed the government (August-September 1831). — 169
Page me40.667
Kutter, Wilhelm — one of Engels' acquaintances in Bradford. — 422
Page me40.667
Kutuzov, Mikhail Illarionovich, Prince of Smolensk (1745-1813) — Russian general, field marshal, took part in the wars with Turkey and Napoleonic France, commander-in-chief of the Russian army in 1812. — 163

Page me40.667
L

Page me40.667
La Guéronniére, Louis Étienne Arthur Dubreuil Hélion, vicomte de (1816-1875) — French journalist and politician; Bonapartist in the 1850s. — 384
Page me40.667
Lallerstedt, Sven Gustaf (1816-1864) — Swedish journalist and historian. — 91
Page me40.667
La Marmora (Lamarmora), Alfonso Ferrero, marchese de (1804-1878) — Italian general and statesman; War Minister (1848, 1849-55, 1856-59) and Prime Minister (July 1859-January 1860) of Piedmont; commanded a Sardinian corps in the Crimea (1855); Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Italy (1864-66). — 309
Page me40.667
Lamoriciére, Christophe Léon Louis Juchault de (1806-1865) — French general, moderate Republican; took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s-40s and in suppressing the June 1848 uprising in Paris; expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 89, 177
Page me40.667
Landolphe — French socialist, a refugee in London; joined the sectarian Willich-Schapper group in 1850. — 357, 363
Page me40.667
Landor, Walter Savage (1775-1864) — English poet, writer and critic; was suspected of being an accomplice in Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III in 1858. — 290
Page me40.667

Lange, F.W.L. — German refugee in London, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London,

Page Break me40.668
one of the distributors of Das Volk. — 483
Page me40.668
Langeron, Alexander Fyodorovich (Louis Alexandre Andrault), Count (1763-1831) — general in Russian service; French by birth; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 179
Page me40.668
Lannes, Jean, duc de Montebello, prince de Siévers (1769-1809) — Marshal of France, participant in the wars of Napoleonic France. — 162, 163, 165, 166, 174
Page me40.668
Larrey, Félix Hippolyte, baron (1808-1895) — French military surgeon, a private doctor of Napoleon III; in January 1858 examined those injured by the bomb explosion during Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 258
Page me40.668
*Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German journalist and lawyer, petty-bourgeois socialist; took part in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49); founder of the General Association of German Workers (1863); an initiator of the opportunist trend in the German Social-Democratic movement. — 23-24, 27, 36, 44, 128, 129, 225-28, 237, 239-40, 242, 250, 252, 255-57, 259-61, 262, 268, 271-72, 275, 286, 295, 308, 315, 316, 318-21, 322, 324, 336, 338, 353-55, 376, 378-81, 383, 384, 386, 391, 392, 393-95, 396-97, 398-401, 402, 403, 404, 407, 408, 410-12, 414-16, 418-21, 429, 432, 433-35, 441-46, 448, 450, 452, 454, 455, 456, 458, 459-60, 461, 465, 471, 477, 481, 497, 502, 508, 516, 518, 524, 526, 536, 538, 542, 547, 548, 570, 574
Page me40.668
Layard, Sir Austen Henry (1817-1894) — English archaeologist and radical politician; subsequently liberal, M.P. — 107
Page me40.668
Ledru-Rollin, Alexandre Auguste (1807-1874) — French journalist and politician, a leader of the petty-bourgeois democrats, editor of La Réforme; Minister of the Interior in the Provisional Government (February-May 1848), deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (leader of the Montagnards); emigrated to England after the demonstration of 13 June 1849. — 94, 277, 480, 538
Page me40.668
Lefebvre, Pierre François Joseph, duc de Dantzig (1755-1820) — Marshal of France, participant in the wars of Napoleonic France. — 166-67
Page me40.668
Leiden, Kosmos Damian — wine-merchant in Cologne, juryman in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 228, 568
Page me40.668
Lelewel (Lelevel), Joachim (1786-1861) — Polish historian and revolutionary; took part in the 1830-31 Polish insurrection; a leader of the democratic wing of Polish emigrants. — 85, 105, 106
Page me40.668

Lemoine — French journalist, editor of the newspaper Impartial published in Jersey; Bonapartist agent. — 188, 190
Page me40.668
Lenchen — see Demuth, Helene
Page me40.668
Leo, Heinrich (1799-1878) — German historian and journalist, extreme monarchist, an ideologist of Prussian Junkers. — 21
Page me40.668
Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729-1781) — German writer, critic and philosopher of the Enlightenment. — 260
Page me40.668
Lessner, Friedrich (1825-1910) — German tailor; member of the Communist League, where he was known as Karstens; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); refugee in London from 1856; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; member of the General Council of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 464, 472, 480, 484, 496, 500, 501, 511
Page me40.668
Lestock — see L'Estocq, Anton Wilhelm von
Page me40.668
L'Estocq, Anton Wilhelm von (1738-1815) — Prussian general; took part in the war against Napoleonic France in 1806-07. — 162

Page Break me40.669
Page me40.669
Levi, Isaak — see Rodenberg, Julius
Page me40.669
Levy, Gustav — German socialist from the Rhine Province; was delegated by Düsseldorf workers to Marx in London in 1856; later an active member of the General Association of German Workers. — 15, 22-25, 30-31, 36, 41
Page me40.669
Lewald (married name Stahr), Fanny (1811-1889) — German writer, in the 1830s-40s associated with the Young Germany group. — 383
Page me40.669
Lichtenberg — doctor of a German hospital in London. — 181
Page me40.669
Liddle — English manufacturer. — 204
Page me40.669
Liebknecht, Ernestine (née Landolt) (d. 1867) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's first wife. — 66, 333
Page me40.669
*Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; member of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; one of the founders and leaders of the German Social-Democratic Party; friend and associate of

Marx and Engels. — 22, 27, 33, 66, 120, 340, 363, 437-38, 439, 440, 449-52, 459, 464, 473, 475, 483, 484, 503, 504, 507, 508, 520, 539, 541, 543, 546, 549, 567
Page me40.669
Link — a participant in the Schiller festival in Manchester in November 1859. — 531
Page me40.669
Linkenbach — an acquaintance of Frederick Engels' father. — 529
Page me40.669
Lisle — owner of a print-shop in London, where Das Volk was printed. — 501
Page me40.669
List, Friedrich (1789-1846) — German economist, advocated protectionism. — 305
Page me40.669
Livesay, Joseph (1794-1884) — English businessman, philanthropist, Free Trader; presided at a joint conference of Chartists and Radicals in February 1858. — 264
Page me40.669
Livy (Titus Livius) (59 B.C.-A.D. 17) — Roman historian. — 294
Page me40.669
Lochner, Georg (born c. 1824) — carpenter; prominent figure in the German working-class movement, member of the Communist League and German Workers' Educational Society in London; later member of the General Council of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 437
Page me40.669
Locke, John (1632-1704) — English philosopher and economist. — 377
Page me40.669
Löllchen (Löllgen), Johann Adam — inn-keeper in Cologne in the 1840s. — 477
Page me40.669
Louis XIV (1638-1715) — King of France (1643-1715). — 377
Page me40.669
Louis XVIII (1755-1824) — King of France (1814-15, 1815-24). — 20
Page me40.669
Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orleans, King of France (1830-48). — 7, 81, 169, 193-94, 229-30, 405
Page me40.669
Love — bookseller in Glasgow. — 469
Page me40.669
Lowe, Robert, Viscount Sherbrooke (1811-1892) — British statesman and journalist, Whig and later Liberal, M.P.; Vice-President of the Board of Trade (1855-58); Chancellor of the Exchequer (1868-73); Home Secretary (1873-74). — 104, 106, 110, 116
Page me40.669
Löwe, Wilhelm (1814-1886) — German democrat, a leader of the Left wing of the Frankfurt National Assembly (known as Löwe von Calbe after the Prussian district of Calbe in which he was elected); leader of the rump of the Assembly in Stuttgart; emigrated to England, then to New York (1853-61), where he edited the Neue Zeit. — 32
Page me40.669
Lowndes, William (1652-1724) — English economist and statesman, Secretary of the Exchequer (1695-1724). — 377

Page Break me40.670
Page me40.670
Loyd, Samuel Jones, Lord Overstone (1796-1883) — English banker and economist, Whig; inspirer of Robert Peel's financial policy; leader of the 'Currency Principles School'. — 215, 377
Page me40.670
Lucan (Marcus Annaeus Lucanus) (A.D. 39-65) — Roman poet. — 446
Page me40.670
Lupus — see Wolff, Wilhelm
Page me40.670
Luther, Martin (1483-1546) — German theologian and writer; leader of the Reformation; founder of Protestantism (Lutheranism) in Germany; ideologist of the German burghers. — 21, 409, 420

Page me40.670
M

Page me40.670
Mac Adam, John — Scottish journalist from Glasgow; supported the national liberation movement in Hungary, Italy and other European countries in the 1850s. — 505-06
Page me40.670
Macdonald, Jacques Étienne Joseph Alexandre, duc de Tarente (1765-1840) — Marshal of France, participant in the wars of Napoleonic France. — 166, 167
Page me40.670
Machiavelli, Niccoló (1469-1527) — Italian politician, historian and writer. — 186-87
Page me40.670
Maciejowski, Waclaw Aleksander (1793-1883) — Polish historian and lawyer, author of works on the history of Poland and history of law of Slav states. — 85
Page me40.670
Mackenzie, George — British diplomat, Ambassador in Russia (1710-15). — 9
Page me40.670
Maclaren, James — English economist of the 19th century, studied the history of money circulation. — 317
Page me40.670
Magnan, Bernard Pierre (1791-1865) — Marshal of France, Bonapartist, an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 256
Page me40.670
Magne, Pierre (1806-1879) — French statesman, Bonapartist; Minister of Finance (1855-60, 1867-69, 1870, 1873-74). — 306
Page me40.670
Malachowski, Kazimierz (1765-1845) — Polish general, commander-in-chief of the Polish army (from August 1831) during the 1830-31 Polish insurrection; emigrated to France. — 169
Page me40.670

Malmesbury, James Howard Harris, Earl of (1807-1889) — British statesman, Tory, Foreign Secretary (1852, 1858-59), Lord Privy Seal (1866-68, 1874-76). — 427
Page me40.670
Mansfield, Sir William Roser, Baron Sandhurst (1819-1876) — British general, military adviser to the British Embassy at Constantinople (1855-56), Chief of Staff of the British army during the national liberation uprising in India in 1857-59. — 29
Page me40.670
Manteuffel, Otto Theodor, Baron von (1805-1882) — Prussian conservative statesman; Minister of the Interior (November 1848-November 1850), Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (1850-58). — 34, 383, 403, 461, 470
Page me40.670
Mar, John Erskine, Earl of (1675-1732) — Scottish statesman, leader of the uprising in support of the pretender to the English throne James Stuart (1715). — 8
Page me40.670
Marcus — a participant in the Schiller festival in Manchester in November 1859. — 517, 530
Page me40.670
Marei — compiler of hospital reports in Manchester. — 325-26
Page me40.670
Marmont, Auguste Frédéric Louis Viesse de, duc de Raguse (1774-1852) — Marshal of France, took part in the wars of Napoleonic France, later sided with the Bourbons. — 165, 166
Page me40.670
Marx, Edgar (Musch) (1847-1855) — son of Karl Marx. — 56, 566, 575
Page me40.670
Marx, Eleanor (Tussy) (1855-1898) — Karl Marx's youngest daughter. — 127, 129, 323, 325, 333, 346, 564

Page Break me40.671
Page me40.671
Marx, Emilie (1822-1888) — sister of Karl Marx. — 356
Page me40.671
Marx, Franziska (1851-1852) — daughter of Karl Marx. — 56
Page me40.671
Marx, Heinrich (1782-1838) — father of Karl Marx; lawyer, Counsellor of Justice in Trier. — 315
Page me40.671
Marx, Heinrich Guido (Fawksy) (1849-1850) — son of Karl Marx. — 56
Page me40.671
Marx, Henriette (née Pressburg) (1787-1863) — mother of Karl Marx. — 332-34, 336, 341, 345, 347, 350, 356, 387, 408
Page me40.671
*Marx, Jenny (née von Westphalen) (1814-1881) — wife of Karl Marx. — 7, 14, 31, 33, 36, 43-44, 54-57, 59, 63, 66, 68, 69, 74, 80, 82, 84, 85, 87, 97, 105, 106, 110, 112, 117, 118, 121, 125-28, 130-32, 139-41, 143-46, 148, 150, 151, 153, 155, 161, 176, 189, 196, 204, 213, 214, 222, 223, 226, 228, 240, 242, 247, 255, 258, 265, 282, 285, 289, 293, 296,

306, 307, 308, 309, 311, 313-15, 324, 328, 329, 331, 332, 334, 335, 338, 339, 340, 345, 350, 355, 358-60, 373, 374, 379, 387, 417, 421, 457, 462, 469, 478, 491, 493, 510, 517, 518, 535, 542, 545, 551, 554, 555-57, 561-76
Page me40.671
*Marx, Jenny (1844-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest daughter. — 33, 129, 130, 243, 250, 253, 314, 331, 337, 338, 466, 553, 557, 563, 564, 571, 575
Page me40.671
*Marx, Laura (1845-1911) — Karl Marx's second daughter. — 33, 129, 250, 253, 314, 331, 337, 338, 466, 557, 563, 564
Page me40.671
Masséna, André, duc de Rivoli, prince d'Essling (1756-1817) — Marshal of France, participant in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 164, 165, 166, 177
Page me40.671
Mayhew, Horace (1816-1872) — English journalist and humourist writer. — 91
Page me40.671
Mayne, Sir Richard (1796-1868) — Chief of Police in London from 1850. — 255
Page me40.671
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — Italian revolutionary, leader of the national liberation movement, head of the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic (1849); in the early 1850s sought for support among the Bonapartists; subsequently opposed Bonapartism. — 142, 277, 346, 348, 351, 382, 398, 452, 455, 464, 481, 538
Page me40.671
Mecklenburg, Duchess of — see Catherine Ivanovna
Page me40.671
Mecklenburg, Duke of — see Karl Leopold
Page me40.671
Meissner, Alfred (1822-1885) — German democratic writer, 'true socialist' in the mid-forties, subsequently a liberal. — 69, 516, 530
Page me40.671
Mendel, S. — English merchant in Manchester. — 201
Page me40.671
Merck, Ernst von (1811-1863) — German businessman, in 1848-49 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly and Imperial Minister of Finance, member of the Hamburg Senate. — 221, 235
Page me40.671
Metternich-Winneburg, Clemens Wenzel Lothar, Prince von (1773-1859) — Austrian statesman and diplomat; Minister of Foreign Affairs (1809-21) and Chancellor (1821-48), an organiser of the Holy Alliance. — 318, 324
Page me40.671
Mevissen, Elise von (née Leiden) (d. 1857) — daughter of Kosmos Damian Leiden, wife of Gustav von Mevissen. — 228, 568
Page me40.671
Mevissen, Gustav von (1815-1899) — German banker and politician, a leader of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie. — 34, 568
Page me40.671

Meyen (Mayen), Eduard (1812-1870) — German writer, Young Hegelian; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; subsequently a national-liberal. — 18, 106, 436, 522-24
Page me40.671
Miall, Edward (1809-1881) — English writer and radical politician, M.P. (1852-57, 1869-74); flirted with the Chartists in the 1840s. — 116, 264
Page me40.671
Mieroslawski, Ludwik (1814-1878) — prominent figure in the Polish national

Page Break me40.672
liberation movement; took part in the 1830-31 Polish insurrection and in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; later a leader of the moderate Polish democratic émigrés; sought for support among the Bonapartist circles in the 1850s. — 75, 80, 85, 91, 105, 106
Page me40.672
Miklosich, Franz von (Miklošic, František) (1813-1891) — professor of Slavic philology at Vienna University (1849-86); founder of the comparative grammar of Slavic languages; Slovenian by birth. — 403
Page me40.672
Mill, James (1773-1836) — English economist and philosopher. — 377
Page me40.672
Miquel, Johannes von (1828-1901) — German politician, member of the Communist League; later a national-liberal. — 31, 42-44, 59, 99, 100, 106, 134, 135, 136
Page me40.672
Mirbach, Otto von (born c. 1800) — retired Prussian artillery officer, democrat; commandant of Elberfeld during the May 1849 uprising; emigrated from Germany. — 61, 65, 564
Page me40.672
Mockel, Johanna — see Kinkel, Johanna
Page me40.672
Moleschott, Jakob (1822-1893) — Dutch physiologist and philosopher, taught in Germany, Switzerland and Italy. — 55, 282, 356
Page me40.672
Moliére (real name Jean Baptiste Poquelin) (1622-1673) — French dramatist. — 499
Page me40.672
Mommsen, Theodor (1817-1903) — German historian, author of works on the history of Ancient Rome. — 127, 294
Page me40.672
Montalembert, Charles Forbes René de Tryon, comte de (1810-1870) — French politician and journalist; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (1848-51); Orleanist, leader of the Catholic circles; supported Louis Bonaparte during the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, but soon afterwards joined the opposition. — 351, 361
Page me40.672
Montesquieu, Charles Louis de Secondat, baron de La Bréde et de (1689-1755) — French sociologist, economist and writer. — 377, 396
Page me40.672

Morell, John Daniel (1816-1891) — English philosopher, theologist and man of letters; a participant in the Schiller festival in Manchester in November 1859. — 530
Page me40.672
Morny, Charles Auguste Louis Joseph, duc de (1811-1865) — French politician, Bonapartist; an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (December 1851-January 1852); President of the Corps législatif (1854-56, 1857-65); ambassador to Russia (1856-57); stepbrother of Napoleon III. — 7, 34, 83, 94, 105, 291-93
Page me40.672
Mortier, Edouard Adolphe Casimir Joseph, duc de Trévise (1768-1835) — Marshal of France, took part in the wars of Napoleonic France. — 163, 166, 167
Page me40.672
Morton — one of the acquaintances of the Marx family in London. — 572
Page me40.672
Müffling, Friedrich Karl Ferdinand, Baron von (1775-1851) — Prussian general, later field-marshal general; military writer; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 172, 179, 180, 198
Page me40.672
Müller, Adam Heinrich, Ritter von Nitterdorf (1779-1829) — German journalist and economist, representative of the so-called Romantic school, which expressed the interests of feudal aristocracy. — 4
Page me40.672
Münnich (Münich), Khristofor Antonovich (Burkhard Christoph), Count von (1683-1767) — Russian field-marshal general, engineer; commander-in-chief of the Russian forces in the Crimea and Bessarabia during the Russo-Turkish war of 1735-39; German by birth. — 3
Page me40.672
Muñoz Benavente, José (Pucheta) (1820-1856) — Spanish bull-fighter; active participant in the 1854-56 revolution; a leader of popular masses in Madrid;

Page Break me40.673
was killed at the barricades. — 61
Page me40.673
Münzer, Thomas (c. 1490-1525) — leader of the urban plebeians and poor peasants during the Reformation and the Peasant War of 1525 in Germany; advocated ideas of egalitarian utopian communism. — 21, 420
Page me40.673
Muralt, Eduard von (1808-1895) — Swiss theologian and historian; Byzantinist; from 1837 curator of theological manuscripts and books at the Imperial Public Library in St. Petersburg. — 3
Page me40.673
Murat, Joachim (1767-1815) — Marshal of France; took part in the wars of Napoleonic France, King of Naples (1808-15). — 107, 165, 166

Page me40.673

N

Page me40.673
Napier, Sir William Francis Patrick (1785-1860) — British general and military historian. — 285
Page me40.673
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 83, 85, 124, 162, 163, 164, 165, 170, 174-75, 177, 179-81, 266, 336, 455, 473, 476
Page me40.673
Napoleon III (Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte) (1808-1873) — nephew of Napoleon I, President of the Second Republic (1848-51), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 6, 7, 31, 42-43, 45, 51, 75, 80-84, 89, 94, 105, 107, 109, 133, 157, 170, 193, 194, 214, 216, 229-231, 256, 257-58, 264, 266, 268, 273, 275, 285, 290-92, 296, 306, 308-09, 317, 336, 352, 357, 368, 380, 381-82, 384, 392, 401, 405, 416, 425-28, 430, 434, 435-36, 437, 455, 456, 460, 464-66, 470, 473, 474, 476, 487, 488, 507, 525, 532, 537, 538, 544, 552, 563
Page me40.673
Napoléon, Prince — see Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul
Page me40.673
Naut, Stephan Adolf — Cologne merchant, from 1 April 1849 responsible editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — 209
Page me40.673
Négrier, François Marie Casimir de (1788-1848) — French general; took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s and 1840s; participated in suppressing the June 1848 uprising in Paris. — 177
Page me40.673
Nesselrode, Karl Vasilyevich, Count (1780-1862) — Russian statesman and diplomat, Foreign Minister (1816-56); State Chancellor (from 1845). — 468
Page me40.673
Ney, Michel, duc d'Elchingen (1769-1815) — Marshal of France; fought in the wars of the French Republic and Napoleonic France. — 165, 166, 175
Page me40.673
Nicholas I (1796-1855) — Emperor of Russia (1825-55). — 17, 432, 436, 468
Page me40.673
Nicolai, Christoph Friedrich (1733-1811) — German writer, publisher and bookseller, advocate of 'enlightened absolutism'. — 13
Page me40.673
Nisard, Jean Marie Napoléon Désiré (1806-1888) — French critic and historian of literature; professor at the Sorbonne in the 1850s. — 6
Page me40.673
Norgate — bookseller in London. — 15
Page me40.673
Norris, Sir John (c. 1660-1749) — British admiral, in 1719-21 commanded the squadron in the Baltic sea sent to help Sweden in the war against Russia. — 91
Page me40.673

Nothjung, Peter (1821-1866) — German tailor; member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League; one of the accused at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 478
Page me40.673
Nutt, David (d. 1863) — English bookseller and publisher in London. — 226, 268, 410

Page me40.673
O

Page me40.673
O'Brien, James (pseudonym Bronterre) (1805-1864) — Irish journalist, ideologist of the Chartist movement; gave up revolutionary positions after 1848-49; founded the National Reform League in 1849. — 250
Page me40.673
Oelbermann, Hugo — German writer. — 509

Page Break me40.674
Page me40.674
Olmsted, Frederick Law (1822-1903) — American landscape architect, author of books on England and North America; contributor to the Putnam's Monthly Magazine; in 1856 travelled to Europe to study park designing. — 68, 71, 81, 97, 100, 101, 102, 105, 106, 124
Page me40.674
O'Meagher, J.B. — correspondent of The Times in Paris (1850s-60s.). — 82
Page me40.674
Omer Pasha (Michael Lattas) (1806-1871) — Turkish general of Croatian origin, commander-in-chief on the Danube (1853-54), in the Crimea (1855) and in the Caucasus (1855-56). — 30
Page me40.674
Oppenheim, Heinrich Bernhard (1819-1880) — German democratic politician, economist and journalist; refugee in Switzerland, France and England (from 1849); subsequently a national-liberal. — 100, 106, 437
Page me40.674
Orges, Hermann, von (1821-1874) — German journalist; an editor of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung (1854-64). — 532
Page me40.674
Orleans — royal dynasty in France (1830-48). — 293, 317
Page me40.674
Orsini, Felice (1819-1858) — Italian democrat and republican; prominent figure in the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification; executed for his attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 255, 276, 277, 289-91, 359, 380
Page me40.674
&Ooblique;rsted, Anders Sandøe (1778-1860) — Danish lawyer and statesman; Prime Minister (1853-54). — 132
Page me40.674

Oswald, Eugen (1826-1912) — German democratic journalist; took part in the revolutionary movement in Baden in 1848-49; emigrated to England after its defeat. — 18
Page me40.674
Otto, Carl Wunibald (born c. 1810) — German chemist, in 1848-49 member of the Cologne Worker's Association and of the Communist League; one of the accused at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 69, 75
Page me40.674
Overstone — see Loyd, Samuel Jones, Lord Overstone
Page me40.674
Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso) (43 B.C.-c. A.D. 17) — Roman poet. — 56

Page me40.674
P

Page me40.674
Padua, Duchess of — see Arrighi de Casanova, duchesse de Padoue
Page me40.674
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman; at first Tory, from 1830, Whig; Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51); Home Secretary (1852-55); Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65). — 7, 21, 44, 58, 80, 104, 107-08, 109-11, 113, 115, 116, 119, 128, 134, 226, 228, 255, 275, 276, 278, 284, 347, 349, 365, 368, 387, 401, 405, 411, 412, 416, 426, 427, 429, 431, 468, 470, 516, 520, 541, 547
Page me40.674
Pam — see Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount
Page me40.674
Panmure, Fox Maule Ramsay, Baron Panmure, Earl of Dalhousie (1801-1874) — British statesman, Whig, Secretary at War (1846-52) and Secretary for War (1855-58). — 21, 30
Page me40.674
Panzer. — 511
Page me40.674
Parish, Henry Headley — British historian in the first half of the nineteenth century. — 120
Page me40.674
Passy, Hippolyte Philibert (1793-1880) — French economist and politician, Orleanist; several times member of the government during the July monarchy; Minister of Finance (December 1848-October 1849). — 194
Page me40.674
Patkul, Johann Reinhold von (1660-1707) — Livonian nobleman; from 1701 was in Russian service as Privy Councillor and general, Russian envoy to Poland (1704-05). — 470
Page me40.674
Patow, Erasmus Robert, Baron von (1804-1890) — Prussian statesman, Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works (April-June 1848), Finance Minister (1858-62). — 379

Page Break me40.675

Page me40.675
Pauer, Ernst (1826-1905) — Austrian composer and pianist; from 1851 lived in London; professor at the Royal College of Music and director of a German song society. — 512
Page me40.675
Paul, Sir John Dean (1802-1868) — English banker; went bankrupt in June 1855; was sentenced to penal servitude for financial machinations. — 72
Page me40.675
Paula-Kröcher (Paulaw) from Breslau (Wroclaw). — 341, 383
Page me40.675
Pauly, August Friedrich von (1796-1845) — German philologist, from 1830 professor of a grammar school in Stuttgart; publisher and editor of Real-Encyklopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft. — 147, 187
Page me40.675
Payne, Annie — English ballet dancer. — 118
Page me40.675
Peabody, George (1795-1869) — American financier, philanthropist; head of a bank firm in London (from 1837). — 212, 567
Page me40.675
Peel, Sir Robert (1788-1850) — British statesman, moderate Tory; Home Secretary (1822-27, 1828-30), Prime Minister (1834-35, 1841-46); repealed the Corn Laws in 1846. — 102, 104, 107
Page me40.675
Pélissier, Aimable Jean Jacques (1794-1864) — Marshal of France, took part in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s-early 50s; commander-in-chief in the Crimea (May 1855-July 1856); ambassador to London (1858-59); commander of the army of observation at Nancy (1859). — 292, 296, 317, 321, 381
Page me40.675
Pelletan, Pierre Clément Eugéne (1813-1884) — French journalist and politician, moderate republican. — 43
Page me40.675
Perczel, Mór (1811-1899) — Hungarian general; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Turkey and in 1851 to England. — 506
Page me40.675
Péreire, Isaac (1806-1880) — French banker, Bonapartist; deputy to the Corps législatif; founded the joint-stock bank Crédit mobilier together with his brother Émile Péreire (1852). — 90, 119, 133, 216
Page me40.675
Persigny, Jean Gilbert Victor Fialin, comte (1808-1872) — French statesman, Bonapartist; an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (1852-54, 1860-63); ambassador to London (1855-58, 1859-60). — 278
Page me40.675
Peter I (the Great) (1672-1725) — Tsar of Russia (1682-1721), Emperor of Russia (from 1721). — 8-11, 58, 91, 120

Page me40.675
Petermann, August (1822-1878) — German geographer and cartographer, editor of the periodicals Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' geographischer Anstalt in Gotha (from 1855). — 349
Page me40.675
Petersen, Niels Lorenzo (1814-died after 1889) — prominent figure in the Danish and international working-class movement; Communist League member; contributed to Das Volk (1859); later member of the First International; a leader of the Left wing of the Social-Democratic Party of Denmark. — 476
Page me40.675
Peto, Sir Samuel Morton (1809-1889) — English businessman, M.P., liberal. — 114
Page me40.675
Petty, Sir William (1623-1687) — English economist and statistician, founder of the classical school of political economy in Britain. — 298, 377
Page me40.675
Pfänder, Karl (c. 1818-1876) — German artist; refugee in London from 1845, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, of the Communist League and later of the General Council of the First

Page Break me40.676
International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 313, 384, 398, 407, 417, 431, 437, 451
Page me40.676
Pfeil, Count von — Prussian Junker, member of the Prussian Provincial Diet. — 20, 26
Page me40.676
Philips — Dutch relatives of Karl Marx. — 332
Page me40.676
Philips, Lion (1794-1866) — Dutch merchant, maternal uncle of Karl Marx. — 336
Page me40.676
Philipson, Grigory Ivanovich (1809-1883) — Russian general; took part in the war against Caucasian mountaineers. — 310
Page me40.676
Pieper, Wilhelm (born c. 1826-1899) — German philologist and journalist; member of the Communist League; refugee in London; was close to Marx and Engels in 1850-53. — 8, 14, 22, 32-33, 35, 41-42, 44, 46, 53, 54, 59-60, 61, 65, 66, 69, 76, 98, 120, 124, 125, 128, 171, 174, 225, 232, 242-43, 255, 350, 351, 384, 412, 451, 561
Page me40.676
Pierre — see Peter I (the Great)
Page me40.676
Pitt, L.K. — cousin of William Pitt the Younger, priest at the English trading station in St. Petersburg. — 17
Page me40.676
Pitt, William (the Younger) (1759-1806) — British statesman, Tory; Prime Minister (1783-1801, 1804-06). — 17
Page me40.676
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 381, 425

Page me40.676
Place, Henri — French financier, a governor of the joint-stock bank Crédit mobilier. — 133
Page me40.676
Plato (c. 427-c. 347 B.C.) — Greek philosopher. — 397
Page me40.676
Plon-Plon — see Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul
Page me40.676
Plutarch (c. 46-c. 125) — Greek writer, historian and philosopher. — 269
Page me40.676
Poério, Carlo (1803-1867) — Italian liberal, participant in the national liberation movement; Prefect of Police and Minister of Education in Naples (1848); was imprisoned (1849-59); in 1859 was deported to South America but en route fled to England. — 405

Page me40.676
Pondu, John — businessman in Manchester. — 235
Page me40.676
Potter, Sir John (d. 1858) — British liberal, M.P., was elected mayor of Manchester three times. — 104, 113, 115, 117, 121
Page me40.676
Potter, Sir Thomas (1773-1845) — English tradesman and politician, a leader of Manchester liberals and founder of The Manchester Guardian, was twice elected mayor of Manchester; John Potter's father. — 118
Page me40.676
Pozzo di Borgo, Karl Osipovich, Count (1764-1842) — Russian diplomat; Corsican by birth; envoy to Paris (1814-21), ambassador to Paris (1821-35) and to London (1835-39). — 9, 468, 470
Page me40.676
Prince of Prussia — see William I
Page me40.676
Procopius (end of 5th cent.-after 562) — Byzantine writer, author of an eight-volume history of Justinian's wars against the Persians, Vandals and Goths, which contained data on the Slavs. — 16
Page me40.676
Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865) — French writer, economist and sociologist; a founder of anarchism. — 18, 90, 106, 301, 303, 377, 396, 460, 473, 538
Page me40.676
Prutz, Robert Eduard (1816-1872) — German poet, journalist and historian of literature, liberal; associated with Young Hegelians; publisher of the journal Deutsches Museum in Leipzig (1851-67). — 356, 385
Page me40.676
Pucheta — see Muñoz Benavente, José
Page me40.676
Pulszky, Ferenc (1814-1897) — Hungarian politician, writer and archaeologist; Pole by birth; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary;

Page Break me40.677
emigrated after its defeat; contributed to the New-York Daily Tribune in the 1850s. — 318, 324, 352, 493, 505, 507, 517, 523, 525
Page me40.677
Putnam, George Palmer (1814-1872) — American publisher and journalist, published the Putnam's Monthly Magazine (from 1853). — 11, 68, 71, 81, 88, 96, 100, 124
Page me40.677
Pyat, Félix (1810-1889) — French journalist, playwright and politician, petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1848 revolution; from 1849 refugee in Switzerland, Belgium and England; later opposed Marx and the First International. — 37, 38, 95, 277-79, 339, 340, 345, 348, 351
Page me40.677
Pythagoras (c. 571-497 B.C.) — Greek mathematician and philosopher. — 60

Page me40.677
Q

Page me40.677
Quételet, Lambert Adolphe Jacques (1796-1874) — Belgian mathematician, statistician and astronomer. — 286
Page me40.677
Quintilian (Marcus Fabius Quintilianus) (c. 35-c. 96) — Roman rhetorician. — 218

Page me40.677
R

Page me40.677
Radetzky, Josef, Count von Radetz (1766-1858) — Austrian field marshal; suppressed the national liberation movement in Italy (1848-49); Governor-General of the Kingdom of Lombardy and Venetia (1850-56). — 180, 431, 432
Page me40.677
Radowitz, Joseph Maria von (1797-1853) — Prussian general and statesman; a Right-wing leader in the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49). — 398
Page me40.677
Raglan, Lord Fitzroy James Henry Somerset, Baron (1788-1855) — British general, field marshal from November 1854, commander-in-chief of the British forces in the Crimea (1854-55). — 21, 297
Page me40.677
Raphael Sanzio (Raffaello Santi) (1483-1520) — Italian painter of the Renaissance. — 553
Page me40.677
Rechberg und Rothenlöwen, Johann Bernhard, Count von (1806-1899) — Austrian statesman and diplomat, conservative; Prime Minister (1859-60) and Minister of Foreign Affairs (1859-64). — 446

Page me40.677
Redcliffe — see Stratford de Redcliffe, Stratford Canning, Viscount
Page me40.677
Reinhardt, Richard (1829-1898) — German poet, refugee in Paris, Heinrich Heine's secretary, friend of Marx and Engels. — 69
Page me40.677
Rémusat, Charles François Marie, comte de (1797-1875) — French statesman and writer, Orleanist; opposed Napoleon III's regime during the Second Empire. — 6
Page me40.677
Reventlow — American acquaintance of Conrad Schramm and Joseph Weydemeyer; published the newspaper Der Hochwächter in Cincinnati (1857-58). — 217
Page me40.677
Reynolds, George William MacArthur (1814-1879) — British politician and journalist, democrat; publisher of Reynolds's Newspaper. — 250, 344, 345
Page me40.677
Ribbentrop, Adolph — Prussian legal officer; refugee in Paris in the 1850s; supported Feuerbach; August Ewerbeck's friend. — 356
Page me40.677
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — English economist. — 127, 283, 284, 287, 298, 377, 396
Page me40.677
Richard von Greifenklau (1467-1531) — Elector and Archbishop of Trier (1511-31); opponent of the Reformation; took part in suppressing the knights' uprising (1522-23) and the peasant uprising (1525). — 420, 443, 445
Page me40.677
Ripley, George (1802-1880) — American writer, journalist and literary critic, an editor of the New-York Daily Tribune (from 1849) and The New American Cyclopaedia (1857-63);

Page Break me40.678
founded communist colonies in the USA (1840s). — 159
Page me40.678
Ripley, Roswell Sabine (1823-1887) — American officer and military writer; general from 1861, participant in the war against Mexico (1846-48). — 159
Page me40.678
Ripperda, Johann Willem (1682-1737) — Dutch adventurer at the service of Philip V of Spain (1715-26); got the title of Duke and ministerial post. — 10
Page me40.678
Robert, Cyprien (b. 1807) — French journalist and philologist, professor of Slavic literature and Slavic languages at the Collége de France (1845-57). — 18, 20
Page me40.678
Robespierre, Maximilien François Marie Isidore de (1758-1794) — Jacobin leader in the French Revolution, head of the revolutionary government (1793-94). — 25, 548
Page me40.678
Robinson, Smith P. — Honorary Secretary of the Anti-Corn Law League. — 116
Page me40.678

Robinson, Therese Albertine Luise (née von Jakob) (1797-1870) — German writer (pseudonym Talvj), translator of Serbian folk songs into German. — 20, 26, 123
Page me40.678
Rodenberg, Julius (real name Levi, Isaak) (1831-1914) — German poet, writer and journalist. — 345
Page me40.678
Roesgen, Charles — clerk at Ermen & Engels in Manchester. — 92, 104, 232, 241
Page me40.678
Rogers, John — English policeman, witness at Simon Bernard's trial (April 1858). — 307
Page me40.678
Röth, Eduard Maximilian (1807-1858) — German philosopher. — 79
Page me40.678
Rothschild, Alfred de (b. 1842) — son of Lionel Nathan de Rothschild (head of the Rothschild banking house in London); in 1850-52 Wilhelm Pieper's pupil; later a banker. — 53
Page me40.678
Rothschild, James, baron de (1792-1868) — head of the Rothschild banking house in Paris. — 133
Page me40.678
Rothschilds — dynasty of bankers with branches in many European countries. — 231
Page me40.678
Rotteck, Karl Wenzeslaus Rodecker von (1775-1840) — German historian and politician, liberal. — 428
Page me40.678
Ruge, Agnes (née Nietzsche) (1814-died after 1894) — wife of Arnold Ruge. — 209
Page me40.678
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist and philosopher, Young Hegelian; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; German petty-bourgeois refugee leader in England in the 1850s. — 18, 46, 79, 100, 106, 209, 227, 356, 368, 395, 519
Page me40.678
Ruge, Hedwig — Arnold Ruge's daughter. — 209
Page me40.678
Rushdi Pasha, Mehemet (1809-1879) — Turkish statesman, several times held the post of War Minister (Seraskier) in the 1850s and 1860s. — 29
Page me40.678
Russell, John Russell, Earl (1792-1878) — British statesman, Whig leader; Prime Minister (1846-52, 1865-66), Foreign Secretary (1852-53, 1859-65), President of the Council (1854-55). — 119, 411, 431
Page me40.678
Russell, Sir William Howard (1820-1907) — English journalist, military correspondent of The Times. — 308
Page me40.678
Rüstow, Wilhelm Friedrich (1821-1878) — German officer and military writer, democrat; refugee in Switzerland. — 128, 141-42, 147, 241, 479

Page me40.678
S

Page me40.678
Saalfeld. — 225
Page me40.678
Sadleir, John (1814-1856) — Irish banker and politician, a leader of the Irish Brigade in Parliament; committed suicide when the Tipperary Bank, whose director he was, went bankrupt. — 72

Page Break me40.679
Page me40.679
Šafarik, Pavel Josef (1795-1861) — Slovak philologist, historian and archaeologist; representative of the liberal wing of the national movement; supported the programme of Austro-Slavism. — 16, 19
Page me40.679
Saint-Hilaire — see Geoffroy Saint-Hilaire, Étienne
Page me40.679
Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de Rouvroy, comte de (1760-1825) — French utopian socialist. — 72
Page me40.679
Samelson, Adolph (1817-1888) — German surgeon, oculist, held liberal views; emigrated to Manchester in 1857; took part in the Schiller festival in November 1859. — 517-18, 530
Page me40.679
Samo (d. 658) — founder and head of the first political union of Western and partly Southern Slavs, named after him (623-58). — 19
Page me40.679
Sandwith, Humphry (1822-1881) — English military physician, took part in the Crimean war; from February 1855 inspector-general of hospitals and head of medical staff in the Turkish army defending Kars. — 22, 27, 34
Page me40.679
Sasonov, Nikolai Ivanovich (1815-1862) — Russian radical journalist; emigrated in the early 1840s (lived mainly in France), contributed to various newspapers and magazines. — 69
Page me40.679
Say, Jean Baptiste (1767-1832) — French economist, representative of vulgar political economy. — 377, 395
Page me40.679
Schaffarik — see Šafarik, Pavel Josef
Page me40.679
Schapper, Karl (c. 1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; a leader of the League of the Just; member of the Central Authority of the Communist League; a leader of the sectarian group during the split in the Communist League in 1850; again became a close associate of Marx in 1856; member of the General Council of the First International. — 38, 41, 317, 319, 329, 330, 361, 389, 449, 451

Page me40.679
Schapper, Susannah — wife of Karl Schapper. — 389
Page me40.679
Scharnhorst, Gerhard Johann David von (1755-1813) — Prussian general, reorganised the Prussian army; War Minister (1807-10) and Chief of Staff (1807-13); an organiser of national struggle against Napoleonic rule. — 178, 561
Page me40.679
Scherzer, Andreas (1807-1879) — German tailor, member of a Paris commune of the Communist League, which was close to the sectarian Willich-Schapper group in 1850; later emigrated to London, a leader of German Workers' Educational Society in London, publisher of Die Neue Zeit and contributor to Das Volk. — 38, 358, 366, 437, 440, 466, 472, 483
Page me40.679
Scheuer. — 23
Page me40.679
Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759-1805) — German poet, dramatist, historian and philosopher. — 14, 356, 420, 444, 498, 508, 512, 513, 514, 516-17, 525, 527, 530-34, 536, 537, 556, 574
Page me40.679
Schleiden, Matthias Jakob (1804-1881) — German botanist, a theorist of the cell structure of organisms. — 314, 326
Page me40.679
Schleinitz, Alexander, Baron von (1807-1885) — Prussian statesman, Minister of Foreign Affairs (June 1848, 1849-50, 1858-61). — 520, 538, 575
Page me40.679
Schlosser, Friedrich Christoph (1776-1861) — German historian, democrat. — 56, 170
Page me40.679
Schlözer, August Ludwig von (1735-1809) — German historian and statistician, author of works on the history of Russia and on the ancient Russian chronicles. — 16, 17
Page me40.679
Schneider II, Karl — German lawyer, democrat; participant in the 1848-49

Page Break me40.680 revolution; counsel for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 554
Page me40.680
Schnurrer, Christian Friedrich von (1742-1822) — German theologian and Orientalist. — 16
Page me40.680
Schöler, Caroline (1819-1891) — teacher in Cologne, friend of the Marx family. — 4, 66, 330, 337, 342, 385, 388, 477
Page me40.680

Schönaich, Christoph Otto, Baron von (1725-1807) — German poet, author of an epic poem glorifying Arminius (Hermann), chief of the Germanic tribe of the Cherusci. — 375
Page me40.680
*Schramm, Conrad (Konrad) (c. 1822-1858) — prominent figure in the German working-class movement; in 1849 emigrated to London and later to Jersey; responsible editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue; member of the Communist League and its London Central Authority; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 41, 119, 171, 187-90, 195, 196, 198, 217, 228, 240, 248, 252-53, 257, 263, 264, 296, 312-13, 324, 564, 566, 568
Page me40.680
*Schramm, Rudolf (1813-1882) — German democratic journalist, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to England; supporter of Bismarck in the 1860s; brother of Conrad Schramm. — 189, 190, 196, 248, 253, 312, 324, 348, 360, 368, 461, 502
Page me40.680
Schröder, Christian Matthias (1812-1892) — head of a large banking firm in Hamburg; went bankrupt at the end of 1857. — 212, 567
Page me40.680
Schröder, John Henry (1784-1883) — head of a large banking firm in London; brother of Christian Matthias Schröder. — 213, 567
Page me40.680
Schütz, Jacob Friedrich (1813-1877) — German democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; later lived as an émigré in England, Switzerland and the USA. — 363
Page me40.680
Schwann, Theodor (1810-1882) — German biologist; a theorist of the cell structure of organisms. — 326
Page me40.680
Schwarzenberg, Karl Philipp, Prince zu (1771-1820) — Austrian field marshal, participant in the wars against Napoleonic France; commander-in-chief of the allied troops of the anti-French coalition in 1813-14. — 164
Page me40.680
Scott, Sir Walter (1771-1832) — Scottish poet and novelist. — 424
Page me40.680
Sefer Pasha — see Sepher Pasha
Page me40.680
Seiler, Sebastian (c. 1810-c. 1890) — German journalist, member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; refugee in London in the early 1850s; in 1856 moved to the USA. — 13, 22, 27, 33, 35, 41, 44, 319, 362, 564
Page me40.680
Selmnitz, Hugo von — Prussian retired officer, Ferdinand Freiligrath's acquaintance. — 104
Page me40.680
Senior, Nassau William (1790-1864) — English economist, vulgarised Ricardo's theory. — 283

Page me40.680
Sepher Pasha (Sepher Bey) (1795-1859) — Circassian prince; being in the Turkish service, took part in the Russo-Turkish war (1826-28); directed the Circassians' military operations against Russia in 1855-59. — 108, 109, 310
Page me40.680
Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of (1801-1885) — British politician; head of parliamentary group of the Tory philanthropists in the 1840s; from 1847 a Whig; Palmerston's son-in-law. — 405
Page me40.680
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English dramatist and poet. — 33, 46, 55, 127, 274, 356, 420, 442, 444, 575
Page me40.680
Shcherbatov, Mikhail Mikhailovich, Count (1733-1790) — Russian historian and journalist. — 10

Page Break me40.681
Page me40.681
Siborne (Siborn), William (1797-1849) — English military topographer and historian. — 289
Page me40.681
Sickingen, Franz von (1481-1523) — German knight who joined the Reformation; leader of the knights' uprising in 1522-23. — 419-21, 443-45
Page me40.681
Siebel, Emilie (née Kampermann) (1812-1878) — Karl Siebel's mother. — 424
Page me40.681
Siebel, Karl (1836-1868) — German poet; Engels' distant relative, lived in England (1856-60); helped to propagate works by Marx and Engels. — 372, 422, 424, 442, 481, 483, 485, 500, 509, 516, 530, 531, 553, 557
Page me40.681
Siebel, Karl August (b. 1805) — merchant in Barmen, Karl Siebel's father. — 423
Page me40.681
Simon, Ludwig (1810-1872) — German lawyer, democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five Imperial regents in June 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, lived in Paris (1855-70). — 32, 63, 90, 106
Page me40.681
Simonin, Wilhelmine Joséphine (pseudonym Valérie) (b. 1836) — French actress. — 321
Page me40.681
Simpson, Sir James (1792-1868) — British general, chief of staff (February-June 1855), commander-in-chief of the British army in the Crimea (June-November 1855). — 21
Page me40.681
Sismondi, Jean Charles Léonard Simonde de (1773-1842) — Swiss economist, representative of economic romanticism. — 127, 377
Page me40.681
Slör, Balthasar — participant in the Peasant War of 1525 in Germany, friend and adviser of Franz von Sickingen. — 419, 420, 443
Page me40.681

Smith, Adam (1723-1790) — Scottish economist. — 284, 377
Page me40.681
Socrates (c. 469-c. 399 B.C.) — Greek philosopher. — 397
Page me40.681
Sophie Dorothea (1687-1757) — wife of Frederick William I of Prussia. — 11
Page me40.681
Sophocles (c. 497-406 B.C.) — Greek dramatist. — 257, 397
Page me40.681
Soulouque, Faustin Elie (c. 1782-1867) — President of the Republic of Haiti (1849), Emperor of Haiti under the name of Faustin I (1849-59). — 266, 405, 427
Page me40.681
Soult, Nicolas Jean de Dieu, duc de Dalmatie (1769-1851) — Marshal of France and statesman; took part in the wars of Napoleonic France; War Minister (1830-34, 1840-45), Foreign Minister (1839-40) and Prime Minister (1832-34, 1839-40, 1840-47). — 165, 166, 174
Page me40.681
Speck — assistant manager of Das Volk. — 463, 464, 501
Page me40.681
Spinoza, Baruch (Benedictus) de (1632-1677) — Dutch philosopher. — 316
Page me40.681
Stahr — see Lewald, Fanny
Page me40.681
Stalker, Forster (d. 1857) — British general, commanded British land forces in the Anglo-Persian war of 1856-57; committed suicide. — 134
Page me40.681
Stanislaus II Augustus (Stanislaus Augustus Poniatowski) (1732-1798) — King of Poland (1764-95). — 85
Page me40.681
Stanley, Edward Henry, Earl of Derby (from 1869) (1826-1893) — British statesman, Tory, Conservative in the 1860s and 1870s, then Liberal; Colonial Secretary (1858, 1882-85) and Secretary of State for India (1858-59), Foreign Secretary (1866-68, 1874-78); son of Edward Derby. — 363
Page me40.681
*Steffen, Wilhelm — former Prussian army officer, witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); emigrated to Britain in 1853 and afterwards to the USA; closely associated with Marx and Engels in the 1850s. — 36-37, 41, 123, 125, 128, 140, 141, 147, 171, 174, 189, 209, 385, 440, 469, 566
Page me40.681
Stein, Maximilian, Baron (1811-1860) — Austrian army officer; during the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary was

Page Break me40.682
chief of the General Staff of the revolutionary army; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Turkey where he assumed the name of Ferhad Pasha; fought against Russia in the Caucasus (1857-58). — 318
Page me40.682

Steinthal — owner of the Manchester trading firm in which Georg Weerth was employed in 1852-56. — 72, 100, 103, 484
Page me40.682
Stephens (Stevens), John Edward — English banker, a governor of the London and the Eastern Bank, was brought to trial for financial machinations in December 1857. — 223
Page me40.682
Steuart, Sir James, afterwards Denham (1712-1780) — English economist, one of the last representatives of mercantilism. — 301, 377
Page me40.682
Stewart (afterwards Vane), Charles William, Marquis of Londonderry (1778-1854) — British general. — 164
Page me40.682
Stieber, Wilhelm (1818-1882) — Prussian police officer, an organiser of the prosecution at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), chief of the Prussian political police (1850-60). — 31, 41, 56, 378, 379, 536, 552, 554
Page me40.682
Stirner, Max (real name Schmidt, Johann Caspar) (1806-1856) — German Young Hegelian philosopher, an ideologist of individualism and anarchism. — 70
Page me40.682
Stirner-Schmidt, Marie Wilhelmine (née Dähnhardt) (1818-1902) — Max Stirner's wife. — 71
Page me40.682
Stockum, Franz August von — merchant in Düsseldorf, Count Hatzfeldt's solicitor in his divorce case, was sentenced to prison for forgery in 1855. — 23
Page me40.682
Stocqueler, Joachim Hayward (1800-1885) — English journalist, compiler of the military encyclopaedic dictionary. — 135
Page me40.682
Strahan, William (born c. 1808) — English banker, partner of a firm which went bankrupt in June 1855; was sentenced to penal servitude for financial machinations. — 72
Page me40.682
Stratford de Redcliffe, Stratford Canning, Viscount (1786-1880) — British diplomat, envoy to Constantinople (1810-12, 1825-28, 1841-58). — 28-31
Page me40.682
Stritter, Johann Gotthelf (1740-1801) — Russian historian, author of works on the history of Slavs and ancient Russia, German by birth. — 16, 17
Page me40.682
Strodtmann, Adolf (1829-1879) — German democratic writer; took part in the revolutionary movement in Schleswig-Holstein in 1848; emigrated in 1850; admirer and biographer of Gottfried Kinkel. — 359, 553
Page me40.682
Strohn, Wilhelm — member of the Communist League, refugee resident in Bradford; an acquaintance of Marx and Engels. — 69, 84, 439, 467, 475, 480, 481
Page me40.682

Struve, Gustav von (1805-1870) — German democratic journalist; a leader of the Baden uprisings in April and September 1848 and of the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; one of the leaders of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in England; fought in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 359, 446
Page me40.682
Sturge, Joseph (1793-1859) — British politician, Free Trader; joined Chartists with the purpose of retaining the working class under the influence of the radical bourgeoisie. — 264
Page me40.682
Swan — see Sandwith, Humphry
Page me40.682
Swingwood — 150
Page me40.682
Swoboda (Svoboda), Václav Alois (1791-1849) — Czech writer and poet, translated Czech folk songs into German. — 19, 26
Page me40.682
*Szemere, Bertalan (Bartholomäus) (1812-1869) — Hungarian politician and journalist; Minister of the Interior (1848) and head of the revolutionary government (1849); emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 493-95, 497, 504-05, 523, 525, 532, 573

Page Break me40.683
Page me40.682
T

Page me40.683
Talandier, Pierre Théodore Alfred (1822-1890) — French democratic journalist; took part in the 1848 revolution; emigrated to London after the coup d'état of 1851. — 38, 277, 278
Page me40.683
Talleyrand-Périgord, Charles Maurice, prince de (1754-1838) — French diplomat, Foreign Minister (1797-99, 1799-1807, 1814-15); represented France at the Vienna Congress (1814-15). — 416
Page me40.683
Talvj — see Robinson, Therese Albertine Luise
Page me40.683
Tassilier — French printer; exiled to Cayenne in June 1848. — 31
Page me40.683
Taube, Friedrich Wilhelm von (1728-1778) — Austrian lawyer, historian and economist, government official from 1763; made a trip to Southern Slav countries in 1776-77. — 15
Page me40.683
Tauentzien von Wittenberg, Bogislaw Friedrich Emanuel, Count (1760-1824) — Prussian general, took part in the wars against Napoleonic France in 1813-14. — 179
Page me40.683
Tausenau, Karl (1808-1873) — Austrian democrat; participant in the 1848 revolution; emigrated to London in 1849. — 18, 456
Page me40.683

Taylor, Bayard (1825-1878) — American traveller, writer and journalist, correspondent of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 197, 566
Page me40.683
Taylor, Tom (1817-1880) — English dramatist and journalist, in the 1850s contributor to and in 1874-80 editor of the satirical magazine Punch; Secretary to the Board of Health from 1854. — 113
Page me40.683
Tchorzewsky, Stanislaw — Polish refugee in London, owner of a bookshop; Alexander Herzen's friend, his agent in publishing and distributing Russian emigrant literature. — 349
Page me40.683
Teleki, László, Count (1811-1861) — Hungarian politician and writer, represented the Hungarian Republic in France (1848-49); after the defeat of the revolution remained in France. — 532
Page me40.683
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer) (c. 190-159 B.C.) — Roman author of comedies. — 310, 410
Page me40.683
Terentianus Maurus (latter half of the 2nd cent.) — Roman grammarian. — 441
Page me40.683
Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811-1863) — English writer. — 441
Page me40.683
Theodores — a participant in the Schiller festival in Manchester (November 1859). — 530
Page me40.683
Theyls, Willem — Dutch diplomat; at the beginning of the 18th century served at Dutch Embassy in Turkey; carried out diplomatic missions for the Russian government. — 470
Page me40.683
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman, Prime Minister (1836, 1840), deputy to the Constituent (1848) and Legislative (1849-51) Assemblies; head of the Orleanists after 1848; organised the suppression of the Paris Commune (1871); President of the Republic (1871-73). — 292
Page me40.683
Thiersch, Friedrich Wilhelm (1784-1860) — German philologist and teacher; sympathised with the Greek national liberation movement; travelled to Greece in 1831-32. — 120
Page me40.683
Thimm, Franz — bookseller in Manchester. — 447, 467, 473, 492, 496, 500, 511
Page me40.683
Tholuck, Friedrich August Gottreu (1799-1877) — German Protestant theologian, pietist. — 4
Page me40.683
Thurneyssen, Auguste — one of the governors of the Crédit mobilier. — 133
Page me40.683
Titian (Tiziano Vecellio) (1477-1576) — Italian painter of the Venetian school. — 131
Page me40.683

Tooke, Thomas (1774-1858) — English economist, adherent of the classical

Page Break me40.684
school in political economy. — 102, 126, 284, 377
Page me40.684
Touroute — French retired colonel, lived in Germany. — 30, 45
Page me40.684
Troost, Abraham Eduard Robert (1816-1874) — German businessman, co-owner of Abr. Troost u. Söhne, a firm which had branches in Elberfeld and Manchester. — 235
Page me40.684
Trübner, Nikolaus (1817-1884) — German bookseller and publisher in London, David Nutt's partner. — 46, 52, 285, 399
Page me40.684
Truelove, Edward — publisher in London, in February 1858 was put on trial for publishing a pamphlet justifying Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 275, 276
Page me40.684
Tucker, E. — London publisher. — 110, 111, 115
Page me40.684
Turner, Jack — son of James Aspinall Turner. — 118
Page me40.684
Turner, James Aspinall (1797-1867) — English cotton manufacturer and politician, Tory, President of the Manchester Commercial Association, M.P. — 113, 118
Page me40.684
Türr, István (Ahmet Kiamil Bey) (1825-1908) — Hungarian officer, participant in the 1848-49 revolutions in Italy and Germany; refugee in Turkey, fought in the Crimean War on the side of the Allies and in the war of the Caucasian mountaineers against Russia. — 324, 326

Page me40.684
U

Page me40.684
Uhland, Johann Ludwig (1787-1862) — German romantic poet; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848-49. — 436, 525
Page me40.684
Ulfilas (Wulfila) (c. 311-383) — Westgothic bishop, founder of the Gothic alphabet, translator of the Bible into Gothic. — 516
Page me40.684
Urquhart, David (1805-1877) — British diplomat, writer and politician, Turkophile; carried out diplomatic missions in Turkey in the 1830s; M.P. (1847-52), Tory, opposed Palmerston's policy; founder and editor of The Free Press. — 4-5, 32, 44, 61, 64, 66, 73, 75, 88, 94, 110, 111, 113, 117, 120, 126, 243, 277, 284, 301, 412, 428, 440, 468, 470, 482, 487, 494, 500, 503, 521, 523, 533, 539, 547, 565

Page me40.684
V

Page me40.684
Valdenaire, Victor (1812-1881) — German democrat, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848. — 87
Page me40.684
Valérie — see Simonin, Wilhelmine Joséphine
Page me40.684
Venedey, Jakob (1805-1871) — German radical journalist; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; liberal after the 1848-49 revolution. — 32, 290
Page me40.684
Veselovsky (Wesselowsky), Fyodor Pavlovich (died in the 1760s) — Russian diplomat, Secretary of the Embassy (1707-11, 1716) and envoy to London (1717-20). — 9
Page me40.684
Victor Emmanuel II (1820-1878) — King of Piedmont (Sardinia) (1849-61), King of Italy (1861-78). — 231, 380, 515
Page me40.684
Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 29, 117
Page me40.684
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro) (70-19 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 9, 315, 399
Page me40.684
Vischer, Friedrich Theodor (1807-1887) — German Hegelian philosopher, critic and writer; member of the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848); author of a voluminous work on aesthetics. — 270
Page me40.684
Vivian, Sir Robert John Hussey (1802-1887) — British general; commanded

Page Break me40.685
the Turkish troops on the Kerch Peninsula (1855-56). — 28-30
Page me40.685
Vögele, August — German refugee, compositor in Hollinger's print-shop in London (1859). — 521
Page me40.685
Vogt, Karl (1817-1895) — German natural scientist, petty-bourgeois democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents (June 1849); emigrated in 1849; later received subsidies from Napoleon III; slandered proletarian revolutionaries. — 428, 434, 436, 458, 460, 465, 468, 477, 479, 486-88, 498, 503, 514, 515, 519, 520, 521-22, 523-25, 533, 537, 539-43, 546, 549, 550
Page me40.685
Voigt, Johannes (1786-1863) — German historian, author of a voluminious work on the history of Prussia. — 16
Page me40.685
Voigt, Mikuláš (Adauctus) (1733-1787) — Czech historian, philologist and numismatist of the Enlightenment; collector of ancient literary texts. — 16

Page me40.685
Voltaire, François Marie Arouet (1694-1778) — French philosopher, writer and historian of the Enlightenment. — 75
Page me40.685
Vorontsov (Woronzoff), Mikhail Semyonovich, Prince (1782-1856) — Russian statesman, general, commander-in-chief of the troops in Transcaucasia and Governor-General in the Caucasus; uncle of Sidney Herbert. — 119

Page me40.685
W

Page me40.685
Wachsmuth, Ernst Wilhelm Gottlieb (1784-1866) — German historian, professor in Leipzig. — 259
Page me40.685
Walewski, Alexandre Florian Joseph Colonna, comte (1810-1868) — French diplomat and statesman, son of Napoleon I and Polish Countess Marie Walewska; Foreign Minister (1855-60). — 42
Page me40.685
Walpole, Spencer Horatio (Horace) (1806-1898) — British statesman, Tory, Home Secretary (1852, 1858-59, 1866-67). — 278
Page me40.685
Watts, John (1818-1887) — English utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen; later a liberal and philanthropist; a founder of the People's Provident Assurance Society in London (1853), in 1857 set up a branch of this society in Manchester. — 332
Page me40.685
Weerth, Georg Ludwig (1822-1856) — German proletarian poet and journalist, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; friend of Marx and Engels. — 68, 72, 100, 103, 226, 374
Page me40.685
Weerth, Karl (1812-1889) — German naturalist, teacher of a grammar school in Detmold, brother of Georg Weerth. — 100, 103
Page me40.685
Weerth, Wilhelmine (1785-1868) — Georg Weerth's mother. — 100
Page me40.685
Weitling, Wilhelm Christian (1808-1871) — German tailor; one of the early leaders of the working-class movement in Germany; theorist of utopian egalitarian communism; emigrated to the USA in 1849. — 358, 440, 451
Page me40.685
Weselý, Eugen (1799-1828) — Austrian poet and writer, translated folk songs of Southern Slavs into German. — 20
Page me40.685
Wesselovsky — see Veselovsky, Fyodor Pavlovich
Page me40.685
Westphalen, Anna Elisabeth Franziska von (b. 1807) — Jenny Marx's stepsister. — 562

Page me40.685
Westphalen, Caroline von (née Heubel) (1779-1856) — Jenny Marx's mother. — 59, 63, 562, 575
Page me40.685
Westphalen, Christian Heinrich Philipp von (1724-1792) — secretary and friend of the Duke of Brunswick; took part in the Seven Years War, author of a work on its history; Jenny Marx's grandfather. — 561, 562, 575

Page Break me40.686
Page me40.686
Westphalen, Edgar von (1819-c. 1890) — Jenny Marx's brother, member of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee (1846); lived in America in 1847-65. — 41, 63, 92, 564, 575
Page me40.686
Westphalen, Ferdinand Otto Wilhelm Henning von (1799-1876) — Prussian statesman, Minister of the Interior (1850-58); Jenny Marx's stepbrother. — 68, 336, 379, 561, 562, 574-75
Page me40.686
Westphalen, Heinrich Georg von (1768-1855) — Jenny Marx's uncle. — 561, 575
Page me40.686
Westphalen, Johann Ludwig von (1770-1842) — Jenny Marx's father, Privy Councillor in Trier. — 561, 575
Page me40.686
Wette, Wilhelm Martin Leberecht de (1780-1849) — German theologian, author of works on the so-called biblical archaeology. — 259
Page me40.686
*Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to the USA in 1851, one of the first propagandists of scientific communism there, participant in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 338, 374, 384, 440, 469
Page me40.686
Weydemeyer, Louise (née Lüning) (b. 1822) — wife of Joseph Weydemeyer. — 374
Page me40.686
Whiteside, James (1804-1876) — Irish lawyer and politician, Tory, M.P., Attorney-General (1858-59, 1866). — 431
Page me40.686
Wilhelmine Friederike Sophie, Margravine of Bayreuth (1709-1758) — the eldest daughter of Frederick William I of Prussia, sister of Frederick the Great. — 10
Page me40.686
Wilkinson, G.B. — correspondent of The Times in Berlin in the 1850s. — 561
Page me40.686
Wilks, Washington (c. 1826-1864) — English radical journalist, an editor of The Morning Star. — 111, 115
Page me40.686

William I (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia, Prince Regent (1858-61), King of Prussia (1861-88) and Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 292, 336, 346, 348, 368, 470
Page me40.686
William III (1650-1702) — Prince of Orange, Stadtholder of the Netherlands (1672-1702), King of England, Scotland and Ireland (1689-1702). — 9
Page me40.686
Williams — bookseller in London. — 15, 141, 520
Page me40.686
Williams, Sir William Fenwick, Baronet 'of Kars' (1800-1883) — British general; in 1855, during the Crimean War, directed the defence of Kars, M.P. (1856-59). — 31
Page me40.686
Willich, August (1810-1878) — retired Prussian officer, member of the Communist League; participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; a leader of the sectarian group that split away from the Communist League in 1850; in 1853 emigrated to the USA, took part in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 41, 346, 348, 366-67, 375, 376, 449
Page me40.686
Wilson, George (1808-1870) — British manufacturer and politician, Free Trader, President of the Anti-Corn Law League (1841-46). — 116-17
Page me40.686
Wilson, James (1805-1860) — English economist and politician, Free Trader, founder and editor of The Economist; M.P. (1847-59), Financial Secretary to the Treasury (1853-58), Chancellor of the Indian Exchequer (1859-60). — 377, 413
Page me40.686
Windham, Sir Charles Ash (1810-1870) — British general, took part in the Crimean war in 1854-56; suppressed the Indian national liberation uprising of 1857-59. — 244, 247, 249, 254

Page Break me40.687
Page me40.687
Wintzingerode, Ferdinand Fyodorovich, Baron von (1770-1818) — Germanborn Russian general, participant in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 179
Page me40.687
Wiss, Georg Eduard — German physician and journalist, Young Hegelian; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; in the early 1850s emigrated to London and later to the USA; associate of Kinkel. — 363
Page me40.687
Withers — London creditors of the Marx family. — 572
Page me40.687
Wohl-Straus, Jeannette (1783-1861) — friend of Ludwig Börne. — 32
Page me40.687
Wolff, Ferdinand (Red Wolf) (1812-1895) — German journalist, member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); emigrated from Germany; associate of Marx and Engels; subsequently gave up politics. — 88
Page me40.687

Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German teacher, proletarian revolutionary; member of the Central Authority of the Communist League from March 1848; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); emigrated to Switzerland, later to England; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 24, 27, 33, 37, 42, 44-45, 59, 70, 72, 87, 89, 91, 99, 108, 110, 120, 121, 124, 127, 128, 130, 131, 135, 136, 143, 144, 156, 157, 158, 199, 213, 217, 223, 225, 226, 227, 228, 232, 233, 236, 239, 240, 242, 250, 251, 253, 262, 264, 275, 278, 282, 288, 293, 307, 310, 314, 318-20, 322, 325, 326, 337, 338, 340, 341, 342-43, 344, 347, 349, 351-53, 361, 362, 364-66, 374, 388, 432, 439, 440, 447, 450, 459, 461, 467, 473, 475, 479-81, 484, 489, 490, 492, 495, 497, 507, 509, 514, 516, 517, 525, 544, 545, 550, 553, 566
Page me40.687
Woronzow — see Vorontsov (Woronzoff), Mikhail Semyonovich, Prince
Page me40.687
Wuk — see Karadzic, Vuk Stefanovic
Page me40.687
Wurm, Christian Friedrich (1803-1859) — German historian and journalist, professor in Hamburg. — 432
Page me40.687
Wylde. — 11

Page me40.687
Y

Page me40.687
York, Frederick Augustus, Duke of York and Albany, Earl of Ulster (1763-1827) — second son of George III of Great Britain; field marshal from 1795; commander-in-chief of the British army (1798-1809; 1811-27). — 42
Page me40.687
York (Yorck von Wartenburg), Hans David Ludwig, Count (1759-1830) — Prussian general, later field-marshal general, participant in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 179

Page me40.687
Z

Page me40.687
Zitschke — creditor of Marx in London. — 45, 52, 61
Page me40.687
Zitz, Franz Heinrich (1803-1877) — German lawyer, democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849; emigrated to the USA. — 446

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me40.687
Achilles (Gr. Myth.) — the bravest Greek warrior in the Trojan War, hero of Homer's Iliad, the first song of which describes Achilles' quarrel with the Greeks' leader Agamemnon and his withdrawal into his tent. — 512
Page me40.687
Agamemnon (Gr. Myth.) — legendary king of Argos, leader of the Greeks in the Trojan War, a hero of Homer's Iliad. — 512
Page me40.687
Balthasar (Slör, Balthasar) — a character

Page Break me40.688
in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 419, 420, 443
Page me40.688
Benedick (Benedict) — a character in Shakespeare's comedy Much Ado About Nothing; a wit and mocker who pretended to be a women-hater but soon fell in love and married. — 33
Page me40.688
Berlichingen, Götz (Gottfried) — a character in Goethe's play of the same name and in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 419, 420
Page me40.688
Brey — a character in Goethe's Ein Fastnachtsspiel auch wohl zu tragieren Ostern, vom Pater Brey, dem falschen Propheten, a lewd hypocrite. — 541
Page me40.688
Briseis (Gr. Myth.) — prisoner and beloved of Achilles who caused a quarrel between him and the Greeks' leader Agamemnon in the Trojan War. — 512
Page me40.688
Caliban — a character in Shakespeare's comedy The Tempest, half-a-man, half-a-monster. — 81
Page me40.688
Capuchin — a character in Schiller's Wallensteins Lager. — 530
Page me40.688
Charles V (Emperor) — a character in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 419-21, 443, 445
Page me40.688
Crispinus — a character from Juvenal's satire, a courtier of the Roman Emperor Domitian. — 391
Page me40.688
Don Quixote — the title character in Cervantes' novel. — 419
Page me40.688
Falstaff, Sir John — a character in Shakespeare's tragedy King Henry IV and his comedy The Merry Wives of Windsor; a sly fat braggart and jester. — 41, 444
Page me40.688
Faust — hero of a medieval German legend, the title character in Goethe's tragedy and Marlowe's play The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus. — 91
Page me40.688

Fidelio — fictitious name of Léonore, heroine in Beethoven's opera Fidelio oder die eheliche Liebe; a dedicated woman ready to sacrifice herself in the name of love. — 503
Page me40.688
Fridolin — character in Schiller's ballad Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer, a kindly and modest enamoured youth. — 14
Page me40.688
Hermann — a character in Goethe's poem Hermann und Dorothea, a philistine who sought to keep aloof from the storms of life. — 366
Page me40.688
Hutten, Ulrich von — a character in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 419-21, 442, 445
Page me40.688
Jacques le bonhomme (Jack the Simpleton) — ironic nickname of the French peasant; in a broad sense — a mocking name of the French. — 216
Page me40.688
Jenkins — a name which came to denote a flatterer and toady in England. — 278
Page me40.688
John, Saint (the Baptist) (Bib.). — 370
Page me40.688
John Bull — the main character in John Arbuthnot's book The History of John Bull (18th cent.); the name is often used to personify England or Englishmen. — 73, 113, 116, 215, 275, 276, 297, 413, 431, 457
Page me40.688
Jonathan (Brother Jonathan) — the jocular nickname of Americans (from the name of Connecticut's Governor Jonathan Trumbull, whom George Washington called Brother Jonathan). — 215-16
Page me40.688
Joss, Fritz — a character in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 444
Page me40.688
Kobes I — the title character in a satirical poem by Heine; the German journalist Jakob Venedey was ridiculed under this name. — 32
Page me40.688
Legat (Der päpstliche Kardinal-Legat) — a character in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 443
Page me40.688
Mammon — the idol of wealth among some ancient peoples. — 535
Page me40.688
Marie — a character in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen, Sickingen's daughter. — 421

Page Break me40.689
Page me40.689
Matthew (Bib.) — one of the evangelists. — 122
Page me40.689
The Moor of Venice — see Othello
Page me40.689
Munchausen — an extravaganty mendacious story-teller. — 127
Page me40.689

Nothanker — a character in Christoph Friedrich Nicolai's novel Das Leben und die Meinungen des Herrn Magisters Sebaldus Nothanker, a priest. — 13
Page me40.689
Oedipus (Gr. Myth.) — King of Thebes, hero of Sophocles' tragedies Oedipus Tyrannus and Oedipus at Colonus. — 397
Page me40.689
Orlando Furioso — title character in Lodovico Ariosto's epic poem. — 111
Page me40.689
Othello — the title character in Shakespeare's tragedy Othello, the Moor of Venice. — 55
Page me40.689
Pistol — a character in Shakespeare's tragedies King Henry IV and King Henry V and his comedy The Merry Wives of Windsor; braggart and liar. — 127
Page me40.689
Priapus (Gr. Myth.) — God of fields, gardens and fertility, patron of sensual pleasures. — 11
Page me40.689
Quasimodo — a character in Hugo's Notre-Dame de Paris; his name came to personify ugliness. — 351
Page me40.689
Richard von Greifenklau — Elector and Archbishop of Trier, a character in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen. — 420, 443
Page me40.689
Samson (Bib.) — a hero famous for his supernatural strength and courage. — 213
Page me40.689
Sickingen, Franz von — title character in Lassalle's play. — 419-21, 443-45
Page me40.689
Teiresias (Tiresias) (Gr. Myth.) — a blind prophet who predicted Oedipus tragic destiny; a character in Sophocle's tragedy Oedipus Tyrannus. — 397
Page me40.689
Visvamitra — mythical King in ancient Indian epic poem Ramayana who tried to get hold of the miraculous cow Sabala, which would fulfil all his wishes; a character in Heine's poem from the cycle Buch der Lieder. Die Heimkehr. — 14
Page me40.689
Waschlapski — a character in Heine's poem Zwei Ritter, a Polish nobleman, who leads a life of idleness in emigration. — 264
Page me40.689
Zoroaster (or Zarathustra) (6th cent. B.C.) — legendary founder of Persian religion. — 63

Page Break me40.690

INDEX OF QUOTED AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me40.690
Affairs in Prussia (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5471, November 3, 1858. — 352, 361, 365
Page me40.690
Affairs in Prussia (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5475, November 8, 1858. — 352, 361, 365
Page me40.690
Affairs in Prussia (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5505, December 13, 1858. — 355, 365
Page me40.690
[The Anglo-Persian War] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4904, January 7, 1857. — 79, 93, 114
Page me40.690
Another Strange Chapter of Modern History (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5436, September 23, 1858. — 342
Page me40.690
Bernadotte (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 165, 174-77, 259
Page me40.690
Berthier (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 161-65, 168, 259
Page me40.690
Bessiéres (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.690
Blum (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 168, 173, 259
Page me40.690
Bolivar y Ponte (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259, 266, 273
Page me40.690
[Bonaparte's Financial Manoeuvres. — Military Despotism] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5348, June 11, 1858. — 317
Page me40.690
Bonaparte's Present Position (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5287, April 1, 1858. — 294

Page Break me40.691
Page me40.691
Bourrienne (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 168, 173, 259
Page me40.691
The British and Chinese Treaty (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5455, October 15, 1858. — 362
Page me40.691

British Commerce and Finance (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5445, October 4, 1858. — 342
Page me40.691
The British Revulsion (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5183, November 30, 1857. — 199
Page me40.691
Brune (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 165, 259
Page me40.691
Bugeaud (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 259
Page me40.691
[Commercial Crises and Currency in Britain] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5414, August 28, 1858. — 342
Page me40.691
A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Part One (present edition, Vol. 30)
— Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, Erstes Heft, Berlin, 1859. — 286, 295, 297, 304, 315, 317, 336, 341, 345, 349, 351, 354, 358, 360, 361, 364, 368, 369, 374, 376, 378-80, 383, 384, 386, 389, 390, 391, 393, 394, 398, 400, 402, 403, 405-08, 415, 418, 440, 446, 448, 450, 452, 453, 454, 456, 457, 459, 460, 461, 462, 466, 471, 473, 474, 477, 478, 481, 482, 498, 502, 518, 535, 547, 569, 570, 574
Page me40.691
A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Preface (present edition, Vol. 30).
— [Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Vorwort.] In: Das Volk, Nr. 5, 4. Juni 1859 ('Karl Marx'). — 459, 482, 502
Page me40.691
[The Crisis in Europe] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4878, December 6, 1856. — 93
Page me40.691
A Curious Piece of History (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5352, June 16, 1858. — 324
Page me40.691
Declaration (present edition, Vol. 17)
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 325 (Beilage), 21. November 1859. See also: C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Genf, 1859. — 526, 527, 542, 545
Page me40.691
Difference Between the Democritean and Epicurean Philosophy of Nature (present edition, Vol. 1)
— Differenz der demokritischen und epikureischen Naturphilosophie. — 226, 316
Page me40.691
[Economic Manuscripts of 1857-58] (present edition, Vols. 29-30)
— [Grundrisse der Kritik der politischen Ökonomie (Rohentwurf) 1857/58]. — 318, 358
Page me40.691
The English Alliance (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5319, May 8, 1858. — 309
Page me40.691

[The English Bank Act of 1844] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5409, August 23, 1858. — 342

Page Break me40.692
Page me40.692
[The English Bank Act of 1844 and the Monetary Crisis in England] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5176, November 21, 1857. — 215
Page me40.692
The Excitement in Ireland (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5530, January 11, 1859. — 365
Page me40.692
The Fall of Kars (present edition, Vol. 14). In: The People's Paper, Nos. 205-08, April 5, 12, 19, 26, 1856. — 28, 31, 38, 42, 44, 561
— New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4671, April 8, 1856. — 28, 31, 38, 561
Page me40.692
[The Financial Position of France] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5312, April 30, 1858. — 309
Page me40.692
The French Trials in London (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5309, April 27, 1858. — 309
Page me40.692
Great Trouble in Indian Finances (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5624, April 30, 1859. — 411
Page me40.692
History of the Opium Trade (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5433, September 20, 1858. — 362
Page me40.692
History of the Opium Trade (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5438, September 25, 1858. — 362
Page me40.692
The House of Lords and the Duke of York's Monument (present edition, Vol. 14). In: The People's Paper, No. 208, April 26, 1856. — 42
Page me40.692
The Indian Insurrection (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5104, August 29, 1857. — 152
Page me40.692
[Indian News] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5091, August 14, 1857. — 564
Page me40.692
The Invasion Panic in England (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5813, December 9, 1859. — 544
Page me40.692
The King of Prussia's Insanity (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5462, October 23, 1858. — 349, 361
Page me40.692

The King of Prussia's Insanity (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5465, October 27, 1858. — 349
Page me40.692
Kossuth and Louis Napoleon (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5748, September 24, 1859. — 485, 494, 497, 507, 508, 517, 523, 525, 532, 573
— Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon. In: The Free Press, No. 10, September 28, 1859. — 494, 497, 500, 505-07
— Lüdwig Kossuth und Louis Napoleon. In: Allgemeine Zeitung (Beilage), Nr. 276, 3. Oktober 1859. — 505, 507
Page me40.692
[Letter to the Editor of the 'Allgemeine Zeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 17). In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 300, 27. Oktober 1859. — 515, 521
Page me40.692
[Lord Canning's Proclamation and Land Tenure in India] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5344, June 7, 1858. — 317, 341

Page Break me40.693
Page me40.693
Lord Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, Nos. 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, 85 and 86, October 22, 29, November 5, 12, 19, December 10, 17, 24, 1853. — 541, 547
— Palmerston, Palmerston and Russia, A Chapter of Modern History, England and Russia. In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3902, 3916, 3930 and 3973, October 19, November 4, 21, 1853, January 11, 1854. — 111
— Palmerston and Russia, London, E. Tucker [1853] (Political Fly-Sheets, No. I). — 115
— Palmerston, What Has He Done? (Palmerston and the Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi), London, E. Tucker [1854] (Political Fly-Sheets, No. II). — 115
— The Story of the Life of Lord Palmerston, Sheffield, 1856. In: The Free Press Serials. V. — 44, 58
— Der “wahrhaft” englische Minister und Russland am Bosporus (Excerpts from Marx's pamphlet). In: Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Dokumente und Actenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte, Berlin, 1859, Heft I. — 547
— Lord Palmerston und die polnische Insurrection. 1831 (Excerpts from Marx's pamphlet). In: Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Dokumente und Actenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte, Berlin, 1860, Heft II. — 547
Page me40.693
Louis Napoleon's Position (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5563, February 18, 1859. — 373
Page me40.693
The Maritime Commerce of Austria (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4906, January 9, 1857. — 93, 114
Page me40.693
The Maritime Commerce of Austria (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5082, August 4, 1857. — 93
Page me40.693

Mazzini's Manifesto (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5665, June 17, 1859. — 452
Page me40.693
Mazzini's New Manifesto (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5453, October 13, 1858. — 346
Page me40.693
Mr. Disraeli's Budget (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5318, May 7, 1858. — 309
Page me40.693
[Mr. John Bright] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5479, November 12, 1858. — 350, 358
Page me40.693
The New Ministry (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5489, November 24, 1858. — 349, 361
Page me40.693
The New Ministry (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5492, November 27, 1858. — 352
Page me40.693
Notebooks on Epicurean Philosophy (present edition, Vol. 1)
— Hefte zur epikureischen Philosophie. — 226
Page me40.693
The Peace (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5698, July 28, 1859. — 469
Page me40.693
[Political Parties in England. — Position in Europe] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5359, June 24, 1858. — 358
Page me40.693
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)

Page Break me40.694
— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon. Par Karl Marx. Paris-Bruxelles, 1847. — 396
Page me40.694
[Project for the Regulation of the Price of Bread in France] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5507, December 15, 1858. — 357, 365
Page me40.694
The Prussian Regency (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5465, October 27, 1858. — 352, 361
Page me40.694
[The Question of the Abolition of Serfdom in Russia] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5458, October 19, 1858. — 358
Page me40.694
Quid pro quo (present edition, Vol. 16). In: Das Volk, Nr. 13-16, 30 Juli, 6., 13., 20. August 1859. — 520
Page me40.694

Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozess zu Köln. Basel, 1853. — 31, 554
Page me40.694
Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century (present edition, Vol. 15). In: The Free Press, Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 13, 16, 17, 19, 26, 28, 29, 34; August 16, 23, September 13, 20, October 4, November 8, 29, December 6, 20, 1856; February 4, 18, 25, April 1, 1857. — 56, 58, 64, 67, 138, 139
Page me40.694
[Reviews] (Gatherings from the Press) (present edition, Vol. 16). In: Das Volk, Nr. 5, 8, 10, 11; 4., 25. Juni, 9., 16. Juli 1859. — 468, 503, 520
Page me40.694
The Revolt in India (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5082, August 4, 1857. — 146
Page me40.694
[The Revolt in India] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5170, November 14, 1857. — 193
Page me40.694
The Right Divine of the Hohenzollerns (present edition, Vol. 15). In: The People's Paper, No. 241, December 13, 1856. — 88, 93
Page me40.694
[The Spanish Coup d'Etat] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4775, August 8, 1856. — 65
Page me40.694
Speech at the Anniversary of 'The People's Paper' Delivered in London. April 4, 1856 (present edition, Vol. 14). In: The People's Paper, No. 207, April 19, 1856. — 38, 274
Page me40.694
The State of British Manufactures (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5584, March 15, 1859. — 389
Page me40.694
State of the Indian Insurrection (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5094, August 18, 1857. — 152
Page me40.694
[Statement by the Editorial Board of the Newspaper 'Das Volk'] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: Das Volk, Nr. 6, 11. Juni 1859. — 461
Page me40.694
[Statement to the Editors of 'Die Reform', the 'Volks-Zeitung' and the 'Allgemeine Zeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 17). In: Die Reform, Nr. 139 (Beilage), 19. November 1859. — 522-24, 537, 542
Page me40.694
To the Editor of the 'Neue Zeit' (present edition, Vol. 15)
— An den Redacteur der 'Neuen Zeit'. In: Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 4, 17. Juli 1858. — 340

Page Break me40.695
Page me40.695
A Traitor in Circassia (present edition, Vol. 15). In: The Free Press, No. 34, April 1, 1857. — 112, 113

Page me40.695
The Treaty of Villafranca (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5704, August 4, 1859. — 469
Page me40.695
Truth Testified (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5704, August 4, 1859. — 473
Page me40.695
The War Prospect in Europe (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5547, January 31, 1859. — 368
Page me40.695
The War Prospect in Prussia (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5598, March 31, 1859. — 404

Engels, Frederick
Page me40.695
Abatis (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 159
Page me40.695
Abensberg (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Acre (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Actium (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Adjutant (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Afghanistan (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 159
Page me40.695
Airey (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 148
Page me40.695
Aland Islands (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Albuera (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146, 251, 267
Page me40.695
Aldenhoven (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695

Alessandria (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Algeria (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 173, 177
Page me40.695
Alma (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.695
Ammunition (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146, 173
Page me40.695
Amusette (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146

Page Break me40.696
Page me40.696
Antwerp (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. I, 1858. — 144, 146
Page me40.696
Arbela (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 148
Page me40.696
Army (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 140, 142, 144, 155, 158, 161, 162, 173, 177, 186, 197
Page me40.696
Arquebuse (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 148
Page me40.696
Artillery (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 144, 173, 190, 195, 197, 200, 207, 251, 263
Page me40.696
Aspern (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 148
Page me40.696
Attack (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 148
Page me40.696
The Austrian Hold on Italy (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5575, March 4, 1859. — 393, 417
Page me40.696
Barbette (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 168, 259
Page me40.696
Bastion (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 168, 259

Page me40.696
Battery (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 172, 185, 259
Page me40.696
Battle (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 172, 174, 259
Page me40.696
The Battle of Montebello (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5659, June 10, 1859. — 448
Page me40.696
Bayonet (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 168, 259
Page me40.696
Berme (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 254, 256, 259
Page me40.696
Bidassoa (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 252, 259, 279
Page me40.696
Bivouac (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.696
Blenheim (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 252, 254, 256, 259
Page me40.696
Blindage (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.696
Bomarsund (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259, 274, 281, 285, 288-89, 293
Page me40.696
Bomb (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.696
Bombardier (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259

Page Break me40.697
Page me40.697
Bombardment (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.697
Bomb Ketch (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.697

Bomb-Proof (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.697
Bomb Vessel (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.697
Bonnet (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.697
Borodino (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 252, 254, 256, 259
Page me40.697
Brescia (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259, 274
Page me40.697
Bridge-Head (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259
Page me40.697
Bridge, Military (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 169, 172, 190
Page me40.697
[The British Army in India] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5361, June 26, 1858. — 319
Page me40.697
Buda (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 259
Page me40.697
Burmah (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 259, 264, 268, 274, 281, 288
Page me40.697
Camp (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 241, 257, 259
Page me40.697
Campaign (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 241, 244
Page me40.697
The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die deutsche Reichsverfassungskampagne. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nr. 1, Januar 1850; Nr. 2, Februar 1850; Nr. 3, März 1850. — 63
Page me40.697
The Campaign in Italy (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Der Feldzug in Italien. In: Das Volk, Nr. 4, 28. Mai 1859. — 449, 459
Page me40.697
Captain (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 241, 244
Page me40.697

[The Capture of Delhi] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5188, December 5, 1857. — 198, 204-08
Page me40.697
Carabine (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 251
Page me40.697
Catapult (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 247, 257, 259, 267

Page Break me40.698
Page me40.698
Cavalry (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IV, 1859. — 247, 256, 264, 273, 274, 282, 285, 289, 294, 308, 323
Page me40.698
Chances of the Impending War (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5586, March 17, 1859. — 414, 416
Page me40.698
Changes in the Russian Army (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5006, May 6, 1857. — 121, 563
Page me40.698
Coehorn (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. V, 1859. — 247
Page me40.698
The Condition of the Working-Class in England. From Personal Observation and Authentic Sources (present edition, Vol. 4) — Die Lage der arbeitenden Klasse in England. Nach eigner Anschauung und authentischen Quellen, Leipzig, 1845. — 326
Page me40.698
Europe in 1858 (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5514, December 23, 1858. — 357
Page me40.698
The European War (present edition, Vol. 14). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4616, February 4, 1856. — 3
Page me40.698
The Fall of Lucknow (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5312, April 30, 1858. — 307, 308
Page me40.698
Fighting at Last (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5655, June 6, 1859. — 448
Page me40.698
Fortification (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. VII, 1860. — 461
Page me40.698
German Resources for War (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5582, March 12, 1859. — 386, 393
Page me40.698

Historical Justice (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5692, July 21, 1859. — 473
Page me40.698
The Indian Army (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5381, July 21, 1858. — 325
Page me40.698
Infantry (present edition, Vol. 16). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. IX, 1860. — 478, 491, 492, 500, 506
Page me40.698
The Italian War. Retrospect (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Die italienische Krieg. Rückschau. In: Das Volk, Nr. 12-14, 23., 30. Juli, 6. August 1859. — 466, 470, 471, 474, 476
Page me40.698
Karl Marx, 'A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'. Part One, Franz Duncker, Berlin, 1859 (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Karl Marx, 'Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie'. Erstes Heft. Franz Duncker. Berlin, 1859. In: Das Volk, Nr. 14, 16, 6., 20. August 1859. — 471, 473, 474, 478, 481, 482, 502
Page me40.698
Military Reform in Germany (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5873, February 20, 1860. — 514, 515, 530

Page Break me40.699
Page me40.699
[Mountain Warfare in the Past and Present] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4921, January 27, 1857. — 89
Page me40.699
[The New English Expedition in China] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4990, April 17, 1857. — 105
Page me40.699
The Peasant War in Germany (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Der deutsche Bauernkrieg. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nr. 5-6, 1850. — 21
Page me40.699
Persia — China (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5032, June 5, 1857. — 130, 134
Page me40.699
Po and Rhine (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Po und Rhein. Berlin, 1859. — 391, 393, 394, 398-400, 402, 404, 407, 410, 412, 414, 415, 417, 421, 431, 435, 440, 449, 452, 458, 481, 483, 542, 572
Page me40.699
Progress of the Moorish War (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5846, January 19, 1860. — 516, 527, 529, 530, 547
Page me40.699
The Prosecution of Montalembert (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5489, November 24, 1858. — 351, 352, 361

Page me40.699
[Prospects of the Anglo-Persian War] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4941, February 19, 1857. — 98
Page me40.699
Prospects of the War (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5634, May 12, 1859. — 431
Page me40.699
The Relief of Lucknow (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5236, February 1, 1858. — 247, 249
Page me40.699
Russian Progress in Central Asia (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5471, November 3, 1858; The Free Press, No. 23, November 24, 1858. — 347
Page me40.699
[Russia's Successes in the Far East] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5484, November 18, 1858. — 349
Page me40.699
[The Siege and Storm of Lucknow] (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5235, January 30, 1858. — 233, 234, 237, 239, 242
Page me40.699
[War Inevitable] (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5624, April 30, 1859. — 406, 414
Page me40.699
Windham's Defeat (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5253, February 20, 1858. — 254, 257

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick
Page me40.699
Address of the Central Authority to the League, March 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10) — Die Zentralbehörde an den Bund, London im März 1850 (distributed as handwritten copies). — 56
Page me40.699
Address of the Central Authority to the League, June 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10)

Page Break me40.700
— Die Zentralbehörde an den Bund. [London, Juni 1850] (distributed as handwritten copies). — 56
Page me40.700
Armada (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 173, 195
Page me40.700
Ayacucho (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 173
Page me40.700
Barclay de Tolly (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 162, 168, 259
Page me40.700

Bem (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 168, 172, 259
Page me40.700
Bennigsen (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 162, 173, 259
Page me40.700
Beresford (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 259, 268, 273, 274, 281, 288
Page me40.700
Blücher (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 174, 181, 198, 259
Page me40.700
Bosquet (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. III, 1858. — 177, 259
Page me40.700
The Money Panic in Europe (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5548, February 1, 1859. — 368
Page me40.700
Review, May to October [1850] (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Revue. Mai bis Oktober. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nr. 5-6, 1850. — 191
Page me40.700
The State of the Question. — Germany Arming (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5631, May 9, 1859. — 425

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me40.700
Acta litteraria Bohemiae et Moraviae. Pragae, 1774-1783. — 16
Page me40.700
Adalbert's Prayer — see Priére d'Adalbert
Page me40.700
Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste in alphabetischer Folge von genannten Schriftstellern bearbeitet und herausgegeben von J.S. Ersch und J.G. Gruber. In 167 Bände. Leipzig, 1818-90. — 147, 187, 247
Page me40.700
Ammonius Saccas. Vita Aristoteles. — 397
Page me40.700
Anstey, Th. [Speeches in the House of Commons]
— 8 February 1848. In: Hansard's Parliamentary Debates. Third series. Vol. XCVI. London, 1848. — 111, 117
— 14 February 1848. In: Hansard's Parliamentary Debates. Third series. Vol. XCVI. London, 1848. — 111, 117
— 23 February 1848. In: Hansard's Parliamentary Debates. Third series. Vol. XCVI. London, 1848. — 111, 117

Page Break me40.701
— 1 March 1848. In: Hansard's Parliamentary Debates. Third series. Vol. XCVII. London, 1848. — 111, 117
Page me40.701
Ariosto, L. L'Orlando furioso. — 111
Page me40.701
A[sbóth, A.] The Austrian Hold on Italy. To the Editor of The N.Y. Tribune. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5581, March 11, 1859. — 417
Page me40.701
Asbóth, [A.] The Chances of the Impending War. To the Editor of The N.Y. Tribune. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5602, April 5, 1859. — 417
Page me40.701
Asbóth, A. The Peace of Villafranca and the Hungarian Cause. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5727, August 31, 1859. — 494
Page me40.701
Babbage, Ch. On the Economy of Machinery and Manufactures. London, 1832. — 278, 279, 281
Page me40.701
Balzac, H. de. L'Histoire de la grandeur et de la décadence de Cézar Birotteau. — 70
Page me40.701
Bastiat, Fr. Harmonies économiques. 2-me édition augmentée des manuscrits laissés par l'auteur. Publiée par la Société des amis de Bastiat. Paris, 1851. — 249, 303
Page me40.701
Batrachomyomachia. — 51, 532
Page me40.701
Bauer, B. Deutschland und das Russenthum. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 90 — Die jetzige Stellung Rußlands. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 90 — Kritik der Evangelien und Geschichte ihres Ursprungs. Bände I-IV. Berlin, 1850-1852. — 91
— Kritik der evangelischen Geschichte der Synoptiker. Bd. 1-2, Leipzig, 1841; Bd. 3, Braunschweig, 1842. — 4
— La Russie et l'Angleterre. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 90
— Rußland und England Charlottenburg, 1854. — 90
— Rußland und das Germanenthum Charlottenburg, 1853. — 90
— Rußland und das Germanenthum Zweite Abtheilung. Die deutsche und die orientalische Frage. Charlottenburg, 1853. — 90
Page me40.701
Bauer, E. Englische Freiheit. Leipzig, 1857. — 68, 106, 122
— Vorträge über die Geschichte der Politik, gehalten im Arbeiterbildungsverein zu London. Erster Vortrag. In: Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 20, 6. November 1858. — 353, 358
Page me40.701
[Bauer, E.] Englische Neutralität. In: Hermann, Nr. 18, 7. Mai 1859 ('Politik'). — 440
— Das Kloster. Ein Roman. In: Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 38-42, 19., 26. März, 2., 10., 16. April 1859. — 415

— Preussens constitutioneller Imperialismus. In: Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 22, 27. November 1858. — 359
Page me40.701
Bazancourt, de. L'expédition de Crimée jusqu'á la prise de Sébastopol. Chroniques de la guerre d'orient. In 2 parts. Paris, 1856. — 5, 51, 71, 73, 80, 93, 124
Page me40.701
[Bem, J.] Ueber die Vertheidigung Warschau's am 6 und 7 Sept. 1831. In: Allgemeine Zeitung (München), Nr. 470-75, 3-6. Dezember, 1831. — 169
Page me40.701
Berkeley, G. The Querist Containing Several Queries, Proposed to the Consideration of the Public. London, 1750. — 377
Page me40.701
Die Beschwerden und Klagen der Slaven in Ungarn über die gesetzwidrigen Uebergriffe der Magyaren. Vorgetragen von einem ungarischen Slaven. Leipzig, 1843. — 20
Page me40.701
B[eta, H.] Ferdinand Freiligrath (Lebensskizze mit Portrait). In: Die Gartenlaube. Illustriertes Familienblatt, Nr. 43, 1859. — 532, 534, 537, 540-42, 546, 550, 556

Page Break me40.702
Page me40.702
[Beta, H.] Chronik unseres Schillerfestes. In: Hermann, Nr. 46, 19. November 1859. — 532
— Vorletzte Sitzung des Schillerfest-Comités. In: Hermann, Nr. 48, 3. Dezember 1859. — 547
Page me40.702
Betrachtungen über das Fürstenthum Serbien. Wien, 1851. — 20
Page me40.702
Bible.
The Old Testament — 15
The New Testament. — 15
1 Corinthians 5:7. — 483
Matthew. — 122
The Second Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Corinthians. — 327
Page me40.702
Biskamp, E. [Letter to the Editors of the Allgemeine Zeitung, London, October 20, 1859.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 300, 27. Oktober 1859 ('Neueste Posten'). — 515, 521, 523
Page me40.702
[Biskamp, E.] Der Friede von Villa Franca. I-II. In: Das Volk, Nr. 11, 12, 16., 23. Juli 1859. — 469
— Der Reichsregent. In: Das Volk, Nr. 2, 14. Mai 1859. — 450, 520
— [An item.] In: Das Volk, Nr. 4, 28. Mai 1859 ('Vereins-Nachrichten'). — 439, 448, 459
Page me40.702
Blanc, L. 1848. Historical Revelations: Inscribed to Lord Normanby. London, 1858. — 310

Page me40.702
Blind, K. Der Befreier Napoleon. In: Hermann, Nr. 15, 16. April 1859. — 428
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 313, 9. November 1859 ('Neueste Posten'). — 526, 527, 540
— Erklärungen. In: Allgemeine Zeitung. Nr. 345 (Beilage), 11. Dezember 1859. — 554
— Der lokalisierte Krieg und die deutsche Volkspartei. In: Hermann, Nr. 19, 14. Mai 1859 ('Politik'). — 440
Page me40.702
[Blind, K.] Flugblätter des Vereins 'Deutsche Einheit und Freiheit' in England, 1858. — 351, 353
— The Grand Duke Constantine to be King of Hungary. In: The Free Press, No. 5, May 27, 1859. — 486, 487, 503, 521, 533, 540, 544
— Prognostikon des wahrscheinlichen Verlaufes des italienischen Krieges, geschrieben kurz vor Ausbruch desselben. In: Hermann, Nr. 46, 19. November 1859. — 536
— Warnung zur gefälligen Verbreitung. In: Das Volk, Nr. 7, 18. Juni 1859 ('Die Reichsverraetherei'). — 520
— Zur Warnung (pamphlet). — 488, 498, 503, 504, 520, 539, 543
— Zur Warnung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung. Nr. 173 (Beilage), 22. Juni 1859. In the article: K. Vogt und die deutsche Emigration in London. — 498, 520, 539
Page me40.702
Blücher's Kampagne-Journal der Jahre 1793 und 1794. [Berlin,] 1796. — 179
Page me40.702
Der böhmische Cato. In: Dobrowsky, [J.] Slavin, Prag, 1834. — 16
Page me40.702
Boniface, L. Paris, le 29 janvier. In: Le Constitutionnel, No. 30, 30 janvier 1859. — 379, 381
Page me40.702
Borkheim, S.L. An die Redaction des 'Hermann'. In: Hermann, Nr. 50, 17. Dezember 1859. — 555
Page me40.702
Bötticher, W. Geschichte der Carthager nach den Quellen bearbeitet. Berlin, 1827. — 186

Page Break me40.703
Page me40.703
Bray, J.F. Labour's Wrongs and Labour's Remedy; Or, the Age of Might and the Age of Right. Leeds, 1839. — 301
Page me40.703
Bright, J. [Speech at a meeting of Birmingham constituents on October 27, 1858.] In: The Times, No. 23136, October 28, 1858. — 358
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 24 March 1859.] In: The Times, No. 23263, March 25, 1859. — 411
Page me40.703
Brockhaus' Konversations-Lexikon. Leipzig. — 123, 135, 252, 267
Page me40.703

B[ucher,] L. Louis Napoleon's Laufbahn. In: Hermann, Nr. 19, 14. Mai 1859 ('Politik'). — 440
Page me40.703
Bürger, G.A. Lenore. — 102, 139
Page me40.703
Campbell, E.S.N. A Dictionary of the Military Science: Containing an Explanation of the Principal Terms Used in Mathematics, Artillery, and Fortification, and Comprising the Substance of the Latest Regulations on Courts Martial, Pay, Pensions, Allowances, etc. A Comparative Table of Ancient and Modern Geography; Achievements of the British Army; with an Address to Gentlemen Entering the Army. London, 1830. — 142
Page me40.703
Carey, H. Ch. Essay on the Rate of Wages: with an Examination of the Causes of the Differences in the Condition of the Labouring Population throughout the World. Philadelphia, 1835. — 303
Page me40.703
Cathcart, G. Commentaries on the War in Russia and Germany in 1812 and 1813. London, 1850. — 293
Page me40.703
Cavour, C.B. [Speech of 16 April 1858 in the Chamber of Representatives of the Kingdom of Piedmont.] In: The Times, No. 22973, April 21, 1858. 'Sardinia'. (From Our Own Correspondent.) Turin, April 17. — 309
Page me40.703
Chamfort, S.R.N. Maximes et Pensées. — 545
Page me40.703
Charras, J.B.A. Histoire de la campagne de 1815. Waterloo. Leipzig, 1857. — 258, 285
Page me40.703
Clausewitz, C. von. Der Feldzug von 1812 in Rußland, der Feldzug von 1813 bis zum Waffenstillstand und der Feldzug von 1814 in Frankreich. In: Hinterlassene Werke des Generals Carl von Clausewitz über Krieg und Kriegführung. Bd. 7. Berlin, 1835. — 198, 247
— Der Feldzug von 1815 in Frankreich. In: Hinterlassene Werke des Generals Carl von Clausewitz über Krieg und Kriegführung. Bd. 8. Berlin, 1835. — 198, 247
— Vom Kriege. In: Hinterlassene Werke des Generals Carl von Clausewitz über Krieg und Kriegführung. Bd. 1-3. Berlin, 1832-1834. — 242, 243
Page me40.703
Cobden, R. What Next and Next? London, 1856. — 3
Page me40.703
Coningham, W. The Betrayal of England. Addressed to the Working Classes. London, 1848. — 111, 117
Page me40.703
Crawshay, G. The Russian Memoir of 1837. In: The Free Press, No. 8, July 27, 1859. — 479
Page me40.703
Darimon, A. De la réforme des banques. Avec une introduction par M. Émile de Girardin. Paris, 1856. — 90
Page me40.703

Darwin, Ch. On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life. London, 1859. — 551

Page Break me40.704
Page me40.704
Derby, E.G. [Speeches in the House of Lords]
— 1 March 1858. In: The Times, No. 22930, March 2, 1858. — 278
— 18 April 1859. In: The Times, No. 23284, April 19, 1859. — 425-27
Page me40.704
Desprez, H. Les peuples de l'Autriche et de la Turquie. Histoire contemporaine des Illyriens, des Magyars, des Roumains et des Polonais. Tomes 1-2. Paris, 1850. — 17, 20
Page me40.704
Destrilhes. Confidences sur la Turquie. Paris, 1855. — 31, 37
Page me40.704
Disraeli, B. [Speech in the House of Commons on 18 April 1859]. In: The Times, No. 23284, April 19, 1859. — 425
Page me40.704
[Dobner, J.F.] (Gelasius) Wenceslai Hagek a Liboczan, Annales Bohemorum e bohemica editione latine redditi, et notis illustrati a P. Victorino a S. Cruce e scholis piis. Nunc plurimis animadversionibus historico-chronologico-criticis, nec non diplomatibus, literis publicis, re genealogica, numaria, variique generis antiquis aeri incisis monumentis aucti a P. Gelasio a S. Catharina ejusdem instituti sacerdote. Pars I-II. Pragae, 1761-1763. — 17
Page me40.704
Dobrowsky's Slavin. Bothschaft aus Böhmen an alle slawischen Völker, oder Beiträge zu ihrer Charakteristik, zur Kenntniß ihrer Mythologie, ihrer Geschichte und Alterthümer, ihrer Literatur und ihrer Sprachkunde nach allen Mundarten. Mit einem Anhange: der böhmische Cato, vollständige Ausgabe in vier Büchern. Zweite verbesserte, berichtigte und vermehrte Auflage. Von Wenceslaw Hanka. Prag, 1834. — 15-16
Page me40.704
Dolch, O. Geschichte des deutschen Studententhums von der Gründung der deutschen Universitäten bis zu den deutschen Freiheitskriegen. Leipzig, 1858. — 531
Page me40.704
Douglas, H. An Essay on the Principles and Construction of Military Bridges and the Passage of Rivers in Military Operations. Third Edition. London, 1853. — 168
Page me40.704
Dupré de Saint-Maure, E. L'Hermite en Russie, ou Observations sur les moeurs et les usages russes au commencement du XIXe siécle; Faisant suite á la collection des moeurs françaises, anglaises, italiennes, espagnoles, etc. Tomes 1-3. Paris, 1829. — 16
Page me40.704
Eichhoff, F.G. Histoire de la langue et de la littérature des slaves, russes, serbes, bohémes, polonais et lettons, considérées dans leur origine indienne, leurs anciens monuments, et leur état présent. Paris-Genéve, 1839. — 19, 26
Page me40.704
[Eichhoff, K.W.] Berlin, 8. Nov. (Stieber.) In: Hermann, Nr. 45, 12. November 1859 ('Deutschland'). — 536, 552

— Stieber. In: Hermann, Nr. 36-38, 40, 42, 43, 10., 17., 24. September, 8., 22., 29. Oktober 1859 ('Schattenbilder der zehnjährigen Corruption in Preußen'). — 536, 552
Page me40.704
Encyclopaedia Britannica, or Dictionary of Arts, Sciences, and General Literature. Eighth edition in 21 volumes. Edinburgh, 1853-1860. — 147, 263
Page me40.704
Engel, J. Chr. Geschichte des Ungrischen Reichs und seiner Nebenländer. In: Staatskunde und Geschichte von Dalmatien, Croatien, Slawonien, nebst einigen ungedruckten Denkmälern Ungrischer Geschichte. Zweyter Theil. Halle, 1798. — 15
Page me40.704
Evans, G. de Lacy. [Speeches in the House of Commons]
— 29 February 1856. In: The Times, No. 22304, March 1, 1856. — 21
— 3 March 1856. In: The Times, No. 22306, March 4, 1856. — 22
Page me40.704
Expédition d'Igor. In: Eichhoff, F.G. Histoire de la langue et de la littérature des slaves, russes, serbes, bohémes, polonais et lettons, considérées dans leur origine indienne, leurs anciens monuments, et leur état présent. Paris-Genéve, 1839. — 19

Page Break me40.705
Page me40.705
Fallmerayer, J. [Review of the book:] Essai de Chronographie Byzantine pour servir á l'examen des Annales du Bas-Empire et particuliérement des Chronographes Slavons de 395 á 1057. Par M. Edouard de Muralt. St.-Pétersbourg, 1855. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 11, 12 (Beilage), 11., 12. Januar 1856. — 3
Page me40.705
Franklin, B. A Modest Inquiry into the Nature and Necessity of a Paper Currency. In: The Works of Benjamin Franklin; Containing Several Political and Historical Tracts not Included in Any Former Edition, and Many Letters Official and Private not Hitherto Published; with Notes and a Life of the Author. By Jared Sparks. Vol. II. Boston, 1836. — 377
Page me40.705
[Frédérique Sophie Wilhelmine.] Mémoires de Frédérique Sophie Wilhelmine, Margrave de Bareith, soeur de Frédéric le Grand, depuis l'année 1706 jusqu'á 1742, écrits de sa main. Paris, 1811. — 10-11
Page me40.705
Freiligrath, F. An Joseph Weydemeyer. — 458
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 319 (Beilage), 15. November 1859. — 533, 534, 543, 545
— Erklärungen [To the Editors of the 'Allgemeine Zeitung']. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 345 (Beilage), 11. Dezember 1859. — 554 — Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis. 20. November 1858. In: Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 24, 11. Dezember 1858. — 359, 375, 382, 385, 388, 458, 513
— Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in Amerika. — 512, 517
— Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London. — 512, 513, 517, 532-35, 537, 556, 574

— Sämmtliche Werke. Vollständige Original-Ausgabe. 6 Bände. New-York, 1858-1859. — 359, 458
— Sämmtliche Werke. Vollständige Original-Ausgabe. Sechster Band. New-York, 1859. — 458
Page me40.705
Frisch, J.L. Origo Characteris Sclavonici, Vulgo dicti Cirulici Paucis generatim monstrata Ortus vero & progressus Characteris, Vulgo dicti Glagolitici, pluribus figillatim descriptus. Berolini, 1727. — 16
— Historiam Linguae Sclavonicae continuat Quatuor capitibus I. De origine Characteris Cyrillici speciatim. II. De cultura Linguae Sclavonicae, beneficio hujus Characteris. III. De Typis novis Sclavonico-Moscoviticis. IV. De Dialecto Russica, tanquam filia Linguae Sclavonicae. Berolini, 1727. — 16
— Historiae linguae Sclavonicae continuatio secunda continens historiam dialecti Venedicae Meridionalis, siue Vinidorum in pronunciis Austriae vicinis, nimirum in Carinthia, Stiria, Carniolia, Istria et Marchia Vinidorum. Berolini, 1729. — 16
— Historiae Linguae Sclavonicae Continuatio Tertia, de Dialectis Venedorum in Lusatia et in Ducatu Luneburgico. Berolini, 1730. — 16
— Historiae linguae Sclavonicae continuatio quarta seu caput quintum de dialecti Bohemica. Berolini, 1734. — 16
— Historiam Linguae Sclavonicae Continuatione Quinta Sive Capita Sexto, de Lingua Polonica. Berolini, 1736. — 16
Page me40.705
Fröbel, J. Aus America. Erfahrungen, Reisen und Studien. Bände 1-2. Leipzig, 1857-1858. — 325
Page me40.705
Frost, J. [Speech at the Meeting of 18 March 1856, New York.] In: The People's Paper, No. 208, April 26, 1856: 'Report of the Meeting of British Residents, Held at the Astor House, Broadway, on Tuesday Evening, March 18th, 1856, to

Page Break me40.706
Congratulate Mr. John Frost, on his Presence in the United States and to Memoralise his Free Return to England'. — 42
— Mr. John Frost to the Secretary of the Chartists of Nottingham. In: The People's Paper, No. 289, November 14, 1857. — 210
Page me40.706
Fürst Wladimir und dessen Tafelrunde. Alt-Russische Heldenlieder. Leipzig, 1819. — 20, 26
Page me40.706
Garibaldi, G. Garibaldi's Proclamation to the Lombards. In: The Times, No. 23319, May 30, 1859. — 455
Page me40.706
Gatterer, J. Ch. Einleitung in die synchronistische Universalhistorie zur Erläuterung seiner synchronistischen Tabellen. Göttingen, 1771. — 17
Page me40.706

Gebhardi, L.A. Fortsetzung der Algemeinen Welthistorie durch eine Gesellschaft von Gelehrten in Teutschland und Engeland ausgefertiget. Ein und fünfzigster Theil. Halle, 1789. — 17
Page me40.706
Gercken, Ph. W. Versuch in der ältesten Geschichte der Slaven, besonders in Teutschland. Aus den besten gleichzeitigen Schriftstellern verfasset. Leipzig, 1771. — 17
Page me40.706
Gibson, Th. M. [Speech in the House of Commons on 24 March 1859.] In: The Times, No. 23263, March 25, 1859. — 411
Page me40.706
Gladstone, W.E. Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age. In Three Volumes. Oxford, 1858. — 339
Page me40.706
Goethe, J.W. von. Ein Fastnachtsspiel auch wohl zu tragieren Ostern, vom Pater Brey, dem falschen Propheten. — 541
— Faust. Der Tragödie zweiter Teil. — 91
— Götz von Berlichingen mit der eisernen Hand. Ein Schauspiel. — 419, 420.
— Hermann und Dorothea. — 366
Page me40.706
Gray, J. Lectures on the Nature and Use of Money. Delivered before the Members of the 'Edinburgh Philosophical Institution' during the Months of February and March, 1848. Edinburgh, 1848. — 301
— The Social System: a Treatise on the Principle of Exchange. Edinburgh, 1831. — 301
Page me40.706
Griesheim, G. von. Vorlesungen über die Taktik Berlin, 1855. — 170, 264
Page me40.706
Grimm, J. Deutsche Grammatik, Theile I-IV. Göttingen, 1822-1837. — 516
— Geschichte der deutschen Sprache. Bd. I-II. Leipzig, 1853. — 120, 516, 523
Page me40.706
[Gyllenborg, C.] The Northern Crisis. Or, Impartial Reflections on the Policies of the Czar. Occasioned by Mynheer Von Stocken's Reasons for delaying the Descent upon Schonen. A True Copy of which is prefix'd, verbally Translated, after the Tenour of that in the German Secretary's Office in Copenhagen, October 10, 1716. 2nd ed. London, 1716. — 9
Page me40.706
Hacquet, B. Abbildung und Beschreibung der südwest- und östlichen Wenden, Illyrer und Slaven deren geographische Ausbreitung von dem adriatischen Meere bis an den Ponto, deren Sitten, Gebräuche, Handthierung, Gewerbe, Religion u.s.w. nach einer zehnjährigen Reise und vierzigjährigem Aufenthalte in jenen Gegenden dargestellt. 5 Hefte. Leipzig, 1801-1805. — 16
— Beobachtungen auf einer Reise nach Semlin. In den Abhandlungen einer Privatgesellschaft in Böhmen. 2 Bd. Prag, 1775. — 15

Page Break me40.707
Page me40.707

Hamilton, C. [Speech in the House of Commons on 29 February 1856.] In: The Times, No. 22304, March 1, 1856. — 21
Page me40.707
Hansemann, D.J.L. [Speech at a Sitting of the First United Landtag on 8 June 1847.] In: Preußens Erster Reichstag. Berlin, 1847. Th. 7. — 114
Page me40.707
Haxthausen, A. von. Studien über die innern Zustände, das Volksleben und insbesondere die ländlichen Einrichtungen Russlands. Th. 1-3. Hannover-Berlin, 1847-1852. — 346
Page me40.707
Heffter, M.W. Das Slawenthum. In: Unterhaltende Belehrungen zur Förderung allgemeiner Bildung. Zehntes Bändchen. Leipzig, 1852. — 18
— Der Weltkampf der Deutschen und Slaven seit dem Ende des fünften Jahrhunderts nach christlicher Zeitrechnung, nach seinem Ursprunge, Verlaufe und nach seinen Folgen dargestellt. Hamburg und Gotha, 1847. — 17, 19
Page me40.707
Hegel, G.W.F. Vorlesungen über die Geschichte der Philosophie. — 260
— Vorlesungen über die Naturphilosophie als der Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse. — 326
— Die Wissenschaft der Logik. — 249, 259
Page me40.707
Heine, H. Atta Troll. Ein Sommernachtstraum. — 557
— Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen. — 42
— 'Die Jahre kommen und gehen...' In: Buch der Lieder. Die Heimkehr. — 55
— Kobes I. — 32
— Den König Wiswamitra... In: Buch der Lieder. Die Heimkehr. — 14
— Ludwig Börne. — 32
— Testament. — 45
— Ein Weib. In: Romanzen. — 69
— Zwei Ritter. In: Romanzero — 264
Page me40.707
Herbert, S. [Speech before the constituents of South Wilts on 19 March 1857.] In: The Times, No. 22633, March 20, 1857. — 119
Page me40.707
Herder, J.G. Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit. Theil 4, Carlsruhe, 1792. — 15
Page me40.707
Herrmann, E. Beiträge zur Geschichte des russischen Reiches. Leipzig, 1843. — 3
Page me40.707
Herwegh, G. [On the occasion of the Federal Marksmen's Festival in Zurich.] In: Das Volk, Nr. 12, 23. Juli 1859 ('Feuilleton'). — 475, 477
Page me40.707
Heß, M. Naturwissenschaft und Gesellschaftslehre. Briefe aus Paris, 5. In: Das Jahrhundert, Nr. 1, 1857. — 106
Page me40.707
Hoadley, B. An Inquiry into the Reasons of the Conduct of Great-Britain, with Relation to the Present State of Affairs in Europe. London, 1727. — 9

Page me40.707
[Holleben, H. von] Militairische Betrachtungen aus den Erfahrungen eines preußischen Offiziers. Berlin, 1838. — 189
Page me40.707
Homer. Iliad. — 512
Page me40.707
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Carminum, III. — 9, 271, 546, 549
— Epistularum, I. — 541
— Epodos, II. — 353
— Satirarum, II, III. — 453
Page me40.707
Hugo, V. Napoléon le petit. Londres, 1852. — 266

Page Break me40.708
Page me40.708
Humboldt, A. A Private Letter to Mr. Julius Froebel. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5335, May 27, 1858. — 325
Page me40.708
James, W. The Naval History of Great Britain, from the Declaration of War by France in 1793, to the Accession of George IV. A new edition, with additions and notes, and an account of the Burmese war and the battle of Navarino, by Captain Chamier, R.N. In six volumes. London, 1837. — 84
Page me40.708
[Jomini, A.H.] Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, racontée par lui-même, au tribunal de Cézar, d'Alexandre et de Frédéric. Tomes 1-4. Paris, 1827. — 163, 165-67, 174-77, 289, 293
Page me40.708
Jordan, J. Ch. de. De originibus Slavicis, Opus Chronologico-Geographico-Historicum; Ab antiquitate literis nota, In Seculum usque Christianum decimum: Ex fontibus ipsis antiquis Scriptorum tum Romanorum tum Graecorum, Et ex historiis Variarum aliarum Gentium, Ad res Slavicas illustrandas facientium, deductum. Tomus 2. Vindobonae, 1745. — 16
Page me40.708
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis). Satirarum. — 391, 469
Page me40.708
Kant, I. Critik der Urtheilskraft. Berlin und Libau, 1790. — 392
Page me40.708
Kapper, S. Die Gesänge der Serben. Theile 1-2. Leipzig, 1852. — 20
— Slavische Melodien. Leipzig, 1844. — 20
Page me40.708
[Kapper, S.] Die serbische Bewegung in Südungarn. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der ungarischen Revolution. Berlin, 1851. — 20
— Südslavische Wanderungen im Sommer 1850. Bände 1-2. Leipzig, 1851. — 20
— A Visit to Belgrade. London, 1854. — 20
Page me40.708
Kinkel, G. An unsere Leser. In: Hermann, Nr. 26, 2. Juli 1859. — 468

Page me40.708
Kossuth, L. [Letter to J. M' Adam in Glasgow. London, 26 September 1859.] In: The Times, No. 23428, October 4, 1859 ('Kossuth and the Hungarians'). — 505
— L'Europe, l'Autriche et la Hongrie. Bruxelles, 1859. — 382
Page me40.708
Königinhofer Handschrift (Kralodworsky Rukopis). Sammlung altböhmischer lyrischepischer Gesänge, nebst andern altböhmischen Gedichten. Aufgefunden und herausgegeben von W. Hanka. Verteutscht und mit einer historisch-kritischen Einleitung versehen von W.A. Swoboda. Prag, 1829. — 19, 26
Page me40.708
La Guéronniére, A. de. L'Empereur Napoléon III et l'Italie. Paris, 1859. — 384
Page me40.708
Lallerstedt, G. La Scandinavie, ses craintes et ses espérances. Paris, 1856. — 91
Page me40.708
La Marmora, A.F. [Speech of 17 April 1858 in the Chamber of Representatives of the Kingdom of Piedmont.] In: The Times, No. 22974, April 22, 1858. 'Sardinia'. (From Our Own Correspondent.) Turin, April 18. — 309
Page me40.708
Landor, W.S. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 22943, March 17, 1858. — 290
Page me40.708
Lassalle, F. Franz von Sickingen. Eine historische Tragödie. Berlin, 1859. — 129, 384, 394, 402, 404, 412, 419-21, 441-46, 449, 460, 461, 477
— Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. Berlin, 1864. — 261, 355, 396, 542
— Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos. Nach einer neuen Sammlung seiner Bruchstücke und der Zeugnisse der Alten dargestellt. Bände I-II. Berlin,

Page Break me40.709
1858. — 128, 129, 226, 227, 239, 255-57, 259, 260, 262, 268, 316, 318, 394-96, 402, 455, 570
Page me40.709
[Lassalle, F.] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie. Berlin, 1859. — 435, 449, 450, 458, 460, 461, 465, 538
Page me40.709
Lelevel, J. Considérations sur l'état politique de l'ancienne Pologne et sur l'histoire de son peuple. In: Histoire de Pologne. Tome II, partie II. Paris, Lille, 1844. — 85, 105
— Histoire de Pologne. Tomes I-II. Paris, Lille, 1844. — 85, 105, 106
— L'Histoire de la Pologne racontée par un oncle á ses neveux. In: Histoire de Pologne. Tome I, partie I. Paris, Lille, 1844. — 85, 105, 106
Page me40.709
Leo, [H.] (Leo über Thomas Münzer). Berlin, 25. Februar. In: Neue Preußische Zeitung, Nr. 51, 29. Februar 1856 ('Kirche, Schule und Innere Mission'). — 21
Page me40.709
[Liebknecht, W.] London, 20. Mai. In: Das Volk, Nr. 3, 21. Mai 1859 ('Politische Rundschau'). — 451

— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 327 (Beilage), 23. November 1859. — 549
Page me40.709
Lied vom Heerzuge Igors. Herausgegeben von A. Boltz. Berlin, 1854. — 15, 19, 31, 37
Page me40.709
Livy (Titus Livius). Ab urbe condita libri. — 294
Page me40.709
Loyd, S.J. [Speech in the House of Lords on 3 December 1857.] In: The Times, No. 22855, December 4, 1857. — 215
Page me40.709
Lucanus, Marcus Annaeus. Pharsalia I. — 446
Page me40.709
Luther, M. Von Kauffshandlung und Wucher. Vuittemberg, 1524. — 409
Page me40.709
M'Adam, J. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 23431, October 7, 1859. — 506
Page me40.709
Machiavelli, N. Le Istorie Fiorentine. In: Tutte le opere di Niccoló Machiavelli, cittadino e segretario fiorentino divise in 2 tomi. T. 1. Londra, 1747. — 187
Page me40.709
Maciejowski, W.A. Essai historique sur l'église chrétienne primitive des deux rites, chez les slaves. Leipsic, 1840. — 85
Page me40.709
[Mackenzie, G.] Truth is but truth, as it is timed, or Our ministry's present measures against the moscovites vindicated by plain and obvious reasons, tending to prove, that it is no less the interest of our British trade, than that of our state, that the Czar be not suffered to retain a fleet, if needs must that he should [have] a sea port in the Baltick, the whole extracted from a representation made by His Majesty's orders, and given in to the Secretary of State by N.N. on his return hither from the Court of Moscovy, in August 1715. Humbly dedicated to the House of Commons. London, 1719. — 8, 9
Page me40.709
Maclaren, J. A Sketch of the History of the Currency: Comprising a Brief Review of the Opinions of the Most Eminent Writers on the Subject. London, 1858. — 317
Page me40.709
Malmesbury, J.H.H. [Speech in the House of Lords on 18 April 1859.] In: The Times, No. 23284, April 19, 1859. — 427
Page me40.709
Mayhew, H. Symptoms of being a Confirmed Old Bachelor. In: The Illustrated London News, No. 836 (supplement), December 20, 1856. — 91
Page me40.709
Mazzini, G. La Guerra. In: Pensiero ed Azione, No. 17, 2-16 maggio, 1859. — 452, 455
— [Manifesto]. In: Pensiero ed Azione, 14 settembre, 1858. — 346
— To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 23381, August 10, 1859 ('The European Coup d'Etat'). — 481

Page Break me40.710
Page me40.710

Meißner, A. Heinrich Heine. Erinnerungen. Hamburg, 1856. — 69
Page me40.710
[Meyen, E.] Oesterreich und Deutschland. In: Der Freischütz, Nr. 55, 56, 7., 10. Mai 1859. — 436
— Der Process Carl Vogt's gegen die Augsburger 'Allg. Ztg'. In: Der Freischütz, Nr. 132, 3. November 1859 ('Aus der Tagesgeschichte'). — 522-24
Page me40.710
Mieroslawski, L. De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen. Paris, 1856. — 75, 80, 85, 91, 105, 106
Page me40.710
Miklosich, Fr. Vergleichende Grammatik der slavischen Sprachen. Bd. I: Vergleichende Lautlehre der slavischen Sprachen. Wien, 1852; Bd. III; Vergleichende Formenlehre der slavischen Sprachen. Wien, 1856. — 499
Page me40.710
Moliére, J.B. Le Médicin malgré lui. — 500
Page me40.710
Mommsen, Th. Römische Geschichte, Bd. 1-3. Leipzig-Berlin, 1854-1856. — 127
Page me40.710
Müffling [F.K.F. von]. Passages from My Life; together with Memoirs of the Campaign of 1813 and 1814. Edited with Notes by Colonel Philip Yorke, F.R.S. Second edition, revised. London, 1853. — 172, 179, 198
Page me40.710
Münnich, B. Ch. Tagebuch des russisch-kaiserlichen Generalfeldmarschalls B. Ch. Grafen von Münnich über den Ersten Feldzug des in den Jahren 1735-1739 geführten Russisch-türkischen Krieges. In: Hermann, E. Beiträge zur Geschichte des russischen Reiches. Leipzig, 1843. — 3
Page me40.710
Muralt, E. de. Essai de Chronographie Byzantine pour servir á l'examen des Annales du Bas-Empire et particuliérement des Chronographes Slavons de 395 á 1057. St.-Pétersbourg, 1855. — 3
Page me40.710
Napier, W.F.P. History of the War in the Peninsula and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to the Year 1814. The first edition in six volumes appeared in London in 1828-40. — 285
Page me40.710
The New American Cyclopaedia: A Popular Dictionary of General Knowledge. Edited by George Ripley and Charles A. Dana. Volumes I-XVI. New York and London, 1858-63. — 122, 123, 134, 136-37, 140, 142, 144, 146, 150, 159, 181, 194, 213, 339, 460
Page me40.710
Nicolai, Ch. Fr. Das Leben und die Meinungen des Herrn Magister Sebaldus Nothanker. — 13
Page me40.710
Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso). Tristia. — 56
Page me40.710
Palmerston, H.J. [Speech before the electors of Tiverton.] In: The Times, No. 22641, March 30, 1857. — 113

Page me40.710
[Speeches in the House of Commons]
— 17 March 1857. In: The Times, No. 22631, March 18, 1857. — 107
— 27 March 1857. In: The Times, No. 22641, March 30, 1857. — 113
— 18 April 1859. In: The Times, No. 23284, April 19, 1859. — 426
Page me40.710
Palmerston for Premier! The Claims of Lord Palmerston to Fill the Post of Prime Minister of England Considered. London, 1854. — 111, 115
Page me40.710
Parish, H.H. The Diplomatic History of the Monarchy of Greece, from the Year 1830,

Page Break me40.711
Showing the Transfer to Russia of the Mortgage Held by British Capitalists over its Property and Revenues. London, 1838. — 120
Page me40.711
Patkul, J.R. von. Berichte an das Zaarische Cabinet in Moscau, von seinem Gesandtschafts-Posten bey August II. Könige von Polen; nebst Erklärung der chiffrirten Briefe, erläuternden Anmerkungen, Nachrichten von seinem Leben und andern hieher gehörigen Betrachtungen. Th. I-III. Berlin, 1792-97. — 470
Page me40.711
Peele, G. The Turkish Mahomet and Hyrin in the Fair Greek. — 46
Page me40.711
[Peter der Große.] Tagebuch Peters des Großen vom Jahre 1698 bis zum Schlusse des Neustädter Friedens aus dem Russischem Originale übersetzet so nach denen im Archive befindlichen und von Seiner Kayserlichen Majestät eigenhändigen ergänzten Handschriften gedruckt worden. Berlin und Leipzig, 1773. — 9
Page me40.711
P[etersen, N.] Feierstunden-Arbeit eines Arbeiters. In: Das Volk, Nr. 8-10, 12, 16, 25. Juni, 2., 9., 23. Juli, 20. August 1859 ('Arbeiterstimmen'). — 476
Page me40.711
[Petty, W.] A Treatise of Taxes and Contributions. London, 1667. — 298
Page me40.711
P[ieper], W. The Coup d'Etat in Spain. In: The People's Paper, No. 221, July 26, 1856. — 65
Page me40.711
Pitt, L.K. Ueber den russischen Handel (Coxe papers. Manuscript). — 17
Page me40.711
Priére d'Adalbert. In: Eichhoff, F.G. Histoire de la langue et de la littérature des slaves, russes, serbes, bohémes, polonais et lettons, considérées dans leur origine indienne, leurs anciens monuments, et leur état présent. Paris-Genéve, 1839. — 19
Page me40.711
Proudhon, P.J. Handbuch des Börsen-Speculanten. Hannover, 1857. — 90
— Manuel du spéculateur á la bourse. Paris, 1857. — 90, 106
— Systéme des contradictions économiques, ou Philosophie de la misére. Tomes I-II, Paris, 1846. — 90
Page me40.711

Prutz, R.E. Literaturgeschichte. In: Deutsches Museum, Nr. 24, 10. Juni 1858 ('Literatur und Kunst'). — 356
Page me40.711
[Pulszky F.] From Our Own Correspondent. London, April 23, 1858. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5319, May 8, 1858 ('The State of Europe'). — 318, 324
— From Our Own Correspondent. Monday, August 7, 1859. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5720, August 23, 1859 ('The State of Europe'). — 493, 505, 507
— From Our Own Correspondent. London, Tuesday, Oct. 11, 1859. In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5775, October 26, 1859 ('The State of Europe'). — 523
Page me40.711
Pyat, F. Lettre au jury. Défense de la lettre au Parlement et á la Presse. Londres, 1858. — 339, 345
Page me40.711
Pyat, F., Besson, A., Talandier, A. Letter to the Parliament and the Press. With a Preface by the Publisher. London, 1858. — 277, 278
Page me40.711
Pyat, F., Rougée, Jourdain, G. Lettre á la Reine d'Angleterre. In: L'Homme, No. 45, 10 october 1855. — 37
Page me40.711
Quételet, A. Sur l'homme et le développement de ses facultés, ou Essai de physique sociale. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1835. — 286
— A Treatise on Man and the Development of his Faculties. Edinburgh, 1842. — 286
Page me40.711
Quintilian (Marcus Fabius Quintilianus). De institutione oratoria. — 218
Page me40.711
Radowitz, J.M. [Speech in the Frankfurt National Assembly on August 12, 1848.] In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 76, 15. August 1848. — 398

Page Break me40.712
Page me40.712
Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft in alphabetischer Ordnung. Herausgegeben von August Pauly. Bd. 1-6. Stuttgart, 1838-52. — 147, 187
Page me40.712
Ricardo, D. On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation. Third edition. London, 1821. — 284, 298
Page me40.712
Robert, C. Le monde slave. Son passé, son état présent et son avenir. Tomes 1-2. Paris, 1852. — 18
— Les slaves de Turquie. Édition de 1844 précédée d'une introduction nouvelle sur leur situation pendant et depuis leurs insurrections de 1849 á 1851. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1852. — 18, 20
Page me40.712
Röth, E. Geschichte unserer abendländischen Philosophie. Entwicklungsgeschichte unserer spekulativen, sowohl philosophischen als religiösen Ideen von ihren ersten Anfängen bis auf die Gegenwart. Bd. 1: Die ägyptische und die zoroastrische

Glaubenslehre als die ältesten Quellen unserer spekulativen Ideen. Mannheim, 1846. — 79
Page me40.712
Ruge, A. Der Geist unserer Zeit; zum Neujahrsgruß. In: Das Jahrhundert, Nr. 1, 1857. — 106
— Idealismus und Realismus im Reich des Ideals. Als Vorläufer zu Schiller's hundertjährigem Geburtstage. In: Deutsches Museum, Nr. 14, 15, 19, 1., 8. April, 6. Mai 1858. — 356
— Jagden und Tiergeschichte für Kinder. London, 1856. — 79
— Nach dem Kriege, vor der Entscheidung. IV. In: Das Jahrhundert, Nr. 1, 1857. — 106 — Die neue Welt. Ein Trauerspiel in fünf Aufzügen. Mit einem Vorspiel: Goethe's Ankunft in Walhalla. Leipzig, 1856. — 46
Page me40.712
Russell, J. [Speech before the Electors of the City of London on 27 March 1857.] In: The Times, No. 22640, March 28, 1857. — 119
Page me40.712
[Russell, W.H.] The Capture of Lucknow. In: The Times, No. 22972, April 20, 1858. — 308
Page me40.712
Rüstow, W. Geschichte der Infanterie. Bd. I-II. Gotha, 1857-58. — 479 — Heerwesen und Kriegführung C. Julius Cäsars. Gotha, 1855. — 128, 141, 147, 241
Page me40.712
Sandwith, H. A Narrative of the Siege of Kars and of the Six Months' Resistance by the Turkish Garrison under General Williams to the Russian Army: together with a Narrative of Travels and Adventures in Armenia and Lazistan; with Remarks on the Present State of Turkey. London, 1856. — 22, 27, 34
Page me40.712
Schaffarik, P.J. Geschichte der slawischen Sprache und Literatur nach allen Mundarten. Ofen, 1826. — 16, 19
Page me40.712
Schiller, J. Chr. Fr. von. Dithyrambe. — 512
— Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer. — 14
— Die Kraniche des Ibykus. Ballade. — 530
— Die unüberwindliche Flotte. Nach einem älteren Dichter. — 531
— Wallenstein. Die Piccolomini — 498
— Wallenstein. Erster Teil. Wallensteins Lager. — 531
Page me40.712
Schleiden, M.J. Die Pflanze und ihr Leben. Populäre Vorträge. Leipzig, 1848. — 314

Page Break me40.713
Page me40.713
Schlosser, Fr. Chr. Zur Beurtheilung Napoleon's und seiner neuesten Tadler und Lobredner, besonders in Beziehung auf die Zeit von 1800-1813. Frankfurt am Main, 1835. — 170
Page me40.713

Schlözer, A.L. Allgemeine Nordische Geschichte. Aus den neuesten und besten Nordischen Schriftstellern und nach eigenen Untersuchungen beschrieben, und als eine Geographische und Historische Einleitung zur richtigern Kenntniß aller Skandinavischen, Finnischen, Slavischen, Lettischen, und Sibirischen Völker, besonders in alten und mittleren Zeiten. In: Fortsezung der Algemeinen Welthistorie durch eine Geselschaft von Gelehrten in Teutschland und Engeland ausgefertiget. Ein und dreyßigster Theil. Verfasset von August Ludwig Schlözer. Halle, 1771. — 16
— Nestor. Russische Annalen in ihrer Slavonischen Grundsprache verglichen. übersetzt, und erklärt. Theile 1-5. Göttingen, 1802-09. — 16
— [Vorschlag zu einer allgemeinen vergleichenden slawischen Sprachlehre und Wörterbuch]. In: Allgemeine Nordische Geschichte. Halle, 1771. — 16
— Vorschlag das Russische vollkommen richtig und genau mit Lateinischer Schrift auszudrücken. In: Schlözer, A.L. Necmop&sign;. Russische Annalen in ihrer Slavonischen Grundsprache verglichen, übersetzt, und erklärt. Zweiter Teil. Göttingen, 1802. — 16
Page me40.713
[Schnurrer, Ch. F.] Slavischer Bücherdruck in Würtemberg im 16 Jahrhundert. Ein litterarischer Bericht. Tübingen, 1799. — 16
Page me40.713
Schönaich, Ch. O. von. Hermann, oder das befreyte Deutschland, ein Heldengedicht. Mit einer Vorrede ans Licht gestellet von Joh. Chr. Gottscheden. Leipzig, 1751. — 375
Page me40.713
[Schramm, R.] [Correspondence]. Ostende, 31 August. In: Hermann, Nr. 36, 10. September 1859 ('Vermischte Nachrichten'). — 502
Page me40.713
[Seiler, F.S.] Caspar Hauser, der Thronerbe Badens. Paris, 1847. — 13, 22
Page me40.713
Senior, N.W. Letters on the Factory Act, as it affects the Cotton Manufacture, addressed to the Right Honourable the President of the Board of Trade, to which are appended, a Letter to Mr. Senior from Leonard Horner, Esq., and Minutes of a Conversation between Mr. Edmund Ashworth, Mr. Thomson and Mr. Senior. London, 1837. — 283
Page me40.713
Serbische Hochzeitslieder, herausgegeben von Dr. Wolf Stephansohn Karadgich. Metrisch in's Deutsche übersetzt und von einer Einleitung begleitet von E. Eugen Wesely. Pest, 1826. — 20
Page me40.713
Shaftesbury, A.A.C. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 23201, March 12, 1859 ('The Neapolitan Exiles'). — 455
Page me40.713
Shakespeare, W. Hamlet, Prince of Denmark. — 55
— King Henry IV. — 46, 127, 444
— King Henry V. — 127
— The Merry Wives of Windsor. — 127, 444
— Much Ado about Nothing. — 33
— Othello, the Moor of Venice. — 55
— Plays of W. Shakespeare. With Notes of Samuel Johnson. — 46

— The Tempest. — 81
Page me40.713
Siborne, W. History of the War in France and Belgium, in 1815. Containing Minute Details of the Battles of Quatre-Bras, Ligny, Wavre, and Waterloo. Third and revised edition. With remarks upon the Rev. G.R. Gleig's 'Story of Waterloo'. London, 1848. — 289

Page Break me40.714
Page me40.714
Siebel, C. Sprüche von Carl Siebel. Für den Hermann. In: Hermann, Nr. 33, 20. August 1859 ('Literatur'). — 485, 500
Page me40.714
Simon, L. Aus dem Exil. Bände 1-2. Gießen, 1855. — 63
Page me40.714
[Simon, L., Kolatschek, A., Meyen, E.] Briefe aus Paris, der Schweiz und London. In: Das Jahrhundert, Nr. 1, 1857. — 106
Page me40.714
Sire de Franc Boissy (a French song). — 6
Page me40.714
Slawismus und Pseudomagyarismus. Vom aller Menschen Freunde, nur der Pseudomagyaren Feinde. Leipzig, 1842. — 20
Page me40.714
Smith, A. An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. The first edition in two volumes appeared in London in 1776. — 284
Page me40.714
Sophocles. Antigone. — 257
— Oedipus Tyrannus. — 397
Page me40.714
Steuart, J. An Inquiry into the Principals of Political Oeconomy: being an Essay on the Science of Domestic Policy in Free Nations. Vol. 1-3. Dublin, 1770. — 301
Page me40.714
Stimmen des russischen Volks in Liedern. Gesammelt und übersetzt von P. von Goetze. Stuttgart, 1828. — 20
Page me40.714
Stocqueler, J.H. The Military Encyclopaedia. A Technical, Biographical, and Historical Dictionary, Referring Exclusively to the Military Sciences, the Memoirs of Distinguished Soldiers, and the Narratives of Remarkable Battles. London, 1853. — 135
Page me40.714
Stritter, J.G. Geschichte der Slaven vom J. 495-1222, aus den Byzantinern vollständig beschreiben. In: Fortsezung der Algemeinen Welthistorie durch eine Geselschaft von Gelehrten in Teutschland und Engeland ausgefertiget. Ein und dreyßigster Theil. Verfasset von August Ludwig Schlözer. Halle, 1771. — 16
— Memoriae Populorum, Olim ad Danubium, Pontum Euxinum, Paludem Maeotidem, Caucasum, Mare Caspium, et Inde Magis ad Septemtriones Incolentium, e Scriptoribus Historiae Byzantinae. Tomus II. Petropoli, 1774. — 17
Page me40.714

[Struve, G.] Bildung macht frei! (Aus der Newyorker Socialen Republik). In: Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 22, 27. November 1858. — 359
Page me40.714
[Stur, L.] Die Beschwerden und Klagen der Slaven in Ungarn über die gesetzwidrigen Uebergriffe der Magyaren Vorgetragen von einem ungarischen Slaven. Leipzig, 1843. — 20
Page me40.714
Talvj (Jakob-Robinson, Th. A.L. von). Volkslieder der Serben. Metrisch übersetzt und historisch eingeleitet. Theile 1-2. Leipzig, 1853. — 20, 26
Page me40.714
Tassilier. Letter of Citizen Tassilier. To the Minister of Marine. In: The People's Paper, No. 206, April 12, 1856. — 31, 37
Page me40.714
Taube, F.W. von. Historische und geographische Beschreibung des Königreiches Slavonien und des Herzogthums Syrmien, sowohl nach ihrer natürlichen Beschaffenheit, als auch nach ihrer ißigen Verfassung und neuen Einrichtung in kirchlichen, bürgerlichen und militärischen Dingen. I. Buch, Leipzig, 1777. — 15
Page me40.714
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer). Andria. — 310, 410
Page me40.714
Terentianus Maurus. De litteris, syllabis et metris (Carmen heroicum). — 441
Page me40.714
Theyls, W. Mémoires pour servir á l'histoire de Charles XII, roi de Suéde. Leyde, 1722. — 470

Page Break me40.715
Page me40.715
Thiersch, Fr. De l'état actuel de la Gréce et des moyens d'arriver á sa restauration. En deux volumes. Leipzig, 1833-34. — 120
Page me40.715
Tooke, Th., Newmarch, W. A History of Prices, and of the State of the Circulation, during the Nine Years 1848-1856. In two volumes; forming the fifth and sixth volumes of The History of Prices from 1792 to the Present Time, London, 1857. — 102, 126
Page me40.715
Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature. A Classed List of Books Published in the United States of America during the Last Forty Years. With Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index. London, 1859. — 399
Page me40.715
Türr, I. To the Editor of the 'Presse d'Orient'. In: The Free Press, No. 18, June 30, 1858. — 324, 326
Page me40.715
Tucker, E. Political Fly-Sheets, Nos. I-XII. London, 1853-54, 1855. — 110, 111
Page me40.715
Unterhaltende Belehrungen zur Förderung allgemeiner Bildung. 1-27 Bändchen. Leipzig, 1851-56. — 17
Page me40.715

[Urquhart, D.] Diplomatic Transactions in Central Asia, from 1834 to 1839. London, 1841. — 120
Page me40.715
Urquhart, D. Familiar Words as Affecting England and the English London, 1855. — 301
Page me40.715
Various Papers on the Genius and Character of the Russians (geschriben zu Zeit d. Catherina), 1768. (Coxe papers, Vol. 178.) — 17
Page me40.715
Virgil (Publius Virgilius Maro). Aeneid. — 9, 315, 399
Page me40.715
Vischer, Fr. Th. Aesthetik oder Wissenschaft des Schönen. Zum Gebrauche für Vorlesungen. Bd. 1-4. (Theile 1-3.) Reutlingen und Leipzig, Stuttgart, 1846-57. — 270
Page me40.715
Vogt, K. [Speech in the Frankfurt National Assembly on 26 May 1849.] In: Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. 9. Frankfurt am Main, 1849. — 525
— Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas. Genf und Bern, 1859. — 436
Page me40.715
[Vogt, K.] Zur Warnung. Bern, den 23. Mai. In: Schweizer Handels-Courier, Nr. 150 (Ausserordentliche Beilage), 2. Juni 1859. — 458, 525, 546, 550
Page me40.715
Voigt, J. Geschichte Preussens, von den ältesten Zeiten bis zum Untergange der Herrschaft des deutschen Ordens. Bände 1-5. Königsberg, 1827. — 16
Page me40.715
Wachsmuth, W. Hellenische Alterthumskunde aus dem Gesichtspunkte des Staats. The first edition in 2 parts appeared in Halle in 1826-1830. — 259
Page me40.715
Walewski, A. [Speech at a Plenary Session of the Paris Peace Congress on 8 April 1856.] In: The Times, No. 22352, April 26, 1856: 'Count Walewski upon the State of Europe'. — 42
Page me40.715
Weerth, G. Humoristische Skizzen aus dem deutschen Handelsleben. In: Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 318, 14. November 1847; Nr. 337, 3. Dezember 1847; No. 348,

Page Break me40.716
14. Dezember 1847; Nr. 33, 2 Februar 1848; Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 1-4, 16, 18, 28; 1-4., 16., 18., 28. Juni 1848; Nr. 31, 6. Juli 1848. — 103
Page me40.716
Westphalen, Chr. H. Ph. von. Geschichte der Feldzüge des Herzogs Ferdinand von Braunschweig-Lüneburg. Nachgelassenes Manuskript von Christian Heinrich Philipp Edler von Westphalen. Hrsg. von F.O.W.H. v. Westphalen. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1859. — 574
Page me40.716
Wette, W.M.L. de. Lehrbuch der hebräisch-jüdischen Archäologie nebst einem Grundrisse der hebräisch-jüdischen Geschichte. Zweite, verbesserte Auflage. Mit zwei lithographirten Tafeln. Leipzig, 1830. — 259
Page me40.716

Whiteside, J. [Speech in the House of Commons on 25 March 1859.] In: The Times, No. 23264, March 26, 1859. — 431
Page me40.716
Wilks, W. Palmerston in Three Epochs: a Comparison of Facts with Opinions. London, 1854. — 111, 115
Page me40.716
Wuk's Stephanowitsch kleine Serbische Grammatik verdeutscht und mit einer Vorrede von Jacob Grimm. Nebst Bemerkungen über die neueste Auffassung langer Heldenlieder aus dem Munde des Serbischen Volks, und der Uebersicht des merkwürdigsten jener Lieder von Johann Severin Vater. Leipzig und Berlin, 1824. — 26
Page me40.716
Wurm, Ch. Fr. Diplomatische Geschichte der Orientalischen Frage. Leipzig, 1858. — 432
Page me40.716
Záboj, Slawoj, Ludiek. In: Königinhofer Handschrift (Kralodworsky Rukopis). Prag, 1829. — 19
Page me40.716
&Ooblique;rsted, A.S. Af mit Livs og min Tids Historie. Vol. 1-4. Kjøbenhavn, 1851-57. — 132

DOCUMENTS

Page me40.716
Accounts Relating to Trade and Navigation for the Seven Months Ended July 31, 1858. In: The Economist, No. 783 (supplement), August 28, 1858. — 343
Page me40.716
An Act for the more effectually preventing Seditious Meetings and Assemblies; to continue in force until the End of the Session of Parliament next after Five Years from the passing of the Act. [24th December 1819.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; 60° Geo. III. & 1° Geo. IV. London, 1822. — 108
Page me40.716
An Act for the more effectual Prevention and Punishment of blasphemous and seditious Libels. [30th December 1819.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; 60° Geo. III. & 1° Geo. IV. London, 1822. — 108
Page me40.716
An Act to Amend the Laws Relating to the Importation of Corn, June 26, 1846. In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 9 & 10 Victoria, 1846. London, 1847. — 215
Page me40.716
An Act to authorize Justices of the Peace, in certain disturbed Countries, to seize and detain Arms collected or kept for purposes dangerous to the Public Peace; to continue in force until the Twenty fifth Day of March One thousand eight hundred and twenty two. [18th December 1819.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; 60° Geo. III. & 1° Geo. IV. London, 1822. — 108
Page me40.716

An Act to prevent Delay in the Administration of Justice in Cases of Misdemeanor. [23

Page Break me40.717
December 1819.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britian and Ireland; 60° Geo. III. & 1° Geo. IV. London, 1822. — 108
Page me40.717
An Act to prevent the Training of Persons to the Use of Arms, and to the Practice of Military Evolutions and Exercise. [11th December 1819.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; 60° Geo. III. & 1° Geo. IV. London, 1822. — 108
Page me40.717
An Act to Regulate the Issue of Bank Notes, and for Giving to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England Certain Privileges for a Limited Period. [19th July 1844.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 7 & 8 Victoria, 1844. London, 1844. — 202, 215, 224
Page me40.717
An Act to subject certain Publications to the Duties of Stamps upon Newspapers, and to make other Regulations for restraining the Abuses arising from the Publication of blasphemous and seditious Libels. [30th December 1819.] In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; 60° Geo. III. & 1° Geo. IV. London, 1822. — 108
Page me40.717
Bourse du Jeudi 29 octobre 1857. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 303, 30 octobre 1857. — 230
Page me40.717
Bourse de Jeudi 26 novembre 1857. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 331, 27 novembre 1857. — 230
Page me40.717
Bourse du Mardi 22 décembre 1857. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 357, 23 décembre 1857. — 230
Page me40.717
Buchanan, J. [The President's Message to the XXXVth Congress.] In: The Times, No. 23181, December 20, 1858; New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5500, December 7, 1858. — 363
Page me40.717
[Buol-Schauenstein, K.] Copie d'une lettre de M. le Comte Buol-Schauenstein á M. le Comte de Cavour en date de Vienne de 19 avril 1859. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 116 (Beilage), 26. April 1859. — 427
Page me40.717
Canning, Ch. J. Despatch of 17 June 1858 to the Hon. the Secret Committee of the Hon. the Court of Directors. In: The Times, No. 23117, October 6, 1858. — 343 — Despatch of 4 July 1858 to the Hon. the Court of Directors of the East India Company. In: The Times, No. 23117, October 6, 1858. — 343
Page me40.717
Code Napoléon. Paris und Leipzig, 1808. — 23, 124
Page me40.717
Copies and Extracts of several letters written by the King of Sweden and his Ministers, relating to the Negotiations of Baron Görtz etc. which letters were found in a ship driven, ashore in Norway by a storm, and published at Copenhagen by order of the King of Denmark. London, 1717. — 10

Page me40.717
Correspondence 1839-1841, Relative to the Affairs of the East, and the Conflict between Egypt and Turkey. 4 Parts. — 120
Page me40.717
Correspondence Respecting the Affairs of Italy. From January to June 30, 1848. Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. July 31, 1849. Part II. London, 1849. — 431
Page me40.717
The Defensive Treaty Concluded in the Year 1700, betwixt His Late Majesty King William of ever Glorious Memory, and His Present Swedish Majesty King Charles the XII. — 8
Page me40.717
Francis Joseph I. [Manifesto of 15 July 1859.] In: The Times, No. 23364, July 21, 1859 ('Austria'). — 473

Page Break me40.718
Page me40.718
Gortschakoff, A.M. Circularschreiben an die russischen Gesandtschaften vom 15(27) Mai 1859. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 167, 16. Juni 1859 ('Rußland und Polen'). — 537
Page me40.718
Letters which passed between Count Gyllenborg, the Barons Görtz, Sparre, and others; Relating to the Design of Raising a Rebellion in His Majesty's Dominions, to be Supported by a Force from Sweden. London, 1717. — 10
Page me40.718
Louis Philippe. Ordonances du roi [of 16 December 1847]. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 352, 18 décembre 1847 ('Partie officielle'). — 229 — [Speech before the Throne on 28 December 1847.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 363, 29 décembre 1847 ('Partie officielle'). — 229
Page me40.718
Memoir on Russia, for the Instruction of the Present Emperor. Drawn up by the Cabinet in 1837. In: The Free Press, No. 7, July 13, 1859. — 465, 468, 470, 476, 500
Page me40.718
Memoir on the State and Prospects of Germany. Drawn up under the Direction of a Minister at St. Petersburgh, and Confidently Communicated to Several of the German Governments. In: The Portfolio, Vol. I, London, 1836. — 468
Page me40.718
Napoleon III. Decret autorisant la fonction des operations des sociétés la Caisse paternelle et la Minerve. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 75, 15 mars 1856. — 133 — [Decree on grain reserves of 16 November 1858]. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 322, 18 novembre 1858. — 357, 381
— Discours de S.M. L'Impereur. Session législative de 1859. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 39. Edition extraordinaire, 7 février 1859. — 384

— [Speech at a reception for members of the State Council, the Senate and the Corps législatif in the Palace of Saint-Cloud on July 19, 1859.] In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 201, 20 juillet 1859. — 473 — [Speech before the diplomatic corps on 21 July 1859.]. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 203, 22 juillet 1859 ('Partie non officielle'). — 476
Page me40.718
Papers Relative to Military Affairs in Asiatic Turkey, and the Defence and Capitulation of Kars. Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. London, 1856. — 28, 31, 34, 37
Page me40.718
[Pozzo di Borgo, K.O.] Copy of a Despatch from Count Pozzo di Borgo, Addressed to Count Nesselrode. Dated Paris, 10th (22nd) December, 1826. In: The Portfolio, Vol. I, London, 1836. — 468
— Copy of a Very Secret Despatch from Count Pozzo di Borgo, dated Paris, the 28th November, 1828. In: The Portfolio, Vol. I, London, 1836. — 468
Page me40.718
Report from the Select Committee on Bank Acts; Together with the Proceedings of the Committee, Minutes of Evidence, Appendix and Index. Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be Printed, 30 July 1857. — 342
Page me40.718
Report from the Select Committee on the Bank Acts; Together with the Proceedings of the Committee, Minutes of Evidence and Index. Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be Printed, 1 July 1858. — 342
Page me40.718
Report from the Select Committee of the House of Commons, on the High Price of Gold Bullion. Ordered to be printed, 8 June 1810. — 377
Page me40.718
Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the Half Year ending 31st October 1858. Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. London, 1858. — 389

Page Break me40.719
Page me40.719
Russisches Memoir zur Belehrung des gegenwärtigen Kaisers. Verfast vom Cabinet im Jahre 1837. In: Das Volk, Nr. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16; 23., 30. Juli, 6., 13., 20. August 1859. — 476, 479
Page me40.719
Schleinitz, A. [Despatches to the Prussian embassies in Britain, Russia and Germany, Berlin, June-July 1859]. In: Neue Preußische Zeitung, Nr. 170, 24. Juli 'Zu der “Vermittlung”'; Nr. 171, 26. Juli 'Preußische Depeschen'; Nr. 174, 29. Juli 1859. 'Deutschland', and Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 210 (Beilage), 29. Juli 1859 ('Erlaß des Grafen Rockberg an Frhrn. v. Koller'); Nr. 211, 212 (Beilage), 30., 31. Juli 1859 ('Diplomatische Actenstücke'). — 520, 538
Page me40.719
Situation de la banque de France et de ses succursales. In: Le Moniteur universel, Nos. 163, 191, 12 juin, 10 juillet 1857. — 152

Page me40.719
Situation de la banque de France et de ses succursales. In: Le Moniteur universel, Nos. 282, 317, 345, 9 octobre, 13 novembre, 11 décembre 1857. — 230
Page me40.719
Société générale de Crédit mobilier. Rapport présenté par le conseil d'administration dans l'assemblée générale ordinaire des actionnaires du 28 avril 1857. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 120, 30 avril 1857. — 133
Page me40.719
Traité de garantie entre l'Autriche, la France et la Grande-Bretagne, signé á Paris, le 15 avril 1856. — 107
Page me40.719
Traité de limites entre la Russie et la Chine, signé á Aighoun, le 16/28 mai 1858. — 349
Page me40.719
The Treaty between Her Majesty and the Emperor of China, signed at Tien-sin, June 26. In: The Times, No. 23109, 27 September 1858 ('The Treaty with China'). — 347, 362
Page me40.719
[Wesselowsky, F.P.] Mémoire Présenté á Sa Majesté Britannique, par Monsieur Wesselowsky, Ministre de Sa Majesté Czarienne (A Memorial Presented to His Britannic Majesty, by Monsieur Wesselowsky, Minister from His Czarish Majesty), London, 1717. — 9

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me40.719
Allgemeine Zeitung (Augsburg), Nr. 169, 16. Juni 1856: [Report from] Hannover. 'Deutschland'. — 56
— Nr. 13, 13. Januar 1857: Die örtliche Vertheidigung des Bodensees. — 95
— Nr. 63 (Beilage), 4. März 1857: [Reports from] Pera, 20 Febr.; Konstantinopel, 20 Febr. 'Türkei'. — 109
— Nr. 102 (Beilage), 12. April 1859: [Report from] New-York, 19. März. 'Vereinigte Staaten von Nordamerika'. — 417
— Nr. 298, 25. Oktober 1859: [Report from] Augsburg, 24. Okt. 'Deutschland'. — 514, 519
Page me40.719
Berlinische Nachrichten von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen. 27. Februar 1856. — 21
Page me40.719
Cobbett's Annual Register. From July to December, 1802. Vol. II, London, 1810: 'Summary of Politics'. — 266
Page me40.719
The Economist, No. 744, November 28, 1857: (From Our Correspondent.) Paris, Thursday. 'Foreign Correspondence'. — 216
— No. 745, December 5, 1857: The Deeper Causes of the Recent Pressure. — 217

Page Break me40.720

— No. 756, February 20, 1858: (From Our Correspondent.) Paris, Thursday. 'Foreign Correspondence'. — 273
— No. 768, May 15, 1858: [Review of J. Maclaren's book 'A Sketch of the History of the Currency....' London: Groombridge, 1858.] 'Literature'. — 317
Page me40.720
The Free Press, No. 15, January 19, 1856: The Chartist Correspondence. — 4
— No. 2, January 13, 1858: Exports and Imports. Continuation of Correspondence of the Manchester Committee. — 243
— No. 16, May 12, 1858: Recent Treachery in Circassia. To the Editor. Constantinople, April 28, 1858. — 318, 319
— No. 16, May 12, 1858: [Extracts from correspondence relating to the 'Hungarian Refugees' between L. Kossuth and D. Urquhart]. — 494
— No. 18, June 30, 1858: Charge of Hungarian Treachery. From The Star of June 28. — 324, 326
— No. 20, August 25, 1858: The Russian Agent in Circassia. — 342
— No. 24, December 22, 1858: Revelation by a Russian of the Object of the Chinese War and Treaty. (From The New-York Herald of September 14, 1858.) Our St. Petersburg Correspondence. — 387
— No. 5, May 27, 1859: Data by which to judge of Kossuth. — 482
— No. 5, May 27, 1859: Kossuth and Mazzini. — 482
— No. 9, August 31, 1859: The New Portfolio. — 500
Page me40.720
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London, Nr. 2, 15. Januar 1859: [Advertisement about the publication of the book 'Schriften von Johanna und Gottfried Kinkel'.] — 388
— Nr. 7, 19. Februar 1859: Amerikanische Literatur. Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature. — 399
— Nr. 7, 19. Februar 1859: Commerzielle Briefe. — 399
— Nr. 43, 29. Oktober 1859: Die Sitzungen des Schiller-Comité's. — 512
— Nr. 45, 12. November 1859: Das Schillerfest in London. — 526, 527
Page me40.720
Das Jahrhundert. Zeitschrift für Politik und Literatur, Nr. 1, 1857: Erziehung zum Glauben und Erziehung zur Humanität. — 106
— Nr. 1, 1857: Notiz. — 106
Page me40.720
Manchester Daily Examiner & Times, No. 305, February 6, 1856: From Our Paris Correspondent. Paris, Monday Evening. — 5, 6
Page me40.720
Le Moniteur universel, No. 320, 9 août 1802: Paris, le 19 thermidor. — 266
— No. 298, 24 octobre 1856: Paris, le 23 octobre. — 82
— No. 336, 1 décembre 1856: Rapport á l'Empereur. Paris, le 30 novembre 1856. — 230, 231
— No. 24, 24 janvier 1858: Situation des entrepôts á la fin du mois de décembre. — 273
— No. 68, 9 mars 1858: A Châlon-sur-Saône, dans la soirée... — 290
Page me40.720
The Morning Advertiser, No. 19832, January 12, 1855: The Sham Blockade of Russia. — 119

— No. 21344, November 11, 1859: Crystal Palace. — The Schiller Commemoration. — 533
Page me40.720
The Morning Post, No. 25955, March 9, 1857: From Our Own Correspondent. Brussels, March 6. — 111, 116
— No. 26298, April 13, 1858: Trial of Simon Bernard. — 308

Page Break me40.721
Page me40.721
Neue Preußische Zeitung, No. 51, 29. Februar 1856: Leo über Thomas Münzer. — 21
— Nr. 54, 4. März 1856: Den Streitenden. — 20, 26
— Nr. 1, 1. Januar 1857: Die Botschaft des Schweizerischen Bundesraths an die Bundes-Versammlung in der Neuenburger Angelegenheit datirt bekanntlich vom 26. December 1856. — 94
Page me40.721
Die Neue Zeit, Nr. 37, 12. März 1859: Zank (Aphorismen zur Agitation). — 403
Page me40.721
New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4903, January 6, 1857: That France is rapidly taking the leadership... — 95
— No. 5170, November 14, 1857: Troops for India. — 193
— No. 5319, May 8, 1858: New Publications. — 339
— No. 5420, September 4, 1858: To the Editor of the 'N.Y. Tribune'. — 342
— No. 5420, September 4, 1858: [The editors' reply to the letter of a reader, signed 'Banker'.] — 342
— No. 5455, October 15, 1858: Our London correspondent suggests... — 363
— Le Nord, No. 65, 6 mars 1857. — 116
Page me40.721
The Times, No. 22266, January 17, 1856: (From Our Own Correspondent.) Vienna, Jan. 12. 'Austria'. — 3
— No. 22267, January 18, 1856: Over the sounds of warlike preparation... — 3
— No. 22278, January 31, 1856: We are informed that it is not the intention... — 6
— No. 22279, February 1, 1856: The brevity of a Royal Address has often been constructed... — 6
— No. 22280, February 2, 1856: One must dive rather low into human motives... — 6
— No. 22304, March 1, 1856: [Report on the parliamentary sitting on 29 February 1856.] — 21
— Nos. 22320, 22322, 22323, 22324 and 22325, 20, 22, 24, 25, and 26 March 1856: The Capitulation of Kars. — 31, 32
— No. 22327, March 28, 1856: (From Our Own Correspondent.) Berlin, March 25. 'Prussia'. — 561
— No. 22512, October 30, 1856: The improved prices from the Paris Bourse... 'Money Market and city Intelligence'. — 105
— No. 22624, March 10, 1857: (From Our Own Correspondent.) Paris, Sunday, March 8. 'France'. — 105
— No. 22634, March 21, 1857: One of the greatest advantages... — 116
— No. 22641, March 30, 1857: Sir De Lacy Evans is the first-born... — 113

— No. 22670, May 2, 1857: The Crédit Mobilier of France. (From Our Own Reporter.) — 128, 133
— No. 22860, December 10, 1857: Adjourned Examination of J.E. Stephens. — 223
— No. 22861, December 11, 1857: Examination of J.E. Stephens. — 223
— No. 22865, December 16, 1857: [Report on the sitting of the Court of Queen's Bench on 15 December.] — 223
— No. 22866, December 17, 1857: [Report on the sitting of the Court of Queen's Bench on 16 December.] — 223
— No. 22930, March 2, 1858: [Report from] Paris, Saturday, Feb. 27, 6 p.m. 'France'. — 277
— Nos. 23070 and 23071, August 12 and 13, 1858: Mr. Gladstone's Homeric Studies. — 339
— No. 23131, October 22, 1858: The theory of war... — 350
— No. 23181, December 20, 1858: There is nothing in the Message of President Buchanan... — 364

Page Break me40.722
— No. 23196, January 6, 1859: The Revolution in Servia. (From Our Own Correspondent.) Vienna, Jan. 1. — 366
— No. 23219, February 2, 1859: (From Our Own Correspondent.) Paris, Monday, Jan. 31, 6 p.m. 'France'. — 379
— No. 23276, April 9, 1859: Mr. Chisholm Anstey. 'Parliamentary Intelligence'. — 412
— No. 23284, April 19, 1859: [Account of the debates in the British Parliament on 18 April 1859.] Parliamentary Intelligence'. — 425
— No. 23295. May 2, 1859: In our long list of telegrams... — 431
— No. 23321, June 1, 1859: [From Our Own Correspondent.] Paris, Monday, May 30, 6 p.m. 'France'. — 455
— No. 23428, October 4, 1859: One of the most remarkable results... — 505
Page me40.722
Das Volk, Nr. 6, 11. Juni 1859: Zur Warnung (Anonymous article by K. Vogt reprinted, with editorial comments, from the Schweizer Handels-Courier). — 458
— Nr. 13, 30. Juli 1859: (Eine militärische Instruction in Versen). 'Feuilleton'. — 477
— No. 13, 30. Juli 1859: [Explanation by the Editorial Board of 'Das Volk']. 'Feuilleton'. — 477

Page Break me40.723

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me40.723
Advertiser — see The Morning Advertiser
Page me40.723
Allgemeine Zeitung — a conservative daily founded in 1798; from 1810 to 1882 it was published in Augsburg. — 3, 13, 22, 26, 56, 95, 110, 169, 345, 392, 417, 474, 488, 498, 503, 505, 507, 508, 513, 515, 519, 520-27, 532-34, 537, 540, 542, 543, 545, 549, 554
Page me40.723

Der Anzeiger des Westens — a German-language newspaper published in Saint-Louis (USA) from 1835; in the 1850s it took a democratic stand; during the Civil War it supported the slave-owning states (from 1863). — 356
Page me40.723
Augsburger — see Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me40.723
Berlinische Nachrichten von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen — a German semi-official government newspaper of a constitutional-monarchist trend (from 1848); it appeared in Berlin from 1740 to 1874 six times a week; also called Spenersche Zeitung after its publisher. — 21
Page me40.723
Bremer Tages-Chronik. Organ der Demokratie — a German democratic newspaper published in Bremen from 1849 to 1851 under the title Tages-Chronik. It was edited by Rudolph Dulon. From January 1851 it appeared under this very title. — 519
Page me40.723
Le Charivari — a French republican satirical newspaper published in Paris from 1832 to 1934; during the July monarchy it sharply criticised the government; in 1848 it supported Cavaignac's dictatorship. — 278
Page me40.723
Cobbett's Annual Register — a radical weekly published in London from 1802 to 1835 under different titles. — 266
Page me40.723
Le Constitutionnel — a French daily published in Paris from 1815 to 1817 and from 1819 to 1870; during the 1848 revolution it voiced the views of the monarchist bourgeoisie (the Thiers party); after the coup d'état of December 1851 it became a Bonapartist newspaper. — 73, 290, 381
Page me40.723
Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen — a German-language daily published in Prague in 1848-49. — 26

Page Break me40.724
Page me40.724
The Daily News — a liberal newspaper of the British industrial bourgeoisie; it appeared under this title in London from 1846 to 1930. — 237, 247
Page me40.724
The Daily Telegraph — an English liberal and, from the 1880s, conservative newspaper; it was published under this title in London from 1855 to 1937. — 296, 337, 359, 362, 431, 506
Page me40.724
Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung — a newspaper founded by the German political refugees in Brussells and published from January 1847 to February 1848. From September 1847 Marx and Engels regularly contributed to it and under their influence it became an organ of revolutionary communist propaganda. — 439
Page me40.724
Deutsche Jahrbücher — see Deutsche Jahrbücher für Wissenschaft und Kunst
Page me40.724

Deutsche Jahrbücher für Wissenschaft und Kunst — a Young Hegelian literary and philosophical journal published in Leipzig from July 1841 under the editorship of Arnold Ruge. Earlier (1838-41) it appeared under the title Hallische Jahrbücher für Wissenschaft und Kunst. In January 1843 it was closed down by the government. — 209, 227
Page me40.724
Deutsches Museum. Zeitschrift für Literatur, Kunst und öffentliches Leben — a German democratic weekly published in Leipzig from 1851 to 1867; in 1851-66 Robert Prutz was its publisher. — 356, 385
Page me40.724
Dio e Popolo — an Italian republican newspaper published in Genoa up to 1858. — 346
Page me40.724
The Economist. Weekly Commercial Times, Bankers' Gazette, and Railway Monitor: a Political, Literary, and General Newspaper — an English weekly published in London since 1843, organ of the big industrial bourgeoisie. — 214-16, 273, 317, 343
Page me40.724
Examiner; Examiner & Times — see Manchester Daily Examiner & Times
Page me40.724
Le Figaro — a French conservative daily published in Paris since 1854. From 1826 to 1833 it appeared under the title Figaro, journal nonpolitiqué; in the 1850s it took a Bonapartist stand. — 119
Page me40.724
The Free Press. Journal of the Foreign Affairs Committees — a journal on questions of foreign policy, opposed to the Palmerston government; it was published by David Urquhart and his supporters in London from 1855 to 1865 (weekly until April 1858 and then monthly); in 1866 it was renamed Diplomatic Review; it printed several works by Marx. — 4, 44, 60, 62, 76, 110, 117, 120, 138, 318, 319, 324, 326, 342, 347, 387, 465, 468, 471, 476, 479, 487, 494, 495, 497, 500, 504, 505, 507, 521, 533, 540, 544
Page me40.724
The Free Press Serials — a series of political pamphlets published in the 1850s by the Sheffield Free Press editorial board. — 57, 58
Page me40.724
Der Freischütz — a literary and artistic newspaper published in Hamburg from 1825 to 1878. — 436, 522-24, 553
Page me40.724
Die Gartenlaube. Illustriertes Familienblatt — a German literary weekly published in Leipzig from 1853 to 1903 and in Berlin from 1903 to 1943. — 532, 534, 537, 541-42, 546, 550, 556
Page me40.724
Germania — see Londoner Deutsche Zeitung

Page Break me40.725
Page me40.725
Golosa iz Rossij (Voices from Russia) — periodical collections of articles and reports from Russia published by Alexander Herzen in London from 1856 to 1860. — 349
Page me40.725

Grenzboten. Zeitschrift für Politik und Literatur — a German weekly of a liberal trend; it was published in Leipzig from 1841 to 1922. — 99
Page me40.725
Guardian — see The Manchester Guardian
Page me40.725
Hamburger Correspondent — see Staats- und Gelehrten Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartheyischen Correspondenten
Page me40.725
Handels-Courier — see Schweizer Handels-Courier
Page me40.725
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees; it was published in London from 1859; Gottfried Kinkel was its publisher and editor from January to July 1859. — 363, 366, 367, 370, 372, 375, 382, 385, 388, 399, 404, 415, 428, 438, 439-40, 447, 449, 456, 464, 466-68, 480, 482, 485, 500, 502, 512, 519-20, 526, 527, 532, 534, 536, 537, 547, 552, 555
Page me40.725
Der Hochwächter. Ein Organ des Gesamtfortschritts — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democrats; it was published in Cincinnati (USA) from 1850 to 1858. — 346
Page me40.725
L'Homme: journal de la démocratie universelle — a weekly published by French petty-bourgeois refugees in Jersey and in London from 1853 to 1856. — 31, 37, 70, 95
Page me40.725
Die Hornisse — a German democratic satirical newspaper published by Heinrich Heise and Gottlieb Kellner in Cassel from 1848 to 1850. — 519
Page me40.725
How do you do? — a German-language humorous weekly; it was published in London in the 1850s by Louis Drucker and edited by Beta (Bettziech). — 458, 535, 537, 541, 545
Page me40.725
The Illustrated London News — a weekly published since 1842. — 91
Page me40.725
L'Impartial — a Bonapartist newspaper published in Jersey in 1857 under the editorship of Lemoine. — 188
Page me40.725
Indépendance — see L'Indépendance belge
Page me40.725
L'Indépendance belge. Journal mondial d'informations politiques et littéraires — a liberal daily founded in Brussels in 1831. — 34
Page me40.725
Independent — see The Jersey Independent
Page me40.725
Das Jahrhundert. Zeitschrift für Politik und Literatur — a German weekly, organ of the petty-bourgeois democracy; it was published in Hamburg from 1856 to 1859. — 100, 106
Page me40.725
The Jersey Independent — an English democratic newspaper published in Jersey from 1855 to 1875 (twice weekly until 1858, then — daily); from July 1856 to November 1862 it was edited by George Julian Harney. — 190, 263, 308

Page me40.725
Journal des Proscrits — a weekly of the French petty-bourgeois democratic refugees; it was published in London in the 1850s. — 95

Page Break me40.726
Page me40.726
Kölner — see Kölnische Zeitung
Page me40.726
Kölnische Zeitung — a daily published in Cologne from 1802 to 1945; it took an anti-revolutionary stand and attacked the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; in the 1850s it expressed the interests of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie. — 26, 103, 336, 375, 382, 385, 388, 437, 463, 474, 571
Page me40.726
Kolokol (The Bell) — a revolutionary-democratic newspaper; it was published by Alexander Herzen and Nikolai Ogaryev from 1857 to 1867 in Russian and in 1868-69 in French (La Cloche) with Russian supplements; it was published in London until 1865, then in Geneva. — 349, 467
Page me40.726
Kreuz-Zeitung — see Neue Preußische Zeitung
Page me40.726
Londoner Deutsche Zeitung — a daily of the German refugees, supporters of the unification of Germany under Austria's supremacy; it appeared in 1858 and 1859 first under this title, then under the title Germania; in 1859 Ermani was its editor. — 438
Page me40.726
Der Maikäfer, eine Zeitschrift für Nicht-Philister — a handwritten weekly founded by Gottfried Kinkel and Johanna Mockel in Bonn in 1840; it ceased publication in 1848, with the outbreak of the revolution in Germany. — 370
Page me40.726
Manchester Daily Examiner & Times — a liberal newspaper founded in 1848 by the merger of the Manchester Times and Manchester Examiner; it supported the Free Traders in the 1840s and in 1850s; the newspaper was published until 1894 under different titles. — 5, 6, 11, 113, 203, 233
Page me40.726
Manchester Examiner — see Manchester Daily Examiner & Times
Page me40.726
The Manchester Guardian — a daily founded in Manchester in 1821; organ of the Free Traders and from the mid-nineteenth century of the Liberal Party. — 5, 6, 11, 75, 80, 83, 92, 105, 106, 109, 110, 119, 121, 203, 204, 207, 211, 219, 224, 225, 233, 241, 243, 251-52, 258, 262, 265-67, 275-76, 279, 284, 285, 288-89, 295, 296, 305, 308, 310, 569
Page me40.726
Mannheimer Abendzeitung — a German radical daily founded by Karl Grün; it was published from 1842 to 1848. — 351
Page me40.726
Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' geographischer Anstalt über wichtige neue Erforschungen auf dem Gesammtgebiete der Geographie — a German geographical monthly published in Gotha under the editorship of August Petermann from 1855. — 349

Page me40.726
Moniteur — see Le Moniteur universel
Page me40.726
Le Moniteur universel — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1901 (under this title from 1811); official government organ from 1799 to 1869. — 82, 94, 133, 193, 266, 273, 290, 336, 357, 381, 384, 473, 476
Page me40.726
The Morning Advertiser — a London daily published from 1794 to 1934; organ of the radical bourgeoisie in the 1850s. — 42, 99, 112, 114, 119, 243, 318, 362, 363, 431, 533, 534
Page me40.726
The Morning Herald — a London conservative daily published from 1780 to 1869. — 75

Page Break me40.727
Page me40.727
The Morning Post — a London conservative daily published from 1772 to 1937; in the mid-nineteenth century it was the organ of the Right-wing Whigs grouped around Palmerston. — 111, 116, 278, 308
Page me40.727
The Morning Star — a daily of the Free Traders published in London from 1856 to 1869. — 91, 127, 218, 237, 294, 324, 326, 342
Page me40.727
La Nation, organe quotidien démocrate socialiste — a newspaper of Belgian petty-bourgeois democrats published in Brussels from 1848 to 1856. — 70, 95
Page me40.727
Le National — a Belgian moderate-democratic newspaper published in Brussels. — 70, 95
Page me40.727
Le National — a daily published in Paris from 1830 to 1851; organ of moderate republicans in the 1840s. — 90, 309
Page me40.727
National-Zeitung — a daily published in Berlin from 1848 to 1915; it voiced liberal views in the 1850s. — 5, 75, 81, 385, 505
Page me40.727
Neue Oder-Zeitung — a German democratic daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw) from March 1849 to 1855; it was founded as a result of the split in the editorial board of the opposition Catholic Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung published from 1846; in the 1850s it was the most radical German newspaper. Marx was its London correspondent in 1855. — 416
Page me40.727
Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Dokumente und Aktenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte — a periodical collection of diplomatic documents and papers published in German in Berlin in 1859-60 under the editorship of Eduard Fischel, Urquhart's supporter. — 547
Page me40.727
Neue Preußische Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from June 1848 to 1939; organ of the Prussian Junkers and Court circles; it was also known as the Kreuz-

Zeitung because the heading contained a cross bearing the device 'Forward with God for King and Fatherland!' — 20, 21, 26, 94, 107, 435, 446, 520, 538, 561
Page me40.727
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a daily newspaper of the revolutionary-proletarian wing of the democrats during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; it was published in Cologne under the editorship of Marx from 1 June 1848 to 19 May 1849 (with an interval between 27 September and 12 October 1848); Engels was among its editors. — 103, 249, 370, 392, 434, 525, 526, 540, 541
Page me40.727
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — a theoretical journal of the Communist League published by Marx and Engels from December 1849 to November 1850. — 21, 64, 263
Page me40.727
Neue Schweizer Zeitung — a radical weekly published by the German refugee August Brass in Geneva in 1859-60. — 428
Page me40.727
Neue Zeit — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees in the USA; it was published in New York from 1855 to 1858. — 32, 119
Page me40.727
Die Neue Zeit. Organ der Demokratie — a newspaper of German refugee workers; it was published in London from June 1858 to April 1859. — 324, 341, 353, 358, 366, 403, 415, 437, 438, 519
Page me40.727
New-York Daily Tribune — a newspaper founded by Horace Greeley in 1841 and published until 1924; it was an organ of the Left wing of the American Whigs until the mid-1850s and later of the Republican Party; in the 1840s and 1850s it voiced progressive views and opposed the slave-owning system. Marx and Engels contributed to the newspaper from August 1851 to March 1862. — 28, 31, 38, 63, 68, 73, 92-96, 97-99, 101, 105, 106, 109, 111, 115, 123, 124, 130, 131, 140, 142, 146, 148, 152, 159, 181, 193, 199, 215, 224, 233, 237, 244, 250, 251, 266, 272, 297, 305, 307, 309, 317-18, 324, 325, 327, 329-30, 334, 336, 337, 339, 340-42, 352, 361, 362, 365, 371, 374, 393, 397, 399, 401, 405, 406, 409, 410, 414, 416, 417, 428, 429, 439, 448, 460, 468, 469, 473, 493, 494, 497, 505, 507, 508, 522, 523, 525, 527, 532, 536, 544, 548, 566, 573

Page Break me40.728
Page me40.728
The New-York Herald — a daily newspaper of the Republican Party published from 1835 to 1924. — 96, 98, 387
Page me40.728
The New-York Times — a daily newspaper of the Republican Party founded in 1851. — 96, 98, 215, 237
Page me40.728
New-Yorker Demokrat — a German-language newspaper published by the petty-bourgeois refugees in the USA from 1848. — 44
Page me40.728

New-Yorker Staatszeitung — a German-language democratic daily published from 1834; later an organ of the US Democratic Party. — 22
Page me40.728
Le Nord. Journal international — a monarchist daily published in French in Brussels (from 1855 to 1892) and in Paris (from 1894 to 1899); it was connected with the ruling circles in Tsarist Russia. — 107, 109, 111, 116
Page me40.728
The Observer — a conservative weekly published in London since 1791. — 216
Page me40.728
Overland Mail — a government weekly published in London from 1841 to 1914. — 237
Page me40.728
Pensiero ed Azione — a bimonthly organ of the Italian democrats edited by Giuseppe Mazzini; it was published in London in 1858 and 1859, and in Lugano and Genoa in 1860. — 346, 452, 455
Page me40.728
The People's Paper — a Chartist weekly published by Ernest Jones in London from 1852 to 1858. Marx and Engels contributed to it from October 1852 to December 1856 and helped with its editing. In June 1858 it fell into the hands of bourgeois dealers. — 31, 34, 38, 42, 44, 65, 210, 274, 342
Page me40.728
Der Pionier — a weekly published in New York (1854-58), then in Boston (1859-79); organ of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees; its editor-in-chief was Karl Heinzen. — 243, 356, 567
Page me40.728
La Pologne. Annales contemporaines politiques, religieuses et litteraires des peuples de l'Europe orientale — a pan-Slavist weekly; it was published in Paris from 1848 to 1850 under the editorship of Cyprien Robert. — 18
Page me40.728
Portfolio — see Das Neue Portfolio
Page me40.728
The Portfolio — a collection of diplomatic papers and documents published by David Urquhart in London. The series The Portfolio; or a Collection of State Papers came out from 1835 to 1837, and a new series, The Portfolio. Diplomatic Review, from 1843 to 1845. — 115, 468, 470
Page me40.728
Post — see The Morning Post

Page Break me40.729
Page me40.729
Die Presse — a liberal daily published in Vienna from 1848 to 1894; in 1861-62, when the newspaper held anti-Bonapartist views, it printed a number of articles and reports by Marx. — 226, 228, 269, 272, 275, 409, 416, 429, 432-37, 452, 455, 459, 502, 571
Page me40.729
La Presse — a daily published in Paris from 1836 to 1866; mouthpiece of the opposition to the regime of the Second Empire in the 1850s; later a Bonapartist newspaper. — 42
Page me40.729

Preußische Correspondenz — see Preußische Litographische Correspondenz
Page me40.729
Preußische Litographische Correspondenz — a semi-official organ of the Prussian Ministry of Foreign Affairs published in Berlin. — 32, 34
Page me40.729
Preußisches Wochenblatt — a conservative weekly published in Berlin from 1851 to 1861. — 349, 500
Page me40.729
Protection for Trade — a London weekly, organ of the society for the protection of small tradesmen. — 32, 35
Page me40.729
Punch, or the London Charivari — a comic weekly of a liberal trend, founded in London in 1841. — 113
Page me40.729
Putnam — see Putnam's Monthly Magazine of American Literature, Science, and Art
Page me40.729
Putnam's Monthly Magazine of American Literature, Science, and Art — a Republican monthly published in New York from 1853 to 1857 and from 1866 to 1870; in 1855 it carried Engels' series of articles The Armies of Europe. — 11, 45, 73, 93, 124
Page me40.729
Die Reform — a liberal daily published in Hamburg in 1848-92. — 522-24, 537, 542
Page me40.729
Revue; Revue der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me40.729
Revue des deux Mondes — a literary and political fortnightly published in Paris since 1829. — 18
Page me40.729
Reynolds's Newspaper. A Weekly Journal of Politics, History, Literature and General Intelligence — a radical weekly published by George Reynolds in London from 1850; it was connected with the labour movement. — 114, 228, 250, 342, 344, 345, 348
Page me40.729
Rheinische Zeitung — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie
Page me40.729
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — a daily founded by the Rhenish bourgeois opposition and published in Cologne from 1 January 1842 to 31 March 1843. In April 1842 Marx began to contribute to it and in October of the same year became one of its editors. — 7, 20
Page me40.729
Russia and the United States Correspondent — a liberal weekly; it was published in London from 16 August to 19 November 1856 under the editorship of I.G. Golovin in Russian, English, German and French. — 70, 73
Page me40.729
Schweizer Handels-Courier — a daily published in Biel (canton of Berne). It appeared under this title from 1853 to 1909; expressed Bonapartist views in the 1850s-1860s; its editors were closely connected with Karl Vogt. — 458, 525, 546, 550

Page me40.729
The Sheffield Free Press — an English newspaper published in Sheffield from 1851 to 1857 by David Urquhart and his supporters. — 62

Page Break me40.730
Page me40.730
Die Sociale Republik — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democrats; it was published in New York from 1858 to 1860 under the editorship of Gustav Struve (until 1859). — 359
Page me40.730
The Spectator — a literary journal published in London in 1711-12 and 1714. — 377
Page me40.730
Die Spenersche — see Berlinische Nachrichten von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen
Page me40.730
Staats- und Gelehrten-Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartheyischen Correspondenten — a monarchist daily published in Hamburg from 1814 to 1869. — 418
Page me40.730
Star — see The Morning Star
Page me40.730
The Sun — a liberal daily published in London from 1798 to 1876. — 275
Page me40.730
Telegraph — see The Daily Telegraph
Page me40.730
Telegraph Morning Express — a daily published in London from 1855 to 1858. — 362
Page me40.730
The Times — a daily published in London since 1785. — 3, 6, 21, 22, 31, 42, 82, 105, 107, 113, 116, 119, 128, 133, 176, 215, 223, 237, 278, 290, 293, 308, 325, 327, 339, 350, 358, 364, 366, 378, 379, 405, 425, 431, 452, 455, 473, 481, 486, 505, 506, 529, 530, 561
Page me40.730
Tribune — see New-York Daily Tribune
Page me40.730
Die Turn-Zeitung. Organ des socialistischen Turnerbundes — a newspaper of the German democratic refugees in the USA; from 1851 to 1861 it was published monthly, then — twice a month; published in New York, and from 1 November 1853 in Philadelphia; Adolf Cluss and Joseph Weydemeyer contributed to it. — 366
Page me40.730
L'Univers religieux, philosophique, politique, scientifique et littéraire — a clerical newspaper founded in Paris in 1833; in the 1850s it supported Bonaparte. — 356
Page me40.730
Unsere Zeit. Jahrbuch zum Conversations-Lexikon — a liberal literary and political journal published in Brockhaus' Publishing House in Leipzig from 1857 to 1891; from 1865 the journal appeared under the title Unsere Zeit. Deutsche Revue der Gegenwart. Monatsschrift zum Conversations-Lexikon. — 349
Page me40.730
Das Volk — a German-language weekly published in London from 7 May to 20 August 1859; it was founded as the official organ of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; Marx took part in its publication beginning with issue No. 2 and in early July he virtually became its editor and manager. — 439, 447, 449-52, 456, 457, 459, 461, 463, 465-68, 469-71, 473, 476-77, 480-82, 484, 492, 495, 496, 501, 502, 508, 511, 512, 515, 519, 520, 525, 533, 543, 545, 548, 556

Page me40.730
Volksblatt — a German newspaper published in Trier. — 532
Page me40.730
Volks-Zeitung — a democratic daily published in Berlin from 1853. — 458, 522, 524, 526, 537, 542
Page me40.730
Vorwärts! Pariser Deutsche Zeitschrift — a German newspaper published in Paris from January to December 1844 twice a week. Marx and Engels contributed to it. — 439
Page me40.730
The Weekly Mail — a Tory weekly published in London from 1858 to 1860. — 544
Page me40.730
Weser-Zeitung — a German liberal daily published in Bremen from 1844 to 1930. — 502, 505, 507, 511

Page Break me40.731

SUBJECT INDEX

Page me40.731
A

Abstraction, abstract and concrete — 261, 298, 301-03, 304, 328, 396, 420-21, 444
Aesthetics — 135, 419-21, 440-45
Agriculture — 49-50, 220, 305, 347
Algeria — 381
Anglo-Persian war of 1856-57 — 107-08, 115
Anti-Corn Law League — 113-14, 116
Appropriation — 303
Army — 160, 177-79, 186
— Austrian — 204, 382, 515
— British — 161, 234, 412
— French — 6, 216, 290-91, 381, 402, 405, 427
— German — 204, 235, 381-82
— Prussian — 161, 366, 381-82
— Russian — 234
See also Cavalry
Art
— and artistic taste — 423, 441
— realism in art — 419-21, 443, 444
See also Literature; Music; Painting, different national schools; Poetry; Theatre
Art of war — 124, 178, 181, 186-87, 204, 241
— its foundations — 186-87

See also Army; Navy
Australia — 71, 347
Austria — 21, 26, 86, 89, 292, 346, 381-82, 401, 431, 436
See also Army — Austrian; Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Austro-Italo-French war of 1859
Austro-Italian war of 1848-49 — 431-32
Austro-Italo-French war of 1859 (Italian war of 1859)
— general characteristics — 380-81, 392, 399, 405, 415, 430-31, 435-36, 464, 465, 469-70, 473-74, 537, 538
— preparations for war, Plombiéres Agreement of 1858 — 401 — course of military operations — 414, 448, 473-74, 475
— Villafranca preliminary peace treaty of 1859 — 464, 469
— and Austria — 382, 401, 414, 425-28, 430-32, 464, 465
— and Italy — 465, 537
— and Piedmont — 426, 465
— Mazzini's attitude — 382, 452, 455, 464
— actions by Garibaldi's detachments — 452, 455
— and France (Second Empire) — 368, 380-81, 401, 405, 425-27, 432, 465, 537-38
— and diplomacy of European states — 368, 380, 401, 405, 411, 425-27, 430
— and Britain — 368, 381, 401, 405, 411, 425-27, 431-32, 465, 538
— and Germany — 382, 401, 435-36, 537

Page Break me40.732
— and Prussia — 381, 430, 464, 465, 537, 538
— and Russia — 368, 381, 382, 401, 405, 411, 426-27, 430-31, 432, 465, 537, 538
— and revolutionary movement in Europe — 381-82, 414, 430, 464, 465, 538
— and European democracy — 381-82, 403-04, 428, 435-36, 439, 452, 464, 465, 538, 543

Page me40.732
B

Balance of trade — 73, 229, 230, 243
Bank(s)
— and banking capital — 133
— reserve fund — 126, 208, 229-30
— profit — 133, 215
— and bill operations — 208, 211, 219, 220, 229-31, 256, 291-92, 343
— and deposits — 133, 208-09, 229, 231
— and money circulation — 126, 208
— and discount rate — 71, 83, 199, 208-09, 211-12, 229
— and railways — 216, 230-32
— and the state — 133, 208, 214-16, 230-32, 256, 73
— and financial aristocracy — 133
— and economic crises — 126, 133, 197, 202, 208-09, 212, 215-17, 218-19, 220-21, 222-23, 229-31, 235-36, 303

— joint-stock — 34, 81, 144, 208-09
— in Proudhon's theory — 90
See also Bank legislation; Bank of England; Bank of France; Bankruptcy; Belgian Bank; Credit; Crédit mobilier; Royal British Bank; Stock Exchange
Bank legislation — 202, 208, 214-15
Bank notes — 152, 208, 213, 222-23
Bank of England — 72, 73, 208-09, 212, 567
Bank of France — 93, 133, 152, 193, 208, 216, 229-31, 256, 273
Bank rate — 126, 229
Bankruptcy — 81, 83, 197, 200-01, 207, 208-09, 211, 212, 215, 219, 222-23, 235-36, 567
Belgian Bank — 71
Berlin — 286
Bill of exchange — 208, 211-14, 220-21, 229-31, 256, 291-92, 343-44
Bimetallism — 71, 73, 90
Bohemia, Bohemians — 19, 26-27, 87, 346, 381
Bonapartism — 90, 108, 109, 291, 537-38
See also France — Second Empire
Bourgeoisie — 216, 291
— English — 115, 344, 374-75
— French — 6, 215, 216, 229, 256, 291, 381-82, 401, 405
— German — 27
— Prussian — 292, 349, 358, 436
— Spanish — 61
Bourgeois political economy — 102, 126, 135, 249, 282, 283, 287, 298-301, 303, 317-18, 377
See also Abstraction, abstract and concrete; Ricardianism, Ricardo's theories Brandenburg — see Prussia
'Bundschuh' (peasant association in Germany in 15th-16th cent.) — 445

Page me40.732
C

California — 71, 203, 344, 347
Capital — 191-92, 215-216, 249, 287, 298, 303
— accumulation of — 303
— fixed — 278, 279, 281, 282, 283; see also Machines
— circulating — 212-13, 256, 281, 282-83, 287
— loan (monetary) — 71, 273; see also Bank(s); Credit; Loan interest — share — 298
'Capital' by K. Marx
— first stage in writing it — 270, 286-87, 297-98, 301-05, 498
— manuscript of 1857-58 as the first variant of Capital — 216, 224, 226, 244, 269-70, 272, 286-87, 295, 298, 317-18, 353-54, 358, 368, 376, 498, 508, 511-12, 523
— A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy — 270, 272, 286-87, 295, 297-98, 301-05, 341, 353-54, 358, 368-69, 376-77, 393-96, 408, 471, 473, 477, 478, 482, 498, 502, 518

Page Break me40.733
— Marx's method of economic research — 249, 270, 298, 304-05, 470-71
— dialectics in Marx's economic works — 249, 298, 304-05
Capitalism (as socio-economic formation) — 301-02 — transient character of — 473
Carbonari — 380
Cavalry — 289
Causality — 435
Cell — 326-27
Chartism, Chartist movement
— in 1848 — 31-32, 44, 210, 249-50, 375, 376
— Chartist press, the — 38, 44
— part played by Marx and Engels in Chartist movement — 38, 418 — causes of its decline — 344
China
— general characteristics — 347
— economy — 203, 347
— foreign trade — 73, 344, 347, 362
— as object of colonial expansion by capitalist states — 347, 413
— opium trade — 347, 362, 413
See also Opium wars
Circulation of money capital — 301-02
Classes, the — 420, 442-45
See also Bourgeoisie; Class struggle; Nobility; Peasantry; Petty bourgeoisie; Working class
Class struggle — 419-20, 443-45
Coin — 302, 377
Cologne Communist Trial — 477, 552, 554
Commerce, trade — 81, 222-23, 226, 235-36, 256, 271, 342
See also Commercial (merchant's) capital; Foreign trade; World market
Commercial (merchant's) capital — 303 Commodity
— its analysis in Marx's work A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy — 298-303, 358, 368, 376-77, 473
— criticism of Proudhon's views — 377
Commodity circulation — 301-03
Commune (community)
— in Germany — 20
— in Poland — 75, 80
— in Romania — 80
— in Russia — 18, 75
Communism (social formation)
— prerequisites for communist transformation of society — 298
— necessity of proletarian revolution — 38, 41, 346
See also Revolution, proletarian, socialist

Communism in Germany (theories and trends) — 502-03, 519-20
Communism, primitive — 298
Communism, scientific — 377, 518
Communism, utopian — 21
See also Communism in Germany; Weitlingianism, Weitlingians
Communist League, the — 38-41, 376
See also Cologne Communist Trial; German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918)
Communists, communist movement — 555
See also Communist League
Competition — 35, 298, 305
Conflict — 322, 419-20, 445
Consignment — 191, 202
Content and form — 298-301, 316, 442-443
Contradiction — 133, 287, 298, 301, 445
Corn Laws (in England) — 215
See also Anti-Corn Law League
Credit — 71, 83, 126, 220-21, 229-32, 236, 291-92, 298, 302, 344
Crédit mobilier — 34, 119, 126, 128, 133, 142, 145, 216, 225, 240, 244, 291-92, 296, 349, 567
Crimean war of 1853-56
— and European diplomacy — 119
— military operations in the Crimea in 1854-56 — 22, 177-78, 297
— capture of Kars by Russian troops in 1855 — 22, 28-30 — its results, Paris Peace Treaty of 1856 — 7, 42, 346, 368
— and England — 31-32
— and Turkey — 346
— and France — 7
— and Sweden — 3
Criticism
— general features — 260, 441
— of various social phenomena and social consciousness — 91, 260, 261, 270, 316

Page Break me40.734
— Marxism as critical revolutionary teaching — 261, 270, 441, 446
Cuba — 340
Customs Union (Germany, 1834-71) — 230

Page me40.734
D

Darwinism — 551
Definition — 287, 298, 301, 303, 327
Demand and supply — 235-36, 350
Democracy, petty-bourgeois — 25, 90, 568
Democracy, vulgar — 436, 522, 525

Denmark — 132, 229
Development — 186, 270, 278, 298, 303, 325, 326-27, 443, 551
Dialectical materialism — 326-27
Dialectics
— in nature — 326-27
— in politics — 537
— and natural science — 326-27
— and political economy — 260-61
— Hegelian — 249, 259-61, 316, 326-27
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx — dialectics in Marx's economic works; Hegel, Hegelianism
Dividend — 201, 244
Division of labour — 186-87
Drama (literature) — 419-21, 441-45
Duel — 319, 320, 322-23, 324

Page me40.734
E

Economic categories — 270, 301
Economic crises
— as phase of industrial cycle — 202-03, 214-15, 220-21, 222-23, 278, 281, 282 — their chronic character — 83, 126, 203, 291
— overproduction as main form of their manifestation — 220-21, 343, 344 — their forecasting — 34-35, 71-72, 73-74, 152, 199, 202-03, 216-17 — industrial — 215-16, 220, 273, 282
— commercial — 81, 222-23, 226, 256, 271, 343
— monetary and financial — 32, 70, 71-72, 83, 152, 200, 207, 212-13, 220-21, 235, 236, 302-03 — of the world market — 202, 203, 220-25, 230-31, 235-36
— and condition of working people — 216, 221, 223, 241, 350
— and bourgeois state — 81, 83, 133, 202, 208, 214, 216, 221, 229, 232, 256, 273, 291, 292 — and prospects of revolution — 74-75, 83, 203-04, 216, 223, 243-44, 291
— crisis of 1837 — 221
— crisis of 1846-47 — 202, 208, 221, 229, 232, 240, 243
— world economic crisis of 1857-58 — 71, 74, 126, 133, 197, 200-03, 208-09, 211, 216, 218-25, 226, 228-32, 235-36, 239, 240, 243, 253, 256, 271, 343, 346-47, 350, 567 — crisis of 1857-58 in England — 71-72, 73-74, 197, 201, 202, 208, 209, 211, 212, 213, 214-15, 219, 220-21, 222, 223, 224-25, 228, 235-36, 239-40, 243, 253, 343, 350, 567
— crisis of 1857-58 in Germany — 200, 202, 212-13, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224-25, 243, 567
— crisis of 1857-58 in France — 71-72, 126, 133, 200, 214, 215-16, 223, 224-25, 228, 232, 235, 240, 243, 256, 271
Economic laws — 126, 282-83, 301-03
Economic situation — 71-72, 73-74, 126, 208-09, 214-15, 219-21, 229-31, 291-92

Emigration, emigrants
— as social phenomenon — 50-51
— bourgeois-democratic, petty-bourgeois — 37-38, 359, 375-76, 382, 455-56
— revolutionary — 37-38
— proletarian — 37-38, 359-60, 386
— French — 37-38, 339-40, 465, 480
— German emigrants in England, from mid-1850s — 38-41, 366, 369, 370, 372-73, 375-76, 382-83, 437-40, 461, 463-64, 467, 492-93, 502-04, 508, 513, 519-21, 523, 526
— Irish emigrants in the USA — 50 — Italian — 346, 381-82, 452, 455, 464

Page Break me40.735
— Polish — 381
Engels, Frederick
— friendship with Marx and his family — 51-52, 96-97, 109, 114-15, 121, 143-44, 149-50, 307-08, 311, 313, 314, 331, 332-33, 517-18, 542, 555-57, 563-64, 565, 568-69, 572, 573-75
— joint work with Marx — 51, 122-25, 182-83
— Marx on Engels — 186, 248-49, 391-92, 393, 400-01
— during the 1848-49 revolutions (general) — 392
— in 1849-59 (general) — 24-25, 49, 109, 122-25, 203-04, 274-75, 288-89, 337-38, 391-93, 399-400, 402-03, 471-72
— contribution to The New American Cyclopaedia — 122-25, 135-37, 144, 155, 158, 162-64, 165-68, 171-72, 174-76, 177-81, 190, 195, 196, 200, 204-07, 213, 239, 241-42, 247, 252, 254, 257, 263, 268, 274, 281-82, 288-89
— contribution to New-York Daily Tribune — 207, 393, 417
— study of military history and military-theoretical problems — 84, 123, 124, 136-37, 144, 153, 158, 160-61, 162-68, 171, 172, 174-76, 177-81, 189, 190, 195, 200, 204, 241-42, 247, 252, 254, 256, 257, 263, 266, 274, 281-82, 285, 289, 293, 294, 492, 515
— Marx on significance of Engels' study of military theory — 186-87, 248-49, 391 — study of natural sciences — 326-27, 551
— studies in languages and history of Slav peoples — 26-27, 73, 105, 403, 516
— and working-class movement in England — 188-89, 190, 196, 264, 344, 348
— and working-class movement in Germany — 24-25, 36
— his friends and associates — 72, 252-53, 386, 509
— his family — 421-24, 528-29
See also Chartism, Chartist movement — part played by Marx and Engels in Chartist movement; Marx, Karl England (Great Britain)
— general characteristics — 344
— in the 1850s (from 1849) — 35, 42, 71-72, 104-05, 113-14, 115-16, 221, 239, 253, 270, 273-78, 344, 349, 401, 405, 411, 429
— economy — 72, 81, 305, 344
— trade — 35, 202, 214, 229, 234-35, 305-06, 307
— trade with Asia (Turkey, Middle East, India, China) — 201-02, 211-12, 253, 344, 347, 362, 413

— finances — 413
— aristocracy — 344
— social and political system — 108, 358, 411
— electoral system — 115
— Peelites — 104
— Radicals — 210, 374, 411
— bourgeois-democratic movements — 357-58
— colonial policy — 49-51, 413
— foreign policy, diplomacy — 8-10, 80-81, 107, 115, 429
See also Anglo-Persian war of 1856-57; Anti-Corn Law League; Army — British; Bank of England; Bourgeoisie — English; Chartism, Chartist movement; Corn Laws (in England); Economic crises — crisis of 1857-58 in England; Free Traders; Literature — English; Opium wars; Poetry — English; Royal British Bank; Tories (England); Urquhartism, Urquhartites; Whigs (England); Working-class movement in England
Epic — 19
Epicureanism — 124, 226, 269, 316
Equality — 303
Estate — 80
Europe — 203, 272, 358
Exchange — 301, 303

Page me40.735
F

Feudalism — 86, 298, 302, 346, 418-19, 442-45
See also Serfdom; Society — feudal Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism — 55

Page Break me40.736
Forecast — 34-35, 71-72, 73-74, 152, 199, 202-03, 216
Foreign trade — 73, 191, 200, 201-02, 208, 212, 216, 229-30, 243, 347, 362, 412, 413
See also World market France
— general characteristics — 85-86, 229-30
— July revolution of 1830 and July monarchy — 380
— Second Empire — 6-7, 31, 35, 37-38, 42, 50-51, 71-72, 82-83, 93, 94, 119, 126, 128, 133, 142, 145, 152, 156-58, 193, 194, 208, 214-16, 225, 229, 232, 240, 244, 256, 264, 266, 273, 289-93, 296, 297, 306, 343, 348-49, 357, 380-82, 401, 405, 427, 476, 537, 552, 567 — foreign policy and diplomacy, colonial policy — 7, 94, 291, 357, 380, 425-26, 427, 473, 538
See also Army — French; Bank of France; Bourgeoisie — French, Crédit mobilier; Economic crises — crisis of 1857-58 in France; Emigration, emigrants — French; French Revolution (18th cent.); Literature — French; Peasantry — French; Poetry — French; Revolution of 1848 in France; Working class — in France; Working-class movement in France

Freedom — 49, 303
Free Traders — 104, 113, 115-16, 127
See also Anti-Corn Law League; England (Great Britain) — Radicals
French Revolution (18th cent.) — 38, 84, 86, 473

Page me40.736
G

Galicia — 381
German Confederation (1815-66) — 437
German philosophy — 124, 127, 135, 260
See also Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism; Hegel, Hegelianism
German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918) — 41, 363, 437, 451, 519-20
Germany
— and the French Revolution (18th cent.) and Napoleonic wars — 38, 41, 164-65, 169, 174-75, 178-81
— fragmentation of the country and the task of its unification — 435-36 — economy — 34, 81, 213, 229, 243, 253
— bourgeois liberalism — 393
— democratic movement — 25, 90, 393, 435, 458, 568
— science — 355
— revolutionary movement — 38, 41, 435, 445-46
— foreign policy — 21, 75, 86-87, 346, 435, 537
See also Army — German; Bourgeoisie — German; Customs Union (Germany, 1834-71); Economic crises — crisis of 1857-58 in Germany; Emigration, emigrants — German; German Confederation (1815-66); German philosophy; Hanse; Literature — German; Nobility — German; Peasantry — German; Peasant War in Germany, 1524-25; Poetry — German; Prussia; Reformation; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Rhine Province
Gold and silver
— as money — 213, 260, 301, 377
— output of — 203
— significance of discovery of gold in Australia and America — 71, 203, 344, 346 — relative to each other — 71, 73
— circulation of — 208, 212, 216, 229
— demonetisation of — 90
— and crises — 208, 212, 217, 229
— as seen by Proudhon and Proudhonists — 90
— miscellanea — 260, 377
Goths — 26
Greek philosophy — 124, 226, 227, 259-60, 262, 270, 316, 324, 394-96
See also Epicureanism; Pythagoreanism; Scepticism, sceptics; Stoicism, stoics

Page me40.736
H

Hanse — 229, 243
Hegel, Hegelianism — 249, 259-61, 270, 316, 326-27
See also Old Hegelianism

Page Break me40.737
Historical materialism, materialist conception of history — 186-87 Historiography — ancient — 270
— of Renaissance — 187
— of Enlightenment — 16, 187
— Junker — 21, 346-47
— bourgeois, in 19th cent. — 16-17, 58, 85
— progressive and democratic trends in bourgeois historiography — 85
History — 419
Holland — 230
Hungary — 86, 292, 381, 382

Page me40.737
I

Ideas — and interests — 420
— and classes — 442
— intellectual content — 442-43
— ideas of equality — 303
— as conceived by Hegel — 326-27
— as conceived by Proudhon and Proudhonists — 303
Ideology, ideologists — 419
India — 74, 192-93, 201-02, 249, 413
See also Indian uprising of 1857-59
Indian uprising of 1857-59
— and Sepoy troops — 185
— military forces of England — 249
— course of — 152, 175, 182-85, 192-93, 197, 198, 234-35, 242, 244, 247, 249, 336
— and situation in England — 218
— and English and European working class — 346-47, 565
— its results — 413
Industrial reserve army — 83, 223
Industry — 220, 237, 281, 282
Inventions — 280
Ireland
— as British colony — 49-51
Italian war of 1859 — see Austro-Italo-French war of 1859
Italy
— economy — 221, 275

— national movement (1850s) — 142
— revolutionary upsurge in 1859 — 452, 455, 515
— foreign policy — 381
See also Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Austro-Italo-French war of 1859; Emigration, emigrants — Italian; Kingdom of Sardinia; Painting, different national schools; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states

Page me40.737
J

Jacobin dictatorship, Jacobins (1793-94)
— Comité du salut public — 85
Japan — 347
Joint-stock companies
— setting-up and development of — 81, 82-83, 208-09, 231, 295-96
— activity of — 114, 119, 133, 208-09, 231, 295-96
— and Stock Exchange — 133
— and railways — 229-31
— and the state — 119
— in Germany — 34, 81
— in France — 119, 133, 229-32, 295-96
See also Capital — share; Crédit mobilier; Shares, speculation in shares
Junkerdom, Prussian — 20

Page me40.737
K

Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) — 426-27, 515
Knighthood — 419
— knights' uprising in Germany in 1522-23 — 443-46

Page me40.737
L

Labour aristocracy (in England) — 344
Labour, social — 301 — right to work — 215
Land-division — 80
Landed property — 49-50, 80, 298
Language — 26, 132, 402, 516
Lassalleanism, Lassalleans
— Lassalle and his role in German working-class movement — 23-25, 27, 36, 44, 129, 391-93, 435, 461, 498, 542
— criticism of Lassalle's theoretical views — 128, 227, 255, 259-61, 315, 355, 394-97, 419-21, 441-45
— and peasantry — 420, 444-45

Page Break me40.738
— Lassalle's nationalistic attitude during Austro-Italo-French war of 1859 — 382-83, 435, 452, 459-60, 461, 464-65, 497-98, 508, 522, 538, 542
— criticism of Lassalle's aesthetic views — 419-21, 441-45, 461
— criticism of Lassalle's personality cult — 24
Law of conservation and transformation of energy — 326-27
See also Economic laws
Law, Roman — 186
Linguistics — 19, 26, 403, 516 Literature
— general features — 441
— Realism — 419-20, 442-45
— Romanticism — 4
— typical and individual in — 419-20, 442-45
— form and content — 441-43
— topicality — 419, 420
— folklore — 6, 19-20, 26
— literary criticism — 441, 445
— irony — 91
— Greek — 257, 339, 397, 443
— Roman — 56
— Bohemian (Czech) — 19-20, 26
— English — 33, 46, 91, 356, 424, 441-44
— French — 42, 266, 278
— German — 14, 46, 71, 91, 124, 356, 366, 419-21, 423-24, 436, 441-45, 461, 530-31
— Polish — 20, 26
— Russian — 15, 19, 26, 31, 37
— Serbian — 19-20, 26
— Slav — 19-20, 26
See also Drama; Epic; Novel; Poetry; Tragedy, tragic; Writers
Loan interest — 287
Loans (state) — 380
Love — 54-57

Page me40.738
M

Machines (machinery) — 278, 279-81, 283, 305
See also Capital — fixed; Inventions
Manchester School — see Free Traders
Man, individual, personality — 322, 324-25, 327
Marianne (secret republican society in France) — 37, 42
Market — 35, 71, 212-13, 240, 347
Marx, Karl

— friendship with Engels — 97-98, 108, 111, 119, 132, 139, 145, 146-47, 149, 150-51, 152, 168-69, 173, 181, 186, 191, 198, 217, 232, 238, 243, 249, 263, 335, 374, 532, 565, 568
— joint work with Engels — 43, 51, 133, 169, 181, 186, 224, 259
— from 1856 to late 1859 (general) — 37-38, 38-41, 43-44, 53, 54, 210, 312, 369-70, 374-75, 376, 436, 440, 450-51, 458-59, 520
— contribution to New-York Daily Tribune — 63, 68, 81, 93, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 111, 114, 115, 181, 197, 215, 224, 250, 309, 336, 341-42, 362, 374, 401, 409, 523
— contribution to The New American Cyclopaedia — 127, 134, 142, 148, 158-59, 169, 170, 173, 181, 187, 198, 238, 249, 251, 259
— as editor of Das Volk — 438-39, 449, 452, 456, 457, 459, 461, 463-64, 466, 471, 473, 477, 480, 482-83, 484, 497, 501, 508, 511, 519-21 — study of political economy — 102, 126, 135, 216, 224, 226, 238, 244, 249, 256, 269-70, 295, 298-304, 310, 315, 317-18, 354-55, 369, 376-77, 395-96, 432, 566
— study of world history and history of diplomacy — 8-12, 17-18, 21, 67 — study of military history and military-theoretical problems — 100, 158-59, 169, 170, 173-74, 182, 197, 259, 263, 266, 273, 294, 297, 403
— study of Greek philosophy — 226, 268, 315-16
— and working-class movement in England — 32, 37-38, 87, 210, 228, 250, 263, 342, 345, 375, 418
— and working-class movement in Germany — 15, 25, 30, 38, 42, 43, 44, 99, 100, 134, 135
— and working-class movement in the USA — 338, 374-77, 384, 440

Page Break me40.739
— his friends and associates — 68-69, 100-01, 218, 226, 228, 249, 271, 374-75, 376, 384-85, 387, 390, 396-97, 406, 440, 566-68
— his family — 33, 45, 54-57, 59-60, 63, 66, 67-68, 71-74, 127, 255, 323-24, 328-31, 335, 337, 339, 360, 542, 548, 571
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx; Chartism, Chartist movement — part played by Marx and Engels in Chartist movement; Engels, Frederick
Marxism (general characteristics) — 377, 482
See also Communism, scientific; Dialectical materialism; Engels, Frederick; Historical materialism, materialist conception of history; Marx, Karl; Marxist political economy
Marxist political economy
— as theoretical basis of scientific communism — 518
— subject of its research — 376-77
— Marx's use of mathematics in political economy — 244
— its superiority over bourgeois and petty-bourgeois political economy — 249, 270, 298-304, 354-55, 396, 473
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx
Material, the — 282, 302, 303
Materialism — 209, 326-27, 478
See also Greek philosophy; Historical materialism, materialist conception of history Means of communication — navigation — 347

— and trade — 235-36
Means of labour
— their moral wear and tear — 280-81
Method — 249, 270, 471, 551
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx — Marx's method of economic research, dialectics in Marx's economic works Military science
— military history — 170, 172
— military literature — 189, 241
See also Art of war; Engels, Frederick — study of military history and military-theoretical problems
Mode of production — 298
Moldavia — 80
Money
— general features — 126, 301-03
— as measure of value — 301-03, 377
— as medium of circulation — 301-03, 377
— as means of hoarding — 302-03
— as means of payment — 135, 212-13, 220-21, 241-42, 302, 377
— of the world — 377
— metal — 186, 260, 301, 377
— credit — 126
— amount in circulation — 301-02
— value of — 301, 303
— transformation into capital — 303
— depreciation of — 212-13
— and possibility of crises — 302
— Engels' evaluation of Marx's theory of money — 304-05
— its analysis in Marx's work A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy — 286, 301-03, 358, 368, 369, 378
— bourgeois theories on origin and essence of money — 90, 102, 126, 135, 301-04, 370, 378
— quantity theory of money — 395-96
— metallic theory of money — 377
— criticism of 'labour money' theory — 90, 301, 303, 378
— critique of Proudhon's theory of money — 90, 301, 303, 377-78
— criticism of Lassalle's views on money — 260, 394-96
See also Bank notes; Bill of exchange; Coin; Gold and silver; Money circulation; Money market; Paper money
Money circulation — 71, 126, 208, 301-03, 317, 342, 358, 368
Money market — 35, 71, 73, 126, 208-09, 215, 219, 220-21, 229-31, 235-36, 240, 292
Mongolia, Mongols — 187
Moravia — 381
Music — 8, 512, 530
— opera — 503

Page me40.739
N

Napoleonic wars — 165-67, 170, 174-75, 177, 179, 180-81, 436

Page Break me40.740
Nation — 86
National debt — 193-94, 413
Nationality — 21, 552
Natural science — 209, 326-27
See also Cell; Darwinism; Dialectics — in nature; Law of conservation and transformation of energy
Navy — 84, 169
Necessity and chance — 291
— in history — 445
Nobility
— German — 26, 419-20, 444-45
— Polish — 420
— Russian — 552
See also Knighthood; Junkerdom, Prussian
Northern War (1700-1721) — 8-10, 91
Novel (literature) — 441

Page me40.740
O

Objective and subjective — 55, 298, 315-16
Old Hegelianism — 227, 255, 261
Opium wars
— Anglo-Chinese war of 1840-42 — 107, 362
— Anglo-Franco-Chinese war of 1856-60 — 105, 115, 350, 362, 387
— Tientsin treaties of 1858 — 347, 362
Opposition — 152, 259, 260, 419
Organism (biological) — 327

Page me40.740
P

Painting, different national schools — 131
Pan-Slavism — 5, 17, 51, 73, 75, 100, 381
Paper money — 133, 216-17, 231
Party, proletarian
— its character — 460
— Marx's party, 'our party' — 409, 440, 446, 538, 540, 547
— criticism and self-criticism — 446
— theoretical discussions — 538

— its tactics — 409, 446
— party discipline — 436, 538
— and opposition parties — 210
— conditions of its coming to power — 446
See also Communist League; Communists, communist movement; Marxism Peasantry
— in feudal society — 80, 419-20, 444
— in bourgeois-democratic revolution — 419-20
— as ally of proletariat — 38
— French — 358, 381
— German — 444-45
— Irish — 49
— Polish — 80
— Russian, peasant movement in Russia — 358, 552
See also 'Bundschuh' (peasant association in Germany in 15th-16th cent.); Peasant War in Germany, 1524-25; 'Poor Konrad' (peasant association in Germany in 16th cent.); Serfdom
Peasant War in Germany, 1524-25 — 38
Petty bourgeoisie
— in England — 264
— in Prussia — 292
Philistinism — 116, 467, 537
Philosophy — 133, 226, 241, 268-69, 315-16, 326-27
See also Dialectical materialism; Dialectics; Epicureanism; Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism; German philosophy; Greek philosophy; Hegel, Hegelianism; Historical materialism, materialist conception of history; Materialism; Roman philosophy; Scepticism, sceptics; Stoicism, stoics
Physiocrats — 4, 377
Piedmont — see Kingdom of Sardinia

Poetry
— verses — 418-19, 442
— political — 6
— Roman — 56
— Bohemian (Czech) — 19, 26
— English — 356, 444
— French — 6
— German — 32, 69, 356, 360, 372, 375, 388, 418-19, 423, 442, 458, 475, 477, 508, 511-13, 514, 516, 530-31, 534-36, 555-56
— Polish — 19-20, 26
— Serbian — 19
— Slav — 19-20, 26
— poet — 371, 372, 458, 514, 556-57
Poland — 19, 26, 75, 80, 85-86, 172
See also Emigration, emigrants — Polish
Political economy (as science, its method) — 244, 260-61, 282-83, 354-55, 396

Page Break me40.741
See also Abstraction, abstract and concrete; Marxist political economy; Bourgeois political economy
'Poor Konrad' (peasant association in Germany in 16th cent.) — 445
Prerequisites — 282, 298, 303
Press, the — 113-14, 218, 487, 494-95
Price(s) — 35, 102, 126, 201, 202, 205, 208, 209-10, 212, 213, 214, 216, 220-21, 235-36, 239-40, 253, 267, 301, 302, 304-05, 342, 350, 357, 381
Price (value) of land — 95
Production — 187, 347
Productive forces — 186
Profit — 215, 249, 283, 287
Protectionism — 304-05
Proudhonism, Proudhonists
— general characteristics — 377, 473
— as trend in French petty-bourgeois socialism — 303, 377
— as expression of tendencies of small private property — 377
— criticism of Proudhon's economic views — 90, 303, 377
— on commodity, failure to understand its relation to money — 377
— on money — 90, 301, 377
— on exchange — 90, 303, 377
— idealisation of commodity production — 377
— idea of equality — 303
Prussia — 21, 72, 86, 87, 89, 90, 94, 114, 179, 243, 266, 346, 348, 436, 537
See also Army — Prussian; Bourgeoisie — Prussian; Junkerdom, Prussian; Petty bourgeoisie — in Prussia; Working class — in Prussia
Pythagoreanism — 56

Page me40.741
R

Radicalism, Radicals — 375
Rate of exchange — 126
Rate of interest — 71, 83, 126, 229
Raw material — 283
Real, the — 260, 302
Realism — see Art — realism in art; Literature — realism
Reformation — 21, 86, 443
Reformism, struggle against it — 344
Relations of production — 55, 298-301, 303
Relativity — 322
Reserve, insurance fund — 208, 229-30
Revolution (general characteristics) — 291
See also Revolution, bourgeois, bourgeois-democratic; Revolution, proletarian, socialist Revolution, bourgeois, bourgeois-democratic — 73-74, 83, 85, 86, 145, 203, 243, 291

See also French Revolution (18th cent.); Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe; Revolution of 1848 in France. Second Republic; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states Revolution, proletarian, socialist — 41, 203, 347
Revolution of 1848-49 in Europe (general characteristics) — 419
Revolution of 1848 in France. Second Republic — 291, 310
Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany — 25, 90
Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states — 425
Rhine Province — 24-25, 32, 34, 44, 464
Ricardianism, Ricardo's theories — 283-84, 287, 298, 395-96
Roman philosophy — 270
Royal British Bank — 72, 209
Russia (Russian Empire)
— history — 8-10, 310, 346, 381, 552
— economy — 34-35, 230, 236
— science, culture, spiritual life — 19
— revolutionary movement in 19th cent. — 349, 552
— agrarian revolution — 381
— prospects, character and motive forces of revolution in — 381, 552
— Tsarism, autocracy — 423
— foreign and colonial policy of Tsarism, its diplomacy — 3, 8-9, 86, 310, 346, 368, 381, 401, 405, 426, 537-38, 552
See also Army — Russian; Crimean war of 1853-56; Nobility — Russian; Peasantry — Russian, peasant movement in Russia

Page Break me40.742
Page me40.742
S

Saint-Simonism — 72
Scepticism, sceptics — 226
Schiller Society, the (Manchester, 2nd half of 19th cent.) — 517, 527, 530-31
Science
— classification, system of sciences — 241, 260, 354-55, 396
— scientific cognition — 261
— historical development of — 261
— miscellanea — 187, 270, 278, 327, 354
See also Communism, scientific; History; Natural science; Philosophy; Political economy
Serfdom — 80
Seven Years War (1756-1763) — 289, 294
Shares, speculation in shares — 32, 72, 73, 119, 133, 200, 207, 216, 230, 240
See also Capital — share; Joint-stock companies
Sixteenth century (general) — 346-47, 420
Slavs — 21, 26-27, 85-86, 292, 346
Socialism (theories and trends)
— petty-bourgeois — 303

See also Lassalleanism, Lassalleans; Proudhonism, Proudhonists
Social relations — 186, 354
Société du dix Décembre (France, from 1849) — 157 Society — 298
— feudal — 419-20, 443-46
— bourgeois — 303, 322, 347, 356, 374
See also Man, individual, personality; Social relations; Socio-economic formation
Socio-economic formation — 302
See also Capitalism; Feudalism; Mode of production; Social relations; Society; Relations of production
Song — 6, 20, 26
Spain — 61
See also Spanish-Moroccan war of 1859-60
Spanish-Moroccan war of 1859-60 — 515-16, 523, 527, 529, 530, 547, 553
Speculation (in money, in stock) — 34, 71-72, 73-74, 119, 133, 200, 214, 216, 219, 231, 347
Speculation (speculative philosophy) — 260-61, 402
State, the — 298, 376
See also Loans (state); National debt
Statistics — 35, 83, 224, 243, 285, 347
Stock Exchange
— as centre of speculation and corruption — 71-72, 119, 133, 214-15, 230, 343 — and banks — 202, 215, 229-32
— and the state — 230
— and economic crises — 202
Stocks (of goods) — 201, 211, 212, 221, 235-36, 239, 273, 305-06, 357, 381
Stoicism, stoics — 226
Sweden — 10, 86
Switzerland — 86, 89-90, 94, 230
System — 261, 270, 315-16

Page me40.742
T

Teleology — 551
Theatre — 441-42, 530-31
Theory and practice — 256, 282-83, 316, 443, 445, 418
Thinking, thought — 259, 260, 283-84, 328
See also Abstraction, abstract and concrete
Tories (England) — 8, 104, 358, 411, 431 Town
— in Middle Ages — 86, 419-20, 443-44
Tragedy, tragic — 46, 256-57, 418-19, 443-45

Page me40.742
U

United States of America
— trade — 35-36, 214, 347
— Protectionism — 209, 304-05
— agriculture — 35, 211, 305-06
Urquhartism, Urquhartites — 4, 44, 61, 62, 64, 75, 93-94, 120, 243
Use-value — 298, 302-03

Page me40.742
V

Value — 287, 298-301, 302-03, 377
See also Commodity; Money; Use-value
Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and Vienna treaties of 1815 — 426, 427

Page Break me40.743
Page me40.743
W

Wallachia — 80
Wage labour — 270, 298, 303
Wages
— minimum — 298
— fall of — 212
— workers' struggle for higher wages — 343-44, 349
— and profit — 283
— and use of machinery — 281, 283
— and rotation of capital — 283
— analysis in Marx's works — 297-98
— criticism of Proudhon's views — 301, 303
War(s) — 50, 189, 241, 380, 381
See also Art of War; Austro-Italian war of 1848-49; Austro-Italo-French war of 1859; Military science; Northern War (1700-21); Opium wars; Seven Years War (1756-63); Spanish-Moroccan war of 1859-60; Wars of the First French Republic (late 18th-early 19th cent.)
Wars of the First French Republic (late 18th-early 19th cent.) — 86-87, 178, 189, 473-74
Weitlingianism, Weitlingians — 440, 451
Whigs (England) — 8, 10, 358, 411 Working class
— and peasantry — 41
— in England — 250, 344
— in France — 6, 82, 83, 216, 290, 291, 310, 427
— in Prussia — 25, 129
See also Party, proletarian; Revolution, proletarian, socialist Working-class and socialist movement in Bohemia — 26-27
Working-class and socialist movement in Switzerland — 89
Working-class movement in England — 204, 249-50, 344, 375

See also Chartism, Chartist movement
Working-class movement in France — 82, 289-90
Working-class movement in Germany — 15, 25, 44, 348-49
Working-class movement in the USA — 244
Working day — 212
World market — 34-35, 202-03, 305, 344, 346-47
See also Foreign trade; Money market
Writers — 423, 555-56

Footnotes

Page me40.3
†a F. Engels, 'The European War'.
Page me40.3
†b of the British Museum
Page me40.3
†c E. Herrmann, Beiträge zur Geschichte des russischen Reiches, Leipzig, 1843 (wrong date in the original).
Page me40.3
†d E. de Muralt, Essai de chronographie Byzantine pour servir á l'examen des annales du Bas-Empire et particuliérement des chronographes slavons de 395 á 1057. Fallmerayer's review of this book was published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 11 and 12 (supplement), 11 and 12 January 1856.
Page me40.4
†a Bruno Bauer
Page me40.4
†b great exemplar
Page me40.4
†c That's tremendous result.
Page me40.4
†d Caroline Schöler
Page me40.4
†e prospective
Page me40.4
†f 'The Chartist Correspondence', The Free Press, No. 15, 19 January 1856.
Page me40.5
†a very good
Page me40.5
†b Friedrich Engels Sr., father of Frederick Engels
Page me40.5
†c really into the thing
Page me40.6
†a Long live the troops of the line!
Page me40.6
†b Eugénie

Page me40.6
†c He is leaving, he is leaving, /The little mustard-vendor./ He is leaving for his country / With all his belongings.
Page me40.6
†d 'From Our Paris Correspondent. Paris, Monday Evening', Manchester Daily Examiner & Times, No. 305, 6 February 1856.
Page me40.6
†e A reference to the leading articles in The Times, Nos. 22278, 22279 and 22280, 31 January, 1 and 2 February 1856.
Page me40.7
†a Napoleon III
Page me40.7
†b at bottom
Page me40.7
†c Laurenz Dolleschall, censor of the Rheinische Zeitung in 1842, claimed that he was forced to do this work because he had to support his family.
Page me40.7
†d the way things are going in France
Page me40.7
†e Bruno Bauer
Page me40.8
†a more or less
Page me40.8
†b It's horrible
Page me40.8
†c the British Museum Library
Page me40.8
†d His Imperial Majesty (Peter I)
Page me40.8
†e James Edward Stuart
Page me40.9
†a George Mackenzie
Page me40.9
†b 'Having at first little impulsion, he presently rose into the air' (Virgil, Aeneid, IV, 176).
Page me40.9
†c Carl Gyllenborg
Page me40.9
†d 'I have raised a monument' (Horace, Odes, III, XXX, 1).
Page me40.9
†e by B. Hoadley
Page me40.10
†a Mémoires de Frédérique Sophie Wilhelmine, Margrave de Bareith, soeur de Frédéric le Grand.... Here and below Marx quotes from Volume I of Mémoires, pp. 41 and 44. (Later, historians questioned the authenticity of the Mémoires.)
Page me40.10

†b Catherine I
Page me40.11
†a Sophie Dorothea
Page me40.11
†b Karl Leopold and Catherine
Page me40.11
†c 'The Czarina began by kissing the hand of the Queen, whom he sought to embrace, but was repulsed. Next she presented to her the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg who had accompanied them and 400 self-styled ladies belonging to her suite. These were, for the most part, German servants fulfilling the duties of ladies-in-waiting, chamber-maids, cooks and laundresses. Practically every one of these creatures carried a richly clad child in her arms; and, when asked if it was hers, would reply, making salaams Russian-fashion: ”The Czar did me the honour of presenting me with this child.” The Queen refused to greet these creatures' etc.
Page me40.11
†d Frederick William I
Page me40.11
†e 'in a most indecent posture. The Czar greatly admired this statue and commanded the Czarina to kiss it. When she demurred, he grew angry and said in bad German: “Kop ab....” [“Head off”.] The Czarina was so frightened that she did all that he wished. He made no bones about asking for this statue and a number of others which the King was unable to refuse him' etc.
Page me40.11
†f Bruno Bauer
Page me40.12
†a penniless
Page me40.12
†b dear brother (Edgar Bauer)
Page me40.12
†c In his letter to Marx of 6 February 1856 Imandt wrote that Heise, ill with tuberculosis, was drinking too much whisky.
Page me40.13
†a An ironical allusion to Sebaldus Nothanker (literally: Sheetanchor), the hero of Ch. Fr. Nicolai's novel Das Leben und die Meinungen des Herrn Magister Sebaldus Nothanker.
Page me40.13
†b lewd
Page me40.13
†c doing nothing
Page me40.14
†a Marx ironically compares Wilhelm Pieper with Fridolin, a character from Schiller's ballad Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer.
Page me40.14
†b H. Heine, 'Den König Wiswamitra...' (from Buch der Lieder, 'Die Heimkehr').
Page me40.15
†a See this volume, pp. 23-25.

Page me40.15
†b as a whole
Page me40.15
†c Here Marx gives the titles of a number of chapters from Dobrowsky's book and some excerpts from it.
Page me40.15
†d J.G. Herder, Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit, Theil 4.
Page me40.15
†e Serbian name: Zemun.
Page me40.16
†a Hungarian name: Buda.
Page me40.17
†a the first to have ceased to rave
Page me40.17
†b There you have the Slavin
Page me40.17
†c Unterhaltende Belehrungen zur Förderung allgemeiner Bildung. 1-27 Bändchen, Leipzig 1851-1856.
Page me40.17
†d Various Papers on the Genius and Character of the Russians, 1768 (MS).
Page me40.17
†e L.K. Pitt, Ueber den russischen Handel (MS).
Page me40.18
†a H. Desprez, Les peuples de l'Autriche et de la Turquie.
Page me40.18
†b Charles Edmond Chojecki
Page me40.18
†c See this volume, p. 12.
Page me40.19
†a M.W. Heffter, Der Weltkampf der Deutschen und Slaven seit dem Ende des fünften Jahrhunderts....
Page me40.19
†b P.J. Schaffarik, Geschichte der slawischen Sprache und Literatur nach allen Mundarten.
Page me40.19
†c Here are the pretty daughters of the Goths singing their songs on the shore of the Black Sea.
Page me40.20
†a The name of the publisher or translator is not indicated on the title-page of this book. It is probable, however, that it was not P.O. Götze but von Busse who translated it.
Page me40.20
†b A reference to Volkslieder der Serben by Therese Albertine Luise von Jakob-Robinson (she wrote under the pen-name of Talvj).
Page me40.20
†c Cyprien Robert, Les slaves de Turquie; H. Desprez, Les peuples de l'Autriche et de la Turquie.

Page me40.20
†d The author was S. Kapper. In English the book appeared under the title A Visit to Belgrade.
Page me40.20
†e Laurenz Dolleschall, censor of the Rheinische Zeitung in 1842, claimed that he was forced to do this work because he had to support his family.
Page me40.20
†f 'Den Streitenden', Neue Preußische Zeitung, No. 54, 4 March 1856.
Page me40.21
†a Frederick William IV
Page me40.21
†b 'Leo über Thomas Münzer', Neue Preußische Zeitung, No. 51, 29 February 1856.
Page me40.21
†c F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany (published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue).
Page me40.21
†d I understand in order to believe.
Page me40.21
†e I believe in order to understand.
Page me40.21
†f Berlinische Nachrichten von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen, 27 February 1856.
Page me40.21
†g A reference to the parliamentary sitting on 29 February 1856, reported on in The Times, No. 22304, 1 March 1856.
Page me40.22
†a Marx refers to Evans' speech in the House of Commons on 3 March 1856, published in The Times, No. 22306, 4 March 1856.
Page me40.22
†b This refers to A Narrative of the Siege of Kars... by H. Sandwith.
Page me40.23
†a Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me40.23
†b the aristocracy
Page me40.23
†c kept man
Page me40.24
†a What do you think of it?
Page me40.26
†a on things Slavonic
Page me40.26
†b See this volume, p. 20.
Page me40.26
†c probably the Constitutionelles Blatt aus Böhmen
Page me40.26
†d I doubt it, however.

Page me40.26
†e Therese Albertine Luise von Jakob-Robinson (pen-name: Talvj), who published the collection Volkslieder der Serben.
Page me40.26
†f the British Museum Library
Page me40.26
†g The Kölnische Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me40.26
†h 'Den Streitenden', Neue Preußische Zeitung, No. 54, 4 March 1856.
Page me40.26
†i basically
Page me40.27
†a i.e. against the Hungarian Revolution of 1848-49
Page me40.27
†b A reference to A Narrative of the Siege of Kars... by H. Sandwith.
Page me40.27
†c come up in the world
Page me40.27
†d See this volume, p. 23.
Page me40.28
†a Papers Relative to Military Affairs in Asiatic Turkey, and the Defence and Capitulation of Kars (below Marx quotes in English from this collection).
Page me40.28
†b K. Marx, 'The Fall of Kars'.
Page me40.28
†c to the point
Page me40.28
†d Kulevi
Page me40.28
†e Kutaisi
Page me40.28
†f Batumi
Page me40.29
†a Ali Mehemet Pasha
Page me40.29
†b Rushdi Pasha, Turkish War Minister
Page me40.29
†c now Leninakan
Page me40.29
†d Victoria
Page me40.29
†e Tbilisi
Page me40.31
†a Papers Relative to Military Affairs in Asiatic Turkey, and the Defence and Capitulation of Kars
Page me40.31

†b F.A. Hamelin
Page me40.31
†c first of all
Page me40.31
†d A series of articles entitled The Fall of Kars which Marx was writing for The People's Paper. It was based on his article of the same title written for the New-York Daily Tribune.
Page me40.31
†e 'The Capitulation of Kars', The Times, Nos. 22320, 22322 and 22323, 20, 22 and 24 March 1856.
Page me40.31
†f Marx refers to his pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me40.32
†a a venue of public gatherings in London. The inaugural meeting of the International Working Men's Association was held there in September 1864.
Page me40.32
†b Löwe von Calbe
Page me40.32
†c Stuttgart (Marx deliberately uses this word and a number of others in this paragraph in their South German dialectal form).
Page me40.32
†d Nickname of Jakob Venedey under which he was ridiculed by Heine in his poem 'Kobes I' (Kobes means Jakob in the Cologne dialect).
Page me40.32
†e Ludwig Börne
Page me40.32
†f Jeanette Wohl-Straus. Heine described Börne's relations with her in his 'Ludwig Börne'.
Page me40.32
†g Protection for Trade
Page me40.33
†a Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, Act V, Scene 4.
Page me40.34
†a Papers Relative to Military Affairs in Asiatic Turkey, and the Defence and Capitulation of Kars
Page me40.34
†b H. Sandwith, A Narrative of the Siege of Kars...
Page me40.35
†a In the manuscript Marx added three noughts to all the figures in this table.
Page me40.35
†b friend
Page me40.35
†c Seiler
Page me40.36
†a See this volume, p. 33.

Page me40.36
†b Frederick William IV
Page me40.36
†c cell
Page me40.36
†d See this volume, pp. 30-31.
Page me40.37
†a Papers Relative to Military Affairs in Asiatic Turkey, and the Defence and Capitulation of Kars
Page me40.38
†a The first two articles from Marx's series The Fall of Kars published in The People's Paper on 5 and 12 April 1856 and based on Marx's article of the same title for the New-York Daily Tribune mentioned further in the text.
Page me40.38
†b the sovereignty of the proletariat in all countries (see K. Marx, 'Speech at the Anniversary of The People's Paper. Delivered in London, April 14, 1856').
Page me40.41
†a See this volume, pp. 30-31.
Page me40.41
†b turn
Page me40.41
†c It will be tough.
Page me40.41
†d gossip column
Page me40.41
†e Edgar von Westphalen
Page me40.42
†a K. Marx, The Fall of Kars, Articles III and IV
Page me40.42
†b K. Marx, 'The House of Lords and the Duke of York's Monument'.
Page me40.42
†c after a fashion
Page me40.42
†d The People's Paper, No. 208, 26 April 1856
Page me40.42
†e H. Heine, Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen, Chapter 20.
Page me40.42
†f What do you say to M. de Walewski's speech? (The speech was reported in The Times, No. 22352, 26 April 1856.)
Page me40.43
†a Napoleon III
Page me40.43
†b See previous letter.
Page me40.43
†c April in the original
Page me40.43

†d first of all
Page me40.44
†a See this volume, p. 33.
Page me40.44
†b short trip
Page me40.44
†c the British Museum Library
Page me40.44
†d K. Marx, The Fall of Kars.
Page me40.44
†e Marx
Page me40.44
†f New-Yorker Demokrat
Page me40.45
†a We shall see.
Page me40.45
†b See this volume, p. 33.
Page me40.45
†c Bazancourt, L'expédition de Crimée jusqu' á la prise de Sébastopol.
Page me40.46
†a interview
Page me40.46
†b Freund
Page me40.46
†c Marx means Johnson's notes in Plays of W. Shakespeare. With Notes of Samuel Johnson. King Henry IV is in Vol. 4 of this edition.
Page me40.46
†d Notably in George Peele's play The Turkish Mahomet and Hyrin in the Fair Greek [Trans.].
Page me40.46
†e whore
Page me40.46
†f to hear, hearing
Page me40.50
†a More precisely, from 1169, when the English feudal lords first invaded Ireland.
Page me40.50
†b in the main
Page me40.50
†c pimps
Page me40.50
†d retired colonel
Page me40.51
†a Bazancourt, L'expédition de Crimée jusqu' á la prise de Sébastopol.
Page me40.51
†b more or less
Page me40.52

†a Year added by Engels.
Page me40.52
†b See this volume, p. 46.
Page me40.54
†a sweet
Page me40.55
†a H. Heine, 'Die Jahre kommen und gehen...' (Buch der Lieder. Die Heimkehr).
Page me40.55
†b Shakespeare, Othello.
Page me40.55
†c Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act III, Scene 4.
Page me40.55
†d for ever and ever
Page me40.56
†a There is a pun here in German, the word von meaning either by or from.
Page me40.56
†b the death of his children Guido, Franziska and Edgar
Page me40.56
†c See this volume, pp. 57-58.
Page me40.56
†d Frederick Engels
Page me40.56
†e K. Marx, Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century.
Page me40.56
†f But for the first time
Page me40.56
†g Allgemeine Zeitung. Marx refers to a report from Hanover published in issue No. 169, 16 June 1856.
Page me40.56
†h K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League', March 1850, and 'Address of the Central Authority to the League', June 1850.
Page me40.57
†a The sentence is unfinished in the original.
Page me40.58
†a K. Marx, Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century.
Page me40.58
†b This paragraph is crossed out in the original.
Page me40.58
†c Here the following passage is crossed out in the manuscript: 'There are to follow some English pamphlets belonging to the epoch of Peter I; having thus made the reader familiar 1) [with] the infamies of English diplomacy, 2) with the protest [...]. From one of these despatches you will see how England conspired with Russia to crush [...]. These despatches will form a more eloquent introduction to [...].'
Page me40.58
†d The manuscript breaks off here.
Page me40.59

†a See this volume, p. 60.
Page me40.59
†b Below Marx quotes from a non-extant letter by Ironside to Cyples.
Page me40.59
†c Caroline von Westphalen
Page me40.60
†a Marx means Cyples.
Page me40.61
†a black care
Page me40.62
†a pieces of evidence
Page me40.62
†b we shall see
Page me40.63
†a Caroline von Westphalen
Page me40.63
†b Edgar von Westphalen, Jenny Marx's brother
Page me40.63
†c L. Simon, Aus dem Exil, Bd. 1-2.
Page me40.63
†d Paraphrased quotation from Engels' 'The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution' published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue (see present edition, Vol. 10, p. 177).
Page me40.64
†a See previous letter.
Page me40.64
†b K. Marx, Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century.
Page me40.64
†c we shall see
Page me40.65
†a Karl Emil Blank
Page me40.65
†b W. Pieper, 'The Coup d'État in Spain', The People's Paper, No. 221, 26 July 1856.
Page me40.65
†c K. Marx, 'The Spanish Coup d'État', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4775, 8 August 1856 (an allusion to the fact that Marx helped Pieper in writing his article for The People's Paper).
Page me40.65
†d It's fine.
Page me40.66
†a Frederick Engels
Page me40.66
†b Helene Demuth
Page me40.66
†c See this volume, pp. 61-62.

Page me40.66
†d Caroline Schöler
Page me40.67
†a K. Marx, Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century.
Page me40.68
†a Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me40.68
†b at present
Page me40.68
†c Frederick Olmsted of Putnam's Monthly Magazine
Page me40.68
†d We shall see.
Page me40.68
†e dear brother (Edgar Bauer)
Page me40.69
†a H. Heine, 'Ein Weib' (from Romanzen).
Page me40.69
†b pimp
Page me40.69
†c A. Meissner, Heinrich Heine. Erinnerungen.
Page me40.69
†d Sibylle Hess
Page me40.69
†e Nikolai Sazonov
Page me40.70
†a The Grandeur and Decline of the House of Moses (an ironical allusion to Balzac's L'Histoire de la grandeur et de la décadence de Cézar Birotteau).
Page me40.70
†b For want of means
Page me40.71
†a Marie Wilhelmine Dähnhardt
Page me40.71
†b new man
Page me40.71
†c Frederick Olmsted
Page me40.71
†d the Crimean war, 1853-56
Page me40.71
†e napoléon d'or — a twenty-franc gold coin issued by Napoleon I
Page me40.71
†f probably the Bank of France
Page me40.72
†a no matter
Page me40.73
†a Moses Hess
Page me40.73

†b Sibylle Hess
Page me40.73
†c See this volume, pp. 69-70.
Page me40.73
†d He has bought himself a place in the Pére-Lachaise of French literature.
Page me40.74
†a day of wrath
Page me40.75
†a L. Mieroslawski, De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen.
Page me40.75
†b wit
Page me40.75
†c wit of base quality
Page me40.75
†d tortuous style
Page me40.75
†e past
Page me40.75
†f (Here) — come what may!
Page me40.76
†a This draft is written in Wilhelm Pieper's hand, the date in Marx's.
Page me40.79
†a K. Marx, 'The Anglo-Persian War'.
Page me40.79
†b A. Ruge, Jagden und Tiergeschichte für Kinder.
Page me40.79
†c E. Röth, Geschichte unserer abendländischen Philosophie. Bd. 1: Die ägyptische und zoroastrische Glaubenslehre als die ältesten Quellen unserer speculativen Ideen.
Page me40.80
†a Excerpts from L. Mieroslawski's book De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen.
Page me40.80
†b diplomatic kingdom
Page me40.80
†c See this volume, p. 75.
Page me40.80
†d landed property
Page me40.80
†e Presumably the sign of the correspondent who wrote the anti-Bonapartist articles in The Manchester Guardian.
Page me40.81
†a embassy
Page me40.81
†b 'All these figures are exaggerated for the purpose of inflating the idea of Romanian nationality. They are contradicted by the facts, by history and by logic.'

Page me40.81
†c Caliban is a character in Shakespeare's The Tempest.
Page me40.82
†a 'Paris, le 23 octobre', Le Moniteur universel, No. 298, 24 October 1856.
Page me40.82
†b to talk louder
Page me40.82
†c at bottom
Page me40.83
†a wastrel
Page me40.84
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me40.84
†b See this volume, p. 71.
Page me40.84
†c to cries of 'Long live the Republic!'
Page me40.85
†a L. Mieroslawski, De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen.
Page me40.85
†b A reference to Considérations sur l'état politique de l'ancienne Pologne et sur l'histoire de son peuple (further in the text Marx quotes a passage from it in free translation), which constitutes Part 2 of Volume 2 of Joachim Lelevel's Histoire de Pologne. Part 1 of Volume 1 is entitled L'Histoire de la Pologne racontée par un oncle á ses neveux.
Page me40.85
†c representative
Page me40.85
†d Franciszek Barss
Page me40.85
†e citizen
Page me40.85
†f Stanislaus II Augustus
Page me40.86
†a traitors to the country
Page me40.86
†b What do you make of Neuchâtel and Valangin?
Page me40.87
†a golden mean
Page me40.87
†b It's disgusting!
Page me40.88
†a See this volume, p. 76.
Page me40.88
†b A reference to Marx's article 'The Right Divine of the Hohenzollerns'.
Page me40.88
†c Ferdinand Wolff

Page me40.88
†d Yorkshire in the original.
Page me40.89
†a First
Page me40.89
†b F. Engels, 'Mountain Warfare in the Past and Present'.
Page me40.89
†c Frederick William IV
Page me40.89
†d Here and further in the text Marx puns on the words Borger (lenders) and Bürger (citizens, also burghers). The allusion is to the Swiss bankers who extended loans to French manufacturers.
Page me40.89
†e swords
Page me40.90
†a Frederick William IV
Page me40.90
†b Alexander II
Page me40.90
†c This presumably refers to P.J. Proudhon's Manuel du spéculateur á la bourse.
Page me40.90
†d I shall destroy and I shall build.
Page me40.90
†e P.J. Proudhon, Systéme des contradictions économiques, ou Philosophie de la misére, Tomes I-II.
Page me40.90
†f The demonetisation of gold and silver, or rather that all merchandise should be transformed into instruments of exchange in the same way as gold and silver.
Page me40.90
†g Edgar Bauer
Page me40.91
†a A reference to B. Bauer's Kritik der Evangelien und Geschichte ihres Ursprungs, Bd. I-IV.
Page me40.91
†b J.W. von Goethe, Faust. Der Tragödie zweiter Teil, Act V.
Page me40.91
†c L. Mieroslawski, De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen.
Page me40.91
†d The Illustrated London News, No. 836 (supplement), 20 December 1856.
Page me40.92
†a by and large
Page me40.93
†a 'The Crisis in Europe'
Page me40.93

†b A reference to Marx's articles 'The Right Divine of the Hohenzollerns', 'The Anglo-Persian War' and 'The Maritime Commerce of Austria' (two articles) all of which were published in the Tribune later.
Page me40.93
†c What is to be done?
Page me40.93
†d In the original von (by)
Page me40.94
†a See this volume, p. 76.
Page me40.94
†b An allusion to A. Gurowski's influence (see this volume, p. 81).
Page me40.95
†a 'That France is rapidly taking the leadership...', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 4903, 6 January 1857.
Page me40.95
†b 'Die örtliche Vertheidigung des Bodensees', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 13, 13 January 1857.
Page me40.96
†a But what's to be done?
Page me40.96
†b The New-York Herald and The New-York Times
Page me40.96
†c In short
Page me40.96
†d provided that something is done
Page me40.96
†e See this volume, p. 81.
Page me40.97
†a no matter
Page me40.97
†b First
Page me40.98
†a F. Engels, 'Prospects of the Anglo-Persian War'.
Page me40.100
†a See this volume, p. 96.
Page me40.100
†b Karl Weerth
Page me40.100
†c Literally: for the use of the dauphin (the phrase was used in the second half of the 17th century to mark 'expurgated' editions of Latin authors intended for the French crown prince).
Page me40.100
†d Wilhelmine Weerth
Page me40.101
†a See this volume pp. 68, 81.
Page me40.101

†b All these figures are exaggerated.
Page me40.101
†c re
Page me40.101
†d It's neither good.
Page me40.101
†e Change the introduction
Page me40.102
†a G.A. Bürger, 'Lenore'.
Page me40.103
†a G. Weerth, 'Humoristische Skizzen aus dem deutschen Handelsleben', Kölnische Zeitung, No. 318, 14 November 1847; No. 337, 3 December 1847; No. 348, 14 December 1847; No. 33, 2 February 1848 (the middle part is extant in manuscript, the ending was published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nos. 1-4, 1-4 June 1848; No. 16, 16 June 1848; No. 18, 18 June 1848; No. 28, 28 June 1848; No. 36, 6 July 1848).
Page me40.103
†b Karl Weerth
Page me40.104
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me40.104
†b Hugo von Selmnitz
Page me40.104
†c 6 March
Page me40.104
†d Charles Roesgen
Page me40.105
†a L. Mieroslawski, De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen.
Page me40.105
†b J. Lelevel, Histoire de Pologne, Tomes I-II.
Page me40.105
†c junior
Page me40.105
†d This probably refers to a report from Paris in The Times, No. 22624. 10 March 1857.
Page me40.105
†e F. Engels, 'The New English Expedition in China'.
Page me40.105
†f It's a nuisance!
Page me40.105
†g that won't do. Well, we shall see.
Page me40.105
†h All yours.
Page me40.106
†a P.J. Proudhon, Manuel du spéculateur á la bourse.
Page me40.106
†b E. Bauer, Englische Freiheit.

Page me40.106
†c L. Mieroslawski, De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen; J. Lelevel, Histoire de Pologne. Tome I: 1. L'Histoire de la Pologne racontée par un oncle á ses neveux.
Page me40.107
†a An account of Palmerston's speech in the House of Commons was published in The Times, No. 22631, 18 March 1857.
Page me40.108
†a aide
Page me40.108
†b informer
Page me40.109
†a as far as politics are concerned
Page me40.109
†b 'Pera. 20 Febr.', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 63, 4 March 1857.
Page me40.111
†a Coningham made use of Th. Anstey's speeches delivered during the debates in the House of Commons from 8 February to 1 March 1848.
Page me40.111
†b in the House of Commons on 23 February 1848
Page me40.111
†c by W. Wilks
Page me40.111
†d 'From Our Own Correspondent. Brussels, March 6', The Morning Post, No. 25955, 9 March 1857 (see also this volume, p. 107).
Page me40.111
†e First
Page me40.111
†f in effect
Page me40.111
†g L. Ariosto, L'Orlando furioso.
Page me40.112
†a Here Marx crossed out the words 'respecting Circassia' (a reference to the revealing material on J. Bangya which Marx included in his article 'A Traitor in Circassia').
Page me40.113
†a 'Sir De Lacy Evans is the first-born...', The Times, No. 22641, 30 March 1857 (leader).
Page me40.113
†b Palmerston's speech before the electors of Tiverton published in The Times, No. 22641, 30 March 1857.
Page me40.113
†c K. Marx, 'A Traitor in Circassia'.
Page me40.114
†a K. Marx, 'The Anglo-Persian War', 'The Maritime Commerce of Austria'.
Page me40.115

†a A reference to the Anglo-Persian war of 1856-57 and the second Opium War, 1856-60.
Page me40.115
†b See this volume, pp. 110-11.
Page me40.115
†c W. Wilks, Palmerston in Three Epochs.
Page me40.115
†d in the House of Commons on 23 February 1848
Page me40.115
†e disjointed
Page me40.115
†f so much the better
Page me40.116
†a we shall have unadulterated Palmerston
Page me40.116
†b 'From Our Own Correspondent. Brussels, March 6', The Morning Post, No. 25955, 9 March 1857.
Page me40.116
†c 'One of the greatest advantages...', The Times, No. 22634, 21 March 1857.
Page me40.116
†d that suffices
Page me40.117
†a Engels presumably refers to the pamphlet The Betrayal of England, compiled of Anstey's speeches in the House of Commons debate lasting from 8 February to 1 March 1848.
Page me40.117
†b if called for
Page me40.118
†a more or less
Page me40.119
†a An account of S. Herbert's speech, delivered on 19 March, was published in The Times, No. 22633, 20 March 1857.
Page me40.119
†b An account of Russell's speech, delivered on 27 March, was published in The Times, No. 22640, 28 March 1857.
Page me40.119
†c 'The Sham Blockade of Russia', The Morning Advertiser, No. 19832, 12 January 1855.
Page me40.120
†a Diplomatic Transactions in Central Asia...
Page me40.120
†b Fr. Thiersch, De l'état actuel de la Gréce...
Page me40.120
†c It has not been established which work by Maurenbrecher Marx had in mind.
Page me40.120

†d Correspondence 1839-1841, Relative to the Affairs of the East, and the Conflict Between Egypt and Turkey
Page me40.120
†e to the letter
Page me40.120
†f J. Grimm, Geschichte der deutschen Sprache.
Page me40.120
†g water
Page me40.121
†a F. Engels, 'Changes in the Russian Army'.
Page me40.121
†b See previous letter.
Page me40.122
†a Cf. Matthew 5:29, 30
Page me40.122
†b Edgar Bauer's
Page me40.122
†c See this volume, p. 106.
Page me40.122
†d At last there's
Page me40.123
†a I was becoming demoralised by inactivity.
Page me40.123
†b accounts
Page me40.123
†c Brockhaus' Konversations-Lexikon
Page me40.124
†a I shall see!
Page me40.124
†b that would be better
Page me40.125
†a See this volume, p. 98.
Page me40.126
†a See this volume, p. 120.
Page me40.127
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me40.127
†b See W. Shakespeare, King Henry IV, King Henry V and The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Page me40.127
†c Th. Mommsen, Römische Geschichte, Bd. 1-3.
Page me40.128
†a Lassalle's letter to Marx of 26 April 1857
Page me40.128
†b Lassalle's Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos, published later.

Page me40.128
†c 'The Crédit Mobilier of France', The Times, No. 22670, 2 May 1857.
Page me40.129
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me40.129
†b See this volume, pp. 24-25.
Page me40.130
†a more or less
Page me40.130
†b F. Engels, 'Persia — China'.
Page me40.131
†a more or less
Page me40.131
†b If possible
Page me40.132
†a for want of anything better
Page me40.132
†b Danish language
Page me40.132
†c by
Page me40.133
†a Published in Le Moniteur universel, No. 120, 30 April 1857 and The Times, No. 22670, 2 May 1857 (see this volume, p. 128).
Page me40.133
†b order of the supreme wisdom
Page me40.133
†c joint-stock companies
Page me40.133
†d joint-stock companies with limited liability
Page me40.134
†a F. Engels, 'Persia — China'.
Page me40.134
†b Stalker and Etheridge
Page me40.134
†c Johannes Miquel
Page me40.135
†a J.H. Stocqueler, The Military Encyclopaedia.
Page me40.137
†a what can be done?
Page me40.138
†a K. Marx, Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century.
Page me40.139
†a Issue No. 34 of The Free Press, 1 April 1857, containing a section of Marx's Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century.
Page me40.139
†b G.A. Bürger, 'Lenore'.

Page me40.140
†a The reference is presumably to the article 'Army' requested by Dana for The New American Cyclopaedia.
Page me40.141
†a W. Rüstow, Heerwesen und Kriegführung C. Julius Cäsars.
Page me40.142
†a A reference to the article 'Army' for The New American Cyclopaedia.
Page me40.142
†b the British Museum Library
Page me40.142
†a Engels dated the letter 10 July, which is a mistake, for 10 July 1857 was a Friday, not a Saturday.
Page me40.144
†a This refers to the following items by Engels for The New American Cyclopaedia: 'Abensberg', 'Acre', 'Actium', '197land Islands', 'Albuera', 'Aldenhoven', 'Alessandria', 'Amusette' and 'Antwerp' (see this volume, pp. 136-37).
Page me40.146
†a for The New American Cyclopaedia (see this volume, p. 144).
Page me40.146
†b Marx's article 'The Revolt in India' appeared in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5082, on 4 August 1857.
Page me40.147
†a W. Rüstow, Heerwesen und Kriegführung C. Julius Cäsars.
Page me40.147
†b This probably refers to the French translation of Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste... herausgegeben von J.S. Ersch und J.G. Gruber.
Page me40.148
†a at the bottom of my heart
Page me40.148
†b Engels' articles 'Arbela', 'Arquebuse', 'Aspern', 'Airey' and 'Attack'.
Page me40.149
†a wrong date in the original: 30 July
Page me40.150
†a Articles on military matters for The American Cyclopaedia
Page me40.151
†a Marx uses an inversion of the German saying 'Not bricht Eisen', literally 'Necessity breaks iron', making a pun on the word 'Not', which also means 'affliction'.
Page me40.152
†a Such are my theses
Page me40.152
†b See Marx's articles 'State of the Indian Insurrection' and 'The Indian Insurrection'.
Page me40.152
†c 'Situation de la banque de France et de ses succursales', Le Moniteur universel, Nos. 163 and 191, 12 June and 10 July 1857.
Page me40.152

†d Charles Gabriel Germiny
Page me40.154
†a at the moment
Page me40.155
†a even granted
Page me40.155
†b See this volume, pp. 151-53.
Page me40.156
†a police spies
Page me40.156
†b In the original this sentence occurs twice: in English, as given here, and, prior to this, in the Alsatian dialect: 'Un was der Kerl noch mit einem Appetit fresse kann, un sei Kopp is doch nit e Pfennig wert.'
Page me40.156
†c on the first floor
Page me40.157
†a Is there a criminal among us then?
Page me40.157
†b There he is!
Page me40.159
†a New-York Daily Tribune
Page me40.159
†b Marx seems mistakenly to identify George Ripley, editor of The New American Cyclopaedia, with the military writer Roswell Sabine Ripley.
Page me40.159
†c stop-gap
Page me40.159
†d the articles 'Abatis' and 'Afghanistan'
Page me40.160
†a April in the original
Page me40.160
†b See this volume, p. 152.
Page me40.161
†a i.e. of the Crimean war of 1853-56 waged by Britain, France, Sardinia and Turkey against Russia
Page me40.162
†a The material that follows was used by Marx and Engels in their articles 'Bennigsen' and 'Barclay de Tolly'.
Page me40.163
†a 'A robbers' den into which Bennigsen has ventured' (A.H. Jomini, Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, t. 2, p. 414).
Page me40.163
†b 14 June 1807
Page me40.163
†c 'committed mistake after mistake on that day ... his conduct was a mixture of rash imprudence and irresolution' (A.H. Jomini, op. cit., t. 2, p. 421).

Page me40.164
†a common sense
Page me40.164
†b An allusion to Napoleon's words 'ordre, contreordre, désordre'.
Page me40.165
†a The relevant passages were used by Marx in his articles 'Berthier' and 'Bernadotte'. The facts connected with Bernadotte's diplomatic mission in Vienna are here distorted (see also this volume, pp. 169-70).
Page me40.165
†b Engels condenses some of the quotations from Jomini's book.
Page me40.165
†c Used by Marx in his article 'Bernadotte'.
Page me40.165
†d Here and below Engels' italics.
Page me40.165
†e Used by Marx in his article 'Brune'.
Page me40.166
†a 'Bernadotte ... a man of refinement, of brilliant appearance; the plans of operations which he drew up in his capacity as War Minister proved him to be better as a subaltern than as a general-in-chief' (p. 60).
Page me40.166
'Marmont, formerly my ADC and artillery officer' (pp. 60-61).
Page me40.166
'Davout, who had a good education, possessed a well-organised brain and very correct ideas about war. His rough ways and a disposition at once suspicious and harsh earned him many enemies, and in the grave circumstances in which he found himself the spirit of prejudice broke loose against him with great injustice. Severe but fair towards his subordinates, he knew better than anyone else how to maintain discipline among his men; not one of my marshals demanded so much of his subordinates, and not one of them induced them to serve with such punctiliousness' (p. 61).
Page me40.166
'Soult, with his manly build, his broad, hard-working, active and untiring mind, had demonstrated superior talents' (p. 61).
Page me40.166
'Lannes; covered with glory and with wounds, this brave man lacked set principles concerning war; but he made up for this with his admirable judgment, and on the battlefield he was second to none of his colleagues' (p. 61).
Page me40.166
'Ney. Lannes was perhaps as brilliant as he in many an attack; but the fortitude which Ney displayed in the great disaster of 1812, when he commanded all the corps of the army in succession, ranks him first among the brave men of all times. Like many of his colleagues, he understood nothing about war on a large scale on the map; but on the ground his assurance, his sharpsightedness and his poise were unequalled' (p. 62).
Page me40.166
'Murat, who was indebted to his good looks, his courage and his activity for the honour of being my ADC and my brother-in-law, never lived up to the colossal reputation which I had made for him. For the rest, he had a natural wit, brilliant courage and great energy' (p. 63).

Page me40.166
'Masséna received from nature all that goes to make an excellent soldier, endowed with a splendid character, a courage which stood the test and a sharpsightedness which inspired the most prompt and most felicitous decisions; he cannot be denied a distinguished place among the captains of our time. But it must be admitted that he shone more in battle than at the council table' (p. 63).

Footnote Page Break 167
Page me40.167
'Brune was not without a certain merit, but all considered, he was a tribune general rather than a formidable soldier' (p. 64).
Page me40.167
'Mortier, less brilliant, was however more reliable; his calm and sangfroid, which became proverbial among his soldiers, won him success more than once, and he was one of those who could lead a corps under my direction' (p. 64).
Page me40.167
'Bessiéres had proved his worth with me in the army of Italy, in which he commanded my mounted guides. All he had to distinguish him was a great spirit of order and a recognised valour. He was methodical and excessively timid at the council table' (p. 64).
Page me40.167
'Lefebvre, Duke of Danzig, was a true grenadier. A child of nature, he owed everything to his natural wit, to his great bravery and his straightforward, naive character. He knew how to win the soldiers' love and lead them straight into action; that was where his merit lay' (p. 64).
Page me40.167
'Jourdan owed much of his reputation to fortune. A good administrator, hard-working, a man of order and integrity. And had he had training, he would have made a very good chief of staff of a great army under a commander who directed him well' (p. 64).
Page me40.167
'Macdonald ... manoeuvred very badly at La Trebbia' (p. 65).
Page me40.167
†a stamp
Page me40.168
†a Engels' description of Bem was partly reproduced in the article 'Bem' by Marx and Engels.
Page me40.168
†b trestle-bridges
Page me40.168
†c 'Barbette', 'Bastion' and 'Bayonet'
Page me40.169
†a The source quoted below has not been found.
Page me40.169

†b See J. Bem, 'Ueber die Vertheidigung Warschau's am 6 und 7 Sept. 1831', Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 470-75, 3-6 December 1831.
Page me40.169
†c A reference to the material for Engels' article 'Bridge, Military' which Marx promised to look up for him in the British Museum Library.
Page me40.169
†d April in the original
Page me40.170
†a See this volume, p. 165.
Page me40.170
†b G. von Griesheim, Vorlesungen über die Taktik.
Page me40.171
†a See this volume, pp. 166-68.
Page me40.171
†b I shall see
Page me40.171
†c as an artillery major
Page me40.172
†a Part of this passage was used by Marx and Engels in their article 'Bem'.
Page me40.172
†b skirmishers
Page me40.172
†c second-line troops
Page me40.172
†d excerpts from various sources made by Marx for the article 'Bridge, Military', on which Engels was working
Page me40.172
†e [F.K.F.] Müffling, Passages from My Life.
Page me40.173
†a 'Bennigsen' by Marx and Engels and 'Blum' and 'Bourrienne' by Marx
Page me40.174
†a F. Engels, 'Battle'.
Page me40.174
†b Czech name: Jihlava.
Page me40.174
†c Czech name: Brno.
Page me40.174
†d A.H. Jomini, Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, t. 2.
Page me40.174
†e basically
Page me40.175
†a undue punctiliousness (A.H. Jomini, op. cit., p. 290)
Page me40.175
†b Beauharnais
Page me40.175

†c 'Eugéne debouched near Wagram, but having arrived in the midst of the enemy reserves and not being supported by Bernadotte, who had not joined battle either early enough or resolutely enough, he was attacked on his front and flanks and was smartly driven back as far as my Guard' (A.H. Jomini, op. cit., t. 3, p. 266. Here Jomini quotes Napoleon).

Page me40.175

†d Engels' notes on Bernadotte were used by Marx in his article 'Bernadotte'.

Page me40.175

†e that's all

Page me40.177

†a A.H. Jomini, Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon, t. 3. Engels' notes on Bernadotte (see this volume, pp. 164-65) were used by Marx in his article 'Bernadotte'.

Page me40.177

†b swashbuckler

Page me40.178

†a Almost the whole of this passage is reproduced in the article 'Bosquet' by Marx and Engels.

Page me40.178

†b G.L. Blücher, Kampagne-Journal der Jahre 1793 und 1794.

Page me40.179

†a Frederick William III

Page me40.179

†b [F.K.F.] Müffling, Passages from My Life (below Engels quotes from p. 225 of this book).

Page me40.179

†c Polish name: Kaczawa.

Page me40.180

†a at whatever cost

Page me40.180

†b Szczecin

Page me40.180

†c Basically

Page me40.180

†d Finally

Page me40.180

†e Engels' description of Blücher here was used in the article 'Blücher' by Marx and Engels.

Page me40.181

†a the British Museum

Page me40.182

†a here is the result

Page me40.184

†a George Anson

Page me40.184

†b In the original Marx marked this paragraph with a vertical line in the margin (the italics are also his).

Page me40.184
†c The figures were inserted by Marx.
Page me40.184
†d In the original the first three sentences of this paragraph were marked with a vertical line by Marx.
Page me40.184
†e cost what it may
Page me40.185
†a squat down before
Page me40.185
†b Marx marked the last two sentences with a vertical line in the original.
Page me40.186
†a wages
Page me40.186
†b Presumably W. Bötticher's Geschichte der Carthager.
Page me40.187
†a N. Machiavelli, Le Istorie Fiorentine (in Tutte le opere di Niccoló Machiavelli..., t. 1).
Page me40.187
†b So much the better for us.
Page me40.187
†c Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste
Page me40.188
†a Engels alludes to the French saying, 'Au royaume des aveugles les borgnes sont rois' ('In the kingdom of the blind the one-eyed man is king').
Page me40.189
†a Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.189
†b Engels means Hermann Buck.
Page me40.190
†a Engels means Hermann Buck.
Page me40.190
†b Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.190
†c the devil take him!
Page me40.190
†d The Jersey Independent
Page me40.190
†e Lemoine
Page me40.190
†f F. Engels, 'Bridge, Military'.
Page me40.191
†a probably Peter Imandt
Page me40.191
†b first
Page me40.191

†c Martin Heckscher
Page me40.191
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Review. May to October [1850]'.
Page me40.192
†a place
Page me40.193
†a This table, slightly abridged, was appended to Marx's article 'The Revolt in India' published in the New-York Daily Tribune, 14 November 1857.
Page me40.194
†a by order of the Mufti (i.e. of Napoleon III)
Page me40.194
†b Tiers consolidé — the French national debt after its reduction by two-thirds in 1797.
Page me40.194
†c brazen
Page me40.195
†a A reference to the articles 'Armada' and 'Ayacucho' by Marx and Engels (see this volume, p. 173).
Page me40.196
†a Hermann Buck
Page me40.196
†b Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.196
†c François Godfrey
Page me40.196
†d the highest court and police officer in medieval France
Page me40.196
†e such is
Page me40.197
†a So much the better.
Page me40.197
†b We're now in luck.
Page me40.198
†a Engels did write it ('The Capture of Delhi').
Page me40.198
†b C. von Clausewitz, Der Feldzug von 1812 in Rußland, der Feldzug von 1813 bis zum Waffenstillstand und der Feldzug von 1814 in Frankreich and Der Feldzug von 1815 in Frankreich; [F.K.F.] Müffling, Passages from My Life....
Page me40.198
†c if he knew
Page me40.198
†d King Frederick William IV of Prussia
Page me40.199
†a K. Marx, 'The British Revulsion'.
Page me40.201
†a See this volume p. 205.

Page me40.202
†a Tuscany, Parma and Modena
Page me40.203
†a knowledge of what they are doing
Page me40.204
†a with due formality
Page me40.204
†b See p. 205.
Page me40.204
†c F. Engels, 'The Capture of Delhi'.
Page me40.207
†a F. Engels, 'The Capture of Delhi'.
Page me40.208
†a F. Engels, 'The Capture of Delhi'.
Page me40.209
†a Hedwig Ruge
Page me40.209
†b former
Page me40.209
†c Hermann Heinrich Becker
Page me40.209
†d See this volume, p. 202.
Page me40.210
†a The People's Paper
Page me40.210
†b 'Mr. John Frost to the Secretary of the Chartists of Nottingham', The People's Paper, No. 289, 14 November 1857.
Page me40.211
†a See this volume, p. 208.
Page me40.211
†b Mincing Lane — a street in London, centre of wholesale trade in colonial goods; Mark Lane — a street in London where the Corn Exchange is situated.
Page me40.212
†a (Nov. 4th?) added by Marx
Page me40.214
†a See this volume, pp. 208-10.
Page me40.214
†b guerrilla warfare
Page me40.214
†c See this volume, p. 211.
Page me40.214
†d Mincing Lane — a street in London, centre of wholesale trade in colonial goods; Mark Lane — a London street where the Corn Exchange is situated.
Page me40.215
†a K. Marx, 'The English Bank Act of 1844 and the Monetary Crisis in England'.
Page me40.215

†b Square in London where the offices of The Times are situated.
Page me40.215
†c S.J. Loyd's speech in the House of Lords on 3 December 1857 (The Times, No. 22855, 4 December 1857).
Page me40.215
†d right to work
Page me40.215
†e right to profit
Page me40.216
†a Quoted from a report in The Economist, No. 744, 28 November 1857.
Page me40.216
†b at any price
Page me40.216
†c Paper money issued by the French revolutionary government in 1789; withdrawn in 1797.
Page me40.217
†a 'The Deeper Causes of the Recent Pressure', The Economist, No. 745, 5 December 1857.
Page me40.217
†b See this volume, p. 199.
Page me40.217
†c Berliner
Page me40.218
†a Literally: 'a grove from not being light'. The expression, first used by Quintilian in De institution oratoria (I, 6, 34), illustrates the practice ascribed to ancient Roman etymologists of deriving words from their semantic opposites, as lucus ('grove') from lucere ('to shine, be light') because a grove is not light. Marx means that despite its name The Morning Star is rather unilluminating.
Page me40.218
†b Literally: always partridge. Here: always the same thing. The phrase is attributed to the confessor of King Henry IV of France.
Page me40.221
†a let's say
Page me40.222
†a it would require too much thought
Page me40.222
†b on the alert
Page me40.223
†a Reported in The Times, Nos. 22860, 22861, 22865 and 22866, 10, 11, 16 and 17 December 1857.
Page me40.224
†a See this volume, p. 215.
Page me40.224
†b See this volume, p. 111.
Page me40.224
†c thoroughly

Page me40.225
†a Le Havre
Page me40.225
†b at bottom
Page me40.226
†a Marx means his letter to Lassalle of 8 November 1855 (see present edition, Vol. 39).
Page me40.226
†b F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.226
†c The manuscript of this letter is seriously damaged. The words in square brackets are editorial reconstructions. The marks of omission stand for passages that cannot be restored.
Page me40.226
†d Marx is referring to his Nobebooks on Epicurean Philosophy compiled in 1839 and his doctoral dissertation, Difference Between the Democritean and Epicurean Philosophy of Nature written in 1840-41.
Page me40.226
†e Die Presse
Page me40.226
†f relatively speaking
Page me40.227
†a F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.228
†a See this volume, pp. 225-27.
Page me40.228
†a Marx used the word 'pedlarmassig' here, formed of the English word 'pedlar' and the German 'massig' meaning 'after the fashion of'.
Page me40.230
†a stocks
Page me40.230
†b See 'Bourse du Jeudi 26 novembre 1857', Le Moniteur universel, No. 331, 27 November 1857; 'Bourse du Mardi 22 décembre 1857', Le Moniteur universel, No. 357, 23 December 1857; 'Bourse du Jeudi 29 octobre 1857', Le Moniteur universel, No. 303, 30 October 1857. In these sources the figure 2,985 refers to the shares of the Bank of France. The corresponding figure for Orleans Railways is 1,300, which bears out Marx's argument on the buoyancy of railway stock.
Page me40.230
†c 'Situation de la banque de France et de ses succursales', Le Moniteur universel, Nos. 282, 317, 345, 9 October, 13 November, 11 December 1857.
Page me40.230
†d in truly grand style
Page me40.231
†a Paper money issued by the French revolutionary government in 1789: withdrawn in 1797.
Page me40.232

†a French government stocks, the shares and bonds of industrial and banking concerns incorporated with limited liability.
Page me40.232
†b a railway suboffice
Page me40.232
†c presumably Charles Roesgen
Page me40.233
†a In reply to this request Engels wrote the article 'The Siege and Storm of Lucknow'.
Page me40.233
†b The article in question, 'The Siege and Storm of Lucknow', was written later and published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 30 January 1858. In it Engels used some of the ideas expressed in this letter.
Page me40.234
†a Colin Campbell
Page me40.235
†a at heart
Page me40.235
†b That's what supply and demand is like in time of crisis.
Page me40.237
†a F. Engels, 'The Siege and Storm of Lucknow'.
Page me40.237
†b See this volume, pp. 227-28
Page me40.238
†a the British Museum Library
Page me40.239
†a F. Engels, 'The Siege and Storm of Lucknow'.
Page me40.239
†b F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.241
†a W. Rüstow, Heerwesen und Kriegführung C. Julius Cäsars.
Page me40.241
†b Charles Roesgen
Page me40.242
†a C. von Clausewitz, Vom Kriege, Vol. I, Book 2, Chapter 3.
Page me40.242
†b F. Engels, 'The Siege and Storm of Lucknow'.
Page me40.242
†c See this volume, p. 240.
Page me40.242
†d vapidity
Page me40.244
†a the British Museum Library
Page me40.244
†b See this volume, p. 241.
Page me40.247

†a C. von Clausewitz, Der Feldzug von 1812 in Rußland, der Feldzug von 1813 bis zum Waffenstillstand und der Feldzug von 1814 in Frankreich and Der Feldzug von 1815 in Frankreich.
Page me40.247
†b F. Engels. 'The Relief of Lucknow'.
Page me40.247
†c Allgemeine Encyclopädie der Wissenschaften und Künste ... bearbeitet und herausgegeben von J.S. Ersch und J.G. Gruber.
Page me40.248
†a Rudolf Schramm, brother of Conrad Schramm
Page me40.249
†a F. Engels, 'The Relief of Lucknow'.
Page me40.249
†b the British Museum Library
Page me40.249
†c stew
Page me40.250
†a Reynolds's Newspaper
Page me40.250
†b See this volume, pp. 227-28.
Page me40.251
†a See this volume, p. 250.
Page me40.252
†a Brockhaus' Konversations-Lexikon
Page me40.253
†a Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.253
†b See this volume, p. 250.
Page me40.253
†c facial neuralgia
Page me40.254
†a F. Engels, 'Windham's Defeat'.
Page me40.255
†a F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.255
†b We shall see
Page me40.255
†c Eliza Cheney
Page me40.255
†d police spies
Page me40.256
†a F. Engels, 'Berme', 'Blenheim', 'Borodino'.
Page me40.256
†b grocers
Page me40.256
†c Napoleon III

Page me40.256
†d We shall see.
Page me40.257
†a There are many wonderful things, and nothing is more wonderful than man' (Sophocles, Antigone, Lines 339-40).
Page me40.257
†b F. Engels, 'Windham's Defeat'.
Page me40.258
†a Well
Page me40.258
†b instant
Page me40.258
†c J.B.A. Charras, Histoire de la campagne de 1815.
Page me40.259
†a All names and parentheses written in English by Marx.
Page me40.259
†b 'Camp'
Page me40.259
†c Probably a reference to W.M.L. de Wette's Lehrbuch der hebräisch-jüdischen Archäologie...
Page me40.259
†d the British Museum Library
Page me40.259
†e basically
Page me40.259
†f hallowed forms
Page me40.260
†a G.W.F. Hegel, Vorlesungen über die Geschichte der Philosophie.
Page me40.260
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt (see this volume, p. 257)
Page me40.260
†c that is correct
Page me40.260
†d F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos, Bd. I, S. 222-23.
Page me40.261
†a See this volume, p. 227.
Page me40.262
†a in the main
Page me40.262
†b F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.263
†a The Jersey Independent
Page me40.263
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me40.263

†c F. Engels, 'Artillery'.
Page me40.264
†a G. von Griesheim, Vorlesungen über die Taktik.
Page me40.264
†b See previous letter.
Page me40.264
†c George Julian Harney
Page me40.264
†d Waschlapski, of which the English equivalent would be Dishragski, is the name of a down-at-heel nobleman in Heine's satirical poem Zwei Ritter. By the crapauds and Waschlapskis Engels means French and Polish petty-bourgeois refugees in Jersey.
Page me40.264
†e Silly ass! (Engels wrote this paragraph in the margin.)
Page me40.264
†f is working for us
Page me40.266
†a See this volume, p. 251.
Page me40.266
†b K. Marx, 'Bolivar y Ponte'.
Page me40.266
†c The golden mean
Page me40.266
†d V. Hugo, Napoléon le petit (Hugo first used the phrase in a speech in the Legislative Assembly in 1851).
Page me40.266
†e This passage from an article in Le Moniteur universel, No. 320, 9 August 1802 (datelined 'Paris, le 19 thermidor') is quoted by Marx in English according to Cobbett's Annual Register. From July to December, 1802, Vol. II.
Page me40.267
†a See this volume, p. 231.
Page me40.267
†b then we shall see
Page me40.267
†c Brockhaus' Konversations-Lexikon
Page me40.268
†a at bottom
Page me40.268
†b i.e. jumper
Page me40.268
†c don't worry
Page me40.268
†d F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.269
†a his very self
Page me40.269
†b the ultimate aim of his whole life

Page me40.269
†c Max Friedländer
Page me40.271
†a in Lassalle's letter to Marx of 10 February 1858 (see this volume, p. 272)
Page me40.271
†b I detest and repudiate the common people (Horace, Odes, III, I, 1).
Page me40.271
†c conscientiously
Page me40.272
†a See this volume, p. 228.
Page me40.272
†b See previous letter, p. 270.
Page me40.272
†c account
Page me40.273
†a petty miseries of domestic and private life
Page me40.273
†b The original has Grind, a distorted form of the German Gründe (reasons).
Page me40.273
†c depots
Page me40.273
†d 'Situation des entrepôts á la fin du mois de décembre', Le Moniteur universel, No. 24, 24 January 1858.
Page me40.273
†e 'From Our Own Correspondent. Paris, Thursday', The Economist, No. 756, 20 February 1858.
Page me40.274
†a Cf. references to the 'mole' in Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte and 'Speech at the Anniversary of The People's Paper' (present edition, Vol. 11, p. 185 and Vol. 14, p. 656).
Page me40.274
†b Crossed out in the original: 'R/J 56641, Manchester, 16 Jan. 1857' (see next letter).
Page me40.274
†c the 1813-14 military campaigns against Napoleonic France
Page me40.275
†a Edward Truelove
Page me40.275
†b policemen
Page me40.276
†a Edward Truelove
Page me40.277
†a The contribution datelined 'Paris, Saturday, Feb. 27, 6 p.m.', The Times, No. 22930, 2 March 1858.
Page me40.277
†b but it's ridiculous

Page me40.277
†c F. Pyat, A. Besson, A. Talandier, Letter to the Parliament and the Press (Marx seems to have used the French version of the letter).
Page me40.278
†a Derby's speech in the House of Lords of 1 March 1858 published in The Times, No. 22930, 2 March 1858.
Page me40.278
†b Ch. Babbage, On the Economy of Machinery and Manufactures, p. 285.
Page me40.279
†a that properly speaking there are no political police in England
Page me40.279
†b However
Page me40.279
†c That ass
Page me40.279
†d Ch. Babbage, On the Economy of Machinery and Manufactures.
Page me40.282
†a police spies
Page me40.282
†b more or less
Page me40.282
†c explanations
Page me40.283
†a N.W. Senior, Letters on the Factory Act..., pp. 12, 13.
Page me40.283
†b himself
Page me40.284
†a D. Ricardo, On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation, p. 420. (Marx quotes the passage in his own German translation.)
Page me40.284
†b What a triumph for
Page me40.285
†a W.F.P. Napier, History of the War in the Peninsula...
Page me40.285
†b Alphonse Dürr
Page me40.285
†c This paragraph was added in pencil in the original.
Page me40.286
†a Ms. damaged.
Page me40.286
†b First of all
Page me40.286
†c A. Quételet. Sur l'homme et le développement de ses facultés.... Marx used an English translation of the book, A Treatise on Man and the Development of the Faculties.
Page me40.286

†d This refers to the large economic work planned by Marx. Only one instalment was published. It appeared under the title A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy in 1859.
Page me40.288
†a See previous letter.
Page me40.289
†a W. Siborne, History of the War in France and Belgium, in 1815; A.H. Jomini, Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon...
Page me40.289
†b we shall see
Page me40.289
†c workers
Page me40.289
†d Long live the Republic.
Page me40.289
†e wholly at random
Page me40.289
†f workers' settlements
Page me40.289
†g workshops on a large scale
Page me40.290
†a waterside terrace
Page me40.290
†b the political horizon is lowering
Page me40.290
†c 'A Châlon-sur-Saône, dans la soirée...', Le Moniteur universel, No. 68, 9 March 1858.
Page me40.291
†a i.e. during the February Revolution of 1848
Page me40.291
†b there remains growing repression
Page me40.291
†c expedient
Page me40.291
†d Given an insurrection
Page me40.291
†e save that later they may send troops against the suburbs
Page me40.291
†f too late
Page me40.292
†a resumption of business
Page me40.292
†b the Prince of Prussia
Page me40.292
†c After all
Page me40.293

†a 'We would begin by throwing all the Jérômes out of the window and then get along as best we could with the Orleans.'
Page me40.293
†b A.H. Jomini, Vie politique et militaire de Napoléon...; G. Cathcart, Commentaries on the War in Russia and Germany in 1812 and 1813.
Page me40.294
†a K. Marx, 'Bonaparte's Present Position'.
Page me40.294
†b Danger in delay (Livy, History of Rome, Vol. XXXVIII, Chap. 25).
Page me40.294
†c See this volume, pp. 289-93.
Page me40.294
†d The number of the note is no longer to be found in the original.
Page me40.295
†a of 26 March 1858
Page me40.295
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.296
†a See this volume, pp. 566-68.
Page me40.296
†b Ibid., p. 289.
Page me40.297
†a grocer
Page me40.297
†b the order of the day
Page me40.297
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.298
†a the incriminating evidence. Here, the main topic.
Page me40.298
†b W. Petty, A Treatise of Taxes and Contributions...; D. Ricardo, On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation.
Page me40.301
†a more or less
Page me40.301
†b Marx means the following works: J. Steuart, An Inquiry into the Principles of Political Oeconomy...; D. Urquhart, Familiar Words...; J. Gray, Lectures on the Nature and Use of Money, The Social System...; J.F. Bray, Labour's Wrongs and Labour's Remedy....
Page me40.302
†a just like that
Page me40.303
†a Fr. Bastiat, Harmonies économiques; H. Ch. Carey, Essay on the Rate of Wages....
Page me40.304
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.

Page me40.305
†a See this volume, pp. 202, 213, 235-36, 239-40.
Page me40.305
†b Ibid., p. 205. The continuation of the table is not extant.
Page me40.306
†a M stands for mille (Latin: thousand).
Page me40.306
†b Eugéne, son of Napoleon III
Page me40.307
†a F. Engels, 'The Fall of Lucknow'.
Page me40.307
†b subject up his sleeve
Page me40.307
†c save for the
Page me40.307
†d police spies
Page me40.308
†a 'Trial of Simon Bernard', The Morning Post, No. 26298, 13 April 1858.
Page me40.308
†b The Jersey Independent
Page me40.308
†c Engels has grauss — South-German for gross (great).
Page me40.308
†d Napoleon III
Page me40.308
†e F. Engels, 'The Fall of Lucknow'.
Page me40.308
†f [W.H. Russell,] 'The Capture of Lucknow', The Times, No. 22972, 20 April 1858.
Page me40.309
†a disjointed
Page me40.309
†b C.B. Cavour's speech of 16 April 1858 in the Chamber of Representatives of the Kingdom of Piedmont, The Times, No. 22973, 21 April 1858; A.F. La Marmora's speech of 17 April 1858 in the Chamber of Representatives of the Kingdom of Piedmont, The Times, No. 22974, 22 April 1858.
Page me40.309
†c K. Marx, 'The French Trials in London', 'The Financial Position of France', 'Mr Disraeli's Budget', 'The English Alliance'.
Page me40.310
†a first of all
Page me40.310
†b Hence these tears (Terence, Andria, I, i, 99).
Page me40.310
†c L. Blanc, 1848. Historical Revelations...
Page me40.310

†d the little one
Page me40.310
†e Prince Ibrahim Karabatir
Page me40.311
†a which is quite possible
Page me40.312
†a 6 May 1858
Page me40.312
†b by and large
Page me40.312
†c See this volume, pp. 252-53.
Page me40.313
†a See this volume, pp. 374-75, 571.
Page me40.314
†a Probably a reference to the book: M.J. Schleiden, Die Pflanze und ihr Leben.
Page me40.314
†b I see with pleasure from your portraits that you have both grown a lot and that, although you are now grown-up young girls, your faces are still as frank and artless as of old; and you must believe me still to be your old
Page me40.315
†a After so many setbacks (Virgil, Aeneid, I, 204).
Page me40.315
†b See this volume, p. 570.
Page me40.315
†c K. Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.315
†d Franz Gustav Duncker
Page me40.316
†a F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.316
†b Marx means his doctoral dissertation Difference Between the Democritean and Epicurean Philosophy of Nature.
Page me40.317
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.317
†b 'Lord Canning's Proclamation and Land Tenure in India' and 'The Financial Manoeuvres of Bonaparte. — Military Despotism'
Page me40.317
†c As regards
Page me40.317
†d J. Maclaren, A Sketch of the History of the Currency...
Page me40.317
†e The Economist, No. 768, 15 May 1858, pp. 536-37.
Page me40.317
†f of the British Museum
Page me40.317

†g Groombridge
Page me40.318
†a Economic Manuscripts of 1857-58
Page me40.318
†b See this volume, pp. 315-16.
Page me40.318
†c 'Recent Treachery in Circassia', The Free Press, No. 16, 12 May 1858.
Page me40.318
†d [F. Pulszky,] 'From Our Own Correspondent. London, April 23, 1858', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5319, 8 May 1858.
Page me40.319
†a 'Recent Treachery in Circassia', The Free Press, No. 16, 12 May 1858.
Page me40.319
†b F. Engels, 'The British Army in India'.
Page me40.319
†c Lassalle's letter to Marx of 4 June 1858
Page me40.319
†d opinion
Page me40.320
†a See this volume, p. 319.
Page me40.320
†b rabble
Page me40.321
†a Lassalle
Page me40.321
†b Gustave Eugéne Fould
Page me40.321
†c Wilhelmine Joséphine Simonin
Page me40.321
†d Achille Fould
Page me40.321
†e if need be, exercise his authority
Page me40.321
†f lunch
Page me40.321
†g I give you my blessing.
Page me40.321
†h What do you expect? Young people are all alike.
Page me40.322
†a three constitute a panel
Page me40.322
†b rabble
Page me40.322
†c expedient
Page me40.323
†a in a nutshell

Page me40.323
†b Eleanor Marx
Page me40.324
†a Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.324
†b under the auspices
Page me40.324
†c presumably Die Neue Zeit
Page me40.324
†d I. Türr, 'To the Editor of the Presse d'Orient', The Free Press, No. 18, 30 June 1858.
Page me40.324
†e K. Marx, 'A Curious Piece of History'.
Page me40.324
†f long ago
Page me40.324
†g [F. Pulszky,] 'From Our Own Correspondent. London, April 23, 1858', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5319, 8 May 1858.
Page me40.324
†h 'The end crowns the work.'
Page me40.324
†i Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me40.325
†a See also this volume, p. 322.
Page me40.325
†b F. Engels, 'The Indian Army'.
Page me40.325
†c A. Humboldt, 'A Private Letter to Mr. Julius Froebel', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5335, 27 May 1858.
Page me40.325
†d J. Fröbel, Aus America.
Page me40.325
†e Eleanor Marx
Page me40.326
†a The Condition of the Working-Class in England
Page me40.326
†b I. Türr, 'To the Editor of the Presse d'Orient', The Free Press, No. 18, 30 June 1858.
Page me40.326
†c G.W.F. Hegel, Vorlesungen über die Naturphilosophie...
Page me40.327
†a James Joule
Page me40.327
†b digestive upset caused by over-eating
Page me40.328
†a First

Page me40.328
†b grocer
Page me40.330
†a somehow or other
Page me40.331
†a after all
Page me40.331
†b See this volume, p. 326.
Page me40.332
†a Henriette Marx
Page me40.332
†b the Philips family, Marx's Dutch relations
Page me40.332
†c if there are any
Page me40.333
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me40.334
†a in the main
Page me40.335
†a from the start
Page me40.336
†a Lion Philips
Page me40.336
†b What's to be done in this situation?
Page me40.336
†c Marx means the preparation for the press of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.336
†d Lassalle's letter to Marx of 23 July 1858
Page me40.336
†e See this volume, pp. 321-23.
Page me40.336
†f William, Prince of Prussia
Page me40.336
†g crushing
Page me40.336
†h Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me40.337
†a Caroline Schöler
Page me40.338
†a Ferdinand Lassalle's
Page me40.338
†b Jenny and Laura Marx
Page me40.339
†a New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5319, 8 May 1858
Page me40.339

†b the British Museum Library
Page me40.339
†c Helene Demuth
Page me40.339
†d horrible to mention
Page me40.339
†e W.E. Gladstone, Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age (the review appeared in The Times, Nos. 23070 and 23071, 12 and 13 August 1858 under the title 'Mr. Gladstone's Homeric Studies').
Page me40.339
†f F. Pyat, Lettre au jury. Défense de la lettre au Parlement et á la Presse.
Page me40.340
†a Poor devil
Page me40.340
†b Jenny Marx, who usually made the fair copies of Marx's articles for the New-York Daily Tribune, was in Ramsgate at the time.
Page me40.341
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Neue Zeit'.
Page me40.341
†b A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.341
†c Wroclaw
Page me40.342
†a 'The Russian Agent in Circassia', The Free Press, No. 20, 25 August 1858.
Page me40.342
†b See this volume, p. 109.
Page me40.342
†c K. Marx, 'Another Strange Chapter of Modern History'.
Page me40.342
†d Report from the Select Committee on Bank Acts...
Page me40.342
†e 'To the Editor of N.Y. Tribune', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5420, 4 September 1858.
Page me40.342
†f The editors' reply was published in the same issue as the Banker's letter.
Page me40.342
†g Caroline Schöler
Page me40.343
†a 'Accounts Relating to Trade and Navigation for the Seven Months Ended July 31, 1858', The Economist, No. 783 (supplement), 28 August 1858.
Page me40.344
†a in the main
Page me40.344
†b Reynolds's Newspaper
Page me40.345
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.

Page me40.345
†b Date inserted by Engels.
Page me40.345
†c F. Pyat, Lettre au jury. Défense de la lettre au Parlement et á la Presse.
Page me40.346
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me40.346
†b Published in Pensiero ed Azione, 14 September 1858 (for details see Marx's article' Mazzini's New Manifesto').
Page me40.346
†c wage labour
Page me40.346
†d Marx has (pennsylvanisch) which presumably is a comment on 'mov't' and means: the way Germans in Pennsylvania speak English.
Page me40.346
†e the Crimean war
Page me40.347
†a F. Engels, 'Russian Progress in Central Asia'.
Page me40.348
†a August Willich
Page me40.348
†b for all I care
Page me40.348
†c As for
Page me40.348
†d William, Prince of Prussia
Page me40.349
†a Unsere Zeit. Jahrbuch zum Conversations-Lexikon, Bd. 2.
Page me40.349
†b Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' Geographischer Anstalt....
Page me40.349
†c F. Engels, 'Russia's Successes in the Far East'.
Page me40.349
†d See this volume, p. 347.
Page me40.349
†e K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.350
†a 'The theory of war ...', The Times, No. 23131, 22 October 1858.
Page me40.351
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.351
†b F. Engels, 'The Prosecution of Montalembert'.
Page me40.352
†a F. Engels, 'The Prosecution of Montalembert'.
Page me40.352

†b K. Marx, 'The King of Prussia's Insanity' (2 articles), 'The Prussian Regency', 'Affairs in Prussia' (2 articles), 'The New Ministry' (2 articles).
Page me40.353
†a E. Bauer, 'Vorträge über die Geschichte der Politik...', Die Neue Zeit, No. 20, 6 November 1858.
Page me40.353
†b After so many dangers!
Page me40.353
†c of 22 October 1858
Page me40.353
†d This letter is not extant.
Page me40.353
†e first: Blessed is he (Horace, Epodes, II, 1).
Page me40.354
†a refugees'
Page me40.354
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.354
†c about everything under the sun and more
Page me40.355
†a 'Affairs in Prussia'
Page me40.356
†a Emilie Marx
Page me40.356
†b Friederike Blind
Page me40.356
†c Gottfried Kinkel
Page me40.356
†d A. Ruge, 'Idealismus und Realismus im Reich des Ideals', Deutsches Museum, Nos. 14, 15, 19, 1 and 8 April, 6 May 1858.
Page me40.356
†e R.E. Prutz, 'Literaturgeschichte', Deutsches Museum, No. 24, 10 June 1858.
Page me40.357
†a F. Engels, 'Europe in 1858'.
Page me40.357
†b As regards
Page me40.357
†c Napoleon III's decree on grain reserves of 16 November 1858, Le Moniteur universel, No. 322, 18 November 1858.
Page me40.357
†d K. Marx, 'Project for the Regulation of the Price of Bread in France'.
Page me40.358
†a K. Marx, 'Political Parties in England. — The Situation in Europe', 'The Question of the Abolition of Serfdom in Russia'.
Page me40.358

†b A reference to J. Bright's speech at a meeting of Birmingham constituents on 27 October 1858 (the meeting was reported in The Times, No. 23136, 28 October 1858).
Page me40.358
†c Marx expressed this idea in his article 'Political Parties in England. — The Situation in Europe'.
Page me40.358
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.358
†e E. Bauer, 'Vorträge über die Geschichte der Politik...', Die Neue Zeit, No. 20, 6 November 1858.
Page me40.359
†a E. Bauer, 'Preußens constitutioneller Imperialismus', Die Neue Zeit, No. 22, 27 November 1858.
Page me40.359
†b [G. Struve,] 'Bildung macht frei!', Die Neue Zeit, No. 22, 27 November 1858.
Page me40.360
†a A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.360
†b One must take the rough with the smooth (literally: that's how it is in wartime).
Page me40.361
†a Johanna Kinkel
Page me40.361
†b See this volume, p. 352.
Page me40.361
†c A reference to Engels' article 'The Prosecution of Montalembert' and Marx's 'The New Ministry'.
Page me40.361
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.362
†a First
Page me40.362
†b K. Marx. 'History of the Opium Trade' (two articles).
Page me40.362
†c K. Marx, 'The British and Chinese Treaty'.
Page me40.363
†a 'Our London correspondent suggests...', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5455, 15 October 1858
Page me40.363
†b 'the day before yesterday' is deleted.
Page me40.363
†c Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.363
†d Kinkel
Page me40.363
†e swindler
Page me40.364

†a J. Buchanan, 'The President's Message to the XXXVth Congress', The Times, No. 23181, 20 December 1858. The paper reviewed the 'Message' in the same issue, in a leader beginning with the words, 'There is nothing in the Message of President Buchanan...'.
Page me40.364
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.365
†a This probably refers to Marx's articles 'Project for the Regulation of the Price of Bread in France' and 'Affairs in Prussia' (three instalments).
Page me40.365
†b 'The Excitement in Ireland'
Page me40.366
†a 1858 in the original
Page me40.366
†b 'The Revolution in Servia', The Times, No. 23196, 6 January 1859.
Page me40.366
†c of Die Neue Zeit
Page me40.366
†d See this volume, pp. 359-60.
Page me40.366
†e Die Turn-Zeitung
Page me40.367
†a On Tuesdays and Fridays Marx sent articles to New York.
Page me40.368
†a A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.368
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'The Money Panic in Europe'.
Page me40.368
†c K. Marx, 'The War Prospect in Europe'.
Page me40.368
†d Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.369
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.369
†b as regards
Page me40.370
†a An allusion to Gottfried Kinkel's weekly Hermann.
Page me40.371
†a The manuscript breaks off here.
Page me40.371
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.372
†a Gottfried Kinkel. Engels ironically calls him Johann after his wife, Johanna Kinkel.
Page me40.372
†b See this volume, pp. 370-71.

Page me40.372
†c Carl Siebel
Page me40.373
†a 28 January was a Friday. On Tuesdays and Fridays Marx sent articles to New York.
Page me40.375
†a twist
Page me40.375
†b F. Freiligrath, 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis', 20 November 1858.
Page me40.375
†c Ch. O. von Schönaich, Hermann, oder das befreyte Deutschland...
Page me40.375
†d A pun: Gottfried (Kinkel's surname) = Gott (God) + Friede (peace)
Page me40.376
†a A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.377
†a B. Franklin, A Modest Inquiry into the Nature and Necessity of a Paper Currency.
Page me40.377
†b G. Berkeley, The Querist...
Page me40.377
†c This refers to Report from the Select Committee on the High Price of Gold Bullion...
Page me40.377
†d Cf. 2 Corinthians 11:26
Page me40.378
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.378
†b Marx makes a pun on the name Stieber and the verb durchstöbern (rummage through).
Page me40.379
†a This refers to Ferdinand von Westphalen, Jenny Marx's stepbrother, who until October 1859 was Prussian Minister of the Interior.
Page me40.379
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.379
†c Marx makes a pun on the name Stieber and the verb durchstöbern (rummage through).
Page me40.380
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.380
†b As regards the war
Page me40.380
†c Victor Emmanuel II
Page me40.380
†d Clotilde, the Princess of Savoy

Page me40.381
†a Napoleon III, Decree on grain reserves of 16 November 1858, Le Moniteur universel, No. 322, 18 November 1858.
Page me40.381
†b Jérôme Bonaparte
Page me40.381
†c This refers to the article marked 'L. Boniface. Paris, le 29 janvier' in Le Constitutionnel, No. 30, 30 January 1859.
Page me40.382
†a Kossuth's lectures were published in Brussels in 1859 under the title L'Europe, l'Autriche et la Hongrie.
Page me40.382
†b F. Freiligrath, 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis'.
Page me40.383
†a Wroclaw
Page me40.383
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.384
†a This refers to 'Discours de S.M. L'Empereur. Session législative de 1859' (Le Moniteur universel, No. 39, special edition, 7 February 1859) and the pamphlet inspired by Napoleon III: [A. La Guéronniére,] L'Empereur Napoléon III et l'Italie.
Page me40.384
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.384
†c F. Lassalle, Franz von Sickingen.
Page me40.384
†d See this volume, pp. 324, 338 and 374-78.
Page me40.385
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me40.385
†b Deutsches Museum
Page me40.385
†c An allusion to the weekly Hermann published by Gottfried Kinkel.
Page me40.385
†d disgust
Page me40.385
†e Johanna Kinkel
Page me40.385
†f Caroline Schöler
Page me40.385
†g F. Freiligrath, 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis'.
Page me40.386
†a poor
Page me40.386
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.386

†c See this volume, pp. 370-71.
Page me40.386
†d F. Engels, 'German Resources for War'.
Page me40.386
†e K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.387
†a Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.387
†b penniless
Page me40.387
†c Henriette Marx
Page me40.387
†d 'Revelation by a Russian of the Object of the Chinese War and Treaty', The Free Press, No. 24, 22 December 1858.
Page me40.388
†a As regards
Page me40.388
†b See this volume, pp. 370-71.
Page me40.388
†c F. Freiligrath, 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis'. See also this volume, p. 359.
Page me40.388
†d See this volume, p. 372.
Page me40.388
†e Caroline Schöler
Page me40.388
†f Heinrich Bürgers
Page me40.389
†a Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.389
†b Ms. damaged.
Page me40.389
†c Karlovy Vary
Page me40.389
†d Marx means his article 'The State of British Manufactures', for which he used data from Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the Half Year Ending 31st October 1858.
Page me40.389
†e K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.390
†a to A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.391
†a to A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.391
†b burning question
Page me40.391

†c Iterum Crispinus — Crispinus again (Juvenal, Satires, I, 4). Here: It's me again.
Page me40.392
†a Marx has 'kritische Urteilskraft', an allusion to the title of Kant's book Kritik der Urteilskraft.
Page me40.392
†b Marx probably refers to J. Campe.
Page me40.393
†a A slip of the pen in the original: 29 February.
Page me40.393
†b to A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.393
†c Marx presumably means Engels' articles 'German Resources for War' and 'The Austrian Hold on Italy'.
Page me40.394
†a Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.394
†b F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me40.394
†c A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.394
†d F. Lassalle, Franz von Sickingen.
Page me40.394
†e F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos. Further on Marx quotes Note 3 to p. 224 of Vol. I of this work.
Page me40.395
†a 'All things are exchanged for fire and fire for all things, as wares are exchanged for gold and gold for wares.' Here and below the insertions in parentheses are Marx's.
Page me40.395
†b Marx's italics
Page me40.395
†c An allusion to a joke current at the time: one woman tells another of her son's death in action near Leipzig (1813), whereupon the other remarks: 'And a nice district, too!' ('Auch eine schöne Gegend!')
Page me40.396
†a The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the Philosophy of Poverty by M. Proudhon
Page me40.396
†b See this volume, p. 355.
Page me40.396
†c cost what it may
Page me40.396
†d See this volume, pp. 23-24 and 27.
Page me40.397
†a in case of need

Page me40.397
†b Engels Senior is dear to me, Ermen (Gottfried!) is dear to me, but knowledge is dearer still. An adaptation of 'Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, sed magis amica veritas' — 'Plato is dear to me, Socrates is dear to me, but truth is dearer still' (Ammonius Saccas, Vita Aristoteles).
Page me40.397
†c 'Alas, 'tis terrible to be wise when it brings the wise man no reward' (Sophocles, Oedipus Tyrannus, 324, 325).
Page me40.397
†d 'In usury but sharp-eyed, yet in his sooth-saying blind' (Sophocles, Oedipus Tyrannus, 396, 397).
Page me40.398
†a Po and Rhine (see this volume, pp. 391-92)
Page me40.398
†b A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.398
†c Marx refers to J.M. von Radowitz's speech of 12 August 1848 in the Frankfurt National Assembly.
Page me40.399
†a A reference to the weekly Hermann edited by Gottfried Kinkel.
Page me40.399
†b 'Commerzielle Briefe' and 'Amerikanische Literatur. Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature', Hermann, No. 7, 19 February 1859.
Page me40.399
†c Persevere in thy valour, o youth! (Virgil, Aeneid, IX, 641.)
Page me40.399
†d Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me40.399
†e Engels' work on Po and Rhine
Page me40.400
†a with breaks in between
Page me40.400
†b F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me40.400
†c See present edition, Vol. 16, p. 250.
Page me40.400
†d duplication
Page me40.400
†e of K. Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.401
†a See this volume, pp. 402-03.
Page me40.401
†b See this volume, pp. 360 and 366.
Page me40.402
†a good offices
Page me40.402

†b 9 March
Page me40.402
†c A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.402
†d F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.402
†e F. Lassalle, Franz von Sickingen.
Page me40.403
†a F. Miklosich, Vergleichende Grammatik der slawischen Sprachen.
Page me40.403
†b of Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.403
†c Die Neue Zeit
Page me40.403
†d Die Neue Zeit, No. 37, 12, March 1859.
Page me40.404
†a The letter is unsigned.
Page me40.404
†b Franz von Sickingen
Page me40.404
†c F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me40.404
†d K. Marx, 'The War Prospect in Prussia'.
Page me40.405
†a 'There's no two opinions about it in Paris. We shall have war.'
Page me40.405
†b i.e., about the position in Germany (see this volume, p. 391)
Page me40.405
†c of the book A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.406
†a In response to this request Engels wrote the article 'War Inevitable'.
Page me40.406
†b of Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.407
†a Marx refers to Lassalle's letter to Engels of 21 March 1859.
Page me40.407
†b F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me40.407
†c A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.407
†d That's all.
Page me40.407
†e As regards
Page me40.407
†f First
Page me40.408

†a I shall see.
Page me40.408
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.408
†c at the very outset
Page me40.408
†d Max Friedländer
Page me40.409
†a M. Luther, Von Kauffshandlung und Wucher.
Page me40.410
†a Hence these tears (Terence, Andria, I, i, 99).
Page me40.410
†b Po and Rhine
Page me40.411
†a K. Marx, 'Great Trouble in Indian Finances'.
Page me40.412
†a Po and Rhine
Page me40.412
†b F. Lassalle, Franz con Sickingen
Page me40.412
†c See this volume, pp. 431-32.
Page me40.414
†a F. Engels, 'War Inevitable'.
Page me40.414
†b F. Engels, 'Chances of the Impending War'.
Page me40.414
†c This refers to Engels' Po and Rhine.
Page me40.414
†d In the meantime, three cheers for war!
Page me40.414
†e Po and Rhine
Page me40.415
†a Here and below Marx quotes Lassalle's letter to him of 8 April 1859 (the italics are Marx's).
Page me40.415
†b slip of the pen
Page me40.415
†c i.e. the publication of the book A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.415
†d E. Bauer, 'Das Kloster', Die Neue Zeit, Nos. 38-42, 19 and 26 March and 2, 10 and 16 April 1859.
Page me40.415
†e 9 April
Page me40.415
†f Edgar Bauer

Page me40.416
†a F. Engels, 'Chances of the Impending War'
Page me40.416
†b Not too much zeal! (The dictum is attributed to Talleyrand.)
Page me40.417
†a F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me40.417
†b [A.] Asbóth, '"Chances of the Impending War". To the Editor of The N.Y. Tribune'. New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5602, 5 April 1859.
Page me40.417
†c [A.] A[sbóth,] '"The Austrian Hold on Italy". To the Editor of The N.Y. Tribune', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5581, 11 March 1859.
Page me40.418
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.418
†b As to
Page me40.418
†c Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.418
†d See this volume, p. 416.
Page me40.418
†e First
Page me40.419
†a J.W. Goethe, Götz von Berlichingen.
Page me40.419
†b Charles V
Page me40.421
†a The list is in Marx's handwriting.
Page me40.424
†a at bottom
Page me40.425
†a 'The State of the Question. — Germany Arming'
Page me40.425
†b An account of the debates in the British Parliament on 18 April 1859 was published in The Times, No. 23284, 19 April 1859.
Page me40.425
†c Pius IX
Page me40.428
†a K. Blind, 'Der Befreier Napoleon', Hermann, No. 15, 16 April 1859.
Page me40.429
†a A letter from M. Friedländer inviting Marx to contribute to the Vienna newspaper Die Presse.
Page me40.429
†b See this volume, pp. 408-09.
Page me40.429
†c necessary condition

Page me40.430
†a calculations
Page me40.431
†a F. Engels, Po and Phine.
Page me40.431
†b 'Prospects of the War'
Page me40.431
†c 'In our long list of telegrams...', The Times, No. 23295, 2 May 1859.
Page me40.431
†d A reference to J. Whiteside's speech in the House of Commons delivered on 25 March 1859, The Times, No. 23264, 26 March 1859.
Page me40.431
†e Marx refers to the Blue Book Correspondence Respecting the Affairs of Italy published in 1849.
Page me40.432
†a F. Wurm, Diplomatische Geschichte der Orientalischen Frage.
Page me40.432
†b See this volume, p. 416.
Page me40.432
†c Ibid., p. 409.
Page me40.432
†d Ibid., pp. 429-30.
Page me40.433
†a Marx's work for the Vienna newspaper Die Presse (see this volume, p. 432).
Page me40.434
†a See this volume, pp. 407-09.
Page me40.434
†b We shall see.
Page me40.434
†c A reference to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.
Page me40.434
†d ex-manager
Page me40.434
†e First
Page me40.434
†f See this volume, p. 429.
Page me40.435
†a Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens
Page me40.435
†b Po and Rhine
Page me40.436
†a E. Meyen's review of K. Vogt's book Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas was published anonymously under the title 'Oesterreich und Deutschland' in Der Freischütz, Nos. 55 and 56, 7 and 10 May 1859.
Page me40.437
†a The question of Marx's contributing to the Vienna newspaper Die Presse.

Page me40.439
†a An item on the subject appeared in Das Volk, No. 4, 28 May 1859 ('Vereins-Nachrichten').
Page me40.439
†b Wilhelm Strohn
Page me40.439
†c the Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung and Vorwärts!
Page me40.440
†a [E. Bauer,] 'Englische Neutralität', Hermann, No. 18, 7 May 1859.
Page me40.440
†b K. Blind, 'Der lokalisierte Krieg und die deutsche Volkspartei' and L. B[ucher], Louis Napoleon's Laufbahn', Hermann, No. 19, 14 May 1859.
Page me40.440
†c Albert August Anders
Page me40.440
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.441
†a F. Lassalle, Franz von Sickingen.
Page me40.441
†b Books have their destinies — from Terentianus Maurus, De litteris, syllabis et metris ('Carmen heroicum', 258).
Page me40.443
†a Charles V
Page me40.443
†b Richard von Greifenklau
Page me40.443
†c a scene between Hutten and Maria in Act III
Page me40.444
†a Falstaff is a character in Shakespeare's Henry IV and The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Page me40.445
†a Richard von Greifenklau
Page me40.446
†a From Lucan's Pharsalia, I, 255.
Page me40.446
†b So much the better.
Page me40.446
†c End of letter missing.
Page me40.446
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.447
†a The end of the letter is missing.
Page me40.447
†b See this volume, p. 437.
Page me40.447
†c diminutive of Volk

Page me40.448
†a See this volume, p. 439.
Page me40.448
†b The New-York Daily Tribune published two articles by Engels on the battle of Casteggio (or Montebello) fought by the French and Austrians on 20 May 1859: 'Fighting at Last' and 'The Battle of Montebello'. They may have been two instalments of what was originally one article.
Page me40.448
†c Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.449
†a Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens
Page me40.449
†b Po and Rhine
Page me40.449
†c Engels wrote an article entitled 'The Campaign in Italy' for the Volk.
Page me40.449
†d Gottfried Kinkel's
Page me40.449
†e funds
Page me40.449
†f See this volume, p. 437.
Page me40.449
†g An allusion to a joke current at the time: one woman tells another of her son's death in action near Leipzig (1813), whereupon the other remarks: 'And a nice district, too!' ('Auch eine schöne Gegend!')
Page me40.450
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.450
†b Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens
Page me40.450
†c of the public
Page me40.450
†d in large measure
Page me40.450
†e Max Friedländer
Page me40.450
†f [E. Biskamp,] 'Der Reichsregent', Das Volk, No. 2, 14 May 1859.
Page me40.451
†a Das Volk, No. 3, 21 May 1859.
Page me40.451
†b But we shall see.
Page me40.452
†a Po and Rhine
Page me40.452
†b reborn
Page me40.452

†c In his article 'Mazzini's Manifesto' Marx reproduced in English Mazzini's manifesto 'La Guerra' which appeared in Pensiero ed Azione, No. 17, 2-16 May 1859.
Page me40.452
†d Marx means his A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.453
†a Edgar Bauer
Page me40.453
†b cool down
Page me40.453
†c a noble pair of brothers (Horace, Satires, II, III, 243)
Page me40.453
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (see this volume, p. 447).
Page me40.454
†a The proofs of Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.455
†a See this volume, p. 434-35.
Page me40.455
†b Ferdinand Lassalle, author of Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me40.455
†c Max Friedländer
Page me40.455
†d Napoleon III
Page me40.455
†e The Times, No. 23321, 1 June 1859.
Page me40.455
†f Mazzini's manifesto 'La Guerra' published in Pensiero ed Azione, No. 17, 2-16 May 1859.
Page me40.456
†a Pensiero ed Azione
Page me40.456
†b See this volume, pp. 453-54.
Page me40.456
†c See this volume, pp. 407-10.
Page me40.456
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.457
†a First
Page me40.457
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.457
†c As regards
Page me40.458
†a [K. Vogt,] 'Zur Warnung', Schweizer Handels-Courier, No. 150 (supplement), 2 June 1859.

Page me40.458
†b The article was reprinted with editorial comments in Das Volk, No. 6. 11 June 1859.
Page me40.458
†c We shall see.
Page me40.458
†d David Born
Page me40.458
†e Stephan Born
Page me40.458
†f F. Freiligrath, 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis' (see this volume, p. 359).
Page me40.458
†g F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer'.
Page me40.458
†h [F. Lassalle,] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens.
Page me40.459
†a the little wolf, i.e. Lupus (Wilhelm Wolff)
Page me40.459
†b Das Volk, No. 4, 28 May 1859 ('Vereins-Nachrichten'). See also this volume, p. 439.
Page me40.459
†c F. Engels, 'The Campaign in Italy'.
Page me40.459
†d A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.460
†a The New American Cyclopaedia
Page me40.460
†b 10 June 1859 was a Friday. On Tuesdays and Fridays Marx sent off his articles to New York.
Page me40.460
†c [F. Lassalle,] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens.
Page me40.460
†d As regards
Page me40.460
†e K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.461
†a As regards
Page me40.461
†b 'Statement by the Editorial Board of the Newspaper Das Volk'
Page me40.461
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.461
†d Rudolf Schramm
Page me40.461
†e good enough for him
Page me40.461

†f [F. Lassalle,] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens
Page me40.462
†a See this volume, pp. 459-60.
Page me40.462
†b A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.463
†a Fidelio Hollinger
Page me40.463
†b Kölnische Zeitung
Page me40.464
†a Friedrich Lessner
Page me40.465
†a A reference to Lassalle's pamphlet Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens.
Page me40.465
†b 'Memoir on Russia, for the Instruction of the Present Emperor', The Free Press, No. 7, 13 July 1859.
Page me40.465
†c A slip of the pen in the original: 14 July.
Page me40.465
†d needless duplication
Page me40.465
†e By 'little Jew Braun' and, below, 'Ephraim Artful' Engels means Ferdinand Lassalle.
Page me40.466
†a In compliance with Marx's request Engels wrote an article entitled 'The Italian War. Retrospect'.
Page me40.466
†b We shall see.
Page me40.466
†c A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.467
†a to wit
Page me40.467
†b outsider
Page me40.467
†c What is to be done?
Page me40.467
†d Engels has 'den letzteren', probably a slip of the pen; 'den ersteren' ('the first-named') would fit the context better, as the 'Gatherings' were directed against the Hermann, not against the Kolokol.
Page me40.468
†a G. Kinkel, 'An unsere Leser', Hermann, No. 26, 2 July 1859.
Page me40.468
†b See this volume, p. 464.
Page me40.468

†c K. Marx, 'The Treaty of Villafranca'.
Page me40.468
†d 'Memoir on Russia, for the Instruction of the Present Emperor', The Free Press, No. 7, 13 July 1859.
Page me40.468
†e concerning
Page me40.468
†f 'Copy of a Despatch from Count Pozzo di Borgo, Addressed to Count Nesselrode. Dated Paris, 10th (22nd) December, 1826'; 'Copy of a Very Secret Despatch from Count Pozzo di Borgo, dated Paris, the 28th November, 1828'; 'Memoir on the State and Prospects of Germany, Drawn up under the Direction of a Minister at St. Petersburgh, and Confidentially Communicated to Several of the German Governments'.
Page me40.468
†g Nicholas I
Page me40.468
†h future Emperor Alexander II
Page me40.469
†a Friedrich Kamm
Page me40.469
†b Marx refers to his articles 'The Peace' and 'The Treaty of Villafranca'.
Page me40.469
†c Anger gives wings to one's words. An allusion to 'Facit indignatio versum' — 'Indignation makes verse' (Juvenal, Satires, I, 79).
Page me40.469
†d [E. Biskamp,] 'Der Friede von Villa Franca', Das Volk, No. 11, 16 July 1859. The second instalment was published in the next issue of Das Volk on 23 July.
Page me40.470
†a 'Memoir on Russia, for the Instruction of the Present Emperor', The Free Press, No. 7, 13 July 1859.
Page me40.470
†b F. Engels, 'The Italian War. Retrospect'.
Page me40.470
†c Francis Joseph I
Page me40.470
†d As regards
Page me40.470
†e William
Page me40.470
†f W. Theyls, Mémoires pour servir á l'histoire de Charles XII, roi de Suéde; J.R. von Patkul, Berichte an das Zaarische Cabinet in Moscau, von seinem Gesandschafts-Posten bei August II, Könige von Polen, Th. I-III.
Page me40.471
†a Engels did write a review: 'Karl Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'.
Page me40.471
†b F. Engels, 'The Italian War. Retrospect'.

Page me40.471
†c Ernst Dronke
Page me40.473
†a Marx probably means Engels' article 'Historical Justice'.
Page me40.473
†b K. Marx, 'Truth Testified'. In this article Marx cites Francis Joseph's manifesto of 15 July 1859 (reported in The Times, No. 23364, 21 July 1859) and Napoleon III's speech at a reception for members of the State Council, the Senate and the Corps législatif in the Palace of Saint-Cloud on 19 July 1859 (Le Moniteur universel, No. 201, 20 July 1859).
Page me40.473
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.473
†d 'what use it was'
Page me40.473
†e 'The Italian War. Retrospect' (was published in three instalments in Das Volk)
Page me40.474
†a A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.474
†b 'The Italian War. Retrospect'
Page me40.474
†c 'Karl Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'
Page me40.474
†d 3 and 4 June 1859. Engels speaks of the first instalment of his article 'The Italian War. Retrospect'.
Page me40.475
†a Engels refers to Georg Herwegh's poem written on the occasion of the Federal Marksmen's Festival in Zurich and published in Das Volk, No. 12, 23 July 1859.
Page me40.475
†b As for money
Page me40.475
†c See this volume, p. 473.
Page me40.475
†d neither more nor less
Page me40.476
†a A reference to 'Russisches Memoir zur Belehrung des gegenwärtigen Kaisers' (Das Volk, Nos. 12-16, 23 and 30 July and 6, 13 and 20 August 1859), a German translation of 'Memoir on Russia' published in The Free Press, No. 7, 13 July 1859.
Page me40.476
†b [N.] P[etersen,] 'Feierstunden-Arbeit eines Arbeiters', Das Volk, Nos. 8-10, 12 and 16, 25 June; 2, 9 and 23 July; 20 August 1859.
Page me40.476
†c Napoleon III made this speech on 21 July 1859 and it was published in Le Moniteur universel, No. 203, 22 July 1859.
Page me40.476
†d Napoleon I

Page me40.476
†e outward appearance
Page me40.476
†f Town in Lussin island in the Adriatic, then under Austrian rule.
Page me40.476
†g First
Page me40.476
†h 'The Italian War. Retrospect'
Page me40.477
†a ['On the Occasion of the Federal Marksmen's Festival in Zurich',] Das Volk, No. 12, 23 July 1859.
Page me40.477
†b This explanation by the Editorial Board was published in Das Volk, No. 13, 30 July 1859.
Page me40.477
†c Caroline Schöler
Page me40.477
†d A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.478
†a an article for The New American Cyclopaedia
Page me40.478
†b F. Engels, 'K. Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'.
Page me40.478
†c Engels means the 1848 revolution in France and subsequent revolutionary events in other European countries.
Page me40.479
†a W. Rüstow, Geschichte der Infanterie.
Page me40.479
†b G. Crawshay, 'The Russian Memoir of 1837', The Free Press, No. 8, 27 July 1859.
Page me40.479
†c Could nothing be done about it?
Page me40.479
†d Heinrich Bürgers
Page me40.479
†e aspects
Page me40.481
†a F. Engels, 'Karl Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'.
Page me40.481
†b What's to be done?
Page me40.481
†c G. Mazzini, 'To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 23381, 10 August 1859.
Page me40.482
†a The note is not extant.
Page me40.482

†b the weekly Hermann, of which Gottfried Kinkel had been publisher until July 1859
Page me40.482
†c Frederick William IV
Page me40.482
†d A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.482
†e F. Engels, 'K. Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'.
Page me40.483
†a I Corinthians 5:7
Page me40.483
†b See this volume, pp. 437-39.
Page me40.484
†a upper crust
Page me40.485
†a Probably a reference to the item 'Sprüche von Carl Siebel' in Hermann, No. 33, 20 August 1859.
Page me40.485
†b 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'
Page me40.487
†a rumours
Page me40.488
†a De gustibus non est disputandum — Tastes are not matters for discussion.
Page me40.489
†a Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.490
†a Friedrich and Elisabeth Engels
Page me40.490
†b Daniells
Page me40.491
†a Daniells
Page me40.493
†a [F. Pulszky,] 'From Our Own Correspondent. Monday, August 7, 1859', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5720, 23 August 1859.
Page me40.494
†a K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.494
†b [K. Marx,] 'Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.494
†c A. Asbóth, 'The Peace of Villafranca and the Hungarian Cause', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5727, 31 August 1859.
Page me40.494
†d Letters of L. Kossuth and D. Urquhart published in The Free Press, No. 16, 12 May 1858.
Page me40.494
†e Johann Carl Juta

Page me40.495
†a conspiratorial pseudonym of Karl Marx
Page me40.495
†b See this volume, p. 491.
Page me40.496
†a without a penny
Page me40.498
†a See this volume, p. 460.
Page me40.498
†b [K. Blind.] Zur Warnung, Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 173 (supplement), 22 June 1859.
Page me40.498
†c An allusion to the following lines from Schiller's drama Wallenstein. Die Piccolomini, V, 1: 'Das eben ist der Fluch der bösen That,/Daß sie, fortzeugend, immer Böses muß gebären' ('This is the curse of every evil deed,/That, propagating still, it brings forth evil').
Page me40.498
†d See this volume, pp. 270 and 368.
Page me40.498
†e K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.499
†a against his will. Cf. Moliére's Le Médecin malgré lui.
Page me40.499
†b Good-bye and farewell.
Page me40.499
†c after all
Page me40.499
†d See this volume, p. 495.
Page me40.500
†a Daniells
Page me40.500
†b Engels means Marx's article 'Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.500
†c 'Sprüche von Carl Siebel', Hermann, No. 33, 20 August 1859. See this volume, p. 485.
Page me40.502
†a See this volume, pp. 497-99.
Page me40.502
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.502
†c one way or another
Page me40.502
†d F. Engels, 'Karl Marx. A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy'.
Page me40.502
†e It suffices

Page me40.502
†f Marx has: Knoten.
Page me40.502
†g As to
Page me40.502
†h [C. Schramm,] 'Ostende 31. August', Hermann, No. 36, 10 September 1859 ('Vermischte Nachrichten').
Page me40.502
†i witness
Page me40.503
†a Marx means his reviews published in the section 'Gatherings from the Press'.
Page me40.503
†b Fidelio — the assumed name of Leonore, heroine of Beethoven's opera Fidelio.
Page me40.504
†a See this volume, pp. 486-88.
Page me40.505
†a 'One of the most remarkable results...', The Times, No. 23428, 4 October 1859.
Page me40.505
†b [K. Marx,] 'Ludwig Kossuth und Louis Napoleon', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 276, 3 October 1859 (supplement).
Page me40.505
†c weak point
Page me40.505
†d [F. Pulszky,] 'From Our Own Correspondent. Monday, August 7, 1859', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5720, 23 August 1859.
Page me40.505
†e cue
Page me40.505
†f Kossuth's letter to J.M'. Adam was published in The Times, No. 23428, 4 October 1859.
Page me40.506
†a J.M' Adam, 'To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 23431, 7 October 1859.
Page me40.506
†b Johann Carl Juta
Page me40.506
†c conspiratorial pseudonym of Karl Marx
Page me40.506
†d F. Engels, 'Infantry'.
Page me40.507
†a 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'
Page me40.507
†b Marx has 'Werke' (works).
Page me40.507

†c [F. Pulszky,] 'From Our Own Correspondent. Monday, August 7, 1859', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5720, 23 August 1859.
Page me40.507
†d [K. Marx,] 'Ludwig Kossuth und Louis Napoleon', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 276 (supplement), 3 October 1859. (It was a German translation of Marx's article 'Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon' published in The Free Press, No. 10, 28 September 1859.)
Page me40.508
†a the clipping with Marx's article 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'
Page me40.508
†b as a well-conducted action
Page me40.508
†c See this volume, p. 495.
Page me40.509
†a The beginning of the letter missing; the date is at the end of the letter.
Page me40.509
†b See this volume, pp. 502-04.
Page me40.509
†c Hugo Oelbermann
Page me40.510
†a In the rough copy this note to Faulkner was written after the draft of Engels' letter to Daniells.
Page me40.510
†b See this volume, p. 490.
Page me40.512
†a In Homer's Iliad Agamemnon and Achilles quarrelled for the possession of Briseis, the captive queen of Lyrnessus.
Page me40.512
†b Here and below Marx refers to Freiligrath's poems 'Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859' which are subtitled 'Festlied der Deutschen in Amerika' and 'Festlied der Deutschen in London'.
Page me40.512
†c 'Die Sitzungen des Schiller-Comité's', Hermann, No. 43, 29 October 1859.
Page me40.512
†d the same thing must not be done twice (from Roman law)
Page me40.512
†e F. Schiller, 'Dithyrambe'.
Page me40.513
†a F. Freiligrath, 'Nach Johanna Kinkels Begräbnis'.
Page me40.513
†b He who survives will see.
Page me40.513
†c As to
Page me40.513
†d that such was not the case
Page me40.514

†a In compliance with this request, Engels wrote, at the end of January and beginning of February 1860, the article 'Military Reform in Germany'.
Page me40.514
†b Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me40.514
†c The Allgemeine Zeitung carried reports on the case on 25 October 1859 and on the following days.
Page me40.515
†a Biskamp's letter, dated 20 October 1859, was published in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 300, on 27 October 1859.
Page me40.515
†b to the Editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me40.515
†c Another example
Page me40.515
†d Somewhat later Engels wrote an article on the subject, entitled 'Military Reform in Germany'.
Page me40.516
†a Early in December 1859 Engels wrote the article 'Progress of the Moorish War' and later several more articles on the subject.
Page me40.516
†b as regards
Page me40.516
†c J. Grimm, Deutsche Grammatik, Th. I-IV.
Page me40.516
†d first part of Schiller's trilogy Wallenstein
Page me40.516
†e No news from Ephraim Artful (Ferdinand Lassalle)?
Page me40.517
†a written in reply to Jenny Marx's letter of 4 November 1859 (see this volume, p. 573)
Page me40.517
†b K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.517
†c See this volume, p. 507.
Page me40.517
†d Ibid., pp. 511-12.
Page me40.518
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.518
†b as to
Page me40.519
†a Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 298, 25 October 1859.
Page me40.519
†b Fidelio Hollinger
Page me40.520

†a [E. Biskamp,] 'Der Reichsregent', Das Volk, No. 2, 14 May 1859.
Page me40.520
†b [K. Blind,] 'Warnung zur gefälligen Verbreitung', Das Volk, No. 7, 18 June 1859.
Page me40.520
†c Schleinitz's despatches to the Prussian embassies in Britain, Russia and Germany (Berlin, June-July 1859) were reported in the Neue Preußische Zeitung No. 170, 24 July ('Zu der ”Vermittlung”'), No. 171, 26 July ('Preußische Depeschen'), No. 174, 29 July 1859 ('Deutschland').
Page me40.520
†d Marx refers to his series of articles Quid pro quo and his reviews published in the section 'Gatherings from the Press'.
Page me40.521
†a E. Biskamp, [Letter to the Editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung, dated 20 October 1859,] Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 300, 27 October 1859.
Page me40.521
†b K. Marx, [Letter to the Editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung].
Page me40.521
†c [K. Blind,] 'The Grand Duke Constantine to Be King of Hungary', The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.
Page me40.521
†d A. Vögele
Page me40.522
†a E. Meyen, 'Der Proceß Carl Vogt's gegen die Augsburger Allg. Ztg.', Der Freischütz, No. 132, 3 November 1859.
Page me40.522
†b to encourage the others
Page me40.522
†c K. Marx, 'Statement to the Editors of Die Reform, the Volks-Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung.
Page me40.522
†d See this volume, pp. 536-39.
Page me40.523
†a J. Grimm, Geschichte der deutschen Sprache, Bd. 1-2.
Page me40.523
†b E. Biskamp, [Letter to the Editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung, 20 October 1859,] Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 300, 27 October 1859.
Page me40.523
†c [E. Meyen,] 'Der Proceß Carl Vogt's gegen die Augsburger Allg. Ztg.', Der Freischütz, No. 132, 3 November 1859.
Page me40.523
†d K. Marx, 'Statement to the Editors of Die Reform, the Volks-Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung'.
Page me40.523
†e K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.523

†f Marx refers to Pulszky's report of 11 October 1859 published in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5775, 26 October 1859.
Page me40.524
†a Daniells. See this volume, p. 490.
Page me40.524
†b K. Marx, 'Statement to the Editors of Die Reform, the Volks-Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung'.
Page me40.524
†c i.e. the editorial office of the Volks-Zeitung
Page me40.524
†d [E. Meyen,] 'Der Proceß Carl Vogt's gegen die Augsburger Allg. Ztg.', Der Freischütz, No. 132, 3 November 1859.
Page me40.525
†a [K. Vogt,] 'Zur Warnung', Schweizer Handels-Courier, No. 150 (supplement), 2 June 1859. The article was reprinted, with editorial comments, in Das Volk, No. 6, 11 June 1859.
Page me40.525
†b K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.525
†a See this volume, pp. 511-12.
Page me40.526
†b about financial matters
Page me40.526
†c K. Marx, 'Declaration'.
Page me40.526
†d 'Das Schillerfest in London', Hermann, No. 45, 12 November 1859.
Page me40.527
†a At the beginning of December Engels wrote the article 'Progress of the Moorish War'.
Page me40.527
†b 'Das Schillerfest in London', Hermann, No. 45, 12 November 1859.
Page me40.527
†c K. Blind, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 313, 9 November 1859.
Page me40.527
†d See this volume, p. 508.
Page me40.527
†e The Allgemeine Zeitung did publish Marx's 'Declaration' in its issue No. 325 (supplement), 21 November 1859.
Page me40.529
†a Charlotte Bredt
Page me40.529
†b Elise von Griesheim
Page me40.529
†c Adolf von Griesheim
Page me40.529

†d At the beginning of December Engels wrote the article 'Progress of the Moorish War'.
Page me40.529
†e seaport in Ireland
Page me40.530
†a At the beginning of December Engels wrote the article 'Progress of the Moorish War'.
Page me40.530
†b F. Engels, 'Military Reform in Germany'.
Page me40.530
†c See this volume, p. 490.
Page me40.530
†d University town in Bavaria
Page me40.530
†e a poem by Schiller
Page me40.531
†a F. Schiller, 'Die unüberwindliche Flotte'.
Page me40.531
†b F. Schiller, Wallensteins Lager — first part of the trilogy Wallenstein.
Page me40.532
†a dated 17 November 1859
Page me40.532
†b containing H. Beta's article 'Ferdinand Freiligrath'
Page me40.532
†c [H.] B[eta,] 'Chronik unseres Schillerfestes', Hermann, No. 46, 19 November 1859.
Page me40.532
†d 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'
Page me40.532
†e See this volume, p. 523.
Page me40.532
†f First
Page me40.533
†a 11 November 1859
Page me40.533
†b 'Crystal Palace. — The Schiller Commemoration', The Morning Advertiser, No. 21344, 11 November 1859.
Page me40.533
†c [K. Blind,] 'The Grand Duke Constantine to Be King of Hungary', The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.
Page me40.533
†d F. Freiligrath, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 319 (supplement), 15 November 1859.
Page me40.533
†e to begin with Page me40.533

†f first
Page me40.534
†a by Kinkel (see this volume, pp. 512-13)
Page me40.534
†b See this volume, pp. 502-04.
Page me40.534
†c It contained Beta's article 'Ferdinand Freiligrath'.
Page me40.535
†a Gottfried Kinkel
Page me40.535
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.535
†c Kätche, Freiligrath's daughter
Page me40.535
†d row
Page me40.536
†a [Blind,] 'Prognostikon des wahrscheinlichen Verlaufes des italienischen Krieges; geschrieben kurz vor Ausbruch desselben', Hermann, No. 46, 19 November 1859.
Page me40.536
†b [K.W. Eichhoff,] 'Stieber', Hermann, Nos. 36-38, 40, 42, 43; 10, 17, 24 September, 8, 22, 29 October 1859.
Page me40.536
†c [K.W. Eichhoff,] 'Berlin, 8. Nov. (Stieber)', Hermann, No. 45, 12 November 1859.
Page me40.536
†d It was a Tuesday. On Tuesdays and Fridays Marx sent off articles for the New-York Daily Tribune.
Page me40.537
†a K. Marx, 'Statement to the Editors of Die Reform, the Volks-Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung'.
Page me40.537
†b See this volume, p. 525.
Page me40.537
†c chief impresario
Page me40.537
†d [H.] B[eta,] 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.
Page me40.537
†e As to Page me40.537
†f common people
Page me40.537
†g A. Gortschakoff, 'Circularschreiben an die russischen Gesandtschaften vom 15 (27) Mai 1859', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 167, 16 June 1859.
Page me40.538

†a to the Prussian embassies in Britain, Russia and Germany (Berlin, June-July 1859); reports on the despatches appeared in the Neue Preußische Zeitung, No. 170, 24 July 1859 ('Zu der “Vermittlung”'), No. 171, 26 July ('Preußische Depeschen') and No. 174, 29 July 1859 ('Deutschland'). See also p. 520

Page me40.538

†b F. Lassalle, Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens.

Page me40.539

†a Freiligrath's letter to Liebknecht of 21 November 1859.

Page me40.539

†b Zur Warnung

Page me40.540

†a honour to whom honour is due

Page me40.540

†b [K. Blind,] 'The Grand Duke Constantine to Be King of Hungary', The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.

Page me40.540

†c incriminating evidence

Page me40.540

†d K. Blind, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 313, 9 November 1859.

Page me40.540

†e [H.] B[eta,] 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.

Page me40.540

†f Literally 'praying goat', a play on the name Bettzieh.

Page me40.541

†a K. Marx, 'Lord Palmerston'.

Page me40.541

†b Gottfried Kinkel. Marx ironically calls him Johann after his wife, Johanna Kinkel.

Page me40.541

†c A character from Goethe's Ein Fastnachtsspiel auch wohl zu tragieren Ostern, vom Pater Brey, dem falschen Propheten.

Page me40.541

†d The chiefs sin, the Aacheans suffer. Paraphrase of Quidquid delirant reges plectuntur Achivi (whatever madness possesses the chiefs, it is the Aacheans who suffer), Horace, Epistle, I, ii, 14.

Page me40.542

†a 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.

Page me40.542

†b K. Marx, 'Declaration'.

Page me40.542

†c K. Marx, 'Statement to the Editors of Die Reform, the Volks-Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung'.

Page me40.542

†d See this volume, pp. 536-39.

Page me40.543

†a F. Freiligrath, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 319 (supplement), 15 November 1859.
Page me40.543
†b on 21 November 1859
Page me40.543
†c Liebknecht replied on 23 November.
Page me40.543
†d See this volume, p. 533.
Page me40.543
†e Zur Warnung
Page me40.544
†a [K. Blind,] 'The Grand Duke Constantine to Be King of Hungary', The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.
Page me40.544
†b incriminating evidence
Page me40.544
†c We shall see.
Page me40.544
†d K. Marx, 'The Invasion Panic in England'.
Page me40.545
†a if possible
Page me40.545
†b F. Freiligrath, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 319 (supplement), 15 November 1859.
Page me40.545
†c Ida Freiligrath
Page me40.545
†d Probably an allusion to Nicolas Chamfort's dictum: 'Celebrity: the advantage of being known by those who don't know you' (Maximes et Pensées).
Page me40.545
†e K. Marx, 'Declaration'.
Page me40.546
†a I loathe the profane rabble and shun it (Horace, Odes, III, I, 1).
Page me40.546
†b [H.] B[eta,] 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.
Page me40.546
†c [K. Vogt,] 'Zur Warnung', Schweizer Handels-Courier, No. 150 (supplement), 2 June 1859.
Page me40.546
†d horrible to say
Page me40.547
†a F. Engels, 'Progress of the Moorish War'.
Page me40.547
†b Hermann, No. 48, 3 December 1859.
Page me40.547
†c A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy

Page me40.547
†d K. Marx, 'Der ”wahrhaft” englische Minister und Russland am Bosporus' and 'Lord Palmerston und die polnische Insurrection. 1831' (excerpts from the pamphlet Lord Palmerston), Das Neue Portfolio, Berlin, 1859, Heft I; 1860, Heft II.
Page me40.548
†a See this volume, p. 319.
Page me40.548
†b Ibid., p. 524.
Page me40.548
†c Ibid., pp. 490, 493, 499, 530.
Page me40.548
†d as to
Page me40.548
†e See this volume, pp. 539-40.
Page me40.549
†a [W. Liebknecht,] 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 327 (supplement), 23 November 1859.
Page me40.549
†b by way of a return
Page me40.549
†c See this volume, p. 546.
Page me40.549
†d I loathe the profane rabble and shun it (Horace, Odes, III, I, 1).
Page me40.550
†a [H.] B[eta,] 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.
Page me40.550
†b [K. Vogt,] 'Zur Warnung', Schweizer Handels-Courier, No. 150 (supplement), 2 June 1859.
Page me40.550
†c horrible to say
Page me40.550
†d [H.] B[eta,] 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.
Page me40.551
†a Ch. Darwin, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection....
Page me40.552
†a [K.W. Eichhoff,] 'Stieber', Hermann, Nos. 36-38, 40, 42 and 43; 10, 17, 24 September and 8, 22 and 29 October 1859.
Page me40.552
†b [K.W. Eichhoff,] 'Berlin, 8. Nov. (Stieber)', Hermann, No. 45, 12 November 1859.
Page me40.553
†a Johanna Kinkel
Page me40.553
†b Gottfried Kinkel. Engels ironically calls him Johann after his wife, Johanna Kinkel.
Page me40.554

†a Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 345 (supplement), 11 December 1859.
Page me40.554
†b Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me40.554
†c consideration
Page me40.555
†a S.L. Borkheim, 'An die Redaction des Hermann', Hermann, No 50, 17 December 1859.
Page me40.555
†b See this volume, pp. 532-36, 543-44 and 548-49.
Page me40.556
†a But what can you expect?
Page me40.556
†b An allusion to Beta's article 'Ferdinand Freiligrath' published in Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859.
Page me40.556
†c This refers to Freiligrath's poem 'Zur Schillerfeier, 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London'. See also this volume, p. 511.
Page me40.557
†a Presumably an allusion to a line from Chapter 24 of Heine's satirical poem Atta Troll which describes the hero as 'no talent but a personage'.
Page me40.557
†b Jenny and Laura Marx
Page me40.561
†a Karl Marx
Page me40.561
†b K. Marx, 'The Fall of Kars'.
Page me40.561
†c Probably G.B. Wilkinson
Page me40.561
†d 'From Our Own Correspondent. Berlin, March 25', The Times, No. 22327, 28 March 1856.
Page me40.561
†e Ferdinand von Westphalen, Jenny Marx's stepbrother
Page me40.561
†f Heinrich Georg von Westphalen
Page me40.561
†g Christien Heinrich Philipp von Westphalen
Page me40.561
†h Ludwig von Westphalen
Page me40.562
†a Caroline von Westphalen
Page me40.562
†b Anna Elisabeth Franziska von Westphalen and Lisette von Krosigk
Page me40.563
†a order of the mufti — a jocular nickname for Karl Marx

Page me40.563
†b Karl Marx's
Page me40.563
†c In reply to this request Engels wrote the article 'Changes in the Russian Army'.
Page me40.564
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me40.564
†b K. Marx, 'Indian News'.
Page me40.564
†c 28 July 1857
Page me40.564
†d No letters by Marx to Engels dated earlier than 9 August 1857 have reached us.
Page me40.565
†a the British Museum Library
Page me40.565
†b See this volume, pp. 147-49.
Page me40.566
†a Added to Jenny's letter was one by Marx written on the same day and likewise addressed to Schramm.
Page me40.566
†b in high spirits
Page me40.566
†c Edgar Marx
Page me40.566
†d bankruptcy
Page me40.567
†a it has not yet affected him physically
Page me40.567
†b See this volume, pp. 211-13.
Page me40.568
†a Hermann Heinrich Becker
Page me40.569
†a See this volume, pp. 296-304.
Page me40.569
†b Franz Duncker; Jenny Marx refers to the contract for publishing Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.569
†c Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me40.570
†a 1885 in the original
Page me40.570
†b See this volume, pp. 286-87.
Page me40.570
†c of his A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me40.571

†a Ms damaged.
Page me40.571
†b Adolf Cluss (see this volume, pp. 374-75).
Page me40.571
†c adornment
Page me40.572
†a the British Museum Library
Page me40.573
†a K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me40.574
†a Ferdinand and Ida Freiligrath. See pp. 555-56.
Page me40.574
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me40.574
†c We shall see.
Page me40.574
†d Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me40.574
†e Ferdinand Lassalle and Ferdinand Freiligrath
Page me40.574
†f F. Freiligrath, 'Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London'.
Page me40.574
†g Kinkel's speech, see also this volume, pp. 512-13.
Page me40.574
†h Chr. H. Ph. von Westphalen, Geschichte der Feldzüge des Herzogs Ferdinand von Braunschweig-Lüneburg... Hrsg. von F.O.W.H. von Westphalen.
Page me40.575
†a my dear brother
Page me40.575
†b See this volume, pp. 561-62.
Page me40.575
†c Ludwig von Westphalen
Page me40.575
†d Heinrich Georg von Westphalen
Page me40.575
†e Caroline von Westphalen

Editor's Notes
Page me40.655
†* Asterisks are placed before the names of correspondents of Marx and Engels. — Ed.

Page Break me41.i

VOLUME 41

Page Break me41.ii
Page me41.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me41.iii

FRONTMATTER Titlepage

Page me41.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
41

MARX AND ENGELS: 1860-64

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me41.iv

Copyright page

Page me41.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:

GREAT BRITAIN: E.J. Hobsbawm, John Hoffman, Nicholas Jacobs, Monty Johnstone, Martin Milligan, Jeff Skelley, Ernst Wangermann.
USA: Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, James E. Jackson, Leonard B. Levenson, Betty Smith, Dirk J. Struik, William W. Weinstone.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — A.K. Avelichev, N.P. Karmanova, V.N. Sedikh, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, V.N. Pospelova, A.G. Yegorov.

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1985

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Page me41.iv
Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.

Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works.
English. 1975. II. Title.
HX 39. 5. A 16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0541-7 (v. 41)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me41.v

Contents

Page me41.v
PrefaceXIX
Page me41.v
KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
LETTERS
January 1860-September 1864

Page me41.v
1860

1. Marx to Engels. After 11 January 3

2. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 12 January 5
3. Marx to Engels. 25 January 6
4. Engels to Marx. 26 January 7
5. Marx to Engels. 28 January 9
6. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 30 January 11
7. Engels to Marx. 31 January 13
8. Marx to Engels. 31 January 15
9. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 31 January 17
10. Engels to Marx. 1 February 18
11. Engels to Marx. 2 February 19
12. Marx to Engels. 3 February 21
13. Marx to Joachim Lelewel. 3 February 23
14. Engels to Marx. 4 February 24
15. Marx to Engels. 4 February 26
16. Marx to Franz Duncker. 6 February 27
17. Engels to Marx. 7 February 28

Page Break me41.vi

18. Marx to Engels. 7 February 29
19. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 8 February 30
20. Marx to Engels. 9 February 32
21. Engels to Marx. 9 February 38
22. Engels to Marx. 12 February 39
23. Marx to J.M. Weber. 13 February 40
24. Marx to Engels. 13 February 46
25. Marx to Engels. 14 February 47
26. Marx to Engels. 15 February 49
27. Engels to Franz Duncker. 20 February 50
28. Engels to Ferdinand Lassalle. 20 February 51
29. Marx to J.M. Weber. 21 February 52
30. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 23 February 54
31. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 23 February 58
32. Marx to J.M. Weber. 24 February 59
33. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 27 February 77
34. Marx to Karl Schapper. 27 February 78
35. Marx to Muzembini. 27 February 79
36. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 29 February 80
37. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 3 March 88
38. Marx to J.M. Weber. 3 March 92
39. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 7 March 104
40. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 13 March 106
41. Marx to Lucien Jottrand. 13 March 107
42. Engels to Ferdinand Lassalle. 15 March 108
43. Marx to J.M. Weber. 27 March 110
44. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 4 April 111
45. Engels to Marx. 8 April 112

46. Marx to Engels. 9 April 113
47. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 9 April 114
48. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 9 April 116
49. Marx to Georg Lommel. 9 April 118
50. Engels to Emil Engels. 11 April 120
51. Marx to Engels. 12 April 121
52. Marx to J.M. Weber. 13 April 122
53. Marx to Engels. 16 April 123
54. Marx to Mór Perczel. 16 April 125
55. Marx to Engels. 17 April 126
56. Engels to Gottfried Ermen. 19 April 127

Page Break me41.vii
57. Marx to J.M. Weber. 21 April 128
58. Marx to Engels. 24 April 129
59. Marx to Georg Rheinländer. 24 April 130
60. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 24 April 131
61. Marx to J.M. Weber. 24 April 132
62. Marx to Engels. 7 May 133
63. Engels to Marx. 7 May 134
64. Marx to Engels. 8 May 135
65. Marx to Eduard Fischel. 8 May 136
66. Engels to Marx. 10 May 137
67. Engels to Marx. 11 May 138
68. Marx to Carl Siebel. 15 May 139
69. Marx to Engels. 28 May 141
70. Engels to Marx. 31 May 142
71. Marx to Eduard Fischel. 1 June 143
72. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. About 2 June 145
73. Marx to Engels. 2 June 155
74. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 2 June 156
Page me41.vii
75. Marx to Engels. 14 June 158
76. Marx to Engels. 16 June 158
77. Engels to Marx. 20 June 160
78. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 23 June 163
79. Engels to Marx. About 25 June 164
80. Marx to Engels. 25 June 165
81. Marx to Engels. 26 June 167
82. Engels to Marx. 26 June 168
83. Engels to Marx. 27 June 168
84. Marx to Engels. 28 June 169
85. Engels to Marx. After 28 June 170
86. Marx to Engels. 9 July 171
87. Marx to Engels. 17 July 172
88. Marx to Engels. 21 July 173

89. Engels to Marx. About 23 July 173
90. Marx to Engels. 25 July 175
91. Marx to Engels. 29 July 175
92. Engels to Marx. 1 August 176
93. Marx to J.M. Weber. 2 August 177
94. Marx to Engels. 4 August 178
95. Engels to Jenny Marx. 15 August 179

Page Break me41.viii
96. Marx to J.M. Weber. 20 August 180
97. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 21 August 181
98. Marx to Engels. 27 August 182
99. Marx to Engels. 29 August 183
100. Marx to Engels. 1 September 184
101. Marx to Engels. After 2 September 185
102. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 7 September 186
103. Marx to Engels. 13 September 188
104. Marx to Engels. 15 September 189
105. Engels to Marx. 15 September 190
106. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 15 September 192
107. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 15 September 195
108. Marx to Engels. 20 September 195
109. Marx to Engels. 25 September 196
110. Engels to Marx. 1 October 198
111. Marx to Engels. 2 October 201
112. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 2 October 203
113. Engels to Marx. 5 October 204
114. Marx to Engels. 11 October 206
115. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 23 October207
116. Marx to Engels. 25 October 208
117. Marx to Engels. 5 November 209
118. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 5 November 210
119. Marx to Engels. 13 November 211
120. Marx to Engels. 14 November 213
121. Marx to Engels. 21 November 214
122. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 21 November 214
123. Marx to Bertalan Szemere. 22 November 215
124. Marx to Engels. 23 November 216
125. Marx to Franz Duncker. 24 November 217
126. Marx to Engels. 26 November 218
127. Marx to Engels. 28 November 220
128. Engels to Marx. 3 December 221
129. Engels to Marx. 5 December 222
130. Marx to Engels. 5 December 223
131. Marx to Engels. 6 December 225
132. Marx to Engels. 12 December 226

133. Engels to Marx. 18 December 228
134. Marx to Engels. 18 December 230

Page Break me41.ix
135. Engels to Marx. 19 December 231
136. Marx to Engels. 19 December 231
137. Marx to Engels. 23 December 233
138. Marx to Engels. 26 December 234
139. Marx to Engels. 27 December 237

Page me41.ix
1861

140. Marx to Engels. 3 January 238
141. Marx to Carl Siebel. 3 January 239
142. Marx to Carl Siebel. 3 January 240
143. Engels to Marx. 7 January 241
144. Marx to Engels. 8 January 242
145. Marx to Engels. 10 January 244
146. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 16 January 245
147. Marx to Engels. 18 January 247
148. Marx to Engels. 22 January 249
149. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 28 January 251
150. Marx to Engels. 29 January 252
151. Marx to Engels. 31 January 253
152. Engels to Marx. 31 January 254
153. Marx to Engels. 2 February 255
154. Engels to Marx. 4 February 256
155. Engels to Marx. 6 February 256
156. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 7 February 258
157. Engels to Elisabeth Engels. 13 February 259
158. Marx to Engels. 14 February 261
159. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 15 February 263
160. Marx to Engels. 27 February 264
161. Engels to Elisabeth Engels. 27 February 266
162. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 7 March 267
163. Marx to Antoinette Philips. 24 March 269
164. Marx to Carl Siebel. 28 March 272
165. Marx to Carl Siebel. 2 April 273
166. Marx to Antoinette Philips. 13 April 274
167. Marx to Lion Philips. 6 May 276
168. Marx to Engels. 7 May 279
169. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 8 May 283
170. Marx to Engels. 10 May 285
171. Marx to Engels. 16 May 290

Page Break me41.x
172. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 29 May 291
173. Marx to Engels. 10 June 292
174. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 11 June 293
175. Engels to Marx. 12 June 294
176. Marx to Engels. 19 June 297
177. Marx to Engels. 1 July 300
178. Engels to Marx. 3 July 303
179. Marx to Engels. 5 July 305
180. Marx to Engels. 12 July 309
181. Marx to Antoinette Philips. 17 July 311
182. Marx to Engels. 20 July 314
183. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 22 July 316
184. Marx to Engels. 3 August 319
185. Marx to Antoinette Philips. 24 September 320
186. Marx to Engels. 28 September 321
187. Marx to Engels. 30 October 323
188. Marx to Engels. 6 November 325
189. Marx to Watteau. 10 November 326
190. Marx to Engels. 18 November 327
191. Marx to Engels. 20 November 328
192. Engels to Marx. 27 November 329
193. Engels to Marx. 2 December 330
194. Marx to Engels. 5 December 331
195. Marx to Engels. 9 December 332
196. Marx to Engels. 13 December 333
197. Marx to Engels. 19 December 334
198. Marx to Engels. 27 December 337

Page me41.x
1862

199. Marx to Josef Valentin Weber. 15 January 339
200. Marx to Engels. 25 February 340
201. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 26 February 341
202. Engels to Marx. 28 February 343
203. Marx to Engels. 3 March 344
204. Engels to Marx. 5 March 346
205. Marx to Engels. 6 March 347
206. Engels to Marx. About 8 March 351
207. Marx to Engels. 15 March 352
208. Marx to Engels. 28 April 353

Page Break me41.xi
209. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 28 April 355
210. Engels to Marx. 5 May 358

211. Marx to Engels. 6 May 362
212. Engels to Marx. 12 May 363
213. Engels to Marx. About 18 May 364
214. Marx to Engels. 19 May 365
215. Engels to Marx. 23 May 365
216. Marx to Engels. 27 May 369
217. Engels to Marx. 29 May 371
218. Engels to Marx. 4 June 372
219. Engels to Carl Siebel. 4 June 374
220. Marx to Engels. About 6 June 376
221. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 16 June 376
222. Marx to Engels. 18 June 380
223. Engels to Marx. About 3 July 382
224. Marx to Engels. 5 July 382
225. Marx to Engels. 11 July 383
226. Marx to Engels. 21 July 384
227. Engels to Ferdinand Lassalle. 23 July 385
228. Engels to Marx. 30 July 386
229. Marx to Engels. 30 July 388
230. Engels to Marx. 31 July 391
231. Engels to Marx. 1 August 392
232. Marx to Engels. 2 August 394
233. Marx to Engels. 7 August 399
234. Engels to Marx. 8 August 401
235. Marx to Engels. 9 August 403
236. Engels to Marx. Before 12 August 404
237. Engels to Marx. 13 August 405
238. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 13 August 405
239. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 14 August 406
240. Marx to Engels. 14 August 407
241. Marx to Wilhelm Schwarz. 19 August 408
242. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 20 August 409
243. Marx to Engels. 20 August 410
244. Engels to Marx. 21 August 412
245. Engels to Ferdinand Lassalle. 21 August 413
246. Engels to Marx. Beginning of September 413
247. Engels to Marx. 9 September 414

Page Break me41.xii

248. Marx to Engels. 10 September 415
249. Marx to Wilhelm Wolff. 4 October 417
250. Engels to Marx. 16 October 418
251. Marx to Engels. 29 October 419
252. Marx to Engels. 4 November 422
253. Engels to Marx. 5 November 422
254. Marx to Ferdinand Lassalle. 7 November 424

255. Marx to Engels. 9 November 426
256. Marx to Engels. 14 November 427
257. Engels to Marx. 15 November 427
258. Marx to Engels. 17 November 429
259. Marx to Engels. 20 November 431
260. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 15 December 432
261. Marx to Engels. 24 December 432
262. Engels to Marx. 26 December 434
263. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 28 December 435
264. Engels to Marx. 30 December 437

Page me41.xii
1863

265. Marx to Engels. 2 January 439
266. Engels to Marx. 7 January 441
267. Marx to Engels. 8 January 442
268. Engels to Marx. 13 January 443
269. Marx to Engels. 24 January 444
270. Engels to Marx. 26 January 446
271. Marx to Engels. 28 January 448
272. Marx to Engels. 13 February 453
273. Marx to Engels. 17 February 454
274. Engels to Marx. 17 February 455
275. Engels to Marx. 19 February 457
276. Marx to Engels. 20 February 458
277. Engels to Marx. About 21 February 459
278. Marx to Engels. 21 February 460
279. Marx to Engels. 24 March 461
280. Engels to Marx. 8 April 464
281. Marx to Engels. 9 April 466
282. Marx to Engels. 18 April 469
283. Engels to Marx. 21 April 470

Page Break me41.xiii

284. Marx to Josef Valentin Weber. 22 April472
285. Engels to Marx. 20 May 472
286. Marx to Engels. 29 May 474
287. Marx to Engels. 10 June 476
288. Engels to Marx. 11 June 476
289. Marx to Engels. 12 June 479
290. Marx to Engels. 22 June 481
291. Engels to Marx. 24 June 482
292. Marx to Engels. 6 July 483
293. Marx to Engels. 15 August 488
294. Marx to Engels. 12 September 491

295. Engels to Marx. 24 November 493
296. Marx to Engels. 2 December 495
297. Engels to Marx. 3 December 495
298. Marx to Engels. 4 December 497
299. Marx to Jenny Marx. 15 December 498
300. Marx to Engels. 22 December 500
301. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 23 December 502
302. Marx to Engels. 27 December 503

Page me41.xiii
1864

303. Engels to Marx. 3 January 505
304. Marx to Engels. 20 January 507
305. Marx to Lion Philips. 20 February 508
306. Marx to Engels. 25 February 511
307. Marx to Engels. 11 March 511
308. Marx to Lion Philips. 29 March 512
309. Marx to Lion Philips. 14 April 514
310. Marx to Engels. 19 April 516
311. Engels to Marx. 29 April 518
312. Engels to Marx. 1 May 520
313. Engels to Marx. 2 May 521
314. Engels to Marx. 2 May 522
315. Marx to Jenny Marx. 9 May 523
316. Marx to Jenny Marx. 10 May 524
317. Marx to Jenny Marx. 13 May 525
318. Marx to His Daughter, Jenny. 17 May 526
319. Engels to Hermann Engels. 24 May 528

Page Break me41.xiv

320. Marx to Engels. 26 May 529
321. Engels to Marx. 30 May 531
322. Marx to Engels. 3 June 533
323. Engels to Marx. 3 June 535
324. Marx to Engels. 7 June 536
325. Engels to Marx. 9 June 539
326. Marx to Engels. 16 June 540
327. Marx to Lion Philips. 25 June 542
328. Marx to Engels. 1 July 545
329. Marx to Engels. 4 July 545
330. Engels to Marx. 5 July 547
331. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 12 July 548
332. Marx to Engels. 25 July 549
333. Marx to Lion Philips. 17 August 550
334. Marx to Engels. 31 August 552

335. Engels to Marx. 2 September 553
336. Marx to Engels. 2 September 555
337. Marx to Jenny Marx. 2 September 556
338. Engels to Marx. 4 September 558
339. Marx to Engels. 7 September 560
340. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 12 September 563

Page me41.xiv
APPENDICES

1. Jenny Marx to Marx. 16 March 1860 567
2. Jenny Marx to Engels. 14 August 1860 568
3. Jenny Marx to Engels. After 5 October 1860 569
4. Jenny Marx to Louise Weydemeyer. 11 March 1861 569
5. Jenny Marx to Engels. Before 16 March 1861 576
6. Jenny Marx to Engels. Between 21 and 24 March 1861 577
7. Jenny Marx to Engels. Beginning of April 1861 578
8. Jenny Marx to Berta Markheim. 6 July 1863 581
9. Jenny Marx to Berta Markheim. 12 October 1863 583
10. Jenny Marx to Engels. Beginning of November 1863 584
11. Jenny Marx to Engels. About 24 November 1863 585
12. Jenny Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. About 24 November 1863 586
13. Laura Marx to Engels. 10 June 1864 588
14. Jenny Marx to Karl Friedrich Moritz Elsner. Middle of June 1864 588

Page Break me41.xv
Page me41.xiv
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 593
Name Index 660
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 706
Index of Periodicals 728
Subject Index 737

Page me41.xiv
ILLUSTRATIONS

Karl Marx (London, 1861) 298-99
The USA during the Civil War (period from 1861 to 1864) (map) 314-15
Marx's passport, 1861 330-31
First page of Engels' letter to Marx of 20 May 1863 474-75
Tables showing the process of social reproduction enclosed by Marx in his letter to Engels of 6 July 1863 490-91
Wilhelm Wolff 522-23
Marx's letter to his wife, Jenny, containing the news of Wilhelm

Wolff's death 522-23
Frederick Engels (Manchester, 1864) 538-39
Marx, Engels and Marx's daughters Laura, Eleanor and Jenny, 1864 538-39

Page Break me41.xvi
Page Break me41.xvii
Page me41.xvii
Translated by PETER and BETTY ROSS

Page Break me41.xviii
Page Break me41.xix Preface

Page me41.xix

Volume 41 of the Collected Works of Marx and Engels contains their letters to each other and to third persons from January 1860 to September 1864. This material provides an irreplaceable insight into their life and work, enabling us to follow the composition of their writings, and to build up a picture of their practical revolutionary activities.

Page me41.xix

This period saw the continuous rise of the bourgeois democratic and national liberation movements which had been growing in Europe and America ever since the world economic crisis of 1857. The rapid development of capitalism in Britain, France, Germany and some other European countries accelerated the liquidation of the political and social survivals of feudalism. In Germany and Italy, where the bourgeois revolution had not yet been completed, the movement for national unification once more got into its stride. In Russia, even after the abolition of serfdom in February 1861, peasant disturbances continued, and revolutionary tendencies were growing among the progressive intelligentsia. In 1863, a national liberation uprising began in Poland. In the USA, the Civil War was being fought between the capitalist North and the slave-owning South. There was growing opposition in France to the Bonaparte regime. The struggle of the oppressed peoples under the Austrian monarchy was gathering momentum. In Mexico, the bourgeois revolution triumphed.

Page me41.xix

As a result of the industrial revolution, serious changes were taking place in the proletariat's numerical strength, composition and class consciousness. In 1859-60 the London building workers' strike, which had repercussions far beyond Britain, vividly demonstrated the irreconcilability of proletarian and bourgeois class interests. The working-class movement had set out on a course of independent struggle, which testified to its gradual emancipation from the ideological influence of the bourgeoisie. In the first half of the 1860s, these processes became manifest, in England, with the further growth of trade-unionism and the workers' awakening to political activity; in France, with the growing class awareness of the proletariat; in Germany, with the establishment of the General Association of German Workers (1863). In addition, there was the active participation by workers of various nationalities in the revolutionary struggle for freedom and democracy in the American Civil War and in Garibaldi's detachments in Italy. The realisation by progressive workers that their interests ran counter to those of the ruling classes, the increased feeling of class solidarity and the strengthening of international contacts led to the foundation, on 28 September 1864, of the International Working Men's Association (the First International).

Page Break me41.xx

Page me41.xx

In 1860-64, Marx and Engels regarded as the main task the further elaboration of economic theory, which was of crucial importance for the development of the working-class revolutionary movement. They were also close followers of current events, which they analysed in their articles for progressive bourgeois newspapers. The rise of the working-class and democratic movement highlighted the need for establishing a proletarian party and promoting international contacts between proletarian revolutionaries.
Page me41.xx

Marx considered it his principal duty to write an economic work which would arm the proletariat with a knowledge of the laws of capitalist society's development and would provide economic proof of the historical necessity for a proletarian revolution. On 15 September 1860, he wrote to Lassalle that his work had an 'expressly revolutionary function' (p. 193). In June 1859, the first instalment of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy was published (see present edition, Vol. 29). Early in 1860, Marx began preparing the second instalment which, in his own words, was to contain the 'quintessence' of his economic theory (p. 12).
Page me41.xx

Marx wanted to finish this work as soon as possible. Engels, too, considered the early appearance of Marx's work 'of paramount importance' (p. 14). However, Marx interrupted his work in order to publish a repudiation of the libellous attacks on him made by Karl Vogt. Not until a year and a half later, at the beginning of June 1861, was he able to resume his economic studies (p. 292). True, they were often interrupted subsequently because of recurring material difficulties and ill health (see, e.g., pp. 353 and 435). Moreover, Marx was constantly widening the scope of his study, perfecting its structure and developing its propositions. Although Marx worked hard and with the utmost dedication, the project, which was to be his masterpiece, Capital, stretched out over many years.

Page Break me41.xxi
Page me41.xxi

Marx's and Engels' letters make it possible to follow the different stages in the writing of Capital and to see how, in the process of preparing the second instalment of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, Marx exceeded the original planned limits of the manuscript so that by the summer of 1863 he had written a far bigger second rough draft of the future work (the first version of Capital was the manuscript of 1857-58; see present edition, Vols. 28 and 29). The manuscript of 1861-63, which Marx called A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, consists of 23 notebooks (present edition, Vols. 30-34). The problems of the future Volume I of Capital are here worked out in detail, and some important propositions in Volumes II and III are expounded. The greater part of the manuscript is taken up by a historical-critical section (Theories of Surplus Value).

Page me41.xxi

In a letter to Ludwig Kugelmann of 28 December 1862, Marx mentions for the first time his intention of calling his work Capital and of using the original title, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, solely as a subtitle. He decided to use the manuscript of 1861-63 for a book which was to deal with 'capital in general' (p. 435). Its new structure had, in the main, taken shape by January 1863. In a letter to Engels of 29 May 1863, he wrote that he intended to 'make a fair copy of the political economy for the printers (and give it a final polish)' (p. 474). Evaluating his own work, Marx noted in a letter to Engels dated 15 August 1863 that he had 'had to demolish everything and even build up the historical section out of what was in part quite unknown material' (p. 488).

Page me41.xxi

Late in July or in August 1863, the work on Capital entered a new stage. Marx revised the manuscript of 1861-63, the result of which was the third rough draft of the theoretical part of Capital, consisting of three books (the manuscripts of 1863-65). He worked on the first book (the future Volume I of Capital) until the summer of 1864.

Page me41.xxi

The letters reflect the titanic work done by Marx in those years: the study and analysis of a mass of factual material (official reports, press publications), and the critical interpretation of works by the classic bourgeois political economists and by representatives of vulgar political economy. In his letter to Lassalle of 16 June 1862, Marx attacks the eclecticism of the German vulgar economist Roscher, who 'merely goes snuffling round amidst the wealth of set answers ... always with an eye to the prejudices and the interests of his paymasters' (p. 379).

Page me41.xxi

Not only do the letters illustrate the various stages of Marx's work on Capital; they also contain some of the conclusions at which he was arriving in the course of his research. Thus, in his letters to Engels of 2 and 9 August 1862, he outlines 'a lengthy and complex affair' (p. 394) — the formation, as the result of competition and the flow of capital from one branch to another, of the average rate of profit, and the proof of the possibility of absolute ground rent 'without infringing the law of value' (p. 403). He also indicates the practical revolutionary significance of this problem for substantiating the need to abolish private landed property from the viewpoint of the proletariat's interests (p. 398). Lenin commented that these letters give 'a remarkably popular, concise, and clear exposition of the theory of the average rate of profit on capital and of absolute ground rent' (V.I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 21, p. 68).

Page Break me41.xxii

Page me41.xxii

In a letter to Engels of 28 January 1863, Marx mentions the 'considerable controversy' about the way in which the machine differs from the tool (p. 449), gives a brief historical outline of the growth of machine production and, finally, formulates the concept of the industrial revolution: 'The industrial revolution,' he writes, 'began as soon as mechanical means were employed in fields where, from time immemorial, the final result had called for human labour..., where, by the nature of things and from the outset, man has not functioned purely as power' (p. 451).

Page me41.xxii

Worthy of special attention is the letter from Marx to Engels of 6 July 1863. In it, Marx formulates the basic theses of his theory of social reproduction, which he also presents in the form of an economic table (pp. 490-91). This analysis of the reproduction and circulation of the aggregate social capital was to be expounded later in detail and at a higher theoretical level in Section III of the second volume of Capital.

Page me41.xxii

Marx carried on his economic studies in close and fruitful contact with his friend Engels. He not only obtained from him data on the organisation of production, but also kept him advised of the progress he was making in his research and consulted him on many important matters. 'Can't you come down for a few days?' he wrote to Engels on 20 August 1862. 'In my critique I have demolished so much of the old stuff that there are a number of points I should like to consult you about before I proceed' (p. 411).

Page me41.xxii

The letters in the present volume bear evidence to the encyclopaedic knowledge of Marx and Engels and the vast scope and diversity of their scientific interests. They enthusiastically welcomed Charles Darwin's On the Origin of Species, published in 1859. Both Marx and Engels valued it highly as a work that affirmed the idea of development in nature, refuted the idealistic interpretation of its laws, and bore out materialist dialectics. In 1863-64, Marx and Engels read and exchanged views on books by Sir Charles Lyell, Thomas Henry Huxley, Perceval Barton Lord, Theodor Schwann, Mathias Jakob Schleiden and others. Marx was also studying mathematics with a view to substantiating differential and integral calculus in terms of dialectics.

Page Break me41.xxiii

Page me41.xxiii

A number of letters testify to the interest taken by Marx and Engels in ancient history, the history of religion, and law. Marx read in the original Greek, 'for recreation', Appian on the civil wars in Rome. Appian attracted him because 'he probes the material basis' of those wars (p. 265). Marx liked the way Appian described his favourite hero, Spartacus, as a 'great general..., of noble character'. Marx's letters to Lassalle of 11 June and 22 July 1861, and Engels' letter to Marx of 2 December 1861 contain a critique of Lassalle's work, Das System der erworbenen Rechte. In this connection Marx and Engels discussed Roman law, particularly its application in West European countries, and raised the general philosophical problem of the relationship between form and content (p. 318). Criticising Lassalle's idealistic approach to the legal categories, his faith 'in the “idea of law”, absolute law' (p. 330), they demonstrated that the law is conditioned by the production and property relations (pp. 294, 317-18).

Page me41.xxiii

As before, Engels pursued his special interest in languages (he had resumed his studies of Russian and Serbian), and in the theory and history of the art of war. The letters reflect the wide range of military problems with which he concerned himself at the time. Engels analysed, from the standpoint of historical materialism, the military aspects of current international affairs (with special reference to the US Civil War), and also wrote about his articles for newspapers and The New American Cyclopaedia.

Page me41.xxiii

The letters of Marx and Engels from 1860 to 1864 give a detailed picture of their work as journalists. They continued contributing, until March 1862, to the progressive American newspaper, the New-York Daily Tribune, of which Marx was an official correspondent for eleven years. At the beginning of the 1860s, it spoke for the Republican party and actively opposed slavery in America. Although nominally only Marx was correspondent for the Tribune, he continued writing for it in collaboration with Engels. Engels also contributed to The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire and to the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung in Darmstadt.

Page Break me41.xxiv
Page me41.xxiv

In May 1861, Marx was invited to write for the liberal Viennese newspaper Die Presse, which was popular not only in Austria, but also in Germany. Marx set great store by the opportunity to publish articles in the European periodical press. He accepted the offer of Die Presse and began, in October 1861, sending articles to Vienna; however, for political reasons the editors did not always publish them. 'The rotten Presse is printing barely half my articles,' he wrote to Engels on 27 December 1861. In December 1862, Marx had to give up contributing to this newspaper altogether.
Page me41.xxiv

The letters of Marx and Engels are an important supplement to their journalism, making it possible to reconstruct how the articles were written and how, by exchanging opinions, they arrived at a common view on various matters. The letters often contain more abrasive, emotional judgments on various personalities than the articles. They reflected the spontaneous reaction of Marx or Engels to this or that instance of personal behaviour and were not intended for publication.
Page me41.xxiv

Marx and Engels gave much attention at the time to the national liberation movement in Italy. They followed in detail the heroic campaign of Garibaldi's 'Thousand' in Sicily and in South Italy in 1860 and had a high opinion of his revolutionary tactics (p. 205). They identified themselves with the Italian people's revolutionary war, which was making possible the unification of the country by revolutionary means, and attributed an all-European significance to the Italian problem, as relevant to unmasking the true aims of Napoleon III's European policy — the exploitation of the national liberation struggle of the oppressed peoples in his own selfish interests. 'Garibaldi is a veritable godsend. Otherwise, Bonaparte would have been restored to popularity and sustained by the Russo-Prussian-Austrian Holy Alliance,' Marx wrote to Engels on 15 September 1860. The leaders of the working class exposed the policy of the Piedmontese government of Cavour, who was trying to unite Italy under the aegis of the Savoy dynasty. This was objectively leading to the subordination of Italy to Bonapartist France. 'Cavour is actually Bonaparte's tool,' Marx wrote to Lassalle on 2 October 1860. Marx also noted the dangerous flagging of the revolutionary spirit in Garibaldi's army (pp. 203-04), the causes of which he disclosed more fully in his articles on Italy (see present edition, Vol. 19).

Page me41.xxiv

Marx and Engels also regarded the problem of Germany's unification as closely connected with the revolutionary struggle of the Italian people. This struggle, in their opinion, was reducing the threat to Germany from Bonapartist France (p. 132). Two factors, they believed, could create conditions for the unification of Germany by revolutionary-democratic means in the first half of the 1860s: first, the constitutional conflict that had developed in 1860 between the Prussian government and the bourgeois liberal majority of the Diet (Landtag) over the problem of reorganising the Prussian army; second, the national liberation struggle of Schleswig and Holstein against Danish domination in 1863-64. His visit to Germany in 1861 convinced Marx of the growing mood of opposition, the revolutionary ferment and the disillusion of the German people with the 'new era' proclaimed by 'handsome William' (p. 312).

Page Break me41.xxv

Page me41.xxv

Right up to the outbreak of the Austro-Prussian war in 1866, Marx and Engels retained their hopes of the country's unification by revolutionary-democratic means. They severely criticised the indecision and cowardice of the German liberal bourgeoisie and the reactionary policy of Bismarck, who was using the Danish War of 1864 as a first step on the road to the unification of Germany 'from above' by 'iron and blood'.

Page me41.xxv

With unfailing attention, Marx and Engels followed the maturing crisis in the social and political system of the Second Empire in France. They stressed in their letters that Napoleon III was seeking a way out of it in foreign policy adventures and trying to use in his own interests the aspirations of the Italian and German peoples for unification. They denounced the demagogic subterfuges to which he was resorting in order to camouflage his predatory policy. Bonaparte, wrote Marx on 29 March 1864 to Lion Philips, 'set his troupiers up in business as “freedom” exporters' (p. 513). In 1861, Britain, France and Spain launched their armed intervention in Mexico, where the bourgeois revolution had triumphed. On the part of Napoleon III, the Mexican expedition, openly colonial in character (pp. 349-50), was an attempt to strengthen his position by victories overseas (p. 453). Marx foresaw the inevitable failure of the expedition and the fall of Napoleon's empire. 'I myself am in no doubt,' he wrote to Engels on 15 August 1863, 'that Mexico will be the hurdle at which he'll break his neck' (p. 489). Marx derided the Bonapartist methods of political demagogy, which, under conditions of colonial war, had assumed particularly grotesque forms. He also pointed out another danger of the British-French-Spanish intervention. Napoleon III and Palmerston wanted to use Mexico as a base for intervention in the US Civil War on behalf of the slave-owning Confederacy (see, e.g., p. 489).

Page Break me41.xxvi

Page me41.xxvi

One of the key issues in the correspondence between Marx and Engels during this period was the US Civil War. In their letters, as in their articles, they analysed its causes, disclosed its true nature and motive forces and pointed out its significance not only for the United States but for Europe. Marx and Engels were only able to throw light in the press on the early stage of the war, as their contributions to the New-York Daily Tribune and Die Presse ended in 1862. The letters are particularly valuable, since they interpreted the course of the Civil War from beginning to end. They furnish a methodological basis for studying the history of that war and many problems of the United States's subsequent development.

Page me41.xxvi

The letters show that, even before the outbreak of the Civil War, Marx and Engels were following the growing antagonism between North and South closely, and were aware that a clash was unavoidable. They regarded it as a result of the irreconcilable struggle between two social systems, capitalist production developing in the North and the plantation system in the South, based on slave labour. The preservation of slavery was incompatible with the capitalist development of the country as a whole. The problem of whether the American farmers would be given access to land in the West, or if slavery would spread all over the States, was at the root of the Civil War. Realising that hostilities were already imminent, Engels wrote to Marx on 7 January 1861: 'The least irruption of irregulars from the North might result in a general conflagration. At all events, one way or another, slavery would appear to be rapidly nearing its end' (p. 242).
Page me41.xxvi

Marx and Engels regarded the Civil War in the USA as a specific form of bourgeois-democratic revolution whose victory would open the way to the rapid development of capitalism in North America. They therefore vigorously supported the North, objectively the vehicle of social progress. They assessed the significance of the Civil War in the context of the overall outlook for the revolutionary movement in Europe and America, considering that it could give a powerful stimulus to social struggle and the development of the working-class movement. 'The slavery crisis in the United States,' Marx wrote to Lassalle on 16 January 1861, even before the beginning of the war, 'will bring about a terrible crisis in England...; the Manchester cotton lords are already beginning to tremble' (p. 246). Later, in a letter to Engels of 29 October 1862, Marx pointed out that events in America 'are such as to transform the world' (p. 421).
Page me41.xxvi

As the letters show, Marx studied the history of the secession of the Southern states very carefully and revealed its true nature and aims. Drawing on American sources, he refuted the claims of the British bourgeois press about its 'peaceful nature'. He demonstrated that secession was not an act of self-defence, but a predatory war for the expansion of slavery. For fifty years, the slave-owners had been waging a steady offensive struggle against the North. After the election of Abraham Lincoln as President in 1860, they went over to open military operations and on 12 April 1861 unleashed a war against the Union. Marx described secession as 'usurpations without exception' by a handful of slave-owners, a policy that was at odds with the interests of the vast majority of the population even in the southern states and met the 'strongest opposition' there (pp. 301, 305-09).

Page Break me41.xxvii
Page me41.xxvii

Marx, and especially Engels, followed the course of military operations in the USA. Engels summed up the major battles and analysed the strategy and tactics of the two sides (see Engels' letters to Marx of 12 June and 3 July 1861, 5 and 23 May and 30 July 1862, 11 June 1863, 9 June and 4 September 1864 and many others). While noting the progressive nature of the war on the part of the Northerners, Marx and Engels severely criticised the methods of the Federal government, which was afraid to give the war a nationwide revolutionary character and proclaim the abolition of slavery. They also deplored the professional incompetence, indecision, cowardice and instances of outright treachery on the part of the Federal government ministers and generals in the army of the North who were associated, through material interests, with the slaveowners of the South (pp. 307, 386-87, 414 and others). Marx stressed in 1862 that 'the way in which the North is waging the war is none other than might be expected of a bourgeois republic, where humbug has reigned supreme for so long' (p. 416).

Page me41.xxvii

The military failures of the North sometimes made Engels doubt the possibility of its winning, and he confided this to Marx (pp. 386-88, 414-15 and others). Marx pointed out in his replies that, in assessing the prospects of the war, consideration must be taken not only of the strength of the armies on both sides, but of the totality of economic, socio-political and military factors (pp. 400, 420-21). He wrote to Engels on 10 September 1862: 'It strikes me that you allow yourself to be influenced by the military aspect of things a little too much' (p. 416).

Page me41.xxvii

In the letters of this period, the fundamental proposition of Marxist military science is developed: that the character of a war and the methods of its conduct are mutually determined. '...Unless the North instantly adopts a revolutionary stance, it will get the terrible thrashing it deserves,' Engels wrote to Marx on 30 July 1862. Marx also emphasised that 'wars of this kind ought to be conducted along revolutionary lines, and the Yankees have so far been trying to conduct it along constitutional ones' (p. 400). He was certain that sooner or later the people would compel the government to change its mode of waging the war.

Page Break me41.xxviii

Page me41.xxviii

Subsequent events confirmed Marx's predictions. In the middle of 1862, having realised the need for decisive action, Lincoln put through a series of revolutionary-democratic measures, the main ones being the emancipation of the slaves, and the Homestead Act, which gave great numbers of American farmers access to the land. These measures, described by Marx as of 'historical import' (p. 421), became a turning-point in the history of the Civil War and ensured the ultimate victory of the North. 'The fury with which the Southerners are greeting Lincoln's acts is proof of the importance of these measures,' Marx wrote to Engels on 29 October 1862.

Page me41.xxviii

As early as during the Civil War, Marx and Engels noted the socio-economic factors that favoured the preservation of racial discrimination and of national and social oppression in the USA after the Republicans' victory and the abolition of slavery. As fighters for the proletarian revolution, they denounced American bourgeois democracy, describing the USA as the 'archetype of democratic humbug' (p. 562). 'The people have been cheated,' wrote Engels, and the bourgeoisie is always ready to compromise with the slave-owners for the sake of 'the almighty dollar' (p. 457). The record of the Civil War bore out Marx's and Engels' conclusion that the bourgeois-democratic republic was only a stage on the road to proletarian revolution. As Engels wrote to Marx on 15 November 1862, '...the bourgeois republic should be utterly discredited..., so that ... it may never again be preached on its own merits, but only as a means towards, and a form of transition to social revolution' (p. 428).

Page me41.xxviii

During the period in question, Marx and Engels were keeping a close watch on the revolutionary events in Russia and Poland. As can be seen from their letters, it was at this time that they began to regard a peasant revolution in Russia as a potential stimulus to proletarian revolution in Europe. They envisaged support for the general European revolutionary movement in the campaign for the abolition of serfdom in Russia which, in the late 1850s and early 1860s, had produced a revolutionary situation there. 'In my view,' Marx wrote to Engels on 11 January 1860, 'the most momentous thing happening in the world today is the slave movement — on the one hand, in America, ... and in Russia, on the other... Thus, a “social” movement has been started both in the West and in the East. Together with the impending downbreak in Central Europe, this promises great things' (p. 4; see also p. 7). Even after the abolition of serfdom, Marx and Engels continued studying the unceasing actions of the peasants, robbed by the 1861 reform.

Page Break me41.xxix

Page me41.xxix

Marx and Engels also discussed the implications of the peasant movement in Russia for the national liberation struggle in Poland, which they regarded as being of general European significance and which, given the favourable development of events, could become the starting-point of a revolution in Europe. They considered that an uprising in Poland could call forth mass peasant actions in Russia which, in their turn, would benefit the movement in Poland. An alliance of the Russian and Polish revolutionary movements could ensure the success of an uprising in Poland. On learning of the Polish insurrection, which began in January 1863, Marx wrote to Engels: 'What do you think of the Polish business? This much is certain, the era of revolution has now fairly opened in Europe once more... This time, let us hope, the lava will flow from East to West and not in the opposite direction...' (p. 453).

Page me41.xxix

Marx and Engels also hoped that the Polish insurrection and the peasant revolution in Russia would lead to a revolutionary upsurge in Germany, and above all in Prussia, which was undergoing an acute political crisis. Deprived of support from Russian tsarism, the Prussian monarchy would lose its hegemony in Germany. Engels wrote to Marx on 17 February 1863: 'Monsieur Bismarck knows that it will be a matter of life and death for him if there's revolution in Poland and Russia' (p. 456).

Page me41.xxix

In view of the vast importance of this question for Germany's future, Marx and Engels felt something had to be done to stimulate democratic circles in Germany to take resolute action in defence of the insurgent Poles and oppose the internal reaction. With this aim in view, they decided, as early as in February 1863, to write a pamphlet, Germany and Poland (pp. 455, 457-59), in which they would trace, on the strength of concrete historical material, Prussia's predatory policy towards Poland and the rise of the Hohenzollern dynasty. The idea was to demonstrate the absolute incompatibility of Germany's interests with those of 'the Hohenzollerns' own state' (p. 462), i.e. of reactionary Prussia, which was the main obstacle to the unification of Germany by democratic means. Just as scathingly they denounced (also on the historical plane) the hypocritical policy of the British and French governments which, while posing as Poland's protectors, were pursuing their own selfish ends (see, for example, pp. 462-63). Marx and Engels also disclosed the treacherous role of the Polish nobility where their own people's interests were concerned (pp. 470-71).

Page Break me41.xxx
Page me41.xxx
In analysing the motive forces of the insurrection and its prospects, Marx and Engels agreed that it could only succeed given the broad participation of the peasant masses (p. 483). They therefore attached special importance to the movement in Lithuania, where an active part was being played by the peasants — a movement which extended beyond the bounds of the Kingdom of Poland, to other provinces of the Russian empire (p. 464). However, as early as in the summer of 1863 it was clear that the chances of success were slight. The movement in Poland did not develop into an agrarian revolution, and the struggle of the peasants in Russia was by this time on the wane. The tsarist government not only quelled the Polish insurrection but used it as a pretext for suppressing the revolutionary movement at home, thereby slowing down its further development.
Page me41.xxx
The main cause of the insurrection's failure, Marx and Engels held, was that the leadership had been taken over by the bourgeois-landowner party of 'whites'. These were afraid to rely on the popular masses and placed all their hopes on support from the government of Napoleon III and Palmerston. Marx and Engels noted with alarm the growth of Bonapartist illusions among the Polish democrats. On 15 August 1863 Marx wrote to Engels: 'The Polish affair has gone completely off the rails because of ... Boustrapa [Napoleon III. — Ed.], and the influence his intrigues have given the Czartoryski party' (p. 489). The same social and political factors, in Engels' opinion, were behind the military failures of the insurgents. He also pointed out the weak sides of their military organisation — the lack of experienced commanders, the shortage of arms, and the low standard of leadership, which led to considerable losses at the very beginning of the uprising (pp. 461, 464, 466, 476, 483, 492).
Page me41.xxx
Marx and Engels endeavoured to give practical support to the Polish revolutionaries. They considered that sympathy for the Polish liberation movement among the workers and democratic circles in the West European countries should be used to organise aid to the insurgents, and to strengthen the internationalism of the workers of different countries. In their letters, Marx and Engels wrote with outrage of the 'foul conduct' of the Prussian government, which gave every possible assistance to Russian tsarism in crushing the insurrection. They also denounced the treacherous behaviour of the German liberal bourgeoisie, which had become an accomplice of reaction. Marx wrote to Engels on 7 June 1864 that the 'Prussian liberal press is too cowardly even so much as to remark on the continued surrender of Polish refugees by the Prussians' (p. 538).

Page Break me41.xxxi
Page me41.xxxi

The late 1850s and early 1860s marked a new stage in the practical revolutionary activities of Marx and Engels, aimed at setting up a revolutionary proletarian party. They had no plan specifying the organisational forms of such a party as yet; the structure of the Communist League was ill-suited for the needs of a mass workers' movement. During this period, Marx and Engels were endeavouring to rally round them and educate the most advanced representatives of the proletariat, and to protect them from libel and harassment by class enemies.
Page me41.xxxi

The letters show how determinedly Marx and Engels sought ways and means of influencing the working-class movement (pp. 9, 13-14, 261, 455 and others). They widened their personal ties with members of the working-class and democratic movements, resuming old contacts and getting to know representatives of the new generation of workers in Britain, Germany, Switzerland, France, Belgium and the USA. Their closest associates were their old comrades-in-arms, Johann Georg Eccarius, Wilhelm Wolff, Wilhelm Liebknecht, Victor Schily, Wilhelm Eichhoff, Carl Pfänder and others, many of whom had been members of the Communist League. In 1859, Marx rejoined the German Workers' Educational Society in London (p. 11); his lectures helped to imbue its members with a spirit of proletarian solidarity and taught them the rudiments of a revolutionary scientific world outlook.
Page me41.xxxi

With great attention and hope, Marx and Engels followed the renewed political activity of the British proletariat. As a result of the blockade by the Northerners' navy of the Southern ports in the USA, there was a 'cotton famine' in Europe, especially in Britain. Closely connected with this was a crisis in the British cotton industry, involving a sharp fall in production and a deterioration in the workers' condition. British government circles, which were planning armed intervention in the USA on the side of the rebels, tried to win the support of the masses by trading on the plight of the workers. The British proletariat, however, came out resolutely against the bourgeoisie's interventionist plans. Marx and Engels approved of the mass meetings held by workers in London, Manchester and other cities in 1862-63 to express their solidarity with the opponents of slavery in the USA (pp. 440, 468). On 26 March 1863, Marx attended one such meeting in St. James' Hall, and in his letter of 9 April 1863 to Engels he commented with satisfaction: 'The working men themselves spoke very well indeed, without a trace of bourgeois rhetoric or the faintest attempt to conceal their opposition to the capitalists' (p. 468). These meetings did much towards educating English workers in the spirit of internationalism. At the same time, Marx and Engels noted the 'sheeplike attitude' and 'servile Christian nature' of the majority of the workers in England. They considered freeing these workers from the influence of bourgeois ideology a primary task. Through the German Workers' Educational Society in London Marx established contacts with the English trades-union leaders who, in acknowledgment of his services to the working class, invited him as guest of honour to the inaugural meeting of the First International on 28 September 1864.

Page Break me41.xxxii

Page me41.xxxii

Marx corresponded actively with his old colleague Joseph Weydemeyer, whom he called 'one of our best people' (p. 117). He helped Weydemeyer to organise Stimme des Volkes, the newspaper of the Chicago Workers' Society (pp. 115-19). Taking part in the campaign for the defence of Auguste Blanqui, who was in prison, Marx established 'direct links with the decidedly revolutionary party in France' (p. 298). Marx and Engels saw that in France, as in Britain, there was a noticeable growth of political activity by the working class, although its forces were still very weak (p. 477).
Page me41.xxxii

Marx and Engels were also keeping a finger on the pulse of the working-class movement in Germany, drawing a great deal of information, in particular, from the letters of Wilhelm Liebknecht, who returned to his homeland in 1862. '...His continued sojourn in Berlin is most important to us,' Marx wrote to Engels on 7 June 1864 (p. 537). Liebknecht's activities in the General Association of German Workers, guided by the advice and directions of Marx and Engels (pp. 537, 539), helped to disseminate the ideas of scientific communism among the German workers. The establishment of direct contacts with them was of great importance. In June 1864, a number of their representatives came from Solingen to visit Marx in London. '...Now as ever,' he informed Engels after a talk with them, 'all were our resolute supporters' (p. 533). At the end of 1862, Marx began corresponding with Ludwig Kugelmann, a participant in the revolution of 1848-49, and with Johann Philipp Becker, an eminent leader of the democratic and working-class movement, whom he considered 'one of the noblest German revolutionaries' (p. 356).

Page Break me41.xxxiii
Page me41.xxxiii

A vital task in the efforts to form a proletarian party was the defence of the proletarian fighters, of the party 'in the broad historical sense' (p. 87) from calumny and attacks by the ideologists and agents of the bourgeoisie. In the late 1850s, the petty-bourgeois democrat Karl Vogt launched a smear campaign against Marx and his associates. In December 1859, he brought out a pamphlet, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, a piece 'full of the most outrageous calumnies' (p. 23). He resorted to falsification of the facts and to barefaced lies to libel the Communist League, portraying its members as conspirators in secret contact with the police and accusing Marx of personal motives. The libel was taken up by the European bourgeois press and also by a number of German papers published in the USA.
Page me41.xxxiii

Marx's and Engels' letters in 1860 testify to their correct assessment of the 'Vogt's libellous work' (p. 56) as an attempt to discredit the nature and objectives of the battle being fought by the proletarian revolutionaries. Marx's steps against Vogt had 'nothing to do with private interests', he wrote to Ferdinand Freiligrath on 23 February 1860. Vogt, he emphasised, was indiscriminately slinging mud at the party (pp. 56, 57). Under these conditions Marx and Engels considered a fitting rebuff to Vogt to be 'crucial to the historical vindication of the party and its subsequent position in Germany' (p. 54). The answer to his pamphlet was Marx's devastating exposé Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17).

Page me41.xxxiii

The correspondence enables us to trace step by step the different stages in the writing of this book. Marx spent nearly a year on Herr Vogt, interrupting his economic research and the work on Capital. To obtain the necessary information, he sent out a great many letters to friends, acquaintances and others who could help in unmasking Vogt. He also consulted his personal archives and studied a vast quantity of other material. Herr Vogt was written in close collaboration with Engels, who helped Marx at every stage of the work. The preparations for the writing and the book itself played an important part in rallying the proletarian revolutionaries, especially the German ones (in Germany and Switzerland) and in consolidating their prestige with the masses.

Page me41.xxxiii

When he began work on the pamphlet, Marx brought a lawsuit against the Berlin National-Zeitung, a bourgeois daily which in January 1860 had reproduced Vogt's vilest insinuations in two leading articles. Marx's aim in instituting the proceedings was the public unmasking of the libeller (pp. 21-22). However, as is clear from Marx's correspondence with Weber (his lawyer in Berlin) and others, the suit was dismissed. Marx's complaint was successively rejected at four judicial levels on the pretext that 'no discernible public interest was involved'. In his letters, Marx revealed the class nature of the Prussian legal system and the true reasons why the Berlin courts had rejected his case. 'It is, of course, “an issue of public importance” to the Prussian government that we should be traduced to the utmost,' he wrote sarcastically to Engels on 24 April 1860 (p. 129).

Page Break me41.xxxiv

Page me41.xxxiv

Marx's Herr Vogt, which came out on 1 December 1860, denounced Vogt as a paid Bonapartist agent (p. 132) and gave a true picture of the views and activities of the proletarian revolutionaries. Engels greeted its appearance enthusiastically. 'The thing's splendid,' he wrote to Marx on 3 December 1860 (p. 222), and in his letter of 19 December, he described it as Marx's 'best polemical work' (p. 231).

Page me41.xxxiv

The revolutionary theory of Marx and Engels affirmed its influence within the working-class movement in struggle against bourgeois ideology, reformism, opportunism and petty-bourgeois socialism. During the period covered by this volume, Marx and Engels considered that their main objective in this field was criticism of the reformist theory and opportunist tactics of Ferdinand Lassalle, who claimed the role of organiser and theoretician of the working-class movement in Germany. Meanwhile, working out a truly scientific programme and tactics had become a matter of cardinal importance to the German working-class movement in the early 1860s as it had grown numerically and adopted a course of independent political struggle, and needed, in particular, to define its position on the most urgent problem facing the country, that of unification.

Page me41.xxxiv

Marx and Engels took a positive view of Lassalle's efforts to free the German proletariat from the influence of the bourgeois Party of Progress and the cooperativistic ideas of Schulze-Delitzsch. It was his practical activity that they approved of. '...It's quite a good thing that an audience for anti-bourgeois stuff should be recaptured in this way,' Engels wrote to Marx on 20 May 1863 (p. 473). The foundation in May 1863, with Lassalle's direct participation, of the General Association of German Workers initiated the recovery of the independent working-class movement in Germany. Marx and Engels saw this as a service by Lassalle.
Page me41.xxxiv

However, Lassalle's programme for the working-class movement encountered harsh criticism from Marx and Engels. In the summer of 1862, as a result of discussions with Lassalle in London, Marx became convinced that 'all we had in common politically were a few remote objectives' (p. 400). He severely criticised 'An Open Reply to the Central Committee on the Convocation of the General German Workers' Congress in Leipzig', drawn up by Lassalle as a platform for the Association. Lassalle's programme created the illusion that it was possible to achieve socialism without a consistent revolutionary class struggle, by agitation for universal suffrage and by setting up production associations with state assistance. 'He solves the wages v. capital problem “with delightful ease”,' wrote Marx ironically (p. 467).

Page Break me41.xxxv
Page me41.xxxv

Marx and Engels stressed that Lassalle did not understand the true conditions for the emancipation of the proletariat as set forth and substantiated in their writings. On the subject of Lassalle's 'Workers' Programme', Marx wrote to Engels on 28 January 1863: '... the thing's no more nor less than a badly done vulgarisation of the Manifesto and of other things we have advocated so often that they have already become to a certain extent commonplace' (p. 452). In their letters, Marx and Engels repeatedly criticised Lassalle for his distortion of the ideas he had borrowed from them, his 'historical and theoretical blunders' (p. 479), his boastfulness and petty conceit (see pp. 389, 390, 440-41, 488-89, 534).
Page me41.xxxv

Marx and Engels were particularly worried by Lassalle's tactics. With the constitutional conflict deteriorating, Lassalle's attacks exclusively on the bourgeois-liberal Party of Progress were playing into the hands of reaction. Condemning this flirting with the government (Marx and Engels did not yet know of Lassalle's direct negotiations with Bismarck), Engels wrote to Marx on 11 June 1863: 'The chap's now operating purely in the service of Bismarck' (p. 478). As early as in the Manifesto of the Communist Party (1848), Marx and Engels wrote that in fighting feudal reaction the German workers should seek an alliance with the bourgeoisie, 'whenever it acts in a revolutionary way'. They considered it necessary, however, to encourage among the workers 'the clearest possible recognition of the hostile antagonism between bourgeoisie and proletariat' (present edition, Vol. 6, p. 519). Lassalle 'could have found out perfectly well from the Manifesto what attitude one ought to adopt towards the bourgeoisie at times such as these', wrote Engels (p. 494).

Page me41.xxxv

The differences with Lassalle were over matters of principle, which is why Marx and Engels avoided joint political actions with him lest he compromise them (pp. 261, 399-400, 469-70). At the same time, they considered that any public criticism of Lassalle would be injudicious, since his agitation was contributing to the political unification of the German working class. They foresaw, however, that an open attack on his reformist and sectarian views was unavoidable. This is shown by a letter from Marx to Engels of 12 June 1863, in which he wrote that he was only waiting for an opportune moment to reply publicly to Lassalle in order '1) to show the public how and where he had cribbed from us; 2) how and where we differ from his stuff' (p. 480). Meanwhile, however, having realised the futility of trying to influence him, they virtually broke with Lassalle in 1863-64 by gradually ceasing to correspond with him. At this time, Marx and Engels considered that their task was the theoretical elaboration and dissemination of a scientifically based strategy and tactics for the German working-class movement. They maintained a regular correspondence with their supporters in Germany, who were carrying on active revolutionary propaganda among the workers.

Page Break me41.xxxvi
Page me41.xxxvi

The letters that Marx and Engels wrote in September 1864 after receiving the news of Lassalle's death give an objective assessment of his activity and his role in the German working-class movement. Marx stressed that Lassalle 'was one of the vieille souche [old stock] and the foe of our foes' (p. 560). In a letter to Marx of 4 September Engels noted that as a political leader, Lassalle was undoubtedly 'one of the most significant men in Germany', and by way of a summing-up he continued: 'For us he was a very uncertain friend now and would, in future, most certainly have been our enemy' (p. 558).
Page me41.xxxvi

The letters in this volume show how, thanks to his theoretical and journalistic activities and expanding contacts with the working-class movement, Marx's name had become known to a new generation by the time of the establishment of the International Working Men's Association. The services he had rendered predetermined his role as leader of the First International, and its development on a Marxist ideological platform.
Page me41.xxxvi

The correspondence during the period covered by the present volume is an important source of biographical information about Marx and Engels. It reveals their nobility of character and gives an insight into their domestic life and into their circle of friends. Marx's letters testify to his abiding love and respect for his wife. Arriving in Trier in December 1863, he writes to her, remembering events of thirty years ago: 'I have made a daily pilgrimage to the old Westphalen home (in the Neustrasse), which interested me more than any Roman antiquities because it reminded me of the happiest days of my youth and had harboured my greatest treasure' (p. 499).

Page me41.xxxvi
The years 1860-64 were a difficult period for both men. Late in 1860 Jenny Marx fell seriously ill, and illness struck Marx himself down early in January 1861. These troubles were followed by serious financial difficulties. Having ceased to contribute to the New-York Tribune and Die Presse, he had lost a small but steady source of income. To prevent himself and his family from 'actually being relegated to the streets', as Marx wrote to Ludwig Kugelmann on 28 December 1862 (pp. 435-36), he decided to work in a railway office, but was rejected because of his bad handwriting. He was rescued by Engels' consideration, unselfishness, and constant readiness to help a friend in need. 'I can't tell you how grateful I am,' Marx wrote to Engels on 28 January 1863, 'although I myself ... did not require any fresh proof of your friendship to convince me of its self-sacrificing nature' (p. 448).

Page Break me41.xxxvii
Page me41.xxxvii
Meanwhile, Engels continued working in the offices of the Ermen & Engels firm 'as clerk with a percentage of the profits, in return for a guarantee that I shall become a partner in a few years' time' (p. 134). He regularly sent Marx part of his income, also giving material aid to other comrades. In March 1860, Engels received the news of his father's death. A little while later, his mother, whom he loved very much, fell dangerously ill. 'I might acquire a hundred other businesses, but never a second mother,' he wrote to her on 27 February 1861. A heavy loss to Engels was the sudden death in January 1863 of Mary Burns, his faithful companion in life. 'I simply can't convey what I feel,' he wrote to Marx on 7 January 1863 (p. 441). 'I felt as though with her I was burying the last vestige of my youth' (pp. 446-47).
Page me41.xxxvii
Marx and Engels were always ready to come to the assistance of friends and fellow fighters who were having a hard time in emigration. In the summer of 1860, Marx, in spite of his own personal circumstances, rented a room for Eccarius, who was seriously ill, in an attempt to provide the conditions for his early recovery. Subsequently, both Marx and Engels stepped in to help their comrade and his family.
Page me41.xxxvii
In May 1864, death claimed an old friend and close associate of Marx and Engels — Wilhelm Wolff, who had been living in Manchester since 1853. After Wolff's death, Marx wrote to his wife: 'In him we have lost one of our few friends and fellow fighters. He was a man in the best sense of the word' (p. 523).
Page me41.xxxvii
Marx and Engels bore their trials and tribulations with courage and fortitude. They were helped in this by their great friendship and their implicit faith in the historical justice of the cause of the working class. It was from this that they drew the strength to continue the struggle.

Page Break me41.xxxviii
* * *

Page me41.xxxviii

Volume 41 contains 340 letters written by Marx and Engels. Most of them were written in German, 17 were in English, 2 in French, and a number were written in two languages (9 in German and English, and one in German and Danish). The majority of these letters are being published in English for the first time. Only 114 have already appeared in English, of which 87 were abridged. All these publications are mentioned in the notes. The letters of Jenny and Laura Marx in the Appendices are being published in English for the first time.

Page me41.xxxviii

Obvious slips of the pen have been corrected without comment. Proper names, geographical names and words abbreviated by the authors have been expanded, also without comment. Passages struck out by the authors are reproduced in footnotes only when they contain an important idea or shade of meaning.

Page me41.xxxviii

Defects in the manuscript are explained in the footnotes, and passages in which the text has been lost or is indecipherable are indicated by three dots in square brackets. Wherever a presumable reconstruction has been possible, the restored passages have been enclosed in square brackets.

Page me41.xxxviii

Foreign words and expressions have been retained in the language of the original, the translation being given in footnotes where necessary. Small caps have been used to indicate English words and expressions occurring in German-language letters. Longer passages written in English in the original are placed in asterisks.

Page me41.xxxviii

The volume was compiled, the text prepared and the notes written by Galina Kostryukova (letters from January 1860 to mid-June 1861) and Galina Voitenkova (letters from mid-June 1861 to mid-September 1864). They also jointly wrote the Preface. Valentina Smirnova was the editor. Yelena Makarova in conjunction with Andrei Pozdnyakov prepared the indexes of names, quoted and mentioned literature, and periodicals (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).

Page me41.xxxviii

The translations were made by Peter and Betty Ross and edited by E.J. Hobsbawm and Nicholas Jacobs (Lawrence & Wishart), Glenys Ann Kozlov, Yelena Kalinina, Margarita Lopukhina, Mzia Pitskhelauri, Victor Schnittke and Andrei Skvarsky (Progress Publishers) and Norire Ter-Akopyan, scientific editor (USSR Academy of Sciences).

Page me41.xxxviii

The volume was prepared for the press by the editors Nadezhda Rudenko and Anna Vladimirova.

Page Break me41.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
January 1860-September 1864

Page Break 2
Page Break me41.3

1860

1
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER†1

Page me41.3
[London, after 11 January 1860]
11 January 1860
Dear Marx,
Today I am sending you, under separate cover, a copy of the supplement to No. 349 of last year's Kölnische Zeitung.
Page me41.3
The Wilhelm Joseph Reiff mentioned therein as having a warrant out against him for "immoral conduct" is, so I am told, none other than the Reiff who appeared at the trial of the Communists in Cologne and who is presently over here and living off the party.
Page me41.3
Now I have written to Reiff today (care of Liebknecht, not knowing how else to get in touch with him), informing him that I can no longer take any interest in him — that I forbid him to continue to use me as a reference — and that I will not tolerate his visits!
Page me41.3
Thus, for my part, I have acted as I thought fit. What attitude the party will wish to adopt towards this dirty business is its own affair. You are now in possession of the facts!

Your
F. Freiligrath

Page me41.3
I had never received the said 'Reiff' at my house because the fellow was suspect, and more than suspect, on account of his conduct at the communist trial,†2 whereas the 'fat rhymester'†a had taken him under his protection and saddled Liebknecht with him. Since then, the fellow has been living off Liebknecht, the Laplander,†b Lessner, Schröder, etc., and other poor devils, besides having the hat passed round at the Workers' Society,†3 etc.
Page me41.3
The above letter from Freiligrath is all the news of the Teuton that I have had since the great retreat.†4 And what an absurd letter it is. How grotesque the grandeur behind which there lurks the mentality of a cringing cur. F. seems to think that prose can be put to rights with the help of exclamation marks. 'The party' is to 'adopt an attitude'. Towards what? Towards Wilhelm Joseph Reiff's 'immoral conduct' — or 'this dirty business', as Beta's friend describes it. What an imposition. By the way, I might mention en passant that the 'Association of German Men',†5 founded by an equivocal compositor called Zinn, has nominated Prince Albert, Gottfried Kinkel, K. Blind and F. Freiligrath as its 'honorary freemen'. The Cheruscan†6 has, of course, accepted the charter.

Page Break me41.4

Page me41.4

Next Monday I have to pay a £1 instalment at the Marylebone COUNTY-COURT.†7 At the same time, I have received from the Westminster COUNTY-COURT (ON BEHALF OF A BAKER) the enclosed scrap of paper, which you must return to me. What I foresaw is coming to pass. No sooner has one philistine found his way to the COUNTY-COURT than he is followed by another. If things go on like this, I really don't know how I can keep my head above water. What is so disastrous about these constant interruptions is that I simply cannot get on with my work.†8

Page me41.4

The review in the Darmstadt Militär-Zeitung is most WELCOME.†9 Your recent pamphlet†a has assured you a position as a military critic in Germany. As soon as you get the opportunity, you must publish something under your own name, adding beneath it 'Author of Po and Rhine'. Our rascally enemies shall see BY and BY that we're able simply to impress the public without first seeking permission from it or its Betas.

Page me41.4

In my view, the most momentous thing happening in the world today is the slave movement — on the one hand, in America, started by the death of Brown,†10 and in Russia, on the other. You will have read that the aristocracy in Russia literally threw themselves into constitutional agitation and that two or three members of leading families have already found their way to Siberia.†11 At the same time, Alexander has displeased the peasants, for the recent manifesto declares outright that, with emancipation, 'THE COMMUNISTIC PRINCIPLE' must be abandoned.†b Thus, a 'social' movement has been started both in the West and in the East. Together with the impending DOWNBREAK in Central Europe, this promises great things.

Page me41.4

I have just seen in the Tribune that there's been another slave revolt in Missouri, which was put down, needless to say.†12 But the signal has now been given. Should the affair grow serious BY and BY, what will become of Manchester?

Page Break me41.5

Page me41.5

Leonard Horner has resigned his post. His last brief report is replete with bitter irony.†a Could you possibly find out whether the Manchester MILL-OWNERS had a hand in his resignation?

Page me41.5

It appears from the 'FACTORY INSPECTORS' REPORTS' (of '1855'-'1859 first six months') that, since 1850, industry in England has made miraculous progress. The state of health of the workers (ADULTS) has improved since your Condition of the Working-Class (which I have reread at the Museum†b), whereas that of the children (mortality) has deteriorated.

Page me41.5
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.5
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

2
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN PARIS

Page me41.5
London, 12 January 1860

My dear Sir,
Thanks for the point you have in my affair.†13 This letter has been delayed, because I had entered into negotiations, on behalf of your publication, with a publisher who, having put me off from day to day, withdrew at last.†14
Page me41.5
Bentley is not your man. Try once with John Murray. In writing to those fellows, never forget to sign as ancient Minister. This is something with those flunkeys.
Yours truly
A.W.†c

Page Break me41.6
Page me41.6
Would you be so kind to inform me, in your next letter, of the real state of things in Hungary?

Page me41.6
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

3
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.6
[London,] 25 January 1860

Dear Engels,

Have you already heard about Vogt's pamphlet,†a in which there are the most horrible scurrilities concerning me? And, what is more, the thing is being jubilantly acclaimed by the Teutonic†b bourgeoisie. The first edition has already been sold out. Yesterday, a LEADER in the National-Zeitung contained a long defamatory passage from it.†c (Any chance of your laying hands on this particular number of the Nat.-Zeit.? I haven't been able to get hold of it here.) Now, what ought I to do? Mr Lassalle would seem to have taken such umbrage at my last letter that there hasn't been a word from him since.†15

Page me41.6

I should be grateful if you could have an article READY for Friday or Saturday†d (there is a ship sailing via Cork).

Page me41.6

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.6
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.7

4
ENGELS TO MARX†16
IN LONDON

Page me41.7
Manchester, 26 January 1860

Dear Moor,

Tomorrow being Tribune day,†17 I'm sorry that there should again be no material to hand; the few notes on Morocco in The Times†a don't even run to the engagement at Cabo-Negro,†18 nor has anything else happened. However, you'll have enough material with the parliamentary stuff.†b I am still waiting to hear about the reform of the Prussian army as well.†19

Page me41.7

Your opinion of the importance of the slave movement in America and Russia†c is already being confirmed. The Harpers-Ferry affair,†10 with its sequel in Missouri,†12 is bearing fruit. Everywhere the free NIGGERS†d in the South are being hounded out of the states, and I have just seen from the first New York cotton report (W.P. Wright & Co of 10 January 1860)†e that the planters HURRIED their cotton ON TO THE PORTS IN ORDER TO GUARD AGAINST ANY PROBABLE CONSEQUENCES ARISING OUT OF THE HARPERS-FERRY AFFAIR. In Russia, too, the confusion is growing admirably; the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung's St. Petersburg correspondent is very good on this subject, though he pays more attention to the constitutional movement among the aristocracy,†f which, however, also provides a certain impetus for the peasants, of course.
Page me41.7

In India we have the makings of a tremendous crisis. As far as the views of the local philistines on the subject are concerned, CONFER the enclosed MARKET REPORTS. Now yarn prices are mostly so high, almost higher than the peak in 1857, and yet cotton is 2 3/8 to 2 1/2d cheaper. Twenty-six new mills are under construction in Burnley alone, and a proportionate number in other places.

Page Break me41.8
Everywhere, by degrees, the workers are getting a 10% rise in wages and will shortly receive even more. In my view, the practice of operating on fictitious capital is again just as RIFE in Indian business as it was in 1846/47, and most people are buying only because they have to, and cannot stop. But, even if that were not so, the increase in production alone will bring about a colossal COLLAPSE this autumn or in the spring of 1861 at the latest.
Page me41.8

Already these idiotic English believe that they will shortly inundate France.†20 A jackass of a calico printer — ONE OF THE SHARPEST — says that, with a 30% protective tariff in France, the business he could do there would be 15% more profitable than on any other market. The fool imagines that monopoly prices will continue to obtain in France, even if the monopoly is abolished. It has occurred to no one that the whole thing is a piece of sharp practice, the aim being to get at John Bull where he is notoriously vulnerable, and ultimately to fleece him good and proper.
Page me41.8

Who, actually, is the Mr Fischel who wrote the Duke of Coburg's†a pamphlet for him†21 and now writes for The Free Press? Even from the excerpts from his pamphlet I could see that the Coburg chap has Urquhartite LEANINGS.
Page me41.8

Dronke is now in Liverpool and holds a very good agency for a Franco-Spanish copper mining company — £500 guaranteed and the possibility of earning up to £1,000, or so I'm told. Garnier-Pagés got it for him. He comes here quite often, but always steers clear of me, sending me his regards post festum.
Page me41.8

Lupus has had a bad bout of bronchitis but is better now though still very anxious about himself and not yet fully recovered. Once again he has so arranged matters as to be in a chronic state of strife with his LANDLADY.
Page me41.8
I have a great deal to do at the office just now, hence the irregularity of my correspondence. Nor, for the time being, do I see that anything can be done about this excessive drudgery unless, as I hope, there is a crisis.
Page me41.8
Many regards to your wife and the YOUNG LADIES.†b

Your
F.E.

Page me41.8
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.9

5
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.9
[London,] 28 January [1860]

Dear Engels,
I have ordered Vogt's pamphlet†a and shall also have one sent to you. It is the record (or first complete version) of his ineffectual lawsuit in Augsburg, together with an introduction. The latter is directed especially against myself and would seem to be a second and amended edition of Müller-Tellering.†22 As soon as the stuff arrives, we must see what we can do. Faucher told me WITH AN INTENSE PLEASURE that Vogt treats me pretty well en canaille†b and with EXQUISITE contempt. The scoundrel tries to make the German philistine believe I am living here like a Dr Kuhlmann at the workers' expense, etc. (Needless to say, I have kept the whole squalid business from my wife.)
Page me41.9
A new military weekly has come out in Berlin.†c It seems to me that, on pretext of asking him about this paper's WHEREABOUTS, you should IMMEDIATELY write to Lassalle. It is essential for us to have some sort of connection in Berlin just now. L.'s reply to you will show whether we can carry on with him or not. In the latter case — which, all things considered, would not be pleasant — I should have to have recourse to Dr Fischel (Prussian assessor), about whom more anon. There is no reason why, in your letter to L., you should not let fall the remark that I consider the obstacles (or at least his warnings IN THAT REGARD) he placed in the way of my publishing a statement on Vogt in the Volks-Zeitung (the same, that is, as appeared in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†d), to be a kind of CONSPIRACY with Vogt on his and Duncker's part. Then, of course, you might drop a word or two to the effect that, in view of the ambiguous attitude of sundry old party friends (a few incidental HITS UPON Freiligrath†4), the difficulty of my position and the infamies I have to contend with, my TEMPER is, at times, a trifle frayed; further, that I have mentioned to you a letter I wrote to L. which the latter has apparently taken amiss.†e You, for your part, will naturally suggest that L. knows me too well not to overlook an occasional brusque remark, etc. Then he will at least cease to beat about the bush. I am altogether of the opinion that a certain amount of diplomacy is now called for — if only to find out just where we stand. After all, compared with the others, L. is still a HORSE-POWER.

Page Break me41.10
Page me41.10

The fact is the various gangs — first the imperial rascals,†23 secondly the German National Association†24 and, lastly, the liberals, are presently doing everything in their power to destroy us morally in the eyes of the German philistines. There can hardly be any doubt that, despite all the clamour for peace, THERE WILL BE A NEW WAR, probably within the year, very probably before the advent of summer. In any case, the international situation is so complex that it is of the utmost importance to vulgar democracy and liberalism to stop us obtaining a hearing from, or access to, German philistia (i.e. the public). There comes a point when one can no longer turn a blind eye — i.e. show indifference — in personal and party matters. Vogt's CASE does not lend itself to exactly the same treatment as that of a Tellering, a Heinzen or tutti quanti.†a In Germany this same ventriloquist is looked on as a scientific celebrity; he was imperial regent and is financed by Bonaparte. You might also — just, as it were, en passant — ask the noble Lassalle what action he thinks appropriate in the matter of V. In his letters to me, L. has committed himself too deeply to perform a complete volte face. At all events, an attempt must be made to force the fellow to adopt a definite position — aut, aut.†b†25
Page me41.10

Fischel is a Prussian Urquhartite. In the Berlin Portfolio, of which he is the publisher, he has alluded to my anti-Pam†c pamphlets and printed some extracts from them.†26 (On Urquhart's express instructions.) He had been invited by the Urquhartites to come to England where he was paraded before the FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEES†27 as evidence of the triumphant 'belief' (in Urquhart) on the Continent. I met him while he was over here. He offered me his good services, should I require them in the North German press.
Page me41.10

Hip-hip-hurray and away to Italy†d (by that louse Bamberger in Paris) is said to contain attacks on your articles in the Volk.†28
Page me41.10

What did Mr Orges say in his statement?†29 I missed it.

Page me41.10

If possible, write something for Tuesday†e (it doesn't have to be long) on the military importance of Savoy (and Nice) to France.†f Cf. Times OF TODAY, Normanby in the HOUSE OF LORDS.

Page Break me41.11

Page me41.11

Apropos! 'In recognition of my services to the development of communistic principles', I have received an invitation to the anniversary celebrations on 6 February of the 'Workers' Educational Society' down here. (For these chaps still regard themselves as heirs to the old Windmill Association.)†30 Similar invitations, if for different reasons, have gone out to Schapper, Pfänder and Eccarius. Circumstances being what they are, I have, of course, accepted the invitation, thus wiping out all traces of the old quarrel with the working men's bunch. Mr F. Freiligrath has not been invited. Indeed, I must now take care not to run into Potbelly. For in my present state of fury over the filthy Vogt affair — and F.F.'s magna pars†a therein†4 — fearful eruptions might well ensue. Regards to Lupus.

Page me41.11

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.11

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE

IN BERLIN

Page me41.11

London, 30 January 1860

Dear Lassalle,

I was very glad to get your letter. For I had believed — and had written to tell Engels so†b — that your reason for not writing was pique at my last letter.†15

Page me41.11

I can only spare a minute or two since I have a leader to write today for the New-York Tribune. Quite briefly then:

Page me41.11

1. I shall send you the pamphlet on the 'Communist Trial'†c straight away. So far as I am aware, you have already had one from me.

Page Break me41.12
Page me41.12

2. Vogt has been careful not to let his Telleringian concoction — i.e. the first version†31 — reach us here. Neither Freiligrath (whom I have just seen) nor Kinkel, nor the Hermann, nor any of the booksellers over here have had it. The imperial rascal†23 wishes, OF COURSE, to steal a march on me.

Page me41.12

What I know, I have learned from the National-Zeitung.†a A pack of Stieberian lies. I have written and told my lawyer in Berlin†b to sue the N.-Z. for libel. What do you think of this? Let me know by return.

Page me41.12

From your letter I see that Vogt himself admits having been bought indirectly by Bonaparte,†32 for I know about the manoeuvres of your revolutionary Hungarians. I denounced them in London in an English paper†c and had five COPIES sent to Mr Kossuth. He kept his trap shut. In New York, and elsewhere, Hungarian refugees have adopted resolutions censuring him.

Page me41.12

Your reasoning ad vocem Vogt eludes me. I shall write a pamphlet as soon as I get hold of his rubbish. But I shall begin by saying in the foreword that I don't give a damn about the opinion of your German public.

Page me41.12

Liebknecht is an upright man. The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung is — to my mind — just as good as the N.-Z. and the Volks-Zeitung.†33

Page me41.12

To judge by the excerpts I have seen in the N.-Zeitung, Vogt is some kind of Chenu or de la Hodde.†34

Page me41.12

3. About my work on political economy — the second instalment, when it appears, will contain only the conclusion of section I, Book I, and there are six books.†35 Hence you cannot wait until it is finished.†36 However, you would, in your own interests, be well-advised to await the next instalment which contains the quintessence. Appalling circumstances are to blame for the fact that it isn't yet in Berlin.

Page me41.12

Salut.

K.M.

Page me41.12

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.13

7
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.13
Manchester, 31 January 1860

Dear Moor,

I intend to write to Ephraim Artful†a tomorrow; a diplomatic missive such as this ought not to be sent off without due reflection. For a day or two now, I have been mulling over Savoy, Nice and the Rhine, a kind of sequel to Po and Rhine. I have made up my mind to offer the thing to Duncker; it won't be more than 2 sheets long and might provide a good pretext for getting in touch with Ephraim. At all events, I shall write the thing in the course of next week, after which I shall immediately send the manuscript to Berlin. Apart from one or two matters concerning the French revolutionary campaigns in Nice and Savoy, no preparatory work is called for, so it will be soon done.

Page me41.13

Obviously Mr Vogt must be given a thorough lambasting; but it's difficult to say anything until we know what the fellow has actually published.†b At all events, you might just as well use Fischel as anyone else, provided he really does have connections.†c Moreover, little Jew Braun†d will now see that the significance of your statement†e and of the whole set-to between Vogt and the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†37 is of quite a different order to what the Berlin philistine at first imagined. As things stand, we must maintain all these connections, while the conspiration du silence and other intrigues, to which we must meanwhile turn a blind eye, will subsequently release us from all obligations as soon as some crisis necessitates a breach on genuinely political grounds.

Page me41.13

As to the chances of a fresh set-to, I am entirely of your opinion.†f But I believe that if, despite Vogt and Co., we are to keep our end up so far as the public is concerned, we shall have to do it through our scientific work. We haven't the money to organise the émigré press and several times we have seen that an émigré paper or German pamphlets printed in London never command a public (in Germany) unless the thing can be kept going for a year at least. In Germany itself direct political and polemical action, as our party understands it, is a sheer impossibility. So, what remains? Either we hold our tongues or we make EFFORTS that are known only to the emigration and the American Germans but not to anyone in Germany, or else we go on as we have begun, you in your first instalment†a and I in Po and Rhine. That, I think, is the main thing just now and, if we act accordingly, no matter how much Vogt may howl, we shall soon be back on a FOOTING such as will enable us (WHENEVER REQUIRED) to publish the necessary personal statements in one German paper or another. The early appearance of your 2nd instalment†38 is obviously of paramount importance in this connection and I hope that you won't let the Vogt affair stop you from getting on with it. Do try for once to be a little less conscientious with regard to your own stuff; it is, in any case, far too good for the wretched public. The main thing is that it should be written and published; the shortcomings that catch your eye certainly won't be apparent to the jackasses; and, when times become turbulent, what will it avail you to have broken off the whole thing before you have even finished the section on capital in general?†8 I am very well aware of all the other interruptions that crop up, but I also know that the delay is due mainly to your own scruples. Come to that, it's surely better that the thing should appear, rather than that doubts like these should prevent its appearing at all.

Page Break me41.14

Page me41.14

Mr Orges has issued a pur personal statement†b which reveals who this queer fish is. Originally a Prussian lieutenant of artillery at the military college in Berlin (1845-48), at the same time, he pursued his studies and obtained his doctorate; he left the service in March 1848 (his application to resign is dated 19 March '48) and went to Schleswig-Holstein where he joined the artillery; in 1850, he joined the crew of a merchant vessel, in which he 'served' and sailed round the world; in 1851, he attended the Exhibition in London,†39 which he reported for the A. A.Z.; he was then consorting with Schimmelpfennig, Willich, Techow, etc., and, subsequently, became the A. A.Z.'s military editor. At all events, there's more to the man than anyone else on the paper, which he has set on its feet again. The leaders I attributed to Heilbronner are all by him. Nevertheless, I'll still be able to deal with him good and proper.

Page Break me41.15
Page me41.15

The invitation from the louts†a has come at a fairly opportune moment. But I trust that you won't, of course, allow yourself to be drawn into anything else, for this is ground we know only too well; fortunately you live some distance away.
Page me41.15

Many regards,
Your
F.E.

Page me41.15

The Prussians have approached my old man†b with the intention of confiscating my assets to the tune of 1,005 talers, 20 [silver groschen] 6 pfennigs†40 because of my alleged desertion from the Landwehr.†41 My old man told them that he had no access to my assets, whereupon they calmed down. I am to be sentenced on 18 February.

Page me41.15
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

8
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.15
[London,] 31 January 1860

Dear Engels,

Your article†c received. Very good.

Page me41.15

Herewith a letter from Lassalle which arrived yesterday and to which I replied immediately, if briefly.†d Only a pamphlet written by us jointly will get us out of this business. I have also written secretly to Fischel in Berlin, asking whether it is feasible to bring a libel suit against the National-Zeitung.†42 Vogt's piece†e (not to be had at any booksellers in London; he has sent it neither to Freiligrath nor to Kinkel, nor to any of his other acquaintances over here. Obviously he wished to steal a march on us. I have thus had to order it) is, so far as we are concerned, clearly a de la Hodde-Chenusian concoction.†34 I have read the second article in the Nat.-Z.†a from which I see inter alia that Lupus (described as Casemate Wolff, Parliamentary Wolff) is alleged to have sent a circular to a reactionary Hanoverian paper in 1850.†43 It gives a réchauffé of all the foul refugee gossip of 1850-52. The jubilation of the bourgeois press is, of course, unbounded, and the tone of Lassalle's letter — kindly show it to Lupus and then file it — clearly betrays the impression it has made on the public.

Page Break me41.16

Page me41.16

Yesterday I saw Freiligrath for a moment. I approached him very ceremoniously (if he has the slightest sense of honour he must make an anti-Vogt statement), and all our entreview†b amounted to was the following: 'I: I've come to ask you to lend me the pamphlet on the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung lawsuit which I've been seeking in vain at all the booksellers and must certainly have been sent you by your friend Vogt. F. (very melodramatically): Vogt is not my friend. I: Lassalle has written to me that I must reply at once. You haven't got the pamphlet, then? F. No. I: Good evening.' (He held out his honest right hand and shook mine Westphalian-fashion.) Voilá tout.†c

Page me41.16

I was assured by Juch (owner and present editor of the Hermann, whose acquaintance I made in connection with the Stieber affair and Eichhoff's trial†44 in Berlin), that Kinkel hadn't yet had a copy from Vogt either. This same Juch had, however, been sent numerous Vogtian tirades against us which he did not print. This chap — who is, incidentally, quite honest in his own way — has got to be kept mellow for the time being. Since only the Hermann is now appearing in London, it would have been dreadful to have to confront Vogt's gang unarmed, here on our own ground.

Page me41.16

Apropos! As a result of my first meeting with Juch,†d on my advice, Eichhoff cited friend Hirsch, who is doing time in Hamburg for forgery, as a witness for the defence. Consequently, the trial, due to begin on 26 January (I read about this in the Publicist), was again adjourned after a heated argument. Stieber has now done with Hirsch.

Page me41.16

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.16

Imandt has just told me that Heise is dead.

Page me41.16

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.17

9
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN PARIS

Page me41.17

London, 31 January 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear Sir,

I conclude from your silence, that you have taken offence at my last letter,†42 but I dare say, without any sufficient reason. You will not deny that by your own letter, the last but one, you did release me from the promise I had made to you.†45 On the other hand, you may any day write to Berlin, and ascertain from Mr Duncker, the publisher, that he has called upon me not any longer to delay the sending of the manuscript due to him.†8 Lastly, my proposal of Mr Kavannagh was, of course, meant to serve you, not me, and I proposed it only as a pis-aller.†a

Page me41.17

Meanwhile, I took care to have a notice of your pamphlet (or rather of its impending appearance) inserted in the Weser-Zeitung, by a friend of mine. So soon as your pamphlet has come to my hands, I shall feel happy to give a large article on the same in the New-York Tribune. Kossuth has tried, by another letter to McAdam, at Glasgow, to attract public attention in England. This time his effort has proved a complete failure.

Page me41.17
There is one affair, in which I require information on your part, and think myself justified to ask it from you.
Page me41.17
Prof. Vogt (the tool of James Fazy at Genf,†b who is intimately connected, as Vogt is, with Klapka and Kossuth) has published a pamphlet on his lawsuit with the A. A. Zeitung†c. This pamphlet contains the most absurd calumnies against myself, so that I cannot but reply to the scandalous libel, though I regret the time to be applied to so mean a subject. Well. He now contends that he received the money for his propaganda from revolutionary Hungarians, and, half and half, insinuates, that the money came directly from Hungary. How incredible, since Kossuth himself could get none from that source. Can you inform me somewhat exactly about Klapka's circumstances at the time before the outbreak of the Italian war?†46 Since I shall be forced, in the pamphlet I intend writing,†a to speak of Kossuth et Co., somewhat largely, you will oblige me by adding what new points you have found out regarding his recent transactions. Has he, out of the 3 millions, spent any part for paying or for arming a Hungarian corps? (I mean apart from the money given to military and civil dignitaries.†b)

Page Break me41.18
Page me41.18
The time becomes very critical, and, I hope, no misunderstanding shall prevent our common action.

Yours truly
A.W.†c

Page me41.18
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

10
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.18
[Manchester,] 1 February 1860

Dear Moor,
This time, then, the business is growing more serious every day. Mr Altenhöfer and the devious Häfner in Paris have each published personal, if somewhat vague, statements in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.†47 Now we get Lassalle's sagacious letter.†48 The chap is himself already almost a Bonapartist, at a time when coquetting with Bonapartism seems to be the order of the day in Berlin, so Mr Vogt will undoubtedly find the ground favourable there. A fine notion of Lassalle's, that one shouldn't use one's connection with the Augsburg A.Z. against Vogt and Bonaparte, yet Vogt can use Bonapartist money for Bonapartist ends and keep his hands perfectly clean! In the eyes of these folk, it is actually meritorious of Bonap. to have beaten the Austrians; the specific Prussian spirit and Berlin punditry are again in the ascendant and things in that city must look almost as they did after the peace of Basle.†49 There's no reasoning with such people. Lassalle seems to excrete this paltry, niggling pap as naturally as his turds, and maybe a good deal more easily — what answer can one give to such inanities and facile wisdom! Extraordinary advice, the chap doles out!

Page Break me41.19
Page me41.19
Let's wait until we've got the pamphlet,†a and in the meantime cast round for somewhere to print and someone to publish our riposte. If possible, Germany and the opposing party's headquarters, Berlin. The business of the 3,000 copies is plainly a lie of Vogt's.†50 However, there's scandal enough and to spare. I shall go and see Lupus today and tell him to rack his brains for all the material he can lay hands on concerning Vogt. In the meantime, I shall sort through the papers dealing with 1850/52 and you must look out our old manuscript about the émigrés.†b So far, I have no idea of what the fellow actually says.
Page me41.19
Regards to the FAMILY.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.19
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

11
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.19
Manchester, 2 February 1860

Dear Moor,

Conferred with Lupus last night. It was only while reading Lassalle's letter†c out to him that I became fully aware not only of the chap's philistinism and arrogance, but also of his 'method'. Even in the paltriest of trifles, the fellow is Absolute Spirit Old Hegelian style and, just as he proposes in economics to assume the role of a higher unity between you and the economists, the finite contradiction,†51 so too he is already assuming the role of a higher unity between you and Vogt. Yours, the 'principle', Vogt's the 'Italian policy'†52 — and very nice too! What egregious schoolmaster presumption to start off by telling us we should declare Vogt hadn't been bribed, and then to proceed to take seriously, and thus reduce to absurdity, the one good joke in Fröbel's statement!†53

Page Break me41.20
Page me41.20
Lupus wonders whether, under Prussian law, the National-Zeitung mightn't be compelled to accept a statement from you. I, too, believe the Press Law contains some such article. IF SO, we should invoke it immediately on receipt of the pamphlet†a; for, as Lassalle rightly remarks, habent sua fata libelli†b; what that will be in the pamphlet's case one cannot tell, and the quicker the rejoinder, the surer will be its effect.
Page me41.20
Quoad†c our pamphlet, we are at a disadvantage in being personally on the defensive and unable to return lies for lies. Then there's another disadvantage — namely, that the public = Philistia already detests us in advance, for while we do not actually stand convicted of odium generis humani,†d we are guilty of odium generis bourgeois,†e and that amounts to exactly the same thing.
Page me41.20
On the other hand, we are at an advantage in being able to provide an exposé of our Italian policy which puts the matter on a totally different plane, leaves aside the personal aspect and places us in a favourable position, not perhaps in the eyes of the Berlin liberals, but in those of the greater part of Germany, in that we stand for the popular, national side. The Savoy affair in particular is something of a godsend to us.†54
Page me41.20
Now it seems to me that, as soon as the pamphlet arrives (couldn't Lass. send it by post?), you should pack your bags and come up here, when we can decide once and for all what to do and how and where. I should gladly seize on the opportunity to come to London, but, as your wife is to be kept in the dark, it would be better if you were to come up here, the more so since, if any work is to be done, I couldn't stay so long in London. Another thing to be decided is whether I should appear on the title page; there's only one reason I can see against it, which, however, seems to me quite conclusive; but we'll discuss that when we meet.

Page Break me41.21
Page me41.21
The Savoy piece shall be done†a and Lassalle and Duncker written to tomorrow. The epistle destined for L.†b had, of course, not yet been sent.
Page me41.21

It is extraordinary that I should have first learned of Heise's death via Dundee†c and London. After all, the little chap†d was here last Thursday or Friday and came to see me. I was out, however, and he also missed me at the club that evening. But, if he'd known about it, he'd surely have got someone else to tell me, as he usually does. He saw Charles,†e too.
Page me41.21
Salut.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.21
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

12
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.21
[London,] 3 February 1860

Dear Engels,
After one minor alteration, or rather the deletion of one sentence, C.D. Collect yesterday declared himself willing, but, at the same time, said that, as Urquhart was the actual editor, he must first submit the thing to him, which means a delay of 24 hours.†55 Collect admitted that I could, of course, publish the statement malgré eux,†f but, if it was done the way he suggested, I could subsequently, TO A CERTAIN DEGREE, fall back on him and Urq. WELL. I conceded this and intend to see what Father U. has to say. (For the sequel see immediately below.)
Page me41.21
Incidentally, it's no go either with a pamphlet or a statement in the newspapers — just now. The pamphlet would BE KILLED by the self-same press WHICH NOW TRUMPETS THE GRANDEUR OF VOGT. The latter's attack on me — he is obviously seeking to represent me as an insignificant and rascally bourgeois blackguard — (this emerges from everything I've learnt from hearsay up till now) is intended to be the grand coup of bourgeois vulgar democracy — and likewise of the Russo-Bonapartist riff-raff — against the party as a whole. Hence it must likewise be countered with a grand coup. Furthermore, the defensive does not suit our purpose. I shall sue the National-Zeitung. I've now made up my mind to do so. Not a great deal of money will be required for the time being — I am referring to the preliminary deposition in court. But lawyers will be exceptionally keen to make themselves available for, whatever happens, the lawsuit will make a great noise throughout the length and breadth of Germany. As soon as I have Fischel's letter†a (it will arrive, I think, tomorrow) I shall issue a brief statement to the various German newspapers announcing that I am instituting an action for libel against the N.-Z. in Berlin. In its second article,†b which I have got, I have already discovered items so actionable as to bring about its immediate undoing in a legal sense.†c This lawsuit will be the peg on which we can hang the whole of our riposte to the public at large in court. Later on, we can turn our attention to that bastard Vogt.

Page Break me41.22

Page me41.22

When you consider that in a week or two, in connection with Stieber, the Cologne communist trial†2 will be re-enacted all over again,†44 this vile attack could, if skilfully exploited, help rather than hinder us, for this will AT ONCE enable us to state our case forcefully to the mass of the workers.

Page me41.22

On the other hand, what evidence can Vogt or the National-Zeitung produce against us? At the most, there is Techow's gossip†56 and, perhaps (in THE WORST CASE), some not altogether pleasant reviews by Lüning†57 but, these apart, the fact that Vogt knows nothing of conditions here and makes the most absurd mistakes is apparent if only from his article in the Biel Handels-Courier.†d

Page me41.22

So my plan is this: Next week, as soon as Vogt's rubbish†e arrives, I shall come and visit you for a few days in order to talk the whole thing over.†58 As to the costs of the action, Dronke (who, by the by, owes me money) must also bear his share. (Whatever happens you must come here a few days at Easter.)

Page Break me41.23

Page me41.23

For the rest (I have already written to everyone imaginable), in addition to procuring the necessary material for the action, I'm working on my Capital.†8 If I set about it with determination, it will be finished in 6 weeks and, after the lawsuit, it will be a success.

Page me41.23

A fine thing it would be — with a crisis in the offing, with the KING OF PRUSSIA†a at death's door, etc. — if we were to allow ourselves to be finished off in this way by Imperial Vogt†23 et cie., or even — autore Lassallo†b — to cut our own throats.

Page me41.23

The enclosed piece of paper will tell you WHAT MR VOGT IS NOW ABOUT and how, in your pamphlet, you can deal him a contemptuous kick, if only by way of a marginal note.†59

Your
K.M.

Page me41.23

As you will see from the contents of my letter, the anti-Blind operation†60 is proceeding independently of the German operation, but will be used to further the latter.

Page me41.23

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

13

MARX TO JOACHIM LELEWEL IN BRUSSELS

Page me41.23

[Draft]

London, 3 February 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear Lelewel,

I have not had the pleasure of corresponding with you since 1848 when a letter of recommendation from you was brought to me in Cologne by a Pole.†c I am writing to you today on a personal matter.

Page me41.23

One Vogt, a professor at Geneva, has published a pamphlet†d full of the most outrageous calumnies against my person and my political life. On the one hand, he represents me as a man of no account and on the other imputes to me the most infamous motives. He falsifies my entire past. Having had the privilege of enjoying a close relationship with you during my stay in Brussels — I shall never forget the embrace with which you honoured me on the occasion of the anniversary of the Polish Revolution on 22 February 1848†61 — I would request you to address me a private letter in which you assure me of your friendship and testify to the nature of the honourable relations I maintained in Brussels with the Polish emigration.†62

Page Break me41.24

Page me41.24

Fraternal greetings,

Yours
Charles Marx

Page me41.24

Mrs Marx, who asks to be remembered to you, has made a copy of this letter for your benefit, my handwriting being illegible.

Page me41.24
Written in French

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

14
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.24
[Manchester,] 4 February 1860

D.M.,

One keeps changing one's mind every night as is inevitable, since we've not yet set eyes on the stuff.†a
Page me41.24

The Hirsch affair is truly splendid.†b
Page me41.24

The lawsuit in Berlin also strikes me as a very good idea, always assuming they allow it, though I don't see how they can deny you justice.†c
Page me41.24

Re Lupus†d and the affair in general, I waded through the better part of the records for 1850/52 yesterday evening. Lupus cannot recollect anything at all and I have to keep jogging his memory. Not that I'm much better; since those days so much BITTER BEER has flowed down my gullet that many things are difficult to ascertain. As regards Lupus the following emerges:

Page Break me41.25
Page me41.25

1. In 1851, not 1850, when the document appeared in the Karlsruher Zeitung (our plan of campaign against the democrats†a), Lupus was still in Zurich†b and was attacked by the fellows as one who happened to be in their midst and was a member of our League.†63
Page me41.25

2. Another document, however, had appeared previously in, if I'm not mistaken, the Hannoversche Zeitung, namely a circular from the Cologne Central Authority composed by Bürgers.†64 But I can't ascertain exactly whether it happened in the Hann. Ztg. You must go into this.

Page me41.25
3. Vogt has jumbled all of this up and has Lupus writing a document in London in 1850 which was produced in Cologne at a time when Lupus was still in Zurich. (L. came to London after 5 May and before 21 July 1851.) All that remains to be ascertained is whether Bürgers' document really did appear in the Hann. Zeitung, and how it fell into the hands of the Hanover police. The letters I wrote you between February and April 1851 are bound to contain some mention of it.†c Let me have particulars about this; without them I hardly imagine that Lupus' statement†d will suffice.
Page me41.25
The item in The Times (original source Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung) had already been noted.†59
Page me41.25
I am starting on my thing†e today. Up till now, the Vogt rumpus has prevented me from doing so. This time I shall again describe myself as the 'author of Po and Rhine' so as to get that personage all the more firmly established in the field of military literature — if I put my own name to it the immediate result would be a conspiration du silence. At the same time, however, i.e. about a fortnight after it comes out, I shall get Siebel to arrange for an appropriate review to appear in the papers. In general, this fellow could be very useful to us in the Vogt rumpus; he has masses of connections.

Page Break me41.26
Page me41.26
Many regards to the FAMILY.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.26
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

15
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.26
[London,] 4 February 1860

Dear Engels,

Nothing from Berlin yet.†a If Izzy weren't a knave, incidentally, he would have sent me the National-Zeitung of his own accord, if nothing else, as soon as it came out.
Page me41.26
Now, as regards the extract from the N.-Z. for Lupus,†b what I wrote, on the first occasion, was from memory and was not intended as a basis for a public statement. On the second occasion, I was copying, and to avoid misunderstanding, am doing so again. I can't send the original as I haven't a second one to spare.
Page me41.26
Extract from No. 41 of the N.-Z., dated 25 January. (It is the concluding passage in the LEADER):

'Only one further thing is worthy of note: The open letter to the National Association immediately fell into the hands of the Hanoverian reactionary party and was made known by this last; in 1850 another "circular" (as Vogt recollects, written by Parliamentary Wolff alias Casemate Wolff) was sent from London to the "proletarians" in Germany, and simultaneously allowed to fall into the hands of the Hanoverian police.'

Page me41.26
No answer as yet from that bloody Urquhart.†c
Page me41.26
I have carefully gone through all the old letters and newspapers and put on one side what we may need 'in due course'. You must see to it that I find 'the whole lot' (letters, newspapers, etc.) at your place in Manchester, so that I can get together what is relevant. We really mustn't allow those blackguardly democrats — now, of course, gloating over our discomfiture — to make us accountable for their revolutionary travel plans, revolutionary paper money, revolutionary gossip, etc. And, starting with Gottfried Kinkel, Vogt's secret correspondent over here, they have got to be shown up in the eyes of Germany.

Page Break me41.27

Your
K.M.

Page me41.27
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

16
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.27
London, 6 February 1860

Dear Sir,

Would you very kindly arrange to print the enclosed written statement,†a which I am sending simultaneously to the National-Zeitung and the Publicist (what its politics are I do not know, but it would appear to be widely read over here) in Berlin; likewise, to the Kölnische Zeitung, the Frankfurter Journal, the Hamburg 'Reform' and the Augsburg 'Allgemeine Zeitung'.

Page me41.27

I should be much obliged if you would pass the following on to Lassalle:

Page me41.27

Time does not permit my replying to him today.

Page me41.27

The article on Kossuth,†b which I sent Szemere in Paris ON THE EXPRESS CONDITION that it be returned immediately, has been in his hands for months now. I shall now hold a pistol to his head — allegorically speaking, OF COURSE.

Page me41.27

I should be most grateful if Lassalle would send Vogt's book†c by post direct to Engels at his private address, 6 Thorncliffe Grove,

Page Break me41.28
Oxford Road, Manchester, where I am going to stay.†58 Finally, I should be glad if he would send to the same address copies of such Berlin papers as accept the statement.

Page me41.28

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
K. Marx

Page me41.28
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

17
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.28
Manchester, 7 February 1860

Dear Moor,

Received the circular addressed to Collet.†a Comes altogether á propos, yesterday's Daily Telegraph having carried two columns about Vogt's shit†b and the Brimstone Gang.†65 If it amounts to no more than what's in the Telegr., then Izzy has been frightened by a fart. To 'parry the thrust', all one has to do is hold one's nose.
Page me41.28

Mr Ronge is up here. He hurried along to Siebel, saying he wished to be introduced to me!! Furthermore, he asked whether I also belonged to the Brimstone Gang — IN FACT, if it weren't for him, S., and if it weren't for S., I myself, wouldn't have heard about the nonsense in the Telegr.
Page me41.28

S., who's an out-and-out charlatan and knows it, is dead keen to be of service to us in this business. He's got masses of connections and, best of all, is quite above suspicion. The fellow knows that the whole robber band, Kinkel and Co., are just as much humbugs as he is, and in us he has at last found people who are totally impervious to his humbug, inde†c an unbounded admiration.

Page Break me41.29
Page me41.29

Oughtn't we to scan the daily press for the circular tomorrow?
Page me41.29

Vale.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.29
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

18
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.29
[London,] 7 February 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, etc.

Dear Engels,

Of the COPIES despatched to you,†a send 1 to Dronke, 1 to Dr Bronner in Bradford. I have sent one to Borchardt myself.
Page me41.29

The D.T. (Daily Telegraph), Monday's issue, p. 5, contained a filthy article (IN FACT, from Berlin, but dated Frankfurt a. M.)†b based on the two in the National-Zeitung. I instantly threatened the dogs with a LIBEL action,†c and they will open their traps and apologise.
Page me41.29
Letters from Fischel (there's another way of bringing a lawsuit, which actually involves no money), Lassalle (absurd in the extreme), Schily (interesting), etc. More details tomorrow.
Page me41.29
I now have to pay the printing costs (will be ABOUT £1), £1 to be paid next Monday at the COUNTY-COURT, and shall need something, partly to get to Manchester with and partly so as to leave a modicum here. At the same time, before departing hence, I shall have to make, and get others to make, all manner of AFFIDAVITS.

Page Break me41.30
Page me41.30
Apropos. Wiehe is now going to state before the magistrate that he signed a false DECLARATION at the insistent request of Blind and Hollinger.†66
Page me41.30
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.30
Statements†a sent off yesterday to Nat.-Zeit., Kölnische Zeitung, Volks-Zeitung, Publicist (Berlin), Reform, Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, Frankfurter Journal. The statement was a brief one. Firstly, that I shall take legal proceedings against the N.-Z.; secondly, a reference to the English anti-Blind 'LIBEL'†b enclosed with the statement.

Page me41.30
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

19
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON

Page me41.30
London, 8 February 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,

Haverstock Hill

Dear Freiligrath,

As an old party friend and an old personal friend, I consider it my duty to keep you informed of the steps I have taken in the furtherance of the Berlin lawsuit, by reason of which they must soon, though not immediately, become known to the public.

Page me41.30

You will recall or have seen from the printed English circular†b sent you that, besides Hollinger's written statement, Blind cited that of certain compositor, Wiehe, in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†c (etc.) as evidence that I had been guilty of 'a plain falsehood' and that 'the imputation' that he, Blind, was the author of the pamphlet Zur Warnung, and that the latter had been printed for him by Hollinger or, indeed, had come off Hollinger's printing-press 'was a lie'. I am now sending you an exact copy of the sworn statement made by this man Wiehe before the magistrate in Bow Street. Of that statement I received an officially attested duplicate. One copy of the same is already on its way to Berlin for the Public Prosecutor's dossier.

Page Break me41.31

Page me41.31

It would, I think, be superfluous were I at this point to add a single word of comment to the document.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.31

'One of the first days of November last — I do not recollect the exact date — in the evening between 9 and 10 o'clock I was taken out of bed by Mr F. Hollinger, in whose house (3, Litchfield Street, Soho) I was then living, and by whom I was employed as compositor. He presented to me a paper to the effect that I had been continuously employed by him during the preceding 11 months, and that during all that time a certain German flysheet “Zur Warnung” (A Warning) had not been composed and printed in Mr Hollinger's Office, 3, Litchfield Street, Soho. In my perplexed state, — and not aware of the importance of the transaction I complied with his wish, and copied and signed the document. He promised me money, but I never received anything. During that transaction Mr Charles Blind, as my wife told me at the time, was waiting in Mr Hollinger's room. A few days later Mrs Hollinger (Mr F. Hollinger's wife) called me down from dinner and led me into her husband's room, where I found Mr Charles Blind alone. He presented me the same paper which Mr Hollinger had presented me before, and entreated me to write and sign a second copy, as he wanted two, the one for himself, the other for publication in the Press. He added that he would show himself grateful to me. I copied and signed again the paper.

Page me41.31

'I herewith declare the truth of the above statements and that:

'1. During the eleven months, mentioned in the document, I was for six weeks not employed by Mr Hollinger, but by a Mr Ermani.

Page me41.31
'2. I did not work in Mr Hollinger's Office just at the time, when the flysheet “Zur Warnung” (A Warning) was published.
Page me41.31
'3. I heard at the time from Mr Voegele, who then worked for Mr Hollinger, that he, Voegele, had together with Mr Hollinger himself composed the flysheet in question, and that the manuscript was in Mr Blind's handwriting.
Page me41.31
'4. The types of the pamphlet were still standing, when I returned into Mr Hollinger's service. I myself broke them into columns for the reprint of the flysheet (or pamphlet) “Zur Warnung” (A Warning) in the German paper “Das Volk”, published at London by Mr Fidelio Hollinger, 3 Litchfield Street, Soho. The flysheet appeared in No. 7, d.d. 18 June 1859 of “Das Volk”.
Page me41.31
'5. I saw Mr Hollinger give to Mr William Liebknecht, of 14, Church Street, Soho, London, the proofsheet of the pamphlet “Zur Warnung”, on which proofsheet Mr Charles Blind with his own hand had corrected 4 or 5 mistakes. Mr Hollinger hesitated at first giving the proofsheet to Mr Liebknecht, and when

Page Break me41.32
Mr Liebknecht had withdrawn, he, F. Hollinger, expressed to me and my fellow workman Voegele his regret for having given the proofsheet out of his hands.
'Johann Friedrich Wiehe.

Page me41.32
'Declared and signed by the said Johann Friedrich Wiehe at the Police Court Bow Street, London, this 8th day of February, 1860, before me Th.†a Henry. Magistrate of the said Court.'†b
Police Court
Royal Coat of Arms
Bow Street†c

Page me41.32
I would beg you, for the time being, not to show this copy of the affidavit to anyone. What the consequences would be under English criminal law will not escape you.

Page me41.32
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time 20

MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.32
[London,] 9 February 1860

Dear Engels,

To have offered your pamphlet†d at two louis d'or per sheet is SHAMEFUL. Pamphlets of this kind ought to be sold, not by the sheet, but as a whole. Even 40 talers per sheet would be too little. Incidentally, Campe is better than Duncker. The publisher†e who brings out the Darmstadt Militär-Zeitung†f would gladly take the pamphlet, too. Actually, the main thing is that it should come out quickly and, if I were you, I would settle this matter, at least, by telegraph with that louse, Duncker.†68

Page me41.32

I have been IN A SECRET and CONFIDENTIAL CORRESPONDENCE with 'The Daily Telegraph' since the day the shit†g appeared. For before making amende honorable, the fellow†h — I was as rude as hell to him in my letter†42 — wants to await his correspondent's reply, whereas I demanded the immediate insertion of at least a brief note. Whatever he does or does not insert, I shall now bring down a LIBEL ACTION on his head. The circumstances of the case being what they are, any lawyer would happily undertake the thing on spec., as did, for instance, Edwin James, who VOLUNTEERED in Ernest Jones's LIBEL ACTION against Reynolds.†69 I wrote to Ernest Jones about this yesterday.†42 On the same Tuesday as the thing appeared,†a by the by, I wrote to the EDITOR of Palmerston's MOB-PAPER†b saying, inter alia: 'THAT LETTER PURPORTING TO HAVE BEEN WRITTEN FROM FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN, BUT WHICH WAS IN FACT INDITED AT BERLIN, IS NOTHING BUT A CLUMSY AMPLIFICATION OF TWO LEADERS ETC. ETC.' in the Berlin National-Zeitung.†c The writer, i.e. The Daily Telegraph's swine of a Berlin correspondent, is a Jew by the name of Meier,†70 a relative of the CITY-PROPRIETOR'S who is an English Jew by the name of Levy. Hence, both these fellows rightly accuse Heine — juvante†d Vogt — of being a baptised Jew. Herewith Izzy's last letter, which you should retain as a curiosity. Calls himself objective, does he? Inimitable, the plasticity of this most unhellenic of all Wasserpolack†71 Jews! My only reply to the fellow was an immediate announcement in the papers — including the Volks-Zeitung — to the effect that I was bringing a libel action against the N.-Z.†e (In each case I enclosed the circular about Blind,†f although, according to the great Izzy, I ought 'not to delude myself as to the force of that argument'.)

Page Break me41.33

Page me41.33

All this week, by the by, I've been prevented from writing anything for the Tribune. I have had to send out fifty letters at least,†72 running round to see Collet and God knows who else not CONSIDERED. And on top of that there was the correspondence with the beastly Telegraph and the correspondence with the Star,†g to which I sent the whole of my correspondence with the Telegraph. The enclosed letter from the Star is to be put on your files. I have also written to Reynolds.†42 Shall see what he does. Then there was the running in connection with Wiehe and going to the police. The result you will find below. Two replies so far to my letters to the Continent — in so far as they weren't just to newspapers. One from Schily. Priceless. Contains the whole Brimstone Gang†65 and

Page Break me41.34
Bristlers†a story. Another letter from Szemere. Most valuable on account of disclosures about, the revolutionary Hungarians' 'own' (excluding Bonapartist) funds out of which, so Vogt maintains, his money was received. A letter from Imandt, not so bad.†b One or two points, at any rate. I am still awaiting an answer, notably from Mr Reinach in Neuchâtel, who is said to be a walking chronique scandaleuse†c on the subject of the imperial bailiff.†23 (Apropos. What address did the spy Häfner give in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung?†47 There's a POINT I want to verify with him.) Have also written to Borkheim†42 (whom I have never met personally). Was CHIEF of the Brimstone Gang in Geneva who hung out at the Café de la Couronne and with whom on your occasional excursions you sometimes used to get tipsy, or so Schily tells me in his letter.
Page me41.34

I have drawn up the indictment against the Nat.-Zeit. for the public prosecutor's office at the Berlin municipal court. It will go off before I come up to you. But I must wait until I have Fischel's answer with regard to the commencement and conclusion, the prescribed form of address, etc. Should I send the package (since it has to include all manner of manuscripts, documents) to Berlin by post or by PARCEL COMPANY? It should at all events be REGISTERED.
Page me41.34

I have rummaged through everything I have here in London in the way of letters and newspapers for the period 1848-59, and sorted out and put in order what we need. Now you must get things ready so that I find everything that's available in one 'great pile' when I get to Manchester.
Page me41.34

Well, on Monday there was the working-men's banquet,†d attended by eighty people. An indignant anti-Vogt resolution was unanimously adopted by 'the proletarians'. The beastly Hermann asked me to report on it. This I refused to do, but told them to obtain a brief account from Papa Liebknecht.
Page me41.34

Apropos, to RETURN á nos moutons,†e i.e. Lassalle. Not knowing, when I got his first letter, whether you had written to him as we had originally agreed (when CIRCUMSTANCES were otherwise), I told him in a couple of lines that I had thought the only explanation for his many-month-long silence must be annoyance at my last, somewhat rude (in fact excessively rude), letter. I said that I was glad this was not the case, and also that I had informed you of my misgivings.†a WELL! What a FUSS the brute goes and makes about it! How presumptuous the moral attitude adopted by the chap towards Liebknecht!†73 And this is the fellow who resorted to the most impudent means and consorted with the most impudent individuals au service de la comtesse de Hatzfeldt! Has the brute forgotten that, though I wanted to have him admitted to the League, he was rejected on account of his ill-repute by the unanimous decision of the Central Authority in Cologne? IN FACT, I believe, delicacy impelled me to keep the fellow in the dark about all this, as also about the working men's deputation sent over to see me a few years ago from Düsseldorf, which adduced the most scandalous and in part irrefutable allegations against him!†74 And now just look at the pretentious ape! No sooner — looking through his Bonapartist-tinted spectacles — does he think to descry some weak point in us, than he puffs himself up, pontificates, and strikes an — absurd, need one say? — attitude! And contrariwise, how completely do his legal instincts desert him for fear that I should not, TO THE BENEFIT OF MY TENDER FRIEND Lassalle, allow myself without more ado to be pushed into the background by Vogt. How he contradicts himself! How mean he becomes! One shouldn't 'stir things up even more'. 'They' wouldn't 'take it kindly'. Not take it kindly! They! For the sake of his pale-ale Berlin philistines, I am to let myself be browbeaten by schoolmaster Squeers, alias Zabel! Now I know just what to think of Mr Lassalle.

Page Break me41.35

Page me41.35

I immediately wrote to Blind — or perhaps, I should say, put into an envelope the circular, which affects him so very closely.†b He has kept his trap shut, of course. Instead, the brute goes running around town in the hope that things can be sorted out by tittle-tattle (vide below how much good that will do him). For the past few weeks the man's been indulging in feverish activity, publishing pamphlet after pamphlet, blowing his own trumpet in the Hermann for all he's worth, sucking up, fore and aft, to the few bourgeois whose acquaintance he made on the Schiller committee,†75 pressing his own candidature as secretary of the recently conceived Schiller Association,†76 now denying his 'Patriots',†77 now making himself important in their eyes by means of semicovert, statesmanlike allusions, etc. Well, all this amounts to, as you will instantly realise, is a drowning man clutching at a straw.

Page me41.35

No one has behaved so abjectly as that potbellied philistine Freiligrath. I sent him the circular.†b He didn't so much as acknowledge its receipt. Does the brute believe that I couldn't, if so minded, immerse him up to the eyebrows in the lake of brimstone†a? Has he forgotten that I possess a hundred or more of his letters? Does he imagine that I don't see him because he shows me his backside? Yesterday, I also sent the philistine the ensuing palliative, ON THE EXPRESS CONDITION that he should not say a word about it to anyone, including his friend the crypto-democrat Karl Blind. That will tickle him, and ere long he'll begin to feel uneasy at the undue proximity of the felonious friend in whose company he appeared before the public (as I reminded him QUITE en passant in my last letter†b) in the pages of the A. A.Z.†c Almost everyone, except for Freiligrath, even distant acquaintances, are behaving decently to me at this time of crisis.

Page Break me41.36

Page me41.36

But to come to essentials. Firstly, I discovered through Juch that Wiehe once committed a theft in Bremen, which was why he had to come to London. Secondly, I learnt through Schapper that Wiehe introduced himself to him as a compositor on the Volk, and it was he who had obtained the fellow's present job for him. I briefed Schapper, who quietly intimated to Wiehe that he knew about the Bremen affair, but then proceeded to read my circular aloud in the presence of his EMPLOYER and to CROSS EXAMINE him. The fellow admitted everything. What the outcome was, you will see from the following document of which I possess an officially authenticated duplicate. One is going to Berlin. The other I shall keep here and employ in no uncertain manner against the nay-sayer.†d One further point. This will show you the kind of people these 'honest fellows' consort with. I had, of course, let Wiehe know that I would compensate him for the loss of half a working day, the time he would have to spend with me at the police court. When all had been done, I gave him 2/6d. He remonstrated. Well, how much a day do you earn? I asked. ABOUT 3/-, said he, but I want five from you. After all, I ought to get something for telling the truth.

Page me41.36
But the best is yet to come. I:* You have declined the money offer made by Blind and Hollinger in order to bribe you? He: Why decline! The rogues promised, but never gave me anything.* That's compositor Wiehe for you. But Hollinger is a villain of far deeper dye. Vögele, whom I had arranged to see yesterday, did not turn up. Doubtless Blind-Hollinger made it worth his while to keep away. But they'll have thrown their money down the drain. For I know that this chap has still got a conscience, and so I shall work on him.†78 My circular misled them into approaching the wrong man. They believed it meant that I wouldn't be able to get at Wiehe himself. Well, now ad rem†a:

Page Break me41.37

Page me41.37
'One of the first days of November last — I do not recollect the exact date — in the evening between 9 and 10 o'clock I was taken out of bed by Mr F. Hollinger, in whose house I then lived, and by whom I was employed as compositor. He presented to me a paper to the effect that during the preceding 11 months I had been continuously employed by him, and that during all that time a certain German flysheet “Zur Warnung” (A Warning) had not been composed and printed in Mr Hollinger's Office, 3, Litchfield Street, Soho. In my perplexed state, and not aware of the importance of the transaction, I complied with his wish, and copied, and signed the document. Mr Hollinger promised me money, but I never received anything. During that transaction Mr. Charles Blind, as my wife informed me at the time, was waiting in Mr Hollinger's room. A few days later, Mrs Hollinger called me down from dinner and led me into her husband's room, where I found Mr Charles Blind alone. He presented me the same paper which Mr Hollinger had presented me before, and entreated me to write, and sign a second copy, as he wanted two, the one for himself, and the other for publication in the Press. He added that he would show himself grateful to me. I copied and signed again the paper.
Page me41.37
'I herewith declare — upon my oath — the truth of the above statements and that:
'1. During the 11 months mentioned in the document I was for six months†b not employed by Mr Hollinger, but by a Mr Ermani.

Page me41.37
'2. I did not work in Mr Hollinger's Office just at that time when the flysheet “Zur Warnung” was published.
Page me41.37
'3. I heard at the time from Mr Voegele, who then worked for Mr Hollinger, that he, Voegele, had, together with Mr Hollinger himself, composed the flysheet in question, and that the manuscript was in Mr Blind's handwriting.
Page me41.37
'4. The types of the pamphlet were still standing when I returned to Mr Hollinger's service. I myself broke them into columns for the reprint of the flysheet “Zur Warnung” in the German paper “Das Volk” published at London, by Mr Fidelio Hollinger, 3, Litchfield Street, Soho. The flysheet appeared in No. 7, d.d. 18th June, 1859, of “Das Volk”.
Page me41.37
'5. I saw Mr Hollinger give to Mr William Liebknecht, of 14, Church Street, Soho, London, the proofsheet of the pamphlet “Zur Warnung”, on which proofsheet Mr Charles Blind with his own hand had corrected 4 or 5 mistakes. Mr Hollinger hesitated at first giving the proofsheet to Mr Liebknecht, and when Mr Liebknecht had withdrawn, he, F. Hollinger, expressed to me and my fellow workman Voegele his regret for having given the proofsheet out of his hands.

Johann Friedrich Wiche
Police Court, Bow Street†c

Page Break me41.38
Page me41.38
'Declared and signed by the said Johann Friedrich Wiehe at the Police Court, Bow Street, this 8th day of February, 1860, before me Th.†a Henry, Magistrate of the said court.'†b

Page me41.38
I deliberately brought the matter before Henry, he being the GOVERNMENT'S MAGISTRATE who attends to all the political cases. The brand of English found in the above is not my responsibility, unlike the precise enumeration of the FACTS. WHAT DO YOU SAY NOW, SIR! 'The argument lacks force', says Izzy. Vive†c Izzy! For CONSPIRACY against myself, combined with ATTEMPT AT BRIBERY OF WITNESSES, so the MAGISTRATE says, I could now get Mr Blind run out of town. So much for petty bourgeois artfulness!

Your
K.M.

Page me41.38
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

21
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.38
[Manchester,] 9 February 1860

Dear Moor,
As soon as I have Dronke's address, he shall receive a copy. Meanwhile, one will go off today to Dr Bronner.†d
Page me41.38
So the Telegraph is going to apologise?†e Most gratifying; up till today nothing has appeared.
Page me41.38
I am very much looking forward to hearing further details.
Page me41.38
Make sure that Wiehe and Vögele don't slip out of your hands. Cela se pourrait†f; when a few pounds are being offered, there is always the fear that something of the kind may happen.
Page me41.38
Enclosed fiver D/M 34115, Manchester, 4 January 1859; if it's not enough, let me know and I'll send you another £ or two.

Page Break me41.39
Because of the office boys I don't care to send out to the P[OSTAL.] O[RDER] OFFICE unnecessarily and hence would rather put it off until I'm able to lay hands on another fiver. However, you can send your wife the money from here,†79 or else have it beforehand, comme il te plaira.†a
Page me41.39
Still no sign either of the National-Zeitung†b or of Vogt†c?
Page me41.39
I'm leaving now and intend to finish at least the rough draft of the manuscript†d today and tomorrow.
Page me41.39
Vale.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.39
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

22
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.39
[Manchester,] 12 February 1860

Dear Moor,
You will have had the £5, or at least I hope so.
Page me41.39
The Wiehe document,†e is most welcome. Aprés ça†f our shinishter†g Blind will doubtless tuck his tail between his legs. In the meantime, you have, I trust, obtained one from Vögele.†78 The more evidence the better.
Page me41.39
So, the Kölnische Zeitung has, after all, published your declaration†h and, at the same time, taken another swipe at Blind? So much the better.

Page Break me41.40
Page me41.40
Strohn is in Hamburg and behaving very well over this particular affair, or so I hear. I shall write to him. He too can prove useful.
Page me41.40
Saludi.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.40
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

23
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.40

London, 13 February 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sir,

Last week I wrote to a friend†a in Berlin requesting him to recommend a lawyer for a libel action, which I am compelled to bring against the Berlin National-Zeitung.†42 Today I have received a reply in which my friend names you, Sir, as the most eminent lawyer in Berlin.

Page me41.40

I am therefore taking the liberty of asking whether you will agree to act as my lawyer in the libel action, further information concerning which is given below.

Page me41.40

Should the provisional retaining fee of 15 talers herewith enclosed not suffice, kindly telegraph me. I shall then immediately despatch whatever additional sum may be required.

Page me41.40

I enclose herewith the power of attorney and trust that this instrument will suffice. I would earnestly beg you to institute the action forthwith, lest it become statute-barred, and should be much obliged if you would inform me by telegraphic despatch that you are taking the necessary steps.

Page Break me41.41

Page me41.41

I have simultaneously begun an ACTION FOR LIBEL against The Daily Telegraph here in London, which paper printed an English version†a of the National-Zeitung's calumnious articles.†b

Page me41.41

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
Dr Karl Marx
(verte)†c

Page me41.41

The articles in the National-Zeitung alluded to in the preceding letter are to be found in No. 37 (dated Sunday, 22 January 1860) and No. 41 (dated Wednesday, 25 January 1860), both of them leaders. In subsequent letters I shall take occasion to characterise the animus by which these articles were inspired. But the specific points on which I wish to bring an action for libel, and which seem to me the most cogent from the legal point of view, are the following:

Page me41.41

1. In No. 41 (article is headed 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht'), column 3 (towards the bottom) reads:

'In the Allgemeine Zeitung Blind has twice declared†d outright that he is not the author' (i.e. of the flysheet Zur Warnung); 'nor does he say this to exculpate Vogt, with whom he does not agree, but simply for the benefit of the Marx-Liebknecht-Biscamp camp ... he'

(Blind) 'is obviously not a member of the Marx party in the narrower sense. It appears to us that the latter did not find it too difficult to turn him into a scapegoat, and if the charges levelled at Vogt were to carry any weight, they had to be attributed to a definite person who would have to be responsible for them. The Marx party could very easily saddle Blind with the authorship of the pamphlet because and after he had expressed similar views to those contained in it in conversation with Marx and in an article in The Free Press.†e By making use of Blind's assertions and turns of phrase the pamphlet could be fabricated and made to look as if he' (i.e. Blind) 'had concocted it.'

Page me41.41

Here, then, I am actually accused of having 'fabricated' a pamphlet in another man's name. Furthermore, in the same article (same column, further up), the National-Zeitung itself informs its readers that I had sent the A. A.Z. a 'deposition by the compositor Vögele',†80 in which the latter said that 'he knew Blind's handwriting from previous manuscripts; he himself had set the first part of the pamphlet on Hollinger's press, and Hollinger himself had set the rest'; thus, in the passage quoted above, the National-Zeitung insinuates not only that I fabricated a pamphlet and fraudulently made it appear to be a 'concoction' of Blind's. It insinuates outright that I had wittingly sent the Augsb. Allg. Zeitung a spurious document. And, to crown its animus calumniandi,†a it goes on:

Page Break me41.42

'Thereupon, on 2 November, Hollinger declared that it was a malicious invention to say that the pamphlet had been printed in his workshop or that Blind was its author, adding that his compositor, Wiehe, who had worked for him for 11 months, concurred with this statement. Marx, always ready with an answer, replied in the Allgemeine Zeitung on November 15†b:

Page me41.42

'"Hollinger's declaration is simply ridiculous. Hollinger is aware that he has formally infringed English law by publishing the pamphlet without declaring the place of publication." In addition, Marx several times insists that, before the pamphlet came out, Blind had communicated its contents to him verbally and had put down in writing exactly what later appeared in the pamphlet; hence, because of the similarity in content and form, Blind had, de prime abord,†c been regarded as the author.'

Page me41.42

Here, in order to introduce the passage cited above, which is defamatory to myself, the National-Zeitung omits deliberately that part of my statement in the supplement to the Augsburg A.Z. of 21 November 1859 which is of most significance to lawyers, and to English lawyers in particular. I enclose the cutting from the Augsburg A.Z., in which I have underlined for your benefit what was deliberately omitted from my statement by the National-Zeitung.†d

Page me41.42

In accordance with universal legal usage, it should now be incumbent on the Nat.-Zeit. to prove that its defamatory charge against me is true. But I shall let you have legal evidence to the effect that it is false. You will even see that under English law I am now in a position, should I so wish, to have Mr Blind consigned to the galleys for CONSPIRACY against me.

Page me41.42
2. No. 37 of the Nat.-Zeit., the leading article entitled Karl Vogt und die 'Allgemeine Zeitung', column 2, reads (I quote):

'Vogt reports on p. 136 et. seq.: Among the refugees of 1849 the term Brimstone Gang†65; or the name of the Bristlers,†e referred to a number of people who, originally scattered throughout Switzerland, France and England, gradually congregated in London, where they revered Herr Marx as their visible leader.'

Page Break me41.43
Page me41.43
I shall let you have evidence to the effect that in this passage two quite distinct Genevan societies have been lumped together, neither of which ever had, or sought to make, any connection with me. But this I consider to be of no more than secondary importance. The actual passage upon which I wish the second point in the libel action to be based is one that occurs subsequently and which I shall now quote:

One of the chief occupations of the Brimstone Gang' (ostensibly under my command, was to compromise people at home in Germany in such a way that they were forced to pay money so that the gang should preserve their secret without compromising them. Not just one, but hundreds of letters were written to people in Germany threatening to denounce them for complicity in this or that act of revolution unless a certain sum of money had been received at a specified address by a certain date.'

Page me41.43
It will now be incumbent on the National-Zeitung to substantiate the charge of boundless depravity it brings against me by producing in court, not hundreds of letters, not one letter, but one single line containing infamous blackmail of this nature, and of which it can be proved that it emanated, I won't say from myself, but from any person with whom I have ever had anything to do. The passage cited above continues as follows:

'Following the principle that “whoever is not unconditionally for us, is against us”, the reputation of anyone who opposed these intrigues' (i.e. the blackmailing letters previously described) 'was ruined, not just among the refugees, but also by means of the press. The “proletarians”" (as whose chief I am portrayed) 'filled the columns of the reactionary press in Germany with their denunciations of those democrats who did not subscribe to their views; they became the confederates of the secret police in France and Germany.'

Page me41.43
It will, of course, be easy for the Nat.-Zeit. to find in the 'columns of the reactionary press' thus filled, one single line emanating from myself or friends of mine which contains 'denunciations' against any 'democrat' whomsoever.
Page me41.43

It is absolutely correct — and this is the only FACT — that Ferdinand Freiligrath wrote a satirical poem†a about Mr Kinkel's revolutionary loan and his revolutionary tour of the United States,†81 a poem which was first published by my friend Weydemeyer in a journal appearing in New York,†b and subsequently printed in the

Page Break me41.44
Morgenblatt.†a But that could certainly not be described as a 'denunciation'. In actual fact, the so-called democratic emigration (German) filled the German press with the most inane tittle-tattle about myself. There was only one instance which I felt merited the trouble of a reply, but the paper to which I sent the rectifying statement did not print it.†b
Page me41.44
The only German paper for which I have written since going into exile has been the Neue Oder-Zeitung. I was its correspondent from about the beginning of January until July 1855. Not once did I devote a single line to the émigrés.
Page me41.44
As regards Liebknecht's articles for the Augsb. Allg. Zeitung which likewise never contained a line about émigrés — and which, by the by, reflect great credit to him (their content, I mean) — these have nothing whatever to do with me. I shall be writing to you about this at greater length.†c
Page me41.44
Needless to say, my alliance with the secret police in Germany and France has for me the spice of novelty.
Page me41.44
3. In the above cited No. 41, 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', the National-Zeitung identifies the 'party of the proletariat', as whose chief it describes me, and hence myself, with 'a conspiracy of the most infamous sort, with the manufacturing of counterfeit paper-money on a massive scale, etc.' which purportedly took place in Switzerland in 1852, and likewise with similar 'machinations' in 1859 which purportedly caused the German states, 'after the Peace of Villafranca', to raise the matter with the Swiss 'Federal Council'.
Page me41.44
Later, I shall show in greater detail that I had nothing whatever to do with these matters having, indeed, abandoned all agitation since September 1850, and that, while the Cologne communist trial was pending (1851-52),†2 I disbanded the communist society to which I belonged,†63 nor have I since that time belonged either to a secret or to a public society. That the Nat.-Zeit. was deliberately libellous on this point, too, may be deduced from the fact that it must have known from the communist trial in Cologne that I myself, through counsel there, denounced as a police agent the fellow said to have been active in Switzerland in 1852, and that Stieber himself was forced to admit that this fellow had been my enemy since 1850. If necessary, I can provide you with evidence to the effect that this fellow (Cherval, real name Crämer) never had any connection with me, even before 1850.

Page Break me41.45
Page me41.45

4. The final point in the libel action should be based on the following passage in No. 41, 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', column 2, which runs:

'Where the money for this generously distributed paper' (i.e. the Volk, published in London) 'came from, is known to the gods; men, however, are well aware that Marx and Biscamp have no money to spare.'

Page me41.45

Taken in conjunction with the animus of the two leading articles, with the way I am lumped together with secret police, reactionaries and a Brimstone Gang extorting money through chantage and revolutionary threats, this sentence can only imply that I obtained money for the Volk in a dishonest fashion or by underhand means. It is now up to the National-Zeitung to substantiate this libel. I, for my part, shall provide you with information, not only about the financial contributions obtained by me for the Volk, but also, in so far as this is necessary, about my own — in Mr Zabel's eyes, dubious — financial circumstances; and that information will be such as will enable you to prove the very opposite of the defamatory insinuation put forward by the Nat.-Zeit.

Page me41.45

I would beg you, when you reply to this letter, to let me know upon which points you require further elucidation.†a

Page me41.45

P.S. Since it would otherwise be too late to post this letter, I shall send on the power of attorney tomorrow. If at all possible, this evening under separate cover.

Page me41.45

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.46

24

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.46

[London,] 13 February 1860

DEAR FREDERICK,

The book†a arrived today. Nothing but shit. Sheer tripe. Luckily, the worthy National-Zeitung has reprinted in its two leaders (No. 37 and No. 41) all the passages which are actionable and in which all the scurrilities are concentrated.

Page me41.46

Today (on receiving a second letter from Fischel), I at once sent Legal Counsellor Weber (the leading lawyer in Berlin) an indictment together with a retaining fee of 15 talers (£2 10sh).†b The case would have cost me nothing if, instead of instituting a private action for libel, I had had recourse to the Royal Prussian Public Prosecutor, but as I wrote and told Fischel,†c I could not expect the Royal Prussian Public Prosecutor to 'display especial zeal in upholding the honour of my name'. Moreover, the whole procedure costs very little.

Page me41.46

Of the £5 you sent me, £2 10 has therefore gone to Weber, £1 today to the COUNTY-COURT, 5/ — to Vögele and 2/ — on the two AFFIDAVITS he made†d; also a LOT on stamps for letters. Before going to the CITY today I had to borrow a further £1 from a baker, repayable on Wednesday.

Page me41.46

Luckily, Urquhart has written Collet a rude letter in which he lashes out at him for sending me the PRINTER'S BILL.†82 This (i.e. my publication) was, he said, an expense chargeable to his agitational activities. So I don't have to pay him.

Page me41.46

Tomorrow I shall be faced with yet another expense and I don't know how I'm going to meet it. For I have got to call on that bastard Zimmermann (from Spandau, a Vogtian and, at the same time, an advocate to the Austrian Embassy) so that he can supply me with the wording for the power of attorney which must go off to Weber without delay. There's no time to be lost, you see, because actions of this kind become 'statute-barred' remarkably quickly in Prussia.

Page Break me41.47

Page me41.47

In addition to the Volks-Zeitung, the Berlin Publicist has published my statement,†a the latter having placed it alongside an extract from the English anti-Blind circular.†b This last I have today sent to Louis Blanc and Félix Pyat, together with the AFFIDAVITS of Wiehe†c and Vögele.

Page me41.47

The Kölnische Zeitung and the N.-Z. did not publish my statement.†83

Page me41.47

Mr F. Freiligrath — whom (with seeming benevolence) I shall compromise in no mean fashion — did not even acknowledge receipt of the things I sent him.

Page me41.47

You must surely have got my last important communication?†d

Page me41.47

After I've settled the matter of the power of attorney tomorrow, I shall leave on Wednesday†e (having notified you beforehand) for Manchester where, in addition to our indispensable meeting, I have business connected with Roberts.

Page me41.47

You will have gathered from the foregoing that I'm now stone-broke.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.47
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

25
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.47
[London,] 14 February 1860

Dear FREDERICK,
Enclosed COPY of Vögele's affidavit†78 which I thought I had sent you on Saturday.†f

Page Break me41.48
Page me41.48
Borkheim has handed me the manuscript of his narrative 'THE RISE, PROGRESS AND DECLINE' of the Brimstone Gang.†84 He is, as I've already told you, FIRST clerk of a firm in Mark Lane; earns between £600 and £700 a year.
Page me41.48
My correspondence with Schily is still going on, of course, since I have to CROSS-EXAMINE him on specific POINTS.
Page me41.48
Did Lassalle post you Vogt's book†a? In reply to his letter, I told the fool to address the thing to you.†b
Page me41.48
I expect to have an answer by telegraphic despatch tomorrow from Legal Counsellor Weber.†c
Page me41.48
There are a number of matters still to be settled tomorrow.
Page me41.48
If MEANS are available, I may possibly depart some time tomorrow. I can't say for certain, as unforeseen events may detain me a day longer. At any rate, make sure that I find all the letters and PAPERS thrown together in 'one great pile'.
Page me41.48

The pitiable Hermann (apparently at the instigation of Kinkel, WHO IS ABOUT MARRYING AN ENGLISHWOMAN WITH £2-3000 A YEAR) did not publish the resolution adopted by the Workers' Society.†d Mais ces messieurs y penseront.†e
Page me41.48
The beastly Telegraph†f wrote to me again today and referred me to yesterday's piece by their beastly correspondent.†g I'll play the scoundrel a merry tune.
Page me41.48
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.48
Have not yet heard anything from Papa Blind.

Page me41.48
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.49

26
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.49
[London,] 15 February 1860

Dear Engels,
£5 received.
Page me41.49
I shall be leaving tomorrow at ABOUT 7.30 a.m. (Euston Street†85).
Page me41.49
From Schaible's statement†a enclosed herewith (this cutting is from The Daily Telegraph) you will see that the powder I administered has proved effective. FACTS prejudicial to the Genevan advocatus imperii†b will now emerge.
Page me41.49
I at once wrote a brief note to Schaible, the contents of which were as follows:
Page me41.49
His statement was important in being anti-Vogt and hence pro-main issue. It did nothing to alter Blind's 'WILFULLY FALSE' and in no way 'ERRONEOUS' STATEMENT in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.†c Still less his CONSPIRACY, of which he could, I said, convince himself by reference to the COPY I enclosed of Wiehe's AFFIDAVIT,†d which has yet to play its public role. You will observe that, IN ORDER TO SAVE BLIND FROM THE WORST, the fellows will come out with genuine FACTS against Vogt and actually grovel in the dust at our feet.

Page me41.49
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.49
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.50

27
ENGELS TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.50
Manchester, 20 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Sir,
I am in receipt of your note of the 13th and regret that I am only now able to send the manuscript enclosed herewith.†a I hardly imagine that it will run to more than 3 printed sheets.
Page me41.50
I don't quite understand the provisos you make concerning considerations of principle, unless you wished to make a general proviso to the effect that you must see the manuscript beforehand.†86 I cannot believe that you wish to assume moral, logical and aesthetic responsibility for everything you publish, from Marx to Jacobus Venedey and from Lassalle to Palleske, or to associate your publishing house with the line of the Volks-Zeitung, on which I cannot comment since it is not to be had in Manchester. If, however, the considerations of principle are connected with Lassalle's pamphlet on Italy,†b which admittedly does not tally with my views on the subject, I do, of course, respect such reservations on your part, but I also know that Lassalle is certainly the last person who would wish this to be taken into account. I am therefore writing to Lassalle†c in the firm conviction that he would consider it an insult, were he thought capable of doing the slightest thing to obstruct the publication of a piece that differed from his own views on the subject.
Page me41.50

[Should]†d you feel, however, that the pamphlet is unacceptable to your publishing house by reason of its length or its principles, I would request you to deliver it within twenty-four hours of receipt to Mr B. Afinger (Sculptor),
Linienstrasse 173, Berlin.
Page me41.50
I have sent the letter to Borkheim.
Page me41.50
I remain,
Yours truly,
Friedrich Engels

Page me41.50
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.51

28
ENGELS TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN

Page me41.51
Manchester, 20 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Lassalle,
Many thanks for sending me Vogt's concoction.†a More about this below.
Page me41.51
As Duncker has doubtless told you, I have offered him a sort of sequel to Po and Rhine†b which he accepts subject to the proviso 'considerations of principle'.†c Even though I find it somewhat surprising that the publisher and not the author should be responsible for the principles advanced in a work, I have, nevertheless, tried in vain to discover what can be meant by this. Surely D. isn't claiming that his publishing house is simply an extension of the Volks-Zeitung, which, by the way, I never see up here. Finally, it occurred to me that D. may have got wind of the fact that my views on the Italian question are different from yours and made this proviso out of excessive concern for your pamphlet.†d I'm convinced that, should this be the case, I would only have to draw your attention to it, for you to reassure D. on this score. In view of your objectivity, you would, I know, consider it an insult, were anyone to suppose you capable of even remotely desiring the suppression of a work because it was opposed to your own views on a question of this kind. In fact, I had to spend a long time thinking things over before I could make up my mind to raise this point with you, being afraid you might be offended with me for assuming such imputations to be possible, even at third hand. But since there seems no other explanation for D.'s 'considerations', I have no choice.

Page me41.51

Settling Vogt's hash will be mere child's play. We dealt with this ancient, warmed-up drivel as much as eight years ago†87 (though the little Genevan philistine in his secluded corner doesn't know it) and we'll jolly well demolish it so that nothing's left but the stench, peculiar to Vogt, which he has injected into it. Incidentally, the statements of Blind,†a Biscamp†b and, in particular, Lupus†c have compromised the fellow to such an extent that, if things go on like this, there'll be literally nothing left to do. And now we have Schaible's statement about the provenance of the pamphlet Zur Warnung,†d which completely nullifies the legal proceedings in Augsburg†88 and will ultimately compel Vogt, should he wish to demonstrate the contrary, to do so in London. All this has, of course, meant our rummaging through the whole of our archives, in which we have the life histories of the entire democratic gang; we can do for every one of them. This ignoramus Vogt, with his letter from Techow†56 (which Vogt stole, to boot) and his paltry, parochial Genevan gossip, imagines that we others are just as ignorant, just as low and just as cowardly as he. He is in for a surprise.

Page Break me41.52
Page me41.52

Most cordially,
Yours,
Engels

Page me41.52
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

29
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.52
Manchester, 21 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Sir,

The power of attorney was not sent off to you immediately after my first letter†e because, further on in that same letter, I had requested you to telegraph me. Having waited a few days, it seemed to me best to wait until the latest date (namely yesterday, 20 February) by which your written reply might be expected to reach London from Berlin.

Page Break me41.53
Page me41.53
Since this did not arrive and since, on the other hand, you did not reject by telegraph my request that you should act as my lawyer, I assume that you have accepted my brief. To avoid further loss of time, I am therefore sending you the following in this registered letter:
Page me41.53
1. The power of attorney;
2. 7 enclosures, together with translations where the original is in English.
Page me41.53
These enclosures comprise:
1. A. Vögele's affidavit†78;
2. J.F. Wiehe's affidavit†a;
3. My English anti-Blind circular.†b
Page me41.53
4. and 5. Two letters concerning this matter from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung to me.†89
Page me41.53
6. Dr Schaible's statement in the London 'Daily Telegraph' of 15th February 1860, page 5, column 5, paragraph headed 'The Vogt Pamphlet'.
Page me41.53
7. A letter from K. Blind to Liebknecht dated 8 September 1859.†90
Page me41.53
Tomorrow, by which time I shall, perhaps, have received a letter from you, I shall take the liberty of sending you some comments on these documents. However, you will see at first glance that the infamous conduct attributed to me in No. 41 of the National-Zeitung, where I am portrayed as the anonymous fabricator of papers allegedly circulating in other people's names, is irrefutably shown in law to be an infamous libel.
Page me41.53
As regards the affidavits (statements made in court in lieu of an oath), all I would say is this:
Page me41.53
You will note that in affidavit enclosure II, the words 'UPON OATH' have been deleted by the magistrate. For he explained to us that a statement made before him was the equivalent of a sworn statement, that a false statement was a felony and hence punishable with TRANSPORTATION but that, under English law, an oath could properly be administered only in the presence of the defendant.
Page me41.53
The rest I shall leave for tomorrow, pending which I remain, Sir,

Your very obedient Servant,
Dr. K. Marx

Page Break me41.54
Page me41.54
I am not certain how long I shall be staying up here and hence would request that all letters be sent to my home address,
Page me41.54
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London.
Page me41.54
On the power of attorney I have left a space for the names of the National-Zeitung's editors.

Page me41.54
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

30
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH†91
IN LONDON

Page me41.54
Manchester, 23 February 1860†a
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Freiligrath,
I am writing to you again and, indeed, for the last time, about the Vogt affair. You have not so much as ACKNOWLEDGED receipt of my first two communications,†b a courtesy you would have extended to any philistine. I cannot possibly surmise that you imagine I am trying to extort a letter from you for any public purpose. As you are aware, I possess at least 200 letters of yours, in which there is more than enough material to establish your relations with me and with the party, should it prove necessary.
Page me41.54
I am writing to you because, as a poet and a man up to his eyes in business, you would seem to misconceive the significance of the lawsuits I am conducting in Berlin and London.†92 They are crucial to the historical vindication of the party and its subsequent position in Germany; this applies all the more to the lawsuit in Berlin in that it is taking place at the same time as the Eichhoff-Stieber case,†44 which turns mainly on the Cologne communist trial.†2
Page me41.54
The GRIEVANCES you may perhaps be nourishing against me are the following:

1. That I abused your name (or so you told Faucher).
Page me41.54
2. The kind of 'scene' I made you in your OFFICE.

Page Break me41.55
Page me41.55
Re 1. I personally have never mentioned your name, except for saying in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung that Blind had told you much the same as he told me.†a This is a FACT. From the first I realised how important it was to call attention to the real origins of the pamphlet,†b and I had the right to cite a witness in connection with what Blind had said.
Page me41.55
As for Liebknecht's letter to the editor of the A. A.Z., in which he mentions your name and mine (with reference to Blind†93), he will, if necessary, confirm on oath that this was done without my knowledge, just as he sent the Augsb. Allg. Zeit. the pamphlet 'Zur Warnung' without my knowledge and during my absence in Manchester. When Vogt sued the A. A.Z. and the latter turned to him [Liebknecht], he was still in doubt as to whether or not I should disavow him, as I could have done, and was in fact surprised when I immediately said I would do all I could to help him.
Page me41.55
If — in the letter I wrote you†c — I took his side in the matter of your letter to him, this was simply because it seemed ungenerous, in a man of your repute and social standing, to write so harshly to an obscure party member living in a garret and one with whom you had hitherto been on friendly terms.
Page me41.55
As regards the irritable tone of my own letter, there were various reasons for that.
Page me41.55
Firstly, I was deeply wounded by the fact that you seemed more inclined to believe Blind than myself.
Page me41.55
Secondly, from a letter you wrote me in a very irritable vein regarding The Morning Advertiser (Schiller Festival article†d) you would seem to consider me capable of the enormity, not only of surreptitiously introducing into Blind's article something injurious to yourself, but of actually denouncing this to you as Blind's handiwork.†94 I was at a complete loss to imagine what I could have done to deserve such injurious suspicions.
Page me41.55
Thirdly, you showed Blind a private letter I had written you.
Page me41.55
Finally, I had the right to expect — and all the more so after the 'Gartenlaube' article,†95 that you should include in your statement in the A.A.Z.†e some allusion, however faint, that would obviate any appearance of its being a personal breach with myself and a public repudiation of the party. The fact that your second statement†a actually appeared alongside Blind's†b and your name served as a screen for his lying and fraudulence could hardly be expected to delight me. Incidentally, I give you my word of honour that, prior to their publication, I had no knowledge whatsoever of any of the statements made by Liebknecht in the A. A.Z.†96

Page Break me41.56

Page me41.56

Re 2. The day I came to your office, the two issues of the National-Zeitung†c (the first contained the libellous excerpts and comments later reprinted in the Telegraph†d) had just reached me from Berlin. There was utter commotion at home, and my poor wife was in a truly pitiful state. At the same time, I received a letter from Germany informing me that, besides your statements published in the A. A.Z., Vogt's libellous work included a letter of yours, from which your close relationship with Vogt was all too apparent,†97 and that, in particular, your name was the only one of any note out of which Vogt made political capital and which lent plausibility to his infamies in the eyes of the public. Imagine yourself in similar circumstances and then ask yourself whether, in your own case, spleen might not momentarily have prevailed over reason.

Page me41.56

Let me repeat once again that this letter has nothing to do with private interests. In the London lawsuit I could have you SUBPOENAED as a witness without your prior permission. As regards the Berlin lawsuit, I am in possession of letters from you which, if required, I could place on the record. Nor do I stand alone in this matter. From every side — Belgium, Switzerland, France and England — Vogt's libellous attack has brought me unexpected allies, even from among people who belong to quite a different school of thought.

Page me41.56

But in the first place it would anyhow be better for both parties, as for the cause, to act en entente.

Page me41.56

In the second, I must tell you frankly that I cannot resign myself to losing, as a result of irrelevant misunderstandings, one of the few men whom I have loved as friends, in the eminent sense of the word.

Page Break me41.57

Page me41.57

If I have failed you in any way, I am at all times ready to admit to my error. Nihil humani a me alienum puto.†a

Page me41.57

Finally, I understand very well that, in your present position, any affair such as the one under consideration could only be obnoxious to you.

Page me41.57

You, for your part, will realise that it is impossible to count you out altogether.

Page me41.57

Firstly, because Vogt is making political capital out of your name and pretending to have your approval in his indiscriminate mudslinging at a party which prides itself on counting you as one of its number.

Page me41.57

Moreover, you happen to be the only member of the former Cologne Central Authority†b who, between the end of 1849 and the spring of 1851, lived in Cologne and has since that time lived in London.
Page me41.57
Inasmuch as we have both consciously, each in his own way, out of the purest of motives and with an utter disregard for private interests, been flourishing the banner for 'la classe la plus laborieuse et la plus misérable'†98 high above the heads of the philistines for years now, I should regard it as a contemptible offence against history, were we to fall out over trifles, all of them attributable to misunderstandings.
Page me41.57
In sincere friendship
Your
Karl Marx

Page me41.57
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, Stuttgart, 1911-1912

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.58

31
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN

Page me41.58
Manchester, 23 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Lassalle,
I am at present having to conduct two lawsuits, one in Berlin and another in London,†92 while, at the same time, simply working for a living, and am unable to write you more than a few lines.
Page me41.58
I must say that, having seen the book, I'm astonished at the 'great deal of truth' you discovered in Vogt's romance,†a no less than at the pusillanimous advice you gave me.
Page me41.58
As for the only part that wasn't pure invention — Techow's letter,†56 or rather the substance thereof — I refuted this 7 years ago in a pamphlet which appeared in New York under the title The Knight of the Noble Consciousness, and to such good effect that all the yapping curs, who then still all belonged to the same pack, held their tongues and dared not utter a single word in reply.
Page me41.58

What I should like you to do and what would be of inestimable use to me, would be to find out who is the Daily Telegraph's correspondent in Berlin and where the brute lives, the number of the house and the name of the street. I believe he's a Jew called Meier.†70 It shouldn't be at all difficult for you, in view of the position you occupy in Berlin, to find this out. Please advise me of it forthwith.
Page me41.58
I enclose the pamphlet on the communist trial.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me41.58
P.S. As for my mistrust (you compel me to talk like statesman Blind, vide the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†99), that's something at least you can't complain of. Take, for instance, the enclosed note from Baltimore (United States). That note was sent to me in confidence.†100 The official allegations against you (among them the assertions of a workers' deputation from Düsseldorf†c) are in the

Page Break me41.59
League's†a files, which are neither in my possession nor am I authorised to use them.

Page me41.59
First published in: F. Lassalle, Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

32
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.59
Manchester, 24 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Sir,
I find it surprising that as late as yesterday I should still have been without an acknowledgment from Berlin of the registered letter despatched to you on 13 February.†b
Page me41.59
Yesterday I mailed you from here — Manchester — in a second registered letter, the power of attorney together with seven other enclosures†c and, with reference to the said (numbered) enclosures, am today taking the liberty of sending a few additional notes on the chief points which I consider it necessary to stress in the action for libel against the Berlin National-Zeitung. At the same time, I enclose a letter of 19 November 1852,†101 and a copy of the Revelations published by me in 1853.†d

Page me41.59
I. a) The anonymous pamphlet 'Zur Warnung'.
Page me41.59
In No. 41 of the Berlin National-Zeitung, leading article, 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', page 1, column 3, there is a passage which runs as follows:

'The Marx party could very easily saddle Blind with the authorship of the pamphlet because and after he had expressed similar views to those contained in it in conversation with Marx and in an article in The Free Press.†e By making use of Blind's assertions and turns of phrase the pamphlet could be fabricated and made to look as if he' (i.e. Blind) 'had concocted it.'

Page Break me41.60
Page me41.60
Altogether the whole intent of this column is to depict me as the fabricator of the said flysheet and, at the same time, to charge me with the infamy of having made it look as though it had been concocted by Blind.
Page me41.60
Before dealing with the evidence provided in the enclosures I sent you yesterday, it would, I think, be pertinent to give you a concise history of this controversy.
Page me41.60
In the course of its lawsuit with Vogt, the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung printed amongst other documents the following letter from me†a:

'October 19, 1859
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, London

'Sir,
'As long as I had a hand in the German Press I attacked the Allgem. Zeitung and the Allgem. Zeitung attacked me. However, this does not of course prevent me from assisting the Allgem. Zeitung, as far as it lies in my power, in a case in which it has in my view fulfilled the primary duty of the press: that of the denunciation of HUMBUGS. The enclosed document would be a legal document here in London. I do not know whether it is the same in Augsburg. I have procured the said document because Blind refused to stand by statements which he had made to me and others, which I passed on to Liebknecht, and which allowed the latter no doubts about the denunciation contained in the anonymous pamphlet.
'Yours very sincerely, Dr K. Marx.'
Page me41.60
The document enclosed in the letter to the Allg. Zeit. and also printed by the latter, runs:

'I hereby declare in the presence of Dr Karl Marx and Wilhelm Liebknecht that the flysheet published anonymously and without indication of the place of printing under the title Zur Warnung, which was reproduced in No. 7 of the Volk, had been
'1. composed and printed in the printshop of Fidelio Hollinger, 3 Litchfield Street, Soho, I myself composing part of the manuscript and F. Hollinger the other part; 2. that it was written in Karl Blind's hand, which was known to me from Karl Blind's manuscripts for the Hermann, and from anonymous flysheets written by Karl Blind, ostensibly printed at "Frankfurt am Main", but in fact composed and printed at F. Hollinger's, 3 Litchfield Street, Soho; 3. that Fidelio Hollinger in person told me Karl Blind was the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung, directed against Prof. Vogt. August Vögele, Compositor. The authenticity of the above signature is attested by W. Liebknecht, Dr. K. Marx. London, 17 September 1859.'†b

Page Break me41.61
Page me41.61
(See Vogt's piece, 'Mein Prozess gegen die "Alg. Zeitung"; Documents, pp. 30, 31.)
Page me41.61
In reply, the following letter from Karl Blind, together with the depositions of Hollinger and Wiehe, appeared in No. 313 of the Allgem. Zeitung and in the Kölnische Zeitung:

'London, 23 Townshead Road, St John's Wood, 3 November 1859. In order to refute the allegation that I am the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung, I need do no more than make public the following document. This only in self-defence — not as a vindication of Karl Vogt, whose mode of action I and my friends of the republican party must unconditionally condemn in view of all that we have learned over the past six months. I can testify to the accuracy of the information provided by Mr Julius Fröbel to the effect that offers of money emanating from Vogt did, beyond doubt, arrive here, for the purpose of persuading Germans over here to influence the Press at home in the sense already mooted. Karl Blind.'
Page me41.61
a) 'I hereby declare that the assertion of the compositor Vögele printed in the Allg. Z., No. 300, to the effect that the pamphlet Zur Warnung mentioned there was printed in my printshop or that Herr Karl Blind was its author, is a malicious fabrication. Fidelio Hollinger. 3 Litchfield Street, Soho, London, November 2, 1859.'
Page me41.61
b) 'The undersigned, who has lived and worked in No. 3 Litchfield Street for the past 11 months, for his part testifies to the correctness of Herr Hollinger's statement. London, November 2, 1859. J.F. Wiehe, Compositor.'

Page me41.61
(Cf. Vogt's book, Documents, pp. 37 and 38.)†a
Page me41.61
To this I replied in No. 325 of the Allg. Zeit.,†b the relevant cutting from the A. A.Z. having been sent you in my first letter from London.†c

Page me41.61

Karl Blind, for his part, published a further rejoinder in the supplement to the Allg. Zeit. of 11 December, in which the editors declare:

'The following is the substance of Mr Karl Blind's statement: Having repeatedly based my testimony on the documents signed by Herr Hollinger, the printer, and Herr Wiehe, compositor, I declare here for the last time that the allegation (which is latterly put forward merely as an insinuation) that I am the author of the pamphlet frequently referred to is a downright untruth. The more recent statements about me contain distortions of the crudest sort. Let me repeat: I say this merely in self-defence against the Marx-Biscamp-Liebknecht camp, and not as a vindication of Vogt, my opposition to whom I have already voiced.'

Page me41.61

The editors of the Allgem. Zeit. commented on this statement as follows:

'Since the further elucidation in these pages of the above circumstances, or the controversy over them, has long ceased to be of any interest to the public at large, we would request the gentlemen concerned to desist from any further exchanges.'†d

Page Break me41.62

Page me41.62

(Cf. Vogt's book, Documents, pp. 41, 42.)

Page me41.62

Thus, the files were closed for the time being. No sooner had I got hold of the articles in the National-Zeitung containing the excerpt from Vogt's pamphlet and the commentary thereon, than I brought out the English circular (enclosure III), addressed to the Editor of the London Free Press.†a The aim was to impel K. Blind to bring an action for injuria against me, thus affording me the opportunity, first of providing legal proof in London as to the printing and provenance of the pamphlet Zur Warnung, and secondly of compelling its real author to produce incriminating evidence against Vogt in an English court of law.

Page me41.62

The immediate consequence of this circular (enclosure III), which I sent to Karl Blind as soon as it came off the press, was K. Blind's statement, which appeared in the Allgem. Zeitung of 13 February, in the supplement to No. 44. In this statement, entitled Against Karl Vogt, while reiterating that he was not the 'author' of the anti-Vogt flysheet Zur Warnung, Blind was, nevertheless, forced by my circular to come out with sundry arguments to the effect that Vogt was an agent for Bonapartist propaganda in London. This was the immediate consequence of my first move, namely the publication of the circular (enclosure III).

Page me41.62

In the meantime, I had procured the two affidavits of the compositors Vögele and Wiehe (enclosures I and II). These affidavits proved, firstly that my claim that the flysheet Zur Warnung had been printed in Hollinger's printshop and written in Blind's hand, was true. Secondly, that Hollinger's and Wiehe's depositions, published by Blind both in No. 313 of the Allg. Zeit. and in the Kölnische Zeitung, and again cited by him in the Allg. Zeit.'s supplement of 11 December, were false. Thirdly, that Blind and Hollinger (see enclosure II, the compositor Wiehe's affidavit) entered into a CONSPIRACY in order to obtain false evidence against me and disparage me as a liar and slanderer in the eyes of the public. A CONSPIRACY of this nature is a criminal offence under English law. Only one circumstance has restrained me from prosecuting Hollinger and Blind, and that is consideration for Blind's family.

Page me41.62

I sent copies of the affidavits of the two compositors Vögele and Wiehe (enclosures I and II) to several refugees who consort with Blind, to whom they showed them. The immediate consequence was Dr Schaible's statement in The Daily Telegraph of 15 February 1860, in which Schaible declares himself to be the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung, and accepts responsibility for the imputations against Vogt contained therein. (See enclosure VI.) Hence, if Vogt wishes to prove his innocence, he will have to begin his lawsuit all over again — in London. Schaible's statement to the effect that he is the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung in no way alters the fact that the flysheet was printed in Hollinger's printshop, that Blind caused it to be printed, that it was written in Blind's hand, that the depositions of Hollinger and Wiehe cited by him were false and, finally, that Hollinger and Blind were trying to extricate themselves from the snare and compromise me by giving false evidence.

Page Break me41.63
Page me41.63

I need hardly point out that the two affidavits of Vögele and Wiehe (enclosures I and II) and Dr Schaible's statement in The Daily Telegraph of 15 February (enclosure VI) put you in possession of positive evidence as to the falsity of the National-Zeitung's libel†a adduced by me under Ia) of this letter.
Page me41.63

b) My relations with the 'Allgemeine Zeitung'.
Page me41.63

The two letters from the Editor of the Allgem. Zeitung to me dated 16 October 1859 (enclosures IV and V),†89 and my reply to the same, dated 19 October 1859, quoted above under Ia), represent my entire correspondence with the All. Zeitung. Hence, all this amounted to was my placing at the disposal of the Allgem. Zeit. a written document which could not fail to throw light on the provenance of the flysheet, the publication of which had led to Vogt's prosecution of the Allgem. Zeit.
Page me41.63

On 9 May 1859, on the occasion of a public meeting held by David Urquhart, K. Blind informed me of all those allegations against Vogt which were later repeated in Zur Warnung, although that pamphlet did not appear until the following June. He assured me that he was in possession of the evidence. I did not attach much importance to this information, as I had already been convinced by Vogt's pamphlet entitled Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas, as well as by his association with Fazy, the 'tyrant of Geneva', and Fazy's association with L[ouis] Bonaparte, that Vogt was a Bonapartist agent. It was all the same to me, whether it was with good or evil intent, whether paid or unpaid. Two or three days after Blind had told me this, Mr Biscamp, with whom I had never been connected in any way, either personally or politically, was brought to my house by Liebknecht. Biscamp suggested that my friends and I might care to support Das Volk, the paper he had founded, by making financial and literary contributions to it. Initially, I rejected his proposition, firstly because my time was in fact very much taken up, and secondly because I needed to learn more about Das Volk, of which there had so far been only one issue, before I could invite my friends to contribute to it. In this connection, I stressed that I had so far eschewed on principle any kind of participation in German newspapers published in London. During this talk I repeated to Liebknecht, in the presence of Biscamp, what Blind had told me at Urquhart's meeting. At the same time, I also mentioned the tendency of South Germans to exaggerate out of an inflated sense of their own importance. Subsequently, in No. 2 of the Volk of 14 May, under the heading 'Der Reichsregent als Reichsverräter', Mr Biscamp published, on his own responsibility and with his own interpolations, an article that is quoted in Vogt's piece, Mein Prozess, etc., Documents, pp. 17, 18, 19.†102

Page Break me41.64
Page me41.64

Later, about the middle of June, at a time when I was away from London and staying in Manchester,†103 Liebknecht received from Hollinger, in the latter's printshop, the proofsheet of the flysheet Zur Warnung, which he instantly [recognised] as being a reproduction of the information transmitted to me verbally by Blind, and the manuscript of which, as he learnt from the compositor Vögele, Blind had entrusted to Hollinger for printing. Liebknecht sent this proofsheet to the All. Zeit., which published it, thus laying itself open to Vogt's libel action. Liebknecht was all the more justified in taking this step (about which I knew nothing, since I was not then in London) because he knew that Blind, Vogt's accuser, had been personally invited by Vogt to collaborate in the proposed work of propaganda. Vis-á-vis someone who took it upon himself to pay a premium for all articles in the German press favourable to Bonaparte's plans (see Vogt's admission to that effect in his book,†a letter to Dr Loening, Documents, p. 36), duty demanded that such widely read newspapers as the Allgem. Zeit. be utilised as 'a warning'.
Page me41.64

As soon as Vogt brought his libel action against the A. A.Z. for reproducing the flysheet Zur Warnung, the Editor of the Allg. Zeit. wrote to Liebknecht urgently requesting that he produce proof. Liebknecht appealed to me. I referred him to Blind and, on his request, went with him to see the latter, as you will perceive from

Page Break me41.65
Blind's letter (enclosure VII). We failed to find Blind, who was at the seaside resort of St Leonards. Liebknecht wrote to him twice. His letters remained unanswered for weeks until, perhaps, Blind thought that the Augsburg lawsuit was nearing its end. (His calculations were thrown out by the fact that the Allg. Zeit. had meanwhile succeeded in getting the case adjourned.) Eventually, Blind replied to Liebknecht in a letter dated 8 September (enclosure VII), in which he says with the most barefaced effrontery that, 'as already remarked', he had had 'no share whatever in the said affair', and that he might, 'on some future occasion, be willing to discuss verbally ... the observations made in the course of private conversation'. Liebknecht brought this letter to me.

Page me41.65

I now perceived that, if Blind's tongue was to be loosened, forceful measures were needed. I recalled having read in the London Free Press of 27 May an anonymous article ('The Grand Duke Constantine to be King of Hungary')†a which contained the substance of the flysheet Zur Warnung and of Blind's verbal communications to me. The style and content of the article never for a moment left me in doubt that Blind was the author of it. To make quite sure, I went with Liebknecht to see Mr Collet, the responsible editor of The Free Press. After some prevarication, he declared Blind to be the author of the article in question. Shortly afterwards, I obtained the written statement of the compositor Vögele to the effect that the flysheet had been composed in Hollinger's printshop and that the manuscript was written in Blind's hand.
Page me41.65

Liebknecht now wrote another, even longer letter to Blind, in which he notified him that we now had proof of his connection with the flysheet Zur Warnung, drew his attention, in particular, to the article in The Free Press, and once more requested him to provide such information as might be available to him. K. Blind did not answer, nor indeed did he once break his silence either before or during the legal proceedings in Augsburg. There could thus no longer be any doubt that K. Blind was firmly determined to adhere to a policy of denial and diplomatic impassivity. In these circumstances, I told Liebknecht that I was prepared, should the Allg. Zeit. ask me to do so in writing, to send it Vögele's statement which I had in my possession. And this is in fact what I did, after receipt of the Allg. Zeit.'s two letters of 16 October, in my reply of 19 October.

Page Break me41.66
Page me41.66

The reasons which impelled me to take this step were as follows:

Firstly: I owed it to Liebknecht, who had first heard from myself about Blind's remarks concerning Vogt, to provide proof that he was not merely repeating random allegations against third parties.
Page me41.66

Secondly: The Allg. Zeitung was, in my view, wholly justified in reprinting the pamphlet Zur Warnung, knowing as it did that its source was one whom Mr Vogt had personally invited to collaborate in his work of propaganda. The circumstance that the Allg. Zeit. belongs to a party hostile to myself and has always treated me personally in a hostile manner, even to the extent of repeatedly publishing the most fatuous gossip about me, in no way alters that view, no more than does the circumstance that, since I, accidentally, do not come within the jurisdiction of the Augsburg Court of Justice, I cannot be subpoenaed as a witness by the Allgem. Zeit.
Page me41.66

Thirdly: In the Biel 'Handels-Courier', No. 150 of 2 June, supplement (cf. p. 31 of the Documents in Vogt's book), Vogt had published a lampoon against me,†a obviously on the assumption that I was the author of the anti-Vogt article which Biscamp had published in the Volk on 14 May.†b Similarly, when he took action against the Allg.

Zeit., it was on the assumption that I was the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung. Blind was evidently determined to perpetuate this quiproquo,†c which suited Vogt so well.
Page me41.66

Fourthly: and, so far as I was concerned, this was the chief factor. I wished to bring about a direct encounter between Vogt and his accusers, and on ground, moreover, such as would ensure a conclusive issue to the affair and leave no loopholes for either party. To achieve this, it was essential that I force both the real author and the publisher of the flysheet Zur Warnung to come out of their hiding places. That I had reckoned correctly is shown by Dr Schaible's statement†d (enclosure VI) and Blind's letter to the Allg. Zeit. of 13 February, Supplement to No. 44, already cited.
Page me41.66

My correspondence with the Allg. Zeit. is confined to the two letters (enclosures IV and V) from Dr Orges,†89 and my reply of 19 October, cited above (under Ia). This sufficed for Mr Vogt (and the National-Zeitung) to dub me a contributor to the Allg. Zeit. and to present himself to the German public as the innocent victim of a conspiracy between the reactionaries and the extreme Left.

Page Break me41.67
Page me41.67

Liebknecht has been a correspondent of the Allg. Zeit. since 1855, just as Mr Vogt himself was once its correspondent. Liebknecht will, if necessary, testify on oath to the truth, namely that I never made use of him to smuggle so much as a single line into the Allg. Zeit. His connection with the Allg. Zeit. neither has nor has had anything whatever to do with me. Besides, his articles are confined exclusively to English politics, and the views he upholds in the Allg. Zeit. are the same as those he has upheld and upholds in radical German-American papers. There is not a line in any of his articles which does not contain his views and which he could not, therefore, uphold anywhere. As regards England's foreign policy, Liebknecht subscribes to much the same anti-Palmerston views as Bucher in the Berlin National-Zeitung. As regards England's internal policy, he has always supported the most progressive English party. He has never written a line in the Allg. Zeit. about the tittle-tattle of the London refugees.
Page me41.67

So much for my alleged relations with the Allgem. Zeitung.
Page me41.67

II. In No. 41 of the National-Zeitung, the leader, 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', p. 1, column 2, line 45 from the top et seq., runs:

'In May last year, a newspaper, Das Volk, was founded in London by the same Biscamp mentioned a short while since.... Where the money for this generously distributed paper came from, is known to the gods; men, however, are well aware that Marx and Biscamp have no money to spare.'

Page me41.67

Taken in conjunction with the whole of the article in No. 31, and likewise the leader in No. 37 of the National-Zeitung, where I am depicted as the 'confederate of the secret police in France and Germany', and especially with reference to the passage I shall presently cite under III, the lines I have just quoted imply that the money for Das Volk was procured by me dishonestly.

Page me41.67
As to this, I would merely observe that Vogt himself, in his pamphlet discussed by the National-Zeitung, quotes, on [p.] 41 of the 'Documents', which comprise the beginning of his book, the following editorial note in No. 6 of the Volk, dated 11 June:
Page me41.67
'We are pleased to inform our readers that K. Marx, Fr. Engels, Ferd. Freiligrath, W. Wolff, H. Heise, etc. ... are determined to grant their support to Das Volk.'†a

Page Break me41.68
Page me41.68
Thus, up till the middle of June, I had not as yet given any support to the Volk, nor up to that point had I had anything to do with its financial affairs. However, I might perhaps mention in passing that at the time Biscamp earned his living in London as a tutor and, throughout, edited the 'Volk' gratis. Similarly all the contributors, from the time the paper first came out until its collapse, wrote for it gratis. Hence the only production costs that had to be met were those of printing and distribution. These, however, always markedly exceeded the paper's returns. Before I collaborated on the paper, losses were met by public collections among Germans in London. Later, I procured between £20-25 (133 to 166 talers) which were contributed exclusively by Dr Borchardt, general practitioner, Dr Gumpert, ditto, Dr. Heckscher, ditto, Wilhelm Wolff, teacher, Friedrich Engels, a businessman (all resident in Manchester), and myself. Although some of these gentlemen were not at all in sympathy with the political opinions held by myself, Engels and W[ilhelm] Wolff, they all thought it high time to come out against Bonapartist machinations amongst the émigrés (and this was the Volk's principal aim).
Page me41.68
Lastly, the Volk left debts amounting, I think, to £8 (53 talers), for which Biscamp is liable, and in respect of which Hollinger possesses a promissory note of his.
Page me41.68
That is the whole of the Volk's financial history.
Page me41.68
As far as Mr Biscamp is concerned, he has himself declared in the supplement to No. 46 of the 'Allg. Zeit.' of 15 February 1860:

'My entire political association with Mr Marx is confined to the few journalistic contributions he made to the weekly paper I founded, ... the Volk.'

Page me41.68
As regards my own sources of income, all I need say here is that, since 1851, I have been a regular contributor to the New-York Tribune, the foremost English American paper, for which I have written not just articles, but leaders, too. The paper has some 200,000 subscribers and pays accordingly. In addition, I have for several years contributed to the Cyclopaedia Americana published by Mr Dana, one of the editors of the New-York Tribune. I hope to obtain from Mr Dana in New York a letter relating to these circumstances in time for the court proceedings.†a However, should this letter fail to arrive soon enough, I need only refer you to Mr Ferdinand Freiligrath, MANAGER of the General Bank of Switzerland, 2 Royal Exchange Buildings, London, who has for many years been good enough to cash my bills on America.

Page Break me41.69
Page me41.69

The effrontery of Vogt and his ally the National-Zeitung in casting aspersions on me because of my participation in a newspaper which did not pay a penny, is all the greater for the fact that, on p. 226 of his book discussed in the National-Zeitung, this same Vogt openly admits that 'furthermore', too, 'he would obtain the money' required for his purposes 'wherever he could lay hands on it'.
Page me41.69

III. In No. 37 of the National-Zeitung, leader entitled 'Karl Vogt und die “Allgemeine Zeitung”', page 1, column 2, line 22 from top, et seq., the National-Zeitung says — and this passage, which I now quote, I consider to be the most incriminating of all from the point of view of the libel action:

'Vogt reports on p. 136 et seq.: Among the refugees of 1849 the term Brimstone Gang, or the name of the Bristlers, referred to a number of people who, originally scattered throughout Switzerland, France and England, gradually congregated in London, where they revered Herr Marx as their visible leader.... One of the chief occupations-of the Brimstone Gang was to compromise people at home in Germany in such a way that they were forced to pay money so that the gang should keep secret the fact of their being compromised. Not just one, but hundreds of letters were written to people in Germany, threatening to denounce them for complicity in this or that act of revolution unless a certain sum of money had been received at a specified address by a given date.... The “proletarians”' (as whose chief I am portrayed) 'filled the columns of the reactionary press in Germany with their denunciations of those democrats who did not subscribe to their views. They became the confederates of the secret police in Germany and France.'

Page me41.69

As regards this infamous passage, which the National-Zeitung takes over lock, stock and barrel from Mr Vogt, thus ensuring its circulation among its 9,000 subscribers, I would remark:
Page me41.69

Firstly: As I have already mentioned in my first letter to you,†a it will now be incumbent upon the National-Zeitung to produce from amongst these 'hundreds' of threatening letters, one solitary letter or one solitary line of which I or any person known to be connected with me was the author.
Page me41.69

Secondly: I repeat what I have already said in my first letter,†b namely that, since July 1849, I have never written for any German paper except the Neue Oder-Zeitung of Breslau†c (1855), at a time when it was under the editorship of Dr Elsner and Dr Stein. As the issues of the paper will themselves reveal, and as Messers Elsner and Stein will assuredly be willing to testify, I never thought it worth my while to devote so much as a single word to the emigration.

Page Break me41.70
Page me41.70

As for the columns in the 'reactionary press' which I and my friends filled with 'denunciations', it will be incumbent on the National-Zeitung to produce just one such column. On the other hand, it is both true and demonstrable that a large proportion of the German émigrés in London systematically filled German newspapers of all complexions with their hostile gossip about me for years on end. I have never made use of my connections, either with the New-York Tribune, or with the Chartist papers, or with The Free Press, for the purpose of retaliation.

Page me41.70

As for my 'alliance with the secret police in France and Germany', Hörfel, a notorious French police spy, was the chief agent in Paris for Kinkel's émigré association. He in turn was connected with Beckmann, who was both a Prussian police spy and a correspondent of the Kölnische Zeitung. Again, one Engländer, likewise a notorious French police spy, was for a considerable time the Paris correspondent of Ruge's clique. This was how 'the democratic émigrés in London' succeeded in setting up, all unwittingly, of course, an 'alliance with the secret police in France and Germany'.

Page me41.70

Finally Vogt, and with him the National-Zeitung, mentions

'a number of people who, among the refugees of 1849, went by the name of the Brimstone Gang or Bristlers and who originally scattered throughout Switzerland, France and England, gradually congregated in London, where they revered Herr Marx as their visible leader'.

Page me41.70

This passage I regard as of secondary importance. Nevertheless, with a view to elucidating and unmasking the libellous intentions of Vogt and the National-Zeitung, I would make the following observations:

Page me41.70

The Brimstone Gang was the name given to a society of young German refugees who lived in Geneva in 1849/50 and set up their headquarters in the Café de l'Europe in that city. This was neither a political nor a socialist society but, in the true sense of the term, a 'society of young blades' who were seeking to overcome the first pangs of exile by indulging in mad escapades. It consisted of Eduard Rosenblum, medical student; Max Cohnheim, shop assistant; Korn, chemist and pharmacist; Becker,†a engineer, and L.S. Borkheim, student and artilleryman. I had never seen any of these gentlemen save Mr Becker, and him only once, at the Democratic Congress in Cologne in 1848.†104 In mid-1850 all the members of the society except for Korn were expelled from Geneva. The group scattered to the four winds.

Page Break me41.71

Page me41.71

I am obliged to Mr Borkheim, now manager of a big commercial enterprise in the City (44 Mark Lane), for the above notes concerning a society of which I had been hitherto entirely ignorant.†84 I first made Mr Borkheim's acquaintance only about a fortnight since, after I had written to him asking for information.†42

Page me41.71

So much for the Brimstone Gang.

Page me41.71

Now, as regards the Bristlers, this was a term of abuse which one Abt, at present secretary to the Bishop of Freiburg,†a applied to the Workers' Educational Association in Geneva. For Abt had been declared dishonourable by a general refugee society which comprised members (refugees) of the Workers' Educational Association as well as former members of the Frankfurt Parliament. To avenge himself, he wrote a pamphlet, in which he christened the Workers' Educational Association 'Bürstenheimers' [roughly: 'Bristlers'] because the Association's President at the time was a brush maker [Bürstenmacher] by the name of Sauernheimer.†105 There was never any kind of connection between this Workers' Educational Association in Geneva and myself or the communist society in London to which I belonged.†106 In the summer of 1851, two of its members, Schily, a lawyer now in Paris, and P. Imandt, now professor at the training college in Dundee, were expelled by the Swiss authorities and made their way to London where they joined the Workers' Society then headed by Willich and Schapper†107; this, however, they left a few months later. Their relationship to me was that of compatriots and old personal friends. The only person in Geneva with whom I ever had anything to do since my expulsion from Prussia (1849) was Dronke, now a businessman in Liverpool.

Page me41.71

Thus, the names Brimstone Gang and Bristlers, like the two quite distinct societies they denoted, were exclusive to Geneva. There was never any connection between the two societies and myself. They first became known in London through the leaders in the National-Zeitung,†b excerpts from which were reprinted by a London paper, The Daily Telegraph.†c

Page me41.71

Thus, my connection with the 'Brimstone Gang' and the 'Bristlers' is a deliberate fabrication on the part of Vogt, the National-Zeitung having made itself his mouthpiece.

Page Break me41.72

Page me41.72

IV. The National-Zeitung, No. 41, leader 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', page 1, column 1, line 49 from the top, says:

To begin with, Vogt simply alludes to the 'party of the proletarians' 'under Marx'.

Page me41.72

