In this way I am identified with the 'party of the proletarians' and hence everything the paper says about that party also applies to myself personally.

Page me41.72

Now, further on in the same article, column 2, line 19 from the top et seq., we read:

'In this way a conspiracy of the most infamous sort was devised in 1852, which aimed at damaging the Swiss workers' associations by manufacturing counterfeit paper money on a massive scale. (See Vogt for further details.) This conspiracy would have caused the greatest difficulties for the Swiss authorities if it had not been uncovered in time.'

Page me41.72

And, further on in the same column, line 33 from top:

'The party of the “proletarians” nourishes a particular hatred for Switzerland', etc.

Page me41.72

The National-Zeitung must have known from the Cologne communist trial of October 1852†2 (just as Vogt knew from my Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial) that I never had anything to do with Cherval, who is said to have been responsible for the machinations in Switzerland in 1852 (Mr Schapper of 5 Percy Street, Bedford Square, London, with whom Cherval had connections before the Cologne trial, is prepared to provide all the necessary information on the subject); that during the communist trial in Cologne I denounced Cherval, through the medium of counsel, as an ally of Stieber's; that, according to the depositions wrested from Stieber, when Cherval was in Paris in 1851, hatching the complot franco-allemand under Stieber's direction,†108 he [Cherval] belonged to a society hostile to myself. The National-Zeitung knew from Vogt's book, which it made the subject of two leading articles, that, after the Cologne trial was over, I had also denounced Cherval as a mouchard†a in the work, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, which I sent to Switzerland for printing. During the Cologne trial, when Cherval arrived in London, ostensibly after escaping from prison in Paris, but in fact as a mouchard, [he] was welcomed with open arms by the Workers' Society, then run by Willich and Schapper, only to be expelled in consequence of the cross-examination to which, at my instigation, counsel (notably Schneider II) subjected Stieber re Cherval during the proceedings in Cologne.

Page Break me41.73

Page me41.73

Hence it was the most barefaced and deliberate libel on the part of Vogt and his associate, the National-Zeitung, to make me responsible for the alleged activities in Switzerland of an individual notoriously my enemy, whom I had exposed and persecuted. Vogt speaks of Marx's associates in Geneva with whom Cherval consorted. At the present time, as in 1852, I have no connections with anyone whomsoever in Switzerland.

Page me41.73

Let me repeat what I told you in an earlier letter†a: On 15 September 1850 my friends and I disassociated ourselves from one section of the London Central Authority of the then extant German communist society (called 'Communist League'),†63 namely from that section which, under Willich's leadership, took part in the (come to that, highly innocuous and puerile) revolution-and conspiracy-mongering of the 'Democratic Emigration'. We removed the Central Authority to Cologne and entirely suspended all correspondence with any part of the Continent except for Cologne. As the Cologne trial was to show, that correspondence contained nothing of a criminal nature. From the spring of 1851 onwards, immediately after the arrest of individual members of the society in Cologne, we (the London section of the society) broke off every single connection with the Continent. The only man — not personally known to me, by the by — with whom I continued to correspond about ways and means of defending the arrested men, was a friend of theirs, Mr Bermbach, former deputy of the Frankfurt National Assembly. My friends in London met once a week for the purpose of frustrating the police machinations unblushingly resorted to and daily renewed by Stieber. In mid-November (1852), after the conclusion of the Cologne trial, I, with the consensus of my friends, declared the 'Communist League' disbanded, nor, since that time, have I belonged either to a secret or to a public society. Ferdinand Freiligrath, who belonged to the communist society, was in Cologne from the autumn of 1848 until the spring of 1851, and has lived in London from the spring of 1851 until the present, can testify to the absolute truth of the foregoing account. For that matter, sufficient proof is provided by the enclosed letter of 19 November 1852, postmarked London and Manchester, which my friend F. Engels has discovered amongst his old papers.†b

Page Break me41.74
Page me41.74

I arranged for the enclosed pamphlet,†a quoted by Vogt and the National-Zeitung, to be printed in Boston (in America) after the original edition of 2,000 copies published by Schabelitz in Basle had been confiscated on the Baden border. From this, no less than from the Stieber-Eichhoff case,†44 when it eventually comes up in Berlin, you will see that the communist society, to which I belonged until mid-November 1852, committed no offence whatsoever on which to base an indictment; also that, on the other hand, in spite of the very restricted means at our disposal, my London friends and I so effectively demolished the web of intrigue spun by the police that in the end they actually proposed to secure the prisoners' conviction — as Hirsch, once Stieber's agent and now in gaol in Hamburg, relates in his confessions in the New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung of 22 April 1853†b — by getting Hirsch to travel to Cologne under the name of Haupt, and perjure himself in the name of the Haupt he was impersonating. This coup was on the point of being perpetrated when, Hirsch says, Mr von Hinckeldey wrote saying that,

'The State Prosecutor hopes that thanks to the happy constitution of the jury it will be possible to get a verdict of guilty even without extraordinary measures, and he' (Hinckeldey) 'therefore asks you not to trouble yourselves further.'

Page me41.74

It goes without saying that the only value the enclosed pamphlet would have in a court of law would lie in the light it throws on my struggle with Stieber, Hinckeldey and the then Prussian police system. The societies therein alluded to have belonged to the realm of history for years now.
Page me41.74

V. Finally, in order to leave you in no doubt as to the significance to me of the libel suit against the National-Zeitung, I will allude very briefly to the repercussions here in London of the leaders in the National-Zeitung.
Page me41.74
The Daily Telegraph (a newspaper appearing in London) of 6 February 1860 published an article of two and a half columns under the heading The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria.
Page me41.74
This article, dated Frankfurt am Main, but in fact written in Berlin, is, as the most fleeting comparison will reveal, a mere paraphrase if not, in part, a word for word translation of the two leaders in Nos. 37 and 41 of the Nat. Zeit. on account of which I am suing it. I shall be sending you the said issue of the Daily

Page Break me41.75
Telegraph within the next few days. In this Telegraph article, as in the National-Zeitung, firstly, my friends and I are portrayed as 'confederates of the secret police'; and, secondly, there is a word for word translation of the whole of the passage from the National-Zeitung, to which I refer under IV, concerning the Brimstone Gang, the blackmailing letters, my complicity in Cherval's money forgery in Switzerland, etc.
Page me41.75
No sooner had this article appeared than I at once wrote to the editor of the Daily Telegraph, demanding an amende honorable, in default of which I would bring an ACTION FOR LIBEL against him.†a He replied, saying that he had sent my letter to his correspondent in Germany and would await the latter's reply. That reply was published in the Daily Telegraph of 13 February 1860. The following is a literal translation (I shall let you have the original in a few days' time):

'Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Feb. 8. I shall not be long in disposing of the remarks addressed to you by Dr Marx in reply to a communication of mine. The letter addressed to you by him has been simply misdirected. If the learned gentleman had offered his observations to Dr Vogt himself, or to one of the hundred German editors who quoted the book of Dr Vogt, his behaviour would only have been what the case seems to demand. As it is, however, Dr Marx, leaving unrefuted the numerous accusations raised against him in his own country, prefers cooling his anger by attacking the only English paper that has received into its columns a statement printed and reprinted before in almost every German city of any magnitude. The learned gentleman seems to be utterly oblivious of the fact that he has not the slightest right to complain of the publication of a certain piece of unpleasant intelligence by an English paper, so long as he does not deem it convenient to call to account the originators and propagators of the mischief in his fatherland. I conclude these lines by declaring my readiness to acknowledge the untruthfulness of the statements put forth in the communication alluded to the moment Dr Marx will have satisfied the world of their falsity. If he is in possession of the evidence required for such a purpose, nothing would be easier for him than to accomplish so desirable an object. There are at least fifty German cities at his disposal where he will have to institute lawsuits, and bring the editors to condign punishment. Unless he chooses to pursue this course, it is not the duty of the correspondent of an English paper to retract what he did not assert, but merely repeated on the uncontradicted authority of the most respectable sources.'

Page me41.75

Merely en passant I would draw attention to the exaggerations with which the Daily Telegraph's Berlin correspondent (a Jew by the name of Meier,†70 I believe) endeavours to cloak his plagiarisms from the National-Zeitung. First there are a hundred German editors, then many thousands (in other words, as many editors as there are towns of any importance in Germany) and, finally, at least fifty editors whom I would have to sue. Incidentally, by the most respectable sources, he means his only source, the Berlin National-Zeitung.

Page Break me41.76

Page me41.76

Again merely in passing, I should mention that in my letter of 6 February to the Editor of the Daily Telegraph, a letter which, as he wrote and told me himself, he forwarded to his German correspondent, I had disclosed to the Editor of the Telegraph, and hence also to his correspondent, that I intended to bring a libel action against the Berlin 'National-Zeitung'.

Page me41.76

What seems to me the one point of crucial importance here is that the Daily Telegraph, skulking behind its correspondent, is refusing me any kind of satisfaction until I have taken action against a German paper. It invokes the 'respectable' authority of the National-Zeitung, which was alone in printing, in this context, the very assertions made by it.

Page me41.76

You can imagine what a scandal the Telegraph article created in London. For that scandal I have the National-Zeitung to thank. If only for my family's sake, I shall have to bring an ACTION FOR LIBEL against the Telegraph, for which the necessary retaining fees will amount in this country to at least £200 — before the case has been decided. The depths of depravity to which Vogt is capable of descending will have been apparent to you from the dastardly insinuation that I owed my alleged connections with the Neue Preussische Zeitung to the fact of my wife's being the sister of the former Prussian minister, von Westphalen.

Page me41.76

I now await by return of post (unless a letter has been despatched to me previously) notification that you have received the following letters:

Page me41.76

1. Letter from London of 13 February, together with a retaining fee of 15 talers.

Page me41.76

2. Letter from Manchester of 21 February, together with power of attorney and seven enclosures.

Page me41.76

3. This letter from Manchester of 24 February, enclosing the pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne and a letter which I wrote Engels on 19 November 1852, postmarked in London and Manchester.

Page me41.76
I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
Dr Karl Marx

Page me41.76
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.77

33
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LONDON

Page me41.76
[Draft]
Manchester, 27 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Liebknecht,
You should let Schapper have a look at Vogt's book.†a Go and see him. He will tell you what I've written to him.†42
Page me41.77
According to the letter from my lawyer in Berlin,†b which arrived yesterday, things are going well. The information I sent him included what was required in respect of yourself. Deal thoroughly with all that part of Vogt's book relating to you, so that I can have it at any time. But stick absolutely rigidly to the FACTS.
Page me41.77
Next, it is essential that the resolution backing me and censuring Vogt, adopted by the Workers' Educational Society on 6 February 1860†c and signed by the Society's chairman,†d should be authenticated immédiatement (i.e. the signature) before the magistrate. So, have a word with Weber†e if necessary.
Page me41.77
Kindest regards to your wife and yourself.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.77
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.78

34
MARX TO KARL SCHAPPER
IN LONDON

Page me41.78
[Draft]
Manchester, 27 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Schapper,

I have written to Liebknecht asking him to let you have a look at Vogt's book,†a so that you can see for yourself how important the Berlin lawsuit against the National-Zeitung (the one against the Telegraph†b is secondary) is to the historical vindication of our party and its subsequent position in Germany. Yesterday I had a letter from my lawyer in Berlin†c from which I gather that Mr Zabel of the National-Zeitung will probably atone for his pro-Vogtian zeal by becoming intimately acquainted with the interior of a penal establishment. My lawyer thinks it important that you should make the following affidavit,†109 as soon as possible, or one along similar lines, before a London magistrate (the one in Bow Street is our man; he already knows Liebknecht, who could go with you):
Page me41.78

*'I declare herewith, that, in the year, etc., Cherval (alias Crämer, etc.) was introduced by myself into the London Branch of the German friendly society called “Der Bund” (the Union)†63 (a society, by the by, which has ceased to exist long time since); that in etc. 1848 the said passed through Cologne where he had a short interview with me, which I did not even mention to Dr Karl Marx. Cherval being an individual utterly unknown to Dr K.M.; that in 1851/52 during his stay at Paris, Cherval belonged to, and corresponded with that branch of the German friendly society called “Der Bund” which at the time was directed by myself and Mr Willich, now living at Cincinnati, U. St.; that, during the autumn of 1852, after his return from Paris to London, Cherval entered the public German Working-men's Society, called “Der Arbeiterbildungsverein”, of which he had formerly been a member and which, at the time, was directed by myself and the above said Mr Willich; that consequent upon the revelations publicly made at Cologne against Cherval during the trial of

Page Break me41.79
Dr Becker†a and others, and upon other information derived from other sources, the said Cherval was publicly expulsed from the German Workmen Club above named, and, soon after, disappeared from London.'*
Page me41.79

Engels sends you his kindest regards; he will, by the by, be coming down to London himself sometime in the spring. I beg you to lose no time.
Page me41.79
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.79
In the affidavit mention is made of a 'FRIENDLY SOCIETY', this being the sort of thing that doesn't sound at all suspect to an English magistrate; besides, you can interpret FRIENDLY SOCIETY in any way you wish.

Page me41.79
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

35 MARX TO MUZEMBINI
IN LONDON

Page me41.79
[Draft]
Manchester, 27 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road†b

My dear Muzembini,
Mr Faucher, I suppose, will have told you that I am just now busied with two actions for libel, the one being carried on at Berlin against the National-Zeitung, the other at London against the Daily Telegraph, both relating to Vogt, the Bonapartist agent's pamphlet against myself.†c
Page me41.79
In regard to the latter it is of the highest importance for me to be exactly informed of the relations of General Klapka with the

Page Break me41.80
General Bank of Switzerland and the Ottoman bank, of the mutual relations of these two banks, of the relations of the Ottoman bank with Musurus, and of the latter's relations with Russia. You will highly oblige me by giving me the information wanted, and by directing it to my present address.
Page me41.80
With my best compliments to Mrs Muzembini

Yours truly,
K. Marx

Page me41.80
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

36
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON

Page me41.80
Manchester, 29 February 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Freiligrath,

Your letter really warmed my heart, for there are very few people with whom I strike up a friendship, but when I do I adhere to it. My friends of 1844 continue to be my friends today. As to the strictly official part of your letter, however, this is based on some grave misapprehensions, hence the following by way of clarification:
Page me41.80
1. The Eichhoff-Stieber case†44
Page me41.80
The 'material' which I passed on to Juch (on which occasion I also pointed out to him that there were two reasons why he and Eichhoff did not deserve my support: firstly, the way in which they had referred to the Cologne trial†2 in the Hermann†a; secondly, my conviction that Eichhoff is simply a tool of the ex-police official Duncker, who is seeking to avenge himself on Stieber as Vidocq once did on Gisquet in Paris; nevertheless, I would, I said, do all in my power to help overthrow Stieber and bring him to book, if only to avenge the death of my friend, Dr Daniels), this 'material', I say, amounts to the following:

Page Break me41.81
Page me41.81
I gave Juch a copy of the Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne; N.B. this publication of mine, which was printed first in Switzerland and later in Boston, was cited by Vogt as a well-known book, and was in no sense 'something secret'.
Page me41.81
I told Juch that it contained all I knew.
Page me41.81

Finally, I pointed out to him that Lewald (Eichhoff's defence counsel) must examine Hirsch, who was in jail in Hamburg, as a witness. This was done. Hirsch has now admitted on oath that the 'minute-book' was a Prussian fabrication and an indictable offence in every other respect.

Page me41.81

Hence the 'revelations' produced by the trial, thanks to my 'material', exonerate the former members of the League†63 from any semblance of legal culpa†a and 'expose' the Prussian police system, which, once installed as a result of the 'Cologne trial' and the infamous pusillanimity of the Cologne jury, grew to be such a power in Prussia that it has finally become intolerable to the bourgeois themselves and even to Auerswald's ministry. Voilá tout.†b

Page me41.81

Besides, I'm astonished that you could even imagine that I might hand the police anything on a platter. I would remind you of letters sent from Cologne (1849-50),†110 which you knew about and in which I was reproached in so many words with having dragged my feet too much (at the time, I did so for very good reasons, certainly not out of concern for myself) in regard to agitation by the League.

Page me41.81

2. My lawsuit against the 'National-Zeitung'

Page me41.81

I would point out d'abord†c that, after the 'League' had been disbanded at my behest in November 1852, I never belonged to any society again, whether secret or public; that the party, therefore, in this wholly ephemeral sense, ceased to exist for me 8 years ago. The lectures on political economy I gave, after the appearance of my book†d (in the autumn of 1859), to a few picked working men, amongst whom were also former members of the League, had nothing in common with an exclusive society — less even than, say, Mr Gerstenberg's lectures to the Schiller Committee.†75

Page me41.81

You will recall that the leaders of the fairly ramified Communist Club in New York†111 (among them Albrecht Komp, MANAGER of the General Bank, 44 Exchange Place, New York) sent me a letter, which passed through your hands, and in which it was tentatively suggested that I should reorganise the old League. A whole year passed before I replied,†112 and then it was to the effect that since 1852 I had not been associated with any association and was firmly convinced that my theoretical studies were of greater use to the working class than my meddling with associations which had now had their day on the Continent. Because of this 'inactivity' I was thereupon repeatedly and bitterly attacked, if not by name at least by inference, in Mr Scherzer's London Neue Zeit.

Page Break me41.82

Page me41.82

When Mr Levy came over from Düsseldorf (for the first time), on which occasion he frequently called on you, too, he actually proffered me a factory operatives' insurrection, no less, in Iserlohn, Solingen, etc. I told him bluntly that I was against such futile and dangerous folly. I further informed him that I no longer belonged to any 'league'; nor, in view of the danger presented to the people in Germany [by] such a connection, could I have anything to do with it, no matter what the circumstances. Levy returned to Düsseldorf, and as I was shortly afterwards informed by letter, spoke very highly of you while denouncing my 'doctrinaire' indifference.†113

Page me41.82
Since 1852, then, I have known nothing of 'party' in the sense implied in your letter. Whereas you are a poet, I am a critic and for me the experiences of 1849-52 were quite enough. The 'League', like the société des saisons in Paris†114 and a hundred other societies, was simply an episode in the history of a party that is everywhere springing up naturally out of the soil of modern society.
Page me41.82
There are two things I have to prove in Berlin (I mean with regard to this hoary and outdated business of the League):
Page me41.82
First, that since 1852 no such society has existed of which I have been a member, next, that in as much as he slings Telleringian mud, and worse, at the communist society that existed up till November 1852, Mr Vogt is a scoundrelly and infamous slanderer.
Page me41.82
Page me41.82
As to the latter point, you, of course, are a witness and your letter to Ruge (summer of 1851) proves that, during the period with which we are solely concerned here, you regarded attacks of this kind as being directed against yourself, too.
Page me41.82
You were a co-signatory to the statements in the Morning Advertiser, the Spectator, the Examiner, the Leader, and the People's Paper.†a One copy of these is on the court files in Cologne.
Page me41.82
Nor did you raise the least objection when I reverted to this matter in my Revelations (p. 47) (Boston edition).†b

Page Break me41.83
Page me41.83
Again, your name appears — as treasurer — in the appeal we published requesting contributions for the convicted men.†115
Page me41.83
But there's hardly any need to go into all this again.
Page me41.83
What is imperative, however, is that my lawyer in Berlin†a should be sent the following letter from me to Engels, this being a legal document by virtue of the fact that it was sent without an envelope and bears both London and Manchester postmarks.

Page me41.83
'London, 19 November 1852
28 Dean Street, Soho
'Dear Engels,

'Last Wednesday,†b at my suggestion, the League disbanded; similarly the continued existence of the League on the Continent was declared to be no longer expedient. In any case, since the arrest of Bürgers-Röser, it had to all intents and purposes already ceased to exist there. Enclosed a statement for the English papers,†c etc. In addition I am writing, for the Lithographierte Korrespondenz, an article' (instead, I wrote the pamphlet published by Schabelitz†d) 'on the dirty tricks played by the police, etc., and also an appeal to America for money for the prisoners and their families. Treasurer Freiligrath. Signed by all our people.' (The few remaining lines are irrelevant.)
'Your K.M.'.†e

Page me41.83

In the case of such a document I cannot, of course, delete any names. This is the only document in which, with a view to substantiating a fact, namely the disbandment of the League, I make use of your name, in as much as it happens to occur in a letter written by me in 1852. I cannot see how that would compromise you.

Page me41.83

I should like to use one letter of yours, written in 1851, for the pamphlet which is to appear after the hearing.†f Nothing in the least compromising about it, legally speaking. But since this will take many weeks, I shall arrange matters with you by word of mouth.

Page Break me41.84

Page me41.84

From the above it follows that:

The 'meetings, resolutions and transactions of the party' since 1852 belong to the realm of fantasy, as you might have known in any case without my telling you and, judging by a great many of your letters to me, evidently did know.

Page me41.84

The only activity in which I persisted after 1852, for as long as it continued necessary — i.e. until the end of 1853 — in company with a few kindred spirits on the other side of the Atlantic, was of the kind described by Mr Ludwig Simon in 1851 in the Tribune as a 'SYSTEM OF MOCKERY AND CONTEMPT,†116 and was directed against the emigration's democratic humbug and revolution-mongering. Your anti-Kinkel poem,†a no less than your correspondence with me during that time, prove that you and I were entirely d'accord.

Page me41.84

However, this has nothing to do with the lawsuits.

Page me41.84

Tellering, Bangya, Fleury, etc., never belonged to the 'League. That dirt is thrown up by storms, that no revolutionary period smells of attar of roses, that even, at times, one becomes a target for all manner of garbage, goes without saying. Aut, aut.†b However, when one considers the tremendous efforts made to combat us by the whole of the official world, who did not so much skim as wade through the depths of the Code pénal in order to ruin us; when one considers the slanderous attacks of the 'democracy of folly' which could never forgive our party for having more brains and character than itself; when one knows the parallel history of all the other parties; when one finally asks oneself what can actually be held (other than, say, the infamies refutable in court, of a Vogt or a Tellering) against the party as a whole, one can only conclude that what distinguishes it in this, the nineteenth century, is its purity.

Page me41.84

Can one escape the filth in bourgeois intercourse or TRADE? But in the latter, the filth has its natural habitat. Example: Sir R. Carden, vide the Parliamentary Blue Book on corrupt election practices.†c Example: Mr Klapka, concerning whose personal details I am now very well informed. Kl. is not one whit better, and possibly worse, than Bangya whom, by the by, he and Kossuth have been sheltering to this day in Constantinople, despite his heroic deeds in Circassia and despite my public denunciation,†d simply because he knew too much about them. As a person Bangya was more decorous than Kl. He kept a mistress; for years Klapka allowed a mistress to keep him, etc. The filth of a Tellering may well be counterbalanced by the purity of a Beta, and even the dissoluteness of a Reiff finds its equivalent in the chastity of a Paula†a who, at any rate, was not a member of the party, nor made any pretence so to be.

Page Break me41.85
Page me41.85

The honourable meanness or mean honourableness of solvent (and this subject only to highly ambiguous provisos, as every trade crisis goes to show) morality is to my mind not one whit superior to disrespectable meanness, from the taint of which neither the first Christian communities, nor the Jacobin Club, nor our erstwhile 'League' could remain entirely free. But bourgeois intercourse accustoms one to the loss of one's sense of respectable meanness or mean respectability.
Page me41.85

3. The special matter of Vogt and Blind.
Page me41.85

Following the affidavits made by Vögele†78 and Wiehe†b (as everyone knows, a false affidavit entails transportation) and following the statements extracted in consequence thereof — from Blind in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†c and from Dr Schaible (Daily Telegraph of 15 February)†d — the affair has resolved itself to the extent that your testimony relating to this point has now been rendered quite superfluous. As regards the Blind case, my only problem is an embarras de richesses.
Page me41.85

In this matter I approached Ernest Jones, with whom I had not consorted for two years on account of his foolish, but now publicly disavowed, attitude to Bright, Gilpin, etc.†117 I approached him firstly because he, like many others, some of them quite unknown to me, let me know spontaneously, immediately after the Telegraph of 6 February had appeared, how profoundly indignant he was at the infamous conduct of Vogt, who had had the effrontery to assert that the Communist League had been founded and, from 1849 to 1852, had operated, with one end in view, namely to extort money from compromised people in Germany by threatening to denounce them; who traced back my 'connection' with the Neue Preussische Zeitung to my 'relationship by marriage' to von Westphalen, etc. (For my wife's sake I was glad of this demonstration, since one can hardly expect ladies to grow a political thick skin; moreover, it is precisely by catastrophes that they are accustomed to gauge whether a friendship is in earnest or in jest); secondly, because I was deterred by consideration, not for Blind, but for his wife and children, from discussing his case, most invidious from a legal point of view, with a true-blue English lawyer. It was this same consideration that deterred me from sending the English circular†a to the Morning Advertiser or to any English daily other than the Telegraph.

Page Break me41.86

Page me41.86

What Jones told me was this:

'You can go — and I myself will go with you — to the magistrate and at once take out a WARRANT for Blind's arrest for CONSPIRACY on the strength of Wiehe's affidavit. But bear in mind that this is a criminal ACTION and that, once it has been reported, you will have no power to withdraw it.'
Page me41.86

I then asked Jones (who can tell you this all over again; he lives at 5 Cambridge Place, Kensington, W.) whether it wasn't possible for him to warn Blind and thus induce him to make a statement that would include, not only everything he knew about Vogt, but also an admission of the falsity of the depositions adduced by him in the A. A.Z.†b
Page me41.86

Jones replied:

'In CONSPIRACY, and hence criminal, CASES, any attempt by the advocate to COMPOUND OR BRING ABOUT A COMPROMISE would itself be punishable under criminal law.'
Page me41.86

Jones will act as my COUNCIL in the Telegraph affair.
Page me41.86

After Jones's pronouncements, I found myself in a most awkward and embarrassing situation, for, on the one hand, I owed it to my family to compel the Telegraph to recant; on the other, I did not wish to take any steps that might be legally injurious to Blind's family. As an expedient I sent to Blind's friend Louis Blanc a copy of both affidavits and a letter, part of which reads (I quote):
Page me41.86

'NOT FOR MR BLIND WHO HAS RICHLY DESERVED IT, BUT FOR HIS FAMILY, I SHOULD REGRET BEING FORCED TO LODGE A CRIMINAL ACTION AGAINST HIM.'
Page me41.86

This last move evoked Schaible's statement (POOR DEAR), just as the printed circular,†a which I had sent to Blind immediately after it came out, had evoked his anti-Vogt statement the self-same day in the A. A.Z.†a Blind may have the hole-and-corner cunning of a man from Baden, but he had forgotten that he was confronting someone who would be ruthless the moment his own honour, or that of his party, was at stake.

Page Break me41.87
Page me41.87

This is how matters stand: The action against The Daily Telegraph has been instituted but my SOLICITOR will delay matters until after the case against the National-Zeitung has been decided. Had Schaible told me frankly what he knew against Vogt (Schaible is Blind's TAME ELEPHANT, of course), it would have been wholly unnecessary for me, after his statement had appeared in the Telegraph of 15 February, to lodge the affidavits in London. In Berlin, where it will have no legal repercusions on Blind, this will, of course, be unavoidable. Whether Schaible was the real (literary) author of the 'flysheet'†b or not does nothing to alter the facts established in the affidavits, namely that the depositions adduced by Blind in the A. A.Z.†c were false, that they were obtained by means of a CONSPIRACY, that the flysheet had been printed in Hollinger's printshop, written in Blind's hand and handed over by him to Hollinger to be printed.

Page me41.87

Distasteful though these matters certainly are, they are not more distasteful than European history as a whole since 1851, with all its achievements in the diplomatic, military and literary fields.

Page me41.87

'For all that and all that',†d the philistine upon me will always be a better device for us than I beneath the philistine.†e

Page me41.87

I have frankly stated my views, with which I trust you are largely in agreement. Moreover, I have tried to dispel the misunderstanding arising out of the impression that by 'party' I meant a 'League' that expired eight years ago, or an editorial board that was disbanded twelve years ago.†f By party, I meant the party in the broad historical sense.

Page me41.87

With sincere assurances of my friendship,

Your
K. Marx

Page me41.87

P.S. I have just had a letter from my wife, and should accordingly be much obliged if you would draw £16 on the Tribune on Saturday (the day after tomorrow) (not on Friday as I am also including the Tuesday article). As usual, the plenipotentiary-general†a will pay you a call.

Page Break me41.88

Page me41.88

First published considerably abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, Stuttgart, 1911-1912, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

37
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN

Page me41.88
Manchester, 3 March 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Dear Lassalle,

I am replying by return, albeit briefly (though, I hope, intelligibly), for I am up to my eyes in work connected with the two lawsuits.

Page me41.88

1. Ad vocem†b: My action against the 'National-Zeitung'.

Page me41.88

You cannot give an opinion on the possible outcome of this action since you don't know, on the one hand, what papers I have in my possession, or, on the other, how totally unfounded Vogt's lies are. But you ought to have favoured the attack from the very outset. The second action is against the Daily Telegraph in London, for having enlarged on and reproduced the articles in the N.-Z.†c The Telegraph is the vilest daily paper in London, which is saying a great deal, but it is assuredly not small. It has the largest circulation of all the London daily papers. Is specially subsidised by Palmerston. This is the reason why it devotes so much space to the mud slung at me.

Page me41.88

I am enclosing my Knight of the Noble Consciousness herewith.

Page me41.88

2. The 'superbe gestus'†d exists only in your imagination.†118 On the other hand, Engels, Wolff and my wife, to whom I showed both your letters, are unanimously agreed that they betray what looks uncommonly like disconcertedness at Vogt's libellous piece†a — always assuming that tres faciunt collegium.†b

Page Break me41.89

Page me41.89

I sent you the note,†c etc., in order to demonstrate to you ad oculos†d how you would flare up when confronted with a piece of infernal rubbish which has neither appeared in print nor approaches the level of Vogt's infamies.

Page me41.89

Vogt has charged me with punishable FACTS. In your letters I could find no trace of indignation at this worthy citizen to whom, for good measure, I am expected to make a public amende honorable. Had Vogt known of your relations with me and been in possession of Wiss's note, he would have published it as an authentic document relating to the history of the 'Brimstone Gang'.†65 To suggest that (other than in a letter to you†e) I had alluded anywhere — and in public — to Blind's anti-Vogt stuff, is a flippant allegation on your part. That V. is a Bonapartist agent has become perfectly clear to me from his book.†f When Willich (Techow merely wrote†56 what Willich had prompted him to in 1850) slung mud of a similar kind at me in the United States in 1853,†g Weydemeyer, Dr Jacobi and Cluss came out spontaneously, even before I myself could have been notified of it, with a public statement to the effect that the whole thing was an infamous piece of slander.†h None of my friends in Germany had uttered a word of protest against this extravagant attack; instead they wrote admonishing me in patriarchal tones.

Page me41.89

Hence it was wholly pertinent to use the note, etc., for the purpose of putting you in my position, or rather of instilling in you a correct, if somewhat less dispassionate and doctrinaire, view of the same.

Page me41.89

What I sent you was not a copy of Dr Wiss's letter but the original (i.e. the copy sent me from America). Dronke knows nothing about the note.

Page me41.89

There's no question of a dossier.†119 In a private letter to the recipient of Wiss's letter,†a I referred to you as one of the most competent people in our party and an intimate friend of myself and Engels.†120 Evidently the recipient, whom I may not name without asking him first, showed Wiss the letter, or at any rate told him what was in it. Hinc Wiss's lacrimae.†b I have no connection with Wiss and never have had. Earlier on, he had offered his services to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung and submitted an article which I threw into the waste paper basket unacknowledged. He has published half a dozen idiotic articles against me†c in New York (in Weitling's Republik der Arbeiter).

Page Break me41.90

Page me41.90

I used the word 'official' allegations†d simply by way of contrast to Wiss's 'confidential' letter. I can see now — I was writing in haste — how very comical it was.

Page me41.90

Who the Düsseldorf people†e were I cannot say without committing a breach of confidence. Suffice it to observe, however, that I did not get in contact with them. As for the ingratitude of the workers towards you, that's a mere bagatelle compared with what I have had to put up with. However it isn't Levy, either as a person or collectively. Becker,†f Bermbach, Erhard, Uhlendorff (the last name unknown to me) have never written me a single line either against you or about you.†121

Page me41.90

I did not 'ally myself' with Becker. The League's Central Authority had been transferred to Cologne.†122 It was there that the final decisions had to be taken. (This 'League', like everything connected with it, has long been a thing of the past. With two or three exceptions, its documents are in America.) Becker was enrolled there. Thus, he established liaison with me.

Page me41.90

If you will now compare the aforementioned FACTS with your interpretation of the same, your particular aptitude for 'mistrust' will become plain to you.

Page me41.90

As to my mistrust, I know (and you would oblige me by quoting other instances) that, during my eighteen years of public activities, there have been only two instances when this mental disorder might, with some plausibility, have been imputed to me.
Page me41.90
a. In the N. Rh. Zeit. I accepted a denunciation of Bakunin†g which had originated in Paris from two wholly unrelated sources.

Page Break me41.91
One of these sources was a Polish acquaintance of mine. The other was the Paris Lithographierte Korrespondenz, which meant that, even were I not to print the denunciation, every newspaper editor would have had it. A public accusation was in the interests of the cause and in the interests of Bakunin. I had Bakunin's counter-statement in the Neue Oder-Zeitung reprinted without delay.†a Ko&sa;cielski, whom he had sent to Cologne as his second to call me out, examined the letters from Paris, whereupon he was so convinced that it had been my duty as an editor to publish the denunciation (I printed it without comment, as though it were an article) that he wrote by return of post and told Bakunin he could no longer act as his second. K. came to be one of the N. Rh. Z.'s best and most useful friends. I printed a public apology to Bakunin in the N. Rh. Z.,†b made it up with him personally in Berlin (August 1848) and, later, broke a lance for him in the Tribune (1851).†123
Page me41.91
b. In the Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial several people, particularly Schapper, O. Dietz and, to a lesser extent, Willich, are treated unjustly; however,
Page me41.91
Schapper himself (and Dietz in a letter to Schapper) has admitted that in principle I was in the right so far as they were concerned; that they got mixed up in acts of such folly that only by a miracle could they have expected to elude suspicion; that Willich was out of his mind at the time and capable of any move against me, indeed was guilty of infamous moves against me and my friends.
Page me41.91
Page me41.91
Page me41.91
Finally:
The remark: 'As to my mistrust, at least you can't complain about that'†c was a legitimate reply to your remark: (I quote from memory) 'As regards those who know you, no harm will be done to you by Vogt's pamphlet, etc.' It was to this anodyne assurance I was retorting.
Page me41.91
Page me41.91
As to the 'great deal of truth',†d I must take another look at your letter in London.
Page me41.91
I trust that all points have now been settled.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.92
Page me41.92

Just one thing more. You advised me to postpone the 'action' until I had actually read Vogt's book.†a Were the excerpts in the N.-Z. not enough? Could anyone who was 'integer vitae scelerisque purus'†b wait any longer?

Page me41.92

Adolf Stahr — mightn't he know the Telegraph's†c correspondent? At all events, the latter came out with some stuff after Mrs Kinkel's death that smacked of Fanny Lewald.†124

Page me41.92

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

38

MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.92

Manchester, 3 March 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

Sir,

I have received your letter of 22 February and would first tender you my best thanks for your acceptance of my brief.

Page me41.92

I fully endorse the manner in which you propose to handle the case. Should the count I mention be dismissed on formal grounds, its ventilation is, nevertheless, of the utmost importance, at any rate so far as the public is concerned.

Page me41.92

By way of a commentary on the enclosures sent herewith†d and as a final exposé of the facts at my disposal, I am taking the liberty of making a few additional observations, but should, perhaps, first point out that, since I have not got a copy of my letter to you of 13 February,†e the numbering corresponds to that of the counts set out in my last letter of 24 February.†f ad IV. ad vocem†g Cherval.

Page me41.92

Page me41.92

You will have seen from your copy of the Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne that Mr Karl Schapper was one of the two leaders of the section of the 'Communist League'†63

Page Break me41.93
inimical to me in 1850 whom I accused of wrongly construing the purpose of the then still extant secret society which ought, I felt sure, to disseminate opinions but steer clear of any kind of conspiratorial activity, and that I therefore publicly accused Messrs Schapper and Co., not only through the medium of counsel at the Cologne court,†a but also in the above-named pamphlet, afterwards published in Switzerland and America, of having provided Stieber and his agents with pretexts for their police machinations, thereby bringing about the prosecution of my friends in Cologne.
Page me41.93
While the admission of his errors before a magistrate could not but be a blow to Mr Schapper's self-esteem, I knew him to be a man of honour (he was proof-reader to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848/49), and I therefore wrote to him from here, asking him to swear an affidavit to this effect before a London magistrate.†b He at once proved equal to my expectations. (See Enclosure a) Translation: Enclosure f. 1.)
Page me41.93
Like myself, Mr Schapper has for many years eschewed all political agitation.
Page me41.93
Schapper's affidavit also clears up the obscurities that may have remained in respect of my relations with the wretched Cherval, regarding which, by the by, the National-Zeitung could not have been in doubt had they done no more than skim through the reports, published in all the leading Prussian papers, of the public proceedings at the communist trial in Cologne (October and November 1852). It was their bounden duty to do so before making such calumnious allegations against me. It was all the more their bounden duty in as much as they themselves repeatedly referred to the said trial in their leading articles. Schapper's affidavit proves that Cherval was never connected with me, but only with my then opponents. As regards Cherval, I have this to add:
Page me41.93
From an old letter, which I wrote to Friedrich Engels in Manchester (28 October 1852) and which he has kept, I would cite the following passage:
Page me41.93
'That Cherval was a police spy is borne out by the following:
Page me41.93
'Firstly, his miraculous escape from prison in Paris immediately after sentence;
Page me41.93
'Secondly, his unmolested stay in London, although a common criminal;
Page me41.93
'Thirdly, Mr de Rémusat (I have authorised Schneider II to name him if necessary) tells me that Cherval offered him his services as agent to the Princes of Orleans. Thereupon, he wrote to Paris and was sent the following documents (of which a copy was shown me) from which it emerges that Cherval was first a Prussian police spy and is now a Bonapartist one.'†a

Page Break me41.94

Page me41.94

The contents of the passage cited above will be corroborated by the lawyer, Mr Schneider II from Cologne, should you consider it necessary to summon him to Berlin as a witness. The Monsieur de Rémusat mentioned in the excerpt from the letter to Engels was, if I am not mistaken, a minister under Louis Philippe, or at any rate one of the most outstanding deputies of Louis Philippe's day, and one of the most eminent writers of the so-called doctrinaire party of that time.

Page me41.94

ad II (ad vocem funds for the journal Volk).

Page me41.94

I am sending you, Enclosure b (translation Enclosure f, 2), my own affidavit concerning the source of the money placed at the Volk's disposal by me.†125

Page me41.94

Since I have to stay in Manchester for some time, as my legal adviser in the libel action against the London Daily Telegraph lives up here, I had to swear the affidavit before a Manchester JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. In accordance with English law, therefore, it bears no stamp.

Page me41.94

ad I, I have nothing further to add.

Page me41.94

ad III, I would remark:

As regards my 'connection' with the 'secret police', I could have my brother-in-law, the erstwhile Prussian Minister, von Westphalen, called as a witness. However, my wife, his sister, wishes to avoid this family scandal if it is at all possible to do so. That is something I must leave entirely to your discretion.

Page me41.94

Enclosure b) (translation: Enclosure f, 3) contains an affidavit by G. Müller, chairman of the public German 'Workers' Educational Society' in London.†3 It is the only working men's association (save for the secret society, the 'Communist League' already mentioned, which was disbanded at my behest in November 1852) to which I belonged in London since my arrival there (September or August 1849) until my resignation from the same (mid-September 1850) which was publicly announced in various German papers†b (including the then still extant Londoner Deutsche Zeitung†c). It is, in fact, the only German working men's association with which I have had anything whatever to do during my time of residence in London. Now, at its anniversary banquet (6 February 1860, the very day the National-Zeitung's articles were reproduced in the London newspaper, the Daily Telegraph) that same association voted a unanimous resolution backing me and censuring Vogt, although I had kept aloof from it for ten years.

Page Break me41.95

Page me41.95

Its president had this resolution drawn up in legal form in London, as you will see from the enclosure.

Page me41.95

ad V. I enclose herewith (under Enclosure d) the article the Daily Telegraph paraphrased from the National-Zeitung; likewise the reply from the Daily Telegraph's (Berlin) correspondent in response to my complaint (under Enclosure e), of which I provided a translation in my letter of 24 February.†a

Page me41.95

I now consider it to be quite unnecessary for the name of my friend Ferdinand Freiligrath to be mentioned at all during the course of the lawsuit, with the sole exception of the letter to F. Engels dated 19 November 1852, enclosed in my letter to you of 24 February.†b I consider that letter essential if the facts are to be established in court.

Page me41.95

In addition to the supplementary information which you will find below, this letter contains the following enclosures:

Page me41.95

Enclosure a) Schapper's affidavit; b) my own affidavit; c) G. Müller's affidavit; d) Daily Telegraph of 6 February, p. 5, column 1, article headed 'THE JOURNALISTIC AUXILIARIES OF AUSTRIA'; e) Daily Telegraph of 13 February, p. 2, column 6, headed GERMANY. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT), FRANKFORT ON THE MAINE, FEBR. 8; f) translation of the three affidavits; g) The Knight of the Noble Consciousness, published in New York, December 1853. h) Letter from Flocon, member of the Provisional Government, Paris, 1 March 1848†c; i) letter from Lelewel, Brussels, 10 February 1860†d; k) 1. letter from L. Jottrand, Brussels, 19 May 1849†e and 2. letter from the same, Brussels, 25 February 1848; 1) 1 copy of Zwei politische Prozesse. Verhandelt vor den Februar-Assisen in Köln, Cologne 1849†126; m) letter from Ernest Jones. London, 11 February 1860†f; n) letter from the Sheffield Foreign Affairs Committee,†27 6 May 1860, Sheffield†g; o) letters from David Urquhart. Glasgow. December 9, 1854; p) translations of enclosures m), n), and o).

Page me41.95

The only document that I still have to send you is a letter from the editor of the New-York Tribune†h — which I expect to receive any day now — concerning my relations, from mid-1851 until the present, with this, the leading American English newspaper.†i

Page me41.95

I remain, Sir, your very obedient Servant,

Dr Karl Marx

Page Break me41.96

Page me41.96

Supplementary Information

Needless to say, the only points in Vogt's lampoon which I shall touch on in the action against the National-Zeitung are those actually incorporated by that newspaper in its leader, whether simply as they stood, or in the shape of comments; also, in regard to the National-Zeitung, only such points as are punishable by law. All else must be kept in reserve against such time as, the proceedings being concluded, I can reply to Vogt in writing.†a

Page me41.96
Hence the only purpose of this supplementary information is the following:
Page me41.96
1. To provide some additional observations on those passages in the National-Zeitung which, though quite irrelevant to the actual case for the prosecution, might possibly be of use in replying to defence counsel.
Page me41.96
2. Being myself the son of a lawyer (the late Justizrat Heinrich Marx of Trier, for many years bâtonnier of the barreau†b there, noted for his integrity of character no less than for legal ability), I know how important it is for a conscientious lawyer to be quite clear about his client's character. In addition, you will perceive that certain points given in ad 2 might be used to advantage during the proceedings.
Page me41.96
ad 1) The passage from the National-Zeitung, quoted under III in my letter of 24 February†c (No. 37 of the National-Zeitung, column 2, line 65 from the top et seq.), goes on:

'To fill in the picture Vogt publishes among other documents a long letter by Techow, a former lieutenant, dated August 26, 1850,†d in which', etc.

Page me41.96
Now for a start there is nothing, not a single line, in that letter — though anyone who had read only the Nat.-Zeit. and not Vogt's lampoon†e might easily be tempted to think there was — about what the Nat.-Zeit., aping Vogt and in concert with him, had just before maintained, i.e. 'the compromising of people at home in Germany in order to extort money from them by threats of denunciation', or 'connections with the secret police in France and Germany', and so forth.
Page me41.96
What Techow really says, amounts to no more than this: that he went drinking with myself, Engels and Schramm (now dead, then — 1850 — manager of the Revue†f brought out by Engels and me in Hamburg), and took in deadly earnest the pranks we played upon him while he sought to impress us as an exceedingly serious and self-important emissary from a secret society in Switzerland.†127 This applies to the theoretical part of his letter, notably the account of his conversation with us (it never took place in that form) which evinces the strangest misapprehensions and the most comical misrepresentations. No one, I assume, would expect me, a man who, for over fifteen years, has been publishing his views in German, French and English, to concern myself seriously with an account of my theory written by an ex-lieutenant who has spent no more than a few hours of his whole life in my company and at a wine tavern at that. Mr Techow's deviousness and mauvaise foi†a are clearly discernible from the fact that he had earlier written to me and Engels from Switzerland, attacking Willich (see Enclosure g: The Knight of the Noble Consciousness, pp. 3-4†b), while later, in his letter, which was never published, he did not hesitate to disseminate Willich's delusions (at that time Willich was actuated by the most absurd delusions about the importance of his own person and the snares laid for him by imaginary rivals) and his slanderous allegations against myself, although the tiniest glimmer of common sense would have told him that a few days spent in London consorting exclusively with those who were then our enemies did not entitle him to pronounce a verdict one way or the other.

Page Break me41.97

Page me41.97

So far, I have discussed only what one might describe as the theoretical part of Techow's letter (reproduced in Vogt†c — whether tampered with or not I can't, of course, say — on pp. 142 et seq.).
Page me41.97

I now come to the most incriminating part of the letter, in which he speaks of the duel between my friend Conrad Schramm, now dead, and Willich. Had the National-Zeitung reprinted the letter, I would have enclosed one from Schramm, written long after the duel, in which he reproached me with letting myself be influenced by Willich because I had advised him [Schramm], albeit vainly, not to fight.
Page me41.97

Here I need do no more than refer you to Enclosure g, pp. 5-9.†d (When this appeared in New York in December 1853 they, Willich and C. Schramm, were both in America.)
Page me41.97

As regards the pamphlet (Enclosure g), I consider it necessary to tell you something about how it came into being.

Page Break me41.98
Page me41.98

In December 1852, just a few weeks after the end of the communist trial in Cologne, I sent the ms. of my Revelations concerning that trial to Basle — to Schabelitz, the publisher. Having delayed publication for months, S. made such blunders over dispatching it that the entire consignment destined for Germany was confiscated at the Baden border. In the event, I sent the ms. to the United States of North America where it appeared in Boston in March 1853, first in serial form in the Neu-England-Zeitung, and then as a pamphlet in its own right.
Page me41.98

The appearance of the Revelations in America coincided with that of Mr Willich himself who, together with Kinkel, had gone there to drum up a revolutionary loan†81 since, according to the view published by Kinkel in the German American papers at the time, 'revolutions are as easily made as railroads', always provided 'the necessary cash' is in hand.†a It was this kind of balderdash against which I took a decided stand. After the appearance of the Revelations in America, Willich allowed at least four months to elapse before publishing a rejoinder in the New York Criminal-Zeitung.†b
Page me41.98

It contained the self-same calumnies and balderdash as Techow's letter (indeed, in his letter sent to Switzerland in 1850, Techow was merely repeating what Willich had whispered in his ear when he was in London, and what Willich was to publish in New York in 1853). It was all the more essential that I should answer, in that my articles in the New-York Tribune had earned me a publicly recognised position in the English-American Press. Meanwhile, I had decided that I should deal with the matter pertinently if in a jocular vein, as indeed I did in The Knight of the Noble Consciousness. Needless to say, Techow could have replied, as could Willich. However, they deemed it wiser to remain silent and not to break that silence in the seven years since that time.

Page me41.98

What insidious inanity, therefore, on the part of the National-Zeitung (intent only on avenging itself for the criticism I bestowed on it in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848/49†c), to foist on the public as authentic truth tittle-tattle that had long since been publicly refuted.

Page Break me41.99
Page me41.99

When Vogt's book arrived in London, by the by, I sent it with an accompanying letter to Mr Techow in Australia and shall no doubt be able to place his reply before the public in four months' time.
Page me41.99

Incidentally, the following account of how the letter came to be published is typical of Vogt.
Page me41.99

For in a letter from Paris dated 6 February 1860 Schily, a lawyer, writes:

'This letter' (i.e. Techow's) 'passed through different hands before reaching mine, where it remained until, following my expulsion from Switzerland (summer of 1851), it came into the possession of Vogt via Ranickel (a working man who had connections with Willich). For I had been unable to put my papers in order, having been picked up quite unexpectedly, without prior notification or an expulsion order, in the streets of Geneva, where I had been sent into forced residence, and forcibly conveyed via sundry lock-ups to Basle, whence I was sent on my way. My papers were put in order for me by friends and in this Ranickel had a hand, which is how he came into possession of that document. I later wrote to Ranickel from London, asking for the document, but did not get it. As a man specially trusted by Willich (he once shared his lodgings at Besançon), he may well have had other intentions or instructions.... Ranickel is now said to have a highly successful établissement as a book-binder, and to number among his clientéle the gouvernement of Geneva (the head of which is Fazy, Vogt's patron). Not content with idolising Willich, Ranickel acted as Vogt's informer.'

Page me41.99

Such is the honest manner in which Mr Vogt acquired Techow's letter.
Page me41.99

I would ask you not to mention Schily's name, should this point be raised, since Vogt, qua Bonapartist agent, is powerful enough to have Schily banished from France.
Page me41.99

I need say nothing further on this score save that, no sooner had Willich published (in 1853)†a the balderdash now reproduced in Techow's letter, than there instantly — before, indeed, I could possibly have been notified in England — appeared in the self-same New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, a devastating riposte†b written by Joseph Weydemeyer (former Prussian Lieutenant of artillery, subsequently co-editor of the Frankfurt Neue Deutsche Zeitung, presently DEPUTY-SURVEYOR in the State of Iowa†c) who was in Frankfurt am Main and a member of the 'Communist League' throughout the time of the rift in London and the Communist trial in Cologne. The said statement was also signed by Dr A. Jacobi, now a general practitioner in New York, who was himself among the accused at Cologne, but was acquitted.

Page Break me41.100
Page me41.100
As regards the following passage, No. 37 of the National-Zeitung, column II, line 31 from top et seq.:

'They' (i.e. myself and co.) 'continued the work of the Rheinische Zeitung among the refugees. In 1849 this paper had counselled against any participation in the movement and had also constantly attacked all the members of Parliament, etc.'

Page me41.100
allow me to make the following observations:
It is perfectly correct that, unlike the National-Zeitung, the Neue Rh. Zeit. never sought to make a milch cow of the revolution; rather that paper was kept on its feet only at considerable financial sacrifice and at great personal risk to myself, until such time as suppressed by the Prussian government. The absurd allegation, particularly so when coming from the National-Zeitung, that 'in 1849 the Neue Rh. Zeit. had counselled against any participation in the movement', is best refuted in the columns of the paper itself. As to the manner in which I conducted myself during the revolution, I would refer you to Enclosure 1) (Zwei politische Prozesse etc.).
Page me41.100
Similarly, it is true that the Neue Rhein. Zeit. always dealt with Mr Vogt and the other windbags of the Frankfurt National Assembly ironically and in accordance with their deserts. Come to that, as he himself admits in his pamphlet, by 1846 Vogt was already a naturalised Swiss citizen, i.e. a national of a foreign state, and hence should have had absolutely no say in Germany. That the Neue Rhein. Zeit. 'attacked all' the members of Parliament is incorrect. It was on the most amicable terms with many members on the extreme Left. The extent to which even Vogt and Co. sought to curry favour with the newspaper almost up to the time of its demise is plainly evident if only from the fact that, when they founded the March Association,†128 they sent out a circular throughout the length and breadth of Germany in which the public was strongly recommended to subscribe to 'good' and 'the best' newspapers, the 'good' being accorded one asterisk and 'the best' two. The Neue Rhein. Zeit. was honoured with 'two asterisks'.†a No sooner had this scrap of paper come into my hands than I wrote a short leader in the Neue Rhein. Zeit. (I believe it was an issue in March 1849) protesting against this unsolicited patronage on the part of people whom I esteemed neither for their personal character nor for their political intelligence.†b ad 2) In 1842 (at the age of twenty-four) I was editor-in-chief of the old Rheinische Zeitung which, subject first to single, and then to double censorship, ended up by being compulsorily closed down by the Prussian government (spring, 1843). One of the men with whom I was working at the time was Mr Camphausen, Prime Minister of Prussia after the March revolution. The old Rhein. Zeit. can be said beyond all doubt to have disrupted the power of the censorship in Prussia. (I would observe in confidence — not, of course, for public consumption — that after the 'Rhein. Zeit.' had been closed down, overtures were made to me by the Prussian government through the medium of Geheimer Revisionsrat [Privy Auditor Councillor] Esser, a friend of my father's. Esser, I should explain, was taking the waters with me at Kreuznach, where I married my present wife. After this communication, I left Prussia for Paris.)

Page Break me41.101
Page me41.101

Page me41.101

In Paris I published the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher in company with Friedrich Engels, Georg Herwegh, Heinrich Heine, and Arnold Ruge. (I later broke with Herwegh and Ruge.) At the end of 1844 I was expelled from Paris (by Guizot) at the instigation of the Prussian Embassy there and left for Belgium.†129 The standing I enjoyed amongst French radicals during my stay in Paris can best be gauged from Enclosure h), a letter from Flocon of 1 March 1848, recalling me to France in the name of the Provisional Government, and annulling Guizot's expulsion order. (In confidence: While in Paris in the summer of 1844, after the bankruptcy of the publisher (Julius Fröbel) of the Deutsch-Französ. Jahrbücher, I received from Dr Claessen, on behalf of Camphausen and other Rhein. Zeit. shareholders, a letter — enclosing 1,000 talers — describing my services in such glowing colours that, for this very reason, I shall not enclose it.)

Page me41.101

I lived in Brussels from the beginning of 1845 to the beginning of March 1848, when I was again expelled and returned to France on the strength of Flocon's letter. In Brussels, besides unpaid contributions to sundry radical newspapers in Paris and Brussels, I wrote the Critique of Critical Criticism in collaboration with Fr. Engels (a book about philosophy, published by Rütten, Frankfurt am Main, 1845),†a Misére de la Philosophie (book on economics, published by Vogler in Brussels and by Frank in Paris in 1847),†b Discours sur le libre échange (Brussels 1848),†c a work in two volumes on latter-day German philosophy and socialism†d (not published; see my preface to A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, F. Duncker, Berlin 1859), and numerous pamphlets.†130 During the whole of my stay in Brussels I gave unpaid lectures on 'political economy' at the Brussels German Workers' Educational Society.†131 These were about to appear in book form when publication was interrupted by the February Revolution.†132 Typical of my standing among the radicals (of very varying complexions) in Brussels is the fact that, in the public société internationale,†61 I was committee member for the Germans, Lelewel (an old man of eighty, veteran of the Polish Revolution of 1830/31 and learned historian) for the Poles, Imbert (later gouverneur of the Tuileries in Paris) for the French, and Jottrand, a Brussels lawyer, former member of the Constituent Assembly†133 and leader of the Belgian radicals, for the Belgians, who was also chairman. From the two letters written to me by Jottrand, now an old man (Enclosures k, 1, and k, 2), as also from Lelewel's letter (Enclosure i), you will see what my relationship with these gentlemen was during my stay in Brussels. Jottrand's letter (Enclosure k, 2) was written after a dispute I had had with him at a public meeting on 22 February 1848, following which I had notified him of my resignation from the société internationale.†134 He wrote me the second letter, when I founded the Neue Rhein. Zeitung in Cologne.

Page Break me41.102

Page me41.102

My second period of residence in Paris lasted from March until the end of May 1848.†135 (In confidence: Flocon offered to help myself and Engels finance the founding of the N. Rh. Z. We refused because, as Germans, we did not wish to take subsidies from a French government, even if friendly.)

Page me41.102

From May 1848 until the end of May 1849 I was editor of the Neue Rh. Zeit. in Cologne. From Enclosure l) you will see that I was elected one of the three chairmen of the Rhenish-Westphalian democrats.†136 (In confidence: When I arrived in Cologne, I was invited by a friend of Camphausen's to go to him in Berlin. I disregarded the insinuation.)

Page me41.102

In Paris from June 1849 till August 1849. Expelled under Bonaparte's presidency.

Page me41.102

From the end of 1849†137 until now, 1860, in London. Publications: Revue der Neuen Rh. Zeitung†a in Hamburg, 1850, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (in New York, 1852), Diplomatic Revelations of the 18th Century (London, 1856), Critique of Political Economy, 1st instalment, Duncker, Berlin, 1859, etc. Contributor to the New-York Tribune from 1851 up till the present. For as long as I remained a member of the German Workers' Society†3 (end of 1849 to September 1850) I gave unpaid lectures.

Page Break me41.103

Page me41.103

From Enclosure o (it is confidential) you will see how I came to make David Urquhart's acquaintance. From that time onwards I have contributed to his Free Press. I agree with him in matters of foreign policy (opposition to Russia and Bonapartism), but not of internal policy, in which I support the Chartist Party (which opposes him). For 6 years now I have contributed gratis to the latter's publications (in particular the People's Paper). (See Enclosure m.)

Page me41.103

My anti-Palmerston articles†a written for the New-York Tribune in 1853, have been repeatedly reprinted in pamphlet form in England and Scotland, to the tune of 15-20,000 copies.

Page me41.103

You will see from Enclosure n, which was sent me in 1856 at the behest of the Sheffield club by the secretary of one of the Urquhartite clubs, which are concerned solely with diplomacy, how I stand with the Urquhartites, despite our differences over internal policy.

Page me41.103
The letter in Enclosure n stems from Ernest Jones, BARRISTER-AT-LAW in London, acknowledged leader of the Chartist Party, also recognised poet.
Page me41.103
Translations of Enclosures o, n, and m will be found in Enclosure p.
Page me41.103
A typical example of the kind of tittle-tattle about me disseminated by certain German quarters in London will be found in the letter from my friend Steffen†b (formerly Prussian lieutenant and teacher at the Divisional School, at present in Boston) quoted on p. 14 of Enclosure g, 'The Knight of the Noble Consciousness'.
Page me41.103
Despite ten years of unremitting attacks on myself, I have never burdened the German public with a single word of my life story. Vis-á-vis my lawyer, in a case such as the present one, I considered it indispensable.
Page me41.103
As regards the Italian war,†46 I should add that my views on the subject are absolutely in accord with those expressed by my friend Fr. Engels in the well known pamphlet Po and Rhine, published by Fr. Duncker in Berlin in 1859. The manuscript of the said work was sent to me by Engels before it was dispatched to Berlin.
Page me41.103
We are in favour of a free and independent Italy and in 1848 said as much in the Neue Rh. Zeit., in terms more forthright than any other German paper, and the same goes for Hungary and Poland. But we do not wish Bonaparte (in collusion with Russia) to make

Page Break me41.104
Italian freedom or the question of any other nationality a pretext for ruining Germany.

Page me41.104
First published abridged in Archiv für die Geschichte des Sozialismus und der Arbeiter-bewegung, Zehnter Jahrgang, Leipzig, 1922, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

39
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET†138
IN LONDON
Page me41.104
Manchester, 7 March 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

My dear Sir,

Having been absent from here for a few days, I was prevented answering your letter immediately.

Page me41.104

As to the Printers' Bill,†139 which I had taken the liberty to ask you for in a letter addressed to you on the 6th of February†42 (if I am not mistaken), you have forgotten transmitting it to me. Pray, send it to Mrs Marx.

Page me41.104

As to Schaible's declaration (extorted by my proceedings against Blind†a), it will be sufficient to remark:

Page me41.104

1-st) Whether Blind be the 'literary' author of the fly-sheet, is a question I have not to deal with. He is the author in the legal sense of the word.

Page me41.104

Schaible's declaration (which 'circumstances', he says in the Telegraph,†b prevented him for three months from making, but which I extorted in no time by sending to Louis Blanc a copy of the two Affidavits†c at the Bowstreet Police-Court) proves much against Vogt. It proves nothing for Blind. It does not exculpate him in any respect. He has written (if not drawn up) the manuscript; he has printed it in Hollinger's office; he paid Hollinger's Printer's Bill; he made two false declarations in the Augsburg Gazette†d; he and Hollinger entered into conspiracy against me in order to induce (and with what success you know) the compositor Wiehe to give them false evidence. This is not all. Blind, as you know from the letter he addressed in September to Liebknecht, had the cool impudence of stating that he had nothing at all to do with the whole affair. Lastly, all the successive steps now taken by him and Schaible were forced upon him by the menace suspended over his head for a criminal action for 'conspiracy'.

Page Break me41.105

Page me41.105

2) Dr Schaible may, for aught I know, have allowed himself to be made Blind's scape-goat. He, as I know, belongs so to say to the household furniture of Blind's.

Page me41.105

3) The principal political end I aimed at, has been obtained by Schaible's declaration. It makes void and annuls the proceedings at Augsburg,†140 — mere mock proceedings; there being present no witnesses, no accuser, no (real) accused, and, in point of fact, no tribunal, since Vogt, in his wisdom, had appealed not to that description of Bavarian tribunal which, according to the Bavarian law, had to decide on the case. In respect to this same Vogt, it will suffice to say that at Geneva, his own place of residence, a Swiss paper (Die Neue Schweizer Zeitung, The New Swiss Gazette, in its number of November 12, 1859) has declared to have indignantly repulsed Vogt's attempt at bribing it with French money.†a That same paper, in a leading article, called upon Vogt to take judicial proceedings against itself, same way as I, in a declaration signed with my name, and published in the Augsburg Gazette and the Hamburg 'Reform', had called upon him to sue the Volk at London.†141 Vogt, although a Genevese Ständerath,†b and, therefore, a public servant, rested mute to these appeals, while enlisting the favour of the stupid German Liberals by the Augsburg comedy, or rather farce.

Page me41.105
You will be so kind to consider this letter as confidential, since the lawyers who carry on my actions for libel at Berlin and London, think it fit that, except on the most urgent emergency, I should not break my silence until after the judicial proceedings have been closed.

Yours faithfully
K. Marx

Page me41.105
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the copy in Marx's notebook

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.106

40
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE†142
IN PARIS
Page me41.106
Manchester, 13 March 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

My dear Sir,
I have not yet received your book.†a Otherwise I should have given a compte rendu†b of it in the New-York Tribune.
Page me41.106
I sent you the article against Kossuth†c on the express condition of its being returned to me. I attach not the least importance to that article, but I want it for specific purpose.
Page me41.106
I have instituted two actions for libel at Berlin and London against newspapers†d which had the impudence of reprinting extracts from Vogt's libel.†e I observed, for 10 years, a strict silence in the face of the most reckless calumnies, but I know that now the moment has arrived of publicly exposing them.
Page me41.106
My friend from whose house I am addressing these lines to you may perhaps (he is a merchant) become useful to you. Send him a catalogue (Mr Frederick Engels, care of Messrs Ermen and Engels, Manchester) of your wines. But do not use such fellows as Stoffregen for your agents.

Yours truly
Williams†f

Page me41.106
In a few days I shall return to London.

Page me41.106
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934. First published in the language of the original (English) in Századok, Nos. 4-6, Budapest, 1959

Page Break me41.107

41
MARX TO LUCIEN JOTTRAND
IN BRUSSELS
Page me41.107
Manchester, 13 March 1860
6 Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road

My dear Sir,
You will excuse me for having not before acknowledged the receipt of the letter you had the kindness to address me from Bruxelles. I thank you for that letter, although I shall abstain from using it in any way. Should I think it opportune laying before the public any official documents, relating to my past life, the Bruxelles episode — as far as it refers to my relations with the Belgian radicals — would be best characterised by two letters of yours (d.d. 25 févr. 1848†a and 19 mai 1848†b) which I have now found among my papers.
Page me41.107
Since you belong to the American school of Republicans (whose opinions I do only accept in regard to some political questions), it may interest you to know that, for about 3 years, I am one of the principal writers in the New-York Tribune, the first Anglo-American paper. I have improved this connexion for giving M. Spilthoorn, on his passage through London, letters of recommendation for the U. St. Should you, on any occasion, want to publish anything — relating to the affairs of your country — in the Tribune, you may rely on my willingness of obliging you.
Page me41.107
The shameless attacks (on behalf of which I have instituted two actions for libel, one at Berlin, one at London) recently made against me, proceed all from the Bonapartist camp. Monsieur Louis Bonaparte, through the instrumentality of M. Mocquard, his secrétaire intime, has publicly thanked the New-York Times for having done its best (and this its 'best' was of a very shabby description) to counteract my New-York Tribune strictures (since 1852) of the Lesser Empire.†143
Page me41.107
I have the honour

To be your humble servant
K. Marx

Page me41.107
I am here at Manchester for a few days only. My address is: 9, Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London.

Page Break me41.108
Page me41.108
If you read German books, I shall give me the pleasure of sending you a copy of the first part of my “Kritik der Politischen Oeconomie” being now in progress of publication at Berlin.

Page me41.108
First published, in the language of the original (English) and in Russian, in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 4, Moscow, 1958

Reproduced from the original

42
ENGELS TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.108
Manchester, 15 March†a 1860

Dear Lassalle,
Very many thanks for the trouble you have been to with Duncker in connection with my pamphlet.†b I would have agreed to the arrangement of my being named had not another publisher†c accepted it in the meantime (when this reaches you, the thing will probably be out) and were I not determined that the 'author of Po and Rhine' should first carve out a place for himself in military literature before making his official entry (i.e. on the title page) as a civilian before the lieutenants. When you say that you would be sure to convince us and hence believe it would be in our own interests not to commit ourselves by name to the views we have held so far in regard to the Italian business, your argument is, no doubt, of crucial value subjectively speaking; similarly we can assure you that we are just as sure of our ability to convince you, the more so since our views are based on a careful study of diplomatic material which, at least on certain points, is available in pretty complete form to the public in London, as it surely is not to the public in Berlin (where, indeed, it does not for the most part exist at all).
Page me41.108
Marx got your letter the day before yesterday and will be answering it.†d In the meantime I enclose the Knight of the Noble Consciousness,†e previously forgotten.†f

Page Break me41.109
Page me41.109

Apropos. A few days ago we got a letter from Nothjung. After his release, the poor devil was declared to have forfeited his right of domicile in Mülheim 'by reason of his many-year-long absence' (!!!),†144 and has been forbidden to show his face within five miles of Cologne. He has become a photographer in Breslau†a where, after a great deal of trouble, he has obtained a resident's permit. Now he has got to pay an entry fee, a household fee, and umpteen others such as are only to be found in a Prussian dictionary. This, as you can imagine, the poor chap is in no position to do after his long spell in prison which, to make matters worse, has rendered him homeless (in what sort of country can such things happen!) and so odious are the laws still obtaining there that he cannot exist unless he gets all this business settled. Mightn't it be possible to do something for him over there? Such a thing would have been unheard of in the Rhine Province before 1848, and even the bourgeois who helped to impose such shocking laws on us ought to help poor devils of this kind. Homeless because of a many-year-long absence in a Prussian fortress — just try telling that to an Englishman! His address is P. Nothjung, Photographer, Zwingergasse No. 7, in the Baths. With the connections you have in Breslau, it should be easy for you to do something for him. Our ex-tailor, by the way, seems to have acquired quite a tidy education at his fortress-university, and writes quite civilised letters.

Page me41.109

Just now I'm writing trivia about the reorganisation of the army in Prussia and have offered these to Duncker.

Page me41.109

Tout á vous†b

F. Engels

Page me41.109

Before I forget. Marx has written to red Wolff,†145 of whom, however, we haven't heard for years. In the meantime Vogt, accompanied by the homme entretenu†c and SWINDLER Klapka, has been to dine with Plon-Plon yet again.

Page me41.109

I have re-opened this letter, having closed it without putting in the Knight, in order to tell you that we are unable to find the only copy of the thing that's still up here in Manchester. Someone must have pinched it. Marx has still got some in London and is writing to ask that some of them be sent up here forthwith, whereupon we shall immediately send you one.

Page me41.109

You would greatly oblige me if you could send me, by return of mail and unstamped, a few numbers of the Volks-Zeitung and the

Page Break me41.110

National-Zeitung in which the army's constitution is discussed, and also one or two little pamphlets that have appeared over there on the subject — all of them together in one wrapper. Otherwise, it takes ages for me to get the things over here, and I shouldn't see the newspapers at all.

Page me41.110

First published in: F. Lassalle, Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

43
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN
Page me41.110
London, 27 March 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Sir,

I am enclosing herewith the last two documents needed to complete what has already been sent. The first is a letter from the editor-in-chief of the New-York Tribune to me.†a I have included a German translation.
Page me41.110

The second document is highly important in that it proves that the wretched Cherval, alias Nugent, alias Crämer, far from being in touch with me when he was in Geneva, was hounded out of that city as a result of my book about the Communist trial in Cologne.†b The letter is from Johann Philipp Becker in Paris (Becker fled after the affair of 1830/31, in 1848/49 he first commanded the volunteers in Baden, then he was colonel of the revolutionary army in Baden and the Palatinate; he is now a business man in Paris and, so to speak, the doyen of the German émigrés) and is directed to Rheinländer, a merchant in London, with whom he has business connections. Mr Rheinländer, who is an acquaintance of mine, was good enough to let me have the letter.†c
Page me41.110

Apart from this letter, I have also sent you:
Page me41.110

1. Dated 21 Feb. Power of attorney, together with enclosures.

Page Break me41.111
Page me41.111

2. Dated 24 Feb. A letter, together with enclosures.
Page me41.111

3. Dated 3 March. Two packages with enclosures.†a
Page me41.111

I now look forward to receiving by return of post, firstly, a confirmation that these various letters, etc., have arrived, secondly, some news about the progress of the libel suit.
Page me41.111

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,
Dr Karl Marx

Page me41.111
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

44
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN PARIS
Page me41.111
London, 4 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear Sir,

I have not yet received your pamphlet.†b

Page me41.111

Mr Engels is my best friend and, consequently, will do everything to prove useful to you.

Page me41.111

[As to]†c Stoffregen, I do not know him, but was [told in] Manchester by different merchants tha[t he is] a person lacking tact, intrusive etc. Stil[l] in some lower layers of the Lancashire society, he may, possibly, sell your wines as well as anybody else.

Page me41.111

You will oblige me by sending me by next post the address of General Perczel. I want an explication on his part.†d Which are your relations with P.?

Page me41.111

Les choses marchent.†e

Yours truly
A. Williams

Page me41.111
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me41.112

45
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.112
Manchester, 8 April 1860

Dear Moor,

During the last few days of my stay in Barmen†146 the contract relating to the Manchester business has been subjected to thorough legal scrutiny. This convinced me that everything over here was hanging in the balance and that I must get back without a moment's delay. I left on Friday morning at 6 o'clock and was back here by 12 noon yesterday, i.e. in 30 hours. The thing was, we wanted to secure Charley.†a This was accomplished yesterday evening, in so far as it was necessary, and now I shall have to wait and see what Gottfried†b does. However, my base of operations is now secure.
Page me41.112

Under the circumstances, I shan't be able to come to London until everything here has been settled. Until then I shall be up to my eyes in business matters and legal quibbles, and there's nothing I can do about it. In the meantime I have learned from Gumpert and Siebel what they know. I've neither seen nor heard anything of my pamphlet.†c You might return me the copy you have, also the letter (presumably from Fischel?) G. sent you,†d so that I know what is going on. Open the letter if you haven't already done so; this will save writing to and fro.
Page me41.112

G. told me that there had been some further unpleasantness at my lodgings; I'm moving out straight away.
Page me41.112

I neither saw nor heard anything of the Prussian police. No one demanded my passport or anything of that kind. The few policemen I ran into in Barmen gave me a MILITARY SALUTE, that was all.
Page me41.112

Industry on the Rhine has developed enormously and the constitutional system has bitten deep into the citizenry. Things have changed vastly since 1848, though sufficient of the old leaven still remains.
Page me41.112

Still no reply from Weber†e? If it doesn't arrive soon, there'll be nothing else for it but to get Ephraim Artful†f to take him to task.

Page Break me41.113
Page me41.113

Kindest regards to your wife and the YOUNG LADIES. Immediately I've sorted things out up here I shall come and see you.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.113
Will you also send the key to the lower bookcase. What is all this about the parcel of letters that was supposedly left in the bedroom, or so Gumpert maintains?

Page me41.113
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

46
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.113
[London,] 9 April 1860

Dear Engels,
Great disappointment today when, instead of yourself, your letter arrived. However, we saw that it only made 'good sense'.
Page me41.113
Siebel has carried out his mission well and with great discretion.†147
Page me41.113
I still haven't been able to find the key.†a However, the 'upper' key also fits the lower key-hole. It locks both compartments.
Page me41.113
I shall send you Weydemeyer's letter shortly.
Page me41.113
Before leaving Manchester I confided to Gumpert, etc., such fables as I thought necessary to justify my non-trip to Holland.
Page me41.113
Freiligrath has written me a friendly letter. Up till now I have neither answered him, nor seen him.
Page me41.113
The only letter I have had from Gumpert that was addressed to you was intended for me — from Liebknecht, who informs me that the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung has given him notice.†148
Page me41.113
No news from Fischel.
Page me41.113
Nor yet from Weber.
Page me41.113
I shall post you your pamphlet†b from here on Thursday.†c Borkheim has advertised it in the Hermann (latest issue)†d and I in the Tribune; Liebknecht will now (Wednesday) advertise it in the New Orleans Paper.†a Page me41.114

Page Break me41.114
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.114
The American papers (New-Yorker Staatszeitung, etc.) are full of Vogt's drivel. The fellows over there got the book†b sooner than we did in London.

Page me41.114
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

47
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN PARIS
Page me41.114
London N.W., 9 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear friend Becker,
First, my most sincere thanks for your letter, for the verbal information you gave to Siebel and for sending the correspondence. Apart from anything else, I ought to account Sieur†c Vogt's attack a blessing, if only because it has brought me into closer contact with the doyen of our revolution and our emigration. I do not, by the by, share the Philistines' astonishment at the consistency of your behaviour. Hitherto I have always found that, once they set out on a revolutionary course, all men of really reliable character — I would mention only old Levasseur, Cobbet, Robert Owen, Lelewel and General Mellinet — constantly draw fresh strength from their setbacks and become ever more resolute, the longer they swim in the stream of history.

Page Break me41.115
Page me41.115
The next reason for my writing — other than the desire to convey my thanks to you personally — is that I have been commissioned by my old friend J. Weydemeyer to enlist correspondents in Europe for the Stimme des Volks. This paper, I should say, has been founded in Chicago by the American Workers' League,†149 whose headquarters have moved from New York to Chicago. It is a daily paper and may acquire even greater importance since Chicago is increasingly becoming the metropolis of the North-West. I enclose the heading of the prospectus.

Page me41.115

Terms are as follows: You would have to contribute once a week. Fee 2 dollars per article. This would come to ABOUT £5 or 125 fr. a quarter. The fee is a small one, nor could it be otherwise in the case of a workers' paper. On the other hand, my friend Weydemeyer's character is a guarantee of prompt payment, which cannot exactly be said of German-American papers elsewhere. If you agree to this request, you could start next week, but notify me beforehand.
Page me41.115

The parcel containing the invaluable correspondence came by post, the day before S. arrived in London. I shall get them bound and always keep them at your disposal. Among them is a document of a column mutinying against Willich,†a which is highly characteristic of this Don Quixote.
Page me41.115

I should be very glad — and it would be of great importance to my pamphlet†b — if you, with your intimate knowledge of Fazy, could send me a thumb-nail sketch of his goings-on since the coup d'état, also a vignette of the man's character. I regard Vogt simply as the servant of Fazy, whom I once saw in Paris (1843) and whom I at once sized up correctly by his being a former contributor to the National (on which the best of them were bad).
Page me41.115

Lommel's little work†c is entertaining and has some useful revelations about 1847/48. But I can't agree with his extremely parochial ideas about the origins of the year of revolution. However it is, perhaps, the very narrowness of his outlook that enables him to portray vividly and with true insight the ground with which he is personally familiar.
Page me41.115

Your two little poems about Leibniz and 'What of it?' pleased me enormously and it would be a good idea if you were to enclose them (assuming you agree to my proposal) with your first article for Weydemeyer. W.'s address is:

Page Break me41.116
Page me41.116

J. Weydemeyer, CARE OF Chicago Arbeiterverein, BOX 1345, Chicago, Ill. United States. (Ill. stands for Illinois.)
Page me41.116

With fraternal greetings,
Yours truly,
K. Marx

Page me41.116
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Jg. 6, Stuttgart, 1888 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

48
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†150
IN BERLIN
Page me41.116
London, 9 April 1860
(The old address)

Dear Lassalle,

Since your last letter, all manner of things have happened. Engels' father has died and Engels has spent a fortnight in Prussia by permission of the Prussian Government. I myself, however, have been overwhelmed with business, and even now can only write quite briefly.

Page me41.116

1. My lawyer†a in Berlin has asked me to undertake not to mention his name. If, however, despite the mass of material I have sent him and despite various reminders, these six weeks of silence are prolonged, you will have to prod him, for the case becomes statute-barred on 22 April.

Page me41.116

2. Vogt visited Plon-Plon in Paris. He was seen by acquaintances of mine, who spoke to him. Nevertheless, he had the effrontery to state, or cause it to be stated, in the German papers that he had not been to Paris.

Page me41.116

3. Have not received the Humboldt.†151

Page me41.116

4. I shall send you the Knight of the Noble [Consciousness] today.†b

Page Break me41.117

Page me41.117

5. My old friend J. Weydemeyer has given up his post as DEPUTY-SURVEYOR in the state of Wisconsin at the request of the American 'Workers' League' (a public society with branches throughout the United States)†149 which has moved its headquarters from New York to Chicago (Illinois). W. will assume the editorship there of a daily paper founded with the help of workers' shares.†a Chicago is increasingly becoming the centre in the American North-West where German influence predominates. W. has asked me to enlist correspondents for the paper and this I have done over here, in Paris and in Switzerland.†b I invite you to undertake the German articles (if possible at least two a week). There is no question of payment. But as party work it is very important. W. is one of our best people. If, as I hope, you agree to this, you should start directly and send your articles to:

Page me41.117

'J. Weydemeyer, CARE OF Chicago Arbeiterverein, BOX 1345, Chicago (Illinois), United States.'
Page me41.117
6. While leafing through the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (necessary on Vogt's account) I was glad to discover a short leader in which we broke a lance with the Vossische†c for Miss Ludmilla Assing.
Page me41.117
7. Would it be possible for you to send me a brief sketch of what the worthy Zabel of the National-Zeitung has been up to, since reaction set in? The sketch could appear in my pamphlet†d as a letter signed by you. You would, moreover, find yourself in the company of highly honourable refugees who are writing about other people for this work. Some anonymously, others under their own names. Several do not belong to our faction of the party.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.117
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.118

49
MARX TO GEORG LOMMEL
IN GENEVA
Page me41.118
[Draft]
[London,] 9 April 1860

To G. Lommel. (Geneva) Citizen,
I have been told by Siebel, whom I saw a day or two since at Freiligrath's while on his way back from Switzerland, that a letter sent by me from Manchester on 26 February to the editors of the Neue Schweizer Zeitung,†42 and intended for you, has fallen into Brass's hands. For I had been informed that you were the editor of the Neue Schweizer Zeitung, a paper I have never seen. It was in this belief that I wrote to you, since your name was known to me through its having featured with such great credit in the annals of the revolution. I would not have written to Mr Brass.
Page me41.118
What I wanted of you was to learn something about Vogt's activities. Material concerning the activities of V. and other Bonapartist agents has been pouring in from people belonging to the emigrations of various countries and to the various schools of thought within the revolutionary party. But I wish to set to work with discrimination and a strict regard for the truth. A contribution from you, with your intimate knowledge of how things stand in Switzerland, would therefore be of the utmost value to me.

Page me41.118

With regard to your book Hinter den Coulissen, a copy of which was given me by Siebel, I found this of great interest and believe it is important that the second part should appear. In the case of the latter, I might be able to get hold of a financially reliable bookseller for you over here. With regard to part I, I think I could dispose of 300 copies at 1 franc apiece, partly by direct sales at the various societies in London, partly through booksellers. But first the copies would have to be here. If this appeals to you, send the copies to the booksellers 'Petsch, etc., London'.
Page me41.118

Finally, I have one more proposal to make you. My friend J. Weydemeyer (previously co-editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung in Frankfurt) has given up his post as DEPUTY-SURVEYOR in the state of Wisconsin at the request of the Workers' League in the United States (which has moved its headquarters from New York to Chicago),†149 in order to take over the editorship in Chicago of Die Stimme des Volks, a daily paper founded by the Working Men's and

Page Break me41.119
Gymnastic Club.†152 I have been asked by him to enlist correspondents in Europe, and this I have done over here, in Paris and in Berlin. I am taking the liberty of inviting you to act as correspondent for Switzerland, initially on the basis of one contribution per week. Fee 2 dollars (10 frs.) per article — payments, as might be expected from a paper of this kind and particularly at the outset, will be modest for the time being, but will improve as the paper grows. Hitherto there has been only one daily in the state of Illinois, the Staatszeitung.†a Day by day, however, Chicago is increasingly becoming the centre of the entire North-West of America, where there is a very large German population. I can guarantee prompt payment. If you agree to this proposal, will you start straight away this week and be good enough to advise me. The address is:
Page me41.119

J. Weydemeyer, CARE OF Chicago Arbeiterverein, BOX 1345, Chicago (Illinois), United States.
Page me41.119

To come back to Vogt, you will have seen a statement of mine (beginning of February)†b in various German newspapers to the effect that I shall reply to his lampoon†c after settlement of the libel action I have brought against the Berlin National-Zeitung for printing excerpts from Vogt's concoction.†d
Page me41.119

On pp. 180-181 (cf. the passage) Vogt speaks of a 'conspiracy' he foiled at the Lausanne working men's festival. Can you give me any information about this piece of boasting? The passage runs as follows:†153 What is the truth of the matter?
Page me41.119

Finally, I would take the liberty of pointing out that your account of Vogt's activities, which you could send me in the form of a letter, thereby finding yourself in the highly honourable company of other refugees (though it cannot appear until later by reason of the lawsuit in Berlin†e), would figure in my pamphlet†f as a section in its own right, contributed by you, and I would, of course, pass on to you the fee per sheet paid me by the publisher in respect of the section you had contributed. I say this because I know full well what it is to be a refugee, having myself lived under those conditions almost uninterruptedly for seventeen years, and it would be most unjust if one of us were to accept payment from a publisher at the expense of another. Owing to the lawsuit in

Page Break me41.120
Berlin and also because Vogt's main attack, etc., is directed against me, my pamphlet will be in great demand and will find a good publisher in Germany. One is inclined to ask whether a concentration of attacking forces would not be desirable in the interests of the cause. On that point you will, of course, be entirely your own judge and under no circumstances should you misconstrue my plain speaking.
Page me41.120
With fraternal greetings,
Yours truly,
K.M.

Page me41.120
When writing to me, address your letters: A. Williams,†a Esq., 9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London.

Page me41.120
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

50
ENGELS TO EMIL ENGELS IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me41.120
Manchester, 11 April 1860

Dear Emil,
What do you think G. Ermen's latest proposals are?
Page me41.120
1. He wants to buy mother out by instalments and assume sole control of the business.
Page me41.120
2. Under the terms envisaged in the contract I am to stay on with him as clerk for another four years!

Page me41.120

At so cheap a price does the fellow think to buy us out of our inheritance in the firm of Ermen & Engels and obtain my grateful assent to my own degradation vis-á-vis himself.

Page me41.120

The negotiations were quite amicable. The proposals affecting myself I turned down flat, whereupon he held out the prospect that I might become a partner in four years, whereupon I demanded guarantees before I could consider the matter and told him that we were all of the opinion that, if there was to be a parting of the ways, it would mean division in kind and competition. This surprised him greatly, and the matter progressed no further. He had imagined that we in Barmen were urgently in need of money (as to which I enlightened him) and wanted to exploit the opportunity. In short, he was very disappointed by the conversation and will doubtless make some other approach. More when I see you.

Page Break me41.121

Page me41.121

After this affair, we can be more certain of Charles†a than ever; he actually believes that we two will be able to make Gottfried†b do anything, perhaps even retire into private life.

Your
F. Engels

Page me41.121

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

51
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.121

[London,] 12 April 1860

Dear Engels,

BEST THANKS for the hundred pound note. It came as a glorious surprise THIS MORNING. The whole family was filled with glee.

Page me41.121

You may or may not have seen that the Kölnische Zeitung (Schlesinger, London) has had the impudence to talk about the Brimstone Gang†65 and its Russian redolence.

WELL! Through the good offices of my bankrupt friend Speck I am now hot on the trail of the whole Brimstone Gang here in London.
Page me41.121
D'abord,†c you'll have seen in the papers that Palmerston has amused himself by presenting Mr Reuter (the Jew from Trieste of telegraph fame)†d to the Queen.†e And who do you think is factotum to this grammatically illiterate Jew Reuter? — Siegmund Engländer, who was expelled from Paris because, although a spy in the pay of France (600 frs. per month), he was discovered to be a 'secret' Russian spy. This same Reuter, together with Engländer, Hörfel and Schlesinger, was a partner in a Bonapartist lithographic news agency in Paris (an honorary member being one Esterhazy, a MAN ABOUT TOWN and the cousin of Esterh., the Austrian ambassador); they fell out, etc. Mr Bernhard Wolff, chief proprietor of the Berlin 'National-Zeitung' and owner of the Berlin telegraphic bureau, is hand-in-purse (partners) with S. Engländer, who is at present editing European world history in Reuter's name. N.B. Russia has now joined the 'Austro-German Telegraphic Union' and, 'pour encourager les autres',†a has got Pam to present her Reuter to the QUEEN. I am to get a detailed account of Schlesinger's entire curriculum vitae, as well as that of Reuter's.

Page Break me41.122
Page me41.122
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.122
My thanks to Siebel for the notes, which arrived today. Also for his Religion und Liebe.†b My wife thinks highly of the latter.

Page me41.122
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

52
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN
Page me41.122
London, 13 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Sir,

A fortnight ago yesterday I sent you the final documents, at the same time requesting you to acknowledge receipt of the letters and enclosures previously despatched, and also to let me know briefly how the case is progressing.†c I am exceedingly worried by the complete absence of news, the more so since, in your letter of 22 February, you say the action will become statute-barred on 22 April and, after receiving the said letter, I had expected an early communication from you.

Page Break me41.123
Page me41.123
I remain, Sir, Your most Obedient Servant,
Dr Karl Marx

Page me41.123
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

53
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.123
[London,] 16 April 1860

Dear Engels,
Have had some most valuable material from Lommel today.†a However, he volunteered to submit to a further CROSS-EXAMINATION, and one such has already gone off to him today.†42 It was also much needed. Moreover, in the letter in which I buttered him up, I suggested he should send 300 copies of his Hinter den Coulissen to Petsch (the booksellers) here. I would promote the sales (in working men's clubs, etc.). Now he wants an advance of 150 francs. I think that you in Manchester should CLUB together forthwith and raise a few pounds, while I would find the rest down here. The man is invaluable to us. He has also written about this to Siebel. Hence I shall also drop the latter a couple of lines today. Siebel should do nothing without first consulting me.
Page me41.123
I enclose Weydemeyer's letter.
Page me41.123
Not a word yet from that confounded lawyer,†b to whom I sent a reminder last Friday.†c However, he's got the retaining fee, and I his acceptance of the brief. So, I cannot imagine that he will lay himself open to a lawsuit against himself.
Page me41.123
A lot more sanctimonious preaching from Lassalle, together with a printed essay (on Fichte's political legacy†a) for Walesrode's political pocket edition, not yet out.†b It appears from L.'s letter that he has read your pamphlet,†c which means it has come out in Berlin. Presumably the publisher will only start advertising it now, along with the Easter eggs. L.'s letter is altogether fatuous. He's been ill again. He is again writing a 'major work'.†d Aside from this major work, he has in his mind a clear outline of three other major works, including the 'political economy', and is, in addition, studying 6-7 unnamed sciences 'with productive intent'. The Countess,†e he writes, has lost a great deal of money, for which reason he must go to Cologne. Probably misguided speculation in railways, etc.

Page Break me41.124
Page me41.124
Mont Sion does in fact exist, or so I see from the map included in the BLUE BOOK on Savoy†f (in the Genevois, EX-NEUTRAL).
Page me41.124
Apropos.
Page me41.124
Questions for Lupus:
1. In one of his letters from Zurich I find that he was acquainted with Brass. Could he supply any information about him?
Page me41.124
2. Did the rump parliament in Stuttgart†154 pass a resolution whereby the former imperial regents have the right to recall the German parliament on any particular occasion?
Page me41.124
Do you or Lupus know anything about a request for annexation sent in 1849 by the then provisional government of the Palatinate to the French National Assembly?
Page me41.124
When are you coming down here?

Your Moor

Page me41.124
Haven't seen Freiligrath yet. The idea of meeting the chap is 'awful',†g and yet I've got to swallow the bitter pill. If only for diplomatic reasons, after our mutual assurances of friendship.
Page me41.124
And then, he has written to me in an AMIABLE manner.

Page me41.124
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.125

54
MARX TO MÓR PERCZEL IN ST HÉLIÉR
Page me41.125
London, 16 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear General,

In furtherance of a work I intend to publish on Bonapartist machinations,†a I am taking the liberty of addressing myself to you as one of the most vigorous champions of European liberty. During the recent war in Italy†46 you issued a statement in which you showed that you had seen through the humbug and had therefore made a timely exit from the stage — proof, if proof were needed, of your superiority to that clown, Kossuth, and his sycophants. Having unfortunately lost that statement, I had recourse to Szemere in Paris.†b He referred me to you. Hence, if you would be so kind as to let me have a copy of the said statement, together with your comments on the deception practised on the Hungarians in Italy, you would be doing a service to the good cause.
Page me41.125

As early as last summer (1859), in articles of mine which appeared in the New-York Tribune†c and the London 'Free Press',†d I mentioned your name as that of the only military representative of the Hungarian emigration not to have succumbed to the bribes and wiles of the diplomats of France and Russia, or allowed himself to be impressed by Kossuth's phantasmagoria, and, in the new book I propose to write, I should be glad to allot you the place of honour that befits you.
Page me41.125

I am taking the liberty of reminding you that, as early as 1848-49, when Editor-in-Chief of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, I was the most determined advocate of revolutionary Hungary in Germany. Now, as then, I consider Hungary's independence and sovereignty to be the conditio sine qua of Germany's release from slavery. But with no less determination do I reject the endeavour to debase the nationalities by using them as a cloak for Muscovite-Decembrist†155 intrigue.

Page Break me41.126
Page me41.126

I am, Sir, etc.
Yours,
Dr Karl Marx

Page me41.126
First published in Hungarian in Párttörténeti Közlemények, No. 4, Budapest, 1966 and in the language of the original (German) in: Marx, Engels, Werke, Bd. 39, Berlin, 1973

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

55
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.126
[London,] 17 April 1860

Dear Engels,

I trust that your indisposition isn't serious. Also that you are taking care of yourself and not over-working.

Page me41.126

I have sent Lommel the 150 francs today.†a (What you don't manage to scrape together in Manchester will be collected here.) For the following reasons:

Page me41.126

1. If he is to retrieve the books†b from the bookbinders', he has got to pay 50 frs. That leaves him 100 frs. To haggle over that would be exceedingly impolitic and would not command any respect for our party.

Page me41.126

2. The main thing is that the so-called advance be sent to the chap quickly and unconditionally. In that way, he'll be beholden to us. The other half he shall have BY AND BY and thus will remain ENGAGED to us.

Page me41.126

3. As soon as he has the money, he will leave for Savoy whence he will send back reports.

Page me41.126

4. From Petsch's note enclosed herewith (I gave him the copy Siebel brought back with him) you will see that he believes that he can make a profit on what is, in fact, an interesting pamphlet.

Page me41.126

5. L. is a decent chap. Otherwise he'd sell himself. From the papers Becker has sent me, I see that Lommel was a leading light in the old Republican Party. Also a friend of Heinzen's. What a clamour there'll be from the latter over this defection!

Page Break me41.127

Page me41.127

I am in two minds about Siebel's work for the Strassburger Zeitung.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me41.127
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

56
ENGELS TO GOTTFRIED ERMEN
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.127
Copy
Manchester, 19 April 1860

Sir,

I have no hesitation in expressing my regret that you should have taken offence at my taking home the book of calculations during dinner-time. As books have been taken home, before, by others connected with the office, I did not expect it would have caused you any annoyance. As to any intentions on my part of taking any undue advantage, you are aware that the whole of the calculations contained in the said book are so much out of date that not one of the elements given therein agrees with the present real cost. I could not, therefore, have any such intention, and [I] hope the feeling now expressed by you is not in any way influenced by the prospect of the arrangements for winding up, or otherwise settling, the affairs of the firm, it being the interest of all parties that such matters should be conducted in a friendly and accommodating spirit.
Page me41.127

I am, Sir,
your obedient servant,
Fred. Engels

Page me41.127
Written in English. First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.128

57
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN
Page me41.128

London, 21 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Sir,

Eleven days ago I sent you a letter,†a in which I notified you that I had still not received either an acknowledgment of, or a reply to, the numerous letters (enclosing documents, power of attorney, etc.) despatched from here and Manchester over the past two months, although your letter of 22 February had led me to expect an early communication and, according to that same letter, the action will become statute-barred on 22 April (i.e. tomorrow). I therefore requested an explanation.
Page me41.128

Having received no reply to that letter either, I am forced to conclude
Page me41.128

Either that my letters failed to arrive, although every one, save the last, was registered;
Page me41.128

Or that at least one of your letters has been intercepted.
Page me41.128

Therefore, should this letter suffer the same fate as its predecessors, I shall lodge a complaint both with the General Post Office over here and with the Prussian Embassy; I shall also, if need be, make a public protest in the columns of the London 'Times'.
Page me41.128

I am, Sir, Your most Obedient Servant,
Dr K. Marx

Page me41.128
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.129

58
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.129
[London,] 24 April 1860

DEAR Frederick,

Herewith a letter from Weber. From that letter I learn for the first time (what the jackass might have been kind enough to tell me earlier on) that he did not originally file a civil but a criminal action for injuria against Zabel, which means that, under Prussian law, the application has to be countersigned by the Royal Procurator's Office. Since this has been refused, he has appealed. It is, of course, 'an issue of public importance'†156 to the Prussian government that we should be traduced to the utmost.

Page me41.129
From his letter you will see that he also instituted the civil action on the 18th.
Page me41.129
Will you let Dr Heckscher know about this business and give him some notes (a few lines) on the subject for the Hamburg Reform?†a He has himself repeatedly offered to do me a service of this kind, and the matter has got to be brought out into the open (if only to instil a little caution into the Prussian government). I am also writing to Siebel to this effect. Indeed, the public must not be allowed to suppose that the matter has lapsed.
Page me41.129
The stuff from Lommel (I have got six or seven more documents from him)†b contains ample CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE of Vogt's bribery. Vogt no longer feels safe in Geneva and has therefore applied for Schwyz citizenship. I hope, by the by, that one of these days you will write me a proper letter telling me just how your affairs are going. It's not very friendly of you to treat me with the reserve that might be appropriate in the case of others.
Page me41.129
How goes it with your health? I've been most anxious about it.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.129
The Perrier business had been prearranged with Bonaparte, but never attained the dimensions originally envisaged.†157 J. Perrier was in Paris with Fazy, and was seen there by Becker's son.†c

Page Break me41.130
Page me41.130
No answer as yet from Fischel, to whom I wrote†42 on the subject of your pamphlet†a (Schily has also badgered him about it).
Page me41.130
While, in the West German Strassburger Zeitung,†b the literary Zouaves keep up the skirmish, so too do the literary Cossacks in the German Baltische Monatsschrift (Riga); we 'Teutons' are thus under attack on both flanks.†c

Page me41.130
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

59
MARX TO GEORG RHEINLÄNDER
IN LONDON
Page me41.130
[London,] 24 April 1860

Dear Rheinländer,

I should be much obliged to you if you would request Mr Stecher to tell you exactly (as exactly as possible) when Cherval first came to Geneva, how long he stayed there, and when he performed his vanishing act.

Page me41.130

It would be nice to see you again some time. I have all sorts of things to tell you.

Yours,
K. Marx†158

Page me41.130
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.131

60
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.131
London, 24 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Many thanks for Humboldt†a and Fichte.†159 I hadn't yet read the latter, and it was CLEVER of you to throw it into the fray. When your letter arrived, I got Engels to send me both your letter and the one from Counsellor Weber in Berlin. From this last I see that the matter of not mentioning his name applied solely to my public announcements in the newspapers†b; hence I was, in this instance, labouring under a misapprehension.

Page me41.131

Today I have heard from Weber. From his letter it would appear that he began by filing a criminal action. He then received the following communication dated 18th inst.

'The original documents are returned to Dr Carl Marx, c/o Counsellor Weber, together with the notification that no issue of public importance is raised by this matter which could make it desirable for me to take any action (Art. XVI of the Prolegomena to the Penal Code of April 14, 1851). Berlin, April 18, etc. Lippe.'

Page me41.131

Weber has appealed to the Chief Public Prosecutor†c against this ruling. At the same time, in order to prevent its becoming statute-barred and to keep open another course of action, he has filed the action for injuria with the civil judge.

Page me41.131

With my pamphlet†d in view, I am, of course, having investigations made in Paris and Switzerland, and have even sent an emissary†e to Geneva. I now have proof that Vogt is a French agent. At the moment, he no longer feels safe in Geneva and is therefore sounding out the possibility of becoming a citizen of another canton.

Page me41.131

Apropos. An acquaintance of mine†f — a Berliner — staunchly maintains that a certain Mayer or Meier,†70 of the firm Abraham M. and Co. (or Sons), who lives in Viktoriastrasse, Berlin, is the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. Could you not get your lady friends to investigate?

Page Break me41.132

Page me41.132

Shall reply to your letter anon.

Page me41.132

No doubt you'll have left Berlin by the time this note reaches you.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.132

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

61
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN

Page me41.132

London, 24 April 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose a retaining fee of 15 talers, at the same time advising you that I fully agree to all the measures adopted by you.

Page me41.132

I remain, Sir,

Your Obedient Servant,

Dr Karl Marx

Page me41.132

P.S. As a result of investigations that I have started in Paris and Switzerland, notably in Geneva,†160 I now have proof (after the proceedings I intend to publish it in pamphlet form) that Professor Karl Vogt is no more than a common French agent. I believe, by the by, that the annexation of Nice and Savoy will have opened the eyes of even the blindest of men to the 'Italian work of liberation',†161 the danger that is threatening Germany and the rightness of those who uttered timely warnings.

Page me41.132

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.133

62

MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.133

[London,] 7 May 1860

Dear Frederick,

Herewith:

Page me41.133

1. Letter from Fischel.†162 Gumpert's belief that he sent me a letter written to you from Berlin is a DELUSION. The letter to you which he sent contained Liebknecht's letter to me.†a

Page me41.133

2. Letter from Szemere. I haven't written to him for a long time because I disliked intensely the way he flattered Badinguet†163 and Pam in his pamphlet.†b However, I shall now give him a piece of my mind.

Page me41.133

3. Letter from Emmermann and Beust to Schily.†164 What do you think of these worthies? Beust, buckling on his sword and accusing me of prevarication just because he got scared and decamped from Cologne! You needn't return the letters to me, but had better file them.

Page me41.133
As regards Fischel's suggestion, I must first know more about the kind of newspaper he envisages, the line it will take, etc.
Page me41.133
I'm very glad that it was Schimmelpfennig who was Techow's addressee†56 for that will enable me to present the one in terms of the other. It's also a good thing that Willich prevented a reply to Schapper. I shall treat him with mild irony.
Page me41.133
Have met Freiligrath. The philistine clearly wishes to remain on good terms with us. Beyond this, doesn't want to be drawn into the 'scandal'. His views have become mediocre in the extreme.
Page me41.133
I hope to hear from you soon.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.133
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.134

63
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.134
[Manchester, 7 May 1860]

Dear Moor,
Heckscher sent the story to the Reform†a straight away, but with what success I don't yet know; as usual, having made a great song and dance about his influence, he now says he can't promise it will appear, etc.
Page me41.134
Meanwhile Siebel has got it into the Mittelrheinische Zeitung.
Page me41.134
Any news from Berlin?
Page me41.134
Mr Szemere has put me to great expense over the Tokay. The wine's so sweet that no one can drink it, so I've sent back the whole lot, apart from a bottle or two, and shall, of course, have to bear all the expenses, customs duty, etc., etc. He writes most civilly, offering me other wines, but charges three times as much as Charles's†b wine merchant in Pest. The fellow is trying to make huge profits out of his 'entreprise toute patriotique'. Nous verrons.†c

Page me41.134
Siebel is ill with some 'genius's ailment' on which, as usual, he prides himself. I shall go and see him this evening.
Page me41.134
I haven't heard a word about my pamphlet†d or seen anything in the papers. It's the conspiration du silence all over again.
Page me41.134
Apropos. Reiff has come up here, or so he says, on the advice of Liebknecht, Lochner, etc.! He wants me to help him with money; is a street musician. I've told him that in the circumstances I would first have to write to you, which didn't seem to please him. — Said you were angry, etc., etc. Que faire?†e What do you think of the chap? In any case, I can't do much for him.
Page me41.134
My brother Emil is here and is negotiating with Ermen. I shall probably be remaining with Gottfried†f as clerk with a percentage of the profits, in return for a guarantee that I shall become a partner in a few years' time. I'm trying to make the contract as onerous as possible for G. so that, when the time comes, he'll be only too glad to let me go. By the end of this week, or at any rate in the course of the next, everything will probably have been fixed up. For the next few weeks, by the way, I shall probably have to drudge fittingly, for Monsieur Gottfried intends to make great changes and do a lot of reorganising the moment he's in sole charge of the CONCERN.

Page Break me41.135
Page me41.135
Many regards to your wife and the young ladies.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.135
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.135
[London,] 8 May 1860

Dear Frederick,

Reiff is a scoundrel. No one sent him up to Manchester. He disappeared from here after he had been exposed. He was thrown out of the League†63 back in 1850. During the preliminary investigation at the Cologne trial†2 he actually turned traitor. I've just found a letter of Bermbach's which refers to this.†a So, have nothing to do with him.
Page me41.135

As to your pamphlet,†b you'll have found something in Fischel's letter. By the by, in your place I shouldn't hesitate to exploit friend Siebel's minor literary connections (as soon as he's up and about again, that is) for the purpose of combating the conspiration du silence. Had you actually put your name to the pamphlet, the public would have seized upon it, if only out of curiosity. Behrend, by the by, seems to be even worse than Duncker.
Page me41.135

Szemere is a man who likes to ask others to do him a service, but who keeps his own pocket-flaps buttoned. You have now done enough for him and, if I were you, I would leave his wine to its mission toute patriotique.†c

Page Break me41.136
Page me41.136

I don't much care for the SETTLEMENT with G. Ermen. The question is, whether your family is or is not leaving any capital in the business. If the former, it might provide a vantage point from which to negotiate.
Page me41.136

From your letter it would appear that you are once again going to cancel or postpone your trip down here. Considering how rapid communications are, you ought really to be able to spare a couple of days.
Page me41.136

What do you think of the Sicilian business?†165
Page me41.136

Things in Vienna are said to be very revolutionary.
Page me41.136

The English are, of course, now plaguing us with talk about Bruck. The day before yesterday a chap was again badgering me about it. He asked: 'Now, WHAT DO YOU SAY OF BRUCK'S SUICIDE?' 'I'LL TELL YOU, SIR. IN AUSTRIA THE ROGUES CUT THEIR OWN THROATS, WHILE IN ENGLAND THEY CUT THEIR PEOPLE'S PURSES.'
Page me41.136

Borkheim has just written to me from Dublin. He will be arriving in Manchester on Saturday†a evening and will come and see you on Sunday.
Page me41.136

Salut.
Your

K.M.

Page me41.136
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

65
MARX TO EDWARD FISCHEL†142
IN BERLIN
Page me41.136
[London,] 8 May 1860

Dear Sir,

Many thanks for your letter and for your trouble. I shall shortly be sending you a letter from little Faucher on the subject of Mayer.†b

Page Break me41.137
Page me41.137

As for the proposed newspaper, I would not be averse to becoming involved in it.†162 Only I would first have to know something more about its establishment, political outlook, etc. As regards foreign policy (and this, as from England, would no doubt be the main thing), I believe that we are in substantial agreement. On the other hand, there might well be considerable differences of opinion in regard to internal policy. The main thing, of course, is to know what attitude the newspaper intends to adopt in Prussia. If it eschews an emphatically one-sided party viewpoint, I should say that, at the present time, when Germany is in danger, people of varying political views could work together against foreign foes, without making any mutual concessions.

Yours very truly,
K. Marx

Page me41.137

Also written (8 May) to Engels, Borkheim, Eccarius, Petsch, and Weydemeyer.†a

Page me41.137
First published in the language of the original (German) and in Russian in the journal Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1959

Published in English for the first time

66
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.137
Manchester, 10 May 1860

Dear Moor,

My brother†b left this evening because my mother is seriously ill and sent for him by telegram.

Page me41.137

Matters have been pretty well settled with Ermen. My family is leaving capital amounting to £10,000 in the business, which it will have to make over to me when I become a partner. My material position will improve straight away, or at least the percentage of my share. I shall tell you all about this when I come down at Whitsun. Providing, that is, that everything's settled by then, and nothing has happened to my mother, so that I am, in fact, able to come. But I'm rather afraid she may have caught the infection from my father. I feel as though typhoid fever has now got a grip on our family.

Page Break me41.138

Page me41.138

About the other points, tomorrow.

Page me41.138

Siebel wants to know whether, amongst the papers he brought back, you have found the pamphlet, Die Sphinx auf dem französischen Kaiserthron†a; Schily has noticed that it's missing and is afraid he may have lost it.

Page me41.138

Saw Lupus yesterday. The bone's still troubling him, and rheumatism into the bargain. It almost looks as though Gumpert's intervention is bringing the matter to a head, which is just as well, since it will be over all the sooner, and then L. will be back on his pins again.

Page me41.138

Regards to the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.138

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

67
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.138
Manchester, 11 May 1860

Dear Moor,

My mother in grave danger. Two telegrams from Barmen. No one's allowed to see her. I'm to go over there again, the necessary steps are being taken. How it will turn out I cannot say. This business has put my mind into a turmoil; apparently it really is typhoid.
Page me41.138

I can't write to you about anything else today, my mind being altogether too full, and besides it's too late. For seven weeks now

Page Break me41.139
I've been living in a state of continual tension and excitation which has now reached a climax — never has it been so bad. Fortunately, I am ALL RIGHT again physically. If I have to go to Barmen, I can probably so arrange things as to spend another day in London en route, in which case I shall see you.†166
Page me41.139

Many regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.139
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

68
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.139
[London,] 15 May [1860]

Dear Siebel,

Herewith the answer from Berlin from which it appears that the criminal action has been dismissed. The civil action will never make any headway.†a Kindly send the Mittelrheinische Zeitung a few lines setting forth the facts of the case. Let me have the letter back as soon as you've shown it to Gumpert and Lupus.
Page me41.139

I have not yet approached a publisher about the pamphlet†b and am wondering whether to try Leipzig or Hamburg.
Page me41.139
Engels left here yesterday evening,†166 sain et sauf.†c
Page me41.139
I have not received the Sphinx†d from you but it doesn't matter. I do not regard Boustrapa†167 as a sphinx, still less Mr Karl Grün as an Oedipus.
Page me41.139
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.140
Page me41.140
Apropos.
If you were to send the Mittelrheinische Zeitung a note about the progress of my case, dated 'Berlin', you might take the opportunity of slipping in a word or two about the Eichhoff-Stieber case,†44 which was decided on 10 May in the Court of the First Instance in Berlin. For Eichhoff has been given an eighteen-month sentence for 'libelling' Stieber. The libel suit rested mainly on the denunciation of Stieber (in the London Hermann) for perjury, theft, etc., perpetrated by him in the course of the Communist trial in Cologne (1852).†2 Below I cite various instances that are characteristic of the proceedings in the Prussian law court.
Page me41.140
1. Eichhoff's denunciation rested (except for my pamphlet,†a which he could not, of course, mention) on the reports printed by the 'Kölnische Zeitung' during the proceedings in Cologne,†b the authenticity of which has never been challenged either by Stieber or by anyone else. The court declared these reports to be inadmissible evidence. Whenever it was in the interests of Stieber, the court allowed as authentic the reports in the Vossische Zeitung†c (probably deriving from Stieber himself), because they had been declared 'authentic' by Signor Stieber. Whenever it went against the interests of Stieber's denunciator, the selfsame court declared the meagre record kept by the clerk of the court to be the only authentic source.
Page me41.140
2. Goldheim, a police official, and Greif, a police lieutenant, Stieber's chief fellow-culprits and his subordinate tools in the Communist trial of 1852, were wholly exempted from CROSS-EXAMINATION because the court did not wish to expose these gentlemen to the alternative (as the presiding judge†d frankly stated) 'of either committing perjury or testifying against themselves'. On the other hand, their statements were allowed as evidence for Stieber's defence.
Page me41.140
3. In 1851, Stieber and Greif had got the Prussian police spy Reuter to break into Oswald Dietz's house and steal papers, which (although they were in fact quite irrelevant to the charge†168) were produced in evidence by Stieber during the Cologne trial. This theft was one of the counts upon which Eichhoff's denunciation of Stieber rested. And now just listen to this! Drenkmann, the Royal Procurator, enunciated the following brand-new theory of theft:

Page Break me41.141

'The question as to whether or not the papers were acquired by theft may,' he said, 'be left in abeyance; in forming an opinion of the accused, it is of no account. Had they in fact been acquired by theft, the police official who had thus obtained them could not be accused of theft in the legal sense, but at most of immoral conduct. A theft in the legal sense demands a dolus malus.†a This, however, cannot be assumed of police officials who might have instigated such a theft, since they would have been acting, not for their private advantage, but in the interests of the State.'

Page me41.141

Thus, if a Prussian police official breaks into a house in London and 'steals' from it, he is 'at most' committing an immoral action, but not a crime in law. This is a suspension of COMMON LAW imposed upon the English by the Prussian State.

Page me41.141

4. Hirsch, in prison in Hamburg, had testified on oath that the minute-book†169 had been fabricated by himself and Fleury under Greif's supervision. Why wasn't Hirsch taken to Berlin to be cross-examined as a witness there during the trial?

Page me41.141

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 39, Moscow, 1966

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

69

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.141

[London,] 28 May 1860

Dear Engels,

The enclosed is from Lassalle.†b Let me know by return what you think I should write and tell him re Fischel.

Page me41.141

I do not fall in with his suggestion about Berlin.

Page me41.141

Nothing yet from Lommel.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.141
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.142

70
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.142
Manchester, 31 May 1860

Dear Moor,

I return Ephraim Artful†a herewith. His proposal re yourself is truly crazy.†b After all, there's nothing you could say, either, about what happened in Cologne. However, Ephraim might be of some use in the matter. At least he has more PLUCK than the old women actually involved at Cologne, who always prefer to endure everything patiently. But it might also be worthwhile trying to see if there's anything to be done from Cologne.
Page me41.142

Ad vocem†c Fischel, perhaps we'd better tell the fool the more or less unvarnished truth and give him a bit of a lesson about the extent to which the word 'reactionary' has come to be [just] an empty phrase in his mouth. You might also take the opportunity of getting him to explain just why He, Ephraim the Profound, agrees in effect with our own and Fischel's 'anti-Palmerstonianism'. An enigma — at least so far. A private set-to between L. and F. in Berlin can't possibly concern us, and F. has behaved too well for us to drop him on some pretext or other just to please L. The only thing to do, presumably, is to give the Dark Heraclitus†d a mysterious intimation or two to the effect that 'reactionary' cuts no ice in foreign policy, in which field much greater 'jackasses' than Fischel are of service, provided they know all the ropes. How horrorstruck our far-sighted revolutionary thinker and pragmatic Royal Prussian court democrat would be, if he heard that Urquhart proposes to extend the power of the Crown. So nice a speculative distinction may be drawn, by the way, between this separate field of FOREIGN POLICY, on the one hand, and internal policy, on the other, that you'll certainly enjoy pointing out to him how, in foreign policy, the subjectively reactionary is, for the nonce, objectively revolutionary, thereby putting the man's mind at rest. Just help the man make the transition and he'll be satisfied theoretically, however much our connection with Fischel may rile him in practice, and rile him the more for the knowledge that it was Fischel who saw to my pamphlet.†a

Page Break me41.143

Page me41.143

You might also observe for his benefit how revolutionary a mode of action it is, first to deprive the Germans, or get others to deprive them, of their best territory and the very basis of their national existence on the pretext that the present rulers of that territory are reactionaries, and then to expect revolution. And it mightn't be a bad idea to say something about superstitious belief in the revolutionary initiative of the crapauds.†b The whole to be presented in the usual allusive manner so that he'll have to chew it over for the space of four weeks and then wipe the slate clean by writing you a four-page letter to which you won't reply.

Page me41.143

My coming up here on Saturday†c was most useful. By Sunday I had already found out a great deal that is important to negotiations, and now have the draft contract to study.

Page me41.143

Best regards to your wife and children.

Page me41.143

Siebel wants to leave.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.143

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

71

MARX TO EDUARD FISCHEL†142
IN BERLIN

Page me41.143

[London,] 1 June 1860

Sir,

For the past three weeks I have been suffering from a liver complaint, which has made it quite impossible for me to write or work and from which I have not yet wholly recovered. As a result, I have got into such arrears with my work that the next few weeks are spoken for, and hence I shall under no circumstances be able to start contributing immediately to the new newspaper.†a Could you send me one or two numbers of the same for my perusal? And likewise give me some advice about the PRINCIPAL MANAGERS of the new undertaking? Black, red and gold is a couleur which can now be used to some effect vis-á-vis other countries.†170

Page Break me41.144

Page me41.144

I recommend to you Mr Georg Lommel, 85 rue du Nord, Café Court, Genéve, for the post of Geneva correspondent of the paper.
Page me41.144

Geneva is now a major seat of Bonapartist intrigue, and Lommel is well informed. I am convinced that he would agree to act as your correspondent on very reasonable terms.
Page me41.144

Ad vocem†b Abel: Many thanks for this discovery.†171 Who is Abel? You would greatly oblige me by sending a few more details; indeed I should like to have this information as soon as possible.
Page me41.144

I have doubtless already told you that the Chief Public Prosecutor†c has upheld the Public Prosecutor's†d dismissal of my libel action on the grounds that no 'public interest' would be served thereby.†e So the civil action will now be going ahead.
Page me41.144

You will have seen in the papers that Reuter, the Jewish confidence trickster who owns the London telegraphic bureau, was presented to the Queen.†f Quite simply the facts are as follows: Reuter's factotum — he himself being barely able to write grammatically — is the Viennese refugee Sigmund Engländer. This Engländer was previously in Paris, where he contributed to a lithographic news bulletin run under the auspices of the then minister of police†g; at the same time, he was a French mouchard.†h When the Oriental war†i broke out, he was expelled from Paris because it had been discovered that he was a Russian spy. He then came to London where he eventually entered the service of Reuter, with whom he had already had connections earlier on. Now, since the entire European press is controlled by Reuter via his telegraphic bureau, and the telegraphic bureau by the Russian embassy via Engländer, you will understand why Pam presented Reuter to the Queen. So far as I know, the presentation had something to do with Russia's entry into the Austro-Prussian Telegraphic Union. I have informed Collet of the FACTS. Perhaps you for your own part may be able to make use of them.
Page me41.144

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
K. Marx

Page Break me41.145
Page me41.145

None of Engels' pamphlets,†a except for one copy, has yet reached either Engels or myself. It would also seem that the publisher†b has not even inserted the usual publisher's advertisement in the newspapers.

Page me41.145

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Published in English for the first time

72
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.145
[London, about 2 June 1860]†c

Dear Lassalle,

For some three weeks past I've been suffering from a liver complaint, which has prevented me from doing any [kind]†c of work, and which I haven't completely shaken off yet. This state of affairs makes me a very poor letter-writer.
Page me41.145

Well, before I reply to your letter, just one or two preliminaries. The Daily Telegraph's Berlin correspondent is called Abel. Can you provide me with any particulars about this individual?
Page me41.145

Schwarck, the Chief Public Prosecutor, has in turn dismissed the criminal action against the National-Zeitung on Appeal on the grounds that no 'public interest' would be served thereby. It won't be long now before the civil action is preferred.
Page me41.145

Now for your letter.
Page me41.145

I shall not come to Berlin.†172 I did not go to Cologne and all I knew of the sworn evidence given there by Stieber was derived from the reports in the Kölnische Zeitung.†d It is upon those reports that my critique in the Revelations†e is based. Hence I could be of no use as a witness in this case. If they want to have me testify about one point or another, I am prepared to make a deposition

Page Break me41.146
(as apparently has often been done by other refugees) at the Prussian Embassy in London.
Page me41.146

During the early stages of the Eichhoff case Juch, the editor of the Hermann, appealed to me for help in this respect.†173 I gave him the Revelations, recommended that Schneider II be summoned as witness from Cologne, and pointed out the necessity of questioning Hirsch, who was in gaol in Hamburg. The latter interrogation would seem to have been conducted most ineptly. Indeed, it would be absolutely essential to convey Hirsch bodily to Berlin to act as a witness. Only in this event could there be a proper CROSS-EXAMINATION that would publicly lay bare the whole disgraceful operation, since Hirsch was fully initiated into these mysteries of Stieber-Goldheim-Greif-Fleury.
Page me41.146

Another essential witness would be Cherval (Joseph Crämer), at present in Paris. As he did a bolt from Aachen after forging some bills, Prussia could undoubtedly demand his extradition. But the government will take good care not to do so. Apart from that, he's a French mouchard†a and therefore under Bonaparte's protection.

Page me41.146

Most of the other people whom it might be important to examine are in America. Only one is still over here, a certain de L'Aspée from Wiesbaden, who is employed as an INTERPRETER by the English police. I have taken the necessary steps [to ar]range a meeting [with him] and shall see whether he is willing either to [travel] to Berlin [or] to submit to questioning at the Prussian Embassy. In 1853, [he] sent The Times an article denouncing [St]ieber. The article was suppressed owing to Bunsen's intervention and did not [appear].

Page me41.146

I shall [now] adduce a few points, which you may, perhaps, be able to put to use. I wrote the Revelations immediately after the Cologne trial was over. However, I subsequently made further investigations into this casus, which is of special interest to me. But first let me say what a capital idea it was of Eichhoff's to cite the chief fellow culprits, Goldheim and Greif, as witnesses for the defence. As things stand, the only way to get at Stieber et cie. would be for the government to institute an inquiry into the Cologne trial. But it'll take good care not to.

Page me41.146

Stieber (see page 10 of my Revelations)†b is said to have testified on oath in Cologne that 'his attention had been drawn' to 'the conspiracy's archives' in the keeping of Oswald Dietz in London by the copy of 'the papers found on Nothjung' which were sent to him in London from police headquarters in Berlin. A mere examination of the Cologne records, which must necessarily contain the papers found on Nothjung, should be enough to refute this perjured evidence.

Page Break me41.147

Page me41.147

The actual state of affairs was as follows: Cherval (Joseph Crämer) was the Paris correspondent of the Willich-Schapper League†174 and, as such, corresponded with Oswald Dietz. At the same time, Cherval was an agent of the Prussian ambassador in Paris, Prince Hatzfeldt. Not only did he denounce Dietz, as secretary of his London committee, to Hatzfeldt, he also wrote Dietz letters that were intended for use as evidence later on. Stieber and Greif (as Greif himself told Hirsch in Fleury's presence) acted on Hatzfeldt's information. What they found out through Reuter was where Dietz lived, after which Fleury, on Stieber's orders, burgled Dietz's lodgings accompanied by Reuter. This, too, is known to Hirsch.

Page me41.147

En passant, the following circumstance may be relevant, with which Mr Hirsch is familiar. Fleury had made exact copies of the letters stolen at Reuter's and given them to Hirsch to read. Among those letters was one from Hanover written by Stechan in which he mentioned a remittance of 30 talers for the refugees. Stieber (together with his friend Wermuth in Hanover) altered this to 530 talers for the leaders. Stechan, who, so far as I know, is now in Edinburgh, could perhaps swear an affidavit to this effect. Stieber (according to the Köln. Zeit., see p. 11 of the Revelations†a) further stated on oath that the Dietz archives had arrived in Berlin on 5 August 1851, having been sent to him from London. The FACT is that Stieber took those 'archives' with him from London to Paris on 20 July 1851. This is a point which the above-mentioned L'Aspée could, if he so wished, corroborate on oath.

Page me41.147

Mr Greif testified on oath in Berlin that he did not know Hirsch, or knew him only very slightly. The FACT is that Hirsch was introduced to Fleury by Greif at 39 Brewer Street, Golden Square, the private residence of Alberts (then, as now, secretary to the Prussian Embassy in London) at that time, after Greif had first got Hirsch to give him a report on the activities of the revolutionary emigration. From that time on, Greif, Fleury, and Hirsch worked together (under the direction of Greif), and were, in particular, jointly responsible for composing the forged minute-book.

Page me41.147

The month of April 1853 found Goldheim and Stieber back in London where they were intent on engineering a link between

Page Break me41.148

Kossuth's mysterious gunpowder plot and the Berlin conspiracy (Ladendorf's).†175 At that time (i.e. many months after the Cologne trial), Hirsch constantly accompanied them in London and worked together with them.

Page me41.148

Considering that the police have acknowledged their Fleury in court, let me provide a character sketch of these Prussian agents in London: The said Fleury is called Krause, and is the son of Krause the cobbler, who was executed in Dresden some 22 to 25 years ago for the murder of Countess Schönberg and her maid. Some time after the Cologne trial, this same Fleury-Krause was convicted of forgery in London and sentenced to two or three years in the HULKS. Having now served his sentence, he is once again up to his old activities.

Page me41.148

The French plot (complot allemana-français)†108 was engineered under Stieber's direction by Cherval in company with Greif, Fleury, Beckmann, Sommer and the French spy, Lucien de la Hodde (under the name of Duprez). At Cherval's instigation, Greif (who, like Stieber, swears he does not know the Franco-Prussian spies Cherval and Gipperich) went to North Germany where he was to find out the abode of a certain tailor named Tietz and obtain possession of the letters Cherval had written him on police instructions. He went to the home of Tietz's betrothed in Hamburg, saying he had come 'as a friend' of Tietz's and would take into safe keeping any potentially dangerous correspondence. However, the coup misfired.

Page me41.148

Greif also corresponded with Maupas, through de la Hodde-Duprez, about the release of Cherval and Gipperich. No sooner had Cherval arrived in London than he was taken on by Greif at a regular salary of £1 10s a week. In particular, Greif sent him to Jersey to prepare a major political conspiracy there. Subsequently, the association between Greif and Cherval came to an end. If Mr Hirsch so wishes, he can affirm all these matters on oath. They are important, not only because Greif has again perjured himself, but also because they concern the relationship between Cherval and Stieber and the 'veracity' of the statements made at Cologne by Stieber in respect of Cherval. At the very time when Stieber swore in Cologne that he knew nothing of the whereabouts, etc, of Cherval (see p. 27 of the Revelations†a), Cherval was cooperating with Greif, who himself was acting on Stieber's orders. But the case could be legally proven only, of course, by obtaining depositions from Hirsch (who might perhaps talk in open court) and from Cherval (who cannot be got hold of). Needless to say, Alberts, secretary to the Embassy, won't speak; nor will de la Hodde, Beckmann, Maupas, etc.

Page Break me41.149
Page me41.149

Hirsch and Fleury (the latter had rented a lithographic press at Stanbury's Printing Works, Fether [Fetter] Lane, Fleet Street, London, to that end) had been instructed by Greif to produce leaflets, such as 'To the Rural Proletariat', 'To the Children of the People', etc., which Greif sent to the Prussian government as emanating from the Marx party.
Page me41.149

After the sudden 'disappearance' of the witness Haupt of Hamburg in the course of the communist trial at Cologne, Hinckeldey sent a courier to the Prussian Embassy in London with the request that someone be found to take over Haupt's role, and to 'swear' Haupt's denunciations before the Assizes. The Police Presidium, he said, would give a reward of a thousand talers. In his letter, Hinckeldey wrote that the very existence of the political police depended upon the outcome of this trial. Hirsch, having first consulted Fleury (out of the 'noblest' motives, as he himself subsequently said), declared himself willing. Everything was well in train when Fleury returned with tidings of the Prussian Embassy's refusal. A further communication from Hinckeldey read:

'The State Prosecutor hopes that thanks to the happy constitution of the jury it will be possible to get a verdict of guilty even without extraordinary measures, and he' (Hinck.) 'therefore asks you not to trouble yourselves further.'

Page me41.149

For the same reason, the order previously sent to Beckmann, the Prussian spy in Paris, bidding him come to Cologne and corroborate Stieber's statements regarding the complot allemand-français was countermanded.
Page me41.149

But now we come to the most curious part of the story, which is also perfectly known to Mr Hirsch and is typical of Stieber no less than of Goldheim.
Page me41.149

Fleury had learned that I intended to have the actual handwriting of the alleged signatories of the minutes (W. Liebknecht, Rings, and Ulmer) officially authenticated in London. He knew that a refugee called Becker lived in the same house as Willich. He therefore wrote the following letter in Becker's name:

'To the Royal Presidium in Berlin;

dated from London

'It is the intention of Marx and his friends here to discredit the signatures on the League Minutes by having handwriting specimens legally authenticated. These specimens are to be produced in the Court of Assizes as the really authentic ones.

Page Break me41.150
Page me41.150
'Everyone familiar with English laws knows that on this point they can be manipulated and that a person who vouches for the authenticity of a thing does not actually give any true guarantee.
Page me41.150
'The person who gives you this information does not recoil from giving you his name in a matter like this where the truth is at stake. Becker, 4 Litchfield Street.'

Page me41.150
Stieber had declared before the Assizes at Cologne that he had had the minute-book for a fortnight (before producing it in court), and had duly deliberated before putting it to use; he further declared that it had reached him through a courier, Greif. Mr Goldheim, on the other hand, in a letter to the Prussian Embassy in London, said:

'The minute-book was produced so late only in order to avoid scrutiny as to its authenticity.

Page me41.150
The letter signed 'Becker' was addressed to the Police Presidium in Berlin. Had it really emanated from Becker, therefore, it must have gone to Berlin. Instead, the letter went to Goldheim, the police official, at the Frankfurter Hof in Cologne, and a cover to that letter to the Police Presidium in Berlin containing a note: 'Herr Stieber in Cologne will give a complete explanation as to its use.' Thus, Stieber knew to what end the letter had been forged. Moreover, Fleury had written expressly to Goldheim on the subject.
Page me41.150
Thus, between Fleury, Goldheim, Stieber and Prussian Police Presidium there was tacit collusion over the forgery.
Page me41.150
(Stieber did not make use of the letter, having already been compelled to drop the minute-book since, independently of the authentications provided by me, Schneider II had not only discovered other signatures of Liebknecht's and Rings' in Cologne, but had also concluded from a much earlier letter of mine that the forger was Hirsch. Stieber got wind of the fact that Schneider had compared Liebknecht's, etc., signatures at the Record Office, and that other counsel had done the same. It was then that, at the following session, he came out with the imaginary H. Liebknecht (see pp. 38-40 of Revelations†a).)
Page me41.150
Stieber knew the minute-book to be a fake. Why otherwise should he fear authentication of the genuine signatures?
Page me41.150

On 29 October, Goldheim arrived in London. Stieber had sent him there to confer on the spot with Fleury and Greif and devise some coup that might save the minute-book. He had to return empty-handed, having told Fleury that, rather than compromise the chiefs of police, Stieber was resolved, if needs be, to expose him, Fleury.

Page Break me41.151
Page me41.151
As a last recourse, Fleury now brought Hirsch a specimen of handwriting for him to use to copy out a statement, sign the latter with Liebknecht's name, and then attest it before the LORD MAYOR while falsely declaring himself (Hirsch) to be Liebknecht. On handing Hirsch the said specimen to be copied, Fleury told him that the handwriting was that of the person who had written the minute-book, and that Goldheim had brought it (the specimen) back from Cologne with him.
Page me41.151
(Hence it follows that the minute-book produced in Cologne was not the same as had been written by Hirsch and Fleury. Stieber himself had had it copied. The chief difference between it and the one fabricated by Fleury and Hirsch — a few insignificant alterations apart — lay in the fact that, whereas the minutes provided by Fleury had been unsigned, signatures had been appended to those submitted by Stieber.)
Page me41.151
Hirsch copied out the statement in handwriting as similar as possible to that of the specimen. (This last was still in his possession when he left London.) The statement was to the effect that the undersigned, i.e. Liebknecht, declared the authentication of his signature obtained by Marx and Co. to be false, and this, his signature, to be the only genuine one. While en route to the LORD MAYOR, Hirsch declared that he would not take an oath before him, whereupon Fleury said he would do so himself. First he called in at the Prussian consulate (where, of course, he was well known) and got the Prussian consul to endorse his handwriting (as that of Liebknecht). Then, together with Hirsch, he betook himself to the LORD MAYOR for the purpose of attestation. The LORD MAYOR, however, asked for guarantees, which Fleury was unable to provide, and thus no oath was taken. (One day later — but trop tard†a — Fleury obtained credentials from a lawyer.)
Page me41.151
All this dirty business came to light in an affidavit Hirsch swore before Jardine, the Bow Street magistrate. The affidavit was sent to Göbel, the president of the Appellate Court, and two copies went off simultaneously to Schneider II and the lawyer Esser.
Page me41.151
Whether Hirsch can be conveyed bodily from Hamburg to Berlin to testify in open session and confront Stieber-Goldheim-Greif, I cannot say. The present régime being what it is, there can be no question of getting hold of Cherval — now, what is more, an avowed 'civiliser' and 'LIBERATOR'.

Page Break me41.152
Page me41.152

In the case of my own testimony, I could not, of course, without being guilty of all manner of indiscretions, in any way show how one fact or another had come to my knowledge. Moreover, such evidence would not constitute proof.
Page me41.152
The trial would be altogether straightforward were the government de bonne foi.†a As things are, it is most difficult to conduct.
Page me41.152
Now I come to Fischel.†b
Page me41.152
My relations with David Urquhart and his followers (I won't say party because, apart from the sect which holds him to be a prophet in all disciplines, Urquhart can, in his own proper domain of FOREIGN POLICY, boast supporters among all English parties, from the Tories to the Chartists) have been amicable since the appearance, in 1853, of my first anti-Palmerston pamphlet.†c Ever since, there has been a constant interchange, they providing me with information, I making unpaid contributions to their Free Press (e.g. my Revelations of the diplomatic history of the 18th century, or again, the Progress of Russia in Central Asia,†176 etc.), and placing at their disposal my personal knowledge of Russian agents such as Bangya, etc. Now, Fischel is the Urquhartites' recognised and, as it were, official agent in Berlin and my knowledge of his activities there is confined to what I have heard about the Portfolio.†26 This was how I came into contact with Fischel (it was only by chance that I ran into him at a London newspaper office,†d on which occasion I asked him to convey my regards to you). He has carried out various commissions for myself and Engels in Berlin. We have never exchanged so much as a word, either verbally or in writing, on the subject of internal policy, nor for that matter have I done so with Urquhart since the time when I told him once and for all that I was a revolutionist, and he retorted no less frankly that all revolutionists were agents or DUPES of the Petersburg cabinet.
Page me41.152
In the letters we have exchanged with Fischel he has always observed the utmost discretion and confined himself solely to the one field of foreign policy in which we are in accord with the Urquhartites.
Page me41.152
You will have read Urquhart's writings, and hence it would be otiose for me (aside from the strain already involved in writing so long a letter in my present state of health) to embark on an analysis of this highly complex figure here. He is, I grant you, subjectively reactionary (romantic) (though not, indeed, in the sense of any real reactionary party but, as it were, metaphysically so); this in no way precludes the movement in foreign policy, of which he is the head, from being objectively revolutionary.

Page Break me41.153
Page me41.153
The fact that some of his German followers such as Bucher, Fischel, etc. (I don't know the latter's Moskowitertum, but I know what's in it without reading it), have chosen to adopt some of his 'Anglo-Saxon' fads — which, by the by, are not without a kind of perverse critical sense —, is to me a matter of complete indifference, just as in a war against Russia, say, it would be a matter of indifference to you whether, in firing on the Russians, the motives of your neighbour in the firing-line were black, red and gold or revolutionary. Urquhart is a power, of which Russia is afraid. He is the only official personage in England who has the courage and honesty to affront PUBLIC OPINION. He's the only one of them who is incorruptible (whether by money or ambition). Finally, and strange to say, I have so far encountered none but honest men among his followers, and hence feel bound to regard Fischel as such until I have proof of the contrary.

Page me41.153

As for F.'s relations with the Duke of Gotha,†a I have very good reason to believe that they are not venal. Seeing that this Gotha chap belongs to the English dynasty, which Urquhart is using against Palmerston and ministerial usurpation generally ('Why doesn't anyone ever shoot at cabinet ministers?' Humboldt asks, presaging such usurpation), what could suit him better than to promote anti-Russian and anti-Palmerston sentiment in Germany in his (Gotha's) name? This is why Fischel's pamphlet, Despoten und Revolutionäre, was translated into English as The Duke of Coburg's Pamphlet, and was thought important enough by Palmerston to warrant a personal reply in the form of a pamphlet (anonymous), which has greatly compromised him.†177 For Palmerston had hitherto made the unfortunate House of Coburg the scapegoat for his Russophilia, and the pamphlet compelled him to abandon this FALSE PRETEXT.
Page me41.153

It is very possible, indeed probable, that Fischel's anti-Palmerstonianism is of little significance in Berlin. On the other hand, so far as England (and thus par ricochet†b Germany) is concerned, it is important in that this controversy is being skilfully exploited by the Urquhartites and magnified into the German view of Palmerston, for the furtherance of the English controversy.

Page Break me41.154
Page me41.154

Hence, in the war that we, together with the Urquhartites, are conducting against Russia, Palmerston and Bonaparte, and in which people of all parties and classes in every capital of Europe as far as Constantinople are playing their part, Fischel, too, is a component. On the other hand, I have never exchanged so much as a syllable with Bucher, because to do so would have been pointless. Were he living in Berlin instead of London, it would be quite a different matter.
Page me41.154

Should we enter into a revolutionary phase in Germany, this will, of course, put an end to diplomacy — of a kind, by the by, that entails not the least concession on either side nor even a shadow of pretence. And even then this English connection will be useful to us.
Page me41.154

Come to that, it goes without saying that, in foreign policy, there's little to be gained by using such catchwords as 'reactionary' and 'revolutionary'. In Germany now there is no such thing as a revolutionary party, and to me the most loathsome form of reaction is Royal Prussian court democracy as practised, say, by the National-Zeitung and also, to some extent (their acclaim of that scoundrel Vincke, the Regent,†a etc.) by the Volks-Zeitung.

Page me41.154

At all events, the Urquhartites have the advantage of being 'educated' in foreign policy, so that the ignorant members obtain their inspiration from the educated ones; the advantage, too, of pursuing a definite goal, the fight against Russia, and being engaged in a life and death struggle with that mainstay of Russian diplomacy, DOWNING STREET AT LONDON.†178 Let them imagine, if they wish, that this struggle will result in the establishment of 'Anglo-Saxon' conditions. It is up to us revolutionaries to go on using them so long as we have need of them. This does not prevent us from actually knocking them on the head wherever they threaten to frustrate our internal policy. The Urquhartites have never reproached me for also writing under my own name in the Chartist newspaper that was their bugbear until its demise — Ernest Jones's People's Paper. E. Jones laughed at Urquhart's oddities, ridiculed them in his paper and yet, in that same paper, acknowledged his outstanding worth in the matter of FOREIGN POLICY.

Page me41.154

Finally, despite his fanatical hatred of the French Revolution and everything 'universal', Urquhart's romanticism is exceedingly liberal. The freedom of the individual, if in a very topsy-turvy way, is to him the be-all and end-all. It is true that, in order to achieve it, he dresses up the 'individual' in all manner of ancient garb.

Page Break me41.155

Page me41.155

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.155

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III. Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

73

MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.155

[London,] 2 June 1860

Dear Engels,

I have written Izzy ABOUT ten pages, eight of them on the Cologne trial and two on Fischel.†a It was difficult enough for me, because I'm still not fit and am dosing myself constantly.

Page me41.155

It's really sickening. Lommel advised me of the despatch of the parcel by rail [a few]†b days ago.†179 It ought to have been here long since.
Page me41.155
Fischel has written to tell me that the Daily Telegraph's correspondent in Berlin is a certain Abel.
Page me41.155
Have had a letter from Schily. From it I see that Siebel has notified him of the arrival of your pamphlets†c in Manchester. I shall have to send off Schily's copy via Rheinländer. I must also have one copy to use for my own pamphlet.†d
Page me41.155
Could you let me have something short on the Garibaldi affair for the Tribune by Wednesday†e? If that's not possible, by Friday.†f
Page me41.155
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.156
Page me41.156
Apropos. It transpires from Schily's letter that Moses†a is also correspondent of the Espérance (and so Bonapartist that one Frenchman actually broke off his friendship with him) and of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.

Page me41.156
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

74
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN PARIS
Page me41.156
[London,] 2 June 1860

My dear Sir,
My protracted silence was owed to two circumstances. On my return from Manchester I was overwhelmed with business. Afterward, I fell sick. I am still under medical treatment and little apt for writing.
Page me41.156
As to your affair with Mr Engels, the delay was caused by a second sudden departure for Germany having become necessary on his part.†180 On his return for Manchester he passed through London and told me that he would immediately settle the little bill. He regretted not having been able to prove more useful to you, but had not thought of charging you with the expenses incurred by the sending back of the wines.†b

Page me41.156

I have read your book†c with much pleasure and profit. I concur in the main views you take of the conditions necessary for the restoration of Hungary, but I dissent from the apology passed on Bonaparte and Palmerston. The latter has, in 1848-9, betrayed Hungary, as well as Italy. He had before acted in the same way in regard to Poland; he, afterwards, treated in the same way Circassia. He is still what he was since 1829 — a Russian agent, bound to the Petersburg cabinet by ties it is not in his power to cut through. Russia, of course, wants the destruction of the Austrian

Page Break me41.157
Empire, but what she not wants is the formation of the constituent elements of that empire into independent and self-sustaining states. A true reconstitution of Hungary would even more stand in the way of Russian Eastern diplomacy than tottering, vacillating and frightened Austria. I should have wished, in your own interest, and that of your country, that you had not reprinted the memorial to Palmerston,†181 not spoken of the true interest of Russia, and avoided even alluding to the dismemberment of Turkey. As it is, you have estranged exactly that portion of English politicians which was most willing to do you justice, and was least influenced by Kossuth's sycophants. (Kossuth has in these latter times given out — through his agents — and even succeeded in forcing the opinion into some weekly papers, that you were intriguing against him, because he was a Republican, in principle at least, while you belonged to the 'Constitutional and Aristocratic party'.)
Page me41.157

You excuse the liberty I have taken in frankly stating the points on which I cannot but dissent from you. The interest I take in your writings and your doings will, I hope, serve as a sufficient excuse. When will you come again over to London?

Yours truly
A. Williams†a

Page me41.157

Á propos. Perczel answered me in a letter in which he acknowledges the truth of the somewhat eccentric compliments I showered upon him, but at the same time very politely declines giving the explanations asked for.†b His letter seems written in a rather melancholic, melodramatic, and depressed mood of mind.
Page me41.157

As a curiosity I may still tell you that a Professor at the University of Moscow has held, during the past winter, a lecture on the first part of the 'criticism of political economy' published by myself.†182

Page me41.157
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me41.158

75
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.158
[London,] 14 June 1860

Dear Engels,

Can you let me have some money by Monday†a? Altogether I have laid out ABOUT £13 on the lawsuit and the Vogt affair up till now, and my being unwell has prevented me from doing any articles for the past three weeks.

Page me41.158

Siebel left yesterday.

Page me41.158

Very many thanks for your portrait.

Page me41.158

I have something most important politically to tell you (tomorrow). I cannot write any more today as a visitor is waiting for me downstairs.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.158
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

76
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.158
[London,] 16 June 1860

Dear Frederick,

The £10 safely received. BEST THANKS.

Page me41.158

Your portrait is splendid. You shall have a similar one of me.

Page me41.158

The stuff from Lommel hasn't arrived yet.†b When he complained, he was told that a parcel of this kind (for economy reasons he had sent it par petite vitesse†c) always takes several weeks.
Page me41.158
The following is an extract from Lommel's last letter:

Page Break me41.159
'You will have seen the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung of 8 June. Reading between the lines, one perceives in its Berne report, presumably written by Tscharner, co-editor of the Bund, a denunciation by the Vogtians to their lord and master in Paris and thence, indirectly, to the Federal authorities in Berne, likewise to Germany's princely courts. It's the same old tale of conspiracy — German demagogues trying to stir up trouble between France and Germany in order to make possible a central republic. Vogtian intrigue no longer cuts any ice at all, either in Federal circles or in Geneva; nevertheless, it still appears to have some effect on the limited intelligence of the German princes. This conspiratorial bogey held up to them by Badinguet†163 is actually said to have induced the timid fellows to grant him the audience in Baden-Baden he so ardently desired.†183 For the past fortnight the Allgemeine has been quietly discarding the choicest of the notes I sent it from Savoy and Turin, and Vogt, who returned here ten days ago, has told a worker that a stop will soon be put to the activities of the fellows responsible for the scrawls in the German papers and that people will be in for more surprises before long.'

Page me41.159
A pamphlet by About has now come out in Paris: Napoléon III et la Prusse.†a In the first place SOFT SAWDER for Germany. Her great men, he says, are all of them HOUSEHOLD WORDS in France, e.g. 'Goethe,- Schiller, Humboldt, Vogt, Beethoven, Heine, Liebig, etc.' France is completely disinterested, although constantly provoked. Then came some rubbish about German unity being brought about with the help of France. Then a highly superficial review of conditions obtaining in Prussia at present. (Even the Niegolewski affair is discussed at length!†184) The only way she can save herself is to side with France's 'democratic principle' against Austria's feudalism. In other words, this democratic principle consists in basing princely dictatorship on 'suffrage universel'. Satis superque!†b
Page me41.159
However, it's capital that Royal Prussian court democracy should now be getting into a nasty fix; let's hope that the Prince Regent,†c too, will soon have compromised himself sufficiently.
Page me41.159
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.159
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.160

77
ENGELS TO MARX†185
IN LONDON
Page me41.160
[Manchester,] 20 June 1860

Dear Moor,

Amicus†a Lommel would certainly appear TO DRAW RATHER LARGELY ON HIS IMAGINATION in ascribing the chief part in the Baden-Baden business to the Bonapartist denunciations.†b But it's undoubtedly quite correct that there's something behind the business and that Vogt, Bonaparte and Co. are also resorting to this stratagem.
Page me41.160

How nice it is that the Little Germans' National Association-mongering†24 should now be opportunely depicted in About's pamphlet†c as virtually promoting Bonapartist interests. Presumably our friend Izzy will soon be making a change of front now; as a result of this pamphlet, the gentlemen will either reveal themselves as Bonapartists or else find themselves in a considerable dilemma with that Prussian Germany of theirs.
Page me41.160

I happened to come by the old Danish Kjämpe-Viser†d; very nice stuff in places along with a great deal of rubbish. Here is one that Uhland has translated†186:
Page me41.160
Herr Oluf han rider saa vide
Alt for hans bröllup at byde,
Men dandsen den gaaer saa let gjennem.
Page me41.160
Der dandse fire, der dandse fem,
Ellerkongens datter rekker Haanden frem.
Velkommen, Herr Oluf, lad blive din fig
Bi lidet, og träd her i dandsen med mig.
Page me41.160
Jeg ikke tör, jeg ikke maa,
Imorgen skal mit bröllup staa.
Hor du, Herr Oluf, träd dandsen med mig,
To bukkeskinds stövle de giver jeg dig.

Page Break me41.161
Page me41.161
To bukkeskinds stövle, sider vel om been,
Forgyldene spore derom spend.

Page me41.161
Jeg ikke tör, jeg ikke maa, imorgen etc.
Page me41.161
Hor du, Herr Oluf, träd dandsen med mig,
En silke skjorte giver jeg dig.
Page me41.161
En silke skjorte hviid og fiin
Den blegte min moder veg maaneskin.
Page me41.161
Jeg ikke tör, jeg ikke maa etc.
Page me41.161
Hor du, Herr Oluf, träd dandsen med mig,
Et hoved af guld det giver jeg dig.
Page me41.161
Et hoved af guld maa jeg vel faa,
Men dandsen med dig tör jeg saa.
Page me41.161
Og vil du ikke dandsen med mig,
Sot og sygdon följe dig.
Page me41.161
Hun slog honom mellem sine Härde,
Aldrig var han slagen rärre.
Page me41.161
Hun löfte honom paa sin genger röd,
Og riid nu hjem til din fästemö.
Page me41.161
Der han kom til borgeleed,
Hans moder staar og hviler ved.
Page me41.161
Hor du, Herr Oluf, kjär sönnen min
Hvor bär du nu saa bleg en kind?
Page me41.161
Jeg maa vel bäre kinden bleg,
Jeg saa väret i Elle konens leg.
Page me41.161
Hor du, Herr Oluf, min sön saa grud,
Hvad skal jeg svare din unge brud?
Page me41.161
I skal sige, jeg er udi lunden,
Aat pröve min Hest og saa mine Hunde.
Page me41.161
Aarle om morgen, dag det var,
Der kom den brud med brudeskar.
Page me41.161
De skjänkte mjöd, de skjänkte viin;
Hvor er, Herr Oluf, brudgom min?

Page me41.161
Han er gangen udi lunden
At pröve sin Hest og saa sine Hunde.

Page Break me41.162
Page me41.162
Hun tog det skarlagen röd,
Der laae Herr Oluf og var död.†a

Page Break me41.163
Page me41.163
I like this much better than Uhland's overpolished translation. But another one about 'Sir Jon'†a is even nicer.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.163
First published, with the verses omitted, in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

78
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN PARIS
Page me41.163
[London,] 23 June†b 1860

Dear Becker,
Would you be so kind as to forward the enclosed letter to Lommel?†42 I am sending it through you because I only have an address for Lommel in Geneva which no longer appears to be certain. At any rate, in his last few letters L. has neither mentioned the letters I sent him, nor answered my inquiry regarding the failure to arrive (should have come weeks ago) of a parcel he had advised me of.
Page me41.163
Give Schily my kindest regards. I would ask you to arrange the letter Ranickel wrote him to be sent me as soon as possible.†c
Page me41.163
It was not until a day or two ago that I became capable of work again and I am still to a certain extent convalescent.

Page me41.163

The publishers of the Deutsche Zeitung, which is to come out in Berlin at the beginning of July, have approached me through a third person†d about contributions. I have not yet given them a definite answer. I am first asking for further particulars concerning the new organ's staff and politics. However, from the advertisements that have so far appeared in the papers it seems to me to be 'pro-National Association'†24 and, or so a friend in Berlin†a writes, it might be feasible to exert a strong external influence on its stand. Write and let me know if you and Schily would act as joint correspondents for the paper, which evidently has fonds, should you get an invitation to this effect either direct from Berlin or via London! I should like to have an answer about the matter by return, because I would not, of course, drop any hints to this effect in Berlin unless I was certain of your accepting in Paris.

Page Break me41.164

Page me41.164

One merit of About's pamphlet†b is that the current Gotha catch-phrases†187 are here officially adopted for Bonapartist use.

Page me41.164

I haven't seen Sasonow over here.

Page me41.164

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.164

I would ask you to send on the letter to Lommel as soon as possible.

Page me41.164

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

79
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.164
[Manchester, about 25 June 1860]

Dear Moor,

Did you see in the Kölnische Zeitung's 'Miscellaneous News' of Thursday or Friday†c that Izzy has once again contrived to be thrown out of the Viktoria Theatre?

Page me41.164
To get himself talked about, I can see the chap keeping someone to give him an annual box on the ears, come the time when his own Jewish effrontery no longer does the trick. Meanwhile, his brilliant talent for being belaboured and chucked out remains unimpaired.

Page Break me41.165
Page me41.165
Many regards to the FAMILY.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.165
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

80
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.165
[London,] 25 June†a 1860

DEAR Frederick,
I am still 'very poorly', as red Wolff†b used to say, though for the past week or so I've no longer been dosing myself. However, I am making 'forced marches' every day on Allen's orders and shall doubtless be fit again before the week is out.
Page me41.165
Lina†c is with us on 'holiday'. Will be here for ABOUT a month. Still no news from Siebel.
Page me41.165
I would be grateful if, by Friday or Saturday,†d you could [write] an article for the Tribune either on the DEFENCES OF ENGLAND, or on Garibaldi or on Indian TRADE.†e Since Wilson became the INDIAN CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, the wretched Economist has said virtually nothing about India. Nor should you forget (although it won't yet be necessary this week) to let me have ABOUT a quarto page or so on the military significance of Bohemia to Germany or rather Russia, to whom Vogt proposes to cede her.†f
Page me41.165
Apropos:
Have just received Pro domo und Pro patria gegen Karl Vogt by Jakob Venedey, Hanover 1860 (40 pages). Considering this fellow's point of view it is not altogether bad. Has some FACTS about Vogt's cowardice.

Page Break me41.166
Page me41.166
Jakob's passages relating to ourselves are as follows.
Page me41.166
A friend writes obligingly:

'It is disgraceful that in his triumph over the Augsburg Zeitung†a and the "Brimstone Gang",†65 this man Vogt should also drag Venedey in his wake' (p. 4).
Page me41.166
'No more than a word or two pro domo.†b Could Karl Vogt have forgotten that all the stale, insipid morsels he dished up to his readers in his Erklärung†c against me — "noble Jakob", "blond soul", "imperial teardrop" and sundry other epithets — had been dished up ten years ago fresh, fragrant and seasoned with the spice of wit by Marx, Engels and company in the Rhenish newspaper.†d Do I have to remind him that in the self-same article, 'Der Reichsregent',†e which the Augsburger [Allgemeine Zeitung] used as the point of departure for its accusations against Vogt, this "dirty gang, a handful of malicious vagabonds in London", as Vogt describes it, gave battle along lines identical to those adopted by Vogt in his Erklärung against myself? Nevertheless, Karl Vogt did not feel that this prevented him from accusing me of having borrowed from Messrs Marx, Engels and company the "defamatory statements" I made about him. Vogt is well aware that, in jibing at me, he is simply repeating their words' (p. 7).
Page me41.166
'This pamphlet of Vogt's†f about his lawsuit has all the air of a triumphal march and, indeed, Karl Vogt — not that he himself appears the more justified in consequence — has consigned to London in complete disarray the A.A. and likewise the "London Brimstone Gang"' (p. 6).

Page me41.166
Voilá tout.†g
Page me41.166
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.166
[On the back of the letter:]

Fred. Engels, 7 Southgate, St. Mary's, Manchester.

Page me41.166
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.167

81
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.167
[London,] 26 June 1860

Dear Frederick,
I didn't read about Izzy's adventure.†a
Page me41.167
You will see from the enclosed letter from Weber how rottenly the Prussian scoundrels are behaving.†188 It now seems that there is nothing to be expected from the High Court, either.
Page me41.167
What splendid jurisprudence! First, I'm forbidden my 'libel action' because it is not in the interests of the Prussian government. And then the 'action for injuria' is not allowed to proceed in public because there is no 'indictable offence' to hand. This is tantamount to 'pleading' on behalf of the National-Zeitung.
Page me41.167
How liberal, by contrast, Bavaria turned out to be with regard to Vogt.†189 That's 'Prussian progress' for you.
Page me41.167
Get Heckscher to publish another short notice in the Reform. The way the Prussians handled the case must at least be brought to the attention of the public.
Page me41.167
From the evidence I sent Weber and which Weber included in his indictment it was apparent to the scoundrelly gang that the National-Zeitung would inevitably have been convicted had the case been allowed to 'come up'. Hence all this dirty chicanery.
Page me41.167
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.167
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.168

82
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.168
Manchester, 26 June 1860
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

It's highly problematical whether I shall be able to do the article†a; my brother-in-law,†b who is in London at this moment, has declared himself for tomorrow or the day after.

Page me41.168

So, don't count on it too much. I could at most speculate about Garibaldi's chances on the mainland; my knowledge of Indian trade wouldn't run to an article.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.168
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

83
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.168
[Manchester, 27 June 1860]

Dear Moor,

Let me have the enclosed back; I shall immediately write a few lines for Siebel about the Berlin affair and send them to him with my reply to be passed on. The same applies to Heckscher.†c

Page me41.168

I shall see if I can still do Bohemia today.†d It is close on 8 o'clock and I'm still at the office. Whether I shall be able to do anything on Garibaldi tomorrow, I don't know yet; 1. no material, 2. my brother-in-law.†b Enfin,†e I shall do my best.

Page Break me41.169
Page me41.169

So Izzy appears in public with Vogt and is secretly our ally.†190 Cela n'est pas mal.†a Write to Meissner at once.†191

Your
F.E.

Page me41.169
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

84
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.169
[London,] 28 June [1860]

Dear Frederick,
Your enclosure returned herewith. I shall write to Meissner.†191
Page me41.169
I already knew about the comical affair of Lassalle yesterday, for the National-Zeitung carried a highly eulogistic LEADER about the admirable Studien.†b
Page me41.169
What do you make of the infamous conduct of the Prussian government?†188
Page me41.169
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.169
By the by, you should now put your name on everything. It was a disadvantage from the very start that the thing†c should have appeared anonymously.

Page me41.169
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.170

85
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.170
[Manchester, after 28 June 1860]

Dear Moor,

Encl. an article on the RIFLE parade†a; the subject occurred to me just when I was about to despair. Go over it thoroughly; I haven't the time to do so myself.

Page me41.170

Those Prussians really do have a 'nice style' just now. Since the action against the National-Zeitung could only serve to introduce a strident note of discord into the general constitutional harmony, the case must be stopped at all costs. The judges, 'and there still are such in Berlin',†192 are being got at and I'm quite positive that Mr Weber has been got at, too. It's quite plain to me from the whole tone of his letters. All the more need, then, to press on with the pamphlet†b so that the noble Prussians can be shown that they are not, after all, able to suppress such things. Those swine. Might it be, perhaps, that they quietly affected such a liberal attitude towards me,†c in order to behave all the more abominably to yourself?

Page me41.170

If possible, I shall do Bohemia this evening.†d Incidentally, you should devise the pamphlet — difficult though this may be — in such a way as to make it absolutely impossible for the Prussians to ban it. And above all be quick, for it is probable that between now and 1861 the daydream of peace will gain ascendency and hence interest in high treason wane. Do try and be a bit superficial for once, so that you get it done in time.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.170

Lommel's parcel there yet?†179

Page me41.170

Lupus leaves next week for a month's holiday in Ireland, etc., etc.

Page me41.170
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.171

86
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.171
[London,] 9 July [1860]

Dear Frederick,

As regards Meissner, the thing strikes me as somewhat dubious, since he is pretty well hand in glove with Vogt and Co. At any rate, I shan't send him a manuscript†a unless he concludes a contract beforehand.

Page me41.171

What about Bohemia? I must have it now, otherwise I shall be held up. Anyway, it need only be brief, you know.†b

Page me41.171

I should also like you to devote a few sentences to a discussion of the military inanities contained in the following utterances of Falstaff Vogt's.†c

Page me41.171

1. This man, who has made such a detailed study of the relationship between 'Energy and Matter',†193 maintains that, within their present boundaries, the United Danubian Principalities are capable — qua independent kingdom — of forming a 'bulwark' against Russia and, indeed, of withstanding the Russians, Austrians and Turks.

Page me41.171

2. As the main proof of Badinguet's†163 altruism and policy of non-conquest he puts forward the argument that, after the 'glorious' Crimean campaign,†d he did not annex either 'Russian' or 'Turkish' territory.

Page me41.171

I am still not yet quite fit. One day, I feel a bit better, the next day a bit worse.

Page me41.171

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.171

Apropos. I have seen (thanks to a young ENGLISHMAN by the name of Green) a letter from Garibaldi in which he heartily reviles Bonaparte and hopes eventually to draw his sword against him.†194

Page me41.171

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.172

87
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.172
[London,] 17 July [1860]

Dear Engels,

After sundry adventures, which I shall relate some other time, the parcel from Lommel†a will certainly arrive today or tomorrow, via Cologne. I already have the consignment note (railway) from Geneva.

Page me41.172

A couple of days ago I had a letter from Eccarius in which he told me that his tailoring had come to an end, i.e. the state of his health did not permit him to carry on with it. The doctor had said that he couldn't help him. What he needed was a change of air, etc. Accordingly, I have rented a lodging for him in this neighbourhood at my own expense (away from his FAMILY, OF COURSE, who are staying at their old place); he takes his meals with us ditto and has nothing to do save potter about the Heath†b and send one article a week to Weydemeyer, who pays him 3 dollars per article. I hope he will pull through. I have likewise bought him some port. But I can't carry on like this, since at the present moment, when our cash box is at a low ebb, the other additional expenses he involves us in are already a burden.

Page me41.172

Couldn't you do something quickly on Garibaldi, or on the Prussian government, which has pushed through its army reform behind the backs of the Chambers,†195 or something else of the kind?

Page me41.172

It's nice that Garibaldi has had Farina hounded out.†196

Page me41.172

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.172
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.173

88
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.173
[London,] 21 July 1860

Dear Engels,

On Monday evening Palmerston is to put forward his proposals on England's FORTIFICATIONS†a — a big DODGE, this. It would be a good idea if you could let me have a short article on the subject for the Tribune by Wednesday†b (for it's not till Wednesday that I have to send the thing off from here).†c
Page me41.173

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.173
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

89
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.173
[Manchester, about 23 July 1860]

Dear Moor,

You shall have the article on FORTIFICATION†d if I can possibly manage it, but under no circumstances will you be able to get it by the first post.
Page me41.173

What do you make of Kinglake's REVELATIONS?†e It wouldn't be a bad thing at all if the magnificent magnanimity of the Prince Regent†f in Baden-Baden†197 turned out to be nothing more than a pauvre†g stereotype of the Villafranca affair and Francis Joseph to be the genuinely 'magnanimous man'. Your princes, by the way, would seem after all to have realised that this time their heads are at stake; not that that is going to save them.

Page Break me41.174
Page me41.174

Just now I am reading Ulloa's Guerre d'indépendance de l'Italie 1848/49. Of all the military scribblings that have come my way (by PROFESSIONAL WRITERS) this is the most idiotic and slovenly. His criticism is so much hot air, the facts are distorted or not properly known and invariably flung together in a jumble. This Ulloa, who was a captain in the Neapolitan artillery in 1848, has called himself 'general' ever since Plon-Plon took him under his wing. This gang pullulates with mysterious generals. Moreover, if this SPECIMEN is anything to go by, the Neapolitan officers must really be a rotten lot.

Page me41.174
If Garibaldi doesn't make a move soon,†198 things may turn out badly for him, unless the business in Naples goes well, which doesn't seem likely by the look of it. No doubt there'll be a few more defections before Milazzo and Messina, but the prospects for an expedition to the Continent may deteriorate. The navy won't place any obstacles in his way for, after all, they have no wish to fight Italians, but there certainly seems to be a rabid gang within the Neapolitan army who might resist along with the foreigners, nor can G. afford a defeat. If he had 10,000 reliable men he could, of course, finish the whole thing off in three days. He must now have between 5,000 and 6,000 men, not counting the Sicilians, of course.
Page me41.174
Enclosed five pounds; it may enable you to give poor Eccarius a bit of extra help.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.174
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.175

90
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.175
[London,] 25 July [1860]

Dear Engels,
The £5 arrived. Ditto the article.†a
Page me41.175
I shall send you the Report on FORTIFICATIONS.†b Did you see Urquhart's lamentations on the subject in the latest Free Press of 4 JULY?†c If you would care to write about it in English, and this would seem to be most apposite, you should send the thing here when it is finished. I would then see what could be done with publishers, or at worst get it into a revue or a weekly.†199
Page me41.175

What Kinglake said†d was correct, as is borne out by the absurd manner in which the Moniteur reported his speech.†e
Page me41.175
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.175
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

91
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.175
[London,] 29 July [1860]

Dear Engels,
Enclosed herewith the final nonsuit from the High Court.†200 It would be useless to go on to the Supreme Tribunal. It would simply add to the costs. It's imperative that I now send Weber his 32 talers 3 silver groschen and 6 pfennigs so that the chap can let me have the documents (including his indictment) by return. I need them for the pamphlet,†a which will be ready for my wife to copy (and she'll do it quickly) within the next 8-10 days.

Page Break me41.176
Page me41.176
What is to be done next (I mean in the newspapers)?
Page me41.176
A lawsuit like this (note, e.g., the deplorable tone, reminiscent of newspaper polemics, of the High Court's findings) is something I have not come across before. These Prussian curs need a thorough hiding. It's a good thing, by the by, that they've supplied me with 'material'.
Page me41.176
Nevertheless, the craven rabble in the High Court did see fit to disallow Mr Vogt's insinuations about 'extortion', etc.
Page me41.176
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.176
Eccarius has been lodging a few doors away from us for nearly three weeks now and is feeling better.

Page me41.176
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

92
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.176
Manchester, 1 August [1860]
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,
Encl. £5, F/L 12596 for the expenses. Lupus absolutely insisted on standing £4 of it. So, here we have the celebrated High Court of the Miller of Sanssouci.†192 I should like to know what its decisions and reasoning would have been, had a Prussian official been treated in this way instead of you.
Page me41.176
It would be quite useless to set the Supreme Tribunal in motion; but might you not seek an opinion from a FIRST RATE Prussian LAWYER?

Page Break me41.177
Page me41.177
Their muddled argument shows quite plainly that the rascals have been manipulated by the Ministry itself. They've no wish for a lawsuit that would create a scandal and might upset the drowsy harmony of universal 'ministerialism'. Moreover, Schleinitz himself would be convicted in the person of the National-Zeitung.
Page me41.177
Your enclosure returned herewith. But now press on á tout prix†a with the pamphlet†b and publishing arrangements! If possible, I shall do something further for you on Caribaldi†c next week.
Page me41.177
You might inquire from the Tribune whether they would like to have a series of 4 or 5 articles on RIFLED FIRE ARMS, INCLUDING ALL THE LATEST IMPROVEMENTS — I won't do the thing on spec.†201

Your
F.E.

Page me41.177
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

93
MARX TO J.M. WEBER
IN BERLIN
Page me41.177
London, 2 August 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Sir,

I regret that, having been out of town for a few days, I did not receive your letter until today.†202 I enclose the sum of 32 Reichstalers, and, while tendering my best thanks for your careful attention to my affairs to date, would request you to go ahead with the appeal in the Supreme Tribunal. Though I do not expect to be successful, no stone should be left unturned in the endeavour to obtain justice. Legally the argument put forward by the High Court appears to me to be quite untenable.

Page Break me41.178
Page me41.178

I should be exceedingly grateful if you would send me by return your petition of 21.6.60 or, should the latter have to remain on the files for the time being, ask your secretary to make a summary of the charges contained therein (along with a list of the documents supporting the individual charges) and remit me the same.
Page me41.178

I have, Sir, the honour to be

Your obedient Servant
Dr Karl Marx

Page me41.178
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

94
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.178
[London,] 4 August [1860]

Dear Frederick,

Have sent the £5 to Weber.

Page me41.178

I am getting on with the pamphlet†a as fast as I can. What hinders me somewhat is the inability to write on certain days when my state of health is particularly "orrible'.†b

Page me41.178

I've decided, by the by, to go on to the Supreme Tribunal officials. They are now on vacation. Before they sit again, my pamphlet will have appeared (and with it my critique of the Prussian proceedings to date). We won't let the chaps off without a tremendous scandal.

Page me41.178

Write something about Garibaldi for me by Wednesday.†c

Page me41.178

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.178
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.179

95
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX†203
IN LONDON
Page me41.179
Manchester, 15 August 1860

Dear Mrs Marx,

I shall do the article,†a tant bien que mal,†b if I possibly can. Today Siebel has landed me with a young fellow from Barmen, which means I can't do anything; however, I shall probably get down to it tomorrow. By the way, it's irresponsible on Moor's part not even to answer my questions concerning Siebel.†204 For ten days now I've been putting off writing to S., and he might at least let me know what I am to tell the fellow. It's absurd, too, that nothing has yet been done about publishers; heaven knows how long negotiations will eventually take. Then, what with the notoriously dilatory methods of German printers, we'll find that we've arrived, piano ma sano,†c in the year 1861 and there'll be no one to blame but Mr Moor himself, with his thoroughness and his failure either to do anything about publishers himself, or to put Siebel in a position to do something. Meanwhile, things will be in full swing everywhere in Europe, and the public will have lost all interest in who exactly belonged to the original Brimstone Gang,†65 how the pamphlet Zur Warnung†60 came into being, or what is and is not true in Techow's letter.†56 We're forever producing truly splendid things, but take care to see that they never appear on time, and so they are all flops.

Page me41.179

An immediate riposte to Vogt three sheets long would, AFTER ALL, have been of far greater value than anything that has since been done. Insist for all you're worth on something being done — and done immediately — about a publisher, and on the pamphlet†d being finished at long last. Otherwise, we shall wreck all our chances and ultimately find ourselves without any publisher at all.
Page me41.179

But now for something comical — a great secret, however, that mustn't go beyond the four walls of No. 9 Grafton Terrace. Just imagine! That ridiculous Siebel, arriving in Barmen, goes and falls head over heels in love with a philistine girl,†e becomes engaged and intends to marry very shortly and settle down to a life of domesticity in B. What a GREENHORN! He's ashamed to tell me and doesn't know that I know about it; but he's written and told someone else here under the seal of etc., etc. It's going to be a jolly nice marriage indeed if the affair isn't broken off again.

Page Break me41.180

Page me41.180

Please give Moor and the YOUNG LADIES my warm regards,

Yours
F. Engels

Page me41.180
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

96
MARX TO J.M. WEBER†205
IN BERLIN
Page me41.180

London, 20 August 1860

Sir,

About a fortnight ago I requested you to let me have a copy of the charges preferred by you to which the High Court ruling was an answer.†a I must now repeat that request since, without such a copy, I am unable to comprehend certain points in the High Court document.

Page me41.180

I have, Sir, the honour to be

Your most obedient Servant,
Dr K. Marx

Page me41.180

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.181

97

MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN PARIS

Page me41.181

London, 21 August 1860

My dear Sir,

I was most agreeably surprised on receiving the few lines you were so friendly to address to me.

Page me41.181

My own silence is easily accounted for. For a long time after the arrival of your last letter, I was labouring under the most heavy and distressing liver-complaint, a complaint which almost disables you from writing. Later on, I was told by some acquaintance of mine, that you sojourned at London, so that I was not sure whether any letter addressed to Paris was likely to find you.

Page me41.181

Great events, as you justly remark, have come to pass, but of all things the most dangerous that, in my opinion, could happen to Europe, would be a war between the legitimate counterrevolution, seated at Warsaw, and the illegitimate counterrevolution seated at the Tuileries. Still, we must take the situation as it is, and make the best of it. If Garibaldi, whose real intentions I have ascertained from private letters communicated to me, has momentaneously been forced to strike his own flag, I hope that in the coming spring the occasion will offer of separating once for all the cause of nationalities from the cause of French counterrevolution.

Page me41.181

I have one thing to ask of you. Kossuth has in the latter times worked hard to reconquer his lost influence in the United States. I intend baffling his manoeuvres, and would therefore feel much obliged, if you would communicate to me, so soon as possible, and as circumstantially as possible, the late adventures of that mock-hero. He has been (or is) at Paris; what was he doing there? He has been at Turin; what was he about? Perhaps, you could also add some curiously grotesque details of his first appearance in Italy, during the war of 1859.†46
Page me41.181

With the events before us, it is of the highest importance, that on the one hand the good understanding between the German party of liberty and the Hungarians should be raised above every doubt — and I shall soon have the occasion of speaking (not by word of mouth, but by print†a) to Germany on this point; that on the other hand Kossuth, the would-be representative of the Hungarian Nation, should be disavowed on both sides.

Page Break me41.182
Page me41.182

Here at London I still live, and shall continue to live, in my old house, 9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill. If you visit again London, I hope you will not again forget my address. Mrs Marx, moreover, was very disappointed in missing the occasion of making the personal acquaintance of a man whose great intellectual powers she has already become familiarised with by his writings.

Yours truly
A. Williams

Page me41.182
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

98
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.182
[London,] 27 August 1860

Dear Engels,

You can attribute my long silence to the persistently frightful state of my liver, as a result of which I have to devote every spare moment to work.
Page me41.182

I wrote to Siebel re publishers ABOUT ten days ago†42 and await his reply. The long delay is due partly to my relative inability to work and partly to the fact that it was not till recently that I had all the available material. By the by, I believe that, with the exception of the Italian affair†206 (Austria's craving for intervention was a Bonapartist figment), nothing more is going to happen this year (write SOMETHING about Garibaldi. What do you think of Bangya's friend Türr?†207), so there'll be an interim period during which pamphlets of this kind will still be readable.
Page me41.182
The enclosed letter from Schily will tickle you very much. Let me have it back. Today I sent Schily your Nice, Savoy, etc.
Page me41.182
ABOUT a fortnight ago I sent Dr Zimmermann (formerly chairman of a Prussian Municipal Court) a letter, in which I put to. him questions relating to my case (questions of form).†42 However, he deemed it necessary to confer with other brethren of the same craft in Berlin. No doubt I shall get his written opinion in the course of this week. I shan't allow the Prussians to get off so lightly.

Page Break me41.183
Page me41.183
I'm in a great fix over money.
Page me41.183
Mr Weydemeyer's journal†a is already at an end; i.e. he has resigned from the editorial board and intends to go to New York as a SURVEYOR. However, his colleague†b is going to make the paper pay by selling it to a political party. Weydemeyer has at last come to realise that he's too honest for American journalism.
Page me41.183
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.183
How's business in Manchester? India? HOME MARKET?

Page me41.183
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

99
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.183
[London,] 29 August 1860

Dear Engels,

Is there still an opening for Eccarius with the tailor in Manchester? If so, he must leave here as he's fit for work again (he's still living out here), business in London is bad and he would, besides, have to go back to the sweatshop.†c

Page me41.183

The wherewithal to send him up there with his FAMILY is being procured down here.

Page me41.183

For your information, I should tell you that I believe he is suffering from a disease of the spinal cord. His wife is a revolting creature, a curious amalgam of aspirations after respectability (CHURCHWARDEN'S DAUGHTER) and Irishness. Her housekeeping is slovenly.

Page Break me41.184

As for him, his energy is of the passive kind — not at all active, particularly since the disease has grown worse. From the outset, therefore, he ought not to be cossetted in Manchester, should he come up there. For the thumbscrew will have to be applied to him, otherwise she will get ideas into her head.

Page me41.184

I must have something about Garibaldi soon. That's the only thing that interests the Yankees.†207

Page me41.184

Today a letter arrived from my Berlin lawyer†a containing his petition to the Supreme Tribunal. You shall have it later. He himself hasn't properly grasped the point about the flysheet and Blind†b; however, he's taken in the rest pretty well.

Page me41.184

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.184

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

100
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.184
[London,] 1 September 1860

Dear Engels,

Herewith a letter from Weydemeyer.

Page me41.184

Secondly, a letter from my lawyer.†c You should send me back the latter. Clearly the chap hasn't grasped the point about the flysheet and I'd let him have further information on the subject in the unlikely event of the Supreme Tribunal's referring the case back to the Municipal Court for an actual hearing. Here we have one of the beauties of Prussian jurisprudence. I have now been through five provisional courts to obtain 'bureaucratic permission' actually to conduct the lawsuit. Such things could only happen in the 'enlightened State' of Prussia.

Page Break me41.185

Page me41.185

It is now three o'clock, so I don't suppose your Garibaldi article†a will arrive today. I wouldn't BOTHER you so much about the affair if it wasn't for the fact that, during the elections, the Yankees are reading nothing about foreign affairs SAVE for the melodramatic events in Italy.†206 Aside from that, articles on the HARVEST and TRADE at most, on which subjects one cannot, of course, decently write more than once a week.†208

Your
K.M.

Page me41.185

La Moïse's†b general is 'Sauernheimer', appointed General of the 'Bristlers'†c by Abt. Package received (Thursday).†209

Page me41.185

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

101
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.185

[London, after 2 September, 1860]

Dear Frederick,

I should be very glad if you could send me the Guardians.
Page me41.185
I thought I had acknowledged receipt of the £5 in my last letter.†d Have received a letter from Gumpert, dated Scotland. More anon.
Page me41.185
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.185
Have not heard anything from Siebel yet.
Page me41.185
The next turn of events will, I think, be Piedmont contra Mazzini.

Page me41.185
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.186

102
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN AACHEN
Page me41.186
London, 7 September 1860
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,
I was delighted to hear from you again at last, although sorry that you should have no better news for me as regards your health. I myself am still suffering from my liver complaint; not as painful as gout (nor as distinguished, at least in English eyes), but perhaps even more disruptive when it comes to brain-work.
Page me41.186
There are two main reasons for postponing the publication of my anti-Vogt piece,†a aside from my being necessarily engaged on more urgent work. These are:
Page me41.186
1. I wanted to wait until the end of the lawsuit against the National-Zeitung, but have now decided not to.
Page me41.186
The lawsuit has passed through the following stages: First the Public Prosecutor†b and then the Chief Public Prosecutor†c dismissed the action, because 'no public interest' would be served by ex officio intervention. Next came the civil action. The Municipal Court issued a 'ruling' to the effect that the action be dismissed, because the defamatory passages were merely (which, N.B., is incorrect) 'quoted'. The High Court declared the Municipal Court's argument to be mistaken, but arrived at the same conclusion, because the libellous passages neither did nor could refer to me (this the court proves by dint of 'misquoting'), the National-Z. had no intention to insult, etc. The very style of the 'ruling' is enough to betray the fellows' embarrassment. Now we have reached the Supreme Tribunal. Thus, I have now so far improved my knowledge of Prussian justice as to know that it is up to the officers of the judiciary whether a private individual gets a public hearing at all. For all these rulings are mere 'preliminaries' aimed at precluding any sort of encounter between myself and the Nat.-Z. in open court. In his letters Legal Counsellor Weber, who appears to know nothing about my friendly relations with the Prussian government, throws up his hands in dismay at these 'inexplicable' rulings.

Page Break me41.187
Page me41.187

As you know, I instituted the lawsuit against the Nat.-Z. before I was in possession of Vogt's book.†a However, I was on the right track, for the Nat.-Z., with commendable tact, had picked out all — but really all — the actionable libels (I am speaking here of calumnies within the meaning of the Code, not mere abuse by the fellows, which I did not wish to attack in court) from Vogt's concoction and had even, in some cases, added to their sting. But on every single count I found myself in the position, not of demanding that my opponent provide proof that it was true, but of myself being able to provide proof that it was false. The only exception was the matter of hundreds of threatening letters sent to Germany for the purpose of extorting money. In this instance, of course, it was the N.-Z.'s business to get friend Vogt to send them one of those threatening letters.
Page me41.187

Hence the courts realised that, as soon as the case came up in open court, the verdict must go against the N.-Z., and this, not to mention a legal victory for me, would indeed be 'contrary to the public interest'. The 'Supreme Tribunal' will find some other subterfuge. But in this way the Prussians are at any rate supplying me with material whose pleasing repercussions in the London press will soon be brought home to them.
Page me41.187

2. The real snag just now is the question of a publisher.
Page me41.187

The thing can't very well appear in Prussia since various passages relating to Stieber, etc., would lay the publisher open to prosecution. My negotiations in Hamburg, etc., have so far been of no avail. Either the chaps want to have nothing to do with it, or else they take the liberty of laying down conditions as to the tone and contents of the piece, to which I cannot, of course, agree. O. Meissner would have taken the thing, had he not previously published Demokratische Studien, to which, besides yourself and Grün, Vogt, along with his whole clan, Bamberger, Simon, etc., contributed.
Page me41.187

The best thing would be to get the thing printed over here and distributed on the Continent by some German bookseller here (as Vogt did from Geneva). But, unlike Vogt, I have no Bonapartist subsidies, with which to get the pamphlet of some 12 to 15 sheets printed in this country.
Page me41.187
So that's how matters stand. As you will have gathered, my attitude towards Vogt is not as mild as German publishers would wish it to be vis-á-vis the Herr Professor. I treat him en canaille†a and as a figure of fun, i.e. in accordance with his deserts.

Page Break me41.188
Page me41.188
Masses of inquiries have reached me from Switzerland and America about the publication of the scrawl.
Page me41.188
My wife sends her kind regards. For months I have avoided Freiligrath, not wanting to have a disagreeable encounter with him; nor, at a crucial moment, could I relish the cowardly hedging (on account of his business connection with James Fazy, who is his principal). (But what I thought particularly unseemly was the way he continued to consort with Blind on an intimate footing, after I had shown him legal documents proving that Blind had, under incriminating circumstances, extracted from Wiehe, the compositor, a false deposition for publication in the Allgemeine Zeitung relative to the flysheet Zur Warnung.†210) Nevertheless, in the eyes of the world we are 'friends' just as we have always been. But intercourse between our families has been completely broken off. As you know, my wife is of a determined disposition.
Page me41.188
I hope you will soon send better news of yourself.
Page me41.188
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.188
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

103
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.188
[London,] 13 September 1860

Dear Engels,

I hope to get an article from you for Saturday.†b If at all possible.

Page me41.188

Herewith Zimmermann's legal opinion on the questions I put to him.†c (To be returned to me next week.)

Page Break me41.189

Page me41.189

Also, for your amusement, a copy of a letter given to me by Eccarius.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.189

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

104

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.189

[London,] 15 September 1860

Dear Engels,

THANKS FOR THE ARTICLE.

Page me41.189

I enclose herewith Eichhoff's piece†a which, however, you must return to me intact within 2 or 3 days at the outside. It doesn't belong to me. The scrawl had no sooner come out than it was confiscated in Berlin. This copy is the only one to be had in London. Part II, about Patzke, etc., so badly written, is excruciatingly funny. Moreover, it shows you what those stinking courts of justice in Berlin are like. And the infamous press there, venting all of its liberal leonine courage on Bombalino and reserving none for its Patzke, its tribunals and its utterly contemptible Prince Regent.†b

Page me41.189

Garibaldi is a veritable godsend. OTHERWISE, Bonaparte would have been restored to popularity and sustained by the Russo-Prussian-Austrian Holy Alliance.†211

Page me41.189

Our gentle Heinrich Bürgers — but you'll see this for yourself from the enclosed epistle from Lassalle (also to be returned) — has gone over to the Prince Regent. Lassalle wrote to me first, from Aachen, where he is taking the waters for gout. Amongst other things, he says that in Cologne and Düsseldorf, where the Workers' Associations have been reorganised under the leadership of two young barristers unknown to us,†c my anti-Vogt piece†d is eagerly awaited. Borkheim brought back the same news from

Page Break me41.190
Switzerland. In reply to Lassalle's pressure, I told him†a that all we can hope for (and such, judging by Siebel's letters, is the case) is to get the printing done in London, whence Petsch would transact business in Germany through the usual channels (Leipzig), and in other countries direct. To this end, I wrote, money is needed. Next I get the fellow's letter. But he won't get off so easily. I'm writing to him again today.†b He'll have to disgorge at least £30 by way of conscience-money. Borkheim is contributing £12. Thus, the major part of the expenses would already be met. Herewith a specimen proof from Hirschfeld. It would amount to £4 10/- a sheet. But there'd be as much on it as on two ordinary sheets. Take a look at the final pages of the conclusion to L.'s endless letter, where he lavishes much praise on my political economy.†c He would seem not to have understood much of its economics — as is plainly evident from the way he expresses himself.
Page me41.190
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.190
Apropos.
Page me41.190
The Neue Preussische Zeitung says the Demokratische Studien (Walesrode, Bamberger, Lassalle, Vogt, Grün, Oppenheim, etc.) were written by 8 genuine and 2 'artificial' Jews.

Page me41.190
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

105
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.190
Manchester, 15 September 1860

Dear Moor,

I return herewith the legal stuff.†d The letter from Jacob Weasel†e will follow tomorrow, as will the Eichhoff,†f which Gumpert is still reading. I found the letter from our Weasel most cheering, or, rather, it brought a smile to my lips; it's a splendid tonic for your liver, if nothing else. The things about the Prussian government are quite interesting, but the best of it is that the chap imagines we should now concede that he is right over the Italian question!!! Now, when, in Italy itself, Cavour is actually being attacked and threatened by the revolutionary party! What naïveté. Now, with Garibaldi on the point of attacking Bonaparte in Rome,†a we are to admit that, in the spring of this year, we should have joined forces with Cavour and Bonap. and — qui sait?†b — might yet join forces with them! True, Mr Weasel is very reticent about the present.

Page Break me41.191
Page me41.191
You must at all costs avoid having your pamphlet†c printed in London. I immediately wrote to Siebel once again. Firstly, the thing would be confiscated at once, perhaps actually on the frontier or at Leipzig, and secondly, even if this didn't happen, distribution would again be so appallingly bad that no one would ever set eyes on the thing. The experience is one we have been through hundreds of times with émigré literature. Always the same ineffectuality, always money and labour gone down the drain — not to mention the irritation. And then, where's the money to come from? According to your letter, it will call for £50 to £60 or more, and Lassalle certainly won't get us £30. Come to that, the thing ought to be worded in such a way that it could be printed and distributed in Germany; of what use to us is a riposte to Vogt which no one ever sets eyes on? And I simply don't see why we need any confiscable content here. Even with the press regulations as they now are, you can still say enough to drive the Prussians mad, and that, after all, is preferable to satisfaction in partibus†d of which the public remains unaware and which, as it were, you give yourself merely in private.
Page me41.191
Some three weeks ago I sent an article on the RIFLE MOVEMENT†e to the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung in Darmstadt and, because in my dealings with those professional soldiers I couldn't risk sailing UNDER FALSE COLOURS, I told the fellows in an accompanying letter†f that I had fought in the campaign in Baden on the side of the insurgents.†212 They did print the article all the same and it has now appeared in English over here as well.†g If possible, I shall

Page Break me41.192
send it to you this evening; there is no need to return it to me, as I shall be getting a copy of my own in a week's time. This is a connection of great value to me as regards military affairs.†213
Page me41.192
The business of the Holy Alliance†a is pretty disastrous and in France will be of enormous help to Bonap. Garibaldi, that's the only redeeming feature. Meanwhile, I'm anxious to know how the liberal philistines in Prussia will feel about her coming under Russia's aegis again. Nowhere else in the world, by the way, does the gutter-press equal that of Berlin; this time it even seems to have gone too far for the Weasel. I'll tell you this — it's impossible so much as to pick up the National- or the Volks-Zeitung; the stench of their boring balderdash and know-all fadaise†b carries half a mile or more.

Page me41.192
At the National Association,†24 too, Mr Miquel held forth with genuine National Association sagacity. As for Heinrich,†c he has at long last discovered his standpoint.
Page me41.192
Regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.192
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

106
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN AACHEN
Page me41.192
[London,] 15 September 1860

Dear Lassalle,
I am writing very briefly to make sure this note still finds you.
Page me41.192
1. I wrote to Freiligrath (day before yesterday)†42 about an answer to your question.†214 None arrived.†d Answering such questions conflicts, of course, with his duty to his office.
Page me41.192
2. As regards the book on Vogt†e: After trying this, that and the other, I have come to the conclusion that printing in London is the only possibility. By the by, deliberately written so as not to be confiscable. Although not printable in Berlin, it would, like any other book, be distributed in Germany from Leipzig; in Switzerland, Belgium, America direct from here. Engels is paying for one share, I for another. But the thing's expensive since a sheet costs 4 1/2 pounds sterling over here. You must contribute a share if you can. I have optimistically arranged for printing to begin not later than next week. If the money has not been collected, nothing will be lost, save the sum to be paid for what has already been printed.

Page Break me41.193
Page me41.193

3. Garibaldi shared my opinion of Bonaparte's mission,†a just as Mazzini did. I have actually seen letters of Garibaldi's on this score. However, the past is no longer of any concern. As soon as Garibaldi has divested the Italian cause of Bonaparte (and such is his object, expressly stated in a letter he wrote to an English acquaintance of mine, Green),†b all disputes within the revolutionary party will cease. But what is important now is that we should come to an agreement on a programme. If you would care to make a brouillon,†c Engels, Wolff and I will agree possible modifications with you. The time is approaching when our 'small' if, in a certain sense, 'powerful party' (inasmuch as the others do not know what they want, or do not want what they know) must devise its plan of campaign. That we in particular (here in England) should adopt a national stance seems to me tactically correct — quite apart from any inherent justification.
Page me41.193

4. As for our attitude towards Russia, I think you are mistaken. The view that I and Engels have formed is a quite independent one, having, I may say, been laboriously evolved over many years from the study of Russian diplomacy. True, Russia is hated in Germany and, in the very first issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, we presented an anti-Russian war as the revolutionary mission of Germany. But hating and understanding are two altogether different things.
Page me41.193

5. Your praise of my book†d gave me great pleasure, coming as it did from a competent judge. I think that Part II may very likely come out before Easter. It will take a somewhat different form, more popular TO SOME DEGREE. Not, of course, as a result of any impulse from within myself, but, first, because Part II has an expressly revolutionary function, and, second, because the conditions I describe are more concrete.

Page Break me41.194
Page me41.194

In Russia my book has caused a considerable stir, and a professor in Moscow has given a lecture on it.†182 Moreover, many Russians, in particular, have written to me very kindly about it. Ditto German-speaking Frenchmen.
Page me41.194

6. Ad vocem†a H. Bürgers.†215 How like the gentle Heinrich. He was, it is true, nominally co-editor of the N. Rh. Z., but never wrote for it, except for one article,†b of which I deleted one half and rewrote the other. So enraged was he about this (it happened during the early days of the paper) that he asked for a general vote. This I conceded as an exception, at the same time explaining that a newspaper office should be ruled dictatorially and not by general vote. Universal suffrage went universally against him. After that, he wrote nothing more, Prison, by the by, is said to have had a very moderating effect on him. Give me Casemate Wolff†c any day. Admittedly, his temperament is diametrically the opposite of Bürgers'.
Page me41.194

What has vexed me more than Bürgers is that Miquel, a Göttingen lawyer and a very gifted and energetic member of our party, has joined Bennigsen.
Page me41.194

7. Polizei-Silhouetten by Dr Eichhoff published in Berlin. Badly written, but contains some delectable things. Throws a fine light on the liberal 'police' and the 'law-courts' in Berlin. Was instantly confiscated. One copy arrived here safely.
Page me41.194
8. I must confess my complete ignorance of Prussian legal procedure. I never imagined I should get material justice. But I did think the procedure was such that I would at least succeed in getting as far as a public hearing. That was all I wanted.
Page me41.194
Under (old) Rhenish procedure, did a private action for injuria or libel also depend on prior permission being obtained from officers of the judiciary, i.e. the government?
Page me41.194
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.194
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.195

107
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†216
IN AACHEN
Page me41.195
[London, 15 September 1860]

Dear Lassalle,
Have just received this letter†a which I am sending off to follow my first.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.195
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

108
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.195
[London,] 20 September [1860]

Dear Engels,

You must let me have the Eichhoff†b and Lassalle's letter back by return of post.
Page me41.195

I am counting on getting an article on Garibaldi, Lamoriciére, or the CHINESE WAR for Saturday.†c
Page me41.195

Shall probably be writing to you at greater length tomorrow.
Page me41.195

In great haste.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.195

Although my finances here are in a horrible muddle, I have sent my wife and children to Hastings for a week. I have not the means to keep them there any longer. Unfortunately, they've had rain almost all the time.

Page me41.195
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.196

109
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.196
[London,] 25 September 1860

Dear Engels,

The family arrived back safely yesterday.
Page me41.196

With regard to the enclosed letter from Dana I should explain that, after your visit to London,†217 I wrote to Dana†42 saying I would rather he assigned the 'NAVY' article to some other contributor to the Cyclopaedia.†218 After that, I didn't hear from him and thought the matter had been DROPPED until the enclosed letter turned up yesterday. If you could possibly do the thing — however briefly and superficially DOES NOT MATTER — it would be of enormous help to me, particularly just now, since, to obtain a breathing-space, I was forced on 14 September to draw an anticipatory bill on Dana, having a life of 2 months (payable 2 months after date). When writing to him, I reminded him of our long-standing friendship, as this was, in fact, against the PRINCIPLES of the Tribune. However, my letter crossed his, so just now it behoves us to keep him happy, quite apart from the necessity of his continuing to believe that we can do everything. So, if it is at all possible, you would oblige me more than I can say by doing the thing. Ten pages was the maximum prescribed by Dana. FIFE DO ALSO,†a if not otherwise feasible. The point is that something should go off.

Page me41.196
How WITH Lamoriciére?†b
Page me41.196
What do you think of the Garibaldi situation?
Page me41.196
Kossuth was balked by Mazzini's intervention; he had been sent by Bonaparte. Garibaldi was to have by-passed Rome and marched on Venice direct.†219
Page me41.196
Now, ad vocem†c Vogt.
Page me41.196
The thing's†d being printed here.
Page me41.196
1. Money. All I have to pay is £25. £12 from Borkheim, Lassalle has promised me £8. There remains £5. The other printing costs, ditto distribution costs will be met by Petsch, the publisher. We are SHARERS TO EQUAL PARTS in the profits, after deduction and refund of the costs. I told Petsch this was now the only condition upon which I would have the thing published in London.

Page Break me41.197
Page me41.197
2. The thing is not confiscable. This was a misapprehension on Lassalle's part. I had told him, on the contrary, that, though not confiscable, it could not appear in Berlin because no publisher there would print it because of the communist trial.†44
Page me41.197
3. We are no longer in the 1850-58 era. Petsch has his agents in Leipzig, Berlin, and Hamburg. So, the thing will be distributed through ordinary booksellers' channels in Germany. In Belgium, Switzerland, and America, Petsch will sell direct through his agents there, thus saving a great deal of time. Advertisements in the newspapers, booksellers' notices, etc., will be attended to here, with my assistance. We shall send Siebel 50 copies to be distributed to journals, etc. Confiscation I hold to be out of the question. Vogt is not the Prince Regent,†a and Stieber has officially fallen into disgrace. I am deliberately keeping myself en réserve where politics are concerned.
Page me41.197

4. We are saving time, for in Germany we might spend months yet doing the rounds; also time on proof-correcting, etc. It is Petsch's first publication (along with an anti-About pamphlet of Borkheim's†b), and he will go to no end of pains, if only in his own interests.
Page me41.197
5. If the thing goes well, as I have every reason to suppose, Petsch will publish pamphlets, whether by you or me, in German or English and put an end to BURKING by German publishers. (2 sheets already printed.)
Page me41.197
On this occasion, therefore, necessity would appear to have been a virtue. Qu'en pensez-vous?†c I believe that Po and Rhine†d ditto Savoy,†e etc., would have created much more of a stir had they come out here in London.
Page me41.197
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.197
Apropos. You rightly considered Ex-Reichs-Vogt an unsuitable title. Karl Vogt seems unsuitable to me because I don't want to put 'Karl Marx' after Karl Vogt. Hence my proposed title, Dâ-Dâ-Vogt. For, as I reveal in the section containing the critique of Vogt's

Page Break me41.198
Studien,†a Dâ-Dâ is an Arab writer who is made use of by Bonaparte in Algiers as Vogt is in Geneva. Dâ-Dâ will PUZZLE your philistine, and it's funny.

Page me41.198
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

110
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.198
Manchester, 1 October 1860

Dear Moor,
Where has your family been to, if they are now safely back home?†b I'm completely in the dark. To the SEASIDE, perhaps, or to the country? I hope it has done them good.

Page me41.198

'NAVY' is most inconvenient just now.†c I'm having the hell of a time with the LAWYERS over matters connected with the firm — no one in Germany has an inkling of the way things drag on here, and it's precisely this week that the fellows must needs descend on me with a mass of files, etc. However, I shall do my best†220 but it certainly won't be a quick job, for I'm in no way au fait.

Page me41.198

Quanto a†d Vogt: I must say that I don't like your title at all.†e If you want to give him a nickname, surely it must be one that is comprehensible to people without their having to read the book; alternatively it should only appear in the actual book after the explanatory bit. To my mind, the simpler and more unaffected the title the better, except that Bonaparte, or at least Plon-Plon, should, if possible, figure in it as well as Vogt. If you object to 'Carl' Vogt, call him Herr Vogt, though I don't see why 'Carl' cannot appear above 'Karl' — no one is going to make a joke about it.

Page me41.198

Printing in London: I have no confidence in a publishing operation that requires us to advance all or half the money. The enclosed letter from Siebel shows that he was far from giving up the affair for lost, quite the contrary, and was only waiting for instructions in order to act (let me have it back, it hasn't been answered yet). I've seen only too often what happens when things are printed abroad, and I fear that it will be exactly the same this time. If Vogt is an exception (and, after all, his thing was printed in Frankfurt!), he was also backed up by the press, which certainly isn't going to happen to us. Besides, Mr Petsch is having to pay for the advertisements, etc., etc., and hence won't be particularly keen to advertise too much. Tu verras.†a At all events, you would certainly have been able to find a publisher in Germany long ago, had you got Siebel moving properly, and I always prefer it this way†b; furthermore, Hirschfeld's little press is not going to be in overmuch of a hurry. However, the thing is under way, and we shall have to see how it turns out. It would be best, I think, if, in addition to the title, you were to include nothing but the chapter headings in the advertisement; that would be quite sufficient. And, above all, see that the thing gets finished.

Page Break me41.199

Page me41.199

When 3-4 sheets have been printed, you might send me copies.

Page me41.199

Apropos: What do 5 or 10 of Dana's pages amount to?†c I've no idea.

Page me41.199

Lamoriciére has been ignominiously surprised by the Piedmontese.†221 He was completely unprepared on that flank, his defences were directed exclusively against Garibaldi, and he had manned the worthless citadels in the towns with small garrisons fit only to deal with uprisings. Hence the succession of surrenders; overall, the Piedmontese were 6 to 1. At Castelfidardo the Austrians fought very well, likewise at Ancona, which is in no sense a fortress on the landward side; but, on the whole, the papal army shows how little can be achieved with a force which, though good in part, is heterogeneous and commanded by all kinds of foreign officers. Admittedly the Piedmontese were 3 to 1.

Page me41.199

From a military point of view, Garibaldi appears to be getting short of breath. He has dispersed his good troops among the Sicilian and Neapolitan battalions to such an extent that he no longer has any kind of organisation, and as soon as he reaches a moderately well defended river line with a fortress he does not command, as at Capua, he comes to a halt. Not that it matters much for the time being, since the 30,000 Neapolitans can't subsist on that small strip of land, and will have to disband in a fortnight or advance, which they won't succeed in doing. But, unless he has some really exceptional strokes of luck, it's hardly likely that G. will reach the Quirinal†222 so quickly. On top of that, the Cavourians are now raising a hubbub; before long, these wretched bourgeois will be able to make his position untenable, so that as a pis aller†a he'll be forced to attack before he's capable of winning. Apart from this, it would be essential to trounce the Neapolitans as quickly as possible and then induce the Piedmontese to fraternise before Victor Emmanuel joined them, for by then it would be too late, and they would stay loyal to Victor Em. But it is of the utmost significance that the French in Rome†223 should have been publicly placed by G. in the same category as the Austrians in Venice. Whether their expulsion will or will not be effected forthwith is of lesser significance.

Page Break me41.200

Page me41.200

Things in Austria look splendid. A National Association†24 philistine, a Rhenish Prussian, who lives in Bavaria (Franconia), relates that people from Munich, who recently attended the railway festival in Vienna, never doubting the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung's reports about conditions in Austria, returned quite dumbfounded, so different had they found everything. The Austrians had told them that it was all humbug and that conditions there were no longer bearable. He also said that the bourgeoisie in Austria already had a specific for the financial imbroglio: in Austria 20% of all landed property belongs to the clergy, and this must be confiscated. Can one imagine a more splendid revolutionary situation? What is all that supercilious Prussian sophistry along with its National Association when compared with such a programme?

Page me41.200

The writings of Prince Frederick Charles†b and Mr Waldersee†c have convinced me beyond doubt that the Prussians have organised and trained their army so splendidly that they must inevitably be beaten. In order to remedy the defect arising from 45 years' lack of war experience, they have created a mock conventional war in the shape of manoeuvres where everything is different from real war, and where soldiers and officers are expressly instructed to retreat on any pretext and where completely wrong notions and things are drummed into them. E.g., on manoeuvres soldiers are not, of course, permitted to enter and occupy houses; the houses, therefore, are marked as being occupied by posting soldiers round the outside. In Schleswig during a battle a Prussian captain received the order to occupy a farm, whereupon he posted his men round its perimeter fence, just as though on manoeuvres! Waldersee saw this with his own eyes. Prince Fr. Charles, by the way, is by no means a bad chap as soldiers go and absolutely detests the pointless grind of the Prussian parade ground. But, whether he's any good as a commander, it is impossible to say.

Page Break me41.201

Your
F.E.

Page me41.201
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

111
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.201
[London,] 2 October 1860

Dear Engels,

One of my letters must have failed to reach you, for I wrote and told you that my FAMILY was spending a week at the SEASIDE.†a
Page me41.201

As regards Dana's pages,†b one of your large pages (e.g. in Artillery) was the equivalent of one of Dana's.
Page me41.201

My impression of Siebel's letter was exactly the opposite of yours,†c namely his helplessness. Meissner, by reason of the Demokratische Studien, is actually in the enemy camp. Moreover, it would appear from his private conversation with Siebel that he expected a 'dignified' discussion and regards Vogt as a great man. O. Wigand is a personal enemy of mine and, years ago, on my offering to entrust him with the Eighteenth Brumaire (even for nothing), wrote me a churlish reply.†224 Oelbermann in Bonn is a mere fantasy. I know the meridian of Bonn. All in all, the pamphlet†d is pretty well unpublishable in Germany (especially as Siebel has no connections with Leipzig publishers), judging by the style that has become established during the 10 years of reaction. And then to have the manuscript actually hawked round from one man to the next, thereby causing the whole thing to be blabbed out, without finding a taker — or only after protracted wanderings! I should, of course, prefer Cotta, Brockhaus or even Campe to Mr Petsch; but circumstances being what they are, I still regard him as a WINDFALL. Borkheim, who is a very good businessman, has great faith in Petsch. Finally, our last experiences in Germany were hardly encouraging.

Page Break me41.202

Page me41.202

Printing will go ahead more quickly this week at Hirschfeld's. He still had all kinds of stuff that had to be finished.
Page me41.202

I shall think about the title again. The fact that Dâ-Dâ will PUZZLE your philistine pleases me and fits in with my SYSTEM OF MOCKERY and CONTEMPT.†a Nevertheless (the title will, of course, be printed last), I shall again discuss it exhaustively with my critical conscience.†b Contents are as follows: I. The Brimstone Gang. II. The Bristlers. III. Police Matters. 1. Confession. 2. The Revolutionary Congress in Murten. 3. Cherval. 4. The Communist Trial in Cologne. 5. Joint Workers' Festival in Lausanne. 6. Miscellany. IV. Techow's Letter. V. Imperial Regent and Count Palatine. VI. Vogt and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. VII. The Augsburg Campaign. VIII. Vogt's Studien. IX. Agency. X. Patrons and Accomplices. XI. Lawsuit against the National-Zeitung. XII. Appendices.
Page me41.202

As you have no time just now for articles, write to me privately when anything of a military nature happens in Italy, informing me, quite briefly, of the chief points. I shall then myself DODGE what is necessary into shape.
Page me41.202

J. Ph. Becker wants to go to Naples†c (accompanied by Schily). He wants to raise a German volunteer corps there. (!!!)
Page me41.202

I am completely broke. If you could send me a £ or two before the week is out, it would be very WELCOME.
Page me41.202

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.202

The effrontery of The Times (yesterday's) in suggesting that Garibaldi inspired 'CONFIDENCE' so long 'AS HE COULD BE BELIEVED TO BE THE AGENT OF THE SECRET INTENTIONS OF NAPOLEON III',†d is truly staggering.

Page Break me41.203
Edwin James, the clown, was in such a FUNK that he fled all the way back to London, arriving the day before yesterday.†225 In the Plon-Plonist Opinion nationale Kossuth has addressed a letter to Garibaldi, which was written both in the spirit and at the behest of the Bonapartists.
Page me41.203

Your RIFLE article†a has gone the rounds of the London press†226 and has even been discussed in the pro-government Observer. This was a SENSATION.

Page me41.203

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

112
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.203
[London,] 2 October 1860

Dear Lassalle,

Forwarded your letter to Freiligrath forthwith.

Page me41.203

When I wrote saying you should 'muster' a quota, I was, OF COURSE, deliberately using an ambiguous term. Only do not enlist the help of anyone who is not a personal friend of mine. I should be glad, by the by, to receive the contribution at an early date. Come to that, I don't believe it will be á fonds perdu,†b for we shall at least recoup the cost of production.

Page me41.203

Engels wrote an essay on the English RIFLES†c for the Darmstadt Militär-Zeitung, which he subsequently translated for the Manchester Volunteer Journal. It has been reproduced and discussed by the entire London Press.†226

Page me41.203

From letters that have come to me straight from Garibaldi's camp, things would seem to be in rather parlous state. Cavour is actually Bonaparte's tool and controls Victor Emmanuel. Garibaldi is in a difficult position vis-á-vis Bonaparte and the Piedmontese army, the more so in that all the bourgeois and aristocratic riff-raff in Italy are on the side of Cavour. Somewhat to the detriment of his own army, G. has been compelled to disperse his best troops amongst Neapolitan riff-raff and Piedmontese troupiers.†a

Page Break me41.204

Page me41.204

You will forgive me, if I do not reply to your letter this time, nor, indeed, write more than a few lines. Besides being taken up (agreeably) with proof-correcting†b and my habitual tasks, I have the added blessing of a most frightful catarrh, affecting the whole of the left side of my head.

Page me41.204

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.204

The Supreme Tribunal has not yet reached a decision. As soon as the case is disposed of and I am debarred from public proceedings, I shall publish a sheet (pamphlet), Prussian Justice†227 over here.

Page me41.204

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

113

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me41.204

Manchester, 5 October 1860

Dear Moor,

Enclosed £5 note E/L 33688 Manchester, 12 Jan. 60.

Page me41.204

I would have sent it sooner, but Gumpert touched me for ten pounds, after which I had to wait a day or two so as not to make myself conspicuous by drawing a lot of money all at once.

Page me41.204

As to printing in London, the chief consideration, of course, is that the thing†c should appear and appear quickly; but printing in Germany was preferable and could undoubtedly have been arranged. However SHARP Petsch may be, a German publisher, e.g. Meissner (who is far from being the philistine you imagine him to be — just take a look at his list) is in a much stronger position to break the conspiration du silence. Nor do I account it in any way a blessing that the party is thus also compelled to invest capital, for we've little enough as it is.

Page Break me41.205

Page me41.205

Title — I would repeat, and this is quite definitely Lupus's opinion also, that at any rate, a title that requires one to read half the book before one finds out what it means could not be more unhappy. Your philistine has long since ceased to take such an interest in Vogt as to PUZZLE over why you should call him Dâ-Dâ. The only thing that can make Vogt interesting is his connection with Bonaparte and Plon-Plon, and this you must emphasise in the title, if you are to arouse the philistine's curiosity. So far as the title is concerned, your system OF MOCKERY AND CONTEMPT†a is unlikely to produce anything but a title that is affected or contrived. A simple title is surely the best; MOCKERY AND CONTEMPT comes in the book soon enough.

Page me41.205

So, pére†b Garibaldi has drubbed the Neapolitans again after all, and taken 2,000 prisoners.†228 The impression the chap makes on the troops must be tremendous. It's an excellent thing that Türr should have been discredited along with Rüstow's theory.†c Otherwise, the latter would undoubtedly have taken it into his head to become the German Garibaldi; among the bourgeois republicans, the chap could come to be dangerous. It will probably be all up with Bombalino before long; the troops will soon have nothing left to eat and will disperse, for the area is not large enough to support them. Apart from that, there's nothing to be said about the affair for the time being. By the way, there's no denying that the ré galantuomo†d is playing his hand with a great deal of PLUCK if he should now go to Naples.

Page me41.205

The success of my RIFLE article†e was not altogether fortuitous. I sent the little sheet,†f boldly marked in red, to the main London papers and the press up here and wrote to them more or less as follows: The Correspondent, for England, of the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung presents his compliments to the Editor of the ... and begs to call his attention to an article of his in the Volunteer Journal (a copy of which is sent by post) on the Newton review. As this is the first professional opinion of a foreign military paper on the voluntary movement, it may be of interest. — Quite anonymously, of course. I didn't write to The Times but they published an excerpt, nevertheless.†a

Page Break me41.206

Page me41.206

Siebel has sent me a portrait of his betrothed,†b very pretty. Marie Antoinette with just a tiny soupçon of the virtuous Eugénie, but exceedingly mannish, notwithstanding — SHE WILL WEAR THE BREECHES. His 'sensible creature' will surprise him yet. Madame la baronne, her mother, was a milliner-cum-shop assistant in Düsseldorf and is still said to frequent Küpper's beer garden, where she puts away her 3 or 4 pints in an afternoon. Or so the philistines say.

Page me41.206

According to the latest reports, Garibaldi is the grandson or great-grandson of the Dr Jos. Bapt. Maria Garibaldi of Ajaccio who was sent to Germany by King Theodore Neuhof, married Miss Katharina von Neuhof in Westphalia and, after the overthrow of his brother-in-law, settled in Nice.†229 His face certainly has a Westphalian cast to it. Ewerbeck and Willich are both caricatures of G. in their own way.

Page me41.206

In number one, volume three, of Kolatschek's German monthly there is said to be a very pointed article against Vogt.†c

Page me41.206

Kind regards to the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.206

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

114
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.206
[London,] 11 October 1860

DEAR Frederick,

I'm extremely busy at this moment. Shall write to you on Saturday.†d Some good stuff in Brass's pamphlet.†e

Page Break me41.207
Page me41.207

If possible, let me have a word or two of guidance (by Saturday) on Garibaldi's GRAND BATTLE.†228

Your
K.M.

Page me41.207
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

115
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.207
[London,] 23 October 1860

Dear Lassalle,

You will forgive me for writing no more than a few lines. Apart from my usual preoccupations, I am just now snowed under with proof-sheets.†a
Page me41.207

I should be greatly obliged if you could let me have such money as you are able to send by the beginning of November, since I have given the printer (as a matter of fact, printers in London are paid by the week) an I.O.U. payable at the beginning of November.
Page me41.207
Today I received a final nonsuit from the Supreme Tribunal. It reads:

'Your appeal of August 23 of this year against the ruling on July 11 of this year of the Criminal Senate of the Royal High Court in the action for libel brought by Dr. K. Marx against Dr. Zabel, editor of the National-Zeitung, is hereby dismissed as without foundation after consideration of the relevant documents. For the Royal High Court did not find an objective defamation of the plaintiff in the two leading articles of the Nat.-Zeit. in question, nor did it find that there was an intention to insult the plaintiff. It was right, therefore, to refuse permission to proceed with the proposed action for libel.
Page me41.207
'The question whether there is an objective act of defamation, or an intention to insult, essentially pertains to matters of fact and the conclusions regarding them can only be disputed by an appeal to the Royal Supreme Tribunal if the decision of the Appeal judge is based on an error in law. However, such an error is not evident in the present instance. The costs, etc.'

Page Break me41.208

Page me41.208
How is your health? Mine is still pretty precarious.
Page me41.208
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.208
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

116
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.208
[London,] 25 October 1860

Dear Engels,

Herewith the letter from Weber, to whom I must therefore send ABOUT 6 talers; so ends the spree with Prussian justice.†a You can pass on this news to Siebel.
Page me41.208
Later on, I shall publish ABOUT one sheet ON PRUSSIAN JUSTICE†227 here in London, but not until the book†b is safely in Germany.
Page me41.208
During the first 4 weeks, all went very slowly at Hirschfeld's, partly because Zinn, the compositor, left him in the lurch, and also because he had a great deal to do and one of my sheets amounted to more than 2 ordinary printed sheets. However, last week I entered into a written agreement with him whereby he has got to finish by 15 November.
Page me41.208
In the last number of Stimmen der Zeit, Kolatschek has brought the thing†c up again in the 'Juchheisten', in which friend Lassalle, among others, comes off "orribly'.†d
Page me41.208
How goes it with the Navy†e?
Page me41.208
Do you think there might actually be war this autumn?

Page Break me41.209
Page me41.209
What with proof-correcting and a host of petty things to do, I've had my hands so full that for a while I hardly had time to write to you.
Page me41.209
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.209
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

117
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.209
[London,] 5 November 1860

Dear Engels,
A week ago on Friday,†a I sent you Weber's last letter, which I must have back.
Page me41.209

I hope nothing untoward has happened, since I haven't heard a thing from you.
Page me41.209
My hands are completely full, partly PRIVATE BUSINESS, partly proof-corrections†b (always to be done twice over); last week, too, as a result of the Supreme Tribunal ruling,†c I had to completely rewrite the bit about the lawsuit†d; finally the Tribune.
Page me41.209
Is it true that The Manchester Guardian occasionally has some interesting stuff from Paris now?
Page me41.209
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.209
Now you can see what would have happened if I had relied on Siebel. Over a fortnight ago, I wrote†42 asking whether he would be willing to see to the copies (their despatch) for journals, etc., in Germany (and for which?). Needless to say, no reply.

Page Break me41.210

Page me41.210
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

118
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.210
London, 5 November 1860

Dear Lassalle,
I herewith acknowledge with many thanks the £12, which arrived on Saturday.†a However, you should not approach the two people you name.†b
Page me41.210
Szemere's statement surprised me as much as anything emanating from the Hungarian emigration could surprise me.†230 In no circumstances can Szemere be said to be guided by personal motives, but he suffers from 'statesmanship'!
Page me41.210

As soon as I've done with the BUSINESS of printing†c and at last have my hands free, I shall write to you at length.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.210
This time there seems good reason to hope that victory in the United States will go to the REPUBLICAN PARTY (whose organ is the Tribune).†231
Page me41.210
I have today written to Weber, my lawyer, asking him to hand over the papers pertaining to the lawsuit to you,†42 and would be glad if you would temporarily house them for me.

Page me41.210
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.211

119
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.211
[London,] 13 November 1860

Dear Engels,
From your letter, I see that you are yourself in straitened circumstances.†232 Nevertheless, not having anything pawnable left, I must ask you to send me the £5 you promised, and to do so, if possible, in the course of this week. Next Saturday (17 November), I have to pay Hirschfeld £25 against bills and haven't yet got together quite enough money.
Page me41.211
The book†a (12 sheets, 24 in terms of normal printed pages) will be ready next week. Because of the Supreme Tribunal's verdict,†b I have had to completely rewrite the bit about the lawsuit,†c originally only a few pages long. It will now run to about 1 printed sheet. The whole of the last sheet in brevier (appendices). I haven't sent you the individual sheets because, in this case, as in any other, it would have detracted from the general EFFECT of the work. I shall send you 6 copies, 1 for you, 1 for Lupus, 1 for Gumpert, 1 for Borchardt, 1 for Heckscher, and 1 for Charley.†d
Page me41.211

Your question concerning Lommel's pamphlet,†e about which you had heard no more 'and which was where the money went' seems to imply some sort of reproach. D'abord,†f even if it hasn't yielded a centime, I could not have written 'Agency', the most important chapter in the personal attack upon Vogt, without the help of Lommel. In reply to my various CROSS-EXAMINATIONS, the man had to write at least 40 letters. Add to which, he let me have his anti-Vogt statement, originally intended for the Allgemeine Zeitung.†233 I cannot see that people who are complete strangers to our party are under any obligation to work for us gratis. Besides, Petsch told me yesterday that he had sold 2 or 3 pounds' worth and would anyhow get rid of the rest — if not already sold out (he has just readvertised them in Germany) — in the UNITED STATES and Australia.
Page me41.211
As soon as you have read the book, you will abandon the view that it could have been placed in Germany (by 1880, maybe) through the offices of Siebel whose connections are solely literary. I've heard from Siebel.

Page Break me41.212
Page me41.212
I have given way to you over the title and (yesterday) inserted Herr Vogt. My wife was absolutely against this and intent on Dâ-Dâ Vogt, remarking most learnedly that, even in the case of Greek tragedy, the title and content would often seem at first glance to be unconnected.
Page me41.212
I don't know whether you have seen Kolatschek's Stimmen der Zeit. The article 'Juchheisten' (in which our friend Lassalle comes off badly) does in fact contain some information (although that jackass Kolatschek overlooks this), which sheds light on Vogt's reason for selling himself to Bonaparte. At the beginning of 1858 a joint-stock company, 'La Cimentaire', a dubious type of loan bank, was founded in Geneva. Besides the managing director, who was never named, there was Vogt, co-director. By the end of 1858, the directors had consumed the entire capital. Bankruptcy. The MANAGING DIRECTOR was locked up. Criminal proceedings were to follow. From the National Council in Berne, Vogt rushed to Geneva. Fazy quashed the case. The shareholders did not get a single centime.
Page me41.212
From those same 'Juchheisten' (why, BY THE BY, does not Kolatschek, having sold himself to the Austrians, call them Juchheiten?) I see that Juchhe! nach Italien!†a (for I could not bring myself to read the Vogt clique's Demokratische Studien, which Borkheim had put at my disposal), i.e. 'L. Bamberger', banker in Paris, editor of the Mainzer Zeitung in 1848, disgusting cockroach, has presumed to speak of 'communists on half-pay'.†b Hence I have written a short note about this wiseacre and have included him among Vogt's accomplices, and likewise introduced a few poor jests about the rest of the Juchheisten, L. Simon, Hartmann (the one who told Borkheim in Switzerland that Vogt had done me in), and H.B. Oppenheim.
Page me41.212
Salut.
Your

K.M.

Page me41.212
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.213

120
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.213
[London,] City, 14 November 1860

Dear Engels,

Our letters crossed.†234 These few lines, acknowledging the £5 which arrived this morning, are being written at Borkheim's office.

Page me41.213

There is a simple explanation for my having written so seldom of late, and then only a few lines at a time, namely overwork, indisposition and TROUBLE of all kinds. By the end of next week, when my hands will again be free, I shall be writing to you just as before.

Page me41.213

I have today sent you by post the number of Stimmen der Zeit I mentioned yesterday,†a but I must have it back by next Wednesday†b at the latest, since it is borrowed.

Page me41.213

I shall include the notice from the Guardian, — which I found helpful, thank you for it — among the 'Appendices' in the concluding chapter.†235

Page me41.213

Biscamp married the day before yesterday: an American whore. Good luck to him!

Page me41.213

Imandt has written. Has a daughter. Has grown thin as a rake, has been ill all the summer and still is. Pauvre diable!†c

Page me41.213

Borkheim sends his regards. B. has obtained permission from his firm to trade privately in wines and asks you to remember him, should you feel able to help him in this LINE (every conceivable type of wine).

Page me41.213

No other news.

Page me41.213
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.213
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.214

121
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.214
[London,] 21 November 1860

Dear Engels,
Since Monday,†a my wife has been prostrated by an extremely virulent nervous fever. Yesterday, on Dr Allen's orders, I found all 3 children lodgings away from home, for he was afraid of a possible infection. Allen says the illness is a dangerous one, but he hopes she'll pull through. Last Saturday my wife was already feeling most unwell and I noticed symptoms of fever, and therefore wanted to call the doctor. But she refused. Sunday ditto. On Monday, of course, I wouldn't be put off any longer, and she herself felt that it wasn't just any ordinary cold or some such.
Page me41.214
Szemere's here. Will also be passing through Manchester and will call on you.
Page me41.214
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.214
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

122
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN LONDON
Page me41.214
[London,] 21 November [1860]

My dear Szemere,

Mrs Marx having fallen very seriously sick (Nervenfieber†b), I was precluded from seeing you on Sunday, and visiting you on one of the following days. Mr Borkheim has told me that he saw you on Sunday last.

Page Break me41.215
Page me41.215

The article in the Augsburg Gazette alluding to you, has been written by Dr Biscamp,†a one of my friends, and living in my immediate neighbourhood.
Page me41.215

With the best compliments of Mrs Marx and myself

Yours truly,
K. Marx

Page me41.215

The Courrier du Dimanche of Nov. 18 publishes a letter d.d. 'Vienna, 14 Nov. 1860.' — which is written altogether in the sense [of] your public declaration.†230

Page me41.215
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

123
MARX TO BERTALAN SZEMERE
IN LONDON
Page me41.215
[London,] 22 November 1860

My dear Szemere,

My best thanks for your friendly letter and the Kossuth-Cobden-Memorandum†236 which I forgot mentioning in my last.
Page me41.215

The state of Mrs Marx has not yet improved.
Page me41.215

Engels, whom you must consider as my alter ego and who is the author of the pamphlet 'Po und Rhein'†b I gave you on a former occasion, lives No. 6, Thorncliffe Grove, Oxford Road, Manchester.
Page me41.215
The Courrier du Dimanche I receive from time to time by a friend at Paris.†c Is that Ganesco not a Wallachian? At all events, his name does not point to a French origin.

With my best compliments,
Yours truly,
K. Marx

Page me41.215
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Revue d'histoire comparée, t. IV, No. 1-2, Budapest, 1946

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me41.216

124
MARX TO ENGELS†237
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.216
[London,] 23 November 1860

Dear Frederick,
Best thanks for the £10 and the 'NAVY'†a (splendid article).
Page me41.216
Now, as regards my wife's illness, it is in one respect better and in another worse than I was aware. For, until the character of the disease was definitely determined, Allen concealed its true nature from me. Yesterday this was no longer possible. What my wife has got is — SMALL POX, and very badly, too, although she has been twice vaccinated against it. (Tell no one about it except Lupus.) And that's why Allen promptly removed the children from the house. It's a ghastly disease. Should Lenchen catch it, I shall at once send her to hospital. So far, I have done the nursing (the bulk of it) myself. But, as I find it too exhausting, I hired a nurse as soon as the £10 arrived today. For many weeks my wife had been in an exceptionally nervous state owing to our many TROUBLES, and was thus more liable TO CATCH the contagion in an omnibus, shop, or the like.
Page me41.216
Writing articles is almost OUT OF THE QUESTION for me. The only occupation that helps me maintain the necessary QUIETNESS OF MIND is mathematics. During the past weeks I have written de omnibus rebus†b for the Tribune, mainly on the WARSAW CONGRESS, the STATE OF POLAND, ITALY, FRANCE and the money market.†238 Nothing about China yet.
Page me41.216
Have you had the Kolatschek?†c

Page me41.216
The doctor has allowed my wife claret, taken in small doses, as she is exceptionally weak. Last night was dreadful — indeed, at the moment, I myself am SICK as well.
Page me41.216
The devil alone knows what misfortunes we suffer.
Page me41.216
I have boarded the poor children out with the Liebknechts, who live quite close by and to whom I sent the VICTUALLERS daily. They objected to going to BOARDING SCHOOL because of the RELIGIOUS RITES.

Page Break me41.217
Page me41.217
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.217
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

125
MARX TO FRANZ DUNCKER
IN BERLIN
Page me41.217
London, 24 November 1860

Sir,
I should be greatly obliged if you would insert the declaration†a overleaf in the Volks-Zeitung as soon as possible and let me have a copy thereof.
Page me41.217
You will probably receive a copy of my anti-Vogt pamphlet†b next week. I am sending 3 copies to my friend Lassalle, 1 for himself, 1 for the Countess Hatzfeldt and 1 for Miss Ludmilla Assing.
Page me41.217
Would you be so kind as to apprise L. of this; also of the fact that for the past week my wife has been prostrated by a very grave nervous fever, so that, on doctor's orders, I was compelled to lodge the 3 children elsewhere. L. will realise that, in the circumstances, I cannot write letters, but he would greatly oblige me by writing himself.

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,
K. Marx

Page me41.217
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.218

126
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.218
[London,] 26 November [1860]

Dear Frederick,

My wife's condition has improved, in so far as this is possible under the circumstances. It is going to be a lengthy business. What might be called the paroxysm of the disease is now over.
Page me41.218

Allen believes that the only explanation for the infection is the state of extreme nervous excitation in which she has been these many months.
Page me41.218

Perhaps you would be kind enough to ask Heckscher to send the enclosed to the 'Reform' without delay.
Page me41.218

The day before yesterday, Petsch actually advertised Herr Vogt in the Hermann and the Athenaeum as due to appear this week.†a
Page me41.218

From its date you will see that I scribbled the piece for the Reform as long ago as Saturday. I had intended to send it to you with an accompanying letter, but suddenly felt so unwell that any kind of writing was OUT OF QUESTION. Allen gave me some medicine, and today I feel all right again. Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.†b

Page me41.218
Sir,

Your acceptance of the following declaration would much oblige me. You will be receiving a copy of my anti-Vogt pamphlet in the course of next week.
Page me41.218

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,
Karl Marx

Page me41.218
To the Editorial Board of the Reform Declaration

At the beginning of February 1860 the editorial board of the Reform were kind enough to publish a declaration by myself†c which began with these words:

Page Break me41.219
Page me41.219
'I hereby make it known that I have taken steps preparatory to instituting legal proceedings for libel against the Berlin National-Zeitung in connection with the leading articles in Nos. 37 and 41 regarding Vogt's pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung. I reserve the right to answer Vogt in writing at a later date.'
Page me41.219
In the course of February 1860 I brought a libel suit in Berlin against F. Zabel, the responsible editor of the National-Zeitung. My lawyer, Legal Counsellor Weber, resolved at first on an official investigation. With a ruling of April 18, 1860 the Public Prosecutor†a refused to 'take action' against F. Zabel, on the grounds that there was 'no public interest' involved. On April 26, 1860 his refusal was confirmed by the Chief Public Prosecutor.†b
Page me41.219
My lawyer then began civil proceedings. The Royal Municipal Court in a ruling of June 8, 1860 prohibited me from proceeding with my lawsuit on the grounds that the genuinely defamatory 'utterances and statements' of F. Zabel's were 'merely quotations from other persons', and that 'the intention to insult' was not present. The Royal Court of Appeal for its part declared in a ruling of July 11, 1860 that the alleged use of quotation did not affect the culpability of the articles, but that the defamatory passages contained in them did not refer to my 'person'. Furthermore, 'in the present case' the intention to insult 'could not be assumed'. Thus, the Royal Court of Appeal confirmed the negative ruling of the Municipal Court. In a ruling of October 5, 1860, which I received on October 23 of this year, the Royal Supreme Tribunal found that 'in the present case' no 'legal error' on the part of the Royal Court of Appeal 'could be discerned'. The prohibition on suing F. Zabel was thus definitely sustained and my claim did not reach the stage of being accorded a public hearing.
Page me41.219
My reply to Vogt will appear in a few days.
Page me41.219
London, November 24, 1860
Karl Marx

Page me41.219

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.220

127
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.220
[London,] 28 November 1860

Dear Engels,

My wife is now out of danger. Tell Lupus straight away, and give him my warm regards. The thing will drag on for a long time, and, as Allen says, when she is well again, she must go away at once for at least 4 weeks.

Page me41.220

As for myself — the danger of infection being greatest for 10 days as from yesterday — I had myself revaccinated yesterday. Ditto Lenchen. A circumstance that has been of great help to me was having an appalling toothache. The day before yesterday, I had a tooth pulled out. While the fellow (Gabriel, he's called) did, in fact, pull out the root, after causing me great PHYSICAL PAINS, he left in a splinter. So, the whole of my face is sore and swollen, and my throat half closed up. This physical pressure contributes much to the disablement of thought and hence to one's powers of abstraction for, as Hegel says, pure thought or pure being or nothingness is one and the same thing.

Page me41.220

Well, during these ten days, the isolation will have to be more stringent than ever.

Page me41.220

I cannot write, of course, while in this state and, since the bill of £50 drawn on Dana 2 1/2 months ago†a has in any case not been properly worked off — my wife had all manner of NERVOUS COMPLAINTS even before her illness, so that sundry matters were left undone and hence I'm in a great fix — I would ask you, at least during the next fortnight, to do as much writing as possible. Under the present circumstances it might seem to be appropriate to write to my old lady.†b But ever since she allowed the Prussian corporal†c to marry into the family, all INTERCOURSE has ceased in consequence of certain remarks passed by me. There has been an appalling spate of dunning from all quarters. To alleviate it, in some quarters at any rate, I have handed out the greater part of the £10. I wouldn't write about all this to you, who already do all you can and more, but que faire? But what's to be done? Moreover, all avenues are closed to me, for, strangely enough (due perhaps to the improvement), I cannot leave the house, since at the very time when I should be seeing as little of her as possible (which, of course, she can't be told), my wife wants me to be near her all the time.

Page Break me41.221

Page me41.221
Allen is of the opinion that, if she hadn't been twice vaccinated, she would not have pulled through. As things are, he considers even the SMALL POX to be a blessing. For, so he told me yesterday, he thought her nervous condition was such that this ailment was preferable to a nervous fever or something of that kind, which might otherwise have afflicted her.
Page me41.221
The poor children are very scared. Allen is going to vaccinate them and the whole Liebknecht family on Friday.
Page me41.221
You will probably be getting Herr Vogt on Friday.†a There was some delay last week, because I was unable to complete the revision of the final sheets on time.
Page me41.221
My best thanks for the wine. Even before it arrived, Allen had prescribed wine for me, along with another medicine of a less pleasant kind.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.221
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

128
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.221
Manchester, 3 December 1860

Dear Moor,
As a result of God alone knows what combination of circumstances, I've had to draw out such a frightfully large sum of money in the past 4 weeks that I absolutely must wait a day or two now. If possible, I shall get a pound off to you tomorrow, and more as soon as I can, in the course of the next few days. For a while, at least, I am reduced to drawing only small amounts at a time; the point is that where Ermen is concerned, it behoves me just now TO APPEAR TO LIVE WITHIN MY INCOME (which I did not do during the last financial year); in view of the negotiations, this is an expedient that I simply cannot allow myself to be deprived of. If I could think up some pretext, I would try to borrow £5 for a fortnight from Gumpert, but I couldn't do so without his guessing what the reason was, and anyway I don't know whether he would have it at this season. I know very well what a fix you are in and shall do all I can — but the £10 I sent you recently has already been debited in advance to December's account, which means that that month is already heavily mortgaged. All the same, you'll get something tomorrow for sure.

Page Break me41.222

Page me41.222
I was ready to do an article†a for you this evening (last Friday†b my eye was so inflamed that writing by gas-light was out of the question), but Szemere — who sends you his regards — has just turned up, and so it's OUT OF THE QUESTION today as well. I shall do all I can tomorrow evening.†c
Page me41.222
Books†d received. The thing's splendid. Especially the 'Studies' and 'Agency'; cela est écrasant.†e More about the rest shortly. Most of the copies have already been distributed.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.222
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

129
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.222
[Manchester,] 5 December 1860

Dear Moor,
Herewith at last the famous POST OFFICE ORDER for £2 — PAYABLE Charing Cross since I didn't know of a MONEY ORDER OFFICE closer to you; let me know for future occasions.

Page Break me41.223
Page me41.223
Lupus has specially requested me to tell you in advance how much he enjoyed the dressing-down you gave Mr Simon. The more I read of the book,†a the better it pleases me. But shocking misprints and spelling mistakes. Once there's Russian instead of Austrian Emperor. Moreover, it looks bad when all the foreign words that your wife wrote in roman characters are printed in roman type. This invariably happens in the case of foreign printers and special precautions have to be taken to avoid it.

Page me41.223
What you have omitted are résumés. E.g. at the end of the 2 chapters: 'Bristlers' and 'Brimstone Gang'; again, after 'Police Matters', after all the personal business (i.e. before the 'Studies'), and elsewhere, résumés would also have been appropriate, for in that way you would have presented your philistine ad oculos†b with a general impression. It would have meant only four extra pages and would have been extremely effective in a book in which the material and the innumerable names — the latter pretty well unknown to the said philistine — tend to be somewhat overwhelming; it would also have brought out the artistry of the whole arrangement, which is truly admirable.
Page me41.223
How is your wife?
Your
F.E.

Page me41.223
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

130
MARX TO ENGELS†237
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.223
[London,] 5 December [1860]

Dear Engels,
Best thanks for the article.†240
Page me41.223
My wife is getting on very well, and I believe the wine is doing her more good than any medicine. But at night, when she is restless, can't sleep, and is even a little delirious, it's still very disturbing.

Page Break me41.224
Page me41.224
How about letting me have another article by Saturday,†a about my lawsuit — perhaps, dated from Berlin? When I find writing LEADERS awkward, I date them from Berlin, Paris, etc. Such articles are easier to get through.
Page me41.224
Might not something be said about the Chinese war? Or Bonaparte's military preparations, etc.?†241

Page me41.224

At the moment, I have absolutely no 'ideas' about anything. What I have got is an "orrible'†b headache.

Page me41.224

The children — poor little devils — are still living in exile.†c To cheer them up, I have sent them a bottle or two of wine. The day before yesterday, the little one†d saw me walking past Liebknecht's house and shouted from the window: 'HALLOO, OLD BOY!'

Page me41.224

Apropos! As soon as Freiligrath heard of my wife's illness (didn't, of course, know what it was), he, of course, wrote me a letter full of 'feeling'. But when I sent him Herr Vogt — with, of course (you can see just how many ideas I have from the way 'of course' has cropped up 3 times in 3 lines), a friendly inscription, and he had occasion to write to me about SOMETHING ELSE, he forgot to say a word about the book, or TO ACKNOWLEDGE its receipt. To suggest that he had forgotten to do so, he wrote at the bottom of his letter, 'In great haste'. I believe there are certain parts that worry him stiff. Firstly, his 'indiscretion' re Vogt. But Fazy, in particular. He was intending to move to Geneva in the spring. One wonders whether the disclosure of the Fazy scandal might not prove a hindrance.

Page me41.224

Blind, who had already ordered a copy from Petsch last Thursday,†e didn't get one until yesterday [Tuesday]. The thing wasn't distributed in London until then so as to prevent MR ALBERTS, OF THE PRUSSIAN EMBASSY, warning Berlin before my package of books arrived there. In London, of course, there have been a lot of jibes at my 'undignified' mode of attack. Twelve COPIES were ordered yesterday by that louse Trübner.

Page me41.224

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.224

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.225

131
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.225

[London,] 6 December 1860

Dear Frederick,

Best thanks for the £2. The OFFICE closest to me is the CAMDEN TOWN MONEY OFFICE.†a

Page me41.225

As regards the want of résumés, you are perfectly right. They were there originally, but were deleted by me when I saw how much the affair had grown without my noticing it. For, printed in the normal way, the thing†b would amount to a very stout volume. You will find, by the by, that in Chapter XI, 'A Lawsuit', all the personal stuff is so thoroughly dinned into your philistine that it will remain with him for the rest of his days.

Page me41.225

As for Monsieur Edouard Simon, the cur described you in his mud-slinging article†242 (a malicious translation of Techow's 'police spy') as 'le mouchard toujours affairé'.†c Whereat I took it upon myself to make an example of the laddie, since insults aimed at you vex me more than those directed against myself.

Page me41.225

Apropos — BY THE BY — as soon as Lupus has got through the thing, I'd be grateful if he could drop me a line or two. My wife's greatest pleasure at the moment consists in letters about it. On the whole, she is getting on well, but slowly.

Page me41.225

Mr Philistine Freiligrath, that 'snotty Westphalian snout',†d wrote to me yesterday as follows:

'Your book,' (not pamphlet, egad!) 'has been sent me by Petsch. Many thanks! From what I have read so far, I find it is, as I expected, full of wit and malice. There is so much detail as almost to make it difficult to get a general idea of it. You will excuse me if I do not enter into the case as such. Even today I still deplore the whole dispute from which now, as before, I would sooner stand aloof.'

Page me41.225

What do you think of those two last sentences? The swine, who was already aware of Vogt's lies and Blind's turpitude, but now has them before him in black and white, is unwilling (not, mark you, that I invited him to do so) 'to enter into the case as such'. And 'now, as before,' he 'would sooner stand aloof from the whole dispute'. It now seems to me that he hasn't yet read the whole of it, for he would then see just where he stands. I have now discovered the secret of his intimacy with Blind (it is business, of course, that ties him to Vogt-Fazy). Namely, on the occasion of the Schiller festival, Freiligrath had 20,000 copies of his poem†a printed at a cost of £40-60. He wanted to make a business of it. But didn't sell forty. Since his speculation had failed, it now behoved him 'to palm off' the cost, as Petsch aptly put it, onto the Schiller committee.†75 In this Blind was his most servile TOOL. Hinc†b the 'reciprocal good turn' done by the snotty Westphalian snout.

Page Break me41.226

Page me41.226
You will find the misprints you reprobate listed in the errata. Originally, the list was 3 times as long. But since it looked bad, we shortened it. The fault lies entirely with Hirschfeld, a ninny who has no control over his compositor. Petsch isn't having anything else printed by him.
Page me41.226
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.226
Should something or other occur to you that might do for a military pamphlet of 1-3 sheets, Petsch would be delighted, for he now wants to achieve the status of 'publisher and bookseller'. He's a very nice chap.

Page me41.226
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

132
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.226
London, 12 December [1860]

Dear Engels,
BEST THANKS FOR ARTICLE.†240
Page me41.226
The item in the Neue Preussische Zeitung (if one disregards their own comments) is no more than a paragraph that appeared in the

Page Break me41.227
Londoner Lithographierte Korrespondenz (Schlesinger); with few exceptions, it was in all the German papers, for the most part under the heading 'London'.
Page me41.227
The shorter version of the advertisement was confined to papers published in England. In the German papers, the table of contents was included.†243
Page me41.227

I am sending you herewith the advertisement in the Buchhändlerbörsenblatt,†a composed by Petsch himself. The well-known 'politician' he speaks of at the end is magnus†b L. Bucher, who indicated as much when talking to Borkheim.
Page me41.227

The advertisements in the German papers probably appeared in the course of this week. A little after the book's arrival, it being undesirable (in view of the Lawsuit†c) to alert the Prussians.
Page me41.227

Advertisements have been sent to the:
Page me41.227

Allgemeine Zeitung; Breslauer Zeitung; Bund (Berne); Deutsche Allgemeine†d; Frankfurter Journal; Hamburger Nachrichten; Freischütz; Reform; Karlsruher Zeitung; Kölnische Zeitung; Königsberger Hartung†e; Mannheimer Journal; National-Zeitung; Neue Preussische Zeitung; Publicist; Berlin Volks-Zeitung; Ost-Deutsche Post; Presse; Rostocker Zeitung; Schwäbischer Merkur; Trier'sche Zeitung; Zeitung für Norddeutschland; Zürcher Neue Zeitung†f; Neue Süddeutsche†g (Munich); Morgenblatt; Wochenblatt des Nationalvereins†h; Deutsches Museum; Illustrirte Zeitung; Ausland (Augsburg); Historische Deutsche Monatsschrift (Brunswick).
Page me41.227

New-Yorker Staatszeitung; New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung; New-Yorker Abendzeitung.
Page me41.227

Times; Athenaeum; Critic; Saturday Review; Illustrated News; Manchester Guardian; Hermann.
Page me41.227

Copies sent inter alia to Cotta, the Reform, Duncker, 6 to Siebel; various to the English papers (Sat. Review, Athenaeum, Critic, Ill. News); Lommel, Brass, Fischel. Over 50 free copies despatched in all, but only a few of them to newspapers.
Page me41.227

41 sold in London to date.
Page me41.227

Nota bene: Lommel's Hinter den Coulissen is now in great demand in Germany. There have even been orders from Riga.
Page me41.227

Bucher (who contributes articles to the supplement of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, e.g., the one on Persigny and Palmerston) has promised Borkheim he will write a review for the A.Z. I fear Biscamp may forestall him.

Page Break me41.228
Page me41.228

Liebknecht has placed advertisements and lengthy excerpts in 4 German-American and 4 English-American papers. He is now, I might add, literary correspondent to the last-named.
Page me41.228

'Mr Vogt' writes signed articles for some of the more obscure American-German papers. Rails at 'Bonaparte'.†a Declared that my pamphlet would never come out.
Page me41.228
My wife is much better. But the children probably won't be allowed home for another fortnight. I myself have to spend almost all day with her and am feeling far from well. However, that will resolve itself as soon as she is in a more normal state of health.
Page me41.228
A week ago, Allen cancelled the prescription for claret and prescribed port instead. I should be grateful, therefore, if you would send me a few bottles of the latter.
Page me41.228
My library has arrived.†244 Still at the CUSTOM HOUSE, for the 'COMMISSIONERS' have not yet decided whether I am to have it DUTY FREE.
Page me41.228
Now, just guess how I got to the bottom of Ludwig Simon's secret. (See appendix 16c.†b)
Page me41.228
Regards to Lupus.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.228
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

133
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.228
Manchester, 18 December 1860

Dear Moor,
In addition to Szemere, my brother-in-law†c also descended on me on Sunday. Sz. is off to Liverpool today and may return; my brother-in-law leaves tomorrow — so I've been in no position to do an article. Something on Austria†a for Saturday†b if possible.

Page Break me41.229
Page me41.229
As a person, Sz. is quite a decent chap; he has an Austrian's bonhomie and, at a time of revolution in Hungary, might even be energetic, resolute and clearsighted; but en dehors de son pays†c he certainly has little in the way of knowledge or ideas. At any rate,

I couldn't extract a great deal of sense from him in this respect. It's odd that, having adopted such a decidedly Bonapartist stance in his pamphlet,†d he should now have performed a complete volte-face. He made me, inter alia, the following conciliatory proposal: What, he inquired, would my attitude be if, given the disintegration of the Empire, the Habsburgs were to remain merely Kings of Hungary, and German Austria revert to Germany?†e Whereupon I told him, of course, that such a solution might be perfectly acceptable to us and that we would gladly make the Hungarians a present of the whole robber band. His negotiations regarding the wine business here went off quite well. Cobden's recommendations and the acquaintances he struck up chez Cobden in Paris have made things much easier for him.
Page me41.229

If at all possible, I shall send you another two pounds tomorrow; unfortunately it's too late today.
Page me41.229

Regards to your wife, who is getting better, I hope, and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.229

Apropos port! I've none left that's drinkable, but shall try and lay my hands on some decent stuff tomorrow and send it off straight away.

Page me41.229
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.230

134
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.230
[London,] 18 December 1860

Dear Frederick,

My wife is now much better. Allen thinks that the children — running two households is not only very inconvenient, but also expensive — will be able to come back on Sunday†a or Monday. I myself shall then resume my contributions to the Tribune, which has had only 2 articles†245 in nearly 5 weeks. Let me have another one by Saturday if you can.
Page me41.230

For the past two days, I have been confined to bed and taking medicine, but Allen says it is nothing of any consequence and I should be fit again in 3 or 4 days. Apparently, it's the result of the EXCITEMENT, etc.
Page me41.230
As regards your view of Szemere, I would inform you, strictly on the quiet, that I am entirely of the same mind. The really funny part is that I had proposed to him, ironically, that they should keep the Habsburgs for themselves, that Pest would be the final place of refuge for the same, etc.†b
Page me41.230
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.230
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.231

135
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.231
[Manchester,] 19 December 1860

Dear Moor,
Enclosed the £2 on Camden Town.
Page me41.231
The more I read of the book,†a the more difficult I find it to imagine how Vogt will pass off these stories that 'will never come out'.†b 41 copies in London in a few days is a great deal; by now it will be even more. This is, of course, the best polemical work you have ever written; it's simpler in style than the Bonaparte†c and yet just as effective where this is called for.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.231
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

136
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.231
[London,] 19 December 1860

Dear Frederick,

THANKS for the £2. I have sent Lenchen to the POST OFFICE to collect it.
Page me41.231

My wife, or so Allen thinks, will not have any pock marks. She is, of course, still very indisposed (and it's precisely when they're recovering that sick people grow more restive and impatient), but Allen is perfectly satisfied with her PROGRESS.

Page Break me41.232
Page me41.232

As for myself, I am today (the worst thing was lack of sleep) much the better for having slept soundly all night and hope to be ALRIGHT again in 2, or, at the most, 3, days' time.
Page me41.232

Having been too unwell to go out this week, I don't know how the book†a has been selling in London. Though I've been told by Liebknecht that the London Workers' Society†3 has bought 6 copies for its library this week.
Page me41.232

Zimmermann of Spandau (now a lawyer in London), formerly a member of parliament, bosom friend of Vogt, once a great traducer of the Volk and of my own person, last week gave a dinner at which the lawyer Höchster (connu†b from Elberfeld, now a very busy avocat in Paris) was present; our friend Rheinländer also attended. Zimmermann declared that Blind was hopelessly compromised. As TO Vogt, he [Zimmermann] had been reluctant to credit bribery, although aware of the chap's vanity and frivolity. But now my work had convinced him that Vogt was nothing but an ordinary 'mouchard'†c only distinguished from muchardus vulgaris†d by the size of his salary, etc. Moreover, he (Z.) had written to acquaintances in Switzerland in order to leave Mr Vogt in no doubt about his views.
Page me41.232

Bucher has written and told Borkheim that the case against Vogt has been fully proved. Also that my work had eradicated any 'prejudice he might have had against Marx's agitational activities'. He had, he wrote, expressed his views on these two points in the Camberwell†e businessmen's circle (to which he gives lectures on the history of German jurisprudence) and written ditto to 'influential persons in Germany'.
Page me41.232

Zimmermann and Bucher are of importance here because of the philistines.
Page me41.232

In the course of my ordeal — during the past 4 weeks — I have read all manner of things. Inter alia Darwin's book on Natural Selection.†f Although developed in the crude English fashion, this is the book which, in the field of natural history, provides the basis for our views. By comparison, A. Bastian's Der Mensch in der Geschichte (3 stout volumes; the chap's a young Bremen doctor who has spent several years travelling round the world), with its attempt to present psychology in terms of 'natural science' and history in terms of psychology, is bad, muddled, and amorphous.

Page Break me41.233
The only useful thing in it is a few ethnographical ODDITIES now and again. And, what is more, very pretentious and atrociously written.
Page me41.233

Apropos. As regards Ludwig Simon, try and guess how I succeeded in catching out the gentle Kunigunde.†a
Page me41.233

Lassalle, from whom I got a letter a few weeks ago, is very ill. Not gout — osteitis? Is publishing, or so he writes, 'a long and important work' with Brockhaus in 2 volumes,†b 17 hours in bed, 3 hours up, and busy proof-correcting this 'long and important work'. I can hardly suppose the anti-Vogt piece, which I sent him, will serve to alleviate his aches and pains. But whose fault is it that he's a Berlin 'idealist politician'?
Page me41.233

Have I already written and told you†c what a 'crassly material basis' there is to the intimacy between Freiligrath and student Blind†d?
Page me41.233

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.233
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

137
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.233
[London,] 23 December 1860

DEAR Frederick,

My best thanks for the wine and the £5. My wife finds the port excellent.

Page me41.233
I am my old self again today.
Page me41.233
Keil writes from Leipzig to say that, immediately on its arrival, the book†e sold 120 copies.

Page Break me41.234
Page me41.234
Richter (of the Reform) writes from Hamburg to say it's in great demand.
Page me41.234
My wife sends you her best regards.

Your
K. Marx

Page me41.234
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

138
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.234
[London,] 26 December 1860

DEAR Frederick,
Herewith a cutting of the advertisement for Herr Vogt from the Genfer Grenzpost†a; the enormous LETTERS are themselves indicative of the love Brass feels for Vogt. By the by, in the last 5 numbers of the Grenzpost there are some very good articles.
Page me41.234
Up till now, or so Petsch told me yesterday, 80 copies have been disposed of in London. On the other hand, he complains, 'not a single one'†b in Manchester.
Page me41.234
Otherwise, to the best of my knowledge, nothing has appeared so far in the German press except in the Reform, which has mentioned the thing (favourably) several times†c and has promised a long article next week. So far as the Allgemeine Augsburger Zeitung is concerned, it's all rather odd. They have been sent 2 lengthy reviews, one by that shit Biscamp, the other by Mr L. Bucher for the supplement. And still not a word. BUT nous verrons.†d
Page me41.234

Well now:

1. L. Simon.†e The book was almost finished, up to the last page, when, late one evening, being on my way to Hirschfeld's about some proof-correcting, I called in for a moment at friend Rheinländer's OFFICE in the City. With an exceedingly cheerful countenance, he told me that young Höchster (the lawyer's son) had come over from Paris and gone into business here in London. Rheinländer knows the Höchsters, father and son, very well from his Paris days. Young Höchster — I saw him later at R.'s — is an innocuous lad quite without political — I wouldn't say views — but ideas. He was once clerk to a banker — Königswärter†a or some such (at the moment I'm not quite sure whether I've got this well-known Bonapartist name right), where L. Simon was CHIEF clerc. R. asked Höchster about the gentle Kunigunde. 'Oh,' says he, 'he's not popular at the office. Although CHIEF of the clercs, he's so unsure of himself that he refers everything to the PRINCIPAL, and he's got very little idea of business. He's bad-tempered, and then a lot of his time is taken up with politics. The famous E. About comes to see him nearly every evening, and they work together. I have myself seen them correcting the proofs of one of their joint publications.' On CROSS-EXAMINATION by R., it then transpired that this joint work was La Prusse en 1860.†b In Königswärter's Bonapartist office, L. Simon was RATHER boastful about his connection with E. About, and young Höchster, being like a newborn babe in politics, believed he was telling R., against whom, of course, he does not harbour the least suspicion, something that was altogether to L.S.'s credit. What is particularly odd is that later, at the dinner given by Zimmermann (to which Höchster JUNIOR was not invited) R. very artlessly asked old Höchster what he thought of my denunciation of L.S. Höchster aîné†c declared that for many years past, he had on principle stayed away from politics which had already been his undoing twice. All the same, he said, he found the thing hard to credit; but R. insisted that my source was a very 'reliable' one.

Page Break me41.235

Page me41.235

2. Blind has avenged himself in the grand manner. He has notified Petsch et Co. that he will no longer favour them with his custom. Such is 'the blind man's revenge'. Old Zizka!

Page me41.235

3. About Freiligrath — who will today derive comfort from the plaster you applied to his snotty snout — and the material basis of his relations with Blind, I have, if I am not mistaken, already written to you.†d What actually happened was this:

Page me41.235

At the time of the Schiller festival (1859), the noble poet, through his agent Blind, first offered the famous cantata†e to the management at the Crystal Palace.†246 They were to pay him £40 DOWN IN CASH for permission to publish the renowned cantata and, on the day of the

Page Break me41.236

Schiller festival, they were to sell it in the Crystal Palace, other sales being reserved by the mercantile poet for himself. The management thanked Mr F. profusely for his kindness and begged him to peddle his cantata himself.

Page me41.236

Thereupon the noble chap, ostensibly at his own expense, got Hirschfeld to print 20,000 copies of the tripe. The cost of production was £40. The noble poet's plan was that half the profits should go to the Schiller Institute†75 and the other half to his propriis laribus,†a which, after deduction of production costs (his retail price was 6d per copy), would have meant that he would CLEAR £210 for himself, and, on top of that, gain kudos in Germany for his magnanimity.

Page me41.236

But he had counted his chickens before they were hatched. Perhaps a few hundred COPIES (ALL IN ALL) were sold throughout the whole of England, and these were disposed of only by bringing the utmost pressure to bear on private individuals.

Page me41.236

So now he found himself in trouble.†b Then Blind worried away at the Schiller Committee from morn till night and from night till morn in an endeavour to induce them to bear the printing costs, in which, after fierce altercations, he finally succeeded. Hinc illae lacrimae.†c

Page me41.236

The disposal of the many COPIES left in stock was entrusted by Freiligrath to his blind friend, and last November (1860) this indefatigable little sharper engineered his own Schiller festival in London, so as to get rid of F.'s rubbish. No wonder, then, that F. is now, as before, 'on intimate terms' with his precious Blind.†d F. knows better than anyone else on which side his bread is buttered, avant tout†e when it comes to SHOP INTEREST (including, OF COURSE, literary fame).

Page me41.236

Whilst on this subject, I should mention another DROLLERY characteristic of Blind.

Page me41.236

On the quiet, without a word to friend Freiligrath or friend Kinkel (and drawing on the famous £100 fund), the pensive Blind had had printed something preliminary, or a preliminary something on Schiller and Blum.†f At half past seven in the morning, he, ere others dreamt of evil, placed outside the entrance to the Palace†246 a boxful of his 'radical pamphlets' guarded by messenger-boys borrowed from the Morning Advertiser who pressed the rubbish into the hand of each arrival. Anyone who asked what it cost was relieved, according to his outward APPEARANCE, of 6d, 3d, or as little as 1d. Anyone who didn't ask got the rubbish for nothing. And thus, even before Kinkel's speech†a of F.'s cantata†b was due to take place, the Badenese slyboots had gone one better and forced his trash onto all and sundry.

Page Break me41.237

Page me41.237

Salut. The children at home again. Regards to Lupus,

Your
K.M.

Page me41.237
THANKS FOR THE ARTICLE.†c

Page me41.237
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

139
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.237
[London,] 27 December 1860

In great haste
Dear Engels,
A letter has just arrived from J. Ph. Becker in Naples, asking that Borkheim send him by return for Garibaldi:
Page me41.237
1. Po and Rhine.†d (I still have one copy of it that I discovered at Petsch's. So, that's ALL RIGHT.)
Page me41.237
2. Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.†e (My copy went to Schily long ago. I hope you have one and would ask you to despatch it forthwith by post to S.L. Borkheim, 44 Mark Lane, City, London.)
Page me41.237
3. Herr Vogt.
Page me41.237
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.237
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.238

1861

140
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.238
[London,] 3 January 1861

Dear Frederick,

I have mislaid your letter received this morning†232 and hence cannot remember how much it would cost to send the Revelations†a to Petsch. Those I still had in stock had already been sent to him last week.†247

Page me41.238

Have heard from Siebel. He had just returned to Elberfeld after spending his honeymoon in Paris. Has distributed the 6 copies and ordered 6 more.†b It would be a good thing if you could give him some advice as to how it should be advertised.

Page me41.238

Toby†c has let out a prolonged cry of pain in the Freischütz.†248

Page me41.238

The most ghastly misprint (not listed) in Herr Vogt, repeated 3 or 4 times, was 'Nationalrat' [National Council] for 'Ständerat' [Council of States]. I have got Petsch to send out a correction explicitly to the Genfer Grenzpost.

Page me41.238

The King of Prussia's†d death is most opportune. Qu'en dites-vous?†e

Page me41.238

My wife is improving daily, although she's still very weak. On Saturday, I emptied the last medicine bottle.

Page me41.238

Borchardt has yet to be hauled over the coals.†f

Page me41.238

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.239

Page me41.239

The whole FAMILY asks me to send you their warmest greetings and best wishes for the New Year. My letter's so short because my brother-in-law and sister†a are here. They sail tomorrow for the Cape of Good Hope.

Page me41.239

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

141
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL
IN ELBERFELD
Page me41.239
London, 3 January 1861
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Siebel,

HAPPY NEW YEAR! To you and your BETTER HALF.

Page me41.239

I must acknowledge with many thanks the arrival of my library,†244 ditto of your letter.

Page me41.239

Of the 6 COPIES of Herr Vogt you ordered, will you kindly send one to the Kölner Anzeiger, one to the Zeitung für Norddeutschland (Hanover), 3 to any literary journals you please. The main thing is that you yourself should read through a copy and yourself do a notice of it.

Page me41.239

As for the Kölner Anzeiger, you might use this little sheet as a weapon against the Kölnische Zeitung.

Page me41.239

Sales of the book are going so well that Petsch is 'contemplating' a second edition. In such an event, it would be of the utmost importance that you should, if possible, supply me with everything that appears about it in Germany (I see nothing here but the Allgemeine Zeitung, the Neue Preussische Zeitung, and the Volks-Zeitung), and keep me au courant.†b

Page me41.239

Ed. Meyen has already vented a heartrending 'cry of pain' in the Freischütz.†248 Vivat sequens!†c

Page Break me41.240

Page me41.240

Next time, you might try and find time to write to me at somewhat greater length.

Page me41.240

I have been very unfortunate of late. My wife was dangerously ill for 5 weeks and I had to lodge the 3 children elsewhere.

Page me41.240

As regards Schily, we'll knock some sense into him again.

Page me41.240

Salut.

Your

K. Marx

Page me41.240
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

142
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL
IN BARMEN
Page me41.240
[London,] 3 January 1861

Dear Siebel,

I have just noticed that a letter I sent you — in reply to the one received from you today — was wrongly addressed, namely, Elberfeld, poste restante, C. Siebel, jun. This I now rectify.

Page me41.240

Again my best wishes.

Page me41.240

I have just heard from Engels†232 who tells me that the busybody Dr Borchardt is most annoyed because I refer in Herr Vogt to the '3 German physicians'†a in Manchester as fellow SUBSCRIBERS to Das Volk.†b POOR FELLOW, THIS FULL-MOUTHED WISEACRE.

Page me41.240

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.240
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.241

143
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON

Page me41.241
Manchester, 7 January 1861

Dear Moor,

The Revelations†a will be despatched from here today or tomorrow post-paid to Petsch. The fellow had best stick a small label on the title page — London, A. Petsch & Co., 1861 — so that people know where it is to be had.

Page me41.241

Can't you get me Toby's cry of pain†248?

Page me41.241

Shall write to Siebel.

Page me41.241

In none of the German papers save the Kölnische†b have I found so much as an advertisement — which is surely odd.

Page me41.241

Our old enemies are not escaping the fate they deserve. The editor en chef of the late lamented Strassburger Correspondent was, according to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung,†c "a certain Mr Wolfers of Cologne" — the worthy Wolfers of Dumont's paper†d — couldn't you somehow convey this to Biscamp for transmission to the Augsburg A.Z.? Also, that the chap is not a Rhinelander but a beastly Belgian. Schwanbeck dead of delirium tremens, the worthy Brüggemann disappeared and consigned to oblivion, and Wolfers openly in the pay of Bonaparte — what more can you ask?

Page me41.241

Doubtless King William I will now make a real ass of himself as well. When he tells the Berliners that much has happened that was unjust,†e perhaps he is referring to the enforced dismissal of Stieber.†250 Apropos. Another friend, griffin Greif,†f would appear from a report in the Neue Preussische Zeitung†g to be gravely ill as the result of an apoplectic fit. It's a good sign, these chaps being bowled over like ninepins. That the change of monarch†251 should go so nicely hand in hand with the Austrian revolution†252 of all things, is capital. Even the Wochenschrift des Nationalvereins†h now declares that, unless Prussia moves fairly quickly, Austria will inevitably gain ascendancy in Germany. Things are going famously in Austria. Nothing could be more favourable than that stubbornly irresolute jackass Francis Joseph. Things are going famously and will be getting too much for Mr Bonaparte as well as for Franzl.

Page Break me41.242

Page me41.242

In North America things are also hotting up. With the slaves the situation must be pretty awful if the SOUTHERNERS are playing such a risky game.†253 The least irruption of irregulars from the North might result in a general conflagration. At all events, one way or another, slavery would appear to be rapidly nearing its end and hence also COTTON PRODUCTION. What repercussions this will have on England we shall soon see. And with such powerful movements under way, a jackass like Bonaparte thinks he can go on fishing in troubled waters indefinitely.

Page me41.242
Many regards,
Your
F.E.

Page me41.242
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

144
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.242
[London,] 8 January 1861

Dear Frederick,
I myself only had Toby's cry of pain†248 for rapid perusal. Last week, by the way, I ordered 2 COPIES through Petsch, one of which you shall have.
Page me41.242
Siebel's present address is Carl Siebel jun., Barmen (Kleine Wertherstrasse, No. 25).
Page me41.242
Petsch has already advertised the Revelations†a in the Buchhändler-Börsenblatt.†b I've forbidden him to do so elsewhere out of consideration for Schapper.

Page Break me41.243
Page me41.243
As regards booksellers' advertisements of Herr Vogt, I have so far seen them only in the Reform,†a the Publicist,†b the Freischütz,†c and the Grenzpost.†d Incidentally, I got Petsch to write, under my supervision, to all the chaps concerned, and thus the mystére will resolve itself within the next few days. He thinks it doesn't depend on the newspapers but on the booksellers, who have been putting the thing off until after Christmas and the New Year. And the advertisement goes into the newspapers only through the agency of the bookseller who is responsible for local sales. Mais nous verrons!†e
Page me41.243
You can see what a hapless creature I am! Last Wednesday,†f (JUST A WEEK AGO) I got a cold and cough accompanied by a stabbing pain in the region of the liver, so that not only coughing, but turning my carcass from one side to the other, caused me physical PAINS. This seemed to me to indicate an inflammation. It was the first time I had felt a dolor†g of this kind, although Allen had often asked me searchingly whether I had. This time — particularly since I am already encumbered with a hair-raising DOCTOR'S BILL, not to mention other BILLS, — I have SO FAR been treating myself. The treatment was simple — no smoking, CASTOR OIL, drink only lemonade, eat little, no spirits whatever, do nothing, stay at home (since the cold air at once sets me coughing). I'm not quite well yet and somewhat weak. By the by, you might sometime ask Gumpert what one ought to do about such acute attacks, should they recur. I shall ask Allen as soon as I can go out again and am once more completely fit.

Page me41.243
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.243
My wife (who is slowly improving, but still very weak) and the children send their regards.

Page me41.243
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.244

145
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.244
[London,] 10 January 1861

Dear Engels,
Yesterday I received the enclosed scrap of paper and thus can no longer avoid paying the agents £2 5/- for the books.†254 In addition, the TRANSPORT thereof to my house will cost ABOUT 10/-. Duty has been waived. I'd certainly not write to you about this nasty matter, but dura necessitas,†a since I haven't a farthing.
Page me41.244
Overleaf you will find a copy of a scrawl penned by H. Beta at Gottfried Kinkel's behest on the subject of Herr Vogt.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.244
Magazin für Literatur des Auslands. 1861. No. 2.

'Herr Vogt — by Karl Marx. In the early years of the “refugees”, many a little sum was doubtless expended on getting secret police to smell out frightful secrets and conspiracies. While the labour was great, the yield was rather pitiful. But as regards the fear inspired in many a refugee by the secret police, it was indeed quite desperate. Some men actually went mad as a result. Others, it is true, liked to boast about this fear, and to let all and sundry know that almost every state in Europe had assigned special spies to them. Boasting it was, not hypochondria. The devil in person eluded the notice of these small fry, even when he had them by the scruff of the neck. They ate and drank with him, entertained him as a friend at their tea-tables, and never noticed that his only object was to betray them, — not for 30 pieces of silver, not he! He was prepared to pay, and pay a lot, for the printing of this pamphlet with his own money. For ten years now the said Mr Karl Marx would seem to have laboured and snooped and nabbed letters and copied them so that he might appear on his own account and for his own delectation as the first among all your Vidocqs and Stiebers. All the long-forgotten rubbish and mistakes perpetrated by the emigration ten years since have been made use of, copied, extracted from friends over a cup of tea — not that one would wish to pillory the latter. In the space of ten years, any man, whether a refugee or not, is liable to write something nonsensical or over-hasty in private, counting on the discretion of friends, on its being swept away in the flow of time. But when friends carefully glean these occasional slips and snippets and deck them out with whimsy, thus raising a cloud of dust and filth, as in Mr Marx's pamphlets, when, for example, things uttered in an agitated hour ten years since†b — (voilá Godofredum)†c — are printed in bold so that one sees Mr Marx's desire to make a ribaldry, a disgusting little anecdote out of them, — then indeed everyone deserves to be pilloried. Mr Marx is a master of constructive denunciation. Vidocq, Ohm, Stieber, etc., are mere lambs by comparison. Many will delight in wading through this churned-up filth, for it is masterly calumny†a; but we would urge caution on our readers: in the simian wilderness there are malicious baboons who, for want of other weapons, resort to ordure with which they bombard friend and foe alike. Beware: Throughout almost the whole of his 190 pages Mr Marx engages in this type of strategy, a type which eschews all expenditure on ammunition. Read it, by all means, but keep close at hand a basin of water and strong soap, not forgetting your smelling bottle!

Page Break me41.245
H.B.'

Page me41.245
Such is Gottfried's Beta (Betziche), former editor of Drucker's How Do You Do, and Gottfried's eulogistic arse-crawler in the Gartenlaube, etc. A fine crew! What a style and what nonsense!

Page me41.245
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

146
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†255
IN BERLIN
Page me41.245
London, 16 January 1861
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

D'abord,†b my best if belated wishes for a Happy New Year.

Page me41.245

My wife is now convalescing. Her illness resulted in my falling seriously ill myself; and, at present, I am suffering from inflammation of the liver. And a very nice New Year's gift too! Hitherto, the complaint has merely been chronic. Now it is becoming acute.

Page me41.245

This is the explanation for my silence, despite the very close sympathy felt both by my wife and myself for your sufferings. I hope that when you next write you'll have a better account to give me of yourself. If you would care to send me a fairly detailed report on your illness, I shall consult a doctor whom I regard as a veritable aesculapian genius.†c However, he does not live here, but in Manchester.

Page Break me41.246
Page me41.246

I was greatly tickled by the Royal Prussian Amnesty†256 which in effect excludes all refugees from its indulgence. Gottfried Kinkel, who has recently joined the National Association,†257 could, however, return, if a correct interpretation were put on the 'act of grace'. As for Bucher, Freiligrath, Borkheim, Zimmermann of Spandau, and many others, they have long been 'naturalised Englishmen'.

Page me41.246

Faucher, former London correspondent of the Neue Preussische Zeitung, afterwards co-editor of the (MANCHESTER SCHOOL†258) Morning Star, — a chap, by the by, with whom anyone can consort since he does not conceal but, indeed, openly flaunts, a lack of character typical of the Berliners, and who isn't actually taken politically au sérieux†a by any of his acquaintances, — believes that he can now play the Prussian Cobden. Good luck to him. Such, at least, was his plan when he left London.

Page me41.246

One of my friends, J. Ph. Becker, is at present with Garibaldi in Caprera. He has written, telling me that the Mazzinists were almost exclusively responsible for the serious part of the south Italian movement, that Garibaldi does not exactly possess a superfluity of brains, and that the utmost confusion reigns in his friends' camp. Garibaldi, by the by, agrees with Mazzini in believing that Cavour isn't even well-intentioned with regard to Victor Emmanuel, that he is rather Bonaparte's direct tool and that the Gaeta intervention,†259 as well as Farina's appointment to Sicily and Farini's to Naples, etc., are nothing but carefully calculated moves to compel Vic. Em. to make fresh territorial concessions to France, and concessions in favour of Murat in southern Italy. Which will succeed, and soon become manifest.

Page me41.246

The slavery crisis in the United States will bring about a terrible crisis in England in a year or two; the Manchester COTTON LORDS are already beginning to tremble.
Page me41.246

I seldom read German stuff. Recently, however, I happened upon A. Bastian, Der Mensch in der Geschichte, etc. I think it's a bad book, formless and pretentious. His endeavour to explain psychology in terms of 'natural science' amounts to little more than a pious wish. His endeavour to explain history in terms of 'psychology', on the other hand, shows that the man does not know what psychology is, or, for that matter, history.
Page me41.246

Darwin's work†b is most important and suits my purpose in that it provides a basis in natural science for the historical class struggle. One does, of course, have to put up with the clumsy English style of argument. Despite all shortcomings, it is here that, for the first time, 'teleology' in natural science is not only dealt a mortal blow but its rational meaning is empirically explained.

Page Break me41.247
Page me41.247

I have lately had the opportunity of seeing rather more German newspapers. Ghastly stuff. And, withal, a self-satisfied mediocrity which is indeed NAUSEOUS.
Page me41.247

Could you send me the 2nd volume of Eichhoff's Polizei-Silhouetten? Not to be had here.
Page me41.247

Another thing I have just read is Walesrode's Totenschau.†a Has some nice tales! But lamely presented, though this is excusable in view of the time of its publication.
Page me41.247

Wishing you all good health, and with regards from my wife,

Your
K.M.

Page me41.247

Mieroslawski, who has just been in Paris, told my friend Schily that things looked 'bad'. At the same time, he expressed himself most unfavourably with respect to 'Klapka'. Yet I myself can't quite make up my mind about Mieroslawski.

Page me41.247
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

147
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.247
London, 18 January [1861]

Dear Frederick,

You must excuse my failure to acknowledge receipt of the £3 ere now. On Monday I had a relapse and, since there was no sign of improvement on Tuesday, I had to have recourse to Allen again, so that I am at present UNDER MEDICAL TREATMENT. Writing means that I have to stoop, which hurts, and so I kept putting it off. As you see, I am as tormented as Job, though not as god-fearing.

Page Break me41.248
Page me41.248

Siebel — whose time appears to be very valuable since there hasn't been a single line from him — has sent me 2 Cologne Anzeigers, containing two short reviews favourable to my book.†a The bookseller's advertisement was in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung supplement of 1 January.
Page me41.248

I'd be glad if you would let me have for The Times a short critique in English of the Prussian amnesty†b†256 — because of Allen's orders that I should refrain altogether from writing for at least another week. The following are the main points to be emphasised:
Page me41.248

1. That the amnesty is the lousiest to have been proclaimed in any country (not excluding Austria) since 1849; (mesquin,†c typically Prussian);
Page me41.248

2. That the state of the 'liberal' Prussian press may be judged by the plaudits it bestows upon this piece of ordure;
Page me41.248

3. That, whenever a new government comes to power in Prussia, an amnesty is proclaimed in respect of certain minor misdemeanours, resistance to gendarmes, insults to officials, etc., and that the present amnesty is in fact no more than this.
Page me41.248

4. In effect all refugees — i.e. all who took part in the revolution of 1848/49 — are excluded from the amnesty. The prospect held out to those refugees 'liable to be sentenced by Our civil courts' and who are permitted 'to return without let or hindrance' (as though everyone had not always been 'legally' entitled to return), is that the Ministry of Justice will 'ex officio' lodge 'pleas for clemency' on their behalf. This, in effect, guarantees nothing. This absurd formula was chosen presumably because Prussia is a 'state under the rule of law' whose constitution precludes the king from suppressing any judicial inquiry. A pretty mockery in a state where, on the admission of the Prussian Gerichtszeitung (in Berlin), there has been no justice for the past ten years. Furthermore, sentences in absentia could be AT ONCE pronounced and quashed. This 'legal' coquetry is indeed deserving of recognition when Stieber, Greif, and Goldheim continue to be left at large — ditto Simons, Manteuffel, etc.

Page me41.248

5. Beastliest of all is § 4 of the amnesty, whereby 'all those liable to be sentenced by military tribunals in the near future' must first 'appeal' for William's 'clemency', whereupon he 'will reserve his final decision until such time as he has received a report from Our Military Department of Justice'.

Page Break me41.249
Page me41.249

Consider in this connection that, given the Prussian Landwehr's†41 constitution, it is most exceptional for a Prussian refugee to be outside the jurisdiction of a 'military tribunal'; that the 'plea for clemency' is categorically prescribed, and nothing positive is promised in return for this humiliating procedure; finally that, more than any refugee, William himself is in need of an 'amnesty' since, from a strictly legal standpoint, he had no business to intervene in Baden,†260 etc.
Page me41.249

The Times will undoubtedly accept a critique of this kind with the utmost pleasure. I would send it simultaneously to other papers as well, just signing it, of course, 'A PRUSSIAN REFUGEE'. At the same time, I would write a personal letter to the Editor.†a
Page me41.249

It is the only way we can give these Prussian dogs, and the corporal†b in charge of them, their deserts.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.249
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

148
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.249
[London,] 22 January [1861]

Dear Frederick,

Today I promptly sent off two COPIES (one to The Times, one to the Standard) of the statement about the AMNESTY.†c

Page me41.249

What do you think of the statement by Bucher et cie?†261

Page me41.249

You will have seen in the Prussian press how Gottfried†d is again pushing himself into the foreground via the newspaper mob.

Page me41.249

The advertisement (bookseller's) for my book has also appeared in the Neue Preussische Zeitung. This week it has again been sent to all the Berlin papers. The scoundrels on both sides intend to burke the thing.

Page Break me41.250

Page me41.250

As to my condition, Allen is of the same view as Gumpert. But, whatever it may be, it is a highly disgusting condition, which incapacitates one for work. There is also some attendant physical pain, though today it's much better. I'm still taking medicine and Allen calls every three days. He was here again today. Riding, CHANGE OF AIR, etc. But I can't, of course, tell him where the shoe pinches. I have wondered off and on whether I might not fix something up with a LOAN SOCIETY through Borkheim so as to put my affairs in some sort of order, these having become much disorganised as a result of medical expenses, the impossibility of drawing on the Tribune, etc. But each time I get to the point, my heart sinks into my boots, for Borkheim (despite all his GOOD QUALITIES) is a braggart and every day — or rather each time I see him — he goes on about the money he is owed by refugees.

Page me41.250

If you could send me an article whenever you have the time and the inclination [it would]†a be very welcome. I am still INCAPABLE. Most welcome of all would be an article from you for Saturday†b on French armaments,†c or on things French generally.

Page me41.250

In my view there is no alliance between Russia on the one hand and Prussia and Austria on the other. It's simply that Russia, who always protects herself on two sides, has concluded certain agreements (relating to Poland and the Danubian Principalities) with the chaps in Warsaw†262; but it's also quite certain that she has struck a new bargain with Bonaparte against other 'contingencies'.

Page me41.250

Apropos: It might, perhaps, be even better if you wrote about Schleswig-Holstein.†d One point: the foul behaviour of the Berlin press, which constantly abuses Austria for 'impeding' Prussia's anti-Danish moves. Now that Austria has given its consent, it wails about 'snares', issues warnings, urges peace, etc. Vide Volks-Zeitung, Kölnische Zeitung, etc. See that you lay about the Berlin press. In the past I used to do so frequently in the Tribune. But it has to be constantly repeated.

Page me41.250

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.250
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.251

149
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.251
[London,] 28 January 1861

Dear Lassalle,

I am writing to you today in some haste, not from home, but from the City. In a few days, you shall have a longer letter and a reply to all your inquiries. First, my thanks for your package. I have passed one COPY of the petition to Freiligrath. Engels will receive No. II; No. III will be retained by me. It is a truly splendid document and is part and parcel of the history of the present era.†263
Page me41.251

Perhaps you would be good enough to see that the enclosed note is delivered to Mr Eichhoff without delay.†264
Page me41.251

Owing to the current state of your health, friendly duty precludes my spurring you on to fresh labours. OTHERWISE I would have declared an anti-Zabel pamphlet, such as you envisage, to be a political deed.
Page me41.251

My wife sends her kindest regards to you and the countess.†a Her convalescence is proceeding satisfactorily. I, for my part, expect I shall be able to forego all medicine for some time to come (I finished the last BOTTLE yesterday).
Page me41.251

My best respects to the countess. In my next letter to you I shall take the liberty of enclosing a line or two for her.

Tout á vous†b
K. Marx

Page me41.251
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.252

150
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.252
[London,] 29 January 1861

Dear Engels,

When misfortunes come, they never come singly, as you will see from the enclosed letter from Dana. They have protested a bill for £30 I drew on them at 2 months' date on 10 December and, furthermore, have cancelled all articles for the next 6 weeks. Yesterday I went straight to Freiligrath, of course, and, if he is to have adequate security, about the only way out is for him to try and discount a bill which I shall give him on myself at 3 months. How I shall continue to make SHIFT here I can't imagine, for the rates, school, house, GROCER, butcher and God knows what else are denying me any further RESPITE. What a dirty trick it was of Dana's to refer in his statement of accounts to the critical period of 1858/59 when my contributions were reduced to 1 article per week purely as an exception,†265 an agreement that was in any case rendered null and void years ago per usum†a and, what's more, explicitly by letter. Now he is deducting all the articles they didn't print last year. Conversely, allowing his incorrect assumption that the agreement of 1858/59 remains in force, he would still not have the right to condemn me to 1 1/2 months' idleness. And yet there's no action I can take against the chaps, since I'm entirely dependent on them. I really don't know what to do, though I have long seen this crisis looming up.
Page me41.252

Lassalle's letter also enclosed. In his present missive, he shows no sign of remembering the impression Vogt's rubbish†25 had made on him. Still, it is better to see the light late rather than not at all. As to his proposed revival of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung — la Hatzfeldt, about whom I enclose a memorandum†263 for you, has 300,000 talers at her disposal — I would, circumstances being what they are, clutch even at this straw, but the tide in Germany hasn't risen high enough yet to bear our ship. The thing would prove abortive from the very outset.
Page me41.252

Toby†b has again written to Borkheim, inquiring whether it was true that he had never heard about our £90 refugee affair. I was despised in Germany, he said, hence the universal silence. Even the great L. Walesrode has declared that no one need reply to such scurrilities, etc. En passant, I should be grateful if you would send Borkheim — seeing that he contributed £12 to Herr Vogt — a reply to his letter. It is a point upon which he is very touchy.

Page Break me41.253
Page me41.253

Bucher and Rodbertus, who had been on the list of deputies for Berlin, were struck off by infuriated Little Germans†266 following the publication of their statement.†261 The latter is bad, but the way Bucher serves G.K. (Gottfried Kinkel) in the last issue of the Hermann†a is good.
Page me41.253
Mr Kolatschek wrote yesterday asking for a complimentary copy of Herr Vogt in order to review it. This has been sent. There have been relatively large sales of the pamphlet in Petersburg and Riga; on the other hand, nothing (maybe 6 copies) in Cologne.
Page me41.253
The story Lassalle tells about Zabel is a good one.
Page me41.253
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.253
The swinish Times didn't take your amnesty piece.†b Nor did the Standard. Now get the thing into the Guardian, which you should send down here and from which I shall take it and arrange through Borkheim for it to appear in the swinish Hermann, etc., and elsewhere.

Page me41.253
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

151
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.253
[London,] 31 January [1861]

DEAR Frederick,
Letter containing £10†232 received with very many thanks.
Page me41.253
I must now be off, mainly for the purpose of paying the gas and rates, otherwise the fellows will send in the BROKER. As for the other cads, I shall have to see how I can arrange matters with them.

Page Break me41.254
Page me41.254

I shall write to you at greater length as soon as I hear from you tomorrow.†267
Page me41.254
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.254
Enclosed Lassalle's memorandum.†263

Page me41.254
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

152
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.254
[Manchester, 31 January 1861]

Dear Marx,
It's difficult to answer Borkheim's letter.†a All local commission houses which buy GOODS for the Italian market operate there themselves. Hence they would regard an order from London as the action of a competitor and duly ignore it. Reuss, Kling & Co. and A.S. Sichel are the main houses in this line, but they certainly won't accept small orders. At all events, make sure that whoever approaches these people does not mention my name; it would serve no purpose whatever and might make me look a complete ass. If the order is of any size and the intention is to start a regular connection, the buyer would do best to come up himself and go to the manufacturers direct. The people here who buy for the London houses are exclusively in the EAST INDIA TRADE or else small chaps whom I don't know.
Page me41.254
That's all I have to tell you today.
Page me41.254
I can't imagine what fellows he is referring to who are up to all kinds of nonsense.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.254
Thursday.†b

Page me41.254
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.255

153
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.255
London, 2 February 1861

Dear Frederick,

Yesterday I got the enclosed note from Freiligrath†a which doesn't make matters any more agreeable. You must write and tell me at once what I ought to do.

Page me41.255

In fact, I've been so BOTHERED from all sides that my head is going round and round and, on top of that, there is the unpleasantness of having to annoy you with all my petites miséres.

Page me41.255

I have written to Dana, who is definitely in the WRONG legally, but with little prospect of success.†b The fellows know that one needs them and that they, for their part, don't need one at this moment.

Page me41.255

Weren't you going to send me the Nazione — certain letters of Mazzini's? Forgotten? You will shortly be getting the confiscated issue of the Courrier du Dimanche from me.

Page me41.255

Bucher maintains — he asked Borkheim to tell me — that his review will still appear in the Allgemeine Zeitung. You will doubtless have seen that at every opportunity the scoundrelly Blind brings his name before the public as an homme d'état.†c

Page me41.255

The rotten book business has cost me more than £4 all in all. What a strange fate this LIBRARY has!†244

Page me41.255

No news from Siebel? His connections certainly seem to be exceedingly limited.

Page me41.255

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.255

Thimm told Petsch a day or two ago that Herr Vogt has been the object of some particularly malicious abuse in Manchester. Brass, expressly for his own personal satisfaction, has ordered new type to be cast so that Herr Vogt can be advertised in an even more conspicuous manner. Given the large number of Swiss in Manchester, is it not possible to sell at least 1 COPY of the Grenzpost there?

Page me41.255
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.256

154
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.256
[Manchester,] 4 February 1861

Dear Moor,

I can't manage more than a line or two today. Provided the tailor is prepared to discount the bill for £35 if I draw it and so arrange it that the money doesn't have to be paid until July or August, VERY WELL, I shall draw it. But I must be able to count on the utmost discretion, for it could cost me my position. If Gumpert has got some money in (I haven't seen him since Friday), I might even be able to arrange it without that.†a

Your
F.E.

Page me41.256
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

155
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.256
Manchester, 6 February 1861

Dear Moor,

You can write and tell Freiligrath that we don't need his tailor. Gumpert has obtained so much money in payment of his accounts that he can lend me the greater part of what is needed, to be repaid monthly £5 AT A TIME; the business has therefore been fixed up. Freiligrath can have the £30 any day and then he need only pay the expenses, which I shall likewise remit to him within 24 hours of my knowing the amount. As far as I'm concerned, he can write to me about it direct and you need not bother about this whole thing any more. I shall then make sure that I get at least part of the amount put down to the next financial year.

Page Break me41.257
Page me41.257
Your letters returned herewith. Not until my last had gone off,†232 did I discover that, according to Dana's calculations, you have drawn payment for 19 more articles than they printed. Nevertheless, the fact remains that it is a dirty rotten business and, in this respect, the Tribune is behaving in true PENNY PAPER fashion. Its socialism amounts to nothing more than the highly contemptible petty bourgeois mania for getting the best out of a bargain.
Page me41.257
Lassalle has become Isidor P-B†a again. What sort of politician is this who thinks he has reduced a government to pulp because he has demonstrated that it was guilty of inconsistency in so trifling a matter? He must have some fine notions of parliamentary rule and what stands for law and justice under that rule. The man is incorrigible. One can only wonder what his monumental work in two volumes†b will be about. At all events, anything can happen now that he has made such a complete volte-face in re Vogt.†25 As to his little paper,†c if I were you, I would advise him to start a weekly in opposition to the Preussisches Wochenblatt, Berliner Revue, Wochenschau des Nationalvereins,†d etc. La Hatzfeldt's 300,000 talers, which both of them will hang on to very tightly indeed, and madame's Lucullan mode of life won't leave enough in the way of an income to keep a daily going. There'd soon be a dearth of cash. On the other hand, a weekly of this description doesn't cost much and it would certainly be a nice source of income for us. Lassalle would, of course, have to pay us properly, i.e., English rates, otherwise it's no go. Besides, the thing would come in very useful as a mouthpiece for us.
Page me41.257
Our Prussian corporal†e is suffering from a truly colossal attack of the shits. In every speech, the oaf talks of the impending life-and-death struggles.
Page me41.257
The Volunteer Journal has published a revised version of my Tribune article on French armaments.†268 This evening I shall, if possible send off a dozen copies to all the newspapers; the thing may create a sensation. I am also sending you one; since the scoundrels in New York are not at all interested in it now, and in any case it has been much shuffled about, no harm can be done. My pamphlet†269 comes out next week; all I have left to do is read a few proofs and write the preface.

Page Break me41.258
Page me41.258
Bucher seems to be behaving quite decently.

Page me41.258
Warm regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.258
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

156
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON
Page me41.258
[London,] 7 February 1861

Dear Freiligrath,
I have so arranged matters with Engels that you can obtain the £30 any day you like, ditto the expenses at 24 hours' notice. The tailleur†a thus becomes redundant, and I would ask you to let Engels know when he is to send the money.†b
Page me41.258
I shall myself be obliged to go to Holland, since I won't otherwise be able to weather the current crisis. Would you be so good as to inquire from some business friend of yours what the position is in regard to passports in Holland — whether one has to have a passport? The Tribune's 'turpitude',†c coinciding as it did with other misfortunes, was all the more disastrous for me in that it prevented me from making further arrangements about my wife's convalescence in accordance with doctor's orders. Although I don't belong to the category of 'German martyrs' and have always been inimical to that category, I nevertheless think I have had my fair share of refugee-trouble.
Page me41.258
Besides Lassalle's,†d I have received offers of journalistic employment from 2 other quarters in Germany. However — and doubtless you share this view — I don't believe the tide has risen high enough for me to agree to anything of the kind just now.

Page Break me41.259
Page me41.259
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.259
You can see what a HUMBUG OLD Ruge is by comparing Engels' Reichsverfassungskampagne†a in the Revue with the version Arnold has palmed off on you.

Page me41.259
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Jg. 30, Bd. 2, Ergänzungshefte, No. 12, Stuttgart, 1911-12 (in F. Mehring, 'Freiligrath und Marx in ihrem Briefwechsel') and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

157
ENGELS TO ELISABETH ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me41.259
Manchester, 13 February 1861

Dear Mother,
I am returning herewith the contracts, 7 copies, duly signed, having kept the 8th here.†270 I must say that, if it hadn't been for your sake, I could have made up my mind to do so only with difficulty. It was hard for me thus to exclude myself for no valid reason or on no good pretext, or so it seemed to me, from the only family business that remains to us — remains with any certainty. I believe that I also had a right to it and that my brothers†b had no right to assume that I should, without more ado and for no reason at all, relinquish that right in their favour. What I demanded was certainly not unfair; moreover, I had put forward that demand quite early enough for it to be taken into account during the deliberations. Emil Blank conceded as much when he was here. But I was told absolutely nothing more, and not till the others had settled everything did they approach me with the demand that I agree to forgo my claim, basing that demand — in Emil's†a letter — on reasons which may be very businesslike, but which I, for one, would not have cared to bring up in this way vis-á-vis my brothers; and, by way of consolation, I am left with Emil's assurance that Gottfr. Ermen, or so Emil is convinced, will not break his contract with me. This conviction is outweighed by that of our lawyer, who told Emil more than once that the contract qua contract affords me no legal guarantees. They have the business in Engelskirchen, and I have Emil's conviction.

Page Break me41.260
Page me41.260
Mother dear, I have swallowed all this and much more for your sake. Not for anything in the world would I contribute in the smallest way towards embittering the evening of your life with family disputes over inheritance. I believe that my conduct when I was at home,†146 just like my letters, has amply demonstrated that I was very far from seeking to place obstacles in the way of any agreement and that, on the contrary, I gladly made sacrifices so that everything might be settled in accordance with your wishes. That is why I have signed the thing without more ado. Whatever the cost, I would not wish you to be plagued with such things any longer, or to worry about them. Nor shall I bear any grudge against my brothers, or so much as mention the matter to them, unless they absolutely force me to do so, for it has been settled, and I have no desire to parade my belief that I have made a sacrifice. But I considered it my bounden duty to tell you frankly what my motives were in this matter, and it goes without saying that I never remotely supposed you could, perhaps, have arranged matters more favourably for me. On the contrary, I know that, throughout the negotiations I, too, was always in your thoughts and that you did all you could for me.

Page me41.260

The matter is now settled, and that is that. You are unlikely ever to hear another word from me about it, and I need not say that, when Emil comes over here, I shall, as always, give him a fraternal welcome; though our views may have differed in this case, he is, nevertheless, a fine lad, who has always taken my interests over here very much to heart.
Page me41.260

The dressing-gown has arrived, and I am very glad of it as it's freezing again, but the red epaulettes are a trifle outré for local taste. By the way, I now have the company of a young ratter, who has strayed into the house.

Page Break me41.261
Page me41.261

I hope you have got over your cold all right; it will also do you good to be freed from all the worry about the inheritance. But still, if possible, you should buy the Sieg.†a
Page me41.261

Warmest regards to Hermann, Rudolf, the Blanks and the Boellings.
Page me41.261

With much love,
Your son
Friedrich

Page me41.261
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 2, Stuttgart and Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

158
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.261

[London,] 14 February 1861

Dear Frederick,

You must really forgive me for not having answered your very kind letter†b before now. In the meantime, you will have received a communication from philistine Freiligrath.

Page me41.261

I have had, and still have, an enormous amount of running about to do. For I intend to go to Holland so as to put my affairs over here in order, otherwise they will get out of hand. There are two things I require for the purpose, a passport and money, both of which I shall manage to get hold of here d'une maniére ou d'une autre.†c (I may have to go as far as Aachen.)

Page me41.261

I haven't written to Lassalle yet. No doubt something in the nature of a weekly†d would be best, but, then again, what a risk we should run, given the indiscretion of our friend, if he were there on the spot as editor-in-chief, and thus in a position to get us all into hot water! He would, of course, immediately stress that the thing was a party organ, so that we, too, should be held responsible for every imbecility and our position in Germany would be ruined before we had so much as regained it. This requires the most careful consideration.

Page Break me41.262

Page me41.262

The conspiration de silence in the German press is having a seriously adverse effect on sales of Herr Vogt. After a good start, they have accordingly come to a STANDSTILL. The Allgemeine Zeitung seems pretty well determined not to carry Bucher's review either. At any rate, we shall know one way or another in the next few days, for, if it intends to publish it at all, it can't go on putting it off much longer. Kolatschek is a certainty.

Page me41.262

My wife recommends that you read Hans Ibeles by Johanna Mockel,†a in which Willich figures as Wildemann, etc., Mrs von Brüningk as Platonina, and that blackguard Kinkel as Don Juan. I myself know nothing about the rubbish save for what my wife has told me. She says that the book provides irrefutable evidence that Johanna Mockel threw herself out of the window because she had been crossed in love. (BY THE BY, my wife's complexion is still far from smooth and probably won't be for some time to come.) At any rate, it's commendable in Parson Kinkel†271 that he should make money out of the late Mockel's CONFESSIONS by selling them to Cotta, and then consume it with Minna Werner, by whom he already has a child. Parsons are the cleverest of men. However, Johanna Mockel was an acrimonious body and her breath, for all her love of music, was acrid, too.

Page me41.262

Have had the Nazione.†b Very good. Ditto the Volunteer Journal. But not your pamphlet.†269

Page me41.262

Vogt will never forgive Vincke for having put him in the shade so completely. Incidentally, those Prussian swine are making fools of themselves IN EVERY RESPECT. Firstly, the blackguards ask Bonaparte to continue his intervention at Gaeta†272; secondly, the rascals have joined Bonaparte and Russia in declaring themselves in favour of continued French intervention in Syria.†273 Austria opposes this, and, of course, so does Palmerston, FOR APPEARANCE'S SAKE. And the way they're carrying on at home! The rotten bunch is bound to come a cropper.
Page me41.262
Wilhelm Liebknecht has been almost completely laid off by his American newspapers as well. One of the papers†c for which he wrote was SACKED in New Orleans.
Page me41.262
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.262
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.263

159
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.263
[London,] 15 February 1861

Dear Lassalle,
I did not, as I had intended, send off a second letter to you on the heels of my first,†a because, in the meantime, a crisis had supervened, i.e., a financial crisis. Dana wrote from New York, saying that it (the Tribune) had dismissed all its European correspondents, retaining nobody save myself, but that 1. the Cyclopaedia†b was to be temporarily suspended; 2. my contributions were to be suspended for 6 weeks; 3. finally, that in future I was to write one article less per week.
Page me41.263
Under these circumstances and in view of the expenditure arising out of my wife's illness, I have got to go to Holland and see my uncle Philips, if I am to put my financial affairs in some sort of order. Since I require money for the trip I have drawn a bill on you for £20 (ABOUT 34 talers) payable at 6 weeks' sight. I shall send you the required sum from Holland before the expiry date or else bring it to Berlin in person, for I may possibly come as far. I shall come, by the by, simply as a traveller if, that is, I cross the Dutch border and enter Germany. (If I were Karl Heinzen — Heineke the lusty knave†274 — I should say OVERSTRIDE.)

Your
K. Marx

Page me41.263
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.264

160
MARX TO ENGELS†275
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.264
[London,] 27 February 1861

Dear Engels,
I am leaving tomorrow on a passport made out not to me, however, but to Bühring,†* valid for Holland. This created a vast amount of TROUBLE, as did raising enough money for me to get away at all. Have paid quite small sums on account to the most pressing creditors; in the case of others (e.g. GROCER), I invoked the American crisis and obtained a respite, but only on condition that my wife paid weekly during my absence. In addition, she has to pay £2 18/- in rates next week.
Page me41.264
Nota bene. I presume you got a letter from my wife (ABOUT a week ago) in which she thanked you for the wine? She is a little worried lest it should have fallen into the wrong hands. The children, too, are greatly obliged to you for the wine. They would seem to have inherited their father's fondness for the bottle.
Page me41.264
I shall probably go to Berlin as well — without a passport — to look into the matter of a weekly†a (Apropos — in Berlin William I is called Handsome William), and survey the dungheap generally.
Page me41.264
In the last number of the Hermann, that swine Blind published a letter Mazzini had written him.†b The importunate slimy creature clearly succeeded in convincing Mazzini that he represents the German émigrés. He uses the said Hermann as a receptacle for his filthy twaddle — patriotic — on the subject of Schleswig-Holstein, and also makes the latter an occasion for writing letters under his own name to the Globe, etc. Through Bronner — with him and Schaible he constitutes the 'Association for Freedom and Unity'†276 — he extorted so much money from a Bradford merchant that he was able to start a rotten little rag in Hamburg — the Nordstern — so as to throw his weight about in the North, while in the South, through Schaible's agency, he courts notoriety as 'Blind, man of iron' in the columns of the Stuttgart Beobachter (a kind of South German Volkszeitung). The purpose of all this business on the part of the wretched creature is, on the one hand, to shout down the disgrace inflicted on him in Herr Vogt†a and, on the other, to become Hecker secundus. Le pauvre hére.†b

Page Break me41.265
Page me41.265
The Cologne people have done my library proud.†244 The whole of Fourier stolen, ditto Goethe, ditto Herder, ditto Voltaire and, what to me is ghastliest of all, the Economistes du 18 siécle (brand-new, cost me some 500 fr.) and many volumes of classical Greek writers, many single volumes of other works. If I go to Cologne, I'll have something to say about it to that National Association man Bürgers. Hegel's Phenomenology and Logic ditto.
Page me41.265
During the past fortnight there's been such a lot of confounded running around to do — real ingenuity was needed to prevent a complete break-up of the household — that I have read no newspapers whatsoever, not even the Tribune on the AMERICAN CRISIS. However, for recreation in the evenings I have been reading Appian's Civil Wars of Rome in the original Greek.†c A most valuable book. The fellow comes of Egyptian stock. Schlosser says he is 'soulless', probably because he probes the material basis of the said civil wars. Spartacus emerges as the most capital fellow in the whole history of antiquity. A great general (no Garibaldi he), of noble character, a REAL REPRESENTATIVE of the proletariat of ancient times. Pompey a real shit; acquired spurious fame only by misappropriating, as Sulla's 'YOUNG MAN', etc., Lucullus's victories (over Mithridates), then Sertorius's (Spain), etc. As a general, was the Roman Odilon Barrot. As soon as he was brought face to face with Caesar and had to show what stuff he was made of — a mere louse. Caesar perpetrated the most stupendous military blunders, deliberately crazy ones, to discountenance the philistine opposing him. Any ordinary Roman general — Crassus, say — would have annihilated him six times over during the battle in Epirus.†277 But anything could be done with Pompey. In Love's Labour's Lost, Shakespeare would seem to have had some inkling of what Pompey was really like.†d
Page me41.265
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.266
Page me41.266
I shall write to you from Holland.†278 You will know without my telling you how grateful I am for the outstanding proofs of friendship you have given me.

Page me41.266

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

161
ENGELS TO ELISABETH ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me41.266
Manchester, 27 February 1861

Dear Mother,

I would have liked to answer your dear letter straight away, but with Emil's†a being here, have been so taken up with current business that it has been quite impossible. Well, he left yesterday morning and will probably reach Engelskirchen tonight. Dear mother, you have no need to worry about the possibility of my bearing any grudge against my brothers†b over the matter of the firm; it wouldn't occur to me. It was extremely disagreeable for me to have to withdraw from the family business in this way, nor could I find it agreeable when something I looked upon as a right to which I was entitled was lightly passed over for all kinds of reasons that had no bearing whatever on that right, my assent being, so to speak, demanded as a matter of course.†c I do not suggest that things haven't been arranged as well as, if not better than, they might have been had my claim been taken into consideration, but this is precisely what no one has taken the trouble to explain to me, and you cannot deny that, in the circumstances, it was expecting rather much of me to sign the thing. But having done so, I regard it as settled and you can count on me not to bear any of my brothers the slightest grudge about that. We shall need one another often enough and, besides, you know that I'm not in the least inclined to play the noble soul of whom no one takes note. I am sure Emil didn't notice any ill-temper on my part, still less any manifestation of annoyance towards himself, nor indeed could he have done, since I have now resigned myself to the thing and my only wish is that the business in Engelskirchen should yield good results for the four of us.

Page Break me41.267
Page me41.267

So, do not grieve over it, mother dear. For myself, the thing is over and done with, so much so that even the painful sensation I undeniably experienced, when I signed it, is likewise over and done with, disposed of and forgotten. If, I thought, this one aspect of the thing is disagreeable to me, then how many more such moments — far more disagreeable ones — must you have gone through in the course of the negotiations? And then I rejoiced at being able to put a stop to it all with one stroke of the pen. I might acquire a hundred other businesses, but never a second mother.
Page me41.267

I am very well, by the way. Emil enjoyed himself here very much, and will have written to tell you that we have just about finished with Gottfr.,†a so that that affair, too, will at last be in order. Well, goodbye, and mind you keep fit and look after yourself properly. My warmest regards to Hermann,†b the Rudolfs,†c the Blanks, and the Boellings.
Page me41.267
With much love,
Your son
Friedrich

Page me41.267
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 2, Stuttgart and Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

162
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†67
IN BERLIN
Page me41.267
7 March 1861
Zalt-Bommel, Holland
(c/o L. Philips)

Dear Lassalle,
As I've already written and told you,†d I intend to proceed from here to Berlin in order to discuss with you personally the possibility of joint politico-literary enterprises, but also and more especially to see you again.

Page Break me41.268
Page me41.268
Now, however, I should like you to tell me exactly how matters stand as regards the following point. The only passport I have is an old one issued by the French when I was expelled in 1849.†279 I could not bring myself to approach the Prussian Embassy in London. Nor did I wish to become a naturalised Englishman (like Freiligrath, Bucher, Zimmermann, etc.) and travel on an English passport. The following question arises: In 1845, when pursued in Belgium by the Prussian government,†280 I obtained through my brother-in-law†a a Prussian expatriation permit. On the pretext of my having ceased to be a Prussian subject, I was, as you know, expelled by the Prussian government in 1849. However, in the eyes of the law, all refugees who had spent 10 years outside the country would equally have ceased to be Prussian 'subjects'. I have never been naturalised abroad. Further, in accordance with the resolution passed by the Preliminary Parliament†281 of 1848 — a resolution that was regarded as virtually binding by all German governments on the occasion of the elections to the Frankfurt parliament†282 — all refugees, even though, like Vogt, etc., they might have been naturalised abroad, could avail themselves of their German citizenship and everywhere qualify for election to parliament. I invoked this when, in 1848, I requested that my Prussian citizenship be reinstated. This was refused by the Prussian ministry of the day, though they didn't venture to treat me as a foreigner until all was up with the revolution.

Page me41.268

In practice, the only importance that attaches to this question just now is whether I shall be able to get to Berlin unimpeded. If only I can succeed in crossing the border, I shall have nothing to fear in Berlin; on the periphery, however, it's a more ticklish matter.
Page me41.268

As you know, I am here with my uncle†b (who looks after my mother's affairs and has, in the past, frequently made me substantial advances against my share of the inheritance) in order to put my parlous finances in order. He's a stubborn man, but the fact of my being a writer greatly appeals to his vanity. So, when you write to me, you must refer to the success (lucus a non lucendo†c) of my recent anti-Vogt pamphlet, our joint plans for a newspaper, etc. and, above all, so couch your letter that I can demonstrate my 'confidence' in my uncle by giving him the letter to read. Nor should you omit to mention something about politics. Vous m'entendez, mon cher.†a

Page Break me41.269
Page me41.269

With kindest regards to you and the countess.†b

Your
K. Marx

Page me41.269

(Zalt-Bommel is near Nymwegen. I don't imagine that the name is familiar to you. However, it attracted some attention as a result of the recent floods.)
Page me41.269

The conspiration de silence, with which the entire German press has greeted my last piece,†c precisely as it did the previous ones, I really find most flattering, however detrimental it may be to sales. I trust your health has improved.

Page me41.269
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

MARX TO ANTOINETTE PHILIPS
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.269
Berlin, 24 March 1861
13 Bellevuestrasse
(Address: Dr F. Lassalle)

My dear Cousin,

I cannot thank you enough for your precious letter which fails only in being too short, although you have acted up to the English rule of packing the best things in the smallest compass.

Page me41.269

I arrived at Berlin on Sunday last (17th March†d), at 7 o'clock in the morning. My travel was not marked by any incident save a 6 1/2 hours' delay at Oberhausen, an abominably tedious little place. Lassalle who lives in a very fine house, situated in one of the finest streets of Berlin, had everything prepared for my reception, and gave me a most friendly welcome. The first hours having been talked away and my railway-fatigue chased by some rest and some refreshments, Lassalle introduced me at once to the house of the countess of Hatzfeldt who, as I soon became aware, dines every day in his house at 4 o'clock p.m., and passes her evenings with him. I found her hair as 'blond' and her eyes as blue as formerly, but for the remainder of her face I read the words imprinted in it: twenty and twenty make fifty seven. There were in fact wrinkles full of 'vestiges of creation', there were cheeks and chin betraying an embonpoint which, like coal beds, wants much time to be formed, and so forth. As to her eyebrows, I was at once struck by the circumstance that they had improved instead of deteriorating, so that art had by far got the better of nature. On later occasions I made the general remarks that she perfectly understands the art of making herself up and of finding in her toilette-box the tints no longer derived from her blood. Upon the whole, she reminded me of some Greek statues which still boast a fine bust but whose heads have been cruelly 'beknappered' by the vicissitudes of time. Still, to be not unjust, she is a very distinguished lady, no blue-stocking, of great natural intellect, much vivacity, deeply interested in the revolutionary movement, and of an aristocratic laissez aller very superior to the pedantic grimaces of professional femmes d'esprit.†a

Page Break me41.270

Page me41.270

On Monday, my friend Lassalle drew up for me a petition to the chief of the Prussian police for my restoration to the civil rights of a Prussian subject.†b On Tuesday, Lassalle himself, who is a man of extraordinary audacity, carried the petition to Herr von Zedlitz (Polizeipräsident, partisan of the Junkerpartei and the king's†c confidant) and, what with menaces, what with flatteries — Zedlitz considering this direct appeal to himself, instead of to the subaltern authorities, as a compliment paid to his person — he has so far succeeded that to-day the ministerial paper — Die Preussische Zeitung — announces my return to the 'fatherland'. Still I have not yet received an official answer in regard to my re-naturalisation.

Page me41.270

On Tuesday evening Lassalle and the countess led me to a Berlin theatre where a Berlin comedy, full of Prussian self-glorification, was enacted.†d It was altogether a disgusting affair. On Wednesday evening I was forced by them to assist at the performance of a ballet in the Opernhouse. We had a box for ourselves at the side — horribile dictu†a — of the king's 'loge'. Such a ballet is characteristic of Berlin. It forms not, as at Paris, or at London, an entrejeu,†b or the conclusion, of an opera, but it absorbs the whole evening, is divided into several acts, etc. Not a syllable is spoken by the actors, but everything is hinted at by mimickry. It is in fact deadly — dull. The scenery, however, was beautiful; you assisted for instance at a sea-voyage from Livorno to Naples; sea, mountains, seacoast, towns, etc., everything being represented with photographical truth.

Page Break me41.271

Page me41.271

On Thursday Lassalle gave a dinner in honour of my return, gentlemen and ladies being invited. Among the celebrities there were the old general von Pfuel, 'Schlachtenmahler'†c Bleibtreu, Hofrath Förster (a known Prussian historiograph and formerly called the 'Hofdemagog',†d he being a personal friend of the late king†e) and so forth. Hofrath Förster brought out a toast on my humble self. I was seated at table between the countess and Fräulein Ludmilla Assing, the niece of Varnhagen von Ense and the editor of Varnhagen's correspondence with Humboldt.†f This Fräulein, who really swamped me with her benevolence, is the most ugly creature I ever saw in my life, a nastily Jewish physiognomy, a sharply protruding thin nose, eternally smiling and grinning, always speaking poetical prose, constantly trying to say something extraordinary, playing at false enthusiasm, and spitting at her auditory during the trances of her ecstasis. I shall to-day be forced to pay a visit to that little monster which I treated with the utmost reserve and coldness, giving her to understand by friend Lassalle that the power of attraction works upon myself always in a centrifugal direction and that, when I happen to admire a person very much, I am very apt to steal altogether out of its presence.

Page me41.271

The state of things here is illboding for the powers that be. The Prussian Exchequer labours under a deficit, and all the old parties are in a movement of dissolution. The chamber of deputies will have to be re-elected during this season, and there is every probability that, during the process of its reconstitution, a great movement will pervade the country. This may, as my friend Lassalle thinks, be the proper moment for starting a newspaper†g here in the Prussian capital, but I have not yet come to a firm resolution. The necessity of waiting for the official answer of the authorities to my petition may prolong my sojourn beyond the term originally contemplated.

Page Break me41.272

Page me41.272

You see, my dear child, I have much seen during a few days, but still you may be sure that I always wish myself back to Bommel.†a

Page me41.272

With my best compliments to yourself, your father,†b and the whole family, believe me always

Your most sincere admirer
Charles Marx

Page me41.272
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Reproduced from the original

164
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL
IN BARMEN
Page me41.272
28 March 1861
c/o (Letter to me to be enclosed in an envelope)
13 Bellevuestrasse, Berlin, Dr F. Lassalle

Dear Siebel,

The secret of my journey, which WILL HAVE PUZZLED you to some extent, is as follows:

Page me41.272

As a result of the crisis in America the Cyclopaedia Americana,†c to which I was a contributor, has been completely suspended; similarly my contributions to the Tribune, my main resource, have been suspended until the end of April, and reduced by half for the period immediately thereafter (apart from myself all their European correspondents have been provisionally dismissed). This was compounded by a double misfortune: Herr Vogt, which, combined with the lawsuit, etc., cost me nearly £100, and a frightful stroke of ill-luck in that my wife (although twice vaccinated) caught small-pox and was ill for two months during which time I had to run two households, since the children couldn't remain at home.

Page Break me41.273
Page me41.273

So, I had to look round for other resources. Party friends here had already proposed to me starting a newspaper†a in the autumn. Hence my presence here. More in my next.

Page me41.273

In the meantime, I have run into financial difficulties here (I shan't be staying much longer). If you could lend me 100-150 talers, you would oblige me.

Page me41.273

Before returning to England I intend to see you at all events, if only on account of the newspaper project (for which 20,000 talers are READY). So, you must write and tell me, at all events, at which inn in Elberfeld I might best put up for 24 hours.

Your
K. Marx

Page me41.273
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

165
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL
IN BARMEN
Page me41.273
[Berlin,] 2 April 1861

Dear Siebel,

A letter, which arrived from Amsterdam today, brought the pleasant tidings that I shall be able to SETTLE my chief financial difficulties (which run to hundreds of pounds), since my uncle†b (who looks after my mother's affairs) has declared himself agreeable so far as the main issue is concerned. I am thus rid of my chief worry, but as regards the secondary matter I wrote to you about,†c I shall have to rely on you.
Page me41.273

I am bored stiff here. I am treated as a kind of LION and am forced to see a great many professional 'wits', both male and female. C'est affreux.†d What is keeping me here (not for more than another week, I hope) is the circumstance that I refuse to leave until I have forced the Prussian government to recognise my REINTEGRATION. (Prima facie,†e they are not making any difficulties about it, but are trying to shelve it.)

Page Break me41.274
Page me41.274

I shall be spending only one day in Elberfeld. Kindly write and tell me by return, how quickly one can get from Elberfeld to Aachen where I have an appointment.
Page me41.274

For Part II of my political economy,†8 I have dismissed Duncker in favour of Brockhaus. (Not that the latter knows this yet, but I have a sure means of forcing his hand.)
Page me41.274

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.274

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

166
MARX TO ANTOINETTE PHILIPS
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.274
Elberfeld, 13 April 1861

To Miss Nanette
My sweet little Cousin,

I hope you have received the letter I sent you from Berlin†a although you were cruel enough to leave your admirer without one single word of acknowledgement. Now, my cruel little witch, how will you be able to defend such a line of conduct? Were you not aware that a world of Philisteans hemmed me in, and that half an army of antiquated beauties and detestable blue stockings, did their best to transform me into an ass? Old Circe, as you are aware, metamorphosed the companions of Ulysses into pigs. These modern Circes have so far civilised themselves as to take to the asinine line. And was it not your duty, under such circumstances, to come to my rescue? Beware that I take my revenge, and conspire with Waradje†283 against the tranquillity of your heart.
Page me41.274

'An's Vaterland, das theure schliess' dich an'†b is a very fine sentence, but, quite confidentially, I may tell you that Germany is a beautiful country to live out of it. For my own part, if I were quite free, and if, besides, I were not bothered by some thing you may call 'political conscience', I should never leave England for Germany, and still less for Prussia, and least of all for that affreux†a Berlin with its 'Sand'†b and its 'Bildung'†c and 'seinen überwitzigen Leuten'.†d

Page Break me41.275
Page me41.275

At Berlin everybody who has some spirit to lose, is of course extremely anxious for fellow sufferers. If the ennui, that reigns supreme at that place, be distributed among a greater lot of persons, the single individual may flatter itself to catch a lesser portion of it. For this reason the countess Hatzfeldt, Lassalle's Egeria, tried everything to prolong my sojourn in the metropolis of tschakos†e without heads. Yesterday she made her last effort, and we had the following scurrilous conversation:
Page me41.275

She. 'This, then, is the thank for the friendship we have shown you, that you leave Berlin so soon as your business will permit?'
Page me41.275

I. 'Quite the contrary. I have prolonged my stay at this place beyond the due term, because your amiability chained me to this Sahara.'
Page me41.275
She. 'Then I shall become still more amiable.'
Page me41.275
I. 'Then there remains no refuge for me but running away. Otherwise I should never be able to return to London whither my duty calls me.'
Page me41.275
She. 'This is a very fine compliment to tell a lady, her amiability is such as to drive you away!'
Page me41.275
I. 'You are not Berlin. If you want to prove me the sincerity of your amiability, do run away with myself.'
Page me41.275
She. 'But I fear you will abandon me at the first station.'
Page me41.275
I. 'I am quite sure of not "leaving the girl behind me"†f at the next station. You know that when Theseus, having eloped with the Greek beauty,†g abandoned her at some station or other, there at once the god Bacchus descended from the Olymp and carried the forlorne one in his arms to the abode of eternal pleasures. Now, I do not doubt but a god is already waiting for you at the first railway station behind Berlin, and I would be the most cruel of mortals to frustrate you of such a rendezvous.'
Page me41.275
But enough of these fooleries. In true real earnest, I feel most happy in the idea of soon seeing again yourself and the whole Bommel family circle. Recommend myself to your 'rival',†h and tell her that the deepest sentiments are the most difficult of being expressed in words. In that way she ought to interpret my silence, the respectful silence I have till now observed.

Page Break me41.276
Page me41.276
And now, my little charmer, farewell and do not altogether forget

Your knight-errant
Charles Marx

Page me41.276
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Reproduced from the original

167
MARX TO LION PHILIPS†284
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.276

London, 6 May 1861†a
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Uncle,

First, let me express my heartfelt thanks for the great friendship you have again shown me and the delightful hospitality extended to me under your roof. So as to avoid all suspicion of flattery, I shall make only the most fleeting allusion to the enormous pleasure I derived from consorting with a man of your experience who, on the one hand, observes the passing world with so humane, unbiassed and original an eye and, on the other, has preserved intact the fire and impetuosity of youth.

Page me41.276

My onward journey from Bommel went entirely according to plan. In Rotterdam I found Jacques†b on the pier, spent a couple of hours chatting with him and then, the self-same day, hurried on to Amsterdam, where my business was speedily settled the next day. August†c and family — this time with the addition of his wife's niece from Rotterdam — were well and happy. August entrusted me with a special mission, namely to shake up Monsieur Jacques a little on my return to Rotterdam, for he is suffering plus ou moins†d from 'world-weariness', an illness which may simply be attributed to the fact that, unlike the great majority of mankind, he is self-critical and has not yet succeeded in adopting any definite political standpoint such as might be satisfactory to himself. On my return journey from Amsterdam I got to Rotterdam at half past nine at night, and had to board the STEAMER for London at 7 o'clock the following morning (Sunday).†a In the short time I spent with Jacques it was not, of course, possible for me to answer all the questions he put to me or even touch very briefly on all the points he raised. Therefore, having previously consulted his employers, Jacques decided to continue our discussion in London. I arrived in the world capital on Monday and found the whole family well and cheerful. Jacques turned up last Wednesday†b and left again yesterday morning, to the great regret of my family who would have liked to keep him here longer. We have arranged to conduct a kind of political correspondence with one another.

Page Break me41.277

Page me41.277

You will recall, dear Uncle, how you and I would often remark in jest that nowadays the rearing of human beings lags far behind cattle rearing. Now, having seen the whole of your family, I must declare you to be a virtuoso at rearing human beings. Never in my life have I made the acquaintance of a finer family. All your children have independent characters, each one an individual, each with his own intellectual predilections, and all equally distinguished by their humane culture.

Page me41.277

Here in London there is great consternation over the course of events in America.†285 The acts of violence which have been perpetrated not only by the SECEDED STATES, but also by some of the CENTRAL or BORDER STATES — and it is feared that all 8 BORDER STATES, namely Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, Maryland, and Delaware, will side with the secessionists

— these acts of violence have rendered all compromise impossible. There can be no doubt that, in the early part of the struggle, the scales will be weighted in favour of the South, where the class of propertyless white adventurers provides an inexhaustible source of martial militia. IN THE LONG RUN, of course, the North will be victorious since, if the need arises, it has a last card up its sleeve in the shape of a slave revolution. For the North, the great difficulty is the QUESTION [of] HOW TO GET THEIR FORCES TO THE SOUTH. Even AN UNOPPOSED MARCH — in this season — of 15 MILES PER DAY, WOULD BE SOMETHING TRYING; but Charleston, the nearest attackable point, is 544 miles from Washington, 681 from Philadelphia, 771 from New York and 994 from Boston, and the three last-named towns are the main operational bases against the South. The distance of Montgomery, the seat of the SECESSIONIST CONGRESS,†286 from those same places is 910, 1,050, 1,130 and 1,350 MILES RESPECTIVELY. A cross-country march would therefore seem to be QUITE OUT OF THE QUESTION. (Use of the railways by the NORTHERN INVADERS would merely lead to their destruction.) Hence, all that remains is sea transport and naval warfare which, however, might easily lead to complications with foreign powers. This evening the English government is to announce in the Commons what ATTITUDE it intends to adopt in such an eventuality.

Page Break me41.278
Page me41.278

For myself personally, developments in America are naturally RATHER damaging since transatlantic newspaper readers have neither eyes nor ears just now for anything save their own affairs. However, I have received an advantageous offer from the Vienna Presse which I mean to accept provided certain ambiguities are satisfactorily cleared up.†a I should have to write for it from London. My wife has a specific objection to our moving to Berlin, as she does not wish our daughters to be introduced into the Hatzfeldt circle, yet keeping them out of it altogether would be difficult.
Page me41.278

I have today had an extremely amicable letter from Lassalle. He has still heard nothing more from von Zedlitz, the Police President, regarding my RENATURALISATION. The conflict between police and public in Berlin has now, so Lassalle tells me, entered a new phase.
Page me41.278

With warm regards to you and yours from myself and the whole family,

Your affectionate nephew
K. Marx

Page me41.278
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.279

168
MARX TO ENGELS†287
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.279
[London,] 7 May 1861

Dear Frederick,

Habes confitentem reum.†a But the circonstances atténuantes†b for my not writing were as follows: D'abord†c I spent, as you know, the greater part of my time in Berlin at Lassalle's house where it would have been impossible for me to write to you without my telling Lassalle what was in the letter, and THAT DID NOT SERVE MY PURPOSE. Later, I was continually en route, from Berlin to Elberfeld, Cologne, Trier, Aachen, Bommel,†d Rotterdam, and Amsterdam. Lastly, my original plan, as I wrote and told my wife, had been to go from Rotterdam to Hull and from Hull to Manchester so that I could give you a detailed verbal report. This was frustrated by my cousin Jacques Philips. For, as I was about to leave Rotterdam, he told me he would be coming to London the following day, AND HE WAS AS GOOD AS HIS WORD. So, of course, I had to proceed direct to London in order to do him the honneurs there. He did not leave here until the day before yesterday.
Page me41.279

In any case, I now hope that you will come to us for a few days at Whitsuntide. I heard in Elberfeld that you wanted to visit your family at Whitsuntide. Even if you do, you could so arrange matters that you spend at least a couple of days with us. I have much to tell you, and this can be done better by word of mouth than in writing. Moreover, it irks my womenfolk if you always give London a miss.
Page me41.279

First, then, to BUSINESS. For a start, I squeezed £160 out of my uncle†e so that we were able to pay off the greater part of our debts. My mother, with whom any discussion about cash is out of the question, but who is rapidly nearing her end, destroyed some I.O.U.s I had given her in the past. That was the distinctly pleasant result of the two days I spent with her. I myself said nothing to her about MONEY MATTERS and it was she who took the initiative in this connection. Further, when in Berlin, I paved the way for me to establish a connection with the Vienna Presse,†288 should the need arise; in view of the present situation in America, this will doubtless prove indispensable. Finally, I have arranged through Lassalle for the second part of my political economy†8 to be published by Brockhaus instead of Duncker. As to Duncker, Camilla Essig (alias Ludmilla Assing) rightly remarked to me that, if one wants to keep a book secret, one must get Duncker to publish it. However, I do at least figure in the recent piece by Rau-Rau†a — the German Say.

Page Break me41.280
Page me41.280

Apropos. With regard to your Po and Rhine, etc., I am told by la Hatzfeldt — who converses with all the Prussian generals at the house of her brother-in-law, General von Nostitz, and whose nephew Nostitz is, furthermore, an aide-de-camp to 'handsome

William'†b — that your pamphlet is considered in high, if not the highest, military circles (including, inter alia, that of Prince Charles Frederick) to be the product of an anonymous Prussian general. The same thing happened in Vienna, or so I was told by assessor Friedländer (brother of the editor of the Vienna Presse). I myself have discussed it with General Pfuel, now 82, but still mentally alert and become very radical. Pfuel didn't know, of course, that we had conferred on him the honorary title of 'von Höllenstein'.†289 He has, by the by, fallen out of favour and is ranked by the Court with the Jacobins, atheists, etc.

Page me41.280

Now to POLITICAL BUSINESS.

Page me41.280

In Berlin there is, of course, no haute politique.†c Everything revolves round the struggle with the police (not that the latter are in the least presumptuous just now, being a model of civility and tolerance) in that people would like to see Zedlitz, Patzke, etc., removed from office and punished; secondly, round the opposition between the military and civilians. It is over these issues (in bourgeois circles, other particularly sore points are the military bills and tax exemption for the landowners) that matters will come to a head.†290 (Count Tavernier, an artillery officer, told me that they would like nothing better than to turn their batteries on the Garde du Corps.) The prevailing atmosphere is one of general dissolution, and people of every rank regard a catastrophe as inevitable. This would seem to be more the case in the capital than in the provinces. Curiously enough, military circles share the general conviction that the first clash with the crapauds†d will result in a trouncing for the Prussians. Berlin is in a cheeky, frivolous mood. The Chambers are despised. In one theatre I visited, a comical ditty about Vincke was sung to the accompaniment of loud applause. Among a broad section of the public there is much dissatisfaction with the existing press. At the coming new elections (in the autumn) to the Second Chamber, there is no doubt that most of the fellows who sat in the Prussian National Assembly will be elected.†291 This is important, not on account of the said fellows, but because 'William the Handsome' mistakes them for red republicans. All in all, 'handsome William' has been dogged by the spectre rouge†a ever since he became king. He considers his popularity as a 'liberal' to be a trap set for him by the overthrow party.

Page Break me41.281

Page me41.281

Now, under the circumstances it might, in fact, not be inopportune if we could bring out a paper†b in Berlin next year, although I personally find the place unpleasant. 20-30,000 talers would have to be got together in association with Lassalle, etc. BUT hic jacet.†c Lassalle put the proposal to me direct. At the same time, he confided that he would have to be editor en chef along with myself. And Engels? I inquired. 'Well, if three aren't too many, Engels can also be editor en chef, of course. Though you two ought not to have more votes than me, for otherwise I would always be outvoted.' As reasons why he, too, must take the helm he stated: 1. that he was generally regarded as being closer to the bourgeois party and hence could procure funds more easily; 2. that he would have to sacrifice his 'theoretical studies' and his theoretical tranquillity and ought, after all, to get something out of it, etc. If, however, we were unwilling, he went on: 'I would still be prepared, as before, to assist the paper financially and in literary ways; that would be an advantage to me; for I should have the benefit of the paper without the responsibility for it,' etc. This was just sentimental hot air, of course. Lassalle, dazzled by the esteem earned him in certain learned circles by his Heraclitus†d and, in another circle, consisting of spongers, by his good wine and food, doesn't know, of course, that he is of ill repute with the public at large. And then his intractability; his obsession with the 'speculative concept' (the fellow actually dreams of a new Hegelian philosophy raised to the second power, which he intends to write), his inoculation with early French liberalism, his arrogant pen, importunity, tactlessness, etc. If subjected to rigid discipline, Lassalle might be of service as one of the editors. Otherwise, we would simply make fools of ourselves. But, in view of the great friendliness he showed me, you can see how difficult it was for me to speak my mind. So, I was generally non-committal and told him I could settle nothing without prior discussion with you and Lupus. (That was the main reason why I didn't write to you from Berlin, for I didn't want to have a reply from you about this while I was there.) If we decide against it, the countess†a and Lassalle intend to set out on a year's trip to the East or to Italy. BUT HERE'S THE RUB.†b He now expects me to give him an answer, which I can't put off any longer. Qu'en dis-tu?†c

Page Break me41.282
Page me41.282

He's a frightfully pompous fellow, and so I had no alternative but to be constantly ironical at his expense, which wounded his amour-propre, the more so in that it aroused in the countess, whom he has impressed as a universal genius, a disquieting urge to emancipate herself from this Buddha. At certain times, strangely enough, la Hatzfeldt's voice has a Jewish intonation that has been acquired from and instilled in her by him.
Page me41.282

Lupus's reservations about the Prussian police are QUITE OUT OF PLACE. The only difficulty that still remains can at most affect those who had formerly taken the military oath of allegiance. Assessor Friedländer tells me that Lupus is STILL THE MOST POPULAR MAN in Breslau and in another district of Silesia as well, I forget the name. Elsner has turned into a good-for-nothing on the Schlesische Zeitung, just as Stein has on the Breslauer. Nevertheless, a go-ahead democratic party has again been formed in Breslau. The enclosed excerpt from the Preussische Gerichts-Zeitung was inserted at my instigation by its editor, Stadtrichter Hiersemenzel.†d Actuarius Stein, who has returned to Berlin from Zurich, sends Lupus his kindest regards.
Page me41.282

You shall hear of my negotiations with the Prussian government and/or police in my next letter.†292
Page me41.282

Apropos. I have a present for you from Lassalle, a fine military atlas, which you must come and fetch in person.
Page me41.282

Salut, to you, Lupus and Gumpert.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.282
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.283

169
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†67
IN BERLIN
Page me41.283
London, 8 May 1861
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lazarus,

Post tot discrimina rerum.†a If anyone is responsible for my silence — during my travels, that is, for here in London I had to spend my first week playing Amphitryon†b to my cousin from Rotterdam†c — it is the countess.†d She had promised that I would find her portrait and a letter from her at Zalt-Bommel. Since neither of these materialised, and since I am a strict observer of the jus vindictae,†e I didn't write either. In addition, my time at Bommel was completely taken up. On the one hand, I had business with my uncle,†f and on the other, I had to pay court to my cousin.†g SO, YOU SEE, SIR, WRITING WAS OUT OF THE QUESTION. My stay in Trier was useful in as much as my mother destroyed some old I.O.U.s. Incidentally the old woman also intrigued me by her exceedingly subtle esprit and unshakable equanimity.
Page me41.283

First, then, to the financial side. Herewith an interim payment of £20. You still have £10 to come. The concatenation of circumstances was as follows: My uncle gave me £150 in cash to pay bills due at the beginning of May. He promised to send a further bill to London a few weeks later. In the meantime, therefore, I borrowed the enclosed £20 from my cousin,†c ditto some money for the household, and a third amount for the repayment of various small loans in Germany. If, however, you must have the outstanding £10 straight away, let me know at once.
Page me41.283

I couldn't go to Manchester as I had originally planned†h because my cousin from Rotterdam†c decided to travel to London hard on my heels. The pretext was his interest in discussing politics with me. IN FACT, however, I believe he wanted to make the acquaintance of his various female cousins. I wrote to Engels the day before yesterday about the plans for the newspaper†i and shall doubtless have an answer from him in a day or so. Conditions in America will probably be such that, even if nothing comes of the newspaper enterprise, I may move to Berlin for a semester or thereabouts, ALWAYS SUPPOSED THAT I GET MY RENATURALISATION. London, I CAN'T DENY IT, possesses an extraordinary fascination for me, although, to a certain extent, I live a hermit's life in this gigantic place.

Page Break me41.284
Page me41.284
Apropos. Blanqui is still in Mazas prison†293 (Paris) where he is being physically maltreated by the gendarmes, etc., on the instructions of the examining magistrate. Taking advantage of the general amnesty, he had travelled from here to Paris — with no plans for conspiracy whatever — as an agent for a businessman. In England, as elsewhere in Europe, the scoundrelly press TRIES TO BURKE THE WHOLE AFFAIR. I have made an appointment for next Saturday with Simon Bernard, who knows more about the matter,†294 and we shall then discuss the subject thoroughly. We intend, possibly in concert with Ernest Jones, to hold a PUBLIC MEETING about this outrage. As soon as I have spoken to Bernard and am better informed I shall send a report to the countess. But I would ask you to see to it at once through one channel or another that an item about this guet-apens†a appears in the Breslau papers. The German papers reprint one another's stuff, as you know.
Page me41.284
To turn from tragedy to tragi-comedy, did you see in the newspapers that workers in Geneva boxed Fazy's ears in broad daylight?
Page me41.284
Kossuth's behaviour here during the lawsuit†295 was lamentable. Having at first taken the floor with such swagger in his AFFIDAVITS, etc., he bowed and scraped during the hearing itself, assumed as insignificant and subdued an air as possible, disavowed all revolutionary designs or intentions on his own part and thus stupidly deprived himself of the sympathies of a public predisposed in favour of such melodramatic characters.
Page me41.284
I don't know whether you have followed the parliamentary debates on the MacDonald CASE.†296 Palmerston's provocative behaviour towards Prussia†b has, in fact, no other aim than to explode the idea (Schleinitz's) of an Anglo-Prussian alliance. I need hardly tell you to what purpose, for you know the story.
Page me41.284
Toby Meyen, in a Berlin letter to the Hamburg Freischütz, has produced very curious explanations of my stay in Berlin.†c D'abord,†d

Page Break me41.285
Countess Hatzfeldt is said to have offered me 20,000 talers to found a newspaper. Secundo, I had imagined that Herr Vogt had won me support among the middle classes, on which score, however, I suffered a bitter disappointment. And, ultimo, I gave the thing up in despair, since 'not one man of letters' wished to have 'anything to do' with me. Good shot, Toby!
Page me41.285

Rodbertus's pamphlet†a is highly commendable as regards its tendency. Otherwise, what is good in it isn't new and what is new in it isn't good. Roscher†b on the other hand is the true representative of professorial erudition. Fausse science,†c as Fourier would say.
Page me41.285
Don't forget to knock at Brockhaus's door†d; 10-20 sheets, for I can never estimate the length in advance.
Page me41.285
And now, mon cher, I must conclude by most cordially thanking you for the kind and amiable way in which you took me in and entertained me and, more especially, put up with my incivilities. As you know, I was beset by worries and am also troubled with my liver. But the chief thing is that we laughed together a great deal. Simia non ridet,†e and thus we have shown ourselves to be truly consummate Buddhas.
Page me41.285
I enclose two small photographs, one for the countess, to whom I would ask you to convey my best respects, and one for yourself.
Page me41.285
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.285
First published in: F. Lassalle, Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

170
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.285
[London,] 10 May 1861

Dear Frederick,
Herewith d'abord†f a photograph. Lupus and Gumpert shall each have ditto as soon as I have got some more prints. I had the thing done, partly for my cousin in Rotterdam,†a partly IN EXCHANGE for the photographs I had been given in Germany and Holland. Secondly, a cutting from a Düsseldorf paper about Herr Vogt. Lastly, I enclose a copy of the Free Press†b which is admittedly somewhat out-of-date, since you and Lupus did not, perhaps, follow the parliamentary debate on the Afghanistan affair very closely. It was the greatest CHECK Pam had experienced since 1848.†297

Page Break me41.286

Page me41.286

What you say about the plan for a newspaper in Berlin corresponds precisely to my own view and I had already, mutatis mutandis,†c intimated the main points to Lazarus.†d And — though I had already told him positively in Berlin that I would undertake nothing of the kind without you and Lupus — I had, nevertheless, positively pledged myself to lay the matter before you 'seriously and objectively', and thus salvavi animam meam.†e

Page me41.286

Apropos Lassalle-Lazarus. In his magnum opus on Egypt,†f Lepsius proved that the exodus of the Jews from Egypt was nothing other than the story Manetho relates of the expulsion from Egypt of 'the leper folk', with an Egyptian priest named Moses at their head. Lazarus the leper is thus the archetype of the Jew and of Lazarus-Lassalle. Save that in our Lazarus's case, leprosy has gone to the brain. Originally, his disease was secondary syphilis that wasn't properly cured. As a result, he developed caries in one of his legs, and something of this still remains, according to his doctor, Frerich†g (I don't know how that famous professor spells it), in the form of neuralgia or SOMETHING OF THE SORT in one of his legs. To the detriment of his own physique, our Lazarus is now living as luxuriously as his counterpart, the rich man,†h and it is this, I think, that is mainly preventing his recovery. He has acquired altogether too much refinement and would, for instance, regard going into a pub as an outrage. Curiously enough, he asked me at least four times whom I meant by Jacob Wiesenriesler†i in Vogt. However, considering his vanity, which has now grown truly 'objective', this was only usus naturae.†j We are all to be sent his new legal masterpiece (Dharma).†298

Page me41.286

While in Berlin I also went to see Friedrich Köppen. I found him still very much as he always was. Only he's grown stouter, and 'grizzled'. I went out on the spree with him twice and it was a real treat for me. He made me a present of his two volume Buddha,†a an important work. Amongst other things, he told me how those scoundrels, Zabel et cie, had gained possession of the National-Zeitung. That paper was originally founded in 1848, with a fully paid-up share capital (but with no proper contract, IN A LOOSE WAY). Mügge, Köppen, and others, exerted themselves to that end. Rutenberg became editor-in-chief, with Zabel as his deputy, and, lastly, the Jew Wolff†b as manager. The paper made rapid headway as a result of its pale-ale-swigging philistine moderation and its service to the parliamentary Left.†299 Rutenberg was elbowed out by his sociis†c on the pretext, false or real, that he was adopting too conservative a line and was accepting gratifications from Hansemann. Zabel brought in a faiseur†d who did his writing for him, while Zabel frequented sundry public houses where he conversed with pale-ale-swigging philistines and thus ensured the growth of the paper's popularity. The coup d'état (Manteuffel's)†300 and the various arbitrary anti-press measures, the severity of which did not abate until the end of 1850, provided a welcome excuse not to convene the shareholders. Meanwhile, the paper, which, with the suppression of the revolutionary press and the rise of the Hinckeldey-Stieber régime, found itself for the first time in its true element, acquired stature in the eyes of the philistines. It became a going concern and, in ABOUT 1852, some of the shareholders grew importunate and demanded a statement of accounts, a general meeting, etc. The most refractory were then taken on one side by Jew Wolff and divinity student Zabel. It was divulged to them in confidence that, if the paper were not to be ruined, dead silence must be religiously kept in respect of its finances, since it was, in fact, bankrupt. (In fact, the shares, originally 25 talers, were by then already worth 100.) So, on no account must it be flushed, d'une maniére ou d'une autre,†e out of its shy financial retreat. As a special concession, however, an exception would be made in their (i.e., the most troublesome shareholders') case and the amount they had invested would be returned to them in exchange for their shares. In this way, the most dangerous were indemnified. This farce was repeated on several occasions. The majority of those who were thus bought off, however, received — strictly in proportion to the passive resistance they put up — at the most 40, at the lowest 5%, of the sum they had originally invested.

Page Break me41.287

Page Break me41.288
To this day, a considerable proportion of the liberal milksops have not received a FARTHING, nor are they any more capable of extracting a statement of accounts. They keep silent for fear of the Kreuz-Zeitung.†a Such is the escroquerie†b that has enabled Jew Wolff and divinity student Zabel to become leading dignitaries of liberalismus vulgaris, with 'surplus money' at their disposal. A pity I hadn't heard this tale before!
Page me41.288

Rutenberg has been handed over by Manteuffel to Schwerin as an expressly guaranteed item of stock-in-trade. With his scissors he is now snipping the Staatszeitung to rights — a paper nobody reads any more. A type of London Gazette. Bruno,†c who is said to have fared hellish badly, vainly offered his services to the present ministry — i.e., in the form of continued contributions to the semi-official Preussische Zeitung. He is now the principal contributor to Wagener's (Kreuz-Zeitung) Staatslexikon. Besides, he's a FARMER at Rixdorf, or whatever the miserable hole is called.
Page me41.288

One day, I witnessed a session of the second chamber from the press gallery. I had similarly witnessed a session of the Prussian Agreers†301 in the summer of 1848. Quantum mutatum ab illis!†d Not that they were Titans either — far from it! A cramped assembly room. Nothing much in the way of visitors' galleries. The fellows sit on benches (as compared with the arm-chairs of the 'Gentlemen'),†302 an odd combination of government office and schoolroom. A Belgian Chamber is imposing by comparison. Simson or Samson, or whatever the president's name is, avenges himself — with all the grotesque and brutal magisteriality of a ministerial huissier†e†303 — for the kicks dealt him by Manteuffel when dispensing discipline with his ass's jawbones among the philistines cowering below. In any other assembly this unspeakable SPECIES of servile insolence personified would already have had his ears boxed. In Berlin one is repelled, especially at the theatre, by the prevalence of uniforms (apropos, in the very first few days, la Hatzfeldt took me to a box close to that of 'handsome William' and company, in order to insult the royal family. Three hours of ballet. This was the only performance of the evening. Yet another aspect of Berlin), yet one cannot but rejoice when one espies, here and there among the crowd of kow-towing bureaucratic schoolboys, some chap in uniform who at least holds his head erect and sits up straight. Vincke happened to be speaking — indeed, he never lets a session go by without doing so. I had, in fact, flattered the fellow. Had I heard him speak before, the portrait would have turned out very differently.†304 In an indifferent comedy, Die Journalisten, by Freytag which I saw in Berlin, one of the characters is a fat Hamburg philistine and wine MERCHANT named Piepenbrink. Vincke is the spit and image of this Piepenbrink. The most revolting Hamburg-Westphalian patois, a torrent of hastily gabbled words, not a sentence correctly constructed or complete. And this is the Mirabeau of Hasenheide!†a The only figures in this gathering of pygmies who at least look decent are Waldeck, on one side, and Wagener and Don Quixote von Blanckenburg,†b on the other.

Page Break me41.289
Page me41.289

Went to see Siebel in Elberfeld. Had supper with him in Barmen. Pretty, young wife, sings well, admires her Carl — found her not unpleasing. Siebel just the same as ever. Consorts mainly with a liberal journalist (formerly Münster correspondent to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung),†c poets, musicians, and painters. The best among them, I thought, was Seel. Siebel took me to the 'California' in Barmen, a boring bunch. They drank my health. I got Siebel to tell them I had lost my voice, and he replied on my behalf with a few boring jokes which, however, were in the RIGHT PLACE. Siebel says that his father copies everything he does — writing verse and drinking, so that he's said to be a block, off the young chip.
Page me41.289

In Cologne I called on Schneider II and Dr Klein. Just the same as ever — if anything, have gone even further. Spent a couple of hours tippling with them. In one pub saw, also incognito, Stuhlgang Königswinter (Wolfgang Müller).†d Called on Mrs Daniels. Not that ninny and National Association man Bürgers. But more about this later. I've indulged in so much chat that I haven't yet touched on essentials. Some more anon.

Totus tuus†e
K.M.

Page me41.289
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.290

171
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.290

[London,] 16 May 1861

DEAR Frederick,

I missed Gumpert. First, I went to Euston Square†305 at 5 in the afternoon and waited there till 6. Later on, at ABOUT 8 O'CLOCK, I went to London Bridge Station. In neither case did I catch him.

Page me41.290

Perhaps you would be so kind as to write and tell us when you are coming.†a

Page me41.290

As regards your own relations with Prussia,†b let me begin by giving you the opinion of the leading jurists with whom I spoke in Berlin. Everything depends upon whether or not you were conscripted. If not, your CASE as a Landwehr†41 man is one for the ordinary civil courts. It would seem, by the by, that the Prussians are officially concerned only with your Elberfeld affair, not the one in Baden.†306

Page me41.290

I don't know if you have read the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung of 19 April last. The final news item from Paris†c reads (I quote):

'By way of a warning to booksellers, Herr Vogt by Karl Marx has been placed on the list of proscribed books, thus frustrating the appearance of a much abridged French version, which is now in press.'

Page me41.290

I had intended to give you a further account of my journey today, but Mr Bühring has just come to see me, so I must get this note off.

Page me41.290

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.290

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.291

172

MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†307
IN BERLIN

Page me41.291

[London,] 29 May 1861

Dear Lassalle,

I have written to a friend†a in Germany†42 who, I hope, will send you the remaining £10 (67 talers) within a week at the latest. I'm horribly put out by this business, but my uncle,†b as is the wont of such old gentlemen, while on the whole doing what he promised, is at least creating difficulties for me.

Page me41.291

Because of conditions over there,†308 my American articles†c continue to be wholly in abeyance for the time being, and will so continue until circumstances in Europe again acquire some interest for the TRANSATLANTICS.

Page me41.291

In Paris the workers are in a most sorry plight as a result of the American crisis. Ditto in Lyons.

Page me41.291

The whole of the official press in England is, of course, in favour of the SLAVEHOLDERS. They are the selfsame fellows who have wearied the world with their ANTISLAVE TRADE philanthropy. But COTTON, COTTON!

Page me41.291

Engels has been here on a three-day visit. He is not yet going to move. If he did so, he'd have to give up his position, break his contract and incur severe financial loss, and this, he declares, he is unwilling to do SAVE IN DECISIVE TIMES, nor has he any intention of falling, perhaps before 3 months are out, into the clutches of Prussia's common law WITHOUT DOING ANY GOOD TO ANYBODY.†d Circumstances, he thinks, are not yet ripe for the setting up of a paper.†e He thanks you very much for the MILITARY MAPS.

Page me41.291

In my letter to the countess†309 which you passed on to her, I gave her a more circumstantial and accurate account of Bonaparte's infamy vis-á-vis Blanqui, indeed of the WHOLE CASE.†f No doubt she will have told you about it. Please convey my kindest regards to her. I hope she is now in better health.

Page me41.291

I am curious to hear more about your TRANSACTIONS with the Prussian government. THANKS for the zeal you have displayed.

Page Break me41.292

Page me41.292

To help overcome the intense annoyance I feel about my IN EVERY RESPECT UNSETTLED SITUATION, I am reading Thucydides.†a At least, these Ancients remain ever new.

Page me41.292

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.292

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

173
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.292
[London,] 10 June 1861

Dear Frederic,

I have had a letter from Vienna today. To start with, Friedländer†b wants me to send him 2 articles, 1 about the business in America (in which I am to provide a brief political and military résumé of the whole mess, for 1 or 2 leaders) and 1 on the situation in England. Later (i.e. when he has had these articles) he will let me have his further suggestions; and, in fact, I am to get £1 for each article, 10/- for mere news-letters. This is good pay by German standards and I shall have to agree to the thing, car il faut vivre.†c Since I should like to get the 2 sample articles off this week, you must do the military part about America for me.†d I will then fit it into the political part.
Page me41.292

A week ago I made a serious start on my book.†310 Have heard nothing more of Lassalle, save what his cousin Friedländer†e (Lassalle does not and must not know anything about the transactions with the Presse) wrote and told me from Berlin, namely:

'Since his return from Breslau,†f F. Lassalle has been partly busying himself with the affair of your naturalisation, whose satisfactory outcome I believe he prejudices by his excessive zeal and his memoranda tending to prove too much, and partly spending his time perusing and reading out loud the numerous letters that pour in from professors and privy councillors thanking him for a book so fine, so interesting and so witty, etc.†a These letters provide him with a grand opportunity to make conversation about his “excellent” book, thus proving that he is quite insensible to little titillations of this kind and wholly immune to vanity. The poor countess,†b who is fighting off a severe attack of influenza, finds it ever more difficult to play her official role of opposer, and I, too, am beginning to tire of acting as seconder.'

Page Break me41.293

Page me41.293

So much for Friedländer.
Page me41.293

As regards the goings-on in the so-called National Association†257 down here and Kinkel's consequent downfall, I shall write tomorrow, having still to write to Berlin and Vienna today.
Page me41.293

Salut. Regards to Lupus.
Page me41.293
CAVOUR'S DEATH! Qu'en pensez-vous?†c Garibaldi, the jackass, has made a fool of himself by a solidarity letter†311 to the Yankees.†312

Your
K.M.

Page me41.293
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

174
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†67
IN BERLIN
Page me41.293
[London,] 11 June 1861

Dear Lassalle,
Perhaps you would be so kind as to pass on the enclosed letter to the countess.†313
Page me41.293
Many thanks for your book,†a which arrived here a day or two since (I immediately sent the other copies to their respective destinations in Manchester). I began at the end, namely with the Pelasgian affair, and then went back to the law of succession at the beginning, having now progressed as far as p. 215. It is an important work in every respect. However, I cannot send you a criticism, assessment, etc., until I have read right through the whole thing. Merely en passant, then: In India, adoption is the prevailing form. English law has taken a course diametrically opposed to that of French law. Complete testamentary freedom (whereby no Englishman or Yankee is compelled to leave his family a farthing) dates back to the bourgeois revolution of 1688 and evolved in the same measure as 'bourgeois' property developed in England. Thus, it would seem after all that, aside from its specifically Roman origins, etc., complete testamentary freedom, indeed the making of wills generally, is a DELUSION, which, in bourgeois society too, must have roots of its own, independent of mythology, etc.

Page Break me41.294
Page me41.294
I have, alas, had a letter from Germany saying that the £10 cannot be remitted to you before the end of this month. Until then, I must trust to your diplomatic finesse. As you know, I was disagreeably surprised by the fact that my uncle,†a who honoured the bills I currently owed, put off giving me the additional amount I asked for until SOME MONTHS LATER. All the same, I couldn't help laughing at such a typically Dutch turn of events.

Page me41.294
Whether or not I am accorded Prussian nationality there might still be some question of myself and FAMILY travelling to Berlin on my passport as a 'foreigner', and spending the winter there.
Page me41.294
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.294
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

175
ENGELS TO MARX†314
IN LONDON
Page me41.294
Manchester, 12 June 1861

Dear Moor,
Unfortunately, I haven't been keeping any newspapers on the American war, besides many of the places are not to be found on the map. The essential points are as follows:
Page me41.294
The South had been quietly arming for years, particularly since

Page Break me41.295
the fuss over the presidential elections†253 and, at the very last moment, had received money and arms en masse as a result of the treachery on the part of Buchanan's ministers.†315 By 4 March, therefore, the North was completely crippled. Moreover, prior to the fall of Sumter,†285 Lincoln did not or could not do anything, save effect a somewhat greater concentration of his few regular troops (18,000 in all, the majority scattered about the West on anti-Indian duties) and refurbish their equipment. Now finally, after the attack on Sumter, the North was sufficiently aroused to silence all outbursts on the part of the opposition, thereby making powerful military action a possibility. 75,000 men were drafted and may now be serving, but it would seem that ten times that number were eager to volunteer, so that there may be up to 100,000 men now serving even though they won't by any means have been concentrated yet. A further call-up by Lincoln is expected daily and will take less time, for everything is better prepared now. The 75,000 men, or rather the element occupying positions in the Washington region, on the Ohio facing Kentucky, and in St Louis (Missouri) (i.e. not counting the reserves in Ohio and Pennsylvania), have been sufficient for the time being to restore the balance between the forces of North and South along the line of the Potomac and momentarily even to permit a limited offensive by the North.

Page me41.295

For the South, just as for the North, the primary objective was Washington. The South's offensive in that direction was far too weak; beyond Richmond the main force was evidently not strong enough to put in a timely thrust. All they managed to do was send a mobile column to Harper's Ferry on the Potomac above Washington. This POSITION is ideally suited to an offensive against the North (Maryland and Pennsylvania), for it lies at the confluence of the Shenandoah, an important river, and the Potomac, is extremely strong tactically and commands both rivers completely. Seemingly, it was not without intent that the Federal Armory was sited up there by a government that foresaw and favoured future secession. The occupation of Harper's Ferry disrupts the control of the Potomac line by Union troops at a sensitive spot and will immediately afford the Southern troops complete command of both banks, assuming they advance en masse to this line.
Page me41.295

The fate of Maryland and Delaware was dependent on Washington being held by the North; cut off from the South and occupied by Union troops, they at once fell to the Union. A second success for the North.

Page Break me41.296
Page me41.296

The reconquest of Missouri by the St Louis Germans†316 was the third success and one of enormous importance, for whoever holds St Louis blocks the Mississippi. The extent to which Kentucky's neutrality is favourable to North or South will probably depend on circumstances and events. For the time being, at any rate, it will restrict the theatre of war to†a the area that lies further east.†b
Page me41.296

Result: Thus, for all its preparations, the South has achieved nothing, save that the North, after only 1 month's preparation, has already wrested from it the national capital and three slave states, while a fourth slave state doesn't dare secede;†317 also that the South's offensive on the Potomac has come to a halt, whereas the North has already advanced beyond this river, as yet without meeting resistance. For every man the South can still produce, the North will produce three or four. The seceded states have about 7 1/2 million inhabitants, of which more than 3 million are slaves; a minimum of 1 million whites must be deducted to guard the slaves, so that barely 2 1/2 million are left as the aggregate of the population available for war. If 10% of these are mobilised, probably the largest number ever mobilised for defensive purposes, this will produce at most 250,000 men. But there would certainly not be a muster of that order. Switzerland, with pretty well the same population — rather more than 2 millions — has on paper about 160,000 militiamen. By contrast the North — reckoning the free states alone — numbers nearly 20 millions, all of whom are available with the exception, perhaps, of California, Utah and the territories in the far West. If we say the available population amounts to 17 millions and if we assume that not 10% but simply one third of that, i.e. 3 1/3%, are available for an offensive war, we arrive at over 500,000 men, more than enough to quell the South, even if it exerts itself to the utmost. Man for man, there is no question that the people from the North are markedly superior to those from the South, both physically and morally. Your pugnacious SOUTHERNER has a good deal of the cowardly assassin in him. Each of them goes about armed, but only because this will enable him, during a quarrel, to fell his antagonist before the latter expects to be attacked. That is the aver...

Page me41.296
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.297

176
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.297
[London,] 19 June†a 1861

Dear Frederick,

I have put off writing for so long because Weber (the Palatine watchmaker) had promised me a report on the London National Association†257 meeting, which was the scene of Kinkel's strange experience and was attended by Weber as a guest. I did not receive the enclosed from him until today. You will have seen from the last Hermann what it was all about.†b The final meeting has been adjourned until Saturday week.†c In the meantime, Juch, having been given the necessary SUPPLIES by a German businessman in the CITY, has set off to Coburg with the intention of getting the central committee of the National Association there to expel Zerffi (and hence implicite†d Kinkel). It's really splendid that Gottfried's boot-licking attitude to the English should have inspired such fanatical rage in all the liberal bourgeois in the CITY.
Page me41.297

Letters have even arrived from Bonn, threatening Gottfried 'with a drubbing' should he return. The secret behind the support given to MacDonald by Zerffi (no doubt acting on instructions) and Gottfried†318 is this: Gottfried holds an English appointment as lecturer at the Kensington Museum,†319 the good Zerffi likewise at an Ashley (Shaftesbury)†e INSTITUTION. Gottfried's only ALLIES are the louts of the 'apolitical' choral and other drinking societies. Last week Gottfried bribed these people (probably with English money) to join the National Association en bloc. (For anyone can become a member of the beastly association by obtaining a card from Trübner, at a MINIMUM CONTRIBUTION of 3/-.) Again, Gottfried held a private meeting of his followers and sent a deputation to Heintzmann asking him to resign voluntarily (on account of the insult to Gottfried's dignity) from his position as chairman, failing which a motion would be proposed to that end.

Page me41.297
BY THE BY, I should not forget to tell you that, while the row was going on, my friend Rheinländer joined the National Association

Page Break me41.298
(after talking it over with me), and brought in some fifty members (mostly clerks) from his Islington Choral Society; it was they more than anyone else who kicked up the anti-Gottfried row.
Page me41.298
Rheinländer tells me that never before has the German business contingent in the City taken sides so fanatically over a political issue. How priceless it would be if Gottfried were forced to resign from the National Association because of his kow-towing to a foreign government! That would put paid to his status among the German MIDDLE CLASS riff-raff, and where would he be without them? Gottfried is aware that this is the issue upon which he will stand or fall, and is therefore busying himself after his own fashion. What particularly irks him just now is the way everyone is saying that 'the Volk and “Marx” had been right about him after all'.†320 He told an acquaintance of Hirschfeld's, the printer, that the 'Brimstone Gang†65 were the invisible leaders of the whole business'. Nice, is it not, that we, who haven't raised a finger, should be endowed by our enemies with such mystical 'powers'?
Page me41.298
The second enclosure I am sending you (which please return as I have got to answer it) is a letter from la Hatzfeldt.†321 I shall keep her as my private correspondent in Berlin as she has incomparably more political nous (not to mention her good contacts) than 'the step that bears in itself the systematic principle of its walking'. (Lassalle, Vol. II, p. 545.)†a (Apropos. I presume you and Lupus have had L.'s opus?) There are two passages in her letter I should explain to you. With regard to the Blanqui affair, I had arranged for a letter to be sent her from Brussels (from Denonville).†b Initially, it's a matter of obtaining money to print a pamphlet, emanating from Denonville, about the — infamous — Blanqui trial. (Debates, etc., and discussion thereof.) Blanqui himself has, through Denonville, expressed his heartfelt gratitude to me and to the parti prolétaire allemand (in partibus)†c for the sympathy we have shown him.†322 I consider it a very good thing that we should again have direct links with the decidedly revolutionary party in France.
Page me41.298
Second point: In the letter in which I notified Lassalle that there was nothing doing just now so far as the newspaper was concerned, I endeavoured to sugar the pill by saying that I might perhaps come to Berlin next winter.†d

Page Break me41.298a
Page me41.298a

Karl Marx

(London, 1861)

Page Break me41.298b
Page Break me41.299
Page me41.299

La Hatzfeldt's assessments of official democracy in Berlin is perfectly correct. She doesn't, of course, come into contact with the genuine rank and file, nor, of course, is she familiar with the prevailing mood in the pubs — which is better.

Page me41.299

Many thanks for your letter about America.†a If anything of importance (military) should happen, you will, I presume, not fail to write and let me have your views about it. From the picture I have gained of General Scott — now 76, to boot — from the Mexican War†323 (see Ripley†b), I would expect him to make tremendous BLUNDERS — if, that is, the old jackass isn't supervised by others. Above all, slow and irresolute. Incidentally, from the facts appearing in the Tribune I see that the North is now speaking openly of a slave war and the abolition of slavery.†c

Page me41.299

Yesterday in the COMMONS, on the occasion of the Schleswig-Holstein affair, Lord Montagu, having previously given notice of his intention, raised the matter of Palmerston's London Protocol (on the Danish Succession) of 1850,†324 etc. The Old Man†d had recourse to his usual method. Hardly had Montagu embarked on his speech than he was brought up short by a pre-arranged COUNT-OUT of the House.

Page me41.299

On Saturday†e I have £2 to pay out in rates and should be most grateful if you could send this to me. At the beginning of July I shall be getting a bit more money. The fact that I have already spent what I brought back with me will not surprise you, since, besides the debts which occasioned the trip,†278 nothing has been coming in for nearly 4 months, while school and doctor alone ate up nearly £40.

Page me41.299

What's this about L. Simon, of whom there is some mention in the last part of la Hatzfeldt's letter?†325 Was Simon in the Landwehr†41? At any rate, you have sinned more†326 than Ludwig (who was nowhere in the field, etc.). I don't understand the business. Regards to Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.299
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.300

177
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.300
[London,] 1 July 1861

Dear Frederic,

I was delighted to see Lupus here, as was the whole FAMILY. Despite his gout, the old man had quite a youthful air. He immediately handed over your letter,†232 and £2, which promptly went to the TAX GATHERER. I was expecting to get a SUPPLY from Germany this morning, but nothing has arrived yet. Since I am completely without REVENUE for the time being and yet IN A CONTINUAL COURSE OF CONSUMPTION (this being how some economists account for 'profit', which they see as deriving, not from the costs of production, but from the costs of consumption†327), any supplies from Manchester would be most welcome.
Page me41.300

Please write and tell me at once what you think about the moves (military) in Virginia. The BLUNDERS made by officers of the militia — Brigadier-General Pierce, by nature a 'tailor' from the State of Massachusetts — will, of course, recur often enough on both sides.†328 Is Washington still threatened? Do you believe that the SOUTHERNERS' position at Manassas JUNCTION is an offensive one? Or aren't the fellows engaged rather in a withdrawal? In Missouri the defeat of the SOUTHERNERS seem certain,†329 and who should now turn up there but the terrible 'COLONEL Börnstein'? From a private letter to Weber it transpires that 'COLONEL Willich' is in command of a corps from Cincinnati. He would not appear to have gone into action yet.
Page me41.300

On studying these American affairs more closely, I have come to the conclusion that the conflict between South and North — for 50 years the latter has been climbing down, making one concession after another — has at last been brought to a head (if we disregard the effrontery of 'CHIVALRY'S' fresh demands) by the weight which the extraordinary development of the NORTH WESTERN STATES has thrown into the scales. The population there, with its rich admixture of newly-arrived Germans and Englishmen and, moreover, largely made up of SELF-WORKING FARMERS, did not, of course, lend itself so readily to intimidation as the GENTLEMEN of Wall Street and the Quakers of Boston. According to the last census (1860), it had grown by 67 p.c. between 1850 and 1860, in which year it numbered 7,870,869, whereas, according to the same census, the entire free population of the seceded SLAVE STATES was ABOUT 5 million. These NORTH WESTERN STATES furnished not only the BULK of the ruling party, but also the President†a in 1860.†330 It was also this self-same area in the North that first came out unequivocally against any recognition of the independence of a SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY. They cannot, of course, allow the lower reaches and estuary of the Mississippi to pass into the hands of foreign states. Again, in the Kansas affair†331 (from which this war really dates), it was the population of these NORTH WESTERN [States] who came to blows with the BORDER RUFFIANS.

Page Break me41.301

Page me41.301

A closer look at the history of the secession movement reveals that secession, constitution (Montgomery), Congress ibid., etc., are USURPATIONS†286 without exception. Nowhere did they allow the people en masse to vote. This 'USURPATION' — which is concerned, not only with secession from the North, but also with consolidating and intensifying the oligarchy of the 300,000 SLAVE LORDS in the South vis-á-vis the 5 million WHITES — has been the subject of highly characteristic articles which appeared in the Southern PAPERS at the time.†b
Page me41.301

And now let us turn to high politics — Kinkel and the National Association in London.†c You will no doubt recall that, a week ago last Saturday, Heintzmann had adjourned the meeting (a fact he advertised in the Hermann†d), because Juch had been sent to Coburg, THERE TO MOVE A placitum patrum.†e At the same time, the GREAT Heintzmann had convened an extraordinary meeting for Tuesday†f to commemorate the Battle of Waterloo,†332 etc.
Page me41.301

Foxy Gottfried, however, together with Zerffi, sent out secret circulars to their people (see last Hermann) summoning them to a meeting on Saturday.†g Gottfried and his people, having now got the field to themselves, effectively held their meeting behind the backs of the others. Gottfried (as one of the vice-presidents of the National Association) took the chair, and Zerffi (as a member of the committee of the self-same National Association) acted as secretary. It goes without saying that the resolutions pertaining to the MacDonald business,†318 etc., that were adopted at this meeting were agreeable to Gottfried and Zerffi. Now, on the following

Page Break me41.302
Tuesday, Heintzmann called for a reading of the minutes of the last meeting at which he had taken the chair, and acted as though he knew nothing whatever about the interim meeting held by Gottfried and Co. Nor did Gottfried and Zerffi, who were present, call for the reading of the relevant minutes or, for that matter, say a single word about the meeting they themselves had arranged. What Gottfried did do, however, was to write to Juch the following day, requesting him to reproduce in the Hermann the minutes of his, Gottfried's, meeting enclosed in his letter. He even ominously invoked an agreement which he had made with Juch on handing over the Hermann. The latter, however, said 'quod non'†a (see last Hermann). The day before yesterday,†b it would seem, the row was discussed at a meeting of the National Association at Seyd's Hotel. But I haven't had a report on it yet.
Page me41.302

This will give you some idea of what the 'Machiavellismus Gottofredi Magni'†c is like. You will further see from the last Hermann's account of the meeting of the National Association†d that Blind — who has as many little dodges up his sleeve as there are fleas on a dog — invited 'Dralle'†e to join, in order to secure for himself a vote of thanks as the saviour of Schleswig-Holstein.†f This was, however, CAPPED BY Heintzmann, who didn't even give Dralle's NOTION a chance to be put to the vote. This same summus†g

Blind got a third party to ask Weber, etc., whether he should 'appear as a speaker' at the MEETING to be held by the German communist association and the Frenchmen's associations in honour of the June insurrection.†333 Reply: If he wanted a drubbing — yes.
Page me41.302
Ad vocem†h Lassalle's work:†i
Lupus has made me a present of his copy, for disposal as follows: to be sent by you to my cousin, addressed to: 'A. Philips, Advokaat,†j Keizergracht bij de Westermarkt. L.L. 267, Amsterdam.'
Page me41.302
You must, of course, erase Lassalle's dedication to Lupus. My cousin is interested in the theory of jurisprudence.

Page Break me41.303
Page me41.303
You yourself, in order to get a foretaste — both of what is insipid and what is good in Lassalle's book, should, for a start, read the foreword to Volume I and Chapter XLI in Volume II, beginning at p. 517.
Page me41.303
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.303
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

178
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.303
[Manchester,] 3 July 1861

Dear Moor,
Your questions about the state of affairs in Virginia are easier put than answered. Is Washington still threatened? Not immediately, otherwise the SOUTHERNERS would not have evacuated so much territory; but one doesn't know, of course, how the opposing sides compare in terms of strength. Should the first major attack by the Northerners be decisively repulsed, it's impossible to say what might happen, for there is no knowing where they would come to a halt again. However, the chances are three to one that, even in that case, the Potomac would form an adequate obstacle.

Page me41.303

The position at Manassas JUNCTION is determined by the SOUTHERNERS' need to maintain communications with North-West Virginia along the railway to Paris and Strasburg. If M.J. is lost, their nearest railway communication with West Virginia (on the far side of the mountains) would be the line from Richmond via Gordonsville to Staunton — 80 miles to the south; they would lose the opportunity of rapidly moving their reserves, particularly those immediately to the rear of their dispositions, from west to east, etc., as need arose, while any elements in West Virginia could be cut off or forced to make a wide detour. Such is the significance of the position — whether it has any tactical importance I can't say, for no conclusions at all can be drawn from the maps. All in all, the war in West Virginia will now turn on the railway junctions.

Page Break me41.304

Page me41.304

The affair at Big Bethel†328 is of no significance. Tactically speaking, it was abominably MISMANAGED; a night attack carried out with volunteers like these and, what's more, with each column separated from the rest, could only end in confusion, mutual slaughter, and panicky flight.

Page me41.304

On the other hand, the North would seem to be at fault in 2 respects: 1. the massive strength of the newly formed and fully mobile corps doesn't appear to have been called on at all; they were kept kicking their heels some 400-500 miles from the scene of the fighting, whereas on the Potomac they would have been worth their weight in gold, and 2. BRAVE OLD Scott would again appear to have made colossal plans for an encirclement†334 which can only lead to a colossal dispersal of his troops; to what extent this may lead to defeats, given the slack ways and unknown heroes of the South, it is impossible to determine.

Page me41.304

What is this about not voting on secession?†a According to all the papers up here, the resolutions at the conventions were ratified in each state by popular vote.

Page me41.304

Let me know how il capitano che'l gran Sepolcro liberó di Cristo, Goffredo il Magnanimo†b subsequently got on in the affair.

Page me41.304

Enclosed SL 62585, five pounds, Liverpool, 12 May 1860.

Page me41.304

I shall see if I can't send you some more towards the end of the week.

Page me41.304

How did Lupus get on at the Prussian Embassy?†335

Page me41.304

Many regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.304
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.305

179
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.305
[London,] 5 July 1861

Dear Engels,
Your letter enclosing £5 most gratefully received.
Page me41.305
For the past 3 days I have had a foul inflammation of the eyes which has prevented me from doing any writing or reading. However, I believe it will pass in a couple of days.
Page me41.305
Lupus found Alberts extremely obstructive. (I would mention in passing that the latter is Bernstorff's factotum. Also chief police agent and chief pimp to the more select visitors from Prussia.) However, with his own particular brand of rudeness, he finally browbeat Alberts into entering a long scrawl on his Swiss passport to the effect that Lupus, an exile, was availing himself of the amnesty, etc., to travel to Wiesbaden, etc., for such and such a purpose. Initially, he had been told that, because of his 10 years' residence abroad — so this is the story they dish out to everyone — he had lost his Prussian citizenship. He should therefore have himself naturalised as an Englishman and travel on an English passport.
Page me41.305
Zedlitz, BY THE BY, told Lassalle shortly before his resignation that I had republican or, at least, anti-royalist views, and it was their unvarying principle never to renaturalise anyone of that couleur. They didn't want to set a praecedens in my CASE.†292 Winter, Zedlitz's successor, told Lassalle he could not reverse his predecessor's decision. Finally Schwerin, who was also being pestered by Lassalle and wanted to be rid of him, said he would refer the matter to the Berlin municipal council — which, however, he won't do. During the debate in the Chamber on the subject of refugees, Vincke et cie applauded loudly when Schwerin announced that the government would always reserve the right to decide each particular case as it thought fit.†336
Page me41.305
As to the secession business, the matter has been quite wrongly represented in the English papers.†a Everywhere, with the exception of South Carolina, there was the strongest opposition to secession.

Page Break me41.306
Page me41.306
First: BORDER SLAVE STATES.†a A CONVENTION of the BORDER STATES was held in the winter of 1861.†337 Those invited were Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas, Maryland, Delaware, Tennessee and North Carolina. For this purpose, further CONVENTIONS were held in each of the above states so that DELEGATES might be sent to the GENERAL CONVENTION.
Page me41.306
Delaware refused even to call a convention for this purpose.
Page me41.306
Tennessee ditto. Its Democratic LEGISLATURE took it out of the Union by coup de main. Admittedly, an ELECTION was later HELD to ratify this INVALID ACT. This took place under A REIGN OF TERRORISM. More than 1/3 didn't vote at all. Of the remainder, 1/3 were against secession, including the whole of East Tennessee, which at this moment is arming to oppose the secessionists.
Page me41.306
Kentucky. 100,000 for the UNION TICKET, only a few thousand for secession.
Page me41.306
Maryland declared itself in favour of Union, and has now elected 6 UNION MEN as MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.†338
Page me41.306
North Carolina and even Arkansas elected UNION DELEGATES, the former actually by a large majority. Subsequently terrorised.
Page me41.306
Virginia. The people elected a UNION CONVENTION (by a majority). Some of these chaps allowed themselves to be bought. When the Southern fever was at its height — fall of Sumter†285 — an ORDINANCE OF SECESSION was PASSED SECRETLY BY 88 TO 55. All other moves — while the ORDINANCE continued to be kept secret — aimed at the CAPTURE of the FEDERAL NAVY YARD AT NORFOLK and the FEDERAL ARMORY AT HARPER'S FERRY were carried out secretly. Were betrayed to the FEDERAL AUTHORITIES before their EXECUTION. An alliance with Jefferson Davis' GOVERNMENT was concluded in secret, and a huge mass of CONFEDERATE TROOPS was suddenly pitched into the territory. Under their protection (truly Bonapartist, this), it now voted for secession. 50,000 UNION VOTES nevertheless, despite the SYSTEMATIC TERRORISM. As you know, NORTH WESTERN VIRGINIA has now publicly broken with the secessionists.
Page me41.306
Second: GULF STATES.†339 A popular vote proper was taken only in a few states. In most of them, the conventions, which were chosen to decide the attitude of the southern states to Lincoln's election (subsequently, at the Montgomery Congress,†286 it was they who formed the DELEGATES), usurped the power not only to decide on secession but also to recognise the Constitution, Jefferson Davis, etc. How this actually came about you will learn from the extracts below, taken from Southern American papers.

Page Break me41.307
Page me41.307

Texas, where, after South Carolina, there is the largest SLAVE PARTY and TERRORISM, nevertheless 11,000 votes for Union.

Page me41.307

Alabama. No popular vote either on secession or on the new Constitution, etc. The convention elected here PASSED the ORDINANCE OF SECESSION by 61 votes to 39. The 39 were from the NORTHERN COUNTIES, peopled almost exclusively by whites, but they represented more FREE MEN than the 61; for, in accordance with the UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION, each slave-holder also votes for 3/5 of his slaves.

Page me41.307

Louisiana. More UNION VOTES than SECESSION VOTES were cast at the election for delegates to the convention. But the DELEGATES defected.

Page me41.307

The interests of the mountain districts, the west of Carolina, the east of Tennessee, the north of Alabama and Georgia, are very different from those of the southern SWAMPS.

Page me41.307

The 2nd Decembrist nature†340 of all this manoeuvring for secession (which is also why the fellows were compelled to provoke a war so that with the cry 'THE NORTH AGAINST THE SOUTH' they could keep the movement going), which will be apparent to you from the following excerpts, is also evident from the fact that the traitors in Buchanan's administration who were at the head of the movement — War Secretary Floyd, Navy Secretary Toucey, Treasury Secretary Cobb, Secretary of the Interior Thompson — together with the leading senators of the South, were deeply involved in the DILAPIDATIONS running to many millions which, in the course of December 1860, had been referred by Congress (House of Representatives) to a COMMITTEE of ENQUIRY. For some of these fellows, it was, at least, a question of escaping the penitentiary. Hence they are the most willing tools of the 300,000-strong SLAVEHOLDERS oligarchy. It goes without saying that the concentration, status, and resources of the latter enable it TO PUT DOWN any opposition for the time being. Among one section of the 'POOR WHITES', they found the MOB that served them in place of Zouaves.†341

Page me41.307

Georgia. 'The Griffin Union'†a:

'It is mere mockery for the same men who made the Constitution in Montgomery to come back to Georgia and ratify it under the name of a state convention.'

Page me41.307

The Macon Journal:

Page Break me41.308
'The State Conventions ... called for another purpose ... assume that they are the people, and under such an assumption of power can appoint delegates to a General Convention without consulting the people. All the acts of the Congress of their Confederacy are passed in secret session with closed doors, and what is done is kept from the people.'

Page me41.308
The Augusta Chronicle and Sentinel (largest Georgia PAPER):

'The whole movement for secession, and the formation of a new Government, so far at least as Georgia is concerned' (and Georgia is the most populous of the slave states), 'proceed on only a quasi consent of the people, and was pushed through, under circumstances of great excitement and frenzy — by a fictitious majority. With all the appliances brought to bear, etc., the election of the 4th of January showed a falling off of nearly 3,000, and an absolute majority of elected deputies of 79. But, upon assembling, by wheedling, coaxing, buying, and all the arts of deception, the convention showed a majority of 31' (against Union). '... The Georgia Convention and the Confederate Congress have gone forward in their work, as none can deny, without authority from the people.'†a

Page me41.308
Alabama. 'The Mobile Advertiser':

'The Convention has adopted the permanent Constitution in behalf of the State of Alabama... The great fact stands forth that the delegates were not chosen for any such purpose.'

Page me41.308
The North Alabamian:

'The Convention made haste to usurp the prerogative, and ratify the Constitution... It is a remarkable fact that the substantial, physical force of the country, the hardfisted, handworking men, expected to do all the fighting when the country calls, were from the beginning opposed to the Ordinance of Secession.'

Page me41.308
Mississippi. Similar complaints about usurpation in the Jackson Mississippian and Vicksburg Whig.
Page me41.308
Louisiana. 'New Orleans True Delta':

'Here secession succeeded only by suppressing the election returns... The government has been changed into despotism.'

Page me41.308
At the STATE CONVENTION of Louisiana (New Orleans) on 21 March 1861, OLD Roselius (one of the leading POLITICIANS in the UNITED STATES), said:

'The Montgomery instrument†342 ... did not inaugurate a government of the people, but an odious and unmitigated oligarchy. The people had not been permitted to act in the matter.'†b

Page Break me41.309
Page me41.309
In Louisville, Kentucky, Senator Guthrie (PRO-SLAVERY MAN, Treasury Secretary under Pierce) said on 16 March 1861 that the whole movement was a 'PLOT' and 'USURPATION'. Inter alia:

'In Alabama a majority of the popular vote was cast against going out, but a small majority of the delegates were for secession, they took Alabama out, and refused the people to have any voice in the matter. The vote of Louisiana, too, was against secession, but the delegates suppressed it,' etc.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.309
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

180
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.309
[London,] 12 July 1861

Dear Engels,
Your last letter†232 together with enclosure, or rather the enclosure minus letter, most gratefully received.
Page me41.309
The grand tragi-comedy of Gottfried Kinkel has come to a worthy end, and POOR Gottfried has been knocked on the head.
Page me41.309
To put the grand goings-on into a nutshell, what actually happened was this: On 15 June, Gottfried and Co., as I have already related,†a had, off their own bat, held a special meeting, at which they passed resolutions agreeable to themselves. On 18 June, Heintzmann took the chair at an extraordinary meeting, whose agenda did not include the great point at issue, since they were still awaiting a reply from Coburg.
Page me41.309

The crucial meeting finally took place on 6 July, an answer HAVING MEANWHILE ARRIVED from the oracle at Coburg.†343 Both parties were there in force, including the 35 members of the Association of German Men†5 bought by Gottfried for cash. However, before the day of the meeting there had already been a considerable amount of agitation. For instance, the Association of German Men had been harangued by Heinztmann et cie and told about Gottfried's machinations. The chairman of that association, a SHIP AGENT by the name of Schmidt (a Hanoverian), went over to the 'patriotic' side, of course,

Page Break me41.310
Page me41.310
Heintzmann — BY THE BY — has, of course, a twofold interest in view: on the one hand, to appear pleasing to the Prussian government, on the other, perhaps to obtain hac via†a from that government some important TRUSTIVE office connected with the forthcoming industrial exhibition.†344 From what I hear, the fellow has performed the office of chairman after the true heavy-handed fashion of your Royal Prussian Elberfeld prosecutor. Not that this isn't the right way to handle the melodramatic Gottfried.
Page me41.310
Well then, after the meeting (on 6 July) had been declared open, Heintzmann called for the reading of the minutes of 1 and 18 June. Neither Kinkel nor Zerffi dared so much as suggest that their minutes of the 15th should be read. Thus, they admit the illegality of the meeting secretly organised by themselves. Next, Heintzmann read out the letter from Coburg. The oracle over there had written as follows: While expulsion from the National Association could, of course, only be effected by the senate at Coburg, expulsion from the comité (as in Zerffi's case) was a local matter and hence must be decided in London.
Page me41.310
Now, it so happened that the election of new officials to the London National Association was in general due to take place on 6 July. Hence, when Schmidt moved that they proceed with the agenda and allow the elections to decide the case, his motion was carried.
Page me41.310
Gottfried made a very long speech and generally conducted himself in a melodramatically excited manner. The few hairs he still possesses stood on end. He was by turns acrimonious and threatening and even, at times, had recourse to irony, a field that is quite foreign to him. Throughout his speech, the utmost disorder reigned. Hissing. Notably, too, reiterated shouts of 'Gottfried', which he always regards as a grievous outrage. But oddest of all, it seems, was the manner in which, during the succeeding debate, even though he no longer had the floor, Gottfried kept leaping to his feet in order to interrupt, whereupon Heintzmann, raising a menacing arm, caused him by a mere gesture to subside into his seat.

Page Break me41.311
Page me41.311

At the elections Gottfried and his whole gang were thoroughly trounced. Heintzmann was elected chairman by 133 votes to Gottfried's 5. So, even the fellows he had suborned voted for the most part against him. No sooner had these results been proclaimed than he apparently adopted a most 'dignified' pose, a synthesis of the 'dying gladiator' and 'Christ crucified'. Has Gottfried deserved this of 'his beloved Germany'?
Page me41.311

In the meantime, however, that creature Blind — who, as a 'republican', does not, of course, belong to the National Association — had succeeded by dint of obsequiousness, sharp practice, and intrigues of all kinds in having himself loudly acclaimed as the courageous and patriotic champion of Schleswig-Holstein at both the National Association meetings of 15 and 18 June.†a
Page me41.311

So much for this war between mice and frogs.†b You will have seen that even the Kladderadatsch contained a joke or two at the expense of the noble poet.†c
Page me41.311

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.311
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

181
MARX TO ANTOINETTE PHILIPS
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.311
[London,] 17 July 1861

My sweet little Cousin,

I hope you will not have mis-interpreted my long silence. During the first time I did not exactly know where to direct my letters to, whether to Aachen or to Bommel. Then, there came a heavy pressure of business, and during the last 2 or 3 weeks I laboured under a most disgusting inflammation of the eyes which very much limited the time I had disposable for writing or reading. So, my dear child, if I must plead guilty, there are many attenuating circumstances which I trust you, as a gracious judge, will allow to influence your sentence. At all events, you would do me great wrong in supposing that during all that time one single day had passed away without the remembrance, on my part, of my dear little friend.

Page Break me41.312

Page me41.312

My Berlin affair has not yet been brought to a definite issue. You will remember that during my stay in the Prussian metropolis the Hohenzollern authorities seemed to yield, and even furnished me with a passport for one year. Yet hardly had I turned my back upon them, when Lassalle, to his utter astonishment, received a letter from the Polizeipräsident v. Zedlitz to the purpose that I could not be 'renaturalised' because of my 'politische Bescholtenheit'.†a At the same time the Prussian government declared that all the Political Refugees, having been absent from Prussia for more than 10 years, had lost their right of citizenship, had become foreigners, and would, consequently, like all other foreigners, only be re-naturalised at the pleasure of the king. In other words, they declared their so-called amnesty†b to be a mere delusion, sham and share. This was a point I had tried to drive them to during my Berlin stay, and it was more than even the Prussian press and the Prussian chamber of deputies were able to bear silently with. Consequently, the case gave rise to bitter discussions in the journals, and to an interpellation of the cabinet in the Abgeordnetenhaus.†c For the nonce the ministry escaped by means of some equivocous and contradictory statements, but the whole affair contributed not a little to disillusion people in Germany as to the 'new era' inaugurated by what the Berliners irreverently call the 'Schöne Wilhelm'.†d345 Lassalle, with his usual stubbornness, tried hard to get the better of the authorities. First he rushed to Zedlitz and made him such a scene that the Freiherr†e got quite frightened and called his secretary for assistance. A few weeks later, Zedlitz having been removed from his post, in consequence of hostile demonstrations against him by the Berlin mob, Lassalle called upon Geheimrath†f Winter, the successor of Zedlitz, but the 'successor' declared that his hands were bound by the decision of

Page Break me41.312a
Page me41.312a

Click here to view object in scalable window

Page Break me41.312b
Page Break me41.313
his 'predecessor'. Lassalle, lastly, caught hold of Count Schwerin, the minister of the Interior who, to escape from the violent expostulations of my representative, promised him to leave the whole case to the decision of the Berlin magistrate — a promise he is, however, not very likely to keep.†336 As to myself, I have attained at least the one success of forcing the Berlin government to throw off its liberal mask. As to my return to Berlin, if I should think proper to go there before May 1862, they could not prevent it because of the passport granted to me. If I should delay my return, things will perhaps have so altered in Prussia, that I shall not want their permission. It is really ridiculous that a government should make so much fuss, and compromise itself so much, for fear of a private individual. The conscience of their weakness must be awful.
Page me41.313

At the same time I had the good fortune of being honoured by the singular attention of the French government. A person at Paris whom I do not know, had a translation of my pamphlet Herr Vogt already in print, when an order on the part of M. de Persigny forbade him going on with the translation. At the same time a general warning was communicated to all the booksellers at Paris against selling the German original of Herr Vogt. I got only acquainted with this occurrence by a Paris correspondence published in the Allgemeine Augsburger Zeitung.†a

Page me41.313

From the Gräfin Hatzfeldt I have received a letter filling 16 pages.†b Take an example of this, my dear child. She has gone — of course, in company of Lassalle — to a bathing place near Frankfurt on the Main. Thence they will proceed to Switzerland, and, after a month's sojourn there, to Italy. She feels much ennuyée†c and thinks herself much to be pitied, because she has no other business on hand save that of amusing herself. It is in fact a bad plight for an active, stirring and rather ambitious woman whose days of flirtation are gone by.
Page me41.313

A propos. I have sent from Manchester to August†d the two volumes of Lassalle's new juridical work†e and should like to hear whether the packet has found out its address. From Jacques†f I have heard nothing.
Page me41.313

I think not, my dear child, that Mrs Marx and her daughters will find an occasion of paying this year a visit to Bommel, because the Doctor thinks a seabath during the hot season would be the best she could do for getting rid of the remainders of the terrible disease that befell her last autumn.†a On the other hand, I hope you will not forget your promise to visit London where all the members of the family will feel happy to receive you. As to myself, I need not tell you that nothing in the world would give me greater pleasure.

Page Break me41.314
Page me41.314

I hope, my sweet little charmer, you will not prove too severe, but, like a good Christian, send me very soon one of your little letters without revenging yourself for my too long protracted silence.
Page me41.314

Recommend me to your father, to my friend 'Jettchen', the Doctor,†b your brother Fritz and the whole family, and believe me always
Your most sincere admirer
Charles Marx

Page me41.314

I am quite astonished at the news of the attentat†c on his Prussian Majesty,†346 alias 'Der schöne Wilhelm'.†d How could any person of common understanding risk his own head in order to kill a brainless ass?

Page me41.314
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Reproduced from the original

182
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.314
[London,] 20 July 1861

Dear Engels,

I do not believe that you can apply to the Prussian Embassy in London for a 'certificate of good conduct'†347 without presenting the fellows with a document most compromising to yourself.
Page me41.314

Neither under Prussian nor international law is the Prussian Embassy a supervisory body obliged to issue testimonia as to the conduct of foreigners or Prussians. Only insofar as it issues passports does it have to consider whether someone's reputation, either as a result of a court decision or by rumor publicus, is that of a criminal. As for the rest, it is SUPPOSED TO KNOW NOTHING about private INDIVIDUALS. What it does know, it knows per abusum†a as a moucharderie†b institution. Thus, a certificate of good conduct from that quarter would be tantamount to a certificate of good conduct from the illegal (and hence officially non-existent) secret political police, sub auspiciis†c of Alberts, the Embassy clerk. But you cannot recognise such an authority, and the chief of police in Barmen would be very hard put to it, were you to ask him to indicate the paragraph in the Prussian statute book according to which the Prussian Embassy in London possesses such attributes.

Page Break me41.315
Page me41.315

The same cannot be said of the Prussian consul in Manchester. Consuls are commercial, not political representatives of their state. Hence they are SUPPOSED to know the businessmen of their locality and, in particular, those of their own nationality. Hence the consul would be able to give a certificate to the effect that X.X. has lived in Manchester for 10 years as a respectable businessman and is known to be such. The Prussian government has no right whatever to demand any other kind of testimonial and would be too cautious to do so officially. But the former it can demand, because your request for renaturalisation has put you on the same footing as FOREIGNERS of whom suchlike testimonials, etc., may be required when they apply for naturalisation in Prussia.
Page me41.315

The Prussian government has no more right to demand any sort of testimonial concerning your political conduct than, say, a confession of political faith executed by you yourself.
Page me41.315

I have heard nothing more either from Vienna†d or from Dana, although the latter sends me the Tribune every week.
Page me41.315

Brockhaus will not definitely make up his mind†e until I have sent him the manuscript.†310 This is a far from pleasant condition since he will submit the manuscript to the judgment of his idiots of literary advisers over there. Come to that, I'm not progressing as fast as I should like, owing to much domestic TROUBLE.
Page me41.315
Have you read any of Lassalle's book†f? Have you sent the book to my cousin†g? This last is of importance to me, since I am sorely in need of that youth's bons offices.†h
Page me41.315
Lassalle and the countess†i are at a spa near Frankfurt am Main.

Page Break me41.316
Page me41.316
I was called upon by an emissary from the Poles, who at the same time brought me a whole bundle of J. Ph. Becker's letters, sent by Schily, which I haven't yet read. Hasn't paid me a second visit, probably because he didn't like the home-truths I told him about the poor outlook for any kind of CONSPIRACY in Prussia just now. You shall have the Becker letters as soon as I've read them; ditto a letter from Lassalle to me, as soon as I have answered it.†a
Page me41.316
Heard anything from Lupus?
Page me41.316
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.316
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

183
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†348
IN BERLIN
Page me41.316
[London,] 22 July 1861†b

Dear Lassalle,
You must attribute my somewhat prolonged silence to sundry 'ATTENUATING CIRCUMSTANCES'. D'abord,†c I have as yet not succeeded — despite the most positive assurances that have been given me in this respect — in putting my financial affairs in order and thus, which galls me more than anything else, letting you have the remaining £10.

Page me41.316

Secundo: For a few weeks now I have been suffering from a horrible inflammation of the eyes (better just during the last day or two) which made all reading and writing exceedingly irksome.

Page me41.316

Let me begin by thanking you sincerely for your endeavours with regard to my renaturalisation. At least, we have managed to compromise the Prussian government and demonstrate the emptiness of its so-called amnesty.†d I believe that O. Becker's strange attempt at assassination†346 (it's not clear from the newspapers whether he's a Russian or a German) will greatly contribute to a frightful termination of the 'new era'.†345

Page Break me41.317

Page me41.317

I have read the 2nd part of your work†a (when I wanted to begin on the first, I was prevented by my eye-trouble) and have derived very great pleasure from it. I began with No. II because the subject was more congenial to me; not that this will prevent me from subsequently considering the thing in its totality.

Page me41.317

You have misconstrued to some extent the very brief comments in my previous letter†b — no doubt it was the way I put it that was to blame. D'abord, by 'testamentary freedom' I didn't mean freedom to make a will, but freedom to make it with complete disregard for one's family. In England, the will as such goes back a very long way, nor can there be the slightest doubt that the Anglo-Saxons adopted it from Roman jurisprudence. That the English, even at a very early date, considered testacy rather than intestacy to be the norm, is evident from the fact that as far back as the Late Middle Ages, if a pater familias died ab intestato,†c only the obligatory portions went to his wife and children, according to circumstances, whereas 1/3 or 1/2 fell to the Church. For the priests assumed that, had he made his will, he would for the salvation of his soul have left a certain amount to the Church. Generally, it seems to be in this sense that wills in the Middle Ages had a religious connotation and were made for the benefit of the deceased rather than the survivors. But the point I was trying to make (I am not, of course, concerned here with feudal property) was that, after the revolution of 1688, the restrictions governing family settlements, to which the testator had till then been legally subject, were lifted. That this was in keeping with the system of free competition and the society based thereon cannot seriously be questioned; nor that Roman law, modified to a greater or lesser extent, was adopted by modern society because the legal idea that the subject of free competition has of himself corresponds to that of the Roman person (not that I have any intention of enlarging at this juncture on what is a most important point, namely that the legal representation of certain property relations, though undoubtedly deriving from them, is not for all that, and cannot be, congruent with them).

Page me41.317

You have shown that the adoption of the Roman will originally rested on a misconception (and still does, so far as the sagacity of learned jurists is concerned). But it by no means follows from this that the will in its modern form — no matter with what misconceptions of Roman law modern jurists may construe it — is the misconceived Roman will. If this were so, it might be said that every attainment of an earlier age adopted by a later one is a misunderstanding of the past. It is certain, for instance, that the 3 unities, as theoretically construed by the French dramatists†349 in Louis XIV's day, rest on a misconception of Greek drama (and of Aristotle as the exponent thereof). On the other hand, it is equally certain that they understood the Greeks in a way that corresponded exactly to their own artistic needs. Hence their continued adherence to this so-called 'classical' drama long after Dacier and others had provided them with a correct interpretation of Aristotle. It is also certain that all modern constitutions are largely based on a misconception of the English constitution, adopting as essential precisely that which appears to be declining in the English constitution — and which continues to exist in England in name only per abusum†a — e.g. a so-called responsible cabinet. The misunderstood form is precisely the general one. It is the one that lends itself to general USE at a certain stage in the development of society.

Page Break me41.318

Page me41.318

Whether, for example, the English would or would not have had the form of will they now have (which, although it derives directly from the Roman and corresponds to Roman forms is not the Roman) without Rome is, to my mind, neither here nor there. Now, let me put the question another way, e.g.: Might not legacies (and under the so-called will of today the chief beneficiary becomes, in fact, merely a universal legatee†350) have arisen of themselves out of bourgeois society, even without any reference to Rome? Or, in place of legacies, just written instructions on the part of the defuncti†b as to the disposal of their assets?

Page me41.318

What still seems to me not proven is that the Greek will was imported by Rome, although there would admittedly seem to be every probability that this is so.

Page me41.318

You will have seen that Blanqui's sentence — one of the most outrageous that have ever been pronounced — has been confirmed in the court of appeal.†293 I am now curious to see what his friend in Brussels†c will have to tell me.

Page me41.318

My wife sends her kindest regards.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.319

Page me41.319

As regards Brockhaus,†a I shall consider the matter as soon as I have finished.†310 Hitherto I have never sent a manuscript out on spec.

Page me41.319

First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

184
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.319
[London,] 3 August 1861

Dear Frederick,

This is to inform you in much haste that the £5 has been most gratefully received.
Page me41.319

An odious little sheet was sent to me yesterday entitled Thusnelda†b — by Kinkel and Zerffi, attacking Heintzmann et cie. Rarely have I encountered such abysmally stupid juvenilia.
Page me41.319

The worthy Heinrich Bürgers has made a pro-National Association†24 speech at the Gürzenich,†351 and there was a general frisson of pleasure when he breathed the name of the noble man of Gotha.†c
Page me41.319

Handsome William appears to be completely out of his mind. The fool is studying folio volumes on the coronation of Frederick I.
Page me41.319

I am sending you the Thusnelda herewith. Look after it for me.
Page me41.319

Also enclosed an article on the COUNTING OUT OF THE HOUSE ON THE OCCASION OF THE DANISH QUESTION.†d
Page me41.319

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.319
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.320

185
MARX TO ANTOINETTE PHILIPS
IN ZALT-BOMMEL

Page me41.320
[London,] 24 September 1861

My sweet little Cousin,

You must excuse me for sending you today only a few lines. The fact is that I reserve to myself the pleasure of addressing you a real letter' in a few days. For the present, I wish only to learn, by your gracious interference, whether August†a has at last received Lassalle's work.†b Lassalle bothers me with a new letter as to this subject, he considering of course 'his work' as something awfully important. He presses me to answer him by next post, and thus I must again call upon you. You will much oblige me by informing me as soon as possible of the real state of the case.

Page me41.320

Apropos. The book was to be sent to August from Manchester, not from London, but I have been assured that it had been sent from Manchester to Amsterdam. Of course, I don't care a fig for the whole 'loss', if loss there be, since August would certainly not much miss 'the work'. But courtesy obliges me to make these researches.

Page me41.320

In writing me, you will be of course so friendly to inform me at the same time of what you are doing and so forth, knowing my deep interests in all that concerns you.

Page me41.320

My best compliments to your father and the whole family.

Page me41.320

Believe me always your most sincere admirer

K.M.

Page me41.320

First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me41.321

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.321
[London,] 28 September 1861

DEAR Frederick,

Our youngest†a has had jaundice ever since I got back†352; her condition had been unsatisfactory long before that. Yesterday the yellowness was gone from her eyes, and there is every indication that she is on the mend.

Page me41.321

I sent one article to the Tribune the week before last and one this week.†b In two weeks' time we shall know (meanwhile I am continuing with one article per week) whether things can go on in this way.

Page me41.321

The Vienna 'Presse', or so I gather from what the Times CORRESPONDENT wrote yesterday,†c has finally revised its attitude towards Schmerling and hence it may now be possible to establish a connection with the paper.

Page me41.321

In the issue of Kolatschek's Stimmen der Zeit that arrives in London this Monday (or so Kolatschek has written and told Borkheim) there is a special supplement on Herr Vogt.†d

Page me41.321

Very many thanks for the Manchester Guardians (most useful to me just now) and the BRITISH ASSOCIATION PUBLICATION.†353

Page me41.321

At the beginning of this week, a young officer by the name of E. Oswald — dressed in Garibaldi OFFICER UNIFORM — called here with an introduction from Schily. A former Prussian lieutenant, he joined Garibaldi as a volunteer, and was promoted lieutenant under Medici. After the disbandment of Garibaldi's army, he went to Paris, where he took employment as a worker in a factory to make ends meet. He is now over here and intends to go to America to join in the struggle. What he needs are funds to get him there. A sailing vessel leaves here every week for New York, and the fare is only £6. Borkheim is prepared to put up £5 on his own account and that of one or two acquaintances. So it's up to a few liberal philistines (Borchardt, etc.) in Manchester to raise a further small sum, partly to provide the passage money. The £6, however, does not include food. Borkheim turned d'abord†a to Kinkel with a view to obtaining Oswald's travelling expenses from the revolutionary funds.†81 But Gottfried said: quod non.†b (When in Zurich, Borkheim had succeeded by this means in procuring the money for Anneke's passage to America.) Nor will the American Embassy give a single FARTHING. Oswald seems to me to be an excellent young man and entirely unassuming into the bargain. Once he got to New York, a recommendation from me to Dana would be very useful to him. However, something must be done about it quickly, for his stay in London simply means faux frais de production.†c

Page Break me41.322

Page me41.322

Oswald says that, as a soldier, Türr isn't worth twopence either. A mere intriguer. Garibaldi kept him on, primarily because he had been recommended by an Italian friend of Garibaldi's, previously associated with Türr, but more especially by virtue of his function as the 'REPRESENTATIVE OF HUNGARY'. Whenever Garibaldi employed him in any kind of independent military role, he was dissatisfied with him. Rüstow, too, evidently took little or no part in the affair. Officially his duty was that of 'historiographer' of the war. Oswald says of Garibaldi that he is essentially a guerrilla leader, but would be unable to cope with a larger army on a larger terrain. His strategical advisers are Cosenz and Medici.

Page me41.322

When are you going to Germany?†354

Page me41.322

Best regards from all the family. Regards to Lupus, Gumpert, etc.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.322
Have seen Meyen's sample issue of the Berliner Reform. Pure or rather filthy rubbish.
Page me41.322
Apropos. Have just had a letter from my niece,†d who says that August Philips in Amsterdam has still not received the Lassalle.†e Perhaps you would find out whether it was sent off by the office.

Page me41.322
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.323

187
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.323
[London,] 30 October 1861

Dear Engels,
Circumstances have finally CLEARED to the extent that I have at least got firm ground under my feet again and am no longer in a state of complete suspense. As you know, shortly after my return from Manchester†352 and as soon as I thought the moment opportune, I again started writing for the Tribune at weekly intervals. Last week included, I had sent them 6 articles.†355 Then, in the last mail, the first 2 articles†a actually came back in print, the first of them (over 3 columns on English opinions on the UNITED STATES) in a PROMINENT PLACE and particularly REFERRED TO on the front page of the paper. To this extent, then, the matter is in order and hence I am assured of £2 per week.
Page me41.323
Secondly: I had, as you know, already written to the Vienna Presse from Manchester, asking for 'information'.†356 About 3 weeks ago I got an answer which was politically entirely satisfactory to me. (In the meantime, the paper has modified its attitude to Schmerling.) At the same time, Friedländer (on behalf of Zang, the proprietor) asked for 2 sample articles. These†b I sent off and yesterday morning I got an answer to the effect 1. that the articles had appeared with due prominence on the front page,†357 2.

that I was engaged on a regular basis from November, £1 per article, 10sh. per news-letter.
Page me41.323
As regards the Tribune, I must first of all find some way of drawing bills, for it can hardly be arranged through Freiligrath in future.
Page me41.323
For the rest, this twofold engagement holds out an assured prospect of putting an end to the harried existence led by my family over the past year, and also of finally completing my book.†310 Thanks to you, I was able to placate the more pressing of the blackguards at the beginning of September, but even so, the harassment was still quite intolerable, and in October it again reached a crescendo. I am writing today to my old lady†a to find out whether anything can be squeezed out of her. I shall likewise see if I can raise something from a LOAN SOCIETY. My chief concern, of course, is to put my affairs into some sort of order, pending the availability of amounts WORTH DRAWING from New York and Vienna, and above all to have leisure in which to work during the interval that must necessarily elapse. In the MEAN TIME, we have pawned everything that was not actually nailed down and, what is even worse, my wife is seriously unwell. When it was simply a case of enduring the pressure of day-to-day adversities, she did this bravely, but she has been cast down by the complete absence of prospects. In the meantime, the favourable news from Vienna and New York has already evoked a favourable reaction.

Page Break me41.324
Page me41.324
Borkheim had strangely misled both himself and me over Kolatschek's Stimmen der Zeit. True, No. 39 carried a contribution running to a printer's sheet headlined 'K. Vogt und K. Marx', but it was written by the student Abt, the 'lowest of the low', whom you will remember from Geneva. Having taken due note of the actual content of my pamphlet†b in the first 2 pages, he devotes the remaining 14 to railing in the most rabid and villainous fashion against me and, notably, Schily and Imandt, on account of the 'Bristlers'.†358 He concludes by saying that, if I don't recant, he will attack me 'at the only vulnerable spot he knows' and compromise me in a manner 'that I shall regret'. Needless to say, I didn't take the slightest notice of the scoundrel. But something very odd must have happened to put Mr Kolatschek at Abt's mercy, for, as Abt says, he had had the scrawl as far back as January and had refused to print it until September.
Page me41.324
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.324
Don't forget to send me as detailed a report as possible on the status quo in Manchester.

Page me41.324

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.325

188
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.325
[London,] 6 November 1861

Dear Frederick,

You must excuse me for my failure to send a more prompt acknowledgement of the £5, ditto the wine. Very many thanks for both. It so happened that I have been very busy of late, on top of which I have had a great deal of domestic BOTHER.

Page me41.325

Once again, the Tribune's front page calls attention to an article of mine as 'MOST INTERESTING'.†a Odd the way these YANKEES†312 hand out testimonia to their own CORRESPONDENTS.

Page me41.325

I had an answer from my old lady†b yesterday. 'Soft' words, BUT NO CASH. She also tells me what I have long known, namely that she is 75 and is suffering from many of the infirmities of old age.

Page me41.325

Up till now I have also been vainly trying to raise a LOAN over here. The guarantors I was able to produce were not, as I had in any case already suspected, sufficiently respectable. Many chaps have been more fortunate in this line. E.g. that scoundrel Beta got £50 out of a LOAN society on the guarantee of Mr — Edgar Bauer!

Page me41.325

Russia's goings-on in Poland aren't bad at all. No less nice are the GESTS and EXPLOITS of handsome William.†359

Page me41.325

You may perhaps have seen from the German, or also from some of the English newspapers, with what persistent importunity citizen and statesman Blind is 'blossoming' into a German Mazzini.†c

Page me41.325

Apropos. While you were away,†360 I received avis†d from Holland that Lassalle's books†e had not been received by my cousin.†f Perhaps you would be so good as to make inquiries about it.

Page me41.325

Write soon, for I have an especial need of your letters during what is still a highly critical interlude for me.

Page me41.325
If you have a moment, could you write me a report on the Armstrong controversy†361 for the Presse?
Page me41.325
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.325
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.326

189
MARX TO LOUIS WATTEAU†362
IN BRUSSELS
Page me41.326
[London,] 10 November 1861

Dear Citizen,
My reply to your last letters has been delayed for so long because I was waiting from day to day for news from a lady you know.†a At last I have learned that she left for Italy some months ago but will shortly be returning to Berlin.
Page me41.326
If the first letter for L.†b has not arrived, I imagine that the fault must lie in the address; it was marked via Gibraltar instead of via Southampton. After I had been advised of this mistake, I corrected the address on the second letter. This I not only franked but also registered. I enclose the receipt from the English post office.
Page me41.326
The 50 francs I am sending you comes from a German working men's club.†c In my next letter I shall send you a further contribution. Please be so kind as to acknowledge receipt and send copies of your pamphlet†363 in return.
Page me41.326
It would be useful if you were to write me a letter I could send to Berlin and which would establish the monetary resources needed for a <rescue attempt>.†d I should return it to the appropriate quarter.
Page me41.326
Rest assured that there is no one more interested than myself in the lot of a man†e whom I have always regarded as the brains and inspiration of the proletarian party in France.
Page me41.326

Salut.
K.M.

Page me41.326
First published in full in La Nouvelle revue socialiste. Politique, Culture, No. 20, Paris, 1976

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.327

190
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.327
[London,] 18 November [1861]

Dear Engels,
Iterum Crispinus!†a
Page me41.327
Well, this is how matters now stand.
Page me41.327
On 9 November, I drew £16 on the Tribune for the 8 articles then sent. Out of this £16, I paid £3 apiece on account to butcher, baker, TEAGROCER, OILMAN, MILKMAN, and GREENGROCER. I spent 10/- on coal, which will all be gone by tomorrow. Your £5 went for the most part on the repayment of small cash loans. So, I'm broke, and there are further debts to be paid — the LANDLORD, school fees, the cobbler, and essential purchases for the family against the winter. I write for the Presse almost every day. With the Presse and the Tribune combined I might be able to make SHIFT. But in view of the constantly reaccumulating deficit (not a milliard, admittedly†364) and a whole year's loss of income this really can't be done.
Page me41.327
Now there has been yet another disaster.
Page me41.327
As you know, I advanced Petsch & Co. £25 for the printing of Vogt, it being agreed that this was to be repaid out of the SALE of COPIES, before any other deductions. Moreover, they owe me a few pounds for Hinter den Coulissen,†b the Communist Trial†c and the 18th Brumaire,†d etc.†247
Page me41.327
On the other hand, I obtained newspapers and books from the fellows to the value of £10 9/-, if only to be in possession of some security.
Page me41.327

Koller (an associé†e) has now had a row with Petsch, who is not in the business at present. There's a lawsuit pending between the two over the firm's liquidation.
Page me41.327
The rascally Koller, whom I pressed about my claim, wrote instead advising me of his suit in the COUNTY-COURT†7 regarding the £10 9/-. I went to see Zimmermann. He told me that my suit would cost me about £30-£60 in a SUPERIOR COURT, and that it would be better if I established my claim in the form of a counter-claim in the COUNTY-COURT, to which I had been summoned by Koller. Nor does he himself practise in the COUNTY-COURTS. So, to this end, I shall have to see an English SOLICITOR before the week is out (and as soon as possible), which I can't do without CASH.

Page Break me41.328
Page me41.328
If I were quit of this wretched situation and did not see my family oppressed by MISERABLE adversities, how overjoyed I would be at the fiasco of the Decembrist financial system, so long and so frequently prognosticated by me in the Tribune.
Page me41.328
So William the Handsome or handsome William has done some plain speaking in Silesia: 'If you elect democrats, we shall be ruined.' 'Soldiers are the only answer to democrats.'†365
Page me41.328
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.328
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

191
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.328
[London,] 20 November [1861]

Dear Engels,
This is to acknowledge, in much haste, receipt of the £5, also the Manchester Guardians which arrived the day before yesterday.
Page me41.328

I am now going straight to a SOLICITOR.†a My wife is very much affected [...]†b and I fear the thing will end badly, if there is a long STRUGGLE.
Page me41.328
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.328
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.329

192
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.329
Manchester, 27 November 1861

Dear Moor,
Have the YANKEES gone quite out of their minds, playing such a mad trick on the CONFEDERATE COMMISSIONERS?†366 The FACT that even over here in the Channel, a warship was lying in wait for the MAIL STEAMER shows that general instructions had gone out from Washington. There could be no clearer casus belli†a than to forcibly seize political prisoners on board a foreign vessel. The fellows must be completely crazy to saddle themselves with a war against England. If war should really break out, you could send your letters to New York via Germany or Le Havre, under cover to a third party, but you'll have to take care that you're not aiding and abetting the ENEMIES of the QUEEN.†b
Page me41.329
I was delighted to hear that Bakunin had bolted. The poor devil must have been very much the worse for wear. What a way to make a journey round the world!†367
Page me41.329
Monsieur Bonaparte would also seem to get no money and Fould pretty well at his wits' end.†364 I can't help wondering what's going to happen there.
Page me41.329
Things are going swimmingly in Russia and Poland, and now there's also a chance that good old Prussia may at long last be involved in a crisis, provided the electors don't allow themselves to be intimidated again.†368 But the purse, the purse! That may well serve to keep the few 'men of Progress' afloat a little while longer. In Cologne it is even rumoured that good old Heinrich Bürgers might stand for Parliament.
Page me41.329

Varnhagen's Tagebücher†c must be quite interesting. All the same, the fellow was a scurvy, cowardly knave. There was quite a witty article about the thing in the Kreuz-Zeitung, — full of spite and malice, of course.†d

Page Break me41.330
Page me41.330

On 1 December, I shall send you another fiver. Many regards,

Your
F.E.

Page me41.330
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

193
ENGELS TO MARX†369
IN LONDON
Page me41.330
[Manchester, 2 December 1861]

I/Z 07595, Newcastle on Tyne, 14 August 1860

Dear Moor,

The above is the number of the enclosed fiver, which could not go off till today, as the first of December fell on a Sunday. Once again, I didn't register it.

Page me41.330

During the past few days I have at last read some of the Lassalle.†a His stuff about retroaction may be quite plausible, but doesn't hold water, as is apparent, e.g., in the case of divorce legislation, of which it might also be said, and has in fact been said by many a Berlin philistine: 'If I'd known how difficult it was to get divorced, I should never have got married.' By the way, it's grossly superstitious of the fellow to go on believing in the 'idea of law', absolute law. His objections to Hegel's philosophy of law are for the most part perfectly justified, but he hasn't yet really got into his stride with his new philosophy of mind; even from the philosophical standpoint he should have progressed sufficiently to regard the process alone, not just its momentary result, as the absolute, in which case no other idea of law could follow than precisely the historical process itself. The style's nice, too. 'The hand-wringing despair of the contradictions', etc., and then the introduction. Pure Ephraim Artful. I dare say I shan't get very much further, unless I find it might come in useful as a course in Roman law, in which case I shall read the whole thing. How,

Page Break me41.330a

Marx's passport, 1861
(page 1)

Page Break me41.330b

Marx's passport, 1861 (page 2)

Page Break me41.331
by the way, one could think it worthwhile to send so simple and, au fond,†a insignificant an idea chasing right through the Corpus juris,†370 applying it to every single point — as though it would gain weight in the process — is quite beyond my comprehension. But even nicer is the assumption that this WILD GOOSE CHASE, conducted in and around the 'plenitude of the concrete', is the proof of his pudding and he must therefore remain infallible ever after.
Page me41.331
In Berlin things will now begin to hum. The new little Chamber's half-hearted 'progress' democracy†371 will prove too red for handsome William, after all, and by March they'll already find themselves in a state of mild chronic crisis. I am curious to see what happens. If only the chaps in the Chamber aren't too timid, they will yet succeed in toppling the handsome one, but I don't trust that democratic breed.
Page me41.331
I hope your wife is feeling better. Cordial regards to her and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.331
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

194
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.331
[London,] 5 December [1861]

Dear Engels,

Didn't send an acknowledgment sooner because afflicted by great TROUBLE. My wife is very indisposed. I shall write to you this evening, as I have to concoct an article today.†b

Page me41.331

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.331

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.332

195

MARX TO ENGELS†372

IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.332

[London,] 9 December 1861

Dear Engels,

From my PERTINACIOUS silence you may discern with what reluctance I write to you at all. Considering the great efforts — greater, even, than you can manage — that you make on my behalf, I need hardly say how much I detest perpetually boring you with my lamentations.

Page me41.332

The last money you sent me, plus a borrowed pound, went to pay the school bill — so that there shouldn't be twice the amount owing in January. The butcher and épicier†a made me give them I.O.U.s, one for £10, the other for £12, due on 9 January. Although I didn't know with what I should pay them, I couldn't risk being sued lest I bring the whole house tumbling about my ears. I owe the LANDLORD £15, and shall owe him £21 in January. Ditto the GREEN GROCER, the baker, the news agent, the milkman, and the rest of the rabble whom I had placated with payments on account after my return from Manchester,†352 lastly the TALLYMAN, since the onset of winter meant buying indispensable items of winter clothing, which therefore had to be got on tick.

Page me41.332

The amount I can expect at the end of the month is £30 at most, since those scoundrels from the Presse are not printing some of my articles. I have, of course, first to accustom myself to keeping within the 'bounds of German reason'. (Incidentally, though, they are making quite a splash in their paper with my contributions.)

Page me41.332

What I have to pay (including interest at the pawn-shop, etc.) amounts to £100. It is remarkable how, despite an occasional helping-hand, the loss of all income combined with debts that are never quite paid off invariably brings the same old muck to the surface again.

Page me41.332

Today I have written to Dronke because he still owes me some money. But just gently nudging his memory, not urging; I made so bold as to tell him that, if he could make me an advance, you would guarantee its repayment.†373

Page me41.332

Once I'm out of this mess, New York and Vienna will allow me at least to jog along again.

Page Break me41.333

Page me41.333

My wife was in a dangerous nervous condition, and for a few days Dr Allen was most alarmed. He knows, or rather suspects, where the shoe pinches, but is too tactful to say anything untoward. The poor woman is still very out of sorts, but so resilient is she by nature that, as soon as things take a turn for the better, I feel sure she will be all right again.

Page me41.333

There isn't going to be war with America, as I have said from the very beginning in the Presse,†a and I am only sorry I didn't have the means to exploit the boneheadedness of a Stock Exchange dominated during this silly season by Reuter and The Times.

Page me41.333

I agree with your STRICTURES ON Izzy†b (who writes from Florence to say he 'has had a very interesting meeting' with Garibaldi, etc.). The 2nd volume is more interesting, if only by reason of the Latin quotations. Ideologism permeates everything, and the dialectical method is wrongly applied. Hegel never described as dialectics the subsumption of vast numbers of 'CASES' UNDER A GENERAL PRINCIPLE.

Page me41.333

My writing is progressing, but slowly.†310 Circumstances being what they were, there was, indeed, little possibility of bringing such theoretical matters to a rapid close. However, the thing is assuming a much more popular form, and the method is much less in evidence than in Part I.†c

Page me41.333

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.333

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

196
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.333
[London,] 13 December 1861

Dear Frederick,
Best thanks for your letter.†232
Page me41.333
IN COMPENSATION for services previously rendered,†d Dronke sent £5 by return, and yesterday he himself came up to town where he had a meeting with one of his directors.

Page Break me41.334
Page me41.334
He is going to try and discount the bills. I told him at once that an essential condition was that they should not be put into circulation before they fell due.
Page me41.334
That bastard Koller has resorted to another manoeuvre. He has not allowed the case to proceed in the COUNTY COURT†7 but has brought it before the SHERIFF COURT†374 and increased the sum for which he is suing me to £20 — alleging that I had undertaken to be jointly responsible for all the costs of Vogt. This, namely, by way of a REPLY to my counter-claim.†a
Page me41.334
My attorney, Sidney Herbert, has deemed it formaliter†b necessary to file a counter-suit at the same COURT. The whole difficulty centres on the fact that my AGREEMENT with Petsch was not made in writing.
Page me41.334
My wife is feeling better.
Page me41.334
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.334
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

197

MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.334
[London,] 19 December 1861

Dear Engels,

You know how the Dronke business came about.†c I wrote to him, not because of the bill, but to dun him. In the circumstances, I was, of course, compelled to inform him of the critical situation I was in, a situation which he, like anyone else, must, and did, find quite natural in view of the American affair. As a result of this communication, he came to see me and, thus, the arrangement was made which, to begin with, I would never even have thought of, had you not expressly stated in your letter†232 that you would accept the bills if I was able to get them discounted through

Page Break me41.335
Freiligrath or 'some other person'. I say this much in order to absolve myself of any semblance of indiscretion.
Page me41.335

There is nothing doing with F., as I already knew beforehand. He only had the tailor and by the time of the Tribune affair he'd already lost him, because two of his clerks had obtained articles of clothing to the value of £70 on his recommendation and decamped without paying. Moreover, my RELATIONS TO F. were so CHANGED that, when he arranged to have even my bills on the Tribune discounted again by Bischoffsheim, he did so only with reluctance. But, even if he had wanted to, he couldn't particularly since the latent bankruptcy of his bank court par les rues de Londres.†a
Page me41.335

This letter will go off at the same time as one to Dronke, informing him that I embarked on the TRANSACTIONS with him as a result of a misunderstanding and asking him therefore to regard them as non avenues.†b I also told him that, if he could discount the bills on me personally WITHOUT ANY INTERVENTION OF OTHER PERSONS, this would be agreeable to me. I had to tell him that, because I can see no way out, and indeed my situation is one of the utmost peril.
Page me41.335

His address, letters to be marked private, is 49 Oldhall Street, Liverpool. Judging by what Dronke says (though I believe he's in Newcastle and not in Liverpool at all), he would simply try to arrange the matter with his own BANKER.
Page me41.335

Unfortunately, I couldn't help informing my wife of the contents of your letter, insofar as it referred to the bill transaction. And news of this kind always brings on a kind of paroxysm.
Page me41.335

As to war with America, Pam may possibly succeed in bringing it about, but not without difficulty. He has got to have a PRETEXT and it doesn't seem to me as though Lincoln will give him one. Some of the Cabinet, Milner Gibson, Gladstone, plus ou moins†c Lewis, can't be so easily BEFOOLED as John Russell.
Page me41.335

Taken by and large, the Americans have not been at fault, either materially or formally, under English maritime law, which is in force there.†375 As TO THE QUESTION OF MATERIAL RIGHT, the English CROWN LAWYERS have themselves given a decision along these lines.†376 They have therefore adduced, since Pam needed a PRETEXT, an ERROR in forma, a TECHNICALITY, A LEGAL QUIBBLE. But this, too, is erroneous. Under English maritime law one must distinguish between two cases. Whether A NEUTRAL SHIP CARRIES BELLIGERENT GOODS AND PERSONS or CONTRABAND OF WAR, either in the form of objects or persons. In the latter case, the ship with CARGO and persons is TO BE SEIZED AND BROUGHT INTO A PORT FOR ADJUDICATION. In the first instance — if it is established beyond doubt that the GOODS (properly speaking an impossibility in the case of persons) have not passed into the possession of a neutral, the BELLIGERENT GOODS or persons may be seized ON THE HIGH SEAS, while the ship, etc., gets off scot-free. This sort of jurisprudence has — if we disregard the AUTHORITIES — been constantly asserted by England, as I have discovered for myself by consulting Cobbett's Register†a on all the squabbling that has gone on with neutrals since 1793.

Page Break me41.336
Page me41.336
Conversely, since the English CROWN LAWYERS confined the problem to an ERROR in forma and thus conceded the Yankees the right to seize all English ships with BELLIGERENTS aboard and bring them into port FOR ADJUDICATION, the Yankees may very well — and in my view will — declare that they are satisfied with this concession, that in future they will commit no formal infringements in case of seizure, etc., and deliver up Mason and Slidell FOR THE NONCE.
Page me41.336
If Pam is absolutely set on war, he can, of course, bring it about. In my view, that is not his intention. If the Americans act in the way I imagine they will, Pam will have provided stupid John Bull with fresh proof that he is 'THE TRULY ENGLISH MINISTER'.†377 The chap will then be free to do whatever he likes. He will seize this opportunity,
Page me41.336
1. to force the Yankees to recognise the Declaration of Paris on the rights of the neutrals†378;
Page me41.336
2. to use this as a pretext for something he has hitherto not dared to do, namely request and prevail upon the English Parliament to sanction the abandonment of the OLD ENGLISH MARITIME LAW, the said abandonment having been subscribed to by Clarendon — on his (Pam's) instructions — unbeknown to the Crown and without the prior knowledge of Parliament.
Page me41.336
Pam is an old man, and, since the time of Catherine II, the Russians have been trying to enforce the declaration published in Paris. There are still two things they lack: the sanction of the English Parliament and the accession of the UNITED STATES. On this occasion, both would be achieved. It seems to me that these warlike alarums are simply theatrical props with which to make stupid John Bull believe that the definitive abandonment of his own MARITIME LAWS in favour of Russia is a victory over the Yankees won thanks to the PLUCK of the 'TRULY ENGLISH MINISTER'.

Page me41.336
Additional reasons for these warlike alarums seem to be: Diversion of attention from Poland (for at public meetings even fellows such as Conningham from Brighton are demanding the

Page Break me41.337
STOPPAGE of FURTHER PAYMENT of the DUTCH-RUSSIAN LOAN†379) and diversion of attention from Denmark where Russia is engaged at this moment in ousting Glücksburg, the HEIR PRESUMPTIVE appointed by herself.†380
Page me41.337
It is, OF COURSE, possible that the Yankees won't give way, and, in that case, Pam will be forced into war by his preparations and rodomontade to date. However, I would rate the odds at 100 to 1 against.
Page me41.337
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.337
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

198
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.337
[London,] 27 December 1861

Dear Engels,
When the outside world first began to 'dun' me, I wrote — since I didn't want to be always pestering you — not only to my mother and other relations, but also to Siebel. Now that young man, as I see from his letter, has again written to you. Consider the matter as non avenue.†a
Page me41.337
I am extremely vexed that you should have had to give Dronke an I.O.U. for my sake. Originally, he promised to arrange the matter in less onerous a form and to give longer TERMS.†373
Page me41.337

I don't yet know quite how I am to weather this crisis. Whatever happens — since otherwise it would be plainly impossible — I shall write to my LANDLORD and tell him that he cannot be paid now, that I intend to give him a bill, etc.
Page me41.337
The court case is also going wrong.†b Since the point at issue turns on PARTNERSHIP, my LAWYER considers it necessary — if I am not to be made to pay the £20 — that the case be removed from the SHERIFF'S COURT†374 and taken before a SUPERIOR COURT. I am due to appear at the SHERIFF'S COURT on January 3rd. My mistake lay in not having concluded a written contract with A. Petsch. Sidney, my attorney, believes I should be pretty safe in the SUPERIOR COURT.

Page Break me41.338
Page me41.338
The rotten Presse is printing barely half my articles. They're jackasses. I wonder how they propose to pay, whether I'm expected to write individual articles on 'spec', or what?
Page me41.338
In the meantime, may I wish you in advance every happiness for the New Year. If it's anything like the old one, I, for my part, would sooner consign it to the devil.
Page me41.338
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.338
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.339

1862

199
MARX TO JOSEF VALENTIN WEBER
IN LONDON
Page me41.339
[London,] 15 January [1862]

Dear Weber,
I have just had some TICKETS from Urquhart for a meeting next Monday.†381
Page me41.339

Of the 3 TICKETS enclosed, one is intended for you. You can also take in some friends on it.
Page me41.339
Will you please let the Workers' Society†a have the other 2 TICKETS. (These will gain admission for as many as wish to go.) At the same time, I should be obliged — since I have not got the Society's address — if you would inform them that I cannot give a lecture†382 on Monday because of the meeting.
Page me41.339
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.339
First published in the newspaper Neues Deutschland, No. 15, 15 January 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.340

200
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.340
[London,] 25 February 1862

Dear Engels,
My prolonged silence is due, not to anything 'intrinsic', but to the sordid state of affairs which I didn't want to bore and plague you with.
Page me41.340
As you know, on New Year's Day, I was able to SETTLE only that part of my debts which couldn't, or so it seemed, be put off any longer (e.g. my LANDLORD, to whom I shall owe a whole year's rent by the end of next month). Most of the money went on debts upon which bills had been drawn.
Page me41.340
The Vienna 'Presse', as was only to be expected in view of the present rotten state of affairs in Germany, has not turned out to be the milch-cow it should have been. I am supposed to receive £1 per ARTICLE. But since the fellows only print perhaps one article in four, and quite often none at all, damn-all comes of it except loss of time and annoyance at having to write on spec, whether or no the gracious editorial board condescends to accord the article its imprimatur.
Page me41.340
I had to give way in my lawsuit with Koller,†a the main reason being that, as soon as the SOLICITOR wanted a £30 advance since the case went to a SUPERIOR COURT, I was not, of course, able to produce that sum. I had to pay the SOLICITOR £5 for himself and for the COUNSEL he had retained, and also come to an arrangement with Koller whereby I am to pay him £18 by monthly instalments of £2; I paid him the first £2 on the last day of January, and have to pay the next £2 at the end of February, but what with, I don't know.

Page me41.340
During the past 2 months the Presse has printed so little of my stuff that I have no balance there worth mentioning.
Page me41.340
What makes the situation even PLEASANTER is that for nearly 2 months now little Jenny has been undergoing medical treatment. The child has grown visibly thinner. Jenny is now already old enough to feel the full strain and also the stigma of our circumstances, and I think this is one of the main causes of her physical indisposition. (Apropos. Yesterday Allen prescribed wine for her, and I'd therefore be grateful if you could send down a few bottles.) For instance, unbeknown to us, she called on Mrs Young to see whether she mightn't go on the stage.

Page Break me41.341
Page me41.341
TAKE ALL IN ALL, leading such a dog's life is hardly WORTH WHILE.
Page me41.341
As regards the copies of Urquhart's paper,†a I haven't yet been able to get hold of them. Write and let me know with which issue to begin, and Collet will do what is necessary. Herewith the chap's denunciation of Bakunin,†b whom I haven't seen. He is living at Herzen's place.
Page me41.341
Have you by any chance inquired whether Lassalle's opus†c did in fact go off to August Philips?
Page me41.341
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.341
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

201
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†383
IN GENEVA
Page me41.341
London, 26 February 1862

Dear Becker,

You must attribute my prolonged silence to one thing only — my inability to help. The American civil war has meant the total loss of my principal source of income for a whole year. Subsequently (a couple of months ago), this 'business' was resumed, but on a very 'restricted' basis.†384 So far as acquaintances are concerned, however, I can count very few who have any means at their disposal. E.g., it is some while since that I wrote to Siebel on your behalf†42 but I am told by Borkheim that he gave no signs of life. In Manchester, a few 'revolutionary adventurers, who were sailing to the United States for the good cause,' had scraped the bottom of the barrel.

Page Break me41.342
Page me41.342

Now, as regards the subscription to your work,†a I shall do my utmost but can hold out little hope. All the riff-raff in the associations here — with the exception of the Workers' Educational Society,†3 which has nothing in the way of funds — is constitutional, and actually favours the Prussian National Association.†24 The fellows would sooner give money to have a work like yours suppressed. As you probably know, these Germans, both young and old, are all of them pert men of sterling worth and practical insight, and look upon people like you and me as immature fools who have still not recovered from their revolutionary fancies. Nor is the riff-raff at home any better than it is abroad. The time I spent in Berlin,†b etc., convinced me that any attempt to influence the canaille by literary means would prove utterly futile. The fellows' self-complacent stupidity, which possesses in its press — that pitiable press — an extraordinary elixir of life, is beyond belief. And then the spiritual passivity to boot — nothing short of a sound thrashing would reanimate your stolid German who, having lost his philosophical illusions and applied himself to money-making and 'Little Germany' and 'practical constitutionalism', is now no better than an impulsive CLOWN. So far as I'm concerned, Germany may altogether [...],†c but a roomful of precocious and decrepit children.†d
Page me41.342

The Hermann is the property of the erstwhile Royal Prussian Procurator Heintzmann: 'with God for King and Fatherland', 'a modicum of Little Germany' and moderation in the exercise of freedom. A namesake of yours, one Becker from Leipzig, who writes for that paper, is a good chap but not influential enough to help us in a matter such as a subscription. Engels only returned to Manchester a few days ago after an absence of several months. He and Wolff (of Breslau)†e will do what they can. However, with the exception of the above-named and 3 or 4 others, the numerous German population in Manchester consists of the same philistines as it does here and everywhere else.
Page me41.342

Quoad†f 'Vogt'†g, do with it as you please. It goes without saying, of course, that I could not but be delighted if the pamphlet which the press has all but killed by silence in Germany, could be used to some effect at least in Switzerland. A French translation was made in Paris, without my previous knowledge, and was already being printed but vanished by supreme imperial ukase.†a So, in fact, there is no French edition.

Page Break me41.343

Page me41.343
Let me assure you, my dear friend, that nothing could be more painful to me than to have to stand by helpless and passive and witness the struggles of a man such as yourself. I admire your steadfastness, your fervour, and your energy. The Ancients — I think it was Aeschines — said that one should endeavour to acquire worldly goods so that one might help one's friends in need! What profound and humane wisdom lies therein!
Page me41.343
At the earliest possible opportunity I shall let you know the result of communications to various persons about the subscription.
Page me41.343
In the meantime, farewell. My wife asks to be kindly remembered to you.

Yours
K.M.

Page me41.343
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Jg. VI, No. 11, 1888 and in full in Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow. 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

202
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.343
Manchester, 28 February 1862

Dear Moor,
Today I am sending you, CARRIAGE PAID, a case containing:
8 bottles of claret,
4 bottles of old, 1846, hock,
2 bottles of sherry.
Page me41.343
I haven't any port that would suit the circumstances. I trust it will do Jenny good. Poor child! However, I don't imagine that the thing is of any consequence. She has grown a lot and, with care and exercise, will doubtless regain her strength.

Page Break me41.344
Page me41.344

I shall get the £2 for Koller†a off to you tomorrow or on Monday.†b
Page me41.344
This year, I am spending more than my income. The crisis is affecting us badly,†385 we have no orders, and, starting from next week, shall be working merely half-time. Nevertheless, I have to get hold of the £50 for Dronke within 4 weeks and next week there's a year's rent to be paid for my lodgings. I'm moving out; this morning that damned Sarah†c stole the money from my coat pocket. So, don't address anything more to Thorncliffe Grove. I'm living with Mary nearly all the time now so as to spend as little money as possible; unfortunately, I can't dispense with my LODGINGS, otherwise I should move in with her altogether. I haven't got any new lodgings as yet and shall have to go and look for some.†386 Write again soon and let me know how things are going. What is the Tribune up to?†384
Page me41.344
Would you like a military article on America for the Presse?
Page me41.344
The numbers of The Free Press I am short of are October-February 1861/62.
Page me41.344
Best wishes to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.344
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

203
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.344
[London,] 3 March 1862

Dear Engels,
I am sending my wife to a LOAN OFFICE today to see what can be done there, for I've had a disgustingly rude letter from my LANDLORD, and, if the fellow puts a BROKER into the house, I shall be sued by all and sundry.

Page Break me41.345
Page me41.345
The wine hasn't arrived yet.
Page me41.345

I should be grateful if you could let me have this week (by Friday morning†a) an article in English on the American war.†387 You can write it without the slightest misgiving. The Tribune will print it as the LETTER OF A FOREIGN OFFICER. Nota bene: The Tribune hates McClellan, who is in league with the Democratic Party and, throughout the period in which he was COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF ALL THE ARMIES, prevented any action by intervening directly not only on the Potomac (where this may have been justified), but in every theatre of war, especially in the west. (He was also at the bottom of the highly infamous intrigue against Frémont.†388) Moreover, out of esprit de corps and a hatred of CIVILIANS, this same Mac has sheltered all the army's traitors, e.g., Colonel Maynard and General Stone. The latter's arrest took place a day or 2 after Clellan had been dismissed as COMMANDER IN CHIEF of all the armies. Similarly, the New York Herald's impudent 'REPRESENTATIVE'†b in Washington was arrested as a SPY against McClellan's wishes, having on the previous day entertained McC.'s entire STAFF to a champagne breakfast.
Page me41.345

You will recall my having told you from the start that nothing would come of the expectations regarding the China trade. This is confirmed by the latest BOARD OF TRADE report:†c

	1860 [£]	1861 [£]
China	2,872,045	3,114,157
Hong Kong	2,445,991	1,733,967
Total	5,318,036	4,848,124

Page me41.345

So, a decrease in total exports. More of them direct, fewer via Hong Kong. In the meantime, the Russians have seized another fine island off Korea.†d Add to this their new 'OCCUPATIONS' in Java,†e and their supremacy of the NORTHERN PACIFIC is assured.†389 The extent to which Pam's influence has russified the entire English press is borne out by its profound silence over Russia's PROGRESS in this area, ditto its passive attitude vis-á-vis Poland.

Page Break me41.346
Page me41.346

Apropos. Will you be so good as to let me know at long last what has become of the Lassalle†a that was intended for my cousin Philips,†b since, failing that knowledge, I am unable to write to the said cousin.
Page me41.346

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.346

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

204
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.346
Manchester, 5 March 1862

Dear Moor,

Enclosed POST OFFICE ORDER for £2, Camden Town.

Page me41.346

The book†a went off long ago, i.e. on 9 October, in a parcel to our agent E. Schröder in Amsterdam, and was enclosed in bale no. 118 for B. ter Haar and Son of that city. I enclosed a note to Schröder at the time, asking him to see to the thing. Everything was correctly addressed to your cousin,†c so all he can do, if he hasn't got it yet, is approach Schröder.

Page me41.346

You shall have the article.†387 The braggarts of the South are now getting a splendid thrashing. Most cheering of all is the reception met with everywhere by the gunboats on the Tennessee river as far up as Florence, Alabama (here the mussel shoals begin, disrupting navigation). So in west Tennessee, in the plains, the majority is also decidedly pro-Union. 15,000 prisoners, including Johnston, the Confederates' best general, who decided Bull Run by his rapid concentration on the centre, is no laughing matter.†390

Page me41.346

I shall be seeing Lupus this evening. If he can advance me something until 1 July, I shall get it for you. I myself shall be au sec†a until then. Should there be [no] peace or some other settlement in America, it may well be that my total income from 1 July 1861-62 will be reduced to £100 and I shall thus run into debt. We have a whole heap of goods and can't sell a thing and, if we are saddled with them until matters in America have been straightened out, we are likely to lose all the profit made up till the end of December.†385 However, I imagine the scrap will continue, for I don't see how the fellows can make peace.

Page Break me41.347

Page me41.347

What's this about a Russian island off Korea?†b And what's this about occupations in Java? (QUERY Japan?) Je n'en sais rien.†c How about the Free Presses?

Page me41.347

By the way, according to your figures, trade with China has surely increased significantly. 10 years ago, if I remember rightly, it alternated between 1 and 3 millions.
Page me41.347
How is little Jenny? Warm regards to her, your wife and Laura.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.347
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

205
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.347
[London,] 6 March 1862

Dear Frederick,
My best thanks for the POST OFFICE order and the wine. That swine Koller, who has an I.O.U. of mine, had already dunned me yesterday.†d
Page me41.347
I enclose herewith the 3 last Free Presses.†e I haven't yet seen Collet in person, but feel sure he will be able to get hold of the other numbers as well.
Page me41.347
In my letter to you, read Japan for Java.†f I obtained the actual FACTS from sundry numbers of the Tribune which contained the official Russian communiqués and reports from American consuls — all of them suppressed by the English press. I sent the relevant numbers to Urquhart and haven't yet got them back. I had previously used them for a Presse ARTICLE on the Russian advance in Asia. However, the jackasses didn't print it. Now, you know what a bad memory for names I've got. So, at the moment I can't provide you with the names. The first island†a lies exactly half way between the south-western extremity of Japan and the Korean mainland. It has a large harbour and, according to the American account, is capable of becoming a second Sevastopol.†b As regards the other islands that are actual Japanese possessions, one of them, if I am not mistaken, is called Jeso.†c However, I shall see if I can retrieve the documents.

Page Break me41.348
Page me41.348

Chinese trade, compared with what it was like up to 1852, has certainly increased, but by no means on the same scale as have all other markets since the Californian-Australian discoveries.†391 Moreover, in earlier REPORTS Hong Kong, as an English possession, is shown separately from China, so that exports under the heading 'China' invariably (from the 40s on) amount to less than total exports. Finally, the increment achieved since 1859 fell back in 1861 to its former level.
Page me41.348

In consequence of the American crisis, the BOARD OF TRADE report for 1861†d shows a considerable change in the ranking order of the various markets for English exports. India leads with £17,923,767 (including Ceylon and Singapore. India alone, £16,412,090).
Page me41.348

Second market Germany, normally 4th. 1860: £13,491,523. 1861: £12,937,073 (not including what goes via Holland and, to a lesser degree, via Belgium). In view of Germany's economic importance to England, what a diplomatic advantage it would give us, circumstances being different, over bluff John Bull!
Page me41.348

France this year the 5th market. 1860: £5,249,980. 1861: £8,896,282. However, that includes Switzerland as well. England, on the other hand, now ranks as the premier market for France.
Page me41.348

Out of the total exports of £125,115,133 (1861), £42,260,970 go to English 'POSSESSIONS' and 'COLONIES'. If one adds to that what England exports to other parts of Asia, Africa and America, there remains at most 23 to 24% for export to the countries of Europe.

Page Break me41.349
Should Russia continue to advance in Asia at the same rapid pace as during the past 10 years, until all her EFFORTS are concentrated on India, it will be the end of John Bull's world market, a demise that will be hastened by the United States's protective tariff policy, which that country will certainly be in no hurry to relinquish, if only out of REVENGE against John. Moreover, John Bull is discovering to his horror that his main colonies in North America and Australia are becoming protectionist to the same extent as he himself is becoming a FREE-TRADER.†392 The complacent, brutal stupidity with which John has acclaimed Pam's 'SPIRITED POLICY' in Asia and America, will one day cost him damned dear.
Page me41.349

To me it does not seem very PROBABLE that the SOUTHERNERS will have concluded peace by July 1862. When the NORTHERNERS have 1. secured the BORDER STATES — and it is upon these, in fact, that everything has centred from the start†a — and 2. the Mississippi as far as New Orleans and Texas, the war may well enter a 2nd phase during which the NORTHERNERS will make no great exertions of a military nature but, by isolating the GULF STATES,†339 finally bring them to the point of voluntary RE-ANNEXATION.
Page me41.349

During this war Bull has acted with what must be wholly unprecedented effrontery.†393
Page me41.349
In terms of brutality on the English side, the Mexican Blue Book†b exceeds anything previously known in history. Menshikov appears a GENTLEMAN compared with Sir C. Lennox Wyke. Not only does this blackguard evince the most immoderate zéle†c in the execution of Pam's secret instructions but, by his insolence, also seeks to avenge himself for the fact that, in the exchange of diplomatic dispatches, Señor Zamacona, the Mexican Foreign Minister (now resigned) and erstwhile journalist, invariably proves himself superior. As for the chap's style, herewith a few examples from his dispatches to Zamacona.

*'The arbitrary act of stopping all payments for the space of two years†394 is depriving the parties interested of their money for that space of time, which is a dead loss of so much value to them.' 'A starving man may justify, in his own eyes, the fact of stealing a loaf on the ground that imperious necessity impelled him thereto; but such an argument cannot, in a moral point of view, justify his violation of the law, which remains as positive, apart from all sentimentality, as if the crime had not had an excuse. If he was actually starving, he should have first asked the baker to assuage his hunger, but doing so' (starving?) 'of his own free will, without permission, is acting exactly as the Mexican government has done towards its creditors on the present occasion.' 'With regard to the light in which you view the question, as expressed in your above named note,†a you will excuse me for stating that it cannot be treated of partially, without also taking into consideration the opinions of those who directly suffer from the practical operation of such ideas as emanating from yourself.' 'I had a full right to complain ... of having first of all heard of this extraordinary measure ... by seeing it in printed bills placarded through the public streets....'†b

Page Break me41.350
Page me41.350
'I have a duty to perform both to my own Gvt. and to that to which I am accredited, which impels me...,' etc.†c
Page me41.350
'I suspend all official relations with the Government of this Republic until that of Her Majesty†d shall adopt such measures as they shall deem necessary.*'†e

Page me41.350
Zamacona writes and tells him that the INTRIGUES of FOREIGN DIPLOMATISTS in the past 25 years have been largely to blame for the TROUBLES in Mexico.†f Wyke replies that

'the population of Mexico is so degraded as to make them dangerous, not only to themselves, but to everybody coming into contact with them!'†g

Page me41.350

Zamacona writes, saying that the propositions he [Wyke] has made would put an end to the Republic's independence, and were incompatible with the dignity of any independent state.†h Wyke replies:

'Excuse me for adding that such a proposition as I have made to you does not necessarily become undignified and impracticable simply because you, an interested person.' (i.e., Foreign Minister of Mexico) 'are pleased to say so.'†i

Page me41.350
But satis superque.†j
Page me41.350
According to a letter from Schily to Rheinländer, things look most precarious in Paris and, unless there is war, Badinguet†163 cannot hold on for another year. What bad luck for the chap that he should have the Parisians to govern, and not the Berliners, who admire him.
Page me41.350
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.350
PS. 1. How do I translate GIGS into German?
2. What are FEEDERS ON CIRCULAR FRAMES?
3. Could you inform me of all the different types of workers employed, e.g., at your mill (all, that is, EXCEPT THE WAREHOUSE), and in what proportion to each other? For in my book†310 I need an example showing that, in mechanical workshops, the division of labour, as forming the basis of manufacture and as described by A. Smith, does not exist. The proposition itself has already been set forth by Ure.†a All that is needed is an example of some kind.

Page Break me41.351
Page me41.351
I must write and tell the chaps at the Presse that some new ARRANGEMENT will have to be made. It's all the same to me if they don't print the best articles (although I always write them in such a way that they can print them). But financially it's no go if, out of every 4 or 5 articles, they print 1 and only pay for 1. That places me far below the PENNY-A-LINERS.

Page me41.351
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

206
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.351
[Manchester, about 8 March 1862]

Dear Moor,

Encl. what I had promised. The second article will follow next week.†b I haven't seen Lupus yet; shall call on him this evening. The Free Presses and your letter have arrived.†c

Page me41.351

Do you know a Prussian refugee by the name of Sippel (Sippel),†d a mathematician? Apparently, the chap was tutor to a family by the name of Montgomery in Hampstead, was arrested before the amnesty†256 while travelling with this family in Prussia and not released until several months later, and is now said to be applying for a post as professor of mathematics at the University of Belfast. Someone up here wants to know more about the man, presumably in connection with some BUSINESS or other.

Page Break me41.352

Page me41.352

Telegrams should be addressed in future to: 7 South Gate St. Mary's Manchester.

Page me41.352

In haste.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.352
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

207
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.352
[London,] 15 March 1862

Dear Engels,

Because your article†a failed to arrive, I have been unable to write to New York today. My relations with the Tribune are no longer such that, if (assuming they print the article) I send them SOMETHING ELSE in place of the sequel, they will print it. Rather, I am convinced that they are on the point of giving me my congé again along with all the other European correspondents. Their format has been reduced. They print perhaps one article in 3 or none at all. These are the usual indications of such a procedure.

Page me41.352
So, let me have the sequel by Tuesday†b or better still, the conclusion, since it is only the conjectural part relating to the future that can be of any real interest to them.
Page me41.352
I'm not getting on very well with my book,†310 since work is often checked, i.e. suspended, for weeks on end by domestic disturbances. Little Jenny is still by no means as well as she should be.†c
Page me41.352
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.352
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.353
208
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.353
[London,] 28 April 1862

Dear Frederick,
My wife was discreet enough not to write to Dana. What the intention was is now unmistakably evident from the fact that the fellows don't even send me the Tribune any more.†395
Page me41.353
Enclosed letter from Friedländer. Arrived on Saturday.†a Fine ideas these Germans have. I am to send him an article on the opening [of the exhibition†344], which, with the SEASON TICKET needed to this end, the clothes I'd have to buy and sundry incidental expenses, would cost me at least 10 guineas — and, IN EXCHANGE, the prospect of selling a total of 4 to 6 articles á £8 (summa summarum†b), or, at very best, á £12. And, since one must always assume the minimum where these chaps are concerned, I should actually lose money on the 4 articles! I have written to tell him†42 that I am confined to my room and cannot therefore send off on Thursday the desired inaugural sermon but shall, from time to time, submit a few articles on the exhibition along with the other ones. So far as the 'other' articles are concerned, the cat is now out of the bag.†c 1 article per week (á £1), and even that is hedged about with somewhat hypothetical clauses. I must accept, of course, and have already accepted, since something is better than nothing at all. What the chaps are particularly interested in at the moment is America, and I should be grateful if you would send me an article (before the end of the week that is) on the progress of the war (I mean the battle of Corinth†396), and generally write to me from now on whenever military events take a new turn. If only to disseminate correct views on this important matter in the land of the Teutons. (I had already revised your earlier articles for them; were published, what's more.†d)

Page me41.353
In his new science, Vico says that Germany is the only country in Europe where an 'heroic tongue' is still spoken.†e Had he had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with the Vienna Presse or the Berlin National-Zeitung, the old Neapolitan would have abandoned this preconceived idea.

Page Break me41.354
Page me41.354
On arriving in London,†397 I found a letter from my LANDLORD, in which he said he would call today (28 April) in order to get the rest of the £20. However, he can't have a centime. During my month's absence, the list of debts relating to IMMEDIATE NECESSITIES has, of course, grown. In addition, there are 2 extra items that must be paid for and are even more urgent than the LANDLORD. Firstly, £7 for the piano MASTER since, CIRCUMSTANCES being what they are, my wife had to give him notice and hence must also pay him. Secondly, £10's worth must be redeemed from the pawn-shop, whither have departed not only the children's things but also those of the maids, right down to their boots and shoes. Because of the LANDLORD, I have so far remained incognito (excepto Borkheim), so that my wife may tell him that I have not yet returned and attempt to put him off indefinitely. For it's a question of SHIFTING.
Page me41.354
So far Borkheim has advanced £20; promises the remainder for the beginning of next week.†398
Page me41.354
My wife saw Dronke in the street with madame and offspring, but they didn't see her.
Page me41.354
As regards Ariadne, adhuc sub judice lis est.†a For the disputed point in this case is a legal one. In Diodorus†b she figures as a star. I don't find her shown as a constellation. Rather, indeed, as a planetoid, No. 43, Plate II, Mädler, latest issue, 5th Edition (which I have), Berlin 1861. So, at all events, the girl is in the firmament. As things stand, it is a nice legal point as to whether you or Lupus. have won. Your general contention that all those persons placed by the Greeks among the stars live on in the astronomical charts would also seem to be doubtful in the extreme.
Page me41.354
What was it you wanted besides the English army ESTIMATES? As soon as I am 'mobile' again, I shall see to the matter.
Page me41.354
Kinkel has departed with his tail between his legs. He makes no reply. Instead, a line or two from his man Beta in which the swine attests that it was only after 6 months' urging on his part that Gottfried let him have the necessary biographical notes (which, from time immemorial, the said swine has been using regularly every 2 years) and the photograph, etc., at the request of Keil, editor of the Gartenlaube. But the real joke is that, after the MacDonald affair,†296 Keil and Beta (Juch has the relevant letter written by the last named and Eichhoff has seen it) refused to proceed with the matter, and it was only with difficulty that Gottfried engineered the final 'set-to'.†399 However, I am writing to Eichhoff, instructing him to drop the matter for the time being, since otherwise he'll take the edge off Gottfried's defeat.†42 For Juch is too cowardly to come out with Beta's letter. Otherwise, he would have already done so of his own accord in a note appended to the latter's statement.

Page Break me41.355
Page me41.355
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.355
Little Jenny is still far from being her proper self.†a Our youngest†b has been seriously ill but is now recovered.
Page me41.355
You should read the enclosed excerpts from Urquhart.†c

Page me41.355
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

209
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†400
IN BERLIN
Page me41.355
London, 28 April 1862
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,
You'll be terribly angry with me, OLD BOY, and justifiably so, but, at the same time, with absolutely no justification. If I postponed writing to you from one day to the next, it was because I was hoping from one day to the next to put my affairs so far in order as to be able at least to pay off the £10 I owed you and, besides, write to you with an easy mind. Instead, the situation has grown worse every day. The Tribune, with which I had taken up again — though at 1/3 of my former income — has finally got rid of all its foreign correspondents. So, I now find myself in a complete vacuum. I have no intention of treating you to a tale of woe of any sort; it's a wonder I haven't actually gone mad. If I mention the beastly mess at all, it's simply so that my other misfortunes should not be compounded by a misunderstanding with you.

Page Break me41.356
Page me41.356

What you say about J. Ph. Becker in your last letter is absolutely wrong.†401 I.e., you don't know the man except from hearsay. He is one of the noblest German revolutionaries there has been since 1830, a man who can be reproached with nothing save an enthusiasm which fails to take account of circumstances. As for his connections with the Italians, a bosom friend of Orsini's†a has entrusted me with papers that leave no room for doubt on this score, whatever the Italians, and even Garibaldi, may say. As for his relationship with Türr — whom I had denounced over here in The Free Press even before 1859†402 — all it amounts to is this: During the Baden campaign†403 Becker made Türr a lieutenant. Hence a kind of comradely relationship. Had Becker intended to exploit this connection and accept the offers made him in Paris by Türr in the presence of one of my London friends,†b he would not have endured the martyrdom which he, a man of 60, is in fact enduring. I know full well the sources whence Becker has obtained his exiguous financial support. They are confined to people within our closest circle. True, he fell foul of some of the Italians because his strongly Teutonic sentiments caused him to reject certain well-intentioned plans. It is indeed exasperating that men of Becker's stamp should be so egregiously slandered.
Page me41.356

As for my book,†310 it won't be finished for another two months. During the past year, to keep myself from starving, I have had to do the most despicable hackwork and have often gone for months without being able to add a line to the 'thing'. And there is also that quirk I have of finding fault with anything I have written and not looked at for a month, so that I have to revise it completely. At all events, the work loses nothing thereby, and pro anno†c the German public has, after all, far weightier things to think about.
Page me41.356

Ad vocem†d your book†e which I have of course now quite finished, and individual chapters reread, it strikes me that you apparently haven't read Vico's 'new science'. Not that you'd have found anything in it immediately to your purpose; but it does provide a philosophical view of the spirit of Roman law, contrasting with that of the legal philistines. You would scarcely be able to work your way through the original, as it is not only written in Italian but in a very peculiar Neapolitan idiom.†a However, I commend the French translation, La Science nouvelle, etc.; traduite par l'auteur de l'essai sur la formation du dogme catholique. Paris, Charpentier, Editeur — 1844. To whet your appetite, I shall do no more than quote the following sentences:

Page Break me41.357

'L'ancien droit romain a été un poéme sérieux, et l'ancienne jurisprudence a été une poésie sévére dans laquelle se trouvent renfermés les premiers efforts de la métaphysique légale.' '...l'ancienne jurisprudence était trés poétique, puisqu'elle supposait vrais les faits qui ne l'étaient pas, et qu'elle refusait d'admettre comme vrais les faits qui l'étaient en effet; qu'elle considérait les vivans comme morts, et les morts comme vivans dans leurs héritages.' 'Les Latins nommérent heri les héros; d'oú vient le mot hereditas ... l'héritier ... représente, vis-á-vis de l'héritage, le pére de famille défunt.'†b

Page me41.357

Vico contains in embryo Wolf (Homer),†c Niebuhr (Römische Königsgeschichte),†d the fundamentals of comparative linguistics (even if in fanciful form) and a whole mass of really inspired stuff. So far, I have never been able to get hold of his legal writings proper.

Page me41.357

Under the circumstances in which I now find myself (and have found myself for the better part of a year) I shall not be able to do a critique of your book until BY AND BY. On the other hand, I should be grateful, not for my own sake, but for that of my wife, if, without a prior quid pro quo on my part, you could let Brockhaus advertise the first part of the political economy.

Page me41.357

Never have the English middle classes (and aristocracy) put their foot in it with such effrontery as during the great struggle that is taking place on the far side of the Atlantic. By contrast, the English WORKING CLASS, which suffers most from the bellum civile,†e has never before shown itself as heroic and noble. This is the more admirable when one knows, as I do, all the mechanisms that were set in motion, both here and in Manchester, to incite them to stage a demonstration.†404 The only major organ they still have, the Newspaper owned by that low-down scoundrel Reynolds,†a has been bought by the SOUTHERNERS, as have the most important of their LECTURERS. BUT ALL IN VAIN!

Page Break me41.358

Page me41.358

Varnhagen's book†b interested me a great deal and I can understand how timely its appearance was. On no account must you fail to congratulate Ludmilla about it on my behalf. Nevertheless, this has not raised Varnhagen in my esteem. I find him shallow, insipid and paltry and would ascribe his abhorrence of Counsellor to the Legation Kölle to the shock of encountering his own double.

Page me41.358

Please return the enclosed letter from the régicide Simon Bernard. Do you think I should get involved in the matter? I rather think not.

Page me41.358

My kindest regards to the Countess.†c She shall soon have a letter from me all to herself. I hope she has never allowed herself to be misled by trifles such as my omitting to write, nor ever doubted the lasting attachment and admiration I feel for her.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.358
First published in F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

210
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.358
Manchester, 5 May 1862

Dear Moor,

There was no end of trouble at the office last week, on top of which I didn't feel very well, hence didn't manage to write. Friedländer's magnanimous letter returned herewith. Those people have peculiar ideas of London!†d

Page Break me41.359
Page me41.359

As to the Tribune, I saw in the Manchester Examiner and Times' LITERARY GOSSIP an item to the effect that Dana is resigning from the Tribune 'ON ACCOUNT OF DIFFERENCES OF OPINION WITH MR HORACE GREELEY'. So, that old jackass WITH THE FACE ANGELIC seems to have been behind it all.†405 But I wouldn't let the fellows off just like that without at least writing to Dana, asking for further elucidation as to what it all means and who is now MANAGING the Tribune in his place, so that you know whom you are to have recourse to. If the chaps want to sever the connection, at least get them to say so; I wouldn't just tamely put up with indirect hints. If you were subsequently to go to another New York journal, they could always say that you were being disloyal to them. Besides, they must surely give a reason.
Page me41.359

Borkheim writes to say that he has paid the balance of the money, so I hope you will be saved from arrest.†a
Page me41.359

Ad vocem†b Ariadne, there's no doubt I'm right.†c All the old constellations still exist on the modern charts. What Diodorus maintains is not authoritative. The fellow wasn't an astronomer. Moreover, it was a question of the wording. I betted on constellation. But subsequently it struck me, too, that she figures among the recently discovered asteroids; that, however, has absolutely nothing to do with the case, of course.
Page me41.359

What I want besides the WAR DEPARTMENT ESTIMATES (for 1862) is a PAPER laid before Parliament which sets out the new organisation of the Indian native army (as it has existed since 1861) (i.e., the number of regiments with their old and new names and in what way these have been retained or renumbered).†d

Page me41.359

Can you send me The Free Press for April? I shall try and get hold of the May issue up here.
Page me41.359

As regards America:

1. Battle of Corinth.†396 May be classed with all well fought major modern battles, in which the antagonists have been of approximately equal strength. Eylau, Wagram, Lützen, Bautzen (admittedly the French were much stronger here, but, being without cavalry, they were incapable of pursuit), Borodino, Magenta, Solferino.†106 The battle, to use Clausewitz's words, smouldered away like damp powder, exhausting both sides, and, when it was over, the positive advantages gained by the victorious side were of a moral rather than a material nature.†e At all events, the momentary advantage gained by Beauregard on Sunday†a was more intensive and much greater than that gained by Grant and Buell on Monday. The bulk of the trophies went to the Confederates, even though they were ultimately beaten, i.e., compelled to forego their attack and withdraw. That is the tactical aspect. But the strategic one is this:

Page Break me41.360
Page me41.360

Beauregard had concentrated all the troops he could get hold of so as to pounce on the approaching Federal divisions, one by one when possible. This miscarried; the troops under Grant, Buell and Wallace were sufficient to repulse him. Had they lost this battle, the Federals would have lost Tennessee; now they have kept it. It was thanks only to the redoubts at Corinth that Beauregard was not at once compelled to move further south. Whether these earthworks are capable of protecting him from an attack by Halleck (who has now assumed command), there is no way of telling. No more can we credit the rumour that he has received massive reinforcements from Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama. If this is to some extent the case, they can certainly be nothing but raw recruits, who will be more of a hindrance to him than a help. On the other hand, the forces at Pittsburg Landing were so close to being evenly matched that, without reinforcements, Halleck, too, will find it difficult to carry out an assault on a fortified camp or undertake some other major offensive operation. We don't know what troops the Federals still have in Tennessee or Kentucky, other than those engaged at Pittsburg Landing, so it's hard to say what the odds are. In the meantime, the Unionists have cut the railway from Memphis to Chattanooga (i.e., to Richmond, Charleston, Savannah), both to the west as well as to the east of Corinth. Consequently, Beauregard is restricted to one railway (to Mobile and New Orleans), and the question arises whether his troops will be able to subsist in Corinth for any appreciable time.†407
Page me41.360

2. Virginia. Hero McClellan is IN A DEAD FIX. I think this will mark the passing of his spurious glory. He has had another division transferred to him from McDowell, but that won't help him much. All that can save him are the ironclads, yet another of which (the Galena) has sailed for Monroe. Concerning this topic, see today's Morning Star, American news; of great interest to Austria. You will also learn from it why, not long ago, the Monitor lay quietly at anchor when the Merrimac, the Yorktown, etc., seized the 3 transports. If they cleared the rivers to right and left and engaged the flanks and rear with their guns, these ships could once again save this jackass or traitor,†a in the same way as the gunboats at Pittsburg Landing saved Sherman (who had nothing but young troops, who had never been under fire before).

Page Break me41.361
Page me41.361
3. MOUNTAIN DEPARTMENT. Frémont is still at Wheeling, the result being that the mountainous portion of south Virginia as well as east Tennessee is still in enemy hands. I.e., the very best Union regions! Impossible to explain why. At all events, the Confederate regiment that was raised in Knoxville, Tennessee, as recently as the beginning of April, will doubtless go over at the first shot.
Page me41.361
Bonaparte is up to his tricks again in America. He'll take good care not to stir up that hornet's nest. Before the year was out (vide 'Morning Star'), his ironclads and likewise all French merchantmen would be gone from the ocean, and then farewell to pleasure!
Page me41.361
Apropos. You will have seen in today's Standard (or Morning Herald) that General Hecker has become chief NIGGER catcher (Manhattan†b). Be sure to keep the paper.
Page me41.361
What do you make of the Prussian elections? So colossal is the government's defeat that it's tantamount to a decisive victory for the same.†408 For it can only drive handsome William to extremes. Now they are sending him nothing but democrats! The Hamburger Correspondent†c as well is already saying that, under the present electoral law, there is nothing to be done and that it is impossible to govern. The worthy Twesten has already completely relapsed into parliamentary cretinism and wants to move a vote of no confidence in the ministers. At any rate, troubles are mounting, and the tide is rising.
Page me41.361
How is little Jenny placed for wine? Tell me which kinds Allen usually recommends. I can now send you some port as well, old, light, no spirits, which I highly recommend; but only after it has been well filtered, for the crust has loosened.
Page me41.361
Warm regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.361
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.362

211
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.362
[London,] 6 May [1862]

Dear Frederick,

As soon as you have shown it to Lupus, send back the enclosed, exceedingly odd letter, which was published, although mutilated, in the Siécle, the Temps and the Progrés de Lyon. by the jeunesse hongroise á Paris,†a and sent to me by Schily.†409 This same 'jeunesse' now proposes to let loose a pamphlet containing remarkable revelations about the Kossuth-Klapka-Türr triumvirate in Paris.

Page me41.362

Apropos. You might communicate the FACTS contained in the letter to Eichhoff, 57 Ranelagh Street, Liverpool. He can get the thing into the Zeitung für Norddeutschland (Hanover).

Page me41.362

A little while ago, so Schily writes, the Bern Bund†b (mightn't you be able to look this up at the Club?) carried a statement by a Hungarian refugee in which Vogt is called 'the Palais Royal's†410 fattened sow', while Fazy, Kossuth, Klapka, and Türr figure as 'scoundrels and gamblers'.

Page me41.362

I have got back 330 copies of Vogt†c from that blackguard Koller. If only I knew of an opening! Might this not be the moment to dispose of them at a 100 p.c. loss? I. e., in Geneva and Bern. How opportune that would be just now!

Page me41.362

I shall send you the April and May numbers of the Press.†d In future you shall have them regularly. I shall procure the other stuff for you, i.e. the ESTIMATES.

Page me41.362

AS TO WINE, what the children most prefer, of course, is a motley collection. I believe that, according to Allen, claret and port are best.

Page me41.362

I shall write to Dana again. I sorely miss their sending me the Tribune. This is a rotten trick of Greeley's and McElrath's. I discovered two things in the final March numbers of the Tribune. First, that McClellan had been fully informed a week beforehand about the withdrawal of the CONFEDERATES.†e Secondly, that during the Trent affair,†366 Russell of The Times was taking advantage of what he had ferreted out in Washington in order to gamble on the New York Stock Exchange.†a

Page Break me41.363

Page me41.363

In Prussia, things will get to the point of a coup d'état, not however to a coup d'éclat.†b

Page me41.363
The explanation for Bonaparte's present manoeuvres in Mexico†411 (the affair was originally of Pam's contriving) is that Juárez will acknowledge only the official debt of £46,000 to France. But Miramón and his gang had issued, through the Swiss bankers Jecker et Co., government bonds to the tune of 52,000,000 dollars (on which ABOUT 4 mill. dollars had been paid). These government bonds — Jecker et Co. merely hommes de paille†c — fell into the hands of Morny et Co. for next to nothing. They are demanding that Juárez acknowledge the same. Hinc illae lacrimae.†d
Page me41.363
Schurz is — a Brigadier-General with Frémont!!!

Your
K.M.

Page me41.363
Borkheim paid me the balance last Friday.†e

Page me41.363
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

212
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.363
Manchester, 12 May 1862

Dear Moor,
Herewith in all haste £10 (O/A 40602, Manchester, 24 Jan. 1862), with which to set the butcher's mind at rest. Since I arrive in London at 5 o'clock tomorrow morning and have to leave again at 7 in the morning, I shall not, alas, be able to meet you.

Page Break me41.364
Page me41.364
What makes me lose confidence in any success where the Yankees are concerned isn't so much the military situation as such, which is what it is only as a result of the indolence and indifference apparent throughout the North. Where, amongst the people, is there any sign of revolutionary vigour? They allow themselves to be thrashed and are downright proud of the lambasting they get. Where, throughout the North, is there the slightest indication that people are in real earnest about anything? I've never encountered the like of it before, not even in Germany at the worst of times. On the contrary, what the Yankees would already seem to relish above all else is the prospect of doing down their government creditors.

Page me41.364
Au revoir.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.364
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

213
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.364
[Manchester, about 18 May 1862]

Dear Moor,
You must excuse my not writing. Never have I been so overrun as I have this week. Austrians, backwoodsmen,†412 Frenchmen and, then, today, Borkheim is saddling me with his associé†a — a nice prospect! I no longer know whether I'm coming or going. And, on top of it all, one's expected to go drinking with the whole crew and make oneself agreeable. May the devil take the exhibition.†344
Page me41.364
In the greatest haste,
Your
F.E.

Page me41.364
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.365

214
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.365

[London,] 19 May 1862

Dear Engels,

A week ago last Thursday, you wrote saying you intended to send some wine for little Jenny and Co.†413 I showed the children your letter. The wine failed to arrive so they were disappointed. I attach importance to it just now because it's a distraction for them, and the house is otherwise very forlorn.

Page me41.365

Nothing could be worse than the kind of oppressiveness which now broods over the whole place.

Page me41.365

Luckily, I have neither heard nor seen anything of the EXHIBITION†344 or its visitors, and hope that this 'immunity' will continue, since I am now in no position to entertain PEOPLE.

Page me41.365

As soon as you have a moment to spare, let me know briefly what you think of the military operations in the UNITED STATES, particularly McClellan's deeds of derring-do.

Page me41.365

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.365
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

215
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.365
Manchester, 23 May 1862

Dear Moor,

The wine was delayed for the same reason as the letter. In such matters I have to attend to everything myself and, before getting to the stage of buying the hamper, etc., I'm frequently distracted.

Page Break me41.366
I have had to dispense with port on this occasion too, since it is at my lodgings and I wasn't able to get it sent over to the WAREHOUSE. The hamper is leaving today. The red wine and 1846 Hochheimer are specially for little Jenny. The 3 bottles with the red seal and no label are 1857 Rüdesheimer (the same as we drank up here); too stimulating for invalids, though excellent for those in good health.

Page me41.366

Strohn was here (as you can see, cela ne finit pas with these visits†a). He was in Berlin shortly before the dissolution†408 and indulged in much carousing with the Rhenish deputies. The fellows took the whole situation tremendously seriously, trusted in their omnipotence, and have relapsed into parliamentary cretinism almost as felicitously as at any time in 1848.†414 Red Becker,†b whose hair has become much paler in the meantime, trotted round all day in EVENING DRESS, black from top to toe, and a dress-coat. His paunch is fatter than ever. Mr Rudolf Schramm, LATE OF Striegau,†415 was also gadding about there and complaining to all who would listen to him that nowhere did the public wish to elect him, which was beyond his comprehension. One evening Schramm was talking some colossal rubbish about England, whereupon Strohn said to him: 'Now listen, Mr Schramm, if I'd been in England as long as you, I'd be ashamed to talk such nonsense; you must have been asleep the whole time you were there.' Whereat Schramm, usually so insolent, replied: 'In England, you know, I was compelled, on account of my wife, to mix with company where I was not in my element and, for that very reason, couldn't see the people I should like to have seen!!!'
Page me41.366

McClellan is carrying on in his familiar manner. The Confederates always give him the slip because he never makes straight for them, his excuse being that they are A GOOD DEAL stronger than he is. That is why they keep on running away. Never before has a war been waged like this, in return for which he will get his vote of thanks. In the meantime, these wretched little rearguard actions and the constant desertions are certainly enough to demoralise the Confederates severely, and, if it comes to a decisive battle, they'll find this out.
Page me41.366

The capture of New Orleans was a daring feat on the part of the navy.†416 Quite outstanding — the passage of the forts, especially. Afterwards everything was simple. The moral effect on the Confederates was obviously enormous, and the material effect will already have made itself felt. Beauregard in Corinth now has nothing left to defend; the position had served a purpose only so long as it protected Mississippi and Louisiana, particularly New Orleans. Strategically, Beauregard has been put in a position where one lost battle will leave him no alternative but to disband his army and employ them as guerrillas, for without a large city in the rear of his army as a focal point of railways and resources, he cannot marshal massed bodies of men.

Page Break me41.367
Page me41.367

If the Confederate army is beaten in Virginia, it must, after the demoralising incidents of the past, quickly disband of its own accord and operate as guerrillas. Admittedly, its prospects are better, because the numerous rivers run from the mountains to the sea athwart its line of withdrawal, and also because it is facing that jackass McClellan; however, it is in the nature of things that it will be forced either to accept a decisive battle or to split up into bands without a battle. Just as the Russians were compelled to fight at Smolensk and Borodino†417 against the will of the generals who had judged the situation correctly.

Page me41.367

If Beauregard, or the army of Virginia, wins a battle, however big, it can be of little help. The Confederates are not in a position to derive the slightest benefit from it. They can't advance 20 English miles without getting stuck and hence must await a fresh attack. They lack everything. Incidentally, I regard such an eventuality as quite impossible without outright treachery.
Page me41.367

So, the fate of the Confederate armies now hangs on one single battle. We have still to examine the prospects for guerrilla warfare. Now, it is exceedingly surprising that in this of all wars the part played by the population should have been not so much small as non-existent. In 1813, French communications were repeatedly disrupted and harassed by Colomb, Lützow, Chernyshev and a score of other leaders of irregulars and Cossacks; in 1812, in Russia, the population vanished completely from the French line of march; in 1814 the French peasants took up arms and killed allied patrols and stragglers, but here nothing whatever is happening. They abide by the outcome of the big battles and console themselves with victrix causa diis, etc.†a All that boasting about a war to the knife has turned out to be just rubbish. And how can guerrillas be expected to fare on such a terrain? I certainly anticipate that the WHITE TRASH of the South†418 will try something of the sort after the final disbandment of the armies, but I'm too convinced of the bourgeois nature of the planters to doubt for one instant that this would at once turn them into rabid pro-Unionists. Just let those others make an attempt at BRIGANDAGE and the planters everywhere will receive the Yankees†312 with open arms. The BONFIRES along the Mississippi may be attributed solely to the 2 chaps from Kentucky who are said to have arrived in Louisville — certainly not by the Mississippi. The fire in New Orleans was easily organised and will be repeated in other cities; elsewhere, too, a great deal will undoubtedly be burnt down, but the affair must inevitably bring to a head the SPLIT between the planters and the merchants on the one hand, and the WHITE TRASH on the other, and then it will be all up with secession.

Page Break me41.368
Page me41.368

The fanatical support for the Confederation among the New Orleans merchants is accounted for simply by the fact that the fellows had to accept a mass of CONFEDERATION SCRIPS in exchange for cash. I know of several examples here. This should not be forgotten. A good, big forced loan is a splendid means of shackling the bourgeois to the revolution and diverting them from their class interests by way of their personal interests.
Page me41.368

Kindest regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.368

Lupus was again suffering badly from gout. He is going to Germany in 5 weeks' time.
Page me41.368
You must surely have read that thing about Bernard saying that they have put him into a lunatic asylum?†a Is the affair above-board or is there some suggestion of FOUL PLAY?

Page me41.368
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.369

216
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.369
[London,] 27 May 1862

Dear Frederick,
The children and the WHOLE FAMILY send you their best thanks for the spirituous hamper.
Page me41.369
In Eichhoff's letter enclosed herewith, you will find, recaptured to the life, the kind of polemics beloved of Parson Kinkel. Where would Gottfried be without his piss-a-bed!†a
Page me41.369
I may not have written to tell you yet that Dr Klein in Cologne has won 35,000 talers in the Prussian lottery; he will now probably marry Mrs Daniels, provided he hasn't changed his mind.
Page me41.369
It's quite true that Bernard, always very eccentric and having in any case overworked during the past few weeks, has become subject to 'hallucinations'. The only UNFAIR thing about it is that this was instantly seized upon as an opportunity to put him away, which was quite unnecessary since the family in Dorking to whom he was tutor was prepared to look after and assume responsibility for him. Ditto Allsop. But the presence of the latter, who had provided the money for Orsini's assassination attempt,†419 and his renewed intercourse with Bernard, had long been worrying Bonaparte's police, at whose request the English police had long been keeping an eye on Bernard.
Page me41.369

Last Saturday†b I received from my Gas Company a summary demand that I pay them £1 10/- before next Saturday, failing which (it's a final notice) I shall be 'cut off'. Since I am now sans sou,†c I am forced in this mess to turn to you.
Page me41.369

The blowing up of the Merrimac seems to me a clear indication of cowardice on the part of the Confederate swine.†420 The curs might still have hazarded another throw. It's truly marvellous how The Times (which backed all the anti-Irish COERCION BILLS†421 with such intense enthusiasm) is now lamenting that 'liberty' will be lost should the North tyrannise over the South.†d The Economist is no less pleasing. In the last issue, it declares that it finds the financial good fortune of the YANKEES — the non-depreciation of their paper money — incomprehensible (although the thing is as plain as a pikestaff).†a Up till then it had, for week after week, consoled its readers with talk of such depreciation. Although it now admits to not understanding what it should know about ex officio and hence to having misled its readers on the subject, it presently consoles them with gloomy reflections on the 'military operations', of which it officially understands nothing.

Page Break me41.370
Page me41.370

What made paper operations exceptionally easy for the YANKEES†422 (given the main factor — confidence in their cause and hence in their government) was undoubtedly the circumstance that, as a result of secession, the West was virtually stripped of paper money, i.e. of a CIRCULATING MEDIUM generally. All the banks whose principal SECURITIES consisted in BONDS issued by the SLAVE STATES, went bankrupt. In addition, there was a drain of CURRENCY amounting to MILLIONS which had circulated in the West in the form of actual bank notes issued by the SOUTHERN BANKS. Then, partly as a result of the Morrill Tariff†423 and partly as a result of the war itself, which had largely put a stop to the import of luxury goods, throughout the whole period the YANKEES had a favourable balance of trade, and hence rate of exchange, vis-á-vis Europe. An unfavourable rate of exchange might have gravely affected the philistines' patriotic confidence in paper.
Page me41.370

How absurd, by the by, is John Bull's concern over the interest UNCLE SAM will have to pay on the national debt! As though it weren't a bagatelle by comparison with Bull's national debt, besides which the UNITED STATES is now undoubtedly richer than were the BULLS in 1815, with their debt of a milliard.
Page me41.370

Hasn't Pam got Bonaparte into a fine old mess in Mexico?†424
Page me41.370

I have now — if only out of DESPERATION — really put my nose to the grindstone and am writing away for dear life — at the political economy I mean.†310
Page me41.370

I article a week is coming out in the Presse. That, in fact, is all I send them, in accordance with Mr Friedländer's letter.†b
Page me41.370

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.370
My regards to MRS BORTMAN AND SISTER.†425

Page me41.370
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.371

217
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.371
Manchester, 29 May 1862

Dear Moor,
Herewith the POST OFFICE ORDER for £2, payable Kentish Town, which, if I'm not mistaken, is the office closest to you.
Page me41.371
Siebel has been blessed with a baby daughter.
Page me41.371
Anneke is with Buell's Army and, as from today, will be writing for the Augsburg paper.†a I feel somewhat anxious about Halleck's troops; the thing's been dragging on so long and he would not seem to be getting any reinforcements after all,†426 although Spence's lies in The Times certainly do not mean anything.†b Willich is colonel (THE ETERNAL COLONEL!) commanding the 32nd Indiana Regiment.
Page me41.371
As for the business of Klein,†c I am heartily glad for his sake, poor devil. I'll return Eichhoff's letter to you as soon as I've read it to Lupus, but I can't go and see him at the moment, as I have a swollen tonsil, which has kept me at home these past few evenings.
Page me41.371
It now seems as though some kind of guerrilla warfare has started up after all, but certainly nothing of any significance and, should there be just one victory, reinforcements will move up together with some cavalry and soon put paid to the thing. A defeat might well prove disastrous.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.371
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.372

218
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.372
Manchester, 4 June 1862

Dear Moor,

I hope you got the POST OFFICE ORDER for £2 I sent off last Friday on Kentish Town POST OFFICE.†a

Page me41.372

So, at last we learn from Anneke's letter that on 26 April Halleck had rather more than 100,000 men and 300 cannon incl. Pope and Mitchel, and that he was awaiting the arrival of Curtis and Sigel with further reinforcements. Up till 29 April the state of the army appears to have been passable on the whole, nor does Anneke say anything about sickness. Hence, I consider the talk of sickness to be pure invention. Still, one is bound to admit that Stanton and Halleck have a way of making both press and public mistrustful; it should actually be easy enough to have one correspondent with each army who would write what the general tells him so that the public at any rate can get some sort of news.

Page me41.372

The big battle, then, will doubtless be fought as soon as Sigel and Curtis arrive. Spence's estimate that 120,000 men are needed to keep the BORDER STATES in order is ludicrous;†b in Kentucky hardly a man would appear to be under arms (apart, perhaps, from the recruits at the training camp at Louisville, from whom Sigel's corps will doubtless be formed) and in Nashville, according to Anneke, there are nothing but convalescents, etc.; otherwise, apart from Halleck's and McClellan's armies, the only ones still remaining in the BORDER STATES are Frémont (who apparently has no army at all yet), Banks (who must be very short of men) and McDowell, though they all count as part of the regular army. However, Spence errs in the other direction, 1. at this moment the armies of the FEDERALS certainly do not amount to a total of 500,000 men, 2. they have undoubtedly allocated more than 90,000 to the coast. My rough estimate is as follows:

On the coast 100,000 men
Banks & Frémont 30,000 “

Page Break me41.373

Sigel & Curtis 30,000 men
McClellan 80,000 “
At Washington 30,000 “
McDowell 30,000 “
Halleck 100,000 “

Hence a total of 400,000 men in the field, to which should be added approx. 60,000 recruits, convalescents and small detachments who are probably dispersed about Missouri, along each bank of the lower Ohio and Tennessee, and partly among the cities of the North-East; summa summarum 460,000 men. I am confirmed in this by the new draft of 50,000 men which will be followed very shortly by another of equal size; evidently, the intention is to maintain the army at its normal strength of 500,000 men.
Page me41.373

It was a colossal blunder on Stanton's part, and sheer boastfulness, to put a stop to recruiting. Materially, it has done a great deal of harm and was the cause of all that waste of time at Corinth and Richmond; and morally the present revocation will do even more harm — aside from the fact that it will now be much more difficult to get recruits. It's not as though there weren't plenty of men available; as a result of immigration, the Northern States must have, in terms of total population, at least 3-4% more men aged between 20 and 35 than any other country.
Page me41.373

In other respects in his letters Monsieur Anneke appears to be the same grumpy old FAULTFINDER and knowall he always was, who judges the army, not in accordance with circumstances or even the enemy, but rather with the old, trained European armies and not even these as they are, but as they ought to be. The blockhead would do well to reflect on the confusion he himself must have experienced often enough during manoeuvres in Prussia.
Page me41.373

The comedy in Berlin is getting very funny indeed. The ministry assures the Chamber of its liberalism and the Chamber assures the King of its royalism. Embrassez-vous et que cela finisse!†427 In other respects, it is undoubtedly a sign of progress that people are getting so nicely and so rapidly embroiled in parliamentary intrigue; however, there'll be a conflict all right. Very fine, too, that nothing came of the whole Hesse-Cassel affair until the Elector†a had personally insulted handsome William,†b whereupon it really did come to nothing.†428

Page Break me41.374
Page me41.374

How is little Jenny getting on?
Page me41.374

Warm regards to your wife and the children. Eichhoff's thing†a returned herewith.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.374

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

219
ENGELS TO CARL SIEBEL
IN BARMEN
Page me41.374
Manchester, 4 June 1862

Dear Siebel,

You're a fine one, you are, notifying me of your daughter's birth after the same fashion as I [use] to acknowledge your various letters and packages. My heartiest congratulations. I hope you'll have a lot of fun with her. Is your wife all right?

Page me41.374

Here things trundle along as always. All the same, I'm gradually beginning to notice how demoralising this quiet routine is; one is drained of all one's energy and becomes thoroughly indolent. I even read another novel recently.

Page me41.374

The so-called — salva venia†b — Schiller Institute†429 (also known as the Jerusalem Club) has become a purely Jewish institution and, between 1:30 and 3, the din there is enough to drive one out of one's mind. In fact, I very seldom visit the noble institution now. What's happening is typically Jewish. To start off with they thank God for having a Schiller Institute, and barely are they installed than, apparently, it's not good enough for them, and they want to put up a large building, a veritable temple of Moses, and to move the thing there. That, of course, is the shortest road to bankruptcy. And it's for that you had to write a prologue and act as producer! And that's what they call a German national institution! Mark my words, in a couple of years you'll be sent a circular: 'Re the bankruptcy of the late Schiller Institute', etc.

Page Break me41.375

Page me41.375

'Re' your letters, let me reply very briefly as follows. So far as the affair with Marx is concerned, he would certainly not have turned to you if my resources hadn't already been exhausted, as was indeed the case, which meant that I could do nothing just then. As for red Becker (whose pamphlet†a was of great interest to me, partly because it contains a RECANTATION of his former 'wild' opinions, and also because the Prussian government has forcibly turned the chap into a local bigwig again, and hence into a Deputy), the fellow is no immediate concern of ours. He has never belonged to our party as such, has always been a mere democrat, and he only became involved in the business of the Communist trial in Cologne†2 because he regarded the affair as an opportunity for agitation. In fact, during the trial he disassociated himself completely from the rest of the accused and enjoyed a special position. Since then he has avowedly become a royal Prussian democrat, has come out in favour of the monarchy, etc. So, politically we have no connections whatever with the man, which would not, of course, preclude my being on a personally friendly footing with him until such time as we came into direct political conflict with his people. He will do well enough for the present Prussian Chamber.

Page me41.375

I believe that, when I was in Barmen,†354 I mentioned to you a little Danish folk-song I had discovered in the Kjämpeviser and had translated into German verse specially for your benefit.†430 I enclose it. Unfortunately, I wasn't able to do anything like justice to the lively, defiantly cheerful tone of the original — it's the liveliest I know. However, you'll have to content yourself with the translation (almost literal, by the way). I don't think the thing has been translated into German before.
Page me41.375

Please convey my compliments and good wishes to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.375
First published in the Deutsche Zeitung, No. 473, 16 October 1920

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.376

220
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.376
[London, about 6 June 1862]

Dear Engels,

You will forgive me for not acknowledging the £2 before now. During the past week, I have been so BOTHERED that I couldn't find time. The LANDLORD and half a dozen other monsters kept me RUNNING.
Page me41.376

Herewith 2 COPIES of the Lassalle†a (1 for you, 1 for Lupus). Write and tell me what you think of it.
Page me41.376

Have had a letter from Steffen, will send it to you within the next few days, as soon as I've answered it. He is in Boston. Seems very much depressed. Weydemeyer is a LIEUTENANT COLONEL.
Page me41.376

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.376
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

221
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†67
IN BERLIN
Page me41.376
[London,] 16 June 1862

Dear Lassalle,
Bucher has indeed sent me 3 Julian Schmidts,†a but none of the other works you mention.†b Mr Schmidt, Mr Schmidt (of which I have sent Engels and Wolff†c the copies intended for them) was all the more welcome to me for arriving at a time when I was feeling far from cheerful. Moreover, although I had only read, or rather leafed through, very little of Schmidt's stuff, I have at heart always detested the chap as the quintessence of MIDDLE-CLASS SNOBBISM, no less revolting in literature than elsewhere. As you rightly intimate, your attack is aimed indirectly at the MIDDLE-CLASS cultural vulgarians. Here it's a case of aiming at the donkey blows intended for the driver.†a Since we can't for the present actually 'CROP' the driver's ears for him, it increasingly behoves us to slice the heads off the noisiest and most pretentious of his cultural donkeys — with our pens, notwithstanding POOR Meyen who, in the Freischütz, found 'this literary playing at guillotines' as puerile as it was barbaric.†b What especially tickled me was the Schwabenspiegel and the 'seven wise men' — I almost said 'seven Swabians' — of Greece.†431 Incidentally — since in the case of Julian Schmidt, Julian the Grabovite†432 (which is unjust, because it looks like a blow aimed at the Apostate,†c or, at any rate, casts SOME RIDICULE on the other Julian), one may permit oneself to digress — I was at one time greatly interested in the sofoVsophos†d as the mask peculiar to Greek philosophy (using mask here in the best sense). First, we have the seven Swabians or wise men as FORERUNNERS, mythological heroes, next, in the middle, Socrates, and finally, the sofoVsophos as the ideal of the Epicureans, Stoics, and sceptics.†433 I derived further amusement from drawing a comparison between this sofoVsophos and what is (IN SOME RESPECTS) his caricature, the French 'sage' of the 18th century. And then the sofisthVsophistës†e as a necessary variant of the sofoVsophos. It is typical of the moderns that the Greek combination of character and knowledge implicit in the sofoVsophos has survived in popular consciousness solely in the form of sophists.

Page Break me41.377

Page me41.377

Julian — not Julian the Grabovite, but Julian the Apostate — was the cause of a recent brush I had with Engels who, as I was already aware when the dispute began, was essentially in the right. But so specific is my aversion to Christianity that I have a predilection for the Apostate and do not like to see him identified either with Frederick William IV or with any other romantic reactionary, not even mutatis mutandis.†f Don't you feel the same?
Page me41.377

Your admonition as to Rodbertus and Roscher reminded me that I still had notes to make from and about both.†434 As regards the Rodbertus,†a I failed to do it justice in my first letter to you.†b There's really much in it that is good. Except that his attempt to produce a new theory of rent is almost puerile, comical. For he would have us believe that, in agriculture, raw materials are not taken into account because — the German farmer, or so Rodbertus maintains, does not himself regard seed, fodder, etc., as expenditure, does not take these production costs into account, i.e., he reckons wrong. In England, where the FARMER has been reckoning correctly for over 150 years now, rent ought not, therefore, to exist. Hence the conclusion would not be that drawn by Rodbertus, namely that the tenant pays rent because his RATE of profit is higher than in industry, but rather because, in consequence of his wrong reckoning, he contents himself with a lower RATE of profit. This one example, by the by, suffices to show me how the partial under-development of German economic conditions necessarily tends to confuse people. Ricardo's theory of rent as it now stands is undoubtedly false, but every objection that has been raised against it is either due to a misunderstanding of it or at best demonstrates that certain phenomena do not, prima facie,†c tally with Ricardo's theory. Now, this latter fact in no way discounts a theory. On the other hand, the positive theories that set out to refute Ricardo are vastly more false. Puerile though Mr Rodbertus's positive solution may be, it does, nevertheless, tend in the right direction, but to go into that here would take too long.

Page Break me41.378
Page me41.378

As regards the Roscher, it will be some weeks before I can sit down with the book†d beside me and write any comments on it. I shall reserve this fellow for a note. Such professorial schoolboys have no place in the text. Roscher undoubtedly has a considerable — and often quite useless — knowledge of literature, although even here I seem to discern the Göttingen alumnus†e rummaging uneasily through literary treasures and familiar only with what might be called official, RESPECTABLE literature. But that's not all. For what avails me a fellow who, even though he knows the whole of mathematical literature, yet understands nothing of mathematics? And so complacent, self-important, tolerably well-versed, eclectic a dog, too! If only such a professorial schoolboy, by nature totally incapable of ever doing more than learn his lesson and teach it, of ever reaching the stage of teaching himself, if only such a Wagner†a were, at least, honest and conscientious, he could be of some use to his pupils. If only he didn't indulge in spurious evasions and said frankly: 'Here we have a contradiction. Some say this, others that. The nature of the thing precludes my having an opinion. Now see if you can work it out for yourselves!' In this way his pupils would, on the one hand, be given something to go on and, on the other, be induced to work on their own account. But, admittedly, the challenge I have thrown out here is incompatible with the nature of the professorial schoolboy. An inability to understand the questions themselves is essentiellement†b part and parcel of him, which is why his eclecticism merely goes snuffling round amidst the wealth of set answers; but, here again, not honestly, but ALWAYS WITH AN EYE TO THE PREJUDICES AND THE INTERESTS OF HIS PAYMASTERS! A stonebreaker is RESPECTABLE by comparison with such canaille.

Page Break me41.379

Page me41.379

Ad vocem†c Toby. If you believe you can use Toby Meyen, then use him. Only don't forget that the company of a dunderhead can be very compromising unless great precautions be taken.
Page me41.379

We are, indeed, but few in number — and therein lies our strength.
Page me41.379

We shall all be very glad to see you over here. It will greatly please my family, not to mention myself, as they hardly ever see a 'human being' now that my English, German and French acquaintances all live outside London. I haven't seen Mario. No doubt friend 'Blind' warned him against visiting 'such a dreadful person'.
Page me41.379

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.379
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III. Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.380

222
MARX TO ENGELS†435
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.380
[London,] 18 June 1862

Dear Engels,

The idea of pouring out my misére to you again sickens me, but que faire†a? Every day my wife says she wishes she and the children were safely in their graves, and I really cannot blame her, for the humiliations, torments and alarums that one has to go through in such a situation are indeed indescribable. As you know, the £50 went on debts, more than half of which remain to be paid.†398 The £2 on gas. The wretched money from Vienna won't arrive till the end of July, and then there'll be damned little of it, since the swine aren't even printing 1 article a week now. To that must be added the fresh expenditure since the beginning of May. I won't say anything about what, in London, is the truly parlous situation of being without a centime for 7 weeks — since for us it is a chronically recurring state of affairs. But from your own experience, you will at any rate know that, all the time, there are current expenses that have to be paid in cash. This has been done by putting back in pawn the stuff that had been redeemed at the end of April. But that source was exhausted weeks ago, so much so that, a week ago, my wife attempted to sell some books of mine 'in vain'. I feel all the more sorry for the unfortunate children in that all this is happening during the EXHIBITION SEASON,†344 when their friends are having fun, whereas they themselves live in dread lest someone should come and see them and realise what a mess they are in.

Page me41.380

For the rest, I myself, by the by, am working away hard and, strange to say, my grey matter is functioning better in the midst of the surrounding misére than it has done for years. I am expanding this volume,†310 since those German scoundrels estimate the value of a book in terms of its cubic capacity. Incidentally, another thing I have at last been able to sort out is the shitty rent business (which, however, I shall not so much as allude to in this part).†434 I had long harboured MISGIVINGS as to the absolute correctness of Ricardo's theory, and have at length got to the bottom of the swindle.†a Again, since we last saw each other, I've hit on one or two pleasing and surprising novelties in connection with what's already going into this volume.

Page Break me41.381

Page me41.381

I'm amused that Darwin,†b at whom I've been taking another look, should say that he also applies the 'Malthusian' theory to plants and animals, as though in Mr Malthus's case†c the whole thing didn't lie in its not being applied to plants and animals, but only — with its geometric progression — to humans as against plants and animals. It is remarkable how Darwin rediscovers, among the beasts and plants, the society of England with its division of labour, competition, opening up of new markets, 'inventions' and Malthusian 'struggle for existence'. It is Hobbes' bellum omnium contra omnes†d and is reminiscent of Hegel's Phenomenology,†e in which civil society figures as an 'intellectual animal kingdom', whereas, in Darwin, the animal kingdom figures as civil society.

Page me41.381

Buckle has played a trick on Ruge by dying. In his imagination, Ruge had envisaged another library to be written by Buckle and 'transposed' into German by Ruge. POOR Ruge! And POOR Buckle who, this very day, is traduced by a 'friend' in a testimonium pietatis†f in The Times.†g

Page me41.381

Have you and Lupus received the 2 Julian Schmidts†h I sent off?

Page me41.381

Apropos. If it could be done very briefly, without making undue demands on you, I should like to have a sample of Italian book-keeping (with explanations). It would help to throw light on Dr Quesnay's Tableau Économique.†436

Page me41.381

No one comes to see me, and I'm glad of it, for I don't give a ..... for the sort we have here. A fine crew!

Page me41.381

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.382

Page me41.382

I've heard from Lassalle. He may come over here in July. In the late autumn he will make a start on the initial draft of his 'Political Economy', which, however, is going to take him a 'long time'. He's in for a surprise.

Page me41.382

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

223
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.382

[Manchester, about 3 July 1862]

Dear Moor,

Since the new financial year has begun and I shall not have to pay back the £50 to Borkheim†398 for a fortnight or so, we can repeat our recent coup de main. You will find herewith I/Q 86445. Ten pounds, Manchester, 31 Jan. 1861. Bank of England note. The second half tomorrow.

Page me41.382

The speculation on the cotton market and the consequent daily rise in prices has kept me so busy that I don't know whether I'm coming or going. I shall write as soon as I have time.

Page me41.382

How is little Jenny?

Your
F.E.

Page me41.382
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

224
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.382
[London,] 5 July [1862]

Dear Engels,
Best thanks for the £10 of which pars I†a arrived today.
Page me41.382
I hear that Mr Gumpert was down here; didn't come to see me. WELL, I SHALL TRY TO DO WITHOUT HIM.

Page Break me41.383
Page me41.383
Herewith 1 Press†a and two very clever 'talks' by Lassalle.†b
Page me41.383
The enclosed letter from Lassalle was brought me by the Austrian 'Captain (retd.)' Schweigert, a worthy, stupid fellow. The joke is that Rüstow — with the added support of 2 Rüstow brothers — has proposed or is proposing so to use the National Association,†24 the Gymnastic Association, etc., as to have, at the crucial moment — in the smaller German states, at least — a ready-made militia commanded by Mr Rüstow to pit against the army. It's a damn silly plan. And, on top of that, the money for it is to come from London! I don't believe Lassalle shares these DELUSIONS. All he wants is to make himself seem important in the eyes of Schweigert, etc.
Page me41.383
I hope that you, at any rate, will come to London IN THE COURSE OF THE SEASON. Little Jenny is no longer unwell, but has grown more delicate than her constitution warrants. Whatever happens, by the by, we must manage to arrange sea-bathing for her.
Page me41.383
Is Lupus in Germany by now?†437
Page me41.383
What is the position with regard to the 'ASSOCIATES' of the BRITISH ASSOCIATION?†353 Are the old cards still valid? Lupus has got mine.
Page me41.383
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.383
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

225
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.383
[London,] 11 July [1862]

Dear Engels,
Lassalle has been here for the past 2 days and proposes to stay for several weeks. Now, you really ought to come down for a few days, seeing that he is in any case much 'OFFENDED' by the failure on your and Wolff's part ever to acknowledge receipt of his writings. Anyway, you had intended to spend a few days visiting the EXHIBITION.†344

Page Break me41.384
Page me41.384
If this letter is somewhat scanty, it's because I'm working like a Trojan on the book.†310
Page me41.384
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.384
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

226
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.384
[London,] 21 July [1862]

Dear Engels,

Have been to see Freiligrath, was ALL RIGHT.†438

Page me41.384

Izzy — whose vanity would tickle you immensely — is leaving next week. Come on Friday†a if you can. Reinhardt, who has become a commerçant,†b also came to see us yesterday.

Page me41.384

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.384

What do you think of McClellan?†c

Page me41.384
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.385

227
ENGELS TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN LONDON
Page me41.385
Manchester, 23 July 1862

Dear Lassalle,

I should have written to you long since and thanked you for the many packages you have been kind enough to send me. I resolved to do so often enough over the past 18 months, but have been so taken up with doux commerce†a that my private correspondence with all and sundry is badly in arrears. Now I hear you are in London and I would have liked to have come down last Saturday, but simply could not get away. I presently cherish a similar plan in respect of Friday†b evening, but cannot yet say for certain whether I shall be able to carry it out. If at all possible, it shall be done, in which case I shall telegraph Marx at midday on Friday. But if it proves impossible, why shouldn't you come up here on Friday evening or Saturday morning and spend a few days taking a look at the home of cotton? Then we could also slip over to Liverpool which is well worth the trouble, especially since you are concerning yourself with political economy. There's a room in my lodgings at your disposal. It only takes you 5 1/2 hours to get here.

Page me41.385
So, think the matter over and, if I should be unable to take Saturday off, you can decide on the spur of the moment, leave London at 9 o'clock on Saturday morning, and be here by 2.45. We shall then be able to discuss everything else by word of mouth — either here or there.
Page me41.385
In the meantime, cordial regards from

Yours,
F. Engels

Page me41.385
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.386

228
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.386
Manchester, 30 July 1862

Dear Moor,
I was very sorry not to have been able to come on Friday.†a Apart from anything else, I had more or less fallen out with Ermen, and hence could neither ask a favour of him, nor stay away without saying a word. Otherwise, nothing would have prevented me from coming, not even the risk of missing something important on the Saturday.
Page me41.386
Things are going awry in America and, in fact, Mr Stanton is AFTER ALL chiefly to blame in that, after the conquest of Tennessee, sheer boastfulness led him to stop recruiting, so that the army was doomed to grow constantly weaker at the very time when it particularly needed reinforcing with a view to a rapid and decisive offensive. With a steady influx of recruits the war had hitherto not, perhaps, been decided, but there could be no doubt about its successful outcome. Moreover, the run of victories had ensured a brisk supply of recruits.
Page me41.386
This measure was all the more inane in that, at that very time, the South was calling up all men aged between 18 and 35, i.e. staking everything on one throw. It is these men, who have meanwhile become seasoned troops, that have since enabled the Confederates to gain the upper hand everywhere, and assured them the initiative. They pinned down Halleck, drove Curtis out of Arkansas, beat McClellan and, in the Sbenandoah Valley, under Jackson, gave the signal for guerrilla bands, which are now already penetrating as far as the Ohio. Stanton could not have acted more stupidly had he tried.†439

Page me41.386

Again, when Stanton saw that he would be unable to oust McClellan from the command of the Potomac Army, he perpetrated the stupidity of reducing McClellan's strength by detaching special commands to Frémont, Banks and McDowell, and dispersing the forces with a view to displacing McClellan. Not only was McClellan defeated as a result, but public opinion is laying the blame for that defeat, not on McClellan, but on Stanton. Serves Mr Stanton right.

Page Break me41.387

Page me41.387

None of this would have signified, and it might even have been all to the good in as much as the war might at last have been conducted along revolutionary lines. But there's the rub. Defeats don't spur these Yankees on, they just make them flabby. If things have come to such a pass that, to get recruits at all, they say they are prepared to take them on for only 9 months, then this is tantamount to admitting: 'We're in the shit and all we want is a make-believe army to do some sabre-rattling during the peace negotiations.' Those 300,000 volunteers, that was the criterion, and in refusing to muster them, the North is declaring that it doesn't, au fond,†a give a damn about the whole thing. And then, what cowardice on the part of the government and Congress! They shrink from conscription, from resolute fiscal measures, from attacking slavery, from everything that is urgently necessary; everything's left to amble along at will, and, if some factitious measure finally gets through Congress, the honourable Lincoln hedges it about with so many clauses that it's reduced to nothing at all. It is this flabbiness, this wilting like a pricked balloon under the pressure of defeats, which have destroyed an army, the strongest and the best, and left Washington virtually undefended, it is this complete absence of any resilience among the people at large which proves to me THAT IT IS ALL UP. The occasional MASS MEETING, etc., means nothing at all, and doesn't even rival the excitement of a presidential election.

Page me41.387

Add to that a complete want of talent. One general more stupid than the other. Not one who would be capable of the slightest initiative or of an independent decision. For 3 months the initiative has again rested wholly with the enemy. Then, the fiscal measures, each one crazier than the last. Fecklessness and cowardice everywhere except among the common soldiers. The same applies to the politicians — just as absurd, just as much at a loss. And the populus is more feckless than if it had idled away 3,000 years under the Austrian sceptre.

Page me41.387

For the South, on the other hand — IT'S NO USE SHUTTING ONE'S EYES TO THE FACT — the affair is a matter of life and death. Our not getting any cotton is one proof of this. The guerrillas in the Border States are another. But, in my view, what clinches the matter is the ability of an agrarian population, after such complete isolation from the rest of the world, to endure such a war and, having suffered severe defeats and the loss of resources, men and territory, nevertheless to emerge victorious and threaten to carry their offensive into the North. On top of that, they are really fighting quite splendidly, and what remained of UNION FEELING, save in the mountain districts, will now, with the re-occupation of Kentucky and Tennessee, undoubtedly evaporate.

Page Break me41.388
Page me41.388
If they get Missouri, they will also get the TERRITORIES,†440 and then the North might as well pack up and go home.
Page me41.388
As I have already said, unless the North instantly adopts a revolutionary stance, it will get the terrible thrashing it deserves — and that's what seems to be happening.
Page me41.388
How is little Jenny getting on?
Page me41.388
Cordial regards to your wife and children.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.388
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

229
MARX TO ENGELS†441
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.388
[London,] 30 July [1862]

Dear Engels,
From the enclosed scrawls you will partly see how BOTHERED I am. So far, the LANDLORD has allowed himself to be placated; he has yet to receive £25. The piano chap, who is being paid in instalments for the piano, should already have had £6 at the end of June, and is a most ill-mannered brute. I have rate demands in the house amounting to £6. The wretched school fees — some £10 — I have fortunately been able to pay, for I do my utmost to spare the children direct humiliation. I have paid the butcher $6 on account (the sum total of my quarterly takings from the Presse!), but I'm again being dunned by that fellow, not to mention the baker, the TEAGROCER, the GREENGROCER, and such other sons of Belial as there may be.

Page Break me41.389
Page me41.389

The Jewish NIGGER Lassalle who, I'm glad to say, is leaving at the end of this week, has happily lost another 5,000 talers in an ill-judged speculation. The chap would sooner throw money down the drain than lend it to a 'friend', even though his interest and capital were guaranteed. In this he bases himself on the view that he ought to live the life of a Jewish baron, or Jew created a baron (no doubt by the countess†a). Just imagine! This fellow, knowing about the American affair,†405 etc., and hence about the state of crisis I'm in, had the insolence to ask me whether I would be willing to hand over one of my daughters to la Hatzfeldt as a 'companion', and whether he himself should secure Gerstenberg's (!) patronage for me! The fellow has wasted my time and, what is more, the dolt opined that, since I was not engaged upon any 'business' just now, but merely upon a 'theoretical work', I might just as well kill time with him! In order to keep up certain dehors†b vis-á-vis the fellow, my wife had to put in pawn everything that wasn't actually nailed or bolted down!
Page me41.389

Had I not been in this appalling position and vexed by the way this parvenu flaunted his money bags, he'd have amused me tremendously. Since I last saw him a year ago, he's gone quite mad. His head has been completely turned by his stay in Zurich (with Rüstow, Herwegh, etc.) and the subsequent trip to Italy and, after that, by his Herr Julian Schmidt,†c etc. He is now indisputably, not only the greatest scholar, the profoundest thinker, the most brilliant man of science, and so forth, but also and in addition, Don Juan cum revolutionary Cardinal Richelieu. Add to this, the incessant chatter in a high, falsetto voice, the unaesthetic, histrionic gestures, the dogmatic tone!
Page me41.389

As a profound secret, he told me and my wife that he had advised Garibaldi not to make Rome the target of his attack but instead proceed to Naples, there set himself up as dictator (without affronting Victor Emmanuel), and call out the people's army for a campaign against Austria. Lassalle had him conjure 300,000 men out of thin air — with whom, of course, the Piedmontese army joined forces. And then, in accordance with a plan approved, so he says, by Mr Rüstow, a detached corps was to make, or rather set sail, for the Adriatic coast (Dalmatia) and incite Hungary to revolt, while, heedless of the Quadrilateral,†442 the main body of the army under Garibaldi marched from Padua to Vienna, where the population instantly rebelled. All over in 6 weeks. The fulcrum of the action — Lassalle's political influence, or his pen, in Berlin. And Rüstow at the head of a corps of German volunteers attached to Garibaldi. Bonaparte, on the other hand, was paralysed by this Lassallean coup d'éclat.†a

Page Break me41.390
Page me41.390

He has just been to see Mazzini, and 'the latter, too,' approved and 'admired' his plan.
Page me41.390

He introduced himself to these people as the 'representative of the German revolutionary working class' and assumed they knew (to use his own words) that his (Izzy's) 'pamphlet on the Italian war†b had prevented Prussia's intervention' and, IN FACT, that he had controlled 'the history of the past three years'. Lassalle was absolutely furious with me and my wife for poking fun at his plans, quizzing him as 'an enlightened Bonapartist', etc. He shouted, blustered, flung himself about and finally got it fixed in his mind that I was too 'abstract' to understand politics.
Page me41.390

AS TO AMERICA, it's of no interest whatever, he says. The Yankees have no 'ideas'. 'The freedom of the individual' is merely a 'negative idea', etc., and other antiquated, mouldering, speculative rubbish of the same ilk.
Page me41.390

As I have said, if circumstances had been different (and he hadn't disrupted my work), the chap would have amused me tremendously.
Page me41.390

And on top of it all, the sheer gluttony and wanton lechery of this 'idealist'!
Page me41.390

It is now quite plain to me — as the shape of his head and the way his hair grows also testify — that he is descended from the negroes who accompanied Moses' flight from Egypt (unless his mother or paternal grandmother interbred with a NIGGER). Now, this blend of Jewishness and Germanness, on the one hand, and basic negroid stock, on the other, must inevitably give rise to a peculiar product. The fellow's importunity is also niggerlike.
Page me41.390

If, by the by, Mr Rüstow was responsible for thinking up the march from Padua to Vienna, I should say that he also has a screw loose.
Page me41.390

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.390

One of our NIGGER'S great discoveries — which, however, he only confides to his 'closest friends' — is that the Pelasgians were of

Page Break me41.391
Semitic descent. The main evidence: in the Book of Maccabbees,†a the Jews send emissaries to solicit the help of Greece on grounds of kinship. Furthermore, an Etruscan inscription has been found in Perugia, and this was simultaneously deciphered by Hofrat Stücker in Berlin and an Italian, and both independently converted the Etruscan into the Hebrew alphabet.
Page me41.391

So that we can no longer discomfit him with 'BLUE BOOKS',†443 he has bought 20 pounds' worth of BLUE BOOKS (under Bucher's guidance).
Page me41.391

He has converted Bucher to socialism, or so he maintains. Now Bucher's quite a fine little man, if a cranky one, and, in any case, I can't believe that he has accepted Lassalle's 'foreign policy'. Bucher is the 'compositress' in Julian Schmidt.†444
Page me41.391
If you'd been here just for a day or two, you'd have been able to lay in enough material to keep you laughing for a whole year. That's why I was so anxious to have you here. One doesn't get an opportunity like that every day.

Page me41.391
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

230
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.391
[Manchester, 31 July 1862]

Dear Moor,
No doubt you will understand that, after the heavy outgoings last month, it will be impossible for me to get hold of £25 for you just now. I have postponed till August all heavy outgoings on my own account (LANDLADY and quarterly account), moreover, because of the bill, I have had to give Borkheim an order, which will similarly have to be met in August. I shall see what can be done before tomorrow. I still owe Lupus £10, and he will ask for it immediately on his return,†445 which might be any day now. If you add this to last month's outgoings, you will see that it takes a tidy slice out of the new financial year. However, I shall see this evening how much will have to be paid out, and hence how much I shall be able to send you.

Page Break me41.392
Page me41.392
If only I knew what the balance looked like and how I stand! But the day after tomorrow Charles†a leaves for Warsaw, where we have incurred a bad debt, and then the whole caboodle will come to a dead stop again.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.392
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

231
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.392
Manchester, 1 August 1862

Dear Moor,

The enclosed £10 is all I am able to send you today. This is how things stand: Last month's outgoings: a quarter's stabling for my horse £15, LANDLADY £25 (old Hill agreed to debit this to July because I paid it yesterday), to Borkheim £50, to you £10, total £100. Still outstanding this month: to Lupus £10, Borkheim — for the order — £15, bookseller about £10 (carried over from 1861), in addition, petty expenses: tailor, shoemaker, shirts, and such like, cigars some £25 and the above-mentioned £10, in all £70, or £170 in two months, excluding CURRENT EXPENSES. So, you can see how I stand. On top of that, I am pretty well positive that I exceeded my income in the last financial year and that my income for this one will be very poor. I dare say you might succeed in staving the people off a bit longer, something that can't be done in the case of my creditors since the people here have a habit of descending on one at the office and demanding settlement so that, after the 2nd or 3rd CALLING, one is morally obliged to pay them.

Page Break me41.393
Page me41.393

Should Lupus not require the £10 I still owe him until the end of September, or be satisfied with payment by instalments, I shall, of course, let you have it.
Page me41.393

The stories about Lassalle are exceedingly funny. His strategical plan†a is the finest I have ever come across. That Rüstow should have approved it is quite possible. The chap's as vain as Izzy and well on the way to being just as crazy. Cf. his maunderings about the campaign of 1860 in Vol. II of the Demokratische Studien.†b
Page me41.393

The author†c of the Europäische Pentarchie has unloosed a new opus, Europa's Cabinette und Allianzen. And a superb jackass the Russians have bought themselves, too. Never before have I come across anything so stupid and muddle-headed. When he theorises about international law, the fellow's really choice for he puts forward 3 or 4 different theories that are mutually exclusive. Added to which, Christianity á outrance,†d and flattery of all things Russian laid on so crassly that one can't help laughing out loud at the thought of the money the Russians have chucked away on him. It redounds to Germany's credit that they shouldn't have been able to buy a single fellow worth his salt to write in favour of Russia†e and, when they chance to nab one, such as B. Bauer, that he should instantly turn into a dolt.†446 His master-plan envisages a Russo-French alliance, Prussia at the head of Little Germany,†24 Austria, her capital removed to Budapest, to get the Danubian principalities and all the territory north of the Balkans — this spread out like an old cowpat over 300 pages of the most dreary twaddle. If you'd like to have the thing, I'll send it you.

Your
F.E.

O/D 13134 Manchester 27, Jan. 1862 — £5
O/D 24296 Manchester 27, Jan. 1862 — £5

___
£10

Page me41.393
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.394

232
MARX TO ENGELS†447
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.394
[London,] 2 August 1862

Dear Frederick,
Best thanks for the £10.
Page me41.394
I very much dislike your being in financial difficulties on my account, but que faire?†a Who is capable of withstanding such a crisis as the American one?†385 Not to mention my peculiar bad luck in having a rotten rag like the Vienna Presse to deal with. OTHERWISE, the fellows might, at least, have been able to make up for the loss of the Tribune TO SOME EXTENT. Do you suppose, perhaps, that the time has now come for me to approach, say, the Evening Post (THE ABOLITIONIST PAPER in New York) about my contributing to it?
Page me41.394
All things considered, it's a real miracle that I have been able to get on with my theoretical writing to such an extent. I now propose after all to include in this volume an extra chapter on the theory of rent, i.e., by way of 'illustration' to an earlier thesis of mine.†434 Let me say a word or two about what will, in the text, be a lengthy and complex affair, so that you may let me have your opinion on it.
Page me41.394

As you know, I distinguish 2 parts in capital: constant capital (raw material, matiéres instrumentales,†b machinery, etc.), whose value only reappears in the value of the product, and secondly variable capital, i.e., the capital laid out in wages, which contains less materialised labour than is given by the worker in return for it. E.g. if the daily wage = 10 hours and the worker works 12, he replaces the variable capital + 1/5 of the same (2 hours). This latter surplus I call SURPLUS VALUE.
Page me41.394

Let us assume that the rate of surplus value (that is the length of the working day and the surplus labour in excess of the necessary labour performed by the worker to reproduce his pay) is given, e.g. = 50 p.c. In this case, in a 12 hour working day the worker would work e.g. 8 hours for himself, and 4 hours (8/2) for the EMPLOYER. And indeed, let us assume this to apply to all TRADES so that any variations there may be in the AVERAGE WORKING TIME simply allow for the greater or lesser difficulty of the work, etc.

Page Break me41.395
Page me41.395

In these circumstances, given equal exploitation of the worker in different TRADES, different capitals in different spheres of production will, given equal size, yield very different AMOUNTS OF SURPLUS VALUE and hence very different rates of profit, SINCE PROFIT IS NOTHING BUT THE PROPORTION OF THE SURPLUS VALUE TO THE TOTAL CAPITAL ADVANCED. This will depend on the organic composition of the capital, i.e., on its division into constant and variable capital.
Page me41.395

Let us assume, as above, that the surplus labour = 50 p.c. If, therefore, e.g. £1 = 1 working day (no matter whether you think in terms of a day or a week, etc.), the working day = 12 hours, and the necessary labour (i.e. reproductive of the pay) = 8 hours, then the wage of 30 workers (or working days) = £20 and the value of their labour = £30, the variable capital per worker (daily or weekly) = £2/3 and the value he creates = £1. The AMOUNT of SURPLUS VALUE produced by a capital of £100 in DIFFERENT TRADES will vary greatly according to the proportion in which the capital of £100 is divided into constant and variable capital. Let us call CONSTANT CAPITAL C, and VARIABLE CAPITAL V. If, e.g. in the COTTON industry, the composition was C 80, V 20, the value of the product would = 110 (given 50 p.c. surplus value or SURPLUS LABOUR). The amount of the surplus value = 10 and the profit rate = 10 p.c., since the profit= the proportion of 10 (the SURPLUS VALUE): 100 (the total value OF THE CAPITAL EXPENDED). Let us suppose that, in a large tailoring shop, the composition is C 50, V 50, so that the product = 125, the surplus value (at a rate of 50 p.c. as above) = 25 and the profit rate = 25 p.c. Let us take another industry where the proportion is C 70, V 30, hence the product = 115, the profit rate = 15 p.c. Finally, an industry where the composition = C 90, V 10, hence the product = 105 and the profit rate = 5 p.c.
Page me41.395

Here, given equal exploitation of labour, we have IN DIFFERENT TRADES very DIFFERENT AMOUNTS OF SURPLUS VALUE AND HENCE VERY DIFFERENT RATES OF PROFIT for capitals of equal size.
Page me41.395

If, however, the above 4 capitals are taken together, we get:

	Value of the product
1. C 80 V 20	110	profit rate = 10 p.c.	Rate of surplus
2. C 50 V 50	125	profit rate = 25 p.c.	value in all
3. C 70 V 30	115	profit rate = 15 p.c.	cases = 50 p.c.
4. C 90 V 10	105	profit rate = 5 p.c.
Capital 400	Profit = 55

Page Break me41.396
Page me41.396

On 100, this makes a PROFIT RATE of 13 3/4 p.c.

Page me41.396

If the total capital (400) of the class be considered, the profit rate would = 13 3/4 p.c. And capitalists are brothers. As a result of competition (TRANSFER OF CAPITAL OR WITHDRAWAL OF CAPITAL FROM ONE TRADE TO THE OTHER), capitals of equal size in DIFFERENT TRADES, DESPITE THEIR DIFFERENT OGRANIC COMPOSITIONS, YIELD THE SAME AVERAGE RATE OF PROFIT. In other words, the AVERAGE profit, which F.I. A CAPITAL OF £100 yields IN A CERTAIN TRADE, it yields, not as a capital specifically applied to the same nor, therefore, in the proportion in which it of itself produces SURPLUS VALUE, but as an aliquot part of the total capital of the capitalist class. It is a SHARE the dividend on which will be paid in proportion to its size out of the total amount of the SURPLUS VALUE (or unpaid labour) produced by the total variable (laid out in wages) capital of the class.

Page me41.396

If then 1, 2, 3, 4 in the above illustration are to make the same AVERAGE PROFIT, each category must sell its goods at £113 1/3. 1 and 4 will sell them at more than their value, 2 and 3 at less.

Page me41.396

The price so regulated = THE EXPENSES OF CAPITAL + THE AVERAGE PROFIT (F.I. 10 p.c.), is what Smith called the NATURAL PRICE, COST PRICE,†448 etc. It is the AVERAGE PRICE to which competition between DIFFERENT TRADES (by TRANSFER OF CAPITAL or WITHDRAWAL OF CAPITAL) reduces the prices in DIFFERENT TRADES. Hence, competition reduces commodities not to their value, but to the cost price, which, depending on the organic composition of the respective capitals, is either above, below or = to their values.

Page me41.396

Ricardo confuses value and cost price. He therefore believes that, if there were such a thing as absolute rent (i.e., rent independent of variations in the fertility of the soil), AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE, etc., would be constantly sold for more than its value, because at more than cost price (THE ADVANCED CAPITAL+THE AVERAGE PROFIT). That would demolish the fundamental law. Hence he denies absolute rent and assumes only differential rent.

Page me41.396

But his identification of VALUES OF COMMODITIES and COST PRICES OF COMMODITIES is totally wrong and has traditionally been taken over from A. Smith.

Page me41.396

The facts are as follows:

If we assume that the AVERAGE COMPOSITION of all NOT AGRICULTURAL CAPITAL is C 80, V 20, then the product (assuming that the rate of surplus value is 50 p.c.) = 110 and the profit rate = 10 p.c.

Page me41.396

If we further assume that the AVERAGE COMPOSITION of AGRICULTURAL CAPITAL is C 60, V 40 (in England, this figure is statistically fairly correct; rent for pasture, etc., has no bearing on this question, being determined not by itself, but by the CORN RENT), then the product, given equal exploitation of labour as above = 120 and profit rate = 20 p.c. Hence, if the farmer sells his AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE for what it is worth, he is selling it at 120 and not at 110, its cost price. But landed property prevents the farmer, like his BROTHER CAPITALISTS, from equalising the value of the product to the cost price. Competition between capitals cannot enforce this. The landowner intervenes and pockets the difference between value and cost price. A low proportion of constant to variable capital is in general an expression of the poor (or relatively poor) development of the productive power of labour in a particular sphere of production. Hence, if the AVERAGE COMPOSITION of AGRICULTURAL CAPITAL is e.g. C 60, V 40, while that of NOT AGRICULTURAL CAPITAL is C 80, V 20, this proves that agriculture has not yet reached the same stage of development as industry. (Which is easily explicable since, apart from anything else, a prerequisite for industry is the older science of mechanics, while the prerequisites for agriculture are the completely new sciences of chemistry, geology and physiology.) If the proportion in agriculture becomes C 80, V 20 (in the above premise), then absolute rent disappears. All that remains is differential rent, which I shall also expound in such a way as to make Ricardo's assumption of the constant DETERIORATION OF AGRICULTURE appear MOST RIDICULOUS AND ARBITRARY.

Page Break me41.397

Page me41.397

Having regard to the foregoing definition of COST PRICE as distinct from VALUE, it should further be noted that, besides the distinction between constant capital and variable capital, which arises out of the immediate production process of capital, there is the further distinction between fixed and circulating capital, which arises out of the circulation process of capital. However, the formula would become too involved if I were to seek to incorporate this in the above as well.

Page me41.397

There you have — ROUGHLY, for the thing's fairly complicated — the critique of Ricardo's theory. This much you will admit — that by taking into account the ORGANIC COMPOSITION OF CAPITAL, one disposes of a mass of what have so far seemed to be contradictions and problems.

Page me41.397

Apropos. There are certain reasons, of which I shall inform you in my next letter, why I should be very glad if you would write me a detailed military critique (I shall deal with the political aspect) of Lassalle-Rüstow's liberation nonsense.†a

Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.398
Page me41.398
Regards to the ladies.
Page me41.398
Imandt has announced himself. Izzy leaves on Monday.
Page me41.398
It will be evident to you that, given my view of 'absolute rent', landed property (UNDER CERTAIN HISTORICAL CIRCUMSTANCES) does INDEED put up the prices of raw materials. Very important, communistically speaking.
Page me41.398
Assuming the correctness of the above view, it is by no means essential for absolute rent to be paid under all circumstances or in respect of every type of soil (even if the composition of AGRICULTURAL CAPITAL is as assumed above). It is not paid when landed property does not exist, either factually or legally. In such a case, AGRICULTURE offers NO PECULIAR RESISTANCE TO THE APPLICATION OF CAPITAL, which then moves as easily in this element as in the other. The agricultural produce is then sold, as masses of industrial products always are, at cost price for less than its value. In practice, landed property may disappear, even when capitalist and landowner are one and the same person, etc.
Page me41.398
But it would be otiose to go into these details here.
Page me41.398
Differential rent as such — which does not arise from the circumstance that CAPITAL is employed ON LAND INSTEAD OF ANY OTHER FIELD OF EMPLOYMENT — presents no difficulty in theory. It is nothing other than SURPLUS PROFIT which also exists in every sphere of industrial production wherever capital operates under better than AVERAGE CONDITIONS. It is firmly ensconced in agriculture only because founded on a basis as solid and (relatively) stable as the DIFFERENT DEGREES OF NATURAL FERTILITY of various types of soil.

Page me41.398
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.399

MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.399
London, 7 August [1862]

Dear Engels,

The LANDLORD came to see me on Monday†a and told me that, after having foreborne so long, he would hand things over to his LAND AGENT, unless I paid him within the shortest possible time. And that means putting the BROKER in. I likewise — oddly enough on the same day — got a final demand for the rates, as well as letters from the épiciers,†b most of them acquainted with the LANDLORD, threatening to prosecute me and withhold PROVISIONS.

Page me41.399

Lassalle left on Monday evening. I saw him once more after all these EVENTS had taken place. From my DEJECTED air, he saw that the crisis, which he had long known about, had led to a catastrophe OF SOME kind. Questioned me. Having heard my tale, he said he could let me have £15 by 1 January 1863; also that bills could be drawn on him for any desired AMOUNT, provided payment over and above the £15 were promised by you or someone else. More he could [not] do, he said, in view of his straitened circumstances. (That I can well believe, for, while here, he spent £1 2/- daily on CABS and cigars alone.)

Page me41.399

Might you perhaps be able to do something in this way, using Borkheim as escompteur,†c so as to stave off the crisis? Of the £10, I paid 6 to the piano man, a nasty brute who wouldn't have hesitated to bring me before the COUNTY COURT.†7 With 2 of the pounds I redeemed things that were in pawn and put what was left at my wife's disposal.

Page me41.399

I assure you that if it wasn't for FAMILY DIFFICULTIES, I would far rather move into a MODEL LODGING-HOUSE than be constantly squeezing your purse.

Page me41.399

There is, in addition, another circumstance, namely Dr Allen's telling me that it's absolutely essential for little Jenny to spend at least a fortnight at the seaside, ditto for our youngest†d who had jaundice of some kind last year and isn't ALL RIGHT once again.

Page me41.399

Izzy also told me that he would perhaps found a paper when he returned in September. I told him that, if he paid well, I would be its English correspondent, without assuming any other kind of

Page Break me41.400

RESPONSIBILITY or political PARTNERSHIP, since all we had in common politically were a few remote objectives.

Page me41.400

I don't quite share your views on the AMERICAN CIVIL WAR,†a I do not believe THAT ALL IS UP. From the outset, the NORTHERNERS have been dominated by the representatives of the BORDER SLAVES STATES,†b who were also responsible for pushing McClellan, that old PARTISAN OF Breckinridge, to the top. The South, on the other hand, acted as a single whole right from the very start. The North itself turned slavery into a pro- instead of an anti-Southern military FORCE. The South leaves PRODUCTIVE LABOUR to the slaves and could thus take the field undisturbed with its fighting force intact. It had a unified military leadership; the North did not. That there was no strategical plan is evident if only from the manoeuvrings of the Kentucky Army after the capture of Tennessee. In my view, all this is going to TAKE ANOTHER TURN. The North will, at last, wage the war in earnest, have recourse to revolutionary methods and overthrow the supremacy of the BORDER SLAVE STATESMEN. One single NIGGER REGIMENT would have a remarkable effect on Southern nerves.

Page me41.400

The difficulty of raising 300,000 men is, I should say, purely political. The North-West and New England†449 wish to and will compel the government to abandon the diplomatic warfare they have waged hitherto, and are now making TERMS ON WHICH THE 300,000 MEN SHALL COME FORTH. If Lincoln doesn't give way (which he will, however), there'll be a revolution.
Page me41.400

As regards the lack of military talent, the choice of generals, hitherto dependent purely on diplomatic and party chicanery, has hardly been calculated to bring it to the fore. However, I should say that General Pope was a man of energy.
Page me41.400

As for financial measures, they are clumsy as, indeed, they are bound to be in a country where IN FACT taxation has hitherto been non-existent (so far as the country as a whole is concerned), but not nearly as silly as the measures taken by Pitt et cie.†450 I should say that the present depreciation of money is attributable not to economic, but to purely political grounds, namely DISTRUST. It will therefore change, when policy changes.
Page me41.400

The long and the short of it is, I think, that wars of this kind ought to be conducted along revolutionary lines, and the YANKEES†312 have so far been trying to conduct it along constitutional ones.
Page me41.400

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.401
Page me41.401

Imandt is here. Another very tiresome interruption at the moment. I believe my work will run to 30 sheets.†310

Page me41.401
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwichen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

234
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.401
Manchester, 8 August 1862

Dear Moor,

In giving you an account of my expenditure, I never remotely intended to deter you from further 'squeezing', as you call it. On the contrary, we shall, I think, go on giving each other as much mutual aid as we can, it being quite immaterial so far as the cause is concerned which of us happens to be the 'squeezer' at the moment and which the 'squeezed', roles that are, after all, interchangeable. My only object in drawing up this statement was to demonstrate the impossibility of laying my hands on more than £10 just at the moment.

Page me41.401

I assume that you promptly requisitioned the £15 in cash from Lassalle, or what exactly does 'by January'†a mean? That he doesn't want to fork out till then? Now as regards bills, I for my part can perfectly well draw from £40 á £45 or some 260 to 300 talers on Lassalle, at 3, preferably 4 months' date, provided Borkheim will cash them. I shall also be able to send you another £10 in cash if I keep Borkheim waiting till September for the money I owe him for wine. That would make 10 from me, 45 for the bill, 15 Lassalle, total £70. But it would mean that I was completely cleaned out for some little while, not that that would really matter, provided it got you out of the mire and enabled little Jenny to go to the SEASIDE. Since Borkheim is constantly having to disburse money on the Continent — and he knows that, come what may, I have got to honour the bill if I don't want my position here to be ruined, there's absolutely no reason why you shouldn't go and ask him whether he's willing to negotiate the thing for us. You can tell him that just now, when times are bad for COTTON, I am honour-bound to draw as little money as possible from the firm and hence would sooner adopt this method. You have far less cause to feel ill at ease with him about the affair than I have, so go and see him at once and arrange matters so that I can draw on Monsieur le Baron†a forthwith.

Page Break me41.402

Page me41.402

Lupus arrived on Monday, in the grip of influenza and rheumatism, which confined him to bed for a day, the only one he spent in London. As soon as he felt a little better, he came straight up here. That was why he didn't come and see you. He is now better, but, being in monetibus†b likewise on his beam ends, came straight to me about the £10.

Page me41.402

You've absolutely got to pull off another financial coup, otherwise I cannot see how on earth we're going to make up for the loss of the Tribune. Nor are the other New York papers in any kind of a position to take the place of the Tribune so far as you are concerned†c; but, should a suitable occasion arise, it would do no harm to try, as something might come of it. With 30 sheets, the book†310 will raise at most some £70, but how do things stand with Brockhaus? Did you discuss the matter at all with Lassalle? And how much longer will it take?
Page me41.402
I have again made contact with the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung and shall see how it goes, though 1 article every 6 weeks is the maximum here. Mightn't you be able, through your mussurus†d or otherwise, to arrange for me to contribute military articles to an English paper in London? But all this is marginal stuff and, unless we can discover the art of shitting gold, there would hardly seem to be any alternative to your extracting something from your relations by one means or another. Réfléchis-lá-dessus.†e
Page me41.402
Shall write to you shortly about Lassalle's war plans and your theory of rent,†f though I must say I'm by no means clear about the existence of 'absolute' rent — for, after all, you have to prove it first. I've got frightful piles and can't go on sitting down any longer.
Page me41.402
Regards to the FAMILY.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.402
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.403

235
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.403
[London,] 9 August 1862

Dear Engels,
Izzy doesn't want to pay the £15 before 1 January.†a
Page me41.403
So, I've been to see Borkheim. You are to draw 400 talers on Lassalle (I didn't, of course, in speaking of Lassalle to Borkheim, say anything AS TO THE £15 to be paid by Lassalle). At 3 months. Then, however, the thing will have to be renewed, as I told

Borkheim that it wasn't payable until 1 January. (This being the date stipulated by Lassalle.)
Page me41.403
So, the main thing is that you should send Borkheim the bill.
Page me41.403
As regards the theory of rent, I shall, of course, have to wait until I get your letter.†b But what follows will simplify the 'debate', as Heinrich Bürgers would say:
Page me41.403
I. All I have to prove theoretically is the possibility of absolute rent, without infringing the law of value. This is the point round which the theoretical controversy has revolved from the time of the physiocrats†451 until the present day. Ricardo denies that possibility; I maintain it. I likewise maintain that his denial rests on a theoretically false dogma deriving from A. Smith — the supposed identity of COST PRICES†c and VALUES OF COMMODITIES. Further, that where Ricardo illustrates the thing with examples, he invariably presupposes conditions in which there is either no capitalist production or (factually or legally) no landed property. But the whole point is to examine the law precisely when such things do exist.
Page me41.403
II. As regards the existence of absolute rent, this would be a question that would require statistical solution in any country. But the importance of a purely theoretical solution may be gauged from the fact that for 35 years statisticians and practical men generally have been maintaining the existence of absolute rent, while the (Ricardian) theoreticians have been seeking to explain it away by dint of very forced and theoretically feeble abstractions. Hitherto, I have invariably found that, in all such QUARRELS, the theoreticians have always been in the wrong.

Page Break me41.404
Page me41.404
III. I demonstrate that, even presupposing the existence of absolute rent, it by no means follows that the worst cultivated land or the worst mine pays rent UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES; rather, these will, in all likelihood, have to sell their products at market value, but at less than their individual value. In order to prove the opposite, Ricardo invariably supposes — which is theoretically false — that, UNDER ALL CONDITIONS OF THE MARKET, it is the commodity produced in the most unfavourable circumstances which determines the market value. You yourself had already put forward the correct argument against this in the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher.†a
Page me41.404
That is all I have to add as to rent.
Page me41.404
As regards Brockhaus, Lassalle has promised to do his utmost†b and I believe he will, having solemnly declared that he can neither publish his magnum opus on political economy, nor set to work on it — which in his case amounts to the same thing — until my book†310 has come out.
Page me41.404
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.404
Borkheim further adds:
You are to draw the 400 talers on Lassalle at 3 months and renew it a fortnight before due date, till 1 January 1863. If you can't manage to pay in instalments, Borkheim will see to it that Lassalle gets the money on the first due date.
Page me41.404
As for the Evening Post,†c I should be glad if you could draft a letter for me, since I'm very bad at writing colloquial English.

Page me41.404
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

236
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.404
[Manchester, before 12 August 1862]

Herewith the bill on Baron Artful.†d You must advise him of it, date, day when due, etc., also that he will receive the money on due date and that there will be an extension till 1 Jan., when I shall remit him the difference of £15.

Page Break me41.405

Your
F.E.†a

Page me41.405
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

237
ENGELS TO MARX†452
IN LONDON
Page me41.405
[Manchester, 13 August 1862]

Dear Moor,

I am unable to answer the preceding letter, since I don't know exactly what you told Borkheim and am therefore afraid of introducing inconsistencies into the affair. I could, of course, only assume Lassalle was back in Berlin. You should now go straight to Borkheim and see that the bill is returned and then sent by you to Lassalle for acceptance. Otherwise, of course, nothing at all can be done. How this misunderstanding could have arisen I fail to comprehend.

Your haemorrhoidarius,
F.E.

Page me41.405
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

238
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE
IN BERLIN
Page me41.405
London, 13 August [1862]

Dear Lassalle,

In order to postpone the crisis, at least for a few weeks, Engels has drawn a bill on you through Borkheim for 400 talers at 3 months from 12 August.†a He will remit you the covering amount before due date. Then the bill will be renewed until 1st January, when Engels will send you 300 talers and you, in accordance with your promise, will yourself pay 100.

Page Break me41.406
Page me41.406

All you have to do for the time being is to accept the bill drawn by Engels. ALTOGETHER, this amounts to £60 and hence doesn't help me. But, at any rate, the present crisis will be averted and some way out may be found in the mean time.
Page me41.406

I am literally on tenterhooks and my work has been VERY MUCH TROUBLED and disrupted.

Page me41.406
There is some prospect of my getting another Yankee paper.†b
Page me41.406
Where are you?
Page me41.406
What are you up to?
Page me41.406
What's your old man†c up to?
Page me41.406
Salut from myself and FAMILY.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.406
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

239
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE IN WILDBAD
Page me41.406
London, 14 August 1862

Dear Lassalle,
Yesterday, I sent off a couple of lines to you in Berlin. Today I hear that you are at Wildbad. Hence I shall, in a few words, repeat the brief purport of the brief lines which may, perhaps, not reach you.
Page me41.406
In order to stave off the catastrophe threatening my affairs, Engels drew a bill on you for £60 (400 talers) through Borkheim on 12 Aug. Due at 3 months date from 12 Aug. Borkheim is to discount this bill for me here. Engels will remit you the covering amount before due date. (Then he will renew the same bill up to 1 January 1863, when he will send you a further remittance of £45 and you will pay £15, as you offered to do.) The only essential thing now is to have your acceptance. Borkheim sent the bill straight off to Berlin, whence it will return probably before the end of this week or early in the next. Then it will at once be sent to you for acceptance. I should be very glad if you could telegraph S.L. Borkheim, 27 Crutched Friars, London, saying: 'I SHALL ACCEPT MR F. ENGELS BILL OF £60.' Namely, so that Borkheim should not raise any further difficulties about the DISCOUNT. In my case, there is greater periculum in mora†a than I can say.

Page Break me41.407

Page me41.407
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.407
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

240
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.407
[London,] 14 August 1862

Dear Frederick,
Just a few lines as I have a mass of business errands to run today.
Page me41.407
The misunderstanding consists solely in there 'not having been one'.
Page me41.407
Before writing to you, I had told Borkheim that I did not know whether Lassalle was in Berlin, and hence that there was no certainty of an immediate acceptance. Borkheim had, nevertheless, promised to DISCOUNT the moment he had your signature. He subsequently thought better of it.
Page me41.407
He decided, not to DISCOUNT in person, as he had originally intended, BUT TO HAVE THE BILL DISCOUNTED BY ONE OF HIS FRIENDS CONNECTED WITH BERLIN.

Page Break me41.408
Page me41.408
To that end, he naturally required Lassalle's acceptance. The latter, or so I learned from Bucher yesterday, is at present at Wildbad, where Lassalle SENIOR†a is more or less on the point of kicking the bucket. I immediately wrote to Baron Izzy.†b
Page me41.408
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.408
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

241
MARX TO WILHELM SCHWARZ
IN LONDON
Page me41.408
London, 19 August 1862
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Sir,

Might I, as London correspondent of the Vienna Presse, request that I be sent a PRESS TICKET for the Exhibition?†344
Page me41.408

Though I was asked months ago by the Editor of the Presse to write a number of general reports on the Exhibition,†c other work has precluded my acceding to that request until now.
Page me41.408

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
Dr Karl Marx†453

Page me41.408
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.409

242
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†239
IN ZURICH
Page me41.409
London, 20 August [1862]

Dear Lassalle,

I imagine that, excursions into the High Alps and Italy notwithstanding, you will be spending a few days in Zurich, or at least receiving poste restante letters there. To make doubly sure, I have also informed Mr Rüstow that I have written to you 'poste restante Zurich'.

Page me41.409
Despite the 'position' I am in, I would rescind the whole transaction if the bill on you were not already in the hands of 'Meyer Brothers', Berlin. Actually, this was not altogether in accordance with the agreement, since Borkheim had originally promised me he wouldn't let the bill out of his hands until you returned to Berlin. However, I couldn't see that any harm had been done since, in the case of this first bill, I had thought the use of your name was a mere formality and had no idea it had any connection with your 'public existence' or might serve to spark off some civil drama or other. For I believed that Engels' security for 'an amount' of 400 talers would meet the case, even if the 'worst came to the worst' and, as regards 'the due date', I knew Engels to be a model of 'punctuality and promptitude' in money matters, particularly where bills are concerned. Otherwise, I wouldn't have involved you in this BUSINESS.
Page me41.409
It being no longer possible to rescind the thing without making myself and Engels look foolish in Borkheim's eyes, I shall send you Engels' bond the day after tomorrow.†a For it takes 3 days to get a reply from Manchester. As soon as you have the same, it would be good if you wrote to 'Meyer Brothers' (this being the name of the firm in Berlin which has Engels' draft), telling them you will accept on your return.
Page me41.409
Let me say once again how much I regret having involved you in the matter — a rash act for which the overlooking of certain premises on your part and mine is to blame. Meanwhile, I remain,

Your
K.M.

Page me41.409
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.410

243
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.410
London, 20 August [1862]

Dear Engels,
I've had a whole series of mishaps over the bill.
Page me41.410

First Borkheim, who means very well but also enjoys bragging and chooses just the wrong moment to prevaricate post festum,†a promised to discount the bill (out of his own pocket). He did so, knowing that Lassalle's acceptance wasn't to be had for some little while. Then, without a word to me, he sent it through Bruckner (Brothers) to Berlin so as to get it discounted by the said Bruckners. Perhaps — he pretends to have forgotten how it all began — he took fright in the meantime.
Page me41.410
Secondly: Baron Artful,†b with whom I discussed the transaction on the eve of his departure†c when he declared himself 'prepared to do anything', writes today from Wildbad†454 whither I had sent him an advice†d:

'If I am to accept, I shall have to have a bond from Engels himself in which he undertakes to put me in possession of the covering amount a week before due date. Not, of course, (!) that I doubt you wrote at his behest, but simply because, if I have to accept a bill which I cannot meet myself I must, if unforeseen circumstances are to be precluded and the worst comes to the worst, at least possess a personal written undertaking from the man who can and is to send me this remittance.'

Page me41.410
I thereupon wrote the baron, who is now in Zurich (has left Wildbad) and 'may' be going on to Italy in a few days' time, a very ironical letter,†e telling him that I would forthwith request you to send the bond to me. This I now do.
Page me41.410
Yesterday Borkheim read me his letter to you.†455 I'd be very glad if you would write to him privately saying he should do everything possible to obtain the money for me, since I am (and this is true) in dire need, while Lassalle's return will be delayed by his adventures abroad.
Page me41.410
(By the by, I wrote and told Izzy†f that, on receipt of your bond, he should write to 'Meyer' Brothers in Berlin, who have the bill, saying he will accept it on his return — if, that is, he's not going to be long enough in any one place for the bill to be sent on for his acceptance.)

Page Break me41.411
Page me41.411
Say what you will, DEAR BOY, it really is embarrassing to have to BOTHER you as I do with my miséres! If only I knew how to start some sort of BUSINESS! All theory, dear friend, is grey, and only BUSINESS green.†a Unfortunately, I have come to realise this too late.
Page me41.411
With the £20 advanced by Borkheim, I first of all paid the rates, then the shoemaker who was proposing to sue me, etc. I used £5 to send my FAMILY to Ramsgate yesterday, since little Jenny could not remain here any longer. I cannot thank you enough for having made this possible. She's the most perfect and gifted child in the world. But here she had to suffer twice over. Firstly from physical causes. And then she was afflicted by our pecuniary TROUBLE. How glad I was today that my wife and children were away and were thus spared the sight of Izzy's letter!

Page me41.411

Can't you come down for a few days? In my critique I have demolished so much of the old stuff that there are a number of points I should like to consult you about before I proceed.†310 Discussing these matters in writing is tedious both for you and for me.
Page me41.411

One point about which you, as a practical man, must have the answer, is this. Let us assume that a firm's machinery at the outset = £12,000. It wears out ON AN AVERAGE in 12 years. If then £1,000 is added to the value of the goods every year, the cost of the machinery will have been paid off in 12 years. Thus far, A. Smith and all his successors. But, IN FACT, this is only an AVERAGE CALCULATION. Much the same applies to machinery having a life of 12 years as, say, to a horse with a life — or useful life — of 10 years. Although it would have to be replaced with a new horse after 10 years, it would in practice be wrong to say that 1/10 of it died every year. Rather, in a letter to FACTORY INSPECTORS,†b Mr Nasmyth observes that machinery (at least some types of machinery) RUNS BETTER in the second year THAN IN THE FIRST. AT ALL EVENTS, in the course of those 12 years does not 1/12 of the machinery have to be replaced in natura†c each year? Now, what becomes of this fund, which yearly replaces 1/12 of the machinery? Is it not, in fact, an accumulation fund to extend reproduction aside from any

Page Break me41.412
CONVERSION OF REVENUE INTO CAPITAL?†456 Does not the existence of this fund partly account for the very different rate at which capital accumulates in nations with advanced capitalist production and hence a great deal of capital fixe, and those where this is not the case?
Page me41.412

Piles or no piles, you might at least let me have a brief answer to this.
Page me41.412

As for the Rüstow-Lassalle plan†a your comments would be of value to me because of Bucher.†b
Page me41.412

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.412
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

244
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.412
[Manchester, 21 August 1862]

Dear Moor,

The enclosed note for Lassalle.†c Don't get so worked up about these asininities. Just see that the bill comes back, and send it to Lassalle for acceptance; or have this done direct from Berlin. You must realise that I can no more prevail on Borkheim than you can — probably less. I know he likes to show off.
Page me41.412

In great haste.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.412
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.413

245
ENGELS TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†237
IN BERLIN
Page me41.413
Manchester, 21 August 1862

Dear Lassalle,

As requested by you, I hereby confirm (indeed this goes without saying) that, 8 days before due date, I shall send you in Berlin the covering amount in respect of the bill I drew on you for 400 talers maturing 13 November 1862, and, if you will let me know at which banker's this sum is to be paid in, I shall see that it is paid in there by 5 November.
Page me41.413

With most cordial regards,

Your
F. Engels

Page me41.413
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

246
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.413
[Manchester, beginning of September 1862]

Dear Moor,

I am up to my eyes in the cotton racket, which has assumed colossal proportions†385 — those with courage are making a lot of money; but Ermen & Engels, alas, have no courage — it is putting me to a hell of a lot of work. I shall write to you as soon as I possibly can.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.413
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.414

247
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.414
Manchester, 9 September 1862

Dear Moor,

You have no idea how I've had to buckle to during the past few days. Cotton, blast it, has risen fivefold on average, and you really wouldn't believe how much work is involved in keeping all the customers informed of these successive increases.
Page me41.414

I trust the Lassalliad over that wretched bill has been cleared up and that you're in possession of the money. I've at last reached a point at which I can go to Germany for a fortnight, leaving on Friday†457; unfortunately, I won't be able to stop in London as the time at my disposal is very short and everything I've heard about that idiotic exhibition†344 has made me hate it so much that I'm downright glad I shan't be seeing it.

But drop me another line to say how things went with the bill and how little Jenny is getting on — before I leave.
Page me41.414

What with the cotton pother, the theory of rent†a has really proved too abstract for me. I shall have to consider the thing when I eventually get a little more peace and quiet. Likewise the question of wear and tear†b where, however, I rather suspect you have gone off the rails. Depreciation time is not, of course, the same for all machines. But more about this when I get back.
Page me41.414

Individual chaps up here have made a hell of a lot of money during this rise. None of it will stick to ourselves, partly because the good Gottfried†c is indeed a breech-wetter and partly because spinners in general haven't made a sou during this period. It's all gone into the pockets of the commission houses.
Page me41.414

The Bull Run affair No. II was a splendid little show by STONEWALL Jackson who is by far the best chap America has. Had he been supported on his front by an attack on the part of the main Confederate army, and had everything gone right (or only partially so), then Monsieur Pope would doubtless have been done for.†458 But as it was, the affair came to nothing, save that the Confederates gained an important moral advantage — respect for their spirit of enterprise and for Jackson — and a few square miles of ground; on the other hand, however, they have speeded up the unification and concentration of the entire Federal army before Washington. The next STEAMER will most probably bring us news of fresh engagements, in which the Federals might well be victorious if their generals weren't so bloody stupid. But what can you expect of such rapscallions! Pope is the lousiest of the lot; all he can do is brag, countermand, lie, and keep quiet about his reverses. Indeed, that know-all of the General Staff, McClellan, now strikes one yet again as being positively intelligent. What is more, the order that all future major-generals are to sit the exam for the Prussian ensign's sword-knot.†459 It's too pitiful and, in contrast to the spineless goings-on in the North, the chaps in the South, who, at least, know what they want, seem to me like heroes. Or do you still believe that the gentlemen of the North will suppress the 'REBELLION'?

Page Break me41.415
Page me41.415

Adieu!
Your
F.E.

Page me41.415
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

248
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.415
London, 10 September [1862]

Dear Engels,

My FAMILY has got back from Ramsgate; little Jenny is very much better.
Page me41.415

Lassalle's letter, containing a letter for Meyer Brothers with whom the bill is lodged in Berlin, and also his acceptance, didn't arrive till yesterday. In the meantime, Borkheim had already gone away on holiday. Up till now he has paid £40 in driblets, the last 15 of the 40 thirteen days ago, when I was leaving.†460 For I wanted to pester my uncle.†a But he, too, was travelling on the Continent.

Page Break me41.416
From there (passant par COLOGNE., etc.) I went to Trier to see my mater — fruitlessly, however, as I at once suspected when Monsieur l'oncle was not to be got hold of. On the 17th of this month, I have to pay a bill [of exchange] for £6 (SIX POUNDS) to my butcher, and Borkheim won't have got back by then, his intention being to spend ABOUT 4 WEEKS bustling round Switzerland, etc.
Page me41.416

As to the YANKEES,†312 I am firmly of the opinion, now as before, that the North will win in the end†a; true, the Civil War may pass through all kinds of episodes, perhaps even ceasefires, and be long-drawn-out. The South would or could conclude peace only on condition that it gained possession of the BORDER SLAVE STATES.†b In that case, California would also fall to it, the North-West would follow suit and the entire Federation, with the exception, perhaps, of the NEW ENGLAND STATES,†449 would again form one country, this time under the ACKNOWLEDGED SUPREMACY OF THE SLAVEHOLDERS. It would be the reconstruction of the UNITED STATES on the basis demanded by the South. But that is impossible and won't happen.
Page me41.416

The North, for its part, can conclude peace only if the CONFEDERACY is restricted to the old slave states, and then only to those bounded by the Mississippi RIVER and the ATLANTIC. In which case the CONFEDERACY would soon come to a happy end. In the intervening period, ceasefires, etc., on the basis of a status quo could at most occasion pauses in the course of the war.
Page me41.416

The way in which the North is waging the war is none other than might be expected of a bourgeois republic, where humbug has reigned supreme for so long. The South, an oligarchy, is better suited to the purpose, especially an oligarchy where all productive. labour devolves on the NIGGERS and where the 4 million 'WHITE TRASH'†418 are flibustiers†c by calling. For all that, I'm prepared to bet my life on it that these fellows will come off worst, 'STONEWALL Jackson' notwithstanding. It is, of course, possible that some sort of revolution will occur beforehand in the North itself.

Page me41.416
Willich is a brigadier-general and Stephens,†d or so Kapp told me in Cologne, is also said to be on his way to the wars now.
Page me41.416
It strikes me that you allow yourself to be influenced by the military ASPECT of things A LITTLE TOO MUCH.
Page me41.416
As to the economic stuff, I don't propose to burden you with it on your journey.†e
Page me41.416
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.417
Page me41.417
You might perhaps write and tell me where and when you will be passing through London on your journey. If at all feasible, I shall come and meet you.
Page me41.417
It is possible (even though all manner of things still stand in the way) that I shall enter an English railway office at the beginning of next year.†a
Page me41.417
WHAT ABOUT Garibaldi?†461

Page me41.417
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

249
MARX TO WILHELM WOLFF
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.417
[London,] 4 October 1862

Dear Lupus,
You will have received the Barmer Zeitung, misprints and all.†462 The enclosed cutting from the Elberfelder Zeitung was sent me by Siebel, with a note to the effect that the article from the Barmer was in fact reprinted by the Niederrheinische,†b ditto by the Märkische Volks-Zeitung (the latter is published in Hagen).
Page me41.417

Is Engels back?†457
Page me41.417
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.417
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.418

250
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.418
Manchester, 16 October 1862

Dear Moor,
Every single day throughout the whole of last week and this, I was all-set to write to you, but was prevented from doing so by the confounded COTTON business. Ces messieurs†a had, of course, done as little work as possible while I was away,†457 so that my hands have been completely full.
Page me41.418
Lupus asked me to tell you that he got the things all right.†b The case is a most amusing one. Those poor, mendacious Prussians! They invariably make fools of themselves the moment they commit something to paper!
Page me41.418
I presume you got the £10 note I sent you on the day of my departure? Again I got stuck in Barmen and Engelskirchen for too long, having spent a whole fortnight sauntering along the Moselle, the Rhine, and in Thuringia. I went straight to Trier via Brussels and Luxemburg, and then on foot to Kochem, etc., giving Cologne a complete miss.
Page me41.418
Bismarck's appointment was hailed by the bourgeois with peals of laughter.†463 The chaps were altogether amazingly confident and in a somewhat daredevil mood. They have at last hooked the worthy William with a financial question and know he's bound to give way to them in the long run; but they take a remarkably idyllic view of the course of events and imagine that, provided they just keep the fellow dangling for a while, he'll come to them of his own accord. They're in for a surprise. At all events, things are bound to come to a head some time in the spring. It's killing, by the by, to see what an inspiring effect a financial question of this kind has on the philistines. Schulze-Delitzsch and co.

become positively witty, the only man to remain 'sherioush'†c being Virchow; but nay, he is not alone — Heinrich Bürgers, too, conducts himself with fitting dignity in Weimar, where he sounds the trumpet on behalf of the Imperial Constitution of the year dot.†464 I must say that Schulze-Delitzsch, the little provident society man who has never been, nor asked to be, more than a wretched philistine, seems to me positively respectable by comparison with scoundrels such as Bürgers and the great Miquel, who are saving the fatherland in Weimar through Prussian supremacy.†465

Page Break me41.419
Page me41.419

I now understand about Kinkel, too. He's a complete caricature of a certain upholsterer in Coblenz who is, in his own way, a unique example of a Rhinelander, with all the prejudices and narrow-mindedness of a race that curses the Prussians, loathes the French, sympathises with Austria, is Catholic and democratic in one and the same breath, but excels at putting its best foot forward. I know because we marched over the Kochemer Berg together. If Kinkel were to see this lad, whom his physical appearance apes in every particular, the shock would knock him over backwards.
Page me41.419

What do you make of America? The financial CRASH, inevitable in view of these stupid paper money measures, would seem to be imminent.†422 Militarily speaking, the North may now perhaps begin to recover a bit.
Page me41.419

What is little Jenny doing?
Page me41.419

Many regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.419
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

251
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.419
[London,] 29 October 1862

Dear Engels,

It isn't right that, during your HOLYDAYS, you should never have time to spend so much as one day in London.
Page me41.419
Since going to the seaside, little Jenny has been much better, but she's still not her proper self. For a year she's been losing weight instead of putting it on.
Page me41.419
Lassalle, who is exceedingly incensed with me, tells me that, since he has not got a banker, the remittance should be sent to him personally at his Berlin address, 13 Bellevuestrasse. This month, he is being taken to court on account of one of his famous speeches.†466

Page Break me41.420
Page me41.420
Schily was here for a week, looking very wretched and ill, whereas his friend Imandt, who was also here before I left for Holland and Trier,†460 has grown frightfully obese. It's almost as though a second back had formed on top of his old one.
Page me41.420
As regards America, I believe the Maryland campaign†467 to be decisive in as much as it has shown that even in this most Southern-minded part of the BORDER STATES†a there is little support for the CONFEDERATES. But the whole struggle revolves round the BORDER STATES. Whoever has those, will dominate the UNION. The fact that Lincoln promulgated the PROSPECTIVE emancipation decree at a time when the CONFEDERATES were advancing into Kentucky also shows that no further consideration is now being shown the LOYAL SLAVE HOLDERS in the BORDER STATES.†468 The southward migration of slave holders with their BLACK CHATTEL from Missouri, Kentucky, and Tennessee has already assumed vast proportions and if, as is certain, the struggle goes on a bit longer, the South will have lost all support there. It was the South that began the struggle for the territories.†440 The war itself has been instrumental in destroying its power in the BORDER STATES, which, in the absence of any market for the BREEDING OF SLAVES or the INTERNAL SLAVE TRADE, have been daily loosening their ties with the South anyhow. In my opinion, therefore, the sole concern of the South will now be defence. But its only chance of success lay in an offensive. If there is confirmation of the news that Hooker is to be given active command of the Potomac Army, McClellan to be 'withdrawn' to the 'theoretical' post of COMMANDER IN CHIEF and Halleck to assume supreme command in the West, the conduct of the war in Virginia might take on a more energetic character. Moreover, the most favourable time of year for the CONFEDERATES is now GONE.
Page me41.420
From the point of view of morale, the failure of the Maryland campaign was of really tremendous importance.
Page me41.420
As regards finance, the UNITED STATES know from the time of the War of Independence, as we know from our observation of Austria, how far one may go with depreciated paper money.†469 The fact remains that the Yankees have never exported so much grain to England as this year, that the present harvest is again far above AVEGARE and that the balance of trade has never been so favourable for them as during the past 2 years. As soon as the new system of taxation (vapid though it is, and truly Pitt-like†450) is introduced, there will, at last, be a REFLUX of paper money, of which there has hitherto only been a steady issue. This will render unnecessary any increase in the issue of paper on the present scale, and further depreciation will thus be CHECKED. What has made even the depreciation prevailing up till now less dangerous than it would have been in similar circumstances in France, or even England, is the fact that the Yankees have never prohibited the existence of two prices, a GOLD PRICE and a PAPER PRICE. The inherent disadvantage of the thing takes the form of a national debt, for which there has never been the appropriate funding, and a PREMIUM FOR JOBBING AND SPECULATION.†470

Page Break me41.421
Page me41.421
When the English boast that their depreciation never exceeded 11 1/2 p.c. (according to others it amounted to more than twice that figure DURING SOME TIME), they choose to forget that they not only continued to pay the old taxes, but every year they paid new ones in addition to the old, so that the REFLUX of bank notes was assured in advance, whereas the Yankees have in effect conducted the war for 1 1/2 years without taxation (except for the greatly reduced import duties) simply by means of repeated issues of paper. Such procedure, which has now reached a turning-point, means that the depreciation is, in fact, still relatively modest.
Page me41.421
The fury with which the Southerners are greeting Lincoln's acts is proof of the importance of these measures.†471 Lincoln's acts all have the appearance of inflexible, clause-ridden conditions communicated by a lawyer to his opposite number. This does not, however, impair their historical import and does, in actual fact, amuse me when, on the other hand, I consider the drapery in which your FRENCHMAN enwraps the merest trifle.
Page me41.421
Like others, I am of course aware of the distasteful form assumed by the movement chez the Yankees; but, having regard to the nature of a 'bourgeois' democracy, I find this explicable. Nevertheless, events over there are such as to transform the world, and nothing in the whole of history is more nauseous than the attitude adopted towards them by the English.
Page me41.421
Regards to Lupus. Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.421
£10 safely received.

Page me41.421
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.422

252
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.422
[London,] 4 November 1862

Dear Engels,

I have just been to see Freiligrath. He will send the 400 talers to Lassalle. You are to send him £60, and he will then advise you of the rate of exchange, etc.

Page me41.422

As to the renewal, there is no difficulty. You can draw for £45 or ANY SUM LESS THAN £60 and send me the bill so that Lassalle can endorse it. Once that is done, it is discountable over here. You can made it payable at 3 months. For the renewal, however, Lassalle's endorsement will be needed and hence cannot be obtained in respect of the present payment. Lassalle himself is awaiting this renewal, having had my letter.†42 Write and let me know at once what is to be done.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.422
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

253
ENGELS TO MARX†369
IN LONDON
Page me41.422
Manchester, 5 November 1862

Dear Moor,

The £60 will go off to Freiligrath tomorrow. I can't say what is to be done about renewing the bill until I know whether the bill will be discountable for certain as soon as Lassalle accepts it, and who will attend to the discounting. On the one hand, it would serve no purpose to worry Lassalle unduly with bills that would not bring you in money immediately, and, on the other, it could hardly be much use to me if Borkheim (to whom the same CONSIDERATIONS apply) sent me the money merely in small DRIBLETS. Then there are the expenses.

Page Break me41.423
Page me41.423
Quant á l'Amérique,†a I, too, of course, believe that the Confederates in Maryland have suffered an unexpected and very significant blow to their morale.†b I am also convinced that the definitive possession of the BORDER STATES will decide the outcome of the war.†c However, I am by no means certain that the affair will develop in as classical a form as you seem to imagine. In spite of all the hullabaloo raised by the Yankees, there is still no sign whatsoever that the people regard the business as being truly a question of their national existence. On the contrary, the successes of the Democrats at the polls prove that the party that is weary of war is growing.†472 If only there were some evidence, some indication, that the masses in the North were beginning to act as in France in 1792 and 1793, everything would be splendid. But the only revolution to be anticipated seems more likely to be a democratic counter-revolution and a hollow peace, which will also divide up the BORDER STATES. That this would not settle the affair by a long chalk — GRANTED. But it might do so temporarily. I must confess I feel no enthusiasm for a people who, faced with an issue as colossal as this, allow themselves to be beaten again and again by a force numbering 1/4 of their own population and who, after 18 months of war, have gained nothing save the discovery that all their generals are jackasses and their functionaries, crooks and traitors. Things must assuredly take a different course, even in a bourgeois republic, if it is not to be landed completely in the soup. What you say about the iniquitous way the English view the affair corresponds entirely to my own opinion.
Page me41.423
The DISTRESS up here is gradually becoming acute. Gumpert tells me that the more serious cases of illness in his hospital are all characteristic of typhoid and that cases of tuberculosis, whose origin can be traced back to the last 8 or 9 months, are rapidly increasing. I imagine that by next month the working people themselves will have had enough of sitting about with a look of passive misery on their faces.
Page me41.423
Kind regards.
Your
F.E.

Page Break me41.424
Page me41.424
A German businessman from Copenhagen, an ex-democrat of 48, called on Freiligrath and, in consequence of a discussion about Schleswig-Holstein, was referred by the latter to Blind.†a I told the man that Blind was an old chatterbox.

Page me41.424

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

254
MARX TO FERDINAND LASSALLE†239
IN BERLIN
Page me41.424
London, 7 November 1862
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Lassalle,

Freiligrath is sending you £60 today, this being the covering amount for the bill. The renewal of the same, about which I advised you when the operation began, will be effected only in so far as Borkheim is in receipt of a bill on you from me at 2 months after date (dated 6th November, hence payable about 9 January 1863) for the sum of 100 talers, or £15.
Page me41.424

From the few lines you wrote me from time to time, I can see that your rancour persists, as, no doubt, the form of the letters was intended to indicate.
Page me41.424

The long and the short of it is that you are both in the right and in the wrong. You ask me to send you a copy of the letter you wrote from Baden.†b For what purpose? So that you could ascertain whether your letter mightn't actually have provided a pretext for the one I wrote to Zurich?†c Granting you all your POWER OF ANALYSIS, can you, with your eyes, detect what was read by my eyes and, more particularly, can you deduce therefrom the conditions under which my eyes were reading? In order to prove to me that I had misread your words, you would have to equate first the readers and then the circumstances of the readers, an equation you would again tackle as Lassalle under Lassallean conditions and not as Marx under Marxian conditions. Hence nothing could come of it but fuel for fresh controversy. How little the POWER OF ANALYSIS helps in such transactions is evident to me from your letter. For you ascribe to me something I didn't mean. Whatever the circumstances, I myself must be the best judge of the latter. The wording of the letter may support your view, but, as to the meaning that lay behind the words, I myself am, de prime abord,†a better informed than you. You hadn't so much as an inkling of what had got my back up, namely the impression gained from reading your letter (wrongly, as I now discover on re-reading it in a more serene frame of mind) that you doubted whether I was acting with Engels' consent. I concede that I made no mention of this in my letter and that, leaving the personal relationship aside and simply having regard to our business relationship, it was an absurd supposition. STILL, IT APPEARED SO TO ME AT THE MOMENT I WROTE TO YOU. I further concede that this, my real grievance, was not expressed, perhaps not even hinted at, in my letter; rather, the ISSUE has been ON A FALSE POINT. Such is the sophistry of all passion.

Page Break me41.425

Page me41.425
So, anyhow, you are in the wrong because of the way you interpreted my letter; I am in the wrong because I wrote it and supplied the materia peccans.†b
Page me41.425
Is there to be an outright split between us because of this? I believe that the substance of our friendship is strong enough to withstand the SHOCK. I confess to you, sans phrase,†c that I, as a man on a powder barrel, permitted myself to be swayed by circumstances in a manner unbecoming to an animal rationale. But, at all events, it would be ungenerous of you, as a jurist and prosecutor, to hold against me a status animi†d in which I would have liked nothing better than to blow my brains out.
Page me41.425
So, I trust that, 'despite everything',†e our old relationship will continue untroubled.
Page me41.425
Since that time I have been on the Continent, in Holland, Trier, etc., in order to arrange my affairs.†460 J'ai abouti á rien.†f
Page me41.425
I had intended to send you the Roscher,†g but discovered that the cost of sending it would be 10/-, the price, if not the actual value, of the Roscher. However, I hope to find an opportunity soon.

Page Break me41.426
Page me41.426
My cousin in Amsterdam†a writes to say that, at his suggestion, your book†b will be discussed at length in the Amsterdam legal journal by their most learned jurist.
Page me41.426
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.426
I have been prevented from doing any work at all on my book†310 for some 6 weeks and am now going ahead, but only with interruptions. However, it will assuredly be brought to a conclusion BY AND BY.

Page me41.426
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften. Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

255
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.426
In haste
London, 9 November [1862]

Dear Engels,
Three of Eccarius' children have died in rapid succession from scarlatina. In addition, his utter poverty. Raise a small sum among your acquaintances and send it to him at 22 Denmark Street, OPPOSITE St. Giles Church.
Page me41.426
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.426
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.427

256
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.427
[London, 14 November 1862]

Dear Engels,
Since you have just sent money to Eccarius and, on top of that, paid out the large sum for Lassalle's bill,†a you will, of course, be very 'blanc'.†b Nevertheless, I must ask you to send me a small sum by Monday,†c for I have to buy coal and 'victuals', which, SINCE the épicier†d has been refusing me credit for the past 3 weeks, I must, nevertheless, buy from him cash down until the swine has been paid off, otherwise I shall be prosecuted.
Page me41.427
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.427

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

257
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.427
Manchester, 15 November 1862

Dear Moor,

You're right, I am very broke and, like the Prussian government, intensely preoccupied with 'saving'. In the hope that, by leading a domesticated life in Hyde Road,†386 I shall be able to make good the deficiency, I enclose herewith a five-pound note, O/L 28076, Manchester, 28 Jan. '62. At the same time, I am sending you a hamper of wine per Chaplin and Horne, containing about one dozen claret and 2 bottles of old 1846 hock for little Jenny, the rest being made up of 1857 hock. 24 bottles in all.

Page Break me41.428
Page me41.428

I am impatiently awaiting the STEAMER that will bring us news of the New York elections. If the Democrats win in New York State, I shan't know what to make of the Yankees any more.†473 That a people placed in a great historical dilemma, and one, in which its very existence is at stake to boot, should turn reactionary en masse and vote for abject surrender after 18 months' fighting, is really beyond my comprehension. Desirable though it may be, on the one hand, that the bourgeois republic should be utterly discredited in America too, so that in future it may never again be preached ON ITS OWN MERITS, but only as a means towards, and a form of transition to, social revolution, it is, nevertheless, annoying that a rotten oligarchy, with a population only half as large, should evince such strength as the great fat, helpless democracy. Should the Democrats win, by the way, it will give the worthy McClellan and the WESTPOINTERS†474 a fine advantage and the show will soon be over. The fellows are capable of concluding peace, should the South agree to rejoin the Union ON CONDITION that the President shall always be a SOUTHERNER and Congress always consist of an equal number of SOUTHERNERS and NORTHERNERS. They are even capable of immediately proclaiming Jefferson Davis President of the UNITED STATES and actually surrendering all the BORDER STATES, if peace is not to be had otherwise. Then it's goodbye to America.
Page me41.428

Besides, the only apparent effect of Lincoln's emancipation†468 so far is that the North-West has voted Democrat for fear of being overrun by Negroes.
Page me41.428

To descend from the sublime to the ridiculous, what do you think of worthy William?†a At last the fellow is himself again; he has expiated his liberal sins and said 'mater peccavi'†b to the crippled Elizabeth.†c In return for this, the Lord has endowed him with strength wherewith to smite the scrofulous mob of liberals†475 and for that, says William, 'for that I need the military'. So rabid is the fellow that even Bismarck is no longer reactionary enough for him. That you're a fool, Schapper, we know and you yourself know, but that you are such a fool, etc., etc. Things are going swimmingly, and what could be better than that, 14 years after 1848, the liberal bourgeoisie should have been landed in the most extreme revolutionary dilemma, and all because of a miserable 6 million talers, or about £850,000 sterling? If only the old jackass doesn't let up again. True, he's fairly going it now, but these Prussians can't be relied on, not even for their stupidity. If things go on as they are, a set-to is absolutely inevitable and, when it really comes to the point, William will be amazed to see just how the 'military' join in, — the common soldiers, that is, who won't thank him for having to fight for a 3 rather than a 2 year spell of service.

Page Break me41.429
Page me41.429
My warm regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.429
Apropos. Will you send me the 4 last Free Presses? I can never get them here unless I fetch them on the proper day which I invariably forget to do.

Page me41.429
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

258
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.429
[London,] 17 November [1862]

Dear Engels,
Best thanks for the £5.
Page me41.429

It seems to me that you take too one-sided a view of the American fracas.†a At the AMERICAN COFFEEHOUSE I have looked through a lot of Southern PAPERS and from them it is plain that the Confederacy is in a very tight corner. The English papers suppressed information on the battle of 'Corinth'†476 The Southern papers depict it as the most exceptional stroke of ill-luck to have befallen them since the call to arms. The State of Georgia has declared the CONFEDERATE 'conscription bill' to be null and void. Virginia, in the person of Floyd THE THIEF, has contested the right of 'Jefferson Davis's creatures' (sic) to continue raising men in that State. Oldham, who represents Texas in the Richmond Congress, has formally protested against the transport to the East, i.e., Virginia, of the South-West's 'crack troops'. From all these DISPUTES two things undeniably emerge:

Page Break me41.430
Page me41.430
That the CONFEDERATE GOVERNMENT has overreached itself in its frantic efforts to fill the ranks of the army;
Page me41.430
that the STATES are asserting 'STATE RIGHTS' vis-á-vis the Confederacy†477 just as the latter made a PRETEXT of them vis-á-vis the Union.
Page me41.430
I consider the victories scored by the Democrats in the North†478 to be a reaction and one which was made all the easier for that conservative and BLACKLEG element by the poor manner in which the Federal Government waged the war and by its FINANCIAL BLUNDERS. For that matter, it's the sort of reaction that occurs in every revolutionary movement and that was so strong at the time of the National Convention, for instance, that the proposal to submit the King's†a death to suffrage universel was considered counter-revolutionary, and so strong under the Directory that Mr Bonaparte I had to bombard Paris.†479
Page me41.430
On the other hand, elections prior to 4 Dec. 1864 will not affect the composition of Congress; hence, they will merely act as a spur to the Republican government, over whose head a sword is hanging. And, in any case, the Republican House of Representatives will make better use of its term of office, if only out of hatred for the opposing party.†480
Page me41.430
As TO McClellan, in his own army he's got Hooker and other Republicans, who would arrest him any day if ordered to do so by the government.
Page me41.430
Add to that the French attempt at intervention†481 which will evoke a reaction against the reaction.
Page me41.430
So things are not, I think, too bad. Rather, what might possibly do damage to my views is the sheeplike attitude of the working men in Lancashire. SUCH A THING HAS NEVER BEEN HEARD OF IN THE WORLD. The more so since those scoundrels of manufacturers themselves don't even pretend to be 'making sacrifices', but are content to leave to the rest of England the honour of keeping their army on its feet — i.e., let the rest of England bear the cost of maintaining their variable capital.

Page me41.430
Of late, England has made more of an ass of itself than ANY OTHER COUNTRY, the working men by their servile Christian nature, the bourgeois and aristocrats by the enthusiasm they have shown for slavery IN ITS MOST DIRECT FORM. But the two manifestations are complementary.

Page Break me41.431
Page me41.431
As TO OUR 'handsome William',†a the chap is IN FACT delectable. Bismarck's government, by the by, is nothing more nor less than the Little German progressists' pious wish come true.†482 They used to rave about the 'man of progress', Louis Bonaparte. Now they see what having a 'Bonapartist' government in Prussia means. After all, Bismarck was in a sense appointed by Bonaparte (and Russia).
Page me41.431
I shall look out the Presses for you.
Page me41.431
Salut (also to the ladies).
Your
K.M.

Page me41.431
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

259
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.431
[London,] 20 November 1862

Dear Engels,
I acknowledge, with many thanks and in great haste, receipt of the first half of the ten-pound note.
Page me41.431
If only the Mexicans (les derniers des hommes!)†b were once more to beat the crapauds,†483 but even in Paris these particular swine — the allegedly radical bourgeois — are now talking of 'l'honneur du drapeau'.†c
Page me41.431

Unless Spence prevails over the NORTHERNERS nothing will do any good, not even McClellan's BAD GENERALSHIP.
Page me41.431
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.431
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.432

260
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH†484
IN LONDON
Page me41.432
[London,] 15 December 1862

Dear Freiligrath,
The £5 returned herewith 'by hand' with my best thanks. You will excuse its arriving 5 days late. The family in Trier was so taken aback by the sudden and unexpected death of my brother-in-law, R. Schmalhausen, that there was some delay over sending me the money.
Page me41.432
I have been spending a few days in Liverpool and Manchester,†485 those CENTRES of COTTONOCRACY AND PRO-SLAVERY ENTHUSIASM. AMONG THE GREAT BULK OF THE MIDDLE-CLASSES AND THE ARISTOCRACY OF THOSE TOWNS YOU MAY OBSERVE THE GREATEST ECLIPSUS OF THE HUMAN MIND EVER CHRONICLED IN THE HISTORY OF MODERN TIMES.
Page me41.432
I shall drop in at your OFFICE for a couple of minutes one of these days, since I also have some LITERARY BUSINESS to talk over with you.
Page me41.432
One of these days, I shall reply to 'les paroles d'un croyant'.†a†486
Page me41.432
Kindest regards from my family to yours.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.432

First published in the supplement to: Franz Mehring, The Freiligrath-Marx Correspondence, Moscow-Leningrad, 1929 (in Russian)

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

261
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.432
[London,] 24 December 1862

Dear Engels,

Since leaving you,†485 I have had A MOST EVENTFUL TIME OF IT.
Page me41.432

On Monday,†b there were the Manichaeans†487 who, however, did not all come by appointment. I shared out £15 among them. I gave the worst one a bill for £12 at 6 weeks' sight (actually 7, since I dated it from the end of this year), trusting to a CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Page Break me41.433
Page me41.433

On Wednesday†a my wife left for Paris. She returned last night. Everything would have been ALL RIGHT if, just before she got there, Abarbanel had not been paralysed by a stroke, which left him helpless and confined to bed, although mentally unaffected. All in all, the series of mishaps that befell her was tragi-comical. First, a great storm at sea her boat got through, another in her immediate vicinity (she travelled via Boulogne) went down. Abarbanel lives outside Paris. My wife went to see him by rail. Something happened to the engine which meant 2 hours delay in the journey. Later, an omnibus in which she was travelling overturned. And yesterday the wheels of the CAB she had taken in London became entangled with those of another. She got out and arrived here per pedes,†b accompanied by 2 boys carrying her luggage. One thing, by the by, was achieved in Paris, where she sow Massol, etc.†c As soon as my work†310 comes out, it will be published in French.
Page me41.433

But now for the worst piece of ill-luck. Marianne (Lenchen's sister†d), whom Allen treated for a heart complaint a year ago, began to feel unwell on the day my wife left. By Tuesday evening, 2 hours before my wife's return, she was dead. During those seven days I, together with Lenchen, was responsible for the nursing. Allen HAD MISGIVINGS FROM THE FIRST DAY. The funeral is at 2 o'clock on Saturday,†e when I shall have to pay the UNDERTAKER £7 10/- in cash. So, this must be got hold of. A fine Christmas show for the poor children.
Page me41.433

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.433
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.434

262
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.434
Manchester, 26 December 1862

Dear Moor,

Lupus gave me your letter†42 yesterday and I send herewith O/I 85335, Manchester, 28 Jan. 1862 £5, Bank of England, M. 97. £5 note of the Boston Bank, payable at Masterman's in London. Unfortunately, old Hill hasn't got £10 in Bank of England notes, but the other one is also CASH.
Page me41.434

The events that took place at your house and during your wife's trip are surprising indeed and, what is more significant, quite exceptionally unlucky. But, in any case, it's excellent news that you should have some prospect of publication in France. How IS THIS TO BE MANAGED? And have you heard from Brockhaus?†a
Page me41.434

I fear the good Burnside will get a drubbing on the Rappahannock.†b He must have a particular proclivity for it, since he seems incapable of deciding to risk more than 40,000 men at one go. I'm surprised, by the way, that the CONFEDERATES should fight there, instead of falling back slowly on Richmond and fighting there; this may yet happen.
Page me41.434

Many regards,
Your
F.E.

Page me41.434
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.435

263
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†488
IN HANOVER
Page me41.435
London, 28 December 1862
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sir,

A while ago, Freiligrath showed me a letter he had received from you.†486 I would have written sooner had not a series of accidents that befell my family rendered me incapable of writing for SOME TIME.

Page me41.435

I was delighted to see from your letter how warm an interest is taken by you and your friends in my critique of political economy. The second part has now at last been finished, i.e. save for the fair copy and the final polishing before it goes to press.†310 There will be about 30 sheets of print. It is a sequel to Part I,†a but will appear on its own under the title Capital, with A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy as merely the subtitle. In fact, all it comprises is what was to make the third chapter of the first part, namely 'Capital in General'.†35 Hence it includes neither the competition between capitals nor the credit system. What Englishmen call 'THE PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY' is contained in this volume. It is the quintessence (together with the first part), and the development of the sequel (with the exception, perhaps, of the relationship between the various forms of state and the various economic structures of society) could easily be pursued by others on the basis thus provided.

Page me41.435

The reasons for the long delay are as follows. In the first place, a great deal of my time in 1860 was taken up with the Vogt rumpus, since I had a lot of research to do on material which was in itself of little interest, besides engaging in lawsuits, etc. In 1861, I lost my chief source of income, the New-York Tribune, as a result of the American Civil War. My contributions to that paper have remained in abeyance up till the present. Thus, I have been, and still am, forced to undertake a large amount of hackwork to prevent myself and my family from actually being relegated to the streets. I had even decided to become a 'practical man' and had intended to enter a railway OFFICE at the beginning of next year. Luckily — or perhaps I should say unluckily? — I did not get the post because of my bad handwriting. So, you will see that I had little time left and few quiet moments for theoretical work. It seems probable that the same circumstances will delay my finishing the book for the printers for longer than I should have wished.

Page Break me41.436

Page me41.436

As regards publishers, on no account shall I give the second volume to Mr Duncker. He was sent the manuscript for Part I in December 1858, and it came out in July or August 1859. There is some, but not a very promising, prospect of Brockhaus publishing the thing. The conspiration de silence with which I am honoured by the German literary rabble as soon as the latter finds out that the thing can't be dismissed with insults is, quite apart from the tendency of my works, unfavourable from the point of view of sales. As soon as I have a fair copy of the manuscript (upon which I shall make a start in January 1863), I shall bring it to Germany myself, it being easier to deal with publishers on a personal basis.

Page me41.436

There is every prospect that, as soon as the German edition appears, arrangements will be made in Paris for a French version. I have absolutely no time to put it into French myself, particularly since I am going either to write the sequel in German, i.e. to conclude the presentation of capital, competition and credit, or condense the first two books for English consumption into one work. I do not think we can count on its having any effect in Germany until it has been given the seal of approval abroad. In the first part, the method of presentation was certainly far from popular. This was due partly to the abstract nature of the subject, the limited space at my disposal, and the aim of the work. The present part is easier to understand because it deals with more concrete conditions. Scientific attempts to revolutionise a science can never be really popular. But, once the scientific foundations are laid, popularisation is easy. Again, should times become more turbulent, one might be able to select the colours and nuances demanded by a popular presentation of these particular subjects. On the other hand, I had certainly expected that, if only for the sake of appearances, German specialists would not have ignored my work so completely. Besides, I had the far from gratifying experience of seeing party friends in Germany, who had long interested themselves in this branch of knowledge and sent me gushing encomia on Part I in private, not lift a finger towards getting a critique or even a list of the contents into such journals as were accessible to them. If these be party tactics, then I must confess that they are an impenetrable mystery to me.

Page Break me41.437
Page me41.437

I should be most grateful if you could write to me occasionally about the situation at home. We are obviously heading for revolution — something I have never once doubted since 1850. The first act will include a by no means gratifying rehash of the stupidities of '48-'49. However, that's how world history runs its course, and one has to take it as one finds it.
Page me41.437

With best wishes for the New Year,
Your
K. Marx

Page me41.437
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 1, 1901-02

Printed according to the original

264
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.437
Manchester, 30 December 1862 252 Hyde Road

Dear Moor,

On Friday I sent you a registered letter containing 10 pounds, £5 in a Bank of England note and £5 in a COUNTRY NOTE of the Boston Bank payable at Masterman & Co., BANKERS, London.†a Having heard nothing from you since, I feel a little uneasy.

Page me41.437

Burnside's defeat is being abominably exaggerated.†489 Clearly it must affect the army's morale, but by no means so badly as if they had been beaten in the open field. The tactical arrangements appear to have been very poor. The flank attack by the left wing would obviously have had to be developed first before the frontal attack went in under Sumner. But this was completely mismanaged. Sumner was evidently in dire trouble before Franklin even had so much as a chance of becoming properly engaged. Again, Burnside seems to have been incapable of making up his mind about his reserves. The successes on the left wing should have persuaded him to send at least part of them there, since, after all, that was evidently where the affair would have to be decided; instead he employed them on his front, and too late even there, namely, 1. as reliefs rather than reinforcements for Sumner's beaten troops, and 2. so close to nightfall that it was dark before half of them were actually engaged. This is, of course, what I have gleaned from the indifferent material in the American papers and without any knowledge of the terrain. However, it seems to me that Burnside would probably have been able to dislodge the rabble merely by means of an outflanking movement, especially since he appears to have had 150,000 men against 100,000. But he was obviously inhibited by the belief that Washington could be protected only so long as the army lay squarely between it and the enemy. However, the stupidity of allowing the Confederates a month in which to consolidate their position and then engaging them in a frontal attack admits of no criticism other than a kick in the arse.

Page Break me41.438

Page me41.438

Mary and Lizzy†a send their regards.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.438

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.439

1863

265
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.439
[London,] 2 January 1863

Dear Frederick,
Happy New Year!
Page me41.439
I've had so much running about to do this week, not to mention SICKNESS, that I never got round to acknowledging receipt of your letter containing the money.†a
Page me41.439
No reply from Brockhaus so far.†b I've heard, by the by, that the 'head of the house', as Bangya used to say, is absent from Leipzig.
Page me41.439
Through Abarbanel, my wife made the acquaintance in Paris of a certain Reclus, who has some sort of a POSITION in economic literature, and also knows German. The said R., together with Massol (an agent in COMMERCE) who doesn't know German, and a number of others, is willing to apply himself to my work.†c They have a Brussels publisher at their disposal. In Paris, party spirit and solidarity still prevail within the parti socialiste. Even chaps like Carnot and Goudchaux are saying that, come the next upheaval, Blanqui ought to be made leader.
Page me41.439
Burnside would seem to have perpetrated grave tactical blunders at the battle of Fredericksburg.†489 He was clearly shy about employing so large a force. But as regards the basic folly, 1. his having waited 26 days, a contributing factor was undoubtedly outright betrayal by the military authorities in Washington. Even the New York CORRESPONDENT of The Times admitted that it was weeks before Burnside received equipment that had been promised at an earlier date†d; 2. the fact that he did, nevertheless, proceed to make this attack is symptomatic of the man's moral weakness. The worthy Tribune was beginning to question his ability and to threaten him with dismissal. Out of enthusiasm and ignorance, that paper is doing a great deal of harm.

Page Break me41.440
Page me41.440
The Democrats and McClellanists naturally howled in unison in order to make the setback seem worse than it was. The 'rumour' that McClellan, 'the Monk' of The Times, has been called to Washington, must be laid at Mr Reuter's door.

Page me41.440

'Politically', the defeat was a good thing. It wouldn't have done for the chaps to have had a stroke of luck before 1 January 1863. Anything in that line might have led to a cancellation of the 'Proclamation'.†468

Page me41.440

The Times and co. are hellish annoyed by the workers' meetings in Manchester, Sheffield, and London.†490 It's excellent that the scales should thus be removed from the Yankees' eyes. Not that Opdyke (MAYOR of New York and POLITICAL ECONOMIST) hadn't already declared at a meeting in New York:

'We know that the English working classes are with us, and that the governing classes of England are against us.'

Page me41.440

I greatly regret that Germany should not be staging similar demonstrations. They cost nothing and are very remunerative 'internationally'. Germany would be all the more justified in doing so in that she is helping the Yankees more in this war than France did in the eighteenth century.†491 It's the same old stupid German failure to emphasise or to vindicate in the eyes of the world what the country really accomplishes.

Page me41.440

Have had a letter from Izzy, together with a pamphlet.†a Contents of letter: I am to send back the Roscher.†b Contents of pamphlet: Continuation of the lecture on the Prussian Constitution.†c Substance: Lassalle is the greatest politician of all time, and of his own in particular. It is Lassalle, AND NO MISTAKE, who has discovered — and this on the basis of a theory untainted by any premises and pure without any qualifications — that the true constitution of a country is not the written one, but consists in the real 'relations of power', etc. Even the Neue Preussische Zeitung and Bismarck and Roon subscribe to 'his' theory, as he proves by means of quotations. Hence his public may rest assured that, just as he has discovered the correct theory, so he is in possession of the correct solution for the 'present time'. And that solution is:

Page Break me41.441

'Since the government continues its military expenditure, etc., despite the resolutions of the Chamber, etc., thus belying the existence of a constitutional government, etc., the Chamber will prorogue until such time as the government declares that it will desist from that expenditure'.†a

Page me41.441

Such is the power of 'stating the facts'. To save them work, he has provided the wording of the decree to be promulgated by the Chamber.

Page me41.441

Old Heiman†b has safely removed to Abraham's bosom.

Page me41.441

Regards and COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON TO THE LADIES.†c

Your

K.M.

Page me41.441
I see that there's been a fall in cotton prices. In my opinion, however, this is only temporary.

Page me41.441
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

266
ENGELS TO MARX†492
IN LONDON
Page me41.441
Manchester, 7 January 1863†d

Dear Moor,
Mary†e is dead. Last night she went to bed early and, when Lizzy†f wanted to go to bed shortly before midnight, she found she had already died. Quite suddenly. Heart failure or an apoplectic stroke. I wasn't told till this morning; on Monday evening†g she was still quite well. I simply can't convey what I feel. The poor girl loved me with all her heart.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.441
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.442

267
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.442
[London,] 8 January 1863

Dear Engels,

The news of Mary's†a death surprised no less than it dismayed me. She was so good-natured, witty and closely attached to you.
Page me41.442
The devil alone knows why nothing but ill-luck should dog everyone in our circle just now. I no longer know which way to turn either. My attempts to raise money in France and Germany have come to nought, and it might, of course, have been foreseen that £15 couldn't help me to stem the avalanche for more than a couple of weeks. Aside from the fact that no one will let us have anything on credit — save for the butcher and baker, which will also cease at the end of this week — I am being dunned for the school fees, the rent, and by the whole gang of them. Those who got a few pounds on account cunningly pocketed them, only to fall upon me with redoubled vigour. On top of that, the children have no clothes or shoes in which to go out. In short, all hell is let loose, as I clearly foresaw when I came up to Manchester†485 and despatched my wife to Paris†b as a last coup de désespoir.†c If I don't succeed in raising a largish sum through a LOAN SOCIETY OR LIFE ASSURANCE (and of that I can see no prospect; in the case of the former society I tried everything I could think of, but in vain. They demand guarantors, and want me to produce receipts for rent and rates, which I can't do), then the household here has barely another two weeks to go.
Page me41.442
It is dreadfully selfish of me to tell you about these horreurs at this time. But it's a homeopathic remedy. One calamity is a distraction from the other. And, au bout du compte,†d what else can I do? In the whole of London there's not a single person to whom I can so much as speak my mind, and in my own home I play the silent stoic to counterbalance the outbursts from the other side. It's becoming virtually impossible to work UNDER SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES. Instead of Mary, ought it not to have been my mother, who is in any case a prey to physical ailments and has had her fair share of life...? You can see what strange notions come into the heads of 'civilised men' under the pressure of certain circumstances.

Page Break me41.443
Page me41.443
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.443
What arrangements will you now make about your ESTABLISHMENT? It's terribly hard for you, since with Mary you had a HOME to which you were at liberty to retreat from the human imbroglio, whenever you chose.†493

Page me41.443
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

268
ENGELS TO MARX†492
IN LONDON
Page me41.443
Manchester, 13 January 1863

Dear Marx,

You will find it quite in order that, this time, my own misfortune and the frosty view you took of it should have made it positively impossible for me to reply to you any sooner.

Page me41.443

All my friends, including philistine acquaintances, have on this occasion, which in all conscience must needs afflict me deeply, given me proof of greater sympathy and friendship than I could have looked for. You thought it a fit moment to assert the superiority of your 'dispassionate turn of mind'. Soit!†a

Page me41.443

You know the state of my finances. You also know that I do all I can to drag you out of the mire. But I cannot raise the largish sum of which you speak, as you must also know. Three things can be done:

Page me41.443

1. LOAN SOCIETY. To what extent my guarantee would serve here remains to be seen — scarcely at all, no doubt, since I am not a HOUSEHOLDER.

Page Break me41.444

Page me41.444

2. Life assurance. John Watts is MANAGER of the European Life & Guarantee Society, of which the London OFFICE is certainly in the DIRECTORY. I don't see what there is to prevent you insuring your life for £400, and he will certainly make you a loan of £200 on the policy, since that is his business. If not completely RUINOUS, this is definitely the best way. So, you had best go straight to him, inquire about the TERMS and then inform me of them straight away.

Page me41.444

3. If the worst comes to the worst, I might be able to raise about £25 in February — certainly not before — and am also prepared to sign a bill for £60, though I have got to have every assurance that it won't have to be paid till after 30 June 1863, i.e. be assured of an extension until then. I must be given the necessary guarantees to that effect. In which case you would have to extract what was lacking from your uncle in Holland†a without fail.

Page me41.444

I can see no other possibility.

Page me41.444

So, let me know what steps you take and I will see to my side of it.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.444
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

269
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.444
[London,] 24 January 1863

Dear Frederick,

I thought it advisable to allow some time to elapse before replying. Your position, on the one hand, and mine, on the other, made it difficult to view the situation 'dispassionately'.

Page me41.444

It was very wrong of me to write you that letter,†b and I regretted it as soon as it had gone off. However, what happened was in no sense due to heartlessness. As my wife and children will testify, I was as shattered when your letter†c arrived (first thing in the morning) as if my nearest and dearest had died. But, when I wrote to you in the evening, I did so under the pressure of circumstances that were desperate in the extreme. The LANDLORD had put a BROKER in my house, the butcher had protested a bill, coal and provisions were in short supply, and little Jenny was confined to bed. GENERALLY, under such CIRCUMSTANCES, my only recourse is cynicism. What particularly enraged me was the fact that my wife believed I had failed to give you an adequate account of the real state of affairs.

Page Break me41.445

Page me41.445

Indeed, your letter was welcome to me in as much as it opened her eyes to the 'non possumus',†a for she knows full well that I didn't wait for your advice before writing to my uncle†b; that I couldn't, in London, have recourse to Watts whose person and OFFICE are both in Manchester; that since Lassalle's latest dunning notice†c I have been unable to draw a bill in London and, lastly, that £25 in February would not enable us to live in January, still less avert the impending crisis. As it was impossible for you to help us, despite my having told you we were in the same plight as the Manchester workers, she could not but recognise the non possumus, and this is what I wanted, since an end has got to be put to the present state of affairs — the long ordeal by fire, ravaging heart and head alike, and, on top of that, the waste of precious time and the keeping up of FALSE APPEARANCES, this last being as harmful to myself as it is to the children. Since then we have been through three weeks such as have at last induced my wife to fall in with a suggestion I had made long ago and which, for all the unpleasantness it involves, not only represents the only way out, but is also preferable to the life we have led for the past three years, the last one in particular, and which will, besides, restore our SELF-ESTEEM.

Page me41.445

I shall write and tell all our creditors (with the exception of the LANDLORD) that, unless they leave me alone, I shall declare myself insolvent by the FAILING OF A BILL IN THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY. This does not, of course, apply to the LANDLORD, who has a right to the furniture, which he may keep. My two elder children†d will obtain employment as GOVERNESSES through the Cunningham family. Lenchen is to enter service elsewhere, and I, along with my wife and little Tussy, shall go and live in the same CITY MODEL LODGING HOUSE in which Red Wolff†e once resided with his family.
Page me41.445

Before coming to this decision, I naturally first wrote to sundry acquaintances in Germany, naturally without result. At all events, this will be better than going on as we are, which is impracticable, in any case. It was as much as I could do, and involved all manner of humiliations, to obtain by dint of false promises the peaceable withdrawal of the LANDLORD and butcher, together with the BROKER and a bill of exchange. I haven't been able to send the children to school for the new term, since the old bill hasn't been paid; nor, for that matter, were they in a presentable state.

Page Break me41.446
Page me41.446

But by adopting the above plan I shall, I think, at least attain tranquillity without intervention of any kind by third parties.
Page me41.446

Finally, a matter unconnected with the above. I'm in considerable doubt about the section in my book that deals with machinery.†494 I have never quite been able to see in what way SELF-ACTORS changed spinning, or rather, since steam power was already in use before then, how it was that the spinner, despite steam power, had to intervene with his motive power.
Page me41.446

I'd be grateful if you could explain this.
Page me41.446

Apropos. Unbeknown to me, my wife wrote and asked Lupus for £1 for IMMEDIATE NECESSITIES. He sent her two. It's distasteful to me, but factum est factum.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me41.446

Abarbanel is dead. Sasonow, too, has died in Geneva.

Page me41.446

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

270
ENGELS TO MARX†237
IN LONDON
Page me41.446
Manchester, 26 January 1863

Dear Moor,

Thank you for being so candid. You yourself have now realised what sort of impression your last letter but one†b had made on me. One can't live with a woman for years on end without being fearfully affected by her death. I felt as though with her†c I was burying the last vestige of my youth. When your letter arrived she had not yet been buried. That letter, I tell you, obsessed me for a whole week; I couldn't get it out of my head. NEVER MIND. Your last letter made up for it and I'm glad that, in losing Mary, I didn't also lose my oldest and best friend.

Page Break me41.447
Page me41.447

To turn to your affairs. Today I went straight to Watts, whom I had believed to be still in London; he does have an OFFICE in London, by the way, at No. 2 Pall Mall. It's no go with him. His company has stopped making loans. He gave me another address. The man is willing but, depending on the circumstances, requires two or even more SURETIES for the interest, premium and repayment. Unfortunately, we can't comply with that. Whom could we find? Gumpert, at most, but it's doubtful whether he would be acceptable. In addition a third person would in any case be required, since neither of us has citizen status and, finally, the EXPENSES are deductible from the LOAN in advance, so that little would be left.
Page me41.447

It then occurred to me to sell part of the yarn bought on spec and, instead of repaying the amount to Ermen (to whom the money belongs), send it to you. This might possibly have worked, since the matter wouldn't have come up for discussion until July and much can change in the meantime. But NO CHANCE. Today the market is so flat that I would have had to sell at a loss rather than a profit and might not even have managed to make a sale at all this week.
Page me41.447

I can't borrow any money. E. might, and probably would, refuse me, and I can't lay myself open to that. To borrow from a third party up here, a usurer, would mean giving E. the best of reasons for releasing himself from his contract with me. And yet, I can't stand by and see you carrying out the plan you told me about in your letter.†a I therefore had a go at old Hill's bills, helped myself to the enclosed for £100 on John Rapp & Co., due 28 February, and endorsed it in your favour. I don't imagine it will come to light before July, and then we'll have a further reprieve. It is an exceedingly daring move on my part, for I'm now certain to incur a deficit, but the risk must be taken. I assure you I should never have dared do it had not Charles,†b who had drawn up a sort of balance sheet covering all items over the last six months, told me this afternoon that in my case the thing works out at approx. £30 á £50 more than I might have expected. I have made about £330 á £350 during the six months.

Page Break me41.448
Page me41.448

But equally you yourself must now realise that, as a result of the unusual exertions I have had to make since 30 June 1862, I have really been drained dry and you shouldn't therefore count on any remittances at all from me until 30 June, save perhaps for trifling amounts. What the prospects will be after 30 June God only knows, for we're earning nothing at the moment, since the market is no longer rising.
Page me41.448

The bill itself is as good as CASH. Freiligrath will be delighted to discount it for you; there's very little paper better than that in circulation. But be so kind as to acknowledge receipt; a great deal of mail is being stolen just now and, since you're not in COMMERCE, anyone can pass himself off as Dr K.M.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.448
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

271
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.448
[London,] 28 January 1863

Dear Frederick,

A strange concatenation of events made it quite impossible for me to write to you yesterday to acknowledge receipt of your letter enclosing the bill.
Page me41.448

I am well aware what a risk you were running in thus affording us such great and unexpected help. I can't tell you how grateful I am, although I myself, in my inner forum, did not require any fresh proof of your friendship to convince me of its self-sacrificing nature. If, by the by, you could have seen my children's joy, it would have been a fine reward for you.

Page me41.448

I can tell you now, too, without beating about the bush that, despite the straits I've been in during the past few weeks, nothing oppressed me so much as the fear that our friendship might be severed. Over and over again, I told my wife that the mess we were in was as nothing to me compared with the fact that these bourgeois pinpricks and her peculiar exasperation had, at such a moment, rendered me capable of assailing you with my private needs instead of trying to comfort you. Domestic peace was CONSEQUENTLY much disrupted, and the poor woman had to suffer for something of which she was in fact innocent, for women are wont to ask for the impossible. She did not, of course, have any inkling of what I had written, but a little reflection should have told her that something of the kind must be the result. Women are funny creatures, even those endowed with much intelligence. In the morning my wife wept over Marie†a and your loss, thus becoming quite oblivious to her own misfortunes, which culminated that very day, and in the evening she felt that, except for us, no one in the world was capable of suffering unless they had children and the BROKER in the house.

Page Break me41.449
Page me41.449

In my last letter I asked you about the SELF-ACTOR.†b The question, you see, is as follows: In what way, before its invention, did the so-called spinner intervene? I can explain the SELF-ACTOR, but not the state of affairs that preceded it.
Page me41.449

I am inserting certain things into the section on machinery.†494 There are some curious questions which I originally failed to deal with. To elucidate these, I have re-read all my note-books (excerpts) on technology†495 and am also attending a practical (purely experimental) course for working men given by Prof. Willis (in Jermyn Street, the Institute of Geology, where Huxley also lectured). For me, mechanics presents much the same problem as languages. I understand the mathematical laws, but the simplest technical reality that calls for ocular knowledge is more difficult for me than the most complicated combinations.
Page me41.449

You may or may not know, for of itself the thing's quite immaterial, that there is considerable controversy as to what distinguishes a machine from a tool. After its own crude fashion, English (mathematical) mechanics calls a TOOL A SIMPLE MACHINE and a MACHINE A COMPLICATED TOOL. English technologists, however, who take rather more account of economics, distinguish the two (and so, accordingly, do many, if not most, English economists) in as much as in one case the MOTIVE POWER emanates from man, in the other from A NATURAL FORCE. From this, the German jackasses, who are great on little matters like this, have concluded that a plough, for instance, is a machine, and the most complicated JENNY,†496 etc., in so far as it is moved by hand, is not. However, if we take a look at the machine in its elementary form, there can be no doubt that the industrial revolution originates, not from motive power, but from that part of machinery called the WORKING MACHINE by the English, i.e. not from, say, the use of water or steam in place of the foot to move the spinning wheel, but from the transformation of the actual spinning process itself, and the elimination of that part of human labour that was not mere EXERTION OF POWER (as in treadling a wheel), but was concerned with processing, working directly on the material to be processed. Nor, on the other hand, can there be any doubt that, once we turn our attention from the historical development of machinery to machinery on the basis of the present mode of production, the only decisive factor is the working machine (e.g. in the case of the sewing-machine). For, as everyone knows today, once this process is mechanised, the thing may be moved, according to size, either by hand, water or a steam-engine.

Page Break me41.450
Page me41.450

To those who are merely mathematicians, these questions are of no moment, but they assume great importance when it comes to establishing a connection between human social relations and the development of these material modes of production.
Page me41.450

Re-reading my technological and historical excerpts has led me to the conclusion that, aside from the invention of gunpowder, the compass and printing — those necessary prerequisites of bourgeois progress — the two material bases upon which the preparatory work for mechanised industry in the sphere of manufacturing was done between the sixteenth and the mid-eighteenth century, i.e. the period during which manufacturing evolved from a handicraft to big industry proper, were the clock and the mill (initially the flour mill and, more specifically, the water mill), both inherited from Antiquity. (The water mill was brought to Rome from Asia Minor in Julius Caesar's time.) The clock was the first automatic device to be used for practical purposes, and from it the whole theory of the production of regular motion evolved. By its very nature, it is based on a combination of the artist-craftsman's work and direct theory. Cardan, for instance, wrote about clock-making (and provided practical instructions). German sixteenth-century writers describe clock-making as a 'scientific (non-guild) handicraft', and, from the development of the clock, it could be shown how very different is the handicraft-based relation between book-learning and practice from that, e.g., in big industry. Nor can there be any doubt that it was the clock which, in the eighteenth century, first suggested the application of automatic devices (in fact, actuated by springs) in production. It is historically demonstrable that Vaucanson's experiments in this field stimulated the imagination of English inventors to a remarkable extent.

Page Break me41.451
Page me41.451

In the case of the mill, on the other hand, the essential distinctions in the organism of a machine were present from the outset, i.e. as soon as the water mill made its appearance. Mechanical motive power. Primo,†a the motor for which it had been waiting. The transmission mechanism. Lastly, the working machine, which handles the material, each existing independently of the others. It was upon the mill that the theory of friction was based, and hence the study of the mathematical forms of gear-wheels, cogs, etc.; likewise, the first theory of measurement of the degree of motive power, the best way of applying it, etc. Since the middle of the seventeenth century almost all great mathematicians, in so far as they have concerned themselves with the theory and practice of mechanics, have taken the simple, water-driven flour mill as their point of departure. Indeed, this was why the words Mühle and MILL, which came to be used during the manufacturing period, were applied to all driving mechanisms adapted for practical purposes.

Page me41.451

But in the case of the mill, as in that of the press, the forge, the plough, etc., the actual work of hammering, crushing, milling, tilling, etc., is done from the outset without human labour, even though the MOVING FORCE be human or animal. Hence this type of machinery is very old, at least in its origins, and, in its case, mechanical propulsion proper was applied at an earlier date. Hence it is virtually the only kind of machinery that occurs during the manufacturing period as well. The industrial revolution began as soon as mechanical means were employed in fields where, from time immemorial, the final result had called for human labour and not therefore — as in the case of the above-mentioned tools — where the actual material to be processed had never, within living memory, been directly connected with the human hand; where, by the nature of things and from the outset, man has not functioned purely as POWER. If, like the German jackasses, one insists that the application of animal POWERS (which is just as much voluntary motion as the application of human powers) constitutes machinery, then the application of this form of locomotor is far older than the simplest of manual tools in any case.

Page me41.451

Izzy, as was inevitable, has sent me the speech he made in his defence (has been sentenced to four months) before the court.†497 Macte puer virtute.†b To begin with, that braggart has had the pamphlet you've got, the speech on 'the workers' estate', reprinted in Switzerland with the pompous title Workers' Programme.†498

Page Break me41.452

Page me41.452

As you know, the thing's no more nor less than a badly done vulgarisation of the Manifesto†a and of other things we have advocated so often that they have already become commonplace to a certain extent. (For instance, the fellow calls the working class an 'estate'.)

Page me41.452

WELL. In his speech before the Berlin court, he had the effrontery to say:

'I further maintain that this pamphlet is not just a scientific work like so many others, a mere compendium of ready-made answers, but that it is, in very many respects, a scientific achievement, an exposé of new scientific ideas.... I have ushered into the world comprehensive works in varied and difficult fields of scholarship, sparing myself neither pains nor nocturnal vigils in my endeavour to enlarge the frontiers of scholarship as such, and I may, perhaps, say with Horace: militavi non sine gloria.†b But this I myself tell you: Never, not even in my most comprehensive works, have I penned a single line that was reasoned with more rigorous scholarship than was this production from its first page to its last.... Cast an eye, therefore, on the contents of this pamphlet. The contents are nothing less than a philosophy of history, compressed into 44 pages.... It is an exposé of the objective, reasoning thought process, which has underlain European history for more than a millennium now, a discovery of the innermost soul, etc.'

Page me41.452

Is not this the most egregious effrontery? The fellow evidently thinks himself destined to take over our stock-in-trade. And withal, how absurdly grotesque!

Page me41.452

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.452

Get Lupus to give you today's Star, and take a look at the letters it has reprinted from The Morning Herald on the subject of The Times and Delane.

Page me41.452

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.453

272

MARX TO ENGELS†369

IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.453

[London,] 13 February 1863

Dear Frederick,

I enclose divers Urquhartiana. Of late, the fellows have really distinguished themselves by their stupidity. Take, for example, their 'philosophy' with regard to the movement in the UNITED STATES.†a

Page me41.453

I'd have written before now, but for some twelve days I've been STRICTLY forbidden all reading, writing, or smoking. I had some kind of inflammation of the eye, combined with a most obnoxious affection of the nerves of the head. Things have improved to such an extent that I am venturing to write again for the first time at this moment. In between whiles I indulged in all manner of psychological fantasies about what it would feel like to be blind or insane.

Page me41.453

What do you think of the Polish business?†499 This much is certain, the ERA OF REVOLUTION has now FAIRLY OPENED IN EUROPE once more. And the general state of affairs is good. But the comfortable DELUSIONS and almost childish enthusiasm with which we welcomed the revolutionary era before February 1848, have gone by the board. Old comrades such as Weerth, etc., are no more, others have fallen by the wayside or gone to the bad and, if there is new stock, it is, at least, not yet in evidence. Moreover, we now know what role stupidity plays in revolutions, and how they are exploited by blackguards. Incidentally, the 'Prussian' enthusiasts for the 'Italian' and 'Hungarian' nationalities†500 are already finding themselves in a fix. The 'Prussians' are not going to deny their Russian sympathies. This time, let us hope, the lava will flow from East to West and not in the opposite direction, so that we shall be spared the 'honour' of the French initiative. Apart from that, the adventure in Mexico is providing a truly classical epilogue to the farce of the LOWER EMPIRE.†501

Page me41.453

The 'Herzenian' soldiers†502 appear to be setting about things in the traditional manner. However, there's little to be deduced therefrom, either in respect of the masses in Russia, or EVEN the bulk of the Russian Army. We know what was done by the 'intelligent bayonets'†503 of the French, not to mention our own Rhineland ruffians in Berlin in 1848. But at present you should WATCH The Bell, for Herzen et cie. now have the chance to demonstrate their revolutionary integrity — in so far as it is compatible with Slav PREDILECTIONS.

Page Break me41.454

Page me41.454

The Urquhartites will probably say that the Polish insurrection was stirred up by the St. Petersburg cabinet as a 'diversion' from Urquhart's INTENDED INVASION OF THE CAUCASUS.†504

Page me41.454

In the UNITED STATES things are going damned slowly. I hope that J. Hooker will extricate himself.†505

Page me41.454

Well, make sure you first let me know what you're doing with yourself in Manchester now. It must be a damned lonely place for you. I know from my own experience how the region round Soho Square still sends a shiver down my spine if I happen to be anywhere near there.†506

Page me41.454

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me41.454

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

273
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.454
London 17 February [1863]

Dear Frederick,

I am really worried by your silence. I hope you aren't ill. Conversely, I hope I haven't again given offence malgré moi.†a If, in my letter, acknowledging the £100, I discussed machinery, etc.,†b this was really done to divert you, and distract you from your misery.

Page Break me41.455
Page me41.455

The Polish business and Prussia's intervention†507 do indeed represent a combination that impels us to speak. Not in person, partly so as to avoid any appearance of competing with the student Blind,†a partly so as not to deny ourselves entry to Germany. But the Workers' Society here would serve well for the purpose. A manifesto should be issued in its name,†508 and issued IMMEDIATELY. You must write the military bit — i.e. on Germany's military and political interest in the restoration of Poland. I shall write the diplomatic bit.
Page me41.455

Well, OLD BOY, let me have an answer and, if you've got anything on your mind, SPEAK OUT LIKE A MAN in the assurance that no one takes a warmer interest in your weal and woe than does

Your Moor

Page me41.455
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

274
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.455
Manchester, 17 February 1863

Dear Moor,

You must excuse my long silence. I was in a very forlorn state, and it was high time I extricated myself from it. I tried Slavonic languages but the loneliness was unbearable. I had to force myself to seek distraction. That helped, and I am now my old self again.

Page me41.455

The Poles are really splendid fellows. If they manage to hold out until 15 March, there'll be a general conflagration in Russia. At first, I was devilish afraid the business might go wrong. But now there would seem to be almost more chance of victory than of defeat. Nor should it be forgotten that the younger members of the Polish emigration have a military literature of their own in which all matters are discussed with special reference to Polish conditions, or that, in that literature, the idea of guerrilla warfare in Poland plays a leading role and is discussed in great detail.†509 Oddly enough, the only two leaders to have been named so far are Frankowski, a Warsaw Jew, and Langiewicz, a Prussian lieutenant. The Russian messieurs, in view of their ineptitude, are bound to suffer appallingly as a result of guerrilla warfare.

Page Break me41.456

Page me41.456

Have you seen that Bakunin and Mieroslawski are dubbing one another liars, and are at loggerheads over the Russo-Polish frontiers? I have ordered†a the Kolokol, from which I shall presumably find out more about it.†510 Incidentally, I shall have to do some hard swotting before I can work my way through it again.

Page me41.456

The Prussians are behaving infamously as always.†507 Monsieur Bismarck knows that it will be a matter of life and death for him if there's revolution in Poland and Russia. Not that there's any hurry over Prussian intervention. So long as it's not necessary, the Russians won't permit it, and when it does become necessary, the Prussians will take care not to go.

Page me41.456

If things go wrong in Poland, then we shall probably face a year or two of acute reaction, for in that case the Pravoslavnyj TSar' †b would again become head of a Holy Alliance,†511 which last would again cause Monsieur Bonaparte to be looked on as a great liberal and champion of nations by the stupid crapauds.†c Apropos, how funny it is to see the entire English bourgeoisie pitching into Boustrapa,†167 now that Kinglake has made public a small, improperly digested and improperly heard fragment of the same tittle-tattle about him and his LOT†d as we've been telling them for ten years without their believing us. Revelations about the court in Paris are again becoming quite the rage and, in the Guardian, Mr Tom Taylor†e is portentously dishing up all that stuff re la Solms, Bonaparte, Wyse, the Jecker affair, etc., that we've long known far more about. There's only one thing of interest, namely that Jecker had already supplied money for the Strasbourg or the Boulogne conspiracy — which, Taylor doesn't know. This, then, accounts for the connection.

Page me41.456

Things don't look too good in YANKEELAND. Indeed, by a stroke of irony not uncommon in world history, the Democrats have, in the eyes of the philistines, now become the WAR-PARTY while the bankrupt poetaster Ch. Mackay is once more thoroughly discredited. I also hear from private sources in New York that the North is continuing to arm at a quite unprecedented rate. But, on the other hand, signs of moral prostration are daily more in evidence and the inability to win grows daily greater. Where is the party whose victory and avénement†a would be synonymous with prosecuting the war á outrance†b and with every available means? The people have been cheated, more's the pity, and it's lucky that peace is a physical impossibility or they'd have concluded it long since, if only so that they could again devote themselves to the ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

Page Break me41.457
Page me41.457
A Confederate major who took part in the fighting at Richmond†458 as a member of Lee's staff, recently told me that, according to documents which Lee himself showed him, the REBELS had no fewer than 40,000 STRAGGLERS at the end of this battle! In particular, he spoke with great respect of the FEDERALS' western regiments, but is in other ways a jackass.†c

Page me41.457
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

275
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.457
Manchester, 19 February 1863

Dear Moor,
As regards Poland I am entirely of your opinion.†d I've been toying with the idea of a pamphlet for the past fortnight. However, your suggestion is better, as it means that the diplomatic stuff goes in at the same time and it's an advantage to do the thing together.
Page me41.457
How many sheets is the whole to amount to and how many of those do you think ought to be devoted to my bit? The form it takes will more or less depend on this. Who will print it? And when will your bit be ready for printing?

Page Break me41.458

Page me41.458
About machinery†a anon.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.458
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

276
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.458
[London,] 20 February 1863

DEAR FREDERICK,
I think our best course re the Polish business would be as follows:
Page me41.458
The proclamation for the workingmen, i.e. in the name of the Society,†508 should amount to one sheet of print at most, military and political TOGETHER. So, write that first. I shall then fit mine in. The Society will print this.
Page me41.458
However, it would also be a good idea for us to deal with the subject in greater detail in a pamphlet,†512 and there you must determine the number of sheets entirely in accordance with the material. The diplomatic bit, which I am READY to do at any time, would in fact only be an appendix. As TO a publisher, I intend to write to Hanover IMMEDIATELY you advise me of the number of sheets.
Page me41.458
Apropos, send me a power of attorney for Bucher re Duncker, apropos Po and Rhine.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me41.458
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.459

277
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.459
[Manchester, about 21 February 1863]

Dear Moor,

I shall send you the stuff for the manifesto†a — quite brief —, but it is pretty sure to contain a good deal that partly encroaches on your province — you will have to deal with this.

Page me41.459

Ad vocem†b pamphlet: I thought of dividing the thing up as follows: 1. Russia's military position vis-á-vis the West and South before, 2. ditto after, the 3 partitions of Poland, 3. ditto after 1814,†513 4. the attitude of Russia and Germany after the restoration of Poland. (Something will have to be said here about Prussian Poland, linguistic boundaries, and the statistical proportions of the mixed population.) All in all, at most 3-4 sheets; title: Germany and Poland. Political-Military Considerations on the Occasion of the Polish Uprising of 1863.†512 It would then be up to you to go over your notes in the meantime and prepare them to the extent of being able, immediately on receipt of the ms., either to fit them in at the appropriate places or include them as an appendix and refer to them as necessary. If you have any further observations to make about this, write and tell me as soon as possible so that I can bear them in mind.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.459
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.460

278
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.460
[London,] 21 February 1863

Dear Engels,

At the HEIGHT of my own crisis I wrote to Dronke.†42 ABOUT A MONTH AFTER that, I had a letter from him to say that he had been away. Yesterday, he turned up here unexpectedly and left today after a further meeting.

Page me41.460

He told me (the initiative was his) that he wanted to help raise a substantial sum so that I could work in peace for a year. He then mentioned you. I told him (I didn't think it necessary to go into detail on this occasion) that you had done a great deal and would not have a penny to spare for many months TO COME.†a His rejoinder: 'It's not a question of months but of one to two years.' He is to discuss the matter with you personally.

Page me41.460

To what extent all this should be taken seriously or is simply bragging, you will best be able to judge for yourself.

Page me41.460

Apropos. My 'liver' is very swollen, add to which I have twinges of pain when I cough and feel some discomfort when pressure is applied. Will you inquire from Gumpert about a household remedy. If I go to Allen, the upshot will be a complete course of treatment and for that, quite apart from numerous other considerations, I have no time just now.

Page me41.460

My chief anxiety about the Polish affair†499 is that beastly Bonaparte will find a pretext for moving up to the Rhine and extricate himself from a nasty situation again.

Page me41.460

Send me (since you have more material to hand on the subject) a few notes (detailed) on the conduct of Frederick William the Just†b in the year 1813 after Napoleon's failure in Russia. This time we must go for the dismal House of Hohenzollern.

Page me41.460

I left Dronke in doubt as to whether the second volume was already being printed or not.†310

Page me41.460

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me41.461

Page me41.461

I have just noticed in the 2ND EDITION of The Times that the Prussian Second Chamber has finally done something worthwhile.†514 We shall soon have revolution.

Page me41.461

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

279
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.461
[London,] 24 March 1863

Dear Frederick,

You must know that for the past few weeks eye trouble has almost entirely prevented me from reading or writing. Hence the need to make up for lost time by some hard slogging. Hinc†a my silence.
Page me41.461

Dronke has sent me £50.
Page me41.461

The enclosed letter from Dr Kugelmann, which kindly return, will show you what muddle-headed fellows these German 'party members' are. My work on economics†310 'isn't opportune' and yet I am expected, for the sake of the cause, to carry on with the whole business after this volume has appeared, merely for the theoretical satisfaction of a few high-minded souls. What I am expected to live on while engaged in my 'inopportune works' is not, of course, a question these gentry worry their heads about for one moment.†515
Page me41.461

The Langiewicz affair is disgusting.†516 But I am hoping that it won't put paid to the business yet, even temporarily. Meanwhile, I am deferring the work on Poland†512 so as to be able to see EVENTS when they have reached a rather more advanced stage.
Page me41.461

Politically, the view I have reached is this: that Vincke and Bismarck do, in fact, accurately represent the principle of the Prussian State; that the 'State' of Prussia (a very different creature from Germany) cannot exist either without Russia as she is, or with an independent Poland. The whole history of Prussia leads one to this conclusion which was drawn long since by Messrs Hohenzollern (Frederick II included). This princely consciousness is infinitely superior to the limited mentality of the subject that marks your Prussian liberal. Since, therefore, the existence of Poland is necessary to Germany and completely incompatible with the State of Prussia, the State of Prussia must be erased from the map. Or the Polish question simply provides further occasion for proving that it is impossible to prosecute German interests so long as the Hohenzollerns' own state continues to exist. Down with Russian hegemony over Germany means just the same as away with mischief, with the old sodomite's brood.†a

Page Break me41.462
Page me41.462

What strikes me as very significant about the latest turn of events in America is the fact that they are again proposing to hand out letters of marque.†517 Quoad†b England, this will put an entirely different complexion on the matter and may, UNDER FAVOURABLE CIRCUMSTANCES, lead to war with England, so that self-satisfied John Bull will find not only his COTTON but also his CORN WITHDRAWN from under his nose. At the beginning of the CIVIL WAR Seward had, off his own bat, had the presumption to accept the resolutions of the 1856 Congress of Paris as provisionally valid for America, too. (This came to light with the publication of the despatches concerning the Trent affair.)†518 In Washington, Congress and Lincoln, enraged at the OUTFITTING OF SOUTHERN PIRATES in Liverpool, etc., have now put an end to the lark. This has greatly alarmed the Stock Exchange here, though the faithful hounds of the press are obeying orders, of course, and not mentioning the affair in the papers.
Page me41.462

You will doubtless have noted with satisfaction how Pam, the old scoundrel, is playing precisely the same game as in 1830/31†519 (I have compared his speeches) and likewise getting The Times to play it.†c This time the progress of the affair is SO FAR GOOD. Louis Bonaparte is about to find himself in the soup (when this happened to the luckless Louis Philippe in 1831 the whole of Europe suffered) and IN A VERY UGLY DILEMMA WITH HIS OWN ARMY. Mexico†411 and those genuflections before the Tsar in the Moniteur (into which Boustrapa†167 was pushed by Pam) might well cost him his neck. So great was his alarm that he ordered the publication of the despatches demonstrating that his good will had been thwarted by Pam alone. (Although his CASE was identical, the luckless Louis Philippe went so far as to allow the impudent Pam to claim in Parliament that 'if it were not for the perfidy of the French and the intervention of Prussia, Poland would still exist'.) He believes that he will thereby influence PUBLIC OPINION in England, as though the latter were not satisfied with Pam's SOP to the effect that Bonaparte wanted to reach the Rhine! And as though Pam did not manufacture three-quarters of this PUBLIC OPINION himself! The wretched Plon-Plon hadn't the courage to say that Pam was working for Russia; rather, he maintains that wicked Russia is seeking to foment discord between France and England!†520 Here once again I recognise the very image of my homme du Bas Empire,†a†501 the wretched fellow who never dares stage his coups d'état au delá des frontiéres†b without the permission of Europe's Supreme Authority. Had the wretched fellow the courage to tell the unvarnished truth about Pam (or simply threaten to do so), he could saunter up to the Rhine undisturbed. But now he has bound himself hand and foot, thus delivering himself completely into Pam's power, as did Louis Philippe before him. Much good may it do him.

Page Break me41.463
Page me41.463

The goings-on in Staleybridge and Ashton are very cheering.†521 So the double chins and pot-bellies have at last ceased to 'respect' the prolétaires. Edmund Potter†c makes a great fool of himself today in The Times†d which, faced with the unpopularity it now enjoys in such large measure, POUNCES UPON THAT ASS in order to CATCH a ha'pennyworth of popularity.†e
Page me41.463

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.463
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.464

280
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.464
Manchester, 8 April 1863

Dear Moor,

I have been meaning to write to you for the past six days and have been continually prevented from doing so. Especially by the worthy Eichhoff. The poor devil allowed himself to be so thoroughly cheated in Liverpool by Prussian lieutenants on the run and commercial swindlers that he has become responsible for about £100's worth of debts OVER AND ABOVE the capital that was thrown down the drain, not by him, but by his partner. He'd come here, he said, to stay for some time and would accept any post that was offered him; he was making a great mystery of what he was doing here, etc. However, it soon became apparent that, instead of looking round for posts, he was engaging in all kinds of mysterious agency transactions and it's now plain to me that he is conducting a BLOCKADE-RUNNING BUSINESS TO THE CONFEDERATE STATES on behalf of little Dronke, who is very deeply involved in this line. Hence all the secrecy, though the GREENNESS of our friend is such (it is really beyond all bounds) that the secret keeps leaking out all the time. Enfin,†a the chap has little to do just now, and I'm often saddled with him in the afternoons. Since he refuses to be straightforward with me, I can't, of course, do anything much to help him, save in cases where he actually asks my advice.
Page me41.464

I fear the Polish business is going wrong.†499 Langiewicz's defeat†516 would already seem to have made its mark in the Kingdom.†b The Lithuanian movement is by far the most important because 1. it extends beyond the borders of Congress Poland†522 and 2. because the peasants here play a greater part and the thing, if one looks towards Kurland, becomes unmistakably agrarian but unless this movement makes good progress and revives that in the Kingdom, I don't imagine the prospects are very considerable. Langiewicz's conduct seems to me as very dubious. Which party first broke the contract of alliance — which was absolutely essential to the success of the uprising — it will be difficult to establish. But it would be interesting to know how much truth there is in the rumours that link Mieroslawski, on the one hand, and Ko&sa;cielski, on the other, with Plon-Plon.†a If I'm not mistaken, Branicki has long since been a Plonplonist.

Page Break me41.465
Page me41.465
The worthy Kugelmann certainly seems to have the most wonderfully magnanimous plans for you. That men of genius must also eat, drink and be housed and even pay for these things, is much too prosaic a notion for these honest Germans, and to suspect them of so much as harbouring it would be virtually tantamount to an insult. I should like to find out who the know-all was who confided to him that I have disowned my book.†523 You will doubtless enlighten the good man on this score. As to the new edition (which, according to the same premises, would certainly be ANYTHING BUT opportune), this is not a suitable moment in any case, now that the English proletariat's revolutionary energy has all but completely evaporated and the English proletarian has declared himself in full agreement with the dominancy of the bourgeoisie.
Page me41.465
I have read the new things by Lyell and Huxley,†b both very interesting and pretty good. Lyell has some rhetoric but also some fine witty remarks, e.g. where, having vainly quoted all the naturalists in an attempt to establish the qualitative difference between men and apes, he finally quotes the Archbishop of Canterbury†c as asserting that man differs from beasts by virtue of religion. Apropos, just now the old faith here is being well and truly sniped at, and from all sides. It will soon be found necessary to concoct a platitudinous system of rationalism for the protection of religion. Owen got someone to reply to Huxley in The Edinburgh Review: the answer conceded all the essential facts of the case and took issue only with the phraseology.†d
Page me41.465
Little Dronke evidently thought there was something tremendously heroic in his intention to raise £250 with his banker on my acceptance and actually pay the expenses and interest, amounting to less than £15, himself. My refusal, when confronted with such heroism, to undertake to provide the £250 within a year — you're the best judge of why I couldn't do so†e — struck him as mesquin†f in the extreme. I assure you that, but for you, I would have kicked the little blackguard in the arse. I was so annoyed that I got tight and while still in a state of tightness wrote you a furious letter†232 on the subject, which doubtless contained some pretty splendid stuff, for I have absolutely no recollection of what I wrote. I merely mention the matter now, so that you can view it in its proper context.

Page Break me41.466
Page me41.466
Vale.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.466
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

281
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.466
London, 9 April 1863

Dear Frederick,

Little Tussy was delighted with the letter and its contents and cannot be dissuaded from replying in 'person'.

Page me41.466

I have known all about Mieroslawski's Plonplonism†524 for years now through J. Ph. Becker and Schily. Anyway, I had deduced it even earlier from a book he published during the last Russo-Turkish war.†a One of the things the magnanimous fellow proposed therein was the partition of Germany into 2 countries. But I've never heard anything of the kind in connection with Ko&sa;cielski. As for M.'s ludicrous vanity and boundless credulity the minute his vanity is tickled, Becker sent me a highly comical account of it from Italy in 1860.

Page me41.466

Izzy has already brought out 2 more pamphlets about his trial†b;

Page Break me41.467

luckily he has not sent them to me. On the other hand, the day before yesterday I received his open reply to the central working men's committee for the Leipzig working men's (read louts') congress.†525 He gives himself all the airs of a future working men's dictator — self-importantly dispensing the phrases he has borrowed from us. He solves the wages v. capital problem 'with delightful ease' (verbotenus†a). The workers, that is, are to agitate for general suffrage, after which they are to send people like himself into the Chamber of Deputies, armed 'with the naked sword of science'. Next they organise workers' factories, for which the state advances the capital and, BY AND BY, these institutions spread throughout the country. This, at any rate, is surprisingly new! Let me quote a sentence for you:

'If, today, a German labour movement is already discussing the question as to whether the association should be conceived in the light of his' (Schulze-Delitzsch's) 'ideas or of mine, the merit is largely his; and that is where his true merit lies — a merit which cannot be esteemed too highly.... The cordiality with which I acknowledge that merit should not prevent us, etc.'

Page me41.467

Ça ira†b!

Page me41.467

At the very time when Palmerston was in Glasgow, another great man announced his coming, the student Karl Blind. Prior to his arrival, he sent an item to the Glasgow North British Mail under the heading 'M. Karl Blind', beneath which the paper had inserted the ominous word 'COMMUNICATED'.

Page me41.467

This remarkable communiqué — written by himself, like all the items about him circulating in the press, and inserted in the paper by that jackass McAdam — opens with the following unique introduction:

*'At the present moment when a patriot exile is about to visit Glasgow, for the purpose of bringing under public notice the merits of the Polish question, it is fitting that a few remarks should be made upon his political career, and more especially so from the unfortunate fact that he is comparatively unknown in Scotland. German by birth and German by exile, Mr Karl Blind's efforts have not come so prominently and so persistently before Europe as to have gained for him universal admiration from the liberating party, or universal execration from the oppressing party. He has hitherto stood in that middle way, where he has the honour of being both beloved and hated; but in these two contending ranks which have rendered to him their tribute after its kind the whole of Europe is not ranged, Mr Karl Blind having the satisfaction of knowing there is a third section of his friends who are simply indifferent. He therefore comes before the

Page Break me41.468

Scottish public with perhaps less prejudice against him than has been the case with most of the distinguished exiles who preceded him'.*†a

Page me41.468

There follows a short biographical note on the GREAT UNKNOWN in which Scotland and 'THE THIRD SECTION' OF MANKIND are informed that the said 'MR KARL BLIND' IS A NATIVE OF BADEN, AND WAS ORIGINALLY, LIKE KOSSUTH AND MAZZINI, TRAINED TO THE LAW. That the 'BADISH REVOLUTION' was THE RESULT OF HIS PROPAGANDISM', that the 'GOVERNMENTS OF BADEN AND THE PALATINATE' had sent him to Paris in June 'IN THE CAPACITY OF DIPLOMATIC ENVOY', etc., and that he acts 'IN THAT SPIRIT OF COOPERATION WHICH SO DISTINGUISHES THE MORE CELEBRATED EXILES!'

Page me41.468

Isn't that 'naice'†b?

Page me41.468

My wife has now been confined to bed for a fortnight and has gone almost completely deaf, heaven knows why. Little Jenny has had another attack of diphtheria of some sort. If you could send me some wine for both of them (Allen wants little Jenny to have port), I'd be most grateful.

Page me41.468

Here in London a parson (as distinct from the atheists who preach in John Street) has been giving deistic sermons for the public, in which he makes Voltairian fun of the Bible. (My wife and children went to hear him twice and thought highly of him as a humorist).
Page me41.468
I attended a TRADE UNIONS meeting chaired by Bright.†526 He had very much the air of an INDEPENDENT†527 and, whenever he said 'IN THE UNITED STATES NO KINGS, NO BISHOPS', there was a BURST OF APPLAUSE. The working men themselves spoke very well indeed, without a trace of bourgeois rhetoric or the faintest attempt to conceal their opposition to the capitalists (who, by the by, were also attacked by papa Bright).
Page me41.468
How soon the English workers will throw off what seems to be a bourgeois contagion remains to be seen. So far as the main theses in your book†c are concerned, by the by, they have been corroborated down to the very last detail by developments subsequent to 1844. For I have again been comparing the book with the notes I made on the ensuing period. Only your small-minded German philistine who measures world history by the ell and by what he happens to think are 'interesting news items', could regard 20 years as more than a day where major developments of this kind are concerned, though these may be again succeeded by days into which 20 years are compressed.

Page Break me41.469
Page me41.469
Re-reading your work has made me unhappily aware of the changes wrought by age. With what zest and passion, what boldness of vision and absence of all learned or scientific reservations, the subject is still attacked in these pages! And then, the very illusion that, tomorrow or the day after, the result will actually spring to life as history lends the whole thing a warmth, vitality, and humour with which the later 'grey on grey' contrasts damned unfavourably.
Page me41.469
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.469
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

282
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.469
[London,] 18 April 1863

Dear Engels,

Lassalle sent me the enclosed piece of nonsense marked in red (the newspaper is that of E. Meyen†528) a week ago today; so, it arrived just one day after I had written you the letter in which I gave you a short excerpt from Izzy's latest pamphlet.†a He now clearly expects me to enter the lists on his behalf. Que faire?†b

Your
K.M.

Page me41.469
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.470

283
ENGELS TO MARX†369
IN LONDON
Page me41.470
Manchester, 21 April 1863

Dear Moor,

It is hard to say what is to be done about Lassalle; aprés tout,†a I'd have assumed it to be beneath the great Izzy's dignity to reply to such petty Meyenian tittle-tattle†b with the heavy artillery of a formal démenti. Let the chap clear up his own messes; if he's any good, he needs no testimonials from you, and why should you compromise yourself, now that you've told him that he can't go hand in hand with us, or we hand in hand with him?†c Anyhow, what arrant stupidity to involve himself in the affairs of the Schulze-Delitzsch louts†529 and try to form a party for himself out of that, of all things, on the basis of our earlier works. The very endeavour of S.-D. and other such rabble in these bourgeois times to raise the outlook of the louts to the bourgeois level must needs be welcome to us, for otherwise we'd have to deal with this business during the revolution, and in Germany, where the small state system so greatly complicates matters, we might be confronted with this piddling stuff as something new and practical. That is now disposed of and we now have our opponents where we want them; the lout has achieved self-consciousness and thus finds himself in the ranks of the petty-bourgeois democrats. But to regard these fellows as representatives of the proletariat — it took Izzy to do that.
Page me41.470

Lupus and I were greatly amused by the funny tale about student Blind.†d Lupus has had another severe attack of gout, aggravated by the obstinate way he insists on going out and giving lessons when not yet fully recovered, and only sending for the doctor when it's far too late and he's used up all his medicine. But it's no use remonstrating; 'I'm going!'

Page me41.470

Latterly I've been reading Russian history in reverse, i.e., first Catherine and the partition of Poland,†513 then Peter I. I must say that one would have to be an oaf to work up any enthusiasm for the Poles of 1772. After all, in most parts of Europe at that time the aristocracy was caving in with decency if not esprit,†e even though its general maxim may have been that materialism consists in what one eats, drinks, fucks, wins at gaming or is paid in return for one's knavery; but no aristocracy save the Polish adopted so stupid a method as selling itself to the Russians. In other respects, the general venality of the gentils-hommes†a all over Europe presents a very jolly spectacle. Another thing that greatly interested me was the matter of Monsieur Patkul. This fellow was in fact the founding father of Russian diplomacy generally, and already possessed all its wiles in nuce.†b If you haven't been able to procure his reports to the Russian government, published in Berlin in 1795,†c we'll try and get ourselves a copy by advertising in the Buchhändlerbörsenblatt. How small, by the way, were the contributions made by his successors! Always the same turns of speech, always the same approach, whatever the country. A necessary ingredient, come to that, is the objectivity of your Livonians,†530 whose interests, far from being national, are at most local and private. A Russian would never be capable of such things.

Page Break me41.471

Page me41.471

Another very pretty affair is the coup d'état Catherine II brought off against Peter III. It was here Boustrapa†167 learnt his most important lessons; the Russian commonness served him as a model down to the very last detail. It's ridiculous the way all such dirty dealings are invariably repeated in every particular.

Page me41.471

I have no port at present nor is anything good in that line to be had ON THE SPUR OF THE MOMENT. However, I'll look out for some, and meanwhile go down into the cellar to fetch up some hock and some claret (the former for the healthy, the latter for the invalids). For which reason I shall now close this letter, enclosing a few STAMPS for little Tussy.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.471

There are duplicates of some of the STAMPS. Over here these may be used for swaps. I can supply large quantities of Italian, Swiss, Norwegian and certain German ones.

Page me41.471

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.472

284
MARX TO JOSEF VALENTIN WEBER
IN LONDON
Page me41.472
[London,] 22 April 1863
9 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Weber,

Will you stand surety for me with a LOAN SOCIETY (for £15 to £30)?
Page me41.472

I would not have troubled you with this request if

1. the matter were not an entirely formal one, entailing no risk to yourself, for I shall be getting £200 from home at the beginning of July;
Page me41.472

2. Pfänder, who would otherwise have been my second surety, had not unexpectedly had to go to Manchester for several weeks.
Page me41.472

In addition to other cases of illness in my family, I myself have been suffering from my periodic liver complaint for many weeks now and have thus been literally incapable of writing a single line. Hence the delay over the work for the Society†a which was more disagreeable for me, of course, than for the Society itself.
Page me41.472

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.472
First published in Neues Deutschland, No. 15, 15 January 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

285
ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON
Page me41.472
Manchester, 20 May 1863

Moro viejo, Moro viejo,
El de la vellida barba.†b
Page me41.472
What's the matter with you, no longer sending word of your fortunes and rebus gestis†c? Are you ill or stuck fast in the depths of political economy? Or have you appointed little Tussy your correspondence secretary? OR HOW?

Page Break me41.473
Page me41.473
What do you think of the worthies in Berlin who have come to the conclusion that it is questionable whether their president is permitted to call a minister to order, should the minister say that, for all he cared, the whole Chamber could be triple damned, etc.†531 Never has a parliament clung more patiently and more inopportunely to the thesis that the bourgeois opposition, in its struggle with absolutism and the Junker camarilla, is under an obligation to let itself be kicked. It's our old friends of 1848 all over again. However, on this occasion times are somewhat different.
Page me41.473
Lassalle's goings-on and the rumpus they have created in Germany are really becoming obnoxious.†532 It's high time you finished your book†310; if only to provide us with propagandists of a different kind. In other respects, it's quite a good thing that an audience for anti-bourgeois stuff should be recaptured in this way, though it's disastrous that friend Izzy should thereby carve out a position for himself. However, that's something we have never been able to prevent, any more than the heroic swordsman's postures assumed in public by Karl Blind vis-á-vis the Grand Duke of Baden.†a
Page me41.473
By the way, if you want to see how much time it takes before new scientific discoveries, even in wholly unpolitical fields, make any headway, you should read Lyell's Antiquity of Man. Schmerling in Liége had discovered the fossilised human skull from Engis and shown it to Lyell as far back as 1834,†b when he also brought out his thick book.†c Nevertheless, it was only quite recently that anyone thought the thing worthy of serious investigation. Similarly, Perthes†d in Abbeville had correctly identified the flint instruments in the Somme basin and their geological age as early as 1842, but it was not until the end of the fifties that the thing was noticed. Such are those scoundrels, the patriarchs of science.
Page me41.473
Lupus has again suffered severe attacks of gout but is better now.
Page me41.473
I am also working hard at Serbian and the ballads collected by Vuck Stef. Karadzic.†e It comes more easily to me than any other Slavonic language.

Page Break me41.474

Page me41.474
Enclosed a few more STAMPS. A great deal of thieving in this article is going on at the OFFICE just now.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.474
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

286
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.474
[London,] British Museum, 29 May 1863

DEAR FREDERICK,
My long silence will AT ONCE be explicable to you if you picture to yourself a badly swollen liver with ALL ITS 'APPURTENANCES'. For ABOUT 12 weeks now I have been enduring more of this NONSENSE than ever before. Nor can you have any conception of how it affects a person's morale, namely the feeling of heaviness in the head and paralysis in the limbs. More specifically, one can't bring oneself to do anything, not even, inter alia, to write letters. For the past two weeks the thing has again been endurable. This business has made writing of any kind so impossible that, despite various repeated attempts, I have not managed the stuff on Poland,†533 which I'm very glad of now, since it would have simply deprived me of the chance of going to Prussia without being of any immediate benefit.
Page me41.474
Meanwhile I wasn't, of course, idle, though unable to work. What I did, on the one hand, was fill in the gaps in my knowledge (diplomatic, historical) of the Russian-Prussian-Polish affair†534 and, on the other, read and make excerpts from all kinds of earlier literature relating to the part of the political economy I had elaborated.†535 This at the BRITISH MUSEUM. Now that I am more or less able to work again, I shall cast the weight off my shoulders and make a fair copy of the political economy for the printers (and give it a final polish). If it were possible for me to retreat into isolation at the moment, the thing would progress very quickly. AT ALL EVENTS, I shall take it to Germany in person.†a

Page Break me41.474a
Page me41.474a

First page of Engels' letter to Marx of 20 May 1863

Page Break me41.474b
Page Break me41.475
Page me41.475
Little Jenny is not quite her proper self. She has had a nasty cough for the past fortnight.
Page me41.475
As to Izzy, he had — or so I've been told in confidence by Freiligrath (he showed me Izzy's letter) — asked F. to write a poem for him on the 'new' movement,†536 i.e. sing Izzy's praises. However, he was mistaken in F. In his letter he says inter alia: 'Each day hundreds of newspapers carry my name to the furthest corners of Germany.' 'My proletarians! etc.' Well, since F. won't sing his praises, he has found another poet. Herewith a sample:

'Thou German proletariat, come heed
The clarion call, nor any longer stay!
Here stands a man prepared to pave the way
To thy prosperity. Be thine the deed!
He hath no truck with lofty parliaments,
Nor doth he flaunt his gift of eloquence,
Speaks for us all with homely wit and colour,
Man of the People, Ferdinand Lassalle!
Page me41.475
'Tis not for others, not to fill their purse
That you shall sweat and toil your lives away,
While they wax sleek and richer every day
And you more ragged as your lot grows worse.
The fruits of labour shall be yours alone,
'Tis you shall reap the harvest you have sown.
So hearken all unto the man of valour,
To the virile voice of Ferdinand Lassalle.'

Page me41.475
Macte puer!†a If that isn't sauce for the gander!
Page me41.475
My warm regards to Lupus. Now don't indulge in tit for tat but let me hear from you soon.
Page me41.475
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.475

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.476

287
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.476
[London,] 10 June 1863

Dear Engels,

A bill [of exchange] (the BUTCHER'S) on myself for £6 falls due next Monday (15 June). If you can let me have the money by then, it could be returned to you later, as soon as the transaction with Dronke has been completed.†a

Page me41.476

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.476

What do you make of La France, EH? And Poland? And our 'valiant compatriots' in Berlin?

Page me41.476
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

288
ENGELS TO MARX†369
IN LONDON
Page me41.476
Manchester, 11 June 1863

Dear Moor,

Herewith £5 Bank of England note R/X 46271, 31 Jan. 1862, Manchester.

”—”—” 5 ”—”—” S/R 92394, 14 Oct. 1862, London, with which the butcher will, I hope, be placated. Since I cannot post the letter myself, it would be best if you would acknowledge its receipt.

Page Break me41.477
Page me41.477

I was very worried by your long silence but have meanwhile heard that you were unwell and hope that that is now over. How is little Jenny's cough?

Page me41.477

Latterly, things would not seem to have been going so well in Poland. The movement in Lithuania and Little Russia is evidently weak, nor do the insurgents in Poland seem to be making any headway. The leaders are all either killed in action or captured and shot, which would seem to show that they have to expose themselves a great deal in order to egg on their men. Qualitatively the insurgents are no longer what they were in March and April, the best chaps having been expended. However, these Poles are always unknown quantities, and affairs might take a turn for the better, although the odds against it are worsening. If they hold out, they might yet become part of a general European movement which would be the saving of them; on the other hand, should things go wrong, it will be all up with Poland for the next 10 years, for an insurrection like this exhausts a people's fighting potential for many years to come.

Page me41.477

I should say that the chances of there being a European movement were good because the ordinary citizen has once more rid himself of all fear of the communists and might even, if need be, go into action with them. The French elections prove this no less plainly than do the goings-on in Prussia since the last elections.†537 However, I scarcely think that a movement of this kind would originate in France. The election results in Paris were altogether too bourgeois; wherever the workers put up candidates of their own, they lost, nor for that matter did they have the power to force the bourgeoisie to put up radicals. Besides, Bonaparte knows how to keep large cities in check.

Page me41.477

In Prussia they would still be chattering away if the good Bismarck hadn't put a stop to it.†538 Whatever turn things may take there, peaceful constitutional progress is now at an end and your philistine must get ready for the fray. And that's enough to be going on with. Little though I esteem the valour of our old friends the democrats, it is, nevertheless, here more than anywhere else, I should say, that combustible material is accumulating and, since it is scarcely possible that the Hohenzollerns will fail to perpetrate the worst blunders in FOREIGN POLICY, it might well happen that, with half the troops deployed at the Polish frontier and the other half on the Rhine, Berlin would be left free and a coup would result. It would be a poor enough outlook for Germany and Europe were Berlin to find itself in the van of the movement.

Page me41.477

What surprises me most is that a peasants' movement should not have arisen in Greater Russia. In this instance, the Polish uprising would seem to have had a positively unfavourable effect.

Page Break me41.478

Page me41.478

In America things are in a pretty pickle. FIGHTING JOE'S†a rodomontade has made him look a frightful ass,†539 Rosecrans slumbers and Grant alone is performing well. His move on Vicksburg from the south-west to the north-east, his isolation of the relief army, his repulse of the same, then the rapid advance on Vicksburg and even the energetic if fruitless assaults, are all first-class. I do not believe it will be possible to muster enough relief troops on time. On the other hand, we have so often seen American generals suddenly perform well for a couple of weeks and then revert to the most dreadful bungling, that it's quite impossible to tell what their future moves will be.

Page me41.478

I was already familiar with Lassalle's poem (genitivus objectivus†b) from a pamphlet Siebel sent me and which you presumably have as well. Very jolly. The chap's now operating purely in the service of Bismarck and, one of these days, when Monsieur B. tires of him, he might well find himself under lock and key, making the acquaintance of Prussian common law, which he always seems to confuse with the Code.†540 It's nice, by the way, that, after the stand he took in Vogtibus,†25 he should now find himself under the aegis, not only of the Augsburger,†c but also of the Kreuz-Zeitung.

Page me41.478

I am now reading Kinglake†d and am becoming more convinced than ever that somewhere in every Englishman's brain a board is nailed up beyond which nothing penetrates.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.478

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.479

289

MARX TO ENGELS†369

IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.479

[London,] 12 June 1863

British Museum

Dear Engels,

I hereby acknowledge the £10 with many thanks. Being uncertain whether you would be able to send the money for Monday, and in view of the great fear of bills of exchange which obtains in this house, I had simultaneously written to Dronke.†42

Page me41.479

For the past four weeks little Jenny has again had a slight cough. Today I sent her to see Dr Allen.

Page me41.479

I myself am not quite fit either, but am rid of my worst complaint.†a IN THE MEANTIME, which would certainly delight Vogt, I have been wolfing sulphur!†541

Page me41.479

Izzy has sent me (and you, too, perhaps) the speech he made in court about indirect taxation.†b One or two individual bits are good, but for one thing it is, on the whole, written in an unbearably officious, chatty style, with absurd pretensions to scholarship and consequentialness. In addition, it is essentiellement the confection of a 'pupil' who cannot wait to make a name for himself as a 'thoroughly learned' man and original scholar. Hence the abundance of historical and theoretical BLUNDERS. One example may suffice (should you not have read the thing yourself). To impress the court and the public, he tries to give a kind of retrospective history of the argument against indirect taxation and therefore, going back at random beyond Boisguillebert and Vauban, cites Bodin,†c etc. And here he shows himself to be the schoolboy par excellence. He omits the physiocrats, clearly ignorant of the fact that everything A. Smith, etc., wrote on the subject was cribbed from them and that in general they were the protagonists where this 'QUESTION' was concerned. Likewise, 'indirect taxation' is, in true schoolboy fashion, seen as 'bourgeois taxation', and so indeed it was 'in the Middle Ages', but not today (not, at least, where the bourgeoisie is developed), to discover which he need seek no further than Mr R. Gladstone et co. in Liverpool.†542 The jackass doesn't appear to know that the argument against 'indirect' taxation is one of the platforms of the English and American friends of 'Schulze-Delitzsch' et cie, and hence isn't at any rate directed against them — the FREETRADERS,†543 I mean. Again, in true schoolboy fashion he applies a proposition of Ricardo's to the Prussian real estate tax. (Quite wrong, this.) Quite touching, how he imparts to the court 'his' discoveries, the fruit of the most profound 'learning and truth' and of terrible 'night vigils', namely that, in the Middle Ages 'landed property' prevailed, in later times 'capital', and at present the 'principle of the workers' estate', 'labour', or the 'moral principle of labour'; and, on the same day as he was imparting this discovery to the louts,†466 Senior Councillor to the Government Engel (knowing nothing about him) was imparting it to a more distinguished audience at the Academy of Singing.†a He and Engel exchanged 'epistolary' congratulations upon their 'simultaneous' scientific findings.

Page Break me41.480

Page me41.480

Page me41.480

Page me41.480

The 'workers' estate' and the 'moral principle' are indeed achievements on the part of Izzy and the Senior Councillor to the Government.

Page me41.480

I have not been able to bring myself to write to the fellow since the beginning of this year.
Page me41.480
If I commented on his stuff, I'd be wasting my time; besides, he appropriates every word as a 'discovery'. To rub his nose in his plagiarism would be absurd since, in view of the state they are in after he has finished with them, I have no desire to relieve him of our ideas. Nor would it do to accord recognition to such rodomontade and indiscretions. The fellow would instantly exploit it.
Page me41.480
So, there's nothing to be done but wait until he ultimately boils over. Then I shall have a very nice excuse, namely that (like Senior Councillor to the Government Engel) he is for ever insisting it's not 'communism'. So, in my reply, I shall say that, had I wished to take any notice of him, these repeated asseverations of his would have compelled me
Page me41.480
1. to show the public how and where he had cribbed from us;
Page me41.480
2. how and wherein we differ from his stuff.

Page Break me41.481
Page me41.481
Hence, so as not to compromise 'communism' in any way or injure him, I had ignored him completely.
Page me41.481
Come to that, the chap is making all this hullabaloo out of sheer vanity. Throughout 1859 he was heart and soul for the Prussian liberal bourgeois party. Now he may find it more convenient to attack the 'bourgeois' under the AUSPICES OF THE GOVERNMENT than to attack the 'Russians'. To rail against the Austrians and adulate the Italians has always been as typical of your Berliner as to keep one's trap shut about the Russians, which is what the valiant lad does.
Page me41.481
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.481
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.481
[London,] 22 June 1863

Dear Engels,

The 'little man'†a writes to me today from Liverpool saying that the business of the money†b has got to be settled, i.e. decided, now, since he must attend to it in person and may have to leave on business any day. Believe me, I find it highly disagreeable that you should assume ANY OBLIGATION WHATEVER towards the little man on my behalf. Mais que faire?†c

Page me41.481

I have been going to the British Museum and shall continue to do so until the end of this month since, if only for the sake of my liver, I must do all I can to elude the nagging at home that is the inevitable consequence of PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT. As soon as peace is restored, I shall devote myself to the fair copy of the beastly book, which I intend to hawk round Germany myself.†d Once that is done, then will be the time to get a French translation under way in Paris and cast round in London with a view to an English rendering. For, on this occasion, if only because of Izzy, it's imperative that we don't hide too much of our light under a bushel.

Page Break me41.482

Page me41.482

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.482

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

291
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.482
Manchester, 24 June 1863

Dear Moor,

I have absolutely no idea what the little BUSYBODY†a wants. Why doesn't he write and tell me that he wants the matter settled now? He wrote and told me that, if I didn't reply, he would draw on me as arranged. So far as I'm concerned, if a matter is settled, it's settled and I therefore thought it totally unnecessary to send him another written assurance a fortnight before the date stating that I would do what I had already undertaken to do, both verbally and in writing. Basing myself on your letter, which casts quite a different light on his motives, I have now written to him as requested.†232 My acceptance will be for £250. Make sure he sends you the whole amount, since he has undertaken to pay the expenses and interest himself.

Page me41.482
Have finished Kinglake.†b Never before has there been anything as superficial (though some of the material is very good, if scrappy), stupid and ignorant as his Battle of the Alma. Only la part des français†c is well and accurately depicted — in general, at least. Otherwise, much that is highly amusing to the military reader.†d

Page Break me41.483
Page me41.483
Things are going rottenly in Poland. The Polish government's grand effect, the mass uprising in June, has obviously come to grief†544 owing to a shortage of weapons and, failing any external imbroglios, a gradual decline is now inevitable.
Page me41.483
Your policy in regard to Izzy is quite right.†a Besides, what's the use of all this camaraderie towards a chap who either finds himself compelled by circumstances to go along with us at a crucial moment, or else openly becomes our enemy. To allow the fool to steal one's ideas for years on end and be rewarded for it by having to answer for all his stupidities — that's a bit too much.
Page me41.483
Someone has sent for me.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.483
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

292
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.483
London, 6 July 1863

Dear Engels,
D'abord,†b my best thanks for the £250. ABOUT four months ago Dronke sent me £50, and today £200.
Page me41.483

Unfortunately, little Jenny still isn't quite as she should be. The cough hasn't completely gone yet, and the child has grown too 'light'. I shall send her to a resort with the others as soon as the school term is over. Although I have great confidence in Allen, I should be glad if Gumpert, who I presume will be going on holiday on the Continent, would pay us a flying visit here, see for himself how things are, and let me have his opinion. To be frank, I am much alarmed about the child. To lose flesh at this age seems to me most dubious.

Page Break me41.484
Page me41.484

Palmerston PLAYS HIS OLD TRICKS in the Polish affair.†a The Notes presented to the Russians had originally been sent from St. Petersburg to London.†b Pam bought Hennessy from Urquhart by giving the said Irish blackguard a remunerative post (sinecure) with a Franco-English railway in France. Indeed, the venality of the POLITICIANS here eclipses anything that goes on in that line on the Continent. No one at home or in France can have any conception of this absolute shamelessness. As for 'COUNT Zamoyski', I had repeatedly told the Urquhartites that the fellow betrayed the Poles in 1830/31 by leading an intact corps across the Austrian border instead of against the Russians. In the end, this fellow has aroused their suspicions because of his perpetual personal underhand dealings with Pam.†c

Page me41.484

The SOUTHERNERS' expedition against the North†545 was, in my opinion, forced on Lee by the clamour of the Richmond PAPERS and their SUPPORTERS. I regard it as a coup de désespoir.†d This war, by the by, is going to be a lengthy business, which is, so far as European interests are concerned, altogether desirable.

Page me41.484

Izzy has sent me yet another pamphlet, his speech at Frankfurt am Main.†e Since I now spend 10 hours a day working ex officio at economics,†310 I can hardly be expected to waste my leisure hours on reading these schoolboy essays. So, for the present the thing's been filed away. My spare time is now devoted to differential and integral calculus. Apropos, I have a superfluity of works on the subject and will send you one, should you wish to tackle it. I should consider it to be almost essential to your military studies. Moreover, it is a much easier branch of mathematics (so far as mere technicalities are concerned) than, say, the more advanced aspects of algebra. Save for a knowledge of the more ordinary kind of algebra and trigonometry, no preliminary study is required except a general familiarity with conic sections.

Page me41.484

Will you write me a reasonably well-founded assessment of the enclosed pamphlet by the 'Duc du Roussillon' — you may still have some recollection of him under the name of 'Pi'†f — since he writes to me daily asking me for my 'opinion'?

Page Break me41.485
Page me41.485

If at all possible in this heat, will you take a reasonably close look at the enclosed. 'Tableau Économique' which I am substituting for Quesnay's table†546 and let me know your objections, if any. It embraces the whole process of reproduction.

Page me41.485

As you know, A. Smith sees the 'NATURAL' or 'NECESSARY PRICE' as being composed of wages, profit (interest) and rent — i.e. as wholly resolved into revenue. This nonsense has been taken over by Ricardo, although he excludes rent from the catalogue as being purely fortuitous. Nearly all economists have taken this over from Smith, and those who contest it succumb to some other folly.

Page me41.485

Smith himself is conscious of the nonsensicality of subsuming the gross product of a society simply under revenue (which may be consumed annually), whereas in the case of each individual branch of production he resolves price into capital (raw materials, machinery, etc.) and revenue (wages, profit, rent). If this were so, a society would have to start each year de novo,†a without capital.

Page me41.485

Now as regards my table, which figures in one of the last chapters of my work by way of recapitulation, the following is essential to a proper understanding of it:

Page me41.485

1. The figures, which are arbitrary, represent millions.

Page me41.485

2. Here means of subsistence are taken to mean everything that goes into the consumption fund each year (or might without accumulation, which is excluded from the table, go into the consumption fund).

Page me41.485

In Class I (means of subsistence) the gross product (700) consists of means of subsistence which are, by their very nature, not therefore included in constant capital (raw materials and machinery, buildings, etc.). Similarly, in Class II, the entire product consists of commodities that constitute constant capital, i.e. re-enter the process of reproduction in the form of raw materials and machinery.

Page me41.485

3. Ascending lines are dotted, descending ones continuous.

Page me41.485

4. Constant capital is that part of capital that consists of raw materials and machinery. Variable capital that which is exchanged for labour.

Page me41.485

5. For example, in agriculture, etc., one part of the same product (e.g. wheat) goes to form means of subsistence, whereas another part (wheat, for instance) re-enters reproduction in its natural form (e.g. as seed) as a raw material. But this does nothing to alter the case, since such branches of production figure under Class II or Class I according to which capacity is involved.

Page Break me41.486

Page me41.486

6. The hub of the matter, then, is as follows:

Page me41.486

Category I. Means of subsistence. Working materials and machinery = e.g. £400 (i.e. that part of these that is included in the annual product as dechet†a; that part of the machinery, etc., which is not used up does not figure at all in the table). The variable capital exchanged for labour = 100, reproduces itself as 300, since 100 replaces wages in the shape of the product, and 200 represents surplus value (unpaid surplus labour). The product = 700, of which 400 represents the value of the constant capital which, however, has passed entirely into the product and must hence be replaced.

Page me41.486

In the case of this relationship between variable capital and surplus value it is assumed that the worker works 1/3 of the working day for himself and 2/3 for his NATURAL SUPERIORS.
Page me41.486

Hence 100 (variable capital), as is indicated by the dotted line, is paid out in money as wages; with this 100 (indicated by the descending line) the worker buys the product of this class, i.e. means of subsistence for 100. Thus, the money flows back to capitalist class I.
Page me41.486

The surplus value of 200 in its general form = profit, which, however, is split up into industrial profit (commercial included), and further into interest, which the industrial capitalist pays in money, and rent, which he likewise pays in money. This money paid out for industrial profit, interest and rent, flows back (indicated by descending lines) since the product of class I is bought in return for it. Hence all the money laid out by the industrial capitalist within class I flows back to him, while 300 of the product, 700, is consumed by the workers, entrepreneurs, MONIED MEN and LANDLORDS. In class I this leaves a surplus of products (of means of subsistence) of 400, and a deficit of constant capital of 400.
Page me41.486

Category II. Machinery and raw materials.
Page me41.486

Since the gross product of this category, not only that part of the product which replaces constant capital, but also that which represents the equivalent of wages and surplus value, consists of raw materials and machinery, the revenue of this category cannot be realised in its own product but only in the product of category I. Disregarding accumulation, as is done here, category I can, however, buy only as much from category II as it needs for the replacement of its constant capital, while category II can lay out on the product of category I only that part of its product which represents wages and surplus value (revenue). Hence the workers in category II lay out their money, = 133 1/3, on the product of category II. The same thing happens with the surplus value in category II, which, as sub I, is split up into industrial profit, interest, and rent. Hence 400 in money flows from category II to the industrial capitalists in category I, who, in return, transfer the remainder of their product, = 400, to the former.

Page Break me41.487
Page me41.487

With this 400 in money, class I buys what is necessary to replace its constant capital, = 400, from category II, to which the money paid out in wages and consumption (by the industrial capitalists themselves, the MONIED MEN and the LANDLORDS) thus flows back. Hence category II retains 533 1/3 of its gross product, and, with this, it replaces its own constant capital, which has been used up.

Page me41.487
The movement, partly within category I, partly between categories I and II, also shows how money flows back to the respective industrial capitalists in both categories, money which will again go to pay wages, interest and rent.
Page me41.487
Category III represents reproduction as a whole.
Page me41.487
The gross product of category II is shown here as the constant capital of society as a whole, and the gross product of category I as that part of the product which replaces the variable capital (the wages fund) and the revenues of the classes which share the surplus value between them.
Page me41.487
I have put Quesnay's table underneath and will explain it in SOME WORDS in my next letter.
Page me41.487
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.487
Apropos. Edgar Bauer has been given a post in — the Prussian Press Department.

Page me41.487
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.488

293
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.488
[London,] 15 August 1863

DEAR Frederick,
May the devil take me, as the red one†a used to say, if I didn't get up every morning this week with the firm intention of writing to you. But no sooner did I reach my study than I allayed my conscience by pleading that all I wanted was to add half a dozen lines to the manuscript at the point where I had broken off the day before.†547 And once

I had departed from the path of righteousness, I saw that the evil deed is accursed in that it must constantly engender evil.†b
Page me41.488
My family left for Hastings last Friday.†548 The departure took place so tardily because Lenchen had had to spend a fortnight in Germany in connection with family affairs.
Page me41.488
The enclosed photographs†549 (the children forced me to have mine taken) will soon be followed by those of Jenny and Laura.
Page me41.488
In one respect, my work (preparing the manuscript for the press) is going well. In the final elaboration the stuff is, I think, assuming a tolerably popular form, aside from a few unavoidable M — C's and C — M's.†c On the other hand, despite the fact that I write all day long, it's not getting on as fast as my own impatience, long subjected to a trial of patience, might demand. At all events, it will be 100 p.c. more comprehensible than No. 1.†d When, by the by, I consider my handiwork and realise how I've had to demolish everything and even build up the historical section†e out of what was in part quite unknown material, I can't help finding Izzy a bit of a joke; for he has already got 'his' political economy in hand and yet everything he has peddled around hitherto has shown him to be a callow schoolboy who trumpets abroad as his very latest discovery, with the most repulsive and impertinent garrulity, theses that we were doling out 20 years ago as small change to our PARTISANS, and ten times better at that. In other respects, too, this same Izzy is storing up in his MANURE factory our party faeces excreted 20 years ago which he proposes to use as fertilizer for world history. Thus, for instance, he got the Nordstern to print a letter of support from 'Herwegh' (who has undoubtedly given proof of his platonic love of the 'principle of labour').†a Because the same Nordstern is edited by that ne'er-do-we'el Bruhn, whom Lassalle bought from Blind. Thus, Izzy has nominated 'Moses Hess' his 'proconsul in the Rhine Province', etc. And he still seems unable to shake off the idée fixe that his praises should be sung by Freiligrath, who would never dream of doing so. For he has again got his Leipzig 'proconsul'†b to SUMMON F. urgently, citing the good example of G. Herwegh. If only he knew how F. and I had laughed about this renewed onslaught!

Page Break me41.489

'Oh Izzy, Oh Izzy, didst thou not see That Herwegh and Moses thy gallows would be?'

Page me41.489
The philistines down here are furious with The Times for having fobbed them off so nicely over the CONFEDERATE LOAN.†550 After all, those worthies might have known if only from Cobbett's disclosures, that The Times is nothing but a 'COMMERCIAL CONCERN', which doesn't give a damn how the BALANCE turns out, providing it is a BALANCE IN ITS OWN FAVOUR.†551 The Times chaps, such as J. Spence — 'THAT MAN', according to the Richmond Enquirer, 'WHOM WE HAVE PAID IN SOLID GOLD' — obtained the LOAN SCRIPS partly for nothing, partly at a 50 p.c. DISCOUNT on the nominal rate. So, to cry them up till they reached 105 was a nice piece of business.

Page me41.489
It is, I should say, of prime importance to the UNITED STATES that they should seize the remaining ports, Charleston, Mobile, etc., because they may be involved in a clash with Boustrapa†167 any day now. That same imperial Lazarillo de Tormes is presently caricaturing, not only his uncle,†c but even himself. For after all, the 'SUFFRAGE' in Mexico is a pretty caricature, not only of the SUFFRAGE whereby he turned himself into a Frenchman, but also of that whereby he made Nice and Savoy French.†552 I myself am in no doubt that Mexico will be the hurdle at which he'll break his neck, provided he hasn't been hanged first.
Page me41.489
The Polish affair has gone completely off the rails because of this same Boustrapa, and the influence his intrigues have given the Czartoryski party. Colonel Lapinski, who returned a few days since from the ill-fated trip he undertook with Bakunin and to which Palmerston put so neat an end on the Swedish coast,†553 complains bitterly about the committees in Warsaw, London and Paris being wholly under Bonap.-Czartor. influence.

Page Break me41.490
Page me41.490
Our fatherland would seem to be in a pitiful state. In the absence of a licking administered from without, there's no doing anything with these curs.
Page me41.490
Apropos. Since you wrote your book about England,†a a second Children's Employment Commission Report†b has at long last appeared. It shows that all those horrors that were banished from certain spheres of industry by the FACTORY ACTS, have proliferated with redoubled vigour wherever there is no control! It would make a splendid sequel to your book, once the complete reports have come out.
Page me41.490
My congratulations to Gumpert. At any rate, he has seen to it that his marriage did not remain childless.
Page me41.490
In Borchardt's case, the flesh would appear to be more urgent than befits his priestly office. And he'll make all the other Jewesses jealous.
Page me41.490
Is Lupus back? If so, give him my kindest regards. There's nothing I should like better just now than to have you here for a couple of days so that I could chat and go drinking with you. It's such a long time since we were together.
Page me41.490
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.490
'Pi' has been answered.†c

Page me41.490
Apropos. Among the curious information I have gleaned at the Museum, was the following:

'Verum inventum, hoc est, munera Germaniae, ab ipsa primitus reperta, non ex vino, ut calumniator (an Englishman, that is) [quidam] sceptice invehit, sed vi inami et corporis et reliquo orbi communicata, etc.', auctore Michaelo Maiero, Francofurti, 1619.†d

Page me41.490
The munera and discoveries Germaniae are:

Page Break me41.490a

Tables showing the process of social reproduction enclosed by Marx in his letter to Engels of 6 July 1863
(see English translation on the back)

Page Break me41.490b

Dr. Quesnay's Tableau économique

Page Break me41.491
'Roman imperial dignity, gunpowder, book printing, religious reform, the medicaments of Theophrastus Paracelsus, the secrets of the Rosicrucians†554 — Inventum politicum, bellicum, litteraricum, theologicum, medicum, chymicum.'†a

Page me41.491
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

294
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.491
[London,] 12 September 1863

Dear Frederick,

My family has been back for ABOUT 10 days.†b Little Jenny is much better and has stopped coughing. She is now taking salt water baths at home, i.e. baths with sea salt. ABOUT 2 months ago I, too, started taking a bath at home every morning, sluicing myself with cold water from head to foot, since when I have been feeling much better.

Page me41.491

The most interesting acquaintanceship I have struck up here is that of Colonel Lapinski. He is without doubt the cleverest Pole — besides being an homme d'action†c — I have ever met. His sympathies are all on the German side, though in manners and speech he is also a Frenchman. He cares nothing for the national struggle and only knows the racial struggle. He hates all Orientals, among whom he numbers Russians, Turks, Greeks, Armenians, etc., with equal impartiality. He spent some time here in company with Urquhart, but, not content with describing him as a 'humbug', he actually doubts his probity, which is unjust.

Page me41.491

The 'Circassian' princes exhibited in England by Urquhart and Lapinski†d were two — menials. Lapinski maintains that Urquhart is being well and truly led by the nose by Zamoyski, who in turn is himself simply a tool of Palmerston's and hence, by this circuitous route, of the Russian Embassy. Although of Catholic stock, he (Lap.) finds Urquhart's relations with the Catholic bishops in England highly suspect. As soon as 'action' was called for, he says, — e.g. the equipping of a Polish corps to invade Circassia,†504 which L., too, regards as the best diversion — Urquhart allowed himself to be dissuaded by Zamoyski. By and large, Urquhart only wants to 'talk'. He is a 'big liar' and he (Lap.) took it particularly amiss that he should have made him (L.) his co-liar without consulting him beforehand. Not a soul in Circassia knows Urquhart, who spent only 24 hours there and doesn't speak the language. By way of illustrating U.'s imaginative powers, he mentioned the latter's boast that he (Urq.) had killed Chartism in England!

Page Break me41.492

Page me41.492

There has been another purge of the National Government in Warsaw.†555 This had been infiltrated by Czartoryski's supporters as a result of the intrigues of Bonaparte and Palmerston. Three of these were stabbed and that, pro nunc,†a has intimidated the rest. (The said Czartoryski party was headed by Majewski.†b) The power of the National Government is evident from the fact that the Grand Duke Constantine accepted a passport from it for a journey abroad. According to L., Herzen and Bakunin are thoroughly CHAPFALLEN because your Russian, upon being scratched a little, has again revealed himself to be a Tartar.

Page me41.492

Bakunin has become a monster, A HUGE MASS OF FLESH AND FAT, and is barely capable of walking any more. To crown it all, he is sexually perverse and jealous of the seventeen year-old Polish girl who married him in Siberia because of his martyrdom.†c He is presently in Sweden, where he is hatching 'revolution' with the Finns.†553

Page me41.492

In Poland, L. said, it had been necessary de prime abord†d to disregard the peasantry, that 'ultra-reactionary rabble'. But they were now ripe for the fray and would rise at the government's call for a levée en masse.†e

Page me41.492

Without Austria, he went on, the movement would have come to grief long ago and, if Austria were to close her frontiers in earnest, the rebellion would be done for in 3 weeks. But Austria was cheating the Poles. Solely out of desperation, because Francis Joseph knew that he was threatened by a Russian-Serbian-Romanian-Italian-French-Hungarian-Prussian bomb did he go to Frankfurt, and it was for the same reason that the Pope†f had issued his latest edict in support of Poland.†556

Page Break me41.493

L. told me there could be no doubt whatever that it was not just Bangya who had an understanding with Russia, but also Stein, Türr, Klapka, and Kossuth.

Page me41.493

His aim now is to raise a German legion in London, even if only 200 strong, so that he can confront the Russians in Poland with the black, red and gold flag,†170 partly to 'exasperate' the Parisians, partly to see whether there is any possibility whatsoever of bringing the Germans in Germany back to their senses.

Page me41.493

What's lacking is money. Efforts are being made down here to exploit all the German societies, etc., to this end. You must be the best judge of whether anything can be done in this LINE in Manchester. The cause as such would appear to be excellent.

Page me41.493

Give my regards to Lupus and tell him that I've sent on his letter to Eccarius.

Page me41.493

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.493

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

295
ENGELS TO MARX†237
IN LONDON
Page me41.493
Manchester, 24 November 1863

Dear Moor,

As I have heard nothing more from your wife, I can only hope your health has improved in the meantime, and that you are rid of your boils. The main thing is to stick to wine-drinking and meat-eating. During the past few days my evenings at the office — the only time I can contemplate writing private letters — have been much interrupted, otherwise you'd have heard from me before.

Page me41.493

Things are getting critical in Germany. In one way, the Danish business†557 has come at the wrong time, while, in another, it can only precipitate the crisis. Funny, how the English press is suddenly finding the Schleswig-Holstein question so absolutely crystal-clear, when for years it has claimed it was so complicated that, as Dundreary†a says, 'NO FELLOW CAN UNDERSTAND THAT'. For us, however, the admissions in the English press suffice. But what a masterly stroke the Protocol of 1852 was on the Russians' part! So long as my only source of information was the stupid Free Press, I couldn't make head or tail of it; really, the gift those jackasses have for confusing everything surpasses even Dundreary's. That Prussia and Austria should have signed the Protocol was an unspeakable infamy, and those concerned must pay for it with their blood.

Page Break me41.494

Page me41.494

Again, it's really rather funny that the whole question of the succession should now turn on whether the Augustenburg fellow, as the child of a morganatic marriage, is qualified to succeed.†558

Page me41.494

In Prussia, Bismarck's insolence would seem to be wavering a bit after all. The disavowal of the Landrat election intrigues, and the repeal of the Press Decree are significant omens.†559 J'espére qu'ils ne reculent que pour mieux sauter.†b Lassalle, too, is playing a part in the press controversy. Wagener was tactless enough (vis-á-vis his tacit ally, Lassalle) to cite his opinion of the liberal press†c in justification of the Press Decree.†d This evoked roars of laughter and bad jokes from Virchow and Gneist. Lassalle has made a thorough mess of his campaign, which won't, of course, prevent him from beginning all over again. Yet the jackass could have found out perfectly well from the Manifesto†e what attitude one ought to adopt towards the bourgeoisie at times such as these.

Page me41.494

Many regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.494

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.495

296
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.495
[London,] 2 December 1863

DEAR FREDERICK,

Two hours ago a telegram arrived, saying my mother†a was dead. Fate laid claim to one of our family. I myself have already had one foot in the grave. Circumstances being what they were, I, presumably, was needed more than my mater.
Page me41.495

I have got to go to Trier to settle the question of the legacy. Was in much doubt as to what Allen would say, as it is only 3 days since I first began taking a recuperative WALK of half an hour a day.
Page me41.495

However, Allen has given me 2 enormous bottles of medicine to take with me and actually thinks it advisable for me to go. The wound hasn't stopped discharging yet, but all along the route I should find good Samaritanesses†b to apply the plaster for me.
Page me41.495

I must now ask you to send me enough money by return to enable me to leave for Trier forthwith.
Page me41.495

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.495
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

297
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.495
Manchester, 3 December 1863

Dear Moor,

Herewith U/O 16055 & 56, two fivers, in all £10, dated Manchester, 13 Jan. '63, for your trip to Trier. I trust our compatriots' Schleswig-Holstein enthusiasm won't spoil your visit too much. I've swotted up the whole question†324 and have come to the conclusion

Page Break me41.496
Page me41.496
1. that the Schl.-Holst. theory is a lot of rubbish;
Page me41.496
2. that in Holstein the Augustenburg fellow would certainly seem to be in the right†558;
Page me41.496
3. that in Schleswig it's difficult to say who is entitled to succeed — but the male line, if at all, only as Denmark's vassal;
Page me41.496
4. that the London Protocol is certainly valid in Denmark, but is certainly not so in Schleswig and Holstein because the Estates were not consulted;
Page me41.496
5. that the German right to Schleswig is confined to the south, which is German by nationality and free choice, so that Schleswig would have to be partitioned;
Page me41.496
6. that at present Germany's only chance of liberating the Duchies lies in our starting a war against Russia for the benefit of Poland. Then Louis Napoleon would be our obedient servant, Sweden would instantly throw herself into our arms, and England, hoc est†a Pam, would be hamstrung; then we could take anything we liked from Denmark with impunity.
Page me41.496
THEM IS MY SENTIMENTS. I'd like to enlarge upon them in a pamphlet, if you could find a publisher for it in Germany.†560 Needless to say, I'd put my name to it. Qu'en dis-tu?†b
Page me41.496
Lupus is better, but still a bit unsteady on his pins.
Page me41.496
Many regards to the FAMILY. I was damned glad to see your scratchy scrawl again.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.496
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.497

298
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.497
[London,] 4 December 1863

Dear Frederick,

Very many thanks for the £10. Ditto, retrospectively, for the port. It has done me a power of good. Besides the wine, I have (up till now) been having to swill 1 1/2 quarts of the strongest London STOUT every day. It struck me as a good theme for a short story. From the front, the man who regales HIS INNER MAN with port, claret, stout and a truly massive mass of meat. From the front, the guzzler. But behind, on his back, the OUTER MAN, a damned carbuncle. If the devil makes a pact with one to sustain one with consistently good fare in circumstances like these, may the devil take the devil, I say. Incidentally, I still feel light-headed and my knees are those of a broken-down hack, but I imagine the journey will put a stop to all this. Little Tussy told me apropos the OUTER MAN: 'BUT IT IS YOUR OWN FLESH!' By the by, I can't speak too highly of Dr Allen's behaviour towards me. He remarked, by the by, apropos the operation, that GERMAN PHILOSOPHERS were always self-consistent.
Page me41.497

As regards the 'sea-girt',†a by and large, I agree with you.†b Obviously, the whole succession business is merely of diplomatic significance. AS TO DENMARK, she is not, I think, bound by the Treaty of London†380 in as much as the Danish Parliament was intimidated by Russian warships when the vote was taken. I enclose herewith Urquhart's nonsense,†c R. Schramm's nonsense,†d lastly a Danish pamphlet, which is of interest on at least two counts, 1. with regard to the fellows from whom the Schleswig-Holstein movement originally stemmed; 2. with regard to the stand taken by the peasants in Holstein.
Page me41.497

In today's Times you will find under the heading 'Schleswig-Holstein'

Page Break me41.498
an item by Dr Thudichum that is typical of German historiography.†a
Page me41.498

I shall certainly get hold of a publisher for you in Germany. So, buckle to straight away.
Page me41.498

I shall drop you a couple of lines as soon as I am in Trier. I also have to go to Holland, for my uncle†b is my MONSTER creditor.†561
Page me41.498

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.498

But one mustn't irritate the Danes. They've got to understand that Scandinavians and Germans have a common interest in opposing Russia and that nothing could be more advantageous to themselves than the separation of the German element.

Page me41.498

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

299

MARX TO JENNY MARX†239

IN LONDON

Page me41.498

Trier, 15 December 1863,

Wednesday

Gasthof von Venedig

Dear sweet darling Jenny,

I arrived here exactly a week ago today. Tomorrow I am going to Frankfurt to see Aunt Esther†c (NB: the lady, who was in Trier, was formerly in Algiers, and lives with my aunt, is also my father's sister, also an aunt, is called Babette,†d familiarly 'Bäbchen', is rich). From Frankfurt I shall go to Bommel,†e as I wrote my uncle†b yesterday, probably to his dismay.

Page Break me41.499

Page me41.499

If I have been so long in writing to you, this was certainly not out of forgetfulness. Quite the reverse. I have made a daily pilgrimage to the old Westphalen home (in the Neustrasse), which interested me more than any Roman antiquities†562 because it reminded me of the happiest days of my youth and had harboured my greatest treasure. Moreover, every day and on every side I am asked about the quondam†a 'most beautiful girl in Trier' and the 'queen of the ball'. It's damned pleasant for a man, when his wife lives on like this as an 'enchanted princess' in the imagination of a whole town.

Page me41.499

The reason I didn't write was that every day I hoped to have something definite to say, but up to this moment don't yet know of anything definite. For this is how matters stand. On my arrival I naturally found everything under seal save for such furniture as was in daily use. My mother, with her usual mania for assuming 'supreme command', had told Conradi not to bother about anything; she had so arranged matters that Uncle would see to 'everything'. What she gave Conradi was a notarial copy of a sort of will, which contained nothing but the following terms: 1. She left all the furniture and linen to Emilie†b with the exception of the gold- and silverware; 2. To her son Carl she leaves the 1,100 talers, etc.; 3. To Sophie,†c father's portrait. That's all there is to the will. (NB: Sophie has 1,000 talers a year, for the most part given her by the Philipses. So, after all, you see, my relations are decent 'folk'.)

Page me41.499

Apart from this scrap of paper, my mother had lodged another (now invalid) legally attested will. This was of an earlier date and was nullified by the more recent will. It had been drawn up before Emilie's marriage. In it she had made Emilie the beneficiary of everything of which she was entitled to dispose. In addition, she had appointed Uncle Martin†d and Uncle Philips her executors. She — or rather her bibulous notary Zell (deceased) — forgot to repeat this clause relating to executors in the scrap of paper which now alone is valid and which I have described above, so that if Uncle is the executor, it is only thanks to our bonne grace.†e (For which I, of course, have my own 'reasons'.) As yet, I know nothing about the actual value of the estate, because all the papers are in the sealed cupboard. The seals have not yet been removed because of the time-consuming formalities that have to be gone through before the Dutch powers of attorney (for Juta†f and Sophie) can arrive here. So far as I am concerned this will take too long. I am therefore giving Conradi power of attorney. Besides, there's nothing left here in Trier (Grünberg†563 was sold long ago) except 5 casks of 1858 wine, which my mother refused to sell at the right moment, and some gold- and silverware. This will be shared out equally among the heirs. The real assets, however, are all in Uncle's hands.

Page Break me41.500
Page me41.500

My mother died at 4 in the afternoon of 30 November, on the very day and at the very hour of her marriage. She had predicted that she would die at that time.
Page me41.500

Today I am attending to the things for Mr Demuth and Lieschen. I shall write to you at greater length from Frankfurt or Bommel. Greetings and much love to everyone. Above all and in particular, please give the CHINESE SUCCESSOR†a a thousand kisses on my behalf.

Your Karl

Page me41.500

(I hope to be able to send you some money in my next letter.)

Page me41.500
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, XVI. Jg., I. Bd., No. 1, Stuttgart, 1897-1898 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

300
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.500
Zalt-Bommel, 22 December 1863

Dear Engels,

You will see from the address that I am back in Holland, where I arrived safely yesterday. In Trier, where the papers and effects left by my mother had been placed under seal, the unsealing could not take place because the Dutch powers of attorney, which must pass through the hands of an endless succession of authorities, had not yet arrived. I left a power of attorney for my brother-in-law Conradi for submission to the Department of Trier and proceeded to headquarters here, firstly because my uncle†a holds by far the largest part of the assets, secondly because he is the executor of the will. However, in any case it will be another 5-6 weeks before I receive payment of the money. Since my wife has to pay a butcher's BILL for £10 on 10 January 1864 (i.e. a bill of exchange), I should be very glad if you could attend to it.

Page Break me41.501
Page me41.501

The carbuncle has gone the way of all flesh, but now for good measure my back is wickedly plagued with furuncles and last night, for example, thanks to these pestilential objects, I couldn't get a wink of sleep which would, after all, only have been fair after travelling here from Frankfurt a.M. The husband†b of a cousin†c of mine is the town's only doctor and medical officer of health, so I am not in want of Aesculapian assistance.
Page me41.501

Throughout the Rhine Province, from Trier to Frankfurt a.M. and thence via Giessen and Cologne right up to the Dutch frontier, I heard nothing but abuse of Prussia. Little, very little, Schleswig-Holsteinianism. For the most part, it was regarded as 'Prussian artfulness'.
Page me41.501

I spent only one day in Frankfurt (where I had to visit two old aunts†d) and hence wasn't able to see any publishers. However, I spoke to an acquaintance who will write to me here (after he has consulted with a publisher on my behalf).†e
Page me41.501

When writing your pamphlet,†f it might be better if you were now to include some actual events as well, not forgetting the systematic blunders perpetrated by the Prussian government, the men of Progress†371 and the regular — since 1815 inveterate — Schleswig-Holstein HUMBUGGERS.†324
Page me41.501

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.501

You might drop me a line or two. Address Charles Marx, CARE OF Mr Lion Philips, Zalt-Bommel, Holland.

'Tu n'es pas un Yankee, s'écria le fanatique... Depuis que tu es ici, je t'observe. Dans la figure du Saxon il y a du taureau et du loup; dans la tienne il y a du singe et du chien. Tu as peur de la liberté, tu parles de ce que tu ne sais pas, et tu fais des phrases. Tu es un Français!'†a (195-196, Paris en Amérique by Edouard Laboulaye.) (Paris 1863.)

Page Break me41.502

Page me41.502
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

301
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON
Page me41.502
Zalt-Bommel, 23 December 1863

Dear Freiligrath,

Your letter arrived today, having been sent on to Trier by my wife and from Trier to this address by my sister.†b I left London two days after you called (on Monday†c). Otherwise, I should have had to keep traipsing into the CITY to see to the issue of powers of attorney for the executors of the will, which, in view of my physical condition at the time, would have been more irksome than a sea-crossing.
Page me41.502

'Dr Liebknecht' has been living in Berlin for about a year now. His address is: 13 Neuenburger Strasse. I know nothing about the affair.†564 But one thing surprises me about the bookseller. He continued to pay Wilhelm Liebkn. the fees on behalf of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung throughout the time L. was its correspondent. Hence it was in his power to deduct L.'s debt.
Page me41.502

It was inexcusable of L., no matter what the circumstances, to make improper use of your name. But you have no responsibility whatever towards the bookseller, since Williams could have recovered the money himself.
Page me41.502

Warmest regards.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.502

First published in the supplement to: F. Mehring, The Freiligrath-Marx Correspondence, Moscow-Leningrad, 1929 (in Russian)

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.503

302
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.503
Zalt-Bommel, 27 December 1863

DEAR FREDERICK,

I wrote and told you last Wednesday about the recurrence of my furunculosis and the 'bitter' night I passed.†a The next day Dr van Anrooij discovered that a damned carbuncle had reappeared beside the furuncles, almost exactly beneath the site of the old one. Ever since then — leaving aside the ill-effects of such a discovery on one's morale — I have been in loathsome pain for much of the time, particularly at night. My uncle,†b a splendid old BOY, applies my poultices and cataplasms with his own hands, while my charming and witty cousin†c with the dangerously dark eyes nurses and cossets me in exemplary fashion. Nevertheless, in view of these circumstances, I would gladly set out for HOME, but that is temporarily out of the question on physical grounds. The Dr has opened up the agreeable prospect of my being troubled by this loathsome complaint until well into January. He will tell me when my condition permits a removal to London. However, this second Frankenstein on my back is less ferocious BY FAR than was the first one in London, as you will already have gathered from the fact of my being able to write.
Page me41.503

I gave up smoking completely 2 1/2 months ago and it's unlikely that I'll start again very soon.
Page me41.503

Anyone wishing to spew up politics in disgust should take it daily in the form of the telegraphic pills dispensed by the small Dutch newspapers.
Page me41.503

However, we are in for a spectacle, and the comical thing so far as Germany is concerned is that it will start with a movement in favour of the 'legitimate' duke,†d accompanied by clamorous requests for a 36th potentate.†565
Page me41.503

Those scoundrelly parliamentary cretins, who had assembled in Frankfurt a.M., set aside without debate a resolution moved by a German from Posen in which the TRUE QUESTION between Germany and Russia was presented in highly comprehensive and rational form.†566

Page Break me41.504
Page me41.504
My best wishes for the New Year. Will you also convey them to Lupus?

Your
K.M.

Page me41.504
P.S. Apropos. Like all 'dametjes',†a my cousin keeps an album, and I've promised to help her collect photographs for it, inter alia yours. If you have a spare photograph perhaps you would be so good as to enclose it in the letter I trust you will at long last be writing me here.
Page me41.504
P.S. I was about to place this letter in its envelope when the Dr walked in and, without more ado, operated on me again. The business was over IN NO TIME AND NOW THINGS WILL GO ON SWIMMINGLY.

Page me41.504
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.505

1864

303
ENGELS TO MARX
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.505
Manchester, 3 January 1864

Dear Moor,
The many CHRISTMAS drinking-sprees and consequent GENERAL UNFITNESS FOR BUSINESS have rendered me utterly incapable of replying any sooner. However, the affair is now happily over.
Page me41.505
I am sending your wife the amount in question.†a For the rest, I'm delighted to hear that your second carbuncle has been operated on, and that you are thus over this latter crisis. You'll have got damned thin as a result of this tedious business.
Page me41.505
The Schleswig-Holstein affair has come off the rails again good and proper. If, as I believe, there's war in the spring, we shall have Denmark, Sweden, France and Italy against us and, possibly, England. In Hungary and Poland Plonplonism,†524 to which Kossuth had already pointed the way, is in full swing.†567 I see only two ways out here: 1. either revolution in Berlin as soon as the troops have left and, in Vienna, a corresponding movement with concessions of an adequate kind to Hungary and, perhaps, also to Poland. That's what would be most favourable, and there would be nothing to fear in such a case. But it is also what is most improbable, in view of the confusion that prevails. Or, alternatively, 2. a restoration of the Holy Alliance†511 for which, as always, the partition of Poland would provide the cement (Russia has a greater interest in Poland than in Denmark and also the prospect, come the armistice, of having Austria and Prussia under her thumb, i.e. being able to impose her own conditions).

Page Break me41.506
Page me41.506

Then the Russians would take over from the Prussians in Berlin and play the policeman, whereat we would be done for, and Bonaparte cock of the walk.

Page me41.506

The mock war in Schleswig under Wrangel can't last very long.†568 In the first place, the Danish fortifications will make even the initial encounters too bloody and, in the second, Boustrapa†167 is too much in need of a popular war not to seize this opportunity. What more could he ask than the restoration of the Holy Alliance and a war for both Poland and the Rhine with, for good measure, England and Italy and all the small states of Europe on his side?

Page me41.506

Apropos. Our worthy Faucher, who shows himself a rabid Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg man in the Chamber,†a is, at the same time, sending The Manchester Guardian anti-German articles in which he arse-licks to the English bastards of The Times. Shouldn't one do something to unmask this louse?

Page me41.506

If the curs in the Prussian Chamber were now to take their courage in both hands, they could straighten things out to their own satisfaction within the space of 6 weeks. Handsome William's reply shows what a fix the government is in.†569 No one will fork out, not even the worthy von der Heydt, and they know they won't get any money par force.†b

Page me41.506

Lupus has just come to pick me up and sends you his kindest regards.

Page me41.506

Here's to a good recovery and a Happy New Year.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.506
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.507

304
MARX TO ENGELS†570
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.507
Zalt-Bommel, 20 January 1864

Dear Frederick,

As you see, I am still here and 'let me tell you something else, Sir', I am in fact once more unable TO MOVE ABOUT. This is a disease of truly Christian perfidiousness. When I got your letter, I was congratulating myself on the way the old wounds had healed, but that self-same evening a large furuncle erupted just below my neck on the left-hand side of my chest and, antipodally to it, one on my back. Although irksome, it did not, at least, prevent me from walking and, in fact, I accompanied my uncle and cousin†a on a stroll across the Rhine (Waal). But a few days later, yet another carbuncle appeared on my right leg, close beneath the spot of which Goethe says: 'And if the noble fellow has no bum, on what does he propose to sit?'†b Now this is the most painful and embarrassing boil I have had so far, and I trust will be the last of a long series. In the meantime, I can neither walk, stand, nor sit, and find even lying down damned difficult. So you see, mon cher, how nature in her wisdom is persecuting me. Would she not be better advised to inflict these trials of patience upon a good Christian — someone of the same stamp as Silvio Pellico? Besides the carbuncle beneath my buttock, I should inform you that another furuncle has erupted on my back, while the one on my chest has only just begun to heal so that, like a veritable Lazarus (alias Lassalle), I am assailed on all sides at once.
Page me41.507

Apropos Lazarus, I am reminded of Renan's Life of Jesus which is, in many respects, simply a novel full of pantheistic-mystical extravaganzas. However, the book also has some advantages over its German predecessors and, since it isn't long, you ought to read it. It is, of course, a derivative of the German stuff. Most remarkable. Here in Holland the German critico-theological tendency is so much á l'ordre du jour†c that the clergy openly profess it from the pulpit.
Page me41.507

As regards the Schleswig-Holstein affair, I hope that it will lead to clashes in Germany itself.†571 How well Russia knows her

Page Break me41.508
Pappenheimers,†a both Austrian and Prussian, is evident from the COOL IMPUDENCE with which she is, at this juncture, allowing the Petersburg Journal to print the Warsaw Protocol.†b
Page me41.508

The German petty princes are taking the fiction of the Schleswig-Holstein movement very seriously. They genuinely believe that Germania cannot have enough of them and is therefore intent on enthroning a 35th.†c
Page me41.508
I am writing you no more than a short letter, and that only with great effort, since it's agony for me to sit. But I shall expect an early reply from you; it CHEERS ME UP to see your handwriting.
Page me41.508
Don't forget to enclose your photograph. I have promised my cousin as much, and how is she to believe in our Orestes-Pylades relationship, if I can't even commovere†d you to send a photograph? Address as before CARE OF Mr L. Philips.
Page me41.508
Salut to yourself and Lupus.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.508
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

305
MARX TO LION PHILIPS†239
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.508
London, 20 February [1864]†e

Dear Uncle,
I shall begin at the end. I arrived here yesterday ABOUT NOON in a frozen condition, FOR IT WAS DEVILISH COLD. My reception was all the warmer, and thus I enjoyed the delights inseparable from a complete contrast. En passant,†f yesterday and today were the coldest days there have been in London. So it seems I am fated to bring winter not only to Bommel but also to London. I wish the Prussians in Schleswig-Holstein the full enjoyment of this 'seasonable weather'.†572 If their patriotism or rather their 'loyal and royal enthusiasm'†a is not cooled down by that, then, Sir, we must give it up!

Page Break me41.509
Page me41.509
Our little child†b was quite enchanted by the really beautiful Dolly, Madame August†c had chosen for her. I enclose some lines on the part of the child. She did not leave off bothering myself till I had promised her to enclose also for you a letter which she pretends to be written in Chinese characters and which an English friend has sent her.

Page me41.509
[In Amsterd]am†d I found the whole family well and cheerful. [August†e] was very busy and so I said [nothing] at all to him about financial matters. At the insurance office I was given thousand guilder notes, most of which I changed in Rotterdam, with Jacques'†f help, into bills and ABOUT a quarter into BANKNOTES.
Page me41.509
Nor, during the two days I was in Rotterdam, did Jacques have overmuch spare time. One day, he was pleading in a small town nearby and, the other, he had to attend a court of appraisal. On the whole, I should say that, since becoming engaged, he has had much more of 'AN EYE TO BUSINESS' than previously. I don't doubt that in a few years' time he will have a sound practice, the more so since he likes legal work. He himself told me that he wins nearly all his doubtful cases, and, if he goes to the trouble of telling one something like that, he can be taken at his word. He and I laughed a great deal about a man whom he describes as 'the client' par excellence. This man, he told me, was still young and, over the next 30 years OR MORE, might litigate away a lot more of his assets!
Page me41.509
Incidentally, August also has a quite peculiar faith in the infallibility of the courts. He opines, for example, that the English lose nothing by the high cost of their legal procedure. People who didn't engage in litigation had just as much chance of obtaining justice as those who did. In point of fact, it seemed his opinion that dear law is as good as cheap law, and perhaps better; and he is a fellow who knows something about such things.
Page me41.509
August gave me the 3 parts of the Aardrijkskunde,†g and, on top of that, Jacques provided me with a work on political economy (Dutch) by Vissering,†h a professor at Leyden, and a copy of

Page Break me41.510
Camera obscura.†a So I'm well stocked up with Dutch literature. Nothing in Frisian was to be had in Amsterdam, although in one bookshop alone there were works in 88 modern languages. The Negro languages seemed to have greater appeal to the Amsterdamers than Frisian, but man always contrives to neglect the things that are nearest to him.
Page me41.510
Sorje Oppenheim,†b which was already creating a great sensation in Amsterdam, has been performed here by my daughters to piano accompaniment and they hope to perform it one day before their uncle.
Page me41.510
A great bundle of newspapers, etc., from various latitudes has accumulated for me here, *but I am firmly resolved to know nothing of politics until Monday next.
Page me41.510
Now, my dear uncle, I bid you farewell. Despite carbuncles and furuncles, I consider the two months I have lived in your house, as one of the happiest episodes of my life, and I shall always feel thankful for the kindness you have shown me.

Page me41.510

You will, of course, tell Rothhäuschen†c that I send him my compliments and that I regret having been forced giving battle to him.

Page me41.510

My best compliments to the whole family, especially Jettchen,†d Dr Anrooij, and Fritz.†e Mrs Marx and the girls also send their compliments. Please to give the enclosed lines to Netchen.†f

Yours truly,
Charles M.*

Page me41.510

First published, in the languages of the original (German and English), in the magazine International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.511

306

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.511

London, 25 February 1864

DEAR Frederick,

Just a few lines for the present to let you know of my return.†561 As soon as the weather permits, I shall come up to Manchester for 2 days so as to see you in person again and, at the same time, give you an account of my AFFAIRS.

Page me41.511

I have completely recovered and only one or two spots (specially on the upper part of my leg), which are in the final stages of healing up, continue to trouble me A LITTLE. I haven't grown thin, but stout, despite my illness. True, I have given up smoking completely.

Page me41.511

Pieper's sudden appearance on our doorstep was a real surprise. He's here to settle in his sister as a GOVERNESS. He spent 4 yrs as a schoolmaster in Bremen. Last year 'he ate the bread of the National Association',†24 and even went to Italy at Augustenburg's†a expense. He's the same bore and lout as he always was.

Page me41.511

With kind regards to you and Lupus.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.511

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

307
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.511
[London,] Friday, [11 March] 1864

DEAR Frederick,
Tomorrow I shall leave from Euston Station at 10 and arrive AT MANCHESTER ABOUT 5 p.m.†573

Page Break me41.512
Page me41.512
It WOULD BE FOOLISH to go on waiting for good weather.
Page me41.512
What has also prevented me from coming DURING THE TWO LAST WEEKS — SOME NEW AND UNEXPECTED FURUNCLES BREAKING THROUGH DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE BODY.

YOURS
Moor

Page me41.512
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

308
MARX TO LION PHILIPS†574
IN AACHEN
Page me41.512
London, [29 March 1864]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Uncle,

I presume all of you are already or still in Aachen, and am therefore sending this letter there. Had you decided to wait for the fine weather, you'd have had to stay at Bommel until now. Here, at any rate, March has been QUITE ABOMINABLE, apart from one or two fine days — cold, wet, and changing from one moment to the next. This may be one reason why I haven't so far rid myself of those confounded brutes, my furuncles. I curse them, but under my breath.

Page me41.512

LITTLE Eleanor has had a rather bad cough for the past two days which is what is preventing her from writing to you. However, she asks me to send you many salutations and, in regard to the Danish Question, begs me to tell you, that 'she don't care for such stuff', and that 'she considers one of the parties to the quarrel as bad as the other, and perhaps worse'.

Page me41.512

The difficulty about understanding Prussia's policy is due solely to people's delusion in crediting it with serious and far-sighted aims and projects. The Mormon Bible,†575 for instance, is similarly most difficult to understand, precisely because there isn't an iota of sense in it. What Prussia was primarily aiming at was to make the army popular, an aim which the Schleswig-Holstein campaigns were already having to subserve in 1848.†576 Secondly, she was intent on closing the territory against German volunteer forces, democrats and the small states. Finally, Prussia and Austria, by exerting PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT, were to enable the Danish king,†a who is hand in glove with them, to compel the Danes to make certain concessions at home and abroad. Austria could not, of course, leave Prussia to play this role on her own, and, at the same time, seized on the opportunity to effect a closer alliance with her against OTHER PERIPETIES.

Page Break me41.513

Page me41.513

The conference meets in London on 12th April.†577 The very most it will do is resolve that Schleswig and Holstein be bound to Denmark in a personal union — maybe less, certainly not more. How little in earnest the whole affair is, despite powder, shot and blood-letting, will be apparent to you if only from the fact that, up till this moment, neither Prussia nor Austria has declared war on Denmark, nor Denmark on Prussia and Austria. There is no better way of throwing dust in people's eyes than to set armies marching, horses stamping, and cannon thundering.

Page me41.513

DESPITE ALL THAT, SERIOUS CONFLICTS may BE IMMINENT. Once again, Bonaparte finds himself virtually compelled to set his troupiers up in business as 'freedom' exporters because of the great DISAFFECTION which is not only prevalent in Paris, but provokingly rearing its head in the elections.†578 And this time, the way has been paved for him by those dogs of Prussians.

Page me41.513

Garibaldi's trip to England and the great ovations he will receive FROM ALL SIDES here†579 are, OR at least are meant to be, merely the prelude TO A NEW RISING AGAINST AUSTRIA. As an ally of the Prussians in Holstein and Schleswig and an ally of the Russians by virtue of the state of siege in Galicia,†580 Austria has made things very easy for her enemies. What with the present conditions in Poland, Hungary, and Italy, the popular sentiment in Germany, and the total change in England's position, a new Holy Alliance†511 would enable even Napoleon le Petit†b to play the great one. At this moment, the best thing would be for peace to continue, for any kind of war would delay the outbreak of revolution in France.

Page me41.513
May God damn ME IF THERE BE ANYTHING MORE STUPID THAN THIS POLITICAL CHESSBOARD!
Page me41.513
There were two other things I had actually meant to write to you about — Roman division and darkness in outer space. But as the light is failing, my paper is running out and it's almost time for the last post, I must conclude for the time being by sending my kindest regards to the whole family. Ditto to Karl†a and his wife, not forgetting Jean.†b

Page Break me41.514

Your affectionate nephew,
K. Marx

Page me41.514
First published, in the language of the original (German), in the magazine International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Printed according to the original

309
MARX TO LION PHILIPS†239
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.514
London, 14 April 1864
1 Modena Villas,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Uncle,
I hope that the cough has gone the way of all flesh. As for myself, there hasn't been a sign of a FURUNCLE for a few days, and my doctor†c thinks that I am now rid of the things for good. And high time, too. The sun seems to be breaking through at last. But there's still a nasty wind blowing from the East. Eleanor's cough has gone. However, her sister Jenny has a very persistent COUGH, [which]†d will disappear [only] with a change of wind.
Page me41.514
Conradi had already written to me before I got your letter, and I had replied, saying he could send the money here direct.†e
Page me41.514

At the Museum†f I have been taking a look at Boethius's De arithmetica (he wrote at the time of the Völkerwanderung) on Roman division (he didn't, of course, know any other sort). From this and a number of other works with which I have compared it, I see that moderately simple calculations, such as household and commercial accounts, were never done with [figures] but with pebbles and similar tokens on an abacus. On this abacus several parallel lines were drawn and whatever was used, whether pebbles or other visual signs, denoted units on the first line, tens on the second, hundreds on the third, thousands on the fourth, etc. Such abacuses were in use throughout almost the whole of the Middle Ages and are still employed by the Chinese today. As for more complex mathematical calculations, at the time when these are found among the Romans, the latter already had the multiplication table — Pythagoras's — which, however, was still very awkward and cumbersome, for that table consisted partly of its own characters, partly of letters of the [Gre]ek (later Roman) alphabet. But [since] division merely boils down to the analysis of the dividend into factors and the tables in question were taken to fairly high figures, this must have sufficed for the reduction of expressions such as MDXL, etc. Every number, e.g. M, was separately reduced to the factors which it formed with the divisor, after which the quotients were added together. Thus, for example, M divided [by] two=D (500), D divided by 2=250 e[tc]. That the ancient method placed insuperable difficulties in the way of very complex calculations is evident from the artifices to which that outstanding mathematician Archimedes had recourse.

Page Break me41.515
Page me41.515
As regards the 'darkness of outer space', this necessarily follows from the theory of light. Since colours only appear when light-waves are reflected by solids and since, in the intervals between the heavenly bodies, there is neither atmosphere nor any other kind of solid, these intervals must be pitch black. They allow the whole light-ray to pass through, which is simply another way of saying that they are dark. Moreover, space outside the atmosphere of the planets, etc., is fated to be damnably 'koud en kil'†a since the rays generate warmth only when they strike a solid, which is also why, summer or winter, it is icy cold in the higher air strata of our atmosphere — that is, owing to the thinness, hence the relative insubstantiality, of these layers. BUT

Ought this affliction to afflict us
Since it but adds to our delight?†b

Page me41.515
And what good are light and warmth WHERE THERE IS NO EYE TO SEE THE ONE, AND NO ORGANIC MATTER TO FEEL THE OTHER? Long ago the worthy Epicurus had the sensible idea of banishing the gods to the intermundia (i.e. the empty spaces of the universe)†581 and, indeed, R.'s†c 'perfect curs' are fit denizens for those cold, cool, pitch dark, 'stoffelooze wereldruimte'.†d

Page Break me41.516

Page me41.516

You can see what a good Dutchman I've become from the fact that little Jenny has already read half the Camera obscura†a and Laura, me docente,†b a large part OF THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE Aardrijkskunde,†c while even Eleanor knows 'Dans Nonneken dans' and 'Klompertjen en zijn wijfjen'†d by heart.

Page me41.516

Best compliments from THE WHOLE FAMILY to you, and Karl, not forgetting madame la générale.†e With the weather being so fine, you surely won't have overlong to wait for your own beau jour.†f

Your affectionate nephew,
Karl Marx

Page me41.516

First published, in the language of the original (German), in the magazine International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Printed according to the original

310

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.516

London, 19 April 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

DEAR FREDERICK,

The furunculosis persisted until ABOUT a week ago, which made me very 'peevish' and it was not until a day or two since that I was able to start work again.

Page me41.516

This month, April the first's privilege of being ALL FOOL'S DAY, has been extended, at least in London, to the whole of April. Garibaldi and Palmerston FOR EVER on the WALLS of London!†582 Garibaldi with Pam and Clanricarde, and extolled by the ENGLISH POLICEMEN, at the Crystal Palace!†583 In England there aren't any mouchards†g! The Bandiera brothers would have something to say about that.†584 Garibaldi and 'Karl Blind'! What a talent for puffing himself up the last-named hydrocephalous crab-louse displays! 'Mr Karl

Page Break me41.517

Blind', the Athenaeum announces, 'HAS JOINED THE SHAKESPEARE COMMITTEE!'†585 The fellow doesn't understand one line of S. I had to put up considerable resistance and have doubtless completely forfeited Weber's†a esteem. For the Workers' Society†3 (incited by W.) wanted me to compose an address to Gar., and then call on him with a deputation. I REFUSED FLATLY.

Page me41.517

When are you going to come here? The family is expecting you.

Page me41.517

Tomorrow sees the start of the conference†577 that will cause the scales to fall from the Teutons' eyes. Collet has announced himself for Thursday†b and, at the same time, sent me a whole LOT of German literature on the Schleswig-Holstein-Lauenburg mess. Tomorrow I shall have to get down to a serious study of this disagreeable affair so as to be ready with my answers for the fellow, who has the entire genealogy†586 at his fingertips. You may have noticed that the wretched Disraeli has spared Pam the trouble of answering Osborne's and Kinglake's motions on Schleswig-Holstein at the impending conference. Yesterday, Disraeli gave notice that he would put the PREVIOUS QUESTION. In all the SERIOUS AFFAIRS of the past 2 or 3 years (e.g. the Afghanistan business†297) he has extricated OLD Pam from the MUDDLE.

Page me41.517

You will see how pitiful (I mean what a DONKEY) Garibaldi is — he has been half KILLED, incidentally, by John Bull's EMBRACE — from the following, which is not, OF COURSE, common knowledge.

Page me41.517

At the secret revolutionaries' congress in Brussels (September 1863) — which had Garibaldi as its nominal CHIEF — it was decided that G. should go to London, but do so incognito and thus catch the metropolis unawares. He was then to COME OUT for Poland IN THE STRONGEST POSSIBLE WAY. Instead of that, the fellow goes and fraternises with Pam! I'd rather be a louse in sheep's clothing than a man of such brave stupidity, as Shakespeare says in Troilus and Cressida.†c

Page me41.517

Kindest regards to Lupus and Lizzy.†d

Your
K.M.

Page me41.517

Little Jenny still has a cough but strikes me as being much better. The new house†587 has, IN FACT, cheered her up a great deal.

Page me41.517

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.518

311
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me41.518
Manchester, 29 April 1864

Dear Moor,

You will, presumably, at long last have rid yourself of the furunculosis. Meanwhile, Lupus has been suffering most vilely from the rheumatic headaches he was already having when you were here,†573 and from which he has since had no respite — on the contrary, they have got worse and worse so that he's had no proper sleep for weeks. He's already been confined to bed again on several occasions, and that sod Borchardt does nothing at all about it; he treats the touch of gout Lupus has got in his toe (but which doesn't bother him at all now, whereas the headaches and insomnia are really sapping his strength) with colchicum and doesn't even give him an occasional dose of opium. Once or twice I have spoken to Lupus pretty seriously about the matter, but you know how much good that does. He believes himself to be under an obligation to B., and that's that. All the QUACK has done is to cup him of ten ounces of blood! That was the day before yesterday. This evening I shall visit Lupus again and see how things are going. Three weeks ago I too had a violent and most painful attack of rheumatism of the respiratory muscles, but Gumpert cured me of it within 24 hours.
Page me41.518

The Garibaldi tomfoolery†a came to a fitting end. The way the chap was shown the door after a week of being gaped at by the SWELLS is really too splendid and could happen nowhere but in England. It would be the ruin of anyone except Garibaldi, and even for him it's tremendously mortifying to have served the English aristocracy as a NINE DAYS' WONDER and then to have been thrown out into the street. They treated him as an out-and-out romantic. How could the fellow submit to it and how he could be so stupid as to take these Dundrearys for the English people? However, anyone who is not now convinced of the wholly bourgeois nature of this gentleman will never be convinced. For to respect the English press is almost worse than respecting the PEELERS.†588 And as for his EXIT! Well, that beats everything.

Page Break me41.519
Page me41.519

But our friend Bismarck is also a lumen.†a Of him it might even be said: n'est pas Soulouque qui veut.†b First he mimics Bonaparte's Press Laws, and now he's sending worthy Corporal William to Schleswig to induce the people to vote for annexation by Prussia!†589 This jackass seems to imagine that the highways and byways are strewn with Savoys and Nices and that these are to be had for the taking.†590 As the Dagbladet quite rightly points out, by the way, the Prussian reactionary press has been in such a state of exaltation since the capture of Düppel,†591 and the chaps are so above themselves that one can count with certainty on the gang's coming a really bad cropper within a very short space of time.
Page me41.519

I was a bit surprised by the way the Prussian army carried out the assault. The attack took place with 4 brigades (24 battalions) against 4 Danish brigades (16 battalions), i.e. by no means disproportionate superiority for an assault of this kind. Admittedly, the Danes had been greatly worn down by artillery fire but so, for that matter, had the Russians at Sevastopol, and to an even greater extent.†592 However, the fact that in 20 minutes the Prussians took the first 6 field-works and then, in 2 hours — N.B. without orders, for the worthy prince†c wanted to call it a day — the whole peninsula,†d including the bridgehead, and inflicted losses of 5,000 on approximately 13,000 Danes, is more than one might have credited the fellows with. You will, by the way, remember that I have always said Prussian fire-arms — rifles as well as guns — were the best in the world, and that has been borne out here. On the other hand, the conference†577 will soon reveal what marionettes their diplomats are. What with Russia, Boustrapa,†167 and Palmerston, aided and abetted by the 'grand' policy of Bismarck, the 'fall' that follows after pride can hardly be long in coming. But how about money? After all, the 22 millions from the public treasury and the railway loan of 6 millions must have been squandered by now, and what then?

Page me41.519
I shall descend on you one of these Friday evenings but not, of course, without writing to you first.
Page me41.519
Write soon, and give my regards to the FAMILY.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.519
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.520

312
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.520
[Manchester,] Sunday, 1 May '64 6.50 p.m.

Dear Moor,
I have just been to see Lupus, who also had Gumpert and Borchardt with him. They don't agree over the diagnosis, which doesn't matter a rap for the time being, since it's a question of restoring his strength first, and here G. at once intervened more energetically. Yesterday I asked B. about port but he thought that, as L. wasn't quite lucid, he would be better without it and, only this morning, suggested — Spanish fly! Today Lupus is to get a beerglassful of champagne every 2 hours and this evening will, in addition, be given brandy in the BEEF TEA he takes in between times. That scoundrel Borchardt who only last Wednesday let ten ounces of his blood!!†a For the rest, the situation is very bad, because whichever diagnosis may be right, one is as bad as the other. B.'s diagnosis is meningitis, inflammation of the inner scalp with a tendency to suppurate. G. hadn't yet been able to make one this morning, but thought that, in addition to the above, there might be uraemia (passage of urine into the blood as a result of degeneration of the kidneys) or anaemia with a localised affection of the nervous system. He had another call to make after the consultation, and so I was unable to talk to him at any length; as soon as I have heard his opinion I shall write to you.

Page me41.520

I should like you to come up tomorrow for a few days.†593 I foresee that I shall be very busy this week, and it's always a good thing, of course, if one of us sees the doctors a couple of times a day and promptly obtains whatever has to be obtained. Besides, it would be very nice for me anyway. If you are coming, send me a telegram from your station of departure to 7 Southgate, St. Mary's; it only costs a shilling.
Page me41.520

In order to force his hand over the consultation, I was compelled to tell B. yesterday that you had just as much confidence in G. as I had and that, if Lupus were to die, you would never forgive me had I failed to call G. in for a consultation. He took it very badly, but we are certainly not going to allow Lupus to be murdered for the sake of this bastard's vanity.

Page Break me41.521

Your
F.E.

Page me41.521
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

313
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.521
Manchester, 2 May 1864

Dear Moor,

The outlook for Lupus grows daily worse. His state of delirium is getting more and more chronic. He still recognises the people who come to see him quite well, but in between times he talks in a completely RAMBLING fashion and it is only after taking a strong dose of stimulants that he has his more lucid moments. However, these moments are becoming dimmer and briefer all the time. Gumpert has very little hope now; his diagnosis is softening of the brain as a result of the prolonged headaches brought on by cerebral hyperaemia and of the insomnia thus induced. There's no longer any question of Borchardt's meningitis; he has accepted G.'s diagnosis and generally does everything G. suggests, though he seems to have very hazy ideas about the origin of the headaches.

Page me41.521

Each day Lupus spends in this stupor, from which stimulants are incapable of rousing him, naturally makes matters worse and, if the next 3-4 days bring no improvement, the poor devil will go under either from debility or apoplexy or, if he pulls through, he'll be an idiot. This alternative — death or imbecility — is really too frightful. Gumpert, of course, is extremely guarded when talking about his colleague but I'm sure of the fact that L. could have been saved if the headache had been properly treated and if, in particular, something had been done to enable L. to sleep. But it was not until last Thursday, after five weeks of insomnia, that B.

Page Break me41.522
gave him some opium. On top of that the blood-letting on Wednesday. He has persisted in treating him for gout, prescribing nothing but colchicum and the like. It was only the onset of delirium that evidently caused him to have second thoughts.
Page me41.522

There is another consultation at 9 tomorrow morning which I shall also attend to see what he does. B. intends to get a male nurse for him today. If only the poor fellow pulls through!

Your
F.E.

Page me41.522
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

314
ENGELS TO MARX†492
IN LONDON
Page me41.522
[Manchester, 2 May 1864] Monday evening 8.30

Dear Marx,

Lupus is going rapidly downhill. He's having hallucinations, keeps jumping out of bed, etc. What we're short of now is a man to sit up with him and stop him injuring himself. There is only one professional male nurse up here, and he is engaged. Admittedly, Borchardt could get hold of one from a nearby lunatic asylum, but so long as there is the slightest chance of recovery he doesn't, of course, want that kind of person, being anxious to avoid subsequent gossip and the harm it would do L. He now wonders whether you might perhaps have a reliable man, who doesn't need to be a nurse by profession, far better not, but is simply reliable in that he will do what he is told and not fall asleep — maybe you have such a man and can send him up here first thing tomorrow, for we are provided for only up till tomorrow and periculum in mora.†a S'il s'en trouve,†b send him at once to Borchardt, Rusholme Road, Manchester.

Page Break me41.522a
Page me41.522a

Wilhelm Wolff

Page Break me41.522b
Page me41.522b

Marx's letter to his wife, Jenny, containing the news of Wilhelm Wolff's death

Page Break me41.523
Page me41.523

If you have nobody, Borch. asks that you telegraph him first thing tomorrow (it costs a shilling), so that he and Gumpert can continue to look round up here.

Page me41.523

I have just telegraphed you to this effect, but the present letter is necessary to an understanding of the telegram.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.523
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

315
MARX TO JENNY MARX†239
IN LONDON
Page me41.523
[Manchester,] 9 May 1864

Dear Jenny,

POOR Lupus died today, at 10 minutes past 5 in the afternoon. I have just left his death-bed.
Page me41.523
I went to see him on the evening of the day I arrived from London,†a but he was unconscious. The next morning he recognised me. I saw him in company with Engels and the two doctors†b and, when we were leaving, he called after us (in a weak voice): 'You will come back, won't you?' It was a moment of lucidity. Soon afterwards he relapsed into a state of apathy. Up till Thursday — or really Friday†c — evening, things hung in the balance so that there was some doubt about the outcome. But he was unconscious from Friday evening until the moment of his passing away. So long did it take for him to die, though he was not in pain. He was unquestionably the victim of that bombastic bungler.†d I shall write at greater length tomorrow.
Page me41.523
In him we have lost one of our few friends and fellow fighters. He was a man in the best sense of the word. His funeral will be on Friday.†e

Your Karl

Page me41.523
First published, in the language of the original (German), in Annali, an. I, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.524

316
MARX TO JENNY MARX†239
IN LONDON
Page me41.524
[Manchester,] 10 May 1864

Dear Jenny,
POOR Lupus, as it now transpires — and as Borchardt already knew — had accumulated a nest-egg by dint of hard and unremitting work.
Page me41.524
In his will (of December 1863) he appointed Engels, Borchardt and myself his executors, and the notary has just read us his will. In it he leaves:
Page me41.524
1. £100 to the Manchester Schiller Institute†429
Page me41.524
2. £100 to Engels
Page me41.524
3. £100 to Borchardt and
Page me41.524

4. The entire residue, amounting to six or seven hundred pounds, to me (to you and the children should I predecease him; he took care of all eventualities), likewise his books and all other effects.
Page me41.524
I must now go to his lodgings and sort out his papers. Luckily he was living — during the final 6 or 7 weeks, at any rate — with exceptionally good and worthy people and enjoyed the best possible nursing. The inane telegrams about nursing attendants†a — of which Gumpert knew nothing — were sheer ostentation and consequentiality on the part of Bombastus B.
Page me41.524
A thousand kisses to you and the children.
Your Karl

Page me41.524
First published, in the language of the original (German), in Annali, an. I, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.525

317
MARX TO JENNY MARX†239
IN LONDON
Page me41.525
[Manchester,] Friday, 13 May 1864

Dear Heart,
Today was the day of our good comrade's funeral.†a We purposely didn't send out any invitations, otherwise half the town would have been there. So, it was attended by Borchardt, Gumpert, Engels, Dronke, Steinthal, Marotzki (the Friends of Light†594 Protestant pastor at whose house Lupus used to teach and who came as a personal friend), Beneke (one of the leading business men here), Schwabe (ditto), 3 other business men, a few boys and some 15-20 members of the 'LOWER CLASSES' amongst whom Lupus was very popular. I naturally made a short funeral oration. It was an office by which I was much affected so that once or twice my voice failed me. Freiligrath wrote, begging to be excused, because of the presence in London of his principal, Fazy. Engels, and more especially Dronke, refused to countenance this excuse, and tomorrow D. will be taking him to task in London.
Page me41.525
I shall have to stay here for at least another 3 or 4 days in order to get through with the whole business, pay the estate duty, swear oaths, etc. Naturally I shall not leave Manchester until everything is settled.
Page me41.525
At first, it was thought that poor Lupus was suffering from incipient softening of the brain. This was wrong, however. Gumpert had previously said that he was suffering from cerebral hyperaemia (excessive accumulation of blood in the brain). This was confirmed at the post mortem, which also proved that he would still be alive today had he received correct treatment of the most common or garden kind. Borch. had completely and utterly neglected the thing in the most unscrupulous way. And yet one can't raise a shindy about it, if only because of B.'s family, who were deeply attached to Lupus (especially B.'s eldest daughter) and did a great deal for him, and whom he for his part thought highly of. All the same I refused B.'s invitation to dinner today (at which Engels, etc., were to be present) on the grounds that I could not accept hospitality on the day of Wolff's funeral.

Page Break me41.526
Page me41.526

Dronke asks you to excuse him for not having replied to your letter. The poor little man was too much distressed by the death of his children to be able to write.

Page me41.526

Lupus had carefully kept all our children's letters, and it was only a few weeks ago that he again told Mrs Borchardt how much he enjoyed getting little Tussy's notes.

Page me41.526

The day before yesterday Marotzki (while confirming the children, amongst them one of the younger Borchardts) pronounced a public eulogy on Lupus in his church. I don't believe anyone in Manchester can have been so universally beloved as our poor little friend (who as a child broke both legs and was in pain for years until they had healed again). Amongst the letters he left, I found evidence of the warmest sympathy on the part of all kinds of people — pupils, both girls and boys, and, in particular, their mothers.

Page me41.526

My warmest greetings to all.

Your Karl

Page me41.526

Send 3 photographs of DEAR Eleanor immédiatement.

Page me41.526
First published, in the language of the original (German), in Annali, an. I, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

318
MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER, JENNY
IN LONDON
Page me41.526
[Manchester,] Tuesday, 17 May 1864

Sweet child, Badman,

Probably I shall leave Manchester on Thursday (May 19) this week, and probably Engels will come with me.†595 If arrangements be changed, I'll advertise you timely.
Page me41.526

I visited Ernest Jones yesterday and renewed my old friendship with him. He received me very cordially. Eichhoff, who is here at this moment, and sends to all of you his compliments, wrote me this morning that the son-in-law of Dr. Rohde — Marriett — has suddenly died; the daughter†a being thus thrown back upon

Page Break me41.527
Liverpool and the parents. Eichhoff has at last settled down as a commercial employé.
Page me41.527

Little Dronke, who to-day arrived from London, told funny stories as to the meeting he had a few days since with Freiligrath. Fazy, Freiligrath's master, was present at the rendezvous at 2 Royal Exchange Buildings.
Page me41.527

Strohn, an old friend of mine — who, unhappily, finds himself in a very bad state of health, and whom I was hardly able to recognise — came down from Bradford to see me; Eichhoff having told him of my sojourn at Manchester.
Page me41.527

Gumpert has been blessed with a son.
Page me41.527

I address these lines to you, because you will probably have to make room for Engels, your room being, I believe, the only disposable one. You don't want to care about wine which we bring with us, but a dozen bottles of Pale Ale for our Manchester man will be welcome. I cannot finish my business here,†596 because this week is a holiday for lawyers here. So things will not be settled before next week, and in my absence.
Page me41.527

I have seen, from Möhmchen's†a letter, with great concern, that Marie Lormier is not going on in the right direction. These doctors are a lot of quacks.
Page me41.527

Any letter you'll address me, will still find me at Manchester, if you post it tomorrow before 5 o'clock p.m.
Page me41.527

I hope, my dear child, to find you in full bloom. My humble compliments to your successor, and my knowing wink to mine secretary.†597

Your truly Old one

Page me41.527

I should very much like to buy here Manchester silk for the whole family, but the delay that, consequent upon the holiday, has taken place in the settlement of affairs, prevents me from indulging my fancy.
Page me41.527

G.J. Harney, as you may tell Möhmchen, has again married, and, moreover, left Europe for Australia.†598

Page me41.527
First published, in Russian, in the magazine Voinstvuyushchii materialist, No. 4, 1925

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.528

319
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me41.528
Manchester, 24 May 1864

Dear Hermann,

You must excuse my keeping you waiting some little while for a reply to your letter of the 7th and that of the 18th.

Page me41.528

As regards the £1,000, I shan't be able to remit this to you before 1 July, or perhaps a little later. That is to say I must await the statement of accounts on 30 June of this year, since G. Ermen will release himself from the contract if so much as a penny is missing from the £10,000 I have to put up. Until then, therefore, I must tread carefully. I also mentioned this to Mother in my letter of 7 April,†599 and hence the best thing would be for you to pay Wiebelhaus & Busch from over there. In any case, for a sum of the order of £1,000, I wouldn't be able to lay my hands on bills as short as a week after date. More about this matter, then, in July or August; I am in no hurry whatever.

Page me41.528

It had struck me, by the way, that this £1,000 could be partially reimbursed by my prevailing on G.E. to send off to you in advance the interest amounting to £375 due on 30 June; but, since our bankers are now paying us 6% interest, he'll take good care not to give you the money at 5%.

Page me41.528

As regards my balance with you over there, this should be dealt with as follows:

Page me41.528

On 30 June, the £10,000 which, under the terms of the contract, must remain here, will be debited to me over there. Deduct from that the portion of my balance there on which the interest accrues to me; as to the remainder I must refund you the interest á 5%. The portion of my balance of which Mother has the usufruct would best continue to be credited to me separately, since it doesn't figure in my favour when interest is calculated and would therefore only muddle up the calculation.

Page me41.528

The one question that may have to be considered in this connection is the exchange rate at which £s are to be converted into talers. In my view, the simplest thing in all present and future cases relating to my account would be to take the average rate of 6 talers 20 silver groschen, as Father also used to do in his books, so that the £10,000 will be debited to me as 66,666.20 talers, while all reimbursements made by me in £s will be credited at the same rate. Think it over and let me know what you think about it.

Page Break me41.529
Page me41.529
As regards the transfer of the £10,000 to my account, you have no need to advise G.E. further; the contract, to which you are all subject, is sufficient.
Page me41.529
Very many thanks for the pictures. They've touched up your face a bit more than is necessary; apart from that, they're very good. But you must now see to it that the other ones for my album follow on soon, and also remind the good Boellings about it, for so far I have none of them at all. In the case of the Blanks, I don't have one of Maria Senior, Emil Junior, Rudolf, and the younger ones.
Page me41.529
Apropos. Should Ermen & Engels over there be asked to pay the costs of an insertion, to which I was a co-signatory, in the deaths' column of the Kölner,†a Breslauer†b and Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, I would ask you to attend to it and debit me accordingly.†600
Page me41.529
Give my love to Mother, if she is still in Barmen, and tell her that I've been keeping very well. Much love to Emma†c (she's still not as plump as she used to be, but I trust that will resolve itself) and the little ones as well as to Rudolf†d and family, the Blanks, and the Boellings.

Your Friedrich

Page me41.529
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

320
MARX TO ENGELS†249
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.529
[London,] Thursday, 26 May 1864

Dear Frederick,

It came as a very 'pleasant' surprise this morning (I had not been able to sleep the preceding night) to find my chest again adorned with two 'charming' FURUNCLES. Will you consult Gumpert as to what I should do? I don't want to take iron since I already have a tendency to cerebral congestion. Nor do I wish to go to Allen, there being nothing I dread so much as having to recommence a regular course of treatment, thus disrupting my present work, and I simply must get the thing done at long last.†547 Despite all that people said about how well I looked, I have all the while felt there was SOMETHING WRONG and the tremendous resolution I have to summon up before I can tackle more difficult subjects also contributes to this sense of inadequacy. You EXCUSE THIS SPINOZISTIC TERM. Have OUR POOR Lupus's books been sent off to London?†601 I am worried about their non-arrival because — or so I understood — your WAREHOUSEMEN were supposed to have sent them off on Thursday (last).

Page Break me41.530
Page me41.530
WHAT DO YOU SAY OF GRANT'S OPERATIONS?†602 All that The Times chooses to admire, OF COURSE, is Lee's strategy disguised as RETREATS.†a Says Tussy this morning, 'IT CONSIDERS THIS VERY CANNY, I DARE SAY.' There's nothing I would be happier to see than success for Butler. It would be of inestimable value, were he to enter Richmond first. It would be bad if Grant had to retreat, BUT I THINK THAT FELLOW KNOWS WHAT HE IS ABOUT. It is to him, at any rate, that credit is due for the first Kentucky campaign, Vicksburg and the drubbing Bragg received in Tennessee.
Page me41.530
Enclosed a note from Jones, in view of which you will, no doubt, be able to invite him FOR ANOTHER DAY.†603
Page me41.530
The WHOLE FAMILY send you their regards.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.530
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.531

321
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON

Page me41.531
[Manchester,] 30 May 1864

Dear Moor,

The books haven't gone off yet, nor has the wine. They will go off together. Have heard nothing from either Borchardt or the lawyer; shall call on the latter the day after tomorrow and give him the power of attorney.†604

Page me41.531

Gumpert says that, if the furuncles are merely stragglers, you should do nothing further about them. I discussed little Jenny with him; he says it would seem to be a chlorotic condition and that sudden attacks of asthma are common in such cases, and are due to circulatory disorders; nothing could be done save treat the condition as a whole, nor could he think of anything beyond what Allen is already doing. Anyhow, he didn't seem to take too serious a view of the thing.

Page me41.531

The Virginian campaign is once again characterised by inconclusiveness, or more precisely, by the difficulty of taking it to any sort of decision on terrain like this.†602 I set no store by the news received per Scotia; all it means is that a week's rain has saved Lee from the necessity of fighting battle after battle á la Solferino.†605 And for him, that means a great deal. Another 2 such battles and his army, which had to withdraw to a new position every night and was in any case in a very sorry state, would hardly have been capable of making a stand anywhere before Richmond. Certainly Grant also benefited from the standstill, but not to the same extent. The reinforcements he is now obtaining won't be worth very much. But I shouldn't be surprised if Lee were soon to withdraw to Richmond. Then the decisive battle will take place there.

Page me41.531

Bismarck seems to have colossal good luck; it really looks as though there's going to be an Augustenburgian peace.†606 As yet I can make neither head nor tail of it, but my view would seem to be confirmed by the very hectoring article in today's Morning Post.†a (It says, inter alia, that Schleswig should be partitioned and — the Eider form the new frontier between Danish and German Schleswig!) Nevertheless, plausible though it all seems, I can hardly see the Russians giving up, without more ado, all the spoils of 1851/52,†607 the less so since they would not, so far as one can see, get anything in return.

Page Break me41.532

Page me41.532

I have been engrossed in the arithmetic in your Francoeur,†a a section you would seem pretty well to have ignored, if the failure to correct the scandalous printing errors in the figures is anything to go by. Though individual bits are quite elegant, the practical aspect of arithmetic is handled in a shockingly inept and superficial manner, being better taught at any German school. I also doubt whether it is practical to discuss things such as roots, powers, series, logarithms, etc., even at elementary level, merely in terms of numerals (without any recourse to algebra and, IN FACT, without presupposing an elementary knowledge of the same). Although the use of numerical examples by way of illustration may be a good idea, I should say that to limit oneself to numerals is, in this case, less conducive to clarity than simple algebraic treatment with a+b, precisely because the general expression is simpler and clearer in algebraic form and is something which cannot be dispensed with here. Admittedly, this particular section is really beneath the dignity of the mathematician par excellence.

Page me41.532
I shall send you Danske†b papers tomorrow. In several Jutland towns Prussian officers are said to have objected very strongly before carrying out the confiscation in accordance with orders. Generally speaking, there have been no complaints anywhere about the troops, only about the generals and their orders. In the Dagbladet England is, if anything, more roundly abused than in Germany.
Page me41.532
No other news, save that it's bitterly cold. Warm regards to your wife and the girls. I HOPE TUSSY IS CONTENT WITH THE COTTON.

Your
F.E.

Page me41.532
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.533

322
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.533
[London,] 3 June 1864

Dear Frederick,
Herewith
Page me41.533
1. A scrap of paper sent me today in a wrapper from Brussels by jackass Kertbeny;
Page me41.533
2. Cutting from the Rheinische Zeitung containing an obituary of Lupus — written by Elsner, now one of the editors of the Breslauer Zeitung, from which the Rheinische has reprinted it†a;
Page me41.533
3. Another cutting from the Rhein. Zeit., in which I would draw your attention to the article 'Der feudale Sozialismus'†b;
Page me41.533

4. Letter from one Klings of Solingen to one Moll over here. To enable you to understand this letter, I should explain that Moll (and also a companion of his†c) is a working man from Solingen, who (along with the aforesaid companion) has evaded a 4 months' prison sentence (the result of Lassalle's performances last year). Klings, ditto a working man, is Baron Izzy's authorised representative in Solingen.

Page me41.533

The two Solingen refugees came to see me here; they informed me of their enthusiasm for Izzy and how the workers had harnessed themselves to his carriage when he was last in Solingen. They assumed as a matter of course that we two were hand-in-glove with Izzy (who, when last in Elberfeld, made a speech about Lupus†608). Klings, they said, was a former member of the League,†63 as were all the working men who were leaders of Izzy's movement in the Rhine Province, and that, now as ever, all were our resolute supporters. He also showed me Klings' letter, and I asked whether I might have it to send to you.†609 To this he assented. So, don't return it. I did not, of course, enlighten the chaps as to our relations, or rather non-relations, with Izzy, but got others to drop some pretty vague hints.

Page me41.533

Now the men are hanging about here, unemployed. 50 talers are to be sent them from Solingen, the local Workers' Society†3 is giving them £2; we shall be collecting a bit more here, and it would be a good thing if Manchester could contribute a pound or two. The fellows must be conveyed to America, since they are factory hands (Solingen cutlers, etc.) and are quite unsuitable for London handicrafts.

Page Break me41.534

Page me41.534

'What's come over me?' I asked myself more than once while reading Izzy's Lohnarbeit und Kapital.†a For in its essentials it seemed to me familiar, literally so (if embellished in the Izzian manner), yet not cribbed direct from the Manifesto,†b etc. Then, a couple of days ago, I happened to look out my series of articles on 'Wage-labour and Capital' in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1849) which were in fact merely a printed version of lectures I had delivered in 1847 at the Brussels Workers' Society.†131 There I found my Izzy's immediate source and, as a special act of friendship, I shall reproduce the whole caboodle from the N. Rh. Z. as a note or appendix to my book — ON FALSE PRETENCES, of course, and without any mention of Izzy.†610 He won't enjoy it in the least.

Page me41.534

The books have arrived,†601 ditto the wine, for which many thanks. Tussy asks me 'TO GIVE YOU HER LOVE AND TO TELL YOU THAT YOUR COTTON HAS SOMEWHAT IMPROVED'.

Page me41.534

Borkheim has made ABOUT £2,000 — under the patronage of Oppenheim, the 'Jew Süss'†c of Egypt. Oppenheim, to whom, according to the account B. himself gave me, he played more or less the part of jester in the land of the pyramids, wanted to keep him there on the spot. But Europeans die there like flies, so B. arranged instead to be entrusted from time to time with a little bit of business by Abul Haim, as Oppenheim is called by the Arabs. This summer he will again visit Constantinople to that end.

Page me41.534
The girls and madame send you their kindest regards.
Page me41.534
MY COMPLIMENTS TO Liccy.†d
Page me41.534
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.534
Apropos.
Wherever honours are being handed out, there friend Freiligrath is sure to be. Cf. Elsner's obituary. Remember Harney's funeral oration for Schramm. And now New York has seen the publication by a local society of a very sumptuous Record of the Revolution†a in which all the EVENTS, documents, etc., of the present Civil War are REGISTERED from the time it first started. WELL, this RECORD has been sent gratis to some 20 or 30 people (including various European libraries), among them the QUEEN OF ENGLAND,†b J. Stuart Mill, Cobden, Bright, and — Freiligrath. He informed me of this, with the phrase that the Yankees had 'afforded him great pleasure and done him a great honour', and gave me the accompanying letter to read along with the printed list of the fortunate few. I should dearly like to know what the good fellow has done, might do, or intends to do for the Yankees. But loi générale†c: Freiligrath is to receive the honneurs on behalf of the German nation because the worthy citizen adopts so worthy and neutral an attitude, 'and, come to that, hasn't really learnt anything'.†611

Page Break me41.535

Page me41.535
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

323
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.535
Manchester, 3 June 1864

Dear Moor,

I beg to confirm my last†d and today would humbly inform you that Lupus's will passed through the COURT OF PROBATE†612 the day before yesterday and that I have taken possession of the document in question. I have also shown it to the bank and had it registered there, and on Monday or Tuesday†e shall draw the money from the bank (I can do this on my own without Borchardt) and remit it to you. There is about £230. I shall try and see B. tomorrow or on Monday and shall then do all I can to get the matter speedily wound up. The approximate amount of estate duty — £12†f — will be retained by me up here plus a bit extra for the LAWYER'S bill, etc. The latter tells me that to safeguard oneself against any possibility of future claims one should, about 1 month after PROBATE (i.e., as from 1 July), insert 3 successive notices in the Gazette,†a Times and LOCAL PAPERS, addressed to undeclared creditors and limiting the period of liability. This means the final settlement will be somewhat further delayed. The demand for payment of duty will be made in September or thereabouts (so until then interest on the amount in question will be recoverable), after which we shall have to deal with Wood's account and pay over the money; it will then be possible to dispose of the matter finally.

Page Break me41.536
Page me41.536
I have discovered the chap to whom Lupus went to be photographed and who has the original negative. I have had 24 prints done, 4 of which I enclose; you might give one each to Pfänder and Eccarius, and if you want any more they are yours for the asking. I took this opportunity of having another one taken of myself, the result of which you will find enclosed; people here say it is very good.†b
Page me41.536
Free Press received with thanks. What will POOR Collet set his hand to, now that Othello's OCCUPATION is GONE? And that poor, clever boy†c who is party to all the secrets of highest diplomacy?
Page me41.536
Many regards. How goes it with the furuncles?

Your
F.E.

Page me41.536
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

324
MARX TO ENGELS†613
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.536
[London,] 7 June 1864

Dear Frederick,

Have received your photogram, also those of Lupus. I need AT LEAST 4 more COPIES of the latter. Your photogram is excellent. The children say that it makes you look a 'pleasant subject'.†a As the new photograms we intended to have taken have not yet materialised, little Jenny yesterday sent you the glass thing. The Dagbladet received with THANKS.

Page Break me41.537
Page me41.537

The enclosed letter from Liebknecht which I got yesterday will interest you in several respects. You should place it in the archives, like the other letters of this kind I send you. I immediately replied to L., generally commending him for his attitude and only reprimanding him for the silly stipulation — our collaboration — he made in regard to the proposed publication of Lassalle's PAPER — now happily abandoned.†614 I explained that, while we consider it politic to give Lassalle a completely free rein for the time being, we cannot identify ourselves with him in any way.... In the course of this week I shall send him (Liebknecht) some money. The poor devil seems to be doing damned badly. He has given a very good account of himself and his continued sojourn in Berlin is most important -to us.
Page me41.537

Borkheim showed me a letter from the great Orges, presently in Vienna. O. intimates that 'softening of the brain' has 'got the better' of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, that 'particularism' rather than 'Teutonism' holds sway over the paper, that one of the four proprietors of the Augsburg A.Z. had 'insulted' him (the 'great Orges') 'almost personally', that his hands had long been tied and he had finally resigned, etc. SERVES O. RIGHT. The fellow treated us vilely over the Vogt affair.†b
Page me41.537

Borkheim has given me very exact particulars in writing, authenticated on the spot, concerning progress on the Suez Canal. I shall see that Daud Pasha†c is advised of the same.
Page me41.537

As for the Danish affair, the Russians are in a very difficult position. They drove Prussia into the war by promising her the earth and, as a quid pro quo for Prussia's help, past and present, over the Polish business,†507 held out great prospects in regard to Schleswig-Holstein. Needless to say, handsome William,†d now that he looks upon himself as WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, cannot be fobbed off in the same way as his brilliant predecessor.†615 As for Palmerston, his hands are tied by the Queen.†e Bonaparte, whom the Russians and their Pam wanted to use as a scapegoat to propitiate the Germans, HAS REASONS OF HIS OWN for playing the deaf-mute. Come to that, aside from a possible secret treaty with Prussia, the Russians are now chiefly concerned with 'German sympathies'. It is therefore possible that, under SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES, they will 'sacrifice' Schleswig-Holstein, just as, in the 3rd partition of Poland, Catherine II declared the cession of the present kingdom of Poland to the Prussians to be a great sacrifice on her part — with the mental reservation, of course, that, when the time came, the sacrifice would be retrieved.†513 The outrageous step the Russians have now taken in the Caucasus,†616 watched by the rest of Europe with idiotic indifference, virtually compels them — and indeed makes it easier for them — to turn a blind eye to what is happening elsewhere. These 2 affairs, the suppression of the Polish insurrection and the annexation of the Caucasus, I regard as the two most important events to have taken place in Europe since 1815. Pam and Bonaparte can now say that they have not ruled in vain, and, if the Schleswig-Holstein war†572 has served no other purpose than to hoodwink Germany and France about those two great events, it will have done its job for the Russians, whatever the outcome of the London Conference.†577 You will see from Liebknecht's letter that the Prussian liberal press is too cowardly even so much as to remark on the continued surrender of Polish refugees by the Prussians. Bismarck has killed it stone dead with the Schleswig-Holstein business.

Page Break me41.538

Page me41.538

The AMERICAN NEWS looks very good to me; I was particularly delighted by today's LEADER in The Times, in which it is proved that Grant has been continually beaten and may perhaps be punished for his defeats — with the capture of Richmond!
Page me41.538

Salut.
Your Moor

Page me41.538
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.538a
Page me41.538a

Frederick Engels
(Manchester, 1864)

Page Break me41.538b
Page me41.538b

Marx, Engels and Marx's daughters
(left to right) Laura, Eleanor and Jenny, 1864

Page Break me41.539

325
ENGELS TO MARX†249
IN LONDON
Page me41.539
Manchester, 9 June 1864

Dear Moor,

Your telegram received; the other halves of the five banknotes follow herewith. I have cleaned up the glass photogram†a a bit and now find that it's very good. I shall show it to Gumpert and his wife this evening.

Page me41.539

Clearly it's of the utmost importance to us that Liebknecht should be in Berlin — to spring surprises on Izzy and also, at an appropriate moment, quietly to enlighten the workers at large about our attitude towards him. At all events, we must keep him there and support him to some extent. If you send him some money now, it will encourage him a great deal and, if you think any more is needed, let me know and I'll send you a five pound note for him.

Page me41.539

Apropos obituary for Lupus. We must do a kind of biography; I think we ought to have it printed in Germany as a pamphlet, with the whole of the parliamentary debate†b as an appendix. Let's not allow the thing to slide.†617

Page me41.539

What do Borkheim's reports say about progress on the Suez Canal? Have matters actually got to a stage that points to its early completion?

Page me41.539

I'm very anxious to see how things go in Virginia. The sides still seem to be almost evenly matched and mere chance, the opportunity of scoring an isolated victory over just one of Grant's corps, might restore Lee's superiority. The battle before Richmond may be fought under quite different circumstances, for Butler is certainly weaker than Beauregard, otherwise he wouldn't have let himself be forced on to the defensive and, even if one were as strong as the other, Lee, if he linked up with Beaur. at Richmond, would certainly be stronger than Grant and Butler combined. For Lee can debouch with his entire force from his fortified camp on each side of the James River, whereas Grant must detach part of his troops (to the south side of the river). But I am hoping that Grant will, nevertheless, go through with the affair; at all events, there can be no doubt that, after the first battle in the Wilderness, Lee has shown little further inclination to engage in decisive encounters in the open field,†618 on the contrary, he has always kept his main force in fortified positions and only committed himself to brief attacks. I also like the methodical pace of Grant's operations. On such terrain and with such an opponent it's the only correct method.

Page Break me41.540

Page me41.540
A collection for the Solingen chaps†a won't produce anything up here; however, it goes without saying that I shall send you something for them. Let me know, when you've reached that stage, how much they have got for the journey and how much it will cost.

Page me41.540
Three days ago our old Hill finally handed in his cash box, but is, understandably enough, still quite incapable of tearing himself away from the office. He still haunts it every day, just as he has always done. It was not until today that he stayed away, at least for the morning, but after his dinner couldn't stand it any longer.
Page me41.540
Many regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.540
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913, and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

326
MARX TO ENGELS†67
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.540
[London,] 16 June 1864

DEAR Frederick,
THANKS FOR Dagbladet.
Page me41.540
Before I start on this letter — and so that I don't forget — here's a question for you: Are the following word groups I found in a Belgian etymologist's work†b OF ANY VALUE?

Page Break me41.541
Page me41.541
Sanskrit Wer (couvrir, protéger, respecter, honorer, aimer, chérir†a), adjective Wertas (EXCELLENT, RESPECTABLE), Gothic Wairths, ANGLO-SAXON Weorth, English worth, Lithuanian werthas, Alemannic Werth.
Page me41.541
Sanskrit Wertis, Latin virtus, Gothic Wairthi, Teutonic Werth.
Page me41.541
Sanskrit Wal (couvrir, fortifier†b), valor, value. (???)

Page me41.541

Strohn is here. Arrived yesterday. Leaves for Bradford again tomorrow. Seems to me very much better. Also more PLUCKY now.

Page me41.541

I and various other people here have collected so much for the two Solingen chaps†c that only 2 more pounds are needed to enable them to leave for New York by sailing-vessel and not be completely broke on arrival there. I am also giving them a note for Dr Jacobi, by which means we shall discover what the modest little man is ABOUT.

Page me41.541

Herewith a letter I have received from Liebknecht who also sent a piece from the Grenzboten about Lupus.†d Liebknecht will by now have got my second letter containing a 'real consideration' (as Mr Patkul calls it in his secret despatches†e).

Page me41.541

The Russians would seem to be claiming Schleswig-Holstein for themselves under the heading of Oldenburg,†619 and to be 'compensating' Prussia for it. This TRANSACTION WOULD BE TOO CLEVER.

Page me41.541

A Dutch orientalist, Professor Dozy of Leyden, has brought out a book†f to prove that 'Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are figments; that the Israelites were idolaters; that they carried round a “stone” in the “arke des Verbonds”†g; that the tribe of Simeon (driven out under Saul) went to Mecca where they built a heathen temple and worshipped stones; that, after the release from Babylon, Ezra invented the myth of the creation up to and including Joshua, and also wrote laws and dogmas, thus paving the way for reform, monotheism, etc.'.

Page me41.541

That's what they write and tell me from Holland; they also say that the book has created a great sensation among theologians there, particularly since Dozy is the most learned orientalist in Holland and, what's more — a professor at Leyden! Outside Germany at any rate (Renan, Colenso, Dozy, etc.) there is a remarkable anti-religious movement.

Page Break me41.542

Page me41.542

The children send you their love, and my wife asks me to dun you for her chain.

Page me41.542

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.542

(You might let me have your 'PRIVATE ADDRESS' in case there should be ANYTHING else I want to communicate to you of a Saturday evening.)

Page me41.542

Send me Ernest Jones's ADDRESS.

Page me41.542

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

327
MARX TO LION PHILIPS†67
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.542
London, 25 June 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Uncle,

Very many thanks for your detailed letter. I know how onerous writing is for you on account of your eyes and, indeed, the last thing I expect is that you should answer every one of my letters. I was glad to see from what you wrote that you are physically fit, and that your equanimity has not been shaken by the revelations of Prof. Dozy.†a However, since Darwin demonstrated that we are all descended from the apes, there is scarcely ANY SHOCK WHATEVER that could shake 'our ancestral pride'. That the Pentateuch†b was concocted only after the return of the Jews from Babylonian captivity had already been pointed out by Spinoza in his Tractatus theologico-politicus.
Page me41.542

In the enclosed note Eleanor herself thanks you for your photogram, which is as good as such shadow pictures can ever hope to be. The child had already placed 'her letter' on my desk some 3 or 4 days ago.

Page Break me41.543
Page me41.543

I have had a recurrence of FURUNCLES and only got rid of them a fortnight ago. Since my work was greatly impeded by this tiresome complaint — and, in addition, the doctor's orders precluded strenuous or prolonged mental work — I have, which will surprise you not a little, been speculating — partly in American FUNDS, but more especially in English stocks, which are springing up like mushrooms this year (in furtherance of every imaginable and unimaginable joint stock enterprise), are forced up to a quite unreasonable level and then, for the most part, collapse. In this way, I have made over £400 and, now that the complexity of the political situation affords greater scope, I shall begin all over again. It's a type of operation that makes small demands on one's time, and it's worth while running some risk in order to relieve the enemy of his money.
Page me41.543

All is well, on the whole, with my family. The doctor wishes little Jenny to have a CHANGE OF AIR and, unless you or fate have any objection, I and my 3 daughters will descend upon you towards the end of the summer.

Page me41.543

By now the fruitless outcome of the conference†577 will have been made known ALL OVER EUROPE by telegraph. The only people in this diplomatic tragi-comedy who are imperturbably pursuing their former aims and playing a masterly game are les russes.†a On the one hand, they are reviving the Holy Alliance,†511 chivvying the German oxen into war, and thus diverting the eyes of Europe from their own colossal successes in Poland and Circassia; on the other, they are inciting Denmark to resist and will, thanks to Mr Palmerston, eventually succeed in getting England to declare war in support of the Protocol of 1852†380 which, as documentary evidence has now shown, was dictated by Russia†620! The English, who did not go to war for Poland although pledged to do so by the treaties of 1815 and who did not go to war for Circassia despite the fact that possession of the Caucasus assures Russian hegemony in Asia, are to go to war and — I THINK IT PROBABLE — will go to war, for a treaty dictated by Russia, while that same Russia officially sides with the opponents of that very treaty! C'est incroyable!†b There's not a vestige of sympathy for Denmark amongst the English people (although, needless to say, antipathy and to spare for Prussia and Austria); it proved impossible to hold ONE SINGLE PUBLIC MEETING in support of the Danes; the fund started by a few aristocrats for the Danish wounded PROVED A COMPLETE FAILURE; but the English people have no more say in their foreign policy than the man in the moon. The PUBLIC OPINION advanced in The Times, etc., is 'prescribed' by the wishes of OLD Pam himself.

Page Break me41.544

Page me41.544

Between 19 and 21 June Copenhagen was on the brink of revolution. The king†a had received a Russian despatch advising him to declare himself in favour of a personal union of the Duchies with THE DANISH CROWN. The king, a creature of the Russians (who placed his son†b in Athens, his daughter†c in England, and himself on the Danish throne), came out in favour of the Russian proposal, which was opposed by his minister, Monrad. Only after a two-day debate, Monrad's resignation and demonstrations IN THE STREETS OF COPENHAGEN, did the brand-new KING draw in his horns, BUT IN THIS WAY RUSSIA HAS AGAIN SHOWN THE CLOVEN FOOT. Quite apart, by the by, from its being in Russia's specific interest that the war should continue and spread, it is in her general interest that the peoples of Europe, of whom she is the common foe, should bloody each other's heads. The AIRS Prussia gives herself — handsome William as WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR — are comical. This pomp and circumstance will come to a sudden and sticky end.

Page me41.544

To give you an idea of what the GOOD Palmerston is like, I enclose with The Morning Post (Palmerston's private monitor) a cutting of a speech made by Ferrand during a parliamentary debate.†d It is concerned solely with the appointment of a CHARITY INSPECTOR. From the passages I have marked, you will see the sort of things that are said to Pam's face in Parliament but without ever penetrating his hippopotamus's hide.

Page me41.544
I deliberately avoided seeing Garibaldi DURING HIS STAY AT London.†e I wouldn't mind visiting him at Caprera, but here in London HE SERVED ONLY AS A PEG FOR EVERY SELF-IMPORTANT FOOL TO HANG HIS carte de visite UPON.
Page me41.544
Warmest regards to THE WHOLE FAMILY. My wife also sends her regards to you AND FAMILY.

YOURS TRULY,
Ch. Marx

Page me41.544
First published, in the language of the original (German), in the International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.545

328
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.545
[London,] 1 July 1864

DEAR Frederick,
Did you get the letter I sent you ABOUT 2 WEEKS ago, with the enclosure from Liebknecht, etc.?†a
Page me41.545
No answer yet from Elsner.†621
Page me41.545
I've been taking medicine again for ABOUT 10 days, and today have got a species of INFLUENZA as well. Hence NOT ABLE TO-DAY FOR BETTER WRITING.
Page me41.545
THANKS FOR Dagbladet.
Page me41.545
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me41.545
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

329
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.545
[London,] 4 July 1864

DEAR Frederick,

On 3 June you wrote and told me that you would be SETTLING the business of the money with Borchardt the following day.†b I have 3 reasons for wishing the thing to be settled:

Page me41.545

1. Because of Borchardt;

Page me41.545

2. I do not know by what rumour (perhaps deriving from Germany, Trier) I have come to be known as a 'legatee'. It's fantastic what bills I've been sent, dating back to ANCIENT TIMES (Neue Rheinische Zeitung included).

Page Break me41.546

Page me41.546

3. Had I had the money during the past 10 days, I'd have made a great deal of money on the Stock Exchange here. The time has come again when, with WIT and VERY LITTLE MONEY, it's possible to make money in London.

Page me41.546

For these reasons I'd like the business to be settled, after deduction, OF COURSE, from my share of the sums required for duties and other outgoings — to the LAWYER, etc.

Page me41.546

YOU WILL MUCH OBLIGE ME BY SETTLING THESE THINGS BEFORE JULY 15. You must excuse me for bothering you in view of your CHARGE OF BUSINESS, BUT THERE ARE VERY SERIOUS INTERESTS AT STAKE.

Page me41.546

Many thanks for settling the Freiligrath affair.†a Is the portrait he sent you the sinister Faustian one little Jenny has got in her album?

Page me41.546

My wife, who attended an auction to buy the things she still required, has purchased a sturdy CARVING KNIFE AND FORK for you and will send them off today. I had told her there were none in your household.

Page me41.546

Greetings from the EMPEROR OF CHINA†b et cie.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.546
My nose, mouth, etc., still bunged up with influenza so that I can neither smell nor taste.
Page me41.546
During this time, being utterly incapable of work, have read Carpenter, Physiology, Lord, ditto, Kölliker, Gewebelehre, Spurzheim, The Anatomy of the Brain and the Nervous System, and Schwann and Schleiden, on the cells business.†c In Lord's Popular Physiology, there's a good critique of phrenology, although the chap's religious. One passage recalls Hegel's Phenomenology; it reads:

'They attempt to break up the mind into a number of supposed original faculties, such as no metaphysician will, for a moment, admit; and the brain into an equal number of organs, which the anatomist in vain asks to be shown, and then proceed to attach one of the former unadmitted suppositions as a mode of action to one of the latter undemonstrated existences.'

Page me41.546
As you know, 1. I'm always late off the mark with everything, and 2. I invariably follow in your footsteps. So it's probable that I shall now devote much of my spare time to anatomy and PHYSIOLOGY and, in addition, attend lectures (where there will be practical demonstrations and dissection).

Page Break me41.547

Page me41.547
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

330
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.547
Manchester, 5 July 1864

Dear Moor,
When I wrote to you on 3 June, saying I would settle the business of the money on the 4th,†a this can only have related to the money in the bank, about which I did actually make arrangements straight away. It didn't occur to me that you would want any more money for the present, and we had in fact agreed that you would write and say if you did wish to have any more; hence I simply left it on deposit with that philistine Steinthal, who does, after all, pay 5%.

Page me41.547

But to SETTLE the matter of the legacy from the 3rd to the 4th of June would have been promising more than I or anyone else could do. I believe I also wrote and told you that this might be a fairly lengthy business, depending as it did on all sorts of legal formalities (ADVERTISING a request to Lupus's undeclared creditors, payment of estate duty, etc.) which can't be hurried along. However, I'll leave no stone unturned to wind up the affair quickly.
Page me41.547

But this is not, of course, to say you won't get an approximate share of the bequest as soon as you want it. You'll be getting a minimum of £600 — I hope more — so we'll be able to send you another £350 or so, and I shall see to it that you actually get it this week. I shall also badger Borchardt to send in his bill, for this is partly why much still remains to be settled.
Page me41.547

If only you'd dropped me a couple of lines before now, I should have been able to procure the £350 for you at any time, i.e. within a day or two. Today I can't do anything. I've been slaving away at the office all day, arguing with lawyers and G. Ermen (the DEED OF PARTNERSHIP isn't ready yet, and until then G.E. refuses to recognise my right to act as a partner†270), on top of which I've had Dronke here. Now it's nearly 7 o'clock, and I've still had no DINNER, nor have I yet finished work. So you see how things are.

Page Break me41.548
Page me41.548

Many regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.548
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

331
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH
IN LONDON
Page me41.548
[London,] 12 July 1864

1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

Dear Freiligrath,

I got a letter today (just now) on which the address would appear to be written in your hand. If that is so, I should like to know how the letter reached you? It is from that blackguard Brass (in Berlin) who has the impudence to ask me to forward a scrawl to Biscamp.†622 Having lost sight of that vagabond Biscamp years ago, I have, moreover, no idea how to rid myself of the scrawl, since the creature's WHEREABOUTS are not known to me.

Page me41.548

I am writing from my bed, having had to take to it for several days because of what was a very dangerous carbuncle. This damned complaint keeps incessantly cropping up again.

Page me41.548

On the 15th inst. I shall send Lenchen to you bearing £30, returned with many thanks — if, that is, I am not myself capable, though I think I shall be, of betaking myself between now and the 15th (inclusive) to the City, where I have other business to attend to.

Page me41.548

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.548

First published in the notes in F. Mehring, The Freiligrath-Marx Correspondence, Moscow-Leningrad, 1929 (in Russian)

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.549

332

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me41.549

Ramsgate, 25 July 1864 46 Hardres Street

Dear Frederick,

You will see from the address that I am spending a few days in Ramsgate.

Page me41.549

It was a far from agreeable surprise to discover that my FURUNCLE was in fact an extremely malignant CARBUNCLE and, what is more, has had the impudence to erupt just above my penis. So, for ABOUT 10 days, I've been obliged to spend most of my time in bed — and in this heat, too! The thing is clearing up pretty quickly here; however, my confidence has completely evaporated now that the disease has unexpectedly cropped up again in such a malignant form.

Page me41.549
Jenny and Tussy are here with me; Laura is coming the day after tomorrow and in ABOUT 8 or 10 days we shall go to Holland, during which time my wife will betake herself to the seaside.
Page me41.549
Apropos. Don't forget to send the latter her chain, as she will need this for her watch when at the resort. She says all you have to do is put it in a little box and have it posted, so sending it off couldn't possibly put you to much trouble.
Page me41.549
I hope you have now sorted things out with Ermen and are no longer being BOTHERED by LAWYERS.†a
Page me41.549
As for the Schleswig-Holstein affair, I'm not yet wholly convinced that it won't end in a personal union between the Duchies and Denmark. The jealousy between Prussia and Austria and that felt by both towards the German Confederation, as well as the quarrel between Augustenburg†b and Russia's pretender, Oldenburg,†c etc., mean that such a solution is still at least a possibility, even at this late hour. Incidentally, as far back as 1851, Palmerston put forward the Duke of Oldenburg†d en passant and as a pis aller†e as candidate for Schleswig-Holstein.
Page me41.549
I shall write and tell Laura to send you The Free Press.
Page me41.549
Your philistine on the spree lords it here as do, to an even greater extent, his better half and his female OFFSPRING. It is almost sad to see venerable Oceanus, that age-old Titan, having to suffer these pigmies to disport themselves on his phiz, and serve them for entertainment.

Page Break me41.550
Page me41.550
BEST COMPLIMENTS from Jenny and Tussy. Life at the seaside suits both of them admirably. Addio.

Moor

Page me41.550
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO LION PHILIPS†239
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me41.550
London, 17 August 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Uncle,

I found your letter waiting for me here when I came back from the British Museum yesterday evening. It was already too late for me to reply straight away. I need not tell you how alarmed I and all the family were by the contents of your letter.†623 One thing we failed to understand. Why didn't you leave the house instantly with Nettchen†a? I would advise you to do so even now. When the same thing happened in my family, I immediately sent the children away; and the giantess†b can be nursed perfectly well without you. Why court danger unnecessarily? You will forgive me for interfering, but I feel too worried about you TO MINCE MATTERS. In fact, I am sorry that I am not with you in person, for this disease has no effect upon me, as I know from experience and, had you really insisted on not leaving the house (BUT WHY NOT?), I could have stood by you at this time of crisis, for in such crises two are better able than one, and three better able than two, TO KILL TIME AND ROUGH IT.
Page me41.550

I have written to Nettchen about our own recent doings,†42 and she will pass on to you what little is worth mentioning. On the whole, things are going quite well here and all members of the family are reasonably fit.

Page Break me41.551
Page me41.551

Just now there's a political and social lull here. Everyone who can, makes off, either abroad or to seaside resorts in this country. The monotony is broken only by daily reports of terrible RAILWAY ACCIDENTS. Capital over here isn't as much subject to police supervision as on the Continent, and hence it's of no concern whatever to the RAILWAY DIRECTORS HOW MANY PEOPLE ARE KILLED DURING AN EXCURSION SEASON, IF ONLY THE BALANCE LOOKS TO THE COMFORTABLE SIDE. All attempts to make these RAILWAY kings responsible for their HOMICIDAL NEGLECT OF ALL PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES have hitherto come to grief as a result of the great influence exerted by the RAILWAY INTEREST in the HOUSE OF COMMONS.
Page me41.551

Another source of distraction over here is the ANXIETY PREVAILING IN MERCANTILE CIRCLES BECAUSE OF THE RISE OF THE RATE OF DISCOUNT! It is certain that, if the present RATE OF DISCOUNT remains at its present high for a few more weeks, there will be a great CRASH among the myriads of SWINDLING JOINT STOCK COMPANIES, which have been springing up like mushrooms this year. Already, here and there in the CITY a major bankruptcy heralds the approaching storm.
Page me41.551

I recently had an opportunity of looking at a very important scientific work, Grove's Correlation of Physical Forces. He demonstrates that mechanical motive force, heat, light, electricity, magnetism and CHEMICAL AFFINITY are all in effect simply modifications of the same force, and mutually generate, replace, merge into each other, etc. With great skill he dismisses such odious metaphysical-physical phantasms as 'latent heat' (as good as 'invisible light'), electric 'fluid' and similar verbal pis aller†a which come in handy as understudies in place of ideas.
Page me41.551
I hope to have good tidings of you soon. So much am I taken up with thoughts of you that I am unable to compose myself sufficiently to read the important AMERICAN NEWS today.
Page me41.551
The whole family send their warmest regards. Kindly remember me to Jettchen, the doctor, Fritz†b et cie.

Your affectionate nephew
K.M.

Page me41.551
First published, in the language of the original (German), in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.552

334
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.552
[London,] 31 August 1864

DEAR Frederick,
I returned from Ramsgate†a exactly three weeks ago today. The trip to Holland has fallen through, because a maid in my uncle's†b household suddenly contracted smallpox.
Page me41.552
Last week my wife had a severe attack of cholerine which did, for a spell, look like becoming dangerous. Yesterday she left for Brighton (solo).
Page me41.552
I have sundry letters from Liebknecht here which, however, I shall not send as I don't know whether you are in Manchester. The enclosed scrawl by Collet†c will amuse you, and, should you not be there, it doesn't really matter. What naïveté on C.'s part! Since (to use an Austrian construction) I had done a long article on the RUSSIAN CLAIMS for him, which he didn't print, he expects me to take an interest in his ridiculous rubbish.

Page me41.552

The enclosed letter from Elsner is in reply to my wife's asking him for biographical notes on Lupus.†d

Page me41.552

I've been operative again for a couple of days. Before that I was still troubled with sickness and INCAPABLE. If you haven't left yet, let us know at once. We hope to see you on your way through at any rate. The children send you their love. Jenny can hardly wait to show you her GREENHOUSE.

Page me41.552

I haven't yet quite made up my mind about the Schleswig-Holstein affair, and more facts will be needed before a clear picture can be gained of it. You were right when you predicted the rebirth of the Holy Alliance.†e Bonaparte would seem to have a strong 'inclination AT LEAST' to make 'a fourth in the alliance'.†f Since the outbreak of the Polish revolution to date, the utter despicability of the fellow has Manifested itself in the clearest and most genuine light.†624

Page Break me41.553

Page me41.553

I've had an opportunity of looking at Grove's Correlation of Physical Forces. He is beyond doubt the most philosophical of the English (and indeed German!) natural scientists. Our friend Schleiden has an inborn proclivity for fadaise,†a although he, by mistake, discovered the cell.

Page me41.553

Herewith Pieper's card.†625 It accidentally fell into Liebknecht's hands and he has returned it to me.

Page me41.553

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.553

Be so good as to send me Ernest Jones's Manchester address. DON'T FORGET!

Page me41.553

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

335
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me41.553

Manchester, 2 September 1864

Dear Moor,

I had assumed from your last letter†b that you'd be in the depths of the Dutch fens, hence my pertinacious silence. I couldn't find your address in Holland. I sent your wife the watch and chain on 6 August, in a box, by registered mail, and trust it arrived safely.

Page me41.553

I intend to travel from Hull to Hamburg next Thursday, the 8th, or Saturday, the 10th September, in order to take a look at OUR NEW PROPERTY in Schleswig and Holstein and shall, provided there are no passport difficulties, also go from Lübeck to Copenhagen. I shall not be returning before the end of September and, if at all feasible, shall spend a day in London on the way back.

Page me41.553

The PARTNERSHIP business has at last been settled, and the contracts signed,†c so I hope to have 5 years' peace from that direction.

Page me41.553

We have left our house in Tennant Street†626 and have been living for the past fortnight about 500 paces further along, in a somewhat larger house with 2 living-rooms downstairs; thus we have bettered ourselves after much the same fashion as you did by your last removal. The address is 86 Mornington Street, Stockport Road, Manchester. Letters to be addressed to me by name as before.

Page Break me41.554

Page me41.554

Jones's address is 52 Cross Street, Manchester.

Page me41.554

The Danes still believe, or rather fear, that a personal union will be established and, since editors Bille, of the Dagbladet, and Ploug, of the Faedrelandet, are both deputies and undoubtedly have good sources, and, since the present ministers are also good Russians, I feel convinced that powerful intrigues towards that end are being conducted by Russia. However, Monsieur Bismarck certainly has other things in view and, if he is to gain positive advantages, i.e. if he is to mediatise Schleswig-Holstein,†627 I think he will need the Augustenburg chap†a pretty badly. This much is certain, never has Prussian dynastic policy involving the partition of Germany along the Main been so insolently advocated, and as for the rotten liberal gang, they seem to be taking quite kindly to it. Should this be the case — and I shall find out easily enough in Germany — the Prussian bourgeoisie will be giving us a tremendous lever for the next SET-TO. I am sure by the way that Elsner is right, at least about the old provinces†628 being intolerably flushed with victory. Indeed, I shall take care not to go there. It will be bad enough even on the Rhine.

Page me41.554

To the worthy Gottfried's†b intense alarm, I told him about Monsieur Bonaparte's ardent desire to join the Holy Alliance†c on the very day the matter became known. The fellow's bound to come to a bad end. To ruminate perpetually about 'business' is very aging, as I can see from Gottfried, who has much the same attitude to trade as B. has to politics, and whose train of thought is also similar. As the years go by, one dreams of retirement and, if it's not feasible, one's health suffers. N'est pas Palmerston qui veut.†629 Ce cher†d Bonaparte is, I should say, very much ON THE DECLINE. So much the better; once he starts to flag, he'll soon be done for.

Page me41.554
Best wishes to the girls. But why didn't you drop me a couple of lines to say you were not going to Holland and that your wife was ill?

Your
F.E.

Page me41.554
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart. 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.555

336
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.555
[London,] 2 September 1864

Dear Frederick,
Yesterday afternoon I received a letter from Freiligrath, of which copy below; from it you will see that Lassalle has been gravely wounded in a duel in Geneva. I went to see Freiligr. that same evening. However, he had not received any more telegrams. Incidentally, he told me — entre nous†a — that his bank was in a state of crisis, aggravated by the affair in Geneva and the role Fazy had played in the same.†630
Page me41.555
Salut.
Your
K.M.†b

Page me41.555
'Dear Marx,
'I have just had a letter from Klapka in Geneva, containing the sad news that, on 30 August, Lassalle fought a duel in Geneva with a Wallachian pseudo-prince†c and was mortally wounded. Herewith the details from K.'s letter....
Page me41.555

"”Lassalle had been conducting a love-affair here, though with perfectly honourable intentions as he wished to marry the girl,†d the daughter of the Bavarian envoy, von Dönniges. The father objected to the marriage, the girl deceived poor Lassalle; a man to whom she had been previously engaged, the above-mentioned pseudo-prince, arrived from Berlin; then came explanations, an unpleasant exchange of letters, and a challenge ensued. Lassalle's seconds were Colonel Rüstow and my fellow countryman, General Count Bethlen. Lassalle, as befitted a man of his reputation and political position, behaved with no less courage than dignity. He was shot in the stomach and is now laid up at the Hôtel Victoria with his life hanging in the balance. Unfortunately for him, the bullet is lodged deep in the body, so the wound might well become gangrenous. I went to see him at once upon my arrival and found him dictating his will, but otherwise calm and resigned to death. I am exceedingly sorry for him; often one does not get to know a person until his end is near at hand.

Page Break me41.556
Let us hope that, despite the doctors' unfavourable prognoses, he will come safely through the crisis.”
'So much for Klapka.'

Page me41.556
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

337
MARX TO JENNY MARX†239
IN BRIGHTON
Page me41.556
[London,] 2 September 1864

Dear Jenny,

Yesterday I got a letter from Freiligrath — copy below — from which you will see that Lassalle has been gravely wounded in a duel in Geneva. We were genuinely dismayed by the news since, whatever one may say, L. is too good to go under in this way. After receiving the letter, I went to see Freiligrath, i.e. at his private address, knowing that Ida†a was away. He seemed very 'agreeably' surprised by my visit. His daughter Louise was with him. The rest of the crew are coming back at the end of this week. Louise had been staying in Brighton for a fortnight with Franziska Ruge. Bearing in mind the Freilig.-Ruge, etc., connection, you should take care with your baroness's cards.†b Ruge would be just the fellow to turn something like that to account.
Page me41.556

Freilig. was by no means as 'moved' as he made out in his letter, but cracked his little jokes as always, even on the subject of L. He told me that his bank was in a state of crisis and that the Geneva affair in particular and the role played therein by Fazy were doing it a great deal of harm.†630 Finally, here is Tussy's LAST. It being plain from F.'s letter that L. had fought a duel on account of a lady†c he wished to marry, Laura recalled how he told every woman he could 'only love her for 6 weeks'. So, says Tussy, 'HE IS WARRANTED FOR 6 WEEKS'.

Page Break me41.557
Page me41.557

Little Jenny is working like mad in her GREENHOUSE. All are well and send their love.

THE OLD ONE

F.'s letter†a
'I have just had a letter from Klapka in Geneva. He writes:
'"Lassalle had been conducting a love-affair here, though with perfectly honourable intentions as he wished to marry the girl, the daughter of the Bavarian envoy, Mr von Dönniges. The father objected to the marriage, the girl deceived poor Lassalle; a man to whom she had been previously engaged, the above-mentioned pseudo-prince,†b arrived from Berlin; then came explanations, an upleasant exchange of letters, and a challenge ensued. Lassalle's seconds were Colonel Rüstow and my fellow countryman, General Count Bethlen. Lassalle, as befitted a man of his reputation and political position, behaved with no less courage than dignity. He was shot in the stomach and is now laid up at the Hôtel Victoria with his life hanging in the balance. Unfortunately for him, the bullet is lodged deep in the body, so the wound might well become gangrenous. I went to see him at once upon my arrival and found him dictating his will, but otherwise calm and resigned to death. I am exceedingly sorry for him; often one does not get to know a person until his end is near at hand. Let us hope that, despite the doctors' unfavourable prognoses, he will come safely through the crisis."
Page me41.557
'So much for Klapka. I cannot but confess' (what an affected way of putting it — as though he was on the rack!) 'that I was deeply affected by the news and immediately telegraphed Klapka, asking him to convey my sympathy and grief to Lassalle, if he should still be alive. Klapka will reply by telegraph and I shall immediately pass on to you anything I learn.'

Page me41.557
First published, in the language of the original (German), in Annali, an. I, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.558

ENGELS TO MARX†369
IN LONDON
Page me41.558
Manchester, 4 September 1864
86 Mornington Street,
Stockport Road

Dear Moor,

Your telegram†631 arrived yesterday even before I had opened your letter, my attention having first been claimed by all kinds of business. You can imagine how surprised I was by the news. Whatever Lassalle may have been in other respects as a person, writer, scholar — he was, as a politician, undoubtedly one of the most significant men in Germany. For us he was a very uncertain friend now and would, in future, most certainly have been our enemy; but nevertheless, it's very galling to see how Germany destroys all those in the extreme party who are in any way worth their salt. What jubilation there will be amongst the manufacturers and amongst the Progress swine, for L. was indeed the only man actually inside Germany of whom they were afraid.
Page me41.558

But what an extraordinary way to lose one's life: To go and fall seriously in love with a Bavarian envoy's daughter†a — this WOULD-BE Don Juan —, ask for her hand, clash with an ex-rival,†b not to say Wallachian swindler, and get himself shot dead by the same. Such a thing could only happen to L., with his strange and altogether unique mixture of frivolity and sentimentality, Jewishness and chivalresquerie. How could a political man like him exchange shots with a Wallachian adventurer?
Page me41.558

You can see with what speed the news travelled from the fact that his death had already been announced on Thursday evening in the Könische Zeitung, which arrived here at midday yesterday†c — 2 hours after your telegram.
Page me41.558

What do you think of things in America? Lee is making masterly use of his fortified camp at Richmond, and small wonder, this being already the third campaign to revolve around it.†632 He is pinning down Grant's massive force with comparatively few men and is employing the better part of his own troops for offensive action in West Virginia and as a threat to Washington and

Page Break me41.559
Pennsylvania. A first-class object-lesson for the Prussians, who could learn from it down to the last detail how to conduct a campaign centred upon the fortified camp of Coblenz, but who are, of course, far too arrogant to learn anything from these improvised generals. Grant — discharged from the army for drunkenness 6 years ago when a lieutenant, subsequently a bibulous engineer in St. Louis — has much UNITY OF PURPOSE and considerable contempt for the lives of his cannon-fodder; he would also seem to be very resourceful as a small-scale strategist (i.e. day-to-day operations), but I look in vain for any signs that he has enough breadth of vision to be able to survey the campaign as a whole. It seems to me that the campaign against Richmond is on the point of collapse; the impatience with which G. is attacking now in one place now in another, but nowhere proceeding methodically with saps and mines is a bad sign. Altogether, so far as the Yankees are concerned, the engineering branch would seem to be in a poor state; for this calls, not only for theoretical knowledge, but also for a tradition of practice which cannot be readily improvised.

Page me41.559

Whether Sherman will cope with Atlanta seems doubtful, but his chances are, I think, rather better.†633 Skirmishing by guerrillas and cavalry to his rear are unlikely to do him much harm. The fall of Atlanta would be a hard blow for the South, Rome would fall at the same time and that's where their gun foundries, etc., are; in addition, the railway connection between Atlanta and South Carolina would be lost.
Page me41.559

Farragut is the same as always. The fellow knows what he's about. But whether Mobile itself will fall is very doubtful. The town is very strongly fortified and can, so far as I know, only be taken from the landward side, since vessels of deep draught can't approach near enough. But how stupid to split up the attacking forces on the coast, where Charleston and Mobile are being attacked simultaneously instead of one after the other, but each time with all available forces.
Page me41.559

I don't set much store by the peace-talk that is now so prevalent. Not even by the negotiations allegedly conducted direct by Lincoln. All this I regard as an electioneering ploy. As things now stand, I should say that Lincoln's re-election is fairly certain.†634
Page me41.559

My mother is at Ostende and will be going home again on Saturday,†a as a result of which news I have changed my travelling arrangements†b and shall be leaving for Ostende on Thursday evening. I'm afraid I shall only be able to catch the night train to London which gets in before 6 a.m. But, if I can manage it, I shall take the 4.15, thus getting to Euston station at 9.15, when I shall either go straight on to Dover (s'il y a moyen†a), or spend the night at the hotel at London Bridge Station. If the latter, I shall write to you beforehand, in which case we might be able to meet.†635 Meanwhile, write and tell me what you think about America.

Page Break me41.560
Page me41.560

Best wishes to the GIRLS.
Your
F.E.

Page me41.560
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

339
MARX TO ENGELS†369
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.560
[London,] 7 September 1864

DEAR FREDERICK,

During the past few days my thoughts have been damnably preoccupied with Lassalle's misfortune. After all, whatever else he may have been, he was one of the vieille souche†b and the foe of our foes. And then the thing came so unexpectedly that it's hard to believe so noisy, STIRRING, PUSHING a person is now dead as a door-nail and compelled to hold his tongue ALTOGETHER. As regards the cause of his death, you are perfectly right.†c It is one of the many indiscretions he committed in the course of his life. WITH ALL THAT, I am sorry that our relationship should have been clouded in recent years, though the fault lay with him. On the other hand, I am very glad that I resisted every incitement from whatever quarter and never attacked him during his 'year of triumph'.†636
Page me41.560

Heaven knows, our ranks are being steadily depleted, and there are no reinforcements in sight. I'm convinced, by the by, that this catastrophe would never have happened had L. not consorted with MILITARY ADVENTURERS and révolutionnaires en gants jaunes†d in Switzerland.

Page Break me41.561
But he was fatalement drawn again and again to this Coblenz of European revolution.†637
Page me41.561

The 'Bavarian envoy's daughter'†a is none other than the daughter of Dönniges of Berlin, a fellow university demagogue†638 of Rutenberg and co.'s, originally one of that little weed Ranke's jeunes†b GENTS — or rather, since they were no GENTLEMEN, jeunes gens†c — whom he got to edit beastly old German imperial annals,†d etc. What that capering little troll Ranke regarded as wit — playful anecdotalism and the attribution of all great events to mean and petty origins — was strictly forbidden these YOUNG MEN FROM THE COUNTRY. They were supposed to stick to what was 'objective' and leave wit to their master. Our friend Dönniges was regarded as something of a rebel, since he contested Ranke's monopoly of wit, in deed if not word, and showed ad oculos†e in various ways that he, no less than Ranke, was a born 'valet' of 'history'.†639
Page me41.561

Well, I wonder what will become of the organisation built up by L.†640 Herwegh, that platonic friend of 'labour' and practical friend of the 'Muses', isn't the right man. In general, none of its lesser leaders are anything but RUBBISH. According to what Liebknecht writes, the Schulze-Delitzsch Association in Berlin†641 can now boast no more than 40 MEMBERS. How things stand over there is clear from the fact that our Wilhelm Liebkn. is A CONSEQUENTIAL POLITICAL PERSONAGE. Should L.'s death lead fellows like Schulze, etc., to make insolent remarks about the deceased, we can only hope that L.'s official supporters conduct themselves in such a way as to enable us to enter the lists IF NECESSARY. I must now find out who has his correspondence. I shall at once obtain an INJUNCTION — for already the mob of memoir vultures such as Ludmilla,†f etc., are circling round these literary remains — prohibiting the publication of a single line of mine or yours. If necessary, this can be legally enforced in Prussia.

Page me41.561

So far as America is concerned, I consider the present moment, entre nous,†g to be extremely critical. If Grant suffers a major defeat, or Sherman wins a major victory, so ALL RIGHT. Just now, at election time, a chronic series of small CHECKS would be dangerous. I fully agree with you that, to date, Lincoln's re-election is pretty well assured, still 100 to 1.†h But election time in a country which is the archetype of democratic humbug is full of hazards that may quite unexpectedly defy the logic of events (an expression which Magnus Urquhartus considers no less idiotic than 'THE JUSTICE OF A LOCOMOTIVE'). An armistice would seem to be quite essential to the South, if it is to be saved from complete prostration. It was the first to raise this CRY, not only in its northern organs, but actually in those of Richmond, although, now that the said cry has evoked an echo in New York, the Richmond Examiner is scornfully tossing it back to the Yankees.†312 It is altogether symptomatic that Mr Davis should have decided to treat Negro soldiers as 'prisoners of war' — the last official order of his war secretary.†a

Page Break me41.562
Page me41.562

Lincoln has at his disposal considerable means for achieving election. (Needless to say, the peace proposals made by him are MERE HUMBUG.) The election of an opposition candidate would probably lead to a genuine revolution. Nevertheless, there is no mistaking the fact that during the next 8 weeks, in the course of which the matter will be decided pro tem, much will depend on military eventualities. This is undoubtedly the most critical moment since the beginning of the war. Once this has been SHIFTED, OLD LINCOLN CAN BLUNDER ON to his heart's content. The old man, by the by, cannot possibly 'create' generals. He'd be better able to select ministers. Yet the CONFEDERATE PAPERS attack their ministers just as the Yankees do those in Washington. Should Lincoln succeed this time — as is highly probable — it will be on a far more radical PLATFORM and in completely CHANGED CIRCUMSTANCES. Then the old man will, lawyer-fashion, find that more radical methods are compatible with his conscience.
Page me41.562

I hope to see you tomorrow! Regards to Madame Liz.†b
Page me41.562

Herewith a photograph of Laura. I am hourly awaiting that of Jenny, but it has not, alas, arrived yet. Salut OLD BOY.

Your
K.M.

Page me41.562

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me41.563

340
MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT†239
IN BERLIN
Page me41.563
London, 12 September 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My Dear Countess,

You will realise how surprised, dismayed and shocked I was by the utterly unexpected news of Lassalle's death. He was one of the people by whom I set great store. For me it is all the more distressing in that of late we had no longer been in touch. The reason for this was neither his silence alone — for it was he who was the instigator, not I — nor my own illness, which lasted over a year and of which I only rid myself a few days ago. There were also reasons which I could tell you by word of mouth but not in writing. Let me assure you that no one can feel greater sorrow over Lassalle's untimely end than I. And, above all else, I feel for you. I know how much the deceased meant to you and what his loss must mean. One thing you can be glad of. He died young, at a time of triumph, as an Achilles.
Page me41.563

I hope, my dear Countess, that your proud and courageous spirit will enable you to withstand this blow fate has dealt you, and that you will never doubt the wholly loyal devotion of

Your sincere friend,
Karl Marx

Page me41.563
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me41.564
Page Break me41.565

APPENDICES

Page Break me41.566
Page Break me41.567

1
JENNY MARX TO MARX
IN MANCHESTER†642
Page me41.567
[London,] 16 March 1860†a

My Dear Karl,

A thousand thanks for the letter†42 and the SPECIE. I have not got Rheinländer's address, since you took your address book away with you. But, so as to lose no time, I have, none the less, written to him and directed the letter to Mark Lane, care of Gänsewinkel. I could not think of anybody who might be able to tell me his address, which is not indicated in his letters. If you think the letter might fail to reach him by this means, you had better write to him yourself. I shall at once betake my HUMBLE BEING to Baccalaureus and make my report. We have indeed learned of late to distinguish true and loyal friends from shams. What a difference between the lesser folk and the GRANDEES. Lassalle, by the by, has grown fearfully stupid and narrow-minded; even that modicum of lawyer's acumen he had has gone to the devil, and Heraclitus has made him hellishly DULL and dark.†b None of his raisonnements†c is valid, each overturning the last. Nothing could have given me greater pleasure than the news about your book. Russia has always been good ground for you.†643 In the long run, everything is going better than I had sometimes dared to hope in my hours of solitude. One becomes so beset by doubts and fears and in the end one despairs of everything, particularly when one thinks of the universal duplicity, baseness and cowardice — the Germans' behaviour with regard to the Humboldt CASE†644 alone is enough to make them worthy of being liberated, KICKED and Jena-ed†645 by Bonaparte. Oh, what a crew! Just a few lines today. A thousand greetings from your dear, good, cheerful children and your

Page Break me41.568

Jenny

Page me41.568
First published abridged (in Russian) in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 5, Moscow, 1978 and in full (likewise in Russian) in The Correspondence of Karl Marx, Frederick Engels and Members of the Marx Family, 1835-1871, Moscow, 1983

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

2
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.568
[London, 14 August 1860]

Dear Mr Engels,

Moor has asked me to say that, if you possibly can, you should concoct an article†a for him by Friday†b or Saturday. Several have, alas, already fallen by the way, and even today's still seems to me problematical.†c ANYTHING WILL DO. Maybe some chat about the attack on Venice — no matter what.
Page me41.568

This week I hope to start copying the pamphlet.†d The thing is taking ages, and I'm afraid Karl is making too thorough a job of it.
Page me41.568

My pet bugbear is the 'analysis of Techow's letter'†56 and that, I should say, is where the snag lies. Everything else is making better headway.
Page me41.568

Every day Schily and Becker send us piles of fresh documents, which are being incorporated into the thing. And I'm sorry to say that nothing has been done about finding a publisher yet. But the whole business is to be completed this week. 'And he who disbelieves it is mistaken.'†e
Page me41.568

Warm regards from the girls and myself.

Yours,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.568
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXII, Moscow, 1929

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.569

3
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.569
[London, after 5 October 1860]

Dear Mr Engels,

Another proof-sheet†a has just arrived, which Moor must look over at once and send back to the City. He has therefore asked me to tell you — in haste, as the last post goes soon — that the highly welcome £5 note has been safely received.
Page me41.569
With warm regards from us all.
Yours,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.569
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

4
JENNY MARX TO LOUISE WEYDEMEYER
Page me41.569
Hampstead, 11 March 1861

My dear Mrs Weydemeyer,
Your kind letter arrived this morning and, so you can see how delighted I was to get it, I am sitting down straight away to write to you at some length since, from your friendly lines, I conclude that you like to hear from us, and that your recollection of us is as cordial as is ours of you. Indeed, how could such old party comrades and friends, on whom fate has imposed much the same joys and sorrows, the same sunny and gloomy days, ever become strangers, even though time and oceans have separated us? And thus from afar I hold out my hand to you as to one who is a plucky and loyal fellow fighter and fellow sufferer. Yes, my dear Mrs Weydemeyer, our hearts have often been heavy and troubled and I can imagine only too well what you have latterly had to endure, what struggles and worries and deprivations, having often been through the same thing myself. But suffering tempers us and love keeps us going.

Page Break me41.570
Page me41.570
During our early years here, we did indeed suffer bitterly, though today I will not dwell upon the many dark memories, the many losses we had to endure, nor upon the dear, sweet loved ones who have gone to their rest and whose images we always bear silently and with profound sorrow in our hearts.†a Let me tell you today about a new period in our lives which, along with much that is sad, has, nevertheless, brought many a bright moment. In 1856, I and our three remaining girls†b made a trip to Trier. My dear mother's delight on my arrival with her little grandchildren was indescribable but, alas, of short duration. The truest and best of mothers fell sick and, at the end of eleven days' suffering, her dear, weary eyes, having rested once more in benison on myself and the children, closed for ever. Your dear husband, who knew my affectionate mother, will best be able to gauge my sorrow. After our dearly loved one had been laid to rest, I left Trier, having arranged for the division between my brother Edgar and myself of what little my dear mother had bequeathed to us. Up till then, we had been living in 3 wretched furnished rooms in London. With the few hundred talers that my mother left, after all the sacrifices she had already made on our behalf, we settled into the small house we still occupy, not far from lovely Hampstead Heath†646 (a name that you, as the translator of The Woman in White,†c will no doubt recall). It is indeed a princely dwelling compared with the holes we lived in before and, although it was furnished from top to bottom for little more than £40 (in which SECONDHAND RUBBISH played a leading role), I felt quite grand at first in our SNUG PARLOUR. All the linen and what little else remained of earlier finery were redeemed from 'Uncle's'†d and I again had the pleasure of counting the damask table napkins which are, besides, all of old Scottish descent. Although the glory did not last for long — for soon one thing after another had to make its way back to the 'POP-HOUSE' (as the children call the mysterious shop with its three golden balls) — we did, nevertheless, revel in our domestic comfortableness. Then came the first American crisis and halved our income.†265 This meant a return to a more frugal way of life and debts. These last were necessary if our daughters' education, but recently begun, was to continue along the same lines as before.

Page Break me41.571
Page me41.571

And this brings me to the highlight of our existence — the brighter aspect of our lives — our dear children. I am convinced that, if your dear husband was fond of the girls even as small children, he would be truly delighted with them, now that they are well-grown, blooming young damsels. Even at the risk of your regarding me as a very complacent and indulgent mother, I cannot resist singing the dear girls' praises. They are both endowed with exceptionally warm hearts, are gifted and have becoming modesty and maidenly good manners. Little Jenny will be seventeen years old on the 1st of May. She is a girl of great charm and very attractive appearance, with her thick, shiny dark hair and equally dark, shining, gentle eyes and dark, Creole-like complexion, which has, however, acquired a genuine English bloom. Her childlike face, round as an apple, wears a sweet and good-natured expression and, when the smiling lips part to reveal her nice teeth, one forgets her not very beautiful little snub nose. Little Laura, who was fifteen years old last September, is perhaps prettier and has more regular features than her elder sister, whose very opposite she is. As tall, slender and finely built as little Jenny, she is in all other respects lighter, more radiant and transparent. The upper part of her face might be described as beautiful, so lovely is her curly, wavy chestnut hair, so sweet the dear, greenish sparkling eyes, which flicker like eternal feux de joie, so noble and finely shaped is her forehead; however, the lower part of her face is somewhat less regular, nor is it as yet fully developed. A truly blooming complexion distinguishes both sisters, and both are so little given to vanity that I sometimes cannot help feeling secretly surprised, the more so since the same could not be said of their mother in her earlier days, whilst still in pinafore dresses. At school they have always carried off the first prize. They are completely at home in English and know quite a lot of French. They can read Dante in the Italian and also know a bit of Spanish; only German is their weak point and, although I do everything in my power to impose an occasional German lesson upon them, they never really bow to my wishes and neither my authority nor their respect is very much in evidence. Little Jenny has a special talent for drawing and her pastels are the finest adornment of our rooms. Little Laura so neglected drawing that, to punish her, we stopped her taking lessons. On the other hand, she practises the piano with great zeal and sings German and English duets with her sister most delightfully. Unfortunately, it was only very belatedly, some eighteen months ago, that the girls were able to begin their musical education. To obtain the money for it was quite beyond us, nor did we possess a piano; indeed, the one we have got now and which I have hired is a veritable rattle trap. The girls make us very happy with their sweet, modest behaviour. But their little sister is the idol and spoilt darling of the entire household.

Page Break me41.572

Page me41.572

The baby had only just been born when my poor, dear Edgar departed this life, and all the love we felt for the dear little boy, all our tenderness towards him, was transferred to his little sister, whom our elder daughters tended and nursed with almost maternal solicitude. Indeed, a more delightful child can hardly be imagined — pretty as a picture, guileless and with a whimsical sense of humour. A particular characteristic is her charming way of talking and story-telling. The latter has been learned from the Grimm Brothers, who are her companions by day and by night. We all of us read her the fairy tales until we can read no more, but woe betide us if so much as a syllable is left out in Rumpelstiltskin or in King Thrushbeard, or in Snow-White. The child, who has already absorbed English with the air she breathes, has also learnt German from these fairy tales and speaks it exceptionally grammatically and precisely. She is a real PET of Karl's and dispels many a care with her laughter and chatter. In the domestic sphere 'Lenchen' still remains my staunch, conscientious companion. Ask your dear husband about her, and he will tell you what a treasure she has been to me. For sixteen years now she has weathered storm and tempest with us.

Page me41.572

Last year we suffered intense provocation in the shape of an infamous attack by the 'well-rounded character' and the vile behaviour of the entire German, American, etc., press. You would not believe how many sleepless nights and worries the whole business has caused us.†647 The case against the Nationalzeitung cost a great deal of money and, when Karl had finished his book,†a he was unable to find a publisher. He had to have it printed at his own expense (£25) and, now that it has come out, it is being hushed up by the base, cowardly, venal press. I am exceedingly glad that you liked the book. Your opinion of it agrees almost word for word with that of all our friends. Needless to say, the silence quite deliberately maintained by the press has meant far fewer sales than we might rightfully have expected. In the meantime, we shall have to be content with the great encomiums of everyone who matters. Even opponents and enemies have acknowledged it as highly important. Bucher called it a compendium of contemporary history, and Lassalle writes to say that, as a work of art, it has given him and his friends indescribable pleasure, its fund of wit having occasioned them endless glee and delight. Engels considers it to be Karl's best book,†a as does Lupus. Congratulations are flooding in from all sides, and even that old cur Ruge has called it a 'good piece of nonsense'. I wonder whether a similar silence is being maintained in America. It really would be too infuriating, the more so since all the newspapers there have opened their columns to stupid lies and calumnies. Perhaps your dear husband can do something about making the book known.

Page Break me41.573

Page me41.573

Hardly had I finished copying the manuscript,†b while it was still being printed, when I suddenly became very unwell. A most frightful fever took hold of me, and the doctor had to be called in. On 20 November he arrived, examined me carefully and at length and, after a long silence, came out with the following words: My dear Mrs Marx, I am sorry to say, you have got the smallpox — the children must leave the house immediately. You can imagine the horror and distress of the household on hearing this pronouncement. What was to be done? Undismayed, the Liebknechts offered to take the children in, and by midday the girls, laden with their small belongings, had already betaken themselves into exile. As for me, I became hourly more ill, the smallpox assuming horrifying proportions. My sufferings were great, very great. Severe, burning pains in the face, complete inability to sleep, and mortal anxiety in regard to Karl, who was nursing me with the utmost tenderness, finally the loss of all my outer faculties while my inner faculty — consciousness — remained unclouded throughout. All the time, I lay by an open window so that the cold November air must blow upon me. And all the while hell's fire in the hearth and ice on my burning lips, between which a few drops of claret were poured now and then. I was barely able to swallow, my hearing grew ever fainter and, finally, my eyes closed up and I did not know whether I might not remain shrouded in perpetual night!

Page me41.573

But my constitution, aided by the most tender and constant care, got the better of it and now here I sit, once more in perfect health, but with a face disfigured by scars and a dark red tinge — quite á la hauteur de la mode couleur de 'Magenta'.†a It was not till Christmas Eve that the poor children were allowed to return to the paternal fold for which they had been yearning. Our first reunion was indescribably touching. The girls were profoundly moved and could scarcely refrain from weeping over my appearance. Five weeks before, I didn't look too bad alongside my blooming daughters. Since I was by some miracle still without a grey hair in my head and had still kept my teeth and figure, I was habitually considered to be well-preserved — but how changed was all this now! To myself I looked like a rhinoceros, a hippopotamus, which belonged in a zoological garden rather than in the ranks of the Caucasian race. But do not be unduly alarmed! Things are no longer quite so bad today, and the scars are beginning to heal. Scarcely had I been able to leave my bed than my dear, beloved Karl fell ill, laid low by excessive anxiety, worry and troubles of all kinds. For the first time, his chronic liver complaint became acute.

Page Break me41.574

However, God be praised, he recovered after four weeks' suffering. In the meantime, we had again been temporarily reduced to half pay by the Tribune†b; instead of earning something from the book, a bill of exchange had to be paid. On top of that, there was the huge expense occasioned by this most frightful of all maladies. In short, you can imagine how things have been with us all this winter. As a result of all this business, Karl decided to make a foray into Holland, the land of his fathers, and of tobacco and cheese. He wants to see if he can wheedle some SPECIE out of his uncle. At the moment, therefore, I am a grass widow, waiting to see whether the great Dutch expedition will be successful. On Saturday, I got the first letter expressing some hopes and containing 'sixty gulden'. Such an affair is not, of course, quickly concluded and calls for careful manoeuvres, diplomacy, and proper management. Still, I hope that Karl will get something out of that country and leave it the poorer.
Page me41.574

As soon as he meets with some SUCCESS in Holland, he intends to make a little clandestine trip to Berlin†278 in order to spy out the terrain and, perhaps, arrange for a monthly or weekly publication. Recent experience has shown us only too plainly that we cannot possibly manage without an organ of our own. Should Karl succeed in setting up a new party organ, he will assuredly write to your husband, asking him to send reports from America. Hardly had Karl left when our faithful Lenchen also fell ill and is still laid up. However she is on the mend. My hands are completely full therefore, and this letter has been written in the greatest HURRY. But I neither could nor would remain silent, and it has done me good to pour out my heart for once to our oldest and most loyal friends. So, I will not apologise for having written to you in such great detail and about anything and everything. My pen ran away with me, and I can only hope and wish that these scribbled lines may give you a little of the pleasure that I got when I read yours.

Page Break me41.575
Page me41.575

I immediately attended to the matter of the bill of exchange and arranged everything just as though my lord and master were here.
Page me41.575

My girls send their love and kisses to your dear children — one Laura to the other — and in my thoughts I embrace each of them. To you yourself, my dear friend, I send my most affectionate greetings. In these hard times, you must be plucky and keep your head unbowed. The world belongs to the brave. Keep on being your dear husband's loyal, unwavering support, while remaining yourself pliable in mind and in body, the loyal, 'unrespectable' comrade of your dear children, and let us have word of you from time to time.

Your very affectionate
Jenny Marx

Page me41.575

How often have I thought of the lovely potato soup you used to give me in Frankfurt. Unfortunately, it cannot be made here. There is no cream, and an egg beaten up in a drop of milk is not half as good. Which reminds me of Dronke, and so I shall have to start another sheet in order to give you some news of old friends. Engels is in Manchester, as before. His father is dead, he has inherited, but is engaged in a law-suit with his partner, is in the clutches of the lawyers and by no means out of the wood financially.

Page me41.575
Lupus makes a livelihood by giving lessons in Manchester. He is just the same as ever — a decent, hardworking chap of simple habits. He is held in very high regard up there, and his main battles are fought with his landlady who, he being a bachelor of long standing, now cuts down his tea, now depletes his sugar, now interferes with his coal supply. Dronke has had a real stroke of luck, having obtained a commission agency through Garnier-Pagés which earns him nearly £1,000 a year. He has become an out-an-out philistine, boastful and repulsive; he has not behaved nearly as well towards Karl or any of his oldest friends as might have been expected. He has a penchant for that fat philistine Freiligrath, who is still living comfortably off his post as MANAGER of a rotten bankrupt firm. He has changed considerably for the worse and has not treated us in a friendly manner!†4 For political and diplomatic reasons an open breach with him is to be avoided. We maintain a factitious relationship. I have broken completely with the distaff side of the family. I am not fond of half MEASURES. So, I don't see anybody just now. Pieper has gone away and is living as a teacher in Bremen — he has come down badly in the world and become a slovenly flibbertigibbet. Yesterday, Dr Eichhoff arrived here from Berlin. He is the first refugee from the régime of 'handsome William' as the Berliners call their present sovereign. Imandt is a married man in Scotland. — Red Wolf a teacher in some God-forsaken spot — turned philistine — aussi†a married, 3 children. And that is all I can remember in haste about our old acquaintances.

Page Break me41.576
Page me41.576
Well, then, that's what I call gossip! But now, and for the last time, farewell.

Page me41.576
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Jg. 25, Bd. 2, No. 32, Stuttgart, 1907; published in full for the first time

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

5
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.576
[London, before 16 March 1861]

My dear Mr Engels,

How can I thank you for all the love and devotion with which you have stood by us for years now in our sorrows and afflictions? I was so happy when I saw there was five times as much as I had expected, that it would be hypocritical not to admit it, and yet my joy was as nothing compared with Lenchen's! How joyously her almost lifeless eyes lighted up when I ran upstairs and told her: 'Engels has sent £5 for your COMFORTS.'

Page Break me41.577
Page me41.577

It seems to me that the inflammation has gone down a bit — yesterday the doctor also thought her somewhat better, though she is still dangerously ill. The only question is whether she may not get too weak and whether some kind of haemorrhage or gangrene won't set in. The worst thing is that we are not yet allowed to give her any tonic, for all STIMULANTS likely to aggravate the inflammation must be avoided. We have all had some really anxious days and nights, and I myself have been doubly anxious since I don't really know how Karl is getting on, whether he is in Berlin, or where he is.†278 There was no letter again today.
Page me41.577

Poor Lupus, how sorry I am for him, lying there helpless and in great pain, deprived of solicitous nursing and wholly á la merci of a rapacious LANDLADY, though in fact his afflictions are largely his own fault. What's the point of such awful pedantry, such conscientiousness? You ought to take the old gentleman more in hand and, above all, wean him from GIN and BRANDY, those arch-enemies of gout. Excuse this hasty note; there is so much to do and think about and today I have still to fit in a trip to town where a pawn ticket is due — BUT NEVER MIND, so long as we pull Lenchen through, and my beloved Karl soon sends good tidings.
Page me41.577

Warm regards from the girls and from your

Jenny Marx

Page me41.577
First published in: Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 30, Berlin, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.577
[London, between 21 and 24 March 1861]

My dear Mr Engels,

Hitherto I have sent you so many epistles of complaint that I now feel impelled to bring you BETTER NEWS for once. First, so far as it is humanly possible to say, Lenchen will recover. The doctor is very satisfied with her condition and extremely optimistic. The rambling, singing, weeping and raving that so alarmed us has subsided to a great extent, and a MUTTON CHOP has just been taken up to her. Your help enabled me to give her all the COMFORTS, a constantly warm room, wine, and even the luxury of eau de Cologne, which is such a great help in an illness like this, particularly in view of the frequent fainting fits. Besides this good news, I can at long last report the safe arrival of a letter from Moor.†42 He has been in Berlin since Sunday†a and is staying with Lassalle, who welcomed him with the greatest affability. At one dinner he sat between the daughter of Babylon†b (shades of Weerth†c) and the indescribably ugly Ludmilla.†d I wish him joy! Apart from that, he doesn't go into any details, for he was in a hurry to send off 50 talers to me. He simply says that prospects are good and that he won't come home empty-handed. I only fear that his home-coming may be somewhat further delayed. With warmest regards from us all.

Page Break me41.578

Yours,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.578
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

7
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.578
[London, beginning of April 1861]

Dear Mr Engels,
I find it incomprehensible that Moor shouldn't have written to you yet. I had thought you were quite au courant with†e the Marx FAMILY AFFAIRS, and even hoped I might learn further details from you, since this time my dear lord and master's letters to me are quite exceptionally prone to the 'lapidary style'. So far, I have had to content myself with the most sketchy outlines and the driest of FACTS; however, I do know a little more than you, and hence will hasten to pass on that modicum, the more so since it is, in the main, most satisfactory. To begin at the beginning. The uncle†a has fallen in with all the son's†648 proposals and, as soon as Karl arrives in Bommel, will settle the financial business. Now, as to the rumours in the papers, they are all wrong, as you no doubt supposed, nor has it ever remotely occurred to Karl that the family might move to and settle down in Berlin. What he did propose to effect there, however, was his renaturalisation.†292 I don't quite understand this and don't know why Karl should be in such a hurry to become a Royal Prussian 'subject' again. I'd rather have remained a 'stray groschen'†b (red Wolff's†c late-lamented threepenny bit) a while longer. Negotiations over this have prolonged his stay in Berlin. The government wanted to settle the matter by according him Berlin citizenship with which Karl refused to be satisfied, and thus the whole business has dragged on from day to day. Today Karl writes to say that he doesn't expect to hear for certain before the 12th and until then must continue to be bored stiff. Little Izzy still seems addicted to drivelling and the speculative notion. In other respects, he really gave proof of the utmost friendship for Karl, whose inseparable companion he has been. Now, Moor would have proceeded straight from Berlin to Bommel, had he not received from his mother an invitation, which has left him undecided whether or not he should go to Trier. If he does go there, it means yet more delay before he comes home, and he could hardly be here before a fortnight is out.†278 Lassalle's head seems to be filled with dreams of a great newspaper; he also maintains that he could contribute 20,000 talers to it. But what a risky venture for Karl — a daily paper, and on the countess's own ground, too!†d I myself feel small longing for the fatherland, for 'dear', beloved, trusty Germany, that mater dolorosa of poets — and as for the girls! The idea of leaving the country of their precious Shakespeare appals them; they've become English to the marrow and cling like limpets to the soil of England. It's a good thing your warrant has been withdrawn†e; thus you're free to go, after all. I assume that Schily and Imandt will be in the same category as yourself. Yesterday I had news of the former through Rheinländer. For months the poor fellow has been so ill and miserable that he finds it difficult even to write and it costs him a tremendous effort to drag himself from one place to another. His friends, it seems, had pretty well given him up and believed him to be consumptive. He now pins his faith on Morrison's pills, that worst of all quack medicines. The extent of the havoc wrought by these poisonous pills may be gauged from the fact that he actually feels somewhat drawn to the National Association.†24 (At its last meeting here, Hans Ibeles†a and Rudolf Schramm had a fearful set-to — Schramm launched a furious onslaught upon the reverend gentleman who, replying with priestly unction, was accorded the laurels by a good-for-nothing audience made up of clerks, Islington choristers, etc.) Rheinländer had also had a letter from Schily with news about la Moïse.†b Sauernheimer,†c the general, who had for many years been her lover, was getting married; to protect himself against Mrs Hess, who had threatened to create a public scandal in the church, he surrounded himself with a number of policemen. Mrs H. was not allowed into the church and had to content herself with parading in all her finery outside the church door. She is said to lead a very gay life and for a change, when things are bad, to do sewing for a German tailor. From time to time, she calls on Schily who can never forget having often seen her tipsy in Geneva. Besides this tragi-comical affair, he also relates that in Paris Mirés is said to have advanced Eugénie†d vast sums for the Pope,†e and that 'little Mathilde',†f too, is in bad odour.

Page Break me41.579

Page Break me41.580

Page me41.580

I was most interested to hear from you about the Lancashire STRIKES, since it's impossible to get a clear idea of what's going on from the newspapers.†649 At any rate, inopportune though this opposition on the part of the English workers may be, and unedifying as are its results, it is a heartening manifestation by comparison with the Prussian workers' movement and the social question in the shape it assumes over there — namely, Schulze-Delitzsch, cum the capital-loving Straubingers,†650 their savings banks and distress funds!
Page me41.580

As regards Lenchen's health, it is improving steadily, if only very slowly. She is still very, very weak, but is already spending hours out of bed, and today she even walked up and down outside the house in the sunshine.
Page me41.580

I am glad to hear that poor Lupus is back on his feet again. Please give him my warmest regards; similarly the girls ask me to send you their most cordial regards with this gossipy scrawl.
Page me41.580

Let us hear from you again soon. With warm regards,

Yours,
Jenny Marx

Page Break me41.581
Page me41.581

Apropos. I really cannot resist depicting for you a little scene from life in London. A week ago last Wednesday, immediately after dinner, I saw a vast concourse outside our door; all the children of the neighbourhood had gathered round a man who was lying flat on his face outside our house. Never in my life have I seen anything like it. No Irishman, in the depths of degradation, could equal this skeleton. Moreover, the man, clad in filthy rags, appeared to be unusually tall. When I arrived on the scene, neighbours had already brought out food and SPIRITS, but in vain. The man lay there motionless, and we thought he must be dead. I sent for a POLICEMAN. When the latter had arrived and taken a look at him, he at once addressed him as 'YOU MEAN IMPOSTOR!' and dealt him a blow that sent his hat flying, after which he picked him up like a PARCEL and shook him. And who did I find staring straight at me with perplexed, despairing eyes? — the Laplander†a! You can imagine my horror. He went staggering off and I sent after him with some money which, however, he refused. He said to Marian: 'No, please, I don't need money', and set it down on a stone, then called out to the POLICEMAN, 'THAT'S FOR YOUR ATTENTION.' Sad, is it not?

Page me41.581
First published abridged in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963 and in full in: Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 30, Berlin, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

8
JENNY MARX TO BERTA MARKHEIM
IN FULDA
Page me41.581
London, 6 July [1863]

My dear Mrs Markheim,

On Saturday, just as we were about to sit down at table, I received a letter addressed in an unfamiliar hand. Being more used to getting disagreeable letters than cheerful ones, I resolved to put aside this strange luncheon guest. But the children said

Page Break me41.582
'open it, there may be something nice inside', and how pleasantly surprised I was, how moved and grateful when I found it was an indirect token of your existence and your affection, and that you had again been thinking of me with love, loyalty and sympathy, without so much as a reminder on my part.
Page me41.582

I am certain that it will be some sort of satisfaction to you to learn that your unexpected contribution has helped us — indeed made it possible — to send little Jenny to a seaside resort, a course which, in the doctor's opinion, has, alas, again become a sad necessity. The poor child is again suffering from a most obstinate cough, which has failed to respond either to medicines or to the warm summer weather but which will, I trust, be banished by sea air and bathing.†a
Page me41.582

The other two are cheerful and well. Laura now accompanies her Papa on many of his visits to the British Museum, to which end she has been given a TICKET. The little one†b has just moved out of the 'spelling' stage into that of 'reading with obstacles' — not exactly a race. Grimm's fairy tales are a great delight to her and Snow-White, Sleeping Beauty, King Thrushbeard and Brother Merry are now the heroes of her childish fantasies.
Page me41.582

My dear Karl had a great deal of trouble with his liver this spring. However, despite all the setbacks, his book is now making gigantic strides towards completion.†c It would have been finished sooner, had he kept to his original plan of limiting it to 20 or 30 sheets.†d But since the Germans really believe only in 'fat' books,†e and the far more subtle concentration and elimination of all that is superfluous counts for nothing in the eyes of those worthies, Karl has added a lot more historical material, and it is as a volume of 50 sheets that it will fall, like a bomb, on German soil. Alas for our German soil! Abroad, one feels almost ashamed of being a German — and as for the honour of being 'Prussian'! Could anything be more pitiful than the spectacle presented by Prussia? It is difficult to say which is the more deplorable, the king, the ministers, the camarilla — or the servile populace and, above all, the miserable, cowardly, toadying, silent press! One often feels tempted to turn away in disgust from all politics, and indeed I wish we could observe the scene purely as 'amateurs'; but for us, unfortunately, it always remains a vital question.

Page me41.582
Karl hopes to go to Germany in September. Perhaps he will see Dr. K.†f then, too, and will be in your vicinity as well. Do, please, let me have some direct news from you before long. With most heartfelt and grateful good wishes from us all and, especially, from

Page Break me41.583

Your Jenny Marx

Page me41.583
First published (in Italian) in Movimento operaio, No. 2, March-April 1955

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

9
JENNY MARX TO BERTA MARKHEIM
IN FULDA
Page me41.583
Hampstead, 12 October 1863

My dear Mrs Markheim,
On writing the date, I now see to my great dismay that I have let more than a month go by without answering your last kind letter. I got it just after we returned home from Hastings†548 and, for many petty and mundane reasons, failed to reply at once and, as you know, nothing is more dangerous in correspondence than procrastinating instead of responding to the first warm impulse of the heart and at once setting one's pen at a canter, lest the nib become encrusted with ink. I am not only pleading on my own behalf today, I must also put in a word for my lord and master, who in this respect has a much blacker list of sins with which to reproach his guilty conscience. He has, of course, received Dr Kugelmann's letter,†a and I really have no excuse to offer for his failure to write, other than to say that, in general, he is one of the worst correspondents the world has ever known and often keeps his oldest and best friends waiting for months, even years. If he now treats Dr K. in the same manner as he does his oldest and best friends, he (Dr K.) must be good enough to make allowances for such dilatoriness, and I trust that you, my dear Mrs Markheim, will put in a good word on his behalf. Should he not write very soon, it will, I imagine, be because he hopes to see him in person in the not too distant future; just as it is his intention to visit Frankfurt and call on you. For we have recently learned that an old aunt of Karl's,†a his late father's only sister, is living in Frankfurt and would love to see him again after so many, many years.†b

Page Break me41.584
Page me41.584
Our stay in Hastings, a delightful and beautifully situated spot, where we spent our time either beside, upon or in the sea, has done us all a great deal of good, particularly our ailing little Jenny, whose cheeks have again filled out and grown rosy.
Page me41.584
Her cough has not quite gone, but it seldom recurs and then only in very mild form, and she has also got her appetite back. Touch wood, touch wood! And I only hope we shall spend a less wretched winter than the last one.
Page me41.584
We are closely following the course of events in our fatherland but, with the best will in the world, I cannot share your opinion nor give myself up to sanguine hopes. Perhaps the prolonged anxiety and dismal experiences of the immediate past have clouded my mind and obscured my vision so that I see everything in darker colours and paint things grey on grey.†651
Page me41.584
I hope I shall soon hear from you again and, in sending you my family's warmest greetings, I bid you farewell for today.

Yours ever,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.584
First published (in Italian) in Movimento operaio, No. 2, March-April 1955

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

10
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.584
[London, beginning of November 1863] 9 Grafton Terrace

Dear Mr Engels,
Moor sends you herewith the 'MOST NOBLE Daoud Bey's'†c Free Press. It will amuse you a lot. Karl, alas, cannot write himself. For the past week he has been very unwell and is tied to the sofa.

Page Break me41.585

2 boils appeared on his cheek and back. The one on his cheek responded to the household remedies one normally uses for such things. The other, on his back, has assumed such dimensions and is so inflamed that poor Moor is enduring the most frightful pain and gets no respite either by day or by night. You can imagine, too, how depressed this business makes him. It seems as though the wretched book will never get finished.†a It weighs like a nightmare on us all. If only the LEVIATHAN were LAUNCHED!
Page me41.585
With warmest regards from us all.
Yours,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.585
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

11
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.585
[London, about 24 November 1863]

My dear Mr Engels,
It's so long since we heard from you that Karl has an ardent desire for news of you. For a week now, he would seem to have been out of danger. The good, strong wine and enormous meals have enabled him to withstand the pain and the debilitating effect of the heavy discharge of pus. Unfortunately, he can't sleep at all and is still having very bad nights. The doctor†b is very satisfied with the way the complaint is progressing and hopes that the suppuration will stop in 4 to 6 days. He is now getting up from time to time and today has been conveyed from the sickroom to the living-room.
Page me41.585
He sends you the enclosed circular from the Workers' Society as well as a letter from the 'Chair'†652 — this little thing will divert the man 'who for 15 years has fought and suffered for the working class'†a (presumably he means drinking champagne with the red-haired beauty b. 1805†b) from a course acceptable to the police to one that is unacceptable to the police.†653 Write soon. With warm regards from us all.

Page Break me41.586

Yours,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.586
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

12
JENNY MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN BERLIN
Page me41.586
[London, about 24 November 1863]

My dear Mr Liebknecht,

When I last wrote to your dear wife, I had little conception of the horrifying days lying immediately ahead of us. For 3 weeks my beloved Karl was desperately ill, for he was suffering from one of the most dangerous and painful illnesses — a CARBUNCLE on his back. I need add nothing to those few lines. You and your dear wife know how much you mean to us. Nor, even if I wanted to, could I tell you in detail all we went through during these weeks, so I will say no more and, at the behest of my beloved husband, now on the road to recovery, pass on to you the enclosed circular, issued by the Workers' Society.†652 Aside from the interest attaching to Polish affairs, it was, I believe, sent into the world to put a stop to the 'pro-police movement' on the part of certain persons.†c The 'Chair' at once swallowed the thing hook, line and sinker, and asked for 50 copies for distribution to the communities.†d Karl is sending it to you to make you au fait with the matter.
Page me41.586

All the same, now that I have executed my task, let me just tell you how our family afflictions began. Karl had already been ailing for months, he found it intensely difficult to work and, in an attempt to find some alleviation, smoked twice as much as usual, and took three times as many pills of various kinds — BLUE AND ANTIBILIOUS, etc. About 4 weeks ago he got a boil on his cheek; though it was very painful, we got the better of it with the usual household remedies. Before it had quite gone, a similar one erupted on his back. Although it was inordinately painful and the swelling grew daily worse, we were foolish enough to believe we would be able to get rid of it with poultices, etc. Also, in accordance with German ideas, my poor Karl almost completely deprived himself of food, even eschewing the miserable 4 ALE,†a and lived on lemonade. At last, when the swelling was the size of my fist and the whole of his back misshapen, I went to Allen. Never shall I forget the man's expression when he saw that back. He waved me and little Tussy out of the room, and Lenchen had to hold Karl while he made a deep, deep incision, a great gaping wound from which the blood came pouring out. Karl remained calm and still, and did not flinch. Then began a round of hot poultices, which we have now been applying night and day every 2 hours, like clockwork, for the past fortnight. At the same time, the doctor ordered 3-4 glasses of port, and half a bottle of claret daily, and four times as much food as usual. The object was to restore the strength he had lost so as to help him withstand the frightful pain and the debilitating effect of the heavy discharge of pus. That is how we have spent the last fortnight — I need tell you two no more. Lenchen also fell ill from worry and exertion but is a little better again today. Whence I myself drew strength, I cannot tell. The first few nights I was the only one to sit up with him, for a week I took it in turns with Lenchen, and now I sleep on the floor in his room, so as to be always at hand. How I feel, now that he's recovering, you will be able to guess.

Page Break me41.587

Page me41.587

He sends you both his cordial regards, as do my poor daughters. Please write, both of you, as soon as you can and as much as you can. He greatly enjoys getting letters. Please excuse my writing so incoherently.

Your old friend,
Jenny Marx

Page me41.587
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 30, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.588

13
LAURA MARX TO ENGELS†654
IN MANCHESTER
Page me41.588
London, 10 June 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park, N.W.

Dear Sir,

I have been commissioned by Dr Marx to acknowledge the receipt of the second half of the banknotes the first half of which arrived here Yesterday. Also to express his thanks for the photographs received this morning.†a
Page me41.588

As to the Biography which You intend writing, he says that as You have the necessary papers etc., You can commence it at once, while he writes to Dr Elsner for further materials.†621
Page me41.588

I think I have now said all I have been requested to say.

I am, dear Sir,
Obediently Yours,
L.M. Secretary

F. Engels Esq.

Page me41.588
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

14
JENNY MARX TO KARL FRIEDRICH MORITZ ELSNER
IN BRESLAU†b
Page me41.588
[London, middle of June 1864]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sir,
We assume you are the author of the fine obituary of our late, dear friend W. Wolff, which appeared in the Breslauer Zeitung.†c My husband is anxious to write a detailed biography of him, but has no material whatever on the earlier phases of our friend's life.†621 You would be doing him a great service if you could help him in this respect by passing on to him in as much detail as possible everything you know about Wolff, especially his childhood and the earlier part of his life. We have been on the closest terms with him ever since 1845. Hence what we are concerned with is rather the earliest period of his life. My husband, who has just recovered from a grave and very wearisome illness, has directed me to ask you, Sir, as an old and trusted friend of the deceased, to do us this kindness, and I hope that you will soon pass on to us everything you can call to mind about our dear, dear Wolff.

Page Break me41.589
Page me41.589
With cordial regards from my husband and myself.

Yours,
Jenny Marx,
née von Westphalen

Page me41.589

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me41.590
Page Break me41.591

NOTES AND INDEXES

Page Break me41.592
Page Break me41.593

NOTES

Page me41.593
†1 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. Marx began his letter on a form of the General Bank of Switzerland under the letter from Freiligrath, who was manager of the bank's London branch. — 3
Page me41.593
†2 The Cologne trial (4 October-12 November 1852) was organised and stagemanaged by the Prussian government. The defendants were members of the Communist League arrested in the spring of 1851 on charges of 'treasonable plotting'. The forged documents and false evidence presented by the police authorities were not only designed to secure the conviction of the defendants but also to compromise their London comrades and the proletarian organisation as a whole. Seven of the defendants were sentenced to imprisonment in a fortress for terms ranging from three to six years. The dishonest tactics resorted to by the Prussian police state in fighting the international working-class movement were exposed by Engels in his article 'The Late Trial in Cologne' and, in greater detail, by Marx in his pamphlet Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 3, 22, 44, 54, 72, 80, 135, 140, 375
Page me41.593
†3 The German Workers' Educational Society in London was founded in February 1840 by Karl Schapper, Joseph Moll and other members of the League of the Just (an organisation of German craftsmen and workers, and also of emigrant workers of other nationalities). After the reorganisation of the League of the Just in the summer of 1847 and the founding of the Communist League, the latter's local communities played the leading role in the Society. During various periods of its activity, the Society had branches in working-class districts in London. In 1847 and 1849-50, Marx and Engels took an active part in the Society's work, but on 17 September 1850 Marx, Engels and a number of their followers withdrew because the Willich-Schapper sectarian and adventurist faction had succeeded in temporarily increasing its influence in the Society and caused a split in the Communist League (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 483 and 632). In the late 1850s, Marx and Engels resumed their work in the Society. It existed until 1918 when it was closed down by the British government. — 3, 94, 103, 232, 342, 517, 533

Page Break me41.594
Page me41.594
†4 This refers to the refusal by Freiligrath, former member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, to help Marx unmask the Bonapartist agent Carl Vogt. In a statement published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung on 15 November 1859, he declared that he had nothing to do with the accusations levelled at Vogt. In so doing, he virtually dissociated himself from the attempts to establish the author of the anonymous anti-Vogt flysheet Zur Warnung, which had been launched by Karl Blind and was falsely attributed to Marx by Vogt. Marx deals with the matter in Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17) and in his letters to Engels of 19 and 26 November 1859, and to Freiligrath of 23 and 28 November 1859 (present edition, Vol. 40). — 3, 9, 11
Page me41.594
†5 The Association of German Men was an organisation of German refugees in London set up after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. — 4, 309
Page me41.594
†6 An ironic reference to Gottfried Kinkel, who had named the weekly he was publishing in London Hermann after Arminius (Hermann), chieftain of the old German tribe of Cheruscans. — 4
Page me41.594
†7 County-court — local judicial court for civil actions in England. — 4, 327, 399
Page me41.594
†8 Marx means his work on the second instalment of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (see also Note 35). — 4, 17. 23, 274, 280
Page me41.594
†9 On 26 November 1859, the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung (No. 95-96) carried a review of Engels' anonymously published pamphlet Po and Rhine. It endorsed Engels' critique of the theory that Germany's security depended on German domination of Northern Italy. — 4
Page me41.594
†10 In October 1859, the Abolitionist farmer John Brown, at the head of a band of eighteen (including five Blacks), seized a government arsenal of Harper's Ferry, Virginia, in an attempt to provoke an insurrection of slaves in the Southern states. The band was surrounded by regular troops and almost wholly destroyed. Brown was seriously wounded. He and five of his comrades were tried and hanged in Charleston. The Brown uprising started a mass anti-slavery movement (see Note 12). — 4, 7
Page me41.594
†11 Marx followed the movement for the emancipation of peasants in Russia using a variety of sources, among them the Prussian Allgemeine Zeitung. In the present case, he presumably drew on an article 'Rußland und Polen', reprinted in the Allgemeine Zeitung of 6 December 1859 (No. 340) from the Neue Hannoversche Zeitung, and the article by the Allgemeine Zeitung's St. Petersburg correspondent 'Zur russischen Leibeigenschaftsfrage und die Finanz-Verhältnisse des' Staats', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 3 (supplement) and No. 5 (supplement), 3 and 5 January, 1860. — 4

Page me41.594
†12 There was an abortive black uprising in the town of Bolivar, Missouri, in December 1859. Marx refers to a note published in the New-York Daily Tribune on 30 December 1859 (No. 5830). — 4, 7
Page me41.594
†13 In his letter of 16 December 1859 (it has not been found) Marx probably asked Szemere to help him out of his financial difficulties. In his reply of 29 December Szemere informed Marx that his efforts had been to no avail. — 5
Page me41.594
†14 On 11 December 1859 Szemere wrote to tell Marx that he intended to publish a pamphlet on Hungary and asked Marx to help him in having it translated into English and published in Britain. Szemere's pamphlet appeared in Paris in 1860 under the title La Question hongroise (1848-1860) and in London, in

Page Break me41.595
Bentley's publishing house, the same year, under the title Hungary, from 1848 to 1860. — 5
Page me41.595
†15 Marx means his letter to Lassalle of 22 November 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 40) criticising the latter's tactics on the question of Germany's and Italy's unification as set forth in Lassalle's pamphlet Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie (see Note 52). — 6, 11, 17
Page me41.595
†16 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: Marx and Engels, On the United States, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1979. — 7
Page me41.595
†17 Marx sent articles to the New-York Daily Tribune on Tuesdays and Fridays; 27 January 1860 was Friday. — 7
Page me41.595
†18 At Cabo Negro (a mountain ridge in Morocco) a battle of the 1859-60 Spanish-Moroccan war was fought in mid-January 1860 (see also Engels' article 'The Moorish War', present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 554-55). — 7
Page me41.595
†19 This refers to press reports about the Prussian government's intention to submit a bill to the Diet providing for longer army service and a bigger military budget. The bill, tabled on 9 February 1860, was rejected by the Diet's liberal majority, and this precipitated a Constitutional crisis (see Note 290). The proposed reform of the Prussian army was discussed by Engels in the articles 'Preparations for War in Prussia' (present edition, Vol. 17) and 'The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party' (Vol. 20). — 7
Page me41.595

†20 On 24 January 1860, Britain and France signed a commercial treaty which envisaged a temporary reduction of import duties on English cottons and woollens and French silks and the lifting, from July 1860, of duties on imported raw materials. — 8
Page me41.595
†21 This refers to Fischel's pamphlet Despoten als Revolutionäre. published anonymously in Berlin in 1859. The same year it appeared in English under the title The Duke of Coburg's Pamphlet. See also p. 153 of this volume. — 8
Page me41.595
†22 When writing this letter, Marx evidently had not yet received Vogt's pamphlet. What he calls the introduction was actually the second section. The first contained a verbatim report of the court proceedings against the Allgemeine Zeitung in Augsburg in October 1859. Vogt had sued the newspaper for reprinting, in June of that year, Karl Blind's anonymously published pamphlet Warnung zur gefälligen Verbreitung, which exposed him as a Bonapartist agent (Marx calls it, for brevity, Zur Warnung; for details of it see his polemic Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 111-32).
Page me41.595
Marx likens Vogt's piece to the petty-bourgeois democrat Müller-Tellering's libellous pamphlet Vorgeschmack in die künftige deutsche Diktatur von Marx und Engels (Cologne, 1850). — 9
Page me41.595
†23 By the gang of imperial rascals (Reichshalunkenbande) Marx means Karl Vogt and his associates, an allusion to the fact that Vogt had been a member of the Imperial Regency (see Note 154). Marx also often sarcastically refers to him as the 'Imperial Vogt', the German word Vogt being the medieval name for bailiffs appointed by the German Emperor. — 10, 12, 23, 34
Page me41.595
†24 The German National Association (Deutscher National-Verein) was the party of the German liberal bourgeoisie favouring the unification of Germany (without Austria) under the aegis of the King of Prussia. The Association was set up in Frankfurt am Main in September 1859. Its supporters were nicknamed Little Germans. — 10, 160, 164, 192, 200, 319, 342, 383, 393, 511, 580

Page Break me41.596
Page me41.596
†25 Lassalle took an unseemly stand on Marx's controversy against Vogt. In November 1859 he had virtually prevented Marx from publishing a declaration against Vogt and Blind in the Volks-zeitung (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 8-9). In this connection Marx wrote to Engels, on 26 November, that Lassalle was, in effect, 'piping the same tune as Vogt' (present edition, Vol. 40, p. 542). In late January 1860, after the publication of Vogt's libellous pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Lassalle wrote to tell Marx of his displeasure with the latter for sharing the opinion, current in democratic circles, that Vogt was a paid Bonapartist agent. In a letter written at the beginning of February, Lassalle sought to dissuade Marx from bringing a lawsuit against the National-Zeitung for reprinting Vogt's calumnies. — 10, 252, 257, 478
Page me41.596

†26 In 1859 and 1860, Fischel was editing in Berlin Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Documente und Aktenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte, a collection of diplomatic documents modelled on The Portfolio, or a Collection of State Papers, published by Urquhart in London from 1835 to 1837.
Page me41.596
Excerpts from Marx's Lord Palmerston (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 341-407) appeared in Fischel's Portfolio, Hefte I and II, 1859-60. — 10, 152
Page me41.596
†27 The Foreign Affairs Committees were public organisations run by the Urquhart and his supporters in a number of English cities between 1840s and 1860s, mainly with the aim of opposing Palmerston's policies. — 10, 95
Page me41.596
†28 This referts to the pamphlet Juchhe nach Italia!, written by Bamberger in Paris and published, with Vogt's help, anonymously by Reinhold Waist in Frankfurt am Main, but marked 'Bern und Genf, Vogts Verlag, 1859' on the title page. It contained no direct polemic against Engels' articles on the Italian campaign in the Volk (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 10
Page me41.596
†29 On 12 January 1860, Hermann Orges, editor of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, published a statement in that paper refuting the fabrications about him in Vogt's pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung (see also Engels' letter to Marx of 31 January 1860 in this volume). — 10
Page me41.596
†30 Marx means the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 3) whose offices were in Great Windmill Street, Soho, in the 1850s. — 11
Page me41.596
†31 This refers to Vogt's pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung. On Tellering's 'concoction' see Note 22. — 12
Page me41.596
†32 In a letter written in late January 1860, Lassalle informed Marx that Vogt had, on his own admission, been receiving money from Hungarian revolutionaries. At the same time, Lassalle sought to exonerate Vogt and expressed doubts about his having been bought directly by Louis Bonaparte's government. — 12
Page me41.596
†33 Here Marx replies to Lassalle's attacks on Liebknecht. In the above-mentioned letter Lassalle urged Marx to break off party relations with Liebknecht because Liebknecht contributed to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. — 12
Page me41.596
†34 Adolphe Chenu and Lucien de la Hodde were police spies and agents provocateurs, the former the author of the libellous concoction Les Conspirateurs. Les sociétés secrétes. La préfecture de police sous Caussidiére. Les corps-francs, the latter the author of the equally libellous La naissance de la République en février 1848, both published in Paris in 1850. Marx and Engels discussed the two books in a joint review in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.

Page Break me41.597

Politisch-ökonomische Revue, No. 4, 1850 (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 311-25). — 12, 15
Page me41.597
†35 Marx means the initial plan of his economic work, which envisaged the following books: 1) Capital, 2) Landed Property, 3) Wage Labour, 4) The State, 5) Foreign Trade and 6) The World Market (see Marx's Preface to his Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, present edition, Vol. 29). Book I was to comprise four sections: 1) Capital in General, 2) The Competition of Capitals, 3) Credit, 4) Joint-Stock Capital. The first instalment of Book I, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, published in 1859, contained the two introductory chapters of the section 'Capital in General' (a chapter on the commodity and a chapter on money). The second instalment was to be wholly devoted to capital in general. — 12, 435
Page me41.597
†36 In a letter written late in January 1860, Lassalle told Marx he considered it necessary to postpone the writing of his own work on political economy until the publication of Marx's book. Lassalle's book appeared in Berlin in 1864 under the title Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. — 12
Page me41.597
†37 This refers to Vogt's lawsuit against the Allgemeine Zeitung. See also Note 22. — 13
Page me41.597
†38 In 1860, Marx, engrossed in writing his polemic against Karl Vogt, interrupted the preparation of the second instalment of Book I of his economic work (see Note 35). It was not until the summer of 1861 that he resumed his economic studies. — 14
Page me41.597
†39 This refers to the Great Exhibition, the first world industrial and commercial fair, held in London from May to October 1851. — 14
Page me41.597
†40 An order to this effect was issued by the Elberfeld District President (Landrat) on 20 January 1860. — 15
Page me41.597
†41 The Landwehr was part of Prussia's armed forces and consisted of men who had done their term of active service and service in the reserve. Under Prussia's laws, it was only raised in the event of war or the threat of war. The Prussian government's order to call up the Landwehr in the Rhine Province, issued at the beginning of May 1849, precipitated a popular uprising in Rhenish Prussia. In Elberfeld, Iserlohn, Solingen and a number of other cities, the Landwehr joined the movement in support of the Imperial Constitution. After the defeat of the uprising, many of the insurgents were forced to emigrate. Landwehr members guilty of breaches of army discipline were subject to the jurisdiction of courts-martial. This applied also to ex-members of the Landwehr returning to Prussia from exile. — 15, 249, 290, 299
Page me41.597
†42 This letter by Marx has not been found. — 15, 17, 33, 34, 40, 71, 77, 104, 118, 123, 130, 163, 182, 192, 196, 209, 210, 291, 341, 353, 355, 422, 434, 460, 479, 550, 567, 578

Page me41.597
†43 For Vogt's attacks on Wolff, see Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 72-73. — 16
Page me41.597
†44 In late 1859, the German socialist Eichhoff was brought to trial by the Prussian authorities for publishing in the London weekly Hermann a series of articles exposing the part played by Wilhelm Stieber, chief of the Prussian political police, in organising the trial of the Communist League members in Cologne in 1852.

Page Break me41.598
Page me41.598
In December 1859, Hermann Juch, the editor of the weekly, asked Marx for information on the Cologne trial, which he needed for Eichhoff's defence (see Marx's letter to Engels of 13 December 1859, present edition, Vol. 40 and also pp. 80-81 of this volume). In May 1860 a Berlin court sentenced Eichhoff to 14 months imprisonment. — 16, 22, 54, 74, 80, 140, 197
Page me41.598
†45 In his letter of 15 January 1860, Szemere told Marx that, if he was very busy, he, Szemere, could himself find a translator for his book La Question hongroise (1848-1860) (see also Note 14). — 17
Page me41.598
†46 This refers to the war between the Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) and France on the one hand, and Austria on the other (29 April to 8 July 1859). — 18, 103, 125, 181
Page me41.598
†47 The supplement to the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 28 (28 January 1860), carried statements by its editor Altenhöfer and a journalist called Häfner denying, in rather vague terms, the accusations against them in Vogt's pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung. — 18, 34
Page me41.598
†48 Lassalle's letter to Marx of late January 1860 (see notes 32 and 33). — 18
Page me41.598
†49 This refers to the separate peace concluded by Prussia with the French Republic in Basle on 5 April 1795. It was the result of French victories and French diplomatic skill in exploiting the differences between members of the first anti-French coalition, above all Prusso-Austrian friction. The peace with Prussia initiated the collapse of the coalition; Spain concluded a separate peace treaty with France in Basle on 22 July 1795. — 19
Page me41.598
†50 Late in January 1860, Lassalle wrote to Marx (see notes 32, 33 and 48) that Vogt's pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung had been printed in 3,000 copies and all had been sold. — 19
Page me41.598
†51 Engels evidently means the book Lassalle was writing, Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch... (see Note 36). — 20
Page me41.598
†52 An allusion to the fact that, during the 1859 Italian war, Lassalle in effect supported Napoleon III's interference in Italy's affairs, camouflaged as struggle for its 'liberation', and was in agreement with Vogt on this issue. Lassalle set forth his views on the problem in the most concentrated form in his pamphlet Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie, published anonymously in Berlin at the beginning of May 1859. In it, he also backed the Prusso-Bonapartist policy of neutrality for the German states in the Italian war and favoured the defeat of Austria, which Prussia should exploit to unite Germany from above. — 20

Page me41.598
†53 In his statement of 20 January 1860, published in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 24, on 24 January, the journalist Julius Fröbel, a petty-bourgeois democrat, described Vogt as a paid Bonapartist agent, and his conduct as 'high treason against the German nation'. Engels ridicules Lassalle, who, in a letter to Marx at the end of January 1860, argued against this statement. — 20
Page me41.598
†54 Engels means the annexation of Savoy and Nice by France as a result of the war it waged in alliance with Piedmont against Austria in 1859. This act exposed Napoleon III's aggressive designs. — 20
Page me41.598
†55 Marx means his statement to the editor of The Free Press exposing petty-bourgeois democrat Blind's aiding and abetting the Bonapartist agent Vogt. It was not published in The Free Press, but appeared in London on

Page Break me41.599
4 February 1860 as a leaflet under the title 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette' (its text is reproduced in Vol. 17 of the present edition, pp. 10-11). In a letter of 13 February 1860 (this volume, pp. 46-47) Marx informed Engels that excerpts from the statement had been printed by the Berlin Publicist. In some letters Marx referred to the statement as the 'English circular' or the 'circular against Blind'. — 21
Page me41.599
†56 This refers to Techow's letter to Schimmelpfennig of 26 August 1850, in which Techow gave a distorted rendering of a conversation he had had with Marx (see Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 75-99). — 22, 52, 58, 89, 133, 179, 568
Page me41.599
†57 Marx probably means Otto Lüning's review, published in the Neue Deutsche Zeitung on 22, 23, 25 and 26 June 1850, of the first four issues of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. Lüning concentrated, in particular, on Marx's The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 and gave a distorted account of Marx's views on the dictatorship of the proletariat (for details see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 387-88). — 22
Page me41.599
†58 Marx visited Engels in Manchester on 16 February and stayed until 25 March 1860. — 22, 28
Page me41.599
†59 This refers to a note in The Times, No. 23533, 3 February 1860, on a statement by Vogt in connection with the annexation of Savoy and Nice then being prepared by France. To sidetrack attention from Napoleon III's real designs, Vogt declared that France was willing to let Switzerland have the neutral provinces of Savoy — Faucigny, Chablais and the Genévois — in return for the free use of the Simplon. The pro-Bonapartist content of this statement was exposed by Engels in the pamphlet Savoy, Nice and the Rhine (present edition, Vol. 16) and by Marx in Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, p. 195). — 23, 25

Page me41.599
†60 Marx means his attempts to make the petty-bourgeois democrat Blind publicly admit that he, Blind, was the author of the anonymous flysheet Zur Warnung (see Note 4). This was essential because Vogt, in his pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, had attributed the flysheet to Marx. Marx also wished to expose, in the person of Blind, the cowardice of the petty-bourgeois democrats reluctant to come out openly against Bonapartist agents (see this volume, pp. 30-32 and 37, and present edition Vol. 17, pp. 111-32). — 23, 179
Page me41.599
†61 This refers to the meeting held in Brussels on 22 February 1848 by the Democratic Association to mark the second anniversary of the Cracow insurrection. Marx and Engels both made speeches (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 545-53).
Page me41.599
The Democratic Association was set up in Brussels in the autumn of 1847, with the active co-operation of Marx and Engels. It consisted of proletarian revolutionaries — mainly German refugees — and radical bourgeois and pettybourgeois democrats from other countries. Lucien Jottrand, a Belgian, was President, Marx was Vice-President for the Germans, and Joachim Lelewel, a leader of the democratic wing of the Polish emigration, was Vice-President for the Poles. — 24, 102
Page me41.599
†62 Marx reproduced Lelewel's reply, dated 10 February 1860, in the Appendices to his Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 322). — 24
Page me41.599
†63 This refers to the Communist League, the first German and international communist organisation of the proletariat, formed under the leadership of Marx and Engels in London early in June 1847 as a result of the reorganisation of the League of the Just. The programme and organisational principles of the Communist League were drawn up with the direct participation of Marx and Engels. League members took an active part in the bourgeois-democratic revolution in Germany in 1848-49. After the defeat of the revolution, the League was reorganised and continued its activities. In the summer of 1850, differences arose between the supporters of Marx and Engels and the sectarian Willich-Schapper group, which tried to impose its adventurist tactics of immediately unleashing a revolution regardless of the existing conditions and practical possibilities. The discord led to a split within the League in September 1850. Because of police persecution and arrests of League members, the activities of the League as an organisation virtually ceased in Germany in May 1851. On 17 November 1852, on a motion by Marx, the League's London District announced the dissolution of the League (see this volume, pp. 72, 82-84). — 25, 44, 73, 78, 81, 92, 135

Page Break me41.600
Page me41.600

†64 Engels means an address by the Cologne Central Authority to the Communist League of 1 December 1850 ('Die Centralbehörde an den Bund'), drawn up by supporters of Marx and Engels, mainly by Bürgers. It fell into the hands of the Saxon (not Hanover) police at the arrest of League member Peter Nothjung in Leipzig on 10 May 1850 and was published, in June 1851, in the Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger and the Kölnische Zeitung (not the Hannoversche Zeitung). — 25
Page me41.600
†65 The original Brimstone Gang (Schwefelbande) was a students' association in Jena University in the 1770s whose members were notorious for their brawls. Later the expression Brimstone Gang came to be applied to any group of ill repute. In Geneva in 1849-50 it was also the jocular name for a small company of German refugees, inoffensive and happy-go-lucky idlers. In his pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Vogt included Marx and his party associates in the 'Brimstone Gang', although they had nothing to do with it (for details see this volume, pp. 70-71 and Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 28-37). — 28, 33, 42, 89, 121, 166, 179, 298
Page me41.600
†66 Marx was trying to make Karl Blind admit that he, Blind, was the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung (see notes 4 and 60). In November 1859, Johann Wiehe, compositor at Fidelio Hollinger's press, where it had been printed, was forced by Blind and Hollinger to write a statement denying Blind's authorship (for the text of the statement see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 126). Karl Vogt reproduced Wiehe's statement in his pamphlet Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung. However, on 8 February 1860, Wiehe took out an affidavit in a London police court which virtually confirmed Blind's authorship (see this volume, pp. 31-32, 37-38). — 30
Page me41.600
†67 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 32, 123, 231, 242, 252, 261, 267, 283, 285, 293, 376, 474, 497, 503, 540, 542
Page me41.600
†68 Engels' pamphlet Savoy, Nice and the Rhine was published anonymously by G. Behrend in Berlin in April 1860. — 32
Page me41.600
†69 In 1858 and 1859, J.W.M. Reynolds was conducting libellous campaign against Ernest Jones, taking advantage of the latter's political blunders and vacillation (see Note 117). In 1859, Jones sued him for libel and won the case. — 33

Page Break me41.601
Page me41.601
†70 Later Marx learnt from Eduard Fischel's letter of 30 May 1860 that The Daily Telegraph's Berlin correspondent and the author of the item 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', which contained a summary of Vogt's libellous pamphlet, was Karl Abel. — 33, 58, 75, 131
Page me41.601

†71 Wasserpolacken — the original name for the Oder ferrymen who were mainly natives of Upper Silesia; subsequently it became widespread in Germany as a nickname for Silesian Poles. — 33
Page me41.601
†72 Marx wrote these letters to people who could supply material for his book against Vogt and his lawsuit against the National-Zeitung. — 33
Page me41.601
†73 On Lassalle's criticism of Liebknecht see Note 33. — 35
Page me41.601
†74 In mid-June 1850, Marx, through the Solingen worker Carl Wilhelm Klein, recommended to the Cologne District of the Communist League that Lassalle be admitted to the League. On 18 June, Peter Gerhard Röser, a leader of the League's Cologne District, wrote to tell Marx that the Cologne communists could not admit Lassalle because he 'persists in his aristocratic attitudes and is not as concerned for the working men's general welfare as he ought to be'.
Page me41.601
For the accusations levelled at Lassalle by Düsseldorf workers, see Marx's letter to Engels of 5 March 1856 (present edition, Vol. 40). — 35
Page me41.601
†75 This refers to the committee appointed to organise the celebrations of the centenary of Friedrich von Schiller's birth on 10 November 1859. Composed of petty-bourgeois regufees, it was headed by Gottfried Kinkel. — 35, 81, 226, 236
Page me41.601
†76 Marx evidently means the plans for establishing a Schiller society in London similar to the one set up in Manchester in November 1859 in connection with the Schiller centenary (see Note 429). — 35
Page me41.601
†77 The Patriots (Vaterlandsfreunde) was a society of German republican refugees in London in the 1850s and 1860s. It included, among others, Karl Blind, Ferdinand Freiligrath and Fidelio Hollinger. — 35
Page me41.601
†78 On 11 February 1860, the compositor Vögele took out an affidavit confirming, in effect, that Blind was the author of the flysheet Zur Warnung (see Note 60). Marx reproduced the affidavit in Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, p. 319). — 37, 39, 47, 53, 85
Page me41.601
†79 Engels has in mind Marx's trip to Manchester (see Note 58). — 39
Page me41.601
†80 Marx had sent Vögele's deposition (for its text see this volume, p. 60) and a covering letter to the Editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 3) to help the newspaper in the suit brought against it by Vogt (see Note 37). — 41
Page me41.601
†81 This refers to the so-called German-American revolutionary loan which Kinkel and other petty-bourgeois refugee leaders sought to float among German refugees and Americans of German extraction in 1851 and 1852. The funds raised were to be used for starting an immediate revolution in Germany. To publicise the loan, Kinkel went on a tour of the United States in September 1851, but it ended in failure. Marx and Engels denounced the whole undertaking as a futile and harmful attempt to produce a revolution artificially at a time when the revolutionary movement was at a low (see, in particular, Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 313-15). — 43, 98, 322

Page Break me41.602
Page me41.602
†82 The bill for the printing, by the Free Press publishers, of Marx's statement 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette' (see Note 55). — 46
Page me41.602
†83 Obviously, Marx had not yet received Engels' letter of 12 February 1860 informing him that his statement, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung, Declaration', had been published in the supplement to the Kölnische Zeitung, No. 41, on 10 February. — 47
Page me41.602
†84 This refers to Borkheim's letter to Marx of 12 February 1860 setting forth the history of the 'Brimstone Gang' (see Note 65). Marx reproduced the letter in full in Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 29-32). — 48, 71
Page me41.602
†85 Marx means Euston Station in London. — 49
Page me41.602
†86 As can be seen from Duncker's letter to Engels of 27 February 1860, he disagreed with Engels in assessing the stand taken by the various German political parties on the Italian question and therefore insisted on Savoy, Nice and the Rhine being published under the author's name. Engels, for his part, wanted a mere statement that the pamphlet was by the author of Po and Rhine (see this volume, p. 25 and Note 68). — 50
Page me41.602
†87 This refers to the refutation by Marx and Engels of the slanderous accusations levelled at the Communist League during the trial of communists in Cologne in 1852. See Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, Engels' 'The Late Trial at Cologne' (present edition, Vol. 11), and Marx's The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (Vol. 12). — 51
Page me41.602
†88 Engels means Vogt's lawsuit against the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung (see Note 22). — 52
Page me41.602
†89 Two letters of 16 October 1859 from Hermann Orges, editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung, requesting Marx to send Vögele's statement concerning the provenance of the flysheet Zur Warnung. The statement was to be used as evidence against Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 123-24 and 317-18, and this volume, p. 66). — 53, 63, 66
Page me41.602
†90 In this letter Blind tried to prove that he had had nothing to do with the flysheet Zur Warnung. Marx reproduced the letter in his Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, p. 122). — 53
Page me41.602

†91 A rough draft of this letter has been preserved. It was published by M. Häckel in Freiligrath's Briefwechsel, Berlin, 1968. The texts of the draft and final version are practically identical. — 54
Page me41.602
†92 Marx means the lawsuits he intended to bring against the Berlin National-Zeitung and the London Daily Telegraph for reprinting Vogt's libellous fabrications against himself and his associates (see also this volume, pp. 40-45, 59-76). — 54, 58
Page me41.602
†93 In a statement to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung of 5 November 1859, published in the supplement to No. 319 of that paper on 15 November, Freiligrath declared that he had never contributed to the Volk newspaper and had been named among Vogt's accusers against his own will. A note by A.Z. editor Gustav Eduard Kolb, published together with the statement, claimed that the information in question concerning Freiligrath derived from Liebknecht's reports from London and a private letter of his dated 12 September 1859, which said, in particular: 'Should Vogt bring his action before London courts, and he is morally forced to do so, Marx and Freiligrath will act as witnesses, and so will I.' It is this letter of Liebknecht's that Marx means here. — 55

Page Break me41.603
Page me41.603
†94 An anonymous article by Blind on the Schiller centenary festival in London, published in The Morning Advertiser on 11 November 1859, described Freiligrath's jubilee poem as being 'above mediocrity'. In a letter to Marx dated 17 November, Freiligrath hinted that this passage had been interpolated at Marx's request. For details see Marx's letter to Engels of 19 November 1859, present edition, Vol. 40. — 55
Page me41.603
†95 The illustrated literary weekly Die Gartenlaube, No. 43, 1859, carried an article, 'Ferdinand Freiligrath', signed 'B' (an abbreviation of 'Beta', the pen-name of Johann Heinrich Bettziech), which attributed the flagging of Freiligrath's powers as a poet to the 'influence' of Marx. See on this Marx's letters to Engels of 19 and 26 November and Engels' letter to Marx of 11 (or 12) December 1859 (present edition, Vol. 40). — 55
Page me41.603
†96 Marx means Liebknecht's private letter to the Allgemeine Zeitung (see Note 93) and his statement of 15 November in the supplement to the A.Z., No. 327, of 23 November 1859 in which Liebknecht stressed that he had never named Freiligrath among the accusers of Vogt. — 56
Page me41.603
†97 Marx had been misinformed. Vogt's pamphlet contained no letters by Freiligrath to Vogt. — 56
Page me41.603
†98 'La classe la plus laborieuse, et la plus misérable' is a paraphrase of Saint-Simon's expression 'la classe la plus nombreuse, et la plus pauvre'. — 57
Page me41.603
†99 Blind's statement in question, published in the supplement to the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 44, on 13 February 1860, opened with the words: 'In his latest work, Vogt speaks of my “Russophobia” and my “mistrust”.' — 58

Page me41.603
†100 The note, written by a German refugee in the USA (probably Georg Eduard Wiss) and forwarded to Marx by Cluss, described Lassalle as a man of extreme ambition, dangerous to any party because he would stop at nothing to achieve his ends. — 58
Page me41.603
†101 Marx means his letter of 19 November 1852 notifying Engels of the dissolution of the Communist League (see present edition, Vol. 39, and this volume, p. 83). — 59
Page me41.603
†102 Marx means Biscamp's article 'Der Reichsregent'. The words 'Der Reichsregent als Reichsverräter' ('The Imperial Regent as a traitor to the Empire') open one of its paragraphs. See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 117-18. — 64
Page me41.603
†103 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester from approximately 12 June to 2 July 1859. — 64
Page me41.603
†104 The reference is to the First Rhenish District Congress of Democratic Associations, held in Cologne on 13 and 14 August 1848. Marx and Engels took part in its deliberations. The Central Committee of the three democratic associations in Cologne, set up prior to the Congress, was confirmed as the Rhenish Regional Democratic Committee. At the initiative of the Communist League, a resolution was passed on the need to carry on work among the factory proletariat and the peasants. — 70
Page me41.603
†105 Marx gives a detailed explanation of the name 'Bürstenheimer' in his Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 38-47). — 71
Page me41.603
†106 Marx means the Communist League. See Note 63. — 71

Page Break me41.604
Page me41.604
†107 This refers to the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 3) which was headed by Willich and Schapper after the split of the Communist League. — 71
Page me41.604
†108 In September 1851, a series of arrests was made in France among members of the Communist League local communities affiliated to the Willich-Schapper faction. The adventurist conspiratorial tactics of the faction had caused a split in the League in September 1850. In disregard of the obtaining conditions it aimed at engineering an immediate uprising. This enabled the French and Prussian police to fabricate the so-called complot franco-allemand (Franco-German plot). Julien Cherval, an agent provocateur in the pay of the Prussian minister to Paris and, simultaneously, of the French police, succeeded in establishing himself as the leader of one of the League's Paris communities. In February 1852, the arrested were convicted on charges of sedition. Cherval was given a chance to escape from prison. The attempts by the Prussian police to implicate the League led by Marx and Engels in the Franco-German plot failed completely. Konrad Schramm, an associate of Marx arrested in Paris in September 1851, was soon released for lack of incriminating evidence. The trumped-up charges were nonetheless repeated by the Prussian police officer Stieber at the trial of communists in Cologne in 1852, which he had helped organise. Marx exposed Stieber's perjuries in the chapter 'The Cherval Plot' of his Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 407-19). — 72, 148

Page me41.604
†109 As can be seen from Marx's Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, p. 266) Schapper took out an affidavit to this effect at the Police Court at Bow Street on 1 March 1860. — 78
Page me41.604
†110 Marx means the differences on organisational questions that arose in the summer of 1850 between the Communist League Central Authority in London and the Cologne District Authority. The position of the former was set forth by Marx and Engels in the June 'Address of the Central Authority to the League' (see present edition, Vol. 10). In a number of letters to London that summer League members in Cologne expressed reservations about certain propositions in the 'Address'. — 81
Page me41.604
†111 The Communist Club in New York was set up in 1857 at the initiative of the German revolutionary refugees Friedrich Kamm and Albrecht Komp. Marx's associates Joseph Weydemeyer, Friedrich Adolph Sorge, Hermann Meyer and August Vogt were active members. — 81
Page me41.604
†112 Marx means his letters to Weydemeyer of 1 February 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 40) and to Komp, presumably of the same date (not found). — 81
Page me41.604
†113 Gustav Levy visited Marx in London in late February 1856. On a previous visit, in the latter half of December 1853, he had come on a mission from Düsseldorf workers. — 82
Page me41.604
†114 La Société des Saisons, active in Paris between 1837 and 1839, was a secret republican socialist organisation led by Auguste Blanqui and Armand Barbés. — 82
Page me41.604
†115 An appeal of the committee organising support for the communists convicted in Cologne, written by Marx, was directed to German workers in America care of Adolph Cluss. On 10 January 1853, the latter incorporated it in a message to German Americans, which he published in the California Staats-Zeitung. Marx's text was also included in the 'Appeal for support of the representatives of the proletariat sentenced in Cologne, and their families' issued by the administrative council of the Socialist Gymnastic Society on 16 January 1853, and published in the New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 621-25). — 83

Page Break me41.605
Page me41.605
†116 Marx evidently means the article by Ludwig Simon, former deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly, containing sallies against him and Engels, of which Weydemeyer advised him in a letter of 10 March 1852. — 84
Page me41.605

†117 In an attempt to revive the mass Charter movement, in April 1857 Ernest Jones proposed calling a Chartist conference, to be also attended by John Bright, Charles Gilpin and other bourgeois radicals. In drafting the platform for union with the radicals, he made a number of important political concessions. Of the six points of the People's Charter (universal suffrage, annual Parliaments, vote by secret ballot, equal constituencies, abolition of the property qualifications for candidates to Parliament, and the payment of M.P.s) he retained only the demand for universal manhood suffrage. Jones' conciliatory policy caused discontent among the rank-and-file of the National Charter Association. After repeated postponements a joint conference of Chartists and bourgeois radicals was convened in London on 8 February 1858. A sharp critique of Jones' position is given in Marx's letters to Engels of 16 January and 21 September and Engels' letters to Marx of 11 February and 7 October 1858 (present edition, Vol. 40). — 85
Page me41.605
†118 This is in reply to a passage in Lassalle's letter to Marx and Engels of late February 1860, which said: 'You [Marx] conclude your letter by passing on to me with a haughty gesture a message from Baltimore purporting to show that at least I have no grounds for complaining about your mistrust of me.' (See note 100). — 88
Page me41.605
†119 In his letter to Marx and Engels of late February 1860, Lassalle maintained that they were collecting a 'dossier' on him and that the note by Wiss (see Note 100) had been sent in reply to a request from them. — 89
Page me41.605
†120 Not all of Marx's letters to Cluss for the period 1852-54 have been found. Some have reached us only in the form of excerpts quoted by Cluss in his letters to Weydemeyer (see present edition, Vol. 39). The letter Marx refers to here has not been found, either in full or in excerpt. — 90
Page me41.605
†121 Marx is dispelling Lassalle's suspicion that the persons named had something to do with the accusations levelled at him, Lassalle (see Note 74). — 90
Page me41.605
†122 The decision to transfer the Central Authority of the Communist League (see Note 63) from London to Cologne was adopted by the Authority at its session of 15 September 1850. Marx, Engels and their supporters dissociated themselves from the faction led by August Willich and Karl Schapper, which set up a separate league with its own authority. — 90
Page me41.605
†123 Marx means article XVIII from Engels' series Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany, which was published over Marx's signature in the New-York Daily Tribute in 1851-52. The article spoke highly of Bakunin's part in the Dresden insurrection in 1849 (see present edition, Vol. 11, p. 90). See also the item 'Michael Bakunin' by Marx (present edition, Vol. 12). — 91
Page me41.605
†124 Marx evidently means the tribute to Johanna Mockel, wife of Gottfried Kinkel, by the German writer Fanny Lewald (married name: Stahr), published in the

Page Break me41.606

London Daily Telegraph. See also Marx's letter to Lassalle of 4 February 1859 (present edition, Vol. 40). — 92
Page me41.606
†125 Marx refers to that affidavit in his Herr Vogt and gives its date, 3 March 1860 (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 266). — 94
Page me41.606
†126 The pamphlet Zwei politische Prozesse. Verhandelt vor den Februar-Assisen in Köln, published in Cologne in 1849, contained the minutes of the trial of that newspaper held on 7 February 1849 and of the trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats, held on the following day.
Page me41.606
At the first trial, Karl Marx, as editor-in-chief, Frederick Engels, as co-editor, and Hermann Korff, as responsible publisher, were accused of insulting Chief Public Prosecutor Zweiffel and calumniating the police officers who arrested Andreas Gottschalk and Friedrich Anneke, in the article 'Arrests' published in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 35, on 5 July 1848 (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 177-79).
Page me41.606
At the latter trial, Karl Marx, Karl Schapper and the lawyer Schneider II were charged with incitement to revolt in connection with the appeal by the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats of 18 November 1848 on the refusal to pay taxes (see present edition, Vol. 8, p. 41). The jury acquitted the defendants in both cases. For the speeches of Marx and Engels at these trials see present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 304-22, 323-39. — 95
Page me41.606
†127 This refers to the Revolutionary Centralisation, a secret organisation founded by German refugees, mostly petty-bourgeois democrats, in Switzerland at the beginning of 1850.
Page me41.606
Its Central Committee, based in Zurich, was headed by Tzschirner, a leader of the Dresden insurrection in May 1849; Fries, Greiner, Sigel, Techow, Schurz and J. Ph. Becker, all participants in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, were prominent members. The organisation included Communist League members d'Ester, Bruhn and others, as well as Wilhelm Wolff. In July and August 1850 the leaders of the Revolutionary Centralisation approached members of the League's Central Authority with the proposal of a merger. On behalf of the Authority, Marx and Engels rejected the merger as potentially dangerous to the class independence of the proletarian party. By the end of 1850, the Revolutionary Centralisation had disintegrated as a result of the mass expulsion of German refugees from Switzerland. — 97
Page me41.606
†128 The March Association, with its headquarters in Frankfurt and branches in a number of German cities, was named after the March 1848 revolution in Germany and was set up by the petty-bourgeois democrats Julius Fröbel, Heinrich Simon, Arnold Ruge, Karl Vogt and other Left-wing deputies to the Frankfurt National Assembly late in November 1848. The Neue Rheinische Zeitung sharply attacked the Association's revolutionary phrase-mongering, indecision and inconsistency in fighting the counterrevolution (see the article 'Ein Aktenstück des Märzvereins' in No. 181, 29 December 1848). See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 103-05. — 100

Page me41.606
†129 Agreement on the expulsion of Marx and several contributors to the revolutionary-democratic newspaper Vorwärts! was reached by Arnim, Prussian envoy to Paris, and Guizot, the French Minister, in December 1844. The expulsion order was issued by the French government in January 1845. On 3 February, Marx moved from Paris to Brussels. — 101
Page me41.606
†130 This presumably refers to the lithographed circulars which Marx and Engels issued on behalf of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee. Only one of these, the 'Circular Against Kriege' by Marx and Engels, has reached us (see Vol. 6 of the present edition). — 102

Page Break me41.607
Page me41.607
†131 The German Workers' Society in Brussels was founded by Marx and Engels at the end of August 1847 for the political education of German workers living in Belgium. Run by Marx, Engels and their associates, it provided a legal centre for the propagation of scientific socialism and a rallying point for the revolutionary proletariat in Belgium. The finest members of the Society joined the Brussels community of the Communist League. The Society played an important part in establishing the Brussels Democratic Association. The Society's activities ceased soon after the February 1848 bourgeois revolution in France, when many of its members were arrested and expelled by the Belgian authorities. — 102. 534
Page me41.607
†132 Marx's work, based on the lectures on political economy which he gave in Brussels in the latter half of December 1847 (see also Note 610), was first published in 1849, as a series of editorials in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung under the heading Wage-Labour and Capital (present edition, Vol. 9). A draft outline of the concluding lectures on wage labour and capital was found among Marx's manuscripts. It is entitled Wages and bears, on the cover, the words: 'Brussels, December 1847'. For it see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 415-37. — 102
Page me41.607
†133 Marx means the Belgian National Congress. Elected during the 1830 revolution, it proclaimed the country's independence. — 102
Page me41.607
†134 This refers to the Democratic Association, of which Marx was a vice-president (see Note 61). In his letter of 25 February 1848, Jottrand requested Marx to withdraw his resignation. As a result, Marx decided to continue in his function. — 102
Page me41.607
†135 Marx's memory fails him here. On about 6 April 1848, he and Engels left Paris to take a direct part in the revolution in Germany. — 102
Page me41.607

†136 Marx means his election to the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats which was endorsed by the First Rhenish Congress of Democrats, held in Cologne on 13 and 14 August 1848. — 102
Page me41.607
†137 Marx came from Paris to London on about 26 August 1849. — 102
Page me41.607
†138 This letter is reproduced from the copy Marx made in his notebook. The copy is preceded by the words (An D. Collet) [To D. Collet]. — 104
Page me41.607
†139 Marx evidently means the bill of the Free Press publishers stating the cost of printing his leaflet 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'. — 104
Page me41.607
†140 This refers to Vogt's lawsuit against the Allgemeine Zeitung (see Note 22). — 105
Page me41.607
†141 Marx obviously means his 'Declaration' of 15 November 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 8-9) which, however, did not appear in Die Reform. On 19 November 1859 Die Reform published Marx's 'Statement to the Editors of Die Reform, the Volks-Zeitung and the Allgemeine Zeitung' (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 4-7). — 105
Page me41.607
†142 This letter is reproduced from the copy Marx made in his notebook. — 106, 136, 143
Page me41.607
†143 The Lesser Empire is Marx's caustic designation for the Second Empire, i.e. that of Napoleon III, as against the empire of Napoleon I. — 107
Page me41.607
†144 Engels is mocking the phraseology of Prussian official documents. Nothjung was sentenced to six years in prison at the trial of communists in Cologne in 1852. — 109

Page Break me41.608
Page me41.608
†145 In a letter of 11 March 1860 Lassalle requested Marx to get in touch with Ferdinand Wolff and offer him for translation into French the book Briefe von Alexander von Humboldt an Varnhagen von Ense aus den Jahren 1827 bis 1858 (see also Note 151).
Page me41.608
Mars's letter to Wolff has not been found. — 109
Page me41.608
†146 Engels stayed in Barmen from 23 March to 6 April 1860 in connection with his father's death. — 112, 260
Page me41.608
†147 In the spring of 1860 Siebel visited Paris and Geneva and obtained, through J. Ph. Becker and Georg Lommel, some documents at Marx's request and information which Marx needed for his book against Vogt. — 113
Page me41.608

†148 In the letter of 28 March 1860 Liebknecht wrote to Marx that the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung had given him notice as its correspondent, and requested Marx to help him find work as correspondent for some American newspaper. The letter, sent to Engels' address in Manchester, was, in the latter's absence (see Note 146), forwarded by Gumpert to Marx in London. — 113
Page me41.608
†149 The American Workers' League was a mass political organisation set up in New York on 21 March 1853. The majority of its members were immigrant German workers. Joseph Weydemeyer was on the League's organising Central Committee. The League worked for the establishment of trade unions, fought for higher wages and shorter hours, and sought to encourage independent political action by the workers. It virtually ceased its activities in 1855, but resumed them, in New York, in 1857, under the name of the General Labor Union. The Chicago Workers' Association, formed in 1857, was one of its branches. In 1860, it took over the leadership of US workers' organisations, while the General Labor Union ceased to exist. — 115, 117, 118
Page me41.608
†150 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: Marx and Engels On the United States, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1979. — 116
Page me41.608
†151 This refers to the book Briefe von Alexander von Humboldt an Varnhagen von Ense aus den Jahren 1827 bis 1858, Leipzig, 1860, which was published, with Lassalle's help, by Ludmilla Assing, niece of the German liberal writer Varnhagen von Ense. In the letter of 11 March 1860, Lassalle promised to send Marx a copy at once. — 116
Page me41.608
†152 Gymnastic Clubs — organisations of German democratic emigrants, including workers, set up in the USA by former participants in the 1848-49 revolution. At a congress in Philadelphia on 5 October 1850 the Gymnastic Clubs united into a Socialist Gymnastic Association which maintained contacts with German workers' organisations in America and published the Turn-Zeitung, a newspaper to which Weydemeyer and Cluss contributed regularly in 1852 and 1853. — 119
Page me41.608
†153 Marx did not copy out the passage from Vogt's pamphlet in the draft of his letter. He did reproduce it in his Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 70). He also reproduced the corresponding passage from Lommel's reply of 13 April 1860 (p. 71). — 119
Page me41.608
†154 On 6 June 1849 the rump of the Frankfurt National Assembly, which had moved to Stuttgart, formed an Imperial Regency, consisting of five members of the Left faction (moderate democrats). Their attempts to enforce by parliamentary means the Imperial Constitution drawn up by the Frankfurt

Page Break me41.609
Assembly and rejected by the German princes failed completely. On 18 June the rump National Assembly was disbanded by Württemberg troops. — 124
Page me41.609

†155 Decembrist was Marx's way of referring to the Second Empire in France (an allusion to Louis Bonaparte's coup d'état of 2 December 1851). — 126
Page me41.609
†156 Marx plays on a passage from the ruling of 18 April 1860 by Lippe, Public Prosecutor at the Royal Municipal Court in Berlin, rejecting Marx's libel suit against Zabel on the grounds that 'no issue of public importance is raised by this matter which could make it desirable for me to take any action' (see this volume, p. 131). — 129
Page me41.609
†157 This refers to the attempt by a group of Geneva radicals, supporters of James Fazy, to seize, on 30 March 1860, the towns of Thonon and Évian (on the southern shore of Lake Geneva), which under the Turin treaty of 24 March 1860 between France and the Kingdom of Sardinia were to be turned over to France (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 199-201). — 129
Page me41.609
†158 The original of Marx's letter bears the following pencil note, presumably by Rheinländer: 'Cherval came to Geneva from England in early 1853 (beginning of March or beginning of February) and stayed there for over a year, until his expulsion in the summer of 1854.' — 130
Page me41.609
†159 In his letter of 16 April 1860 Lassalle informed Marx that he was sending a printed copy of his as yet unpublished article 'Fichtes politisches Vermächtniß und die neueste Gegenwart', which was to appear in the Demokratische Studien published by Walesrode. In his article, Lassalle discussed Fichte's Politische Fragmente aus den Jahren 1807 und 1813 (J.G. Fichte, Sämmtliche Werke, Bd. 7, Berlin, 1846, S. 507-613). — 131
Page me41.609
†160 This refers to Siebel's trip to Switzerland (see Note 147). — 132
Page me41.609
†161 Under the 1858 Plombiéres agreement, France was to get Nice and Savoy for taking part in the forthcoming war against Austria on the side of the Kingdom of Sardinia. Although in the course of the Austro-Italo-French war (see Note 46) France violated the agreement by making a separate truce with Austria in Villafranca on 11 July 1859, it did, nonetheless, obtain Nice and Savoy under the Turin treaty of 24 March 1860. — 132
Page me41.609
†162 On 2 May 1860, the German journalist Eduard Fischel, a supporter of David Urquhart, the English conservative political writer, invited Marx to contribute to the Deutsche Zeitung, which was to be published, with Fischel's participation, in Berlin. For this, see Marx's letters to Fischel of 8 May and 1 June 1860 (this volume, pp. 136-37 and 143-44). For Marx's view of Fischel and the Urquhartites in general, see his letter to Lassalle of 2 June 1860 (this volume, pp. 152-55). — 133, 137
Page me41.609
†163 This refers to Napoleon III, who in 1846 escaped from prison wearing the clothes of a stonemason named Badinguet. — 133, 159, 171, 350
Page me41.609
†164 Marx means the letters of Emmermann to Schily of 29 April 1860 and of Beust to Schily of 1 May 1860, both of which contained libellous statements about Marx. — 133

Page me41.609
†165 Marx is referring to the events of the 1859-60 Italian bourgeois revolution — the peasant uprising in Sicily, started in April 1860, the insurrection in Palermo and the preparation of Garibaldi's expedition. On 11 May, three days after Marx wrote this letter, Garibaldi's 'Thousand' landed in Sicily. See also Marx's articles 'Sicily and the Sicilians' and 'Garibaldi in Sicily. — Affairs in Prussia' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 136

Page Break me41.610
Page me41.610
†166 Engels left for Barmen on about 12 May 1860. On his way there and back he stopped over briefly with Marx in London. — 139
Page me41.610
†167 Boustrapa — nickname of Louis Bonaparte, composed of the first syllables of the names of the cities where he staged putsches: Strasbourg (30 October 1836), Boulogne (6 August 1840) and Paris (coup d'état of 2 December 1851, which culminated in the establishment of a Bonapartist dictatorship). — 139, 456, 462, 471, 489, 506, 519
Page me41.610
†168 The papers Reuter stole from Dietz were documents of the Willich-Schapper sectarian adventurist faction, which Dietz had joined after the split within the Communist League in the autumn of 1850 (for details see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 403-07). The Communist League members tried in Cologne had had nothing to do with those documents. — 140
Page me41.610
†169 This refers to the so-called 'original minute-book' of the London Central Authority of the Communist League. A fabrication of Prussian police spies, it formed the basis of the prosecution's case at the Cologne trial of communists in 1852 (for details see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 420-43). — 141
Page me41.610
†170 In reply to Marx's question about the programme of the Deutsche Zeitung, Fischel wrote on 30 May 1860 that one of its slogans was 'Black, red and gold' (i.e., the unification of Germany, black, red and gold being its national colours). — 144, 493
Page me41.610
†171 Marx thanks Fischel for informing him, in his letter of 30 May 1860, that K. Abel, and not a certain Meier, as Marx had previously assumed (see this volume, pp. 33 and 58), was the Berlin correspondent of The Daily Telegraph. — 144
Page me41.610
†172 Lassalle had suggested that Marx should go to Berlin to testify at the Eichhoff trial (see Note 44). The material on the police machinations attending the Communist trial in Cologne, mentioned below in this letter, was used by Marx in his polemic Herr Vogt, Appendix 4 (present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 64-67). — 145
Page me41.610
†173 On Marx's meeting with Hermann Juch see also his letters to Engels of 13 and 20 December 1859 (present edition, Vol. 40). — 146
Page me41.610

†174 Marx means the sectarian adventurist faction led by August Willich and Karl Schapper that split away from the Communist League after 15 September 1850 and formed an independent organisation with its own Central Authority (see also notes 63 and 108). — 147
Page me41.610
†175 To create a pretext for reprisals against political refugees, the British authorities in April 1853 accused the proprietors of a rocket manufactory in Rotherhide, near London, of conspiratorial dealings with Kossuth, which Marx ironically calls 'Kossuth's gunpowder plot' by analogy with the Catholic gunpowder plot against James I of England in 1605.
Page me41.610
Ladendorf, Gercke, Falkenthal, Levy and several other petty-bourgeois democrats were arrested in 1853 on the strength of a denunciation by the police agent Hentze, a former member of the Communist League. They were sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from three to five years in 1854 on trumped-up charges of conspiracy. — 148

Page Break me41.611
Page me41.611
†176 This article, published in The Free Press under the headline 'Russian State Papers Respecting Her Recent Advance to Our Indian Frontiers', was based on Engels' article 'Russian Progress in Central Asia', which appeared as a leader in the New-York Daily Tribune on 3 November 1858 (present edition, Vol. 16). In preparing the article for The Free Press, Marx changed the opening and concluding sections. — 152
Page me41.611
†177 Here Marx draws on Eduard Fischel's letter to the Editor of The Free Press, published on 30 November 1859 under the headline 'The Coburg Pamphlet and Lord Palmerston'. — 153
Page me41.611
†178 The official residence of the British Prime Minister is in Downing Street. — 154
Page me41.611
†179 An allusion to Georg Lommel's letter of 28 May 1860 in which he notified Marx of having sent him a parcel (presumably with material exposing Karl Vogt). — 155, 170
Page me41.611
†180 Engels stayed in Barmen from 23 March to 6 April 1860 in connection with the death of his father and, presumably, from 12 to 25 May in view of the grave illness of his mother. — 156
Page me41.611
†181 This refers to the 'Mémoire adressé á Lord Palmerston...' of 11 June 1859, in which Szemere, as former Prime Minister of Hungary, urged Palmerston to contribute to the efforts for Hungary's independence. Szemere included the 'Mémoire' as a separate chapter in his book La Question hongroise (1848-1860). — 157
Page me41.611
†182 Marx drew this information from a letter of Victor Schily dated 6 March 1860. Schily's source was Nikolai Sasonow, a Russian émigré journalist, resident in Paris. Sasonow also mentioned the lecture in his letter to Marx of 10 May 1860 (Marx quotes it in Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 42). The name of the Russian professor has not been established. — 157, 194

Page me41.611
†183 Napoleon III met Prince Regent William of Prussia and the princes of other German states in Baden-Baden on 15 to 17 June 1860. On this see Marx's articles 'The Emperor Napoleon III and Prussia' and 'Interesting from Prussia' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 159
Page me41.611
†184 At a sitting of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on 12 May 1860, deputy Niegolewski of the Grand Duchy of Posen exposed the Prussian authorities' intrigues there. — 159
Page me41.611
†185 An excerpt from this letter was first published in: Marx and Engels, On Literature and Art, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1976, pp. 229-31. — 160
Page me41.611
†186 Engels quotes the old Danish folk song 'Elveskud' ('The Wood King's Daughter'). A German translation of it by Johann Gottfried Herder, entitled 'Erlkönig', was put to music and became widely known. Another German translation, by Wilhelm Grimm, though philologically superior, failed to win popularity. No translation by Ludwig Uhland has been discovered. — 160
Page me41.611
†187 On 26 June 1849 the liberal deputies to the Frankfurt National Assembly, who had walked out after the Prussian King's refusal to accept the Imperial Crown, met in Gotha for a three-day conference which resulted in the formation of the Gotha party. It expressed the interests of the pro-Prussian German bourgeoisie and supported the policy of the Prussian ruling circles aimed at uniting Germany under the hegemony of Hohenzollern Prussia. — 164

Page Break me41.612
Page me41.612
†188 This refers to the letter of Legal Counsellor Weber of 22 June 1860 informing Marx of the rejection by the Berlin Royal Municipal Court, on 8 June 1860, of his libel suit against the National-Zeitung (see Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 271). — 167, 169
Page me41.612
†189 Vogt had brought his suit against the Allgemeine Zeitung in the Bavarian city of Augsburg (see Note 22). — 167
Page me41.612
†190 An allusion to the fact that Lassalle, as well as Vogt, had contributed to the Demokratische Studien almanach published by Meisner in 1860. Among other items, it contained Lassalle's article 'Fichtes politisches Vermächtniß und die neueste Gegenwart' and Vogt's article 'Ein Blick auf das jetzige Genf'. — 169
Page me41.612
†191 This seems to refer to the negotiations on the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt, which originally was to appear in Meissner's publishing house in Hamburg. — 169
Page me41.612

†192 A dictum traceable to Jean Stanislas Andrieux's short story 'Le meunier de Sans-Souci', which is based on the tradition about a miller who won a suit in a Berlin court against King Frederick II over his mill, which was to be pulled down to make room for the Sanssouci palace. — 170, 176
Page me41.612
†193 An ironic allusion to the book Kraft und Stoff (Energy and Matter) (1855) by the German physiologist Ludwig Büchner, a vulgar materialist like Vogt. — 171
Page me41.612
†194 Garibaldi's letter to Green, written in the summer of 1860, was used by Marx in his article 'Interesting from Sicily. — Garibaldi's Quarrel with La Farina. — A Letter from Garibaldi' (see present edition, Vol. 17). — 171
Page me41.612
†195 On the reform of the Prussian army see Note 19. — 172
Page me41.612
†196 This refers to an episode of the 1859-60 Italian revolution (see Note 165), the expulsion from Sicily of Giuseppe La Farina, an emissary of Cavour's, in July 1860. For details see Marx's article 'Interesting from Sicily. — Garibaldi's Quarrel with La Farina. — A Letter from Garibaldi' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 172
Page me41.612
†197 An allusion to the fact that Napoleon III's negotiations with Prince Regent William of Prussia in Baden-Baden (see Note 183) could involve a betrayal of Austria's interests, just as the treaty concluded by Napoleon III with Francis Joseph in Villafranca in July 1859 (see Note 161) involved a betrayal of Italy's interests. In the course of the latter talks Napoleon III proposed leaving Lombardy to Austria in exchange for an Austrian undertaking to maintain neutrality in the event of France's attempting to seize the German territories on the left bank of the Rhine. Kinglake touched on the matter in the House of Commons speech mentioned by Engels. See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 172. — 173
Page me41.612
†198 Garibald's army crossed over from Sicily to the mainland on 19 August 1860. — 174
Page me41.612
†199 On 24 July Engels wrote the article 'British Defenses', and in late July the article 'Could the French Sack London?'. They were published in the New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 6020 and 6021, 10 and 11 August 1860 (see present edition, Vol. 17). — 175
Page me41.612
†200 This refers to the rejection by the Royal High Court of Legal Counsellor Weber's appeal against the ruling by the Berlin Royal Municipal Court on Marx's libel suit against the National-Zeitung (see Note 188). The High Court ruling, dated 11 July 1860, had been forwarded by Weber to Marx (for details see Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 282-83). — 175

Page Break me41.613
Page me41.613
†201 Between late October 1860 and the first half of January 1861 Engels wrote 'The History of the Rifle', which appeared in eight instalments in the Volunteer Journal, for

Lancashire and Cheshire between 3 November 1860 and 19 January 1861 (see present edition, Vol. 18). — 177
Page me41.613
†202 Weber's letter had reached Marx as early as 29 July but it was not until 2 August, when Marx got the money for the payment of Weber's fee and the legal costs from Engels and Wolff in Manchester, that he was able to answer it (see this volume, pp. 175-77). — 177
Page me41.613
†203 This letter was written in reply to the one from Mrs Marx of 14 August 1860 (see this volume, p. 568). — 179
Page me41.613
†204 This refers to the negotiations concerning a publisher for Marx's Herr Vogt. Engels' words to the effect that 'it's irresponsible on Moor's part not even to answer my questions concerning Siebel', refer to his letter to Marx of 27 June (see this volume, pp. 168-69) and, presumably, another letter, which has not reached us. — 179
Page me41.613
†205 The address on the envelope is in Mrs Marx's hand: 'Herrn Justiz-Rath Weber, Berlin, 11. Brüderstrasse'. Weber answered Marx on 27 August. He drafted his reply on Marx's letter under the signature. — 180
Page me41.613
†206 Marx means Garibaldi's successful operations, after his landing on the mainland on 19 August 1860 (see Note 198), to free Southern Italy from the rule of the Neapolitan Bourbons. — 182, 185
Page me41.613
†207 On 1 September 1860 or thereabouts, Engels wrote the article 'Garibaldi's Progress' and a few days later the article 'Garibaldi in Calabria' (see present edition, Vol. 17). On Türr see Marx's article 'Affairs in Prussia. — Prussia, France and Italy' (ibid.). — 182, 184
Page me41.613
†208 In late August and early September Marx dealt with these subjects in two articles for the New-York Daily Tribune, 'Corn Prices. — European Finances and War Preparations. — The Oriental Question' and 'British Commerce' (see present edition, Vol. 17). — 185
Page me41.613
†209 This refers to an article and money sent by Engels. Marx added the line on Thursday, 2 September. — 185
Page me41.613
†210 For details on the flysheet see Note 60. — 188
Page me41.613
†211 In September 1860, the press announced the forthcoming meeting of the Emperors of Russia and Austria and the Prince Regent of Prussia. It was held in Warsaw in October. See also Marx's article 'Russia Using Austria. — The Meeting at Warsaw' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 189
Page me41.613
†212 This refers to the uprising in Rhenish Prussia, the Bavarian Palatinate and Baden in the spring and summer of 1849 in support of the Imperial Constitution adopted by the Frankfurt National Assembly. Despite its limitations, the Constitution was seen by the people as the only surviving gain of the revolution. The volunteer corps commanded by August Willich, was the staunchest unit in the insurgent army. Engels was Willich's adjutant. — 191

Page me41.613
†213 Engels contributed to the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung from 1860 to 1864. His articles for that newspaper have been included in vols. 18 and 19 of the present edition. — 192

Page Break me41.614
Page me41.614
†214 In his letter of 11 September 1860 Lassalle asked Marx to make enquiries to Freiligrath about the financial position of the General Bank of Switzerland. Freiligrath was an employee of its London branch. — 192
Page me41.614
†215 In his letter of 11 September 1860 Lassalle told Marx that Bürgers had urged Prussian hegemony in a speech before the National Association in Coburg. — 194
Page me41.614
†216 Marx wrote this note on the top of the first page of the letter by Freiligrath to him of 15 September 1860 answering Marx's enquiry, made at Lassalle's request, about the financial position of the General Bank of Switzerland (see Note 214). — 195
Page me41.614
†217 This refers to Engels' stay with Marx in May 1860 (see Note 166). — 196
Page me41.614
†218 The New American Cyclopaedia was a sixteen-volume reference work prepared by a group of progressive bourgeois journalists and publishers on the New-York Daily Tribune editorial board (Charles Dana, George Ripley and others). It appeared between 1858 and 1863 and was reprinted unchanged in 1868-69. A number of eminent US and European scholars wrote for it.
Page me41.614
Notwithstanding the editors' express condition that articles should be non-partisan in character, those of Marx and Engels reflect their revolutionary proletarian, materialist views.
Page me41.614
Marx and Engels contributed to the Cyclopaedia from July 1857 to November 1860. Their articles for it have been included in Vol. 18 of the present edition. — 196
Page me41.614
†219 Marx discussed this in more detail in the article 'Affairs in Prussia. — Prussia, France and Italy' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 196
Page me41.614
†220 Engels wrote the article on 22 November 1860 or thereabouts (see present edition, Vol. 18). — 198
Page me41.614
†221 Despite the victorious advance of Garibaldi's army (see notes 165 and 198), in September 1860 the peasants began to dissociate themselves from the revolution because the propertied classes were sabotaging Garibaldi's propeasant decrees. The initiative passed to the Piedmont government, which sent its troops to the Papal States.

Page me41.614
Lamoriciére commanded the Papal troops at the time. — 199
Page me41.614
†222 The Quirinal — one of the seven hills on which Rome is situated. Engels alludes to Garibaldi's appeal of 10 September 1860 stating his intention to advance on Rome and, upon completing the unification of the country, to proclaim Victor Emmanuel King of Italy from the Quirinal. — 200
Page me41.614
†223 After bringing about the collapse of the Roman Republic in 1849, the French interventionist troops stayed in Rome until 1870. — 200
Page me41.614
†224 Otto Wigand was a publisher in Leipzig. Marx obviously means Wigand's letter of 20 March 1852 stating his refusal to bring out The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte on account of 'the risks vis-á-vis the state this involves'. — 201
Page me41.614
†225 An allusion to the fact that Edwin James, who went to see Garibaldi in Italy in the autumn of 1860, had been datelining his reports in The Times from a different city each time. — 203
Page me41.614
†226 Engels' article, published in The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire, was reprinted in abridged form on 21 September 1860 in The Morning Herald, No. 24831, The Standard, No. 11267, The Manchester Guardian, No. 4397 and The Sun, No. 21273, and on 22 September in The Morning Advertiser,

Page Break me41.615
No. 21615. Brief excerpts were given in The Times, No. 23733, on 24 September. — 203
Page me41.615
†227 Marx did not write a pamphlet on this subject. — 204, 208
Page me41.615
†228 On 1 October 1860 at Volturno, Garibaldi's forces defeated the army of Francis II, King of the Two Sicilies, thereby completing, by and large, the liberation of Southern Italy. — 205, 207
Page me41.615
†229 There is no evidence to support these data on Garibaldi's background. — 206
Page me41.615
†230 This apparently refers to a statement by Szemere on Emperor Francis Joseph's diploma of 20 October 1860 granting a modicum of autonomy to the non-German parts of the Austrian Empire. Szemere's statement has not been found (see also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 225). — 210, 215
Page me41.615
†231 This refers to the 1860 US Presidential election, which was contested by the Republican and the Democratic Party. The Republican Party was formed in 1854, on the basis of a broad coalition embracing the industrial and commercial bourgeoisie, farmers, workers and craftsmen in the North-eastern states. Its establishment as a force opposed to the Democratic Party reflected the antagonisms between the rapidly developing capitalism of the North and the system of slave labour in the South. The Republican Party, controlled by the Northern bourgeoisie, favoured the restriction of slavery to the southern states, the free settlement of the West, and protective tariffs to promote the development of national industry. On 7 November 1860 the Republican candidate, Abraham Lincoln, was elected President. — 210

Page me41.615
†232 This letter by Engels has not been found. — 211, 238, 240, 253, 257, 300, 309, 333, 334, 466, 482
Page me41.615
†233 Marx means Lommel's statement of 5 April 1860 exposing Vogt's pro-Bonapartist activities. Lommel enclosed it in his letter to Marx of 13 April 1860, upon learning that the statement would not be published in the Allgemeine Zeitung. Marx quotes an extract from that letter in Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 71). — 211
Page me41.615
†234 Marx means his letter of 13 November. Engels' letter in question, presumably of the same date, has not been found. — 213
Page me41.615
†235 This refers to the comment of the Manchester Guardian's Paris correspondent, in its issue of 12 November 1860, that 'Louis-Napoleon spends his gold in vain in supporting such newspapers as the National-Zeitung' (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 326). — 213
Page me41.615
†236 By the Kossuth-Cobden memorandum Marx evidently means the summary, sent to him by Szemere, of a conversation that Kossuth had had with British MP William Sandford on 30 May 1854. Szemere's source had been a letter from Richard Cobden, leader of the English Free Traders. An excerpt from the memorandum bearing on Hungary's relations with Austria and Russia was quoted by Marx in Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 328). — 215
Page me41.615
†237 Excerpts from this letter were first published in English in a footnote in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 216, 223, 413, 446, 493
Page me41.615
†238 Only five of the articles written by Marx for the New-York Daily Tribune between September and November 1860 were published: 'British Commerce'

Page Break me41.616
(written on 8 September), 'Russia Using Austria. — The Meeting at Warsaw' (17 September), 'Affairs in Prussia. — Prussia, France and Italy' (27 September), 'Preparations for War in Prussia' (23 October) and 'Great Britain — A Money Stringency' (10 November) (see present edition, Vol. 17). — 216
Page me41.616

†239 First published in English in full in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 220, 409, 424, 427, 432, 442, 444, 495, 498, 500, 508, 514, 523, 524, 525, 550, 556, 563
Page me41.616
†240 This article, as well as the one Marx received on 12 December, was written by Engels at Marx's request (see this volume, pp. 220 and 222): It is not known whether the New-York Daily Tribune published it. — 223, 226
Page me41.616
†241 In late January 1861 Engels wrote the article 'French Armaments'. Originally intended for the New-York Daily Tribune, it was revised by the author for The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire, in which it appeared on 2 February 1861, No. 22 (see present edition, Vol. 18). — 224
Page me41.616
†242 Marx means Édouard Simon's article 'Le procés de M. Vogt avec la Gazette d'Augsbourg', published in Revue contemporaine of 15 February 1860. In it Simon used various turns of phrase from Techow's letter (see Note 56). — 225
Page me41.616
†243 Here and further in the text the reference is to advertisements announcing the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt. — 227
Page me41.616
†244 This refers to Marx's private library which he had collected in the 1840s and left in the safekeeping of his friend, Communist League member Roland Daniels, in Cologne in May 1849, when expelled by the Prussian authorities. Shortly before being arrested in 1851, Daniels hid the books in the warehouse of his brother, a wine merchant. Acquitted at the Cologne Communist trial in late 1852, he came out of prison a gravely sick man. He died of tuberculosis in August 1855. At the beginning of 1856 Daniels' widow took steps to send the books to Marx, but owing to the high transportation costs and other problems, it was not until December 1860 that he received his library, with some books missing.
Page me41.616
A list of the books of this library, compiled by Daniels and with notes by Marx, has been preserved. — 228, 239, 255, 265
Page me41.616
†245 Marx evidently means the articles by Engels whose receipt he acknowledged in his letters of 5 and 12 December 1860 (see Note 240). — 230
Page me41.616
†246 The Crystal Palace in London was built of metal and glass to house the Great Exhibition of 1851. — 236
Page me41.616
†247 The London publisher Albert Petsch was to distribute the unsold part of the Boston edition of Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (1853). Several copies of Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, published in New York in 1852, were likewise turned over to Petsch for sale. The two works are in Vol. 11 of the present edition. — 238, 327
Page me41.616

†248 This refers to Eduard Meyen's libellous article 'Die neue Denunciation Karl Vogt's durch K. Marx' in the Freischütz, Nos. 155 and 156, 27 and 29 December 1860, and No. 1, 1 January 1861. — 238, 239, 241, 242
Page me41.616
†249 An extract from this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, The Civil War in the United States, New York, 1937 — 241,

Page Break me41.617
297, 300, 303, 305, 329, 334, 344, 346, 347, 353, 358, 362, 363, 365, 369, 371, 372, 386, 414, 415, 418, 427, 429, 431, 437, 439, 454, 455, 529, 531, 539
Page me41.617
†250 In May 1860, Stieber was tried on a charge of abuse of power. Although acquitted, he was forced to resign in November of that year. — 241
Page me41.617
†251 In January 1861, the Prussian Crown passed to William I, who from 1858 to 1861 had been Regent during the reign of Frederick William IV. — 241
Page me41.617
†252 The late 1850s saw a rise in the national liberation struggle of the peoples of the Austrian Empire and, as a result, an inner political crisis. In an attempt to contain the revolutionary and democratic forces, the government of Francis Joseph made a number of half-hearted concessions to the national liberation movement late in 1860. See Engels' article 'Austria — Progress of the Revolution' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 241
Page me41.617
†253 The victory of the Republican Party at the 1860 election (see Note 231) gave the capitalist North of the USA a stronger position vis-á-vis the Southern slaveowners, who had dominated the Federal organs of power for a long time. Lincoln's election to the Presidency was taken by the Southern states as a pretext for secession. South Carolina was the first to quit the Union. It was followed by Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and Florida. See Marx's article 'The American Question in England' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 242, 295
Page me41.617
†254 A reference to Marx's private library (see Note 244). — 244
Page me41.617
†255 A short extract from this letter first appeared in English in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. In 1979, the letter was published, considerably abridged, in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey. — 245
Page me41.617
†256 A supreme Decree on Amnesty (Allerhöchster Gnaden-Erlaß wegen politischer Verbrechen und Vergehen) was issued in Prussia on 12 January 1861 in connection with the Coronation of King William I. See also this volume, pp. 248-49. — 246, 248, 351
Page me41.617
†257 This refers to the London branch of the German National Association (see Note 24). The branch was set up with Kinkel's help in 1860. — 246, 293, 297

Page me41.617
†258 The Manchester School — a trend in economic thinking which reflected the interests of the industrial bourgeoisie. Its supporters, known as Free Traders, advocated removal of protective tariffs and non-intervention by the government in economic life. The centre of the Free Traders' agitation was Manchester, where the movement was headed by two textile manufacturers, Richard Cobden and John Bright, who founded the Anti-Corn Law League in 1838. In the 1840s and 1850s the Free Traders were a separate political group, which later formed the Left wing of the Liberal Party. — 246
Page me41.617
†259 Marx means the siege by Piedmontese troops of Gaeta fortress, the last stronghold of Francis II, King of the Two Sicilies. Gaeta fell in February 1861. — 246
Page me41.617
†260 This refers to the participation of William I, then Prince of Prussia, in suppressing the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849. — 249

Page Break me41.618
Page me41.618
†261 In mid-January 1861 Rodbertus, Berg and Bucher published a statement on the unification of Germany (Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 13, 13 January, supplement; Der Beobachter, Nos. 17, 18 and 19; 20, 22 and 23 January). They argued that, together with Prussia, the future Germany should include Schleswig-Holstein and Austria so as to have access both to the North Sea and — via Austria's possessions in Italy — to the Mediterranean. They advocated a 'Great Germany' and held that the country should be unified through the consolidation of the German Confederation. — 249, 253
Page me41.618
†262 An allusion to the negotiations held in Warsaw in October 1860 (see Note 211). — 250
Page me41.618
†263 This presumably refers to the petition drawn up by Lassalle for Countess Sophie von Hatzfeldt in connection with her divorce case, completed in 1854 (Klage der Gräfin Hatzfeldt wegen ungesetzlicher Vermögensaneignung [Complaint by Countess Hatzfeldt about Unlawful Appropriation of Property]). The petition was submitted to the Prussian Chamber of Deputies at the beginning of 1861. Appended to it was a memorandum to the Ministry which contained a sharp critique of Prussia's reactionary regime. — 251, 252, 254
Page me41.618
†264 In this note Marx presumably informed Eichhoff of his intention to translate into English the latter's pamphlet Berliner Polizei-Silhouetten, which appeared in 1860, and have it published, whole or abridged, and probably with his own commentaries, in The Times. In his letter of 16 February 1861, Eichhoff agreed to the project, but Marx was unable to carry it out. — 251
Page me41.618
†265 On 21 March 1857 Marx received a letter from Charles Dana, editor of the New-York Daily Tribune, informing him that in view of the economic recession only one of his articles a week would be paid, whether published or not, while the others would only be paid if published. In October of the same year, Dana informed Marx that, for the same reasons, the Tribune had discharged all its correspondents in Europe except Marx and B. Taylor, and was requesting Marx to confine himself to one article a week. — 252, 570

Page me41.618
†266 I.e., supporters of the German National Association (see Note 24). — 253
Page me41.618
†267 This may refer to Engels' letter to Marx of 31 January 1861, or to some other letter, which has not been found. — 254
Page me41.618
†268 Engels means his article 'French Armaments', which he wrote at Marx's request in late January 1861 (see this volume, p. 250). He revised it for The Volunteer Journal since, after Dana's letter (see Note 265), he had good cause to fear that the New-York Daily Tribune would not publish it. — 257
Page me41.618
†269 This refers to the pamphlet, F. Engels, Essays Addressed to Volunteers, London-Manchester, 1861. It included five articles published in The Volunteer Journal in 1860 and early 1861: 'A Review of English Volunteer Riflemen', 'The French Light Infantry', 'Volunteer Artillery', 'The History of the Rifle', and 'Volunteer Engineers: Their Value and Sphere of Action' (all five will be found in Vol. 18 of the present edition). The pamphlet appeared on 16 March 1861. — 258, 262
Page me41.618
†270 After the death of Engels' father in March 1860, his brothers proposed that he should renounce his title to the family concern in Engelskirchen in their favour. One of their arguments was that he had lived abroad since 1849. By way of compensation, he was to receive £10,000 to consolidate his legal and financial standing with the Ermen & Engels firm in Manchester, of which

Page Break me41.619
Engels hoped eventually to become a co-owner. His brothers' proposal infringed Engels' rights, since under English law the transfer of a deceased co-owner's title was highly complicated and problematic. Engels had lengthy talks with Gottfried Ermen on the terms of his continued collaboration with the firm (see this volume, pp. 134-35). It was not until 25 September 1862 that a contract was signed providing for Engels' eventual partnership. He became a co-owner in 1864 (see this volume, p. 548). — 259, 548

Page me41.619
†271 Kinkel started out in life as a pastor's assistant in the Protestant community in Cologne. — 262
Page me41.619
†272 During the siege of Gaeta (see Note 259), French warships kept the fortress supplied with provisions and ammunition. They left the Gaeta roadstead on 19 January 1861. — 262
Page me41.619
†273 In January 1859 an anti-feudal uprising by Maronite peasants (the Maronites are a Christian sect recognising the authority of the Pope but retaining the ancient rites of the Eastern Church) erupted in Northern Lebanon. It spread to central Lebanon and, in the spring of 1860, led to bloody clashes between Maronites and Druses (a Moslem sect). The religious strife was fanned by British and French emissaries and the Turkish authorities. Napoleon III exploited the disturbances as a pretext for sending an expeditionary corps to Lebanon in August 1860. Pressure from Britain, Russia and Austria forced France to withdraw its troops the following year. For details see Marx's article 'Events in Syria. — Session of the British Parliament. — The State of British Commerce' (present edition, Vol. 17). — 262

Page me41.619
†274 Heineke the lusty knave is the hero of the German folk song Heineke, der starke Knecht, a parody of 16th-century grobian literature. In his work 'Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality' (present edition, Vol. 6) Marx compared Heinzen's journalistic writings with samples of grobian literature. — 263
Page me41.619
†275 First published in English, abridged, in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London, 1934. A fuller English publication appeared in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 264
Page me41.619
†276 Blind published pamphlets, Flugblätter des Vereins 'Deutsche Einheit und Freiheit' in England, on behalf of that Association in London. — 264
Page me41.619
†277 In the course of the Civil War in Rome (49-45 B.C.), Caesar followed Pompey, his rival, to Epirus and defeated him at Pharsalus, Thessaly, on 6 June 48 B.C. — 265
Page me41.619
†278 Marx stayed at Lion Philips' in Zalt-Bommel, Holland, from 28 February to 16 March 1861. Thence he went to Berlin, where he stayed until 12 April. During that visit to Germany, he also went to Elberfeld, Barmen, Cologne and Trier. He returned to London on 29 April. — 266, 299, 574, 577, 579
Page me41.619
†279 Following an abortive coup by petty-bourgeois democrats on 13 June 1849, a state of siege was proclaimed in Paris, bringing in its wake reprisals against democrats and socialists. On 19 July, the French authorities notified Marx that he was being expelled from Paris to Morbihan, a marshy and insalubrious region in Brittany. Rather than go there, Marx decided to emigrate to England and settle in London. He left Paris on 24 August. — 268

Page Break me41.620
Page me41.620
†280 Expelled from France by the Guizot government, Marx moved to Brussels on 3 February 1845. However, in December of that year the Prussian government, taking advantage of Marx's coming under its jurisdiction as a Prussian subject, demanded his expulsion from Belgium. As a result, Marx was forced to relinquish Prussian nationality. For details see the article 'The Conflict between Marx and Prussian Citizenship' and 'Marx's Statement on the Rejection of His Application for Restoration of His Prussian Citizenship' (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 407-10, and Vol. 19, pp. 345-52). — 268

Page me41.620
†281 The Preliminary Parliament, or Preparliament met in Frankfurt am Main from 31 March to 4 April 1848. A council of representatives of the German states, it set up a Committee of Fifty to prepare the ground for the convocation of an all-German National Assembly (see Note 282) and produced a draft of the 'Fundamental Rights and Demands of the German People'. — 268
Page me41.620
†282 The Frankfurt Parliament, or the German National Assembly, opened in Frankfurt am Main on 18 May 1848. It was convened to unify the country and draw up a Constitution. The liberal deputies, who were in the majority, turned the Assembly into a mere debating club. At the decisive moments of the revolution, the liberals condoned the reactionary policy of the counterrevolutionary forces. In spring 1849, the liberals walked out of the Assembly after the Prussian and other governments had rejected the Imperial Constitution it had drawn up. The Rump of the Assembly moved to Stuttgart, and was dispersed by the Württemberg forces on 18 June 1849 (see Note 154). — 268
Page me41.620
†283 Waradje (from the Dutch word waarátje, truly, indeed) is the favourite word of one of the characters in Hildebrand's novel Camera obscura, a timid, ignored admirer. Here, the reference seems to be to Pastor A. Roodhujzen, Antoinette Philips' future husband. — 274
Page me41.620
†284 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx, On America and the Civil War. Edited and translated by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1972. A longer extract appeared in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, 1979. — 276
Page me41.620
†285 In 1861 the conflict between the capitalist North and the slaveowning South of the USA (see Note 253) assumed the form of armed struggle. On 12 April rebel Southern troops bombarded Fort Sumter (South Carolina) thus unleashing a civil war that lasted until 1865. After the outbreak of the rebellion, four more states — Arkansas, Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee — seceded from the Union. For details see this volume, pp. 294-309 and Marx's articles 'The North American Civil War' and 'The Civil War in the United States' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 277, 295, 306
Page me41.620
†286 This refers to the Congress of the secessionist states (see Note 253) which met in Montgomery, Alabama, on 4 February 1861. Attended by representatives of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, it proclaimed the establishment of the Southern Confederacy, adopted a Constitution and formed a government. On 18 February, Jefferson Davis was elected President of the Confederate States. — 278, 301, 306
Page me41.620
†287 An except from this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and

Page Break me41.621

Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. A longer extract appeared in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 279

Page me41.621

†288 It was not until September 1861 that Marx agreed to contribute to the Austrian liberal newspaper Die Presse, of which the German journalist Max Friedländer was an associate editor. Marx gave his consent after having made sure that, in the domestic sphere, Die Presse was opposing the reactionary forces and was also critical of the government of Anton von Schmerling, a liberal. — 279

Page me41.621

†289 The reference is to General Pfuel's part in the suppression of the national liberation uprising in Posen, a duchy under Prussian rule, in the spring of 1848. On his orders the heads of the insurgents taken prisoner were shaved and their hands and ears branded with lunar caustic (in German Höllenstein. i.e. stone of hell). Hence his nickname, 'von Höllenstein'. — 280

Page me41.621

†290 This refers to the 1860 military reform in Prussia (see Note 19) and the bill on the taxation of the estates of the higher nobility submitted to the Prussian Diet that year. Initially turned down by the Upper House, the bill was passed in May 1861.

Page me41.621

The debates over the reorganisation of the Prussian army gave rise, in the early 1860s, to a Constitutional conflict between the government and the liberal bourgeois majority in the Diet. The conflict stimulated the popular movement. Clashes with police and troops became more frequent. The Constitutional conflict was not resolved until 1866, when, under the impact of Prussia's victory over Austria, the Prussian bourgeoisie knuckled down before the government and endorsed its entire previous record. — 280

Page me41.621

†291 Agreers Assembly (Vereinbarungsversammlung) was Marx's ironic way of referring to the Prussian National Assembly, which met in May 1848. Convoked to draw up a Constitution, it sought to do this not on the basis of its sovereign and constituent rights but 'by agreement with the Crown' (the principle formulated by the Camphausen-Hansemann government and adopted by the majority of the Assembly). The Crown used the agreement principle as a screen for preparing a coup d'état. On 5 December 1848, the Prussian National Assembly was disbanded. — 281

Page me41.621

†292 During his stay in Berlin in the spring of 1861 (see Note 278) Marx took a series of steps to have his Prussian citizenship restored. The Berlin Police Presidium turned down his application, based on the Supreme decree on amnesty, for the rights of a Prussian subject and suggested that he should rather seek to be naturalised in Prussia. However, his application to this effect was refused by the Berlin Police President, von Zedlitz, in June 1861, and by Prussia's Minister of the Interior, Schwerin, in November (see present edition, Vol. 19). — 282, 305, 579

Page me41.621

†293 In March 1861, Blanqui, who had returned to France after the amnesty of 1859, was arrested on charges of organising a secret society. On 14 June, he was sentenced to four years in prison, despite the absence of incriminating evidence. — 284, 318
Page me41.621
†294 Marx met Simon Bernard on Saturday, 11 May 1861. As follows from Bernard's letter to Marx of 13 May, Marx told Bernard during their conversation that Sophie von Hatzfeldt was willing to lend a sum of money to organise Blanqui's escape. Thanks to Marx's efforts and the campaign he had launched, articles in defence of Blanqui appeared in the German, Italian and American progressive press (see also Note 309). — 284

Page Break me41.622
Page me41.622
†295 This refers to the proceedings instituted on behalf of the Emperor of Austria against Kossuth and Messrs Day and Sons who had manufactured a large amount of Hungarian paper money in England. Applying to the English court, the Austrian government demanded an end to such actions and the destruction of the banknotes produced. On 27 February 1861, the Vice-Chancellor's Court granted the justice of this demand. On 12 June, the Court of Chancery turned down the defendants' appeal and confirmed the initial ruling. — 284
Page me41.622
†296 In September 1860, British Army Captain MacDonald, travelling in Germany, was arrested in Bonn on charges of disobeying the local authorities. He was kept in detention for six days, brought before a court and fined. The British government took advantage of the incident to whip up an anti-Prussia propaganda campaign. It was not until May 1861 that the conflict was resolved. — 284, 354
Page me41.622
†297 This refers to the Parliamentary debate in March 1861 on Alexander Dunlop's proposal for setting up a commission of inquiry into the falsification of diplomatic documents in 1839 by the British Foreign Office, then headed by Palmerston. In 1839 the British Parliament issued a Blue Book on Persia and Afghanistan (Correspondence relating to Persia and Afghanistan) containing, among other documents, a number of letters by A. Burnes, the British representative in Kabul, on the Anglo-Afghan war (1838-42). The letters had been selected and presented by the Foreign Office in such a way as to conceal Britain's provocative role in unleashing the war. Shortly before his death Burnes sent duplicates of his letters to London. Those not included in the Blue Book were published by his family (A. Burnes, Cabool, Being a Personal Narrative of a Journey to and Residence in That City, in the Years 1836, 7 and 8..., London, 1842; J. Burnes, Notes on His Name and Family (Including a Memoir of Sir Alexander Burnes), Edinburgh, 1851). On 19 March 1861 Palmerston, speaking in the House of Commons, refused to discuss the matter as too far back in time and irrelevant. See Marx's article 'The London Times and Lord Palmerston' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 286, 517
Page me41.622
†298 An ironic reference to Lassalle's book Das System der erworbenen Rechte; Dharma is a concept of Indian, particularly Buddhist, religion and philosophy. In religion, it denotes God, the Absolute. In philosophy, it stands for religion, morality, justice, law and order. In Buddhist literature it signifies, above all, Buddha's teaching. — 286

Page me41.622
†299 This refers to the Left wing of the Prussian National Assembly (see Note 291), which consisted of bourgeois radicals and liberals. — 287
Page me41.622
†300 In November and early December 1848 Prussia witnessed a coup d'état which culminated in the establishment of the arch-reactionary Brandenburg-Manteuffel Ministry and the dissolution of the National Assembly. — 287
Page me41.622
†301 Marx means the Prussian National Assembly (see Note 291), one of whose sittings he attended somewhere between 7 and 10 September, during his trip to Berlin and Vienna in late August and early September 1848 with a view to strengthening ties with democratic and workers' organisations. — 288
Page me41.622
†302 The reference is to the Upper and Lower Chambers of the Prussian Diet. — 288

Page Break me41.623
Page me41.623
†303 When the coup d'état was being plotted and carried out in Prussia (see Note 300), the Frankfurt National Assembly undertook to settle the conflict between the Prussian National Assembly and the Crown. With this aim in view, first Bassermann (a liberal) and later Simson and Hergenhahn arrived in Berlin as imperial commissioners. Their mediation benefited the counter-revolutionary forces because it diverted the democrats in Germany from giving effective support to the Prussian National Assembly in its struggle against the Brandenburg-Manteuffel Ministry.
Page me41.623
Marx ironically compares Simson to Samson, the Old Testament hero who slew a thousand Philistines with the jawbone of an ass (Judges, 15:15). — 288
Page me41.623
†304 Marx means the description of Vincke he gave in his Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 250-58). — 289
Page me41.623
†305 Euston Square is in front of Euston Station, London. — 290
Page me41.623
†306 The Elberfeld uprising of workers and petty bourgeoisie broke out on 8 May 1849 and served as a signal for armed struggle in a number of cities in the Rhine Province in defence of the Imperial Constitution. The immediate occasion of the uprising was the attempt of the Prussian government to suppress the revolutionary movement on the Rhine by armed force, destroy the democratic organisations and the press, and disarm the army units which disobeyed its orders and supported the Imperial Constitution. Engels played an active part in the uprising. At a trial held in April and May 1850, most of the participants in the Elberfeld uprising were found guilty and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. See Engels' article 'Elberfeld', (present edition, Vol. 9).
Page me41.623

In June and July 1849, Engels was fighting in the ranks of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army (see Note 212). — 290
Page me41.623
†307 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in Karl Marx, On America and the Civil War. Edited and Translated by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1972. — 291
Page me41.623
†308 See notes 253 and 285. — 291
Page me41.623
†309 This letter to Sophie von Hatzfeldt has not been found. As can be seen from Hatzfeldt's reply, dated 14 June 1861, Marx had requested her assistance in drawing public attention to the harsh treatment of Blanqui in prison, and asked for money to finance the printing of a pamphlet by Louis Watteau on Blanqui's trial (see Note 293 and p. 295 in this volume). Marx also suggested organising meetings and the publication of a series of articles in Germany in connection with the trial. A number of articles on Blanqui appeared in the German and Italian press with the help of the German writer Ludmilla Assing. — 291
Page me41.623
†310 This refers to Marx's work on the second instalment of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, which he started on completing his polemic writing, Herr Vogt (see Note 38). In the period 1861 to 1863 he produced a vast manuscript (200 sheets of print), the second rough draft of Capital. — 292, 315, 319, 323, 333, 352, 370, 380, 384, 401, 402, 404, 411, 426, 433, 435, 460, 461, 473, 484
Page me41.623
†311 In May 1861, in connection with the outbreak of the Civil War in the United States, the Federal Government offered Garibaldi a commanding post in the army of the North. The offer was made through the US Minister to Brussels, who went to see Garibaldi on Caprera Island. Garibaldi replied with a letter expressing warm sympathy for the Unionists, but refused to accept the post in the belief that it was an ordinary internecine war with no bearing on the slavery issue. He said he would be willing to fight on the side of the Northerners if it was to become a war to end slavery. — 293

Page Break me41.624
Page me41.624
†312 Yankees was the nickname given by British soldiers to residents of New England in the eighteenth century. During and after the Civil War (1861-65) it was used to denote the Northerners. — 293, 325, 368, 400, 416, 562
Page me41.624
†313 This letter has not been found. — 293
Page me41.624
†314 The end of this letter has not been found. The available part was first published in English in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, The Civil War in the United States, New York, 1937. — 294
Page me41.624

†315 In the four months between Lincoln's election and his inauguration (on 4 March 1861) the pro-Southern faction in Buchanan's Administration (Secretary of War Floyd, Secretary of the Treasury Cobb and others) used their powers to strengthen the South and prepare the ground for civil war. Troops loyal to the Union were transferred from the South to the Far West and dispersed to different garrisons. Arms and ammunition were shipped to the South and large sums of money sent there. Even before the outbreak of hostilities representatives of the slaveholders, with the connivance of the government, opened negotiations with Britain to obtain financial and military aid (on this see also p. 307). — 295
Page me41.624
†316 In May 1861 four volunteer regiments, consisting mostly of German immigrants, were formed in St. Louis, Missouri. They encircled the Secessionists' military camp outside the city and forced them to surrender, thus preventing them from seizing the arsenal and coming out against the Union arms in hand. — 296
Page me41.624
†317 This refers to the slave states bordering on the North which refused to join the Confederacy: Delaware, Missouri, Maryland and, later, Kentucky. For details see Marx's article 'The Civil War in the United States' (present edition, Vol. 19).
Page me41.624
On the border states see p. 277. — 296
Page me41.624
†318 Marx means Zerffi's Kinkel-inspired articles in defence of MacDonald published in the English press (see Note 296). This aroused acute discontent within the National Association and caused a split in its London branch. — 297, 301
Page me41.624
†319 South Kensington Museum (now Victoria and Albert Museum) included a museum of ornamental and applied art, a national gallery of British art, an art library and a royal college of art. — 297
Page me41.624
†320 This refers to the reviews 'Gatherings from the Press', which were directed against Kinkel's newspaper Hermann. They appeared in June and July 1859 in the weekly Das Volk, in whose publication Marx took a direct part (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 298
Page me41.624
†321 A letter from the Countess von Hatzfeldt to Marx of 14 June 1861 (see also Note 309). — 298
Page me41.624
†322 In connection with Blanqui's prosecution (see Note 293) a correspondence developed between Marx and Blanqui's friend Watteau (Denonville) on how to launch a campaign in Blanqui's defence (see notes 294 and 309). In a letter to Watteau of 18 May 1861, which has not been found, Marx presumably offered

Page Break me41.625
help on behalf of German communists. In his reply (8 June) Watteau wrote that he had shown Marx's letter to Blanqui, who 'was deeply moved by the German proletarians' sympathy'. In the same letter Watteau requested Marx's aid in publishing a pamphlet on Blanqui's prosecution which exposed the unseemly methods of the Bonapartist police and judiciary. As follows from the correspondence between Blanqui and Watteau, and from Marx's letter to Watteau of 10 November 1861 (see this volume, p. 326), Marx sent the latter money for the publication of the pamphlet and took part in discussing plans for freeing Blanqui from detention. He informed Sophie von Hatzfeldt of these plans, and she agreed to provide money for the purpose. — 298

Page me41.625
†323 The Mexican War (1846-48) was caused by the expansionist designs of the US slaveholding planters and big bourgeoisie. As a result of the war, the USA seized nearly half of Mexico's territory, including Texas, Upper California, New Mexico and other areas. — 299
Page me41.625
†324 The Schleswig-Holstein question was prominent in nineteenth-century European diplomacy. The Congress of Vienna (1815) recognised the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein to be possessions of Denmark in personal union with the Danish King. At the same time, Holstein was declared a member of the German Confederation. During the 1848-49 revolution, an anti-Danish national liberation movement developed in the duchies which was, however, defeated.
Page me41.625
At a conference in London attended by representatives of Austria, Britain, Denmark, France, Russia and Sweden, a protocol on the Danish succession was signed on 2 August 1850 which proclaimed the indivisibility of the Danish Crown possessions, including the two duchies. This document formed the basis for the London Protocol of 8 May 1852 on the integrity of the Danish monarchy (see Note 380).
Page me41.625
Denmark's attempts to fully subject the duchies aggravated Danish-Prussian relations and were exploited as a pretext for intervention by Prussia, which regarded the reunification of Schleswig and Holstein with Germany as the first step towards the union of Germany under Prussia's aegis. — 299, 496, 501
Page me41.625
†325 In her letter of 14 June 1861 Sophie von Hatzfeldt touched on the possibility of Engels' return to Germany following the amnesty proclaimed in Prussia (see this volume, pp. 247-49) and in this connection wrote that Ludwig Simon had been officially notified that he would only be allowed to return to Prussia if he petitioned the King for a pardon. — 299
Page me41.625
†326 An allusion to Engels' participation in the Elberfeld and Baden-Palatinate uprisings (see Note 306). — 299
Page me41.625
†327 A gibe at the vulgar economists who maintained that profit was merely an extra charge on the consumer over and above the price. Marx attacks this view in his economic manuscript of 1861-63 and in Volume III of Capital (present edition, vols. 32 and 37). — 300
Page me41.625
†328 Marx means the abortive attempt of Unionist troops under General Francis Edwin Pierce to capture the Confederates' fortifications at Big Bethel near Fort Monroe, Virginia, in the small hours of 10 June 1861. One Unionist column opened fire on another by mistake. Later the Confederates compelled the Unionists to retreat in disarray. — 300, 304

Page me41.625
†329 This refers to the victory of the Northerners, commanded by N.P. Lyon, over the Missouri pro-Secessionist militia led by Governor Jackson at Boonville on 17 June. — 300

Page Break me41.626
Page me41.626
†330 Marx means the victory of the Republican Party in the 1860 elections (see Note 231). — 301
Page me41.626
†331 Marx means the armed struggle in Kansas in 1854-56 between supporters and opponents of slavery (the latter were mostly farmers). It began after the adoption, in May 1854, of An Act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, which let the population of the two Territories decide for themselves whether they wanted slavery or not. Despite a series of successes by the anti-slavery forces, Kansas fell to the slavery party, who had received armed support from the Federal government. However, most of the population continued the struggle and in 1861 won the admission of Kansas to the Union as a free state. The struggle in Kansas was, in effect, the prelude to the US Civil War.
Page me41.626
The Border Ruffians were gangs of pro-slavery thugs brought into Kansas from Missouri during the Kansas war. — 301
Page me41.626
†332 At the Battle of Waterloo, on 18 June 1815, the Anglo-Dutch and Prussian forces, commanded by the Duke of Wellington and Blücher, defeated Napoleon's army. — 301
Page me41.626
†333 By the German communist association and the Frenchmen's associations Marx means the German Workers' Educational Society (see Note 3) and the numerous French refugee societies in London.
Page me41.626
The June insurrection — the uprising of the Paris proletariat of 23-26 June 1848. — 302
Page me41.626
†334 General Winfield Scott's strategy, later known as the Anaconda Plan, called for the encirclement of the rebel states by the Federal Army and Navy and the gradual contraction of the ring until the rebellion was crushed. — 304
Page me41.626
†335 In view of the amnesty of 12 January 1861 (see Note 256) Wilhelm Wolff, in the summer of 1861, applied to the Prussian Embassy in London for a passport to visit Wiesbaden. — 304
Page me41.626
†336 Marx cites these facts from Lassalle's letter of 1 July 1861. — 305, 313
Page me41.626

†337 The Border Slave State Convention, or Washington Peace Conference, was held in February 1861, on Virginia's initiative. Attended by 21 states, with the border states playing the most active part, it was a last, unsuccessful, attempt to resolve peacefully the dispute between the Secessionists and the Union. — 306
Page me41.626
†338 Marx means elections to the US Congress. An extraordinary session of it opened on 4 July 1861. — 306
Page me41.626
†339 Gulf States — the states lying along the Gulf of Mexico (Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas). They formed the core of the Secessionist Confederacy. — 306, 349
Page me41.626
†340 An allusion to Louis Bonaparte's counter-revolutionary coup d'état in France on 2 December 1851. — 307
Page me41.626
†341 The 'poor whites' — the landless free population of the Southern slave states. On their part in the Civil War see Marx's article 'The North American Civil War' (present edition, Vol. 19).
Page me41.626
Zouaves was the name given to French infantry regiments raised in Algeria from the Berber tribe of Zouaves. — 307
Page me41.626
†342 This refers to the Constitution of the Confederate States of America which was adopted by the Congress in Montgomery on 11 March 1861 (see Note 286). — 308

Page Break me41.627
Page me41.627
†343 Marx means Feodor Streit's letter of 2 July 1861, written on behalf of the National Association. — 309
Page me41.627
†344 This refers to the second Great Exhibition (world industrial fair) held in London from May to November 1862. — 310, 353, 364, 365, 380, 384, 408, 414
Page me41.627
†345 When Prince William of Prussia (King of Prussia from 1861) assumed the regency in October 1858, he dismissed the Manteuffel Ministry and entrusted power to moderate liberals. The bourgeois press hailed this 'liberal' course as a 'New Era'. William's actual aim, however, was to consolidate the monarchy and Junkers. — 312, 317
Page me41.627
†346 On 14 July 1861 student Oskar Becker made an abortive attempt on the life of William I, King of Prussia, in Baden-Baden. — 314, 317
Page me41.627
†347 In view of the Decree on Amnesty (see Note 256) Engels' relatives were exploring the possibility of his return to Germany. In reply the police superintendent of Elberfeld stated that Engels had to send in an appropriate application and a certificate of loyalty issued by the Prussian Embassy in London. — 314

Page me41.627
†348 A brief extract from this letter was first published in English in: Marx and Engels, On Literature and Art, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1976. In less abridged form, the letter appeared in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 316
Page me41.627
†349 This refers to one of the basic aesthetic principles of Classicism, the unity of time, place and action in drama. It was formulated in 1674 by the French theorist of Classicism, Nicolas Boileau-Despréaux, in his poem L'art poétique. — 318
Page me41.627
†350 A legacy (bequest) in Roman law was a stipulation by the testator in his will granting a person a certain right or other benefit based on the property bequeathed.
Page me41.627
A legatee was one to whom a legacy was bequeathed. As distinct from the legatee in this restricted sense, the heir under a will is the universal legatee, who assumes the liabilities of the deceased as well as his property and rights. — 318
Page me41.627
†351 The Gürzenich is a reception building erected in Cologne in 1441-52, in the mid-19th century used as a venue for various functions and festivities. — 319
Page me41.627
†352 Marx was Engels' guest in Manchester from the end of August to the middle of September 1861. — 321, 323, 332
Page me41.627
†353 This probably refers to the Report of the Thirtieth Meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science; held at Oxford in June and July 1860, London 1861.
Page me41.627
The British Association for the Advancement of Science was founded in 1831 and still exists. It meets annually and publishes reports on these meetings. The Association's 31st annual meeting was held in Manchester between 4 and 11 September 1861. Marx, who was staying with Engels in Manchester at the time, attended the sittings of the Economic Science and Statistics Section. — 321, 383
Page me41.627
†354 Engels went on holiday to Germany on about 3 October 1861 and stayed with his family in Barmen till the end of the month. — 322, 375
Page me41.627
†355 Marx means, in particular, the articles 'The American Question in England', 'The British Cotton Trade', 'The London Times and Lord Palmerston', and

Page Break me41.628
'The London Times on the Orleans Princes in America' (see present edition, Vol. 19). The other two articles were evidently not published. — 323
Page me41.628
†356 In his letter to Die Presse, which has not been found, Marx inquired about the newspaper's stand on the Cabinet crisis in Austria in the autumn of 1861. — 323

Page me41.628
†357 An editorial introductory note to Marx's article 'The North American Civil War', published in Die Presse on 25 October 1861, said: 'We have received from London a first communication on the North American Civil War from one of the leading German journalists, who knows Anglo-American relations from long years of observation. As events on the other side of the ocean develop, we shall be in a position to present communications, deriving from the same competent pen, which will outline the salient features of the war.' — 323
Page me41.628
†358 Marx refers to the chapter 'Bristlers' in his polemic book, Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17).
Page me41.628
For Bristlers see this volume, p. 71. — 324
Page me41.628
†359 With mass rallies taking place in Warsaw, the Governor-General of the Kingdom of Poland, Count Lambert, on 14 October 1861 introduced martial law. On the night of 15 October many arrests were made, accompanied by clashes between Tsarist troops and members of the population. This was followed by the closure of all Catholic churches in Warsaw.
Page me41.628
In referring to the 'exploits of handsome William' Marx means William I's speech on the occasion of his coronation in Königsberg on 18 October 1861, in which he stressed the divine origin of the sovereignty of the Kings of Prussia. — 325
Page me41.628
†360 Marx means Engels' holiday in Germany (see Note 354). — 325
Page me41.628
†361 This refers to the rifled cannon invented by William Armstrong in 1854 and adopted by the British army in 1859. A try-out in the war against China gave rise to doubts about its resistance to wear and the convenience of its breech, and caused a controversy about its advantages over the Joseph Whitworth gun (see also Engels' article 'On Rifled Cannon', instalments III and IV, present edition Vol. 17). — 325
Page me41.628
†362 This is the only letter of the Marx-Watteau correspondence on the Blanqui case to have been found (see Note 322). The French original is in the collection of the Blanqui papers at the Bibliothéque nationale in Paris.
Page me41.628
The last paragraph of the letter was first published in Roger Garaudy's book, Les sources françaises du socialisme scientifique, Paris, 1948, p. 217. The letter was published in full, except for three obliterated words, in Vol. 30 of the Second Russian Edition of the Works of Marx and Engels in 1963 and in the language of the original in La Pensée, No. 125, Paris, 1966. The three obliterated words, since deciphered with the aid of modern technical facilities, read tentative de sauvetage and are evidence of Marx's involvement in the plans for rescuing Blanqui. The full text of the letter, including these three words, was published by Maurice Paz in La Nouvelle revue socialiste. Politique. Culture, No. 20, 1976.
Page me41.628

In a letter to Marx dated 22 January 1862 Blanqui thanked him for what he was doing in his behalf. — 326
Page me41.628
†363 Watteau's pamphlet failed to appear as no publisher had been found for it. — 326
Page me41.628
†364 An allusion to the financial crisis experienced by Bonapartist France in the autumn of 1861, when the national exchequer was one milliard francs in the

Page Break me41.629
red. On this see Marx's articles 'Monsieur Fould' and 'France's Financial Situation' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 327, 329
Page me41.629
†365 'If you elect democrats...' is a quotation from the speech William I made in Breslau (Wroclaw) in November 1861, on the eve of elections to the Prussian Provincial Diet (see Note 368).
Page me41.629
'Soldiers are the only answer to democrats' ('Gegen Demokraten helfen nur Soldaten') is a quotation from the poem Die fünfte Zunft by the monarchist Wilhelm von Merckel, published as a leaflet in the autumn of 1848. The Prussian reactionary writer Karl Gustav von Griesheim took it as the title of his pamphlet, published anonymously in Berlin in late November 1848. — 328
Page me41.629
†366 The reference is to the detention of the British mail steamer Trent by the Unionist warship San Jacinto on 8 November 1861 and the arrest, aboard the Trent, of James Murray Mason and John Slidell, Confederate emissaries going to Europe on a diplomatic mission. On this see Marx's articles 'The Trent Case', 'The Anglo-American Conflict', 'The News and Its Effect in London' and other relevant items in Vol. 19 of the present edition. — 329, 363, 462
Page me41.629
†367 In April 1857, Bakunin, who had been kept in prison at the Peter and Paul fortress in St Petersburg from 1851, was exiled for life to Siberia. In April 1861 he escaped (via Japan and America) to England, arriving in London in December. — 329
Page me41.629
†368 This refers to the second round of elections to the Lower House (Chamber of Deputies) of the Prussian Diet, held on 6 December 1861. — 329
Page me41.629
†369 Part of this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London, 1934. — 330, 399, 403, 419, 422, 448, 453, 460, 461, 466, 470, 476, 479, 483, 488, 558, 560
Page me41.629
†370 The Corpus juris civilis is the general title of law books that emerged as a result of the codification of Roman law under the Byzantine emperor Justinian I between 528 and 534. These are: Codex constitutionum, Digesta, Institutiones, and Novellae. — 331
Page me41.629

†371 Engels means the victory won by the Party of Progress at the elections to Prussia's Chamber of Deputies in November and December 1861.
Page me41.629
The Party of Progress, formed in June 1861, spoke for the German bourgeoisie. Its slogans were the unification of Germany under the aegis of Prussia, the convocation of an all-German Parliament, and the formation of a strong liberal Ministry responsible to the Chamber of Deputies. Fearing a popular revolution, the Party of Progress gave no support to the basic democratic demands — universal suffrage, freedom of the press, freedom of association and freedom of assembly. — 331, 501
Page me41.629
†372 This letter was first published in English in part in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London, 1934, and in full in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey. 1979. — 332
Page me41.629
†373 In December 1861 Dronke lent Marx £50, repayable on 30 March 1862. — 332, 337
Page me41.629
†374 Sheriff — the chief executive officer of a shire or county, charged with the execution of the laws and the serving of writs, and in some cases having judicial powers. — 334, 338

Page Break me41.630
Page me41.630
†375 This refers to the Trent incident (see Note 366) which was exploited by the textile manufacturers and some members of the Palmerston Cabinet for stepping up the anti-Unionist campaign in Britain. Lord Russell demanded the release of Mason and Slidell within a week's time on pain of a declaration of war by Britain. But other Cabinet members refused to support this line. (See Marx's articles 'Controversy over the Trent Case' and 'Progress of Feeling in England' and other relevant items in Vol. 19 of the present edition.) — 335
Page me41.630
†376 Marx means the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General, the two highest-ranking legal officials in Britain. For their decision on the Trent case see Marx's articles 'The Anglo-American Conflict', 'The News and Its Effect in London' and 'Controversy over the Trent Case' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 335
Page me41.630
†377 Truly British Minister — an ironic allusion to Lord Palmerston based on a passage from Lord Russell's speech in the House of Commons on 20 June 1850. Referring to Palmerston he said: '...so long as we continue the government of this country, I can answer for my noble Friend that he will act not as the Minister of Austria, or as the Minister of Russia, or of France, or of any other country, but as the Minister of England'. — 336
Page me41.630

†378 This refers to the Declaration on the principles of international maritime law adopted by the Congress of Paris on 16 April 1856. It banned privateering and safeguarded merchantmen of neutral states against attack by belligerent powers. The adoption of the Declaration was a diplomatic victory for Russia, which from 1780 had opposed Britain's claims to the right to inspect and seize the ships of neutral states. — 336
Page me41.630
†379 The reference is to the agreement signed by Russia, Britain and the Netherlands in London on 19 May 1815 on defraying Russia's expenses incurred in driving out Napoleon's army from the Dutch and Belgian provinces. The governments of Britain and the Netherlands undertook to pay in compensation part of Russia's debts to the Dutch bankers Hope & Co., and the interest on that debt as of 1 January 1816. The agreement stipulated that payments would be suspended if the Belgian provinces seceded from the Netherlands. After the revolution of 1830, when an independent Belgian state was formed, the Netherlands government stopped the payments. On behalf of the British government, Palmerston signed a new agreement with Russia on 16 November 1831 confirming Britain's financial obligations. — 337
Page me41.630
†380 Under the London Protocol of 8 May 1852 on the integrity of the Danish monarchy, signed by Austria, Britain, Denmark, France, Prussia, Russia and Sweden, the Emperor of Russia, being a descendant of Duke Charles Peter Ulrich of Holstein-Gottorp, who had reigned in Russia as Peter III, was one of the lawful claimants to the Danish throne, who waived their rights in favour of Duke Christian of Glücksburg. This provided an opportunity for the Tsar to claim the Danish Crown in the event of the extinction of the Glücksburg dynasty. — 337, 497, 543
Page me41.630
†381 This refers to a meeting held by the Urquhartites on 27 January 1862 in connection with the impending Anglo-French intervention against the Union in the US Civil War. Marx did not attend. — 339
Page me41.630
†382 Marx probably means the lecture he was to give in the German Workers' Educational Society in London at Weber's request, expressed in a letter of 10 December 1861, on the views of the German vulgar economist Wirth and the stand advocated by the latter's newspaper, Der Arbeitgeber, which proclaimed the community of interests of labour and capital. — 339

Page Break me41.631
Page me41.631
†383 This letter was written in reply to one from Becker of 13 February 1862 requesting Marx to organise a subscription in London for the publication of Becker's book Wie und Wann and offering to translate into French a section in Marx's Herr Vogt which had evoked particular interest in Switzerland. Part of the present letter was first published in English in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 341
Page me41.631

†384 In September 1861 after a six-month interval, Marx resumed for a short time his contributions to the New-York Daily Tribune. — 341, 344
Page me41.631
†385 Engels means the cotton crisis produced by the interruption in the supply of American cotton during the US Civil War (1861-65) as a result of the blockade of the southern ports by the Union's navy. The cotton shortage came on the eve of, and interlocked with, a production glut. — 344, 347, 394, 413
Page me41.631
†386 At the time, Engels was hiring lodgings for Mary and Lizzy Burns at 252 Hyde Road, Ardwick. He kept his own lodgings at 6 Thorncliffe Grove until 1864. — 344, 427
Page me41.631
†387 On 7 March Engels wrote the first part of the article requested by Marx, and on 18 March probably the second part (see p. 351). However, the Tribune did not publish this article. Engels made use of the first part for his article 'The War in America' (see present edition, Vol. 18) published in The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire on 14 March 1862. Marx translated the text intended for the Tribune into German, added more recent data and sent the text to Die Presse, which published it on 26 and 27 March 1862 (see 'The American Civil War', present edition, Vol. 19). — 345, 346
Page me41.631
†388 In October 1861 Frémont was dismissed from his post of commander of the army in Missouri for issuing a proclamation granting freedom to the slaves of rebels. For details see Marx's article 'The Dismissal of Frémont' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 345

Page me41.631
†389 This refers to Russia's abortive attempt in 1861 to establish a naval station on Tsushima island off the coast of Japan. Marx must have drawn his data from the editorial 'Russian Progress in Asia' in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6167, 30 January 1862, which gave an inaccurate and tendentious account of the affair. — 345
Page me41.631
†390 Engels means the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson on the Tennessee and the Cumberland by the Federals under Grant in February 1862. For details see the article 'The American Civil War' by Marx and Engels (present edition, Vol. 19). There are two inaccuracies in Engels' letter here. In the fighting referred to, the Southern troops were commanded, not by J.E. Johnston, who had won the battle of Bull Run, but by A.S. Johnston. Moreover, the latter had not been taken prisoner, as reported in The Times of 5 March 1862, which Engels read, but had withdrawn. The Times had given Johnston's name without his initials, and this misled Engels.
Page me41.631
The battle fought on the Bull Run river near Manassas, Virginia, on 21 July 1861 was the first major engagement of the US Civil War. The Federal army was defeated by the Secessionist forces. — 346
Page me41.631
†391 Gold was discovered in California and Australia in 1848 and 1851 respectively. The result was the 'gold rush', the mass immigration of would-be prospectors from Europe and America. — 348
Page me41.631

†392 This refers to the triumph of the Free Trade principles in Britain in the mid-19th century. The Free Traders, members of the industrial bourgeoisie, advocated laissez-faire, the lifting of protectionist customs duties, because Britain, having completed its industrial revolution and established itself as the leading industrial power, could afford to compete freely against other countries in the world market. — 349

Page Break me41.632

Page me41.632

†393 Britain's ruling quarters carefully concealed their pro-Southern stand during the war, since public opinion supported the Northerners. On 13 May 1861 the government made public Her Majesty's Proclamation of Neutrality which, by treating the South as a belligerent, marked the first step towards recognition of the Confederacy. It gave the rebels diplomatic, financial and military aid. In the Trent incident (see Note 375) it openly sided with the South. — 349

Page me41.632

†394 On 17 July 1861 the Mexican Congress suspended all payments on foreign debts for two years, which was taken by Britain, France and Spain as a pretext for intervention. To avoid war, the Mexican government, headed by Benito Pablo Juárez, reversed the decision in November 1861 and agreed to meet the claims of the three powers. — 349

Page me41.632

†395 In a letter dated 28 March 1862 Dana requested Marx to stop sending articles for the Tribune on the grounds that American domestic affairs left no space in the paper for reports from London. — 353

Page me41.632

†396 The battle mentioned by Marx took place on 6 and 7 April 1862. On the 6th, the Southern forces, commanded by Beauregard, defeated Grant's army at Pittsburg Landing (northeast of Corinth), but on the 7th, following the arrival of General Buell's forces, the Northerners counter-attacked and threw the Southerners back to Corinth. Engels probably wrote no article on the fighting at Corinth, but he gave an analysis of it in his letter to Marx of 5 May 1862 (see this volume, pp. 359-60). — 353, 359

Page me41.632

†397 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester from 30 March to 25 April 1862. — 354

Page me41.632

†398 While Marx was in Manchester, Engels gave him a bill for £50 to be drawn on Borkheim. — 354, 380, 382

Page me41.632

†399 Marx is relating the story of the publication of Beta's (Bettziech's) laudatory article on Kinkel headed 'Ein Nichtamnestirter'. It appeared in the journal Die Gartenlaube, No. 2, 1862, pp. 21-24, and No. 3, pp. 38-41. Marx got the details from a letter by K.W. Eichhoff dated 26 April 1862. — 355

Page me41.632

†400 A short extract from this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx, On America and the Civil War. Edited and Translated by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1972. In abridged form, the letter appeared in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 355

Page me41.632
†401 In October 1860 Johann Philipp Becker came to Italy with a view to raising a Swiss-German volunteer detachment to help Garibaldi. Lassalle, who was going to visit Italy, asked Marx for a letter of recommendation to Garibaldi, Mazzini or one of their associates. Marx gave him a message for Becker, which Lassalle did not use because he heard negative rumours about Becker in Italy. These were being spread by pro-Bonapartist refugees in Italy with whom Becker had refused to collaborate. — 356
Page me41.632
†402 Marx presumably means his article 'A Traitor in Circassia' (present edition, Vol. 15) exposing the secret police agent Bangya, with whom Türr was closely associated. — 356

Page Break me41.633
Page me41.633
†403 In June and July 1849 the Baden-Palatinate revolutionary army was fighting against the Prussian forces in Baden. Becker, who commanded a corps of the people's militia, covered the retreat of the insurgents' main forces. For details see Engels' The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution and 'Johann Philipp Becker' (present edition, vols. 10 and 27). — 356
Page me41.633
†404 This refers to attempts by Britain's ruling classes to stage mass demonstrations, involving the working class, to influence public opinion in favour of Britain's intervention in the US Civil War on the side of the slave states. See Marx's articles 'English Public Opinion' and 'A London Workers' Meeting' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 358
Page me41.633
†405 In March 1862 Marx finally ceased to contribute to the New-York Daily Tribune (see also Note 395). — 359, 389
Page me41.633
†406 The battles mentioned by Engels were fought during the Napoleonic wars (Preussisch Eylau, 1807; Wagram, 1809; Borodino, 1812; Lützen, 1813, and Bautzen, 1813) and the Austro-Italo-French war of 1859 (Magenta and Solferino). — 359
Page me41.633
†407 The data and analysis of hostilities contained in this letter were used in Marx's article 'The English Press and the Fall of New Orleans' and 'The Situation in the American Theatre of War' by Marx and Engels (present edition, Vol. 19). — 360
Page me41.633
†408 The spring of 1862 saw an aggravation of the Constitutional conflict between Crown and Diet in Prussia (see Note 290). The liberal majority (mostly members of the Party of Progress) in the Chamber of Deputies refused to endorse the budget as presented and demanded that it be concretised to prevent the use for military purposes of funds which came under other headings. In the face of this opposition, the King disbanded the Diet on 11 March. The 'New Era' Ministers resigned (see also Note 345). At the new elections, held on 28 April and 6 May, the Party of Progress again carried the day. The military reform bill was rejected once more. — 361, 366
Page me41.633

†409 On 15 April 1862 Schily sent Marx a letter from Paris including the material on the differences existing among the Hungarian refugee leaders. — 362
Page me41.633
†410 The Palais Royal in Paris was the residence of Prince Napoleon (Plon-Plon) — 362
Page me41.633
†411 In December 1861 Britain, France and Spain launched an armed intervention in Mexico aimed at overthrowing the progressive Juárez government and turning Mexico into a colony. However, serious differences soon developed between the three powers as a result of which Britain and Spain withdrew their forces in April 1862. The French command refused to negotiate with the Mexican government and opened hostilities on 19 April. In the second half of the year, more French forces were sent to Mexico.
Page me41.633
For the Bonapartist ruling circles' fraudulent Mexican loan, see Marx's article 'An International Affaire Mirés' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 363, 462
Page me41.633
†412 Backwoodsmen was the name given to early colonists in North America, people settling in remote uninhabited areas. In a figurative sense, backwoodsmen means narrow-minded provincials. — 364
Page me41.633
†413 Marx presumably means Engels' letter of 5 May 1862 (see this volume, p. 361). — 365

Page Break me41.634
Page me41.634
†414 Engels means the conciliatory policy of the Prussian National Assembly, which sought to accomplish the tasks of the 1848 revolution by purely parliamentary methods, without enlisting the support of the masses. — 366
Page me41.634
†415 In 1848, Rudolf Schramm was a deputy to the Prussian National Assembly from the constituency of Striegau (Strzegom). Marx and Engels described his parliamentary activity in the pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile (present edition, Vol. 11). — 366
Page me41.634
†416 New Orleans was surrendered by the Southerners on 29 April 1862, shortly after the fall of the forts protecting the approaches to the city from the Mississippi. The Northern troops entered New Orleans on 1 May. The capture of the city, an important political and military centre of the Confederacy, was a major success for the Unionist army.
Page me41.634
The analysis of the fighting given by Engels in this letter was used by Marx in the article 'The Situation in the American Theatre of War' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 366
Page me41.634
†417 This refers to the battles fought at Smolensk, 16 to 18 August, and Borodino, 7 September 1812 in the course of Russia's liberation war against aggression by Napoleonic France. — 367

Page me41.634
†418 White trash was the contemptuous name with which slaveowning planters dubbed the poor whites in the Southern states. — 367, 416
Page me41.634
†419 On 14 January 1858 the Italian patriot Felice Orsini made an abortive attempt on the life of Napoleon III and was executed in March 1858. — 369
Page me41.634
†420 The Merrimack, the rebels' first armoured vessel, destroyed several Unionist warships in March 1862. To prevent her falling into the hands of the Northerners, she was blown up by the Confederates on 11 May 1862, after they had evacuated the Norfolk naval base in Virginia. — 369
Page me41.634
†421 The Coercion Bills, passed by the British Parliament in 1833 and 1847, aimed at suppressing the revolutionary movement in Ireland. They introduced a state of emergency throughout Ireland and gave extraordinary powers to the British authorities. — 369
Page me41.634
†422 In 1862 large amounts of paper money ('greenbacks') were issued in the USA to cover the costs of the Civil War. This gradually led to inflation. — 370, 419
Page me41.634
†423 The Morrill Tariff — the protectionist tariff sponsored by the Republican Justin Smith Morrill. Passed by the House of Representatives in May 1860, it became law on 2 March 1861, after being approved by the Senate. It raised customs duties considerably. — 370
Page me41.634
†424 In April 1862 the British and Spanish troops were withdrawn from Mexico following the Palmerston government's refusal to continue to collaborate with France in the armed intervention there (see also Note 411). — 370
Page me41.634
†425 This refers to Mary and Lizzy Burns. Engels was renting lodgings in Hyde Road (see Note 386) under the name of Frederick Boardman. Mary Burns figured as Mary Boardman. — 370
Page me41.634
†426 Engels means the advance of the Northern troops under General Halleck on Corinth, Mississippi, in April and May 1862. Its very slow progress gave rise to press allegations by pro-Secessionist correspondents (including James Spence) about Halleck's army finding itself in dire straits. — 371

Page Break me41.635
Page me41.635
†427 Embrassez-vous et que cela finisse! (Embrace and have done with it!) is an allusion to an episode in the French Revolution: on 7 July 1792 Lamourette, a deputy to the Legislative Assembly, proposed ending all political strife by a fraternal kiss. Following his appeal, members of antagonistic groupings embraced each other. However, as was to be expected, this artificial attempt at a reconciliation proved a failure. The 'fraternal kiss' was forgotten the next day.
Page me41.635

Engels uses the dictum ironically, in reference to the debates in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies, which was elected on 6 May 1862 (see Note 408) and first met on 19 May. — 373
Page me41.635
†428 The Hesse-Cassel affair — the long conflict in Hesse-Cassel (1850-62) between Elector Ludwig III's reactionary government and the Chamber of Deputies, which demanded the reintroduction of the moderate liberal Constitution of 1831. The liberal party was supported by Prussia, which feared a strengthening of Austria in the struggle for hegemony in Germany. However, Prussia's attempts to influence the Hesse-Cassel government with a view to having the Constitution reintroduced were foiled by Ludwig III. The Prussian General Willisen sent to Hesse-Cassel in May 1862 with a message from William I was given an insulting reception. The Constitution of 1831 was reintroduced at the end of June 1862, after Prussia had presented Ludwig III with an ultimatum and mobilised two army corps. — 373
Page me41.635
†429 The Schiller-Institute was set up in Manchester in November 1859 in connection with the centenary of Friedrich Schiller's birth. Its founders intended it as a cultural and social centre for Manchester's German community. Initially, Engels took almost no part in the Institute's activities, but in January 1864 he became a member of its Directorate, and eventually its chairman. — 374, 524
Page me41.635
†430 Engels presumably means his translation of the old Danish song Herr Jon, contained in the collection Et Hundrede udvalde Danske Viser, om allehaande moerkelige Krigs-Bedrivt og anden selsom Eventyr, som sig her udi Riget ved gamle Kaemper, navnkundige Konger, og ellers fornemme Personer begivet haver, af Arilds Tid til denne naervaerende Dag..., published by P. Syv.
Page me41.635
The text of Engels' translation follows:

Herr Lave, der ritt zum Inselstrand
Zu frein um des schönsten Mädchens Hand.
Ich reite mit, sagte Jon.

Herr Lave rode to the island strand
To sue for the loveliest maiden's hand.
I'll ride with you, said Jon.

Er freite die Braut und führt' sie nach Haus,
Ritter und Knappen kamen heraus.
Hier reite ich, sagte Jon.

He took her home, his new-won bride,
The knights and squires all came outside.
I'm coming too, said Jon.

Sie setzten die Braut auf den bräutlichen Thron,
Den Herren liess brav einschenken
Herr Jon.
Trinkt drauf los, sagte Jon.

They sat the bride on the bridal throne,
The cups were filled by request of Herr Jon.
Now drink away, said Jon.

Sie führten die Braut zum Brautbett herfür,
Sie vergassen den Schnürleib zu lösen ihr.
Will's schon lösen, sagte Jon.

They led the bride to the bridal chamber,
But to loosen her stays did not remember.
I'll loosen them, said Jon.

Page Break me41.636

Herr Jon der schloss so rasch die Tür!
Jetzt sagt Herrn Lave gut' Nacht von mir.
Ich liege hier, sagte Jon.

Herr Jon locked upright speedily!
Now bid Herr Lave goodnight for me.
I'll lie down here, said Jon.

Kam die Botschaft zu Herrn Lave hinein:
Herr Jon schläft bei der jungen Braut dein.
Das tu ich, sagte Jon.

Then with the news to Herr Lave they hied:
Herr Jon is sleeping beside your bride.
I am indeed, said Jon.

Herr Lave pocht ans Kämmerlein:
Steht auf Herr Jon und lasst uns ein.
Bleibt draussen, sagte Jon.

Outside, Herr Lave began to knock!
Get up, Herr Jon, unfasten the lock.
You stay out there, said Jon.

Er stiess mit Schild und Speer an die Tür:
Steht auf Herr Jon und kommt herfür.
Da könnt Ihr warten, sagte Jon.

He banged on the door with shield and spear.
Get up, Herr Jon, and come out here.
No, you must wait, said Jon.

Und kann meine Braut nicht sein ungeschoren,
So trag ich das zu des Königs Ohren.
Jawohl, sagte Jon.

If my bride must be molested so,
Then to the King's ear it must go.
Of course it must, said Jon.

Früh am Morgen, da war es Tag,
Herr Lave bringt zum König die Klag.
Ich will mit, sagte Jon.

In the early morning, at break of day,
Herr Lave set out for His Majesty.
I'm coming too, said Jon.

Ich hatte gefreit eine Jungfrau mir,
Jetzt hat Jon geschlafen bei ihr.
Das tat ich, sagte Jon.

I married myself a fair young bride,
All night Herr Jon has lain by her side.
I have indeed, said Jon.

Und liebt Ihr beide die Jungfrau sosehr,

If you both love the maiden fair,
Then you must break a spear for her.

So müsst Ihr brechen um sie einen Speer.
Ist mir recht, sagte Jon.

I'll go with that, said Jon.

Als die Sonn' am Morgen tat aufgehen,
Da kamen die Ritter den Kampf anzusehen.
Hier bin ich, sagte Jon.

Later that day, when the sun was bright,
The knights came out to watch the fight.
Well, here I am, said Jon.

Den ersten Gang den ritten sie,
Herrn Jon's Ross fiel nieder auf die Knie.
Hilf jetzt Gott, sagte Jon.

The first pass of the joust rode they,
Herr Jon's horse knelt as if to pray.
God, help me now, said Jon.

Page Break me41.637

Zum zweiten Gang anrannten die Pferd',
Herr Lave fiel nieder auf die Erd'.
Da liegt er, sagte Jon.

The horses charged in the second pass,
Herr Lave fell down upon the grass.
Now there he lies, said Jon.

Herr Jon nach seinem Hofe geht,
Draussen sein Mädchen wartend steht.
Du bist mein, sagte Jon.

Back to his castle Herr Jon did ride,
His maid was waiting for him outside.
Now you are mine, said Jon.

Jetzt hat Herr Jon verwunden seinen Harm,
Jetzt schläft er in seines Mädchens Arm,
Jetzt hab' ich sie, sagte Jon.

Herr Jon has righted a grievous wrong,
He sleeps in his maid's arms all night long.
I have her now, said Jon.

(Translated by Alex Miller) — 375.
Page me41.637
†431 The Schwabenspiegel is a code of common law compiled in Swabia in the 13th century, a period of feudal fragmentation in Germany. Julian Schmidt, in his book, mistakenly describes it as a monument of Swabian poetry.
Page me41.637
Julian Schmidt erroneously listed among the 'seven wise men' of Greece (Solon, Bias, Pittacus, Cleobul, Chilon, Myson and Thales, all of whom lived in the 7th-6th centuries B.C.) Pythagoras, Heraclitus, Democritus and other later philosophers who derived all natural phenomena from a single source.
Page me41.637
Die sieben Schwaben (The Seven Swabians) is a German comic folk story. — 377
Page me41.637

†432 An allusion to the fact that Julian Schmidt's book was a success with the German liberal bourgeoisie, in particular the supporters of Wilhelm Grabow, president of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. — 377
Page me41.637
†433 The Epicureans, Stoics and Sceptics were the principal Greek philosophical schools of the Hellenistic period. — 377
Page me41.637
†434 In the summer of 1862 Marx was engaged in studies on rent of land (see Notebooks X and XI of his Economic Manuscript of 1861-63). — 377, 380, 394
Page me41.637
†435 Part of this letter was first published in English in: Marx and Engels Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. It first appeared in English in full, minus the postscript, in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 380
Page me41.637
†436 Marx means the table of reproduction and circulation of social capital contained in Quesnay's Analyse du tableau économique. Marx used the edition, Physiocrates... Avec une introduction sur la doctrine des Physiocrates, des commentaires et des notices historiques, par M. Eugéne Daire. Premiére partie. Paris, 1846. He gives a detailed analysis of the table in Notebook X of his Economic Manuscript of 1861-63 (present edition, Vol. 31) and in his study on the subject incorporated in Engels' Anti-Dühring (Ch. X, Part II, present edition, Vol. 25). — 381

Page Break me41.638
Page me41.638
†437 In 1862, following the Order of Amnesty (see Note 256), Wilhelm Wolff made an unsuccessful attempt to restore his Prussian citizenship. It was probably with this end in view that he went on a second trip to Germany in the summer of that year (he made the first in the summer of 1861). — 383
Page me41.638
†438 An allusion to money matters between Marx and Freiligrath mediated by Engels. — 384
Page me41.638
†439 The ideas Engels expressed here were developed by Marx in the article 'A Criticism of American Affairs', published in Die Presse on 9 August 1862 (present edition, Vol. 19). — 386
Page me41.638
†440 The Territories were divisions of the USA that had not yet been granted full state rights. Engels may be referring to the 'old Northwest', a Territory formed by the Congress in 1787. By the time of the Civil War, the states of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio and Minnesota (the last named partly outside its boundary) had been formed there. — 388, 420
Page me41.638

†441 The letter was published in English for the first time in part in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, The Civil War in the United States, New York, 1937, and in full in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and Translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 388
Page me41.638
†442 The Quadrilateral was the stronghold of Northern Italy, formed by the fortresses of Verona, Legnago, Mantua and Peschiera. — 389
Page me41.638
†443 Blue Books — periodically published collections of documents of the British Parliament and Foreign Office. They have been appearing since the seventeenth century. — 391
Page me41.638
†444 In his Herr Julian Schmidt der Literarhistoriker Lassalle gives a critical analysis of Schmidt's Geschichte der deutschen Literatur in the form of remarks and commentaries to the text by the compositor and his wife. — 391
Page me41.638
†445 Engels means Wilhelm Wolff's return from Germany (see Note 437). — 391
Page me41.638
†446 Engels is referring to the pamphlets of the German idealist philosopher Bruno Bauer Rußland und das Germanenthum, Charlottenburg, 1853; Rußland und England, Charlottenburg, 1854; Die jetzige Stellung Rußlands, Charlottenburg, 1854, and others. Marx attacks Bauer's foreign-policy views in his unfinished work 'Bruno Bauer's Pamphlets on the Collision with Russia' (present edition, Vol. 15). — 393
Page me41.638
†447 First published in English in part in the Labour Monthly, London, 1923, Vol. 5, No. 4, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 394
Page me41.638
†448 In this letter Marx uses the term cost price (Kostpreis, Kostenpreis) in the sense of price of production (c+v+average profit). — 396
Page me41.638
†449 New England — a highly industrialised region in the northeast of the USA (comprising the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut). It was the centre of the Abolitionist movement. — 400, 416

Page Break me41.639
Page me41.639
†450 To cope with Britain's increased national debt, William Pitt's government set up in 1786 a redemption fund, to finance which it raised existing and introduced new, indirect taxes.
Page me41.639
The Tax Bill, passed in the USA in April 1862, was shelved. To cover its military expenditure the Federal government had recourse to the emission of paper money (see Note 422). — 400, 421
Page me41.639

†451 The physiocrats were a school of bourgeois political economy that emerged in France in the 1750s. They held Nature to be the only source of wealth, and agriculture the only sphere of the economy where value was created. Advocates of large-scale capitalist farming, they showed the moribund nature of the feudal economy, thus contributing to the ideological preparation of the bourgeois revolution in France. Marx gave a critical analysis of the physiocrats' views in Notebook VI of his Economic Manuscript of 1861-63 (present edition, Vol. 31). — 403
Page me41.639
†452 Engels penned this letter on the back of Borkheim's letter to him of 12 August 1862. Borkheim had written to say that Lassalle was away from Berlin and therefore no acceptance could be obtained for a bill issued by Engels. — 405
Page me41.639
†453 On 27 August 1862 the board of the Great Exhibition in London issued Marx, as a correspondent of Die Presse, with a free pass to the Exhibition for its duration. — 408
Page me41.639
†454 This letter has not been found. — 410
Page me41.639
†455 Marx probably means Borkheim's letter to Engels of 12 August 1862 (see Note 452). — 410
Page me41.639
†456 Marx discusses the use of the replacement fund in the function of accumulation fund in Notebook XIII of his Economic Manuscript of 1861-63 (present edition, Vol. 32). — 412
Page me41.639
†457 Engels travelled in Germany from 12 to 29 September 1862. After a journey along the Mosel and Rhine and a trip to Thuringia, he stayed with his relatives in Barmen and Engelskirchen. — 414, 417, 418
Page me41.639
†458 This refers to the Federals' ill-starred offensive on Richmond in August 1862. At the second battle of Bull Run (for the first see Note 390) near Manassas (southwest of Washington) on 29 and 30 August 1862, their forces, commanded by General Pope, suffered a severe defeat and had to retreat towards Washington. To prevent the fall of the capital, the Federal command had to bring in reinforcements. — 414, 457
Page me41.639
†459 In August 1862 the War Department in Washington ordered that henceforth only officers of the regular army could be promoted to Brigadier General or Major General. Volunteer officers could only be raised to those ranks for distinction in action and provided they had displayed the appropriate military qualifications. — 415
Page me41.639
†460 From 28 August to 7 September 1862 Marx was in Zalt-Bommel and Trier to settle his financial affairs. — 415, 420, 425
Page me41.639
†461 On 29 August 1862, during his march on Rome, Garibaldi was seriously wounded and taken prisoner in a clash with Royal troops at Astromonte. The capture of Italy's national hero evoked an outcry in many countries, Britain included. On this see Marx's article 'A Meeting for Garibaldi' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 417

Page Break me41.640
Page me41.640
†462 Marx refers to his article 'A Note on the Amnesty' (see present edition, Vol. 19). Based on data sent to him by Wilhelm Wolff from Manchester in a letter written between 10 and 12 September 1862, it revealed the demagogic nature of the 1861 political amnesty in Prussia (see Note 256) and was rather widely read in Germany. The article appeared in the Barmer Zeitung and was reprinted in the Niederrheinische Volks-Zeitung and the Märkische Volks-Zeitung. — 417
Page me41.640
†463 On 23 September 1862, at the height of the Constitutional crisis (see Note 408), Bismarck was appointed Prime Minister of Prussia. This move signalled the government's resolve to go ahead with the planned military reform, despite the refusal of the Chamber of Deputies to provide the funds for it. — 418
Page me41.640
†464 This refers to the Constitution adopted by the Frankfurt National Assembly on 28 March 1849 (it was rejected by the King of Prussia and other German monarchs). On 28 September 1862, about 200 deputies to the diets of various German states, meeting in Weimar, urged the convocation of an all-German Parliament with a view to establishing, in keeping with that Constitution, a united federal all-German state, its members enjoying autonomy in internal affairs. — 418
Page me41.640
†465 On 21 March 1848, King Frederick William IV of Prussia declared that he was ready, for the salvation of Germany, to 'assume the leadership of the whole nation'. Hence the phrase 'Prussian leadership', which won currency as a euphemism for Prussia's striving to unite the country under its supremacy. — 419
Page me41.640
†466 On 12 April 1862 Lassalle made a speech at a meeting of handicraftsmen in Oranienburg, a suburb of Berlin. It was published as a pamphlet under the heading Ueber den besondern Zusammenhang der gegenwärtigen Geschichtsperiode mit der Idee des Arbeiterstandes. The pamphlet was confiscated and legal proceedings instituted against Lassalle. On the second publication of this speech see Note 498. — 420, 480
Page me41.640
†467 On 4 September 1862 the Confederates launched an offensive in Maryland which ended in their defeat at Antietam Creek on 17 September. For details see Marx's articles 'Comments on the North American Events' and 'The Situation in North America' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 420
Page me41.640
†468 Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation of 22 September 1862 declared all Black slaves in the rebellion-ridden states free as of 1 January 1863 and granted them the right to enrol in the army and navy. But as the freed Blacks were given no land, they continued to be exploited by their former masters, the rich planters, who had retained their dominant position in the South. Nor did the emancipation end racial discrimination.
Page me41.640
The Confederate forces that invaded Kentucky on 12 September 1862 were defeated by the Unionists at Parryville on 8 October. — 420, 428, 440

Page me41.640
†469 Marx means the chronic financial crisis in Austria that set in in 1848. It led to an enormous growth of the national debt, the massive emission of paper money and depreciation of currency. On this see Marx's article 'Highly Important from Vienna' (present edition, Vol. 16).
Page me41.640
On the financial measures of the US government see Note 422. — 420
Page me41.640
†470 To raise funds for military needs the Lincoln Administration paid bankers extending it loans in bullion an annual interest of 12 per cent instead of the usual 5. According to The Times, in October 1862, the interest even rose to 29 per cent. — 421

Page Break me41.641
Page me41.641
†471 Marx means a series of revolutionary-democratic measures carried out by the Lincoln Administration from mid-1862 onwards. These included, besides the Emancipation Proclamation (see Note 468), the Homestead Act of 20 May 1862 which, by distributing public lands without compensation to everyone wishing to cultivate it, provided a democratic solution to the agrarian problem. Of great importance were also the purge of the army and administration of traitors, and the Act on the confiscation of rebels' property. These and other measures ensured the victory of the North in the Civil War. — 421
Page me41.641
†472 This refers to the State and Congressional elections held in October and November 1862, which brought substantial losses for the Republicans as compared with previous elections, and victory for the Democrats in a number of states. For details see Marx's article 'The Election Results in the Northern States' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 423
Page me41.641
†473 In the elections of 4 November 1862 the New York State governorship went to the Democrat Horatio Seymour. Democrats also won the majority of Congress seats in New York. — 428
Page me41.641
†474 West Point, near New York, is the site of a military academy. Founded in 1802, it was the United States' only higher military educational establishment in the mid-19th century. Its graduates fought both in the Unionist and in the Confederate army. McClellan, too, studied at West Point. On this see Marx's article 'American Affairs' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 428
Page me41.641
†475 Engels evidently means the wave of dismissals, started on 23 October 1862, of Prussian officials who had supported the opposition in the Provincial Diet during the Constitutional conflict in Germany (see notes 408 and 463). — 428
Page me41.641

†476 At the battle of Corinth, Mississippi, fought on 3 and 4 October 1862, the Unionists, commanded by General Rosecrans, defeated the Confederates, led by generals Van Dorn, Price and Lovell. — 429
Page me41.641
†477 Marx uses the word Sonderbund (separate union), which may be an allusion to the Swiss Sonderbund, the separatist union formed in 1843 by Switzerland's seven Catholic, economically backward cantons to resist progressive bourgeois reforms in the country. The decree of the Swiss Diet of July 1847 on the dissolution of the Sonderbund served as a pretext for the latter to open hostilities against the other cantons early in November. On 23 November 1847 the Sonderbund army was defeated by the federal forces.
Page me41.641
Marx developed the ideas contained in this letter in his article 'Symptoms of Disintegration in the Southern Confederacy' (present edition, Vol. 19). — 430
Page me41.641
†478 Marx means the returns of the autumn elections in the Northern States (see notes 472 and 473). — 430
Page me41.641
†479 This refers to the suppression by General Napoleon Bonaparte of a royalist mutiny against the Thermidorian Convention in Paris on 4 and 5 October (12 and 13 Vendémiaire) 1795. — 430
Page me41.641
†480 A Presidential election was due in November 1864. The 38th Congress elected in the autumn of 1862 and first convened in December 1863 (see notes 472 and 473) was to meet for its 1864 autumn session in December, after the Presidential election. — 430

Page Break me41.642
Page me41.642
†481 On 30 October 1862 the French government sent a message to Britain and Russia calling for joint action by the three powers to impose a ceasefire in the USA, lift the blockade and open the Southern ports to European trade. On 8 November Russia, and later Britain, rejected Napoleon III's proposal to interfere in US home affairs. — 430
Page me41.642
†482 Calling for the unification of Germany under the aegis of Prussia, the Party of Progress (see Note 371) was advocating a Little Germany (see Note 24). — 431
Page me41.642
†483 This refers to French armed intervention in Mexico (see Note 411).
Page me41.642
By crapauds (French: toads; figuratively, nonentities) Marx means the Bonapartist generals. — 431
Page me41.642
†484 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: Karl Marx, On America and the Civil War, New York, 1972.
Page me41.642
From 1858, Marx had had serious differences with Freiligrath over the Vogt affair (see Note 4), the attitude to Kinkel and other matters. In the spring of 1862, following Freiligrath's breach with Kinkel, who had joined the National Association (see Note 24), relations between Marx and Freiligrath began returning to normal. — 432

Page me41.642
†485 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester and then with Eichhoff in Liverpool approximately from 5 to 13 December 1862. — 432, 442
Page me41.642
†486 This refers to a letter by Ludwig Kugelmann to Freiligrath of 21 November 1862 with inquiry about the progress of Marx's economic studies. In forwarding the letter to Marx on 3 December, Freiligrath called it 'paroles d'un croyant' (an allusion to F. de Lamennais' book Paroles d'un Croyant, published in Paris in 1834). Marx's reply to it (see Note 488) marked the beginning of his correspondence and friendship with Kugelmann. — 432, 435
Page me41.642
†487 The Manichaeans were adherents of a religion that originated in the Middle East in the 3rd century A.D. In colloquial German, Manichäer also means an implacable creditor (by analogy with the phrase mahnender Gläubiger — dunning creditor). — 432
Page me41.642
†488 This letter opened the Marx-Kugelmann correspondence, which continued until 1874. In 1902 Marx's letters to Kugelmann dealing with the basic problems of the international working-class movement and Marxist theory were published by Karl Kautsky in the journal Die Neue Zeit.
Page me41.642
The English translation of this letter first appeared in: Karl Marx, Letters to Dr. Kugelmann, Co-operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the USSR, Moscow-Leningrad, 1934. — 435
Page me41.642
†489 This refers to the abortive offensive of the Union army under Burnside on the Confederates' strongly fortified positions near Fredericksburg, on the southern bank of the Rappahannock (Virginia), in December 1862. The Union forces had reached Fredericksburg on 17 November but it was not until 13 December that they began to cross the river and advance. On the night of 14 December, after a series of unsuccessful attacks, Burnside's troops were forced to withdraw to the northern bank. — 437, 439
Page me41.642
†490 In late December 1862, workers and democrats in London, Manchester and Sheffield held mass meetings of solidarity with the Union states in their struggle to end slavery. — 440
Page me41.642
†491 Marx obviously means the active participation in the US Civil War of immigrant Germans, veterans of the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. This applied, in particular, to Joseph Weydemeyer, a close friend and associate of Marx and Engels.

Page Break me41.643
Page me41.643

During the American War of Independence (1775-83) France was helping the North American colonies against Britain, her rival in trade and the struggle for colonies. — 440
Page me41.643
†492 First published in English in full in a footnote in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 441, 443, 522
Page me41.643
†493 This refers to the lodgings occupied by Mary and Lizzy Burns (see Note 386). — 443
Page me41.643
†494 Marx means the section on machinery in Notebooks V and XIX-XX of his Economic Manuscript of 1861-63. Later this material formed the basis of Chapter XV of Vol. I of Capital (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 446, 449
Page me41.643
†495 Marx means his excerpts from: J.H.M. Poppe, Geschichte der Technologie seit der Wiederherstellung der Wissenschaften bis an das Ende des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts, Bd. 1-3, Göttingen, 1807-11; J. Beckmann, Beyträge zur Geschichte der Erfindungen, Bd. 1-5, Leipzig, 1783-1800; Technisches Wörterbuch oder Handbuch der Gewerbekunde. Bearbeitet nach Dr. Andrew Ure's Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures and Mines von Karl Karmarsch und Friedrich Heeren, Prag, 1843-44. Erster Band, and other works — contained in Marx's London notebooks of excerpts (1850-53). — 449
Page me41.643
†496 The jenny was a spinning machine invented by James Hargreaves in 1765. He named it after his daughter, Jane. — 449
Page me41.643
†497 This refers to the speech Lassalle made in the Berlin criminal court on 16 January 1863. It was published as a pamphlet, under the title Die Wissenschaft und die Arbeiter. Eine Vertheidigungsrede vor dem Berliner Criminalgericht, Zürich, 1863. — 451

Page me41.643
†498 Marx means the second publication of Lassalle's speech of 12 April 1862 (see Note 466). It appeared in Zurich in 1863 under the title Arbeiterprogramm. Ueber den besondern Zusammenhang der gegenwärtigen Geschichtsperiode mit der Idee des Arbeiterstandes. — 451
Page me41.643
†499 In January 1863 an uprising against Tsarist oppression erupted in the Kingdom of Poland (see Note 513). It was an expression of the Poles' striving for national independence and of the crisis of feudal relations within the Kingdom. On 22 January 1863 the National Committee, which headed the uprising, put forward a programme of struggle for Poland's independence and a number of democratic agrarian demands. In May the Committee constituted itself the National Government. However, its inconsistency and indecision, in particular its failure to abolish the privileges of the big landowners, alienated the peasants, the majority of whom stayed away from the uprising. This was one of the main causes of its defeat. The movement was, by and large, crushed by the Tsarist government towards the autumn of 1863, though some units of the insurgents continued the struggle until the end of 1864.

Page me41.643
The leaders of the uprising pinned great hopes on help from the West European powers, but these confined themselves to diplomatic representations and, in effect, betrayed the insurgents.
Page me41.643
The Polish uprising was enthusiastically supported by Russian and West European democrats. — 453, 460, 464

Page Break me41.644
Page me41.644
†500 Marx probably means the Little Germans (see Note 24) who supported the national liberation struggle of the Italians and Hungarians against Austrian domination, their aim being a weakening of Austria, Prussia's main rival in the drive for the unification of Germany 'from above', under the supremacy of the ruling classes. — 453
Page me41.644
†501 This refers to the French intervention in Mexico (see Note 411).
Page me41.644
The Lower Empire (Bas-Empire in French) is the name sometimes given to the Byzantine Empire and also to the late Roman Empire. In a more general sense, the name is applied to any state going through a period of decline and disintegration. Marx means the Second Empire in France. — 453, 463
Page me41.644
†502 An allusion to Alexander Herzen's 'Fraternal Appeal to Russian Warriors', published in Kolokol (The Bell), No. 155, 1 February 1863. It called on Russian officers and soldiers to receive as brothers the Polish recruits brought into the army under the levy declared in Poland by the Tsarist government in October 1862. — 453
Page me41.644
†503 In 1849, the bourgeois republican Armand Marrast, President of the French Constituent Assembly, requested General Changarnier to bring in troops for the protection of the Assembly, which was being threatened by the Bonapartists. Changarnier refused, declaring that he disapproved of 'baionnettes intelligentes', i.e. soldiers meddling in politics. — 454
Page me41.644
†504 Marx presumably means the attempt, in 1863, to organise a military expedition to Circassia involving Urquhartites and Polish émigrés. The party was to be carried by the ship Chesapeak. — 454, 492
Page me41.644
†505 General Joseph Hooker succeeded Burnside as commander of the Army of the Potomac in January 1863, after the latter's dismissal following the defeat on the Rappahannock (see Note 489). — 454
Page me41.644
†506 Marx's eight-year-old son Edgar died at 28 Dean Street, Soho, on 6 April 1855. — 454
Page me41.644

†507 In 1863 the Prussian government, fearing the spread of the Polish national liberation uprising to the parts of Poland held by Prussia, and hoping to win Russia's support for its endeavours to unite Germany under Prussian supremacy, offered the Tsarist government military aid for the suppression of the uprising. On 8 February, on Bismarck's initiative, the two Parties concluded the Alvensleben convention (so called after the Adjutant General of the King of Prussia, who signed it) on joint action against the insurgents. The convention was not ratified. — 455, 456, 567
Page me41.644
†508 Marx carried out this plan, if only in part, at the end of October 1863 when he wrote a 'Proclamation on Poland by the German Workers' Educational Society in London' (present edition, Vol. 19) which was published in November as a leaflet on behalf of the Society (see Note 3). — 455, 458
Page me41.644
†509 In 1861 a Polish youth society was formed in Paris by the most active element of the Polish national liberation movement. In October of that year the society started a military school in Genoa to train officers for an insurrection in Poland. The instructors at the school, which was later transferred to Cuneo (also in Italy), prepared a number of military manuals and had them published in Paris. — 456
Page me41.644
†510 The dispute between Bakunin and Mieroslawski was provoked by the 'Letter of the Polish Central National Committee in Warsaw to the Editors of the Kolokol'

Page Break me41.645
published in that journal on 1 October 1862. It recognised the right of the peoples of Lithuania, Byelorussia and the Ukraine to self-determination as one of the main principles of the future national liberation uprising. The letter evoked a sharp protest from Mieroslawski and other moderate Polish democrats advocating the great-power slogan of the inviolability of Poland's frontiers of 1772. Bakunin attacked this stance in the pamphlet Le comité central de Varsovie et le comité militaire russe. Réponse au général Mieroslawski, London, 1862. Mieroslawski replied with the pamphlet Derniére réponse á M. Michel Bakounine, published in Paris on 20 January 1863. The Mieroslawski-Bakunin polemic was given broad coverage in the press. — 456
Page me41.645
†511 Engels speaks about the possible revival of the Holy Alliance, the association of European monarchs founded at the Congress of Vienna on 26 September 1815 on the initiative of Emperor Alexander I of Russia and the Chancellor of Austria, Metternich, for protecting the 'legitimate' regimes restored after the victory over Napoleon and for suppressing revolutionary and national liberation movements. — 456, 505, 513, 543
Page me41.645
†512 The pamphlet, on which Marx worked from mid-February to the end of May 1863, failed to materialise. Marx's numerous manuscripts, drafts and excerpts on the subject were published by the Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU in the Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. XIV, Moscow, 1973 and also in Warsaw in: Marks K., Przyczynki do historii kwestii polskiej (Rekopisy z lat 1863-1864), 1971. No manuscripts by Engels relating to the pamphlet in question have been found. — 458, 459, 461
Page me41.645

†513 There were three divisions of Poland between Prussia, Austria and Russia, in 1772, 1793 and 1795. As a result, Russia obtained Lithuanian, Byelorussian and Ukrainian territories, while Prussia and Austria gained portions of Poland proper. By decision of the Congress of Vienna, 1814-15 (see Note 511), a large part of the original Polish lands was annexed to Russia under the name of the Kingdom (Tsardom) of Poland. — 459, 470, 538
Page me41.645
†514 On 18 February 1863 the liberal majority in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies criticised the Prusso-Russian convention against the Polish insurgents (see Note 507) and passed a resolution urging the Prussian government to remain neutral. — 461
Page me41.645
†515 This refers to Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 18 March 1863. — 461
Page me41.645
†516 On 10 March 1863 Langiewicz, who led a unit of insurgents in the Sandomierz province, in South Poland, was proclaimed 'dictator' by the conservative bourgeois and landowner party of the 'Whites'. His government, established as a result of backstage intrigues, opposed the revolutionary leadership of the uprising, notably the National Central Committee of the petty-bourgeois and szlachta (gentry) party of the 'Reds', which was acting as a provisional national government. However, as early as early as 19 March Langiewicz abandoned his unit, which was being pushed back by superior forces of the Tsarist army, and fled to Austria. — 461, 464
Page me41.645
†517 Letters of marque were licenses granted by the state to private persons to seize and destroy enemy and neutral vessels carrying cargoes for enemy states. The Paris declaration of 1856 on maritime law (see Note 378) abolished privateering. — 462

Page Break me41.646
Page me41.646
†518 On America's stand with regard to the resolutions of the 1856 Congress of Paris see Marx's article 'The Washington Cabinet and the Western Powers' (present edition, Vol. 19).
Page me41.646
On the Trent affair see Note 366. — 462
Page me41.646
†519 Marx is referring to Palmerston's treacherous policy towards Poland. The immediate occasion for these comments were extracts from Palmerston's speech on Poland in the House of Commons on 23 March 1863, given in The Times and The Morning Star on the following day. Marx's manuscripts for the book on Poland he intended to write (see Note 512) contain the following passage from The Morning Star of 24 March: 'For he told the House of Commons again last night that his view of the Polish question was quite unaltered — that he adheres now to the position he took up in 1831: that our obligations are exhausted by a note “representing in friendly terms to the Emperor of Russia considerations as to the arrangements he would make for the re-establishment of tranquility in Poland”.' (See Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. XIV, Moscow, 1973, p. 512.) — 462
Page me41.646

†520 This refers to the speech by Plon-Plon (Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul Bonaparte) in the Senate on 18 March 1863. In his manuscripts for a book on Poland (see Note 512) Marx called this speech a 'farce' (Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. XIV, Moscow, 1973, p. 502). — 463
Page me41.646
†521 There were riots by starving unemployed weavers in the industrial towns of Ashton and Staleybridge, Lancashire, in March 1863 caused by the cotton crisis in Britain during the US Civil War of 1861-65 (see Note 385). Large forces of police, and regular troops of infantry and cavalry were employed against the rioters. — 463
Page me41.646
†522 The Polish insurrection started off a wave of peasant risings against the landowners and Tsarist autocracy in Lithuania and West Byelorussia in February and March 1863. The Lithuanian provincial committee, which led the movement both in Lithuania and in Byelorussia, declared its solidarity with the programme of the Polish insurrection put forward by the Provisional National Committee in Warsaw. The armed insurgent units in Lithuania and Byelorussia consisted mostly of peasants, and also included artisans, students and members of the landless nobility. Their leaders were the revolutionary democrats Konstanty Kalinowski, Zygmunt Sierakowski and Walery Wróblewski. The special significance of the Lithuanian risings lay in their democratic tendency and the opportunities they created for the movement to spread into Russia.
Page me41.646
Congress Poland was the part of Poland annexed to Russia by decision of the Congress of Vienna (1814-15) under the name of the Kingdom (Tsardom) of Poland. — 464
Page me41.646
†523 Engels is referring to the following passage in Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 18 March 1863: 'I have been repeatedly told of late that Engels' Condition of the Working Classes in England is inaccurate and one-sided, indeed that the author, himself has disowned his work as a piece of immature juvenilia. Is it true? I can't believe it.' Further on Kugelmann suggested that the book should be republished. — 465
Page me41.646
†524 Plonplonism — from Plon-Plon, nickname of Napoleon III's cousin, Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul Bonaparte, who led a Bonapartist faction that sought to distract the masses from struggle against the existing regime by means of large-scale social demagoguery and ostensible opposition to the policy of

Page Break me41.647
Napoleon III. Plon-Plon took an equally demagogic stand on the national liberation struggle of the Hungarian, Italian and Polish peoples and acted, in effect, as a vehicle of Napoleon III's foreign policy, recruiting supporters for it among bourgeois and petty-bourgeois democratic émigrés. — 466, 505
Page me41.647
†525 On 10 February 1863 the Leipzig central committee for the convocation of a general German working men's congress requested Lassalle to set forth his views on the problems of the working-class movement. Lassalle responded by writing a pamphlet entitled Offnes Antwortschreiben an das Central-Comité zur Berufung eines Allgemeinen

Deutschen Arbeitercongresses zu Leipzig (Zurich, 1863). He suggested that the pamphlet be made the 'official manifesto of the movement'. Below Marx quotes from pp. 11, 23, 36 et seq. of the pamphlet. — 467
Page me41.647
†526 On 26 March 1863 the London Trades Union Council held a meeting at St James's Hall to express the British workers' solidarity with the North American States' struggle to abolish slavery. It was chaired by John Bright, an opponent of Britain's armed intervention in the US Civil War on the side of the Southern States. — 468
Page me41.647
†527 The Independents were a Protestant trend in England. In the 1580s and 1590s they constituted the left wing of the Puritan movement and were in radical opposition to absolutism and the Church of England. During the English revolution of the seventeenth century, the Independents formed a political party which held power under Oliver Cromwell (1649-53). — 468
Page me41.647
†528 This refers to an item in the Berliner Reform of 10 April 1863 which gave a distorted account of the talks on the joint publication of a newspaper Marx had had with Lassalle when visiting Berlin in the spring of 1861. On 13 April 1863 Marx wrote a refutation, which was published by the Berliner Reform on 17 April (see present edition, Vol. 19). — 469
Page me41.647
†529 Schulze-Delitzsch's agitation among German workers and handicraftsmen for the establishment of co-operative societies and savings banks with funds contributed by the workers themselves was an attempt to distract them from the revolutionary struggle against capital and to perpetuate the bourgeoisie's influence on the proletariat. By claiming that co-operative societies were capable of improving the workers' condition within the framework of capitalism and saving the handicraft producers from ruin, Schulze-Delitzsch was preaching the harmony of the capitalists' and workers' interests. In his pamphlet Offnes Antwortschreiben ... (see Note 525) Lassalle attacked these views and, instead, advocated universal suffrage and the reformist idea of producers' associations to be set up by workers with the aid of the state, which he regarded as a supra-class institution. — 470
Page me41.647
†530 The Livonians were the inhabitants of Livonia, a Baltic area which is now part of the Latvian and Estonian republics within the USSR. Originally inhabited by the Livs, an extinct Finno-Ugric group, Livonia was conquered by the German Knights in the thirteenth century and formed the nucleus of the Livonian Order. In the second half of the sixteenth century it became part of the Rzecz Pospolita (Poland); and in the seventeenth century, joined Sweden. In 1721, as a result of the Northern War, it was included in the Russian Empire and in 1783 was constituted a separate gubernia, Livland, within Russia. — 471

Page Break me41.648
Page me41.648
†531 This refers to an episode of the Constitutional conflict in Prussia (see Note 408). In May 1863 a clash in the Prussian Diet between War Minister Roon and Deputy Sybel gave rise to a controversy over whether the president of the Diet had the right to interrupt speakers, in particular government Ministers. The Bismarck government was adamant on the issue, denying this right to the president. Engels pokes fun at the debate started in this connection by the deputies of the Party of Progress (see Note 371) and the draft resolution they tabled. On 15 May the Diet recognised by a majority vote the president's right to interrupt any deputy. In retaliation, the Diet was closed down by Royal decree on 27 May, ahead of time, and a restrictive decree on the press issued on 1 June. — 473

Page me41.648
†532 In April and May 1863 a sharp political struggle developed between Lassalle and the bourgeois Party of Progress (see Note 371) in connection with Lassalle's propaganda campaign preparatory to the establishment of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 536). Lassalle's stepped-up attacks on the Party of Progress were countered by sharp articles in the bourgeois press accusing him of collaboration with Bismarck. — 473
Page me41.648
†533 Marx means the manifesto on the 1863 insurrection in Poland (see Note 508) which he intended to write jointly with Engels on behalf of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 3). — 474
Page me41.648
†534 This refers to Marx's work on the book on Poland which he planned to write in collaboration with Engels. Its tentative title was Deutschland und Polen. Politisch-militärische Betrachtungen bei Gelegenheit des polnischen Aufstands von 1863 (see this volume, pp. 455 and 459 and Note 512). — 474
Page me41.648
†535 By the time when he was making the excerpts in question Marx had written the greater part (Notebooks I-XXI) of the Economic Manuscript of 1861-63 (see Note 310). The excerpts are in eight 'Supplementary Notebooks' (Beihefte), marked with the letters A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H. When writing the last two notebooks of the 1861-63 manuscript (XXII and XXIII), filled up between May and July 1863, Marx was already drawing on the 'Supplementary Notebooks'. — 474
Page me41.648
†536 By the new movement Marx means the General Association of German Workers, the political organisation founded at the congress of workers' associations in Leipzig on 23 May 1863. Lassalle was elected president of the Association. Its establishment was a milestone in freeing the German workers from the influence of the liberal bourgeoisie and forming an independent political organisation of the proletariat. However, the reformist programme imposed on the Association by Lassalle (see Note 525) was an obstacle to its becoming a revolutionary party of the proletariat. Lassalle's policy was meeting with growing opposition within the Association from Liebknecht, Becker, Klings and other members who relied on the support of Marx and Engels. — 475
Page me41.648
†537 Engels means the elections to the Corps législatif in France held on 31 May and 1 June 1863, and the elections to the Chamber of Deputies of the Prussian Diet on 6 May 1862. — 477
Page me41.648

†538 The Prussian Diet was closed down on 27 May 1863, ahead of time (see Note 531). — 477
Page me41.648
†539 Unionist General Joseph Hooker, defeated by numerically inferior Confederate forces at Chancellorsville, Virginia, on 2-4 May 1863, and himself wounded

Page Break me41.649
in the fighting, on 6 May issued an order congratulating his army on its 'achievements of the last seven days'. — 478
Page me41.649
†540 This refers to the Code civil, the Civil Code adopted in France in 1804. It was introduced by Napoleon I in the conquered regions of West and Southwest Germany and remained in force in the Rhine Province after its incorporation into Prussia in 1815. — 478
Page me41.649
†541 An allusion to the Brimstone Gang (see Note 65). — 479
Page me41.649
†542 Marx means the bourgeois philanthropist Robert Gladstone and his associates in Liverpool. — 480
Page me41.649
†543 The Free Traders were British industrialists advocating non-interference by the state in business, notably the repeal of the protectionist Corn Laws. Their centre was Manchester. The movement was led by the textile manufacturers Cobden and Bright, who founded the Anti-Corn Law League in 1838. — 480
Page me41.649
†544 Widespread discontent with the policy of the bourgeois and landowner party of the 'Whites', who usurped the leadership of the uprising (see Note 499) in April-May 1863, prompted the revolutionary elements within the insurgents' organisation in Warsaw to take over power at the end of May. One of the slogans of the new National Government, composed of moderate 'Reds' (see Note 516), was the formation of a universal militia with a view to enrolling the peasant masses in the guerrilla struggle. However, within ten days the 'Whites' reasserted themselves in the National Government. Reluctant openly to reject the popular slogan of a universal militia they 'postponed' its implementation indefinitely. As a result, the insurrection remained fragmented and failed to assume nationwide proportions. — 483
Page me41.649
†545 In the summer of 1863 the Southerners made an unsuccessful attempt to launch a fresh offensive in Pennsylvania. — 484
Page me41.649
†546 The Tableau économique given below by Marx corresponds to the Table of the Reproduction Process contained in Notebook XXII of his economic manuscript of 1861-63, p. 1394 (see Note 310). Later Marx gave an analysis of the reproduction and circulation of the aggregate social capital in Capital, Vol. II, Part III (present edition, Vol. 36).
Page me41.649
On Quesnay's table see Note 436. — 485

Page me41.649
†547 In late July or in August 1863 a new stage began in Marx's work on Capital, when he rewrote the 1861-63 manuscript (see Note 310) producing, by the beginning of 1866, a third rough draft of the theoretical part of Capital (three books). In the present letter Marx writes about his work on Book I. — 488, 530
Page me41.649
†548 Marx's wife and daughters spent three weeks on holiday in Hastings, on the South coast of England, from 14 August to 4 September 1863. The main reason for their stay was the health of Jenny, the Marx couple's eldest daughter, who had been unwell throughout the spring and summer of 1863. — 488, 583
Page me41.649
†549 These photographs have not been found. — 488
Page me41.649
†550 In March 1863 bonds were issued in a number of European countries for a 7% Cotton Loan of the Confederate States of America to the tune of £3 million. Although not officially quoted at the London Stock Exchange, they were rapidly distributed thanks to the publicity given to the loan by The Times. — 489

Page Break me41.650
Page me41.650
†551 In his article 'Bourbon War and the London Newspaper Press' published in Cobbett's Weekly Register, Vol. 45, No. 6, February 8, 1823, pp. 354-81, William Cobbett described The Times as follows (p. 375): 'Here is a pretty concern!... it is a trading concern; a concern for making money; a concern with which truth or falsehood can have nothing at all to do.' — 489
Page me41.650
†552 After seizing Mexico City in 1863, the French interventionists on 18 June set up a Supreme Junta, composed of 35 conservatives nominated by the French commander. The junta called an assembly of notables, who on 10 July proclaimed Mexico an 'empire' under the rule of Archduke Maximilian of Austria, a placeman of Napoleon III. Marx ironically compares this 'suffrage' by the Mexican notables with the elections of 10 December 1848 in France, in which Louis Bonaparte secured the Presidency of the French Republic, and with the referendum he held in 1860 in Savoy and Nice, after their annexation by France as a result of the 1859 Austro-Italo-French war. — 489
Page me41.650
†553 In March 1863, Polish refugees in England fitted out a corps of about 200 Poles, Frenchmen and Italians for participation in the Polish uprising. Commanded by Colonel Lapinski, they were to sail to Lithuania on the steamer Ward Jackson and join the insurgents there. However, the expedition failed due to poor organisation and inadequate security precautions. On arrival in Malmö, in April, the ship and the members of the expedition were detained by the Swedish authorities. Bakunin who had joined the corps at the Swedish port of Hälsingborg, after the detention of the ship, went to Stockholm, where he stayed till October trying to establish contacts with Swedish and Finnish revolutionaries. — 490, 492
Page me41.650

†554 The Rosicrucians were members of secret mystical societies, active in Germany and other European countries in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The name is believed to derive from Christian Rosenkreutz, the reputed fifteenth-century founder of the Society. Another theory traces the name to the Society's emblem, which features the cross and roses. — 491
Page me41.650
†555 On 17 September 1863 the bourgeois and szlachta (gentry) party of the 'Reds' formed a new National Government, which operated until 17 October. — 492
Page me41.650
†556 An assembly of German princes was held on Austria's initiative in Frankfurt am Main from 15 August to 1 September 1863 to discuss a draft reform of the German Confederation. In view of William I's refusal to attend, it ended in failure marking another defeat for Austria in its struggle against Prussia for supremacy in Germany.
Page me41.650
The edict in support of Poland, issued by the cardinal vicar of Rome, called for a solemn procession and public prayers in favour of Poland in early September. — 492
Page me41.650
†557 The death, on 15 November 1863, of the childless King Frederick VII terminated the personal union of the duches of Schleswig and Holstein with Denmark. The enthronement of Christian IX, named heir to the Danish Crown by the London Protocol of 8 May 1852 (see notes 324 and 380), and the promulgation, on 18 November, of a new Constitution proclaiming the final incorporation of Schleswig and Holstein into the domains of the Danish monarch led to a rise of the anti-Danish national liberation movement in the two duchies and a sharp aggravation of Danish-German differences. — 493
Page me41.650
†558 This refers to Friedrich of Augustenburg. On 30 December 1852 his father, Christian of Augustenburg, renounced the Danish throne in favour of

Page Break me41.651
Christian IX. However, after the death of Frederick VII (see Note 557) Friedrich of Augustenburg on 16 November 1863 proclaimed himself Duke of Schleswig and Holstein as Frederick VIII. — 494, 496
Page me41.651
†559 The October 1863 elections to the Prussian Diet brought another victory for the Party of Progress. On 21 November, the newly elected Chamber of Deputies enforced the repeal of the decree, imposed on 1 June 1863, abolishing the freedom of the press. — 494
Page me41.651
†560 Engels did not carry out his intention to write a pamphlet on the Schleswig-Holstein question. — 496
Page me41.651
†561 Marx left for Trier on 7 December 1863. From there he went to see his relatives in Frankfurt am Main and then travelled on to Zalt-Bommel to stay with Lion Philips, his mother's executor (see this volume, pp. 500-01). Marx was taken ill in Zalt-Bommel and did not return to London until 19 February 1864. — 498, 511

Page me41.651
†562 During Marx's young years in Trier, the address of the von Westphalens' house was 389 Neugasse (later Neustrasse).
Page me41.651
Roman antiquities — the local inhabitants were very proud of the ancient Roman architectural monuments in Trier. — 499
Page me41.651
†563 Grünberg — a small vineyard that belonged to Marx's father. — 500
Page me41.651
†564 In his letter of 16 December 1863 Freiligrath informed Marx of a demand by Williams, a London bookseller, that Liebknecht return the money he had borrowed from him, this loan having been guaranteed by Freiligrath. — 502
Page me41.651
†565 An ironic reference to the resolution of the Prussian Diet recognising Friedrich of Augustenburg's right to the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein (see notes 557 and 558) and urging immediate help for him. The words a 36th potentate are an allusion to the fact that the German Confederation comprised 35 (according to other data, 34) states and four free cities. — 503
Page me41.651
†566 The representatives of Prussia and Austria at the Federal Diet meeting in Frankfurt am Main in late December 1863 to consider the problem of Schleswig and Holstein were instructed to refrain from discussing the Polish question. — 503
Page me41.651
†567 On Kossuth's ties with Plon-Plon see Marx's Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17). — 505
Page me41.651
†568 Two motions — one on the occupation of the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein, and another on the so-called execution — were tabled at the German Federal Diet on 7 December 1863 following the promulgation of the new Danish Constitution (see Note 557). The latter motion was proposed by Prussia and Austria, who wanted no open violation of the 1852 London Protocol (see Note 380). Under pressure from Austria and Prussia, their proposal was adopted, and by 31 December Saxon and Hanover troops had occupied the whole of Holstein, meeting with no resistance from the Danes. Friedrich of Augustenburg was proclaimed Duke of Schleswig and Holstein under the name of Frederick VIII (see Note 558). — 506
Page me41.651
†569 On 18 December 1863 the Prussian Chamber of Deputies, in an address to King William I, refused to allocate the emergency funds for the forthcoming war against Denmark. In his reply of 27 December William rejected the address. Engels probably knew the text of the reply from The Times, where it was published on 2 January 1864. — 506

Page Break me41.652
Page me41.652
†570 Parts of this letter were first published in English in: Marx and Engels, On Literature and Art, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1976 and in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 507

Page me41.652
†571 The enthronement of Christian IX as King of Denmark (see notes 557 and 558) led to a controversy in Germany over the status of the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. The smaller and medium-sized German states, through their representatives in the German Federal Diet, supported Friedrich of Augustenburg as claimant to the two duchies. In conformity with the London protocol of 1852, Austria recognised Christian IX's title to them. Prussia (Bismarck), while ostensibly taking a stand similar to Austria's, from the outset worked for the annexation of Schleswig and Holstein to Prussia. The so-called execution (see Note 568) failed to eliminate the inner-German differences.
Page me41.652
The Warsaw Protocol, mentioned by Marx below, was signed by Russia and Denmark on 5 June 1851. It proclaimed the indivisibility of the Danish Crown possessions, including Schleswig and Holstein. — 507
Page me41.652
†572 The entry of Austro-Prussian troops into Schleswig on 1 February 1864 opened the Danish war, which marked an important stage in the struggle to unify Germany under Prussia's aegis. The purpose of the war was to sever Schleswig and Holstein from Denmark. Under the Vienna treaty of 30 October 1864, the two duchies were declared co-possessions of Austria and Prussia. After the 1866 Austro-Prussian war they were annexed to Prussia. — 509, 538
Page me41.652
†573 On 12 March 1864 Marx came to stay with Engels in Manchester for a few days to tell him about his trip to Germany and Holland (see Note 561). — 511, 518
Page me41.652
†574 First published in English in: Marx on Revolution, Tr. by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1971. — 512
Page me41.652
†575 The Mormons are members of a religious sect founded in the United States in 1830 by Joseph Smith (1805-1844). The Book of Mormon which he wrote in 1830, allegedly on the basis of divine revelation, tells, in the name of the prophet Mormon, of the migration of Israelite tribes into America, which is claimed to have taken place in antiquity. — 512
Page me41.652
†576 In the spring of 1848, Schleswig and Holstein were swept by a national liberation movement against Danish domination and for unification with Germany. The states of the German Confederation, with Prussia at the head, opened hostilities against Denmark, but it soon became clear that the Prussian government had no intention to uphold the interests of the liberation movement. The seven-month truce concluded in Malmö on 26 August 1848 nullified the revolutionary and democratic gains in Schleswig and Holstein and virtually ensured the continuance of Danish domination. The Prusso-Danish war, resumed at the end of March 1849 and carried on until 1850, ended in victory for Denmark, which retained Schleswig and Holstein. (See also Note 324.) — 513
Page me41.652

†577 At the end of February 1864, after the Prussian troops had entered Jutland (see Note 572), the British government, to prevent the spread of hostilities, proposed calling in London a conference of the powers signatory to the 1852 protocol on the integrity of the Danish monarchy (see Note 324) with a view to settling the Prusso-Austro-Danish conflict. However, the conference, initially due to open on 12 April 1864, was repeatedly postponed because Prussia and Austria, who were doing everything to delay its convocation, did not send their representatives. Though it did open eventually, the two-month deliberations (25 April to 25 June) produced no results because of sharp contradictions between the participants. No sooner did the conference close than Prussia and Austria resumed the fighting in Denmark. — 513, 517, 519, 538, 543

Page Break me41.653

Page me41.653

†578 Marx means the elections to the French Corps législatif of 31 May-1 June 1863. — 513

Page me41.653

†579 At the time, Garibaldi was preparing to visit England (he arrived in early April 1864) with a view to raising funds for another expedition to end Austrian domination in Venetia (see also Note 582). — 513

Page me41.653

†580 On 29 February 1864 Austria introduced a state of siege in Galicia, thus preventing any help to the Polish insurgents. — 513

Page me41.653

†581 According to Epicurus, there is an endless multitude of worlds whose origin and existence is governed by their own natural laws. Gods exist too, but outside those worlds, in the spaces between them, and exert no influence whatever on the evolution of the universe or on human life. — 515

Page me41.653

†582 The British government hoped to exploit Garibaldi's visit to England in April 1864 (see Note 579) to bring pressure to bear on Austria. It also had to take into account the enthusiastic welcome given to Italy's national hero by the public at large. Official honours were therefore bestowed on him at the beginning of his visit. However, the British bourgeoisie were angered by Garibaldi's meeting with Mazzini, who lived in London as a political émigré, and by his speeches in support of the Polish insurgents. A campaign against the Italian revolutionary was launched in the press. In connection with a request by Napoleon III for Garibaldi's immediate expulsion from Britain, the House of Commons discussed his health and a number of bourgeois newspapers hastened to announce that he 'was ill and leaving for Caprera'. Garibaldi denied this fabrication, declaring that he intended to visit several English cities. The result was an open statement by Gladstone to the effect that Garibaldi's further stay in Britain was undesirable. Soon after that, at the end of April, Garibaldi left the country. — 516

Page me41.653

†583 Meetings in honour of Garibaldi were held at the Crystal Palace (see Note 246) on 16 and 18 April. — 516

Page me41.653

†584 In 1844 letters from the Bandiera brothers to Mazzini containing the plan for their expedition to Calabria were opened by order of Sir James Graham, the British Home Secretary. The members of the expedition were arrested. The Bandieras were executed. — 516
Page me41.653
†585 The National Shakespeare Committee was formed in England in 1863 to organise the celebration of the tricentennial of Shakespeare's birth on 23 April 1864.
Page me41.653
Blind's admission to the Committee was announced in the Athenaeum, No. 1902, 9 April 1864. — 517
Page me41.653
†586 An allusion to the fact that the aggravation of the Schleswig-Holstein conflict was alleged to be the result of a purely dynastic dispute that developed after the death of the childless King Frederick VII of Denmark (see notes 557 and 558). — 517
Page me41.653
†587 In March 1864, after inheriting a small legacy from his mother, Marx and his family moved to a new house at 1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, in northwest London. — 517

Page Break me41.654
Page me41.654
†588 Peelers was a nickname for members of the Irish constabulary, founded in 1812-18 by Sir Robert Peel; also, by extension, a nickname for the police in England. — 518
Page me41.654
†589 A decree issued on 1 June 1863 imposed severe restrictions on the press in Prussia.
Page me41.654
In late April 1864 King William I visited the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein with a view to inducing their population to vote for a merger with Prussia in the forthcoming plebiscite which was to decide their status. — 519
Page me41.654
†590 An allusion to France's annexation of Savoy and Nice under a treaty she concluded with the Kingdom of Sardinia in Turin in 1860. In keeping with that treaty, plebiscites were held in Savoy and Nice in April to create the illusion of a voluntary merger. — 519
Page me41.654
†591 The Danish stronghold of Düppel (Dybböl) in Schleswig was stormed and captured by Prussian troops on 18 April 1864, in the course of the war that Prussia and Austria were waging against Denmark (see Note 572). — 519
Page me41.654
†592 Engels means the defence of Sebastopol in the Crimean war of 1853-56. — 519
Page me41.654
†593 Marx went to Manchester to see the sick Wilhelm Wolff on 3 May and stayed there until 19 May 1864. — 520
Page me41.654

†594 The Friends of Light was a religious trend that opposed the Junker-backed arch-reactionary hypocritical pietism predominant in the official church. It was an expression of the bourgeoisie's dissatisfaction with the reactionary order in Germany in the 1840s. — 525
Page me41.654
†595 Engels arrived in London on 19 May and stayed with Marx for four days. — 526
Page me41.654
†596 Marx means the formalities involved in the transfer of the inheritance left to him by Wilhelm Wolff. — 527
Page me41.654
†597 Jenny, Marx's eldest daughter, was jocularly called 'the Emperor of China' in the family, her sister Eleanor was 'the Successor', and the other sister, Laura, was 'the Secretary'. — 527
Page me41.654
†598 Some time earlier, Harney had been invited by friends to settle in Australia, which probably gave rise to rumours that he had gone there. In fact, he did not follow up the invitation, emigrating with his wife and son to America in May 1863. — 527
Page me41.654
†599 This letter has not been found. It may have contained an account of Frederick Engels' dealings with Gottfried Ermen and financial transactions with Hermann Engels. — 528
Page me41.654
†600 This refers to the obituary of Wilhelm Wolff, published in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 144 (supplement), 23 May 1864, and other German newspapers over the signatures of Karl Marx, Frederick Engels, Ernst Dronke, Louis Borchardt and Eduard Gumpert (see present edition, Vol. 19). — 529
Page me41.654
†601 Marx means the books bequeathed to him by Wilhelm Wolff. — 530, 534
Page me41.654
†602 In May 1864 the Union forces commanded by Grant launched their third offensive on Richmond. It was not until 3 April 1865 that the city was taken (see also Note 632). — 530, 531

Page Break me41.655
Page me41.655
†603 In this note, written on 23 May 1864, Ernest Jones expressed his regret at having failed to meet Marx on the eve of the latter's departure from Manchester. It was in Manchester that they had first met a week earlier, on 16 May, after not having seen each other for several years (see this volume, p. 526). — 530
Page me41.655
†604 This refers to the power of attorney issued to Engels by Marx to take over the property bequeathed to him by Wilhelm Wolff (see present edition, Vol. 19, Appendices). — 531
Page me41.655
†605 At Solferino, on 24 June 1859, the Austrian army was defeated by the Franco-Italian forces. — 531

Page me41.655
†606 An ironic reference to the fact that, prior to the resumption (28 May 1864) of the London conference of European powers on the Schleswig-Holstein problem (see Note 577), Prussia and Austria had agreed on the candidature of Prince of Augustenburg as duke for Schleswig-Holstein (see Note 558), the Prince having promised in return a number of concessions to Prussia. However, his negotiations in Berlin with William I, Crown Prince Frederick William and Bismarck produced no results. The London conference, too, failed to reach agreement. — 531
Page me41.655
†607 An allusion to the Warsaw Protocol of 1851 (see Note 571) and the London Protocol of 1852 (see Note 380). — 532
Page me41.655
†608 In May 1864 Lassalle toured Germany in connection with the festivities to mark the first anniversary of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 536). In a speech he made in Elberfeld he called Wilhelm Wolff an 'outstanding fighter for the cause of the working class'. — 533
Page me41.655
†609 In a letter to Friedrich Moll and Julius Melchior of 27 May 1864, Karl Klings describes the celebration in Germany of the first anniversary of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 536), stressing, in particular, that working-class audiences enthusiastically reacted to speakers' references to Marx and Engels. Klings requested Moll and Melchior to tell Marx that the workers wished to 'be worthy of such champions of their cause' as Marx and Engels. — 533
Page me41.655
†610 Marx gave lectures on wage-labour and capital at the German Workers' Society in Brussels in the latter half of December 1847. These lectures formed the basis of his Wage-Labour and Capital, published as editorials in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nos. 264-67 and 269, 5-8 and 11 April 1849 (present edition, Vol. 9). Later he gave up his intention to reproduce Wage-Labour and Capital as an appendix to Vol. I of Capital. He did, however, cite individual passages from it in notes to Volume I (see present edition, Vol. 35, author's notes to Part VII). In the Preface to the first German edition of Volume 1 Marx pointed out that Lassalle had borrowed many important theoretical propositions from his writings 'without any acknowledgement'. — 534
Page me41.655
†611 Marx paraphrases the dictum 'They have learned nothing and forgotten nothing', which won currency during the restoration of the Bourbons (1815-30). Attributed to Charles Talleyrand, but in fact coined by Rear Admiral Chevalier de Panat in a letter to the journalist Mallet du Pan in 1796, it referred to royalists who failed to draw any lessons from the French Revolution. — 535
Page me41.655
†612 The Probate Court (Court of Probate) existed in England from 1857 to 1873. Its function was to prove wills and issue titles to the management of property. — 535

Page Break me41.656
Page me41.656

†613 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: Marx and Engels, The Civil War in the United States, New York, 1937. — 536
Page me41.656
†614 In his letter of 3 June 1864 Liebknecht described the position in the General Association of German Workers, notably the growing opposition within its ranks to Lassalle's dictatorial leanings. He wrote that he had refused to work for the newspaper Lassalle intended to start, because Marx and other 'veteran party comrades' had not been invited to contribute. He also gave an account of his moves in support of Marx and asked for advice on how best to counteract Lassalle's policies within the Association. Marx's reply has not been found. — 537
Page me41.656
†615 An ironic allusion to Frederick William IV, during whose reign, in 1852, the London Protocol, unfavourable to Prussia, was signed (see Note 380). — 537
Page me41.656
†616 In May 1864, Russian troops captured the Kbaada area (now Krasnaya Polyana), the Caucasian mountaineers' last resistance centre. This marked the end of the Caucasian wars started by the Tsarist government in the late eighteenth century and the final incorporation of the Caucasus into Russia. — 538
Page me41.656
†617 Preparing to write a detailed biography of Wilhelm Wolff, Marx in June 1864 drew up a brief list of dates on the subject (see his 'Biographical Notes on Wilhelm Wolff', present edition, Vol. 19). However, the project failed to materialise. In 1876, Engels carried it out in his series of articles, 'Wilhelm Wolff', published in the journal Neue Welt (see present edition, Vol. 24). — 539
Page me41.656
†618 The battle in the Wilderness, Virginia, 5 to 7 May 1864, opened the Union troops' last, third campaign to seize the Confederate capital, Richmond (see Note 632). — 540
Page me41.656
†619 Russia put forward Peter Nicholaus Friedrich, the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, as pretender to the Schleswig-Holstein throne. Marx is alluding to the fact that the Romanov dynasty was related to the Oldenburg house through Peter III (see Note 380). From the second half of the eighteenth century many of the Oldenburg princes lived in Russia. — 541
Page me41.656
†620 Marx probably means the publication Le Traité de Londres, Copenhagen, 1863, and the tendentious commentaries to it in The Free Press (in particular, the leading article 'The Treaty of London' in No. 1, 6 January 1864). — 543
Page me41.656
†621 In connection with Marx's work on the biography of Wilhelm Wolff (see Note 617) Marx's wife had written, on his behalf, to the journalist K.F.M. Elsner requesting him to send whatever information he had on Wolff's youth (see this volume, p. 589). Elsner failed to do so. — 545, 588, 589
Page me41.656
†622 In the letter in question, Brass requested Biscamp to contribute to the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, which he was publishing in Berlin. — 548
Page me41.656

†623 The letter contained the news that a maid in Lion Philips' house had contracted smallpox. As a result, Marx cancelled his intended visit to Zalt-Bommel with his daughters. — 550
Page me41.656
†624 In speaking of the rebirth of the Holy Alliance, Marx means the meeting of King William I of Prussia with Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria in Carlsbad in June 1864, and with Emperor Alexander II of Russia in Potsdam and Bad Kissingen in July (business talks were carried on by Bismarck, Gorchakov and Rechberg). Worried by the Prusso-Austro-Russian rapprochement and Prussia's stepped-up military activity in Denmark, the British government proposed that

Page Break me41.657
Britain and France take joint action against Prussian aggression. However, Napoleon III refused because of France's grave internal position and foreign-policy setbacks. — 552
Page me41.657
†625 This refers to the card announcing Pieper's engagement to Ida Gravenhorst. — 553
Page me41.657
†626 After the death of Mary Burns, Engels moved from 252 Hyde Road to 4 Tennant Street, Chorlton-on-Medlock where he lived in 1863-64. — 553
Page me41.657
†627 Mediatisation — the degrading of princes, formerly independent members of the Imperial German Confederation, to the status of subjects of a bigger German sovereign. Here the reference is to Prussia's attempts to bring Schleswig-Holstein under her hegemony. — 554
Page me41.657
†628 The old provinces — Brandenburg, East Prussia, West Prussia, Posen, Pomerania and Silesia, i.e. the provinces that constituted the Kingdom of Prussia before the Congress of Vienna (1815). The Rhine Province was annexed to Prussia in 1815. — 554
Page me41.657
†629 N'est pas Palmerston qui veut — not everyone who wishes to be Palmerston is Palmerston. In paraphrasing the famous dictum 'N'est pas monstre qui veut' from Victor Hugo's pamphlet Napoléon le petit, Engels was alluding to the fact that in 1864 Palmerston, aged 80, was still Prime Minister of Britain. — 554
Page me41.657
†630 Fazy suffered a crushing defeat at the elections to the Geneva Canton Council in August 1864, following the exposure of his financial machinations as President of the General Bank of Switzerland. After the elections, Fazy's supporters caused disturbances by attacking voters who had opposed him at the polls. When Swiss government troops were sent to Geneva to restore order, Fazy fled to France.
Page me41.657
Freiligrath was a member of the board of the London branch of the General Bank of Switzerland. — 555, 556
Page me41.657

†631 This telegram has not been found. Presumably, it contained the news of Lassalle's death. — 558
Page me41.657
†632 Richmond, the capital of the Southern Confederacy, was the rebels' main stronghold, protected by their elite troops. In the course of the Civil War, the Northerners fought three major campaigns to seize it. The first ended in their defeat at Bull Run on 21 July 1861 (see Note 390). In the second — spring and summer 1862 — they were repulsed and had to retreat to Washington (see Note 458). The third, launched in May 1864 and crowned by the capture of Richmond on 3 April 1865 (see Note 618), was crucial in securing the Union's victory in the war. — 558
Page me41.657
†633 In May 1864 the Union command embarked on a new plan for crushing the Confederacy, which in many respects coincided with the strategic propositions put forward by Marx and Engels in the article 'The American Civil War' as early as March 1862 (see present edition, Vol. 19). Simultaneously with Grant's offensive on the Central Front in Virginia (see Note 602) General Sherman launched, on 7 May 1864, his famous 'march to the sea'. Fighting his way through Georgia at the cost of heavy losses, he seized Atlanta on 2 September and reached the sea on 10 December. By cutting the Confederate territory in two, Sherman's march provided the conditions for the rout of the main Confederate forces in Virginia in the spring of 1865. — 559

Page Break me41.658
Page me41.658
†634 On 8 November 1864, Presidential and Congressional elections were to be held in the United States. The National Convention of the Republican Party in Baltimore adopted, on 7 June 1864, a campaign programme calling for the abolition of slavery throughout the territory of the Union, and renominated Abraham Lincoln as candidate for the Presidency. — 559
Page me41.658
†635 After briefly meeting Marx in London on 8 September 1864 and visiting his mother in Ostende, Engels travelled in Schleswig-Holstein until mid-October. — 560
Page me41.658
†636 Marx means the year-long period of Lassalle's large-scale propaganda activities that followed the establishment of the General Association of German Workers in May 1863 (see Note 536) and his election to its presidency. — 560
Page me41.658
†637 The city of Coblenz in Western Germany was the centre of the counter-revolutionary emigration during the French Revolution. After the defeat of the 1848-49 European revolutions, many petty-bourgeois refugees flocked to Switzerland. — 561
Page me41.658
†638 The demagogues were members of an opposition movement among German intellectuals. The word won circulation in this sense after the Carlsbad Conference of Ministers of German States in August 1819, which adopted a special resolution against the 'intrigues of demagogues'. — 561
Page me41.658

†639 This refers to Wilhelm Dönniges' work 'Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reichs unter der Herrschaft König und Kaiser Ottos I. von 951 bis 973' in Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reichs unter dem Sächsischen Hause. Herausgegeben von Leopold Ranke. Erster Band. Dritte Abtheilung. Berlin, 1839. In calling Dönniges a born 'valet' of history, Marx is alluding to the saying, 'No man is a hero to his valet,' which was quoted, in particular, by Hegel in his Vorlesungen über die Philosophie der Geschichte. — 561
Page me41.658
†640 Marx means the General Association of German Workers (see Note 536). — 561
Page me41.658
†641 This refers to the Berlin Workers' Association, founded in January 1863. It was under the influence of the Party of Progress. Schulze-Delitzsch frequently gave lectures on the co-operative movement to its members (see also Note 529). — 561
Page me41.658
†642 From 16 February to 25 March 1860, Marx stayed in Manchester discussing with Engels and Wilhelm Wolff plans for exposing the Bonapartist agent Karl Vogt, who was libelling Marx and his associates. — 567
Page me41.658
†643 This refers to Marx's book A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, which was' published in 1859 and soon became known in Russia (see this volume, pp. 157, 193-94). — 567
Page me41.658
†644 Jenny Marx evidently means Wilhelm von Humboldt's abortive attempt to introduce a modicum of constitutionalism. The onslaught of reaction forced him to resign the post of Minister of the Interior, which he had held from January to December 1819, and retire from politics altogether. — 567
Page me41.658
†645 Jenny Marx has 'gejenant', the past participle form of the 'jenaen', which she coined from the name of the town of Jena. On 14 October 1806 Napoleon's army routed Prussia's forces near Jena, compelling Prussia to surrender. — 568
Page me41.658
†646 From December 1850 to the autumn of 1856 the Marx family lived at 28 Dean Street, Soho, and after that at 9 (later 46) Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill. — 570

Page Break me41.659
Page me41.659
†647 This refers to the libellous campaign against Marx and his associates launched by Karl Vogt and supported by the bourgeois press. The barrister K. Hermann, who represented Vogt in his lawsuit against the Allgemeine Zeitung (see Note 22), described him as an 'abgerundete Natur' ('an intellectually mature character'). The phrase can also mean 'potbelly', and Marx puns on it in his polemical work Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, p. 28). — 572
Page me41.659
†648 Presumably an allusion to the Prodigal Son. — 579
Page me41.659

†649 There were riots among Lancashire textile workers in connection with the cotton shortage caused by the Union's blockade of the Secessionist states during the US Civil War. — 580
Page me41.659
†650 Straubingers — travelling journeymen in Germany. Marx and Engels used the term to denote German artisans and also certain participants in the working-class movement who were still swayed by guild prejudices and the petty-bourgeois illusion that it was possible to return from capitalist large-scale industry to small handicraft production. — 580
Page me41.659
†651 These remarks refer to the continuing Constitutional conflict between Bismarck and the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (see Note 290). On 2 September the Chamber was disbanded, but at the new elections the Party of Progress, the unfavourable conditions notwithstanding, again won the majority and succeeded in getting all its leaders (Jacoby, Schulze-Delitzsch, Waldeck and others) into the Chamber.
Page me41.659
Jenny's pessimistic remarks are consonant with Marx's assessment of the developments in Germany contained in his letter to Engels of 15 August 1863, in which he says: 'Our fatherland would seem to be in a pitiful state'. — 584
Page me41.659
†652 By the circular Jenny Marx means the 'Proclamation on Poland by the German Workers' Educational Society in London', written by Marx (see Note 508).
Page me41.659
By a letter from the 'Chair' she means a letter from J. Vahlteich, secretary of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 536), to Wilhelm Wolff in his capacity of member of the committee to raise funds for the Polish uprising of 1863-64. Vahlteich expressed the Association's support for the 'Proclamation on Poland by the German Workers' Educational Society in London' and the Association's readiness to back it up with vigorous action. He also requested 50 copies of the 'Proclamation' for circulation to the Association's branches. — 585, 586
Page me41.659
†653 A sarcastic allusion to Lassalle's petitions to the Berlin Chief of Police of 3, 15 and 17 November 1863 requesting the Prussian authorities to put an end to police harassment of the General Association of German Workers and instruct the police to ensure order during the Association's meetings. The agitation of the Association, he stressed, did not conflict with the interests of the Prussian state. — 586
Page me41.659
†654 This letter was written in reply to one from Engels dated 9 June 1864 (see this volume, pp. 539-40). — 588

Page Break me41.660
NAME INDEX

Page me41.660
A

Page me41.660
Abarbanell (d. 1863) — banker in Paris, Marx's acquaintance. — 433, 439, 446
Page me41.660
Abel, Karl (1837-1906) — German philologist and journalist; Berlin correspondent of The Daily Telegraph. — 29, 32, 33, 41, 48, 56, 71, 75, 76, 95, 131-32, 136, 144, 145, 155
Page me41.660
About, Edmond François Valentin (1828-1885) — French writer and journalist; Bonapartist. — 159, 160, 164, 197, 235
Page me41.660
Abt — German journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat; emigrated to Geneva in the early 1850s; expelled for slander from the Geneva German Workers' Association. — 71, 185, 324
Page me41.660
Aeschines (389-314 B.C.) — Athenian orator and politician. — 343
Page me41.660
Afinger, Bernhard (1813-1882) — German sculptor. — 50
Page me41.660
Albert, Prince Consort of Queen Victoria of Great Britain (1819-1861). — 4
Page me41.660
Alberts — secretary of the Prussian embassy in London in the 1850s and 1860s. — 147, 149, 224, 305, 315
Page me41.660
Alexander II (1818-1881) — Emperor of Russia (1855-81). — 4, 456
Page me41.660
Alexandra (1844-1925) — daughter of King Christian IX of Denmark; in 1863 married Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII. — 544
Page me41.660
Allen — English physician, doctor to the Marx family. — 165, 214, 216-18, 220, 221, 228, 230, 231, 243, 247, 248, 250, 258, 313, 333, 341, 361, 362, 399, 433, 460, 468, 479, 483, 495, 497, 514, 530, 531, 543, 573, 577, 585, 587
Page me41.660
Allsop, Thomas (1795-1880) — English author, Chartist; persecuted on suspicion of being an accomplice in Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III in 1858; later collaborated with Marx in helping refugees of the Paris Commune. — 369
Page me41.660
Altenhöfer, August Joseph (1804-1876) — German journalist, an editor of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. — 18
Page me41.660
Anders, Albert August (the Laplander) (b. 1802) — German journalist; emigrated to London, member of the Communist League, a leader of a branch of the London German

Page Break me41.661
Workers' Educational Society (from the end of 1858). — 3, 581
Page me41.661
Anneke, Carl Friedrich Theodor (1818-1872) — Prussian artillery officer, discharged from the army for his political views; member of the Cologne community of the Communist League; participated in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany and in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners. — 322, 371-73

Page me41.661
Anrooij, Antonie Johannes Wouters van (1816-1893) — physician in Zalt-Bommel. — 314, 501, 503, 504, 510, 551
Page me41.661
Anrooij, Henriette Sophia van (Jettchen) (1825-1902) — Karl Marx's cousin, daughter of Lion Philips, wife of Antonie Johannes Wouters van Anrooij. — 275, 314, 501, 510, 551
Page me41.661
Appian of Alexandria (d. in the 170s A.D.) — Roman historian. — 265
Page me41.661
Archimedes (c. 287-212 B.C.) — Greek mathematician and engineer. — 515
Page me41.661
Aristotle (384-322 B.C.) — Greek philosopher. — 318
Page me41.661
Armstrong, William George, Baron of Cragside (1810-1900) — English inventor of rifled cannon. — 325
Page me41.661
Assing, Ludmilla (Camilla Essig) (1821-1880) — German authoress, published Diaries of a well-known German writer, Varnhagen von Ense; Lassalle's friend and Marx's acquaintance. — 117, 210, 217, 271, 280, 358, 561, 578
Page me41.661
Auerswald, Rudolf von (1795-1866) — Prussian statesman, Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (June-September 1848), Minister without portfolio (1858-62). — 81
Page me41.661
August Paul Friedrich (1783-1853) — Grand Duke of Oldenburg (1829-53). — 549
Page me41.661
Augustenburger — see Friedrich Christian August, Prinz von Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg

Page me41.661
B

Page me41.661
Badinguet — see Napoleon III
Page me41.661
Bakunin, Mikhail Alexandrovich (1814-1876) — Russian revolutionary and writer; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; later an ideologist of Narodism and anarchism; opposed Marxism in the First International. — 91, 329, 341, 456, 489, 492
Page me41.661
Bakunina, Antonina Ksaverievna (née Kwiatkowska) (c. 1840-1887) — Bakunin's wife. — 492
Page me41.661
Bamberger, Ludwig (1823-1899) — German democratic journalist, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, later lived in England,

Holland and France; a banker in Paris; returned to Germany in the late 1860s and became a National-Liberal. — 10, 187, 190, 212
Page me41.661
Bandiera brothers, Attilio (1810-1844) and Emilio (1819-1844) — Austrian naval officers; participants in the Italian national liberation movement; members of the Young Italy society; executed for their attempt to raise a revolt in Calabria (1844). — 516
Page me41.661
Bangya, János (1817-1868) — Hungarian journalist and army officer; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; later Kossuth's emissary abroad and at the same time a secret police agent; under the name of Mehemed Bey served in the Turkish army and was a Turkish agent in the Caucasus (1855-58). — 84, 85, 152, 182, 439, 493
Page me41.661
Banks, Nathaniel Prentiss (1816-1894) — American general and politician, a Republican, Governor of Massachusetts (1858-61); commanded the Union forces in Virginia (1862) and Louisiana (1862-64) during the US Civil War. — 372, 386

Page Break me41.662
Page me41.662
Barrot, Camille Hyacinthe Odilon (1791-1873) — French politician and lawyer, leader of the liberal dynastic opposition until February 1848; from December 1848 to October 1849 headed the monarchist coalition Ministry. — 265
Page me41.662
Bastian, Adolf (1826-1905) — German ethnographer. — 232, 246
Page me41.662
Bauer, Bruno (1809-1882) — German idealist philosopher, Young Hegelian. — 288, 393
Page me41.662
Bauer, Edgar (1820-1886) — German philosopher and writer, Young Hegelian; editor of the London newspaper Die Neue Zeit (1859); Prussian official after the 1861 amnesty; Bruno Bauer's brother. — 325, 487
Page me41.662
Beauregard, Pierre Gustave Toutant (1818-1893) — American general; took part in the war against Mexico (1846-48); commanded the Southern troops in Virginia (1861-early 1862), Mississippi (1862), and in Charleston (September 1862-April 1864). — 360, 367, 539
Page me41.662
Becker — German refugee in London. — 149-50
Page me41.662
Becker — Leipzig correspondent of the Hermann in the 1860s. — 342
Page me41.662
Becker, Gottfried (1827-1865) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated to America (1853); fought in the US Civil War; son of Johann Philipp Becker. — 129
Page me41.662
Becker, Hermann Heinrich ('Red Becker') (1820 1885) — German lawyer and journalist, participated in the 1848-49 revolution; member of the Communist League from 1850; sentenced to five years' imprisonment at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); a member of the Party of Progress in the 1860s, later a National-Liberal, member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (1862-66). — 79, 90, 366, 375

Page me41.662
Becker, Johann Philipp (1809-1886) — German revolutionary, took part in the democratic movement of the 1830s-50s, the international working-class movement and the 1848-49 revolution; after the defeat of the Baden-Palatinate uprising (1849) left Germany; prominent figure in the First International and delegate to all its congresses; editor of the Vorbote; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 110, 114, 115-16, 127, 129, 163, 164, 202, 237, 246, 316, 341-43, 356, 466, 568
Page me41.662
Becker, Max Joseph (d. 1896) — German engineer, democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849 and after its defeat emigrated to Switzerland and later moved to the USA. — 70
Page me41.662
Becker, Oskar (1839-1868) — son of a Baltic German, studied at a gymnasium in Odessa; student at Leipzig University; sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment for an attempt on the life of King William I of Prussia in 1861, pardoned in 1866. — 314, 316
Page me41.662
Beckmann — Prussian police spy in Paris in the early 1850s, Paris correspondent of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 70, 148, 149
Page me41.662
Beethoven, Ludwig van (1770-1827) — German composer. — 159
Page me41.662
Behrend, G. — German publisher. — 108, 135, 145
Page me41.662
Beneke — merchant in Manchester. — 525
Page me41.662
Bennigsen, Rudolf von (1824-1902) — German politician, advocate of Germany's unification under Prussia's supremacy, President of the National Association (1859-67), from 1867 leader of the Right wing in the National-Liberal Party. — 194

Page Break me41.663
Page me41.663
Bentley, Richard (1794-1871) — head of a publishing house in London. — 5
Page me41.663
Bermbach, Adolph (1821-1875) — German lawyer, democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly; member of the Communist League; witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); Marx's correspondent; liberal in later years. — 73, 90, 135
Page me41.663
Bernal Osborne, Ralph (1808-1882) — English liberal politician, M.P., Secretary of the Admiralty (1852-58). — 517
Page me41.663
Bernard, Simon-François (1817-1862) — French politician, republican; emigrated to England after the defeat of the 1848 revolution; in 1858 was accused by the French

Government of being an accomplice in Orsini's attempt on the life of Napoleon III but was acquitted by the British court. — 284, 356, 358, 368, 369
Page me41.663
Bernstorff, Albrecht, Count von (1809-1873) — Prussian diplomat, envoy to London (1854-61), Foreign Minister (1861-62), ambassador to London (1862-73). — 305
Page me41.663
Bessel — German lawyer, chairman of the German Workers' Educational Society in Cologne (1860). — 189
Page me41.663
Beta — see Bettziech, Heinrich
Page me41.663
Bethlen, Gergely, Count (1818-1867) — Hungarian army officer, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, emigrated after its defeat; Lassalle's second. — 555, 557
Page me41.663
Bettziech, Heinrich (pen-name Beta) (1813-1876) — German democratic journalist, refugee in London, follower of Gottfried Kinkel. — 4, 85, 244-45, 325, 354, 355, 369
Page me41.663
Beust, Friedrich von (1817-1899) — Prussian army officer, resigned for political reasons; committee member of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848); an editor of the Neue Kölnische Zeitung (September 1848-February 1849); took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated to Switzerland; professor of pedagogy. — 133
Page me41.663
Bille, Carl Steen Andersen (1828-1898) — Danish journalist and politician, member of the National-Liberal Party, editor and owner of Dagbladet (1851-72), member of the Lower Chamber of the Rigsdag (Parliament). — 554
Page me41.663
Biscamp (Biskamp), Elard — German democratic journalist, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated after its defeat; member of the editorial board of Das Volk published by German refugees in London in 1859 with Marx's active participation. — 41, 45, 52, 61, 63, 64, 66-68, 166, 213, 215, 228, 234, 241, 548
Page me41.663
Bischoffsheim, Louis Raphaël (1800-1873) — French financier, shareholder of a French bank which had a branch in London. — 335
Page me41.663
Bismarck-Schönhausen, Otto Eduard Leopold, Prince von (1815-1898) — statesman of Prussia and Germany, diplomat, Prussian envoy to St. Petersburg (1859-62) and Paris (1862); Prime Minister of Prussia (1862-72, 1873-90); Chancellor of the North German Union (1867-71) and of the German Empire (1871-90); carried through the unification of Germany under the aegis of Prussia. — 418, 428, 431, 440, 456, 461, 477, 478, 494, 519, 531, 538, 554
Page me41.663
Blanc, Jean Joseph Louis (1811-1882) — French petty-bourgeois socialist, historian; member of the Provisional Government and President of the Luxembourg Commission in 1848: pursued a policy of conciliation with the bourgeoisie, a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees in London from August 1848. — 47, 86, 104

Page Break me41.664
Page me41.664
Blanckenburg, Karl Henning Moritz von (1815-1888) — Prussian politician, leader of the Right-wing conservatives, member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (from 1852), North German (1867-71) and German (1871-73) Imperial Diets; abandoned politics in 1873. — 289
Page me41.664
Blank, Emil — son of Marie and Karl Emil Blank, Frederick Engels' nephew. — 529
Page me41.664
Blank, Karl Emil (1817-1893) — German merchant in London; connected with socialist circles in the 1840s-50s; husband of Frederick Engels' sister Marie. — 168, 228, 259, 261, 267, 529
Page me41.664
Blank, Marie (1824-1901) — Frederick Engels' sister; married Karl Emil Blank in 1845. — 529
Page me41.664
Blank, Rudolf (b. 1851) — son of Marie and Karl Emil Blank, Frederick Engels' nephew. — 529
Page me41.664
Blanqui, Louis Auguste (1805-1881) — French revolutionary, utopian communist, organiser of conspiracies and secret societies; took an active part in the 1830 and 1848 revolutions, a leader of the French proletariat; was repeatedly sentenced to imprisonment. — 284, 291, 298, 318, 326, 439
Page me41.664
Bleibtreu, Georg (1828-1892) — German battle-painter. — 271
Page me41.664
Blind, Friederike — Karl Blind's wife. — 86
Page me41.664
Blind, Karl (1826-1907) — German democratic journalist; took part in the Baden revolutionary movement in 1848-49; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in London in the 1850s-early 1860s; later a National-Liberal. — 4, 23, 30, 31, 33, 35-39, 41-42, 47-49, 52, 53, 55, 56, 58-66, 85-87, 89, 104-05, 184, 188, 224-26, 232, 233, 235-36, 255, 264-65, 302, 311, 325, 379, 424, 455, 467-68, 470, 473, 489, 516-17
Page me41.664
Blum, Babette (Bäbchen) (c. 1791-c. 1865) — sister of Karl Marx's father. — 498, 501
Page me41.664
Blum, Robert (1807-1848) — German democratic journalist; leader of the Left in the Frankfurt National Assembly; took part in the defence of Vienna against counter-revolutionary forces in October 1848; court-martialled and executed after the fall of the city. — 236
Page me41.664
Bodin (Bodinus), Jean (1530-1596) — French philosopher and economist, ideologist of absolutism. — 479.
Page me41.664
Boelling, Friedrich (1816-1884) — German merchant, Frederick Engels' brother-in-law. — 261, 267, 529

Page me41.664
Boelling, Hedwig (1830-1904) — Frederick Engels' sister, wife of Friedrich Boelling. — 529
Page me41.664
Boethius, Anicius Manlius Torquatus Severinus (c. 480-524) — Roman Neoplatonist, translator and commentator of treatises by ancient philosophers and mathematicians. — 514
Page me41.664
Boisguillebert, Pierre Le Pesant, sieur de (1646-1714) — French economist, predecessor of physiocrats and father of classical bourgeois political economy in France. — 479
Page me41.664
Bombalino — see Francis II
Page me41.664
Bonaparte, Louis — see Napoleon III
Page me41.664
Bonaparte, Mathilde Letizia Wilhelmine (1820-1904) — Jérome Bonaparte's daughter, cousin of Napoleon III. — 580
Page me41.664
Bonaparte — see Napoleon I
Page me41.664
Bonaparte, Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul (1822-1891) — cousin of Napoleon III; during the Second Republic deputy to the Constituent and Legislative assemblies; a divisional commander (1854) in the Crimea; commanded a corps in the Austro-Italian-French war of 1859, went by the name of Prince

Page Break me41.665
Napoleon, Plon-Plon, and the Red Prince. — 109, 116, 174, 198, 203, 205, 463, 465
Page me41.665
Borchardt — Louis Borchardt's wife. — 526
Page me41.665
Borchardt — Louis Borchardt's elder daughter. — 526
Page me41.665
Borchardt — Louis Borchardt's younger daughter. — 526
Page me41.665
Borchardt, Louis — German physician, one of Engels' acquaintances in Manchester. — 29, 68, 211, 238, 240, 321, 490, 518, 520-25, 531, 535, 545, 547
Page me41.665
Borkheim, Sigismund Ludwig (1825-1885) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated after its defeat; London merchant from 1851; a friend of Marx and Engels. — 34, 48, 50, 70, 71, 113, 136, 190, 196, 197, 202, 212, 213, 214, 227, 228, 232, 237, 246, 250, 252-55, 321-24, 341, 354, 359, 363, 364, 382, 391, 392, 399, 401, 403-07, 409-12, 415-16, 423, 424, 534, 537, 539
Page me41.665
Börnstein, Heinrich (1805-1892) — German democratic journalist, in 1844 founded Vorwärts! in Paris and edited it with Marx's collaboration; emigrated to the USA in 1849; editor of the Anzeiger des Westens (St. Louis), took part in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 300

Page me41.665
Boucher de Crévecoeur de Perthes, Jacques (1788-1868) — French archaeologist and author, known for his study of material culture of primitive society. — 473
Page me41.665
Bragg, Braxton (1817-1876) — American general; commanded the Southern Army in Kentucky and Tennessee during the Civil War. — 530
Page me41.665
Branicki, Ksawery, Count (1812-1879) — Polish magnate, a leader of Polish conservative-monarchist refugees in Paris, was close to Prince Napoleon (Plon-Plon). — 465
Page me41.665
Brass, August (1818-1876) — German journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to Switzerland after its defeat; editor-in-chief of the Neue Schweizer Zeitung (1859-60); later a National-Liberal and supporter of Bismarck. — 118, 124, 206, 227, 234, 255, 548
Page me41.665
Breckinridge, John Cabell (1821-1875) — American statesman, Democrat; Vice-President (1857-61); a leader of the rebellion of Southern slave-owners; Secretary of War for the Confederacy (1865). — 400
Page me41.665
Bright, John (1811-1889) — English manufacturer and politician, a leader of the Free Traders and founder of the Anti-Corn Law League; leader of the Left-wing Liberals (from the early 1860s); held several posts in the government. — 85, 468, 535
Page me41.665
Brockhaus, Heinrich (1804-1874) — German publisher and bookseller, owner and head of F.A. Brockhaus Publishing House in Leipzig. — 202, 233, 274, 280, 285, 315, 319, 357, 402, 404, 434, 436, 439
Page me41.665
Bronner, Eduard — German physician, petty-bourgeois democrat; deputy to the Baden Constituent Assembly in 1849; emigrated to England. — 29, 38, 264
Page me41.665
Brown, John (1800-1859) — American farmer; a revolutionary leader in the Abolitionist movement; fought against slave-owners in Kansas (1854-56); tried to organise an uprising of Black slaves in Virginia in 1859; was put on trial and executed. — 4
Page me41.665
Bruck, Karl Ludwig, Baron von (1798-1860) — Austrian statesman, diplomat and big manufacturer; Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works (1848-51); Minister of Finance (from 1855); committed suicide in April 1860. — 136

Page Break me41.666
Page me41.666
Bruckner brothers — Borkheim's acquaintances. — 410
Page me41.666

Brüggemann, Karl Heinrich (1810-1887) — German liberal journalist; editor-in-chief of the Kölnische Zeitung (1845-55). — 241
Page me41.666
Bruhn, Karl von (b. 1803) — German journalist, member of the League of Outlaws, the League of the Just and subsequently of the Communist League from which he was expelled in 1850; editor of the Lassallean paper Nordstern in Hamburg (1861-66). — 489
Page me41.666
Brüningk, Maria, Baroness von (d. 1853) — wife of Baron A. von Brüningk, a German refugee in London. — 262
Page me41.666
Buchanan, James (1791-1868) — American statesman, Democrat; State Secretary (1845-49); minister to London (1853-56); President of the United States (1857-61); advocate of slave-owners' interests. — 295, 307
Page me41.666
Bucher, Lothar (1817-1892) — Prussian official and journalist; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848; after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to London; correspondent of the Berlin National-Zeitung; later a National-Liberal, supporter of Bismarck. — 67, 153, 154, 227, 232, 234, 246, 249, 253, 255, 258, 262, 268, 376, 391, 408, 412, 458, 573
Page me41.666
Buckle, Henry Thomas (1821-1862) — English historian and sociologist, positivist. — 381
Page me41.666
Buell, Don Carlos (1818-1898) — American general; fought in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; commanded an army in Tennessee and Kentucky (1862). — 360, 371
Page me41.666
Bühring, Karl Johann (b. 1820) — German worker, member of the Communist League. — 264, 290
Page me41.666
Bunsen, Christian Karl Josias, Baron von (1791-1860) — Prussian diplomat, writer and theologian, was close to the Prussian court, ambassador to London (1842-54). — 146
Page me41.666
Bürgers, Heinrich (1820-1878) — German radical journalist, member of the Cologne Community of the Communist League (from 1848); an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, member of the Communist League Central Authority from 1850; was sentenced to six years' imprisonment in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); member of the National Association and the Party of Progress in the 1860s. — 25, 83, 189, 192, 194, 265, 319, 329, 403, 418, 419
Page me41.666
Burns, Lydia (Lizzy, Lizzie) (1827-1878) — Irish working woman, took part in the Irish national liberation movement; Frederick Engels' second wife, Mary Burns' sister. — 370, 398, 431, 438, 441, 517, 534, 562
Page me41.666
Burns, Mary (1821-1863) — Irish working woman, Frederick Engels' first wife. — 344, 370, 398, 431, 438, 441-43, 446, 449
Page me41.666

Burnside, Ambrose Everett (1824-1881) — American general, Republican; commanded the Northern Army on the Potomac (November 1862-January 1863) during the Civil War. — 434, 437-39
Page me41.666
Bustrapa — see Napoleon III
Page me41.666
Butler, Benjamin Franklin (1818-1893) — American politician and general; commanded the expeditionary Northern Army during the Civil War. — 530, 539

Page Break me41.667
Page me41.667
C

Page me41.667
Caesar (Gaius Julius Caesar) (c. 100-44 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman. — 265, 450
Page me41.667
Campe, Johann Julius Wilhelm (1792-1867) — German publisher and bookseller, co-proprietor of the Hoffmann & Campe Publishing House in Hamburg. — 32, 202
Page me41.667
Camphausen, Ludolf (1803-1890) — German banker, a leader of the Rhine liberal bourgeoisie; Prime Minister of Prussia from March to June 1848; pursued a policy of collaboration with the reactionaries. — 101, 102
Page me41.667
Cardan(o), Gerolamo (1501 or 1506-1576) — Italian mathematician, philosopher and physician. — 450
Page me41.667
Carden, Sir Robert Walter (b. 1801) — British official, Tory M.P. — 84
Page me41.667
Carnot, Lazare Hippolyte (1801-1888) — French journalist and politician; republican; member of the Provisional Government (1848); deputy to the Constituent and Legislative assemblies during the Second Republic; after 1851 a leader of the republican opposition to the Bonapartist regime. — 439
Page me41.667
Carpenter, William Benjamin (1813-1885) — English naturalist and physiologist. — 546
Page me41.667
Catherine II (1729-1796) — Empress of Russia (1762-1796). — 336, 470-71, 538
Page me41.667
Cavour, Camillo Benso, conte di (1810-1861) — Italian statesman, head of the Sardinian government (1852-59, 1860-61); pursued a policy of unifying Italy under the supremacy of the Savoy dynasty relying on the support of Napoleon III; headed the first government of united Italy in 1861. — 191, 203, 246, 293
Page me41.667
Charpentier, Gervais (1805-1871) — French publisher and bookseller. — 357
Page me41.667
Chavée, Honoré Joseph (1815-1877) — Belgian philologist. — 540

Page me41.667
Chenu, Adolphe (born c. 1817) — member of secret revolutionary societies in France during the July monarchy, secret police agent-provocateur. — 12, 15
Page me41.667
Cherval, Julien (real name Joseph Crämer) — Prussian policeman, spy in Paris for Prussia and France; gained entry into the Communist League and headed a Paris community of the sectarian Willich-Schapper group, accused of complicity in the so-called Franco-German plot in Paris in February 1852; escaped from prison with the connivance of the French police; acted as a spy and agent-provocateur under the name of Nugent in Switzerland in 1853-54. — 45, 72, 73, 75, 78-79, 92-94, 110, 130, 146-49, 152, 202
Page me41.667
Christian IX (1818-1906) — Prince of Glücksburg, King of Denmark (1863-1906). — 337, 513, 544
Page me41.667
Cicero (Marcus Tullius Cicero) (106-43 B.C.) — Roman statesman, orator and philosopher. — 166, 279
Page me41.667
Claessen, Heinrich Joseph (1813-1883) — German physician and politician; liberal; member of the Board of Directors of and contributor to the Rheinische Zeitung; Camphausen's confidential agent. — 101
Page me41.667
Clanricarde, Ulick John de Burgh, Marquis and Earl of (1802-1874) — British diplomat and politician, Whig, Ambassador to St. Petersburg (1838-41), Lord Privy Seal (1857-58). — 516
Page me41.667
Clarendon, George William Frederick Villiers, Earl of, Baron Hyde (1800-1870) — British statesman, Whig, later Liberal; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1847-1852); Foreign Secretary (1853-58, 1865-66, 1868-70). — 336

Page Break me41.668
Page me41.668
Clausewitz, Karl von (1780-1831) — Prussian general and military theoretician. — 359
Page me41.668
Cluss, Adolf (1825-1905) — German engineer; took part in the workers' movement in Germany and the USA; member of the Communist League, secretary of the German Workers' Educational Society in Mainz (1848); emigrated to the USA (autumn 1848); one of the first propagandists of scientific communism in America in the 1850s; later abandoned politics; known as an American architect of the late 19th century. — 89, 90, 99
Page me41.668
Cobb, Howell (1815-1868) — American statesman, Democrat, Governor of Georgia (1851-53), Secretary of the Treasury (1857-60) in the Buchanan Administration, took an active part in the Southern slave-holders' rebellion. — 307
Page me41.668

Cobbett, William (c. 1762-1835) — British politician and radical journalist; published Cobbett's Weekly Political Register from 1802. — 114, 336, 489
Page me41.668
Cobden, Richard (1804-1865) — English manufacturer and politician, a leader of the Free Traders and founder of the Anti-Corn Law League; M.P. — 215, 229, 246, 535
Page me41.668
Coburgs — members of the Saxe-Coburg-Gotha dynasty; ruled in Belgium, Portugal, Britain and several other European states. — 153
Page me41.668
Cohnheim, Max — German petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the Baden revolutionary movement in 1848-49; emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 70
Page me41.668
Colenso, John William (1814-1883) — English clergyman and theologian, criticised some Bible texts. — 541
Page me41.668
Collet, Collet Dobson — English radical journalist and public figure, editor and publisher of The Free Press, organ of Urquhart's followers. — 21, 28, 33, 46, 65, 104, 105, 144, 341, 347, 517, 536, 552
Page me41.668
Collins, William Wilkie (1824-1889) — English novelist. — 570
Page me41.668
Colomb, Friedrich August von (1775-1854) — Prussian army officer, subsequently general; fought against Napoleonic France. — 367
Page me41.668
Coningham, William (b. 1815) — English radical M.P. — 336
Page me41.668
Conradi, Emilie (1822-1888) — Karl Marx's sister, wife of Johann Jakob Conradi. — 220, 499, 502
Page me41.668
Conradi, Johann Jakob (1821-1892) — engineer in Trier, Marx's brother-in-law. — 220, 499, 500, 501, 514
Page me41.668
Constantine (Konstantin Nikolayevich) (1827-1892) — Russian Grand Duke, second son of Nicholas I, Admiral-General, head of the Naval Department (1853-81) and commander-in-chief of the Navy (1855-81); Viceroy of Poland (1862-63). — 492
Page me41.668
Cosenz, Enrico (1820-1898) — Italian general; took part in the national liberation movement in Italy; commanded a division during Garibaldi's revolutionary campaign in South Italy (1860); Chief of the General Staff (1882-93). — 322
Page me41.668
Cotta, Johann Georg, Baron von Cottendorf (1796-1863) — German publisher, owner of a large publishing house (1832-63); publisher of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. — 202, 227, 262
Page me41.668
Crassus (Marcus Licinius Crassus) (c. 115-53 B.C.) — Roman politician and general; suppressed the slave uprising under Spartacus in 71 B.C. — 265

Page me41.668
Creuz, Anna Maria (Marianne) (1835-1862) — Helene Demuth's step-sister. — 433, 581
Page me41.668
Curtis, Samuel Ryan (1807-1866) — American general and politician; Republican; Congressman (1857-61);

Page Break me41.669
commanded the Northern troops in Missouri and Arkansas (1861-62) during the Civil War. — 372, 386
Page me41.669
Czartoryski, Wladyslaw, Prince (1828-1894) — Polish magnate, a leader of the Polish conservative monarchist émigrés, a diplomatic representative of the Provisional National Government in Paris from May 1863. — 489, 490, 492

Page me41.669
D

Page me41.669
Dacier, André (1651-1722) — French philologist, translator of and commentator on works by ancient authors. — 318
Page me41.669
Dâ-Dâ — Arabian writer, translated Bonapartist pamphlets into his native tongue on the instructions of the Algerian authorities (1850s). — 197-98, 202, 205, 212
Page me41.669
Dammer, Otto (d. 1910) — German chemist; a leader of the General Association of German Workers and its representative in Leipzig. — 489
Page me41.669
Dana, Charles Anderson (1819-1897) — American journalist, Fourierist, Abolitionist; an editor (1848) and then editor-in-chief (1849-62) of the New-York Daily Tribune; an editor of the New American Cyclopaedia (1857-63). — 68, 95, 110, 196, 199, 201, 220, 252, 255, 257, 263, 315, 322, 353, 359, 362
Page me41.669
Daniels, Amalie (1820-1895) — Roland Daniels' wife. — 289, 369
Page me41.669
Daniels, Roland (1819-1855) — German physician, member of the Communist League from 1850; defendant in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), acquitted by the jury; died of tuberculosis contracted in prison, friend of Marx and Engels. — 80
Page me41.669
Dante, Alighieri (1265-1321) — Italian poet. — 571
Page me41.669
Darwin, Charles Robert (1809-1882) — English naturalist; founded the theory of natural selection. — 232, 246, 381, 542
Page me41.669

Davis, Jefferson (1808-1889) — American politician, Democrat; an organiser of the Southern slave-holders' revolt; President of the Confederate States of America (1861-65). — 306, 428, 429, 562
Page me41.669
Delahodde — see Hodde, Lucien de la
Page me41.669
Delane, John Thadeus (1817-1879) — English journalist, an editor of The Times (1841-77). — 452
Page me41.669
Demuth — Helene Demuth's relative. — 500
Page me41.669
Demuth, Helene (Lenchen) (1820-1890) — housemaid and devoted friend of the Marx family. — 88, 216, 220, 231, 354, 433, 445, 488, 548, 572, 575-77, 580, 587
Page me41.669
Denonville — see Watteau, Louis
Page me41.669
Dietz Oswald (c. 1824-1864) — German architect; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to London; member of the Communist League Central Authority, after the split of the League (1850) belonged to the sectarian Willich-Schapper group, was a member of its Central Committee; later took part in the American Civil War on the side of the Union. — 91, 140, 146-47
Page me41.669
Diodorus Siculus (c. 90-21 B.C.) — Greek historian. — 354, 359
Page me41.669
Disraeli, Benjamin, Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-1881) — British statesman and writer; leader of the Conservative Party in the second half of the 19th century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852, 1858-59, 1866-68); Prime Minister (1868, 1874-80). — 517
Page me41.669
Dönniges, Franz Alexander Friedrich Wilhelm von (1814-1872) — German historian and diplomat, Ranke's pupil; author of works on German medieval history; Bavarian envoy to

Page Break me41.670
Switzerland (1862-64). — 555, 557, 558, 561
Page me41.670
Dönniges, Helene von (1845-1911) — Franz Alexander Friedrich Wilhelm von Dönniges' daughter: fiancée of Janko von Racowita, Romanian nobleman. — 555-58, 561
Page me41.670
Dozy, Rheinhart Pieter Anne (1820-1883) — Dutch orientalist, professor at Leyden University; author of several works on the history of the Arabs. — 541, 542
Page me41.670
Dralle, Friedrich Wilhelm (b. 1820) — German democratic journalist; emigrated to London after 1852; a leader of the London branch of the National Association. — 302
Page me41.670
Drenkmann — court officer in Berlin. — 141
Page me41.670

Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German author, a 'true socialist', a member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); after the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to Switzerland and then to England; sided with Marx and Engels at the time of the split in the Communist League (1850); later withdrew from politics and engaged in commerce. — 8, 21, 22, 29, 38, 71, 89, 332-35, 337, 344, 354, 460, 461, 465, 476, 479, 481-83, 525-27, 548, 575
Page me41.670
Drucker, Louis — German democratic journalist; publisher of the comic weekly How Do You Do? in London. — 245
Page me41.670
Dumont (Du Mont), Joseph (1811-1861) — German journalist, moderate liberal; publisher of the Kölnische Zeitung from 1831. — 241
Page me41.670
Duncker — Prussian official; Police Superintendent in Berlin in 1848. — 80
Page me41.670
Duncker, Franz Gustav (1822-1888) — German politician and publisher. — 9, 13, 17, 21, 27, 28, 32, 48, 50, 51, 102, 103, 108, 109, 135, 210, 217, 227, 274, 280, 436, 458

Page me41.670
E

Page me41.670
Eccarius — Johann Georg Eccarius' wife. — 183
Page me41.670
Eccarius, Johann Georg (1818-1889) — German tailor; prominent figure in the German and the international working-class movement, journalist; member of the League of the Just and later of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, member of the General Council of the First International; took part in the British trade union movement. — 11, 172, 174, 176, 183, 189, 426, 427, 493, 536
Page me41.670
Eichhoff, Karl Wilhelm (1833-1895) — German socialist, journalist; in the late 1850s exposed Stieber as a police spy in the press and was brought to trial; refugee in London (1861-66); member of the First International from 1868 and one of its first historians; member of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party from 1869. — 16, 54, 74, 80-81, 140-41, 189, 190, 194, 195, 247, 251, 355, 362, 369, 371, 374, 464, 526-27, 576
Page me41.670
Elizabeth (1801-1873) — Queen of Prussia, wife of Frederick William IV. — 428
Page me41.670
Elsner, Karl Friedrich Moritz (1809-1894) — Silesian radical journalist and politician; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; in the 1850s an editor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung to which Marx contributed in 1855. — 69, 282, 533-34, 545, 552, 554, 588, 589
Page me41.670
Emmermann, Karl — chief forester from the Rhine Province; commanded an infantry unit of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army in 1849; emigrated to Switzerland. — 133

Page Break me41.671
Page me41.671
Engel, Ernst (1821-1896) — German statistician, director of the Prussian Royal Statistical Bureau in Berlin (1860-82). — 480-81
Page me41.671
Engels, Elisabeth Franziska Mauritia (1797-1873) — Frederick Engels' mother. — 120, 137, 138, 256-61, 266, 267, 528-29, 559
Page me41.671
Engels, Emil (1828-1884) — Frederick Engels' brother; a partner in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Engelskirchen. — 120, 134, 137, 259, 260, 266, 267
Page me41.671
Engels, Emma (b. 1834) — Hermann Engels' wife. — 529
Page me41.671
Engels, Friedrich (1796-1860) — Frederick Engels' father. — 15, 116, 138, 266, 528, 575
Page me41.671
Engels, Hermann (1822-1905) — Frederick Engels' brother; manufacturer in Barmen. — 259, 261, 267, 528-29
Page me41.671
Engels, Rudolf (1831-1903) — Frederick Engels' brother; manufacturer in Barmen. — 259, 261, 266, 267, 529
Page me41.671
Engländer, Sigmund (1828-1902) — Austrian journalist; emigrated to France (1848) and later to England; secret police agent. — 70, 121-22, 144
Page me41.671
Epicurus (c. 341-c. 270 B.C.) — Greek materialist philosopher, atheist. — 515
Page me41.671
Erhard(t), Johann Ludwig Albert (born c. 1820) — German shop assistant, member of the Communist League; one of the accused at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); acquitted by the jury. — 90
Page me41.671
Ermani — publisher and bookseller in London. — 31, 37
Page me41.671
Ermen, Gottfried, — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 106, 112, 120-21, 127, 134-37, 222, 260, 267, 386, 414, 447, 528-29, 548, 549, 554, 575
Page me41.671
Ernst II (1818-1893) — Duke of Saxony, Coburg and Gotha (1844-93); brother of Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's husband; opposed the policy of uniting Germany under Prussia's supremacy (early 1860s); supported Bismarck from 1866. — 8, 153, 319
Page me41.671
Esser, J.P. — Prussian judiciary officer, democract; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly in 1848 and to the Second Chamber (Left wing) in 1849. — 101
Page me41.671
Esser I, Johann Heinrich Theodor — Prussian official, lawyer, advocate of clericalism, Vice-President of the Prussian National Assembly (Centre) in 1848; counsel for the defence in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852) — 151

Page me41.671
Esterházy von Galántha, Anton, Count (1825-1865) — cousin of Georg Esterházy von Galántha. — 122
Page me41.671
Esterházy von Galántha, Georg, Count (1811-1856) — Austrian diplomat. — 122
Page me41.671
Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzman, comtesse de Teba (1826-1920) — French Empress, wife of Napoleon III. — 206, 580
Page me41.671
Ewerbeck, August Hermann (1816-1860) — German physiologist and man of letters; leader of the Paris communities of the League of the Just, later member of the Communist League until 1850. — 90, 206
Page me41.671
Ezra — reformer and codifier of Judaism. — 541

Page me41.671
F

Page me41.671
Farini, Luigi Carlo (1812-1866) — Italian statesman and historian; championed the unification of Italy under the Savoy dynasty; Minister of Public Education (1851-52); Sardinian Minister of the Interior

Page Break me41.672
(1860); Vicegerent of Naples (November 1860-January 1861); head of the Italian Government (1862-63). — 246
Page me41.672
Farragut, David Glasgow (1801-1870) — American naval officer, admiral (from July 1862); fought in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; commanded a flotilla during the seizure of Mobile, Alabama (August 1864). — 559
Page me41.672
Faucher, Julius (Jules) (1820-1878) — German writer, Young Hegelian; Free Trader; refugee in England from 1850 to 1861; contributor to The Morning Star; returned to Germany in 1861; member of the Party of Progress. — 9, 54, 79, 131, 136, 246, 264, 506
Page me41.672
Fazy, Jean Jacob (James) (1794-1878) — Swiss journalist and statesman, radical; head of government of the Geneva Canton (1846-53, 1855-61); founder of the Swiss Bank, pursued a pro-Bonapartist policy. — 17, 63, 99, 115, 129, 188, 212, 224, 226, 284, 362, 525, 527, 555, 556
Page me41.672
Ferrand, William Bushfield — English landowner, Tory. — 544
Page me41.672
Fichte, Johann Gottlieb (1762-1814) — classical German philosopher. — 124, 131
Page me41.672
Fischart, Johann (c. 1545-1590) — German satirist. — 225

Page me41.672
Fischel, Eduard (1826-1863) — German journalist; belonged to the Party of Progress; assessor of the Berlin Municipal Court from 1858; editor of the Berlin Urquhartist journal Das Neue Portfolio (1859-60); sharply criticised the foreign policy pursued by Palmerston and Napoleon III. — 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 22, 29, 34, 40, 46, 112, 113, 130, 133, 135, 136, 141-44, 152, 153, 154, 155, 163, 164, 227
Page me41.672
Fleury, Charles (real name Carl Friedrich August Krause) (b. 1824) — merchant in London; Prussian spy and police agent. — 84, 141, 146-51
Page me41.672
Flocon, Ferdinand (1800-1866) — French journalist and politician; petty-bourgeois democrat; an editor of La Réforme; member of the Provisional Government (1848). — 95, 101-02
Page me41.672
Floyd, John Buchanan (1807-1863) — American statesman, Democrat; Governor of Virginia (1850-53); Secretary of War (1857-60); fought in the Civil War on the side of the Southerners. — 307, 429
Page me41.672
Föster, Friedrich Christoph (1791-1868) — Prussian historian, writer and poet. — 271
Page me41.672
Fould, Achille (1800-1867) — French banker and politician, Orleanist, subsequently Bonapartist; several times Minister of Finance between 1849 and 1867; Minister of State and Minister of the Imperial Court (1852-1860). — 329
Page me41.672
Fourier, François Marie Charles (1772-1837) — French utopian socialist. — 265, 285
Page me41.672
Francis II (1836-1894) — King of Naples and Sicily (1859-60); son of Ferdinand II nicknamed King Bomba for the bombardment of Messina in 1848. — 189, 205
Page me41.672
Francis Joseph I (1830-1916) — Emperor of Austria (1848-1916). — 173, 242, 492
Page me41.672
Francoeur, Louis Benjamin (1773-1849) — French mathematician, author of several textbooks on mathematics, astronomy and mechanics. — 532
Page me41.672
Frank, A. — Paris publisher in the 1840s-early 1860s. — 101
Page me41.672
Franklin, William Buel (1823-1903) — American general, participated in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; commanded two corps in the battle of Fredericksberg, Virginia. — 437
Page me41.672
Frankowski, Leon (c. 1843-1863) —

Page Break me41.673
participant in the Polish national liberation movement; member of the Central National Committee, belonged to the party of the 'Red'; leader of the insurgents in the Lublin province in 1863; taken prisoner and executed on June 4. — 456

Page me41.673
Frederick I (1657-1713) — first King of Prussia, crowned in Königsberg on 18 January 1701. — 319
Page me41.673
Frederick I (1826-1907) — virtual ruler of Baden from 1852; Grand Duke of Baden from 1856. — 473
Page me41.673
Frederick II (the Great) (1712-1786) — King of Prussia (1740-86). — 462
Page me41.673
Frederick William III (1770-1840) — King of Prussia (1797-1840). — 460
Page me41.673
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 23, 238, 271, 377, 428, 537
Page me41.673
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German poet; member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); clerk of the London branch of the Swiss Bank in the 1850s-1860s; withdrew from revolutionary activity in the 1850s. — 3, 4, 9, 11, 12, 15, 16, 30, 31, 35, 36, 43, 47, 54-57, 67, 68, 73, 80-88, 95, 113, 118, 124, 133, 188, 192, 195, 203, 224-26, 233, 235-37, 246, 251, 252, 255, 256, 258, 261, 268, 323, 335, 384, 422, 424, 425, 432, 435, 448, 475, 489, 502, 525, 527, 534-35, 546, 548, 555, 556, 557, 576
Page me41.673
Freiligrath, Ida (1817-1899) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's wife. — 556, 576
Page me41.673
Freiligrath, Louise (married name Wiens) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's daughter. — 556
Page me41.673
Frémont, John Charles (1813-1890) — American traveller and politician; Left-wing Republican; candidate to the presidency (1856); commanded the Northern troops in Missouri (up to November 1861) and Virginia (1862) during the Civil War. — 345, 361, 363, 372, 386
Page me41.673
Frerichs, Friedrich Theodor von (1819-1885) — German clinician and pathologist, professor at Berlin University and director of a clinic from 1859. — 286
Page me41.673
Freytag, Gustav (1816-1895) — German playwright and novelist. — 270, 289
Page me41.673
Friedländer, Julius — assessor in Berlin, brother of Max Friedländer. — 280, 282, 292
Page me41.673
Friedländer, Max (1829-1872) — German democratic journalist; member of the editorial boards of the Neue Oder-Zeitung (1855) and Die Presse (1862) to which Marx contributed; cousin of Ferdinand Lassalle. — 280, 292, 323, 353, 358, 370
Page me41.673
Friedrich Christian August, Prince of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg- Augustenburg (1829-1880) — Duke of Schleswig-Holstein under the name of Friedrich VIII (from 1863). — 494, 496, 503, 508, 511, 549, 554
Page me41.673

Friedrich Karl Nikolaus, Prince (1828-1885) — Prussian general, Commander-in-Chief of the Prussian and then of the Allied army in the Danish war of 1864. — 200-01, 280, 519
Page me41.673
Fröbel, Julius (1805-1893) — German writer and publisher of progressive literature; democrat, later liberal; participated in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to America in 1849; returned to Europe in 1857. — 20, 61, 101

Page me41.673
G

Page me41.673
Gabriel — a dentist in London. — 220
Page me41.673
Ganesco, Grégory (c. 1830-1877) — French journalist, Romanian by birth; during the Second Empire a Bonapartist; subsequently supported the Thiers government; editor of Courrier du Dimanche (1860-61). — 215

Page Break me41.674
Page me41.674
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; participated in the revolutionary movement in South America (1830s-40s) and in Italy (1848-49); led the Italian people's struggle for national liberation and the unification of the country (1850s-60s); supported the Paris Commune in the 1870s. — 155, 165, 168, 171, 172, 174, 178, 181, 182, 184, 185, 189, 191, 192, 193, 195, 196, 199, 200, 202-07, 237, 246, 265, 293, 321, 322, 333, 356, 389-90, 417, 513, 516-18, 544
Page me41.674
Garnier-Pagés, Louis Antoine (1803-1878) — French politician, moderate republican; member of the Provisional Government (1848); during the Second Empire, member of the Corps législatif (from 1864) and the Government of National Defence (1870-71). — 8, 575

Page me41.674
Gerstenberg, Isidor (d. 1876) — London banker, a supporter of Gottfried Kinkel. — 81, 389
Page me41.674
Gibson, Thomas Milner (1806-1884) — British politician; a leader of the Free Traders, subsequently liberal; President of the Board of Trade (1859-65, 1865-66). — 335
Page me41.674
Gilpin, Charles — managing director of the London branch of the Swiss Bank, creditor of The People's Paper; M.P. — 85
Page me41.674
Gipperich (Gibberich), Joseph — German tailor; member of a Paris community supporting the separatist Willich-Schapper group after the split of the Communist League; one of the accused in the case of the so-called Franco-German plot in Paris in February 1852; later emigrated to England. — 148

Page me41.674
Gisquet, Henri-Joseph (1792-1866) — French businessman and politician; prefect of the Paris police (1831-36). — 80
Page me41.674
Gladstone, Robert (1811-1872) — British businessman, philanthropist; William Gladstone's cousin. — 480
Page me41.674
Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898) — British statesman, Tory and later Peelite; a leader of the Liberal Party in the latter half of the century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852-55, 1859-66) and Prime Minister (1868-74, 1880-85, 1886, 1892-94). — 335
Page me41.674
Glennie, John Stuart — British author, accompanied Buckle in his journey in Palestine (1862). — 381
Page me41.674
Glücksburg — see Christian IX
Page me41.674
Gneist, Heinrich Rudolf Hermann Friedrich von (1816-1895) — German lawyer and politician, professor at Berlin University, member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (from 1858) and of the North German and German Imperial Diets (1867-84); belonged to liberal opposition (early 1860s); National-Liberal from 1866. — 494
Page me41.674
Göbel — presiding judge of the Assizes in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 140, 151
Page me41.674
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 159, 265, 379, 507, 515
Page me41.674
Goldheim — Prussian police officer, a secret agent of the Prussian police in London in the early 1850s. — 140, 146, 147, 149-51, 248
Page me41.674
Goldmann, Karl Eduard (died c. 1863) — German journalist. — 393
Page me41.674
Goudchaux, Michel (1797-1862) — French banker, republican; Minister of Finance in the Provisional Government (1848); a leader of the republican opposition to the Bonapartist regime in the 1850s. — 439

Page Break me41.675
Page me41.675
Grabow, Wilhelm (1802-1874) — Prussian politician, moderate liberal; President of the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848; Deputy Chairman (1850-61) and Chairman (1862-66) of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. — 377
Page me41.675
Grant, Ulysses Simpson (1822-1885) — American general and statesman, Republican; commanded the Northern troops in Kentucky and Tennessee in 1861-62; Commander-in-

Chief from March 1864; Secretary of War (1867-68), President of the USA (1869-77). — 360, 478, 530, 531, 538-40, 558-59, 561
Page me41.675
Greeley, Horace (1811-1872) — American journalist and politician; founder and editor of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 359, 362
Page me41.675
Green — Marx's acquaintance in London. — 171, 193
Page me41.675
Greif — Prussian police officer; one of the chiefs of the Prussian secret service in London in the early 1850s. — 140, 141, 146-50, 241, 248
Page me41.675
Griesheim, Karl Gustav von (1798-1854) — Prussian general and writer; reactionary; War Ministry representative in the Prussian National Assembly (1848). — 328
Page me41.675
Grimm brothers — see Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl and Grimm, Wilhelm Carl
Page me41.675
Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) — German philologist, professor at Berlin University, author of a historical grammar of the German language, and of the folklore adaptations; liberal. — 572, 582
Page me41.675
Grimm, Wilhelm Carl (1786-1859) — German philologist, co-author of his brother Jacob Grimm in his main works; professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin; liberal. — 572, 582
Page me41.675
Grove, Sir William Robert (1811-1896) — British physicist, qualified as a barrister. — 551, 553
Page me41.675
Grün, Karl Theodor Ferdinand (pen-name Ernst von der Haide) (1817-1887) — German writer, a 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; petty-bourgeois democrat during the 1848-49 revolution; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing). — 138, 139, 187, 190
Page me41.675
Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874) — French historian and statesman; de facto directed France's domestic and foreign policy from 1840 until the February revolution of 1848. — 101
Page me41.675
Gumpert — Eduard Gumpert's wife. — 539
Page me41.675
Gumpert, Eduard (d. 1893) — German physician in Manchester; a friend of Marx and Engels. — 68, 112, 113, 133, 138, 139, 185, 190, 204, 211, 222, 240, 243, 245, 250, 256, 282, 285, 290, 322, 423, 447, 460, 483, 490, 518, 520-21, 523, 524, 525, 529, 531, 539
Page me41.675
Guthrie, James (1792-1869) — American statesman and big businessman; Democrat; Secretary of the Treasury (1853-57) in the Pierce Administration; advocated compromise with the slave-owners of the South. — 308-09

H

Page me41.675
Habsburgs (or Hapsburgs) — dynasty of emperors of the Holy Roman Empire from 1273 to 1806 (with intervals), of Spanish kings (1516-1700), of emperors of Austria (1804-67) and of Austria-Hungary (1867-1918). — 229, 230
Page me41.675
Hadji Hayden Hassan — Circassian deputy to London in 1862. — 491
Page me41.675
Häfner, Leopold (b. 1820) — Austrian journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat; participated in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to France. — 18, 34
Page me41.675
Halleck, Henry Wager (1815-1872) — American general, moderate Republican;

Page Break me41.676
commander of the Missouri Department (November 1861-March 1862) and the Mississippi army (March-July 1862); Commander-in-Chief of the Northern Army (July 1862-March 1864). — 360, 371-72, 386, 420
Page me41.676
Hansemann, David Justus (1790-1864) — German capitalist, banker, a leader of the Rhine liberal bourgeoisie; Prussian Minister of Finance (March-September 1848). — 287
Page me41.676
Harney, George Julian (1817-1897) — prominent figure in the English labour movement, a Chartist leader (Left wing); editor of The Northern Star and other Chartist periodicals; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels. — 527, 534
Page me41.676
Hartmann, Moritz (1821-1872) — Austrian writer; a 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (extreme Left). — 212
Page me41.676
Hatzfeldt zu Trachenberg-Schönstein, Maximilian Friedrich Karl Franz, Count von (1813-1859) — Prussian diplomat; envoy to Paris in 1849; Sophie von Hatzfeldt's brother. — 147
Page me41.676
Hatzfeldt, Sophie, Countess von (1805-1881) — friend and follower of Ferdinand Lassalle. — 35, 124, 217, 251, 252, 257, 269-71, 275, 278, 280, 282-85, 288, 291, 293, 298, 299, 313, 315, 326, 358, 389, 563, 578, 579, 586
Page me41.676
Haupt, Hermann Wilhelm (born c. 1831) — German shop assistant, member of the Communist League; arrested with other Cologne Communists he turned King's evidence and was released before the trial; fled to Brazil. — 74, 149
Page me41.676
Hecker, Friedrich Karl Franz (1811-1881) — German democrat, a leader of the Baden republican uprising in April 1848; emigrated to the USA where he fought in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 265, 361
Page me41.676

Heckscher, Martin — Frederick Engels' physician, a German who lived in Manchester. — 68, 129, 134, 167, 168, 211, 218, 240
Page me41.676
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 19, 220, 265, 281, 330, 333, 381, 546
Page me41.676
Heilbronner, Karl (1789-1864) — Bavarian writer and traveller, contributed to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. — 14
Page me41.676
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 33, 101, 159, 342, 462
Page me41.676
Heintzmann, Alexis (born c. 1812) — Prussian lawyer, liberal; member of the Committee of Public Safety during the Elberfeld uprising in May 1849; emigrated to London; Chairman of the London branch of the National Association (1861). — 297, 301, 302, 309-11, 319, 342
Page me41.676
Heinzen, Karl (1809-1880) — German journalist, radical; from 1847 Marx's opponent; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, later to England and in the autumn of 1850 to the USA. — 10, 127, 263
Page me41.676
Heise, Hermann (1820-1860) — German democratic journalist; participated in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, later emigrated to England. — 16, 21, 67
Page me41.676
Hennessy, John Pope (1834-1891) — Irish politician, M.P. — 484
Page me41.676
Henry, Sir Thomas (1807-1876) — English judge. — 32, 38, 53, 78
Page me41.676
Heraclitus (c. 540-c. 480 B.C.) — Greek philosopher, one of the founders of dialectics. — 142, 281, 567
Page me41.676
Herder, Johann Gottfried von (1744-1803) — German writer and literary theorist. — 265

Page Break me41.677
Page me41.677
Herwegh, Georg Friedrich (1817-1875) — German democratic poet; participated in the 1848-49 revolution; emigrated to Switzerland; supported Lassalle in the 1860s. — 101, 389, 489, 561
Page me41.677
Herzen, Alexander Ivanovich (1812-1870) — Russian revolutionary democrat, materialist philosopher and writer; left Russia in 1847; lived in England (from 1852) where he established the Free Russian Press and published the periodical Polyarnaya Zvezda (Polar Star) and the newspaper Kolokol (The Bell). — 341, 454, 492
Page me41.677
Hess, Moses (1812-1875) — German radical writer, a 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; member of the Communist League; after the split in the League sided with the sectarian Willich-Schapper group; a Lassallean in the 1860s. — 156

Page me41.677
Hess, Sibylle (née Pesch) (1820-1903) — Moses Hess's wife. — 185, 580
Page me41.677
Heydt, August, Baron von der (1801-1874) — Prussian statesman; Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works (from December 1848 to 1862); Minister of Finance (May-September 1862, 1866-69). — 506
Page me41.677
Hiersemenzel, Karl Christian Eduard (1825-1896) — German lawyer, judge in Berlin from 1859, editor of the Preußische Gerichts-Zeitung; Lassalle's friend. — 282
Page me41.677
Hildebrand (1814-1903) (real name Beets, Nicolaas) — Dutch poet and writer. — 274, 510, 516
Page me41.677
Hill — employee at the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels in the 1850s-60s. — 392, 434, 447, 540
Page me41.677
Hinckeldey, Karl Ludwig Friedrich von (1805-1856) — Prussian government official, Chief Commissioner of Berlin police from 1848; chief of the police department in the Ministry of the Interior from 1853. — 74, 149, 287
Page me41.677
Hirsch, Johann Peter Wilhelm (b. 1830) — commercial clerk from Hamburg; Prussian police agent in London in the early 1850s. — 16, 24, 74, 81, 141, 146-51
Page me41.677
Hirschfeld, Rudolph — owner of a printshop in London which printed Die Neue Zeit and the weekly Hermann; Marx's pamphlet Herr Vogt was printed there in 1860. — 190, 199, 202, 208, 211, 226, 234, 236, 298
Page me41.677
Hobbes, Thomas (1588-1679) — English philosopher. — 381
Page me41.677
Höchster — Ernst Hermann Höchster's son; an employee in the Koenigswarter Bank in Paris, later at a private firm in London. — 235
Page me41.677
Höchster, Ernst Hermann (born c. 1811) — Elberfeld lawyer, petty-bourgeois democrat, Chairman of the Committee of Public Safety during the uprising in Elberfeld (May 1849); emigrated after the failure of the uprising; lived in Paris in the 1860s; abandoned politics. — 232, 235
Page me41.677
Hodde, Lucien de la (Delahodde, pseudonym Duprez) (1808-1865) — French writer; participated in secret revolutionary societies during the Restoration and July monarchy, police agent. — 12, 15, 148, 149
Page me41.677
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 460, 462, 477
Page me41.677
Hollinger — Fidelio Hollinger's wife. — 31, 37
Page me41.677

Hollinger, Fidelio — German refugee, owner of a printshop in London which printed Das Volk. — 30-32 36, 37, 41, 42, 60-65, 68, 87, 104
Page me41.677
Homer — semi-legendary Greek epic poet, author of the Iliad and the Odyssey. — 311, 357

Page Break me41.678
Page me41.678
Hooker, Joseph (called 'Fighting Joe') (1814-1879) — American general, Abolitionist, Republican; first commanded a corps of the Northern army on the Potomac (1862) and then the whole Potomac army (January-June 1863). — 420, 430, 454, 478
Page me41.678
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.). — Roman poet. — 92, 354, 452
Page me41.678
Hörfel, Gustav — Austrian petty-bourgeois democrat; emigrated to Paris in 1850 and became an agent of the French police. — 70, 122
Page me41.678
Horner, Leonard (1785-1864) — English geologist and public figure, factory inspector (1833-59). — 5
Page me41.678
Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885) — French writer; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; opposed Louis Bonaparte. — 513, 519
Page me41.678
Humboldt, Alexander, Baron von (1769-1859) — German naturalist and traveller. — 116, 131, 153, 159, 271, 567
Page me41.678
Huxley, Thomas Henry (1825-1895) — English naturalist, biologist; a friend and follower of Charles Darwin; popularised his teaching. — 449, 465

Page me41.678
I

Page me41.678
Imandt, Peter (born c. 1824) — German teacher; democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; emigrated first to Switzerland and, in 1852, to London; member of the Communist League; follower of Marx and Engels. — 16, 21, 34, 71, 213, 324, 398, 401, 420, 576, 579
Page me41.678
Imbert, Jacques (1793-1851) — French socialist; took part in the Lyons uprising of 1834; refugee in Belgium in the 1840s: Vice-President of the Brussels Democratic Association (1847); commandant of the Tuileries after the February 1848 revolution. — 102
Page me41.678
Ives, Malcom — American journalist, Democrat; contributor to The New-York Herald from the late 1850s. — 345

Page me41.678
J

Page me41.678
Jackson, Thomas Jonathan (1824-1863) — American general; commanded the Southern troops in Virginia (1861-63) during the Civil War; was nicknamed Stonewall Jackson after the battle of Bull Run (July 1861). — 386, 414, 416
Page me41.678
Jacobi, Abraham (1830-1919) — German physician, member of the Communist League, defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), acquitted by the jury; later emigrated to the USA where he disseminated Marxism in the workers' press; took part in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; President of the Medical Academy in New York (1885-89). — 89, 99, 100, 541
Page me41.678
James, Edwin John (1812-1882) — British lawyer, M.P.; counsel for the defence at Simon Bernard's trial in April 1858. — 33, 203
Page me41.678
Jardine, David (1794-1860) — British lawyer; a magistrate in London from 1839. — 151
Page me41.678
Jecker, Jean Baptiste (c. 1810-1871) — Swiss banker; French subject from 1862; was close to the ruling circles of Bonapartist France; assisted the French intervention in Mexico; held as hostage and shot by the Communards — 363, 456
Page me41.678
Jettchen — see Anrooij, Henriette Sophia van
Page me41.678
Johnston Albert Sidney (1803-1862) — American general, Commander of the Western Department of the Confederate army (1861-62) during the Civil War; killed in the battle of Corinth. — 346

Page Break me41.679
Page me41.679
Johnston, Joseph Eggleston (1807-1891) — American general, took part in the Mexican War (1846-48), during the Civil War, commander of the Southern troops in Virginia (1861-62), later in Tennessee and Mississippi. — 346
Page me41.679
Jones, Ernest Charles (1819-1869) — prominent figure in the English labour movement, proletarian poet and journalist, Left-wing Chartist leader; friend of Marx and Engels. — 33, 85, 86, 95, 103, 154, 284, 526, 530, 542, 553, 554
Page me41.679
Jottrand, Lucien Léopold (1804-1877) — Belgian lawyer and journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat; President of the Brussels Democratic Association (1847). — 95, 102, 107
Page me41.679

Juárez, Benito Pablo (1806-1872) — Mexican statesman, fought for national independence; leader of the Liberals during the Civil War (1858-60) and French intervention in Mexico (1861-67); President (1858-72). — 363
Page me41.679
Juch, Hermann — German journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat; refugee in London, Kinkel's supporter, editor of the Hermann (from July 1859). — 16, 36, 80, 81, 146, 297, 301, 302, 354, 355
Page me41.679
Julian (Flavius Claudius Julianus), the Apostate (c. 331-363) — Roman Emperor (361-63). — 377
Page me41.679
Juta, Johann Carl (Jaan Carel) (1824-1886) — Dutch merchant, husband of Karl Marx's sister Louise. — 239
Page me41.679
Juta, Louise (1821-c. 1865) — Karl Marx's sister, Johann Carl Juta's wife. — 239, 499
Page me41.679
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis) (born c. 60-died after 127) — Roman satirical poet. — 327

Page me41.679
K

Page me41.679
Kapp, Friedrich (1824-1884) — German historian and politician, petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; refugee in the USA (1850-70); visited Germany in the early autumn of 1862. — 416
Page me41.679
Karadzic, Vuk Stefanovic (Karatsich, Vuk Stefanovich) (1787-1864) — Serbian philologist, historian and folklore specialist, founder of the modern Serbian literary language. — 473
Page me41.679
Kavannagh (Cavanagh) — one of Marx's acquaintances in London. — 17
Page me41.679
Keil, Ernst (1816-1878) — German journalist, publisher and bookseller, petty-bourgeois democrat, founded the weekly Gartenlaube. — 233, 354
Page me41.679
Kertbény, Károly Mária (real name Benkert) (1824-1882) — Hungarian man of letters, liberal, was in contact with the leaders of the 1848-49 revolution. — 533
Page me41.679
Kinglake, Alexander William (1809-1891) — English historian and politician, Liberal M.P. (1857-68). — 173, 175, 456, 478, 482, 517
Page me41.679
Kinkel, Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; sentenced to life imprisonment by a Prussian court; in 1850 escaped and emigrated to England; a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees in London; an editor of the Hermann (1859); opposed Marx and Engels. — 4, 12, 15, 16, 27, 28, 43, 48, 70, 84, 98, 236, 237, 244, 246, 249, 253, 262, 293, 297, 298, 301, 302, 304, 309-11, 319, 322, 354, 355, 369, 419, 580

Page me41.679
Kinkel, Johanna (née Mockel) (1810- 1858) — German writer, Gottfried Kinkel's wife. — 92. 262, 580

Page Break me41.680
Page me41.680
Klapka, György (1820-1892) — general in the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49); emigrated in 1849; maintained contact with Bonapartist circles in the 1850s; returned to Hungary after the amnesty (1867). — 17, 79, 84, 85, 109, 247, 362, 493, 555-57
Page me41.680
Klein, Johann Jacob (c. 1818-c. 1896) — Cologne physician, member of the Communist League; a defendant in the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); acquitted by the jury; took part in the German workers' movement in the early 1860s. — 289, 369, 371
Page me41.680
Klings, Karl (born c. 1825-died after 1874) — German metal-worker, member of the Communist League, then of the General Association of German Workers; emigrated to the USA in 1865 where he worked in the Chicago Section of the First International. — 533
Page me41.680
Knorsch — German lawyer, Chairman of the German Workers' Educational Society in Düsseldorf (1860). — 189
Page me41.680
Koenigswarter, Maximilien (1815-1878) — French banker, deputy to the Corps législatif (1852-63). — 235
Page me41.680
Kolatschek, Adolph (1821-1889) — Austrian journalist and politician; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49); petty-bourgeois democrat; publisher of the Deutsche Monatsschrift (1850-51) and the Stimmen der Zeit (1858-62). — 206, 208, 212, 216, 253, 262, 321, 324
Page me41.680
Kölle, Christoph Friedrich Karl (1781-1848) — German diplomat and writer; secretary of the Württemberg embassies in Paris, The Hague, Munich, Karlsruhe and Dresden (1806-14); Württemberg chargé d'affaires in Rome (1817-33). — 358
Page me41.680
Koller — a partner in the London publishing house of Petsch & Co. — 327, 328, 334, 340, 344, 347, 362
Page me41.680
Kölliker, Rudolf Albert von (1817-1905) — German histologist and embryologist; professor of anatomy at Würzburg University (1849-1902). — 546
Page me41.680
Komp, Albrecht — German refugee in the USA, an organiser of the Communist Club in New York (1857); Joseph Weydemeyer's friend. — 81
Page me41.680

Köppen, Karl Friedrich (1808-1863) — German radical journalist and historian; Young Hegelian; later an authority on the history of Buddhism. — 286, 287
Page me41.680
Korn, Adolf (1822-1904) — Prussian officer (until 1845); took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to Switzerland after its defeat and to Argentina in 1857. — 70, 71
Page me41.680
Ko&sa;cielski, Wladyslaw (1818-1895) — Polish democrat; took part in the national liberation movement in Posen (1848), emigrated to Berlin; maintained contact with the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; general in the Turkish army under the name of Sefer Pasha in the 1850s. — 23, 91, 465, 466
Page me41.680
Kosel, Esther (c. 1786-1865) — sister of Karl Marx's father. — 498, 501, 584
Page me41.680
Kossuth, Lajos (1802-1894) — leader of the Hungarian national liberation movement; head of the revolutionary government (1848-49); after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and later to England and the USA; sought for support in the Bonapartist circles in the 1850s. — 12, 17, 18, 27, 84, 106, 125, 148, 157, 181, 182, 196, 203, 215, 284, 362, 468, 493, 505
Page me41.680
Krause, Carl Friedrich August — see Fleury, Charles
Page me41.680
Krause, Friedrich August (d. 1834) — shoemaker, Charles Fleury's father. — 148

Page Break me41.681
Page me41.681
Kugelmann, Ludwig (1828-1902) — German physician, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; member of the First International; corresponded with Marx from 1862 to 1874; friend of Marx and Engels. — 435-37, 461, 465, 582, 583
Page me41.681
Kuhlmann, Georg (b. 1812) — secret informer in the service of the Austrian government; in the 1840s preached 'true socialism' among the German artisans, followers of Weitling, in Switzerland; posing as a prophet he used religious phraseology. — 9
Page me41.681
Küpper — an innkeeper in Düsseldorf. — 206
Page me41.681
Kustar, Ogli Ismael — Circassian deputy to London in 1862. — 491

Page me41.681
L

Page me41.681
Laboulaye, Edouard René Lefebvre de (1811-1883) — French lawyer, journalist and liberal politician. — 502
Page me41.681

Lacambre, Cyrill — French physician, refugee in Spain in the 1860s; Blanqui's close friend. — 326
Page me41.681
Ladendorf(f), August — German pettybourgeois democrat, philosopher; sentenced to five years' imprisonment on a trumped-up charge of conspiracy (1854). — 148
Page me41.681
La Farina, Giuseppe (1815-1863) — Italian liberal politician, writer and historian; a leader of the revolutionary movement in Sicily (1848-49); Cavour's emissary in Sicily in 1860 (up to July); adviser to the viceroy of Sicily (October 1860-January 1861). — 172, 246
Page me41.681
Lamennais (La Mennais), Hugues Félicité Robert de (1782-1854) — French abbot and philosophical writer. — 452
Page me41.681
Lamoriciére, Christophe Léon Louis Juchault de (1806-1865) — French general, moderate Republican; took part in suppressing the June 1848 uprising in Paris; War Minister in the Cavaignac government (June-December 1848); expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; commanded the Papal army in 1860. — 195, 196, 199
Page me41.681
Langiewicz, Maryan Melchior (1827-1887) — participant in the Polish national liberation movement; a Right-wing leader during the 1863 insurrection in Poland, after its defeat fled to Austria where he was arrested and kept in prison until 1865. — 456, 461, 464
Page me41.681
Lapinski, Theophil (Teofil) (1827-1886) — Polish general; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; served in the Turkish army under the name of Tevfik Bey; fought against Russia in Circassia (1857-58); headed a military expedition to help the Polish insurgents in 1863. — 489, 491-93
Page me41.681
L'Aspée, Henry de — Wiesbaden police official; emigrated to London in the early 1850s, helped to expose provocative methods used by the Prussian authorities in staging the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 146, 147
Page me41.681
Lassal, Heimann (d. 1862) — German merchant; Ferdinand Lassalle's father. — 406, 408, 441
Page me41.681
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German journalist and lawyer; took part in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49); founder of the General Association of German Workers (1863). — 6, 9-13, 15, 16, 18-21, 23, 26-29, 33-35, 38, 48, 50-52, 58, 59, 88, 90-92, 108-110, 112, 116, 117, 124, 131, 132, 141-43, 145, 152, 155, 160, 164, 167, 169, 186-92, 194-97, 203, 204, 207, 208, 210, 212, 217, 233, 245, 247, 251-54, 257, 258, 261, 263, 267, 269-72, 275, 278-82, 284-86, 291-93, 298, 302, 303, 305, 312, 313, 315-20, 322, 325, 330, 333,

Page Break me41.682

341, 346, 355, 358, 376-79, 381-85, 389-91, 393, 398, 399, 401-13, 415, 419, 422, 424-27, 440, 441, 445, 451, 452, 466, 469, 470, 473, 475, 478-80, 482-84, 488, 489, 494, 507, 533, 534, 537, 539, 555-58, 560, 561, 563, 567, 573, 578, 579, 585, 586
Page me41.682
Lee, Robert Edward (1807-1870) — American general; took part in the war against Mexico (1846-48); suppressed the uprising of John Brown (1859); during the Civil War commanded the Confederate forces in Virginia (1862-65); Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate army from February to April 1865. — 457, 484, 530, 531, 539, 540, 558
Page me41.682
Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm, Baron von (1646-1716) — German philosopher and mathematician. — 115
Page me41.682
Lelewel, Joachim (1786-1861) — Polish historian and revolutionary; took part in the 1830-31 Polish insurrection; a leader of the democratic wing of the Polish emigrants (1847-48). — 23, 95, 102, 114
Page me41.682
Lenchen — see Demuth, Helene
Page me41.682
Lepsius, Karl Richard (1810-1884) — German Egyptologist. — 286
Page me41.682
Lessner, Friedrich (1825-1910) — German tailor; participant in the German and international working-class movement, member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; a defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); refugee in London from 1856; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London and of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 3
Page me41.682
Levasseur de la Sarthe, René (1747-1834) — leading figure in the French Revolution, deputy to the Convention, Jacobin; author of the memoirs on the French Revolution. — 114
Page me41.682
Levy, Gustav — German socialist from the Rhine Province; sent as delegate by Düsseldorf workers to Marx in London in 1856; later an active member of the General Association of German Workers. — 82, 90
Page me41.682
Levy, Joseph Moses (1812-1888) — a founder and the publisher of The Daily Telegraph. — 33
Page me41.682
Lewald, Fanny — see Stahr, Fanny
Page me41.682
Lewald, Otto (1813-1874) — German lawyer, Fanny Lewald's brother. — 81
Page me41.682
Lewis, Sir George Cornewall (1806-1863) — British statesman, Whig, Secretary to the Treasury (1850-52), Chancellor of the Exchequer (1855-58), Home Secretary (1859-61) and Secretary for War (1861-63). — 335
Page me41.682
Liebig, Justus, Baron von (1803-1873) — German agrochemist. — 159

Page me41.682
Liebknecht, Ernestine (d. 1867) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's first wife. — 77, 216, 573, 586, 587
Page me41.682
Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; participated in the 1848-49 revolution; member of the Communist League; refugee in London; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; returned to Germany in 1862; opposed Lassalle's policy of conciliation with Bismarck; one of the founders and leaders of the German Social-Democratic Party (Eisenach); member of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 3, 12, 31, 34, 35, 37, 41, 44, 53, 55, 56, 60, 61, 63-67, 77, 78, 105, 113, 114, 133, 134, 149-51, 216, 221, 224, 228, 232, 262, 502, 537-39, 541, 545, 552, 553, 561, 573, 586, 587
Page me41.682
Lincoln, Abraham (1809-1865) — American statesman, a leader of the Republican Party; President of the

Page Break me41.683
United States (1861-65); under the influence of the masses carried out important bourgeois-democratic reforms during the Civil War, thus making possible the adoption of revolutionary methods of warfare; was shot by a slave-owners' agent in April 1865. — 297, 301, 306, 335, 387, 400, 420, 421, 428, 462, 559, 561, 562
Page me41.683
Lippe, Leopold, Count zur (1815-1889) — Prussian statesman and lawyer; Public Prosecutor in Berlin (1860); Minister of Justice (1862-67). — 131, 144, 186, 219
Page me41.683
Lochner, Georg (born c. 1824) — carpenter; prominent figure in the German working-class movement; member of the Communist League, German Workers' Educational Society in London and the General Council of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 134
Page me41.683
Loening — German publisher. — 64
Page me41.683
Lommel, Georg — German pettybourgeois democrat, participant in the Baden uprising (April 1848); emigrated to Switzerland. — 115, 118, 119, 123, 126, 127, 129, 141, 144, 155, 158, 160, 163, 164, 170, 172, 211, 227, 327
Page me41.683
Lord, Percival Barton (1808-1840) — British physician and diplomat. — 546
Page me41.683
Lormier, Marie — an acquaintance of the Marx family. — 527
Page me41.683
Louis XIV (1638-1715) — King of France (1643-1715). — 318
Page me41.683
Louis XVI (1754-1793) — King of France (1774-92); guillotined during the French Revolution. — 430
Page me41.683

Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orléans, King of France (1830-48). — 93, 462, 463
Page me41.683
Louis Philippe Albert d'Orléans, Count of Paris (1838-1894) — grandson of Louis Philippe, pretender to the French throne. — 94
Page me41.683
Lucan (Marcus Annaeus Lucanus) (39-65) — Roman poet. — 367
Page me41.683
Lucullus (Lucius Licinius Lucullus) (c. 117-c. 56 B.C.) — Roman general, famous for his wealth and sumptuous feasts. — 257, 265
Page me41.683
Ludwig III (1806-1877) — Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt (1848-77). — 373
Page me41.683
Lüning, Otto (1818-1868) — German physician and journalist; a 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; an editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung. — 22
Page me41.683
Lupus — see Wolff, Wilhelm
Page me41.683
Lützow, Ludwig Adolph Wilhelm, Baron von (1782-1834) — Prussian army officer, later general; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France. — 367
Page me41.683
Lyell, Charles (1797-1875) — British scientist, geologist. — 465, 473

Page me41.683
M

Page me41.683
McAdam (Mac Adam), John — Scottish journalist from Glasgow; supported the national liberation movement in Hungary, Italy and other European countries in the 1850s. — 17, 467
Page me41.683
McClellan, George Brinton (1826-1885) — American general and big railway businessman; was close to the Democrats; championed a compromise with Southern slave-owners; Commander-in-Chief of the Northern army (November 1861-March 1862) and Commander of the army on the Potomac (March-November 1862) during the US Civil War; candidate for the presidency (1864). — 345, 360-62, 365-67, 372, 384, 386, 387, 400, 415, 420, 428, 430, 431, 440
Page me41.683
Macdonald — British army officer, arrested in Bonn and brought to trial

Page Break me41.684
on the charge of insubordination to local authorities (September 1860). — 284, 297, 301, 354
Page me41.684

McDowell, Irvin (1818-1885) — American general; during the Civil War commanded the Northern troops in Virginia (1861-62). — 360, 372, 386
Page me41.684
McElrath, Thomas (1807-1888) — American lawyer, publisher and politician, Abolitionist, co-founder and business manager (1841-57) of the New-York Daily Tribune. — 362
Page me41.684
Machiavelli, Niccoló (1469-1527) — Italian politician, historian and writer. — 302
Page me41.684
Mackay, Charles (1814-1889) — Scottish poet and journalist; New York special correspondent of The Times in 1862-65. — 439, 457
Page me41.684
Mädler, Johann Heinrich von (1794-1874) — German astronomer. — 354
Page me41.684
Majewski, Karol (1833-1897) — participant in the Polish national liberation movement, member of the Central National Committee; was close to the party of the 'Whites'; headed the National Government of Poland (June-September 1863). — 492
Page me41.684
Malthus, Thomas Robert (1766-1834) — British clergyman and economist; author of a population theory. — 381
Page me41.684
Manetho (end of the 4th-first half of the 3rd cent. B.C.) — Egyptian high priest and annalist during the reigns of Ptolemy I and Ptolemy II; author of a history of Egypt written in Greek. — 286
Page me41.684
Manteuffel, Otto Theodor, Baron von (1805-1882) — Prussian statesman; Minister of the Interior (1848-50); Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (1850-58); deputy to the Lower Chamber (1859 and 1860) and Upper Chamber (1864) of the Prussian Provincial Diet. — 248, 287, 288
Page me41.684
Marianne — see Creuz, Anna Maria
Page me41.684
Marie Antoinette (1755-1793) — Queen of France (1774-93); wife of Louis XVI, guillotined during the French Revolution. — 206
Page me41.684
Marilley, Étienne (1804-1889) — Swiss clergyman, Bishop of Fribourg (Freiburg) (1846-79); inspired the anti-democratic revolt in Fribourg on 24 October 1848. — 71
Page me41.684
Mario, Alberto (1825-1883) — Italian politician and writer; took part in Garibaldi's revolutionary campaign in South Italy (1860). — 379
Page me41.684
Markheim, Berta — a close acquaintance of Marx's wife Jenny. — 581, 583, 584
Page me41.684
Marotzki, H.E. — Protestant pastor in Manchester. — 525, 526
Page me41.684
Marriet (d. 1864) — Rode's son-in-law. — 526

Page me41.684
Marriet, Thekla — Rode's daughter, Marriet's wife. — 526
Page me41.684
Marx, Edgar (1847-1855) — Karl Marx's son. — 570, 572
Page me41.684
Marx, Eleanor (Tussy) (1855-1898) — Karl Marx's youngest daughter. — 8, 113, 135, 143, 180, 192, 195, 214, 216, 217, 221, 224, 228-30, 237, 240, 243, 258, 264, 272, 278, 283, 304, 313, 321, 331, 344, 355, 362, 365, 368, 369, 374, 380, 388, 399, 411, 419, 429, 433, 442, 444, 445, 449, 466, 468, 471, 473, 488, 494, 497, 500, 509, 510, 512, 514, 516, 524, 526, 527, 530, 532, 534, 537, 542, 543, 549, 550, 552, 554, 556, 557, 560, 568, 570-73, 575, 580, 581, 582, 587
Page me41.684
Marx, Franziska (1851-1852) — Karl Marx's daughter. — 670
Page me41.684
Marx, Heinrich (1777-1838) — Karl Marx's father; lawyer, Counsellor of Justice in Trier. — 96, 101

Page Break me41.685
Page me41.685
Marx, Heinrich Guido (1849-1850) — Karl Marx's son. — 670
Page me41.685
Marx, Henriette (née Pressburg or Presborck) (1787-1863) — Karl Marx's mother. — 220, 221, 268, 273, 279, 283, 324, 325, 337, 416, 442, 495, 499, 500, 579
Page me41.685
Marx, Jenny (née von Westphalen) (1814-1881) — Karl Marx's wife. — 8, 9, 20, 24, 39, 56, 76, 79, 85, 87, 88, 94, 101, 104, 113, 122, 135, 143, 176, 179, 182, 188, 192, 195, 201, 212, 214-18, 220, 221, 223-25, 228-31, 234, 238, 240, 243, 245, 247, 251, 258, 262-64, 272, 278, 279, 304, 313, 318, 324, 328, 331-35, 343, 344, 347, 353, 354, 357, 368, 374, 380, 388-90, 399, 411, 419, 429, 433, 434, 439, 442, 444-46, 448, 449, 468, 493, 494, 498, 499, 501, 502, 505, 510, 523-25, 527, 532, 534, 542, 544, 546, 549, 552, 553, 554, 556, 567-78, 580, 581, 583-89
Page me41.685
Marx, Jenny (1844-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest daughter. — 8, 113, 135, 143, 180, 192, 195, 214, 216, 217, 221, 224, 228-30, 237, 240, 243, 258, 264, 272, 278, 283, 304, 313, 331, 340, 343, 344, 347, 352, 355, 361, 362, 365, 366, 368, 369, 374, 380, 382, 383, 388, 399, 401, 411, 414, 415, 419, 428, 429, 433, 442, 444, 445, 449, 468, 475, 477, 479, 483, 488, 491, 494, 510, 514, 516, 517, 524, 526, 527, 531, 532, 534, 537, 542, 543, 546, 549, 550, 552, 554, 556, 560, 562, 568, 570, 571, 572, 573, 575, 580, 581, 582, 584, 587
Page me41.685
Marx, Laura (1845-1911) — Karl Marx's second daughter. — 8, 113, 135, 143, 180, 192, 195, 214, 216, 217, 221, 224, 228, 229, 230, 237, 240, 243, 258, 264, 272, 278, 283, 304, 313, 331, 344, 347, 362, 365, 368, 369, 374, 380, 388, 411, 419, 429, 433, 442, 444, 445, 449, 468, 488, 494, 510, 516, 524, 526, 527, 532, 534, 537, 542, 543, 549, 550, 552, 554, 556, 560, 562, 568, 570, 571, 572, 573, 575, 580, 581, 582, 587, 588
Page me41.685

Mason, James Murray (1798-1871) — American politician, big slaveowning planter, Chairman of the Senate commission on foreign affairs, advocate of secession; was sent by the Southern Confederacy on a diplomatic mission to England in the autumn of 1861; commissioner of the Confederacy in London (1862-65). — 329, 336
Page me41.685
Massol, Marie Alexandre (1806-1875) — French journalist; utopian socialist; contributed to the newspapers La Réforme and Voix du peuple (1848-50); Proudhon's friend. — 433, 439
Page me41.685
Masterman, John (c. 1782-1862) — British banker and politician, Tory M.P. — 434, 437
Page me41.685
Maupas, Charlemagne Émille de (1818-1888) — French lawyer, Bonapartist; Prefect of the Paris police (1851); an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of Police (1852-53). — 144, 148, 149
Page me41.685
Mayer, Michael (d. 1622) — German alchemist, physician-in-ordinary and counsellor of Emperor Rudolph II, author of works on chemistry, medicine and philosophy. — 490
Page me41.685
Maynard — American army officer, agent of the Southerners during the Civil War. — 345
Page me41.685
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — Italian revolutionary, leader of the national liberation movement, head of the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic (1849); an organiser of the Central Committee of European Democracy in London (1850); sought for support among the Bonapartists in the early 1850s; subsequently opposed Bonapartism. — 185, 193, 196, 246, 255, 264, 325, 390, 468
Page me41.685
Medici del Vascello, Giácomo (1817-1882) — Italian general, fought in the national liberation war of 1848-49 and defended the Roman Republic

Page Break me41.686
(April-July 1849); participated in Garibaldi's revolutionary campaign in South Italy (1860). — 321, 322
Page me41.686
Meissner, Otto Carl (1819-1902) — publisher in Hamburg, printed Marx's Capital and other works by Marx and Engels. — 169, 171, 187, 201, 204
Page me41.686
Melchior, Julius — a worker from Solingen, member of the General Association of German Workers, emigrated to the USA in 1864. — 534, 540, 541
Page me41.686
Mellinet, François Aimé (1768-1852) — Belgian general of French descent; took part in the revolution of 1830 and democratic movement in Belgium; Honorary President of the Democratic Association in Brussels. — 114
Page me41.686

Menchikoff (Menshikov), Alexander Sergeyevich, Prince (1787-1869) — Russian general and statesman; was sent on an extraordinary mission to Constantinople (1853), Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy in the Crimea (1853-55). — 349
Page me41.686
Merckel, Wilhelm von (1803-1861) — German poet, lawyer, Councillor of the High Court in Berlin (1850-61). — 328
Page me41.686
Meyen, Eduard (1812-1870) — German writer, petty-bourgeois democrat; editor of the Berliner Reform (1861-63); subsequently a National-Liberal. — 238, 239, 241, 242, 252, 284, 285, 322, 377, 379, 469, 470
Page me41.686
Mieroslawski, Ludwik (1814-1878) — prominent figure of the Polish national liberation movement; took part in the 1830-31 Polish insurrection and in the 1848-49 revolution; sought for support among the Bonapartists in the 1850s; was proclaimed dictator of the Polish National Government at the beginning of the 1863 Polish insurrection; emigrated to France after its defeat. — 247, 456, 465, 466
Page me41.686
Mill, John Stuart (1806-1873) — English economist and positivist philosopher. — 535
Page me41.686
Miquel, Johannes von (1828-1901) — German politician and financier; member of the Communist League in the 1840s; a founder of the National Association (1859); a National-Liberal from the 1860s. — 192, 194, 419
Page me41.686
Mirabeau, Honoré Gabriel Victor Riqueti, comte de (1749-1791) — prominent figure in the French Revolution, advocate of constitutional monarchy. — 289
Page me41.686
Miramón, Miguel (1832-1867) — Mexican general, a leader of the Conservative Party; led the counter-revolutionary mutiny against the Liberal government; head of the insurgents' government (1859-60); supported French interventionists and their protégé Maximilian in 1862-67; was shot by Mexican republicans. — 363
Page me41.686
Mirés, Jules Isaac (1809-1871) — French banker. — 580
Page me41.686
Mitchel, Ormsby MacKnight (1809-1862) — American astronomer, director of the observatory in Cincinnati (1845-59); general of the Northern army (1861-62) during the Civil War. — 372
Page me41.686
Mithridates VI Eupator (132-63 B.C.) — King of Pontus (Asia Minor), fought three wars against the Romans; was defeated in the third war (74-63 B.C.) first by Lucullus and finally by Pompey. — 265
Page me41.686
Mockel — see Kinkel, Johanna
Page me41.686
Mocquard, Jean François Constant (1791-1864) — French politician and man of letters, active participant in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, Louis Bonaparte's private secretary and chief of his office from 1848. — 107

Page me41.686
Moll, Friedrich (c. 1835-1871) — a worker from Solingen, member of the General Association of German Workers, emigrated to the USA in 1864, a founder of the General Association of German Workers in New York. — 533, 534, 540, 541

Page Break me41.687
Page me41.687
Monk (Monck), George, Duke of Albemarle (1608-1670) — English general and statesman; originally a royalist, later served in Cromwell's army, helped to restore the Stuarts to power in 1660. — 440
Page me41.687
Monrad, Ditlev Gothard (1811-1887) — Danish bishop and politician, Minister of Education and Worship (1848, 1859-63), Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (1863-64), leader of the National-Liberal Party in the 1850s. — 544
Page me41.687
Montagu, Robert, Lord (1825-1902) — British politician, Conservative M.P. — 299
Page me41.687
Montgomery, Alfred. — 351
Page me41.687
Morny, Charles Auguste Louis Joseph, duc de (1811-1865) — French politician, Bonapartist; deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (December 1851-January 1852); President of the Corps législatif (1854-56, 1857-65); step-brother of Napoleon III. — 363
Page me41.687
Morrill, Justin Smith (1810-1898) — American politician, Republican, Congressman from Vermont (1855-67); author of law on protective tariffs (1861). — 370
Page me41.687
Mügge, Theodor (1806-1861) — German writer and journalist, Young Hegelian. — 287
Page me41.687
Müller, Georg — Chairman of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (1860). — 77, 94, 95
Page me41.687
Müller, Wilhelm (literary pseudonym Wolfgang Müller von Königswinter) (1816-1873) — German poet; physician in Düsseldorf in the 1840s. — 289
Page me41.687
Müller-Tellering, Eduard von (born c. 1808) — German lawyer and writer, petty-bourgeois democrat; contributed to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); emigrated to England after the defeat of the revolution; libelled Marx and Engels in the press; emigrated to the USA in 1852. — 9, 10, 12, 82, 85
Page me41.687
Murat, Napoleon Lucien Charles, Prince (1803-1878) — French politician, Bonapartist; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; cousin of Napoleon III. — 246
Page me41.687
Murray, John (1808-1892) — British publisher. — 5

Page me41.687
Mussurus Bey (Constantin) (1807-1891) — Turkish diplomat, Greek by birth; envoy (1851-56) and Ambassador (1856-85) to London. — 80
Page me41.687
Muzembini — Marx's acquaintance in London. — 79
Page me41.687
Muzembini — Muzembini's wife. — 80

Page me41.687
N

Page me41.687
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 430, 460, 489, 513, 568
Page me41.687
Napoleon III (Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte) (1808-1873) — Prince, nephew of Napoleon I, President of the Second Republic (1848-51), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 10, 12, 18, 63, 64, 102, 103, 107, 129, 133, 146, 154, 156, 159, 160, 164, 171, 189, 191, 192, 193, 196, 198, 202, 203, 205, 212, 224, 241, 242, 246, 250, 262, 291, 329, 350, 361, 363, 369, 370, 390, 431, 456, 460, 462, 463, 471, 477, 489, 492, 496, 506, 513, 519, 537, 538, 552, 554
Page me41.687
Napoleon, Prince — see Bonaparte, Napoleon Joseph Charles Paul
Page me41.687
Nasmyth, James (1808-1890) — Scottish engineer, inventor of the steam-hammer. — 411

Page Break me41.688
Page me41.688
Neuhof, Theodor Stephen, Baron von (c. 1686-1756) — son of a Westphalian nobleman, adventurer; in 1736 was proclaimed King of Corsica under the name of Theodore I but soon dethroned; made several abortive attempts (1738, 1743 and 1744) to seize the throne of Corsica. — 206
Page me41.688
Niebuhr, Barthold Georg (1776-1831) — German historian of the ancient world. — 357
Page me41.688
Niegolewski, Wladyslaw Maurycy Grzymala (1819-1885) — Polish lawyer and politician, pettybourgeois democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848), member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies for Posen from 1849. — 159
Page me41.688
Normanby, Constantine Henry Phipps, Marquess of (1797-1863) — English statesman, Whig M.P., Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1835-39), Secretary for War and the Colonies (1839); Home Secretary (1839-41); Ambassador to Paris (1846-52). — 10
Page me41.688

Nostitz, August Ludwig Ferdinand, Count von (1777-1866) — Prussian general, close to William I; Sophie von Hatzfeldt's brother-in-law. — 280
Page me41.688
Nostitz, Friedrich Wilhelm Nicolas, Count von (1835-1916) — Prussian army officer; August Nostitz's son and Sophie von Hatzfeldt's nephew. — 280
Page me41.688
Nothjung, Peter (1821-1866) — German tailor, member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League; a defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); sentenced to six years' imprisonment. — 109, 146

Page me41.688
O

Page me41.688
Oelbermann — a publisher in Bonn. — 201
Page me41.688
Ohm — police agent. — 245
Page me41.688
Oldenburg — dynasty of Danish kings (1448-1863), and of Schleswig-Holstein dukes (1460-1863); Emperor Peter III of Russia (1761-62) also belonged to this dynasty. — 541
Page me41.688
Oldenburg, August Paul Friedrich — see August Paul Friedrich
Page me41.688
Oldham, Williamson Simpson (1813-1868) — American lawyer and politician, Democrat; took part in the rebellion of Southern slave-owners; a member of the Confederacy Congress. — 429
Page me41.688
Opdyke, George (1805-1880) — American businessman, economist; Mayor of New York (1862-63). — 440
Page me41.688
Oppenheim — a banker in London. — 534
Page me41.688
Oppenheim, Heinrich Bernhard (1819-1880) — German politician, economist and journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat; an editor of Die Reform (Berlin) in 1848; from 1849, a refugee in Switzerland, France and England; subsequently a National-Liberal. — 190, 212
Page me41.688
Orges, Hermann, von (1821-1874) — German journalist; an editor of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung (1854-64). — 10, 14, 66, 537
Page me41.688
Orleans, Prince — see Louis Philippe Albert d'Orléans, Count of Paris
Page me41.688
Orsini, Felice (1819-1858) — Italian revolutionary, democrat and republican; prominent figure in the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification; executed for his attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 356, 369

Page me41.688
Osborne — see Bernal Osborne, Ralph
Page me41.688
Oswald, Ernst — former Prussian army officer, took part in Garibaldi's revolutionary campaign in South Italy (1860); emigrated to the USA at the end of 1861. — 321, 322
Page me41.688
Owen, Sir Richard (1804-1892) —

Page Break me41.689
English naturalist, opponent of Darwin's theory of evolution. — 465
Page me41.689
Owen, Robert (1771-1858) — Welsh utopian socialist. — 114

Page me41.689
P

Page me41.689
Palleske, Emil (1823-1880) — German actor and author. — 50
Page me41.689
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman; Tory and, from 1830, Whig; Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51); Home Secretary (1852-55) and Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65). — 10, 88, 103, 121, 122, 133, 144, 152, 153, 154, 156, 173, 228, 262, 284, 286, 299, 335, 336, 337, 345, 349, 363, 370, 462, 463, 467, 484, 490, 491, 492, 494, 496, 516, 517, 519, 537, 538, 543, 544, 549, 554
Page me41.689
Pam — see Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount
Page me41.689
Paracelsus (real name Philippus Aureolus Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim) (1493-1541) — German physician and naturalist. — 491
Page me41.689
Parker, Sarah — Frederick Engels' housemaid. — 344
Page me41.689
Patkul, Johann Reinhold (1660-1707) — Livonian nobleman; was in the Russian service from 1702. — 471, 541
Page me41.689
Patzke — Prussian police official, chief of the Berlin police (late 1850s- early 1860s). — 189, 280
Page me41.689
Paula-Kröcher (Paulaw). — 85
Page me41.689
Pellico, Silvio (1789-1854) — Italian writer, arrested in 1820 for his contacts with the Carbonari and sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment; released in 1830; published a book describing the hardships of convicts in Austrian prisons (1832). — 507
Page me41.689

Perczel, Mór (1811-1899) — Hungarian general; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; emigrated to Turkey after the defeat of the revolution and to England in 1851. — 111, 125, 157
Page me41.689
Perrier, John — Swiss radical politician; member of the Grand Council (1852, 1856-60); Fazy's supporter. — 129
Page me41.689
Persigny, Jean Gilbert Victor Fialin, comte (1808-1872) — French statesman, Bonapartist, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (1852-54, 1860-63), Ambassador to London (1855-58, 1859-60). — 227, 313
Page me41.689
Peter I (the Great) (1672-1725) — Russian Tsar (1682-1721); Emperor of Russia from 1721. — 470
Page me41.689
Peter III (1728-1762) — Emperor of Russia (1761-62). — 471
Page me41.689
Peter Nikolaus Friedrich, Grand Duke of Oldenburg (1827-1900) — Russia's nominee to the Schleswig-Holstein throne (1864), ceded his claims to it in favour of Prussia in 1866. — 549
Page me41.689
Petsch, Albert — publisher and bookseller in London; printed Karl Marx's Herr Vogt at the end of 1860. — 118, 123, 126, 190, 196, 197, 199, 202, 204, 211, 218, 224-27, 234, 235, 237, 238, 239, 241, 242, 243, 255, 327, 334, 338
Page me41.689
Pfänder, Karl (c. 1818-1876) — German artist; prominent in German and international working-class movement; refugee in London from 1845, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, of the Communist League Central Authority and later of the General Council of the First International; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 11, 472, 536
Page me41.689
Pfuel, Ernst Heinrich Adolf von (1779-1866) — Prussian general; commandant of Berlin (March 1848); headed the suppression of the uprising

Page Break me41.690
in Posen in May 1848; Prime Minister and Minister of War in September-October 1848. — 271, 280
Page me41.690
Philips — Dutch relatives of Karl Marx. — 272, 499
Page me41.690
Philips, Antoinette (Nannette) (c. 1837-1885) — Karl Marx's cousin, daughter of Lion Philips. — 269, 272, 274, 276, 283, 311, 313, 320, 322, 503, 504, 507, 508, 510, 550
Page me41.690
Philips, August (d. 1895) — Karl Marx's cousin, lawyer in Amsterdam. — 276, 302, 313, 315, 320, 322, 325, 341, 346, 426, 509
Page me41.690

Philips, Friedrich (Fritz) — Karl Marx's cousin, banker in Zalt-Bommel. — 314, 510, 551
Page me41.690
Philips, Jacques — Karl Marx's cousin, lawyer in Rotterdam. — 276, 277, 279, 283, 286, 313, 509
Page me41.690
Philips, Jean — Karl Marx's cousin, merchant in Aachen. — 514
Page me41.690
Philips, Karl — Karl Marx's cousin; merchant in Aachen. — 514, 516
Page me41.690
Philips, Lion (1794-1866) — Dutch merchant, maternal uncle of Karl Marx. — 263, 268, 272, 273, 276, 277, 279, 283, 291, 294, 314, 320, 415, 444, 445, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 507-10, 512, 514, 516, 542, 550, 551, 552, 574, 579
Page me41.690
Pi de Cosprons, Honoré (duc du Roussillon) — French philologist and historian. — 484, 490
Page me41.690
Pieper, Wilhelm (born c. 1826) — German philologist and journalist; member of the Communist League; refugee in London; was close to Marx and Engels in 1850-53. — 511, 553, 576
Page me41.690
Pierce, Francis Edwin (d. 1896) — American general, commanded the Northerners' troops in Virginia. — 309
Page me41.690
Pierce, Franklin (1804-1869) — 14th President of the USA (1853-57); Democrat. — 300
Page me41.690
Pitt, William (the Younger) (1759-1806) — British statesman, Tory, Prime Minister (1783-1801 and 1804-06). — 400
Page me41.690
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 492, 580
Page me41.690
Plon-Plon — see Bonaparte, Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul
Page me41.690
Ploug, Parmo Carl (1813-1894) — Danish poet, journalist and politician, a National-Liberal, editor of the Faedrelandet (1841-81), member of the Upper Chamber of Rigsdag (Parliament). — 554
Page me41.690
Pompey (Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus) (106-48 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman. — 265
Page me41.690
Pope, John (1822-1892) — American general, Republican; commanded a Northern army on the Mississippi (1862) and then in Virginia during the Civil War. — 372, 400, 414, 415
Page me41.690
Potter, Edmund — British manufacturer and politician, Free Trader; in the early 1860s Chairman of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, M.P. — 463

Page me41.690
Presburg, Martin Isacq (1794-1867) — merchant in Nijmegen, maternal uncle of Karl Marx. — 499, 502
Page me41.690
Pyat, Félix (1810-1889) — French journalist and playwright; politician; petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1848 revolution; from 1849 refugee in Switzerland, Belgium and England; later opposed Marx and the First International. — 47
Page me41.690
Pythagoras (c. 570-c. 500 B.C.) — Greek mathematician and philosopher. — 515

Page me41.690
Q

Page me41.690
Quesnay, François (1694-1774) — French economist, founder of the school of Physiocrats; a physician by profession. — 381, 485, 487

Page Break me41.691
Page me41.691
Quintilian (Marcus Fabius Quintilianus) (c. 35-c. 96) — Roman rhetorician. — 268

Page me41.691
R

Page me41.691
Racowita, Janko von (d. 1865) — Romanian nobleman, fatally wounded Lassalle in a duel in 1864. — 555, 557, 558
Page me41.691
Ranickel — German bookbinder, pettybourgeois democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to Switzerland after its defeat. — 99, 163
Page me41.691
Ranke, Leopold von (1795-1886) — German historian, professor at Berlin University, ideologist of the Junkerdom. — 561
Page me41.691
Rau, Karl Heinrich (1792-1870) — German economist. — 280
Page me41.691
Reclus, Michel Elie (1827-1904) — French ethnographer and journalist, utopian socialist, participated in the 1848 revolution; expelled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; returned in 1855; during the Paris Commune director of the Bibliothéque nationale. — 439
Page me41.691
Reiff, Wilhelm Joseph (born c. 1824) — member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League, expelled from the League in 1850; a defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); sentenced to five years' imprisonment. — 3, 4, 85,

134, 135

Page me41.691
Reinach, Arnold (c. 1820-1870) — German petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to Switzerland. — 34
Page me41.691
Reinhardt, Richard (1829-1898) — German poet, refugee in Paris, Heinrich Heine's secretary, friend of the Marx family. — 384
Page me41.691
Rémusat, Charles François Marie, comte de (1797-1875) — French statesman and writer, an Orleanist; Minister of the Interior (1840); opposed Napoleon III's regime during the Second Empire. — 93, 94
Page me41.691
Renan, Joseph-Ernest (1823-1892) — French philologist and historian of Christianity, idealist philosopher. — 507, 541
Page me41.691
Reuter, Max — Prussian police agent in London in the early 1850s. — 140, 147
Page me41.691
Reuter, Paul Julius, Baron (1816-1899) — founder of the telegraph agency in London (1851). — 121, 122, 144, 333, 440
Page me41.691
Reynolds, George William MacArthur (1814-1879) — British politician and journalist; publisher of Reynolds's Newspaper. — 33, 358
Page me41.691
Rheinländer, Georg Friedrich — member of the Outlaws' League in Paris, later refugee in London, member of the London branch of the German National Association. — 110, 130, 155, 232, 234, 297, 298, 350, 567, 579, 580
Page me41.691
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — British economist. — 378, 380, 396, 397, 403, 404, 480, 485
Page me41.691
Richelieu, Armand Jean du Plessis, duc de (1585-1642) — French statesman during the period of absolutism, Cardinal. — 389
Page me41.691
Richter, Jakob Ferdinand (1814-1875) — German journalist, liberal, publisher of Die Reform. — 234
Page me41.691
Rings, L.W. — member of the Communist League, refugee in London in the early 1850s; supporter of Marx and Engels. — 149, 150
Page me41.691
Ripley, Roswell Sabine (1823-1887) — American army officer and military writer; general from 1861, participant in the war against Mexico (1846-48), wrote a history of this war. — 299
Page me41.691
Roberts, William Prowting (1806-1871) — English lawyer, participated in the Chartist and trade union movements. — 47

Page Break me41.692
Page me41.692
Rodbertus-Jagetzow, Johann Karl (1805-1875) — German economist and politician, proponent of Prussian 'state socialism'. — 253, 285, 377, 378
Page me41.692
Rode — German refugee in Liverpool. — 526
Page me41.692
Roesgen, Charles — an employee in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Manchester. — 21, 112, 121, 134, 211, 392, 447
Page me41.692
Rollenhagen, Georg (1542-1609) — German pastor and teacher. — 311
Page me41.692
Ronge, Johannes (1813-1887) — German clergyman; an initiator of the German Catholics movement; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to England after its defeat. — 28
Page me41.692
Roodhujzen, A. — pastor in Zalt-Bommel, future husband of Antoinette Philips. — 510, 515
Page me41.692
Roon, Albrecht Theodor Emil, Count von (1803-1879) — Prussian statesman and military figure, War Minister (1859-73) and Naval Minister (1861-71); reorganised the Prussian army. — 440
Page me41.692
Roscher, Wilhelm Georg Friedrich (1817-1894) — German economist, professor at Leipzig University, founder of 'historical school' in political 'economy. — 285, 377, 378, 379, 425, 440
Page me41.692
Rosecrans, William Starke (1819-1898) — American general, commanded Northern troops in Mississippi and Tennessee (1862-63) during the Civil War. — 478
Page me41.692
Roselius, Christian (1803-1873) — American lawyer and politician, Whig, professor at Louisiana University; championed preservation of the Union. — 308
Page me41.692
Rosenblum, Eduard — German student; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, emigrated after its defeat. — 70
Page me41.692
Röser, Peter Gerhard (1814-1865) — cigar-maker; prominent figure in the German working-class movement; Vice-President of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848-49); member of the Communist League; a defendant at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852), sentenced to six years' imprisonment; later sympathised with the Lassalleans. — 83
Page me41.692
Rostoffzeff (Rostovtsev), Yakov Ivanovich, Count (1803-1860) — Russian statesman, member of the State Council (1856), took part in the preparation of the Peasant Reform (1861); Chairman of the 'drafting commissions' (1859). — 4

Page me41.692
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist and philosopher, Young Hegelian; published, jointly with Marx, the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher; Marx's ideological opponent after 1844; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing); German petty-bourgeois refugee leader in England in the 1850s. — 70, 82, 101, 259, 381, 556, 573
Page me41.692
Ruge, Franziska — Arnold Ruge's daughter. — 556
Page me41.692
Russell, John Russell, Earl (1792-1878) — British statesman, Whig leader, Prime Minister (1846-52, 1865-66), Foreign Secretary (1852-53, 1859-65). — 335
Page me41.692
Russell, Sir William Howard (1820-1907) — English journalist, military correspondent of The Times in Washington (1861-62). — 363
Page me41.692
Rüstow, Alexander (1824-1866) — Prussian army officer and military writer; Friedrich Wilhelm Rüstow's brother. — 383
Page me41.692
Rüstow, Cäsar (1826-1866) — Prussian army officer and military writer;

Page Break me41.693
Friedrich Wilhelm Rüstow's brother. — 383
Page me41.693
Rüstow, Friedrich Wilhelm (1821-1878) — German army officer and military writer, democrat; refugee in Switzerland; chief-of-staff of Garibaldi's troops during the campaign in South Italy (1860); Lassalle's friend. — 205, 322, 383, 389, 390, 393, 398, 409, 412, 555, 557
Page me41.693
Rutenberg, Adolf (1808-1869) — German journalist, Young Hegelian; editor of the National-Zeitung (1848); a National-Liberal after 1866. — 287, 288, 561
Page me41.693
Rütten, Joseph Jakob (1805-1878) — head of a publishing house in Frankfurt am Main. — 101

Page me41.693
S

Page me41.693
Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de Rouvroy, comte de (1760-1825) — French utopian socialist. — 57
Page me41.693
Sasonow, Nikolai Ivanovich (1815-1862) — Russian journalist, democrat and radical; emigrated abroad in the early 1840s; contributed to various newspapers and magazines; Marx's acquaintance. — 164, 446
Page me41.693

Sauernheimer — German brushmaker; refugee in Switzerland and Chairman of the German Workers' Association in Geneva in the early 1850s. — 71, 185
Page me41.693
Saul (11th cent. B.C.) — first King of Israel (c. 1025 B.C.). — 541
Page me41.693
Say, Jean Baptiste (1767-1832) — French economist. — 280
Page me41.693
Schabelitz, Jacob Lukas (1827-1899) — Swiss publisher and bookseller; member of the Fraternal Democrats society from 1846; member of the Communist League; maintained contact with Marx and Engels in the late 1840s and the early 1850s. — 74, 83, 98
Page me41.693
Schaible, Karl Heinrich (1824-1899) — German physician and writer; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, emigrated to England. — 49, 52, 53, 62, 63, 66, 85, 86, 87, 104, 105, 264, 265
Page me41.693
Schapper, Karl (c. 1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; a leader of the League of the Just; member of the Communist League Central Authority; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; a leader of the sectarian group that split away from the Communist League in 1850; resumed contact with Marx in 1856; member of the General Council of the First International. — 11, 36, 71, 72, 77, 78, 79, 91, 92, 93, 95, 133, 147, 242, 428
Page me41.693
Scherzer, Andreas (1807-1879) — German tailor; member of a Paris community of the Communist League which sided with the Willich-Schapper sectarian group in 1850; later refugee in London; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; publisher of Die Neue Zeit and contributor to Das Volk. — 82
Page me41.693
Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759-1805) — German poet, dramatist, historian and philosopher. — 159, 236, 274, 488, 552
Page me41.693
Schily, Victor (1810-1875) — German lawyer, democrat, took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, later refugee in France; member of the First International. — 29, 33, 34, 48, 71, 99, 130, 133, 138, 155, 156, 163, 164, 182, 202, 215, 237, 240, 247, 316, 321, 324, 350, 356, 362, 420, 466, 568, 579, 580
Page me41.693
Schimmelpfennig, Alexander (1824-1865) — Prussian army officer, democrat, participated in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated after its defeat; supported the sectarian Willich-Schapper group; fought in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 14, 133

Page Break me41.694
Page me41.694
Schleiden, Matthias Jakob (1804-1881) — German botanist, a theorist of the cell structure of organisms. — 546, 553
Page me41.694

Schleinitz, Alexander, Baron von (1807-1885) — Prussian statesman; Minister of Foreign Affairs (June 1848, 1849-50, 1858-61). — 177, 284
Page me41.694
Schlesinger, Max (1822-1881) — German journalist, emigrated to London in 1848; correspondent of the Kölnische Zeitung. — 121, 122, 227
Page me41.694
Schlosser, Friedrich Christoph (1776-1861) — German historian. — 265
Page me41.694
Schmalhausen, Sophie (1816-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest sister, wife of Wilhelm Robert Schmalhausen. — 499
Page me41.694
Schmalhausen, Wilhelm Robert (1817-1862) — lawyer in Maastricht; Karl Marx's brother-in-law. — 268, 432
Page me41.694
Schmerling, Anton von (1805-1893) — Austrian liberal statesman; Imperial Minister of the Interior (July-December 1848), Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (September-December 1848); Austrian Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior (1860-65). — 321, 323
Page me41.694
Schmerling, Philippe Charles (1791-1836) — Belgian physician and palaeontologist. — 473
Page me41.694
Schmidt — agent of a ship company, Chairman of the Association of German Men in London; member of the London branch of the National Association. — 310
Page me41.694
Schmidt, Heinrich Julian Aurel (1818-1886) — German critic and historian of literature; moderate liberal; supported Bismarck from 1866. — 377
Page me41.694
Schneider II, Karl — German lawyer, democrat; President of the Cologne Democratic Society and member of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (1848); defended Marx and Engels at the trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on 7 February 1849; counsel for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852). — 73, 93, 94, 146, 150, 151, 289
Page me41.694
Schöler, Caroline (1819-1891) — teacher in Cologne; friend of the Marx family. — 165
Page me41.694
Schönberg, Countess. — 148
Page me41.694
Schramm, Conrad (Konrad) (c. 1822-1858) — prominent figure in the German working-class movement; member of the Communist League; refugee in London from 1849; responsible editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 96, 97, 534
Page me41.694
Schramm, Rudolf (1813-1882) — German democratic journalist, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; emigrated to England after the defeat of the revolution; opposed Marx; supporter of Bismarck in the 1860s; Conrad Schramm's brother. — 366, 497, 580

Page me41.694
Schröder — German refugee in London. — 3
Page me41.694
Schröder, E. — agent for the firm of Ermen & Engels in Amsterdam. — 346
Page me41.694
Schulze-Delitzsch, Franz Hermann (1808-1883) — German economist and politician; advocated unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy; a founder of the National Association; a leader of the Party of Progress in the 1860s; tried to detract workers from the revolutionary struggle by organising cooperative societies. — 418, 467, 470, 480, 561, 580
Page me41.694
Schurz, Karl (1829-1906) — German petty-bourgeois democrat; participant

Page Break me41.695
in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated to Switzerland, later to the USA, where he took part in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; later American statesman. — 363
Page me41.695
Schwabe — merchant in Manchester. — 525
Page me41.695
Schwanbeck, Eugen Alexis (1821-1850) — German journalist, contributed to the Kölnische Zeitung (1847-49). — 241
Page me41.695
Schwann, Theodor (1810-1882) — German biologist; founder of the theory of the cell structure of organisms in 1839. — 546
Page me41.695
Schwarck — Chief Public Prosecutor of the Prussian Royal Court of Appeal. — 131, 144, 145, 186, 219
Page me41.695
Schwarz, Wilhelm — member of the board of the Great Industrial Exhibition in London (1862). — 408
Page me41.695
Schweigert, Ludwig — former Austrian army officer, member of the National Association. — 383
Page me41.695
Schwerin, Maximilian Heinrich Karl, Count von (1804-1872) — Prussian statesman, Minister of Religious Worship, Public Education and Medicine (March-June 1848); deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right wing); Minister of the Interior (1859-62); later National-Liberal. — 288, 305, 313
Page me41.695
Scott, Winfield (1786-1866) — American general, Commander-in-Chief of the US army (1841-November 1861). — 299, 304
Page me41.695
Scoville, Joseph Alfred (1815-1864) — (pen-name Manhattan) — American journalist, supporter of the Democrats; during the Civil War New York correspondent of the London papers The Morning Herald and The Evening Standard; opposed the policy of the Lincoln Administration. — 361

Page me41.695
Seddon, James Alexander (1815-1880) — American statesman, Democrat; War Secretary of the Confederacy (1862-65) during the Civil War. — 562
Page me41.695
Seel, Johann Richard (1819-1875) — German cartoonist, Engels' acquaintance in the 1840s. — 289
Page me41.695
Sertorius (Quintus Sertorius) (c. 122-72 B.C.) — Roman politician and general; praetor in Spain (83-81 B.C.); led the struggle of the Iberian tribes against Rome (80-72 B.C.). — 265
Page me41.695
Seward, William Henry (1801-1872) — American statesman; a leader of the Right-wing Republicans; governor of New York State (1839-43); Senator from 1849; candidate for the presidency (1860); Secretary of State (1861-69); advocated a compromise with the Southern slave-owners. — 462
Page me41.695
Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of (1801-1885) — British politician; head of parliamentary group of the Tory philanthropists in the 1840s; a Whig from 1847; Palmerston's son-in-law. — 297
Page me41.695
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English poet and dramatist. — 265, 282, 517, 579
Page me41.695
Shelley, Mary Wollstonecraft (1797-1851) — English writer; Percy Bysshe Shelley's second wife; wrote Frankenstein or the Modern Prometheus. — 503
Page me41.695
Sherman, William Tecumseh (1820-1891) — American general and politician; took part in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners (1861-65), in May-December 1864 commanded the troops that made a successful “march to the sea”; commander-in-chief of the US army (1869-84). — 361, 559, 561
Page me41.695
Sidney, Herbert — British lawyer. — 334, 338
Page me41.695
Siebel — merchant in Barmen, Carl Siebel's father. — 289

Page Break me41.696
Page me41.696
Siebel, Carl (Karl) (1836-1868) — German poet; Engels' distant relative, lived in England (1856-60); helped to propagate works by Marx and Engels, Vol. I of Capital in particular. — 25, 26, 28, 112-15, 118, 122, 123, 126, 129, 131, 134, 135, 138, 139, 140, 143, 155, 158, 165, 168, 179, 180, 181, 182, 185, 190, 191, 197, 198, 199, 201, 202, 206, 208, 209, 212, 227, 238-42, 248, 255, 272, 273, 289, 291, 337, 341, 371, 374, 375, 417, 478
Page me41.696
Siebel, Reinhilde — Carl Siebel's wife. — 179, 206, 239, 289, 374, 375

Page me41.696
Sigel, Franz (1824-1902) — German army officer, petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolutionary movement in Baden; emigrated to Switzerland and later to England; went to the USA in 1852, where he took part in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 372
Page me41.696
Simon, Édouard (1824-1897) — French journalist, born in Berlin; Bonapartist spy. — 223, 225
Page me41.696
Simon, Ludwig (1810-1872) — German lawyer, democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents in 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, lived in Paris (1855-70). — 84, 187, 212, 228, 233, 234, 235, 299
Page me41.696
Simons, Ludwig (1803-1870) — German lawyer; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848; Minister of Justice (1849-60). — 248
Page me41.696
Simson, Martin Eduard Sigismund von (1810-1899) — Prussian politician and lawyer; member and President (from December 1848 to May 1849) of the Frankfurt National Assembly; imperial commissioner to Berlin (November 1848); member (from 1859) and President (1860-61) of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. — 288
Page me41.696
Sippel — German refugee in England in the 1850s-60s. — 351
Page me41.696
Slidell, John (1793-1871) — American politician, member of the Senate Commission for Foreign Affairs; advocate of secession; in autumn 1861 was sent on a diplomatic mission to France by the Confederacy; commissioner of the Confederacy in Paris (1862-65). — 329, 336
Page me41.696
Smith, Adam (1723-1790) — Scottish classical economist. — 351, 396, 397, 403, 411, 479, 485
Page me41.696
Socrates (470 or 469-399 B.C.) — Greek philosopher. — 377
Page me41.696
Solms, Marie Laetitia Studolmine (1833-1902) — French writer and journalist; Louis Bonaparte's niece. — 456
Page me41.696
Sommer — Prussian police agent in Paris in the early 1850s. — 148
Page me41.696
Soulouque, Faustin Élie (c. 1782-1867) — President of the Republic of Haiti (1847-49), proclaimed himself Emperor of Haiti under the name of Faustin I (1849-59); the anti-Bonapartist press ironically referred to Napoleon III as Soulouque. — 519
Page me41.696
Spartacus (d. 71 B.C.) — Roman gladiator who headed the biggest revolt of slaves in Rome (73-71 B.C.). — 265
Page me41.696

Speck — assistant manager of Das Volk. — 121
Page me41.696
Spence, James — merchant in Liverpool, the Times correspondent; repeatedly came out in defence of Southern slave-owners during the Civil War. — 371, 372, 431, 489
Page me41.696
Spilthoorn, Charles Louis (1804-1872) — Belgian lawyer; republican; took part in the democratic movement and the Belgian revolution of 1830; member of the Brussels Democratic Association; President of the Ghent Democratic Association. — 107
Page me41.696
Spinoza, Baruch (Benedictus) de (1632-1677) — Dutch philosopher. — 542

Page Break me41.697
Page me41.697
Spurzheim, Johann Kaspar (Christoph) (1776-1832) — German phrenologist. — 546
Page me41.697
Stahr, Adolf Wilhelm Theodor (1805-1876) — German writer, author of historical novels and works dealing with the history of art and literature. — 92
Page me41.697
Stahr, Fanny (née Lewald) (1811-1889) — German writer. — 92
Page me41.697
Stanbury, G. — owner of a printshop in London in the 1850s. — 149
Page me41.697
Standau, Julius — German teacher, took part in the German democratic movement in the 1830s-40s and in the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849; emigrated to the USA after the defeat of the revolution; an editor of Die Stimme des Volkes in 1860. — 183
Page me41.697
Stanton, Edwin McMasters (1814-1869) — American lawyer and statesman; Attorney-General (1860-61); Secretary of War (January 1862 to 1868); took part in the Civil War on the side of the Union. — 372, 373, 386, 387
Page me41.697
Stechan, Gottlieb Ludwig (born c. 1814) — Hanover joiner, member of the Communist League, after the split in the League in 1850 belonged to the sectarian Willich-Schapper group; rejoined the supporters of Marx and Engels in December 1851; headed a workers' society in London from January 1852. — 147
Page me41.697
Stecher, G.K. — former headmaster of a secondary school in Baden; emigrated after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; engaged in lithography. — 130
Page me41.697
Steffen, Wilhelm — former Prussian army officer, witness for the defence at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); emigrated to England in 1853, later to the USA; closely associated with Marx and Engels in the 1850s. — 103, 376, 416
Page me41.697
Stein, Julius (1813-1889) — Silesian teacher and democratic journalist; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; an editor of the Neue Oder-Zeitung in the 1850s; editor of the Breslauer Zeitung from 1862. — 69, 282
Page me41.697

Stein, Maximilian, Baron (1811-1860) — Austrian army officer; chief-of-staff of the revolutionary army during the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; after its defeat emigrated to Turkey where he assumed the name of Ferhad Pasha; fought against Russia in Circassia (1857-58). — 493
Page me41.697
Steinthal — owner of the Manchester trading firm in which Georg Weerth was employed in 1852-56. — 525, 547
Page me41.697
Stieber, Wilhelm (1818-1882) — Chief of the Prussian political police (1850-60); an organiser of and principal witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); jointly with Wermuth wrote the book Die Communisten-Verschwörungen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts. — 12, 16, 44, 54, 72, 73, 74, 80, 93, 140, 141, 145-51, 187, 197, 241, 244, 245, 248, 287
Page me41.697
Stierlin — German liberal journalist, member of the Democratic Association in Münster; correspondent of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. — 289
Page me41.697
Stoffregen, Ludwig (b. 1815) — German teacher of music; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; in 1850 emigrated to England where he became a religious poet. — 106, 111
Page me41.697
Stone, Charles Pomeroy (1824-1887) — American general; commanded the Northern troops in Virginia (1861); after the defeat at Ball's Bluff (October 1861) was arrested on suspicion of high treason; released in August 1862. — 345
Page me41.697
Streit, Feodor (1820-1904) — German

Page Break me41.698
lawyer, journalist and publisher; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; a leader of the National Association. — 309, 310
Page me41.698
Strohn, Wilhelm — member of the Communist League; a friend of Marx and Engels; refugee in Bradford, England. — 40, 366, 527, 541
Page me41.698
Stücker — Aulic Councillor. — 391
Page me41.698
Sulla (Lucius Cornelius Sulla) (138-78 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman, consul (88 B.C.), dictator (82-79 B.C.). — 265
Page me41.698
Sumner, Edwin Vose (1797-1863) — American general, fought in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; commanded two corps in the battle of Fredericksburg, Virginia, in 1862. — 437, 438
Page me41.698
Sumner, John Bird (1780-1862) — English clergyman, Archbishop of Canterbury (1848-62). — 465
Page me41.698

Süss-Oppenheimer, Joseph (1692-1738) — as court financier to Charles Alexander, Duke of Württemberg, he was in charge of his treasury and all his affairs; hated by the people for his machinations; executed. — 534
Page me41.698
Syv, Peder Pedersen (1631-1702) — Danish linguist, poet; published a popular collection of Danish folk-songs. — 160, 375
Page me41.698
Szemere, Bartholomäus (Bertalan) (1812-1869) — Hungarian politician and journalist; Minister of the Interior (1848) and head of the revolutionary government (1849); emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 5, 17, 18, 27, 34, 106, 111, 125, 133, 134, 135, 156, 157, 181, 210, 214, 215, 222, 228, 229, 230

Page me41.698
T

Page me41.698
Tasso, Torquato (1544-1595) — Italian poet. — 304
Page me41.698
Tavernier, Count — artillery officer. — 280
Page me41.698
Taylor, John Edward (1831-1905) — owner and editor-in-chief of The Manchester Guardian. — 456
Page me41.698
Techow, Gustav Adolf (1813-1893) — Prussian army officer, democrat, participant in the 1848 revolutionary events in Berlin, Chief of the General Staff of the Palatinate revolutionary army; emigrated to Switzerland, became a leader of the Revolutionary Centralisation, a refugee organisation; moved to Australia in 1852. — 14, 22, 52, 58, 89, 96-99, 133, 179, 202, 225, 568
Page me41.698
Tellering — see Müller-Tellering, Eduard von
Page me41.698
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer) (c. 195-159 B.C.) — Roman comic verse dramatist. — 57, 90, 236, 363
Page me41.698
Terentianus Maurus (latter half of the 2nd cent.) — Roman grammarian. — 20
Page me41.698
Thimm, Franz — bookseller in Manchester in the 1850s-60s. — 255
Page me41.698
Thompson, Jacob (1810-1885) — American statesman, Democrat, Secretary of the Interior (1857-61) in the Buchanan Administration. — 307
Page me41.698
Thucydides (Thukydídes) (c. 460-400 B.C.) — Greek historian. — 292
Page me41.698
Thudichum, Friedrich Wolfgang Karl (1831-1913) — German historian of law, professor in Tübingen from 1862. — 498

Page me41.698
Tietz, Friedrich Wilhelm (born c. 1823) — German tailor, member of the Communist League, after its split in 1850 belonged to the sectarian Willich-Schapper group. — 148
Page me41.698
Toucey, Isaac (1792-1869) — American statesman, lawyer, Democrat; General-Attorney (1848-49), Senator (1852-57), Secretary of the Navy (1857-61) in the Buchanan Administration. — 307

Page Break me41.699
Page me41.699
Trübner, Nikolaus (1817-1884) — German bookseller and publisher in London. — 224, 297
Page me41.699
Tscharner, Johann Karl (1812-1879) — Swiss lawyer and radical journalist, an editor of the newspaper Der Bund. — 159
Page me41.699
Tschernyschew (Chernyshev), Alexander Ivanovich, Prince (1785-1857) — Russian general and statesman, fought in the wars against Napoleonic France; headed War Ministry (1828-52). — 367
Page me41.699
Türr, István (Ahmed Kiamil Bey) (1825-1908) — Hungarian army officer, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Italy and Germany; fought in the Crimean War on the side of the Allies; took part in the Garibaldi's revolutionary campaign in South Italy (1860); general of the Italian army (from 1861). — 182, 205, 322, 356, 362, 493
Page me41.699
Tussy — see Marx, Eleanor
Page me41.699
Twesten, Karl (1820-1870) — German politician, lawyer, member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (from 1861) and North German Imperial Diet (from 1867); a leader of the Party of Progress; a founder of the National-Liberal Party (1866). — 361

Page me41.699
U

Page me41.699
Uhland, Johann Ludwig (1787-1862) — German romantic poet, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left centre) in 1848-49. — 160, 163
Page me41.699
Uhlendorff — German democrat, member of the Cologne Workers' Association. — 90
Page me41.699
Ulloa Calá, Girólamo (1810-1891) — Italian army officer, took part in the national liberation and revolutionary movements in Italy in 1848-49; after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to France; commanded the Tuscan army in the Austro-Italo-French war of 1859. — 174
Page me41.699

Ulmer, Johann — member of the Communist League, refugee in London in the early 1850s; supporter of Marx and Engels during the split in the Communist League. — 149
Page me41.699
Ure, Andrew (1778-1857) — English chemist and economist; author of several works on the economics of industry. — 351
Page me41.699
Urquhart, David (1805-1877) — British diplomat, writer and politician; Turcophile; carried out diplomatic missions in Turkey in the 1830s; Tory M.P. (1847-52); founder and editor of The Free Press. — 8, 10, 21, 28, 46, 63, 64, 95, 103, 142, 152, 153, 154, 175, 339, 341, 348, 355, 454, 484, 491, 492, 497, 536, 537, 562, 584

Page me41.699
V

Page me41.699
Varnhagen von Ense, Karl August (1785-1858) — German writer and literary critic of the liberal trend. — 271, 329, 358
Page me41.699
Vauban, Sébastien Le Prestre de (1633-1707) — French marshal and military engineer, criticised France's taxation system. — 479
Page me41.699
Vaucanson, Jacques de (1709-1782) — French mechanic, improved the design of looms; inventor of automatic toys. — 450
Page me41.699
Venedey, Jakob (1805-1871) — German radical journalist and politician; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; liberal after the 1848-49 revolution. — 50, 165, 166
Page me41.699
Vico, Giambattista (1668-1744) — Italian philosopher and lawyer. — 353, 356, 357
Page me41.699
Victor Emmanuel II (1820-1878) — King of Sardinia (1849-61), King of

Page Break me41.700
Italy (1861-78). — 200, 203, 205, 246, 389
Page me41.700
Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 121, 122, 144, 329, 350, 535, 537
Page me41.700
Vidocq, François Eugéne (1775-1857) — French secret police agent; chief of the secret criminal police (1812-27); his name was used to denote any cunning sleuth and rogue. — 80, 244, 245
Page me41.700
Vincke, Georg, Baron von (1811-1875) — Prussian politician, a leader of the Right wing in the Frankfurt National Assembly in 1848-49; deputy to the Second Chamber (Right wing) in 1849; member of the Chamber of Deputies in the Prussian Provincial Diet in the 1850s-60s; moderate liberal. — 154, 262, 280, 288, 289, 305, 461

Page me41.700
Virchow, Rudolf (1821-1902) — German naturalist and politician; a founder and leader of the Party of Progress. — 418, 494
Page me41.700
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro) (70-19 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 283, 288, 451, 475
Page me41.700
Vissering, Simon (1818-1888) — Dutch economist and statistician. — 509
Page me41.700
Vögele (Voegele), August — German refugee, compositor in Hollinger's printshop in London (1859). — 31, 36-39, 41, 46, 47, 53, 60-65, 85
Page me41.700
Vogler, Carl Georg (born c. 1820) — German publisher in Brussels; member of the Communist League. — 101
Page me41.700
Vogt, Karl (Carl) (1817-1895) — German naturalist; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents (June 1849); refugee in Switzerland from 1849; in the 1850s-60s received subsidies from Napoleon III; slandered Marx and Engels. — 6, 9, 10, 12-20, 22-28, 33, 34, 35, 39, 41, 42, 48, 49, 51-58, 60-64, 66, 67, 69, 70-79, 81, 82, 84-89, 91, 92, 95, 96, 97, 99, 100, 104, 105, 106, 109, 114-20, 129, 131, 132, 158, 159, 160, 165, 166, 167, 169, 171, 176, 179, 202, 205, 206, 211, 212, 217, 218, 219, 224, 225, 226, 228, 231-34, 252, 257, 262, 268, 362, 435, 478, 479, 537
Page me41.700
Voltaire (pen-name for François Marie Arouet) (1694-1778) — French philosopher, writer and historian of the Enlightenment. — 265

Page me41.700
W

Page me41.700
Wagener, Hermann (1815-1889) — German journalist and politician, editor of the Neue Preußische Zeitung (1848-54); a founder of the Prussian Conservative Party. — 288, 289, 494
Page me41.700
Waldeck, Benedikt Franz Leo (1802-1870) — German radical politician and lawyer; a Left-wing leader and Vice-President of the Prussian National Assembly in 1848; deputy to the Lower Chamber of the Prussian Provincial Diet (from 1861) and North German Imperial Diet (from 1867); a leader of the Party of Progress. — 289
Page me41.700
Waldersee, Friedrich Gustav, Count von (1795-1864) — Prussian general and military writer, Minister of War (1854-58). — 200, 201
Page me41.700

Walesrode, Ludwig Reinhold (1810-1889) — German democratic journalist; publisher of the Demokratische Studien (1860-61). — 124, 190, 247, 253
Page me41.700
Wallace, Lewis (1827-1905) — American general, fought in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; commanded a division in Tennessee (1862). — 360
Page me41.700
Watteau, Louis (pen-name Denonville) (b. 1824) — French physician and

Page Break me41.701
journalist; took part in the French revolutionary movement in the 1840s-early 1850s; later refugee in Belgium; Louis Auguste Blanqui's close friend. — 298, 318, 326
Page me41.701
Watts, John (1818-1887) — English journalist, utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen; later a liberal. — 444, 445, 447
Page me41.701
Weber, J.M. — Prussian lawyer, Legal Counsellor, Marx's lawyer in the trial against the Berlin National-Zeitung in 1860. — 40-46, 48, 52, 53, 59, 61, 63, 64, 69, 73-78, 83, 87, 92-95, 99, 102, 103, 110-13, 116, 122, 123, 128, 129, 131, 132, 167, 170, 176, 177, 178, 180, 184, 186, 208, 209, 210, 219
Page me41.701
Weber, Joseph Valentin (1814-1895) — German watch-maker, took part in the Baden revolutionary movement in 1848; refugee in Switzerland, later in London; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 77, 297, 300, 302, 339, 472, 517
Page me41.701
Weerth, Georg (1822-1856) — German proletarian poet and journalist; shop assistant; member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; friend of Marx and Engels. — 453, 578
Page me41.701
Weitling, Wilhelm Christian (1808-1871) — German tailor; one of the early leaders of the working-class movement in Germany; member of the League of the Just; theorist of utopian egalitarian communism; emigrated to the USA in 1849. — 90
Page me41.701
Wermuth, Karl Georg Ludwig (born c. 1804) — chief of police in Hanover; an organiser of and witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist Trial (1852); in collaboration with Stieber wrote the book Die Communisten-Verschwörungen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts. — 147
Page me41.701
Werner, Minna — Gottfried Kinkel's second wife. — 262
Page me41.701
Westphalen, Caroline von (d. 1856) — Jenny Marx's mother. — 570
Page me41.701
Westphalen, Edgar von (1819-c. 1890) — Jenny Marx's brother. — 570
Page me41.701
Westphalen, Ferdinand Otto Wilhelm Henning von (1799-1876) — Prussian statesman, Minister of the Interior (1850-58); Jenny Marx's step-brother. — 76, 85, 94
Page me41.701

Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; a responsible editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung (1849-50); emigrated to the USA in 1851; colonel in the army of the North during the US Civil War; disseminated Marxism in the USA; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 43, 89, 99, 113, 115-19, 123, 172, 183, 184, 376, 571, 572, 573, 575
Page me41.701
Weydemeyer, Louise — Joseph Weydemeyer's wife. — 569-76
Page me41.701
Wiehe — Johann Friedrich Wiehe's wife. — 31, 37
Page me41.701
Wiehe, Johann Friedrich — compositor in Hollinger's printshop in London (1859). — 30-33, 36-39, 42, 47, 49, 53, 61, 62, 63, 85, 86, 105, 188
Page me41.701
Wigand, Otto (1795-1870) — German publisher and bookseller, owner of a firm in Leipzig which published works of radical authors. — 201
Page me41.701
William (1845-1913) — son of King Christian IX of Denmark, King of the Hellenes under the name of George I (1863-1913). — 544
Page me41.701
William I (the Conqueror) (1027-1087) — King of England (1066-87). — 537, 544

Page Break me41.702
Page me41.702
William I (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia; Prince Regent (1858-61); King of Prussia (1861-88) and Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 154, 159, 173, 189, 197, 241, 248, 249, 257, 264, 270, 280, 281, 288, 312, 314, 319, 325, 328, 331, 361, 373, 418, 428, 429, 431, 506, 519, 537, 544, 576
Page me41.702
Williams — bookseller in London. — 502
Page me41.702
Willich, August (1810-1878) — Prussian army officer, retired for political reasons; member of the Communist League; participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; a leader of the sectarian group that split away from the Communist League in 1850; emigrated to the USA in 1853; general in the Northern army during the Civil War. — 14, 71, 73, 78, 89, 91, 97, 98, 115, 133, 147, 206, 262, 300, 371, 416
Page me41.702
Willis, Robert (1800-1875) — English scientist, mechanical engineer and archaeologist; gave lectures to workers in 1854-67. — 449
Page me41.702
Wilson, James (1805-1860) — British economist and politician; Free Trader, founder and editor of The Economist; financial secretary to the Treasury (1853-58); Chancellor of the Indian Exchequer (1859-60). — 165
Page me41.702
Winter — Prussian official; chief of police in Berlin from the middle of 1861. — 305, 312

Page me41.702
Wiss, Georg Eduard — German physician and journalist; Young Hegelian; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to the USA in the early 1850s; associate of Kinkel. — 89, 90
Page me41.702
Wolf(f), Ferdinand (Red Wolf[f]) (1812-1895) — German journalist, member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; emigrated from Germany after the 1848-49 revolution; associate of Marx and Engels; subsequently gave up politics. — 109, 165, 445, 488, 576, 579
Page me41.702
Wolf (Wolfius), Friedrich August (1759-1824) — German philologist, student of ancient culture and Homer's epic poems in particular. — 357
Page me41.702
Wolfers, Franz Anton von (b. 1813) — German journalist, Belgian by birth; member of the editorial board of the Kölnische Zeitung in 1847-49. — 241
Page me41.702
Wolff, Bernhard (1811-1879) — German journalist, owner of the Berlin National-Zeitung from 1848, founder of the first telegraph agency in Germany (1849). — 122, 287, 288
Page me41.702
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German teacher, proletarian revolutionary; member of the Central Authority of the Communist League from March 1848; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; took an active part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to Switzerland and later to England; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 8, 11, 16, 19, 20, 24, 26, 52, 67, 68, 88, 124, 138, 139, 170, 176, 193, 194, 205, 211, 216, 218, 220, 223, 225, 228, 237, 282, 285, 286, 293, 298, 299, 300, 302, 304, 305, 316, 322, 342, 346, 351, 354, 362, 368, 371, 376, 381, 383, 384, 391, 392, 393, 402, 417, 418, 421, 434, 446, 452, 470, 473, 475, 490, 493, 496, 504, 506, 508, 511, 517, 518, 520-26, 530, 533, 535, 536, 539, 541, 552, 573, 575, 577, 580, 588, 589
Page me41.702
Wolfram von Eschenbach (1170-1220) — German Minnesinger poet, author of the Perceval, a poem of chivalry (1198-1210; published in 1783). — 568
Page me41.702
Wood — lawyer in Manchester. — 536

Page Break me41.703
Page me41.703
Wrangel, Friedrich Heinrich Ernst, Count von (1784-1877) — Prussian general, took part in the counter-revolutionary coup in Prussia and dissolution of the Prussian National Assembly in November 1848; commander-in-chief of the Prussian and Austrian forces during the war with Denmark (1864). — 506
Page me41.703
Wyke, Sir Charles Lennox (1815-1897) — British diplomat, minister plenipotentiary (1860-61) and special representative (1862-63) in Mexico. — 349, 350
Page me41.703

Wyse, Thomas (1791-1862) — British politician and diplomat, Lord of the Treasury (1830-41); envoy in Athens (1849-62); Lucien Bonaparte's son-in-law in the 1820s. — 456

Page me41.703
Y

Page me41.703
Young. — 341

Page me41.703
Z

Page me41.703
Zabel, Friedrich (1802-1875) — German journalist, editor of the Berlin National-Zeitung (1848-75). — 35, 45, 78, 117, 129, 207, 219, 251, 253, 287, 288
Page me41.703
Zamacona, Manuel — Mexican journalist and politician; Minister of Foreign Affairs in 1861. — 349, 350
Page me41.703
Zamoyski, Wladislaw, Count (1803-1868) — Polish magnate and general; took part in the 1830-31 insurrection; after its defeat a leader of the Polish conservative monarchist refugees in Paris. — 484, 491, 492
Page me41.703
Zang, August (1807-1888) — Austrian liberal journalist, founder and publisher of the Viennese newspaper Die Presse; member of the Loer Austria Provincial Diet. — 323
Page me41.703
Zedlitz-Neukirch, Konstantin, Baron (1813-1889) — Prussian official; chief of police in Berlin in 1861. — 270, 278, 280, 305, 312
Page me41.703
Zell — notary in Trier. — 499
Page me41.703
Zerffi, Gustav (Hirsch) (1820-1892) — Hungarian journalist, after the 1848-49 revolution a refugee in Turkey, in Paris from 1851, and in London from the spring of 1853; secret agent of the Austrian police; Kinkel's follower; member of the London branch of the National Association. — 297, 301, 302, 310, 319
Page me41.703
Zernin, Eduard — German journalist, publisher of the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung. — 32
Page me41.703
Zimmermann, Ernst Wilhelm Eduard — Burgomaster of Spandau, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing); emigrated to England after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolution. — 46, 182, 188, 232, 235, 246, 268, 327
Page me41.703

Zinn — German refugee in London, compositor in Hirschfeld's printshop in London; founded the Association of German Men in 1858. — 4, 208
Page me41.703
Zizka, Jan (c. 1360-1424) — Bohemian general and a Hussite leader. — 235

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me41.703
Abraham (Bib.). — 441, 541
Page me41.703
Achilles (Gr. myth.) — the bravest Greek hero in the Trojan War, the central figure in Homer's Iliad. — 563
Page me41.703
Amphitryon (Gr. myth.) — King of Tiryns. His name was associated with lavish hospitality. — 283
Page me41.703
Ariadne (Gr. myth.) — daughter of Minos, King of Crete, who gave

Page Break me41.704
Theseus a clue of thread to guide him through the mazes of the Labyrinth after he had slain the monster Minotaur. Theseus carried her off with him, but then abandoned her on the Island of Naxos, where she became a priestess and wife of Dionysus (Bacchus). — 275, 354, 359
Page me41.704
Bacchus — see Dionysus
Page me41.704
Brother Merry — the title character of a fairy-tale by the Grimm brothers. — 582
Page me41.704
Buddha — the title applied to Siddhartha Gautama, a religious philosopher and the founder of Buddhism. — 282, 285
Page me41.704
Christ, Jesus (Bib.). — 311
Page me41.704
Circe — a sorceress in Homer's Odyssey who turned Odysseus' companions into swine. — 274
Page me41.704
Costard — the clown in Shakespeare's comedy Love's Labour's Lost. — 265
Page me41.704
Crispinus — a character from a satire by Juvenal, a courtier of the Roman Emperor Domitian. — 327
Page me41.704
Dionysus (Bacchus) (Gr. and Rom. myth.) — god of wine and fertility. — 275
Page me41.704
Don Juan — legendary nobleman; a libertine; hero of plays, poems, and operas in several European languages. — 262, 389, 558

Page me41.704
Don Quixote — the title character of Cervantes' novel. — 115, 289
Page me41.704
Dundreary — the main character of Tom Taylor's satirical comedy Our American Cousin. — 494, 518
Page me41.704
Egeria (Rom. myth.) — the nymph who advised the Roman king Numa Pompilius. — 275
Page me41.704
Falstaff, Sir John — a character in Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor and King Henry IV; a sly, fat braggart and jester. — 171
Page me41.704
Faust — hero of the medieval German legend and of Goethe's tragedy. — 546
Page me41.704
Frankenstein — the title character of Mary W. Shelley's novel; he creates a monster that destroys him; from his name being taken to be the name of the monster he created, Frankenstein also came to denote anything that becomes dangerous to its creator. — 503
Page me41.704
Godfrey of Bouillon — the hero of Torquato Tasso's Gerusalemme liberata, an idealised knight of the First Crusade (1096-99). — 302, 304
Page me41.704
Heineke — a servant and athlete, hero of a German song, a parody on the so-called Grobian literature of the 16th century; Karl Heinzen's nickname. — 263
Page me41.704
Ibeles, Johannes — a character in Johanna Kinkel's novel Hans Ibeles in London. — 580
Page me41.704
Isaac (Bib.). — 541
Page me41.704
Jacob (Bib.). — 541
Page me41.704
Job (Bib.). — 247
Page me41.704
John Bull — the title hero of John Arbuthnot's book The History of John Bull (1712); the name is often used to personify England or Englishmen. — 8, 336, 348, 349, 370, 462, 517
Page me41.704
Joshua (Josue), the son of Nun (Bib.). — 54
Page me41.704
King Thrushbeard — the title character of a fairy-tale by the Grimm brothers. — 572, 582
Page me41.704
Kunigunde (Cunégonde) — the heroine of Voltaire's philosophical novel Candide. — 233, 235
Page me41.704
Lazarillo — the hero of the anonymous Spanish novel, Lazarillo de Tormes

Page Break me41.705
(mid-16th cent.), a smart fellow. — 489
Page me41.705
Lazarus (Bib.). — 286, 507
Page me41.705
Leviathan (Bib.) — 585
Page me41.705
Mephistopheles — the devil in Goethe's tragedy Faust. — 411
Page me41.705
Moses (Bib.) — 286, 374, 390
Page me41.705
Oceanus (Gr. myth.) — the father of the sea and river gods, personifying the element of water. — 550
Page me41.705
Oedipus (Gr. myth.) — the King of Thebes who solved the riddle of the Sphinx and saved the city from the monster; hero of Sophocles' tragedies Oedipus Rex (Oedipus Tyrannus) and Oedipus at Colonus. — 139
Page me41.705
Oluf — character in an old Danish folk ballad. — 160, 161-63
Page me41.705
Orestes and Pylades (Gr. myth.) — names of heroes generally associated with true friendship. — 508
Page me41.705
Othello — the title character of Shakespeare's tragedy Othello, the Moor of Venice. — 536
Page me41.705
Piepenbrink — a character in Freytag's comedy Die Journalisten. — 289
Page me41.705
Rumpelstiltskin (Rumpelstilzchen) — the title hero of a fairy-tale by the Grimm brothers. — 572
Page me41.705
Samaritan (Bib.) — 495
Page me41.705
Samson (Bib.) — 288
Page me41.705
Simeon (Bib.) — 541
Page me41.705
Sleeping Beauty — the title heroine of a fairy-tale by the Grimm brothers. — 582
Page me41.705
Snow-White — the title heroine of a fairy-tale by the Grimm brothers. — 572, 582
Page me41.705
Squeers, Wackford — a character in Dickens' Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby, a cruel and greedy hypocrite. — 35
Page me41.705
Theseus (Gr. myth.) — King of Athens and founder of the Athenian state. — 275
Page me41.705

Toby — the dog of Punch, the chief character in the traditional English street puppet show 'Punch and Judy' and also the name of the humorous weekly. — 238, 242, 284, 285, 379
Page me41.705
Ulysses (or Odysseus) — a character in Homer's epic poems, the Iliad and the Odyssey; king of Ithaca, noted for his eloquence, sagacity and resourcefulness; a leader of the Greeks in the Trojan War. — 274
Page me41.705
Uncle Sam — personification of the United States; probably a jocular interpretation of the initials U.S. — 370
Page me41.705
Wagner — a character in Goethe's tragedy Faust, a pedantic, narrow-minded scholar. — 379
Page me41.705
Wildemann — a character in Johanna Kinkel's novel Hans Ibeles in London. — 262

Page Break me41.706

INDEX OF QUOTED AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me41.706
Affairs in Prussia. [— Prussia, France, and Italy] (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6076, October 15, 1860. — 196, 216
Page me41.706
The American Question in England (present edition, Vol. 19). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6403, October 11, 1861. — 321, 323
Page me41.706
Another Strange Chapter of Modern History (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5436, September 23, 1858. — 84
Page me41.706
[Appeal for Support of the Men Sentenced in Cologne] (present edition, Vol. 11). In: California Staats-Zeitung and Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal Zeitung, Januar 1853. — 83
Page me41.706
The Berlin 'National-Zeitung' to the Primary Electors (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Die Berliner “Nationalzeitung” an die Urwähler. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 205, 207 (Zweite Ausgabe), 26., 28. Januar 1849. — 98
Page me41.706
British Commerce (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6063, September 29, 1860. — 185
Page me41.706

The British Cotton Trade (present edition, Vol. 19). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6405, October 14, 1861. — 321, 323
Page me41.706
The Civil War in the United States (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Der Bürgerkrieg in den Vereinigten Staaten. In: Die Presse, Nr. 306, 7. November 1861. — 323
Page me41.706
A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. Part One (present edition, Vol. 29)
— Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erstes Heft. Berlin, 1859. — 81, 102, 190, 193, 435, 436, 488
Page me41.706
A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (manuscript of 1861-1863)
— Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. — 292, 315, 319, 323, 333, 401, 402, 404, 411, 426, 433, 435, 446, 449, 460, 461, 473, 474, 484, 485, 488
Page me41.706
[Corn Prices. — European Finances and War Preparations. — The Oriental Question] (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6046, September 10, 1860. — 185

Page Break me41.707
Page me41.707
A Curious Piece of History (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5352, June 16, 1858. — 84
Page me41.707
Declaration (present edition, Vol. 17)
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 325, 21. November 1859, Beilage. — 9, 13, 36, 42, 55, 61, 105
Page me41.707
Declaration (present edition, Vol. 17)
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 336, 1. Dezember 1860, Beilage. — 217, 218
Page me41.707
The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Der 18-te Brumaire des Louis Napoleon. In: Die Revolution. Eine Zeitschrift in zwanglosen Heften. Erstes Heft, New York, 1852. — 102, 201, 228, 231, 327
Page me41.707
English Politics (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5868, February 14, 1860. — 7
Page me41.707
[Garibaldi in Sicily. —] Affairs in Prussia (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5972, June 14, 1860. — 130
Page me41.707
Gatherings from the Press (present edition, Vol. 16). In: Das Volk, Nr. 5, 8, 10, 11, 4., 25. Juni, 9., 16. Juli 1859. — 298
Page me41.707
Great Britain — A Money Stringency (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6111, November 24, 1860. — 216

Page me41.707
Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17). London, 1860. — 12, 18, 20, 34, 60, 61, 65, 68, 83, 95, 96, 100, 105, 107, 110, 115, 117, 119, 125, 131, 132, 139, 155, 163, 170, 171, 176, 178, 179, 181, 186, 187, 189, 191, 192, 196, 198, 201, 204, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 217, 218, 219, 221-28, 231, 232, 233, 234, 237, 238, 239, 241, 243, 244, 248, 249, 252, 255, 265, 269, 272, 285, 286, 290, 313, 321, 324, 327, 334, 342, 362, 539, 568, 572, 573
Page me41.707
Interesting from Sicily. — Garibaldi's Quarrel with La Farina. — A Letter from Garibaldi (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6018, August 8, 1860. — 172
Page me41.707
The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (present edition, Vol. 12)
— Der Ritter vom edelmüthigen Bewußtsein. [New York, 1854]. — 51, 58, 88, 95, 97, 98, 103, 108, 109, 116
Page me41.707
Kossuth and Louis Napoleon (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5748, September 24, 1859. — 12, 18, 27, 106, 125
— Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon. In: The Free Press, Vol. VII, No. 10, September 28, 1859. — 12, 125
Page me41.707
[Letter to the Editor of the 'Allgemeine Zeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 17). In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 300, 27. Oktober 1859. — 42, 60, 66
Page me41.707
The London 'Times' and Lord Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 19). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6411, October 21, 1861. — 323, 325
Page me41.707
The London 'Times' on the Orleans Princes in America (present edition, Vol. 19). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6426, November 7, 1861. — 323

Page Break me41.708
Page me41.708
Lord Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 12)
— Palmerston; Palmerston and Russia; A Chapter of Modern History; England and Russia. In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3902, 3916, 3930 and 3973, October 19, November 4, 21, 1853 and January 11, 1854. — 103, 152
— Palmerston and Russia, London, 1853, 2nd edition, London, 1854. — 103
— Palmerston and the treaty of Unkiar Skelessi. London, 1854. — 103
— Palmerston and Russia; Palmerston, What Has He Done? (Palmerston and the treaty of Unkiar Skelessi), London, 1855. — 103
— Der 'wahrhaft' englische Minister und Russland am Bosporus. Lord Palmerston und die polnische Insurrection 1831 (Extracts from Marx's pamphlet). In: Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Dokumente und Actenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte. Berlin, 1859-1860, Hefte I-II. — 10
Page me41.708
The March Association (present edition, Vol. 9)
— Der Märzverein. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 243, 11. März 1849. — 100

Page me41.708
[The New Sardinian Loan. — The Impending French and Indian Loans] (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6035, August 28, 1860. — 568
Page me41.708
The North American Civil War (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Der nordamerikanische Bürgerkrieg. In: Die Presse, Nr. 293, 25. Oktober 1861. — 323
Page me41.708
A Note on the Amnesty (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Beitrag zur Amnestie. In: Barmer Zeitung, Nr. 226, 27. September 1862. — 417, 418
Page me41.708
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la Philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon. Paris, Bruxelles, 1847. — 101
Page me41.708
The Principal Actors in the 'Trent' Drama (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Die Hauptakteure im 'Trent'-Drama. In: Die Presse, Nr. 337, 8. Dezember 1861. — 331
Page me41.708
[Proclamation on Poland by the German Workers' Educational Society in London] (present edition, Vol. 19) [London, 1863]. — 455, 458, 472
Page me41.708
Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette. To the Editor of the 'Free Press' (present edition, Vol. 17) [London, 1860]. — 28, 29, 30, 33, 35-38, 46, 47, 53, 62, 86, 104
Page me41.708
Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozess zu Köln. Basel, 1853. — 72, 74, 76, 82, 83, 91, 92, 98, 110, 140
— [Boston, 1853.] — 11, 58, 59, 74, 76, 81, 82, 91, 92, 98, 145, 146, 150, 238, 241, 242, 327
— In: Neu-England-Zeitung, März-April 1853. — 98
Page me41.708
Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th century (present edition, Vol. 15). In: The Free Press, Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 13, 16, 17, 19, 26, 28, 29 and 34; August 16 and 23; September 13 and 20; October 4; November 8 and 29; December 6 and 20, 1856; February 4, 18 and 25; April 1, 1857; The Sheffield Free Press, June 28, July 5, 12, August 2, 1856 (abridged). — 102, 152

Page Break me41.709
Page me41.709
Russia Using Austria. — The Meeting at Warsaw (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6072, October 10, 1860. — 216
Page me41.709
Speech on the Question of Free Trade Delivered to the Democratic Association of Brussels at Its Public Meeting of January 9, 1848 (present edition, Vol. 6)

— Discours sur la question du libre échange, prononcé á l'Association démocratique de Bruxelles, dans la séance publique du 9 Janvier 1848 [Bruxelles, 1848]. — 101
Page me41.709
To the Editor of 'The Daily Telegraph', February 6, 1860 (present edition, Vol. 17). — 29, 33, 75, 76
Page me41.709
To the Editors of the 'Volks-Zeitung'. Declaration (present edition, Vol. 17)
— Erklärung. In: Volks-Zeitung, Nr. 35, 10. February 1860; Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 41, 10. Februar 1860, Beilage; Die Reform, Nr. 18, 11. Februar 1860; Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 48, 17. Februar 1860, Beilage, and in other German papers. — 27, 30, 33, 39, 47, 119, 218
Page me41.709
A Traitor in Circassia (present edition, Vol. 15). In: The Free Press, No. 34, April 1, 1857. — 84, 356
Page me41.709
The 'Trent' Case (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Der 'Trent'-Fall. In: Die Presse, Nr. 331, 2. Dezember 1861. — 333
Page me41.709
Wage Labour and Capital (present edition, Vol. 9) — Lohnarbeit und Kapital. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 264, 265, 266, 267, 269, 5., 6., 7., 8., 11. April 1849. — 102, 534

Engels, Frederick
Page me41.709
Artillery (present edition, Vol. 18). In: New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. II, 1858. — 201
Page me41.709
Austria — Progress of the Revolution (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6152, January 12, 1861. — 229, 237
Page me41.709
British Defenses (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6020, August 10, 1860. — 165, 173, 175
Page me41.709
The British Volunteer Force (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5994, July 11, 1860. — 170
Page me41.709
The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die deutsche Reichsverfassungs-Campagne. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. London, Hamburg, New-York, Nr. 1, 2, 3, 1850. — 259
Page me41.709
The Condition of the Working-Class in England. From Personal Observation and Authentic Sources (present edition, Vol. 4)
— Die Lage der arbeitenden Klasse in England. Nach eigner Anschauung und authentischen Quellen. Leipzig, 1845. — 5, 465, 468, 490
Page me41.709
Could the French Sack London? (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6021, August 11, 1860. — 175

Page me41.709
The Debate on the Law on Posters (present edition, Vol. 9)
— Die Debatte über das Plakatgesetz. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 279 (Zweite Ausgabe), 283, 22., 27. April 1849. — 98

Page Break me41.710
Page me41.710
French Armaments (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire, No. 22, February 2, 1861. — 224
Page me41.710
Garibaldi in Calabria (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6058, September 24, 1860. — 182
Page me41.710
Garibaldi in Sicily (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5979, June 22, 1860. — 155
Page me41.710
Garibaldi's Movements (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6031, August 23, 1860. — 177, 178
Page me41.710
Garibaldi's Progress (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6056, September 21, 1860. — 182, 185
Page me41.710
German Movements (present edition, Vol. 19). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6178, February 12, 1861. — 250
Page me41.710
The History of the Rifle. I-VIII (present edition, Vol. 18). In: The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire, Nos. 9, 11, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, November 3 and 17, December 8, 15 and 29, 1860, January 5, 12 and 19, 1861. — 177
Page me41.710
The Late Trial at Cologne (present edition, Vol. II). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3645, December 22, 1852. — 51
Page me41.710
Navy (present edition, Vol. 18). In: New American Cyclopaedia, Vol. XII, 1861. — 196, 198, 199, 208, 216
Page me41.710
Outlines of a Critique of Political Economy (present edition, Vol. 3) — Umrisse zu einer Kritik der Nationalökonomie. In: Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher, hg. von Arnold Ruge und Karl Marx, 1-ste und 2-te Lieferung. Paris, 1844. — 404
Page me41.710
Po and Rhine (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Po und Rhein. Berlin, 1859. — 4, 13, 14, 25, 51, 103, 108, 197, 215, 237, 280, 458
Page me41.710
Preface to the Collection 'Essays Addressed to Volunteers' (present edition, Vol. 18). In: Essays Addressed to Volunteers. London-Manchester, 1861. — 257, 262
Page me41.710

A Review of English Volunteer Riflemen (present edition, Vol. 18). In: Essays Addressed to Volunteers. London-Manchester, 1861.
— Eine Musterung englischer freiwilliger Jäger. In: Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung, Nr. 36, 8. September 1860. — 191, 203
— A German Account of the Newton Review. In: The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire, No. 2, September 14, 1860. — 191, 203, 205
— A German Account of the Volunteers. In: The Times, No. 23733, September 24, 1860 (extracts). — 206
Page me41.710
Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3282, 3284, 3292, 3293, 3297, 3311, 3389, 3395, 3403, 3406, 3407, 3425, 3432, 3438, 3517, 3537, 3564, 3576, 3594, October 25, 28; November 6, 7, 12, 28, 1851; February 27; March 5, 15, 18, 19; April 9, 17, 24; July 27; August 19; September 18; October 2, 23, 1852. — 91
Page me41.710
Russian Progress in Central Asia (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5471, November 3, 1858. — 152

Page Break me41.711
— Russian State Papers Respecting Her Recent Advance to Our Indian Frontiers. In: The Free Press, Vol. VI, No. 23, November 24, 1858. — 152
Page me41.711
Savoy and Nice (present edition, Vol. 16). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5874, February 21, 1860. — 10, 15, 20
Page me41.711
Savoy, Nice and the Rhine (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Savoyen, Nizza und der Rhein. Berlin, 1860. — 13, 21, 25, 32, 39, 50, 51, 108, 112, 113, 124, 130, 134, 135, 143, 145, 155, 169, 197, 237
Page me41.711
The Sick Man of Austria (present edition, Vol. 17). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6039, September 1, 1860. — 179
Page me41.711
To the Editor of the 'Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung' (Manuscript) (present edition, Vol. 18). — 191

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick
Page me41.711
Address of the Central Authority to the League, June 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die Centralbehörde an den Bund. In: Karlsruher Zeitung, Nr. 172, 24. Juli 1850. — 25
Page me41.711
The American Civil War (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Der amerikanische Bürgerkrieg. In: Die Presse, Nrs. 84, 85; 26., 27. März 1862. — 351, 352, 353
Page me41.711
[Circular against Kriege] (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Zirkular gegen Kriege. Mai 1846. — 102

Page me41.711
The German Ideology. Critique of Modern German Philosophy According to Its Representatives Feuerbach, B. Bauer and Stirner, and of German Socialism According to Its Various Prophets (Manuscript) (present edition, Vol. 5) — Die deutsche Ideologie. Kritik der neuesten deutschen Philosophie in ihren Repräsentanten, Feuerbach, B. Bauer und Stirner, und des deutschen Sozialismus in seinen verschiedenen Propheten. — 101
Page me41.711
The Great Men of the Exile (Manuscript) (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Die grossen Männer des Exils, 1852. — 19
Page me41.711
The Holy Family or Critique of Critical Criticism. Against Bruno Bauer and Company (present edition, Vol. 4).
— Die heilige Familie, oder Kritik der kritischen Kritik. Gegen Bruno Bauer & Konsorten. Frankfurt a. M. 1845. — 101
Page me41.711
Manifesto of the Communist Party (present edition, Vol. 6) — Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei. London, 1848. — 452, 494, 534
Page me41.711
Obituary (present edition, Vol. 19)
— Todes-Anzeige. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 144, 23. Mai 1864, Beilage. — 529
Page me41.711
[Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press] (present edition, Vol. 11). In: The Spectator, No. 1270, October 28, 1852; The People's Paper, No. 26, October 30, 1852; The Morning Advertiser, October 30, 1852; The Leader, No. 136, October 30, 1852 and The Examiner, No. 2335, October 30, 1852. — 82
Page me41.711
Speech from the Throne (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Die Thronrede. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 234, 235; 1., 2. März 1849. — 98

Page Break me41.712
Page me41.712
Statement (Manuscript) (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Erklärung. — 44
Page me41.712
[Statement on Resignation from the German Workers' Educational Society in London.] London, September 17, 1850 (Manuscript) (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Erklärung über den Austritt aus dem Deutschen Bildungsverein für Arbeiter in London. London, 17. September 1850. — 94
Page me41.712
Two Political Trials (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Zwei politische Prozesse. Verhandelt vor den Februar-Assisen in Köln. Köln, 1849. — 95, 100

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me41.712
[Abel, K.] The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria. In: The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, February 6, 1860. — 28, 29, 32, 41, 48, 56, 58, 71, 74, 75, 86, 95, 145, 155
Page me41.712
[Reply to Marx's letter to the Editor of The Daily Telegraph.] In: The Daily Telegraph, No. 1445, February 13, 1860. — 48, 75, 95
Page me41.712
About, E. La Prusse en 1860. Paris, 1860. — 159, 160, 164, 235
Page me41.712
Abt. Carl Vogt und Carl Marx oder die Bürstenheimer. In: Stimmen der Zeit. Wochenschrift für Politik und Literatur, Nr. 39, Winter 1861, Beilage. Leipzig. Heidelberg. — 321, 324
Page me41.712
Altenhöfer, A.J. Zur Entgegnung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 28, 28. Januar 1860, Beilage. — 18
Page me41.712
Appianus Alexandrinus. De Civilibus Romanorum bellis historiarum. — 265
Page me41.712
Bacounine, M. Le comité central de Varsovie et le comité militaire russe. Réponse au général Mieroslawski. Londres, 1862. — 456
Page me41.712
Bakunin, M. [Statement.] In: Allgemeine Oder-Zeitung, Nr. 159, 11. Juli 1848; Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 46, 16. Juli 1848, Beilage. — 91
Page me41.712
[Bamberger, L.] Juchhe nach Italia! Bern u. Genf, 1859. — 10, 212
Page me41.712
Bamberger, L. Des Michael Pro Schriftenwechsel mit Thomas Contra, aus dem Jahre 1859. In: Demokratische Studien, Hamburg, 1860. — 187, 190, 212
Page me41.712
Bastian, A. Der Mensch in der Geschichte. Zur Bergründung einer psychologischen Weltanschauung. Bände I-III, Leipzig, 1860. — 232, 246
Page me41.712
Batrachomyomachia. — 311
Page me41.712
Bauer, B. Die jetzige Stellung Rußlands. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 393
— Rußland und das Germanenthum. Charlottenburg, 1853. — 393
— Rußland und das Germanenthum. Zweite Abtheilung. Die deutsche und die orientalische Frage. Charlottenburg, 1853. — 393
— Rußland und England. Charlottenburg, 1854. — 393
Page me41.712
Becker, H. Meine Candidatur zum Abgeordnetenhause. (Wahlkampf am 6. Dezbr. 1861. Dortmund, 1862. — 375
Page me41.712
Becker, J. Ph. Wie und Wann? Ein ernstes Wort über die Fragen und Aufgaben der Zeit. Genf, London, Manchester, 1862. — 342

Page me41.712
B[eta, H.] Ein Nichtamnestirter. In: Die Gartenlaube, Nr. 2, 3, 1862. — 355
— Ferdinand Freiligrath. (Lebensskizze mit Portrait). In: Die Gartenlaube, Nr. 43, 1859. — 55, 245

Page Break me41.713
— “Herr Vogt” von Karl Marx. In: Magazin für die Literatur des Auslandes, Nr. 2, 9. Januar 1861. — 244
Page me41.713
Bible
The Old Testament
Ezekiel. — 286
The Judges. — 87
The Pentateuch. — 542
Maccabees, books of (apocryphal). — 391
The New Testament
Luke. — 286, 428, 495
Revelation. — 36
Page me41.713
Biscamp, E. Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 46, 15. Februar 1860, Beilage. — 52, 68
— Die politischen Emigrationen und die Tuilerien. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 312, 7. November 1860, Beilage. — 215
— Der Reichsregent. In: Das Volk, Nr. 2, 14. Mai 1859. — 64, 66, 166 Blind, K.
— Crystal Palace. — The Schiller Commemoration. In: The Morning Advertiser, No. 21 344, November 11, 1859. — 55
— Deutschland und Polen. In: Der Beobachter, 1863; Der Pionier, Nr. 15, 8. April 1863. — 455
— Gegen Karl Vogt. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 44, 13. Februar 1860, Beilage. — 52, 58, 62, 66, 85, 87
— The Grand Duke Constantine to be King of Hungary. In: The Free Press, Vol. VII, No. 5, May 27, 1859. — 41, 59, 65
— Schiller. A Sketch of His Career and Works. London, 1859. — 236
— [Statement.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 313, 9. November 1859. — 30, 41, 49, 60, 61, 62, 86, 104
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 345, 11. Dezember 1859, Beilage. — 41, 56, 61, 62, 86, 104
— Warnung zur gefälligen Verbreitung. In: Das Volk, Nr. 7, 18. Juni 1859. — 31, 37, 60
— Zur Warnung (pamphlet). — 30, 31, 37, 52, 55, 59-66, 87, 179, 184
— Zur Warnung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 173, 22. Juni 1859, Beilage. In the article: K. Vogt und die deutsche Emigration in London. — 55, 64, 66
Page me41.713
Bodinus, J. De republica libri sex... Parisiis, 1586. — 479
Page me41.713
Boetius. Arithmetica. — 514
Page me41.713

[Boisguillebert, P.] Le détail de la France, sous le régne de Louis XIV. 1697. — 479
Page me41.713
[Borkheim, S.L.] Napoleon III und Preussen. Antwort eines deutschen Flüchtlings auf 'Preussen in 1860' von Edmond About. London, 1860. — 197 — [Review of Engels' 'Savoyen, Nizza und der Rhein'.] In: Hermann, 7. April 1860. — 113
Page me41.713
Brass, A. Was Noth ist. Eine politische Studie. Genf, 1860. — 206
Page me41.713
Bright, J. [Speech at the meeting in London on 26 March 1863.] In: The Times, No. 24517, March 27, 1863. — 468
Page me41.713
Bucher, L. [Letter to the Editor of Hermann.] In: Hermann, Nr. 108, 26. Januar 1861. — 249, 253

Page Break me41.714
Page me41.714
Büchner, L. Kraft und Stoff. Empirisch-naturphilosophische Studien. Frankfurt a. M., 1855. — 171
Page me41.714
Bürgers, H. Hr. v. Ladenberg und die Volksschullehrer. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 182, 30. Dezember 1848. — 194 — [Speech at the first congress of the National Association in Coburg on 5 September 1860.] In: National-Zeitung, Nr. 420, 7. September 1860; Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 256, 12. September 1860. — 194
Page me41.714
Carpenter, W.B. Principles of General and Comparative Physiology. London, 1839. — 546
Page me41.714
Chavée [H.J.] Essai d'étymologie philosophique ou Recherches sur l'origine et les variations des mots qui expriment les actes intellectuels et moraux. Bruxelles, 1844. — 540
Page me41.714
Chenu, A. Les Conspirateurs. Les sociétés secrétes. La préfecture de police sous Caussidiére. Les corps-francs. Paris, 1850. — 12, 15
Page me41.714
Cicero. Oratio pro Q. Ligario ad C. Caesarem. — 279
Page me41.714
Clausewitz, C. von. Vom Kriege. In: Hinterlassene Werke des Generals Carl von Clausewitz über Krieg und Kriegführung. Bände 1-3. Berlin, 1832-1834. — 359
Page me41.714
Cobbett, W. Bourbon War and the London Newspaper Press. In: Cobbett's Weekly Register, Vol. 45, No. 6, February 8, 1823. — 489
Page me41.714
[Collet, C.D.] Bakunin. In: The Free Press, Vol. X, No. 3, March 5, 1862. — 341

— Groundlessness of Any Claim of Russia to Holstein-Gottorp. In: The Free Press, Vol. XII, No. 5, May 4, 1864. — 552
Page me41.714
Darwin, Ch. On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life. London, 1859. — 232, 246, 381
Page me41.714
Demokratische Studien. Unter Mitwirkung von L. Bamberger, Karl Grün, Moriß Hartmann, Friedrich Kapp, F. Lassalle, Michelet, H.B. Oppenheim, Ludwig Simon aus Trier, Adolf Stahr, Carl Vogt u. A. herausgegeben von Ludwig Walesrode. Hamburg, 1860. — 124, 169, 187, 190, 201, 212
Page me41.714
Dickens, Ch. The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby. — 35
Page me41.714
[Diodorus Siculus.] Diodori bibliotheca historica. — 354
Page me41.714
Disraeli, B. [Speech in the House of Commons on 18 April, 1864.] In: The Times, April 19, 1864. — 517
Page me41.714
Doenniges, W. Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reichs unter der Herrschaft König und Kaiser Ottos I. von 951 bis 973. In: Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reichs unter dem Sächsischen Hause. Herausgegeben von Leopold Ranke. Erster Band. Dritte Abtheilung. Berlin, 1839. — 561
Page me41.714
Dozy, R. De Israëlieten te Mekka van Davids tijd tot in de vijfde eeuw onzer tijdrekening. Haarlem, 1864. — 541, 542
Page me41.714
Économistes financiers du XVIIIe siécle. Précédés de Notices historiques sur chaque auteur, et accompagnés de commentaires et de notes explicatives, par M. Eugéne Daire. Deuxiéme Édition. Paris, 1843. — 265
Page me41.714
Eichhoff, W. Berliner Polizei-Silhouetten. Berlin, 1860. — 189, 190, 194, 195
— Berliner Polizei-Silhouetten. Zweite Serie. Berlin, 1860. — 247
— Stieber. In: Hermann, Nr. 36, 37, 38, 40, 42, 43; 10., 17., 24. September; 8., 22., 29. Oktober 1859. — 16, 80

Page Break me41.715
Page me41.715
[Elsner, K.F.M.] Kasematten-Wolff. In: Breslauer Zeitung, Morgen-Ausgabe. 24. Mai 1864; Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 145, 26. Mai 1864. — 533, 588
Page me41.715
Engel, E. Die Volkszählungen, ihre Stellung zur Wissenschaft und ihre Aufgabe in der Geschichte. Ein Vortrag, gehalten in der Singakademie zu Berlin, den 15. Februar 1862. In: Zeitschrift des königl. preußischen statistischen Bureaus, Nr. 2, Februar 1862. — 480
Page me41.715
[Ewerbeck, A.H.] Bakunin. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 36, 6. Juli 1848. — 90
Page me41.715

Faucher, J. [Speech in the Chamber of Deputies on 1 December 1863.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 338, 4. Dezember 1863. — 506
Page me41.715
Ferrand, W. [Speech in the House of Commons on 16 June 1864.] In: The Morning Post, No. 28238, June 17, 1864. — 544
Page me41.715
Fichte, J.G. Politische Fragmente aus den Jahren 1807 und 1813. In: J.G. Fichte's sämmtliche Werke. Band VII. Berlin, 1846. — 131
Page me41.715
Fischart, J. Affentheurliche, Naupengeheurliche Geschichtklitterung: von Thaten und Rahten der vor kurtzen langen und je weilen vollennwolbeschreyten Helden und Herrn: Grandgoschier, Gorgellantua und Pantagruel. Königen inn Utopien, Ledewelt und Nienenreich, Soldan der Neuen Kannarrien und Oudyssen Inseln: auch Grossfürsten im Nubel Nibel Nebelland, Erbvögt auff Nichilburg, und Niderherren zu Nullibingen, Nullenstein und Niergendheym Etwan von M. Franz Rabelais Französisch entworffen. Achte Ausgabe, 1617. — 225
Page me41.715
Fischel, E. Brennuszug und Moskowitertum. — 8, 153
— Die Despoten als Revolutionäre. An das Deutsche Volk. Berlin, 1859. — 8, 153
— The Duke of Coburg's Pamphlet. London, 1859. — 153
— The Revolutionists Become Russian. In: The Free Press, Vol. VIII, No. 1, January 4, 1860. — 8
Page me41.715
Francoeur, L.-B. Cours complet de mathématiques pures... Vol. 1-2, 2e éd. Paris, 1819. — 532
Page me41.715
Freiligrath, F. An Joseph Weydemeyer. Zwei poetische Episteln. Epistel I. London, den 16. Januar 1852. — 43, 84
— Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 319, 15. November 1859, Beilage. — 55, 56
— Trotz alledem! — 87, 425
— Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London. — 226, 235, 237 — [Statement.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 345, 11. Dezember 1859, Beilage. — 36, 56
Page me41.715
Freytag, G. Die Journalisten. — 270, 289
Page me41.715
[Friedrich Karl, Prinz.] Eine militärische Denkschrift. Frankfurt am Main, 1860. — 200
Page me41.715
Fröbel, J. Julius Fröbel gegen Karl Vogt. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 24, 24. Januar 1860. — 20
Page me41.715
Glennie, J.S. [Obituary of Buckle.] In: The Times, No. 24275, June 18, 1862. — 381
Page me41.715
Goethe, J.W. von. An Suleika (from Westöstlicher Diwan). — 515
— Faust. — 353, 379, 411
— Totalität. — 507

Page Break me41.716
Page me41.716
[Goldmann, K.E.] Die europäische Pentarchie. Leipzig, 1839. — 393
— Europa's Cabinette und Allianzen. Vom Verfasser der Pentarchie. Leipzig, 1862. — 393
Page me41.716
[Griesheim, K.G.] Gegen Demokraten helfen nur Soldaten. Berlin, 1848. — 328
Page me41.716
Grimm, brothers. Children's and Domestic Tales.
— Brother Merry. — 582
— King Thrushbeard. — 572, 582
— Rumpelstiltskin. — 572
— Sleeping Beauty. — 582
— Snow-White. — 572, 582
Page me41.716
Grove, W.R. The Correlation of Physical Forces. IV ed., London, 1862. — 551, 553
Page me41.716
Grün, K. Die jungste Literatur-Bewegung in Frankreich. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 187, 190
— (anon.) Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, die Sphinx auf dem französischen Kaiserthron, Hamburg, 1860. — 138, 139
Page me41.716
Guthrie, J. [Address to the citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, on 16 March in reference to the condition of the country.] In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6210, March 21, 1861. — 308, 309
Page me41.716
Häfner, L. Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 28, 28. Januar 1860, Beilage. — 18, 34
Page me41.716
Hartmann, M. Ein Brief aus Italien an den Verfasser des 'Juchhe nach Italia!'. In: Demokratische Studien, Hamburg, 1860. — 212
Page me41.716
Hegel, G.W.F. Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse. In: G.W.F. Hegel. Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bände 6-7. Berlin, 1842-1843. — 220
— Phänomenologie des Geistes. In: G.W.F. Hegel. Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bd. 2. Berlin, 1841. — 265, 381, 546
— Vorlesungen über die Philosophie der Geschichte. In: G.W.F. Hegel. Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bd. 9. Berlin, 1840. — 561
— Wissenschaft der Logik. In: G.W.F. Hegel. Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bände 3-5. Berlin, 1841. — 220, 265
Page me41.716
Heine, H. Schloßlegende. — 462
— Zur Beruhigung. — 342
Page me41.716
Herwegh, G. [Letter to Lassalle of 5 June 1863.] In: Nordstern, Nr. 221, 18. Juli 1863. — 489

Page me41.716
Hildebrand. Camera obscura. Haarlem, 1839. — 274, 510, 516
Page me41.716
Hirsch, W. Die Opfer der Moucharderie. Rechtfertigungsschrift. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 3, 4, 5, 6; 1., 8., 15., 22. April 1853. — 74
Page me41.716
Hobbes, Th. Leviathan, or the Matter, Form and Power of a Commonwealth, Ecclesiastical and Civil. In: The English Works of Thomas Hobbes ... now first collected and edited by Sir William Molesworth. Vol. 3, London, 1839. — 381
Page me41.716
Hodde, L. de la. La naissance de la République en février 1848. Paris, 1850. — 12, 15
Page me41.716
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Ars Poetica. — 354
— Carminae. — 92, 452
Page me41.716
Hugo, V. Napoléon le Petit. Londres, 1852. — 513, 519, 554

Page Break me41.717
Page me41.717
Humboldt, A. Briefe an Varnhagen von Ense aus den Jahren 1827 bis 1858. Leipzig, 1860. — 116, 131, 271
Page me41.717
Huxley, Th. H. Evidence as to Man's Place in Nature. London-Edinburgh, 1863. — 465
Page me41.717
Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reichs unter dem Sächsischen Hause. Herausgegeben von Leopold Ranke. Bände I-III. Berlin, 1837-1840. — 561
Page me41.717
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis). Satirarum IV. — 327
Page me41.717
[Karadzic, V.S.] Karatsich, V.S. Narodne srpske piesme. Linistsi i u Bechu. 1823-1833. — 473
Page me41.717
Kinglake, A.W. The Invasion of the Crimea; Its Origin, and an Account of its Progress down to the Death of Lord Raglan. Volumes I-II. Edinburgh and London, 1863. — 478, 482 — [Speech in the House of Commons on 12 July 1860 on Napoleon III's policy vis-á-vis Italy.] In: The Times, No. 23671, July 13, 1860. — 173, 175, 456
Page me41.717
Kinkel, G. Denkschrift über das deutsche Nationalanlehn zur Förderung der Revolution d.d. Elmira im Staate New York, 22. Febr. 1852. In: New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung, 2. März 1852. — 98
— Festrede bei der Schillerfeier im Krystallpalast, 10. November 1859. [London, 1859]. — 237
Page me41.717

Kinkel, J. Hans Ibeles in London. Ein Familienbild aus dem Flüchtlingsleben. Bd. 1-2. Stuttgart, 1860. — 262, 580
Page me41.717
Kölliker, A. Handbuch der Gewebelehre des Menschen. Vierte umgearbeitete Auflage. Leipzig, 1863. — 546
Page me41.717
Koeppen, C.F. Die Religion des Buddha und ihre Entstehung. Bände I-II. Berlin, 1857-1859. — 287
Page me41.717
[Kolatschek, A.] Die Juchheisten. In: Stimmen der Zeit. Monatsschrift für Politik und Literatur, Zweiter Band. Juli-Dezember 1860. Leipzig und Heidelberg, 1860. — 206, 208, 212, 213, 216
Page me41.717
[Laboulaye, E.] Paris en Amérique par le docteur René Lefebvre. Septiéme édition. Paris, 1863. — 502
Page me41.717
Lamennais, F. de. Paroles d'un Croyant, Paris, 1834. — 432
Page me41.717
Lassalle, F. Arbeiterlesebuch. Rede Lassalle's zu Frankfurt am Main am 17. und 19. Mai 1863, nach dem stenographischen Bericht. Frankfurt am Main, 1863. — 484
— Arbeiterprogramm. Ueber den besondern Zusammenhang der gegenwärtigen Geschichtsperiode mit der Idee des Arbeiterstandes. Zürich, 1863. — 451
— Das Criminal-Urtheil wider mich mit kritischen Randnoten zum Zweck der Appellationsrechtfertigung. [Leipzig, 1863]. — 466 — Die Feste, die Presse und der Frankfurter Abgeordnetentag. Drei Symptome des öffentlichen Geistes. Düsseldorf [1863]. — 494 — Fichte's politisches Vermächtniß und die neueste Gegenwart. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 124, 131, 169, 190
— Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. Berlin, 1864. — 534
— Herr Julian Schmidt der Literarhistoriker mit Setzer-Scholien herausgegeben. Berlin, 1862. — 376, 377, 381, 389, 391

Page Break me41.718
— Die indirecte Steuer und die Lage der arbeitenden Klassen. Eine Vertheidigungsrede vor dem K. Kammergericht zu Berlin. Zürich, 1863. — 479-80
— Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie. Berlin, 1859. — 50, 51, 390
— Der Lassallesche Criminalprozeß Zweites Heft. Die mündliche Verhandlung nach dem stenographischen Bericht. Zürich, 1863. — 466
— Offnes Antwortschreiben an das Central-Comité zur Berufung eines Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeitercongresses zu Leipzig. Zürich, 1863. — 467, 469
— Die Philosophie Fichte's und die Bedeutung des Deutschen Volksgeistes. Festrede gehalten bei der am 19. Mai 1862 von der Philosophischen Gesellschaft und dem Wissenschaftlichen Kunstverein im Arnimschen Saale veranstalteten Fichtefeier. Berlin, 1862. — 376, 383

— Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos. Nach einer neuen Sammlung seiner Bruchstücke und der Zeugnisse der Alten dargestellt. Bände 1-2. Berlin, 1858. — 142, 281, 567 — [Speech at Solingen on 27 September 1863.] In: Berliner Reform, Nr. 229, 1. Oktober 1863. — 585
— [Speech about Wilhelm Wolff.] In: Nordstern, Nr. 259, 28. Mai 1864. — 533
— Das System der erworbenen Rechte. Eine Versöhnung des positiven Rechts und der Rechtsphilosophie. In zwei Theilen. Leipzig, 1861. — 124, 233, 257, 292, 293, 298, 302, 313, 315, 317-18, 320, 322, 325, 330, 333, 341, 346, 356, 426
— Ueber den besondern Zusammenhang der gegenwärtigen Geschichtsperiode mit der Idee des Arbeiterstandes. Berlin, 1862. — 420
— Ueber Verfassungswesen. Ein Vortrag gehalten in einem Berliner Bürger-Bezirks-Verein. Berlin, 1862. — 376, 383, 440
— Was nun? Zweiter Vortrag über Verfassungswesen. Zürich, 1863. — 440, 441 — Die Wissenschaft und die Arbeiter. Eine Vertheidigungsrede vor dem Berliner Griminalgericht. Zürich, 1863. — 452
Page me41.718
Lepsius, R. Denkmäler aus Ägypten und Äthiopien. Bände I-XII. Berlin, 1849-1859. — 286
Page me41.718
[Liebknecht, W.] Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 327, 23. November 1859, Beilage. — 56
Page me41.718
[Lommel, G.] Hinter den Coulissen. Historisch-politische Bilder aus der Neuzeit. Erster Theil. Vom October 1847 bis Mai 1848. Genf und Newyork, 1859. — 115, 118, 123, 126, 211, 227, 327
Page me41.718
Lord, P.B. Popular Physiology. The third edition, revised. London, 1855. — 546
Page me41.718
Lucan (Marcus Annaeus Lucanus). Pharsalia. — 367
Page me41.718
[Lüning, O.] [Review of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nos. 1-4.] In: Neue Deutsche Zeitung, Nr. 148, 149, 150, 151; 22., 23., 25., 26. Juni 1850. — 22
Page me41.718
Lyell, Ch. The Geological Evidences of the Antiquity of Man with Remarks on Theories of the Origin of Species by Variation. Second edition, revised. London, 1863. — 465, 473
Page me41.718
Mackay, Ch. [Report from New York of 12 December 1862.] In: The Times, No. 24440, December 27, 1862. — 439
Page me41.718
Mädler, J.H. Der Wunderbau des Weltalls, oder Pupuläre Astronomie. Fünfte, gänzlich neu bearbeitete Auflage. Berlin, 1861. — 354

Page Break me41.719

Page me41.719
Malthus, T.R. An Essay on the Principle of Population, as It Affects the Future Improvement of Society, with the Remarks on the Speculations of Mr. Godwin, M. Condorcet, and Other Writers. London, 1798. — 381
Page me41.719
[Mayer, M.] Verum inventum, hoc est, munera Germaniae, ab ipsa primivus reperta (non ex vino, ut calumniator quidam sceptice invehit, sed vi animi et corporis) et reliquo Orbi communicata... auctore Michaelo Maiero. Francofurti, 1619. — 490
Page me41.719
Mazzini, G. [Letter to K. Blind.] In: Hermann, No. 112, 23. Februar 1861. — 264
Page me41.719
Merckel, W. Die fünfte Zunft. 1848. — 328
Page me41.719
[Meyen, E.] Berliner Briefe. I. In: Der Freischütz, Nr. 49, 23. April 1861. — 284, 377 — Die neue Denunciation Karl Vogt's durch K. Marx. In: Der Freischütz, Nr. 155, 156; 27., 29. Dezember 1860; Nr. 1, 1. Januar 1861. — 238, 239, 241, 242
Page me41.719
Mieroslawski, L. De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen. Paris, 1856. — 466 — Derniére réponse du général Mieroslawski á M. Michel Bakounine. Paris, 1863. — 466
Page me41.719
Miquel, J. [Speech at the first congress of the National Association in Coburg on 5 September 1860.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 256, 12. September 1860. — 194
Page me41.719
Montagu, R. [Speech in the House of Commons on 18 June 1861.] In: The Times, No. 23963, June 19, 1861. — 299
Page me41.719
[Müller-] Tellering, E. von. Vorgeschmack in die künftige deutsche Diktatur von Marx und Engels. Cöln, 1850. — 9, 12, 82, 84
Page me41.719
Nasmyth, J. [Letter to the Factory Inspector Horner of 6 November 1852.] In: Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the Half Year ending 31st October 1856. London, 1857. — 411
Page me41.719
The New American Cyclopaedia: a Popular Dictionary of General Knowledge. Edited by George Ripley and Charles A. Dana. In 16 volumes. New York-London, 1858-1863. — 68, 196, 263, 272
Page me41.719
Niebuhr, B.G. Römische Geschichte. Th. I-III. Berlin, 1827-1832. — 357
Page me41.719
Normanby, C.H. [Speech in the House of Lords on 27 January 1860.] In: The Times, No. 23528, January 28, 1860. — 10
Page me41.719
Oppenheim, H.B. Unsere Ideale und Enttäuschungen in England und Frankreich. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 190, 212
Page me41.719

Orges, H. Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 12, 12. Januar 1860. — 10, 14
Page me41.719
Palmerston, J. [Speeches in the House of Commons.]
— 8 August 1831. In: The Times, No. 14612, August 9, 1831. — 463
— 23 July 1860. In: The Times, No. 23680, July 24, 1860. — 173
— 26 April 1861. In: The Times, No. 23918, April 27, 1861. — 284
— 18 June 1861. In: The Times, No. 23963, June 19, 1861. — 299
Page me41.719
Patkul, J.R. von. Berichte an das Zaarische Cabinet in Moscau, von seinem Gesandtschafts-Posten bey August II. Könige von Polen. Theile I-III. Berlin, 1792-1797. — 471, 541
Page me41.719
[Pi de Cosprons, Honoré] Mémoire sur l'origine scythocimmérienne de la langue romane, par M. le duc du Roussillon. Premiére partie. Holborn, 1863. — 484

Page Break me41.720
Page me41.720
Potter, E. [To the Editor of The Times, 20 March 1863.] In: The Times, No. 24514, March 24, 1863. — 463
Page me41.720
Quesnay, F. Analyse du Tableau économique. In: Physiocrates... Avec une introduction sur la doctrine des physiocrates, des commentaires et des notices historiques, par M. Eugéne Daire. Premiére partie. Paris, 1846. — 381, 485, 487
Page me41.720
Quintilian (Marcus Fabius Quintilianus). De institutione oratoria. — 268
Page me41.720
Rau, K.H. Lehrbuch der politischen Oekonomie. Band I: Grundsätze der Volkswirtschaftslehre. Sechste vermehrte und verbesserte Ausgabe. Leipzig und Heidelberg, 1860. — 280
Page me41.720
Renan, E. Vie de Jésus. Paris, 1863. — 507
Page me41.720
Ripley, R.S. The War with Mexico. In two volumes. New York, 1849. — 299
Page me41.720
Rodbertus [-Jagetzow, J.K.], Berg, [Ph. K.P.] von und Bucher, [L.]. Erklärung. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 13, 13. Januar 1861, Beilage; Der Beobachter, Nr. 17, 18, 19; 20., 22., 23. Januar 1861. — 249, 253
Page me41.720
Rodbertus [-Jagetzow, J.K.] Sociale Briefe an von Kirchmann. Dritter Brief: Widerlegung der Ricardo'schen Lehre von der Grundrente und Begründung einer neuen Rententheorie. Berlin, 1851. — 285, 378
Page me41.720
Rollenhagen, G. Froschmeuseler, der Frösch und Meuse wunderbare Hofhaltunge. Magdeburgk, 1600. — 311
Page me41.720

Roscher, W. System der Volkswirtschaft. Ein Hand- und Lesebuch für Geschäftsmänner und Studierende. Erster Band, die Grundlagen der Nationalökonomie enthaltend. Dritte, vermehrte und verbesserte Auflage. Stuttgart und Augsburg, 1858. — 285, 378, 425, 440
Page me41.720
Roselius, Ch. [Speech in the Convention of Louisiana on 21 March 1861.] In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6217, March 29, 1861. — 308
Page me41.720
Rüstow, F.W. Die Brigade Milano. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1861. — 393
Page me41.720
Schaible, Ch. The Vogt Pamphlet. To the Editor of 'The Daily Telegraph'. In: The Daily Telegraph, No. 1447, February 15, 1860. — 49, 52, 53, 62, 63, 66, 85, 104
Page me41.720
Schiller, Friedrich von. Die Bürgschaft. — 552
— Piccolomini. — 488
— Wallensteins Tod. — 508
— Wilhelm Tell. — 274
Page me41.720
Schleiden, M.J. Contributions to phytogenesis. In: Schwann, Th. Microscopical Researches into the Accordance in the Structure and Growth of Animals and Plants. Tr. from the German ... by Henry Smith... London. The Sydenham Society. 1847. — 546
Page me41.720
Schmerling, Ph.-Ch. Recherches sur les ossemens fossiles découverts dans les cavernes de la province de Liége. Volumes I-II. Liége, 1833-1834. — 473
Page me41.720
Schramm, R. Die rothe Fahne von 1848 und Die schwarzweiße Fahne von 1863. Berlin, 1863. — 497
Page me41.720
Schwann, Th. Microscopical Researches into the Accordance in the Structure and Growth of Animals and Plants. Tr. from the German ... by Henry Smith... London. The Sydenham Society, 1847. — 546

Page Break me41.721
Page me41.721
Scoville, J.A. [Report from New York.] In: The Evening Standard, May 5, 1862; The Morning Herald, May 5, 1862. — 361
Page me41.721
Shakespeare, W. Hamlet, Prince of Denmark. — 282
— Love's Labour's Lost. — 265
— Troilus and Cressida. — 517
Page me41.721
Shelley, M. Frankenstein or the Modern Prometheus. — 503
Page me41.721
[Siebel, C.] Religion und Liebe. Roman aus dem Tagebuche eines Anonymen. Hamburg, 1860. — 122
Page me41.721

Simon, E. Un tableau de moeurs politiques en Allemagne. Le procés de M. Vogt avec la gazette d'Augsbourg. In: Revue contemporaine, Neuviéme année, 2e série — Tome treiziéme, XLVIIe de la collection. Paris, 1860. — 225
Page me41.721
Simon, L. Deutschland und seine beiden Großmächte. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 187, 212
Page me41.721
Smith, A. An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. Vols. I-II, London, 1776. — 351
Page me41.721
S[pence, J.] [To the Editor of The Times, 26 May 1862.] In: The Times, No. 24258, May 29, 1862. — 371
— [To the Editor of The Times, 2 June 1862.] In: The Times, No. 24263, June 4, 1862. — 372
Page me41.721
[Spinoza, B.] Tractatus Theologico-Politicus Continens Dissertationes aliquot. Quibus ostenditur Libertalem Philosophandi non tantum salva Pietate, & Reipublicae Pace posse concedi: sed candem nisi cum Pace Reipublicae, ipsaque Pietate tolli non posse. 1670. — 542
Page me41.721
Spurzheim, [J.C.] The Anatomy of the Brain, with a general view of the nervous system. Translated from the unpublished French Ms. by R. Willis, London, 1826. — 546
Page me41.721
Staats- und Gesellschafts-Lexikon. Herausgegeben von Hermann Wagener. Bände I-XXIII. Berlin, 1859-1867. — 288
Page me41.721
Summer, J.B. A Treatise on the Records of the Creation, and on Moral Attributes of the Creator; with Particular Reference to the Jewish History, and to the Consistency of the Principle of Population with the Wisdom and Goodness of the Deity. London. 2nd ed., 1816. — 465
Page me41.721
[Syv, P.] Et Hundrede udvalde Danske Viser, om allehaande maerkelige Krigs-Bedrivt og anden selsom Eventyr, som sig her udi Riget ved gamle Kæmper, navnkundige Konger, og ellers fornemme Personer begivet haver, af Arilds Tid til denne nærværende Dag. Forøgede med det andet Hundrede Viser, om Danske Konger, Kæamper og Andre, samt høsføyede Antegnelser, til Lyst og Lærdom. København. 1695. — 160, 375
Page me41.721
Szemere, B. Hungary, from 1848 to 1860. London, 1860. — 5
— La Question hongroise (1848-1860). Paris, 1860. — 5, 106, 111, 133, 156, 229
Page me41.721
Tasso, T. Gerusalemme liberata. — 304
Page me41.721
Taylor, T. Our American Cousin. — 494, 518
Page me41.721
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer). Andria. — 236, 363
— Heautontimorumenos. — 57

Page me41.721
Terentianus, Maurus. De litteris, syllabis et metris. Carmen heroicum. — 20
Page me41.721
Thucydides. De bello Peloponnesiaca. — 292

Page Break me41.722
Page me41.722
[Thudichum, F.W.K.] [To the Editor of The Times.] In: The Times, No. 24733, December 4, 1863. — 498
Page me41.722
Ulloa. Guerre de l'indépendance italienne en 1848 et en 1849. Tomes I-II, Paris, 1859. — 174
Page me41.722
Ure, A. The Philosophy of Manufactures: or, an Exposition of the Scientific, Moral, and Commercial Economy of the Factory System of Great Britain. 2nd ed., London, 1835. — 351
Page me41.722
Urquhart, D. Mr. Urquhart on the Invasion of England. In: The Free Press, Vol. VIII, No. 7, July 4, 1860. — 175
Page me41.722
Varnhagen von Ense, K.A. Tagebücher. Aus dem Nachlaß Varnhagen's von Ense. Bd. I-II. Leipzig, 1861. — 329, 358
Page me41.722
Vauban, S. Projet d'une dixme royale. 1707. — 479
Page me41.722
Venedey, J. Pro domo und Pro patria gegen Karl Vogt. Hannover, 1860. — 165-66
Page me41.722
Vico, G. Principi di una scienza nuova. Intorno alla natura delle nazioni. Napoli, 1725. — 353, 357 — La Science nouvelle; traduite par l'auteur de l'essai sur la formation du dogme catholique. Paris, 1844. — 357
Page me41.722
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro). Aeneid. — 283, 288, 451, 475
Page me41.722
Vissering, S. Handboek van praktische staathuishoudkunde. Delen I-III. Amsterdam, 1860-1862. — 509
Page me41.722
Vogt, C. Ein Blick auf das jetzige Genf. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 169, 187, 190
— Mein Prozess gegen die 'Allgemeine Zeitung'. Stenographischer Bericht, Dokumente und Erläuterungen. Genf, 1859. — 6, 9, 12, 13, 15-17, 19, 20, 22-24, 27, 28, 39, 46, 48, 51, 55, 56, 58, 61, 64, 66, 67, 69, 72, 77, 79, 85, 89, 92, 96, 97, 100, 106, 114, 119, 166, 187, 219, 252
— Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas. Genf und Bern, 1859. — 63, 89, 165, 171, 198, 202

— Zur Warnung. In: Schweizer Handels-Courier, Nr. 150, 2. Juni 1859, Außerordentliche Beilage. — 22, 66
Page me41.722
Wagener, H. [Speech in the Chamber of Deputies on 19 November 1863.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 326, 22. November 1863. — 494
Page me41.722
Waldersee, F.G. Die Methode zur kriegsgemäßen Ausbildung der Infanterie für das zerstreute Gefecht; mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Verhältnisse des Preußischen Heeres, Zweite Auflage, Berlin, 1852. — 200
Page me41.722
Walesrode, L. (anon.) Eine politische Todtenschau, Kiel, 1859. — 247
— Ueber vaterländische Gesinnungsleiden. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 190
Page me41.722
Weydemeyer, J., Cluß, A., Jacobi, A. An die Redaktion der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 37, 25. November 1853. — 88, 99
Page me41.722
Willich, A. Doctor Karl Marx und seine 'Enthüllungen'. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 33, 34; 28. Oktober, 4. November 1853. — 89, 98-99

Page Break me41.723
Page me41.723
Wiss, C. Die elementaren Richtungen der Zeit. In: Republik der Arbeiter, Nr. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24; 18., 25. März; 1., 8., 15., 22., 29. April; 6., 13., 20., 27. Mai; 10. Juni 1854. — 90
Page me41.723
Wollf, W. Erklärung. In: Die Reform, Nr. 18, 11. Februar 1860; Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 44, 13. Februar 1860, Beilage; Volks-Zeitung, Nr. 47, 24. Februar 1860. — 25, 52
— [Speech in the Frankfurt National Assembly on 26 May 1849.] In: Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. 9. Frankfurt a. M. 1849. — 539
Page me41.723
Wolfius, F.A. Prolegomena ad Homerum sive de operum homericorum prisca et genuina forma variisque mutationibus et probabili ratione emendandi. Vol. I. Halis saxonum, 1795. — 357
Page me41.723
Wolfram von Eschenbach, Parzifal. — 568

DOCUMENTS

Page me41.723
Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation for the Year ended December 31, 1861. Exports of British and Irish Produce and Manufactures. In: Economist, No. 966, March 1, 1862. — 345, 348

Page me41.723
Die Centralbehörde an den Bund. In: Dresdner Journal und Anzeiger, Nr. 171, 22. Juni 1851; Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 150, 24. Juni 1851. — 25
Page me41.723
Children's Employment Commission (1862). First Report of the Commissioners. London, 1863. — 490
Page me41.723
Code civil. — 478
Page me41.723
Correspondence Respecting the Affairs of Mexico. Parts I-III. London, 1862. — 349-50

Part I
Zamacona to C. Wyke, July 21, 1861
C. Wyke to Zamacona, July 22, 1861
C. Wyke to Zamacona, July 23, 1861
C. Wyke to Zamacona, July 25, 1861
Zamacona to C. Wyke, July 25, 1861
C. Wyke to Zamacona, July 26, 1861
Zamacona to C. Wyke, July 27, 1861
Page me41.723
[Horner, L.] Report of Leonard Horner, Esq., Inspector of Factories, for the Half Year ended the 31st October 1859 (Dated November 14). In: Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the Half Year Ending 31st October 1859, London, 1860. — 5
Page me41.723
Papers relating to proposed Annexation of Savoy and Nice to France and memorial on the relations between Switzerland and Savoy as a Neutral. 3 parts. London, 1860. — 124
Page me41.723
Protocole d'une conférence tenue á Londres le 2 août 1850, entre les Plénipotentiaires d'Autriche, de Danemark, de la Grande-Bretagne, de Russie et de Suéde, relatif á l'intégrité de la monarchie danoise. — 299

Page Break me41.724
Page me41.724
[The protocol signed at Warsaw on June 5, 1851 by the representatives of Russia and Denmark.] In: Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 293; 26, 27 et 28 décembre 1863 (7, 8 et 9 janvier 1864). — 508
Page me41.724
The Rebellion Record: a Diary of American Events, with Documents, Narratives. Illustrative Incidents. Poetry, etc. Edited by F. Moore. Vols. 1-11, New-York, 1861-1868. (By 1864 7 volumes had been published.) — 535
Page me41.724
Report of the Commissioners appointed to consider the Defences of the United Kingdom; together with the Minutes of Evidence and Appendix: also Correspondence relative to a Site for an Internal Arsenal. London, 1860. — 175
Page me41.724

Report of the Commissioners Appointed to Inquire into the Organisation of the Indian Army. London, 1859. — 359
Page me41.724
Report of Committee on the Operation and Effects of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act 1854. Evidence, Appendix and Index. London, 1860. — 84
Page me41.724
Report of the Thirtieth Meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science; held at Oxford in June and July 1860. London, 1861. — 321
Page me41.724
Rostovtsev, Y.I. Progress and Final Issue of the Peasantry Question. A Memorial submitted to the consideration of the Chief Peasantry Question Committee by the President, Adjutant-General Rostofftzeff. In: The Daily Telegraph, No. 1417, January 11, 1860. — 4
Page me41.724
Traité signé á Londres, le 8 Mai 1852, entre le Danemark d'une part, et l'Autriche, la France, la Grande-Bretagne, la Russie et la Suéde de l'autre part, relatif á l'ordre de succession dans la monarchie danoise. — 493, 496, 497
Page me41.724
Le Traité de Londres, Copenhague, 1863. — 543
Page me41.724
William I. [Speech to a deputation of Berlin municipal officers on his ascension to the throne.] In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 5, 5. Januar 1861. — 241 — [Reply of 27 December 1863 to the Prussian Chamber of Deputies.] In: The Times, January 2, 1864. — 506

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me41.724
Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung, Nr. 95-96; 26. November 1859: [Review of Engels' Po und Rhein.] — 4
Page me41.724
Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 3, 5; 3., 5. Januar 1860, Beilage: Zur russischen Leibeigenschaftsfrage und die Finanz-Verhältnisse des Staats. — 7
— Nr. 16, 16. Januar 1860, Beilage: Die Bauern-Emancipation in Rußland. — 7
— Nr. 18, 18. Januar 1860, Beilage: Die russische Leibeigenschaft und der Adel. — 7
— Nr. 160, 8. Juni 1860: [Report from Berne of 5 June.] — 159
— Nr. 1, 1. Januar 1861, Beilage: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 227, 248
— Nr. 1, 1. Januar 1861: [Report from Strassburg of 30 December 1860.] — 241
— Nr. 109, 19. April 1861: [Report from Paris of 17 April.] — 290, 313

Page Break me41.725
Page me41.725
The Athenaeum. Journal of Literature, Science, and the Fine Arts. No. 1726, November 24, 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 218

— No. 1902, April 9, 1864: [Announcement about K. Blind's joining the Shakespearean Committee.] — 517
Page me41.725
Berliner Reform, Nr. 83, 10. April 1863. — 469, 470
Page me41.725
Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel und die mit ihm verwandten Geschäftszweige, Nr. 150, 151, 153; 5., 7., 12. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 227, 242
Page me41.725
Courrier du Dimanche, 18 novembre 1860: [Report from Vienna of 14 November 1860.] — 215
Page me41.725
Deutsches Museum. Zeitschrift für Literatur, Kunst und öffentliches Leben, Nr. 52, 27. Dezember 1860 [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 227
Page me41.725
The Economist, No. 978, May 24, 1862: Extent and Bearing of Federal Successes. — 370
Page me41.725
The Edinburgh Review, or Critical Journal, No. 240, April 1863: Professor Huxley on Man's Place in Nature. — 465
Page me41.725
The Free Press, Vol. IX, No. 4, April 3, 1861: Mr. Dunlop's Motion for a Select Committee on the Affghan Papers. — 286
— Vol. XI, No. 2, February 4, 1863: Origin and Objects of the Treason in the United States. — 286
— Vol. XI, No. 7, July 1, 1863: The Intervention in Poland. — 484
Page me41.725
Der Freischütz, Nr. 150, 15. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 227, 243
Page me41.725
Genfer Grenzpost, Nr. 12, 22. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 234, 243
Page me41.725
Die Grenzboten. Zeitschrift für Politik und Literatur, 1864, I. Semester, 2. Band. Eine Erinnerung an den Communisten Wolff. — 541
Page me41.725
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London, 1. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 218
— Nr. 128, 15. Juni 1861: Protokoll der Versammlung der Londoner Mitglieder des Nationalvereins am 1. Juni 1861. — 297, 301
— Nr. 130, 20. Juni 1861: Protokoll der außerordentlichen Sitzung der Londoner Mitglieder des Deutschen Nationalvereins, abgehalten den 18. Juni 1861, in Seyd's Hotel, 39, Finsbury Sqre. — 302
— [An editorial on the meeting of the National Association on 15 June 1861.] — 301
Page me41.725
Kladderadatsch, Nr. 29-30; 30. Juni 1861: Der deutsche Mann. Ein Spielzeug für Wortklauber. — 311

Page me41.725
Kölnische Zeitung, 5. Oktober bis 13. November 1852: Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes. — 140, 145, 147 — Nr. 349, 1859, Beilage. — 3, 140

Page Break me41.726
— Nr. 341, 8. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 241
— 1. September 1864: [Notice of Lassalle's death.] — 558
Page me41.726
Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats-und gelehrten Sachen, 6. Oktober bis 16. November 1852: Die Verhandlungen des großen Kommunistenprozess vor dem Assisenhofe zu Köln. — 140
Page me41.726
The Manchester Guardian, No. 4141, November 12, 1860: [Report from Paris of 8 November 1860.] — 213
Page me41.726
The Morning Post, No. 28222, May 30, 1864 (leader). — 531, 532
Page me41.726
The Morning Star, May 5, 1862: [Report from America.] — 360-61
— January 28, 1863. — 452
Page me41.726
National-Zeitung, Nr. 37, 22. Januar 1860: Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung. — 6, 12, 29, 33, 39, 41, 46, 56, 62, 69-72, 74, 88, 95-96, 100, 119, 207, 219 — Nr. 41, 25. Januar 1860: Wie man radikale Flugbläter macht. — 11, 16, 22, 26, 29, 33, 39, 41, 42, 44, 45, 53, 56, 59, 62, 63, 67, 71, 72, 74, 88, 92, 95, 96, 119, 207, 219
Page me41.726
Neue Preußische Zeitung, Nr. 2, 3. Januar 1861: Berliner Zuschauer. — 241
— 24. November 1861, Beilage: Varnhagen und seine 'Pulverkammer'. — 329
Page me41.726
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie, Nr. 64, 3. August 1848 [Editorial statement of 31 July in the column 'Französische Republik'.] — 91
Page me41.726
Neue Schweizer Zeitung, Nr. 11, 12. November 1859: [Editorial statement.] — 105
Page me41.726
New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5830, December 30, 1859: Negro Insurrection in Missouri. — 3
— No. 5839, January 11, 1860: Commercial Matters. — 7
— No. 6270, May 27, 1861: Salient Features of the War. — 299
— No. 6403, October 11, 1861. — 323
— No. 6411, October 21, 1861. — 325
— No. 6497, January 30, 1862: Russian Progress in Asia (leader). — 345, 348
— No. 6541, March 22, 1862: The Censorship of the Press. — 363
— No. 6542, March 24, 1862: President Lincoln's Strategy. — 362
Page me41.726

North British Daily Mail, March 30, 1863: M. Karl Blind. — 468
Page me41.726
Preußische Gerichts-Zeitung, Nr. 26, 30; 1., 15. Mai 1861: Zur Auslegung des Amnestie-Erlasses von 12. Januar 1861. — 282
Page me41.726
Der Publicist, Nr. 295, 296; 15., 16. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 243
Page me41.726
Die Reform, Nr. 148, 150, Beilage, 152; 10., 15., 19. Dezember 1860: [Advertisement about the publication of Marx's Herr Vogt.] — 227, 234, 243
Page me41.726
Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 149, 30. Mai 1864: Feudaler Sozialismus. — 533
Page me41.726
The Times, No. 23523, 23524, 23526; January 23, 24, 26, 1860: Spain and Morocco. — 7
— No. 23533, February 3, 1860: [Report from Vienna of 30 January.] — 25
— No. 23580, March 29, 1860: [A list of persons presented to Queen Victoria on 28 March.] — 121

Page Break me41.727
— No. 23739, October 1, 1860 (leader). — 202
— No. 24049, September 27, 1861: [Report from Vienna of 23 September 1861.] — 321
— No. 24256, May 27, 1862: [Report from America of 13 May 1862.] — 369
— No. 24514, March 24, 1863 (leader). — 462-63
— May 25, 1864 (leader). — 530
— May 26, 1864 (leader). — 530
— June 7, 1864 (leader). — 538
Page me41.727
Das Volk, Nr. 6, 11. Juni 1859: [Statement by the Editorial Board of the Newspaper Das Volk.] — 67
Page me41.727
Wochenschrift des Nationalvereins, Nr. 35, 28. Dezember 1860: [Report from Heidelberg of 21 December 1860.] — 241

Page Break me41.728

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me41.728
Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung — a newspaper of the German Officers' and Soldiers' Society, published from 1826 to 1902, first in Darmstadt and then in Leipzig; Engels contributed to it from 1860 to 1864. — 4, 32, 191, 203, 205, 402
Page me41.728
Allgemeine Zeitung — a German conservative daily founded in 1798; from 1810 to 1882 it was published in Augsburg. — 7, 9, 12-13, 16-18, 25-27, 30, 34, 36, 41-42, 44, 49, 51-

52, 55-56, 58, 60-69, 85-89, 104, 105, 113, 156, 159, 166, 188, 200, 211, 215, 218, 227, 234, 239, 241, 248, 255, 262, 290, 313, 371, 478, 494, 502, 529, 537
Page me41.728
The American Union — a weekly, published in Griffin from 1848 to 1867 and in Macon (Georgia) from 1867 to 1873. — 307
Page me41.728
The Athenaeum. Journal of Literature, Science, and the Fine Arts — a literary and critical weekly published in London in 1828-1921. — 218, 227, 517
Page me41.728
The Augusta Chronicle and Sentinel — an American daily newspaper of the Democratic Party published under this title in Augusta, Georgia, from 1785 to 1877. — 308
Page me41.728
Das Ausland — a German magazine on geography, ethnography and natural sciences; published from 1828 to 1893, first in Augsburg and from 1873 in Stuttgart; originally appeared daily, and from 1853 weekly. — 227
Page me41.728
Baltische Monatsschrift — a German-language monthly published in Riga from 1859 to 1913. — 130
Page me41.728
Barmer Zeitung — a German liberal daily, appeared in Barmen from 1834. — 417
Page me41.728
The Bell — see Kolokol (Kolokol)
Page me41.728
Belletristisches Journal and New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung — a weekly founded by German petty-bourgeois emigrants in New York in 1852 and published under this title from March 18, 1853 to March 10, 1854. In 1853 the paper printed articles libelling Marx and the other proletarian revolutionaries associated with him. — 74, 89, 98-99, 227
Page me41.728
Der Beobachter. Ein Volksblatt aus Schwaben — a German daily, published in Stuttgart from 1833; newspaper of the petty-bourgeois democrats in the 1860s. — 265

Page Break me41.729
Page me41.729
Berliner Reform — a daily newspaper of the German petty-bourgeois democrats published from 1861 to 1868. — 322, 469, 585
Page me41.729
Berliner Revue. Social-politische Wochenschrift — a German magazine published from 1855 to 1871. — 257
Page me41.729
Börsenblatt für den deutschen Buchhandel und die mit ihm verwandten Geschäftszweige — a paper of the German booksellers published in Leipzig from 1834 to 1926. — 227, 242, 471
Page me41.729
Breslauer — see Breslauer Zeitung
Page me41.729

Breslauer Zeitung — a German daily, founded in Breslau (Wroclaw) in 1820. — 227, 282, 529, 533, 588
Page me41.729
Buchhändlerbörsenblatt — see Börsenblatt für den deutschen Buchhandel und die mit ihm verwandten Geschäftszweige
Page me41.729
Der Bund. Eidgenössisches Centralblatt. Organ der freisinnig-demokratischen schweizerischen und bernischen Politik — a Swiss radical daily published in German in Berne from 1850. — 159, 227, 362
Page me41.729
Cobbett's Register — see Cobbett's Weekly Political Register
Page me41.729
Cobbett's Weekly-Political Register — a radical weekly published in London from 1802 to 1835 under different titles. — 336
Page me41.729
Courrier du Dimanche. Journal politique, litteraire et financier — an anti-Bonapartist weekly published in Paris from 1858 to 1866. — 215, 255
Page me41.729
Critic. Journal of British and Foreign Literature and the Arts — a journal published in London from 1844 to 1863. — 227
Page me41.729
Dagbladet — a Danish daily published in Copenhagen from 1851. — 519, 532, 537, 540, 545, 554
Page me41.729
The Daily Telegraph — a liberal, and from the 1880s a conservative newspaper, published in London from 1855 to 1937. — 4, 28-29, 32-33, 38, 41, 48-49, 53, 56, 58, 62, 63, 66, 71, 74-76, 78, 79, 85-88, 92, 94-95, 104, 106, 132, 145, 155
Page me41.729
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung — a German newspaper published under this title in Leipzig from 1843 to 1879. — 227
Page me41.729
Deutsche Londoner Zeitung. Blätter für Politik, Literatur und Kunst — a literary and political weekly published by German refugees in London from April 1845 to February 1851. It was edited by the petty-bourgeois democrat Ludwig Bamberger and financially backed by the deposed Duke Charles of Brunswick. The newspaper carried a number of works by Marx and Engels. — 94
Page me41.729
Deutsches Museum. Zeitschrift für Literatur, Kunst und öffentliches Leben — a German democratic weekly published in Leipzig from 1851 to 1867. — 227
Page me41.729
Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher — a German-language yearbook published in Paris under the editorship of Karl Marx and Arnold Ruge; only the first issue, a double one, appeared in February 1844. It carried a number of works by Marx and Engels. — 101, 404
Page me41.729

The Economist. Weekly Commercial Times, Bankers' Gazette, and Railway Monitor: a Political, Literary, and General Newspaper — a weekly published in London since 1843 under different subtitles; organ of the big industrial bourgeoisie. — 165, 345, 348, 369

Page Break me41.730
Page me41.730
The Edinburgh Review, or Critical Journal — British liberal journal dealing with literature and politics; appeared in Edinburgh and London from 1802 to 1929. — 465
Page me41.730
Elberfelder Zeitung — a German daily published from 1834 to 1904; a liberal bourgeois newspaper in the 1860s. — 417
Page me41.730
L'Espérance — a Bonapartist paper published in Geneva in 1859-62. — 156
Page me41.730
The Evening Post — a daily published in New York from 1801 to 1934; a newspaper of the Republican Party from 1856. — 394, 404, 406
Page me41.730
The Examiner — an English liberal weekly published in London from 1808 to 1881. — 82
Page me41.730
Faedrelandel — a Danish newspaper published in Copenhagen weekly from 1834 to 1839 and then daily; a semi-official organ of the Danish government from 1848; a conservative paper in the second half of the 19th century. — 554
Page me41.730
Frankfurter Journal — a German daily published in Frankfurt am Main from the 17th century to 1903. — 27, 30, 227
Page me41.730
The Free Press. Journal of the Foreign Affairs Committees — a journal on questions of foreign policy, opposed to the Palmerston government; it was published by David Urquhart and his supporters in London from 1855 to 1865 (weekly until April 1858 and then monthly); in 1866 it was renamed Diplomatic Review. It printed several works by Marx. — 8, 12, 41, 59, 62, 65, 70, 103, 125, 152, 175, 286, 341, 344, 347, 351, 356, 359, 362, 383, 429, 431, 453, 484, 494, 497, 536, 549, 552
Page me41.730
Der Freischütz — a literary and artistic newspaper published in Hamburg from 1825 to 1878. — 227, 238-39, 243, 284, 377
Page me41.730
Die Gartenlaube. Illustrirtes Familienblatt — a German literary weekly published in Leipzig from 1853 to 1903, and in Berlin from 1903 to 1943. — 55, 245, 354
Page me41.730
Gazette — see The London Gazette
Page me41.730
Genfer Grenzpost. Eine Wochenschrift für Politik, Wissenschaft und Kunst — a German-language weekly published in Geneva in 1860-61; the editor of the paper was August Braß. — 234, 238, 243, 255

Page me41.730
The Globe — see The Globe and Traveller
Page me41.730
The Globe and Traveller — a daily published in London from 1803 to 1921; organ of the Whigs until 1866, and later of the Conservatives. — 264
Page me41.730
Die Grenzboten. Zeitschrift für Politik und Literatur — a German liberal weekly published in Leipzig from 1841 to 1922. — 541
Page me41.730
Grenzpost — see Genfer Grenzpost. Eine Wochenschrift für Politik, Wissenschaft und Kunst
Page me41.730
The Griffin Union — see The American Union
Page me41.730
Guardian — see The Manchester Guardian
Page me41.730
Hamburger Correspondent — see Staats- und Gelehrte Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartheiischen Correspondenten
Page me41.730
Hamburger Nachrichten — a daily published from 1792; during the 1848-49 revolution, it expressed the interests of the bourgeoisie demanding an Imperial

Page Break me41.731
Constitution; in the years of reaction it supported the Prussian monarchy; official organ of Bismarck at the end of the century. — 227
Page me41.731
Handels-Courier — see Schweizer Handels-Courier
Page me41.731
Hannoversche Zeitung — a daily, organ of the Hanover government founded in 1832. — 25
Page me41.731
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees; it was published in London from 1859; Gottfried Kinkel was its publisher and editor from January to July 1859. — 12, 16, 34-35, 48, 60, 80, 113, 140, 218, 227, 253, 264, 297, 301, 302, 342
Page me41.731
Historische Deutsche Monatsschrift — a German magazine published in Brunswick. — 227
Page me41.731
How Do You Do? — a German-language humorous weekly published in London in the 1850s by Louis Drucker and edited by Beta (Bettziech). — 245
Page me41.731
Illinois Staats-Zeitung — a German-language daily published in Illinois (USA) from 1851 to 1922. — 119
Page me41.731
The Illustrated London News — a weekly published since 1842. — 227

Page me41.731
Illustrirte Zeitung — a German weekly published in Leipzig from 1843 to 1944; in the mid-19th century was of a moderate liberal orientation. — 227
Page me41.731
The Jackson Mississippian — see Mississippian
Page me41.731
Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg — a daily newspaper of the Russian Ministry for Foreign Affairs; published under this title in French from 1825 to 1914. — 508
Page me41.731
Karlsruher Zeitung — a daily newspaper published from 1757, official gazette of the Grand Duchy of Baden. — 25, 227
Page me41.731
Kladderadatsch — a satirical illustrated weekly published in Berlin from 1848, originally of a liberal and later national-liberal orientation. — 311
Page me41.731
Kölner Anzeiger — see Kölnischer Anzeiger und Rheinische Handels-Zeitung
Page me41.731
Kölnische — see Kölnische Zeitung
Page me41.731
Kölnische Zeitung — a daily published under this title in Cologne from 1802 to 1945; during the 1848-49 revolution and in the period of reaction following it, expressed the interests of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie. From 1831 it was published by Joseph du Mont. — 3, 27, 30, 39, 47, 61-62, 70, 121, 140, 145, 147, 164, 227, 239, 241, 250, 529, 558
Page me41.731
Kölnischer Anzeiger und Rheinische Handels-Zeitung — a German daily published under this title in the 1860s. — 239, 248
Page me41.731
Kolokol (Kolokol) (The Bell) — a revolutionary-democratic newspaper; it was published by Alexander Herzen and Nikolai Ogaryov from 1857 to 1867 in Russian and in 1868-69 in French (La Cloche) with supplements in Russian; it was published in London until 1865, then in Geneva. — 454, 456
Page me41.731
Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger — a daily newspaper, official organ of the Prussian government, published in Berlin from 1851 to 1871. — 288
Page me41.731
Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen — a German daily published in Berlin from 1785; also known as Vossische Zeitung after its owner Christian Friedrich Voss. — 117, 140

Page Break me41.732
Page me41.732
Königsberger Hartung'sche Zeitung — a German paper published under this title from 1850; founded in 1752, and till 1850 appeared under the title Königlich-Preußische Staats-Kriegs- und Friedens-Zeitung. — 227
Page me41.732

Kreuz-Zeitung — see Neue Preußische Zeitung
Page me41.732
The Leader — a liberal weekly founded in London in 1850. — 82
Page me41.732
The London Gazette — a British government newspaper published under this title twice a week since 1666. — 288, 536
Page me41.732
Londoner Lithographierte Korrespondenz — a German-language information bulletin, published in London by Max Schlesinger. — 227
Page me41.732
The Macon Daily Journal and Messenger — an American newspaper published in Macon, Georgia. — 307
Page me41.732
Mainzer Zeitung — a German paper, published from 1802; in 1848 its editor was Ludwig Bamberger. — 212
Page me41.732
Manchester Daily Examiner and Times — a liberal newspaper, founded in 1848 as a result of the merger of the Manchester Times and the Manchester Examiner; published under various titles until 1894. — 359
Page me41.732
The Manchester Guardian — a daily founded in 1821: a newspaper of the Free Traders and from the mid-19th century, of the Liberal Party. — 185, 209, 213, 227, 253, 321, 328, 456, 506
Page me41.732
Mannheimer Journal — a German daily, founded in 1790; published under this title from 1837 to 1886. — 227
Page me41.732
Märkische Volks-Zeitung — a German paper published in Hagen. — 417
Page me41.732
Militär-Zeitung — see Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung
Page me41.732
Militärische Blätter — a German weekly published in Berlin from 1860 to 1874. — 9
Page me41.732
Mississippian — an American newspaper, published in daily and weekly issues in Jackson, Mississippi, from 1832 to 1867. — 308
Page me41.732
Mittelrheinische Zeitung — a German daily, founded in March 1848; published under this title in Wiesbaden from 1851 to 1874. — 134, 139-40
Page me41.732
Mobile Advertiser and Register — an American paper published in Mobile, Alabama, from 1861 to 1863. — 308
Page me41.732
Le Moniteur universel — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1901; from 1799 to 1869 it was an official government newspaper; it appeared under this title from 1811. — 175, 462
Page me41.732

Morgenblatt — see Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser
Page me41.732
Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser — a German daily literary paper published in Stuttgart and Tübingen from 1807 to 1865; in 1840 and 1841 it printed several articles by Engels. — 44, 227
Page me41.732
The Morning Advertiser — a daily published in London from 1794 to 1934; in the 1860s it was a newspaper of the radical bourgeoisie. — 55, 82, 86, 236
Page me41.732
The Morning Herald — a conservative daily published in London from 1780 to 1869. — 361, 452
Page me41.732
The Morning Post — a daily published in London from 1772 to 1937; in the mid-19th century organ of the Right-wing Whigs grouped round Palmerston. — 531, 544
Page me41.732
The Morning Star — a daily of the English Free Traders published in London from 1856 to 1869. — 33, 246, 360-61, 452

Page Break me41.733
Page me41.733
Le National — a daily published in Paris from 1830 to 1851; the newspaper of the moderate republicans. — 115
Page me41.733
National-Zeitung — a daily published in Berlin from 1848 to 1915; it voiced liberal views in the 1850s. — 6, 12, 15, 20, 22, 24, 26-27, 29-30, 33-34, 39-50, 54, 56, 59, 62-63, 66-67, 69-76, 78, 79, 81, 87, 88, 92-94, 96-100, 109, 110, 117, 119, 122, 145, 154, 167, 169, 170, 177, 187, 192, 202, 207, 219, 227, 287, 354
Page me41.733
La Nazione. Giornale politico quotidiano — a daily published in Florence from 1859. — 255, 262
Page me41.733
Neue Deutsche Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a daily published in Darmstadt from July 1, 1848 to April 1, 1849 and then in Frankfurt am Main until it was suppressed on December 14, 1850. Joseph Weydemeyer was one of its editors. — 99, 118
Page me41.733
Neu-England Zeitung — a German-language daily published by the petty-bourgeois refugees in Boston (USA) from 1846 to 1853; Joseph Weydemeyer was among its contributors. — 98
Page me41.733
Neue Oder-Zeitung — a German democratic daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1849 to 1855; in the 1850s it was the most radical paper in Germany; Marx was its London correspondent in 1855. — 44, 69, 91
Page me41.733
Das Neue Portfolio. Eine Sammlung wichtiger Dokumente und Aktenstücke zur Zeitgeschichte — a periodical collection of diplomatic documents and papers published in Berlin in 1859-60 under the editorship of Eduard Fischel, Urquhart's supporter. — 10, 152

Page me41.733
Neue Preußische Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from June 1848 to 1939; organ of the Prussian Junkers and Court circles, also known as the Kreuz-Zeitung because the heading contained a cross bearing the device: “Forward with God for King and Fatherland!” — 76, 85, 190, 227, 239, 241, 246, 249, 288, 329, 440, 478
Page me41.733
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a daily newspaper of the revolutionary proletarian wing of the democrats during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; it was published in Cologne under Marx's editorship from 1 June 1848 to 19 May 1849, with an interval between 27 September and 12 October 1848. Engels was among its editors. — 87, 90-93, 98, 100-103, 117, 125, 166, 193-94, 202, 252, 289, 534, 546
Page me41.733
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — a theoretical journal of the Communist League published by Marx and Engels from December 1849 to November 1850. — 96, 102, 259
Page me41.733
Neue Schweizer Zeitung — a radical weekly published in Geneva by the German refugee August Braß in 1859-60. — 105, 118
Page me41.733
Neue Süddeutsche — see Süddeutsche Zeitung
Page me41.733
Die Neue Zeit. Organ der Demokratie — a newspaper of the German refugee workers; was published in London from June 1858 to April 1859. — 82
Page me41.733
Neue Zürcher-Zeitung — a Swiss paper published in German from 1821; pro-Bonapartist in the 1850s and 1860s. — 227
Page me41.733
The New Orleans True Delta — an American paper published in New Orleans, Louisiana, from 1835 to 1866. — 308
Page me41.733
New-York Daily Tribune — a newspaper founded by Horace Greeley in 1841 and published until 1924; organ of the Left-wing American Whigs until the mid-1850s, and later of the Republican Party; in the 1840s and 1850s it voiced progressive views and opposed slavery. Marx and Engels contributed to it from August 1851 to March 1862. The newspaper had several special issues, among them the New-York Semi-Weekly Tribune and the New-York Weekly Tribune. — 4, 7, 11, 17, 33, 68, 70, 84, 88, 91, 95, 102, 106-07, 110, 114, 125, 155, 165, 173, 177, 196, 209-10, 216, 230, 250, 257, 258, 263, 265, 272, 291, 299, 308, 315, 321, 323, 325, 327-28, 335, 344, 345, 347, 352-53, 355, 359, 362-63, 394, 402, 435, 440

Page Break me41.734
Page me41.734

The New-York Herald — a daily newspaper of the Republican Party published in New York from 1835 to 1924. — 345
Page me41.734
The New-York Times — a daily newspaper founded in 1851, later organ of the Republican Party. — 107
Page me41.734
New-Yorker Abendzeitung — a German-language newspaper published by petty-bourgeois democratic refugees in the USA in the 1850s. — 227
Page me41.734
New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung — see Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung
Page me41.734
New-Yorker Staatszeitung — a German-language democratic daily published from 1834; later an organ of the US Democratic Party. — 98, 114, 227
Page me41.734
Niederrheinische Volks-Zeitung. Düsseldorfer Journal — a German daily published in Düsseldorf from 1848 to 1862; from 1863 it was published under the title of Rheinische Zeitung. — 417
Page me41.734
Nordstern — a German weekly published in Hamburg in 1860-66; from 1863 expressed Lassallean views. — 264, 489
Page me41.734
The North Alabamian — an American weekly published under this title in Tuscumbia, Alabama, from 1831 to 1907. — 308
Page me41.734
North British Daily Mail — a liberal bourgeois paper founded in Glasgow in 1847. — 468
Page me41.734
The Observer — a conservative weekly published in London since 1791. — 203
Page me41.734
L'Opinion nationale — a daily published in Paris from 1859 to 1874. — 203
Page me41.734
Ost-Deutsche Post — an Austrian daily of the moderate liberals published in Vienna from 1848 to 1866. — 227
Page me41.734
The People's Paper — a Chartist weekly, founded in London in May 1852 by Ernest Jones and published until 1858; from October 1852 to December 1856 Marx and Engels contributed to the newspaper and helped with the editorial work. — 82, 103, 154
Page me41.734
Portfolio — see Das Neue Portfolio
Page me41.734
Press — see The Free Press
Page me41.734
Die Presse — a liberal daily published in Vienna from 1848 to 1894; in 1861 and 1862, when the newspaper held anti-Bonapartist views, it printed a number of articles and reports by Marx. — 227, 278-80, 292, 321, 323, 325, 327, 332-33, 338, 340, 344, 348, 351, 354, 370, 388, 394, 408

Page me41.734
Preußische Gerichts-Zeitung — a liberal weekly published in Berlin from 1859 to 1866; beginning with No. 44 for 1861 it appeared under the title of Deutsche Gerichts-Zeitung. Its editor-in-chief was K.Ch.E. Hiersemenzel. — 248, 282
Page me41.734
Preußisches Wochenblatt — a conservative weekly published in Berlin from 1851 to 1861. — 257

Page Break me41.735
Page me41.735
Die Preußische Zeitung — a daily published in Berlin from 1851 to 1859; organ of the Manteuffel and later of Hohenzollern-Auerswald Ministries. — 270, 288
Page me41.735
Le Progrés de Lyon — a daily published from 1860. — 362
Page me41.735
Der Publicist — a liberal newspaper published in Berlin from 1845 to 1874. — 16, 27, 30, 47, 227, 243
Page me41.735
Die Reform — a liberal daily published in Hamburg in 1848-92. — 25, 27, 30, 105, 129, 134, 167, 218, 227, 234, 243
Page me41.735
Republik der Arbeiter — a workers' weekly published by Wilhelm Weitling in New York from 1850 to 1855; it voiced the views of the representatives of the egalitarian communism. — 90
Page me41.735
Die Revolution — a communist journal published by Joseph Weydemeyer in New York in 1852; two weekly issues appeared on 6 and 13 January; two “non-periodic” issues appeared in May and June. — 43
Page me41.735
Revue — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me41.735
Reynolds's Newspaper. A Weekly Journal of Politics, History, Literature and General Intelligence — a radical weekly published by George Reynolds in London from 1850; it was connected with the labour movement. — 358
Page me41.735
Rheinische Zeitung — a German daily published under this title in Düsseldorf from 1863 to 1866, and in Cologne from 1867 to 1874. — 533
Page me41.735
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — a daily founded by the Rhenish bourgeois opposition and published in Cologne from 1 January 1842 to 31 March 1843. Marx began to contribute to it in April 1842, and from 15 October of the same year to 17 March 1843 he was one of its editors. — 101
Page me41.735

Richmond Enquirer — an American paper published under various titles in Richmond, Virginia, from 1804 to 1877. — 489
Page me41.735
Richmond Examiner — an American paper published in Richmond, Virginia, from 1848 to 1866. — 562
Page me41.735
Rostocker Zeitung — a German daily founded in 1711 and published under this title from 1847 to 1927. — 227
Page me41.735
The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art — a conservative weekly published in London from 1855 to 1938. — 227
Page me41.735
Schlesische Zeitung — a German daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1742 to 1945; the newspaper of the constitutional monarchists on the eve of and during the 1848-49 revolution; a conservative newspaper in the 1860s. — 282
Page me41.735
Schwäbischer Merkur — a German liberal daily published in Stuttgart from 1785 to 1885. — 227
Page me41.735
Schweizer Handels-Courier — a daily published in Biel (Canton of Berne). It appeared under this title from 1853 to 1909; expressed Bonapartist views in the 1850s and 1860s; its editors were closely connected with Karl Vogt. — 22, 66, 166
Page me41.735
Le Siécle — a daily published in Paris from 1836 to 1939; a moderate republican newspaper in the 1860s. — 362
Page me41.735
The Spectator — a weekly published in London from 1828; at first liberal, then conservative. — 82
Page me41.735
Staats- und Gelehrte Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartheiischen Correspondenten — a monarchist daily published from 1814 to 1869. — 361
Page me41.735
Staats-Zeitung — see Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger

Page Break me41.736
Page me41.736
The Standard — a conservative daily founded in London in 1827. — 249, 253, 361
Page me41.736
Star — see The Morning Star
Page me41.736
Stimme des Volkes — a German-language workers' daily published in Chicago (USA) in 1860, Joseph Weydemeyer was its editor. — 115, 117-18, 183
Page me41.736
Stimmen der Zeit — a German petty-bourgeois monthly and later weekly published in 1858-62 by Adolph Kolatschek. It appeared first in Gotha and then in Weimar, Leipzig, Heidelberg and Vienna simultaneously. — 206, 208, 212-13, 321, 324

Page me41.736
Straßburger Korrespondent für West- und Mitteleuropa — a German Bonapartist paper published till 1860. — 127, 130, 241
Page me41.736
Straßburger Zeitung — see Straßburger Korrespondent für West- und Mitteleuropa
Page me41.736
Süddeutsche Zeitung — a German paper published under this title in Munich from 1859 to 1862. — 227
Page me41.736
Die Tägliche Deutsche Zeitung — a German-language daily published in New Orleans (USA) from August 1848 to April 1907 (under this title appeared from 1855 to 1872). — 114, 137, 144, 262
Page me41.736
Telegraph — see The Daily Telegraph
Page me41.736
Le Temps — a conservative daily published in Paris from 1861 to 1943. — 362
Page me41.736
Thusnelda. Teutonisch-satyrisch-humoristisches Klatschblatt — a satirical journal of the German petty-bourgeois refugees published in London in 1861. — 319
Page me41.736
The Times — a daily founded in London in 1785 under the title of Daily Universal Register; appears as The Times from 1788. — 7, 10, 25, 121, 128, 146, 173, 202, 206, 227, 248-49, 253, 284, 321, 333, 363, 369, 371, 372, 381, 439, 452, 456, 461-63, 489, 498, 506, 530, 536, 538, 544
Page me41.736
Tribune — see New-York Daily Tribune
Page me41.736
Trier'sche Zeitung — a German daily founded in 1757, appeared under this title from 1815. — 227
Page me41.736
The Vicksburg Whig — an American paper published in Vicksburg, Mississippi, from 1839 to 1863. — 308
Page me41.736
Das Volk — a German-language weekly published in London from 7 May to 20 August 1859; it was founded as the official organ of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; Marx took part in its publication beginning with issue No. 2 and in early July he became its de facto editor and manager. — 10, 31, 36, 37, 45, 60, 64, 66-68, 94, 105, 166, 232, 240, 298
Page me41.736
Volks-Zeitung — a German democratic daily published in Berlin from 1853. — 9, 12, 25, 30, 33, 47, 50-51, 109, 154, 192, 217, 227, 239, 250, 265
Page me41.736
The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire — a military weekly published in Manchester from August 1860 to March 1862; Engels was its contributor. — 203, 205, 257, 262
Page me41.736

Vossische Zeitung — see Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen
Page me41.736
Weser-Zeitung — a German liberal daily published in Bremen from 1844 to 1930. — 17
Page me41.736
Wochenschrift des Nationalvereins — a German weekly of the National Association published under this title in Coburg from 1860 to 1865. — 227, 241, 257
Page me41.736
Zeitung für Norddeutschland — a German liberal paper published in Hanover from 1848 to 1872. — 227, 239, 362

Page Break me41.737

SUBJECT INDEX

Page me41.737
A

Accumulation of capital — replacement fund as fund of accumulation — 411-12
Adventurism
— in revolutionary movement — 98
— Marx and Engels against revolution-mongering — 84
Agricultural chemistry — 397
Agriculture — 378, 396-98, 403-04, 485-86
Alliances and agreements in revolutionary struggle of proletariat — 103, 137, 152-53, 154
See also Party, proletarian — tactics
American Workers' League (New York, Chicago, from 1857) — 114-15
Amnesty for participants in 1848-49 revolution
— in Austria — 248
— in Prussia — 246, 248-49, 282, 305, 312-13, 316-17
Ancient Rome — 265
Anti-Communism (critique and exposure by Marx and Engels) — 80-81, 84, 477
See also Cologne Communist Trial, 1852; Party, proletarian — struggle against slanderous accusations
Ape, the (and man's origin) — 465, 542
Aristocracy, nobility — 470-71
— English — 357, 430, 432, 518
— Italian — 203-04
— Polish — 471
— Russian — 4, 7
Arithmetic — 514-15, 532
Army — 373
— Prussian — 200, 428-29, 519

Art of war — 199-200, 277-78, 295-96, 300, 303-04, 346, 356, 359-60, 366-68, 386, 400, 414-15, 420, 437-40, 539-40, 558-59
Astronomy — 354, 359, 517
Australia — 348, 349
Austria — 156-57, 200, 241-42, 248, 262, 492, 505, 513
— and Hungary — 103
See also Amnesty for participants in 1848-49 revolution; Austro-Italian war, 1848-49; Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; Polish national insurrection. 1863-64 — and Austria
Austro-Italian war, 1848-49 — 174
Austro-Italo-French war, 1859 — 103, 125, 132, 181
Average rate of profit — 395-97

Page me41.737
B

Balance of trade — 370, 420
Belgium — 102, 107, 348
Berlin — 270-71, 274-75
Bible — 468, 512, 541, 542
Big industry — 397, 449-51
See also Industrial revolution; Inventions; Machinery
Bonapartism
— Napoleon III's demagogy on nationalities question — 104, 125-26, 171, 193, 492 — influence on leaders of national liberation movement — 12, 125-26, 133, 156, 157, 196, 229, 230, 246, 362, 464-66, 489-90, 492, 505
— Bonapartist tendencies among Prussia's ruling circles — 431, 453, 519
— Bonapartist features in Palmerston's policy — 156
Bourgeoisie — 368
— English — 357-58, 430, 432
— French — 477
— German — 418
— Italian — 203-04
— Prussian — 418, 462, 554
Bourgeois political economy — 377-79, 403-04
See also Classical bourgeois political economy: Physiocrats: Vulgar bourgeois political economy

Page me41.737
C

California — 348
Capital — 395-98, 411-12, 485-87
See also Constant capital; Fixed capital; Organic composition of capital: Variable capital

Page Break me41.738

— its method — 333
— history of its writing — 12, 14, 23, 356, 435-36, 474, 484
— A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, 1859 — 14, 157, 193-94, 279-80, 435-37, 488
— second rough draft of Capital (manuscript of 1861-63) — 193, 292, 315, 319, 323, 324, 332, 350-51, 352, 356, 370, 380-81, 382, 384, 394-98, 401, 411, 426, 435-36, 446, 449-51, 474, 481
— third rough draft (manuscript of 1863-65) — 488, 530, 552, 582, 585
— plans for publication — 12, 193-94, 279-80, 315, 404, 433
Capitalist — 396, 398
See also Bourgeoisie (in different countries)
Capitalist mode of production
— prerequisites for — 450
Cell
— Schleiden's and Schwann's theory of — 546, 553
Chartist movement
— as the first independent working-class party — 103
Chemistry — 397, 551
China
— foreign trade — 345, 348
Christianity — 85, 377
Circulation — 397
See also Capital; Money; Money circulation
Classes — 368, 451
See also Aristocracy, nobility; Bourgeoisie; Class struggle; Working class in England
Classical bourgeois political economy — 378, 380-81, 403-04, 411, 479-80, 485
Class struggle — 246-47
— proletariat's tactics — 154
See also Working-class movement in England; Working-class movement in Germany
Cologne Communist Trial, 1852
— exposure by Marx and Engels of the provocative methods used in staging the trial — 16, 22-23, 54, 72-74, 78-79, 80-81, 140-41, 146-52
— and the Willich-Schapper faction — 72-73, 92-93
— conduct of the defendants — 3, 135, 142
— historical significance of — 44, 73
Comedy (genre of literature) — 265, 270-71, 289
Communism, scientific — 11, 362, 480-81
Communist League, the — organisational principles — 92-93
— after the defeat of 1848-49 revolution — 35, 57, 73, 80-81, 82-84, 90
— split in the Communist League, struggle against the sectarian tactics of Willich-Schapper faction — 72, 73, 91, 93, 97-99 — and petty-bourgeois democracy — 73, 84-85
— communities in England — 73
— communities in Germany — 73, 83
— dissolution of the Communist League, causes for — 73, 81-84, 94-95

— historical significance of — 81-85
See also Cologne Communist Trial, 1852
Constant capital — 394-95, 397, 485-87
See also Machinery Consumption
— as essential element in the turnover and reproduction of capital — 485-87
Cost price — 396-98
Crimean war, 1853-56 — 171, 336, 348, 462

Page me41.738
D

Danish-Prussian War, 1848-50 — 512-13
See also Schleswig-Holstein question
Danish war, 1864 — 505-06, 509, 513, 519, 549
— and European powers — 505-06, 512-13, 517, 519, 531-32, 538, 543-44
See also Schleswig-Holstein question

Page Break me41.739
Darwinism — 232, 246-47, 381, 542
Democracy, bourgeois (political system) — 421, 428, 561
Democracy, petty-bourgeois (political trend) — 84-85, 97-98, 468-70
Democracy, vulgar — 10, 22
See also Democracy, petty-bourgeois
Democratic party (USA) — 306-07, 428-30
Denmark — 543-44
See also Danish-Prussian war, 1848-50; Danish war, 1864; Literature — Danish; Schleswig-Holstein question
Division of labour — 350
Drama, dramatic art — 318

Page me41.738
E

Economic laws
— law of value — 396-97, 403-04
Emigration, emigrants — 110, 248-49
— political — 119, 248-49
— bourgeois-democratic, petty-bourgeois — 44, 73-74, 84, 85, 97-98
— proletarian — 298
— French — 102
— German emigrants in Belgium — 101-02
— German emigrants in England — 4, 14, 70-71, 103, 246, 297-98, 301-02, 310-11, 314-15, 525
— German emigrants in France — 101
— German emigrants in Switzerland — 70-71

— German emigrants in the USA — 89, 116-17, 300
— Hungarian emigrants in Europe and USA — 111, 125, 181-82, 210, 215, 229, 230
— Polish — 102, 455-56
— Russian — 341, 456, 489-90, 492
Engels, Frederick
— biographical data — 13-14, 20-21, 25, 39, 112, 120-21, 134-35, 137-38, 143, 259-60, 266-67, 290, 291, 314-15, 322, 344, 352, 413, 418, 457-59, 547-48, 553-54, 559-60
— friendship with Marx and his family — 401, 441-49
— joint work with Marx — 10, 165, 170, 171, 196, 198, 204-05, 248, 299, 300-01, 303-04, 353, 411 — contributing to bourgeois and democratic publications — 191-92, 196, 203, 216, 257
— contributing to New-York Daily Tribune — 170, 173, 178, 184
— study of natural science — 465, 532
— historical studies — 456-59, 470-71
— studies in military theory and history of warfare — 10, 25, 108-09, 173-74, 191, 200, 216, 257-58, 295-96, 353, 359-61, 366-68, 386-88, 455, 459, 478, 482
— language studies — 375, 455, 473
— his family — 138-39, 259-61, 266-67, 344, 441-43, 446-47, 528, 554, 559-60
England (Great Britain)
— history — 286, 294, 317, 544
— economy — 5, 7-8, 246, 344-45, 347, 348, 370, 378, 413, 414, 421, 543, 551 — cotton crisis ('dearth of cotton'), 1861-64 — 246, 344, 347, 413-14, 447-48 — social and political system — 299, 318, 334-36, 337-38, 509, 551
— press — 284, 489
— foreign policy — 157, 286, 336, 345, 348-50, 363, 370, 462-63, 484, 543-44, 556
— and the USA — 246, 291, 333-36, 348-49, 369, 370, 413, 430, 462; See also US Civil War, 1861-65 — and England — colonial policy — 7-8, 348-49
See also Aristocracy, nobility — English; Bourgeoisie — English; Law — English; Literature — English; Manchester; Mexican expedition, 1861-67; Parliament, English; Philosophy — English; Polish national insurrection, 1863-64 — and England; Working-class in England; Working-class movement in England Europe
— prospects for revolution in Europe in early 1860s — 5, 437, 453-54, 477

Page Break me41.740
Exploitation
— capitalist — 394-95

Page me41.740
F

Farmers — 378, 397
Fictitious capital — 8
Fixed capital — 394-95, 397, 485-87
See also Machinery; Replacement of fixed capital

Foreign policy — 142, 152-55
Foreign trade — 7-8, 348-49, 370, 420
See also Protectionism
France — 359, 430, 454, 462-63, 482
— Second Empire — 181, 329, 350, 454, 477, 506, 513, 519
— economy — 291, 329
— foreign trade — 8, 348
— foreign policy — 361, 431, 453, 462-63, 489, 506, 513, 519, 552
See also Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; Bonapartism; Emigration, emigrants — French; Law — French; Literature — French; Mexican expedition 1861-67; Polish national insurrection, 1863-64 — and France

G

General Association of German Workers — 533, 560-61, 585-87
Geology — 397, 465, 473
German Workers' Educational Society in Geneva (1840s-60s) — 71
German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918)
— in 1860-64 — 3, 11, 15, 34, 48, 71, 78, 94-95, 232, 302, 326, 342, 455, 458, 517, 585-86
— resumption of links with Marx — 11, 94-95, 232, 339, 455, 457-61, 585-88
German Workers' Society in Brussels (from 1847) — 101-02
Germany — 342, 490
— history — 367, 418-19, 561
— economy — 112, 348, 450
— social and political system — 470
— ways of unification — 159, 160, 164, 252-53
— press — 247, 342
— prospects for revolution in the 1860s — 428-29, 461-62, 473, 554
— foreign policy — 107, 461-63, 496-98
See also Bourgeoisie — German; Emigration, emigrants; Hesse-Cassel; Literature — German; National Association (Germany, 1859-67); Party of Progress (Germany, 1861-84); Prussia; Schleswig-Holstein question; Working-class movement in Germany Government loans — 363, 368, 519

H

Hegel, Hegelianism — 220, 281, 330, 333, 381, 546
Hesse-Cassel (Kurhessen) — 373
Historiography
— in the era of Enlightenment — 356-57
— bourgeois (19th cent.) — 232-33, 246, 473, 541 — progressive trends in bourgeois historiography — 321
— positivist — 380

— 'Junker' historiography — 560-61
History — 473
See also Historiography
Hong Kong — 345, 348
Hungary — 107, 125, 156-57, 505
See also Emigration — Hungarian emigrants in Europe and USA

Page me41.740
I

India — 7-8, 294, 348, 359
Industrial revolution — 449-51
See also Big industry; Inventions; Machinery
Interest (econ.) — 485, 486
Inventions
— social consequences — 449-51
Italy
— problem of its unification, Marx's and Engels' stand — 103-04, 181, 191, 193
— revolution in South and Central Italy, 1860 — 246
— Garibaldi's campaign, 1860 — 174, 181, 189, 192, 195, 196, 203-07, 246, 389-90
— Cavour's policy — 172, 203, 246
— foreign policy — 171, 189, 199-200, 203-04

Page Break me41.741
See also Aristocracy, nobility — Italian: Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont); Mazzinism, Mazzinists

Page me41.741
J

Joint-stock companies — 445, 551
Judaism — 541-42

Page me41.741
K

Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) — 181, 191, 199, 203-05
See also Austro-Italian war, 1848-49; Austro-Italo-French war, 1859

Page me41.741
L

Landed property — 200, 398, 403
See also Landowner; Rent
Landowner — 397-98
Lassalleanism, Lassalleans — 399-400, 480, 483

— Lassalle and his role in German working-class movement — 9-10, 38, 142, 281-82, 313, 389-90, 399-400, 466-67, 470, 483
— critique of Lassalle's theoretical views — 18, 19, 124, 142, 190-91, 281, 302-03, 330, 333, 383, 389-90, 440-41, 451-52, 466-67, 470, 480, 483, 484, 488-89, 534
— and demand for universal suffrage — 467
— demand for government help to workers' co-operatives — 467
— attitude to Prussian state and to feudal reaction — 481, 494
— and earlier working-class movement — 533
— Lassalle's nationalistic attitude during Austro-Italo-French war, 1859 — 18-19 — and problem of unification of Germany, of Italy — 6, 12, 108
— critique of the Lassalle personality cult — 466-67, 475, 489
See also General Association of German Workers
Law Courts
— in bourgeois society — 186-87
See also Law
Law (right)
— as superstructure — 317-18
— Roman — 294, 317-18, 330-31, 356-57
— bourgeois — 317
— material — 335-36
— of succession — 294, 317-18
— critique of Hegel's philosophy of law — 330
— English — 294, 317-18, 335-36
— French — 294
— Prussian — 305, 314-15
Linguistics — 357, 540-41 Literature
— folklore — 160-62, 375
— classicism — 318
— English — 265, 517
— Danish — 160-62, 375
— Dutch — 509-10, 516
— Greek — 318
— Roman — 57
— Spanish — 489
— German — 122, 270-71, 289, 358, 507, 515
— French — 318, 507
See also Comedy; Drama, dramatic art; Poetry
Liverpool — 432

Page me41.741
M

Machinery (machine production)
— features distinguishing machines from tool; evolution of — 443-51
— as material basis of capitalist mode of production — 449-50

— as part of constant capital — 394, 411-12, 485
— wear and tear; reproduction — 411-12, 414
— and manufacture — 451
— A. Smith on — 411
See also Inventions; Replacement of fixed capital
Malthusianism — 381
Manchester — 432
Man, individual, personality
— origin of man — 465, 542
— and animal — 381, 465, 542
— and nature — 449
— and machine — 449-51
— and religion — 465
Manufacture — 350-51, 449-51
Market — 7-8, 381

Page Break me41.742
See also Foreign trade; Market value; World market
Market value — 404
Marxist political economy — superiority to bourgeois and petty-bourgeois political economy — 380, 396-98, 403-04, 411, 485, 488
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx
Marx, Karl
— biographical data — 24, 44-45, 68, 69, 72-74, 81-82, 268, 435-36
— friendship with Engels — 111, 121, 332-33, 497-504
— joint work with Engels — 10, 165, 170, 171, 196, 198, 204-05, 247-48, 299, 300, 303-04, 345, 353, 411
— before 1844 — 100-01
— 1844 to February 1848 — 101-02, 268, 533-34
— during revolutions of 1848-49 — 102, 268
— during reaction (1850-57) — 44-45, 72-74, 81-84, 92-98, 102-03
— during rise of revolutionary and democratic movement (1858-64) — 10-11, 20-23, 34, 44-45, 53, 63-64, 76, 79-80, 81-84, 88-89, 92-99, 102-103, 106, 119-20, 151-53, 175-76, 208, 258-59, 265, 268-69, 279-84, 288-89, 311-12, 342-43, 435-36, 453-55, 468-69, 500-01, 525, 529-30
— writing and publication of Herr Vogt — 6, 9-10, 12-14, 15-49, 51-79, 81-89, 91-107, 110, 112-20, 122-24, 128-32, 139-41, 155, 158, 159, 165-67, 170, 172, 176-179, 186-93, 196-99, 201-05, 207-12, 217-19, 221-28, 231-35, 238-41, 243, 244, 252-53, 255, 262, 268-69, 290, 313, 327, 334, 338, 362 — writing for workers' and democratic newspapers — 44-45, 63-64, 67-69, 100-01
— as contributor to and editor of Rheinische Zeitung — 100-01
— as editor of Neue Rheinische Zeitung — 90-91, 99-103
— as editor of Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — 96-97, 102
— writing for the Chartist press — 70, 102-03, 154

— contributing to bourgeois and bourgeois-democratic publications — 43-44, 68-70, 102-03, 279, 292, 323, 327, 332, 340
— contributing to New-York Daily Tribune — 68, 70, 103, 106, 216, 252, 263, 325, 359, 362
— writing for Die Presse — 323-24, 327; 332, 338, 340, 351, 353-54 — activities in workers' and democratic organisations — 10-11, 81-82, 94-95, 102-03
— and working-class movement in England — 467-69, 527, 530
— and working-class movement in Germany — 35, 94-95, 533, 541
— and working-class movement in USA — 81-82
— study of natural science — 216, 232-36, 246-47, 546-47, 551, 553
— historical studies — 193-94, 265, 286, 293-94, 454, 457-59, 461-62, 474, 484
— language studies — 540-41
— his family — 216, 228, 231, 340-41, 380, 399, 433, 445, 481-83, 491, 495, 498-99
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx
Mathematics — 449, 484, 514-15, 532
See also Arithmetic
Mazzinism, Mazzinists — 193, 196, 246
Means of subsistence — 485-87
Mechanics (science)
— history of — 397, 449-51
Mexican expedition, 1861-67 — 363, 370, 431, 453, 462, 489
Mexico
— and England — 349-50
Mode of production
— connection between material mode of production and social relations — 450
Money — 370, 400, 419, 420-21
Money circulation — 370, 485-87
See also Money Morality
— bourgeois — 85

Page me41.742
N

National Association (Germany, 1859-67)

Page Break me41.743
— 10, 160, 164, 246, 297-98, 309-11, 342, 383
— London branch — 293, 297, 302, 304, 310-11, 319, 355
National debt — 363, 370, 421
Nationalities question — struggle against Bonapartist demagogy — 104
See also Bonapartism; Polish question Natural science — and philosophy — 551, 553
— and scientific communism — 232, 246-47

See also Astronomy; Chemistry; Darwinism; Geology; Mathematics; Physics
Neutrality (in international relations) — 335-37
Nice — 132

Page me41.743
O

Organic composition of capital — 395-98
Organisation of social labour and production — 397, 450

Page me41.743
P

Parliament, English — 299
Party of Progress (Germany, 1861-84) — 66-67, 331, 431, 501 Party, proletarian
— character, tasks, vanguard role of — 81-84
— Marx's party, 'our party' — 85, 87, 193
— after the defeat of the 1848-49 revolutions — 81-82, 87
— its policy on the nationalities question — 103-04
— tactics — 137, 154, 193
— struggle against slanderous accusations — 10, 13, 14, 15-16, 18-25, 27, 33, 40-45, 51-57, 59-79, 82-87, 92-103, 106, 107, 122-23, 128, 129, 131-32, 167, 169, 170, 175-78, 180, 184, 186-87, 189-91, 194, 204, 207-08, 211, 219, 222, 223, 231
See also Cologne Communist Trial, 1852; Communist League Philosophy
— and natural science — 551, 553
— Ancient Greek — 377, 515
— English — 246-57, 381
— German — 101, 498
See also Hegel, Hegelianism
Physics — 551
Physiocrats — 381, 403, 485, 487
Physiology — 397, 546
Poetry — 115, 161-63, 375, 472, 475
Poland — 102, 459, 462-64, 470-71, 484, 538
See also Polish national insurrection, 1863-64; Polish question Polish national insurrection, 1863-64 — 453-56, 461, 464, 477, 483, 492, 538
— and prospects for European revolution — 453, 455-56
— and revolutionary movement in Russia — 453-55, 478
— peasant movement in Lithuania — 464, 477
— pro-Bonapartist policy of Right-wing leaders — 464-66, 484, 489-90, 492 — causes of defeat — 464-66, 477, 483, 489-90, 492-93
— and Austria — 492
— and England — 462-63, 484, 492
— and France — 460, 462-63, 489, 492, 537

— and Prussia — 455-56, 477, 537
— and Polish emigration — 455-56, 489-90, 493
— and tactics of proletarian party — 455, 457-61, 472, 474, 492
Polish question — 103, 453, 455-56, 459, 461-62, 474, 477-78
See also Polish national insurrection, 1863-64
Press, the — 60, 115, 137, 283-84
Prevision, prognostication
— Marx' and Engels' forecast of different social phenomena — 7-8, 241-42, 437, 453, 468-69
Price — effect of prices on money circulation — 471-72
— bourgeois economists on price formation — 396-97, 403-04, 485
See also Cost price
Private property
— feudal — 317
See also Landed property
Profit — 395-97, 485-87
See also Average rate of profit; Interest;

Page Break me41.744
Rate of profit; Rent; Surplus value
Property — 317
See also Landed property; Private property
Protectionism — 8, 348, 370
Prussia — 248, 460-63, 554
— economy — 112, 519
— social and political system — 248, 280-81, 312-13, 325, 327-28, 329, 331, 473
— provincial Diet — 280-81, 288-89, 329, 331, 361, 373, 473, 477, 506
— police system — 81, 280, 315
— constitutional conflict (1860s) — 280-81, 329, 361, 363, 366, 373, 418-19, 428-29, 431, 461, 473, 477, 494, 506, 512-13, 584
— Wilhelm I's 'New Era' — 312, 316-17, 329, 361
— Bismarck's coming to power — 418, 431
— law, courts — 40, 129, 145-52, 167, 170, 175-78, 184, 186-87, 189, 194, 204, 207, 208, 219, 314-15 — press, censorship — 192, 248, 250, 281, 312, 353, 493-94
— prospects for revolution — 252, 437, 456, 461, 477, 505
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 262, 477, 512-13, 519
— and Germany's unification — 159, 160, 419
— and Austria — 513
— and Denmark — 513
— and England — 284
— and France — 18, 262
— and Germany — 419, 554
— and Poland; Prussian oppression — 453-56, 462-63, 477-78, 537, 538
— and Russia — 250, 262, 461-63, 505-06, 537-38, 541

See also Amnesty for participants in 1848-49 revolution — in Prussia; Army — Prussian; Bonapartism — Bonapartist tendencies among Prussia's ruling circles; Bourgeoisie — Prussian; Germany; Party of Progress (Germany, 1861-84); Polish national insurrection, 1863-64 — and Prussia; Rhine Province; Schleswig-Holstein question; Working-class movement in Germany

Page me41.744
R

Rate of exchange — 370
Rate of profit — 395-97
Raw materials — 394, 485
Religion — 465, 468, 507, 512, 541, 542
See also Bible; Christianity; Judaism
Rent — 380, 396-98, 403-04, 414, 485-97
— absolute and differential — 396-98, 403-04
— Physiocrats' theory of — 403
— A. Smith's theory of — 403, 485
— Ricardo's theory of — 378, 380, 396-98, 403-04, 485
— Rodbertus' theory of — 285, 378
See also Landed property
Replacement of fixed capital — 411-12, 414
Reproduction — 411-12, 485-87.
Republican Party (USA) — 210
Republic, bourgeois — 416, 428
Revolution — 84, 98, 430
— prospects for revolution in Europe — 45, 437, 453, 477
See also Prevision, prognostication; Revolution as continuous process; Revolution, proletarian, socialist Revolution as continuous process
— bourgeois-democratic revolution as its starting point — 437
Revolution, proletarian, socialist — and bourgeois republic — 428
Rhine Province — 109, 112, 418, 501
Russia (Russian Empire)
— peasant movement on the eve of abolition of serfdom (1861) — 4, 7
— preparations for abolition of serfdom — 4
— maturing of revolutionary situation in late 1850s and early '60s — 4, 7, 329, 453-56
— prospects for revolution — 453, 455-56
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 336-37, 470-71, 538
— in 1850s-60s — 121-22, 156-57, 250, 336-37, 537-38, 541, 543-44, 549, 554
— and Central Asia — 349

Page Break me41.745
— and Far East — 345, 347-48, 349
— and Caucasus — 538, 543

— and Austria — 156-57, 250
— and England — 156-57
— and France — 250
— and Prussia — 250, 456, 538
— Tsarist policy in Poland — 325, 455-56, 459, 538
See also Aristocracy, nobility — Russian; Crimean War, 1853-56; Polish national insurrection, 1863-64; War of 1812 in Russia

Page me41.745
S

Schleswig-Holstein question — 250, 299, 336-37, 494, 496, 549
— London Protocol of 1852 — 494, 496, 497, 532, 543
— in 1863-64 — 494, 496-97, 505-08, 512-13, 517, 531-32, 537-38, 541, 543-44, 549, 553, 554
See also Danish-Prussian war, 1848-50; Danish war, 1864
Science
— and production — 397, 450-51
— and the state, and politics — 473, 558 — scientific discoveries — 436, 473
— popularisation of — 436
See also History; Natural Science Social relations — and material production — 449-50
Social (total) capital — as sum of individual capitals — 395-96
See also Reproduction
Société des saisons (Paris, 1837) — 82
Society, bourgeois — 82, 84-85, 294, 317-18
Spartacus revolt, the — 265
State, the — 435, 467
Stock exchange — 421
Surplus labour — 394-95
Surplus value — 394-96, 486-87
See also Interest; Profit; Rent
Switzerland — 560-61

Page me41.745
T

Taxation — 479-80
— in England — 400, 420-21
— in Germany — 480
— in USA — 400, 420-21
Technology
— history of — 449-51

See also Big industry; Inventions; Machinery
Teleology — 246
Theatre — 270-71, 288-89
See also Comedy; Drama, dramatic art Theory and practice
— link between — 403-04

Page me41.745
U

United States of America — 416, 561-62
— area and population — 300-01, 373
— immigration — 116-17, 119
— trade — 348-49, 420
— protectionism — 349, 370
— financial policy — 369-70, 387, 400, 419, 420-21
— the South (economic region) — 416
— the North-West (economic region) — 119, 300-01, 307, 428
— agriculture, agrarian relations — 242, 387, 420
— slave-holding system in the South, its crisis — 242, 246, 416
— social and political system — 416, 421, 423, 428
— slave-holder oligarchy — 301, 416, 428 — internal policy — 364, 400, 416, 423, 429-30
— struggle to abolish slavery — 4, 7, 242, 300-01 — territorial expansion — 299-301
— foreign policy — 462
— and England — 246, 291, 333, 335-37, 348, 349, 369-70, 413, 430, 462-63
See also Democratic Party (USA); Republican Party (USA); US Civil War, 1861-65
US Civil War, 1861-65
— general description, significance — 277-78, 400, 416, 420-21, 428
— causes of — 277, 295-96, 300-01, 306-08, 420
— role of border States and Territories

Page Break me41.746
— 277, 295-97, 306, 307, 346, 349, 361, 387-88, 420, 423
— military strength of adversaries — 277-78, 295-96, 372-73, 386-88, 400, 414-16, 456-57, 562
— secession of Southern states — 304-09
— progress of hostilities — 277-78, 295-96, 299, 303-04, 306, 346, 349, 353, 359-63, 366-68, 371, 386-88, 414-15, 420, 423, 434, 437-40, 454, 456-57, 478, 484, 486, 530, 531, 538-40, 558-59, 562 — inconsistent policy of Union government — 295, 300-01, 345, 349, 364, 372-73, 386-88, 400, 416, 421, 423, 428, 430, 440, 457, 462, 562 — constitutional conduct of war — 387, 400
— revolutionary conduct of war — 277-78, 386-88, 400, 420, 421, 423, 428 — slavery issue — 277-78, 299, 300-01, 387, 400, 420, 421, 428, 440

— Southern Confederacy, its policy — 277-78, 366-68, 387-88, 400, 414-15, 420-21, 428-30, 562 — and revolutionary émigrés of 1848-49 — 296, 300, 363, 371, 372, 416, 434, 437-38, 440
— and US economy — 369-70, 400, 420-21
— and England — 277, 278, 291, 329, 335-37, 348-49, 362-63, 421, 423, 462
— and English bourgeoisie, its press — 291, 348-49, 357-58, 369-71, 429, 432, 439-40, 467-68, 489, 530, 538
— and English working class — 357-58, 423, 430, 440, 488
— and France — 291, 361, 430, 489
Urquhartism, Urquhartites — 10, 103, 152-54, 453-54, 491-92

Page me41.746
V

Value
— and cost price — 396-98, 403-04
— in classical bourgeois political economy — 396-97, 403-04, 485
See also Cost price; Market value; Money; Price
Variable capital — 394-95, 397, 485-87
Vienna Congress of 1814-15 — 543
Vulgar bourgeois political economy — 370, 377-79, 421, 479, 485
See also Malthusianism

Page me41.746
W

Wages
— and variable capital — 394, 396, 485-87
— reproduction of, by necessary labour — 394
— and money circulation — 486, 487
— workers' struggle for higher wages — 8
— and working day — 394-95, 486
— and surplus value — 394-95
War of 1812 in Russia — 367
War(s) — 367-68, 387-88, 456, 512-13
See also Art of war; Austro-Italian war, 1848-49; Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; Crimean war, 1853-56; Danish-Prussian war, 1848-50; Danish war, 1864; US Civil War, 1861-65; War of 1812 in Russia
Workers' societies
— propagandist societies — 81, 93
See also German Workers' Educational Society in Geneva (1840s-60s); German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918); German Workers' Society in Brussels (from 1847)
Working class in England — 423, 430, 463, 465, 468
See also Working-class movement in England

Working-class movement in England — in the 1860s — 430, 463-65, 467-68, 580
— movement to prevent intervention against USA during Civil War — 357-58, 440, 468
See also Chartist movement
Working-class movement in Germany — 189-90, 533, 560-61, 580
See also General Association of German Workers
World market — 348-49
See also Foreign trade

Footnotes

Page me41.3

†a Freiligrath

Page me41.3

†b Anders

Page me41.4

†a Po and Rhine

Page me41.4

†b This refers to the item 'Progress and Final Issue of the Peasantry Question. A Memorial submitted to the consideration of the Chief Peasantry Question Committee by the President, Adjutant-General Rostoffzeff' in The Daily Telegraph, No. 1417, 11 January 1860.

Page me41.5

†a Report of Leonard Horner, Esq., Inspector of Factories, for the Half Year ended the 31st October 1859, dated 14 November 1859, in Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the Half Year Ending 31st October 1859, London, 1860.

Page me41.5

†b the British Museum Library

Page me41.5

†c A. Williams, an alias used by Marx in some of his letters.

Page me41.6

†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.

Page me41.6

†b Marx uses the archaic form 'teutschen' instead of the standard 'deutschen' (German, Germanic).

Page me41.6

†c 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung', National-Zeitung, No. 37, 22 January 1860.

Page me41.6

†d 27 and 28 January

Page me41.7

†a 'Spain and Morocco', The Times, Nos. 23523, 23524 and 23526, 23, 24 and 26 January 1860.

Page me41.7

†b See Marx's article 'English Politics' in Vol. 17 of the present edition.

Page me41.7
†c See this volume, p. 4.
Page me41.7
†d Engels, who uses the English word, may have been unaware of its racist connotations.
Page me41.7
†e 'Commercial Matters', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5839, 11 January 1860.
Page me41.7
†f 'Zur russischen Leibeigenschaftsfrage und die Finanz-Verhältnisse des Staats', Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 3 and 5 (supplement), 3 and 5 January 1860; 'Die Bauern-Emancipation in Russland', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 16 (supplement), 16 January 1860; 'Die russische Leibeigenschaft und der Adel', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 18 (supplement), 18 January 1860.
Page me41.8
†a Ernst II
Page me41.8
†b Marx's daughters — Jenny, Laura and Eleanor
Page me41.9
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.9
†b as less than nothing
Page me41.9
†c Militärische Blätter
Page me41.9
†d K. Marx, 'Declaration', 15 November 1859.
Page me41.9
†e Marx to Lassalle, 22 November 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 40).
Page me41.10
†a all the rest
Page me41.10
†b either or
Page me41.10
†c anti-Palmerston
Page me41.10
†d [L. Bamberger,] Juchhe nach Italia!, Bern and Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.10
†e 31 January
Page me41.10
†f Engels wrote the article 'Savoy and Nice'.
Page me41.11
†a large part
Page me41.11
†b See this volume, p. 6.
Page me41.11
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.12

†a 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung', National-Zeitung, No. 37, 22 January 1860.
Page me41.12
†b Eduard Fischel
Page me41.12
†c K. Marx, 'Particulars of Kossuth's transaction with Louis Napoleon', The Free Press, No. 10, 28 September 1859. It was an abridged version of Marx's article 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon', published in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 5748, 24 September 1859.
Page me41.13
†a Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me41.13
†b This refers to Carl Vogt's pamphlet, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.13
†c See this volume, p. 10.
Page me41.13
†d Lassalle
Page me41.13
†e K. Marx, 'Declaration', 15 November 1859.
Page me41.13
†f See this volume, p. 9.
Page me41.14
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me41.14
†b See this volume, p. 10.
Page me41.15
†a See this volume, p. 9.
Page me41.15
†b Friedrich Engels, Sr., Frederick Engels' father
Page me41.15
†c 'Savoy and Nice'
Page me41.15
†d See this volume, pp. 11-12.
Page me41.15
†e Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.16
†a 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, No. 41, 25 January 1860.
Page me41.16
†b Thus in the original.
Page me41.16
†c That's all.
Page me41.16
†d in December 1859, after the 13th
Page me41.17

†a last resort
Page me41.17
†b Geneva
Page me41.17
†c C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.18
†a Herr Vogt
Page me41.18
†b See K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon', present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 502-03.
Page me41.18
†c A. Williams, an alias used by Marx in some of his letters.
Page me41.19
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.19
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile.
Page me41.19
†c See this volume, pp. 16 and 19.
Page me41.20
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.20
†b Books have their fate (Terentianus Maurus, De litteris, syllabis et metris, 'Carmen heroicum', 258).
Page me41.20
†c As regards
Page me41.20
†d hatred of the human race
Page me41.20
†e hatred of the bourgeois
Page me41.21
†a F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.21
†b See this volume, p. 13.
Page me41.21
†c A reference to Peter Imandt, who lived in Dundee, Scotland. See this volume, p. 16.
Page me41.21
†d Ernst Dronke
Page me41.21
†e Charles Roesgen
Page me41.21
†f despite them
Page me41.22
†a See this volume, p. 15.
Page me41.22

†b 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, No. 41, 25 January 1860.
Page me41.22
†c See this volume, pp. 40-45.
Page me41.22
†d [K. Vogt,] 'Zur Warnung', Schweizer Handels-Courier, No. 150 (extraordinary supplement), 2 June 1859.
Page me41.22
†e C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.23
†a Frederick-William IV
Page me41.23
†b on Lassalle's advice
Page me41.23
†c Presumably Wladyslaw Ko&sa;cielski
Page me41.23
†d C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.24
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung.
Page me41.24
†b See this volume, p. 16
Page me41.24
†c This refers to the lawsuit Marx intended to bring against the National-Zeitung (see this volume, p. 22).
Page me41.24
†d See this volume, pp. 15-16.
Page me41.25
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League, June 1850'.
Page me41.25
†b Wolff lived in exile in Zurich from August 1849 to May 1851.
Page me41.25
†c See Engels' letter to Marx of 27 June 1851 (present edition, Vol. 38).
Page me41.25
†d W. Wolff, 'Erklärung', Die Reform, No. 18, 11 February 1860; Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 44 (supplement), 13 February 1860, and Volks-Zeitung, No. 47, 24 February 1860.
Page me41.25
†e F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.26
†a See this volume, pp. 12 and 22.
Page me41.26
†b This refers to the item 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, No. 41, 25 January 1860.
Page me41.26
†c See this volume, p. 21.

Page me41.27
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration'.
Page me41.27
†b K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'.
Page me41.27
†c C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.28
†a K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette.'
Page me41.28
†b [K. Abel,] 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860. See also this volume, pp. 74-76.
Page me41.28
†c hence
Page me41.29
†a K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.29
†b [K. Abel,] 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860. See also this volume, pp. 74-76.
Page me41.29
†c K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Daily Telegraph'.
Page me41.30
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration'.
Page me41.30
†b K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.30
†c K. Blind's statement in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 313, 9 November 1859. See this volume, pp. 60-62.
Page me41.32
†a 'J' in the manuscript. 'Th' is correct.
Page me41.32
†b Marx gives the document in English.
Page me41.32
†c Marx drew a circle round the words representing the stamp.
Page me41.32
†d F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.32
†e Eduard Zernin
Page me41.32
†f Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung
Page me41.32
†g [K. Abel,] 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860. See this volume, pp. 74-76.
Page me41.32
†h the Editor of The Daily Telegraph
Page me41.33
†a In fact it appeared on Monday, 6 February 1860.

Page me41.33
†b K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Daily Telegraph'.
Page me41.33
†c 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung' and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, Nos. 37 and 41, 22 and 25 January 1860 respectively.
Page me41.33
†d with the help of
Page me41.33
†e K. Marx, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration'.
Page me41.33
†f K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.33
†g The Morning Star
Page me41.34
†a See this volume, pp. 70-71 and Marx's Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 38-47).
Page me41.34
†b See Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 41.
Page me41.34
†c gossip column
Page me41.34
†d See this volume, p. 11.
Page me41.34
†e The phrase 'revenons á nos moutons' (literally, 'to return to our sheep') occurs in a mediaeval French farce about the lawyer Patelin. In a figurative sense it means 'to return to the matter in question'.
Page me41.35
†a See this volume, p. 11.
Page me41.35
†b K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.36
†a The word used is 'Schwefelpfuhl', perhaps by analogy with 'Schwefelbande' — Brimstone Gang. Cf. Revelation, 20:10.
Page me41.36
†b See this volume, pp. 30-32.
Page me41.36
†c K. Marx, 'Declaration', 15 November 1859.
Page me41.36
†d Karl Blind
Page me41.37
†a to the matter in hand
Page me41.37
†b The original of the letter says 'six weeks'. See this volume, p. 31, and also p. 129 in Vol. 17 of the present edition.
Page me41.37
†c Marx drew a circle round the words representing the stamp.

Page me41.38
†a 'J' in the manuscript. 'Th' is correct.
Page me41.38
†b Marx quotes the document in English.
Page me41.38
†c Long live
Page me41.38
†d Engels means Marx's statement 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'. See this volume, p. 29.
Page me41.38
†e See this volume, pp. 32-33.
Page me41.38
†f It would be quite possible
Page me41.39
†a as you wish
Page me41.39
†b This refers to the issues containing the items 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung' and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', Nos 37 and 41, 22 and 25 January 1860.
Page me41.39
†c C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.39
†d F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.39
†e See this volume, p. 37.
Page me41.39
†f After that
Page me41.39
†g Engels writes 'finschtre' (instead of 'finstre'), presumably mimicking Blind's articulation.
Page me41.39
†h K. Marx, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration'.
Page me41.40
†a Eduard Fischel
Page me41.41
†a [K. Abel,] 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860.
Page me41.41
†b 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung' and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, Nos. 37 and 41, 22 and 25 January 1860.
Page me41.41
†c PTO
Page me41.41
†d Blind's statements in the Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 313 and 345, 9 November and 11 December 1859.
Page me41.41

†e [K. Blind,] 'The Grand Duke Constantine to Be King of Hungary', The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.
Page me41.42
†a deliberate libel
Page me41.42
†b This refers to Marx's 'Declaration' of 15 November, published in the supplement to the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 325, 21 November 1859.
Page me41.42
†c from the very start
Page me41.42
†d Marx presumably refers to point 2 of his 'Declaration'.
Page me41.42
†e See this volume, p. 70, and Marx's Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 38-47).
Page me41.43
†a F. Freiligrath, 'An Josef Weydemeyer. Zwei poetische Episteln', Epistel 1.
Page me41.43
†b Die Revolution
Page me41.44
†a Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser
Page me41.44
†b This presumably refers to the 'Statement' by Marx and Engels which was to be published in the Weser-Zeitung and the New-Yorker Staatszeitung in early 1851 (present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 535-36).
Page me41.44
†c See this volume, pp. 66-67.
Page me41.45
†a There follow, in Jenny Marx's handwriting, the date and address, reproduced in this edition at the beginning of the letter.
Page me41.46
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.46
†b See this volume, pp. 40-45.
Page me41.46
†c ibid., p. 40.
Page me41.46
†d ibid., p. 37.
Page me41.47
†a 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration'.
Page me41.47
†b K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.47
†c See this volume, pp. 31-32 and 37.
Page me41.47
†d ibid., pp. 32-38.
Page me41.47

†e 15 February
Page me41.47
†f 11 February. Marx probably sent the affidavit without a covering letter, or the letter is no longer extant.
Page me41.48
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.48
†b See this volume, p. 27 (Marx's letter to Franz Duncker of 6 February 1860).
Page me41.48
†c ibid., p. 40.
Page me41.48
†d ibid., p. 34.
Page me41.48
†e But these gentlemen will have cause to think it over.
Page me41.48
†f The Daily Telegraph.
Page me41.48
†g This refers to K. Abel, author of the note published in The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860. See this volume, pp. 74-76.
Page me41.49
†a Ch. Schaible, 'The Vogt Pamphlet. To the Editor of The Daily Telegraph'. In this statement, published in The Daily Telegraph, No. 1447, 15 February 1860, Schaible claimed to be the author of the pamphlet Zur Warnung (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 130-31).
Page me41.49
†b imperial advocate (a reference to Vogt)
Page me41.49
†c No. 313, 9 November 1859
Page me41.49
†d See this volume, p. 37.
Page me41.50
†a F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.50
†b [F. Lassalle,] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preussens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie, Berlin, 1859.
Page me41.50
†c See this volume, pp. 51-52.
Page me41.50
†d Illegible.
Page me41.51
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.51
†b F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.51
†c See this volume, p. 50.
Page me41.51

†d [F. Lassalle,] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preussens, Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie, Berlin, 1859.
Page me41.52
†a K. Blind, 'Gegen Karl Vogt', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 44 (supplement), 13 February 1860.
Page me41.52
†b [E. Biskamp,] 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 46 (supplement), 15 February 1860.
Page me41.52
†c W. Wolff, 'Erklärung', Die Reform, No. 18, 11 February 1860, Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 44 (supplement), 13 February 1860, and Volks-Zeitung, No. 47, 24 February 1860.
Page me41.52
†d See this volume, p. 49.
Page me41.52
†e ibid., pp. 40-45.
Page me41.53
†a See this volume, pp. 31-32 and 37.
Page me41.53
†b K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.54
†a 1850 in the original.
Page me41.54
†b See this volume, pp. 30-32.
Page me41.55
†a K. Marx, 'Declaration', 15 November 1859.
Page me41.55
†b Zur Warnung
Page me41.55
†c on 23 November 1859 (present edition, Vol. 40)
Page me41.55
†d [K. Blind,] 'Crystal Palace. — The Schiller Commemoration', The Morning Advertiser, No. 21344, 11 November 1859.
Page me41.55
†e F. Freiligrath. 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 319 (supplement), 15 November 1859.
Page me41.56
†a F. Freiligrath, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 345 (supplement), 11 December 1859.
Page me41.56
†b K. Blind, 'Erklärung', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 345 (supplement), 11 December 1859.
Page me41.56
†c containing the items 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung', N.-Z., No. 37, 22 January, and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', N.-Z., No. 41, 25 January 1860
Page me41.56

†d [K. Abel,] 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860.
Page me41.57
†a Nothing human is alien to me — an allusion to Terence's Heautontimorumenos, I, 1, 25.
Page me41.57
†b of the Communist League
Page me41.58
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.58
†b K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.58
†c See this volume, p. 35.
Page me41.59
†a the Communist League's
Page me41.59
†b See this volume, pp. 40-45.
Page me41.59
†c ibid., p. 53.
Page me41.59
†d Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me41.59
†e [K. Blind,] 'The Grand Duke Constantine to be King of Hungary', The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859.
Page me41.60
†a K. Marx, [Letter to the Editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung].
Page me41.60
†b See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 124-25.
Page me41.61
†a Marx also quotes these documents in Herr Vogt, p. 126.
Page me41.61
†b K. Marx, 'Declaration', 15 November 1859.
Page me41.61
†c See this volume, p. 42.
Page me41.61
†d See also Marx's Herr Vogt, pp. 126-27.
Page me41.62
†a K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.63
†a 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, No. 41, 25 January 1860.
Page me41.64
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.65
†a The Free Press, No. 5, 27 May 1859. Marx gives the text of the article in Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 123 and 317.

Page me41.66
†a See this volume, p. 22.
Page me41.66
†b [E. Biscamp,] 'Der Reichsregent', Das Volk, No. 2, 14 May 1859.
Page me41.66
†c confusion
Page me41.66
†d Ch. Schaible, 'The Vogt Pamphlet. To the Editor of The Daily Telegraph', D.T., No. 1447, 15 February 1860.
Page me41.67
†a See 'Statement by the Editorial Board of the Newspaper Das Volk', present edition, Vol. 16, p. 624.
Page me41.68
†a Marx cites Dana's letter in Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 323-24.
Page me41.69
†a See this volume, p. 42.
Page me41.69
†b ibid., p. 44.
Page me41.69
†c Wroclaw
Page me41.70
†a Max Joseph Becker
Page me41.71
†a Étienne Marilley
Page me41.71
†b 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung' and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht'. National-Zeitung, No. 37, 22 January 1860, and No. 41, 25 January 1860.
Page me41.71
†c [K. Abel,] 'The Journalistic Auxiliaries of Austria', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1439, 6 February 1860.
Page me41.72
†a police spy
Page me41.73
†a See this volume, p. 45.
Page me41.73
†b ibid., p. 83.
Page me41.74
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.74
†b W. Hirsch, 'Die Opfer der Moucharderie', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6; 1, 8, 15 and 22 April 1853.
Page me41.75
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Daily Telegraph'.
Page me41.77
†a Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me41.77

†b J.M. Weber
Page me41.77
†c See this volume, p. 34.
Page me41.77
†d Georg Müller
Page me41.77
†e Josef Valentin Weber
Page me41.78
†a See this volume, p. 77.
Page me41.78
†b The Daily Telegraph
Page me41.78
†c J.M. Weber
Page me41.79
†a Hermann Becker
Page me41.79
†b Marx wrote under the date: 'Enclosed in the letter to my wife. To Muzembini, under the above date, as follows:'
Page me41.79
†c C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung.
Page me41.80
†a [K. Eichhoff,] 'Stieber', Hermann, Nos. 36-38, 40, 42, 43; 10, 17, 24 September, 8, 22, 29 October 1859.
Page me41.81
†a guilt
Page me41.81
†b That is all.
Page me41.81
†c first
Page me41.81
†d A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me41.82
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, [Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press].
Page me41.82
†b See present edition, Vol. 11, p. 433.
Page me41.83
†a J.M. Weber
Page me41.83
†b 17 November 1852
Page me41.83
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, [Public Statement to the Editors of the English Press].
Page me41.83
†d Marx's Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me41.83
†e See present edition, Vol. 39.
Page me41.83

†f K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.84
†a F. Freiligrath, 'An Josef Weydemeyer', Zwei poetische Episteln. Epistel 1.
Page me41.84
†b Either, or.
Page me41.84
†c Report of Committee on the Operation and Effects of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act 1854. Evidence, Appendix and Index, London, 1860.
Page me41.84
†d K. Marx, 'A Traitor in Circassia', 'A Curious Piece of History' and 'Another Strange Chapter of Modern History'.
Page me41.85
†a Paula-Kröcher
Page me41.85
†b See this volume, pp. 31-32 and 37.
Page me41.85
†c K. Blind, 'Gegen Karl Vogt', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 44 (supplement), 13 February 1860.
Page me41.85
†d Ch. Schaible, 'The Vogt Pamphlet. To the Editor of The Daily Telegraph', The Daily Telegraph, No. 1447, 15 February 1860.
Page me41.86
†a K. Marx, 'Prosecution of the Augsburg Gazette'.
Page me41.86
†b K. Blind's statements in the Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 313 and 345, 9 November and 11 December 1859.
Page me41.87
†a K. Blind, 'Gegen Karl Vogt', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 44 (supplement), 13 February 1860.
Page me41.87
†b Zur Warnung
Page me41.87
†c See this volume, pp. 60-61.
Page me41.87
†d An allusion to Freiligrath's poem 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me41.87
†e Cf. Judges, 16:9
Page me41.87
†f This refers to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.
Page me41.88
†a Presumably Helene Demuth.
Page me41.88
†b Re
Page me41.88
†c 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung' and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, Nos. 37 and 41, 22 and 25 January 1860.

Page me41.88
†d 'haughty gesture'
Page me41.89
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.89
†b three constitute a panel
Page me41.89
†c See this volume, p. 58.
Page me41.89
†d right before your very eyes
Page me41.89
†e See Marx's letters to Lassalle, one written not before 2 October and the other on 6 November 1859, present edition, Vol. 40, pp. 497-98, 518-22.
Page me41.89
†f C. Vogt, Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas, Geneva and Berne, 1859.
Page me41.89
†g A. Willich, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”'. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nos. 33 and 34, 28 October and 4 November 1853.
Page me41.89
†h J. Weydemeyer, A. Cluss, A. Jacoby, 'An die Redaction der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung'. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 37, 25 November 1853.
Page me41.90
†a Adolf Cluss
Page me41.90
†b Hence Wiss's tears (an allusion to a phrase in Terence's Andria, I, 1, 99).
Page me41.90
†c G. Wiss, Die elementaren Richtungen der Zeit. In: Republik der Arbeiter, Nos. 12-22 and 24, 18 and 25 March; 1, 8, 15, 22 and 29 April; 6, 13, 20 and 27 May; 10 June 1854.
Page me41.90
†d See this volume, p. 58.
Page me41.90
†e ibid.
Page me41.90
†f Hermann Becker
Page me41.90
†g [A.H. Ewerbeck,] 'Bakunin', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 36, 6 July 1848.
Page me41.91
†a M. Bakunin, 'Erklärung', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 47 (supplement), 16 July 1848.
Page me41.91
†b Editorial statement in the column 'Französische Republik', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 64, 3 August 1848.
Page me41.91

†c See this volume, p. 58.
Page me41.91
†d ibid.
Page me41.92
†a C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.92
†b 'blameless in life and clear of offence' (Horace, Odes, I, xxii, 1)
Page me41.92
†c The Daily Telegraph
Page me41.92
†d See this volume, p. 95.
Page me41.92
†e ibid., pp. 40-45.
Page me41.92
†f ibid., pp. 59-75.
Page me41.92
†g Re IV, Concerning
Page me41.93
†a Karl Schneider II
Page me41.93
†b See this volume, p. 78.
Page me41.94
†a See present edition, Vol. 39, p. 222.
Page me41.94
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, [Statement on Resignation from the German Workers' Educational Society in London],
Page me41.94
†c Deutsche-Londoner Zeitung
Page me41.95
†a See this volume, p. 75.
Page me41.95
†b ibid., pp. 59, 73 and 83.
Page me41.95
†c See Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 320.
Page me41.95
†d ibid., p. 322.
Page me41.95
†e ibid., pp. 320-21.
Page me41.95
†f ibid., p. 323.
Page me41.95
†g ibid., p. 315.
Page me41.95
†h Charles Dana
Page me41.95
†i See Vol. 17, pp. 323-24.

Page me41.96
†a Marx means his Herr Vogt.
Page me41.96
†b President of the Bar
Page me41.96
†c See this volume, p. 69.
Page me41.96
†d See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 75-99.
Page me41.96
†e Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.96
†f Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politischökonomische Revue
Page me41.97
†a bad faith
Page me41.97
†b See present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 485-87.
Page me41.97
†c Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me41.97
†d K. Marx, The Knight of the Noble Consciousness, present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 489-96.
Page me41.98
†a G. Kinkel, 'Denkschrift über das deutsche Nationalanlehn zur Förderung der Revolution', New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung, 2 March 1852.
Page me41.98
†b A. Willich, 'Doctor Karl Marx und seine “Enthüllungen”', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nos. 33 and 34, 28 October and 4 November 1853.
Page me41.98
†c This presumably refers to the following articles: K. Marx, 'The Berlin National-Zeitung to the Primary Electors', K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Speech from the Throne', and F. Engels, 'The Debate on the Law on Posters'.
Page me41.99
†a in his article 'Doctor Karl Marx and seine “Enthüllungen”'
Page me41.99
†b J. Weydemeyer, A. Cluss, A. Jacoby, 'An die Redaction der New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung. 7. November 1853', Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, No. 37, 25 November 1853.
Page me41.99
†c See this volume, pp. 115-16.
Page me41.100
†a See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 104.
Page me41.100
†b K. Marx, 'The March Association'.
Page me41.101
†a The Holy Family, or Critique of Critical Criticism

Page me41.101
†b The Poverty of Philosophy
Page me41.101
†c 'Speech on the Question of Free Trade'
Page me41.101
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, The German Ideology.
Page me41.102
†a Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me41.103
†a Lord Palmerston
Page me41.103
†b See present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 504-05.
Page me41.104
†a See this volume, p. 49.
Page me41.104
†b The Daily Telegraph
Page me41.104
†c See this volume, pp. 31-32 and 37.
Page me41.104
†d Blind's statements in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 313, 9 November 1859 and No. 345 (supplement), 11 December 1859.
Page me41.105
†a See also Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 187.
Page me41.105
†b member of the Council of Cantons (the Second Chamber of the Swiss Parliament)
Page me41.106
†a B. Szemere, La Question hongroise (1848-1860), Paris, 1860. See also this volume, p. 6.
Page me41.106
†b review
Page me41.106
†c K. Marx, 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'. See also this volume, p. 12.
Page me41.106
†d National-Zeitung and The Daily Telegraph
Page me41.106
†e C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.106
†f A. Williams, an alias used by Marx in some of his letters.
Page me41.107
†a See this volume, p. 102.
Page me41.107
†b Marx quotes the letter in Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 320-21.
Page me41.108
†a A slip of the pen in the original: February.
Page me41.108

†b F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.108
†c G. Behrend
Page me41.108
†d See this volume, pp. 116-17.
Page me41.108
†e by Marx
Page me41.108
†f See this volume, p. 88.
Page me41.109
†a Polish name: Wroclaw.
Page me41.109
†b Ever yours
Page me41.109
†c kept man
Page me41.110
†a A letter from Charles Dana. See this volume, p. 68.
Page me41.110
†b K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.110
†c Marx quotes it in Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 60-63.
Page me41.111
†a See this volume, pp. 53, 59-76, 92-104.
Page me41.111
†b B. Szemere, La Question hongroise (1848-1860), Paris, 1860.
Page me41.111
†c Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.111
†d See this volume, pp. 125-26.
Page me41.111
†e Things are going well.
Page me41.112
†a Roesgen
Page me41.112
†b Ermen
Page me41.112
†c F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.112
†d See this volume, pp. 113-14, 133.
Page me41.112
†e ibid., p. 92.
Page me41.112
†f Lassalle
Page me41.113
†a See previous letter.
Page me41.113

†b F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.113
†c 11 April
Page me41.113
†d Hermann, 7 April 1860.
Page me41.114
†a Presumably the Deutsche Zeitung.
Page me41.114
†b C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung.
Page me41.114
†c Mr
Page me41.115
†a See Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 82-83.
Page me41.115
†b Herr Vogt
Page me41.115
†c [G. Lommel,] Hinter den Coulissen, Geneva and New York, 1859.
Page me41.116
†a J.M. Weber
Page me41.116
†b See this volume, pp. 108-09.
Page me41.117
†a Stimme des Volkes
Page me41.117
†b See this volume, pp. 115-16, 118-19.
Page me41.117
†c Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen
Page me41.117
†d Herr Vogt
Page me41.119
†a Die Tägliche Illinois Staats-Zeitung
Page me41.119
†b K. Marx, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration', 6 February 1860.
Page me41.119
†c C. Vogt, Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.119
†d 'Karl Vogt und die Allgemeine Zeitung' and 'Wie man radikale Flugblätter macht', National-Zeitung, Nos. 37 and 41, 22 and 25 January 1860.
Page me41.119
†e See this volume, pp. 40-45 and 59-76.
Page me41.119
†f Herr Vogt
Page me41.120
†a An alias used by Marx in some of his letters.
Page me41.121
†a Roesgen

Page me41.121
†b Ermen
Page me41.121
†c First
Page me41.121
†d Julius Reuter. A list of persons presented to Queen Victoria on 28 March 1860, was published in The Times, No. 23580, 29 March 1860.
Page me41.121
†e Victoria
Page me41.122
†a 'to encourage the others'
Page me41.122
†b [C. Siebel,] Religion und Liebe. Roman aus dem Tagebuche eines Anonymen, Hamburg, 1860.
Page me41.122
†c See this volume, pp. 110-11.
Page me41.122
†a See this volume, pp. 118-19.
Page me41.123
†b J.M. Weber
Page me41.123
†c See previous letter.
Page me41.124
†a Lassalle, Fichte's politisches Vermächtniss und die neueste Gegenwart.
Page me41.124
†b Demokratische Studien
Page me41.124
†c Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.124
†d Das System der erworbenen Rechte
Page me41.124
†e Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.124
†f Papers relating to proposed Annexation of Savoy and Nice to France and memorial on the relations between Switzerland and Savoy as a Neutral, London, 1860.
Page me41.124
†g Marx uses the dialectal form 'öklig' for 'eklig'.
Page me41.125
†a Herr Vogt
Page me41.125
†b See this volume, p. 111.
Page me41.125
†c 'Kossuth and Louis Napoleon'
Page me41.125
†d 'Particulars of Kossuth's Transaction with Louis Napoleon'
Page me41.126

†a See this volume, p. 123.
Page me41.126
†b [G. Lommel,] Hinter den Coulissen.
Page me41.127
†a Presumably the Strassburger Korrespondent für West- und Mitteleuropa.
Page me41.128
†a Obviously the letter of 13 April 1860, see this volume, pp. 122-23.
Page me41.129
†a See this volume, p. 134.
Page me41.129
†b ibid., p. 123.
Page me41.129
†c Gottfried Becker
Page me41.130
†a Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.130
†b Strassburger Korrespondent für West- und Mitteleuropa
Page me41.130
†c See also Marx's article 'Garibaldi in Sicily. — Affairs in Prussia'. present edition, Vol. 17, p. 385.
Page me41.131
†a Briefe von Alexander von Humboldt an Varnhagen von Ense aus den Jahren 1827 bis 1858, Leipzig, 1860.
Page me41.131
†b See this volume, p. 116.
Page me41.131
†c Schwarck
Page me41.131
†d Herr Vogt
Page me41.131
†e Carl Siebel
Page me41.131
†f Julius Faucher
Page me41.133
†a See this volume, p. 113.
Page me41.133
†b B. Szemere, La Question hongroise (1848-1860), Paris, 1860.
Page me41.134
†a See this volume, p. 129.
Page me41.134
†b Charles Roesgen
Page me41.134
†c 'wholly patriotic enterprise'. We shall see.
Page me41.134
†d Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.134

†e What should we do?
Page me41.134
†f Gottfried Ermen
Page me41.135
†a Marx quoted Bermbach's letter in his letter to Engels of 20 July 1852. See present edition, Vol. 39, pp. 134-35.
Page me41.135
†b Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.135
†c wholly patriotic mission
Page me41.136
†a 11 May
Page me41.136
†b See this volume, pp. 131-32.
Page me41.137
†a Marx's note to the copy of the letter in his notebook.
Page me41.137
†b Emil Engels
Page me41.138
†a [K. Grün,] Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, die Sphinx auf dem französischen Kaiserthron, Hamburg, 1860.
Page me41.139
†a See this volume, p. 129.
Page me41.139
†b K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.139
†c safe and sound
Page me41.139
†d [K. Grün,] Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, die Sphinx auf dem französischen Kaiserthron, Hamburg, 1860.
Page me41.140
†a Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me41.140
†b Reports on the Communist trial in Cologne were published in the Könische Zeitung from 5 October to 13 November 1852, under the title 'Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes'.
Page me41.140
†c Reports on the Cologne Communist trial were published in the Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen (Vossische Zeitung) from 6 October to 16 November 1852, under the title 'Die Verhandlungen des grossen Kommunistenprozess vor dem Assisenhofe zu Köln.
Page me41.140
†d Göbel
Page me41.141
†a evil intent
Page me41.141

†b Lassalle's letter to Marx of 24 May 1860 suggesting that Marx should testify at Eichhoff's trial in Berlin. For Marx's reply see this volume, pp. 145-55.
Page me41.142
†a Ferdinand Lassalle's letter
Page me41.142
†b See this volume, p. 141.
Page me41.142
†c As regards
Page me41.142
†d i.e. Lassalle. An allusion to his book Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me41.143
†a Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.143
†b toads. Engels means the French philistines.
Page me41.143
†c 26 May
Page me41.144
†a See this volume, p. 137
Page me41.144
†b Re
Page me41.144
†c Schwarck
Page me41.144
†d Lippe
Page me41.144
†e See this volume, pp. 129, 131.
Page me41.144
†f Victoria. See this volume, p. 121.
Page me41.144
†g Maupas
Page me41.144
†h police spy
Page me41.144
†i the Crimean war (1853-56)
Page me41.145
†a Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.145
†b G. Behrend
Page me41.145
†c Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.145
†d Reports on the Cologne Communist trial were published by the Kölnische Zeitung in October and November 1852 under the heading 'Assisen-Procedur gegen D. Herm. Becker und Genossen. Anklage wegen hochverrätherischen Complottes'.
Page me41.145

†e Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me41.146
†a police spy
Page me41.146
†b See present edition, Vol. 11, p. 405.
Page me41.147
†a See present edition, Vol. 11, p. 406.
Page me41.148
†a See present edition, Vol. 11, p. 418.
Page me41.150
†a See present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 427-29.
Page me41.151
†a too late
Page me41.152
†a in good faith
Page me41.152
†b See this volume, pp. 136-37, 141-45.
Page me41.152
†c Lord Palmerston
Page me41.152
†d Presumably that of The Free Press.
Page me41.153
†a Ernst II
Page me41.153
†b indirectly
Page me41.154
†a William, Prince of Prussia
Page me41.155
†a See previous letter.
Page me41.155
†b manuscript damaged
Page me41.155
†c Savoy, Nice and the Rhine
Page me41.155
†d Herr Vogt
Page me41.155
†e 6 June
Page me41.155
†f On about 7 June, Engels wrote the article 'Garibaldi in Sicily'.
Page me41.156
†a Moses Hess
Page me41.156
†b See this volume, p. 134.
Page me41.156
†c La Question hongroise (1848-1860), Paris, 1860.
Page me41.157

†a An alias used by Marx in some of his letters.
Page me41.157
†b See this volume, p. 111.
Page me41.158
†a 18 June
Page me41.158
†b See this volume, p. 155.
Page me41.158
†c by goods
Page me41.159
†a Marx means Ed. About's pamphlet La Prusse en 1860, Paris, 1860.
Page me41.159
†b More than enough!
Page me41.159
†c William, Prince of Prussia
Page me41.160
†a Friend
Page me41.160
†b See this volume, p. 159.
Page me41.160
†c La Prusse en 1860, Paris, 1860.
Page me41.160
†d Epic songs. Engels presumably refers to [Syv, P.,] Et Hundrede udvalde Danske Viser, om allehaande Krigs-Bedrivd og anden selsom Eventyr, som sig her udi Riget ved gamle Kæmper, navnkundige Konger, og ellers fornemme Personer begivet haver, af Arilds Tid til denne Dag..., Kiøbenhavn, 1787.
Page me41.162
†a Herr Oluf fares both far and wide,
To fetch the wedding-guests he doth ride.
Maidens dance on the green land,
Page me41.162
Four and five, a blithe band.
The Elf King's daughter gives him her hand.
Welcome, Herr Oluf, why wouldst thou flee?
Step into the ring and dance with me.
Page me41.162
But dance I neither will nor may,
Tomorrow dawns my wedding day.
Oh list, Herr Oluf, come dance with me,
Two buckskin boots I'll give to thee.
Page me41.162
Two buckskin boots to fit you well,
Two gilded spurs for a magic spell.
Page me41.162
But dance I neither will nor may, etc.
Page me41.162

Oh list, Herr Oluf, come dance with me,
A silken shirt I'll give to thee.
Page me41.162
A shirt all shining white so fine.
My mother bleached it with pale moonshine.
Page me41.162
But dance I neither will nor may, etc.
Page me41.162
Oh list, Herr Oluf, come dance with me,
A pile of gold I'll give to thee.
Page me41.162
Gladly I'd take your gold away,
But dance I neither dare nor may.
Page me41.162
An thou, Herr Oluf, dance not with me,
Sickness and plague shall follow thee.
Page me41.162
And then she touched him on the chest.
Never such pain had clutched his breast.
Page me41.162
She helps him, half-swooning, his mount to bestride:
Now get thee hence to thy fair bride.
Page me41.162
As to his own door he drew near,
His mother was trembling there with fear.
Page me41.162
Tell me quickly, oh quickly, my son,
Why are thy looks so pale and wan?
Page me41.162
How should they not be pale and wan?
'Tis from the Elf King's realm I come.
Page me41.162
Oh list, dear son I love so well,
What to your bride am I to tell?
Page me41.162
Say to the forest I am bound,
To exercise my horse and hound.
Page me41.162
Next morning, when it was scarcely day,
There came the bride with her company.
Page me41.162
They poured the mead, they poured the wine.
Where is Herr Oluf, bridegroom mine?

Footnote Page Break 163
Page me41.163

He's ridden hence, for the forest bound,
To exercise his horse and hound.
Page me41.163
The bride uplifted the scarlet red.
There lay Herr Oluf, and he was dead.
(Translated by Alex Miller)
Page me41.163
†a See this volume, p. 375.
Page me41.163
†b In the manuscript, mistakenly: January.
Page me41.163
†c Marx quotes an extract from Ranickel's letter to Schily in Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 55.
Page me41.163
†d Eduard Fischel
Page me41.164
†a Probably Fischel.
Page me41.164
†b Ed. About, La Prusse en 1860.
Page me41.164
†c 21 and 22 June
Page me41.165
†a In the manuscript, mistakenly: July.
Page me41.165
†b Ferdinand Wolff
Page me41.165
†c Lina Schöler
Page me41.165
†d 29 or 30 June
Page me41.165
†e See this volume, p. 168.
Page me41.165
†f in his Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas, Geneva and Berne, 1859
Page me41.166
†a The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me41.166
†b Pro domo (or de domo sua) — on behalf of myself, concerning my own affairs. The phrase derives from a speech by Cicero, 'De domo sua ad pontifices'.
Page me41.166
†c in the Schweizer Handels-Courier, No. 162 (extraordinary supplement), 16 June 1859
Page me41.166
†d Presumably the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.
Page me41.166
†e [E. Biscamp,] 'Der Reichsregent', Das Volk, No. 2, 14 May 1859.
Page me41.166

†f Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.166
†g That's all.
Page me41.167
†a See this volume, p. 164.
Page me41.168
†a See this volume, p. 165.
Page me41.168
†b Karl Emil Blank
Page me41.168
†c See this volume, p. 167.
Page me41.168
†d ibid., p. 165.
Page me41.168
†e In short
Page me41.169
†a Not bad, that.
Page me41.169
†b See previous letter.
Page me41.169
†c Engels' Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.170
†a F. Engels, 'The British Volunteer Force'.
Page me41.170
†b K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.170
†c See this volume, p. 112.
Page me41.170
†d ibid., p. 165.
Page me41.171
†a Marx means his Herr Vogt.
Page me41.171
†b See this volume, pp. 165, 168, 170.
Page me41.171
†c in Vogt's Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas
Page me41.171
†d the Crimean war (1853-56)
Page me41.172
†a See this volume, pp. 155, 158.
Page me41.172
†b Hampstead Heath
Page me41.173
†a Palmerston's speech in the House of Commons on 23 July 1860 (The Times, No. 23680, 24 July 1860).
Page me41.173
†b 25 July

Page me41.173
†c About 24 July, Engels wrote the article 'British Defences'.
Page me41.173
†d F. Engels, 'British Defences'.
Page me41.173
†e Engels means Kinglake's speech in the House of Commons on 12 July 1860 on Napoleon III's policy vis-á-vis Italy (The Times, No. 23671, 13 July 1860).
Page me41.173
†f William, Prince of Prussia
Page me41.173
†g poor
Page me41.175
†a F. Engels, 'British Defences'.
Page me41.175
†b Report of the Commissioners appointed to consider the Defences of the United Kingdom; together with the Minutes of Evidence and Appendix; also Correspondence relative to a Site for an Internal Arsenal, London, 1860.
Page me41.175
†c 'Mr. Urquhart on the Invasion of England', The Free Press, Vol. VIII, No. 7, 4 July 1860.
Page me41.175
†d See this volume, p. 173.
Page me41.175
†e Le Moniteur universel, No. 197, 15 July 1860.
Page me41.176
†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.177
†a at all costs
Page me41.177
†b K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.177
†c Engels wrote the article 'Garibaldi's Movements'.
Page me41.178
†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.178
†b In the original: 'öklich' instead of 'ekelig'.
Page me41.178
†c 8 August. Engels wrote the article 'Garibaldi's Movements'.
Page me41.179
†a 'The Sick Man of Austria'
Page me41.179
†b for better or worse
Page me41.179
†c slowly but surely
Page me41.179
†d Herr Vogt

Page me41.179
†e Reinhilde von Hurter
Page me41.180
†a See this volume, p. 178.
Page me41.181
†a Marx means his book, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.183
†a Stimme des Volkes
Page me41.183
†b Julius Standau
Page me41.183
†c See this volume, p. 172.
Page me41.184
†a J.M. Weber
Page me41.184
†b See this volume, pp. 23, 42, 59-63.
Page me41.184
†c See previous letter.
Page me41.185
†a 'Garibaldi's Progress'
Page me41.185
†b Sibylle Hess
Page me41.185
†c See this volume, p. 71.
Page me41.185
†d See previous letter.
Page me41.186
†a Herr Vogt
Page me41.186
†b Lippe
Page me41.186
†c Schwarck
Page me41.187
†a Mein Prozess gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.188
†a like dirt
Page me41.188
†b 15 September
Page me41.188
†c See this volume, pp. 182-83.
Page me41.189
†a K.W. Eichhoff, Berliner Polizei-Silhouetten, Berlin, 1860.
Page me41.189
†b William, Prince of Prussia
Page me41.189
†c Bessel and Knorsch

Page me41.189
†d Herr Vogt
Page me41.190
†a See this volume, p. 187.
Page me41.190
†b ibid., pp. 192-94.
Page me41.190
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me41.190
†d See this volume, p. 184.
Page me41.190
†e Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me41.190
†f K.W. Eichhoff, Berliner Polizei-Silhouetten, Berlin, 1860.
Page me41.191
†a See this volume, p. 171.
Page me41.191
†b who knows?
Page me41.191
†c Herr Vogt
Page me41.191
†d In partibus (infidelium) means, literally, in parts inhabited by unbelievers. The words are added to the title of Roman Catholic bishops appointed to purely nominal dioceses in non-Christian countries. Here they mean 'outside the sphere of reality'.
Page me41.191
†e F. Engels, 'Eine Musterung englischer freiwilliger Jäger'.
Page me41.191
†f F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung'.
Page me41.191
†g The translation was made by Engels himself, with minor alterations. It appeared under the title 'A German Account of the Newton Review' in The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire, No. 2, 14 September 1860.
Page me41.192
†a See this volume, p. 189.
Page me41.192
†b inanity
Page me41.192
†c Bürgers (see this volume, p. 189).
Page me41.192
†d See this volume, p. 195.
Page me41.192
†e K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.193
†a See this volume, p. 171.
Page me41.193
†b ibid.

Page me41.193
†c draft
Page me41.193
†d A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me41.194
†a As regards
Page me41.194
†b [H. Bürgers,] 'Hr. v. Ladenberg und die Volksschullehrer', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 182, 30 December 1848.
Page me41.194
†c Wilhelm Wolff
Page me41.195
†a From Ferdinand Freiligrath
Page me41.195
†b K.W. Eichhoff, Berliner Polizei-Silhouetten
Page me41.195
†c 22 September
Page me41.196
†a Five will also do
Page me41.196
†b See this volume, p. 195.
Page me41.196
†c as regards
Page me41.196
†d K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.197
†a William, Prince of Prussia
Page me41.197
†b [S.L. Borkheim,] Napoleon III und Preussen, London, 1860.
Page me41.197
†c What do you think?
Page me41.197
†d F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me41.197
†e F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.198
†a C. Vogt, Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas.
Page me41.198
†b See this volume, pp. 195, 196, 201.
Page me41.198
†c ibid., p. 196.
Page me41.198
†d As regards
Page me41.198
†e See previous letter.
Page me41.199

†a You'll see.
Page me41.199
†b See this volume, p. 191.
Page me41.199
†c Engels means the size of the article on the navy that Marx requested him to write (see this volume, p. 196).
Page me41.200
†a last resort
Page me41.200
†b [Friedrich Karl, Prinz,] Eine militärische Denkschrift, Frankfurt am Main, 1860.
Page me41.200
†c F.G. Waldersee, Die Methode zur kriegsgemäßen Ausbildung der Infanterie für das zerstreute Gefecht..., Zweite Auflage, Berlin, 1852.
Page me41.201
†a See this volume, pp. 195, 196, 198.
Page me41.201
†b ibid., pp. 196, 199.
Page me41.201
†c ibid., p. 199.
Page me41.201
†d K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.202
†a See this volume, p. 84.
Page me41.202
†b Marx apparently means his wife Jenny.
Page me41.202
†c See this volume, pp. 237, 246.
Page me41.202
†d The Times, No. 23739, 1 October 1860, leading article.
Page me41.203
†a 'A Review of English Volunteer Riflemen'
Page me41.203
†b Money down the drain
Page me41.203
†c 'A Review of English Volunteer Riflemen'
Page me41.204
†a soldiers
Page me41.204
†b of the pamphlet Herr Vogt
Page me41.204
†c K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.205
†a See this volume, pp. 83, 202.
Page me41.205
†b father

Page me41.205
†c See this volume, p. 389.
Page me41.205
†d Gallant king (Victor Emmanuel II)
Page me41.205
†e 'A Review of English Volunteer Riflemen'
Page me41.205
†f The Volunteer Journal, for Lancashire and Cheshire
Page me41.206
†a 'A German Account of the Volunteers', The Times, No. 23733, 24 September 1860.
Page me41.206
†b Reinhilde von Hurter.
Page me41.206
†c [A. Kolatschek,] 'Die Juchheisten' in Stimmen der Zeit, October 1860.
Page me41.206
†d 13 October
Page me41.206
†e A. Brass, Was Noth ist, Geneva, 1860.
Page me41.207
†a of Herr Vogt
Page me41.208
†a See previous letter.
Page me41.208
†b K. Marx's Herr Vogt.
Page me41.208
†c See this volume, pp. 206, 212.
Page me41.208
†d In the original: 'öklich' instead of 'eklig'.
Page me41.208
†e See this volume, pp. 196, 198.
Page me41.209
†a See previous letter.
Page me41.209
†b K. Marx's Herr Vogt.
Page me41.209
†c See this volume, pp. 207-08.
Page me41.209
†d See Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 259-95.
Page me41.210
†a 3 November 1860
Page me41.210
†b Franz Duncker and Ludmilla Assing
Page me41.210
†c Herr Vogt
Page me41.211

†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.211
†b See this volume, pp. 207-08.
Page me41.211
†c See Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 259-95.
Page me41.211
†d Charles Roesgen
Page me41.211
†e [G. Lommel,] Hinter den Coulissen, Geneva and New York, 1859.
Page me41.211
†f Firstly
Page me41.212
†a [L. Bamberger,] Juchhe nach Italia!, Berne and Geneva, 1859.
Page me41.212
†b L. Bamberger, 'Des Michael Pro Schriftenwechsel mit Thomas Contra, aus dem Jahr 1859', Demokratische Studien, Hamburg, 1860.
Page me41.213
†a See this volume, p. 212.
Page me41.213
†b 21 November
Page me41.213
†c Poor devil!
Page me41.214
†a 19 November
Page me41.214
†b nervous fever
Page me41.215
†a [E. Biscamp,] 'Die politischen Emigrationen und die Tuilerien', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 312 (supplement), 7 November 1860.
Page me41.215
†b Po and Rhine
Page me41.215
†c Probably W. Schily
Page me41.216
†a F. Engels, 'Navy'.
Page me41.216
†b about everything under the sun
Page me41.216
†c See this volume, p. 213.
Page me41.217
†a K. Marx, Declaration, 24 November 1860.
Page me41.217
†b Herr Vogt
Page me41.218
†a The advertisement appeared in the Athenaeum on 24 November and in the Hermann on 1 December 1860.

Page me41.218
†b Given below is the text of Marx's declaration published in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 336 (supplement), 1 December 1860.
Page me41.218
†c K. Marx, 'To the Editors of the Volks-Zeitung. Declaration'.
Page me41.219
†a Lippe
Page me41.219
†b Schwarck
Page me41.220
†a See this volume, p. 196.
Page me41.220
†b Henriette Marx
Page me41.220
†c Johann Jakob Conradi (married Marx's sister, Emilie).
Page me41.221
†a 30 November
Page me41.222
†a See this volume, p. 220.
Page me41.222
†b 30 November
Page me41.222
†c See this volume, p. 223.
Page me41.222
†d K. Marx's Herr Vogt.
Page me41.222
†e it's annihilating
Page me41.223
†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.223
†b plainly and visibly
Page me41.224
†a 8 December
Page me41.224
†b In the original: 'öklüchen' instead of 'ekeligen'.
Page me41.224
†c See this volume, pp. 214, 216.
Page me41.224
†d Eleanor Marx
Page me41.224
†e 29 November
Page me41.225
†a See this volume, p. 222.
Page me41.225
†b Herr Vogt
Page me41.225

†c the ever busy spy
Page me41.225
†d J. Fischart, Affentheurliche, Naupengeheurliche Geschichtklitterung, Ch. 3, p. 68.
Page me41.226
†a F. Freiligrath, Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London.
Page me41.226
†b Hence
Page me41.227
†a Advertisements about the publication of Herr Vogt appeared in the Börsenblatt für den deutschen Buchhandel, Nos. 150, 151 and 153; 5, 7 and 12 December 1860.
Page me41.227
†b the great
Page me41.227
†c Reference is to Chapter XI of Herr Vogt.
Page me41.227
†d Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me41.227
†e Königsberger Hartungsche Zeitung
Page me41.227
†f Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Page me41.227
†g Marx apparently means the Süddeutsche Zeitung.
Page me41.227
†h Wochenschrift des Nationalvereins
Page me41.228
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me41.228
†b See K. Marx's Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 328-29, and this volume, pp. 234-35.
Page me41.228
†c Karl Emil Blank
Page me41.229
†a Engels wrote 'Austria — Progress of the Revolution'
Page me41.229
†b 22 December
Page me41.229
†c outside of his own country
Page me41.229
†d B. Szemere, La Question hongroise (1848-1860), Paris, 1860.
Page me41.229
†e See this volume, p. 230.
Page me41.230
†a 23 December
Page me41.230

†b See this volume, p. 229.
Page me41.231
†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.231
†b See this volume, p. 228.
Page me41.231
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me41.232
†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.232
†b known
Page me41.232
†c police spy
Page me41.232
†d common police spy
Page me41.232
†e district in London
Page me41.232
†f Ch. Darwin, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life, London, 1859.
Page me41.233
†a See this volume, pp. 234-35.
Page me41.233
†b F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte, Leipzig, 1861.
Page me41.233
†c See this volume, p. 226.
Page me41.233
†d The nickname 'student' dates back to 1847, when Blind's name figured in the press in connection with the revolutionary movement.
Page me41.233
†e K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.234
†a Genfer Grenzpost, No. 12, 22 December 1860.
Page me41.234
†b In the original the dialectal form 'ooch jar keene nicht'.
Page me41.234
†c Die Reform, Nos. 148, 150 and 152, 10, 15 and 19 December 1860.
Page me41.234
†d we shall see
Page me41.234
†e See this volume, pp. 228, 233.
Page me41.235
†a Maximilien Koenigswarter
Page me41.235
†b Ed. About, La Prusse en 1860, Paris, 1860.
Page me41.235

†c Senior
Page me41.235
†d See this volume, p. 226.
Page me41.235
†e F. Freiligrath, Zur Schillerfeier. 10, November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London.
Page me41.236
†a own hearth
Page me41.236
†b In the original, 'Holland in Not' (Holland in trouble) — a phrase, dating back to the Netherlands' war of liberation against Spanish oppression (1572-1609).
Page me41.236
†c Hence these tears (Terence, Andria, I, 1, 99).
Page me41.236
†d See this volume, p. 226.
Page me41.236
†e above all
Page me41.236
†f K. Blind, Schiller. A Sketch of His Career and Works, London, 1859.
Page me41.237
†a G. Kinkel, Festrede bei der Schillerfeier im Krystallpalast, London, 1859.
Page me41.237
†b F. Freiligrath, Zur Schillerfeier. 10. November 1859. Festlied der Deutschen in London.
Page me41.237
†c F. Engels, 'Austria — Progress of the Revolution'.
Page me41.237
†d F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me41.237
†e F. Engels, Savoy, Nice and the Rhine.
Page me41.238
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.238
†b K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.238
†c Marx refers to Eduard Meyen comparing him to Punch's dog. Punch is one of the main characters in the traditional English puppet-show, Punch and Judy, from which the famous comic journal takes its name. On this, see also K. Marx, Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 239.
Page me41.238
†d Frederick William IV
Page me41.238
†e What do you think of it?
Page me41.238
†f See this volume, p. 240.
Page me41.239

†a Johann Carel (Jaan Carel) and Louise Juta
Page me41.239
†b in the know
Page me41.239
†c Long live the sequel!
Page me41.240
†a Louis Borchardt, Eduard Gumpert and Martin Heckscher
Page me41.240
†b See present edition, Vol. 17, p. 119 and also this volume, p. 68.
Page me41.241
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.241
†b Kölnische Zeitung, No. 341, 8 December 1860.
Page me41.241
†c Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 1, 1 January 1861.
Page me41.241
†d Kölnische Zeitung
Page me41.241
†e [King William I's speech to a deputation of Berlin municipal officers on his ascension to the throne,] Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 5, 5 January 1861.
Page me41.241
†f Engels has 'Vogel Greif', which means both 'bird Greif' (a personal name), and 'bird griffin'.
Page me41.241
†g Neue Preussische Zeitung, No. 2, 3 January 1861.
Page me41.241
†h 'Heidelberg, 21. December', Wochenschrift des Nationalvereins, No. 35, 28 December 1860.
Page me41.242
†a K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.242
†b Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel, Nos. 150, 151 and 153, 5, 7, and 12 December 1860.
Page me41.243
†a Die Reform, Nos. 148, 150 (supplement) and 152, 10, 15 and 19 December 1860.
Page me41.243
†b Publicist, Nos. 295 and 296, 15 and 16 December 1860.
Page me41.243
†c Der Freischütz, No. 150, 15 December 1860.
Page me41.243
†d Genfer Grenzpost, No. 12, 22 December 1860.
Page me41.243
†e But we shall see!
Page me41.243
†f 2 January

Page me41.243
†g pain
Page me41.244
†a hard necessity
Page me41.244
†b Marx's italics.
Page me41.244
†c That's Gottfried (Marx's remark).
Page me41.245
†a Bettziech has 'Calummie' instead of 'Calumnie'. Marx underlines the sixth letter to draw attention to the misspelling.
Page me41.245
†b First.
Page me41.245
†c Dr Eduard Gumpert
Page me41.246
†a seriously
Page me41.246
†b Ch. Darwin, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life. London, 1859.
Page me41.247
†a [L. Walesrode,] Eine politische Todtenschau, Kiel, 1859.
Page me41.248
†a Herr Vogt
Page me41.248
†b See this volume, pp. 249 and 253.
Page me41.248
†c mean
Page me41.249
†a See this volume, p. 248.
Page me41.249
†b William I
Page me41.249
†c ibid., pp. 248, 249.
Page me41.249
†d Kinkel
Page me41.250
†a Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.250
†b 26 January
Page me41.250
†c See this volume, p. 257.
Page me41.250
†d Engels wrote the article 'German Movements'.
Page me41.251
†a Sophie von Hatzfeldt

Page me41.251
†b Ever yours.
Page me41.252
†a by usage
Page me41.252
†b Eduard Meyen
Page me41.253
†a L. Bucher. [Letter to the Editor of Hermann.] In: Hermann, Nr. 108, 26. January 1861.
Page me41.253
†b See this volume, pp. 248-49.
Page me41.254
†a See this volume, p. 253.
Page me41.254
†b 31 January.
Page me41.255
†a See this volume, pp. 252, 258.
Page me41.255
†b ibid., p. 252.
Page me41.255
†c statesman
Page me41.256
†a See this volume, pp. 255, 256-57 and 258.
Page me41.257
†a Prussian Blue
Page me41.257
†b F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte, Leipzig, 1861.
Page me41.257
†c See this volume, p. 252.
Page me41.257
†d Wochenschrift des Nationalvereins
Page me41.257
†e William I
Page me41.258
†a tailor
Page me41.258
†b See this volume, pp. 255, 256-57.
Page me41.258
†c ibid., pp. 252, 255, 257.
Page me41.258
†d ibid., p. 252.
Page me41.258
†a F. Engels, The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution.
Page me41.259
†b Hermann, Emil and Rudolf.
Page me41.260

†a Emil Engels
Page me41.261
†a Engels is referring to a plot of land by the river Sieg.
Page me41.261
†b See this volume, pp. 256-58.
Page me41.261
†c in one way or another
Page me41.261
†d See this volume, pp. 252, 257.
Page me41.262
†a Johanna Mockel, Hans Ibeles in London, Stuttgart, 1860.
Page me41.262
†b See this volume, p. 255.
Page me41.262
†c Presumably the Deutsche Zeitung
Page me41.263
†a See this volume, p. 251.
Page me41.263
†b New American Cyclopaedia
Page me41.264
†a See this volume, pp. 252, 257, 261.
Page me41.264
†b 'Mazzini an Karl Blind über die Stellung Italiens zu Deutschland', Hermann, No. 112, 23 February 1861.
Page me41.265
†a See K. Marx, Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 111-32.
Page me41.265
†b The poor devil!
Page me41.265
†c 'AppiauouAppiauou AlexaudrewVAlexaudreös pwmaikapANSI2436QXmaika
Page me41.265
†d In Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost (Act 5, Scene 2) the clown Costard impersonates Pompey.
Page me41.266
†a Emil Engels
Page me41.266
†b Hermann, Emil and Rudolf
Page me41.266
†c See this volume, p. 260.
Page me41.267
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me41.267
†b Hermann Engels
Page me41.267
†c Rudolf Engels and family
Page me41.267

†d See this volume, p. 263.
Page me41.268
†a Wilhelm Robert Schmalhausen
Page me41.268
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.268
†c Literally: 'a grove from not being light'. The expression, first used by Quintilian in De institutione oratoria (I, 6, 34), illustrates the practice ascribed to ancient Roman etymologists of deriving words from their semantic opposites, as lucus ('grove') from lucere ('to shine, be light'), because a grove is not light.
Page me41.269
†a You take the point, my friend.
Page me41.269
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.269
†c Herr Vogt
Page me41.269
†d In the original: 18 March.
Page me41.270
†a clever women
Page me41.270
†b See present edition, Vol. 19, p. 339.
Page me41.270
†c William I
Page me41.270
†d See this volume, p. 288.
Page me41.271
†a horrible to say
Page me41.271
†b interlude
Page me41.271
†c war artist
Page me41.271
†d court demagogue
Page me41.271
†e Frederick William IV
Page me41.271
†f Briefe von Alexander von Humboldt an Varnhagen von Ense aus den Jahren 1827 bis 1858, Leipzig, 1860.
Page me41.271
†g See this volume, pp. 252, 257, 261.
Page me41.272
†a Zalt-Bommel
Page me41.272
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.272

†c New American Cyclopaedia
Page me41.273
†a See this volume, pp. 252, 257, 261, 271-72.
Page me41.273
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.273
†c See previous letter.
Page me41.273
†d It's awful.
Page me41.273
†e On the face of it.
Page me41.274
†a See this volume, p. 269-72.
Page me41.274
†b 'Join the dear Fatherland' (F. Schiller, Wilhelm Tell, Act II, Scene 1).
Page me41.275
†a awful
Page me41.275
†b Allusion to the sandy soil of Brandenburg province, in whose central part Berlin is situated.
Page me41.275
†c education
Page me41.275
†d its awfully witty people
Page me41.275
†e shakos
Page me41.275
†f Paraphrased refrain of an old Irish song: 'The girl I left behind me.
Page me41.275
†g Ariadne
Page me41.275
†h Henriette Sophia van Anrooij
Page me41.276
†a In the original: 1851
Page me41.276
†b Jacques Philips
Page me41.276
†c August Philips
Page me41.276
†d more or less
Page me41.277
†a 28 April 1861
Page me41.277
†b 1 May
Page me41.278
†a See this volume, p. 279.

Page me41.279
†a Your prisoner has a confession to make (Cicero, Pro Q. Ligario, paraphrased).
Page me41.279
†b extenuating circumstances
Page me41.279
†c First
Page me41.279
†d Zalt-Bommel
Page me41.279
†e Lion Philips
Page me41.280
†a K.H. Rau, Lehrbuch der politischen Oekonomie. Bd. I, Grundsätze der Volkswirthschaftslehre, Leipzig und Heidelberg, 1860.
Page me41.280
†b William I
Page me41.280
†c high politics
Page me41.280
†d Here, the French (literally — toads).
Page me41.281
†a red spectre
Page me41.281
†b See this volume, p. 252, 257, 261, 271-73.
Page me41.281
†c Here is the snag
Page me41.281
†d F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos, Berlin, 1858.
Page me41.282
†a Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.282
†b Shakespeare, Hamlet, Act III, Scene 1 (paraphrased).
Page me41.282
†c What do you think of it?
Page me41.282
†d 'Zur Auslegung des Amnestie-Erlasses vom 12. Januar 1861' (On the Interpretation of the Decree on the Amnesty of 12 January 1861), Preussische Gerichts-Zeitung, No. 26, 1 May 1861. The continuation of the article appeared in No. 30 of 15 May 1861.
Page me41.283
†a After so many vicissitudes (Virgil, Aeneid, I).
Page me41.283
†b playing the host
Page me41.283
†c Jacques Philips
Page me41.283

†d Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.283
†e law of retaliation
Page me41.283
†f Lion Philips
Page me41.283
†g Antoinette Philips
Page me41.283
†h See this volume, p. 279.
Page me41.283
†i See this volume, p. 281.
Page me41.284
†a trap
Page me41.284
†b Palmerston's speech in the House of Commons on 26 April 1861, The Times, No. 23918, 27 April 1861.
Page me41.284
†c 'Berliner Briefe', Freischütz, No. 49, 23 April 1861.
Page me41.284
†d First
Page me41.285
†a [J.K.] Rodbertus, Sociale Briefe an von Kirchmann. Dritter Brief..., Berlin, 1851.
Page me41.285
†b W. Roscher, System der Volkswirthschaft. Band I: Die Grundlagen der Nationalökonomie..., Stuttgart and Augsburg, 1858.
Page me41.285
†c False knowledge
Page me41.285
†d See this volume, p. 274.
Page me41.285
†e A monkey doesn't laugh.
Page me41.285
†f first
Page me41.286
†a Jacques Philips
Page me41.286
†b 'Mr Dunlop's Motion for a Select Committee on the Affghan Papers', The Free Press, Vol. IX, No. 4, 3 April 1861.
Page me41.286
†c with the necessary alterations
Page me41.286
†d See this volume, pp. 281, 283-84.
Page me41.286
†e saved my soul. Cf. Ezekiel 3:19, 21.
Page me41.286

†f R. Lepsius, Denkmäler aus Ägypten und Äthiopien, Bd. I-XII, Berlin, 1849-59.
Page me41.286
†g Friedrich Theodor von Frerichs
Page me41.286
†h See Luke 16: 19-31.
Page me41.286
†i Marx is referring to Lassalle.
Page me41.286
†j in accordance with his nature.
Page me41.287
†a C.F. Koeppen, Die Religion des Buddha und ihre Entstehung, Bd. 1-2, Berlin, 1857-59.
Page me41.287
†b Bernhard Wolff
Page me41.287
†c partners
Page me41.287
†d factotum
Page me41.287
†e in one way or another
Page me41.288
†a Neue Preußische Zeitung
Page me41.288
†b piece of swindling
Page me41.288
†c Bruno Bauer
Page me41.288
†d How much they have changed! (Virgil, Aeneid, ii, paraphrased.)
Page me41.288
†e doorkeeper
Page me41.289
†a a vicinity of Berlin
Page me41.289
†b Moritz von Blanckenburg
Page me41.289
†c Stierlin
Page me41.289
†d In the original a pun on the word Stuhlgang (evacuation of the bowels) and the pseudonym of Wilhelm Müller — Wolfgang Müller von Königswinter.
Page me41.289
†e All yours.
Page me41.290
†a See this volume, p. 279, 291.
Page me41.290
†b ibid., p. 15.
Page me41.290

†c 'Paris, 17. April', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 109, 19 April 1861.
Page me41.291
†a Carl Siebel
Page me41.291
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.291
†c Marx means his articles for the New-York Daily Tribune.
Page me41.291
†d See this volume, p. 290.
Page me41.291
†e ibid., pp. 252, 257, 281.
Page me41.291
†f ibid., pp. 284, 298.
Page me41.292
†a Thucydides, De bello peloponnesiaco.
Page me41.292
†b Max Friedländer
Page me41.292
†c for one's got to live
Page me41.292
†d See this volume, pp. 294-96.
Page me41.292
†e Julius Friedländer
Page me41.292
†f Polish name: Wroclaw
Page me41.293
†a F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.293
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.293
†c What do you think about it?
Page me41.294
†a Lion Philips
Page me41.296
†a In the original the words 'Virginia and Carolina' were crossed out here.
Page me41.296
†b In the original: west.
Page me41.297
†a A slip of the pen in the original: 9 June.
Page me41.297
†b 'Protokoll der Versammlung der Londoner Mitglieder des Nationalvereins am 1. Juni 1861', Hermann, No. 128, 15 June 1861.
Page me41.297
†c The meeting Marx writes about took place on Tuesday, 18 June 1861.
Page me41.297
†d by implication

Page me41.297
†e Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper
Page me41.298
†a F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.298
†b Louis Watteau
Page me41.298
†c German proletarian party (in exile). In partibus infidelium — literally: in parts inhabited by infidels. The words are added to the title of Roman Catholic bishops holding purely nominal dioceses in non-Christian countries.
Page me41.298
†d See this volume, pp. 283-84.
Page me41.299
†a ibid., pp. 294-96.
Page me41.299
†b R.S. Ripley, The War with Mexico, 2 vols., New York, 1849.
Page me41.299
†c Marx presumably refers, among others, to the article 'Salient Features of the War' in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6270, 27 May 1861.
Page me41.299
†d Palmerston
Page me41.299
†e 22 June 1861
Page me41.301
†a Abraham Lincoln
Page me41.301
†b See this volume, pp. 305-09.
Page me41.301
†c ibid., pp. 297-98.
Page me41.301
†d Marx refers to the 'Protokoll der Versammlung der Londoner Mitglieder des National vereins am 1. Juni 1861', Hermann, No. 128, 15 June 1861.
Page me41.301
†e senatorial decision
Page me41.301
†f 18 June
Page me41.301
†g 15 June. The details are contained in an editorial on the National Association meeting of 15 June 1861 in the Hermann, No. 130, 29 June 1861.
Page me41.302
†a 'no go'
Page me41.302
†b 29 June
Page me41.302
†c 'Machiavellianism of the great Gottfried'
Page me41.302

†d 'Protokoll der außerordentlichen Sitzung der Londoner Mitglieder des Deutschen Nationalvereins, abgehalten den 18. Juni 1861, in Seyd's Hotel, 39, Finsbury Sqre', Hermann, No. 130, 29 June 1861.
Page me41.302
†e A pun on the name Dralle which also means 'buxom'.
Page me41.302
†f See this volume, p. 264.
Page me41.302
†g sublime
Page me41.302
†h As to
Page me41.302
†i F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.302
†j Barrister
Page me41.304
†a See this volume, p. 301.
Page me41.304
†b Gottfried the Magnanimous, who liberated Christ's great sepulchre. Engels ironically likens Gottfried Kinkel to Godfrey of Bouillon, a character in Tasso's Gerusalemme liberata. See this volume, pp. 297-98, 301-02.
Page me41.305
†a See this volume, pp. 301, 304.
Page me41.306
†a See this volume, p. 277.
Page me41.307
†a Marx quoted American newspapers in English. Words in parentheses are Marx's and are written in German and English.
Page me41.308
†a Marx quotes J. Guthrie [Address to the citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, on 16 March in reference to the condition of the country]. His source was probably the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6210, 21 March 1861.
Page me41.308
†b Ch. Roselius' speech in the Convention of Louisiana on 21 March 1861, New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6217, 29 March 1861.
Page me41.309
†a See this volume, pp. 301-02.
Page me41.310
†a thereby
Page me41.311
†a See this volume, pp. 264-65.
Page me41.311
†b An allusion to Batrachomyomachia (The Battle of the Frogs and the Mice), a Greek poem which parodies Homer's Iliad, and also to G. Rollenhagen's poem Froschmeuseler, der Frösch und Meuse wunderbare Hofhaltunge.
Page me41.311

†c Kinkel. Marx refers to 'Der deutsche Mann. Ein Spielzeug für Wortklauber', Kladderadatsch, No. 29-30, 30 June 1861.
Page me41.312
†a political unreliability
Page me41.312
†b See this volume, pp. 248-49.
Page me41.312
†c Chamber of Deputies
Page me41.312
†d 'Handsome William'
Page me41.312
†e Baron
Page me41.312
†f Privy Councillor
Page me41.313
†a See this volume, p. 290.
Page me41.313
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt's letter to Marx of 14 June 1861
Page me41.313
†c bored
Page me41.313
†d August Philips
Page me41.313
†e F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.313
†f Jacques Philips
Page me41.314
†a See this volume, p. 216.
Page me41.314
†b Antonie Johannes Wouters van Anrooij
Page me41.314
†c attempt
Page me41.314
†d 'handsome William'
Page me41.315
†a by abuse
Page me41.315
†b institution for police spies
Page me41.315
†c under the auspices of
Page me41.315
†d See this volume, p. 292.
Page me41.315
†e ibid., pp. 274 and 285.
Page me41.315
†f F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.

Page me41.315
†g August Philips
Page me41.315
†h good offices
Page me41.315
†i Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.316
†a See this volume, pp. 316-19.
Page me41.316
†b In the original: 1862.
Page me41.316
†c Firstly
Page me41.316
†d See this volume, pp. 248-49 and 312.
Page me41.317
†a F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.317
†b See this volume, pp. 293-94.
Page me41.317
†c intestate
Page me41.318
†a by abuse
Page me41.318
†b deceased
Page me41.318
†c Louis Watteau
Page me41.319
†a See this volume, pp. 274, 285, 315.
Page me41.319
†b Thusnelda. Teutonisch-satyrisch-humoristisches Klatschblatt
Page me41.319
†c Ernest II
Page me41.319
†d See this volume, p. 299.
Page me41.320
†a August Philips
Page me41.320
†b F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.321
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me41.321
†b 'The American Question in England' and 'The British Cotton Trade' written on 18 and 21 September 1861.
Page me41.321
†c Report from Vienna. 23 September 1861, The Times, No. 24049, 27 September 1861.

Page me41.321
†d See this volume, p. 324.
Page me41.322
†a first
Page me41.322
†b no
Page me41.322
†c overhead costs
Page me41.322
†d Marx's cousin, Antoinette Philips
Page me41.322
†e F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.323
†a K. Marx, 'The American Question in England' and 'The British Cotton Trade', New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 6403 and 6405, 11 and 14 October 1861.
Page me41.323
†b K. Marx, 'The North American Civil War' and 'The Civil War in the United States', Die Presse, Nos. 293 and 306, 25 October and 7 November 1861.
Page me41.324
†a Henriette Marx
Page me41.324
†b Herr Vogt
Page me41.325
†a K. Marx, 'The London Times and Lord Palmerston', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6411, 21 October 1861.
Page me41.325
†b Henriette Marx
Page me41.325
†c See this volume, p. 264.
Page me41.325
†d notification
Page me41.325
†e F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.325
†f August Philips
Page me41.326
†a Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.326
†b Cyrill Lacambre
Page me41.326
†c the German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me41.326
†d The words in brackets are crossed out in the original.
Page me41.326
†e Auguste Blanqui
Page me41.327

†a Ecce iterum Crispinus (Behold, this Crispinus again). Juvenal, Satirae, IV, 1 (figuratively: the same again).
Page me41.327
†b [G. Lommel,] Hinter den Coulissen. Historisch-politische Bilder aus der Neuzeit, I. Theil. Vom Oktober 1847 bis Mai 1848.
Page me41.327
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me41.327
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me41.327
†e partner
Page me41.328
†a See this volume, p. 327.
Page me41.328
†b Word illegible.
Page me41.329
†a cause of war
Page me41.329
†b Victoria
Page me41.329
†c K.A. Varnhagen von Ense, Tagebücher. Aus dem Nachlaß Varnhagen's von Ense, Bd. I-II, Leipzig, 1861.
Page me41.329
†d 'Varnhagen und seine “Pulverkammer”', Neue Preussische Zeitung, 24 November 1861 (supplement).
Page me41.330
†a F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.331
†a basically
Page me41.331
†b Presumably 'The Principal Actors in the Trent Drama', which Marx dated 4 December 1861.
Page me41.332
†a grocer
Page me41.333
†a K. Marx, 'The Trent Case', Die Presse, No. 331, 2 December 1861.
Page me41.333
†b See this volume, pp. 330-31.
Page me41.333
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me41.333
†d See this volume, p. 332.
Page me41.334
†a See this volume, pp. 327-28.
Page me41.334
†b formally

Page me41.334
†c See this volume, pp. 332 and 333.
Page me41.335
†a is the talk of London
Page me41.335
†b null and void
Page me41.335
†c more or less
Page me41.336
†a Cobbett's Weekly Political Register
Page me41.337
†a not having happened
Page me41.337
†b See this volume, pp. 327-28 and 334.
Page me41.339
†a the German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me41.340
†a See this volume, pp. 327-28, 334 and 337.
Page me41.341
†a The Free Press. See this volume, p. 344.
Page me41.341
†b Probably Collet's article 'Bakunin' in The Free Press, Vol. X, No. 3, 5 March 1862.
Page me41.341
†c Das System der erworbenen Rechte
Page me41.342
†a J. Ph. Becker, Wie und Wann? Ein ernstes Wort über die Fragen und Aufgaben der Zeit, Geneva, London. Manchester, 1862.
Page me41.342
†b See this volume, pp. 279-82, 286-89.
Page me41.342
†c Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.342
†d Allusion to a passage in Heine's poem, 'Zur Beruhigung' (paraphrased).
Page me41.342
†e Wilhelm Wolff
Page me41.342
†f As regards
Page me41.342
†g K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.343
†a See this volume, pp. 290, 313.
Page me41.344
†a See this volume, p. 340.
Page me41.344
†b 3 March

Page me41.344
†c Sarah Parker
Page me41.345
†a 7 March
Page me41.345
†b Malcolm Ives
Page me41.345
†c 'Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation for the Year ended December 31, 1861. Exports of British and Irish Produce and Manufactures', The Economist, No. 966, 1 March 1862.
Page me41.345
†d Tsushima
Page me41.345
†e Should read 'Japan'. See this volume, p. 347.
Page me41.346
†a F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.346
†b See this volume, pp. 313, 315, 320, 322, 341, and this page (the next letter).
Page me41.346
†c August Philips
Page me41.347
†a without cash
Page me41.347
†b See this volume, p. 345.
Page me41.347
†c I know nothing about it.
Page me41.347
†d See this volume, p. 340.
Page me41.347
†e ibid., pp. 344, and this page (the previous letter).
Page me41.347
†f ibid., p. 345.
Page me41.348
†a Tsushima
Page me41.348
†b 'Russian Progress in Asia', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6497, 30 January 1862.
Page me41.348
†c Hokkaido
Page me41.348
†d 'Accounts relating to Trade and Navigation for the Year ended December 31, 1861. Exports of British and Irish Produce and Manufactures', The Economist, No. 966, 1 March 1862.
Page me41.349
†a See this volume p. 277.
Page me41.349

†b Correspondence Respecting the Affairs of Mexico. Parts I-III, London, 1862.
Page me41.349
†c zeal
Page me41.350
†a Zamacona to C. Wyke, 21 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†b C. Wyke to Zamacona, 22 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†c C. Wyke to Zamacona, 23 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†d Victoria
Page me41.350
†e C. Wyke to Zamacona, 25 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†f Zamacona to C. Wyke, 25 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†g C. Wyke to Zamacona, 26 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†h Zamacona to C. Wyke, 27 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†i C. Wyke to Zamacona, 30 July 1861.
Page me41.350
†j More than enough
Page me41.351
†a A. Smith, An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, vols. I-II, London, 1776; A. Ure, The Philosophy of Manufactures: or, an Exposition of the Scientific, Moral and Commercial Economy of the Factory System of Great Britain, 2nd ed., London, 1835.
Page me41.351
†b See this volume, pp. 345, 346.
Page me41.351
†c ibid., p. 347.
Page me41.351
†d In the original the name is written in both German and Roman characters.
Page me41.352
†a See this volume, pp. 345, 346, 351.
Page me41.352
†b 18 March
Page me41.352
†c See this volume, pp. 340-41.
Page me41.353
†a 26 April
Page me41.353
†b in all
Page me41.353

†c Marx uses the expression des Pudels Kern (the core of the matter) from Goethe's Faust, Teil I, Sc. 3.
Page me41.353
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'The American Civil War'.
Page me41.353
†e G. Vico, Principj di una scienza nuova.
Page me41.354
†a The case is still before the court (Horace, Ars Poetica, 78).
Page me41.354
†b [Diodorus Siculus,] Diodori bibliotheca historica.
Page me41.355
†a See this volume, pp. 340-41, 352.
Page me41.355
†b Eleanor Marx
Page me41.355
†c From The Free Press published by Urquhart.
Page me41.356
†a Marx probably means Simon François Bernard.
Page me41.356
†b Victor Schily
Page me41.356
†c for this year
Page me41.356
†d As regards
Page me41.356
†e Das System der erworbenen Rechte
Page me41.357
†a G. Vico, Principj di una scienza nuova.
Page me41.357
†b 'Ancient Roman law was a grave poem and ancient jurisprudence austere poetry which contained the first attempt to formulate legal metaphysics.' '...ancient jurisprudence was highly poetical in that it supposed true those facts that were not so, and refused to admit the truth of facts that were so indeed; in that it regarded the living as dead, and the dead as living in their inheritance.' 'The Latins called heroes heri; whence comes the word hereditas ... the heir ... represents, vis-á-vis the inheritance, the deceased pater familias.'
Page me41.357
†c F.A. Wolfius, Prolegomena ad Homerum sive de operum homericorum prisca et genuina forma variisque mutationibus et probabili ratione emendadi, Vol. I, Halis saxonum, 1795.
Page me41.357
†d B.G. Niebuhr, Römische Geschichte, Th. I-III, Berlin, 1827-32.
Page me41.357
†e civil war
Page me41.358
†a Reynolds's Newspaper

Page me41.358
†b K.A. Varnhagen von Ense, Tagebücher. Aus dem Nachlaß Varnhagen's von Ense, Bd. I-II, Leipzig, 1861 (published by Ludmilla Assing).
Page me41.358
†c Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.358
†d See this volume, p. 353.
Page me41.359
†a See this volume, pp. 354, 355-56.
Page me41.359
†b As regards
Page me41.359
†c See this volume, p. 354.
Page me41.359
†d Report of the Commissioners Appointed to Inquire into the Organisation of the Indian Army', London, 1859.
Page me41.359
†e C. von Clausewitz, Vom Kriege, Bd. I, Berlin, 1832, Viertes Buch: 'Das Gefecht', S. 283.
Page me41.360
†a 6 April
Page me41.361
†a McClellan
Page me41.361
†b Joseph Alfred Scoville
Page me41.361
†c Staats- und Gelehrte Zeitung des Hamburgischen unpartaiischen Correspondenten
Page me41.362
†a young Hungarians in Paris
Page me41.362
†b Der Bund. Eidgenössisches Centralblatt. Organ der freisinnig-demokratischen schweizerischen und bernischen Politik
Page me41.362
†c K. Marx, Herr Vogt (see this volume, pp. 327, 337-38, 340).
Page me41.362
†d The Free Press
Page me41.362
†e Marx probably has in mind the article 'President Lincoln's Strategy' in the New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6542, 24 March 1862.
Page me41.363
†a 'The Censorship of the Press', New-York Daily Tribune, No. 6541, 22 March 1862.
Page me41.363
†b A play on words meaning (here) decisive clash.
Page me41.363

†c men of straw
Page me41.363
†d Hence these tears (Terence, Andria, I, i, 99).
Page me41.363
†e See this volume, pp. 354, 359.
Page me41.364
†a partner
Page me41.366
†a no end to these visits (see this volume, p. 364).
Page me41.366
†b Hermann Heinrich Becker
Page me41.367
†a Victrix causa diis placuit, sed victa Catoni — the conquering cause was pleasing to the Gods, but the conquered one to Cato (Lucan, Pharsalia, I, 128).
Page me41.368
†a See this volume, p. 369.
Page me41.369
†a Heinrich Beta, whose real surname was Bettziech, rendered here by Marx as 'Bettseicher'.
Page me41.369
†b 24 May
Page me41.369
†c without a sou
Page me41.369
†d Report by the Times correspondent of 13 May 1862, The Times, No. 24256, 27 May 1862.
Page me41.370
†a 'Extent and Bearing of Federal Successes', The Economist, No. 978, 24 May 1862.
Page me41.370
†b See this volume, p. 353.
Page me41.371
†a Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me41.371
†b J. Spence's letter to the Times editor of 26 May 1862, The Times, No. 24258, 29 May 1862.
Page me41.371
†c See this volume, p. 369.
Page me41.372
†a See this volume, p. 371.
Page me41.372
†b J. Spence's letter to the Times editor of 2 June 1862, The Times, No. 24263, 4 June 1862.
Page me41.373
†a Ludwig III
Page me41.373

†b William I
Page me41.374
†a See this volume, p. 369.
Page me41.374
†b if one may refer to it thus
Page me41.375
†a H. Becker, Meine Candidatur zum Abgeordnetenhause (Wahlkampf am 6. Dezbr. 1861), Dortmund, 1862.
Page me41.376
†a F. Lassalle, Herr Julian Schmidt der Literarhistoriker, Berlin, 1862.
Page me41.376
†b F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Fichte's und die Bedeutung des Deutschen Volksgeistes, Berlin, 1862; Ueber Verfassungswesen, Berlin, 1862 (Lassalle mentioned these works in his letter to Marx on 9 June 1862).
Page me41.376
†c Wilhelm Wolff
Page me41.377
†a Marx plays here on the German proverb 'to hit the bag instead of the donkey'.
Page me41.377
†b Marx presumably refers to Meyen's first article from the series 'Berliner Briefe' published in Der Freischütz, No. 49, 23 April 1861.
Page me41.377
†c Julian the Apostate
Page me41.377
†d wise man
Page me41.377
†e Sophist
Page me41.377
†f altered as necessary
Page me41.378
†a J.K. Rodbertus, Sociale Briefe an von Kirchmann. Dritter Brief: Widerlegung der Ricardo'schen Lehre von der Grundrente und Begründung einer neuen Rententheorie, Berlin, 1851.
Page me41.378
†b See this volume, p. 285.
Page me41.378
†c on the face of it
Page me41.378
†d W. Roscher, System der Volkswirthschaft, Stuttgart and Augsburg, 1858.
Page me41.378
†e pupil
Page me41.379
†a character in Goethe's Faust
Page me41.379
†b essentially
Page me41.379

†c As regards
Page me41.380
†a what can one do?
Page me41.381
†a See this volume, pp. 394-98.
Page me41.381
†b Ch. Darwin, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life, London, 1859.
Page me41.381
†c T.R. Malthus, An Essay on the Principle of Population, as It Affects the Future Improvement of Society, with the Remarks on the Speculations of Mr. Goldwin, M. Condorcet, and Other Writers, London, 1798.
Page me41.381
†d war of all against all (Th. Hobbes, Leviathan, or the Matter, Form and Power of a Commonwealth, Ecclesiastical and Civil).
Page me41.381
†e G.W. Hegel, Phänomenologie des Geistes.
Page me41.381
†f an obituary
Page me41.381
†g J.S. Glennie's obituary of Buckle, The Times, No. 24275, 18 June 1862.
Page me41.381
†h F. Lassalle, Herr Julian Schmidt der Literarhistoriker (see this volume, p. 376).
Page me41.382
†a part I (see previous letter)
Page me41.383
†a The Free Press. See this volume, p. 362.
Page me41.383
†b Ueber Verfassungswesen and Die Philosophie Fichte's und die Bedeutung des Deutschen Volksgeistes, Berlin, 1862.
Page me41.384
†a 25 July
Page me41.384
†b businessman
Page me41.384
†c See this volume, pp. 386-87.
Page me41.385
†a gentle commerce
Page me41.385
†b 25 July
Page me41.386
†a See this volume, pp. 384 and 385.
Page me41.387
†a at bottom
Page me41.389
†a Sophie von Hatzfeldt

Page me41.389
†b appearances
Page me41.389
†c F. Lassalle, Herr Julian Schmidt der Literarhistoriker.
Page me41.389
†a brilliant coup
Page me41.390
†b [F. Lassalle,] Der italienische Krieg und die Aufgabe Preußens. Eine Stimme aus der Demokratie, Berlin, 1859.
Page me41.391
†a The Bible (The Old Testament)
Page me41.392
†a Roesgen
Page me41.393
†a See this volume, pp. 389-90.
Page me41.393
†b F.W. Rüstow, 'Die Brigade Milano', Demokratische Studien, Hamburg, 1861.
Page me41.393
†c Goldmann
Page me41.393
†d in excess
Page me41.393
†e Germany in the original
Page me41.394
†a what is one to do?
Page me41.394
†b auxiliary materials
Page me41.397
†a See this volume, pp. 389-90, 393.
Page me41.399
†a 4 August
Page me41.399
†b grocers
Page me41.399
†c discounter
Page me41.399
†d Eleanor
Page me41.400
†a See this volume, pp. 386-88.
Page me41.400
†b ibid., p. 277.
Page me41.401
†a See this volume, p. 399.
Page me41.402
†a Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me41.402

†b as regards money
Page me41.402
†c See this volume, p. 394.
Page me41.402
†d myrmidon (from the Yiddish m'schores)
Page me41.402
†e Think about it.
Page me41.402
†f See this volume, pp. 389-90, 393, 394-98.
Page me41.403
†a See this volume, p. 401.
Page me41.403
†b ibid., pp. 394-98, 402.
Page me41.403
†c ibid., pp. 396-97.
Page me41.404
†a F. Engels, 'Outlines of a Critique of Political Economy' (present edition, Vol. 3).
Page me41.404
†b See this volume, p. 402.
Page me41.404
†c ibid., p. 394.
Page me41.404
†d Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me41.405
†a Here follows a note in Marx's handwriting: 'signed 12 August 1862 (3 months after date). 12 August 1862.'
Page me41.406
†a See this volume, pp. 404, 405 and next letter.
Page me41.406
†b The Evening Post (see ibid., pp. 394 and 404).
Page me41.406
†c Heimann Lassal, Ferdinand Lassalle's father.
Page me41.407
†a danger in delay
Page me41.408
†a Heimann Lassal, Ferdinand Lassalle's father
Page me41.408
†b See this volume, pp. 406-07.
Page me41.408
†c ibid., p. 353.
Page me41.409
†a See this volume, p. 413.
Page me41.410
†a after the event
Page me41.410

†b Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me41.410
†c See this volume, p. 399.
Page me41.410
†d ibid., pp. 406-07.
Page me41.410
†e ibid., p. 409.
Page me41.410
†f ibid.
Page me41.411
†a A paraphrase of Mephistopheles' words (Goethe, Faust, Part I, Scene 4).
Page me41.411
†b J. Nasmyth's letter to the factory inspector Horner of 6 November 1852, Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the Half Year ending 31st October 1856, London, 1857.
Page me41.411
†c in kind
Page me41.412
†a See this volume, pp. 389-90, 393, 398.
Page me41.412
†b ibid., p. 391.
Page me41.412
†c ibid., p. 413.
Page me41.414
†a See this volume, pp. 394-98, 403-04.
Page me41.414
†b ibid., pp. 411-12.
Page me41.414
†c Gottfried Ermen
Page me41.415
†a Lion Philips
Page me41.416
†a See this volume, pp. 400, 415.
Page me41.416
†b ibid., p. 277.
Page me41.416
†c filibusters
Page me41.416
†d Wilhelm Steffen
Page me41.416
†e See this volume, p. 414.
Page me41.417
†a See this volume, p. 436.
Page me41.417
†b Niederrheinische Volks-Zeitung
Page me41.418

†a These gentlemen
Page me41.418
†b A reference to Marx's article 'A Note on the Amnesty', see this volume, p. 417.
Page me41.418
†c In the original '"ernscht" ischt der Mann' (instead of 'ernst ist, etc.').
Page me41.420
†a See this volume, p. 277.
Page me41.423
†a As for America
Page me41.423
†b See this volume, p. 420.
Page me41.423
†c ibid., p. 277.
Page me41.424
†a See this volume, p. 264.
Page me41.424
†b Wildbad. See this volume, p. 410.
Page me41.424
†c ibid., p. 409.
Page me41.425
†a first and foremost
Page me41.425
†b the inflammatory material
Page me41.425
†c without beating about the bush
Page me41.425
†d state of mind
Page me41.425
†e An allusion to F. Freiligrath's poem 'Trotz alledem!'
Page me41.425
†f I have achieved nothing.
Page me41.425
†g W. Roscher, System der Volkswirthschaft.
Page me41.426
†a August Philips
Page me41.426
†b F. Lassalle, Das System der erworbenen Rechte.
Page me41.427
†a See this volume, p. 422.
Page me41.427
†b broke
Page me41.427
†c 17 November
Page me41.427
†d grocer
Page me41.428

†a William I
Page me41.428
†b Mother, I have sinned (paraphrase of pater peccavi, Luke 15:21).
Page me41.428
†c The Queen dowager, wife of the late Frederick William IV.
Page me41.429
†a See this volume, p. 428.
Page me41.430
†a Louis XVI
Page me41.431
†a William I
Page me41.431
†b the dregs of humanity!
Page me41.431
†c the honour of the flag
Page me41.432
†a words of a believer
Page me41.432
†b 22 December
Page me41.433
†a 17 December
Page me41.433
†b on foot
Page me41.433
†c See this volume, p. 439.
Page me41.433
†d Helene Demuth's step-sister Anna Maria Creuz
Page me41.433
†e 27 December
Page me41.434
†a See this volume, pp. 402, 404.
Page me41.434
†b ibid., pp. 437-38.
Page me41.435
†a K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me41.437
†a See this volume, p. 434.
Page me41.438
†a Mary and Lizzy Burns
Page me41.439
†a See this volume, p. 434.
Page me41.439
†b ibid., pp. 402, 404, 434.
Page me41.439
†c ibid., p. 433.
Page me41.439

†d Ch. Mackay's report of 12 December 1862, The Times, No. 24440, 27 December 1862.
Page me41.440
†a F. Lassalle, Was nun? Zweiter Vortrag über Verfassungswesen, Zurich, 1863.
Page me41.440
†b W. Roscher, System der Volkswirthschaft.
Page me41.440
†c F. Lassalle, Ueber Verfassungswesen. Ein Vortrag gehalten in einem Berliner Bürger-Bezirks-Verein, Berlin, 1862.
Page me41.441
†a F. Lassalle, Was nun?, pp. 30-31.
Page me41.441
†b Heimann Lassal, Ferdinand Lassalle's father
Page me41.441
†c Mary and Lizzy Burns
Page me41.441
†d Wrong date in the original: '1862'.
Page me41.441
†e Mary Burns
Page me41.441
†f Lizzy Burns
Page me41.441
†g 5 January
Page me41.442
†a Mary Burns
Page me41.442
†b See this volume, p. 433.
Page me41.442
†c despairing throw
Page me41.442
†d in the final count
Page me41.443
†a So be it then!
Page me41.444
†a Lion Philips
Page me41.444
†b See this volume, pp. 442-43.
Page me41.444
†c ibid., p. 441.
Page me41.445
†a Literally, 'we cannot'.
Page me41.445
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.445
†c See this volume, pp. 422, 423, 424.
Page me41.445

†d Jenny and Laura Marx
Page me41.445
†e Ferdinand Wolff
Page me41.446
†a a fact is a fact
Page me41.446
†b See this volume, pp. 442-43.
Page me41.446
†c Mary Burns
Page me41.447
†a See this volume, p. 445.
Page me41.447
†b Roesgen
Page me41.449
†a Mary Burns
Page me41.449
†b See this volume, p. 446.
Page me41.451
†a First
Page me41.451
†b 'God speed to thy valour, O youth!', Virgil, Aeneid, IX, 641.
Page me41.452
†a K. Marx, F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me41.452
†b 'I served with some distinction', Horace, Carminum III.
Page me41.453
†a This presumably refers to the first instalment of the anonymous article 'Origin and Objects of the Treason in the United States', The Free Press, Vol. IX, No. 2, 4 February 1863.
Page me41.454
†a despite myself
Page me41.454
†b See this volume, pp. 448-52.
Page me41.455
†a An allusion to K. Blind's article 'Deutschland und Polen'.
Page me41.456
†a See this volume, p. 454.
Page me41.456
†b Orthodox Tsar
Page me41.456
†c French philistines
Page me41.456
†d A.W. Kinglake's speech in the House of Commons on 12 July 1860, The Times, No. 23671, 13 July 1860 (see this volume, pp. 173-74).
Page me41.456
†e John Eduard Taylor

Page me41.457
†a advent to power
Page me41.457
†b to the utmost
Page me41.457
†c end of letter missing
Page me41.457
†d See this volume, p. 455.
Page me41.458
†a See this volume, pp. 449-51.
Page me41.458
†b F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me41.459
†a See this volume, p. 458.
Page me41.459
†b Re
Page me41.460
†a See this volume, pp. 447-48.
Page me41.460
†b Frederick William III
Page me41.461
†a Hence
Page me41.462
†a An allusion to the Prussian Hohenzollerns. See also Heinrich Heine's Schloßlegende.
Page me41.462
†b Concerning
Page me41.462
†c This refers to a leading article in The Times, No. 24514, 24 March 1863.
Page me41.463
†a man of the Lower Empire
Page me41.463
†b beyond the frontiers
Page me41.463
†c In the original: John Potter.
Page me41.463
†d This refers to Edmund Potter's letter 'To the Editor of the Times', The Times, No. 24514, 24 March 1863.
Page me41.463
†e The Times, No. 24514, 24 March 1863, leader.
Page me41.464
†a Finally
Page me41.464
†b the Kingdom of Poland
Page me41.465
†a See this volume, p. 466.

Page me41.465
†b Ch. Lyell, The Geological Evidences of the Antiquity of Man with Remarks on Theories of the Origin of Species by Variation, 2nd ed., London, 1863. Th. H. Huxley, Evidence as to Man's Place in Nature, London-Edinburgh, 1863.
Page me41.465
†c J.B. Sumner, A Treatise on the Records of the Creation... Quoted on pp. 496-97 of Lyell's book.
Page me41.465
†d 'Professor Huxley on Man's Place in Nature', The Edinburgh Review, No. 240, April 1863, pp. 541-69.
Page me41.465
†e See this volume, pp. 447-48.
Page me41.465
†f niggardly
Page me41.466
†a L. Mieroslawski, De la nationalité polonaise dans l'équilibre européen, Paris, 1856.
Page me41.466
†b F. Lassalle, Der Lassallesche Criminalprozess, Zurich, 1863; Das Criminal-Urtheil wider mich mit kritischen Randnoten zum Zweck der Appellationsrechtfertigung [Leipzig, 1863].
Page me41.467
†a literally
Page me41.467
†b Here: It will go. Ça ira — is the refrain of a popular song of the French Revolution.
Page me41.468
†a 'M. Karl Blind', North British Daily Mail, 30 March 1863.
Page me41.468
†b In the original: 'scheen' (instead of 'schön').
Page me41.468
†c See this volume, p. 465.
Page me41.469
†a See this volume, p. 467.
Page me41.469
†b What should I do?
Page me41.470
†a after all
Page me41.470
†b See this volume, p. 469.
Page me41.470
†c ibid., p. 291.
Page me41.470
†d ibid., p. 467.
Page me41.470
†e wit

Page me41.471
†a gentlemen
Page me41.471
†b in embryo
Page me41.471
†c J.R. von Patkul, Berichte an das Zaarische Cabinet in Moscau, von seinem Gesandtschafts-Posten bey August II. Könige von Polen. Theile I-II. Berlin 1792-1797.
Page me41.472
†a See this volume, p. 455.
Page me41.472
†b Old Moor, Old Moor, / He of the hoary beard.
Page me41.472
†c activities
Page me41.473
†a Frederick I
Page me41.473
†b In the original: '1843'.
Page me41.473
†c P.C. Schmerling, Recherches sur les ossemens fossiles découverts dans les cavernes de la province de Liége, V. I-II, Liége, 1833-1834.
Page me41.473
†d Boucher de Crévecoeur de Perthes.
Page me41.473
†e [Karadzic V.S.] V. St. Karatsich, Narodne srpske piesme. Kn. I-IV. U Lipistsi i u Bechu. 1823-1833.
Page me41.474
†a See this volume, pp. 435-36.
Page me41.475
†a God speed, O youth! (Virgil, Aeneid, IX, 641.)
Page me41.476
†a See this volume, p. 465.
Page me41.478
†a Nickname for General Hooker
Page me41.478
†b a genitive indicating an object, i.e., in this case, showing that the poem was about Lassalle (see this volume, p. 475)
Page me41.478
†c Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me41.478
†d Engels means the first two volumes of A.W. Kinglake's The Invasion of the Crimea; its Origin, and an Account of its Progress down to the Death of Lord Raglan.
Page me41.479
†a See this volume, p. 474.
Page me41.479
†b F. Lassalle, Die indirect Steuer und die Lage der arbeitenden Klassen, Zurich, 1863.

Page me41.479
†c [P. Boisguillebert,] Le détail de la France; S. Vauban, Projet d'une dixme royale; J. Bodinus, De republica libri sex.
Page me41.480
†a E. Engel, Die Volkszählungen, ihre Stellung zur Wissenschaft und ihre Aufgabe in der Geschichte.
Page me41.481
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me41.481
†b See this volume, pp. 465-66, 476.
Page me41.481
†c But what can one do?
Page me41.481
†d See this volume, pp. 435-36, 474.
Page me41.482
†a Ernst Dronke
Page me41.482
†b A.W. Kinglake, The Invasion of the Crimea.
Page me41.482
†c the part played by the French
Page me41.482
†d Engels discussed the book in 'Kinglake on the Battle of the Alma' (see present edition, Vol. 19).
Page me41.483
†a See this volume, pp. 479-80.
Page me41.483
†b First
Page me41.484
†a See this volume, pp. 462-63.
Page me41.484
†b This presumably refers to the Notes on the Polish question Britain, France and Austria sent to the Russian government on 17 and 18 June 1863.
Page me41.484
†c 'The Intervention in Poland', The Free Press, V. XI, No. 7, 1 July 1863.
Page me41.484
†d act of despair
Page me41.484
†e Arbeiterlesebuch. Rede Lassalle's zu Frankfurt am Main am 17. und 19. Mai 1863.
Page me41.484
†f This seems to refer to the pamphlet [Pi de Cosprons,] Mémoire sur l'origine scythocimmérienne de la langue romane, par M. le duc du Roussillon.
Page me41.485
†a afresh
Page me41.486
†a depreciation

Page me41.488
†a Ferdinand Wolff
Page me41.488
†b Paraphrase of a passage from Schiller's Die Piccolomini, Act V, Scene 1.
Page me41.488
†c M[oney] — C[ommodity], C[ommodity] — M[oney].
Page me41.488
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me41.488
†e See Economic manuscript of 1861-63, Notebooks VI-XV (present edition, Vols. 31-33).
Page me41.489
†a Georg Herwegh's message to Lassalle of 5 June 1863 announcing his accession to the General Association of German Workers, Nordstern, No. 221, 18 July 1863.
Page me41.489
†b Marx means O. Dammer.
Page me41.489
†c Napoleon I
Page me41.490
†a The Condition of the Working Class in England
Page me41.490
†b Children's Employment Commission (1862). First Report of the Commissioners, London, 1863.
Page me41.490
†c See this volume, p. 484.
Page me41.490
†d [M. Mayer,] 'The true discovery or the achievements of Germany, first discovered by herself, not in intoxication from wine, as a certain calumniator ... sceptically maintains, but by strength of body and mind and communicated to the rest of the world, etc.', author Michael Mayer, Frankfurt, 1619.
Page me41.491
†a Discoveries in the field of politics, war, literature, theology, medicine, chemistry.
Page me41.491
†b See this volume, p. 488.
Page me41.491
†c man of action
Page me41.491
†d Hadji Hayden Hassan and Kustar Ogli Ismael
Page me41.492
†a for the moment
Page me41.492
†b Melinski in the original.
Page me41.492
†c Antonina Bakunina
Page me41.492

†d at first
Page me41.492
†e levy in mass
Page me41.492
†f Pius IX
Page me41.494
†a Presumably Palmerston.
Page me41.494
†b I hope they are only withdrawing, the better to advance.
Page me41.494
†c This refers to Lassalle's pamphlet, Die Feste, die Presse und der Frankfurter Abgeordnetentag. Drei Symptome des öffentlichen Geistes. Düsseldorf, 1863.
Page me41.494
†d Wagener's speech in the Chamber of Deputies on 19 November 1863, Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 326, 22 November 1863.
Page me41.494
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me41.495
†a Henriette Marx
Page me41.495
†b Cf. Luke 10:33,34.
Page me41.496
†a in other words
Page me41.496
†b What do you say to that?
Page me41.497
†a Schleswig-Holstein is meant. 'Schleswig-Holstein meerumschlungen' are the opening words of a patriotic song popular at the time of the Duchies' struggle against Danish rule in 1848-49.
Page me41.497
†b See this volume, p. 496.
Page me41.497
†c Presumably the material on the Schleswig-Holstein question published in The Free Press, Vol. XV, No. 12, 2 December 1863.
Page me41.497
†d R. Schramm, Die rothe Fahne von 1848 und Die schwarzweisse Fahne von 1863, Berlin, 1863.
Page me41.498
†a Letter to the editor of The Times signed 'A German who is fond of facts', The Times, No. 24733, 4 December 1863.
Page me41.498
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.498
†c Esther Kosel
Page me41.498
†d Babette Blum

Page me41.498
†e Zalt-Bommel
Page me41.499
†a sometime
Page me41.499
†b Emilie Conradi
Page me41.499
†c Sophie Schmalhausen
Page me41.499
†d Martin Presburg
Page me41.499
†e good graces
Page me41.499
†f Louise Juta
Page me41.500
†a Nickname for Marx's daughter, Eleanor.
Page me41.501
†a Lion Philips
Page me41.501
†b Dr. A. van Anrooij
Page me41.501
†c Henriette van Anrooij, née Philips
Page me41.501
†d Esther Kosel and Babette Blum
Page me41.501
†e See this volume, p. 498.
Page me41.501
†f ibid., p. 496.
Page me41.502
†a 'You're not a Yankee, the fanatic exclaimed... I've been watching you ever since you've been here. A Saxon's face has something of a bull and a wolf; yours has something of a monkey and a dog. You're afraid of liberty, you speak of things you know nothing about and you use an affected language. You're a Frenchman!'
Page me41.502
†b Emilie Conradi
Page me41.502
†c 7 December
Page me41.503
†a See this volume, p. 501.
Page me41.503
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.503
†c Antoinette Philips
Page me41.503
†d Friedrich of Augustenburg
Page me41.504

†a young ladies
Page me41.505
†a See this volume, pp. 500-01.
Page me41.506
†a J. Faucher's speech in the Chamber of Deputies on 1 December 1863, reported in the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 338, 4 December 1863.
Page me41.506
†b by force
Page me41.507
†a Lion and Antoinette Philips
Page me41.507
†b From Goethe's epigram Totalität.
Page me41.507
†c the order of the day
Page me41.508
†a The German phrase 'seine Pappenheimer kennen' (to know who one is dealing with) derives from Schiller's Wallensteins Tod. III, 15.
Page me41.508
†b Journal de Saint Pétersbourg, No. 293; 26, 27 and 28 December 1863 (7, 8 and 9 January 1864).
Page me41.508
†c See this volume, p. 503.
Page me41.508
†d induce
Page me41.508
†e Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.508
†f By the way
Page me41.509
†a Marx uses the Berlin dialectal form Untertanenbejeisterung instead of Untertanenbegeisterung.
Page me41.509
†b Eleanor Marx
Page me41.509
†c August Philips' wife
Page me41.509
†d Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.509
†e August Philips
Page me41.509
†f Jacques Philips
Page me41.509
†g Geography
Page me41.509
†h S. Vissering, Handboek van praktische staathuishoudkunde.
Page me41.510

†a Hildebrand, Camera obscura.
Page me41.510
†b A popular song
Page me41.510
†c Marx puns on the name of A. Roodhujzen. 'Rothhäuschen' means 'little red house'.
Page me41.510
†d Henriette Sophie van Anrooij
Page me41.510
†e Friedrich Philips
Page me41.510
†f Antoinette Philips
Page me41.511
†a Friedrich of Augustenburg
Page me41.513
†a Christian IX
Page me41.513
†b the Little, i.e. Louis Bonaparte. The nickname derives from Victor Hugo's pamphlet Napoléon le Petit.
Page me41.514
†a Karl Philips
Page me41.514
†b Jean Philips
Page me41.514
†c Allen
Page me41.514
†d Manuscript damaged.
Page me41.514
†e See this volume, p. 501.
Page me41.514
†f the British Museum Library
Page me41.515
†a icy cold
Page me41.515
†b From Goethe's Westöstlicher Diwan ('An Suleika').
Page me41.515
†c Probably Roodhujzen's.
Page me41.515
†d spaces devoid of matter
Page me41.516
†a by Hildebrand
Page me41.516
†b with me as tutor
Page me41.516
†c Geography
Page me41.516

†d 'Dance, little nun, dance' and 'The shoe and his wife' (Dutch nursery rhymes)
Page me41.516
†e Probably the wife of Karl Philips' father-in-law, a general.
Page me41.516
†f fine day
Page me41.516
†g police spies
Page me41.517
†a Josef Valentin Weber
Page me41.517
†b 21 April 1864
Page me41.517
†c Act III. Scene 3
Page me41.517
†d Lizzy Burns
Page me41.518
†a See this volume, p. 516.
Page me41.519
†a shining light
Page me41.519
†b Not everyone who wants can be a Soulouque (Victor Hugo, Napoléon le Petit, paraphrased).
Page me41.519
†c Friedrich Karl of Prussia
Page me41.519
†d Sundewitt
Page me41.520
†a See this volume, p. 518.
Page me41.522
†a there is danger in delay
Page me41.522
†b If one is to be had Page me41.523
†a 3 May
Page me41.523
†b Louis Borchardt and Eduard Gumpert
Page me41.523
†c 5 and 6 May
Page me41.523
†d Borchardt
Page me41.523
†e 13 May
Page me41.524
†a See this volume, p. 523.
Page me41.525
†a Wilhelm Wolff's

Page me41.526
†a Thekla Marriet
Page me41.527
†a Jenny, Marx's wife
Page me41.529
†a Kölnische Zeitung
Page me41.529
†b Breslauer Zeitung
Page me41.529
†c Emma Engels
Page me41.529
†d Rudolf Engels
Page me41.530
†a The Times, 25 and 26 May 1864, leading articles.
Page me41.531
†a The Morning Post, No. 28222, 30 May 1864, leading article.
Page me41.532
†a Presumably L.B. Francoeur's Cours complet de mathématiques pures.
Page me41.532
†b Danish
Page me41.533
†a [K.F.M. Elsner,] 'Kasematten-Wolff', Breslauer Zeitung, Morgen-Ausgabe, 24 May 1864; Rheinische Zeitung, No. 145, 26 May 1864.
Page me41.533
†b 'Feudaler Sozialismus', Rheinische Zeitung, No. 149, 30 May 1864.
Page me41.533
†c Julius Melchior
Page me41.534
†a F. Lassalle, Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit, Berlin, 1864.
Page me41.534
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me41.534
†c J. Süss-Oppenheimer
Page me41.534
†d Lizzy Burns
Page me41.535
†a The Rebellion Record: a Diary of American Events...
Page me41.535
†b Victoria
Page me41.535
†c general law
Page me41.535
†d See this volume, p. 531.
Page me41.535
†e 6 or 7 June

Page me41.535
†f In the original: '£120', apparently a slip of the pen
Page me41.536
†a The London Gazette
Page me41.536
†b See this photograph between p. 538 and p. 539.
Page me41.536
†c Probably Urquhart
Page me41.537
†a In the original 'anjenehmer Jejenstand' instead of 'angenehmer Gegenstand'.
Page me41.537
†b See this volume, pp. 10, 13-14.
Page me41.537
†c Urquhart
Page me41.537
†d William I
Page me41.537
†e Victoria
Page me41.539
†a See this volume, p. 536.
Page me41.539
†b W. Wolff's speech in the Frankfurt National Assembly on 26 May 1849 (see K. Marx, Herr Vogt, VI, present edition, Vol. 17, and F. Engels, Wilhelm Wolff, X, present edition, Vol. 24).
Page me41.540
†a Moll and Melchior (see this volume, pp. 533-34).
Page me41.540
†b H.J. Chavée, Essai d'étymologie philosophique ou Recherches sur l'origine et les variations des mots qui expriment les actes intellectuels et moraux.
Page me41.541
†a cover, protect, respect, honour, love, cherish
Page me41.541
†b cover, fortify
Page me41.541
†c Moll and Melchior (see this volume, pp. 533-34, 540).
Page me41.541
†d 'Eine Erinnerung an den Communisten Wolff', Die Grenzboten, 1864, I. Semester, 2. Band, pp. 398-400.
Page me41.541
†e J.R. von Patkul, Berichte an das Zaarische Cabinet in Moscau...
Page me41.541
†f R. Dozy, De Israëlieten te Mekka.
Page me41.541
†g Ark of the Covenant
Page me41.542
†a See this volume, p. 541.

Page me41.542
†b the first five books of the Old Testament (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy)
Page me41.543
†a the Russians
Page me41.543
†b It is unbelievable!
Page me41.544
†a Christian IX
Page me41.544
†b William
Page me41.544
†c Alexandra
Page me41.544
†d W. Ferrand's speech in the House of Commons on 16 June 1864, The Morning Post, No. 28238, 17 June 1864.
Page me41.544
†e See this volume, pp. 516, 518.
Page me41.545
†a See this volume, pp. 540-42.
Page me41.545
†b See this volume, p. 535.
Page me41.546
†a See this volume, p. 548.
Page me41.546
†b Marx's daughter Jenny
Page me41.546
†c Th. Schwann, Microscopical Researches into the Accordance in the Structure and Growth of Animals and Plants; M.J. Schleiden, Contribution to Phytogenesis.
Page me41.547
†a See this volume, p. 535.
Page me41.549
†a See this volume, p. 548.
Page me41.549
†b Friedrich of Augustenburg
Page me41.549
†c Peter Nikolaus Friedrich, Grand Duke of Oldenburg
Page me41.549
†d August Paul Friedrich
Page me41.549
†e last resort
Page me41.550
†a Antoinette Philips
Page me41.550
†b a servant in the Philips household
Page me41.551

†a last resort
Page me41.551
†b Henriette Sophia van Anrooij, Antonie Johannes Wouters van Anrooij, Friedrich Philips
Page me41.552
†a See this volume, p. 549.
Page me41.552
†b Lion Philips
Page me41.552
†c Marx apparently means the item [C.D. Collet,] 'Groundlessness of Any Claim of Russia to Holstein-Gottorp' in The Free Press, Vol. XII, No. 5, 4 May 1864.
Page me41.552
†d See this volume, pp. 588-89.
Page me41.552
†e See this volume, pp. 505-06.
Page me41.552
†f Paraphrase of a passage from Schiller's ballad Die Bürgschaft.
Page me41.553
†a inanity
Page me41.553
†b See this volume, p. 549.
Page me41.553
†c ibid., p. 548.
Page me41.554
†a Friedrich of Augustenburg
Page me41.554
†b Gottfried Ermen
Page me41.554
†c See this volume, p. 552.
Page me41.554
†d That dear
Page me41.555
†a between ourselves
Page me41.555
†b There follows the text of Freiligrath's letter in Marx's handwriting in the original (see also p. 557).
Page me41.555
†c J. von Racowita
Page me41.555
†d Helene von Dönniges
Page me41.556
†a Ida Freiligrath
Page me41.556
†b Jenny Marx had visiting cards which read, 'Mine Jenny Marx, née Baronesse von Westphalen'.
Page me41.556

†c Helene von Dönniges
Page me41.557
†a The copy of the letter is in Marx's handwriting.
Page me41.557
†b J. von Racowita
Page me41.558
†a Helene von Dönniges
Page me41.558
†b J. von Racowita
Page me41.558
†c Saturday
Page me41.559
†a 11 September
Page me41.559
†b See this volume, p. 553.
Page me41.560
†a if it can be done
Page me41.560
†b old stock
Page me41.560
†c See this volume, p. 558.
Page me41.560
†d kid-glove revolutionaries
Page me41.561
†a Helene von Dönniges (see this volume, p. 558)
Page me41.561
†b young
Page me41.561
†c young men
Page me41.561
†d Jahrbücher des Deutschen Reichs unter dem Sächsischen Hause. Herausgegeben von Leopold Ranke, Bd. 1-3, Berlin, 1837-1840.
Page me41.561
†e patently
Page me41.561
†f Ludmilla Assing
Page me41.561
†g between ourselves
Page me41.561
†h See this volume, pp. 559-60.
Page me41.562
†a James Alexander Seddon
Page me41.562
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me41.567

†a The letter, dated by Jenny Marx "50' bears a note in Engels' handwriting saying 'Should read' 60' ('Soll sein 60').
Page me41.567
†b An allusion to Lassalle's book Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me41.567
†c arguments
Page me41.568
†a See this volume, p. 179.
Page me41.568
†b 17 August
Page me41.568
†c This refers to Marx's article 'The New Sardinian Loan. — The Impending French and Indian Loans'.
Page me41.568
†d Karl Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me41.568
†e Wolfram von Eschenbach, Parzifal, IX.
Page me41.569
†a of Marx's Herr Vogt
Page me41.570
†a Jenny Marx means the death of her children Heinrich Guido, Franziska, and Edgar.
Page me41.570
†b Jenny, Laura, and Eleanor Marx
Page me41.570
†c A book by Wilkie Collins.
Page me41.570
†d the pawnbroker's shop
Page me41.572
†a Herr Vogt
Page me41.573
†a See this volume, p. 231.
Page me41.573
†b of Herr Vogt
Page me41.574
†a Magenta, a deep purplish red reminiscent of the colour of blood, was fashionable in Paris in 1859. It owes its name to the North Italian town of Magenta, where the French forces defeated the Austrians in a bloody battle on 4 June 1859.
Page me41.574
†b See this volume, p. 252.
Page me41.576
†a also
Page me41.578
†a 17 March
Page me41.578

†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.578
†c 'Worth' in the original; the nickname 'daughter of Babylon' was used by Weerth in his letters.
Page me41.578
†d Ludmilla Assing
Page me41.578
†e knew all about
Page me41.579
†a Lion Philips
Page me41.579
†b Berlin dialect in the original: 'Jroschen' instead of 'Groschen', and 'jeblieben' instead of 'geblieben'.
Page me41.579
†c Ferdinand Wolff
Page me41.579
†d Countess von Hatzfeldt intended to finance the newspaper (see this volume, pp. 252, 257, 261, 280-81, 291).
Page me41.579
†e See this volume, pp. 290, 291.
Page me41.580
†a Gottfried Kinkel; an allusion to Johanna Kinkel's book Hans Ibeles in London.
Page me41.580
†b Sibylle Hess
Page me41.580
†c See this volume, pp. 185, 71.
Page me41.580
†d Montijo
Page me41.580
†e Pius IX
Page me41.580
†f Mathilde Bonaparte
Page me41.581
†a Anders
Page me41.582
†a See this volume, p. 483.
Page me41.582
†b Eleanor Marx
Page me41.582
†c See this volume, pp. 474, 488.
Page me41.582
†d ibid., p. 435.
Page me41.582
†e ibid., p. 380.
Page me41.582
†f Ludwig Kugelmann

Page me41.583
†a See this volume, p. 461.
Page me41.584
†a Esther Kosel
Page me41.584
†b See this volume, p. 499.
Page me41.584
†c David Urquhart
Page me41.585
†a See this volume, p. 488.
Page me41.585
†b Allen
Page me41.586
†a A quotation from a speech made by Lassalle in Solingen on 27 September 1863 as reported in the Berliner Reform, No. 229, 1 October 1863.
Page me41.586
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me41.586
†c This refers to Lassalle (see end of previous letter).
Page me41.586
†d of the General Association of German Workers
Page me41.587
†a ale at 4d a quart
Page me41.588
†a See this volume, p. 539.
Page me41.588
†b Polish name: Wroclaw.
Page me41.588
†c [K.F.M. Elsner,] 'Kasematten-Wolff', Breslauer Zeitung, Morgen-Ausgabe, 24 May 1864.

Author's Notes

Page me41.264
†* Bühring — formerly represented the Faucher proletariat, his FREE-TRADE proletarians — has real inventive genius, but is not a business man, hence invariably swindled while others exploit his inventions.

Page Break me42.i

VOLUME 42

Page Break me42.ii
Page me42.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me42.iii

FRONTMATTER Titlepage

Page me42.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
42

MARX AND ENGELS: 1864-68

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me42.iv

Copyright Page

Page me42.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:
GREAT BRITAIN: Eric Hobsbawm, John Hoffman, Nicholas Jacobs, Monty Johnstone, Martin Milligan, Jeff Skelley, Ernst Wangermann.
USA: Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, James E. Jackson, Leonard B. Levenson, Betty Smith, Dirk J. Struik, William W. Weinstone.

USSR: for Progress Publishers — A.K. Avelichev, N.P. Karmanova, V.N. Sedikh, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, V.N. Pospelova, A.G. Yegorov.

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1987

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Page me42.iv
Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.

Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works. English. 1975. II. Title
HX39.5 A16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0542-5 (v. 42)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me42.v

Contents

Page me42.v
PrefaceXIX

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
LETTERS

October 1864-March 1868
Page me42.v
1864

1. Marx to Carl Klings. 4 October 3
2. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 16 October 5
3. Marx to Engels. 2 November 6
4. Engels to Marx. 2 November 6
5. Engels to Hermann Engels. 2 November 9
6. Marx to Engels. 4 November 11

7. Engels to Marx. 7 November 19
8. Engels to Marx. 9 November 21
9. Marx to Engels. 14 November 22
10. Engels to Marx. 16 November 23
11. Marx to Engels. 18 November 25
12. Engels to Marx. 22 November 29
13. Marx to Engels. 24 November 29
14. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 24 November 31
15. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 24 November 37
16. Marx to Engels. 25 November 40
17. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 26 November 42
18. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 28 November 43

Page Break me42.vi
19. Marx to Joseph Weydemeyer. 29 November 43
20. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 29 November 45
21. Marx to Lion Philips. 29 November 46
22. Marx to Engels. 2 December 49
23. Marx to Engels. 8 December 52
24. Marx to Engels. 10 December 53
25. Marx to Engels. 22 December 56
26. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 22 December 56
27. Marx to Carl Siebel. 22 December 58

Page me42.vi
1865
28. Marx to Hermann Jung. About 8 January 60
29. Engels to Rudolf Engels. 10 January 61
30. Marx to His Daughter Jenny. 11 January 62
31. Marx to Johann Baptist von Schweitzer. 16 January 64
32. Marx to Engels. 25 January 65
33. Engels to Marx. 27 January 68
34. Marx to Engels. 30 January 70
35. Marx to Engels. 1 February 72
36. Marx to Engels. 3 February 75
37. Engels to Marx. 5 February 77
38. Marx to Engels. 6 February 79
39. Engels to Marx. 7 February 81
40. Engels to Marx. 9 February 83
41. Marx to Engels. 10 February 84
42. Marx to Engels. 11 February 86
43. Engels to Marx. 13 February 88
44. Marx to Engels. 13 February 89
45. Marx to Victor Le Lubez. 15 February 92
46. Marx to Engels. 16 February 93
47. Marx to Engels. 18 February 94

48. Engels to Marx. 20 [-21] February 98
49. Engels to Marx. 22 February 98
50. Marx to Engels. Before 22 February 99
51. Engels to Otto Meissner. 22 February 100
52. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 23 February 101
53. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 23 February 101
54. Engels to Marx. 24 February 106
55. Marx to Engels. 25 February 107

Page Break me42.vii

56. Engels to Carl Siebel. 27 February 111
57. Engels to Marx. 27 February 112
58. Engels to Marx. 3 March 113
59. Marx to Engels. 4 March 114
60. Engels to Marx. 6 March 116
61. Marx to Engels. 7 March 117
62. Marx to Engels. 10 March 120
63. Engels to Joseph Weydemeyer. 10 March 121
64. Engels to Marx. 11 March 126
65. Marx to Engels. 13 March 128
66. Marx to Hermann Jung. 13 March 131
67. Engels to Marx. 14 March 132
68. Marx to Engels. 18 March 133
69. Engels to Friedrich Albert Lange. 29 March 135
70. Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt. 10 April 139
71. Marx to Engels. 11 April 139
72. Engels to Marx. 12 April 140
73. Marx to Hermann Jung. 13 April 143
74. Marx to Léon Fontaine. 15 April 144
75. Engels to Marx. 16 April 147
76. Marx to Engels. 22 April 148
77. Marx to Hermann Jung. 25 April 148
78. Marx to Engels. 1 May 149
79. Engels to Marx. 3 May 151
80. Marx to Engels. 9 May 154
81. Engels to Marx. 12 May 156
82. Marx to Engels. 13 May 157
83. Marx to Engels. 20 May 159
84. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. About 25 May 160
85. Marx to Engels. 24 June 161
86. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 24 June 165
87. Marx to Eleanor Marx. 3 July 166
88. Engels to Marx. 15 July 167
89. Engels to Marx. 25 July 169
90. Marx to Léon Fontaine. 25 July 170
91. Marx to Engels. 31 July 172

92. Marx to Engels. 5 August 174
93. Engels to Marx. 7 August 178
94. Marx to Engels. 9 August 180

Page Break me42.viii
95. Engels to Marx. 16 August 181
96. Marx to Engels. 19 August 183
97. Engels to Marx. 21 August 186
98. Marx to Engels. 22 August 187
99. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 11 September 189
100. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 20 September 189
101. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 21 September 190
102. Marx to Hermann Jung. 30 September 191
103. Engels to Marx. 4 October 192
104. Marx to Engels. 19 October 193
105. Marx to Engels. 8 November 193
106. Marx to Salomon Fuld. 9 November 194
107. Engels to Marx. 13 November 195
108. Marx to Engels. 15 November 195
109. Marx to Hermann Jung. 15 November 196
110. Engels to Marx. 17 November 197
111. Marx to Engels. 20 November 198
112. Marx to Hermann Jung. 20 November 200
113. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 21 November 201
114. Marx to César De Paepe. About 25 November 203
115. Engels to Marx. 1 December 204
116. Marx to Engels. 2 December 205
117. Marx to Engels. 26 December 206
118. Marx to Engels. End of 1865-beginning of 1866 208

Page me42.viii
1866

119. Engels to Marx. 4 January 211
120. Marx to Engels. 5 January 212
121. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. About 13 January 213
122. Marx to Engels. 15 January 216
123. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 15 January 218
124. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 15 January 220
125. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 24 January 222
126. Engels to Marx. 26 January 222
127. Marx to Engels. 10 February 223
128. Engels to Marx. 10 February 225
129. Marx to Engels. 13 February 227
130. Marx to Engels. 14 February 229
131. Marx to Friedrich Lessner. 14 February 229

Page Break me42.ix

132. Engels to Marx. 19 February 230
133. Marx to Engels. 20 February 231
134. Engels to Marx. 22 February 233
135. Marx to Engels. 2 March 234
136. Engels to Marx. 5 March 235
137. Marx to Engels. 6 March 236
138. Engels to Marx. About 10 March 237
139. Marx to Engels. 10 March 237
140. Marx to Engels. 15 March 238
141. Marx to Engels. 16 March 239
142. Marx to His Daughter Jenny. 16 March 240
143. Marx to Antoinette Philips. 18 March 241
144. Marx to Laura Marx. 20 March 244
145. Engels to Hermann Engels. 22 March 247
146. Marx to Engels. 24 March 249
147. Engels to Marx. 27 March 251
148. Marx to Engels. 2 April 252
149. Engels to Marx. 2 April 255
150. Engels to Marx. 6 April 256
151. Marx to Engels. 6 April 258
152. Engels to Hermann Engels. 6 April 259
153. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 6 April 261
154. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 6 April 262
155. Engels to Marx. 10 April 264
156. Engels to Marx. 13 April 266
157. Marx to Engels. 23 April 268
158. Engels to Marx. 1 May 269
159. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 4 May 271
160. Engels to Marx. 9 May 272
161. Marx to Engels. 10 May 273
162. Engels to Marx. 16 May 275
163. Marx to Engels. 17 May 277
164. Engels to Marx. 25 May 279
165. Marx to Engels. 7 June 281
166. Marx to Engels. 9 June 282
167. Engels to Marx. 11 June 284
168. Marx to Engels. 20 June 286
169. Engels to Marx. 4 July 288
170. Marx to Engels. 7 July 289

Page Break me42.x

171. Engels to Marx. 9 July 292
172. Engels to Marx. 12 July 294
173. Marx to Engels. 21 July 295

174. Engels to Marx. 25 July 297
175. Marx to Engels. 27 July 299
176. Engels to Marx. 6 August 301
177. Marx to Engels. 7 August 303
178. Engels to Marx. 10 August 306
179. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 13 August 307
180. Marx to Engels. 13 August 309
181. Marx to Engels. 23 August 310
182. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 23 August 311
183. Engels to Emil Engels. 23 August 312
184. Marx to Laura Marx. 28 August 313
185. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 31 August 314
186. Marx to Eleanor Marx. 5 September 315
187. Marx to Laura Marx. About 8 September 317
188. Marx to Engels. 26 September 317
189. Marx to Engels. 1 October 319
190. Engels to Marx. 2 October 320
191. Marx to Engels. 3 October 321
192. Engels to Marx. 5 October 322
193. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 9 October 325
194. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 13 October 327
195. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 25 October 329
196. Marx to Engels. 8 November 330
197. Marx to Engels. 10 November 331
198. Engels to Marx. 11 November 332
199. Marx to François Lafargue. 12 November 334
200. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 7 December 335
201. Marx to Engels. 8 December 336
202. Engels to Marx. 14 December 336
203. Marx to Engels. 17 December 338
204. Engels to Marx. 21 December 339
205. Marx to Engels. 31 December 341

Page me42.x 1867

206. Marx to Engels. 19 January 343
207. Engels to Marx. 29 January 344

Page Break me42.xi
208. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 18 February 346
209. Marx to Engels. 21 February 347
210. Marx to Engels. 25 February 347
211. Engels to Marx. 13 March 348
212. Marx to Engels. 2 April 350
213. Engels to Marx. 4 April 352

214. Marx to Engels. 13 April 356
215. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 16 April 358
216. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 17 April 358
217. Marx to Engels. 24 April 359
218. Engels to Marx. 27 April 362
219. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 30 April366
220. Marx to Ludwig Büchner. 1 May 367
221. Marx to His Daughter Jenny. 5 May 369
222. Marx to Engels. 7 May 370
223. Marx to Laura Marx. 13 May 375
224. Marx to Engels. About 22 May 377
225. Marx to Engels. 3 June 378
226. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 10 June 379
227. Engels to Marx. 16 June 381
228. Marx to Engels. 22 June 383
229. Engels to Marx. 24 June 386
230. Engels to Marx. 26 June 388
231. Marx to Engels. 27 June 389
232. Marx to Engels. 27 June 391
233. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 13 July 395
234. Marx to Engels. 20 July 396
235. Marx to Ferdinand Freiligrath. 20 July 397
236. Marx to Engels. 10 August 398
237. Engels to Marx. 11 August 399
238. Marx to Engels. 14 August 400
239. Marx to London Bookseller. 14 August 401
240. Engels to Marx. 15 August 401
241. Marx to Engels. 16 August 402
242. Engels to Marx. 23 August 405
243. Marx to Engels. 24 August 407
244. Engels to Marx. 26 August 409
245. Engels to Marx. 27 August 410
246. Marx to Auguste Vermorel. 27 August 413

Page Break me42.xii

247. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 27 August 415
248. Marx to Engels. 31 August 416
249. Engels to Marx. 1 September 417
250. Engels to Marx. 2 September 418
251. Marx to Engels. 4 September 419
252. Marx to Engels. 7 September 422
253. Engels to Marx. 9 September 422
254. Marx to Engels. 11 September 423
255. Engels to Marx. 11 September 425
256. Marx to Engels. 12 September 427
257. Marx to Engels. 12 September 429

258. Engels to Marx. 12 September 429
259. Marx to Engels. 13 September 431
260. Engels to Laura Marx. 23 September 431
261. Marx to Engels. 4 October 432
262. Engels to Marx. 8 October 436
263. Marx to Engels. 9 October 437
264. Marx to Engels. 10 October 438
265. Engels to Marx. 11 October 439
266. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 11 October 440
267. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 October 443
268. Engels to Marx. 13 October 445
269. Marx to Engels. 14 October 447
270. Engels to Marx. 15 October 448
271. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 15 October 449
272. Engels to Marx. 18 October 450
273. Engels to Hermann Meyer. 18 October 451
274. Marx to Engels. 19 October 452
275. Engels to Marx. 22 October 456
276. Engels to Marx. 1 November 457
277. Marx to Engels. 2 November 458
278. Engels to Marx. 5 November 461
279. Marx to Engels. 7 November 463
280. Engels to Marx. 8 November 465
281. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 8 and 20 November 467
282. Marx to Engels. 9 November 470
283. Engels to Marx. 10 November 470
284. Marx to Carl Siebel. 10 November 472
285. Marx to Engels. 14 November 473

Page Break me42.xiii

286. Engels to Marx. 24 November 474
287. Engels to Marx. 26 November 475
288. Marx to Engels. 27 November 476
289. Marx to Engels. 28 November 478
290. Engels to Marx. 28 November 479
291. Engels to Hermann Engels. 28 November 480
292. Marx to Engels. 29 November 482
293. Marx to Engels. 29 November 482
294. Engels to Marx. 29 November 483
295. Marx to Engels. 30 November 484
296. Marx to Victor Schily. 30 November 487
297. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 30 November 489
298. Engels to Marx. 4 December 491
299. Engels to Marx. 6 December 491
300. Marx to Engels. 7 December 493
301. Marx to Engels. 7 December 496

302. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 7 December 496
303. Engels to Marx. 12 December 497
304. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 December 499
305. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 13 December 500
306. Marx to Engels. 14 December 501
307. Engels to Marx. 16 December 503
308. Marx to Engels. 17 December 504
309. Engels to Marx. 19 December 505

Page me42.xiii
1868

310. Marx to Engels. 3 January 507
311. Engels to Jenny Marx. 3 January 508
312. Engels to Marx. 6 January 510
313. Engels to Marx. 7 January 511
314. Marx to Engels. 8 January 512
315. Marx to Engels. 8 January 514
316. Engels to Marx. 10 January 517
317. Marx to Engels. 11 January 519
318. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 11 January 521
319. Engels to Marx. 16 January 523
320. Engels to Marx. 23 January 525
321. Marx to Engels. 25 January 527
322. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 30 January 528

Page Break me42.xiv

323. Marx to Engels. 1 February 531
324. Engels to Marx. 2 February 532
325. Marx to Engels. 4 February 535
326. Engels to Marx. 11 February 537
327. Marx to Engels. 15 February 538
328. Marx to Engels. 20 February 538
329. Engels to Marx. 20 February 539
330. Engels to Marx. 1 March 540
331. Marx to Engels. 4 March 541
332. Marx to Engels. 6 March 542
333. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 6 March 543
334. Engels to Marx. 10 March 545
335. Engels to Marx. 13 March 546
336. Marx to Engels. 14 March 547
337. Marx to Engels. 16 March 549
338. Engels to Marx. 17 March 550
339. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 17 March 551
340. Marx to Engels. 18 March 553
341. Engels to Marx. 19 March 554

342. Marx to Engels. 23 March 556
343. Marx to Engels. 25 March 557
344. Engels to Marx. 29 March 560

Page me42.xiv
APPENDICES

1. Jenny Marx to Engels. Not before 29 November 1864 565
2. Jenny Marx to Engels. 30 March 1865 566
3. Karl Marx. Confession. 1 April 1865 567
4. Jenny Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 29 January 1866 568
5. Jenny Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. Beginning of February 1866 572
6. Jenny Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 26 February 1866 573
7. Jenny Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 1 April 1866 574
8. Jenny Marx to Engels. 24 December 1866 576
9. Jenny Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 5 October 1867 577
10. Jenny Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 24 December 1867 577
11. Jenny Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. After 10 January 1868 580
12. Laura Marx to Engels. 13 January 1868 583

Page me42.xiv
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 587
Name Index 675

Page Break me42.xv
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 717
Index of Periodicals 743
Subject Index 752

Page me42.xv
ILLUSTRATIONS

Third page of Marx's letter to Engels of 4 November 1864 13
Pages of Marx's Notebook for 1864-65 with the rough draft of his letter to Léon Fontaine of 15 April 1865 145
Karl Marx with his daughter Jenny. End of March 1866, Margate 248-49
Frederick Engels. 1860s. Manchester 296-97
The British Museum 328-29
First page of Engels' letter to Marx of 4 April 1867 353
Karl Marx. End of April 1867. Hanover 360-61
Marx's letter to Engels of 16 August 1867 403
Otto Meissner Publishing House in Hamburg where Marx brought the manuscript of Volume One of Capital in 1867 488-89

A page from the album of Jenny, Marx's daughter, containing Marx's 'Confession' 569

Page Break me42.xvi
Page Break me42.xvii
Page me42.xvii
TRANSLATORS:

CHRISTOPHER UPWARD: Letters 1-27, 29, 31-65, 67-72, 74-99, 101-08, 110-12, 114-39, 141, 145-52, 154-58, 160-83, 185, 188-220, 222, 224-38, 240-309; Appendices 1, 2, 4-10

JOHN PEET: Letters 310-44; Appendices 11

Page Break me42.xviii
Page Break me42.xix

Preface

Page me42.xix

Volume 42 of the Collected Works of Karl Marx and Frederick Engels contains their correspondence from October 1864 to March 1868. Chronologically, the volume covers the period, very important for the history of Marxism and the international working-class movement, of the founding and the early years of the International Working Men's Association (the First International). This period was also marked by the publication of Marx's most important work, Volume One of Capital.

Page me42.xix

With the foundation of the International the correspondence of Marx and Engels became particularly intense and ideologically rich, and the circle of people with whom they corresponded, active members of the working-class movement in various countries, grew wider. An important place in their letters is devoted to the pressing problems of the organisation and revolutionary tactics of the working class, to the theory and practice of the proletarian struggle.

Page me42.xix

Marx and Engels had countless ties with the working-class movement. This can be seen from the numerous letters published in this volume that deal with the activity of the International Working Men's Association, an organisation set up with Marx's direct participation. These letters are one of the most important sources revealing the history of the emergence of the International and the way that it turned under the guidance of Marx and Engels into a true centre for uniting the militant forces of the working class. All of Marx's previous activity had prepared him for the task of leading the movement of the international proletariat, and Engels was fully justified in writing later that among those who attended the meeting in St Martin's Hall,

Page Break me42.xx

London, on 28 September 1864 to proclaim the International 'there was only one person who was clear as to what was to happen and what was to be founded: it was the man who had already in 1848 issued to the world the call: “Proletarians of All Countries, Unite!”" (see Frederick Engels, 'Marx, Heinrich Karl', present edition, Vol. 27).
Page me42.xx

'Marx was the heart and soul of this organisation' is how Lenin described the role of the founder and leader of the first international mass organisation of the proletariat (V.I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 21, Moscow, 1977, p. 49).
Page me42.xx

The letters included in this volume throw light on Marx's many-sided activity in the International Working Men's Association, his leading role on its guiding body, the Central (General) Council, his active participation in all the discussions that took place in the Council, the drafting of its decisions and the preparation of congresses of the International, their agendas and resolutions. From the letters it is also obvious that after the founding of the International Engels constantly helped Marx in guiding it. Until his move from Manchester to London in 1870, Engels could not take part directly in the work of the General Council, but during those years too Marx discussed all important questions concerning the International with him, kept him informed of the course of discussions in the Council and of the decisions being drafted, and made use of his recommendations. Engels helped to draw up the tactical line of the International, explaining it in letters to active members of the working-class movement, particularly in Germany, and frequently wrote to the press to present the position of the International Working Men's Association on various questions.
Page me42.xx

Marx guided the activity of the new organisation with characteristic confidence, skilfully overcoming the difficulties obstructing the path of the development of an independent proletarian movement. He constantly thwarted attempts by petty-bourgeois democrats and supporters of sectarian and reformist trends to deflect the International Working Men's Association from a revolutionary course and to subject it to tasks and aims alien to the interests of the working-class movement.
Page me42.xx

Marx's letters to Engels of 4 November, to Joseph Weydemeyer and Lion Philips of 29 November 1864 and others show what an effort it cost Marx, right from the foundation of the International, to counteract the constant attempts by petty-bourgeois elements to exert their influence over it. Thanks to Marx's endeavours the new organisation acquired a truly proletarian class character. The first considerable success in this respect, of historic significance, was the adoption by the Central Council of the Inaugural Address and Provisional Rules of the International drafted by Marx. As Marx himself admitted, it was no easy task to work out a common platform for all the different contingents of the working class, with their different levels of development, that had been drawn into the ranks of the International. But Marx, author of its first programme and its associated documents, performed this task brilliantly. Without making the slightest concession of principle to sectarian trends, these documents did not shut the doors of the international organisation to the British trade unions, the French and Belgian Proudhonists, or the German Lassalleans. On learning from Marx of the content of the Inaugural Address, Engels wrote that he could not wait to see it and that 'it must be a real masterpiece' (see this volume, p. 20).

Page Break me42.xxi

Page me42.xxi

While guiding the International and drafting all the most important documents that set out the strategy and tactics of the proletarian movement, Marx persistently did his utmost to ensure that in the daily battles for particular and purely economic demands the workers should gain an understanding of the common tasks of their class struggle against capitalism. The establishment of firm contacts by the International with the working-class organisations in various countries, the setting up of sections of the International in the main European countries, its active support of the strike movement in 1865-67, and the victories gained by striking workers in a number of industries in Britain and France thanks to this support — all this helped to enhance the authority of the International Working Men's Association and helped the workers to realise gradually the strength of proletarian solidarity.
Page me42.xxi

As the correspondence shows, during this period Marx and Engels devoted considerable attention to the formation and ideological training of progressive militants of the working class. Marx sought to create a strong nucleus of proletarian revolutionaries on the General Council and administrative bodies of the International in various countries. Under his direct influence, the Germans Georg Eccarius, Friedrich Lessner and Karl Pfänder, the Frenchman Eugéne Dupont, the Englishman Robert Shaw, the Swiss Hermann Jung and other members of the General Council acquired the necessary theoretical knowledge and became acquainted with scientific socialism. The letters from Marx and Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht, Paul Lafargue, Johann Philipp Becker, Joseph Weydemeyer and other eminent figures in the working-class and socialist movement show how patiently and persistently they taught their friends and comrades, helping them with advice, responding to their requests and criticising their shortcomings and mistakes.

Page Break me42.xxii
Page me42.xxii

In the period of the activity of the International the need for an independent workers' press was particularly acute. 'It is impossible to have a movement here without its own press-organ,' Marx wrote to Engels on 2 December 1864. From the inception of the International Working Men's Association Marx and Engels directed their efforts towards setting up press-organs for it in Britain, France, Germany and Switzerland. They endeavoured to take part personally in the production of a number of newspapers and to lend them a revolutionary character. They also concerned themselves with the composition of the editorial boards and contributors and encouraged like-minded people to work on them (see Marx's letters to Engels of 2 December 1864, 9 May and 26 December 1865 and others). Thanks to this, the leaders of the International not only organised the widespread publication of its documents in various countries, but also trained a whole galaxy of working-class journalists who propagated its ideas.

Page me42.xxii

Marx attached great importance to the establishment of close relations between the International and the British trade unions. He strongly supported the participation of their representatives in its founding, believing that this would help to disseminate the ideas of the International in Britain, then the citadel of the capitalist world and the country with the most developed and organised working-class movement (see Marx's letter to Ludwig Kugelmann of 29 November 1864). Marx saw the further drawing of the British trade unions into the ranks of the International as an important way of broadening its mass base in the British Isles, and also as a means of overcoming the narrow-mindedness typical of British trade unions, expressed in their efforts to limit their activity to the economic struggle. To arouse the political activity of the trade unions and turn them into real centres of resistance to the capitalist system — this was the task that Marx set before the International in including, among other things, the question of the trade unions in the agenda of the Geneva Congress (see Marx's letter to Hermann Jung of 20 November 1865). The General Council relied on the support of the trade unions, organising campaigns to aid strikers both in Britain and on the Continent and thereby helping to kindle a spirit of proletarian solidarity in British workers.

Page Break me42.xxiii
Page me42.xxiii

The leaders of the large London trade unions represented a considerable force on the General Council, and from the very beginning of the International Marx sought to use the authority of these 'real worker-kings of London' (p. 44) in order to strengthen the position of the International in Britain. At the same time, taking into account the ideological dependence of many trade union leaders on bourgeois liberals and radicals, he did his utmost to counteract any reformist tendencies shown by them. Marx's tactics aimed at removing obstacles to making the British working class a revolutionary force. He frequently managed to encourage reformist-minded trade union leaders to act in a revolutionary way.

Page me42.xxiii

One of the most striking episodes in the activity of the International in Britain was its participation in the broad movement for electoral reform that began in spring 1865. On Marx's advice, the British members of the General Council joined with representatives of the radical bourgeoisie in the leadership of the Reform League to campaign for the demand for universal suffrage. After beginning in London, the movement gradually gained strength, spreading to the provinces, and its powerful dimensions gave Marx grounds for hoping that it would be successful. 'If we succeed in re-electrifying the political movement of the English working class,' he wrote to Engels on 1 May 1865, 'our Association will already have done more for the European working class, without making any fuss, than was possible in any other way.'

Page me42.xxiii

Using the influence of the International on British workers, Marx strove to give the reform movement a radical nature, to turn it into a national struggle for a democratic political system in Britain, to encourage workers to stand for their own political platform, regardless of the position of the bourgeois parties (see Marx's letters to Kugelmann of 23 February 1865 and 9 October 1866, to Engels of 13 May 1865, and others). In this connection the drawing into the struggle for reform of those strata of British trade union workers who had previously been indifferent to politics both pleased Marx and encouraged high hopes. 'We have succeeded in attracting into the movement,' he wrote to Ludwig Kugelmann on 15 January 1866, 'the only really big workers' organisation, the English “Trade Unions”, which previously concerned themselves exclusively with the wage question.'

Page me42.xxiii
The reform movement did not yield the expected results, however. The unity of its supporters was undermined by the bourgeois radicals who renounced the League's original programme calling for universal suffrage. After having come 'to a compromise with the bourgeoisie' (Marx to Johann Philipp Becker of 31 August 1866), the reformist trade union leaders began playing up to the radicals. This enabled the ruling circles in Britain to limit themselves to introducing a moderate reform in 1867 that extended the franchise to the top strata of the working class only. The need to assert a truly proletarian world outlook and principles of revolutionary tactics of the proletariat, to counter reformist ideology and practice had now become even more evident. It was to this end that the subsequent activity of Marx and his associates in the International in Britain was directed.

Page Break me42.xxiv

Page me42.xxiv
As can be seen from their correspondence, Marx and Engels focused their attention also on the prospects for the development of the German working-class movement. As Corresponding Secretary for Germany on the General Council, Marx hoped that the German proletariat would become one of the leading national detachments of the International Association. The objective prerequisites for this existed. The activity of the Communist League and the Neue Rheinische Zeitung during the revolution of 1848-49 prepared the ground for the dissemination of the ideas of scientific socialism in Germany. However, the propagation of these ideas and the principles of the International came up against serious obstacles there. Reactionary legislation prevented the formation of the sections of the International. On the other hand, the very ideas of the international class solidarity of workers encountered resistance from Ferdinand Lassalle's followers, who had inherited his sectarian dogmas and nationalistic approach to the working-class movement. 'As long as these abominable Lassalleans rule the roost in Germany, that country will be infertile ground for the “International Association”,' Marx wrote to Engels on 13 February 1865.
Page me42.xxiv
A number of Marx's and Engels' letters written shortly after Lassalle's death in 1864 contain an assessment both of his services to the cause of the liberation of the German working-class movement from the tutelage of the liberal 'patrons' (Schulze-Delitzsch and others) and of the harm that his mistaken views and tactics had done to the development of the class consciousness of the German workers. In a letter to Kugelmann of 23 February 1865 and a number of other letters, Marx noted that Lassalle did not understand the real conditions for the liberation of the working class, had only a superficial knowledge of the ideas of scientific socialism, and tended to vulgarise economic theory. In campaigning for the solution of the social question by setting up producer associations with state help, Lassalle was fostering the illusion of the 'social mission' of the reactionary Prussian monarchy (see this volume, p. 101). At the same time he denied the expediency of the economic struggle of the working class and opposed the creation of trade unions, the true centres of organisation of the workers. By orienting the latter towards attaining their goals by reformist means, Lassalle began the opportunist trend in the German working-class movement.

Page Break me42.xxv
Page me42.xxv

In a number of letters Marx and Engels criticised Lassalle's political tactics. They condemned the absolute importance that he attached to the demand for universal suffrage, which he proclaimed as the most effective way of liberating the proletariat. The example of Bonapartism in France enabled them to foresee the demagogical use of this demand by the Prussian counter-revolution. They also strongly condemned Lassalle's policy of flirting with Bismarck and his attempt to form an alliance with the Prussian Junkers against the bourgeoisie, particularly after they learnt of Lassalle's direct negotiations with the head of the Prussian government. 'Objectively it was the act of a scoundrel, the betrayal of the whole workers' movement to the Prussians,' Engels wrote to Marx on 27 January 1865.
Page me42.xxv

In opposition to the Lassalleans, Marx and Engels sought to set the German working-class movement on the revolutionary path. They attached great importance to bringing the General Association of German Workers, founded by Lassalle in 1863, into the International (see Marx's letter to Carl Siebel of 22 December 1864). The Association had many healthy proletarian elements within its ranks, including former members of the Communist League, and Marx hoped that if the General Association of German Workers joined the International this would be an important step towards overcoming Lassalleanism and that eventually it would be possible radically to reshape this organisation, to change its programme and tactics and also its organisational principles. However, the Lassallean leaders of the Association opposed its joining the International.
Page me42.xxv

In the struggle against the influence of Lassalleanism on the German working-class movement an important part was played by Engels' pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party published in Germany in February 1865. Marx and Engels discussed its plan and content in detail in their letters. In them they denounce the social demagogy of the Prussian

Page Break me42.xxvi government and Bismarck's use of the Bonapartist tactics of manoeuvring between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat, reveal the inconsistency and cowardice of the bourgeois opposition Party of Progress and determine the tasks of the working class in the struggle for democratic transformations in Germany (see, for example, Marx's letters to Engels of 3, 10 and 18 February 1865). The ideas expressed in their letters were developed in the pamphlet, in which Engels stressed that the main thing in the tactics of the working class was to avoid compromise with reaction, to denounce the anti-revolutionary role of the bourgeoisie and to pursue the policy of creating an independent proletarian party.

Page me42.xxvi

An important milestone in the break by Marx, Engels and their supporters with the Lassalleans was the cessation of their short-lived cooperation on the Berlin Social-Demokrat. The letters of Marx and Engels reflect their relations with this newspaper of the General Association of German Workers quite fully. By agreeing to contribute to it, Marx and Engels hoped to influence the German working-class movement in the spirit of the principles of the International, and later Marx intended to make use of the Social-Demokrat to propagate the ideas of Capital. On 14 November 1864 he wrote to Engels: 'It is important for us to have a mouthpiece in Berlin, especially for the sake of the association I was involved in founding in London, and for the sake of the book I am planning to publish.' However, the Social-Demokrat's servile attitude to Bismarck's government and the cult of Lassalle that was blown up out of all proportions in its columns caused Marx and Engels to review their decision. Convinced that, in spite of their warnings, the newspaper's editor Schweitzer was still trying to justify the policies of the Prussian ruling circles and to sing the praises of Lassalle, they both announced publicly that they refused to contribute to it (pp. 96-97, 98-99, 104-05, etc.).
Page me42.xxvi

After the break with the Social-Demokrat Marx and Engels continued to strengthen contacts with the German workers, relying on the progressive elements who were disillusioned with Lassalle's dogmas and the tactics of making advances to government circles, and helped a considerable section of the German proletariat to part company with Lassalleanism.
Page me42.xxvi

Marx and Engels gave constant support to Wilhelm Liebknecht and later to August Bebel in their struggle to consolidate the forces of the German working class on a revolutionary basis, on the platform of the International. This help was particularly great at the time when the question of the ways of the national unification of Germany was being decided and circumstances demanded that German proletarian revolutionaries should put up a firm challenge to Bismarck's policy of uniting the country from above, under the supremacy of Prussia, by opposing to it the policy of revolutionary democratic unification from below. At that juncture, as Marx and Engels frequently stressed in their letters, it was most important to denounce the militaristic regime of the united state being created by Bismarck, to support democratic demands and to rally militant detachments of the German proletariat on a national level (pp. 297-98, 300, etc.). Marx and Engels expressed their warm approval of Liebknecht's speeches criticising the policies of the Prussian ruling circles from the tribune of the North German Reichstag to which he was elected with Bebel in 1867. 'Liebknecht is doing very well,' Engels wrote to Marx on 13 October 1867 concerning one of the denunciatory speeches by this true parliamentarian of the working class. The activity of Liebknecht, Bebel and their supporters, the creation of German sections of the International, the increasing influence of its ideas among the German workers, and the growing opposition to the Lassallean leadership in the ranks of the General Association of German Workers — all this inspired Marx and Engels with the conviction that the working-class movement in Germany would take the path of revolutionary struggle and master the principles of scientific socialism.

Page Break me42.xxvii

Page me42.xxvii

Seeking to consolidate the position of the International in France, Marx did his utmost to counter the claims of bourgeois republicans to leadership of its local organisations. To this end, on his initiative the Central Council adopted decisions on the conflict in the Paris section (see Marx's letters to Engels of 25 February and 7 March 1865 and to Hermann Jung of 13 March 1865). At the same time Marx was constantly searching for ways of overcoming the belief of a section of French workers in utopian Proudhonist doctrines. This is why in the letters published in this volume so much space is devoted to criticism of Proudhon's petty-bourgeois views that had a perceptible influence during this period not only on the French, but also on the Belgian and to some extent on the Swiss working-class movement. A generalised criticism of Proudhon's views was provided by Marx in his letter to Kugelmann of 9 October 1866 where he sums up the results of the Geneva Congress at which the difference between Proudhon's views and the revolutionary line of the leadership of the International became particularly evident: 'Beneath the cloak of freedom and anti-governmentalism or anti-authoritarian individualism these gentlemen, who for 16 years now have so quietly endured the most wretched despotism, and are still enduring it, are in actuality preaching vulgar bourgeois economics, only in the guise of Proudhonist idealism!'

Page Break me42.xxviii

Page me42.xxviii

Analysing the causes of the spread of Proudhonist utopias, Marx points to Proudhon's 'pseudo-critique' of the bourgeois system, to his outwardly radical phraseology that impressed the 'jeunesse brillante' (brilliant youth) and students, and also the backward, semi-artisan strata of workers engaged in small-scale production (p. 326). Marx strongly condemns the Proudhonists for their disparaging attitude to 'all revolutionary action, i.e. arising from the class struggle itself, every concentrated social movement, and therefore also that which can be achieved by political means (e.g., such as limitation of the working day by law)' (ibid.). In a letter to Engels of 20 June 1866 Marx describes the sharp reproof which, in the course of a discussion on the Austro-Prussian war of 1866, he delivered to a number of French members of the General Council of the International who were seeking in a spirit of Proudhonist nihilism to call nations and nationalities 'obsolete prejudices'.

Page me42.xxviii

Marx's letters in this volume also show what importance he attached to the setting up of sections of the International in countries like Belgium (see his letters to Léon Fontaine of 15 April and 25 July 1865) and Switzerland (see his letters to Johann Philipp Becker of 13 January, Kugelmann of 15 January 1866 and others). For propagating the principles of the International Working Men's Association and founding its sections in the USA Marx made use of contacts with Joseph Weydemeyer, Sigfrid Meyer and other participants in the European revolutionary movement who emigrated to America. Marx and Engels followed closely the development of the working-class movement in the USA, noting each of its successes with pleasure. Thus, Marx rated the results of the workers' congress in Baltimore very highly: 'The watchword there was organisation for the struggle against capital, and, remarkably enough, most of the demands I had put up for Geneva were put up there, too, by the correct instinct of the workers' (p. 326).

Page me42.xxviii

During this period Marx and Engels paid great attention to drafting the platform of the International on the national question. They substantiated the tactics of the international proletarian organisation in relation to the national liberation movement, regarding the support of the working class for the liberation struggle of the oppressed nations as one of the most important conditions of its own liberation. The correspondence of Marx and Engels reveals how much energy Marx spent on organising public meetings and gatherings in defence of the fighters for Poland's independence. Unlike the Proudhonists, the leaders of the International regarded the demand that Poland should be reorganised on a democratic basis as an integral part of the struggle for the democratic transformation of Europe, in which the working class had a vital interest. Marx's consistently internationalist standpoint on the Polish question was also reflected in his polemic with the English radical journalist Peter Fox, one of the leaders of the British National League for the Independence of Poland. Although supporting Poland's national sovereignty, Fox shared the Francophile attitudes of the English radicals and the illusions of the Right bourgeois-aristocratic wing of the Polish national movement concerning 'assistance' to it from the ruling circles of the Western powers (see Marx's letters to Engels of 10 December 1864, 25 February and 4 March 1865, to Jung of 13 April 1865, and others). In his polemic with Fox Marx argued that the Polish revolutionaries should look not to the Western powers, who had treacherously betrayed the interests of insurgent Poland, but to the European proletariat, its true and selfless ally. In the opinion of Marx and Engels, the prime role in the liberation of Poland should be played by the united efforts of the representatives of the Polish national liberation and Russian revolutionary movements, their joint struggle against the common foe — Tsarist autocracy.

Page Break me42.xxix

Page me42.xxix

An important contribution to the elaboration of the national and colonial question and the substantiation of the principles of proletarian internationalism was made by Marx and Engels in connection with determining the International's position on the liberation struggle of the Irish people. Their letters that deal with this problem formulate a number of fruitful ideas concerning the interdependence and inter-connection of the national liberation and proletarian movements. The national liberation of Ireland and the revolutionary democratic transformation of its agrarian structure was regarded by Marx as an essential prerequisite for the successful development of the British proletarian movement and for ridding the British workers of reformist and chauvinistic prejudices. In his letters to Engels of 2 and 30 November 1867, he set out the basic demands of his proposed programme on the Irish question, which he trusted would receive the support of the British working class. The main ones were: Irish self-government and independence from Britain, an agrarian revolution and the introduction of protective tariffs to ensure the country's economic independence. Noting that the British ruling classes had virtually established colonial rule in Ireland, introducing the practice of 'clearing' estates, i.e. evicting Irish peasants from the land in the interests of English landlords and capitalists, Marx in a letter to Engels described this as a blatant manifestation of national enslavement mixed with social oppression: 'In no other European country has foreign rule assumed this form of direct expropriation of the natives' (p. 461).

Page Break me42.xxx
Page me42.xxx
On the initiative of Marx the General Council of the International conducted a campaign of support for the Irish people, while Marx himself in his public statements constantly defended the fighters for Irish independence, the Fenians. He stressed that the activity of these petty-bourgeois revolutionaries reflected the protest by the mass of the peasantry against the policy of eviction from the land, and also the discontent of the urban poor with the colonial regime. Describing Fenianism, Marx pointed out that it 'is characterised by socialist (in the negative sense, as directed against the appropriation of the soil) leanings and as a lower orders movement' (p. 486).
Page me42.xxx
At the same time Marx and Engels were clearly aware of the weaknesses of Fenianism and emphasised that conspiratorial, adventurist tactics, and the use of terroristic methods of struggle did harm to the national liberation movement and prevented the establishment of international unity of action between the British proletariat and the Irish working people (see Marx's letters to Engels of 28 November and 14 December 1867 and of Engels to Marx of 29 November and 19 December 1867).
Page me42.xxx
Commenting on the importance of the struggle to liberate Ireland and the participation of English workers in this struggle expressed in the letters of Marx and Engels, Lenin wrote in 1914: 'In the Irish question, too, Marx and Engels pursued a consistently proletarian policy, which really educated the masses in a spirit of democracy and socialism. Only such a policy could have saved both Ireland and England half a century of delay in introducing the necessary reforms, and prevented these reforms from being mutilated by the Liberals to please the reactionaries' (V.I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 20, Moscow, 1977, pp. 441-42).

Page Break me42.xxxi
Page me42.xxxi
The correspondence of Marx and Engels illustrates Marx's truly colossal work on his main life's work, Capital. In a number of cases letters alone enable us to ascertain precisely what problems of economic theory were of interest to him at this or that point in time, to date the different preliminary versions of Capital and to determine the nature of non-extant manuscripts. From the letters we can get an idea of the way in which Engels helped Marx during the writing of Capital, of their constant exchange of views on problems of political economy, and of Engels' part in collecting factual material, determining the specific features of capitalist production and the influence of the economic situation, crises, etc., on it (see, for example, Engels' letters to Marx of 12 April 1865, 26 and 27 August 1867 and others).

Page me42.xxxi

Aware of the role that his work would have to play in the development of scientific socialism and the proletarian movement, Marx devoted all his energies to it, 'studying by day and writing by night'. 'I have not an hour to spare,' he wrote during this period (pp. 263 and 214). Marx hoped to 'deal the bourgeoisie a theoretical blow from which it will never recover' (letter to Carl Klings of 4 October 1864). Explaining to Ludwig Kugelmann the reasons for his refusal to attend the Geneva Congress of the International, Marx wrote on 23 August 1866: 'I consider that what I am doing through this work is far more important for the working class than anything I might be able to do personally at any congrés quelconque [congress whatsoever].'
Page me42.xxxi

In January 1866 Marx began to prepare Volume One of Capital for publication on the basis of the manuscripts of 1863-65. At first he assumed that it would contain the first two books 'The Process of Production of Capital' and 'The Process of Circulation of Capital', but already in the course of the work he decided that it would contain only the first book. And although he himself wrote that he had begun recopying it and 'polishing the style' (Marx to Engels of 13 February 1866), much more than that was involved. Some chapters were considerably expanded by introducing new material. Thus, for the sections on the working day, machinery and the general law of capitalist accumulation, Marx made extensive use of factual data in the recently published Blue Books (containing the reports of parliamentary commissions, such as the Children's Employment Commission), about which he informed Engels on 21 July 1866 and in a number of other letters (p. 296).
Page me42.xxxi

The extreme exhaustion resulting from his scientific work and the performance of his numerous duties as a leader of the International and the constant material hardships had a serious effect on Marx's health. As can be seen from many letters, the preparation of the manuscript of the first volume of Capital for the publishers was frequently interrupted by acute bouts of ill health which forced Marx to put aside the work. 'Dear Mr Kugelmann, you can believe me when I tell you there can be few books that have been written in more difficult circumstances,' Jenny Marx confided in Kugelmann in a letter of 24 December 1867, 'and I am sure I could write a secret history of it which would tell of many, extremely many unspoken troubles and anxieties and torments' (p. 578). Nevertheless, in November 1866 Marx was able to send the first part of the manuscript to Hamburg, and on 2 April 1867 he informed Engels that he had completed the book and would take the manuscript to the publisher himself in a few days' time.

Page Break me42.xxxii
Page me42.xxxii

The Marx-Engels correspondence from May to August 1867 reflects the work of proof-reading the first volume. Marx systematically sent sheets of print to his friend in Manchester. Thus Engels was the first reader and most competent reviewer of Marx's great masterpiece. After reading the greater part of it, he congratulated the author on elucidating the most complex economic problems 'simply and almost sensuously merely by arranging them suitably and by placing them in the right context' (p. 405). 'The theoretical side is quite splendid,' Engels remarked in his letter of 1 September 1867, adding: 'The résumé on the expropriation of the expropriators is most brilliant and will create quite an effect.'

Page me42.xxxii

At the same time Engels made certain suggestions for improving the structure of the book and expounding a number of questions. In this respect, his letters to Marx of 16 and 26 June and 23 August and Marx's letters to Engels of 3, 22 and 27 June and 24 August 1867 are of considerable interest. Taking account of Engels' suggestions, Marx wrote a special appendix on the form of value.

Page me42.xxxii

Marx greatly appreciated Engels' opinion of Capital. He wrote: 'That you have been satisfied with it so far is more important to me than anything the rest of the world may say of it' (p. 383). A striking document revealing the collaboration between the two great thinkers and revolutionaries, and a moving testimony to Marx's profound gratitude to his friend, is Marx's letter to Engels written on 16 August 1867 at 2.0. a.m. when he had just finished correcting the last sheet of Volume One of Capital. 'So, this volume is finished. I owe it to you alone that it was possible! Without your self-sacrifice for me I could not possibly have managed the immense labour demanded by the 3 volumes. I embrace you, full of thanks!'

Page Break me42.xxxiii

Page me42.xxxiii

The publication of Volume One of Capital (September 1867) became an outstanding event in the history of human thought. As Lenin said, in his Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy and particularly in Capital Marx 'revolutionised' political economy (V.I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 21, Moscow, 1978, p. 49). Volume One of Capital contains a thorough analysis and explanation of the essence of capitalist exploitation, reveals and expounds the economic laws of the motion of bourgeois society and shows the inevitability of capitalism being replaced by a new social system as a result of a revolution carried out by the working class. In this work Marx gave the proletariat a mighty ideological weapon in its struggle for the socialist transformation of society. 'Marx's economic theory alone has explained the true position of the proletariat in the general system of capitalism,' stressed Lenin (Collected Works, Vol. 19, Moscow, 1977, p. 28). History has confirmed the correctness of Marx's comparison of Volume One of Capital with 'the most terrible missile that has yet been hurled at the heads of the bourgeoisie (landowners included)' (p. 358).

Page me42.xxxiii

The letters included in this volume also deal with the steps taken by Marx and Engels to popularise Volume One of Capital and its main ideas. On 27 April 1867 Engels wrote to Marx: 'I am convinced that the book will create a real stir from the moment it appears, but it will be very necessary to help the enthusiasm of the scientifically-inclined burghers and officials on to its feet and not to despise petty stratagems.' To attract attention to Capital Marx and Engels sent copies to their comrades and acquaintances, circulated notices through the publisher Otto Meissner announcing its publication, wrote reviews for various press organs and published extracts from the preface to Volume One in various periodicals.

Page me42.xxxiii

Engels played a most important part in propagating Volume One of Capital. In order to thwart a possible 'conspiracy of silence' by bourgeois scholars, Engels suggested attacking 'the book from the bourgeois point of view'. Marx fully approved of his friend's plan, describing it as 'the best tactic' (p. 427).
Page me42.xxxiii

Engels prepared a series of brilliantly written reviews for liberal and democratic newspapers (see present edition, Vol. 20). Their publication made it impossible for bourgeois ideologists to ignore Capital and helped to expose attempts to belittle the importance of Marx's work and distort its content.

Page Break me42.xxxiv
Page me42.xxxiv

However, the main aim behind all the efforts by Marx and Engels to disseminate and propagate Capital was to equip the working-class movement with a revolutionary economic theory, to introduce workers to truly scientific ideas concerning ways of getting rid of capitalist exploitation. It is no accident that in his letter of 30 November 1867 Marx asked Kugelmann to explain to Liebknecht 'that it really is his duty to draw attention to my book at workers' meetings'. Engels in his turn wrote to Hermann Meyer on 18 October 1867: 'I hope you will be able to bring Marx's book to the attention of the German-American press and of the workers. With the 8-hour-agitation that is in progress in America now, this book with its chapter on the working day will come at just the right time for you over there, and, in other respects too, it is likely to clarify people's minds on a variety of issues.' Other letters in this volume also testify to the true party concern for the working-class movement and the practical application of the conclusions of Marx's economic theory.
Page me42.xxxiv

The correspondence of Marx and Engels for this period shows what great importance they attached to the publication of Capital in other languages. Already on 31 July 1865, when the book was only being prepared for publication, Marx expressed the idea of making an English translation straightaway from the proofs of the German text. Subsequently, Marx and Engels returned frequently to the discussion of this question, looking for a translator and a publisher (see Engels' letters to Marx of 24 June and 23 August 1867; Marx's letters to Engels of 27 June and to Kugelmann of 11 October 1867 and 6 March 1868). Unfortunately, the English edition of Volume One of Marx's main work did not come out during his lifetime.
Page me42.xxxiv

At the same time efforts were made to prepare a French translation of Volume One. Marx believed that a French edition of Capital would help the French workers to realise how invalid Proudhon's reformist projects were for solving the social question. 'I consider it to be of the greatest importance to emancipate the French from the erroneous views under which Proudhon with his idealised petty-bourgeoisie has buried them,' he wrote to Ludwig Büchner on 1 May 1867. The search for a translator and publisher, as several letters show (including those of Marx to Engels of 28 November 1867 and to Victor Schily of 30 November 1867), turned out to be no easy matter in this case too. Marx was not able to realise his intention of bringing out a French translation of Volume One of Capital until 1872-75.

Page me42.xxxiv
The publication of Volume One of Capital was, as Marx

Page Break me42.xxxv
intended and the publisher insisted, to be followed by that of the two other volumes. Marx immediately set about revising his manuscripts of the second and third books of Capital, elaborating certain problems in greater detail as he went along. Thus, in his correspondence with Engels the question of the replacement of fixed capital is discussed (pp. 409-13); 'for the chapter on ground rent' (pp. 507-08) Marx asks Engels for help in selecting books and consultations on agro-chemistry, etc. 'We must keep a close watch on the recent and very latest in agriculture...,' he writes to Engels on 25 March 1868.
Page me42.xxxv
Marx showed a rare conscientiousness in his studies. Again and again he would return to what might appear to be sufficiently studied problems, making use of new material. This was one of the reasons for the delay in the preparation of the subsequent volumes of Capital. It was Engels who completed this task after Marx's death on the basis of Marx's manuscripts.

Page me42.xxxv
A subject of constant attention for Marx and Engels during the period under review was not only the state and level of development of the working-class movement in different countries, but also the general economic and political position of these countries, and the international situation. All this had to be taken into account in elaborating the tactics of the international working-class movement at different stages. Therefore, many of the letters in this volume contain a description of the most important events that took place during these years in Europe and beyond the Continent, new phenomena in economics, including those related to the economic crisis of 1866, and in political life. Marx and Engels discussed with each other and their acquaintances the details of the struggle of the political parties in England, the symptoms of the imminent bankruptcy of the Bonapartist regime in France, the situation in Germany produced by the growing rivalry between Prussia and Austria, Prussia's victory in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 and the first steps to carry out Bismarck's plan for uniting the country by 'blood and iron'. The founders of Marxism made a thorough examination of the alignment of forces in the international arena, and of the positions of the European powers in the conflicts that followed one after another (the Luxemburg crisis of 1867, the international complications arising from the Rome expedition of Garibaldi and his followers, the Crete uprising, etc.) and testified to the growing danger of a new war. The assessments made by Marx and Engels of all these events are remarkable for their historical accuracy and depth. They were based on a dialectical-materialist analysis of the phenomena in question, which made it possible to reveal their class roots and essence, to expose the contradictory aspects, to determine the possible consequences and to conclude from this what tasks confronted the working class.

Page Break me42.xxxvi

Page me42.xxxvi

Marx and Engels made a close study of the course of the US Civil War, which entered its final stage during this period. Their letters contain assessments of military operations and forecasts on the future development of events, a profound analysis of which enabled Marx and Engels to conclude that things were coming to a head and that the economic, moral and political advantages of the North would lead to the defeat of the slave-owning South.
Page me42.xxxvi

The revolutionising influence of the US Civil War on the development of the democratic and working-class movement was obvious to Marx and Engels. At the same time they also saw the limitations of the bourgeois democracy of the Northern states, and also the anti-democratic, sometimes downright counter-revolutionary trends in the policies of the bourgeois ruling circles of the North. Criticising President Johnson, who succeeded Lincoln, Marx and Engels noted that his policies reflected the desire of the big bourgeoisie in the North to ally with the defeated planters of the Southern states, and to continue the system of racial discrimination against the 'liberated' Black people, etc. Engels wrote to Marx on 15 July 1865 that renewed hatred towards blacks was 'coming out more and more violently' and that Johnson 'is relinquishing all his power vis-á-vis the old lords in the South.... Without coloured suffrage nothing can be done, and Johnson is leaving it up to the defeated, the ex-slaveowners, to decide on that. It is absurd.' That is why when Johnson was defeated in the 1866 elections Marx gave the main reason for this in a letter to François Lafargue in a single sentence: 'The workers in the North have at last fully understood that white labour will never be emancipated so long as black labour is still stigmatised' (p. 334).
Page me42.xxxvi

This statement by Marx is yet further confirmation that the events of his day, including questions of international politics, were seen by him and Engels primarily from the viewpoint of the interests of the revolutionary proletariat. Already during the founding of the International Marx called on the working class to proclaim its own independent policy opposed to that of the ruling classes. In his letter of 25 February 1865 to Engels he emphasised: 'The working class has its own foreign policy, which is most certainly not determined by what the middle class considers opportune.'

Page Break me42.xxxvii
Page me42.xxxvii

It was from this standpoint that Marx and Engels elaborated the tactics of the working class in connection with the growing threat of war in Europe. They condemned with severity the wars unleashed by the ruling classes for territorial, dynastic and anti-popular ends, and linked the struggle against such wars and against militarism in general with the liberation movement of the proletariat against the capitalist exploitatory system. It is no accident that when the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 broke out, Marx did his utmost to see that the International dissociated itself from the aggressive, expansionist tendencies introduced by the ruling circles of Germany and Italy into the struggle for the national unification of these countries, which was objectively progressive in the given historical situation. Marx and Engels saw these tendencies as a source of further aggravation of international contradictions, of fresh military conflicts. They predicted that the war of 1866 would be fraught with new, even more extensive military conflicts, first and foremost between Prussia and France. In a letter to Engels of 27 July 1866 Marx stressed that the end of the war would not lead to a lasting peace in Europe. 'That we shall soon be back to bashing is clear enough,' Engels replied to him on 6 August 1866. All this required the further mobilisation of the forces of the working class for the struggle against the threat of war.

Page me42.xxxvii

Criticising the pacifist illusions of the bourgeois-democratic League of Peace and Freedom, Marx and Engels at the same time supported the idea of joint action by the working class with all truly anti-militarist forces prepared to stand up for peace between nations in deeds and not just in words. Guided by Marx the International tirelessly carried on an energetic struggle for peace, consistently denouncing the foreign policy and diplomacy of the ruling classes in the capitalist countries.

Page me42.xxxvii

From this volume it is clear that from 1864 to 1868 Marx and Engels continued to study the natural and social sciences, in particular world history, philology, ethnography and philosophy. Marx's letter to Engels testifying to Marx's interest in higher mathematics and his study of differential calculus was written at the end of 1865. In their letters Marx and Engels exchange views on books they have read, talk about discoveries in various spheres of science and assess new scientific hypotheses (see, for example, pp. 7-8, 184-85, 212, 232, 291-92, 304-05, 320-25, 495, 547-49, 557-59).

Page Break me42.xxxviii

Page me42.xxxviii

Their letters show the leaders of the proletariat to be men with an extraordinarily wide range of interests, capable of discerning and assessing fruitful ideas and discoveries marking the steady advance of science. These discoveries, as Marx and Engels so rightly assumed, served as further proof of the correctness of the proletarian revolutionary world outlook and dialectical-materialist views on the development of nature and society. Thus, in the research on the social system of ancient and mediaeval Germany by the German historian Georg Maurer, Marx saw the 'Mark theory' as factual confirmation of the view, expressed earlier by Marx himself, that communal property in land came first, that everywhere it preceded the emergence of private property in land (see his letter to Engels of 14 March 1868). The striving of Marx and Engels to make full use of the latest achievements of the various sciences shows that Marxism, both during its formation and throughout its subsequent development, rested on the finest achievements of human thought.

Page me42.xxxviii

The biographical material contained in the letters in this volume gives a clear picture of the great thinkers and revolutionaries, and enables the reader to form a clear idea of the conditions in which they lived and struggled and the characteristic features of the theoretical and practical activity at the time when, after the founding of the International, they virtually became the leaders of the mass international proletarian movement. An important document in this respect that supplements the correspondence, is Marx's 'Confession' (answers to questions in a semi-humorous questionnaire) which reveals the richness and integrity of his personality (see Appendices).

Page me42.xxxviii

From the material in the volume it is clear that both Marx and Engels were extremely high-principled and unwavering on scientific and political questions, yet possessed the necessary flexibility in solving the urgent tasks of the working-class movement, and also that they were exceptionally modest and lacked any trace of personal vanity. Marx who frequently wrote that the whole burden of the leadership of the International lay virtually on him, stated in a letter to Liebknecht of 21 November 1865 that he could not read out his report on the German working-class movement at the London Conference because, as he wrote, 'I was too personally introduced in it'. Resolute and high-principled in criticising the errors of friends and comrades, Marx and Engels were always ready to encourage and support them and to come to their assistance. On 8 December 1864 Marx wrote to Engels: 'Apropos Liebknecht.... I have sent him money several times in the course of the last six months and now I want to send his wife something ... since I know they are in dire straits. I would appreciate it if you would make a contribution, too.'

Page Break me42.xxxix
Page me42.xxxix

Marx's service to the cause of the working class is exemplary. In a letter to Kugelmann of 9 October 1866, for example, he writes that if he were prepared 'to take up a practical trade' he could dispose of his pecuniary troubles entirely. But Marx never strove for personal well-being, although the hardships endured by his family caused him no little suffering. 'Working for the cause', for the party, for the liberation of the working class and the whole of the working people, that was Marx's aim throughout his life. 'I laugh at the so-called “practical” men and their wisdom,' he wrote on 30 April 1867 to Sigfrid Meyer, admitting what sacrifices the writing of Capital had cost him. 'If one wanted to be an ox, one could, of course, turn one's back on the sufferings of humanity and look after one's own hide. But I should really have thought myself unpractical if I had pegged out without finally completing my book....' And to his future son-in-law Paul Lafargue Marx wrote: 'You know that I have sacrificed my whole fortune to the revolutionary struggle. I do not regret it. Quite the contrary. If I had to begin my life over again, I would do the same' (p. 308).
Page me42.xxxix

The letters in this volume supplement the works written by Marx and Engels in the period in question. They provide an important source for studying Marxist ideas and the creative and revolutionary biographies of Marx and Engels, and for elucidating their leading role in the development of the working-class liberation movement at the stage when the foundations of the international proletarian struggle for socialism were being laid.

* * *
Page me42.xxxix

Volume 42 contains 344 letters from Marx and Engels, of which 159 are published in English for the first time and 185 were published earlier, most of them in part only. These publications are mentioned in the Notes. Of the 12 items included in the Appendices, two were written in English and the rest are published for the first time in this language.
Page me42.xxxix

During the work on the text of the volume and the notes and indexes to it the dating of some of the letters was established more accurately as a result of additional research. The two letters from Marx to Engels of 6 February 1865, printed earlier as independent ones, are published in this volume as one letter.

Page Break me42.xl
Page me42.xl

Obvious slips of the pen are corrected without comment. Proper names, geographical names and individual words contracted by the authors are given in full, except when these contractions were made for the sake of conspiracy or cannot be deciphered. Defects in the manuscript are indicated in the footnotes and passages with missing or illegible words are marked by three dots in square brackets. If the context allows a presumable reconstruction to be made of the missing or illegible words, these words are also given in square brackets. Passages crossed out by the authors are reproduced in the footnotes only in cases where there is a significant discrepancy. If a letter is a rough copy or a draft, a postscript to a letter of another person, or a fragment quoted elsewhere, this is marked either in the text itself or in the Notes.
Page me42.xl

Foreign words and expressions are retained in the form in which they were used by the authors with a translation where necessary in the footnotes and are italicised (if underlined by the authors, they are given in spaced italics). English words and expressions used by Marx and Engels in texts originally written in German, French and other languages are printed in small caps. Longer passages written in English in the original are placed in asterisks. Some of the words are now somewhat archaic or have undergone changes in usage. For example, the term 'nigger', which has acquired generally — but especially in the USA — a more profane and unacceptable status than it had in Europe during the 19th century.
Page me42.xl

Information on undiscovered letters mentioned in the text will be found in the Notes. If a fact or event is referred to in several letters, the same note number is used each time.
Page me42.xl

The volume was compiled, the text prepared and the Preface, Notes and the Subject Index written by Vladimir Sazonov and edited by Lev Golman (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the C.C. C.P.S.U.). The Name Index, the Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature and the Index of Periodicals were prepared by Natalya Kalennikova (Institute of Marxism-Leninism).
Page me42.xl

The translations were made by Christopher Upward and John Peet and edited by Eric Hobsbawm and Nicholas Jacobs (Lawrence & Wishart), Glenys Ann Kozlov, Lydia Belyakova, Elena Kalinina and Margarita Lopukhina (Progress Publishers), and Larisa Miskievich, scientific editor (Institute of Marxism-Leninism).
Page me42.xl
The volume was prepared for the press by the editors Svetlana Gerasimenko, Elena Kalinina and Anna Vladimirova (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me42.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
October 1864-March 1868

Page Break 2
Page Break me42.3

1864

1
MARX TO CARL KLINGS†1
IN SOLINGEN
Page me42.3
[Draft]
London, 4 October 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill†a

Dear Friend,
I was glad to receive further signs of life from the workers of the Rhine Province, as conveyed in your letter of 28 September.†2
Page me42.3
B. Becker or M. Hess? I know them both; both are old members of the movement. Both are honest. Neither of them is capable of leading a movement of any import. Becker is a weak man, in fact, and Hess a muddle-head. It is therefore difficult to decide between the two. I also think it scarcely signifies which of the two you elect, as there will be no difficulty in finding the right people at the decisive moment.
Page me42.3
Enquiries have reached me, e.g. from Berlin, as to whether I would accept the presidency?†3 I replied that it was impossible, because for the present I am still forbidden to take up residence in Prussia.†b However, I would certainly think it a good gesture by the party, vis-á-vis both the Prussian government and the bourgeoisie, if the workers' congress were to elect me, to which I would make a public reply explaining why I cannot accept the election. Such a step would be important for the following reason in particular: a big public MEETING of workers took place here in London on 28 September, with English, German, French and Italian workers participating. The Parisian workers had, moreover, sent over a special delegation, headed by Tolain, a worker, who was put up as a candidate by the working class in Paris in the last elections for the Corps législatif.†4

Page Break me42.4
Page me42.4
At this MEETING, a Comité was elected — an international Comité to represent the workers' interests, which is directly linked to the workers in Paris and includes the leaders of the London workers. I was elected as representative of the German workers (and my old friend Eccarius, the tailor, along with me).†a If I were thus nominated by the German congress — although I would have to decline the election now — the Comité and with it the workers in London and Paris would regard this as a gesture on the part of the German workers. Next year, the Comité will be calling an international workers' congress in Brussels.†5 Unfortunately, I shall not be able to attend in person, as I am still exiled from the model state of Belgium, just as I am from France and Germany.
Page me42.4
I shall send you some 'Manifestoes'†b at the first safe opportunity.
Page me42.4
This letter will be brought to you by one of my friends†c from Barmen.
Page me42.4
I have been sick throughout the past year (being afflicted with carbuncles and furuncles). Had it not been for that, my work on political economy, 'Capital', would already have come out. I hope I may now complete it finally in a couple of months and deal the bourgeoisie a theoretical blow from which it will never recover.
Page me42.4
Farewell; you may count on my remaining ever a loyal champion of the working class.

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.4
First published, in Russian, in Bolshevik, No. 8, 1934

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.5

2
MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT†6
IN BERLIN
Page me42.5
[Copy]
London, 16 October 1864

Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear Countess,

In recent weeks I have been so seriously ill that I was obliged to keep to my bed and hence, unfortunately, to defer until now my reply to your friendly letter of 1 October.
Page me42.5

I assure you that I still cannot bring myself to accept Lassalle's death as a fait accompli! I see him in my mind's eye so full of life, spirit, energy and plans, so very, very young, and now suddenly his voice is silenced and his breath departed — I find it impossible to reconcile the two, to conceive of both simultaneously, and the reality oppresses me like an awful, nightmarish dream.
Page me42.5

You are quite right to imply that no one appreciated Lassalle's greatness and significance better than I. He himself was most aware of this, as his letters to me show. As long as the correspondence between us lasted, I always expressed to him my heartfelt appreciation of his achievements, on the one hand, while always frankly advising him of my criticisms and reservations regarding those things I considered faulty, on the other.
Page me42.5

In one of his last letters to me he wrote, in that peculiarly forceful manner he had, of the satisfaction that this gave him. But, apart from all his abilities, I felt affection for him as a person. The pity is that we have always concealed this fact from one another, as if we were going to live for ever...†a

Page me42.5
First published in: F. Lassalle. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.6

3
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.6
[London,] 2 November 1864

Dear Engels,

Your long silence worries me. I presume you are back.†7 Why have we not heard from you?
Page me42.6

I have all kinds of important things to tell you, which I shall do immediately as soon as you give some sign of life.
Page me42.6

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.6
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

4
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.6
Manchester, 2 November 1864

Dear Moor,

The crisis and its innumerable vexations must be my excuse for not writing to you earlier. Never in my whole life have I had such a glut of Jewish chicanery as now, and you can just imagine how much correspondence that entails.
Page me42.6

Later this week, I shall go and see Borchardt to complete the business of Lupus' legacy,†8 which is now about to be concluded.
Page me42.6

My travels†7 took me as far as Sonderburg†a; I did not go to Copenhagen, in part because I had neither the time nor a passport, and in part because Bille, the editor of the Dagbladet, had just arrived in Lübeck when I was in Kiel, and so I had no contact in Copenhagen at all, never having seen any of the other papers anywhere.

Page Break me42.7
Page me42.7

Schleswig is a curious country — the east coast very pretty and prosperous, the west coast also prosperous, heath and moors in the middle. All the bays extremely beautiful. The people are decidedly one of the biggest and heaviest of all the human races on Earth, especially the Frisians on the west coast. One only needs to travel across the country to be convinced that the main stock of the English comes from Schleswig. You know the Dutch Frisians, in particular those colossal Frisian women with their delicate white and fresh red complexions (which also predominate in Schleswig). They are the ancestral types of the northern English, and in particular those colossal women, who are also found here in England, all are of decidedly Frisian type. There is no doubt in my mind that the 'Jutes' (Anglo-Saxon eotena cyn), who migrated to England with the Angles and Saxons, were Frisians, and that the Danish migration to Jutland, as to Schleswig, dates only from the 7th or 8th century. The present Jutland dialect is proof enough of this.
Page me42.7

These fellows are great fanatics and, for that reason, really took my fancy. You must have read something by that extraordinary 'Dr K.J. Clement of North Friesland'. The man is typical of the whole race. These fellows are in deadly earnest about their struggle against the Danes, which is their whole purpose in life, and the Schleswig-Holstein theory is not an end but a means for them. They regard themselves as a physically and morally superior race to the Danes, and indeed they are. Bismarck was really kidding himself when he thought he could get the measure of such people by his own methods.†9 We have held out against the Danes for fifteen years and became consolidated on our territory, and are we supposed to let these Prussian bureaucrats get us down? — that's what these fellows were saying.

Page me42.7

The situation regarding language and nationality is most bizarre. In Flensburg, where the Danes claim that the whole of the northern part is Danish, especially by the harbour, all the children, who were playing down by the harbour there in droves, spoke Low German. On the other hand, north of Flensburg the language of the people is Danish — i.e. the Low Danish dialect, of which I hardly understood a word. The peasants in the tavern at Sundewitt,†a however, spoke Danish, Low German and High

Page Break me42.8

German by turns, and neither there nor in Sonderburg, where I always addressed the people in Danish, was I answered in any language but German. At all events, Germanisation has encroached considerably on North Schleswig, and it would be very difficult to make it entirely Danish again, certainly more difficult than German. I would rather it was more Danish, for one day something will surely have to be given up to the Scandinavians here, for decency's sake.

Page me42.8

I have recently been doing some work on the philology and archaeology of the Frisians, Angles, Jutes and Scandinavians, and here, too, I have come to the conclusion that the Danes are no more than a nation of advocates, who will knowingly and brazenly lie, even in matters of scholarship, if it is in their interest. Mr Worsaae ON THE DANES ETC. IN ENGLAND TO WIT.†a By way of contrast, next time you come here I will show you a book, which is in the main very good, by the lunatic Clement from North Friesland about Schleswig and the migration to England in the 6th to 8th centuries.†b The fellow is certainly knowledgeable, despite his eccentricity. But he does appear to be a prodigious drinker.

Page me42.8

To my surprise, the Prussians in Schleswig created a very good impression, particularly the Westphalians, who looked like giants at the side of the Austrians, but admittedly much more ponderous. The whole army went around entirely unshaven, with their buttons undone and generally bearing themselves in a most unsoldier-like fashion, so that the natty Austrians acted almost like Prussians here. Amongst the officers of the Prussian artillery and engineers I encountered several very agreeable fellows, who told me all kinds of interesting things, but the infantry and cavalry maintained a most dignified reticence and enjoyed a thoroughly bad reputation with the population. There was a notable lack of enthusiasm for Prince Frederick Charles' conduct of the war, and no one at all, not even those who had been decorated, had a good word to say about the distribution of rewards. The non-commissioned officers behaved well towards the older soldiers, and indeed generally when in company; on the other hand, I did see one of the Brandenburg sappers drilling recruits in Sonderburg, a real old infamous Prussian. It was, by the way, remarkable to observe the different tone that prevailed in the 3rd and 7th army corps in this respect. Your March Tribe, as Georg Jung has it, submit to being kicked around and trampled on, whereas with the Westphalians (amongst whom there is a very strong admixture of Rhinelanders from the right bank) the non-commissioned officers mostly associate with their men d'égal á-égal.†a

Page Break me42.9
Page me42.9
What do you think of the commercial crisis? I think it is all over, i.e. the worst is. It is a pity these things do not come to a proper head.
Page me42.9
Can you explain: Rüm Hart, klar Kimmang?
Page me42.9
Give my kindest regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.9
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

5
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS†10
IN BARMEN
Page me42.9
Manchester, 2 November 1864

Dear Hermann,
No joy with the Niersteiner. The wine arrived here with a distinct sourness to it, it does not taste at all as it did at your house, and I shall therefore have to forgo any more orders.
Page me42.9
The money crisis, I think, is over. Now only 3 things can have any effect:
Page me42.9
1. possible major insolvencies owing to bad news from India. Such are, however, not expected by those most deeply involved. India had its crisis in the spring, when discount was at 32% in Bombay.

Page me42.9

2. large deliveries of cotton arriving in Liverpool, say 100,000 bales in one week, which would mean the sudden completion of a mass of loss-making contracts and consequent insolvencies. This danger also appears to be receding. The Liverpool men know how deeply they are all implicated and are being extremely tolerant towards each other. Those who cannot pay the difference lost in full are offering part of it, and a settlement is usually reached. Moreover, the deliveries arriving are moderate, and the cotton now at sea (400,000 bales from India and China) will probably come little by little, and no one will be hit very hard.

Page Break me42.10

Page me42.10

A favourable factor in both cases is that the money market is experiencing a decided lift and confidence is returning.

Page me42.10

3. if in America Lincoln were not elected. However, his re-election is as certain as anything ever can be in America. I have no doubt that the war will be continued until the South is totally subjugated,†11 irrespective of who becomes President, but if McClellan should be elected, at least 6 months of uncertainty would ensue, until people learned precisely what his policy was. But after the elections in the individual states, there can be no question of that happening.

Page me42.10

The result of all this will, in my view, be as follows: the American war will continue, certainly, until late next year, and will end with bands of Southerners resorting to brigandry, as in Naples 2 years ago,†12 in the course of which much cotton will be burnt. We shall therefore remain dependent on the same sources for our cotton as in the past year. Supplies from these are only increasing slowly. However, since consumption has become more and more limited owing to high prices, stocks of finished goods, even in the hands of the individual consumers themselves, must now be exceedingly small, and as consumption after all absolutely requires a very large quantity of cotton goods, I believe that increased demand will fully accommodate the increased supply of raw cotton, and, consequently, not only will the downward trend cease to continue, but by next summer we ought, by and large, to see a general rise.

Page me42.10

During the money crisis the price of cotton was not determined by the state of the cotton trade but by the state of the money market in general. I believe we've got over that now, and prices will once more be determined naturally by supply and demand, and then with the healthy state of business and the absolute deficiency in stocks, and with prices lower now, I am sure we can expect business to thrive with prices as a whole rising.

Page me42.10

There may yet be sporadic shocks, perhaps from India, perhaps from Liverpool. We may, in consequence, again find ourselves momentarily somewhat depressed, but it cannot last, nor will it be of any import, and it would assuredly be an error to speculate á la baisse†a on such evidence. Conversely, I am equally persuaded that any attempt to force prices up again rapidly would immediately be frustrated by the customers here and by the money market, too. This was already shown yesterday. Cotton has risen 3-3 1/2d. above its lowest point, yarns 1d., in some instances 1 1/2d. Yesterday, the spinners were demanding a further increase of approx. 1d., and business†a came to an immediate halt. If we succeed in forcing prices down another 1/2 PENNY á 1 PENNY in Liverpool, the spinners will be able to accept the prices being offered; otherwise, the purchasers will presumably have to pay the extra in the end, as the demand is undeniably there.

Page Break me42.11

Page me42.11

SEWINGS were still very quiet, especially seven LEAS, for which there is not a buyer to be found.
Page me42.11

This is my opinion. We are covered for one to two months and are expecting substantial ORDERS in a week or two.
Page me42.11

Please pass on my regards to Emma, the little ones, Rudolf, the Blanks and the Boellings, and, if you are writing to Engelskirchen, then to mother†b and everyone there, too. The chicaneries arising from the fall in prices have caused me a deal of botheration.

Your Frederick

Page me42.11
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, 1921

Printed according to the original and the Deutsche Revue

Published in English in full for the first time

6
MARX TO ENGELS†13
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.11
[London,] 4 November 1864

Dear FREDERICK,

I was very pleased to hear from you again.
Page me42.11

All well here. Myself included, since your departure from here†7 until the day before yesterday, when yet another carbuncle appeared below my right breast. If the thing does not clear up quickly and others appear, I intend to use Gumpert's arsenic remedy this time.

Page Break me42.12
Page me42.12

I would translate your runic rüm hart, etc.†a as Dutch-Frisian for open heart, clear horizon. But I fear that there may be a quite different explanation, so I give up the riddle.
Page me42.12

You must send all the enclosed papers back to me as soon as read. I still need them. So that I do not forget any of the things I wanted to tell you, I am going to number them.
Page me42.12

1. Lassalle and Countess Hatzfeldt.
Page me42.12

The lengthy document is a copy of a circular that Herwegh's wife (honi soit qui mal y pense†b), Emma, sent to Berlin immediately after the catastrophe,†14 so that EXTRACTS from it could be put in the newspapers. You will see from it how cleverly Emma manages to put herself and her spineless Georg in the limelight at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end of the report; how the account evades two important points, firstly Rüstow's meeting with Dönniges and daughter, when the latter must have renounced Lassalle before the scene recounted by Emma took place. Secondly: how the duel came about. Lassalle wrote the insulting letter. But then something happened which is not reported and which led directly to the duel.
Page me42.12

The suppression of two such important and crucial points makes one sceptical of the accuracy of the account.
Page me42.12

The Hatzfeldt letter. On her arrival in Berlin I got Liebknecht to take her a brief letter of condolence from myself.†c Liebknecht wrote to me†d that she was complaining 'I left Lassalle in the lurch', as if I could have done the man any greater service than by keeping my mouth shut and letting him do as he liked. (In his last speech before the Düsseldorf assizes, he played the part of Marquis Posa with handsome William as Philipp II,†e whom he was trying to persuade to suspend the present constitution, proclaim universal direct suffrage and ally himself with the proletariat.†15) You can see what is behind her letter and what she wants of me. I wrote a very amicable but diplomatically discouraging letter in reply.†f The latterday Redeemer! That personage and the sycophants, who surround her, are mad.

Page Break me42.13
Page me42.13

Third page of Marx's letter to Engels of 4 November 1864

Page Break me42.14
Page Break me42.15
Page me42.15

Apropos. A couple of NUMBERS of E. Jones' Notes to the People (1851, 1852) happened to fall into my hands again; as far as the economic articles are concerned, the main points in them had been written directly under my guidance and partly even in direct collaboration with myself.†a WELL! What do I find in them? That at that time we conducted the same polemic — only better — against the co-operative movement, since it claimed, in its present narrow-minded form, to be the last word, as Lassalle conducted against Schulze-Delitzsch in Germany 10-12 years later.

Page me42.15

In his last will and testament Lassalle has 'installed' Bernhard Becker, the unfortunate fellow, who was Juch's editor on the Hermann for a while, as his successor in the office of President of the General Association of German Workers†2 — in his 'last will and testament' (like a ruling prince). The Association's congress meets in Düsseldorf this month,†16 and strong opposition to this 'decree' by last will and testament is expected.
Page me42.15

Also enclosed, letter from a worker in Solingen, Klings,†2 in fact the clandestine leader of the Rhineland workers (former member of the League†17). This letter is not to be returned but filed.
Page me42.15

2. WORKINGMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION.
Page me42.15

Some time ago, London workers sent an address to workers in Paris about Poland and called upon them to act jointly in the matter.†b
Page me42.15

For their part, the Parisians sent over a deputation headed by a worker named Tolain, who was the real workers' candidate in the last elections in Paris,†4 a thoroughly nice fellow. (His compagnons were quite nice lads, too.) A PUBLIC MEETING in St Martin's Hall was called, for 28 September 1864, by Odger (shoemaker, President of the local COUNCIL OF ALL LONDON TRADES' UNIONS and, in particular, also of the TRADES' UNIONS SUFFRAGE AGITATION SOCIETY,†18 which is connected with Bright) and Cremer, a MASON and secretary of the MASONS' UNION. (These two had arranged the big TRADE-UNION MEETING on North America chaired by Bright in St James's Hall, ditto the Garibaldi manifestations.†19) A certain Le Lubez was sent to ask me if I would participate pour les ouvriers allemands,†c and, in particular, whether I was willing to provide a German worker to speak at the MEETING, etc. I provided them with Eccarius, who put on a splendid performance, and I was also present myself in a non-speaking capacity on the PLATFORM. I knew that on this occasion 'people who really count' were appearing, both from London and from Paris, and I therefore decided to waive my usual standing rule to DECLINE ANY SUCH INVITATIONS.

Page Break me42.16
Page me42.16

(Le Lubez is a young Frenchman, i.e. in his thirties; however, he grew up in Jersey and London, speaks capital English and is a very good intermediary between the French and English workers.) (Music teacher and leçons†a OF FRENCH.)
Page me42.16

At the MEETING, which was chock-full (for THERE IS NOW EVIDENTLY A REVIVAL OF THE WORKING CLASSES TAKING PLACE), Major Wolff (Thurn-Taxis, Garibaldi's adjutant) represented THE LONDON ITALIAN WORKINGMEN'S SOCIETY.†20 It was resolved to found a 'WORKINGMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION', whose GENERAL COUNCIL is to have its seat in London and is to 'intermediate' between the workers' SOCIETIES in Germany, Italy, France, and England. Ditto that a General WORKINGMEN'S CONGRESS was to be convened in Belgium in 1865. A PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE was set up at the MEETING, with Odger, Cremer and many others, some of them former Chartists, former Owenites, etc., representing England, Major Wolff, Fontana, and other Italians representing Italy, Le Lubez, etc. for France, Eccarius and myself for Germany. The COMMITTEE was empowered to co-opt as many people as it chose.

Page me42.16

SO FAR SO GOOD. I attended the first meeting of the committee. A Sub-Committee (including myself) was set up to draft a déclaration des principes and provisional rules.†21 Indisposition prevented me from attending the meeting of the Sub-Committee and the subsequent meeting of the full committee.

Page me42.16

At these two meetings, which I did not attend, — that of the Sub-Committee and the subsequent one of the full committee — the following occurred:

Page me42.16

Major Wolff had submitted the regulations (statutes) of the Italian Workers' Associations (which possess a central organisation, but, as emerged later, are essentially associated BENEFIT SOCIETIES) to be used by the new Association. I saw the stuff later. It was EVIDENTLY a concoction of Mazzini's, and that tells you in advance in what spirit and phraseology the real question, the labour question, was dealt with. As well as how the NATIONALITIES question intruded into it.†22

Page me42.16

What is more, an old Owenite, Weston — now a MANUFACTURER himself, a very amiable and worthy man — had drawn up a programme full of extreme confusion and of indescribable breadth.

Page Break me42.17

Page me42.17

The subsequent full committee meeting instructed the Sub-Committee to remodel Weston's programme, ditto Wolff's REGULATIONS. Wolff himself left to attend the congress of the ITALIAN WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATIONS in Naples and persuade them to join the central association in London.

Page me42.17

A further meeting of the Sub-Committee, which again I did not attend, as I was informed of their rendezvous too late. At this meeting, 'une déclaration des principes' and a revised version of Wolff's rules were presented by Le Lubez and accepted by the Sub-Committee for submission to the full committee. The full committee met on 18 October. Eccarius wrote to me that it was a case of periculum in mora,†a so I went along and was really shocked when I heard the worthy Le Lubez read out a fearfully cliché-ridden, badly written and totally unpolished preamble PRETENDING TO BE A DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, with Mazzini showing through the whole thing from beneath a crust of the most insubstantial scraps of French socialism. What is more, the Italian rules had by and large been adopted, whose aim, apart from all their other faults, was really something quite impossible, a sort of central government of the European working classes (with Mazzini in the background, of course). I remonstrated mildly, and, after prolonged debate, Eccarius proposed that the Sub-Committee should subject the thing to further 'editing'. However, the 'SENTIMENTS' expressed in Lubez' DECLARATION were carried.

Page me42.17

Two days later, on 20 October, Cremer representing England, Fontana (Italy) and Le Lubez met at my house. (Weston was unable to be present.) I had not previously had the papers (Wolff's and Le Lubez') in my hands, so could not prepare anything; but I was absolutely determined that NOT ONE SINGLE LINE of the stuff should be allowed to stand if I could help it. To gain time, I proposed that before we 'edited' the preamble, we ought to 'discuss' the RULES. This was done. It was 1 o'clock in the morning before the first of the 40 RULES was adopted. Cremer said (and that was my whole aim): we have nothing to put before the committee that is to meet on 25 October. We must postpone it until 1 November. But the Sub-Committee can meet on 27 October and attempt to reach a definite conclusion. This was agreed and the 'papers' were 'bequeathed' to me for my perusal.

Page Break me42.18
Page me42.18

I could see it was impossible to make anything out of the stuff. In order to justify the extremely peculiar way in which I intended to edit the SENTIMENTS that had already been 'carried', I wrote AN ADDRESS TO THE WORKING CLASSES†a (which was not in the original plan; A SORT OF REVIEW OF THE ADVENTURES OF THE WORKING CLASSES SINCE 1845); on the pretext that all the necessary facts were contained in this 'Address' and that we ought not to repeat the same things three times over, I altered the whole preamble, threw out the déclaration des principes and finally replaced the 40 RULES by 10. Insofar as INTERNATIONAL POLITICS is mentioned in the 'Address', I refer to COUNTRIES and not to NATIONALITIES, and denounce Russia, not the minores gentium.†b The Sub-Committee adopted all my proposals. I was, however, obliged to insert two sentences about 'DUTY' and 'RIGHT', and ditto about 'TRUTH, MORALITY AND JUSTICE' in the preamble to the rules,†c but these are so placed that they can do no harm.†23
Page me42.18

At the meeting of the General Committee my 'ADDRESS', etc., was adopted with great enthusiasm (UNANIMOUSLY). The debate on the form of publication, etc., is to take place next Tuesday.†d Le Lubez has a copy of the 'Address' for translation into French and Fontana one for translation into Italian. (For a start there is a weekly CALLED Bee-Hive,†e edited by Trade Unionist Potter, a sort of Moniteur.) I am to translate the stuff into German myself.
Page me42.18

It was very difficult to frame the thing so that our view should appear in a form that would make it ACCEPTABLE to the present outlook of the workers' movement. In a couple of weeks, the same people will be having MEETINGS on the franchise with Bright and Cobden. It will take time before the revival of the movement allows the old boldness of language to be used. We must be fortiter in re, suaviter in modo.†f You will get the stuff as soon as it is printed.

Page me42.18

3. Bakunin sends his regards. He left today for Italy where he is living (Florence). I saw him yesterday for the first time in 16 years. I must say I liked him very much, more so than previously. With regard to the Polish movement, he said the Russian government had needed the movement to keep Russia itself quiet, but had not counted on anything like an 18-month struggle. They had thus provoked the affair in Poland. Poland had been defeated by two things, the influence of Bonaparte and, secondly, the hesitation of the Polish aristocracy in openly and unambiguously proclaiming peasant socialism from the outset.†24 From now on — after the collapse of the Polish affair — he (Bakunin) will only involve himself in the socialist movement.

Page Break me42.19
Page me42.19

On the whole, he is one of the few people whom after 16 years I find to have moved forwards and not backwards. I also discussed Urquhart's DENUNCIATIONS with him. (Apropos: the International Association will probably lead to a rupture between myself and these friends!†25) He inquired a great deal after yourself and Lupus. When I told him of the latter's death, he said straightaway that the movement had suffered an irreplaceable loss.
Page me42.19

4. Crisis. By no means burnt out on the Continent yet (esp. France). Incidentally, what the crises have lost in intensity, they have now gained in frequency.
Page me42.19

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.19
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

7
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON
Page me42.19
Manchester, 7 November 1864

Dear Moor,

Your Frisian solution is quite right, but for one word. In North Frisian, Kimmang means: look, or eye; these North Frisians are of a speculative disposition and have substituted the inward horizon for the outward one, rather as Wagener is now calling for an 'inward Düppel'.†27 It is an old sailors' saying.

Page me42.19

The Herwegh and Hatzfeldt papers returned enclosed. What was the further provocation you refer to which Lassalle inflicted on the Walachian†a and was suppressed by Emma†b? Lassalle's fatal error was obviously that he did not throw the hossy†c straight on the bed in the boarding house and deal with her appropriately, it was not his fine mind but his Jew's pizzle she was interested in. It is yet another of these affairs that only Lassalle could get involved in. That it was he, who forced the Walachian into the duel, is doubly crazy.

Page Break me42.20

Page me42.20

Old Hatzfeldt's idea that you should write an apotheosis of the latterday Redeemer†a is really priceless.

Page me42.20

The letter from the Solingen worker†b was not enclosed.

Page me42.20

I cannot wait to see the Address to the Workers,†c it must be a real masterpiece, to judge by what you tell me of the people involved. But it is good that we are again making contact with people who do at least represent their class, which is what really matters ultimately. The effect on the Italians will be particularly good, as there is some chance that this will at last put an end to this Dio e popolo†d among the workers — it will come as quite a surprise to the worthy Giuseppe.†e Incidentally, I suspect that there will very soon be a split in this new association between those who are bourgeois in their thinking and those who are proletarian, the moment the issues become a little more specific.

Page me42.20

Concerning Lupus' legacy, we had a meeting with the lawyer this morning.†8 The sum still owing to you will amount to a little over £200; as soon as I have the money, I shall send most of it to you. There are still some details we do not know exactly, so we cannot finally calculate yet. The tax authorities want a list of all the books, and the exact value of the clock Lupus left. Please send me something itemising all the larger works and at the end just: so MANY PAMPHLETS ETC., everything IN ONE CLUMP.

Page me42.20

I must close now, as I have to go to a Directors' meeting of the Schiller Institute,†28 of which I am chairman, as you know, to Mr Borchardt's annoyance. Happily, beer has been introduced.

Page me42.20

Kind regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.20
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.21

8
ENGELS TO MARX†29
IN LONDON
Page me42.21
Manchester, 9 November 1864

Dear Moor,

In respect of the legacy,†8 a further £200 enclosed in 2/2 á £100 banknotes. All being well, there will be approx. £40 to come. I'll send the other two halves as soon as you telegraph receipt.
Page me42.21

You will have received the Dagblätter†a with the celebrated article. Unfortunately, I could not find the 2nd section of the article, but there was not much in it.
Page me42.21

The end appears to be approaching at Richmond.†30 However, as long as-Lee is not obliged to stay entirely on the defensive, which in particular means pulling all his troops back from the Shenandoah Valley as well, and as long as Richmond is not completely encircled, all the advances Grant makes against the defences at Richmond or Petersburg will be of little importance. It is just as it was at Sevastopol, which was not encircled either.†31 I cannot imagine what Monsieur de Beauregard will do, probably no more than Hood before him, if as much. I have no confidence at all in this much-vaunted hero.
Page me42.21

I am sending you yesterday's Guardian†b; you must have a look at the RELIEF Committee's report in it, and see what a difference there is between Mr Marie's ateliers nationaux and those of your English gentlemen.†32 In the case of the former, tasks of doubtful utility were performed, but most of the money that was spent passed into the hands of the workers, who had lost their jobs. Here, tasks of similarly doubtful importance (but ultimately of definite utility to the bourgeoisie) were also performed, but of the £230,000 a mere £12,100 is going to pass into the hands of the FACTORY OPERATIVES, for whom the whole sum was intended (in other words, just that which is set down as being for UNSKILLED LABOUR). The ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF THE DISTRESSED FACTORY OPERATIVES is thus turned into one FOR THE RELIEF OF THE UNDISTRESSED MIDDLE CLASSES, who thereby save on rates.
Page me42.21

All my regards.
Your
F.E.

Page Break me42.22
Page me42.22
[Note by Marx]
Please return this letter, as I am going to file it on account of the remarks at the end.

Page me42.22
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

9
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.22
[London,] 14 November 1864

Dear Engels,
Page me42.22
I have had to stay mainly in bed for almost a week on account of the carbuncle. The thing is now healing up. However, as the carbuncle is just below the breast, I still have trouble leaning forward in order to write. So, to keep it as brief as possible:
Page me42.22
1. Please send the enclosed letters addressed to me back to me (both the one from Schweitzer and the one from Liebknecht) and reply by return, as the people need our reply as soon as possible.†34
Page me42.22
My view is that we should promise occasional contributions from time to time. It is important for us to have a mouthpiece in Berlin, especially for the sake of the association I was involved in founding in London,†a and for the sake of the book†b I am planning to publish. It is also important that whatever we do, we do it together.
Page me42.22
If you agree with me, you can send me a few lines for these chaps, or say in a few lines what statement I am to make in your name.
Page me42.22
2. You will receive the 'ADDRESS' along with the 'PROVISIONAL RULES', etc., in a few days. The thing was not quite so difficult as you think, because we are dealing with 'workers' all the time. The only LITERARY MAN in the Association is the Englishman, Peter Fox, a writer and AGITATOR who is, at the same time, one of the people from The National Reformer (atheist but anti-Holyoake). I am sending you the very kind note he passed on to me concerning the 'ADDRESS'. Mazzini is RATHER DISGUSTED that his people are among the signatories, mais il faut faire bonne mine á mauvais jeu.†a

Page Break me42.23
Page me42.23
3. Your stuff from the Guardian†b I find most valuable. I had already pieced this abomination together from the 'FACTORY REPORTS', but only in a most laborious and fragmentary fashion.
Page me42.23
4. 2 COPIES received from the Manchester SOLICITOR for signing, etc. In a day or two, I shall send you the signed copies, along with the list (inventory), etc., which you will then have to record. Of course, I can no longer reel off a complete list of all the stuff we left in the flat, etc., and put a value on it.†8
Page me42.23
That old HUMBUG McCulloch has died. I hope the British Museum buys up his ECONOMICAL LIBRARY. But no doubt Edinburgh will get in first.
Page me42.23
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.23
I have just come across P. Fox's letter, which I am enclosing; please send it back as soon as you have had time to peruse it.

Page me42.23
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

10
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.23
Manchester, 16 November 1864

Dear Moor,
Glad that the carbuncle is getting better. Let us hope it is the last. But do take arsenic.

Page me42.23

Acknowledgement from the charming private secretary†c gratefully received.

Page Break me42.24

Page me42.24

A few lines for Schweitzer enclosed.†35 It is a very good thing that we shall again be getting a voice in the press; also very good that Liebknecht is going to be co-editor (as long as he is under no illusions); that does at least provide some safeguard. Meanwhile, we shall do better if we conceal our enthusiasm, as 1. Liebknecht is no diplomat, and one cannot rely too much on his CLAIRVOYANCE, 2. the countess†a will, above all, be trying to swamp the paper from beginning to end with a deliberate 'apotheosis',†b and 3. we really must find out first who else has been approached. Perhaps you are better informed than I am, but in the letters from Liebknecht you sent me there is no mention of the paper nor of this man Schweitzer, so I am very much in the dark. For that reason, I have asked for some clarification about the company we shall be seen to be keeping. We might after all find ourselves cheek by jowl with Mr Karl Grün or some such scum.

Page me42.24

And what a dreadful title: Der Socialdemokrat! Why do these fellows not simply call it the Proletarier?

Page me42.24

Enclosed papers returned with thanks. Why haven't you sent the Solingen letter†c you promised?

Page me42.24

Amid the nonsense written by Emma Herwegh,†d I notice there is a further attempt to turn Lassalle into a demi-god, as follows: only his mighty spirit kept him alive for so long, anyone else would have given up the ghost 2 hours after being wounded — but you ask Allen some time about the way peritonitis develops following a wound, and he will tell you inflammation hardly sets in at all within 2 hours, and is scarcely ever fatal in less than 24 hours, and usually not until much later. These people are really given to deification.

Page me42.24

Schaaffhausen in Bonn has given a pretty lecture on man and apes, pointing out that Asiatic anthropoids have rounded heads, like the human beings there, but in Africa both are long-headed, and commenting that, with the present state of knowledge, this is the strongest argument against the unity of the human race. Someone ought to try saying that at a gathering of naturalists in England!

Page me42.24

It is splendid how Müller and the Rev. Cappell have made fools of that gang Kinkel, Juch & Co. even from the gallows. It is a long time since I have come across anything quite so absurd as the conduct of these fellows. How fortunate Gottfried†e is in the people whose cases he takes up! First MacDonald, then Müller. And then the way these gentlemen threw their weight around was the immediate cause of Koehl cutting that other lad's throat in the Thames marshes.†36 Just you wait and see what a mass of MARE'S NESTS they unearth concerning that affair, too.

Page Break me42.25

Page me42.25
Kindest regards to the family.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.25
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

11
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.25
[London,] 18 November [1864]

DEAR FRED,
1. I am sending the stuff for the SOLICITOR. You will have to copy the enclosed inventory and put it into whatever shape you think fit.†a
Page me42.25
2. Ad vocem†b Solingen. I had put the letter out READY when I sent you the last but one letter-package, and it hasn't been 'seen any more since then'.†c I suspect it has ensconced itself in a notebook and WILL TURN UP one fine morning.
Page me42.25
3. Ad vocem Schweitzer.
Page me42.25
Is a Dr of Law, formerly of Frankfurt am Main. Published a confused pamphlet against Vogt in 1859.†d Subsequently, a social novel I have not read.†e Declared his vigorous support for Lassalle. Later, during Lassalle's lifetime, he got to know sundry writings of ours at Liebknecht's house while staying in Berlin and, even at that time, sent me a message through Liebknecht saying how amazed he was at finding that everything about Lassalle that he liked had been plagiarised.

Page Break me42.26
Page me42.26
I have written, like you, concerning the prospectus of contributors.†37 Have sent Liebknecht German translation of the address of the INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE at the same time, with a view to eventual publication in the paper. (The stuff will appear today or tomorrow and will be sent to you.†a)
Page me42.26

As far as Lassalle's apotheosis is concerned,†b the Hamburg Nordstern, edited by that jackass Bruhn (who at the same time continues to print Heinzen's ELUCUBRATIONS, as though nothing had happened), is exclusively dedicated to this matter just as before, and the Social-Demokrat can scarcely compete with it in that respect.

Page me42.26

Old Hatzfeldt seems to be most disappointed by the letter I sent in reply to her 'ploy',†c although it was most delicate and considerate in tone. Since that time, she has — kept silence.

Page me42.26

Social-Demokrat is a bad title. But there is no need to throw away the best titles immediately on things that may prove to be FAILURES.

Page me42.26

Wilhelm Liebknecht is an unquestionably big man among the Berlin workers, as you can see from the Berlin correspondence of The Morning Star. I am only afraid he will soon be sent packing.

Page me42.26

4. Ad vocem Peritonitis,†d it says in Andral: 'Clinique Médicale': 'La Péritonite aiguë ... en certains cas un petit nombre d'heures s'écoulent entre l'époque de l'invasion de la maladie et celle de la mort, tandis que d'autres fois la péritonite, toujours aiguë par ses symptômes, ne devient mortelle qu'au bout de 30 á 40 jours.'†e

Page me42.26

And under the rubric:

'Péritonite par violence extérieure'†f he describes the case of a Parisian worker who was kicked in the stomach by a horse, in the region of his navel. Was only taken to the Charité†g le surlendemain, 'offre tous les symptômes d'une phlegmasie aiguë du péritoine'†h (later confirmed by ouverture du cadavre†i). Died du 5-éme au 6-éme jour,†j and amongst the general OBSERVATIONS concerning this case, it says: 'jusqu'au dernier moment, on n'observe aucun trouble des facultés intellectuelles et sensoriales.'†k

Page Break me42.27

Page me42.27

5. Take care to keep the enclosed memorandum for student Blind published in a rag in which he has puffed himself up with surpassing zeal since 1859.†38 This 'Beobachter' est le 'grand' organe de la démocratie Suabaise†a!

Page me42.27

6. Prof. Huber has held his 'labour convention' with ABOUT 100 workers' associations. He is conservative in politics but a co-operator as far as POLITICAL ECONOMY is concerned. His Leipzig Convention nearly ended in a real 'thrashing' for Huber and his comrades, with the great majority declaring themselves to be 'radical' in politics.†39

Page me42.27

7. I gather all kinds of things have been published by the COMMITTEE in Manchester about the COTTON-FAMINE†40 — I mean IN REGARD TO THE WORKINGMEN. Can you get hold of it for me?

Page me42.27

8. My chest still hurts me when I write and lean forward. Hence this 'itemised' letter.

Page me42.27

Regards to Gumpert.

Page me42.27

Ditto-to Madame Lizzy.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me42.27

[Enclosure: List relating to W. Wolff's Leg

SILVER WATCH £2

BOOKS:

Schlosser, Weltgeschichte £1 10s.
Schleiden, Studien 3s.
Schiller's Werke 10s.
Duller, Geschichte des Deutschen Volkes 5s.
Duncker, Geschichte £1
Mommsen, Geschichte 10s.
Schoemann, Griechische Alterthümer 5s.
Lange, Römische Alterthümer 3s.
Preller, Griechische Mythologie 5s.
Nösselt, Weltgeschichte 4s.
Völter, Geographie 5s.
Mortimer-Ternaux, Histoire de la Terreur, 2 v. 5s.
Arago, Astronomie Populaire 10s.
Müller, Physik 3s.
Baer, Magnetismus 1s.
Figuier, Année scientifique, 3 vol. 5s.

Page Break me42.28

Mignet, Révolution française 5s.
Egli, Handelsgeographie 2s.
Ritter, Europa 3s.
Cotta, Geologische Briefe 2s.
Garrido, Spanien 1s.
Freytag, Bilder aus dem Leben des Volkes 2s.
Moleschott, Lehre der Nahrungsmittel 3s.
Harting, Die Macht des Kleinen 1s.
Grube, Biographieen aus der Naturkunde 1s.
Reisen des Marco Polo 1s.
Kiesselbach, Gang des Welthandels 1s.

Jacobs, Hellas 1s.
Smith, English Latin Lexicon 5s.
Rost, Griechisch-Deutsches Lexicon 5s.
Giebel, Säugethiere 5s.
Tschudi, Thierleben der Alpenwelt 5s.
Freytag, Soll und Haben 2s.
Pauli, Bilder aus England 1s.
Overbeck, Pompeji 10s.
Guhl, Leben der Griechen und Römer 10s.
Lau, Sulla 1s.
Macauley, History of England 10s.
Frankenheim, Völkerkunde 1s.
Stieler's Handatlas £1 10s.
Berghaus, Physikalischer Schulatlas 5s.
Spruner, Historischer Schulatlas 5s.
Mozin, Dictionnaire £1
55 PAMPHLETS 10s.
102 ELEMENTARY SCHOOLBOOKS £31

Page me42.28

I have put a much higher valuation on the stuff than it would fetch if sold, what with the selling-price of SECONDHAND BOOKS in England. On the other hand, all kinds of things are missing that I have not been able to remember. There is thus COMPENSATION. If you want to add anything regarding the other goods and chattels, please do so.

Page me42.28

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.29

12

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me42.29

Manchester, 22 November 1864

Dear Moor,

I received enclosed today from Schweitzer.†41 Herwegh and Hess — fine company. As things stand and as I am not very familiar with the exact circumstances, I shall have to leave it to you to answer the man on behalf of both of us, as he wants his answer by return. Moses†a of all people!

Page me42.29
Please return the letter to me and let me know what you have written, and I can then confirm your statement to him later on.
Page me42.29
Solicitor's stuff received.†8
Page me42.29
Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.29
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

13
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.29
[London, 24 November 1864]

Dear FREDERICK,
Letter from the old Hatzfeldt woman enclosed, which I would like sent back by return.†42
Page me42.29
Also enclosed the letter from the man in Solingen†b which has turned up again, and Schweitzer's letter.

Page Break me42.30
Page me42.30
I sent off 3 'Addresses'†a to you today, 1 for yourself, 1 for Gumpert and 1 for Ernest Jones. If you can distribute some more anywhere (gratis), you only have to ask.
Page me42.30
As for Schweitzer, I have written — not to him but to Liebknecht — that we both dislike the company, but we intend FOR A NONCE to adopt bonne mine á mauvais jeu,†b but to disown them immediately as soon as they do anything silly. I also ask why Bucher and especially Rodbertus are not among them!†43
Page me42.30
Moses†c and Herwegh (who are, incidentally, of some stature, compared with B. and Ph. Becker, IN A LITERARY SENSE) are, after all, more highly regarded by people in Germany than by us. At least, one cannot publicly denigrate them, as one can fellows like Grün, etc.

Page me42.30
In great haste.
Page me42.30
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.30
I have just been obliged to write long letter to the old woman†d to extricate myself from the Blind affair she has tried to involve me in. Student Blind has, of course, not let the opportunity slip by of puffing himself up, by issuing a 'protest' in the name of the Republic†e and selecting a few passages from Lassalle's speeches which are indeed quite sickeningly royalist.†44 Also to advise her against reproducing the 'wanted' portraits of her enemies.†45

Page me42.30
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.31

14
MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT
IN BERLIN
Page me42.31
London, 24 November 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear Countess,
I have just informed you by telegraph†46 (to avoid all delay in reply) of my view that the two photograms of von R. et Co.†a should, in no circumstances, appear together with Lassalle's in the pamphlet. It would, on the one hand, dishonour the deceased, and, on the other, give the publication a gaudy appearance which should be avoided completely. Furthermore, as you know, 'contra hostem vindicatio aeterna sit'†b is my motto too, but, for revenge to be successfully executed, it is advisable not to initiate the public in one's vindictive 'intent'.†45
Page me42.31

'Ex ossibus ultor'†c would seem to me the best title for Lassalle's portrait. They were also my last words spoken at the graveside of my never-to-be-forgotten friend W. Wolff†47 some six months ago.
Page me42.31

As regards ex-student Blind, that fellow who made himself known before 1848 by peddling Heinzen's nonsense and as the homme entretenu†d of the wife of the Jewish banker Cohen†e (whom he later married in London), so I would ask you to remember that in my piece Herr Vogt (see pp. 58-69 and Appendices 9 and 11)†f I do not merely describe this student Blind as a 'deliberate liar', but I prove by reference to legal documents that this wretched man fabricated 'false witness' to cast suspicion on myself and to extricate his neck from a noose that this creature had made for himself for the purpose of merely making himself look big (which is indeed this rascal's sole purpose in every public step, or rather crawl, he undertakes).†48
Page me42.31

Then Blind succeeded in deflecting the catastrophe of his political operations — by simply saying nothing. In this he was sustained firstly by the fact that Freiligrath (this entre nous†a) unfortunately continued to parade publicly as his friend, and that Lassalle, although I had strongly urged him to do so, neglected to force my pillorying of Blind d'une maniére ou d'une autre†b on the attention of the German public.†49 This appeared necessary to me because the liberal press in Germany instinctively took the side of a scoundrel like Blind, and therefore sought to hush up my attack. Lassalle considered Blind too insignificant. It was only later that he discovered that there are times when one cannot decline a 'combat with a flea'.†c

Page Break me42.32
Page me42.32

When Lassalle was here in London,†50 he sought to enlighten Louis Blanc and Mazzini about Blind on his personal visits to them, but in vain. The man is exactly what Mazzini, Ledru, etc., had hoped, but failed, to find in the other Germans of standing, a servile lackey and sycophant. Through his relations with these people he makes the English think that he represents Germany, and he impresses the Germans by his boasting here. Yet the whole of this fellow's activity consists in writing, in conjunction with 3 or 4 South Germans,†d from, for and about 'Karl Blind' and, at every possible opportunity, to force on the English, Germans and Americans his 'unofficial judgment' as the self-appointed representative of 'German republicanism' (a party, which is well known to exist only on the moon, since the German bourgeois is interested in a constitutional monarchy, the feudal lord in an aristocratic monarchy, and the worker in general not in mere forms of state, but in the form of state as the expression of economic social conditions, and, at all events, has never recognised ex-student Blind as representative). He is a true master of dictating letters to one of his 6 satellites,†51 in which they call on the said, etc., 'Karl Blind' to do this or that, or congratulate him on this or that, and then — by oversight or OTHERWISE — the replies from the same Karl Blind gain entry to the press.
Page me42.32

As one of the 'YOUNG MEN' who were active in the service of F. Hecker, Blind learnt that art, which is by no means rare among the South Germans, of self-defamation and creating a spurious PUBLIC OPINION about people who are essentially nonentities.

In London he thought himself far enough advanced along the road or to have served long enough in the 'Democratic cause' to exploit for himself those arts he had acquired in the service of others.

Page Break me42.33
Page me42.33
Regarding his education, it is, as I told Lassalle during his sojourn here, that of a Baden publican,†a who has read Rotteck's Weltgeschichte, Welker's Staatslexikon and Mr Struve's republican Almanac.†b
Page me42.33
In his manoeuvres in Germany Mr Blind enjoys the particular support of Mr Gustav Rasch of Berlin.
Page me42.33
Bernhard Becker, as the former SUBEDITOR of the London Hermann, best knows how Blind composed with his own fair hand the paeans of praise to himself that appeared e.g. in the Hermann. He does this mostly and on average. By way of variation he will occasionally get a certain Dr Bronner in Bradford or his Schaible (see 'Herr Vogt') via London to put their names to his epistles. All the agitation of this person is nothing but a tissue of lies, self-deception and hot air. In this field, however, he has no rivals. He demonstrated the height of his dexterity when Garibaldi visited London.†19 He first spread the rumour in the English papers that he was an intimate friend of Garibaldi. Imposing himself as is his custom, he issued 'addresses' to Garibaldi from London and you know that in his kind-hearted naivety Garibaldi will write a nice letter back to anyone. Then he descends on the Isle of Wight (before Garibaldi made his ceremonial entry to London), and 'appoints' with him the date on which Garibaldi would receive the German deputation (Blind, you see, had so arranged things as to get a few Germans, including Kinkel and unfortunately my friend Freiligrath as well, to elect him as the leader of a deputation) and at the same time sends mysterious hints to some London papers†c that Garibaldi WAS 'CLOSETED' WITH 'HIS FRIEND' (Blind) and, of course, settled some very important affairs of state with him.†52 But Blind's masterstroke is still to come. As serving-man to the European 'kings of democracy'†d (for so he designates Mazzini, Ledru Rollin, Louis Blanc, and indeed COMPARED WITH student Blind even they are 'great men'†e), our Baden trickster manages so to arrange things that he, as a member of the society and a leader, fetches Garibaldi from the Duke of Sutherland's, where he is staying, and escorts him in the Duke's State Carriage

Page Break me42.34
to Ledru Rollin and Louis Blanc. He seizes the opportunity to have the carriage stand for a while outside Mr Blind's house for Garibaldi to 'PAY HIS COMPLIMENTS TO Madame Karl Blind'. By skilful MANAGEMENT all this even appears in The Times,†a and at the moment when Garibaldi is being idolized by all London. Perhaps you recall how 'Rameau', the nephew, in Diderot's wonderful piece, bursts out in admiration at the genius of Bouret, the general tax-collector, who cunningly devised a way to disaffect his little dog from himself and make it prefer the minister! This Garibaldi-farce was Blind's Bouret-prank! It is my belief that from that time on he began bona fide to think himself a great man! He has really got hold of something with Schleswig-Holstein! Did you not know then that for years Blind has been deriving his chief importance from acting as a 'representative' for Schleswig-Holstein against Denmark, saying 'he' had 'forced' the German tyrants into war against Denmark,†9 and that was why friend Rasch dedicated his piece about the 'orphaned' kith and kin†b to him! Did you not know that in the Prussian House Prof. Virchow (probably at Mr Rasch's instigation) cited Blind's great influence in the Schleswig-Holstein affair†c as proof of what a single man can do by his own efforts for a whole nation! The shameless man had made those German jackasses believe that he had got the English to change their view of Schleswig-Holstein! His feeble leaflets about Schleswig-Holstein are just about (and that is saying something) the most stupid thing that has appeared in this LINE. (Incidentally, Mr ex-student's best friend and associate is that lout Karl Heinzen in America, whose business for 20 years past has been to slander me in a manner such as even Lassalle never experienced. I have never thought it worth the trouble to reply to this fellow, but I was astonished that the Nordstern — for a long time also a major mouthpiece for student Blind — is constantly printing Heinzen's filth, which is extremely hostile to the principles of the workers' party, and generally makes propaganda for Mr Heinzen.)

Page me42.34

But Garibaldi, Schleswig-Holstein, America, Lassalle, all are for the ex-student only a pretext for puffing up his own self-importance! The modest fellow wrote in his own fair hand a short while ago to the 'Glasgow Sentinel' that the whole of Europe

Page Break me42.35
(literally) was not yet divided into two hostile camps with regard to 'Karl Blind', but that a tiers parti existed in this respect, too!†a In The Observer he describes himself as 'THE ILLUSTRIOUS CHIEF OF THE GERMAN REPUBLICANS'.†b
Page me42.35

A few more little touches to the description of this man, who, if one views him aright, is a highly comical character.
Page me42.35

After his success with Garibaldi MR KARL BLIND JOINED THE SHAKESPEARE COMMITTEE,†53 as was stated in the Athenaeum!†c He had now clearly progressed to the status of 'literary' representative of Germany, too!
Page me42.35

During the skirmish in Baden (1849),†54 Struve, as he himself recounts in a piece about the 'Baden revolution',†d sent the 'young man', as he calls Blind, as Under-Secretary to Schütz, who had been appointed Secretary, from Mainz to Paris, to rescue ex-student Blind from conflict with Brentano. The government to which Blind was directed as Under-Secretary to Secretary Schütz, — the provisional government no longer existed when Secretary and Under-Secretary arrived in Paris. Nevertheless, in mysterious hints in English papers, he let it be understood that he held an important diplomatic post as agent of the German 'republican government' in Paris!
Page me42.35

In the first few years after 1849 he lived in Belgium with his present wife. Since this woman has children from her marriage to the dead banker (and they inherited) and she also has children by Blind (at that time still illegitimate), a court in Baden ruled that Cohen's children should be taken away from his widow Cohen because of her 'immoral' relations with ex-student Blind. The court in Brussels gave this ruling legal force in Belgium, and this caused Blind to flee to England together with his wife and the children. He later got English papers to print (and was brazen enough to boast publicly of it on a visit to South Germany) that he had been expelled from Belgium for political reasons!†e

Page me42.35

His next deed you will see from the enclosed cutting, which he had printed in many London papers. What provoked it was the report disseminated in some papers that Garibaldi had declared his support for the slave-owners! Blind used this to extort a short letter from Garibaldi with 'CORDIAL GREETINGS FOR MRS BLIND'. You can see what lies he told Garibaldi from his remark 'I THANK YOU FOR YOUR

Page Break me42.36
GOOD NEWS'.†a What on earth could this 'GOOD NEWS' have been in October 1864? Blind was obviously writing Garibaldi the most monstrous lies about the progress of 'republicanism' in Germany, which is presumably just awaiting Blind's arrival to lash out.
Page me42.36

The most splendid aspect of the affair is that the London paper to which Blind is a regular contributor, the mouthpiece of the publicans (a most appropriate context to a 'Blind'), is a fanatical supporter of the Confederates!†b And by the by, the paper — The Morning Advertiser — is at one and the same time the mouthpiece of spirits, the LOW CHURCH (English pietism),†55 the SWELL-MOB which is concerned with gambling, PRICEFIGHTS AND SO FORTH, and the most lickspittling poodle of Palmerston's. FROM A LITERARY STANDPOINT, it cannot be counted among the English daily press and is in general only read in TAPROOMS.
Page me42.36

So much for the man.
Page me42.36

In Lassalle's lifetime he issued an address casting doubt on the former's integrity.†56 But Lassalle — as far as I know — did not think it worth the trouble of a reply. I was only surprised that B. Becker, who is fully aware of Blind's doings, did not then take the opportunity to blazon abroad my revelations about Blind.†c
Page me42.36

One of the reasons why I have joined the International Working Men's Association here is to expose that man. After the statements I have made against Blind, branding him as a 'deliberate liar' and a 'falsifier of evidence', I cannot of course further involve myself in polemic against the fellow. I reserve the right to treat him as a figure of comedy should the occasion arise. If I should now take his scrawl against Lassalle, which I have incidentally not seen, as grounds for an attack on him, people here, who know of my implacable hostility to Blind, will think that in fact I am only using Lassalle's name as a pretext for personal spite.
Page me42.36

But do send me the (printed) declaration by the workers. I shall ensure that it gets into a German paper here and if student Blind then makes any further moves, perhaps he will give me the opportunity to let me fall upon him.
Page me42.36

At all events, you may depend on it that he will be shown no favours. In the meantime, the best thing you can do is to disseminate my revelations about Blind as a 'deliberate liar' and 'falsifier' as far as possible in Germany. (If his scrawl about Lassalle had set any mice stirring here, a word or two about it at all events would have reached my ears.) This would force him to break his silence and so enable me to open my mouth again concerning a fellow whom I have publicly declared to be atrocious.

Page Break me42.37
Page me42.37
Apart from anything else, it would be quite impossible for me to travel to Berlin on account of the fresh outbreak of the fearful carbuncle disease that I have been struggling against for 14 months with slight interruptions.
Page me42.37
You may, however, be sure that I shall seize whatever opportunity I find appropriate (but you will have to leave it to me to choose whatever moment appears favourable to me) to rebuff all malicious attacks on the friend who has been prematurely taken from me.

Yours very respectfully
K.M.

Page me42.37
First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. XXVII, Assen, 1982

Printed according to the journal

Published in English for the first time

15
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†57
IN ST LOUIS
Page me42.37
Manchester, 24 November 1864

Dear Weydemeyer,
I was most pleased to hear from you again at long last.†58 We have been without your address for years, otherwise you would already have received a reminder from me earlier on. My address is still Ermen & Engels and will probably continue to be so for five years or so yet, unless the storm breaks in Germany. Marx' address is No. 1, Modena Villas, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London, but Dr Marx, London, will also suffice if need be.
Page me42.37
Our plump little pig Blind is showing off here in Europe, wherever he can, just as he did over there, it is the only little pleasure the poor wee creature has, and he indulges it with an assiduity worthy of a better cause and greater success. However, ever since Marx belaboured him so thoroughly in Herr Vogt, he has been keeping out of our range.

Page Break me42.38
Page me42.38

As far as Lassalle's flirtations with Bismarck are concerned, they are beyond dispute. The passages quoted by Blind†a were, of course, actually uttered by Lassalle in the speech he made in Düsseldorf in his defence and published by him, so there is nothing to be done there.†15 For all his distinctive qualities, Lassalle had that Jewish respect for momentary success, which made it impossible for him to deny Louis Bonaparte his respect, or to refrain from professing such overtly Bonapartist principles as he did. Those, who were more closely acquainted with him, knew that these things were not occasional happenings. You can readily imagine that this was as disagreeable to us as it was grist to the mill of piglet Blind, and that alone would have been sufficient ground for us to have had nothing to do with all Lassalle's agitation during his lifetime, although there were other reasons, too. Nevertheless, that is all over and done with now, and we shall have to see whether his agitation was just a flash in the pan, or whether there was really something to it.

Page me42.38

You will have heard that our poor Lupus died here on 9 May of this year. His was a loss for the party of an altogether different order from Lassalle's. We shall never again find such a steadfast fellow, who knew how to talk to the people and was always there when things were at their most difficult. For 4 long weeks he had the most terrible headaches, his German doctor†b neglected him, and at length a vessel burst in his brain from the colossal pressure of the blood, he gradually lost consciousness and died 10 days later.

Page me42.38

Nothing of much interest is happening here in Europe. The suppression of the Polish uprising†24 was the last decisive event; for his assistance in this, the Tsar†c gave Bismarck permission to take Schleswig-Holstein from the Danes. It will be a long time before Poland is capable of rising again, even with help from outside, and yet Poland is quite indispensable to us. The despicable behaviour of the liberal German philistines is to blame; if those curs in the Prussian Chamber had had more insight and courage, all might be well — Austria was ready to march in support of the Poles at any time, and it was only Prussia's attitude that prevented it, and the treachery of Mr Bonaparte, who was, of course, only prepared to keep his promises to the Poles if he could do so safely, i.e. if he was covered by Prussia and Austria.

Page me42.38

That war of yours over there†11 is really one of the most stupendous things that one can experience. Despite the numerous blunders made by the Northern armies (enough by the South, too), the tide of conquest is rolling slowly but surely onward, and, in the course of 1865, at all events the moment will undoubtedly come when the organised resistance of the South will fold up like a pocket-knife, and the warfare turn into banditry, as in the Carlist war in Spain†59 and more recently in Naples.†12 A people's war of this kind, on both sides, has not taken place since great states have been in existence, and it will, at all events, point the direction for the future of the whole of America for hundreds of years to come. Once slavery, the greatest shackle on the political and social development of the United States, has been broken, the country is bound to receive an impetus from which it will acquire quite a differed position in world history within the shortest possible time, and a use will then soon be found for the army and navy with which the war is providing it.

Page Break me42.39

Page me42.39

It was incidentally quite understandable that the North had some difficulty in providing itself with an army and generals. From the outset, the South's oligarchy had brought the country's few military forces under its control, it supplied the officers and furthermore raided the arsenals. The North found itself with no resources other than the militia, while the South had been training for years. From the outset, the South had a population accustomed to the saddle for use as light cavalry, on a scale the North could not match. The North adopted the habit, introduced from the South, of filling positions with party supporters; the South, in the midst of a revolution and with a military dictatorship, could brush that aside. Hence, all the blunders. I do not deny that Lee is a better general than any the North has, and that his latest operations around the fortified camp at Richmond†30 are masterpieces from which our glorious Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia could learn much. But, ultimately, the determined attacks of Grant and Sherman made all strategy superfluous. It is clear that Grant is sacrificing a colossal number of men, but what else could he do? I have absolutely no idea of the level of discipline in your army, its cohesion under fire, its capacity and willingness to endure hardship, and in particular the nature of its MORALE, i.e. what can be demanded of it without its becoming demoralised. With such scanty reports and no proper maps, one needs to know all this before permitting oneself any judgment on this side of the water. What does seem certain to me, however, is that the army now commanded by Sherman is the best you have, as superior to Hood's as Lee's is to Grant's.

Page Break me42.40
Page me42.40

Your field-manual and elementary tactics are, as I hear, positively French — the basic formation thus presumably being the column with intervals between platoons. What kind of field artillery do you now have? If you can enlighten me on these points, I shall be greatly obliged. What has become of the great Anneke? Since the battle at Pittsburgh-Landing was all but lost†60 because he was not supplied with everything which he should have had, according to the Prussian field-manual, he has quite vanished from my view. Of the Germans who have joined in the war, Willich appears to have given the best account of himself, whereas Sigel has UNMISTAKEABLY demonstrated his mediocrity. And Schurz, the valiant Schurz, farting away amidst the shower of bullets and shells, what foes is he demolishing now?
Page me42.40

Apropos. The Prussian cannons that smashed Düppel†a and Sonderburg†61 from 6,500 paces were our old long bronze 24-pounders, rifled and rebuilt as breech-loaders, 54-pound shells with 4-pound-charge! I've seen them with my own eyes.
Page me42.40

Kindest regards to your wife.†b

Your
F. Engels

Page me42.40
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 33, 1906-1907 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

16
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.40
[London,] 25 November [1864]

DEAR FREDERICK!

Weydemeyer's letter returned enclosed (how odd it should come at the same time as the one from the countess†c)†58 with Schweitzer's letter,†d which I forgot to enclose yesterday.

Page Break me42.41
Page me42.41

I still need to hold on to the 'clipping'.†a

Page me42.41

The position is now as follows:

1. It was not until after I wrote to you that I saw that Blind has sent an answer to the Swabian Beobachter via Dr Bronner (unsigned, of course, but dated Bradford; letter, naturally, written by Blind himself, in which he firstly proves that by his influence over '7' million Germans he in fact shaped American politics; secondly, he has the impudence to say that the Vogt affair has been disposed of by statements from all sides.†62 So, I have grounds here for replying and referring to the 'AFFIDAVITS',†63 and, at the same time, an extract from Weydemeyer's letter would kill two birds with one stone, firstly exposing Blind's influence on America and secondly giving the old countess some kind of satisfaction as far as Lassalle is concerned.

Page me42.41

2. These 'Republican Protests', which Blind has sent with the same date to St Louis, Frankfurt am Main and the London Hermann, are only identical in their general drift. In the shit in the Hermann and the Frankfurter Journal,†b which I shall try to send you later today, this Baden publican†c has simply put together the passages which were most damaging to ourselves, whilst across the ocean he is more insolent and resorts to bare-faced lies.

Page me42.41

But the real 'POINT' is this, a 'POINT' typical of the way he manufactures his pamphlets: in the European edition he says that the protest comes from American and European republicans, whilst in the American edition he calls upon the American government to protest. Here we have caught the dog in flagranti.†d

Page me42.41

3. Since Lassalle is dead and can do no more harm, we must of course — as far as possible, i.e. without compromising ourselves — defend him against these petty-bourgeois scoundrels.

Page me42.41

My plan is therefore this: to reply (briefly) in the Swabian Beobachter; 1. putting the record straight about the 'statements from all sides' in the Vogt affair; 2. giving an extract from Weydemeyer's letter about Blind's influence in America; 3. exposing the fellow afresh by comparing the European and American editions of his 'Republican Protest'; finally 4. concluding that it is NOT WORTH WHILE defending Lassalle against such a comical character.

Page me42.41

If this seems all right to you, send me a wire and I will tie the whole business up tomorrow, amongst other things in order to have some peace with the 'old girl'. I said in my letter to her, by the way, that Lassalle only has himself to blame for being kicked by that jackass, because, although I strongly and repeatedly urged him to do so, he did not give all possible publicity in Germany to my denunciation of Blind in Herr Vogt.†a

Page Break me42.42

Page me42.42

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.42

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

17

MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT
IN BERLIN

Page me42.42

[London,] Saturday, 26 November 1864

My dear Countess,

These few lines in the greatest of haste (there being just time before the last post goes) to inform you that I have been fortunate enough to be vouchsafed the opportunity to get a hold on Blind immediately and deliver him a vigorous kick for his attack on our Lassalle.†62
Page me42.42
I shall send you my attack on him on Monday which will appear in the form of a short letter to the Stuttgart Beobachter.†b You will then learn of the circumstances of the case, too.

Yours very respectfully
K.M.

Page me42.42
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.43

18
MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT
IN BERLIN
Page me42.43
London, 28 November 1864

My dear Countess,
From the enclosed†a you will see the circumstances that have presented me with the opportunity to renew my tussle with ex-student Blind and, at the same time, deliver him a kick in the name of Lassalle.
Page me42.43
You must arrange for publication in the papers at your disposal, but not before two days have elapsed after you receive this, so that Mayer of Swabia — i.e. the editor of the Beobachter in Stuttgart — has no excuse for refusing it.†64

Yours very respectfully
K. Marx

Page me42.43
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

19
MARX TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†57
IN ST LOUIS
Page me42.43
London, 29 November 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Weiwi,

The whole household and myself were extraordinarily pleased to hear from you and your family again. My wife asserts that she wrote to yours†b last and is thus expecting to have the first letter back from her.

Page Break me42.44
Page me42.44

I am, at the same time, sending you by mail 4 copies of a printed 'Address',†a of which I am the author. The newly established INTERNATIONAL Workers' Committee, in whose name it has been put out, is not without significance. Its English members consist chiefly of the heads of the TRADE-UNIONS here, in other words, the real worker-kings of London, the same people who organised that gigantic reception for Garibaldi and who, by that monster meeting in St James's Hall (under Bright's chairmanship), prevented Palmerston declaring war on the United States, which he was on the point of doing.†19 On the French side, the members are unimportant figures, but they are the direct spokesmen of the leading 'workers' in Paris. There is likewise a link with the Italian associations, which recently held their congress in Naples.†22 Although I have been systematically refusing to participate in any way whatsoever in all the 'organisations', etc. for years now, I accepted this time because it concerns a matter by means of which it is possible to have a significant influence.
Page me42.44

For the past 14 months I have been suffering almost constantly from carbuncles, which often threatened my life. More or less cured now.
Page me42.44

Engels will have written to you of the loss of our friend Lupus.†b
Page me42.44

Curiously enough, I received a letter from Berlin last Friday, in which the old Hatzfeldt woman urged me to defend Lassalle against Blind's 'Republican Protest'.†42 The next day I received your letter to Engels, containing the much amended American edition of the same garbage. By a third coincidence, I was, at the same time, sent 2 numbers of the Swabian Beobachter (from Stuttgart) which I never see otherwise. In the first number the editor†c was poking fun at a letter from Mr Blind to the American nation which had been translated from the English by 'Mr Blind' and sent to him and to other South German editors; in it, 'almost at official request', as he puts it, he gives his inexpert opinion on Lincoln's election, etc.†d In the same number, the editor said that one can see from my book attacking Vogt†e what Blind's vanity leads to, etc. Whereupon, Blind sent the enclosed reply through his man-of-straw, Dr Bronner of Bradford, 1. setting out just how powerful his influence in America was, and 2. having the impudence to say that the Vogt affair was 'a put-up-job'.†62 This then enabled me (using your letter and copying the passages relating to Blind) to put out the statement†a as desired by the old Hatzfeldt woman against that clown, without identifying myself with those aspects of Lassalle's agitation†b which are not to my liking. Write soon.

Page Break me42.45

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.45
The source of Blind's boastful epistle which I am copying out for you is No. 268 of the Beobachter (Stuttgart), 17 Nov., 1864.
Page me42.45
It is absolutely essential that you write me a few lines, suitable for publication, about Mr Blind's American influence.

Page me42.45
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 33, 1906-1907 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

20
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.45
London, 29 November 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Friend,
Today you will receive from me by post 6 copies of the 'ADDRESS OF THE WORKINGMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION',†c of which I am the author. Please be so good as to convey a copy with my kindest regards to Madame Markheim (Fulda). Give one to Mr Miquel as well.
Page me42.45
The Association — or rather its Committee — is important because the leaders of the London TRADE-UNIONS belong to it, the same people who organised that enormous reception for Garibaldi and thwarted Palmerston's plan for a war with the United States by means of the monster meeting in St James's Hall.†19 The leaders of the Parisian workers are also in contact with it.

Page Break me42.46
Page me42.46

In the last few years I have been much afflicted with illness (e.g., in the last 14 months by a recurrence of carbuncles). My private circumstances have improved in consequence of a legacy from the death of my mother.†a

Page me42.46

I think that my book on capital (60 sheets) will at last be ready for the press next year.†66

Page me42.46

You will doubtless understand the reasons for not allowing myself to become involved in Lassalle's movement in his lifetime, without my spelling them out in detail. However, that cannot deter me — the more so since persons close to him are urging me to do so — from taking up his defence, now that he is dead, against such despicable curs as the clamorous K. Blind.†b

Page me42.46

I am afraid that in mid-spring or early summer of next year there will be war between Italy, Austria and France. This will be very damaging for the movement in France and England, which is growing significantly.

Page me42.46

I hope to hear from you soon.

Yours very respectfully
K. Marx

Page me42.46
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 1, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

21
MARX TO LION PHILIPS†67
IN ZALT-BOMMEL
Page me42.46
London, 29 November 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Uncle,

I hope that you are in the best of health despite the ABOMINABLE weather. All is well here. Except that, to the great alarm of the whole family, I had a most malignant carbuncle below the left breast at the beginning of this month, which kept me in great pain for 2-3 weeks. Other than that, everything has been going well.

Page Break me42.47
Page me42.47

The trade crisis, which I predicted to you long before its actual arrival,†a has by this time long since lost its edge, although its consequences in the manufacturing districts proper are still very considerable. On the other hand, I believe a political crisis is to be expected in the spring or early summer. Bonaparte has again reached the point where he will have to make war again if he is to raise a loan. The Venetian business is being kept open (I am acquainted with some of the agents there) so that it can provide a point of contact if need be.†68 It is possible that Bonaparte will again find a way out, and then he will keep the peace (for he is no REAL Napoleon), but that is rather improbable.

Page me42.47

The enclosed printed 'Address'†b is written by myself. The matter hangs together like this: in September the Parisian workers sent a delegation to the London workers to demonstrate support for Poland. On that occasion, an international Workers' Committee was formed. The matter is not without importance because 1. in London the same people are at the head who organised the gigantic reception for Garibaldi and, by their monster meeting with Bright in St James's Hall, prevented war with the United States.†19 In a word, these are the real workers' leaders in London, with one or two exceptions all workers themselves. 2. On the Parisian side, Mr Tolain (ouvrier†c himself, as well) et Co. are at the head, i.e., the same people who were prevented by a mere intrigue on the part of Garnier-Pagés, Carnot, etc., from entering the Corps législatif at the last elections in Paris as representatives of the workers there,†4 and 3. on the Italian side, it has been joined by the representatives of the 4-500 Italian workers' clubs which held their general congress in Naples some weeks ago,†22 an event which even The Times considered important enough to merit a few dozen lines in the paper.†d

Page me42.47

Courtesy toward the French and the Italians, who always require florid language, has obliged me to include a few superfluous turns of phrase in the preamble to the 'Rules',†e though not in the 'Address'.†23

Page me42.47

A few days ago I received a letter from America from my friend Weydemeyer, Colonel in the regiment stationed at St Louis (Missouri). Amongst other things, he writes — and these are his exact words:

Page Break me42.48

'We are regrettably being detained here at St Louis, since, in view of the many ”conservative” elements here, a military force is a continuing necessity to prevent a break-out and the possible release of the numerous Southern prisoners.... The whole campaign in Virginia is a BLUNDER, which has cost us innumerable men. But for all that, the South will not be able to hold out much longer: it has sent its last man into battle and has no fresh army to call upon. The present invasion of Missouri, like the incursions into Tennessee, has only the character of a RAID, a foray: there can be no thought of a lasting re-occupation of districts that have been lost.'†a

Page me42.48

When you reflect, my dear Uncle, how at the time of Lincoln's election 3 1/2 years ago it was only a matter of making no further concessions to the slave-owners, whereas now the avowed aim, which has in part already been realised, is the abolition of slavery, one has to admit that never has such a gigantic revolution occurred with such rapidity. It will have a highly beneficial influence on the whole world.

Page me42.48

At a public MEETING this week the fellow-member of our race Benjamin Disraeli has again made a dreadful laughing-stock of himself by assuming the mantle of guardian angel of the HIGH CHURCH†69 and CHURCH RATES, repudiating criticism in religious affairs.†b He furnishes the best evidence of how a great talent unaccompanied by conviction creates rogues, albeit gold-braided and 'RIGHT HONORABLE' ones.

Page me42.48

Those jackasses in Germany have again made a proper laughing-stock of themselves over the Müller affair,†36 with ex-parson Kinkel at their head.

Page me42.48

With kindest regards from the whole family to you and from me to Jettchen, Dr, Fritz†c et Co.

Ever your faithful nephew
K.M.

Page me42.48

First published in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.49

22

MARX TO ENGELS†29
IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.49

[London,] 2 December 1864

DEAR FRED,

THANKS FOR THE GUARDIAN.†a

Page me42.49

I did send on a few COPIES of the 'Address'†b to E. Jones afterwards, with a letter to him saying that he would probably receive one from you first. He writes today that he has neither seen nor heard anything from you. His address is 55, not 52, Cross Street. He says in his letter that, when the Assizes are over, he will form a branch association in Manchester amongst his acquaintances.

Page me42.49

Could you by any chance dig up the address of the musician Petzler (maybe from the Manchester directory, or the Schiller Association†28)? He has a lot of contacts among the Manchester workers, and without ANY INTERVENTION ON YOUR PART I could put him in touch with E. Jones from here. You would only need to send me Petzler's address.
Page me42.49

The worst thing about agitation of this kind is that one gets very BOTHERED as soon as one becomes involved in it. E.g. Address to Lincoln now on the agenda again, and again I had to compose the thing†c (which is far more difficult than writing a proper work) — so that the phraseology to which that kind of writing is limited, is at least distinguishable from vulgar-democratic phraseology.†70 Fortunately, Mr Fox is doing the Polish business which is coming up in connection with 29 November, the anniversary of the Polish revolution of 1830.†71
Page me42.49

In the Committee, since the address for Lincoln is to be handed over to Adams, some of the English wanted to have the deputation introduced BY A MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT — as is CUSTOMARY. This desire was suppressed by the majority OF the ENGLISH and the unanimity of the continentals, and it was declared instead that such OLD ENGLISH CUSTOMS OUGHT TO BE ABOLISHED. On the other hand: M. Le Lubez, as a real crapaud,†d wanted the address to be directed not to Lincoln but TO THE

Page Break me42.50
AMERICAN PEOPLE. I made him look suitably foolish and made it clear to the English that FRENCH DEMOCRATIC ETIQUETTE is not worth a FARTHING more than MONARCHICAL ETIQUETTE.
Page me42.50

Apropos. Naturally it is impossible to have a movement here without its own press-organ. The Bee-Hive (weekly, organ of the TRADES-UNIONS) was therefore declared to be the organ of the Association. By a stroke of ill-luck, to which the workers are particularly susceptible, a scoundrel called George Potter (in the BUILDING STRIKES†72 he acted as MOUTHPIECE in The Times, but with articles written not by himself but by others) has installed himself as MANAGER with a clique of shareholders, who have so far formed the majority. The COMMITTEE, whose English members are mostly Bee-Hive shareholders (a share costs only 5s., and no one can have more than 5 votes, even if he holds 5,000 shares; thus 1 vote per share up to a maximum of 5), has therefore decided that we should set up a share-fund here which will enable us to create shareholders AND TO SWAMP THE OLD MAJORITY. I would appreciate it if you would let us have a contribution for this purpose as well. The whole operation must, of course, be confined to the close friends of the members of the Committee, as otherwise counter-measures would be promptly taken by the other side (i.e. before the GENERAL MEETING OF SHAREHOLDERS which is not far off now).
Page me42.50

Besides the Hermann, there was also another little paper here, the Londoner Anzeiger, which belongs to the worthy Jewish bookseller Bender. It is trying to build itself up as a competitor to the Hermann, as the editorship has been taken over by a certain L. Otto von Breidtschwerdt, although he writes under the name of L. Otto. I shall hardly become directly involved in the thing at all, as I had my fill with the Volk, but it is good for reprinting statements in London as soon as they appear in the German newspapers, e.g. like the one against Blind.†a

Page me42.50

This Otto first got to know Eccarius, at whose suggestion he became a German member of the INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE. He is a Swabian, Stuttgarter born and bred. Quite a young fellow, ABOUT 27 OR 28. Very much like my wife's elder brother.†b Began as a cadet in the Austrian army, where he learnt all kinds of languages and was stationed all over the place. Subsequently studied in Tübingen. As a person, he is a very pleasant, witty fellow and well-mannered. His head is still stuffed full of petty Swabianisms and Germanic nonsense. For all that, very good knowledge and ability. But he seems to me to have more inclination than a gift for writing; dull, doctrinaire. He is useful as a go-between with South Germany and especially the Land of the Swabians. Also writes in the Augsburger†a from time to time, which is, incidentally, entirely what you would expect from the Vogt standpoint.

Page Break me42.51

Page me42.51

I wrote to Mr Klings that it was difficult, but also quite unnecessary, to decide between Moses and Bernhard.†b Both were honest and both incompetent. I said that, at the present moment, it was neither here nor there who has the title of President. When the time became decisive, there would be no difficulty in finding the right people.†c

Page me42.51

I am very much afraid I can feel another carbuncle starting on my right hip. Allen knows nothing about it as I have been treating myself for some time. If I went to him now about the arsenic business, which after all you cannot start without a doctor and to which he might perhaps not even agree, he would give me the most dreadful dressing down for having been carbuncling for so long behind his back!!

YOURS
K.M.

Page me42.51

In his reply to Mayer the Swabian (via his man-of-straw Bronner),†d Blind states that Lincoln and Frémont were fighting for his vote because it would decide the ELECTION.†62 And in an American newspaper, The Radical Democrat,†e that he was responsible for the Polish revolution.

Page me42.51

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.52

23
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.52
[London,] 8 December 1864

Dear Engels,

You will find enclosed

1. Free Press.†a
2. Swabian Beobachter.

Page me42.52

(With the latter, I have managed to get the fellow at least to adopt an ironical tone towards Blind again, whereas, as a result of the letter transmitted by Bronner,†b he was so bowled over by Blind's boasting — I have sent the scrawl to Weydemeyer — that he absolutely drew in his horns and paid compliments to the 'excellent man'. Incidentally, the editor — hinc illae lacrimae†c — is the man whom I referred to in Herr Vogt as the 'garrulous Swabian, Karl Mayer',†d and who is moreover the son of that Mayer the Swabian so incessantly derided by Heine.†73)

Page me42.52

3. Letter enclosed from Red Becker.†e I had, you see, sent a copy of the statement†f to the Rheinische Zeitung. Please return Becker's letter to me.†74

Page me42.52

Apropos Liebknecht. At the end of the year he is, of course, in a very tight spot. I have sent him money several times in the course of the last six months and now I want to send his wife†g something in the form of a Christmas present for the children, since I know they are in dire straits. I would appreciate it if you would make a contribution, too. But you must let me know quickly, as periculum in mora.†h I would then send the whole lot to Frau Liebknecht at the same time.

Page me42.52

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.52
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.53

24
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.53
[London,] 10 December 1864

DEAR FRED,
MY COMPLIMENT TO MRS LIZZY.†a
Page me42.53
You had already given me your PRIVATE ADDRESS some time ago, but not the 'FIRM' to which to write. I am very glad to have it now, as I sometimes find it desirable to drop you a few lines ON SATURDAYS.
Page me42.53
The £5 for Wilhelm†b is already on its way to Berlin today.
Page me42.53
You have not sent me back the Becker.†74 However cunningly 'the Red' fancies he has extricated himself from the matter, his letter is a DOCUMENT WHICH ONE FINE MORNING HE MAY FIND TO TURN UP for unforeseen purposes. The old Hatzfeldt woman will, incidentally, ensure that the statement†c gets to the right person.†64
Page me42.53
WHAT ABOUT SHERMAN'S EXPEDITION?†75
Page me42.53
Apropos. Your POOR-HOUSE Purdy is said to have published an absolutely disgraceful document during the COTTON-FAMINE,†40 recommending reducing support to a minimum, on the grounds that the HEALTH of THE COTTON-OPERATIVES was said to have improved; as a result of this, FAMINE DISEASES are said to have broken out in the EAST OF LANCASHIRE. (That was in the early days of the COTTON-FAMINE.) Do you know anything about it? And, in general, can you obtain for me the OFFICIAL PAPERS in Manchester (of the Committee,†d etc.) relating to the COTTON-FAMINE?
Page me42.53
Lothario Bucher, whom Lassalle appointed executor to his will and to whom he left £150 a year pension, has, as you probably already know, gone over to Bismarck's camp. Baron Izzy†e would perhaps have done the same himself as 'Minister of Labour', Marquis Posa to Philipp II of the Uckermark,†f but not IN THE SMALL WAY OF Lothario, with whom the Hatzfeldt woman has fallen out and who can now shake hands with Edgar Bauer and the Prussian consul in Milan, Mr R. Schramm. The Prussians were looking for a post for Mr Schramm 'where yer don't need no exam'.†g I also fancy Mr Rodbertus' intentions are 'none too 'onourable' because he is claiming to 'have entirely divorced the social question from politics',†a a sure sign that he has got the ministerial itch. What a contemptible gang, all that riff-raff from Berlin, Brandenburg and Pomerania!

Page Break me42.54

Page me42.54

I fancy there is a SECRET UNDERSTANDING between Prussia, Russia and France for THE WAR AGAINST AUSTRIA IN NEXT SPRING. Venetia will, of course, provide the WAR-CRY.†68 The Austrians are behaving with abysmal cowardice and stupidity. This ensues from Francis Joseph himself interfering personally in Austrian politics. Buol-Schauenstein, etc., all the sensible hommes d-état,†b are obliged to keep their traps shut, and the Russian agents, such notorious fellows as the present Austrian FOREIGN MINISTER,†c are giving all the orders. For all that, the Austrians' behaviour would be inexplicable, unless these fellows either have faith in Prussia's perfidious promises or are determined to accept the long-standing promise of compensation in Turkey.

Page me42.54

What do you say to Collet's profound discoveries — based on Urquhart — about Nebuchadnezzar and the Russians' Assyrian ancestry, and the further discovery, which is cited as 'Urquhart's', that IN ITALY THE POPE IS THE ONLY REAL THING?†d

Page me42.54

Today's The Miner and Workman's Advocate — the Moniteur†e of the mineworkers in England and Wales — is printing the whole of my 'Address'.†f The London 'BRICKLAYERS' (over 3,000 men) have announced they are joining the International Association, and they are fellows who have never before joined a MOVEMENT.

Page me42.54

There was a SUB-COMMITTEE†21 meeting last Tuesday,†g at which Mr Peter Fox (his real name is P. Fox André) presented his address on Poland†71 to us. (This kind of thing is always dealt with beforehand in the SUBCOMMITTEE before going to the GENERAL COMMITTEE.) The piece is not badly written and Fox has endeavoured to apply the concept of 'class', at least a semblance of it, although it is normally alien to him. His real forte is FOREIGN POLICY, and it is only as a propagandist of atheism that he has had dealings with the WORKING CLASSES AS SUCH.

Page me42.54

But easy though it is to get the English workers to accept a rational approach, one has to be all the more careful the moment men of letters, members of the bourgeoisie or semi-literary people become involved in the movement. Fox, like his friend Beesly (Professor of Political Economy at the University of London, he took the chair at the founding MEETING in St Martin's Hall†a) and other 'DEMOCRATS', have a fanatical 'love' of France, which, as far as FOREIGN POLICY is concerned, they extend not only to Napoleon I but even to Boustrapa,†76 as opposed to what they call, not without justice, the English aristocratic tradition, and as a continuation of what they call the English democratic tradition of 1791/92. WELL! Not content in his address (which, incidentally, is not to appear as an address from the whole Association but as an address from the English section concerning the POLISH QUESTION, endorsed by the whole Committee) with telling the Poles, which is true, that the French people has been traditionally more sympathetic towards them than the English, Mr Fox WINDS UP HIS ADDRESS mainly by consoling the Poles with the passionate friendship that THE ENGLISH WORKING CLASSES have conceived FOR THE FRENCH DEMOCRATS. I opposed this and unfolded a historically irrefutable tableau of the constant French betrayal of Poland from Louis XV to Bonaparte III. At the same time, I pointed out how thoroughly inappropriate it was that the ANGLO-FRENCH-ALLIANCE should appear as the 'core' of the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, albeit in a democratic version. To cut matters short, Fox's address was accepted by the SUBCOMMITTEE on condition that he altered the 'TAIL' in accordance with my suggestions. Jung, the SWISS SECRETARY (from French Switzerland), declared that, as a MINORITY on the GENERAL COUNCIL, he would move that the address be rejected as ALTOGETHER 'bourgeois'.†77

Page Break me42.55

Page me42.55

Our Major Wolff has been locked up by the Piedmontese for the moment in the fortress of Alexandria.
Page me42.55

Louis Blanc has written to the General Secretary Cremer that he approves the 'Address' and regrets not having been able to attend the St Martin's Hall MEETING, etc. ALTOGETHER, the sole purpose of his letter is to get him co-opted an HONORARY MEMBER. Foreseeing that attempts of this kind would be made, I had, however, fortunately got the BY-LAW accepted that no one (except workers' SOCIETIES) could be invited to join and that nobody at all could be an honorary member.†78
Page me42.55

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me42.56
Page me42.56

Gumpert will get the photograph as soon as he sends me the long-promised one of his wife.

Page me42.56
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

25
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.56
[London,] 22 December 1864

Dear FREDERICK,

In great haste. Please send Becker's letter back to me.†a I hope you have not lost it.

Page me42.56

Happy New Year!

Your

K.M.

Page me42.56
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

26
MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT
IN BERLIN
Page me42.56
[Draft]
London, 22 December 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

My dear Countess,

A few days ago, a friend in Hamburg sent me the Nordstern containing my statement against Blind,†b duly emended with misprints.

Page Break me42.57
Page me42.57

It was at your request that I made this statement, although its composition did not come easily to me as I did not agree with Lassalle's political tactics. However, all my scruples were removed by Blind's shameless outburst against the deceased in the St Louis 'Westliche Post'.†44 I had not the slightest idea which papers you would send the statement to. The Nordstern was the furthest from my mind. Mr Bruhn has now seized upon this opportunity to make an 'indecent gesture' in my direction, by hinting to his readers in the commentaries that I had sought access to his emporium through the back door and had been granted it as an act of extreme graciousness only because a third party had intervened especially on my behalf.†64 I have no doubt that his accomplice in America†a will make use of this. Is it Mr Bruhn's desire that I should be forced into exposing him publicly for the conceited nonentity that he is?
Page me42.57

If Bruhn, Bernhard Becker and tutti quanti set out to oppose me and my efforts in any manner whatsoever that I consider harmful to the workers' movement itself, a storm will break about these gentlemen's heads that will take their breath away. Reasons of long-standing personal friendship and party interest, which held me back vis-á-vis Lassalle, can no longer have the slightest force in respect of these dii minorum gentium.†b This I am stating once and for all, so that I cannot later be charged with ambiguity or inconsiderateness.
Page me42.57
In no circumstances, do I wish the Eighteenth Brumaire to be published, and, if steps have already been taken to this end, they are to be checked forthwith.†79
Page me42.57
I scarcely dare express any good wishes for the New Year, knowing as I do that the old year has left you, my dear Countess, only with memories.

Yours very respectfully
K.M.

Page me42.57
First published in: F. Lassalie. Nachgelassene Briefe und Schriften, Bd. III, Stuttgart-Berlin, 1922

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.58

27
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL
IN ELBERFELD
Page me42.58
London, 22 December 1864
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Siebel,
A Happy New Year!
Page me42.58
You will perhaps have seen that Engels and I have agreed to become contributors to the Berlin Social-Demokrat.†80 Nevertheless — this entre nous†a — either that paper will have to dissociate itself from the apotheosis of Lassalle, or we shall dissociate ourselves from it. But the poor devils have a lot to contend with.
Page me42.58
You will have received the 'Addresses'†b sent to you and have no doubt guessed I am the author. For the sake of the movement here, it is important for us that German workers' associations should join the Central Committee here. (As has happened in many cases with the Italians and the French.) Now Liebknecht has written to me that the Berlin printers' association will be joining, but that it is very doubtful whether the 'General Association of German Workers'†2 will join, on account of the intrigues of Mr Bernhard Becker, whose importance was 'invented' by Lassalle. (Entre nous this is perhaps Lassalle's only invention.)†81

Page me42.58

Today I wrote the old Hatzfeldt woman a kind of threatening letter, sub rosa,†c of course.

Page me42.58

Now it would be highly desirable for you to pay a brief visit to Solingen to explain on my behalf to the cutler, Klings, how exceedingly important it is that the Association of German Workers should decide to join the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION at its congress in Düsseldorf on 27 December of this year.†82 You might surreptitiously hint that, for such nonentities as B. Becker, etc., what matters is, naturally, not the cause but the 'infiniment petit',†d i.e., their own persons. But such a hint must be dropped diplomatically, without implicating me.

Page me42.58

You understand that it is necessary that the General Association of German Workers should join only for a start, on account of our opponents here. At a later date, the whole organisation of this association will have to be broken up, as its basis is fundamentally wrong.

Page Break me42.59

Page me42.59

If you do not now at last write me a few lines, I shall presume that you have become totally disloyal to me, and will proclaim you excommunicated.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.59

First published in Deutsche Zeitung, Nr. 473, 16 October 1920

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.60

1865

28

MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†83
IN LONDON

Page me42.60

Manchester,†84 [about 8 January 1865]
58 Dover Street, Oxford Street

My dear Jung,

I felt rather shocked at reading in the 'Beehive' and the 'Miner' of this week that at our last Committee-sitting

'It was unanimously agreed to invite Messrs Beesly, Grossmith, Beales and Harrison, to the soirée which is to be held on the 16th'.†a

Page me42.60

I do not mention the mere anachronism, that no such resolution was taken on last Tuesday's sitting.†b

Page me42.60

What I object to is the positive falsehood that Mr Grossmith was invited.

Page me42.60

This Grossmith, although he seldom or never attends our sittings, figures as a member of the Committee under all our addresses.

Page me42.60

How could our Committee invite a member of our Committee to a soirée given by our Committee? Shall this, perhaps, form a sort of premium to be gained by regular absence from our weekly séances?

Page me42.60

Since I cannot return to London before the end of next week, you'll much oblige me

Page me42.60

By asking at next Tuesday's sitting, who is the writer of the report in the 'Beehive' and the 'Miner'?

Page me42.60

Who empowered that writer to make our Committee the 'unconscious' instrument of exalting Mr Grossmith?

Page me42.60

You will understand at once how important it is to nip in the bud any attempt at turning our Committee into the tool of local ambitions, or any sort of intrigues.

Page Break me42.61

Page me42.61

You will oblige me, by informing me, under the above address, — and supposing you to make the interpellation — what answer was given to you.†85

Page me42.61

Salut et fraternité.

K. Marx

Page me42.61

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original for the first time

29
ENGELS TO RUDOLF ENGELS†10
IN BARMEN
Page me42.61
[Manchester,] 10 January 1865

Dear Rudolf,

My view of the American war†11 is this: the South is gradually becoming exhausted and cannot replace its armies. The North has not yet mobilised the half of its resources. The South is limited to defence, so much so in fact that counter-attacks such as, e.g., Longstreet undertook in the Shenandoah Valley, are now a thing of the past. Hood attempted yet another one, but, in so doing, revealed his own impotence and decided the whole campaign at one stroke.†86 The North is superior to its Southern opponents at all points and, furthermore, has Sherman's 40,000 men at its disposal who can go wheresoever they please, everywhere destroying the South's forces, communications, resources and supplies deep in the South's own territory.†75 Charleston is certain to fall in 4-6 weeks at the latest, once Sherman has encircled it on land.†87 The South has but one army left, that at Richmond.†30 That will assuredly be quite decisively beaten in the present year, and with that the defence of the South by armies will be at an end. A guerrilla war, brigandry, etc., may then ensue and will probably do so into next year.

Page me42.61

If the South arms its Negroes, that will be so much the better for the North. However, they will take good care not to. At the last moment, if at all. The Negroes are not so stupid as to allow themselves to be massacred for the whip that flays their backs.

Page Break me42.62

Page me42.62

There will certainly still be moments when things look better for the South than they do now, but we have seen that happen too often before, and I shall not be deceived by that. Such moments are merely a respite.

Page me42.62

I do not believe we shall get cotton from America; but I do believe we shall see a temporary fall. Cotton is at present so subject to speculation that prices are affected by every vicissitude of public opinion. There are, moreover, 500,000 bales in Liverpool, and the people here do have a tendency to fly to extremes immediately and shout: the South is done for, is bound to surrender in 14 days, etc. — a rise is thereby inconceivable. We shall be at the mercy of whatever news we receive, though always with the proviso that we know the STOCK in Liverpool to be double what it was last year. I also believe we shall see the year 1865 close below present prices, as we must expect more cotton from all parts.

Your Friedrich

Page me42.62
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

30
MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER JENNY
IN LONDON
Page me42.62
Manchester, 11 January 1865
58 Dover Street

My sweet child,

I wanted to leave Manchester tomorrow, but I'll be hardly able to do so before Sunday (15th Jan.) next.†84 Ernest Jones, whom I am anxious to speak, is busily engaged in the neighbouring towns and has invited me (and Engels) for next Friday evening when he'll be at home. I have not yet seen him, and could not see him before that day. This is one cause of delay. There are others, but at all events I shall not stay longer than until Sunday.

Page Break me42.63
Page me42.63

The German translation of the 'Address to the Working Classes'†a has been reprinted in the Mainzer Zeitung, the 'Address to Lincoln'†b in the Berliner Reform and the London Hermann. The latter honour is probably due to Mr Juch's anxiety lest his rival Bender might monopolize 'our protection'.
Page me42.63

The weather here was abominable. Today 'the sun shines', as Müller has it, but its rays are reflected by the ice drops covering the dirty streets. Even the sunbeams must here always have something disagreeable to fall upon.
Page me42.63

I have not yet seen a Borchardt, and as to the Gumperts, I had only a few minutes' conversation with the Dr yesterday evening.
Page me42.63

On my arrival I did not find Frederick, but in his stead a letter informing me that he would be back from fox-hunting at 6 o'clock. Meanwhile he had taken all precautionary measures for making my 'entrée joyeuse'†c (with your great historical knowledge you'll not be at a loss as to the 'entrée joyeuse'). Whether his change of domicile is an improvement, seems a rather debatable question. At all events, the people are less impudent.

Page me42.63

Apropos. There is much 'chronique scandaleuse' just now in the Freiligrath world, as far as it is connected with the General Bank of Switzerland. There has appeared a pamphlet at Genéve, disclosing the scandalous mismanagement of Fazy,†d Freiligrath's 'natural superior'. He has been forced to resign his post as supreme director of the bank, and 'um zu retten, was zu retten ist'†e (literally this) Jew Reinach has been put into his place, assisted by a Frenchman and — Karl Vogt who has the despicable meanness of betraying, and denouncing, and publicly declaring against Fazy, his old idol, the man in fact of whom he is a mere 'creature'.

Page me42.63

I suppose you are aware that the first 'abonnement number'†f of the 'Social-Democrat' has been confiscated by the police at Berlin.†88 This is a rather favourable accident. Those fellows stand in need of some small political martyrdom.

Page me42.63

I hope all is right at home. The cat being gone, the mice ought to dance. Pay my compliments to Ma, 'Success', 'Mine Own' and the 'Prophet'.†g As to yourself, my dear Aaron, I dreamt of you last night, and saw you in your bloomer costume, performing the most wonderful jumps, almost flying through the air, after you had before done the Davenport trick in the most admirable manner.†89 I felt quite proud and chuckled in my sleeves over the success of my old acquaintance, and had the most lively remembrance of the rather unplastic dance you had in bygone times executed before the golden calf, in the desert.†a

Page Break me42.64

Page me42.64

Show Ma the inclosed. She will remember Bochum-Dolfs, from Paris. He is now the happy father of 10 children with whom he 'vagabonds' through the world.

Page me42.64

First published, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, 1925, and in the language of the original, English, in The Socialist Review (London), No. 44, September 1929

Reproduced from the original

31

MARX TO JOHANN BAPTIST VON SCHWEITZER†1

IN BERLIN

Page me42.64

[Draft]

To. J.B. v. Schweitzer ('Social-Demokrat')

London, 16 January 1865

Sir,

Despite its brief existence, your Social-Demokrat has already carried two attacks on the 'International Association'. I am only awaiting the 'third' before my friends and I publicly dissociate ourselves from any connection with your paper. In the event of such a dissociation, I should be compelled to deal 'critically' with certain things which, in deference to party interests, I have hitherto not aired, and this may not be at all to the liking of certain gentlemen. The first attack on the 'International Association' was contained in an inane passage in B. Becker's 'Message'.†90 I did not hold you responsible for it for the very reason that it was a 'message' and you unfortunately have an official connection with the 'General Workers' Association'†2 (emphatically not to be confused with the working class).

Page Break me42.65
Page me42.65

The bare-faced, lying gossip of Mr Moses Hess†a is another matter; if you had had the slightest consideration for me and my friends you would under no circumstances have accepted it, you could only have accepted it with the intention of provoking me.
Page me42.65

With regard to Moses' fabrication itself, I shall be making a public statement about it after I have obtained certain information from Paris.†91 Regarding your acceptance of that abomination of an article, I should be obliged if you would inform me whether I am to consider same as a declaration of war by the 'Social-Demokrat'?

Your most obedient servant
K. Marx

Page me42.65
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to Marx's Notebook for 1865

32
MARX TO ENGELS†92
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.65
[London,] 25 January 1865

DEAR FREDERICK,

Letters enclosed
1. from Weydemeyer,
2. from Schily,
3. from Liebknecht. I must have all 3 back.
Page me42.65

4. from Schweitzer and 5. a scrawl about Vogt, which I would also like back.

Page me42.65

By way of explanation for letters 2, 3 and 4, the following: I do not know whether you get the Social-Demokrat (or have taken out a subscription to it). (If neither should be the case, Bender can always send you one from here, as he has ordered 6 copies on the off-chance.)

Page Break me42.66

Page me42.66

There was a contribution in the Social-Demokrat from that jackass Moses Hess,†a in which he related how we had approached L'Association (paper of the Paris associations) asking them to print a translation of our address†b (on the contrary, Massol had made Schily an offer to that effect) and join our Association; they are said to have refused, however, because we had originally approached Tolain and others who were Plon-Plonists.†93 Tolain himself had admitted as much, etc.

Page me42.66

I discovered this scrawl on the day after my return from Manchester.†84 Therefore wrote furious letters to Paris†94 and Berlin.†c From Schily's and Schweitzer's letters it emerges that the whole thing can be blamed on Hess' asininity (mixed with a certain amount of MALICE, perhaps) and on Liebknecht's asininity toute pure.†d

Page me42.66

The affair created a great furore in the Comité here yesterday. Le Lubez, entirely on Tolain's side, declares the whole thing to be slanderous, since fellows like Horn (Einhorn, rabbi) and that gas-bag Jules Simon (of La Liberté†e) are on the Comité of L'Association. However, at my suggestion, it was resolved not to send the 500 CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP to Paris until Schily had reported further from Paris.†95

Page me42.66

The Association is doing famously here. At its soirée,†f which I did not attend, ABOUT 1,200 people (they would have had 3 × as many if the hall had been big enough) gathered, which brought approximately £15 into our exceedingly depleted EXCHEQUER.

Page me42.66

Letter has come from Geneva about joining,†96 and from DIFFERENT PARTS OF ENGLAND.

Page me42.66

There will be a MEETING for the Poles in the course of February (especially to collect money for the new émigrés, which also explains Lord Townshend as CHAIRMAN), organised by the (English) POLISH LEAGUE, the Polish society here and our Association.†97

Page me42.66

What do you say to Lassalle's 'bequest', as described by Liebknecht?†98 Is it not exactly like his own Sickingen, who wants to compel Charles V to 'assume the leadership of the movement'?†g

Page Break me42.67

Page me42.67

Yesterday, I sent Article on Proudhon†a to Schweitzer, in response to his urgent request (and also to make up to him for having bitten his head off instead of Liebknecht's for the BLUNDER in the Soc.-Dem.). You will see from it that several very savage blows, ostensibly aimed at Proudhon, strike home at our 'Achilles'†b and were intended to do so.

Page me42.67

Apropos. Each secretary of our Association will receive a package of CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP next week (for the 'Association', not for the 'Comité', of course) for distribution (1s. for annual subscription, 1d. for the CARD). You must get rid of a few in Manchester. It will not be many. But let me know about HOW MANY I can send for this purpose? It is IN FACT ONE OF THE WAYS AND MEANS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

Page me42.67

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS. WILL SHE, PERHAPS, BECOME A MEMBER? LADIES ARE ADMITTED.

YOURS TRULY
K.M.

Page me42.67

P.S. I left a pair of winter BOOTS (shoes) at your house in Dover Street, ditto new pair of knitted stockings, and probably the 2 silk handkerchiefs as well. I only mention it so that you can DROP a WORD to your landlords 'some time or other' so that they know that an eye is kept on them.

Page me42.67

By means of a most ingenious experiment Prof. Tyndall has managed to separate out the rays of the sun into a heat-ray, which even melts platinum, and a cold light-ray which has no heat at all. This is ONE OF THE FINEST EXPERIMENTS OF OUR DAYS.

Page me42.67

P.S. II

Liebknecht has also sent me a note from the editors, urgently asking for a contribution from you. For the moment they are thinking either of the YANKEE WAR or the Prussian Army Reform, as they say their paper is read by more people of standing than any other Berlin paper.

Page me42.67

Now, as far as the YANKEE WAR is concerned, you explained to me before that it was not suitable for the Social-Demokrat.

Page me42.67

Regarding the Prussian Army Reform, the paper would be a very good place for it. Only QUESTION for me is this: would not an analysis of this topic involve you in a one-sided conflict with the men of Progress,†99 which would be undesirable at this moment and on this topic, since the King†c has declared he will not give way on any point, so has naturally turned the question into a burning constitutional issue?†100 Or can you treat the question, in accordance with your military view, in such a way as to kill both birds, which is what is wanted?

Page Break me42.68

Page me42.68
At all events, as I have already sent the paper an article DIRECTLY (signed by me), you can be published there, too. And you ought to do so, while there is still an organ in existence at all.

Page me42.68
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

33
ENGELS TO MARX†101
IN LONDON
Page me42.68
Manchester, 27 January 1865

Dear Moor,
I will send the letters back to you tomorrow or on Sunday, as I simply have to read this dreadful handwriting and these pale inks by daylight; yesterday evening I was only able to skim through them.
Page me42.68
Moses†a really has been extraordinarily tactless (no doubt the head of the party†b took a certain malicious pleasure in it), but Liebknecht even more so. But I am surprised the latter has not already committed more such gaffes, it always was his FORTE.
Page me42.68
I am sending the fellows the little Danish folksong about Tidmann, who is struck dead by the old man at the Thing for imposing new taxes on the peasants.†c It is revolutionary but not indictable, and above all it is directed against the feudal nobility, which the paper†d absolutely must condemn. I am making a few remarks to that effect. I shall probably be able to do the article on the reorganisation of the army†e as soon as I get the new military budget proposals, etc.; I am writing to ask them to send them to me and am telling them at the same time that I shall be coming out against the government — PAST AND PRESENT — just as much as against the men of Progress,†99 and that the article must not be published if the first point is unacceptable to them.†102 As far as the American war is concerned, perhaps something can be made of it at a later date after all. The present phase is not yet complete, the calm, to use J. Grimm's term, is 'inorganic'.

Page Break me42.69

Page me42.69

Good old Lassalle is after all gradually being unmasked as a common or garden scoundrel. It has never been our practice to judge people by what they thought but rather by what they were, and I do not see why we should make an exception in the late Izzy's case. Subjectively, his vanity may have made the affair seem plausible to him, but objectively it was the act of a scoundrel, the betrayal of the whole workers' movement to the Prussians. Throughout, the stupid fop does not seem to have obtained from Bismarck anything at all in return, nothing specific at all, let alone guarantees†98; he seems just to have taken it for granted he would definitely do Bismarck in the eye, in exactly the same way as he could not fail to shoot Racowita dead. That's Baron Izzy all over for you.

Page me42.69

Incidentally, it will not be very long now before it becomes not merely desirable but necessary to make this whole affair public. We can only gain from it, and, if the business with the Association†a and the paper in Germany bears fruit, the fellow's heirs will have to be thrown out soon enough now. Meanwhile, the proletariat in Germany will soon see what it has got in Bismarck.

Page me42.69

Kind regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.69

I can only see my way to disposing of approx. 1/2 dozen cards; I will see Jones about it, I'm very busy just now.

Page me42.69

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.70

34

MARX TO ENGELS†103

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.70

[London,] 30 January 1865

Dear Engels,

Tout d'accord.†a As far as your anxiety about confiscation is concerned, what you must do is to announce quite briefly, as a foreword to the first article,†b that you are firstly going to throw light on the subject from the military point of view, secondly you are going to criticise the bourgeoisie and, thirdly, the reaction, etc., and the attitude of the workers' party to the question, etc., whereby the drift can already be narrowly outlined or hinted at. This will, de prime abord,†c make it more difficult for the government to confiscate. If it does so in spite of that, the Social-Demokrat will thereby be hurled into a new phase (for the fellows cannot at present confiscate without releasing the confiscated material, or taking it to court), and, at the same time, you must keep a copy of the manuscript of No. III. It is then the easiest thing in the world to publish it in the one of the 2 German papers here†d and then send COPIES of it to Hamburg, etc., where one or other of the bourgeois papers is sure to print it.

Page me42.70

It seems to me that Schily has allowed himself to be duped by M. Hess. This is quite evident from all Moses' epistles to the Social-Demokrat. (CF. F.I. No. 15 of the Social-Demokrat†e which has just arrived and is, on the whole, full of the most revolting 'Lassalleanism'. The gentlemen from Iserlohn speak of 'Lassalle-Lincoln'.†f) Moses is our adversary, has forgotten neither our 'expulsion from Brussels' nor our 'ejection from Cologne'†104 and always counts it to Lassalle's credit that he had the 'tact' so necessary for a 'leader of the people' to take M. Hess seriously.
Page me42.70

By the way, being the 'organ of the General Association of German Workers', the Social-Demokrat finds it extremely difficult to extricate itself from the apotheosis-soup.

Page Break me42.71
Page me42.71

Incidentally, since we now know that Izzy planned to trade off the workers' party to Bismarck†98 (we were previously quite unaware of how) so that he might become known as the 'Richelieu of the Proletariat', I shall not now have any scruples about making it sufficiently plain in the preface to my book that he is a parrot and plagiarist.†105
Page me42.71

I wonder whether the 'poems': 'To follow Lassalle is our every wish'†a and other nonsense which the workers are sending to the Social-Demokrat, do not emanate directly or indirectly from the old lady.†b At all events, I have already told the editors several times in writing that this nonsense has got to stop BY and BY.†106
Page me42.71

What sort of fellows the men of Progress†99 are is evident yet again from their conduct regarding the combination question.†107 (En passant, the Prussian Anti-Combination Law, like all continental laws of this kind, has its origin in the decree of the Assemblée Constituante of 14 June 1791,†108 by which the French bourgeois imposed the most severe penalties on ANYTHING OF THE SORT, in fact workers' associations of any kind, — e.g. loss of civil rights for a year — on the pretext that this constituted restoration of the guilds and is in contravention of liberté constitutionelle†c and the 'droits de l'homme'.†d It is so characteristic of Robespierre that, at a time when it was a crime punishable by the guillotine to be 'constitutional', as defined by the Assemblée of 1789, all of its laws directed against the workers remained in force.)
Page me42.71

Here in London Mr Bright has again spoiled his whole rapport with the workers by his SPEECH opposing the application of the Ten Hours' Bill†109 to the BIRMINGHAM TRADES.†e A bourgeois of that kind really is INCORRIGIBLE. And the fellow does that at a moment when he wants to make use of the workers to beat the oligarchs!
Page me42.71
Apropos. As I have now told the Social-Demokrat twice that they must purge their paper of this infantile 'apotheosis' as far and as quickly as possible, it will doubtless do no harm if you make similar remarks to the editors when you send your article.†f If we allow them to use our names, then we can, at the same time, demand that now, when people are aware of Lassalle's intended treachery, they should not help to throw dust in the eyes of the workers or turn themselves into a vehicle for just any kind of loutish rubbish.

Page Break me42.72
Page me42.72
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.72
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

35
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.72
[London,] 1 February 1865

Dear FREDERICK,
Enclosed letter from Strohn to be returned; write to me and let me know your thoughts about the publishing business at the same time.†110
Page me42.72
This 'Siebold' is the Siebold of champagne fame, NO DOUBT ABOUT THAT. I really am rather afraid that he did not merely find my reception of his bubbly enthusiasm very dry, but THAT HE CAUGHT SOME QUEER WORDS AT GUMPERT'S DOOR, AS I TOLD YOU AT THE TIME. At all events, it is nice of the fellow and quite typical of wine-salesman politics to go straight from us to Karl Blind and run as his MESSENGER to Hamburg. Has Blind perhaps also placed an order for 'sparkling wines' and granted his most gracious protection to scumscoundrelism as well? I hope for the sake of bubbly's good reputation that Siebold is no such VENAL scum, although there was no mistaking that while one of his eyes was sparkling with enthusiasm, the other HAD AN EYE TO BUSINESS. Regarding Freiligrath, I FEEL SURE that he is much TOO CAUTIOUS to agree publicly in any way to collaborate (in partibus,†a it goes without saying) with Blind. HOWEVER, I SHALL TRY TO ASCERTAIN THE FACT. At all events, it is very good that Strohn has so gratifyingly baulked Ruge and Blind. I sent off a few sarcastic marginalia to him earlier today,†111 intended specifically for Meissner, concerning the nobile par†a of antagonistic brothers.

Page Break me42.73
Page me42.73

You must excuse the scraps of English in my epistle as there was a SITTING OF THE COUNCIL yesterday which lasted until ONE O'CLOCK. ('Liquor' and 'smoke' are banned from these 'SITTINGS'.) The first thing was the answering epistle from Lincoln, which you may find in tomorrow's Times†112 and certainly in The Daily News and The Star.†b In the reply to the LONDON EMANCIPATION SOCIETY†113 (which counts among its members such illustrious figures as Sir Charles Lyell and the 'Voice of World History', alias K.B.†c), published in yesterday's Evening Star, the old man drily dismisses the fellows with two formal clichés, exactly as he had done in his earlier answer to the Manchester branch of the EMANCIPATION SOCIETY; whereas his letter to us is in fact everything we could have asked for, and, in particular, the naive assurance that the United States could not involve itself directly in 'PROPAGANDISM'. At any rate, it is the only answer so far ON THE PART OF THE OLD MAN that is more than a strictly formal one.
Page me42.73

Secondly, a delegate was there from the Poles (aristocrats), who have links with the 'LITERARY SOCIETY',†114 through whom these gentlemen conveyed their solemn assurance, with an eye to the forthcoming MEETING on Poland, that they are democrats and that every Pole is now a democrat, since the aristocracy has dwindled away to such a degree that they would be mad not to recognise the impossibility of restoring Poland without a peasant rising. WHETHER or not these fellows believe what they say, at all events, the last lesson they had does not seem to have been entirely wasted on them.†24
Page me42.73

Thirdly, there were statements from various TRADES UNIONS about their joining. Ditto from an association in Brussels which is promising to organise branches throughout Belgium.†115
Page me42.73

I then handed over an issue of the Daily St. Louis Press which had arrived just yesterday containing leader about our 'ADDRESS TO THE WORKINGMEN'†d and an excerpt from it which had obviously been arranged by Weydemeyer.†e
Page me42.73

But now the most remarkable thing of all.

Cremer, OUR HONORARY GENERAL SECRETARY, had received a written invitation for the 'COUNCIL', as well as a private visit, from a PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE which is meeting privatim at the London

Page Break me42.74
Tavern next Monday. Object: MONSTER MEETING for MANHOOD SUFFRAGE. Chairman: — Richard Cobden!
Page me42.74

The point is this: as E. Jones told us previously, these fellows have been a complete failure in Manchester. They have therefore adopted A BROADER PLATFORM, in which REGISTRATION 'FOR PAYING POOR-RATE' figured instead of MANHOOD SUFFRAGE, however. That is what is stated in the printed circular sent to us. However, since various indications made it clear to them that nothing less than MANHOOD SUFFRAGE can attract ANY CO-OPERATION WHATEVER ON THE PART OF THE WORKING CLASSES, they have announced they are prepared to accept the latter. A big demonstration in London would lead to similar ones in the provinces, write the provincials 'yet once again', having 'all ready' realised that they are not able TO SET THE BALL A-GOING.
Page me42.74

The next question raised yesterday was this: should our SOCIETY, I.E. COUNCIL, agree to what these fellows want (they include all the old SHAM CITY AGITATORS such as Sam. Morley, etc.) and send a few delegates to attend the transactions of their provisional committee as 'watchmen'? Secondly, if these fellows pledge themselves directly to the slogan of MANHOOD SUFFRAGE and the PUBLIC MEETING is being called under this slogan, should we promise our support? The latter is, you see, just as crucial to these fellows as it was in the American business.†113 Without the TRADES UNIONS, no mass MEETING is possible, and without us, the TRADES UNIONS are not to be had. This is also the reason why these gentlemen have come to us.
Page me42.74

Opinions were very divided, for which Bright's latest silly tricks in Birmingham were much to blame.†a
Page me42.74

On my motion, it was decided that: 1) the delegation should be sent (in my motion, I excluded FOREIGNERS from it; but Eccarius and Lubez were elected on to it as 'Englishmen' and silent witnesses) just as 'observers'†116; 2) SO FAR AS THE MEETING IS CONCERNED, we should act with them firstly if MANHOOD SUFFRAGE is proclaimed directly and publicly in the programme, and secondly if people selected by us are included on the permanent committee, so that they can keep an eye on those fellows and compromise them in the event of fresh treachery, which, as I made plain to all of them, is at any rate intended. I am writing to E. Jones about the matter today.†117

Your
K. M.

Page me42.74
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.75

36
MARX TO ENGELS†118
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.75
[London,] 3 February 1865

DEAR FREDERICK,

Enclosed

1. Letter from Siebel†119 reporting on his meeting with Klings, with which I had 'charged' him.†a My only comment on it is that I am not going to interfere in the affair any further. If Klings succeeds — without our help — in getting rid of B. Becker and his testamentary importance, together with the beastly old girl,†b that suits me. There is nothing to be done with the Workers' Association†2 as bequeathed by Baron Izzy.†c The sooner it is disbanded, the better.
Page me42.75

2. Rheinische Zeitung with leading article,†120 probably by Red Becker.†d It amounts to an APPEAL ad misericordiam†e from the 'men of Progress'.†99
Page me42.75

My opinion is now that the two of us must issue a statement, and that this crisis particularly gives us the opportunity to reoccupy our 'LEGITIMATE' position. ABOUT 10 days ago, I wrote to Schweitzer that he must stand up to Bismarck and the workers' party must drop even the appearance of flirting with Bismarck, etc.†121 By way of thanks, he has 'all ready' been philandering with Pissmarck more than ever.
Page me42.75

'Yet again' Moses Hess is 'all ready' denouncing the 'International Association'†122 for the second time in No. 16 of the Social-Demokrat, which contains the letter I wrote about Proudhon,†f bristling with misprints. I wrote a furious letter to Liebknecht about it yesterday,†111 telling him that this was the very last warning; that I do not give a FARTHING for 'good will' when its actions are those of ill-will; that I cannot make it clear to the members of the 'INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE' here that things like that occur in bonne foi†g out of pure stupidity; that while their gutter rag continues to eulogise Lassalle, even though they know what treachery he had up his sleeve,†98 and while it conducts this cowardly flirtation with Bismarck, it has the effrontery to let the Plonplonist†93 Hess accuse us here of Plonplonism, etc.

Page Break me42.76
Page me42.76

My opinion is now that we should take up Moses' denunciation or insinuation in order d'abord†a to issue a brief declaration of war against Bonaparte Plon-Plon, at the same time making honourable mention of Moses' friend, the Rabbi Ein-Horn. Then we should use this to declare ourselves ditto against Bismarck, as well as against the rogues or fools who are dreaming or drivelling about an alliance with him for the sake of the working class. Then, of course, in conclusion the beastly men of Progress should be told that they have, on the one hand, run their cause into the ground by their political cowardice and helplessness, and that, on the other hand, if they are demanding an alliance with the working class against the government — which at the moment is, of course, the only correct line — then they would at least have to make the concessions to the workers that accord with their own principle of 'FREETRADE' and 'DEMOCRATISM', in other words, repeal of all the exceptional laws against the workers, which in addition to the combination laws quite specifically include the present Prussian legislation on the press. They would ditto have to proclaim, at least in principle, the restoration of universal suffrage, which was abolished by the coup d'état in Prussia.†123 This would be the minimum to be expected of them. Maybe something ought to be put in about the military question as well. At all events, the thing needs to be tied up quickly. And you must get your 'ideas' about the whole statement down on paper. I will then add mine to it and knead it all together, will send the whole thing back to you once again AND SO FORTH. The moment seems to me to be favourable for this 'coup d'état'. We cannot miss this moment for our 'restitutio in integrum'†b out of consideration for Liebknecht or for anyone else.

Page me42.76

AT THE SAME TIME, you must not fail to let the Social-Demokrat have your article on the military question†c SO SOON AS POSSIBLE.

Page me42.76

I would of course write to them — quoad†d statement — that, if they do not accept same immediately, same will 'all ready' appear in other papers.

Page me42.76

If they do accept it, well and good, and it will not even matter if it blows them sky high. (Although Bismarck will take care not to resort to forcible measures at the present moment.) If they do not accept it, we have a decent excuse for getting rid of them.†e At all events, the air must be cleared and the party purged of the stench left behind by Lassalle.

Page Break me42.77

Your
K.M.

Page me42.77

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

37
ENGELS TO MARX†101
IN LONDON
Page me42.77
[Manchester,] 5 February 1865
Mornington St[reet]

Dear Moor,

I fully agree about the statement.†a But you will have to do it yourself, or I shall never get the military article†b done. I fear the thing is getting to be so long that it will only be feasible in pamphlet form. I and II are finished (except for revision), III not yet. I have had a lot of interruptions, Blank was here, etc., etc. So, you do the statement. The exceptional law also includes the restriction on the right of association and assembly, all the legislation concerning journeymen's road books†124 and finally Article 100 of the penal code: Incitement of citizens to hatred and contempt (another Napoleonic legacy). Then, if you can work it in, some indication that in a predominantly agricultural country like Prussia it is despicable to attack only the bourgeoisie in the name of the industrial proletariat, without even mentioning the brutal patriarchal exploitation of the rural proletariat by the big feudal aristocracy. It is less important to say anything about the military question, but the budget question should be given prominence: what use is it to the workers to have a parliament elected by universal suffrage, if it is as powerless as Bismarck wants to make the present bourgeois parliament — whose successor it would after all be? And if it cannot even reject new taxation?

Page Break me42.78
Page me42.78

Those are my thoughts ad hoc.†a So, get going and sent the thing to me straightaway.
Page me42.78

Meissner. SO FAR SO GOOD. You should go there yourself, of course. Conto a metá†b has its advantages if you reserve the contractual right to inspect the books and documents and if Meissner is prepared to make you an interest-free advance equal to 2/3 of the fee you are claiming anyway. Strohn's letter seems to suggest that Meissner WOULD RATHER NOT PART WITH ANY MONEY IF HE COULD HELP IT.†66 At all events, you must go there yourself with the manuscript†c and settle it.
Page me42.78

Moreover, get on with it quickly now. The time is really ripe for the book, and our names again command respect in the public eye. You know how fashionable it is to procrastinate in publishing in Germany. So, do not miss the moment — it may make an enormous difference to the impact it produces.
Page me42.78

Siebold. I have told you before that lads like that are not to be trusted and I was sure from the beginning that he would call on Blind in London. The assumption that he had picked up some odd remarks ad portam Gumperti†d is quite unnecessary. The fellow has always done that and will always do so. But it is a good thing we have our eye on him 'all ready'.

Page me42.78
I gather from Siebel's letter,†119 which I am keeping here, that the Lassalle Association†2 will very soon be ruined, thanks to its officers' roguish tricks and embezzlement, and a very good thing too that it 'will have turned out thus'. The beastly old girl†e and her cliques will do the rest. The less we concern ourselves about the whole filthy business, the better. LET IT ROT AND BE DAM'D TO IT.
Page me42.78
I find the Social-Demokrätchen†f more repugnant with every passing day. That shitty Hess, who is, in relation to us, really acting like a secret employee of Lassalle, with his protectorial airs; Mr Schweitzer's bloody pretentious articles on the encyclical and Bismarck, flirting with every kind of trash and only scolding the bourgeoisie,†g the complete lack of sparkle and talent, and the absence even of any common sense, with just a few exceptions, it is all a bit too much for me. Lassalle-worship three times a week,

Page Break me42.79
the devil can stomach that, and it is good that the crisis is coming. I shall tell these gentlemen so in my next letter as well, have had no opportunity to do so until now. Apropos, how are you addressing your letters to Liebknecht? I would like to give him a telling-off from time to time as well, or encourage him, s'il y a lieu.†a
Page me42.79
I must stop now. Best wishes and do send the statement straightaway. I shall have finished the article by Wednesday or Thursday.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.79
I have tried to sound out my brother-in-law†b about Siebel, but I could discover nothing except that he is 'always drunk', runs around with actresses, and his wife wants to divorce him.
Page me42.79
MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO THE LADIES.

Page me42.79
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

38
MARX TO ENGELS†101

IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.79
[London,] 6 February [1865]

Dear Engels,

As good luck would have it, in the feuilleton section in the Social-Demokrat which arrived today your call for the crushing of the aristocracy comes right after my article†c condemning even a 'pseudo-compromise'.

Page me42.79

In the first instance, I now believe it is better to send in the few lines below,†125 instead of the statement I had originally intended.†d They will inevitably provide the occasion for a further statement. But my 'aesthetic' sense tells me — on further reflection — that the latter would not be entirely appropriate, because it would come too soon after Becker's APPEAL.†120 These few lines, on the other hand, will quite certainly provoke a real tussle between Schweitzer and Red Becker etc., in which we can then intervene and declare our policy briefly, forcefully and without any beating about the bush.

Page Break me42.80

Page me42.80

I enclose letter from the unfortunate Liebknecht†126 and note sent him by the old Hatzfeldt woman; there is still not enough 'Lassalle' in the paper†a for her liking.

Page me42.80

As TO Klings, I am not going to answer at all. Let the fellows manage by themselves.†b

Page me42.80

Letter from Schily just received (can only send it to you in a few days time), from which it emerges:

Page me42.80

1. that Moses'†c insinuations were pure invention,

Page me42.80

2. that our plan will have a 'fantastic' effect in Paris, and the workers there are not taking any notice whatsoever of L'Association, which Mr A. Horn, Löb Sonnemann and other riff-raff use to indulge their self-importance.†95

Page me42.80

If the attached statement meets with your approval, make a copy of it and sign it. Then send it back. I will then put my name to it as well and post the thing to Berlin.

Page me42.80

Apropos. Lincoln's answer to us is in today's Times.†112

Page me42.80

[Postscript]

Liebknecht's private address is: '13 Neuenburger Strasse, Berlin'. You can send to Mrs Liebknecht at that address whenever you want to write privately. Poor W. Liebknecht is obviously in an exceedingly embarrassing situation. He will have to be told that it is a case of either bending or breaking. In the latter case, I should think he could certainly earn an honest living as a schoolmaster in Manchester.

Page me42.80
First published (without Postscript) in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.81

39
ENGELS TO MARX†29
IN LONDON
Page me42.81
Manchester, 7 February 1865

Dear Moor,

Statement†a enclosed. They will take exception to the fact that we refer to Moses†b by name, which, when published, could be regarded as a breach of editorial secrecy. Do not forget to give Liebknecht instructions about this, so that a justifiable technical objection of this kind does not delay the matter again.
Page me42.81

Liebknecht is becoming more and more stupid. He calls it a compromise that we should not merely sanction in silence every stupid thing that appears in the paper†c but also tolerate the paper casting-aspersions on our own affairs and actions,†126 in defiance of every convention. But we always have a fine LOT of agents to act for us and will certainly not be such jackasses as Lassalle and 'bequeath' anything to them, s'il y avait de quoi.†d If things go wrong in Berlin, Liebknecht would do best to come over, leaving his family behind, we will then see what can be done, he will be able to make acquaintances soon enough at the Schiller Institute†28 here, and whatever else can be done, will be; I think he might very well manage to settle down here like that, and if not, nothing is lost, and if it works out all right, he can bring his family over later. If he brings his family along straightaway, he will certainly go to the dogs here, because the cost will then be so much greater that the attempt cannot possibly last long. It will not be easy to obtain work teaching children, as Lupus did; but he can, of course, explore the possibilities.
Page me42.81

Bender has sent me a bill for 5s. per quarter for my subscription to the Social-Demokrätchen, which seems exorbitant to me.
Page me42.81

The devil knows how one's work here is subject to all kinds of interruptions. Another committee meeting of the Schiller Institute yesterday, so this evening is the first time since Friday that I have managed to get down to the military question.†e

Page Break me42.82
Page me42.82

The attempt by Hatzfeldt and Klings to throw out Bernhard Becker has been a complete fiasco, and Klings has been thrown out. Whatever happens we must avoid soiling our hands in that dirty business; it is just as the worker said in the Gürzenich†a in 1848: they may fall as they will, a rogue will always come out on top.

Page me42.82

What mad German Schweitzer writes 'as who'! This second LEADER on Bismarck's ministry is once again as pretentiously abstruse as it could possibly be, even though there is no longer any direct flirtation with Bismarck, and it is good that he openly calls Prussia's policy anti-German.†b But how naive of Liebknecht that he demands that we ought to make clear to them what their attitude to the government should be, whereas what he should do is to ask above all for a categorical statement from Mr Schweitzer as to what attitude he intends to adopt towards the government.

Page me42.82

It looks to me as if a compromise is at hand in Prussia now, with the Prussian Chamber rescuing its prerogative regarding the budget, but giving way on everything else. Bismarck will certainly not think of seriously disputing the budget-prerogative in the long run, since, if he did so, he would get neither money nor credit and he is badly in need of both. Meanwhile, the affair can still founder on any number of trivial details.†100

Page me42.82

In America, the start of the Richmond campaign in March or April will probably be decisive for the whole year.†30 If Grant succeeds in driving Lee out, the CONFEDERACY is PLAYED OUT, their armies will break up, and only bandit-warfare, like that already rife in West Tennessee now and in general nearly everywhere, will remain to be overcome. In reality, the only army the SOUTHERNERS now have is Lee's; everything depends on its destruction. Now we can already assume that the area from which Lee procures his supplies is confined to South Virginia, the Carolinas and at most part of Georgia.

Page me42.82

Salut.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.82

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.83

IN LONDON
Page me42.83
Manchester, 9 February 1865

Dear Moor,

Manuscript enclosed, now swollen to the dimensions of a full-sized pamphlet†a and no doubt now quite unsuitable for the little paper.†b So far, it has only been very cursorily revised and will have to be gone through again. Regarding the military question, some statistics about the population fit for military service have yet to be inserted, and some more about the petty bourgeoisie at the end, which I quite forgot in the 'heat of battle'. You will notice, by the way, that the piece has been thrown together straight out of my head, without any kind of literary sources, since it had to be finished quickly. I now await your comments on it.
Page me42.83

But where next with it? To Liebknecht or to Siebel, to find a publisher? What do you think? Best outside Prussia, probably, or do you think there is nothing in it that might lead to confiscation? I have lost all my instinct for the publishing situation in Prussia. Let me know your opinion on this point, too — the possibility of publication in Prussia.
Page me42.83

Another S.D. (Sow's Dirt)†c has just arrived. What a lot of feeble whining about the position of the party. No cut or thrust at all. For ever keeping the little back-door open for Bismarck. Peaceful collaboration! And then Moses,†d who has come round to the point of view that the bourgeoisie and the government in France are vying with each other to do the right thing by the workers. France these days is a real paradise for Moses. It is a bit too much even for Schweitzer to stomach, he has put a ? after it.
Page me42.83

Should I leave that section in III in, about the present workers' movement?
Page me42.83

It seems to me that Roon's speech really does imply compromise. The man is prepared to negotiate.†127 For that reason, the piece must come out fast. So, do let me know soon what you think with respect to publisher.

Page Break me42.84

Your
F.E.

Page me42.84
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

41
MARX TO ENGELS†29
IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.84
[London,] 10 February 1865

Dear FREDERICK,

The thing†a is good. Although the style is too slapdash in places, it would be NONSENSE to polish or elaborate it at all now, as the main thing is to get it out IN THE NICK OF TIME, as the conflict†100 is 'all ready' on the point of being resolved.
Page me42.84

My advice therefore is this:

Send the pamphlet straight to Meissner in Hamburg and tell him that speed of publication is paramount; and he should let you know immediately whether he will take it (leaving him to decide the fee), because then you would attract attention to the thing in advance in the Berlin and Rhineland papers.
Page me42.84

The thing is much too long and 'too cheeky' for the Social-Demokrat in present circumstances. But I would arrange for notices, short ones, in the Social-Demokrat (through Eccarius), in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung through Siebel, and maybe even send a notice to the Rheinische Zeitung, to the effect that a pamphlet by you is being published at such and such a place, in which you are simply setting out our position on this specific question, as opposed to that of the Reaction, men of Progress†99 and Lassalleans, along with treatment of the PURELY MILITARY QUESTION.
Page me42.84

Even if there are still things you have got to add to it, send the manuscript IMMEDIATELY ad Meissnerem (Hamburg) all the same and tell him that a few additions are to follow relating to such-and-such page (you can mark the places). There should have been rather more mention of the country people, which your German lout is far too inclined to ignore as non-existent. To judge by Strohn's last letter, he himself is probably away from Hamburg again, so that the piece cannot be sent to him but will have to go direct to Meissner.

Page Break me42.85
Page me42.85

An evil wind of reconciliation is blowing in Berlin, fanned from the direction of Russia this time and further strengthened by the turn for the worse in the business with Austria. The Petersburger Zeitung advises unconditionally making concessions to the chamber in the matter of budget-approval and two-year military service. It says, amongst other things:

'The present time appears to us, if not an alarming one, then, nevertheless, a grave one, and if circumstances do not become especially advantageous, it is still to be feared that the future will be dismal. In times of distress and danger, however, as history has proved only too often, the strict enforcement of discipline in the army and the civil service is rarely enough on its own. The real power of the state is then based, as it always is in general, far more on the unity of government and people. Although we do not underestimate the conciliatory manner, in which the government approached the people's representation in this year's session, nevertheless, in view of what we have just said, we cannot suppress the desire that this conciliatory spirit may also spread to action.'†a

Page me42.85

It appears that the Muscovites need their Prussians for the wheeling-movement they are about to execute against Austro-Galicia, as announced in the Moscow Newspaper.†b According to the same Moscow Newspaper, this final subjugation of Poland, which however necessarily means the ruthless continuation of Muraviov's policy, would 'open a hole into the heart of Germany'. Our good 'men of Progress' and equally good 'Lassalleans' are missing all that by sleeping.

Page me42.85

Letter from Schily enclosed.

Page me42.85

To Moses'†c great distress, the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION' is creating a great stir amongst the workers in Paris. As a result of Moses' gaffe, Tolain has stepped down. (We have not formally accepted his resignation.) H. Lefort (editor of the Avenir,†d etc.), who is also on the editorial committee of L'Association, has at his request been appointed LITERARY DEFENDER (ATTORNEY GENERAL) of our Association in Paris. The latter is already under attack from Horn (a paragraph in the Rules†128). This Jew Horn will soon notice that Moses Hess is not the only German around. Fribourg has opened a bureau de renseignement†a for us; CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP were sent to him the day before yesterday.

Page Break me42.86

Page me42.86

At the preparatory session for the Polish meeting,†97 I also saw OLD Oborski again, who does not send his regards.

Page me42.86

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.86

Apropos. The fact that Lincoln answered us†112 so courteously and the 'BOURGEOIS EMANCIPATION SOCIETY'†113 so brusquely and purely formally†b made the The Daily News so indignant that they did not print the answer to us. However, since they saw, to their dismay, that The Times was doing so, they had to publish it later in The Express.†c Levy also had to eat humble pie. The difference between Lincoln's answer to us and to the bourgeoisie has created such a sensation here that the West End 'clubs' are shaking their heads at it. You can understand how gratifying that has been for our people.

Page me42.86
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

42
MARX TO ENGELS†118
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.86
[London,] 11 February [1865]

DEAR FRED,

It being Saturday today, I am assuming you won't be sending off your thing†d this very day, so there will still be time for these 'supplementary' suggestions for changes:
Page me42.86

1. In the passage where you ask what the workers want? I would not answer as you do that the workers in Germany, France and

Page Break me42.87
England are demanding this and that. The answer sounds as though (at least, that's what it will be taken to mean) we have accepted Izzy's†a slogans. I would be inclined to say rather†b:
Page me42.87

It would seem that the demands put forward at the present moment by the most advanced workers in Germany amount to the following, etc. This doesn't commit you at all, which is all to the good, as later on you yourself criticise universal suffrage if not accompanied by the requisite conditions. (Morever, in England e.g., etc., the word 'direct' would indeed be meaningless, it is after all only the opposite of the 'indirect' suffrage invented by the Prussians.) The form in which the louts in Germany conceive of state intervention á la Lassalle is such that one must ANYHOW take care not to identify oneself with 'same'. It would be a lot more dignified (and safer), if you took the louts at their word and let them say for themselves what they want. (I say the louts because they are the really argumentative section who have been infected by Lassalle.)†129
Page me42.87

2. I would not say that the 1848-49 movement failed because the bourgeois opposed direct universal suffrage. What happened was rather that this was proclaimed by the people of Frankfurt to be an ancient German right and proclaimed by the Imperial Regent†c with all due formality.†130 (In my opinion, too, as soon as the matter comes up for serious discussion in dear old Germany, this franchise must be treated as a rightfully existing law.) As that is no place for a lengthy exposition, I would make do with the following phrase: that the bourgeois at that time preferred peace and servitude to the mere prospect of struggle and freedom, or something of that sort.

Page me42.87
Taken as a whole, it's a very good piece, and 'Oi' am particularly tickled by the passage which shows that the present louts' movement IN FACT only exists par la grâce de la police.†d
Page me42.87
In great haste.
Page me42.87
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.87
I have crossed out the bit where you console the reactionaries, I DON'T KNOW WHY, by saying that a soldier does not turn reactionary in the 3rd year — or not for long — although you later say the opposite.

Page Break me42.88

Page me42.88
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

43
ENGELS TO MARX†118
IN LONDON
Page me42.88
[Manchester,] 13 February 1865

Dear Moor,
Your SUGGESTIONS came just in time yesterday and have both been used. How necessary the one about the demands of the louts in particular was,†a was further brought home to me by Nos. 20 and 21 of the Sow's-Dirt†b which arrived today.
Page me42.88
By the by, our attitude seems to be bearing fruit in spite of everything. There is a certain revolutionary note in No. 21 which was entirely absent before. By the by, I've written to Liebknecht that there's no point in raising a storm, they must just drop their flirting with reaction and make sure the aristocracy and reaction get their SHARE, too, but for the rest abuse neither them nor the bourgeoisie, which is superfluous in quiet times.†131
Page me42.88

But one can see that Izzy†c has given the movement a Tory-Chartist character,†132 which it will be difficult to get rid of and which has given rise to a tendency in Germany which was previously unheard of among the workers. This nauseating toadying to the reaction comes through everywhere. WE SHALL HAVE SOME TROUBLE WITH THAT. You wait and see, the louts will be saying, what's that Engels after, what has he been doing all the time, how can he speak in our name and tell us what to do, the fellow's up there in Manchester exploiting the workers, etc. To be sure, I don't give a damn about it now, but it's bound to come, and we shall have Baron Izzy to thank for it.

Page Break me42.89

Your
F.E.

Page me42.89
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

44
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.89
London, 13 February 1865
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Engels,

You'll see from the enclosed how things stand with regard to our statement†a about Moses.†133 At the same time, you will have read Moses' scrawl in the last Social-Demokrat.†b
Page me42.89

This time I believe Liebknecht is right: Mr von Schweitzer is pretending to see in our statement only a personal attack on Moses; he 'overlooks' the stand against Bonapartism, etc., probably knowing full well WHAT HE IS ABOUT. It might perhaps not come amiss to Schweitzer if a public break (who knows whether he has committed himself to something which will soon force one or not?) were occasioned by this Moses business, instead of ad vocem†c Bismarck? I have therefore written him letter (copy retained†134) in which I d'abord†d give him a summary of our relations to date and ask him where in all this we for our part have gone 'beyond the bounds'? And I analyse the Moses CASE once more. I then say that because of Moses' latest silly outburst, our statement is TO A CERTAIN DEGREE out-of-date, and the matter can therefore be allowed to rest.

Page Break me42.90
As far as the other point in the statement is concerned, the hint to the workers, we would be setting out our position at length elsewhere on the attitude of the workers towards the Prussian government. At the same time, I took the opportunity — apropos of the telegram in today's Times about the Prussian ministerial statement — to make our opinion quoad†a Bismarck and Lassalle†135 clear to Mr von Schweitzer once again.
Page me42.90

(I would in fact not be at all surprised if Bismarck were to reject outright the repeal of the Combination Laws to the extent that some of the men of Progress†99 have now been obliged to demand. The right of combination, and all that it entails, interferes too much with police domination, the Rules Governing Servants,†136 the flog-'em and birch-'em rural aristocracy and bureaucratic tutelage in general. As soon as the bourgeoisie (or some of them) appear to turn serious, the government will certainly make a joke and do a volte-face.†b The Prussian state can not tolerate COALITIONS and TRADES UNIONS. That much is certain. On the contrary, government support for a few lousy co-operative societies suited their dirty game to a tee. Officials becoming even more nosey, control of 'new' money, bribery of the most active of the workers, emasculation of the whole movement! However, since the Prussian government is so short of money just now, this plan is scarcely more to be feared than the Order of the Swan of old!†137
Page me42.90

Nota bene, Lassalle was opposed to the campaign for the right of combination. Liebknecht improvised it among the Berlin printers against Lassalle's wishes. That was the starting-point of the whole affair that beau Becker†c has now taken over.†138)
Page me42.90

For the present we should — in my opinion — exercise 'restraint' quant au†d the Social-Demokrat. I.e. write nothing (Eccarius excepted). Things will soon reach such a pass that we shall either have to break openly with it, or we shall be able to collaborate with it in a proper manner. Moses will have to receive his chastisement on some later occasion.
Page me42.90

MEANWHILE, I am delighted that you have got into the swing again. You are by nature always able to get back to working at speed. I take it my letter came in time?†e
Page me42.90

As long as these abominable Lassalleans rule the roost in Germany, that country will be infertile ground for the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION'. For the present, we must be patient. The

Page Break me42.91
Prussian government will put an end to this foul morass of Izzyness†a soon enough.
Page me42.91

Apropos. Cutting from the latest Hermann enclosed. You must make a few bad jokes about this notice from Messrs Blind-Wolffsohn, for me to pass on to Eccarius for insertion in his London correspondence.†139 I have been so put out by this lousy correspondence with Berlin (apart from the amount of time the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION inevitably takes up) that I absolutely must make up the lost ground.

Page me42.91

Tyndall has succeeded in using a simple mechanical technique to break down sunlight into heat-rays and pure light-rays. The latter are cold. You can light your cigar straight from the former, and through a burning-glass they can melt platinum, etc.
Page me42.91

My best compliments to Mrs Burns. I am indeed very glad to hear that the o was an inorganic intrusion upon her name, and that she is a namesake of the great poet.†b If Mrs Gumpert declines becoming a member of a Workingmen's Association, I hope Mrs Burns will not follow that example, but will believe with her namesake that 'a man is a man for all that'.†c
Page me42.91

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.91

HAVE AN EYE UPON JONES! HE IS A FELLOW 'TOO CLEVER BY HALF'!
Page me42.91

Apropos. I think I should be in a position to send you the cards by Tuesday. I SEND ABOUT 2 DOZEN, which you don't need to dispose of all at once. But give some of them to E. Jones.
Page me42.91

The latter has written to me about the electoral agitation (whereupon I wrote him that he should write me a 2nd letter†117 which I could read out at the Comité. Which he duly did).†140 But he didn't say anything in his letter about the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION. As he is a fox and I want to pin him down, you should insist that he forms A BRANCH COMMITTEE immediately (the number of MEMBERS doesn't matter for the present) and that he and his friends take out CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP. They must realise that the 'INTERNATIONAL' is the only means and method of establishing co-operation (political) between London and the provinces!
Page me42.91

Concerning the cards, our RULES are as follows: existing societies (UNIONS, etc.) who wish to affiliate in that capacity need only take out corporate membership. That doesn't cost them anything, or they can make a voluntary donation. On the other hand, every member of such a society who wishes to become an INDIVIDUAL MEMBER of the Association, must take out his annual membership card at 1s. 1d. In France and Belgium, because of the laws there, it has 'turned out' that they will all have to become 'INDIVIDUAL' MEMBERS of the English society, since they are not able to join as societies. Every branch society or affiliated society outside London and ENVIRONS elects a secretary to correspond with us. We can 'reject' people we disapprove of.

Page Break me42.92

Page me42.92
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

45
MARX TO VICTOR LE LUBEZ†1
IN LONDON
Page me42.92
London, 15 February 1865

My dear Lubez,

The very success of our association warns us to be cautious. In my opinion, M. Beales joining our council would spoil the whole affair.†a I believe him an honest and sincere man; at the same time, he is nothing and can be nothing save a Bourgeois politician. He is weak, mediocre and ambitious. He wants to stand for Marylebone at the next Parliamentary election. By that single fact he ought to be excluded from entering our committee. We cannot become le piedestal for small parliamentary ambitions.
Page me42.92

You may be sure that if Beales is admitted le ton cordial, sincére et franc†b that distinguishes now our Debates, will be gone, and make place to word-mongering. In the wake of Beales will follow Taylor, this unbearable nuisance and tufthunter.
Page me42.92

In the eyes of the world, Beales' admission will change the whole character of our society, we will diminish into one of the numerous societies which he favours with patronage. Where he has driven in the wedge, others of his class will follow, and our efforts, till now successful at freeing the English working class movement from all middle class or aristocratic patronage, will have been in vain.

Page Break me42.93
Page me42.93

I know beforehand that if Beales be admitted, there will arise questions mainly of a social sort, which will force him to tender his demission. We will have to issue manifestos on the land question, etc., which he cannot sign. Is it not better not to let him instead of giving him afterwards an opportunity of denying us.†a
Page me42.93

I know that after the foolish step taken by Mr Dell,†b there will be certain difficulties in ensuring this candidature.
Page me42.93

I would think that by means of quiet talks with the chief English members, the whole question could be [settled]†c before it is put before the committee again.

Yours fraternally
K. Marx

Page me42.93
Apropos. For all his enthusiasm for Poland, Mr Beales has as yet done nothing other than follow the Duke ...†d in throwing all the demonstrations for Poland into confusion. Yesterday, he attempted the same trick again, under similar instigation.

Page me42.93
First published abridged in the language of the original (English) in: I. Tchernoff, Le Parti républicain au coup d'état et sous le Second Empire, Paris, 1908 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Reproduced from the text of Tchernoff's book, verified with the manuscript copy in French written in an unknown hand

46
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.93
[London, 16 February 1865]

DEAR FREDERICK,
Jones has written, asking me to send him ABOUT 1 DOZEN CARDS; I am sending you 1 DOZEN for him and 1 for yourself. What you can't dispose of WITHIN A REASONABLE period of time you can send back. Price 1s. 1d. PER CARD.

Page Break me42.94
Page me42.94
I remind you AGAIN that Petzler may, in my opinion, be very useful in this matter. For years now he has had many PERSONAL RELATIONS (as SINGMASTER and socialist) with the Manchester workers.
Page me42.94
You must return enclosed letter (to Lessner) when you have read it. How do you think we should MANAGE this business? I shall keep my mouth shut, of course, but Lessner won't be able to do that.†141
Page me42.94
I am pleased to see in today's Times that the Prussian Chamber has accepted the motion against the Combination Laws. The government will now arrange for it to be rejected in the LORDS HOUSE. Red Becker†a — no doubt spurred on by your literary contribution†b — has brought in the amendment about the rural population.†142
Page me42.94
Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.94
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

47
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.94
[London,] 18 February 1865

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed 2 letters from Liebknecht, 1 to you and 1 to me. Ditto an earlier one from Schweitzer.
Page me42.94

My view is this:

Once Liebknecht has given in his notice,†143 il faut en finir.†c If he had put the matter off, we could have done so, too, since your pamphlet†d is on the stocks.

Page Break me42.95
Page me42.95

I consider Schweitzer to be incorrigible (probably has a secret arrangement with Bismarck).
Page me42.95

What confirms me in that view is

1. the passage I have underlined in his letter of 15th enclosed†144;
2. the timing of the publication of his 'Bismarck III'.†145

Page me42.95

To do justice to both points, I shall now copy out for you word for word a passage from my letter to him†134 of 13 February:
Page me42.95

'... since our statement†a has become partially out-of-date, following the correspondence from M. Hess in No. 21 received today, we will allow the matter rest there.†125 Our statement did, of course, contain another point as well: praise of the anti-Bonapartist stance of the Parisian proletariat and hint to the German workers that they should follow this example. We regarded this as more important than our sally against Hess. Meanwhile, we shall set out our views in detail elsewhere on the relation of the workers towards the Prussian government.†b
Page me42.95

'In your letter of 4 February you say that I warned Liebknecht myself not to overstep the mark, so that he would not be sent to the devil. Quite right. But I wrote to him at the same time that one could say anything if one put it in the right way.†c A form of polemic against the government which is “possible” even for the Berlin meridian is certainly very different from flirting with the government or even pretending to compromise with it! I wrote to you myself that the Social-Demokrat must eschew even the appearance of doing so.†121

Page me42.95

'I see from your paper that the ministry is making ambiguous and procrastinatory statements with regard to the repeal of the Combination Laws. On the other hand, a Times telegram reports that it was in favour of the proposed state aid for the co-operative societies.†d It would not surprise me at all if The Times had for once telegraphed a correct report!

Page me42.95

'Combinations and the TRADES UNIONS they would give rise to are of the utmost importance not merely as a means of organising the working class for the struggle against the bourgeoisie — just how important is shown among other things by the fact that even the workers of the United States cannot do without them, in spite of franchise and republic — but in Prussia and indeed in Germany as a whole the right of combination also means a breach in the domination of the police and the bureaucracy, it tears to shreds the Rules Governing Servants†136 and the power of the aristocracy in rural areas, in short, it is a step towards the granting of full civil rights to the “subject population” which the Party of Progress,†99 i.e. any bourgeois opposition party in Prussia, would be crazy not to be a hundred times more willing to permit than the Prussian government, to say nothing of the government of a Bismarck! As oppossed to that, however, the aid of the Royal Prussian government for co-operative societies — and anyone who is familiar with conditions in Prussia also knows in advance its necessarily minute dimensions — is worthless as an economic measure, whilst, at the same time, it serves to extend the system of tutelage, corrupt part of the working class and emasculate the movement. Just as the bourgeois party in Prussia discredited itself and brought about its present wretched situation by seriously believing that with the “New Era” the government†146 had fallen into its lap by the grace of the Prince Regent,†a so the workers' party will discredit itself even more if it imagines that the Bismarck era or any other Prussian era will make the golden apples just drop into its mouth, by grace of the king. It is beyond all question that Lassalle's ill-starred illusion that a Prussian government might intervene with socialist measures will be crowned with disappointment. The logic of circumstances will tell. But the honour of the workers' party requires that it reject such illusions, even before their hollowness is punctured by experience. The working class is revolutionary or it is nothing.'

Page Break me42.96

Page me42.96

WELL! He replied to this letter of mine of 13th with his letter of 15th, in which he demands that in all 'practical' questions I should subordinate myself to his tactics; he replies with 'Bismarck III' as a fresh specimen of these tactics!! And really it now seems to me that the impudent manner in which he raised the question of confidence apropos of the statement against Hess was not due to any tenderness for Moses but to the firm resolution not to give space in the Social-Demokrat under any circumstances to our hint to the German workers.

Page me42.96
So, as a break must be made with the fellow after all, it had best be done at once. As far as the louts in Germany are concerned, they can scream as much as they like. Those of them who are any good will after all have to rally round us sooner or later. If the statement given below seems all right to you, make a copy of it, sign it and send it to me. As it was scrawled in great haste, alter anything that seems unsuitable to you, or re-write the whole thing, just as you wish.

Page Break me42.97

Your
K.M.

Page me42.97
To the Editor of the 'Social-Demokrat'

The undersigned promised to contribute to the Social-Demokrat and permitted their being named as contributors on the express condition that the paper would be edited in the spirit of the brief programme submitted to them. They did not for a moment fail to appreciate the difficult position of the Social-Demokrat and therefore made no demands that were inappropriate to the meridian of Berlin. But they repeatedly demanded that the language directed at the ministry and the feudal-absolutist party should be at least as bold as that aimed at the men of Progress.†99 The tactics pursued by the Social-Demokrat preclude their further participation in it. The opinion of the undersigned as to the royal Prussian governmental socialism and the correct attitude of the workers' party to such deception has already been set out in detail in No. 73 of the Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung of 12 September 1847, in reply to No. 206 of the Rheinischer Beobachter†a (then appearing in Cologne), in which the alliance of the 'proletariat' with the 'government' against the 'liberal bourgeoisie' was proposed. We still subscribe today to every word of the statement we made then.

Page me42.97
I'll send the Weydemeyer back to you tomorrow. What do you say to the 'Freiligrath-Blind' Eidgenossenschaft.†b†147
Page me42.97
For a couple of days now, I have had a carbuncle on my posterior and a furuncle on my left loin. All very nice.

Page me42.97
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.98

48
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.98
[Manchester,] 20[-21] February 1865

Dear Moor,
The letter from Matzeratt enclosed.†a
Page me42.98
Quant á†b Petzler, so the photographer is an altogether different Petzler from the other one. I saw the photographer, you know, the day before yesterday, at a scientific soirée at the Schiller Institute,†28 and the fellow is at least 20 years younger and looks quite different. Heaven knows what has become of the musician.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.98
[Pencilled note on the reverse of the letter]

Quite forgot to post the letter yesterday. No ANSWER YET FROM HAMBURG.†c

Page me42.98
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

49
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.98
Manchester, 22 February 1865

Dear Moor,
In great haste, herewith the statement.†d Schweitzer's letter is 'rotten to the core'.†e The fellow has the job of compromising us, and the longer we have our dealings with him, the deeper we'll sink into the mire. So, the sooner the better! Liebknecht's and Schweitzer's letters likewise returned. You must have given Liebknecht a terrible dressing down if my letter appeared 'kind' to him!†131

Page Break me42.99
Page me42.99
Enclosure from Meissner. This time it really is full steam ahead with the publication,†a and that's what really matters. I replied to his proposal to fix the number of copies himself as follows: suits me, but he must then tell me how many there are to be, he only gets the first impression for 2 louis-d'or. (N.B. In the meantime, he will have had to make up his mind and get things ready for printing.)
Page me42.99
In haste.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.99
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

50
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.99
[London, before 22 February 1865]

Dear FREDERICK,
Enclosed some secret contributions to the créme bonapartiste as a Sunday treat and pour la bonne bouche.†b148
Page me42.99
You must keep these scraps of paper. MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZIE.†c

Your
K.M.

Page me42.99
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.100

51
ENGELS TO OTTO MEISSNER IN HAMBURG
Page me42.100
Manchester, 22 February 1865

Dear Sir,

Your kind letter of 17th inst. has only just been delivered to me, since postal communication via Ostende has been interrupted for three full days, and I am greatly obliged to you for your prompt agreement to publish, and more especially for your rapid prosecution of the printing.†a

Page me42.100

I accept your fee of 2 louis-d'or per sheet of print and likewise leave it to you to decide the number of copies to be printed, under the condition, however, that you inform me of it in your next letter; it goes without saying [that I] am only making [over the first impression]†b for this fee.

Page me42.100

Announcements in the n[ewspapers shall be] attended to forthwith.

Page me42.100

The apparent delay in [despatch] here, to which you justifiably allude, arose from the following: I finished on Saturday evening, 11 February, and wrote the accompanying letter late that night; the letter was taken to the post on Monday 13th at 10.00 a.m. and went by the mail-boat from Dover that Monday evening — no later than it would have done if I had posted it on Saturday evening. The pious English do not allow mail-steamers to leave on Sunday evening, at least not to Ostende.

Yours respectfully
Fr. Engels

Page me42.100

I hope to receive 12 copies by post here on 27th or 28th inst.

Page me42.100
First published in: Marx and Engels. Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.101

52
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†149
IN HANOVER
Page me42.101
[London, 23 February 1865]

In the few brief excerpts, which Eccarius gives from my speech at the workers' society, there are certain things that convey precisely the opposite of what I said.†150 I have written to him about it, leaving it to him whether to correct it or not in the next piece he contributes, as it is not very important in the present circumstances.†111

Page me42.101
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

53
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.101
London, 23 February 1865
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Friend,
Yesterday I received your letter, which I found most interesting, and will now reply to the various points.
Page me42.101
First of all, I shall briefly describe my attitude towards Lassalle. Whilst he was pursuing his agitation, our relations were suspended, 1. on account of his bombastic self-adulation, which he managed to combine with the most shameless plagiarism of writings by myself and others; 2. because I condemned his political tactics; 3. because, even before he began his agitation,†50 I had fully explained and 'proved' to him here in London that direct socialist intervention by a 'Prussian state' was an absurdity. In his letters to me (from 1848 to 1863), as well as when we met personally, he had always declared himself a supporter of the party I represent.

Page Break me42.102
As soon as he had become convinced in London (at the end of 1862) that he could not play his game with me, he resolved to set himself up as 'workers' dictator' against me and the old party. In spite of all that, I acknowledged his merits as an agitator, although towards the end of his brief career even that agitation appeared to me in an increasingly dubious light. His sudden death, our friendship of old, the grief-stricken letters from Countess Hatzfeldt, my indignation at the cowardly impudence of the bourgeois papers towards the man they had feared so much while he was alive, all these things induced me to publish a short statement attacking that wretch Blind†a but not dealing with the substance of Lassalle's doings (Hatzfeldt sent the statement to the Nordstern†b). For the same reasons, and in the hope of being able to drive out those elements whom I thought dangerous, Engels and I promised to contribute to the Social-Demokrat (it has published a translation of the 'Address',†c and, at its request, I wrote an article about Proudhon†d when the latter died) and allowed our names to be put out as contributors, after Schweitzer had sent us a satisfactory programme of its editorial board.†34 We had a further guarantee in W. Liebknecht being an unofficial member of the editorial board. In the meantime, it soon became clear — the proof of this came into our possession — that Lassalle had in fact betrayed the party. He had entered into a formal contract with Bismarck (with no guarantees of any kind in his hands, of course). At the end of September 1864, he was to go to Hamburg and there (together with the crazy Schramm and the Prussian police spy Marr) 'force' Bismarck to incorporate Schleswig-Holstein, i.e. to proclaim such in the name of the 'workers', etc., in return for which Bismarck promised universal suffrage and a few spurious socialist measures.†98 It is a pity that Lassalle was unable to play this farce through to its conclusion! It would have made him appear deuced foolish and an utter gull! And it would have put paid to all such attempts for ever!

Page me42.102

Lassalle got on the wrong path because he was, like Mr Miquel,†151 a 'realistic politician', only on a larger scale and with grander aims! (BY THE BYE, I had long ago seen through Miquel sufficiently to explain his conduct to myself†e by the fact that the National Association†152 offered a splendid excuse for a petty Hanoverian lawyer to make himself heard beyond his own four walls, in Germany at large, and then to exploit the enhanced 'reality' of his own self retrospectively in his native Hanover, playing the 'Hanoverian' Mirabeau under 'Prussian' protection, furthermore.) Just as Miquel and his present friends eagerly seized hold of the 'New Era'†146 inaugurated by the Prussian Prince Regent in order to national-associate and to fasten on to the 'Prussian leadership',†153 just as in general they cultivated their 'pride of citizenship' under Prussian protection, so Lassalle wanted to play the Marquis Posa of the proletariat to the Philipp II of the Uckermark,†a with Bismarck as intermediary between himself and the Prussian monarchy. He was merely imitating the gentlemen of the National Association. But, if the latter were invoking Prussian 'reaction' in the interests of the middle class, he was shaking hands with Bismarck in the interests of the proletariat. Those gentlemen had more justification than Lassalle, inasmuch as the bourgeois is accustomed to regard the interest he perceives immediately in front of his nose as 'reality', and as this class has, in fact, compromised everywhere, even with feudalism, whereas the working class must in the nature of things be genuinely 'revolutionary'.

Page Break me42.103
Page me42.103

For a histrionically vain character like Lassalle (who was not, however, to be bribed with such paltry things as office, mayoralties, etc.), it was a most seductive thought that he, Ferdinand Lassalle, might perform a deed for the direct benefit of the proletariat! He was, in fact, too ignorant of the real economic conditions required for such a deed to be critically self-consistent! The German workers, on the other hand, had 'demoralised' too far in consequence of the despicable 'realistic politics' with which the German bourgeoisie had tolerated the reaction of 1849-1859 and watched the people's minds being stultified, for them not to hail such a mountebank of a saviour who was promising to help them reach the promised land with one bound!

Page me42.103

So, to take up the thread where I left off above! Hardly had the Social-Demokrat been established when it became clear that the old Hatzfeldt woman was planning to execute Lassalle's 'testament' posthumously. She had contact with Bismarck through Wagener (of the Kreuz-Zeitung†b). She placed the 'Workers' Association' (Gen. German),†2 the Social-Demokrat, etc., at Bismarck's disposal. The annexation of Schleswig-Holstein was to be proclaimed in the Social-Demokrat, Bismarck to be generally acknowledged as patron, etc. The whole of this fine plan was frustrated because we had Liebknecht in Berlin and on the editorial board of the Social-Demokrat. Although Engels and I disliked the editorial board of the paper, its lickspittling cult of Lassalle, its occasional flirting with Bismarck, etc., it was, of course, more important publicly to stay with the paper for the time being in order to thwart the intrigues of the old Hatzfeldt woman and prevent the workers' party from being totally compromised. We therefore put on bonne mine á mauvais jeu,†a although privatim we were constantly writing to the Social-Demokrat telling them that they should stand up to Bismarck just as much as to the men of Progress.†99 We even tolerated that affected fop, Bernhard Becker, who is taking the importance bequeathed to him in Lassalle's testament quite seriously, intriguing against the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION.†b

Page Break me42.104
Page me42.104

In the meantime, Mr Schweitzer's articles in the Social-Demokrat were becoming more and more Bismarckian. I had earlier written to him to say that, although the men of Progress can be intimidated over the 'Combination question', the Prussian government would never under any circumstances concede the complete abolition of the Combination Laws because that would entail breaching the bureaucratic system, giving freedom of thought and expression to the workers, tearing up the Rules Governing Servants,†136 abolishing flogging and birching by the aristocracy in rural areas, etc., etc., which Bismarck could never allow, it being altogether incompatible with the Prussian bureaucratic state.†c I added that, if the Chamber were to repudiate the Combination Laws, the government would resort to empty phrases (such as e.g. that the social question requires 'profounder' steps to be taken, etc.) in order to preserve them. All this has come to pass. And what did Mr von Schweitzer do? He wrote an article in support of Bismarck†145 and is reserving all his heroism for such infiniment petits†d as Schulze, Faucher, etc.
Page me42.104

I believe that Schweitzer, etc., mean it sincerely, but they are 'realistic politicians'. They wish to take due account of the existing state of affairs and not leave this privilege of 'realistic politics' to Messrs Miquel et Comp. alone. (The latter seem to wish to reserve the right of INTERMIXTURE with the Prussian government.) They know that the workers' papers and the workers' movement in

Page Break me42.105
Prussia (and hence in the rest of Germany) only exist par la grâce de la police.†a They thus want to take the circumstances as they are, not to irritate the government, etc., quite as our 'republican' realistic politicians want to 'put up with' a Hohenzollern emperor. As I am not a 'realistic politician', however, I found it necessary together with Engels to serve notice on the Social-Demokrat in a public statement†b (which you will probably soon see in one paper or other).
Page me42.105
You will see at the same time why there is nothing I can do in Prussia at the moment. The government there has flatly refused to restore my Prussian citizenship.†154 I should only be permitted to agitate there in a manner agreeable to Mr von Bismarck.
Page me42.105
I prefer my agitation here through the 'International Association' a 100 times. The effect on the English proletariat is direct and of the greatest importance. We are now STIRRING the GENERAL SUFFRAGE QUESTION here, which is, naturally, of quite different significance here than in Prussia.†155
Page me42.105
As a whole, the progress made by this 'Association' has exceeded all expectations here, in Paris, in Belgium, Switzerland, and Italy. Only in Germany, of course, I am opposed by Lassalle's successors who 1. are stupidly afraid of forfeiting their own importance; 2. are aware of my avowed opposition to what the Germans call 'realistic politics'. (It is this sort of 'reality' that puts Germany so far behind all civilised countries.)
Page me42.105
Since any person who takes out a card at 1 SHILLING can become a MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATION; since the French have chosen this form of INDIVIDUAL MEMBERSHIP (ditto the Belgians) because the law prohibits them from joining us as an 'association'; and since the situation is similar in Germany, I have now resolved to ask my friends here and in Germany to form small SOCIETIES, regardless of how many MEMBERS there may be in each locality, each member of which will acquire AN ENGLISH CARD OF MEMBERSHIP.†156 Since the English society is public, there is no obstacle to this procedure even in France. I should appreciate it if you, too, would get in touch with London in this way in your neighbourhood.
Page me42.105
My thanks to you for your prescription. Oddly enough this vile disease had broken out once more 3 days before it arrived. So, the prescription was most timely.
Page me42.105
In a few days I shall send you another 24 ADDRESSES.†c I have just been interrupted in my writing by a friend, and, as I very much want to send off this letter, I shall take up the other points in your letter next time.

Page Break me42.106

Yours

K.M.

Page me42.106
First published in Sozialistische Auslandspolitik, No. 18, 1918

Printed according to the original

54
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.106
Manchester, 24 February 1865

Dear Moor,

I'm a bit concerned at not having heard from you today, in view of the furuncles and carbuncles you mentioned, in the most interesting places (or rather most interested). I hope you are not LAID UP.

Page me42.106

I was particularly disappointed as I hoped to get the explanation — as well as the Weydemeyer — about the unspeakable mess the Social-Demokrat fellows made of your speech at the London Workers' Society festivity. They make you speak pure S.-D. Eccarius never reported that to them.†150 This piece of infamy and the reprint of the article from the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung in the following number, ostensibly about universal suffrage, about which it says not a word,†157 is proof enough for me that the fellow†a has simply been bought and has the job of compromising us. I hope the statement†b is on its way. We must not delay a moment longer.

Page me42.106

But quelle bête notre ami†c Liebknecht, who is supposed to keep an eye on the newspaper and never reads it on principle!

Your
F.E.

Page me42.106
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.107

55
MARX TO ENGELS†33

IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.107
[London,] 25 February 1865

Dear FRED,

I quite forgot — you must excuse me — to send back Weydemeyer's letter. I enclose it. Ditto a letter of Dr Kugelmann with enclosure of wiseacre Miquel's letter.†151 Ditto a prescription from Kugelmann. Oddly enough the prescription arrived just after the disease had broken out afresh. (Nota bene, the passage in Kugelmann's LETTER, saying I wrote that I wanted to defend Lassalle, referred to Blind's attack.†62 I have now told him (Kugelmann) the plain truth.†a Return the letters from Kugelmann and Miquel.) I have had the prescription made up and have already taken the POWDER, but I would still like Gumpert's opinion of it. It's a most troublesome business. Unlike last year, however, my faculties are not affected and (to the extent that sitting down for a long time is not physically troublesome) I am perfectly able to work. Incidentally, I have the feeling in every part of my CADAVER that the stuff is about to burst out all over.
Page me42.107

Strohn passed by here. He was still in Hamburg when your manuscript†b came in, in the nick of time to recommend to Meissner that he should accept it. Strohn was informed that a manuscript from Rüstow on the same topic was rejected. Apropos. Have you taken any steps yourself regarding your pamphlet in the newspapers, or AM I TO DO IT? On this occasion, Eccarius himself was responsible for the incomprehensible BLUNDER.†150 When his article arrived, I wrote to him at once (22 February) enquiring whether the thing had been falsified by Schweitzer?†111 Quod non.†c
Page me42.107

When I sent our statement†d to that jackass Wilhelm†e (23 February), I wrote this to him:
Page me42.107

'In the few brief excerpts, which Eccarius gives from my speech at the workers' society,†f there are certain things that convey precisely the opposite of what I said. I have written to him about it, leaving it to him whether to correct it or not in the next piece he contributes, as it is not very important in the present circumstances.'†a

Page Break me42.108
Page me42.108

My letters to Eccarius and Liebknecht have been written so that, if Schweitzer (who from the private letter he had just previously received from me†b VERY WELL KNEW WHAT HE WAS ABOUT, of course) should try to use Eccarius' BLUNDER to defend himself, we could if necessary cut off this retraite.†c MEANWHILE, I HAVE TOLD ECCARIUS PRIVATELY not to make any BOTHER about the whole filthy business until such time as Schweitzer's own behaviour requires it. Eccarius was very unwell, and that is probably to blame for the NONSENSE. On the other hand, I imagine that Schweitzer, who already had Wilhelm's resignation†143 in his possession and was therefore prepared for a statement from us, was delighted to accept the report, 1. so as to show by means of the passage about Prussia what extravagant demands we were making of him, and 2. by means of the conclusion to the report that we did IN FACT share his views. The galantuomo†d is forgetting, by the way, that I have kept copies of my private letter to him.†134

Page me42.108

I have informed Liebknecht that, if Schweitzer should turn it down, he should put the thing in the Berliner Reform and tell Schweitzer about this at the same time, and also that I have simultaneously sent the statement to two Rhineland papers, so that Schweitzer cannot procrastinate this time. I have in fact sent 2 COPIES to Siebel, instructing him to insert the thing in the Rheinische Zeitung and the Düsseldorfer Zeitung (the latter being the workers' paper) two days after receipt of my letter, and to send us a report on any comments in the local press.†158 So, this time there is nothing Schweitzer can do about it any more. I would not be surprised if the Lassalleans, especially in the Hamburg Nordstern, declared we had sold ourselves to the bourgeoisie. BUT NEVER MIND!
Page me42.108

The 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION' has managed so to constitute the majority on the committee to set up the new REFORM LEAGUE that the whole leadership is in our hands.†155 I have put the full details in a letter to E. Jones.†111
Page me42.108

Such a conflict has broken out in Paris between our own representatives that we have sent Lubez to Paris to clarify matters and effect conciliation.†95 His CREDENTIALS state that Schily has been attached to him as an adjunct, and I have given Schily private instructions.†159 We could have sold 20,000 cards in Paris, but since one group was accusing the other of having Plon-Plon behind them, etc., the distribution of cards has had to be suspended for the time being. Under this military despotism, people are naturally highly suspicious of each other (my impression is that this time both sides are doing each other an injustice), and they are not capable of sorting out their differences and reaching an understanding by MEETING or through the press. A further factor is this: the workers seem to want to take things to the point of excluding any LITERARY MAN, etc., which is absurd, as they need them in the press, but it is pardonable in view of the repeated treachery of the LITERARY MEN. Conversely, the latter are suspicious of any workers' movement, which displays hostility towards them.†160

Page Break me42.109
Page me42.109

(Apropos these 'LITERARY MEN', I am reminded that the workers here (English) want to make me editor when The Bee-Hive†a is transformed, which is to happen in 3 months time, and have already informed me of this. However, I shall mull over the matter in all its multifarious aspects, before making a move in one direction or another.)
Page me42.109

So, what we have in Paris is, on the one hand, Lefort (a LITERARY MAN, well-to-do into the bargain, in other words 'bourgeois' but with an unsullied reputation, and, as far as La belle France†b is concerned, the real founder of our Association), and, on the other, Tolain, Fribourg, Limousin, etc., who are workers. WELL, I shall let you know the outcome. At all events, Wolff, an acquaintance, who has just returned from Paris, tells me that there is growing interest in the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION'. The Débats†c has also intervened in the matter.

Page me42.109

As far as the London UNIONS, etc., are concerned, every day brings about new ADHESION, so that BY AND BY we are becoming a force to be reckoned with.
Page me42.109

But that is where the difficulty begins as well. Already MR BEALES (THE REGISTERING BARRISTER of Middlesex, one of the most popular people in London at present, President of the POLISH LEAGUE,†97 co-founder of the NEW REFORM LEAGUE, IN FACT THE GO-BETWEEN between WORKINGMAN and MIDDLE CLASS, honest and well-meaning to boot) has got himself proposed as MEMBER for our COUNCIL. The opportunity arose because as a SUB-COMMITTEE together with him we were to prepare the Polish MEETING (Marquis Townshend in the chair) for next Wednesday.†161 This was most unfortunate for me. I could, of course, have prevented the matter by force, as all the CONTINENTALS would have voted with me. BUT I DID NOT LIKE ANY SUCH DIVISION. So, by means of private letters†a to the PRINCIPAL ENGLISH MEMBERS, I have managed to persuade Beales' PROPOSER†b not to bring forward his MOTION again. The 'official' reason given was: 1. that Beales WILL STAND FOR MARYLEBONE at the next parliamentary elections and that our Association must by all means avoid appearing TO SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ANY PARLIAMENTARY AMBITION; 2. that Beales and we ourselves can be of greater assistance to each other, if we sail our separate ships. Thus, the danger has been temporarily averted. Incidentally, other parliamentarians, such as Taylor, etc. (fellows, who have close links with Mazzini), had taken it into their heads to tell us that the TIME was not OPPORTUNE for a Polish meeting. I answered through our COUNCIL that the WORKING CLASS has ITS OWN FOREIGN POLICY, which is most certainly not determined by what the MIDDLE CLASS considers OPPORTUNE. They always considered it OPPORTUNE TO GOAD ON THE POLES AT THE BEGINNING OF A NEW OUTBREAK, TO BETRAY THEM DURING ITS PROGRESS BY THEIR DIPLOMACY, AND TO DESERT THEM WHEN RUSSIA HAD THROWN THEM DOWN. In fact, the chief purpose of the MEETING is to raise money to support them. Are the poor émigrés (this time mostly WORKINGMEN and PEASANTS and thus not in the least PROTECTED BY PRINCE ZAMOYSKI et Co.) to starve because it appears to the ENGLISH MIDDLE CLASS JUST NOW INOPPORTUNE TO MENTION EVEN THE NAME OF POLAND?

Page Break me42.110
Page me42.110

Cutting enclosed by Mr Blind from The Morning Star.†162 Mazzini, who did tell Fontana that Blind was a liar, was absolutely furious that his Italian Workers' Association†20 here sent out the Italian version of my 'Address'†c into the world without the omissions Mr Mazzini had expressly demanded, e.g. the passages attacking the MIDDLE CLASS.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.110
Apropos. Some port wine and claret would do me a world of good UNDER PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES.

Page me42.110
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.111

56
ENGELS TO CARL SIEBEL
IN ELBERFELD
Page me42.111
Manchester, 27 February 1865

Dear Siebel,
Marx has sent you our statement denouncing the Social-Demokrat in Berlin.†a In the meantime, to do something positive to prevent the people from lumping us together with Bismarckery, I have written a pamphlet,†b and O. Meissner in Hamburg has accepted it. I should be grateful if you would arrange for a notice concerning it to be placed in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung and other papers to which you have access, with something like the following content:
Page me42.111
A pamphlet by Fr. Engels entitled The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party will shortly be published by Otto Meissner in Hamburg. It originated at the request of a so-called 'social-democratic' paper†c to the author to express his views on the subject in that paper.†d Detailed treatment of the subject, however, required more space than a newspaper could command; the pro-Bismarck direction adopted by the latest 'Social-Democracy' furthermore made it impossible for the people at the Neue Rheinische Zeitung to collaborate with the organs of this particular 'Social-Democracy'. In these circumstances, the above-mentioned work is being published independently in pamphlet-form...†163
Page me42.111
You will need to act quickly as Meissner has written that the pamphlet was already going to be distributed on 24 February. It will vex the Lassallean clique most dreadfully, the men of Progress†99 no less so, and not least Monsieur Bismarck. There are some most impudent things in it which have previously, for the most part, been passed over with tactful timidity. As long as the press does not again totally ignore the thing†164 with its fulminations against all and sundry, the story will have some effect.
Page me42.111

So, be quick now! This is all important. For the Rheinische Zeitung I shall supply the necessary material through Dr Klein in Cologne.
Page me42.111
Best wishes to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me42.112
Page me42.112
N.B. You can further add: and sets out the views of the 'Social-Democrats' of 1848 with regard to both the government and the Party of Progress.

Page me42.112
First published in Deutsche Zeitung, No. 473, 16 October 1920

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

57
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.112
Manchester, 27 February 1865

Dear Moor,
As you had positively promised to take the necessary steps regarding the newspapers†a immediately Meissner sent a positive reply, I counted on it that this had been done. Meanwhile, today I dispatched the necessary to Siebel,†b Liebknecht and Klein in Cologne (for the Rheinische Zeitung),†163 as there is no time to lose. If you have anyone else who can do anything, please write to them — PERHAPS Kugelmann? His letter returned enclosed, ditto Miquel whose high-faluting refashioning of the theory into a platform for mayoral dignity and bourgeois benevolence greatly amused me.†151 It is more or less how Heinrich Bürgers will view the world if he should ever become mayor of Nippes or Kalscheuren.
Page me42.112
Jones has got SESSIONS again, I have not been able to see him yet. More tomorrow, 7 o'clock has just struck and I must post this letter.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me42.113
Page me42.113

I have no port wine in the WAREHOUSE and will have to get hold of some first, but will do so immediately.

Page me42.113
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

58
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.113
Manchester, 3 March 1865

Dear Moor,

You must excuse me for neglecting my correspondence this week. Borkheim was here and took up a lot of my time; he left this evening; then there is COTTON-PANIC following Sherman's advance,†75 with endless letter-writing and vain attempts to dispose of our STOCK. I think Richmond will be abandoned within a fortnight, and, unless by some miracle Lee manages to get a fresh respite of 2-3 months, the final, decisive battle will be fought within 4 weeks.†30
Page me42.113

I must go home now and write to Meissner and Siebel, who is putting himself to a lot of trouble — he says he has sent you the statement.†a I am glad the thing is finally published; still nothing in the damned Social-Demokrat of 1 March — presumably, they tried to go back on it?†165 It's a load off my mind that we have at last made the break with that gang. So, now we have the grand concluding article on Bismarck†b which was supposed to patch everything up. O, jerum, jerum, jerum!†c

Your
F.E.

Page Break me42.114
Page me42.114

I have in my hurry not managed to find any decent port, but sent claret yesterday. Will keep looking for some port.

Page me42.114
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

59
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.114
[London,] 4 MARCH 1865

DEAR FRED,

Our statement†a is in today's Social-Demokrat. Although claiming that the statement from these 'gentlemen' requires no further comment, Mr Schweitzer has, nevertheless, 'anonymously' devoted one of his 'bloody pretentious' LEADERS†166 to us. Lassalle and B. Becker, 'President of Mankind', FOR EVER! At all events, I have Mr Schweitzer's exceedingly humble letter of invitation, etc. in my possession. Siebel has sent 5 newspapers (the Barmer, the Elberfelder, the Düsseldorfer, the Rheinische and the Neue Frankfurter) carrying the statement.†158 The enclosed cutting is from the Elberfelder. I am glad, firstly, that we are 'out' and, secondly, that we were 'in'. If we had not been, we would never have penetrated the 'mystéres of Lassalle'.
Page me42.114

I have written to Kugelmann (please send his prescription back to me) about your pamphlet†b (it looks very good in print; if there is a 2nd impression, only a sentence here and there would need to be altered). Can you send me another 2 COPIES? I would like to use Eccarius' good offices to put two short notices in Bender's rag†c (London) and in the Hermann, but that will hardly be possible unless I let them have 2 copies.†167
Page me42.114

The 'Polish Meeting' (WEDNESDAY) went off very well, and full, although the BOURGEOIS had done everything they could to wreck it by declaring it 'INOPPORTUNE'.†d†168

Page Break me42.115
Page me42.115

Affairs in France are very complicated.†95 I will tell you about it and send you Schily's REPORT (I have to translate extracts from it this very day and accordingly inform the SUBCOMMITTEE of it) in my next letter. For the moment, I shall just mention that there is A FIGHT between our original workers' representatives and the politico-social gentlemen (including the boss of the Association†a so admired by Moses†b) as to who is to be in contact with us. The [French],†c particularly the Parisian workers (although already links with 25 other French cities, too) literally regard the London COUNCIL as a workers' government 'abroad'.
Page me42.115

Major Wolff has returned after serving his sentence in Alessandria.
Page me42.115

Apropos: did I tell you that Mazzini later secretly communicated his 'displeasure' to Fontana after all (and his predilection for K. Blind, whom he had himself branded as a 'liar'†d)?
Page me42.115
Your wine came yesterday; received with THANKS.
Page me42.115
For the past week my brother-in-law†e from the Cape†f has been here again; he leaves next Tuesday. My niece†g from Maastricht came with him (daughter of my sister, widow Schmalhausen); I shall have to take her back IN ABOUT A WEEK LATER.
Page me42.115
My old trouble is plaguing me in various sensitive and 'aggravating' places, so that sitting down is difficult.
Page me42.115
Apropos: is the Lupus affair†8 still not quite wound up? Ditto I never heard a word from Mr Borchardt about the outstanding money he was going to collect in. You will see from the enclosed scrawl, which is just one example, how I am being sent claims of every conceivable kind, things I had totally forgotten about. This is the most recent to have raised its head from the days of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. It is something I have to take into account in every possible way because otherwise the fellows will make a public scandal.†h
Page me42.115
It seems all up with CONFEDERACY.
Page me42.115
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me42.116
Page me42.116
I wonder if you could send me the papers from the Manchester press relating to the COTTON-CRISIS?†40

Page me42.116
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

60
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.116
Manchester, 6 March 1865

Dear Moor,

Yours of the day before yesterday received, as was the Social-Demokrat today containing that droll article excommunicating us.†166 It really makes one laugh.

Page me42.116

I have been at home with 'flu most of today, but I shall go and see the lawyer about the Lupus affair†8 as soon as possible. Everything will be straight as soon as the fellow completes; Borchardt has been paid his £100 (i.e. less the money he has already had), and the Schiller Institute†28 its £100, too; furthermore, I gave the lawyer approx. £150 to cover tax and am only waiting for his account now before remitting the rest to you directly. I shall put together a provisional balance sheet for you in a day or two so that you can see how things stand.

Page me42.116

Things from Siebel and a certain Lange enclosed.†a Qu'en penses-tu?†b Send the stuff back, as well as the letter from Meissner, which I must have for my correspondence with him. I am sending him the cuttings for him to see that we have also got people to push things along.

Page me42.116

The Kölnische Zeitung has also printed our statement,†c but only up to the words that the Social-Demokrat's tactics preclude our further participation in it.

Page me42.116

Bruhn returned enclosed. HOW THE HELL CAME YOU TO OWE THAT FELLOW ANY BRASS?†d However much it is, I shall send it to you at once.

Page Break me42.117

Page me42.117

2 COPIES of the pamphlet†a despatched herewith. They are the last ones. But I have ordered some more. There is an announcement about the pamphlet in the Kölner Zeitung.†b

Page me42.117

What kind of 'PAPERS from the Manchester press relating to the COTTON-CRISIS' are you talking about? Surely you mean from the RELIEF COMMITTEE†32? I have not seen Maclure for some time; as soon as I encounter him, I shall have a word with him about it.

Page me42.117

Gumpert does not think much of Kugelmann's phosphate of lime. At all events, it is not a specific remedy. He says you ought to take arsenic. Returned enclosed.

Page me42.117

I must now go to the Schiller Institute to chair the Comité. By the by, one of the fellows there, a chemist,†c has recently explained Tyndall's experiment with sunlight†d to me. It is really capital.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.117

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

61
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.117
[London,] 7 March†e 1865

DEAR FRED,

My brother-in-law†f is leaving today to return to the Cape. I've got to accompany him onto the ship. So, I'm very short of time — hence just the following in the utmost brevity:

Page me42.117

1. Ad vocem†g Bruhn. A worker in Paris received a letter from a worker in Hamburg saying that Bruhn is slandering us in every way he can. Firstly, he says I owe him 60 talers which I never repaid. Secondly, you and I are said to have sold the Prussian government, or rather 'Police-Chief Stieber', a manuscript about the refugees.†169 The Parisian sent the letter to Lessner, who passed it on to me. I replied to Lessner by return of post, for communication to the Parisian, that I had never had any financial dealings with Bruhn (which I believed at that time to be the case), and in general considered that for Bruhn to ever have 60 talers to his name was like something out of Munchausen. Furthermore, I explained the affair of Bangya and the manuscript, in which connection our declaration of April 1853†a in the New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung†b and references to it in Herr Vogt page such and such†c were to be consulted. WELL! Then Bruhn's letter arrived. So, I racked my brains and think I remember the following: in the spring of 1849 I came to Hamburg to collect money for the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. I had just enough in my POCKET to get to Hamburg. However, stayed 14 days in a FIRST-RATE hotel. I explained to Baron Frisch, who later intended to send us donations, that I needed money to pay the hotel bill and my return fare. I now have a dim recollection that since I didn't want to take the money as a 'PRESENT' from him and he for his part didn't want it back, it was agreed that Bruhn, who was just as much a scoundrel then as now, should receive it. I had forgotten the whole bloody business; however, I now wrote to Bruhn†111 that I couldn't remember any financial transaction with him. Since the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was banned when I got back to Cologne from Hamburg and I myself was kicked out of Prussia, it was possible that in the whirl of events at the time I had forgotten.†170 It is still striking that he waited from 1849 to 1865 to remind me. But it was a simple matter. He should let me know by letter how much he thought he had on me and send me Grübel's address. I would then write to Grübel myself. If the latter confirmed what he said, his demand would be satisfied. This procedure is absolutely essential, as I am still uncertain about the matter even at this moment, and the way I have been fleeced by claims of this kind is really scandalous.

Page Break me42.118

Page me42.118
2. From the enclosed from Schily you will see what transpired in Paris whither we sent Le Lubez to settle the disputes that had broken out there. (We had given Schily ditto FULL POWER to negotiate,†d as we were aware of Le Lubez's bias towards Lefort.†95 Here I should just mention in passing that Béluze, President of the

Page Break me42.119
People's Bank,†171 who controls the few Paris Associations and their organ L'Association, is with Lefort.) What else happens — which will only be concluded this evening, as far as our intervention is concerned — in the next letter.†a
Page me42.119
3. The things from Siebel returned. It strikes me as most unfortunate that he gives London as the origin of the notice put in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung,†b thus exposing me as the presumed author.
Page me42.119
4. Letter from Liebknecht enclosed.
Page me42.119
5. One copy of the circular from the Geneva BRANCH-ASSOCIATION†c enclosed.
Page me42.119
6. The letter from Meissner enclosed.
Page me42.119
7. Lange: not to be directly rebuffed.†d Write and tell him that he would do best to post the thing to you, 2 COPIES, and you would send one to me each time. As he rightly realises himself, after our recent experience we would have to hold back for the present from making contributions to any German paper. He would, of course, have the same right as any other EDITOR of a journal to reprint whatever extracts he liked from your pamphlet.†e
Page me42.119
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.119
The first numbers (2 sheets) of Blind's Eidgenosse have come, with the only contributions by Blind, Struve and Rasch.†172 Trivia. Emblem consisting of hand with dagger, to kill the 'tyrants'.

Page me42.119
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.120

62
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.120
[London,] 10 MARCH [1865]

DEAR FRED,

I can only write these few lines today, as I have much else to do.

Page me42.120

The statement from Herwegh and Rüstow†a is good. The impudence of Mr Schweitzer, who knows perfectly well that all I need to do is publish his own letters, is fantastic. Though what else can the wretched cur do?

Page me42.120

As you will already have guessed, the scrawl he quotes from the Neue Frankfurter Zeitung is from student 'Blind'.†173 I'm sending you the first No. of this 'lackey'†b of the deposed Kings of Democracy and Holloway-type 'SELFADVERTISERS' and 'PUFFERS'. You must arrange for a few jokes about the fellow to reach Siebel, for him to hawk around to the various papers.

Page me42.120

By the by, if there should be a 2nd impression of your pamphlet,†c we can, in a short preface, make a brief official statement on our position with regard to the Lassalle shit and the Social-Demokrat. It would be, of course, beneath our dignity to take up the cudgels directly with that gang of riff-raff in minor journals.

Page me42.120

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.120
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.121

63
ENGELS TO JOSEPH WEYDEMEYER†57

IN ST LOUIS
Page me42.121
Manchester, 10 March 1865

Dear Weydemeyer,

At last I have got down to answering your letter of 20 January. I had sent it to Marx who — partly because he was indisposed — kept it a very long while, IN FACT did not return it until a week ago today,†a so that my letter could no longer catch the STEAMER; I was too occupied with business on that day.

Page me42.121

My best thanks for your detailed answers to my questions.†b With the negligent reporting on militaria†c in the papers here, I had lost the thread of all the 'combined' operations; I found the Red River expedition†174 quite puzzling and I was not much wiser about Sherman's move eastward from Vicksburg,†75 as there was no mention here of the Southern corps advancing from New Orleans. These combined operations with a point of meeting up not merely in the enemy's territory but even behind his very lines show precisely how crude are the ideas of strategy of a nation that has no experience of war whatever. And yet if the noble Wrangel and Prince Frederick Charles had not been 2 to 1 in the Danish war†9 they would have got up to much the same tricks. The battle at Missunde†175 and the 2 inexplicable 'demonstrations' (to give a nameless thing some kind of name, nevertheless) against Düppel†27 before the assault were, if anything, even more childish.

Page me42.121

As to Grant's conduct at Richmond,†30 I am trying to explain it in another way. I am completely of the same opinion as you that strategically the only correct thing was to attack Richmond from the west. However, it seems to me — insofar as one can form a judgement from such a distance and from such vague reports — that Grant preferred the eastern side for 2 reasons:

Page me42.121

1. because he could provision himself more easily there. Whilst on the western side he commanded only the roads to Fredericksburg and to Tennessee (both crossing areas that had been exhausted), on the eastern side he had the Fredericksburg line, and the York and James RIVERS as well. Since the difficulty of supplying large armies with provisions has played an important part throughout the war, I would not like to condemn Grant out of hand until I am clear on that score. You reproach him with having turned his back to the sea. But if one controls the sea and has secure points of embarkation (Monroe and Norfolk), then that is an advantage. Compare Wellington's campaigns in Spain and the Crimean campaign, where the Allies, who had been victorious on the Alma, positively ran away from the enemy in order to ensure their rear the protective cover of the sea south of Sevastopol.†176 That the possession of the Shenandoah valley was the best way to secure Washington is clear. But? The question arises

Page Break me42.122

Page me42.122

2. did Grant (and Lincoln) want to have Washington completely secure? On the contrary, it seems to me that with the loose constitution of the Federation and the great indifference to the war in some parts of the North, Lincoln never seriously wanted to drive the Confederates out of Richmond, that, on the contrary, he just wanted to pin them down in a position where they represented something of a threat to Washington, Pennsylvania and even New York. I believe that without that he would have got neither the recruits nor the money to finish the war. I certainly believe that Grant would have very much liked to have taken Richmond in the last 3-4 months, but he has not sufficient forces to do so. I see them estimated at from 70-90,000 men and Lee at 50-70,000. If this ratio is approximately correct, then, with his attack acknowledged to be strategically wrong, he has done everything possible to frustrate any offensive defence by Lee, and to encircle Richmond on at least 3 sides out of 4. For, after distinguishing himself amongst all the other generals of North and South in the last 2 years just by his brilliant use of counter-attacks, I cannot believe that Lee would now abandon this tactic unless forced to. It was, however, a stupendous gain for the North if it succeeded in pinning down the South's best army at Richmond, in one corner of the southern territory, because of a childish point d'honneur,†a until the whole hinterland was cut off and militarily disrupted for the South, firstly by conquest of the Mississippi valley and then again by Sherman's campaign, until finally, and this seems to be the case now, all the Union's available troops are marching on Richmond and one decisive blow can put an end to the whole business.
Page me42.122

The latest news we have is from New York, dated 25 February, i.e. it includes the taking of Charleston and Wilmington, and Sherman's advance from Columbia to Winnsborough. This Sherman appears to be the only fellow in the North who knows how to use his men's legs to win battles. But he must, incidentally, have splendid lads under him. I can't wait to see what will happen. If Lee assesses his desperate situation aright, he has no choice but to pack up and go south. But where to? The only way open to him is to Lynchburg and Tennessee; but that would be exceedingly hazardous to march into such a narrow mountain valley with just one railway, and Knoxville and Chattanooga fortified ahead of him. Besides, that would probably mean sacrificing Beauregard, Hardee and all other Confederate troops positioned in North Carolina, and exposing his flank to Sherman. Or he could advance from Petersburg, turn Grant's left flank and march directly south against Sherman? Daring, but better; the only way to draw to himself the remnants of the fleeing armies, delay Grant by destroying the railways and bridges, and fall on Sherman with superior strength. If the latter offers battle to this combined force, he will certainly be beaten; if he falls back toward the coast, he will open up the road toward Augusta for Lee who will there be able to make his first respite. But Sherman and Grant would then surely join forces and Lee would then again be faced by a superior force, this time as good as in open country; for I do not believe the Confederates can again concentrate so many heavy guns in any one place inland as to organise another Richmond there. And even if they were to do so, they would only be jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. Or else — invasion of the North? Jefferson Davis would no doubt be capable of this, but that would also spell the end within a fortnight.

Page Break me42.123

Page me42.123

Now, however, Lee can only send some of his forces southwards as well to join with Beauregard and company and stop Sherman, and this seems to me the most probable course. In this case, Sherman will probably give them a proper 'drubbing', as they say in South Germany, and then Lee will really be stuck. But even if Sherman were to be defeated, Lee would only have gained one month's respite, and the troops advancing from every part of the coast — not to mention Grant's successes in the meantime against the weakened Richmond army — would soon make his position as bad as it had been before. One way or another, the game is up, and I look forward to the arrival of each STEAMER with expectancy; there is a positive deluge of exciting news just now. The strategic speculations of the numerous SOUTHERN SYMPATHISERS here are most comical to listen to, they are all epitomised by the remark made by the Polish general Sznayde in the Palatinate who said after every rout, 'We are doing exactly what Kossuth did.'

Page Break me42.124

Page me42.124

Incidentally, I am most grateful to you for your explanations about military organisation in America, it was only as a result of them that I obtained a clear picture of many aspects of the war there. I have been familiar with the canons Napoléon for many a long year, the English had already replaced them (light, smooth-bore 12-pounders with a charge weighing 1/4 of the ball) when Louis Bonaparte re-invented them. You may have any number of Prussian howitzers, as they have all been withdrawn now and replaced by rifled 6-pounders and 4-pounders (which fire 13-pound and 9-pound heavy shells). I am not surprised that the ELEVATION of your howitzers is only 5°, it was no higher with the old long howitzers the French had (until 1856), and, if I am not mistaken, the English ones were only a little more. In general, the high-angle fire from howitzers has been used for a long time only by the Germans; its great unreliability in range-finding in particular had brought it into disrepute.

Page me42.124

Now to other matters.

Page me42.124

A Frankfurt lawyer 'von Schweitzer' had indeed established himself in Berlin with a little paper called Der Social-Demokrat and asked us to write for it. As Liebknecht, who is in Berlin, was to join the editorial board, we accepted.†a But then, firstly, the little paper embarked on an insufferable cult of Lassalle, whilst we meanwhile received positive proof (the old Hatzfeldt woman told Liebknecht about it and urged him to work for the same ends) that Lassalle was much more deeply implicated with Bismarck than we had ever realised. There was an actual alliance between the two which had gone so far that Lassalle was to go to Schleswig-Holstein and there to advocate the annexation of the duchies by Prussia, while Bismarck had rather less definitely consented to the introduction of a sort of universal suffrage and more definitely to the right of combination and concessions regarding social policy, state support for workers' associations, etc.†98 The foolish Lassalle had no guarantee whatever from Bismarck, au contraire†b he would have been put in prison sans façon†c as soon as he became troublesome. The gentlemen on the Social-Demokrat knew this, but, for all that, they continued to intensify their cult of Lassalle. In addition to that, the fellows allowed themselves to be intimidated by threats from Wagener (of the Kreuz-Zeitung) into paying court to Bismarck, flirting with him, etc., etc. That was the last straw. We published the enclosed statement†d and made our exit, with

Page Break me42.125
Liebknecht doing likewise. The Social-Demokrat then declared that we did not belong to the Social-Democratic Party,†166 which excommunication naturally did not bother us. The whole Lassallean General Association of German Workers†2 has taken such a wrong road that nothing can be done with it; however, it will not last long.
Page me42.125
I was asked to write about the military question, which I did, but, in the meantime, relations between us became more strained, and the article turned into a pamphlet,†a which I have now had published separately; I am now sending you a copy of it by the same STEAMER. To judge by the newspapers I receive, the thing appears to be creating quite a furore, especially on the Rhine, and it will, at any rate, make it very difficult for the workers to ally themselves with reaction just now.
Page me42.125
The INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION in London is going from strength to strength. In Paris especially, in London no less so. It is also going well in Switzerland and Italy. Only the German Lassalleans are refusing to bite, and in present circumstances least of all. However, we are again receiving letters and offers from all sides in Germany, a decisive change has taken place, and the rest will turn out right.
Page me42.125
The only reply I can make to your wife's†b question is that I have not yet entered into a state of holy matrimony.
Page me42.125
Photographs enclosed, of Lupus and myself, I have come out a little too dark; but it is the only one I have left.
Page me42.125
Schimmelpfennig has taken Charleston — Hurrah!
Page me42.125
Write soon.
Your
F. Engels

Page me42.125
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 33, 1906-1907, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.126

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.126
Manchester, 11 March†a 1865

Dear Moor,

Schweitzer's brazenness really is ludicrous. But it does show how hard he has been hit by our withdrawal†b and how well he knows that very much depends on it for his petty paper. After Herwegh and Rüstow have come out in support of our statement,†c anything can happen. Schweitzer will soon become aware of the effect his big talk has had, especially on the Rhine. Siebel has done a capital job in circulating the pamphlet.†d The Bonner Zeitung has twice published long extracts already and is intending to produce still more. The Rheinische†e has also got a long extract as well. Our standing with the Rhineland workers being what it is, this agitation-by-clique against us won't get very far.
Page me42.126

Siebel had already sent me the little piece from the Neue Frankfurter Zeitung.†173 Student Blind as always. He is having to make a couple of phrases of Lassalle's last a whole year. I haven't received the lackey†f yet.
Page me42.126

The legacy business is complete, the LAWYER will send the statement of account next week, he has still got approx. 10s. to collect in or pay out, he wasn't sure which. So, I can send you the money on Monday then.†8 Meanwhile, my statement of account enclosed, according to which another £†g approx. are due to you.
Page me42.126

The ideas Liebknecht has about Manchester! He has got nothing to gobble and asks me what a house 'with garden' costs here! The fellow is simply soft in the head. Schweitzer, he said, could not sell himself to Bismarck because he would have been obliged to use the good offices of the beastly old woman.†h
Page me42.126

I'm finding the new movement a terrible fag, by the way. It's the devil's own job letter-writing in the evening as well for the party and publisher, etc., until 1 or 2 o'clock, after letter-writing all day at work.

Page Break me42.127
Page me42.127

Siebel has sent me Lange's pamphlet.†a Confused, Malthusian with some Darwinian ingredients, flirting with all and sundry, but several good passages against Lassalle and the bourgeois consumers' co-op fellows. I'll send it to you in the next few days.
Page me42.127

Schily's letter also returned enclosed which I found most entertaining. Our old comrade is turning himself into a very useful diplomat.†159 How did the two of you settle the dispute?
Page me42.127

It's impossible to get anywhere with Jones. Hardly are the SESSIONS over when the Assizes begin. THE TRADE IN CRIME SEEMS HIGHLY FLOURISHING.

Page me42.127

Adios, and my kindest regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.127
EXECUTION of Will W. Wolff

Debit

Payment from Steinthal & Co. incl. interest £1,083-9-3
" Heywood BROTHERS incl. interest " 234-14-9
Debts collected by Dr Borchardt " 66-13-0

£1,384-17-0

Credit

To payment to Marx £234-14-9
" " " do " 350-0-0
" " " do " 200-0-0
" " " do " 40-0-0

£824-14-9

" " to Borchardt £ 100-0-0
" " Schiller Institute†28 " 100-0-0
" " Engels " 100-0-0
" " Wood, Solicitor " 150-0-0
{Payment to LANDLORD " 13-4-9 Paid
by { " funeral expenses " 57-11-0
Borchardt { " of 2 bills " 1-2-4
{ " of PROBATE DUTY " 30-0-0 1,376-12-10

Balance 8-4-2

Page Break me42.128
Page me42.128

There is also a certain amount in interest I have got to make over to you for the period from 9 November (when I received the balance of approx. £633 from Steinthal but only sent you £200 in the first place and also held back other payments). I can't attend to it today as the cashier has already left and locked away the relevant book; you will receive it along with Wood's statement of account; but it won't be much. Most of the interest due arose from the fact that the £633 remained with Steinthal from May until November, which produced approx. £16 extra for you.

Page me42.128
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

65
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.128
[London,] 13 March 1865

Dear Engels,

There are mistakes in your financial statement, viz. you sent me £235 on 8 June, £350 at the beginning of July (the letter enclosing the money isn't dated, but I can tell from a letter of 5 July which said it was about to be sent) and £200 on 9 November 1864; on the other hand, the last £40 itemised on the statement you said would eventually follow (in the enclosed letter dated 9 November) but you never sent it. I hope that you will be able to convince yourself of this on checking your books again, and if so, that you will send me the money by return of post, before I leave for the continent (with my NIECE†a), which will probably be at the end of this week.†177
Page me42.128

With regard to Schweitzer's brazenness, I have decided on a different course. There are some things about which one would be glad to enlighten the public but can only do so in response to direct provocation, and then one must not miss the OPPORTUNE TIME OF A REPLY. And such is the case with Schweitzer's comments connected with the garbage from Blind.†173 I intend to reply in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung actually on behalf of both of us, but I shall sign in my name alone, as it would be ludicrous to imply you shared responsibility for 'Achilles',†178 and as I shall be quoting mainly (exclusively, if my plan works out) from Schweitzer's letters to me anyway.

Page Break me42.129
Page me42.129

My plan therefore is this:

Schweitzer is reproducing, in print, the lies put out by the Neue Frankfurter Zeitung, knowing them to be lies. (Is the article in the form of an editorial in the paper, or what?) Viz.: 1. neither Lassalle's name nor any mention of Lassalle appeared in the prospectus we received 'printed as manuscript'. (Liebknecht had prevented that.) 2. In note of 30 December Schweitzer most humbly asks my pardon for so brazenly using passage from private letter of condolence, as both introduction and conclusion to his hymn of adulation. 3. By means of short extracts from Schweitzer's letters from 30 December 1864 to 15 February 1865 (his last letter), I shall show that the conflict over 'tactics' was a lasting one from the first, trial number†a right up until we announced our withdrawal,†b and was by no means a quarrel suddenly picked, as man-of-honour Schweitzer pretends, with his support for Blind's shit. At the same time, this little mosaic of excerpts from Schweitzer's letters will show with what servility this selfsame brute behaved towards us, until he suddenly turned vicious on being kicked. This will make salutory reading for bourgeois and workers alike (and for Rüstow). All in all, good introduction for the break with 'Lassalleanism', which is in any case inevitable. (Of course, as far as student Blind is concerned, if that water-newt should ever COME OUT again, I shall always treat Lassalle as a dead lion set beside a live ass. It is indecent that such an 'uneducated' Baden publican should even presume to put himself on a level with a man who has studied Heraclitus and the Roman law of inheritance.)

Page me42.129

Let me know by return if you approve of my plan, as I can't afford to lose any time.†179 (And don't forget to tell me in what form Blind's twaddle appeared in the Neue Frankfurter Zeitung.) In my opinion, it's necessary.
Page me42.129

Although, unlike you, I don't have the pleasure of corresponding with the Too-Clever-By-Half,†c nor of being able to foul his nest for him, nevertheless I've been infernally HARASSED just recently, quite apart from the furuncles, which won't go away; e.g., last night I didn't get to bed until 4 o'clock in the morning.

Page Break me42.130
Besides my work on the book,†a the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION takes up an enormous amount of time, as I am IN FACT the HEAD of it. And what a waste of time! (And it would come just now, with the French business†95 and the election business†155 here, etc., all at the same time.) E.g. the French shit:
Page me42.130

28 February. Tolain and Fribourg here from Paris. Meeting of the CENTRAL COUNCIL, where they state their case and bicker with Le Lubez until 12 o'clock at night. Then reconvene in Bolleter's tavern, where I had another 200 odd cards to sign. (I have now got them to change this stupid practice by having our handwriting engraved on the plate, and only the GENERAL SECRETARY†b signs by hand. Meanwhile, the remaining 1,000 cards OF THE OLD EDITION had to be signed IN THE OLD STYLE.)
Page me42.130

1 March. Polish MEETING.†168
Page me42.130

4 March. SUBCOMMITTEE†21 meeting about the French question until 1 o'clock in the morning.
Page me42.130

6 March. SUBCOMMITTEE meeting about ditto until 1 o'clock in the morning.
Page me42.130

7 March. SITTING OF THE CENTRAL COUNCIL until 12 o'clock at night. Resolutions passed. (I enclose resolutions, along with the private instructions which the CENTRAL COUNCIL is sending to Schily, who, as you can see from resolution V, has been appointed CENTRAL COUNCIL DELEGATE (AMBASSADOR) AT Paris.)†180

Page me42.130

(This meeting of 7 March, in which Le Lubez was utterly culbuté,†c was very embarrassing and stormy, and left the English in particular with the impression THAT THE FRENCHMEN STAND REALLY IN NEED OF A BONAPARTE!) In between times, people dashing this way and that to see me in connection with the conference with Bright which was held last Saturday (11 March), etc. Reported briefly on same to Jones (he had enquired beforehand about it on Friday), instructed him to convey the letter to you.†181
Page me42.130

WELL, mon cher, que faire?†d He who says 'A' must also say 'B'.
Page me42.130

You will see from the enclosed Nordstern (SEE THE 2 FIRST LEADERS) that, despite his hatred for us, Bruhn immediately seized the opportunity to attack Schweitzer, out of sheer professional jealousy.†182 This is most important since Bruhn's paper is of longer standing, and this has at least sowed dissension in the camp of these fellows themselves.
Page me42.130

A short notice about your pamphlet will appear in Bender's Anzeiger†e this week. I sent one to the Hermann (Juch), saying he should form his own opinion of it, etc.†a This he will do. I chose this approach because with Juch I'd always poked fun at the notices sent to the Hermann by Blind, for Blind and about Blind, and the two of us here are generally regarded as one person.

Page Break me42.131
Page me42.131

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me42.131
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

66
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me42.131
[London,] 13 March 1865

My dear Jung,

Mr Cremer has quite misunderstood me (and I shall write him immediately upon that point). I was so far from any intention of moving new amendments on Tuesday evening†b to the old resolutions†183 that, before the arrival of your letter, I had to-day posted to Schily a letter containing the very same resolutions. I wrote him at the same time to wait with their communication until Thursday next, so as to give Mr Le Lubez the time to fulfil his functions, viz. to communicate himself the resolutions.
Page me42.131

What I said to Cremer, and to Fox ditto, was, that if Le Lubez and Mr Wolff, by their foolish behaviour, had not excited the feelings, and killed the time, the resolutions would and might have been rédigées in a way more polite on the one, and more logical, on the other hand; [so that] f.i. Resolution II (concerning Lefort's [defensive ways]) might, by a short phrase, have lost its aspect, while Resolution IV concedes too much to Lefort etc. All this might have been mended, and I expressed to Mr Cremer my regret that it had, after the vote on the contents of the resolutions, not been left to the subcommittee†21 to give it the convenient stylistic form.

Page Break me42.132
Page me42.132

Yet, I should consider it the greatest folly to reopen the questions once settled, and which, as far as the substance of the resolutions goes, have been settled in the most fair spirit. I should consider it, particularly, quite unworthy of the Central Council to rescind one single word after the exhibitions Le Lubez and Wolff have made of themselves. Moreover, by my letter to Schily such a course has become impossible.
Page me42.132

You will, of course, oblige me by communicating to me your résumé historique — but I beg you to understand me well. I shall like to read it, as the thing itself interests me, but not in order to control your writing.†184 I am convinced beforehand that you will not embitter the spirits. I fear Mr Le Lubez has already sent to his friends private despatches in that childish spirit.

Yours fraternally
K. Marx

Page me42.132
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

67
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me42.132
[Manchester,] 14 March 1865

Dear Moor,

The business of the £40 is based solely on a statement of the business I made out in November, in which this £40 figures as 'CASH' to you, but undated. I had the impression myself that I had not yet sent you this £40, but as I had no opportunity to check, I could only go by the memorandum. Today I checked my account in the ledger, but I couldn't deduce anything relevant from that either. But if you've not had the £40 and, at the same time, I too have the vague feeling that that is the position, that's good enough, and I've already given the cashier instructions to have the money ready tomorrow.

Page Break me42.133
Page me42.133

On the question of the statement in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung,†a I'm in complete agreement. Though on the whole it doesn't matter at all if Mr Schweitzer occasionally takes it into his head to indulge in such barefaced effrontery, I did, nevertheless, find it galling that this vulgar upstart rogue should be allowed to get away with such behaviour towards us. Furthermore, if his smarmy letters aren't published now, they won't be any use at all later. It's always nice when someone like that gets the scolding he deserves for once. So, do it straightaway, and please ask Dresemann to send 2 COPIES, so that I can have one.
Page me42.133

In haste.
Your
F. E.

Page me42.133
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

68
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.133
[London,] 18 March 1865

DEAR FRED,

There are a lot of things, some of them important, that I want to write to you about. But as there's A VERY GREAT DEAL OF BUSINESS to do in connection with my departure tomorrow,†177 just the following bare facts:
Page me42.133
The remaining HALVES of the notes received.
Page me42.133
You can send the POST OFFICE order to my wife.
Page me42.133
I've sent off a note from Bender asking for 50 copies, etc., of your pamphlet,†b etc., to O. Meissner direct, as I had to write to him today. It is possible that Meissner's answer may arrive too late for the next Londoner Anzeiger. Since Bender does at present without doubt know best how to disseminate things of this kind in England, you should send him a note about the price of the pamphlet by return if you can (i.e. if you know it yourself). He will then advertise it straightaway in the next number. His address is 8 Little Newport St., Leicester Square.

Page Break me42.134
Page me42.134
I did a short, highly condensed little article for Bender, such as I thought would be suitable for his paper,†a a kind of prospectus of contents, and sent Juch conversely, contrariwise and notwithstanding, just your pamphlet itself, asking him to do a critique of it in his own way and according to his own point of view.†b Then I received enclosed note from Juch (to be kept). There certainly wasn't the time for a critical review. So, I sent the notice originally intended for Bender (in today's Hermann) to Juch†c (and the enclosed message to Bender instead†d). At the same time, I wrote to Juch — diplomacy becoming increasingly important — that I couldn't meet his request because I was going away, that he should print copious extracts in a later number; I would discuss his difficulty in finding contributors with him when I returned to London. (I am thinking of placing Eccarius there, instead of with the Social-Demokrat.) I sent him ditto a copy of my statement against Schweitzer, although the Hermann won't be able to print it until next Saturday's edition (copies sent at the same time to Reform in Berlin and to the Düsseldorfer Zeitung†e); no amendments in the version for the Hermann except a stab at Blind inserted at the beginning.
Page me42.134
Bender has written to me ditto:

'Most obliged and grateful for notice you sent; but we now need a review as well.'

Page me42.134
I've passed this on to Eccarius.
Page me42.134
Also enclosed a number of the Rheinische Zeitung sent to me by Liebknecht with HIS SPEECH.†185 His wife†f has written to mine; they are really down on their luck. He still owed the Social-Demokrat £5, etc. I can't send him anything at the present moment.

Page me42.134

Nordstern enclosed. You must keep this document. You can see these gentlemen are now trying to make out that that wretch Schweitzer completely falsified Lassalle.†186 So, my statement against Schweitzer, which also repudiates Lassalle, even though very indirectly, comes at a most opportune moment. It will all come out in the wash by and by.

Page Break me42.135
Page me42.135
It appears from the enclosed letter from Bruhn that I was right about Frisch.†a I've sent him the 6 talers (not 60!), although I'm not convinced by it, at the same time saying that I would 'make further enquiries' regarding the 50, etc.
Page me42.135
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.135
Apropos. Klings called in on his way to America. He had all kinds of interesting things to report to me. A real 'Rhineland' worker.
Page me42.135
On 5 March the Cologne branch of the General Workers' Association†2 decided to issue a protest (along the lines of our statement†b) against the Social-Demokrat, and against B. Becker as well, who is a kind of Biscamp Secundus. They have STOPPED THE MONEY SUPPLIES. And this refusal to pay taxes is catching.

Page me42.135
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

69
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ALBERT LANGE†101
IN DUISBURG
Page me42.135
[Copy]
Manchester, 29 March 1865
7 Southgate

Dear Sir,
I must offer you my profound apologies for allowing your kind letter of the 2nd-4th inst. to remain unanswered for so long. I only hope you will not condemn me unheard. My excuse is that for the first few days I was greatly preoccupied in part with an accumulation of current business, but in part also with the large amount of urgent correspondence, which one always faces when one suddenly appears before the public again after long otium cum (vel sine) dignitate†a and at the same time has such merry adventures as we have had with the Social-Demokratchen.†34 In addition to all that, I moved house, and that momentarily threw my papers into some disarray, in which your letter was mislaid; I only found it again the day before yesterday and I now hasten to reply to you.

Page Break me42.136
Page me42.136

I am most grateful to you for so kindly offering to send your Sphinx and other publications†187 to Marx and myself. My bookseller here is Mr Franz Thimm, Manchester, through whom you may send everything to me. Sending things via the bookseller requires 3-4 weeks as a rule; if you would send me at least the first few Nos. in a simple open wrapper by post (it does not cost much), I should be obliged to you and will gladly reimburse you. Communications for Marx should be sent to me here, and he will receive them within 12 hours of arrival. As you yourself rightly realise, I could not commit myself at all at this stage regarding possible future contributions; let us leave the question open for the time being, although, in your case, we are at least not running the risk of incurring the suspicion of wishing to rule over any section of the proletariat in Germany from England.
Page me42.136

Meanwhile, the involuntary delay in my reply has given me the opportunity to obtain your publication on the working-class question†b; I read it with great interest. I, too, was immediately struck on first reading Darwin†c by the remarkable similarity between his description of the vegetable and animal life and the Malthusian theory. Only my conclusion was different from yours, viz.: that it is to the everlasting disgrace of modern bourgeois development that it has not yet progressed beyond the economic forms of the animal kingdom. The so-called 'economic laws' are not eternal laws of nature but historical laws that appear and disappear, and the code of modern political economy, insofar as the economists have drawn it up correctly and objectively, is for us merely a summary of the laws and conditions in which modern bourgeois society can exist, in a word: its conditions of production and exchange expressed and summed up abstractly. For us, therefore, none of these laws, insofar as it is an expression of purely bourgeois relations, is older than modern bourgeois society; those which have been more or less valid for all previous history, are thus only an expression of such relations as are common to all forms of society based upon class rule and class exploitation. Amongst the former we may count the so-called Ricardian law,†188 which is valid neither for serfdom nor for the slavery of antiquity; amongst the latter, whatever part of the so-called Malthusian theory can be sustained.

Page Break me42.137
Page me42.137

The parson Malthus filched this theory, like all his other ideas, directly from his predecessors; the only part of it which is truly his is the purely arbitrary application of the two progressions.†189 The theory itself has long since been reduced by the economists in England to rational dimensions; the population exerts pressure on the means — not of subsistence, but of employment; mankind could multiply more rapidly than modern bourgeois society can stand. For us yet another reason to proclaim this bourgeois society to be a barrier to development which must fall.

Page me42.137

You yourself raise the question of how the increase in the means of subsistence can be made to keep pace with the increase in population; but excepting one sentence in the preface, I find no attempt at an answer. We start from the premise that the same forces which have created modern bourgeois society — the steam engine, modern machinery, mass colonisation, railways and steamships, world trade — and which through the unending commercial crises are already now working towards its ruin and ultimate destruction — that these means of production and exchange will also be sufficient to reverse the relationship in a short while and to raise the productive power of every individual to such an extent that he will produce enough for the consumption of 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 persons, that enough people will become superfluous to urban industry to devote far more manpower than before to agriculture, that science will at last be applied to agriculture on a large scale as well and as systematically as in industry, that those areas of South Eastern Europe and Western America which have been inexhaustibly fertilised for us by nature itself will be exploited on a far mightier scale than before. Not until all these areas have been turned by the plough and there is then dearth, will it be time to say caveant consules.†190
Page me42.137

Not enough is being produced, that is the root of the whole matter. But why is not enough being produced? Not because the limits of production have been reached — even for today and by present-day means. No, but because the limits of production are determined not by the number of hungry bellies, but rather by the number of purchasers with full purses. Bourgeois society has no desire, and can have no desire, to produce more. Those impecunious bellies, the labour which cannot be utilised with profit and is thus incapable of purchasing, fall prey to the mortality figures. Let us assume that there is a sudden boom in industry, such as is constantly occurring, to enable this labour to be employed with profit, then the labour will acquire the money with which to purchase, and the means of subsistence have as yet always been found. It is the endless circulus vitiosus†a in which the whole political economy revolves. One takes bourgeois conditions in their entirety as one's premise, and then proves that each separate part is a necessary part thereof — ergo, an 'eternal law'.

Page Break me42.138
Page me42.138

I was greatly amused by your description of the Schulzian co-operatives.†191 We have been through all that here in a different form, although it is now more or less a thing of the past. People in Germany have yet to develop their proletarian pride.
Page me42.138

There is a remark about old Hegel which I cannot let pass without comment: you deny him any deeper knowledge of the mathematical sciences. Hegel knew so much mathematics that none of his disciples was capable of editing the numerous mathematical manuscripts he left behind. The only man who, to my knowledge, has enough understanding of mathematics and philosophy to be able to do so is Marx. That the detail of the philosophy of nature is full of nonsense I will of course gladly grant you, but his real philosophy of nature is to be found in the second part of the Logic, in the theory of Essence, the true core of the whole doctrine.†b The modern scientific theory of the interaction of natural forces (Grove's Correlation of Forces, which I think first appeared in 1838) is, however, only another expression or rather the positive proof of Hegel's argument about cause, effect, interaction, force, etc. I am no longer a Hegelian, of course, but I still retain a deep feeling of piety and devotion for the titanic old fellow.

Yours very respectfully
Friedrich Engels

Page me42.138
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 5, 1909

Printed according to a copy made by an unidentified person

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.139

70
MARX TO SOPHIE VON HATZFELDT
IN BERLIN
Page me42.139
London, 10 April 1865

My dear Countess,

I shall be obliged if you would hand the copy of the '18th Brumaire' with my marginal amendments, i.e., corrections, to Mr Wilhelm Liebknecht.†79
Page me42.139

I have read Becker's†a attacks on you with the greatest indignation, and, to judge from letters I have received from people of the most divergent views, the scoundrel has thereby generally done harm not to you, but only to himself. I am in entire agreement with Mr Rüstow that it is incomprehensible that any section of the Association of German Workers could calmly listen to such scandalous talk. The most elementary sense of decency should make such infamy impossible.†192

Yours most respectfully
Karl Marx

Page me42.139
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

71
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.139
London, 11 April [1865]

Dear FRED,

Returned home some twenty-four hours ago.†177 So, for the moment just a few lines to let you know.

Page Break me42.140
Page me42.140

Letter from Wilhelmchen†a enclosed. I sent him the STAMPS he asked for.
Page me42.140

Quoad†b B. Becker, I didn't get to see his dirty work until I got here. But thought reply really was needed.†c (Rüstow and Herwegh have replied in the Nordstern on behalf of Hatzfeldt. Rüstow calls B. Becker a 'police-spy'.†192) Sent it to Rheinische and Düsseldorfer.†d As soon as copies arrive, 1 for you.
Page me42.140

I shall attend a SITTING of the 'INTERNATIONAL' this evening for the first time for 3 weeks. In the interval, revolution. Le Lubez and Denoual gone, Dupont APPOINTED FRENCH SECRETARY. As a result of Le Lubez's intrigues, and more particularly those of Major Wolff who is A TOOL in Mazzini's hand, the Italian delegates Lama and Fontana have left. Pretext: Lefort (who has meanwhile announced his departure in the journal L'Association†193) must keep his post as DEFENDER GENERAL IN THE PARIS PRESS. The Italian WORKING MEN'S CLUB†20 has not withdrawn from the Association, but no longer has a REPRESENTATIVE on the COUNCIL. Meanwhile, I shall get Bakunin to lay some counter-mines for Mr Mazzini in Florence. The English SHOEMAKERS' UNION — 5,000 strong — has joined the Association during my ABSENCE.†194
Page me42.140

How's the COTTON-CRISIS? I WANT INFORMATION ON THAT POINT.
Page me42.140

In great haste.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.140
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

72
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.140
Manchester, 12 April 1865

Dear Moor,

It's good to have you back again, and I certainly hope this lousy squabble will soon be over. Letters from Dronke and Borkheim enclosed. I had told the latter how it was possible to work with Kolatschek's great-German organ supporting Austrian rule in Hungary, Poland and Italy, as we would immediately have all our friends in the other countries down on us, hence the vague reply.†195

Page Break me42.141
Page me42.141

I had always half expected that the naive fraternité in the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION would not last long. If there were an active political movement among the workers here, just the same SPLITS would occur. It will pass through a lot more such phases and will take up a great deal of your time. But it does still remain something quite different from Lassalle's Association.†2
Page me42.141

I couldn't resist a hearty laugh when I read in Wilhelmchen's†a letter that the official Berlin community of that Association consists of 5 people, as there was recently a perfectly serious report in the Social-Demokrat of their transactions, in which they congratulated each other on such a large turn-out.†b
Page me42.141

Ad vocem†c COTTON-crisis, things are looking quite cheerful here. Cotton (MIDDLING Orleans) stood at 31 3/4d in July, was quoted at 14 3/4d last Thursday, and today, if one is selling, it hardly fetches 14d. So, it has depreciated by more than half. It was still worth 27d on 30 December, which is a fall of 12 1/2-13d in 3 months! On top of that, there's been a fall in flax, wool, sugar and all IMPORTS GENERALLY, which makes a loss of at least £40-50 mill. stg. You will readily understand that all the philistines are in a cold sweat. In Liverpool, bankruptcy has altogether gone out of fashion now. Anyone who becomes insolvent goes to his creditors (generally people there have only a couple), notifies them and offers them such and such an amount, which is always accepted at once as they are glad to get anything at all and have got to avoid any scandal so that the whole rotten edifice doesn't collapse. Hundreds of such settlements are said to have been reached on the quiet, and today rumour even has it here that one of the biggest Stockport manufacturers, who owns 3 big factories and is reputed to have made £200,000 over the last few years in COTTON-SPECULATION alone, has just come to a similar understanding on the quiet. But what we've seen so far is nothing. The bills, which were drawn from India against the white cotton, run out in the next 6 weeks, and there will be many more besides Joyce who will come to grief. A lot of people in Scotland are finished as well, and one fine day it's bound to be the turn of the banks, and that'd be the end of the matter. The spinners and manufacturers are becoming bankrupt by the dozen in Austria, too — in the whole of Bohemia only 'the great Liebig' is still on his feet, all the others have gone bust — and in Poland it's all just starting as well.

Page Break me42.142
Page me42.142
Industry itself is not much affected. The small fry mostly went bust ages ago or quietly melted away, and the big ones can operate reasonably profitably once more, if they can get any orders at all. Among them, the only ones who are going bust are those who have bad machinery or who couldn't keep their fingers out of COTTON. Everyone is making a loss on their stocks of cotton yarns and fabrics. We too could sing you a woeful song about that, twice as woeful for me in particular as it would have been if droned out last year. That's what comes of being an associé.†a
Page me42.142
Glorious is also the ethics of trade, as at present. You buy something today, and by the time it's delivered, it is worth 3, 4, or 5d a pound less. This leads to all kinds of dirty tricks and repudiations, as people try to get out of these unprofitable contracts at any cost, and that lands you in interminable altercations and squabbling correspondence. I'm sick to the teeth with it. You can have no idea how much letter-writing and aggravation this entails.
Page me42.142
I hope your wife got the £3? Final statement of account enclosed, I'll send the £12 in a few days, it's too late for a POST OFFICE order today.
Page me42.142
Best wishes.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.142
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.143

73
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON

Page me42.143
London, 13 April 1865
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Jung!

* In No. 30 of Der weisse Adler, 223 Münstergasse, Zürich there is a report of our Polish Meeting of 1 March.†168 This report must have been translated from the Daily News or some other English middleclass paper which, intentionally, suppressed the Resolution, proposed in the name of the 'International Association', and unanimously adopted by the St Martin's Hall Meeting.

Page me42.143

As you are the Swiss Secretary, it belongs to you to rectify the report, and to request the Editor of the paper to print the notice†196 which I translate literally from the Report in The Bee-Hive.†a

Yours fraternally*
K. Marx

Page me42.143

It goes without saying, dear Jung, that you can change the concluding words at your discretion. Since you are plus ou moins†b a Frenchman, I simply wanted to draft the scheme for you in German.

Page me42.143
First published in Archiv für die Geschichte des Sozialismus und der Arbeiterbewegung, Jg. 6, Leipzig, 1916

Reproduced from the English original. The last paragraph translated from the German

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.144

74
MARX TO LÉON FONTAINE†197
IN BRUSSELS
Page me42.144
[Draft]
London, 15 April 1865

Dear Citizen,

At its last sitting (see enclosure) the Central Council appointed me pro interim†a to be secretary for Belgium in place of Citizen Le Lubez, whose resignation as Council Member was unanimously accepted. Citizen Dupont has taken his place as secretary for France.

Page me42.144

I will, if you wish, later give you a brief account of the disagreeable incidents which occurred within the Central Council. In my opinion, they were really instigated by a person alien to our Council, well known as an Italian patriot†b but an inveterate enemy of the interests of the proletariat, without which republicanism could be no more than a new form of bourgeois despotism. Did he not, as one of his most blindly faithful followers†c confessed to me, go so far as to demand that all the passages hostile to the bourgeoisie should be deleted from the Italian translation of our 'Address'.†d

Page me42.144

Despite these regrettable incidents and the more or less voluntary resignation of several individuals, our Association is making glorious headway. Founded only a few months ago, today it already numbers almost 12,000 members in England alone.

Page me42.144

The Central Council will be much obliged to you if you send me an official report on the present state of our society in Belgium.

Page me42.144

In your correspondence please be so kind as to keep the official letters, which are destined for the Central Council's archives, separate from such private communications as you may be good enough to send me.

Page Break me42.145

Page me42.145

Pages of Marx's Notebook for 1864-65 with the rough draft of his letter to Léon Fontaine of 15 April 1865

Page Break me42.146

Page Break me42.147

Page me42.147

My address is: A. Williams,†a Esq., 1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, N.W. London.

Page me42.147

Greetings and fraternity.

Karl Marx

Page me42.147

First published, in Russian, in Bolshevik, No. 11, 1934

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

75
ENGELS TO MARX†29
IN LONDON
Page me42.147
[Manchester,] 16 April 1865

Dear Moor,

The Nordsterns returned enclosed. Herwegh and Rüstow have certainly acquired a funny Dido†b dog in Reusche. The fellow is a real comic turn with his solemn declarations. The inevitable oath beside Lassalle's dead body makes a precious counterpart to Willich's apple-tree.†198 It's a real blessing that these people live so far away and that they still show a certain reserve in their attempts to approach us.
Page me42.147

I haven't received No. 43 of the Social-Demokrat, so let me have it some time if there's anything particular in it.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.147

What do you say about Richmond?†30 I had expected that Lee would act like a soldier and surrender, instead of taking to his heels, at least so as to secure better terms for the army. But it's better the way it is. He has ended like a scoundrel, and the tragedy closes on a comic note.

Page me42.147
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.148

76
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.148
[London,] SATURDAY, 22 April 1865

DEAR FRED,

The scribble from the Rheinische Zeitung enclosed.
Page me42.148

I'll write a detailed letter to you tomorrow. I'm as limp as a wet rag today, partly from working late at night (nothing practical), partly from the diabolical muck I've been taking.
Page me42.148
Dronke would be ALL RIGHT, if I could turn copper into gold like he does. AS IT IS, we must utilise the moment when the bourgeois papers are competing to print denials of SLANDER which tomorrow, if the struggle is being fought in earnest, they perhaps wish to have endorsed.
Page me42.148
Salut. MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.†a

Your Moor

Page me42.148
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

77
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†1
IN LONDON
Page me42.148
[London,] 25 April 1865

Dear Jung,
I hope I may have the pleasure of your company at my house on Monday evening (ABOUT 8 O'CLOCK or LATER, if that hour is too early for you) for a MEETING with Ernest Jones and a small SUPPER. Apart from yourself, only Odger, Cremer and P. Fox. Had I wished to invite more guests, I should have had to ask too many for the purpose of the evening. This entre nous.†a

Page Break me42.149
Page me42.149
I have just written to Cremer†111 that he should issue the letter of authority for P. Vinçard immediately, which Dupont must then deliver to Vinçard forthwith. It would be best if Dupont could despatch the thing to Vinçard direct without it having to go by way of Fribourg.
Page me42.149
Vinçard had already written to Lubez that he would not accept if he did not receive the POWERS direct from London.†199 In a letter to Fribourg Lubez promised to inform the 'CENTRAL COUNCIL' of this, but did not do so. I have reason to believe that Fribourg subsequently 'forgot' the matter, not unintentionally.

Page me42.149
I shall give you a verbal account of what further occurred in Paris (which was for the most part good); but in the meantime you should tell Dupont.
Page me42.149
Salut et fraternité.

K. Marx

Page me42.149
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

78
MARX TO ENGELS†29
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.149
[London,] 1 MAY 1865

DEAR FRED,
You must excuse me for not writing until today and thus breaking my LAST PROMISE. It happened not because it is 'sheer delight to break one's word',†b but because I really am OVERWORKED, as completing my book,†c on the one hand, and the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION', on the other, are making very heavy demands on my time.
Page me42.149
Today is little Jenny's birthday, and this evening I shall be having Ernest Jones to my house along with Odger, Cremer, Fox and Jung, so it will be a political birthday party. Laura HAD 'THE QUESTION POPPED' by one Charles Manning, born in South America, English father, Spanish mother. He's rich and generally a nice fellow, BUT LAURA 'DOES NOT CARE A PIN FOR HIM'. 'SHE HAS ALREADY KNOWN HOW TO DAMP' the passionate southern temperament. However, as my girl is a friend of his sisters, and he is frightfully IN LOVE, it is A DISAGREEABLE CASE.

Page Break me42.150
Page me42.150
I enclose a 'curiosity'. The Nordstern's correction makes it a worthy organ of the German louts.
Page me42.150
I am also enclosing for you THE LATTER END of a letter from Schily, whose report on the Moses woman†a will amuse you.

Page me42.150

The great achievement of the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION' is this:

The REFORM LEAGUE is OUR WORK. On the inner committee of 12 (6 MIDDLECLASSMEN and 6 WORKINGMEN), the WORKINGMEN are ALL MEMBERS OF OUR COUNCIL (including Eccarius).†155 WE HAVE BAFFLED all attempts by the middle class TO MISLEAD THE WORKING CLASS. This time the movement in the provinces is completely dependent on that in London. Ernest Jones, e.g., had DESPAIRED TILL WE SET THE BALL A-GOING. If we succeed in re-electrifying the POLITICAL MOVEMENT of the ENGLISH WORKING CLASS, our ASSOCIATION will already have done more for the European working class, WITHOUT MAKING ANY FUSS, than was possible IN ANY OTHER WAY. And there is every prospect of success.

Page me42.150

You know that the Italian society†20 has not withdrawn from the ASSOCIATION, but its DELEGATES have from the COUNCIL.†b We now have Spaniards on it instead. ONE ROMAN NATION FOR THE OTHER. If those fellows don't appoint new delegates soon, as we have asked them to, Bakunin will have to arrange FOR SOME LIFE ITALIANS.

Page me42.150

Weber junior†c has been thrown out of the workers' society here for making false reports to the Social-Demokrat and for stirring up trouble in the branch society 'Teutonia', which is run by two fanatical Prussians by the name of Klinker.†200

Page me42.150

Our joint statement†d really was successful beyond all expectation. Not merely have we blown apart the 'General Association of German Workers'†2 as an organ of the Prussian government and in SIX WORDS generally cleared the heads of the German workers of their intoxication with royalty. The present split in the Party of Progress†99 was also the direct result of our stand.

Page me42.150

The CHIVALRY OF THE SOUTH has ended worthily. In addition, Lincoln's ASSASSINATION was the most stupid act they could have committed. Johnson is STERN, INFLEXIBLE, REVENGEFUL and as a former

Page Break me42.151

POOR WHITE has a deadly hatred of the oligarchy. He will make less fuss about these fellows, and, because of the treachery, he will find the TEMPER of the North commensurate with his INTENTIONS.

Page me42.151

Did you see how Blind HEADS the letter of condolence from the 'influential' Germans?†201 Blind is a genius in his way. IN THE VERY NICK OF TIME he does not merely go running to Freiligrath, etc., but has enough presence of mind to realise that, of the other signatories, ALPHABETICALLY 'Berndes' would open the list. So, he runs first to Freiligrath, etc., and gets him first of all to form a group and, after that worthy (who is now at one with Ruge as well), certain other INFLUENTIALS, I almost said INFINITESIMALS, such as Heintzmann and Kinkel, and puts himself 'alphabetically' at the top. Then he goes running to Berndes and gets him to start a second column next to himself, so that another lot of names, Trübner, etc., follows on. That is how the matter appears in The Times. In the same day's Morning Star the second column is added to the bottom of the first, with Blind AT THE TOP OF THE WHOLE, AND HIS FOOTMAN Freiligrath after him, etc. And not content with that, at his instigation, the Star of the same number also carries a notice on the front page THAT 'KARL BLIND HEADS, ETC.'.

Page me42.151
Isn't that genius for you?
Page me42.151
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.151
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

79
ENGELS TO MARX†29
IN LONDON
Page me42.151
Manchester, 3 May 1865

Dear Moor,
A belated many happy returns to little Jenny on her — 20th? — birthday. THE OTHER AFFAIR LOOKS JUST LIKE LAURA ALL OVER.†a But what else can one say except repeat the verdict of the Stalybridge jury: SERVES HIM RIGHT.

Page Break me42.152
Page me42.152
I'll be sending all the things back to you in a few days time. I was very pleased to see in the Nordstern that something has at last been started against Becker†a and Schweitzer in Solingen, too.†202 As all I have seen concerning this business since your departure has been the Social-Demokrat and two letters from Liebknecht, I am not at all clear as to what has come to pass on the Rhine in this connection; from the miserable silence maintained by the Social-Demokrat about developments in the General Association of German Workers, I could only deduce that things must be looking bad for these gentlemen. But it is understandable that I really do need to know how things stand on the Rhine, especially since in the beginning the scoundrels had some momentary success there. If you've got any material on it, please let me have it, I'll send everything back to you, and in general I will as a rule send all the documents back in future because now you need to have this stuff together.

Page me42.152
Have you taken out a subscription to the Nordstern? It would be a good thing if you did, because we've got to know what's happening.
Page me42.152
It is vital for us to have some contacts with the workers on the Rhine so that in future we can counter intrigues of that kind from the outset. Apropos, peculiar things seem to have been happening to Klings. Some jackass gave him my address as 58 Dover Street. Klings goes there, does not find me, of course, and goes to see Rode in Liverpool, and the latter tells Eichhoff I'd pretended to be out when Klings called, did not wish to see him, what is this supposed to mean, etc., to a man like Klings who was after all going to 'organise everything' in America with Weydemeyer and the others (which others?), etc., etc. Monsieur Rode, whom I've never met, did thereby express his surprise that I had 'not yet' sent him a copy of my pamphlet.†b Can you understand that?
Page me42.152
The statement attacking the President of Mankind is very good.†c Just what was needed and no more.
Page me42.152
The worst of it is that the people in Germany will now demand that someone assumes the leadership over them, and who can do it? Eccarius would be the man, but he won't want to leave London.
Page me42.152
The International Association really has gained an enormous amount of ground in such a short time and with so little to-do. But it is a good thing it is at present occupied in England, instead of eternally having to deal with the disorders in France. So, you have something to compensate you for the time it's cost you.

Page Break me42.153
Page me42.153
How's the book†a going?
Page me42.153
As far as the strategic situation is concerned, at Richmond Grant has achieved a precise replica of the battle of Jena,†203 and with the same result: the whole of the enemy army is trapped.†30 Only he didn't have so far to march to gather the fruits.
Page me42.153
Johnston has now surrendered, too, so I've won my wager of 2 months ago: that by 1 May the SOUTHERNERS would have no army left. Whoever still offers resistance will be taken in as a BRIGAND, and rightly so. At any rate, Johnson will insist on confiscation of the great estates, which will make the pacification and reorganisation of the South rather more acute. Lincoln would scarcely have insisted on it.
Page me42.153
The SOUTHERN SYMPATHISERS here are consoling themselves for the hypocritical wailing they were obliged to put on over the assassination,†b by prophesying that it'll be Grant I, Emperor of America, within 4 weeks. What jackasses they have made of themselves!

Page me42.153
Incidentally, their 'Majesties'†c must be absolutely furious that Lincoln's assassination has made such a colossal impact throughout the world. None of them has yet had such an honour.
Page me42.153
Best wishes to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.153
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.154

80
MARX TO ENGELS†29
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.154
[London,] 9 MAY 1865

DEAR FRED,
You need not send anything back (except Schily's letter†a). Just keep the things safely. I enclose ONE Free Press (the QUEER ARTICLE on the 'RECONSTRUCTION OF ITALY' is from the pen of the HIGH PRIEST himself, from Urquhart†b), also two Nordsterns (one of them somewhat out of date). I've got a subscription to the latter, but no longer to the Social-Demokrat. The latest Nordstern will give you some idea of the situation on the Rhine.†204 Incidentally, the total number of the faithful whom B. Becker still commands is barely 1,000.
Page me42.154
Before I forget: there were several allusions to your pamphlet†c in the debate in the Prussian Chamber. Gneist, for instance, said the Minister of War†d would not persuade them, even if his statistics spoke with the tongue of 'Engels'. (Laughter.) (That is how the affair appeared in the Berliner Reform.†e)
Page me42.154
As everywhere, the London workers, of course, also include A KNOT OF ASSES, FOOLS AND ROGUES, RALLYING round a scoundrel. The scoundrel in this case is 'George Potter', A RAT OF A MAN, SUPPORTED by a VENAL but witty Irishman by the name of Connolly, who is a dangerous STUMP-ORATOR. Although the bourgeoisie hate the said Potter as chief STRIKE-MANAGER, they do, nevertheless, support him against our people because they smell VENALITY in him, whereas they know that our people are TRUE MEN. This Potter DERIVES HIS POWER particularly from the fact that he is PRESENTLY the MANAGER of The Bee-Hive, the official organ of the TRADES UNIONS, although he uses it against the OFFICIAL COUNCIL of these UNIONS which is in our hands.†18 Since the paper is based on shares, the idea is now to distribute as many SHARES as possible (5SH. PER SHARE) amongst our workers. For my part I have undertaken to collect the MONEY for ABOUT 30 SHARES. For this, I'm counting on you (SINGLE HANDED or with friends) for £5, I WRITE TO Dronke for £1 and I will pay the rest myself. (Although my FUNCTION with the CENTRAL COUNCIL costs me a lot of money, compared with what I can afford.) The money must already be AT HAND this week, as the General Meeting of the SHAREHOLDERS is next week. If we are only strong enough (and Odger, for instance, has guaranteed 50 SHARES) to elect the DIRECTORS, we shall have that rogue Potter (who is only the MANAGER) UNDER OUR THUMBS. This matter is of decisive importance for the whole movement.†205

Page Break me42.155
Page me42.155

E. Jones was here, very charming SOCIALLY SPEAKING. But between ourselves, he is only trying to use our Association for electoral agitation. Of the 12 cards I sent him, he returned 11, he had not sold a single one, whereas POOR Schily, for instance, paid for 24 for himself alone. I told him he should just put them back in his pocket again, I would dispose of them later, but I could not appear in front of the English workers and tell them that. BY AND BY HE WILL FIND OUT that if only for speculative reasons he should not have treated the business so lightly and RATHER CONTEMPTIBLY. I will write to him and tell him to hand over the 'ADDRESSES'†a to you. You can give them to whomsoever you please. They are just dead weight with him. Incidentally, I don't take kindly to the fact that he was here to wangle a job as RECORDER out of Sir G. Grey either.
Page me42.155

Today I am to submit an 'ADDRESS TO PRESIDENT JOHNSON.'†206 Mr Le Lubez wants to return to the COUNCIL as — DELEGATE FOR DEPTFORD, the same fellow as resigned as DELEGATE FOR FRANCE,†b BUT HIS ADMITTANCE (WE HAVE TO CONFIRM THE DELEGATES) WILL NOT RUN QUITE SO SMOOTHLY AS HE SEEMS TO FANCY. I would be pleased if you could form even just A BRANCH OF 6 MEN in Manchester, and could get yourself elected as their CORRESPONDENT FOR LONDON. For THE CORRESPONDING people are eo ipso†c MEMBERS OF THE CENTRAL COUNCIL, and have a seat and a vote on it, WHEN AT LONDON.
Page me42.155

New BRANCHES have been formed in Lyon, Neufchâteau (département des Vosges) and St Denis. The French BRANCHES (apart from Paris) are not linked with Paris, in view of the existing laws, but directly with London.
Page me42.155

I'm hoping to put the finishing touches to my book†d by 1 September (despite numerous interruptions). It's going ahead well, although I am still not quite well.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.155
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.156

81
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.156
Manchester, 12 May 1865

Dear Moor,

Schily's letter returned enclosed. That passing glimpse of the family life of Moses and the Moses woman†a was most entertaining. Many thanks for the Nordsterns. The reports in them provide a check on the negative evidence of the Social-Demokrat, which I am keeping on until June (and if it is not being taken anywhere in London accessible to you, I am willing to continue taking it, one never knows what may happen).
Page me42.156

By the by, the rag in question — i.e., the Social-Demokrat — has now gone into such decline that one really feels sorry for it. Poor Schweitzer's heroic soul is at its last gasp, every shred of an idea and all the fruits of his reading have already been used up and he hasn't even a fart left in him to serve up to his readers. Nor is Mauses†b producing anything any more, Mauses, the last hope of the new 'party'.†207 'News of the Association' is a complete blank, too — literary section re-printed from the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung.†208 After four months editorship during one of the most turbulent periods we have known since 1848, that milksop has been pumped dry, right down to the dregs, and those are the fellows who wanted to annex the whole German proletariat by one trick.
Page me42.156

Ad vocem†c Potter: five pounds encl., you can take some, i.e., five of the SHARES in my name and five in Samuel Moore's, whom I've admittedly not yet seen, but he's sure to take some; we'll send you PROXY for the general meeting.†d If Gumpert also wants 5 SHARES, you can pass some of those 20 on to him — so: 5 for me, 5 for Moore, the remaining 10 to be distributed to other people, but make sure that, if the people are not quite reliable, you reserve the right to take them back again.

Page me42.156

As for the suggestion that I should form a BRANCH of the International Association here, it's quite out of the question. Apart from Moore and Gumpert, I see no one here, as I can't broach that kind of thing with the Kyllmanns or we would have a squabble at once. Besides, my position as its correspondent for London would impose all kinds of obligations on me, which I would be unable to fulfil as soon as real contacts with the workers were found or arose here. Et á quoi bon?†a I wouldn't be able to take any of the burden off your shoulders anyway.

Page Break me42.157

Page me42.157

Apropos. Moses is still up to his tricks against the International Association in the Social-Demokrat†209; if you haven't read the piece, I'll send it to you.

Page me42.157

The number of the banknote is: B/C 48498, Manchester, 4 January 1864.

Page me42.157

The tongues of Engels, etc., are not a reference to me, as I thought myself at first, but to the statistician Privy Councillor Engel in Berlin who sorted out the things for Roon which I criticised.†b

Page me42.157

Jones must be allowed to go his own way. He doesn't seem to me to have any real confidence in the proletarian movement any more. I can never find him here anyway, he's always away.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.157

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

82

MARX TO ENGELS†33

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.157

[London,] 13 MAY 1865

DEAR FRED,

The £5 received with THANKS. Will be invested as suggested.

Page me42.157

You are right about the COMMITTEE IN MANCHESTER.†c

Page me42.157

Quoad†d E. Jones, it is necessary to march with him for the time being. He and his people will be figuring at the next Manchester

Page Break me42.158

CONFERENCE (NEXT TUESDAY) together with our DELEGATES (Odger and Cremer ON THE PART OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION), Howell as secretary of the REFORM LEAGUE (BRICKLAYER, ONE OF THE MEMBERS OF OUR COUNCIL) and Beales and Mason Jones as bourgeois representatives of the same LEAGUE.†210

Page me42.158

Without us this REFORM LEAGUE would never have come into existence, or else it would have fallen into the hands of the MIDDLECLASS. The glorious failure of BAINES'S BILL (which will result in a CHANGE OF MINISTRY and the COMING IN of the Tories), originally SUPPORTED BY THE GOVERNMENT, WHICH WANTED SOME SUCH SMALL MEASURE FOR THE HUSTINGS, occurred in the Lower House itself with direct reference to the 'extravagant' demands recently put up by the WORKING CLASS (I.E. OUR MEN).†211

Page me42.158

As Dronke wrote me, Reinach I, who is now MANAGING DIRECTOR of the BANK OF SWITZERLAND, will be ruthlessly putting an end to the OFFICE in London, which is causing nothing but expenses. Reinach I is, of course, not bound by the same political and personal considerations as Fazy†212 and Klapka were.

Page me42.158

A ghastly carbuncle has broken out again on my left hip, NEAR the INEXPRESSIBLE PART OF THE BODY.

Page me42.158

Regards to MRS Lizzy.†a

Page me42.158

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me42.158

Apropos. Monsieur Le Lubez, who had miscalculated about how important and dangerous he is, WANTS NOW TO RETURN TO THE CENTRAL COUNCIL IN THE CAPACITY OF A REPRESENTATIVE 'FOR GREENWICH'! We replied that d'abord†b we had to wait for certain letters to come, which he had written to France at the time of the CONFLICT.†213

Page me42.158

I hardly think the Social-Demokrat will see out another quarter. Moses†c believed himself safely ensconced and didn't want to give up his prestigious position as Lassalle's really secret agent at any price.†207 Le pauvre diable!†d

Page me42.158

Lassalle's will is now proven. He has left nothing to B. Becker apart from his 'NOMINATION', accompanied by rules of conduct dictated 'with all severity and authority'.

Page me42.158
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.159

83
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.159
[London,] 20 MAY 1865

DEAR FRED,
Cutting ENCLOSED which includes my address to Johnson.†a
Page me42.159
Edgar's†b reappearance did, of course, surprise us greatly. QUITE THE FELLOW I THOUGHT HIM, and his career quite as I expected it. IT IS A PITY that he could not always have been right-hand to Garibaldi. He would have suited him to a tee. But the poor devil is still very weak. He will be staying here for some time, apropos of which you could be doing A GOOD WORK by contributing to the replenishment of my wine-cellar.
Page me42.159
I am working like a horse at the moment, as I must make use of the time when I am fit for work, and the carbuncles are still with me, though they only trouble me locally and do not disturb the brain-pan.
Page me42.159
In between times, since one cannot always be writing, I am doing some DIFFERENTIAL CALCULUS dx/dy. I have no patience to read anything else at all. Any other kind of reading always drives me back to my writing-desk.
Page me42.159
Special meeting of the 'INTERNATIONAL' this evening. A good old codger, an OLD OWENIST, Weston (CARPENTER), has put up the following two propositions that he is constantly defending in The Bee-Hive:
Page me42.159
1. that A GENERAL RATE IN THE RISE OF THE RATE OF WAGES would be of no benefit to the workers;
Page me42.159
2. that the TRADES-UNIONS for that reason, etc., are harmful.

Page me42.159

If these two propositions, in which he alone in our SOCIETY believes, were to be accepted, we should be in a terrible mess, both in respect of the TRADES-UNIONS here and the INFECTION OF STRIKES now prevailing on the Continent.

Page me42.159

He will be supported in the matter by a native Englishman — since non-members are also admitted to this meeting — who has written a pamphlet to the same effect.†c I am, of course, expected to produce a refutation. I ought therefore really to have worked out my réplique for this evening, but I thought it more important to get on with writing my book,†a and so I shall have to rely on improvisation.

Page Break me42.160

Page me42.160

I know in advance, of course, what the two main POINTS will be:

1. that wages determine the value of commodities;

Page me42.160

2. that if the capitalists pay 5s. today instead of 4, tomorrow they will sell their commodities for 5s. instead of 4 (being ENABLED to do so by the increased demand).

Page me42.160

Trite though that is, and however little it penetrates the topmost surface of things, it is, nevertheless, not easy to explain to the ignorant all the competing economic questions involved. YOU CAN'T COMPRESS A COURSE OF POLITICAL ECONOMY INTO 1 HOUR. BUT WE SHALL DO OUR BEST.†214

Page me42.160

Edgar regards it as a GOOD OMEN that he met you first in England. He liked Lizzy†b very much.

Page me42.160

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.160

It is a most strange irony of fate that this Edgar, who never exploited anyone other than himself and was always a WORKMAN in the strictest sense of the word, went through A WAR OF and WITH STARVATION for the slave-owners. Ditto that both brothers-in-law have for the moment been ruined by the American war.

Page me42.160

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

84
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN BERLIN
Page me42.160
[London, about 25 May 1865]

Dear LIBRARY,

I should prefer it if the translation of the Address†c could appear in the Reform†d and the Rheinische Zeitung. It will, of course, be necessary to say that the original is in English, and it will do no harm if I am named as the author.†215 The bourgeois papers are still holding it against us that of A. Lincoln's replies to the various messages of congratulations on his RE-ELECTION, only the reply to ours†a was more than a formal ACKNOWLEDGEMENT of RECEIPT.†112

Page Break me42.161
Page me42.161

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.161
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

85
MARX TO ENGELS†29
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.161
[London,] 24 June 1865

DEAR FRED,

You must excuse my long silence. The whole time I have been suffering throughout from bilious nausea (probably on account of the heat), had all kinds of other TROUBLES as well, and apart from that I have used the time, when fit to write, for official work on my book.†b You know how, when one is in such a condition, one is always resolving to send letters but never manages to.
Page me42.161

Not much new to report. The valiant Nordstern did not appear since my last despatch to you, probably for lack of money. I received it again today, and it does not mention the interval at all. As you will see, the rag is nothing but a dungheap of loutism.

In their denunciation of B. Becker, these fellows are now declaring everyone a 'traitor' who dares to lay a finger on even one syllable of the truth as revealed by Lassalle.†216 Meanwhile, Mr B. Becker has provisionally ceded his chairmanship to that lout Fritzsche (of Leipzig) and set up his residence in Berlin in order to do business with Mr Bismarck directly.

Page Break me42.162
Page me42.162

A pretty shambles Baron Izzy's whole movement has degenerated into! But the fellow obviously had the right instinct for how to make himself Saviour of the German louts! Meanwhile, the 'unfaithful one'†a is living in blissful happiness as a boyar lady with her Wallachian†b in Bucharest.

Page me42.162

I have had no letters from Liebknecht for some while. But that is no doubt because for a long time, while my correspondence was suspended, I did not answer the notes that used to come in almost daily from him, none of them having anything to say, and each successive one invariably confirming the nullity of its precursor.

Page me42.162

In respect of the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION', I will just mention the following here:

Page me42.162

The Italian gentlemen have come back and indicated to us last Tuesday†c that they have yet once again nominated Major Wolff as their delegate. Mr Mazzini appears to have convinced himself that he may need us, whereas we care not a FARTHING for him.

Page me42.162

A YANKEE by the name of Leon Lewis (in Paris at the moment) has become the American secretary. In my opinion, he is worthless, although he has plenty of money and even more ambition. The fellow imagined that by founding a paper, The Commoner, he could revolutionise England in 24 hours or in 6 months at the very least. He offered this paper-to-be to us as our organ, but found that we are setting very business-like and by no means enthusiastic conditions, and so he has 'temporarily' left for France with his wife, who is also a great politician, I suspect to see if he can apply his 'LEVER' there with any more success.

Page me42.162

I should like your advice on the following point:

I read a PAPER (which would perhaps cover two printed sheets) at the CENTRAL COUNCIL about the question raised by Mr Weston†d as to the effect of A GENERAL RISE OF WAGES, etc.†214 The first part of it is a reply to Weston's nonsense; the second A THEORETICAL exposition, insofar as it was appropriate for the occasion.†e

Page me42.162

Now they want to have it printed. On the one hand, that could perhaps be useful to me, since they are in contact with J. St. Mill, Professor Beesly, Harrison, etc. On the other hand, I have my doubts:

Page me42.162

1. to have 'Mr Weston' as adversary is not exactly 'vairy-flettering';
Page me42.162
2. the second part of the paper contains, in an extraordinarily condensed BUT RELATIVELY POPULAR FORM, many new ideas which are anticipated from my book,†a whilst at the same time it does, of necessity, have to skate over a lot of problems. The question is, whether it is advisable to anticipate things of that kind in such a way? I think you can decide on this better than I can because you can look at the matter with more detachment from a distance.

Page Break me42.163
Page me42.163
I also had a lot of trouble TO PUT OFF the CONGRESS announced for this year, in the face of pressure from Schily, J. Ph. Becker, and some of the Paris COMMITTEE. I did, however, succeed — and that was decisive — in persuading the COUNCIL here that in view of the electoral agitation, etc., there should only be a preliminary (private) conference in London this year, to which the CENTRAL FOREIGN COMMITTEES would each send one delegate (not the AFFILIATED SOCIETIES BUT THEIR ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEES). I am certain that the Brussels Congress would come to nought. The time was not yet ripe for it.†217
Page me42.163
Our Eccarius has become one of the main London electoral agitators and would have accepted the invitation to agitate in the country (on £2 per week), if this were not the height of the tailoring SEASON. He has a peculiarly dry, humorous manner of speaking which particularly appeals to the English.
Page me42.163
Edgar†b is already much recovered. An odd fish for whom fodder and fancy clothes really are the only things of account; as egotistical as a dog or a cat, BUT A KIND-NATURED ONE. His brain has also begun to display certain activity.
Page me42.163
Johnson's policy likes me not. A ludicrous AFFECTATION of severity towards individuals; hitherto excessively VACILLATING and weak when it comes down to it. The reaction has already set in in America and will soon be much fortified if the present lackadaisical attitude is not ended immediately.
Page me42.163
What do you say to the debates in the Prussian Chamber? At any rate, the revelations about the judicial system, etc., following in rapid succession were splendid. Ditto the obvious blow which the National Association Great-Prussia men†152 received, as was shown particularly in the Polish debates.
Page me42.163
Ad vocem†c Poland, I was most interested to read the work by Elias Regnault (the same who wrote the 'histoire des principautés danubiennes'), 'La Question Européenne, faussement nommée La Question Polonaise'. I see from it that Lapinski's dogma that the Great Russians are not Slavs has been advocated on linguistic, historical and ethnographical grounds in all seriousness by Monsieur Duchinski (from Kiev, Professor in Paris); he maintains that the real Muscovites, i.e., inhabitants of the former GRAND DUCHY OF MOSCOW, were for the most part Mongols or Finns, etc., as was the case in the parts of Russia situated further east and in its south-eastern parts. I see from it at all events that the affair has seriously worried the St Petersburg cabinet (since it would put an end to Panslavism in no uncertain manner). All Russian scholars were called on to give responses and refutations, and these in the event turned out to be terribly weak. The purity of the Great Russian dialect and its connection with Church Slavonic appear to lend more support to the Polish than to the Muscovite view in this debate. During the last Polish insurrection†24 Duchinski was awarded a prize by the National Government for his 'discoveries'. It has ditto been shown geologically and hydrographically that a great 'Asiatic' difference occurs east of the Dnieper, compared with what lies to the west of it, and that (as Murchison†a has already maintained) the Urals by no means constitute a dividing line. Result as obtained by Duchinski: Russia is a name usurped by the Muscovites. They are not Slavs; they do not belong to the Indo-Germanic RACE at all, they are des intrus,†b who must be chased back across the Dnieper, etc. Panslavism in the Russian sense is a cabinet invention, etc.

Page Break me42.164
Page me42.164
I wish that Duchinski were right and AT ALL EVENTS that this view would prevail among the Slavs. On the other hand, he states that some of the peoples in Turkey, such as Bulgars, e.g., who had previously been regarded as Slavs, are non-Slav.
Page me42.164
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.164
Philistine Freiligrath descended on us with wife and daughter†c 2 weeks ago! He now has his immediate superior Reinach on his back who is here 'to investigate' and is giving him a proper roasting.

Page me42.164
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.165

86
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN BERLIN
Page me42.165
[London,] 24 June 1865

Dear Liebknecht,

