You must explain to yourself my long silence by continuing indisposition and much work in intervals when I have been capable of it. Your letters, moreover, contained nothing which would have required urgent reply.

Page me42.165

The Nordstern has most likely been suspended for a while owing to lack of money? At least, it has not arrived here for a couple of weeks. A fine gutter rag, to be sure! The declaration by various associations†a that anyone who so much as lays a finger on the articles of faith as revealed by Lassalle is guilty of high treason, is priceless. Haut-goût,†b INDEED!

Page me42.165

What is Mr B. Becker doing in Berlin, and how is the Social-Demokrat 'surviving'?

Page me42.165

You have quite the wrong notion of Dr Kugelmann. I have been in correspondence with him for years past. He was a socialist back in 1848, in Düsseldorf. As TO Pieper, the VERY NAME OF Kugelmann was not known to him when he was here.†218

Page me42.165

I have not yet written to Stumpf because I have not been writing any letters over this period. As regards the letter he entrusted to Bruhn, I have not, of course, ever set eyes upon it.†219

Page me42.165

The INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION is making great strides despite the 'ENORMOUS SUPPORT' it is receiving from Germany.†220

Page me42.165

As regards the 'Louis Bonaparte',†c I could see from your DROPPING OF THE SUBJECT that the matter has come to nothing.†79 I am RATHER glad of this, as I shall later be having it re-printed in the essay-collection all the same.

Page me42.165

What is old Hatzfeldt doing? And the fracas over the will?†221

Page me42.165

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page Break me42.166

Page me42.166

What are Messrs E. Bauer, Bucher et Co. up to?

Page me42.166

Edgar†a will probably be staying here a while longer yet.†b

Page me42.166

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

87 MARX TO ELEANOR MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.166
[London,] 3 July 1865
Maiden Tower

Dear Miss Lilliput!

You must excuse the 'belated' character of my answer. I belong to that sort of people who always look twice at things before they decide one way or the other. Thus I was rather startled on receiving an invitation on the part of a female minx, quite unknown to me. However, having ascertained your respectability, and the high tone of your transactions with your tradespeople, I shall feel happy to seize this rather strange opportunity of getting at your eatables and drinkables. But, pray, don't neglect the latter, as spinsters usually have bad taste of doing. Suffering somewhat under an attack of rheumatism, I hope you keep your reception room clear of anything like draught. As to the ventilation required, I shall provide for it myself. Being somewhat deaf in the right ear, please put a dull fellow, of whom, I dare say, your company will not be in want, at my right side. For the left, I hope you will reserve your female beauty; I mean the best-looking female amongst your guests.
Page me42.166

I am somewhat given to tobacco-chewing, so have the stuff ready. Having from former intercourse with Yankees taken to the habitude of spitting, I hope spittoons will not be missing. Being rather easy in my manners, and disgusted at this hot and close English atmosphere, you must prepare for seeing me in a dress rather adonistic. I hope your female guests are somewhat in the same line.

Page Break me42.167
Page me42.167

Adieu, my dear unknown little minx.

Yours for ever
Doctor Crankey

Page me42.167

No British wines, I hope!

Page me42.167

First published, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, 1925 and in the language of the original, English, in The Socialist Review (London), No. 44, September, 1929

Reproduced from the original

88
ENGELS TO MARX†29
IN LONDON
Page me42.167
[Manchester,] 15 July 1865

Dear Moor,

Liebknecht has been expelled from Prussia; has he written to you since and given you his address? The poor devil will probably need money, and a few pounds will be more valuable to him at this moment than otherwise. But where should they be sent to?
Page me42.167

MR Johnson's policy is less and less to my liking, too. NIGGER†a-hatred is coming out more and more violently, and he is relinquishing all his power vis-á-vis the old lords in the South. If this should continue, all the old secessionist scoundrels will be in Congress in Washington in 6 months time. Without COLOURED SUFFRAGE nothing can be done, and Johnson is leaving it up to the defeated, the ex-slaveowners, to decide on that. It is absurd. Nevertheless, one must still reckon on things turning out differently from what these barons imagined. After all, the majority of them have been completely ruined and will be glad to sell land to immigrants and speculators from the North. The latter will arrive soon enough and make a good number of changes. I think the MEAN WHITES will gradually die out. Nothing more will become of this RACE; those who are left after 2 generations will merge with the immigrants to make a completely different RACE.

Page Break me42.168
The NIGGERS will probably turn into small SQUATTERS as in Jamaica. Thus ultimately the oligarchy will go to pot after all, but the process could be accomplished immediately at one fell swoop, whereas it is now being drawn out.
Page me42.168

I don't think that you would win many laurels by a disputation with MR Weston, and it would certainly not make a good début in English economic literature.†a Otherwise, I cannot see it would do much harm to anticipate a few odd points from your book†b — N.B. if the latter is really almost finished now — how does it stand? The ultimate and final date for completion was 1 September, and the price, you remember, is 12 bottles of wine.
Page me42.168

In the elections here Jones has been working BODY AND SOUL for Heywood, but as a TEETOTALLER and PERMISSIVE BILLS man†222 he won't pull much with the workers. Moore has been working hard, too. The Manchester SNOBS will be gladdened by James, the fellow wants to become a JUDGE and nothing more. The election is costing him a pretty penny, just for the champagne his committee and cronies have swigged. TALK ABOUT BRIBERY, CORRUPTION AND TREATING, fellows like that fat Knowles came in droves to the Queen's Hotel, where the headquarters was, gorged their fill and swigged rivers of champagne, and everything was settled with a slip of paper on which a committee-member wrote: valid for 2 LUNCHEONS and 3 BOTTLES CHAMPAIGN. In Lancaster, the 3 candidates together disbursed £20,000, and there was free booze for a whole week in every pub. I was here in the Queen's Hotel at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the elegant SMOKING ROOM looked like the old den in Windmill Street,†223 and customers were served by CELLAR BOYS in white shirt-sleeves and aprons, instead of BARMAIDS in satin dresses. The whole company was drunk, and at half past six the landlord had to have the hotel cleared by a police patrol. My task consisted in getting James' committee people to tipple until they were incapable of doing their job, and in several cases I was successful beyond expectation.

Page me42.168

I've had a very hard time at the office, Charles†c was away, Franz Ermen ditto, and a colossal amount of work to boot. Things are better now. I am now on Grimm's Fairy Tales, German heroic epic, ancient Frisian law, etc. As soon as I have got through that somewhat, I'll have a serious go at Old Norse. The poetry in it is a tough nut because of its deliberate obscurity and all the many names in the mythology, and I can see it's NO USE doing this just as a side line; I need to spend 4 weeks all at once on it and nothing else, when I have little to do.

Page Break me42.169
Page me42.169

Many regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.169

Moore has been asking me about the SHARES for The Bee-Hive; how do things stand? AND HOW DID YOU GET ON WITH POTTER?†205

Page me42.169
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

89
ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON
Page me42.169
[Manchester,] 25 July 1865

Dear Moor,

How do you like our Prussian Mirabeaus in — the Zoological Gardens? Harkort and Co. as wild animals, Bismarck himself could not have thought that up.†224

Page me42.169

By the by, it seems certain to me that Mr Bismarck decidedly wants to have a collision. For me the most convincing evidence of this is the behaviour of Schweitzer's shit-rag,†a which is being confiscated every day now. The workers are now suddenly expected to take the part of the Deputies, after being called on for 6 months not to get excited; there are to be mass meetings, etc., and every effort is to be put into agitating against the government. Further corroboration is provided by the unanimous refrain from the reactionary press, which is comparing the banquet with the February banquets in Paris,†225 and finally the government's whole proceeding, the pointless provocations, etc. Meanwhile, it was to be expected that Bismarck would come a cropper. Wasn't cleverly enough organised anyway.

Page Break me42.170
Page me42.170

On the other hand, Schweitzer-Becker seem to want to take the opportunity to make a decent EXIT. The Social-Demokrat and the Association†a are to be suppressed so that those gentlemen can be whitewashed. I've stopped reading that rag as of 1st inst., incidentally. Bismarck seems to have had his fill of paying for it, and so have I. So, if anything should happen, I shall have to rely on you for information.

Page me42.170

32° Réaumur in the shade in Germany! They say people are still only living in the cellars. It's as sultry as the tropics here, too.

Page me42.170

Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.170
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

90
MARX TO LÉON FONTAINE†226
IN BRUSSELS

Page me42.170
[Draft]
[London,] 25 July 1865

Dear Citizen,

Some considerable time ago I sent a letter to you by an Englishman, who was to visit Germany and travel through Brussels. Since then I have had no news, either from you or from my Englishman. I shall not refer back to my reply to your letter, but will deal solely with current matters.

Page me42.170

Mr Le Lubez has rejoined the Central Council as delegate from an English branch,†b and the Italian society in London†20 has reinstated Mr Wolff as its representative on the Council.†c

Page me42.170

Mr Charles Limousin, one of our correspondents in Paris and editor of the Tribune ouvriére..., following the seizure of the Tribune ouvriére, and being unable to find another printer in Paris, went to Brussels in an attempt to bring out the paper there. Whilst there, he investigated the state of our affairs. He was told that, after it had unanimously approved your proposal that it should amalgamate with our Association, the Société Fédérative had withdrawn:

Page Break me42.171

Page me42.171

1. because it insisted on the right to choose its own correspondents and not have them imposed on it by the Central Council;

Page me42.171

2. because it refused to pay for the membership cards, although it remitted 1f. 50 just as before.

Page me42.171

According to Mr Limousin's letter, you had then approached the Société typographique, but with the same result owing to the same difficulties.

Page me42.171

With regard to the election of correspondents, the Central Council has acknowledged the right of affiliated societies to choose their own representatives. It has only retained the power to confirm them. Things were different in Brussels because no society had yet been constituted there. Would it not be possible to reach a compromise, whereby the societies would accept you as their correspondent, but they would, for their part, choose an administrative committee, as was done in Paris and Geneva?

Page me42.171

With regard to the dues, the societies will readily realise that the Central Council would be prevented from any general action if all the affiliated societies claimed the right not to pay dues. It appears that the objection is to paying dues twice. Would it not be possible to find an amicable solution to these matters? The Central Council will make any concession compatible with its responsibilities.

Page me42.171

For my part, I am convinced that your actions were dictated solely by your zeal for the common cause, and I am appealing to this same zeal in asking you to work for reconciliation and restoration of relations. You would oblige me greatly by replying immediately, firstly because I have to give the Central Council a report on this affair, and secondly because a preliminary conference of members of the various administrative committees will be taking place in London on 25 September.†217
Page me42.171
The Central Council is persuaded that the congress cannot take place this year, but the preliminary conference in London will make preparations for it.†a

With fraternal greetings
Ch. Marx

Page me42.171
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to Marx's Notebook

Translated from the French

Page Break me42.172

91
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER†a
Page me42.172
[London,] 31 July 1865

Dear Engels,
As you may have suspected, the reasons for my prolonged silence are not the most pleasant.
Page me42.172
For two months I have been living solely on the pawnshop, which means that a queue of creditors has been hammering on my door, becoming more and more unendurable every day. This FACT won't come as any surprise to you when you consider: 1. that I have been unable to earn a FARTHING the whole time and 2. that merely paying off the debts and furnishing the house cost me something like £500. I have kept accounts (AS TO THIS ITEM) PENCE for PENCE, as I myself found it unbelievable how the money disappeared. To top that, I have been sent every conceivable, antediluvian IOU from Germany where God knows what rumours had been circulated.
Page me42.172
To begin with, I wanted to come up to you to discuss the matter with you in person. But, at the present moment, any time lost cannot be made up as it is not good to interrupt my work. Last Saturday I told the Sub-Committee of the 'INTERNATIONAL'†21 that I was going away, so as at least to have a fortnight for once completely free of disturbance for PUSHING ON with my work.

Page me42.172

I assure you that I would rather have had my thumb cut off than write this letter to you. It is truly soul-destroying to be dependent for half one's life. The only thought that sustains me in all this is that the two of us form a partnership together, in which I spend my time on the theoretical and party side of the BUSINESS. It is true my house is beyond my means, and we have, moreover, lived better this year than was the case before. But it is the only way for the children to establish themselves socially with a view to securing their future, quite apart from everything they have suffered and for which they have at least been compensated for a brief while. I believe you yourself will be of the opinion that, even from a merely commercial point of view, to run a purely proletarian household would not be appropriate in the circumstances, although that would be quite all right, if my wife and I were by ourselves or if the girls were boys.

Page Break me42.173
Page me42.173

Now, regarding my work, I will tell you the plain truth about it. There are 3 more chapters to be written to complete the theoretical part (the first 3 books). Then there is still the 4th book, the historical-literary one,†227 to be written, which will, comparatively speaking, be the easiest part for me, since all the problems have been resolved in the first 3 books, so that this last one is more by way of repetition in historical form. But I cannot bring myself to send anything off until I have the whole thing in front of me. WHATEVER SHORTCOMINGS THEY MAY HAVE, the advantage of my writings is that they are an artistic whole, and this can only be achieved through my practice of never having things printed until I have them in front of me in their entirety. This is impossible with Jacob Grimm's method which is in general better with writings that have no dialectical structure.†228
Page me42.173

The English version will be dealt with differently on the other hand. Fox has no doubt that he can find me a publisher as soon as I get the first sheets of print back. I would then arrange with Meissner that, in addition to the proofs for correcting, he would also send me the clean proof of each sheet, so that the German could be corrected at the same time as it is being translated into English. Regarding the latter, I shall of course need your assistance. I am expecting my real earnings from this work to come from the English edition.†229
Page me42.173

As far as the 'INTERNATIONAL' is concerned, the position is as follows:

I made over the £5 to Cremer to buy shares in The Bee-Hive. But since Cremer, Odger, etc., were going up to Manchester at that time, nothing came of it, and Potter HAD THE BETTER OF IT.†205 They decided to postpone the matter until the next meeting of shareholders (actually, the annual one). But I don't think that anything will come of it. Firstly, because the squabble between Odger and Potter has become a public scandal. Secondly, because The Miner and Workman's Advocate has offered its columns to us.†230 (Apropos. At a recent meeting with the Miner we undertook to let it have contributions gratis. So, if you have time to write a little article on FOREIGN POLITICS (Prussian, etc.), now and then, send it to me to be passed on to the paper.)

Page me42.173

According to our Rules a public congress ought to be held in Brussels this year. The Parisians, Swiss and some of the people here, too, are going for it hammer and tongs. In the present circumstances — especially since I have so little time to write the necessary documents for the CENTRAL COUNCIL as well — I can only foresee a disgrace. Despite considerable opposition from the other side, I have succeeded in turning the public congress in Brussels into A PRIVATE PREALABLE CONFERENCE in London (25 September) which only DELEGATES OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEES will attend and at which the future congress is to be prepared. Official reasons given for postponing the congress were:

Page Break me42.174
Page me42.174

1. The need for PREALABLE UNDERSTANDING between the EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES.
Page me42.174

2. The obstacles to the Association's propaganda arising from the STRIKES IN FRANCE, the elections, REFORM MOVEMENT and WORKINGMEN'S EXHIBITIONS IN ENGLAND.†231
Page me42.174

3. The ALIEN BILL RECENTLY PRESSED in Belgium†232 which rules out Brussels as a RENDEZVOUS for an INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S CONGRESS.†217
Page me42.174

I do not see the Social-Demokrat any more, as the Workers' Society†a has also stopped it.†200 Nor am I taking the Nordstern any more, but I do see it occasionally at the Society. It said the Rhineland branches had on the main question deserted Bernhard.†b
Page me42.174

Edgar†c is a very expensive guest for us, especially in the present circumstances, and he does not seem in the least inclined TO DECAMP.
Page me42.174

In consequence of the hot weather and related biliousness, I have again been vomitting nearly every day for the past 3 months, as I did previously in Brussels.
Page me42.174

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.174
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

92
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.174
London, 5 August 1865

Dear Engels,
MY BEST THANKS FOR THE £50 AND the speed with which the help came.
Page me42.174
I was greatly amused by the part of your letter†131 which deals with the 'work of art' TO BE.†d But you misunderstood me. The only

Page Break me42.175
POINT IN QUESTION is whether to do a fair copy of part of the manuscript and send it to the publisher,†a or finish writing the whole thing first? I have decided in favour of the latter for many reasons. No time is lost by it, AS FAR as the work itself is concerned, although some time is lost in printing; however, on the other hand, once begun, that cannot then be interrupted in any way either. Furthermore, in view of the level of the thermometer, progress with it has been as fast as anyone could have managed, even having no artistic considerations at all. BESIDES, as I have a MAXIMUM LIMIT of 60 printed sheets, it is absolutely essential for me to have the whole thing in front of me, to know how much has to be condensed and crossed out, so that the individual sections shall be evenly balanced and in proportion within the prescribed limits.†233 In any case, you can be sure that I shall spare no effort to complete as soon as possible, as the thing is a nightmarish burden to me. Not only does it prevent me from doing anything else, but it is also DAMNEDLY irksome to have the public kept entertained with the expectation of laurels to come (not by me, to be sure, but by Liebknecht and others). And furthermore, I know that time will not stand still for ever just as it is now.
Page me42.175
Eichhoff has written a few lines to me, but couldn't call on me owing to pressure of business. In his letter he said Dronke would visit (he was here yesterday) but in such a confused way there was no making sense of the scriptum.†b That 'treatise' is sticking to POOR Eichhoff like his own skin, and no operation will detach it from him.
Page me42.175
What do you make of Siebel's productions as a patriotic-liberal poet? The thing appears to have been written during extremely depressing hangover. It is utter nonsense and surpasses EVERYTHING our friend has previously produced.
Page me42.175
The Social-Demokrat's attempt to commit itself in support of the bourgeoisie is a sign of complete and utter fiasco, although I share your view that the first calls in Berlin did not occur without some ministerial prompting.†c However, the other Lassallean faction, which executed a volte face†d against the Social-Demokrat as a result of our statement,†e are also quite a pitiful rabble. These fellows are not merely at loggerheads with B. Becker and Co. as to whose faith in Lassalle is the true one, but several of their branches have published that phrase inspired by OLD Hatzfeldt and coined specifically with us in mind, that anyone who tried to overturn or change even one syllable of the truths as revealed by Lassalle, was declared a traitor to the 'people'.†216

Page Break me42.176
Page me42.176

It is ages since I last answered Liebknecht, despite various notes he sent me; however I am going to do so now. He is in Hanover for the time being now, but his wife†a is still in Berlin. The reason why I did not write was partly that I was very busy, and also I had enough on my hands with my own TROUBLES. On the other hand, I was furious with him for the nonsense which he had been retailing about me at the Berlin Lassalle-Association and which is there for all to read in the scrap of a pamphlet about B. Becker's expulsion from that association which the old sow got someone called Schilling to publish (Farthing would have been a more appropriate name).†234 With his usual talent for being too lazy to acquaint himself with the facts, he drivels the greatest nonsense about the Bangya-manuscript†169 and my intercession for Becker quoad†b Vienna Botschafter,†c etc. And, moreover, the whole way in which he plays the part of my 'PATRON' and 'apologises' for me to the louts of Berlin for them not knowing my works; and generally behaves as though so far I had done nothing in affairs of action. So, I allowed some time to elapse, so as not to say anything rude to him and to pacify myself with the thought that Liebknecht will be Liebknecht and that his intentions are 'good'. The 30,000 members of the old Berlin Journeymen's Association, and ditto the Association of Printers there organised a kind of ovation for him when he was expelled. With his usual optimism, Wilhelmchen sees 'the proletariat of Berlin at my (that is, his) and our (yours and mine) feet'.†235 At the same time, he has not managed even to form a single BRANCH of 6 members for the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION in Germany, although the sanguine fellow must surely realise that I cannot serve up his DELUSIONS to the English as true coin. He also kept on writing to me about my 'book'.†d But however often I sent him 'books' (first the whole remainder of 'Vogt,'†e then the whole remainder of the 'Communist Trials'†f) at his most sanguine request, from the moment he received them, I never heard a dying word more about them.
Page me42.176

Mr Groote, Party of Progress†99 deputy for Düsseldorf, has written to him saying that what he did in Berlin has had more effect than the actions of 100 Party of Progress deputies.

Page Break me42.177
Page me42.177

Edgar†a has just recently caught a cold which has gone to his nose, which, as a result of this ACCIDENT, looks positively Bardolphian.†b
Page me42.177

During the warm weather I have been regularly working day and night by the open window. Outcome: an attack of rheumatism in my right arm, particularly the shoulder blade, which is very painful and makes writing, especially any lifting-movement, difficult. I instinctively cry out if I unintentionally raise my arm in bed at night, which tells you how nasty the thing is. Does Gumpert know of any kind of NOSTRUM for it?
Page me42.177
You probably know that at the Gymnastic Festival in Paris, the worthy Gottfried Kinkel refused the laurel crown he was offered by a Jew who was presiding, with the words: 'I want no crown, not even a crown of laurel', but at once added in fairly unvarnished words that he had by no means yet given up his claims to the Presidency of the German Republic, the 'office' that was his due. The Nordstern ridiculed him rather effectively as much for this bit of melodrama, and for his whole SPEECH, which was disgusting.†c The Festival opened with a toast to Badinguet.†d
Page me42.177
Where is Strohn?
Page me42.177
As soon as you have time and inclination, do not forget to send me something 'continental' for the Miner.†e
Page me42.177
Kindest regards to you from the whole family, and from me to MRS Lizzy.†f

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.177
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.178

93
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON
Page me42.178
Manchester, 7 August 1865

Dear Moor,
I have got a remedy for your rheumatism that Gumpert once used to cure me with within 24 hours, and from a much more severe attack, too. Get yourself 2 big bags of flannel made, big enough to cover the affected part completely and a bit over; have these bags filled with BRAN and heated each in turn in the oven, just as hot as you can bear it; you put each in turn on the place, changing them as often as ever you can. All the while keep yourself warm and quiet in bed, and you will soon feel very considerable relief, but you mustn't discontinue the treatment on that account until all the pain has gone (say 24-36 hours).

Page me42.178
Eichhoff has just called; he has got himself made DIRECTOR of a LIMITED COMPANY in London; it is crystal clear to me from the whole affair that the idea is for him to be duped of a substantial sum again, but there's absolutely no helping the fellow, with his mania for seeing everything couleur de rose.†a He has now gone so far as believing that the silk-trade here in England absolutely could not go on without him.
Page me42.178
I'm so pleased the book†b is making rapid progress, for I had really begun to suspect from one or two phrases in your last letter that you had again reached an unexpected turning-point which might prolong everything indefinitely. The day that manuscript is sent off, I shall drink myself to kingdom come, that is, unless you come up here the next day so that we can seal it together.
Page me42.178
Many thanks for the Free Presses.
Page me42.178
Our worthy Liebknecht simply cannot help putting his foot in it, or writing off to people just whenever the mood takes him. We shall always be annoyed with him for 10 months out of 12, as soon as he is by himself and has to act on his own initiative. In the meantime que veux-tu?†c Liebknecht does as Liebknecht is, and all the exasperation and all the grumbling will not help matters. And after all, when all's said and done, at the moment he is the only reliable link we have in Germany.

Page Break me42.179
Page me42.179
A WORKINGMEN'S CONGRESS in Brussels would certainly be the greatest stupidity in present circumstances.†217 Just remember our own experiences in that little country.†236 That sort of thing can only be done in England, the FRENCHMEN ought to know that. It would just be throwing away money and time and trouble to attempt anything of that kind in Belgium.
Page me42.179
Have you got Schilling's pamphlet on B. Becker?†a You might let me have it for a couple of days.
Page me42.179
I don't know whether Strohn is in Hamburg or Bradford, I haven't heard anything from him for quite a long time now.
Page me42.179
The Rhineland philistines are supposed to be frightfully angry with Bismarck; it is splendid that those jackasses are having their 'historical development on a legal basis' so nicely demonstrated. Have you seen Bismarck's latest dodge to raise money? The Cologne-Minden Railway had granted the state the right to buy up its shares at par in return for an interest-guarantee from the state (100-taler shares are now standing at over 200 talers); he has bartered away this right to the Railway for 13 million talers, and the Kölner Zeitung calculates that in this way he got hold of 30 million talers, including sale of the shares already owned by the state, etc. The question is, will the Cologne-Minden Railway pay up without the Chamber's approval for the deal. If it does so, Bismarck will again have a clear road for years ahead, and the philistines will have been atrociously shitted upon. We shall soon see.†237

Page me42.179
Lizzy†b says Edgar†c can't have been wearing his Texan hat, or he couldn't possibly have caught a cold in the nose.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.179
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.180

94
MARX TO ENGELS†238
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.180
[London,] 9 August 1865

DEAR FRED,
Letter from Mr Siebold enclosed.†239 You need not send it back. Secondly, I am sending you the Hatzfeldt rubbish.†a Do not send it back, but store it. Don't show it to anyone either. Fortunately, this rubbish has left no trace in the German press. The only thing relating to it which appeared publicly in the press was a statement by Metzner (ex-authorised representative of the Berlin branch†b) and Vogt†c (STILL its treasurer), countersigned W. Liebknecht, in which they stated:
Page me42.180
1. that Schilling had falsified the report, suppressed some resolutions and made others their direct opposite;
Page me42.180
2. that that old girl Hatzfeldt could have spared her comments SINCE the Association had forbidden her to interfere in any way.
Page me42.180
That appeared in Reform†d and Volks-Zeitung.†234
Page me42.180
I have been medicating myself for a couple of days now and am feeling utterly rotten, quite incapable of working. But Allen tells me that I shall be up and about again in a few days. It's the bilious trouble and a consequence of the 'bitter' labour of thinking in the HOT WEATHER. Officially I'm now away from home on account of the 'INTERNATIONAL'.

Page me42.180

Edgar†e is vegetating. In his hermit-like existence he has become accustomed to the narrowest kind of egotism, pondering the needs of his stomach from morn till night. But as he is a good-natured sort, his egotism is that of a KIND-NATURED CAT or a friendly dog. To the devil with hermit-life. He has even lost all interest in women, and his sex-urge has gone to his belly, too. At the same time, he is constantly anxious about his precious health, that same lad who was, on the other hand, used to feeling 'safe' amongst snakes, tigers, wolves, and leopards.
Page me42.180

He now wishes he was back in Texas again. But there is no escape from the confrontation with his cher frére.†f

Page Break me42.181
Page me42.181

You can tell what his back-to-nature thinking is like from the fact that his present ideal is to set up a STORE — a cigar or wine STORE — obviously secretly hoping that this will be the surest way to apply oneself to the cigars and wine.
Page me42.181

He likes to pretend to be an OLD GENTLEMAN who has settled his accounts with life, has nothing more to do and is only living 'for his health's sake'.
Page me42.181

Besides, he is preoccupied with his attire as well, and the 'OLD GENTLEMEN' in Rotten Row†240 make him very sad because he cannot keep up with them. Queer cove! Laura, who HAS a small CARBUNCLE on her left cheek JUST NOW, SAYS THAT 'HER MOTHER'S BROTHER IS AN EXCEEDINGLY BRIGHT FELLAH!' Tussy†a 'THAT SHE LIKES HIM, BECAUSE HE IS SO FUNNY' and little Jenny that Lina Schöler and he can congratulate each other 'TO HAVE SAFELY GOT RID OF EACH OTHER'. WELL, THEY ARE A BAD LOT. The girls have also SEVERELY CROSS-EXAMINED me AS TO THE 'MRS Burns'.
Page me42.181

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.181
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

95
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.181
Manchester, 16 August 1865

Dear Moor,

That unctuous trash from the Hatzfeldt woman†b really is unctuous trash with all that is in it about Lassalle the only saviour, Liebknecht, etc. Dear old LIBRARY†c has really surpassed himself this time in his customary spinelessness, lack of imagination and forgetfulness, that is, unless the whole report is a fabrication. The devil take such an advocatus.

Page Break me42.182
Page me42.182

Ditto our sparkling-wine enthusiast Siebold. With what self-assured naivety the fellow tried to 'reconcile' you to Blind!†239 And then those interesting 'old Swedes' whom nobody has ever heard of and whom we're supposed to write to, to make 'contact'. Quite á la Harro Harring. I'm increasingly coming round to think that from the most southerly latitude of North Friesland onwards everything beyond urban bourgeois and peasant politics is pure Harro Harring.†a But no doubt you will be having that dolt on your back every year.
Page me42.182

Next week (about Friday 25th inst.) Moore and I are going to Germany and Switzerland for a fortnight, and maybe we shall also 'cast a casual glance' over Italy.†241 If I can so arrange it, I shall call in briefly at Modena Villas†b on my way back.
Page me42.182

The 28th of this month, i.e. Monday week, is the date of the General Meeting of the Cologne-Minden shareholders, which will decide Prussia's politics for the next few years. I can't imagine that those fellows will be such jackasses as to pay out 13 mill. talers in cash to Bismarck without having the approval of the Chambers.†237 But your liberal Rhineland burgher is capable of a good many tricks the moment he has a chance of swindling the state, and thinks that in his capacity as Deputy he can obtain indemnity for himself afterwards. But if the deal were to fall through, or if it were made conditional on authorisation by the Chambers, that would be more or less the end for Monsieur Bismarck; even that adventurer would not survive such a defeat in financialibus†c and after such a desperate attempt. But the fact that he is momentarily coming to terms with Austria again, shows that intellectually and morally he is au bout de son latin.†d He knows only too well that he can't start a war without being brought down immediately, so he goes on lashing out with big talk, chalking up little gains and turning Germany into the laughing stock of the world. But the philistine is almost as much impressed by him as by Boustrapa.†76 The philistine now no longer requires even ephemeral victories from his idols, but only that they can brag. This is how Classen-Kappelmann became the idol of Cologne as well, because he took to his heels at the crucial moment.†224

Page Break me42.183

Page me42.183

It was also a nice thought of Siebold's to put in a good word for C.V. Rimestad in Copenhagen, who is one of the Dagbladet people! The so-called Workers' Association is a propaganda organisation of the Scandinavian Eider-Danes and the Hall ministry.†242

Page me42.183

What will Father Urquhart be saying next month about the legal advisers to the Prussian throne? What splendid lads they are!

Page me42.183

Kindest regards to the LADIES and Edgar.†a

Your
F.E.

Page me42.183

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

96

MARX TO ENGELS†243

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.183

[London,] 19 August 1865

DEAR FRED,

Since you are setting off on your travels,†241 I must tell you that I have to pay a BILL for £10 to BUTCHER on 28 August, and the LANDLORD is also becoming very TROUBLESOME. BY THE BY, the English state appears HARDPRESSED FOR MONEY. At all events, the TAXGATHERERS were more pressing this MONTH than ever before and have unexpectedly 'relieved' me.

Page me42.183

I am still SICK, although Allen is getting rid of the LIVER troubles. But now I have caught a kind of INFLUENZA, which, he says, will last 5-6 days and which really is the biggest nuisance of all, AS FAR AS MENTAL ACTIVITY IS CONCERNED. I hope that with that I shall have settled MY DEBT TO NATURE.

Page me42.183

Löhrchen†b is not really very well either. For the past year she has been getting much thinner than she ought to be. But she is a strange child and only today agreed to go to the Dr with my wife.

Page Break me42.184

I HOPE IT IS NOTHING SERIOUS. Little Jenny and Tussy†a are very well. (Ditto Edgar's†b STATE OF HEALTH much improved.) My wife had bitten out the 2 front teeth in the middle of her lower jaw, and yesterday had 4 teeth fitted by way of replacement. These are more or less the only 'events' that have occurred here.
Page me42.184

Being unwell, I am unable to write much, and then only BY FITS AND STARTS. In between, I am just dabbling in irrelevancies, although with the INFLUENZA I cannot even read properly. I 'took the opportunity' to 'take up' a little astronomy again, amongst other things. And one thing I would like to mention that was new to me at least, but perhaps you have known about it for some time. You know Laplace's theory of the formation of the CELESTIAL SYSTEMS and how he explains the rotation of the various BODIES about their own axis, etc. Proceeding from there, a YANKEE, Kirkwood, has discovered a kind of law concerning the differences in the rotation of the planets, which had previously appeared quite abnormal. The law is as follows:

'The square of the number of times that each planet rotates during one revolution in its orbit, is proportioned to the cube of the breadth of a diameter of its sphere of attraction.'

Page me42.184

This means that between two planets there must be a point at which their power of attraction is equally strong; so that a body at this point would remain stationary between them. On the other hand, the body would fall towards one planet or another on either side of that point. This point thus forms the LIMIT of the SPHERE OF ATTRACTION of the planet. This SPHERE OF ATTRACTION is, in turn, the measure of the breadth of the GAZEOUS RING from which, according to Laplace, the planet was formed when it first became separated from the GENERAL GAZEOUS MASS. Kirkwood concluded from this that, if Laplace's hypothesis is correct, a specific relationship must exist between the VELOCITY OF THE PLANET'S ROTATION and the BREADTH OF THE RING from which it was formed or its SPHERE OF ATTRACTION. And he has expressed this in the above law, and proved it by analytical calculations.
Page me42.184

Old Hegel made some very good jokes about the 'sudden reversal' of centripetal to centrifugal force, right at the moment when one has attained 'preponderance' over the other; e.g., centripetal force is greatest near the sun; therefore, says Hegel, centrifugal force is greatest, since it overcomes this maximum of centripetal force and vice versa. Moreover, the forces are in equilibrium when half way between the apsides.†244 Therefore they can never depart from this equilibrium, etc. Incidentally, taken as a whole, Hegel's polemic amounts to saying that Newton's 'proofs' added nothing to Kepler, who already possessed the 'concept' of movement, which I think is fairly generally accepted now.†a

Page Break me42.185
Page me42.185

You know that the President of the BANK OF SWITZERLAND is now Mr Karl Vogt, who betrayed his friend Fazy as soon as the latter left Geneva,†212 and cheated together with Reinach (the real ACTING DIRECTOR). I asked Freiligrath how Mr Vogt, who is otherwise of ill repute as a FINANCIER in Switzerland, had come by this honourable post. Answer: the Swiss have hardly a share left in the 'BANK OF SWITZERLAND'. The Jews in Berlin and Frankfurt a. M. take the decisions. And they support Vogt. Meanwhile, Reinach has been teasing our POOR Freiligrath so much that the latter wrote him the right-thinking rejoinder that even the Prussian police never persecuted him quite so much. They say Fazy swindled the bank out of 1 1/2 mill. frs.

Page me42.185

A, few weeks ago, Professor Beesly had an article about Catiline in The Fortnightly Review, vindicating the latter as a man of revolution.†b Much of it is uncritical (as one would expect from an Englishman, e.g. wrong information on Caesar's position at that time), but his intense rage at the oligarchy and 'respectable people' is very nice. Likewise his sallies against the professional English 'DULL littérateur'. Mr Harrison had an article in the same Review expounding why 'political economy' can adduce 'nothing' in refutation of communism.†c It seems to me that now there is more MOVEMENT amongst English thinkers than amongst the Germans. The latter are sufficiently preoccupied with celebrating Classen-Kappelmann.†224
Page me42.185

Regards to MRS Lizzy.†d The children are depending on you not to pass through London without stopping on your way home.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.185

You cannot have the remotest conception of the utter nonsense contained in the PARLIAMENTARY REPORTS of 1857 and 1858 on banking, etc., which I recently had to refer back to.†e As in the monetary system, capital = gold. In the midst, shame-faced recollections of A. Smith and excruciating attempts to reconcile the chaos of the MONEY MARKET with his 'enlightened' ideas. MacCulloch, who has at last now gone the way of all flesh, distinguishes himself most of all. The fellow was obviously in receipt of a substantial douceur†a from Lord Overstone, who is consequently 'facile maximus argentariorum'†b and has to be cleared, come what may. I shall have to reserve my critique of this whole unsavoury stew for a later paper.†245

Page Break me42.186

Page me42.186
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

97
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.186
Manchester, 21 August 1865

Dear Moor,

Encl. £20, first half, B/G 56794, Manchester, 9 January 1864, second to follow as soon as you acknowledge receipt. I cannot send more until I know how the final accounts work out, and I shall not know that until my return or even later.

Page me42.186

That business of Kirkwood's law was new to me, as it was to Moore. But is it really proven, or is it not perhaps just a hypothesis?†c Surely it ought to be possible to verify a thing like that.

Page me42.186

I hope you are all restored to health now. That trouble with Laura is probably of no more consequence than with little Jenny that time, but it really is absurd of you to allow yourself to continue in such a way. In such circumstances, you should put your foot down as master of the house. I expect you have shaken off your INFLUENZA now, with the warm weather, that kind of thing really takes it out of you, but at least it is easily cured now.

Page Break me42.187

Page me42.187

The old women are just coming to sweep out the office and drive me from my post; so I must quickly finish.

Page me42.187

Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.187

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

98
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.187
[London,] 22 August 1865

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR THE £20, FIRST HALF of which received. I most certainly would not BOTHER you, but the end of the quarter, whose bills have been put off, is a very difficult time.

Page me42.187

Regarding Kirkwood's law, there is no doubt that it explains the difference in the ROTATORY MOVEMENTS, e.g., between those of Jupiter and those of Venus, which hitherto appeared entirely fortuitous.†a But how he finds out and proves the law itself, I do not know, but on my next visit to the British Museum I will try to get to the bottom of the original work and will tell you more about it then. The only 'problem' attached to the matter, as far as I can see, consists in mathematically determining the SPHERE OF ATTRACTION of each planet. The only hypothetical thing about it is probably the assumption of Laplace's theory as a premise.

Page me42.187

My INFLUENZA has invaded my nose to such an extent that the TEXAN BOY'S†b 'nozzle' has reproduced itself in me, accompanied by a frightful cold and a muzziness in the head such as must have filled the whole of Laplace's universe of incandescent gas.

Page me42.187

The fellows and friends of the 'INTERNATIONAL' have now discovered after all that I am not away, and I have therefore received a SUMMONS TO ATTEND a meeting of the SUBCOMMITTEE today. The 4 weeks of my disappearance have been totally SPOILT for me by the DOCTOR'S prescriptions.

Page Break me42.188

Page me42.188

Amongst the books from Lupus' legacy I have in my possession there is a copy of Egli's Neue Handelsgeographie. This Swiss says in the preface that into the 'biographies of commercial geography' he has now and again 'woven a view from life, a view in contemplation of which the soul may lose itself for a moment, in comfortable repose ... genre miniatures woven in ... a piece of life shall here unfold before our eyes. Life evolves from life alone'.

Page me42.188

The following shows you what this naive Swiss means by 'views from life':

'Markgräfler wine grows on the sunny hills of Mühlheim and Badenweiler. It was not for nothing that our dearly beloved Hebel sang:

“At t'Mill by t'Post
Tallyho, mine host!
Drink up lads: a grand wine flows,
Smooth as olive oil it goes!
At t'Mill by t'Post.”'†a

Page me42.188
To prove 'that I have not taken the easy path', this same naive Swiss refers to the list of works he has used. This list numbers precisely 20 items, where along with naive 'children's literature' as the Buch der Erfindungen, etc., there are two works by the self-same Mr Egli.†b
Page me42.188
Kindest regards from the WHOLE FAMILY.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.188
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.189

99
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me42.189
London, 11 September 1865

Dear Liebknecht,
As soon as I know whether you are still in Hanover, I shall report to you the reasons for the interruption in correspondence, and indeed write at greater length.
Page me42.189
On 25 September, a (PRIVATE) conference between the COUNCIL of the International here and the DELEGATES of the ADMINISTRATIONS in Switzerland, France, and Belgium will take place here. Can you not send yourself over here as DELEGATE from Germany?†246
Page me42.189
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.189
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

100
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me42.189
[London,] 20 September 1865

Dear Miller,†a

I received yours yesterday afternoon, too late to post a letter here. Illness had much to do with my protracted silence. There were other reasons which I think useless now to dwell upon. Much business pressing upon my time just now, I can only return these few lines.

Page Break me42.190
Page me42.190

A Report†247 (English, of course) on your part is very important. It must be here on Monday next (25 September). It cannot arrive timely unless you send me the letter directly by the Leipzig post.
Page me42.190

The Swiss have chosen two delegates, Mons Dupleix, a Frenchman, and Mr Philipp Becker, a German.
Page me42.190

Old Hatzfeldt dwells at Paris, where the old hag is intriguing with the 'horn-bearing' father of 'Socialism', Moses,†a her most cringing slave. It was at her instigation, that he inserted his 'warning' in the Nordstern and his slander into the Social-Demokrat.†248 She is now concocting with him the 'Apotheosis' of her own belated 'Oedipus'.†b The London correspondent of the Social-Demokrat seems to be cracked Weber.†c All these things have been reported to me from Paris. As to myself, I carefully abstain from taking any notice whatever of what is going on in the Berlin and Hamburg 'organs' of the movement.†d This so-called movement is so disgusting a thing that the less you hear of it the better.
Page me42.190

We have founded here a weekly paper of our own The Workman's Advocate. You will oblige by sending correspondence (English) for it to my address.

Yours truly
A. Williams†e

Page me42.190
First published in the language of the original, English, in Wilhelm Liebknecht. Briefwechsel mit Karl Marx und Friedrich Engels, The Hague, 1963

Reproduced from the book

101
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me42.190
Manchester, 21 September 1865

Dear Liebknecht,

It was bad luck that you chose to write to me just as I was leaving for 3 weeks on the Continent,†241 so that I only found your letter†a waiting for me on my return. The £5 banknote B/V 68754, Manchester, 16 January 1865, encl. as requested.

Page Break me42.191
Page me42.191

I cannot write much today, as I want to get the banknote sent off as well; but I will just say that Marx has, of course, every reason to be angry with you. The manner in which you rebutted Becker's†b absurd allegations against Marx in your Berlin defence-speech was exceedingly weak and incompetent, and in respect of both the Bangya-affair†169 and several others you twisted the facts as much as did Mr Becker, although you could easily have gained better knowledge by referring to Herr Vogt.†234 These are extremely disagreeable matters, which Madame Hatzfeldt will now purvey to the world in this distorted form, and with your seal of approval,†c and you demand that Moor should take all that so calmly?

Your
F.E.

Page me42.191
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

102
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†1
IN LONDON
Page me42.191
[London,] 30 September [1865]

Dear Jung,

I am expecting you tomorrow (Sunday) for DINNER (A VERY FRUGAL ONE); I have also asked De Paepe and Becker.†d Please be so kind and invite Kaub in my name. This morning I am SO PRESSED BY BUSINESS OF ALL KIND THAT I CANNOT AFFORD TO WRITE TWO LETTERS.

YOURS FRATERNALLY
K. Marx

Page me42.191
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.192

103
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.192
[Manchester,] 4 October 1865

Dear Moor,

I always strike unlucky with my plans for coming to London. I met my mother†a just 3 days before my return here, in Ostende, to be exact, and I couldn't make it an hour shorter, of course. Nor could I have met her any earlier, as neither of us knew where she would be 2-3 days before. But I was DUE here on 15 September,†241 as Charles†b had to leave on that day, as he in fact did. Since then, as always when I come back from a journey, the very devil has got into the cotton market, I have had to look after Charles' work as well as my own, and that is no trifle when cotton goes up in a fortnight from 18 to 24 1/2d. per pound, yarns on the other hand by 8-9d. per pound, and telegrams of every description pour in. I hope that is all over now, and besides Charles will come back at the beginning of next week, so that I can gather my wits again at last. This horrible rush has made it positively impossible for me to write even 2 lines to you, in fact, since I've been back, I've not been able to write a line of private correspondence at all. As soon as ever I can, I will write at greater length; meanwhile do let me know how you all are and how the 'book'†c is getting on. I think I should manage to come over some time for 3 × 24 hours, as soon as we have got things in order here. But our office is looking like a pigsty, Gottfried†d has taken on 3 fellows for me who are absolutely hopeless, and is holding me to the contract which says I am to make something of them. So, you can see the way things are here. I shall have to sack one or two of them.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.192

Kindest regards to all.
Page me42.192
I was also 'all ready' among the Swabians; however, they are not creating any School of Poetry but are cotton-spinning, or emigrating.

Page me42.192
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.193

104
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.193
[London,] 19 October 1865

DEAR FRED,
I shall arrive in Manchester ABOUT 4.40 tomorrow afternoon and will make my way to your official dwelling.†249

Your
K.M.

Page me42.193
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

105
MARX TO ENGELS†6
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.193
[London,] 8 November 1865 1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill

Dear FREDERICK,

I arrived here on Friday†a evening. Strohn had pressed me very strongly to spend some days with him, but I had too much on my mind. I knew things were awry in London and thus wanted to be on the spot.
Page me42.193
The DISAPPOINTMENTS MRS Lizzy†b prophesied for me came true with a vengeance. D'abord,†c on arrival at King's Cross,†d my case had gone, and I still have not got it back even now, which is particularly annoying because of the 'papers' it contained, for which I am responsible. Then I found my child†e was still very unwell. Finally, the LANDLORD had been round, had made threats, and my wife had only calmed him down with promises of my return. The man talked of putting the 'BROKER' into the house and also of terminating the LEASE, which the contract admittedly entitles him to do. All the other riff-raff appeared in the LANDLORD'S wake, some of them in person, and some in the form of threatening letters. I found my wife SO DESOLATE that I had not the COURAGE to explain the TRUE STATE OF THINGS to her. And I really do not know what to do! And we also have to get coals in, etc.

Page Break me42.194
Page me42.194
As well as these DISAPPOINTMENTS ONE GOOD NEWS. One of the two aunts in Frankfurt (the one who is 73,†a the other†b is two years younger) has passed on, but ab intestato†c (being afraid of dying if she should make a will). I shall therefore have to share with the other heirs, which would not have been so if there had been a will, as she cared nothing for the others. And then another pleasant circumstance — we have to wait for the power of attorney from Mr Juta from the CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.
Page me42.194
All these pleasant circumstances have rather gone to my stomach, so that I at once had myself made up some more of Gumpert's medicine.
Page me42.194
Salut (to MRS Lizzy, too).
Your
K.M.

Page me42.194
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

106
MARX TO SALOMON FULD†250
IN FRANKFURT AM MAIN
Page me42.194
London, 9 November 1865

Dear Dr Fuld,

As I have lost my aunt's private address, I am taking the liberty of sending you the enclosed letter†111 for forwarding to Madame Babette Blum.

Yours respectfully
Dr K. Marx

Page me42.194
First published in: Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 31, Berlin, 1965

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.195

107
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.195
[Manchester,] 13 November 1865

Dear Moor,

You should receive herewith at the same time a registered letter with £15, which I made out on Friday and gave to our errand-boy to attend to. I received no answer from you on Sunday, which I found somewhat surprising, and it occurred to me that the boy did not give me the ticket for the letter on Saturday morning. When I looked into it today, it turned out that the wretch had messed up the whole business with his procrastinating and still had the letter in his pocket. That was the last straw as far as his slovenliness was concerned, and he was sacked. I am extremely annoyed about this, as you must meanwhile have been thinking I had quietly put your last letter in my pocket and left things to take their course, without writing a single word to you.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.195

Has Edgar†a gone?

Page me42.195
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

108
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.195
[London,] 15 November 1865

DEAR FRED,

You must excuse me for not most gratefully acknowledging receipt of the £15 until today and for not writing to you until tomorrow. I am so pressed that I cannot manage it today.

Page Break me42.196
Page me42.196

Little Jenny has diphtheria, but I hope it will soon be over.

Page me42.196

As soon as you have read the enclosed letter — whose manner and style do, incidentally, stand out most favourably from those of the Rhineland workers — please be so good as to send it back. Courtesy requires that it should be answered.†251

Page me42.196

Salut.
Your
K. Marx

Page me42.196
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

109
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me42.196
[London,] 15 November 1865

My dear Jung,

On my return from Manchester,†249 I find your letter from which I am deeply concerned to see that you are still suffering. I fear very much that you have been always interrupting your cure by a premature application to work.

Page me42.196

I shall call upon at your house on Sunday afternoon. I should like to find Dupont there since I must communicate to him different things.
Page me42.196
My whole family takes the most earnest interest in everything concerning you and sends you the best wishes for your reconvalescence.
Page me42.196
My compliments to Mrs Jung.

Yours fraternally
K. Marx

Page me42.196
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.197

110
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.197
Manchester, 17 November 1865

Dear Moor,
Your letter was only passed on to me yesterday evening, and I shall be making enquiries as to how it was left lying around for so long.
Page me42.197
I hope little Jenny is ALL RIGHT again and at least has got over the acute stage of the illness and the danger therewith. I'm sending her a case of port, sherry and claret this evening, to restore her strength. It gave me a real fright when I read the word diphtheria; it is not something to be made light of.
Page me42.197
The letter from the Berliners really took me aback.†251 It has obviously been written by someone with a lot more to him than Wilhelmchen†a and his references to the latter do not appear to be without a certain irony. Now the letter has certainly not been written by a worker, the mere fact that Grimm's rules of orthography are impeccably observed shows that, and I am just a mite suspicious as to how genuine the thing is. At any rate, we ought to obtain more information about the 3 signatories, Wilhelmchen should know them at least, if the business is bona fide. It is rather the form of the document that makes me suspicious, the content most definitely implies the contrary. But as you won't in any case be going to Berlin to found a new organisation there, it will not signify if you write to these people. Letter returned encl.

Page me42.197

What do you say to the NIGGER-rebellion in Jamaica and the atrocities perpetrated by the English?†252 The Telegraph says today:

* 'We should be very sorry if the right was taken away from any British officer to shoot or hang all and every British subject found in arms against the British Crown!'*†b

Your
F.E.

Page me42.197

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.198

111

MARX TO ENGELS†253

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.198

[London,] 20 November†a 1865

Dear Engels,

Little Jenny is on the mend again now and thanks you very much for the wine.

Page me42.198

Regarding the financial questions, it would be futile to approach Dronke about it. To have some peace with the LANDLORD, and that is at the root of it all, I have persuaded him to take a bill of exchange up till the middle of February for the current quarter, for which I owe him 2/3. As for the other creditors, I have satisfied the most pressing with the £15 and am considering ways and means of putting together at least an instalment for the others. Your offer is very generous, and as soon as my work†b is finished and out, the remainder will have to be made up through other commitments, or if that should not succeed, although I fully expect it will, we shall have to move somewhere cheaper, perhaps to Switzerland.

Page me42.198

The Berlin letter is genuine.†251 Some days after it arrived, I received a letter about it from Liebknecht, who is in continuous contact with the Berliners. It also emerges from Liebknecht's letter that those curs from the Social-Demokrat would oh so dearly love to resume their ties with us. The kind of illusions Liebknecht is for ever indulging in can be seen from the following passage:

'The people that have applied to you from Berlin, are our friends. If you could come, show yourself but once — the gain would be immense. Come if it is possible.'

Page me42.198

Surely Liebknecht ought to know that even if I could go to Berlin AT PRESENT, just as a VISITOR, I would have to be completely quiet and keep myself to myself and not address workers' clubs!†254

Page me42.198

Liebknecht also writes:

'Professor Eckardt' (now the 'principal' radical in the south, as a letter from Stumpf in Mainz makes clear) 'of Mannheim places the Wochenblatt†c at our disposal. He would be delighted if you and Engels were to write for it a few articles, but not too strong.'

Page me42.198

The Workman's Advocate is as weak as ever. However, it must have some appeal as it appeared in a larger format last week. I know no more details, as I shall be present at the Association again for the first time tomorrow. The Parisians have published a report on the conference together with the programme we drew up for the next congress. It appeared in all the liberal, quasi-liberal and republican papers in Paris.†255 You will see what a friendly reception it had from the following report by Fox on the last meeting of our COUNCIL which I am cutting out of The Workman's Advocate for you. Our Parisians are somewhat taken aback that the para. on Russia and Poland which they did not wish to have, is the very one to create the biggest stir.†256 I hope that you will now use some of your leisure time to write the occasional article on one subject or another for the Advocate.

Page Break me42.199

Page me42.199

The Paris publication absolves me from the trouble of writing a report on France.

Page me42.199

The Jamaican business is typical of the utter turpitude of the 'TRUE ENGLISHMAN'.†252 These fellows are as bad as the Russians in every respect. But, says the good old Times, these DAMNED ROGUES ENJOYED 'ALL THE LIBERTIES OF AN ANGLO-SAXON CONSTITUTION'.†a I.e. they ENJOYED THE LIBERTY, amongst others, of having their hides taxed to raise money for the PLANTERS to import COOLIES and thus depress their own labour market below the minimum. And these English curs with their sensibilities sent up an outcry about 'BEAST Butler' for hanging one man! and refusing to allow the former planters' diamond-spangled yellow womenfolk to spit in the faces of the FEDERAL SOLDIERS! The Irish affair†257 and the Jamaica BUTCHERIES were all that was needed after the American war†11 to complete the unmasking of English hypocrisy!

Page me42.199

Please do not forget to obtain the necessary data from Knowles for me (and as soon as possible). AVERAGE WEEKLY WAGES, either for a MULE SPINNER, or for a female THROSTLE spinner; how much yarn (or cotton, that is, including the déchet†b that is lost in spinning) is spun per week ON AVERAGE by an AVERAGE NUMBER (or, for that matter, any number) by each individual; and then, of course, an arbitrary (corresponding to the labour-wage) price for the cotton and the price of yarn. I cannot write out the second chapter†c†258 until I have these details.

Page me42.199
Ernest Jones' address is now 47 Princess Street.
Page me42.199
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.199
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.200

112
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†259
IN LONDON
Page me42.200
[London,] 20 November 1865

*My dear Jung,
The following are the questions:
Page me42.200
I. Questions relating to the Association
Page me42.200
1) Questions relating to its organisation.*
Page me42.200
2) The establishment of friendly societies for the members of the Association. — Moral and material support to be given to the Association's orphans.
Page me42.200
II. Social Questions
Page me42.200
1) Co-operative labour.
Page me42.200
2) Reduction of the hours of labour.
Page me42.200
3) Female and children's labour.
Page me42.200

4) Trades Unions. Their past, their present, and their future.
Page me42.200
5) Combination of efforts, by means of the International Association, in the struggle between capital and labour.
Page me42.200
6) International Credit: foundation of international credit institutions, their form and their mode of operation.
Page me42.200
7) Direct and Indirect Taxation.
Page me42.200
8) Standing armies and their effects upon production.
Page me42.200
III. International Politics
Page me42.200
The need to eliminate Muscovite influence in Europe by applying the right of self-determination of nations, and the re-establishment of Poland upon a democratic and social basis.
Page me42.200
IV. A Question of Philosophy
Page me42.200
The religious idea and its relation to social, political, and intellectual development.
Page me42.200
*The other resolutions as to the Congress etc. you find in the number of The Workman's Advocate which contains the report on the three days' sittings of the Conference.†260
Page me42.200
Don't forget to ask for an official report on Vésinier.
Page me42.200
Send me the address of Kaub which I have mislaid.

Yours fraternally*
K. Marx

Page me42.200
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original Passages enclosed between asterisks are reproduced from the English original, the remaining text is translated from French

Page Break me42.201

113
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG†a

Page me42.201
[London,] 21 November 1865

My dear Miller,†b

Since the conference†246 held at this place I fell again very sick. Afterwards I had to leave London for family affairs.†249 Hence my protracted silence. As to your report, I could not lay it before the conference, because I was too personally introduced in it.†261 As to your Berlin speech, there were some very disagreeable blunders in it which could only emanate from yourself, because they alluded to facts only known to you, but half forgotten and wrongly reproduced by you.†c But this is a thing of the past.

Page me42.201

I have received the Berlin letter, and I shall answer to it.†251 I have at present neither the time nor the means to go to Berlin. Even if I could, you know very well that all and every sort of agitation would be out of the question. The Prussian government has not in vain declared that the amnesty, as far as I was concerned, still excluded me from Prussia, and only gave me leave to travel as a Foreigner through the Bismarckian world.†154

Page me42.201

The Workman's Advocate I shall send you one of these days some numbers of. You can write to it on every subject you please, social or political. Till now it is a paper of good will, but very mediocre still. Of course, myself had and have not yet the time to contribute to it, although I am one of its Directors.†230 (By my continual relapse into damned ill health I was forced to interrupt the finishing of my book†d and must now apply to it all my time, part of which is, with all that, absorbed by the International Association.) Engels has promised to contribute†e but not yet done so. And the same is the case with other people.

Page me42.201

The Conference has resolved that a Public Congress is to take place at the end of May, at Geneva. A programme of questions to be there debated, has been resolved upon.†f But nobody can assist who does not belong to a society connected with us, and being sent as a delegate of such society. I now call upon you very seriously (I shall do the same at Mayence through Stumpf, and shall write to the Berliners†a on it) to enter the Association with some men, few or many, we do not care. I shall send you cards which I have prepaid, so that you can give them away. But now work! Every society (whatever its number) can enbody itself by paying 5 shilling in the block. The cards, on the contrary, which cost each 1 shilling, give the right of individual membership, which is important for all workingmen going to Foreign countries. But treat this money matter as quite secondary. The principal thing is to get up members, individual or societies, in Germany. On the congress, Solingen was the only place represented (they had given power of delegation to our old friend Becker,†b whom you are very mistaken in if you consider him as a tool of Megära Hatzfeldt).

Page Break me42.202

Page me42.202

The programme (of questions to be lead before Congress) I shall send you in my next letter. All the Paris liberal and republican papers have made great fuss about our Association. Henri Martin, the well known historian, had a most enthusiastic leader about it in the Siécle!†256 I have heard nothing of Quenstedt.†262

Page me42.202
A thing which will rather surprise you, is this: Shortly before the arrival of workingmen's letter from Berlin, I received from that very same place — 'centre et foyer des lumiéres',†c of course — a letter on the part of — Lothar Bucher, inviting me to become the London money article writer of the Preussische Staatsanzeiger, and giving me to understand that everybody, der noch bei Lebzeiten im Staat wirken will, 'sich an die Regierung ralliiren' muss.†d I have answered him by a few lines which he is not likely to exhibit.†263 Of course, you must not publish in the papers this affair, but you can communicate it, under the seal of discretion, to your friends.
Page me42.202
Freiligrath's London shop — viz. the London branch of the Bank of Switzerland — will be shut up, never to be opened again, before 1866.†e
Page me42.202
Give my best compliments to Madame and Alice.†f

Yours truly
A. Williams†g

Page Break me42.203
Page me42.203
Some curious letters, written long time since, during his stay at London, by Bernhard Becker to Dr Rode have fallen into my hands.
Page me42.203
I have opened this letter again, and by that operation somewhat torn it, in order to add that, during the past spring I had sent a letter to Dr Kugelmann, together with cards of membership for our Association.†a I have received no answer on his part.†264 The letter of which you speak has never arrived at my hands. Please, write him on this affair. If he writes to me, let him do so under the address of 'A. Williams, Esq.', and not the other one.

Page me42.203
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946 and in the language of the original, English, in: Wilhelm Liebknecht. Briefwechsel mit Karl Marx und Friedrich Engels, The Hague, 1963

Reproduced from the original

114
MARX TO CÉSAR DE PAEPE†265
IN BRUSSELS
Page me42.203
[London, about 25 November 1865]

I. Questions relating to the Association

1) Question of organisation.
2) System of friendly societies for the members of the Association. Moral and material support for the Association's orphans.
Page me42.203
II. Social questions

1) Co-operative labour.
2) Reduction of the hours of labour.
3) Children's labour.
4) [Trades' Unions,] their past, their present, and their future.
5) [Combination] of efforts, by means of the International Association, in the struggle between capital and labour.
6) International credit, banking institution, mode of operation.
7) Direct and indirect taxation.
8) Standing armies and their effects upon production.†b

Page Break me42.204
Page me42.204
III. Questions of International Politics

The need to reduce Muscovite influence in Europe by applying the rights of self-determination of nations, and the re-establishment of Poland upon a democratic and social basis.
Page me42.204
IV. Question of Philosophy
The religious idea and its relation to social, political and intellectual development.

Page me42.204
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the Minutes of the meeting of the Brussels section of the International Working Men's Association of 25 November 1865

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

115
ENGELS TO MARX†253
IN LONDON
Page me42.204
Manchester, 1 December 1865

Dear Moor,

Enclosed on the new month's account a further two five-pound notes, please to confirm receipt to me at 86 Mornington Street or if possible telegraph tomorrow early in the morning to 7 Southgate, as I'm not registering the letter this time because of the fuss.

Page me42.204

As far as I can tell from the German newspapers, Prof. Eckardt†a is a South German democrat, one of the Swabians and Bavarians who seceded from the National Association.†152 It is not clear to me how we are supposed to collaborate with him, it's something like Kolatschek.

Page me42.204

That the gentlemen from the Social-Demokrat would like to resume their ties with us is typical of that riff-raff. They think everyone is as much of a swine as they are. Bismarck seems to have realised how powerless they are and therefore to have thrown them out, so at last there's a trial and Schweitzer has been sentenced to 1 year of imprisonment.†266 B. Becker has now also detached himself from Schweitzer and given up his post as President of Mankind, so that everything is now falling apart just splendidly. So that it was not our intervention, but our non-intervention that put paid to the whole caboodle. This no doubt means that 'Lassalleanism' in its official form will soon come to the end of the line.

Page Break me42.205

Page me42.205

Every post brings news of worse atrocities in Jamaica.†252 The letters from the English officers about their heroic deeds against unarmed NIGGERS are beyond words. Here the spirit of the English army is at last expressing itself quite uninhibitedly. 'THE SOLDIERS ENJOY IT.' Even The Manchester Guardian has had to come out against the authorities in Jamaica this time.

Page me42.205

Regarding The Workman's Advocate, I will see what can be done, meanwhile perhaps you could send the paper to me. You have no notion at all of the TROUBLE and chasing around involved here in obtaining these PENNY WEEKLY PAPERS which are not worth the bother to the NEWSAGENTS. You still do not get them even if you order and pay for them in advance. Or put MRS Burns down for a subscription with an order for the PAPER to be sent here by post.

Page me42.205

Every good wish to MRS and MISSES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.205

G/P 62563. London, 4 August 1865 — £5

Page me42.205

E/M 35757. Liverpool, 15 May “—” 5

Page me42.205

How much is the bill for that you accepted, and when is it due?

Page me42.205
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

116
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.205
[London, 2 December 1865]

Dear FRED,
I found your letter just as I arrived home (I was at the Museum†a where I had some things to look up). I've just TIME to acknowledge the £10 with best thanks. I shall write more tomorrow.

Page Break me42.206
Page me42.206
Salut and COMPLIMENTS to MRS Lizzy.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me42.206
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

117
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.206
[London,] 26 December 1865

DEAR FRED,

Please forgive me for not thanking you on behalf of the FAMILY for the CHRISTMAS present until today, and indeed for not writing at all for so long. I have been so very BOTHERED ALL THAT TIME OVER and have wasted so much time dashing this way and that, transactions right and left to satisfy A, and thereby falling into the clutches of B, etc., that my work has been chiefly confined to the night, and the good intention to deal with correspondence the next day comes to grief every day.
Page me42.206

With regard to the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION and all that that entails, it has consequently been weighing down on me like an INCUBUS, and I would be glad to be able to get rid of it. But that is impossible, least of all at the present time. On the one hand, sundry bourgeois — Mr. Hughes, M.P., at their head — have conceived the idea of turning The Workman's Advocate into a proper funded paper, and as one of the DIRECTORS I MUST WATCH THE TRANSACTIONS, to prevent FOUL PLAY.†230 On the other hand, the Reform League, one of the organisations we founded, has had a triumphant success at the St Martin's Hall MEETING, the largest and most purely working-class MEETING that has taken place since I have been living in London. The people from our COMMITTEE were at the head of it and put forward our ideas.†267 If I resigned tomorrow, the bourgeois element, which looks at us with displeasure in the wings (FOREIGN INFIDELS), would have the upper hand. With the complete failure of the workers' movement in Germany, the workers' elements in Switzerland have grouped themselves all the more around the sections of the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION there. In the middle of this month first number of the Journal de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Section de la Suisse Romande appeared in Geneva, and a German organ†268 will shortly appear under the editorship of Becker,†a which has a chance on account of the Nordstern's demise and the discrediting of the Social-Demokrat. (Old Becker is desperate for articles and has asked me to write urgently to you about it, as pro nunc†b he has no contributors.) Finally, in France the Association is making great progress, in the absence of any other centres of movement. So, if I were to resign in these circumstances, I should be doing very serious damage to the cause; but, on the other hand, since I have so little time just now, it is no trifle for me: ABOUT 3 MEETINGS in the West End or the City, EVERY WEEK first a session of the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL, then of the STANDING COMMITTEE,†21 then of the DIRECTORS or SHAREHOLDERS of The Workman's Advocate! And in addition all manner of writing to do.

Page Break me42.207
Page me42.207

I have had a few lines from Liebknecht. He is living at 2 Gerichtsweg, Leipzig, to be addressed as J. Miller,†c Esq. Things seem to be going badly with him as usual, but he seems to have some prospect of getting a position as a lexicographer, as well as of being granted civic rights in Leipzig, and becoming one of Beust's subjects.
Page me42.207

Dr Kugelmann has also written to me.†264 Justus Möser's successor, the present mayor of Osnabrück, Mr Miquel, has now openly turned renegade; for the moment with bourgeois leanings, but 'already' veering in the aristocratic direction. A certain Wedekind, formerly consul SOMEWHERE, rolling in money and an enthusiastic National-Association member,†152 has rewarded him for his merits by making him his son-in-law. Kugelmann has seen 'gentle Heinrich'†d in Cologne. He is now cosily installed as editor of the Rheinische Zeitung. He complained that I had not visited him in Cologne and was treating him as a 'turncoat', etc. He claimed always to have 'kept faith with the “cause”' and only to be working with the bourgeoisie against the aristocracy now 'to promote the evolution and clarification of the class contradictions'

Page Break me42.208
(which in a speech in Cologne scarcely a year ago he declared NON-EXISTENT), etc.
Page me42.208

Bonaparte appears to me shakier than ever. The business with the students†269 is symptomatic of ominous signs of conflict in the army itself, but above all the Mexico affair†270 and that original sin of the LOWER EMPIRE,†a debts! Nor has the fellow managed to pull off a single coup in the past year. Indeed things have reached such a pass with him that Bismarck figures as a rival to him!
Page me42.208

Palmerston's death has obviously been a blow here. If he were still alive, Governor Eyre would have been awarded the ordre pour le mérite!
Page me42.208

Freiligrath is also ending the year with tremendous bad luck. Jew Reinach has closed down the business here, with a great brouhaha, coming to London expressly for the purpose.†b Freiligrath, who owed the bank money anyway, suffered the further misfortune that 3 days before the ARRIVAL of the mighty Reinach one of his clerks absconded with £150. But still the old boy has got powerful protection TO FALL BACK UPON. His Plonplonist†93 friends in Paris (e.g. EX-COLONEL Kiss, who married the daughter of the former French minister Thouvenel, a millionaire, and is now at the head of an enormous company) will find a new position for him soon enough.
Page me42.208

Happy New Year! To MRS Lizzy,†c too.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.208
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

118
MARX TO ENGELS†271
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.208

[London, end of 1865-beginning of 1866]

Appendix

While I was last staying in Manchester†249 you once asked me to explain differential calculus. The thing will be quite clear to you from the following example. The whole of differential calculus arose originally from the task of drawing tangents through any point on any curve. So, that is the example I am going to use for you.

Page Break me42.209

Page me42.209
Assume that the line nAo is any curve whose nature (whether it's a parabola, ellipse, etc.) is unknown to us and on which a tangent is to be drawn at point m.
Page me42.209
Ax is the axis. We drop the perpendicular mP (the ordinate) onto the abscissa Ax. Now assume that point n is the infinitely closest point on the curve beside m. If I drop a perpendicular np onto the axis, p must be the infinitely closest point to P and np the infinitely closest parallel line to mP. Now drop an infinitely small perpendicular mR onto np. If you now take the abscissa AP...x and the ordinate mP...y, then np = mP (or Rp), increased by an infinitely small increment [nR], or [nR] = dy (differential of y) and mR (= Pp) = dx. Since the part of the tangent mn is infinitely small, it coincides with the corresponding part of the curve itself. I can therefore regard mnR as a (triangle), and the mnR and mTP are similar triangles. Therefore: dy (= nR):dx (= mR) = y (mP):PT (which is the subtangent of the tangent Tn). Thus, the subtangent PT = . We now have a general differential equation for drawing the tangent at any points on any curves. If I am now to operate with this equation and to determine through it the length of the subtangent PT (once I have found this, I merely need to connect the points T and m by a straight line in order to have the tangent), so I need to know the specific character of the curve. According to its character (parabola, ellipse, cissoid, etc.), it will have a distinct form of general equation for its ordinate and abscissa at any point, which one can find in algebraic geometry. Thus, if the curve mAo, e.g., is a parabola, I know that y2 (y = the ordinate at any given point) = ax, where a is the parameter of the parabola and x is the abscissa corresponding to the ordinate y.

Page Break me42.210
Page me42.210
If I put this value for y into the equation PT = ydx/dy, I must then work out dy, i.e. to find the differential of y (which represents an infinitely small increment of y). If y2 = ax, I know from the differential calculus that from d(y2) = d(ax) (I have to differentiate both sides of the equation, of course), it follows that 2y dy = a dx (d always means differential). Thus dx = . If I put this value of dx into the formula PT ydx/dy, I get PT =

= (since y2 = ax) = 2ax/a = 2x. Or the subtangent of any point m on the parabola = twice the abscissa of the same point. The differential values are cancelled in the operation.

Page me42.210
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.211

1866

119
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.211
Manchester, 4 January 1866†a

Dear Moor,

£10 encl. in 2 Bank-of-England notes. How stands it with bill of exchange for LANDLORD? Tell me how much and date when due, so that I may make my dispositions.

Page me42.211

That malicious compilation of Social-Demokrat garbage in the Schulze-Delitzschite pamphlet†b had already been sent me anonymously from Berlin; it is always a good thing to have such a résumé with extracts. Schulze-Delitzsch has also announced that in the next few days he is to publish a reply to Lassalle, in which he is going to demolish him.†272

Page me42.211

You will already know as well that Racowita died of consumption, so presumably Mamsell Dönniges is once more IN THE MARKET, IF EVER SHE WAS FAIRLY OUT OF IT.

Page me42.211

Mr Held's speech has also been sent me from Berlin. He's a real Berlin scoundrel.

Page me42.211

Monsieur Bonaparte's progress is most decidedly that of the crab. The trouble in the army over Mexico†270 is very serious, and so is the student trouble in Paris.†269 It is very important that the Paris students should take the side of the proletariat, confused though their ideas on the subject may be. The École polytechnique will follow soon enough. It would be so splendid if the rascal lived to see his own DOWNFALL, and it now almost appears that he might. It is getting more and more rotten for Bismarck every day, too, and, if those scoundrels in Cologne had not got him out of the soup, it would probably already have been all up with him now.†237

Page Break me42.212
Page me42.212
I am agog for the next parliament, the disintegration of the old parties must surely proceed apace now. JOHN BRIGHT IS EVIDENTLY BIDDING FOR OFFICE — it is true, I have not yet read the speech he gave yesterday.†a
Page me42.212
Have you read Tyndall's 'HEAT CONSIDERED AS A MODE OF MOTION'? If not, you should do so. A great deal of work has been done in this field, and the matter appears to be assuming a rational shape; the atom theory is being taken to such extremes that it must soon fall apart.
Page me42.212
Please don't forget to send me The Workman's Advocate and The Free Press.
Page me42.212
Regards and best wishes to your family for the New Year.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.212
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

120
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.212
[London,] 5 JANUARY 1866

DEAR FRED,
In the greatest of haste.
Page me42.212
Best thanks for the £10.
Page me42.212
The bill of exchange falls due on 18 February and is for £48. I wanted the LANDLORD to draw it only for the 2 terms that were due and not for the third one as well, which is not due until the end of January. But he insisted.
Page me42.212
A plot has been hatched against the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, in which connection I need your co-operation. Further details later. For the moment, suffice to say: Mr Le Lubez and Vésinier (the latter well aware that an INQUIRY into his past is in progress; he is in Brussels again) have a French branch here†273 (IN FACT an opposition branch); Longuet, the editor of Rive gauche, also belongs to it, and it is tied up with all that pack of Proudhonists in Brussels. Vésinier began by publishing a long screed against us in the Echo de Verviers, OF COURSE ANONYMOUSLY.†274 Then, in the same paper which is putting out the SLANDERS against our Association (among other things, falsely calls Tolain and Fribourg Bonapartists, too), the London BRANCH published a programme, a draft of future statutes, which they, the Faithful, are going to put to the Congress.†275

Page Break me42.213
Page me42.213
The real crux of the controversy is the Polish question. The fellows have all attached themselves to the Muscovitist line pursued by Proudhon and Herzen. I shall therefore send you the earlier articles by the oracles in the Tribune du Peuple against Poland and you must do a refutation, either for our papers in Geneva (the 'German' one†a) or for The Workman's Advocate.†276 The Russian gentlemen have acquired some bran-new allies in the Proudhonised section of 'Jeune France'.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me42.213
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

121
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†33
IN GENEVA†c
Page me42.213
London, [about 13 January 1866]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

My dear friend Becker,
If you are vexed with me, you have 'every right' and at the same time 'no right' to be so. (You know from Heinzen that I am a 'sophist'.) Apart from having some 1,200 pages of manuscript†d to copy and my publisher†a grumbling at me for a long time now, and apart from the fearful waste of time which the Central Committee, the STANDING COMMITTEE†21 and the Committee of Directors of The Workman's Advocate commit me to in this Babylon, I have had the most exceptional aggravations and difficulties in my 'private circumstances' which obliged me to leave London for a while†249 and are still unresolved, etc., etc.

Page Break me42.214

Page me42.214

You will see from the enclosed note, which I received today (or rather my wife did), that a parcel, which I sent to you ABOUT 14 days ago, has been most commendably confiscated by the French police. It contained chiefly 'Manifestoes of the Communist Party'.†b Also a note from me briefly answering your questions and telling you that Bender agreed that I should publish your appeal in English in The Workman's Advocate, ditto a report on activity in Switzerland, etc.†277
Page me42.214

The reason why we decided not to publish any official report on the conference†246 — apart from lack of money and the fact that the Rules oblige us to present a general report to the Congress, such double emploi†c thus to be avoided — was basically that to initiate the public in the situation, especially the very 'fragmentary' nature of the conference, would do us more harm than good and provide our opponents with a useful weapon. We knew that two members of the Central Committee, Le Lubez and Vésinier, were just waiting to seize this opportunity. Events have confirmed this. Firstly, Vésinier's denunciation of the Central Committee and the conference in L'Écho de Verviers.†274 Directly following that, in the same paper, came Le Lubez' declaration of principles and draft of statutes†275 that he hoped to impose on the Association in the name of the French branch he had founded in London as a counterweight to ourselves.†273 This plot has meanwhile been frustrated. The branch has deserted its founder. Its two best men, Longuet (editor of the Rive gauche) and Crespelle, have joined the Central Committee. The latter has resolved that Vésinier must either substantiate his slanders or be expelled.
Page me42.214

I cannot send you any articles pro nunc.†d I have not an hour to spare. Engels, however, will do so, as soon as he has seen the first number†e and knows where and how. Liebknecht will as well, from Leipzig. I will ditto write to Dr Kugelmann in Hanover about it. Ditto to Stumpf in Mainz.
Page me42.214

No. 1 of Dupleix's paper†f is weak. Jung has written to him about it.

Page Break me42.215
Page me42.215

Liebknecht is living at 2 Gerichtsweg, Leipzig (address J. Miller†a).
Page me42.215

In one way the movement here has progressed well, but badly in another respect. The Reform League we founded has held a mass MEETING for universal suffrage, bigger than I ever saw here in London.†267 All the speakers were working men. The Times itself was shocked and published 2 leading articles about the 'ugly' incident.†b The obverse side is that this movement is demanding far too much of our best working-class forces.
Page me42.215

The Workman's Advocate is weak. It will improve now that Eccarius is editor. But there are enormous difficulties in raising the money for it.
Page me42.215
I have received a letter from Berlin, signed by Vogt,†c Metzner and other workers, in which they give a perceptive and critical assessment of the present state of the workers' movement in Germany. The only uncritical thing about it is their demand that I should come to Berlin and take the matter in hand. Surely they must know that the Prussian government has 'forbidden' me to settle in Prussia.†d
Page me42.215
Before I hear from you by what way I can let you have the 'Manifestoes', I am going to send one experimentally via Mainz. You may be able to make use of some things in it for your paper.
Page me42.215
The best thing the German sections can do is for the time being to register in Geneva and keep in continuous contact with you. As soon as some such arrangement is made, let me know, so that at last I can announce at least some progress in Germany here.†278
Page me42.215
I am sending this letter under cover to Dupleix, on account of the 'French confiscation'. The Empire seems to me to be tottering. D'abord,†e the business with Mexico and the UNITED STATES.†270 Then the mutiny of 3 French regiments.†279 Then the student unrest.†269 Bonaparte's losing his head, as manifested in his row with England about the renewal of the 'extradition treaty'†280 and his banning of the lickspittling 'Indépendance belge'. Finally, the trade crisis, which will be greatly hastened by the present English, resp. European, overimporting to the UNITED STATES.
Page me42.215
Best greetings from wife and children.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.215
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.216

122
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.216
[London,] 15 January 1866†a

DEAR FRED,

Laura quite forgot to send you the Tribunes†b which I had put out ready a week ago. She is today making amends for her negligence. Ditto a Workman's Advocate.

Page me42.216

I am enclosing with this letter:

1. Communication from the publisher in Vienna.†c (You must send this back.)†281

2. Dr Kugelmann.

3. Meyer†d from Berlin. (I have only written back to these people today. Time is so very short.)†282

Page me42.216

In the meantime, we have crushed the wretched plot hatched by Vésinier in Belgium†274 and by Le Lubez in London. The editor of the Rive gauche and friend of Rogeard, Longuet, also Mr Crespelle — the two most intelligent members of the branch founded by Le Lubez†273 — have joined our Central Committee. His branch has declared itself against him, for us. The CENTRAL COMMITTEE HAS SUMMONED VÉSINIER 'TO SUBSTANTIATE HIS ACCUSATIONS OR TO BE EXPELLED'. The fellow reproaches us in the Echo de Verviers among other things for:

'Il' (le comité) 'a été chargé d'un des plus grands intérêts de l'humanité et il abandonne de gaieté de coeur le but sublime pour dégénérer en comité des nationalités á la remorque du bonapartisme.'†e

Page me42.216

And this degeneration was in fact made manifest in us by our statement in favour of Poland, against Russia.†283

'Cédant á des influences fâcheuses'†f (the idiot imagines the Polish § of the programme originated from the PARIS DELEGATES, whereas the latter sought in every possible way to get rid of it as 'inopportune'), 'il a inscrit dans le programme du Congrés de Genéve des questions en dehors du but de l'association et contraires au droit, á la justice, á la liberté, á la fraternité, á la solidarité des peuples et des races, telles que celles: “D'anéantir l'influence russe en Europe etc.”, et cela juste au moment oú les serfs russes et polonais viennent d'être émancipés par la Russie, tandis que les nobles et les prêtres polonais ont toujours refusé d'accorder la liberté aux leurs. On conviendra au moins que le moment est mal choisi. Avant d'approuver ces articles, les membres anglais du comité auraient bien dû se demander s'il ne serait pas aussi urgent de mettre un terme aux progrés effrayants du paupérisme anglais, de la prostitution des ouvriéres, et de la misére des ouvriers de la Grande Bretagne, de la famine et du dépeuplement de l'Irlande etc.! Quant au membre allemand du comité, qu'il nous dise aussi si l'influence de la politique de M. de Bismarck n'aurait pas aussi besoin d'être anéantie en Europe; la Prusse et l'Autriche ne sont-elles pas copartageantes de la Pologne et solidaires du crime de la Russie contre cette nation malheureuse? Et quant aux prétendus délégués de Paris, sont-ils bien venus de flétrir l'influence russe, alors que les soldats de Bonaparte occupent Rome qu'ils ont bombardée, massacrant les défenseurs de la république mexicaine aprés avoir détruit la république française? Que l'on compare les fautes et les crimes commis par les gouvernements, et l'on sera convaincu qu'il ne faut mettre aucun peuple au ban de l'humanité pour les forfaits de ses oppresseurs, que le devoir du comité central était de proclamer la solidarité, la fraternité entre tous les peuples, et non d'en mettre un seul d'entre eux au ban de l'Europe.'†a

Page Break me42.217

Page me42.217

He then appended this lie:

'Cette faute énorme a déjá eu de fatales conséquences: les Polonais ont demandé en masse á faire partie du Comité, et sous peu ils seront en immense majorité.'†b (CAPTAIN Bobczynski is the only one who is on it — Holtorp doesn't count and is himself conspiring with Le Lubez.) 'Déjá ils ne se font pas faute de dire qu'ils se serviront de l'Association pour aider au rétablissement de leur nationalité, sans s'occuper de la question de l'émancipation des travailleurs.'†a

Page Break me42.218

Page me42.218

The Poles — they had just sent a deputation to see us — burst out laughing when these PASSAGES were read out. We are commemorating their revolution on 23 January.†284

Page me42.218

You will be amused by WISEACRE Denis' concluding prayer to Proudhon.†285 This SENSATIONAL WRITER has done great harm with his little bit of learning and with his Lassalle-like trumpeting of scholarship, of which he had no conception, with his spurious critical superiority over the SOCIALIST SECTARIANS.

Page me42.218

Le Lubez is of no account. Fox rightly calls him 'Le pére enfantin',†b but Vésinier is just the fellow for the Russians. Of little merit as a writer, as his Vie du Nouveau César and his other pamphlets attacking Bonaparte show. But with talent, great RHETORICAL POWER, much energy and above all unscrupulous through and through.

Page me42.218

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.218

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

123
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†1
IN LEIPZIG†c
Page me42.218
[London,] 15 January 1866

Dear LIBRARY,†d
Happy New Year!
Page me42.218
You must excuse my silence, ditto the brevity of these lines of mine. You will not believe how BOTHERED I am for time.

Page Break me42.219
Indisposition, for ever recurring periodically, all manner of unfortunate mischances, demands made on me by the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, etc., have confiscated every free moment I have for writing out the fair copy of my manuscript.†a I hope to be able to take Volume I of it to the publisher†b for printing myself in March. (The whole thing, the two volumes, will, however, appear simultaneously.†233 This is good.)
Page me42.219
So, this very much by way of summary.
Page me42.219
Today I am sending you by post the 2 latest issues of The Workman's Advocate, of which Eccarius is now editor.†c If, as I hope, you send any articles for it, please do so to me (political, social, as you will).
Page me42.219
I also enclose CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP for you. I have paid for them. You can therefore give them to whomever you like, and have only to inscribe the name and after the £, put 0, but after the 0s., 1d.
Page me42.219
The conditions, GENERALLY, are these: a society as such that wishes to join has an Association collective membership Card, for which 5s. per year is to be paid. But, if all the members join individually, they have to take out cards of the kind I am sending you. This is advantageous for workers. The cards serve as a passport abroad, and their confréres†d in London, Paris, Brussels, Lyons, Geneva, etc., will get jobs for them.
Page me42.219
The Association has made great progress. It already has 1 official English paper, The Workman's Advocate, a Brussels one, La Tribune du Peuple, a French one in Geneva, Journal de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs, Section de la Suisse Romande, and a German one in Geneva, Der Vorbote, which will be appearing in a few days. Address: 6 rue du Môle, Genf, J.P. Becker, in case you want to write to the old man occasionally (as I hope you will).
Page me42.219
I am now hoping you will soon make it possible for me to announce the foundation of a Leipzig section and enable me to present correspondence. (In English. It can then be used in The Workman's Advocate as well.) The number is not important, although THE MORE, THE BETTER.

Page me42.219
If people want to join en masse, as a society, you will see that the total price of 5s., which they have to pay annually, is nothing.
Page me42.219
J.P. Becker writes to me†e:

'Sections are going to be formed in Leipzig, Gotha, Stuttgart and Nuremberg; shall we register them here for the time being, until there is a large number and a Central Committee has been formed in Germany?'†278

Page Break me42.220
Page me42.220
I have replied in the affirmative.†a However, since there can be several branches in one town, you and your people can establish links direct with us.
Page me42.220
I have had a second letter from the Berliners.†b I am at last writing to them today.†282 Ditto to Dr Kugelmann.
Page me42.220
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.220
I will let you know next time what questions are to be dealt with at the Geneva Congress at the end of May.†286

Page me42.220
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

124
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.220
London, 15 January 1866
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Friend,
A happy New Year and best thanks for your kind letter.
Page me42.220

You must excuse the brevity of these lines on account of my being excessively busy at present. I'll write more fully next time.
Page me42.220

I am enclosing two cards†287 and will let you know in my next letter which questions are to be dealt with at the public congress in Geneva at the end of May.†286
Page me42.220

Our Association has made great progress. It already has 3 official organs, one in London, The Workman's Advocate, one in Brussels, La Tribune du Peuple, one put out by the French section in Switzerland, Journal de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs, Section de la Suisse Romande (Geneva), and in a few days time a journal is to be put out by the German-Swiss section, Der Vorbote, under the editorship of J.P. Becker. (Address: 6 rue du Môle, Genf, J.P. Becker, in case you wanted to send him an occasional article, political or social).

Page Break me42.221
Page me42.221

We have succeeded in attracting into the movement the only really big workers' organisation, the English 'TRADE UNIONS', which previously concerned themselves exclusively with the wage question. With their help, the English society we founded to achieve UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE†a (half of its Central Committee consists of members — working men — of our Central Committee) held a giant MEETING a few weeks ago, at which only working men spoke.†267 You can tell what effect it had from the fact that the LEADERS of two successive issues of The Times were concerned with this MEETING.†b
Page me42.221

As regards my work,†c I am now busy 12 hours a day writing out the fair copy. I am thinking of taking the manuscript of the first volume to Hamburg myself in March and using the opportunity to see you.
Page me42.221

I was much amused by the antics of Justus von Möser's successor.†d How wretched a man of talent must be who seeks and finds satisfaction in trivialities of that kind!†e
Page me42.221

As regards Bürgers, he is doubtless well-meaning, but weak. It is not much over a year ago that he declared at a public MEETING in Cologne (it appeared in print in the Cologne papers) that Schulze-Delitzsch had 'solved' the social question once and for all and that only personal friendship for me had induced him (Bürgers) to stray onto the tangled paths of communism! After such public statements, could I regard him as other than a 'renegade'?

Your most sincere friend
K. Marx

Page me42.221

First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 1, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), MOSCOW-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.222

125
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER
IN BERLIN
Page me42.222
[London,] 24 January 1866

Dear Friend,

At the same time as I sent the cards to you, I wrote a detailed letter to Mr Vogt.†a I thought I was being very clever in using two different addresses. The only error I may possibly have committed is to have put No. 6 instead of 16 in Vogt's address.†288
Page me42.222

I should therefore be grateful if you would enquire at the Post Office and inform me of the results. Since I wrote to you,†282 a fresh carbuncle has developed in a spot that is very painful when I sit, so that after my daily labour of fair-copying my manuscript†b for the publisher,†c I am extraordinarily exhausted.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.222
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

126
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.222
Manchester, 26 January 1866

Dear Moor,

What is holding me up is that I have no material and hardly any recollection either about the way in which the emancipation of the serfs was finally carried out in Russia, what land the peasant received, who paid for it, what his present de facto relation is to the landowner, etc., etc. I have undoubtedly seen the earlier plans of the nobility and the emperor,†a but not the definitive implementation. Have you any material on it†b?

Page Break me42.223

Your
F.E.

Page me42.223
N.B. I shall not refer directly to the article in the 1864 Tribune,†c cela serait lui faire trop d'honneur.†d

Page me42.223
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

127
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.223
[London,] 10 February 1866

Dear Fritz,
It was a close shave this time. My family did not know how sérieux the cas†e was. If the matter recurs in that form three or four times more, I shall be a dead man. I am marvellously wasted away and still damned weak, not in the mind but about my loins and in my legs. The doctors are quite right to think that excessive work at night has been the chief cause of this relapse. But I cannot tell these gentlemen the reasons that force this extravagance on me — nor would it serve any purpose to do so. At this moment, I have all kinds of little progeny about my person, which is painful but no longer in the least dangerous.
Page me42.223
What was most loathsome to me was the interruption in my work,†f which had been going splendidly since JANUARY 1ST, when I got over my liver complaint. There was no question of 'sitting', of lying down, I was able to forge ahead, even if only for short periods of the day. I could make no progress with the really theoretical part. My brain was not up to that. I therefore elaborated the section on the 'Working-Day' from the historical point of view, which was not part of my original plan. What I have now 'inserted' supplements your book†a (sketchily) up to 1865 (and I say so in a note†289) and fully justifies the discrepancy between your estimation of the future and what will actually happen. Therefore, as soon as my book appears, it is necessary to have the second edition of your book, which will be easy in the circumstances. I shall provide the necessary theory. Regarding the additional historical supplement, which you should give as an appendix to your book, all the material, excepting the 'FACTORY REPORTS',†b the 'Children's Employment Commission Reports' and the 'Board of Health Reports',†c is utter trash and scientifically unusable. Your energy being undiminished by carbuncles, you will easily cope with this material within 3 months.

Page Break me42.224

Page me42.224

As far as the Russians are concerned, I have no material. As soon as my condition permits, I shall go to the Museum†d about it and look around for it among the Poles. There's been a great crisis with The Workman's Advocate, which will appear tomorrow as The Commonwealth, a transformation pushed through by the bourgeois element, for which my absence from the COUNCIL was to blame. From my sickbed I have, nevertheless, managed to baulk the plot by means of written threats, with the effect that Eccarius has been made editor instead of a gentleman from The Nonconformist, and an EDITORIAL SUPERVISION COMMITTEE has been appointed which will meet weekly. It consists of myself, Fox, Howell, Weston and Miall (the PUBLISHER-EDITOR of The Nonconformist and our PUBLISHER NOW), 4 atheists against one 'PROTESTANT'.†290 POOR Eccarius now needs your article†e urgently (there being a whole mass of intrigues and I unable to help; my book requires all my writing time).
Page me42.224

Your wine is having a miraculous effect on me. While my illness was in full bloom I had to buy bad PORTWINE — it being the only wine suitable for an acute carbuncle condition.
Page me42.224

Apropos. As I see from one of the latest 'FACTORY REPORTS', John Watts has published a pamphlet 'ON MACHINERY.'†f Ask him, on my behalf, to send me a copy.

Page Break me42.225
Page me42.225

I am going to write a few lines to Wilhelm†a cursing him for his spinelessness. The collapse of the Social-Demokrat and of all the Lassallean trash is, of course, the very thing we want.†291
Page me42.225

Lyons (the workers there) have sent £8 to the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL.
Page me42.225

Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me42.225
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

128
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON†b
Page me42.225
Manchester, 10 February 1866

Dear Moor,

I have just spoken to Gumpert here and discussed your condition with him. He is firmly of the opinion you should try arsenic. He has used it in one case of carbuncles and one of very virulent furunculosis, and achieved a complete cure in approx. 3 months. He is now giving it to three ladies, so far with the greatest of success; they are positively thriving on it. FOWLER'S SOLUTION is what he is giving, I believe it is 3 drops 3 times a day (I am not quite so sure about that any more), but altogether the patient takes about I grain of arsenic a day. In view of the specific effect that arsenic has with all skin diseases, there is every prospect of it being effective with you, too. He thinks iron would only have a symptomatic and hence strengthening effect. And with arsenic there is no special diet to be observed at all, just living well.
Page me42.225

You really must at last do something sensible now to shake off this carbuncle nonsense, even if the book†c is delayed by another 3 months. The thing is really becoming far too serious, and if, as you say yourself, your brain is not UP TO THE MARK for the theoretical part, then do give it a bit of a rest from the more elevated theory. Give over working at night for a while and lead a rather more regular life. When you are yourself again, come up here for a fortnight or so, so that you have a bit of a change, and bring enough papers along with you for you to be able to do a spot of work here — if you like. Incidentally, the 60 sheets will make 2 thick volumes.†233 Can you not so arrange things that the first volume at least is sent for printing first and the second one a few months later? This would keep both publisher†a and public happy and yet no time will have been lost realiter.†b

Page Break me42.226
Page me42.226

You must also bear in mind that as things stand now, the situation on the Continent may change rapidly. In Prussia things are moving with marvellous rapidity. Bismarck is pressing hard for a crisis. First the decision by the Supreme Tribunal,†292 and then now the threat of an authentic interpretation of the constitution by the King.†c The philistines' last illusion about peaceful historical development has gone to the devil. The first plausible pretext, perhaps no more than a serious complication over Schleswig-Holstein even, may be the spark that sets it off, once the troops are concentrated on the frontier; although I myself hardly believe that anything will happen without a more general cause, but the possibility is there. What would be gained in these circumstances by having perhaps a few chapters at the end of your book completed, and not even the first volume can be printed, if events take us by surprise? Something may happen any day in France, too, in Austria the attempted reconciliation with Hungary can only lead to sharper division.†293

Page me42.226
Q.E.D.: get yourself back on your feet and ad hoc†d give the arsenic a try.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.226
Kind regards to Madame†e and the YOUNG LADIES.

Page me42.226
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.227

129
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.227
[London,] 13 February 1866

DEAR FRED,
Tell or write to Gumpert to send me the prescription with instructions for use. As I have confidence in him, he owes it to the best of 'Political Economy'†a if nothing else to ignore professional etiquette and treat me from Manchester.
Page me42.227
I was laid up again yesterday with a vicious cur of a carbuncle erupting on left loin. If I had enough money, that is, more>-0, for my family, and if my book were ready, I would care not a fig whether I was thrown on the charnel heap today or tomorrow, alias perished. But things being as they are, that cannot be contemplated just yet.
Page me42.227
As far as this 'damned' book is concerned, the position now is: it was ready at the end of December.†227 The treatise on ground rent alone, the penultimate chapter, is in its present form almost long enough to be a book in itself.†294 I have been going to the Museum†b in the day-time and writing at night. I had to plough through the new agricultural chemistry in Germany, in particular Liebig and Schönbein, which is more important for this matter than all the economists put together, as well as the enormous amount of material that the French have produced since I last dealt with this point. I concluded my theoretical investigation of ground rent 2 years ago. And a great deal had been achieved, especially in the period since then, fully confirming my theory incidentally. And the opening up of Japan†295 (by and large I normally never read travel-books if I am not professionally obliged to) was also important here. So here was the 'SHIFTING SYSTEM', as it was applied by those curs of English manufacturers to one and the same persons in 1848-50, being applied by me to myself.†296

Page me42.227

Although ready, the manuscript, which in its present form is gigantic, is not fit for publishing for anyone but myself, not even for you.
Page me42.227

I began the business of copying out and polishing the style on the dot of January first, and it all went ahead swimmingly, as I naturally enjoy licking the infant clean after long birth-pangs. But then the carbuncle intervened again, so that I have since been unable to make any more progress but only to fill out with more facts those sections which were, according to the plan, already finished.

Page Break me42.228
Page me42.228

Otherwise, I agree with you and shall get the first volume to Meissner as soon as it is ready.†a But in order to complete it, I must at least be able to sit.
Page me42.228

Please do not forget to write to Watts,†b as I have now reached my chapter on machinery.†297
Page me42.228

Could you not dash off an article on Prussia for The Commonwealth, under the rubric Berlin? Bear in mind how important it is for us to have a firm footing in London. The articles on Poland†c can take their time. But with the German papers, which are at your disposal, it would be fun for you to write about Prussia. My influence here depends partly on people seeing at last that I do not stand entirely alone.
Page me42.228

I am less bothered by political affairs (not qua†d individual but on account of the book) than by the economic situation, which is pointing more and more ominously to a crisis.
Page me42.228

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.228

Greetings to your 'Irish' lady-friend.†e The Irish ladies, notabene Roses O'Donovan, etc., have thanked us for the appeal in our paper and for Fox's articles.†298

Page me42.228
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.229

130
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.229
[London,] 14 February 1866

Dear FRED,

Most sincere thanks for the first half of the £50 note.

Page me42.229

In respect of the 'Viennese',†a I wrote him LONG SINCE that he should write to you. I told him I was agreeable to anything, except that I did not know UNDER PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES if I would be capable of supplying a contribution for the first issue.†281

Page me42.229

That cur of a carbuncle is working away, but I hope to be rid of it in a few days.

Page me42.229

Things are really aboil in Prussia. Yet the patience of our friends is great. If Bismarck sends them home, everything will now result in banqueting and Kappel-Klassenmann.†224 On the other hand, if the Chamber sits for long, the outcome may be nasty.†299

Page me42.229

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.229
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

131
MARX TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER†300
IN LONDON
Page me42.229
[London,] 14 February 1866

Dear Lessner,

You will see what the matter is from the enclosed letter from Freiligrath. Please do what you can.

Page me42.229

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page Break me42.230

Page me42.230

I cannot find Freiligrath's letter. His wife will give you the details about Ulmer's situation. His wife has died, and he has no money to bury her. Our Society†a must therefore do something at once. You must send the money to Freiligrath.

Page me42.230

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

132

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me42.230

Manchester, 19 February 1866

Dear Moor,

Had encl. £10 note for you in my pocket, but could not get to speak to you on your own yesterday.†301 I hope that today's expiry date for the bill of exchange passed uneventfully and that the trifling deficit from the full amount occasioned no unpleasantness.

Page me42.230

I have forgotten everything — 'Klein Zaches'†b that I put on top of a row of upright books in the book-case at the foot of the sofa in your room, the 'FACTORY REPORT'†c and The Commonwealth. Please send me a copy of the latter for me to read Fox's article.†d

Page me42.230

How is the upper carbuncle, and the one down on your thigh? I have not yet been able to see Gumpert.

Your

F.E.

Page me42.230
Sincere regards to the LADIES and especially little Tussy†e from her chimpanzee.

Page me42.230
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.231

133
MARX TO ENGELS†6
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.231
[London,] 20 February 1866

Dear FRED,
You can imagine how opportunely the £10 came. I had been served with two threats of distraint, for £6 “0” 9d. for the bloody municipal TAXES, and for 1sh. 16d. for the QUEEN'S TAXES. And I had until Friday to pay.
Page me42.231
As regards the carbuncles, the position is:
Concerning the upper one, from my long practical experience I was able to tell you that it really needed lancing. Today (Tuesday), after receiving your letter, I took a sharp razor, a RELICT OF DEAR LUPUS, and lanced the cur myself. (I cannot abide doctors meddling with my private parts or in their vicinity. Furthermore, I have Allen's testimony THAT I AM ONE OF THE BEST SUBJECTS TO BE OPERATED UPON. I always recognise what has to be done.) The sang brûlé,†a AS MRS LORMIER SAYS, spurted, or rather leapt, right up into the air, and I now consider this carbuncle buried, although IT STILL WANTS SOME NURSING.
Page me42.231
As far as the lower cur is concerned, it is becoming malignant and is beyond my control and kept me from sleeping the whole night through. If this diabolical business advances, I shall have to send for Allen, of course, as, owing to the locus of the cur, I am unable TO WATCH AND CURE it myself. And in general it is clear that ON THE WHOLE I know more about carbuncular complaints than most doctors.
Page me42.231
And by the by, I still hold to the view that I suggested to Gumpert during my last STAY in Manchester: that is, that the itching and scratching between my testis and posterior over the past 2 1/2 years and the consequent peeling of the skin have been more aggravating to my constitution than anything else. The business started 6 months before the first monster carbuncle which I had on my back, and it has persisted ever since.

Page me42.231

My dear BOY, in all these circumstances one appreciates MORE THAN EVER the good fortune of a friendship such as exists between ourselves. You should know for your part that there is no relationship I value so highly.

Page Break me42.232
Page me42.232

I will send you 'Zaches' and 'FACTORY REPORTS'†a tomorrow. You will understand, MY DEAR FELLOW, that in a work such as mine,†b there are bound to be many SHORTCOMINGS in the detail. But the composition, the structure, is a triumph of German scholarship, which an individual German may confess to, since it is IN NO WAY his merit but rather belongs to the nation. Which is all the more gratifying, as it is otherwise the SILLIEST NATION under the sun!
Page me42.232

The fact, which Liebig had 'denounced' and which prompted Schönbein's investigations, was this:
Page me42.232

The upper layers of the soil always contain more ammonia than the deeper ones, instead of containing less of it as they would have to do if they had lost it through cultivation. The fact was recognised by every chemist. Only the cause was unknown.
Page me42.232

Hitherto, decay was considered to be the sole source of ammonia. All chemists (including Liebig) denied that the nitrogen in the air could serve as a nutrient for plants.
Page me42.232

Schönbein proved (by experiment) that any flame burning in the air converts a certain quantity of the nitrogen in the air into ammonium nitrate, that every process of decomposition gives rise to both nitric acid and ammonia, that the mere evaporation of water is the means causing the formation of both plant nutrients.
Page me42.232

Finally, Liebig's 'jubilation' at this discovery:

'The combustion of a pound of coal or wood restores to the air not merely the elements needed to reproduce this pound of wood or, under certain conditions, coal, but the process of combustion in itself' (note the Hegelian category) 'transforms a certain quantity of nitrogen in the air into a nutrient indispensable for the production of bread and meat.'†c

Page me42.232

I FEEL PROUD OF THE GERMANS. IT IS OUR DUTY TO EMANCIPATE THIS 'DEEP' PEOPLE.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.232
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.233

134
ENGELS TO MARX†302
IN LONDON
Page me42.233
Manchester, 22 February 1866

Dear Moor,

Thanks for 'Klein Zaches',†a etc., which I take as evidence that you have received the £10.

Page me42.233

I have just come from Gumpert, whom I did not see until this evening on account of my influenza and having missed him several times. He considers that you should start the arsenic at once. Whatever happens it can do you no harm, but only good. He dismisses Allen's comment that it does not agree with you as rubbish. He also considers treatment with poultices to be nonsense; it only encourages inflammation of the skin, which is precisely what needs to be suppressed, while it does not encourage suppuration. Ice-packs would be much better, but as long as you are in Allen's hands, these could only be applied if he prescribed them, of course. But above all, sea air, to restore your strength. A spot on the south coast would be preferable, it is true, as in this season the weather there is better than up here, but if you would rather be near Gumpert, there are places enough on the coast here WITHIN AN HOUR'S RIDE FROM MANCHESTER.

Page me42.233

You can see I have got Gumpert to change his attitude, so that he is now pressing you to take arsenic at once, even though Allen is still treating you externally, whereas before, for reasons of etiquette, he would not hear of it. But do me a favour now and take the arsenic, and come up here just as soon as your condition permits, so that you do at last get better. With this constant procrastination you are just ruining yourself; no one can withstand such a chronic succession of carbuncles for long, apart from the fact that eventually you may get one that becomes so acute as to be the end of you. And where will your book†b and your family be then?

Page me42.233

You know that I am prepared to do what is in my power, and, in this extreme case, more even than I ought to risk in other circumstances. But you must be sensible, too, and do me and your family the one favour of getting yourself cured. What would become of the whole movement if anything were to happen to you, and the way you are proceeding, that will be the inevitable outcome. I really shall not have any peace day or night until I have got you over this business, and every day that passes without my hearing anything from you, I worry and imagine you are worse again.

Page Break me42.234

Page me42.234
Nota bene. You should never again let things come to such a pass that a carbuncle which actually ought to be lanced, is not lanced. That is extremely dangerous.
Page me42.234
Kindest regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.234
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

135
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.234
[London,] 2 March 1866

DEAR FRED,
The thing will soon be all over now. I think that by tomorrow or the day after at the latest I shall not merely be able to rise from my bed, but to go out, and that with this last malignant cur the series of carbuncles is finished, FOR THIS SEASON. I also feel much better again GENERALLY. This last attack was atrocious. It did not merely put paid to any work, but to any reading, too, EXCEPT Walter Scott.
Page me42.234
I found the arsenic not at all unpleasant to begin with (when the taste of the CINNAMON predominated). Now I am beginning to find its specific flavour most repugnant. Otherwise, I believe it was helpful. I took it 3 TIMES A DAY from the outset.
Page me42.234
How are things with your contributions for The Commonwealth?†a
Page me42.234
And with John Watts 'ON MACHINERY'?†b

Page Break me42.235
Page me42.235
The sofa to which I have been confined for 9 days now is in my study, but right by the window, so that at certain times of day, e.g. as at this moment, I can enjoy a most refreshing breeze.

Page me42.235
You have no further cause for anxiety now, but AS FAR AS ACTUAL OUTBREAKS ARE CONCERNED you can regard the business as terminated.
Page me42.235
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.235
Little Tussy†a 'SENDS HER BEST COMPLIMENTS TO HER CHIMP'.

Page me42.235
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

136
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.235
Manchester, 5 March 1866

Dear Moor,
Gumpert is décidément†b of the opinion that, just as soon as your condition allows, you should go to the seaside for at least 4 weeks and in any case have a change of air. Now what do you think of that? Would you prefer to go to a seaside resort near here (Lytham, or Blackpool or New Brighton perhaps) or on the south coast? Make your MIND up about it, and if the former, then come up here. I shall raise the money for the purpose and, as I promised you, a bit more as well. These constantly recurring carbuncles have really just got to stop, or you will be unable either to work or to do anything else. So, you must reach a decision.
Page me42.235
You yourself disrupted my contributions for The Commonwealth†c by asking for something on Prussia as well as on the Polish business.†d As a result, the one was interrupted and the other not completed in time either. I was suddenly collared to CANVASS for the money for the Schiller Institute†28 which I told you about, and that kept me off it every evening last week, and I have to go out again now.†e I expect to have got that behind me in a fortnight but, at all events, to dispatch an article on Poland this week.

Page Break me42.236
Page me42.236

Fine revelations from Jamaica. And what an embarrassment they are to The Times, as well as Russell's resignation. The paper is going DOWN very rapidly.†303
Page me42.236
If possible, you must read the statement by the Cologne-Minden directors about their shady deal. They say that insofar as they are party to it, it is in law just a private arrangement; as soon as the King†a ratifies it, he will have to sort out the constitutional side. In other words, the bourgeoisie in Cologne themselves do not want to have a constitution.†304
Page me42.236
Kind regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.236
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

137
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.236
[London,] 6 March 1866

Dear FRED,
As it seems decided I am to go away, I think it is best to go to Margate. The air is particularly good there. Besides, not far from London in case anything were to happen. And although the last carbuncle has also disappeared, the wound has not healed up yet, so lengthy train journey would be awkward for me.
Page me42.236
Now what ought I to do 'AT LARGE'? — according to Gumpert's prescriptions?
Page me42.236
I am going out into the open air again for the first time today.
Page me42.236
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.236
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.237

138
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.237
[Manchester, about 10 March 1866]

CONFIDENTIAL!

Excerpt from a letter to Freiligrath,†305 who asked me for information on some commercial philistine and, at the same time, expressed his regret at your illness and wished you well:

Page me42.237

'Marx needs to rest from working at night and from worry, as well as sea-air and good living. That will put him back on his feet all right. Such troubles are spared to plump bourgeois like Blind. Instead, the poor man has the misfortune that for all the levers and thumbscrews he applies, nobody speaks of him other than Blind himself. Such fellows have their carbuncles on the insides of their skulls. But enough of the "DELIBERATE LIAR".

Page me42.237

'How are you actually doing now? I hear the bank in London†a has closed down. A good thing too, for you, in the long run, the liaison with Fazy and Co. could have compromised you later in some unforeseen way.†212 I am sure you will soon pick up a decent position again.'

Page me42.237

In haste.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.237
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

139
MARX TO ENGELS†33

IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.237
[London,] 10 MARCH 1866

DEAR FRED,

Did you receive the lines I wrote last Tuesday?†b I need to know in order to ascertain whether my letters are being tampered with. It was addressed to MRS Burns.

Page Break me42.238
Page me42.238

If I am to go to the seaside at all, it will have to be now, as I do not wish to waste any time. I told you in my last letter that in that case I wanted to go to Margate, and the requisite steps must be attended to now. I also asked you in my little letter what Gumpert has in mind by the 'cure'? Continuing with the arsenic, etc., or what?
Page me42.238

Everything is at sixes and sevens on the 'INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL' and the 'newspaper board',†a and a great desire is being manifested to rebel against the absent 'tyrant',†b but at the same time to wreck the whole shop as well.†c My wound (from the last carbuncle) has healed up sufficiently (and so far no new one has appeared) for me to go out into company next Monday and Tuesday; but, at the same time, I can still scarcely endure those late meetings in some corner of Fleet Street,†306 and what is even worse, I am still in a state of such nervous irritation that I could hardly contain the storms within 'the bounds of pure reason',†d but would more probably explode with excessive violence, which would be pointless.
Page me42.238

When shall we finally see Polish article I?†e

Your
K.M.

Page me42.238
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

140
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER†f
Page me42.238
[London,] 15 March 1866

My dear Frederic,

The bearer of these lines is citizen Orsini, the brother of the immortal martyr,†g and a member of our association. He leaves

Page Break me42.239
England for the United States, whence he will return in some months. Your advice on commercial matters may, perhaps, prove useful to him. At all events, you will be delighted to make his personal acquaintance.

Yours truly
K. Marx

Page me42.239
Mr Frederic Engels, 7 Southgate, St Mary's, Manchester.
Page me42.239
PS. I know that Bradlaugh is an honest man and occupies a respectable position in the city as solicitor.

Page me42.239
First published, in German, in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in the language of the original, English, in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Reproduced from the original

141
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.239
Margate [16 March 1866] 5 Lansell's Place

Dear FRED,
I arrived here yesterday evening.†307 I have been dashing about all day today (after taking a warm sea-bathe) and have only just returned to my lodgings (right by the sea) in order to send you my address before the post-office closes. You will get more detailed news tomorrow. Your first Polish article†a will appear not this week, but next. The air here is wonderful.
Page me42.239
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.239
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.240

142
MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER JENNY
IN LONDON
Page me42.240
Margate, 16th March, 1866
5 Lansell's Place

My dear Child,

I arrived here yesterday evening, 3/4 past seven. According to your instructions I left my luggage behind me in the cloakroom and was then landed by the omnibus at a small inn called the 'King's Arms'. Having ordered a rump steak, and being shown to the coffee room, which was rather dimly illuminated, I took rather fright (you know my anxious temper) at a lean, long, stiff sort of man, midway between parson and commis-voyageur, solitarily and motionlessly seated before the chimney. From the vagueness of his glanceless eye, I thought him a blind man. I was confirmed in that notion by some long, scarf-like, narrow white thing spread over his legs, with regular holes in it. I fancied it to be paper outcut by the blind man to serve as a catchpenny from the frequenters of the inn. When my supper arrived the man began somewhat to wave, quietly took off his boots and warmed his elephantine feet at the fire. What with this agreeable spectacle, and his supposed blindness, and what with a rump steak, which seemed, in its natural state, to have belonged to a deceased cow, I passed the first Margate evening anything but comfortably. But, in compensation, the bedroom was snug, the bed clean and elastic and the sleep sound. When at the breakfast table, who should step in but the man of the evening. He turned out to be deaf and not blind. What had so much vexed me — I mean the thing on his knees — was a pocket handkerchief of singular fashion, with a greyish ground interspersed by black eyes which I had mistaken for holes. Feeling shy of the man, I settled my bill as soon as possible and, after some erratic course, hit upon my present lodging, in front of the sea, a large sitting room and a bedroom, 10/- per week. When striking my bargain the additional clause was agreed upon that, on your arrival, you will get your bedroom for nothing.
Page me42.240

The first thing I did was to take a warm sea-bathe. It was delicious, so is the air here. It is a wonderful air.

Page Break me42.241
Page me42.241

As to boarding houses, they are about empty now, and, as I understood the librarian, hardly yet prepared for the reception of guests. As to dining-rooms, there was some difficulty to get at a proper one, but by the by this obstacle will be overcome.
Page me42.241

And now, with my best compliments to all, by-bye.

Yours
Mohr

Page me42.241
I have already walked five hours to-day.

Page me42.241
First published, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, 1925 and in the language of the original, English, in The Socialist Review (London), No. 44, September 1929

Reproduced from the original

143
MARX TO ANTOINETTE PHILIPS IN SALT-BOMMEL
Page me42.241
Margate, 18 March 1866
5 Lansell's Place

My dear Child,
From the address you will see that I have been banished, by my medical adviser, to this seaside place, which, at this time of the year, is quite solitary. Margate lives only upon the Londoners, who regularly inundate it at the bathing season. During the other months it vegetates only. For my own part right glad I am to have got rid of all company, even that of my books. I have taken a private lodging which fronts the sea. In an inn or Hotel one might have been exposed to the danger of falling in with a stray traveller, or being pestered by local politics, vestry interests, and neighbourly gossip. As it is, 'I care for nobody, and nobody cares for me'.†a But the air is wonderfully pure and reinvigorating, and you have here at the same time sea air and mountain air. I have become myself a sort of walking stick, running up and down the whole day, and keeping my mind in that state of nothingness which Buddhaism considers the climax of human bliss. Of course, you have not forgotten the pretty little diction: 'When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be; when the devil was well, the devil a monk was he.'

Page Break me42.242
Page me42.242
Withdrawing a little from the seaside, and roaming over the adjacent agricultural districts, you are painfully reminded of 'civilisation', because from all sides you are startled by large boards, with governmental proclamations on them, headed: Cattle Disease. The ruling English oligarchs were never suspected to care one farthing for 'der Menschheit ganzes Weh',†a but as to cows and oxen, they feel deeply. At the opening of Parliament, the horned cattle gentlemen of both houses, commoners and lords, made a wild rush at government. All their talk sounded like a herd of cows' lowing, translated into English. And they were not like honest king Wiswamitra, 'der kämpfte und büsste für die Kuh Sabalah'.†b On the contrary. They seized the opportunity to 'battre monnaie'†c out of the cows' ailings at the expense of the people.†308 By the by, the East sends us always nice things — Religion, Etiquette, and the Plague in all forms.

Page me42.242

I am very glad to hear of Waarátje's†d winding up adventure. Verily, verily, I tell thee, my sweet little cousin, I always felt deep sympathy for the man, and always hoped that one day or other he should fix his melting heart in the right direction, and not persevere performing the nasty part in the children's tale: 'The Beast and the Beauty'.†e I'm sure he will make a good husband. Is his inamorata a 'Bommelerin' or an importation?
Page me42.242

A few days before leaving London, I made the acquaintance of Mr Orsini, a very fine fellow, the brother of the Orsini who was sent to the grave for sending Bonaparte to Italy.†309 He has now left England for the U. States, in commercial matters, but during the few days of our acquaintance, he did me good service. Although an intimate friend of Mazzini's, he is far from sharing the antiquated antisocialist and theocratical views of Mazzini. Now, during my forced and prolonged absence from the Council of the International Association, Mazzini had been busy in stirring a sort of revolt against my leadership. 'Leadership' is never a pleasant thing, nor a thing I ambition. I have always before my mind your father's†a saying in regard to Thorbecke that 'der Eselstreiber den Eseln immer verhasst ist'.†b But having once fairly embarked in an enterprise which I consider of import, I certainly, 'anxious' man as I am, do not like to give way. Mazzini, a most decided hater of freethinking and socialism, watched the progress of our society with great jealousy. His first attempt of making a tool of it and fastening upon it a programme and declaration of principles of his hatching, I had baffled.†c His influence, before that time very great with the London working class, had sunk to zero. He waxed wroth, when he saw that we had founded the English Reform League†155 and a weekly paper, The Commonwealth, to which the most advanced men of London contribute, and of which I shall send you a copy after my return to London. His anger increased, when the editors of the Rive gauche (the journal of la jeune France,†d directed by Rogeard, author of the Propos de Labienus,†310 Longuet, etc.) joined us, and when he became aware of the spread of our society on the Continent. He improved my absence, to intrigue with some English workingmen, raise their jealousies against 'German' influence, and even sent his bully, a certain Major Wolff (a German by birth) to the Council there to lodge his complaints and more or less directly to denounce me. He wanted to be acknowledged as 'the leader (I suppose par la grace de dieu†e) of the continental democratical movement'. In so doing, he acted so far quite sincerely, as he utterly abhors my principles which, in his eyes, embody the most damnable 'materialism'. This whole scene was enacted behind my back, and after they had made sure that my malady would not allow me to be present. The English wavered, but, although still very weak, I rushed to the following séance, Mr Orsini accompanying me. On my interpellation, he declared them that Mazzini had lost his influence even in Italy and was, from his antecedents and prejudices, quite disabled from understanding the new movement.†311 All the Foreign secretaries declared for me, and, if you, our Dutch secretary,†312 had been present, I hope you would have also cast your vote for your humble servant and admirer. As it was, I carried a complete victory over this redoubtable adversary.†313 I think that Mazzini has now had enough of me and will make bonne mine á mauvais jeu.†a

Page Break me42.243

Page Break me42.244
Page me42.244
I hope to receive a few lines from you. Don't forget that I am quite an insulated hermit.

Your most sincere friend
Bloch†b

Page me42.244
First published in the language of the original, English, in the International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part 1, Assen, 1956

Reproduced from the text of the journal

144
MARX TO LAURA MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.244
Margate, 20 March 1866
5 Lansell's Place

My dear Cacadou,†c
Very good news indeed! I prefer Mrs Grach to the mother of all the Gracchi.†314 I am right glad that I have taken my lodgings in a private House, and not in an Inn or Hotel where one could hardly escape being pestered with local politics, vestry scandals, and neighbourly gossip. But still I cannot sing with the miller of the Dee, that I care for nobody and nobody cares for me.†d For there is my landlady, who is deaf like a post, and her daughter, who is afflicted with chronic hoarseness, but they are very nice people, attentive, and not intruding. As to myself, I have turned into a perambulating stick, running about the greatest part of the day, airing myself, going to bed at 10 o'clock, reading nothing, writing less, and altogether working up my mind to that state of nothingness which Buddhaism considers the element of human bliss. However, with all that, I shall not turn out, on Thursday,†e that paragon of beauty which worthy By Bye,†f in his phantastic mood, seems to expect. The toothache on the right side of the face has not yet altogether disappeared, and the same side is afflicted with an inflammation of the eye. Not that there is much to be seen of it, but that eye has taken to the vicious habit of shedding tears on its own account, without the least regard to the feelings of his master. But for this state of things, I should have my photogramme already taken, since you get here 12 cartes de visite for 3 s. 6 d. and 48 cartes for 10 sh. Mummelchen†a will oblige me by pacing her steps to Mr Hall and ordering him to prepare a solution of zink (he will know the composition of the drug) for my eye the which I expect to find ready on my arrival at London. This bad eye interferes with my nightrest. Otherwise, I am turning [over] a new leaf.

Page Break me42.245

Page me42.245

Withdrawing somewhat from the seaside, and roaming over the adjacent rustic district, you are painfully reminded of 'civilisation' by large boards, staring at you everywhere, headed 'Cattle Disease', and placarded over with a government proclamation, the result of the wild rush which the horned cattle gentry, lords and commoners, made at the government, on the opening of Parliament.†308

Oh, oh King Wiswamitra
What fool of an oxen art thou,
That thou so much wrangle'st and suffer'st
And all that for a cow.†b

Page me42.245

But if honest Wiswamitra, like a true Indian, tormented himself for the salvation of the cow Sabala, those English gentry, in the true style of modern martyrs, bleed the people to compensate themselves for their cows' ailings. The horn plague upon them! The horn, the horn, as discreet By Bye rings it lustily.

Page me42.245

On Sunday, I made up my mind to walk per pedes†c to Canterbury. Unhappily, I only formed this grand resolution, after having already measured for two hours the length and breadth of the piers and so forth. So I had already expended too much physical power, when I set out for the archbishop's seat or see, as you like. And from here to Canterbury are fully 16 miles. From

Page Break me42.246

Canterbury I returned to Margate by rail, but I had overworked myself, and could not sleep during the whole night. Limbs and loins were not tired, but the plants of my feet turned out tender hearted rogues. As to Canterbury, you know, of course, all about it, and more than I can boast, from your Eves, the trusted source of knowledge for all English Eves. (One cannot help, in your company, bad punning. But mark, Thackeray did worse, by playing upon Eves and Ewes.) Happily, I was too tired, and it was too late, to look out for the celebrated cathedral. Canterbury is an old, ugly, medieval sort of town, not mended by large modern English barracks at the one, and a dismal dry Railway Station at the other end of the oldish thing. There is no trace of that poetry about it, which you find in continental towns of the same age. The swaggering of the private soldiers and the officers in the streets, reminded me somewhat of Vaterland.†a In the inn, where I was scantily purveyed with some slices of cold beef, I caught the newest scandal. Captain Le Merchant, it seems, had been taken up by the police on Saturday night, for systematically knocking at the doors of all the most respectable citizens. And a summons will be taken out against the Captain because of this innocent pastime. And the redoubtable Captain will have to bend down his diminished head before aldermanic majesty. This is my whole packet of 'Canterbury Tales'.†b

Page me42.246
And now, Cacadou, pay my compliments to Elly†c to whom I shall write one of those days, and whose little letter was very welcome. As to Möhmchen,†d she will hear of me by the by.
Page me42.246
That damned boy Lafargue pesters me with his Proudhonism, and will not rest, it seems, until I have administered to him a sound cudgelling of his Creole pate.
Page me42.246
My good wishes to all.

Your master

Page me42.246
Has Orsini still received the letter I sent him?†111

Page me42.246
First published, in German, in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 2, 1907-1908 and in the language of the original, English, in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me42.247

145
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me42.247
Manchester, 22 March 1866

Dear Hermann,
Your document is with the LAWYER. Unfortunately, he was out today when I called, so I can't tell you whether he has already sent it to Liverpool, nor what progress has been made with the relevant fair copies. But I shall call again one day soon to prod him.
Page me42.247
I am writing to you today about the statement of my account which you sent to me and which had to wait until I had a quiet day to look through, as your entries for the last half year of 1864 have been done quite differently from ours. I therefore had to go through all the stuff again from the beginning and have at last sorted it out. The items coincide with the exception of the remittances which, according to your letter of 20 July 1864, were credited direct to my account with F. Engels & Co., so I shall presumably find these items in my statement of account with F. Engels & Co. These items are:

Remittance via Apolda		£	2.	2.	2
	» Munich	»	1.	2.	—
1864, 30 June {
	» Rieslingen	»	8.	19.	6
» 3 July	» London tot.	»	287.	3.	3

_____

Page me42.247

I find that, according to your statements of account I am actually losing money in respect of the transferred balances debited to me here. The exact calculation of the difference for the 18 months amounts to £1. 14. 9, and in future I shall therefore take the liberty of sending you a statement every 6 months for I naturally have no alternative but to accept the statements of the firm here. For my convenience, I am still keeping your account here separate as well.

Page me42.247

Please be so good as to send me a summary statement of my account with F. Engels & Co. as soon as possible, so that I can make up my private account-book. And from mid-year 1864, of course, as I have had no statement for this account from you since then at all — as far as I am aware. (If you didn't make up the account in mid-year 1864, then from the beginning of 1864.)

Page Break me42.248

Page me42.248

Business has got better again since last September; we have been fully occupied since then, at present even excessively so, and are setting up new DT-machines. Prices have improved too, and in the last half-year of 1865 we have even made enough to cover my costs from June 1864 onwards, with a little left over for myself as well; in the first year of my PARTNERSHIP we didn't make a brass farthing, you know, even without writing anything off for machinery. We must be doing splendid business now, but if cotton should drop below 18d. for MIDDLING ORLEANS owing to the greater supply, we shall lose everything again. However, I'm not expecting that to happen; I think good American cotton will, by and large, hold at approx. 19d., while Surat may admittedly fall a lot. Moreover, I think we are not getting more cotton than we need and will, by and large, stay at approx. 19d. for MIDDLING ORLEANS until about the autumn, when there may perhaps be some more speculating, which will force prices up.

Page me42.248

I shall be writing to Mother†a in a day or two, as soon as I can manage it; I received her letter last Monday and was glad to learn she is well again now. My kindest regards to her and all our brothers and sisters from

Your Friedrich

Page me42.248

Apropos. As you know, the capital credited to me here amounted to a little over £13,000 as far back as 30 June 1864, and since I am under no obligation to have more than £ 12,000 in the business, there is no need for you to provide cover for purchases through us; or I could send you some remittances, especially as approx. another £ 300 is due in interest at the end of June. I can also make payments to Funke on your account if you so wish; in this way, you can draw approx. £ 1,500 up to 30 June, or at once. Only please do not draw bills on us, since Gottfried†b objects, he thinks people might regard it as improper practice, the name of the firms being one and the same.

Page me42.248

Anton†c already has 4-5 patents now. There is no stopping him, every other day a new patent of his is announced in the press.

Page me42.248
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.248a
Page me42.248a

Karl Marx with his daughter Jenny. End of March 1866, Margate

Page Break me42.248b
Page Break me42.249

146
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.249
Margate, 24 March 1866
5 Lansell's Place

Dear FRED,

The belated arrival of this letter will tell you how 'professionally' I am applying my time here. I am reading nothing, am writing nothing. The mere fact of having to take the arsenic three times a day obliges one to arrange one's time for meals and for strolling by the sea and over the adjacent HILLS in such a way that one finds 'no time' for anything else. And in the evening one is too tired to do anything other than sleep. The weather is, by and large, rather raw, and in particular there is often an east wind blowing here, which is SOMEWHAT CHILLING, but one soon becomes accustomed to that, too. You can tell how much I am restored from the fact that last Sunday I marched per pedes†a to Canterbury (17 miles from here) in less than 4 hours. As regards company here, it does not exist, of course. I can sing with the MILLER OF THE DEE: 'I CARE FOR NOBODY AND NOBODY CARES FOR ME.'†b
Page me42.249

The day before yesterday†c I had to go to London in the evening to attend a 'soirée' of my daughters. My uncle†d had sent them £ 5 at Christmas, which was, however, 'borrowed' from them for GENERAL PURPOSES and which they only got back when your money arrived. They arranged their annual 'PARTY' with it and so bombarded me with letters that I 'made' for London, as Mr Nothjung used to say. But I returned to my hermitage here the very next morning (i. e., yesterday).
Page me42.249

Before setting off for Margate (which I did on Wednesday, 14 March†e), I had to attend the consecutive evening meetings, on 12 and 13 March, firstly of the SHAREHOLDERS of The Commonwealth†290 and secondly, on the 13th, of the CENTRAL COUNCIL, although still in a thoroughly wretched condition at the time.
Page me42.249

On the former occasion Mr Cremer had set everything up for Eccarius to be given his marching orders, which would probably have happened if I had not appeared. So, the meeting only achieved the 'voluntary' resignation of Mr Cremer from the editorial board. How the matter turned out later, I do not know, since the whole thing was only SETTLED 'provisionally' for one week, and the general SHAREHOLDERS-MEETING was deferred to 19 March. But it will probably mean beati possidentes†a here too, and as a result of that meeting Eccarius was, to begin with, the possidens.†b

Page Break me42.250
Page me42.250

The intrigue on the CENTRAL COUNCIL was closely bound up with the RIVALRIES and JEALOUSIES concerning the journal (Mr Howell wished to be EDITOR-IN-CHIEF and Mr Cremer ditto). Mr Le Lubez had used this to agitate against GERMAN INFLUENCE, and at the meeting of 6 March a beautifully and quietly prepared scene took place. To wit, Major Wolff suddenly appeared and made a solemn speech in his own name and in Mazzini's and in that of the ITALIAN SOCIETY†20 against the reply to Vésinier's attacks, which Jung had sent to the Echo de Verviers in the name of the CENTRAL COUNCIL.†274 He made a very violent attack on Jung and (impliciter†c) myself. Odger, Howell, Cremer, and others gave vent to their longstanding Mazzinism. Le Lubez fed the flames and, AT ALL EVENTS, a resolution was passed which included what amounted to an amende honorable†d for Mazzini, Wolff, etc. It was a serious matter, as you can see. (Of the FOREIGNERS, there were only A FEW PRESENT, and none of them voted.) It would really be a neat trick of Mazzini's to let me bring the Association so far and then to appropriate it for himself. He demanded that the English should recognise him as leader of the continental democrats, as though it was for the English gentlemen to appoint leaders for us!
Page me42.250

On Saturday (10 March) the FOREIGN SECRETARIES of the Association gathered at my house to hold a council of war (Dupont, Jung, Longuet, Lafargue, Bobczynski). It was resolved that, whatever happened, I was to attend the COUNCIL on Tuesday (13th) and protest against the PROCEEDINGS in the name of all the FOREIGN SECRETARIES. The PROCEEDINGS were irregular, you see, as Wolff is no longer a MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL, therefore no resolution on a matter in which he was personally implicated ought to be passed in his presence. Furthermore, I was to explain Mazzini's position vis-á-vis both our Association and the CONTINENTAL WORKINGMEN'S PARTIES, etc. Finally, the French were to bring Cesare Orsini (who is BY THE BY a personal friend of Mazzini) along to give EVIDENCE on Mazzini, Wolff and the STATE OF 'SOCIALISM' in Italy.

Page Break me42.251
Page me42.251

The affair went off better than I had ever expected†313; though the English element was unfortunately not well represented (on account of the bloody Reform League†155). I gave that Lubez a thorough dressing down. In any case, it has been made clear to the English (in fact only a minority is meant here, too) that the whole CONTINENTAL ELEMENT stands behind me as one man and that here it is by no means, as Mr Lubez had insinuated, a case of GERMAN INFLUENCE. Lubez had sought to put it to them that as LEADER of the ENGLISH ELEMENT on the COUNCIL, I was holding DOWN the other CONTINENTAL ELEMENTS; the English gentlemen are, on the contrary, now persuaded that by means of the CONTINENTAL ELEMENT I have got them entirely under my thumb, should they kick over the traces. More about that next time.

Page me42.251

Before coming here, I did, of course, pay off the most pressing DEBTS at home, as otherwise I should not have had a moment's peace of mind. If you can send me a little bit more at the end of this month, I would appreciate it. Meanwhile, the power of attorney from the Cape†a will be here at last, and thus something will at least be flowing into the coffers, even if it is not very much.

Page me42.251

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.†b

Your
K. M.

Page me42.251

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

147
ENGELS TO MARX
IN MARGATE
Page me42.251
Manchester, 27 March 1866

Dear Moor,

I had just made up my mind to write you a letter of congratulations on what I inferred from your silence to be your conscientious abstinence from work, when your letter arrived. It reassured me not a little, as I was beginning to suspect that another carbuncle might be the reason for your obstinate silence. You must keep taking plenty of exercise and continue visiting the archbishop in Canterbury per pedes,†a that is the sure way to eradicate it once and for all. In this case, and in others, too, the most important thing is to endure the boredom of the seaside for long enough; if you can, you should stay there for the whole of April, so that the trouble can be completely cured.

Page Break me42.252

Page me42.252

Old Hill has just come and interrupted me. So I must break off for today. The £10 encl.

Page me42.252

E/T 96963, Manchester, 20 January 1865.

Your
F. Engels

Page me42.252

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

148

MARX TO ENGELS†33

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.252

Margate, 2 April 1866

5 Lansell's Place

Dear FRED,

D'abord,†b the £10 received with kindest thanks.

Page me42.252

In my absence there has been a changement de décoration,†c or rather, de direction on The Commonwealth which will be realised next week.†290 Odger, EDITOR; Fox, SUBEDITOR; the 'SON OF TOIL'†d contracted to supply an article a week for 10s.; Cremer OUT OF PLACE; has also tendered his resignation as GENERAL SECRETARY of the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION'. Taken as a whole, I have no objection to the CHANGE. Eccarius could hardly have (or at least ought not to have) imagined that he would be allowed to retain nominal control from the moment the paper established itself. I warned him to no avail. It was a 'political' error on my part to have given way to his entreaties and proposed him by letter for his now defunct job. If I had not been ill, he would have knocked on the door in vain. I knew in advance that I would find the affair coming home to roost. Avoidance of any appearance of pursuing personal interests or abusing personal influence for clandestine purposes, and good understanding with the English must, of course, be more important to us than satisfying Eccarius' more or less justified ambition.

Page Break me42.253
Page me42.253

People of a dry disposition like Eccarius also have a certain dry egoism, which easily leads them astray. When the REFORM LEAGUE decided on the big MEETING in St Martin's Hall,†267 the League's COUNCIL nominated him as one of the PUBLIC SPEAKERS. The fellows in Potter's clique objected to him as a FOREIGNER. I warned him expressly not to accept his 'BRIEF'. However, he thought he had got over all-his troubles and flattered himself with the important part in the METROPOLITAN MOVEMENT. And he was A DEAD FAILURE. The poor fellow has, of course, lived a life of DISAPPOINTMENTS, and the honorary positions the English SPONTANEOUSLY allowed him, as Vice-President of the 'INTERNATIONAL', etc., deceived him to the point where he now believed he could suddenly make up for the whole of his past life. If he had followed me, operated slowly, maintained a modest posture, everything would be in the best of order. If I even went so far as to muddy myself for his sake, despite his lack of discipline and his wilful behaviour, I was moved to do so particularly by the consideration that he has always worked with us and never reaped the fruits of it. But one always makes BLUNDERS if one allows oneself to be influenced by suchlike considerations.
Page me42.253

As regards the newspaper itself,†a the danger — arising from lack of funds — lies in the growing encroachments and dominance of the Nonconformist clique.†b
Page me42.253

The accursed traditional nature of all English movements is manifesting itself again in the REFORM-MOVEMENT. The same 'INSTALMENTS' which but a few weeks ago were rejected with the utmost indignation by the people's party — they had even refused Bright's ultimatum of HOUSEHOLD SUFFRAGE — are now treated as a prize worthy to be fought for. And why? Because the Tories are screaming blue murder.†315 These fellows lack the METTLE of the old Chartists.

Page Break me42.254
Page me42.254

What do you think of the Austro-Prussian troubles†316? I see no continental papers at all. However, it is at least clear to me that Russia is behind the Prussians and that the Austrians, who know this, are nolens volens†a consoling themselves with French support. A pretty game these heads of state are playing! It is the eternal dilemma the German philistine confronts us with at every turn. For Bonaparte, real CIVIL WAR IN GERMANY would be a true GODSEND.

Page me42.254
Admittedly, there is still always the possibility that one fine day the affair will simply end with the worthy Bismarck's dismissal. But since Düppel,†27 'William the Conqueror'†b believes his 'glorious armies' are invincible, and a second Olmütz†c must appear to be a risk even to him, in view of the INTERNAL CONFLICT.†317
Page me42.254
The weather has been very bad here for several days, as if it had been made especially to order for the COCKNEYS who have invaded this place for the Easter holiday.
Page me42.254
For how long must I take the arsenic?
Page me42.254
MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.254
My friend Kaub has written to me from Paris that a certain M. Rebour has found a means to separate water into hydrogen and oxygen, using a method which would entail the expenditure of 2 sous per day FOR A FIRE TO MELT IRON WITH. He is, however, keeping the matter secret for the time being still, as on a previous occasion a discovery had been stolen from him and patented in London. Qui vivra verra.†d You know how often we have both dreamed of a cheap way of making fire from water.

Page me42.254
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.255

149
ENGELS TO MARX
IN MARGATE
Page me42.255
Manchester, 2 April 1866

Dear Moor,
I hope you have received the £10 which I sent to you in Margate. I was in Wales over the holiday and have at last got round to writing to you today.

Page me42.255

Orsini called on me, but unfortunately I could do nothing for him; I have no connections of any kind in New York any more, and it is OUT OF THE QUESTION to find anyone here to run the guano DODGE with him and advance the funds for it. He is a very nice fellow.

Page me42.255

Polish article No. 3†a will be done tomorrow evening, if nothing interferes. I shall send it direct to Eccarius, CARE OF EDITOR OF The Commonwealth. Unfortunately, the proof-reading is so abysmal, and it's about time that they stopped reprinting the LEADERS from The Nonconformist every week. It really is sheer impudence on Miall's part to pass the newspaper off so openly as a mere appendix of The Nonconformist.

Page me42.255

What do you say to Bismarck? It almost looks now as if he is pushing for war and is thereby offering Louis Bonaparte a splendid opportunity to acquire a piece of the left bank of the Rhine without any effort and thus set himself up á vie.†b Even though all those who bear any responsibility for this war — if it comes to that — deserve hanging, and I would with equal impartiality gladly extend that to the Austrians as well, yet I would most of all like to see the Prussians soundly thrashed. Then there are 2 possibilities: 1. the Austrians will dictate the peace in Berlin within a fortnight, and direct intervention from abroad will thereby be avoided, but at the same time the present regime in Berlin will be made impossible, and there will be another movement which will disavow the specific nature of the Prussian regime right from the outset; or 2. there will be a sudden change in Berlin before the Austrians arrive, in which case the new movement will also get under way.

Page me42.255

My opinion of the military situation is that the two armies are more or less evenly matched, and that the battles will prove very bloody. In any case, however, Benedek is a better general than Prince Frederick Charles, and unless Francis Joseph assists Benedek or Frederick Charles has some very good and influential staff officers, I believe the Prussians are in for a drubbing. Alone the braggery after Düppel†27 indicates that another Jena is possible.†203

Page Break me42.256

Page me42.256

If the first battle ends in a decisive defeat for the Prussians, there will be nothing to stop the Austrians advancing on Berlin. If Prussia wins, she has not the power to launch and sustain an offensive to Vienna across the Danube, let alone to Pest and beyond. Austria is quite capable of imposing a peace on Prussia SINGLE-HANDED, although Prussia cannot do so on Austria. Every Prussian success would thus be an encouragement to Bonaparte to intervene. Furthermore, both the German swine will now already be seeking to outbid each other with offers of German territory to the third, French, swine.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.256
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

150
ENGELS TO MARX
IN MARGATE
Page me42.256
Manchester, 6 April 1866

Dear Moor,

That the Russians are behind the Prussians at once struck me as very probable, too. The mere fact that the Austrian paper guilder is almost at par again and will thus have to be disturbed again, aroused suspicion, but the simultaneous Cuza affair†318 even more so, and ce cher†a Bismarck would not have put out all his efforts if he did not have the Russians behind him. It is possible that things are so far committed already that neither Bismarck nor that old jackass William have a say in the matter any more and that it depends entirely on the whim of the St Petersburgers whether there shall be war or peace. How clumsily this Bismarck is acting, incidentally. It is too absurd how he tries to represent the poor Austrians as the attacking party. Even more splendid, however, is the fact that the fellow is seriously thinking of convening a German parliament on 1 June to reform the federal constitution. This is to be a remedy against the smaller states: he — lui Bismarck†a — is appealing to the people instead of to the governments. That even called forth universal derisive laughter from the German philistines.†316

Page Break me42.257
Page me42.257

After the upheaval that has occurred on The Commonwealth,†b by the way, I was no longer able to get the said articles†c to the editors on time, as they would have had to take the roundabout route via Margate, so I am sending them to you for the next number. I found the relevant data on the emancipation of the Russian serfs in an article by Mazade, Revue des II Mondes.†d
Page me42.257

And how is your health now? You haven't had any further carbuncles or small furuncles? And how are you otherwise, are you building yourself up? Are you still visiting old 'Cantuar'†e per pedes†f? The arsenic must be taken for at least 3 months, and will not do you the slightest harm anyway.
Page me42.257

Otherwise, there is nothing new here except for a foul east wind and clouds of dust.

Page me42.257

How much longer are you thinking of staying in Margate? At least until the end of this month, I hope?

Page me42.257

Reform movement — general admission of general indolence. What a tiny INSTALMENT!†315

Your
F.E.

Page me42.257

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.258

151

MARX TO ENGELS†33

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.258

Margate, 6 April 1866

5 Lansell's Place

DEAR FRED,

I have been greatly restored here, and not the smallest sign of a return of the atrocious carbuncles. The spot where the last and most malignant one was still feels a little tender. Perhaps it healed too quickly and an atom of pus is still lurking beneath the healed skin. However, if that were so, the warm sea bathes and the rough towel that I dry myself with would no doubt have dissipated the foul matter; and indeed in the last two days this vestige of the wound seems to be disappearing altogether. The only drawback is a recurrence here of rheumatic pains in my right shoulder, which is seriously disturbing my sleep. I have now been here for nearly 4 weeks and have lived for my health's sake alone. It is time to put a stop to that soon.

Page me42.258

Our letters crossed, so that you have answered mine. You do not mention the possibility of Italy creating a diversion for Prussia's benefit.

Page me42.258

There can be no shadow of doubt that Russia is behind the Prussians, although she is allowing Mr Bonaparte to act as arbiter on the stage. One must not lose sight of the fact (to use a Hegelian turn of phrase) that the DANUBIAN MINE†318 WAS SPRUNG at the very moment that Bismarck made his démarche.†316

Page me42.258

Even granted, which is probable, that the Prussian curs withdraw with their tails between their legs, it remains clear, and must become clear even to the German philistines, that unless there is a revolution in Germany, the Hohenzollern and Habsburg curs will throw our country back for another 50-100 years by civil (dynastic) war.
Page me42.258

I must tell you frankly that the 'INTERNATIONAL' is in a sorry state, particularly since the impatience of the French has led to the congress being fixed for the end of May.†286
Page me42.258

THE FACT IS THIS, that the English LEADERS in London, now that we have given them a platform (to which must be added the inability of any Englishman to do two things at once), are very cool within our MOVEMENT proper. My absence for almost 3 months has done untold harm. What is to be done? In France, Belgium, Switzerland (and here and there in Germany, and even sporadically in America) the Association has made great and sustained progress. In England, the reform movement, which we brought into being, has almost KILLED us. That would be of no consequence, if the Geneva Congress had not been announced for the end of May, and if the Parisians, for whom this movement is the sole possibility, had not, through their own paper Le Congrés, made it almost impossible to prorogue the congress.†319 The English would soon see the rottenness of the REFORM MOVEMENT, as it now is. After my return the threat of flirtation with the Potter-clique, etc., would soon put everything back on the right lines. But THERE IS NO TIME. For the English even the FAILURE of the congress is a trifle. But for us? A fiasco of European dimensions!! I really do see scarcely a way out. The English have neglected to do anything which might give the congress any kind of respectable form. Que faire!†a Do you think I should go to Paris to put to the people there how impossible the congress now is? Answer soon. The only possible way out I can see is by agreement with the Parisians. On the other hand, I know that their position itself is at stake if the congress does not take place. Que faire! Mr Vésinier has challenged our Parisians. They are to go to Belgium to shoot it out with him. L'imbécile. As TO Orsini, I knew that there was nothing you could do. But I could not refuse him the introduction to you.†b

Page Break me42.259

Your
K.M.

Page me42.259
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

152
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me42.259
Manchester, 6 April 1866

Dear Hermann,

Best thanks for your statement of account for 27 March, which appears to be in order by and large. The only thing is, it is hard to check the interest if it is not given in detail as in other statements, and one just has to take the 'interest-account' at its word. But then, on 31 December 1865, you credit me with the transfer of 2,112,21.8 talers from Ermen & Engels, Barmen, whilst according to E. & E., Barmen's statement, the same transfer amounts to £316.18.2 and á 6/20 makes 2,169.1.8 talers. I can make no sense of that.

Page Break me42.260
Page me42.260

It is rather awkward that you make up your accounts on 31 December, whereas we do so on 30 June. I shall therefore only send you a statement once, on 31 December, which will thus never coincide with yours, but in the end it will make no odds.
Page me42.260

To keep our entries clear, I would be glad if you would enter all business items from E. & E. under E. & E., Barmen, and all private items under F. Engels & Co.
Page me42.260

I passed the information on the agent Brown straight on to Fr. Boelling; Karth wrote to us about a different matter.
Page me42.260

I do not advise you to obtain your SEWINGS through us as a rule, G. Ermen will always try to palm off his yarn from Pendlebury on you, and that would surely not always be in your interest. Besides, he would at once claim payment of 2% commission from you as the business expands. But if you can make use of his yarn (and why not, since we can use it?), you had best apply to us. I am today posting you a sample of No. 16, of which he has 120 BALES [at] 10 pounds, 7 LEAS in stock, and would take 2[s.] 1/2d. per No. 16, perhaps even less. You can also obtain the same yarn from the broker F.A. Schmits. Fine Nos. and COPS, on the other hand, in which G. Ermen has no interest we can always supply you with.
Page me42.260

How much does the hock cost? That is what really matters. And how much of it is there? You should have sent 3 dozen bottles straightaway, instead of 3.
Page me42.260

I shall ask around about the PONIES. Good, strong COBS, however, are at the moment much sought after here, and expensive, and bargains — a good pair in one lot — not easily come by.
Page me42.260

You don't think there'll be war either? It would be a terrible business if it came to that, and there is no telling where it would end. Recently, when the affair first started, I dreamed that I had got mixed up with an enormously large army somewhere on the Mosel. They were volunteers of some description, all manner of fellows dashing about full of self-importance, and now and again someone would shout, 'We're surrounded!' — at which they all took to their heels. At length, I found my way into the headquarters and encountered Peter and Gottfried Ermen there as GENERALS en chef, and Anton†a as chief-of-staff. Now I asked him a few questions, but received such bizarre replies that I finally asked him whether he did actually have maps of the area where he was? At which he looked down at me from a great height and said, 'Maps? We do everything here much better without maps.' When I tried to explain to him that he really could not manage without maps, nor even find quarters for his men, etc., he answered, 'If absolutely necessary, we do have some maps', and, with a look of triumph, he pulled a map of a quite different area, the other side of Aachen and Maastricht, out of his pocket. Don't imagine I have just made this up as a bad joke, that is literally how it happened.

Page Break me42.261
Page me42.261
Kindest regards to Mother†b — I'll write to her one of these days — and to all our brothers and sisters.

Your Friedrich

Page me42.261
First published abridged in the Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, 1921 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

153
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me42.261
Margate, 6 April 1866
5 Lansell's Place

My dear Miller,†c
You see from the address that I have been banished to the seaside by my medical adviser.†307
Page me42.261

After having received your last letter, and some letters on the part of our Berlin friends,†d my sickness assumed a really dangerous character. For some time it was very doubtful whether or not that decomposition of the blood, under which I labour, should get the better of me. It was only towards the middle of March that I was bodily enabled to remove myself to this place. I am now restored, and shall very soon return to London. But again a quarter of a year has been lost!

Page Break me42.262
Page me42.262
Write me immediately under my London address.
Page me42.262
After my return, I shall regularly send you The Commonwealth (under which altered title The Workman's Advocate is now published).†290 It is only since a few weeks that it has been registered for Transmission for abroad. Eccarius is no longer the editor, but only a contributor. It was to be foreseen, that so soon as the paper should get some sort of standing, a Foreigner would not be allowed to retain the nominal leadership.†a
Page me42.262
Write me
1) about the state of 'our' movement in Germany,
2) about the state of German politics.

Yours truly
K. M.

Page me42.262
My best compliments to Madame.†b

Page me42.262
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946 and in the language of the original, English, in: Wilhelm Liebknecht. Briefwechsel mit Karl Marx und Friedrich Engels, The Hague, 1963

Reproduced from the original

154
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.262
Margate, 6 April 1866
5 Lansell's Place

Dear Friend,

I shall return to London from here the day after tomorrow. My doctor banished me to this seaside place, where I am indeed much recovered. But another two months and more — February, March and half of April have thus been entirely lost to me again, and the completion of my book†c put back once more! It is enough to drive one out of one's mind.

Page Break me42.263
Page me42.263

I was suffering from CARBUNCLES, not furuncles. It was a dangerous business this time. You are, of course, right that 'dietetic' sins lay behind it. I am too accustomed to working at night, studying by day and writing by night. That, together with all manner of worries, private and public, and — whenever I am immersed in work — neglect of regular diet, exercise, etc., is quite enough to upset the blood.

Page me42.263

I received Mr Menke's contribution of 10 talers for the 'International' with your letter.†a I have not got the addresses of my French friends in Paris here. However, if Mr Menke approaches my friend K. Kaub (33, Rue des trois Couronnes du Temple), the latter can introduce him to V. Schily (German) and Tolain, Fribourg, etc., the people on the Paris Committee.

Page me42.263

The news from Germany is rather depressing.†316 Prussia is being egged on by Russia (and Bonaparte), Austria by the latter (following on rather reluctantly, in self-defence). Will our philistines at last realise that, unless there is a revolution to remove the Habsburgs and Hohenzollerns (it being superfluous to mention the lesser dung-beetles), another Thirty Years' War†320 and another partition of Germany are ultimately inevitable!

Page me42.263

A movement on the part of the Italians might help Prussia. But just considering Austria and Prussia on their own, the latter would almost certainly be at a disadvantage, for all their bragging about Düppel.†27 At all events, Benedek is a better General than Prince Frederick Charles. Austria might well impose a peace on Prussia SINGLE-HANDED, but Prussia cannot do so on Austria. Any Prussian success would be an encouragement to Bonaparte to interfere.

Page me42.263

Bismarck may perhaps have already drawn in his horns again as I write these lines to you. But that, too, would only delay the conflict. Such a delay is probable in my opinion.

Page me42.263

This turmoil in Germany is an extraordinary piece of luck for Bonaparte. His position is completely undermined. But war would give him a new lease of life.

Page me42.263

Write to me soon, and in particular about the situation in Germany.

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.263
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 2, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.264

155
ENGELS TO MARX
IN MARGATE
Page me42.264
Manchester, 10 April 1866

Dear Moor,

To all appearances, the Russians want war, their purpose seeming to be restoration of Poland under Russian rule and possibly annexation of Moldavia. The Kölnische Zeitung, which is, of course, in mortal fear of war, has sent J. von Wickede, its military man, to Bohemia, to inspect what is claimed to be Austria's state of armament. The fellow arrives — on 3 April, that is 14 days after Bismarck's note†316 — and everywhere finds things on a profoundly pacific footing, except that some Bohemian regiments have been transferred to their western districts, so that they can put themselves on a war footing more quickly. No soldiers recalled from leave, no fortress armed. Nothing.†a The whole disgraceful affair thus deliberately provoked by Bismarck.
Page me42.264

Furthermore: the Russians are concentrating troops on the Austrian and on the Prussian frontier with Poland, and the soldiers are saying quite openly that those who are positioned on the Prussian frontier will shortly occupy Posen as soon as the Prussian troops take the field against the Austrians. Apart from the fact that the Russians would thereby secure the rest of Prussian Poland for themselves immediately, their mission will also be to suppress any revolutionary movements in Berlin. However, that would in all probability be a miscalculation and, at any rate, disqualify the Hohenzollerns for the future.
Page me42.264

Finally, today's LEADER in The Times which comes down stupidly, mendaciously, woodenly but decisively on Prussia's side and represents Austria as the attacking party. That was written to order.†b
Page me42.264

In view of all this, war seems to me certain; the situation within Germany also makes it inevitable, following the new Austrian note appealing to the Confederation, as well as Monsieur Bismarck's proposal regarding a German parliament†321 — what a dunderhead the fellow must be to believe that that would assist him even in the very slightest! The Austrian note seems to be based on the assumption that the storm will break after all. Otherwise they would at least have left the back-door open to facilitate the Prussians' retreat through Bismarck's resignation. But the moment that they appeal to the Confederation, that's an end to it; another ministry in Prussia would not submit to a Confederation majority either.

Page Break me42.265

Page me42.265

Bonaparte will probably keep quiet, at least for the time being; Bismarck has already offered him Saarbrücken, etc., and, if need be, he would also make him a present of the Bavarian Palatinate. If he sees the Russians committed on the Prussian side, he won't risk anything rash.

Page me42.265

If the storm really does break, for the first time in history the course of events will depend on the attitude taken by Berlin. If the Berliners hit out at the right time, things may turn out well — but who can rely on them?

Page me42.265

As regards the congress of the International, I don't properly see how you can hope to avoid it.†a Nor do I see how a further postponement would improve things much. Aprés tout,†b any demonstration of that kind would in a certain sense — at least as far as we ourselves are concerned — always be a fiasco. But in full view of Europe? I believe that could still be avoided even now. After all, the Germans with their polyglot capacities would have the whole thing under their control, and it is precisely the Germans who are on our side. Whether the congress decides anything useful is a secondary matter, as long as all scandal can be avoided; and that surely will now be the case. General resolutions of a theoretical kind or referring to international support for strikes, etc., can surely be passed without any danger. Nevertheless, you must know that better than I, I cannot really judge of it from here. Meanwhile, I would definitely not go to Paris about it. You have no one to protect you, and the police will have no qualms about striking — emissary from a public workers' association with distinctly revolutionary tendencies, which can easily be used to conceal other clandestine matters — cela suffit.†c The whole business is just not worth the risk.

Page me42.265

You would do much better to stay in Margate until the last scar is no longer in the slightest degree susceptible, and do plenty of walking in the fresh air. Who knows how soon you will once more have need of a stout constitution. The atmosphere is highly electric, and we shall perhaps soon be in the midst of the storm again; that will no doubt also help resolve the difficulty with the congress.

Page Break me42.266

Page me42.266

I shall be letting you have a bit of money as soon as I can. I shall also try and see Gumpert and ask him about terminating the sea-cure and what you should do afterwards about the arsenic.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.266
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

156
ENGELS TO MARX†101
IN MARGATE
Page me42.266
[Manchester,] 13 April 1866

Dear Moor,

As I do not exactly know whether you are in Margate at the moment, I am today sending your wife and am telling her that I have informed you of it.

E/R 13430, Manchester, 21 January 1865 £10

E/P 43331, Manchester, 20 January 1865 £10-£20

Page me42.266

So, Bismarck has executed his suffrage universel coup,†321 even though without his Lassalle. It would appear that, after some show of reluctance, the German bourgeois will go along with it, for Bonapartism really is the true religion of the modern bourgeoisie. It is becoming increasingly clear to me that the bourgeoisie does not possess the qualities required to rule directly itself, and that therefore, unless there is an oligarchy as here in England capable of taking over, for good pay, the management of state and society in the interest of the bourgeoisie, a Bonapartist semi-dictatorship is the normal form; it promotes the great material interests of the bourgeoisie even against the bourgeoisie, but allows it no share in the government itself. Conversely, this dictatorship itself is in turn compelled unwillingly to adopt these material interests of the bourgeoisie. So, now we have Monsieur Bismarck adopting the programme of the National Association.†152 Its execution is admittedly quite another matter, but Bismarck will scarcely be baulked by the German bourgeois. A German, who has just returned from there, reports that he has already encountered many who have nibbled at this bait; according to Reuter (vide†a below), the people in Karlsruhe have approved of the matter, and the Kölnische Zeitung's unbounded embarrassment over the affair is a clear indication of a forthcoming change of course.

Page Break me42.267
Page me42.267

That Bismarck has direct agreements with the Russians, however, is once more proved firstly by the fact that not only The Times but Reuter, too, is beginning to lie on Prussia's behalf, in complete contrast to their usual custom. There is a method in the mistranslations with which the telegrams are now infested more than ever. Until a short while ago, against Prussia. Now against Austria. Reuter telegraphs: Austria would only go along with the plan if all the Austrian provinces (that is, including the non-German ones) were represented.†b In the German original it merely says: conditional upon the regions of Austria being represented, too. — Further: according to the Bromberger Zeitung and the Ostsee-Zeitung (the latter is a Russian organ), the Russians are continuing to gather more troops in the south-western provinces, from the Kingdom of Poland†322 to the Prut, doing so very slowly and unobtrusively; the soldiers are all expecting to move with Prussia against Austria, and those on the Warta repeat that their role is to occupy Posen so that the Prussians there can march away.

Page me42.267

The Russians can, incidentally, leave Schleswig-Holstein to the Prussians for the time being, as the Peace of Vienna and the annexation have, after all, saved the main issue for them: the Treaty of London and thereby the succession in Denmark.†323 If they have the Sound,†c what does Kiel signify to them?
Page me42.267

At all events, your best course is to stay in Margate until you no longer feel anything at all in the affected part, and you are in general convinced of a marked turn for the better.
Page me42.267

Write soon.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.267
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.268

157
MARX TO ENGELS†324
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.268
[London,] 23 April 1866

Dear FRED,

You will have had little difficulty in explaining my long silence as arising from the mental condition that is generated by more than 2 weeks of incessant toothache and rheumatism. However, a turning-point appears to have been reached today.
Page me42.268

As the pain of the rheumatism, which was particularly acute at night, greatly interfered with my sleep and my whole domestic routine — as a consequence of which I was several times attacked by vomiting — I thought it wise to stop, or suspend, the arsenic. But I shall continue with it again now (if a turning-point has really been reached). Nor is there the slightest sign of any furuncular or carbuncular bother, and I have not the slightest doubt that once I am over these INCIDENTS, which are connected more with the weather, I shall be fully restored. But indeed it is high time as I have already lost so much time.

Page me42.268

With the 'INTERNATIONAL' the situation is as follows: since my return†307 discipline has by and large been re-established. The successful intervention of the 'INTERNATIONAL' in the tailors' strike (by means of letters from the secretaries for France, Belgium, etc.) has also created a sensation among the TRADES UNIONS here.†325 With respect to the Geneva Congress, I have resolved to do all that I can here to promote its success, but not to attend it in person. I thereby evade all personal responsibility for its conduct.†a

Page me42.268

As far as The Commonwealth is concerned, the ENCROACHMENTS of Miall et Co. would be more tolerable if they were at least founded on the pretext of financial assistance really worthy of mention. But the fellows are exceedingly liberal with good advice and petty criticisms, and exceedingly parsimonious with CASH, so that the existence of the paper is assured only from one week to the next. Its readership is spreading week by week, but a PENNY PAPER, be it ever so successful, needs to be funded for at least a year ahead. To make it SELF-SUPPORTING in a shorter space of time is QUITE OUT OF THE QUESTION. If the paper is for the moment no worse than it is, then that is thanks to Fox alone, who has to fight a continuing battle.

Page Break me42.269

Page me42.269

For the present, they do not seem to be coming to blows in the Fatherland after all. Prussian braggadocio is slow indeed to draw the sword! Whatever the outcome, we shall have the pleasure of a Prussian disgrace before both a domestic and foreign audience. For all that, it still seems uncertain whether war might not break out one fine morning. The Russians want war (although they have indeed already gained and are continuing to gain much merely from the bickering and bellicose threats in Germany), and for Bonaparte it would be a GODSEND. At all events, Mr Bismarck has set 'the movement' going again in Germany.

Page me42.269

The phase of the Civil War†11 over, only now have the UNITED STATES really entered the revolutionary phase, and the European WISEACRES who believe in the omnipotence of Mr Johnson will soon be disappointed.

Page me42.269

In England, the Tories and Palmerstonian Whigs really deserve thanks for frustrating Russell's quiet SETTLEMENT.†326 At one of the latest sittings, Mr

Gladstone himself, expressed his 'melancholy' conviction that now, quite contrary to his benevolent expectations, a 'long series of struggles' was imminent.
Page me42.269
What do you say to the '8th' sage of the world — Mill?†a
Page me42.269
Best regards to MRS Lizzy.†b

Tout á vous†c
K.M.

Page me42.269
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

158
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON
Page me42.269
Manchester, 1 May 1866

Dear Moor,
I hope you are happily over your rheumatism and faceache and are once more sitting diligently over the book.†d How is it coming on, and when will the first volume be ready? By the by, you must go on with the arsenic, it should be taken for at least 3 months and is quite unconnected with the rheumatism, etc. The liver troubles may have been a factor contributing to the carbuncles, by disturbing the digestion or blood-formation, and, for that very reason, you will also have to go on taking several hours continuous exercise regularly each day and keep off working at night, so that everything can return to normal. Where the tendency to hyperaemia of the liver has established itself in such a classic and systematic form as in your case, it does not, of course, just vanish again all at once.

Page Break me42.270
Page me42.270
It's good that you have no more worries about the congress and the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION. Apropos, a shipload of 57 German tailors has been imported to Edinburgh TO PUT DOWN A STRIKE and 2 more loads are expected. Probably from Hamburg. Can you not discover the details in Edinburgh and put a stop to this, too?†327
Page me42.270

Bismarck wants war á tout prix,†a and after he failed in Bohemia, he seems likely to succeed in Italy.†328 I hope that, if he pulls it off, the Berliners will hit out. If they proclaim a republic there, the whole of Europe can be overturned in 14 days. But, but, will they? How do our connections there stand?
Page me42.270

Have you seen how little Louis Blanc, as a good démocrate impérial, is now declaring in the Temps that, if Prussia absorbs the smaller German states, France must have at least the left bank of the Rhine.†b There's a real revolutionary for you.
Page me42.270

In order to incite my ancient rage somewhat, in the last few days I have been reading the book by Röckel, the 49er imprisoned in Dresden, about his treatment in gaol.†c These infamies perpetrated by the Saxons exceed everything that I have ever come across. There will be a harsh reckoning to be had with a large number of villains. Such brutality was quite unknown in the old days before '48, and the Prussian fortresses of that time seem like paradise in comparison.
Page me42.270

These Adullamites really are tremendous jackasses to put up such resistance to this pauvre†d REFORM BILL, the most conservative thing that has ever been done here.†326 However, quem deus vult perdere,†e etc.
Page me42.270

I already sent my third article on Poland†f to The Commonwealth 3 weeks ago and asked for it to be returned if it should be too late for that week. I then received a reply from Fox a week later that it could not appear until the forthcoming issue, returning the article at the same time. Sent it off again on Wednesday, but too late. You were still in Margate at that time. I will send the following Nos. to you again if time does not make immediate, direct submission necessary.

Page Break me42.271
Page me42.271

Kind regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.271
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

159
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG†a

Page me42.271
[London,] 4 May 1866

My dear Friend,

As I am at this moment, after so long an interruption of work,†b very busily engaged in making up for lost time, you will excuse me for writing this time only a few lines.

Page me42.271

I shall send you to-day the last number of The Commonwealth. The financial position of the paper is such that it struggles from week to week and is altogether disabled from paying one farthing for Foreign Correspondence. Its circulation is increasing, but you know that a penny paper wants at least 20,000 subscribers, and cannot even then make the two ends meet without a goodly number of advertisements. The Commonwealth is of too recent an origin to come up to those requisites.

Page me42.271

The Congress at Geneva has been postponed for the 3d of September next.†286 The society is rapidly spreading, particularly in France. Italian societies have also recently joined.†c The propaganda in London has taken a new start, principally due to the circumstance that the successful strikes of the London tailors and wireworkers were due to our intervention which prevented the import of workingmen from France, Switzerland, Belgium, which had been contemplated by the masters. This proof of its immediate practical importance has struck the practical English mind.†329

Page Break me42.272

Page me42.272

For the same purpose you find, on the last page of this letter, an 'avis'†a to the German tailors which I call upon you to have inserted in such German papers as you have access to.†327 At the same time you will oblige me by sending me a copy or two of some papers in which the 'avis' will have been inserted, telling me at the same time the names of all other papers that should have reprinted it. Kugelmann might also be useful for this purpose.

Page me42.272

My best compliments to Mrs. Liebknecht.†b I feel exceedingly thankful for her friendly interest in my welfare.

Yours fraternally
A. Williams†c

Page me42.272

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946 and in the language of the original, English, in: Wilhelm Liebknecht. Briefwechsel mit Karl Marx und Friedrich Engels, The Hague, 1963

Reproduced from the original

160
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.272
Manchester, 9 May 1866

Dear Moor,

I am becoming concerned at your silence, I almost fear your health is not what it should be. You have not got carbuncles again?

Page me42.272

What is this strange business of Cohen the blind,†d who cannot hit the tall Bismarck with five shots and gets himself arrested by him into the bargain. He could have done Bismarck no greater favour.†330

Page Break me42.273

Page me42.273

IT STRIKES ME that the Prussians are 14 days behind the Austrians with their mobilisation and cannot attack before the end of this inst. If the Austrians take advantage of this, they may win a big battle and be in Berlin before the Prussians have concentrated.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.273

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

161
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.273
[London,] 10 May 1866

Dear FRED,

No CARBUNCLES WHATEVER! But the accursed rheumatism and toothache have tormented me cruelly, until the former at last seems to be yielding to embrocation with pure alcohol. I must tell you candidly as well that my mind still feels somewhat weak and my capacity for work is only returning very gradually. Perhaps that can be attributed to the interruption in the arsenic treatment, which I started again after your last letter.

Page me42.273

Cohen†330 was a very good lad (although not particularly gifted) for whom I have a special regard as he was an old friend of my Musch.†a Freiligrath naturally dashed straight to Blind yesterday and came to us from him. I was not at home. Freiligrath's chief lament was the bad name Blind was giving him and others (nominal contributors to the Eidgenosse,†b whose symbol is a hand holding a dagger with the motto 'haec manus tyrannis',†c etc.). He said he had not visited him for 9 months and that the affair was not even 'excusable'. In short, he was in fact only upset about the possible impression the affair might make on the London philistines. By the by, our trickster from Baden duped him nicely again. He played the broken man and gave his friend Freiligrath no inkling that in the first throes of grief he had the presence of mind to exploit the tragic incident for some good advertising for himself and family in the various London papers. ALWAYS AN EYE TO BUSINESS. His wife†a is naturally inconsolable, and the funny thing about the affair is that Blind has by his idiotic regicidal blether sacrificed not his own son, but old Cohen's Isaac,†b on the altar of freedom.

Page Break me42.274

Page me42.274

In consequence of their sad experiences in 1859†331 the Austrians are in the accursed situation of being scarcely capable of grasping the favourable moment, and although they have been forcibly presented with the initiative, they cannot seize it, or at least they will hesitate greatly before doing so. OF COURSE, European 'PUBLIC OPINION' benefits them not a tittle and requires something silly of them. These same liberal jackasses, who are now generally admitting that Austria is the challenged party and that there is a systematic CONSPIRACY against her, would tomorrow (the ENGLISH LORDS included) scream with one voice if Austria were to strike the first blow and did not wait quietly for her enemies to give the signal.

Page me42.274

Repugnant though Bonaparte is to me, his coup in Auxerre did uncommonly amuse me.†332 That old jackass Thiers and the chiens savants†c of the Corps législatif,†4 who applauded him, fancied they would be allowed to play with Louis-Philippism unpunished! Les imbéciles!

Page me42.274

The Russians as always are playing their part to a T. Having encouraged their worthy Prussians, they enter on the scene as men of peace and arbiters of Europe, but were, at the same time, canny enough to inform Mr Bonaparte that Poland could not, of course, be on the agenda at any congress, in short, that Russia was entitled to meddle in European, but not Europe in Russian affairs.

Page me42.274

Following upon the importation of German and Danish tailors to Edinburgh, we have 1. sent a German and a Dane†d (both tailors themselves) to Edinburgh, and they have already put an end to the understanding between IMPORTERS and IMPORTED; 2. I have put out a warning in the name of the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION to the

Page Break me42.275

German tailors in Germany.†a The affair has been extraordinarily useful to us in London.†327
Page me42.275
A very disagreeable matter for me was the necessity of paying a lump sum of £25 for school fees. This money, for 3 quarters, could no longer be put off as Jenny and Laura are leaving the school, the latter taking no lessons at all, and the former only one music lesson a week now outside school. (Baumer has resigned from the school, you know.)
Page me42.275
The Commonwealth is rapidly going from strength to strength and would certainly be PAYING within the space of a year. But it is probable that we shall soon have to suspend it for lack of money.
Page me42.275
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.275
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

162
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.275
Manchester, 16 May 1866

Dear Moor,
The Freiligrath affair is very amusing and very gratifying. That's what comes of him attaching himself to the respectable people among the émigrés and renouncing the 'party'. As regards Blind, the fitting cry in respect of his: manus haec inimica tyrranis†b should be that children ought not to play with guns. It is incidentally quite clear from the affair that Bismarck wears an armoured shirt.†330 The shots must all have hit him, the last 3 are admitted to have been direct hits, and as the revolver was so designed that it could not be fired in contact with the target, there is just no other possibility. They make these things very fine and yet strong nowadays. His friend Bonaparte will no doubt have supplied him with one and recommended it to him.

Page Break me42.276
Page me42.276

Monsieur Bismarck has obviously been gravely disappointed in the smaller states, hinc†a the threat of an imperial constitution and Bennigsen. There must also have been some financial mishaps. But can one conceive of anything more comical than that the same William, who as top general in the year 1849 bore the imperial constitution to its grave, now wants to resuscitate it, or rather has to. Bismarck as restorer of the 'German fundamental rights',†333 it's too funny. Things are not looking quite as they should in the militia and in the reserves, who have been recalled, either; in Görlitz there was a serious fracas amongst them, soldiers of the line had to be called out and then withdraw because the fellows were not willing to tolerate intervention of that kind. If these people are kept hanging around under arms for another 3-4 weeks, there is no knowing what they might do. And since neither Prussia nor Italy is ready to attack, they will presumably have to stick there until the end of May at least.
Page me42.276

This much is certain: Monsieur Bismarck has ridden into a morass with which neither he nor any of the present regime can cope. If things are settled peaceably, he will have burnt up the available funds and therefore he will no longer be able to help himself, and if there is war, he will have to Acheronta movere,†b who will certainly consume him. In these circumstances, even a direct victory of the Chamber-burghers will be revolutionary in character and is bound to lead to other things.
Page me42.276

For all that, I still cannot think that in the middle of the 19th century North and South Germany will come to blows with each other, just because Bismarck would have it so in the interests of the Russians and Bonaparte. However, if the storm does break, it may go ill with the Prussians. This time, the Austrians seem to be intent on going to the limit of their strength, and, even if their big talk of 900,000 men is nonsense, it is still possible that they may take the field in Saxony with substantial numerical superiority. Against Austria, Prussia cannot draw on the Rhenish and Westphalian corps at all, and only on part of the Saxon. There remain the other six army corps, which will scarcely be able to muster 240,000 men to face the enemy. If, as is suggested, the Austrians initially remain on the defensive in Italy, they will only need 150,000 men there, and can perfectly well send 300-350,000 men against Prussia — unless the Russians compel them to keep a strong force in Galicia. The deciding battle could then be fought by 180,000 Prussians against 240-280,000 Austrians and would almost infallibly be another Jena†203 and lead directly to Berlin. But it is difficult to speculate about this, as the Austrians' troops are always much stronger on paper, and they tell a lot of lies, at present in particular.

Page Break me42.277
Page me42.277

Unfortunately, Monsieur Charles†a is behind with the ledger, which has my account in it, so that at the moment I cannot even properly ascertain how I stand, and as the financial year ends in 6 weeks and I then must have a certain amount of capital in the business, I shall have to make my dispositions accordingly. As soon as I can, I shall add up my worldly assets and send you some money, if it is at all possible. But, at all events, you can count on my letting you have a £50 early in July immediately after the accounts for the financial year have been made up.
Page me42.277

The Kreuz-Zeitung†b makes delightful reading, advocating as it does universal suffrage, Bonapartism, Victor Emmanuel, etc. The dirt those fellows are now being obliged to eat is abundant.
Page me42.277
Kindest regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.277
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

163
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.277
[London,] 17 May 1866

DEAR FRED,
How are the articles on Poland†c progressing? The paper†d may or may not hold out, you must give as much as you can. The Poles here are waiting for the next article and BOTHER ME with enquiries.†334 The articles have created a stir in other respects, too. Having earlier praised them, Foxikins launched a DIATRIBE the day before yesterday in the Central Council against the passage in which you ascribe the partitioning to the corruption of the Polish aristocracy. Amongst other things, he singled out the Germans for attack, for having ruined the Poles in particular through the Saxon dynasty, etc. I replied to him in brief.†335

Page Break me42.278
Page me42.278
It is true that for all their big talk the Prussians are inclined to draw in their horns, and Bismarck is meeting strong opposition from Burp,†a too. But a retreat is scarcely possible in Italy, and that may have repercussions on Prussia again. What Izzy†b is missing by being so dead! Bismarck would have had him playing a part now. Bismarck is surely cursing us (and thinking us Austrian agents) for spoiling his easy game with the workers.
Page me42.278
From the beginning of this week my work†c has at last been advancing again. If you can send me some vino, please do so, as the sudden abstinence may do harm.
Page me42.278

Mr Mazzini gave himself no rest until he had founded an 'INTERNATIONAL REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE' in opposition to us. On it are jackass Holtorp, Langiewicz, Ledru, Kinkel, Blind, I believe also — Bolleter! Our Association is gaining ground daily. Only in Germany nothing can be done, on account of jackass Liebknecht (GOOD FELLOW AS HE IS!).
Page me42.278
The present crisis appears to me to be merely a premature, specifically financial crisis. It could only become important if the business in the UNITED STATES goes rotten, and there would scarcely be time for that now. What effect is it having on you COTTONLORDS? And what effect has the fall in cotton prices had?
Page me42.278
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.278
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.279

164
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.279
[Manchester,] 25 May 1866
Mornington Street

Dear Moor,
The PANIC has, at all events, come much too soon and may possibly spoil a good solid crisis for us which would otherwise have occurred in 1867 or 1868. If we had not simultaneously chanced to have the big fall in cotton, we would barely have been affected by it here. The collapse of the LIMITED LIABILITY and FINANCING swindles had after all been long foreseen and hardly affected our TRADE at all. But the colossal losses on cotton which occurred simultaneously threaten to make it a grave matter here, so many houses here and in Liverpool are entangled in it through their branches in Bombay, etc., and as it occurred at the same time as the MONEY PANIC and the 10% bank-rate, it may be very grave for those who are holding much cotton. Here at least the business is far from over yet.
Page me42.279
If the Austrians are canny enough not to attack, that will surely put the cat among the pigeons in the Prussian army. The fellows have never been as rebellious as they are in the present mobilisation. Unfortunately, one only learns the tiniest part of what is happening, but even that is enough to prove that a war of attack is impossible with this army. Once these lads are concentrated in large numbers, and begin to count themselves and discover that 3/4 of the army is of one mind, and if they then have to hang around under arms for 3-4 weeks during the congress, things will inevitably lead to a crisis, and one fine morning obedience will be refused. Something is bound to spark it off; and with an army like that, once one battalion starts, it will spread like wildfire. But even if an open outbreak were to be avoided, it is certain that this army, with its MORALE as it is, and commanded by the old William, with Frederick Charles and the Crown Prince†a under him commanding the wings, would at once be beaten beyond salvation by the furious Austrians under Benedek, who will have none of the Archdukes, nor any interference in the appointment of his staff, and has 300-360,000 men under him. The old jackass†a knows that, too, and I am convinced that he will withdraw as soon as ever he can, precisely because of the mood in his armies. What I said in my pamphlet†b last year about the character of the mobilised Prussian army, has been fully confirmed.

Page Break me42.280
Page me42.280

Delightful is the embarrassment of the National Associationites†152 since Bismarck has plagiarised their programme; those fellows will now have to oppose their own Great-Prussia phrases, exactly as the Kreuz-Zeitung†c did with its own feudal phrases.
Page me42.280

The London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian reports that in this solemn performance of state†336 Louis Bonaparte has made the following conditions the price for his approval: Sardinia from Italy, Luxemburg, Saarlouis and Saarbrücken from Prussia (Landau is the only thing he has forgotten) — and that is the minimum.†d
Page me42.280

I shall see if I can complete my article on Poland†334 tomorrow. To be quite frank, it is a sacrifice for me to provide that jackass Miall with contributions when one is for ever being explicitly reminded that the editors do not accept responsibility for the section from contributors, whilst they obviously do so for the asininities printed elsewhere in the paper.†337 If I had known beforehand how our pieces were going to be treated in a paper†e which is after all supposed to be our own — or at least to belong to the workers' party, and that we were merely going to be thus tolerated in it, and we are supposed to be grateful, as it were, into the bargain, — I would not have written a single line. But you were sick at the time, and I didn't want to do anything that might disturb your convalescence. But I was vexed by it nonetheless. All the same, one has said 'A' and must see that one also says 'B'.
Page me42.280

Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.280

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.281

165
MARX TO ENGELS†103
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.281
[London,] 7 JUNE 1866

DEAR FRED,

I am in a most awkward situation: pawning has now reached its Thule†a and I am being most furiously dunned as well. Regarding my physical condition, there has fortunately been no recurrence of anything carbuncular. However, I was obliged to go to Allen about my liver throuble, since Gumpert is not here and this thing cannot be treated from a distance. I have still nearly a whole BOTTLE of arsenic left, but have not taken it for several weeks now, as it is incompatible with my present style of life.
Page me42.281

Were you among the victims of the CONSOLIDATED BANK? Dr Rode was here the day before yesterday and maliciously reported that Dronke has suffered serious losses owing to the Barnett CRASH.†338
Page me42.281

So, there will be war after all, unless a miracle occurs. The Prussians will pay dearly for their bragging, and, whatever happens, the idyll in Germany is over. The Proudhonist clique among the students in Paris (Courrier français) is preaching peace, declaring war out of date and nationalities nonsense, and attacking Bismarck and Garibaldi, etc.†339 As polemic against chauvinism, their activities are useful and understandable. But as faithful followers of Proudhon (my very good friends here, Lafargue and Longuet, are also among that number) who believe that the whole of Europe must and will sit quietly on its arse until the French monsieurs have abolished 'la misére et l'ignorance',†b under which latter they themselves are labouring in inverse proportion to their squawking about 'science sociale', they are grotesque. In their articles about the PRESENT AGRICULTURAL CRISIS in France, their 'knowledge' quite takes one's breath away.†c
Page me42.281

The Russians, who are for ever playing at the old game of playing off the jackasses of Europe against each other, and being PARTNER at one moment of A, and at the next of B, have of late indisputably PUSHED ON the Austrians, 1. because Prussia has not yet made the appropriate concession over Oldenburg, 2. in order to tie the Austrians' hands in Galicia, and 3. no doubt also because Mr Alexander II, like Alexander I (in his last years), is in such a conservatively morose mood on account of the attempt on his life†340 that his diplomatic gentlemen at least require some 'conservative' excuses, and an alliance with Austria is conservative. Come the OPPORTUNE MOMENT, and they will show the BACKSIDE of the coin.

Page Break me42.282

Page me42.282
The official tone adopted by the 'BLOOD AND IRON'-Prussians†341 shows how very anxious they are. They are now even doing obeisance to the French Revolution of 1789! They are complaining about Austrian tetchiness!
Page me42.282
The best thing in the lousy debate here in Parliament was the register of sins that Disraeli laid at the unfortunate Clarendon's door.†342
Page me42.282
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.282
Italian enthusiasm will no doubt get its bucket of cold water. Even its melodrama, in keeping with the national character, by the way, would be tolerable, if right underneath it all†328 they were not setting their hopes on Badinguet.†a I cannot forget my Izzy.†b If he were still alive now, what a scandal he would create!

Page me42.282
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

166
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.282
[London,] 9 June 1866

DEAR FRED,
Many thanks for the £10.
Page me42.282
Whatever the pressure from events, my work†c has been progressing poorly owing to purely physical factors ever since my return from Margate.†307 I have been so low over the last few weeks that I have not been able even to attend the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION any more. I had Gumpert's prescription (for my liver) made up for me yesterday, as Allen's stuff was of no use at all to me. Furthermore, I have had a tooth pulled, to put an end to the toothache, and probably a second one will have to go, too.

Page Break me42.283

Page me42.283
If your wine-cellar permits (that is, if you are not thereby obliged to buy in more), I should appreciate it if you would send me some, as I am now forbidden beer altogether.
Page me42.283
The verses await your 'commentary'. They are nothing in my hands.
Page me42.283
This evening I am compelled to go to the meeting of the 'DIRECTORS AND FRIENDS' of The Commonwealth.†290 The thing is on its last legs. Apart from the acute financial difficulties, there are internal political ones as well. Since that jackass of a Bradford MANUFACTURER, Mr Kell (who has given £50, his brother ditto, and hints of more to come), has Miall entirely under his thumb, Dr Bridges, Professor Beesly, Harrison (the COMTEISTS) have threatened not merely to resign but also to make a public statement about their resignation.
Page me42.283
I am tired of the business and shall propose to the people this evening that they should sell their bankrupt institution to Kell et Co. and put an end to the farce of A BRADFORD MANUFACTURER directing a London 'workers' organ'. If they do not agree, I shall, at all events, announce my withdrawal. The paper cannot survive for much longer on its own resources, is therefore dependent on advances of bourgeois money, and thereby loses its own character. I have shown great patience in this matter, because I always hoped that the workers themselves would make sufficient efforts to continue the undertaking on their own; and, for another thing, I did not want to be a wet blanket.
Page me42.283
Mr Gottfried Kinkel has been appointed to a chair in Zurich.
Page me42.283
Since the sounds of war started up, the 'Saxon' workers have been flocking to join the 'INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION'.
Page me42.283
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.283
COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.†a
Page me42.283
Apropos. Lafargue tells me that the whole new French school of microscopical physiologists, with Robin at their head, is pronouncing against Pasteur, Huxley, etc., and in favour of generatio aequivoca.†a He is going to inform me of some new writings on the subject.

Page Break me42.284

Page me42.284
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

167
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.284
Manchester, 11 June 1866

Dear Moor,

The crate of Bordeaux will be sent off to you this evening. It is very good wine from Borkheim. I should have sent it to you before, but the lads here have dilly-dallied over it, partly from overwork. I had written out the address for them long since. I hope that it and regular exercise will do you good. What do you say to coming up here for a week, say, end of this inst. would suit me, and then you could take the money straight back with you early in July? At the same time, you could for once have a thorough consultation with Gumpert.
Page me42.284

We have so far just escaped the spate of bank-failures unscathed. Dronke told me himself that he was in for a bit with Barnett, but more because he had had to change his banker; he had £3,000 credit there — however, he was also a shareholder, and that's where he will lose. Eichhoff also has had the honour of seeing his banker fail, and has come a cropper to the tune of £16. He is not losing any sleep over it; if he cannot pay a bill that's due, he just lets it be.
Page me42.284

Mr G. Kinkel has been putting it around every year that he has been offered the chair in Zurich — so, does that mean the people of Zurich are in fact really going to have to believe it at last?
Page me42.284

In Germany it looks more like revolution every day. In Berlin and Barmen menacing crowds of laid-off workers are roaming the streets. G. Ermen, who came back on Friday, told me that he happened to engage in discussion about the war with some Prussian lieutenant on the Rhine Bridge at Coblenz, and the man had been very doubtful about the issue of the affair, admitted that both the men and the leadership of the Austrians were better than the Prussians', and when G. Ermen asked, 'What would happen if the Prussians were whacked?' he answered, 'Then we'll have a revolution.' Another philistine told me that he had heard from a reliable source in Cologne that the militia companies are being dispersed among the line, and that the militia regiments are being topped up with line; the order has apparently been given out. In any case, the army must be in such a state that a victory can only be expected if the Austrians move across the frontier first, and this time they seem to be flatly refusing to do so. But, for that same reason, the Prussians don't want to move either. This state of affairs may drag on for another week, until the situation is so tense that it breaks.

Page Break me42.285

Page me42.285

There is a delightful historical irony being enacted through Bismarck's person. At the same moment that he utters liberal phrases he is forced to perform absolutist actions. In one and the same breath he will proclaim the German imperial constitution and suspend the Prussian constitution (the ordinances are already prepared).†321 Good idea to try and play the Bonaparte against the bourgeoisie with the Junkers behind one instead of the peasants!
Page me42.285

The militia will be just as much of a danger to the Prussians in this war as the Poles were in 1806,†343 who also comprised over 1/3 of the army and threw the whole show into disorder before the battle. Only instead of disbanding, the militia will rebel after the defeat.
Page me42.285

The whole left bank of the Rhine has been denuded of troops, there are only 2 militia regiments stationed in Luxemburg, and they say the fortress is already being secretly evacuated; in Saarlouis there is merely a militia battalion that is not yet up to strength. Von der Heydt is to arrange the Saarbrücken coal-mine and State Railway deal via Oppenheim to raise money, and the Westphalian State Railway is to be sold to the Bergisch-Märkische Railway. The bonds for its Cologne-Minden shares†237 have been advanced to the state by the Bank of Prussia, which was the sole purpose of the affair. In all this the Berlin bankers are all working hand in glove with the government.
Page me42.285

I think that in a fortnight the storm will break in Prussia. If this opportunity passes without being used, and if the people allow that to happen, we can then calmly pack up our revolutionary paraphernalia and devote ourselves to pure theory.

Page Break me42.286
Page me42.286

Stieber is chief of police in the field, is organising the 'Blind conspiracy' and has, to this end, sent our friend Greif to London again. Can we not arrange for him to be given a good hiding?
Page me42.286

Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.286
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

168
MARX TO ENGELS†344
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.286
[London,] 20 JUNE 1866

DEAR FRED,

This damned weather is having a particularly evil effect sur mon physique†a; and this is the reason why I did not acknowledge the 'wine' earlier, nor write to you otherwise. There is no chance of coming to Manchester, as I cannot leave the house in my PRESENT STATE; besides, I have to be here for the 'INTERNATIONAL', where my FRENCH FRIENDS have already used my absence once in these TRYING CIRCUMSTANCES to execute some tomfoolery in the name of the Association.†313
Page me42.286

As regards newspapers here, in my view the best thing to do, if nothing comes of the Manchester business, is to send a proper MILITARY ARTICLE to The Times, to which you can present yourself as the English correspondent of the Darmstadt Militär-Zeitung.†b No need for any political considerations, as one London paper is just as bad as any other, and what matters is to obtain the widest publicity.†345

Page Break me42.287
Page me42.287

You must now keep me 'critically' au courant des affaires in ITALY and GERMANY.
Page me42.287

There was a debate at yesterday's meeting of the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL about the present war. It was announced beforehand and our ROOM was very full. Even the Italian gentlemen had honoured us with their presence again. The discussion WAS WOUND UP, as could have been foreseen, with the 'QUESTION OF NATIONALITY' in general and the attitude we should adopt to it. This sujet adjourned until next Tuesday.†346
Page me42.287

The French, very strongly represented, GAVE VENT to their cordial dislike for the Italians.
Page me42.287

The representatives of 'jeune France'†a (non-workers), by the way, trotted out their view that any nationality and even nations are 'des préjugés surannés'.†b Proudhonised Stirnerianism. Everything to be broken down into small 'groupes' or 'communes', which in turn form an 'association', but not a state. Furthermore, this 'individualisation' of mankind and the 'mutualisme'†347 it entails are to proceed by bringing history to a halt in every other country and the whole world waits until the French are ready to carry out a social revolution. Then they will demonstrate the experiment to us, and the rest of the world, being bowled over by the force of their example, will do the same. Just what Fourier expected from his phalanstére modéle. D'ailleurs,†c everyone who clutters up the 'social' question with the 'superstitions' of the Old World is a 'reactionary'.

Page me42.287

The English laughed heartily when I began my SPEECH with the observation that our friend Lafargue, and others, who had abolished nationalities, had addressed us in 'French', i.e., in a language which 9/10 of the audience did not understand. I went on to suggest that by his denial of nationalities he seemed quite unconsciously to imply their absorption by the model French nation.
Page me42.287

For the rest, the position is difficult now because one must equally oppose the silly Italianism of the English, on the one hand, and the mistaken polemic against it of the French, on the other, and above all prevent any demonstration which would involve our Association in a one-sided course.
Page me42.287

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.287
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.288

169
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.288
[Manchester,] 4 July 1866

Dear Moor,

The other half of the note enclosed. Unfortunately, your telegram reached me after 12 o'clock,†46 so that I could not make use of the first post.
Page me42.288

What do you say to the Prussians? Their initial successes were exploited with enormous vigour, and, if it had not been for this intensity, Benedek would probably have quietly withdrawn to Olmütz,†a but he was obviously forced to come to battle yesterday, and there could be no doubt about the issue after what had befallen. To determine the outcome of such a decisive battle in 8 hours is quite unprecedented; in other circumstances, it would have lasted 2 days.†348 But the needle-gun is a merciless weapon, and then these fellows really do fight with a verve that I have never before observed in such peace-time troops. For the defender, the attacker's need to take positions by storm compensates for his superiority in weapons, and here too the Prussians appear to have accomplished a great deal. Benedek, with his deep 'plan', turns out to have been not merely a jackass but a dullard as well. How splendidly he could, with sufficient men, have caught those fellows in the mountains!

Page me42.288

At all events, Bismarck will now try to set up his Imperial Germany, and that should include Bohemia, which he hopes to take from the Austrians and thereby establish a link between Silesia and Bavaria. In the treaty with Italy, he did after all stipulate 'un territoire autrichien équivalent á la Vénéti'.†b†328
Page me42.288

Berlin is again acting with the vileness for which it is famed and yesterday even went so far as to elect a whole load of ministers. What will those camels of men of Progress†99 say now?
Page me42.288

The farce up in the North-West is delightful and will probably soon be no less so in the South, too.
Page me42.288

The only safeguard against the betrayal that Bismarck has plotted with Bonaparte is the quite unexpected magnitude of the victories. He will now find it difficult to cede much, and the Belgians will probably have to pay part of the price.†349

Page Break me42.289
Page me42.289

Kindest regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.289
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

170
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.289
[London,] 7 July 1866

DEAR FRED,

D'abord†a my heartfelt thanks for the Californian consignment. Yet, I was unable to pay the LANDLORD, who is again owed for two quarters. I had to allow priority to part-payments to the fellows who are dunning me every hour of the day.

Page me42.289

As regards my state of health, first of all, I have had my nose properly to the grindstone again over the past two weeks, and hope that by the end of August, if I preserve this degree of health, I shall have finished the first volume,†b which I am having published by itself. It is true that I am obliged to continue with Gumpert's liver-medicine every day, as I would otherwise be laid low at once. Question: is the arsenic (put aside for many weeks now) compatible with it? I am asking because for 4 days now another carbuncle has been appearing above my right collar-bone. I owe more to the Bordeaux than to any medicine. I am incidentally only working in the day-time, as a sporadic attempt to work at night (once or twice) immediately had very unfortunate consequences.

Page me42.289

Before passing to general matters, can you translate 'PUT STRETCHES UPON THE MULE' into German for me, and tell me what 'PICKS' in weaving are called in German? What is a 'FLYER' on the mule?

Page me42.289

The workers' demonstrations in London are fabulous compared with anything seen in England since 1849, and they are solely the work of the 'INTERNATIONAL'. MR Lucraft, F.I., the captain in Trafalgar Square, is ONE OF OUR COUNCIL.†350 This shows the difference between acting behind the scenes whilst retiring in public, and the democrats' habit of puffing themselves up in public and doing nothing.

Page Break me42.290

Page me42.290

The Commonwealth is about to expire.†290 Fox is leaving it next week. Apropos. Stumpf has written to me from Mainz that among the workers the demand for your book 'The Condition, etc.'†a is growing daily and that you must certainly bring out the second edition, if only for party reasons. At the same time, his personal experiences lead him to believe that immediately after the war†345 'the labour question' in Germany will come noticeably to the fore.

Page me42.290

Freiligrath has put out a melancholy-lyrical little turd on the fratricidal war, which his daughter Kate has englished in today's Athenaeum.†b

Page me42.290

Beside a great Prussian defeat, which perhaps (oh but those Berliners!) might have led to a revolution, there could have been no better outcome than their stupendous victory. Thiers had been so successful in denouncing Bonaparte's policy of helping to 'make' Prussia (for beside the English, your Frenchman in fact really hates only the Prussians), that Boustrapa†76 had to amend the constitution he had imposed on the French and 'abolish' discussion of the address par ordre du†c Moniteur. (I am enclosing J. Favre's speech on Mexico and Glais-Bizoin's bad witticisms for you, so that you can see what Boustrapa's position was before the outbreak of war.)†351 Mr Bonaparte was counting on victory and defeat swinging back and forth between Prussians and Austrians, so that eventually he would be able to step in between the exhausted combatants like Jupiter Scapin.†d The Prussians' success really puts his regime in France in dire peril (it is his second great miscalculation since the American Civil War) if he does not manage to dictate the terms of peace. On the other hand, the same success (we are not back in 1815 now) makes it impossible, almost impossible, for the Prussian dynasty to accept terms other than those which Austria must reject, not to mention the fact that handsome William,†e alias Alexander the Great, cannot possibly cede German territory to France. The Prussians' decision will depend on the 'nephew' in St Petersburg.†f It is impossible to say what he will do, as that would require one to be in possession of the material in the Russian State Chancellory. But I, for my part, cannot understand how the Russians, who are furthermore offended that the Austrians refused their help, can permit Austria to get her breath back and miss this favourable moment for their Turco-Danubian manoeuvres. Mr Victor Emmanuel is also in a pretty pickle. Venice now belongs to Bonaparte. If he accepts it from him as a present, that will be the end for his dynasty. On the other hand, what can he do against France, and where can he now attack Austria?†352

Page Break me42.291
Page me42.291
But what do you say to our Foxikins, who dashed breathlessly into our house the day before yesterday, exclaiming: 'Bonaparte has saved Germany!' This view is shared by Beesly, Harrison, etc., and the whole COMTEIST clique. Write to me soon, as pen and ink have to serve in place of oral communication in this EVENTFUL PERIOD.
Page me42.291
My best compliments to MRS Lizzy.†a
Page me42.291
Little Jenny would like to know how your 'Africans' are doing?†353
Page me42.291
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.291
Naturally, Bonaparte does not want war now, until he has introduced the NEEDLE-GUN or an equivalent. A YANKEE†b has offered the war ministry here a rifle which, so I am assured by a REFUGEE Prussian officer (Wilke), is as superior to the needle-gun as the latter is to 'OLD BESS',†354 by virtue of its extreme simplicity of design, non-susceptibility to heating, reduced need for cleaning, and cheapness. Is there any sphere in which our theory that the organisation of labour is determined by the means of production is more dazzlingly vindicated than in the industry for human slaughter? It really would be worth your while to write something on the subject (I have not the necessary knowledge for it) which I would include as an appendix to my book†c under your name. Give the matter some thought. If you do it, however, it must be done pour le premier volume,†d in which I am dealing ex professo†e with this topic. You will appreciate what great pleasure it would give me if you were also to appear in my principal work (previously I have only produced trifles) as a direct collaborator, and not just in quotation!

Page Break me42.292
Page me42.292

I am studying Comte on the side just now, as the English and French are making such a fuss of the fellow. What seduces them about him is his encyclopaedic quality, la synthése. But that is pitiful when compared with Hegel (although Comte is superior to him as a mathematician and physicist by profession, i.e., superior in the detail, though even here Hegel is infinitely greater as a whole). And this shitty positivism came out in 1832!

Page me42.292
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

171
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.292
Manchester, 9 July†a 1866

Dear Moor,

History, i.e., world history, is becoming ever more ironical. What could be more splendid than that Bonaparte should be thus mocked in practice by his pupil Bismarck, who, backwoods junker as he is, has suddenly outgrown his master and all at once gives the whole world a tangible demonstration of how very much this arbitre de l'Europe exists ON SUFFERANCE. And then this Bismarck himself, who, in order to be able to govern to all appearances feudally and absolutely for a few months at home, is pursuing the policy of the bourgeoisie WITH A VENGEANCE abroad, preparing the ground for the bourgeoisie to rule and striking along paths where progress is only possible by liberal, even revolutionary means, and, in so doing, making his own backwoods junkers be daily at variance with their own principles. The presenters of the ceremonial shield to Francis Bomba†b are in alliance with Garibaldi, and the advocates of Thrones by the grace of God go swallowing up whole countries in spite of Victor Emmanuel!†355 Never has there been anything quite so splendid as the Kreuz-Zeitung†c in these last 4 weeks, and the historico-feudal party, which cost the genius of Frederick William IV of blessed memory so much toil and trouble to found, is now choking on the filth which it is being forced to gobble up at its own leader's command.

Page Break me42.293

Page me42.293

The simple fact is: Prussia has 500,000 needle-guns and the rest of the world not even 500. It is not possible to equip an army with breech-loaders in under 2, 3 or perhaps 5 years. Until then Prussia will be dux. Do you think Bismarck will not make use of such a moment? Certainly he will. Bonaparte will take very good care not to pick a quarrel, and as for the Russians, it is true they are setting up a most furious howl in the Journal de St.-Pétersbourg,†a but militarily they are now less to be feared than ever. I have no doubt at all that this sudden enormous growth of Prussia's might will drive Bonaparte and the Russians together, and that their first endeavour will be to prevent each and every increase in Prussia's might. But they will take care to hold back from war; as for France, if she were to intervene actively, that would assuredly be the best way to drive the South Germans properly into the arms of the Prussians and consign the civil war to oblivion.†356 And as for the Russians, Monsieur Bismarck is the man to threaten them with a new Polish insurrection, and they know that the fellow is unscrupulous enough for that. In general, Bismarck is only too well aware of his power and also knows that it can only maintain its present magnitude for a few years, and I believe he will exploit it to the very last drop. Moreover, Bonaparte can always be bought off with Belgium in the end, and only just before the war Goltz, Bonaparte and the Crown Prince of Holland†b 'considered the possibility' of dividing Belgium between France and Holland, which would then cede Luxemburg to France.†349 I believe the war is not over yet by a long chalk, and there is much that can still happen.

Page me42.293

The Russians really do seem to have realigned themselves towards Austria some time ago now, and this tremendous success of the Prussians will make it impossible for them to go back on it in any way. The more so since Austria will now be ready to receive Bosnia or Walachia in exchange for Venice, with Russia then taking Moldavia.

Page me42.293

You see, by the by, how right I was in my appraisal of the Prussian army when I repeatedly said there was far more to it than people were wont to admit. After these successes and after the absolutely brilliant performance of the troops, they will be so much more self-confident and, at the same time, more experienced at war that they could take the field against the French tomorrow, even if the latter had breech-loaders, and the French bayonet, at all events, has had its day, like the Spanish pike in its time. When breech-loading becomes general, the cavalry will come into its own again.

Page Break me42.294

Page me42.294

I must make a proper report to Jenny about the Africans,†353 as I have been meaning to for a long time now.

Page me42.294

Many regards.

Your

F.E.

Page me42.294

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

172
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.294
Manchester, 12 July 1866

Dear Moor,

I have written about your history to Gumpert, who is in Wales; as I do not know his address, the letter will first have to go to his home here, hence certainly some delay. As soon as I have a reply, I'll write to you, but meanwhile I should advise you to take arsenic at once and put off everything else, so as to stop the damned carbuncle. Put an end to this abomination at any cost.
Page me42.294

Bonaparte's little plan and his intervention are in part probably a consequence of an earlier agreement with Bismarck, but certainly also — the new Confederation of the Rhine, etc. — are threats in his direction. But how the fellow can be so stupid as to make this plan public is beyond my comprehension†357: as with Schapper — that he could be so stupid, etc. — It will assuredly drive the whole of South Germany into the arms of the Prussians and even the old philistines at the Exchange here are quite beside themselves about it. One old man from Frankfurt told me: it's worth more to the Prussians than a reinforcement of 100,000 men.

Page Break me42.295
Page me42.295

You see how the stupid South Germans are letting themselves be picked off one by one without even taking the trouble to close ranks.†356 It'll soon be the old, old story, we've been betrayed, we'll be led like lambs to the slaughter!†a 1849 all over again. I feel sorry for the fellows, they're good soldiers. Only now does one understand how the French were able to score such successes against the 'Empire', but not how the Empire was able to hold out for so long against a concentrated monarchy like France.†358
Page me42.295

I will try and produce the stuff about the mass-murder-industry for you.†b
Page me42.295

Many regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.295

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

173
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.295
[London,] 21 July†c 1866

DEAR FRED,

The carbuncle has fortunately departed again of its own accord. But in the present heat my LIVER has been and still is scourging me sorely. For all that, my work†d is progressing well and will continue to do so if my present condition lasts. It is, of course, embarrassing for me to have to pester you again already, but as you will gather from the enclosed note (which you must return to me) there is periculum in mora.†e I have with difficulty obtained an extension until next Tuesday. From your last communication I am in doubt as to whether you are in Manchester. Nor have I received any more copies of The Manchester Guardian. Or has nothing else of yours appeared in it?†345

Page Break me42.296
Page me42.296

One must refrain from passing any judgment on the present circumstances, pending news either of a ceasefire or of a decisive battle at Vienna. At any rate, the course of events has demonstrated the extraordinary decay of the Austrian system.
Page me42.296

For the moment, these English of ours are, as always, paying homage to success. The great Arnold Ruge, too, has made his pronunciamento for Prussia 14 days ago, as the great Kinkel did earlier still. If the Prussians continue victorious to the end, what a throng of place-seekers and fatherland-rescuers will surge towards Frankfurt!
Page me42.296

At all events, the 'homme prestige',†a 'Jupiter Scapin',†b GROTESQUE PROVIDENCE OF EUROPE is shaken and even overshadowed by Bismarck. That is some consolation.
Page me42.296

The VTH REPORT of the CHILDREN'S EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION appeared here a few days ago. It concludes the enquête†c into the manufactories, and only a supplement has yet to appear concerning the 'ORGANISED GANGS' of women and children, who are sporadically used in agriculture. There could have been no more dreadful blow to the optimism of the bourgeoisie since 1850 than from these 5 BLUE BOOKS. Furthermore, the VIIIth REPORT of the BOARD OF HEALTH†d was brought out a few days ago, which contains in particular a very detailed enquête of the living conditions of the proletariat.†359

Page me42.296
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.296
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.296a
Page me42.296a

Frederick Engels. 1860s. Manchester

Page Break me42.296b
Page Break me42.297

174
ENGELS TO MARX†101
IN LONDON
Page me42.297
Manchester, 25 July 1866

Dear Moor,
I think you will now have received the notes all right; in a moment of distraction I must have put in, in their stead, the piece of paper on which I had noted the Nos. The notes themselves I had slipped inside the cover of my writing-case, which is where I found them when I had recovered from the initial shock of your telegram.†46 I hope they still arrived in time.
Page me42.297
The business in Germany now seems fairly straightforward to me. From the moment of Bismarck's so colossal success in using the Prussian army to put the bourgeois plan for Little Germany into effect,†360 developments in Germany have moved so decisively in that direction that we shall have to accept the fait accompli just like everybody else, WE MAY LIKE IT OR NOT. As regards the national aspect of the question, at all events, Bismarck will set up a Little German Empire of the dimensions envisaged by the bourgeoisie, i. e., including South-West Germany, the phrases about the Main boundary and the OPTIONAL SOUTH GERMAN SEPARATE CONFEDERACY, at any rate, only being intended for the French†357; meanwhile the Prussians are marching on Stuttgart. Incidentally, before very long, the German provinces of Austria will join this Empire too, since Austria is certain to go Hungarian now,†293 and the Germans will become the 3rd nation in the Empire — lower even than the Slavs.

Page me42.297

Politice†a Bismarck will be forced to rely on the bourgeoisie, whom he needs against the Imperial Princes. Perhaps not at this moment, as his prestige and the army are still sufficient. But simply to ensure that parliament will grant the necessary conditions for central power, he will have to give something to the bourgeoisie, and the natural course of events will constantly compel him or his successors to appeal to the bourgeoisie again; so that, even if Bismarck perhaps gives the bourgeoisie no more than he absolutely has to now, he will, nevertheless, be driven increasingly in a bourgeois direction.

Page Break me42.298
Page me42.298

The good aspect to the affair is that it simplifies the situation and makes revolution easier by putting an end to the brawling among the smaller capitals and, at all events, hastens developments. A German parliament is after all quite a different thing from a Prussian Chamber. All the little states will be drawn into the movement, there will be an end to the worst localised tendencies, and the parties will at last become truly national instead of merely local.
Page me42.298

The chief disadvantage — and it is a very substantial one — is the inevitable swamping of Germany by Prussianism. Also the temporary exclusion of German Austria, a consequence of which will be an immediate advance of the Slav cause in Bohemia, Moravia and Carinthia. Unfortunately, nothing can be done to prevent either.
Page me42.298

In my view, therefore, we can do nothing whatsoever but simply accept the fact, without approving of it, and use, as far as we can, the increased opportunities which are, at all events, bound to arise now, to organise and unite the German proletariat nationally.
Page me42.298

I did not need Stumpf's letter to tell me that BROTHER Liebknecht would launch himself into fanatical support of the Austrian cause, it was absolutely inevitable.†361 Incidentally, there was no mistaking his furious despatches from Leipzig in the Neue Frankfurter Zeitung. This N.F. Zeitung, with its Blind-ish regicidal tendencies, went so far as to reproach the Prussians for their disgraceful treatment of 'His Highness the Elector of Hesse'†a and was beside itself with enthusiasm for the poor blind Guelph.†b
Page me42.298

Nothing more of mine in the Guardian.†345

Your
F.E.

Page me42.298

Best wishes to the LADIES.

Page me42.298

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.299

175
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.299
[London,] 27 July†a 1866

Dear FRED,

Best thanks for the £10. They came in the nick of time.

Page me42.299

I have not written to Stumpf, precisely because he asked for a line of 'conduct', and my view was that he would do best not to 'conduct' himself at all until events took a decisive turn.†361 That was a view which I RATHER thought advisable not to put to him in writing. Mainz is at present still encircled, so far as I know, so postal communication is also presumably interrupted. Did you write to Stumpf?

Page me42.299

The comedy in Frankfurt makes up somewhat for the exhalation of the victors. Lord, lord, they howled, 25 million! And his worship the mayor†b goes and hangs himself!†362 And the Prussians, for their part, officially declare that Frankfurt will have to fork out because its papers have 'insulted' His Majesty William the Conqueror.†c Since his government post in Brünn is only temporary, Stieber will eventually become mayor of the Frankfurter-on-Mainers, whom by the way I have always thought the most insufferable scoundrels. And Edgar Bauer will be imposed on them as Censor-in-Chief. But as regards the Eschenheimer Gasse,†363 Privy Counsellor Duncker would — except that he is, of course, ruling in Kassel.

Page me42.299

I am entirely at one with you that we must take the mess as it is. It is, nevertheless, pleasant to be far off at this youthful time of love's first dawning.†d The arrogance of the Prussians and the foolishness of handsome William,†e who believes that nothing has changed since his dream of victory, except that he is now a great potentate, etc., will have their effect soon enough. The Austrians now find themselves where the Slav fanatics from Prague wanted them in 1848.†364 However, for the moment their loss of Venice, their enforced concentration of strength is in no way to the Russians' advantage. Being a Pan-Slavic empire themselves, they will be all the more antagonistic to the Muscovites. In view of the extraordinary decline of the Habsburgs, it is certainly to be feared that BY and BY they will allow the Russians to tempt them into a combined attack on Turkey.

Page Break me42.300

Page me42.300

For the workers, of course, everything that centralises the bourgeoisie is to their advantage. At all events, even if peace is concluded tomorrow, it will be even more provisional than that of Villafranca and Zurich was.†365 As soon as the 'arms reform' has been completed by the various parties, it will be back to 'bashing', as Schapper calls it. At all events, Bonaparte has suffered a setback, too, although the setting up of military kingdoms on all sides right and left fits the Plon-Plonist†93 scheme 'de la démocratie générale'.†a
Page me42.300

The government has almost caused a mutiny here. Your Englishman first needs a revolutionary education, of course, for which two weeks would suffice if Sir Richard Mayne had absolute powers of command. In actual fact, it all hung on one point. If the RAILINGS had been used — and it almost came to that — for offence and defence against the police, and some score of the latter killed, the military would have had to 'step in', instead of merely parading. And then things would have got quite jolly. This much is certain: that these stiff-necked John Bulls, whose sconces appear made to measure for the constables' BLUDGEONS, will accomplish nothing without a really bloody clash with those in power.
Page me42.300

A touching scene, that, between that old jackass Beales and the equally asinine old Walpole, and then the intervention of the thin-voiced, INTRUSIVE, self-important Holyoake, who through 'love of the truth' is constantly finding his way into The Times — nothing but peace and dissoluteness.†366 Meanwhile, whilst these riff-raff are patting each other on the back and belick-spittling each other, that cur Knox, the police magistrate of Marylebone, is sending people down in a summary fashion, which shows what would happen if London were Jamaica.†252
Page me42.300

Disraeli has made a fine fool of himself, firstly by his pathetic remark in the Lower House,†b 'he did not know whether he still had a house', and then by the strong military occupation of that same house, although, thirdly, the MOB (instructed beforehand by the REFORM LEAGUE people) deliberately left the house of Mr 'Vivian Grey'†c UNTOUCHED. The house lost not a hair from its head. For which Elcho's window-panes had to suffer the more. I had dropped the HINT to Gremer and other MANAGERS that it might be appropriate to pay a visit to the 'Times' NEWSPAPER. As they did not immediately 'take' the HINT, or did not want to, I did not press it.

Page Break me42.301
Page me42.301

The cholera is paying us (I mean the Londoners) its respects with the utmost gravity, and Dr Hunter's report, in the VIIIth REPORT of the HEALTH BOARD†a on the 'HOUSING of the POOR', which appeared last week,†359 is presumably intended to serve Madam Cholera as a DIRECTORY of addresses calling for preferential visitation.

Page me42.301
MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO MRS Lizzy.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me42.301
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

176
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.301
Manchester, 6 August 1866

Dear Moor,

The humour in your last letter leads me to conclude that your liver must be much better, although you do not say anything about it yourself. As regards the Frankfurters,†362 you should have just heard the wailing and gnashing of teeth by the ones here, of whom we have a whole legion here and who got the most frightful letters from their brothers, etc. On this occasion the Prussian lieutenant did, of course, conduct himself with all the charm for which he is renowned, but it was to be expected from the beginning that these gentlemen would be MORE FRIGHTENED THAN HURT. In the rest of South Germany, where the Frankfurters are not especially popular either and where they are reproached for running with the hare and hunting with the hounds, there was positive pleasure that it was they who were treated so roughly. I have seen such letters myself.

Page Break me42.302
Page me42.302

So, Bismarck won in the end, and Wilhelmchen†a has issued a form of words to conciliate his Highnesses, Noble Lords and Faithful Followers, simultaneously affirming, however, that if they refuse him money again, the spending of money without approval will unfortunately be 'unavoidable' again. I still do not see how the conflict can thereby be resolved, even with this Chamber. Then there is a German, or RATHER North German parliament as well, about whose possible position or at least powers Mr Eulenburg has resolutely refused to give any information whatsoever — there are splendid prospects for a dust-up before long. Bismarck himself will surely seek to avoid a dispute, he is not that stupid, but that old brute of a Hohenzollern is bound to embroil himself, and then he will be amazed at the intelligence of his bayonets.†367

Page me42.302

That we shall soon be back to bashing is clear enough. I believe things will come to a head with the French. Bonaparte is shrewd enough to want to avoid this as long as at all possible, but the mass of Frenchmen, in particular the bourgeoisie, with their distaste for any strengthening of Germany, really is too short-sighted and fanatical to be denied the expansion de la France qui ne peut avoir lieu que du côté de l'Allemagne,†b and war against Prussia is also popular with the peasants and more stupid workers; therefore there is no telling how soon the storm will break.
Page me42.302

Wehner, who has just returned from Hanover, tells me that the Prussian officers have already made themselves thoroughly hated there, too, likewise the bureaucrats and police.
Page me42.302

I shall probably not spend long in Germany this year either. What with the exhalation of the victors in the North and the Republicans bawling out their enthusiasm for the Elector of Hesse†c in the South, where ought one to go? I shall attempt to go into the Harz by a roundabout route, there are fortunately no garrisons there.
Page me42.302

The Kölnische Zeitung is now screaming with much frothing at the mouth for the exclusion of South Germany. This is the catchword put out by Bismarck to facilitate Bonaparte's retreat, and the Kölnische is storming in this direction with such insane fervour that one sees through the whole nonsense immediately. No paper has yet behaved quite so vilely as this one. Having been most vociferously shouting for peace, it leapt into the contrary stance as soon as it saw that Bismarck with his cry of 'Austria wants war! Up and at 'em!' was not to be put off the scent, and ever since it has been Bismarck's best friend, at least in good will if not in finesse. It is his lap-dog in the press.

Page Break me42.303
Page me42.303

If the new breech-loading gun the American showed to the government here is the Snider-Enfield, it is not up to much. It was most probably another one you were referring to.†a Incidentally, a more rapid rate of fire than that already achieved by the needle-gun is of little consequence, as in practice the difference is virtually reduced to zero; on the other hand, greater precision and accuracy of aim are now becoming increasingly important. I am just re-reading Griesheim's tactics†b — how outdated almost all of it already is now!
Page me42.303

Kindest regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.303

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

177
MARX TO ENGELS†368
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.303
[London,] 7 August 1866

Dear FRED,

You inferred correctly from my last letter that my state of health has improved, although it fluctuates from one day to the next. Meanwhile, the feeling of being fit to work again DOES MUCH FOR A MAN. Unfortunately, I am constantly interrupted by SOCIAL TROUBLES and lose a lot of time. Thus, for example, the butcher has suspended meat supplies today, and by Saturday even my stock of paper will be used up.
Page me42.303

Since yesterday Laura is half promised to Monsieur Lafargue, my medical Creole. She treats him like the others, but the outbursts of feeling these Creoles are subject to, a slight fear that the jeune homme†a (he is 25) might do away with himself, etc., some fondness for him, undemonstrative as always with Laura (he is a good-looking, intelligent, energetic lad of athletic build), have more or less led to a semi-compromise. The boy attached himself to me first of all, but soon transferred the ATTRACTION from the old man to his daughter. His economic circumstances are middling, as he is the only child of a former planter-family.†b He is rayé de l'université de Paris pour deux ans,†c on account of the congrés á Liége,†269 but intends to sit his examination at Strasbourg. In my judgment, he has an outstanding gift for medicine, in which he is, however, infinitely more sceptical than our friend Gumpert. Scepticism in medical matters appears to be the order of the day with both professors and students in Paris. E. g., Magendie, who declares all therapeutics, in their present STATE, to be fraudulent. As always, this scepticism not only does not exclude CROTCHETS, but embraces them. E. g., Lafargue believes in alcohol and electricity as the chief cures. Fortunately, he is having a good adviser in Professor Carrére, a refugee (hautes mathématiques,†d physics and chemistry), and will be able to acquire much practical experience in the London hospitals. I have managed to get him admitted there through the good offices of a third party.

Page Break me42.304
Page me42.304

A very important work which I shall send on to you (but on condition that you send it back, as it is not my property) as soon as I have made the necessary notes, is: 'P. Trémaux, Origine et Transformations de l'Homme et des autres Êtres, Paris 1865.' In spite of all the shortcomings that I have noted, it represents a very significant advance over Darwin. The two chief theses are: croisements†e do not produce, as is commonly thought, variety, but, on the contrary, a unity typical of the espéces.†f The physical features of the earth, on the other hand, differentiate (they are the chief, though not the only basis). Progress, which Darwin regards as purely accidental, is essential here on the basis of the stages of the earth's development, dégénérescence,†g which Darwin cannot explain, is straightforward here; ditto the rapid extinction of merely transitional forms, compared with the slow development of the type of the espéce, so that the gaps in palaeontology, which Darwin finds disturbing, are necessary here. Ditto the fixity of the espéce, once established, which is explained as a necessary law

Page Break me42.305
(apart from individual, etc., variations). Here hybridisation, which raises problems for Darwin, on the contrary supports the system, as it is shown that an espéce is in fact first established as soon as croisement with others ceases to produce offspring or to be possible, etc.
Page me42.305
In its historical and political applications far more significant and pregnant than Darwin. For certain questions, such as nationality, etc., only here has a basis in nature been found. E.g., he corrects the Pole Duchinski, whose version of the geological differences between Russia and the Western Slav lands he does incidentally confirm, by saying not that the Russians are Tartars rather than Slavs, etc.,†a as the latter believes, but that on the surface-formation predominant in Russia the Slav has been tartarised and mongolised; likewise (he spent a long time in Africa) he shows that the common negro type is only a degeneration of a far higher one.

'Hors des grandes lois de la nature, les projets des hommes ne sont que calamités, témoins les efforts des czars pour faire du peuple polonais des Moscovites. [...] Même nature, mêmes facultés, renaîtront sur un même sol. L'œuvre de destruction ne saurait toujours durer, l'œuvre de reconstitution est éternelle... Les races slaves et lithuaniennes ont avec les Moscovites, leur véritable limite dans la grande ligne géologique qui existe au nord des bassins du Niémen et du Dniéper... Au sud de cette grande ligne: les aptitudes et les types propres á cette région sont et demeureront toujours différents de ceux de la Russie.'†b [P. Trémaux, Origine et transformations de l'homme..., pp. 402, 420, 421.]

Page me42.305
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.305
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.306

178
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.306
Manchester, 10 August 1866

Dear Moor,

I don't know whether I should offer full, semi- or no congratulations at all on Laura's semi-engagement. But whatever quantity of congratulations may be admissible, it affects their quality not a wit, and I therefore congratulate with all my heart.

Page me42.306

About how much does the Trémaux book†a cost? If it is not excessively dear on account of illustrations or anything, I'll get it myself, and then you won't need to send it to me.

Page me42.306

To allay your butcher's wrath and replenish your stock of paper, I am enclosing J/F 65865 and 66, 2 £5 notes totalling £10, dated Manchester, 30 January 1865. I wish that I could set aside more than £200 a year for you, but unfortunately I cannot. If all goes well, it is true that I shall probably be able to provide another £50, but cotton is falling again now, and Bonaparte's note concerning the 1814 frontiers†369 is alarming the philistine, and that affects the accounts.

Page me42.306

That note of Bonaparte's seems to indicate that a HITCH has cropped up between him and Bismarck. Otherwise, his demand would surely not have been so discourteous and unexpected, nor would it have been made at such a very inopportune moment for Bismarck. Bismarck undoubtedly stands to lose nothing by complying with it, but how can he do so now? What will his victorious army say to it? And the German parliament, and the Chambers, and the South Germans? And the old jackass,†b who will now look as idiotically beatific as my black and white dog Dido when he's eaten his belly full, and who has said, not an inch of German soil, etc.?

Page me42.306

The note was a great folly on Bonaparte's part, but the howling of the opposition and probably of the army, too, will presumably have forced him to precipitate the matter. It may turn out to be exceedingly dangerous for him. Either Bismarck enables a concession to be made, and then he will be forced to start a war with Bonaparte at the earliest opportunity in order to take his revenge; or else he may not give way, and then there will be war even sooner. In either case, Bonaparte runs the risk of fighting a war he does not want and without the appropriate diplomatic preparation, without any sure allies, for the publicly avowed purpose of conquest. Incidentally, Bismarck told the Hanoverian minister Platen several years ago that he would put Germany under the Prussian helmet and then lead it against the French in order to 'forge it into one'.†370

Page Break me42.307

Page me42.307

Circulars are circulating here for a 'Kinkel-fête', put round by Leppoc, 'a great poet and a great man', on the occasion of Gottfried-the-Pious' departure for Zurich. I have said I am willing to take part in it for the sum of one farthing.

Page me42.307

With kindest regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.307

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

179

MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE†371

IN LONDON

Page me42.307

London, 13 August 1866

My dear Lafargue,

Allow me to make the following observations:

Page me42.307

1. If you wish to continue your relations with my daughter,†a you will have to give up your present manner of 'courting'. You know full well that no engagement has been entered into, that as yet everything is undecided. And even if she were formally betrothed to you, you should not forget that this is a matter of long duration. The practice of excessive intimacy is especially inappropriate since the two lovers will be living at the same place for a necessarily prolonged period of severe testing and purgatory. I have observed with alarm how your conduct has altered from one day to the next within the geological period of one single week. To my mind, true love expresses itself in reticence, modesty and even the shyness of the lover towards the object of his veneration, and certainly not in giving free rein to one's passion and in premature demonstrations of familiarity. If you should urge your Creole temperament in your defence, it is my duty to interpose my sound reason between your temperament and my daughter. If in her presence you are incapable of loving in a manner in keeping with the London latitude, you will have to resign yourself to loving her from a distance. I am sure you will take the hint.

Page Break me42.308

Page me42.308

2. Before your relationship with Laura is finally settled, I must have proper clarification of your financial position. My daughter believes that I am conversant with your affairs. She is mistaken. I did not raise this question because I believed it was incumbent upon you to take the initiative. You know that I have sacrificed my whole fortune to the revolutionary struggle. I do not regret it. Quite the contrary. If I had to begin my life over again, I would do the same. I would not marry, however. As far as it lies within my power, I wish to save my daughter from the reefs on which her mother's life was wrecked. Had it not been for my direct intervention (a weakness on my part) and the influence that my friendship for you exerted on my daughter's conduct, this affair would never have progressed to its present point; for this reason I bear a heavy personal responsibility. As far as your immediate situation is concerned, the information which has come my way, although I did not seek it, is by no means reassuring. But let's not deal with that now. Regarding your position in general, I know that you are still a student, that your career in France has been half ruined by the events at Liége,†269 that you still lack an indispensable tool for your acclimatisation in England, the language, and that your prospects are at best entirely problematic. Observation has persuaded me that you are not very industrious by nature, despite spasmodic feverish activity and good intentions. In these circumstances, you will need external support if you are to set out in life with my daughter. I know nothing of your family. Although they may enjoy a comfortable living, that does not in itself mean that they would be disposed to make sacrifices for you. I do not even know with what favour they regard your proposed alliance. I repeat that I must have positive clarification on all these matters. Moreover, as an avowed realist, you cannot, of course, expect that I should behave as an idealist in respect of my daughter's future. Such a positive person as yourself, who would abolish poetry, will not wish to make poetry to the detriment of my child.

Page Break me42.309
Page me42.309
3. To preclude any misinterpretation of this letter, I would like to state that — were you in a position to enter into matrimony today — it would not come about. My daughter would refuse. I myself should object. You must have achieved something in life before thinking of marriage, and a long period of testing is required of you and of Laura.
Page me42.309
4. I would like this letter to remain confidential between ourselves. I await your reply.

Yours very truly
Karl Marx

Page me42.309
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English in full for the first time

180
MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.309
[London,] 13 août†a 1866

DEAR FRED,

Lenchen†b reached the post-office too late on Saturday to send off my note gratefully acknowledging receipt of the £10.

Page me42.309

You must forgive me if I do not write a letter today. I have the most pressing business on my back. I wrote a long letter in French to Lafargue today, telling him that I must have des renseignements positifs†c from his family concerning his economic circumstances before the affair can proceed or an ARRANGEMENT can be arrived at.†d A letter that he passed to me yesterday from a famous French doctor†e in Paris speaks well of him.

Page me42.309

The title of the book: 'P. Trémaux: Origine et Transformations de l'Homme et des autres Êtres. Premiére Partie. Paris (Librairie de L. Hachette) 1865.' Part Two has not yet appeared. No planches.†a The man's geological MAPS are in his other works.

Page Break me42.310

Page me42.310

Snippet from Liebknecht enclosed. I shall be sending you his newspapers,†b too, but they are not worth a pinch of snuff.†372

Page me42.310

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.310

I shall also be getting the chief work by the above-mentioned Parisian médecin†c and will let you have it as soon as I have read it myself.

Page me42.310

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

181
MARX TO ENGELS†373
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.310
London, 23 August 1866

DEAR FRED,

Just a few lines today. The Lafargue affair has been arranged inasmuch as his old man†d has written to me from Bordeaux, requesting the title of promesso sposo†e for his son and offering a very favourable economic settlement. Furthermore, it is accepted that Lafargue jeune†f first has to qualify as a doctor in London and then in Paris before thinking of marriage. SO FAR THE THING IS SETTLED. But I also informed our Creole yesterday that if he cannot calm himself DOWN to English manners, Laura will show him the door without more ado. He must be absolutely clear about this or nothing will come of the affair. He has a heart of gold but is an enfant gâté†g and too much a child of nature.

Page Break me42.311
Page me42.311

Laura declares that before she will formally let herself become betrothed, she must have your CONSENT.
Page me42.311

I am threatened with new carbuncles here and there, but they keep disappearing again; they do, however, oblige me to keep my hours of work very much WITHIN LIMITS.
Page me42.311

Kindest regards to Lizzy.†a
Page me42.311

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.311
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

182
MARX TO LUDWIG KIGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.311
London, 23 August 1866

My dear Friend,

You must justifiably be angered by my prolonged silence, despite your sundry friendly communications.

Page me42.311

However, you will have to excuse me, on account of the extraordinary circumstances in which I find myself.

Page me42.311

In consequence of my long illness, my economic situation has reached a point of crisis. I have accumulated debts, which are a crushing mental burden and make me incapable of any activity other than the work in which I am immersed. If I do not succeed in taking out a loan of at least 1,000 talers at an interest of say 5%, I can really see no way out. And despite the numerous letters of acknowledgement I receive from Germany, I do not know where to turn. I can only accept aid from personal friends, nothing public. You will understand that in such conditions letter-writing becomes difficult.

Page me42.311

I have not yet succeeded in re-establishing my former lucrative links with America.†374 They are so taken up with their own movement there that they regard any expenditure on European reports as faux frais de production.†a I could help them by emigrating myself. But I consider it my duty to remain in Europe and complete the work on which I have been engaged for so many years.†b

Page Break me42.312

Page me42.312

As regards that work itself, I do not think I shall be able to deliver the manuscript of the first volume (it has now grown to 3 volumes†227) to Hamburg before October. I can only work productively for a very few hours per day without immediately feeling the effects physically, and for my family's sake I suppose I must, however unwillingly, resolve to observe the hygienic limits until I am fully recovered. My work is furthermore often interrupted by the impingement of adverse external circumstances.

Page me42.312

Although I am devoting much time to the preparations for the congress in Geneva,†375 I cannot go myself, nor do I wish to, because my work cannot be subjected to prolonged interruption. I consider that what I am doing through this work is far more important for the working class than anything I might be able to do personally at any congrés quelconque.†c

Page me42.312

I regard the international situation in Europe as only temporary. As regards Germany in particular, we must take things as we find them,†376 i.e., promote the interests of revolution in a manner appropriate to the changed conditions. AS TO PRUSSIA, it is now more important than ever TO WATCH AND TO DENOUNCE her RELATIONS TO RUSSIA.

Your very sincere friend
K. Marx

Page me42.312
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 2, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

183
ENGELS TO EMIL ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me42.312
Manchester, 23 August 1866

Dear Emil,
In great haste, just to ask you to send the Funke document not to me but to

Page Break me42.313
Hall & Janison, SOLICITORS, Manchester,
as soon as it is signed.
Page me42.313
I am leaving for Germany tomorrow,†377 you see.
Page me42.313
Kind regards to everyone. I am thinking of coming to Engelskirchen after Marie Blank's wedding.

Your Friedrich

Page me42.313
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

184
MARX TO LAURA MARX
IN HASTINGS
Page me42.313
[London,] 28 August 1866

My dear Cacadou,†a

I have received your letter, but not unopened, since it had to pass through the fingered hands of the Emperor.†b
Page me42.313
It was always my opinion that to give the last finishing stroke to your 'heducation' some sort of boarding school training was still wanted. It will do you a great deal of good.
Page me42.313
Il hidalgo della figura trista†c left me at the corner of his house. His heart having been considerably shaken before, he seemed to bear his separation from me with a rather heroic indifference.
Page me42.313
My best wishes to ±¥±.†d
Page me42.313
I enclose 5 l., the remainder to be sent in the second week.

Yours humbly
Old One

Page Break me42.314
Page me42.314
Mama will start upon her own expedition to-morrow or after-to-morrow.†378 A great push was wanted to set her amoving.

Page me42.314
First published in the language of the original, English, in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

185
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†1
IN GENEVA†a
Page me42.314
[London,] 31 August 1866

Dear Becker,
It is absolutely imperative that Jung be made President of the congress,†375
Page me42.314
1. because he speaks the 3 languages, English, French, and German.
Page me42.314
2. Jung truly represents the CENTRAL COUNCIL, Odger (who furthermore only knows his mother-tongue) was not elected by the CENTRAL COUNCIL; we elected 4 delegates, with Jung at the head; Odger was only to go if he could raise the money himself (guaranteed by us, of course). He has done nothing for the Association.
Page me42.314

3. Cremer and Odger have hatched a very mean plot to prevent Jung and Eccarius leaving on the very last day.
Page me42.314
4. Odger wishes to be elected President of the congress as a means of impressing the English and imposing himself as President of the CENTRAL COUNCIL for next year, against the wish of the great majority of the COUNCIL.
Page me42.314
5. Cremer and Odger have both betrayed us in the Reform League, where they came to a compromise with the bourgeoisie against our wishes.†315
Page me42.314
6. Mr Cremer has morally debased himself completely. All his efforts are now aimed at securing a 'paid' post for himself, so that he need not work. In no circumstances must he therefore be elected as General Secretary by the congress. (The only paid post.) They must elect Fox, on the pretext, which is incidentally true, that the General Secretary must know more than one language.

Page Break me42.315
Page me42.315
9.†a The President of the CENTRAL COUNCIL must not be elected by the congress but here in London, as a figure of merely local importance.
Page me42.315
10. At the election of the President for the congress, you must say at the outset that an international congress can only be presided over by a man who can speak the various languages, simply to save time, etc.
Page me42.315
11. Convey this to Dupleix.
Page me42.315
12. I should be glad if you would get Eccarius to translate the instructions†b which I wrote in the name of the CENTRAL COMMITTEE for the London delegates into German beforehand.
Page me42.315
Regards and handshake.

Your
Karl Marx

Page me42.315
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

IN HASTINGS
Page me42.315
[London,] 5 September 1866

My beloved master ±¥±.

I bow to the earth before your immensity, whatever part you may condescend to act, that of the infinitely small or the infinitely grand.

Page me42.315

Your letters have enchanted us, and we were really bursting out with laughter on reading that fine passage in which you describe the spontaneous explosion produced by the exhibition spinster.

Page me42.315

I am belaboured by a gorilla offspring†c who can hardly spend the separation from a velvet mouse he has put his mind upon.†d If he knew her, as well as I do, he would, of course, be still more

Page Break me42.316

Calypso, qui ne pouvait se consoler du départ d'Ulysse.†a She may be a Calypso, but he is not an Ulysses, with all that. A spoonzy fellow rather. However, he deserves some praise at my hands. He has worked hard (from 1 o'clock p.m. to 9) in translating the instructions†b I had to draw up for the Geneva Congress delegates.†375 He has worked not less hard as a tailor at certain gymnastic apparatus you are to use. Last, not least, he affects great attention to the scientific gabble I affect to treat him with, although he and myself are far away from the scene of the mental entertainment.

Page me42.316

The day before yesterday the Lormiers were here and the Negrillo,†c too. Old Lormier, on the pretext of having to communicate him some gymnastic trick, told him 'secretly' and discreetly, of course, he must stop that fountain of saliva which, while smoking, he is in the habit of inundating the chimney with. When both returned from the kitchen, where the secret communication was taking place, our poor Negrillo looked rather downcast, and behaved like a 'good boy'.

Page me42.316

In fact, I liked the boy, at the same time, I think, rather jealous of his encroachments upon my old 'geheimsecretar'.†d

Page me42.316

Don't forget to write me immediately what you have to pay per week.

Page me42.316

The damned weather! I hope it will still mend.

Page me42.316

Address of Memeliten†e: 'Mrs Goodbun, Rose and Crown, Dover.'

Page me42.316

Adio, my dear child. Many kisses to you and to the immortal Cacadou,

Yours 0/¥

Page me42.316

You don't want to write to Mama, as she probably leaves Dover on Friday for another watering-place.

Page me42.316
First published, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, 1925 and in the language of the original, English, in The Socialist Review (London), No. 44, September 1929

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me42.317

187
MARX TO LAURA MARX
IN HASTINGS
Page me42.317
[London, about 8 September 1866]

My dearest Cacadou,†a

You must excuse if I write those few lines only. We want the inclosed Post Office Order for £3 to leave with the first Post, that is before 11 o'clock a.m. You will oblige me by writing us with what train you will leave Hastings next week, and when you will arrive here?
Page me42.317

Poor child, your toothache would have been spared to you, if my advice had been followed and my own 'dentist' resorted to.
Page me42.317

Your last letter has given much pleasure (the toothache news excepted) because we saw from it with what calm energy our Cacadou knows how to act.
Page me42.317

Tell Quoquo†b that mischief is brewing. The Emperor†c fancies to be neglected by his subjects and feels rather sore.

Yours truly
Old One

Page me42.317
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

188

MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.317
[London,] 26 September 1866

DEAR FRED,

Receipt enclosed for Moore (I only got the receipt from Dell yesterday).†379
Page me42.317

Mr Sawyer, the LANDLORD, has also written me letter that the 3 quarters (£46) are due on 2 October. I have not received a FARTHING from Holland yet and so cannot count on that.

Page Break me42.318
Page me42.318

By way of demonstration against the French monsieurs — who wanted to exclude everyone except 'travailleurs manuels',†a in the first instance from membership of the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, or at least from eligibility for election as delegate to the congress — the English yesterday proposed me as President of the CENTRAL COUNCIL. I declared that under no circumstances could I accept such a thing, and proposed Odger in my turn, who was then in fact re-elected, although some people voted for me despite my declaration. Dupont, incidentally, has given me the key to the Tolain and Fribourg operation. They want to stand as workers' candidates for the Corps législatif†4 in 1869, on the 'principle' that only workers can represent the workers. That is why it was exceedingly important for these gentlemen to get this principle proclaimed through the Congress.†380
Page me42.318

At yesterday's meeting of the CENTRAL COUNCIL there were all manner of dramatic scenes. E.g., Mr Cremer fell to earth with a bump when Fox was appointed General Secretary in his stead. He controlled his fury only with great difficulty. Another scene when Mr Le Lubez had to be officially informed of his expulsion from the CENTRAL COUNCIL par décret†b of the congress. He gave vent to the turmoil in his breast in an hour-long speech, in which he spat fire and brimstone at the Parisians, represented himself in terms of astonishing self-esteem and mumbled all manner of dubious things about intrigues whereby the nationalities who were well-disposed towards him (Belgium and Italy) were prevented from attending the congress. Finally, he demanded a vote of confidence from the Central Council†381 — and this will be discussed next Tuesday.
Page me42.318

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.318
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.319

189
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.319
[London,] 1 October 1866

Dear Engels,

I do not know whether I told you last time I wrote that there is a bill of exchange (no longer in the LANDLORD'S hands) outstanding against me for the rent. Sawyer had written that the bill was due on the 2nd inst., i.e., tomorrow. I called on him yesterday, as by my reckoning the thing could not be due until 3 October, as I had drawn the bill on 1 July for 3 MONTHS, so that 3 days sight must be added. And it turned out I was right. The amount is £46 (3 QUARTERS), and I have been sans sou†a for many weeks, since the SMALL SUMS, which were still obtainable via pawnbrokers, dried up.
Page me42.319

As I am furthermore now HARD PRESSED from the daily 'supplies' which have once more accumulated in recent months and in present circumstances (Lafargue) must avoid any éclat†b more than ever, I would leave for the Continent at once to see what I can arrange there 'personally'. However, I must defer that until my manuscript†c is completed, so that I can take it with me and am not subjected to fresh interruption.
Page me42.319

You must forgive me for constantly BOTHERing and plaguing you with my private morass. I had put too much reliance on having the money from Holland.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.319

What do you think of Moilin?†d

Page me42.319
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.320

190
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.320
Manchester, 2 October 1866

Dear Moor,

You did not tell me that you had signed a bill for £46, which was why I sent you half notes for only £40 yesterday; the missing halves follow today, as well as a further five-pound-note I/F 98815, Manchester, 30 January 1865.

Page me42.320

Our cashier has not got a second five-pound-note, and it's too late for a POST OFFICE order, so I cannot include the remaining SOVEREIGN; but you will no doubt surmount that difficulty.

Page me42.320

Regarding Moilin†a and Trémaux,†b I will write at greater length in the next few days; I have not quite finished reading the latter yet, but I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing to his whole theory because he knows nothing of geology, and is incapable of even the most common-or-garden literary-historical critique. That stuff about the NIGGER Santa Maria and the whites turning into Negroes is enough to make one die of laughing.†382 Especially the idea that the traditions of the Senegal NIGGERS necessarily deserve credence, just because these fellows cannot write! In addition, it is another pretty notion of his to ascribe the differences between a Basque, a Frenchman, a Breton, and an Alsatian to the surface-structure, which is, of course, also to blame for the people speaking four different languages.

Page me42.320

Perhaps the man will demonstrate in the 2nd volume how he explains that we Rhinelanders on our Devonian transitional massif (which has not been covered again by the sea since long before the coal was formed) did not become idiots and NIGGERS ages ago, or else he will assert that we are really NIGGERS.

Page me42.320

The book is utterly worthless, pure theorising in defiance of all the facts, and for each piece of evidence it cites it should itself first provide evidence in turn.

Page Break me42.321

Page me42.321

Kindest regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.321

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

191
MARX TO ENGELS†243
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.321
[London,] 3 October 1866

Dear Engels,

The enclosed bill will give you some idea of what adventures I have had today and yesterday. It was not yesterday that it became due, as Sawyer had said. This delay of one day would have been welcome in other circumstances, but in present circumstances it was exceedingly unfortunate. When your letter arrived yesterday, I went straight to our baker, Whithers, as there was nothing left to pawn, and borrowed £1 from him. But when the bill arrived this morning, it was for £48-1-5d. and not, as I had thought, £46. It was my own fault, of course, for not noting the amount. I had thought Sawyer would have deducted the PROPRIETOR TAX which I had paid and which was not deducted from the previous bill (by law it falls on him). That was not the case. (He will therefore have to deduct the whole lot for next quarter.) Hence my mistake over the £46. The bill was presented this morning at 9 o'clock sharp, and I discovered to my horror that I was £2-1-5d. short. Que faire?†a I asked the presenter of the bill to wait (at our house), as I had to go and change some money. I had no alternative but to return to the good baker, who pulled a very long face, as I am deep in the red on account of his supplying of provisions. However, he performed.

Page Break me42.322
Page me42.322

Ad vocem†a Trémaux†b: your verdict 'that there is nothing to his whole theory because he knows nothing of geology, and is incapable of even the most common-or-garden literary-historical critique'†c recurs almost word for word in Cuvier's 'Discours sur les Révolutions du Globe' in his attack on the doctrine of the variabilité des espéces,†d in which he makes fun of German nature-worshippers, among others, who formulated Darwin's basic idea in its entirety, however far they were from being able to prove it. However, that did not prevent Cuvier, who was a great geologist and for a naturalist also an exceptional literary-historical critic, from being wrong, and the people who formulated the new idea, from being right. Trémaux's basic idea about the influence of the soil (although he does not, of course, attach any value to historical modifications of this influence, and I myself would include amongst these historical modifications the chemical alteration in the surface soil brought about by agriculture, etc., as well as the varying influence which, with varying modes of production, such things as coalfields, etc., have) is, in my opinion, an idea which needs only to be formulated to acquire permanent scientific status, and that quite independently of the way Trémaux presents it.
Page me42.322

Salut.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.322
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

192
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.322
Manchester, 5 October 1866

Dear Moor,
I am tickled by your naivety in having bills outstanding against you without knowing the amount; however, it's lucky the difference was no bigger and the good baker was at hand. So that you can repay the sum in question to that excellent man at once and thus preserve your credit, I am enclosing £5 I/F 59667, Manchester, 30 January 1865, for you, and am also returning the bill now settled.

Page Break me42.323
Page me42.323
Ad vocem†a Trémaux. When I wrote to you, I had admittedly only read a third of the book, and that was certainly the worst part (at the beginning). The second third, the critique of the schools, is far better; the third, the conclusions, very bad again. The man deserves credit for having emphasised the effect of the 'soil' on the evolution of races and logically of species as well more than had previously been done, and secondly for having worked out more accurate (though, in my view, still very one-sided) views on the effects of crossing than his predecessors. In one respect, Darwin is also right in his views on the effect crossing has in producing change, as Trémaux incidentally tacitly acknowledges, in that, when it suits him to do so, he also treats crossing as a means of change, even if ultimately as one that cancels itself out. Similarly, Darwin and others have never failed to appreciate the effect of the soil, and if they did not especially emphasise it, this was because they had no notion of how the soil exerts an influence — other than that fertility has a favourable and infertility an unfavourable effect. And Trémaux is little the wiser about that either. The hypothesis that, as a general rule, the soil favours the development of higher species to the extent that it belongs to more recent formations, sounds exceedingly plausible and may or may not be correct; however, when I see the ridiculous evidence with which Trémaux seeks to substantiate it, of which 9/10 is based on erroneous or distorted facts and the remaining 1/10 proves nothing, I cannot but extend the profound suspicions I have of the author of the hypothesis to the hypothesis itself. But when he then goes on to declare that the effect of the soil's greater or lesser age, modified by crossing, is the sole cause of change in organic species or races, I see absolutely no reason to go along with the man thus far, on the contrary, I see numerous objections to so doing.

Page me42.323

You say that Cuvier also criticised the German natural philosophers for their ignorance of geology when they proclaimed the mutability of species, and yet they were proved right.†b At that time, however, the question had nothing to do with geology; but if someone puts forward a theory of the mutability of species based on geology alone and makes such geological howlers in it, falsifies the geology of whole countries (e.g., Italy and even France) and takes the rest of his examples from countries of whose geology we are as good as totally ignorant (Africa, Central Asia, etc.), then that is altogether a different matter. With regard to the ethnological examples in particular, the ones that concern countries and peoples which are generally known are almost without exception erroneous, either in their geological premisses or in the conclusions drawn from them — and he completely ignores the many contrary examples, e.g., the alluvial plains in Central Siberia, the enormous alluvial basin of the River Amazon, all the alluvial land southward from La Plata almost to the southern tip of America (east of the Cordilleras).

Page Break me42.324

Page me42.324

That the geological structure of the soil is closely related to the 'soil' in which everything grows is an old idea, likewise that this soil which is able to support vegetation influences the flora and fauna that subsist on it. It is also true that this influence has as yet been scarcely examined at all. But it is a colossal leap from there to Trémaux's theory. At all events, he deserves credit for having emphasised this previously neglected aspect, and, as I said, the hypothesis that the soil encourages evolution in proportion to its greater or lesser geological age, may be correct within certain limits (or again it may not), but all the further conclusions he draws I consider to be either totally mistaken or incredibly one-sided and exaggerated.

Page me42.324

I was very interested by Moilin's book,†a particularly for the results the French have obtained by vivisection; it is the only way to ascertain the functions of certain nerves and the effects of interfering with them; these fellows appear to have taken the art of animal-torture to a very high level of perfection; and I can very well understand the hypocritical fury of the English against vivisection; these experiments no doubt came as a most unpleasant surprise to many of the comatose gentlemen here and overturned many of their speculations. Whether there is anything new in the theory of inflammations, I am in no position to judge (I intend giving the book to Gumpert); this whole new French school does, however, appear to have a certain free-and-easy character, making big claims and being rather less scrupulous with evidence. As regards medicines, it contains nothing that any competent German doctor does not also know and accept; Moilin just forgets that 1. one is often obliged to choose the lesser evil, medicine, in order to get rid of the greater, namely, a symptom which in itself represents a direct danger, in exactly the same way that by surgery one destroys tissues where there is no alternative, and 2. that one does have to stick to the medicines for as long as one has nothing better. As soon as Moilin can cure syphilis with his electricity, mercury will soon vanish, but scarcely until then. Incidentally, no one can go on telling me that only the Germans can 'construct' systems, THE FRENCH BEAT THEM HOLLOW AT THAT.

Page Break me42.325
Page me42.325

Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.325
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

193
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.325
London, 9 October†a 1866
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Friend,

I hope I must not conclude from your lengthy silence that my last letter†b has in any way offended you. The case should be quite the reverse. Any person, who is in desperate straits, sometimes feels the need to ventilate his feelings. But he only does so to people in whom he has a special and exceptional confidence. I do assure you that my domestic troubles disquiet me far more for being an obstacle to the completion of my work†c than for any personal or family reasons. I could dispose of the whole problem tomorrow if I were prepared to take up a practical trade tomorrow, instead of working for the cause. And I equally hope that you are not embarrassed by the fact that you can do nothing to alleviate my plight. That would indeed be the most unreasonable of reasons.

Page Break me42.326
Page me42.326

And now to some more general matters.
Page me42.326

I was profoundly apprehensive about the first congress in Geneva.†375 By and large, however, it went off better than I expected. We had not in the least anticipated the effect it would have in France, England and America. I was unable to attend, nor did I wish to, but I did write the programme for the London delegates.†a I deliberately confined it to points which allow direct agreement and combination of efforts by the workers and give direct sustenance and impetus to the requirements of the class struggle and the organisation of the workers into a class. The Parisian gentlemen had their heads stuffed full of the most vacuous Proudhonist clichés. They prattle incessantly about science and know nothing. They spurn all revolutionary action, i.e. arising from the class struggle itself, every concentrated social movement, and therefore also that which can be achieved by political means (e.g., such as limitation of the working day by law). Beneath the cloak of freedom and anti-governmentalism or anti-authoritarian individualism these gentlemen, who for 16 years now have so quietly endured the most wretched despotism, and are still enduring it, are in actuality preaching vulgar bourgeois economics, only in the guise of Proudhonist idealism! Proudhon has done enormous harm. His pseudo-critique and his pseudo-confrontation with the Utopians (he himself is no more than a philistine Utopian, whereas the Utopias of such as Fourier, Owen, etc., contain the presentiment and visionary expression of a new world) seized hold of and corrupted first the 'jeunesse brillante',†b the students, then the workers, especially those in Paris, who as workers in luxury trades are, without realising it, themselves deeply implicated in the garbage of the past. Ignorantly vain, arrogant, compulsively talkative, rhetorically inflated, they were on the verge of spoiling everything, as they flocked to the congress in numbers quite out of proportion to the number of their members. In my REPORT I shall give them a discreet rap over the knuckles.
Page me42.326

I was exceedingly pleased at the American workers' congress, which took place at the same time in Baltimore. The watchword there was organisation for the struggle against capital, and, remarkably enough, most of the demands I had put up for Geneva were put up there, too, by the correct instinct of the workers.†383

Page Break me42.327
Page me42.327

The reform movement here, which was called into being by our Central Council (quorum magna pars fui†a), has now assumed enormous and irresistible dimensions.†155 I have always kept behind the scenes and have not further concerned myself with the matter since it has been under way.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.327

Apropos. The Workman†b is a philistine paper, and has nothing to do with us. The Commonwealth belongs to our people, but has for the moment transformed itself purely into a mouthpiece for Reform (partly for economic and partly for political reasons).
Page me42.327

I have recently read Dr T. Moilin: 'Leçons de Médecine Physiologique', which came out in Paris in 1865. A lot of fanciful ideas in it and too much 'construing'. But a lot of criticism of traditional therapeutics, too. I would be glad if you would read the book and let me have your opinion in detail. I would also recommend to you Trémaux: 'De l'origine de tous les êtres, etc.' Although written in a slovenly way, full of geological howlers and seriously deficient in literary-historical criticism, it represents — WITH ALL THAT AND ALL THAT — an advance over Darwin.†c

Page me42.327
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 2, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

194
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.327
London, Saturday, 13 October 1866

Dear Friend,

Since I wish to reply to you at once and your letter has arrived just before the Post closes (and no post goes from here tomorrow, Sunday), I shall summarise the quintessence of my INTERCEPTED LETTER†384 in a few words. (This confiscation of letters is certainly not at all pleasant, as I have not the slightest desire to make Mr Bismarck a confidant to my private affairs. If, on the other hand, he wishes to know my views on his policies, he can approach me direct, and I am sure I shall not mince my words.)

Page Break me42.328
Page me42.328

My economic situation has deteriorated so much following my prolonged illness and the many expenses it entailed that I am faced with a financial crisis in the immediate future, something which, quite apart from its direct effects on myself and family, would also be ruinous for me politically, especially here in London, where one must keep up appearances. What I wanted to find out from you was this: do you know anyone, or a few people (under no circumstances must the affair become public), who could advance me about 1,000 talers at an interest rate of 5 or 6% for at least 2 years? I am now paying 20-50% interest for the small sums I am borrowing, but for all that I can no longer keep the creditors at bay, with the result that the old firm is about to come crashing down about my ears.
Page me42.328

Since my penultimate letter to you†a I have suffered another series of relapses and have consequently only been able to pursue my theoretical work very intermittently. (The practical work for the International Association goes on as ever, and there is a lot of it, as I am in fact having to run the whole Association myself.) I shall be sending the first sheets†b to Meissner next month, and will continue to do so until I go to Hamburg with the remainder myself. At all events, I shall take that opportunity to call on you.

Page me42.328
My circumstances (endless interruptions, both physical and social) oblige me to publish Volume One first, not both volumes together, as I had originally intended. And there will now probably be 3 volumes.
Page me42.328
The whole work is thus divided into the following parts:
Page me42.328
Book I. The Process of Production of Capital.
Page me42.328
Book II. The Process of Circulation of Capital.
Page me42.328
Book III. Structure of the Process as a Whole.
Page me42.328
Book IV. On the History of the Theory.
Page me42.328
The first volume will include the first 2 books.
Page me42.328
The 3rd book will, I believe, fill the second volume, the 4th the 3rd.†227
Page me42.328
It was, in my opinion, necessary to begin again ab ovo†c in the first book, i.e., to summarise the book of mine published by Duncker†d in one chapter on commodities and money.†385 I judged

Page Break me42.328a

The British Museum

Page Break me42.328b
Page Break me42.329
this to be necessary, not merely for the sake of completeness, but because even intelligent people did not properly understand the question, in other words, there must have been defects in the first presentation, especially in the analysis of commodities. Lassalle, e. g., in his Kapital und Arbeit,†a in which he claims to give the 'Intellectual quintessence' of my argument, makes serious blunders, which is incidentally something to which he is always prone with his very carefree manner of appropriating my works. It is comical how he even copies my literary-historical 'errors', because, you see, I sometimes quote from memory, without checking things. I have not yet finally made up my mind whether to pass a few remarks in the foreword about Lassalle's plagiarising. The impudence of his disciples towards me would at all events justify it.†105
Page me42.329
The London COUNCIL of the ENGLISH TRADE-UNIONS (its secretary is our President, Odger) is deliberating at the present moment as to whether it should declare itself to be the BRITISH SECTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION. If it does so, the control of the working class here will IN A CERTAIN SENSE pass into our hands, and we shall be able to give the movement a good 'PUSH ON'.†18

Page me42.329
Salut.
Your
K. Marx

Page me42.329
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 2, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

195
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.329
[London,] 25 October 1866

Dear Friend,
These few lines immediately,
1. to thank you for your efforts;
Page me42.329
2. to acknowledge receipt of your last letter and of the preceding ones;

Page Break me42.330
Page me42.330
3. you misunderstand how things stand between myself and Engels. He is my closest friend. I keep no secrets from him. If it had not been for him, I would long ago have been obliged to start a 'trade'. In no circumstances, therefore, would I wish any third person to intercede with him on my account. There are also, of course, certain limits to what he can do.†386
Page me42.330
4. Dr Jacobi,†a so I am informed by workers, has become quite a good citizen and should not therefore be importuned in any way with my private affairs.
Page me42.330
I shall have to see what I can do, but I do see that you have tried everything that was within your power, and therefore entreat you to consider this matter as settled.
Page me42.330
I am not writing for The Commonwealth.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.330
Miquel et Co. will have a long time to wait before they become Prussian ministers.†b

Page me42.330
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 3, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

196
MARX TO ENGELS†6
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.330
[London,] 8 November 1866

Dear Engels,
It will not have escaped you that I have not written. I thought you had been informed of the receipt of the £5, as Laura had taken charge of the matter, but, as emerged later, she forgot to do so. I have, furthermore, been in such desperate straits that I was prevented from writing. You know that the £10 which you sent me before your departure†377 were only for payment of taxes and the subsequent £50 for rent. I have thus been completely broke for months. The so-called legacy†c proved to be divided between at least 20 people, so that the share that fell to me at the beginning of the summer was — 80 talers! My attempts to drum up money in Germany or Holland have all come to nothing. The only thing that still makes us think of the pawnshop (and my wife has pawned so many possessions that she herself can scarcely go out) is the interest it asks for. I thus had to go round London begging small loans left and right, as in our worst refugee days — and that from a limited number of people who are themselves impecunious — to make even the most essential cash purchases. On the other hand, I am being threatened by tradesmen, some of whom have withdrawn their credit and threatened to take me to court. This state of affairs was all the more critical in that Lafargue (until his departure for Bordeaux a few days ago) was constantly in the house and the REAL STATE OF THINGS had to be anxiously concealed from him. Not merely has my work†a been frequently interrupted by all this, but by trying to make up at night for the time lost during the day, I have acquired a fine carbuncle near my PENIS. I know you have done everything in your power, and more. But recourse of some kind must be found. Would it not be possible to take up a LOAN or some such transaction?

Page Break me42.331
Page me42.331
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.331
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

197
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.331
[London,] 10 November 1866

Dear Engels,

My best thanks for coming to my aid so quickly and ditto for the port wine. I know your own circumstances exactly, and that makes it doubly painful for me thus to put PRESSURE on you. You know, we really must put an end to this business once and for all, but that will not be possible until I can go to the Continent and act there in person.

Page Break me42.332
Page me42.332

Next week the first BATCH of the manuscript†a will go off to Meissner at last. This summer and autumn it was really not the theory which caused the delay, but my physical and civil condition. It is just 3 years ago now that the first carbuncle was lanced. Since then I have had only short periods of respite from it, and as Gumpert will confirm, of all types of work, theory is the most unsuitable if one has this devil's brew in one's blood.
Page me42.332

As regards the present fellow, it will be cured in the space of ABOUT 14 days. I now know exactly how it has to be treated and I have therefore started taking the arsenic again.
Page me42.332

In great haste.
Your
K. Marx

Page me42.332
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

198
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.332
[Manchester,] 11 November 1866
86 Mornington St.

Dear Moor,

Many thanks for The Free Press. Can you send me the August and September issues? I have not received them.

Page me42.332

Encl. the 2nd halves of the £30. I would have liked to send you more, but I really cannot. I'll see what I can do next month, and on 31 December we shall be doing our accounts again; if they turn out well, no doubt we shall be able to manage a bit more.

Page me42.332

The news that the manuscript†a has gone off is a load off my mind. So, a commencement d'exécution†b at last, as the Code pénal has it.†387 To that end I shall drink a special glass to your particular health. The book has greatly contributed to wrecking your health; once you have got it off your back, you'll be quite a different fellow again.

Page Break me42.333

Page me42.333

I hope that Birch despatched the port yesterday, but I am none too sure of it; at all events, however, it is sure to arrive by Monday evening or Tuesday morning.

Page me42.333

Prussians will be Prussians. As a reward for voting for the indemnity, Twesten and Frenzel are arraigned for speeches made in the Chamber.†388 Such stupidity is quite incomprehensible, but it is a point of principle. The burghers†a of Frankfurt are still furious, they are now playing the part of Poles, going about in mourning and wearing cravats with the city colours of Frankfurt.†362 A Prussian lieutenant entered a Sachsenhausen tavern and found all the seats taken. Someone got up in one corner and left, at which his neighbour drew the lieutenant's attention to the empty chair, but he said thank you very much, he did not like to sit on a warm chair. Oh, said the other, you have no need to worry about that, our bums are all freezing since the Prussians have been here.

Page me42.333

I have heard the most marvellous stories here from eyewitnesses about the Imperial warfare.†b Such things are unprecedented. E.g., the Nassauers were ordered to bridge the Main at Höchst. Having failed once on account of a storm (a storm on the Main!), they found upon their 2nd attempt that they had too few pontoons and could only bridge the Main half-way. They therefore wrote to Darmstadt, asking for the loan of a few pontoons, which did eventually arrive then, and thus the bridge over the horrendous stream was completed. Then the Nassauers immediately received orders to march south. They left the bridge standing, without a guard, merely leaving it to the care of an old boatman to see that it did not drift away down the Main. A few days later, the Prussians arrived, took possession of the completed bridge, fortified it and marched across!

Your
F.E.

Page me42.333
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.334

199
MARX TO FRANÇOIS LAFARGUE†389
IN BORDEAUX
Page me42.334
London, 12 November 1866

My dear Mr Lafargue,

I hope our friend il amoroso†a has apologised to you on my behalf for my inexcusable silence. On the one hand, I have been plagued by constantly recurring illness, on the other, I have been so taken up by a very lengthy work†b that I have neglected my correspondence with my closest friends. If I did not count you among that category, I should never have dared so to offend against propriety.
Page me42.334

My sincere thanks for the wine. Being myself from a wine-growing region, and former owner of a vineyard,†390 I know a good wine when I come across one. I even incline somewhat to old Luther's view that a man who does not love wine will never be good for anything. (There are exceptions to every rule.) But one cannot, for example, deny that the political movement in England has been spurred on by the commercial treaty with France and the import of French wines.†391 That is one of the good things that Louis Bonaparte was capable of doing, whereas poor Louis Philippe was so intimidated by the manufacturers in the North that he did not dare enter into commercial treaties with England. It is only to be regretted that regimes such as the Napoleonic one, which are founded on the weariness and impotence of the two antagonistic classes of society, buy some material progress at the expense of general demoralisation. Fortunately, the mass of working men cannot be demoralised. Manual labour is the great antidote for all the ills of society.
Page me42.334

You will have been just as delighted by the defeat of President Johnson in the latest elections as I was.†392 The workers in the North have at last fully understood that white labour will never be emancipated so long as black labour is still stigmatised.

Page me42.334

On Saturday evening Citizen Dupont brought me a letter addressed to Paul†c by the secretary of the College of Surgeons. He required some papers which were neither in the possession of my daughter†d (except for his baccalauréat diploma) nor of the person who has charge of your son's effects. You will therefore have to send us these documents at once.

Page Break me42.335

Page me42.335

Please be so good as to tell your son that he will greatly oblige me by desisting from propaganda in Paris. This is a dangerous time. The best thing he can do in Paris is to use his time to profit by his association with Dr Moilin. It will do him no harm to spare his polemical strength. The more he holds himself in check, the better he will be as a fighter when the right moment comes.

Page me42.335

My daughter asks me to request you to be so kind as to send with Paul some photograms of Madame Lafargue and of yourself.

Page me42.335

All my family joins me in greetings to the Lafargue family.

Yours ever
Karl Marx

Page me42.335

First published in the language of the original, French, in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

200

MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE
IN LONDON

Page me42.335

[London,] 7 December 1866

My dear Lafargue,

I am so taken up by a piece of work†a which must be completed by Monday that I am unable to reply to you at once. Meanwhile, if I have offended you by my brusque monologue, I beg your pardon. One should not lose one's temper even when one is in the right.

Page me42.335

Greetings.

Karl Marx

Page me42.335
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.336

201
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.336
[London,] 8 December 1866

Dear FRED,

Meissner has not begun printing yet,†a as he wanted to finish off some other things first. I am expecting a letter from him next Monday. All in all, I found the delay by no means disagreeable, as I have only been rid of that vile carbuncle for a few days, and, moreover, my creditors are badgering me in a truly edifying manner. I only regret that private persons CAN not FILE THEIR BILLS FOR THE BANKRUPTCY COURT with the same propriety as men of business.
Page me42.336

A while ago, Kladderadatsch printed a swipe at the Brimstone Gang in large type, in a bad lampoon on Collins' The Woman in White. The author of this garbage is that miserable Bettziech, and I should not be surprised if the order had emanated from Kinkel or Hatzfeldt. Nor have I any doubt that the old bag was the cause of Liebknecht's arrest.†393
Page me42.336

The Prussian swine are acting precisely as we should wish them to. There will be no progress until heads roll.
Page me42.336

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.336
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

202
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.336
Manchester, 14 December 1866

Dear Moor,

You just would not believe how overrun I am at present by all manner of folk. Young men recommended by customers, seeking positions here; agents, or such as would like to be so; then this week my most likeable nephew Blank†a as well, who has established himself in London — and so it goes on continuously, and you will realise how difficult it is thereby to find the time to write. Then, from time to time, I also get someone arriving on the doorstep like the writer of the enclosed letter†394 and putting a pistol to my breast. When I read the letter, I knew at once who had sent this sterling fellow to plague me — it was good old Dr Rode, as the said sterling fellow indeed confirmed when he came up to my office. This shameless Rode is taking some weird liberties in my regard. First, he makes the silliest kind of trouble between myself and Klings after the latter called here,†b and then he even goes so far as to send people like that to plague me, referring them to me as cashier for the whole émigré community. If the fellow attempts anything else of that kind with me, he may be sure of a warm response. Why cannot he leave me be, I do not know him at all?

Page Break me42.337
Page me42.337

The Prussian swine are certainly behaving quite splendidly. I would indeed not have imagined them to be quite so stupid, but it is really impossible to imagine them stupid enough. That is all to the good. Things are on the move again now, and the revolution will come all the sooner for it, and this time heads are bound to roll, as you yourself say.
Page me42.337

They are locking up the office, and I must close, too. Enclosed two five-pound-notes:
Page me42.337

I/S 38969 and I/S 62239, Manchester, 26 January 1866.
Page me42.337

That is as much as I can risk sending until I know how I stand, and I cannot check on it until the books are made up.
Page me42.337

Kindest regards to your wife and children.

Your

F.E.

Page me42.337
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.338

203
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.338
[London,] 17 December 1866

DEAR FRED,
THANKS FOR THE £10.
Page me42.338
As far as Rode is concerned, he is obsessed with political connections and his own self-importance. As you are finding this obsession a nuisance — and JUSTLY so — you should write to him at the first opportunity saying that you have not the honour of his acquaintance and requesting him to desist from such LIBERTIES.
Page me42.338
The Revue des deux Mondes and the Revue Contemporaine had two detailed articles on the 'INTERNATIONAL', which treat it and its congress as one of the most significant events of the century.†a The like also in The Fortnightly Review, in consequence.†b Meanwhile, we are in practice paralysed BY WANT OF FUNDS and even OF MEN, with all the English being totally absorbed by the REFORM MOVEMENT. The French government is (heureusement†c) beginning to treat us as enemies.†395 One of our more dubious ACQUISITIONS was the joining (AT New York) of HEAD CENTRE†396 Stephens.
Page me42.338
Was not the Pope's†d address to the French OFFICERS capital? Only an Italian priest could thus, before the whole of Europe, deliver Bonaparte a kick in the form of a BLESSING.†397
Page me42.338
It is highly characteristic of the status rerum†e that neither Bonaparte nor William the Conqueror†f are quite right in the top DEPARTMENT. The latter believes that God Almighty has entrusted him with a special mission, and the former has been TURNED SO TOPSY-TURVY by Mexico†270 and Bismarck that he sometimes appears positively demented.
Page me42.338

And do you not think that there will be peace for another year yet at least (apart from ACCIDENTS, of course, such as the death of Bonaparte, etc.)? The fellows all need time for the CONVERSION and PRODUCTION OF ARMS, do they not?
Page me42.338
Not a word from Mr Meissner yet. I presume that now, at the year's end, he finds the pressure of business very great. The contract does give me surety in the event of any evasive manoeuvres. In the second, emended and definitive version, the contract contains NO STIPULATION WHATEVER AS TO THE TERM FOR WHICH THE MANUSCRIPT†a IS TO BE READY. But if there is no answer by tomorrow, I shall write again.

Page Break me42.339
Page me42.339
As you enjoy credit with quelconque†b bookseller and I CAN not SPEND a FARTHING on books at the moment, you would be doing me a great favour if you could get as quickly as possible for me: 'J.E. Th. Rogers: A History of Agriculture'. I must have a look at the book and have left a gap in one chapter for the purpose.†398 Although it has already been out for a long time, it is not yet in the library. Nor at Mudie's, so I am assured by Eccarius, for whom The Commonwealth took out a subscription there.
Page me42.339
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.339
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

204
ENGELS TO MARX†399
IN LONDON
Page me42.339
Manchester, 21 December 1866

Dear Moor,
I also think that the leaders in Western Europe will do their utmost to preserve the peace next year and until everyone is equipped with breech-loaders. However, whether the Russians will not consider this very time opportune for cutting Austria down to size with Bismarck's help, for annexing Galicia and dividing Turkey up into a multitude of small Slav states, is another question. Moreover, it could happen that in France, too, war will become a necessity — for the sake of this military reorganisation, because without a war good old Boustrapa†76 will not be able to get it accepted. The last war†a has placed the fellow in a curious dilemma: either he lets everything stand as it is, in which case he will no longer be a MATCH for Prussia, or else he carries the matter out, which will be disastrous for him, first because of his tremendous unpopularity, and second because he is completely debonapartising the army. From the moment that some kind of military service for all is introduced in France, the praetorian system†400 will cease of its own accord and the 25-30% of RE-ENLISTED FELLOWS, who now serve in the French army, will disappear for the most part. However, as there will still be substitution,†401 this time Mr Bonaparte will find himself in the comical predicament of needing the support of the bourgeoisie to oppose the peasantry. But the course of history really is quite impudently ruthless in dealing with this noble fellow, and he must be forgiven if he loses faith in the ways of God and the World. I hope he, like me, reads his Horace for recreation: justum ac tenacem propositi virum,†b etc. Old Horace reminds me in places of Heine, who learnt a great deal from him and was au fond†c politice†d no less common a cur. Remember how the sterling fellow challenged the vultus instantis tyranni†e and licked Augustus' boots. And the old goat is quite charming in other respects, too.

Page Break me42.340
Page me42.340
I will get the book†f for you next week if I can.
Page me42.340
It is very pleasing about the articles in the Revue des deux Mondes and Fortnightly, although I have not yet been able to read them.†g Revue contemporaine†h does not exist here.
Page me42.340
Wehner, who was recently in Germany, tells the following anecdote, which was told by Bennigsen (of the National Association†152) himself: when Bennigsen had his meeting with Bismarck before the war, the latter expounded his whole National-Associationist German policy to him, whereupon Bennigsen enquired how it was that Bismarck was choosing the difficult path of war in order to carry it out, instead of simply 'relying on the support of the people', as the liberal cry has it. Bismarck stared at him for a few moments and then said: Could you jump a ditch with a rheumatic nag? He also brought back the news that the unhappy Crown Prince,†i who used to put on such liberal airs, has become even more crazed than the old man†a since the war, which is one good thing at least.

Page Break me42.341
Page me42.341
I enclose another two five-pound-notes, so that you shall not be quite without money over the holidays:
Page me42.341
M/W 34768, London, 12 October 1866,

I/S 49080, Manchester, 26 January 1866, in the not entirely unfounded expectation that the accounts will indemnify me for it at the end of the year.
Page me42.341
Many regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.341
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

205
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.341
[London,] 31 December 1866

DEAR FRED,
Happy New Year! Ditto for Madame Lizzy†b! May the devil take Russians, Prussians, Bonaparte and the BRITISH JURYMAN in the coming year!
Page me42.341
Apropos. The French government had confiscated papers and documents intended for us which were being brought across the frontier by French MEMBERS after the Geneva Congress, and attached them for the police archives. We claimed the things back through Lord Stanley, FOREIGN MINISTER, as 'BRITISH PROPERTY'. And in fact POOR Bonaparte had to surrender everything to us via the FOREIGN OFFICE.†402 Is that not priceless! He has been outwitted but himself does not know how.
Page me42.341
I received some very sad news today — my uncle†c has died, he was an excellent man. However, he made a good death, quick, surrounded by all his children, fully conscious and dispensing subtle Voltairean irony over the priest.

Page Break me42.342
Page me42.342
The whole family sends you New Year greetings.
Page me42.342
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.342
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.343

1867

206
MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.343
[London,] 19 January 1867

Dear Engels,

After a long silence, for which he pleaded overwork, Meissner has written that my plan 'is unacceptable to him'.
Page me42.343

1. He wants to have the 2 volumes†a ready at the same time†233;
Page me42.343

2. not to print piecemeal, as he wants to have one proof-sheet done per day and only to leave the final correction (revision) to me.
Page me42.343

I replied ad 2 that it is a matter of indifference to me, as he can shortly have the whole manuscript of Volume I. If he commences printing later but prints by so much faster, it will be all the same in the end. However, in the case of a book with so much annotation in various languages, he should reflect whether the manner of correcting he is wanting is feasible without the text being gravely marred by printing errors. Ad 1, it is an impossibility without the whole job being greatly delayed, nor is anything of the kind agreed in our contract. I explicated the various reasons to him, but have as yet had no reply.†111
Page me42.343

Aside from the delay, a yet greater obstacle to my committing myself to the 2nd volume is the fact that, when the first one has appeared, I shall have to make a pause for my health's sake; and I shall in any case have to travel to the Continent to ascertain whether I can in any way sort out my financial circumstances. These are becoming worse day by day, and there is a danger of everything coming crashing about our heads. The baker alone is owed £20, and there is the very devil with butcher, GROCER, TAXES, etc. To crown it all, I recently received a letter from a Mr Burton in Torquay, informing me he has bought the house from Sawyer, and he is dunning me 1. for the outstanding rent for the last

Page Break me42.344
QUARTER, 2. as my lease expires in March, requesting me to state if I wish to take the house subsequently, either for a longer LEASE or annually. I did not reply immediately. Whereupon I received a second letter yesterday, saying I must explain myself, as otherwise his 'AGENT' would have to take steps to find another tenant. So IN A FIX.
Page me42.344
As for my physical condition, it has been better for some weeks, a few small carbuncles on my left loin, but not significant. Only dreadful insomnia, which makes me very RESTLESS, although the chief cause is probably mental.
Page me42.344
THANKS for the Rogers.†a A lot of material in it. Regarding the STRIKE question, or at least the Manchester WEAVERS' DISPUTE, I should be obliged to you if you would write me an exact account of the STATE OF AFFAIRS, as I can still include it.†b
Page me42.344
Politics frozen up, too cold even for the Russian bear. I am tickled by the Prussians' black, white and red flag!†403
Page me42.344
Best wishes to MRS Lizzy.†c
Page me42.344
What does Gumpert have to say about Moilin†d?

Your
K.M.

Page me42.344
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

207
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.344
Manchester, 29 January 1867

Dear Moor,
I have been so overrun by philistines this morning that I did not manage to despatch the second half of the note by first post, but am doing so herewith.
Page me42.344

I expect Meissner will accept your opinion. At all events it is obvious that after the first volume†e you must have a 6 week rest, and also see how you can put money in your purse on the Continent. I think it will be all right if you take him the rest of the manuscript yourself.

Page Break me42.345
Page me42.345

The position regarding WORKINGMEN AND MANUFACTURERS is as follows: India, China, Levant, etc., grossly oversupplied, in consequence of which CALICOS have been almost unsaleable for the last 6 months. In some districts feeble attempts by the MANUFACTURERS to organise SHORT TIME ensued. Being only sporadic, all of these collapsed. Meanwhile, the manufacturers go and send consignments of their goods, unsaleable here, to India and China, etc., thereby aggravating the GLUT. They then discover that this does not agree with them either, and they finally propose the HANDS should take a 5% REDUCTION OF WAGES. Whereupon counterproposal from the HANDS to work just 4 days a week. Refus†a of the MASTERS — AGITATION. In the last fortnight, finally, a situation has gradually been reached, and most recently become general, where SHORT TIME at 4 days a week has been introduced everywhere in the weaving mills and in the spinning mills that spin for them, in some cases with and in some cases without the 5% reduction in wages. The workers therefore were right in theory and were proved right in practice, too.†404
Page me42.345

The scoundrel Bismarck has splendidly gulled the scoundrel Bonaparte over the Peace of Prague, exactly as Bonaparte gulled the Austrians at Villafranca about the expelled Italian princes qui rentreront dans leurs états†b — but without recourse to foreign troops.†365 Bismarck is thus saying: the South German states auront une existence internationale indépendante,†c but only for so long as they themselves wish; from the moment that they wish to join with us, they shall be entirely free to do so, otherwise after all they would be not indépendants!†405 POOR Bonaparte has never been a member of a student fraternity at a German university, nor has he ever practised the art of interpretation at one of their beer-conventions, and is consequently no match for the Hon. Bismarck. In Hanover they are most frightfully vexed at the Prussians,†355 and not just the city itself but even more so amongst the peasantry — they are flocking to the queen†d and putting all their assets at her disposal.
Page me42.345

There is much ludicrous sentimentality therein, mixed with hatred for the military and the police; the very same people, e. g., are themselves saying that the administration is much improved, etc., but the Prussians' talent for inspiring hatred for themselves

Page Break me42.346
has once again proved itself here, too. I have this from 2 people who were there a short while ago and are themselves annexationists and Hanoverians.
Page me42.346

If I can manage it, I'll come down and see you for a few days at the end of this week or next, i. e., from Friday to Sunday evening. Providing it does not freeze again.
Page me42.346

Kindest regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.346
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

208
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.346
[London,] 18 February 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

Will you see to it that the following reply†a is placed in the Zeitung für Norddeutschland, and, if they refuse it, in another Hanoverian paper? It is a matter of some importance to me as I really am intending to travel to Germany in a few weeks' time. The whole notice reeks of Stieber.†406

Page me42.346

In the next few days I shall send you the official report of the congress in Geneva, which is now appearing in instalments in English and French in a paper here.†407 The Commonwealth is entirely given over to the REFORM MOVEMENT. Its editorship is in very bad hands. For the present we have reasons for letting it go as it is, although as shareholders we are entitled to intervene.

Page me42.346

Our Association has recently had all manner of bother with Mr Bonaparte.†402 More next time. Kindly inform me what Liebknecht is doing and where he is hiding.

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.346
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 3, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.347

209

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.347
[London,] 21 February 1867

Dear Engels,

I have been putting off writing from one day to the next, but I am hard pressed now. A GROCER is sending the bailiffs in on Saturday (the day after tomorrow) if I do not pay him at least £5.

Page me42.347

I have had some additional expenses, firstly £2 for champagne (a small bottle), it having been prescribed for Laura's health, and secondly ditto for gymnastics lessons I had to send her to again on doctor's advice, with payment in advance.

Page me42.347

The work†a will soon be complete, and would have been so today if I had been subject to less harassment of late.

Page me42.347

You will detect Stieber's hand in the enclosed cutting sent me by Dr Kugelmann (and which comes most amiss in view of my intended journey).†406

Your
K.M.

Page me42.347
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

210
MARX TO ENGELS†399
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.347
[London,] 25 February 1867

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR £20.

Page me42.347

Letter from Dr Kugelmann enclosed.†406

Page me42.347

At this moment, I can only write you these few lines as the LANDLORD'S AGENT is here and I have to act the part of Mercadet in

Page Break me42.348
Balzac's comedy†a for his benefit. Apropos Balzac, I advise you to read Le Chef-d'Œuvre Inconnu and Melmoth réconcilié. They are two little chefs d'œuvres, full of the most delightful irony.
Page me42.348
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.348
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

211
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON
Page me42.348
Manchester, 13 March 1867

Dear Moor,

The reason I have not written to you is in part that all manner of things have prevented me, but in part also it was deliberate, as I wanted to let the date pass when 'the book'†b was due to be completed, and now I hope that it is ready. So, when will you be going to see Mr Meissner? When you do, I will give you an authorisation to collect the fee for my last pamphlet.†c
Page me42.348

Apropos the latter, by now the Lassallean gentlemen will have had time enough to convince themselves how right I was about the effect of universal suffrage and the power it would give the aristocracy in the countryside.†d The Lassallean gentlemen failed to get 2 men through; the two Saxon workers' candidates†e who did get through are very dubious and appear to be rather of Wuttke's ilk. As a whole, incidentally, the elections did show that in Germany they are not remotely susceptible to the kinds of pressure that can be applied to them in France, and that is already to the good.†408 I am also convinced that the more bureaucratic meddling there is, the worse each fresh election in Germany will turn out for the government, and that 15 years of government-controlled elections such as we have had in France are impossible in our country.

Page Break me42.349
Page me42.349

But what a fine lot we have in the noble House,†409 to be sure! They may pull a wry face but they won't offer much protest as they are bartering away the few lousy safeguards still contained in the Prussian constitution for the indirect annexation of the 6 million people in the little states, who have de facto already been annexed and mediatised without any constitution at all.†376 Au fond,†a it is quite immaterial what nonsense the fellows contrive; with the philistines in their present mood of Bismarckolatry, they represent bourgeois public opinion and will only do what the latter wants. The worthy burgher seems determined to avoid any further 'conflict'. The movement — both at home, where it is now bestirring itself once more, and in Europe — will soon enough leave all this ordure behind and turn to the real issues of the day.

Page me42.349

Scoundrel Schweitzer offered himself for election here, there and everywhere, but got nowhere. I have been sent 2 pamphlets about him from Barmen, of which one enclosed and the other, shorter one, to follow; I do not have it with me. The enclosed obviously bears the mark of the Hatzfeldt lot.

Page me42.349

Stieber is again creating in the Volks-Zeitung over Eichhoff's pieces in the Hermann, Koller is also mentioned. See Hermann.†410

Page me42.349

The moderate result of universal suffrage in Germany has, in any case, contributed to the sudden popularity of HOUSEHOLD SUFFRAGE in official circles here. It would be splendid if HOUSEHOLD SUFFRAGE got through as a result, there would soon be a good many changes here and the movement would get going.

Page me42.349

TRADE HERE is still stagnant to an exceeding degree. India and China have been swamped by the consignments from the manufacturers, 20,000 people are on STRIKE in Stockport, SHORT TIME is spreading and, if this does not change soon, in May we shall have a superb crisis of overproduction. That can only benefit the radical reform movement.

Page me42.349

The Diplomatic Review is excellent this time.†b Provided old D. Urquhart gets hold of FACTS, he is ALL RIGHT; but Beust's curious manoeuvres had already aroused my suspicions. Notwithstanding the fact that the Saxons (vide†c Mr von Seebach in the Crimean War†411) have always been in cahoots with the Russians, notwithstanding the fact that Beust sent that ostentatiously rude despatch to the Russians during the Danish war,†9 I do, nevertheless, find it difficult to decide whether the Russians have actually bought the fellow or whether they have got him gratis and without being aware of it. It almost seems to me that the boundless vanity of that little Saxon shit suffices to explain the whole affair — the Russians naturally KNOW HOW TO IMPROVE THE OCCASION.

Page Break me42.350

Page me42.350

As an exercise in vulgar democracy, I have recently...†a

Page me42.350

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

212
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.350
[London,] 2 April†b 1867

Dear Engels,

I had resolved not to write to you until I could announce completion of the book,†c which is now the case. Nor did I wish to bore you by explaining the further delay, viz., carbuncles on my posterior and near the PENIS, the final traces of which are now fading but which made it extremely painful for me to adopt a sitting (hence writing) posture. I am not taking arsenic because it dulls my mind too much and I needed to keep my wits about me at least at those times when writing was possible.
Page me42.350

Next week I shall have to take the manuscript to Hamburg myself.†412 I did not like the tone of Mr Meissner's last letter. Added to which, I received the enclosed scrawl from Borkheim yesterday. I have every reason to believe that the 'continental friend' is Mr Privy Councillor Bucher.†413 Borkheim had written him a letter, you know, which he read out to me, about his arrangements for travelling to Silesia, which he wishes to visit on family business. Bucher replied directly. I therefore scent a plot behind these canards and will have to put the knife to Meissner's breast myself. Otherwise, the fellow would be in a position to hold back my manuscript (some 25 closely printed proof-sheets by my reckoning) and, at the same time, not have it printed on the pretext that he was 'awaiting' the second volume.†233

Page Break me42.351
Page me42.351

I must now d'abord†a reclaim my clothes and timepiece from their abode at the pawnbroker's. I can also hardly leave my family in their present situation, they being sans sou†b and the creditors becoming more brazen each day. Finally, before I forget, all the money that I could afford to spend on Laura's champagne-treatment has gone the way of all flesh. She now needs red wine, of better quality than I can command. Voilá la situation.†c
Page me42.351

Our 'INTERNATIONAL' has just celebrated a great victory. We were providing financial support from the LONDON TRADE-UNIONS for the Paris bronze WORKERS, who were out on STRIKE. As soon as the masters learnt of that, they gave in.†414 The affair has created a deal of commotion in the French papers, and we are now an established force in France.

Page me42.351

It appears to me there must have been collusion between Bismarck and Bonaparte over the Luxemburg affair. It is possible, though improbable, that the former either cannot or will not keep his word.†415 That the Russians have been meddling in German affairs is crystal clear from:

1. the treaty between Württemberg and Prussia, which was already concluded on 13 August before all the others;

2. Bismarck's demeanour in respect of the Poles.†416

Page me42.351

The Russians are more active than ever. They are setting the stage for trouble between France and Germany. Austria is pretty well paralysed in herself. Our English gentlemen are about to be led a fine song and dance in the UNITED STATES.
Page me42.351

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.351
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.352

213
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON
Page me42.352
Manchester, 4 April 1867

Dear Moor,

Hurrah! There was no holding back that exclamation when at last I read in black and white that the 1st volume†a is complete and that you intend taking it to Hamburg at once. So that you shall not be short of the nervus rerum,†b I am sending you enclosed the halves of seven five-pound-notes, £35 in toto, and will despatch the other halves immediately I receive the usual telegram. Do not let the scrawl from Bucher†413 — it is undoubtedly from him — worry you, it is just Prussian police gossip and the scandal-mongering of men of letters, of the same ilk as that recent stuff about the Polish trip.†406 I enclose a note for you to give to Meissner, so that you can also collect my fee.†c
Page me42.352

There is no longer even a shadow of doubt about the alliance between Bismarck and the Russians. However, the Russians have never yet had to pay so high a price for their Prussian alliance, they have had to sacrifice their whole traditional policy in Germany and, if this time they were to imagine, as is their wont, that it is only 'for the moment', they may well be making the very deuce of a blunder. For all the shouting about the Empire, etc., German unity already seems on the point of outgrowing Bismarck and all those Prussians. They will have to press on all the harder in the Orient — the Russians, that is —, the present favourable conjuncture will surely not endure long. But how great does the financial need have to be and how sluggish must the industrial progress be, s'il y'en a,†d in Russia, if those fellows are still without a railway to Odessa and Bessarabia, 11 years after the Crimean War, when it would now be worth two armies to them! And so I also believe that the storm will break this year, if everything goes well for the Russians.
Page me42.352

The Luxemburg affair†415 appears to be taking the same course as with Saarlouis and Landau.†369 Bismarck undoubtedly offered to sell it in 1866, but Louis†e really does seem to have held back at

Page Break me42.353

First page of Engels' letter to Marx of 4 April 1867

Page Break me42.354
Page Break me42.355
that time in the hope that he would later get far more as a present. I have positive knowledge that the Prussian Ambassador Bernstorff told the Hanseatic ditto (Geffcken) in London a few days ago that he had received a despatch to the effect that Prussia was not going to give way over the Luxemburg question under any circumstances. This is the same despatch that The Owl refers to as requesting Britain to make representations at The Hague, which are then said to have succeeded in making Holland withdraw from the deal. The point is that in the present situation Bismarck cannot remotely allow the French to annex German territory without making all his achievements appear ridiculous. What is more, that old jackass William†a has gone and pronounced the words 'not a single German village' and is personally committed. It is, however, as yet by no means certain that the deal may not still come to fruition after all; the Kölnische Zeitung is screaming quite hysterically that we really cannot start a war over Luxemburg and that we have no right to it at all; Luxemburg, they say, should no longer be counted part of Germany, etc., so they have never behaved quite so despicably.
Page me42.355

Bismarck may not be Faust, but he does have his Wagener.†b The way in which the poor devil translates his Lord and Master into Wagnerese makes you die of laughing. Bismarck recently employed another of his horse-metaphors, and not wanting to be outdone in this either, Wagener ended a speech by trumpeting: Gentlemen, it is time for us to stop riding our hobby-horses and to mount that noble thoroughbred mare Germania!†c Montez Mademoiselle,†d the Parisians used to say during the Terror.†417

Page me42.355

I hope that your carbuncles are more or less mended now and that the journey will help get rid of them entirely. You must put an end to this nonsense this summer.
Page me42.355

Many regards to the LADIES and Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.355
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.356

214
MARX TO ENGELS†6
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.356
Hamburg, 13 April 1867

Dear FRED,

I arrived here at 12 o'clock noon yesterday. The boat left London on Wednesday†a at 8 o'clock in the morning.†412 In which fact you see the whole history of the voyage. The most fearful weather and gales. Having been confined for so long, I felt as voraciously fit as 500 hogs.†b However, with ALL that riff-raff being sea-sick and falling about to left and right of us, it would all have become ennuyant†c in time, if a certain NUCLEUS had not held firm. It was a very 'mixed' nucleus, VIZ., a German ship's captain, who bore a marked resemblance to yourself in his face, but a small fellow, he also had a good deal of your humour and the same good-natured frivolous twinkling of the eyes; a London cattle-dealer, a true John Bull, BOVINE IN EVERY RESPECT; a German clockmaker from London, a nice fellow; a German from Texas; and, the real protagonist, a German who had been roaming around Eastern Peru for 15 years, an area that has only recently been geographically charted, where, amongst other things, human flesh is still consumed in no mean quantity. An eccentric, energetic and high-spirited fellow. He had a most valuable collection of stone axes with him, etc., which merited being discovered in the 'caves'. One female personage as hanger-on (the other ladies were all SEASICK and vomiting in the ladies CABIN), a toothless old hag with a refined Hanoverian accent, daughter of some primeval Hanoverian minister, von Baer or suchlike, she has now long been an improver of men, pietistic, concerned to raise the condition of the working class, acquainted with Jules Simon, full of spiritual radiance, with which she bored our BOVINE FRIEND to death. WELL! On Thursday evening, when the storm was at its worst, with all the tables and chairs adance, we were boozing en petit comité,†d with that old hag of a woman lying on a couch, from which the movement of the ship — to divert her a trifle — occasionally tipped her onto the floor in the middle of the cabin. What was keeping this beautiful creature so spellbound in these inimical circumstances?

Page Break me42.357
Why did she not withdraw to the ladies' chamber? Our savage German was regaling us with an enthusiastic account of the sexual depravities of savages. Voilá le charme†a for this delicate, pure, refined lady. One example: he was received in an Indian hut where the woman was giving birth that very day. The afterbirth is roasted and — supreme expression of hospitality — he is obliged to partake of the SWEETBREAD!
Page me42.357

I called on Meissner immediately upon our arrival. Clerk tells me he won't be back before 3 o'clock (afternoon). I left my card and invited Mr Meissner to dine with me. He came but he had someone with him and wanted me to accompany him as his wife was expecting him. I declined but agreed that he should call on me at 7 o'clock in the evening. He mentioned en passant that Strohn was probably still in Hamburg. I therefore called on Strohn's brother.†b Our man had left for Paris THE VERY SAME MORNING. So, Meissner came round in the evening. A pleasant fellow, despite something Saxon about him, as his name suggests. After a brief parley, everything ALL RIGHT. Manuscript taken straight to his publishing house, where it was put in a SAFE. Printing will start IN A FEW DAYS and proceed apace. We then drank together, and he expressed his great 'delight' at making my esteemed acquaintance. He now wants that the book should appear in 3 volumes. In particular he is opposed to my compressing the final book (the historico-literary part) as I had intended. He said that from the publishing point of view and with the 'dull' mass of readers in mind, this was the part by which he was setting most store. I told him that, as far as that was concerned, I was his to command.†418
Page me42.357

AT ALL EVENTS, in Meissner we have someone entirely at our disposal; he has great contempt for the whole pack of vulgar scribblers. I thought it prudent to delay presenting your LITTLE BILL.†c Always keep the pleasantest surprises till last.
Page me42.357

And now adio, OLD BOY.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.357

BEST COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS!

Page me42.357

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.358

215
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.358
[Telegram]
[Hamburg, 16 April 1867]

Dr L. Kugelmann
Hanover
I arrive this evening about nine.

Marx

Page me42.358
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the photocopy of the telegram

Published in English for the first time

216
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†419
IN GENEVA
Page me42.358
Hanover, 17 April 1867

Dear Friend,

I left London by STEAMER last Wednesday†a and after a tempestuous crossing reached Hamburg on Friday afternoon to deliver the manuscript of the first volume to Mr Meissner there. Printing has already started at the beginning of this week, so that the first volume will appear at the end of May. The whole work will appear in 3 volumes.†418 The title is Capital. A Critique of Political Economy. The first volume comprises the First Book: 'The Process of Production of Capital'. It is without question the most terrible MISSILE that has yet been hurled at the heads of the bourgeoisie (landowners included). It is important now that you draw attention to the forthcoming publication in the press, i.e., in the papers to which you have access.

Page Break me42.359
Page me42.359

If you send the next issue of the Vorbote as a sample to Otto Meissner, Hamburg, he may be of assistance in the distribution of your paper, too.

Page me42.359

I must finish now (more later) as Dr Kugelmann, who sends his best compliments, intends to acquaint me with the splendours of Hanover.

Tout á toi†a
K. Marx

Page me42.359
First published in: Marx Festnummer zum 40. Todestage, Wien, 1923

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

217
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.359
Hanover, 24 April 1867

Dear FRED,

I have been here as Dr Kugelmann's guest for a week now. I was obliged to stay in Hamburg or right near Hamburg on account of the printing.†b Things stand as follows. Meissner wants to have the whole undertaking complete in 4-5 weeks, but cannot get the printing done in Hamburg, both because there are not enough printers, and because the proof-readers are insufficiently learned. He is therefore having the printing done at Otto Wigand's (or RATHER his son's,†c as that puffed-up old cur only has a nominal share in the business now). He sent the manuscript to Leipzig a week ago. He now wants to have me to hand to check the first 2 proof-sheets and at the same time to decide whether it is 'possible' to print quickly with a single proof-reading on my part. In this case, the whole undertaking would be complete in 4-5 weeks. However, Easter week is now holding it up. Wigand Jr wrote to Meissner that he cannot start until the end of this week. At Kugelmann's pressing invitation, I therefore came here (which also has economic advantages) for the interim. Before I say anything about 'local' affairs, I must not forget to tell you: Meissner would appreciate it, and asks me to pass on the request to you, if you would write a warning concerning Russia, for the benefit of the Germans and the French simultaneously. If you do undertake it, he wishes it done quickly. He would, however, prefer you to write at some length rather than more briefly, as small pamphlets do not sell well. You could discuss conditions when you send him the manuscript, as he says the two of you would not fall out over the matter. You could write with 'no holds barred', as Meissner considers that there is no need whatever to be concerned about considerations.

Page Break me42.360

Page me42.360
Regarding Hanover, then.
Page me42.360
Kugelmann is a doctor of great eminence in his special field, which is gynaecology. He is in correspondence with Virchow and the other authorities (including one Meyer in Berlin) and formerly with von Siebold in Göttingen and with Semmelweis in Vienna, before he went mad. Whenever there is a difficult case in this field over here, he is always brought in as consultant. As an instance of the professional jealousy and stupidity of the locals, he told me he had initially been blackballed, i.e., not admitted to the doctors' association here, because 'gynaecology' is a 'cesspit of immorality'. Kugelmann is very talented technically, too. He has invented a mass of new instruments in this field.
Page me42.360
Kugelmann is secondly a fanatical supporter (and for my taste excessively Westphalian in his admiration) of our ideas and the two of us personally. He sometimes bores me with his enthusiasm, which is at odds with the detachment he displays as a doctor. But he understands, and he is a really excellent man, unaffected by qualms, capable of making sacrifices, and, most important of all, convinced. He has a charming little wife and an 8-year old daughter who is positively sweet.†a He has in his possession a far better collection of our works than the two of us together. I even came across The Holy Family again here, which he presented to me and of which he will be sending you a copy. I was pleasantly surprised to find that we have no need to feel ashamed of the piece, although the Feuerbach cult now makes a most comical impression upon one. The ordinary people, and in the capital, Hanover, even the bourgeoisie, are extremely hostile to the Prussians (ditto in Electoral Hesse) and miss no opportunity of expressing their sentiments. They openly proclaim their longing —

Page Break me42.360a

Karl Marx. End of April 1867. Hanover

Page Break me42.360b
Page Break me42.361
for the French. If one remarks to them that this is unpatriotic, they say, 'The Prussians did just the same thing. When they marched through here, they were boasting, the officers first and foremost among them, that the French would come to their aid — if need be.' Wehner's father is much respected here and is considered a Guelph.†420 Bismarck sent one of his satraps, the advocate Warnebold, to see me yesterday (keep this under your hat). He wishes to 'make use of me and my great talents in the interests of the German people'. Von Benningsen will be paying 'meah'†a his respects tomorrow.
Page me42.361

The standing the two of us enjoy in Germany, particularly among the 'educated' officials, is of an altogether different order from what we imagined. Thus, e.g., the director of the statistical bureau here, Merkel, visited me and told me, he had been studying questions of money for years to no avail, and I had immediately clarified the matter once and for all. 'Your Dioscurus Engels,' he told me, 'was recently acknowledged by my colleague Engel before the royal family in Berlin.' These are trifling things, but they are important for us. We have more influence on these officials than on the louts.
Page me42.361

I was also invited to attend the society of 'Europeans', as they call the anti-Prussian, North-Germanic members of the National Association†152 here. What jackasses!
Page me42.361

I also received an invitation from the head (head-in-chief, as Stieber calls it†421) of the railway here. I went along, he provided some good herb wine, his wife was 'delaighted', and as I was leaving, he thanked me 'for doing him such an honour'.
Page me42.361

I have a debt of honour — £10 — to settle with Mr Wheeler, a member of our COUNCIL†b and MANAGER of the EMPIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION. You would oblige me greatly if you would send him the money on my behalf: 'G. Wheeler, Esq., 27 Gresham Street, E.C. PRIVATE' (London). I am also very much afraid that my family in London may be 'in profundis'.†c This grieves me the more particularly because poor good little Jenny's birthday is May 1st. I have cast out nets with a view to making a monetary haul. With what success remains to be seen.
Page me42.361

My health is extraordinarily improved. No trace of the old complaint. What is more, in good spirits, despite all adversity, and no liver trouble.

Page Break me42.362
Page me42.362

Do please write me a few lines by return (address: Dr Kugelmann, Hanover). Salut to MRS Burns.

Your
Moor

Page me42.362

Freiligrath is making a fool of himself by his public beggary in Germany.†422 Meissner tells me he has disappeared without trace in North Germany.

Page me42.362
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

218
ENGELS TO MARX†101
IN HANOVER
Page me42.362
Manchester, 27 April 1867

Dear Moor,

I have received both your letters, the second yesterday afternoon, and would have replied to your first long before, if I had known where to. Firstly, BUSINESS. I am sending £10 to your wife, who wrote to me this morning, and likewise the other £10 to Wheeler at the beginning of next month. This will give you some peace of mind in that regard, and, from what you write, the future also looks rosier at last. I always had the feeling that that damn book,†a which you have been carrying for so long, was at the bottom of all your misfortune, and you would and could never extricate yourself until you had got it off your back. Forever resisting completion, it was driving you physically, mentally and financially into the ground, and I can very well understand that, having shaken off that nightmare, you now feel quite a new man, especially as, once you have got back into it again, the world doesn't seem so gloomy a place as it did before. Especially when you have such a capital publisher as Meissner appears to be. Incidentally, a quick printing will only be possible, I fear, if you can remain in the vicinity throughout, i.e., on the continent;

Page Break me42.363
Holland would also be near enough for the purpose. I do not believe the Leipzig proof-readers will have enough learning for your approach. Meissner also got Wigand to print my pamphlet,†a and the things those wretches corrected into it! I am convinced that the book will create a real stir from the moment it appears, but it will be very necessary to help the enthusiasm of the scientifically-inclined burghers and officials on to its feet and not to despise petty stratagems. There is much that can be done to that end from Hanover after publication, and you could also enlist to advantage the support of amicus†b Siebel, who is at the moment en route back from Madeira via England, in the best of spirits, as he says. This will be necessary vis-á-vis the vulgar scribbling fraternity, of whose deep-seated hatred for us we have proof enough. Furthermore, thick, scholarly works are always slow to make their mark without such assistance, but with it they act like 'wildfire' — confer†c Heraclitus the Dark,†d etc.†423 On this occasion, however, we must be all the more assiduous in ensuring this is done, as money is also at stake. Meissner will then be happy to take the collected essays, which would mean more money and further literary success. The pieces from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, the '18th Brumaire',†e etc., will make an enormous impression on the philistines just now, and once we have gained a little more ground on that basis, all manner of other lucrative possibilities will soon present themselves, too. I am exceedingly gratified by this whole turn of events, firstly, for its own sake, secondly, for your sake in particular and your wife's, and, thirdly, because it really is time things looked up. In 2 years my CONTRACT with that swine Gottfried†f expires, and the way things are going here, neither of us will really be wishing to extend it; it is even not impossible that our ways may part even earlier. If that should be so, I shall have to leave COMMERCE entirely, for to start up a business of my own at this late stage would mean 5-6 years of the most fearful drudgery with nothing worth speaking of to show for it, and then another 5-6 years of drudgery to reap the benefits of the first 5 years. But that would be the end of me. There is nothing I long for so much as for release from this vile COMMERCE, which is completely demoralising me with all the time it is wasting. For as long as I am in it, I am good for nothing else, especially since I have become principal it has been much aggravated on account of the greater responsibility. If it were not for the increased remuneration, I really would rather be a clerk again. At all events, in a few years my life as a businessman will come to an end, and then my income will be very, very much reduced, and the question of what we can do then has always been in my mind. However, if things go as they are now beginning to, we shall be able to make provision for that all right, too, even if no revolution intervenes and puts an end to all financial schemes. If that does not happen, I have a plan up my sleeve to have a fling for my deliverance and write a light-hearted book entitled: Woes and Joys of the English Bourgeoisie.

Page Break me42.364
Page me42.364

I cannot go along with Meissner's suggestion.†a A few sheets could be quickly knocked together, but something longer, 6 á 10 sheets, would require more work and be too late for the war now brewing.†415 One really cannot just knock together rubbish in the manner of Vogt's Studien.†b Furthermore, the stuff would be looked upon more or less as a party manifesto, and for that we would have to discuss the matter first. However, I have had an anti-Russian piece in mind for some time, and, if events provide me with an excuse, I shall start on it without more ado and write to Meissner. The only thing I am still in two minds about is whether I should make the 'nationality principle'†424 or the 'Eastern Question' the chief theme.
Page me42.364

I had expected that Bismarck would come knocking at your door, although not his haste.†c It is characteristic of the fellow's mentality and outlook that he judges everybody by his own standards. The bourgeoisie may well admire the great men of today, it sees itself reflected in them. All the qualities to which Bonaparte and Bismarck owe their successes are the qualities of businessman: the pursuit of a specific purpose by a policy of wait-and-see and experimentation, until they hit the right moment, the diplomacy of always leaving the back door open, negotiating and haggling, swallowing insults if it is in one's interest, the attitude of 'ne soyons pas larrons',†d in short, the businessman in all things. In his own way, Gottfried Ermen is as great a statesman as Bismarck, and, if one follows the tricks of these great men, one is constantly reminded of the Manchester Exchange. Bismarck thinks, if I only continue knocking at Marx's door, I am bound to hit upon the right moment eventually, and then we shall do a deal together after all. Gottfried Ermen to a tee.

Page Break me42.365
Page me42.365

I would not have expected the Prussians to be so hated there. But how do you reconcile that with the election results? Those jackasses from the National Association†152 did get half their men through, and in Electoral Hesse all but one.
Page me42.365
Vogt has got a life-size portrait of himself in the Gartenlaube.†a He has become a proper porker in the last few years, and looks fine.
Page me42.365
In the Demokratische Studien, which recently came my way, Simon of Trier has quite naively copied out whole pages from Po and Rhine,†b without suspecting from what poisoned source he was drawing!†c Similarly, in 'Preussen in Waffen', the lieutenant who writes the military articles in Unsere Zeit has borrowed at length from my pamphlet,†d likewise without giving his sources, of course.
Page me42.365
Rüstow will stop at nothing to become a Prussian general, as though that could be as easily done as with Garibaldi. In his abysmal and slipshod book on the war,†e he grovels in optima forma†f before William the Conqueror and the Prince.†g That's why he is moving to Berlin.
Page me42.365
I saw Ernest Jones the other day, he has had enquiries from 4 places about standing for election under the new BILL†425 — from Manchester as well. Has not a good word to say for the workers here AND BACKS THE PRUSSIANS AT ANY ODDS AGAINST THE FRENCH. I hope this wretched war passes over, I cannot see that any good can come of it. A French revolution saddled in advance with the obligation to go a-conquering would be very nasty; it almost seems as though Bonaparte would be satisfied with the tiniest tit-bit, but whether the Lord of Hosts will permit handsome William to grant him even that tit-bit, time alone will show.
Page me42.365
My kindest regards to Dr Kugelmann, although we are not acquainted, and my thanks to him for The Holy Family.†h

Your
F.E.

Page me42.365
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.366

219
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER†426
IN NEW YORK

Page me42.366
Hanover, 30 April 1867

Dear Friend,

You must think very badly of me, and all the more so when I tell you that your letters did not merely give me great pleasure but were a real comfort to me since they reached me at a time of great affliction. The knowledge that a capable man, á la hauteur des principes,†a has been won for our party, is some compensation to me for the worst. Your letters were furthermore full of such warm friendship for me personally, and you will appreciate that I who am engaged in a most bitter struggle with the (official) world can least afford to underestimate such things.

Page me42.366

Why then did I not answer you? Because I was the whole time at death's door. I thus had to make use of every moment when I was capable of work to complete my book,†b to which I have sacrificed my health, happiness, and family. I hope this explanation suffices. I laugh at the so-called 'practical' men and their wisdom. If one wanted to be an ox, one could, of course, turn one's back on the sufferings of humanity and look after one's own hide. But I should really have thought myself unpractical if I had pegged out without finally completing my book, at least in manuscript.

Page me42.366

The first volume of the book will be published by Otto Meissner in Hamburg in a few weeks. The title of the work is: 'Capital. A Critique of Political Economy'. I travelled to Germany to bring over the manuscript, and I am spending a few days with a friend in Hanover†c on my way back to London.†412

Page me42.366

Volume I comprises the 'Process of Production of Capital'. As well as setting out the general theory, I examine in great detail the conditions of the English — agricultural and industrial — proletariat over the last 20 years, ditto the condition of Ireland, basing myself on official sources that have never previously been used. You will immediately realise that all this serves me solely as an argumentum ad hominem.†d

Page Break me42.367

Page me42.367

I hope that a year from now the whole work will have appeared. Volume II contains the continuation and conclusion of the theory, Volume III the history of political economy from the middle of the 17th century.†418

Page me42.367

As to the 'International Working Men's Association', it has become a power to be reckoned with in England, France, Switzerland, and Belgium. You should form as many branches as possible in America. CONTRIBUTION PER MEMBER 1 PENNY (ABOUT 1 silver groschen) per year. However, every branch gives what it can. Congress in Lausanne this year, 3 September. Every branch can send one representative. Do write to me about this matter, about how you are faring in America and about conditions in general. If you do not write, I shall take it as showing that you have not yet absolved me.

Page me42.367

With warmest greetings

Your
Karl Marx

Page me42.367
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 33, 1906-1907 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

220
MARX TO LUDWIG BÜCHNER†427
IN DARMSTADT
Page me42.367
Hanover, 1 May 1867
(c/o Dr Kugelmann)

Dear Sir,

Although we are entirely unacquainted, I am taking the liberty of addressing a personal letter to you, on a personal, although at the same time scientific, matter; and I hope you will excuse my so doing on account of the confidence you inspire in me as a man of science and of the party.
Page me42.367

I have come to Germany to deliver the first volume of my work 'Capital. A Critique of Political Economy' to my publisher, Mr Otto Meissner in Hamburg. I have to stay here a few days longer to see if it will be possible for the printing to be done as quickly as Mr Meissner intends, VIZ., whether the proof-readers are sufficiently learned for such a mode of operation.

Page Break me42.368
Page me42.368

The reason I am writing to you personally is this: I should like to have the thing published in French as well, in Paris, after its publication in Germany. I cannot go there myself, at least not without risk, as I have been expelled from France, first under Louis Philippe and a second time under Louis Bonaparte (Président),†428 and finally I have been ceaselessly attacking Mr Louis during my exile in London. I cannot therefore go personally to seek out a translator. I know that your work on 'Stoff und Kraft'†a has appeared in French, and therefore suppose that you can put me in touch, directly or indirectly, with a suitable person. As I have to prepare the second volume for printing this summer and the concluding third volume†418 next winter, I do not have the time to attend to the French version of the book†429 myself.
Page me42.368

I consider it to be of the greatest importance to emancipate the French from the erroneous views under which Proudhon with his idealised petty bourgeoisie has buried them. At the recent congress in Geneva,†375 ditto in the links that I have with the Paris branch as a member of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association, I am constantly confronted with Proudhonism's most repugnant consequences.

Page me42.368

As I do not know for how long I shall be staying here, I should be obliged to you for an early answer. If I, for my part, can be of any service to you in London, I shall do so with the greatest pleasure.

Yours most respectfully
Karl Marx

Page me42.368
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.369

221
MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER JENNY
IN LONDON
Page me42.369
Hanover, 5 May 1867

My dear Child,

Your letter gave me the greatest pleasure. It is written in the true Imperial style.†a I hope to find you plump and fresh like a May rose.
Page me42.369

The enclosed photograph was to be sent to you for your birthday, but was not ready. It is backed by the photograph of Mme Tenge (by-the-by, the aunt of the Baer's girl, of whom Edgar†b told us so much), who, however, is not so beautiful in reality as her shadow indicates. But she is a really noble nature, of a peculiar suavity, frankness and simplicity of character. Nothing of 'falsche Bildung'.†c She speaks English, French and Italian (she is of Italian descent) perfectly. Although a great musician, she does not kill one with Kunstgeschwäts,†d which, on the contrary, she abhors. She is an atheist and inclines to Socialism, although rather little informed on that point. What distinguishes her above all is a spontaneous kindness and the absence of all pretensions. I feel sure you would in no time become very intimate friends. Mrs Kugelmann is also a nice little woman.
Page me42.369

To-day, on my birthday, I receive the first 'Bogen'†e for revision. I fear the book will become rather a little too big. In consequence of the Easter week business, the printing did not commence before 29th April, Meissner growing very wild at this suspense. Meanwhile, time has not been lost. Preliminary notices have been published almost in all German papers. Kugelmann has very many connections, which were all put into motion.

Page me42.369

Your birthday†f was solemnly celebrated here.

Page me42.369

Except part of the bourgeoisie, lawyers and such ones, there reigns here at Hanover a fanatical hatred of the Prussians, which much amuses me.

Page me42.369

I was very glad to hear of your Polish surprise. If the things have no mercantile value, they have a historical one.†430

Page me42.369

The delay of war is exclusively due to the Derby Cabinet. As long as it remains at the head of England, Russia will not sound the war signal — a phrase, by-the-by, which is conceived in the true colletian style.

Page Break me42.370

Page me42.370

I cannot exactly state the day of my return. I have still to receive letters from different sides. I shall return directly from here via Hamburg (there to have another interview with my publisher†a) to London.

Page me42.370

I had, very soon after my arrival here, written to Liebknecht.†111 He has answered. His wife†b cannot be saved. She is approaching the catastrophe. She sends her compliments to you all and was cheered up by your letters.

Page me42.370

Hegel's photograph will be looked after. It is not to be had at Hanover. As to his 'Philos. of Hist.', I shall try to find it at London.

Page me42.370

I consider that Cacadou†c might have written some lines long since, but excuse her with her equestrian studies.

Page me42.370

And now, with my best wishes to all, adio, my dear 'Joe'.†d

Your Old One

Page me42.370

I add a few lines for Tussy.†e

Page me42.370

First published, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, 1925 and in the language of the original, English, in The Socialist Review (London), No. 44, September 1929

Reproduced from the original

MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.370
Hanover, 7 May 1867

Dear FRED,

D'abord,†f best thanks for your intervention in the most pressing casus delicti,†g as well as for your very detailed letter.

Page Break me42.371
Page me42.371

First, BUSINESS. That damned Wigand did not start printing†a until 29 April, so that I received the first sheet for correction the day before yesterday, on my birthday. Post tot pericula!†b The misprints were relatively insignificant. It's impossible to wait here until the printing is completed. In the first instance, I fear that the book will prove much fatter than I had originally calculated. Second, I am not getting the manuscript back, so that for many quotations, especially those involving figures or Greek, I need to have my home manuscript to hand, nor can I impose on Dr Kugelmann's hospitality for too long. Finally, Meissner is demanding the 2nd volume by the end of the autumn at the latest. I shall therefore have to get my nose to the grindstone as soon as possible, as a lot of new material relating especially to the chapters on credit and landed property has become available since the manuscript was composed. The third volume must be completed during the winter, so that I shall have shaken off the whole opus by next spring.†418 The business of writing, of course, is quite different once the proofs for what has already been done start coming in á fur et mesure,†c and under PRESSURE from the publisher.
Page me42.371

Meanwhile, my time here has not been wasted. Letters have been written to all and sundry, and preliminary notices have appeared in most German papers.
Page me42.371

I hope and confidently believe that in the space of a year I shall be made, in the sense that I shall be able to fundamentally rectify my financial affairs and at last stand on my own feet again. Without you, I would never have been able to bring the work to a conclusion, and I can assure you it always weighed like a nightmare on my conscience that you were allowing your fine energies to be squandered and to rust in commerce, chiefly for my sake, and, INTO THE BARGAIN, that you had to share all my petites misères†d as well. On the other hand, I cannot conceal from myself that I still have a year OF TRIAL ahead of me. I have taken a step on which a great deal depends, viz., on which it depends whether several £100 will be made available to me from the only quarter where that is possible. There is a tolerable prospect of a positive outcome, but I shall remain uncertain for ABOUT 6 weeks. I shall not have definite confirmation until then. What I am most afraid of — apart from the uncertainty — is my return to London, which will be necessary in 6-8 days. My debts there are considerable, and the Manichaeans†431 are 'urgently' awaiting my return. And then the torments of family life, the domestic conflicts, the constant harassment, instead of settling down to work refreshed and free of care.

Page Break me42.372

Page me42.372

Dr Kugelmann and his wife†a are being exceptionally kind to me and anticipate my every need. They are splendid people. They really leave me no time to explore 'the gloomy paths of my inner self'. Apropos, the Bismarck affair must be kept absolutely secret.†b I promised to tell no one, not even Kugelmann, about it. Nor have I done so. I did, however, of course make the reservatio mentalis to except yourself.
Page me42.372

You express surprise that the National-Liberals†432 (or, as Kugelmann calls them, the Europeans) did so well in the elections,†c when the Prussians are so hated here. The matter is very simple. They did badly in all the larger towns, in smaller places they owed their victories to their organisation, which has existed ever since Gotha.†433 These fellows do, on the whole, show how important party organisation is. That is the position in Hanover. In Electoral Hesse, there is no limit to the influence of Prussian intimidation, backed up by the shouting of the members of the National Association.†152 The Prussians meanwhile are operating quite in the Persian manner here. It is true that they cannot transplant the population to their Eastern provinces, but they are doing so with their officials, right down to the RAILWAY conductors, and for the officers. Even those poor devils of postmen are having to move to Pomerania. In the meantime, trains full of Hessians, Hanoverians, etc., are to be seen on the railway every day en route to Bremen, emigrating to the United States. Not since dear old Germany came into existence has it sent such a motley crowd of people from all parts across the Atlantic. One is trying to avoid his taxes, another, his military service, a third the political situation, and all of them the hegemony of the sword and the gathering storm of war.
Page me42.372

I am greatly diverted by the (pro-Prussian) bourgeoisie here. They want war, but immédiatement.†d Business, they say, can stand the uncertainty no longer, and where the devil are the taxes to come from if business stagnates for much longer? Incidentally, you would scarcely conceive the burden that the last war and taxation have imposed upon the rural populace in Prussia. Here in the vicinity of Prussian Westphalia, e.g., truly Irish conditions prevail.
Page me42.372

BY THE BY a few days ago the director of the joint-stock foundry

Page Break me42.373
here (manufacturing chiefly water and gas pipes) conducted me round the works. On the whole, it is very well organised and utilises much quite modern equipment. But, on the other hand, there is still a good deal of turning by hand (detail work), where the English and Scots are using automatic machinery. The same director took me into the Hermann's-column workshop. The thing is as long in the making as Germany itself. Hermann's head is so colossal that you'd seem like a child beside it, and it has a fine look of honest stupidity, and Mr Arminius was above all a diplomat. His air of worthy Westphalian simplicity served but as a mask for a most subtle mind. As chance would have it, I had renewed my acquaintance with Mr Arminius, shortly before my departure from London, in the Grimm edition of historical sources†a with which you are familiar.

Page me42.373

I am sure you will recall J. Meyer (at Bielefeld), who refused to print our manuscript on Stirner, etc.,†b and sent the youth Kriege to annoy us?†434 A few months ago he threw himself out of the window in Warsaw, whither his business affairs had taken him, and broke his neck, if you please.
Page me42.373

Our friend Miquel, who declared himself prepared to sacrifice freedom so readily for the sake of unity, is believed to be job-hunting. In my view, le brave homme†c has miscalculated. Had he not hurled himself so fanatically and unconditionally at Bismarck's feet, he would have been able to pick up a generous gratuity. But now! What need is there for that? He has made himself so hated by his performance in the North German Parliament†435 that he is chained to the Prussians like one convict to the next. And the Prussians, as you know, do not like to make 'useless' and superfluous dépenses.†d Recently, the Bismarckite newspaper, the Norddeutsche Allgemeine, produced by that scoundrel Brass published a very witty article†e about the National-Associationites, pleading inability to emulate even the de mortuis nil nisi bene.†f It sent Bismarck's North-German-Confederationite, National-Associationite minions packing with some artistic kicks delivered con amore.†g
Page me42.373

As far as the war is concerned, I am entirely of your opinion. At the present moment, it can only do harm. If it could be delayed, even just for a year, that would be worth its weight in gold to us. In the first place, Bonaparte and William the Conqueror†a would necessarily be made to look foolish. The opposition is reviving in Prussia (its only press organ just now is Die Zukunft in Berlin, founded by Jacobi†b), and events may occur in France. Business is becoming more and more stagnant, and it will then be impossible to cover up the suffering there on the Continent with empty phrases, whether they be of teutonic or gallic provenance.

Page Break me42.374
Page me42.374

In my view, we owe the postponement of war exclusively to the Derby ministry. It is anti-Russian, and Russia dares not give the signal until she is sure of Britain. Gladstone, THE PHRASEMONGER (entirely under the influence of LADY Palmerston, Shaftesbury, and LORD Cowper), and Bright, not forgetting Russell, would gladly provide her with the guarantees that Britain was disposed as required. Derby had to be removed in 1859, too, in order to stage the Great Drama in Italy.†c In the North German Parliament Bismarck was obliged to throw down the gauntlet to the Poles in the most brutal manner†416 and thus declare his total subservience to the Tsar†d.
Page me42.374

In the Prussian army there prevails deep distrust of the Russians amongst the better officers, as I learnt personally from Captain von Bölzig here (Guards Regiment, raised in the Cadet Corps, loyal to the Prussian monarchy, but a nice fellow). 'Bismarck's conduct in North Schleswig is incomprehensible to me. Only the Russians,' this he said quite unprompted, 'have any interest in maintaining tension between ourselves and Denmark.' He went on to call Frederick William IV a 'shady cavalier', who had turned. Germany into Russia's lackey for 1/2 century. The Russian officers were 'shitty fellows', the army good for nothing, except for the Guards Regiments, Austria alone was capable of matching the Russian army, etc. I also put a good many more ideas into his head about the Muscovites.

Page me42.374
And now adio. Kindest regards to MRS Lizzy.†e
Page me42.374
Tout á vous.†f

Your
Moor

Page me42.374
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.375

223
MARX TO LAURA MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.375
Hanover, 13 May 1867

My pretty little Cacadou,†a
My best thanks for your letter, and that of the worthy Quoquo.†b
Page me42.375
You complain that I had given no signs of life, but on reviewing the question you will find that, on the whole, I have given weekly signals. Moreover, you know that I am not of a very 'demonstrative' character, of rather retiring habitudes, a slow writer, a clumsy sort of man or, as Quoquo has it, an anxious man.
Page me42.375
I shall leave Hanover the day after to-morrow, and probably leave Hamburg by first steamer for London. Yet, you must not expect me to settle the day and the hour. I have still some business to transact with my publisher.†c At all events, this is the last week of my continental stay.†412
Page me42.375
I am very glad that my photogramm has met with such good reception. The shadow is at all events less troublesome than the original.
Page me42.375

As to Mrs Tenge, I wonder that you ask me how she looks, whether she is pretty? I have sent Jenny her photogramm, hidden behind my own. How could it have been lost? Now, to answer your questions, she is 33 years of age, mother of 5 children, rather interesting than pretty, and certainly no professional wit. But she is a superior woman. As to 'flirting', he would be rather a bold man who were to try it. As to 'admiration', I owe it, and there may, perhaps, have been on her side, some overestimation of your most humble and 'modest' master. You know, if no one is a prophet on his own dunghill (speaking symbolically), people are easily overvalued by strangers who, legen sie nicht aus, so legen sie doch unter,†d and find what they were resolved upon to find in a fellah. She has left Hanover Thursday last.

Page me42.375

Eight days since, the weather was still frosty and rainy. Now summer has at once burst into full bloom. On the whole, the weather, since my departure, was here as bad and changeable as it used to be in London. Only, and this is a great thing, the air is thinner.

Page Break me42.376

Page me42.376

These continentals have an easier life of it than we on the other side of the Northern sea. With 2,000 Thalers (300£) you can live here most comfortably. For inst., there exist here different gardens (á la Cremourn,†436 but 'respectable', and where all sort of people meet), much more artistically arranged than any in London, good music being played every evening, etc., where you can subscribe for self and family — for the whole year — at the price of 2 Thalers, 6 sh.! This is only a specimen of the cheap life the Philister indulge in at this place. Young people amuse themselves more freely and at almost no expense, comparatively speaking. There is of course one great drawback — the atmosphere is pregnant with dullness. The standard of existence is too small. It is a lot of pygmées amongst whom you want no very high frame to feel like Gulliver amidst the Lilliputians.

Page me42.376

There arrive this morning rather 'excited' letters from Berlin. It seems that a collision between the workmen and the Pickelhauben†a is apprehended. I do not expect much for the present, but there is something brewing. The working class, in the greater centres of Germany, are commencing to assume a more decided and threatening attitude. One fine morning there will be a nice dance!

Page me42.376

And now my dear little birdseye, Cacadou, secretary, cook, equestrian, poet, auf Wiedersehn.†b Viele Grüsse, an†c Möhmchen, Quoquo and Queque, Helen,†d and, last not least, our 'mutual friend'.†e

Page me42.376

Adio.

Your master
Old Nick†f

Page me42.376

Enclosed Hegel,†g presented by Kugelmann to Mons. Lafargue.

Page me42.376
First published, in German, in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 2, 1907-1908 and in the language of the original, English, in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me42.377

224
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.377
Manchester [about 22 May 1867]
86 Mornington St.

Dear FRED,

Arrived in London Sunday.†a Got here today.†437 But:
Page me42.377

Notice: with me one H. Meyer from St Louis, whom I am about to collect from the railway REFRESHMENT ROOM, where I deposited him, and I am going to deposit him here in the NEIGHBOURHOOD, Star.
Page me42.377

He was Weydemeyer's last compagnon at his death and took his wife (Weydemeyer's wife), who was also mourante,†b away from St Louis to friends and gave her support. Came to me with a recommendation from Jacobi†c (New York).
Page me42.377

This Meyer, who is travelling to Germany, came to England solely to visit us both. He arrived yesterday. I was not at home. My wife told him that I would be travelling to Manchester today to visit you.
Page me42.377

These HINTS will be sufficient to explain to you how it comes about that he accompanied me on the journey here. He will only be staying here 2 days. AT FIRST I was vexed. But for Weydemeyer's sake! This Meyer is a fine, active fellow. However, COOKS slowly and somewhat boring.
Page me42.377

Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me42.377
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.378

225
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.378
[London,] 3 JUNE 1867

DEAR FRED,

The reason why sheets 10 and 11 are not being sent to you, indeed why no more proofs†a at all, you will discover from the enclosed note from Wigand. On the other hand, you will receive the first 5 pulls that have been sent to me. You can keep them ABOUT 8-10 days, but then you must let me know exactly which points in the exposition of the form of value you think should be specially popularised for the philistines in the supplement.†438

Page me42.378

Fenians ordered.†439 Other commissions will be executed BY AND BY.

Page me42.378

See the Hermann of last week. It is now the private herald of Mr Freiligrath, who is reporting on the PROGRESS OF THE SUBSCRIPTION here each week via Juch.†422 Little Jenny says that if her father ever did such a thing, she would publicly proclaim him her non-father. Whereupon Lafargue asked her: Mais qu'est-ce que votre mére dirait lá-dessus?†b The noble poet†c is incidentally sly enough to declare already that he will have to remain in London on account of his resp. part in the Shakespeare translation. Ferdinand and Ida,†d Ida and Ferdinand, A WELL-ASSORTED COUPLE, THOSE TWO!

Page me42.378

Apropos. When Gumpert asked me which hospital Lafargue was at, I said St Thomas's. I was, however, mistaken. He is at Bartholomew's Hospital and asks for the ERROR to be corrected.

Page me42.378

Please do not forget to supply a photogramm of yourself and Lupus.

Page me42.378

MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO MRS Lizzy,†e Moore and Chlormayer.†f

Page me42.378

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.378

I was exceedingly pleased to read in the Paris correspondence of The Times that the Parisians chanted their support for the Poles to

Page Break me42.379

Alexander's face, etc.†440 Mr Proudhon and his little doctrinaire clique are not the FRENCH PEOPLE.

Page me42.378
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

226
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.379
London, 10 June 1867

Dear Friend,

The delay attending this letter will expose me to the more or less 'well-founded suspicion' of being a 'bad fellow'. The sole extenuating circumstance I can plead is that I have only been 'resident' in London for the last few days. In the interval I was visiting Engels in Manchester.†437 But I am sure you and your dear wife†a now know me sufficiently to realise that epistolary negligence is the rule with me. Nevertheless, my thoughts were with you every day. I count my stay in Hanover among the most splendid and refreshing oases in life's desert.†412
Page me42.379

My stay in Hamburg was uneventful, except that, despite all precautions, I made the acquaintance of Mr Wilhelm Marr. In respect of his personal manner, he is Lassalle translated to Christianity, but there is naturally far less to him. Mr Niemann was also performing in the few days I spent there. However, I had been too spoiled by the society in Hanover to wish to attend a theatrical performance in less good company. Mr Niemann thus escaped me.
Page me42.379

Apropos. Meissner is willing to print the medical pamphlet you are planning. You need only send him the manuscript and mention my name. Regarding the precise conditions, you will have to negotiate the rest with him yourself.
Page me42.379

The crossing from Hamburg to London was by and large fair, if one discounts somewhat raw weather on the first day. A few hours before we reached London, a young German lady, who had already caught my attention by her military bearing, announced that she intended travelling from London to Weston supra Mare the same evening†a and did not know how she should set about it with all her considerable luggage. The casus was all the more problematical as helping hands are hard to come by in England on the Sabbath. I got her to show me the name of the railway station to which she was to proceed in London. Friends had written it down on a card. It was the NORTH WESTERN STATION, which was on my way as well. I therefore chivalrously offered to set the young lady down there. Agreed. On further reflection, however, it occurred to me that Weston supra Mare lay to the south-west, whereas the STATION which I was to pass and which had been written down for the young lady was north-west. I consulted the SEA-CAPTAIN. Correct: it appeared she should be deposited in a quite different part of London from my own. However, I was now committed and had to assume bonne mine á mauvais jeu.†b We arrived at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. I took la donna errante†c to her STATION, where I learned that her train did not leave until 8 o'clock in the evening. So, I WAS IN FOR IT, and had 6 hours to kill with Mademoiselle, walking in Hyde Park, sitting in ICE-SHOPS, etc. It emerged that her name was Elisabeth von Puttkamer, a niece of Bismarck's, as whose guest she had just spent several weeks in Berlin. She had the whole army list by heart, this family providing our 'gallant regiments' with stout hearts and true in super-abundance. She was a cheerful, educated girl, but aristocratic and black and white†d to her finger-tips. She was not a little astonished when she learned that she had fallen into 'red' hands. I reassured her, however, that our encounter would pass 'without bloodshed' and saw her depart saine et sauve†e for her destination. Just think what fodder that would provide for Blind or other vulgar democrats — my CONSPIRACY WITH Bismarck!

Page Break me42.380

Page me42.380

Today I despatched the 14th corrected proof-sheet.†f I received the majority of them while staying with Engels, who is exceedingly pleased with them and, except for sheets 2 and 3, finds them written in a manner very easy to understand. I was reassured by his verdict, as I am always very dissatisfied with my things when I see them printed, especially at first sight.
Page me42.380

Please convey my special thanks to your dear wife once more for her warm and friendly welcome to me; I am sending her the photogramm of my 2nd daughter Laura, as the other photogramms have all gone and new ones will have to be made. Engels is ditto having fresh copies made of his own and Wolff's†a photogramms. He was greatly amused by your missives.

Page Break me42.381
Page me42.381

My best compliments to 'little madam'†b Eleanor is at school, otherwise she would write to her.
Page me42.381

AND NOW, Adio!
Your
Karl Marx

Page me42.381
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 3, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

227
ENGELS TO MARX†101
IN LONDON
Page me42.381
Manchester, 16 June 1867

Dear Moor,

I have been so distracted by all manner of bother with Monsieur Gottfried†c and other suchlike affairs and disturbances for the past week that I seldom had the leisure to study the form of value. Otherwise, I would have sent the sheets†d back to you long ago. Sheet 2 in particular has the marks of your carbuncles rather firmly stamped upon it, but there is not much that can be done about it now and I think you should not deal with it any further in the supplement, as your philistine really is not accustomed to this kind of abstract thinking and will certainly not torment himself for the sake of the form of value. At most, you could provide rather more extensive historical evidence for the conclusions you have here reached dialectically, you could, so to speak, apply the test of history, although you have already made the most essential points in that respect; but you have so much material that you can surely still write quite a good excursus on it, which will by historical means demonstrate to the philistine the need for the development of money and the process by which this takes place.

Page Break me42.382
Page me42.382

It was a serious mistake not to have made the development of these rather abstract arguments clearer by means of a larger number of short sections with their own headings. You ought to have treated this part in the manner of Hegel's Encyclopaedia,†a with short paragraphs, each dialectical transition emphasised by means of a special heading and, as far as possible, all the excurses or merely illustrative material printed in special type. The thing would have looked somewhat like a school text-book, but a very large class of readers would have found it considerably easier to understand. The populus, even the scholars, just are no longer at all accustomed to this way of thinking, and one has to make it as easy for them as one possibly can.
Page me42.382

Compared with your earlier presentation (Duncker),†b the dialectic of the argument has been greatly sharpened, but with regard to the actual exposition there are a number of things I like better in the first version. It is a great pity that the carbuncles have left their mark on the important second sheet in particular. However, there is nothing to be done about it now, and those who are capable of thinking dialectically will understand it, nevertheless. The other sheets are very good, and I was delighted by them. I hope you will soon be able to send me another five or six sheets (and could you please enclose sheet 5 again so that I can pick up the thread properly); the sheets I have been reading one by one here will make a much better impression when read together.

Page me42.382
I've discovered a few more misprints. I would only list as errata those which really distort the sense.
Page me42.382
I called on Gumpert yesterday. Pauvre garçon!†c He is deteriorating with each day that passes. It was impossible to arouse his interest in anything scientific or even political. Town gossip and nothing more than town gossip. And yet he cannot understand why people don't call on him more often.
Page me42.382
Have read Hofmann.†d For all its faults, the latest chemical theory does represent a great advance on the old atomistic theory. The molecule as the smallest part of matter capable of independent existence is a perfectly rational category, a 'nodal point',†441 as Hegel calls it, in the infinite progression of subdivisions, which does not terminate it, but marks a qualitative change. The atom — formerly represented as the limit of divisibility — is now but a state, although Monsieur Hofmann himself is forever relapsing into the old idea that indivisible atoms really exist. For the rest, the advances in chemistry that this book records are truly enormous, and Schorlemmer says that this revolution is still going on day by day, so that new upheavals can be expected daily.

Page Break me42.383
Page me42.383
Best regards to your wife, the girls and the electrician.†a

Your
F.E.

Page me42.383
Am sending back 5 sheets today.

Page me42.383
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

228
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.383
[London,] 22 June 1867

Dear FRED,

Herewith 4 more sheets†b enclosed for you which reached me yesterday. The fellows have left a number of misprints that I corrected perfectly legibly. One error we corrected in ourselves was 'CHILDRENS' EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION', CHILDRENS'. For CHILDREN is nominative pluralis, genitive mark is'. I saw it at once when I had another look at the BLUE BOOKS†359 myself.

Page me42.383

King has written to say that the Fenians†439 are not yet out. They are postponing it for as long as possible and as near to the close of the SESSION as possible.

Page me42.383

I hope you are satisfied with the 4 sheets. That you have been satisfied with it so far is more important to me than ANYTHING the rest of the world MAY SAY OF IT. At all events, I hope the bourgeoisie will remember my carbuncles until their dying day. Here is a fresh sample of what swine they are! You know that the CHILDREN'S EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION has been at work for 5 years now. When its first report appeared in 1863, the industries it exposed were at once 'called to order'. At the beginning of this session the Tory ministry introduced a BILL per Walpole, THE WEEPING WILLOW, accepting all the Commission's proposals, though on a very reduced scale. The fellows who were to be called to order, among them the big metal manufacturers, and especially the vampires of 'domestic industry', maintained a cowardly silence. Now they are presenting a petition to Parliament and demanding — a New Enquiry! The old one, they say, was biassed! They are counting on the Reform Bill†425 taking up the public's entire attention, so that the thing would be cosily and PRIVATELY smuggled through, at the very time that the TRADE UNIONS are having a rough passage.†442 The worst things about the REPORTS are the fellows' own statements. They are well aware that a new enquiry means one thing only, and that is precisely 'what we bourgeois want' — a new 5-year lease for exploitation. Fortunately, my position in the 'INTERNATIONAL' enables me to frustrate those curs' little game. It is a matter of the utmost importance. What is at stake is the abolition of torture for 1 1/2 million people, not including the ADULT MALE WORKINGMEN!†443

Page Break me42.384

Page me42.384

With regard to the development of the form of value, I have both followed and not followed your advice, thus striking a dialectical attitude in this matter, too. That is to say, 1. I have written an appendix in which I set out the same subject again as simply and as much in the manner of a school text-book as possible, and 2. I have divided each successive proposition into paras. etc., each with its own heading, as you advised. In the Preface I then tell the 'non-dialectical' reader to skip page x-y and instead read the appendix.†438 It is not only the philistines that I have in mind here, but young people, etc., who are thirsting for knowledge. Anyway, the issue is crucial for the whole book. The economists have hitherto overlooked the very simple fact that the equation 20 yards of linen = 1 coat is but the primitive form of 20 yards of linen = £2, and thus that the simplest form of a commodity, in which its value is not yet expressed in its relation to all other commodities but only as something differentiated from its own natural form, embodies the whole secret of the money form and thereby, in nuce,†a of all bourgeois forms of the product of labour. In my first presentation (Duncker),†b I avoided the difficulty of the development by not actually analysing the way value is expressed until it appears as its developed form, as expressed in money.

Page Break me42.385
Page me42.385

You are quite right about Hofmann.†a Incidentally, you will see from the conclusion to my Chapter III, where I outline the transformation of the master of a trade into a capitalist — as a result of purely quantitative changes — that in the text there I quote Hegel's discovery of the law of the transformation of a merely quantitative change into a qualitative one as being attested by history and natural science alike. In the note to the text (I was as it happened attending Hofmann's lectures at that time) I mention the molecular theory, but not Hofmann, who has discovered nothing in the matter except contributing general direction; instead I do mention Laurent, Gerhardt and Wurtz, the latter being the real man.†444 Your letter struck a faint chord in my memory, and I therefore looked up my manuscript.
Page me42.385

Printing has proceeded slowly in the last two weeks (only 4 sheets), probably on account of Whitsun. But Mr O. Wigand will have to make up for this lost time. Apropos. Your book†b is still available. The Workers' Association†c has ordered and been sent 2 NEW COPIES from O. Wigand. (2nd impression 1848.†445)
Page me42.385

Now for private matters.
Page me42.385

My children are obliged to invite some other girls for dancing on 2 July, as they have been unable to invite anyone for the whole of this year, to respond to invitations, and are therefore about TO LOSE CASTE. So, hard-pressed though I am at the moment, I had to agree to it and am counting on you for the wine (claret and Rhenish), i.e. on your supplying me with it in the course of next week.
Page me42.385

Secondly, as 'misfortunes' never come singly, Lina†d has announced her arrival for next week. My wife will then have to return to her the £5 which she owes her, and you will understand that after fending off the first wave of creditors, I cannot AFFORD that.
Page me42.385

I am in fact exceedingly vexed with the people who have promised me money but have not sent word (so far, at least). They have a personal interest in me. That I do know. They also know that I cannot continue my work unless I have a modicum of peace and quiet. And yet they have sent no word!
Page me42.385

Our 'noble' poet Freiligrath really is going to collect a tidy sum.†422 For they say that going begging to the rich Germans in South America and — China! and the West Indies! is most lucrative, as these fellows regard it as national duty! Meanwhile, the Freiligraths are continuing to live in relatively grand style, constantly entertaining and constantly visiting. That is one reason why the German merchants in London are so unforthcoming. Fat as he is, he is said (so I am told by my wife, who called on them) to look very nerve-wracked and unwell and depressed. But Ida†a is positively blooming and has never been in better spirits in her life.

Page Break me42.386

Page me42.386

Kindest regards to MRS Lizzy.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me42.386

Honoris causa†c you must procure Madame Gumpert's photogramm for me.

Page me42.386
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

229
ENGELS TO MARX†419
IN LONDON
Page me42.386
Manchester, 24 June 1867

Dear Moor,

Sheets†d up to and incl. 12 received with thanks, though have not yet read beyond No. 8. Thus far, the chapters on the transformation of money into capital and the production of surplus-value†446 are the best, as far as presentation and content are concerned. Yesterday I did a rough translation of them for Moore, who understood them correctly and was most astonished that conclusions could be arrived at so simply. At the same time, I have solved the question of who should translate your book into English: Moore himself. He has enough German now to read Heine fairly fluently and will soon work his way into your style (except for the form of value and the terminology, where I shall have to give him considerable assistance). It is, of course, understood that the whole task will be performed under my immediate supervision. As soon as you have a publisher, who nota bene will pay him something for his work, he is quite ready to do it. The fellow is diligent and reliable, and, at the same time, has as much prior understanding of the theory as one can expect of an Englishman.

Page Break me42.387

I have told him that you would rewrite the analysis of commodities and the section on money in English yourself. For the rest, however, we also need a terminology (English) now to translate the Hegelian expressions, and you might be giving some thought to the matter in the meantime, as it is not easy, but there is no way round it.
Page me42.387

I have quite lost track of how many sheets have now in fact been type-set — it must surely be half the book by now, mustn't it? I am looking forward to the embarrassment of the economists when they reach the two above-mentioned passages. The development of the form of value is, of course, the quintessence of all the bourgeois trash, but the revolutionary consequences are not yet fully evident, and people can more easily get round these abstractions and confine themselves to clichés. But an end is put to that here, the issue is so crystal clear that I do not see what they can say to it.
Page me42.387

I hope you will succeed in tripping up our bourgeois gentlemen with their new Enquiry.†442 Just a few days ago, I heard one of the iron-founders and engineering manufacturers bemoaning the impending danger. Meanwhile, it is very good that the Commission has permanently frustrated the Sheffield star-chamber organisation.†447 It was precisely this local terrorism and its great success that deterred the fellows from joining the great national movement, and confirmed them in their parochialism. The cries of horror emanating from the bourgeoisie are comical. As though our bourgeois gentlemen had not had their own star-chambers, their VIGILANCE COMMITTEES in Australia and California, etc., which acted in exactly the same fashion, but claimed far more victims.
Page me42.387

I shall be sending you the wine, and another £10 before the end of this month. I would have preferred it if you had set a later date than 2 July for your PARTY. You will understand that I cannot draw £100 on the very first day of the financial year without exciting considerable comment, and I shall have to prevent the people in the office wondering too much about what I may be up to with such a sum all at once.
Page me42.387

Regarding the molecular theory, Schorlemmer tells me that Gerhardt and Kekulé are the chief figures involved, and that

Page Break me42.388
Wurtz has only popularised and elaborated it.†a He is going to send you a book setting out the historical development of the subject.
Page me42.388

Are there not old pre-Baconian, pre-Lockeian philosophical writings in English, in which we might be able to find material for the terminology? I have a feeling that something of that kind exists. And how about English attempts at reproducing Hegel?
Page me42.388

Kindest regards to your wife and the girls.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.388
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

230
ENGELS TO MARX†448
IN LONDON
Page me42.388
Manchester, 26 June 1867

Dear Moor,

'Pursuant to mine faithfully of yesterday', two half five-pound-notes enclosed, whose 2nd halves will follow by 1st post early tomorrow morning and thus be in your possession tomorrow evening.
Page me42.388

With regard to the production of surplus-value, another point: the manufacturer, and with him the vulgar economist, will immediately interject: if the capitalist only pays the worker the price of 6 hours for his 12 hours' labour, no surplus-value can be produced, since in that case each hour of the factory worker's labour counts only = 1/2 an hour's labour,=the amount which has been paid for, and only that value can be embodied in the value of the labour product. Whereupon there will follow the usual formula by way of example: so much for raw materials, so much for wear and tear, so much for wages (wages actually paid per hour's actual product), etc. Atrociously superficial though this argument may be, however much it may equate exchange-value with price, and value of labour with labour-wage, and absurd though its premiss may be that if for one hour's labour only half an hour is paid, then only 1/2 hour's worth goes into the value, I do, nevertheless, find it surprising that you have not already taken it into account, for you will most certainly be immediately confronted with this objection, and it is better to anticipate it. Perhaps you return to it in the following sheets.

Page Break me42.389
Page me42.389

You must supply me with an address in London to which I can have the £100 sent next week. I am thinking of taking Lizzie†a via Grimsby to Hamburg, Schleswig, Copenhagen, etc., one week from now, and will probably be away for 4 weeks.†449 I shall therefore have to get our cashier to send the money there on Thursday or Friday, for which purpose I need a neutral address, if possible commercial. You must therefore consider whom you would prefer for this purpose, and let me know at once.
Page me42.389

When I have sent Lizzie back to Grimsby from Hamburg, I shall also go on to visit Meissner and Kugelmann, and then travel to the Rhine.

Page me42.389
Kindest regards.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.389
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

231
MARX TO ENGELS†448
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.389
[London,] 27 June†b 1867

Dear FRED,
The 2 half £5-notes received with kindest thanks. With respect to the address, use Borkheim. He knows my situation, though with as much concealment as I consider necessary in his regard. I would even like him to know that you are lending me money. But you must write and tell me when the money is to be sent to him. I do not see why I should involve yet a 3rd philistine.

Page Break me42.390
Page me42.390
The Fenians should be delivered to you today.†439
Page me42.390
I was so very pleased by your lines of yesterday, and that requires no further elaboration from me.
Page me42.390
Sheet 20†a was the latest to reach me. It will probably run to 40 or 42 sheets in all. I've not as yet received any corrected proofs after the ones already sent you. On your departure send me back those which are in your possession.
Page me42.390
Regarding the objection that you mentioned the philistines and vulgar economists will infallibly raise (they forget, of course, that, if they reckon paid labour as wages, they are reckoning unpaid labour as profit, etc.), it amounts, in scientific terms, to the following question:
Page me42.390

How is the value of the commodity transformed into its price of production, in which

1. the whole of the labour appears paid for in the form of wages;

Page me42.390

2. the surplus-labour, however, or the surplus-value, assumes the form of an addition to the price, and goes by the name of interest, profit, etc., over and above the cost-price (= price of the constant part of capital+wages).

Page me42.390

Answering this question presupposes:

I. That the transformation of, for example, the value of a day's labour-power into wages or the price of a day's labour has been explained. This is done in Chapter V of this volume.†450

Page me42.390

II. That the transformation of surplus-value into profit, and of profit into average profit, etc., has been explained. This presupposes that the process of the circulation of capital has been previously explained, since the turnover of capital, etc., plays a part here. This matter cannot therefore be treated prior to the 3rd book (Volume II is to contain books 2 and 3).†418 Here it will be shown how the philistines' and vulgar economists' manner of conceiving things arises, namely, because the only thing that is ever reflected in their minds is the immediate form of appearance of relations, and not their inner connection. Incidentally, if the latter were the case, we would surely have no need of science at all.

Page me42.390

Now if I wished to refute all such objections in advance, I should spoil the whole dialectical method of exposition. On the contrary, the good thing about this method is that it is constantly setting traps for those fellows which will provoke them into an untimely display of their idiocy.

Page Break me42.391

Page me42.391

By the by, Para. 3: 'The Rate of Surplus Value', which was the last one you had in your possession, is immediately followed by the Para.: 'The Working Day' (struggle for the reduction of working time), whose argument demonstrates ad oculos†a to what extent those bourgeois gentlemen comprehend the source and nature of their profit in practice. This is also shown in the Senior CASE, where your bourgeois assures us that his whole profit and interest derive from the last unpaid hour of labour.†451

Page me42.391

Kindest regards to MRS Lizzy.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me42.391

You must stop over for a few days here on your journey home.†449

Page me42.391

Apropos. I judged it in every way imprudent to take Mr Meissner into my confidence regarding my private circumstances.

Page me42.391
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

232
MARX TO ENGELS†419
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.391
[London,] 27 June 1867

DEAR FRED,

The children send you their best thanks.

Page me42.391

I have written to Meissner today that the 'Leipzig' method cannot continue in this fashion.†111 I've had nothing since Monday. The proofs†c have been reaching me most irregularly throughout, so that I am for ever being interrupted in other work and am for ever kept quite pointlessly on tenterhooks. Having perhaps received 1 sheet in a whole week, on Saturday evening I at last get a successor which is too late for me to send off. I have written to

Page Break me42.392
Meissner that Wigand must send a minimum of 3 sheets on certain agreed days, but that he is always welcome to send more at ANY TIME.
Page me42.392

If I get 13th and 14th sheets of the corrected copy in time, you shall have them on Sunday. I would have liked you to see my dressing-down of Senior and my introduction to the analysis of the working day†451 before your departure.†449 Incidentally, the section on the 'Working Day' occupies 5 printed sheets, which do, of course, contain predominantly factual material. To show you how closely I have followed your advice in my treatment of the appendix,†a I'll now copy out for you the divisions, sections, headings, etc., of same appendix.†438
Page me42.392
Appendix to Chapter I, 1

The Form of Value
I. Simple Form of Value

§ 1. The two poles of the expression of value: relative form and equivalent form of value.

a. Inseparability of the two forms.
b. Polarity of the two forms.
c. Relative value and equivalent, both being but forms of value.
Page me42.392
§ 2. The relative form of value.
a. The relation of equality.
b. Value-relations.
c. Qualitative content of the relative form of value implied in value-relations.
d. Quantitative determination of the relative form of value implied in value-relations.
e. The relative form of value considered as a whole.
Page me42.392
§ 3. The equivalent form.
a. The form of direct exchangeability.
b. Quantitative determination not contained in the equivalent form.
c. The peculiarities of the equivalent form.
aa. First peculiarity: use-value becomes the form of appearance of its opposite, value.
bb. Second peculiarity: concrete labour becomes the form of appearance of its opposite, abstract human labour.

Page Break me42.393
gg. Third peculiarity: private labour takes the form of its opposite, namely, labour in its directly social form.
dd. Fourth peculiarity: the fetishism of the commodity-form more striking in the equivalent form than in the relative value-form.
Page me42.393
§ 4. The form of value or independent manifestation of value = exchange value.
§ 5. Simple form of value of the commodity = simple manifestation of the contradictions it contains within itself between use-value and value.
§ 6. Simple form of value of the commodity = simple form of an object as commodity.
§ 7. Relationship between commodity-form and money-form.
§ 8. Simple relative form of value and individual equivalent form.
§ 9. Transition of the simple into the expanded form of value.
Page me42.393
II. Total or Expanded Form of Value

§ 1. The endless series of relative expressions of value.
§ 2. Sequential determination implied in the expanded relative form of value.
§ 3. Defects of the expanded relative form of value.
§ 4. Expanded relative form of value and specific equivalent form.
§ 5. Transition to the general form of value.
Page me42.393
III. The General Form of Value

§ 1. Altered character of the relative form of value.
§ 2. Altered character of the equivalent form.

§ 3. Concurrent development of relative form of value and equivalent form.
§ 4. Development of the polarity between relative form of value and equivalent form.
§ 5. Transition from the general form of value to the money-form.
Page me42.393
IV. The Money-Form

(The following on the money-form is simply for the sake of continuity — perhaps barely half a page.)
§ 1. How the transition from the general form of value to the money-form differs from the previous transitions in the development.
§ 2. Transformation of the relative form of value into the price form.
§ 3. The simple form of commodity is the secret of the money-form.
Page me42.393
You may sprinkle sand on this!

Your
K. Moro

Page Break me42.394
Page me42.394
Don't forget to drop a line to Borkheim before you depart, so that no 'misunderstanding' is possible.†a
Page me42.394
Regarding the English translation,†b I am trying to track down a fellow in London who will pay decently, so that both Moro†c as translator and I as author get our due. If I am successful, MRS Lizzy†d shall also receive her share (you must IN THAT CASE allow me that pleasure — but the bird is not yet in the hand) in the form of a London DRESS. I have some expectations, as Mssrs Harrison et Co. are most desirous to study the book in English.†229 Eccarius has, of course, told them that he is A HUMBLE pupil OF MINE — (his critique of Mill has impressed them hugely, they having previously been believers in Mill†e) — and that the Prophet Himself is JUST NOW having the quintessence of all wisdom published, that is printed, in Germany.
Page me42.394
I am quite sickened by the REPORT on the FENIANS.†439 These swine boast of their English humanity in not treating political prisoners worse than murderers, street-thieves, forgers and pederasts! And this O'Donovan Rossa, what 'A QUEER FELLOW', because as a FELONY-CONVICT he refused to grovel before his worst enemies! A QUEER FELLOW INDEED! Incidentally, would even the Prussians have been capable of acting in a more bureaucratic fashion than these emissaries of the WEEPING WILLOW,†f that Knox (read ox) and Pollock (BULL-DOG), who naturally accept the evidence given by the SUBORDINATE 'WARDER' as unimpeachable. But if you don't believe the WARDERS, you have the word of — Wermuth, the chief of police!
Page me42.394
MRS O'Donovan Rossa has written the 'INTERNATIONAL' A VERY FLATTERING AND VERY GRACEFUL LETTER†g on her departure for America.

Page me42.394

The fury of that Bismarck-oracle, the Norddeutsche,†h at Stanley's and Derby's statements about the Luxemburg TREATY has quite cured my nausea.†452 That jackass Brass calls it an innovation! Palmerston has LAID DOWN once and for all the principle that COMMON TREATIES impose only the right and not by any means the duty of intervention FOR ANY STATE. And if that were not so, whatever BECAME of the OBLIGATIONS which England assumed at the Congress of

Page Break me42.395

Vienna with regard to Poland, in respect of both Prussia and Russia, and France ditto?

Page me42.395

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

233

MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65

IN HANOVER

Page me42.395

London, 13 July 1867

Dear Friend,

THANKS FOR HEGEL AND the young madam!†a

Page me42.395

I shall now briefly answer all the points you raised.

Page me42.395

Engels is in Denmark at present and will be paying you a visit one day in the course of this month.†449 Ad vocem†b the same: you recall you told me that Menke (or whatever the man in your statistical office in Hanover is called) made some very appreciative remarks about the work of mine†c that was published by Duncker. For Engels' ears I have twisted this, to the effect that Menke expressed his great appreciation to me of Engels' 'Condition of the Working Class'.†d The reason for this pia fraus†e (and I have perpetrated various fraudes†f with the same object in view): to spur Engels on to write and publish the second volume, concerning the period from 1845 to the present. I have at last succeeded in this to the extent that he has promised to get down to it. So, if by chance conversation should turn to the statistician, do not let the cat out of the bag.

Page me42.395

Nothing is fixed for my wife's journey, nor can it be, it having been overtaken by another event, the proposed departure of my 3 daughters for Bordeaux, to visit Lafargue senior.†g

Page me42.395

I do not advise you to go to Paris. It is impossible to study anything in the midst of that Babylon of things and among that throng of people, unless one stays there for at least 6 weeks, which is very expensive.

Page Break me42.396
Page me42.396
My book†a comprises ABOUT 50 sheets. You see how I had miscalculated AS TO ITS EXTENT. A few days ago I sent the Appendix, entitled The Form of Value, Appendix to Chapter I, 1, to Leipzig. You know who was the author of this plan, and I herewith offer him my thanks for his SUGGESTION.†438
Page me42.396
You will excuse me if I terminate these lines here. Another proof-sheet has just come.
Page me42.396
With my best compliments to your wife and the young madam.†b

Yours
K. Marx

Page me42.396
With my next letter I shall send membership cards†c for MRS Kugelmann and MRS Tenge. One lady, MRS Law, has been promoted to membership of our Central Council.
Page me42.396
Best thanks from Eleanor for the STAMPS. The photograms will follow.

Page me42.396
First published slightly abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Stuttgart, Nr. 3, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

234
MARX TO ENGELS
IN HANOVER†449
Page me42.396
[London,] 20 July 1867

Dear Engels,
I am writing these lines in haste, in the hope that they may still find you in Hanover. C'est une chose brûlante.†d Old Lafargue†e has invited my 3 daughters to Bordeaux (they depart tomorrow with the secrétaire†f), whence they will go with him and his wife to a seaside resort. It was all the harder for me to refuse as the state of health of all 3 girls made this invitation a real blessing. But propriety required that the secrétaire de l'Espagne should not be allowed to pay the expenses of the journey. The latter (return) approximately £30, which I thus had to disburse to him. Furthermore, their watches, dresses, etc., had to be reclaimed from the pawnshop. In this way, the £45 which I had in reserve for the rent on 3 August (bill drawn on myself) melted into thin air.

Page Break me42.397
Page me42.397

I can now think of no other recourse than writing to you. If the letter catches you, please write to me at once with enclosure to Borkheim asking him to advance me the money.
Page me42.397

While you are in Germany you must read: 'Zwölf Streiter der Revolution von Gustav Struve und Gustav Rasch'. Under the heading of the 'fighting revolutionary' Freiligrath, you will find a fresh instance of this fine fellow's treachery towards us.†a

Your
K.M.

Page me42.397
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

235
MARX TO FERDINAND FREILIGRATH†6
IN LONDON
Page me42.397
[Copy]
[London,] 20 July 1867

Dear Freiligrath,

I am not a regular reader of German literary trash, but I cannot prevent friends in Germany from occasionally sending me excerpts containing personal references to me. Thus, yesterday I received all the passages referring to myself in a publication by a certain Rasch entitled 'Zwölf Streiter der Revolution'. I should be obliged to you for an explanation of the following†b:

Page Break me42.398
'Freiligrath had, etc., broken off relations with Marx entirely; a quite unpardonable action on Marx's part, about which I wish to say no more here, had been the last straw. It can only be explained as due to the obnoxious character of a man like Marx. I was so indignant about it that one day I asked Freiligrath for details, but he tactfully passed over it.'†453

Your
K.M.

Page me42.398
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to Marx's notebook

236
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.398
[London,] 10 August 1867

Dear FRED,

Enclosed charming letter from Dronke in Manchester, received today. He has taken about a fortnight to give me the good advice to 'sell' wine and coffee to cover the cost of transport!

Page me42.398

By the by, the little Frenchman was here again today and threatened to write to OLD Lafargue.†a All I could do was to appease him with the promise that he would have his money on Tuesday morning.

Page me42.398

Parcel of Courrier français along with 2 Diplomatic Reviews now due will be despatched on Monday.

Page me42.398

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.398
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.399

237

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.399
Manchester, 11 August 1867

Dear Moor,

Enclosed a five-pound-note which I fortunately obtained yesterday and which will now satisfy your FRENCHMAN. Also Dronke's letter. So, the little man has got himself properly into the mire with his petty speculations. I fear that, if he is to shake off his obligations in respect of the Barnedi shares, he will have to go through the BANKRUPTCY COURT. It is very hard for the little fellow, firstly the court-case over the insurance business, and now these blows. However, I assume he will still have his agency, and with its help and with speculation a little less heated, he may soon restore his fortunes.
Page me42.399

I have cursorily read through as far as sheet 32†a and will give you my comments on it in due course; the numerous examples in this section, on cursory first reading, somewhat obscure its coherence. But there are some very fine things in it, and both capital and its sycophants will be eternally grateful to you.
Page me42.399

On my journey back here†449 I had the added pleasure of a rifle-bullet shattering the window and flying through the carriage not 12 inches from my chest: some VOLUNTEER probably wished to demonstrate yet again that he ought not to be entrusted with a firearm. It is the strangest RAILWAY ACCIDENT I have ever encountered.
Page me42.399

Lizzie†b also had a rather bad return journey, she says she will never go by sea again.
Page me42.399

Kindest regards to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.399
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.400

238
MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.400
[London,] 14 August 1867

Dear FREDERICK,

As you will see from the enclosed, I am threatened with distraint if I do not pay the taxes (amounting to £11-9s.) next Friday. I have an additional £1-15s. interest to pay to the pawnshop at the end of this week, or the things will lapse. I did not tell you of all these abominations before, as I had previously been attempting — vainly, I'm afraid — to rustle up the money in London.
Page me42.400

With the huge sums that you have sent me this year, there would be no such PRESSURE, if it had not been for over £200 in previous debts. If I am to straighten out my affairs and not to PRESSURE you so dreadfully, it is imperative that I raise a loan somewhere else, even if another journey to the Continent is required for the purpose. But I cannot lift a finger until the printing is complete.†a I received the 48th sheet today. So this week the whole vile business will be over.
Page me42.400

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.400
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.401

239
MARX TO LONDON BOOKSELLER†a
Page me42.401
[London,] 14 August 1867
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sir,

Will you send me,
The 2 reports on the Orissa famine†b;
Page me42.401
'The Hours of Labour Regulation Act',†c as soon as it is printed, and ditto:
'The Artisans' and Labourers' Dwelling Bill'.

Yours truly
Karl Marx

Page me42.401
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in the language of the original, English, for the first time

240
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.401
Manchester, 15 August 1867

Dear Moor,
Encl. 3 £5-notes I/V 65551
" " " 65113 } Manchester
" " " 44954 29 January 1866 and the tax-slip returned. In these circumstances, it is essential that my return be kept a secret from Borkheim,†449 so that I do not need to pay him until as late as possible in September, otherwise I shall be completely stuck, since you will understand that I too have a mass of payments to make here, especially in the new half-year. Furthermore, consequent upon the fall in the price of yarns, we are having to enter the stock in the accounts at approx. £2,500 less than by the prices which applied at the time of my departure. Which is not very pleasant either!

Page Break me42.402
Page me42.402
When do you wish to have some of the sheets†a returned? Schorlemmer asked me to pass them on to him a few at a time, as I finished with them, but that naturally depends on you. I have now read the thing through to the end (cursorily) and definitely think that the second volume is also indispensable, and the sooner you finish it, the better.†418 I am now looking through the whole thing again, i.e., the more theoretical aspects. The fellows will be astonished to see with what consummate ease the most difficult points, such as Ricardo's theory of profit, are dealt the coup de grâce here 'in this way'.
Page me42.402
Kindest regards to your wife.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.402
Lupus was born in Tarnau†b on 21 June 1809, died 9 May 1864.†c

Page me42.402
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

241
MARX TO ENGELS†118
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.402
[London,] 16 August 1867, 2.0.a.m.

DEAR FRED,
Have just finished correcting the last sheet (49th) of the book.†a The appendix — Form of Value — in small print, takes up 1 1/4 sheets.†438

Page Break me42.403
Page me42.403

Marx's letter to Engels of 16 August 1867

Page Break me42.404
Page Break me42.405
Page me42.405
Preface ditto returned corrected yesterday. So, this volume is finished. I owe it to you alone that it was possible! Without your self-sacrifice for me I could not possibly have managed the immense labour demanded by the 3 volumes.†418 I EMBRACE YOU, FULL OF THANKS!
Page me42.405
Enclosed 2 sheets of corrected proofs.
Page me42.405
The £15 received with best thanks.
Page me42.405
Salut, my dear, valued friend.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.405

I do not need to have the corrected proofs back until the book is completely out.

Page me42.405
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

242
ENGELS TO MARX†419
IN LONDON
Page me42.405
Manchester, 23 August 1867

Dear Moor,

I have now worked through as far as sheet 36†a approx., and I congratulate you on the comprehensive way in which the most complex economic problems are elucidated simply and almost sensuously merely by arranging them suitably and by placing them in the right context. Likewise, in respect of subject-matter, on the quite splendid exposition of the relationship between labour and capital — for the first time here in its full context and complete. I was also greatly diverted to see how you have worked your way into the language of technology, which must surely have given you much trouble and on which account I had various MISGIVINGS. I have corrected several SLIPS OF THE PEN in pencil in the margin, and also ventured to make a few conjectures. But how could you leave the outward structure of the book in its present form! The 4th chapter is almost 200 pages long and only has 4 sub-sections, indicated by four headings in ordinary print, which it is hardly possible to refer back to. Furthermore, the train of thought is constantly interrupted by illustrations, and the point to be illustrated is never summarised after the illustration, so that one is for ever plunging straight from the illustration of one point into the exposition of another point. It is dreadfully tiring, and confusing, too, if one is not all attention. It would have been highly desirable here to have subdivided the text more frequently and to have made the most important sections stand out more,†454 and this must emphatically be done for the English version. In this exposition (especially of cooperation and manufacture) there are indeed several points that are not yet quite clear to me, where I cannot work out which facts lie behind the argument that is expressed solely in general terms. To judge by the outward form of the exposition, this 4th chapter also appears to be the most hurriedly written and the least carefully revised. However, all that is of no import, the main thing is that our economists are not given a weak point anywhere through which they can shoot holes; I am indeed curious to hear what these gentlemen will say, they have not been left even the smallest opening. Roscher and his ilk will not be unduly perturbed, but for the people here in England who do not write for 3-year-olds, it is a different matter altogether.

Page Break me42.406

Page me42.406

I very much look forward to your sending me some more sheets as soon as you can, I particularly want to read the section on accumulation in its context.†455

Page me42.406

Give your wife my best wishes. When are the girls coming back?†a

Your
F.E.

Page me42.406

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.407

243

MARX TO ENGELS†101

IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.407

[London,] 24 August 1867

DEAR FRED,

I have received no further corrected proofs†a since the 2 last that I sent you. I am exceedingly vexed with Meissner. He has obviously held back what Wigand has sent him in order to send everything at once — and save 4d. postage!

Page me42.407

The same Meissner wrote me last week that he is printing a certain part of my preface specially (and he has indeed made the right choice) to send to the German newspapers. I wrote asking him to send me COPIES of it at once. I reckoned that you would translate the thing into English (I shall then give it to The Bee-Hive, which is taken by Mill, Beesly, Harrison, etc.), and Lafargue with Laura's help into French for the Courrier français, finally I wanted to send ONE COPY to my correspondent in America.†456 To save the 4d., Meissner has sent nothing. He will be sending it all together. But a great deal of time is lost in the process!

Page me42.407

The best points in my book are: 1. (this is fundamental to all understanding of the FACTS) the two-fold character of labour according to whether it is expressed in use-value or exchange-value, which is brought out in the very First Chapter; 2. the treatment of surplus-value regardless of its particular forms as profit, interest, ground rent, etc. This will be made clear in the second volume especially.†418 The treatment of the particular forms in classical political economy, where they are for ever being jumbled up together with the general form, is an olla potrida.†b

Page me42.407

Please enter your desiderata,†c critical remarks, QUERIES, etc., on the corrected proofs. This is very important for me, as I am reckoning on a 2nd edition sooner or later.†454 As regards CHAPTER IV, it was a hard job finding things themselves, i.e., their interconnection.†d But with that once behind me, along came one BLUE BOOK†359 after another just as I was composing the final version, and I was delighted to find my theoretical conclusions fully confirmed by the

Page Break me42.408

FACTS. Finally, it was written to the accompaniment of CARBUNCLES and daily dunning by creditors!

Page me42.408

For the conclusion to the 2nd book (Process of Circulation), which I am writing now,†457 I am again obliged to seek your advice on one point, as I did many years ago.

Page me42.408

Fixed capital only has to be replaced in natura†a after, say, 10 years. In the meantime, its value returns partially and gradatim,†b as the goods that it has produced are sold. This PROGRESSIVE RETURN of the fixed capital is only required for its replacement (aside from REPAIRS and the like) when it becomes defunct in its material form, e.g., as a machine. Prior to that, however, these SUCCESSIVE RETURNS are in the capitalist's possession.

Page me42.408

Many years ago I wrote to you that it seemed to me that in this manner an accumulation fund was being built up, since in the intervening period the capitalist was of course using the returned money, before replacing the capital fixe with it. You disagreed with this SOMEWHAT SUPERFICIALLY in a letter.†458 I later found that MacCulloch describes this SINKING FUND as an accumulation fund.†c Being convinced that no idea of MacCulloch's could ever be right, I let the matter drop. His apologetic purpose here has already been refuted by the Malthusians, but they, too, admit the FACT.

Page me42.408

Now, as a manufacturer, you must know what you do with the RETURNS on capital fixe before the time it has to be replaced in natura. And you must answer this point for me (without theorising, in purely practical terms).

Page me42.408

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.408

(Salut TO MRS Lizzy†d!)

Page me42.408

The children are still at Royan, near Bordeaux.

Page me42.408

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.409

244
ENGELS TO MARX†419
IN LONDON
Page me42.409
Manchester, 26 August 1867

Dear Moor,

On the question of the replacement-fund, full details with accompanying calculations tomorrow. You see, I must ask some other manufacturers whether our practice is the customary one or an exception. The question is whether, with an original outlay of £1,000 on machinery, where £100 is written off in the 1st year, the rule is to write off 10% of the £1,000 in the 2nd year, or of £900, etc. We do the latter, and understandably the matter goes on thereby in infinitum,†a at least in theory. This complicates the arithmetic considerably. But, otherwise, there is no doubt that the manufacturer is using the replacement-fund on average for 4 1/2 years before the machinery is worn out, or at least has it at his disposal. However, this is included in the calculations, by way of what one might call a certain guarantee against moral wear and tear, or alternatively the manufacturer says: the assumption that in 10 years the machinery will be completely worn out is only approximately correct, i.e., it presupposes that I receive the money for the replacement-fund in 10 annual instalments from the outset. At all events, you shall have the calculations; regarding the economic significance of the matter, I am none too clear about it, I do not see how the manufacturer is supposed to be able to cheat the other partners in the surplus-value, that is, the ultimate consumers, by thus falsely representing the position — in the long run. Nota bene, as a rule, machinery is depreciated at 7 1/2%, which assumes a useful life of approximately 13 years.
Page me42.409

Moore sends you his photograph, enclosed, and reminds you that you promised him yours, which he is very eager to have.
Page me42.409

The chapter on accumulation is quite splendid.†455

Your
F.E.

Page me42.409
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.410

245
ENGELS TO MARX†459
IN LONDON
Page me42.410
Manchester, 27 August 1867

Dear Moor,

Enclosed two schedules for machinery, which will make the matter fully clear to you. The rule is that part of the original sum is written off each year, usually 7 1/2%, but to simplify the calculation I have kept to 10%, which is not excessive for many machines either. Thus, e.g.,

1860	1 Jan.	Purchases	£	1,000
1861	1 Jan.	Written off 10%	"	100
			£	900
		New purchase	"	200
			£	1,100
1862	1 Jan.	Written off 10% £1,200 (£1,000 + £200)	"	120
			£	980
		New purchase	"	200
			£	1,180
1863	1 Jan.	Written off 10% £1,000 + £200 + £200	"	140 etc
			£	1,040†a

Page me42.410

In schedule No. 1 I am now assuming that the manufacturer puts his [money] out at interest for writing-off purposes; on the day when he has to replace the old machinery with new, he has not £1,000 but £1,252-11s. Schedule No. 2 assumes that he puts the money straight into new machinery, each year. As is shown in the last column giving the value of the total purchases as it stands on the last day of the 10 years, it is true that the value of his machinery then does not exceed £1,000 (and he cannot have more, as he has, after all, only invested the value of what has been worn out, and the total value of the machinery cannot thus grow by the process), but he has extended his factory from year to year, and as an average over the 11 years he has employed machinery which cost £1,449 in investment, in other words, he has produced and earned substantially more than with the original £1,000. Let us assume he is a spinner and every £ represents one spindle together with the roving-frame; in that case, he has on average spun with 1,449 spindles instead of 1,000, and, after the original spindles have ended their useful lives, he begins the new period on 1 January 1866 with 1,357 spindles that he has purchased in the meantime, to which is added a further 236 from the writing off as per 1865, which makes 1,593 spindles. The money advanced for writing off has thus enabled him to increase his machinery by 60% and without putting a FARTHING of his actual profit into the new investment.

Page Break me42.411
Page me42.411
Repairs have been disregarded in both schedules. At 10% write-off, the machine should cover its own repair costs, i.e., the latter should be included. Nor do they affect the issue, as they are either included in the 10%, or else they prolong the useful life of the machine in proportion, which amounts to the same thing.
Page me42.411
I hope schedule No. 2 will be sufficiently clear to you; if not, just write, I have a copy of it here.
Page me42.411
In haste.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.411
I. The manufacturer invests the renewal-fund at 5% interest

Page Break me42.412

Page me42.412
II. The renewal-fund is reinvested in machinery each year

Page Break me42.413

Page me42.413
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

246
MARX TO AUGUSTE VERMOREL†67
IN PARIS
Page me42.413
London, 27 August 1867
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Citizen,

Two things astonish me in your newspaper,†a for whose character, courage, good will and talent I have respect.

Page Break me42.414
Page me42.414

1. You are turning your paper into an echo for Russian lies (and Greek, the Greeks having been taken in by the Russians) about the so-called revolution in Crete.†460 May I be permitted to send you an English extract on the true state of affairs in Candia.†a

Page me42.414

2. You reproduced the canards (of Russian origin) concerning the initiative North America is to take against the Turks. You ought to know that the President of the United States does not have the power to declare war. The Senate alone can decide. If President Johnson, who is a dirty tool of the SLAVEHOLDERS, although you are so naive as to make him out to be a second Washington,†b seeks to win a little popularity by entangling foreign-policy affairs and BY SWAGGERING ABROAD, the YANKEES are neither children nor French. The mere fact that he has taken the initiative amid all this tentative exploration suffices to nullify any serious effect it may have.

Page me42.414

You must excuse my taking the liberty of writing to you thus. We are both pursuing the same aim, the emancipation of the proletariat. This entitles us to be frank with one another.

Page me42.414

I would ask you not to publish these lines. I am addressing them to you privately and as a friend.

Page me42.414

Greetings and fraternity,
Karl Marx

Member of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association

Page me42.414

I am most astonished at your plaudits for the Peace League.†461 It is no less (I refer to the Peace Congress) than cowardice in action. One must either protest in Berlin and Paris, or else — if one is too cowardly to do that — at least not deceive the public with ambiguous, ineffectual and declamatory pronouncements.†c

Page me42.414

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original checked with the rough copy of the letter

Translated from the French

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.415

247

MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER
IN NEW YORK

Page me42.415

London, 27 August 1867
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Meyer,

Excerpt enclosed from the preface to the first volume of my book,†a which is being published next week. Try to place it as far as you can in German-American papers and, where feasible, in English-American papers as well. Be so kind as to send me a copy, where it appears, since this is important for my publisher.†b Ad vocem Weber.†c His father†d is a fool, exilé from Baden, clockmaker. The boy with whose presence you are blessed there is a scoundrel. The Hatzfeldt woman picked him for the assassination of Lassalle's KILLER.†e He took the money and followed his intended victim as far as Augsburg or thereabouts. Then he funked it. He then absconded with the Hatzfeldt money from Germany to America (trying to squeeze yet more from the old woman by threats).

Page me42.415

Page me42.415

His worthy father and his brother,†f living here, said in the (German) Communist Society†g here that I denounced the good lad to the German police. That was how they explained his exit and cheating of Countess Hatzfeldt. I went along to the Society, denounced the scoundrels, and Weber jun. was chucked out in disgrace.

Page me42.415

Now you know the facts of the matter.

Page me42.415

Salut.
Your
K. Marx

Page me42.415
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.416

248
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.416
[London,] 31 August 1867

Dear FRED,
Received both your letters with the calculations. THANKS.
Page me42.416
I have got to pay £4 between 2 shitty épiciers†a by next Tuesday (3 September), and that's only a part of what I owe them both. I have the feeling these fellows are pressing harder this year than ever.
Page me42.416
The children are returning a week on Sunday (morning).†b I wish they had stayed away longer. They were enjoying themselves over there. But Lafargue has to get back to his school. (It always vexes him if I ask: N'allez-vous pas á votre école?†c)
Page me42.416
For the congress at Lausanne (INTERNATIONAL)†462 from here: Eccarius, Lessner, Dupont. Also, the president of the Coventry RIBBON WEAVERS†d and A. Walton, Esq. (from Wales). Eccarius has safely received the contribution about the congress for The Times — having previously made enquiry of the latter.
Page me42.416
Judging from all the news from Paris, Bonaparte's position there is looking very shaky.
Page me42.416
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.416
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.417

249
ENGELS TO MARX†419
IN LONDON
Page me42.417
Manchester, 1 September 1867

Dear Moor,

I have just received payment for a very long-standing bad debt of £5 which will put me in a position to send you that sum tomorrow as soon as I have cashed the CHEQUE. Otherwise, I should have been in something of a fix, what with the repayment of the £45 to Borkheim now due. What about Borkheim, is he back? I am now able and therefore wish to settle up.
Page me42.417

The 8 sheets†a received with thanks. The theoretical side is quite splendid, as is the exposition of the history of expropriation. But the piece you have inserted on Ireland was done in the most fearful haste, and the material is not properly knocked into shape at all. On first reading often positively incomprehensible. Further comments as soon as I have considered the stuff more closely. The résumé on the expropriation of the expropriators is most brilliant and will create quite an effect.†463
Page me42.417

It is fortunate that almost all of the book is 'enacted' in England, so to speak; otherwise para. 100 of the Prussian Penal Code would be operable: 'Whosoever ... shall incite the subjects of the State to hatred or contempt of each other',†b etc. — and confiscation would ensue. Bismarck seems to be needing to stage a little demonstration against the workers anyway. In Erfurt or thereabouts a Lassallean poet, printer and publisher†464 have been arraigned for high treason, and in Elberfeld they have even confiscated a scrawl by the noble Schweitzer.†c So, it is possible that the book would be prohibited in Prussia, but, anyway, that would not have any effect in present conditions.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.417
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.418

250
ENGELS TO MARX†10
IN LONDON
Page me42.418
Manchester, 2 September 1867

Dear Moor,

The £5 banknote enclosed. You will have received the booklet 'TRANSACTIONS' [OF THE] R[OYAL] SOCIETY.†465 Can you send me the July and August Free Presses, as promised?
Page me42.418

Things appear to have taken a very sharp turn in Paris; every day all the papers are following Girardin's example in recalling 1829 and 1847,†466 and the Lille speech, full of resignation, appears to prove that there is nothing to be done in South Germany and Austria precisely now when he†a needs it, obviously solely in consequence of the sorry state of the latter. 'And hence' it is only 'weak governments' which incline to use foreign conflicts as a means of avoiding internal difficulties.†467 Then, the constantly reiterated allusions to 'mon fils'†b do not appear to imply any very significant confidence in the longevity of the 'pére' quem nuptiae demonstrant†c either. You must press ahead with the second volume,†418 things may soon start to happen.
Page me42.418

On Saturday I saw a Californian newspaper, which suggested the 8 HOURS-MOVEMENT must have had an enormous impact amongst the BUILDING TRADES there. The MASTERS are forming a 10-HOURS-ASSOCIATION to oppose it and are setting up a considerable wailing. Contracts for 1 1/2 million dollars are said to have been withdrawn as a result of the 8 HOURS business.†468
Page me42.418

Gumpert is back and says that in Electoral Hesse the rage at the Prussians is as furious as in Hanover, though less demonstrative. The moment the military were to leave, every 'Prussian' would be slaughtered. Amongst other things the Prussians have confiscated the officers' widows and pension fund in Kassel which derived from compulsory contributions from the officers. He found things even hotter in Hanover than I did.
Page me42.418

Kugelmann also wanted to attend the Lausanne Congress,†462 i.e., as a SPECTATOR, perhaps it would be a good thing to inform Eccarius of this. He will probably encounter Schorlemmer, who left yesterday (via Grimsby), at the Naturalists' Congress in Frankfurt.

Page Break me42.419
Moore is travelling to Thuringia in approx. 3 weeks, to learn German for 6 weeks; I have sent him off there so that he may get off the TRACK of the BRITISH TOURISTS.
Page me42.419

Kindest regards.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.419
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

251
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.419
[London,] 4 September 1867

DEAR FRED,
The £5 received with thanks.
Page me42.419
Borkheim wrote to me a few days ago from Berne and sent me 'for comment if you would be so kind' the brouillon†a for the speech, which he is intending to give at the PEACE CONGRESS in Geneva.†469 He also wanted your assistance. I wrote to him, as we had agreed, that you had not yet returned. You can, however, send the money to his associate Schyler, 65 Fenchurch Street. But it is £50, not 45. When I looked, I found that the bill was on £48, and Borkheim then told me that he could probably give me the full sum of £50. I did not tell you of this before, as I was expecting the money I had been promised any day, and then wanted to pay the £50 myself.
Page me42.419
Enclosed:
1. the last sheets of the proofs.†b
2. 2 Diplomatic Reviews and 1 number of Courrier français.
Page me42.419
Regarding the final sheets, they have put the Addendum to the Notes in large print, and the Appendix on the Form of Value in small print, despite my instructions.†470 They probably did this so that the book should be neither over nor under 50 sheets in length. In my opinion, Meissner has made a serious blunder in increasing the purchase-price from 3 talers to 3 talers 10 silver groschen. It is, however, possible as well that he has subsequently received so many more firm orders that this was commercially the correct thing to do.

Page Break me42.420
Page me42.420

A word of explanation concerning the article in the Courrier français (which you must send back to me after you have read it through): 'Les Conditions de la Paix'†a:
Page me42.420

You know that on the GENERAL COUNCIL I expressed my opposition to our joining the peace-at-any-price party.†b My speech lasted ABOUT 1/2 HOUR. As minute-secretary, Eccarius reported on it in The Bee-Hive, giving only a few sentences of what I said. The reprint in the Courrier even omits the sentences about the necessity for armies vis-á-vis Russia and about the cowardice of these fellows.†471 The affair has, nevertheless, created quite a stir. The jackasses from the PEACE CONGRESS, whose agent in London is M. de Colleville, completely changed their original programme and even smuggled into the new one, which is much more democratic, the words 'THE HARMONIZING OF ECONOMIC INTERESTS WITH LIBERTY', which could mean almost anything, including just FREETRADE. They have been bombarding me with letters and even had the impertinence to send me the enclosed scrap of paper with the new programme. Their impertinence consists in nominating me as a 'MEMBER OF THE GENEVA, ETC., CONGRESS' in the address. The Courrier, which was their most vociferous advocate in Paris, is deserting them, as you will see. The same Courrier has changed its policy in respect of Russia, following a private letter that I wrote to Vermorel ABOUT a fortnight ago†c (we are not acquainted).
Page me42.420

The main point was that these fine gentlemen from the peace congress, Victor Hugo, Garibaldi, L. Blanc, etc., had kept themselves supremely aloof from our INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION. I have now obliged them to acknowledge us as a real force.
Page me42.420

From Naples I have received the first 2 numbers of a paper Libertá e Giustizia. In No. I they declare themselves to be our organ. I have passed it to Eccarius to place before the congress.†462 No. II, which I shall send you, contains a very good attack on Mazzini.†d I suspect that Bakunin has a hand in it.
Page me42.420

With regard to the confiscation and prohibition of my book,†e there is a world of difference between prohibiting electoral pamphlets and a book of 50 sheets which has such an air of erudition and even contains notes in Greek. Admittedly, that might be of little avail if I had chosen 12 administrative districts in Prussia instead of 12 COUNTIES in England to describe the conditions of the agricultural workers. I also feel that Mr Bismarck will think twice about the matter before provoking me into attacking his regime in London and Paris.

Page Break me42.421
Page me42.421

What conditions are like in Prussia, incidentally, is shown by the following statement by O. Hübner, Director of the Central Statistical Archive, in a message to his electors:

'The people are already overburdened. Apart from the armament factories, almost every trade is depressed, hundreds of hungry men are applying for the humblest positions, in the cities the number of empty dwellings and of citizens, who cannot afford to pay rent, is growing, a whole host of estates and houses are being subjected to compulsory auction, the poor-houses are being besieged by our maimed victors and by the unemployed, everywhere there is a lack of confidence in the present and the future, and the budgets of the poorest are beset by the realisation that they are already paying more for the services of the state than they are worth.'

Page me42.421

In Berlin, neither the government nor the National-Liberal Party†432 has got a single candidate through.†a But just what utter blockheads those men of Progress†99 are who now form the extreme left, is shown amongst other things by the following extract from their 'most radical' organ, the Zukunft:

'The whole English nation is permeated by a snobbery which treats all alike and to which all personal industry is anathema. [...] It is this same snobbery which is for ever urging reduction of working hours and prohibits overtime on account of the UNIONS!'†b

Page me42.421

Would you credit it! Even now the Parisian press is truly a giant compared with the German press!

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.421

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.422

252

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.422

In haste
[London,] 7 September 1867

DEAR FRED,

1 letter from Lessner enclosed. I already had the Gazettes de Lausanne.†472 The Times has cut Eccarius quite disgracefully.†473 I am, at the same time, sending you NEWEST Diplomatic Review and copies of the Courrier français, which I must always have back. The Courrier français has made nonsense of the short notice I sent it about Hübner†a by putting 'tomber sous le marteau des démolisseurs'†b instead of tomber sous la subhastation†c (which is an expression from the Code Napoléon).

Page me42.422
Adio.
Your
K. Marx

Page me42.422
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

253
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.422
[Manchester, 9 September 1867]

Dear Moor,
I intended writing yesterday and today but COMMERCE prevented me from doing so. The Courriers returned enclosed. Vermorel is a fine one with his talk of the influence of the French at the congress and their caractére sérieux and them not making any speeches.†474 POOR Eccarius!

Page Break me42.423
Page me42.423
I must congratulate you on your appendix on the form of value.†438 In this form, it is BROUGHT HOME TO THE MOST REBELLIOUS UNDERSTANDING. Likewise with regard to the preface. But who did the appalling, ungrammatical translation in The Bee-Hive?†456 Why was it not sent to me, saying what you wanted? I am afraid it will harm your reputation with Beesly, etc., who will think you did it yourself.
Page me42.423
Apropos, what shores does the 'transatlantic Ocean' wash, exactly?
Page me42.423
More tomorrow.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.423
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

254
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.423
[London,] 11 September 1867

DEAR FRED,

Regarding the 'transatlantic Ocean', it is a matter for the final corrector to put right such lapsus pennae.†a I see that the Zukunft has reprinted this splendid 'flow' along with the greater part of the preface.†b
Page me42.423

The translation in The Bee-Hive†c is by Eccarius. I believe that most of the errors stem not from him, but, because of his bad hand-writing, from The Bee-Hive's CORRECTORS. I would naturally have preferred you to do the translation. However, as Eccarius offered his services de prime abord,†d and is now on the staff of The Bee-Hive, that was not feasible.
Page me42.423

I shall personally deliver the coup de grâce to those Proudhonist jackasses at the next congress in Brussels. I have DIPLOMATICALLY

Page Break me42.424
MANAGED the whole affair and did not want to COME OUT personally before my book appears and our Association is firmly rooted. By the by, I shall give them a caning in the OFFICIAL REPORT of the GENERAL COUNCIL (despite all their efforts, the Parisian wind-bags were unable to prevent our re-election†475).
Page me42.424

MEANWHILE our Association has made great progress. The wretched Star, which wanted to ignore us entirely, announced in its leading article yesterday that we are more important than the PEACE CONGRESS.†461 Schulze-Delitzsch could not prevent his 'Workers' Association' in Berlin from joining us.†476 Those wretches from among the English TRADE UNIONISTS, who think we are too 'extreme', are coming flocking. Besides the Courrier français, there have been reports on our congress in Girardin's Liberté, Siécle, Mode, Gazette de France, etc. Les choses marchent.†a And when the next revolution comes, and that will perhaps be sooner than might appear, we (i.e., you and I) will have this mighty ENGINE at our disposal. COMPARE WITH THIS THE RESULTS OF MAZZINI'S, ETC., OPERATIONS SINCE 30 YEARS! And with no money to boot! And with the intrigues of the Proudhonists in Paris, Mazzini in Italy and the jealous Odger, Cremer, Potter in London, with the Schulze-Delitzsch and the Lassalleans in Germany! We can be well satisfied!
Page me42.424

My children arrived back safe and in good spirits with Lafargue yesterday.†b He has brought an enormous crystal goblet (holds 1 1/2 POTS) back with him for you. He appears to be impressed with your 'transatlantic Ocean'.
Page me42.424
In these days, Lafargue would like to visit you for 3 days at this time before his lectures begin again. The most awkward thing about it is that he is demanding (of course, not being IN THE SECRET OF MY MONEY-AFFAIRS) that I should accompany him, and I have not yet found a satisfactory excuse for turning down this tour, which I just cannot manage.
Page me42.424
I am exceedingly vexed with Meissner. He has wasted weeks in bringing out the book. Why?
Page me42.424
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.424
2nd letter from Lessner enclosed.†477
Page me42.424
Apropos. Our plump poet's†c begging-campaign, which, vide†d the latest Hermann,†e is not proceeding quite as desired, has had one good result.†422 Kätchen of the sturdy calves†a is to get married. Notice of betrothal to A CERTAIN Kröker (a most poetic name) in the Zukunft!†b

Page Break me42.425

Page me42.425
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

255
ENGELS TO MARX†419
IN LONDON
Page me42.425
Manchester, 11 September 1867

Dear Moor,
The congress really does appear to have been swept away in the French tide this time, the number of Proudhonist resolutions is really far too large.†462 It is good that it will be coming to Belgium next time, by then it will perhaps be possible to do something in North Germany as well, and then, with the help of the English, to dam up the flood. Meanwhile, whatever they resolve there is more or less just wasted breath as long as the CENTRAL COUNCIL remains in London. Once again notre cher†c Philipp Becker appears to have committed some of his unpremeditated blunders, for which one must forgive the old agitator when he has no one to guide him.†478

Page me42.425

That Eccarius wrote the reports in The Times must be kept secret.†473 In view of the manner in which the editors have trimmed his story, it could do him enormous harm. The next time that he reports to the paper, he will have to consider more carefully to what extent his humour can be exploited by the bourgeois editors to cast RIDICULE on the whole business and not just on the few crapauds.†d
Page me42.425

Since you are in contact with Vermorel, can you not moderate the fellow's asininities with regard to Germany? It is really too much if the jackass is demanding that Bonaparte should become liberal, bourgeois liberal, and then start a war to liberate Germany from the tyranny of Bismarck!†a These crapauds, who will have to handle Germany with great delicacy even if they do make a revolution, believe that but a slight turn toward liberalism would enable them to revert to their old roles. I regard it as most important, particularly in the event of a revolution, that these gentlemen should become accustomed to treating us d'égal á égal.†b According to them, Bismarckism in Germany is an inherent characteristic of Germany, which they must destroy by intervening, but their own Bonapartism is a mere accident and could be terminated just by a change of ministers and transformed into its opposite.

Page Break me42.426
Page me42.426

The great Schweitzer has been happily elected with the assistance of the pietists†55 of Elberfeld and Barmen, and will now have the opportunity to bowdlerise various points from your book†c in the 'Reichstag'. You may wager your life that he will do so. However, it can only do good and will afford us much entertainment; once the book is out, only good can come of such things.
Page me42.426

Apropos of Barmen, I am reminded of Siebel. The poor devil is dreadfully sick again and is once more having to leave Barmen, though I do not know whereto; it is possible he will not live out the winter. He must be very bad, so I cannot count on him raising any cry for your book in the newspapers. He has written me a very DESPONDING letter.
Page me42.426

The TRADES OUTRAGE COMMISSION'S†442 conclusions here are entirely farcical and are no different from those reached 7 years ago. If they do not produce anything better, they might as well pack their bags. Just imagine seeing BRICKMAKING AND BRICKLAYING treated as the chief industries of Manchester!
Page me42.426

The defects which have become apparent in the tests carried out on the Chassepot rifle here are the very ones which had already been discovered in Berlin and which Bölzig told me of in Hanover. At that time, I thought that they had deliberately allowed faulty specimens to fall into the hands of the Prussians, but now it rather looks as though there is something in it, in which case the rifle is not half as good as the Prussians' needle-gun.

Page me42.426
Meissner's people in Leipzig appear to be taking an inordinately long time to send the book out. Still no notices anywhere. Do you think I should attack the thing from the bourgeois point of view, to get things under way? Meissner or Siebel would surely get that accepted by a paper.†479 As for it being prohibited,†a I don't believe it myself, but one can never swear that the zeal of some government official will not get the better of him, and once a case has been brought, you could rely on your friend Lippe.

Page Break me42.427
Page me42.427
Kindest regards to your wife and the girls, who I presume are back now.†b
Page me42.427
The Diplomatic Reviews received with thanks.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.427
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

256
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.427
[London,] 12 September 1867

Dear FRED,
Meissner's procrastination bodes most ill. He could have disposed of many COPIES†c at the congress in Lausanne.†462 And the book would have been discussed there as a real event. Such stupidity is beyond my comprehension. Next Saturday it will be 4 weeks since I sent the last corrections to Leipzig.†d
Page me42.427
Your plan to attack the book from the bourgeois point of view is the best tactic. However — once the thing is out — I consider it better to have this done through Siebel or Rittershaus, rather than Meissner. There is no need to let even the best publishers see through one's game. On the other hand, you must write a few instructions to Kugelmann, who is back, concerning the positive aspects he should emphasise. Otherwise, he will do something foolish, enthusiasm alone being insufficient in this case. Naturally, you will feel less inhibited about doing this than I.

Page Break me42.428
Page me42.428

I am entirely of your mind quoad†a Eccarius.†b A worker is lacking in diplomatic finesse, especially one with the critical bluntness of Eccarius. He writes to The Times as though he were writing for the Neue Rheinische Zeitungs-Revue.†c However, no harm has been done. Here in London they are saying that the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, etc., must be strong indeed for The Times to report so expressly on it. Eccarius' SNEERS are taken to be Times SNEERS.†473
Page me42.428

It was the wretched French Swiss, who, being very strongly represented, gave the French wind-bags from Paris so much scope. Old Becker was responsible for the most serious BLUNDER.†478 He first disrupted the agenda we had planned, so as to spring his freedom resolution. This then provided the Parisians with the opportunity to let themselves go.
Page me42.428

But none of that signifies. The main thing is that the congress was held, not what happened there. On se moquera bien†d of the Paris WISEACRES in our GENERAL REPORT. To the latter's great dismay, a resolution was adopted that those who do not pay (and the Parisians have not paid a farthing) cannot send delegates in future. The aim must be to send 20 English and 30 Germans to Brussels next time.†475 AS TO THE BELGIANS THEMSELVES, they can only send 1 MAN per 500, so there will not be very many of them. They are furthermore RATHER REBELLIOUS towards the Parisians.
Page me42.428

Nota bene: the worst thing is, we have not a single man in Paris who could make contact with the workers' sections which are hostile to the Proudhonists (and they form the majority!). If Dupont were to spend a few weeks in Paris, everything would be in order, but the police have him under close surveyance.
Page me42.428

In due course I shall write privately to Vermorel and knock those absurd notions about German politics out of him.†e I shall have to proceed gradatim†f and therefore deliberately began with the UNITED STATES, RUSSIA and TURKEY, because this is 'neutral' ground between Germans and French.†g
Page me42.428

Laura and Lafargue are just now translating part of the preface for the Courrier français.†456
Page me42.428

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.428
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.429

257
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.429
[London,] 12 September 1867

DEAR FRED,

I am sending this 2nd letter, because Eccarius' LETTER has just arrived.†480
Page me42.429

Apropos. What Eccarius could not have known: L. Blanc has absented himself from the Geneva Congress,†a because 'my' people would be playing tricks there; Jules Favre, because the 'class question'†b (as a SUPPORTER of Cavaignac in the June days,†481 his CONSCIENCE is, of course, not CLEAN) has been adopted by the Courrier français, along London lines.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.429
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

258
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.429
Manchester, 12 September 1867

Dear Moor,

You have not enclosed letter No. 2 from Lessner.†477 If Lafargue does come, I would much appreciate it if you came too,†c as I do not rightly know how to entertain our comrade during my business hours. If possible, you should come straight away tomorrow, or at least on the morning of the day after, so that we can be together on Saturday and Sunday, and I can also more easily take some French leave on Monday. But write or telegraph beforehand, so that I can arrange lodging (telegraph the office, except Saturday after 11.0.a.m. and Sunday).

Page Break me42.430
Page me42.430
£5 enclosed to help with money-matters; apart from the cost of travelling here, you can leave it at home for your wife.
Page me42.430
Here, too, the press is treating the International much more decently than before. All the newspapers here have carried some part of the proceedings,†a the Examiner & Times†b had a philistinishly benevolent LEADER.
Page me42.430
Would it not be appropriate also to report on the meetings of the CENTRAL COUNCIL in the German newspapers? e.g., the Zukunft; Wilhelmchen†c might perhaps find somewhere else, too. Where actually is the noble fellow now?
Page me42.430
The Lassalleans are beset by a fresh shindig again. Dr Reincke in Hagen and Schweitzer are AT DAGGERS DRAWN. Reincke went along with the party-of-Progress clique†99 — Bürgers and E. Richter — to ensure his election in Hagen, Düsseldorf and Solingen, but failed in the two latter.
Page me42.430
We really must try to establish a direct link with the workers in Germany again, that is what we most lack, otherwise everything is buoyant enough.
Page me42.430
I read of the betrothal of Käthe,†d as she calls herself, in the Kölnische Zeitung.
Page me42.430
You will have to give me a verbal account of the congress telegrams from Germany.
Page me42.430
The Courriers†e returned herewith. Apropos of the vote in Schleswig, it is splendid how those jackasses declared: avons une carte devant nous,†f which shows Holstein within Schleswig (or vice versa)! Likewise, they first have the Federal troops and then the Dutch (instead of the Luxemburgers themselves) marching into Luxemburg. And it is they who want to abolish IGNORANCE!

Your
F.E.

Page me42.430
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.431

259
MARX TO ENGELS†482
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.431
[Telegram]
London, 13 September 1867

From Karl Marx, 1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park. To Fred Engels, Southgate, St. Mary's.
Page me42.431
Will start from Euston station 4.15 p.m.

Page me42.431
First published in the language of the original, English, in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Reproduced from the photocopy of the telegram

260
ENGELS TO LAURA MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.431
Manchester, 23 September 1867

Dear Löhrchen,
I have received your delightful letter, and as soon as the books arrived I despatched the various copies†a to their resp. recipients — those to Imandt and Strohn sent securely packed by BOOK POST, but the one intended for me, for which my best thanks to Moor, straight to the binders.
Page me42.431
You will be interested to learn that a week ago last Saturday I already showed Lafargue†482 the battlefield where the great Fenian liberation battle was enacted the previous Wednesday.†483 We were actually within ten paces of the railway arch; however, he will scarcely recollect it.
Page me42.431
So that you may see what man, and cotton-man in particular, is capable of, I am sending you enclosed the latest abomination of this kind in the form of a cotton sheen-wig. These GUYS are now being made and sold in colossal quantities.
Page me42.431

Your friend Library†b has been successfully elected at Schneeberg in Saxony to the great North German Reichstag against Count zur Lippe, and will no doubt soon be making a great maiden speech.†484

Page Break me42.432
THE RIGHT MAN IN THE RIGHT PLACE.
Page me42.432
With hearty greetings to the whole family, most sincerely

Your
F. Engels

Page me42.432
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

261
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.432
[London,] 4 October 1867†a

DEAR FRED,
Since my return from Manchester†482 almost until now, I have had a feverish cold. I caught the COLD in the course of the railway malheur.†b
Page me42.432
As there are many things about which I wish to write to you, ON PUBLIC AND PRIVATE AFFAIRS, in this letter, I shall start with the book,†c so that I do not forget it. You would have spent long indeed searching in Table C for the decrease in the cultivation of green crops (p. 695). Mr Wigand has printed C instead of B (p. 690), which tells us, under the heading 'Green Crops', that from 1861-65 107,984 acres were put out of cultivation.†485 Indeed you will observe from the schedule of misprints on p. 784 that Mr Wigand has wilfully abbreviated it from p. 292 onwards in order to accommodate it on the last page. The section concerning Ireland was certainly written very hastily, but for a second edition it could be put in order with but a few formal alterations. The most important thing is the FACTS, which are not known even in England.†463
Page me42.432
I have heard nothing from Meissner. Schabelitz (Basle) told Borkheim he has requested 5 copies for sale or return on the strength of 5 copies which he ordered for cash payment, but Meissner replied he did not have enough to send him so many for sale or return. However, this may merely be a diplomatic manoeuvre on Meissner's part. I see from the enclosed note from Liebknecht (who BY THE BY has done us proud with his first intervention in the Reichstag, vide†a the Zukunft No. 229 of 1 October†486) that Meissner is not always so punctilious. It was agreed that he should send 1 copy to Liebknecht and 1 copy to Dr Weiss for the editors (Zukunft).

Page Break me42.433

Page me42.433

Professor Beesly has now returned home, and I shall be hearing from him before very long. Quant á†b Siebel, I should also like to know whether he has received the copies, 1 for himself and 1 for Rittershaus? and how the latter has requited it?

Page me42.433

Ad vocem†c Vogt: you will find some news about Vogt in the enclosed letter from Kugelmann.†487 After Kugelmann had departed†d and the gang thought Borkheim had likewise gone, a final meeting of the Germans took place, at which Borkheim suddenly appeared and witnessed the following occurrence. Mr Goegg handed a slip of paper to the Vice-President, Büchner, in which he declared that the Bonapartist rumours, etc., regarding Vogt were false, and offered a testimonium virtutis†e for the man, whom he claimed to have known for 20 years. He demanded that Büchner sign this note, i.e., certify that it had been communicated to him. Büchner naturally did so. Whereupon LITTLE Beust jumps up, states in writing that Goegg is only expressing a private opinion which is by no means shared in Switzerland, etc., etc. Ditto demands certification of his protest by Büchner, which the latter supplies. Vogt's manoeuvre was thus frustrated. To what depths that fellow has descended!

Page me42.433

Another INCIDENT at the Peace Congress! Ludwig Simon approaches Goegg: 'Why have you not moved my name nearer to the top of the list of speakers! Why is Borkheim given the floor before me?' Goegg: 'Those fellows — the proletarians — had 4 of the German vice-presidents. To bring in our man Grün and get Borkheim to give up his place, we had to make this concession to him, etc.!' Hardly were the words out of that beau's†f mouth than he looks round and to his horror sees Eccarius grinning behind his back.

Page me42.433

Ad vocem Stumpf: Maybe Stumpf understands me, but I do not understand Stumpf. Perhaps you will be more fortunate and be able to 'delineate the scientific process of pauperisation' and ditto 'the correct conclusion' from the 'evidence' which he keeps in his pocket and does not divulge. His letter enclosed.†488

Page Break me42.434

Page me42.434

Ad vocem Dronke: Borkheim spoke to a man in Paris who has a precise acquaintance with all Dronke's affairs and described him as a 'voleur'†a The copper company had served notice on Dronke a year ago. It now has a firm in Glasgow as its associate and therefore has no more need of an English agency. Dronke, dicitur,†b has been guilty of much 'embezzlement' in the past year and has made himself the object of an 'embarrassing' investigation. I hope the affair will be hushed up.

Page me42.434

Ad vocem Collet: what follows is by way of explanation for the enclosed curiosa: Collet's little girl (whom you have met) and her even younger brother were visiting us a few days ago. The boy had a boxing match with Lafargue, who eventually pinned him to the floor in a humiliating position. Then says the boy, 'REMEMBER HOW YOU GOT ON AT WATERLOO!' Hence this comical correspondence, with the girl denouncing the lad to the old man.
Page me42.434

Collet has withdrawn from The Diplomatic Review, although his name still figures on the paper this time. I immediately noticed the change of editor, as I was only sent 1 COPY. You shall have it as soon as I am finished with it. It is a thoroughly foolish number. Garibaldi is described as 'a common bandit, atheist, FOOL, etc.', M. Dupanloup, the évêque†c of Orleans, by contrast, as the great man of the age.†d Will David†e yet become a Catholic one day perhaps? The Peace Congress in Geneva was, of course, a fabrication of the Russians, which is why they sent along their 'WELL WORN OUT AGENT Bakounine'. I have the impression that The Diplomatic Review is on its last legs.
Page me42.434

Ad vocem INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION. At my suggestion, the office of president has been abolished, after Odger had already been proposed for re-election.†489 — Fox, who has missed no opportunity to exhibit his profound hatred for Eccarius since the latter's return,†f gave notice for the next meeting (Tuesday) that he would ask the COUNCIL to consider censuring Eccarius for his 'Times' articles.†473 To Fox's great surprise I thereupon gave ditto notice that I would interpellate Fox next Tuesday about a 'SECRET LETTER' that he had written to Becker†g requesting him 'TO DO ALL IN HIS POWER TO REMOVE THE SEAT OF THE CENTRAL COUNCIL FROM LONDON'.†490 Fox, who is altogether composed of CAPRICES and CROTCHETS, imagines that he must found an 'opposition party' on the COUNCIL against the 'German dictatorship', as he calls it. He will be astonished at his success in this LINE!

Page Break me42.435
Page me42.435

Ad vocem Borkheim: d'abord,†a the following FACTS. Borkheim spoke (or rather read from his manuscript) for over 20 minutes, whereas only 10 were permitted by the rules.†469 Naturally, like Garibaldi and Edgar Quinet, he too felt he could afford to take liberties. Secondly, he mounted the rostrum in a state of extreme excitement, and, as Eccarius says, 'did not let himself get a word in edgeways'. Nobody understood him. All that people heard were the few catchwords about Schulze-Delitzsch, at which Vogt jumped up and clenched both his fists, and about the Cossacks.†b That was fortunate indeed. His speech was thought to be significant because it was not understood. He therefore plays some part, both in The Times†491 and in the French press. But now comes the DRAWBACK. The fool wishes to have his speech printed in German, English, Russian and in the French original. I now have the latter in front of me.†c He sent it to me so that Lafargue could look through it. With the exception of the few catchwords, which I whispered into his ear, it is not merely a tasteless hotchpotch, but often pure balderdash. And his French! E.g.,

'Sans stultification il serait impossible de discuter, s'il faudrait d'abord faire enlever la femelle Isabelle, faire sauter le mâle Bismarck ou faire s'évanouir l'agile hermaphrodite Beust. Il y a de grands orateurs, de profonds penseurs français, membres de cette union, mais fûssent-ils tous des Mirabeaux achevés et des Descartes consommés, les têtes allemandes seraient trop carrées pour le trouver rond, qu'il fût d'abord et avant tout le gouvernement français, l'abolition duquel introniserait l'ére de la paix internationale.'†d

Page me42.435

Assez!†e

Page me42.435

How little he suspected the quality of 'his French' is clear from the note he jotted in the margin of the manuscript he sent me:

'Please ask Mr Lafargue to look quickly through it and correct any (!) bad French in the margin!'

Page Break me42.436

Page me42.436

I was, OF COURSE, OBLIGED to tell him that Lafargue would have to see him, as he could not proceed to make the 'deletions' (to begin with, Lafargue wants to delete the whole of THE FIRST HALF) and 'amendments' in his absence. He is therefore coming to see me this evening. Lafargue additionally showed me French commis voyageur†a SLANG in almost every sentence. E.g., 'parlons rondement!'†b

Page me42.436

PRIVATE AFFAIRS: I have talked to Borkheim about the possibility of finding me a LOAN of at least £100 in London. He says yes, he is willing to be 1 guarantor if you will be the other. But he would, after all, need to hear from yourself about the matter first. The situation is simply that I can neither complete Volume II,†418 nor find the time for the intrigues required for the English edition,†229 nor even remain in England, if I do not manage to pacify the Manichaeans†431 for SOME WEEKS AT LEAST. If the English transaction succeeds, and if they proceed in such a manner in Germany — which does not seem difficult to me — that a 2nd impression†454 soon becomes necessary, the crisis will have been overcome.

Page me42.436

This damned year has been made even worse by Lafargue staying with me until now, Laura is to marry in the spring, etc.

Page me42.436

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.436

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

262
ENGELS TO MARX†c
IN LONDON
Page me42.436
Manchester, 8 October 1867
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

Detailed letter tomorrow. Just the letters returned enclosed and the one question: will Borkheim be writing to me about the LOAN or is he expecting me to write to him?†a I shall send the newspapers back to you tomorrow.

Page Break me42.437
Page me42.437

Meissner will no doubt have sent the copies†b to Weiss and Liebknecht through a bookshop, where they would not arrive until about 1 October in Berlin, about the time when the other copies arrived there and came into the shops. The Kölnische and Augsburger Zeitung only carried the notice a few days ago.†c

Your
F.E.

Page me42.437
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

263
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.437
[London,] 9 October 1867

DEAR FRED,

Borkheim is expecting a letter from you first that you are willing to be co-guarantor.†d
Page me42.437
Poor Lafargue is in the final throes today, putting Borkheim's preface into decent French (insofar as that is possible!). The latter has baptised his opus: 'Ma perle devant le Congrés de Genéve'.†469 Curious how the itch for literary fame can make a FOOL of an otherwise quite intelligent garçon†e!
Page me42.437
So, yesterday, Fox was to decapitate Eccarius.†f The former took more than 1 hour to speak his indictment. He had most maliciously assembled the worst passages and displayed all the arts of an Old Bailey†g barrister, also continually attacking me. In my riposte I dealt him such telling blows that in his final REPLY he quite lost his composure and self-control. Everyone joined in the discussion. The outcome: my MOTION (or amendment RATHER) 'to proceed to the order of the day' was accepted by an enormous majority. Nevertheless, Eccarius got a regular dressing down in the course of the debate.

Page Break me42.438
Page me42.438
You must read the piece 'Le troisiéme larron' I have marked in the Courrier†a that you will get at the same time (splendid that the French are already sans gêne†b calling their Bonaparte one of the larrons†c).†492 As soon as I have the numbers back from Lormier, I shall send the interesting COMMUNICATIONS about the MEXICAN affair.†270
Page me42.438
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.438
Apropos. Strohn spent the day here yesterday. He fancies you meant to slight him on his last visit to Manchester, with your remark, 'Yes, in Bradford the commis voyageur†d still counts for something.' I tried to drive this nonsense out of his mind. — He says Dronke had procured the British associé for the copper company himself. He had probably demanded to be indemnified for it, and no doubt he had based himself on spurious but legally defensible claims when appropriating or laying his hands on a portion of the copper passing through his hands. He did not believe that Dronke had unwarrantedly frisé†e the code pénal directly. Tant mieux†f

Page me42.438
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

264
MARX TO ENGELS†302
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.438
[London,] 10 October 1867

DEAR FRED,

You will see from the enclosed letter from Kugelmann that the time for ACTION has now come.†493 You are better placed to write to him about my book†a than I am. He must, at the same time, avoid divagations and not send us the things for correction, but after they have appeared. You must impress on him that 'making a commotion' is what matters most, far more than how it is done or being thorough.

Page Break me42.439
Page me42.439

Nothing in the enclosed note from Meissner. How can he expect reviews before his own publisher's notices have appeared?
Page me42.439

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.439
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

265
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.439
Manchester, 11 October 1867

Dear Moor,

Kindest thanks for the letters and newspapers, which I shall send back in a few days.
Page me42.439

I am writing to Borkheim that I will gladly take on the guarantee with him, provided he can so arrange the matter that everything proceeds secretly and that, e.g., no references are required of me — as I am contractually forbidden to become SURETY, and my relations with Monsieur Gottfried†b are such that he would seize upon any occasion TO PUT ME IN THE WRONG BEFORE A COURT OF ARBITRATION. So long as he cannot do that, I am prepared to give him my solemn assurance that I will be co-liable for the £100, and await further proposals. Or would Freiligrath, e.g., be sufficient reference for me? The point is that the business would have to be concluded entirely behind the backs of all my commercial connections. Enfin nous verrons.†c

Page Break me42.440
Page me42.440

Tomorrow afternoon I shall put something together for Kugelmann; if we are to wait until he has read the book†a through, we shall not get far. I shall write to Siebel, too. I do not know what you have in mind with the Freiligrath-bard Rittershaus, I do not know the fellow at all, and as far as I know, he is definitely not one of our people.
Page me42.440

There was much else about which I wished to write to you, but then along comes that damned old Jew Leibel Choras, whom you know, and detains me for over an hour. Then another fellow immediately following. For a week now I have been overrun with clients, 2 more this morning. Yet another expected tomorrow morning. On top of that, endless bother with Gottfried, it is enough to drive one mad.
Page me42.440

So till tomorrow.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.440
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

266
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.440
[London,] 11 October 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

D'abord,†b best thanks for your two letters.†c You would give me great pleasure if you were to write as often as your time allows. But you must not expect an exactly equal response, as my time is in any case scarcely sufficient now for the multifarious correspondence which I am obliged to conduct with a variety of parties.
Page me42.440

First, before turning to the subject of my book,†d a preliminary word or a wordy preliminary. I fear that Borkheim is, malgré lui,†e on the point of doing me a very bad turn. He is publishing his

Page Break me42.441
'Geneva speech'†a in 4 languages, French, German, English, and Russian.†469 He has, furthermore, provided it with a baroque and tasteless preface, overladen with quotations. Between ourselves — and in the interests of the party — I must tell you the plain truth. Borkheim is a capable man and even an homme d'esprit.†b But when he takes up the pen, beware! All tact and taste leave him. Nor has he the necessary education. He is like those savages who imagine that they are enhancing their appearance by tattooing their faces with all possible gaudy colours. Banality and sensationalism always get the better of him. Almost his every phrase instinctively dons cap and bells. If he were not so vain through and through, I could have prevented the publication and made it clear to him that it was his good fortune that people had not understood him in Geneva except for a few good POINTS from his SPEECH. On the other hand, I owe him a debt of gratitude for the part he played in the Vogt affair,†494 and he is a personal friend of mine. There are in his speech, etc., a number of phrases in which he has fatuously garbled†c certain views of mine. My enemies (Vogt has already hinted in the Neue Zürcher-Zeitung that I am the secret author of the speech†d) will now have the greatest fun in making me responsible for Mr Borkheim, his follies and eccentricities, instead of attacking my book. If anything of that kind should occur, you will have to use Warnebold, etc., to place some short articles in the newspapers to which you have access, to expose these tactics and, without insulting Borkheim in any way, nevertheless to state quite plainly that only ill intention or an exceedingly uncritical mind could identify things that are so disparate. The baroque and confused manner in which our views are reflected in Borkheim's mind (from the moment he ceases to speak and starts to write), will naturally offer the vile PRESS-GANG the most welcome excuse for an offensive and might even indirectly serve to harm my book.
Page me42.441
However, if, as I scarcely dare to hope, since Borkheim is meticulously despatching his progeny to all the newspapers, the press says nothing about it, you must do absolutely nothing to break this solemn silence.
Page me42.441
If Borkheim were not a personal friend, I should publicly disown him. You will understand my fausse position†e and at the same time my vexation. Here one is presenting to the public a work that has cost much trouble to write (and perhaps no work of this kind has ever been written in more difficult circumstances), with the purpose of giving the greatest possible lift to the party and of disarming even ill-disposed critics by the very method of its exposition, and at that same moment a member of the party clad in cap, bells and motley insists on standing next to one in the market-place and provokes a barrage of rotten apples and eggs, which may hit one in the head even as a party member!

Page Break me42.442
Page me42.442

Your manoeuvres against Vogt in Geneva have greatly satisfait†a me.†487 I am glad you like my book.
Page me42.442
Concerning your questions:
Ernest Jones had to speak as a party man to Irish men in Ireland, in other words, since the big landownership there is identical with English proprietorship of Ireland, he had to speak against the big landownership. You must never look for any matters of principle in HUSTINGS SPEECHES by English politicians, but only for what is immediately expedient.
Page me42.442
Peonage is the advancing of money against future labour. The consequences of these advances are the same as with ordinary usury. The worker does not merely remain in debt throughout his life, thus performing forced labour for his creditor, but the relationship is inherited by the family and the next generation, who thus actually belong to the creditor.†495
Page me42.442
The completion of my second volume†418 depends chiefly on the success of the first. This I require in order to find a publisher in England, and, without the latter, my material circumstances will remain so difficult and disruptive that I shall be able to find neither time nor peace for speedy completion. Naturally, these are things which I do not wish Mr Meissner to know. It thus now depends on how skilful and active my party friends in Germany are, whether the second volume takes a long or a short time to appear. Considered criticism — whether from friend or foe — can only be expected to appear gradually, as one needs time to read and digest such a compendious and, in parts, difficult work. But its immediate success will not be decided by considered criticism, but, to put it bluntly, by making a noise and beating the drum, which compels even the adversaries to speak. To begin with, it is less important what is said than that something should be said. Above all, no time must be lost!
Page me42.442
I have sent your last letter to Engels for him to send you the necessary suggestions. He can write about my book better than I can myself.

Page Break me42.443
Page me42.443
My kindest compliments to your dear wife.†a One of these days I shall send her a recipe for reading the book.†b

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.443
Please keep me au fait†c with all developments in Germany respecting Volume I.
Page me42.443
Paul Stumpf (Mainz) has written me a letter†d in which he calls Borkheim's speech 'my' speech, and as at present I have no time to write to Stumpf, you would oblige me by writing to him yourself to tell him the true situation and to advise silence when Borkheim's pamphlet appears. Entre nous†e Stumpf tends to put his foot in it himself whenever he takes up the pen.

Page me42.443
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 3, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

267
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.443
Manchester, 12 October 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

Marx sent me your letter of the 8th,†493 believing I would be better able to give you the right ideas for a review of his book†f than he could himself. To save trouble, I have just set out what are, in my opinion, the most suitable ideas for the populus†g in two complete articles which will probably be appropriate for almost any bourgeois paper†496; they may, however, be of use to you until you have worked your way through the 50 sheets' yourself, for writing both long and short articles for other publications. The main thing is not what and how but that the book be discussed, and that the Fauchers, Michaelis, Roschers and Raus forced to express an opinion on it. In as many papers as possible, political and other, wherever it can be done. Long and short notices, provided they come thick and fast. We must make it impossible for these gentlemen to pursue their policy of total silence, which they would dearly love to try, and indeed as quickly as possible. Make sure you always send a copy of what is printed to Marx, so that we, and Meissner, too, are informed of events.

Page Break me42.444
Page me42.444

Liebknecht is giving a pretty good account of himself in the Berlin cattle-shed.†a He is consistently voting against everything and also made a good maiden speech — immediately interrupted by Zeus Cronion Simson. And what's more, his motion†486 was the only sensible one.
Page me42.444

I hope all has been well with you since my departure.†449 I have been back here for 2 months now, sitting at my office desk and frittering good time away with this lousy COMMERCE. You will have heard about our little Fenian coup de main†b here. The affair was splendidly organised and executed; but the ringleaders were caught unfortunately.†497
Page me42.444

With best greetings.
Yours
F. Engels

Page me42.444
Marx expressly asks that all the articles should be placed there immediately and that you should only send them to him after publication.†c

Page me42.444
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.445

268
ENGELS TO MARX†26
IN LONDON
Page me42.445
Manchester, 13 October 1867

Dear Moor,
I have written Kugelmann two articles about the book from different points of view and sent them to him†496; I think they are such as almost any newspaper can take, and he can do others from them. That should help him a bit.
Page me42.445
I shall be writing to Siebel tomorrow, I must first know where the fellow is and how his health is.†498
Page me42.445
Borkheim written to.†131
Page me42.445
Liebknecht is doing very well; he has retained sufficient from us to realise that the only correct policy consists in voting against everything without exception. This he has faithfully done so far. If you should be writing to him again these days, you can draw his attention to the following: the final article of the law on freedom of movement reads: this law shall not apply to the Aliens' Police.†499 With the consequence that what one gains as a North German citizen, one loses again as an 'alien'. It would have a great effect here if Liebknecht were to propose: the Aliens' Police be abolished. Only on the Continent does such an absurdity exist; the proposition would have a great effect. In fact, it would in general strengthen his position to suggest he chaff the bourgeois members with the fact that he, the communist, is obliged to champion their own interests despite their opposition. Liebknecht's speech was much better in the Kölnische Zeitung, by the way, than in the Zukunft.†486
Page me42.445

I was very pleased to read the things about Vogt.†a For all his manoeuvres, your attack†b has put paid to him entirely, and only the liberal bourgeoisie still considers him the German Véron.
Page me42.445
All that Stumpf†c is asking for is that you supply him with theoretical and factual material to explain how it comes about that the petty bourgeois gradually yields to the proletarian. And you know that as well as I do, but you just want to get out of the work. Of course, good old Stumpf thinks that one page of a letter would suffice — for him to learn how to handle the question. That, however, I would doubt.

Page Break me42.446
Page me42.446
Dronke.†a Borkheim is just as much of a scandalmonger as the little fellow himself,†b and if the 2 of them say anything about each other, it will be SIX OF ONE AND HALF A DOZEN OF THE OTHER. Dronke still has enough jus†c in his little head to take care to avoid direct CRIMINAL PROSECUTION, within the periods prescribed by present extradition treaties.†500 You know, by the way, how in COMMERCE even the most blatantly criminal affairs can be taken care of simply as civil law cases. But the little fellow has certainly been too clever by half and much too greedy.
Page me42.446
Strohn is the same curious old fellow as ever. Fancy him applying a remark to himself the moment that I make it, when he has made it countless times himself!†d
Page me42.446
I cannot wait to see Borkheim's 'Pearl'.†e In the matter of literary vanity, the fellow is pure 'Yid'.
Page me42.446
Gumpert has a cousin staying here, ex-Electoral-Hessian, now Prussian lieutenant. The fellow enlisted with the Prussians, full of high expectations, but found the old pack-drill in full flower once again. Gymnastics, etc., performed by commands, parading, ramrod marching order, etc. Some of it may be exaggerated, but there is no doubt that the latest successes†f have also lent a certain sanction to military display. The exaggeration derives from the disagreeable impression, which the newly recruited officers have already received, that 9 out of every 10 of them will never reach the rank of staff-officer. And the fellow is just looking for an opportunity to extricate himself.
Page me42.446
Kindest regards to your wife, the girls and Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.446
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.447

269
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.447
[London,] 14 October 1867

Dear FRED,

You will see from the enclosed letter No. II from Juch that, although Achilles†a is dead, Beta is still alive. Juch's letter was probably provoked by the fact that Beta speaks well of Kinkel but not Freiligrath, and that Beta's article also contains some malicious remarks directed at Juch. When Freiligrath and Juch form an alliance, they are incapable of producing even a bad joke. For which reason I am to be incited to action, being 'thoroughly venomous', as Beta calls me in that vile scrawl of an article he wrote: 'Die Deutschen in London', which begins with the Norman Conquest and ends with that oily Jew Bender as the sole epitome of mankind in England.
Page me42.447

This is about the 6th time now that Mr Juch has offered me his stale columns†b for the purpose of 'self-glorification', for him a well proven tactic which he has used, successfully of course, with Blind, Kinkel, Freiligrath, and Heintzmann. I wrote him a few lines only.†111 And not to Mr. Freiligrath's liking either. I told him privatim of what happened at Beta's How do you do? editorial office when I went there in the company of Ziegenhainer, Freiligrath, and our W. Wolff.†501 So as to give him one bad joke for his trouble, I told him that I would not allow Kinkel the credit for being more than the aa and wö to this Beta.
Page me42.447

Typical of Juch: he sends me Payne's people's calendar†502 which contains the corpus delicti (like all such abominations in Germany, Gartenlaube, etc., this calendar has 250,000 subscribers), along with the inevitable invoice for 11d., which I immediately enclosed with my reply. Though admittedly he was once more on the threshold of the BANKRUPTCY COURT and has with great difficulty SETTLED with his creditors for monthly payments of 2s. 6d. in the £.
Page me42.447

How shall I answer the enclosed from Nahmer?†503
Page me42.447

Has Borkheim sent you the Courrier français with the translation of my preface†c? I am asking because POOR Lafargue is on tenterhooks for 'your verdict' — every day. The Belgian Liberté arrived today, having ditto printed the préface, with very 'fulsome' PREAMBLE,†456 in which it reminds the Belgian government of my EXPULSION.†236

Page Break me42.448
Page me42.448

I had already replied to Liebknecht,†111 but had to write to him again today because I only today received the 2 ACTS relating to the TRADE UNIONS COMMISSION.†504 Your tips†a attached to my letter.
Page me42.448
Salut. COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS.

Your Moro

Page me42.448
First published slightly abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

270
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.448
Manchester, 15 October 1867

Dear Moor,
In the greatest of haste, just this:
Borkheim wants me to allow a bill to be drawn on myself, which more than anything else I am not permitted to do. I have written to him†131 that I will give him a guarantee for the £150 (having at the same time increased the amount) and am prepared to give him privatim any SECURITY that it will be paid ANY TIME after 1 August 1868, and asked him whether in these circumstances he can raise the money.†b He has said nothing further about the LOAN. Perhaps it would be best if you saw him, as he is going away at the end of the week and will not be back for a fortnight.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.448
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.449

271
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.449
[London,] 15 October 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

You must not write to Borkheim. It would be pointless in any case as the work†a has already been announced in the Buchhändler-börsenblatt†b and is being already published by Schabelitz. Moreover, Borkheim himself is now in Bordeaux: such a letter from you could have no effect whatsoever except to make an enemy of Borkheim for me.†505

Page me42.449

Ce qui est fait, est fait.†c NEVER MIND! It was just that, my mind being in a turmoil from working all night, I AT FIRST exaggerated the gravity of the événement.†d And indeed, je suis puni par oú j'ai péché!†e You see I was amused au premier abord†f by the thought of the scandal that our friend would create amongst the respectable philistines of Geneva. Of course, I did not foresee the fruits it would bear in the book trade. I should, moreover, have reflected that, in working out his plan, Borkheim would naturally overstep the bounds of prudence which I suggested to him in my letter.†469 The only policy we can pursue now is silence, for as long as our opponents do not speak; as soon as they speak and attempt to hold me responsible, we must make bad jokes about their being obliged to burden me with Borkheim's pranks in order not to have to reply to my book.†g Borkheim ought furthermore to be treated indulgently in that event, for AFTER ALL, except for his literary vanity, he is a capable and well-meaning man, and good as an homme d'action,†h as long as his sense of devilry does not get the better of him.

Page me42.449

You will probably already have received Engels' recipes.†496 I am in correspondence with Liebknecht and Becker.†i

Page me42.449

By the 'success of the book', I only meant that it should sell quickly, on account of the effect this will have back in England.

Page me42.449

The Courrier français (at present the Paris daily which creates the biggest stir) and the Liberté in Brussels have published a

Page Break me42.450

French translation of my preface along with COMPLIMENTARY PREAMBLES.†456

Page me42.450

One Nahmer in New York has offered his services as English translator over there.†503 Quod non.†a

Page me42.450

I am very pleased with Liebknecht's performance in Berlin.†486 I sent him over some instructions from here.

Page me42.450

Poor Becker has reached such a pass that he is on the verge of abandoning politics and writing altogether.†506 How one regrets not being able to help in such circumstances!

Page me42.450

My compliments to your dear wife and my little friend,†b for whose portrait I have not yet thanked you.

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.450

First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 3, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

272

ENGELS TO MARX†26

IN LONDON

Page me42.450

Manchester, 18 October 1867

Dear Moor,

I have written to Borkheim that I cannot accept in any circumstances and that now that I have guaranteed him the amount, it all depends on his sources of credit, as mine are tied up.†c

Page me42.450

The letters returned enclosed. Liebknecht appears to have been SICK, or else he could surely have said something about the combination law. PERHAPS IT IS BETTER SO. Schweitzer has shown himself to be a vain jackass and phrasemonger. He's finished now.†507

Page me42.450

I was much amused by the Beta correspondence.†d

Page me42.450

The Courrier français†e has arrived, but I have no time whatsoever to form an opinion of it today.

Page Break me42.451

Page me42.451

I could write another 4-5 articles about your book†a from various points of view, but don't know where to place them. Goodness knows where Siebel is! Maybe in Algiers or in Palermo! But I hope to have an answer from him soon. If I could have them copied in London, so that my handwriting would not be recognised, it might after all be wisest to send them to Meissner.

Page me42.451

Kindest regards to all.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.451
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

273
ENGELS TO HERMANN MEYER†10 IN LIVERPOOL
Page me42.451
Manchester, 18 October 1867

Dear Meyer,

I received your telegram this morning and can't say how sorry I am that I am unable to go to Liverpool this evening. My associé†b and our chief clerk†c are both away tomorrow, and so I have to be here to sign cheques and keep an eye on everything myself. Moreover, we close at 1 o'clock here on Saturdays, and as you yourself are not arriving in Liverpool until about 11 o'clock this evening and the Russia sails at 12 o'clock, you will see for yourself that there is nothing to be done.
Page me42.451

Please write your address and Mrs Weydemeyer's on the enclosed piece of paper and then hand in the envelope at the hotel for posting. Please convey my hearty greetings to Mrs Weydemeyer and tell her I would have written her a few lines long ago if I had known her address.
Page me42.451

I hope you will be able to bring Marx's book†a to the attention of the German-American press and of the workers. With the

Page Break me42.452
8-hour-agitation that is in progress in America now,†468 this book with its chapter on the working day will come at just the right time for you over there, and, in other respects too, it is likely to clarify people's minds on a variety of issues. The future of the party in America will be greatly beholden to you for any step you can take in that direction.
Page me42.452

Please pass on my best greetings to Jacobi†a in New York as well.
Page me42.452

Have a safe journey!

Yours most sincerely

Friedrich Engels

Page me42.452
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

274
MARX TO ENGELS†243
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.452
London, 19 October 1867

DEAR FRED,

As regards Borkheim, I told him: what Engels wrote is final and is not subject to 'negotiation'. He (today he left for Bordeaux) let himself be ruled by me to the extent of paying out £40 to me and promising TO FIND THE REST by 10 November without further prevarication if you were unable, etc. But as a businessman and a Jew he had to make just one more attempt!
Page me42.452

Incidentally, Borkheim has just had a hugely gratifying experience. Schabelitz put an exceedingly bombastic notice of Borkheim's 'Perle'†b in the Buchhändlerbörsenblatt,†c in which Borkheim is featured as Peter the Hermit vis-á-vis Russia. WELL! The Moscow Newspaper†d has printed this (in translation) as a curiosity, and he thus had the pleasure of seeing himself and his name in print in Russian! He showed me a copy and interpreted it for me.

Page Break me42.453
Page me42.453

Lafargue was put to a deal of trouble translating Borkheim's French at least passably into French.†a I had to give him some assistance, of course, especially for the quotations from Kant, Fichte and Hegel, which Borkheim probably did not quite understand even in German. But he has these gentlemen in his library.
Page me42.453

I am glad the matter is thus SETTLED. In recent weeks I have found it perfectly impossible to write for more than maybe 2 hours. Apart from the incursions FROM WITHOUT, there are all the aggravations of home life, which I always find especially nerve-racking. I have been suffering from insomnia again and had the pleasure of seeing 2 small carbuncles blossom near the membrum. Fortunately, they have faded away. My sickness always originates in the mind. While on the subject of the membrum, may I commend the following lines to you for Moore from the French satirist of the 16th century, Mathurin Régnier. Well-read though I am in this field, I do not think that chaude pisse has ever been more poetically described:

Mon cas, qui se léve et se hausse,
Bave d'une estrange façon;
Belle, vous fournites la sausse,
Lors que je fournis le poisson.
Page me42.453
Las! si ce membre eut l'arrogance
De fouiller trop les lieux sacrés,
Qu'on lui pardonne son offence,
Car il pleure assez ses péchés.†b

Page me42.453
And this by the same poet is not bad either:
Page me42.453
Fluxion D'Amour

L'amour est une affection
Qui, par les yeux, dans le cœur entre,

Page Break me42.454
Et, par la forme de fluxion,
S'écoule par le bas du ventre.†a

Page me42.454
Finally:
Lizette tuée par Régnier

Lizette, á qui l'on faisait tort,
Vint á Régnier tout éplorée,
Je te pry: Donne-moi la mort,
Que j'ai tant de fois désirée!
Lui, ne la refusant en rien,
Tire son... vous m'entendez bien;
Et dedans le ventre la frappe.
Elle, voulant finir ses jours,
Lui dit: Mon cœur, pousse toujours,
De crainte que je n'en réchappe.
Régnier, las de la servir,
Craignant une seconde plainte,
Lui dit: Hastez-vous de mourir,
Car mon poignard n'a plus de pointe.†b

Page me42.454
2 Freiligrath snippets enclosed.†508

Page me42.454

Enclosed 2 Courrier français and 1 Liberté. There is no need for you to send back these journals. But do keep them! I have not read the nonsense in the Courrier on the Art Militaire, but I did read Proudhon on the generatio aequivoca†a! I suspect that l'un vaut l'autre.†b

Page Break me42.455

Page me42.455

H. Meyer was here the day before yesterday en route for America. Perhaps he called on you, too.

Page me42.455

Let me have your recipes†c for the German newspapers. I will have them copied out and find the most suitable PLACEMENTS. They will even find double emploi,†d at least in part, as Meyer was also asking for something of the kind for over there and will put them to good use. As soon as this has been done in Germany — and that is the most important thing, for success here depends largely on what happens there — you must write a critique for The Fortnightly Review.†509 Beesly will get it in. This is a necessary prerequisite TO CATCH A PUBLISHER IN LONDON. The paper is secretly (so secretly that not a soul notices it) of Comteist persuasion, but wishes to provide an outlet for every point of view. If your critique arouses Mr Lewes' (the Goethe man, and unfortunately semi-Comteist, too) interest in the book (Lewes is secretly also CO-PROPRIETOR of the Review), it will be easy to find a publisher. And even without that, a publisher will in any case be easier to find then. The latest number contains a truly pitiful article by Thornton, in which he reproduces MALTHUSIANISM (in which the real MONGERS do not believe) in the most commonplace and trivial form.†e

Page me42.455

What our party lacks is money, as the enclosed letters from Eccarius and Becker once more painfully demonstrate.†510 But for this deficiency, we should always be, despite great and irreplaceable losses, today as in 1848, les plus forts.†f

Page me42.455

Regards to MRS Lizzy.†g

Your
K.M.

Page me42.455

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.456

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.456
Manchester, 22 October 1867

Dear Moor,

The letters from Becker and Eccarius returned enclosed.†a The lack of money is, of course, a great misfortune for the party, and a yet greater one for those poor devils.
Page me42.456

Siebel has written to me from Honnef on the Rhine that he is coming here at the beginning of November to embark at Liverpool again for Madeira. He says I should send him the articles†b by return; this evening I shall set to work to knock a few into shape for him. What I am writing for the German press is, of course, all dressed up in disguise; I shall have to write differently for America, since one can take greater liberties there.
Page me42.456

Sam Moore has written from Eisenach; he seems to be making considerable progress with his German.
Page me42.456

I am greatly amused by Liebknecht. It is truly fortunate that he is still thoroughly infected with the South-German-Federalist nonsense and can consequently attack Bismarckism with great SINGLENESS OF PURPOSE and with undaunted moral indignation. A somewhat more critical and more dialectical outlook would only sow confusion in his mind and lead him astray. He has obviously taken Lupus in the Frankfurt Parliament†511 as his model and has properly earned his call to order by describing the Reichstag as the fig-leaf of naked absolutism. You will have seen that he has inserted a paragraph for the protection of factory children in the combination law.†512
Page me42.456

The Party of Progress†99 has rejected the Commission of Inquiry as not being within the competence of the Reichstag.†504 The Confederation is, however, competent to deal with all matters of trade and industry, only the Reichstag cannot appoint a commission, although it can indeed request the Federal authority to do so.
Page me42.456

In the interest debate Bismarck has rejected the idea of granting the mortgage banks state assistance, saying that if it is a question of state support, this could only be approved for the workers' associations at most. So, the scoundrel still thinks he can dupe the workers.

Page Break me42.457
Page me42.457

Victor Emmanuel appears to be playing a most risky game. For all that, the Roman fracas is not yet over.†513 The air is becoming more electric every day, and I should not be at all surprised if the storm were to break right next spring.
Page me42.457

Best regards to your wife, the girls and Doctor Eisenbart.†a

Your

F.E.

Page me42.457

I'm glad the Borkheim business is straight now. Under no circumstances can I give Gottfried Ermen a pretext just now to terminate his contract with me on the grounds of direct breach of contract. I hope the money drives away your carbuncles; don't forget to take plenty of exercise in the open air.

Page me42.457

I shall be glad to do the thing for The Fortnightly Review.†509 But you must let me know about how much space I am allowed for it. I presume you will prefer me to summarise, so as briefly to give the main points of the book†b — origin of capital — surplus-value — working day — revision of Ricardo's laws, etc., etc., after all I really cannot criticise the thing. I should also like to know approximately when the thing must be complete. It is too late for the 1 November number, so for the 1 December number it will have to be.

Page me42.457

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

276

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me42.457

Manchester, 1 November 1867

Dear Moor,

What is the matter? Why have I not heard from you at all? Ever since your last letter I have been in constant fear that you have the carbuncles again. Have you heard any more from across the water? From Kugelmann or Meissner concerning articles on your book†a? I am getting no news of any kind and, in the circumstances, there is damn little I can do.

Page Break me42.458

Page me42.458

Just how far Dizzy†b has contrived not merely to DISH the Whigs but to disorganise the Tories, too, was demonstrated to me the day before yesterday in a conversation with two of that ilk. They were agreed:

Page me42.458

1. that the Irish Church and thus the Established Church in England, too, should fall forthwith,

Page me42.458
2. that the LAWS OF PRIMOGENITURE AND ENTAIL†514 are no longer tenable,
Page me42.458
3. that when the Queen†c dies, a revolution will probably soon follow here.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.458
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

277
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.458
[London,] 2 November 1867

DEAR FRED,
Although none of my recent CARBUNCLES has fully developed, fresh ones are forever appearing; they always disappear again, BUT FRET ME. And then my old insomnia. But it has been better for ABOUT the last 3 DAYS. The silence about my book†a makes me FIDGETY. I have had no news of any kind. What good fellows the Germans are! Their achievements in the service of the English, French and even the Italians in this field would indeed entitle them to ignore me and my affairs. Our people over there do not have the knack of agitation. Meanwhile, we must do as the Russians do — wait. Patience is the core of Russian diplomacy and of their successes. But the likes of us, who only live once, may well never live to see the day.

Page Break me42.459
Page me42.459
Letter enclosed from the German communist association.†515 Well meant. But strangely loutish in style.
Page me42.459
Enclosed letter from Maughan, man of private means, old Owenite, very decent fellow. These people are obviously intending to emancipate the FREETHINK movement from the PROFESSIONAL AGITATORS Bradlaugh, etc. I very politely declined.†516 On the one hand, it is true that I would thereby have had the chance, which I am wanting so much, of becoming acquainted with all manner of people who are to a greater or lesser extent, directly or indirectly, connected with the English press. On the other hand, I have not the time, nor do I think it right that I should figure on the LEADING COMMITTEE of any English sect.

Page me42.459

A certain Auberon Herbert,†a brother of the EARL OF CARNARVON and COUSIN to Stepney (who is member of our CENTRAL COUNCIL) and much dabbling in socialism (I.E., CO-OPERATIVE DODGES, etc.), has asked Stepney to arrange a rendezvous with me. As I first want to have sight of the man and smell him over, I have made an appointment to see him next Tuesday at the Cleveland Hall, where we hold our meetings. This 'channel' (Vogt)†517 may perhaps prove useful for reaching publishers.
Page me42.459

Apropos. SUBSCRIPTIONS for the INTERNATIONAL: now have to be renewed. As soon as Moore is back send your SUBSCRIPTIONS to me per POST OFFICE ORDER (Charing Cross), but drawn on our TREASURER: Robert Shaw, 62 Hall Place, Hall Park, London W. It would be desirable for Schorlemmer to send his at the same time as you, even if only A FEW SHILLINGS. Is he back yet? When shall I be getting his Chemistry†b?
Page me42.459

I don't know whether you are familiar with the course of the Italian affair,†513 fragments of which have accidentellement†c found their way into the English and German press in the form of extracts from Russian and other papers. It is easy to lose track of such threads.
Page me42.459

At the time of the Luxemburg affair†415 Mr Bonaparte came to an agreement (informal) with Victor Emmanuel, by which the latter was given the right to annex the remaining Papal States except Rome, in exchange for offensive alliance against Prussia in the event of war.†518 But when the Prussian hornets' nest†376 turned into good will to all men, Mr Bonaparte began to regret the thing and with his usual cunning attempted to betray Emmanuel and make advances to Austria. As we all know, nothing came of it in Salzburg either,†519 and so for a while the witches' cauldron that is Europe appeared not to seethe. Meanwhile the Russian gentlemen, who had as usual procured a copy of the agreement, thought the moment had come to inform Mr Bismarck of it, who, in his turn, had the Prussian envoy†a lay it before the Pope.†b Whereupon, at the Pope's instigation, the pamphlet written by Bishop Dupanloup of Orleans.†520 On the other side, Garibaldi set on by Emmanuel. Subsequently: Rattazzi dismissed as an enemy of Prussia and Bonapartist. Hence the present imbroglio.†c That scoundrel Bonaparte is now up to his eyes in the mire. War, not just with Italy, but Prussia and Russia, and in a cause which in France enjoys the most fanatical hatred of Paris, etc., hated in England, etc. — or yet another retreat! The fellow attempted to save himself by appealing to Europe, a European Congress. But Prussia and England have already sent him their reply, that, having made his bed, he must now lie on it. The fellow does not know what year it is. He is no longer secret general to Russia and Europe.

Page Break me42.460
Page me42.460

If retreat, then with present corn-prices, business in crisis and disaffection in France revolution is possible ONE FINE MORNING.
Page me42.460
One good thing about our Bismarck — although he is the chief instrument of Russian intrigues — is that he is pushing things towards crisis in France. However, in respect of our German philistines, their entire past has shown that unity can only be imposed on them by the grace of God and the sabre.
Page me42.460
The Fenian trial in Manchester exactly as was to be expected.†497 You will have seen what a scandal 'our people' have caused in the REFORM LEAGUE. I sought by every means at my disposal to incite the English workers to demonstrate in favour of FENIANISM.†521
Page me42.460
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.460
I once believed the separation of Ireland from England to be impossible. I now regard it as inevitable, although FEDERATION may follow upon separation. The way the English are proceeding is shown by the AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS for this year, which appeared a few days ago. Over and above that the manner of the EVICTION. The Irish VICEROY, Lord Abicorn†a (the name is something like that), has 'CLEARED' his ESTATE in the last few weeks by forcibly driving thousands from their homes. Among them, well-to-do tenant-farmers, their IMPROVEMENTS and capital investments being thus confiscated! In no other European country has foreign rule assumed this form of direct expropriation of the natives. The Russians confiscate only for political reasons; the Prussians in West Prussia buy out.

Page Break me42.461

Page me42.461
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

278
ENGELS TO MARX†522
IN LONDON
Page me42.461
Manchester, 5 November 1867

Dear Moor,

Enclosed placed in the Elberfelder Zeitung by Siebel.†b It is such a pity that the poor devil, who will probably be arriving here tomorrow, will have to leave straight away, he would probably have arranged a few more things. However, I will see what else he can do, perhaps something will be possible nonetheless.

Page me42.461

Notre ami†c Kugelmann appears to have miscalculated in respect of the Hanoverian newspapers, too — at least, to my utter astonishment I discovered one of the articles†d sent him, and the tamest of them at that, shortened and mutilated to boot, in the Zukunft!†e We hardly needed amicum†f for that, and at all events I would have written differently for that paper. But I was writing for the national-liberal papers he had boasted about.

Page Break me42.462

Page me42.462

We must adopt a different approach. Have you Liebknecht's present address, or alternatively his old one in Leipzig? If you let me have it, I will spur him on a bit. I now realise that I shall have to write all the articles myself (Eccarius could probably also do one); the people on the Continent are finding the book is still lying too heavily on the stomach, and, if we are to wait until they have digested it, the opportunity will have been missed. I shall write to Kugelmann again, too,†a asking him at least what he has done with the other article and whether he can place any more.†523 You must write to Meissner and ask whether he can place any if they are sent to him, and where. In addition, I shall write to Klein in Cologne about the Rheinische Zeitung, and offer an article if need be. It is a dreadful handicap not being on the spot oneself. If we were in Germany, we should already have created a stir in all the papers, and have managed to get the book denounced, which is always the best thing.

Page me42.462

Louis†b in Paris does not know which way to turn. What a mess he has got himself into! Either another retreat or war on behalf of the Pope.†c I can hardly believe that he has really served the Italians an ultimatum to evacuate Roman territory, no more than I can believe that he can let things rest with Moustier's churlish note.†524 In either case, he is foutu.†d The present mood in Paris was shown at the cimetiére Montmartre.†525 Things may begin to happen any day now, and I hardly believe that the great man will celebrate another 2 December,†e or at least it will probably be for the last time. He is in such a bad way that even the philistines here only treat him as a common adventurer now.

Page me42.462

If the storm does break, however, the revolution will everywhere be faced with a quite different situation from 1848. After last year, the disorganisation of that time will be out of the question in Germany, and even if an immediate violent uprising in Berlin has little chance, the impact of events would provoke clashes there, too, which would inevitably end in the downfall of the present regime. Monsieur Bismarck would very soon lose command of the situation. And then this time England would be dragged in straightaway and ABOVE ALL the social question would at once become the burning issue throughout Europe.

Page me42.462
Yesterday Blackburn showed the depths to which the English judges have sunk when he asked the witness Beck (who had first sworn to William Martin, but said afterwards that it was John M.):

Page Break me42.463
THEN YOU SWORE TO WILLIAM, AND YOU MEANT TO SWEAR TO JOHN? The whole prosecution will, I believe, crumble increasingly with each new BATCH of accused, the amount of perjury to get the £200 reward is quite incredible.†497
Page me42.463
Can you tell me where I can find more details about Lord Abercorn's EVICTIONS?†a
Page me42.463
Louis in Paris would once more have to mind bombs and bullets. The Italians are not to be trifled with.
Page me42.463
I shall return the Courriers†b to you tomorrow if I can.
Page me42.463
Kindest regards to your wife, the girls and the lovelorn cobbler.†c

Your
F.E.

Page me42.463
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

279
MARX TO ENGELS†522
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.463
[London,] 7 November 1867

DEAR FRED,
My remerciments†d for the Elberfelder.†e
Page me42.463
Liebknecht's old address: '11, Braustrasse, Leipzig.' By the way, perhaps safer to forward it through Kugelmann, who is in contact with a friend of Liebknecht's in Leipzig.
Page me42.463

I forgot to tell you in my letter of Saturday†f 1 sheet maximum for the Fortnightly.†g†509 If longer than half a sheet, it should be set out as FIRST NOTICE, SECOND NOTICE.
Page me42.463

As regards Meissner, it appears to me to be undiplomatic to let him see into our cards too much. What he can do from his own resources, he does anyway. It would be important — and for the present more important than the English article — to send a more detailed report (perhaps broken down into several articles) to the Austrian Internationale Revue (Arnold Hilberg's publishing house, 4, Kolowrat-Ring, Vienna). As Arnold Hilberg lists you and me as his contributors (and through me has asked us both for contributions), there are no obstacles here. It is in fact the sole German 'Review' which is open to us.

Page Break me42.464
Page me42.464

The only weekly paper here in London which has a certain impartiality and is much concerned with things German, such as German philology, natural science, Hegel, etc., is a — Catholic paper, The Chronicle. It is obviously their tendency to show that they are more learned than their Protestant rivals. I sent them ONE COPY†a at the end of last week with A SHORT LETTER TO THE PURPOSE, saying that my book does not share their opinions, but that the 'scholarly' nature of their paper suggests THAT SOME NOTICE WILL BE TAKEN OF THIS FIRST ATTEMPT AT APPLYING THE DIALECTIC METHOD TO POLITICAL ECONOMY'.†111 Nous verrons!†b There is a great desire prevailing at present in the more refined circles (I am referring, of course, to the INTELLECTUAL portion of the latter) to become acquainted with the dialectical method. And perhaps that is after all the easiest way to get at the English.
Page me42.464

The most interesting thing in the enclosed Diplomatic Review is the excerpts from the new book by Prokesch.†c
Page me42.464

Detailed description of Abercorn's EVICTIONS appeared ABOUT a fortnight ago in the (Dublin) Irishman.†d I may manage to get again the copy which was only lent me for 24 hours.
Page me42.464

At the MEETING†e presided over by Colonel Dickson and at which Bradlaugh delivered a lecture on Ireland, our OLD Weston, SECONDED BY Fox and Cremer, put forward a RESOLUTION in support of the FENIANS, which was passed unanimously. Last Tuesday ditto, during Acland's lecture on the REFORM BILL, Cleveland Hall (right above us, we were meeting downstairs in the COFFEE ROOM, which is in the basement), tempestuous demonstration in favour of the FENIANS. The business is boiling up in the intelligent section of the WORKING CLASS here.
Page me42.464

How very characteristic of the diplomatic farce being enacted in Europe at present, that at the same time as Bonaparte is intervening in Italy, France, Italy and Prussia are jointly, and most

Page Break me42.465
obediently at Russia's behest, delivering a threatening note to the Porte.†526
Page me42.465
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.465
Old Urquhart with his Catholicism, etc., GROWS MORE AND MORE DISGUSTING.
Page me42.465
On lit dans un registre d'une inquisition d'Italie cet aveu d'une religieuse; elle disait innocement á la Madonne: 'Degrâce, sainte Vierge, donne moi quelqu'un avec qui je puisse pécher.'†a However, the Russians are plus forts†b in this, too. A case is reported of a fellow in the best of health who emerged dead after only 24 hours in a Russian nunnery. The nuns had ridden him to death. Of course, in their case le directeur des consciences n'entre pas tous les jours†c!

Page me42.465
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

280
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.465
Manchester, 8 November 1867

Dear Moor,
In great haste:
Siebel will be here tomorrow or in Liverpool, where I shall see him. He can place another 3 articles,†d which I have prepared at once and which we shall then despatch with all speed. If I had known that it would be so long before he came, he should have received them in Barmen long ago.

Page Break me42.466
Page me42.466

The idea about the Internationale Revue had already occurred to me, too, and shall be attended to. Likewise with The Fortnightly Review, as soon as acceptance is assured.†509 For the moment, however, I believe it is most important to create a rumpus in the German daily press, pour forcer la main á ces gueux d'économistes.†a

Page me42.466

The DOWNBREAK of the police in the trial here has been more rapid and more complete than I had expected. But there is probably even better to come. OLD Blackburn also appears to be changing his tune, today he complimented Ernest Jones most fulsomely on his speech.†497

Page me42.466

Have you read Bismarck's instructions to Usedom (in the Augsburger Abendzeitung,†b denied, of course†518)? The fellow is making no bones about exposing the Italians' intrigues with Bonaparte; one has to grant him that he is capable of the most undiplomatic manners if it suits him. (Kölnische Zeitung of Wednesday has reprinted it.) This stance of Bismarck's also explains the Italians' retreat and their present grovelling.

Page me42.466

Concerning the true nature of the inspections, checks and interferences of the Prussian bureaucracy: my brother writes that the manufacturers want to set up an association on the Rhine and in the Ruhr, like the ones here, to have their boilers periodically examined by competent engineers, and he goes on to say of the government control:

'Here at our place, a District Architect inspects 7 boilers in half an hour (!!) and goes home quite satisfied, in another factory a similar official took 2 hours for 35 boilers!! If anyone is so foolish as to imagine he can sleep soundly after such an inspection, he is, of course, deceived. It would be a real blessing if this nonsense were done away with and replaced by some sensible practical arrangement. At one inspection, I first explained the boiler with all its fittings to the District Architect, then I carried out his instructions as well and finally wrote the report for the government for him.'

Page me42.466

There are the Prussians for you! Portrayed by themselves.

Page me42.466

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.467

281

ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†522
IN HANOVER

Page me42.467
Manchester, 8 and 20 November 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

Since my last letter†a neither Marx nor I have heard anything from you, and I can scarce believe that you are so deeply ensconced in some anteflexio uteri as to be entirely incommunicado. I have, moreover, a letter to send to Liebknecht, and Marx advises me to forward it to you, as we do not have the exact address and do not know whether he is in Berlin or Leipzig; I am therefore enclosing it.†131

Page me42.467

The German press is still observing complete silence in respect of Capital, and it really is of the greatest importance that something should be said. I have discovered that one of the articles†b I sent you is in the Zukunft; I am sorry I did not know that it might eventually be destined for that paper; one could probably have taken greater liberties there. However, it does not matter. The main thing is that the book should be discussed over and over again, in any way whatsoever. And as Marx is not a free agent in the matter, and is furthermore as bashful as a young girl, it is up to the rest of us to see to it. Please be so kind therefore and let me know what success you have so far had in the matter, and which papers you think you may still be able to use. In the words of our old friend Jesus Christ, we must be innocent as doves and wise as serpents.†c The good old vulgar economists at least have enough intelligence to treat the book with respect and to take good care not to talk of it if they are not obliged to. And that is what we must compel them to do. If the book is being discussed in 15-20 newspapers at once — never mind whether favourably or not, whether in articles, regular features or unsolicited pieces in the correspondence section — even if merely as a phenomenon of some significance that merits attention, then the whole crowd of them will start yapping away, too, of their own accord, and the Fauchers, Michaelis, Roschers, and Max Wirths will then have to do the same. We have a moral obligation to damned well get these articles into the papers, and as near simultaneously as possible, especially the European ones, and that includes the reactionary ones. In the latter, we might point out that the vulgarian gentlemen make a deal of noise in parliaments and economic gatherings, but now, when they are confronted with the consequences of their own science, they prefer to keep their mouths shut. And so forth. If you think my assistance would be desirable, let me know which paper you wish to have something for — in the service of the party I am always on call. The letter to Liebknecht concerns the same business, and you will therefore oblige me exceedingly by ensuring it reaches its destination.

Page Break me42.468

Page me42.468

The Roman affair†513 has again been an absolute boon to us. The noble Bonaparte appears to me to be gargling his last gasp, and when this episode comes to an end in France, with the position in England becoming more revolutionary every day, and with revolution in Italy inescapable —, then this must surely also spell the end of the reign of the 'Europeans'†a in Germany. Rapid progress is being made here in England with the formation of a really revolutionary party, and revolutionary conditions are developing hand in hand with it. With his REFORMBILL,†425 Disraeli has thrown the Tories into confusion and routed the Whigs, although all he has done is to render it impossible to continue dilly-dallying as before. This REFORMBILL will either prove to be nothing at all (and this is now impossible, there is too much momentum behind it), or it will infallibly and immediately bring in its train BILLS of an altogether different character, which will go much farther. The next steps, which will have to be taken forthwith, are the allotting of representatives in proportion to population and the secret ballot, and that will be the end of the old scheme of things here. The capital thing about Disraeli is that his hatred for the COUNTRY GENTLEMEN in his own party and his hatred of the Whigs have set things going on a course which can no longer be halted. You will be astonished, and the German philistines who think England is finished will be even more astonished, at what will happen here once the REFORMBILL is in force. The Irish are also doing their bit to keep things properly on the boil, and every day the London proletarians are more openly declaring their support for the Fenians,†257 in other words, and this is without precedent here and really splendid, for a movement that firstly advocates the use of force and secondly is anti-English.

Page me42.468

Have you heeded my medical advice and taken to horseback?

Page Break me42.469
Since my return†449 I have again found the beneficial effects of riding amply demonstrated, and you will see how quickly all your complaints and reservations about drink disappear thanks to an hour's riding daily. As a gynaecologist, you owe it to science, for after all gynaecology is intimately connected with riding or being ridden, and a gynaecologist must therefore be in every sense the master of his mount.
Page me42.469

Schorlemmer kept an eye open for you at the congress of naturalists in Frankfurt but maintains you were not there.
Page me42.469

So, dear friend, let us hear from you soon. The photograph of Lupus has been ordered and will be ready as soon as the fine weather comes, unfortunately we do not have much daylight here in winter. Please convey my best compliments to your wife,†a despite our being unacquainted, and best regards from

Yours
F.E.

Page me42.469
Address: Ermen & Engels, Manchester FOR F.E.

20 November. Since I wrote the above, Marx has communicated to me your letter to him,†b and I am sorry to see from it that we can hardly count on further press-notices in your locality. Might it not be possible, perhaps through third persons, to get attacks on the book, either from a bourgeois or a reactionary point of view, into some of the papers? This seems to me to be one means of publicity, and there would be no difficulty in producing the articles. And then: what about scientific journals, or purely literary or semi-literary ones?

Page me42.469
Respecting the Rheinische Zeitung, I am writing to Cologne in case there has still been no progress.†523
Page me42.469
Büchner ought to be able to get things into the papers as well; you can refer him to me for the articles if necessary. Give him no peace.
Page me42.469
I have still not received the photographs, but they are sure to come one of these days.
Page me42.469
Once more, in all friendship

Yours
F.E.

Page me42.469
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.470

282
MARX TO ENGELS†527
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.470
[London,] 9 November 1867

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed from Kugelmann. Salut.

Your
Moor

Page me42.470
[Postscript from Laura Marx in English]

Dear Engels,
As Mohr's Secretary I am really rather ashamed to send off a letter of this kind.

Yours sincerely

Kakadou†a

Page me42.470
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

283
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.470
Manchester, 10 November 1867

Dear Moor,

What touching gaucheness in dear old Kugelmann's letter! And what discernment of character in respect of that Warnebold! The fellow extracts all his secrets from him, and all the while he is a Prussian spy! You must tell Kugelmann the truth about that cur — at least sufficiently to stop the Prussians learning every detail of our activities.†528 The cur is abusing your confidences, which absolves you from any obligation toward him.

Page Break me42.471
Page me42.471

I saw Siebel yesterday in Liverpool. I fear the poor devil's days are numbered. Since I last saw him, his desease has advanced considerably, his health broke down in Barmen, he has had 3 successive attacks of pleurisy and is coughing very violently (he calls them coughing-spasms, and they recur periodically), however he has lately regained some of his health and strength at Honnef on the Rhine. Unfortunately, I could only speak to him alone for a short while, there were always several relatives there apart from his wife. Despite that, we settled the most important things.
Page me42.471

D'abord†a: Siebel has up to the present moment neither received a copy†b nor even seen one, although he wrote to Meissner asking to be sent one by post immediately on publication. Mr Rittershaus, however, who has not lifted a finger, has received one, and Siebel thought you had not sent him one at all, but had done so to Rittershaus, which may have piqued him. I naturally explained the true position to him, but a few lines from you to him, which you can enclose in a letter to me, really are called for. But you must now take Meissner to task forthwith for this negligence. This affair has cost us 20 short notices which Siebel would immediately have had in all the papers, but could not because he did not have the book. Furthermore, I must have a copy here by 22 November at the latest to send to Siebel in Madeira, where he will make up for lost time as far as he can. But really what can one say to such a slapdash approach? And these are the Germans who are demanding self-government and CANNOT LOOK AFTER THEIR OWN BUSINESS!

Page me42.471

Of the 3 articles I took with me, we sent off 2 to the Frankfurter Börsenzeitung†c and to the Düsseldorfer Zeitung†529 forthwith — the latter will do Mr Heinrich Bürgers good, with his circumspect scruples: my article†d — a very simple report, which makes no judgments and was composed for a national-liberal newspaper — is too dubious for that brute!†523 Siebel took the 3rd with him, it will probably go to the Barmer Zeitung.†530 Notices will also appear in all kinds of illustrated and other papers, as soon as Siebel himself has the book. Furthermore, the Weser-Zeitung will receive an article a tempo†e from him for its literary section, and one on the book, and will be faced only with the choice of taking both or neither. (Siebel is using the literary section articles as a bait for editors, they are desperate for them, and he often lets them pocket the fee themselves.) Other ideas will occur to him as soon as he has the book.

Page Break me42.472
Page me42.472

Ad vocem†a Freiligrath: that worthy's debts amounted to approx. £6,000, £4,000 with the Swiss Bank advanced for shares in the Mansfield Co. which are now worthless, and the rest debts of honour. The Comité†422 has settled these debts at 5% dividend, a few of them at 10%. Freiligrath has thus gone bankrupt in optima forma.†b The collection will amount to approx. 30,000 talers. Freiligrath is said to have lied to the Comité through and through, concealed his debts and pretended his wife knew nothing of it and must not be allowed to know anything of it either, so that eventually they were very rude to him; even on the day when he knew that a letter was to arrive from London to say that the debts of honour totalled £2,000, he was still saying they were only £1,500, etc. In short, his conduct has been disgraceful and cowardly. I said I was quite convinced that dear old Ida†c knew all about it, to which he replied: how was it then possible for her to give fêtes†d last summer in Barmen? Just imagine, Ida goes a-begging and at the same time holds fêtes for the people she is begging from with the money that has not yet been given!
Page me42.472

I am surprised Tussy†e has not yet sent me a receipt for my contribution to the Freiligrath funeral-fund. THAT IS NOT BUSINESSLIKE.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.472
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels and K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

284
MARX TO CARL SIEBEL†531
IN MADEIRA
Page me42.472
London, 10 November 1867

Dear Siebel,

For the time being I am sending you this personal copy of mine.†f At the same time I wrote to Meissner, the deuce take him! I had actually instructed him to send you the first copy to appear in Germany. I hope that Madeira will do you good.

Page Break me42.473

Karl Marx

Page me42.473
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Translated from the Russian

Printed according to the text of Volume XXV of the First Russian Edition

Published in English for the first time

285
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.473
[London,] 14 November 1867

DEAR FRED,

A letter from Russia enclosed and one from Solingen.†532 I believe the Russo-German†a must be the same man that Meyer†b told us about.
Page me42.473

Kugelmann has sent me a copy of the Deutsche Volkszeitung (Hanover) containing a short notice of my book†c written by himself. In it, Kugelmann has imitated one of your articles,†d and by no means happily. As this paper is democratic, he could have gone into the content more. Among other things, he has me arrive 'at the' admittedly 'astonishing conclusion that all capital is derived from unpaid labour power'. Among the 'German authorities on political economy' whose 'verdict' he seeks, Mr 'Faucher' (fortunately printed as 'Taucher') appears at the head of the list and Roscher at the end.
Page me42.473

Your 'revelations' in respect of Freiligrath have created a great sensation here at home.
Page me42.473
At this moment, Bonaparte has need of a riot or a secret society in Paris if he is to extricate himself from his predicament. For the time being, he is treating the Ligue de la Paix†e†461 as such. However, that jackass Pyat is JUST NOW preparing the necessary corpus delicti for him from here.

Page Break me42.474
Page me42.474
I am being plagued by a carbunculum on the right side of my back.
Page me42.474
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.474
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

286
ENGELS TO MARX†522
IN LONDON
Page me42.474
Manchester, 24 November 1867

Dear Moor,
The letters returned enclosed.
Page me42.474
So, yesterday morning, and by Mr Colcraft's hand, the Tories have really performed the ultimate act of separation between England and Ireland. The only thing the Fenians still lacked were martyrs. Derby and G. Hardy have now provided them with these. It was the execution of those 3†a which will transform the liberation of Kelly and Deasy into an act of heroism, such as will now be sung at the cradle of every Irish child in Ireland, England and America. The Irish women will see to that as surely as did the Polish womenfolk.
Page me42.474
The only time that anyone has, to my knowledge, been executed for anything similar in a civilised state was the case of John Brown at Harpers ferry.†533 The Fenians could not wish for a better precedent. And yet even the SOUTHERNERS had the decency to treat J. Brown as a rebel, whereas here no effort is spared to convert an act of political violence into a common crime.

Page me42.474
Everybody knows that while he was leading his band of ruffians at Boulogne, Louis Napoleon shot the duty-officer dead.†534 He thus did what Allen is supposed to have done but did not do. For which the English government hangs Allen, while the English queen†a kisses Louis Napoleon's cheek and the English aristocracy and bourgeoisie his backside.

Page Break me42.475
Page me42.475
The latter point should be made in the press.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.475
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

287
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.475
Manchester, 26 November 1867

Dear Moor,
I have not received the promised letter in quo tua res agebatur.†b
Page me42.475
Meissner's proposal to send out new notices with excerpts from the reviews was what I had in mind to suggest to you as soon as Siebel's articles (i.e. the ones I gave him†c) appear. The excerpt from the Zukunft is quite good,†535 but a few more would be even better; he should send you the whole caboodle, and you can then prepare a notice from it. Or if you do not wish to, then he can send it to me and I will do it. I was most struck by the fact that the first notice took up precisely the same space as the one for my little pamphlet,†d and it had not a word of commentary with it.†536
Page me42.475
If the matter does not turn out differently soon, then I shall have to write — with your consent OF COURSE — to Meissner and offer him articles written by myself for newspapers to be specified by him. I am sure that could not compromise you.
Page me42.475

I have just managed to convey Meissner's excuses to Siebel†131 before the post office closed. They are admittedly persuasive,

Page Break me42.476
Siebel was at the time AT A VERY LOW EBB and only recovered in Honnef.
Page me42.476

You will have received my letter of Sunday with the returned letters.†a The tanner†b returned enclosed, autodidactum integrum,†c which does not, however, mean that other nations are incapable of bringing forth such a tanner. Philosophy, which in Jakob Böhme's day was just a shoemaker, is making progress when it assumes the shape of a tanner.
Page me42.476

How is the carbuncle? I do not like its location, I hope Lafargue has lanced it for you. A stop really must be put to this business.
Page me42.476

Has Borkheim paid you the money? He has not written a word to me, although I am guarantor.†d

Your
F.E.

Page me42.476
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

288
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.476
[London,] 27 November 1867

Dear Engels,

With regard to my private business (I intended writing to you on Saturday†e but was prevented on that and on the following days by people consulting me from every side about the FENIAN AFFAIRS,†497 etc., in short, they were confiscating my time), Mr Borkheim — despite the best of intentions, I am sure — has throughout this month kept me suspended between frying pan and fire. You will see from his latest letter, of yesterday, that we are again faced with a new, indefinite delay. The worst part of it all is that he had positively promised me he would pay out the whole sum on the 10th of this month (at the latest), and I had made my dispositions with the creditors accordingly. The amount he has actually paid since he returned is £5. So, you will realise what TROUBLE I find myself in. The state of my health has greatly worsened, and there has been virtually no question of working. I am furthermore expecting summonses any day, and we no longer know which way to turn from one day to the next.

Page Break me42.477

Page me42.477

With regard to Meissner, my view is that we should let him have a free hand with his notice, as everything else would mean further delay. Thimm told Borkheim that Meissner had requested all the booksellers to send any still unsold copies†a back to him (or to his agent in Leipzig). I have also heard from York, the Workers' Society†b bookseller, that it is at the moment very difficult to obtain copies from Meissner. To me this indicates no more than 1. that the STOCK in Meissner's hands is very small, 2. that he wants to know how much of the STOCK not in his hands is really sold, 3. he wants to force his business 'friends' to hold as much as possible at their own expense. I shall write to Meissner that should he need notices or reviews for certain newspapers or journals (and he must tell me which), he can obtain them from friends such as yourself, etc. Must keep me informed.
Page me42.477

Dr Contzen, private lecturer in political economy at Leipzig, PARTISAN and pupil of Roscher and friend of Liebknecht, has asked me through the latter for a copy with the promise of a detailed review. You will see that this has already been attended to through Meissner. Contzen is a good opening.
Page me42.477

Liebknecht has sent me 50 of his PAMPHLETS†c (of which I am sending you one today) for sale here, 3d. each. Lessner is seeing what can be done in the Workers' Society.
Page me42.477

The extract from Liebknecht's SPEECH at the Berlin Workers' Society†476 on the deferment of the 'social question' which he has published as an appendix admittedly gives some grounds for Kugelmann's censure.†537 As Liebknecht is asking you, among other things, to contribute to the little paper he is planning,†538 you can give him a few hints privatim about how to combine political opposition with social agitation.
Page me42.477

Letters from Liebknecht and Kugelmann enclosed.
Page me42.477

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page Break me42.478
Page me42.478

What is the position regarding Mr Schorlemmer's Chemistry†a which I was to receive?

Page me42.478

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

289
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.478
London, 28 November 1867

DEAR FRED,

I see that I did not enclose the 2 letters from Borkheim for you. But it is not really necessary. Yesterday we had the 'discussion' he desired. He has reverted to the idea (which I suggested to him 2 months ago) of a loan from the 'Atlas' Life Assurance Company, whose secretary is a friend of his. I completed the papers yesterday at his house. You only figure as a REFERENCE on them. £150 (of which Borkheim would receive £45), repayable on 1 September.
Page me42.478

I no longer have any faith in the success of Borkheim's operations. I have no doubt about his good will.
Page me42.478

Have you received his 'Pearl'? (French and German so far†b).
Page me42.478

Important letter from Schily enclosed. Please send it back by return; give your opinion at the same time. Whatever happens I shall not permit Moses†c to derive 'profit' from my work†d without profiting to some extent from it myself.†539
Page me42.478

I am having to be diplomatic about Fenianism. I cannot keep entirely silent, but under no circumstances do I want the fellows, when criticising my book, to confine themselves to the statement that I am a demagogue.
Page me42.478

I am sending you Borkheim's Gentz (important for the article on

Page Break me42.479
Russia)†a without his knowledge. Please return it to me as soon as you have finished.
Page me42.479

I now have a rash of furuncles more or less all over, and am glad of it. It puts paid to the carbuncle malady.
Page me42.479

Salut.
Your Moro

Page me42.479
My compliments to Mrs Burns. Jenny goes in black since the Manchester execution,†497 and wears her Polish cross on a green ribbon.†430

Page me42.479
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

290
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.479
Manchester, 28 November 1867

Dear Moor,
Enclosed for your immediate relief £30 in 3 notes á 10, O/U 56068 to 70, Manchester, 9 January 1867. The letter from Borkheim was not enclosed. I have also received a letter from Kugelmann†b which I enclose and wish to have returned, I have to answer him.
Page me42.479
Liebknecht would have done better to leave his pamphlet unprinted.†c His speeches appear better in the Kölnische Zeitung than in this form, and the stuff at the end indeed shows just how pig-headedly he is stuck in his errors.†537 It is true I have already told him a thing or two by letter, but now that he is starting up another little paper, he must be told some more home truths†538;

Page Break me42.480
we could do Bismarck no greater favour than to let ourselves be lumped together with the Austrians and South German Federalists, Ultramontanes and dispossessed princes. I am awaiting a letter from him daily and will then write to him about that, too.
Page me42.480
How goes it with your health?

Your
F.E.

Page me42.480
More tomorrow.
Page me42.480

The Englishman in Kugelmann's letter is Moore, who has greatly improved his German and is now sweating away assiduously at Capital. Schorlemmer's book†a is still not out yet!!

Page me42.480
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

291
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me42.480
Manchester, 28 November 1867

Dear Hermann,

Forgive me for leaving your two letters unanswered for so long. Many things were to blame for this, but above all the fact that yarns were certain not to go up for the time being and — with no demand from you at the moment — there was thus no danger in delay.

Page me42.480

The SEWINGS we normally send out bleached and dyed in the finer nos., are doubled by us from the same COPS which we also send to you. (36/45 Taylor, finer No. Knowles.) But we can have these COPS doubled by a DOUBLER for you here, and the SEWINGS would at today's prices then cost

Page Break me42.481

No.:	36	40	50	60	70	80
19d.	19 1/2d.		2/1	2/7	2/11	3/3

Page me42.481

For DIAMOND 2d., however, we use a yarn that has been doubled on the DOUBLING FRAME but is more loosely spun; at today's prices that costs us

No.:	36	40	50	60	70	80
18d.	18 1/2d.		20d.	2/1	2/3	2/5

Page me42.481

I am enclosing a sample of the latter in No. 60, but you also had some of this last spring, bale No. 319, delivery note 9 April, so you can compare whether you need this cheaper product or whether you must have the more expensive yarns with real SEWING TWIST.

Page me42.481
We are all expecting a drop in prices here in view of the exceptionally good American harvest. MIDDLING was selling at 6 1/2 FREE ON BOARD in New Orleans. However, the spinning business is very much in the doldrums just now, and so when things first pick up again yarn might well remain stable, even if there is a fall in cotton. The fine nos. will hold their own best, the ORDINARY fine DOUBLES being already cheaper than in 1860 (16d. as against 18d. for 60/RFOLD). The prices I gave you overleaf are approximately the same as those at the end of 1859 and the beginning of 1860, the more expensive 60s being then at 2s. 5d., the 40s at 19d., and the cheaper 60s was anything a little more expensive then. I cannot make an exact comparison as we were not using the same threads in those days.
Page me42.481
Otherwise everything is pretty much as usual here. From time to time, a bit of a tussle, now with Anton, now with Gottfried,†a ensures that our old love never fades.
Page me42.481
I am wishing myself many happy returns of my birthday today from all of you, and send you all my very best wishes. I shall be answering mother's†b letter one day soon.†131

Your Friedrich

Page me42.481
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.482

292
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.482
[London,] 29 November 1867

DEAR FRED,
BEST THANKS FOR THE £30.
Page me42.482
Letter from Kugelmann returned enclosed. We must watch out that he doesn't commit any stupidities in his enthusiasm. Such as with Miquel, for example.†528
Page me42.482

As regards the paper of the United States of Europe†a — and the contributions I have been asked for from Geneva — it is the purest nonsense. Mr K. Grün probably the editor. And the thing is in itself a FAILURE.
Page me42.482
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.482
Cold and disagreeable though it is, I am supposed to circumambulate the Heath,†b etc., for a few days.

Page me42.482
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

293
MARX TO ENGELS†540
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.482
[London,] 29 November 1867

You can see how deucedly forgetful I am. I have just sent the letter off without enclosing Kugelmann.

Page me42.482
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.483

294
ENGELS TO MARX†522
IN LONDON
Page me42.483
Manchester, 29 November 1867
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

Schily returned enclosed.†539 Oh, Lord, have mercy upon us, here comes olle Moses†a pissing up to us again! And he is congratulating himself that you certified he was right when he asserted that capital is accumulated labour!

Page me42.483

I would be just the tiniest bit reticent in respect of that worthy. He will then take the bait all the more surely, and you know how little we can trust him if we have not made quite sure of him. In my view, for the present you could permit him to publish a few extracts from it†b in the Courrier français, so that we may see how he proposes to handle the thing. He will naturally put his signature to these, and we shall thereby again have him to some degree qualified as a repentant sinner. Then you could talk about the translation of the whole book which he is envisaging; your right of revision always reserved; and discuss conditions as soon as a publisher has been found. What Schily says of Reclus seems important to me, as the man knows German.

Page me42.483

You are perfectly right about the Fenians.†c The vile deeds of the English must not allow us to forget that most of the leaders of this sect are jackasses and some of them exploiters, and that we can, under no circumstances, make ourselves responsible for the idiocies that are perpetrated in any conspiracy. That there will be some, is certain.

Page me42.483

I need hardly tell you that black and green†d are the prevailing colours in my house, too. The English press has again conducted itself abominably.†497 Larkin is said to have fainted, and the others†e to have looked pale and confused. The Catholic priests who were there declare that is a lie. Larkin, they say, stumbled over an irregularity in the ground and all three showed great courage.

Page Break me42.484

The Catholic Bishop of Salford complained bitterly that Allen refused to repent of his deed, saying he had nothing to repent, and if he were free, he would do the same thing again. The Catholic priests, incidentally, were very impudent, it was stated from the pulpit in every church on Sunday that THESE THREE MEN WERE MURDERED.

Page me42.484

You will have received my letter of yesterday with the £30.†a As regards the life assurance,†b I am willing to guarantee the sum concerned, provided that Borkheim retains the original in his own keeping and merely gives the secretary a copy, in the hope that this will facilitate matters.

Page me42.484

I agree that the furuncles appear to mark the crisis of the previous illness.

Page me42.484

Best regards to your wife, the girls and Lafargue.

Page me42.484

Now that Liebknecht has got a little paper,†538 for which we shall be held responsible, it is very important that he does nothing stupid in respect of his German policy. I am most impatient for a letter from him.

Page me42.484

Apropos. From 1 January the Internationale Revue will appear as joint successor to a journal produced by Prutz†c which is to merge with it. Could put paid to our plans.†d How do you think we should broach the matter with Hilberg? We shall have to be cunning about it.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.484
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

295
MARX TO ENGELS†541
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.484
London, 30 November 1867

DEAR FRED,
Regarding Moses,†e I shall follow your prescription exactly. At all events, we must make use of the man and, at the same time, prevent him from misusing us. Regarding Hilberg, it would indeed be a good thing if we could keep a hold on this Revue,†a being the only one still open to us, but how? is not yet clear to me. This morning I received a COPY of Schorlemmer†b AND SEND HIM MY THANKS FOR IT.

Page Break me42.485
Page me42.485
If you have read the papers, you will have seen that 1. the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL sent MEMORIAL for the FENIANS†542 to Hardy, 2. the debate on FENIANISM (a week ago last Tuesday†c) was public and The Times carried a REPORT on it.†d There were also REPORTERS there from the Dublin Irishman and Nation. I did not arrive until very late (I have been suffering from a fever for about 2 weeks, and have only got over it in the last 2 days) and had not in fact intended to speak, first on account of my uncomfortable physical condition, and second because of the delicacy of the situation. However, the CHAIRMAN Weston wanted to force me to, so I moved ADJOURNMENT, which obliged me to speak last Tuesday.†e What I had in fact prepared for TUESDAY LAST was not a SPEECH but rather the POINTS for A SPEECH.†f However, the IRISH REPORTERS did not come, and by the time we had finished waiting for them it was 9 o'clock, whereas the premises were only available to us until 10 1/2. At my suggestion, Fox had prepared a long SPEECH (because of a QUARREL on the COUNCIL he had made no appearance for 2 weeks, and furthermore sent in his RESIGNATION as MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL containing furious outbursts against Jung†543). When the séance†g opened I therefore declared that, on account of the BELATED HOUR, I would yield the floor to Fox. In fact — because the executions in Manchester had intervened — our subject 'FENIANISM' was bound up with the passions and heated emotions of the moment, which would have compelled me (though not the abstract Fox) to unleash a revolutionary thunderbolt, instead of the intended objective analysis of the situation and the movement. The Irish REPORTERS thus did me a great service by staying away and so delaying the opening of the meeting. I do not enjoy getting embroiled with people like Roberts, Stephens, and the like.

Page me42.485

Fox's SPEECH was good, first because it was delivered by an Englishman, and second insofar as it dealt only with political and international ASPECTS. However, for that very reason he only skated over the surface of things. The resolution he brought forward was silly and pointless.†544 I opposed it and had it referred back to the STANDING COMMITEE.†21

Page Break me42.486
Page me42.486

What the English do not yet realise, is that since 1846 the economic content and hence the political purpose of English rule in Ireland as well has entered an entirely new phase, and that for that very reason FENIANISM is characterised by socialist (in the negative sense, as directed against the APPROPRIATION of the SOIL) leanings and as a LOWER ORDERS MOVEMENT. What could be more absurd than to lump together the barbarities of Elizabeth or Cromwell, who wanted to drive out the Irish by means of English colonists (in the Roman sense), and the present system, which wants to drive out the Irish by means of sheep, pigs and oxen! The system of 1801-1846 (EVICTIONS in that period were exceptional, particularly in Leinster, where the soil is especially suited to cattle-raising) with its RACKRENTS and MIDDLEMEN, collapsed in 1846. The ANTI-CORN-LAW-REPEAL, in part a consequence of or, at all events, hastened by the IRISH FAMINE,†545 took from Ireland its monopoly of supplying England with corn in normal times. Wool and meat became the watchword, hence CONVERSION OF TILLAGE INTO PASTURE. So from then on, SYSTEMATIC CONSOLIDATION OF FARMS. The ENCUMBERED ESTATES ACT which made LANDLORDS of a mass of former MIDDLEMEN who had grown rich, hastened the process.†546 CLEARING OF THE ESTATES OF IRELAND! is now the sole meaning of English rule in Ireland. The stupid English government in London naturally knows even nothing of this IMMENSE CHANGE since 1846. But the Irish do. From Meagher's Proclamation (1848)†547 down to Hennessy's election address (Tory and Urquhartite) (1866) the Irish have been expressing their awareness of it in the clearest and MOST FORCIBLE MANNER.
Page me42.486

The question now is, what advice should we give the English workers? In my view, they must make REPEAL of the UNION (in short, the farce of 1783, only democratised and adapted to meet present circumstances) an article of their pronunziamento.†a†548 This is the only legal and hence the only possible form of Irish emancipation which can be adopted by an English party in its programme. Experience must later show, whether mere personal union between the 2 countries can continue to exist. I half believe it could if it comes about in due time.

Page me42.486
What the Irish need is:
1. Self-government and independence from England.
Page me42.486
2. Agrarian revolution. With the best will in the world the

Page Break me42.487
English cannot do this for them, but they can give them the legal means to do it for themselves.
Page me42.487
3. Protective tariffs against England. From 1783-1801 every branch of industry in Ireland flourished. By suppressing the protective tariffs which the Irish parliament had established, the Union destroyed all industrial life in Ireland. The little bit of linen industry is in no way a substitute. The Union of 1801 affected Irish industry exactly as did the measures for the suppression of the Irish wool industry, etc., on the part of the English parliament under Anne, George II, and others. As soon as the Irish became independent, necessity would turn them, like Canada, Australia, etc., into protectionists. Before I put forward my views at the CENTRAL COUNCIL (next Tuesday, this time fortunately without REPORTERS being present),†549 I would appreciate it if you would let me know your opinion in a few lines.
Page me42.487
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.487
Since Moses†a is a cousin of Hirsch,†b I am not surprised that he himself has a set of antlers. HE BEARS IT PROUDLY.†c

Page me42.487
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

296
MARX TO VICTOR SCHILY†419
IN PARIS
Page me42.487
London, 30 November 1867

Dear Schily,

I wrote to Meissner as soon as I received your letter and asked him to send you a COPY of the book†d for Reclus.†111 I believe Reclus to be just the man to undertake the French translation, with German co-operation. In a translation, I would indicate certain changes to be made in several parts and, at the same time, reserve the right to carry out the final revision myself.†539

Page Break me42.488
Page me42.488
What should be done, in the first instance, and as quickly as possible, is to bring out passages from the book in the Courrier français. I do not see why Hess should need to involve any third person for this. He would best do it by himself. I also think that the topic he had in mind on English factory legislation is the most suitable as an introduction. However, even that cannot be treated without a few introductory words about the theory of value, as Proudhon has sown total confusion in people's minds on that subject. They believe that a commodity is sold for its value if it is sold for its prix de revient†a = price of the means of production which have been consumed in it, + wages (or price of the labour added to the means of production). They do not see that the unpaid labour which is contained in the commodity constitutes just as fundamental an element of value as the labour which has been paid for, and that this element of value now takes the form of profit, etc. They have no idea what wages are. Without an understanding of the nature of value, arguments about the working day, etc., in short, the factory laws, have no basis. A few words of introduction on this subject are thus called for.
Page me42.488
My publisher†b is satisfied with sales in Germany. The liberal and vulgar-economist gang is, of course, seeking to harm it as much as they can by their tried and tested method of conspiration de silence. But this time they will not succeed.
Page me42.488
I am here enclosing 1 COPY of Liebknecht†c for you. You will see from the back page that he is bringing out a little weekly paper of his own†d in the coming weeks. I am to request contributions from you from Paris. (His address: 11 Braustrasse, Mr Miller.†e) I have given him a dressing-down for the phrase about the 'social question' (in the supplement)†537 and ditto drew his attention to the fact that he should avoid uncritical stand of the South Germans in his polemic against Bismarck. What should already have perplexed him is the fact that Jakobus Venedey has become his admirer.

Page Break me42.488a
Page me42.488a

Otto Meissner Publishing House in Hamburg where Marx brought the manuscript of Volume One of Capital in 1867

Page Break me42.488b
Page Break me42.489
Page me42.489
For all that Liebknecht's bold stand in the Reichstag has done good.

Page me42.489
The whole family send you their warmest greetings.

Your
A. Williams†a

Page me42.489
The movement is on the march here!

Page me42.489
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

297
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.489
London, 30 November 1867

Dear Kugelmann,
Ill-health alone is to blame for my not replying sooner. I have been laid low again for weeks now.
Page me42.489
Firstly, my best thanks for your efforts. Engels has written to Liebknecht (or will be doing so). Liebknecht, incidentally, was intending (in conjunction with Götz, and others) to make a demand in the Reichstag for an ENQUIRY into the conditions of the workers. He wrote to me about his intention, and at his request I sent him a few relevant English Acts of Parliament.†504 The plan came to nothing because owing to the procedure there was no time left for it. On one point you are better placed to write to Liebknecht than either Engels or myself. And that is that it really is his duty to draw attention to my book†b at workers' meetings. If he fails to do so, the Lassalleans will seize upon the thing and misconstrue it.
Page me42.489
Contzen (lecturer at Leipzig, a pupil and follower of Roscher) has requested a copy of the book from me via Liebknecht and promised a detailed review of it, from his point of view, in return. Meissner thereupon sent him the book. This could be a good start. — I was pleased about the misprint 'Taucher' in place of 'Faucher'†a in your notice.†b Faucher is one of those 'travelling preachers' of political economy. The fellow has no place among the 'scholarly' German economists such as Roscher, Rau, Mohl, and others. It is doing him too great an honour even to mention him. And I have consequently never allowed him a role as a noun but only as a verb.†c

Page Break me42.490

Page me42.490
Please be so kind as to tell your good wife†d that the chapters on the 'Working Day', 'Co-operation, Division of Labour and Machinery' and finally on 'Primitive Accumulation'†550 are the most immediately readable. You will have to explain any incomprehensible terminology to her. If there are any other doubtful points, I shall be glad to help.
Page me42.490
In France (Paris) there are the best prospects that the book will be discussed in detail (in the Courrier français, a Proudhonist paper unfortunately!) and even translated.†539
Page me42.490
As soon as I am better, I will write more. Meanwhile I hope you will write frequently. I always find it has a spurring effect on me.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.490
[From Eleanor Marx, in English]

My dear Fränzchen,†e
As Papa is in a hurry to send off his letter I have only time to send you my best love.

Your affectionate
Eleanor Marx

Page me42.490
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 4, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.491

298
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.491
Manchester, 4 December 1867

Dear Moor,
I have given the LOAN COMPANY the REFERENCE, I said, FROM CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION I AM CONVINCED THAT MR MARX WILL BE IN A POSITION TO REPAY THE LOAN WHEN DUE.
Page me42.491

The letters from Borkheim returned enclosed. I hope the business goes well.
Page me42.491
I shall be sending you letters from Kugelmann and Liebknecht tomorrow or the day after. Both have some prospect of getting various things†a placed in newspapers, though admittedly small ones, I shall be attending to it this and tomorrow evening.
Page me42.491
As to Meissner's notice,†b haste is not very advisable. The stuff must not appear in the papers until after New Year, otherwise it will get lost in the flood of notices for Christmas books.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.491
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

299
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.491
Manchester, 6 December 1867

Dear Moor,
Enclosed letters from Kugelmann (with enclosure), Liebknecht and Siebel, as well as three acknowledgments from Rau, Hildebrand and Schulze-Delitzsch.†551 Please send back by return the ones from Kugelmann, with the enclosure, and Siebel, the post for Siebel is going off on Monday evening, and I also have to write to Kugelmann. What do you think of the little Swabian paper†a? Kugelmann certainly does seem to be resorting to desperate means though.

Page Break me42.492
Page me42.492
I have written at length to Liebknecht and demanded that he should attack not only the Prussians but their opponents, too, the Austrians, Federalists, Guelphs†420 and other advocates of the smaller states. As I suspected, the fellow has become narrow-minded in exclusively South German fashion. He and Bebel have signed an address to the Viennese City Council,†b in which Austria is hailed as the newly-arising state of freedom in the South, in contrast to the North's condition of servitude! IT'S ALL VERY WELL for him to make a few vague speeches in the Reichstag, but a little newspaper†c is a different matter altogether, we shall be held responsible for it, and we really cannot allow ourselves to be confused with Austrians, Federalists and Guelphs.†552 I have also written to him about his stupidity in suspending social agitation.†537

Page me42.492
This evening I shall be sending Jenny the trial of Adelaide Macdonald, who fired a pistol at the policeman.†553 Her relationship with Allen is not clear. Allen was betrothed to another girl and was to marry on the Monday after the 'OUTRAGE'.
Page me42.492
In haste.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.492
LOAN ALL RIGHT, I presume?
Page me42.492
Enquiries today about life assurance.

Page me42.492
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.493

300
MARX TO ENGELS†6
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.493
[London,] 7 December 1867

DEAR FRED,
Yesterday I presented myself at the LOAN SOCIETY for BODILY examination. This is more than just a formality, for if I were to die before September, the society would not get a FARTHING back. I was afraid I would have to undress (the fate of an Englishman who was there with me). In the first place, I do not like such inocular speculation, and second precisely at this moment I still have a carbuncle on the left loin not far from the centre of propagation, as well as numerous furuncles. Fortunately, the fellow was so impressed with my chest that he didn't want to know about anything else. I shall get the money on Monday at 12 o'clock.
Page me42.493
You forgot to put in the letter from Siebel. I am sending you back Kugelmann, along with enclosure. Also, a letter he has written to me, together with enclosures. The screed from Bürgers†554 to be put with the documents. That jackass was rightly reminded by the workers in Düsseldorf†a that 1. in Lassalle's time he stated he 'wished to take due account of conditions', 2. he had 'lost his illusions about the class struggle', and 3. he had found in Schulze-Delitzsch the solution to all past and future social mysteries.†b

Page me42.493

As regards the little Swabian paper,†c it would be an amusing coup if we could hoodwink Vogt's friend, the Swabian Mayer. It would be easy to contrive the thing as follows. D'abord†d to begin by saying that whatever one may think of the drift of the book,†e it is a credit to the 'German spirit', for which reason, too, it was written by a Prussian in exile and not in Prussia; Prussia having long ceased to be a country where any scholarly initiative, especially in the political or historical or social field, is possible or is actually to be found, it now being the representative of the Russian and not of the German spirit. In respect of the book itself, a distinction has to be drawn between two things, between positive developments ('solid' would be the second epithet) given by the author, and the tendentious conclusions he arrives at. The former are a direct addition to the sum of human knowledge, since actual economic relations are treated in an entirely new way by a materialistic ('Mayer' has a liking for this catchword, on account of Vogt) method. Example: 1. the development of money, 2. the way in which co-operation, division of labour, the machine system and the corresponding social combinations and relations develop 'spontaneously'.

Page Break me42.494

Page me42.494

Now as regards the tendency of the author, another distinction has to be drawn. When he demonstrates that present society, economically considered, is pregnant with a new, higher form, he is only showing in the social context the same gradual process of evolution that Darwin has demonstrated in natural history. The liberal doctrine of 'progress' (c'est Mayer tout pur†a) embraces this idea, and it is to his credit that he himself shows there is hidden progress even where modern economic relations are accompanied by frightening direct consequences. At the same time, owing to this critical approach of his, the author has, perhaps malgré lui,†b sounded the death-knell to all socialism by the book, i.e. to utopianism, for evermore.

Page me42.494

The author's tendency to be subjective, on the other hand — which he was perhaps bound and obligated to assume in view of his party position and his past — i.e. the manner in which he represents to himself or to others the ultimate outcome of the present movement, of the present social process, bears absolutely no relation to its real development. If space permitted this to be more closely examined, it could perhaps be shown that its 'objective' development refutes his own 'subjective' fancies.

Page me42.494

Whereas Mr Lassalle hurled abuse at the capitalists and flattered the backwoods Prussian squirearchy, Mr Marx, on the contrary, shows the historical 'necessity' of capitalist production and severely criticises the landed aristocrat who does nought but consume. Just how little he shares the ideas of his renegade disciple Lassalle on Bismarck's vocation for ushering in an economic MILLENNIUM he has not merely shown in his previous protests against 'royal Prussian Socialism'†c but he openly repeats it on pp. 762, 763, where he says that the system prevailing in France and Prussia at present will subject the continent of Europe to the regime of the Russian knout, if it is not checked in good time.†555

Page Break me42.495
Page me42.495

That is my view on how to hoodwink the Swabian Mayer (who did after all print my preface†456), and small though his beastly rag is, it is, nevertheless, the popular oracle of all the Federalists in Germany and is also read abroad.

Page me42.495

With regard to Liebknecht, it is indeed a disgrace that with the numerous petty provincial papers he has at his command,†556 he did not spontanément†a send in short notices to them — it would not have required of him any of the study which is so contrary to his nature. Mr Schweitzer et Co. understand this better, as you can see from the enclosed Social-Demokrat.†557 (Kugelmann sent it me.) Yesterday I sent Guido Weiss of the Zukunft (this just between ourselves) some juxtaposed texts,†b on one side von Hofstetten's bowdlerised plagiarisms, on the other the original passages from my book. I wrote to him at the same time that this must be printed not in my name but as though emanating from the Zukunft (or, if that is not feasible, then as though from a Zukunft-reader in Berlin). If Weiss takes this (and I think he will), then not merely will the attention of the Berlin workers have been drawn to the book through the quotation of passages which are of direct interest to them, but an extremely useful polemic will have been initiated, and Schweitzer's plan to ignore the book and exploit its contents will have been dished. Marvellous how these fellows think they can go on with Lassalle's plan.†c What could be more naive than the manner in which von Hofstetten and Citizen Geib have joined together at the general meeting of the General Association of German Workers in savaging the section I wrote on the 'working day'†558?

Page me42.495

Salut.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.495

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS. I have taken an extraordinary liking to Schorlemmer's compendium.†d

Page me42.495

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.496

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.496
[London,] 7 December 1867

DEAR FRED,

I see too late that I have forgotten to send you the Social-Demokrat.†557 I am now making amends and enclose a copy of Courrier which will interest you on account of the article by the American General Cluseret on Mentana and Garibaldi.†a513 You must send the batch of Courriers back to me. I need the set because it is the only one which gives me a continuous report on stocks and shares.
Page me42.496

Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me42.496
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

302
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.496
[London,] 7 December 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

If there were 6 people of your calibre in Germany, we should already have overcome the resistance of the mass of philistines and the conspiration de silence of the experts and the riff-raff of the press, at least to the extent that serious discussion would have begun. Mais il faut attendre!†b That phrase contains the entire secret of Russian policy.

Page Break me42.497
Page me42.497

I enclose a letter (which you will be so kind as to return to me) from a German-Russian worker†a (tanner).†532 Engels rightly observes that the autodidactic philosophy — pursued by workers themselves — has made great progress in this tanner, when compared with the cobbler Jakob Böhme, ditto that none but the 'German' worker is capable of such cerebral production.†b
Page me42.497

Borkheim asked me yesterday who wrote the article in the Zukunft†c (he subscribes to the paper). He said it must originate from our side as you had sent him a copy. I said I did not know. N.B.! One must not let others see through one's game!
Page me42.497
Heartiest thanks to your good wife†d for the trouble she has taken in copying the letters. You should not exploit her so for 'surplus labour'.
Page me42.497
As I told you, if I am not mistaken, Bucher has actually asked me himself to become economic correspondent for the 'Königlich Preußische Staats-Zeitung.'†e So you see, if I wished to avail myself of such sources, I could do so without the mediation of any third party.†559
Page me42.497
I am suffering from the same illness as before. Nothing dangerous to it, but a nuisance.
Page me42.497
With best compliments to your good wife and Fränzchen.†f

Yours
K. Marx

Page me42.497
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 4, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

303
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.497
Manchester, 12 December 1867

Dear Moor,
Since Sunday I've been having a grand gala performance, with toothache, influenza, SORE THROAT, fever, and all manner of unpleasantnesses, only this morning am I fit to work again, and I will get down to the Swabian Mayer this evening, following your recipe,†a which — with some excessively rigorous detail discounted which would make the thing 3 times as long — is very nice.

Page Break me42.498

Page me42.498
Bürgers has been put ad acta.†554 By one of the ironies of fate, the introduction to the article†b sent him by Kugelmann necessarily cut him to the quick as the unsuccessful Reichstag candidate for Düsseldorf. I quite innocently mentioned in it the fact that the social-democratic party could no longer simply be ignored now that it is represented in the Reichstag, and that these gentlemen would make this book their Bible. With his customary tact, Kugelmann sends this to Heinrich. Hinc illae lacrimae!†c I had quite forgotten the matter, and I was only reminded of it by Heinrich's anxious letter, which takes all this most seriously.

Page me42.498

The Zukunft affair is very good.†d Write and tell me when it appears,†e as I cannot spare the time to consult Zukunft every day at the Schiller Institute.†28
Page me42.498

Kugelmann becomes more simple-minded every day. If Bucher — why not go straight to Bismarck?†559 I do not understand, or else I've forgotten, what he says in the letter of 3 December to you about a letter from Meissner enclosed for me.
Page me42.498

Enclosed 1. 2 letters from Kugelmann to you, returned,
2. 1 ditto " " " me and 1 from Stumpf to Kugelmann.
3. The letter from Siebel.
Page me42.498

Last post now. Kindest regards to the ladies and Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.498
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.499

304
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.499
Manchester, 12 December 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

Your zeal truly deserves my gratitude, but it appears greatly to overestimate my free time. I received your letter of 30 November on 2 December, held counsel with Marx, as there were several things in it to be considered, and would already have sent you various articles, if on Sunday I had not been visited by a toothache-influenza-sore throat with inevitable fever, which prostrated me on the sofa. Fortunately, that kind of thing takes an acute course with me, and so I am fit for work again today and will be setting my nose to the grindstone at once. But you must not imagine that one can just toss off a dozen reviews of one and the same book†a and not merely say something different in each one but also so compose them that one cannot tell they are all by one author. One often has to pause for thought.†560

Page me42.499
I would advise against writing directly to Miquel. There are some things which can be achieved verbally with such people and which are scarcely to be risked in writing. He will surely be coming over to Hanover sometime.
Page me42.499
The United States of Europe†b was stillborn. And with Vogt's brother†c and minion as editor — pshaw!
Page me42.499
The Englishman who called on Brandes was our friend Moore from here, who spent 7 weeks in Eisenach for German-learning purposes; I had no idea he would be passing by, or I should have written him a few lines to give to you. He might perhaps have called on you anyway, except that he had curiously got it fixed in his head that you lived in Hamburg. He will probably undertake the English translation of Marx' book.†229
Page me42.499
Concerning Liebknecht's South German outburst, I have written to him that nothing is achieved by it.†552 He would have done better not to publish his speeches,†d in extenso†e their effect is lost, the nonsense in them obtrudes too much. I also wrote to him about his curious theory on the postponement of the social question.†537 You will recall, incidentally, that I was already telling you last autumn that he had become too much of an Austrian owing to his hatred of the Prussians.

Page Break me42.500
Page me42.500
This brief epistle just to keep you informed. The articles will follow in a few days time, and you can then at all events tell the Lieutenant-Colonel†a that there will be a few more, and there will then be something for him to do.
Page me42.500
In friendship

Yours
F.E.

Page me42.500
I have just been ejected from the office, as it was closing time.

Page me42.500
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

305
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.500
Manchester, 13 December 1867

Dear Kugelmann,

'Pursuant to mine humbly of yesterday' — so that you do not forget all the elements of commercial style — you will find enclosed 2 articles, one examining the content of the book, for the Beobachter,†b and the other merely discussing points of fact, for the Gewerbeblatt or the Staats-Anzeiger.†c

Page me42.500

You will appreciate the difficulties which had to be overcome with the first of these when you consider that the editor of the Beobachter is the tedious talker from Swabia, Karl Mayer, from Herr Vogt, who will certainly never knowingly do us any favours. You realise that these articles must only be submitted in copy, but I would ask you to keep all the originals, as one never knows what they may be needed for.

Page Break me42.501

Page me42.501

I shall also be sending something for the Merkur,†a but I cannot yet do so much work in the evening now as I get too excited by it and last night again e.g. I could scarce sleep for thinking of the articles. The weather, business and the vestiges of the tic douloureux†b from last Sunday are keeping me from riding, and so I cannot get back to normal.

Page me42.501

I have not read about the Siebenmark affair†561 in the Zukunft, I but rarely set eyes on the paper.

Page me42.501

Farewell for today. It is 6 o'clock in the evening, closing time, and I am tired and hungry.

Yours
F.E.

Page me42.501

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

306
MARX TO ENGELS†562
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.501
[London,] 14 December 1867

DEAR FRED,

This latest FENIAN EXPLOIT in Clerkenwell†563 is a great folly. The London masses, who have shown much sympathy for Ireland, will be enraged by it and driven into the arms of the government party. One cannot expect the London proletarians to let themselves be blown up for the benefit of FENIAN EMISSARIES. Secret, melodramatic conspiracies of this kind are, in general, more or less doomed to failure.
Page me42.501

I received the money on Monday and paid Borkheim his £45 back together with £1 1s for INQUIRY FEES.
Page me42.501

Would you do me a favour and inquire of Ernest Jones the most appropriate way of marrying civiliter†c in London, in DOCTORS'

Page Break me42.502
COMMONS or where, as Laura is to marry at the beginning of April. As it is not to be a church wedding, it was originally intended that the marriage should take place in Paris. That is, however, complicated. I should have to prove my identity there and, in so doing, might strike the police as being a little too familiar. On the other hand, my wife would like the civil marriage to take place, if in London, as far as possible in secret, as she wants no gossip among her English acquaintances. Please also ask Jones what the position is regarding the consent of Lafargue's parents? Whether it must previously be countersigned by the envoy (would that be the English one?) in Paris? I know that the formality is not necessary in England. It is, however, indispensable for the marriage to be valid according to French law as well. So, none of the formalities must be neglected in this respect.
Page me42.502

What is the position regarding witnesses in England?
Page me42.502

Nothing from the Zukunft yet.†a It is a pity these papers are so small in format, especially at a time when their columns are so full of parliamentary filibustering.
Page me42.502

Our friend Stumpf is obviously a great muddle-head.
Page me42.502

Siebel returned enclosed. He is mistaken about Lange. The latter must 'buy' the book†b and will surely already have bought it long ago.†564
Page me42.502

The quid pro quo†c with Heinrich†d is indeed most amusing.†e
Page me42.502

Salut.

Your

K. Moor

Page me42.502
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.503

307
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.503
[Manchester,] 16 December 1867

Dear Moor,

Enclosed a letter from Liebknecht, who is another great muddle-head. Especially over the Austrian business. Because Austria stands on the eve of its 1789, Liebknecht therefore praises it as the state of freedom!†552 I have not answered him yet, but will do so as soon as you send the letter back.
Page me42.503

Have sent articles to Kugelmann 1. for the Swabian Mayer,†a 2. for the Gewerbeblatt.†b Ditto to Siebel for Mannheim.†c Further Swabian articles to follow.
Page me42.503

The piece†d has appeared in the Zukunft. I now buy the paper SECOND HAND from the Schiller Institute†28 so that I can see it regularly.
Page me42.503

In haste.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.503

The marriage business is perfectly straightforward. THE MARRIAGE IS PERFORMED BEFORE THE REGISTRAR FOR THE DISTRICT, who also puts up the BANNS at his OFFICE 14 days previously. Two or more witnesses are necessary. You can find out all the details at that office. For England nothing else is required, but as regards validity in France, Jones cannot tell you either, so Lafargue senior will have to ask his lawyer in Bordeaux. I shall, incidentally, check the code civil.
Page me42.503

Gumpert was married in this way. Your wife can tell her philistine neighbours that this way was chosen because Laura is protestant and Paul catholic.

Page me42.503

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.504

308
MARX TO ENGELS†562
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.504
London, 17 December 1867

Dear FRED,

Wilhelm†a returned enclosed. You must be careful in your reply. The position is difficult. To pursue an entirely correct course would require a much more critical spirit and dialectical skill than our Wilhelm possesses.†552 We can only restrain him from committing really grave blunders. In general, hostility to Prussia is the pathos to which alone he owes his VERVE AND SINGLENESS OF PURPOSE. He has rightly sensed that the true bourgeoisie forms the core of the 'National Liberals',†432 which gives him the opportunity to bestow on his political antipathy the more elevated sanction of economics. Ira facit poetam†b and also gives our Wilhelmchen cunning up TO A CERTAIN POINT.
Page me42.504

The correspondent of The Irishman here is willing to print, if you write it in English, a critique of the book†c about one column in length (Ireland must take the proper role in it, however) in that Dublin paper as a contribution under his own name. I shall send you a few copies of the paper and you will see what needs to be done.
Page me42.504

The Zukunft has a talent for misprints†d which is all the odder as Dr Guido Weiss does after all have the original.
Page me42.504

I have a small but infinitely irritating carbuncle on my left buttock.

And if the noble fellow has no bum.
On what does he propose to sit?†e

Page me42.504

Yesterday I gave a 1 1/2 hour lecture on Ireland†565 at our German Workers' Society (though a further 3 German workers' societies were represented, ABOUT 100 people in all), as 'standing' is the easiest posture for me just now.
Page me42.504

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me42.504
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.505

309
ENGELS TO MARX†522
IN LONDON
Page me42.505
Manchester, 19 December 1867

Dear Moor,

OF COURSE our correspondence with Wilhelmchen†a requires caution. As I have already told you,†b his narrow-minded one-sided SINGLENESS OF PURPOSE was his good fortune and the secret of his effectiveness in the Reichstag. Unfortunately however that will only work once, and the publication of his speeches†c — to say nothing of Kugelmann's letters — shows that it had gone too far. Now we have the little paper†d to boot, in which his household words are recorded in black and white and are then laid at our door — then the Customs Union parliament,†566 and therewith certainly a disgrace for us unless Wilhelmchen is given some instruction. With his egregious talent for making blunders, much was to be expected there, and may be still. No doubt we can only protect him from the most serious blunders, but his Viennese address and his friendship with the Federalists,†e i.e. Grün!! is already dreadful enough. I can therefore only put 2 chief considerations to him: 1. to regard the events and outcome of 1866 not simplement negatively, i.e. not as a reactionary, but critically (which he will admittedly find difficult), and 2. to attack Bismarck's enemies just as much as the man himself, as they are equally worthless. You observe how beautifully he has already compromised himself with Grün et Co.; what a fine triumph that would be for Bismarck if we or our people concluded an alliance with that rabble! Well, we shall just have to wait and see what transpires.
Page me42.505

The Clerkenwell folly†563 was obviously the work of a few special fanatics; it is the misfortune of all conspiracies that they lead to such acts of folly because 'we really must do something, we really must get up to something'. Especially in America there has been a lot of BLUSTER amongst this explosive and incendiary fraternity, and then along come some individual jackasses and instigate this kind of nonsense. At the same time, these man-eaters are for the most part the greatest of cowards, including that man Allen who already appears to have turned QUEEN'S EVIDENCE. And then the notion that you can free Ireland by setting fire to some London tailor's shop!

Page Break me42.506

Page me42.506
Have you read the Russians' warning (Russian Invalid) that the alliance between France and Austria makes peace in Europe impossible because it prevents a solution to the German, Italian and Eastern questions?†a Very nice. Bismarck and Gorchakov now appear to be about to take the offensive.
Page me42.506
Your friend Lippe has been sacrificed to the shades of the dispossessed†b†567 — his dismissal was the price for which the National Liberals are dropping their opposition to the 25 million for the Guelphs and the house of Nassau.†c
Page me42.506
Best regards to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.506
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.507

1868

310
MARX TO ENGELS†419
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.507
[London,] 3 January 1868

DEAR FRED,
Happy New Year!
Page me42.507
I have only been 'sitting up' again for 3 days after lying all bent for so long. It was a nasty attack. You can judge this by the fact that for 3 weeks — no smoking! My head is still shaky. In a few days I hope to be back in action.
Page me42.507
I am absolutely opposed to arsenic.
Page me42.507

Enclosed the Beobachter†a (Lessner filched it for me from the Workers' Society†150).
Page me42.507
I have had no more letters from Siebel except the enclosed one to me.
Page me42.507
Meissner can always have a try with the Barmer.†b It can do no harm. When you send the cuttings to Meissner, you must refer to them only as something which has come to hand, without explaining to him 'our' activity.†568 Also draw his attention to the latest things in the Zukunft.†c
Page me42.507
I would like to know from Schorlemmer what is the latest and best book (German) on agricultural chemistry. Furthermore, what is the present state of the argument between the mineral-fertiliser people and the nitrogen-fertiliser people? (Since I last looked into the subject, all sorts of new things have appeared in Germany.) Does he know anything about the most recent Germans who have written against Liebig's soil-exhaustion theory? Does he know about the alluvion theory of the Munich agronomist Fraas (Professor at Munich University)?†d For the chapter on ground rent†569 I shall have to be aware of the latest state of the question, at least TO SOME EXTENT. Since Schorlemmer is an expert on this subject he must be able to give information. Enclosed 2 Urquharts†a and 1 Courrier (because of Cluseret's article).

Page Break me42.508
Page me42.508
THE COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON TO MRS Burns, Moore, AND Schorlemmer.

Your
Moor

Page me42.508
[From Eleanor Marx, in English]

You bad boy, why haven't you answered my letters? — I suppose you and the hedgehog have been on the spree again.

Alberich,†b
the grim dwarf
Happy New Year.

Page me42.508
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

311
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.508
Manchester, 3 January 1868

Dear Mrs Marx,

I must apologise for leaving your letter†570 unanswered for so long. But the Christmas period is the only time in the whole year when, apart from business, I am made to feel that I stand with one foot in the bourgeoisie, and here in Manchester this entails a lot of eating and drinking and upset stomach, and the obligatory ill humour and waste of time. This is now fairly well over, and I am beginning to breathe freely again.

Page me42.508

I am really sorry that I was unable to lay my hands on a larger crate for the moment, but I had to take just what was available in the WAREHOUSE — I shall make up for this soon.

Page Break me42.509

Page me42.509

Enclosed the latest from Siebel. Do please return the letter, together with an earlier one sent to Moor, as soon as possible, I have to write to him on the 8th, the post goes only twice a month, and it is a great pleasure for the poor devil when he sees that people think of him. He does what he can honestly, despite his illness. The thing from the Barmer Zeitung is by him.†571 Moor might let me know what he thinks about the business with the Kölnische Zeitung; if he thinks it better that I should write about this to Meissner, I can do so, and, at the same time, send him the cutting from Barmer.

Page me42.509

The pater peccavi†a from Hoffstetten is very amusing.†572 He naturally suspects Liebknecht everywhere and nobody else.†b In any case, we have now put paid to the attempt of these gentry to stifle, and at the same time to exploit, the book.†c

Page me42.509

I shall be writing to Wilhelmchen in the next few days. I have heard nothing more from Kugelmann as to how things have gone with the Swabian articles.†d

Page me42.509

Meissner could already put together quite a nice advertisement from the articles that have appeared up to now,†568 which would be quite in place now that the Christmas season is over. In particular, he might include those passages in which the economists are challenged to present their defence.

Page me42.509

I hope that Moor has been freed from his carbuncle. But this is all no good, he must do something to get rid of the business once and for all. The 2nd volume†418 can only gain, also with regard to the time needed for completion, if the fight against the carbuncles is waged with full force for a period. How would it be if he were to take arsenic again?

Page me42.509
Best greetings to Moor and the whole family, and a hearty Happy New Year from

Yours
F.E.

Page me42.509
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.510

312
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.510
Manchester, 6 January 1868

Dear Moor,
If you do not want to take arsenic, then for goodness sake do something else, for things cannot go on like this. Have you consulted Allen or another doctor recently? Gumpert was not at home when I called the other day, but I shall take the first opportunity to speak to him.
Page me42.510
You did not send the Beobachter or the 2 Urquharts either.†a However, today Kugelmann sent me the Beobachter and the Württemberg Staats-Anzeiger†b (I am sending you the latter and when I get it back will send it to Meissner, if you do not send it to him direct). It's fine that these two PAPERS have risen to the bait. I shall now also prepare Kugelmann something for the Schwäbischer Merkur.†560
Page me42.510
Schorlemmer will put together the information for you from the latest annual reports. He was not acquainted with the book by Fraas.†c
Page me42.510
A natural scientist has appeared in Paris who calls himself Chmoulevitch (Schmulsohn!). This even beats Ephraim Artful.†d
Page me42.510
The first instalment of the Austrian official general staff report on the war of 66 first proves that Austria's military organisation was not fit for a simultaneous war with Prussia and Italy, this is followed by the naive passage: Under these circumstances it should really have been the task of state foreign policy to safeguard the state against such a war.†e
Page me42.510

The Prussian 2nd instalment†f shows quite clearly that on the 28th, and even more on the evening of the 29th,†g Benedek was in a position to attack the scattered columns of the Crown Prince†h with superior force and with almost absolute certainty to throw him back into the mountains and take his guns. The jackass did not do it, and lost the campaign.

Page Break me42.511
Page me42.511
Salut.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.511
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

313
ENGELS TO MARX†419
IN LONDON
Page me42.511
Manchester, 7 January 1868

Dear Moor,
Herewith returned the Dühring†a and the Beobachter.†b The former is highly amusing. The whole article is embarrassment and FUNK. You can see that the worthy vulgar economist is frappé au vif†c and can find nothing to say except that it will only be possible to judge the first volume when the 3rd has come out,†418 that determination of value by labour time is not undisputed, and that there are people who have some modest doubts about the determination of the value of labour on the basis of its costs of production. You see that for this genus†d you are by no means learned enough, for you have not confuted the great Macleod†e on the decisive point. At the same time, there is the fear in every line that he may be exposed to a treatment á la Roscher.†f The fellow was happy when he had finished the thing, but I am sure he carried it to the post with a heavy heart.
Page me42.511
Kugelmann and Wilhelmchen†g I shall return tomorrow. If there is anything in the copied letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Seubert which could be useful to me for a further Swabian article,†560 please enclose it.

Page Break me42.512

Page me42.512
I could do something for Vienna too. Richter could perhaps be asked about the Internationale Revue, he is supposed to know the situation there.
Page me42.512
Wilhelmchen's PAPER†a is just too lovely — everything ready except the security bond, and so it cannot be published. Incidentally, if Wilhelm should go to Vienna then the fuss about the Austrian agent would really get going.†573
Page me42.512
How are things with Beesly, Lewes & Co. and the Fortnightly Review?†509
Page me42.512
Best greetings to the LADIES and the Doctor amorosus.†b

Your
F.E.

Page me42.512
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

314
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.512
[London,] 8 January 1868

DEAR FRED,
I have ditto received the Staats-Anzeiger and the Beobachter†c from Kugelmann. I am returning you your Staats-Anzeiger today. Also the COPY Kugelmann sent me of the letter from the colonel†d who arranged the whole thing.†560 Württemberg is now sufficiently provided. In my opinion, — with special regard to sales — Austria is now the most important. Notabene, if you have the patience to write more prescriptions.†e Little Jenny, an expert in this respect, claims that you are developing great dramatic talent, or comic talent, in pursuing this action from 'different' viewpoints and in different disguises.

Page Break me42.513
Page me42.513
In the next few days — I am still a trifle limp, and do not feel much like writing — but as soon as I am quite on my feet I shall give Wilhelmchen†a a good hiding. This is because of his identification of my views with the specific views of Wilhelm.
Page me42.513

Dühring's article†b (he is lecturer at Berlin University) is very decent, particularly since I handled his master 'Carey' so roughly. Dühring obviously misunderstood various things. But the oddest thing is that he ranks me with Stein, because I pursue the dialectic, and Stein assembles thoughtlessly the greatest trivialities in clumsy hair-splitting, with a few Hegelian category conversions.†c
Page me42.513
Have you already received Borkheim's Perle†d?
Page me42.513
It appears that professional poesy is simply a mask for the driest sort of prosiness. Take, for example, the Freiligrath family. Kate travels (on her honeymoon) to Paris with Kröker, the young corn usurer. However, since this noble man has 'business' to do at the same time, he leaves her alone in one of the big Paris hotels for 2-3 days. Kate and the whole FAMILY find this quite in order. Kate even writes delightedly that in the hotel they call her 'mademoiselle' (after she had spent the night together with Kröker there), and that all the waiters and even the porter give her friendly 'nods'. But even more: Kröker (after this business trip to the provinces) returns from Paris immediately to London with Kate, and the whole family is delighted that the 'HONEYMOON' is to be postponed for 6 months, since business 'comes first'. After all, for a poet the HONEYMOON is only a flower of speech, and can be 'celebrated' before or after the accouchement, early or late (the facts were related by the Freiligrath boys†e in my house). Kate even seems to have read Clauren, for she described herself — from Paris — as a 'grass widow'.
Page me42.513
The Yankees will show John Bull what's what. What do you think of the latest rodomontades of the Russians?
Page me42.513
Dwarf Alberich†f was very delighted by your letter.†131 He is just off to the gymnastics school, where he is doing great things.
Page me42.513
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.513
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.514

315
MARX TO ENGELS†574
IN MANCHESTER

Page me42.514
[London,] 8 January 1868

DEAR FRED,

Ad vocem†a Dühring.†b It is a great deal from this man that he gives almost positive acceptance to the section on 'primitive accumulation'.†575 He is still young. As a follower of Carey he is in direct opposition to the FREETRADERS. Furthermore, he is a university lecturer, and therefore not displeased that Professor Roscher, who blocks the way for them all, is receiving some kicks.†c One thing in his description struck me very strongly. That is, as long as the determination of value by labour time is itself left 'undetermined', as it is with Ricardo, it does not make people SHAKY. But as soon as it is brought exactly into connection with the working day and its variations, a very unpleasant new light dawns upon them. I believe one reason that Dühring reviewed the book at all is malice against Roscher. Indeed it is easy to scent his anxiety that he might also be 'Roscher'ed. Curiously, the fellow has not detected the three fundamentally new elements of the book:
Page me42.514

1. that in contrast to all previous political economy, which from the outset treated the particular fragments of surplus value with their fixed forms of rent, profit and interest as already given, I begin by dealing with the general form of surplus value, in which all these elements are still undifferentiated, in solution as it were;
Page me42.514

2. that the economists, without exception, have missed the simple fact that, if the commodity has the double character of use value and exchange value, then the labour represented in the commodity must also have a double character; thus the bare analysis of labour sans phrase,†d as in Smith, Ricardo, etc., is bound to come up against the inexplicable everywhere. This is, in fact, the whole secret of the critical conception;
Page me42.514

3. that for the first time wages are shown as the irrational outward form of a hidden relationship, and this is demonstrated exactly in both forms of wages: time wages and piece wages. (It was a help to me that similar formulae are often found in higher mathematics.)

Page Break me42.515
Page me42.515

As for Mr Dühring's modest objection to the determination of value, he will be astonished when he sees in Volume II†418 how little the determination of value counts for 'directly' in bourgeois society. Actually, no form of society can prevent the labour time at the disposal of society from regulating production in ONE WAY OR ANOTHER. But so long as this regulation is not effected through the direct and conscious control of society over its labour time — which is only possible under common ownership — but through the movement of commodity prices, then things will remain as you so aptly described them already in the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher.†a
Page me42.515

Ad vocem Vienna. I am sending you various Vienna papers (of which you must return to me the Neues Wiener Tagblatt which belongs to Borkheim, and keep the rest), from which you will see two things: firstly how important Vienna is at this moment as a market place, since there is new life there†576; and secondly the way the matter should be handled there. I cannot find the address of Prof. Richter. Perhaps you have Liebknecht's letter which gives it. If not, ask him to send it to you, and then dispatch the article direct to Richter, but not via Liebknecht.

Page me42.515

It seems to me that Wilhelmchen is by no means ALTOGETHER bona fide. He (for whom I have had to find so much time to make good his asininity in the Allgemeine Augsburger, etc.,†577) has so far found no time even to mention publicly the title of my book†b or my name. He overlooks the affair in the Zukunft†c so as not to be put in the embarrassing position of sacrificing his own independent greatness. And there was also no time available to say a solitary word in the workers' paper (Deutsche Arbeiterhalle, Mannheim), which appears under the direct control of his friend Bebel. In short, it is certainly no fault of Wilhelmchen that my book has not been totally ignored. First, he has not read it (although to little Jenny he made fun of Richter, who thinks that he needs to understand a book before he can publicise it), and secondly, after he had read it or claimed to have read it, he has had no time, although he has time, since I got him Borkheim's SUBVENTION, to write letters twice weekly to Borkheim; although, instead of sending the shares†d to Strohn for the money, which was transmitted to him through me and obtained by my good offices, he asks for Strohn's address, in order to play his tricks with him directly, behind my back, and swamp him with epistles as he does Borkheim. In short, Wilhelmchen wants to make himself important, and in particular the public should not be distracted from its interest in Wilhelmchen. We must now act half as if we did not notice this, but still treat him with caution. As for his call to Austria, you cannot believe him until it has happened.†a And secondly if it should come to this, we shall not dissuade him, but IF NECESSARY, simply explain to him what I explained to him when he joined Brass's Norddeutsche,†b†578 that, if he should compromise himself again, he will be, if necessary, publicly disavowed. I told him this, in the presence of witnesses, when he moved off to Berlin at that time.

Page Break me42.516

Page me42.516

I think you can send articles direct to the enclosed Neue Freie Presse (Vienna). The present joint owner, Dr Max Friedländer (Lassalle's cousin and deadly enemy), was the person for whom I acted as a correspondent for a longish period for the old Vienna Presse and for the Oder-Zeitung.†c

Page me42.516

Finally, with regard to the Internationale Revue, Fox (who was sent to Vienna by an English paper to pay a visit and establish connections) asked me, from Vienna a few days ago, for a letter of introduction to Arnold Hilberg. I sent it to him, and at the same time told the said Hilberg in this letter that circumstances had prevented us writing, that we would do something this year, etc.†111

Page me42.516

Fortnightly Review. Professor Beesly, one of the triumviri who secretly direct this paper, has told his special friend Lafargue (whom he constantly invites to dine at his house) that he is morally certain (it completely depends upon him!) that a review†509 would be accepted. Lafargue would hand it in to him himself.

Page me42.516

Ad vocem Pyat. In today's Times you will see the ADDRESS of the FRENCH DEMOCRATS about FENIANISM†257 (which appeared 4 weeks ago) and was sent in by Pyat.†d What has happened is this. The French government has launched an investigation (particularly visites domiciliaires†e at the homes of our correspondents in Paris) against the International Association as a société illicite.†f Ditto probably sent to the British government letters about FENIANISM written by our Dupont.†579 Mr Pyat, who always ran down our 'Association' as non-revolutionary, Bonapartist, etc., is afraid of this TURN of things, and is swiftly seeking to give the appearance that he has something to do with the matter and is 'MOVING'.

Page Break me42.517
Page me42.517

Ad vocem Benedek†a: can I have the journal for A FEW DAYS? You have now proven yourself twice a prophet, firstly a tactical prophet (in the Sevastopol affair), and secondly a strategic prophet (in the Prussian-Austrian affair).†580 But the sense of sensible men cannot predict the stupidities of which man is capable.
Page me42.517

Ad vocem carbuncles. Consulted doctors. Nothing new. Everything which the gentlemen have to say indicates that one has to have private means to live in accordance with their prescriptions, instead of being a poor devil like me, poverty-stricken as a church-mouse. When you see Gumpert, you can tell him that I feel (up to THIS MOMENT that I write) a stinging prickle in my body, that is my blood. It seems to me that for this year I shall not be quite over the affair.
Page me42.517

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS Burns.
Page me42.517

Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me42.517
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.517

[Manchester,] 10 January 1868

Dear Moor,

I wanted to write to you at length today, but the intervention of a Serb and a Wallachian, who held me up for hours, has frustrated my plans. Moreover, yesterday I had a visit from the ex-dictator Amand Goegg, who is travelling for the ridiculous Peace League†461 and who ruined my evening. Luckily, Schorlemmer also happened by, and got the surprise of his life with this fossil of Federal Republic; he had not believed such a thing possible. The stupid oaf has become ten times more stupid through the unthinking repetition of the same phrases, and has lost all points of contact with the world of common sense (not to mention actual thinking). Apart from Switzerland and the Canton of Baden, there is still nothing else in the world for people of this sort. For all that, he soon convinced himself of the truth of your first reply to his application for support: that the further apart we lived and the less we had to do with one another, the better we would get on. He admitted that in the Vogt affair†63 Blind had behaved like a coward, but said he was after all a worthy fellow, and even threatened to reconcile you and Blind! Vogt — no politician, but a worthy fellow, honest to the backbone, who simply scribbled away in the daytime without considering the content — if we 2 spent an hour together then we would be like brothers; he admitted him to be a Bonapartist, but not a paid one. To which I replied that all Bonapartists were paid, there were no unpaid ones, and if he could show me an unpaid one, then I would accept the possibility that Vogt was not paid; otherwise I would not. This astonished him, but finally he discovered one — Ludwig Bamberger! Incidentally, he said that Vogt had continually had a very hard time, his wife was a peasant girl from the Bernese Oberland, whom he had married out of virtue after he had made her a baby. Vogt, the artful dodger, appears to have pulled the wool well over this jackass's eyes. But when Schorlemmer and I explained to him that Vogt had not produced anything as a natural scientist either, you should have seen his rage: Had he not popularised? Was not that worth while?

Page Break me42.518

Page me42.518

I shall write something for Vienna as soon as it is in any way possible. Additionally for the Fortnightly,†509 but I would need to know first whether it could be made into a longer article, or should only be a short notice like those at the back of the Fortnightly. Beesly should be sounded out about this†a; a short notice would be almost useless and Beesly himself would learn nothing about the book†b from it.

Page me42.518

I shall call Wilhelmchen†c to account in a few days time about fulfilling the promises he made me: we shall make this little fellow get a move on. I have Richter's address.

Page me42.518

Herewith returned Liebknecht, Kugelmann and Siebel.

Page me42.518

Best greetings.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.518
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.519

317
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.519
[London,] 11 January 1868

DEAR FRED,

The 'Fop'†a was bustling around for a long time in London. He also visited Borkheim, where he produced just the same phrases as he did to you, only with better success, for he knew how to tickle the vanity of our Borkheim. But after he had squeezed out of the latter money for 10 shares, ditto assimilated various of his wines, he was not seen there again. For the understanding of his further activity in London, the following preliminary report. Cremer, as you know, was removed a long time since from his post as SECRETARY of the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL, and in his anger at this he long ago resigned as MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL, and was not re-elected as such by the last congress either.†b Mr Odger was re-elected. On my proposal, however, the post of president (the annual one) was abolished, and replaced by a CHAIRMAN, to be elected at each sitting.†489 Odger, annoyed by this, stays away from us on principle. WELL! Mr 'Fop' insinuates himself via Le Lubez to Odger (who introduced him to the LONDON TRADES COUNCIL†18) and to Cremer. They appointed a London committee,†c Beales as PRESIDENT, etc. In short, an affair against the INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION. (At the founding MEETING Fop also introduced the noble Blind.) The fellows had the impudence to invite me to their 2nd MEETING LAST WEEK. Eccarius (in a very badly written article in the Bee-Hive last Saturday) denounced Fop and his consorts.†d
Page me42.519

I am writing to you naked and with alcohol compresses. I went out again for the first time the day before yesterday, to the British Museum, of course, because I cannot write yet. Then yesterday there was a new outbreak under my left breast. The alcohol treatment, which Nélaton used in Paris for even the largest carbuncles, is, from my personal experience, by far the speediest and pleasantest for the patient (apart from cutting or lancing, depending on the case). The misfortune is only the constant activity, necessitated by the rapid evaporation of the alcohol.

Page Break me42.520
Page me42.520

At the museum, where I did nothing but leaf through catalogues, I also noted that Dühring is a great philosopher. For he has written a Natürliche Dialektik against Hegel's 'un-natural' one. Hinc illae lacrimae.†a The gentlemen in Germany (with the exception of theological reactionaries) believe Hegel's dialectic to be a 'dead dog'.†581 Feuerbach has much on his conscience in this respect.
Page me42.520

The French government has started a prosecution against the Paris Committee of the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION (as société illicite†b). This is very agreeable for me, since it means that the jackasses have been hindered and interrupted in their discussion of the programme they had already drawn up for the congress of 1868.†582 Dupont has apparently written something incautious about the Fenians†579 to his Paris correspondents that Bonaparte, who is now creeping dolefully up the arse of the British government, forwarded to Downing Street.†c
Page me42.520

It is characteristic that the disclosures of Prokesch-Osten, Gentz and Count Münster†d are being printed one after the other — with the direct or indirect collaboration of the Austrian government. Urquhart, with his ignorance now becoming permanent, knows only the first one. It is also very indicative of his 'totality', that he does not know Moltke's Turkish War of 1828, etc.,†e which would have provided him with excellent material. Incidentally, at the time when I was in Berlin (at Lassalle's)†583 Moltke was regarded as a declared Russophobe, inside the Royal Prussian frontiers, naturally.
Page me42.520

If you should be writing to Borkheim some time, request him to let you have a look at the two small Russian pamphlets about which I had told you. I would particularly like you to look at the one about the emancipation of the serfs, so that you can let me know the quintessence.
Page me42.520

From the enclosed Courrier français you will see that the French government is entering into a direct polemic with General Cluseret.
Page me42.520

If you could send little Tussy cotton-yarn ball on the 16th of this month I should be very pleased. It is her birthday and THAT LITTLE HUMBUG loves all Chinese formalities.

Page Break me42.521
Page me42.521

It gives me much pleasure that the English government is persecuting The Irishman. This paper is IN REALITY not Fenian, but simply wants REPEAL.†584 What blockheads these John Bulls are!
Page me42.521

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS Lizzy.
Page me42.521

Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me42.521
Enclosed a portion of 'new philology' from the Hermann.

Page me42.521
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

318
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.521
London, 11 January 1868

Dear Kugelmann,
D'abord†a my best HAPPY NEW YEARS to your good wife, Fränzchen,†b and you yourself. And then MY BEST THANKS for the Jupiter,†585 and for the activity and interest you display in making propaganda and leading the German press by the nose.†c As our friend Weerth, who unfortunately died too early, used to sing:

The finest thing in all the world
Is making your enemies bellow,
And cracking really awful jokes
About each pompous fellow.†d

Page me42.521
With all respect for your medical authority, you have too low an opinion of the English, German and French doctors whom I have in turn consulted and continue to consult here, if you think they cannot distinguish anthrax (carbuncles) from FURUNCLES, particularly here in England, the land of carbuncles, which is essentially a proletarian illness! And if the doctors made no distinctions, the patient like myself who knows both forms of monster could do so, for the subjective impression they make is very different, though as far as I know no doctor has yet managed to distinguish exactly between the two things theoretically. I have only been persecuted by this business for a few years. Earlier quite unknown to me. At the moment of writing to you, I am not yet quite restored, and not yet fit for work again. Once again many weeks lost, and not even pour le roi de Prusse.†a

Page Break me42.522

Page me42.522
The criticism of Mr Dühring†b shows mainly — fear! I would be grateful if you could get Dühring's book Gegen die Verkleinerer Carey's for me, ditto von Thünen's Der isolirte Staat mit Bezug auf die Landwirtschaft (or something like that) (together with a note of the prices). Orders like this take too long from here.
Page me42.522
Finally, I must ask you to send me ABOUT 12 COPIES of my photogram (only that FULLFACED). ABOUT one dozen friends are pestering me for them.
Page me42.522
Enclosed for Mrs Kugelmann the photograms of my eldest daughter Jenny and of Eleanor, who sends her best greetings to Fränzchen.
Page me42.522
Ad vocem†c Liebknecht: let him play le petit grand homme†d just A LITTLE WHILE. Tout s'arrangera pour le mieux dans le meilleur des mondes possibles.†e
Page me42.522
I still have all sorts of personal anecdota to relate. But I shall save them for next time when the writing position no longer bothers me.
Page me42.522
Salut.
Yours
K. Marx

Page me42.522
One of my friends here,†f who busies himself a lot with phrenology, stated yesterday about the photogram of your wife: very witty! So you see that phrenology is not the baseless art that Hegel thought it.†g

Page me42.522
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 4, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.523

319
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.523
Manchester, 16 January 1868

Dear Moor,

I have just discovered that I have left all your letters at home in another coat-pocket (including the last letter from your chief HONOURABLE SECRETARY†a for which I express special thanks) and so I shall have to reply from memory.
Page me42.523

You received the Courriers français and also the Wiener Tagblatt yesterday.
Page me42.523

I am sending you the Prussian report,†b with special explanations. Or rather it is only necessary to look at the sketch contained therein on the positions on the evening of June 28th in order to see that Benedek had brought together 6 corps (not counting cavalry) in an area of 2 square miles, faced by the Crown Prince†c with only the 5th Corps and 1 brigade of the 6th Corps. If, on the 29th, Benedek had attacked Steinmetz (5th Corps), the latter would have been thrown back across the mountains on to the 6th Corps, and on the 30th Benedek would have been able to attack the Guards and the 1st Corps at his leisure with at least 4 corps and throw them back, aprés quoi†d the cautious Frederick Charles would have taken great care not to act unrestrainedly. Frederick Charles had 5 corps and would have been faced by at least 6; the order for them to retreat was, however, certain as soon as the 3 individual columns of the Crown Prince had been beaten, and thereby the campaign would have acquired a completely different character. That the Austrians would finally have been beaten, if the Prussians had shown some care, is clear from a comparison of the figures. But the Prussian rabble would have been forced to cast aside their lousy system, and it would not have been the reorganisation and Bismarck who triumphed, but the people.
Page me42.523

Cluseret (who, of course, played the Fenian†257 in London as well) is even wilder than the Germans with his militia plan. The American war†11 — with militia on both sides — proves nothing except that the militia system demands enormous sacrifices of money and men, since the organisation only exists on paper. What would have happened to the Yankees if they had been faced, not by the Southern militia, but by a standing army of a few 100,000 men? Before the North could have organised itself this army would have been in New York and Boston and would have dictated peace with the help of the Democrats, whereupon the West could have played at secession. The fellow makes a good joke when he suggests that what really counts are good officers and the confidence of the men in the officers — two things that simply cannot be achieved with the militia system. What impresses people everywhere about the militia system is the great mass of men obtained at once, and the relative ease of training them, particularly in the face of the enemy. This last point is nothing new, old Napoleon was able to lead recruits of three months in formation to face the enemy; but this demands good cadres, and for this purpose something different from the Swiss-American militia system. When the war ended, the Yankees still had very imperfect cadres. Following the introduction of the breech-loader, the time of the pure militia is really at an end. This does not mean that [not] every rational military organisation lies somewhere in the middle between the Prussian and the Swiss — but where? This depends on the circumstances in each case.

Page Break me42.524

Only a society set up and educated communistically can come very close to the militia system, and even then asymptotically.
Page me42.524

With regard to the Viennese papers, I am in some embarrassment†a; I do, of course, see the Neue Freie Presse from time to time, but the whole area is rather too alien for me. What are your ideas on the subject, also with regard to the Fortnightly†509? The business is worth the trouble of thorough consideration.
Page me42.524

I hope you are sitting again, and have had no further volcanic outbreaks. Gumpert laughs at your antipathy to arsenic, says that it is just the thing to make you sprightly and is convinced there is no better remedy for you. But if you are flatly opposed to it, then you should take acids, and that constantly, so once again he encloses a prescription for the aqua regia prescribed before, and this you really will take.
Page me42.524

Best wishes to your wife and the girls, ditto Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me42.525
Page me42.525

Alberich, the strong dwarf,†a I hereby greet most humbly on his birthday and empty a glass of beer to his health at this instant. They forgot about the COTTON at the factory so I shall only be able to send it tomorrow.

Page me42.525
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

320
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.525
Manchester, 23 January 1868

Dear Moor,

From the enclosed scrawl you can see what Wilhelmchen has not done.†586 I shall give him a fitting wigging in the next few days. A JOLLY IDEA, we should 'utilise' the position he has created for himself locally in Saxony, in fact stand up for him BODILY. His rag†b arrived for me today, I have not yet been able to look at it.
Page me42.525

I hope you are finally finished with that obstinate carbuncle. But you will at last realise, won't you, that simply letting this matter slide can no longer be tolerated, and that at the very least you must have daily vigorous exercise in the fresh air, and regular 'renunciation' of night work (as soon as the first is possible), in order that you should become at all capable of work again. Like this, the second volume will never eventuate.†418

Page me42.525

Enclosed are the shares for Strohn.†c

Page me42.525

I really don't know what to do about the Vienna articles. Apart from the Neue Freie Presse and Wiener Tagblatt, I do not know by name any paper in which Richter has a hand; owing to almost complete ignorance of the audience I have no idea where to begin, and this is the most important point. Laura writes that to instruct people is ALL VERY WELL, but to pick out the right point is the real difficulty. I am just going through the whole book†a once again to make this clear to myself, and your opinion would be welcome.

Page Break me42.526

Page me42.526

It is also a good presumption on the part of Wilhelmchen to suggest that I should explain to him and his readers once and for all, on one page of his rag, and from this book, what the difference really is between Marx and Lassalle. This presumption has suggested to me that it might be a good idea to write a popular little pamphlet Marx and Lassalle of about 6 sheets for the workers; in this space it could be managed and the positive things required for the workers could be developed. It would have to be sold dirt cheap, and the Lassalleans would immediately be forced to take up a position. But for this, time is needed.†587

Page me42.526

You really cannot ask me to drudge my way through Borkheim's Russian pamphlets†b — at least not at the moment. I have a lot to do in the office and come home late, so that I cannot get down to anything before 8 o'clock and, moreover, I have to live a life of great regularity, since for some time now I have been sleeping badly and as a result am often a wreck in the morning, something which has never happened in my life before. Besides, there are sometimes unavoidable hindrances, and the absolute necessity of having physical exercise so as to get my sleep back to normal. Each Russian pamphlet would consume 8-14 days in view of my necessity of working myself in again, and the poor quality of the dictionaries. Ne vaut pas la paine.†c

Page me42.526

About the Fortnightly†509 next time. I am still ruminating about this point. Monetary matters — important as they may be for England — I shall probably only be able to touch upon fleetingly in the first article; otherwise this subject would take up the whole article. If a second could be placed, then it would still be suitable. What do you think?

Page me42.526

Best wishes to your wife and the girls as well as Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.526
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.527

321
MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.527
[London,] 25 January 1868

DEAR FRED,

I went out again yesterday for the first time, and the scar will be healed in 1-2 days. Naturally I am still weak after this bad attack.
Page me42.527

I hope that your indisposition is only the momentary outcome of the week on the spree. In any case, you must not neglect your health for my sake or for ANY BODY OR THING ELSE.
Page me42.527

In last week's Saturday Review there is a note about my book.†a I have not seen it yet, and also do not know who wrote it. Borkheim has communicated the FACT to me.
Page me42.527

As regards Liebknecht, one should no longer butter him up. This young man very much likes to play the 'protector', as he already showed once earlier when he was in London. This is also shown by his latest letter to you.†586 He feels very important, and au cas de besoin nous ferons notre petit bonhomme de chemin sans lui et malgré lui.†b What magnanimity that he has reprinted the preface, which nearly all the papers printed months ago!†456 And in addition he has actually had 2 COPIES of my book sent to Contzen and the editor of the Volks-Zeitung! To SHOW HIM THE COLD SHOULDER is best. Apart from this, I do not believe that he has yet read 15 pages of the book. He had not read Herr Vogt a whole year after it had appeared, and that was not very heavy reading. His motto is: teach but not learn.
Page me42.527

As far as the 'Lassalleans' are concerned, I only deal with the TRADE UNIONS, COOPERATIVE SOCIETIES, etc. in Volume II.†c I think therefore that I shall at present only take the initiative with regard to 'Lassalle' if a direct occasion should offer itself.
Page me42.527

Regarding the way to deal with the Viennese, I shall write to you shortly, when my head is ALL RIGHT again.
Page me42.527
Please return the enclosed letters from Kugelmann and Kertbény. I have not yet replied. Coppel the Great hasn't turned up yet.†588

Page Break me42.528
Page me42.528
It would be beneficial in my present state if you could let me have a shipment of your more FULLFLAVOURED claret (also SOME HOCK or Moselle).
Page me42.528
Card, the Pole, has written from Geneva and offered himself as French translator, he seems to have a book-seller in Geneva. Through my wife I have had this letter sent to Schily, so that he can use it in Paris to further the affair.†539 Card is absolutely unsuitable, except to give Moses†a a fright.
Page me42.528
For 2-3 weeks I shall do absolutely no work (i.e. writing), at the most read; and as soon as the wound is completely healed (in the meantime, I THINK ONLY FOR ONE OR TWO DAYS, the bad part rubs and itches when I walk) then I shall do a lot of walking. It would be dreadful if a 3rd monster were to erupt.
Page me42.528
And now, salut, MY DEAR BOY.

Your
K. Marx

Page me42.528
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

322
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.528
London, 30 January 1868

Dear Kugelmann,
Cut, lanced, etc., in short treated in every respect secundum legem artis.†b Despite this, the business continues to break out again, so that I have been lying quite fallow for 8 weeks, with the exception of two or three days. Last Saturday I went out again for the first time; Monday a relapse. I hope that it will come to an end this week, but who can give me a guarantee against new eruptions? It is extremely vexatious. In addition, my head is very affected by the business. My friend Dr Gumpert in Manchester is urging the use of arsenic. What do you think about this?

Page Break me42.529
Page me42.529
Your Coppel hasn't turned up yet.†588
Page me42.529
Kertbény is a German-Hungarian, whose real name, entre nous,†a is Benkert. The German-Hungarians love to Magyarise their names. I don't know him personally. As he had a row with Vogt ABOUT 1860, I approached him for some information but received nothing of any use. (My Hungarian material comes partly from Szemere, partly from my personal experiences in London.) Later he turned to me in connection with a row he was having with Kossuth. Much as I have enquired around, I have learned nothing politically suspicious about him. He appears to be a scribbling BUSYBODY. His heresies quant á†b Bonaparte may be found amongst many otherwise honest eastern barbarians. In any case, WATCH HIM. And I would consider it more diplomatic not to display any mistrust of him (for which reason I am enclosing, through you, the biographical note which he requested). 'Meanwhile,' as soon as the writing position no longer troubles me, I shall 'order' information about him elsewhere.
Page me42.529
You guessed rightly about 'Plagiarism'. I intentionally wrote rudely and clumsily in order to make Hofstetten suspect Liebknecht, and to conceal the source.†572 This entre nous.
Page me42.529
You probably know that Engels and Siebel have also had newspaper articles published about my book in the Barmer Zeitung,†c Elberfelder Zeitung,†d Frankfurter Börsenzeitung†529 and — to the distress of Heinrich Bürgers — in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung.†e Siebel was the man in Barmen to whom I wished to introduce you. He is, however, now in Madeira for his health.
Page me42.529
A week ago on Saturday The Saturday Review†f — the 'BLOOD AND CULTURE' PAPER — included a note about my book in a review of recent German books. I came out of it relatively well, as you will see from the following passage:

* 'The author's views may be as pernicious as we conceive them to be, but there can be no question as to the plausibility of his logic, the vigour of his rhetoric, and the charm with which he invests the driest problems of political economy.'*†589

Page me42.529
Ouff!
Page me42.529
My best greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen.†g You will be receiving other photograms from here, for we have now discovered that the WATERCOLOURS applied which look good on the first day, run into PATCHES immediately afterwards.

Page Break me42.530

Page me42.530
Write to me as often as time permits. During my indisposition, and many occasions for vexation, letters from friends are welcome.
Page me42.530
Salut.
Yours
K.M.

Page me42.530
[Autobiographical Notes]†590

Karl Marx, Ph. D., born Trier, 5 May 1818.
Page me42.530
1842-43, first contributor, then redacteur en chef†a of the Rheinische Zeitung (Cologne). During his editorship the government subjected the paper to double censorship; after censorship by the proper censor, the superior censor of the Regierungspräsident.†b Finally suppressed on cabinet orders. Marx leaves Germany, moves to Paris.
Page me42.530
1844 publishes in Paris, with A. Ruge, the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher, banned in Germany.
Page me42.530
Further Die heilige Familie, Kritik der kritischen Kritik, gegen Bruno Bauer und Konsorten. (Frankfurt a/M. Literarische Anstalt.)
Page me42.530
January 1845,†c expelled from France by Guizot at the instigation of the Prussian Government, Marx proceeds to Brussels, forms the German Workers' Society in Brussels in 1847,†d gives lectures on political economy there,†591 contributor to the French Réforme (Paris), etc.
Page me42.530
1847: Misére de la Philosophie. Réponse á la Philosophie de la Misére de M. Proudhon.
Page me42.530
Ditto: Discours sur le libre échange and other pamphlets.
Page me42.530
1848, with F. Engels: Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei. Arrested and expelled from Belgium, invited back to France on the written invitation of the provisional government. Leaves France April 1848, founds in Cologne:
Page me42.530
Neue Rheinische Zeitung (June 1848-May 1849). Marx expelled from Prussia, after the government had vainly prosecuted him through legal channels. Twice acquitted at assizes (once press trial, the other time for incitement to rebellion). Marx's defence speeches published in Zwei politische Prozesse, Cologne.
Page me42.530

1849. Final, red issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.

Page Break me42.531
Page me42.531
Marx moves to Paris. Expelled from there August†a 1849, was to be interned in Brittany (Morbihan), refuses this, expelled from France, moves to London, where he has resided until the present.
Page me42.531
1850 published: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue (Hamburg).
Page me42.531
1851-52: contributor to the London Chartist paper: The People's Paper, Ernest Jones': Notes to the People, etc.
Page me42.531
1852: Der 18. Brumaire des Louis Bonaparte, New York.
Page me42.531
Enthüllungen über den Kommunistenprozess zu Köln, Basel. Since this edition was confiscated on the German frontier, new edition in Boston, 1853.
Page me42.531
1853-54: Flysheets against Lord Palmerston.†592
Page me42.531
1859: Zur Kritik der Politischen Oekonomie, Berlin.
Page me42.531
1860: Herr Vogt.
Page me42.531
1851-1862†b: regular contributor to the English-language Tribune (New York).†c Contributions to Putnam's Review (New York)†593 and the new Cyclopaedia Americana (New York).
Page me42.531
1861: after the amnesty visited Berlin; Prussian Government refused his renaturalisation.†583
Page me42.531
1864†d: published by order of the Central Council of the International Working Men's Association Address to the Working Class of Europe.†e
Page me42.531
1867: Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Ökonomie. Vol. I, Hamburg.

Page me42.531
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.531
[London,] 1 February 1868

Dear FRED,

I hope that you are not also indisposed, since you have not written to me this week, and not returned the letters of Kugelmann and Kertbény (I need them to reply).†588 Last Tuesday I went out to the Museum†f and for a stroll. On Wednesday a new eruption broke out. It is smaller, and does not prevent me sitting, since it is on the upper side of my left thigh. Walking is harmful, however, because of the friction and the spreading of the inflammation. I believe this monster will die out during this week. After the numerous disappointments, I scarcely dare to hope that no more follow. The devil take this mucky business.

Page Break me42.532
Page me42.532

Enclosed a letter from Schily. According to him, things look rotten in Paris, as does everything connected with Moses.†a Reclus does not seem to me to be the right man either.†539 There can naturally be no question of the Pole†b in Geneva. As soon as your article for the Fortnightly†509 is AT HAND, Lafargue will do it into French for the Courrier français.
Page me42.532

From the enclosed Viennese cuttings, which Fox sent me from Vienna, you can see how Lassalle and Delitzsch†c are rampant there. At the same time as the rascal Bernhard Becker turned up there as a great man. He is now a 'Great-German'†d in the Bismarck style.
Page me42.532

If you still have a copy of your article in the Frankfurter Börsenzeitung,†e send it to me.†529
Page me42.532

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.532

The Freiligrath begging campaign†422 is going ahead; it has already raised over 32,000 talers.

Page me42.532
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

324
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.532
Manchester, 2 February 1868

Dear Moor,

The reason for my silence was that I wanted to inform you, together with the letter, of the dispatch of the wine. However, the fellow who packs wine for me had an accident, and will be lying sick for at least 14 days, and so I have not been able to manage it yet; possibly I shall pack it myself tomorrow. You will receive very good 1863 claret and 1857 Rhine wine; I only have a few bottles of Moselle left, and they are in Mornington Street, where I cannot have them packed.

Page Break me42.533
Page me42.533

Then I was also chasing after The Saturday Review and have with great trouble got hold of the notice. If you have not seen it, I can send you a copy — not much in it, but nevertheless a good sign.†a
Page me42.533

At the moment, in addition to the tremendous amount of work connected with the annual accounts and that resulting from the revival in business, I must also rush around like mad as chairman of the Schiller Institute,†28 since the affair of the building fund must be decided within 14 days, and until then all the work falls on me myself. However, I shall start with the piece for the Fortnightly.†509 Important and interesting as the question of money is for England as well, I still think it appropriate to allow it to retreat into the background this time; it would distract attention from the main theme and demand a long explanation so that the English might understand that the subject is simply money as such, which he is accustomed to think of only in its entanglement with credit money, etc. What do you think?
Page me42.533

Kertbény's idea of having your portrait in the Leipzig Illustrirte is quite splendid.†588 This sort of advertisement penetrates right into the depths of the philistine's heart. Give him everything he needs for this. The fellow can be used for other things too, is very willing, and has the need to intervene busily everywhere and in everything. Vain, but not stupid for a Hungarian. His assessment of the German-Austrians at that time was very correct.
Page me42.533

Card, the Pole, has sent me an insoluble puzzle with his signature. Cwi...chiewicz, neither my knowledge of handwriting nor my philology suffices for the solution of it. OF COURSE, HE WOULD NEVER DO AS A TRANSLATOR, and what Schily writes†b is very fishy. If Reclus alone wants 3,000-4,000 francs, and Moses†c who wants to do the main work, also his share, and you should be paid the droits d'auteur,†d where should the publisher come from?†539 And these people should be left to do the job of 'condensing' and 'Frenching' it? Moses, who would rather be capable of watering down into 20 volumes the chapter about absolute surplus value†594 than condensing a page of it by one line? It is really your fault; if you write strictly dialectically for German science, then afterwards, when it comes to the translations, particularly the French, you fall into evil hands.

Page Break me42.534
Page me42.534
The Frankfurter Börsenzeitung†a like all the rest I have sent to Meissner, from whom I have heard nothing since.†529 I wrote to him that he should make up an advertisement from the various articles.†131
Page me42.534
Liebknecht's rag†b displeases me to the highest degree. Nothing but concealed South German federalism. The article on Swiss and Prussian military history has been worked up on the basis of Grün (K.) in Les États-Unis d'Europe,†595 almost every word is wrong. Furthermore there is nothing in the rag, and though he is as thick as thieves with Hanoverian particularists and South German louts, he attacks the Berlin Zukunft people who, the devil take it, are at least as good as that rabble. Incidentally I have only received 3 numbers.
Page me42.534
What little trust the Prussians have in the internal peace in the new provinces†596 is shown by the new stationing and organisation of the army. For instance, 3 Hanoverian infantry and 2 cavalry regiments are stationed in Westphalia or rather Wesel, while in Hanover there are only 2 Hanoverian infantry and 3 cavalry regiments but, besides, in Westphalia 4 infantry and 2 cavalry regiments. It is true that in Schleswig-Holstein home regiments are stationed with one exception, but 2 infantry and 2 cavalry regiments from the old provinces as well. In Hesse there are indeed nominally 3 Hessian regiments of infantry, but of these the 82nd (2nd Hessian) consists of Westphalians! And the Nassauers have been sent to Hesse, the Hessians to Nassau, and parts of both with old Prussian regiments sent to Mainz. Finally Frankfurt is kept in order by Pomeranian infantry and Rhineland cavalry.
Page me42.534
The great Borchardt seems to be approaching the target of his career. You know that for years he has transferred his priestly leanings from the beautiful Mrs Steinthal to the even more beautiful Mrs Schwabe, and that every year he has taken her to Germany to a spa because of her weakened health, and brought her back again, while her husband has to stay at home out of respect for his wife's health. So, Borchardt even took her, as Schwabe told Knowles and me one day, 'to Königsberg for the coronation' — whereupon I naturally asked: 'Whose coronation?'

Page Break me42.535
Although I made fun of the cuckolded jackass for a whole half hour over the coronation, and fat Knowles was laughing aloud, the oaf noticed nothing. But now, after the priestly doctor had kept the husband apart from his sick wife for years, it suddenly emerges that the sick wife is pregnant and expects her accouchement about April. Remarkably, the high priest must have been guilty of some carelessness or foolishness sufficiently for the cuckolded jackass to suddenly see the light; he leaves his house here and moves to Berlin, sells his HUNTERS although he will still be here for the whole hunting season, resigns his club membership, and is so hostile to the high priest that when the latter manages to launch a collection for the East Prussians here and sends £700 to the Zukunft, the cuckolded jackass throws himself into the arms of the Prussian consul and together with him collects abour £350 for the official committee. Now there is a lot of talk about this amongst the philistines, and although the story above is only whispered about in the dark, the position of the high priest has been badly shattered, and many people dare to speak of him with disrespect. He no longer looks so jovial and elegant. I wonder how things will proceed. (Nota bene. The names in this story are between you and me.)

Page me42.535

Best greetings to the ladies and Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.535
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

325
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.535
[London,] 4 February 1868

DEAR FRED,

Many thanks for the 'medicine BOTTLES'.
Page me42.535

I still have two not quite withered buds under my left arm and on my left thigh. However, they do not bother me when walking. I feel GENERALLY better as well.

Page Break me42.536
Page me42.536

I quite agree with you that you should not go into the money theory for the time being, but only indicate that the matter has been treated in a new way.†a
Page me42.536

Enclosures from Vienna from Fox (please send them back to me). You see what effect your essay in the Börsenzeitung†b is having.†529 It is perhaps best to leave Vienna to its own devices. It is enough that attention has been drawn there to my book.†c The whole business is very immature. When you consider how agriculture still predominates in the Empire en gros, then it is comical to watch these somersaults. What prevails in Vienna is finance, and not large industry. However, as a ferment the hubbub cannot hurt.

Page me42.536

Kugelmann has sent me Dühring's Verkleinerer Carey's. I was right that he only noticed me in order to annoy the others.†d What is very conspicuous is the very coarse way in which this affected Berliner handles Mill, Roscher, etc., while he treats me with timid care. According to him, apart from Carey, List is the greatest genius of the 19th century. In another pamphlet Kapital und Arbeit which I saw today at the Museum,†e he 'abuses' Lassalle. I shall send you his book to look at one of these days.
Page me42.536

Perhaps there will be no war this year. The fellows are all anxious about domestic conditions. However, the Russians will not neglect to provide causes of friction. They will lie fallow if they do not manage to bring Germany and France to blows.
Page me42.536

Coppel was here on Sunday and will come again on Wednesday.†588 He is here to put the financial affairs of the King of Hanover†f in order. He is a merry fellow. Kugelmann has forced this cousin of the Rothschilds to study my book.
Page me42.536

There is little new for me in Schorlemmer's letter†g. But still MY THANKS.
Page me42.536

Salut.
Your Moro

Page me42.536

I can only send the newspaper cuttings tomorrow because the BOXES for BOOK-POST were closed.

Page me42.536
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.537

326
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.537
Manchester, 11 February 1868
7 Southgate

Memorandum from Engels to Mr Moor†597

I have received your letter and that from your HONOURABLE SECRETARY†a and return enclosed the Viennese cuttings and Meyer's letter. What a frightful tragedy at the Weydemeyers.†598 I am of the opinion that an article should be contributed to the Debatte (via Richter), and that one should strike while the iron is hot.†599 It will be sent this week. The 'specialist criticism' in the Frankfurter Börsenzeitung†b is extremely amusing.†529 It is significant that these Viennese literary gents, all Jews as cunning as foxes, who well know all the tricks, should regard the German press outside Austria as bona fide.
Page me42.537

Dühring amuses me very much. The thrusts at Roscher, Mill, etc., were a godsend for him — but what a difference there is between the embarrassed tone of the criticism†c and the saucy nature of the pamphlet.†d
Page me42.537

I do not believe either there will be war, if only because the Peace League†461 describes it as unavoidable; in any case, Sadowa†348 has made it impossible for Bonaparte to start a war against Germany without great alliances. And since at the best he could only get Austria (England, as always, or more than ever, would not count militarily), and would have Prussia and Russia against him, the whole business is fishy. Italy is no good either, and furthermore he mucked things up for himself there. HE IS FLOORED. Even the great Karl Schurz, ex-student General Fart,†e has confided this to Bismarck secretly.†600
Page me42.537

It is nearly 7 o'clock, and I have not had dinner yet. I must go home first, so enough for today.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.537
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.538

327
MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.538
[London,] 15 February 1868

DEAR FRED,

Forced since yesterday to stay at home again, since the monster under my left shoulder-blade is developing viciously. It appears that this shit will never end.
Page me42.538
From Bordeaux I have received all the papers for the marriage.†601 I am very worried about this. It should take place on 1 April, and nothing has been prepared for Laura. She cannot be sent out into the world like a beggar. I have written to Holland,†a†111 but NO ANSWER.
Page me42.538
I am writing only these few lines since the writing position is uncomfortable for me today.
Page me42.538
Have you received further PAPERS from the important Wilhelmchen†b? I have heard and seen nothing of it since THE 2 FIRST NUMBERS.
Page me42.538
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.538
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

328
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.538
[London,] 20 February 1868

DEAR FRED,
At the same time as this I am sending you an interesting cutting from a Viennese paper,†c received via Fox.

Page Break me42.539
Page me42.539
Borkheim gave me a letter to him from Liebknecht, which I had to send back to him by return. From this the following excerpt:
Page me42.539
'Tell Marx that Dr Contzen is working on a long review, and in a lecture has already mentioned the work†a in the most laudatory terms from the purely scientific standpoint. And tell Marx, too, that he should get Engels to supply an article about Capital for our paper†b which now circulates 1,300 copies equally-spread throughout Germany. I myself have no time at present for such a job.'

Page me42.539

If you think it worth the trouble to supply something for the paper, it would be good to make the article longer this time (with extracts), even if it had to run through several numbers.†602 Borkheim will probably be sending you a reprint — if you do not have the paper — of the 'Russian refugees' which he wrote for it.†c

Page me42.539

Dr Contzen, BY THE BY, himself publishes (or published) an economic periodical patrone†d Roscher.

Page me42.539

Regarding health, CHANGE from day to day.

Page me42.539

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me42.539

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

329

ENGELS TO MARX†302

IN LONDON

Page me42.539

Manchester, 20 February 1868

7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

This week you will have to regard me as completely out of action. I have such a frightful lot of work at the firm as a result of the sudden rise in cotton that I do not get out of the office from the morning on until 7 o'clock in the evening, and do not get my dinner until 8 o'clock in the evening. You will understand what one is capable of after that. I hope that the damned carbuncle has got settled. Hearty greetings to your wife, the girls and Lafargue.

Page Break me42.540

Your

F.E.

Page me42.540

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

330
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.540
[Manchester,] 1 March 1868

Dear Moor,

The whole of last week I worked like a slave from morning till night in commerce so that I was good for nothing at all. This has now passed, I think, and this week I should get back on to the rails.

Page me42.540

Enclosure from Meissner. His draft is naturally absolutely unusable: I shall see whether I cannot knock together something better for him. Now I am sorry that I sent him the articles, I should already have prepared something for him from them.†a

Page me42.540

I shall write something for Wilhelmchen†b; verbatim extracts would be difficult, but I can spin out some main points to some extent for his public.†602 I, too, have seen only 3 numbers of the rag,†c and these could have been edited by Gustav Struve. Since Wilhelmchen was left to his own devices his South German basic federative republicanism (how earnest†d the man is) has broken out again in full glory. The fellow even re-prints Karl Grün.†595

Page me42.540

How is your carbuncle faring? Let us hope that this is finally the last.

Page Break me42.541

Page me42.541

Mr Goegg obstinately sends me the Les États-Unis d'Europe (the fellow wants me to get an agency for him, thus the devotion). Since the paper appears simultaneously and with the same contents in German and French, it would not be bad at all to announce your book†a there and Goegg has promised to insert articles by you or me. What do you think of that?

Page me42.541

Best greetings to your wife, the girls and Lafargue.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.541

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

331
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.541
[London,] 4 March 1868

Dear FRED,

From the enclosed scrawl you will see that, if I do not pay £7.5.0 by the day after tomorrow, MY 'CHATTELS' SHALL BE DISTRAINED.

Page me42.541

The carbuncle business is now reduced to a residuum under my left arm, which should soon fade.

Page me42.541

That I write you only these few lines today is due to a HORRIBLE headache.

Page me42.541

Make sure that Meissner does not write any nonsense on his own. If the jackass had only sent back the newspaper cuttings.†b

Page me42.541

Enclosed scrawl from S. Meyer, which you should please return.

Page me42.541

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.541
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.542

332
MARX TO ENGELS†238
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.542
[London,] 6 March 1868

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR THE £10.

Page me42.542

The copies of Social-Demokrat promised by Meissner have not arrived. This shows that he is not at all precise. Thus for instance the copies for Paris have not been dispatched either. There the worthy Moses†a has prevaricated for so long†603 that the Courrier français has now finally announced that as the result of the many amendes,†b etc., it will soon completely quit the stage.

Page me42.542

I have not seen Eichhoff's lucubrations and anyway not the Zukunft for a very long time.†604 Since Eichhoff's brother†c is a bookseller and specialises in political economy (he is the publisher of several opera of Dr Dühring), this is reason enough for Eichhoff to deliver lectures on the same subject.

Page me42.542

My head is in a sorry state. But that should 'disappear' BY AND BY, as soon as the last traces of carbuncledom have gone.

Page me42.542

I wrote to Holland†111 again yesterday since the matter is becoming brûlante.†d Old Lafargue†e has dealt with the necessary marriage BANNS, etc., in Bordeaux, and has sent all the papers here. He now expects that the wedding will take place here at the beginning of next month, and that the pair will go to Paris, to which he will later move. We, however, have not yet risked taking the necessary steps here for the BANNS, since my wife has not yet been able to acquire even the most essential things for Laura. For worthy Freiligrath all this went very smoothly, but then he is 'noble'.

Page me42.542

As soon as this affair is SETTLED, it will be a great relief for the entire household, since Lafargue is as good as living with us, which perceptibly increases EXPENSES.

Page me42.542

As far as the 'reviews' are concerned, I think that after you have supplied Liebknecht†602 you should abandon the German ones and only pursue the English. First, the echo of an English review in Germany is more powerful than vice versa, and secondly this is, after all, the only country where finally money can be made from the business.

Page Break me42.543

Page me42.543

Mr Macleod has nevertheless achieved a 2nd edition of his lousy and pedantic-scholastic book on BANKS.†a He is a very stilted jackass who expresses every banal tautology 1. in algebraic form, and 2. constructs it geometrically. I have already given him a passing kick in the pamphlet published by Duncker.†b His 'great' discovery is: credit is capital.

Page me42.543

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page me42.543
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

333
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.543
London, 6 March 1868

Dear Friend,

As soon as Coppel vanished, my condition got worse again. Scarcely, I think, because of his departure. Post not propter.†c (After all he is, in his way, quite a nice man. But that particular way is, in my present state, too healthy for me to harmonise with it very well.) This is therefore the reason for my silence, so that I did not even inform you of the receipt of Thünen.†d There is something touching about the latter. A Mecklenburg squire (moreover, one with German distinction of thought), who treats his estate of Tellow as the land and Mecklenburg-Schwerin as the town, and who, proceeding from these premises, constructs for himself the Ricardian theory of ground rent, with the help of observation, differential calculus, practical accountancy, etc. This is estimable and at the same time ridiculous.
Page me42.543

The curiously embarrassed tone used by Mr Dühring in his review†e is now clear to me. Usually, you see, he is a very bumptious, insolent lad, who sets himself up as a revolutionary in political economy. He has done two things. Firstly (basing himself upon Carey) he published a Kritische Grundlegung der Nationalökonomie (ABOUT 500 PAGES), and a new Natürliche Dialektik (against Hegelian dialectic). My book has buried him in both respects. He reviewed it out of hatred for Roscher, etc. Incidentally he practises deception, half intentionally and half from lack of insight. He knows full well that my method of exposition is not Hegelian, since I am a materialist, and Hegel an idealist. Hegel's dialectic is the basic form of all dialectic, but only after being stripped of its mystical form, and it is precisely this which distinguishes my method. Quant á†a Ricardo, Mr Dühring has been vexed precisely because in my treatment the weak points do not exist which Carey, and 100 others before him, held up as proof against Ricardo. Consequently, he attempts, with mauvaise foi,†b to burden me with Ricardo's narrow-mindedness. BUT NEVER MIND. I must be grateful to the man, since he is the first expert who has said anything at all.

Page Break me42.544
Page me42.544

In volume II†418 (which will probably never appear if my condition does not change) property in land will be one of the subjects analysed, competition only in so far as called for in the treatment of other themes.
Page me42.544
During my indisposition (which I hope will soon cease altogether) I have not been able to write, but have gobbled up enormous masses of 'material', statistical and otherwise; this alone would have made SICK those whose stomachs are not accustomed to this type of fodder and the rapid digestion of the same.
Page me42.544
My circumstances are very harassing, since I was unable to do any additional work which would bring in money, but must always maintain a certain appearance for the children's sake. If I didn't have to produce these 2 damned volumes (and look for an English publisher besides), which can be done only in London, I would move to Geneva where I could live very well with the means at my disposal. My daughter No. II†c is getting married at the end of this month.†601
Page me42.544
Greetings to Fränzchen.

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.544
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 6, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

Page Break me42.545

334
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.545
Manchester, 10 March 1868

Dear Moor,
Do not forget to return to me the things from Meissner,†a otherwise I cannot reply to him.
Page me42.545
If the Dutch†b do not write to you soon, I shall see what I can do. I suppose something can still be managed.
Page me42.545
The storm in commerce is beginning to die down, so I can work again in the evening. What you say about the Fortnightly is quite right; what is published there can be used again afterwards in Germany. The matter should be undertaken as quickly as possible.†509 But you will understand it is not possible to do much in the evening when you only get your midday meal at 7.30 or 8 in the evening.

Page me42.545

Eichhöffchen enclosed. — You will see that besides his brother†c he also has other 'grounds' to lecture on political economy.†604

Page me42.545

So, the Russians have again postponed the business in Turkey.†605 As long as they have no railways, I really cannot believe that they seriously intend any serious action. Moreover, they have an awful famine in the interior.

Page me42.545

The costs of the Bismarckian gloire, etc., are beginning to tell. 1864 — population of Prussia 19,250,000. 1867 — 19,668,000 for the old Provinces. According to the rate hitherto — 250,000 per year, it should have been 20 million. The rate has thus been reduced to one half. In the administrative districts of Münster, Minden, and Koblenz (inter alia) the population has actually declined. Biggest increase in Berlin and Düsseldorf administrative district.

Your
F.E.

Page me42.545

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx. Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.546

335

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me42.546

Manchester, 13 March 1868

Dear Moor,

For Meissner I still lack the letter from von Eynern. I wanted to prepare an advertisement†a today but was disturbed.

Page me42.546

Enclosed from Vienna.†606 Have written to Wilhelmchen†b for information. I think I shall accept in general, but say that the matter must remain secret 'in order not to disturb my other connections in the Viennese press'.

Page me42.546

I also sent Wilhelm two articles about your book, completely popular for workers (so that even Wilhelm will understand them).†c

Page me42.546

At the same time, I have coached him in his role in order to work over in the Reichstag the new code for crafts and manufactures (which also includes factory legislation).†607 This opportunity is very good in order to ADVERTISE the book, and I am convinced that this will also have a considerable effect, since even the official economists have to draw on it.
Page me42.546
Since yesterday I have been fit for work again — on the one hand, I get back earlier in the evening, and, on the other, I have discovered that for 14 days I had been drinking beer poisoned probably with cocculus indicus,†d which totally narcotised me in the evening. I CHANGED THE TAP YESTERDAY — by chance — noted the difference, and discovered the cause, which I had ascribed to digestive troubles.
Page me42.546
How ABOUT CARBUNCLES?

Your
F.E.

Page me42.546
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.547

336
MARX TO ENGELS†608
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.547
[London,] 14 March†a 1868

DEAR FRED,
Since the beginning of the week I have had carbuncles on my right thigh (not yet QUITE EXTINCT). Despite this — and the consequent difficult gait — I went to the Museum,†b since this continuous being cooped up and lying down at home (the business has now lasted, with some intervals OF COURSE, over 4 months) would drive me mad. For all that, I am convinced that the present blossoms are only the last aftereffects. At the Museum — BY THE BY — I studied, amongst other things, the latest writings about the Constitution of the German Mark, Villages, etc., by OLD Maurer†c (the old Bavarian Privy Councillor, who already played a role as one of the regents of Greece, and was among the first to denounce the Russians, long before Urquhart). He demonstrates at length that private property in land only arose later, etc. The idiotic Westphalian squirearchical opinion (Möser,†d etc.) that the Germans settled each by himself, and only afterwards established villages, districts, etc., is completely refuted. It is interesting just now that the Russian manner of re-distributing land at certain intervals (in Germany originally annually) should have persisted in some parts of Germany up to the 18th century and even the 19th. The view I put forward that the Asiatic or Indian property forms everywhere mark the beginning in Europe receives new proof here†609 (although Maurer knows nothing of it). But for the Russians there disappears the last trace OF ORIGINALITY, even in THIS LINE. What remains to them is that they still maintain forms long abandoned by their neighbours. OLD Maurer's books (from 1854 and 1856, etc.) are written with real German erudition, but, at the same time, in the more homely and readable manner which sets the southern Germans apart from the northern Germans (Maurer is from Heidelberg, but this applies even more to the Bavarians and Tyroleans, such as Fallmerayer, Fraas, etc.). Here and there a hat is doffed deeply — re, non verbis†a — to OLD Grimm (Rechtsalterthümer,†b etc.). Besides, I looked at the things by Fraas, etc., on agriculture.†c

Page Break me42.548
Page me42.548

BY THE BY, you must send me back the Dühring,†d and, at the same time, the page proofs of my book.†e You will have seen from Dühring what Carey's great discovery is, namely, that in agriculture humanity proceeds from poorer to increasingly better soil. Partly because cultivation descends from the dry hills, etc., to the damp lowlands. But in particular because Mr Carey considers the most fertile soil marshes and so on, which first have to be converted into soil. And finally because the English colonisation in America began with that lousy New England which is Carey's model country: Massachusetts in particular.
Page me42.548

THANKS for your efforts with the damned book. I cannot find Eynern's letter but suffit†f to write to Meissner that you sent it to me.†g I have received the same letter from Vienna, with a few modifications.†606 I enclose the cuttings about Lassalle sent me by Fox. Apart from the arch-blackguard B. Becker, Reusche is in Vienna; this vagabond is there for Hatzfeldt money (as our J. Ph. Becker writes to Borkheim) — the enclosed Viennese Lassalle-creature article is by him — in order to glorify Izzy as the Son of God, and the beastly old girl as the Mother of God.
Page me42.548

From Holland†h I have still not heard anything, and the wedding should be on April 8th (with difficulty despite Lafargue I have postponed the business that far).†601 In addition, I have on the 17th (next Tuesday) to pay ABOUT £5 for water and gas (also last SUMMONS). As for the DUTCH, it appears to me that I shall not squeeze anything out of them until I once again pounce upon them personally, without previous notice. But JUST NOW there can be no question of this.
Page me42.548

Have you read about the scandal (Borkheim informed me of it) between Dühring and 'Privy Councillor' Wagener, with the former accusing the latter of pinching his manuscript†610 or something or other about workers' cooperation.
Page me42.548

Salut.

Your

K.M.

Page Break me42.549
Page me42.549

From Maurer I have noted that the change in opinions about the history and development of 'Germanic' property, etc., proceeds from the Danes who are apparently tremendously active in all kinds of archaeology in every corner. But, although they thus give the impulse, something is always missing with them SOMEWHERE OR ELSE. They lack the proper critical instinct, and in particular the sense of proportion. I was extremely struck by the fact that Maurer, though often referring, for instance, to Africa, Mexico, etc., knows absolutely nothing about the Celts, and therefore ascribes the development of common ownership in France solely to the Germanic conquerors. 'As though,' Mr Bruno†a would say, 'as though' we did not possess a Celtic (Welsh) book of laws from the 11th century†b which is entirely communist, and 'as though' the French in recent years had not just excavated original settlements in Celtic form here and there. As though! But the matter is quite simple. Besides German and ancient Roman relations, OLD Maurer has only studied oriental (Greek-Turkish!) ones.

Page me42.549
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

337
MARX TO ENGELS†522
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.549
[London,] 16 March 1868

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed a letter to Kugelmann from a young Bielefeld manufacturer.†c I am particularly amused by his idea that I myself must have formerly been a sewing-machine EMPLOYING MANUFACTURER. If people only knew how little I know of all that stuff.
Page me42.549

The question is also unavoidable: what now? The fellows all want recipes for miracle cures, and do not see the fairly graspable cure by fire and iron already plainly indicated.

Page Break me42.550
Page me42.550

It is strange how Dollfus (Alsace) has won such false renommé. This HUMBUG, who ranks far beneath such Englishmen as Briggs, etc., has drafted his contracts with his workers, contracts that could only be entered into by a degenerate rabble, in such a way that they do in fact become his colony of serfs, and in fact he treats them well 'as serfs', and exploits them as neatly as anybody else. And on this account the brute recently introduced in the Corps législatif the nasty paragraph of the Press Law about the 'vie privée qui doit être murée'.†a†611 For here and there light had been thrown on his philanthropic juggling.
Page me42.550

The way in which the English in Ireland are now treating political prisoners, or just suspects, or those only sentenced to ordinary prison terms (like Pigott of The Irishman and Sullivan of the News†b) in fact exceeds anything seen on the Continent†612 — except Russia. They are curs!
Page me42.550

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.550
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

338
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.550
Manchester, 17 March 1868

Dear Moor,

Yesterday evening the cashier rushed off before I had asked him for the £5 for your gas, etc., and I could not even borrow a note anywhere; it is now enclosed, and I hope this delay has not caused you any serious unpleasantness. Further money will follow in the next few days, as soon as I can view my own affairs more clearly. Has Lafargue furnished a house, etc., for he cannot take his wife into his LODGINGS?

Page Break me42.551
Page me42.551

The proofs†a and the Dühring†b I shall send to you; I forgot to take the stuff with me this morning. In haste.

Your

F.E.

Page me42.551
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

339
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†65
IN HANOVER
Page me42.551
London, 17 MARCH 1868

Dear Friend,

Your letter†c affected me both unpleasantly and pleasantly (you see I always move in a dialectical contradiction).
Page me42.551

Unpleasantly, since I know your circumstances, and it would be wretched of me to accept such presents at your family's expense. I therefore regard these £15 as an advance, which I shall repay when I am able.
Page me42.551

Pleasantly, not simply as a mark of your great friendship (and in the bustle of the world, friendship is the only personal thing that matters), but also because you have helped me over a great embarrassment in regard to the coming wedding.†601 In the past 4 months — quite apart from medicine and doctors — I have spent so much money on BLUE BOOKS,†359 Enquêtes and YANKEE REPORTS, etc., ON BANKS that I really had nothing left for my daughter.†d
Page me42.551

You can imagine that I have often discussed moving from London to Geneva, not only with myself and my family, but also with Engels. Here I have to spend £400-500 annually. In Geneva I could live on £200. But CONSIDERED ALL IN ALL this is impossible for the time being. I can only complete my work†e in London. And only here can I hope finally to derive a decent or at least adequate monetary profit from this work. This is why it is necessary that I stay here for the time being. Apart from the fact that, were I to move away from here at this critical period, the whole working-class movement, which I influence behind the scenes, would fall into very bad hands and leave the right track.

Page Break me42.552
Page me42.552

For the time being, therefore, fate binds me to London ALL DRAWBACKS NOTWITHSTANDING. Quant á†a Coppel, you do him an injustice. Had I not been indisposed he would have amused me and such a diversion never hurts the family.
Page me42.552

Engels and I have hitherto written nothing for Liebknecht's paper.†b (Engels has now sent him 2 articles about my book.†c) Eccarius is the regular London correspondent. Borkheim has written an article against Herzen et Co.†d
Page me42.552

Meyer's†e letter gave me great pleasure. However, he has partly misunderstood my exposition. Otherwise he would have seen that I depict large-scale industry not only as the mother of the antagonism, but also as the producer of material and intellectual conditions for resolving these antagonisms, though this cannot proceed along pleasant lines.
Page me42.552

With regard to the factory act — as a first condition, whereby the working class obtains ELBOW-ROOM for development and movement — I demand it from the state, as a forcible law, directed not only against the manufacturers, but also against the workers themselves. (Page 542, note 52, I indicate the resistance of women workers to a limitation of hours.) By the way, should Mr Meyer develop the same energy as Owen, he can break this resistance. That the individual manufacturer (apart from the extent to which he endeavours to influence legislation) can do little in the matter, I state ditto p. 243: 'But looking at things as a whole, all this does not, indeed, depend on the good or ill will of the individual capitalist, etc.' and ib. note 114.†613 Despite all this, the individual working person can do something, and this has been abundantly shown by such manufacturers as Fielden, Owen, etc. Their main effectiveness must naturally be of a public nature. As for the Dollfuses in Alsace, they are HUMBUGS who have managed, through their conditions of contract, to establish a comfortable and at the same time for them very profitable serfdom-relationship with their workers. They have been duly exposed in the Paris press, and for this very reason one of these Dollfuses, in the Corps législatif, recently introduced and CARRIED one of the most infamous paragraphs of the Press Law, namely that 'vie privée doit être murée'.†a†611

Page Break me42.553
Page me42.553

With heartiest greetings to your dear wife†b

Yours
K.M.

Page me42.553

Apropos: Did you see that my personal enemy Schweitzer has heaped eulogies on my head in 6 numbers of the Social-Demokrat on account of my book?†c Very harrowing for that old harlot Hatzfeldt.

Page me42.553

First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, No. 6, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

340
MARX TO ENGELS†6
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.553
[London,] 18 MARCH 1868

DEAR FRED,

The £5 received with many thanks.

Page me42.553

Laura and Lafargue will first go to Paris (after the marriage), then rent an APARTMENT here (somewhere on the Heath,†d if findable) and after Lafargue's final exam (he took the others at Bartholomew's Hospital†614) will go back to France for a time, and then move off to America, where OLD Lafargue†e has house and home.

Page me42.553

Whence comes the word†615 higid, hid, hiwisc (hida autem Anglice vocatur terra unius aratri culturae sufficiens†f)? And also the German word: wiffa (Qui signum, quod propter defensionem terrae†a that is to say, to declare the land INCLOSED, a sign instead of a real fence ponitur, quod signum wiffam vocamus†b).

Page Break me42.554

Page me42.554

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.554

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

341
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.554
Manchester, 19 March 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed £40 in two twenties, which, it is to be hoped, will suffice at least for the most urgent purposes. I had not expected that Löhrchen†c would be making a honeymoon trip to America. So the wedding is on 8 April, a Wednesday; had it been Friday, Saturday or Monday I could have got away easily.

Page me42.554

The things from OLD Maurer are very nice†d; it is really remarkable how much material already exists on these subjects, and how little the professors have been able to make of it.

Page me42.554

I shall try to discover the Anglo-Saxon word,†e but, since no Anglo-Saxon dictionary is available to me here, I shall have to make do with other sources, which are very dubious, in view of the large and peculiar stock of words in Anglo-Saxon. First of all, the correct spelling must be determined. With regard to Wiffa, a question: where is it found, so we might know whether it has Low German or High German sound shifts. If it is High German you should compare Graff's Althochdeutscher Sprachschatz, the Bayerisches Wörterbuch by Schmeller or the Swiss dictionary by Stalder. Does it not occur in Grimm's Rechtsalterthümer†f?

Page Break me42.555

Page me42.555

The accursed business with the ill-fated Schiller Institute here,†28 which Gumpert once pushed me into and then did nothing further, is finally reaching a crisis, and the matter will be decided by Wednesday. During these days I must — étant engagé†a — make a great EFFORT; I shall therefore scarcely be left with time in this period to write the English article.†509 From the middle of next week onwards I shall have peace, and will press ahead without pause. Regarding this business here, there is every prospect that I — and everything depends upon me — shall bring everything to a happy conclusion despite Borchardt and various other German cliques. Since I have been involved in the business for 4 years, and victory or defeat fall on my head, I simply must.

Page me42.555

Since you say nothing about carbuncles, I assume that everything is fading without further issue.

Page me42.555

The most conscientious reader of your book†b here is Sam Moore; he has really worked his way thoroughly through over 600 pages and is grinding indefatigably on.

Page me42.555

Best greetings.

Your

F.E.

Page me42.555

So, Plon-Plon, according to The Times,†c should inaugurate the Russian-Prussian-French alliance. This Bonaparte seems to get into a worse position every day. The stupid Prussians are continually making arrests and searching houses in the annexed lands.†596 The proofs†d and the Dühring†e will be dispatched today or tomorrow.

Page me42.555
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.556

342
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.556
[London,] Museum,†a 23 MARCH 1868

IN HASTE

DEAR FRED,

I thought Laura would notify you about the £40. She claims, however, that I did not ask her to. Thus malentendu.†b

Page me42.556

During the whole of last week I had many bleeding shingles; particularly obstinate and hard to obliterate the mess under my left armpit. But GENERALLY I feel much better, IN FACT like a RECONVALESCENT and I am sure that the business is coming to an end.

Page me42.556

At the same time, I am sending you the Schweitzer, which please return to me after use. A few lines from Meissner, in which he notifies me of his stupidity in informing Schweitzer that he should not continue with his EXTRACTS†c until I have stated my views. Quelle bêtise!†d I immediately attempted to redress things. Whatever secondary motives Schweitzer may have (e.g. to annoy old Hatzfeldt, etc.), one thing must be admitted. Although he makes a MISTAKE here and there, he has studied the stuff really hard, and knows where the centres of gravity lie. Such a 'base consciousness' is still preferable to the 'honest consciousness' of a Heinzen or the 'noble consciousness' of a Wilhelmchen.†e Hegel forgot to list idleness as an essential element of 'noble-minded consciousness'.†f

Page me42.556

More de diversis†g in the next letter.

Page me42.556

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me42.556

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.557

343
MARX TO ENGELS†101
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.557
[London,] 25 March 1868

DEAR FRED,

I wanted to write to you yesterday from the Museum,†a but I suddenly became so very unwell that I had to close the very interesting book I was reading. There was something like a black veil before my eyes. In addition, a frightful headache and chest constriction. So I crept home. The air and the light did me good, and at home I slept FOR SOME TIME. My state is such that I really should give up working and thinking entirely for SOME TIME; but that would be hard for me, even if I had the means to loaf.
Page me42.557

Ad vocem†b Maurer: his books are extremely significant.†c Not only the primitive age but also the entire later development of the free imperial cities, of the estate owners possessing immunity, of public authority, and of the struggle between the free peasantry and serfdom, get an entirely new character.
Page me42.557

The history of mankind is like palaeontology. Owing to A CERTAIN JUDICIAL BLINDNESS, even the best minds fail to see, on principle, what lies in front of their noses. Later, when the time has come, we are surprised that there are traces everywhere of what we failed to see. The first reaction to the French Revolution and the Enlightenment bound up with it was naturally to regard everything as mediaeval, romantic, and even people like Grimm are not free from this. The second reaction to it is to look beyond the Middle Ages into the primitive age of every people — and this corresponds to the socialist tendency, though these learned men have no idea that they are connected with it. And they are then surprised to find what is newest in what is oldest, and even EGALITARIANS TO A DEGREE which would have made Proudhon shudder.
Page me42.557

And we are all very much in the clutches of this JUDICIAL BLINDNESS: right in my own neighbourhood, on the Hunsrück,†d the old Germanic system survived until the last few years. I now remember my father†e talking about it to me from a lawyer's point of view. Another proof: just as the geologists, even the best like

Page Break me42.558

Cuvier, have expounded certain faits†a in a completely distorted way, so philologists of the force†b of a Grimm, mistranslated the simplest Latin sentences because they were under the influence of Möser, etc. (who, I remember, was enchanted that 'freedom' never existed among the Germans, but that 'Luft macht eigen'†c). E.g. the famous passage in Tacitus: 'arva per annos mutant, et superest ager',†d which means: they exchange the fields (arva) (by lot, hence also sortes†e in all later Leges Barbarorum†616), and there remains over communal land (ager in distinction to arva as ager publicus†f), Grimm and others translate: they till every year new fields, and there is still (untilled) land left over!†g

Page me42.558

In the same way the passage: 'colunt discreti ac diversi'†h is taken to prove that the Germans from the earliest times cultivated on individual farms like Westphalian squires. But the very same passage continues: 'Vicos locant non in nostrum morem, connexis et cohaerentibus aedificiis; suum quisque locum spatio circumdat',†i and such Germanic primitive villages, in the form described, still exist here and there in Denmark. Obviously Scandinavia must become as important for German jurisprudence and economics as for German mythology. Only by starting from there will we be able once again to decipher our past. Incidentally, even Grimm, etc., found in Caesar's writings that the Germans always settled as kinship groups, and not as individuals: 'gentibus cognationibusque, qui uno coierunt.'†j

Page me42.558

But what would OLD Hegel say, were he to learn in the hereafter that the general [das Allgemeine] in German and Nordic means only the communal land, and that the particular, the special [das. Sundre, Besondere] means only private property divided off from the communal land? Here are the logical categories coming damn well out of 'our intercourse' after all.

Page me42.558

Very interesting is the book by Fraas (1847): Klima und Pflanzenwelt in der Zeit, eine Geschichte beider, namely as proving that climate and flora change in historical times. He is a Darwinist before Darwin, and admits even the species developing in historical times. But he is at the same time agronomist. He claims that with cultivation — depending on its degree — the 'moisture' so beloved by the peasants gets lost (hence also the plants migrate from south to north), and finally steppe formation occurs. The first effect of cultivation is useful, but finally devastating through deforestation, etc. This man is both a thoroughly learned philologist (he has written books in Greek) and a chemist, agronomist, etc. The conclusion is that cultivation — when it proceeds in natural growth and is not consciously controlled (as a bourgeois he naturally does not reach this point) — leaves deserts behind it, Persia, Mesopotamia, etc., Greece. So once again an unconscious socialist tendency!

Page Break me42.559

Page me42.559

This Fraas is also interesting as a German case-study. First Dr. med., then inspector and teacher of chemistry and technology. At present head of Bavarian veterinary services, university professor, head of state agricultural experiments, etc. In his latest writings you see his advanced age, but he is still a dashing fellow. He has been around a lot in Greece, Asia Minor, Egypt! His history of agriculture is also important. He calls Fourier this 'pious and humanist socialist'.†a On the Albanians, etc. 'every sort of shameless lechery and rape'.†b

Page me42.559
We must keep a close watch on the recent and very latest in agriculture. The physical school is pitted against the chemical.
Page me42.559
Do not forget to send me back the letter of Kugelmann's manufacturer.†c
Page me42.559
Nothing pleases me better than to see you here.

Your
K.M.

Page me42.559
Apropos. Edgar's†d planter's hat has been found again, and this time you can take it to MRS Lizzy.†e

Page me42.559
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me42.560

344
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me42.560
Manchester, 29 March 1868

Dear Moor,
I am afraid I shall not finish the article for the Fortnightly†509 by Tuesday. The damned Schiller Institute business†28 kept me breathless all the week, until I finally got things cleared up yesterday. If I had failed — and several stupidities on the part of my main adjutant put everything doubtful again — I would have been terribly discredited, made ludicrous for the whole of Manchester; TO BE 'DONE' IN BUSINESS, TO GET YOURSELF 'SOLD' is naturally here the worst thing that can happen to you. Now it is a great triumph and gives me the opportunity I wanted to withdraw with honour from official participation in the affair; anyway now enough people will be pushing themselves forward for it. I am doubly annoyed because this business has made it impossible for me to complete the article; but for this I would have had to rush it, and in this case the quality is very important.

Page me42.560
Schorlemmer has made a very fine discovery: the law of the boiling points of the hydrocarbons of the series CnH2n+2' i.e. for three of the four isomeric series; of the 4th, too few have yet been described.†a
Page me42.560
I shall be arriving at your place on Wednesday evening at 9, possibly earlier.†617
Page me42.560
Where on earth can the enclosed article come from? And a letter of Bismarck's to cheer you up.
Page me42.560
Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me42.560
I can find nothing about Wiffa. But in higid, hiwisc, hida you are confusing 2 if not 3 different words.†b
Page me42.560
Anglo-Saxon hiwisce, Old Saxon and Old High German hiwiski, Old Frisian hiskthe, Old Nordic hyski, New North Frisian hiske = familia.

Page Break me42.561
Page me42.561
Higid can be the participle of the Anglo-Saxon hegjan, this verb means TO FENCE IN.
Page me42.561
Whether hide, which is still encountered locally today as a measure of land, is drawn from this, or is connected with hide cutis, Anglo-Saxon hyde, I cannot determine without an Anglo-Saxon dictionary.

Page me42.561
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.562
Page Break me42.563

APPENDICES

Page Break me42.564

Page Break me42.565

1
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.565
[London, not before 29 November 1864]

My dear Mr Engels,

Poor Moor once again has a large and very painful carbuncle. So, he has to lie down, and he finds writing very difficult. I hope that in a few days we shall be over the first eruption. It is dreadful to have that again. You would not credit how splendidly he had the bit between his teeth with the actual copying up of the book.†a There is already a sizeable stack ready for printing. The long hours of sitting and writing until far, far into the night, and the excitement this entails, are undoubtedly responsible for the renewed outbreak of the disease. Karl hopes that the interruption will not be long. He even wants to try and write something today. Enclosed is a letter from Wilhelmchen†b which he is sending you, likewise one to Weydemeyer which I would be glad if you would see to, since we do not have his address.†c The price of the cards for the 'INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY' is 1s.1d. However, Moor thinks no one would try to stop GENTLEMEN giving 5-10s.
Page me42.565

A thousand greetings to you, dear Mr Engels, from us all.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me42.565

Apropos. We have at last had a few lines from our old Uncle Edgar.†d The Berliners appear to be treating him decently. The BABY says in his letter that they gave him a 'Christmas present' of coats, trousers, waistcoats, gloves, cigars and a 'hymnbook'. The doctor they consulted declared his illness to be heart-disease. Whenever the doctors do not know what to say, they make do with 'general' heart-disease. I believe his complaint has its seat rather in his lungs and mind.

Page Break me42.566

Page me42.566
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

2
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.566
[London, 30 March 1865]

Dear Mr Engels,

Thank you so much for your letter†131 and the newspaper cutting, which I now return. The worst thing about this dreadful business in which 'Wilhelmchen'†a has once more involved yourself and Moor is that I have no idea where Moor is at present.†177 I have heard nothing from him and don't know whether he is in Germany or Holland. I have taken pot luck in sending all the filth from the newspapers after him. It is almost impossible to take up the cudgels in the newspapers with a creature like Becker,†b192 but FACTS must be corrected, on account of the credulous Straubingers.†618 The most ridiculous and most vexing part of the affair is to have people like Mr Reusche testifying that 'Lassalle also spoke of Marx with respect'. Lassalle, who copied everything from my husband, even his MISTAKES, who had been his friend and disciple for 15 years — he is cited as also having spoken of him with respect. And this gracious testimonial is being purveyed by people who only became friends of Lassalle in the last 2 years, at a time when he was already fully committed to that wrong path, which was taking him into Bismarck's camp,†98 into the ministry, like friend Bucher, or to the ultimate retraite, to Italy. And, of course, Lassalle should be rescued for these 'freedom-fighters' who have received their reward in his will! Yet these social riff-raff are after all only following their great agitator. Like his lord and master, incidentally, Mr Reusche is constantly misappropriating things of my husband's, forever reproducing every witticism from Herr Vogt, just as in that last opus he himself borrowed from Karl the 'grotesque CLOWN, who has nothing behind him but his own shadow' (a phrase aimed at Karl Blind).†a The condescending manner in which this triumvirate deigns to allow Moor its protection, is the most vexing thing of all. Incidentally, Lassalle's respect for the aging Ph. Becker was also of recent date. As far back as August 1862 he believed him to be a paid agent, though in whose hire I do not know, and refused to have anything to do with him.†619 He likewise declared to me in one of his outbursts of shouting, when his voice always went OUT OF TUNE, that Moses†b in Paris was a completely useless muddlehead with whom he desired no truck. I defended that Plonplonist†93 as an honest Confusionarius. I live from day to day in the hope that I shall have news of Carel; this uncertainty causes me more bother than all the other troubles.

Page Break me42.567
Page me42.567

We are all well here and send you our cordial greetings.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me42.567

First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 3, Berlin, 1930

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

3
KARL MARX
CONFESSION†620
Page me42.567
Zalt-Bommel, 1 April 1865

The Quality you like best Simplicity
In man Strength
In woman Weakness
Your chief characteristic Singleness of purpose
Your favourite occupation Glancing at Netchen†c

Page Break me42.568
The vice you hate most Servility
The vice you excuse most Gullibility
Your idea of happiness To fight
Your idea of misery To submit†a
Your aversion Martin Tupper†b
Your hero Spartacus, Keppler
Your heroine Gretchen
The poet you like best Aeschylus, Shakespeare, Goethe†c
The prose writer you like best Diderot†d
Your favourite flower Daphne†e
Your favourite dish Fish†f
Your maxim: Nihil humani a me alienum puto†g
Your motto: De omnibus dubitandum†h

Karl Marx

Page me42.568
First published, in the language of the original, English, in International Review of Social History, Vol. I, Part I, Assen, 1956

Reproduced from the original verified with the handwritten text in Jenny Marx's album

4

JENNY MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†621
IN GENEVA†i
Page me42.568
[London, 29 January 1866]

My dear Mr Becker,

For the past week my husband has again been laid low with his former dangerous and exceedingly painful complaint. The affliction is all the more distressing for him this time since it further interrupts him in the copying out of his book†j that he has just

Page Break me42.569

A page from the album of Jenny, Marx's daughter, containing Marx's 'Confession'

Page Break me42.570
Page Break me42.571
begun. I think that this new eruption is simply and solely due to overwork and long hours without sleep at night. He is very sorry not to be able to attend the meetings of the 'International', since the very existence of The Workman's Advocate is at stake right now; until now it has had the greatest difficulties to contend with and fonds are now being offered by philistines and parsons.†230 The attempt must now be made to get a hold on the money without making any concessions in point of principle to the 'MONEY-LENDERS'.†a The Reform question, which is of such immediate practical concern to the English, is also making great demands on the resources, the time and the interest of the workers and is greatly distracting them from other matters.†b Karl and I were most taken by your Vorbote. Both its language and its serious approach are manly indeed! I am enclosing Lessner's letter about it. The agent to whom I entrusted the Manifestos†c has written to say that he has managed to prevent them from falling into the hands of the French police and that he can now send them off to Geneva.†622 However, they cannot be stamped, so I must ask you to write and say what outlay they committed you to. The money can then be sent you together with that for the subscriptions for the Vorbote.
Page me42.571

With respect to religion, a great movement is currently developing in stuffy old England. The top men in science, Huxley (Darwin's disciple) at the head, with Tyndall, Sir Charles Lyell, Bowring, Carpenter, etc., give very enlightened, truly free-thinking and bold lectures for the people in St. Martin's Hall (of glorious waltzing memory†623), and, what is more, on Sunday evenings, exactly at the time when the lambs are usually grazing on the Lord's pastures; the hall has been full to bursting and the people's enthusiasm so great that, on the first evening, when I went there with the girls, 2,000 could not get into the room, which was crammed full. The clerics let this dreadful thing happen three times. — Yesterday evening the assembly was informed that no more lectures could be held until the court case brought by the clerics against the 'SUNDAY EVENINGS FOR THE PEOPLE' had been decided. The gathering emphatically expressed its indignation and more than £100 were immediately collected for fighting the case. How stupid of the clerics to interfere in such a matter. To the annoyance of this band, the evenings even closed with music. Choruses from Händel, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelsohn and Gounod were sung and received enthusiastically by the English, who had, until now, only been allowed to bawl out the hymn JESUS, JESUS, MEEK AND MILD or take themselves off to the GIN palace.

Page Break me42.572
Page me42.572
Karl, who is in great pain today, and my girls send you their warmest greetings, the little one†a in particular, asking me to convey very best wishes to 'dear Becker'. And I extend my hand to you from afar.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me42.572
First published abridged in Der Vorbote, Jg. 1, No. 2, 1866 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

5
JENNY MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER
IN BERLIN
Page me42.572
[London, beginning of February 1866]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

Dear Sir,
For the past week my husband has again been laid low with his former dangerous and painful complaint; this fresh affliction is all the more distressing for him since it further interrupts him in the copying out of his book†b that he has just begun. He is very sorry that you did not receive his lengthy letter,†c as he is at the present moment incapable of writing. He also fears that the letter has been seized, as it should have been returned long ago otherwise. The address was, by the way, perfectly correct, and I took the letter to the post myself along with many others and the newspapers, all of which arrived. With regard to the Manifesto,†d being a historical document, he wishes it to be printed exactly as it originally appeared; the misprints are so obvious that anyone can correct them. He will be sending the 'International Address'†e to you as soon as he can.

Page Break me42.573
Page me42.573

At the same time, he asks you to let him know your new address for further correspondence, when you have left Berlin. And could not Mr Vogt,†a in turn, give us another address, as we do not think his present one is quite safe. When you write back, kindly address to A. Williams,†b Esq., etc.
Page me42.573
My husband sends you his warmest greetings.

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me42.573
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6
JENNY MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.573
[London,] 26 February 1866†c
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

Dear Sir,
For 4 weeks now my poor husband has been laid low again with his old, very painful and dangerous complaint, and no doubt I need scarcely tell you under what great and fearful anxieties we have all been suffering during that time. Right at the beginning of January he had begun to prepare his whole book†d for printing, and he was making wonderfully rapid progress with copying, so that the manuscript piled up most impressively. Karl felt in the best of 'SPIRITS' and was happy to be so far on at last, when a carbuncle suddenly erupted, soon to be followed by 2 others. The last one was especially bad and obstinate and furthermore was so awkwardly placed that it prevented him from walking or moving at all. This morning it has been bleeding more strongly, which has brought him some relief. Two days ago we began the arsenic cure, of which Karl expects a good effect. It is really dreadful for him to be interrupted again in the completion of his book, and in his delirium at night he is forever talking of the various chapters which are going round and round in his mind. This morning I brought him your letter†a in bed. He was very pleased that you had been kind enough to write, and he asked me to thank you at once for it on his behalf. A further concern is that his presence is sorely needed at this moment, both in the debates about the forthcoming congress of the International Association†286 and in the discussions about the policy and editing of the new workers' paper which is appearing weekly here now under the title of Commonwealth and represents both the newly formed workers' party,†b with all the Co-operative Societies, and the International Association.†290 His anxiety about all this has naturally done much to worsen the general state of his health. I hope that by the spring he will be sufficiently restored to be able to visit his friends in Germany. He had been very much looking forward to doing so.

Page Break me42.574

Page me42.574
Karl sends you his warmest greetings, to which, despite our not being acquainted, I add my respects.

Yours truly
Jenny Marx

Page me42.574
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

7
JENNY MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.574
[London,] 1 April 1866
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

Dear Sir,
I presume that the registered letter that I received from Hanover late yesterday evening is from you.†c I cannot send it on to my husband in Margate until tomorrow,†307 unfortunately, as in pious England all communications halt on Sundays. Since the reply may be held up by this delay, I hasten to let you know immediately today that the letter has arrived safely; but, at the same time, I would like to take this opportunity to apologise to you for my total silence. Just how indebted I am to you for the great sympathy and touching friendship you have shown my husband was really brought home to me when the young man from the CITY called to enquire on your behalf as to my husband's condition. Immediately after my last letter to you, Karl really became gravely ill; a fresh CARBUNCLE (not a furuncle) erupted, and was indeed so obstinate and so inflammatory that for almost 3 weeks my poor husband could scarcely move and was entirely confined to the sofa. Since we are all only too well aware how dangerous this complaint is, if it keeps recurring over a period of years, you can well imagine how melancholy the days and nights have been for us.

Page Break me42.575

Page me42.575
On the advice of Doctor Gumpert in Manchester, he decided to begin the arsenic cure, as well as to spend a few weeks at the seaside after the abscess had healed. He has now been in Margate, a coastal resort quite near here, for nearly 2 weeks, and it seems to us that his health has been greatly restored there. He will return next week to pick up with renewed energy the completion of that work of his†a which has so often been interrupted.
Page me42.575
Yesterday he sent me his photogram, and since you would perhaps appreciate a sunny picture of the man to whom you have shown so much friendship, although you do not know him personally, I am enclosing 1 COPY with this note.
Page me42.575
With all my respects, despite our not being acquainted

Yours truly
Jenny Marx

Page me42.575
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.576

8
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.576
[London,] Monday 1 o'clock
[24 December 1866]

My dear Mr Engels,
The HAMPER has just arrived, and the bottles have been put on parade, with the Rhenish to the fore! How can we thank you for all your friendship! The £10 which arrived on Saturday will avert the harshest storms of Christmastide and enable us to celebrate a MERRY CHRISTMAS. The wine was particularly welcome this year, as with the young FRENCHMAN†a in the house we like to keep up APPEARANCES.
Page me42.576
If the publisher in Hamburg†b really can print the book†c as fast as he says, it is certain to come out by Easter in any case. It is a pleasure to see the manuscript lying there copied out and stacked up so high. It is an enormous weight off my mind; we have enough troubles and worries left without that, especially when the girls fall in love and become engaged, and to Frenchmen and MEDICAL STUDENTS to boot! I wish I could see everything couleur de rose†d as much as the others do, but the long years with their many anxieties have made me nervous, and the future often looks black to me when it all looks rosy to a more cheerful spirit. Cela entre nous.†e

Page me42.576

Once more, a thousand thanks for the hock and all its train!

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me42.576
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 31, Moscow, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.577

9
JENNY MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me42.577
London, [5 October 1867]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

My dear Mr Becker,

I hope you have received my letter. You will doubtless be surprised at seeing a second one following so close behind the first. My husband would like Bakunin's address, and I am quite sure that you will be able to get hold of it easily in Geneva, perhaps via Herzen. He would very much like to send him his book†a and write on other matters. Warmest greetings from us all and especially from

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me42.577
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

10
JENNY MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me42.577
[London, 24 December 1867]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

My dear Mr Kugelmann,

You can have no idea of the delight and surprise you occasioned us yesterday, and I really do not know how I should thank you for all your friendship and sympathy, and especially now for the latest visible sign of your regard, old Father Zeus, who now occupies the place of the 'baby Jesus' in our household.†585 Our Christmas festivities this year are again very much overshadowed by the fact that my poor husband is once more laid low with his old complaint. There have been 2 further eruptions, one of which is of some size and in a most painful spot, obliging Karl to lie on one side. I hope we shall soon get the better of this illness, and that in the next letter you will no longer be confronted with the temporary private secretary.

Page Break me42.578
Page me42.578

Yesterday evening we were all at home together sitting downstairs, which in English houses is the kitchen area from which all 'CREATURE COMFORTS' make their way up to the higher regions, and were busy preparing the CHRISTMAS PUDDING with all due thoroughness. We were seeding raisins (a most disagreeable and sticky task), chopping up almonds and orange and lemon peel, minutely shredding suet, and with eggs and flour kneading together the oddest potpourri from the whole mishmash; when all at once there was a ring at the door, a carriage was stopped outside, mysterious footsteps were going up and down, whispering and rustling filled the house; at length a voice sounded from above: 'A great statue has arrived.' If it had been 'Fire, fire, the house is on fire', the 'FENIANS' have come, we could not have dashed upstairs in greater astonishment or confusion, and there it stood in all its colossal splendour, in its ideal purity, old Jupiter tonans†a himself, unscathed, undamaged (one small edge of the piédestal is slightly chipped) before our staring, delighted eyes!! Meanwhile, the confusion having somewhat abated, we then read the accompanying kind words you sent via Borkheim, and after pausing in deepest gratitude to you, we at once began debating which would be the worthiest niche for the new 'dear god who is there in heaven and on Earth'.†b We have not yet resolved this great question, and we shall make many trials before that proud head finds its place of honour.
Page me42.578

My warmest thanks to you also for your great interest and indefatigable efforts on behalf of Karl's book.†c It would seem that the Germans' preferred form of applause is utter and complete silence. You have given fresh heart to all the moaners.
Page me42.578

Dear Mr Kugelmann, you can believe me when I tell you there can be few books that have been written in more difficult circumstances, and I am sure I could write a secret history of it which would tell of many, extremely many unspoken troubles and anxieties and torments. If the workers had an inkling of the sacrifices that were necessary for this work, which was written only for them and for their sakes to be completed they would perhaps show a little more interest. The Lassalleans appear to be the quickest to seize the book, so that they may fittingly bowdlerise it. However, that will do no harm.

Page Break me42.579
Page me42.579

But to conclude, I have a bone to pick with you. Why do you address me so formally, even using the title 'gracious', for me, who am such an old campaigner, such a hoary head in the movement, such an honest fellow-traveller and fellow-tramp? I would so much have liked to visit you and your dear wife and Fränzchen†a this summer, of whom my husband cannot stop saying so many nice and good things, I would so much have liked to see Germany again after 11 years.†624 I have often been unwell in the past year, and I am sorry to say that of late I have lost much of my 'faith', my courage in facing up to life. I often found it hard to keep my spirits up. However, since my girls were embarking on a long journey — they had been invited to stay with Lafargue's parents†b in Bordeaux — it was impossible for me to undertake my own excursion at the same time, and it is therefore now my fondest hope for next year.
Page me42.579

Karl sends his warmest greetings to your wife and to yourself, to which the girls sincerely add their own, and I extend my hand to you and your dear wife from afar.

Yours
Jenny Marx
not gracious and not by the grace of God.

Page me42.579
First published, in Italian, in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, 1955

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.580

11
JENNY MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me42.580
[London, after 10 January 1868]
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

My dear Mr Becker,

Don't be cross with me for not replying sooner to your kind last letter. Unfortunately, the reason for my silence was not a happy one. For my poor husband has once again been laid up and fettered hand and foot by his old, serious and painful complaint, which is becoming dangerous through its constant recurrence. Nothing depresses him more than to be constantly condemned to idleness once again, particularly now when there is so much to be done, the 2nd part†a is demanded and, to put it shortly, when the world begins once again to burn and blaze, though for the time being with 'Greek fire', and not with the 'Red Cock'.†b The idlers and loafers have cash in their pockets and health in their blood, and the people who belong to the new world, who have devoted their bodies and souls to it, are sick — poor and thus well and trully locked in HANDCUFFS. 'SHAME, SHAME' as the English shout at their meetings. You will not believe how often my husband thinks of you, with sincere honour and admiration. He regards your little paper†c as quite definitely the best and most effective, and every time we receive news of our native kindergarten, or rather Gartenlaube,†d he exclaims: 'If only the Germans had more men like old Becker!!' As temporary secretary, I have just written to Schily and sent him the letter of the man who has offered to make the translation.†625 You see, Moses Hess has also offered himself as translator through Schily and wanted to launch some preliminary ballons d'essais†e in the Courrier français.†539 But we have long heard and seen nothing of the two gentlemen, but, to judge by the letter I just mentioned, the matter will be a success. Because of his education in philosophy, and his orientation in the arts of dialectical leaps and balances, Hess would be preferable to many other translators who would be simply literal, but, on the other hand, our mystical Rabbi Rabbuni is often not quite reliable (not quite kosher), and often careless, so it would be wrong to reject other offers because of him. Schily will now act as chargé d'affaires, and see which is the right man.

Page Break me42.581
Page me42.581

Your last article on the Peace dawdlers†461 was excellent,†a and, by God (the Good Lord always springs nolens volens†b to the lips and the pen, although he has long left the place of honour in our hearts), was the best that we have seen hitherto.
Page me42.581

'Goegg' is still roaming around here on his propaganda merry-go-round. And Borkheim could have been smarter than to give him 100 fr. travelling expenses. If the coins are itching and burning a hole in his pocket like that, he should let them fall and burn elsewhere. I think there are better things to do than supporting these apostles. Amand†c was dealt with quite differently by Engels in Manchester. For your amusement, here is a passage about it from Engels' letter.†d
Page me42.581

'Moreover, yesterday I had a visit from the ex-dictator Goegg, who is travelling for the ridiculous Peace League and who ruined my evening. Luckily, Schorlemmer' (a very important chemist, one of 'our people') 'also happened by, and got the surprise of his life with this fossil of Federal Republic; he had not believed such a thing possible. The stupid oaf has become ten times more stupid through the unthinking repetition of the same phrases, and has lost all points of contact with the world of common sense (not to mention actual thinking). Apart from Switzerland and the Canton of Baden, there is still nothing else in the world for people of this sort. For all that, he soon convinced himself of the truth of my first reply to his application for support: that the further apart we lived and the less we had to do with one another, the better we would get on. — He admitted that in the Vogt affair Blind has behaved like a coward, but said he was after all a worthy fellow, and even threatened to reconcile you and Blind! Vogt — no politician, but a decent fellow, honest to the backbone, who simply scribbled away in the daytime without considering the content — if we 2 spent an hour together then we would be like brothers. He admitted him to be a Bonapartist, but not a paid one. To which I replied that all Bonapartists were paid, there were no unpaid ones, and if he could show me an unpaid one, then I would accept the possibility that Vogt was not paid; otherwise I would not. This astonished him, but finally he discovered one — Ludwig Bamberger! Incidentally, he said that Vogt had continually had a very hard time, his wife was a peasant girl from the Bernese Oberland, whom he had married out of virtue. Vogt, the artful dodger, appears to have pulled the wool well over this jackass's eyes. But when Schorlemmer and I explained to him that Vogt had not produced anything as a natural scientist either, you should have seen his rage: Had he not popularised? Was not that worth while?'

Page Break me42.582
Page me42.582

Thus Engels. So Goegg left empty-handed. Now he is trying his luck in other towns. Have you seen or heard anything of Bakunin? My husband sent his book†a to him as an old Hegelian, — not a sign near or far. Has he received it? You can't really trust all those Russians. If they don't adhere to the 'Väterchen' in Russia, then they adhere to, or are kept by, 'Herzens Väterchen',†b which in the end comes to the same thing. Six of one and half a dozen of the other.
Page me42.582

Things look good here, the English are running away from themselves in panic, and, if somebody hears a cork pop, he imagines it is Greek fire, and if John Bull sees an innocent phosphorus match he believes it is impregnated with glycerine, paraffin, nicotine and God knows what, and starts to run, and soon everybody is running, and finally the genuine CONSTABLES are running ahead of the false BOBBIES, the so-called SPECIALS, who are now keeping order in the streets with their lead batons. Ireland has taken the lead in the entire political programme, the English are already shouting in favour of Ireland at their MEETINGS, and it has almost become respectable to lament the 7-hundred-year suffering of sweet Erin†c — to weep over it; and all this has been accomplished by a phosphorus match and a rope.†626 How easy is it to frighten the gentlemen out of their wits!? The short fear of physical means has accomplished more than centuries of moral threats.†d

Page me42.582
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me42.583

12
LAURA MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me42.583
[London,] 13 January 1868

Dear Engels,

As Mohr is once more being victimised by his old enemies, the carbuncles, and is, by the arrival of the latest, made to feel very ill at ease in a sitting posture, he has asked me to write you these lines in his stead.

Page me42.583

As regards the article for The Fortnightly Review,†509 I am to tell you that there is no question of a mere brief notice like the reviews of books generally found at the back of that periodical, but of an article of the length of those usually inserted.

Page me42.583

Also I am to beg you to send back, as soon as possible, the earlier numbers of the Courrier français.†a

Page me42.583

With best regards from all of us and in the hope that the late frequent Christmas entertainments you have been 'undergoing' may not have interfered with your health, I remain, dear Engels,

Affectionately yours,
Laura Marx

Page me42.583
First published in the language of the original, English, in: Friedrich Engels, Paul et Laura Lafargue, Correspondance, Tome I, Paris, 1956

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me42.584

Page Break me42.585

NOTES AND INDEXES

Page Break me42.586
Page Break me42.587

NOTES

Page me42.587
†1 This letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 3, 64, 92, 148, 191, 218, 314
Page me42.587
†2 In his letter to Marx of 28 September 1864, Carl Klings, a former member of the Communist League (see Note 17), wrote about the situation in the General Association of German Workers after the death of its President, Ferdinand Lassalle, and about the forthcoming election of a new president. Bernhard Becker and Moses Hess were nominated candidates, and Klings asked Marx for advice.
Page me42.587
The General Association of German Workers, which was founded at the congress of workers' associations in Leipzig on 23 May 1863 and included a number of former members of the Communist League, promoted the development of the German working-class movement and helped its members to overcome the ideological influence of the liberal bourgeoisie. However, Lassalle and his followers channelled the Association's activity along reformist lines limiting it to the campaign for universal suffrage; their programme contained a utopian demand for the establishment of state-subsidised producers' co-operatives, which they regarded as the basic means for solving social contradictions. The leaders of the Association supported the Prussian government in its drive for the unification of Germany 'from above', through dynastic wars.
Page me42.587
The sectarian, nationalistic policy of the Lassallean leaders of the General Association made it difficult to draw the German proletariat into the International Working Men's Association (the First International) (see Note 5). By the beginning of the 1870s, however, the progressive-minded German workers had split away from Lassalleanism thanks to the consistent efforts of Marx, Engels and their associates. At a congress in Gotha in May 1875, the General Association of German Workers merged with the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Eisenachers) founded in 1869 and headed by August Bebel and Karl Liebknecht. The united party assumed the name of the Socialist Workers' Party of Germany. — 3, 15, 58, 65, 75, 78, 103, 125, 135, 141, 150
Page me42.587
†3 The proposal to accept the presidency of the General Association of German Workers was made to Marx by Wilhelm Liebknecht in his letters, written at the beginning of September and early October 1864. Liebknecht also wrote that Bernhard Becker and Johann Baptist Schweitzer, its leaders, backed him in this request. — 3

Page Break me42.588
Page me42.588
†4 At the additional elections to the Corps législatif in March 1864 the Parisian workers put up their own candidate, the engraver Henri Tolain, whereas previously they voted for moderate bourgeois republicans. In the 'Manifesto of the Sixty' printed in February 1864 they explained this move by the need of the working class to have its own representatives in legislative bodies.
Page me42.588

The Corps législatif was established, alongside the State Council and the Senate, under the Constitution of 4 February 1852, following the Bonaparte coup d'état of 1851. The members of the State Council and the Senate were appointed by the head of state, while the Corps législatif was an elected body, the elections being supervised by state officials and the police, so that a docile majority was always ensured. As its powers were confined to endorsing bills drawn up by the State Council, the Corps législatif was, in effect, a screen for Napoleon III's unlimited rule. — 4, 15, 47, 274, 318

Page me42.588

†5 The inaugural meeting of the International Working Men's Association held in London on 28 September 1864 planned to call an international workers' congress in Belgium in a year's time to solve questions relating to the Rules and leadership of the entire organisation. At its meeting on 1 November 1864, the Central Council of the Association, elected on 28 September (known as the General Council from 1866), approved the Provisional Rules which made it incumbent upon the Council to convene the congress in Belgium. However, taking into account the ideological and organisational weakness of the national sections of the International, Marx proposed to convene a preliminary conference in London in September 1865 to discuss the programme of the future congress. The conference took place in London between 25 and 29 September 1865 (see Note 246). — 4

Page me42.588

†6 This letter was published in English for the first time in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 5, 193, 231, 330, 356, 397, 493, 553

Page me42.588

†7 On 2 September 1864 Engels wrote to Marx about his intention to travel to Schleswig and Holstein annexed to Prussia (Schleswig) and Austria (Holstein) after the defeat of Denmark in the war of 1864. Engels left Manchester on 8 September and after a short stay with Marx in London (presumably on 9 September) travelled to the Continent. He returned to England in mid-October. — 6, 11

Page me42.588

†8 Wilhelm Wolff (nicknamed Lupus), a friend and associate of Marx and Engels, died on 9 May 1864. In his will he named Marx and his family as principal beneficiaries of his small legacy. The legal procedure for receiving this legacy cost much trouble and energy, and Engels offered Marx his help. — 6, 20, 21, 23, 29, 115, 116, 126

Page me42.588

†9 Engels is referring to the fact that the Bismarck government used the national contradictions between the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein and Denmark to promote Germany's unification under the aegis of Prussia. On 13 November 1863 the Danish Parliament adopted a new constitution which proclaimed the annexation of Schleswig to Denmark in violation of the London Protocol of 1852 (the latter stipulated that Denmark and the duchies could be linked only by personal union). This served as a pretext for Bismarck to declare war on

Page Break me42.589

Denmark. Austria joined Prussia for she did not want Prussia, her main rival in Germany, to enjoy the fruits of victory alone. As a result of the Danish war (1 February-16 July 1864), a treaty was concluded in Vienna on 30 October 1864 which declared Schleswig and Holstein to be co-possessions of Austria and Prussia. After the 1866 Austro-Prussian war the two duchies were annexed to Prussia. — 7, 34, 121, 350
Page me42.589
†10 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Marx and Engels, On the United States, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1979. — 9, 61, 418, 451
Page me42.589
†11 The Civil War in America broke out in April 1861. The Southern slaveholders rose against the Union and formed the Confederacy of the Southern States. The war was caused mainly by the conflict between the two social systems: the capitalist system of wage labour established in the North and the slave system dominant in the South. The Civil War, which had the nature of a bourgeois-democratic revolution, underwent two stages in its development: the period of a constitutional war for maintaining the Union and the period of a revolutionary war for the abolition of slavery. The decisive role in the defeat of the Southern slaveholders and the victory of the North in April 1865 was played by the workers, farmers and the Negroes. The causes and the nature of war in America were analysed by Marx in the articles published in the Vienna newspaper Die Presse (see present edition, Vol. 19).
Page me42.589
The discontinuance of cotton imports from America as a result of the blockade of the Southern States by the Northern fleet caused a crisis in the cotton industry of several European countries. In England, for two or three years beginning in 1862, over 75 per cent of the spinners and weavers in Lancashire, Cheshire and other counties were fully or partly unemployed. Despite privation and distress, the European proletariat gave all possible support to the American fighters against slavery. — 10, 38, 61, 199, 269, 523
Page me42.589
†12 Engels has in mind the war against the Kingdom of Italy (formed in March 1861) waged by the counter-revolutionary forces under the former King of Naples, Francis II (he was dethroned in 1860 as a result of the liberation of Sicily and Southern Italy by Garibaldi). The actions of the Naples reactionaries assumed the form of brigandage. — 10, 39
Page me42.589
†13 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in the Labour Monthly, No. 4, London, 1923. — 11
Page me42.589
†14 Marx means the death of Ferdinand Lassalle on 31 August 1864 after being fatally wounded in a duel with the Romanian nobleman Janko von Racowita. — 12
Page me42.589
†15 Lassalle spoke before the Düsseldorf assizes on 27 June 1864. His speech was first published in the Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Nos. 176-78 for 1864, and appeared separately under the title Prozeß gegen den Schriftsteller Herrn Ferdinand Lassalle, verhandelt zu Düsseldorf vor der korrektionellen Appelkammer am 27. Juni 1864, Düsseldorf, 1864. — 12, 38

Page me42.589
†16 The congress (general assembly) of the General Association of German Workers met in Düsseldorf on 27 December 1864. It elected Bernhard Becker President of the Association. — 15
Page me42.589
†17 A reference to the Communist League, the first German and international communist organisation of the proletariat formed under the leadership of Marx and Engels in London early in June 1847, as a result of the reorganisation of the League of the Just (a secret association of workers and artisans that appeared in the 1830s and had communities in Germany, France, Switzerland and England). The programme and organisational principles of the Communist League were drawn up with the direct participation of Marx and Engels. The League's members took an active part in the bourgeois-democratic revolution in Germany in 1848-49. Though the defeat of the revolution dealt a blow to the League, in 1849-50 it was reorganised and continued its activities. In the summer of 1850, disagreements arose in the League between the supporters of Marx and Engels and the sectarian Willich-Schapper group which tried to impose on the League its adventurist tactics of immediately unleashing a revolution without taking into account the actual situation and the practical possibilities. The discord resulted in a split within the League. Owing to police persecutions and arrests of League members in May 1851, the activities of the Communist League as an organisation practically ceased in Germany. On 17 November 1852, on a motion by Marx, the London District announced the dissolution of the League.

Page Break me42.590
Page me42.590
The Communist League played an important historical role as the first proletarian party based on the principles of scientific communism, as a school of proletarian revolutionaries, and as the historical forerunner of the International Working Men's Association. — 15
Page me42.590
†18 Marx is referring to the London Trades Council, first elected at a conference of trade union delegates held in London in May 1860. It headed the London trade unions numbering many thousands of members and was influential amongst the British workers. In the first half of the 1860s the Council directed the British workers' campaign against intervention in the USA, in defence of Poland and Italy, and later for the legal status of the trade unions. The leaders of the following large trade unions played a big role in the Council: the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (Robert Applegarth), the Shoemakers' Society (George Odger), the Operative Bricklayers' Society (Edwin Coulson and George Howell) and the Amalgamated Engineers (William Allan).
Page me42.590
The London Trades Council's representatives took part in establishing the International Working Men's Association (the First International) and were members of its Central (General) Council. But, while maintaining contacts with the International Association and collaborating with it, the London Council, influenced by some reformist trade unionists, refused (finally in January 1867) to officially affiliate to it as an English section.

Page me42.590

The Trades' Unionists Manhood Suffrage and Vote by Ballot Association was founded in September 1864. Odger was its President, Hartwell its Secretary, and Trimlett its Treasurer. Subsequently all of them became members of the Central (General) Council of the International Working Men's Association. — 15, 154, 329, 519

Page me42.590

†19 On 26 March 1863 the London Trades Council held a meeting at St James's Hall to express the British workers' solidarity with the struggle of the North American States to abolish slavery. The participants also protested against Britain's plans for armed intervention in the US Civil War (see Note 11) on the side of the Southern States. The meeting was chaired by the bourgeois radical John Bright.

Page me42.590

In early April 1864, Garibaldi visited England with a view to raising funds for an expedition to end Austrian domination in Venetia. The English public at large gave an enthusiastic welcome to Italy's national hero and official honours were therefore heaped on him at the beginning of his visit. However, Garibaldi's meeting with Mazzini, who lived in England as a political emigrant, and his speeches in support of the Polish insurgents angered the British ruling circles.

Page Break me42.591

Page me42.591

Garibaldi left England at the end of April. — 15, 33, 44, 45, 47

Page me42.591

†20 Marx is referring to the Associazione di Mutuo Progresso founded at the end of June 1864 by the Italian workers resident in London. Initially the Society numbered about 300 members and was influenced by Mazzini. Garibaldi was elected its Honorary President. In January 1865 the Society became affiliated to the International Association. — 16, 110, 140, 150, 170, 250

Page me42.591

†21 The Sub-Committee or Standing Committee was the executive body of the Central (General) Council of the International. It usually assembled once a week and drafted many of the decisions which were later adopted by the Council. The Sub-Committee evolved from a commission, elected when the International Working Men's Association was set up, to draft its programme documents. The Sub-Committee included the President of the General Council (until this office was abolished in September 1867), its General Secretary and the corresponding secretaries for the different countries. Marx took an active part in the work of the Standing Committee as Corresponding Secretary for Germany. — 16, 54, 130, 131, 172, 207, 214, 486

Page me42.591

†22 The Statutes submitted by Luigi Wolff at a meeting of the Sub-Committee on 8 October 1864 were an English translation of 'l'Atto di fratellanza delle Societá operaie italiane' (Fraternal Bond Between the Italian Workmen's Associations) published in Il Giornale delle Associazioni Operaie on 31 July 1864 and adopted at the eleventh congress of Italian pro-Mazzini working men's associations in Naples on 27 October 1864. Attended by delegates from 57 organisations, the congress set up an association of Italian workers' societies which joined the International Working Men's Association. By submitting to the International these Statutes, written from bourgeois-democratic positions, Mazzini and his followers sought to take over the leadership of the international working-class movement. — 16, 44, 47

Page me42.591
†23 A reference to the following passage in the Provisional Rules of the Association: '... This International Association and all societies and individuals adhering to it, will acknowledge truth, justice, and morality, as the basis of their conduct towards each other, and towards all men, without regard to colour, creed, or nationality;
Page me42.591
'They hold it the duty of a man to claim the rights of a man and a citizen, not only for himself, but for every man who does his duty. No rights without duties, no duties without rights' (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 15). — 18, 47
Page me42.591
†24 In January 1863 an uprising against Tsarist oppression flared up in the Kingdom of Poland, the territory annexed to Russia by decision of the Vienna Congress of 1815. The uprising of 1863-64 was caused by the Poles' striving for national independence and the crisis of feudal relations within the Kingdom. The National Central Committee, which headed the uprising, put forward a programme of struggle for Poland's independence and a number of democratic agrarian demands. However, the inconsistency and indecision of the insurgent government, in particular its failure to abolish the privileges of the big landowners, drove the majority of the peasants away from the uprising. This was one of the main causes of its defeat.
Page me42.591
In addition, serious damage to the uprising was done by the policy of its Right-wing leaders. They pinned great hopes on help from the ruling circles of

Page Break me42.592
Bonapartist France and bourgeois-aristocratic England who were pursuing their own selfish interests in the Polish question.
Page me42.592
The national liberation uprising was, by and large, crushed by the Tsarist government in the autumn of 1863, though some units of the insurgents continued the struggle until the end of 1864. — 19, 38, 73, 164
Page me42.592
†25 In his articles denouncing the diplomacy of the ruling classes Marx made use of the documents which the conservative writer David Urquhart, who was in opposition to the British government, published in his periodicals The Portfolio and The Free Press. While printing his separate articles in The Free Press, Marx criticised Urquhart and his followers for their anti-democratic views and always emphasised the fundamental difference between his position as a proletarian revolutionary and that of the Urquhartists. — 19
Page me42.592
†26 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence, 1844-1877, Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 19, 178, 225, 269, 309, 343, 348, 352, 370, 445, 450, 527, 538

Page me42.592
†27 The original has 'inneren Düppel', an expression first used in the meaning of 'enemy within' in a political survey published in the Bismarckian Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung on 30 September 1864. It became widely current later.
Page me42.592
Düppel (Dybböl) — Danish fortification in Schleswig which the Prussians captured by storm on 18 April 1864, during the war of Prussia and Austria against Denmark (see Note 9). — 19, 121, 254, 256, 263
Page me42.592
†28 The Schiller Institute, founded in Manchester in November 1859 in connection with the centenary of Friedrich Schiller's birth, strove to be a German émigré cultural and social centre. Engels was critical of the Institute, noted for its tendency to formalism and pedantry, and he initially kept aloof from it. But when certain changes were introduced into its Rules, he became a member of its Directorate in 1864. Later, as the President of the Institute, Engels devoted much time to it and exercised a considerable influence on its activities.
Page me42.592
In September 1868, while Engels was away from Manchester, the Institute invited Karl Vogt, who was connected with the Bonapartists and was slandering the proletarian revolutionaries, to deliver a lecture. Engels felt that his political reputation would be compromised if he remained President and so he left the Directorate. In April 1870 he was again elected a member of the Directorate of the Schiller Institute, but did not take an active part in it. — 20, 49, 81, 98, 116, 127, 235, 498, 503, 533, 555, 560
Page me42.592
†29 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, The Civil War in the United States, International Publishers, New York, [1937]. — 21, 49, 81, 84, 147, 149, 151, 154, 161, 167
Page me42.592
†30 Engels is referring to the operations of the Northerners at the final stage of the Civil War in America (see Note 11) when, during the general offensive started in May 1864, they besieged Richmond (Virginia), the capital of the Southern Confederacy and its main stronghold. The Southerners entrenched in Richmond resisted until April 1865, when the city was seized by the army of General Grant. — 21, 39, 61, 82, 113, 121, 147, 153
Page me42.592
†31 Engels is referring to the nearly nine-month-long siege of Sevastopol during the Crimean war of 1853-56. — 21
Page me42.592
†32 In April 1863 the British Parliament passed the Public Works Act in view of the reduced production and mass unemployment in the cotton districts of England. This Act provided the municipal authorities of these districts with funds to pay the unemployed temporarily used for public works, mainly on laying the sewerage system, building roads, etc. The Relief Committees, which guarded the interests of the capitalists, were in charge of organising these works and paying the workers. The unemployed were forced to agree to hard labour for miserable pay.

Page Break me42.593

Page me42.593

The ateliers nationaux (national workshops) were instituted by the French Provisional Government immediately after the February revolution of 1848. By this means the government sought to discredit Louis Blanc's ideas on 'the organisation of labour' in the eyes of the workers and, at the same time, to utilise those employed in the national workshops, organised on military lines, against the revolutionary proletariat. Revolutionary ideas, however, continued to gain ground in the national workshops. The government took steps to reduce the number of workers employed in them, to send a large number off to public works in the provinces and finally to liquidate the workshops. This precipitated a proletarian uprising in Paris in June 1848. After its suppression, the Cavaignac government issued a decree on 3 July, disbanding the national workshops. — 21, 117
Page me42.593
†33 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 22, 53, 107, 128, 139, 157, 206, 212, 213, 216, 223, 237, 249, 252, 258, 277, 282, 317, 341, 350, 416, 419, 427, 432, 437
Page me42.593
†34 In their letters of 11 November 1864, Schweitzer and Liebknecht invited Marx to contribute to Der Social-Demokrat, the prospective newspaper of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 2). In the same month, Schweitzer sent Marx and Engels the prospectus, which did not contain Lassalle's slogans. Since they had no other press organ to influence the workers' movement in Germany, they agreed to collaborate with Der Social-Demokrat. They also took into account the fact that Wilhelm Liebknecht was an unofficial member of its editorial board. Marx's 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association' and 'On Proudhon', and Engels' translation of the old Danish folk song 'Herr Tidmann' were printed in the newspaper. However, fully convinced that Schweitzer, the editor of the newspaper, was continuing the Lassallean policy of flirting with the government and the Junkers and trying to spread the cult of Lassalle, Marx and Engels on 23 February 1865 announced their break with the newspaper (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 80). Wilhelm Liebknecht followed suit and refused to collaborate with the paper. — 22, 102, 136
Page me42.593
†35 Engels' letter to Schweitzer has not been found.
Page me42.593

This letter of Engels to Marx and Marx's reply of 18 November 1864 show that Engels wrote to Schweitzer expressing his agreement to contribute to Der Social-Demokrat but asked Schweitzer first to let him know who the proposed contributors were. — 24
Page me42.593
†36 Engels is referring to the Kinkel-inspired campaign in the English press in defence of MacDonald, a British captain arrested in Bonn in September 1860 and brought to trial for disobeying the local authorities; and to the campaign by Kinkel, Hermann Juch and others in defence of a German tailor, Franz Müller, living in London, who was sentenced to death in the autumn of 1864 for assassinating an Englishman. Müller confessed his guilt to the priest Cappell on the gallows.

Page Break me42.594
Page me42.594
In mid-November 1864 the newspapers reported that the body of a man, presumably a German, had been found in the Thames, near London. The Dutchman Koehl was suspected. — 25, 48
Page me42.594
†37 Marx's letter, like one from Engels, to Schweitzer has not been found. Marx also wrote about collaboration with Der Social-Demokrat (see Note 34). — 26
Page me42.594
†38 Marx presumably means the leading article, 'Bescheidenheit — ein Ehrenkleid' (Modesty — a Festive Garment), published in the Stuttgart Beobachter (No. 245) on 21 October 1864. It ridiculed Karl Blind's address to the American people (on the occasion of presidential elections), which was distinguished for his excessive claims to political importance and boasting. The article was probably written by the paper's editor, Karl Mayer. — 27
Page me42.594
†39 This refers to the second congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations (set up in June 1863) which met in Leipzig on 23-24 October 1864. The Union at this stage was still under the influence of the liberal bourgeoisie (Schulze-Delitzsch and other members of the Party of Progress — see Note 99). The congress developed into a fierce battle between the followers of Schulze-Delitzsch and members of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 2), the latter striving to persuade the workers' educational societies into adopting the Lassallean political programme (the demand for universal suffrage). The young August Bebel was elected, among others, into the Union's leading body. Under his influence the organisation began to shake off the liberals' tutelage and acquire a proletarian class character.
Page me42.594
Professor Huber, mentioned by Marx, was a conservative champion of co-operativism and attended the congress as a guest. — 27
Page me42.594
†40 The cotton crisis was caused by the stoppage of cotton deliveries from America because of the blockade of the slave-holding Southern States by the Northern fleet during the US Civil War of 1861-65 (see Note 11). The cotton famine in England occurred shortly before the crisis of overproduction. — 27, 53, 116
Page me42.594
†41 In a letter to Engels of 19 November 1864, Schweitzer, in reply to Engels' enquiry, named the proposed contributors to Der Social-Demokrat. They were: Moses Hess, Georg Herwegh, Bernhard Becker, Johann Philipp Becker, Wilhelm Liebknecht, Friedrich Wilhelm Rüstow and Johann Karl Heinrich Wuttke. — 29
Page me42.594
†42 In her letter to Marx of 21 November 1864, Countess von Hatzfeldt wrote that a pamphlet in commemoration of Lassalle was being prepared and asked Marx's advice about illustrations. The pamphlet Ferdinand Lassalle. Dokumentarische Darstellung seine letzten Lebenstage. Von Augenzeugen und Freunden appeared in Berlin in 1865. At first Wilhelm Liebknecht agreed to edit it, but when he learned, at the end of 1864, about Lassalle's direct association with Bismarck, he refused to take part in the work.

Page me42.594
The Countess also asked Marx to come out in defence of Lassalle against the attacks on him by the petty-bourgeois democrat Karl Blind. — 29, 44
Page me42.594
†43 Marx's letter to Liebknecht in which Marx enquired about the contributors to Der Social-Demokrat has not been found. In his reply of 2 December 1864, Liebknecht wrote that Lothar Bucher and Johann Rodbertus had gone over to the side of the Prussian government. — 30
Page me42.594
†44 In this article Karl Blind, polemising with the Lassalleans, quoted Lassalle's defence speech at the Berlin assizes in March 1864. — 30, 57

Page Break me42.595
Page me42.595
†45 In the pamphlet in honour of Lassalle's memory (see Note 42) Countess von Hatzfeldt intended to place, next to a photograph of Lassalle on his death bed, portraits of Janko von Racowita and Helene von Dönniges, who were guilty of his death, regarding this as a form of revenge on the 'assassins'. In a letter to Marx on 21 November 1864 she asked Marx for his opinion of her intention. — 30, 31
Page me42.595
†46 Marx's telegram has not been found. — 31, 288, 297
Page me42.595
†47 Wilhelm Wolff, to whom Marx dedicated the first volume of Capital, died in Manchester on 9 May 1864. Marx delivered a short oration at his funeral (see Marx's letter to Jenny Marx of 13 May 1864, present edition, Vol. 41). — 31
Page me42.595
†48 In his pamphlet Herr Vogt (a copy of which Marx sent to Lassalle and Sophie von Hatzfeldt after its publication), Marx exposed Blind's cowardly attempts to deny his authorship of the flysheet Zur Warnung (A Warning) (it was published in London in 1859 and reprinted in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung), which revealed Vogt's connections with the Bonapartists. Blind's statements in the press citing false evidence of Fidelio Hollinger, the owner of a print-shop where the flysheet had been printed, and of a compositor, Johann Wiehe, gave Vogt a pretext to attribute the authorship of the flysheet to Marx and his friends. — 31
Page me42.595
†49 On 15 November 1859 Marx sent Lassalle his reply to Blind's declaration regarding Karl Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 40, p. 526), asking him to have it published in the Berlin Volks-Zeitung. In his reply of 20 November 1859 Lassalle recommended Marx to avoid any controversy with Blind in the press. Marx's declaration was published in the supplement to the Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 325, 21 November 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 8-9). — 32
Page me42.595
†50 Lassalle was in London in July 1862. — 32, 101

Page me42.595
†51 Marx presumably means the members of the Deutsche Freiheit und Einheit, an association which was founded in London about 1860 and included, besides Blind, Eduard Bronner, Karl Heinrich Schaible, Ravenstein (secretary) and Wolffsohn (cashier). — 32
Page me42.595
†52 In view of Garibaldi's forthcoming visit to England, the German refugees in London set up a Garibaldi Committee on 6 April 1864. It included Blind, Juch (publisher of the Hermann), Trübner, Freiligrath, Kinkel and others.
Page me42.595
Blind met Garibaldi on the Isle of Wight on 9 April. Blind and his associates took advantage of the meeting with Italy's national hero to advertise themselves in the English press. — 33
Page me42.595
†53 The Shakespeare Committee was set up to mark the tercentenary of Shakespeare's birthday which was celebrated from 23 April to 3 May 1864. German men of letters were represented by Freiligrath, who recommended that Karl Blind should also be a member of the committee. — 35
Page me42.595
†54 In the spring of 1849, during an uprising in defence of the Imperial Constitution in Southern and Western Germany, a Provisional Government was formed in Baden headed by the petty-bourgeois democrat Lorenz Peter Brentano. In face of the impending intervention of Prussian troops in Baden and the Palatinate, this government, having in fact sabotaged the actions of the revolutionary masses, applied for help to France. Karl Blind was sent to Paris with this purpose. The Baden government counted on the support of the party of petty-bourgeois democrats headed by Ledru-Rollin, but by that time it had been pushed into the background by the bourgeois 'party of Order' and the Bonapartists. This predetermined the failure of Blind's mission. — 35

Page Break me42.596
Page me42.596
†55 The Low Church — a trend in the Anglican Church which laid special emphasis on Christian morality; its following originally consisted predominantly of the bourgeoisie and the lower clergy.
Page me42.596
Pietism — a trend in the Lutheran Church that emerged in Germany in the seventeenth century. Distinguished by extreme mysticism, it rejected rites and attached special importance to personal religious experience. — 36, 426
Page me42.596
†56 Blind's address 'Ein Freundeswort an Deutschlands Arbeiter, Bürger und Bauer' was published in a number of German newspapers and as a leaflet in June 1863. In it, Blind opposed Lassalle's agitation among the workers saying that the campaign for universal suffrage did not accord with the 'main principles of German democracy'. — 36
Page me42.596

†57 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 37, 43, 121
Page me42.596
†58 Engels' correspondence with Joseph Weydemeyer was interrupted by the Civil War in America, in which Weydemeyer fought on the side of the North. In a letter written at the end of October 1864, Weydemeyer told Engels about Karl Blind's attacks on Lassalle in the American press and sent him a cutting from Die Westliche Post with Blind's article 'Ein Republikanischer Protest'. Engels forwarded Weydemeyer's letter to Marx who quoted it in his statement 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter' (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 23). — 37, 40
Page me42.596
†59 The Carlists — a reactionary clerico-absolutist group in Spain consisting of adherents of the pretender to the Spanish throne Don Carlos, the brother of Ferdinand VII. Relying on the military and the Catholic clergy, and also making use of the support of the backward peasants in some regions of Spain, the Carlists launched in 1833 a civil war which in fact turned into a struggle between the feudal-Catholic and liberal-bourgeois elements and led to the third bourgeois revolution (1834-43). — 39
Page me42.596
†60 The battle at Pittsburgh-Landing, also known as the battle of Shiloh, took place on 6-7 April 1862 on the Tennessee River, twenty miles north of Corinth. The Northern army under General Grant inflicted a heavy blow to the Confederate troops commanded by generals Johnston and Beauregard. — 40
Page me42.596
†61 Sonderburg (now Sœnderborg) — the town and fortress on the Alsen Island, one of the strongpoints on the Düppel fortification line captured by Prussian troops on 18 April 1864, during the war of Prussia and Austria against Denmark (see notes 9 and 27). — 40
Page me42.596
†62 Der Beobachter, No. 268, 17 November 1864 carried an anonymous report from Bradford, which was a reply to the criticism of Blind in the newspaper's leading article 'Bescheidenheit — ein Ehrenkleid' published on 21 October 1864 (see Note 38). The anonymous writer exaggerated Blind's role in the political life of the USA. He also attempted to dispute the reference of the leader's author to the description of Blind by Marx in his Herr Vogt, and to refute the pamphlet's revelations concerning Blind's cowardly attitude towards Vogt's slanderous campaign against proletarian revolutionaries (see Note 48). All this prompted Marx to write a letter to the editor of Der Beobachter on 28 November 1864 (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 23-25). At the request of Sophie von Hatzfeldt, a friend of Ferdinand Lassalle, Marx also came out in this letter against Blind's attacks on Lassalle. — 41, 42, 44, 51, 107

Page Break me42.597
Page me42.597
†63 Marx is referring to the affidavits made by two London compositors, Wiehe and Vögele, on Blind's authorship of the flysheet Zur Warnung (see Note 48), which exposed

Karl Vogt as a Bonapartist agent. Blind cravenly denied his participation in composing the flysheet, thus making Marx's campaign against Vogt's lies more difficult. Marx described Blind's cowardly behaviour both in Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 128-31 and 318-20) and the statement 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter' (Vol. 20). — 41, 518

Page me42.597

†64 The Beobachter editor confined himself to publishing only the covering letter to Marx's statement (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 22) and his own 'comments' on this statement.

Page me42.597

Marx foresaw that the Beobachter editor might not publish his statement and sent a copy of it to Sophie von Hatzfeldt for publication in other German papers. Without notifying Marx, the Countess sent the statement to Karl Bruhn, the editor of the Lassallean Nordstern. He published it on 10 December 1864, with the following editorial note: 'We have got the article through second hand, and only because of this particular circumstance is it accepted for publication in the Nordstern.' Marx expressed his indignation at this in a letter to Sophie von Hatzfeldt on 22 December (see this volume, pp. 56-57). — 43, 53, 57

Page me42.597

†65 This letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx, Letters to Dr. Kugelmann, Co-operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the USSR, Moscow-Leningrad, 1934. — 45, 101, 220, 262, 311, 325, 327, 329, 346, 379, 395, 440, 449, 489, 496, 521, 528, 543, 551

Page me42.597

†66 This refers to Marx's plans for the publication of his main work, Capital. At that time, Wilhelm Strohn, at Marx's request, conducted talks with the Hamburg publishing house of Meissner and Behre. At the end of January 1865, a preliminary agreement was reached on publishing the book in two volumes. The text of the agreement (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 361) was sent to Marx by Meissner in his letter of 21 March 1865. — 46, 78

Page me42.597

†67 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, On America and the Civil War. Edited and translated by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1972. — 46, 413

Page me42.597

†68 From 1799 to 1805 and 1814 to 1866 the Venetian Region was part of the Austrian Empire and a centre of the Italian national liberation movement against Austrian rule, of which the Bismarck government made use when preparing for a war with Austria for supremacy in Germany. — 47, 54

Page me42.597

†69 The High Church — a trend in the Anglican Church which stressed the latter's derivation from Catholicism, maintained the traditional rituals and originally drew its following mainly from the aristocracy. — 48

Page me42.597

†70 The address 'To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America' (see present edition, Vol. 20) was written by Marx on the occasion of Lincoln's re-election to the presidency. The text was approved by the Sub-Committee, unanimously confirmed by the Central Council of the International Working Men's Association on 29 November 1864 and sent to President Lincoln through Adams, the American envoy to London. — 49

Page Break me42.598
Page me42.598
†71 In view of the anniversary of the Polish insurrection of 1830-31, the Central Council of the International resolved, on Peter Fox's proposal, at its meeting of 29 November 1864 to issue an address to the Polish people on behalf of the British members of the Council. The latter delegated the drafting of the address to the Sub-Committee, which in its turn instructed Fox accordingly. Fox's address, however, reflected the view current among the Right-wing Polish émigrés and certain West European bourgeois democrats. It alleged that the foreign policy of the French ruling circles favoured the restoration of Poland's independence. That was why Marx and other members of the Sub-Committee and the Central Council opposed it (see Marx's letter to Engels of 10 December 1864, and Note 77). — 49, 54
Page me42.598
†72 The London Amalgamated Union of Building Workers (George Potter, a reformist, was one of its leaders) started a campaign for a nine-hour working day in 1859. At the end of July 1859 they called a strike in response to the employers' refusal to reduce working hours. At a joint meeting on 27 July the employers declared open war on the trade unions. They refused to employ their members and on 6 August locked out over 20,000 workers. The strike ended in February 1860 with a compromise: the employers agreed to take on trade union members, while the workers were compelled to withdraw their demand for a nine-hour working day. — 50
Page me42.598
†73 Heinrich Heine caustically derided Karl Mayer, a poet of the reactionary-Romantic Swabian school, in his Atta Troll (Chap. 22) and in Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen (Chap. 3). — 52
Page me42.598
†74 Hermann Becker (nicknamed Red Becker), a former Communist League member (in the 1860s he went over to the liberals), wrote to Marx on 7 December 1864 that the Rheinische Zeitung editors refused to print his statement against Karl Blind (see notes 62 and 64) justifying this on the grounds of their 'unwillingness' to advertise such an 'insignificant' figure as Blind. — 52, 53
Page me42.598
†75 Marx means the famous 'march to the sea' undertaken by General Sherman's troops on 7 May 1864 through Georgia as part of the Union's new strategic plan for crushing the Confederacy. Despite heavy losses, the offensive was a success: on 2 December Sherman seized Atlanta and on 10 December he reached the sea. By cutting the Confederate territory in two, Sherman's march ensured the rout of the main Confederate forces in Virginia in the spring of 1865 and the final victory of the North in the US Civil War. — 53, 61, 113, 121
Page me42.598

†76 Boustrapa — nickname for Louis Bonaparte, composed of the first syllables of the names of the places where he and his supporters staged Bonapartist putches: Boulogne (August 1840), Strasbourg (October 1846) and Paris (coup d'état of 2 December 1851). — 55, 182, 290, 339
Page me42.598
†77 After a preliminary discussion in the Sub-Committee, on 6 December 1864, of the address to the Polish people drawn up by Peter Fox (see Note 71), the debate continued at the Central Council meetings on 13 and 20 December 1864 and 3 January 1865. Marx spoke twice on the subject, on 13 December and 3 January (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 354 and 356). Drawing on the wealth of factual material on Polish-French relations he showed, particularly in his speech on 3 January 1865, that the French ruling circles, both under absolutism and under bourgeois regimes right up to the time of Napoleon III, had always sought to exploit the Polish question in the selfish interests of the ruling classes and that their policy was not favourable to the cause of Poland's independence, of which the sole defenders were the representatives of the revolutionary proletariat. Marx's arguments made the Central Council adopt a decision to introduce the appropriate amendments in Fox's address. — 55

Page Break me42.599
Page me42.599
†78 At its meeting on 8 November 1864 the Central Council decided on Marx's proposal, seconded by Hermann Jung, that any person not being able to attend the meetings cannot be a member of this Council (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 353). The decision to abolish honorary membership in the International was adopted presumably at that time too. — 55
Page me42.599
†79 This refers to Sophie von Hatzfeldt's intention to republish Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte. It was to be printed in Switzerland. Liebknecht informed Marx of this on 2 December 1864 and asked him to send two copies of the book for the purpose. Marx objected because he was obviously afraid that the Lassalleans might use his works to propagate Lassalle's cult.
Page me42.599
Subsequently, Liebknecht, independently of Hatzfeldt, attempted to come to terms with the Swiss publisher, but in vain. The second edition of The Eighteenth Brumaire appeared only in 1869, in Germany. — 57, 139, 165
Page me42.599
†80 Marx seems to be referring to the advertisement about his and Engels' contribution to Der Social-Demokrat, published in the specimen issue of the newspaper (No. 1) on 15 December 1864 (see also notes 34 and 35). — 58
Page me42.599
†81 The reference is presumably to Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 20 December 1864. It clearly shows that Marx asked Liebknecht to do his utmost to get the General Association of German Workers to join the International Working Men's Association. In this way Marx hoped to encourage this workers' organisation to abandon its Lassallean reformist programme and tactics and take the path of genuinely proletarian, revolutionary struggle. — 58

Page me42.599
†82 The congress (general assembly) of the General Association of German Workers which opened in Düsseldorf on 27 December 1864 did not discuss the affiliation of this organisation to the International Working Men's Association. — 58
Page me42.599
†83 The English original of this letter is published here for the first time. The letter was first published in a German translation in Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 31, Berlin, 1965, and in an English retranslation in Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 60
Page me42.599
†84 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester approximately from 7 to 14 January 1865. — 60, 62, 66
Page me42.599
†85 At its meeting of 29 December 1864, the Central Council decided to invite the bourgeois radicals Beesly, Beales and Harrison to a soirée to be held on 16 January 1865 to celebrate the founding of the International Working Men's Association. This decision was recorded in the Minutes of that meeting. The report of the meeting was not published, and Cremer, when sending the report of the next meeting, of 3 January 1865, to the newspapers, included the above-mentioned decision in it and recorded it for a second time in the Minute Book. Moreover, on his own initiative, Cremer inserted in the decision Grossmith's name who, as a Central Council member, did not have to be specially invited. As is evident from Jung's reply letter to Marx of 11 January, Marx's protest against the inclusion of Grossmith's name was read out at the Central Council meeting of 10 January; Cremer admitted his mistake, and

Page Break me42.600
Grossmith's name was deleted from the Minutes of the meeting of 3 January. — 61
Page me42.600
†86 Engels is probably referring to the operations by the Confederate army under General Lee in northern Virginia in the spring and summer of 1863. One of its corps was commanded by Longstreet. Successful counter-attacks on the part of the Confederates led to their victory at Chancellorsville on 2-4 May 1863. Lee's troops began to invade the territory beyond the Potomac and marched to Washington. But in the Battle of Gettysburg on 1-3 July, Lee's army sustained heavy losses and was compelled to retreat beyond the Potomac.
Page me42.600
General Hood, who succeeded Johnston as commander of the Confederate troops, undertook two major counter-attacks on 20 and 22 July 1864 against General Sherman's army, concentrated at the time to the north and east of Atlanta (see Note 75). The attempt to throw back Sherman's troops failed and Hood's army retreated, taking cover in Atlanta. — 61
Page me42.600

†87 Military operations confirmed Engels' prognosis. The city of Charleston (South Carolina) on the Atlantic coast of the USA was captured by the Northerners on 17 February 1865. — 61
Page me42.600
†88 The first three issues of Der Social-Demokrat were specimens. On 4 January 1865, No. 4 appeared, the first regular issue for the subscribers. When it was confiscated by the police, Marx congratulated Schweitzer, the editor, on the occasion and emphasised that an open break with Bismarck's ministry was necessary (see K. Marx, 'Statement Regarding the Causes of the Breach with the Social-Demokrat', present edition, Vol. 20). — 63
Page me42.600
†89 Bloomer costume or Bloomer — female costume of short skirt and trousers introduced in the 1850s by the American dress reformer, Amelia Jenks Bloomer (1818-1894).
Page me42.600
Davenport tricks were practised by the Davenport brothers, two American circus artists, in the 1860s. — 64
Page me42.600
†90 Marx is referring to 'Botschaft des Präsidenten', a message by Bernhard Becker, President of the General Association of German Workers, to the delegates of the general assembly of the Association that opened on 27 December 1864 in Düsseldorf (see notes 16 and 82). It was published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 3, 30 December 1864 and contained a hint that the Association could not establish close ties with the International because that would allegedly damage its organisation and did not promise to be of any practical value. — 65
Page me42.600
†91 In his report from Paris, dated 10 January 1865 and published in Der Social-Demokrat on 13 January, Moses Hess misrepresented the efforts of the Central Council of the International Association to draw French workers into its ranks. He alleged that the Council was essentially unscrupulous in selecting its representatives in Paris and accused Tolain and certain other French members of the International of having ties with the Bonapartists (see Marx's letter to Engels of 25 January 1865). Hess repeated this accusation in his report from Paris printed in the newspaper on 1 February, following which Marx and Engels wrote a statement to Der Social-Demokrat refuting this false accusation (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 36). — 65
Page me42.600
†92 The letter was published in English for the first time (without the postscripts) in Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 65

Page Break me42.601
Page me42.601
†93 The name Plon-Plonists is derived from Plon-Plon, the nickname of Prince Napoleon Joseph Bonaparte, Napoleon III's cousin, whose residence was the Palais Royal while Napoleon III resided in the Tuiliers.
Page me42.601

Joseph Bonaparte headed a group of Bonapartists who sought to divert the people's attention from the struggle against the regime of the Second Empire by means of social demagogy and sham opposition to the government's policy. — 66, 76, 208, 300, 567

Page me42.601

†94 Marx's letter to Paris, presumably addressed to Victor Schily, has not been found. — 66

Page me42.601

†95 Marx is referring to the discussion of the conflict in the Paris Section by the Central Council on 24 January 1865.

Page me42.601

The Paris Section of the International Association was founded at the end of 1864 by the Proudhonistically-minded workers, Henri Tolain and Charles Limousin who took part in the inaugural meeting of 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall. Besides Tolain's group, a French lawyer and bourgeois republican, Henri Lefort, who also participated in organising the 28 September meeting, likewise claimed to be representative of French workers. Soon it became evident that Lefort was in touch with the Council's Corresponding Secretary for France, Le Lubez, and with the French petty-bourgeois refugees in England who strove to bring their influence on the International Working Men's Association. The bourgeois republicans accused Tolain of being in contact with the Bonapartists (in particular with Prince Joseph Bonaparte). The accusation was published by Moses Hess in Der Social-Demokrat. In reply to Marx's enquiry sent to Schily and Schweitzer, the former answered on 19 January 1865 that Tolain's libellous accusation had originated with the people close to L'Association, the journal of co-operative societies, of which Lefort was an editor. Schily also promised to send additional information.

Page me42.601

The conflict in the Paris Section was repeatedly discussed in the Sub-Committee and the Central Council in February and March 1865. Marx sought to protect the section from attacks by bourgeois republicans and, at the same time, to find ways of overcoming the influence of Proudhonist utopian ideas on the French workers. — 66, 80, 108, 115, 118, 130

Page me42.601

†96 Sections of the International Associations began to be set up in Switzerland immediately after the press reports about the inaugural meeting at St Martin's Hall. On 11 October 1864, a group of Geneva workers headed by François Dupleix, a bookbinder, formed a provisional committee to establish contacts with the workers of other countries. At the Central Council meeting on 24 January 1865 the news about the Geneva workers' intention to affiliate to the International was met with approval. Hermann Jung, the Corresponding Secretary for Switzerland, sent Dupleix the Rules of the International Working Men's Association; he also advised the Swiss workers, in the name of the Central Council, to set up a Central Committee for the whole of Switzerland.

Page me42.601

The above-mentioned soirée to celebrate the founding of the International Working Men's Association was arranged on 16 January 1865 at Cambridge Hall, London. — 66

Page me42.601
†97 This reference is to the British National League for the Independence of Poland founded in London on 28 July 1863. Its establishment was preceded by a meeting at St James's Hall on 22 July arranged to express solidarity with the participants in the Polish insurrection (see Note 24). The meeting, which was one of the harbingers in the founding of the International, was attended by British trade unionists and representatives of the international democratic movement, as well as by a French workers' delegation from Paris. The meeting resolved to send a delegation to the Foreign Secretary, John Russell, to hand in a protest against the British government's double-faced policy towards the Polish insurgents. Russell refused to receive the delegation, and a second meeting was called on 28 July 1863, this time at the premises of The Bee-Hive Newspaper, at which the League was founded. Radical Edmond Beales was elected president and John R. Taylor — honorary secretary.

Page Break me42.602
Page me42.602
By the Polish society here Marx means the revolutionary democrats from among the Polish émigrés in London grouped round the representative of the National Central Committee of Poland that stood at the head of the 1863-64 uprising. At the Central Council's meeting on 10 January 1865, also attended by representatives of the National League and the National Central Committee of Poland, a resolution was passed which emphasised that 'this Association pledges itself to assist by all means in its power the commemoration of the glorious, though unsuccessful, Revolution of 1863'.
Page me42.602
The 'meeting for the Poles' mentioned by Marx took place on 1 March 1865 (see Note 168). — 66, 86, 109
Page me42.602
†98 Wilhelm Liebknecht wrote to Marx before 20 January 1865 that he had learned of Ferdinand Lassalle's agreement with Bismarck's government: he promised support from the General Association of German Workers over the annexation of Schleswig-Holstein by Prussia if it introduced universal suffrage. Marx and Engels regarded this political 'bequest' by Lassalle as betrayal of the proletariat's interests. The Lassalle-Bismarck correspondence published in 1928 fully confirmed Liebknecht's information. — 66, 69, 71, 75, 102, 124, 566
Page me42.602
†99 A reference to the members of the Party of Progress formed in June 1861 (the most eminent figures were Waldeck, Virchow, Schulze-Delitzsch, Forchenbeck and Hoverbeck). The party's slogans were the unification of Germany under the aegis of Prussia, the convocation of an all-German Parliament, and the formation of a strong liberal Ministry responsible to the Chamber of Deputies. Fearing a popular revolution, the Party of Progress gave no support to the basic democratic demands — universal suffrage and freedoms of the press, association and assembly. In 1866 the party split, and its Right wing founded the National Liberal Party, which capitulated to the Bismarck government. — 67, 69, 71, 75, 84, 90, 96, 97, 104, 111, 150, 176, 288, 421, 430, 456
Page me42.602

†100 The constitutional conflict in Prussia arose in February 1860 over the refusal of the bourgeois majority of the Lower Chamber of the Prussian Provincial Diet to confirm the army reorganisation project proposed by War Minister von Roon. However, the government soon managed to secure allocations from the Provincial Diet to 'maintain the army ready for action', which in fact meant the beginning of the planned reorganisation. When, in March 1862, the liberal majority of the Chamber refused to endorse military expenses and demanded a Ministry responsible to the Provincial Diet, the government dissolved the Diet and announced new elections. The Bismarck Ministry was formed at the end of September 1862. In October it again dissolved the Provincial Diet and began to carry out the military reform without the sanction of the Diet. The conflict was settled only in 1866 when, after Prussia's victory over Austria, the Prussian bourgeoisie capitulated to Bismarck. — 68, 82, 84
Page me42.602
†101 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. — 68, 72, 77, 79, 94, 135, 159, 172, 227, 266, 289, 297, 299, 359, 362, 381, 383, 407, 423, 458, 519, 557

Page Break me42.603
Page me42.603
†102 Engels' letter to the editors of Der Social-Demokrat in which he asked them to send him projects for the reorganisation of the Prussian army has not been found. — 69
Page me42.603
†103 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 70, 281
Page me42.603
†104 By Hess' 'expulsion from Brussels' Marx means his departure from Belgium's capital in March 1846 due to the aggravated ideological struggle between the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee, headed by Marx and Engels, and the representatives of petty-bourgeois 'true socialism' of which Hess was one of the spokesmen.
Page me42.603
By the 'ejection from Cologne' Marx means Hess' forced departure from Rhenish Prussia in the spring of 1848, when Marx and Engels thwarted the attempt of Hess and his followers to take over from the proletarian revolutionaries the initiative in starting a revolutionary democratic newspaper in Cologne. — 70
Page me42.603
†105 Marx realised this intention in a footnote to the Preface to the first German edition (1867) of Volume One of Capital (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 71, 329
Page me42.603
†106 Neither letters nor written statements by Marx to the editor of Der Social-Demokrat have been found. — 71
Page me42.603
†107 A reference to the workers' right to organise trade unions and to go on strike. In January 1865 the Prussian Provincial Diet debated the right of association in connection with the workers' opposition to the trade regulations then in force. Two members of the Party of Progress, Schulze-Delitzsch and Faucher, used the occasion to have the articles restraining capitalism repealed. They proposed to revoke Article 181, which forbade employers to resort to lockouts, and also demagogically demanded the cancellation of Article 182 concerning the punishment of workers for incitement to strike. The workers in turn wanted the repeal of Article 183 which made them obtain police permission to form associations, and of Article 184 banning strikes.

Page me42.603
On 14 February 1865 the Prussian Provincial Diet annulled Articles 181 and 182 and left the workers' demand for freedom of association unsatisfied. — 71
Page me42.603
†108 The decree of the Constituent Assembly of 14 June 1791 declared strikes to be a 'crime against freedom and the declaration of the rights of man' and the formation of workers' associations was liable to a fine of 500 livres and deprivation of political rights for a year. Le Chapellier made a report on this subject. The Chapellier Law was in force in France (as regards prohibition of strikes) till 1864, while the freedom of activity for the trade unions was not legalised until 1884. — 71
Page me42.603
†109 The Ten Hours' Bill, the struggle for which had been waged for many years, was passed by Parliament in 1847, against a background of sharply intensified contradictions between the landed aristocracy and the industrial bourgeoisie, generated by the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846. In revenge on the industrial bourgeoisie, some Tory MPs supported the Bill. Its provisions applied only to women and children. Nevertheless, many manufacturers evaded it in practice. — 71
Page me42.603
†110 In his letter to Marx of 30 January 1865, Wilhelm Strohn wrote that he had seen the Hamburg publisher Otto Meissner who agreed to publish Marx's

Page Break me42.604
Capital on share principles. Meissner wanted to have the manuscript for study (see also Note 66). Strohn also wrote that Meissner had received, through a certain Siebold, offers from Arnold Ruge and Karl Blind concerning the publication of periodicals, and that Ferdinand Freiligrath had promised to contribute to Blind's republican newspaper. — 72
Page me42.604
†111 This letter by Marx has not been found. — 73, 75, 101, 107, 108, 118, 149, 194, 246, 343, 370, 391, 447, 448, 464, 487, 516, 538, 542
Page me42.604
†112 On 28 January 1865, on Lincoln's instructions the American Envoy Adams handed over the President's reply to the address of the Central Council of the International (see Note 70). This reply, in the form of Adams' letter, was published in The Times, No. 25101, on 6 February 1865, under the title 'Mr. Lincoln and the International Working Men's Association'. — 73, 80, 86, 161
Page me42.604
†113 The Emancipation Society was founded in London in November 1862 by English bourgeois radicals. It supported the London Trades Council (see Note 18) in its campaign against Britain's interference in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the South (see Note 11). Among its leading figures were Edmond Beales, Edward Beesly and John Stuart Mill. — 73, 74, 86

Page me42.604
†114 The Literary Society of the Friends of Poland was founded in Paris in April 1832 by the aristocratic-monarchist Polish émigrés under Adam Czartoryski. Its London branch was set up in the same year with the help of English aristocrats from among the Whig Party. — 73
Page me42.604
†115 At the Central Council meeting of 31 January 1865 a letter was read from Léon Fontaine, a member of the Belgian democratic Universal Federation. In his letter dated 29 January, Fontaine wrote that the Federation had decided to join the International Association and intended to translate the Association's documents into French. As it turned out later, Fontaine had no connections with the workers and did not take any further steps to establish a section of the International. The first section in Belgium was set up on 17 July 1865 with the direct participation of the Belgian socialist César de Paepe. — 73
Page me42.604
†116 This refers to the participation of Central Council members in a preliminary conference of electoral reform supporters scheduled for 6 February 1865. At this conference, a group of bourgeois radicals set up a provisional committee to convoke a meeting in support of manhood suffrage in London on 23 February. Marx attached great importance to the campaign for the democratisation of Britain's political system. He therefore thought it possible to co-operate with the bourgeois radicals but on conditions that would ensure a genuinely democratic reform as well as an independent and leading role for the International Working Men's Association in the reform campaign.
Page me42.604
At its meeting on 31 January 1865, the Central Council elected a deputation to the reform conference. Besides Eccarius and Le Lubez, it included Carter, Odger, Whitlock, Cremer, Wheeler and Dell. — 74
Page me42.604
†117 Marx's letter to Jones has not been found. As can be seen from Jones' reply of 10 February 1865, Marx outlined a plan for drawing the masses of English workers into a reform campaign under the leadership of the Central Council of the International, and substantiated its platform (the demand for manhood suffrage, etc.). In his letter Jones expressed his agreement with the platform, emphasising, in particular, the need to oppose the moderate position of the Manchester liberal bourgeoisie on this question. — 74, 91

Page Break me42.605
Page me42.605
†118 This letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes. Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. — 75, 86, 88, 402
Page me42.605
†119 On 1 February 1865 Carl Siebel wrote to Marx that he had met Carl Klings after the general assembly of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers in Düsseldorf at the end of December 1864. Therefore Marx's recommendation to Klings, sent through Siebel, that the general assembly should propose the Association's affiliation to the International, reached him too late (see Note 82). — 75, 78

Page me42.605
†120 The cutting from the Rheinische Zeitung enclosed in Siebel's letter to Marx of 1 February 1865 has not been found. Siebel assumed that the leading article was written by Hermann Becker (Red Becker). Judging by Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 16 February, the author contrasted the revolutionary position of Marx and Engels who supported the democrats against the government with that of the Lassalleans who supported the government against the democrats. — 75, 80
Page me42.605
†121 Marx's letter to Schweitzer with a proposal that the latter should stand up to Bismarck in Der Social-Demokrat has not been found. It is quite possible that Marx wrote about this in the final version of his letter to Schweitzer of 16 January 1865. The draft of this undiscovered letter is published on pp. 64-65 of this volume. — 75, 95
Page me42.605
†122 Der Social-Demokrat, No. 16 for 1 February 1865, published an item 'Paris, 28. Januar. Internationale Arbeiter-Association. — Geldkrisis' (signed H). It repeated the libel that the French members of the International (Henri Tolain and Charles Limousin) were in contact with the Bonapartists (see Note 91). — 75
Page me42.605
†123 The coup d'état in Prussia in November-December 1848 resulted in the dissolution of the National Assembly (convened in Berlin in May 1848 to draw up a constitution). The constitution imposed ('granted') by the King introduced a two-chamber system; the First Chamber was transformed by age and property qualifications into a privileged 'chamber of the nobility'. According to the electoral law of 6 December 1848, the right to vote in the two-stage elections to the Second Chamber was granted only to the so-called independent Prussians. In April 1849 Frederick William IV dissolved this Chamber and promulgated a new electoral law on 30 May which established a three-class election system based on high property qualifications and unequal representation of the various strata of the population. — 76
Page me42.605
†124 Road books (Wanderbücher) were issued in Prussia to journeymen artisans under the law introduced in 1831. They recorded their places of residence and contained an assessment of their trustworthiness. — 77
Page me42.605
†125 Marx attached to this letter his rough copy of a statement to the editor of Der Social-Demokrat (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 36) with a protest against the publication of the report by Hess, who libellously accused the French members of the International (see Note 91). The criticism by Marx and Engels compelled the editors to change the newspaper's tone to some extent. Issue No. 21 of 12 February 1865 carried an item by Hess in which he withdrew his accusations. For that reason Marx and Engels did not insist on the publication of their statement. However, they decided to stop contributing to the newspaper for the time being. Marx and Engels announced their final break with Der Social-Demokrat on 23 February 1865 (see this volume, p. 97). — 79, 95

Page Break me42.606

Page me42.606
†126 Marx forwarded to Engels Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter of 4 February 1865 in which Liebknecht treated collaboration on Der Social-Demokrat as a compromise with the Lassalleans. He also described his material hardships and asked Marx to find a place for him as a schoolmaster in northern England or Scotland. Marx's postscript to this letter to Engels (originally written at the end of Liebknecht's letter) was published in previous editions as a separate letter. — 80, 81
Page me42.606
†127 On 8 February 1865, War Minister Roon spoke in the Chamber of Deputies about his Bill on changes in and addenda to the Prussian law on military service. These changes signified minor concessions to the opposition bourgeois majority in the Chamber and did not resolve the constitutional conflict (see Note 100). — 83
Page me42.606
†128 Marx supported Lefort's appointment as the International's literary defender in Paris because he had gathered from Schily's letter of 5 February 1865 that the conflict in the Paris Section (see Note 95) had been resolved. He hoped this would help to draw French workers active in the co-operative movement into the International and also to utilise the journal L'Association for propagating the International's ideas.
Page me42.606
When translating the Provisional Rules of the Association into French, at the end of 1864, the Proudhonist leaders of the Paris Section distorted the text in some places. In particular, in the third paragraph of the Preamble to the Rules ('That the economical emancipation of the working classes is therefore the great end to which every political movement ought to be subordinate as a means'), the words 'as a means' were omitted. — 85
Page me42.606
†129 On Marx's advice Engels formulated this passage in his pamphlet in such a way that it could not have been interpreted as the author's agreement with Lassalle's slogans. He also incorporated the suggestion Marx made below on changing the description of the position of the German bourgeoisie during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 69 and 57). — 87
Page me42.606
†130 On 27 March 1849 the Frankfurt National Assembly, elected in April-May 1848 to draw up an all-German Constitution, adopted a law introducing direct universal suffrage. The law was published by the Imperial Regent, Archduke John, in an official government edition on 12 April 1849. Since, however, the King of Prussia and other German princes had rejected the Imperial Constitution drawn by the National Assembly, the law was not put into effect. — 87
Page me42.606
†131 This letter by Engels has not been found. — 88, 99, 174, 445, 448, 467, 475, 481, 513, 534, 566
Page me42.606
†132 The Tory Chartists or Tory philanthropists — representatives of a trend among England's conservative politicians and writers in the 1830s-50s, including the Young

England group, whose members (Disraeli and Ferrand among them) founded a separate group in the House of Commons in 1841. Voicing the discontent of the landed aristocracy at the growing economic and political power of the bourgeoisie, the Tory philanthropists criticised the capitalist system and supported the half-hearted measures for improving the condition of the workers. However, they adopted a hostile attitude to the independent revolutionary working-class movement. — 88

Page Break me42.607
Page me42.607
†133 Marx forwarded Engels a letter from Johann Baptist Schweitzer of 11 February 1865. It was written in reply to the statement by Marx and Engels concerning Hess' insinuations against the French members of the International. In his letter Schweitzer promised to publish immediately an item by Hess admitting his assertions to be erroneous (see Note 125). Below Marx drew Engels' attention to this item. — 89
Page me42.607
†134 Neither the original of Marx's letter to Johann Baptist Schweitzer of 13 February 1865 nor the copy of it which Marx retained has survived. However, a large fragment from it is quoted in Marx's letter to Engels of 18 February (see this volume, pp. 95-96). In this volume, this fragment is not published separately but within the above-mentioned letter to Engels. — 89, 95, 108
Page me42.607
†135 On 11 February 1865 the Minister of Commerce, Count Itzenplitz, read out a government statement in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies during the debate on the right of combination (see Note 107). In an attempt to maintain the ban on the formation of workers' associations, the government demagogically alleged that freedom of association could not improve the workers' condition and proposed instead to help in setting up workers' co-operatives. — 90
Page me42.607
†136 The Rules Governing Servants (Gesindeordnung) — the feudal rules and regulations that existed in Prussian provinces in the 18th and early 19th centuries and sanctioned the big landowners' arbitrary treatment of servants and agricultural labourers, including corporal punishment. — 90, 96, 104
Page me42.607
†137 The Order of the Swan, a German mediaeval religious order of knights, was founded in Brandenburg in 1443 and disintegrated during the Reformation. In 1843 Frederick William IV of Prussia made an abortive attempt to restore this Order, hoping that its philanthropic activity would enhance the prestige of the Prussian monarchy which, he claimed, had a social mission. — 90
Page me42.607
†138 The campaign for the right of combination was launched by the Berlin printers in early 1865 under the influence of Wilhelm Liebknecht's propaganda. When the leaders of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers realised that the campaign was widely supported by the workers, they decided to join it too, despite Lassalle, who held that associations were of no use for the workers. On 1 February 1865, Der Social-Demokrat published Bernhard Becker's instructions for the General Association's representatives with a proposal that, at their meetings, the workers should adopt resolution demanding the abolition of articles 183 and 184 of trade regulations (see Note 107) that prohibited associations and strikes. — 90

Page me42.607
†139 Marx is referring to Eccarius' articles in Der Social-Demokrat. Eccarius continued to contribute to the paper for some time after Marx had actually ceased co-operating with it (see Note 125). His last article was printed in Der Social-Demokrat on 31 March 1865. — 91
Page me42.607
†140 At a meeting of the Central Council of the International held on 14 February 1865, Marx read out Ernest Jones' letter to him of 10 February, which was a reply to Marx's letter of 1 February (Marx's letter is not extant) and written with a view to being read at the Council. Jones agreed with Marx's plan for drawing the broad mass of British workers into the electoral reform movement. — 91
Page me42.607
†141 Marx forwarded to Engels a letter from a Cologne worker, G. Matzeratt, to Friedrich Lessner dated 8 January 1865. Matzeratt wrote about the disagreements between Bernhard Becker and Carl Klings in the General Association of German Workers. On behalf of a group of the Association's members, he asked Lessner to inquire about Marx's opinion and help them to clarify the matter. As can be seen from Engels' letter to Marx of 7 February 1865, Becker gained the upper hand over Klings (see this volume, p. 82). — 94

Page Break me42.608
Page me42.608
†142 During the debate on the right of combination in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (see Note 107), Hermann Heinrich Becker, a deputy from Dortmund, moved a proposal, on 11 February 1865, that the right of combination be extended to the agricultural labourers as well. He also proposed to abolish the law of 24 April 1854 on the punishment of servants and day labourers for the violation of their duties. — 94
Page me42.608
†143 This refers to Liebknecht's withdrawal from the editorial board of Der Social-Demokrat, of which Liebknecht informed Marx in a letter dated 16-17 February 1865. — 94, 108
Page me42.608
†144 The passage in Schweitzer's letter of 15 February 1865 to Marx, written in reply to Marx's letter of 13 February, reads as follows: 'If you wish to enlighten me, as in your last letter, on theoretical questions, I would gratefully accept such instruction on your part. But as regards the practical questions of immediate tactics I beg you to consider that in order to assess these things one must be in the centre of the movement. You are therefore doing us an injustice if you express your dissatisfaction with our tactics anywhere and anyhow. You should only do this if you were absolutely familiar with conditions.' — 95
Page me42.608
†145 Marx is referring to the third article in Schweitzer's series Das Ministerium Bismarck. It was published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 23, 17 February 1865, i.e. after Marx's demand for a stop to the flirtation with Bismarck. In these articles Schweitzer supported Bismarck's policy of unifying Germany under the supremacy of Prussia and approved of the Prussian government's demagogical attempts to show that it favoured a solution to the labour question. — 95, 104

Page me42.608
†146 A reference to the 'liberal' course announced by Prince William of Prussia (King of Prussia from 1861) when he became Regent in October 1858. He made the Manteuffel Ministry resign and called the moderate liberals to power. The bourgeois press dubbed this the policy of the 'New Era'. It was, in fact, solely intended to strengthen the position of the Prussian monarchy and the Junkers. This soon became clear to the representatives of the liberal opposition whose hopes had been deceived and who refused to approve the government project of a military reform. The constitutional conflict (see Note 100) that ensued and Bismarck's advance to power in September 1862 put an end to the 'New Era'. — 96, 103
Page me42.608
†147 Marx refers to the journal of German petty-bourgeois democrats, Der deutsche Eidgenosse, published in London and Hamburg from 1865 to 1867. Among its editors were Karl Blind, Ludwig Büchner, Ferdinand Freiligrath, Ludwig Feuerbach and Ernst Haug. — 97
Page me42.608
†148 Marx enclosed in this letter to Engels some scraps of paper, in an unknown hand, about the unseemly behaviour of people from the élite of the Second Empire. — 99
Page me42.608
†149 The full text of the letter has not been found. This excerpt has been preserved in Marx's Notebook for 1865; it is also quoted by Marx in a letter to Engels of 25 February 1865 (see this volume, pp. 107-08). — 101

Page Break me42.609
Page me42.609
†150 At the beginning of February 1865 Marx made a speech at the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 360). He criticised the views of the Lassalleans, in particular their dogma about the assistance by the existing state to workers' co-operative societies. The report on the celebration meeting was drawn up by Eccarius and published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 24, 19 February 1865. The content of Marx's speech was presented by Eccarius inaccurately. He ascribed to Marx the idea that joint action by the proletariat and the bourgeoisie against the feudal monarchy was impossible.
Page me42.609
The German Workers' Educational Society in London was founded in February 1840 by Karl Schapper, Joseph Moll and other members of the League of the Just. After the foundation of the Communist League (see Note 17), the latter's local communities played the leading role in the Society. In 1847 and 1849-50, Marx and Engels took an active part in its work, but on 17 September 1850 Marx, Engels and a number of their followers withdrew because the Willich-Schapper sectarian-adventurist group had increased their influence in the Society. In the late 1850s, Marx and Engels resumed their work in the Educational Society. During the activity of the International Working Men's Association the Society (Lessner was one of its leaders) was its German Section in London. The Educational Society in London existed until 1918, when it was closed down by the British government. — 101, 106, 107, 507

Page me42.609
†151 In his letter to Marx of 19 February 1865, Ludwig Kugelmann enclosed a letter from Miquel, a former member of the Communist League, dated 22 December 1864. Miquel alleged in it that Marx's work A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy 'contains little of what is actually new' and that its conclusions were not applicable to Germany's social and political conditions. At the same time, Miquel tried to justify his desertion to the liberal camp. — 102, 107, 112
Page me42.609
†152 The National Association (Deutscher National-Verein) was a party of the German liberal bourgeoisie which advocated the unification of Germany (without Austria) in a centralised state under the supremacy of the Prussian monarchy. Its inaugural meeting was held in Frankfurt am Main in September 1859. The National Association was dissolved in November 1867, after the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 and the establishment of the North German Confederation. — 102, 163, 204, 207, 266, 280, 340, 361, 365, 372
Page me42.609
†153 On 20 March 1848, King Frederick William IV of Prussia declared that he was ready, for the salvation of Germany's unity and freedom, to 'assume the leadership of the whole nation'. Hence the phrase 'Prussian leadership' ('preussische Spitze'), which won currency as a euphemism for Prussia's efforts to unite the country under its supremacy. — 103
Page me42.609
†154 In connection with the enthronement of King William I of Prussia an amnesty was granted in Prussia on 12 January 1861 guaranteeing, in words, all political refugees unimpeded return to the country. In the spring of 1861, during his stay in Berlin, Marx submitted an application to the Prussian government requesting the restoration of his Prussian citizenship. His request was rejected by the Prussian authorities on the grounds that in 1845 Marx had surrendered his status as a Prussian of his 'own free will' and 'therefore' could be regarded 'as a foreigner' (see present edition, Vol. 19, pp. 339-58). — 105, 201
Page me42.609
†155 On 23 February 1865 a public meeting was held in St Martin's Hall, London. On the initiative and with the direct participation of the Central Council of the International Association, the meeting passed a decision to found a Reform

Page Break me42.610
League as a centre of the mass electoral reform movement. The League's leading bodies — the Council and the Executive Committee — included the Central Council members of the International, mainly British trade union leaders. The programme of the movement was drafted under the influence of Marx who was advocating the independent position of the British working class in the reform campaign. Unlike the bourgeois parties, which confined their demand to household suffrage, the Reform League, on Marx's insistence, advanced the demand for manhood suffrage. The League had branches in all big industrial cities and in provinces. However, the vacillations of the bourgeois radical leaders, who became afraid of the movement's mass character, and the conciliation of the trade union leaders prevented the League from following the line charted by the Central Council of the International. The British bourgeoisie succeeded in splitting the movement, and a moderate reform was carried out in 1867 which granted franchise only to the petty bourgeoisie and the upper layers of the working class. — 105, 108, 130, 150, 243, 251, 327, 574

Page me42.610
†156 The Combination Law of 11 March 1850 in force in Prussia banned all societies that established contacts with other organisations abroad. Hence, this law prevented the setting up of societies in Germany connected with the International Association and the affiliation to it of those already existing. Therefore, as far back as February 1865 Marx proposed to accept the form of individual membership in Germany that would allow to evade the existing laws, and that proved to be a rather flexible means of drawing the advanced German workers into the ranks of the International. — 105
Page me42.610
†157 This refers to the leading article in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 25, 22 February 1865, which was reprinted from the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of 19 February 1865. — 106
Page me42.610
†158 Thanks to Liebknecht and Siebel, Marx and Engels' statement about their break with Der Social-Demokrat (see this volume, p. 97) was published in many German newspapers, among them Barmer Zeitung and Elberfelder Zeitung (No. 60) on 26 February 1865; Düsseldorfer Zeitung (No. 59) on 28 February; Rheinische Zeitung (No. 60), Berliner Reform (No. 51), Neue Frankfurter Zeitung (No. 60), Breslauer Zeitung (No. 102), Staatsbürger-Zeitung (No. 60) on 1 March, and later in several other papers.
Page me42.610
The above-mentioned letters of Marx to Schweitzer and Liebknecht about the said statement have not been found. — 108
Page me42.610
†159 It is clear from Schily's letter to Marx of 25 February 1865, and the 'Private Instruction to Schily' extant in Marx's notebook (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 83), that Marx's instructions were aimed at finding such a way of settling the conflict in the Paris organisation of the International Association that would strengthen the position of the Paris Section's Administration and help draw into the International those workers who were still under the influence of bourgeois republicans (participants in the co-operative movement, and so on). — 108, 127
Page me42.610
†160 The 'Resolutions of the Central Council on the Conflict in the Paris Section', adopted on 7 March 1865 (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 82-83), acknowledged as erroneous the view typical of the Proudhonists, in particular the Administration of the Paris Section of the International, that only a worker can be an official in a workers' organisation. This Proudhonist view was ultimately rejected by the Geneva Congress of the International held in September 1866 (see Note 380). — 109

Page Break me42.611
Page me42.611

†161 Participation in the solidarity meeting with the Polish national liberation movement, called to mark the first anniversary of the Polish insurrection of 1863-64, was discussed by the Central Council on 21 February 1865. The following resolution was adopted unanimously: 'That the Central Council of the International Working Men's Association lend their unreserved support to the commemorative meeting for Poland on March 1st at St Martin's Hall, and they invite the attendance thereat of their friends.' — 109
Page me42.611
†162 On 24 February 1865, The Morning Star printed a notice, 'German Democracy', obviously written by Karl Blind, about the forthcoming publication of the journal Der deutsche Eidgenosse (see Note 147). — 110
Page me42.611
†163 Engels' notice announcing the publication of his pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 81) was printed anonymously in a number of German papers with the help of Carl Siebel, Johann Klein and Wilhelm Liebknecht (Engels' letters to Klein and Liebknecht requesting to publish the notice have not been found). The notice was published anonymously in Berliner Reform (No. 53), Düsseldorfer Zeitung (No. 62), Elberfelder Zeitung (No. 62) and Rheinische Zeitung (No. 62) on 3 March 1865; Oberrheinische Courier (No. 56) on 7 March, and others. Moreover, on 9 March the Rheinische Zeitung carried a special article 'Für die Arbeiterpartei' about Engels' pamphlet containing long passages from it. — 111, 112
Page me42.611
†164 Engels is referring to the silence of the German press over his anonymously published pamphlets Po and Rhine (1859) and Savoy, Nice and the Rhine (1860) (see present edition, Vol. 16). — 111
Page me42.611
†165 Since Marx and Engels' statement was published in many German newspapers (see Note 158), Schweitzer was compelled to print it in Der Social-Demokrat too (it appeared there only on 3 March 1865 in issue No. 29). — 113
Page me42.611
†166 This refers to Schweitzer's article published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 29, 3 March 1865, in the section 'Politische Theil'. It said that the German Social-Democrats who were not members of the General Association of German Workers did not belong to the Social-Democratic Party. By this attack on Marx, Engels and their close associates in Germany, the editors of Der Social-Demokrat sought to weaken the impression of Marx and Engels' statement on their breach with the newspaper. See also Engels' letter to Joseph Weydemeyer of 10 March 1865 (this volume, pp. 124-25). — 114, 116, 125
Page me42.611
†167 Marx succeeded in having items about Engels' The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party published in the German-language newspapers in London. On 17 March 1865 such an item appeared in the Londoner Anzeiger, and on 18 March the Hermann published, also anonymously, Marx's review of the pamphlet (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 85-86).
Page me42.611

Marx's letter to Ludwig Kugelmann, mentioned above, concerning the popularisation of Engels' pamphlet has not been found. — 114
Page me42.611
†168 The meeting to mark the anniversary of the Polish insurrection of 1863-64 was held in St Martin's Hall, London, on 1 March 1865. It was initiated by the British National League for the Independence of Poland (see Note 97), and the Central Council of the International contributed much to preparing and conducting it (see Note 161). The British bourgeois press, the London liberal Daily News included, covered the speeches Beales, Leverson and other bourgeois radicals made at the meeting, but passed over in silence a resolution submitted on behalf of the International and the speeches of Peter Fox and Georg Eccarius, the Central Council members. A full report of the meeting appeared in The Bee-Hive Newspaper (No. 177) on 4 March 1865, and Marx used it when writing his notice entitled 'A Correction' and intended for the Zurich Der weiße Adler, which reproduced a garbled report from the British newspapers (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 97-98). — 114, 130, 143

Page Break me42.612
Page me42.612
†169 The reference is to the manuscript of The Great Men of the Exile written by Marx and Engels (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 227-326). At the end of June 1852, Marx passed on the manuscript to the Hungarian émigré Bangya who offered to have it published in Germany. Later, it turned out that Bangya was a police spy and had handed over the manuscript to the Prussian police. The actions of Bangya, who managed to win Marx's confidence for a time, were unmasked by Marx in his article 'Hirsch's Confessions', written in April 1853 and published in American newspapers (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 40-43).
Page me42.612
Marx also exposed Bangya as a spy and an agent provocateur in Herr Vogt, published in 1860 (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 219-20). — 118, 176, 191
Page me42.612
†170 The Prussian authorities managed to suppress the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, published by Marx and Engels during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, by means of repressive measures against its editors. On 16 May 1849, its editor-in-chief Marx, who had just returned from his trip to Northern Germany, was ordered to leave Prussia within 24 hours on the pretext that he was a foreigner who had no Prussian citizenship and had violated the rights of hospitality. Ernst Dronke and Georg Weerth, members of the editorial board, were deported for the same reasons, while Engels was prosecuted for participating in an uprising in Elberfeld, Rhine Province. The last issue of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, printed in red ink, appeared on 19 May 1849. — 118
Page me42.612
†171 The People's Bank (Crédit au travail) was founded in Paris in 1863 by the petty-bourgeois socialist Jean Pierre Béluze to grant credits to producer and consumer co-operative societies and draw workers' savings to promote the co-operative movement. It existed until 1868. — 119
Page me42.612

†172 The first issue of Der deutsche Eidgenosse, of 15 March 1865, published Karl Blind's address to all friends inviting them to contribute to the journal, as well as Gustav Struve's article, 'Die “Teig-Gesichter” in Deutschland', and Gustav Rasch's 'Ein Immortellenkranz auf das Grab eines Märtyrers (Max Dortu)'.
Page me42.612
On the title page of the journal an emblem consisting of a hand with dagger was printed with the inscription in Latin: 'Manus haec inimica tyrannies' ('This hand is the Enemy of Tyrants'). — 119
Page me42.612
†173 In its issue No. 31 of 8 March 1865, Der Social-Demokrat published the statement by Georg Herwegh and Friedrich Wilhelm Rüstow of their refusal, following Marx and Engels, to contribute to this newspaper. Commenting on the statement, Schweitzer distorted Marx's and Engels' attitude to Lassalle and falsified the reasons for their withdrawal from the editorial board of Der Social-Demokrat. To prove that Marx and Engels were allegedly inconsistent and their actions unjustified, Schweitzer quoted Karl Blind's article published in the Neue Frankfurter Zeitung, No. 64, 5 March 1865. — 120, 126, 129
Page me42.612
†174 In a letter to Engels, dated 20 January 1865, Joseph Weydemeyer gave a short description of the preceding events in the Civil War in America (see Note 11),

Page Break me42.613
in particular the Red River expedition by Northern troops in 1864, undertaken with a view to entrenching themselves in Texas. General Banks, who headed the expedition, marched from New Orleans and intended to join forces at Shreveport with General Steel who set out from Arkansas. However, Banks' troops were suddenly attacked by the Southerners in the Texas woods and were forced to retreat. — 121
Page me42.613
†175 Missunde — a Danish stronghold captured by Prussian troops on 2 February 1864, during the Danish war (see Note 9). — 121
Page me42.613
†176 This refers to the military operations between the allied Anglo-Spanish-Portuguese troops under Wellington and those of Napoleonic France on the Peninsula in 1808-14, and to the Crimean war, 1853-56, between Britain, France, Turkey and later Piedmont, on the one hand, and Tsarist Russia, on the other.
Page me42.613
The battle of Alma took place during the Crimean war, on 20 September 1854. It was the first battle after the Allies' landing at Eupatoria in the Crimea on 14 September. The defeat and withdrawal of the Russian troops opened up the way to Sevastopol for the Allies. — 122
Page me42.613
†177 Marx stayed with his relatives, the Philipses, at Zalt-Bommel (Holland) from 19 March to 8 April 1865. — 128, 133, 139, 566
Page me42.613
†178 In his comments on the statement of Herwegh and Rüstow, Schweitzer quoted Blind's article (see Note 173) mentioning the following passage from Marx's private letter of condolence to Sophie von Hatzfeldt, written on 12 September 1864 on the occasion of Lassalle's death: 'He died young, at a time of triumph, as an Achilles' (see present edition, Vol. 41, p. 563). These words taken from the letter, without Marx's knowledge and consent, were published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 1, 15 December 1864, over his signature and were used to extol Lassalle. In due time Marx lodged a protest against this breach of ethics on Schweitzer's part. — 129

Page me42.613
†179 Marx realised his intention by writing, on 15 March 1865, the 'Statement Regarding the Causes of the Breach with the Social-Demokrat'. It was published in the Berliner Reform (No. 67) on 19 March 1865 (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 87-90). — 129

Page me42.613
†180 Marx enclosed in his letter the text of the Central Council's resolutions on the conflict in the Paris Section (see Note 95) written by him and approved by the Council on 7 March 1865, and the text of the private instruction to Schily who was appointed a special representative of the Central Council in the Paris Administration (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 82-83). — 130
Page me42.613
†181 On 11 March 1865, in Radleys Hotel, London, there was a conference of the workers' delegation elected at the meeting in St. Martin's Hall (see Note 155) and representatives of the radical and liberal bourgeoisie. This conference, sponsored by participants in the electoral reform movement, was a step in founding the Reform League. About 20 trade union delegates, among them members of the Central Council of the International, and as many bourgeois representatives, including four MPs, attended the conference. John Bright, leader of the Free Traders, advocated household suffrage. The demand for manhood suffrage was rejected by the bourgeois delegates, and no agreement on joint action was reached.
Page me42.613
Marx's letter to Jones mentioned above has not been found. — 130

Page Break me42.614
Page me42.614
†182 In its issue No. 299 of 4 March 1865, the Nordstern, published by Karl Bruhn, carried two leading articles in which the editors came out against any compromise with the government and described people of Schweitzer's type as intriguers. — 130
Page me42.614
†183 This refers to the resolutions on the conflict in the Paris Section (see Note 95) adopted by the Central Council of the International on 7 March 1865.
Page me42.614
No letter from Marx to Cremer has been found, nor has the letter to Schily of 13 March 1865, which he wanted to send. — 131
Page me42.614
†184 On 12 March 1865 Jung wrote to tell Marx that the Central Council had instructed him to draw up a summary of the conflict in the Paris Section for the information of the International's members in France, and asked Marx to help him in the matter. On 18

March Marx met Jung and handed him his written remarks on the latter's document. (For Marx's comments, entitled 'Memorandum to Hermann Jung about the Conflict in the Paris Section', see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 331-36.) — 132
Page me42.614
†185 The Berliner Reform of 3 March, the Rheinische Zeitung of 4 March 1865 and other German papers published a report on Marx's and Engels' break with Der Social-Demokrat which Wilhelm Liebknecht made on 28 February in the Berlin Printers' Association that declared its adhesion to the International. The printers approved of Marx and Engels' statement of 23 February and Liebknecht's refusal to contribute to Der Social-Demokrat. — 134
Page me42.614
†186 On 11 March 1865, the Nordstern (No. 300) published a protest by Georg Herwegh, Friedrich Wilhelm Rüstow and Friedrich Reusche. It was against a report in Der Social-Demokrat, of 26 February 1865, which said that Lassalle was flirting with the Prussian monarchy. The authors of the protest asserted that Lassalle did not show any special respect for the King of Prussia and that the report's allegations were unfounded. — 134
Page me42.614
†187 In early March 1865 Carl Siebel forwarded to Engels a letter he received from the then editor of the Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Dresemann. The latter invited Marx and Engels to contribute to the Sphinx, a newspaper which Friedrich Albert Lange intended to found in Duisburg. — 136
Page me42.614
†188 Marx criticised the Ricardian 'law of population' in the first volume of Capital (see the English edition published in 1887 under Engels' editorship: Part VII, Chapter XXV, Section 3, and the present edition, Vol. 35). — 137
Page me42.614
†189 Malthus' plagiarisms in his An Essay on the Principle of Population, as It Affects the Future Improvement of Society, with Remarks on the Speculations of Mr. Godwin, M. Condorcet, and other Writers are mentioned by Marx in the first volume of Capital (see the English edition published in 1887 under Engels' editorship: Part VII, Chapter XXV, Section 1, and the present edition, Vol. 35). — 137
Page me42.614
†190 The words 'Caveant consules ne quid respublica detrimenti capiat' ('Let the consuls beware lest the Republic suffer harm') used to be addressed by the Roman Senate to the consuls in time of danger for the state; the meaning was that they were empowered to appoint a dictator. — 137
Page me42.614
†191 Schulze-Delitzsch, a German bourgeois economist and a leader of the Party of Progress, supported small savings banks and loan offices, and consumer and producer co-operatives based on the workers' own means, with the aim of diverting workers from the revolutionary struggle against capital. Schulze-Delitzsch advocated harmony of capitalists' and workers' interests, asserting that co-operatives could help improve workers' conditions under capitalism and save small producers and artisans from ruin. — 138

Page Break me42.615

Page me42.615
†192 Bernhard Becker, President of the General Association of German Workers, made a speech at a meeting of the Association's Hamburg Section on 22 March 1865 in which he slandered the International Working Men's Association and also Marx, Engels and Liebknecht. Marx rebuffed Becker in an article 'The ”President of Mankind”', published in the Rheinische Zeitung, No. 102 (second supplement), 12 April and the Berliner Reform, No. 88 (supplement), 13 April 1865 (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 92-96). On 27 March, Becker was denounced by Liebknecht at a meeting of the Association's Berlin Section when it discussed the question of the presidency. On 1 April 1865 the Nordstern (No. 303) printed statements by Rüstow and Herwegh against the attacks made by Becker on Countess Hatzfeldt.
Page me42.615
In view of the growing discontent among the rank-and-file members of the General Association with Becker as President, the Berlin Section resolved to expel him. Many other sections followed suit. In June 1865 Becker was compelled provisionally to delegate his presidential powers to his deputy Fritzsche and completely renounced them in November. — 139, 140, 566
Page me42.615
†193 Lefort's statement about his withdrawal from the International was published in L'Association, No. 6, April 1865. — 140
Page me42.615
†194 At the Central Council meeting of 28 March 1865 the General Secretary, William Cremer, spoke on behalf of the Council's deputation (Eccarius, Weston, Jung, Fox, and others). He reported on the results of their meeting with the delegates of the National Shoemakers' Union and its adoption of the following resolution: 'That we cordially agree with the principles of the International Association as represented so eloquently by the deputation from that body and pledge ourselves to join them for the furtherance of those principles and endeavour to spread their liberal and glorious ideas among our constituents.' — 140
Page me42.615
†195 In his letters to Engels, dated 10 January and 1 April 1865, Sigismund Borkheim wrote that Adolph Kolatschek, an Austrian journalist, intended to resume publication of the Stimmen der Zeit and invited Marx and Engels to contribute to it. Kolatschek's intention did not materialise. — 141
Page me42.615
†196 The notice entitled 'A Correction' was published with slight changes in Der weiße Adler, No. 48, 22 April 1865 over Jung's signature (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 97-98). — 143
Page me42.615
†197 This letter has reached us as a draft in Marx's notebook for 1865. The notebook also reproduced the text attached to the letter of the Central Council official resolution of 11 April 1865, signed by Odger, the President, and Cremer, the General Secretary of the Council, appointing Marx Corresponding Secretary for Belgium pro tem instead of Le

Lubez who abandoned this post. The following postscript was entered in the notebook: 'Letter sent on Monday, 17 April 1865.' — 144
Page me42.615
†198 In his article 'Falsche Freunde und offene Feinde', published in the Nordstern, No. 304, on 8 April 1865, Friedrich Reusche defended Georg Herwegh, Friedrich Rüstow and Johann Philipp Becker whom Bernhard Becker called 'false friends' for their refusal to co-operate on Der Social-Demokrat (see Note 173). Written in a melodramatic tone, the article refers to the oath given by the above-mentioned men to the dying Lassalle to bring his cause to a finish, and calls Bernhard Becker, Schweitzer and their followers 'venal mercenaries and tools of reaction'.

Page Break me42.616
Page me42.616
By mentioning Willich's apple-tree Engels means the oath which Willich and his volunteer corps gave under an apple-tree during the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849; better die on German soil than go back into exile. However, as a result of the insurgents' defeat, Willich's corps was compelled to cross the Swiss frontier. Engels described this episode in his letter to Marx of 23 November 1853 which Marx included in his pamphlet The Knight of the Noble Consciousness (see present edition, Vol. 12, pp. 489-93). — 147
Page me42.616
†199 The coopting of Pierre Vinçard, a working-class journalist and veteran of the 1848 revolution, for the Paris Administration (which already included Fribourg, Limousin and Tolain) was meant to make the French members of the International familiar with the revolutionary and socialist traditions of the French working-class movement of the 1840s. However, Vinçard did not accept the appointment for personal reasons, about which he informed Dupont, the Corresponding Secretary of the Central Council for France, in a letter of 30 April 1865. — 149
Page me42.616
†200 On Friedrich Lessner's proposition, the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 150) at its meeting on 22 March 1865 broke with the Lassalleans.
Page me42.616
At the general meeting of the Society and its branches, Teutonia and Eintracht, called on 5 April 1865 to discuss the behaviour of Bernhard Becker, President of the General Association of German Workers, and the editorial board of Der Social-Demokrat, Louis Weber tried to defend the Lassallean leaders. He wanted to pass a resolution declaring the political position of some Party officials to be their personal affair that should not be discussed by members of the Society. Weber's proposition was turned down by the meeting. The report of this meeting was given in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 50, 21 April 1865, in a distorted way.
Page me42.616
Teutonia — an educational society of German workers who lived in the southern districts of London, a branch of the German Workers' Educational Society. Together with the latter, it joined the International Working Men's Association in January 1865. The leaders of the Teutonia were A. Klinker and Klinke. — 150, 174

Page me42.616
†201 This refers to the 'Address of Germans to the American Nation' written on the occasion of the assassination of US President, Abraham Lincoln, on 14 April 1865 and published in The Times, No. 25171, 28 April 1865. — 151
Page me42.616
†202 Engels is referring to the report from Solingen, published in the Nordstern, No. 307, 29 April 1865, on the meeting of the Solingen section of the General Association of German Workers. The section was in opposition to Bernhard Becker, President of the Association. Its members formed a community of their own and dissociated themselves from those sections which continued to recognise Becker's leadership. In opposition to Der Social-Demokrat edited by Schweitzer, they declared the Nordstern the official organ of the Association. In September 1865 the Solingen community constituted itself as a section of the International in Germany. — 152
Page me42.616
†203 At the battle of Jena (14 October 1806) the French army, commanded by Napoleon, routed the Prussian army, thus forcing Prussia to surrender. — 153, 256, 277

Page Break me42.617
Page me42.617
†204 According to a report from Cologne published in the Nordstern, No. 308, 6 May 1865, the growing opposition to Bernhard Becker, President of the General Association of German Workers, compelled him to raise the question of confidence at the meeting of the Association's local branches in Cologne. The majority of the meeting walked out, and of the remaining 24 members only 15 voted for Becker. — 154
Page me42.617
†205 The Central Council of the International failed to acquire most of The Bee-Hive Newspaper shares through lack of funds and because at the decisive moment, in May 1865, its members were distracted by the campaign for electoral reform in England. On the eve of the shareholders' general meeting, Council members Odger, Cremer, and Howell left for Manchester to attend a conference of reformers, which allowed Potter to retain the majority of votes in his favour. — 155, 169, 173
Page me42.617
†206 US President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth, an agent of Southern planters and New York bankers. Andrew Johnson became President. On 2 May 1865 the Central Council of the International took a decision to draw up an address to the American people. At the Council meeting of 9 May Marx read out the 'Address from the Working Men's International Association to President Johnson' which he had written. The Address was passed to President Johnson through Adams, the American envoy to England (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 99-100). — 155
Page me42.617
†207 After Marx, Engels, Liebknecht, Herwegh, Rüstow and Johann Philipp Becker refused to collaborate with Der Social-Demokrat, Moses Hess continued to work on it, and when the Rheinische Zeitung printed a notice about Hess' refusal to contribute to the newspaper, he denied it. — 156, 158
Page me42.617

†208 In its issue No. 58 (the literary section) of 10 May 1865, Der Social-Demokrat reprinted from the Allgemeine Zeitung (of 29 April 1865, supplement) a commentary on Wuttke's Städtebuch des Landes Posen. In this book Wuttke tried to prove that the Germans had an inherent right to the Polish lands. — 156
Page me42.617
†209 In his report from Paris published in the supplement to issue No. 57 of Der Social-Demokrat of 7 May 1865, Moses Hess again slandered the French members of the International (see notes 95 and 122). — 157
Page me42.617
†210 The national Reform Conference, sponsored by the liberal National Reform Union, was held in Manchester on 15 and 16 May 1865. Most of its delegates were representatives of the bourgeoisie. They refused to include the demand for universal manhood suffrage in the conference's resolutions as proposed by the International's Central Council member Cremer, who was supported by Ernest Jones and some delegates of the Reform League (see Note 155). Edmond Beales, President of the Reform League, and other radicals adopted an indecisive attitude to the nature of the reform. As a result, the conference carried a moderate resolution to extend the franchise to householders and house tenants who paid poor-rates. The report of the Manchester Conference was published in The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 188, 20 May 1865. — 158
Page me42.617
†211 Early in May 1865 the House of Commons turned down Baines' moderately liberal Bill which envisaged the reduction of the electoral qualification in the cities from £10 to £6. This reflected the sentiments of the British bourgeoisie which was scared by the scope of the reform movement among the workers. On 2 May 1865 the Executive Committee of the Reform League addressed a manifesto to the British workers, calling on them to take part in the campaign for manhood suffrage. — 158

Page Break me42.618
Page me42.618
†212 At the elections to the Geneva Cantonal Council in August 1864 the radical James Fazy, who headed the canton's government in 1846-53 and 1855-61, suffered a crushing defeat because of the exposure of his financial machinations as President of the Banque Générale Suisse. After the elections Fazy's followers made an armed attack on some of those who voted against him. When Swiss government troops arrived in Geneva, Fazy had to flee to France. — 158, 185, 237
Page me42.618
†213 A reference to the correspondence between Le Lubez, the Corresponding Secretary of the Central Council of the International for France, and Henri Lefort, the International's correspondent in Neufchâteau, during the conflict in the Paris Section of the International (see Note 95). Le Lubez tried to set Lefort against the Central Council and the Paris Administration. — 158
Page me42.618
†214 From May to August 1865 the Central Council of the International discussed economic questions raised by John Weston. Apart from the speech made at the special Council meeting of 20 May 1865 whose minutes have not survived, Marx delivered a report on the subject at the Council meetings on 20 and 27 June, known as 'Wages, Price and Profit'. This report was not printed in the lifetimes of Marx and Engels. It was first prepared for the press by Marx's daughter, Eleanor, and published with Edward Aveling's preface, as a pamphlet in London in 1898 under the title Value, Price and Profit. In the present edition of the Collected Works of Marx and Engels it is printed under this title (see Vol. 20, pp. 101-49). — 160, 162

Page me42.618
†215 A German translation of Marx's 'Address from the Working Men's International Association to President Johnson' (see Note 206) was published in Chicago, Sonntags-Zeitung, 4 June 1865. — 161
Page me42.618
†216 A reference to the statements made by a number of branches of the General Association of German Workers against Bernhard Becker and published in the Nordstern, No. 313, 24 June 1865 (see Note 192). — 161, 176
Page me42.618
†217 The first Congress of the International Working Men's Association scheduled for 1865 in Brussels was held between 3 and 8 September 1866 in Geneva. The decision to postpone the Congress was taken by the Central Council on 25 July 1865 on Marx's insistence. He considered that the local organisations of the International were not yet strong enough in ideological and organisational terms and suggested that a preliminary conference be held in London in September 1865.
Page me42.618
Official reasons for postponing the congress were set out in the 'Report of the Sub-Committee on the Questions of a Congress and Conference' drawn up by the Central Council's decision of 13 June 1865 and approved by the Council on 25 July (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 375-77). — 163, 171, 174, 179
Page me42.618
†218 In a letter written at the end of May-early June 1865, Liebknecht asked Marx whether he knew Dr Kugelmann from Hanover and supposed that Kugelmann was a friend of Pieper's and adhered to 'communism'.
Page me42.618
In the 1850s, while in exile in London, Pieper was a friend of Marx and Engels. From 1859 he lived in Bremen and late in February 1864 he visited Marx in London. — 165
Page me42.618
†219 Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 13 May 1865 contained a postscript from Paul Stumpf from Mainz who visited Berlin at the time. Stumpf wrote to Marx that he had sent him a letter ten days ago through Bruhn from Hamburg, in which he asked Marx for his opinion on the disagreements between the Nordstern and Der Social-Demokrat, on the situation in the General Association of German Workers and the position of its President, Bernhard Becker. Stumpf also asked Marx about his latest works and those of Engels and whether he had received the letter. — 165

Page Break me42.619
Page me42.619

†220 Marx here speaks ironically about the assertions in Liebknecht's letters that the International was widely supported in Germany. — 165
Page me42.619
†221 This refers to Countess Sophie von Hatzfeldt's lawsuit and to Ferdinand Lassalle's mother who challenged Lassalle's will. — 165
Page me42.619
†222 The Permissive Bill empowered parishes to grant licences for the sale of alcoholic beverages. From 1864 to 1877 it was repeatedly introduced in the British Parliament. — 168
Page me42.619
†223 In the 1850s Windmill Street, Soho, was the seat of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 150). — 168
Page me42.619
†224 A banquet of the opposition liberal majority of the Chamber of Deputies, organised by the Rhineland men of Progress (see Note 99) headed by the Town-Councillor Classen-Kappelmann, was scheduled for 22-23 July 1865, in Cologne. On 17 July the Bismarck government forbade the banquet. Despite numerous protests on the part of the workers in the various towns of Germany against this arbitrary measure, most opposition members did not dare to show open resistance. Only some 80 delegates out of the 250 invited arrived in Cologne. The banquet's organiser, Classen-Kappelmann, fearing arrest, left for Belgium. Since the hall where the banquet was to take place had been closed by the police, the deputies tried to hold the banquet in the Zoological Gardens, but were driven out of it by soldiers and policemen. — 169, 182, 185, 229
Page me42.619
†225 The reference is to a series of banquets in favour of electoral reform that took place in France from July 1847 to January 1848 and became a prelude to the February bourgeois-democratic revolution of 1848. — 169
Page me42.619
†226 Marx wrote this letter to Léon Fontaine after he had become acquainted with the state of affairs in Belgium from the letter of Charles Limousin, a French member of the International who visited Belgium, to Eugéne Dupont, the Central Council's Corresponding Secretary for France, the letter being dated 6 July 1865. In the summer of 1865, a group of Brussels workers discontent with Fontaine's inertness decided to set up a section of the International in Belgium. However, they met with Fontaine's resistance: he demanded that he should be acknowledged as the only representative of the Central Council of the International. On 17 July a Belgian Section was organised with the active participation of César De Paepe. It elected a provisional committee which established direct contacts with Marx and the Central Council.
Page me42.619
Marx's letter to Léon Fontaine has been preserved as a draft in Marx's notebook for 1865.
Page me42.619
The letter was first published in English in Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 170
Page me42.619

†227 After the publication of Part One of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy in 1859, Marx wrote a voluminous economic manuscript in 1861-63 which is a second, after the manuscript of 1857-58, detailed rough version of his future Capital. By 1863, Marx had finally decided to publish his work in four books: the first three books — theoretical, and the fourth — historical-literary. Having completed the 1861-63 manuscript, in August 1863 Marx began preparing his Capital for the press.

Page Break me42.620

Page me42.620

In the course of this work he wrote a third preparatory version of Capital — the Economic Manuscript of 1863-65 consisting of three theoretical books (the outline of the fourth book, Theories of Surplus Value, was in the 1861-63 manuscript). Subsequently, having finished them, Marx again returned to the first book. On Engels' advice he decided to publish it before the others were ready. Marx gave the finishing touches to it in 1866 and most of 1867. The first German edition of the first book — Volume One of Capital — appeared in September 1867. As agreed with Otto Meissner, a Hamburg publisher, the second and third books, devoted to the analysis of the process of circulation of capital and the forms of capitalist production as a whole, were to be published as Volume Two of Capital, and the fourth book, on the 'history of economic theories', as the concluding volume, Volume Three, of Capital.

Page me42.620

However, during his lifetime Marx did not manage to prepare the last books of Capital for the press. It was Engels who after Marx's death did this and published his manuscripts of the second and third books, as Volume Two (1885) and Volume Three (1894) of Capital. Engels also intended to publish the above-mentioned manuscript of the fourth book, as Volume Four of Capital, but did not materialise this intention during his lifetime. In the present edition of the Collected Works of Marx and Engels, this book is included in the Economic Manuscript of 1861-63 (vols 30-34), while the first three volumes of Capital published in vols 35-37. — 173, 227, 312

Page me42.620

†228 By Jacob Grimm's method Marx means the method Jacob and his brother Wilhelm used in compiling their German Dictionary. It was published in instalments, beginning in 1832; each was prepared independently from one another. — 173

Page me42.620

†229 The English translation of Volume One of Capital by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, edited by Engels, was published after Marx's death, in 1887. Eleanor Marx-Aveling took an active part in preparing this edition. — 173, 394, 436, 499

Page me42.620

†230 At the end of July 1865 John Bredford Leno, the proprietor of The Miner and Workman's Advocate published in London from 1863, proposed placing this weekly at the service of the Central Council of the International. The proposal met with approval by the Council members. They discussed the matter at the meetings of 8 and 15 August 1865, in the absence of Marx who was busy with his Capital: However, Eccarius informed him in detail about this in a letter dated 16 August 1865.

Page me42.620

On 22 August an inaugural meeting was held of shareholders of the joint-stock company for financing the workers' paper, which was called the Industrial Newspaper Company. The meeting, which Marx attended, approved the address to the working men of Great Britain and Ireland and the Company's Prospectus (both published in the present edition, Vol. 20). On 25 September 1865 the London Conference of the International declared the newspaper, which in September assumed the name of The Workman's Advocate, an official organ of the International. At the beginning of November 1865 the paper became the full property of the Industrial Newspaper Company. Marx was a member of the Company's Board and remained on it until June 1866. However, the growing influence of reformist elements in the paper's Editorial Board and the vacillation and conciliatory policy of the trade union leaders on the Company's Board did not allow Marx and his followers to prevent the transformation of this working-class paper into an organ supporting the bourgeoisie. — 173, 201, 206, 571

Page Break me42.621

Page me42.621

†231 Marx is referring to a campaign of preparations for the Anglo-French industrial exhibition timed for the fiftieth anniversary of the peace treaty between Britain and France (1815) which was to open on 8 August 1865. At its meeting on 30 May 1865 the Central Council of the International censured this attempt to divert the workers from the political struggle and diminish the influence of the International. — 174

Page me42.621

†232 An aliens act was passed in Belgium as early as 1835 and was renewed every three years. Despite widespread protests by the Belgian press and the public, this law was renewed for the tenth time at the end of June 1865. — 174

Page me42.621

†233 The reference is to the terms of the 1865 agreement between Marx and the Hamburg publisher Otto Meissner on which Marx's Capital was to be printed. The text of the agreement was sent to Marx by Meissner in his letter of 21 March 1865 (see Note 66). The date of the agreement was not indicated. As preliminarily agreed, the whole of Capital was to be printed simultaneously in two volumes, each not exceeding the agreed number of printed sheets (about 50). In 1867 Meissner agreed to change the terms: to print the entire work in three volumes, publishing them at different time and enlarging the size of each volume (see Marx's letter to Engels of 13 April 1865, this volume, p. 357). Meissner left it to Marx's discretion to decide how the manuscript was to be delivered to him: by instalments or as a whole. Marx could avail himself of the agreement only in two years, when he finished his work on Volume One of Capital. — 175, 219, 226, 343, 351

Page me42.621

†234 Influenced by Sophie von Hatzfeldt, Carl Schilling published the pamphlet Die Ausstossung des Präsidenten Bernhard Becker aus dem Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Verein und der 'Social-Demokrat' (Berlin, 1865). It was a report of the meeting of the Berlin branch of the General Association of German Workers held on 27 and 30 March 1865. Liebknecht spoke at the meeting in defence of Marx against Becker's slanders. The report contained distortions which Wilhelm Liebknecht and other followers of Marx,

Theodor Metzner and August Vogt, refuted in a statement of 22 June 1865 published in the Volks-Zeitung, No. 145, 24 June 1865 and in other newspapers. — 176, 180, 191
Page me42.621
†235 In a letter to Marx, dated 15 July 1865, Liebknecht wrote that the local Printers' Association and the Berlin Journeymen's Association had organised a demonstration in his honour. The latter had invited him as an honorary guest to its annual celebration in the countryside. In connection with this, Liebknecht wrote to Marx that he thought all local worthwhile elements from among the working class were ready to follow him, as well as Marx himself and Engels. — 176
Page me42.621
†236 During their stay in Brussels Marx, Engels and other members of the Communist League were persecuted by the Belgian government. Early in March 1848 Marx received a royal order deporting him from Belgium; he and his wife were immediately arrested by the Brussels police. Engels, too, was detained and evicted across the French frontier in early October 1848 (he had come to Belgium in order to hide from the Prussian authorities). — 179, 448

Page Break me42.622
Page me42.622
†237 On 18 July 1865 an agreement was concluded between the Bismarck government and the Board of the Cologne-Minden Railway Joint-Stock Company. It granted the Company's Board the right to buy up its shares which until then belonged to the government alone. This deal placed a considerable sum of money at the disposal of the Bismarck government. The agreement was to be ratified by the Prussian Provincial Diet, but on 28 August the shareholders' general meeting unanimously approved it without the Diet's ratification. — 179, 182, 211, 285
Page me42.622
†238 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, On History and People, McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1977. — 180, 542
Page me42.622
†239 On 4 August 1865 Siebold wrote to tell Marx that there was a Workers' Association in Copenhagen led by an MP, C.V. Rimestad. He advised him to establish ties with the association but warned that Rimestad was a Bonapartist. At the same time Siebold made it clear that he regretted Marx's quarrel with Karl Blind. — 180, 182
Page me42.622
†240 Rotten Row — a broad pathway in Hyde Park, London, fashionable for riding. — 181
Page me42.622
†241 Engels made a trip to Germany, Switzerland and Italy at the end of August and mid-September 1865. — 182, 183, 190, 192
Page me42.622
†242 Returning to Siebold's letter to Marx, Engels criticises his proposal to establish contacts with the Copenhagen Workers' Association (see Note 239). This Association was under the influence of the Danish liberal party (Eider-Danes) which advanced the slogan 'Denmark up to the Eider'. The Eider-Danes demanded that the Duchy of Schleswig, populated mainly by Germans and separated from other German regions by the Eider river, should be united with Denmark. Schleswig and Holstein were at the time when the letter was written under the joint rule of Prussia and Austria (see Note 9). — 183

Page me42.622
†243 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 183, 321, 452
Page me42.622
†244 Apsides — the points in the orbit of a planet or comet at which it is nearest to (perihelion) or farthest from (aphelion) the sun. — 185
Page me42.622
†245 In the third book of Capital Marx analysed the parliamentary reports on banking for 1857-58 and criticised the theories of money and capital contained in them. — 186
Page me42.622
†246 The London Conference of the International Working Men's Association was held from 25 to 29 September 1865. It was convened on Marx's insistence, for he considered that the Association's sections were not yet strong enough to succeed in holding a general congress in 1865 as stipulated by the Provisional Rules. The conference was attended by Central Council members and by delegates from the principal branches in France, Switzerland and Belgium. Wilhelm Liebknecht could not come to the conference, and Germany was represented by Karl Marx as the Corresponding Secretary of the Central Council for the country and Johann Philipp Becker who had credentials from the Solingen branch of the General Association of German Workers which was in opposition to the latter's Lassallean leadership.

Page Break me42.623
Page me42.623
The conference heard the Central Council's report, its financial statement, and also delegates' reports on the situation in individual sections. The main point discussed was the agenda and the procedure for convening the forthcoming congress. It was decided to hold it in Geneva in May 1866 (later the Central Council postponed it until early September 1866). Though the Proudhonists demanded that the Polish question should be struck off the agenda of the Congress and that the right of any member of the Association to participate in it be recognised, the conference retained in the agenda the point of the restoration of Poland's independence and recognised only elected delegates as competent members of the Congress. Other proposals of the Council concerning the programme of the Congress were also approved.
Page me42.623
The London Conference of 1865 which was prepared and conducted under Marx's guidance played an important part in the formation and organisational shaping of the International. — 189, 201, 214
Page me42.623
†247 On 15 September 1865 Liebknecht wrote to Marx that he could not go to the London Conference of the International because of urgent matters and the removal of his family to Leipzig, but promised him to send a report on the working-class movement in Germany. This report was sent to Marx on 23 September but Marx did not read it out at the conference because, he believed, it said too much about his personal services (see Marx's letter to Liebknecht of 21 November 1865, this volume, pp. 201-03). — 190

Page me42.623
†248 The Nordstern of 19 August 1865 published Moses Hess' article 'Eine Warnung' ('A Warning') in which he opposed the idea of reorganising the General Association of German Workers under the leadership of Johann Philipp Becker. In his Paris correspondence 'Der Kongress der “Internationalen Arbeiter-Association” vertagt' published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 130, of 30 August, Hess described the leaders of the International Association as 'some demagogues sitting at a safe distance from the firing line'. — 190
Page me42.623
†249 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester from 20 October to early November 1865. — 193, 196, 201, 208, 214
Page me42.623
†250 On 16 July 1865 Marx's aunt Esther Kosel, who lived in Frankfurt am Main, died intestate. Along with other close relatives Marx was entitled to receive part of her legacy. Dr Salomon Fuld, a Frankfurt lawyer, was in charge of this matter. — 194
Page me42.623
†251 The enclosed letter, dated 13 November 1865, was from Theodor Metzner, Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt, members of the Berlin branch of the General Association of German Workers. During Wilhelm Liebknecht's stay in Berlin all three came into close contact with him which they continued to maintain after his expulsion from Berlin. In their letter the Berlin workers who gravitated towards the International informed Marx about the working-class movement in Germany and the split in the General Association and asked Marx to come to Berlin to lead it. — 196, 197, 198, 201
Page me42.623
†252 The mass Negro uprising in Jamaica, the British colony in the West Indies, took place in October 1865. It was caused by the severe exploitation of the Negroes by the colonists, though slavery had been abolished on the island in 1833. The uprising was brutally suppressed by the Governor of Jamaica, General Eyre. The atrocities perpetrated by Eyre caused public outrage in Britain, and the British government was compelled to dismiss him from his post. — 197, 199, 205, 300

Page Break me42.624
Page me42.624
†253 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, On Colonialism, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 198, 204
Page me42.624
†254 Marx alludes to the Prussian authorities' refusal to have his Prussian citizenship restored despite the amnesty granted to political refugees on 12 January 1861 (see Note 154). — 198
Page me42.624
†255 The French delegates' report on the London Conference of the International Working Men's Association held in 1865 (see Note 246) was published in L'Opinion national, 8 October, L'Avenir national, 12 October, Le Siécle, 14 October 1865 and in other French newspapers. — 199

Page me42.624
†256 The Workman's Advocate, No. 141, of 18 November 1865 printed Peter Fox's report of the Central Council meeting of 14 November 1865 (see The General Council of the First International. 1864-1866. The London Conference 1865. Minutes, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1961, pp. 138-41). At this meeting the Corresponding Secretary for France, Eugéne Dupont, read out the preface to the French delegates' report of the London Conference published in Le Siécle on 14 October 1865. The author of the preface was Henri Martin, a French historian and member of the International. He highly appreciated the activities of the International, its first conference and the programme of the future congress, in particular its Point 9 demanding the 'reconstruction of Poland upon a democratic and socialist basis'. The French Proudhonists Henri Tolain and Ernest Fribourg opposed this point at the conference and after it, for they advocated the proletariat's abstention from political activity. — 199, 202
Page me42.624
†257 The mass eviction of the Irish from land and their emigration, caused by the transfer from small peasant renting to large-scale pasturing, led to the growing national liberation struggle in Ireland. As a result, the Fenian movement developed there in the 1850s and 1860s.
Page me42.624
The Fenians were Irish revolutionaries who named themselves after the 'Féne' — a name of the ancient population of Ireland. Their first organisations appeared in the 1850s in the USA among the Irish immigrants and later in Ireland itself. The secret Irish Revolutionary Brotherhood, as the organisation was known in the early 1860s, aimed at establishing an independent Irish republic by means of an armed uprising. The Fenians, who expressed the interests of the Irish peasantry (see Marx's letter to Engels of 30 November 1867), came chiefly from the urban petty bourgeoisie and intelligentsia and believed in conspiracy tactics. The British government attempted to suppress the Fenian movement by severe police reprisals. In September 1865 it arrested a number of Fenian leaders, among them Thomas Clarke Luby, John O'Leary, Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa and other editors of the banned newspaper The Irish People. They were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment (O'Donovan Rossa for life). The Central Council of the International organised a campaign in defence of the condemned prisoners. — 199, 468, 516, 523
Page me42.624
†258 The data mentioned in the letter were given by Marx in Chapter III of the first edition of Volume One of Capital, He specified these data in the second German edition of the volume. — 199
Page me42.624
†259 Included in this letter, the text of the programme of the Geneva Congress was drawn up by Marx and approved by the London Conference of the International (see Note 246). It was first published in G. Jaeck, Die Internationale, Leipzig, 1904.

Page Break me42.625
Page me42.625

This letter was first published in English in full in Karl Marx, On the First International Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 200
Page me42.625
†260 A detailed report on the London Conference of the International Working Men's Association, entitled 'Great International Conference of Working Men', was published in The Workman's Advocate, No. 134, 30 September 1865. — 200
Page me42.625
†261 Marx is referring to Liebknecht's 'Report on the Working-Class Movement in Germany' drawn up for the London Conference of the International (see Note 247). The manuscript of the report preserved among Marx's papers was published in English for the first time in The General Council of the First International. 1864-1866. The London Conference 1865. Minutes, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1961, pp. 251-60. — 201
Page me42.625
†262 In a letter to Marx written in mid-November 1865 Liebknecht told him that a certain Quenstedt from Berlin intended to write to Marx and help him publish reviews of Capital in scientific journals. — 202
Page me42.625
†263 In a letter to Marx of 8 October 1865 Lothar Bucher invited him to contribute to the official organ of the Prussian government. Marx's reply letter to Bucher has not been discovered. Later, in 1878, Marx wrote a special item, 'Herr Bucher', concerning this offer, and gave a rebuff to this agent of Bismarck's in another article, 'Reply to Bucher's “Declaration”" (see present edition, Vol. 24). — 202
Page me42.625
†264 Kugelmann could not answer Marx's letter of 23 February 1865 (see this volume, pp. 101-05) until 20 December (see Marx's reply of 15 January 1866 in this volume, pp. 220-21). — 203, 207
Page me42.625
†265 On 25 November 1865 César De Paepe read a letter from Marx at a meeting of the Brussels Section of the International Association. (The Institute of Marxism-Leninism does not have the original of this letter at its disposal.) The Minutes of this meeting recorded only that part of the letter which enumerated the points of the programme of the Geneva Congress drawn up by Marx and approved by the London Conference of the International (see Note 246). The differences from the similar text cited by Marx in his letter to Jung of 20 November (see this volume, p. 200) are possibly due to the inaccuracies in the record of the above-mentioned Minutes. — 203
Page me42.625
†266 On 24 November 1865 Schweitzer was sentenced to one year's imprisonment for the political articles in Der Social-Demokrat. However, in May 1866 he was temporarily released for health reasons and amnestied after the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 205

Page me42.625
†267 The mass meeting was held by the Reform League (see Note 155) in London, in St Martin's Hall, on 12 December 1865.
Page me42.625

The committee for preparing the meeting consisted of the following members of the Central Council of the International: George Odger, John B. Leno, John Longmaid, William Dell, William Stainsby, George Howell and Robert Hartwell. The majority of those present at the meeting were workers and trade union members. The meeting adopted a resolution demanding manhood suffrage. — 207, 215, 221, 253

Page Break me42.626
Page me42.626
†268 Der Vorbote — an official monthly of the German sections of the International Working Men's Association — began to appear in Geneva from January 1866 under the editorship of Johann Philipp Becker. On the whole, this monthly pursued the policy of the Central (General) Council of the International. It published documents of the International, reports on its congresses and information about the activities of its sections in different countries. Der Vorbote was widely circulated in Switzerland and Germany, while in Austria and Hungary it was distributed illegally. Also among its readers were German workers living in London, Paris, New York, Chicago and other cities. The journal ceased publication in December 1871. — 207
Page me42.626
†269 In December 1865 and January 1866 France was the scene of student disorders. They were caused by the decision of the Paris Academy Council to expel students who took part in the International Students' Congress held in Liége (Belgium) at the end of October 1865. The congress was attended by students from many European countries, the most numerous delegation being from France (Paul Lafargue, Charles Longuet, Charles Victor Jaclard, and others). Most speakers at the congress expressed the revolutionary students' protest against the regime of the Second Empire. — 208, 211, 215, 304, 308
Page me42.626
†270 In December 1861 France started an armed intervention in Mexico, jointly with Britain and Spain, to overthrow the progressive government of Benito Juárez and turn the Mexican republic into a colony of European powers. The invaders also intended to use Mexican territory as a spring-board for intervening in the US Civil War on the side of the slaveholding Southern States. In the summer of 1863 the French occupied the city of Mexico (Britain and Spain recalled their troops in April 1862 because of contradictions with France) and declared Mexico an empire with Napoleon III's henchman, the Archduke of Austria Maximilian, at its head. However, the Mexican people put up a stubborn resistance to the French colonialists and inflicted a heavy defeat on them. In March 1867 they were compelled to withdraw. — 208, 211, 215, 338, 438
Page me42.626
†271 This is presumably an extract appended to one of Marx's letters to Engels written at the end of 1865 or beginning of 1866. — 208
Page me42.626
†272 The Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 1, of 1 January 1866 printed Schulze-Delitzsch's announcement about the publication of his new work, Die Abschaffung des geschäftlichen Risico durch Herrn Lassalle. Ein neues Capitel zum Deutschen Arbeiterkatechismus. Written in reply to Lassalle's Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit, it soon after appeared in Berlin. — 211
Page me42.626

†273 The French Section (branch) in London was founded in the autumn of 1865. Besides proletarian members like Eugéne Dupont, Hermann Jung, Paul Lafargue and others, it included petty-bourgeois refugees like Victor Le Lubez and, later, Félix Pyat. On 7 July 1868 the General Council of the International adopted a resolution, on Marx's proposal, condemning the provocative behaviour of Félix Pyat (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 7). After this a split occurred in the section: the proletarian elements left it and it actually lost ties with the International. — 213, 214, 216

Page me42.626

†274 On 16 and 18 December 1865 the Belgian democratic newspaper L'Echo de Verviers, Nos. 293 and 294, published an anonymous article which slandered the Central Council's activities and the work of the London Conference of the International held in 1865 (see Note 246). Its author was the French petty-bourgeois republican Pierre Vésinier, a refugee in Belgium and the spokesman for petty-bourgeois elements in the French Section in London who opposed Marx and the Central Council.

Page Break me42.627

Page me42.627

Vésinier's article was discussed in the Central Council on 26 December 1865 and on 2 and 9 January 1866. On the instructions of the Council, Vésinier's slanderous attacks were refuted by Hermann Jung, who with Marx's help wrote a letter to L'Echo de Verviers. By the Council's decision of 6 February 1866 the letter was sent to the editor (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 392-400). — 213, 214, 216, 250

Page me42.627

†275 The draft of the new statutes drawn up by Le Lubez was published in L'Echo de Verviers, No. 301, on 27 December 1865. This draft expressed the federalist views of some petty-bourgeois democrats, members of the French Section in London, and nullified the leading role of the Central Council by turning it into a mere representative body with purely technical informative and statistical functions. — 213, 214

Page me42.627

†276 Marx is referring to a series of articles against Poland by Proudhonist Hector Denis published in the Belgian newspaper La Tribune du Peuple in March-June 1864 under the heading La question polonaise et la démocratie.

Page me42.627

At Marx's request, between the end of January and early April 1866 Engels wrote a series of articles, entitled What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?, in which he substantiated the International's stand on the nationalities question and criticised the Proudhonists' national nihilism and the Bonapartists' profiteering by the so-called principle of nationalities (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 152-61). — 213

Page me42.627

†277 Marx refers to Johann Philipp Becker's address, 'Rundschreiben der deutschen Abtheilung des Zentral Komites der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation für die Schweiz an die Arbeiter', issued in Geneva in November 1865. In it Becker urged the workers to join the International and wrote about the forthcoming publication of its German (Der Vorbote) and French (Journal de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs) press organs.

Page me42.627

An English translation of some passages from this address was published in The Workman's Advocate, No. 145, 16 December 1865.

Page me42.627

A report of the International's activities in Switzerland was printed in issue No. 1 of Der Vorbote in January 1866 under the heading 'Entwicklungsgang unserer Association'.

Page me42.627

The note to Becker mentioned by Marx has not been found. — 214

Page me42.627

†278 From November 1865 the Central Committee of the German sections in Switzerland, headed by Johann Philipp Becker, served as the organising centre for sections uniting the German workers not only in Switzerland but also in Germany, Austria and in other countries where German refugee workers lived. — 215, 219

Page me42.627

†279 On 27 October 1865 in Port-au-Prince in Martinique (the French colony in the West Indies) three Zouave regiments refused to obey the French command to join the intervention in Mexico. — 215

Page me42.627

†280 In 1865 the French government attempted to make the British government extend the Franco-British extradition treaty of 1843 (see Note 500) to persons guilty of political crimes. — 215

Page me42.627

†281 On 2 January 1866, Austrian journalist Arnold Hilberg from Vienna wrote to Marx inviting him to contribute to the planned journal Internationale Revue. Marx's reply to him has not been found, but from Hilberg's next letter to

Page Break me42.628

Marx, of 18 January, it is clear that Marx agreed (see also Marx's letter to Engels of 14 February in this volume, p. 229). However, his work in the International and on Capital presumably prevented Marx from materialising his intention. — 216, 229

Page me42.628

†282 Marx's letter to Sigfrid Meyer of 15 January 1866 has not been found. It was written in reply to one from Theodor Metzner, Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt (see Note 251). — 216, 220, 222

Page me42.628

†283 This refers to Point 9 on the agenda of the London Conference of the International in 1865 which reads as follows: 'The Muscovite invasion of Europe, and the re-establishment of an integral and independent Poland' (see The General Council of the First International. 1864-1866. The London Conference 1865. Minutes, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1961, p. 305). — 216

Page me42.628

†284 The meeting to commemorate the third anniversary of the Polish insurrection of 1863-64 (see Note 24) was held in St. Martin's Hall, London, on 22 January 1866 and was presided over by a Polish democrat, Ludwik Oborski. As reported by Glos Wolny, the organ of the democratic wing of Polish emigrants, the meeting was sponsored by the International Working Men's Association and the Polish emigrants. It unanimously adopted Fox's resolution, which was supported by Marx, expressing solidarity of the workers and democrats of Britain and other European countries with the Polish national liberation struggle.

Page me42.628
The report of the meeting was published in The Workman's Advocate, No. 151, 27 January, Glos Wolny, No. 93, 31 January, and The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 225, 3 February 1866. — 218
Page me42.628
†285 Marx presumably refers to L'Anti-Proudhon, a book by Denis (de Chateaugiron), that appeared in Rennes in 1860. From the Catholic standpoint Denis polemises over Proudhon's views set forth in his three-volume work De la Justice dans le Révolution et dans l'Église, Paris, 1858. — 218
Page me42.628
†286 The London Conference of the International Association (see Note 246) decided to hold the first congress of the International in Geneva in May 1866. Later, however, the Central Council found it necessary to postpone the congress. All sections of the International agreed with this decision, except for the Paris Section whose Proudhonist leaders wanted to hold the congress as soon as possible because they calculated to impose their programme and principles on it. The congress met on 3-8 September 1866. — 220, 258, 271, 574
Page me42.628
†287 In his letter to Marx of 20 December 1865 Ludwig Kugelmann asked him to send two membership cards of the International Association for himself and Theodor Heinrich Menke, and enclosed two talers for the purpose. — 220
Page me42.628
†288 Marx's letter addressed to August Vogt, and presumably also meant for Sigfrid Meyer and Theodor Metzner, has not been found. — 222
Page me42.628
†289 See this note by Marx in the English edition of Volume One of Capital published in London, under Engels' editorship, in 1887 (Part III, Chapter X, Section 2, p. 223).
Page me42.628
In the first German edition of Volume One of Capital (1867), the section 'The Working Day' was part of Chapter III while in the second and subsequent German editions it made up Chapter VIII of Part III. In the English edition of 1887 it is Chapter X in Part III (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 224

Page Break me42.629
Page me42.629
†290 The Workman's Advocate (see Note 230) was renamed The Commonwealth on 10 February 1866. Despite the reorganisation the newspaper remained the official organ of the International Working Men's Association. It continued to publish reports of the Central Council meetings and other documents of the International. Marx remained on the Board of the Industrial Newspaper Company which owned the paper until 9 June 1866. Thanks to his efforts Eccarius, who became the editor of The Workman's Advocate not long before, retained his post. However, the reformist leaders of trade unions managed to paralyse the influence of Marx's supporters. In April 1866 George Odger was appointed its editor-in-chief. In issue No. 183, 8 September 1866, the newspaper declared itself to be the organ of the Reform League (see Note 155) and in fact fell under the influence of the radical bourgeoisie. It ceased publication on 20 July 1867. — 224, 249, 252, 262, 283, 290, 574

Page me42.629
†291 In his letter of 18 January 1866 to Marx Wilhelm Liebknecht wrote that J.B. von Hofstetten, an editor of Der Social-Demokrat, had made one more attempt to persuade Marx, Engels and himself to contribute to the newspaper and use it for propagating the ideas of the International. — 225
Page me42.629
†292 On 29 January 1866 the Prussian Supreme Tribunal adopted a decision to institute court proceedings against Karl Twesten and Frenzel, members of the Chamber of Deputies, for their Chamber speeches delivered in 1865 in which they criticised the government press.
Page me42.629
This decision was adopted despite the fact that the courts of first and second instance rejected the prosecutor's demand to apply this measure to the said deputies. The Chamber of Deputies of the Prussian Provincial Diet found the Supreme Tribunal's decision contradictory to the Prussian Constitution and to the principle of the inviolability of deputies, and turned it down. Nevertheless, Twesten's case was referred to the Berlin City Court, but in May 1866 Twesten was acquitted. — 226
Page me42.629
†293 Engels refers to the negotiations between the Austrian ruling circles and the Hungarian moderate bourgeois-landlord opposition headed by Ferencz Deák on the reorganisation of the Habsburg Empire's state structure. In the spring of 1867 an Austro-Hungarian agreement was concluded under which the Austrian Empire turned into the dual state of Austria-Hungary.
Page me42.629
This compromise between the ruling classes of the two countries aimed at suppressing the national liberation movement of the other peoples in the Empire, above all the Slavs. The concessions made to the Hungarians were also due to Austria's defeat in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 226, 297
Page me42.629
†294 Marx set forth the theory of ground rent in Chapter VI of the manuscript of Book III of Capital. In the third volume of Capital published by Engels it is given as Part VI: 'Transformation of Surplus-Profit into Ground Rent' (see present edition, Vol. 37). — 227
Page me42.629
†295 Marx presumably meant H. Mahon's Aus dem Bericht an den Minister für die landwirtschaftlichen Angelegenheiten in Berlin über die japanische Landwirtschaft. This work was published as a supplement to J. Liebig's Die Chemie in ihrer Anwendung auf Agricultur und Physiologie, Braunschweig, 1862. Marx's notebook of excerpts for 1865, which he probably filled in while working on his Economic Manuscript of 1863-65, contains synopses of these two works.
Page me42.629

When developing the theory of ground rent Marx used, besides the above-mentioned work by Liebig, the following books: L. de Lavergne, The Rural Economy of England, Scotland and Ireland. Translated from the French,

Page Break me42.630

Edinburgh and London, 1855; and L'Mounier, De l'agriculture en France, d'apres les documents officiels, avec des remarques par Rubichon, Tomes 1-2, Paris, 1846. — 227

Page me42.630

†296 The shifting system or Relay system was used by the British manufacturers to circumvent the laws limiting the working hours of children and juveniles. Under this system the children and juveniles, after several hours' work, were moved the same day to another workshop or factory in order to deceive the factory inspectors. As a result, their entire working day was often even longer than before the adoption of the ten hours act (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 227

Page me42.630

†297 The reference is to Section IV of Chapter IV of the first edition of Volume One of Marx's Capital. In the second and subsequent editions it is given as Chapter XIII: 'Machinery and Industry'. In the English edition of 1887 edited by Engels it is Chapter XV in Part IV (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 228

Page me42.630

†298 By decision of the Central Council of the International, The Workman's Advocate (No. 148) of 6 January 1866 reprinted from The Cork Daily Herald an appeal by the wives of the Irish revolutionaries O'Donovan Rossa and Luby to collect funds for the imprisoned Fenians (see Note 257). It was entitled 'The State Prisoners. An Appeal to the Women of Ireland'.

Page me42.630

At the Central Council meeting of 16 January 1866 Marx announced that Fox had received a letter from Mrs O'Donovan Rossa thanking him for the reprint of the appeal and for his articles published in The Workman's Advocate on 14, 21 and 28 October 1865: 'The British Coup d'État in Ireland' (No. 136), 'The Influence of Irish National Feeling upon the Relations between Great Britain and the United States' (No. 137), and 'The Irish Difficulty. Continued' (No. 138). — 228 †299 During the Prussian Provincial Diet's session in January and February 1866, the Party-of-Progress majority in the Chamber of Deputies opposed the Bismarck government on many issues. For instance, the Chamber voted down the decision of the Supreme Tribunal on the prosecution of the deputies Karl Twesten and Frenzel (see Note 292), opposed the annexation of the duchy of Lauenburg by Prussia without the approval of both Chambers and denounced the prohibition of the banquet in Cologne (see Note 224). The Chamber's commissions opposed the increase of the military budget for 1866 and the agreement between the government and the Cologne-Minden Railway Joint-Stock Company (see Note 237).

Page me42.630

Page me42.630

Following these actions, the Prussian government ordered that the session be closed down ahead of time on 23 February 1866 and on 9 May 1866 it disbanded the Provisional Diet. — 229
Page me42.630
†300 Marx's letter bears a mark in Lessner's hand: 'von Karl Marx F. Lessner London January 1901'. — 229
Page me42.630
†301 Engels stayed at Marx's house in London from 14 to 18 February 1866. — 230
Page me42.630
†302 This letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence, 1844-1877, Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 233, 438, 539
Page me42.630
†303 A reference to the publication of the findings of the Parliamentary commission investigating the atrocities committed by the British army in suppressing the Negro rebellion in Jamaica (see Note 252). The commission condemned these actions. Initially supporting the colonialists, The Times later on had to heed public opinion: on 3 and 5 March 1866 (Nos. 25436 and 25437) it published editorials and reports in which the brutalities committed 'by persons wearing the English uniform' were denounced.

Page Break me42.631
Page me42.631
The news of Russell's resignation turned to be premature. The Russell government resigned in June 1866, following the failure of Gladstone's Reform Bill (see Note 315). — 236
Page me42.631
†304 The agreement between the Bismarck government and the Board of the Cologne-Minden Railway Joint-Stock Company (see Note 237) was discussed by a Commission of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on 21 February 1866 and declared to be 'unconstitutional and invalid'. Due to its dissolution ahead of time (see Note 299), the Chamber was unable to consider the issue. Soon after that a statement appeared allegedly issued by the Board, which cancelled the agreement. On 28 February 1866, however, the Board officially denounced this as a rumour. — 236
Page me42.631
†305 The full text of Engels' letter to Freiligrath cited below has not been found. Like the letter to Marx, it may have been written on about 10 March 1866 as a reply to Freiligrath's letter to Engels of 8 March 1866. In his letter Freiligrath expressed his anxiety about Marx's health, undermined by systematic night work, and wrote that a long rest in the countryside would restore his strength. — 237
Page me42.631
†306 The Central (General) Council's meetings took place in the premises at 18 Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, from January 1866 to 25 June 1867. — 238
Page me42.631
†307 From 15 March to approximately 10 April 1866 Marx stayed in Margate where he took treatment and had a rest. — 239, 261, 268, 283, 574

Page me42.631
†308 The reference is to the heated debates, which started on 6 February 1866 at the British Parliament session over the bill on compensation to the cattle-owners in the event of epizootic disease. The debates ended on 20 February with the adoption of the corresponding Act. — 242, 245
Page me42.631
†309 The Italian patriot Felice Orsini was executed in March 1858 for organising an attempt on Napoleon III's life. After Orsini's arrest, the leadership of the Carbonari, a secret revolutionary society, which Louis Bonaparte joined in 1831 when in Italy, sent him letters reminding him of his oath, which he had broken, to struggle for Italy's liberation. After Orsini's execution, it passed an official death sentence on Napoleon III. — 242
Page me42.631
†310 A. Rogeard, Les propos de Labienus — a pamphlet published in 1865; it criticised Napoleon III's empire under the guise of Julius Caesar's dictatorship in Rome. — 243
Page me42.631
†311 At the Central Council meeting of 13 March 1866, Cesare Orsini refuted Luigi Wolff's statement made at the Council meeting of 6 March that there were no Socialists in Italy in the French sense of the word; he also noted Mazzini's reactionary attitude towards science. — 243
Page me42.631
†312 A member of the Dutch Section of the International, Antoinette Philips in her letters gave an extensive account of the events in Holland, which is why Marx jokingly calls her his Dutch secretary. — 243
Page me42.631
†313 Marx and many of his supporters were unable to attend the Central Council meeting of 6 March 1866. Taking advantage of this, Le Lubez and L. Wolff, supported by the English trade unionists Odger, Howell, Cremer and others, had a resolution passed on the response by the Central Council to a slanderous article by Vésinier published in L'Echo de Verviers (see Note 274). The resolution stated that the Central Council withdrew on everything that had been said with regard to 'an eminent writer of the Latin race', i.e. Mazzini, and his followers. By this the refutation of Vésinier's statement that Mazzini was the author of the International's programme documents, specifically the Rules, was disavowed. As a result of the stand taken by Marx and his supporters, the resolution was withdrawn at the meeting of 13 March. Thus the claims of the petty-bourgeois elements to the leadership in the International were rebuffed. (For details of this episode see Marx's letter to Engels of 24 March 1866, this volume, pp. 249-50). — 244, 251, 286

Page Break me42.632
Page me42.632
†314 A pun on the similarity of the names Grach and Gracchi — the name of the ancient Roman reformers. Marx's wife Jenny deposited 1,300 talers with Grach, a banker in Trier, who went bankrupt and concealed the fact from the depositors. At the request of Grach's wife, who promised to return the money after she had received an inheritance, Jenny Marx refrained from pursuing the matter in the courts (see Marx's letter to Engels of 8 March 1855, present edition, Vol. 39, p. 526). In Marx's subsequent letters, however, there is no indication whether the banker's wife paid the debt or not. Marx may be referring here to reassuring news about this matter. — 244

Page me42.632
†315 From the beginning of 1866, the Electoral Reform Movement in Britain came under the influence of moderate bourgeois elements; the reformist trade union leaders (Odger, Cremer and others) showed themselves increasingly willing to make concessions to them. Thus, at the National Conference held by the Reform League on 28 February-1 March 1866 in St Martin's Hall, London, they opposed the Central Council delegation (Fox, Carter, Jung, Lessner and others), which supported manhood suffrage, and announced that they would be quite satisfied with household suffrage as an immediate aim.
Page me42.632
On 12 March 1866 the Russell-Gladstone liberal government submitted to the House of Commons a Reform Bill providing for lower property qualifications for the electors (£10 in the counties and £7 in the towns). This would have meant a certain numerical increase of electors and included the wealthier strata of the working class as well. Under the influence of the bourgeois radicals and conciliatory-minded trade union leaders, the Reform League's Council supported, at its meetings of 16 and 20 March 1866, this extremely moderate bill of Gladstone which, however, was strongly opposed by the Tories and some Liberals and rejected by the Commons. — 253, 257, 314
Page me42.632
†316 In the spring of 1866 the conflict between Prussia and Austria sharpened over their joint possession of the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. The Bismarck government regarded Austria as its main rival in the struggle for hegemony in Germany and sought for a casus belli. With this aim in view it accused Austria, which ruled Holstein, of encouraging the anti-Prussian movement there. Austria rejected Prussia's accusations and on 16 March 1866 sent a circular dispatch to several member states of the German Confederation (a union of German states founded by the Vienna Congress in 1815) asking for their mediation in the conflict or military assistance against Prussia. Prussia in its turn also sought the support of the German Confederation. In its circular dispatch of 24 March 1866 to the German states, the Prussian government proposed a reform of the political and military institutions of the German Confederation. Bismarck demagogically proposed that this reform be carried out through a German parliament elected on the basis of universal suffrage. — 254, 257, 258, 263, 264

Page Break me42.633
Page me42.633
†317 A meeting between the Prime Minister of Prussia, Manteuffel, and the Austrian Prime Minister, Schwarzenberg, took place in Olmütz (Olomouc) on 29 November 1850. Under the pressure of the Russian Emperor Nicholas I, Prussia had to give up her claims to take part in suppressing the uprising in the Electorate of Hesse in favour of Austria and in general, to abstain from attempts to establish her hegemony in Germany. — 254
Page me42.633
†318 A reference to Alexander Cuza's abdication in February 1866. Cuza was Hospodar of Moldavia and Wallachia, which united in 1862 into the single Romanian state. The coup d'état was approved of by Russia and France, and was supported by Prussia. The boyar-bourgeois coalition, which was dissatisfied with the progressive reforms introduced by Cuza, invited Prince Charles Hohenzollern-Sigmarinen, a relative of the Prussian King, to the throne in March 1866. The new hospodar soon began to pursue a policy of subjecting Romania to the economic and political interests of Germany. — 256, 258

Page me42.633
†319 A reference to the pamphlet Congrés ouvrier. Association Internationale des Travailleurs published by the Paris Section of the International early in 1866. It contained a French translation of the International's Provisional Rules, with some passages distorted by the Proudhonists; an appeal of the Paris Section to the members of the International Association which had first been published in the summer of 1865 and which included the Section's programme for the congress initially intended to be held in Brussels; the French delegation's report about the London Conference of 1865; the programme for the Geneva Congress of 1866, which had been approved by the London Conference, and other material. — 259
Page me42.633
†320 The Thirty Years' War, 1618-48 — a European war, in which the Pope, the Spanish and Austrian Habsburgs and the German Catholic princes rallied under the banner of Catholicism and fought against Protestant countries: Bohemia, Denmark, Sweden, the Republic of the Netherlands, and a number of German states. The rulers of Catholic France, rivals of the Habsburgs, supported the Protestant camp. — 263
Page me42.633
†321 A reference to the circular dispatch of 16 March 1866 sent by the Austrian government (see Note 316).
Page me42.633
On 9 April 1866, the Prussian government submitted to the Federal Diet a proposal that an all-German parliament be convened through universal suffrage in order to decide the question of reforming the German Confederation. — 264, 266, 285
Page me42.633
†322 The Kingdom of Poland — the Polish territory annexed to the Russian Empire in accordance with the decision of the Vienna Congress of 1815. — 267
Page me42.633
†323 The Vienna Treaty, which concluded the war of 1864 waged by Prussia and Austria against Denmark (see Note 9), confirmed a number of previous treaties and conventions on Denmark, Schleswig and Holstein, in particular the clauses of the London Protocol of May 1852 on the Danish succession. In the Protocol, the Emperor of Russia was named as one of the lawful claimants to the Danish throne (being a descendant of Charles Peter Ulrich, Duke of Holstein-Gottorp, who reigned in Russia as Peter III). The claimants waived their rights in favour of Duke Christian of Glücksburg, who was named heir to King Frederick VII. This created a precedent for the claims of the Russian Emperor to the Danish throne in the event of the extinction of the Glücksburg dynasty. — 267

Page Break me42.634
Page me42.634

†324 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in K. Marx and F. Engels, The Civil War in France, London, 1937. — 268
Page me42.634
†325 In March 1866, London tailors demanded a wage increase. A number of owners of large tailors' shops responded with a lock-out. On 27 March, all London tailors went on strike. The Executive Committee of the Journeymen Tailors' Protective Association, which had been formed at the national conference of British tailors held in Manchester on 12-17 March 1866, appealed to all tailors in Britain to support the strike. At its meeting of 27 March 1866, the Central Council of the International decided to instruct the Continental corresponding secretaries to call upon the tailors on the Continent not to go to Britain, where the employers were going to use them as strike-breakers. The Central Council's support of the strike played an important part in the victory of the London tailors in April 1866 and added to the popularity and prestige of the International Working Men's Association among the British working class. On 17 April, the Tailors' Protective Association joined the International. — 268
Page me42.634
†326 This is a reference to the resistance with which Russell-Gladstone Reform Bill (see Note 315) was met by the Conservatives and some Liberals. Marx calls the Right-wing Liberals, who were once headed by Lord Palmerston, Palmerstonian Whigs. In 1866, they were nicknamed the Adullamites by John Bright as an allusion to the biblical legend about David's persecution by King Saul and his refuge in the cave of Adullam. The nickname became a synonym for dissatisfaction with everything and was used to condemn the Right-wing Liberals for their opposition to the Reform Bill. — 269, 270
Page me42.634
†327 On 26 March 1866, Edinburgh tailors went on strike. With a view to preventing the importation into Scotland of German and Danish tailors to be used as strike-breakers, German tailors living in London formed a committee headed by Lessner and Haufe, and decided to act jointly with the Central Council of the International. At Marx's request, Lessner and Haufe sent him on 3 May details about the events in Edinburgh for use in a report for the German press. On 4 May, Marx wrote and sent Liebknecht, on behalf of the Central Council, a short article, entitled 'A Warning', which was published in several German papers (see present edition, Vol. 20). At the same time a leaflet written by Lessner and Haufe was issued in London. They appealed to the German workers in London to raise funds and support the strikers. Moreover, the Central Council sent Haufe and Hansen to Edinburgh to wreck the employers' plans. The Central Council's efforts contributed to the success of the strike, and promoted the International's influence in Britain. — 270, 272, 275
Page me42.634
†328 A reference to the steps taken by Bismarck to find allies in the war with Austria that he was preparing. On 8 April 1866, Prussia and Italy signed a secret treaty under which they were to join in a war against Austria until Italy received Venetia and Prussia equivalent territories in Germany. — 270, 282, 288
Page me42.634
†329 On the London tailors' strike see Note 325.
Page me42.634

On 23 April 1866, the London wire-workers went on strike, demanding a 10 per cent wage increase. The same day, the strike committee sent out letters to all towns in England, Scotland and Ireland requesting the wire-workers there not to take jobs in London during the strike. With the help of the Central Council of the International, similar letters were sent to France and Germany. At the Central Council meeting of 24 April 1866, B. Patis, a member of the

Page Break me42.635

London Association of Wire-Workers, thanked the Council for its help to the strikers and promised that the wire-workers would join the International. — 272

Page me42.635

†330 On 7 May 1866, Ferdinand Cohen, a student and Karl Blind's stepson, made an unsuccessful attempt to assassinate Bismarck. He was arrested and committed suicide in prison. — 273, 275

Page me42.635

†331 A reference to Austria's defeat by France and Piedmont in the Austro-Franco-Italian war of 1859. — 274

Page me42.635

†332 In preparing a war against Austria, Bismarck's government sought for France's benevolent neutrality. On 6 May 1866, the Emperor Napoleon III made a speech at an agricultural festival in Auxerre, in which he said that, like the majority of the French nation, he felt an aversion for the treaties of 1815, which certain parties would like to make the only foundation of France's foreign policy (see The Times, No. 25492, 8 May 1866). This statement, which was a response to a critical speech made by Louis Adolphe Thiers in the Corps législatif, implied the demand that the clauses of the Vienna treaties concerning France's eastern borders be revised. In Prussia, it was regarded as an encouragement for Bismarck's intention to reorganise the German Confederation which had been formed on the basis of the decisions of the Vienna Congress of 1815. — 274

Page me42.635

†333 On Bismarck's intended reform of the German Confederation, see Note 316.

Page me42.635

The Fundamental Rights of the German People (Die Grundrechte des deutschen Volkes), approved by the Frankfurt National Assembly late in 1848, formulated, like the Déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen, the basic bourgeois freedoms; they were incorporated into the Imperial Constitution of 1849, which was worked out by the National Assembly, but rejected by the King of Prussia and other German sovereigns (see Note 130). The main points of the Fundamental Rights were included in the constitutions of some German states, but were later on either deleted from them, or revised and curtailed on the basis of the decision of the Federal Diet of 23 August 1851. — 276

Page me42.635

†334 Engels' series of articles, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?', was never finished. This may have been because of the increasing influence of the radical bourgeois on the editorial board of The Commonwealth, where it was being published. — 278, 280

Page me42.635

†335 At the Central Council meeting of 8 May 1866, Peter Fox announced that, at the next meeting, he would speak against a passage in Engels' third article ('The Doctrine of Nationality Applied to Poland') from the series 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?' (present edition, Vol. 20). Judging by this letter of Marx's, Fox made a speech at the Central Council meeting of 15 May 1866; however, there are no records, in the minutes of this meeting, either of Fox's speech or of Marx's reply. — 278
Page me42.635
†336 Marx uses the term Haupt- und Staatsaktionen ('principal and spectacular actions'), which has several meanings. In the seventeenth and the first half of the eighteenth century, it denoted plays performed by German touring companies. The plays, which were rather formless, presented tragic historical events in a bombastic and at the same time coarse and farcial way.
Page me42.635
Secondly, this term can denote major political events. It was used in this sense by a trend in German historical science known as 'objective historiography'. Leopold Ranke was one of its chief representatives. He regarded Haupt- und Staatsaktionen as the main subject-matter of history. — 280

Page Break me42.636
Page me42.636
†337 The Commonwealth, No. 165 of 5 May 1866, carried an editorial statement to the effect that the editors bore no responsibility for the contributions printed below a certain line. The responsibility was to be borne by the authors themselves. The statement was directed primarily against Engels' series of articles 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?', which were printed below the line marked by the editors. — 280
Page me42.636
†338 The crash of Barnett's bank in Liverpool was one of the first signs of the crisis of 1866 which led to the collapse of the leading houses of Overend, Gurney, and following this of other banks, including the Consolidated Bank. — 281
Page me42.636
†339 No. 15 of Le Courrier français for 20 May 1866 carried an appeal of the Paris students to the students of Germany and Italy (Aux étudiants des universités d'Allemagne et d'Italie, les étudiants de Paris) in connection with the threat of war between Prussia and Austria. This appeal was strongly influenced by Proudhonists who ignored the historic tasks of the national unification of Germany and Italy. The meeting of the Central Council, which was held on 5 June 1866 in Marx's absence, discussed the appeal of the French Section in London in response to the appeal of the Paris students: 'To the Paris Students, to the Students and Young People of All Countries from the Workers of All Countries' (The General Council of the First International. 1864-1866. The London Conference 1865. Minutes, Moscow, 1961, pp. 337-39). Marx was dissatisfied with the content of the latter appeal. At the Central Council meeting of 19 June 1866, Marx gave an extensive criticism of the Proudhonist position on the nationalities question (see this volume, pp. 286-87). — 281
Page me42.636
†340 A reference to the unsuccessful attempt on Alexander II's life made by the Russian revolutionary Dmitri Karakosoff on 4 April 1866. — 282

Page me42.636
†341 An allusion to Bismarck's well-known expression about the unification of Germany by 'blood and iron'. He said at a sitting of the budget commission of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies in September 1862: 'The great questions of time are decided not by speeches and majority decisions — this was the mistake of 1848 and 1849 — but by iron and blood'. — 282
Page me42.636
†342 At a session of the Commons on 4 June 1866, Disraeli criticised Clarendon's activity as Foreign Secretary, in particular, his alleged lack of firmness during the Crimean war and at the Paris peace congress of 1856. — 282
Page me42.636
†343 Engels is referring to Prussia's defeat in the war with Napoleonic France in 1806. — 285
Page me42.636
†344 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. The complete English translation was published in Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1973. — 286
Page me42.636
†345 This is a reference to Engels' intention to write articles for The Manchester Guardian on the Austro-Prussian war, which broke out in June 1866. He wrote a series of five articles, and they were published in the newspaper under the heading 'Notes on the War in Germany' (see present edition, Vol. 20).
Page me42.636
The Austro-Prussian war of 1866 put an end to the rivalry between Austria and Prussia, which had lasted for many years, and predetermined the unification of Germany under the supremacy of Prussia. Several German states (such as Hanover, Saxony, Bavaria, and Württemberg) fought on Austria's side.

Page Break me42.637
Prussia formed an alliance with Italy. In June and July, hostilities were conducted on two fronts: in Bohemia and in Italy. After the grave defeat of her army at Sadowa, Austria began peace negotiations and signed a peace treaty in Prague on 23 August. — 286, 290, 296, 298
Page me42.637
†346 A discussion on the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 took place at the Central Council meetings of 19 and 26 June, and 17 July 1866.
Page me42.637
It was Marx's aim in the discussion to explain the necessity for the International to take an independent stand as a working-class organisation. This stand should have nothing to do either with the Proudhonists' nihilistic attitude towards the struggle for the national unification of Germany and Italy or with the British trade unionist tendency to embellish the unification policy of the ruling classes in Prussia and Italy, to neglect their expansionist and dynastic motives which played an important part in initiating the war conflict. Marx's critical speech persuaded the Central Council to refuse, on 17 July, to vote for the resolutions submitted earlier by Cremer and Dutton, as well as for Fox's resolution, because they failed to give precise formulations of the tasks of the proletariat. The Council unanimously adopted, with certain amendments, the following resolution which had been proposed by Bobczynski and Carter:

Page me42.637
'That the Central Council of the International Working Men's Association consider the present conflict on the Continent to be one between Governments and advise working men to be neutral, and to associate themselves with a view to acquire strength by unity and to use the strength so acquired in working out their social and political emancipation' (The General Council of the First International. 1864-1866. The London Conference 1865. Minutes, Moscow, 1964, p. 213). — 287
Page me42.637
†347 Mutualists, or supporters of mutual assistance, was the name adopted in the 1860s by the French Proudhonists, adherents of Proudhon's reformist ideas on the emancipation of labour by organising mutual assistance, equitable exchange of services and cheap credit. — 287
Page me42.637
†348 A reference to the decisive battle in the Austro-Prussian war (see Note 345), which was fought at Königgrätz (Hradec-Králové) not far from the village of Sadowa (Bohemia) on 3 July 1866. The battle of Sadowa resulted in grave defeat for the Austrian forces. It is also known as the battle of Königgrätz. — 288, 537
Page me42.637
†349 At the end of 1865 and the beginning of 1866, Bismarck conducted negotiations with Napoleon III through the Prussian ambassador to Paris, von der Holtz. In the course of the negotiations, wishing to secure France's neutrality in the war against Austria which was being prepared by him, Bismarck sought to make Napoleon believe that the war would be extremely exhaustive for Prussia and hinted vaguely at the possibility of territorial expansion for France at the expense of Belgium and Luxemburg, as well as certain German territories on the Rhine. — 289, 293
Page me42.637
†350 As a result of the resignation of the Russell Liberal government and in protest against the impending coming to power of the Conservatives headed by Derby and Disraeli, mass meetings took place in London's Trafalgar Square, on 27 June and 2 July 1866, which again demanded manhood suffrage. In March 1866 the Reform League abandoned this demand under the influence of bourgeois radicals (see Note 315), but in the situation its leadership had to return for some time to its former platform. These meetings, which began a new stage in the struggle for a second electoral reform in Britain, had virtually been organised by members of the Central Council of the International. — 290

Page Break me42.638
Page me42.638
†351 In referring to Thiers' criticism of the foreign policy of the Second Empire, Marx, apparently, had in mind his speech of 3 May 1866 in the Corps législatif to which Napoleon III responded with a speech in Auxerre on 6 May 1866 (see Note 332). On 6 July 1866 the government of Napoleon III submitted a project of a senatus-consulte to the French Senate in accordance with which it was the Senate's exclusive right to discuss any alterations in the Constitution; discussion of any such matters in the press was to be prohibited under the threat of heavy fines; and the clause in the Constitution of 1852 establishing a three-month term for the forthcoming session of the Corps législatif was to be abolished. The senatus-consulte was adopted by the Senate on 14 July 1866.

Page me42.638

During the debates on the budget for 1867 in the Corps législatif on 14 June 1866, one of the leaders of the bourgeois-republican opposition, Jules Favre, criticised the Mexican expedition (see Note 270) which involved tremendous expenses. At the same session another member of the republican opposition, Deputy Glais-Bizoin, expressed support for the parliamentary system referring to the French as a nation living under a regime of despotism. For this he was called to order by Walewski, Chairman of the Corps législatif. — 290
Page me42.638
†352 On 4 July 1866, after the defeat of the Austrian army at Sadowa (see Note 348), the Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph sent a telegram to Napoleon III in which he informed Napoleon that he was ready to secede to him Venetia provided that Napoleon would then secede this region to Italy, and he asked Napoleon III to act as intermediary between the belligerent states. Italy and Prussia agreed to Napoleon's mediation. In accordance with the peace treaty with Austria signed in Vienna on 3 October 1866 the region was returned to Italy. — 291
Page me42.638
†353 Marx is referring to the bulbs that his daughter Jenny received from Johann Carl Juta, husband of her aunt Louise, in Cape Town and sent to Engels with detailed instructions on how to grow them. — 291, 294
Page me42.638
†354 'Old Bess' or 'Brown Bess' were the names given to the flint-lock smooth-barrelled muzzle-loading gun used in the British army in the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century. — 291
Page me42.638
†355 A reference to Prussia's annexation of the Kingdom of Hanover, the Electorate of Hesse-Cassel, the Grand Duchy of Nassau and other territories as a result of its victory over Austria in the war of 1866.
Page me42.638

According to a report published in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung on 7 June 1866, the King of Naples Francis II Bourbon, who had been overthrown by the Garibaldist movement, was presented with an honorary shield at an election meeting of the Prussian conservatives in Berlin which was chaired by Count Stolberg; however, at the same meeting there were calls for Prussia's union with the Italian 'revolution'. — 292, 345
Page me42.638
†356 Certain South German states (such as Bavaria, Württemberg, and Baden) took part in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 on the Austrian side. — 293, 295
Page me42.638
†357 A reference to the projected settlement of the Austro-Prussian conflict that was proposed by the government of Napoleon III on 11 July 1866 in response to Prussia's peace terms. According to the project, an independent South German Confederation was to be formed, consisting of states lying south of the Main, similar to the former Confederation of the Rhine. In this way Napoleon III hoped to prevent the unification of Germany and to subordinate South German states to his protectorate.

Page me42.638
The Confederation of the Rhine (Rheinbund) — a confederation of states in

Page Break me42.639
Southern and Western Germany that was formed in July 1806 under the protectorate of Napoleon I. Napoleon's creation of this military and political stronghold in Germany was made possible by his defeat of Austria in 1805. Initially the Confederation incorporated sixteenth states (Bavaria, Württemberg, Baden and others), and later on another five states (Saxony, Westphalia, and others), which virtually became vassals of France. The Confederation fell apart in 1813, after the defeat of Napoleon's army. — 294, 297
Page me42.639
†358 A reference to the war that France fought against the Holy Roman Empire in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. — 295
Page me42.639
†359 Blue Books — periodically published collections of documents of the British Parliament and Foreign Office. They have been appearing since the seventeenth century.
Page me42.639
Marx is referring to five reports of the Children's Employment Commission (1863-66) and the Eighth Report of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council (1866) which was supplemented by Dr Hunter's report about the housing conditions of the workers; Dr Hunter's report was extensively used by Marx in Volume One of Capital (see the English edition of 1887, Part III, Chapter XXV and also Vol. 35 of the present edition). — 296, 301, 383, 407, 551
Page me42.639
†360 The plan for Little Germany was a scheme to unite Germany without Austria under Prussia's supremacy. — 297
Page me42.639
†361 In his letters of 30 June to Marx and of 16 July 1866 to Engels Paul Stumpf from Mainz said that Wilhelm Liebknecht held a pro-Austrian stance in the Austro-Prussian war. In these letters, as well as in his letter to Marx of 10 July, Stumpf asked for instructions on the stand to be taken by the International's members in Mainz with regard to the military events. — 298, 299
Page me42.639
†362 On 16 July 1866, during the Austro-Prussian war, the free city of Frankfurt am Main, which sided with Austria, was captured by the Prussian army. An indemnity of six million guldens was imposed on it, the city senate was disbanded and the garrison and military organisations disarmed. On 19 July the Prussians raised the indemnity to twenty-five million guldens and demanded from the burgomaster Karl Fellner a list of the wealthiest and most influential citizens, whose property was to be a pledge for the payment of the indemnity. He hanged himself in protest on the night of 23 July. — 299, 301, 333

Page me42.639
†363 Eschenheimer Gasse — the street in Frankfurt am Main where the Federal Diet was in 1816-66. — 299
Page me42.639
†364 A reference to the Slav Congress which met in Prague on 2 June 1848. It was attended by representatives of the Slav regions of the Austrian Empire. The Right, moderately liberal wing, to which Palacký and Šafarík, the leaders of the Congress, belonged, sought to solve the nationalities question by achieving autonomy for the Slav regions within the framework of the Habsburg monarchy (Austro-Slavism doctrine). The Left, radical wing (including Sabina, Fric and Libelt) wanted joint action with the democratic movement in Germany and Hungary. The radical delegates took an active part in the people's uprising in Prague (12-17 June 1848) and were subjected to severe reprisals. On 16 June the moderately liberal delegates declared the Congress adjourned indefinitely. — 299
Page me42.639
†365 On 11 July 1859 Austria and France signed a separate preliminary peace treaty in Villafranca which put an end to the war of France and Piedmont against

Page Break me42.640
Austria. In accordance with the treaty, Lombardy fell to France, but later on Napoleon III ceded it to Piedmont in exchange for Savoy and Nice; Venice was to remain under the Austrian domination and the dukes of Tuscany and Modena were to be reinstalled to their thrones. Although some clauses of the preliminary treaty were never implemented (e.g. the clause on the restoration of the dukes of Tuscany and Modena) or were altered, on the whole it formed the basis of the final peace treaty signed in Zurich on 10 November 1859.
Page me42.640
The peace treaty between Austria and Prussia was signed in Prague on 23 August 1866. Under its terms Austria ceded its rights on Schleswig and Holstein and recognised Prussia's annexation of Hanover, Electorate of Hesse (Hesse-Cassel), Nassau and Frankfurt am Main; the German Confederation ceased to exist and instead of it the North German Confederation was formed under the hegemony of Prussia which did not incorporate Austria. The peace treaty between Austria and Italy was signed in Vienna on 3 October 1866. In accordance with it the region of Venice was returned to Italy, but its claims to Southern Tyrol and Trieste were rejected because of Prussia's opposition. — 300, 345
Page me42.640
†366 On 23 July 1866 the Reform League (see Note 155) called a meeting in Hyde Park in support of manhood suffrage. Although banned by the government, the meeting took place; there was a clash between its participants and the police and several dozen workers were arrested. On 24 and 25 July tens of thousands workers, many of them armed, gathered round Hyde Park. The police and army units were sent against the demonstrators and a state of siege was virtually introduced in the capital; a threat arose of a clash of the people with the police and army. In this situation on 25 July a delegation of the League headed by its President Edmond Beales met the Home Secretary Spencer Walpole and promised to persuade the demonstrators to disperse if the army and police were ordered out of the park. Walpole agreed to this and did not object to another meeting in Hyde Park due on 30 July. However, during its preparation, Walpole denied his permission. His words were confirmed by Austin Holyoake, a member of the League Council, in his report about this talks with Walpole published in The Times. Fearing the mounting revolutionary activity of the masses the Council decided not to call any open-air meetings. — 300

Page me42.640

†367 In May 1849, the republican Armand Marrast, President of the French Constituent Assembly, requested General Changarnier, a monarchist and commander of the Paris garrison, to bring in troops to defend the Assembly against the Bonapartists. Changarnier refused, declaring that he disapproved of 'baionnettes intelligentes', i.e. soldiers meddling in politics. — 302

Page me42.640

†368 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, On History and People, McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1977. The full version of the letter was published in The Letters of Karl Marx, New Jersey, 1979. — 303

Page me42.640

†369 A reference to a note handed to Bismarck in early August 1866 by the French Ambassador to Berlin Vincent Benedetti; it demanded the restoration of the 1814 frontiers as a compensation for France's neutrality during the Austro-Prussian war. This meant that the Saar Basin, the Palatinate, and the Rhenish part of Hesse-Darmstadt with the fortresses of Landau and Mainz were to be given over to France. The note also suggested that the Prussian garrison should be withdrawn from Luxemburg. The claims of Napoleon III were based on the secret promises made by Bismarck before the Austro-Prussian war not to impede the annexation of the German territories between the Rhine and Mosel by France in case the latter did not prevent the formation of the Prusso-Italian coalition and defeat of Austria. However, following the victory over Austria, Bismarck, who planned a war with France, changed his stand and rejected the French government's demands on 7 August. — 306, 352

Page Break me42.641

Page me42.641

†370 This fact was later on cited by Engels in his unfinished work The Role of Violence in History which he wrote in 1887 and 1888 (see present edition, Vol. 26). — 307

Page me42.641

†371 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, On Education, Women and Children, McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1975. — 307

Page me42.641

†372 Marx was sending Engels a letter to him from Liebknecht of 10 August 1866 along with a few issues of the Leipzig Mitteldeutsche Volkszeitung. The newspaper was founded in 1862 by liberals but in August 1866, after it had lost most of its subscribers it was sold to Liebknecht. He tried to turn it into a democratic paper and use it, as he wrote to Marx, to publicise the ideas and documents of the IWMA in Germany. However, on 29 August the publication was stopped by the Prussian military authorities of the city and was never renewed again. — 310

Page me42.641
†373 This letter was first published in English in K. Marx, On Education, Women and Children, McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1975. — 310
Page me42.641
†374 Marx is referring to his regular contributions to the New-York Daily Tribune which he made for over ten years, from August 1851 to March 1862. — 311
Page me42.641
†375 The Geneva Congress — the first congress of the International Working Men's Association — took place between 3 and 8 September 1866. It was attended by 60 delegates from the Central (General) Council, various sections of the International and workers' societies in Britain, France, Germany and Switzerland. Hermann Jung was elected chairman. In preparing for the Congress Marx wrote 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions' (see present edition, Vol. 20). This document was read as the official report of the Council.
Page me42.641
The Proudhonists who enjoyed one-third of the votes at the Congress countered Marx's 'Instructions' with their own programme on all items of the agenda setting it out in a memorandum. Nevertheless, the Congress adopted a resolution based on six of the nine points formulated by Marx in the 'Instructions': on the international combination of efforts in the struggle between labour and capital, on limitation of the working day, on juvenile and children's labour, on co-operative labour, on trade unions, and on standing armies. A compromise resolution on Poland was moved by Johann Philipp Becker and was adopted.
Page me42.641
The Geneva Congress approved the Rules and the Regulations of the International Association and elected its General Council (officially called Central Council before the Congress) mostly in its former composition. The Congress completed the formation of the International as a mass international proletarian organisation. — 312, 314, 316, 326, 368
Page me42.641
†376 As a result of its victory over Austria in 1866, Prussia was able to embark on the unification of Germany under its aegis. Besides its direct annexation of certain territories (see Note 355), it compelled Austria to agree to the disbandment of the German Confederation, and also succeeded in signing alliance treaties with 17 North German states (north of the Main) which had fought in the war on its side; later on Saxony and other German states joined alliance treaties. This form of union prepared the ground for the formation of the North German Confederation. — 312, 349, 460

Page Break me42.642
Page me42.642

†377 Judging by this letter, Engels left for Germany on 24 August 1866. Presumably he visited his home town and other places in the Rhine Province of Prussia, and stayed with his relatives. Engels returned to Manchester probably in the latter half of September. — 313, 330
Page me42.642
†378 From the end of August till mid-September 1866, Jenny Marx was on holiday at the seaside. — 314
Page me42.642
†379 At the meeting of the General Council (as the Central Council began to be called after the Geneva Congress) on 25 September 1866 Marx informed it that he had received £5, the annual contribution, from Samuel Moore in Manchester. The receipt issued to Moore by the Treasurer of the Council, William Dell, Marx sent to Engels enclosed with this letter. — 317
Page me42.642
†380 As far back as in March 1865, the Central Council of the International adopted a resolution on the conflict in the Paris Section in which it opposed the Proudhonist thesis that only a worker was admissible as an official in the working men's organisation. During the discussion of the General Rules and the Regulations at the Geneva Congress (see Note 375), the French delegate Tolain declared that only a person directly engaged in manual labour could be a delegate to the congress. Tolain's statement met with stiff opposition. Cremer and Carter emphasised in their speeches the fact that many of the people to whom the International owed its very existence were not manual workers. They particularly noted the services of Marx who, as Cremer said, had made fight for the triumph of the working class the cause of his entire life. Tolain's amendment was rejected. — 318
Page me42.642
†381 At the proposal of the French delegates Tolain and Fribourg, the Geneva Congress expelled Le Lubez from the General Council for his slander and intrigues. At the General Council meeting of 16 October 1866 the matter, at Le Lubez's demand, was referred to the Standing Committee, which at the Council meeting of 23 October confirmed the correctness of the report on Le Lubez's unanimous expulsion with the minutes of the Congress (see The General Council of the First International. 1866-1868. Minutes, Moscow, 1964, p. 51). — 318
Page me42.642
†382 To confirm his theory, Pierre Trémaux referred to the assertion of the Senegal missionary Santamaria that the black people descended from white people. — 320
Page me42.642
†383 The workers' congress in Baltimore was held from 20 to 25 August 1866. It was attended by 60 delegates representing 60,000 American workers organised in trade unions. The Congress discussed such matters as the legal introduction of an eight-hour working day, political activities, co-operative societies, the unification of all workers in trade unions, strikes, and housing conditions. It was decided at the Congress to form the National Labour Union. — 326
Page me42.642
†384 In his letter to Marx of 11 October 1866 Kugelmann said that he had not received any letters from him since April of that year and that he believed that the subsequent letters might have been either lost or intercepted. Later on it turned out that Marx's letter to Kugelmann of 23 August 1866 (see this volume, pp. 311-12) was only received on 27 November 1866. — 327

Page me42.642
†385 In the first chapter of the first edition of Volume One of Capital Marx

Page Break me42.643
summarised his A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy which had been published in 1859 (see present edition, Vol. 29). In the second and subsequent German editions of Volume One of Capital and in the English edition of 1887, this chapter ('Commodity and Money') comprises Part I (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 328
Page me42.643
†386 This letter is a reply to Kugelmann's letter of 23 October 1866. Kugelmann advised Marx to ask Engels for his help in arranging the loan; he also suggested that Marx should make the same request to a well-known doctor, A. Jacobi, a former activist in the Communist League, who lived in New York. — 330
Page me42.643
†387 The Code pénal was introduced in 1811 in Napoleon's France and in the regions of Western and South-Western Germany conquered by the French. Article 2 of the Code says: 'Any attempt to commit an offence that manifested itself in practical acts and was accompanied by the commencement of the commitment of the offence and that was interrupted or was not carried out owing solely to circumstances that were beyond the control of the person in question shall be equivalent to an offence proper.' — 333
Page me42.643
†388 Early in September 1866 the Prussian Chamber of Deputies passed an Indemnity Bill submitted by Bismarck. The Bill relieved the government of any responsibility for expenditures which had not been legally approved during the constitutional conflict (see Note 100). Thus the conflict ended with the complete capitulation of the bourgeois opposition to the Bismarck government. Deputies Karl Twesten and Frenzel, who belonged to the opposition and had more than once criticised the government, now voted for the Bill. Nevertheless, early in November 1866 they were once again put on trial on the basis of the Supreme Tribunal's decision of 29 January 1866 (see Note 292) for their former speeches in the Prussian Provincial Diet but were again acquitted. — 333
Page me42.643
†389 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, On America and the Civil War, New York, 1972, and in full in The Letters of Karl Marx, New Jersey, 1979. — 334
Page me42.643
†390 Karl Marx's father, Heinrich Marx, owned a small vineyard in the Mosel region. — 334
Page me42.643
†391 A reference to the commercial treaty between Britain and France of 23 January 1860. In accordance with the treaty the duties on British goods exported to France were not to exceed 30 per cent of their price; France had the right to duty-free import of most of her goods to Britain. — 334
Page me42.643

†392 A reference to the defeat of the Democratic Party to which President Johnson belonged in the elections to Congress in November and December 1866. Johnson pursued a policy of compromise with the plantation-owners of the Southern states and opposed the granting of electoral rights to the Negroes. The elections were won by the Republicans who had received two-thirds of the votes in Congress. — 334
Page me42.643
†393 Nos. 52 and 53 of the Berlin satirical weekly Kladderadatsch of 18 November 1866 carried a lampoon, Die Frau in Weiß. Drama in 5 Acten mit freier Benutzung von Wilkie Collins, which was directed against Marx and his comrades. Its author was Heinrich Bettziech, a German petty-bourgeois democrat, who wrote under the pen-name of Beta.
Page me42.643
The Brimstone Gang was the name of a students' association at Jena University in the 1770s which was notorious for its members' brawls; subsequently, the expression 'Brimstone Gang' became widespread.

Page Break me42.644
Page me42.644
In his pamphlet Mein Prozeß gegen die 'Allgemeine Zeitung' which was published in 1859 the petty-bourgeois democrat Karl Vogt called Marx and his party comrades 'the Brimstone Gang'. However, this was a jocular name for a group of German émigrés that existed in Geneva in 1849 and 1850 with which Marx and his supporters were not connected. Marx exposed Vogt's slander in his pamphlet Herr Vogt which was published in 1860 (see present edition, Vol. 17).
Page me42.644
Wilhelm Liebknecht was arrested in Berlin on 2 October 1866 after he had made an anti-government speech in the Berlin Printers' Union. He was sentenced to three months imprisonment. — 336
Page me42.644
†394 A reference to the letter to Engels of 6 December 1866 from the refugee Hossfeld who lived in Liverpool. He asked Engels to lend him some money. — 337
Page me42.644
†395 A reference to the seizure by the French authorities of letters written by members of the International, their confiscation of documents of the Geneva Congress and the pressure that the Bonapartist circles brought to bear on the British government in order to prevent the publication of Congress documents in Le Courrier international. Early in January 1867 the General Council published a statement entitled 'The French Government and the International Association of Working Men' in which it exposed the actions of the ruling circles of the Second Empire towards the International (see The General Council of the First International. 1866-1868. Minutes, Moscow, 1974, pp. 271-76). — 338
Page me42.644
†396 Head Centre was the code name of the leader of the Fenian secret organisation (see Note 257). At the General Council meeting of 4 December 1866 it was reported that James Stephens, the leader of the Irish Fenians who had been arrested late in 1865 but escaped from prison and emigrated to the United States, had joined the International. — 338

Page me42.644
†397 On 6 December 1866 Pius IX addressed the officers of the French regular forces before their evacuation from the Papal States on Napoleon III's order. In his speech the Pope virtually expressed his disapproval of this act by the French Emperor and asked for him to be informed that he should act 'as the head of a Christian state and a good Christian', in other words, he should take effective measures to prevent the incorporation of the Papal States into the Italian Kingdom. — 338
Page me42.644
†398 Marx used A History of Agriculture and Prices in England by James Thorold Rogers in Chapter VI of Volume One of Capital which later became a section (chapters XXIII and XXIV in the second and subsequent German editions respectively, chapters XXV and XXVII in the English edition of 1887; see present edition, Vol. 35). — 339
Page me42.644
†399 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, Literature and Art. Selection from Their Writings, New York, 1947. — 339, 347
Page me42.644
†400 Praetorians — the privileged section of the army in ancient Rome, originally the generals' guards; in a figurative sense, mercenary troops propping up a system of government based on brute force. — 340
Page me42.644
†401 The substitution system was for a long time practised in the French army whereby members of the wealthier classes had the privilege of being able to free themselves from military service by hiring substitutes. During the French Revolution this was prohibited; however, Napoleon I introduced it again. Under the law of 1855, substitutes were to be selected by government bodies and the payment for them was to be made to a special 'army donation' fund. The substitution system was abolished in France in 1872. — 340

Page Break me42.645
Page me42.645
†402 Jules Gottraux, a Swiss-born subject of Great Britain and a member of the International, was detained by the French police on the Franco-Swiss border on 30 September 1866 when he was returning to London from Geneva. The police confiscated letters and printed matter which were to be handed to the General Council. The General Council made a public protest against this arbitrary act and other acts hostile to the International committed by the Bonapartist authorities and demanded the return of the seized documents (see Note 395). Receiving no reply from the French Minister of the Interior to its petition that the documents be returned, the General Council appealed to Lord Edward Stanley, the British Foreign Secretary, who through Henry Cowley, the British Ambassador to Paris, succeeded in returning the papers. At its meeting of 1 January 1867 the General Council passed a resolution in which it thanked Lord Stanley for his help. — 341, 346
Page me42.645

†403 A reference to the black-white-red flag of the North German Confederation which was founded in 1867 under the supremacy of Prussia (at the time the letter was written preparations were being carried on for forming it), and later of the German Empire. — 344
Page me42.645
†404 Marx used this information given by Engels in Volume One of Capital (see present edition, Vol. 35; English edition of 1887, Part IV, Chapter XV, Section 5, pp. 434-35). — 345
Page me42.645
†405 Article 4 of the Peace Treaty of Prague between Prussia and Austria recognised the independence of the German states lying south of the Main and their right to form a separate South German Confederation (Napoleon III's aim). At the same time it mentioned the national ties between the North and South German states and envisaged the possibility of their joining the planned North German Confederation under Prussia's supremacy. In August 1866 Bismarck made a secret defence alliance with the South German states which provided that in the event of war their armies would be placed under the Prussian high command. — 345
Page me42.645
†406 In his letter to Marx of 15 February 1867 Ludwig Kugelmann enclosed a notice from the Hanover liberal newspaper Zeitung für Norddeutschland, No. 5522, of the same day which reported Marx's intention to go to the Continent with the alleged aim of preparing a Polish insurrection. Sending the text of his refutation ('A Correction', see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 202) Marx considered its publication all the more necessary since he did plan to visit Germany to take the manuscript of Volume One of Capital to the publisher Otto Meissner in Hamburg and to agree about the terms of its publication.
Page me42.645
On 21 February 1867 the Zeitung für Norddeutschland was forced to print a refutation of its fabrication about Marx's intention to take an active part in the preparations for a future insurrection in Poland. On 22 February Kugelmann sent the published refutation to Marx. This was probably what Marx told Engels in his letter of 25 February. — 346, 347, 352
Page me42.645
†407 The report on the Geneva Congress of the International (see Note 375) was published in English in The International Courier, Nos. 7-15 of 20 February, 13, 20 and 27 March, and 3, 10 and 17 April 1867 and in French in Le Courrier international, Nos. 8-16 of 9, 16, 23 and 30 March and 6, 13, 20 and 27 April 1867. — 346
Page me42.645
†408 This is a comment on the elections to the constituent North German Reichstag which took place in Germany in February 1867. Two Saxon constituencies elected August Bebel who became the first ever working-class representative in the German parliament and the lawyer Reinhold Schraps, the candidate of the Saxon People's Party. Wilhelm Liebknecht had been in prison for three months until the middle of January and was therefore unable to organise an election campaign and to win the elections. — 348

Page Break me42.646

Page me42.646
†409 A reference to the constituent North German Reichstag convoked on the basis of universal suffrage that had been proclaimed by Bismarck. The Reichstag held its sessions from 24 February to 17 April 1867; it approved the creation of the North German Confederation and its constitution, which became valid on 1 July 1867. — 349
Page me42.646
†410 The weekly Hermann, No. 426, 2 March 1867, reprinted from the Volks-Zeitung Stieber's statement which refuted the report published in the Hermann, No. 424, to the effect that in January 1860 he had attempted to bribe its editorial board in order to prevent the further publication of an article by Wilhelm Eichhoff exposing Stieber's activities as an agent provocateur during the Cologne Communist trial. Under this statement of Stieber's the editors placed a statement by R. Hirschfeld, the owner of the print-shop where at that time the weekly had been printed. Hirschfeld's statement cited facts showing Stieber's attempt to bribe the editorial board in January 1860. On 8 March 1867 the Volks-Zeitung carried a new statement by Stieber, in which he again denied his attempt. — 349
Page me42.646
†411 A reference to the secret peace negotiations between France and Russia in 1855 during the Crimean war (1853-56) waged by the Anglo-Franco-Turkish coalition and Tsarist Russia. They were conducted through Baron Seebach, Saxony's envoy to Paris, who had important connections at the Russian court. — 349
Page me42.646
†412 On 10 April 1867 Marx went to Germany to deliver the manuscript of Volume One of Capital to the publisher Otto Meissner. He arrived in Hamburg by boat on 12 April. Having made all the arrangements with Meissner, he came to Hanover on 16 April and stayed with Ludwig Kugelmann till the middle of May. On his way back to Britain Marx once again saw Meissner in Hamburg on 16 and 17 May and returned to London on 19 May 1867. — 350, 356, 366, 375, 379
Page me42.646
†413 In his note to Marx of 1 April 1867 Sigismund Borkheim told him that 'a continental friend' ('ein Freund vom Kontinent') had written to him about Marx's strained circumstances and his need of the Party's material support. — 350, 352
Page me42.646
†414 On 25 January 1867, the Paris Bronze-Workers' Credit and Solidarity Society (Société de crédit et de solidarité des ouvriers du bronze) sent a circular to its members calling upon them to prepare for a general strike of solidarity with Barbedienne's bronze-workers who demanded fixed rates. They went on strike in February. In response to this, the owners of 120 enterprises adopted, at their meeting on 14 February, a resolution threatening to impose a lock-out if the society were not dissolved. A general meeting of bronze-workers that was held on 24 February and was attended by nearly 3,000 people resolved to fight the employers. The General Council of the International was immediately informed of this by a delegation of the bronze-workers' society specially sent to London, consisting of Camelinat, Kin, and Valdun who were joined by Tolain and Fribourg. On the initiative of Jung, Dupont and other members of the General Council funds began to be raised to aid the Paris workers. The broad movement of solidarity, which had been organised by the General Council, served to keep up the strikers' militant spirit and undermined the employers' position. Negotiations between employers and workers began at individual factories, and on 24 March representatives of the employers' association agreed to introduce fixed rates for separate jobs. — 351

Page Break me42.647

Page me42.647

†415 Early in 1867 a conflict broke out between the ruling circles of Prussia and France, since both sides had claims to the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, which was connected by a personal union with the Netherlands (the King of the Netherlands was also the Grand Duke of Luxemburg) and was also a member of the German Confederation. However, after the latter was disbanded in 1866, Luxemburg refused to enter the North German Confederation which had been formed under Prussia's aegis. The government of Napoleon III and the King of the Netherlands agreed on the sale of Luxemburg to France, but Bismarck prevented it by making use of the Prussian garrison that was stationed in the duchy when the German Confederation still existed.

Page me42.647

In May 1867 the Luxemburg question was discussed at an international conference in London which made it a duty of the European powers to guarantee the preservation of Luxemburg's former status and neutrality. Prussia was to withdraw its troops from the duchy. In both states the Luxemburg conflict entailed preparations for war and extensive militaristic propaganda and became a stage in the preparation for the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. — 351, 352, 364, 459

Page me42.647

†416 In response to the protest of the Polish deputies to the North German Reichstag against the forcible incorporation of the Principality of Posen and other Polish territories in the North German Confederation, Bismarck made a demagogical speech on 18 March 1867 in the Reichstag in which he said in particular that the Polish peasantry trusted the Prussian and Russian authorities more than their own nobility. — 351, 374

Page me42.647

†417 In his speech of 11 March 1867 in the North German Reichstag Bismarck said: 'Gentlemen! Let us quickly get down to work! Let us put Germany in the saddle, as it were! She will be able to ride.' On 23 March of the same year a conservative deputy to the Reichstag, Hermann Wagener ended his speech with the words Engels cites in his letter. — 355

Page me42.647

†418 According to the arrangement with the publisher that Marx mentions in his letter, he planned after the publication of Volume One of Capital (appeared in September 1867) to publish Book Two and Book Three as Volume Two, and Book Four, which contained a critical history of economic theories, as a concluding Volume Three.

Page me42.647

After Marx's death, Engels prepared for the press and published manuscripts belonging to Book Two and Book Three as Volumes Two and Three of Capital; he died before he could prepare for the press Book Four, Theories of Surplus Value (Volume Four of Capital) and have it published (see also Note 227). — 357, 358, 367, 368, 371, 390, 402, 405, 407, 418, 436, 442, 509, 511, 515, 525, 544

Page me42.647
†419 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx & Frederick Engels, Letters on 'Capital', New Park Publications, London, 1983. — 358, 386, 391, 402, 405, 409, 417, 425, 442, 487, 507, 511
Page me42.647
†420 Guelphs (Welfs) — members of a separatist party formed in Hanover following its annexation by Prussia in 1866. It consisted of supporters of the restoration of the independent Hanover monarchy headed by the house of Welfs which was once on the throne there. — 361, 492

Page Break me42.648
Page me42.648
†421 Head-in-chief (Haupt-Chef) — the name given by Wilhelm Stieber, one of the organisers of the Cologne Communist trial in 1852, to a police spy, Julian Cherval (real name Joseph Crämer). Stieber sought to represent Cherval as a dangerous conspirator and leader of the Communist League and make it appear that he was connected with Marx and the defendants (see K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 407-19). — 361
Page me42.648
†422 A reference to the subscription for Ferdinand Freiligrath that was started in the spring of 1867. The poet's admirers wanted to present him with a 'people's donation' since he had lost his post of manager in the English branch of the Bank of Switzerland after the latter's bankruptcy. With this aim in view, committees were organised in Britain, Germany and the United States through which funds were gathered. Reports about the subscription were regularly published in the London newspaper Hermann. — 362, 378, 385, 425, 472, 532
Page me42.648
†423 A reference to the publicity Lassalle managed to achieve for his book about Heraclitus' philosophy, published in 1858. For this purpose he made use of his friends and officially joined the society of German Old Hegelian philosophers. — 363
Page me42.648
†424 The 'nationalities principle' was put forward by the ruling circles of the Second Empire and was extensively used by them as an ideological smoke-screen for their plans of conquest and adventurous foreign policy. Seeking to pass himself off as a 'defender of nationalities', Napoleon III took advantage of the national interests of the oppressed nations with the aim of strengthening the hegemony of France and extending her frontiers. This principle was also used in the diplomacy of Tsarist Russia to spread Russian influence to the Balkans and Central Europe. The demagogical nature of the 'nationalities principle' used by the ruling circles of counter-revolutionary European states was exposed by Marx in his pamphlet Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17) and by Engels in the article 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?' (present edition, Vol. 20). — 364
Page me42.648
†425 A reference to the second Reform Bill which was finally approved by Parliament on 15 August 1867. In accordance with the new law, the property qualifications for electors was lowered for lease-holders in the counties to 12-pound rent a year, and in the towns franchise was granted to all householders, and house tenants, and those tenants who had held their place of residence for not less than a year and paid not less than £10. Although as a result of the 1867 reform the number of electors in Britain doubled, and suffrage was also extended to a section of skilled industrial workers, the bulk of the country's population remained disfranchised as before. — 365, 384, 468

Page me42.648
†426 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895, London, 1934. In full the letter was published in English in K. Marx and F. Engels, Selected Correspondence, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1975. — 366
Page me42.648
†427 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, On the First International, New York, 1973. In full the letter was published in English in The Letters of Karl Marx, New Jersey, 1979. — 367
Page me42.648
†428 Marx was first expelled from France in January 1845 by the Guizot ministry at the demand of the Prussian government. The pretext for this was Marx's part in editing the newspaper Vorwärts! which violently criticised Prussian reactionary order. Early in February Marx had to emigrate to Belgium.

Page Break me42.649
Page me42.649
On 19 July 1849, Marx who was again in Paris — this time after the defeat of the German revolution — received a notice from the French authorities ordering him to leave Paris and move to the Department of Morbihan, a swampy and unhealthy part of Brittany. This prompted his departure to London in the second half of August 1849. — 368
Page me42.649
†429 Marx's attempts to find somebody to translate Capital into French were unsuccessful at the time. On the French translation of Volume One of Capital see Note 539. — 368
Page me42.649
†430 A reference to a cross given to Jenny on her birthday. Such crosses were worn by participants in the Polish national liberation struggle. Since the end of 1867 Jenny wore it on a green ribbon as a symbol of her mourning over the Irish Fenians executed in November 1867 (green colour was a symbol of struggle for the national liberation of Ireland). — 369, 479
Page me42.649
†431 The Manichaeans were the followers of a religious trend current in the Middle East in the third century of the Christian era, its characteristics being asceticism and celibacy. In German students' slang the word Manichaean stood for a merciless creditor (in consonance with the German 'mahnender Gläubiger', i.e. a creditor demanding the payment of debt). — 372, 436
Page me42.649
†432 The National-Liberals — a party of the German, above all Prussian, bourgeoisie which was formed in the autumn of 1866 after a split in the Party of Progress (see Note

99). Their policy showed that a considerable section of the liberal bourgeoisie had abandoned its claims to extend its political prerogatives and capitulated to the Bismarck Junker government after Prussia's victory in the Austro-Prussian war and the establishment of her supremacy in Germany. — 372, 421, 504
Page me42.649
†433 In June 1849 the right-wing liberal deputies of the Frankfurt National Assembly, who walked out after the Prussian King Frederick William IV had refused to accept the Imperial Crown, met in Gotha for a conference which resulted in the formation of the so-called Gotha party. The objective of this party, which reflected the sentiments of the big bourgeoisie and feared the victorious outcome of the revolution, was to achieve the unification of the Germany (with the exception of Austria) under the hegemony of Prussia. There was a certain continuity between the Gotha party and the National-Liberals. — 372
Page me42.649
†434 In 1846 Marx and Engels negotiated through Joseph Weydemeyer the financing of the publication of their two-volume work criticising the German ideology (see present edition, Vol. 5) with the Westphalian publishers Julius Meyer and Rudolph Rempel. In July 1846, after a series of subterfuges and delays, Meyer and Rempel refused their promised assistance on the pretext of financial difficulties, the actual reason being the differences of principle between Marx and Engels, on the one hand, and the champions of 'true socialism', on the other, whose views both publishers shared.
Page me42.649
In the spring of 1845 Hermann Kriege, one of the future exponents of 'true socialism', was recommended by Meyer to Engels and Marx and met the former in Barmen and the latter in Brussels. — 373
Page me42.649
†435 In his speech in the North German Reichstag on 9 March 1867 Johannes Miquel demanded that a North German Confederation should be formed as a single centralised state under the hegemony of Prussia and urged the other German states to sacrifice their freedom for Germany's unification. — 373

Page Break me42.650
Page me42.650
†436 Cremorne gardens existed in the 1850s-1870s in London; they were closed in 1877. — 376
Page me42.650
†437 Marx stayed with Engels in Manchester from approximately 22 May to 2 June 1867. — 377, 379
Page me42.650
†438 During his stay in Hanover in April and May 1867, Marx decided to write an appendix on forms of value for Volume One of Capital — an idea that was supported by Ludwig Kugelmann. Marx wanted to supplement and specify Chapter I of the main text on commodities and money. He implemented this idea in the first edition of Volume One (1867). In the second German edition of 1872 Marx revised this appendix and incorporated it in the relevant passages of the text. In the subsequent editions of Capital, including the English one of 1887 edited by Engels, the text was given in this form. — 378, 384, 392, 396, 402, 423

Page me42.650
†439 A reference to the 'Report of the Commissioners on the Treatment of the Treason-Felony Convicts in the English Convict Prisons' by the police magistrate Alexander Knox and the medical officer George Pollock published in London in 1867 on Parliament's decision. The report dealt with the treatment of political prisoners, especially Irish Fenians (see Note 257) in the English prisons. — 378, 383, 390, 394
Page me42.650
†440 The Times of 3 June 1867 carried a report by its Paris correspondent which stated that during the ceremony of welcome for the Russian Emperor Alexander II in Paris, there had been shouts of 'Long Live Poland' in the crowd. At the meeting of 18 June 1867 the General Council of the First International passed a resolution approving the mass demonstration of solidarity in Paris with the Poles suppressed by Tsarism. The text of the Council's resolution was published in The Commonwealth, No. 224 of 22 June 1867 (see The General Council of the First International. 1866-1868. Minutes, Moscow, 1974, pp. 129-30). — 379
Page me42.650
†441 In Hegel's terminology, 'Knoten' ('nodal points') are certain moments in movement when a sudden qualitative leap takes place as a result of gradual quantitative change (see G.W.F. Hegel, Wissenschaft der Logik, Erstes Buch, Dritter Abschnitt, Zweites Kapitel). — 382
Page me42.650
†442 The Royal Commission to Make Inquiry Respecting the English Trade Unions was set up in February 1867 because the ruling classes were anxious about the mounting trade unions' activity and hoped that such inquiry would help to outlaw the trade unions or at least restrict the scope of their activity. At the same time an anti-trade union campaign was launched in bourgeois newspapers. The trade unions, supported by the General Council of the International, responded with meetings all over the country and a national conference in London on 5-8 March 1867. After the inquiry the Royal Commission failed to make any serious charges against the trade unions, but it hindered their complete legalisation (the legal protection of their funds, and the recognition of their right to fight strike-breakers and to support strikes organised by other trade unions). — 384, 387, 426
Page me42.650
†443 The new inquiry into working conditions resulted in the law of 15 August 1867 which extended the validity of the factory acts to new industries. Now the maximum working-day for women and children below eighteen years of age was restricted to 10 1/2 hours, not only at the factories but also at smaller enterprises and in the domestic industry. — 384

Page Break me42.651
Page me42.651
†444 Marx is referring to Chapter III of the first edition of Volume One of Capital; in the second and subsequent editions it corresponds to five chapters (V-IX) of Part III and in the English edition of 1887 to chapters VII-XI (see present edition, Vol. 35).

Page me42.651

The note to the text of the first edition that is mentioned here stated that the molecular theory was advanced by Auguste Laurent and Charles Frédéric Gerhardt, and Charles Adolphe Wurtz was the first who scientifically elaborated it. Later on Marx made an additional study of the history of this problem and omitted his reference to Wurtz in the second German edition of Volume One of Capital (1872); in the third edition of the volume (1883) Engels also made a more precise assessment of the role that had been played by Laurent and Gerhardt (see the English edition of 1887, Part III, Chapter XI, and the present edition, Vol. 35). — 385

Page me42.651

†445 Engels' The Condition of the Working-Class in England appeared in the spring of 1845. The part of the edition that had not been sold out was put on sale later on with a new title page dated 1848. — 385

Page me42.651

†446 A reference to Chapter II ('The Transformation of Money into Capital') and Chapter III ('Production of Absolute Surplus-Value') of the first edition of Volume One of Capital. They correspond to Parts II and III in the second and subsequent German editions, and to Parts II and III (chapters IV-XI) of the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 386

Page me42.651

†447 One of the reasons for appointing the Royal Commission to Make Inquiry Respecting the English Trade Unions (see Note 442) was the excesses committed in 1865-66 in Sheffield, the centre of metal-working industry, by some trade-unionists against strike-breakers. The Commission, however, failed to make any serious charges against the trade unions, since these instances were few and far between. — 387

Page me42.651

†448 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx and F. Engels, Selected Correspondence, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1975. — 388, 389

Page me42.651

†449 Between 5 July and early August 1867 Engels travelled in Sweden, Denmark and Germany and visited Ludwig Kugelmann in Hanover. His wife Lizzie Burns accompanied him during some part of the trip. — 389, 391, 392, 395, 396, 399, 401, 444, 469

Page me42.651

†450 Marx is referring to the last section of Chapter V in the first edition of Volume One of Capital. It corresponds to Chapter XVII of Part VI in the second and subsequent German editions of this volume and to Chapter XIX of Part VI in the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 390

Page me42.651

†451 The paras mentioned in the letter, including the criticism of the theory of Nassau William Senior, were in Chapter III of the first edition of Volume One of Capital, and correspond to chapters VII and VIII of Part III in the second and subsequent German editions of this volume, and to chapters IX and X of Part III in the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 391, 392

Page me42.651

†452 A reference to the extremely negative reaction of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung (in the articles published on 18 and 26 June 1867) to the statements by the British Foreign Secretary Stanley in the House of Commons on 14 June and the Prime Minister Derby in the House of Lords on 20 June 1867. Stanley and Derby expressed their approval of the treaty on Luxemburg signed at the international conference in London on 11 May 1867. This treaty which guaranteed the former status and neutrality of Luxemburg put an end to the so-called Luxemburg crisis (see Note 415). — 394

Page Break me42.652

Page me42.652

†453 In his reply to Marx of 20 July 1867 Freiligrath evaded a direct answer to Marx's question (see M. Häckel, Freiligraths Briefwechsel mit Marx und Engels, Th. 1, Berlin, 1968, S. 181). — 398

Page me42.652

†454 For the second German edition of Volume One of Capital (published by Meissner in Hamburg in 1872) Marx revised and enlarged the text and improved the structure of the book. In doing this he also took into account the suggestions Engels made in this letter. Instead of the original six chapters the second and subsequent German editions of Volume One contained seven parts comprising 25 chapters. Chapter IV, which is being discussed in this letter, became Part IV consisting of four chapters; Chapter XII was divided into five and Chapter XIII into ten sections. The text of this volume in the English edition of 1887, edited by Engels, was divided into even more chapters. Chapter IV of the first edition corresponds to Part IV, chapters XII, XIII, XIV (sections 1-5) and Chapter XV (sections 1-10) (present edition, Vol. 35). — 406, 407, 436

Page me42.652

†455 The reference is to Chapter VI ('The Process of the Accumulation of Capital') of the first edition of Volume One of Capital which corresponds to Part VII of the second and subsequent German editions, and to chapters XXIII-XXV of Part VII of the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 406, 409

Page me42.652

†456 Part of the Preface to Volume One of Capital was soon published in a number of German periodicals such as Die Zukunft, No. 206 of 4 September 1867; Der Beobachter, No. 210 of 7 September 1867; Der Vorbote, Nos. 9-11 of September-November 1867; and Demokratisches Wochenblatt of 4 and 11 January 1868. The English translation of part of the Preface done by Georg Eccarius was published in The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 308 of 7 September 1867; the French translation done by Paul Lafargue and Marx's daughter Laura appeared in Le Courrier français, No. 106 of 1 October 1867 and in the Belgian newspaper La Liberté, No. 15 of 13 October 1867. — 407, 423, 428, 448, 450, 495, 527

Page me42.652

†457 A reference to Marx's work on Book Two of Capital in which he analysed 'The Process of Circulation of Capital'. By that time Marx had already finished the first rough version of the book, it being written presumably in the first half of 1865. From the latter half of 1865 to August 1867 he wrote another two manuscripts dealing with the subject. Between the end of 1868 and 1870 Marx wrote a second, complete version of this book, which, along with his later manuscripts, was subsequently used by Engels in preparing Volume Two of Capital for publication in 1885. — 408

Page me42.652
†458 A reference to Marx's letter to Engels of 20 August 1862 and Engels' reply of 9 September 1862 (see present edition, Vol. 41). — 408
Page me42.652
†459 This letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx & Frederick Engels, Letters on 'Capital', New Park Publications, London, 1983. — 410
Page me42.652
†460 In the summer of 1866 the Greek population of Crete (Candia) rose against Turkish domination demanding union with Greece. Despite the cruel punitive measures taken by the Turkish troops against the insurgents and civilians, the struggle continued, supported by volunteers from many other countries.

Page Break me42.653
Page me42.653
The events on Crete brought about a new aggravation of the international contradictions in the Middle East. In November 1866 the Russian government proposed that the European powers should demand from the Turkish Empire the transfer of Crete to Greece. However, the western powers preferred Crete to remain under the Turkish rule since they were afraid that the position of Russia in the region might be strengthened and the national liberation movement of the nations ruled by the Sultan be further stepped up. The support of the Crete insurgents went no further than a joint statement made by Russia, France, Italy and Prussia of 29 October 1867 which recommended that the Turkish government should restrain from bloody excesses on Crete. In 1869 the insurrection was completely suppressed. — 414 †461 The League of Peace and Freedom — a pacifist organisation that was set up in 1867 with the active participation of Victor Hugo, Giuseppe Garibaldi and other democrats. The League owed its origin to the anti-war sentiments of the masses. However, its leaders held pacifist positions; they failed to see the social causes of war and often confined its anti-war activity to mere declarations.
Page me42.653
Page me42.653
The League's constituent congress was originally scheduled for 5 September 1867 in Geneva. Its organising committee, which enjoyed the support of a number of radical and democratic public figures like John Stuart Mill and the Reclus brothers, also counted on the participation of the leaders of the European proletariat. Therefore the committee sent invitations to the sections of the International and its leaders, Marx included, to attend the congress. It was also decided to postpone the opening of the congress until 9 September, so that the delegates of the Lausanne Congress of the International (due on 2-8 September) could take part in it too.
Page me42.653
The International's attitude towards the League of Peace and Freedom was discussed both in the General Council and in local sections. Marx's speech at the Council meeting of 13 August 1867 and the resolution adopted at his proposal (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 204) formulated the principles of the International's tactics in such a bourgeois-democratic movement. In contrast to the unconditional support of the League, which is what the leaders of the British trade unions inclined towards, the International's tactics envisaged both the joint participation with the democrats in the struggle against the threat of war, provided the class independence of the proletarian organisation was retained, and a revolutionary proletarian approach towards the questions of war and peace in opposition to bourgeois pacifist illusions. Marx believed that the International should not take part in the League's congress on an official basis because that would mean the International's solidarity with its bourgeois programme. However, it was recommended that the International's members should attend the congress privately in order to influence its decisions in a revolutionary-democratic way. — 414, 424, 473, 517, 537, 581

Page me42.653

†462 The Lausanne Congress of the International was held from 2 to 8 September 1867. Marx took part in the preparations but he was unable to attend the congress, since he was busy reading the proofs of Volume One of Capital.

Page me42.653

The Congress was attended by 64 delegates from six countries (Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium and Italy). Apart from the report of the General Council (see present edition, Vol. 20), the Congress heard reports from the local sections which showed the increased influence of the

Page Break me42.654

International on the proletariat and the growing strength of its organisations in different countries. The delegates holding Proudhonist views, especially those from France, sought to change the orientation of the International's activity and its programme principles. Having managed, despite the efforts of the General Council's delegates, to impose their agenda on the Congress, they sought to get the Congress to revise the Geneva Congress resolutions in a Proudhonist spirit. They did succeed in carrying through a number of their own resolutions, in particular the one on co-operation and credit, which they regarded as the principal instruments of changing society by means of reform.

Page me42.654

However, the Proudhonists failed to achieve their principal aim. The Congress retained as valid the Geneva Congress resolutions on the economic struggle and strikes. The Proudhonist dogma on abstaining from political struggle was countered by the resolution on political freedom passed by the Lausanne Congress which emphasised that the social emancipation of the working class was inseparable from its political liberation. The Proudhonists likewise failed to seize the leadership of the International. The Congress re-elected the General Council in its former composition and retained London as its seat. — 416, 418, 420, 425, 427 †463 A reference to the printed sheets of Chapter VI, the last one, of Volume One of Capital.

Page me42.654

Page me42.654

In the second German edition of Volume One (1872) Marx, on Engels' advice, substantially enlarged the section on Ireland and wrote some additional notes (see the English edition of 1887, Part VII, Chapter XXV, Section 5).

Page me42.654

The 'resumé on the expropriation of the expropriators' mentioned by Engels is placed at the end of Chapter XXIV in the second and subsequent German editions and at the end of Chapter XXXII (Part VIII) of the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 417, 432

Page me42.654

†464 Der Social-Demokrat, No. 102 of 30 August 1867 carried a report that J.M. Hirsch, publisher of a collection of songs, and two owners of the printing-house where it was printed had been arrested in Erfurt. Hirsch was charged with high treason. — 417

Page me42.654

†465 The Royal Society of Arts — an educational and philanthropic organisation founded in Britain in 1754. It consisted mainly of businessmen and bourgeois intellectuals and enjoyed the patronage of aristocracy. Marx violently criticised the Society's attempts to act as a mediator in the conflicts between workers and employers with the aim of undermining the class struggle. At the same time he thought highly of its extensive library and its research publications of which he made use in his studies, especially in Capital. The Society's scientific material became available to him after he joined it in 1869. — 418

Page me42.654

†466 This is apparently a reference to Emile de Girardin's articles in La Liberté of which he became the owner in June 1866. Girardin treated the situation in France at that time as similar to that during the pre-revolutionary years 1829 and 1847. — 418

Page me42.654

†467 On 27 August 1867 during his visit to the French part of Flanders on the occasion of the anniversary of its annexation to France, Napoleon III made a speech in Lille in which he was rather pessimistic about France's situation at home and abroad. — 418

Page me42.654

†468 When the Civil War ended, the movement for the legislative introduction of an eight-hour working day intensified in the USA. Leagues of struggle for the eight-hour day were set up throughout the country; in California alone there were over 50. The National Labour Union, founded at a congress in Baltimore (see Note 383) in August 1866, joined the movement. Attaching great importance to the demand for the eight-hour working day Marx included it in the agenda of the Geneva Congress. In his 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council' he emphasised the need to raise it 'to the common platform of the working classes all over the world' (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 187). This point as formulated by Marx was adopted as a congress resolution.

Page Break me42.655

Page me42.655

On 25 June 1868, the US Congress which was forced to reckon with the mass movement, adopted a law on an eight-hour working day for the employees of all governmental and federal bodies. — 418, 452

Page me42.655

†469 Marx made a number of critical comments on the text of the speech prepared by Borkheim for the constituent congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva

(see Note 461). Having delivered the speech at the congress, Borkheim then published it in French under the title of 'Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve' and also in German. — 419, 435, 437, 441, 449
Page me42.655
†470 In addition to the ordinary footnotes for the first German edition of Volume One of Capital, Marx wrote nine notes in which he cited the latest facts from different sources. In preparing the second German edition (1872) he made some alterations in these additional notes and inserted them in the corresponding places of the main text.
Page me42.655
On the appendix to Chapter I see Note 438. — 419
Page me42.655
†471 A reference to Marx's speech on the International's attitude towards the congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 461) and the resolution on the issue proposed by him at the General Council meeting of 13 August 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 204). Eccarius' brief report of the Council meeting was published in The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 305 of 17 August 1867; it was also cited in Lucien Dubois' article 'Les Conditions de la paix', published in Le Courrier français on 2 September 1867. — 420
Page me42.655
†472 In his letter to Marx of 5 September 1867 Friedrich Lessner gave him extensive information about the beginning of the International's Lausanne Congress (see Note 462) and referred to the report published in the Gazette de Lausanne. — 422
Page me42.655
†473 A reference to the first of Eccarius' series of articles about the Lausanne Congress of the International published in The Times, No. 25909 of 6 September 1867. The other articles of the series were published in The Times, Nos. 25911-25913 of 9-11 September 1867. In his articles Eccarius made ironical comments on the muddled views of the French Proudhonist delegates and their verbosity. — 422, 425, 428, 434
Page me42.655
†474 Beginning from 5 September 1867 Vermorel's newspaper Le Courrier français published Henri Tolain's articles about the International's Lausanne Congress (see Note 462) in which he praised the French delegates' position at the Congress. — 422
Page me42.655
†475 The activity of the Proudhonists at the International's Lausanne Congress (see Note 462) and the fact that they had some of their resolutions adopted, gave particular urgency to the struggle for the assertion of the main programme principles of scientific communism. In Marx's opinion, this task was to be carried out by the next Congress of the International which was to be held in

Page Break me42.656
Brussels in September 1868. Thanks to the energetic preparatory work that was done by Marx and his followers, the decisions of the Brussels Congress, especially the one on the collective ownership of land, paralysed to a considerable extent the influence of the Proudhonists in the International Association. — 424, 428
Page me42.656

†476 The Berlin Workers' Association was founded in January 1863 and was under the influence of the men of Progress (see Note 99), especially of Schulze-Delitzsch, and propagandised bourgeois co-operative societies. When the International Working Men's Association was set up, the advanced members of the Berlin Workers' Association were attracted towards it and sought to get rid of the liberals' protection. In October 1868 there was a split in the Berlin Workers' Association. Its radical members formed the Democratic Workers' Association which recognised the programme approved by the Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations (headed by August Bebel and Wilhelm Liebknecht) based on the International's principles. The Democratic Workers' Association waged a vigorous struggle against the Lassalleans. In 1869 it joined the Social-Democratic Workers' Party which came into being at the Eisenach Congress. — 424, 477

Page me42.656

†477 A reference to Lessner's letter of 7 September 1867 in which he informed Marx about the proceedings of the Lausanne Congress of the International (for Lessner's previous letter about the Congress see Note 472). — 424, 429

Page me42.656

†478 Contrary to the position held by Marx and the General Council of the International towards the bourgeois-pacifist League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 461), the Lausanne Congress, largely owing to the efforts of Johann Philipp Becker and other members of the Geneva Section of the International as well as the French Proudhonists, decided by majority vote to send an official delegation from the IWMA to the constituent congress of the League. On 9 July 1867, before the Lausanne Congress, the general meeting of the Geneva Section of the International decided to join the League's programme and expressed their full confidence to its organisers; several members of the Section, including Becker and Dupleix, joined the League's Organising Committee. — 425, 428

Page me42.656

†479 To break the conspiracy of silence with which official bourgeois academics met the publication of Volume One of Marx's Capital, Engels resorted to a kind of stratagem by writing a number of reviews for some bourgeois newspapers which looked as if penned by an unbiased bourgeois scholar. The reviews were published in Die Zukunft, Elberfelder Zeitung, Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg and others (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 427

Page me42.656

†480 In his letter to Marx of 9 September 1867 Johann Georg Eccarius informed him that he as well as Johann Philipp Becker, Ludwig Kugelmann, Sigismund Borkheim and others had been invited on 8 September to a preliminary conference of the German participants in the Geneva Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 461). This conference made obvious the disagreements between participants in the workers' movement and the bourgeois democrats. Thus, in the discussion of the candidates to the presiding body of the Congress, the democrats Ludwig Simon and Jakob Venedey opposed the very principle of class representation and objected to Kugelmann, who had suggested that representatives of the proletariat be included in it. Nevertheless, as a result of the debates, Marx's followers Eccarius, Becker and

Page Break me42.657

Borkheim and also Ludwig Büchner and Armand Goegg were elected German vice-presidents of the Congress. — 429

Page me42.657

†481 The June days — the proletarian uprising in Paris on 23-26 June 1848. — 429

Page me42.657

†482 From 13 September 1867, Marx and Paul Lafargue stayed for a few days with Engels in Manchester. — 431, 432

Page me42.657

†483 The reference is to the spot under the railway bridge in Manchester where on 18 September 1867 Fenians made an armed assault on a police van in order to free two arrested Fenian leaders (see Note 497). — 431

Page me42.657

†484 Wilhelm Liebknecht was elected deputy to the North German Reichstag by one of the Saxon constituencies on 31 August 1867; he delivered his first speech in the Reichstag on 30 September 1867. — 432

Page me42.657

†485 This misprint ('C' instead of 'B') also appeared in the second and all the subsequent editions of Volume One of Capital that were published during the lifetime of Marx and Engels. — 432

Page me42.657

†486 In his first speech in the North German Reichstag on 30 September 1867 that he made in the discussion on the passports bill, Liebknecht violently criticised the police and bureaucratic order. He proposed a number of amendments to the bill that would restrict the authorities' arbitrary rule. Liebknecht's bold statements about the political system and the government's policy were repeatedly interrupted by Simson, president of the Reichstag, and his proposals were rejected.

Page me42.657

Apart from the reports in the newspapers, Liebknecht's speech was also published as a pamphlet, Was ich in Berliner Reichstag sagte, Leipzig, 1867. — 433, 444, 445, 450

Page me42.657

†487 A reference to Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 29 September 1867 which was written on his return to Hanover from the Geneva Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom. In this letter Kugelmann informed Marx that during the election of five German vice-presidents of the Congress (see Note 480) Karl Vogt was also nominated and that he (Kugelmann) objected giving as a reason the exposure of Vogt as a Bonapartist agent by Marx in his pamphlet Herr Vogt. In spite of the efforts of several democrats, in particular, Ludwig Simon, Vogt was not elected vice-president of the Congress. — 433, 442

Page me42.657

†488 Marx quotes from Paul Stumpf's letter to him from Mainz of 29 September 1867. In very vague terms Stumpf asked Marx to explain to him certain factors of the process of pauperisation and proletarisation of the petty bourgeoisie, artisans, etc. — 434

Page me42.657

†489 The decision to abolish the office of the General Council's President was moved on Marx's initiative by John Hales and adopted at the General Council meeting of 24

September 1867. The abolition of this post, which had been permanently held since 1864 by one of the British trade union leaders, George Odger, considerably weakened the positions of the reformist wing of the International. Odger did not get any post when the appointment of officers in the Council took place. Before this William Cremer had been dismissed from the post of General Secretary. The International's Basle Congress (September 1869) approved the General Council's decision. — 434, 519
Page me42.657
†490 The letter to which Marx refers was sent by Peter Fox to Johann Philipp Becker in Geneva on 29 August 1867, on the eve of the Lausanne Congress, and was marked as 'personal and confidential'. Fox's reason for suggesting that the seat of the General Council should be transferred to Geneva was that, in his opinion, guidance of the international labour movement kept the British members of the General Council away from more effective participation in the activities of the International's organisations in Britain. — 434

Page Break me42.658
Page me42.658
†491 The editorial in The Times, No. 25917 of 16 September 1867, dealt with the Geneva Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 461). It gave an account of the speeches by Garibaldi, Quinet, Dupont, Bakunin and others, and also mentioned speech by Borkheim who, according to the newspaper, suggested 'the abolition of classes'. — 435
Page me42.658
†492 The title of this article which was published in Le Courrier français, No. 113 of 8 October 1867, contains an allusion to La Fontaine's fable Les voleurs et l'âne. — 438
Page me42.658
†493 In his letter to Marx of 8 October 1867 Ludwig Kugelmann offered to publish short notes about Volume One of Capital and asked for the corresponding instructions.
Page me42.658
For Engels' efforts to popularise Volume One of Capital see Note 479. — 438, 443
Page me42.658
†494 In February 1860 Marx who had started work on his pamphlet Herr Vogt wrote to Sigismund Borkheim, with whom he was not yet acquainted, asking him for any information that he could give about the so-called Brimstone Gang which existed in Geneva in 1849 and 1850 (see Note 393). Borkheim replied on 12 February and Marx used his letter in his pamphlet to expose Vogt's slanderous fabrications about proletarian revolutionaries. Ever since Marx and Borkheim had been friends. — 441
Page me42.658
†495 The definition of peonage as a concealed form of slavery is given by Marx in Volume One of Capital (see the English edition of 1887, pp. 146-47 and present edition, Vol. 35). — 442
Page me42.658
†496 A reference to Engels' reviews of Volume One of Marx's Capital, of which one was published with Kugelmann's help in Die Zukunft, No. 254 of 20 October 1867,

Supplement (unsigned), while the other, meant for the Rheinische Zeitung, remained unpublished (see Note 523). — 443, 445, 449
Page me42.658
†497 On 18 September 1867 in Manchester there was an armed assault on a police van in order to free Thomas Kelly and Michael Deasy, two Fenian leaders (see Note 257) who had been arrested after the suppression of the armed uprising of February and March 1867 organised by Fenians. Kelly and Deasy managed to escape but during a clash a police officer was killed and mass arrests followed. From 1 to 23 November a trial of the arrested Fenians was held in Manchester in the course of which false evidence and other disgraceful methods were used by the prosecution. In spite of all the efforts by the counsels for the defence, primarily by Ernest Jones, five Fenians were sentenced to death. One of them (Thomas Maguire) was subsequently pardoned; the death sentence of another (Condon), an American citizen, was commuted to life imprisonment; the other three (Michael Larkin, William Allen and Michael O'Brien) were hanged on 23 November.
Page me42.658
During the investigation of the case and the trial, the General Council of the International organised, on Marx's initiative, a broad campaign of the English workers in support of the Irish national liberation movement (see this volume, pp. 460, 464). — 444, 460, 463, 466, 476, 479, 483
Page me42.658
†498 There is no further evidence about the letter which Engels intended to write to Carl Siebel. — 445

Page Break me42.659
Page me42.659
†499 The Bill on Freedom of Movement and Settlement was submitted on 3 October 1867 and passed by the North German Reichstag on 22 October. This was one in the series of legislative acts that were passed by the Reichstag from 1867 to 1870 with the aim of eliminating the obstacles to capitalist development in Germany that had been inherited from the period of feudal dismemberment. On 21 October 1867 in the debates on the bill Wilhelm Liebknecht proposed to abolish certain police obstacles to freedom of movement that remained in force. — 445
Page me42.659
†500 A reference to extradition treaties which were concluded between various states and became especially widespread in the latter half of the 19th century. — 446
Page me42.659
†501 The German-language weekly in London How Do You Do? published abusive allusions to Marx's family connection with the Prussian Minister of the Interior, Ferdinand von Westphalen (Jenny Marx's stepbrother). On 19 August 1851 Marx went with Ferdinand Freiligrath and Wilhelm Wolff to the editorial office of the paper and demanded satisfaction of the publisher Louis Drucker and the editor Heinrich Bettziech (Beta) (see present edition, Vol. 38, p. 432). — 447
Page me42.659

†502 A reference to the Illustrierte Familien-Kalender which had been published by A.H. Payne in Leipzig annually, since 1857. The article by Heinrich Bettziech (Beta) 'Die Deutschen in London' was published there. — 447
Page me42.659
†503 In his letter to Marx of 20 September 1867 a German émigré in New York, A. Nahmer, offered to translate into English Volume One of Capital. Marx asked some of his friends if they knew anything about Nahmer but none of them did, so he did not reply. — 447, 450
Page me42.659
†504 In his letter of 8 October 1867 Wilhelm Liebknecht informed Marx that he and another Reichstag deputy, Reincke, intended to table the proposal that a commission should be appointed for inquiry into the workers' condition in Prussia. To substantiate this proposal Liebknecht wanted to acquaint himself with the powers of similar commissions in England and asked Marx to send him the relevant legislative acts.
Page me42.659
Marx sent him the following acts: An Act for Facilitating in Certain Cases the Proceedings of the Commissioners appointed to make Inquiry respecting Trades Unions and other Associations of Employers or Workmen which had been passed by the British Parliament on 5 April 1867, and An Act to Extend the 'Trades Union Commission Act, 1867' which had been passed on 12 August 1867. — 448, 456, 489
Page me42.659
†505 A reference to the letter that Ludwig Kugelmann wanted to send to Sigismund Borkheim. Kugelmann wrote about this to Marx on 13 October 1867 asking for Marx's opinion of his intention to persuade Borkheim to refrain from extensively advertising his published speech at the Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom since Marx's opponents claimed that Marx was the virtual author of this speech, which could damage his prestige as a serious researcher and the author of Volume One of Capital. — 449
Page me42.659
†506 In his letter of 7 October 1867 addressed to Jenny Marx, Johann Philipp Becker told Marx about his strained circumstances, which was why he contemplated giving up his post as Chairman of the Central Committee of the German-language sections in Geneva and leaving the Vorbote editorial board.

Page Break me42.660
With the help of his friends Becker managed to cope with the difficulties and continue his public activity. — 450
Page me42.660
†507 On 14 October 1867, in the discussion in the North German Reichstag of the bill on the abrogation of the anti-coalition legislation which had been submitted by Schulze-Delitzsch, Schweitzer made a long demagogical speech. Although he did support the bill, he held a Lassallean stance denying the importance of strikes and coalitions in the workers' struggle against capitalist exploitation. He also made an attempt to expound some tenets of Marx's political economy but he did so in a primitive and distorted way. A report on Schweitzer's speech was published in Der Social-Demokrat, Nos. 122 and 123 of 16 and 18 October 1867. — 450
Page me42.660

†508 The reference is probably to clippings from the Hermann which carried reports of the London committee for raising money for Freiligrath (see Note 422), in particular from the final address of the committee published in No. 459 of 19 October 1867. On this clipping which has been preserved among his papers Marx wrote a saying widespread in the Rhineland: 'If that's not champion drivel, I don't know what is.' — 454
Page me42.660
†509 Engels wrote the review of Volume One of Marx's Capital for The Fortnightly Review much later, in May and June 1868. As can be seen from their subsequent correspondence, Marx and Engels exchanged opinions several times on the content and form of the article.
Page me42.660
In spite of Professor Beesly's request, the review was rejected by the editorial board and has only been preserved in manuscript form (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 455, 457, 463, 466, 512, 516, 518, 524, 526, 532, 533, 545, 555, 560, 583
Page me42.660
†510 In his letter to Marx of 14 October 1867 Eccarius told him that he and his family were hard-up. For his active work for the International he had been black-listed by his employers and was out of work.
Page me42.660
For Becker's difficult financial circumstances see Note 506. — 455
Page me42.660
†511 On 26 May 1849, in the discussion of the drafts for an Appeal to the German people in the Frankfurt National Assembly, W. Wolff made a vivid speech exposing the enemies of the revolution and the indefinite conciliatory stand of the liberals and moderate democrats. He described the Imperial Regent, Archduke John, as the betrayer of the people. The chairman hurriedly called him to order. — 456
Page me42.660
†512 On 17 October 1867, during a discussion of the conscription bill in the North German Reichstag, Liebknecht, Bebel and others proposed that the standing armies should be abolished and the arming of the people substituted for them. In his speech Liebknecht described the North German Reichstag as 'the fig-leaf of absolutism'.
Page me42.660
In the course of a discussion of the coalition bill in the North German Reichstag on 19 October 1867 (see Note 507), Liebknecht, Bebel and others submitted an amendment to Section 2 of the bill which would entitle the employer to hire workers of any trade and in any numbers; the amendment also proposed that Section 2 should not abrogate the laws on the limitation and protection of child labour at factories. The amendment was adopted by the Reichstag. — 456
Page me42.660
†513 After Venetia was annexed to the Kingdom of Italy in 1866, the unification of the country would be completed if the Papal States were to be incorporated.

Page Break me42.661
Garibaldi was the initiator of the struggle for their annexation. At first Victor Emmanuel's government turned a blind eye to his preparations for a march on Rome, but it suddenly arrested Garibaldi on the eve of the march. However, his volunteers did invade the Papal States and the patriots in Rome began to prepare an uprising against the Pope. On 18 October 1867, the government of Napoleon III promised its assistance to Pius IX and with this aim in view began to prepare an expeditionary corps to be sent to Italy. When Garibaldi (he escaped from under arrest on 14 October) and his men were on the approaches to Rome, the French corps sailed off for Italy and on 30 October marched into Rome. It was only with the help of the French interventionist forces that the Papal army was able to defeat Garibaldi's volunteers at Mentana on 3 November 1867. The Roman question remained unsettled till 1870. — 457, 459, 468, 496

Page me42.661
†514 The laws of primogeniture and entail — feudal inheritance laws that were still in force in Britain in the 19th century. In accordance with them, the title and land were to be inherited by the elder son without the right of alienation. — 458
Page me42.661
†515 A reference to the letter to Marx from the secretary of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 150) Carl Speyer of 6 October 1867. Speyer thanked Marx, on behalf of the society, for sending Volume One of Capital. — 459
Page me42.661
†516 Atheistic societies of freethinkers became very active in Britain in the 1860s. Considerable influence on this movement was exercised by Charles Bradlaugh and other bourgeois radicals who grouped round The National Reformer and disseminated reformist ideas among the workers. In October 1867 a group of freethinkers, who thought the influence of Bradlaugh and those who were close to him burdensome, decided to convoke a conference in order to create a Central Association of Freethinkers for purely atheistic propaganda. Marx was also invited to join the preparatory committee for the conference but he declined the proposal. — 459
Page me42.661
†517 Marx ironically uses here Karl Vogt's expression from his book Mein Prozeß gegen die Allgemeine Zeitung, Geneva, 1859 (see K. Marx, Herr Vogt, present edition, Vol. 17, p. 72). — 459
Page me42.661
†518 The Franco-Italian agreement of 15 September 1864 guaranteed the inviolability of the Papal States and envisaged the withdrawal of the French forces brought there during the revolution of 1848-49 in Italy. In the autumn of 1867, when Garibaldi's detachments invaded the Papal States (see Note 513), secret negotiations for a revision of the September 1864 agreement began between the Kingdom of Italy and France, which, however, came to nothing. In connection with these negotiations Bismarck gave instructions in October 1867 to the Prussian ambassador to Florence, Count of Usedom, ordering him to maintain an observer's attitude in the Franco-Italian conflict and mark time. — 460, 466
Page me42.661
†519 Marx is referring to the meeting between Napoleon III and Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria in Salzburg on 18 August 1867. Napoleon III tried to negotiate an agreement with Austria directed against Prussia and Russia. However, due to the mutual distrust of the parties and Austria's unwillingness to get into a new conflict with Prussia, the agreement was not concluded. — 460
Page me42.661

†520 A reference to the letter which was written by Dupanloup on 15 September 1867, on the anniversary of the Franco-Italian agreement of 15 September

Page Break me42.662

1864, guaranteeing the inviolability of the Papal States to the Italian Prime Minister Rattazzi calling upon him to fight Garibaldi's movement for their annexation to Italy. In a few days the letter was published in La Gazette de France and soon afterwards as a separate booklet entitled Lettre á M. Rattazzi, président du conseil des ministres du roi d'Italie, sur les enterprises de Garibaldi, Paris, 1867. — 460

Page me42.662

†521 The meeting of the Reform League's Council (see Note 155) on 23 October 1867 discussed a letter of the Chairman of the League, Edmond Beales in which he vigorously condemned the Fenian movement. George Odger and Benjamin Lucraft, trade union leaders and members of the League's Council, objected to its publication and sympathised with the Irish liberation movement. This was the effect of the internationalist influence exercised by Marx and his close followers in the General Council of the International on trade union leaders. However, at subsequent meetings of the League's Council, those on 30 October and 1 November, Odger and Lucraft, under pressure from bourgeois radicals, renounced their former stance announcing that they had been misunderstood. — 460

Page me42.662

†522 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in K. Marx, F. Engels, Ireland and the Irish Question, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1971. — 461, 463, 467, 474, 483, 505, 549

Page me42.662

†523 It is obvious from Kugelmann's correspondence as well as from Engels' letters to Marx of 10 November and 12 December (see this volume, pp. 470, 498) that Kugelmann sent this second review of Volume One of Capital to Heinrich Bürgers, a former member of the Communist League and an editor of the Rheinische Zeitung. Bürgers refused to publish it saying in his reply to Kugelmann of 4 November 1867 that, in his opinion, this work was purely academic and unfit for practical purposes of agitation. Bürgers believed that the level of the workers' consciousness was quite low and that therefore they were unable to understand Capital; he also disputed the idea expressed in the review by Engels that Capital would become the 'theoretical Bible' of the Social-Democratic Party. — 462, 469, 471

Page me42.662

†524 On 1 November 1867, Moustier, the Foreign Minister of France, sent the Italian government a Note to the effect that the French government could by no means agree to the Italian intervention in the Papal States. On 4 November the French newspaper La Presse carried a report claiming that Napoleon III had given an ultimatum to the Italian government demanding the withdrawal of its troops from the Papal States. However, next day the report was refuted. — 462

Page me42.662

†525 On All Saints' Day, 1 November 1867, a demonstration of supporters of Italy's independence and French republicans took place at Montmartre Cemetery in Paris. Wreaths were laid on the graves of the Italian patriot Daniele Manin and the French republican Godefroy Cavaignac. The police arrested some of the demonstrators. — 462

Page me42.662
†526 A reference to the joint statement which was made by Russia, France, Prussia and Italy and sent to the Turkish government on 29 October 1867. The statement called upon Turkey to put an end to the violence against the population of Crete perpetrated by the Turkish troops who were suppressing the national liberation uprising (see also Note 460). — 465
Page me42.662
†527 This note by Marx and the postscript from his daughter Laura were written on Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 6 November 1867. — 470

Page Break me42.663
Page me42.663
†528 In looking for ways to publish reviews of Volume One of Marx's Capital, Ludwig Kugelmann applied for help to the lawyer Ernst Warnebold who, as it turned out later, was one of Bismarck's informers, and the National-Liberal Johannes Miquel; both of them were prejudiced against proletarian revolutionaries. — 471, 482
Page me42.663
†529 Engels' review of Volume One of Capital which was written for the Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt has not been found.
Page me42.663
The review for the Düsseldorfer Zeitung, was published unsigned, with Carl Siebel's assistance, in No. 316 of 16 November 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 471, 529, 532, 534, 536, 537
Page me42.663
†530 The Barmer Zeitung of 6 December 1867 carried a short review by Carl Siebel of Volume One of Capital, signed 'S'. Engels' review, which he had given to Siebel, was sent by Siebel, judging by his letter to Engels of 13 November 1867, not to the Barmer Zeitung but to the Rhein- und Ruhrzeitung in Duisburg. Its text has not been found. — 471
Page me42.663
†531 The original of this letter, which was written by Marx on the copy of Volume One of Capital that he presented to Carl Siebel, is now not in the possession of the Institute of Marxism-Leninism. — 472
Page me42.663
†532 A reference to the letter to Marx, dated 24 October 1867, from Joseph Dietzgen, a German self-taught philosopher then living in St. Petersburg and working at a tannery. He spoke highly of Marx's merits both before science and the working class and wrote about the deep impression Volume One of Capital had made on him and about his acquaintance with some of the earlier works by Marx, particularly A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy. In his letter Dietzgen also outlined the basis of his own materialist world outlook. The letter was the beginning of a friendship between its author and Marx and Engels.
Page me42.663
From Solingen Marx received a letter from Karl Klein dated 8 November 1867; he informed Marx about the activities of the local section of the International. — 473, 497

Page me42.663
†533 On 16 October 1859 John Brown, a fighter for the emancipation of the Negroes in the United States, made an attempt to start a slave uprising. With a small detachment of his supporters he captured the state armoury in Harpers Ferry, Virginia. Brown's attempt to engage more people in the uprising failed. Almost all the participants in the uprising (22 people, five of whom were Negroes) who put up a stiff resistance to the government forces were killed. Brown and five of his comrades were executed. — 474
Page me42.663
†534 In 1840, during an abortive attempt to carry out a coup d'état in Boulogne, Louis Bonaparte shot and wounded a government army officer. — 474
Page me42.663
†535 Enclosed with his letter of 19 November 1867, Otto Meissner sent Marx two clippings (from unidentified newspapers) with new notices on the publication of Volume One of Capital. One of the notices enumerated the main points of the volume, the other gave an excerpt from Engels' review of Volume One that had been published in Die Zukunft, No. 254 (Supplement) of 30 October 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 475
Page me42.663
†536 The first notice by Otto Meissner on the publication of Volume One of Marx's Capital was published in the Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel und die mit ihm verwandten Geschäftszweige, No. 214 of 14 September 1867. Meissner's notice about Engels' pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German

Page Break me42.664
Workers' Party was also published in this newspaper, No. 27 of 3 March 1865. — 475
Page me42.664
†537 Appended to the pamphlet containing Wilhelm Liebknecht's speech in the North German Reichstag on 30 September 1867 (see Note 486) was a report of his speeches before workers in Berlin on 14 and 15 October which had been published in Die Zukunft, No. 242 (Supplement) of 16 October 1867. In these speeches Liebknecht said that to put forward the social question in the given situation was inexpedient because premature attempts to solve it could, in his opinion, only serve to strengthen the absolute monarchy and delay the victory of socialist principles.
Page me42.664
In his letter to Marx of 23 November 1867, Ludwig Kugelmann criticised Liebknecht's point of view, emphasising that in practice this would give such people as the Lassallean Schweitzer and the conservative Wagener complete control over the social issue and the possibility of using it for demagogical aims. — 477, 479, 488, 492, 499
Page me42.664
†538 A reference to the German workers' newspaper Demokratisches Wochenblatt which appeared in Leipzig from January 1868 and was edited by Liebknecht. Initially the newspaper was to some extent influenced by the petty-bourgeois People's Party; however, thanks to the assistance given it by Marx and Engels it soon came to play an active part in the development of the proletarian movement in Germany, spreading the ideas of the International and promoting the preparations for forming the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 477, 479, 484

Page me42.664
†539 In his letter to Marx of 27 November 1867, Victor Schily informed him about Moses Hess' favourable opinion of Capital and the latter's intention to write an article about it for Le Courrier français. Schily also wrote about Hess' offer to translate, together with Elysée Reclus, Volume One of Capital into French and to publish it. Marx who attached great importance to the publication of Capital in French and saw this in particular as an important weapon against the influence of Proudhon's delusions (see this volume, p. 368) did not object to Reclus' participation in the French edition. However, the discussion which lasted for almost three years came to nothing. Later on, when it became clear that Reclus was one of the leaders of Bakunin's Alliance of Socialist Democracy, he could no longer be considered as a suitable translator of Capital. The translation of Capital into French which had been done by Joseph Roy and edited by Marx himself was published in Paris in 1872-75 by instalments. — 478, 483, 488, 490, 528, 532, 533, 580
Page me42.664
†540 This was written by Marx on Kugelmann's letter to Engels of 25 November 1867. — 482
Page me42.664
†541 The letter was published in English for the first time in the Labour Monthly, No. 11, London, 1932. — 484
Page me42.664
†542 A reference to the address entitled 'The Fenian Prisoners at Manchester and the International Working Men's Association' which was written by Marx and approved by the special meeting of the General Council on 20 November 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 21). The document which was sent to the Home Secretary Gathorne-Hardy became an important part of the campaign organised by Marx in the autumn of 1867, for solidarity of the English workers with the Irish national liberation movement. The immediate aim of the address was to prevent the execution of the Fenians on whom the Manchester court had passed the death penalty (see Note 497). — 485

Page Break me42.665
Page me42.665
†543 At the meeting of the International's General Council of 5 November 1867 Peter Fox announced his intention of leaving his post as corresponding secretary for America and take a paid job at The Bee-Hive Newspaper. Hermann Jung, chairman of the meeting, condemned Fox's intention. Fox sent a letter to the next meeting which was held on 12 November reaffirming his resignation and accusing Jung of his alleged wish to remove Englishmen from the Council. All those present at the meeting supported Jung. — 485
Page me42.665
†544 The draft resolution that had been proposed by Peter Fox read: 'That this meeting desires that a settled peace and amity between the British and the Irish nations should be substituted for the war of seven hundred years between Englishry and Irishry; and with a view to that end this meeting exhorts the friends of Irish nationality to bring their cause before the British people and advises the latter to accord an unprejudiced hearing to the arguments advanced on behalf of Ireland's right to autonomy' (The General Council of the First International. 1866-1868. Minutes, Progress Publishers, Moscow, p. 181). The draft was referred to the Standing Committee for consideration and for that reason it had not been adopted by the General Council. — 486

Page me42.665
†545 The Corn Laws, which imposed high import duties for corn in Great Britain and which had been introduced in order to meet the interests of large landowners, were repealed in 1846.
Page me42.665
From 1845 to 1847 a grievous famine blighted Ireland due to the ruin of farms and the pauperisation of the peasants, who were cruelly exploited by the English landlords. This had been caused by the almost total failure of the potato crop (potatoes were the principal diet of the Irish peasants). About a million people starved to death and the new wave of emigration caused by the famine carried away another million. As a result, large districts of Ireland were depopulated and the abandoned land was turned into pastures by the Irish and English landlords. — 486
Page me42.665
†546 In 1849 Parliament passed the Encumbered Estates Act for Ireland, which was supplemented with a series of other acts in 1852 and 1853. The Act of 1849 provided for the sale of mortgaged estates by auction if their owners were proved to be insolvent. As a result, the estates of many ruined landlords passed into the hands of usurers, middlemen and rich tenants. — 486
Page me42.665
†547 The reference is probably to the speech by Thomas Francis Meagher at a meeting in Dublin convoked on 15 March 1848 by the Irish Confederation. He said: 'If you do not give us a parliament in which to state our wrongs and grievances, we shall state them by arms and force.' — 486
Page me42.665
†548 The upsurge of the Irish national movement caused by Britain's defeat in the War of Independence of the American colonies, forced the British Parliament in 1782 to pass an act which abolished the right of the British Parliament to pass laws for Ireland and granted this right to the Irish Parliament. The act was once more confirmed in 1783 in the form of a new 'Renunciation Act', which meant Irish autonomy in legislation. However, after the Irish national liberation rising of 1798 had been suppressed, the British government virtually nullified these concessions to Ireland by imposing on it a union with England. The Act of Union which came into force on 1 January 1801 put an end to the remnants of Irish autonomy and abolished the Irish Parliament. One of its consequences was the abolition of the protective tariffs for the emerging Irish industry which had been introduced by the Irish Parliament in the late 18th century; this led to a total decline of the national industry. — 486

Page Break me42.666
Page me42.666
†549 Marx apparently did not make a speech on the Irish question in the General Council as planned. In December 1867, the Council met twice, on the 17th and 31st, and from January 1868, illness prevented Marx from attending the Council meetings for several months. His view of the Irish question, which reflected the position of the revolutionary proletarian wing of the General Council, was set forth in the detailed report he made on 16 December in the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see present edition, Vol. 21). — 487

Page me42.666
†550 A reference to the sections of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital. They are given as chapters VIII, XI, XII, XIII and XXIV in the second and subsequent German editions of this volume, and as chapters X, XIII, XIV, XV and XXVI in the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 490
Page me42.666
†551 A reference to Ludwig Kugelmann's letters to Marx of 23 November and to Engels of 25 November (with enclosed reprints of Kugelmann's note on Volume One of Capital in the Deutsche Volkszeitung) and of 30 November 1867, and to Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter to Engels of 26 November 1867. In seeking to persuade German economists and philosophers to respond to Marx's book, Kugelmann sent reprints of his own and Engels' (from Die Zukunft) reviews of it to Faucher, Schulze-Delitzsch, Dühring, Roscher, Hildebrand and Rau, about which he told Marx in his letter of 23 November 1867. — 492
Page me42.666
†552 Engels' letter to Liebknecht mentioned here has not been found. In his reply to this letter of 11 December 1867, Liebknecht said that he agreed with Engels' remarks on the policy pursued by the working-class representatives in Germany but that he had a different opinion on individual practical questions of agitation. In particular, he explained the reason for the address that he and Bebel had sent to the Vienna City Council by their confidence that Austria was on the eve of a revolution ('She has to experience her own 1789'), which was to have an impact on the whole of Germany. — 492, 499, 503, 504
Page me42.666
†553 On 4 November 1867 Adelaide Macdonald who supported the Fenians made an attempt on the life of a policeman guarding the house of a witness at the Fenian trial in Manchester (see Note 497) who had given evidence against William Allen. She was arrested, put on trial and sentenced to five years' penal servitude. — 492
Page me42.666
†554 With his letter to Marx of 3 December 1867 Ludwig Kugelmann enclosed his correspondence with Heinrich Bürgers (see Note 523). — 493, 498
Page me42.666
†555 Engels fully accepted the draft of a review of Volume One of Capital for Der Beobachter that is being set out here by Marx and also used this letter in writing the review. The review was then published, with Kugelmann's assistance, in Der Beobachter, No. 303 of 27 December 1867, unsigned (see present edition, Vol. 20).
Page me42.666
The passage Marx mentions here is in a special additional note to Section 1 of Chapter VI in the first German edition of Volume One of Capital, at the end of the book. Marx deleted this note when preparing the second German edition (1872). — 494
Page me42.666
†556 In his letter to Marx of 26 November 1867, Wilhelm Liebknecht told him that he had the opportunity to make use of several German newspapers such as Die Zukunft, Volkszeitung (Hanover), Oberrheinischer Courier (Freiburg im Breisgau), Neue Baseler

Zeitung, Correspondent (Leipzig), Süddeutsche Presse and Deutsche Arbeiterhalle (Mannheim). — 495

Page Break me42.667
Page me42.667
†557 A reference to No. 139 of Der Social-Demokrat of 29 November 1867 with its two supplements which carried a detailed report about the general meeting of the General Association of German Workers on 24 November 1867. Among the speakers was one of the publishers of Der Social-Demokrat, the Lassallean J.B. von Hofstetten, who included in his speech passages from Capital distorting their meaning and naming neither the work nor its author. Marx responded to this with an article, 'Plagiarism', which was published unsigned in Die Zukunft, No. 291 (Supplement) of 12 December 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 20).
Page me42.667
The mentioned letter of Marx to Guido Weiß, the editor of Die Zukunft, has not been found. — 495, 496
Page me42.667
†558 A reference to Section 4 of Chapter III of the first edition of Volume One of Capital. It is given as Chapter VIII of Part III in the second and subsequent German editions and Chapter X of the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 495
Page me42.667
†559 In his letter to Marx of 1 December 1867, Kugelmann asked whether Borkheim could make arrangements through his friend Lothar Bucher for the publication of Engels' review of Volume One of Capital in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. Since the newspaper was a semi-official mouthpiece of the Bismarck government, Kugelmann's offer was unacceptable to Marx and Engels. — 497, 498
Page me42.667
†560 In his letter to Engels of 30 November 1867, Kugelmann asked him to write several reviews of Volume One of Capital by Marx. Kugelmann was going to arrange for their publication with the help of Lieutenant-Colonel Seubert, a writer and an official of the Württemberg War Ministry, to whose daughter he was giving treatment. Seubert promised his assistance in getting the reviews published in such newspapers as Der Beobachter, Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg and Schwäbischer Merkur. For the first two Engels wrote reviews. — 499, 510, 512
Page me42.667
†561 A reference to a legal action of the Schulze & Siebenmark firm against a woman home-worker accused of concealing wool. During the trial which took place in Berlin late in 1867, the employers' shady practices were brought to light: they provided their home-workers with dampened wool that lost weight while being processed, for which the workers were heavily fined by the firm. The case was given great publicity. — 501
Page me42.667
†562 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in the Labour Monthly, No. 11, London, 1932. — 501, 504
Page me42.667

†563 On 13 December 1867 a group of Fenians caused an explosion in Clerkenwell Prison in London, their aim being to free the imprisoned Fenian leaders. The attempt failed, but the blast destroyed several neighbouring houses, a few people were killed and over a hundred wounded. The British bourgeois press took advantage of this to spread slanderous fabrications about the Irish national liberation movement and whip up chauvinistic anti-Irish sentiments among the English population. — 501, 505
Page me42.667
†564 In his letter to Engels of 10 December 1867, Carl Siebel suggested that Otto Meissner should present Friedrich Albert Lange, a well-known philosopher, sociologist and democrat, with a copy of Volume One of Capital by Marx. — 502
Page me42.667
†565 A reference to Marx's report on the Irish question which he made on 16 December 1867 at a meeting of the German Workers' Educational Society in

Page Break me42.668
London (see Note 150); the meeting was also attended by members of other workers' societies of London as well as some members of the General Council. A detailed outline of the report which was written by Marx and a brief handwritten record of it by Eccarius (see present edition, Vol. 21) have come down to us. — 504
Page me42.668
†566 The Customs Union Parliament was the guiding body of the Customs Union which was reorganised after the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 and the signing of a treaty between Prussia and South German states on 8 July 1867. The parliament consisted of members of the North German Confederation's Reichstag and specially elected deputies from the South German states — Bavaria, Baden, Württemberg and Hesse. It was to deal exclusively with problems of trade and customs policy; Bismarck's attempts to widen its jurisdiction met with the stubborn resistance of South German representatives. — 505
Page me42.668
†567 On 6 December 1867 the Bismarck government submitted to the Prussian Chamber of Deputies draft treaties of compensation to be made to the King of Hanover and the Duke of Nassau whose possessions were annexed by Prussia after the 1866 Austro-Prussian war. In order to gain support from the Chamber, the government dismissed the unpopular Minister of Justice Lippe who had given Bismarck active help in carrying out his anti-constitutional measures, and appointed in his place Gerhardt Leonhardt, the former Minister of Justice for Hanover. Bismarck's calculations proved correct: the Prussian Chamber of Deputies approved the compensation treaties, thus sanctioning annexation of Hanover and Nassau. — 506
Page me42.668
†568 A reference to Engels' reviews of Volume One of Capital. Engels intended to send them to Meissner so that he could compose and publish an advertisement of Marx's work. — 507, 509
Page me42.668
†569 Ground rent is dealt with in Volume Three of Capital (present edition, Vol. 37). — 508
Page me42.668

†570 A reference to Jenny Marx's letter to Engels of 23 December 1867 in which she thanked him for the wine he had sent them for Christmas and informed him about the state of Marx's health. She also told Engels about the popularisation of Volume One of Capital in Germany and about his reviews which played an important role in this campaign. — 508
Page me42.668
†571 On 13 November 1867 Carl Siebel wrote to Engels that he had sent Engels' review, which had formerly been intended for publication in the Barmer Zeitung, to another newspaper, whereas he had sent to the Barmer Zeitung a short item on the subject that he had written himself (see Note 530). In another letter to Engels on 20 December 1867 Siebel enclosed a clipping from the Barmer Zeitung with his item, published on 6 December 1867.
Page me42.668
In both letters Siebel suggested that the publication of a review of Volume One of Capital should be arranged in the Kölnische Zeitung with Meissner's assistance; he also named one of the contributors to the paper as a possible author of the review. — 509
Page me42.668
†572 As Jenny Marx told Engels in her letter of 23 December 1867, the Lassallean J.B. von Hofstetten's answer to the article 'Plagiarism' (see Note 557) appeared in Die Zukunft on 18 December. Since 'Plagiarism' had been published anonymously, Hofstetten did not suspect that it had been written by Marx himself and ascribed the authorship to Liebknecht. — 509, 529

Page Break me42.669
Page me42.669
†573 In a letter addressed to Marx's daughter Jenny of 3 January 1868, Liebknecht said that he would like to ask Marx what he thought of his possible removal from Leipzig to Vienna. — 512
Page me42.669
†574 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in the Labour Monthly, Vol. 5, No. 3, London, 1923. — 514
Page me42.669
†575 A reference to the section 'The So-Called Primitive Accumulation' of Chapter VI of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital. This section is given as Chapter XXIV, Part VII of the second and subsequent German editions and Chapter XXVI, Part VIII of the English edition of 1887 (present edition, Vol. 35). — 514
Page me42.669
†576 A reference to the prospects for the distribution of Volume One of Capital in Austria, where an upsurge of the labour and national movement made itself clear in those years. This had been caused by the crisis of the Austrian absolute monarchy aggravated by the defeat of the Habsburgs in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. This situation compelled Austria's ruling circles to reorganise in 1867 the empire into the dual state of Austria-Hungary and introduce a constitution which guaranteed certain bourgeois freedoms and provided for bourgeois reforms. — 515
Page me42.669

†577 A reference to the help Marx gave Liebknecht when he was the London correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, i.e. from 1855 until 1862, when he moved to Berlin. — 515
Page me42.669
†578 After his return from London to Germany in 1862, Wilhelm Liebknecht was at one time a member of the editorial board of the Berlin Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. Initially this was an opposition newspaper but after the formation of Bismarck's government it began to turn into its mouthpiece. When Liebknecht realised this, he left the newspaper. — 516
Page me42.669
†579 Among the papers seized by the French police during the searches in the homes of members of the Paris Administration of the sections of the International late in 1867 was a letter to Murat, a member of the Paris Administration, from Eugéne Dupont, the Corresponding Secretary of the General Council for France, of 23 November 1867. The letter informed the French members of the International about the campaign in support of the Fenian prisoners (see Note 542). The French authorities tried to use this letter to accuse the International of complicity in a Fenian plot. At a trial of the Paris Administration members which took place in March 1868, they were accused of forming an association without the sanction of the authorities. The court declared the Paris Section of the International disbanded and fined the Paris Administration members. — 516, 520
Page me42.669
†580 A reference to the numerous articles by Engels in which he analysed the military operations during the siege and defence of Sevastopol and which were amongst his reports on the Crimean war of 1853-56 (present edition, vols 12-14), and to the series of articles he wrote about the progress of the Austro-Prussian war of 1866, 'Notes on the War in Germany' (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 517
Page me42.669
†581 The expression 'treat like a dead dog' was first used by Gotthold Ephraim Lessing to describe the attitude of some of his contemporaries to Spinoza's philosophy. Hegel mentioned it in the Foreword to the second edition of his Encyklopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse. — 520

Page Break me42.670
Page me42.670
†582 Forestalling the General Council one of whose duties was to prepare the annual congresses of the International, the Paris Administration published in Le Courrier français on 11 December 1867 the programme for the next congress to be held in Brussels. This programme which was markedly Proudhonist in character would take away the congress' attention from urgent issues of the working-class organisation.
Page me42.670
At the General Council meeting of 21 January 1868 the agenda of the Brussels Congress was approved. In spite of the efforts of the Proudhonists, this programme outlined the ways of further consolidating the international workers' organisation on the platform of proletarian socialism. — 520
Page me42.670

†583 Marx was in Berlin from 17 March to 12 April 1861; he discussed starting a joint newspaper in Germany with Lassalle; he also made unsuccessful efforts to restore his Prussian citizenship (see Note 154). — 520, 531
Page me42.670
†584 A reference to the moderate liberal interpretation of the popular demand for the repeal of the Anglo-Irish Union of 1801 which deprived Ireland of the right to have an autonomous parliament (see Note 548). Some of the leaders of the Association of Repealers (i.e. supporters of the abolition of the Union), which had been founded in 1840, such as D. O'Connell regarded agitation for this demand merely as a means to obtain individual privileges for the Irish propertied classes from the British government; they wanted Ireland to be a country with limited self-government within the United Kingdom. A similar stand was taken by their successors, the liberal wing of the Irish national movement in the 1850s and 1860s, in contrast to the Irish radicals — the Fenians — who sought to establish true independence for their country. — 521
Page me42.670
†585 A reference to a copy of a bust of Zeus from Ogricoli which was presented to Marx by Kugelmann. — 521, 578
Page me42.670
†586 A reference to the letter to Engels from Liebknecht of 20 January 1868, in which Liebknecht told Engels that, while sharing his critical attitude towards the petty-bourgeois South-German People's Party and the League of Peace and Freedom, he nevertheless did not believe it possible to break with them for tactical reasons. Liebknecht also informed Engels about the steps he had taken for the popularisation of Volume One of Capital. — 525, 527
Page me42.670
†587 Engels' project was not fulfilled. — 526
Page me42.670
†588 A reference to the letter from Kugelmann to Marx of 17-18 January 1868 with which a letter was enclosed to Marx from a Hungarian writer, Károly Márie Kertbény. In his letter Kugelmann said that Kertbény had seen him in Hanover and showed an interest in the members of the revolutionary movement. Kugelmann asked Marx to tell him what he thought of Kertbény and also to receive a young banker from Hanover, Karl Coppel, who was going to London. Judging by the letter from Kertbény to Marx of 17 January 1868, he wanted to publish in the Leipzig Illustrierte Zeitung a short biographical note about Marx and a portrait of him on the occasion of the release of Volume One of Capital. Kertbény discovered this portrait by chance in the studio of a photographer in Hanover and asked Marx to send biographical details. Kertbény's project was not fulfilled. — 527, 529, 531, 533, 536
Page me42.670
†589 This quotation from The Saturday Review given in English was partly used by Marx in the afterword to the second German edition of Volume One of Capital which appeared in 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 529

Page Break me42.671
Page me42.671

†590 The details from Marx's biography enclosed with this letter are being given according to the copy in Kugelmann's hand. — 530
Page me42.671
†591 A reference to the lectures Marx delivered in the latter half of December 1847 at meetings of the German Workers' Society in Brussels. Early in 1848 he made an attempt to publish in Brussels a work that he had written on the basis of these lectures but was unable to do this because of his expulsion from the country. This work was first published in part as editorials in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on 5-8 and 11 April 1849 under the general heading of Wage Labour and Capital (see present edition, Vol. 9). The publication of the editorials was first interrupted by Marx's temporary departure from Cologne and later because the newspaper ceased to exist.
Page me42.671
The German Workers' Society was founded by Marx and Engels at the end of August 1847 in Brussels, its aim being the political education of the German workers who lived in Belgium and the spread of the ideas of scientific communism among them. With Marx, Engels and their followers at its head, the Society became the legally sanctioned centre rallying the revolutionary proletarian forces in Belgium. Its best activists were members of the Communist League. It ceased to exist soon after the February revolution of 1848 in France when the Belgian police arrested and banished many of its members. — 530
Page me42.671
†592 Marx's pamphlet Lord Palmerston (see present edition, Vol. 12) was first published as a series of articles in The People's Paper, Nos. 77-81, 84-86 of 22 and 29 October, 5, 12 and 19 November and 10, 17 and 24 December 1853, signed by Dr Marx; in part it was published as editorials in the New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3902, 3916, 3930 and 3973 of 19 October, 4 and 21 November 1853 and 11 January 1854.
Page me42.671
Some articles of this series were published in London in 1853 and 1854 in pamphlet form under the headings: Palmerston and Russia and Palmerston and the Treaty of Unkiar Skelessy. — 531
Page me42.671
†593 A reference to Marx's help in publishing the series of articles by Engels The Armies of Europe (see present edition, Vol. 14) in Putnam's Monthly. A Magazine of American Literature, Science and Art in August, September and December 1855; Marx also helped Engels in collecting information on various European armies, in particular the Spanish and the Neapolitan, at the British Museum Library.
Page me42.671
For the articles by Marx and Engels that were published in the New American Cyclopaedia in 1857-60 see present edition, Vol. 18. — 531
Page me42.671
†594 A reference to Chapter III ('The Production of Absolute Surplus-Value') of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital. It is given as Part III in the second and subsequent German editions of Volume One and in the English edition of 1887 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 533
Page me42.671

†595 A reference to the article 'Das Preußische und das Schweizer Heersystem' published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 2 of 11 January 1868. It was based on a series of articles by Karl Grün, 'Armées permanentes ou milices', that had been printed in Les États-Unis d'Europe at the beginning of 1868; the fourth article of the series (published in No. 7 of 16 February) dealt with the South German military system. — 534, 540
Page me42.671
†596 A reference to the territories annexed by Prussia as a result of its victory in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 (see Note 365). — 534, 555

Page Break me42.672
Page me42.672
†597 This letter is written on a form with the letterhead: 'Memorandum from Ermen & Engels to M'. Engels crossed out the words 'Ermen &' and filled in 'Mr Mohr' as the addressee. — 537
Page me42.672
†598 In his letter to Marx on 26 January 1868 from Saint Louis Hermann Meyer told him about the death of Louise Weydemeyer, Joseph Weydemeyer's widow. — 537
Page me42.672
†599 It is not known what happened to this article by Engels (the reference is probably to a review of Volume One of Capital). — 537
Page me42.672
†600 A reference to the conversation between Bismarck and Karl Schurz, a German émigré in the United States who had taken part in the Civil War of 1861-65 and the editor of the newspaper Die Westliche Post, in January 1868 in Berlin. Schurz assured Bismarck that Napoleon III did not enjoy any popularity in America, and should Germany be drawn into a war with France, the United States would not support him. Marx and Engels satirised the earlier period of Schurz' activity in their pamphlet The Great Men of the Exile (see present edition, Vol. 11). — 537
Page me42.672
†601 A reference to the forthcoming marriage between Marx's daughter Laura and Paul Lafargue, whose parents lived in Bordeaux; the wedding was in the early April 1868. — 538, 544, 548, 551
Page me42.672
†602 At Marx's request, Engels wrote a detailed review of Volume One of Capital for the Demokratisches Wochenblatt in the first half of March; it was published in it unsigned, as two articles, in Nos. 12 and 13 of 21 and 28 March 1868 (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 539, 540, 542
Page me42.672
†603 A reference to an article by Moses Hess about Volume One of Capital which he had started as early as November 1867 and intended to publish in the French press (see Note 539). In 1868 for several months, he made attempts to publish it in various papers, including Le Courrier français and Morale indépendante. Its further fate is unknown. — 542
Page me42.672

†604 A reference to newspaper reports of lectures 'The Causes of Modern Trade Crises' read by Wilhelm Eichhoff from February to May 1868 in Berlin. These reports were published in Die Zukunft and the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. In his lectures Eichhoff quoted from Marx's Capital and the Manifesto of the Communist Party by Marx and Engels. — 542, 545
Page me42.672
†605 A reference to a report in The Times of 3 March 1868 that the Russian government had instructed its representatives in Turkey and in the Balkans to make every effort to refrain from conflicts with Turkey. — 545
Page me42.672
†606 Engels sent Marx a letter from an Austrian journalist, W. Angerstein, dated 9 March 1868, in which he invited Engels to become a correspondent of a new workers' newspaper. On 11 March 1868, Angerstein sent a similar letter to Marx whom he invited to contribute to the Viennese newspapers Telegraph and Arbeiter-Zeitung. — 546, 548
Page me42.672
†607 Engels' letter to Liebknecht has not been found. From Liebknecht's reply of 29 March 1868 it follows that his friends and he readily took Engels' advice to use Capital as a basis for the proletarian stance vis-á-vis a new crafts and manufactures code that was being prepared (the same was recommended in his review of Volume One of Capital for the Demokratisches Wochenblatt). When, in the spring of 1869, the North German Reichstag began to discuss the code bill, August Bebel and other working-class deputies, following Engels' advice, resolutely criticised the bill and demanded that several amendments should be introduced into it that would meet the interests of the working class such as a ten-hour working day, the abolition of work on Sundays, the introduction of a factory inspectorate and the workers' right to coalitions. Although all these amendments were rejected by the bourgeois and Junker majority of the Reichstag, the speeches of the working-class deputies on this issue played an important part to unite the revolutionary efforts of the German proletariat. — 546

Page Break me42.673
Page me42.673
†608 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Karl Marx, Pre-capitalist Economic Formations, Lawrence & Wishart, London, 1964. — 547
Page me42.673
†609 This standpoint was expressed by Marx in 1859 in his A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (see present edition, Vol. 29) and also in Volume One of Capital (Vol. 35). — 547
Page me42.673
†610 On 13 March 1868 Sigismund Borkheim informed Marx about Dühring's new book, Die Schicksale meiner socialen Denkschrift für das preussische Staatsministerium, in which he accused Hermann Wagener of plagiarism. — 548
Page me42.673
†611 A reference to Article 11 of the French law on the press a draft of which was submitted to the Corps législatif by a group of deputies, Jean Dollfus included, on 11 February 1868. It was passed on 6 March 1868 and read as follows: 'Any publication in a periodical that may concern a fact of private life shall be an offence which shall be punished with a fine of 500 francs.' — 550, 553

Page me42.673
†612 The publisher of The Irishman, Richard Pigott, and the owner of The Weekly News, Alexander Sullivan, were sentenced in 1867 and 1868 to various terms of imprisonment for the publication of articles in defence of the Fenians. — 550
Page me42.673
†613 This is a quotation from the first German edition of Volume One of Capital (pp. 255 and 565 in the English edition of 1887). — 552
Page me42.673
†614 A reference to the medical school at St Bartholomew's Hospital in London. — 553
Page me42.673
†615 Marx gives below an excerpt from Lex Baiuvariorum, X, 18 — the code of common law of the Germanic tribe of Bavars, dating back to the 8th century. — 553
Page me42.673
†616 Leges barbarorum (laws of the barbarians) — written records of the customary law of various Germanic tribes compiled between the 5th and 9th centuries. — 558
Page me42.673
†617 Engels came to see Marx in London on 1 April 1868 in order to be present at the wedding of Paul Lafargue and Laura Marx; he stayed there till 5 April. — 560
Page me42.673
†618 Straubingers — German travelling journeymen. Marx and Engels applied the name ironically to some participants in the German working-class movement of the time who were connected with guild-based production and displayed petty-bourgeois sectarian tendencies.
Page me42.673
The reference here is to the members of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers. — 566
Page me42.673
†619 In his letter to Ferdinand Lassalle of 28 April 1862 Marx entirely denied the slanderous rumours which had been repeated by Lassalle besmirching the reputation of Johann Philipp Becker, and described him as 'one of the noblest German revolutionaries' (see present edition, Vol. 41, p. 356). — 567

Page Break me42.674
Page me42.674
†620 Confessions — semi-jocular questionnaires that were very popular in England in the 1860s. Filling such questionnaires became a favourite pastime in many families, including Marx's, in which relatives and friends participated. A number of versions of Confessions belonging to Marx came down to us. In this volume an early version is published which dates back to the spring of 1865 when Marx stayed with his uncle Lion Philips in Zalt Bommel (Holland). It is somewhat different from the other two versions: the handwritten one included in the album of his daughter Jenny (a facsimile of it is published in this volume) and the one written in Laura Marx's hand. The latter version partly coincides with the one that is being published here and partly with the one in Jenny's album, except for the answer to the question: 'Your favourite flower — Laurel' (instead of 'Daphne').

Page me42.674
Major divergencies between the version published here and the one in Jenny's album are given in the footnotes. — 567
Page me42.674
†621 A substantial extract from this letter was published by Johann Philipp Becker in Der Vorbote, Jg. 1, No. 2 of February 1866 (present edition, Vol. 20). — 568
Page me42.674
†622 A reference to a reprint of the first 1848 German edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party made in London probably in 1865: 'Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei. Veröffentlicht im Februar 1848. London, Druck von R. Hirschfeld, English and foreign Printer, 1848, 24 S'. — 571
Page me42.674
†623 Jenny Marx is recalling the meeting to celebrate an anniversary of the International that was held on 28 September 1865. Marx was present at it with his daughters. Speeches alternated with musical performances, singing and dancing. — 571
Page me42.674
†624 A reference to Jenny Marx's last trip to Trier in 1856 when she went to see her dying mother. Then she stayed in Germany from 22 May to approximately 10 September 1856. — 579
Page me42.674
†625 A reference to the letter to Marx from Card (Jósef Cwierczakiewicz) of 10 January 1868 in which he offered to translate Capital into French (see this volume, p. 528). — 580
Page me42.674
†626 This is an allusion to the explosion in Clerkenwell Prison in London which was caused by a group of supporters of the Fenian prisoners in order to free them on 13 December 1867 and also to the hanging of three Fenians in Manchester on 23 November 1867 who had been captured in an armed assault on a police van in order to release the arrested Fenian leaders (see Notes 563 and 497). — 582

Page Break me42.675

NAME INDEX

A

Page me42.675
Abercorn, James Hamilton, Duke of (1811-1885) — Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1866-68 and 1874-76). — 461, 463, 464
Page me42.675
Acland, Sir Thomas — British radical, member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League in the 1860s. — 464
Page me42.675

Adams, Charles Francis (1807-1886) — American diplomat and politician, Republican, US envoy to London (1862-68). — 49
Page me42.675
Adolf (1817-1905) — Duke of Nassau (1839-66), Grand Duke of Luxembourg (1890-1905). — 506
Page me42.675
Aeschylus (525-456 B.C.) — Greek dramatist. — 568
Page me42.675
Alaux, Jules Émile (1828-1903) — French journalist. — 338, 340
Page me42.675
Alcott, Louisa May (1832-1888) — American author of popular novels for young people. — 370
Page me42.675
Alexander I (1777-1825) — Emperor of Russia (1801-25). — 282
Page me42.675
Alexander II (1818-1881) — Emperor of Russia (1855-81). — 38, 223, 282, 290, 374, 379
Page me42.675
Alexander of Macedon (Alexander the Great) (356-323 B.C.) — general and statesman. — 290
Page me42.675
Allen — English physician, doctor of the Marx family. — 24, 51, 180, 183, 231, 233, 261, 262, 281, 283, 510
Page me42.675
Allen, William Philip (1848-1867) — Irish Fenian, sentenced to death by an English court and executed. — 474, 483, 492, 506
Page me42.675
Andral, Gabriel (1797-1876) — French physician, professor of pathology and therapy, author of works on medicine. — 26
Page me42.675
Anne (1665-1714) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1702-14). — 487
Page me42.675
Anneke, Carl Friedrich Theodor (1818-1872) — former Prussian artillery officer; member of the Communist League, a founder of the Cologne Workers' Association (1848); lieutenant-colonel in the Baden-Palatinate revolutionary army (1849); after the defeat of the revolution emigrated to Switzerland and later to the USA; fought in the Civil War as colonel of the Northern Army. — 40
Page me42.675
Anrooij, Antonie Johannes Wouters van (1816-1893) — husband of Karl Marx's cousin Henriette Sophie Philips, physician in Zalt-Bommel. — 48

Page Break me42.676
Page me42.676
Anrooij, Henriette Sophia van (Jettchen) (née Henriette Sophie Philips) (1825-1902) — Karl Marx's cousin, daughter of Lion Philips, wife of Antonie van Anrooij. — 48
Page me42.676

Arago, Dominique François Jean (1786-1853) — French astronomer, physicist and mathematician, republican politician. — 27
Page me42.676
Arminius (Hermann) the Cheruscan (17 B.C.-A.D. 21) — leader of the resistance of Germanic tribes against Roman rule, annihilated a Roman army in the Teutoburg Woods in A.D. 9. — 373
Page me42.676
Augustus (Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus) (63 B.C.-A.D. 14) — Roman Emperor (27 B.C.-A.D. 14). — 340

Page me42.676
B

Page me42.676
Bacon, Francis, Baron Verulam, Viscount St. Albans (1561-1626) — English philosopher, naturalist and historian. — 388
Page me42.676
Baer, Wilhelm (d. 1872) — German chemist and physicist. — 27
Page me42.676
Baines, Sir Edward (1800-1890) — English economist, Liberal M.P. (1859-74). — 158
Page me42.676
Bakunin, Mikhail (1814-1876) — Russian revolutionary and writer; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; one of the ideologists of Narodism and anarchism in later years; opposed Marxism in the First International. — 18, 19, 140, 150, 420, 434, 577, 582
Page me42.676
Balzac, Honoré de (1799-1850) — French novelist. — 348, 568
Page me42.676
Bamberger, Ludwig (1823-1899) — German democratic journalist; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; émigré in France in the 1850s, in 1866 returned to Germany; later National-Liberal. — 518, 581
Page me42.676
Bangya, János (Johann) (1817-1868) — Hungarian journalist and army officer; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary, after its defeat Kossuth's emissary abroad, and at the same time secret police agent; later served in the Turkish army under the name of Mehemed Bey. — 118, 176, 191
Page me42.676
Barnett — banker in Liverpool; went bankrupt in 1866. — 281, 284
Page me42.676
Bauer, Bruno (1809-1882) — German idealist philosopher, Young Hegelian; author of works on the history of Christianity; radical; National-Liberal after 1866. — 549
Page me42.676
Bauer, Edgar (1820-1886) — German journalist; Young Hegelian; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; Prussian official after the 1861 amnesty. — 53, 166, 299
Page me42.676

Beales, Edmond (1803-1881) — English lawyer, radical; President of the British National League for the Independence of Poland; supported the Northerners during the US Civil War; President of the Reform League (1865-69). — 60, 92, 93, 109-10, 158, 300, 519

Page me42.676
Beauregard, Pierre Gustave Toutant (1818-1893) — American general, took part in the war against Mexico (1846-48); commanded Southern troops during the US Civil War. — 21, 123
Page me42.676
Bebel, August (1840-1913) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; turner; President of the Union of German Workers' Associations from 1867; member of the First International, deputy to the Reichstag (from 1867); a founder and leader of German Social-Democracy; fought Lassalleanism; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 348, 492, 515
Page me42.676
Beck, John — English railway worker; witness for the prosecution at the Fenian trial in Manchester in November 1867. — 462
Page me42.676
Becker, Bernhard (1826-1891) — German journalist and historian; follower

Page Break me42.677
of Lassalle; President of the General Association of German Workers (1864-65), subsequently sided with the Eisenachers; delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872). — 3, 15, 30, 33, 36, 51, 57, 58, 65, 68, 75, 82, 90, 104, 114, 135, 139, 140, 152, 154, 158, 161, 165, 170, 174, 175-76, 179, 191, 203, 205, 532, 548, 566
Page me42.677
Becker, Hermann Heinrich ('Red Becker') (1820-1885) — German lawyer and journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; from 1850 member of the Communist League; one of the accused at the Cologne Communist trial (1852), sentenced to five years' imprisonment; member of the Party of Progress in the 1860s; later National-Liberal; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (1862-66), then of the Reichstag (1867-74). — 52, 53, 56, 75, 80, 94
Page me42.677
Becker, Johann Philipp (1809-1886) — German revolutionary, participant in the democratic movement in Germany and Switzerland (1830s-40s) and in the 1848-49 revolution; organiser of the International's sections in Switzerland and Germany, delegate to the London Conference (1865) and all congresses of the International; editor of Der Vorbote (1866-71); friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 30, 163, 190, 191, 202, 207, 213-15, 219, 221, 314-15, 358, 425, 428, 434, 450, 456, 548, 567, 568, 571-72, 577, 580-82
Page me42.677
Beesly, Edward Spencer (1831-1915) — British historian and politician; radical, Positivist; professor at London University; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International at St Martin's Hall on 28 September 1864; took an active part in the movement for the electoral reform (1867); in 1870-71 supported the International and the Paris Commune; was on friendly terms with Marx. — 55, 60, 162, 185, 283, 291, 407, 423, 433, 455, 512, 516, 518

Page me42.677
Beethoven, Ludwig van (1770-1827) — German composer. — 571
Page me42.677
Béluze, Jean Pierre (1821-1908) — French petty-bourgeois socialist; cabinet-maker; follower of Cabet; director of the Crédit du Travail bank (1862-68); one of the founders of L'Association, organ of the co-operative movement; member of the International; subsequently left the working-class movement. — 118
Page me42.677
Bender, H. — bookseller in London, publisher of the Londoner Anzeiger (1864-67), organ of the German refugees. — 50, 63, 66, 81, 114, 130, 133-34, 214, 447
Page me42.677
Benedek, Ludwig von (1804-1881) — Austrian general, Commander-in-Chief of the Austrian army during the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 256, 263, 279, 288, 510, 517, 523
Page me42.677
Bennigsen, Rudolf von (1824-1902) — German politician, advocate of Germany's unification under Prussia's supremacy; President of the National Association (1859-67); from 1867 leader of the National-Liberal Party (Right wing). — 276, 340, 361
Page me42.677
Berghaus, Heinrich (1797-1884) — German geographer and cartographer. — 28
Page me42.677
Berndes — German democrat, in the 1860s refugee in London. — 151
Page me42.677
Bernstorff, Albrecht, Count von (1809-1873) — Prussian diplomat, envoy to London (1854-61), Foreign Minister (1861-62), ambassador to London (1862-73). — 355
Page me42.677
Beta — see Bettziech, Heinrich
Page me42.677
Bettziech, Heinrich (pen-name Beta) (1813-1876) — German democratic journalist; a refugee in London; follower of Gottfried Kinkel. — 336, 447, 450
Page me42.677
Beust, Friedrich Ferdinand, Count von (1809-1886) — Saxon and Austrian statesman, adherent of independence of small German states; held several

Page Break me42.678
ministerial posts in the Saxonian Government (1849-66); Foreign Minister (1866-71) and Chancellor (1867-71) of Austria-Hungary. — 207, 349, 435
Page me42.678
Beust, Friedrich von (1817-1899) — former Prussian army officer; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising (1849), emigrated to Switzerland; member of a section of the International in Zurich; professor of pedagogics; participant in the Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva (1867). — 433
Page me42.678

Bille, Carl Steen Andersen (1828-1898) — Danish journalist and politician; liberal; editor and owner of the Dagbladet (1851-72); member of the lower chamber of the Rigsdag. — 6
Page me42.678
Biscamp (Biskamp), Elard — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated after the defeat of the revolution; member of the editorial board of Das Volk, organ of the German refugees in London published with Marx's collaboration. — 135
Page me42.678
Bismarck-Schönhausen, Otto, Prince von (1815-1898) — statesman of Prussia and Germany, diplomat; representative of Prussia in the Federal Diet in Frankfurt am Main (1851-59); ambassador to St Petersburg (1859-62) and Paris (1862); Prime Minister of Prussia (1862-71 and 1873-90); Chancellor of the North German Confederation (1867-71) and of the German Empire (1871-90). — 7, 38, 53, 69, 71, 75-76, 77, 82, 83, 89, 95, 96, 102-05, 111, 113, 124, 126, 161, 169, 179, 182, 201, 204, 208, 211, 217, 226, 229, 254, 255-57, 258, 263-67, 270, 272, 275, 278, 280, 281, 285, 288, 292-94, 296, 297, 302, 303, 306-07, 328, 338, 339, 340, 345, 349, 351, 352-55, 361, 364, 372, 373, 374, 380, 417, 421, 426, 435, 456, 460, 461, 462, 466, 480, 494, 498, 505, 506, 523, 537, 545, 560, 566
Page me42.678
Blackburn, Colin, Baron (1813-1896) — English judge. — 462, 466
Page me42.678
Blanc, Jean Joseph Louis (1811-1882) — French petty-bourgeois socialist, historian; in 1848 member of the Provisional Government and President of the Luxembourg Commission; pursued a policy of conciliation with the bourgeoisie; emigrated to England in August 1848; a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees in London. — 32, 33, 55, 270, 420, 429
Page me42.678
Blank, Emil — Frederick Engels' nephew, son of Karl Emil Blank. — 11, 337
Page me42.678
Blank, Karl Emil (1817-1893) — German merchant; closely connected with socialist circles in the 1840s-50s; married Frederick Engels' sister Marie. — 11, 77, 79
Page me42.678
Blank, Marie — Frederick Engels' niece, daughter of Karl Emil Blank. — 11, 313
Page me42.678
Blind, Friederike (née Ettlinger) — Karl Blind's wife. — 31, 34, 35, 274
Page me42.678
Blind, Johann Adam — Karl Blind's father, owner of a tavern in Mannheim. — 33, 41
Page me42.678
Blind, Karl (1826-1907) — German democratic journalist; took part in the revolutionary movement in Baden (1848-49); in the 1850s-early 1860s, a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in London; later National-Liberal. — 27, 30, 31-38, 41-43, 44-46, 50-52, 56-57, 72, 78, 91, 97, 102, 107, 110, 115, 119, 120, 126, 129, 131, 134, 151, 182, 237, 273-74, 275, 278, 286, 380, 447, 518-19, 567, 581
Page me42.678

Blind, Mathilde (née Cohen) (1841-1896) — English translator, author and poet; Karl Blind's adopted daughter. — 35
Page me42.678
Blum, Babette (c. 1791-1865) — Karl Marx's paternal aunt. — 194
Page me42.678
Bobczynski, Konstanty (b. 1817) — participant in the Polish uprising of

Page Break me42.679
1863; then emigrated to London; member of the General Council of the International (1865-68), Corresponding Secretary for Poland (May-September 1866); took part in the London Conference (1865); left for Birmingham in 1866. — 217, 250
Page me42.679
Boelling, Friedrich (1816-1884) — German merchant; husband of Frederick Engels' sister Hedwig. — 11, 260
Page me42.679
Böhme, Jacob (1575-1624) — German handicraftsman; pantheist philosopher. — 476, 497
Page me42.679
Bolleter, Heinrich — German refugee in London; owner of a restaurant where workers' meetings took place; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; member of the Central Council of the International (November 1864 to 1865), took part in the London Conference (1865). — 130, 278
Page me42.679
Bölzig, von — captain of the Prussian Guards regiment. — 374, 426
Page me42.679
Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me42.679
Bonaparte, Eugéne Louis Jean Joseph (1856-1879) — Napoleon III's son, got the title of Imperial Prince at his birth. — 418
Page me42.679
Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul (1822-1891) — son of Jérôme Bonaparte, cousin of Napoleon III; assumed the name of Jérôme after his elder brother's death (1847); known under the nicknames of Plon-Plon and the Red Prince. — 76, 108, 208, 555

Page me42.679
Borchardt, Louis — German physician, Engels' acquaintance in Manchester. — 6, 20, 38, 63, 115, 116, 127, 534, 555
Page me42.679
Borkheim, Sigismund Ludwig (1826-1885) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, emigrated after its defeat; London merchant from 1851; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels. — 113, 140, 284, 350, 389, 394, 397, 401, 417, 419, 432-33, 435-36, 437, 439-43, 445-46, 447, 448-49, 450, 452-53, 457, 476-77, 478, 484, 491, 497, 501, 513, 515-16, 519, 520, 526, 527, 539, 548, 552, 578, 581
Page me42.679
Boustrapa — see Napoleon III

Page me42.679
Bowring, Sir John (1792-1872) — British politician, linguist and man of letters; follower of Bentham; Free Trader, big colonial official in the 1850s. — 571
Page me42.679
Bradlaugh, Charles (1833-1891) — English journalist and radical politician; editor of The National Reformer. — 239, 459, 464
Page me42.679
Brass, August (1818-1876) — German journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to Switzerland; from the 1860s supported Bismarck; publisher of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung; National-Liberal. — 373, 394, 516
Page me42.679
Breitschwert, Otto Ludwig (pseudonym L. Otto) (1836-1890) — German journalist; member of the Central Council of the International (1864), Corresponding Secretary for Spain (1866). — 50
Page me42.679
Brentano, Lorenz Peter (1813-1891) — Baden lawyer, democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; head of the Baden Provisional Government (1849); after defeat of the Baden-Palatinate uprising emigrated to Switzerland, then to the USA. — 35
Page me42.679
Bridges, John Henry (1832-1906) — English positivist philosopher; physician; contributed to The Commonwealth. — 283
Page me42.679
Briggs, John (1785-1875) — British general; was in the service of the East India Company (1801-35); Free Trader; author and translator of works on India and Persia. — 550
Page me42.679
Bright, John (1811-1889) — English

Page Break me42.680
manufacturer and politician, a leader of the Free Traders and co-founder of the Anti-Corn Law League; leader of the Left wing of the Liberal Party from the early 1860s, held several ministerial posts. — 15, 18, 44, 47, 71, 74, 130, 212, 253, 374
Page me42.680
Bronner, Eduard — German physician; democrat; deputy to the Baden Constituent Assembly (1849); emigrated to England; supporter of Karl Blind. — 32, 33, 41, 44, 51
Page me42.680
Brown, John (1800-1859) — American farmer; took part in the Abolitionist movement, organised armed struggle against slave-owners in Kansas; tried to raise an uprising of Black slaves in Virginia in 1859; was put on trial and executed. — 474
Page me42.680
Bruhn, Karl von (b. 1803) — German journalist; member of the Communist League, expelled from it in 1850; supported the Willich-Schapper group; editor of the Nordstern, a Lassallean paper in Hamburg (1861-66). — 26, 57, 116, 117-18, 130, 135, 165
Page me42.680

Bucher, Lothar (1817-1892) — Prussian official and journalist; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848; refugee in London, subsequently National-Liberal and supporter of Bismarck. — 30, 53, 166, 202, 350, 352, 497, 498, 566
Page me42.680
Büchner, Ludwig (1824-1899) — German philosopher and naturalist, vulgar materialist; liberal; member of the International, delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867); participant in the Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva (1867). — 367-68, 433, 469
Page me42.680
Buol-Schauenstein, Karl Ferdinand, Count von (1797-1865) — Austrian statesman and diplomat; envoy to St Petersburg (1848-50) and to London (1851-52), Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs (1852-59). — 54
Page me42.680
Bürgers, Heinrich (1820-1878) — German journalist; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; member of the Communist League, from 1850 member of its Central Authority; one of the accused at the Cologne Communist trial; later supported the Party of Progress; National-Liberal; editor of the Rheinische Zeitung in Düsseldorf. — 112, 207, 221, 430, 471, 493, 498, 502, 529
Page me42.680
Burns, Lizzie (Lizzy, Lydia) (1827-1878) — Irish working woman, took part in the Irish national liberation movement; Frederick Engels' second wife. — 27, 53, 67, 91, 99, 148, 158, 160, 177, 179, 181, 185, 193, 194, 205, 206, 208, 228, 237, 251, 254, 269, 283, 291, 301, 311, 341, 344, 357, 362, 374, 386, 389, 391, 394, 399, 408, 448, 455, 479, 495, 508, 517, 521, 559
Page me42.680
Burns, Robert (1759-1796) — Scottish poet, democrat. — 91
Page me42.680
Burton — English house owner. — 343
Page me42.680
Butler, Benjamin Franklin (1818-1893) — American politician and general; a leader of the Left wing of the Republican Party; during the Civil War commanded the expeditionary Northern Army at the capture of New Orleans, military governor of New Orleans (1862). — 199

Page me42.680
C

Page me42.680
Caesar (Gaius Julius Caesar) (c. 100-44 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman. — 185, 558
Page me42.680
Card, Ioseph (Cwierczakiewicz, Jósef) (1822-1869) — participant in the 1863 Polish uprising; journalist; émigré in Geneva; member of the International; co-editor of the Journal d'Association Internationale des Travailleurs; delegate to the Geneva Congress (1866). — 528, 532, 533, 580

Page me42.680
Carey, Henry Charles (1793-1879) —

Page Break me42.681
American economist; advocated harmony of class interests in capitalist society. — 513, 514, 536, 544, 548
Page me42.681
Carnarvon, Henry Howard Molyneux Herbert, Earl of (1831-1890) — British statesman; Conservative; Minister for Colonies (1866-67 and 1874-78). — 459
Page me42.681
Carnot, Lazare Hippolyte (1801-1888) — French journalist and politician; member of the Provisional Government (1848); after 1851 a leader of the republican opposition to the Bonapartist regime. — 47
Page me42.681
Carpenter, William Benjamin (1813-1885) — English naturalist and physiologist. — 571
Page me42.681
Carrére — French émigré in London; professor of mathematics, physics and chemistry. — 304
Page me42.681
Catiline (Lucius Sergius Catilina) (c. 108-62 B.C.) — Roman patrician, formed a conspiracy against aristocratic republic. — 185
Page me42.681
Cavaignac, Louis Eugéne (1802-1857) — French general and politician, moderate republican; took part in the conquest of Algeria; War Minister of France from May 1848; directed the suppression of the June 1848 uprising; head of the executive (from June to December 1848). — 429
Page me42.681
Chassepot, Antoine Alphonse (1833-1905) — French military inventor. — 426
Page me42.681
Chaucer, Geoffrey (1340-1400) — English poet. — 246
Page me42.681
Cicero (Marcus Tullius Cicero) (106-43 B.C.) — Roman orator and statesman; philosopher. — 136
Page me42.681
Clarendon, George William Frederick Villiers, Earl of, Baron Hyde (1800-1870) — British statesman, Whig, later Liberal; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1847-52), Foreign Secretary (1853-58, 1865-66 and 1868-70). — 282
Page me42.681
Classen-Kappelmann, Johann (c. 1817-1879) — Cologne manufacturer, town councillor in Cologne; member of the Party of Progress in the 1860s. — 182, 185, 229
Page me42.681
Clauren, Heinrich (literary pseudonym Carl Heun) (1771-1854) — German writer, author of sentimental novels. — 513
Page me42.681
Clément, Knut Jungbohn (1809-1873) — German historian and linguist, professor at Kiel University. — 8

Page me42.681
Cluseret, Gustave Paul (1823-1900) — French politician and military figure, took part in the Crimean war (1853-56), Garibaldi's campaigns in Italy (1860) and in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners, became general; member of the International, sided with Bakuninists; military delegate of the Paris Commune (April 1871), after its suppression emigrated to Belgium. — 496, 508, 520, 523
Page me42.681
Cobden, Richard (1804-1865) — English manufacturer and politician; a leader of the Free Traders and co-founder of the Anti-Corn Law League, M.P. — 18, 74
Page me42.681
Cohen — banker, first husband of Friederike Ettlinger (Blind by second marriage). — 31, 35
Page me42.681
Cohen, Ferdinand (c. 1842-1866) — German student, Karl Blind's stepson; in 1866 made an unsuccessful attempt on Bismarck's life, committed suicide in prison. — 35, 272, 273-74
Page me42.681
Colcraft — a man who executed Irish Fenians Allen, Larkin and O'Brien in Manchester in 1867. — 474
Page me42.681
Collet, Collet Dobson — English radical journalist, editor and publisher of The Free Press (1856-65) and from 1866 of The Diplomatic Review. — 54, 370, 434
Page me42.681
Colleville de — representative of the League of Peace and Freedom in London. — 420

Page Break me42.682
Page me42.682
Collins, William Wilky (1824-1889) — English writer. — 336
Page me42.682
Comte, Isidore Auguste François Marie (1798-1857) — French philosopher and sociologist, founder of positivism. — 292
Page me42.682
Connolly, Thomas — member of the Bricklayers' Society in the 1860s, reformist, member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League. — 154
Page me42.682
Contzen, Karl Wilhelm — German economist, follower of Roscher; lecturer at Leipzig University in the 1860s. — 477, 489, 527, 539
Page me42.682
Cotta, Bernhard von (1808-1879) — German geologist. — 28
Page me42.682
Cowper, William Francis, Baron Mount-Temple (1811-1888) — British statesman, M.P., held several posts in Liberal ministries. — 374
Page me42.682
Cremer, William Randall (1838-1908) — active participant in the British trade-union and pacifist movement, reformist; a founder of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (1860); member of the London Trades Council, the British National League for the Independence of Poland, the Land and Labour League; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International at St Martin's Hall on 28 September 1864, member of the General Council of the International and its General Secretary (1864-66), took part in the London Conference (1865), Geneva Congress (1866) of the International; member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League; later Liberal M.P. — 15, 16, 17, 55, 73, 130, 131, 148, 149, 158, 173, 249, 250, 252, 301, 314, 318, 424, 464, 519

Page me42.682
Crespelle (or Crespel) — member of the French branch of the International in London where he upheld the Central Council's policy; member of the General Council of the International (1866-67). — 214, 216
Page me42.682
Cromwell, Oliver (1599-1658) — leader of the English Revolution, Lord Protector of England, Scotland and Ireland from 1653. — 486
Page me42.682
Cuvier, Georges Léopold Chrétien Frédéric Dagobert, baron de (1769-1832) — French naturalist, author of works on comparative anatomy, paleontology and the classification of animals. — 322, 323, 558
Page me42.682
Cuza (Cusa), Alexander (1820-1873) — Romanian politician; as Alexander Johann I, Hospodar (1859-66) of the Danubian principalities, Moldavia and Wallachia, which formed a united Romanian state in 1862; was removed from power as a result of a reactionary plot (1866) and emigrated. — 256

Page me42.682
D

Page me42.682
Dante, Alighieri (1265-1321) — Italian poet. — 568
Page me42.682
Darwin, Charles Robert (1809-1882) — English naturalist, founded the theory of natural selection. — 127, 136, 304, 322, 323, 327, 494, 558, 571
Page me42.682
Davis, Jefferson (1808-1889) — American politician, Democrat, big planter; took part in the US war against Mexico (1846-48); Secretary of War (1853-57); an organiser of the Southern slave-holders' revolt; President of the Confederate States of America (1861-65). — 123
Page me42.682
Deasy, Michael — a Fenian leader, in 1867 was arrested in Manchester and released by his supporters. — 474
Page me42.682
Dell, William — participant in the British workers' and democratic movement; interior decorator; member of the British National League for the Independence of Poland; took part in the inaugural meeting of the International at St Martin's Hall on 28 September 1864; member of the General Council of the International

Page Break me42.683
(1864-69) and its Treasurer (1865, 1866-67); took part in the London Conference (1865); a leader of the Reform League. — 93, 110, 317
Page me42.683
Demuth, Helene (Lenchen) (1820-1890) — housemaid and devoted friend of the Marx family. — 63, 309, 376
Page me42.683
Denis, Chateaugiron de — French journalist. — 218, 223
Page me42.683
Denis, Hector (1842-1913) — Belgian politician. — 213, 223
Page me42.683
Denoual, Jules — French democrat; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International at St. Martin's Hall on 28 September 1864; member of the Central Council of the International (1864-65). — 140
Page me42.683
De Paepe, César (1841-1890) — Belgian socialist; compositor, subsequently physician; a founder of the Belgian section of the International (1865), member of the Belgian Federal Council, delegate to the London (1865) Conference, Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868), Basle (1869) congresses, and to the London (1871) Conference of the International; following the Hague Congress (1872) supported the Bakuninists for some time; a founder of the Belgian Workers' Party (1885). — 191, 203-04
Page me42.683
Derby, Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, Earl of (1799-1869) — British statesman, Tory leader, subsequently a leader of the Conservative Party; Prime Minister (1852, 1858-59 and 1866-68). — 369, 374, 394, 474
Page me42.683
Descartes (Latin: Cartesius), René (1596-1650) — French philosopher, mathematician and naturalist. — 435
Page me42.683
Dickson — English army officer; a leader of the Reform League in the 1860s. — 464
Page me42.683
Diderot, Denis (1713-1784) — French philosopher of the Enlightenment, atheist, leader of the Encyclopaedists. — 34, 568
Page me42.683
Dietzgen, Joseph (1828-1888) — active participant in the German and international working-class movement; philosopher who independently arrived at dialectical materialism; member of the International, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), leather-maker. — 473, 476, 497
Page me42.683
Diogenes, Laertius (3rd cent.) — Greek historian of philosophy, compiled a large work on the ancient philosophers. — 373
Page me42.683
Disraeli, Benjamin, Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-1881) — British statesman and writer, Tory leader, later leader of the Conservative Party, Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852, 1858-59 and 1866-68), Prime Minister (1868 and 1874-80). — 48, 282, 300, 458, 468
Page me42.683

Dollfus — family of Alsace big cotton manufacturers. — 552-53
Page me42.683
Dollfus, Jean (1800-1887) — Alsace manufacturer; philanthropist; Mayor of Mulhouse. — 550, 552
Page me42.683
Dönniges, Franz Alexander Friedrich Wilhelm von (1814-1872) — German historian and diplomat; Bavarian envoy to Switzerland (1862-64). — 12
Page me42.683
Dönniges, Helene von (1845-1911) — daughter of Friedrich Wilhelm Dönniges; wife of the Romanian nobleman Racowita. — 12, 19, 31, 162, 211
Page me42.683
Dresemann — editor of the Düsseldorfer Zeitung in the 1860s. — 133
Page me42.683
Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German journalist; 'true socialist'; later member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; supporter of Marx and Engels, subsequently withdrew from politics and took up commerce. — 140, 148, 158, 175, 198, 281, 284, 398, 399, 434, 438, 446
Page me42.683
Dubois, L. — French journalist, socialist. — 420
Page me42.683
Duchinski, Franciszek (1817-1893) — Polish historian and ethnographer;

Page Break me42.684
refugee in Paris after the 1830-31 uprising; author of several works on the history and ethnography of Poland and Eastern Slavs. — 163, 164, 305
Page me42.684
Duller, Eduard (1809-1853) — German poet and historian, author of historical novels. — 27
Page me42.684
Duncker, Franz Gustav (1822-1888) — Berlin publisher and politician, member of the Party of Progress; founder and editor of the Volks-Zeitung. — 328, 382, 384, 395, 543
Page me42.684
Duncker, Friedrich Wilhelm August (b. 1797) — Prussian official, Police Superintendent in Berlin in the 1840s. — 299
Page me42.684
Duncker, Max (1811-1886) — German historian, professor in Halle and then in Tübingen; from 1859 Prussian government official; director of the Prussian state archives (1867-74). — 27
Page me42.684
Dunning, Thomas J. (1799-1873) — British trade unionist and journalist, reformist; leader of the bookbinders' union; member of the London Trades Council. — 159
Page me42.684
Dupanloup, Félix Antoine Philibert (1802-1878) — French politician; a leader of the Catholic party; Bishop of Orleans (from 1849). — 434, 460
Page me42.684

Dupleix, François — French refugee in Switzerland; bookbinder; a founder and president of the French section of the International in Geneva; delegate to the London Conference (1865), Geneva (1866) and Lausanne (1867) congresses. — 190, 214, 215, 315
Page me42.684
Dupont, Eugéne (c. 1831-1881) — active participant in the French and international working-class movement; musical instrument maker; took part in the June (1848) uprising in Paris; from 1862 on lived in London; member of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872), Corresponding Secretary for France (1865-71), took part in the London Conference (1865), Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867) (its Chairman), Brussels (1868), and the Hague (1872) congresses, London Conference (1871); associate of Marx and Engels; joined the British Federal Council of the International (1872); moved to the USA in 1874. — 140, 144, 149, 196, 250, 318, 334, 416, 428, 516, 520

Page me42.684
E

Page me42.684
Eccarius, Johann Georg (John George) (1818-1889) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; tailor; member of the League of the Just and later of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (1864-72) and its General Secretary (1867-71), Corresponding Secretary for America (1870-72), delegate of all congresses and conferences of the International; follower of Marx; in the spring of 1872 joined reformist leaders of the British trade unions. — 4, 15-17, 50, 74, 84, 90, 91, 101, 106, 107, 108, 114, 134, 150, 152, 163, 215, 219, 224, 249, 252-53, 255, 262, 314, 315, 339, 394, 416, 418, 420, 422, 423, 425, 428, 429, 433, 434, 438, 455, 456, 462, 519, 552
Page me42.684
Eckardt, Ludwig (1827-1871) — Austrian democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Austria and Germany, emigrated to Switzerland; in 1865, a leader of the German People's Party and editor of the Deutsches Wochenblatt; opposed Germany's unification under Prussia's supremacy; returned to Austria in 1867. — 198, 204
Page me42.684
Egli, Johann Jakob (1825-1896) — Swiss geographer and teacher. — 28, 188

Page Break me42.685
Page me42.685
Eichhoff, Albert — German publisher, brother of Karl Wilhelm Eichhoff — 542, 545
Page me42.685
Eichhoff, Karl Wilhelm (1833-1895) — German socialist, journalist; in 1859 exposed Stieber as a police spy in the press and was brought to trial for this; refugee in London (1861-66); member of the First International from 1868, and one of its first historians; member of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party from 1869. — 152, 175, 178, 284, 349, 542, 545

Page me42.685
Einhorn — see Horn, Eduard (Ignácz)
Page me42.685
Eisenbart, Johann Andreas (1661-1727) — German physician; prototype of the quack 'Doctor Eisenbart' in German folklore. — 457
Page me42.685
Elcho, Francis Wemyss Charteris Douglas, Lord (1818-1914) — British politician, Conservative M.P., opposed electoral reform in the 1860s. — 300
Page me42.685
Elizabeth I (1533-1603) — Queen of England (1558-1603). — 486
Page me42.685
Enfantin, Barthélemy Prosper (1796-1864) — French utopian socialist, a disciple of Saint-Simon. — 218
Page me42.685
Engel, Ernst (1821-1896) — German statistician, director of the Royal Prussian Statistical Bureau in Berlin (1860-82). — 157, 361
Page me42.685
Engels, Elisabeth Francisca Mauritzia (née van Haar) (1797-1873) — Frederick Engels' mother. — 11, 192, 248, 261, 481
Page me42.685
Engels, Emil (1828-1884) — Frederick Engels' brother. — 312-13
Page me42.685
Engels, Emma (née Croon) (b. 1834) — wife of Hermann Engels, Frederick Engels' brother. — 11
Page me42.685
Engels, Hermann (1822-1905) — Frederick Engels' brother. — 9-11, 247-48, 480-81
Page me42.685
Engels, Rudolf (1831-1903) — Frederick Engels' brother. — 11, 61-62
Page me42.685
Ermen, Anton Gottfried (1807-1886) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 248, 261, 481
Page me42.685
Ermen, Franz Julius (b. 1840) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 168
Page me42.685
Ermen, Gottfried, Peter Jakob (1811-1899) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 129, 192, 248, 260, 285, 363, 364, 381, 439, 451, 457, 481
Page me42.685
Ermen, Peter (Pitt) Albertus Ermen (1800-1889) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 260
Page me42.685
Eulenburg, Friedrich Albrecht, Count von (1815-1881) — Prussian statesman and diplomat, Minister of the Interior (1862-78). — 302
Page me42.685

Eves, Charles — author of popular school textbooks (mid-19th cent.). — 246
Page me42.685
Eynern, Ernst von (1838-1906) — German businessman and politician. — 546, 548
Page me42.685
Eyre, Edward John (1815-1901) — British official, Governor of Jamaica (1864-66), suppressed Negros' uprising in 1865. — 208

Page me42.685
F

Page me42.685
Fallmerayer, Jakob Philipp (1790-1861) — German historian and traveller. — 548
Page me42.685
Faucher, Julius (Jules) (1820-1878) — German economist and writer, Young Hegelian; advocate of free trade; refugee in England from 1850 till 1861 when he returned to Germany; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies; member of the Party of Progress; National-Liberal from 1866. — 104, 444, 467, 473, 490
Page me42.685
Favre, Jules Gabriél Claude (1809-1880) — French lawyer and politician; a leader of the bourgeois republican opposition from the late 1850s; deputy to the Corps législatif (1860s); Foreign Minister (1870-71); together with Thiers headed the struggle against the Paris Commune; among others, inspired the struggle against the First International. — 290, 429

Page Break me42.686
Page me42.686
Fazy, Jean Jacob (James) (1794-1878) — Swiss statesman and journalist; radical; head of government of the Geneva Canton (1846-53 and 1855-61); founder of the Swiss State Bank; pursued a pro-Bonapartist policy. — 63, 158, 185, 237
Page me42.686
Fellner, Karl Konstanz Viktor (1807-1866) — German merchant and politician, last burgomaster of the free city of Frankfurt am Main (1866). — 299
Page me42.686
Ferdinand II (1810-1859) — King of the Two Sicilies (1830-59), nicknamed King Bomba for his bombardment of Messina in 1848. — 292
Page me42.686
Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas (1804-1872) — German philosopher. — 360, 520
Page me42.686
Fichte, Johann Gottlieb (1762-1814) — German philosopher. — 453
Page me42.686
Fielden, John (1784-1849) — English manufacturer, philanthropist, proponent of factory legislation. — 552
Page me42.686
Figuier, Guillaume Louis (1819-1894) — French naturalist. — 27
Page me42.686

Fontaine, Léon — Belgian journalist; participant in the democratic movement; Central Council's Corresponding Secretary pro tem for Belgium (1865), delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868) of the International. — 144-45, 170-71
Page me42.686
Fontana, Giuseppe P. (1840-1876) — took part in the 1848 revolution in Italy, then refugee; a leader of the Association of Mutual Progress (Mazzini organisation of Italian workers in London); member of the Central Council of the International (October 1864 to 1865); Corresponding Secretary for Italy (1864-65). — 16-18, 110, 115, 140
Page me42.686
Fourier, François Marie Charles (1772-1837) — French utopian socialist. — 287, 326, 559
Page me42.686
Fowler, Thomas (1736-1801) — English pharmacist and physician. — 225
Page me42.686
Fox, Peter (André Peter Fox) (d. 1869) — journalist; active member of the British democratic and working-class movement; Positivist; a leader of the British National League for the Independence of Poland; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (1864-69), General Secretary of the Council (September-November 1866), Corresponding Secretary for America (1866-67); an editor of The Commonwealth (1866), member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League. — 22, 23, 49, 54, 55, 131, 148, 149, 173, 199, 218, 224, 228, 230, 252, 269, 271, 278, 290, 291, 318, 434, 437, 464, 485, 516, 532, 536, 538, 548
Page me42.686
Fraas, Karl Nikolaus (1810-1875) — German botanist and agronomist, professor in Munich. — 507, 510, 548, 559
Page me42.686
Francis II (1836-1894) — King of Naples and Sicily (1859-60). — 292
Page me42.686
Francis Joseph I (1830-1916) — Emperor of Austria (1848-66), Emperor of Austria-Hungary (1867-1916). — 54, 256
Page me42.686
Frankenheim, Moritz Ludwig (1801-1869) — German physicist and philosopher. — 28
Page me42.686
Frederick Charles, Prince of Prussia (1828-1885) — Prussian general, later field marshal-general; during the Danish war (1864) Commander-in-Chief of the Prussian and then Allied armies, commanded First Prussian Army in the Austro-Prussian war (1866). — 8, 39, 121, 256, 263, 279, 365, 523
Page me42.686
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 293, 374
Page me42.686
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German revolutionary poet; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); member of the Communist League (1848-52); during emigration in London (1851-68) withdrew from revolutionary activity. — 32, 33, 63, 72, 97, 151, 164, 185, 202, 208, 229-30, 237, 274, 275, 290, 362, 378, 385, 397, 398, 424, 430, 440, 447, 454, 472, 473, 513, 532, 542

Page Break me42.687

Page me42.687
Freiligrath, Ida (1817-1899) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's wife. — 164, 378, 386, 472
Page me42.687
Freiligrath, Käthe (Kätchen) (1845-1904) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's daughter. — 164, 290, 425, 430
Page me42.687
Frémont, John Charles (1813-1890) — American explorer and politician, belonged to the Left wing of the Republican Party, was nominated for the presidency in 1856; during the Civil War commanded Northern troops in Missouri (till November 1861) and West Virginia (1862). — 51
Page me42.687
Frenzel — a representative of opposition in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies in the 1860s, member of the Party of Progress. — 333
Page me42.687
Freytag, Gustav (1816-1895) — German dramatist and writer. — 28
Page me42.687
Fribourg, Ernest Edouard — active member in the French working-class movement; engraver, subsequently businessman; Right-wing Proudhonist; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall; a leader of the International's Paris section, delegate to the London Conference (1865) and the Geneva Congress (1866); in 1871 published the book L'Association internationale des travailleurs which was hostile to the International and the Paris Commune. — 85, 109, 130, 149, 213, 263, 318
Page me42.687
Friedländer, Max (1829-1872) — German democrat, member of the editorial boards of the Neue Oder-Zeitung and Die Presse, to which Marx contributed in the 1850s-60s; founder and editor of the Neue Freie Presse (1864-72); Ferdinand Lassalle's cousin. — 516
Page me42.687
Friedrich Wilhelm Nikolaus Karl (1831-1888) — Prussian Crown Prince, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany under the name of Frederick III (1888); commanded Second Prussian Army in the Austro-Prussian war (1866). — 279, 340, 510, 523
Page me42.687
Fritzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm (1825-1905) — cigar-maker; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; a founder and leader of the General Association of German Workers; Lassallean; deputy to the North German Reichstag (1868-71); joined the Eisenachers in 1869. — 161
Page me42.687
Fuld, Salomon — lawyer in Frankfurt am Main. — 194
Page me42.687
Funke, Robert — businessman in Liverpool. — 248, 312

G

Page me42.687
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat, chief organiser of the defence of the Roman Republic (April-July 1849), headed the Italian people's struggle for national independence and unification of the country (1850s-60s). — 15, 16, 33-36, 44, 45, 47, 159, 281, 292, 365, 420, 435, 460, 496
Page me42.687
Garnier-Pagés, Louis Antoine (1803-1878) — French politician, moderate republican; in 1848 member of the Provisional Government and Mayor of Paris; during the Second Empire deputy to the Corps législatif (1864-71). — 47
Page me42.687
Garrido y Tortosa, Fernando (1821-1883) — Spanish republican; utopian socialist; author of works on the history of Spain. — 28
Page me42.687
Gathorne-Hardy, Gathorne (1814-1906) — British statesman, Conservative, Home Secretary (1867-68). — 474, 485

Page Break me42.688
Page me42.688
Geffcken, Friedrich Heinrich (1830-1896) — German diplomat and lawyer; Hanseatic envoy to London (1866-69). — 355
Page me42.688
Geib, August (1842-1879) — German bookseller in Hamburg, Social-Democrat; member of the General Association of German Workers; participant in the Eisenach Congress (1869) and a founder of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 495
Page me42.688
Gentz, Friedrich von (1764-1832) — Austrian statesman and writer; adviser and confidant of Metternich; Secretary at the Vienna Congress (1814-15) and congresses of the Holy Alliance. — 478, 520
Page me42.688
George II (1683-1760) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1727-60). — 487
Page me42.688
George V (1819-1878) — King of Hanover (1851-66). — 298, 506, 536
Page me42.688
Gerhardt, Charles Frédéric (1816-1856) — French chemist. — 385, 387
Page me42.688
Giebel, Christoph Gottfried Andreas (1820-1881) — German zoologist and paleontologist. — 28
Page me42.688
Girardin, Émile de (1802-1881) — French journalist and politician; editor of La Presse (1836-66 with intervals) and La Liberté (1866-70); moderate republican during the 1848-49 revolution; deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1850-51); later Bonapartist, notorious for lack of principles in politics. — 418, 424
Page me42.688

Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898) — British statesman, Tory and later Peelite; leader of the Liberal Party in the latter half of the 19th century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852-55 and 1859-66), Prime Minister (1868-74, 1880-85, 1886, 1892-94). — 269, 374
Page me42.688
Glais-Bizoin, Alexandre Olivier (1800-1877) — French lawyer and politician, moderate republican, deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848-49); member of the Corps législatif in the 1860s. — 290
Page me42.688
Gneist, Heinrich Rudolf Hermann Friedrich von (1816-1895) — German lawyer and politician; professor at Berlin University; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (from 1858); representative of the liberal opposition in the early 1860s; National-Liberal from 1866. — 154
Page me42.688
Goegg, Amand (1820-1897) — German democratic journalist, member of the Baden Provisional Government (1849); after the revolution emigrated; took part in pacifist activities of the League of Peace and Freedom; joined German Social-Democracy in the 1870s. — 433, 517, 519, 541, 581, 582
Page me42.688
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 25, 355, 356, 455, 504, 568
Page me42.688
Goltz, Robert Heinrich Ludwig, Count von (1817-1869) — Prussian diplomat, ambassador to Paris (December 1862 to 1869). — 293
Page me42.688
Gorchakov, Alexander Mikhailovich, Prince (1798-1883) — Russian statesman and diplomat; ambassador to Vienna (1854-56), Minister for Foreign Affairs (1856-82). — 506
Page me42.688
Götz (Goetz), Ferdinand (1826-1915) — German physician and politician; in the 1860s member of the Party of Progress and later National-Liberal; deputy to the North German and German Reichstags. — 489
Page me42.688
Gounod, Charles François (1818-1893) — French composer. — 571
Page me42.688
Gracchus, Cornelia — mother of Gaius and Tiberius Gracchus. — 244
Page me42.688
Gracchus, Gaius Sempronius (153-121 B.C.) — tribune (123-122 B.C.) in ancient Rome; stood out for agrarian laws in the interests of the peasants; brother of Tiberius Gracchus. — 244

Page Break me42.689
Page me42.689
Gracchus, Tiberius Sempronius (163-133 B.C.) — tribune (133 B.C.) in ancient Rome; stood out for agrarian laws in the interests of the peasants. — 244
Page me42.689

Grach — wife of Grach, banker in Trier. — 244
Page me42.689
Graff, Eberhard Gottlieb (1780-1841) — German philologist. — 554
Page me42.689
Grant, Ulysses Simpson (1822-1885) — American general and statesman; Republican, took part in the US Civil War (1861-65); from March 1864 Commander-in-Chief of the Northern Army, War Minister (1867-68), President of the USA (1869-77). — 21, 39, 82, 121-123, 153
Page me42.689
Greif — Prussian police officer, a chief of the Prussian secret service in London. — 286
Page me42.689
Grey, Sir George (1799-1882) — British statesman, Whig, Home Secretary (1846-52, 1855-58 and 1861-66) and Secretary for Colonial Affairs (1854-55). — 155
Page me42.689
Griesheim, Karl Gustav Julius von (1798-1854) — Prussian general and military writer. — 303
Page me42.689
Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) — German philologist, author of a historical grammar of the German language and of folklore adaptations; professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin; liberal. — 69, 168, 173, 197, 373, 548, 558
Page me42.689
Groote, Alfred (c. 1815-1878) — German politician and lawyer; member of the Party of Progress; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (1862-66). — 176
Page me42.689
Grossmith, John — took part in the British democratic and working-class movement, member of the Central Council of the International (November 1864 to 1865). — 60
Page me42.689
Grove, Sir William Robert (1811-1896) — English physicist and lawyer. — 138
Page me42.689
Grube, August Wilhelm (1816-1884) — German teacher. — 28
Page me42.689
Grübel — took part in the German working-class movement, member of the Communist League in Hamburg. — 118
Page me42.689
Grün, Karl Theodor Ferdinand (1817-1887) — German journalist; 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s; during the 1848-49 revolution participant in the democratic movement; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly; in 1850-61 émigré in Brussels; professor in Frankfurt am Main (1862-65), took part in the Geneva congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (1867); left for Vienna (1870). — 24, 30, 433, 482, 505, 534, 540
Page me42.689
Guhl, Ernst Karl (1819-1862) — German art critic, professor in Berlin. — 28
Page me42.689
Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874) — French historian and statesman; virtually directed the home and foreign policy of France from 1840 to the February 1848 revolution; expressed the interests of the financial bourgeoisie. — 530
Page me42.689

Gumpert, Eduard (d. 1893) — German physician in Manchester, friend of Marx and Engels. — 12, 27, 30, 56, 63, 72, 78, 107, 117, 157, 177, 178, 194, 225, 227, 230, 231, 233, 235, 236, 238, 266, 281, 283, 284, 289, 294, 304, 324, 332, 344, 378, 382, 418, 446, 503, 510, 517, 524, 528, 555

Page me42.689
H

Page me42.689
Habsburgs (or Hapsburgs) — dynasty of emperors of the Holy Roman Empire from 1273 to 1806 (with intervals), of Austria (1804-67) and of Austria-Hungary (1867-1918). — 258, 263, 300
Page me42.689
Hall — notary in Manchester. — 313
Page me42.689
Hall, Carl Christian (1812-1888) — Danish statesman and politician, lawyer, deputy to the Rigstag, Prime Minister (1857-63). — 183

Page Break me42.690
Page me42.690
Hancock, Ottilie — Karl Blind's daughter by second marriage. — 35
Page me42.690
Handel, George Frederick (1685-1759) — German composer. — 571
Page me42.690
Hansen, N.P. — Danish tailor; member of the General Council of the International (December 1864 to 1867), participant in the London Conference (1865), Corresponding Secretary for Denmark (1866) and for Denmark and Holland (1867). — 274
Page me42.690
Hardee, William Joseph (1815-1873) — American general, took part in the Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Southerners. — 123
Page me42.690
Hardy — see Gathorne-Hardy, Gathorne
Page me42.690
Harkort, Friedrich Wilhelm (1793-1880) — German industrialist and liberal politician; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (till 1867); member of the Party of Progress. — 169
Page me42.690
Harring, Harro Paul (1798-1870) — German radical writer; emigrated in 1828, lived in various countries of Europe and America, including the USA. — 182
Page me42.690
Harrison, Frederic (1831-1923) — British lawyer and historian; radical; Positivist; took part in the democratic movement in the 1860s. — 60, 162, 185, 283, 291, 394, 407
Page me42.690
Harting, Pieter (1812-1885) — Dutch naturalist. — 28
Page me42.690

Hatzfeldt (Hatzfeld), Sophie, Countess von (1805-1881) — friend and supporter of Lassalle. — 5, 12, 19, 20, 24, 26, 30, 31-37, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 53, 56-57, 58, 71, 75, 78, 80, 82, 102, 103, 124, 126, 139, 140, 165, 175, 180, 181, 190, 191, 202, 336, 349, 415, 548, 553, 556
Page me42.690
Haufe, Albert F. — German tailor; lived in London; member of the Central Council of the International (1866). — 274
Page me42.690
Hebel, Johann Peter (1760-1826) — German writer and poet. — 188
Page me42.690
Hecker, Friedrich Karl Franz (1811-1881) — German democrat; a leader of the Baden republican uprising in April 1848, after its defeat emigrated to Switzerland and later to the USA. — 32
Page me42.690
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 138, 184, 185, 232, 258, 292, 370, 376, 382, 385, 387, 388, 395, 453, 464, 513, 520, 522, 544, 556, 558, 568
Page me42.690
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 32, 52, 242, 245, 340, 386
Page me42.690
Heintzmann, Alexis (born c. 1812) — Prussian lawyer; liberal; member of the Committee of Public Safety during the Elberfeld uprising (May 1849), later émigré in London; President of the London group of the National Association (1861). — 151, 447
Page me42.690
Heinzen, Karl Peter (1809-1880) — German radical journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, emigrated to Switzerland, later to England and, in the autumn of 1850, to the USA. — 26, 31, 34, 213, 556
Page me42.690
Held, Friedrich Wilhelm Alexander (1813-1872) — German radical journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; editor of the Berlin radical Staatsbürger-Zeitung. — 211
Page me42.690
Hennessy, John Pope (1834-1891) — Irish politician, M.P., Conservative; in the early 1860s submitted to Parliament several moderate reforms for Ireland. — 486
Page me42.690
Heraclitus (c. 540-c. 480 B.C.) — Greek philosopher, a founder of dialectics. — 129
Page me42.690
Herbert, Auberon Edward William Molyneux (1838-1906) — British philosopher and politician, Liberal M.P. (1870-74); follower of Herbert Spencer. — 459
Page me42.690
Herwegh, Emma (née Siegmund) (1817-1904)

Page Break me42.691
— Georg Herwegh's wife. — 12, 19, 24
Page me42.691

Herwegh, Georg Friedrich (1817-1875) — German democratic poet, in the 1860s supported Lassalle. — 12, 19, 29, 30, 120, 126, 140, 147
Page me42.691
Herzen, Alexander Ivanovich (1812-1870) — Russian revolutionary democrat; materialist philosopher, journalist and writer; left Russia in 1847; from 1852 lived in England where he established Free Russian Press and published the periodical Polyarnaya Zvezda (Polar Star) and the newspaper Kolokol (The Bell). — 213, 552, 577, 582
Page me42.691
Hess, Moses (1812-1875) — German radical writer; one of the chief representatives of 'true socialism' in the mid-1840s; member of the Communist League, after its split belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper group; Lassallean in the 1860s; took part in the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International. — 3, 29, 30, 51, 65, 66, 68, 70, 75, 78, 80, 81, 83, 85, 89, 90, 95, 96, 115, 156, 157, 158, 190, 478, 483, 484, 487, 488, 528, 532, 533, 542, 567, 580
Page me42.691
Hess, Sibylle (née Pesch) (1820-1903) — Moses Hess' wife. — 150, 156
Page me42.691
Heydt, August, Baron von der (1801-1874) — Prussian conservative statesman; Elberfeld banker; Minister of Trade, Industry and Public Works (December 1848 to 1862); Finance Minister (1862, June 1866-October 1869). — 285
Page me42.691
Heywood, Abel (1810-1893) — newspaper- and bookseller, active in the affairs of his native Manchester (Mayor in 1862-63); twice unsuccessful Liberal parliamentary candidate (1859, 1865). — 168
Page me42.691
Hilberg, Arnold — Austrian journalist, publisher and editor of the Internationale Revue. — 216, 229, 464, 484, 516
Page me42.691
Hildebrand (real name Beets, Nicolaas) (1814-1903) — Dutch poet and writer. — 242
Page me42.691
Hildebrand, Bruno (1812-1878) — German economist and statistician; representative of historical school in political economy. — 491-92
Page me42.691
Hill — employee at the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels in the 1850s-60s. — 252
Page me42.691
Hirsch — Moses Hess' relative; contributed to Le Courrier français. — 487
Page me42.691
Hirsch, J.M. — treasurer in Erfurt; publisher of song-books. — 417
Page me42.691
Hoffmann, Ernst Theodor Amadeus (1776-1822) — German writer. — 230, 232, 233
Page me42.691
Höfling, Eugen — German poet. — 113
Page me42.691
Hofmann, August Wilhelm von (1818-1892) — German chemist. — 382, 385
Page me42.691

Hofstetten, Johann Baptist von (d. 1887) — Bavarian army officer; Lassallean; member of the General Association of German Workers (1864-68); publisher and an editor of Der Social-Demokrat (1864-67). — 495, 509, 529
Page me42.691
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 105, 258, 263, 264, 302
Page me42.691
Holloway, Thomas (1800-1883) — English patent-medicine vendor. — 120
Page me42.691
Holtorp, Emile — Polish refugee in London; member of the Central Council of the International (October 1864 to 1866), Corresponding Secretary for Poland (1864-65), delegate to the London Conference of the International (1865), in 1866 joined the International Republican Committee set up by Mazzini. — 217, 278
Page me42.691
Holyoake, George Jacob (1817-1906) — English journalist; prominent figure in the co-operative movement; reformist. — 22, 300

Page Break me42.692
Page me42.692
Hood, John Bell (1831-1879) — American general, took part in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Southerners. — 21, 39, 61
Page me42.692
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 73, 250, 340
Page me42.692
Horn, Eduard (Ignácz) (real name Einhorn) (1825-1875) — Hungarian economist and journalist, democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; from 1855 refugee in Paris; in the 1860s worked in L'Association and other French journals; returned to Hungary in 1869. — 66, 76, 80, 85
Page me42.692
Howell, George (1833-1910) — a reformist leader of the British trade unions; bricklayer; former Chartist; Secretary of the London Trades Council (1861-62), participant in the inaugural meeting of the International on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (October 1864 to 1869), delegate to the London Conference of the International (1865); Secretary of the Reform League. — 158, 224, 250
Page me42.692
Huber, Victor Aimé (1800-1869) — German journalist and historian of literature; Conservative. — 27
Page me42.692
Hübner, Otto (1818-1877) — German economist and statistician; in 1849 founded the Central Statistical Archives in Berlin and became its director. — 421, 422
Page me42.692
Hughes, Thomas (1822-1896) — British politician and writer; Liberal M.P. (1865-74); took part in publishing The Workman's Advocate in the 1860s; author of Tom Brown's School-days (1856). — 206
Page me42.692

Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885) — French writer. — 420
Page me42.692
Hunter, Henry Julian — English physician, author of reports on the workers' dire living conditions. — 301
Page me42.692
Huxley, Thomas Henry (1825-1895) — English naturalist, close associate of Charles Darwin and populariser of his teaching. — 284, 571

Page me42.692
I

Page me42.692
Imandt, Peter Joseph (1823-1897) — German teacher; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, member of the Communist League, emigrated to London in 1852, supporter of Marx and Engels. — 431
Page me42.692
Isabella II (1830-1904) — Queen of Spain (1833-68). — 435
Page me42.692
Izzy — see Lassalle, Ferdinand

Page me42.692
J

Page me42.692
Jacobi, Abraham (1830-1919) — German physician; member of the Communist League, one of the accused at the Cologne Communist trial (1852), acquitted; emigrated to the USA, took part in the Civil War on the side of the Northerners; professor and president of several medical establishments. — 330, 377, 452
Page me42.692
Jacobi, Johann (1805-1877) — German radical journalist and politician; a Left-wing leader in the Prussian National Assembly (1848), in 1862 member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies, founder of Die Zukunft; sided with Social-Democrats in the 1870s. — 374

Page me42.692
Jacobs, Friedrich Christian Wilhelm (1764-1847) — German philologist and historian of ancient literature. — 28
Page me42.692
James, Edward (1807-1867) — British lawyer; Liberal M.P. (1865-67). — 168
Page me42.692
Janison — notary in Manchester. — 313
Page me42.692
John (Johann) (1782-1859) — Archduke of Austria, Imperial Regent of Germany (June 1848-December 1849). — 87

Page me42.692
Johnson, Andrew (1808-1875) — American statesman, Democrat, Senator (1858-62); supporter of the

Page Break me42.693
North in the Civil War; Vice-President (1864-April 1865) and President of the USA (1865-69), pursued a policy of compromise with the Southern planters. — 150, 153, 159, 163, 167, 269, 334, 414
Page me42.693
Johnston, Joseph Eggleston (1807-1891) — American general, during the Civil War commanded Southern troops in Virginia (1861-62), then in Tennessee and Mississippi. — 153
Page me42.693
Jones, Ernest Charles (1819-1869) — prominent figure in the English working-class movement; proletarian poet and journalist; leader of the Left-wing Chartists, took part in the work of the International in the 1860s; an organiser of the Reform movement; friend of Marx and Engels. — 15, 30, 49, 62, 69, 74, 91, 93, 108, 112, 127, 130, 148, 149, 150, 155, 157, 168, 199, 365, 442, 466, 502, 503, 531
Page me42.693
Jones, Mason — British radical, member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League in the 1860s. — 158
Page me42.693
Juch, Hermann — German democratic journalist, refugee in London, editor of the Hermann (from July 1859). — 15, 24, 33, 63, 130, 134, 378, 447
Page me42.693
Jung, Georg Gottlob (1814-1886) — German democratic journalist, Young Hegelian, a publisher of the Rheinische Zeitung, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848. — 8
Page me42.693
Jung, Hermann (1830-1901) — prominent figure in the international and Swiss working-class movement; watchmaker; member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for Switzerland (November 1864 to 1872), Treasurer of the General Council (1871-72), participant in the London Conference (1865), Chairman of the Geneva (1866), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and of the London Conference (1871) of the International; member of the British Federal Council; supported Marx before the Hague Congress of 1872, later joined the reformists of the British trade unions. — 55, 60-61, 131-32, 143, 148-49, 150, 191, 196, 200, 214, 250, 314, 485
Page me42.693
Juta, Johann Carl (1824-1886) — Dutch bookseller in Cape Town, husband of Karl Marx's sister Luise. — 115, 117, 194
Page me42.693
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis) (born c. A.D. 60-died after 127) — Roman satirical poet. — 504

Page me42.693

K

Page me42.693
Kant, Immanuel (1724-1804) — German philosopher. — 453
Page me42.693
Kappell — priest in the German Lutheran Church in London. — 24
Page me42.693
Kaub (Kolb), Karl — German worker; a refugee in London and after 1865 in Paris; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; member of the Central (General) Council of the International (November 1864 to 1865 and 1870-71), participated in the London Conference (1865). — 191, 200, 254, 263
Page me42.693
Kekulé von Stradonitz, Friedrich August (1829-1896) — German chemist. — 387
Page me42.693
Kell — Bradford manufacturer, radical. — 283
Page me42.693
Kelly, Thomas (born c. 1831) — a Fenian leader, in 1867 was arrested in Manchester and released by his supporters. — 474
Page me42.693
Kepler, Johannes (1571-1630) — German astronomer. — 185, 568
Page me42.693
Kertbény, Károly Márie (real name Benkert) (1824-1882) — Hungarian writer, liberal, was in contact with the participants in the 1848-49 revolution. — 527, 529, 531, 533
Page me42.693
Kiesselbach, Wilhelm — German historian and sociologist. — 28
Page me42.693
King, P. St. — bookseller in London. — 401

Page Break me42.694
Page me42.694
Kinkel, Johann Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, sentenced to life imprisonment by the Prussian court, in 1850 escaped and emigrated to London; leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees; opposed Marx and Engels. — 24, 33, 48, 151, 177, 278, 283, 284, 296, 307, 336, 447
Page me42.694
Kirkwood, Daniel (1814-1895) — American astronomer and mathematician. — 184, 186, 187
Page me42.694
Kiss, Miklós (1820-1902) — Hungarian army officer, democrat, refugee, Kossuth's agent in France and Italy. — 208
Page me42.694
Klapka, György (Georg) (1820-1892) — general in the Hungarian revolutionary army (1848-49), emigrated in 1849; maintained contact with Bonapartist circles in the 1850s. — 158
Page me42.694

Klein, Johann Jacob (c. 1818-c. 1896) — Cologne physician; member of the Communist League, one of the accused at the Cologne Communist trial (1852), acquitted; in the early 1860s took part in the German working-class movement. — 112, 462
Page me42.694
Klings, Karl (c. 1825-after 1874) — German metal-worker; member of the Communist League and then of the General Association of German Workers; emigrated to the United States (1865), took an active part in the Chicago section of the International. — 3-4, 15, 20, 30, 51, 58, 75, 80, 82, 135, 152, 337
Page me42.694
Klinke — German worker, refugee in London; member of the International, a leader of the 'Teutonia', a branch of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 150
Page me42.694
Klinker, A. — member of the International, a leader of the 'Teutonia', a branch of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 150
Page me42.694
Knowles, Alfred — cotton-manufacturer in Manchester; went bankrupt in 1868. — 168, 199
Page me42.694
Knox, Alexander Andrew (1818-1891) — English journalist and police magistrate; member of a commission which reported to Parliament in 1867 on the treatment of political prisoners in British prisons. — 300, 394
Page me42.694
Kolatschek, Adolph (1821-1889) — Austrian journalist and politician, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49), democrat; publisher of the Stimmen der Zeit (1858-62) and founder of the newspaper Der Botschafter (1862). — 141, 204
Page me42.694
König — owner of a printing shop in Erfurt. — 417
Page me42.694
Kosel, Esther (c. 1786-1865) — Karl Marx's paternal aunt. — 194, 251
Page me42.694
Kossuth, Lajos (1802-1894) — leader of the Hungarian national liberation movement; head of the revolutionary government (1848-49); after the defeat of the revolution emigrated first to Turkey and then to England and the USA. — 123, 529
Page me42.694
Kriege, Hermann (1820-1850) — German journalist, 'true socialist', founder and editor of the New York newspaper Der Volks-Tribun. — 373
Page me42.694
Kröker, Eduard — German merchant in London, Käthe Freiligrath's husband. — 425
Page me42.694
Kugelmann, Franziska (1858-c. 1930) — Ludwig Kugelmann's daughter. — 360, 381, 395, 396, 450, 490, 497, 521, 522, 529, 544, 579
Page me42.694
Kugelmann, Gertruda (b. 1839) — Ludwig Kugelmann's wife. — 360, 369, 372, 380, 396, 443, 450, 469, 490, 497, 521-22, 529, 579
Page me42.694

Kugelmann, Ludwig (1828-1902) — German physician; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; member of the First International, delegate to the Lausanne (1867) and the Hague (1872) congresses of the International; member of the Social-Democratic

Page Break me42.695
Workers' Party from 1869; friend and regular correspondent of Marx and Engels. — 45, 101, 105, 107, 112, 114, 117, 165, 203, 207, 214, 216, 220-21, 262, 272, 311-12, 325-30, 346-47, 358-62, 365, 366, 369, 371, 372, 376, 379-81, 389, 395, 396, 418, 427, 433, 438, 440-45, 449-50, 458, 461-62, 463, 467-70, 473, 477, 479, 480, 482, 489-93, 495, 496-501, 503, 505, 510, 511, 512, 518, 521-22, 527-29, 531, 536, 543, 551-53, 573-75, 577-79

Page me42.695
L

Page me42.695
Lafargue, François (1806-1870) — Paul Lafargue's father. — 304, 310, 334-35, 395, 396, 502, 503, 542, 553, 579
Page me42.695
Lafargue, Paul (1842-1911) — prominent figure in the international and French working-class movement, member of the General Council of the International, Corresponding Secretary for Spain (1866-69), helped to organise the International's sections in France (1869-70), Spain and Portugal (1871-72), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), a founder of the Workers' Party in France (1879); disciple and associate of Marx and Engels; husband of Marx's daughter Laura. — 246, 250, 281, 283, 287, 303, 304, 307-09, 310, 313, 315, 316, 319, 331, 334, 335, 355, 376, 378, 383, 396, 407, 416, 424, 428, 429, 431, 434, 435, 436, 437, 446, 447, 453, 457, 463, 476, 484, 498, 502, 503, 512, 516, 524, 526, 532, 535, 540, 541, 542, 548, 550, 553, 576, 579
Page me42.695
Lafargue, Virginie (b. 1803) — Paul Lafargue's mother. — 335, 396, 579
Page me42.695
Lama, Domenico — President of the Association of Mutual Progress (Mazzini organisation of Italian workers in London), participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the Central Council of the International (1864-65). — 140
Page me42.695
Lange, Friedrich Albert (1828-1875) — German philosopher, economist, neo-Kantian; member of the Standing Committee of the General Association of German Workers (1864-66), member of the International, delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867). — 116, 119, 127, 135, 138, 502
Page me42.695
Lange, Ludwig (1825-1885) — German philologist and historian of ancient Rome. — 27
Page me42.695

Langiewicz, Maryan Melchior (1827-1887) — a Right-wing leader during the 1863 uprising in Poland; fled to Austria where he was arrested; in 1865 emigrated to England; was in contact with Mazzini's circles in London; later refugee in France and Turkey. — 278
Page me42.695
Lapinski, Theophil (Lapinski, Teofil) (1827-1886) — Polish colonel, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; served in the Turkish army under the name of Tewfik Bey; headed a military expedition to help the Polish insurgents in 1863. — 163
Page me42.695
Laplace, Pierre Simon (1749-1827) — French astronomer, mathematician and physicist. — 184, 187
Page me42.695
Larkin, Michael (d. 1867) — an Irish Fenian, executed in Manchester for taking part in freeing Fenian leaders Kelly and Deasy in the autumn of 1867. — 474, 483
Page me42.695
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German journalist and lawyer, petty-bourgeois socialist; took part in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49); founder of the General Association of German Workers and its first President (1863-64); an initiator of the opportunist trend in the German Social-Democratic movement. — 5, 12, 15, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26, 30-33, 34, 36-38, 41-42, 44, 46, 53, 57-58, 66, 69, 70-71, 75, 77, 78, 80, 81, 87, 88-90, 96, 101-05, 107, 111, 114, 120, 124-27, 129, 134, 147, 158, 161, 165, 175, 176, 181, 190,

Page Break me42.696
211, 266, 278, 282, 329, 379, 415, 417, 447, 493, 494, 516, 520, 526, 527, 532, 536, 548, 566, 567
Page me42.696
Lau, Thaddäus (d. 1871) — German historian and teacher. — 28
Page me42.696
Laurent, Auguste (1807-1853) — French chemist. — 385
Page me42.696
Law, Harriet (1832-1897) — a leading figure in the atheist movement in England, member of the General Council (1867-72) and of the Manchester section of the International (1872). — 396
Page me42.696
Ledru-Rollin, Alexandre Auguste (1807-1874) — French journalist and politician, a leader of the petty-bourgeois democrats, editor of La Réforme; Minister of the Interior in the Provisional Government, deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (1848), where he headed the Montagne Party; emigrated to England after the demonstration of 13 June 1849. — 32, 33-34, 278
Page me42.696
Lee, Robert Edward (1807-1870) — American general, took part in the war against Mexico (1846-48), during the US Civil War commanded Southern troops in Virginia (1862-65), Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate Army (February-April 1865). — 21, 39, 82, 113, 122, 123, 147
Page me42.696

Lefort, Henry (1835-1917) — French lawyer, journalist, republican; member of L'Association's editorial board; took part in the preparations for the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall; dissociated himself from the International in March 1865. — 85, 109, 118-19, 131, 140
Page me42.696
Le Lubez, Victor (b. 1834) — French refugee in London, was connected with republican and radical elements in France and Britain; took part in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the Central Council of the International (1864-66), Corresponding Secretary for France (1864-65), participant in the London Conference of the International (1865); expelled from the Council by the Geneva Congress (1866) for intrigue and slander. — 15-18, 49, 66, 74, 92, 108, 118, 130, 131, 132, 140, 149, 155, 158, 170, 212, 214, 216-18, 250, 318, 519
Page me42.696
Le Prince de Beaumont, Jeanne Marie (1711-1780) — French authoress. — 242
Page me42.696
Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729-1781) — German writer. — 568
Page me42.696
Lessner, Friedrich (1825-1910) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, tailor; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; prosecuted at the Cologne Communist trial in 1852; emigrated to London in 1856; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London and of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872), participant in the London Conference (1865), the Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868), Basle (1869) and the Hague (1872) congresses of the International; member of the British Federal Council; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 94, 118, 229-30, 416, 424, 429, 477, 507, 571
Page me42.696
Levy, Joseph Moses (1812-1888) — English journalist, a founder and publisher of The Daily Telegraph. — 86
Page me42.696
Lewes, George Henry (1817-1878) — English positivist philosopher, journalist, literary critic; editor of The Fortnightly Review (1865-66). — 455, 512
Page me42.696
Lewis, Leon — American journalist; in 1865, in London, was elected member of the Central Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for America, did not take part in the work of the Council. — 162

Page Break me42.697
Page me42.697
Liebieg, Johann, Baron von (1802-1870) — Austrian manufacturer. — 142
Page me42.697
Liebig, Justus, Baron von (1803-1873) — German chemist. — 227, 232, 507
Page me42.697
Liebknecht, Alice (b. 1857) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's eldest daughter. — 202
Page me42.697

Liebknecht, Ernestine (d. 1867) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's first wife. — 52, 80, 134, 176, 202, 262, 272, 370
Page me42.697
Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement; participant in the 1848-49 revolution, member of the Communist League and of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress of the International (1869); deputy to the Reichstag from 1867; a founder and leader of the German Social-Democratic Party; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 12, 22, 24, 25, 26, 30, 52, 53, 58, 65-68, 75, 76, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 88-90, 94, 95, 99, 101, 102, 104, 106, 107-08, 112, 119, 124-26, 129, 134, 139, 140, 141, 152, 160-61, 165, 166, 167, 175-76, 178, 180, 181-82, 189, 191, 198, 201-02, 214, 215, 218-19, 225, 261-62, 271-72, 278, 298, 310, 336, 346, 370, 430, 431, 433, 437, 444, 445, 448, 450, 456, 462, 463, 467, 468, 477, 479, 484, 488-89, 491, 492, 495, 499, 509, 511, 513, 515-16, 518, 522, 526, 527, 529, 534, 538, 539, 540, 542, 546, 552, 556, 565, 566
Page me42.697
Limousin, Charles Mathieu (1840-1909) — French working-class leader; printer, later journalist; follower of Proudhon; Secretary of the Board of L'Association; a leader of the Paris section of the International; delegate to the London Conference (1865), took part in the co-operative movement; published several journals. — 109, 170
Page me42.697
Lincoln, Abraham (1809-1865) — American statesman, a leader of the Republican Party; President of the United States (1861-65); under pressure from the masses carried out a number of bourgeois-democratic reforms during the Civil War, thus making possible the adoption of revolutionary methods of warfare; assassinated by a slave-owners' agent in April 1865. — 10, 44, 48, 49, 51, 70, 73, 80, 86, 122, 150, 153, 161
Page me42.697
Lippe, Leopold, Count zur (1815-1889) — Prussian statesman and lawyer, Public Prosecutor in Berlin (1860); Minister of Justice (1862-67). — 427, 432, 506
Page me42.697
List, Friedrich (1789-1846) — German economist, supporter of Protectionism. — 536
Page me42.697
Livy (Titus Livius) (59 B.C.-A.D. 17) — Roman historian. — 17, 52, 295
Page me42.697
Lizzie — see Burns, Lizzie (Lizzy, Lydia)
Page me42.697
Locke, John (1632-1704) — English philosopher and economist. — 388
Page me42.697
Longstreet, James (1821-1904) — American general, took part in the Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Southerners. — 61
Page me42.697
Longuet, Charles Félix César (1839-1903) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement; journalist; Proudhonist; member of the General Council of the International (1866-67 and 1871-72); Corresponding Secretary for Belgium (1866), delegate to the Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and the Hague (1872) congresses and to the London Conference (1871); member of the Paris Commune; emigrated to England;

subsequently joined the opportunist group of Possibilists; married Marx's daughter Jenny. — 213, 214, 216, 243, 250, 281
Page me42.697
Lormier — acquaintance of Marx's family. — 316, 438
Page me42.697
Lormier, Marie — acquaintance of Marx's family. — 231, 316
Page me42.697
Louis Napoleon — see Napoleon III
Page me42.697
Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orleans, King of the French (1830-48). — 274, 334, 368

Page Break me42.698
Page me42.698
Louis XV (1710-1774) — King of France (1715-74). — 55
Page me42.698
Lucraft, Benjamin (1809-1897) — a reformist leader of the British trade unions; furniture-maker; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (1864-71), delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International; member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League; in 1871 refused to sign the General Council's address The Civil War in France and left the International. — 290
Page me42.698
Ludwig III (1806-1877) — Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt (1848-77). — 298, 302
Page me42.698
Lupus — see Wolff, Wilhelm
Page me42.698
Luther, Martin (1483-1546) — German theologian and writer, prominent figure of the Reformation, founder of Protestantism (Lutheranism) in Germany. — 334
Page me42.698
Lyell, Charles (1797-1875) — English chemist and geologist. — 73, 571

Page me42.698
M

Page me42.698
Macaulay, Thomas Babington, Baron (1800-1859) — British historian and politician, Whig M.P. — 28
Page me42.698
McClellan, George Brinton (1826-1885) — American general, championed a compromise with the Confederacy; Commander-in-Chief of the Northern Army (November 1861-March 1862) and commander of the army on the Potomac (March-November 1862) during the US Civil War; candidate for the presidency (1864). — 10
Page me42.698

McCulloch, John Ramsay (1789-1864) — British economist, vulgarised David Ricardo's theory. — 23, 186, 408
Page me42.698
MacDonald — British army officer; in September 1860 arrested in Bonn and put on trial on the charge of insubordination to the local authorities. — 24
Page me42.698
Macdonald, Adelaide (born c. 1848) — took part in the Fenian movement, sentenced to five years of penal servitude in 1867. — 492
Page me42.698
Macleod, Henry Dunning (1821-1902) — Scottish economist, engaged mainly in elucidating the nature of credit. — 511, 543
Page me42.698
Magendie, François (1783-1855) — French physician, professor of physiology and general therapy in Paris. — 304
Page me42.698
Malthus, Thomas Robert (1766-1834) — English clergyman and economist; author of a theory of population. — 127, 136, 455
Page me42.698
Marie (b. 1818) — Queen of Hanover (1851-66). — 345
Page me42.698
Marie de Saint-Georges, Alexandre Pierre Thomas Amable (1795-1870) — French lawyer and politician, moderate republican; in 1848 Minister of Public Works in the Provisional Government, then Minister of Justice in Cavaignac's government. — 21
Page me42.698
Markheim, Bertha (née Levy) — close acquaintance of Marx's family in 1854-65. — 45
Page me42.698
Marr, Wilhelm (1819-1904) — German journalist; a leader of the Young Germany, German refugees' secret society in Switzerland (1840s); publisher of the newspaper Beobachter an der Elbe in Hamburg (1865-66); Prussian police agent. — 102, 379
Page me42.698
Martin, Bon Louis Henri (1810-1883) — French historian and politician, republican; joined the International in 1865. — 202
Page me42.698
Martin, John (1812-1875) — Irish politician, participant in the national liberation movement, British M.P. (1871-75). — 462

Page Break me42.699
Page me42.699
Martin, William (born c. 1832) — an Irish Fenian; official in Manchester; in the autumn of 1867 was convicted for taking part in freeing the Fenian leaders Kelly and Deasy. — 462
Page me42.699
Marx, Edgar (Musch) (1847-1855) — Karl Marx's son. — 273
Page me42.699
Marx, Eleanor (Tussy) (1855-1898) — Karl Marx's youngest daughter, took part in the British and international working-class movement. — 63, 166-67, 181, 184, 230, 235,

246, 249, 313, 316-17, 318, 370, 375, 376, 381, 395-96, 406, 408, 416, 424, 427, 472, 490, 508, 513, 520, 522, 524, 526, 540, 541, 571, 572
Page me42.699
Marx, Heinrich (1777-1838) — Karl Marx's father, lawyer and later Counsellor of Justice in Trier. — 557
Page me42.699
Marx, Henriette (née Pressburg) (1787-1863) — Karl Marx's mother. — 46
Page me42.699
Marx, Jenny (née von Westphalen) (1814-1881) — Karl Marx's wife. — 9, 20, 43, 50, 63, 64, 133, 134, 142, 153, 173, 184, 193, 205, 215, 226, 245, 246, 266, 271, 277, 307, 308, 314, 316, 331, 337, 362, 363, 376, 377, 378, 383, 385, 388, 395, 399, 402, 406, 427, 446, 457, 463, 484, 502, 503, 508, 521, 524, 526, 528, 540, 541, 542, 565, 567, 568-79, 580-82
Page me42.699
Marx, Jenny (1844-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest daughter, took part in the international working-class movement. — 62, 64, 149, 151, 181, 184, 186, 196, 197, 198, 240-41, 244, 249, 271, 291, 294, 313, 317, 361, 369-70, 376, 378, 395, 396, 406, 408, 416, 424, 427, 479, 492, 512, 515, 522, 524, 526, 540, 541, 567, 568
Page me42.699
Marx, Laura (1845-1911) — Karl Marx's second daughter, married Paul Lafargue in 1868; active in the French working-class movement. — 23, 63, 150, 151, 181, 183, 184, 186, 193, 216, 244-46, 249, 271, 303, 306, 307, 309, 311, 313, 315, 316, 317, 330, 334, 335, 347, 351, 370, 375-76, 380, 395, 396, 406, 408, 416, 424, 427, 428, 432, 436, 470, 502, 503, 523, 525, 537, 538, 540, 542, 544, 551, 553, 554, 556, 568, 583
Page me42.699
Massol, Marie Alexandre (1805-1875) — French journalist; utopian socialist; friend of Proudhon; editor-in-chief of La Morale indépendante (1865-70). — 66
Page me42.699
Matzeratt, G. — German worker; participant in the 1848-49 revolution; in the 1850s-early 1860s a refugee in London, member of the German Workers' Educational Society there; later returned to Germany, member of the General Association of German Workers. — 98
Page me42.699
Maughan — British politician, Owenite, participant in the free-thinkers' movement. — 459
Page me42.699
Maurer, Georg Ludwig von (1790-1872) — German historian, studied the social system of ancient and medieval Germany. — 547-49, 554, 557
Page me42.699
Mayer, Karl (1819-1889) — German petty-bourgeois democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49), editor of the Stuttgart newspaper Der Beobachter in the 1860s. — 43, 44, 51, 52, 493-95, 498, 500, 503
Page me42.699
Mayer, Karl Friedrich Hartmann (1786-1870) — German lawyer and poet, representative of the Swabian school; father of the above. — 52
Page me42.699

Mayne, Sir Richard (1796-1868) — London Chief of Police from 1850. — 300
Page me42.699
Mazade, Louis Charles Jean Robert de (1821-1893) — French journalist, worked in Revue des deux Mondes. — 257
Page me42.699
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — Italian revolutionary, democrat, a leader of the Italian national liberation movement; headed the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic (1849); an organiser of the Central Committee of European Democracy in London (1850); when the International was founded in 1864, tried to bring it under his influence. — 16, 17, 20, 23, 32, 33, 110, 115, 140, 144, 162, 242, 243, 250, 278, 420, 424

Page Break me42.700
Page me42.700
Meagher, Thomas Francis (1823-1867) — leader of the Irish national liberation movement in the 1840s, a founder of the Irish Confederation (1847); in 1848 was arrested and sentenced to penal servitude for life for taking part in the preparation of an uprising; escaped in 1852, fled to the USA; during the US Civil War (1861-65) commanded the brigade of Irish volunteers that fought on the side of the Northerners. — 486
Page me42.700
Meissner, Otto Karl (1819-1902) — publisher in Hamburg, printed Marx's Capital and other works by Marx and Engels. — 73, 78, 84, 99, 100, 107, 111, 112, 113, 116, 119, 133, 173, 174, 214, 219, 222, 226, 228, 328, 332, 336, 338, 343, 344, 348, 350, 352, 357, 358, 359, 362, 363, 364, 366, 367, 370, 371, 375, 379, 389, 391, 392, 407, 415, 420, 424, 426, 427, 432, 437, 439, 442, 444, 451, 458, 462, 463, 471, 472, 475, 477, 487, 489, 491, 498, 507, 509-10, 534, 540, 541, 542, 545, 546, 548, 556, 576
Page me42.700
Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Jakob Ludwig Felix (1809-1847) — German composer. — 571
Page me42.700
Menke, Theodor Heinrich — German statistician; member of the International; Ludwig Kugelmann's friend. — 263, 395
Page me42.700
Mensdorff-Pouilly, Alexander, Count (1813-1871) — Austrian general and statesman, Minister of the Imperial Court and Foreign Minister (1864-66). — 54
Page me42.700
Merkel — official in a statistical bureau in Hanover. — 361
Page me42.700
Metzner, Theodor (1830-1902) — prominent figure in the German working-class movement; shoemaker; a leader of the General Association of German Workers; follower of Wilhelm Liebknecht (from the mid-1860s), opposed Lassalleans; member of the International; from 1869 member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 180, 202, 215, 220, 261
Page me42.700
Meyer, Gustav — a manufacturer in Bielefeld; acquaintance of Ludwig Kugelmann. — 549, 552, 559
Page me42.700

Meyer, Hermann (1821-1875) — leading figure in the German and American working-class movement; merchant, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA in 1852; an organiser of the International's sections in St Louis; friend of Joseph Weydemeyer. — 377, 451, 455, 537
Page me42.700
Meyer, Julius (1817-1863) — Westphalian businessman and writer; 'true socialist' in the mid-1840s. — 373
Page me42.700
Meyer, Ludwig (1827-1900) — German psychiatrist. — 360
Page me42.700
Meyer, Sigfrid (c. 1840-1872) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; engineer; member of the General Association of German Workers; opposed Lassalleanism; member of the International; in 1866 emigrated to the USA, member of the New York Communist Club and an organiser of the International's sections in the USA; follower of Marx and Engels. — 202, 216, 220, 222, 261, 366-67, 415, 473, 541, 572-73
Page me42.700
Miall, Edward (1809-1881) — English writer and radical politician, preacher of non-conformism, flirted with the Chartists in the 1840s; M.P. (1852-57, 1869-74); editor of The Nonconformist (1841-79), a publisher of The Commonwealth. — 224, 255, 268, 280, 283
Page me42.700
Michaelis, Otto (1826-1890) — German economist and journalist; from 1861 member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies; National-Liberal (from 1867); deputy to the North German Reichstag. — 444, 467

Page Break me42.701
Page me42.701
Mignet, François Auguste Marie (1796-1884) — French historian. — 28
Page me42.701
Mill, John Stuart (1806-1873) — English economist and positivist philosopher. — 162, 269, 394, 407, 536, 537
Page me42.701
Miquel, Johannes von (1828-1901) — German lawyer, politician and financier; member of the Communist League up to 1852; a founder of the National Association (1859), chief burgomaster of Osnabrück (1865-70, 1876-80), from 1867 a leader of the National-Liberals (Right wing), member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies, deputy to the North German Reichstag and later to the German Reichstag. — 45, 102, 104, 112, 207, 221, 330, 373, 482, 499
Page me42.701
Mirabeau, Honoré Gabriel Victor Riqueti, comte de (1749-1791) — leading figure in the French Revolution; constitutional monarchist. — 103, 169, 435
Page me42.701
Mohl, Moritz (1802-1888) — German economist; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (moderate Left wing). — 490
Page me42.701

Moilin, Jules Antoine (Tony) (1832-1871) — French physician and journalist, petty-bourgeois socialist; took part in the Paris Commune, shot by Versaillists. — 310, 319, 320, 324, 325, 327, 335, 344
Page me42.701
Moleschott, Jakob (1822-1893) — Dutch physiologist and philosopher, vulgar materialist; taught in Germany, Switzerland and Italy. — 28
Page me42.701
Moliére (real name Jean Baptiste Poquelin) (1622-1673) — French dramatist. — 290, 296
Page me42.701
Moltke, Helmuth Karl Bernhardt, Count von (1800-1891) — Prussian military leader and writer; general, from 1871 field marshal-general; Chief of the Prussian (1857-71) and the Imperial (1871-88) General Staff. — 520
Page me42.701
Mommsen, Theodor (1817-1903) — German historian, author of works on the history of ancient Rome. — 27
Page me42.701
Moore, Samuel (1838-1911) — English lawyer; member of the International; translated into English Volume One of Marx's Capital (in collaboration with Edward Aveling) and the Manifesto of the Communist Party; friend of Marx and Engels. — 157, 168, 169, 182, 186, 317, 378, 386, 394, 409, 419, 453, 456, 459, 480, 499, 508, 555
Page me42.701
Morley, Samuel (1809-1886) — English manufacturer and politician, Liberal M.P. (1865, 1868-85); member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League in the 1860s. — 74
Page me42.701
Möser, Justus (1720-1794) — German historian and politician, a founder of the conservative romantic trend in historiography. — 207, 221, 547, 558
Page me42.701
Moustier, Léonel Desle Marie François René, marquis de (1817-1869) — French diplomat, Minister for Foreign Affairs (1866-68). — 462
Page me42.701
Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus (1756-1791) — Austrian composer. — 571
Page me42.701
Mozin (c. 1771-1840) — French clergyman, philologist. — 28
Page me42.701
Müller, Johann Heinrich Jacob (1809-1875) — German physicist. — 27
Page me42.701
Münster, Georg Herbert (von Dorneburg), Prince (1820-1902) — German diplomat, Hanover envoy to St Petersburg (1856-64); went over to Prussia's side in 1866. — 520
Page me42.701
Muraviov, Mikhail Nikolayevich, Count (1796-1866) — Russian statesman; appointed plenipotentiary Governor-General of Poland during the 1863 Polish uprising; nicknamed 'hangman' for the cruel suppression of the uprising. — 85
Page me42.701
Murchison, Sir Roderick Impey (1792-1871) — English geologist, took part in the geological survey of European part of Russia and the Urals in the 1840s. — 164

Page Break me42.702
Page me42.702
N

Page me42.702
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 47, 55, 77, 124, 422, 524
Page me42.702
Napoleon III (Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte) (1808-1873) — Napoleon I's nephew; President of the Second Republic (December 1848 to 1851), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 18, 38, 47, 55, 124, 130, 177, 182, 208, 211, 215, 216, 218, 242, 254, 256, 258, 263, 265, 269, 274, 276, 280, 282, 285, 288, 290-94, 296, 300, 302, 306, 307, 334, 338, 340, 341, 345, 346, 351, 352, 364, 365, 368, 374, 416, 418, 425, 438, 459, 462, 464, 466, 468, 473, 474, 520, 529, 537
Page me42.702
Nebuchadrezzar (or Nebuchadnezzar) II (625-562 B.C.) — King of Babylon (604-562 B.C.). — 54
Page me42.702
Nélaton, Auguste (1807-1873) — French surgeon. — 519
Page me42.702
Newton, Sir Isaac (1642-1727) — English physicist, astronomer and mathematician, founder of classical mechanics. — 185
Page me42.702
Niemann, Albert (1831-1917) — German opera singer. — 379
Page me42.702
Nösselt, Friedrich August (1781-1850) — German teacher, author of textbooks on history, geography and German literature. — 27
Page me42.702
Nothjung, Peter (1821-1866) — German tailor; member of the Cologne Workers' Association and of the Communist League, one of the accused at the Cologne Communist trial (1852). — 249

Page me42.702
O

Page me42.702
Oborski, Ludwik (1787-1873) — Polish colonel; took part in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31; later emigrated to London, member of the Fraternal Democrats society; commanded a division in the Baden-Palatinate revolutionary army (1849); member of the General Council of the International (1865-67); President of the Central London Section of the United Polish Exiles. — 86
Page me42.702
O'Brien, Michael (d. 1867) — Irish Fenian, executed in Manchester for taking part in freeing the Fenian leaders Kelly and Deasy in the autumn of 1867. — 474, 483

Page me42.702
Odger, George (1820-1877) — a reformist leader of the British trade unions, shoemaker; Secretary of the London Trades Council (1862-72), member of the British National League for the Independence of Poland, the Land and Labour League; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall; member of the General Council of the International (1864-71) and its President (1864-67); took part in the London Conference (1865) and the Geneva Congress (1866); member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League; in 1871 refused to sign the General Council's address The Civil War in France, and left the Council. — 15, 16, 148, 149, 155, 158, 173, 250, 252, 314, 315, 318, 329, 424, 434, 519
Page me42.702
O'Donovan Rossa, Jeremiah (1831-1915) — a leader of the Irish Fenians, publisher of The Irish People (1863-65), in 1865 sentenced to life imprisonment, amnestied in 1870 and emigrated to the USA; retired from political life in the 1880s. — 394
Page me42.702
O'Donovan Rossa, Mary J. — wife of Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, organised the collection of funds for the families of the Fenian prisoners in 1865-66. — 228, 394
Page me42.702
Oppenheim — influential banking house established in Cologne since 1798. — 285
Page me42.702
Orsini, Cesare — Italian refugee; member of the General Council of the International (1866-67), spread the International's ideas in the USA;

Page Break me42.703
Felice Orsini's brother. — 238, 242-43, 246, 250, 255, 259
Page me42.703
Orsini, Felice (1819-1858) — Italian democrat, republican, a prominent figure in the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification; executed for his attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 238, 242
Page me42.703
Otto, L. — see Breitschwert, Otto Ludwig
Page me42.703
Overbeck, Johannes Adolf (1826-1895) — German archaeologist. — 28
Page me42.703
Overstone, Samuel Jones Loyd, Baron (from 1860) (1796-1883) — English banker, economist, follower of the 'principle of money circulation' school. — 186
Page me42.703
Owen, Robert (1771-1858) — British utopian socialist. — 326, 552

Page me42.703
P

Page me42.703
Palmerston, Emily Mary (c. 1787-1869) (previously Countess Cowper) — wife of Henry John Temple Palmerston. — 374

Page me42.703
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman, Tory, from 1830 Whig, Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51), Home Secretary (1852-55) and Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65). — 36, 44, 45, 208, 269, 394
Page me42.703
Pasteur, Louis (1822-1895) — French microbiologist and chemist, founder of microbiology. — 284
Page me42.703
Pauli, Reinhold (1823-1882) — German historian, author of works on the history of Britain. — 28
Page me42.703
Payne, A.H. — German publisher in Leipzig. — 447
Page me42.703
Petzler — German photographer, refugee in Manchester in the 1860s. — 98
Page me42.703
Petzler, Johann (d. 1898) — German democrat, refugee in England in the 1850s-60s. — 49, 94, 98
Page me42.703
Philips — Dutch maternal relatives of Karl Marx. — 538, 542, 545, 548
Page me42.703
Philips, Antoinette (Nannette) (c. 1837-1885) — Karl Marx's cousin, Lion Philips' daughter; member of the Dutch section of the International. — 241-44, 567
Page me42.703
Philips, Friedrich (Fritz) — Karl Marx's cousin; banker in Zalt-Bommel. — 48
Page me42.703
Philips, Lion Benjamin (1794-1866) — Dutch merchant, maternal uncle of Karl Marx. — 46-48, 243, 249, 341
Page me42.703
Pieper, Friedrich Ludwig Wilhelm (1826-1899) — German philologist and journalist, member of the Communist League, refugee in London; was close to Marx and Engels in the 1850s. — 165
Page me42.703
Pierre l'Ermite (c. 1050-1115) — French monk and preacher, headed peasants' volunteer corps during the First Crusade (1096-99). — 452
Page me42.703
Pigott, Richard (1828-1889) — Irish journalist, publisher of The Irishman (1865-79); sided with the British government in the 1880s. — 550
Page me42.703
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 338, 460, 462
Page me42.703
Platen-Hallermund, Adolf Ludwig Karl, Count von (1814-1889) — Hanover Minister for Foreign Affairs (1855-66); opposed unification of Germany under Prussia's hegemony. — 307
Page me42.703
Plon-Plon — see Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul

Page me42.703
Pollock, George D. — British army doctor; member of the commission which in 1867 submitted to Parliament a report on the treatment of the political prisoners in the English convict prisons. — 394
Page me42.703
Polo, Marco (1254-1324) — Italian traveller and writer, made expedition to China (1271-95). — 28
Page me42.703
Potter, George (1832-1893) — a reformist

Page Break me42.704
leader of the British trade unions, carpenter; member of the London Trades Council and a leader of the Amalgamated Union of Building Workers; founder and publisher of The Bee-Hive Newspaper. — 18, 50, 154, 155, 156, 169, 173, 253, 259, 424
Page me42.704
Preller, Ludwig (1809-1861) — German philologist, studied ancient mythology. — 27
Page me42.704
Prokesch-Osten, Anton, Count von (1795-1876) — Austrian diplomat, general and writer, envoy to Athens (1834-49), envoy (1855-67), then ambassador (1867-71) to Constantinople. — 464, 520
Page me42.704
Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865) — French writer, economist and sociologist; a founder of anarchism. — 67, 75, 102, 213, 218, 281, 287, 326, 368, 379, 455, 488, 557
Page me42.704
Prutz, Robert Eduard (1816-1872) — German poet and historian of literature, liberal; publisher of the journal Deutsches Museum in Leipzig (1851-67). — 484
Page me42.704
Purdy, Frederick — English official. — 53
Page me42.704
Puttkamer, Elisabeth von — daughter of Prussian statesman Robert von Puttkamer, Otto Bismarck's niece. — 390
Page me42.704
Pyat, Félix (1810-1889) — French journalist, playwright and politician, democrat; took part in the 1848 revolution; from 1849 refugee in Switzerland, Belgium and England; opposed Marx and the International's leadership making use of the French section in London; member of the Paris Commune (1871). — 474, 516

Page me42.704
Q

Page me42.704
Quenstedt — Wilhelm Liebknecht's acquaintance. — 202
Page me42.704

Quinet, Edgar (1803-1875) — French politician and historian; took part in the 1848 revolution, refugee in 1852-70; anti-Bonapartist; participant in the League of Peace and Freedom Congress in Geneva (1867). — 435

Page me42.704
R

Page me42.704
Racowita, Janko von (d. 1865) — Romanian nobleman; mortally wounded Lassalle in duel (1864). — 19, 20, 31, 69, 162, 211, 415
Page me42.704
Rasch, Gustav (1825-1878) — German lawyer and journalist, democrat; took part in the 1848 revolution in Berlin, later refugee in Switzerland and France. — 33, 34, 119, 397
Page me42.704
Rattazzi, Urbano (1808-1873) — Italian statesman of liberal-monarchist trend; Minister of the Interior in the Kingdom of Sardinia (1855-58 and 1859-60), headed Italian government (1862 and 1867). — 460
Page me42.704
Rau, Karl Heinrich (1792-1870) — German economist. — 444, 490, 491
Page me42.704
Ravenstein — refugee in England; secretary of the Deutsche Freiheit und Einheit society. — 32
Page me42.704
Réaumur, René Antoine Ferchault de (1683-1757) — French naturalist. — 170
Page me42.704
Rebour — French inventor. — 254
Page me42.704
Reclus, Jean Jacques Élisée (1830-1905) — French geographer, sociologist and politician, theorist of anarchism; member of the International, editor of La Cooperation (1866-68), participant in the Paris Commune (1871). — 483, 487, 532, 533
Page me42.704
Regnault, Élias Georges Soulange Oliva (1801-1868) — French historian and journalist, state official, Bonapartist. — 163
Page me42.704
Régnier, Mathurin (1573-1613) — French satirical poet. — 453, 454
Page me42.704
Reinach, Arnold (c. 1820-1870) — German democrat, took part in the 1848-49 revolution, emigrated to Switzerland. — 63, 158, 164, 185, 208
Page me42.704
Reincke, Peter Adolf (1818-1887) — German physician; member of the

Page Break me42.705
General Association of German Workers who was elected deputy to the North German Reichstag in 1867; expelled from the Association; in June 1868 relinquished his deputy powers. — 430

Page me42.705
Reusche, Friedrich — German journalist; member of the General Association of German Workers, Lassallean, contributed to the Nordstern and Der Social-Demokrat (1864-65). — 147, 548, 566-67
Page me42.705
Reuter, Paul Julius, Baron (1816-1899) — founder of the Reuter telegraph agency in London (1851); German by birth. — 267
Page me42.705
Reybaud, Marie Roch Louis (1799-1879) — French writer and economist, liberal. — 338, 340
Page me42.705
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — English economist. — 137, 402, 457, 514, 543
Page me42.705
Richelieu, Armand Jean du Plessis, duc de (1585-1642) — French statesman during the period of absolutism, Cardinal. — 71
Page me42.705
Richter, Eugen (1838-1906) — German politician, leader of the liberals (Left wing); a founder and leader of the party of free-thinkers. — 211, 430
Page me42.705
Richter, Heinrich Moriz Karl (b. 1841) — Austrian historian and journalist, liberal; professor at Vienna trade academy; worked in several Austrian newspapers. — 512, 515, 518, 525, 537
Page me42.705
Rimestad, Christian Vilhelm (1816-1879) — Danish teacher, politician and journalist, liberal; founder and leader of the Workers' Union (1860-79); editor of the Dags-Telegraphen (1864-75). — 183
Page me42.705
Ritter, Karl (1779-1859) — German geographer, professor at Berlin University. — 28
Page me42.705
Rittershaus, Emil (1834-1897) — German poet, democrat, belonged to the Party of Progress (Left wing) in the 1860s. — 427, 433, 440, 471
Page me42.705
Roberts, William R. — a leader of the Fenian movement in the USA, inspired an adventurist attempt of Fenians' invasion into Canada (May 1866) to arouse conflict between Britain and the USA. — 485
Page me42.705
Robespierre, Maximilien François Marie Isidore de (1758-1794) — Jacobin leader in the French Revolution, head of the revolutionary government (1793-94). — 71
Page me42.705
Robin, Charles Philippe (1821-1885) — French anatomist. — 283
Page me42.705
Röckel, August (d. 1876) — German musician, democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Dresden uprising, sentenced to penal servitude for life, amnested in 1862; from mid-1866 was in the service of the Austrian government. — 270
Page me42.705

Rodbertus-Jagetzow, Johann Karl (1805-1875) — German economist and politician; leader of the Left Centre in the Prussian National Assembly during the 1848-49 revolution; later advocated 'state socialism'. — 30, 54
Page me42.705
Rode (Rohde) — German refugee in Liverpool. — 152, 203, 281, 337, 338
Page me42.705
Roesgen, Charles — employee in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 168, 192, 277, 451
Page me42.705
Rogeard, Auguste Louis (1820-1896) — French democratic journalist, a founder and editor of La Rive gauche (1864); in 1865 was persecuted for his anti-Bonapartist pamphlet and emigrated to Belgium and then to Germany; a leader of the Paris Commune (1871). — 216, 243
Page me42.705
Rogers, James Edwin Thorold (1823-1890) — British historian and economist. — 339, 340, 344
Page me42.705
Roodhuizen, A. — pastor in Zalt-Bommel, subsequently husband of Karl Marx's cousin Antoinette Philips. — 242
Page me42.705
Roon, Albrecht Theodor Emil, Count von (1803-1879) — Prussian statesman and military leader, War Minister (1859-73)

Page Break me42.706
and Naval Minister (1861-71), field marshal-general from 1873, reorganised the Prussian army. — 83, 154, 157
Page me42.706
Roscher, Wilhelm Georg Friedrich (1817-1894) — German economist, founder of the historical trend in political economy. — 406, 444, 467, 473, 477, 489, 490, 511, 514, 536, 537, 539, 544
Page me42.706
Rost, Valentin Christian Friedrich (1790-1862) — German philologist. — 28
Page me42.706
Rothschilds — dynasty of bankers with branches in many European countries. — 536
Page me42.706
Rotteck, Karl Wenzeslaus Rodecker von (1775-1840) — German historian and politician, liberal. — 33
Page me42.706
Rückert, Friedrich (1788-1866) — German romantic poet and translator of Oriental poetry. — 149
Page me42.706
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist and philosopher, Young Hegelian; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in England in the 1850s; became a National-Liberal after 1866. — 72, 151, 296, 530
Page me42.706

Russell, John Russell, Earl (1792-1878) — British statesman, Whig leader; Prime Minister (1846-52, 1865-66); Foreign Secretary (1852-53, 1859-65). — 236, 269, 374
Page me42.706
Rüstow, Friedrich Wilhelm (1821-1878) — German officer and military writer, democrat; refugee in Switzerland; Chief of Garibaldi's staff in 1860; Lassalle's friend. — 12, 107, 120, 126, 129, 139, 140, 147, 365

Page me42.706
S

Page me42.706
Sawyer — house-owner in London. — 317, 319, 321, 343
Page me42.706
Schaaffhausen, Hermann (1816-1893) — German anthropologist and physiologist. — 24
Page me42.706
Schabelitz, Jacob Lukas (1827-1899) — Swiss publisher and bookseller, member of the Communist League, was connected with Marx and Engels in the late 1840s-early 1850s. — 432, 449, 452
Page me42.706
Schaible, Karl Heinrich (1824-1899) — German physician and democratic writer; participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, later emigrated to England. — 32, 33
Page me42.706
Schapper, Karl (1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; a leader of the separatist group during the split in the Communist League (1850); again drew close to Marx in 1856, member of the Central Council of the International (1865), participant in the London Conference of 1865. — 294, 300, 522
Page me42.706
Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759-1805) — German poet, dramatist, historian and philosopher. — 12, 27, 53, 103, 242, 299
Page me42.706
Schilling, Carl — German compositor; member of the General Association of German Workers, opposed its leaders; member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (from 1869). — 176, 179, 180, 181
Page me42.706
Schily, Victor (1810-1875) — German lawyer, democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, emigrated to France; member of the First International, delegate to the London Conference of 1865; Marx's friend. — 66, 70, 80, 85, 108, 115, 118, 127, 130, 131, 150, 154, 155, 156, 163, 478, 483, 487, 488, 528, 532, 533, 580, 581
Page me42.706
Schimmelpfennig, Alexander (1824-1865) — Prussian army officer, democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; belonged to the separatist Willich-Schapper

Page Break me42.707
group; later emigrated to the USA, fought in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 125
Page me42.707
Schleiden, Matthias Jakob (1804-1881) — German botanist. — 27
Page me42.707
Schlosser, Friedrich Christoph (1776-1861) — German historian. — 27
Page me42.707
Schmalhausen, Caroline — daughter of Marx's sister Sophie. — 115, 128
Page me42.707
Schmalhausen, Sophie (1816-1883) — Karl Marx's sister. — 115
Page me42.707
Schmeller, Johann Andreas (1785-1852) — German philologist, professor at Munich University. — 554
Page me42.707
Schmulewitsch (Chmoulevitch), Jakob S. (b. 1841) — Russian physiologist, student in several German and French universities. — 510
Page me42.707
Schöler, Caroline (1819-1891) — teacher in Cologne, friend of the Marx family. — 181, 385
Page me42.707
Schömann, Georg Friedrich (1793-1879) — German philologist and historian of ancient Greece. — 27
Page me42.707
Schönbein, Christian Friedrich (1799-1868) — German chemist, professor at Basle University. — 227, 232
Page me42.707
Schorlemmer, Carl (1834-1892) — German organic chemist, professor in Manchester; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 117, 378, 383, 387, 402, 418, 459, 469, 478, 480, 485, 495, 507, 508, 510, 517, 518, 536, 560, 581, 582
Page me42.707
Schramm, Rudolf (1813-1882) — German journalist, petty-bourgeois democrat, deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848, after the revolution emigrated to England; supported Bismarck in the 1860s. — 53, 102
Page me42.707
Schraps, R. — German lawyer, democrat, deputy to the North German Reichstag from Saxony. — 348
Page me42.707
Schulze-Delitzsch, Franz Hermann (1808-1883) — German economist, liberal politician, advocated unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy, a founder of the National Association (1859) and leader of the Party of Progress, sought to divert workers from revolutionary struggle by organising co-operative societies. — 15, 104, 211, 221, 424, 435, 492, 493, 532
Page me42.707

Schurz, Karl (1829-1906) — German petty-bourgeois democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland and in 1852 to the USA, fought in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners, later US statesman. — 40, 537
Page me42.707
Schütz, Jacob Friedrich (1813-1877) — German democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, representative of the Baden Provisional Government in Paris; later a refugee in England, Switzerland and America. — 35
Page me42.707
Schwabe — merchant in Manchester. — 534
Page me42.707
Schwabe — wife of the above. — 534
Page me42.707
Schweitzer, Johann Baptist von (1833-1875) — German lawyer, a Lassallean leader; editor of Der Social-Demokrat (1864-67); President of the General Association of German Workers (1867-71); supported unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy; opposed the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; expelled from the General Association for his contacts with the Prussian authorities (1872). — 22, 24, 25, 29, 30, 40, 64-65, 66, 75, 78, 80, 82, 83, 89, 94-95, 99, 102, 104, 106, 107-08, 114, 120, 124, 126, 128-30, 133, 134, 152, 156, 169-70, 205, 349, 417, 426, 430, 450, 495, 553, 556
Page me42.707
Scott, Sir Walter (1771-1832) — Scottish poet and novelist. — 234
Page me42.707
Seebach, Albin Leo, Baron von (1811-1884) — Saxon diplomat, envoy to Paris (1852-70). — 349
Page me42.707
Semmelweis, Ignaz Philipp (1818-1865) — Hungarian gynaecologist, professor in Vienna and Budapest. — 360

Page Break me42.708
Page me42.708
Senior, Nassau William (1790-1864) — English economist, vulgarised Ricardo's theory, opposed the shortening of the working day. — 391, 392
Page me42.708
Seubert, Adolf Friedrich (1819-1890) — official in the War Ministry in Württemberg and writer, acquaintance of Ludwig Kugelmann, helped him in publishing Engels' reviews of Volume One of Marx's Capital. — 500, 511, 512
Page me42.708
Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of (1801-1885) — British politician, head of parliamentary group of the Tory philanthropists in the 1840s, from 1847 a Whig. — 374
Page me42.708
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English dramatist and poet. — 35, 177, 378, 568
Page me42.708
Shaw, Robert (d. 1869) — a leader of the British working-class movement, house-painter, participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (1864-69), Treasurer of the Council (1867-68), Corresponding Secretary for America (1867-69), delegate to the London Conference (1865) and the Brussels Congress (1868) of the International. — 459

Page me42.708
Sherman, William Tecumseh (1820-1891) — American general and politician, took part in the Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners; Commander-in-Chief of the US army (1869-84). — 39, 53, 61, 113, 121-23
Page me42.708
Sidney (or Sydney), Algernon (1622-1683) — British politician, took part in the Civil War (1642-48) on the side of the Parliament, member of the revolutionary tribunal. — 273
Page me42.708
Siebel, Carl (1836-1868) — German poet; helped to propagate works by Marx and Engels, Volume One of Marx's Capital in particular; Engels' distant relative. — 4, 58, 75, 78, 79, 83, 84, 108, 111-12, 113-14, 116, 119, 120, 126, 127, 175, 363, 426, 427, 433, 440, 445, 451, 456, 461, 465, 471, 472, 475, 476, 492, 493, 498, 502, 503, 507, 509, 518, 529
Page me42.708
Siebold, Eduard Kaspar Jakob von (1801-1861) — German gynaecologist, professor in Göttingen. — 360
Page me42.708
Siebold, P.F. — German democrat; acquaintance of Karl Marx and Frederick Engels. — 78
Page me42.708
Sigel, Franz (1824-1902) — Baden army officer; petty-bourgeois democrat; Commander-in-Chief (1849), then deputy Commander-in-Chief of the Baden-Palatinate revolutionary army; refugee in Switzerland, England and (from 1852) in the USA; fought in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 40
Page me42.708
Simon, Jules François Simon Suisse (1814-1896) — French statesman and idealist philosopher; moderate republican; deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848-49); member of the Corps législatif, Minister of Public Education in the government of National Defence and in Thiers' Government (1870-73); an instigator of struggle against the Paris Commune; Chairman of the Council of Ministers (1876-77). — 66, 356
Page me42.708
Simon, Ludwig (1810-1872) — German lawyer; democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; emigrated to Switzerland; participant in the Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva in 1867. — 365, 433
Page me42.708
Simson, Martin Eduard Sigismund von (1810-1899) — Prussian politician and lawyer; in 1848-49 deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre); President of the North German and German Reichstags (1867-74), National-Liberal. — 444
Page me42.708
Smith, Adam (1723-1790) — Scottish economist. — 186, 514

Page Break me42.709
Page me42.709

Smith, Sir William (1813-1893) — English philologist. — 28
Page me42.709
Snider, Jacob (d. 1866) — American inventor of a breech-loading rifle. — 291, 303
Page me42.709
Sonnemann, Leopold (1831-1909) — German politician and journalist, a founder of the National Association (1859); in the 1860s took the stand of South German Federalists; supported the working-class movement. — 80
Page me42.709
Spartacus (d. 71 B.C.) — Roman gladiator, leader of the slave revolt in Rome (73-71 B.C.). — 568
Page me42.709
Spruner von Merz, Karl (1803-1892) — German historian and cartographer. — 28
Page me42.709
Stalder, Franz Josef (1757-1833) — Swiss philologist. — 554
Page me42.709
Stanley, Edward Henry, 15th Earl of Derby (1826-1893) — British statesman, Tory; Conservative in the 1860s-70s, then Liberal; Colonial Secretary (1858, 1882-85) and Secretary of State for India (1858-59), Foreign Secretary (1866-68, 1874-78); son of the Tory leader Edward Derby. — 341, 394
Page me42.709
Stein, Lorenz von (1815-1890) — German lawyer, historian and economist, author of works on the socialist movement, advocate of 'social monarchy'. — 513
Page me42.709
Steinmetz, Karl Friedrich von (1796-1877) — Prussian general, field marshal-general from 1871, took part in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 523
Page me42.709
Steinthal — owner of a trading firm in Manchester. — 127, 128
Page me42.709
Steinthal — wife of the above. — 534
Page me42.709
Stephens, James (1825-1901) — Irish revolutionary, a founder and leader of the Fenian organisation; in 1866 emigrated to the USA. — 338, 485
Page me42.709
Stepney, Cowell William Frederick (1820-1872) — active participant in the British working-class movement, member of the General Council of the International (1866-72) and its Treasurer (1868-70), delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and the London Conference (1871), member of the British Federal Council (1872). — 459
Page me42.709
Stieber, Wilhelm (1818-1882) — Prussian police officer, chief of the Prussian political police (1850-60), an organiser of and chief witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist trial (1852), chief of military police during the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 118, 286, 299, 346, 347, 349, 361
Page me42.709
Stieler, Adolf (1775-1836) — German cartographer. — 28
Page me42.709

Stirner, Max (real name Schmidt, Johann Caspar) (1806-1856) — German Young Hegelian philosopher, an ideologist of individualism and anarchism. — 287, 373
Page me42.709
Strohn, Eugen (d. 1868) — Wilhelm Strohn's brother. — 357
Page me42.709
Strohn, Wilhelm — member of the Communist League, a friend of Marx and Engels, refugee in Bradford. — 72, 78, 85, 107, 177, 179, 193, 357, 431, 438, 446, 515, 525
Page me42.709
Struve, Gustav von (1805-1870) — German democratic journalist, a leader of the Baden uprisings in 1848 and of the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in England; fought in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners. — 33, 35, 119, 397, 540
Page me42.709
Stumpf, Paul (1826-1912) — German mechanic; member of the German Workers' Society in Brussels (1847), member of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; member of the First International, delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867), member of the

Page Break me42.710
Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 165, 198, 202, 214, 290, 298, 299, 433, 443, 445, 498, 502
Page me42.710
Sullivan, Alexander Martin (1830-1884) — Irish politician, owner of the Irish newspaper The Weekly News, came out in defence of the Fenians. — 550
Page me42.710
Sutherland, George Granville William Leveson-Gower, Duke of (1828-1892) — British aristocrat, M.P. (1852-61). — 33
Page me42.710
Swan, Daniel — English ribbon-weaver; member of the International, delegate from Coventry to the Lausanne Congress (1867). — 416
Page me42.710
Swift, Jonathan (1667-1745) — Irish satirist, wrote in English. — 376
Page me42.710
Szemere, Bertalan (1812-1869) — Hungarian politician and journalist; Minister of the Interior (1848) and head of the revolutionary government (1849); emigrated after the defeat of the revolution. — 529
Page me42.710
Sznayde, Franz (1790-1850) — participant in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31; general of the Baden-Palatinate insurgent army in 1849. — 123

Page me42.710
T

Page me42.710
Tacitus, Publius Cornelius (c. 55-c. 120) — Roman historian and orator. — 558

Page me42.710
Taylor, Peter Alfred (1819-1891) — British politician, radical, M.P. — 92, 110
Page me42.710
Tenge, Therese (née Bolongaro-Crevenna) (born c. 1833) — wife of Westphalian landowner Tenge-Ritberg, Hanover acquaintance of Kugelmann's family. — 369, 375, 396
Page me42.710
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer) (c. 190-159 B.C.) — Roman writer of comedies. — 52, 498, 520, 568
Page me42.710
Ternaux, Louis Mortimer (1808-1871) — French politician and historian. — 27
Page me42.710
Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811-1863) — English writer. — 246
Page me42.710
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman, Prime Minister (1836, 1840), deputy to the Constituent (1848) and Legislative (1849-51) Assemblies; head of the Orleanists after 1848; organised the suppression of the Paris Commune (1871); President of the Republic (1871-73). — 274, 290
Page me42.710
Thimm, Franz — bookseller in Manchester. — 136, 477
Page me42.710
Thorbecke, Johann Rudolph (1798-1872) — Netherlandish statesman, leader of the Liberal Party, head of the government (1849-53, 1862-66 and 1871-72). — 243
Page me42.710
Thornton, William Thomas (1813-1880) — British economist, follower of John Stuart Mill. — 455
Page me42.710
Thouvenel, Édouard Antoine (1818-1866) — French statesman and diplomat, Bonapartist; Foreign Minister (1852, 1860-62). — 208
Page me42.710
Thünen, Johann Heinrich von (1783-1850) — German economist, engaged in agricultural economies. — 522, 543
Page me42.710
Tolain, Henri Louis (1828-1897) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, engraver; Right-wing Proudhonist; participant in the inaugural meeting held in St Martin's Hall on 28 September 1864; a leader of the Paris section of the International, delegate to the London Conference (1865), Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International; deputy to the National Assembly, after 4 September 1870; went over to the side of the Versaillists during the Paris Commune, was expelled from the International in April 1871; subsequently a senator. — 3, 15, 47, 66, 85, 109, 130, 213, 263, 318
Page me42.710
Townshend, Marquis — British politician, Tory, an organiser and treasurer of the British National League for the Independence of Poland. — 66, 93, 109

Page Break me42.711

Page me42.711
Trémaux, Pierre (b. 1818) — French naturalist. — 304, 306, 309, 320, 322-24
Page me42.711
Trübner, Nikolaus (1817-1884) — German bookseller and publisher in London. — 151
Page me42.711
Tschudi, Friedrich von (1820-1886) — Swiss zoologist, agronomist and politician. — 28
Page me42.711
Tupper, Martin Farquhar (1810-1889) — English poet, author of trivial moralistic poems. — 568
Page me42.711
Tussy — see Marx, Eleanor
Page me42.711
Twesten, Karl (1820-1870) — German politician, lawyer, represented liberal opposition in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (from 1861); a leader of the Party of Progress; a founder of the National-Liberal Party (1866). — 333
Page me42.711
Tyndall, John (1820-1893) — English physicist. — 67, 91, 117, 212, 571

Page me42.711
U

Page me42.711
Ulmer, Johann — German tailor; member of the Communist League, refugee in London from the early 1850s; supporter of Marx and Engels. — 230
Page me42.711
Urquhart, David (1805-1877) — British diplomat, writer and politician; Turcophile; Tory M.P. (1847-52), opposed Palmerston's policy; founder and editor of The Free Press (1855-77) renamed The Diplomatic Review in 1866. — 19, 54, 154, 183, 349, 434, 465, 508, 510, 520, 547
Page me42.711
Usedom, Karl Georg Ludwig Guido, Count von (1805-1884) — Prussian diplomat, ambassador to Italy (1863-69). — 460, 466

Page me42.711
V

Page me42.711
Venedey, Jakob (1805-1871) — German radical journalist and politician; liberal after the 1848-49 revolution, opposed unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy. — 488
Page me42.711
Vermorel, Auguste Jean Marie (1841-1871) — French journalist, Proudhonist, editor of Le Courrier français (1866-67), member of the Paris Commune (1871). — 413-14, 420, 422, 425, 428
Page me42.711

Véron, Louis Désiré (1798-1867) — French journalist and politician, Orleanist until 1848, then Bonapartist; owner of Le Constitutionnel (1844-52). — 445
Page me42.711
Vésinier, Pierre (1824-1902) — French journalist, anti-Bonapartist, an organiser of the French section of the International in London, delegate to the London Conference (1865) and the Brussels Congress (1868); was expelled from the Central Council of the International for conducting a slanderous campaign against it (1866) and in 1868 expelled from the International; member of the Paris Commune (1871). — 200, 213, 214, 216, 218, 250, 259
Page me42.711
Victor Emmanuel II (Vittorio Emanuele) (1820-1878) — King of Piedmont (Sardinia) (1849-61), King of Italy (1861-78). — 277, 291-92, 457, 459
Page me42.711
Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 458, 475
Page me42.711
Vinçard, Pierre Denis (1820-1882) — French engraver, journalist, participant in the 1848 revolution; active in the co-operative movement, wrote several works on the condition of the working class; member of the International. — 149
Page me42.711
Virchow, Rudolf (1821-1902) — German naturalist and politician; a founder and leader of the Party of Progress. — 34, 360

Page Break me42.712
Page me42.712
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro) (70-19 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 31, 276, 281, 327, 371
Page me42.712
Vogt — Karl Vogt's wife. — 518, 582
Page me42.712
Vogt, August (c. 1830-c. 1883) — prominent in the German and American working-class movement; shoemaker; member of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution; in the General Association of German Workers opposed its Lassallean leaders; member of the International; in 1867 emigrated to the USA, member of the New York Communist Club and an organiser of the International's sections in the United States; supporter of Marx and Engels. — 180, 202, 215, 220, 222, 261, 573
Page me42.712
Vogt, Gustav (1829-1901) — Swiss economist; pacifist, an organiser of the League of Peace and Freedom, editor of Les États-Unis d'Europe (1867-70); Karl Vogt's brother. — 499
Page me42.712
Vogt, Karl (Carl) (1817-1895) — German naturalist, vulgar materialist, petty-bourgeois democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49; left Germany in 1849, received subsidies from Napoleon III; slandered Marx and Engels. — 25, 41, 42, 44, 51, 63, 65, 185, 364, 365, 433, 435, 441, 445, 459, 493, 499, 518, 529, 581
Page me42.712
Voltaire (pen-name of François Marie Arouet) (1694-1778) — French philosopher, writer and historian of the Enlightenment. — 342, 522

Page me42.712
Völter, Daniel — German geographer. — 27

Page me42.712
W

Page me42.712
Wagener, Hermann (1815-1889) — German conservative journalist and politician; editor of the Neue Preussische Zeitung (1848-54); Privy Counsellor of Bismarck's Government (1866-73), a precursor of Prussian 'state socialism'. — 19, 103, 124, 355, 548
Page me42.712
Walpole, Spencer Horatio (Horace) (1806-1898) — British statesman, Tory, Home Secretary (1852, 1858-59, 1866-67). — 300, 384, 394
Page me42.712
Walton, Alfred Armstrong (b. 1816) — a leader in the British democratic movement; architect; took part in the electoral reform movement, member of the General Council of the International (1867-70), delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867). — 416
Page me42.712
Warnebold, Ernst — lawyer in Hanover, member of the Party of Progress, then a National-Liberal, supporter of Bismarck. — 361, 441, 470
Page me42.712
Washington, George (1732-1799) — American statesman, Commander-in-Chief during the war of the North American colonies for independence (1775-83); first President of the United States (1789-97). — 414
Page me42.712
Watts, John (1818-1887) — English journalist, utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen; later a liberal. — 224, 228, 234
Page me42.712
Weber, Josef Valentin (1814-1895) — German watchmaker; participant in the revolutionary movement in Baden in 1848; in 1849 emigrated to Switzerland and then to London; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 415
Page me42.712
Weber, Louis — German watchmaker; after the 1848-49 revolution émigré in Germany, Lassallean, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; in April 1865 was expelled from the Society for the intrigues against Marx and his supporters; Josef Valentin Weber's son. — 150, 190, 415
Page me42.712
Weber, Wilhelm — German watchmaker; Lassallean; refugee in New York after 1864; President of the General Association of German Workers in New York (1866); Josef Valentin Weber's son. — 415
Page me42.712
Weerth, Georg (1822-1856) — German

Page Break me42.713

proletarian poet and journalist, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49), friend of Marx and Engels. — 521
Page me42.713
Wehner, J.G. — German refugee in Manchester; Treasurer of the Schiller Institute in the 1860s; Engels' acquaintance. — 302, 340, 361
Page me42.713
Weiß, Guido (1822-1899) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; belonged to the Party of Progress (Left wing) in the 1860s; editor of the Berliner Reform (1863-66) and Die Zukunft (1867-71). — 433, 437, 495, 504
Page me42.713
Welker, Karl Theodor (1790-1869) — German lawyer and journalist, liberal; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Right Centre) in 1848-49. — 33
Page me42.713
Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, Duke of (1769-1852) — British general and statesman, Tory; in 1808-14 and 1815 commanded troops in the wars against Napoleonic France; Prime Minister (1828-30), Foreign Secretary (1834-35). — 122
Page me42.713
Wermuth — police director in Hanover, an organiser of and witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist trial (1852). — 394
Page me42.713
Weston, John — prominent figure in the British working-class movement; carpenter, subsequently manufacturer; Owenite; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (1864-72); delegate to the London Conference (1865), member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League, a leader of the Land and Labour League. — 16, 17, 159, 162, 168, 224, 464, 485
Page me42.713
Westphalen, Edgar von (1819-1890) — brother of Jenny Marx, Karl Marx's wife; member of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee (1846); in the 1850s-60s lived in emigration in America. — 159, 163, 166, 174, 177, 179, 180, 181, 183, 184, 187, 195, 369, 559, 565
Page me42.713
Westphalen, Ferdinand Otto Wilhelm Henning von (1799-1876) — Prussian statesman, Minister of the Interior (1850-58); step-brother of Jenny Marx, Karl Marx's wife. — 50, 180
Page me42.713
Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to the USA; colonel in the army of the North during the US Civil War; helped to propagate ideas and documents of the International in the USA; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 37, 38, 41, 43-45, 47, 52, 65, 73, 97, 106, 107, 121-25, 152, 377, 565
Page me42.713
Weydemeyer, Louise (née Lüning) (1822-1868) — wife of Joseph Weydemeyer. — 40, 43, 125, 377, 451
Page me42.713

Wheeler, George William — active in the British working-class movement, participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the General Council of the International (1864-67), Treasurer of the Council (1864-65, 1865-67), delegate to the London Conference (1865), member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League. — 361, 362
Page me42.713
Wickede, Julius von (1819-1896) — German army officer and military writer, war correspondent of the Kölnische Zeitung during the Austro-Prussian war (1866) and Franco-Prussian war (1870-71). — 264
Page me42.713
Wigand, Hugo (1822-1873) — German publisher and bookseller; Otto Wigand's son; from 1864 actually headed the firm. — 359, 371, 378, 392, 407, 432
Page me42.713
Wigand, Otto (1795-1870) — German

Page Break me42.714
publisher and bookseller, owner of a firm in Leipzig which published works of radical authors. — 359, 363, 385
Page me42.714
Wilke — Prussian army officer, refugee in London. — 291
Page me42.714
William I (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia, Prince Regent (1858-61), King of Prussia (1861-88) and Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 12, 53, 67, 96, 103, 226, 236, 254, 257, 276, 278, 279, 290, 299, 302, 306, 338, 340, 355, 365, 374
Page me42.714
William I (The Conqueror) (1027-1087) — King of England (1066-87). — 299, 338, 365, 374
Page me42.714
William, Prince of Orange (1840-1879) — Dutch Crown Prince. — 293
Page me42.714
Willich, August (1810-1878) — retired Prussian officer; member of the Communist League, participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; a leader of the sectarian group that split away from the Communist League in 1850; in 1853 emigrated to the USA, took part in the US Civil War on the side of the Northerners. — 40, 147
Page me42.714
Wirth, Max (1822-1900) — German economist and journalist, liberal. — 467
Page me42.714
Wolff, Luigi — Italian major; follower of Mazzini, member of the Association of Mutual Progress (organisation of Italian workers in London); participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, member of the Central Council of the International (1864-65), participant in the London Conference (1865); exposed as an agent of the Bonapartist police in 1871. — 16, 17, 55, 115, 131, 140, 162, 170, 243, 250
Page me42.714
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German teacher; proletarian revolutionary, leading figure in the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1849); emigrated to Switzerland in the summer of 1849 and later to England; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 6, 19, 20, 31, 38, 44, 81, 115, 116, 125, 127, 188, 231, 378, 381, 402, 447, 456, 469

Page me42.714
Wolffsohn — refugee in England, treasurer of the Deutsche Freiheit und Einheit society. — 32
Page me42.714
Wood — lawyer in Manchester. — 127, 128
Page me42.714
Worsaae, Jens Jacob Asmussen (1821-1885) — Danish archaeologist, moderate liberal. — 8
Page me42.714
Wrangel, Friedrich Heinrich Ernst, Count von (1784-1877) — Prussian general; one of the chief participants in the counterrevolutionary coup d'état in Prussia (November 1848); Commander-in-Chief of the allied Prussian and Austrian forces during the Danish war (1864). — 121
Page me42.714
Wurtz, Charles Adolphe (1817-1884) — French organic chemist, adherent of atomic-molecular theory. — 385, 388
Page me42.714
Wuttke, Johann Karl Heinrich (1818-1876) — German historian and politician, professor at Leipzig University; close to the Lassalleans in the 1860s. — 348

Page me42.714
Y

Page me42.714
York — bookseller of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 477

Page me42.714
Z

Page me42.714
Zamoyski, Ladislas (Wladyslaw), Count (1803-1868) — Polish magnate, took part in the insurrection of 1830-31; after its defeat a leader of the Polish conservative monarchist refugees in Paris. — 110
Page me42.714
Zange — owner of a printing shop in Erfurt. — 417

Page Break me42.715

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me42.715

Aaron — the first high priest mentioned in the Bible. — 63
Page me42.715
Achilles (Gr. Myth.) — the bravest Greek warrior in the Trojan War, hero in Homer's Iliad — 67, 129, 447
Page me42.715
Adam (Bib.). — 167
Page me42.715
D'Arnouville, Machault — character in Diderot's Le neveu de Rameau, controller general of finance and treasurer of the seal. — 34
Page me42.715
Bardolph — character in Shakespeare's comedy The Merry Wives of Windsor and his historical drama King Henry IV. — 177
Page me42.715
Bouret — character in Diderot's Le neveu de Rameau, a footman's son who became rich as a controller general. — 34
Page me42.715
Callipso (Gr. Myth.) — a nymph, titan Atlas' daughter in Homer's Odyssey, kept Odysseus (Ulysses) for seven years on the island of Ogygia. — 316
Page me42.715
Charles V — character in Ferdinand Lassalle's drama Franz von Sickingen, Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire. — 66
Page me42.715
Christ, Jesus (Bib.). — 467, 578
Page me42.715
Dioscuri (Gr. Myth.) — Castor and Pollux, the twin brothers, sons of Zeus and Leda, performed many exploits. — 361
Page me42.715
Don Quixote — title character in Cervantes' novel. — 313
Page me42.715
Eve (Bib.). — 246
Page me42.715
Faust — title character in Goethe's tragedy. — 355
Page me42.715
Gretchen — heroine in Goethe's Faust. — 568
Page me42.715
Gulliver — hero in Swift's novel Travels by Gulliver. — 376
Page me42.715
Isaac (Bib.) — patriarch, was saved by an angel when his father Abraham was about to sacrifice him to Jehovah. — 274
Page me42.715
Jesus Christ (Bib.) — see Christ, Jesus
Page me42.715
Jo — character in Louisa May Alcott's novel Little Women. — 370
Page me42.715
John Bull — title character of John Arbuthnot's The History of John Bull (1712); his name is used to personify England or Englishmen. — 300, 356, 513, 521, 582

Page me42.715
Jupiter (Jove) — supreme god of the Romans identified with the Greek Zeus. — 290, 296, 578
Page me42.715
Mercadet — main character in Balzac's Le faiseur, a man encumbered with debts and persecuted by creditors. — 347
Page me42.715
Munchausen — an extravagantly mendacious story-teller. — 118
Page me42.715
Oedipus (Gr. Myth.) — the King of Thebes who solved the riddle of the Sphinx and saved Thebes from the monster; hero of Sophocles' tragedy Oedipus Rex. — 190
Page me42.715
Petrus — character in Hildebrand's novel Camera obscura, a student, shy and unsuccessful suitor. — 242
Page me42.715
Philipp II — character in Schiller's tragedy Don Carlos, King of Spain, a fanatic and despot. — 12, 53, 103
Page me42.715
Posa, Marquis — character in Schiller's tragedy Don Carlos, a noble-minded and freethinking courtier who tried to influence the despotic king. — 12, 53, 103
Page me42.715
Rameau — character in Diderot's Le neveu de Rameau. — 34
Page me42.715
Sabala (Çabalâ) — in Hindu religious mythology the miraculous cow which can fulfil all wishes of its owner. — 242, 245

Page Break me42.716

Page me42.716
Scapin — main character in Moliére's comedy Les fourberies de Scapin, smart servant, mystifier and jester. — 290, 296
Page me42.716
Sickingen, Franz von — title character in Lassalle's play, leader of the knights' uprising in Germany (1522-23), champion for freedom and unification of the country. — 66
Page me42.716
Ulysses (or Odysseus) (Gr. Myth.) — character in Homer's Iliad and Odyssey; king of Ithaca; a leader of the Greek troops during the Trojan War, noted for his eloquence, sagacity and prudence. — 316
Page me42.716
Vasishtha — in the ancient Indian epic poem Ramayana a priest and hermit, owner of the miraculous cow Sabala, which fulfilled all his wishes; character in Heine's poem from the cycle 'Die Heimkehr' (Buch der Lieder). — 242
Page me42.716
Wagner — character in Goethe's Faust, a pedantic and feeble scholar. — 355
Page me42.716

Wiswamitra (Viçvâmitra) — mythical king in the ancient Indian epic poem Ramayana who tried to get hold of the miraculous cow Sabala, which would fulfil all his wishes; character in Heine's poem from the cycle 'Die Heimkehr' (Buch der Lieder). — 242, 245
Page me42.716
Zeus (Gr. Myth.) — the principal god of the Greeks. — 444, 577

Page Break me42.717

INDEX OF QUOTED AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me42.717
[Address from the Working Men's International Association to President Johnson] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— To Andrew Johnson, President of the United States. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 188, May 20, 1865. — 155, 159, 160
Page me42.717
Capital. A Critique of Political Economy. Volume I (present edition, Vol. 35)
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Buch I: Der Produktionsprocess des Kapitals, Hamburg, 1867. — 4, 22, 46, 71, 78, 130, 149, 153, 155, 160, 161, 163, 173, 174-76, 178, 192, 198, 199, 201, 213, 219, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225-28, 232, 233, 262, 269, 271, 278, 282, 289, 291, 295, 312, 319, 325, 328, 331-34, 336, 339, 343-44, 347, 348, 350-52, 357, 358, 359, 362, 363, 366, 367-68, 369, 371, 378, 380-85, 386-89, 390-94, 396, 399, 400, 402-07, 409, 415, 417, 419, 420, 424, 426-27, 431, 432, 436, 437, 439-43, 445, 449-51, 455, 456-58, 461, 463, 464, 467-69, 471, 472, 473, 477, 478, 480, 483, 487-88, 489, 490, 493-95, 497, 498, 502, 503, 504, 509, 511, 514-15, 518, 526, 527, 529, 531, 533-34, 536, 539, 541, 543-44, 546, 548, 551, 552, 553, 555, 565, 568-71, 572, 573, 575, 576, 577, 578, 582
Page me42.717
The Communism of the 'Rheinischer Beobachter' (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Der Kommunismus des Rheinischen Beobachters. In: Deutsche-Brüsseler-Zeitung, Nr. 73, 12. September 1847. — 97
Page me42.717
A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (present edition, Vol. 29)
— Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erstes Heft, Berlin, 1859. — 328, 382, 384, 395, 531, 543
Page me42.717
[A Correction] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Berichtigung. — 346
Page me42.717
A Correction [To the Editor of the Weiße Adler] (present edition, Vol. 20)

— Berichtigung [An den Redakteur des Weißen Adler]. In: Der weiße Adler, Nr. 48, 22. April 1865 (signed: H. Jung). — 143
Page me42.717
[Draft for a Speech on France's Attitude to Poland (Polemics against Peter Fox)] (present edition, Vol. 20). — 55

Page Break me42.718
Page me42.718
The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Der 18te Brumaire des Louis Napoleon. In: Die Revolution. Eine Zeitschrift in zwanglosen Heften. Erstes Heft, New York, 1852. — 57, 139, 165, 363, 531
Page me42.718
The Fenian Prisoners at Manchester and the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21)
— A.M.G. Hardy, secrétaire d'État de Sa Majesté. In: Le Courrier français, No. 163, 24 novembre 1867. — 485
Page me42.718
The First Trial of the 'Neue Rheinische Zeitung' and The Trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Der erste Pressprozess der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung and Prozess des Kreis-Ausschusses der rheinischen Demokraten. In: Zwei politische Prozesse. Verhandelt vor den Februar-Assisen in Köln. Köln, 1849. — 530
Page me42.718
Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17)
— Herr Vogt. London, 1860. — 31, 33, 36, 37, 42, 44, 52, 118, 176, 191, 445, 459, 500, 527, 531, 567
Page me42.718
Hirsch's Confessions (present edition, Vol. 12)
— Hirsch's Selbstbekenntnisse. London, den 9ten April 1853. In: Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung, Nr. 8, 5. Mai 1853. — 118
Page me42.718
Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Address. In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association. Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London. [London,] 1864. — 18, 20, 22, 23, 30, 44, 45, 47, 49, 55, 58, 66, 73, 105, 110, 144, 155, 572
— Address. In: The Miner and Workman's Advocate, No. 93, December 10, 1864. — 54
— Address of the Association. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 160, November 5, 1864. — 18 — Manifest an die arbeitende Klasse Europa's. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 2-3, 21., 30. Dezember 1864. — 18, 26, 102
— Manifest an die arbeitende Classe Europas. In: Mainzer Journal, Nr. 2, 3; 3., 4. Januar 1865. — 63
— The Address. In: St. Louis Daily Press, No. 22, January 10, 1865. — 73

Page me42.718
Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions (present edition, Vol. 20)
— In: The International Courier, Nos. 6-7, February 20, 1867; Nos. 8-10, March 13, 1867. — 315, 316, 326
— In: Le Courrier International, Nos. 8-10, 9 mars 1867, No. 11, 16 mars 1867. — 316
— In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 10, Oktober; Nr. 11, November 1866. — 315
Page me42.718
Lord Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 12)
— In: The People's Paper, Nos. 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, 85 and 86; October 22, 29, November 5, 12, 19, December 10, 17, 24, 1853
— Palmerston; Palmerston and Russia; A Chapter of Modern History; England and Russia. In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3902, 3916, 3930 and 3973, October 19, November 4, 21, 1853, January 11, 1854. — 531
— Palmerston and Russia, London. In: E. Tucker [1853] (Political Fly-Sheets, No. 1). — 531

Page Break me42.719
— Palmerston, What Has He Done? (Palmerston and the Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi). London. In: E. Tucker [1854] (Political Fly-Sheets, No. 2). — 531
Page me42.719
[Notes for an Undelivered Speech on Ireland] (present edition, Vol. 21). — 485
Page me42.719
[Outline of a Report on the Irish Question Delivered to the German Workers' Educational Society in London on December 16, 1867] (present edition, Vol. 21). — 504
Page me42.719
Plagiarism (present edition, Vol. 20)
— (anon.) Plagiarismus. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 291, Beilage, 12. Dezember 1867. — 495, 498, 503, 504, 507, 508-09, 515, 529
Page me42.719
Preface to the First Edition of Volume One of 'Capital' (present edition, Vol. 35)
— Vorwort. London, 25. Juli 1867. In: K. Marx, Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Buch I: Der Produktionsprocess des Kapitals. Hamburg, 1867. — 328, 384, 405, 407, 415
— In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 206, 4. September 1867 (in part). — 423
— A New Work on Political Economy. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 308, September 7, 1867 (in part). — 407, 423
— In: Der Beobachter, Nr. 210, 7. September 1867 (in part). — 494
— Le socialisme en Europe. In: Le Courrier français, No. 106, 1 octobre 1867 (in part). — 407, 428, 447, 449-50
— Du Capital. Critique d'économie politique. In: La Liberté, No. 15, 13 octobre 1867 (in part). — 447-48, 449-50
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie von Karl Marx. Erster Band. Produktionsprozeß des Kapitals. Verlag von Otto Meißner in Hamburg. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 1 and 2, 4. and 11. Januar 1868 (in part). — 527
Page me42.719

The 'President of Mankind' (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Der 'Präsident der Menschheit'. In: Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 102, zweites Blatt, 12. April 1865; Berliner Reform, Nr. 88, 13. April 1865, Beilage. — 140, 152
Page me42.719
On Proudhon [Letter to J.B. Schweitzer] (present edition, Vol. 20) — Über P.-J. Proudhon. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 16-18, 1., 3., 5. Februar 1865. — 67, 75, 79, 102
Page me42.719
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon. Paris-Bruxelles, 1847. — 530
Page me42.719
Provisional Rules of the Association (present edition, Vol. 20)
In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association, Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London. [London,] 1864. — 18, 22, 47, 173, 214
Page me42.719
Record of Marx's Speech on the Attitude of the International Working Men's Association to the Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (present edition, Vol. 20). In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 305, August 17, 1867. In the article 'International Working Men's Association' (in part); Le Courrier français, No. 77, 2 septembre 1867. In the article 'Les Conditions de la paix' (in part). — 420
Page me42.719
Resolutions of the Central Council on the Conflict in the Paris Section (present edition, Vol. 20). — 108, 118, 130, 131
Page me42.719
Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11)

Page Break me42.720
— (anon.) Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozeß zu Köln. Basel, 1853. — 176, 531
— (anon.) Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozess zu Köln. [Boston,] 1853. — 531
Page me42.720
[Review of Engels' Pamphlet 'The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Die preußische Militärfrage und die deutsche Arbeiterpartei. Von Friedrich Engels (Hamburg, Otto Meißner). In: Hermann, 18. März 1865. — 114, 130, 134
Page me42.720
Speech on the Question of Free Trade (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Discours sur la question du libre échange. Bruxelles, 1848. — 530
Page me42.720
Statement [Regarding the Causes of the Breach with the 'Social-Demokrat'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Erklärung. In: Berliner Reform, Nr. 67, 19. März 1865. Beilage. — 129, 134
— Erklärung. In: Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Nr. 79, 20. März 1865. — 129, 133, 134

— Erklärung. In: Hermann, Nr. 325, 25. März 1865. — 134
Page me42.720
[Synopsis of Engels' Pamphlet 'The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Die preußische Militärfrage und die deutsche Arbeiterpartei von Friedrich Engels (Hamburg, Otto Meißner). In: Londoner Anzeiger, 17. März 1865. — 114, 133, 134
Page me42.720
To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America (present edition, Vol. 20)
— An Abraham Lincoln, Präsident der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika. In: Berliner Reform, Nr. 4, 5. Januar 1865, Beilage; Hermann, Nr. 314, 7. Januar 1865. — 63 — To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 169, January 7, 1865. — 49, 161
Page me42.720
To the Editor of the Stuttgart 'Beobachter' (present edition, Vol. 20) — An den Redakteur des Beobachters zu Stuttgart. In: Nordstern, Nr. 287, 10. Dezember 1864. — 37, 41, 42, 43, 45, 46, 50, 52, 53, 56, 102, 567
Page me42.720
[Value, Price and Profit] (present edition, Vol. 20). — 160, 162
Page me42.720
A Warning (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Warnung. In: Der Bote vom Niederrhein, Nr. 57, 13. Mai 1866; Oberrheinischer Courier, Nr. 113, 15. Mai 1866; Mitteldeutsche Volks-Zeitung, Nr. 184, 10. August 1866. — 272, 275

Engels, Frederick
Page me42.720
The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Die deutsche Reichsverfassungs-Campagne. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, London, Hamburg, New York, Nr. 1, Januar 1850; Nr. 2, Februar 1850; Nr. 3, März 1850. — 124
Page me42.720
The Condition of the Working-Class in England. From Personal Observation and Authentic Sources (present edition, Vol. 4)
— Die Lage der arbeitenden Klasse in England. Nach eigner Anschauung und authentischen Quellen. Leipzig, 1845. — 224, 290, 385, 395

Page Break me42.721
— Die Lage der arbeitenden Klasse in England. Nach eigner Anschauung und authentischen Quellen. Leipzig, 1848. — 385
Page me42.721
Herr Tidmann. Old Danish Folk Song (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Herr Tidmann. Altdänisches Volkslied. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 18, 5. Februar 1865. — 68, 79, 94
Page me42.721

Notes on the War in Germany, I-V (present edition, Vol. 20). In: The Manchester Guardian, Nos. 6190, 6194, 6197, 6201, 6204; 20, 25, 28 June and 3, 6 July 1866. — 286, 296
Page me42.721
[Notice Concerning 'The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party'] (present edition, Vol. 20). In: Berliner Reform, Nr. 53, 3. März 1865. — 111
— In: Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Nr. 62, 3. März 1865. — 84, 111, 112, 119
— In: Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 62, 3. März 1865. — 84, 111, 112
Page me42.721
Outlines of a Critique of Political Economy (present edition, Vol. 3) — Umrisse zu einer Kritik der Nationalökonomie. In: Deutsch-französische Jahrbücher, hg. von Arnold Ruge und Karl Marx, 1-ste und 2-te Lieferung, Paris, 1844. — 515
Page me42.721
Po and Rhine (present edition, Vol. 16)
— Po und Rhein. Berlin, 1859. — 365
Page me42.721
The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Die preußische Militärfrage und die deutsche Arbeiterpartei. Hamburg, 1865. — 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 81, 83, 84, 87, 88, 94, 99, 100, 107, 111, 112, 114, 117, 119, 120, 125, 126, 130, 133, 134, 152, 154, 280, 348, 352, 363, 365
— In: Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 68, 9. März 1865 (an extract from the pamphlet entitled 'Für die Arbeiterpartei'). — 126
Page me42.721
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Zukunft'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx, das Kapital. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meissner, 1867, 784 Seiten. 8°. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 254, 30. Oktober 1867, Beilage. — 443, 445, 449, 461, 467, 475, 497
Page me42.721
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Rheinische Zeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. I. Band. Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg, O. Meißner, 1867. — 444, 445, 449, 462, 471, 498
Page me42.721
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Elberfelder Zeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx über das Capital (Hamburg, Verlag von Otto Meißner. I. Band. 1867). In: Elberfelder Zeitung, Nr. 302, 2. November 1867. — 461, 463, 475, 529
Page me42.721
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Düsseldorfer Zeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meißner, 1867. In: Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Nr. 316, 17. November 1867. — 471, 475, 529
Page me42.721
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Beobachter'] (present edition, Vol. 20)

— Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meißner, 1867. In: Der Beobachter, Nr. 303, 27. Dezember 1867. — 493, 495, 498, 500, 503, 507, 510, 511, 512

Page Break me42.722
Page me42.722
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meißner, 1867. In: Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg, Nr. 306, 27. Dezember 1867. — 500, 503, 510, 512
Page me42.722
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Neue Badische Landeszeitung'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meißner, 1867. In: Neue Badische Landeszeitung und Mannheimer Anzeiger, Nr. 20, 21. Januar 1868. — 503
Page me42.722
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Demokratisches Wochenblatt'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— 'Das Kapital' von Marx. I-II. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 12, 13; 21., 28. März 1868. — 539, 540, 546, 552
Page me42.722
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for 'The Fortnightly Review'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx on Capital. — 455, 457, 463, 466, 512, 516, 518, 524, 526, 532, 533, 545, 555, 560, 583
Page me42.722
What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland? I-III (present edition, Vol. 20)
— In: The Commonwealth, Nos. 159, 160, 165; March 24 and 31, May 5, 1866. — 223, 224, 228, 234, 235, 238, 239, 255, 257, 270, 277, 280

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick
Page me42.722
The German Ideology. Critique of Modern German Philosophy According to Its Representatives Feuerbach, B. Bauer and Stirner, and of German Socialism According to Its Various Prophets (present edition, Vol. 5) — Die deutsche Ideologie. Kritik der neusten deutschen Philosophie in ihren Repräsentanten, Feuerbach, B. Bauer und Stirner, und des deutschen Socialismus in seinen verschiedenen Propheten. — 373
Page me42.722
The Great Men of the Exile (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Die grossen Männer des Exils. — 33, 118, 176, 182
Page me42.722
The Holy Family, or Critique of Critical Criticism. Against Bruno Bauer and Company (present edition, Vol. 4)

— Die heilige Familie, oder Kritik der kritischen Kritik. Gegen Bruno Bauer und Konsorten. Frankfurt a. M., 1845. — 360, 365, 530
Page me42.722
Manifesto of the Communist Party (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei. London, 1848. — 4, 214, 215, 530 — Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei. Veröffentlicht im Februar 1848. London, 1865. — 571, 572
Page me42.722
To the Editor of the 'Social-Demokrat'. Statement (present edition, Vol. 20) — An die Redaktion des Social-Demokrat. Erklärung. — 75-78, 79, 81, 89, 95, 96
Page me42.722
To the Editor of the 'Social-Demokrat' (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Erklärung. An die Redaktion des Social-Demokrat. In: Barmer Zeitung, Nr. 60, Elberfelder Zeitung, Nr. 60, 26. Februar 1865. — 113, 114
— Erklärung. An die Redaktion des Social-Demokrat. In: Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Nr. 59, 28. Februar 1865; Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 60, 1. März, Erster Beilage. — 108, 113, 114
— Erklärung. In: Berliner Reform, Nr. 51, 1. März 1865. — 108

Page Break me42.723
— An die Redaktion des Social-Demokrat in Berlin. In: Neue Frankfurter Zeitung, Nr. 60, 1. März 1865. — 114
— An die Redaktion des Social-Demokrat. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 29, 3. März 1865. — 96, 97, 98, 105, 106, 107, 108, 111, 113, 114, 116, 124, 126, 129, 135, 150, 175, 494

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me42.723
Alaux, J.E. Une forme nouvelle du socialisme. Le Congrés ouvrier de Genéve. In: Revue contemporaine, t. 53, 15 octobre 1866. — 338, 340
Page me42.723
Alcott, L. Little Women. — 370
Page me42.723
Andral, G. Clinique médicale, ou choix d'observations recueillies á l'hôpital de la Charité (clinique de M. Lerminier), t. IV, Paris, 1827. — 26
Page me42.723
Arago, F. Astronomie populaire. T. 1-4. Paris-Leipzig, 1854-1857. — 27
Page me42.723
Baer, W. Electricität und Magnetismus. Die Gesetze und das Wirken dieser mächtigen Naturkräfte und ihre Bedeutung für das praktische Leben. Leipzig [1863]. — 27
Page me42.723
Balzac, Honoré de. Le chef-d'oeuvre inconnu. — 348
— Le faiseur. — 348
— Melmoth réconcilié. — 348
Page me42.723

Becker, B. Botschaft des Präsidenten. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 3, 30. Dezember 1864. — 65, 104
— Rede des Vereins-Präsidenten Bernhard Becker, gehalten in der Versammlung der Hamburger Mitglieder des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins am 22. März 1865. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 39, 26. März 1865, Beilage. — 139, 140, 191
Page me42.723
Becker, H. [Speech in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on 11 February 1865.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 22, 15. Februar 1865. — 94
Page me42.723
Becker, J. Ph. (anon.) The International Working Men's Association. In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 145, December 16, 1865. — 214
— (anon.) Rundschreiben der deutschen Abtheilung des Zentral Komites der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation für die Schweiz an die Arbeiter. Genf, den 1. November 1865. — 214
— Zur Friedens- und Freiheitsliga. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 12, Dezember 1867. — 581
Page me42.723
Beesly, E.S. Catiline as a Party Leader. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. I, May 15 to August 1, 1865. — 185
Page me42.723
Berghaus, H. Physikalischer Schul-Atlas. Gotha, 1850. — 28
Page me42.723
[Bettziech, H.] Die Frau in Weiß. Drama in 5 Acten, mit freier Benutzung von Wilkie Collins. In: Kladderadatsch, Nr. 52 und 53, 18. November 1866. — 336
Page me42.723
Bible
The Old Testament
Genesis. — 274
The New Testament
Luke. — 509
Matthew. — 467, 578

Page Break me42.724
Page me42.724
Bismarck, O. [Speech in the North German Parliament on 11 March 1867]. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 33, 15. März 1867. — 355
— [Speech in the North German Parliament on 18 March 1867]. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 35, 20. März 1867. — 351
Page me42.724
Blanc, L. Lettres de Londres. In: Le Temps, No. 1815, 23 avril 1866. — 270
Page me42.724
Blind, K. [Address.] In: Der deutsche Eidgenosse, Nr. 1, 15. März 1865. — 119
— (anon.) Bradford, 25. Oct. In: Der Beobachter, Nr. 268, 17. November 1864. — 41, 44, 45, 51, 52, 107
— Ein Freundeswort an Deutschlands Arbeiter, Bürger und Bauer. In: Hermann, 6. Juni 1863. — 36
— (anon.) German Democracy. In: The Morning Star, February 24, 1865. — 110

— [Letter to the American People.] In the article 'Bescheidenheit — ein Ehrenkleid'. In: Der Beobachter, Nr. 245, 21. Oktober 1864. — 27, 44
— (anon.) [Regarding the Causes of Marx's and Engels' Breach with the Social-Demokrat.] In: Neue Frankfurter Zeitung, Nr. 64, 5. März 1865; Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 31, 8. März 1865. — 120, 126, 129
— (anon.) [A Republican Protest.] In: Neue Frankfurter Zeitung, Nr. 270, 29. September 1864. — 30, 38, 41, 44
— (anon.) Ein republikanischer Protest. London, 17. September 1864. In: Die Westliche Post, October-beginning of November 1864. — 30, 38, 41, 44, 57
— (anon.) Republikanischer Protest. In: Hermann, Nr. 2407, 8. Oktober 1864. 30, 38, 41, 44
Page me42.724
Borkheim, S. Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve. Bruxelles, 1867. — 419, 435, 436, 437, 440-41, 443, 446, 449, 452-53, 478, 513
— Meine Perle vor dem Genfer Congress. Von einem literarischen Diplomaten. Zürich, 1868. — 435, 441, 478, 513
Page me42.724
B[orkheim], S. Russische politische Flüchtlinge in West-Europa. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 5, 6, 17, 20, 1., 8. February, 25. April, 16. Mai 1868. — 539, 552
Page me42.724
Bright, J. [Speech in the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce on 19 January 1865.] In: The Times, No. 25087, January 20, 1865. — 71, 74 — [Speech on Parliamentary Reform delivered at a meeting in Rochdale on 3 January 1866.] In: The Times, No. 25386, January 4, 1866. — 212
Page me42.724
Das Buch der Erfindungen, Gewerbe und Industrien. 3 Bände. 3. Auflage. Leipzig, 1858. — 188
Page me42.724
Büchner, L. Force et matiére. Études philosophiques et empiriques de sciences naturelles. Paris, Brüssel, Leipzig, 1863. — 368
— Kraft und Stoff. Empirisch-naturphilosophische Studien. Frankfurt a. M., 1855. — 368
Page me42.724
Burns, R. Is there for honest poverty. — 91
Page me42.724
Caesar (Gaius Julius Caesar). Commentarii de bello Gallico. — 558
Page me42.724
Cervantes de Saavedra (Miguel de). Don Quixote. — 313
Page me42.724
Chaucer, G. Canterbury Tales. — 246
Page me42.724
Cicero (Marcus Tulius Cicero). Oratio pro Sextio. — 136
Page me42.724
Clement, K.J. Schleswig, das urheimische Land des nicht dänischen Volks der Angeln und Frisen und Englands Mutterland, wie es war und ward. Hamburg, 1862. — 8

Page Break me42.725
Page me42.725
Cluseret, [G.-P.] Mentana. In: Le Courrier français, No. 173, 7 décembre 1867. — 496
Page me42.725
[Collet, C.D.] Russia's Designs on the Pope. In: The Free Press, Vol. XII, No. 12, December 7, 1864. — 52, 54
Page me42.725
Collins, W. The Woman in White, 2 vols. Leipzig, 1860. — 336
Page me42.725
Comte, A. Cours de philosophie positive. T. 1-6. Paris, 1830-1842. — 292
Page me42.725
Cotta, B. Geologische Briefe aus den Alpen. Leipzig, 1850. — 28
Page me42.725
Cuvier, G. Discours sur les révolutions de la surface du globe, et sur les changemens qu'elles ont produits dans le régne animal. 8th ed. Paris, 1840. — 322, 323
Page me42.725
Darwin, Ch. On the Origin of Species by means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life. London, 1859. — 136, 304, 322, 323, 327, 494
Page me42.725
Demokratische Studien. Unter Mitwirkung von L. Bamberger, Karl Grün, Moritz Hartmann, Friedrich Kapp, F. Lassalle, Michelet, H.B. Oppenheim, Ludwig Simon aus Trier, Adolf Stahr, Carl Vogt u. A., herausgegeben von Ludwig Walesrode. Hamburg, 1860. — 365
Page me42.725
Denis (de Chateaugiron). L'Anti-Proudhon. Rennes, 1860. — 218
Page me42.725
Denis, H. La question polonaise et la démocratie. In: La Tribune du Peuple, Nos. 41, 42, 43, 45, 46; 5, 26 mars, 17 avril, 29 mai, 30 juin 1864. — 213, 223
Page me42.725
Derby, E. [Statement on the Luxemburg Treaty, 20 June 1867.] In: The Times, No. 25843, June 21, 1867. — 394
Page me42.725
Diderot, D. Le neveu de Rameau. — 34
Page me42.725
Diogenes Laertius. De vitis philosophorum. — 373
Page me42.725
Disraeli, B. Vivian Grey. — 300
— [Speech made at Oxford on 25 November 1864.] In: The Times, No. 25040, November 26, 1864. Mr. Disraeli at Oxford. — 48
— [Speech in the House of Commons on 4 June 1866.] In: The Times, No. 25516, June 5, 1866. — 282 — [Speech in the House of Commons on 24 July 1866.] In: The Times, No. 25559, July 25, 1866. The Hyde Park Riots; see also Hansard's Parliamentary Debates, Vol. 184, London, 1866, p. 1414. — 300
Page me42.725

Dubois, L. Les Conditions de la paix. In: Le Courrier français, No. 77, 2 septembre 1867. — 420
Page me42.725
Dühring, E. Capital und Arbeit. Neue Antworten auf alte Fragen. Berlin, 1865. — 536
— Kritische Grundlegung der Volkswirtschaftslehre. Berlin, 1866. — 544
— Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg, 1867. In: Ergänzungsblätter zur Kenntniß der Gegenwart. 3. Band. 3. Heft, Hildburghausen, 1867, S. 182-86. — 511, 513, 514-15, 522, 536, 537, 543
— Natürliche Dialektik. Neue logische Grundlegungen der Wissenschaft und Philosophie. Berlin, 1865. — 520, 544
— Die Schicksale meiner socialen Denkschrift für das Preussische Staatsministerium. Zugleich ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Autorrechts und der Gesetzesanwendung. Berlin, 1868. — 548 — Die Verkleinerer Carey's und die Krisis der Nationalökonomie. 16 Briefe. Breslau,

Page Break me42.726
1867. — 522, 536, 537, 548, 551, 555
Page me42.726
Duller, E. Geschichte des deutschen Volkes. Leipzig, 1840. — 27
Page me42.726
Duncker, M. Geschichte des Alterthums. Bände 1-4. Berlin, 1852-1857. — 27
Page me42.726
Dunning, T.J. Trades Unions and Strikes: Their Philosophy and Intention. London, 1860. — 159
Page me42.726
[Dupanloup, F.] Lettre á M. Ratazzi président du conseil des ministres du roi d'Italie sur les entreprises de Garibaldi par Mgr L'Éveque d'Orléans. Paris, 1867. — 460
Page me42.726
Eccarius, J.G. The Geneva Peace Congress. To the Editor of the 'Bee-Hive'. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 325, January 4, 1868. — 519
— (anon.) International Working Men's Congress (From a correspondent). In: The Times, Nos. 25909, 25911, 25912, 25913; September 6, 9, 10, 11, 1867. — 422, 425, 428, 434, 437
— (anon.) London. 16. Febr. [Die 'Times' und die Bauarbeiter. Arbeiter-Bildungsverein.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 24, 19. Februar 1865. — 101, 106, 107-08
— A Working Man's Refutation of Some Points of Political Economy endorsed and advocated by John Stuart Mill. In: The Commonwealth, Nos. 192-95, 198, 200, 203, 204, 206-211; November 10, 17 and 24, December 1 and 25, 1866; January 5 and 26, February 2, 16 and 23, March 2, 9, 16 and 23, 1867. — 394
Page me42.726
Egli, J.J. Neue Handelsgeographie. Erdkunde der Waarenerzeugung und des Waarenumsatzes. St. Gallen, Leipzig, 1862. — 28, 188
— Praktische Erdkunde mit Illustrationen. St. Gallen, 1860. — 188
— Praktische Schweizerkunde für Schule und Haus. 2. Aufl. St. Gallen, 1861. — 188
Page me42.726

[Eichhoff, W.] Stieber. In: Hermann, Nr. 36, 37, 38, 40, 42, 43; 10., 17., 24. September; 8., 22., 29. Oktober 1859. — 349
Page me42.726
Der Feldzug von 1866 in Deutschland. Redigirt von der kriegsgeschichtlichen Abtheilung des Großen Generalstabes. Berlin, 1867. — 510, 517, 523
Page me42.726
Figuier, L. L'année scientifique et industrielle ou exposé annuel des travaux scientifiques, des inventions et des principales applications de la science á l'industrie et aux arts. An annual edition published in Paris from 1857. — 27
Page me42.726
Fox, P. The British coup d'état in Ireland. In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 136, October 14, 1856. — 228
— The Influence of Irish National Feeling upon the Relations between Great Britain and the United States. In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 137, October 21, 1865. — 228
— The Irish Difficulty. Continued. A Postscript. In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 138, October 28, 1865. — 228
— The Irish Question. In: The Commonwealth, Nos. 153, 154, February 10 and 17, 1866. — 230
— (anon.) [Report about the Central Council meeting of 14 November 1865.] In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 141, November 18, 1865, under the title 'The International Working Men's Association'. — 199
Page me42.726
Fraas, K. Die Ackerbaukrisen und ihre Heilmittel. Leipzig, 1866. — 548 — Geschichte der Landwirthschaft, oder: Geschichtliche Übersicht der Fortschritte

Page Break me42.727
landwirthschaftlicher Erkenntnisse in den letzten 100 Jahren. Prag, 1852. — 548, 559
— Historisch-encyklopädischer Grundriß der Landwirthschaftslehre. Stuttgart, 1848. — 548
— Klima und Pflanzenwelt in der Zeit, ein Beitrag zur Geschichte beider. Landshut, 1847. — 548, 559 — Die Natur der Landwirthschaft. Beitrag zu einer Theorie derselben. Bd. 1-2. München, 1857. — 507, 510, 548
Page me42.727
Frankenheim, M.L. Völkerkunde. Charakteristik und Physiologie der Völker. Breslau, 1852. — 28
Page me42.727
Freiligrath, F. Westphalian Summer Song. From the German. In: The Athenaeum, No. 2019, July 7, 1866. — 290
Page me42.727
Freytag, G. Neue Bilder aus dem Leben des deutschen Volkes. Leipzig, 1862. — 27 — Soll und Haben. Roman in sechs Büchern. In 1855 and 1856 six editions appeared. — 28
Page me42.727
Fribourg, E. et Limousin, Ch. [Report on the London Conference of 1865.] In: L'Opinion nationale, No. 277, 8 octobre 1865; L'Avenir national, 12 octobre 1865. — 199, 201

Page me42.727
Garrido, F. Das heutige Spanien, seine geistige und äußerliche Entwickelung im 19. Jahrhundert. Deutsch von Arnold Ruge. Leipzig, 1863. — 28
Page me42.727
Geib, A. [Speech at the General Assembly of the General Association of German Workers on 24 November 1867.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 139, 29. November 1867, erste Beilage. — 495
Page me42.727
Gentz, F. von. Aus dem Nachlasse Friedrichs von Gentz. Bände 1-2. Wien, 1867-1868. — 520
— Vertrauliche Bemerkungen über den Stand und die nächste Zukunft der russischtürkischen Angelegenheiten. In: Gentz, F.V., Schriften, 5. Theil. Mannheim, 1840. — 479
Page me42.727
Gerhardt, Ch. et Chancel, G. Précis d'analyse chimique qualitative. Deuxiéme édition. Paris, 1862. — 385, 387
Page me42.727
Die Geschichtsschreiber der deutschen Vorzeit. Hrsg. von G.H. Pertz, J. Grimm, K. Lachmann, L. Ranke, K. Ritter. Die Urzeit. 1. Bd. Berlin, 1849. — 373, 558
Page me42.727
Giebel, C.G. Die Säugethiere in zoologischer, anatomischer und paleontologischer Beziehung. Leipzig, 1855. — 28
Page me42.727
Gneist, H.-R. [Speech in the Chamber of Deputies of the Prussian Landtag on 21 March 1865.] In: Berliner Reform, Nr. 69, 22. März 1865, Beilage. — 154, 157
Page me42.727
Goethe, J.W. von. Faust. Der Tragödie, Erster Teil. — 355, 356
— Der Fischer. — 25
— Totalität. Epigrammatisch. — 504
Page me42.727
Graff, E.G. Althochdeutscher Sprachschatz oder Wörterbuch der althochdeutschen Sprache ..., Th. 1-6. Berlin, 1834-1842. — 554
Page me42.727
Griesheim, G. von. Vorlesungen über die Taktik. Berlin, 1855. — 303
Page me42.727
Grimm, J. Deutsche Rechtsalterthümer. 2. Ausg. Göttingen, 1854. — 548, 554, 558

Page Break me42.728
Page me42.728
Grimm, W. Die Deutsche Heldensage. Göttingen, 1829. — 168
Page me42.728
Grimm, Brüder. Kinder- und Haus-Märchen. Bd. 1-3. Berlin, 1812-1822. — 168
Page me42.728
Grove, W.R. The Correlation of Physical Forces. 3rd. ed. London, 1855 (1st edition came out in 1846). — 138
Page me42.728

Grube, A.W. Biographieen aus der Naturkunde, in ästhetischer Form und religiösem Sinne. Stuttgart, 1850. — 28
Page me42.728
Grün, K. Armées permanentes ou milices. IV. Ce que l'Allemagne du Sud a fait et ce qu'elle pourrait faire. In: Les Etats-Unis d'Europe, No. 7, 16 février 1868. — 534, 540-41
Page me42.728
Guhl, E. und Koner, W. Das Leben der Griechen und Römer nach antiken Bildwerken. Berlin, 1862. — 28
Page me42.728
Harrison, F. The Limits of Political Economy. In: The Fortnightly Review. Vol. I, May 15 to August 1, 1865. — 185
Page me42.728
Harting, P. Die Macht des Kleinen sichtbar in der Bildung der Rinde unseres Erdballs oder Uebersicht der Gestaltung, der geographischen und geologischen Verbreitung der Polypen, Foraminiferen und kieselschaligen Bacillarien. Aus dem Holländischen übersetzt von Dr. A. Schwartzkopf, mit einem Vorworte von M.J. Schleiden, Dr. Leipzig, 1851. — 28
Page me42.728
Hebel, J.P. Der Schwarzwälder im Breisgau. — 188
Page me42.728
Hegel, G.W.F. Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse, Dritte Ausgabe. Heidelberg, 1830. — 382
— Phänomenologie des Geistes. In: G.W.F. Hegel, Werke. 2-te Aufl., Bd. 2, Berlin, 1841. — 522, 556
— Vorlesungen über die Naturphilosophie als der Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse. In: G.W.F. Hegel, Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bd. 7. Berlin, 1842. — 138, 184-85
— Vorlesungen über die Philosophie der Geschichte. In: G.W.F. Hegel, Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bd. 9. Berlin, 1840. — 370
— Wissenschaft der Logik. In: G.W.F. Hegel, Werke, 2-te Aufl., Bd. 3-5. Berlin, 1841. — 138, 382
Page me42.728
Heine, H. Atta Troll, Ein Sommernachtstraum. — 32, 52
— Den König Wiswamitra ... In: Buch der Lieder. Die Heimkehr. — 242, 245 — Deutschland. Ein Wintermärchen. — 52
Page me42.728
[Heinzen, K.] Der deutsche Hunger und die deutschen Fürsten. In: Deutsche Brüsseler Zeitung, Nr. 49, 20. Juni 1847. — 31
Page me42.728
Herwegh, G. An die Redaktion des 'Social-Demokrat' — see Rüstow, W., Herwegh, G.
— Zur Beachtung. In: Nordstern, Nr. 303, 1. April 1865. — 140
Page me42.728
Herwegh, G., Rüstow, W., Reusche, F. Protest. In: Nordstern, Nr. 300, 11. März 1865. — 134
Page me42.728

H[eß, M.] Paris, 10. Jan. [Arb.-Associationen. Internat. Arb.-Assoc. 'Avenir national'.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 8, 13. Januar 1865. — 65, 66, 68, 80
— Paris, 25. Jan. [Associationswesen. Clerus. Der oppositionelle Wahlsieg.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 15, 29. Januar 1865. — 70
— Paris, 28. Januar. [Internationale Arbeiter-Association. — Geldkrisis.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 16, 1. Februar 1865. — 75

Page Break me42.729
— Paris, 4. Febr. [Neue Gesetzvorschläge betr. Cooperativ-Associationen. Die internationale Arbeiter-Association. Unterrichtsfrage.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 19, 8. Februar 1865. — 83
— Paris, 7. Febr. [Amerika. — Der Orient. — Italien. — Die Internationale Arbeiter-Association.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 21, 12. Februar 1865. — 89, 95
— Paris, 4. Mai. [Amerika. Internationale Association. Arbeiterindustrieausstellung. Städtisches Octroi. Italien und Rom. Militairfrage.] In: Der Social-Demokrat. Nr. 57, 7. Mai 1865, Beilage. — 157
— Paris, 27. Aug. [Der Congreß der 'internationalen Arbeiter-Association' vertragt. Arbeitseinstellungen und Getreidepreise.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 130, 30. August 1865. — 190
Page me42.729
Heß, M. Eine Warnung. In: Nordstern, Nr. 320, 19. August 1865. — 190
Page me42.729
Hildebrand, Camera obscura. Haarlem, 1839. — 242
Page me42.729
Hirschfeld, R. [Statement.] In: Hermann, Nr. 426, 2. März 1867. — 349
Page me42.729
Der Hochverraths-Prozeß wider Ferdinand Lassalle vor dem Staats-Gerichts-Hofe zu Berlin am 12. März 1864. Nach dem stenographischen Bericht. Berlin, 1864. — 30
Page me42.729
Hoffmann, E.T.A. Klein-Zaches, genannt Zinnober. — 230, 232, 233
Page me42.729
Hofmann, A.W. Einleitung in die moderne Chemie. Nach einer Reihe von Vorträgen gehalten in dem Royal College of Chemistry zu London. Braunschweig, 1866. — 382, 385
Page me42.729
Hofstetten, J.B. [Speech at the General Assembly of the General Association of German Workers on 24 November 1867.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 139, 29. November 1867, erste Beilage. — 495
Page me42.729
Holyake, G.J. The Interview with Mr. Walpole. In: The Times, No. 25561, July 27, 1866. — 300
Page me42.729
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Carminum, III. — 340
— Carminum, IV. — 250
— Satirarum, II, III. — 73
Page me42.729

Hübner, O. [Address to the electors.] In: Le Courrier français, No. 81, 6 septembre 1867. — 421, 422
Page me42.729
Jacobs, F. Hellas. Vorträge über Heimath, Geschichte, Literatur und Kunst der Hellenen. Berlin, 1852. — 28
Page me42.729
Jones, E. A Letter to the Advocates of the Co-operative Principle, and to the Members of Co-operative Societies (present edition, Vol. 11). In: Notes to the People, Vol. 1, No. 2, May 10, 1851. — 15
— Co-operation. What It Is, and What It Ought To Be (present edition, Vol. 11). In: Notes to the People, Vol. 1, No. 21, September 20, 1851. — 15 — [Speech at the trial of the Fenians in Manchester on 8 November 1867.] In: The Times, No. 25964, November 9, 1867. — 466
Page me42.729
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis). Satirarum. — 504
Page me42.729
Kant, I. Kritik der reinen Vernunft. Riga, 1781. — 238
Page me42.729
Kekulé, A. Lehrbuch der Organischen Chemie oder der Chemie der Kohlenstoffverbindungen. Bände I-III. Erlangen, 1861-1867. — 387
Page me42.729
Kiesselbach, W. Der Gang des Welthandels und die Entwicklung des europäischen Völkerlebens im Mittelalter. Stuttgart, 1860. — 28

Page Break me42.730
Page me42.730
K[ugelmann, L.] [Notice on Volume One of Capital.] In: Deutsche Volkszeitung, 10. November 1867. — 473, 489-90
Page me42.730
La Fontaine. Les voleurs et l'ane. — 438
Page me42.730
Lange, F.A. Die Arbeiterfrage in ihrer Bedeutung für Gegenwart und Zukunft. Duisburg, 1865. — 127, 136-38
Page me42.730
Lange, L. Römische Alterthümer. 2 Bde. Berlin, 1856-1862. — 27
Page me42.730
Lapinski, Th. Die Bergvölker des Kaukasus und ihr Freiheitskampf gegen die Russen. Bände I-II. Hamburg, 1863. — 163
Page me42.730
Laplace, P.-S. Exposition du systéme du monde. Tomes 1-2. Paris, l'an IV de la République Française [1796]. — 184, 187
Page me42.730
Lassalle, F. Franz von Sikingen. Eine historische Tragödie. Berlin, 1859. — 66
— Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. Berlin, 1864. — 329

— Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos. Nach einer neuen Sammlung seiner Bruchstücke und der Zeugnisse der Alten dargestellt. Bände 1-2. Berlin, 1858. — 363
Page me42.730
Lau, Th. Lucius Cornelius Sulla. Eine Biografie. Hamburg, 1855. — 28
Page me42.730
Laurent, A. Méthode de Chimie. Paris, 1854. — 385
Page me42.730
Lefort, H. [Letter to L'Association of 25 March 1865.] In: L'Association, No. 6, avril 1865. — 140
Page me42.730
[Le Lubez, V.] Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Exposition de principes. In: L'Echo de Verviers, No. 301, 27 décembre 1865. — 212-13, 214, 216
Page me42.730
Le Prince de Beaumont. La Belle et la Bête. — 242
Page me42.730
Liebig, J. Die Chemie in ihrer Anwendung auf Agricultur und Physiologie. 7. Aufl., Th. I-II. Braunschweig, 1862. — 227, 232, 507
Page me42.730
Liebknecht, W. [Speech at a meeting of the Berlin branch of the General Association of German Workers on 27 March 1865.] In: C. Schilling, Die Ausstoßung des Präsidenten Bernhard Becker aus dem Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Verein und der 'Social-Demokrat'. Berlin, 1865. — 176, 191, 201 — [Speech in the North-German Parliament on 30 September 1867.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 229, 1. Oktober 1867. — 433, 444, 445
— [Speech in the North-German Parliament on 17 October 1867.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 245, 19. Oktober 1867. — 513
— [Speech in the Berlin Printers' Association on Marx's and Engels' breach with Der Social-Demokrat on 28 February 1865.] In: Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 63, 4. März 1865 under the heading Der Standpunkt der Arbeiterpartei. — 134 — Report on the Working-Class Movement in Germany. Ms. [1865]. — 190, 201 — Was ich im Berliner 'Reichstag' sagte. Nach den stenographischen Berichten veröffentlicht. Leipzig [1867]. — 477, 479, 488, 492, 499, 505
Page me42.730
Liebknecht, W. und Bebel, A. Adresse an den Wiener Gemeinderat. In: Neue Preußische Zeitung, 1. Dezember 1867. — 492, 505
Page me42.730
The Life and Memoirs of Algernon Sidney. — 273, 275
Page me42.730
[Lincoln, A.] Mr. Lincoln and the International Working Men's Association (signed: Charles Francis Adams). London, Jan. 31. In: The Times, No. 25101, February 6, 1865. — 73, 80, 86, 161

Page Break me42.731
— President Lincoln and the International Working Men's Association (signed: Charles Francis Adams). In: The Express, February 6, 1865. — 86

Page me42.731
Livy (Titus Livius). Ab urbe condita libri. — 17, 52, 295
Page me42.731
Longuet, Ch. La question agricole, et le libre échange. In: La Rive gauche, No. 15, 15 avril 1866. — 281
Page me42.731
Macaulay, Th. B. The History of England from the Accession of James the Second. 10th ed. 5 vol. London, 1854-1861. — 28
Page me42.731
McCulloch, J.R. The Principles of Political Economy. The first edition appeared in Edinburgh in 1825. — 408
Page me42.731
Macleod, H.D. The Theory and Practice of Banking: with the Elementary Principles of Currency; Prices; Credit; and Exchanges. In two volumes. Second edition. London, 1866. The first edition appeared in 1855-56. — 511, 543
Page me42.731
[Malthus, Th. R.] An Essay on the Principle of Population, as It Affects the Future Improvement of Society, with Remarks on the Speculations of Mr. Godwin, M. Condorcet, and other Writers. London, 1798. — 136
Page me42.731
Martin, H. [Preface to the report of the French delegates on the London Conference.] In: Le Siécle, 14 octobre 1865. — 202
Page me42.731
Maurer, G.L. Einleitung zur Geschichte der Mark-, Hof-, Dorf- und Stadt-Verfassung und der öffentlichen Gewalt. München, 1854. — 547-49, 554, 557
— Geschichte der Dorfverfassung in Deutschland. Bände 1-2. Erlangen, 1865-1866. — 547-49, 554, 557
— Geschichte der Fronhöfe, der Bauernhöfe und der Hofverfassung in Deutschland. Bände I-IV. Erlangen, 1862-1863. — 547-49, 554, 557
— Geschichte der Markenverfassung in Deutschland. Erlangen, 1856. — 547-49, 554, 557
Page me42.731
Mazade, Ch. La Russie sous l'empereur Alexandre II. — La société et le gouvernement russes depuis l'insurrection polonaise. In: Revue des deux Mondes, T. 62, 15 mars 1866. — 257
Page me42.731
Metzner, Th., Vogt, A., Liebknecht, W. Erklärung. In: Volks-Zeitung, Nr. 145, 24. Juni 1865. — 180
Page me42.731
Mignet, F.A. Histoire de la Révolution française, depuis 1789 jusqu'en 1814. 2 vols. Paris, 1824. — 28
Page me42.731
Mill, J.S. [Speech in the House of Commons on 17 April 1866.] In: The Times, No. 25475, 18 April 1866. — 269
Page me42.731

Miquel, J. [Speech in the North-German Parliament on 9 April 1867.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 45, 12. April 1867. — 373
Page me42.731
The Miller of the Dee. — 241, 244, 249
Page me42.731
Moilin, J.-A. (le docteur Tony). Leçons de médecine physiologique. Paris, 1866. — 310, 319, 320, 324, 325, 327, 344
Page me42.731
Moleschott, J. Lehre der Nahrungsmittel. Für das Volk. Erlangen, 1850. — 28
Page me42.731
Moliére. Les fourberies de Scapin. — 290, 296
Page me42.731
Moltke, H.K.B. Der russisch-türkische Feldzug in der europäischen Türkei 1828 und 1829. Berlin, 1845. — 520

Page Break me42.732
Page me42.732
Mommsen, Th. Römische Geschichte. 3 Bde. Berlin, 1854-1856. — 27
Page me42.732
Möser, J. Osnabrückische Geschichte. Theil 1. Berlin und Stettin, 1780. — 547
— Patriotische Phantasien, Theil 3. Berlin, 1820. — 558
Page me42.732
Mozin-Peschier. Dictionnaire complet des langues française et allemande. ... 4 éd. 4 vols. Stuttgart, 1863. — 28
Page me42.732
Müller, J. Grundriß der Physik und Meteorologie. Für Lyceen, Gymnasien. Gewerbe- und Realschulen, sowie zum Selbstunterrichte. 5. Aufl. Braunschweig, 1856. — 27
Page me42.732
Münster, G.H. Politische Skizzen über die Lage Europas vom Wiener Congreß bis zur Gegenwart (1815-1867). Leipzig, 1867. — 520
Page me42.732
Murchison, R.I., Verneuil, E. de, Keyserling, Count Alexander von. The Geology of Russia in Europe and the Ural Mountains. In two volumes. London, Paris, 1845. — 164
Page me42.732
Napoleon III. [Speech in Osere on 6 May 1866.] In: The Times, No. 25492, May 8, 1866. — 274
Page me42.732
The New American Cyclopaedia. A Popular Dictionary of General Knowledge. Edited by George Ripley and Charles A. Dana. Vol. 1-16, New York. — 531
Page me42.732
Nösselt, F.A. Abriß der allgemeinen Weltgeschichte bis auf die neusten Zeiten. Breslau, 1814. — 27
Page me42.732
Nougués, L. L'Art militaire et le progrés. In: Le Courrier français, Nos. 123, 125; 18, 20 octobre 1867. — 455
Page me42.732

Österreichs Kämpfe im Jahre 1866. Nach Feldacten bearbeitet durch das K.K. Generalstabs-Bureau für Kriegsgeschichte. Bd. I. Wien, 1867. — 510
Page me42.732
Overbeck, J. Pompeji in seinen Gebäuden, Alterthümern und Kunstwerken. Für Kunstund Alterthumsfreunde. Leipzig, 1856. — 28
Page me42.732
Pauli, R. Bilder aus Alt-England. Gotha, London & Edinburgh, 1860. — 28
Page me42.732
[Polo, M.] Marco Paolo's Reise in der Orient, während der Jahre 1272 bis 1295. Nach den vorzüglichsten Original-Ausgaben verdeutscht, und mit einem Kommentar begleitet von Felix Peregrin. Ronneburg und Leipzig, 1802. — 28
Page me42.732
Preller, L. Griechische Mythologie. Bd. 1-2. Leipzig, 1854. — 27
Page me42.732
Prokesch-Osten, A. Geschichte des Abfalls der Griechen vom Türkischen Reiche im Jahre 1821 und der Gründung des Hellenischen Königreiches. Bd. 1-6. Wien, 1867. — 464, 520 — Conference held on August the 27th, 1822, at Constantinople. From the Work of Baron Prokesch. In: The Diplomatic Review, October 2, 1867. — 464
Page me42.732
Proudhon, R.-J. Lettres inédites de P.-J. Proudhon sur les générations spontanées. In: Le Courrier français, No. 121, 123, 124; 16, 18, 19 octobre 1867. — 455
Page me42.732
Prozeß gegen den Schriftsteller Herrn Ferdinand Lassalle, verhandelt zu Düsseldorf vor der korrektionellen Appellkammer am 27. Juni 1864 (Separat-Abdruck aus der Düsseldorfer Zeitung, Nr. 176, 177, 178). Düsseldorf, 1864. — 12, 38
Page me42.732
Pyat, F. Addresse des Démocrates Français á leur Fréres d'Irlande et d'Angleterre. Paris, 2 décembre 1867. In: The Times, No. 26015, January 8, 1868. Under the general heading: The French Democrats and the Fenians. — 516

Page Break me42.733
Page me42.733
Ramayana. — 242
Page me42.733
Rasch, G. Ein Immortellenkranz auf das Grab eines Märtyrers (Max Dortu). In: Der deutsche Eidgenosse [Nr. 1], 15. März 1865. — 119
— Vom verlassenen Bruderstamm. Das dänische Regiment in Schleswig-Holstein. Bde. 1-2. Berlin, 1862; Bd. 3. 1863. — 34
— Vom verlassenen Bruderstamm. Der Krieg in Schleswig-Holstein im Jahre 1864. Bde. 1-2, Leipzig, 1864. — 34
— Zwölf Streiter der Revolution — see Struve, G. und Rasch, G. — 397
Page me42.733
Régnault, É. Histoire politique et sociale des principautés danubiennes. Paris, 1855. — 163
— La question européenne improprement appelée polonaise. Paris, 1863. — 163

Page me42.733
Régnier, M. Stances. — 453
— Epigrammes. — 453-54
Page me42.733
Reusche, F. Falsche Freunde und offene Feinde. In: Nordstern, Nr. 304, 8. April 1865. — 147
Page me42.733
Reybaud, L. L'économie politique des ouvriers. In: Revue des deux Mondes. T. 66, 1 novembre 1866. — 338, 340
Page me42.733
Ricardo, D. On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation. Third edition. London, 1821. — 402, 514, 543-44
Page me42.733
[Richter, E.] Die Geschichte der Social-demokratischen Partei in Deutschland seit dem Tode Ferdinand Lassalle's. [2. Aufl.] Berlin, 1865. — 211
Page me42.733
Ritter, C. Europa. Vorlesungen an der Universität zu Berlin gehalten. Berlin, 1863. — 28
Page me42.733
Röckel, A. Sachsens Erhebung und das Zuchthaus zu Waldheim. Frankfurt a. M., 1865. — 270
Page me42.733
Rogeard, A. Les propos de Labienus. Septiéme édition. Bruxelles, 1865. — 243
Page me42.733
Rogers, J.E. Th. A History of Agriculture and Prices in England from the Year after the Oxford Parliament (1259) to the Commencement of the Continental War (1793). Vol. 1-2. Oxford, 1866. — 339, 340, 344
Page me42.733
Roon, A. [Speech in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on 8 February 1865.] In: The Times, No. 25104, February 9, 1865. — 83
Page me42.733
Roscher, W. System der Volkswirtschaft. Ein Hand- und Lesebuch für Geschäftsmänner und Studierende. Band 1: Die Grundlagen der Nationalökonomie. Dritte Auflage. Stuttgart und Augsburg, 1858. — 511, 514, 536, 537
Page me42.733
Roscoe, H.E. Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie nach den neuesten Ansichten der Wissenschaft. Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer. Braunschweig, 1867. — 459, 478, 480, 485, 495
Page me42.733
Rost, V. Ch. F. Griechisch-Deutsches Schul-Wörterbuch. 2. Ausgabe. Erfurt und Gotha, 1823. — 28
Page me42.733
Rotteck, K. von. Allgemeine Weltgeschichte für alle Stände, von den frühesten Zeiten bis zum Jahre 1831, Bd. 1-4. Stuttgart, 1833. — 33
Page me42.733

Rotteck, C. von, Welcker C. Das Staats-Lexikon. Encyclopädie der sämmtlichen Staatswissenschaften für alle Stände. In Verbindung mit vielen der angesehensten Publicisten Deutschlands herausgegeben. Bd. 1-12. Altona, 1845-1848. — 33
Page me42.733
Rückert, F. Die Weisheit des Brahmanen. — 149
Page me42.733
Rüstow, W. Der Krieg von 1866 in Deutschland und Italien, politisch-militärisch beschreiben. Zürich, 1866. — 365

Page Break me42.734
— Zur Aufklärung. In: Nordstern, Nr. 303, 1. April 1865. — 139, 140
Page me42.734
Rüstow, W., Herwegh, G. An die Redaktion des 'Social-Demokrat'. Zürich, den 4. März 1866. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 31, 8. März 1865. — 120, 126
Page me42.734
Schiller, J. Ch. F. von. Don Carlos. — 12, 53, 103
— Das Eleusische Fest. — 242
— Das Lied von der Glocke. — 299
Page me42.734
Schilling, C. Die Ausstoßung des Präsidenten Bernhard Becker aus dem Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Verein und der 'Social-Demokrat'. Berlin, 1865. — 176, 179, 180, 181, 191
Page me42.734
Schleiden, M.J. Studien. Populäre Vorträge. Leipzig, 1855. — 27
Page me42.734
Schlosser, Fr. C. Weltgeschichte für das deutsche Volk. Unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Dr G.L. Kriegk. Bd. 1-19. Frankfurt a. M., 1844-1857. — 27
Page me42.734
Schmeller, J.A. Bayerisches Wörterbuch. Theile 1-4. Stuttgart und Tübingen, 1827-1837. — 554
Page me42.734
Schoemann, G.F. Griechische Alterthümer. 2 Bde. Berlin, 1855-1859. — 27
Page me42.734
Schorlemmer, C. Researches on the Hydrocarbons of the Series CnH2n+2. In: Proceedings of the Royal Society, No. 94, 1867, No. 102, 1868. — 560
Page me42.734
Schulze-Delitzsch, H. Die Abschaffung des geschäftlichen Risico durch Herrn Lassalle. Ein neues Capitel zum Deutschen Arbeiterkatechismus. Berlin, 1866. — 211
Page me42.734
Schweitzer, J.B. (anon.) [Conclusion to Rüstow's and Herwegh's Statement on their refusal to cooperate on Der Social-Demokrat.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 31, 8. März 1865. — 120, 128-29
— (anon.) Die deutsche Social-Demokratie. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 19, 8. Februar 1865. — 83
— Der Kapitalgewinn und der Arbeitslohn. National-ökonomische Abhandlung. Berlin, 1867. — 417

— (anon.) Das Kirchenthum und die moderne Civilisation. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 5, 6. Januar 1865. — 78
— (anon.) [Leader.] Berlin, 1. März. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 29, 3. März 1865. — 114, 116, 124-25
— Lucinde oder Capital und Arbeit. Ein social-politisches Zeitgemälde aus der Gegenwart. In drei Bänden. Frankfurt a. M., 1863-1864. — 25
— (anon.) Das Ministerium Bismarck. I. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 14, 27. Januar 1865. — 104
— (anon.) Das Ministerium Bismarck. II. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 18, 5. Februar 1865. — 104
— (anon.) Das Ministerium Bismarck. III. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 23, 17. Februar 1865. — 104
— (anon.) Das Ministerium Bismarck. IV. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 24, 18. Februar 1865. — 104
— (anon.) Das Ministerium Bismarck, V. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 28, 1. März 1865. — 113
— (anon.) Das Ministerium Bismarck und die Regierungen der Mittel- und Kleinstaaten. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 6, 8. Januar 1865. — 78
— (anon.) Das Werk von Carl Marx. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 10, 11, 12, 14, 22., 24., 26., 31. Januar; Nr. 15, 24, 25, 2., 23., 26. Februar; Nr. 30, 39, 8., 29. März; Nr. 49, 51, 24., 29. April; Nr. 54, 6. Mai 1868. — 553
— Widerlegung von Carl Vogt's Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europa's. Frankfurt a. M., 1859. — 25

Page Break me42.735
Page me42.735
Shakespeare, W. King Henry IV. — 177
— The Merry Wives of Windsor. — 177
Page me42.735
[Siebel, C.] Carl Marx: Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg. Otto Meißner. 1867. In: Barmer Zeitung, Nr. 291, 6. Dezember 1867. — 471, 509, 529
Page me42.735
Simon, L. Deutschland und seine beiden Großmächte. In: Demokratische Studien. Hamburg, 1860. — 365
Page me42.735
Smith, A. An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. In three volumes. Edinburgh, 1814. The first edition in two volumes appeared in London in 1776. — 514
Page me42.735
Smith, W. A Latin-English Dictionary. Based upon the Works of Forcellini and Freund. ... London, 1855. — 28
Page me42.735
Spruner, K. von. Historisch-geographischer Schul-Atlas. 2. Aufl. Gotha, 1860. — 28
Page me42.735

Stalder, F.J. Versuch eines Schweizerischen Idiotikon, mit etymologischen Bemerkungen untermischt. Band I. Basel und Aarau, 1806; Band II. Aarau, 1812. — 554
Page me42.735
Stanley, E. [Statement on the Luxemburg Treaty made on 14 June 1867.] In: The Times, No. 25838, June 15, 1867. — 394
Page me42.735
Stein, L. System der Staatswissenschaft. Bd. I-II. Stuttgart und Tübingen, 1852-1856. — 513
— Die Verwaltungslehre. Th. 1-7. Stuttgart, 1865-1868. — 513
Page me42.735
Stieber, W. [Declaration.] In: Volks-Zeitung, Nr. 48, 26. Februar 1867 and in Hermann, Nr. 426, 2. März 1867. — 349
Page me42.735
Stieler, A. Hand-Atlas über alle Theile der Erde und über das Weltgebäude. Gotha, 1859. — 28
Page me42.735
Struve, G. Geschichte der drei Volkserhebungen in Baden. Bern, 1849. — 35
— Die neue Zeit. Ein Volkskalender auf das Jahr 1 (Vom 21. März 1850 bis 20. März 1851 der alten Zeit). Herisau, 1849. — 33
— Die 'Teig-Gesichter' in Deutschland. In: Der deutsche Eidgenosse [No. 1], 15. März 1865. — 119
Page me42.735
Struve, G. und Rasch, G. Zwölf Streiter der Revolution. Berlin, 1867. — 397
Page me42.735
Swift, J. Travels into Several Remote Nations of the World, by Lemuel Gulliver, First a Surgeon, and then a Captain of Several Ships. — 376
Page me42.735
Tacitus, Publius Cornelius. Germania. — 558
Page me42.735
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer). Andria. — 52, 498, 520
— Heautontimorumenos. — 568
Page me42.735
Ternaux, M. Histoire de la Terreur 1792-1794 d'aprés des documents authentiques et inédits. T. 1-7. Paris, 1862-1869. — 27
Page me42.735
Thornton, W.T. Stray Chapters from a Forthcoming Work on Labour. In: The Fortnightly Review. Vol. II. No. 10, October 1, 1867. — 455
Page me42.735
Thünen, J.H. Der isolirte Staat in Beziehung auf Landwirtschaft und Nationalökonomie. Th. I-III. Rostok, 1842-1863. — 522, 543
Page me42.735
Tolain, H. Congrés de Lausanne. In: Le Courrier français, Nos. 80-86, 5-11 septembre 1867. — 422
Page me42.735
Trémaux, P. Origine et transformations de l'homme et des autres êtres. Premiére partie. Paris, 1865. — 304, 305, 306, 320, 322, 323-24, 327

Page Break me42.736
Page me42.736
Tschudi, Fr. von. Das Thierleben der Alpenwelt. Naturansichten und Thierzeichnungen aus dem schweizerischen Gebirge. Leipzig, 1853. — 28
Page me42.736
Tyndall, J. Heat considered as a Mode of Motion. London, 1865. — 212
Page me42.736
Urquhart, D. (anon). Construction of the 'Kingdom of Italy'. In: The Free Press, May 3, 1865. — 154
— Fall of Austria, and Its Consequences to the World. In: The Diplomatic Review, Vol. XV, Nr. 3, March 6, 1867. — 349
Page me42.736
Vermorel, A. La prochaine campagne de la Prusse. In: Le Courrier français, No. 84, 9 septembre 1867. — 426, 428
Page me42.736
Vésinier, P. (anon.) L'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: L'Echo de Verviers, Nos. 293, 294; 16, 18 décembre 1865. — 212-13, 214, 216, 218, 250
— La Vie du nouveau César, Êtude historique. 1ére partie. Genéve, 1865. — 218
Page me42.736
Virchow, R. [Speech in the House of Representatives on 9 December 1863.] In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der [...] beiden Häuser des Landtages, Haus der Abgeordneten. 13. Sitzung, Bd. 1. Berlin, 1864. — 34
Page me42.736
Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro). Aeneid. — 31, 276, 327, 371
— Georgicon. — 281
Page me42.736
Vogt, C. Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas. Genf und Bern, 1859. — 364 — [On the Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva in 1867.] In: Neue Zürcher-Zeitung, Nr. 254, 13. September 1867. — 442
Page me42.736
Voltaire, F.-M.A. Candide. — 522
Page me42.736
Völter, D. Grundriß der Geographie. Zweite verm. und umgearb. Aufl. der 'Elementargeographie'. Eßlingen, 1859. — 27
Page me42.736
Wagener, H. Denkschrift über die wirthschaftlichen Associationen und socialen Coalitionen. Zweite Auflage. Neuschönefeld an Leipzig [1866]. — 548
— [Speech in the North-German Parliament on 23 March 1867.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 38, 27. März 1867. — 355
Page me42.736
Watts, J. Trade Societies and Strikes: their good and evil Influences on the Members of Trades Unions, and on Society at large. Machinery: its Influences on Work and Wages, and Co-operative Societies, Productive and Distributive, Past, Present, and Future. Manchester, 1865. — 224, 228, 234
Page me42.736

Weerth, G. Es gibt nichts Schönres auf der Welt. — 521
Page me42.736
Worsaae, J.J.A. An Account of the Danes and Norwegians in England, Scotland, and Ireland. London, 1852. — 8
Page me42.736
Wurtz, A. Leçons de philosophie chimique. Paris, 1864. — 385, 388

DOCUMENTS OF THE INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION†a

Page me42.736
L'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: Le Siécle, 14 octobre 1865. — 199

Page Break me42.737
Page me42.737
Aufruf an alle Arbeiter, Arbeitervereine und Arbeiterassociationen in der Schweiz zum Beitritt der 'Internationalen Arbeiter-Association'. Signed by Becker, Dupleix and other members of the Geneva Section. Genf, 1865. — 119
Page me42.737
Congrés de Genéve. Société Internationale des Travailleurs. In: Le Courrier international, Nos. 8-16, 9, 16, 23; 30 mars, 6, 13, 20, 27 avril 1867. — 346
Page me42.737
Congrés ouvrier. Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Paris [1866]. — 259
Page me42.737
Congrés ouvrier. Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Réglement provisoire. Paris [1864]. — 85
Page me42.737
Congress of Geneva. International Association of Working Men. In: The International Courier, Nos. 7-15, February 20, March 13, 20 and 27, April 3, 10 and 17 1867. — 346
Page me42.737
Entwicklungsgang unserer Association. In: Der Vorbote. Erster Jg., Nr. 1. Januar 1866. — 213
Page me42.737
Great International Conference of Working Men. In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 134, September 30, 1865. — 200
Page me42.737
Great Meeting for Poland. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 177, March 4, 1865. — 143
Page me42.737
International Working Men's Association. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 305, August 17, 1867. — 420
Page me42.737
International Working Men's Association. In: The Miner and Workman's Advocate, No. 97, 7 January 1865. — 60
Page me42.737

Meeting of the General Council. — Mr. Beales on Fenianism. — Extraordinary Scene. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 315, October 26, 1867 (in the section 'The Reform League'). — 460
Page me42.737
Questions proposées pour le congrés de Bruxelles. Ier lundi de septembre 1868 (signed in the name of the Paris committee by Murat, Camélinat, Girardin). In: Le Courrier français, 11 décembre 1867. — 520
Page me42.737
The State Prisoners. An Appeal to the Women of Ireland. In: The Workman's Advocate, No. 148, January 6, 1866. Signed by O'Donovan Rossa and Luby. — 228
Page me42.737
To the Editor of 'L'Echo de Verviers'. Signed by H. Jung (present edition, Vol. 20). In: L'Echo de Verviers, No. 43, 20 février 1866. — 250
Page me42.737
To the Workmen of France from the Working Men of England. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 112, December 5, 1863. In the article 'Address of English to French Workmen'. — 15
Page me42.737
The Working Men's International Association. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 169, January 7, 1865. — 60
Page me42.737
The Workingmen's Movement in Europe. In: St. Louis Daily Press, Vol. I, No. 22, January 10, 1865. — 73

Page Break me42.738

DOCUMENTS

Page me42.738
An Act for Facilitating in Certain Cases the Proceedings of the Commissioners Appointed to make Inquiry Respecting Trades Unions and other Associations of Employers or Workmen. 5th April 1867. — 448
Page me42.738
An Act for Regulating the Hours of Labour for Children, Young Persons, and Women employed in Workshops; and for other Purposes relating thereto [21st August 1867]. In: The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. London, 1867, p. 454. — 401
Page me42.738
An Act to Extend the 'Trades Union Commission Act, 1867'. 12th August 1867. — 448, 489
Page me42.738
Address of Germans to the American Nation. Signed by Blind, Freiligrath, Heinzmann, Juch, Kinkel, Berndes, Siemens, Trübner, Ravenstein. In: The Times, No. 25171, April 28, 1865. — 151
Page me42.738

Agricultural Statistics, Ireland. Tables showing the Estimated Average Produce of the Crops for the Year 1866; and the Emigration from the Irish Ports, from 1st January to 31st December, 1866; also the Number of Mills for scutching flax in each Country and Province. Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. Dublin, 1867. — 461
Page me42.738
Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales, Vols. I-II. 1841. — 549
Page me42.738
Artizans and Labourers' Dwellings Bill. 1866-1868. — 401
Page me42.738
Aux étudiants des universités d'Allemagne et d'Italie, les étudiants de Paris. Signed by Albert Fermé, Jules Carret, Robert Vaillant, Émile Richard, Robert Levasseur, Gibralle, etc. In: Le Courrier français, No. 15, 20 mai 1866. — 281
Page me42.738
Children's Employment Commission (1862). Reports (I-V) of the Commissioners. — 224, 383
— First Report of the Commissioners. With Appendix. Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. London, 1863. — 384
— Fifth Report. ... London, 1866. — 296
Page me42.738
Code civil — see Code Napoléon
Page me42.738
Code Napoléon. Paris und Leipzig, 1808. — 422, 503
Page me42.738
Code pénal, ou code des délits et des peines. Cologne, 1810. — 332-33, 438
Page me42.738
East India (Bengal and Orissa Famine). Papers and Correspondence relative to the Famine in Bengal and Orissa, including the Report of the Famine Commission and the Minutes of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal and the Governor General of India. (Presented to Parliament by Her Majesty's command.) Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be printed, 31 May 1867. — 401
Page me42.738
East India (Madras and Orissa Famine). Return to an Address of the Honourable House of Commons, dated 4 July 1867. Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be printed, 30 July 1867. — 401
Page me42.738
Factory Reports — see Reports of the Inspectors of Factories ...
Page me42.738
Gewerbeordnung für den Norddeutschen Bund. 1869. — 546

Page Break me42.739
Page me42.739
Grundrechte des deutschen Volkes. In: Stenographischer Bericht über die Verhandlungen der deutschen constituirenden Nationalversammlung zu Frankfurt am Main. Bd. I-II. Frankfurt a. M. und Leipzig, 1848. — 276
Page me42.739

Hunter, H.J. Report by Dr. Henry Julian Hunter on the Housing of the Poorer Parts of the Population in Towns, particularly as regards the Existence of Dangerous Degrees of Overcrowding and the Use of Dwellings Unfit for Human Habitation. In: Public Health. Eighth Report of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council. London, 1866. — 296, 301
Page me42.739
[Knox, A.A. and Pollock, G.D.] Report of the Commissioners on the Treatment of the Treason-Felony Convicts in the English Convict Prisons. London, 1867. — 378, 383, 390, 394
Page me42.739
Leges barbarorum. — 558
Page me42.739
Leges duodecim tabularum. — 31
Page me42.739
Lex Baiuvariorum. — 553
Page me42.739
Moustier [L.] [Note of 1 November 1867.] In: Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, 5. November 1867. — 462
Page me42.739
Public Health. Reports of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council. — 224
— Eighth Report. With Appendix. London, 1866. — 296, 301, 383
Page me42.739
Report from the Select Committee on the Bank Acts. Together with the Proceedings of the Committee Minutes of Evidence, Appendix and Index. London, 1857. — 185
Page me42.739
Report from the Select Committee on the Bank Acts. Together with the Proceedings of the Committee Minutes of Evidence, Appendix and Index. London. 1858. — 185
Page me42.739
Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department [for the 1840s-1860s]. London, 1842-1867. — 23, 224 — For the Half Year ending 31st October 1865. London, 1866. — 224, 230, 232
Page me42.739
Resolutions de Paris. Paris, 1791. — 71
Page me42.739
Strafgesetzbuch für die Preußischen Staaten. Vom 14. April 1851. In: Gesetz-Sammlung für die Königlichen Preußischen Staaten. 1851. Nr. 10, Berlin. — 77-78, 417

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS PUBLISHED IN PERIODICAL EDITIONS

Page me42.739
Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 119 (Beilage), 29. April 1865: Städtebuch des Landes Posen. — 156
— Nr. 1, 1. Januar 1866: Deutschland. Berlin, 29. Dec. — 211
— Nr. 273, 30. September 1867: [Announcement about the publication of Volume One of Capital by Karl Marx]. — 437

Page Break me42.740
Page me42.740
The Athenaeum. Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, and the Fine Arts, No. 1902, April 9, 1864: [Notice concerning Karl Blind's joining of the Shakespearean Committee]. — 35
Page me42.740
Augsburger Abendzeitung, Nr. 303, 4. November 1867: Paris, 3. Nov., Morgens: Telegraphische Berichte der 'Abendzeitung'. — 466
Page me42.740
Der Beobachter, Nr. 245, 21. Oktober 1864: Bescheidenheit — ein Ehrenkleid. — 27, 41, 44
— Nr. 268, 17. November 1864: Karl Blind. — 52
Page me42.740
Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel und die mit ihm verwandten Geschäftszweige, Nr. 27, 3. März 1865: [Announcement about the publication of The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party by Frederick Engels]. — 475
— Nr. 214, 14. September 1867: [Announcement about the publication of Volume One of Capital by Karl Marx]. — 475
— Nr. 230, 3. Oktober 1867: [Announcement about the publication of Borkheim's speech at the Geneva Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom]. — 449, 452
Page me42.740
The Commonwealth, No. 165, May 5, 1866: [Statement by the Editor]. — 280
Page me42.740
Le Courrier français, Nos. 85, 86; 10, 11 septembre 1867: [Reports in the Section Nouvelles]. — 430
— No. 88, 13 septembre 1867: [Reports on the Geneva Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom]. — 435
— No. 106, 1 octobre 1867: La Situation au Mexique. — 438
— No. 113, 8 octobre 1867: Le Troisiéme larron. — 438
Page me42.740
The Daily News, March 2, 1865: The Late Polish Insurrection. — 143
Page me42.740
The Daily Telegraph, No. 3249, November 17, 1865 (leader). — 197
Page me42.740
Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 2, 11. Januar 1868: Das Preußische und das Schweizer Heersystem. — 534, 540
Page me42.740
The Diplomatic Review, October 2, 1867: Events of the Month. — 434
Page me42.740
The Fortnightly Review, No. 37, December 1866 (leader). — 338, 340
Page me42.740
Die Gartenlaube, Nr. 10, 1867: [Article on Karl Vogt with his photograph]. — 365
Page me42.740
Hermann, Nr. 426, 2. März 1867: Herr 'Stieber' und der 'Hermann'. — 349

— Nr. 453, 7. September 1867: [Report on the course of money subscription for Freiligrath]. — 424
— Nr. 459, 19. Oktober 1867: Für Ferdinand Freiligrath. Schluß-Aufruf. — 454
Page me42.740
Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 140, 23 juin (5 juillet) 1866: Nouvelles de L'extérieur [On the Victory of the Prussian army over the Austrians at the battle of Sadowa on 3 July 1866]. — 293
Page me42.740
Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 63, 4. März 1865: [Announcement about the publication of The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party by Frederick Engels]. — 116
— 8. April 1866: Die Lage, Köln, 7. April. — 264
— 6. November 1867. — 466

Page Break me42.741
Page me42.741
Libertá e Giustizia, No. 2, 24 agósto 1867: La Questione romana. — 420
Page me42.741
The Manchester Guardian, No. 5686, November 8, 1864: Central Executive Relief Committee. — 21-23
— No. 6165, May 22, 1866: From our London correspondent. London, Monday. — 280
Page me42.741
The Morning Advertiser, No. 22726, April 11, 1864: Interview of Karl Blind with Garibaldi. — 33
— November 9, 1864. — 36
Page me42.741
The Morning Star, No. 3596, September 10, 1864 (leader). — 424
Page me42.741
Moskovskiya v'domosti, NoN 210, 28 sentyabrya 1867: [Report on Borkheim's Meine Perle vor dem Genfer Congress]. — 452
Page me42.741
Neue Zürcher-Zeitung, Nr. 321-60, vom 16. November bis 25. Dezember 1864: James Fazy. Sein Leben und Treiben. — 63
Page me42.741
Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 229, 30. September 1864: Politischer Tagesbericht. — 49
— 19. Februar 1865. — 106
— Nr. 97, 26. April 1867: Politischer Tagesbericht. 25. April 1867. — 373
— Nr. 139, 18. Juni 1867: Politischer Tagesbericht. 17. Juni 1867. — 394
— Nr. 146, 26. Juni 1867: Politischer Tagesbericht, 25. Juni 1867. — 394
Page me42.741
Nordstern, Nr. 287, 10. Dezember 1864, S. 2: [Footnote]. — 56
— Nr. 299, 4. März 1865: Aufgeschaut and Die Wölfe im Schaafskleid. — 130
— Nr. 307, 29. April 1865: [Report in the section Allgemeiner deutscher Arbeiterverein, signed: Solingen]. — 152
— Nr. 308, 6. Mai 1865: [Report in the section Allgemeiner deutscher Arbeiterverein, signed: Köln]. — 154, 156

— Nr. 313, 24. Juni 1865: Offene Erklärungen; Offene Erklärung; Erklärung der Mitglieder des Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins; Gemeinde Alainz; Erklärung der Solinger Gemeinde. — 161, 165
— Nr. 315, 316, 8., 15. Juli 1865: Das Turnerfest im Paris. — 177
Page me42.741
North British Daily Mail, March 30, 1863: M. Karl Blind. — 35
Page me42.741
The Observer, No. 3804, April 10, 1864: Garibaldi. Preliminary Meetings in London. — 35
— No. 3805, April 17, 1864: Garibaldi. Address of the Germans in London. — 35
— No. 3806, April 24, 1864: Garibaldi. The Crystal Palace. — Mr. Fergusson's Letter. — 35
Page me42.741
Rheinischer Beobachter, Nr. 206, 25. Juli 1847: Politische Gänge. Achter Gang. — 97
Page me42.741
Russkij invalid, No 336, 5 dekabrya 1867: S.-Peterburg, 4-go dekabrya. — 506
Page me42.741
St.-Petersburger Zeitung, Nr. 10, 14. (26.) Januar 1865: Die Eröffnung der preußischen Landtags-Session. — 506
Page me42.741
The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art, January 18, 1868: [Item on Volume One of Capital by Karl Marx]. — 527, 529, 533
Page me42.741
Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 1, Probe-Nummer, 15. Dezember 1864: [Announcement about cooperation of Marx and Engels with the Social-Demokrat]. — 58, 102, 129

Page Break me42.742
— Nr. 15, 29. Januar 1865: Einsendungen von Arbeitern (Aus Asch in Böhmen). — 70
— Nr. 15, 29. Januar 1865: Iserlohn, 25. Januar (Allg. Deutsch. Arb.-Verein). — 71
— Nr. 20, 10. Februar 1865. — 88
— Nr. 21, 12. Februar 1865. — 88
— Nr. 25, 22. Februar 1865: Berlin, 21. Februar. — 106
— Nr. 43, 5. April 1865: Vereins-Theil. Berlin, 4. April (Allg. deutsch. Arb.-Verein). — 141, 147
— Nr. 50, 21. April 1865: Vermischtes (Gegen den Allg. deutsch. Arb.-Verein). — 150
— Nr. 58, 10. Mai 1865: Feuilleton. Städtebuch des Landes Posen Von Heinrich Wuttke (Aus dem 'Allgemeinen Zeitung'). — 156
— Nr. 102, 30. August 1867: [Report from Erfurt]. — 417
— Nr. 107, 11. September 1867: Unser Sieg im Barmen-Elberfeld. — 417
— Nr. 122, 123, 16., 18. Oktober 1867. — 450
Page me42.742
The Times, April 19, 1864: General Garibaldi. — 34
— No. 25021, November 4, 1864: Southern Italy (From our own correspondent). Naples, Oct. 30. — 47
— No. 25107, February 13, 1865: Prussia. Berlin, Feb. 11. — 90, 95
— No. 25110, February 16, 1865: The Prussian Legislature. Berlin, Feb. 15. — 94

— No. 25347, November 20, 1865 (leader). — 199
— No. 25367, December 13, 1865: Parliamentary Reform. — 215, 221
— No. 25368, December 14, 1865 (leader). — 215, 221
— No. 25436, March 3, 1866 (leader). — 236
— No. 25436, March 3, 1866: The Outbreak in Jamaica (From Our Special Correspondent). Spanish town, Jamaica, Feb. 9. — 236
— No. 25437, March 5, 1866 (leader). — 236
— No. 25468, April 10, 1866 (leader). — 264
— No. 25469, April 11, 1866: Austria and Prussia. Berlin, April 10. — 267
— No. 25827, June 3, 1867: Paris, Saturday, June 1, 6 p.m. — 378-79
— No. 25917, September 16, 1867 (leader). — 435
— No. 25974, November 21, 1867: London Meetings. — 485
— No. 26074, March 17, 1868: Prussia (From Our Own Correspondent), Berlin, March 14. — 555
Page me42.742
Unsere Zeit. Deutsche Revue der Gegenwart, 2. Jg. 2. Hälfte, 1866: Preußen in Waffen. I-II, S. 161-77 and 321-43. — 365
Page me42.742
Der weiße Adler, Nr. 30, 11. März 1865; Ein Meeting zu Gunsten Polens in London. — 143
Page me42.742
Zeitung für Norddeutschland, Nr. 5522, 15. Februar 1867: [Report on Marx's intention to go to the Continent to take part in preparations for the Polish uprising]. — 346, 347, 352
Page me42.742
Die Zukunft, Nr. 199, 27. August 1867, Beilage: Englische Briefe. — 421
— Nr. 208, 6. September 1867, Beilage: [Advertisement about Käthe Freiligrath's engagement]. — 425
— Nr. 246, 20. Oktober 1867, Beilage: [Bebel's and Liebknecht's amendment to § 2 of the Combination Bill]. — 456

Page Break me42.743

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me42.743
Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung — a newspaper of the German Officers' and Soldiers' Society published from 1826 to 1902, first in Darmstadt and then in Leipzig; Engels contributed to it from 1860 to 1864. — 286
Page me42.743
Allgemeine Zeitung — a conservative daily founded in 1798, published in Augsburg from 1810 to 1882. — 51, 156, 437, 515
Page me42.743
L'Association — a French journal of the co-operative workers' associations which were under the influence of the bourgeois republicans; published from 1864 to 1866 in Paris and Brussels. — 66, 79, 85, 115, 119, 140
Page me42.743

The Athenaeum, Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, and the Fine Arts — a literary and critical weekly published in London in 1828-1921. — 35, 290
Page me42.743
Augsburger Abendzeitung — a liberal daily published under this title in Augsburg in 1826-1912. — 466
Page me42.743
L'Avenir national — a French democratic daily published in Paris in 1865-73; printed information on the activity of the Paris Administration of the International. — 85
Page me42.743
Barmer Zeitung — a liberal daily published in Barmen from 1834 to 1931. — 114, 471, 507, 509, 529
Page me42.743
The Bee-Hive Newspaper — a weekly trade unionist newspaper published under various titles in London from 1861 to 1876; from November 1864 it printed documents of the First International; in view of the growing influence of the bourgeois radicals on the newspaper's editorial board, the General Council of the International broke off relations with it in April 1870. — 18, 50, 60, 109, 143, 154, 159, 169, 173, 407, 420, 423, 519
Page me42.743
Belletristisches Journal und New-Yorker Criminal-Zeitung — a weekly founded by German petty-bourgeois refugees in New York in 1852 and published under this title from 18 March 1853 to 10 March 1854. — 118
Page me42.743
Der Beobachter. Ein Volksblatt aus Schwaben — a daily published in Stuttgart from 1833; in the 1860s, organ of the petty-bourgeois democracy. — 27, 41-43, 44, 45, 52, 492, 493, 495, 500, 503, 507, 510, 511, 512

Page Break me42.744
Page me42.744
Berliner Reform — a daily of the German petty-bourgeois democrats published in Berlin from 1861 to 1868. — 63, 108, 134, 154, 160, 180
Page me42.744
Bonner Zeitung — a daily of the National-Liberals; published under this title from 1850. — 126
Page me42.744
Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel und die mit ihm verwandten Geschäftszweige — a daily organ of the League of German booksellers published in Leipzig from 1834 to 1926. — 449, 452-53
Page me42.744
Der Botschafter — an Austrian daily, an official government newspaper published in Vienna in 1862-65. — 176
Page me42.744
Bromberger Zeitung — a German liberal daily founded in Bromberg (Polish name Bydgoszcz) in 1843. — 267
Page me42.744
The Chronicle — a Catholic weekly published in London in 1867-68. — 464
Page me42.744

The Commonwealth — a weekly of the General Council of the International published in London from February 1866 to July 1867 as the successor of The Workman's Advocate; Marx was on the Board of Directors till June 1866; because of the growing influence of the trade unionists on the board, the newspaper virtually became an organ of bourgeois radicals. — 224, 228, 230, 234, 235, 238, 243, 249, 252, 253, 255, 257, 262, 268, 270, 271, 275, 277, 280, 283, 290, 327, 330, 339, 346, 574
Page me42.744
Le Courrier français — a weekly (from June 1867, a daily) of the Left republicans published in Paris from 1861 to 1868; virtually an organ of the International in France from May 1866. — 281, 398, 407, 413, 419, 420, 422, 424, 428, 429, 430, 438, 447, 449, 450, 454, 463, 483, 488, 490, 496, 508, 520, 523, 532, 542, 580, 583
Page me42.744
Dagbladet — a Danish newspaper published in Copenhagen from 1851. — 6, 21, 183
Page me42.744
The Daily News — a liberal newspaper of the English industrial bourgeoisie; appeared under this name in London from 1846 to 1930. — 73, 86, 143
Page me42.744
The Daily Telegraph — a liberal and, from the 1880s, conservative daily; published under this title in London from 1855 to 1937. — 197
Page me42.744
Debatte — a Viennese daily published from November 1864 to October 1869. — 537
Page me42.744
Demokratische Studien — a journal published in Hamburg from 1860 by Ludwig Walesrode. — 364
Page me42.744
Demokratisches Wochenblatt — a German workers' newspaper published in Leipzig from January 1868 to September 1869 under the editorship of Wilhelm Liebknecht; at the Eisenach Congress in 1869 it was declared a central organ of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party and renamed Der Volksstaat. — 477, 479, 484, 488, 492, 505, 512, 525, 534, 538, 539, 540, 552
Page me42.744
Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher — a German-language yearly published in Paris under the editorship of Karl Marx and Arnold Ruge; only the first and second issue, a double one, appeared in February 1844; it carried a number of works by Marx and Engels. — 515, 530
Page me42.744
Deutsche Arbeiterhalle — a monthly of the Union of German Workers' Associations, which was headed by August Bebel; published in Mannheim in 1867-68. — 515

Page Break me42.745
Page me42.745
Deutsche-Brüsseller-Zeitung — a newspaper founded by the German political refugees in Brussels and published from January 1847 to February 1848; from September 1847 Marx and Engels regularly contributed to it and under their influence it became an organ of revolutionary communist propaganda. — 97
Page me42.745

Der deutsche Eidgenosse — a monthly of the German petty-bourgeois democrats; published in London and Hamburg in 1865-67. — 97, 119, 126, 273
Page me42.745
Deutsche Volkszeitung — a daily of the Party of the Guelphs published in Hanover from 1867. — 473
Page me42.745
Deutsches Museum. Zeitschrift für Literatur, Kunst und öffentliches Leben — a democratic weekly that appeared in Leipzig from 1851 to 1867; in 1852-65 Robert Prutz was its publisher. — 484
Page me42.745
Deutsches Wochenblatt — a weekly, organ of the German People's Party from the end of 1865, published in Mannheim in 1864-67. — 198
Page me42.745
The Diplomatic Review — a foreign policy journal published under this title, as the continuation of The Free Press, from June 1866 to 1877 (up to July 1870 as a monthly, then as a quarterly); its publisher was David Urquhart. — 349, 398, 419, 422, 427, 434, 464
Page me42.745
Düsseldorfer Zeitung — a German daily founded in 1745; published under this title from 1826 to 1926; voiced liberal views in the 1840s-60s. — 84, 108, 111, 114, 119, 129, 133, 134, 140, 471, 529
Page me42.745
L'Echo de Verviers — a Belgian democratic daily founded in 1864; mouthpiece of petty-bourgeois elements in the French Section in London, who were hostile to Marx and the Central Council of the International. — 213, 214, 216, 250
Page me42.745
Elberfelder Zeitung — a daily published under this title from 1834 to 1904; in the 1860s voiced liberal views. — 114, 461, 463, 529
Page me42.745
Les États-Unis d'Europe — an organ of the pacifist international League of Peace and Freedom; founded in Berne in 1867; from 1870, it appeared in Geneva, then again in Berne until 1919; the paper was published in different languages and at different intervals. — 482, 499, 534, 541
Page me42.745
The Evening Star — see The Morning Star
Page me42.745
The Express — an evening liberal paper that appeared in London in 1846-69. — 86
Page me42.745
The Fortnightly Review — a historical, philosophical and literary magazine founded in 1865 by a group of radicals; subsequently became liberal in character; under this title published in London till 1934. — 185, 338, 340, 455, 457, 463, 466, 512, 516, 518, 524, 526, 532, 533, 545, 560, 583
Page me42.745
Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt — a daily democratic paper published in Frankfurt am Main from 1856 (under this title from 1866) to 1943. — 471, 529, 532, 534, 536, 537
Page me42.745

The Free Press. Journal of the Foreign Affairs Committees — a journal on questions of foreign policy, opposed to the Palmerston government; it was published by David Urquhart and his supporters in London from 1855 to 1865 (weekly until April 1858 and then monthly); in 1866 it was renamed The Diplomatic Review; it printed several works by Marx. — 52, 154, 178, 212, 332, 418

Page Break me42.746
Page me42.746
Die Gartenlaube. Illustriertes Familienblatt — a literary weekly published in Leipzig from 1853 to 1903 and in Berlin from 1903 to 1943. — 365, 447, 580
Page me42.746
La Gazette de France — a royalist paper published in Paris from 1631 to 1914 (first once and then twice a week, and from 1792 daily). — 424
Page me42.746
Gazette de Lausanne et Journal Suisse — a liberal-democratic daily founded in Lausanne in 1798. — 422
Page me42.746
Gewerbeblatt aus Württemberg — a weekly of the commercial and industrial circles, published in Stuttgart from 1849 as a supplement to the Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg. — 500, 503
Page me42.746
The Glasgow Sentinel — a Scottish weekly, organ of the Tories, published in Glasgow from 1850 to 1877. — 34
Page me42.746
Guardian — see The Manchester Guardian
Page me42.746
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democrats published in London from 1859. — 15, 33, 41, 50, 63, 70, 91, 114, 130, 134, 349, 378, 424, 447, 521
Page me42.746
How Do You Do? — a humorous German-language weekly, published in London from 1796; in the 1850s it was edited by Beta (Bettziech). — 447
Page me42.746
Illustrierter Familien-Kalender — an annual magazine published in Leipzig by A.H. Payne from 1857 to 1874. — 447
Page me42.746
Illustrierte Zeitung — a German weekly published in Leipzig from 1843 to 1944; in the middle of the nineteenth century it was of a moderate liberal orientation. — 533
Page me42.746
L'Independance belge. Journal mondial d'informations politiques et littéraires — a liberal daily founded in Brussels in 1831. — 215
Page me42.746
The International Courier — a weekly published in London from November 1864 to July 1867 in English and French, its French name being Le Courrier international. In 1867, the paper was the organ of the International. — 346
Page me42.746

Internationale Revue — an Austrian bourgeois-democratic monthly published in Vienna in 1866-68. — 464, 466, 484, 512, 516
Page me42.746
The Irishman — a weekly published from 1858 to 1885, first in Belfast and then in Dublin; reflected the views of the moderate elements of the national movement; came out in defence of Fenians. — 464, 485, 504, 521
Page me42.746
Journal de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs — a monthly of the International's sections in Romance Switzerland, published in Geneva from December 1865 to September 1866 with the participation of Johann Philipp Becker. — 207, 214, 219, 220
Page me42.746
Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg — a newspaper of the Russian Ministry for Foreign Affairs, published under this title in French from 1825 to 1914. — 293
Page me42.746
Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1944; during the July monarchy, organ of the government; during the 1848 revolution, it voiced monarchist views; after the 1851 coup d'état, an organ of the moderate Orleanist opposition. — 109

Page Break me42.747
Page me42.747
Kladderadatsch — an illustrated satirical weekly of liberal trend, published in Berlin from 1848. — 336
Page me42.747
Kölnische Zeitung — a daily published in Cologne from 1802 to 1945; during the 1848-49 revolution and in subsequent years it expressed the interests of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie. — 116, 179, 264, 267, 302, 355, 430, 437, 445, 466, 479, 509
Page me42.747
Königlich Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger — a daily newspaper, official organ of the Prussian government, published in Berlin from 1851 to 1871. — 202, 497
Page me42.747
Libertá e Giustizia — an Italian democratic weekly published in Naples in 1867; organ of the 'Libertá e Giustizia', a society close to the International. — 420
Page me42.747
La Liberté — a Belgian democratic paper published in Brussels from 1865 to 1873; an organ of the International in Belgium from 1867. — 447, 449, 454
Page me42.747
La Liberté — a conservative evening daily published in Paris from 1865 to 1944; in 1866-72 it belonged to Émile Girardin, supported the policy of the Second Empire. — 424
Page me42.747
La Liberté de penser — a French philosophical and literary magazine published in Paris in 1848-51. — 66
Page me42.747

Londoner Anzeiger — a weekly of the German democratic refugees in London, published from 1864 to 1867. — 50, 70, 114, 130, 133
Page me42.747
Mainzer Journal — a Catholic daily published in Mainz from 1848. — 63
Page me42.747
The Manchester Daily Examiner and Times — a liberal newspaper, founded in 1848 by the merger of the Manchester Times and Manchester Examiner; supported the Free Traders in the 1840s and 1860s; published till 1894 under different titles. — 430
Page me42.747
The Manchester Guardian — a daily founded in 1821; organ of the Free Traders and, from the mid-nineteenth century, of the Liberal Party. — 21, 23, 49, 205, 280, 296, 298
Page me42.747
The Miner and Workman's Advocate — a weekly workers' newspaper, organ of the miners' trade union of Great Britain, published in London from 1863 to 1865. — 54, 60, 173, 177
Page me42.747
Missouri Democrat — a radical daily, organ of the Republican Party of the Missouri State; appeared under this title in 1852-75 in St. Louis. — 51
Page me42.747
Mitteldeutsche Volkszeitung — a liberal paper published in Leipzig in 1862-66. — 310
Page me42.747
Le Moniteur universel — a daily published in Paris from 1789 (under this title from 1811) to 1901, official government organ from 1799 to 1869. — 290
Page me42.747
The Morning Advertiser — a daily published in London from 1794 to 1934; in the 1850s it was a mouthpiece of the radical bourgeoisie. — 36
Page me42.747
The Morning Star — a daily published in London by the Free Traders from 1856 to 1869; had a regular evening edition The Evening Star. — 26, 73, 110, 151, 424
Page me42.747
Moskovskiya V'domosti. (Moskovskiye Vedomosti — Moscow Recorder) — a paper published from 1756 to 1917; in the 1850s, it became reactionary in character. — 452

Page Break me42.748
Page me42.748
The Nation — an Irish weekly, originally radical and, from the 1850s, liberal; published in Dublin from 1842 to the end of the 1880s; came out in defence of the Fenians. — 485
Page me42.748
The National Reformer — a weekly organ of the radicals published in London from 1860 to 1893. — 22
Page me42.748
Neue Frankfurter Zeitung — a democratic paper published under this title from 1859 to 1866 in Frankfurt am Main. — 41, 114, 120, 126, 129, 298
Page me42.748
Neue Freie Presse — an Austrian liberal newspaper published in Vienna in 1864-1939. — 516, 524, 525

Page me42.748
Neue Oder-Zeitung — a German democratic daily published in Breslau (Wroclaw) from 1849 to 1855; in the 1850s it was the most radical newspaper in Germany; in 1855 Marx was its London correspondent. — 516
Page me42.748
Neue Preussische Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from June 1848 to 1939; mouthpiece of the Prussian junkers and Court circles; it was also called Kreuz-Zeitung because the heading contained a cross and the slogan 'Forward with God for King and Fatherland'. — 103, 124, 277, 280, 292
Page me42.748
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a daily published in Cologne under the editorship of Marx from 1 June 1848 to 19 May 1849 (with an interval between 27 September and 12 October 1848); organ of the revolutionary-proletarian wing among the democrats during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. Engels was among its editors. — 111, 115, 118, 363, 530
Page me42.748
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — a theoretical journal of the Communist League; it was founded by Marx and Engels in December 1849 and published till November 1850. — 428, 530
Page me42.748
Neue Zürcher-Zeitung — a Swiss liberal newspaper published in German under this title from 1 July 1821; in the 1850s-60s, it expressed Bonapartist views. — 441
Page me42.748
Neues Wiener Tagblatt — an Austrian liberal newspaper published in Vienna from 1867 to 1945. — 515, 523, 525, 538
Page me42.748
New-York Daily Tribune — a newspaper founded by Horace Greeley in 1841 and published until 1924; organ of the Left-wing American Whigs until the mid-1850s, and later of the Republican Party; in the 1840s and 1850s it voiced progressive views and opposed slavery. Marx and Engels contributed to it from August 1851 to March 1862. — 531
Page me42.748
The Nonconformist — a weekly of the English radical bourgeoisie, published under this title in London from 1841 to 1879. — 224, 253, 255
Page me42.748
Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung — a conservative daily; in the 1860s-80s, semi-official newspaper of the Bismarck government; published in Berlin from 1861 to 1918. — 106, 373, 394, 516
Page me42.748
Nordstern — a weekly published in Hamburg from 1860 to 1866; from 1863, a Lassallean mouthpiece. — 14, 34, 56, 102, 108, 130, 134, 140, 147, 150, 152, 154, 156, 161, 165, 174, 177, 190, 207
Page me42.748
North British Daily Mail — a newspaper founded in Glasgow in 1847, organ of the liberal bourgeoisie. — 34, 35
Page me42.748

Notes to the People — a Chartist weekly edited by Ernst Jones and published in

Page Break me42.749
London in 1851 and 1852. Marx and Engels supported it and contributed a number of articles. — 15, 531
Page me42.749
The Observer — an English conservative weekly published in London since 1791. — 35
Page me42.749
Ostsee-Zeitung — a German daily published in Stettin (Polish name Szczecin) from 1835. — 267
Page me42.749
The Owl — a weekly published in London in 1864-69. — 355
Page me42.749
The People's Paper — a Chartist weekly published by Ernst Jones in London from 1852 to 1858. Marx and Engels contributed to it from October 1852 to December 1856 and helped with its editing. — 531
Page me42.749
Die Presse — a liberal daily published in Vienna from 1848 to 1896; in 1861-62, when the newspaper held anti-Bonapartist views, Marx was its London correspondent. — 516
Page me42.749
Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger — see Königlich Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me42.749
Putnam's Monthly. A Magazine of American Literature, Science and Art — a Republican monthly published in New York from 1853 to 1857. — 531
Page me42.749
La Réforme — a daily published in Paris from 1843 to 1850, organ of the republican democrats and petty-bourgeois socialists; from October 1847 to March 1848 the newspaper published reports and statements by Marx and Engels. — 530
Page me42.749
Republikanisches Regierungs-Blatt — a newspaper of the petty-bourgeois democrats, founded by Gustav Struve and Karl Blind in Lörrach during the second Baden uprising in September 1848; only one issue appeared. — 33
Page me42.749
Revue contemporaine — a fortnightly published in Paris from 1851 to 1870; during the Second Republic represented the Party of Order; after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851 took a Bonapartist stand. — 338, 340
Page me42.749
Revue des deux Mondes — a literary and political fortnightly published in Paris since 1829. — 257, 338, 340
Page me42.749
Rheinischer Beobachter — a conservative daily published in Cologne from 1844 to the beginning of 1848. — 97
Page me42.749
Rheinische Zeitung — a liberal daily published under this title in Düsseldorf from 1863 to 1866, and in Cologne from 1867 to 1874. — 52, 75, 84, 108, 111, 112, 114, 126, 134, 140, 148, 160, 207, 462, 469

Page me42.749
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — a daily founded by the Rhenish bourgeois opposition and published in Cologne from 1 January 1842 to 31 March 1843. In April 1842 Marx became one of its contributors. In October of the same year, he became one of its editors, which gave the newspaper a revolutionary-democratic character. — 530
Page me42.749
La Rive gauche — a democratic weekly published from October 1864 to August 1866, first in Paris, and then in Brussels by a group of French Left republicans; it printed documents of the International. Its editor was Charles Longuet. — 213, 219, 243

Page Break me42.750
Page me42.750
Russkij invalid (Russky Invalid — Russian Invalid) — a daily of the War Ministry of Tsarist Russia published in St. Petersburg from 1813 to 1917. — 506
Page me42.750
St. Louis Daily Press — an American workers' paper published from 1864. — 73
Page me42.750
St.-Petersburger Zeitung — a Russian daily published in German from 1727 to 1914. — 85
Page me42.750
The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art — a conservative weekly published in London from 1855 to 1938. — 527, 529, 533
Page me42.750
Schwäbischer Merkur — a liberal daily published in Stuttgart from 1785 to 1885. — 501, 510
Page me42.750
Le Siécle — a daily published in Paris from 1836 to 1939; in the 1860s a moderate republican newspaper. — 202, 424
Page me42.750
Der Social-Demokrat — an organ of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers; published in Berlin from 15 December 1864 to 1871, in 1864 weekly and from 1865 three times a week; in 1864-67 it was edited by J.B. Schweitzer. Marx and Engels contributed to the paper for a short time, ceased to do so in February 1865, since they disagreed with the political line of the editors. — 22, 24, 26, 58, 63, 64-69, 70, 71, 75, 76, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 88, 89, 90, 95, 96, 97, 102, 103, 104, 106, 111, 113, 114, 116, 120, 124, 125, 134, 135, 136, 141, 147, 150, 152, 154, 156, 157, 158, 165, 170, 174, 175, 190, 198, 204, 207, 211, 225, 494, 496, 542, 553
Page me42.750
Staats Anzeiger für Württemberg — a government daily newspaper published in Stuttgart from 1849 with a weekly supplement, Gewerbeblatt aus Württemberg. — 500, 510, 512
Page me42.750
Stimmen der Zeit, Wochenschrift für Politik und Literatur — a German petty-bourgeois monthly and later weekly published in 1858-62 by Adolph Kolatschek. It appeared first in Gotha and then in Weimar, Leipzig, Heidelberg and Vienna simultaneously. — 141
Page me42.750

Le Temps — a daily organ of the big bourgeoisie published in Paris from 1861 to 1943. — 270
Page me42.750
The Times — a conservative daily founded in London in 1785. — 34, 47, 50, 73, 80, 86, 90, 94, 95, 151, 199, 215, 221, 236, 264, 267, 286, 300, 378, 416, 422, 425, 428, 434, 435, 485, 516, 555
Page me42.750
La Tribune du Peuple — a Belgian newspaper of the socialist and atheist society 'Peuple', published in Brussels from May 1861 to April 1869; from August 1865 de facto and from January 1866 official newspaper of the Belgian sections of the International. — 213, 216, 219, 220, 223
Page me42.750
La Tribune ouvriére — a workers' weekly published in June-July 1865 by members of the Paris section of the International; the first four issues appeared in Paris. When the newspaper was banned in France its publication was transferred to Brussels where one more issue appeared, after which its publication was stopped. — 170
Page me42.750
Unsere Zeit — a liberal literary and political monthly, appeared in Leipzig from 1857 to 1891. — 365

Page Break me42.751
Page me42.751
Das Volk — a German-language communist weekly published in London from 7 May to 20 August 1859; it was founded as the official organ of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; Marx took part in its publication beginning with issue No. 2 and in early July he became its de facto editor and manager. — 50
Page me42.751
Volks-Zeitung — a liberal daily published in Berlin from 1853. — 180
Page me42.751
Der Vorbote — a monthly of the German sections of the International in Switzerland, published in Geneva from 1866 to 1871 under the editorship of Johann Philipp Becker; on the whole, it upheld the line pursued by Marx and the General Council by regularly publishing documents of the International and information about its activity in various countries. — 207, 214, 219, 220, 359, 571, 580
Page me42.751
The Weekly News — an Irish radical newspaper published in Dublin from 1858. — 550
Page me42.751
Der weiße Adler — a German-language liberal paper published in Zurich from 1864 three times a week. — 143
Page me42.751
Weser-Zeitung — a German liberal daily published in Bremen from 1844 to 1930. — 471
Page me42.751
Die Westliche Post — a German newspaper published in St. Louis (USA) from 1858; in the 1860s, organ of the émigré petty-bourgeois democrats. — 41, 57
Page me42.751

The Working Man — a weekly published in London from 1861 to 1867 with an interval; the paper was notable for its reformist tendencies. — 327
Page me42.751
The Workman's Advocate — a weekly workers' paper published in London after the reorganisation of The Miner and Workman's Advocate in September 1865; official organ of the Central Council of the International; Marx was a member of its board. In February 1866, because of the growing influence of the reformist elements on the editorial board, it was reorganised once again and renamed The Commonwealth. — 190, 198, 200, 201, 205, 206, 207, 212-14, 215, 216, 219-20, 224, 228, 243, 262, 571
Page me42.751
Zeitung für Norddeutschland — a liberal newspaper published in Hanover from 1848 to 1872. — 346
Page me42.751
Die Zukunft — a democratic paper of the People's Party, published in Königsberg (now Kaliningrad), from 1867 and in Berlin from 1868 to 1871. — 374, 421, 423, 425, 430, 433, 445, 461, 467, 475, 495, 497, 498, 501, 502, 503, 504, 507, 515, 534, 535, 542

Page Break me42.752

SUBJECT INDEX

Page me42.752
A

Abstraction — 137, 382, 387, 407, 409
Abstract labour — 392, 407, 514
Accumulation of capital — 408-09, 514
See also Banks; Capital; Shares, joint-stock companies
Agricultural chemistry — 227, 232, 507, 510, 559
Agricultural proletariat — 366
Agriculture — 137, 227, 461, 486, 507, 547-48, 559
Anarchy of capitalist production — 137-38, 514-15
Anthropology — 24
Aristocracy, nobility — 68, 73, 77, 79, 88, 104, 207, 223, 292-93, 302, 474
Armaments, weapons — 40, 124, 291, 293-94, 303, 524
Army — 200, 203
— its transformation after the victory of the proletariat — 523-24
— conscription — 339-40
See also Armaments, weapons; Military art; Military science; War(s)
Army, Austrian — 255
Army, British — 124
Army, French — 124, 208, 215, 307, 339-40, 524
Army, Prussian — 8-9, 40, 124, 256, 292-93, 307
Astronomy — 184-87
Atheism — 22, 54
Atom — 212, 382

Australia — 387, 487
Austria — 299-300, 503, 512
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 274
— prospects of revolution — 503
— and Britain — 274
— and France — 291, 460, 506, 537
— and Hungary — 226, 297
— and Poland — 38
— and Prussia — 84-85, 182
— and Russia — 282, 293, 299-300, 374
— and Slav peoples — 297, 298
See also Austria-Hungary; Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; Austro-Prussian war, 1866
Austria-Hungary (from 1867) — 374, 536
Austro-Italo-French war, 1859 — 344-45, 374
Austro-Prussian war, 1866 — 47, 255-56, 264-65, 269, 270, 278, 281, 290, 298, 299-300, 365
— forces of the belligerents — 255-56, 276-77, 279, 285 — course of military operations — 255-56, 276-77, 288, 294-95, 333
— battle of Sadowa (Königgrätz) — 288
— Peace of Prague — 345
— and Austria — 264-65, 299-300
— and Britain — 45, 264, 267, 296, 374
— and France — 45, 256, 258, 263,

Page Break me42.753
265, 268, 270, 276, 280, 282, 288, 290, 291-95, 300, 302, 306-07, 345
— and Germany — 276, 284-85, 288, 292-95, 296-97, 298, 300-03, 306-07, 333, 340, 345, 365
— and Italy — 258, 263, 276, 278, 282, 288, 291
— and Prussia — 255-57, 263, 264, 269, 275-76, 278-79, 285, 288, 292, 293, 296-99, 301-03, 372
— and Russia — 256-57, 258, 263, 264, 267, 274, 276, 282, 290, 293, 299, 352
— and the international working-class movement — 45, 300
See also International Working Men's Association (First International) — struggle for an independent stand to be taken by the proletariat in foreign policy, against wars of conquest

Page me42.753
B

Banks — 63, 141, 185-86, 200, 203, 208, 281, 284, 285, 472
Bonapartism — 266, 277, 334, 339-40, 425-26
See also Prussia — Bonapartism of the ruling élite; Second Empire in France
Book-keeping — 247, 248, 260, 277, 388-89, 409-13, 533
Bourgeoisie — 71, 103, 108, 110, 144, 266-67, 300, 334, 339-40
Bourgeoisie, Austrian — 536

Bourgeoisie, British — 21, 55, 71, 92-93, 109-10, 114, 150, 154, 158, 364
Bourgeoisie, French — 71, 302, 340
Bourgeoisie, German — 32, 103, 266-67, 348-49, 372
Bourgeoisie, Prussian — 96, 292-93, 297-98
Bourgeois political economy — 138, 185-86, 384, 388-89, 514
See also Classical bourgeois political economy; Malthusianism; Ricardo, Ricardianism; Vulgar bourgeois political economy
Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1868) (preparations for it) — 423-24, 425, 428

Page me42.753
C

Capital
— analysis of the process of its production — 328, 358, 366-67
— bourgeois definitions of — 483, 543
— confusion of money and capital in bourgeois political economy — 185-86, 543
See also Accumulation of capital; Banks; 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Capitalist mode of production; Classical bourgeois political economy; Depreciation of fixed capital; Money; Profit; Shares, joint-stock companies; Surplus-value; Vulgar bourgeois political economy; Wage labour
'Capital' by Karl Marx
— its significance for the international working-class movement — 4, 312, 358, 366-67, 451, 489
— its method — 173, 232, 382-83, 384, 390-91, 464, 493, 533
— A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy — 328, 382
— third version of the manuscript of Capital (Economic Manuscript of 1863-65) — 4, 46, 159, 162-63, 168, 173, 174-75, 178, 227-28
— plans of the publication of Capital — 46, 219, 312, 328, 358, 366-67, 368, 371, 390-91
— contract on the publication of Capital — 175, 219, 339, 343, 357, 362, 371 — preparation of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital for the press — 219, 221, 223-24, 227-28, 262-63, 278, 282, 286, 291, 312, 328, 332, 338-39, 343-44, 350-51, 357, 363, 366, 565, 573-74, 576
— proofs of the first German edition of Volume One — 173, 359-60, 363, 366, 371, 378, 380, 382-83, 385, 386-87, 390, 391-92, 396, 400, 402, 405-07, 417, 419-20, 427, 432
— Marx on Engels' assistance in the

Page Break me42.754
preparation of Capital — 402, 405
— Marx on the contents and significance of Volume One — 312, 328, 358, 383-84, 390-94, 407, 463-64, 487, 490, 493-95, 514-15
— Engels on the contents and significance of Volume One — 381, 386-89, 399, 402, 405-06, 417, 423 — its spread and propaganda — 363, 426-27, 436, 439, 443, 445, 455-58, 461-62, 464-67, 471, 475, 477, 491, 493-95, 498, 499, 500, 503, 510, 511-13, 515, 516, 518, 527, 532-33, 536, 539, 548, 560 — its distribution among workers — 358-59, 368, 415, 423, 427, 428, 441, 442, 447, 451, 467, 483, 488, 489-90, 498, 515, 533, 541, 546, 579 — comments on it in the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois strata — 467-68, 488, 490, 497, 511, 512, 527, 536, 537

— preparation of the French edition — 368, 483, 488, 532, 533
— preparation of the English edition — 173, 386-87, 394, 406, 436, 455
— distribution of the German edition — 417, 436, 439, 450, 472-73, 477, 488, 542
— Marx and Engels on the subsequent volumes of Capital — 343, 357, 368, 371, 390, 402, 408, 418, 436, 442, 514-15, 544
— Marx on the Theories of Surplus-Value as an historical part of Capital — 173, 328, 357, 367, 368
See also Dialectics; Engels, Frederick; Marx, Karl Capitalist — 384-85, 388, 391
See also Bourgeoisie; Capital; Exploitation of labour power by capital Capitalist mode of production — 136-38, 494
See also Banks; Capital; Capitalist; Crises — economic; Foreign (world) trade; Money; Profit; Surplus-value; Unemployment; Wage labour
Cause and effect — 138
Chartism — 15, 16, 253
Chauvinism — 281
Chemistry — 254, 382-83, 387-88, 495, 560
See also Agricultural chemistry
Child labour — 200, 203, 224, 296, 383-84
China — 10, 345, 349
Church — 48, 338, 458, 484
Class(es) — 54-55, 137, 334
See also Aristocracy, nobility; Bourgeoisie; Working class Classical bourgeois political economy — 136-38, 402, 407
— analysis of the commodity and its value — 384, 514-15
— fundamental difference of Marx's theory from the theories of his predecessors — 386-88, 402, 406-07, 457, 514-15
See also 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Ricardo, Ricardianism; Vulgar bourgeois political economy
Class struggle — 95-97, 326, 327
Coalitions — 71, 89-90, 93-94, 95, 103-05
See also Trade unions; Trade unions in Britain Commodity
— its analysis in Volume One of Capital — 328-29, 381-82, 384, 387, 390-93, 396, 488, 514
— dual character of the labour embodied in it — 407, 514
— critique of the views of Proudhon and Proudhonists — 488
See also Money; Price, formation of prices; Production costs; Value; Wages
Common ownership — 515

Commune, community — 547, 549, 557-58
See also Land ownership; Society; Tribal system
Communism (socio-economic formation) — 137, 417, 494
Communists, communist movement — 112, 126, 221, 445, 515, 524
Compromise — 81, 82, 83, 103, 108, 171
Concrete labour — 392, 407, 514
Consumption — 136-38, 494
Co-operation (capitalist) — 27, 127-28
— as a subject of research in Volume One of Marx's Capital — 406, 490, 494
Co-operation, the co-operative movement — 15, 459, 494

Page Break me42.755
— question of co-operative labour and co-operative production in the International Working Men's Association — 200, 203
— criticism of Lassalle's views on workers' co-operative associations — 90, 95-96, 124, 527 — criticism of bourgeois theories on co-operatives — 15
Corn Laws (England) — 486
Cosmogony — 184-85, 186-87
Cotton, cotton-growing — 9-11, 62, 481
— cotton famine (1861-64) in Britain — 10, 11, 27, 53-54, 62, 113, 115, 117, 140-42, 279
— movement in the prices of cotton in Britain — 9-11, 62, 141-42, 199, 278, 481
Cotton (textile) industry — 9-11, 62, 142, 199, 345, 349, 431
Credit — 82, 141, 200, 203, 533, 543
Crimean war, 1853-56 — 21, 122, 124, 349, 352
Crises — 19, 215, 228
— economic — 6, 228, 278-79, 281, 345, 349, 460
— commercial — 9, 11, 47, 137, 215, 345
— monetary — 10, 278, 279
— political — 47, 226, 460
See also Prevision, forecasting

Page me42.755
D

Danish war, 1864 — 7-8, 121, 267
See also Schleswig-Holstein, Schleswig-Holstein question
Darwinism — 127, 304-05, 322-23, 494, 558-59
Denmark — 7-8
Depreciation of fixed capital — 388, 408-13
See also Fixed capital; Machines
Dialectics
— in Marx's Capital — 173, 382, 385, 390, 464, 493, 513, 533-34
— dialectical structure of Marx's Capital — 173, 232
— dialectical method — 390, 464

— laws of dialectics — 385
— dialectics of nature and natural science — 138, 382, 385
See also Hegel, Hegelianism
Differential and integral calculus — 159, 209-10
Discoveries — 185, 232, 385, 560
Division of labour — 494

Page me42.755
E

Economic crises — see Crises — economic Economic laws — 136-38, 514-15
Economic theory of Marxism — see 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Marxist political economy
Emigration — 110, 372 Emigration, political — petty-bourgeois — 120
— French — 287
— German in Britain — 27, 31-38, 41-42, 44-45, 151, 163, 164, 229-30
— German in Switzerland — 190, 215, 283, 284
— German in the USA — 37, 40, 45, 57
— Italian — 16, 110, 140, 150, 162, 238-39, 242-44
— Polish — 18, 73, 216-18
See also German Workers' Educational Society in London; Schiller Institute
Engels, Frederick
— friendship with Marx and his family — 151, 172-73, 186, 197, 225-26, 231-32, 233-34, 306, 310-11, 330-33, 363, 371, 383-84, 405, 431-32, 551, 554, 559, 565-67
— joint work with Marx — 83, 84-85, 86-88, 120, 129, 162, 168, 173, 224, 381-85, 386-87, 388-89, 390-94, 399, 402-13, 417, 451, 463, 464, 487, 499, 525-26
— Marx on Engels — 90, 361, 371, 383-84, 395, 405
— on himself — 88, 125, 126, 138, 265, 363-64, 399, 444, 469, 480, 499, 501, 508, 539-40
— and the International Working Men's Association — 20, 125, 141, 152-53, 156-57, 179, 212-13, 265, 270, 425, 430, 487

Page Break me42.756
— contributions to the labour and democratic press — 15, 68-69, 71, 78, 97, 99, 105, 106, 115, 116-17, 124-25, 136, 205, 214, 235, 255, 257, 270-71, 280, 456, 552
— contributions to bourgeois and bourgeois-democratic publications — 296, 298, 463-64, 484, 500, 518, 525-26, 533, 560
— and the working-class and socialist movement in Britain — 136, 168, 257, 426, 458, 468
— and the working-class and democratic movement in Germany — 120, 124-25, 126, 133, 152, 178-79, 191, 197, 204-05, 270, 284-86, 298, 348, 430, 444-45, 456, 462, 480, 491-92, 499, 505, 546
— and the working-class and socialist movement in the USA — 418, 451-52, 456 — his studies in natural sciences — 320, 323-25, 382-83, 387-88, 480, 510, 560

— his study of military matters — 21, 38-40, 61-62, 69, 121-24, 153, 255-56, 273, 279-80, 285, 288, 293-94, 303, 339-40, 426, 510-11, 520, 523-24, 534 — his studies in philology — 7-8, 168-69, 526, 554, 560-61
See also 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Marx, Karl; Schiller Institute England (Great Britain) — 7, 219, 383-84, 468
— repeal of the Corn Laws (1846) — 486
— home policy, internal situation — 219, 345, 349, 383-84, 458, 468
— foreign trade — 345, 349
— working class — 54-55, 468
— election system, its class character — 168
— Parliament — 212, 242, 269-71, 282, 300
— electoral reform movement in the 1860s — 74, 155, 158, 206, 253, 257, 259, 269, 270, 300, 349, 468 — electoral reform of 1867 — 468
— factory legislation — 21
— political parties of the ruling classes — 212, 269, 270, 468, 474
— colonial policy — 197, 199, 205
— policy in Ireland — 460, 486, 487, 550
— prospects of revolution — 300, 468
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 370, 374, 394
— and Bonapartism — 473-75
— and the US Civil War — 10, 35, 62, 113, 117, 140, 141
See also Corn Laws; Cotton, cotton-growing; Crises; International Working Men's Association in Britain; Working-class and socialist movement in Britain
Enlightenment, philosophers of the Enlightenment — 557
Essence and appearance — 160, 390, 392, 514
See also Inner and outer Europe — 19, 38, 215, 274, 292, 312, 339-40, 494-95
— prospects of European revolution — 226, 270, 463, 468
See also War(s)
Exchange value — 384-85, 388-89, 393, 407, 514
See also Value
Exploitation of labour power by capital — 296, 550
See also Child labour; Factory, factory system; Factory legislation; Female labour; Labour conditions of the workers under capitalism; Living conditions of the workers under capitalism; Surplus-value; Wage labour; Wages; Working day
Expropriation of the expropriators — 417

Page me42.756
F

Factory, factory system — 141-42, 227, 345, 349, 388, 391, 392, 408-13, 552
See also Machines
Factory legislation — 383, 488, 546, 552
— limitation of the working day — 200, 203, 488
— on child labour — 224, 296, 383, 456

— on female labour — 296
— and health protection — 224, 296, 301

Page Break me42.757
— in Britain — 224, 296, 383
— in Germany — 546
Farmers — 461, 486
See also Agriculture
Female labour — 200, 296
Fenians, Fenianism — 378, 390, 394, 444, 460, 464, 468, 474, 483, 485-86, 501, 506, 516
— conspiratorial character of the organisation — 501, 506
— persecution of the Fenians by the British government — 394, 460, 474, 483, 550
See also International Working Men's Association (First International) — and the struggle for the independence of Ireland; Ireland
Fertility of soil — 137, 558-59
Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism — 360, 520
Fixed capital — 408-13
See also Capital; Depreciation fund of fixed capital; Machines
Foreign (world) trade — 137, 345, 349, 487
Form of value — 381, 384-85, 387, 392-93
See also Money; Price, formation of prices; Use-value; Value
Fourier, Fourierism — 287, 326
France — 71, 295, 334
See also Army, French; Bonapartism; Bourgeoisie, French; International Working Men's Association in France; Second Empire in France; Working-class and socialist movement in France
French Revolution — 71, 557
Friendship — 57, 102, 221, 231-32, 330, 551

Page me42.757
G

General Association of German Workers — 15, 58, 65, 69, 75, 125, 140, 141, 150-52, 154, 165 — its sectarian character — 58, 125, 175
— attitude of its leaders towards the Bismarck government and feudal reaction — 69, 75-76, 78-79, 81-83, 87-91, 95-96, 102-05, 112, 124, 125, 150-51, 161, 170, 566-67
— Marx, Engels and the newspaper Der Social-Demokrat — 26, 29, 30, 64-65, 68-71, 75, 78, 80-82, 83, 88-90, 95-97, 99, 102, 103-05, 111-12, 114, 120, 124-26, 129, 133, 134-35, 150-52
— revolutionary opposition in the Association — 3-4, 58, 103, 140, 141, 152, 154, 161, 174, 175, 176, 180, 197
— and the International Working Men's Association — 58, 64-65, 91, 103-05, 125, 423-24
— general meeting in Düsseldorf — 15, 58

— participation in the elections and parliamentary activity — 348-49, 430
See also Lassalleanism, Lassalleans
Geneva Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1866) — 199, 200, 201, 203-04, 220, 258, 265, 268, 270, 271, 312, 314-15, 316, 318, 326
Geographical environment — 305, 320, 322-24
Geology — 164, 305, 320, 322-24
German philosophy — 476, 497
See also Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism; Hegel, Hegelianism
German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918) — 106, 150, 230, 415, 504
Germany — 105
— industry — 372-73
— railways — 179, 182, 285
— home policy, internal situation — 258-59, 289-90, 345, 348, 456-57
— bourgeoisie — 32, 103, 182, 349, 372
— working class — 32, 103-04, 125, 126, 150, 376
— feudal aristocracy — 32, 77, 96
— bureaucracy, officialdom — 95, 348
— Parliament (Reichstag) — 257, 264, 298, 302, 306, 348, 373, 456-57
— suffrage — 348-49
— political parties of the ruling classes — 298, 421
— cultural development — 232, 493
— ways of the country's unification — 258-59, 263, 275-76, 285,

Page Break me42.758
288, 293, 297-98, 302, 306, 348, 352, 460
— prospects of revolution — 258, 462
— foreign policy — 350, 352
— and France — 351
— and Russia — 351, 352
See also Bourgeoisie, German; International Working Men's Association in Germany; National Association; National-Liberals Party of Progress; Prussia; Working-class and socialist movement in Germany
Ground rent — 227, 371, 407, 507-08, 514, 543, 548

Page me42.758
H

Hegel, Hegelianism — 138, 258, 292, 370, 385, 387, 453, 464, 556
— Hegelian dialectics — 138, 382, 385, 513, 520
— Hegelian logic — 138, 558
— Hegelian categories — 232, 513, 520
— philosophy of nature — 138, 184-85
— and natural science — 138, 184-85, 292, 382, 385
— and Marxism — 138, 382, 387, 464, 513
Historical and logical, the — 172-73, 381-82

Historical materialism, materialist conception of history — 291-92, 295, 305, 494
See also Class(es); Class struggle
Historicism — 136-38, 322, 494
Historiography — 8, 202, 364-65, 547-49, 557-58
Housing question — 296, 401
Human race — 24

Page me42.758
I

India — 10, 141, 279, 345, 349, 547
Individual, particular and universal, the — 407, 514, 558
Industrial reserve army — 137
— 'state assistance' to the unemployed in capitalist society — 21, 117
See also Unemployment
Inner and outer, the — 159-60, 390
See also Essence and appearance
Interest — 9, 248, 279, 391, 514
See also Banks; Credit; Profit; Shares, joint-stock companies International solidarity of workers — 200, 203
— in strike struggle — 265, 268, 270, 271-72, 274-75, 351
International Working Men's Association (First International) — 15-18, 44, 424 — foundation of — 3-4, 15-17, 47, 109-10
— programme documents, their character (Inaugural Address and Rules) — 16-18, 20, 22-23, 26, 44, 47, 63
— organisational principles — 55, 91-92, 105, 171, 202, 214, 219, 314-15, 367, 428 — struggle for the class, proletarian character of the Association — 16-17, 49, 54-55, 60, 73-74, 92-93, 108-10, 114, 118-19, 130, 131-32, 144, 206-07, 212-13, 215, 216-18, 243-44, 250-51, 268 — struggle for the unity of the international proletariat — 200, 326 — and political struggle of the working class — 104-05, 150, 265, 326, 424 — inseparable connection of the proletariat's economic and political struggle — 326-27 — and trade unions — 15, 44, 45, 74, 109, 159, 200, 202, 221, 268, 274-75, 351 — and strikes — 159, 265, 268, 270, 271-72, 274, 351
— struggle for a shorter working day and higher wages — 162, 200, 203, 326-27 — questions of female and child labour, education and upbringing — 200, 203 — and factory legislation — 326
— and the co-operative movement — 200, 203
— and the nationalities question — 55, 66, 110, 114, 200, 204, 281, 287, 442, 460-61, 485-86
— and the Polish question — 49, 54-55, 66, 73, 109-10, 114, 200, 204,

Page Break me42.759

277-78, 280
— and the struggle for the independence of Ireland — 460, 464, 485-87, 504
— struggle against Bonapartism — 55, 89, 95, 108-09

— struggle for an independent stand to be taken by the proletariat in foreign policy, against wars of conquest — 49, 73, 85, 110, 161, 200, 204, 420
— struggle against the Mazzinists and Mazzinism — 16-17, 110, 140, 144, 242-44, 250, 278 — struggle against the Proudhonists and Proudhonism — 216, 281, 287, 318, 326, 368, 423-24, 425, 428
— struggle against the Lassalleans and Lassalleanism — 57, 58, 64-65, 89-91, 95-96, 104, 107-08, 111, 114, 124-25, 130, 150-51 — struggle against reformism — 49, 52, 259, 314, 424
— and the struggle for an electoral reform in Britain — 91, 108, 150, 206-07, 215, 221, 314, 327
— and the League of Peace and Freedom — 420
— Central (General) Council, its rules, composition and activity — 16-18, 55, 130, 155, 162-63, 314-15, 434-35
— Sub-Committee, Standing Committee — 16-17, 54, 55, 130, 172, 214, 485-86 — membership — 55, 91-92, 105, 202, 219, 318
— role of Marx and Engels in creating the International and in its activity — 16-18, 20, 49-50, 54-55, 130, 162-63, 207, 243, 250-51, 265, 268, 314-15, 318, 329
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Germany — 105, 201-02, 219, 449-50
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Belgium — 144-47, 170-71 — its press — 50, 109, 173, 191, 198-99, 200, 206, 214-15, 219-21, 224-25, 243, 249-50, 252-53, 262, 268, 271-72, 275, 283, 327, 571, 574 — and the bourgeois press — 63, 73, 86, 109, 202, 214-15, 338, 421-22, 424, 428, 429, 430, 485
— its funds — 338
— and the ruling classes and police persecution — 338, 341, 516, 520
See also Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1868); Geneva Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1866); International Working Men's Association (in different countries); Lausanne Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1867); London Conference of the International Working Men's Association (1865)
International Working Men's Association in Belgium — 73, 105, 170-71, 189, 219, 220, 259
International Working Men's Association in Britain — 54-55, 66-67, 74, 91-92, 105, 109-10, 125, 144, 150, 206-07, 220-21, 271-72, 290, 327, 329, 424
— refugee sections in London — 110, 141, 150, 212-13, 214-15, 216-18, 250-51, 286-87
International Working Men's Association in France — 47, 66, 85, 105, 108-09, 115, 125, 140, 155, 189, 207, 259, 351, 428, 516, 520
International Working Men's Association in Germany — 58, 90, 105, 125, 202, 215, 219-20, 259, 283, 424, 430
International Working Men's Association in Italy — 47, 271, 420
International Working Men's Association in Switzerland — 66, 105, 125, 189, 207, 214, 215, 219-21, 571
International Working Men's Association in the USA — 259, 367
Intervention — 394, 426
Ireland — 504

— as a British colony and citadel of British landlordism — 460-61, 486-87, 550
— Anglo-Irish Union, 1801 — 486
— land question as a form of the nationalities question — 441-42
— agrarian revolution in the mid-19th century, clearing of the estates — 461, 463, 464, 486
— national liberation movement in

Page Break me42.760
the late 18th century — 486
— national liberation movement in 1848 — 486
See also Fenians and Fenianism; International Working Men's Association (First International) — and the struggle for the independence of Ireland
'Irony, historical' — 285, 292
Italy — 278, 282, 374
— ways of completing its unification — 460, 468
See also Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; International Working Men's Association in Italy

Page me42.760
J

Jamaica — 168, 197, 199, 205

Page me42.760
L

Labour
— its dual character — 392, 407, 514
— manual — 334
Labour conditions of the workers under capitalism — 550, 552
Labour time — 391, 515
Land ownership
— common, communal — 548-49, 558-59
— emergence of private land ownership — 548, 558-59
— private large-scale land ownership — 442, 461, 486
— eviction of peasants and tenants — 461, 464, 486
— its concentration — 486
— as a subject of research in Volume Three of Marx's Capital — 227, 371
Lassalleanism, Lassalleans — 25, 84, 90, 96, 101-05, 134, 161, 165, 175-76, 494, 532, 548, 566-67
— Lassalle and his role in the working-class movement — 5, 12, 32, 36-37, 38, 41, 45, 57, 66, 69, 87, 88, 90, 101-05, 129, 134, 526, 527, 566
— criticism of Lassalle's theoretical views — 25, 96, 97, 101, 329, 526, 527, 566-67
— dogmatic and sectarian character of Lassalleanism — 58, 89-90, 125, 174-75 — demand for universal suffrage — 12, 87, 102-03, 123
— demand for state assistance to workers' co-operatives — 87, 95-97, 124

— attitude towards the Prussian state and feudal reaction — 12, 30, 38, 53, 68-69, 71, 75, 78, 81-82, 83, 87-91, 94-96, 101-05, 124-26, 150, 161, 278, 494, 566 — attitude towards the bourgeoisie — 78-79, 169, 175-76, 494
— criticism of Lassalle's cult — 24, 26, 58, 66, 71, 75-76, 78, 80, 90, 101-04, 124, 125, 141, 161, 165, 175-76, 181, 190, 548
See also General Association of German Workers
Lausanne Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1867) — 367, 416-17, 422, 425, 427-28, 519
Law of transformation of quantity into quality — 382, 385
Law of unity and conflict of opposites — 392-93, 405-07
Law of value — 514-15
Laws — of history — 385
— of society — 136
— economic — 136
— of mechanics (and astronomy) — 184, 186, 187
League of Peace and Freedom (1867) — 414, 420, 433
Light — 67, 91, 117 Literature
— American — 370
— English — 177, 234, 246, 249, 336, 376, 568
— French — 34, 242, 290, 348, 453, 454, 522
— German — 15, 30, 32, 52, 53, 66, 103, 149, 168, 230, 232, 233, 242, 245, 290, 299, 340, 355, 521
— classical Greek — 316, 568
— Italian — 568
— Norwegian — 168
— Roman — 53, 340, 498, 504
— Spanish — 313
— folklore — 32, 168, 242

Page Break me42.761
Living conditions of the workers under capitalism — 27, 53, 137
Logic
— logic categories — 557-58
— logic of things and events — 96, 97
See also Abstraction; Dialectics; Hegel, Hegelianism
London Conference of the International Working Men's Association (1865) — 163, 171, 174, 190, 200, 201, 203-04, 214-15
Luxemburg — 293, 306-07, 351, 355, 394, 459

Page me42.761
M

Machines — 137, 373, 409-13
— their analysis in Marx's Capital — 228, 490, 494, 549

Malthusianism — 127, 137, 138, 408, 455
Man, humanity — 24, 136-37, 304-05, 366, 431, 557-58
Market — 137, 345, 349
See also China, Foreign (world) trade; India; Trade
Marxist political economy — 4, 136-37, 384-85, 387, 390-91, 402, 406, 407, 457, 514-15
Marx, Karl
— friendship with Engels — 172, 231-32, 330, 371, 383-84, 402, 551, 559
— joint work with Engels — 83, 84-85, 86-89, 120, 129, 162, 168, 173, 223-24, 381-82, 383-84, 399, 402-06, 417, 486-87
— Engels on Marx and his role in the international working-class movement — 233-34
— on himself — 3-4, 31, 32, 34, 36, 37, 101, 105, 118, 166, 198, 201, 215, 223, 227, 243, 262-63, 289, 307-08, 311, 328, 329-30, 335, 360-61, 366-68, 375, 379, 423-24, 435-36, 440, 504, 529-31, 544, 551-52, 557
— on his family — 46, 63-64, 193, 198, 223, 310-11, 315-16, 347, 351, 396-97, 477, 502, 542-43, 544, 548 — before 1844 — 530
— 1845-February 1848 — 530
— in the 1848-49 revolution — 368, 530
— and the International Working Men's Association — 15-19, 22, 23, 26, 36, 44, 46-49, 54-55, 58-61, 66, 73-74, 85-86, 90-93, 105, 108-10, 115, 119, 130, 131, 140, 144, 149-50, 154-55, 158, 160, 162-63, 171, 173-74, 176, 189, 200-04, 206-07, 212, 213, 215, 216-21, 243, 249-53, 258, 268, 271, 286-87, 312, 314-15, 318, 326-27, 329, 341, 346, 366-68, 416, 424, 428-29, 434, 485-87, 519-20
— contributions to the labour and democratic press during the existence of the International Working Men's Association — 53, 57, 64-66, 71, 75-76, 78, 80, 88, 96, 102-04, 111-14, 116, 124-25, 133, 135, 154-55, 173, 198-99, 201, 207, 224, 253-54, 268, 283, 346, 430, 571
— contributions to bourgeois and bourgeois-democratic publications — 42-43, 63, 116, 160-61, 202, 515-16
— and the working-class and socialist movement in Britain — 15, 45, 49, 54, 74, 91-92, 105, 108-09, 130, 150, 154-55, 157-58, 162-63, 215, 221, 250-51, 253, 289-90, 300, 329, 351, 424, 469
— and the working-class and socialist movement in France — 46, 66, 80, 85, 108-09, 115, 118-19, 130, 212-13, 281, 287, 318, 326, 351, 368, 428
— and the working-class and democratic movement in Germany — 3-4, 15, 22, 36, 46, 58-59, 65, 67, 75, 86-87, 94-95, 101-05, 108, 124-26, 150, 197-98, 201, 215, 263, 272, 312
— and the working-class and socialist movement in the USA — 44, 49-50, 326, 367
See also 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Engels, Frederick Mathematics — 138, 159, 187, 208-10, 543

Page Break me42.762
See also Differential and integral calculus
Mazzinism, Mazzinists — 16, 17, 20, 23, 32, 33, 110, 140, 144, 162-63, 243-44, 250, 278, 420, 424
Means of production — 137, 291

See also Machines; Productive forces
Means of subsistence — 136-37
Medicine — 304, 324-25, 327, 360, 469, 517
Method — 173
— dialectical — 390, 464
See also 'Capital' by Karl Marx — its method
Military art — 293-94, 302-03
— and technical progress and weapons — 288, 291-94, 302-03
— strategy — 121-22
— tactics — 293, 302-03
Military science — 291, 293
— study by Marx and Engels of war history and theoretical problems of warfare — 38-39, 68-69, 70, 77, 82-83, 123-25, 279, 302-03, 510, 516, 523, 524, 534
Mode of production — 322, 494
Monetary (financial) crisis — 9-10, 278-79
Money — 382, 384, 393, 533
— as a form of value — 382, 384, 387, 393
— as the universal equivalent — 393
— credit money — 533
— its conversion into capital — 386
— analysis in A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy by Marx — 328, 384
— analysis in Marx's Capital — 328, 381-82, 384, 386, 393, 494, 533, 536
— bourgeois theories of money and money circulation — 185-86
See also Banks; Credit; Crises

Page me42.762
N

National Association (Germany, 1859-67) — 102, 266, 372
Nationalities question — 200, 204, 287
See also International Working Men's Association (First International) — and the nationalities question
Nationality — 7, 18, 281, 287
National-Liberals — 372, 421, 504
Natural science — 24, 28, 254, 327, 464, 571
— and philosophy — 138, 242, 327, 385
— and dialectics — 138, 382, 385
— and scientific communism — 493-94
— studies by Marx and Engels — 138, 283-84, 327
Necessity and chance — 304-05, 494

Page me42.762
O

Owenism, Owenites — 16, 159, 162, 326, 459, 552

Page me42.762
P

Pacifism — 414, 420
Palaeontology — 304, 557
Parliament — 212, 242, 269, 270
— its utilisation in working-class interests — 297-98, 431-32, 433, 444, 445, 450, 456, 546
Party of Progress (Germany, 1861-84) — 67, 71, 76, 84, 85, 90, 96, 97, 104, 112, 150, 288, 421, 430, 456
Party, proletarian — 34, 57, 77, 83, 96, 101, 104, 112, 126, 290, 443, 452, 455, 498
Peonage — 442
Personality cult (criticism of it) — 75, 79, 101-03, 165, 201
See also Lassalleanism, Lassalleans
Philosophy — 138, 200, 204, 388
See also Dialectics; Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism; German philosophy; Hegel, Hegelianism; Historical materialism, materialist conception of history; Logic; Method; Positivism (Comtism)
Polish national liberation uprising of 1863-64 — 18, 38, 66
— and the Polish refugees — 18, 73, 216-18
Polish question — 213, 264, 274
— and the working class — 38, 110, 200, 204, 277-78
— and the European bourgeoisie — 93, 110, 114
— and the stance taken by the European powers — 55, 110, 264, 274

Page Break me42.763

See also International Working Men's Association (First International) — and the Polish question
Political economy — 136-37, 384, 464, 494, 543
See also 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Classical bourgeois political economy; Dialectics; Marxist political economy; Method; Vulgar bourgeois political economy
Political struggle — 326-27
Positivism (Comtism) — 292, 455
Press, the — 102, 120, 268, 271-72, 451, 452
— proletarian, its tasks, its status — 15, 25-26, 49-50, 58, 70-71, 95-96, 154-55, 215, 219, 220-21, 252-53, 280, 283, 413-14, 533, 571
— bourgeois — 32, 34, 35-36, 52, 85-86, 95, 143, 148, 202, 205, 215, 267, 277, 286, 302, 338, 421, 422, 424, 425, 430, 447, 461-62, 529 — utilisation of the bourgeois and bourgeois-democratic press in the interests of the working class and its party — 286, 425, 427, 428, 430, 443-45, 455, 461-62, 463-64, 466, 467, 469, 471, 497, 500-01, 504, 510, 515-16, 539, 541
Prevision, forecasting — 224, 279, 285, 297, 300, 339-40, 418
— forecasting of economic crises and their consequences — 47, 215, 228, 279, 349
— prevision of armed conflicts and their consequences — 46, 47, 255-56, 264-65, 270, 275-77, 281, 290, 292-94, 302, 352, 365
— forecasting of revolution — 258, 265, 270, 285-86, 290, 300, 337, 458, 460

Price, formation of prices — 248, 388-89, 390-91, 480-81
— effect of the law of value — 514-15
— price of production — 390
— and production costs — 390
— price of labour (labour power) — 388, 390, 488
— and demand and supply — 10-11
— views of bourgeois economists — 515
— in Proudhon's theory — 488
See also Commodity; Money; Production costs; Value
Private property — 417, 547, 558
Production costs — 390, 488
Productive forces — 137, 291, 494 Profit
— as the transformation of surplus-value — 390, 407, 514
— formation of the average rate of profit — 390
— and wages — 138
— and the capitalist employment of wage labour — 138
— and the regeneration of fixed capital — 410-11
— in classical bourgeois political economy — 402, 407
— in vulgar bourgeois political economy — 388-91
— in Proudhon's theory — 488
See also Banks; Ground rent; Interest; Surplus-value
Progress and regress — 334, 494
Protectionism — 487
Proudhonism, Proudhonists — 218, 281, 287, 318, 326, 368, 379, 423-24, 425-26, 488
— as an ideology of the petty bourgeoisie — 326, 368
— unscientific, doctrinarian, dogmatic character of — 218, 326, 379
— criticism of Proudhon's economic views — 488
— and bourgeois society — 326
— on classes and the class struggle — 326
— and politics, the state, anarchy — 287, 326
— on war and peace — 281
— and the nationalities question — 216-18, 281, 287, 379
— attitude towards the political and economic struggle of the working class — 326 — and various socialist and communist theories and trends — 218, 326
See also International Working Men's Association (First International) — struggle against the Proudhonists and Proudhonism
Prussia — 77-78, 95-96, 103, 281-82,

Page Break me42.764
299, 349, 456-57, 493-94
— population — 372, 545
— domination of the military, militarism — 345-46, 372
— Bonapartism of the ruling élite — 266, 285
— economic, industrial development — 77, 372-73
— railways — 182, 238, 285

— agriculture, agrarian relations — 77, 372
— finances, budget, taxation — 77, 82, 372
— Junkerdom — 77, 90, 96, 292, 494
— bourgeoisie — 38, 95-96, 182, 236, 266-67, 292-93, 349, 372
— working class — 76, 90, 95-96, 104-05, 169, 174, 176
— peasantry, rural proletariat — 77, 84-85, 345, 372
— bureaucracy, officialdom — 90, 95, 104, 302, 466
— political system, police régime — 90, 95-96, 270, 302, 417, 421, 555
— internal situation, home policy — 76, 77, 82, 90, 95-96, 102-05, 226, 229, 266-67, 278, 285-86, 292-93, 297-98, 301-03, 306-07, 349, 372, 417, 421, 456, 494, 555
— military reforms, the army — 67, 292-94, 297, 302, 306, 426, 446
— political parties of the ruling classes — 67, 76, 95-96, 103-04, 111, 288, 297-98, 372, 421
— Parliament — 38, 77, 154, 163, 229, 298, 302, 306, 349, 444, 456, 489
— constitution, the constitutional conflict of the 1860s — 67-68, 82, 84-85, 226, 229, 236, 266, 285, 302, 349
— suffrage — 76, 77, 105, 266, 348-49
— press, press legislation, censorship — 63, 70, 76, 83, 104-05, 417
— foreign policy and diplomacy — 182, 255-57, 265, 267, 270, 281-82, 288-89, 293, 352, 374, 460
— prospects of revolution — 265, 270, 285-86, 290, 337
— Luxemburg crisis of 1866-67 — 122, 351, 352-55, 459
— and Austria — 85, 182, 264-65, 267, 282, 285, 293, 298, 299
— and France — 265, 345, 460, 555
— and Germany — 298, 306-07, 345, 372
— and Poland — 38, 374
— and Russia — 38, 85, 256-57, 258, 264-65, 267, 276, 281-82, 293, 312, 352, 374, 460, 555
See also Army, Prussian; Austro-Prussian war, 1866; Bourgeoisie, Prussian; Luxemburg

Page me42.764
R

Railways — 137, 179, 182, 285, 352, 545
Reflection — 390
Reformism — 253, 314
See also Lassalleanism, Lassalleans; Proudhonism, Proudhonists; Trade unions in Britain
Reform League (Britain) — 108, 109, 150, 158, 206, 214-15, 220, 243, 253, 314, 460
Religion — 48, 100, 200, 204, 483-84, 503, 571-72
Republican movement, republicanism — 141, 144
— 'German republicanism' — 32-33, 35, 302
Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany — 87
Revolution, proletarian — 137, 462
See also Expropriation of the expropriators
Revolution, social — 269, 287, 458, 462, 468
Ricardo, Ricardianism — 137, 457, 543

Russia — 163-64, 550
— reform of 1861 — 222-23
— post-reform economy, development of capitalism — 352
— railways — 352, 545
— finances — 352
— commune and artels — 547
— contacts of Marx and Engels with Russian revolutionaries — 18-19, 141, 577 — foreign policy and diplomacy — 258, 264, 267, 269, 274, 281-82, 351, 352, 459, 496, 506, 513, 536, 537

Page Break me42.765
— and Austria — 281-82, 293, 299-300
— and Britain — 370, 374
— and Germany — 352
— and Prussia — 256-57, 258, 264, 352, 460-61
— and Turkey — 545
See also Crimean war, 1853-56

Page me42.765
S

Schiller Institute (in Manchester) — 20, 81, 98, 116, 117, 235, 533, 555
Schleswig-Holstein, Schleswig-Holstein question — 7-9, 34, 38, 267, 374, 430, 534
See also Danish war, 1864
Science — 137, 322, 390
Second Empire in France — 108, 334, 348, 550
— economy — 281
— internal situation, home policy — 207-08, 211, 290, 339-40, 418, 473-75, 550
— bourgeoisie — 302, 340
— working class — 211, 302, 327
— peasantry — 302, 340
— army — 207-08, 215, 306, 339-40
— aggravation of class contradictions — 207-08, 211, 215, 302, 340, 418, 473-75 — opposition movement — 211, 215, 306-07, 418, 459-60, 462
— student movement — 207-08, 211, 215
— prospects of revolution — 211, 215, 302, 374, 418, 459-60, 462
— foreign policy — 207-08, 211, 215, 256, 258, 280, 290, 294, 307, 364, 418, 459-60, 462, 537
— Mexican expedition, 1861-67 — 208, 211, 215, 338, 438
See also Bonapartism; Bourgeoisie, French; International Working Men's Association in France; Working-class and socialist movement in France
Shares, joint-stock companies — 178, 179, 182, 279, 284, 372-73, 399, 472
Slavery — 39, 86, 87, 137, 334
See also United States of America, the; US Civil War, 1861-65
Socialism (theories and trends) — 17-18, 326, 493-94, 557, 559
Socialism, utopian — 326, 494

See also Fourier, Fourierism; Owenism, Owenites
Social relations — and productive forces — 494
Society — 136-38, 494, 515
See also Communism (socio-economic formation)
Species (in biology) — 303-04, 322-24, 558
Speculation (in industry and trade) — 9-10, 62, 167, 248, 399
Spontaneous generation — 284, 455
State, the — 90, 266, 287, 557
Statistics — 23, 224, 296, 383, 407
Stocks (of commodities) — 113, 142
Subjective and objective — in politics — 69
Suffrage — 76, 77, 87, 105, 348-49
Surplus-labour — 390
Surplus-value
— Marx's elaboration of the theory of — 407, 457, 514
— its component parts or specific forms — 390, 407, 514
— its rate — 390
— and the formation of average profit — 390
— and working hours — 388-91
— and wages — 388-91
— in classical bourgeois political economy — 390, 407, 514
— views of the vulgar bourgeois economists — 388-91, 514
See also Capital; 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Ground rent; Interest; Profit

Page me42.765
T

Talent — 48, 218, 221, 505, 512
Taxes — 21, 48, 78, 116, 135, 183, 199, 200, 203, 372
Terminology
— in Volume One of Marx's Capital and its translations — 386-88, 406, 490 Terror — 150, 153, 272-73, 275, 287, 463, 474, 501, 505
— counter-revolutionary — 150, 153, 287, 474
— as a form of protest against despotism

Page Break me42.766
— 272-73, 275, 387, 463
— as a form of struggle of the Irish against oppression — 474, 501, 505
Thinking — 381, 517
Trade — 9-11, 62, 76, 142, 178, 334, 349
See also Commodity; Foreign (world) trade; Market; Money; Speculation
Trade unions — 95-96, 527
See also Coalitions; Trade unions in Britain
Trade unions in Britain — and the political struggle of the proletariat — 15-16, 44, 426, 448

— and the electoral reform movement — 15, 18, 74, 158, 221, 346
— and the International Working Men's Association — 15-16, 20, 44, 47, 54, 73-74, 109, 141, 159, 200, 221, 258-59, 268, 274-75, 329, 351, 424
— London Trades Council — 15, 329
— reformism and conciliation of trade union leaders — 314
— encroachments of the ruling classes on the rights of the trade unions — 384, 387
See also England (Great Britain); International Working Men's Association (First International) — and the trade unions
Tribal system — 558
See also Commune, community

Page me42.766
U

Unemployment — 21, 137
See also Industrial reserve army
United States of America, the — 39, 372, 414
— immigration — 372
— internal situation, home policy — 150-51, 153, 163, 167-68, 334, 414
— slavery, the struggle against it — 39, 48, 334
See also International Working Men's Association in the USA; US Civil War, 1861-65; Working-class and socialist movement in the USA
US Civil War, 1861-65
— its significance and results — 10, 38, 48, 269
— causes of — 38-39
— military strength of the adversaries — 38-40, 61, 82, 122
— course of hostilities — 10, 21, 38-40, 48, 61-62, 82, 113, 121-24, 153
— and revolutionary émigrés — 40, 47
— policy of the Union Government (North), its aims and tasks — 153 — slavery issue — 39, 48, 61-62
— assassination of Lincoln — 150, 153
— and Britain — 44, 45, 117, 152-53, 199
— and the British bourgeoisie and its press — 27, 53, 62, 73, 86, 153, 160-61
— and the British working class — 15, 27, 43, 45, 47
— and the International Working Men's Association — 50, 73, 85, 160
Use-value — 384-85, 388-89, 393, 407, 514

Page me42.766
V

Value — 514-15
— its analysis — 384
— its form — 381, 384, 392, 393, 396, 406, 419, 423
— qualitative identity and quantitative distinction of commodities as values — 393 — and the price of labour power or labour — 388-89, 390, 488

— and the price of production — 390
— in classical bourgeois political economy — 384, 514
— in vulgar bourgeois political economy — 384, 388-91
— in Proudhon's theory — 488
See also Commodity; Exchange value; Money; Price, formation of prices; Production costs; Surplus-value; Use-value; Wages
Vulgar bourgeois political economy — its class and apologetic character —

Page Break me42.767
136-38, 388-89, 390-91
— individual features of its method — 388-89, 390-91
— its theory of value — 384, 388-89, 390-91, 488, 510, 511, 514
— theories of the origin of profit — 388-89, 390-91
— interpretation of capital — 136-38, 185-86, 543
— theories of money and money circulation — 185-86 — theories of wages — 388-89, 390-91
— interpretation of ground rent — 548
— and banks — 185-86, 543
— and economic laws — 136-38
— attitude towards the classical bourgeois political economy — 136, 514 — and Volume One of Marx's Capital — 386-87, 391, 399, 405, 443, 458, 466, 468, 487, 510-12, 514
See also Malthusianism

Page me42.767
W

Wage labour — 137-38, 450
See also Capital; Class(es); Class struggle; Exploitation of labour power by capital; Factory legislation; Industrial reserve army; Unemployment; Wages; Working class Wages
— analysis of in Marx's Capital — 160, 162, 345, 390, 511-12
— as a form of value (price) of labour power — 388-89, 390, 488, 511
— as a component part of production costs — 388-89, 390
— irrationality of the 'labour-wages' formula — 388-89, 390, 514
— and the working day — 345, 388-89, 390, 392, 488, 514
— general rise in the level of — 159, 162
— cases of their reduction — 345
— workers' struggle to retain or raise the level of — 159, 345
— and tactics of the capitalists — 345, 388-89
— and crises of overproduction — 137-38
— and necessary labour — 488
— and the capitalists' profit — 138, 388-89, 390, 488
— and surplus-value — 388-89, 390, 488
— and the value or the price of commodities — 160, 199, 388-89, 488

— critique of bourgeois views — 388, 390, 511, 514-15
— critique of Proudhon's views — 488
War(s)
— and revolution, revolutionary movement — 45, 255, 270
— and the working-class movement — 45, 255, 287-88
— people's wars — 39
— threat of war in Europe in the 1860s — 226, 265, 460, 536, 537
See also Army; Austro-Italo-French war, 1859; Austro-Prussian war, 1866; Crimean war, 1853-56; Danish war, 1864; International Working Men's Association (First International) — struggle for an independent stand to be taken by the proletariat in foreign policy, against wars of conquest; US Civil War, 1861-65
War industry (and armaments) — 200, 203, 291, 295, 302-03
Working class — 95-96, 103, 110, 287, 300, 326, 334, 445
See also Class struggle; Party, proletarian; Trade unions; Working-class movement
Working-class and socialist movement in Belgium — 144, 170, 171
See also International Working Men's Association in Belgium
Working-class and socialist movement in Britain — 15, 18, 44, 45-46, 47, 74, 105, 108, 150, 157-58, 206-07, 221, 258-59, 300, 349, 468, 571
— electoral reform movement in the 1860s — 15, 18, 73-74, 105, 150, 158, 206, 221, 243, 251, 253, 258-59, 270, 300, 314, 346, 349, 464, 468, 571

Page Break me42.768
— and the Irish question — 460, 464, 468
— struggle against intervention during the US Civil War — 15, 44, 45, 47
— strikes and the strike movement — 50, 349
See also Chartism; International Working Men's Association in Britain; Owenism, Owenites; Reform League; Trade unions in Britain
Working-class and socialist movement in France — 226, 326, 368
See also International Working Men's Association in France; Proudhonism, Proudhonists
Working-class and socialist movement in Germany — 15, 90, 103-05, 152, 169-70, 174, 207, 219, 290, 298, 376, 441
See also Coalitions; General Association of German Workers, International Working Men's Association in Germany; Trade unions
Working-class and socialist movement in Italy — see International Working Men's Association in Italy
Working-class and socialist movement in Switzerland — see International Working Men's Association in Switzerland Working-class and socialist movement in the USA — 418
— and the Negro question — 39, 334
See also International Working Men's Association in the USA
Working-class movement — 18, 157, 300
— significance of its unity — 326
— combination of the economic and political struggle — 326-27
— and revolutionary theory — 18
— necessity of a single theoretical programme — 4

— significance of the struggle for suffrage and of the parliamentary activity of working-class representatives — 74, 105, 150, 221, 326 — actions against wars, militarism and annexations — 47, 255-56, 287, 300
— and the nationalities question — 287
See also Chartism; Class struggle; Coalitions; International solidarity of workers; International Working Men's Association (First International); Party, proletarian; Trade unions; Trade unions in Britain; Working class
Working day — 488
— and wages — 345, 388-89, 390-91, 488, 514
— and surplus-value — 388, 391
— struggle of the working class for its reduction — 200, 203
— struggle of the workers for the introduction of an eight-hour working day — 418, 451-52
— capitalists' resistance to its reduction — 71, 418
— introduction by capitalists of a reduced working day or a reduced working week — 345, 349
— Marx and Engels on the analysis of the working day in Capital — 224, 388-89, 391, 392, 451-52, 457, 488, 490

Footnotes

Page me42.3
†a The Marx family lived here from March 1864 to March 1875.
Page me42.3
†b At this point, the following passage is deleted from the manuscript: 'in any case, if I were to assume the leadership, the government would immediately suppress the whole thing.'
Page me42.4
†a At this point, the following passage is deleted from the manuscript: 'to establish a liaison between the German workers' movement and the English one.'
Page me42.4
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me42.4
†c At this point in the manuscript, the following words are deleted: 'C. Siebel from Barmen or'.
Page me42.5
†a The end of the letter is missing.
Page me42.6
†a Danish name: Sønderborg.
Page me42.7
†a Danish name: Sundeved.
Page me42.8
†a J.J.A. Worsaae, An Account of the Danes and Norwegians in England, Scotland, and Ireland.
Page me42.8

†b K.J. Clement, Schleswig, das urheimische Land des nicht dänischen Volks der Angeln und Frisen und Englands Mutterland, wie es war und ward.
Page me42.9
†a as an equal among equals
Page me42.10
†a on prices falling
Page me42.11
†a The manuscript breaks off here. The end of the letter is printed according to the Deutsche Revue.
Page me42.11
†b Elisabeth Engels
Page me42.12
†a See this volume, p. 9.
Page me42.12
†b the shame be his who thinks ill of it (the motto of the English Order of the Garter)
Page me42.12
†c See present edition, Vol. 41, p. 563.
Page me42.12
†d on 30 September 1864
Page me42.12
†e Marquis Posa and Philipp II are characters from Schiller's Don Carlos; William — King William I of Prussia.
Page me42.12
†f See this volume, p. 5.
Page me42.15
†a E. Jones, 'A Letter to the Advocates of the Co-operative Principle, and to the Members of Co-operative Societies', 'Co-operation. What It Is, and What It Ought to Be' (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 573-89).
Page me42.15
†b 'To the Workmen of France from the Working Men of England', The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 112, 5 December 1863.
Page me42.15
†c for the German workers
Page me42.16
†a lessons
Page me42.17
†a danger in delay (Livy, History of Rome, Vol. XXXVIII, Chap. 25)
Page me42.18
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.18
†b smaller nations
Page me42.18
†c K. Marx, 'Provisional Rules of the Association'.
Page me42.18
†d 8 November

Page me42.18
†e The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 160, 5 November 1864.
Page me42.18
†f strong in deed, mild in manner
Page me42.19
†a Janko von Racowita
Page me42.19
†b Emma Herwegh
Page me42.19
†c Helene von Dönniges
Page me42.20
†a Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.20
†b Carl Klings (see this volume, p. 15)
Page me42.20
†c K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.20
†d 'God and People'
Page me42.20
†e Mazzini
Page me42.21
†a i.e. Dagbladet
Page me42.21
†b 'Central Executive Relief Committee', The Manchester Guardian, No. 5686, 8 November 1864
Page me42.22
†a International Working Men's Association
Page me42.22
†b Capital
Page me42.23
†a but one has to grin and bear it
Page me42.23
†b The Manchester Guardian (see this volume, p. 21)
Page me42.23
†c Laura Marx (a reference to Marx's receipt of money in respect of Wolff's legacy; see this volume, p. 20)
Page me42.24
†a Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.24
†b of Lassalle
Page me42.24
†c See this volume, pp. 15, 20.
Page me42.24
†d ibid., p. 12.
Page me42.24
†e Gottfried Kinkel

Page me42.25
†a See this volume, pp. 20, 23.
Page me42.25
†b With regard to
Page me42.25
†c J.W. Goethe, 'Der Fischer'.
Page me42.25
†d J.B. Schweitzer, Widerlegung von Carl Vogt's Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europa's.
Page me42.25
†e J.B. Schweitzer, Lucinde oder Capital und Arbeit.
Page me42.26
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.26
†b See this volume, pp. 20, 24.
Page me42.26
†c ibid., p. 12.
Page me42.26
†d ibid., p. 24.
Page me42.26
†e 'Acute peritonitis ... in some cases just a few hours elapse between the onset of the disease and death, whereas on other occasions peritonitis, which is always acute in its symptoms, does not cause death for from 30 to 40 days.'
Page me42.26
†f 'Peritonitis due to external violence'
Page me42.26
†g hospital in Paris
Page me42.26
†h two days later, 'exhibits all the symptoms of acute phlegmasia of the peritoneum'
Page me42.26
†i autopsy
Page me42.26
†j on the 5th or 6th day
Page me42.26
†k 'until the very last, no disturbance of the mind or senses is observed' (see G. Andral, Clinique médicale, ou choix d'observations recueillies á l'hôpital de la Charité (clinique de M. Lerminier), t. 4, Paris, 1827, pp. 511, 532, 533)
Page me42.27
†a is the 'grand' organ of Swabian democracy
Page me42.27
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.29
†a Moses Hess
Page me42.29
†b See this volume, p. 15.

Page me42.30
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.30
†b an attitude of grin and bear it
Page me42.30
†c Moses Hess
Page me42.30
†d Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.30
†e ['A Republican Protest',] Neue Frankfurter Zeitung, No. 270, 29 September 1864; 'Republikanischer Protest', Hermann, No. 2407, 8 October 1864; Die Westliche Post, October-beginning of November 1864.
Page me42.31
†a Janko von Racowita and Helene von Dönniges
Page me42.31
†b A paraphrase of an article from the Twelve Tables (a code of law of ancient Rome) which says: 'Adversus hostem aeterna auctoritas [esto]' (III, 7); Marx uses the word vindicatio in the sense of revenge.
Page me42.31
†c 'Let the avenger rise' (Virgil, Aeneid, IV, 625: 'ex oriare aliquis nostrius ex ossibus ultor').
Page me42.31
†d kept man
Page me42.31
†e Friederike Ettlinger, Cohen's and later Karl Blind's wife
Page me42.31
†f See present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 116-32, 315, 317-20.
Page me42.32
†a between ourselves
Page me42.32
†b in one way or another
Page me42.32
†c Heinrich Heine, Atta Troll. Ein Sommernachtstraum, 11.
Page me42.32
†d Marx presumably has in mind, first and foremost, Eduard Bronner and Karl Heinrich Schaible.
Page me42.33
†a An allusion to Karl Blind's father, Johann Adam Blind who was a publican in Mannheim.
Page me42.33
†b G. Struve, Die neue Zeit. Ein Volkskalender auf das Jahr 1.
Page me42.33
†c 'Interview of Karl Blind with Garibaldi', The Morning Advertiser, No. 22726, 11 April 1864.
Page me42.33
†d Marx quotes Karl Blind

Page me42.33
†e Cf. the title of Marx and Engels' pamphlet: The Great Men of the Exile (present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 227-326).
Page me42.34
†a 'General Garibaldi', The Times, 19 April 1864.
Page me42.34
†b G. Rasch, Vom verlassenen Bruderstamm. Das dänische Regiment in Schleswig-Holstein, Bd. 1-3; Vom verrathenen Bruderstamm. Der Krieg in Schleswig-Holstein im Jahre 1864. Bd. 1-2.
Page me42.34
†c R. Virchow's speech in the House of Representatives on 9 December 1863. In: Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen der [...] beiden Häuser des Landtages, Haus der Abgeordneten, 13 Sitzung, Bd. 1.
Page me42.35
†a 'M. Karl Blind', North British Daily Mail, 30 March 1863.
Page me42.35
†b Marx refers to the reports on Blind's meetings with Garibaldi published in The Observer, Nos. 3804, 3805 and 3806, 10, 17 and 24 April 1864.
Page me42.35
†c The Athenaeum, No. 1902, 9 April 1864.
Page me42.35
†d G. Struve, Geschichte der drei Volkserhebungen in Baden.
Page me42.35
†e 'M. Karl Blind', North British Daily Mail, 30 March 1863.
Page me42.36
†a Blind published Garibaldi's letter to him in The Morning Advertiser, 9 November 1864.
Page me42.36
†b i.e. the southern slave-owning states
Page me42.36
†c Marx means his revelations about Blind in Herr Vogt.
Page me42.38
†a 'Ein republikanischer Protest', Die Westliche Post, October-beginning of November 1864.
Page me42.38
†b Louis Borchardt
Page me42.38
†c Alexander II
Page me42.40
†a Danish name: Dybböl.
Page me42.40
†b Louise Weydemeyer
Page me42.40
†c Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.40
†d See this volume, p. 29.

Page me42.41
†a from Die Westliche Post with Blind's article 'Ein republikanischer Protest'
Page me42.41
†b Neue Frankfurter Zeitung
Page me42.41
†c See this volume, p. 33.
Page me42.41
†d red-handed
Page me42.42
†a See this volume, p. 30.
Page me42.42
†b K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.43
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.43
†b Louise Weydemeyer
Page me42.44
†a 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.44
†b Wilhelm Wolff
Page me42.44
†c Karl Mayer
Page me42.44
†d 'Bescheidenheit — ein Ehrenkleid', Der Beobachter, No. 245, 21 October 1864.
Page me42.44
†e Herr Vogt
Page me42.45
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.45
†b See this volume, pp. 40-42.
Page me42.45
†c 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'
Page me42.46
†a Henrietta Marx (died 30 November 1863)
Page me42.46
†b See this volume, pp. 40-42.
Page me42.47
†a Marx to Lion Philips, 17 August 1864 (present edition, Vol. 41).
Page me42.47
†b 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.47
†c worker
Page me42.47
†d The Times, No. 25021, 4 November 1864.
Page me42.47

†e K. Marx, 'Provisional Rules of the Association'.
Page me42.48
†a Marx quotes from J. Weydemeyer's letter to Engels written in October 1864.
Page me42.48
†b An account of Disraeli's speech at the meeting in Oxford on 25 November 1864 was published in The Times, No. 25040, 26 November 1864.
Page me42.48
†c Henriette van Anroij, Dr van Anroij and Friedrich Philips
Page me42.49
†a The Manchester Guardian
Page me42.49
†b K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.49
†c K. Marx, 'To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America'.
Page me42.49
†d philistine
Page me42.50
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.50
†b Ferdinand von Westphalen
Page me42.51
†a Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me42.51
†b Moses Hess and Bernhard Becker
Page me42.51
†c See this volume, p. 2.
Page me42.51
†d [K. Blind,] Article marked 'Bradford, 25. Oct.', Der Beobachter, No. 268, 17 November 1864
Page me42.51
†e Missouri Democrat
Page me42.52
†a Presumably The Free Press, No. 12, 7 December 1864, with the article [C.D. Collet,] 'Russia's Designs on the Pope'.
Page me42.52
†b See this volume, p.51.
Page me42.52
†c hence these tears (Terence, Andria, I, 1, 99)
Page me42.52
†d See present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 120 and 205.
Page me42.52
†e Hermann Heinrich Becker
Page me42.52
†f K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.52
†g Ernestine Liebknecht

Page me42.52
†h danger in delay (Livy, History of Rome, Vol. XXXVIII, Chap. 25)
Page me42.53
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.53
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.53
†c K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.53
†d See this volume, p. 27.
Page me42.53
†e Lassalle
Page me42.53
†f Marquis Posa and Philipp II are characters from Schiller's Don Karlos. By 'Philipp II of the Uckermark' Marx means William I.
Page me42.53
†g Berlin dialect in the original here: 'wo ken Examen nicht netig.'
Page me42.54
†a Marx quotes almost literally Liebknecht's letter to him of 2 December 1864.
Page me42.54
†b statesmen
Page me42.54
†c Alexander Mensdorff-Pouilly
Page me42.54
†d [C.D. Collet,] 'Russia's Designs on the Pope', The Free Press, No. 12, 7 December 1864.
Page me42.54
†e mouthpiece
Page me42.54
†f K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association', The Miner and Workman's Advocate, No. 93, 10 December 1864.
Page me42.54
†g 6 December
Page me42.55
†a See this volume, pp. 15-16.
Page me42.56
†a See this volume, pp. 52, 53.
Page me42.56
†b K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.57
†a Karl Blind
Page me42.57
†b Literally: minor gods; here, creatures of a lesser kind.
Page me42.58
†a between ourselves
Page me42.58

†b K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.58
†c allusively (see previous letter)
Page me42.58
†d infinitely small
Page me42.60
†a The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 169, 7 January 1865; The Miner and Workman's Advocate, No. 97, 7 January 1865.
Page me42.60
†b on 3 January
Page me42.63
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.63
†b K. Marx, 'To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America'.
Page me42.63
†c 'joyful entrance' (a French medieval expression used to welcome the arrival of a prince or king into one of his own towns).
Page me42.63
†d James Fazy. Sein Leben und Treiben. (Von einem Westschweizer), Neue Zürcher-Zeitung, Nos. 321-360, 16 November-25 December 1864.
Page me42.63
†e to save what can yet be saved
Page me42.63
†f regular issue for the subscribers
Page me42.63
†g Mrs Marx, Laura, and Eleanor Marx and Helene Demuth
Page me42.64
†a Here a strip of paper is cut off at the bottom of the page, presumably bearing Marx's signature. The paragraph that follows is a postscript in the left-hand corner of the first page of the letter.
Page me42.65
†a [Moses]H[ess], 'Paris, 10. Jan. [Arb.-Associationen. Internat. Arb.-Assoc. Avenir national], Der Social-Demokrat, No. 8, 13 January 1865.
Page me42.66
†a [Moses] H[ess], 'Paris, 10. Jan. [Arb.-Associationen. Internat. Arb.-Assoc. Avenir national], Der Social-Demokrat, No. 8, 13 January 1865.
Page me42.66
†b K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.66
†c See this volume, pp. 64-65.
Page me42.66
†d pure and simple
Page me42.66
†e La Liberté de penser
Page me42.66
†f See this volume, p. 60.

Page me42.66
†g Sickingen and Charles V are characters in Lassalle's Franz von Sickingen.
Page me42.67
†a K. Marx, 'On Proudhon [Letter to J.B. Schweitzer]'.
Page me42.67
†b Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.67
†c William I
Page me42.68
†a Moses Hess (see this volume, pp. 65, 66)
Page me42.68
†b Bernhard Becker
Page me42.68
†c F. Engels, 'Herr Tidmann. Old Danish Folk Song'.
Page me42.68
†d Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.68
†e F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.69
†a General Association of German Workers
Page me42.70
†a In complete agreement (see previous letter)
Page me42.70
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party, Chapter 1.
Page me42.70
†c from the outset
Page me42.70
†d The reference is presumably to the Hermann and the Londoner Anzeiger.
Page me42.70
†e A reference to Hess' report 'Paris, 25. Jan. [Associationswesen. Clerus. Der oppositionelle Wahlsieg]', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 15, 29 January 1865.
Page me42.70
†f Quoted from the report 'Iserlohn, 25. Januar', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 15, 29 January 1865.
Page me42.71
†a Quoted from an anonymous poem published in the section 'Einsendungen von Arbeitern' in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 15, 29 January 1865.
Page me42.71
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.71
†c constitutional liberty
Page me42.71
†d 'rights of man'
Page me42.71

†e J. Bright's speech in the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce on 19 January 1865. In: The Times, No. 25087, 20 January 1865.
Page me42.71
†f The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party
Page me42.72
†a to all appearances (In partibus infidelium — literally: in parts inhabited by unbelievers. The words are added to the title of Roman Catholic bishops appointed to purely nominal dioceses in non-Christian countries).
Page me42.73
†a noble pair (Horace, Satires, II, III, 243)
Page me42.73
†b The Morning Star
Page me42.73
†c Karl Blind
Page me42.73
†d K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.73
†e St.-Louis Daily Press, No. 22, 10 January 1865.
Page me42.74
†a See this volume, p. 71.
Page me42.75
†a See this volume, pp. 58-59.
Page me42.75
†b Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.75
†c Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.75
†d Hermann Heinrich Becker
Page me42.75
†e for mercy
Page me42.75
†f K. Marx, 'On Proudhon [Letter to J.B. Schweitzer]'.
Page me42.75
†g good faith
Page me42.76
†a first of all
Page me42.76
†b restitution to full rights
Page me42.76
†c F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.76
†d regarding
Page me42.76
†e See this volume, pp. 79-80.
Page me42.77
†a See previous letter.

Page me42.77
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.78
†a on the subject
Page me42.78
†b a joint account
Page me42.78
†c of Capital
Page me42.78
†d at Gumpert's door (see this volume, p. 72)
Page me42.78
†e Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.78
†f Literally: Little Social-Demokrat
Page me42.78
†g Engels is referring to the following articles by Schweitzer published as leaders in Der Social-Demokrat (Nos. 5, 6 and 14; 6, 8 and 27 January 1865): 'Das Kirchenthum und die moderne Civilisation', 'Das Ministerium Bismarck und die Regierungen der Mittel- und Kleinstaaten' and 'Das Ministerium Bismarck. I'.
Page me42.79
†a if there are grounds for doing so
Page me42.79
†b Karl Emil Blank
Page me42.79
†c F. Engels, 'Herr Tidmann. Old Danish Folk Song', K. Marx, 'On Proudhon [Letter to J.B. Schweitzer]'.
Page me42.79
†d See this volume, pp. 75, 76-77.
Page me42.80
†a Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.80
†b See this volume, p. 82.
Page me42.80
†c Moses Hess
Page me42.81
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.81
†b Moses Hess
Page me42.81
†c Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.81
†d if there were anything to bequeath
Page me42.81
†e F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.82
†a A hall in Cologne used for public meetings during the 1848-49 revolution.

Page me42.82
†b [J.B. Schweitzer,] 'Das Ministerium Bismarck. II', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 18, 5 February 1865.
Page me42.83
†a The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party
Page me42.83
†b Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.83
†c Engels is referring to Der Social-Demokrat, No. 19, 8 February 1865, containing Schweitzer's article 'Die deutsche Social-Demokratie' and Hess' article 'Paris, 4. Febr. [Neue Gesetzvorschläge betr. Cooperativ-Associationen. Die internationale Arbeiter-Association. Unterrichtsfrage]'.
Page me42.83
†d Moses Hess
Page me42.84
†a F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.85
†a Quoted (with some digressions) from the article 'Die Eröffnung der preussischen Landtags-Session' published in St.-Petersburger Zeitung, No. 10, 14 (26) January 1865. Italics by Marx.
Page me42.85
†b Moskovskiya vyedomosti
Page me42.85
†c Moses Hess
Page me42.85
†d L'Avenir national
Page me42.86
†a information bureau
Page me42.86
†b See this volume, p. 73.
Page me42.86
†c 'President Lincoln and the International Working Men's Association', The Express, 6 February 1865.
Page me42.86
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.87
†a Lassalle's
Page me42.87
†b A sentence deleted by Marx follows here: 'This is not the place for you to set out your own view — or alternatively you could drop the introductory section and just say the following:'.
Page me42.87
†c Archduke John of Austria
Page me42.87
†d by gracious permission of the police
Page me42.88

†a See previous letter.
Page me42.88
†b Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.88
†c Lassalle
Page me42.89
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.89
†b [Moses] H[ess], 'Paris, 7. Febr. [Amerika. — Der Orient. — Italien. — Die Internationale Arbeiter-Association]', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 21, 12 February 1865.
Page me42.89
†c concerning
Page me42.89
†d firstly
Page me42.90
†a concerning
Page me42.90
†b about-turn
Page me42.90
†c Bernhard Becker
Page me42.90
†d with regard to
Page me42.90
†e See this volume, pp. 86-88.
Page me42.91
†a Lassalleanism
Page me42.91
†b Robert Burns
Page me42.91
†c R. Burns, Is There for Honest Poverty.
Page me42.92
†a See this volume, pp. 109-10.
Page me42.92
†b the cordial, sincere and frank atmosphere
Page me42.93
†a The rest of the letter, missing in the English original, has been translated from the extant French manuscript.
Page me42.93
†b See this volume, p. 110.
Page me42.93
†c Manuscript damaged
Page me42.93
†d An omission in the original; Marx presumably means Duke Townshend.
Page me42.94
†a Hermann Heinrich Becker
Page me42.94

†b F. Engels, 'Herr Tidmann. Old Danish Folk Song'.
Page me42.94
†c we must put an end to it
Page me42.94
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.95
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.95
†b See this volume, pp. 89-90.
Page me42.95
†c ibid., pp. 75-76.
Page me42.95
†d The Times, No. 25107, 13 February 1865.
Page me42.96
†a William I
Page me42.97
†a A reference to Marx's article 'The Communism of the Rheinischer Beobachter'.
Page me42.97
†b confederation
Page me42.98
†a See this volume, p. 94.
Page me42.98
†b With regard to
Page me42.98
†c from Meissner (see this volume, pp. 84-85.
Page me42.98
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.98
†e See this volume, pp. 94-95.
Page me42.99
†a F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.99
†b as a special delicacy
Page me42.99
†c Lizzie Burns
Page me42.100
†a Engels refers to his pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.100
†b The manuscript is damaged; here and below the words in square brackets are reconstructed according to Engels' letter to Marx of 22 February 1865.
Page me42.102
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of the Stuttgart Beobachter'.
Page me42.102
†b See this volume, pp. 56-57.
Page me42.102

†c K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.102
†d K. Marx, 'On Proudhon [Letter to J.B. Schweitzer]'.
Page me42.102
†e See this volume, pp. 107 and 112.
Page me42.103
†a Marquis Posa and Philipp II are characters in Schiller's drama Don Carlos. Here Marx calls William I of Prussia 'the Philipp II of the Uckermark'.
Page me42.103
†b Neue Preussische Zeitung
Page me42.104
†a a brave face on it
Page me42.104
†b See this volume, pp. 64-65.
Page me42.104
†c ibid., p. 90, 95-96.
Page me42.104
†d nonentities
Page me42.105
†a by the grace of the police
Page me42.105
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.105
†c K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.106
†a Schweitzer
Page me42.106
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.106
†c what a fool our friend
Page me42.107
†a See this volume, pp. 101-05.
Page me42.107
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.107
†c Not so.
Page me42.107
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.107
†e Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.107
†f German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me42.108
†a See this volume, p. 101.
Page me42.108
†b ibid., pp. 95-96.

Page me42.108
†c retreat
Page me42.108
†d honourable man
Page me42.109
†a See this volume, pp. 154-55.
Page me42.109
†b beautiful France
Page me42.109
†c Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires
Page me42.110
†a See this volume, pp. 92-93.
Page me42.110
†b William Dell
Page me42.110
†c K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.111
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.111
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.111
†c Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.111
†d See this volume, pp. 67-69.
Page me42.112
†a Engels refers to the publication of a notice about his pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (see this volume, p. 84).
Page me42.112
†b See this volume, pp. 111-12.
Page me42.113
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.113
†b A reference to the fifth article of the series 'Das Ministerium Bismarck', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 28, 1 March 1865.
Page me42.113
†c O, jerum, jerum, jerum! O quae mutatio rerum! (Oh, dear me, dear me, dear me. A crazy world. Lord, hear me!) — part of the refrain from a student song attributed to Höfling.
Page me42.114
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.114
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.114
†c Londoner Anzeiger
Page me42.114
†d See this volume, pp. 109-10.

Page me42.115
†a See this volume, p. 118-19.
Page me42.115
†b Moses Hess
Page me42.115
†c Manuscript illegible
Page me42.115
†d See this volume, p. 110.
Page me42.115
†e Johann Carl Juta
Page me42.115
†f Cape of Good Hope
Page me42.115
†g Caroline Schmalhausen
Page me42.115
†h See this volume, pp. 117-18.
Page me42.116
†a See this volume, pp. 135-38.
Page me42.116
†b What do you think of it?
Page me42.116
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.116
†d See this volume, pp. 117-19.
Page me42.117
†a F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.117
†b Kölnische Zeitung
Page me42.117
†c probably Carl Schorlemmer
Page me42.117
†d See this volume, p. 91.
Page me42.117
†e In the original: May.
Page me42.117
†f Johann Carl Juta
Page me42.117
†g As regards
Page me42.118
†a In the original: January 1852.
Page me42.118
†b K. Marx, 'Hirsch's Confessions'.
Page me42.118
†c See present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 219-20.
Page me42.118
†d See this volume, pp. 108-09.

Page me42.119
†a See this volume, p. 130
Page me42.119
†b [F. Engels,] 'Notice Concerning The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party'.
Page me42.119
†c 'Aufruf an alle Arbeiter, Arbeitervereine und Arbeiterassociationen in der Schweiz zum Beitritt der “Internationalen Arbeiter-Association”'.
Page me42.119
†d See this volume, p. 116.
Page me42.119
†e F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.120
†a concerning the breach with Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.120
†b Der Deutsche Eidgenosse
Page me42.120
†c F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.121
†a See this volume, p. 107.
Page me42.121
†b ibid., pp. 39-40.
Page me42.121
†c military matters
Page me42.122
†a prestige
Page me42.124
†a See this volume, pp. 22, 23-24.
Page me42.124
†b on the contrary
Page me42.124
†c without ceremony
Page me42.124
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.125
†a F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.125
†b Louise Weydemeyer's
Page me42.126
†a The original has: February.
Page me42.126
†b from the Social-Demokrat
Page me42.126
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.126
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Qúestion and the German Workers' Party.

Page me42.126
†e Die Rheinische Zeitung
Page me42.126
†f Der Deutsche Eidgenosse
Page me42.126
†g No figure in the original.
Page me42.126
†h Sophie von Hatzfeldt
Page me42.127
†a F.A. Lange, Die Arbeiterfrage in ihrer Bedeutung für Gegenwart und Zukunft.
Page me42.128
†a Caroline Schmalhausen
Page me42.129
†a of 15 December 1864
Page me42.129
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.129
†c Gottfried Ermen, Engels' partner
Page me42.130
†a Capital
Page me42.130
†b William Cremer
Page me42.130
†c overturned
Page me42.130
†d what is to be done, my dear fellow?
Page me42.130
†e Londoner Anzeiger, 17 March 1865
Page me42.131
†a See this volume, p. 134.
Page me42.131
†b 14 March
Page me42.133
†a See this volume, p. 129.
Page me42.133
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.134
†a Londoner Anzeiger
Page me42.134
†b See this volume, pp. 130-31.
Page me42.134
†c K. Marx, 'Review of Engels' Pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party'.
Page me42.134
†d K. Marx, 'Synopsis of Engels' Pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party'.

Page me42.134
†e K. Marx, 'Statement [Regarding the Causes of the Breach with the Social-Demokrat]'.
Page me42.134
†f Ernestine Liebknecht
Page me42.135
†a See this volume, pp. 117-18.
Page me42.135
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.136
†a honourable (or dishonourable) leisure (Cicero, Oratio pro Sextio, 45)
Page me42.136
†b F.A. Lange, Die Arbeiterfrage in ihrer Bedeutung für Gegenwart und Zukunft.
Page me42.136
†c Ch. Darwin, On the Origin of Species by means of Natural Selection....
Page me42.138
†a vicious circle
Page me42.138
†b G.W.F. Hegel, Wissenschaft der Logik. Erster Theil. Die objektive Logik. Zweites Buch. Das Wesen.
Page me42.139
†a Bernhard Becker
Page me42.140
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.140
†b With regard to
Page me42.140
†c K. Marx, 'The “President of Mankind”'.
Page me42.140
†d Rheinische Zeitung and Düsseldorfer Zeitung
Page me42.141
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht's
Page me42.141
†b Der Social-Demokrat, No. 43, 5 April 1865.
Page me42.141
†c Regarding
Page me42.142
†a partner
Page me42.143
†a The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 177, 4 March 1865.
Page me42.143
†b more or less
Page me42.144
†a provisionally
Page me42.144
†b Giuseppe Mazzini

Page me42.144
†c Giuseppe Fontana
Page me42.144
†d K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.147
†a Marx's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.147
†b A reference to Engels' dog.
Page me42.148
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.149
†a between ourselves
Page me42.149
†b Paraphrased quotation from F. Rückert's poem 'Die Weisheit des Brahmanen'.
Page me42.149
†c Capital
Page me42.150
†a Sibylle Hess
Page me42.150
†b See this volume, p. 140.
Page me42.150
†c Louis Weber
Page me42.150
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.151
†a See this volume, p. 150.
Page me42.152
†a Bernhard Becker
Page me42.152
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.152
†c K. Marx, 'The “President of Mankind”'.
Page me42.153
†a Capital
Page me42.153
†b of Abraham Lincoln
Page me42.153
†c Engels uses the South-German dialect here: 'Färschten'.
Page me42.154
†a See this volume, p. 150.
Page me42.154
†b D. Urquhart, 'Construction of the “Kingdom of Italy”', The Free Press, 3 May 1865.
Page me42.154
†c F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.154

†d von Roon
Page me42.154
†e [Account of Gneist's speech in the House of Deputies,] Berliner Reform, No. 69 (supplement), 22 March 1865.
Page me42.155
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.155
†b See this volume, p. 140.
Page me42.155
†c of themselves
Page me42.155
†d Capital
Page me42.156
†a Moses and Sibylle Hess. See this volume, p. 150.
Page me42.156
†b Moses Hess. Engels makes a pun on the name Moses and the word Maus (mouse).
Page me42.156
†c concerning
Page me42.156
†d See this volume, pp. 154-55.
Page me42.157
†a And what would be the use?
Page me42.157
†b See this volume, p. 154.
Page me42.157
†c ibid., pp. 155, 156.
Page me42.157
†d Regarding
Page me42.158
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.158
†b first of all
Page me42.158
†c Moses Hess
Page me42.158
†d The poor devil!
Page me42.159
†a K. Marx, ['Address from the Working Men's International Association to President Johnson'].
Page me42.159
†b Edgar von Westphalen's
Page me42.159
†c T.J. Dunning, Trades Unions and Strikes: Their Philosophy and Intention.
Page me42.160
†a Capital

Page me42.160
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.160
†c K. Marx, ['Address from the Working Men's International Association to President Johnson'].
Page me42.160
†d Berliner Reform
Page me42.161
†a K. Marx, 'To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America'.
Page me42.161
†b Capital
Page me42.162
†a Helene von Dönniges
Page me42.162
†b Janko von Racowita
Page me42.162
†c 20 June
Page me42.162
†d See this volume, pp. 159-60.
Page me42.162
†e K. Marx, Value, Price and Profit.
Page me42.163
†a Capital
Page me42.163
†b Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.163
†c Regarding
Page me42.164
†a R.I. Murchison, E. de Verneuil, Count Alexander von Keyserling, The Geology of Russia in Europe and the Ural Mountains.
Page me42.164
†b intruders
Page me42.164
†c Ida and Käthe Freiligrath
Page me42.165
†a A reference to the various branches of the General Association of German Workers (see this volume, p. 161).
Page me42.165
†b strong meat
Page me42.165
†c K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me42.166
†a Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.166
†b See this volume, p. 159.
Page me42.167

†a See p. XL of the Preface.
Page me42.168
†a See this volume, pp. 159-60, 162.
Page me42.168
†b Capital
Page me42.168
†c Charles Roesgen
Page me42.169
†a Der Social-Demokrat
Page me42.170
†a General Association of German Workers
Page me42.170
†b in Greenwich (see this volume, p. 158)
Page me42.170
†c See this volume, p. 162.
Page me42.171
†a See this volume, pp. 173-74.
Page me42.172
†a The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London.
Page me42.174
†a German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me42.174
†b Bernhard Becker (see this volume, p. 152)
Page me42.174
†c Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.174
†d Capital
Page me42.175
†a Otto Meissner
Page me42.175
†b what he had written
Page me42.175
†c See this volume, pp. 169-70.
Page me42.175
†d about-turn
Page me42.175
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.176
†a Ernestine Liebknecht
Page me42.176
†b with regard to
Page me42.176
†c The original has: Beobachter.
Page me42.176
†d Capital

Page me42.176
†e K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me42.176
†f K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne.
Page me42.177
†a Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.177
†b Bardolph — a character from Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor and King Henry IV.
Page me42.177
†c Nordstern, Nos. 315 and 316, 8 and 15 July 1865.
Page me42.177
†d nickname of Napoleon III (the name of a bricklayer in whose clothes Napoleon fled from prison in 1846)
Page me42.177
†e The Miner and Workman's Advocate
Page me42.177
†f Lizzy Burns
Page me42.178
†a through rose-coloured spectacles
Page me42.178
†b Capital
Page me42.178
†c what would you have?
Page me42.179
†a C. Schilling, Die Ausstossung des Präsidenten Bernhard Becker aus dem Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Verein und der 'Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.179
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.179
†c Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.180
†a C. Schilling, Die Ausstossung des Präsidenten Bernhard Becker aus dem Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Verein und der 'Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.180
†b of the General Association of German Workers
Page me42.180
†c August Vogt
Page me42.180
†d Berliner Reform
Page me42.180
†e Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.180
†f dear brother (Ferdinand von Westphalen)
Page me42.181
†a Eleanor Marx

Page me42.181
†b C. Schilling, Die Ausstossung des Präsidenten Bernhard Becker aus dem Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeiter-Verein und der 'Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.181
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.182
†a See K. Marx and F. Engels, The Great Men of the Exile (present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 284-90).
Page me42.182
†b the street in London, where Marx lived
Page me42.182
†c in financial transactions
Page me42.182
†d at the end of his strength
Page me42.183
†a Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.183
†b Laura Marx
Page me42.184
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me42.184
†b Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.185
†a See G.W.F. Hegel, Vorlesungen über die Naturphilosophie als der Encyklopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse, Zweiter Theil, § 270.
Page me42.185
†b E.S. Beesly, 'Catiline as a Party Leader', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. I, 15 May to 1 August 1865.
Page me42.185
†c F. Harrison, 'The Limits of Political Economy'.
Page me42.185
†d Lizzy Burns
Page me42.185
†e Report from the Select Committee on Bank Acts
Page me42.186
†a sweetener
Page me42.186
†b without doubt the greatest banker
Page me42.186
†c See this volume, p. 184.
Page me42.187
†a See this volume, pp. 184, 186.
Page me42.187
†b Edgar von Westphalen's
Page me42.188
†a J.P. Hebel's poem 'Der Schwarzwälder im Breisgau'.

Page me42.188
†b J.J. Egli, Praktische Erdkunde mit Illustrationen and Praktische Schweizerkunde für Schule und Haus
Page me42.189
†a Liebknecht's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.190
†a Moses Hess
Page me42.190
†b Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.190
†c Louis Weber
Page me42.190
†d Der Social-Demokrat and Nordstern
Page me42.190
†e Marx's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.191
†a of 30 August 1865
Page me42.191
†b Bernhard Becker
Page me42.191
†c See this volume, p. 176.
Page me42.191
†d Johann Philipp Becker
Page me42.192
†a Elisabeth Engels
Page me42.192
†b Charles Roesgen
Page me42.192
†c Capital
Page me42.192
†d Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.193
†a 3 November
Page me42.193
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.193
†c Firstly
Page me42.193
†d railway station in London
Page me42.193
†e Laura Marx
Page me42.194
†a Esther Kosel
Page me42.194
†b Babette Blum
Page me42.194

†c intestate
Page me42.195
†a Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.197
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.197
†b The Daily Telegraph, No. 3249, 17 November 1865.
Page me42.198
†a In the original: October.
Page me42.198
†b Capital
Page me42.198
†c Deutsches Wochenblatt
Page me42.199
†a The Times, No. 25347, 20 November 1865.
Page me42.199
†b waste
Page me42.199
†c of Capital
Page me42.201
†a The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London
Page me42.201
†b Liebknecht's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.201
†c See this volume, p. 176.
Page me42.201
†d Capital
Page me42.201
†e See this volume, pp. 198-99, 205.
Page me42.201
†f See previous letter.
Page me42.202
†a August Vogt, Sigfrid Meyer, Theodor Metzner
Page me42.202
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me42.202
†c centre and hearth of enlightenment
Page me42.202
†d who wishes to be active in the state during his lifetime must 'rally to the government'
Page me42.202
†e See this volume, p. 208.
Page me42.202
†f Ernestine and Alice Liebknecht
Page me42.202

†g Marx's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.203
†a Marx is referring to his letter to Kugelmann of 23 February 1865 (see this volume, pp. 101-06).
Page me42.203
†b The French text mistakenly has here: 'Association'.
Page me42.204
†a See this volume, p. 198.
Page me42.205
†a the British Museum Library
Page me42.206
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.207
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me42.207
†b at present
Page me42.207
†c Liebknecht's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.207
†d Heinrich Bürgers
Page me42.208
†a the designation of the Byzantine Empire; used figuratively it means any state experiencing decline
Page me42.208
†b See this volume, pp. 158, 164.
Page me42.208
†c Lizzy Burns
Page me42.211
†a The original has: 1865.
Page me42.211
†b [E. Richter,] Die Geschichte der social-demokratischen Partei in Deutschland seit dem Tode Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me42.212
†a Engels is referring to J. Bright's speech on the Parliamentary Reform delivered at the meeting in Rochdale on 3 January 1866, The Times, No. 25386, 4 January 1866.
Page me42.213
†a Der Vorbote
Page me42.213
†b 'Young France'
Page me42.213
†c The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London.
Page me42.213
†d of Capital
Page me42.214
†a Otto Meissner

Page me42.214
†b by K. Marx and F. Engels
Page me42.214
†c double work
Page me42.214
†d for now
Page me42.214
†e of Der Vorbote
Page me42.214
†f Journal de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs
Page me42.215
†a conspiratorial pseudonym of Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.215
†b The Times, Nos. 25367 and 25368, 13 and 14 December 1865.
Page me42.215
†c August Vogt
Page me42.215
†d See this volume, p. 201.
Page me42.215
†e Firstly
Page me42.216
†a The original has: 1865.
Page me42.216
†b La Tribune du Peuple containing a series of articles by H. Denis, entitled 'La question polonaise et la démocratie'.
Page me42.216
†c Arnold Hilberg
Page me42.216
†d Sigfrid Meyer
Page me42.216
†e 'They' (the Committee) 'were charged with one of mankind's greatest concerns but are frivolously abandoning their lofty goal in order to degenerate into a committee of nationalities in tow to Bonapartism.'
Page me42.216
†f 'Succumbing to pernicious influences'
Page me42.217
†a 'they included in the programme for the Geneva Congress questions not concerning the goal of the Association and contrary to law, justice, liberty, fraternity and the solidarity of peoples and races, such as: “the elimination of Russian influence in Europe etc.”; and this they did at the very moment when the Russian and Polish serfs had just been emancipated by Russia, whereas the Polish nobility and priests have always refused to grant freedom to their own. It will at least be agreed that the moment was ill-chosen. Before approving these articles, the English members of the committee should have really asked themselves if it was not a matter of equal urgency to put an end to the frightening increase in English pauperism, in the prostitution of working women and the misery of working men in Great Britain, in famine and depopulation in Ireland, etc.! As for the German members of the committee, let them also tell us whether the influence of Mr Bismarck's policy in Europe does not equally merit elimination; do not Prussia and Austria have an equal share in the partitioning of Poland, are they not equally responsible for Russia's crime against that unfortunate nation? As for the self-styled delegates from Paris, does it come well from them to condemn the influence of Russia, when Bonaparte's soldiers are occupying Rome, which they have bombarded, are massacring the defenders of the Mexican republic, having already destroyed the French republic? If one compares the misdeeds and crimes committed by governments, one is persuaded that no people should be put beyond the pale of humanity for the infamies of its oppressors, and that it was the duty of the Central Committee to proclaim solidarity and fraternity among all peoples, and not to put one of them alone beyond the pale of Europe.'

Page me42.217

†b 'This enormous error has already had dire consequences: the Poles have asked to join the Committee en masse and before long they will represent the overwhelming majority.'

Page me42.218

†a Already they do not shrink from saying that they will make use of the Association to help to restore their nationhood, without concerning themselves with the question of the emancipation of the workers.'

Page me42.218

†b 'Le pére enfantin' ('The childish father') — a pun on 'Pére Enfantin' ('Father Enfantin'). An allusion to Le Lubez' efforts to imitate the chief representative of the Saint-Simonian school, Barthélemy Prosper Enfantin.

Page me42.218

†c The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London

Page me42.218

†d nickname for Wilhelm Liebknecht

Page me42.219

†a Capital

Page me42.219

†b Otto Meissner

Page me42.219

†c See this volume, p. 224.

Page me42.219

†d colleagues

Page me42.219

†e J. Ph. Becker to Karl Marx, 18 December 1865

Page me42.220

†a See this volume, p. 215.

Page me42.220

†b August Vogt, Sigfrid Meyer and Theodor Metzner

Page me42.221

†a the Reform League

Page me42.221

†b The Times, Nos. 25367 and 25368, 13 and 14 December 1865.

Page me42.221
†c Capital
Page me42.221
†d Johannes von Miquel
Page me42.221
†e See this volume, pp. 207-08.
Page me42.222
†a August Vogt
Page me42.222
†b Capital
Page me42.222
†c Otto Meissner
Page me42.223
†a Alexander II
Page me42.223
†b See this volume, pp. 212-13.
Page me42.223
†c H. Denis, 'La question polonaise et la démocratie', La Tribune du Peuple, Nos. 41-43, 45, 46; 5, 26 March, 17 April, 29 May, 30 June 1864.
Page me42.223
†d that would be doing it too great an honour
Page me42.223
†e serious the case
Page me42.223
†f on Capital
Page me42.224
†a F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England.
Page me42.224
†b Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.
Page me42.224
†c Public Health. Reports of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council.
Page me42.224
†d the British Museum Library
Page me42.224
†e F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.224
†f J. Watts, Trade Societies and Strikes.... Machinery....
Page me42.225
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.225
†b The letter bears the stamp: Albert Club / Manchester.
Page me42.225
†c Capital
Page me42.226
†a Otto Meissner

Page me42.226
†b in actual fact
Page me42.226
†c William I
Page me42.226
†d to that end
Page me42.226
†e Jenny Marx
Page me42.227
†a Capital
Page me42.227
†b the British Museum Library
Page me42.228
†a See this volume, p. 226.
Page me42.228
†b ibid., p. 224.
Page me42.228
†c F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.228
†d as
Page me42.228
†e Lizzy Burns
Page me42.229
†a Arnold Hilberg
Page me42.230
†a The German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me42.230
†b E.T.A. Hoffmann, Klein-Zaches, genannt Zinnober.
Page me42.230
†c Reports of the Inspectors of Factories to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.
Page me42.230
†d P. Fox, 'The Irish Question', The Commonwealth, Nos. 153 and 154, 10 and 17 February 1866.
Page me42.230
†e Eleanor Marx
Page me42.231
†a bad blood
Page me42.232
†a E.T.A. Hoffmann, Klein-Zaches, gennant Zinnober; Reports of the Inspectors of Factories...
Page me42.232
†b Capital
Page me42.232
†c J. Liebig, Die Chemie in ihrer Anwendung auf Agricultur und Physiologie, pp. 77-78.

Page me42.233
†a E.T.A. Hoffmann, Klein-Zaches, genannt Zinnober.
Page me42.233
†b Capital
Page me42.234
†a F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.234
†b See this volume, pp. 224, 228.
Page me42.235
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me42.235
†b decidedly
Page me42.235
†c F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.235
†d See this volume, p. 228.
Page me42.235
†e See present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 402-04.
Page me42.236
†a William I
Page me42.237
†a a branch of the Bank of Switzerland
Page me42.237
†b See this volume, p. 236.
Page me42.238
†a The Commonwealth
Page me42.238
†b i.e. Marx
Page me42.238
†c See this volume, pp. 249-51.
Page me42.238
†d Presumably an ironical allusion to Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft.
Page me42.238
†e in the series of articles 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.238
†f The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London.
Page me42.238
†g Felice Orsini
Page me42.239
†a F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.241
†a from the English folk-song 'The Miller of the Dee'
Page me42.242

†a 'all misery of mankind'. Paraphrase of a passage from Schiller's poem 'Das Eleusische Fest': 'doch der Menschheit Angst und Wehen / Fühlet mein gequältes Herz' (yet the pains and woes of humans / ever fill my tortured heart)
Page me42.242
†b 'who wrangled and suffered for the cow Sabalah' — an episode from the epic poem Ramayana; used by Heine in Buch der Lieder, 'Die Heimkehr' (Marx gives a free rendering of the words from Heine's poem; see this volume, p. 245).
Page me42.242
†c 'coin money'
Page me42.242
†d Waarátje ('really', 'indeed') — the word always used by student Petrus from Hildebrand's novel Camera obscura. Marx presumably refers in this letter to pastor Roodhuizen who later became Antoinette's husband.
Page me42.242
†e 'La Belle et la Bête', a tale by Jeanne Marie Le Prince de Beaumont.
Page me42.243
†a Lion Philips
Page me42.243
†b 'the ass-driver is always hateful to the ass'
Page me42.243
†c See this volume, pp. 16-18.
Page me42.243
†d young France
Page me42.243
†e by the grace of God
Page me42.244
†a a good face on a bad business
Page me42.244
†b Presumably this is Marx's nickname, or may be the signature he chose to be incognito in Margate.
Page me42.244
†c Laura's jocular nickname
Page me42.244
†d from the English folk-song 'The Miller of the Dee'
Page me42.244
†e 22 March, when Marx intended to go to London to attend a soirée arranged by his daughters (see this volume, pp. 249-50).
Page me42.244
†f Marx's daughter Jenny
Page me42.245
†a Marx's wife Jenny
Page me42.245
†b Heinrich Heine, 'Den König Wiswamitra' (from Buch der Lieder, 'Die Heimkehr'). Marx quotes an English translation of the second stanza of the poem, which in the German original reads as follows:

O, König Wiswamitra
O, welch ein Ochs bist du,
Dass du so viel kämpfest und büssest
Und alles für eine Kuh!
Page me42.245
†c on foot
Page me42.246
†a Fatherland
Page me42.246
†b An allusion to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.
Page me42.246
†c Eleanor Marx
Page me42.246
†d Marx's wife Jenny
Page me42.248
†a Elisabeth Engels
Page me42.248
†b Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.248
†c Anton Ermen
Page me42.249
†a on foot
Page me42.249
†b from the English folk-song 'The Miller of the Dee'
Page me42.249
†c 22 March
Page me42.249
†d Lion Philips
Page me42.249
†e Presumably this is not correct, for Marx arrived at Margate on Thursday, 15 March (see this volume, p. 239).
Page me42.250
†a blessed are they who have possession (Horace, Odes, IV, IX, 45)
Page me42.250
†b the man in possession
Page me42.250
†c by implication
Page me42.250
†d apology
Page me42.251
†a from Johann Carl Juta (Marx presumably refers to the power of attorney for receiving his share of legacy at the death of his aunt, Esther Kosel; see this volume, p. 194)
Page me42.251
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.251

†a on foot
Page me42.252
†b Firstly
Page me42.252
†c change of decor
Page me42.252
†d pen-name for Johann Georg Eccarius
Page me42.253
†a The Commonwealth
Page me42.253
†b See this volume, p. 224.
Page me42.254
†a willy-nilly
Page me42.254
†b William I (an ironical comparison with the Norman William who conquered England in 1066)
Page me42.254
†c Czech name: Olomouc
Page me42.254
†d Time will tell.
Page me42.255
†a F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.255
†b for life
Page me42.256
†a that dear
Page me42.257
†a Bismarck of all people
Page me42.257
†b See this volume, pp. 252-54.
Page me42.257
†c F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.257
†d 'La Russie sous l'empereur Alexandre II. — La société et le gouvernement russes depuis l'insurrection polonaise', Revue des deux Mondes, Vol. 62, 15 March 1866.
Page me42.257
†e the Archbishop of Canterbury
Page me42.257
†f on foot (see this volume, p. 249).
Page me42.259
†a What is to be done?
Page me42.259
†b See this volume, p. 255.
Page me42.261
†a Anton Ermen
Page me42.261

†b Elisabeth Engels
Page me42.261
†c Liebknecht's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.261
†d August Vogt, Sigfrid Meyer and Theodor Metzner
Page me42.262
†a See this volume, pp. 252-53.
Page me42.262
†b Ernestine Liebknecht
Page me42.262
†c Capital
Page me42.263
†a of 30 March 1866
Page me42.264
†a Engels refers to the report 'Die Lage, Köln, 7. April', Kölnische Zeitung, 8 April 1866.
Page me42.264
†b The Times, No. 25468, 10 April 1866, leader.
Page me42.265
†a See this volume, pp. 258-59.
Page me42.265
†b After all
Page me42.265
†c that will suffice
Page me42.267
†a see
Page me42.267
†b 'Austria and Prussia. Berlin, April 10', The Times, No. 25469, 11 April 1866 (Reuter's telegram reporting on Austria's reaction to Bismarck's proposition for the assembly of a German parliament for the reorganisation of the German Confederation).
Page me42.267
†c Danish name: &Ooblique;resund
Page me42.268
†a See this volume, pp. 325-27.
Page me42.269
†a Marx presumably refers to J.S. Mill's speech in Parliament of 17 April 1866 in which he urged the duty of paying off the national debt before Britain's coal supplies exhausted. See The Times, No. 25475, 18 April 1866.
Page me42.269
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.269
†c Entirely yours
Page me42.269
†d Capital
Page me42.270
†a at any price

Page me42.270
†b L. Blanc, 'Lettres de Londres', Le Temps, No. 1815, 23 April 1866.
Page me42.270
†c A. Röckel, Sachsens Erhebung und das Zuchthaus zu Waldheim.
Page me42.270
†d poor
Page me42.270
†e quem deus vult perdere, prius dementat: whom God wishes to destroy, he first makes mad
Page me42.270
†f F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.271
†a The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London.
Page me42.271
†b on Capital
Page me42.271
†c See this volume, p. 47.
Page me42.272
†a 'warning'. Marx means his article 'A Warning'.
Page me42.272
†b Ernestine Liebknecht
Page me42.272
†c Marx's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.272
†d Engels makes a pun here: the German word blind means without sight, blind; Blind — the name of Cohen's stepfather.
Page me42.273
†a Marx's deceased son Edgar
Page me42.273
†b Der deutsche Eidgenosse
Page me42.273
†c 'manus haec inimica tyrannis' — 'this hand is hostile to tyrants' (an expression from The Life and Memoirs of Algernon Sidney)
Page me42.274
†a Friederike Blind
Page me42.274
†b An allusion to the Biblical legend about Abraham who sacrificed his son Isaac (Genesis 22:9).
Page me42.274
†c scholarly dogs
Page me42.274
†d Albert F. Haufe and N.P. Hansen
Page me42.275
†a K. Marx, 'A Warning'
Page me42.275

†b this hand is hostile to tyrants (see this volume, p. 273)
Page me42.276
†a hence
Page me42.276
†b call the powers of the underworld to his aid (Virgil, Aeneid, VII, 312).
Page me42.277
†a Charles Roesgen
Page me42.277
†b Neue Preussische Zeitung
Page me42.277
†c F. Engels, 'What Have the Working Classes to Do with Poland?'
Page me42.277
†d The Commonwealth
Page me42.278
†a William I
Page me42.278
†b Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.278
†c on Capital
Page me42.279
†a Frederick William
Page me42.280
†a William I
Page me42.280
†b F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.280
†c Neue Preussische Zeitung
Page me42.280
†d 'From our London correspondent', The Manchester Guardian, No. 6165, 22 May 1866.
Page me42.280
†e The Commonwealth
Page me42.281
†a limit; usually ultima Thule — extreme limit (Virgil, Georgics, I, 30)
Page me42.281
†b poverty and ignorance
Page me42.281
†c Ch. Longuet, 'La question agricole, et le libre échange', La Rive gauche, No. 15, 15 April 1866.
Page me42.282
†a nickname of Napoleon III (the name of a bricklayer in whose clothes Napoleon fled from prison in 1846)
Page me42.282
†b Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.282
†c on Capital

Page me42.283
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.284
†a spontaneous generation
Page me42.286
†a on my constitution
Page me42.286
†b Allgemeine Militär-Zeitung
Page me42.287
†a young France
Page me42.287
†b outdated prejudices
Page me42.287
†c Besides
Page me42.288
†a Czech name: Olomouc
Page me42.288
†b 'Austrian territory equivalent to Venetia'
Page me42.289
†a First of all
Page me42.289
†b of Capital
Page me42.290
†a F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England
Page me42.290
†b F. Freiligrath, 'Westphalian Summer Song', The Athenaeum, No. 2019, 7 July 1866.
Page me42.290
†c by order of the
Page me42.290
†d Scapin — a character from Moliére's Les fourberies de Scapin.
Page me42.290
†e William I
Page me42.290
†f Alexander II
Page me42.291
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.291
†b Jacob Snider
Page me42.291
†c Capital
Page me42.291
†d for the first volume
Page me42.291
†e in particular
Page me42.292

†a The original has: June.
Page me42.292
†b Francis II of Naples and Sicily, son of Ferdinand II nicknamed King Bomba for the bombardment of Messina in September 1848.
Page me42.292
†c Neue Preussische Zeitung
Page me42.293
†a 'Nouvelles de L'Extérieur', Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg, No. 140, 23 June (5 July) 1866.
Page me42.293
†b William, Prince of Orange
Page me42.295
†a Engels uses the South-German dialect here: 'Man will uns uf die Schlachtbank fihre!'
Page me42.295
†b See this volume, p. 291.
Page me42.295
†c The original has: January.
Page me42.295
†d on the first volume of Capital
Page me42.295
†e danger in delay (Livy, The History of Rome, Vol. XXXVIII, Chap. 25)
Page me42.296
†a 'man of prestige'
Page me42.296
†b Scapin — a character from Moliére's Les fourberies de Scapin (here Napoleon III is meant)
Page me42.296
†c enquiry
Page me42.296
†d Eighth Report of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council.
Page me42.297
†a Politically
Page me42.298
†a Ludwig III
Page me42.298
†b George V of Hanover
Page me42.299
†a The original has: August.
Page me42.299
†b Karl Fellner
Page me42.299
†c William I of Prussia (an ironical comparison with the Norman William who conquered England in 1066)
Page me42.299
†d F. Schiller, Das Lied von der Glocke.

Page me42.299
†e William I
Page me42.300
†a 'of universal democracy'
Page me42.300
†b on 24 July 1866
Page me42.300
†c an ironic reference to Disraeli, the author of a novel under the same title
Page me42.301
†a Eighth Report of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council.
Page me42.301
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.302
†a William I
Page me42.302
†b Expansion of France which can only occur in the direction of Germany
Page me42.302
†c Ludwig III
Page me42.303
†a See this volume, p. 291.
Page me42.303
†b G. von Griesheim, Vorlesungen über die Taktik.
Page me42.304
†a young man
Page me42.304
†b the family of François Lafargue
Page me42.304
†c sent down from the University of Paris for two years
Page me42.304
†d higher mathematics
Page me42.304
†e crossings
Page me42.304
†f species
Page me42.304
†g degeneration
Page me42.305
†a See this volume, pp. 163-64.
Page me42.305
†b 'If not comprehended by the great laws of nature, man's undertakings are but calamities, witness the efforts of the Czars to make Muscovites of the Polish people. [...] The same soil will give rise to the same character and the same qualities. A work of destruction cannot last forever, but a work of reconstitution is everlasting... The true frontier of the Slav and Lithuanian races with the Muscovites is represented by the great geological line which lies to the north of the basins of the Niemen and the Dnieper... To the south of that great line, the talents and the types fitted to that region are and will always remain different from those of Russia.'

Page me42.306
†a P. Trémaux, Origine et transformations de l'homme et des autres êtres.
Page me42.306
†b William I
Page me42.307
†a Laura Marx
Page me42.309
†a August
Page me42.309
†b Helene Demuth
Page me42.309
†c positive information
Page me42.309
†d See this volume, pp. 307-09.
Page me42.309
†e Jules Antoine Moilin
Page me42.310
†a plates
Page me42.310
†b Mitteldeutsche Volkszeitung
Page me42.310
†c doctor. J.A. Moilin (le docteur Tony), Leçons de médecine physiologique.
Page me42.310
†d François Lafargue
Page me42.310
†e fiancé
Page me42.310
†f junior
Page me42.310
†g spoilt child
Page me42.311
†a Lizzy Burns
Page me42.312
†a unnecessary costs
Page me42.312
†b Capital
Page me42.312
†c congress whatsoever
Page me42.313
†a Laura's jocular nickname
Page me42.313
†b Marx's daughter, Jenny, who acted as his secretary
Page me42.313

†c the knight of the woeful character (Don Quixote); here Marx means Paul Lafargue
Page me42.313
†d Eleanor Marx
Page me42.314
†a The letter bears the stamp: International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London.
Page me42.315
†a Marx omitted points 7 and 8 here.
Page me42.315
†b K. Marx, 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions'.
Page me42.315
†c Paul Lafargue
Page me42.315
†d Laura Marx
Page me42.316
†a who could not be consoled after Ulysses' departure
Page me42.316
†b K. Marx, 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions'.
Page me42.316
†c Paul Lafargue
Page me42.316
†d 'secret secretary', i.e., Laura Marx
Page me42.316
†e Marx's wife
Page me42.317
†a Laura's jocular nickname
Page me42.317
†b Eleanor Marx
Page me42.317
†c Jenny, Marx's daughter
Page me42.318
†a manual workers
Page me42.318
†b by decree
Page me42.319
†a penniless
Page me42.319
†b scandal
Page me42.319
†c of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.319
†d See this volume, p. 310.
Page me42.320

†a J.A. Moilin (le docteur Tony), Leçons de médecine physiologique (see this volume, pp. 309-10, 319).
Page me42.320
†b P. Trémaux, Origine et transformations de l'homme... (ibid., pp. 304-05, 309-10).
Page me42.321
†a What was to be done?
Page me42.322
†a As regards
Page me42.322
†b P. Trémaux, Origine et transformations de l'homme...
Page me42.322
†c See this volume, pp. 320-21.
Page me42.322
†d mutability of species
Page me42.323
†a As regards
Page me42.323
†b See previous letter (p. 322).
Page me42.324
†a J.A. Moilin (le docteur Tony), Leçons de médecine physiologique.
Page me42.325
†a The original has: November.
Page me42.325
†b See this volume, pp. 311-12.
Page me42.325
†c Capital
Page me42.326
†a K. Marx, 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions'.
Page me42.326
†b brilliant youth
Page me42.327
†a in which I played an important part (Virgil, Aeneid, II, 6)
Page me42.327
†b The Working Man
Page me42.327
†c See this volume, pp. 304-05.
Page me42.328
†a See this volume, pp. 311-12.
Page me42.328
†b of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.328
†c from the beginning
Page me42.328
†d K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.

Page me42.329
†a F. Lassalle, Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit, Ch. 3.
Page me42.330
†a Abraham Jacobi
Page me42.330
†b See also Marx's letter to Engels of 7 May 1867 (this volume, p. 373).
Page me42.330
†c See this volume, p. 194.
Page me42.331
†a on Capital
Page me42.332
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.332
†b commencement of proceedings
Page me42.333
†a Engels uses the South-German dialect here: 'Borjer'.
Page me42.333
†b Engels refers to the Austrian Empire and its allies in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866.
Page me42.334
†a the lovelorn gentleman (Paul Lafargue)
Page me42.334
†b Capital
Page me42.334
†c Paul Lafargue
Page me42.334
†d Laura Marx
Page me42.335
†a on the first volume of Capital
Page me42.336
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.337
†a Emil Blank
Page me42.337
†b See this volume, p. 152.
Page me42.338
†a L. Reybaud, 'L'économie politique des ouvriers', Revue des deux Mondes, Vol. 66, 1 November 1866; J.E. Alaux, 'Une forme nouvelle du socialisme. Le Congrés ouvrier de Genéve', Revue contemporaine, Vol. 53, 15 October 1866.
Page me42.338
†b Marx refers to an editorial published in The Fortnightly Review, No. 37, December 1866.
Page me42.338
†c fortunately Page me42.338

†d Pius IX
Page me42.338
†e state of affairs
Page me42.338
†f An ironic reference to William I of Prussia
Page me42.339
†a of the first volume of Capital (see this volume, pp. 174-75)
Page me42.339
†b some
Page me42.340
†a the Austro-Prussian war
Page me42.340
†b a just man, firm of purpose (Horace, Odes, III, iii, 1)
Page me42.340
†c basically
Page me42.340
†d in respect of politics
Page me42.340
†e the tyrant's threatening countenance (Horace, Odes, III, iii, 3)
Page me42.340
†f J.E. Th. Rogers, A History of Agriculture (see previous letter)
Page me42.340
†g L. Reybaud, 'L'économie politique des ouvriers', Revue des deux Mondes, Vol. 66, 1 November 1866; the leading article in The Fortnightly Review, No. 37, December 1866.
Page me42.340
†h See this volume, p. 338.
Page me42.340
†i Frederick William
Page me42.341
†a William I
Page me42.341
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.341
†c Lion Philips
Page me42.343
†a of Capital
Page me42.344
†a See this volume, pp. 339 and 340.
Page me42.344
†b in the first volume of Capital
Page me42.344
†c Lizzy Burns
Page me42.344
†d J.A. Moilin (le docteur Tony), Leçons de médecine physiologique (see this volume, pp. 324-25).

Page me42.344
†e of Capital (see this volume, p. 343).
Page me42.345
†a Rejection
Page me42.345
†b who will return to their states
Page me42.345
†c will have an independent international existence
Page me42.345
†d Marie of Hanover
Page me42.346
†a K. Marx, 'A Correction'.
Page me42.347
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.348
†a Le faiseur
Page me42.348
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.348
†c F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party
Page me42.348
†d See present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 74-75.
Page me42.348
†e A. Bebel and R. Schraps
Page me42.349
†a At bottom
Page me42.349
†b D. Urquhart, 'Fall of Austria, and Its Consequences to the World', The Diplomatic Review, Vol. XV, No. 3, 6 March 1867.
Page me42.349
†c see
Page me42.350
†a The end of this letter is missing.
Page me42.350
†b The original has: 27 March.
Page me42.350
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.351
†a first of all
Page me42.351
†b penniless
Page me42.351
†c That is the situation.
Page me42.352
†a of Capital
Page me42.352

†b sinew of things
Page me42.352
†c for The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (see this volume, p. 348)
Page me42.352
†d if there is any
Page me42.352
†e Napoleon III
Page me42.355
†a William I
Page me42.355
†b Hermann Wagener. Here and below Engels makes a pun on Wagner, a character from Goethe's Faust (a young scholar imitating Faust in every respect).
Page me42.355
†c Der Social-Demokrat, No. 38, 27 March 1867.
Page me42.355
†d Mount the guillotine (during the French Revolution the people nicknamed the guillotine 'Mademoiselle').
Page me42.356
†a 10 April
Page me42.356
†b Cf. J.W. Goethe, Faust, Part I, Scene 5.
Page me42.356
†c boring
Page me42.356
†d in a small group
Page me42.357
†a That was the attraction
Page me42.357
†b Eugen Strohn
Page me42.357
†c Marx refers to the fee for Engels' pamphlet The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (see this volume, p. 352).
Page me42.358
†a 10 April
Page me42.359
†a Entirely yours
Page me42.359
†b of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.359
†c Hugo Wigand
Page me42.360
†a Gertruda and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.361
†a In the original the South-German dialect here: 'mür'.
Page me42.361

†b General Council of the International Working Men's Association
Page me42.361
†c in dire straits
Page me42.362
†a Capital
Page me42.363
†a F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.363
†b friend
Page me42.363
†c compare
Page me42.363
†d F. Lassalle, Die Philosophie Herakleitos des Dunklen von Ephesos.
Page me42.363
†e K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me42.363
†f Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.364
†a See this volume, pp. 359-60.
Page me42.364
†b C. Vogt, Studien zur gegenwärtigen Lage Europas (for Marx's criticism of this work see present edition, Vol. 17).
Page me42.364
†c See this volume, p. 361.
Page me42.364
†d let us not be robbers
Page me42.365
†a Die Gartenlaube, No. 10, 1867.
Page me42.365
†b F. Engels, Po and Rhine.
Page me42.365
†c L. Simon, 'Deutschland und seine beiden Grossmächte', Demokratische Studien, 1860.
Page me42.365
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.365
†e W. Rüstow, Der Krieg von 1866 in Deutschland und Italien.
Page me42.365
†f in top form
Page me42.365
†g William I of Prussia (an ironical comparison with the Norman William, who conquered England in 1066) and Frederick Charles
Page me42.365
†h by K. Marx and F. Engels; see this volume, p. 360.
Page me42.366
†a of high principles

Page me42.366
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.366
†c Ludwig Kugelmann
Page me42.366
†d evidence against the adversary
Page me42.368
†a L. Büchner, Kraft und Stoff. Empirisch-naturphilosophische Studien (the French edition, Force et matiére, appeared in 1863).
Page me42.369
†a An allusion to Jenny's jocular nickname: 'the Emperor'.
Page me42.369
†b Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.369
†c sham education
Page me42.369
†d chatter about art
Page me42.369
†e sheet (of the first volume of Capital)
Page me42.369
†f 1 May
Page me42.370
†a Otto Meissner
Page me42.370
†b Ernestine Liebknecht
Page me42.370
†c Laura's jocular nickname
Page me42.370
†d a character from Louisa May Alcott's Little Women
Page me42.370
†e Eleanor Marx (these lines have not been found)
Page me42.370
†f First of all
Page me42.370
†g difficult case
Page me42.371
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.371
†b After so many perils! (Paraphrase of an expression from Virgil's Aeneid, I, 204: post tot discrimina rerum — after so many setbacks.)
Page me42.371
†c gradually
Page me42.371
†d little miseries
Page me42.372
†a Gertruda Kugelmann

Page me42.372
†b See this volume, p. 361.
Page me42.372
†c to the North German Parliament (see this volume, p. 365)
Page me42.372
†d immediately
Page me42.373
†a Die geschichtsschreiber der deutschen Vorzeit, Vol. 1, Die Urzeit (Jacob Grimm took part in publishing this series of historical documents).
Page me42.373
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The German Ideology.
Page me42.373
†c the good man
Page me42.373
†d expenditure
Page me42.373
†e 'Politischer Tagesbericht. 25. April 1867', Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 97, 26 April 1867.
Page me42.373
†f motto, [speak] only good of the dead (Diogenes Laertius, De vitis philosophorum, I, 3, 70)
Page me42.373
†g with love
Page me42.374
†a An ironic reference to William I of Prussia.
Page me42.374
†b Johann Jacobi
Page me42.374
†c the war of France and Piedmont against Austria
Page me42.374
†d Alexander II
Page me42.374
†e Lizzy Burns
Page me42.374
†f Entirely yours.
Page me42.375
†a Laura's jocular nickname
Page me42.375
†b Eleanor Marx
Page me42.375
†c Otto Meissner
Page me42.375
†d if they do not interpret something in their own way, so they attribute it (a play on the German verbs auslegen and unterlegen).
Page me42.376
†a policemen

Page me42.376
†b good-bye
Page me42.376
†c Many greetings to
Page me42.376
†d Marx's wife — Jenny, his daughters Eleanor and Jenny, and Helene Demuth
Page me42.376
†e Paul Lafargue
Page me42.376
†f Marx's family nickname
Page me42.376
†g See this volume, p. 370.
Page me42.377
†a 19 May
Page me42.377
†b dying (Louise Weydemeyer)
Page me42.377
†c Abraham Jacobi
Page me42.378
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.378
†b But what would your mother say to that?
Page me42.378
†c Ferdinand Freiligrath
Page me42.378
†d Ferdinand Freiligrath's wife
Page me42.378
†e Lizzy Burns
Page me42.378
†f The name given by Marx in joke to Carl Schorlemmer, a chemist by profession.
Page me42.379
†a Gertruda Kugelmann
Page me42.380
†a 19 May
Page me42.380
†b put a brave face on it
Page me42.380
†c the wandering lady
Page me42.380
†d the Prussian colours
Page me42.380
†e safe and sound
Page me42.380
†f of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.381

†a Wilhelm Wolff
Page me42.381
†b Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.381
†c Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.381
†d of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.382
†a G.W.F. Hegel, Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse.
Page me42.382
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me42.382
†c Poor fellow!
Page me42.382
†d A.W. Hofmann, Einleitung in die moderne Chemie.
Page me42.383
†a Paul Lafargue (an allusion to his inclination to use electricity in medicine)
Page me42.383
†b of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.384
†a in embryo
Page me42.384
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me42.385
†a A.W. Hofmann, Einleitung in die moderne Chemie (see this volume, pp. 382-83).
Page me42.385
†b F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England.
Page me42.385
†c the German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me42.385
†d Caroline Schöler
Page me42.386
†a Ida Freiligrath
Page me42.386
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.386
†c Honour requires that
Page me42.386
†d of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.388
†a See this volume, pp. 382-83 and 385.
Page me42.389
†a Lizzie Burns
Page me42.389

†b The original has: July.
Page me42.390
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.391
†a vividly
Page me42.391
†b Lizzy Burns
Page me42.391
†c of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.392
†a See this volume, p. 381.
Page me42.394
†a See this volume, pp. 386-87 and 389-90.
Page me42.394
†b of the first volume of Capital (see this volume, pp. 386-87)
Page me42.394
†c Samuel Moore
Page me42.394
†d Lizzy Burns
Page me42.394
†e J.G. Eccarius, 'A Working Man's Refutation of some Points of Political Economy endorsed and advocated by John Stuart Mill', The Commonwealth, Nos. 192-195, 198, 200, 203, 204, 206-211, November 1866-March 1867.
Page me42.394
†f Walpole
Page me42.394
†g See this volume, p. 228.
Page me42.394
†h Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, Nos. 139 and 146, 18 and 26 June 1867: 'Politischer Tagesbericht'.
Page me42.395
†a for the portrait of Hegel and the photograph of Kugelmann's daughter, Franziska
Page me42.395
†b Concerning
Page me42.395
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me42.395
†d F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England.
Page me42.395
†e white lie
Page me42.395
†f deceits
Page me42.395
†g François Lafargue
Page me42.396

†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.396
†b Gertruda and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.396
†c of the International Working Men's Association
Page me42.396
†d It is a matter of urgency.
Page me42.396
†e François Lafargue
Page me42.396
†f Paul Lafargue (he was Corresponding Secretary for Spain on the General Council)
Page me42.397
†a See next letter.
Page me42.397
†b G. Struve and G. Rasch, Zwölf Streiter der Revolution, p. 61.
Page me42.398
†a François Lafargue
Page me42.399
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.399
†b Lizzie Burns
Page me42.400
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.401
†a This presumably refers to P. St. King.
Page me42.401
†b Marx refers to East India (Bengal and Orissa Famine). Papers and Correspondence relative to the Famine in Bengal and Orissa, including the Report of the Famine Commission and the Minutes of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal and the Governor General of India... Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be printed, 31 May 1867; East India (Madras and Orissa Famine). Return to an Address of the Honourable House of Commons, dated 4 July 1867. Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be printed, 30 July 1867.
Page me42.401
†c An Act for Regulating the Hours of Labour for Children, Young Persons, and Women employed in Workshops..., 21 August 1867.
Page me42.402
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.402
†b Polish name: Tarnów
Page me42.402
†c Marx wanted to know this because he meant to dedicate the first volume of his Capital to Wilhelm Wolff (Lupus).
Page me42.405
†a of the first volume of Capital

Page me42.406
†a See this volume, pp. 396-97.
Page me42.407
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.407
†b hotchpotch
Page me42.407
†c recommendations
Page me42.407
†d See previous letter.
Page me42.408
†a in kind
Page me42.408
†b piecemeal
Page me42.408
†c J.R. McCulloch, The Principles of Political Economy, Edinburgh, 1825, pp. 181-82.
Page me42.408
†d Lizzy Burns
Page me42.409
†a indefinitely
Page me42.410
†a The original has: £1,020.
Page me42.413
†a Le Courrier français
Page me42.414
†a Grete
Page me42.414
†b The rough copy has: If President Johnson, who is a mere tool in the hands of the former SLAVEHOLDERS (although you make him out a hero á la Washington)...
Page me42.414
†c See this volume, p. 420.
Page me42.415
†a Capital
Page me42.415
†b Otto Meissner
Page me42.415
†c Regarding (Wilhelm) Weber
Page me42.415
†d Joseph Valentin Weber
Page me42.415
†e Janko von Racowita
Page me42.415
†f Louis Weber
Page me42.415
†g the German Workers' Educational Society in London

Page me42.416
†a shop-keepers
Page me42.416
†b See this volume, pp. 396-97.
Page me42.416
†c Are you not going to your school?
Page me42.416
†d Daniel Swan
Page me42.417
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.417
†b Strafgesetzbuch für die Preussischen Staaten. Vom 14. April 1851.
Page me42.417
†c J.B. Schweitzer, Der Kapitalgewinn und der Arbeitslohn.
Page me42.418
†a Napoleon III
Page me42.418
†b 'my son' (Eugéne Bonaparte)
Page me42.418
†c father, who became so by marriage
Page me42.419
†a draft
Page me42.419
†b of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.420
†a by L. Dubois. See Le Courrier français, No. 77, 2 September 1867.
Page me42.420
†b i.e., the League of Peace and Freedom
Page me42.420
†c See this volume, pp. 413-14.
Page me42.420
†d 'La questione romana', Libertá e Giustizia, No. 2, 24 August 1867.
Page me42.420
†e See this volume, p. 417.
Page me42.421
†a at the elections to the North German Reichstag (end of August-beginning of September 1867)
Page me42.421
†b 'Englische Briefe', Die Zukunft, No. 199 (supplement), 27 August 1867.
Page me42.422
†a Le Courrier français, No. 81, 6 September 1867.
Page me42.422
†b fall beneath the hammer of the demolishers
Page me42.422
†c be subjected to compulsory auction (see this volume, p. 421)
Page me42.423

†a slips of the pen
Page me42.423
†b to the first volume of Capital (Die Zukunft, No. 206, 4 September 1867)
Page me42.423
†c of a part of the preface to the first volume of Capital (The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 308, 7 September 1867)
Page me42.423
†d initially
Page me42.424
†a Things are going ahead.
Page me42.424
†b See this volume, pp. 396-97.
Page me42.424
†c Ferdinand Freiligrath
Page me42.424
†d see
Page me42.424
†e Hermann, 7 September 1867.
Page me42.425
†a Käthe Freiligrath
Page me42.425
†b Die Zukunft, No. 208 (supplement), 6 September 1867.
Page me42.425
†c our dear
Page me42.425
†d toads; philistines (here Engels refers to the French Proudhonists, delegates to the Lausanne Congress)
Page me42.426
†a A. Vermorel, 'La prochaine campagne de la Prusse', Le Courrier français, No. 84, 9 September 1867.
Page me42.426
†b as equals
Page me42.426
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.427
†a See this volume, pp. 417 and 420-21.
Page me42.427
†b Ibid, pp. 396-97 and 424.
Page me42.427
†c of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.427
†d See this volume, pp. 402, 405.
Page me42.428
†a concerning
Page me42.428
†b See this volume, p. 425.

Page me42.428
†c Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me42.428
†d We shall make fun
Page me42.428
†e See this volume, pp. 425-26.
Page me42.428
†f gradually
Page me42.428
†g See this volume, pp. 413-14.
Page me42.429
†a of the League of Peace and Freedom
Page me42.429
†b See this volume, p. 420.
Page me42.429
†c ibid., p. 424.
Page me42.430
†a of the Lausanne Congress
Page me42.430
†b The Manchester Daily Examiner & Times
Page me42.430
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.430
†d Freiligrath's daughter (see this volume, p. 425)
Page me42.430
†e Le Courrier français, Nos. 85 and 86, 10 and 11 September 1867.
Page me42.430
†f we have a map before us
Page me42.431
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.431
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.432
†a The original has '1859' corrected by Engels: '!! 1867', with the note Voilá bien, le pére Marx! (There you are, Father Marx!).
Page me42.432
†b misfortunes
Page me42.432
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.433
†a see
Page me42.433
†b As regards
Page me42.433
†c Regarding
Page me42.433

†d from the inaugural congress of the League of Peace and Freedom
Page me42.433
†e certificate of virtue
Page me42.433
†f The German word used by Marx here is Geck, a pun on Goegg.
Page me42.434
†a thief
Page me42.434
†b it is said
Page me42.434
†c bishop
Page me42.434
†d 'Events of the Month', The Diplomatic Review, 2 October 1867.
Page me42.434
†e David Urquhart
Page me42.434
†f from the Lausanne Congress of the International
Page me42.434
†g Johann Philipp Becker
Page me42.435
†a firstly
Page me42.435
†b Le Courrier français, No. 88, 13 September 1867.
Page me42.435
†c S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve.
Page me42.435
†d 'It would be impossible, without descending to the level of idiocy, to discuss whether the first task should be to arrange for the female Isabella to be abducted, for the male Bismarck to be overthrown, or for the nimble hermaphrodite Beust to evaporate. Among the French members of this Association there are some great orators and some profound thinkers, but were they all accomplished Mirabeaux and consummate Descartes, the Germans would be too squareheaded to accept roundly that it would be first and foremost the French government whose destruction would inaugurate the era of international peace.'
Page me42.435
†e Enough!
Page me42.436
†a commercial traveller
Page me42.436
†b let us not beat about the bush
Page me42.436
†c The letter is written on the blank of the Ermen & Engels firm in Manchester.
Page me42.437
†a See previous letter.
Page me42.437
†b of the first volume of Capital

Page me42.437
†c Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 273, 30 September 1867.
Page me42.437
†d See previous letter.
Page me42.437
†e fellow
Page me42.437
†f A reference to the meeting of the General Council of the International on 8 October 1867 (see this volume, pp. 434-35).
Page me42.437
†g Old Bailey — Central Criminal Court in London
Page me42.438
†a Le Courrier français
Page me42.438
†b without inhibition
Page me42.438
†c thiefs
Page me42.438
†d commercial traveller
Page me42.438
†e infringed
Page me42.438
†f So much the better.
Page me42.439
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.439
†b Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.439
†c Well, we shall see.
Page me42.440
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.440
†b Firstly
Page me42.440
†c of 29 September and 8 October 1867 (see this volume, pp. 433 and 438)
Page me42.440
†d the first volume of Capital
Page me42.440
†e despite himself
Page me42.441
†a S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve.
Page me42.441
†b a man of some wit
Page me42.441
†c The original has: verkladderadatscht — from Kladderadatsch, a German satirical weekly.

Page me42.441
†d in his note on the congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva, see Neue Zürcher-Zeitung, No. 254, 13 September 1867.
Page me42.441
†e false position
Page me42.442
†a gratified
Page me42.443
†a Gertruda Kugelmann
Page me42.443
†b See this volume, p. 490.
Page me42.443
†c informed
Page me42.443
†d of 29 September 1867 (see this volume, p. 434)
Page me42.443
†e Between ourselves
Page me42.443
†f the first volume of Capital
Page me42.443
†g public
Page me42.444
†a A reference to the North German Reichstag.
Page me42.444
†b surprise attack
Page me42.444
†c This sentence was written by Engels in the margin.
Page me42.445
†a See this volume, p. 433.
Page me42.445
†b K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me42.445
†c See this volume, pp. 433-34.
Page me42.446
†a See this volume p. 434.
Page me42.446
†b Ernst Dronke
Page me42.446
†c juridical knowledge
Page me42.446
†d See this volume, p. 438.
Page me42.446
†e S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve.
Page me42.446
†f i.e., Prussian victories in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866
Page me42.447

†a Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.447
†b in the Hermann
Page me42.447
†c to the first volume of Capital
Page me42.448
†a See this volume, p. 445.
Page me42.448
†b Ibid., pp. 436, 437 and 439.
Page me42.449
†a S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve.
Page me42.449
†b Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel, No. 230, 3 October 1867.
Page me42.449
†c What is done, is done.
Page me42.449
†d event
Page me42.449
†e I am punished for my sins!
Page me42.449
†f initially
Page me42.449
†g the first volume of Capital
Page me42.449
†h man of action
Page me42.449
†i Johann Philipp Becker
Page me42.450
†a Impossible.
Page me42.450
†b Gertruda and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.450
†c See this volume, p. 448.
Page me42.450
†d Ibid., p. 447.
Page me42.450
†e No. 308 of 6 October 1867 containing a French translation of part of Marx's preface to the first volume of Capital.
Page me42.451
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.451
†b Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.451
†c Charles Roesgen
Page me42.452
†a Abraham Jacobi

Page me42.452
†b S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve.
Page me42.452
†c Börsenblatt für den Deutschen Buchhandel, No. 230, 3 October 1867.
Page me42.452
†d Moskovskiya vyedomosti, No. 210, 28 September 1867.
Page me42.453
†a See this volume, pp. 435-36.
Page me42.453
†b My will, which riseth up in pride,
Doth spout most curiously;
The sauce, my love, thou didst provide,
The fish it was from me.
Page me42.453
Ah, did that member overween
To delve the sacred place?
Pray pardon him his grievous sin,
He weepeth his disgrace.

M. Régnier, Stances.
Page me42.454
† a Love's Fluxion

Our love is an affection
That by our eyes attains the heart,
Then takes the form of fluxion
And issues through the nether part.

M. Régnier, Épigrammes, X.
Page me42.454
†b Lizette slain by Régnier

Lizette, beset by slander's breath,
To Régnier came with tearful eyes:
My friend, I pray thee, give me death,
Therein my only yearning lies.
He, ever eager to obey,
Unsheaths his ... what more need I say?
And at her belly lunges low.
She, hoping that he her would kill,
Tells him, my heart it yearneth still,
I fear I shall my fate forego,
But Régnier, weary of his pledge,
Fearing a second suppliant cry,
Tells her, oh haste thee now and die,
For this my sword has lost his edge.

M. Régnier, Épigrammes, XV.
Page me42.455
†a spontaneous generation
Page me42.455
†b the one is as bad as the other. A reference to L. Nougués, 'L'Art militaire et le progrés' (Le Courrier français, Nos. 123 and 125, 18 and 20 October 1867) and to P.J. Proudhon, 'Lettres inédites de P.-J. Proudhon sur les générations spontanées' (ibid., Nos. 121, 123 and 124, 16, 18 and 19 October 1867).
Page me42.455
†c reviews of the first volume of Capital (see this volume, p. 451)
Page me42.455
†d double utilisation
Page me42.455
†e W.T. Thornton, 'Stray Chapters from a Forthcoming Work on Labour', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. II, No. 10, 1 October 1867.
Page me42.455
†f the greatest force
Page me42.455
†g Lizzy Burns
Page me42.456
†a See this volume, p. 455.
Page me42.456
†b on the first volume of Capital
Page me42.457
†a Paul Lafargue (Engels jocularly calls Lafargue by the name of a wandering German physician, which became synonymous with a quack)
Page me42.457
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.458
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.458
†b Benjamin Disraeli
Page me42.458
†c Victoria
Page me42.459
†a The original has: Egerton Herbert.
Page me42.459
†b H.E. Roscoe, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie nach den neuesten Ansichten der Wissenschaft. Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer.
Page me42.459
†c by chance
Page me42.460
†a Karl Georg von Usedom
Page me42.460

†b Pius IX
Page me42.460
†c confusion
Page me42.461
†a James Hamilton Abercorn
Page me42.461
†b F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Elberfelder Zeitung'.
Page me42.461
†c Our friend
Page me42.461
†d on the first volume of Capital
Page me42.461
†e F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Zukunft'.
Page me42.461
†f this friend
Page me42.462
†a See this volume, pp. 467-69.
Page me42.462
†b Napoleon III
Page me42.462
†c Pius IX
Page me42.462
†d done for
Page me42.462
†e the anniversary of the Bonapartist coup d'état of 2 December 1851
Page me42.463
†a See this volume, pp. 461.
Page me42.463
†b Le Courrier français
Page me42.463
†c Paul Lafargue
Page me42.463
†d thanks
Page me42.463
†e F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Elberfelder Zeitung'.
Page me42.463
†f 2 November (see this volume, pp. 458-61)
Page me42.463
†g The Fortnightly Review
Page me42.464
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.464
†b We shall see!
Page me42.464
†c 'Conference held on August the 27th, 1822, at Constantinople. From the Work of Baron Prokesch', The Diplomatic Review, 2 October 1867 (excerpts from the book by

A. Prokesch-Osten, Geschichte des Abfalls der Griechen vom Türkischen Reiche im Jahre 1821).
Page me42.464
†d See this volume, pp. 461 and 463.
Page me42.464
†e In this paragraph Marx refers to the meetings of the Reform League branches.
Page me42.465
†a The following confession from a nun is to be found in an inquisition record in Italy, who innocently prayed to the madonna: 'I beg of you, Holy Virgin, send me someone with whom I may sin.'
Page me42.465
†b stronger
Page me42.465
†c the Father Confessor does not come in every day
Page me42.465
†d on the first volume of Capital
Page me42.466
†a to force the hand of these miserable economists
Page me42.466
†b Augsburger Abendzeitung, No. 303, 4 November 1867.
Page me42.467
†a See this volume, pp. 443-44.
Page me42.467
†b F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Zukunft'.
Page me42.467
†c Matthew 10:16
Page me42.468
†a See this volume, pp. 361 and 372.
Page me42.469
†a Gertruda Kugelmann
Page me42.469
†b of 6 November 1867
Page me42.470
†a Laura's jocular nickname
Page me42.471
†a Firstly
Page me42.471
†b of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.471
†c Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me42.471
†d F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Rheinische Zeitung'.
Page me42.471
†e in time
Page me42.472
†a Regarding

Page me42.472
†b in the best of form
Page me42.472
†c Ida Freiligrath
Page me42.472
†d parties
Page me42.472
†e Eleanor Marx
Page me42.472
†f the first volume of Capital
Page me42.473
†a Joseph Dietzgen
Page me42.473
†b Sigfrid Meyer
Page me42.473
†c the first volume of Capital (Deutsche Volkszeitung, 10 November 1867)
Page me42.473
†d F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Zukunft'.
Page me42.473
†e League of Peace
Page me42.474
†a the Fenians Michael Larkin, William Allen and Michael O'Brien
Page me42.475
†a Victoria
Page me42.475
†b in which your business was dealt with (see next letter)
Page me42.475
†c F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Elberfelder Zeitung' and 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Düsseldorfer Zeitung'.
Page me42.475
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me42.476
†a See this volume, p. 474.
Page me42.476
†b Joseph Dietzgen
Page me42.476
†c entirely self-educated
Page me42.476
†d See this volume, pp. 436, 437, etc.
Page me42.476
†e 23 November
Page me42.477
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.477
†b German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me42.477

†c W. Liebknecht, Was ich im Berliner 'Reichstag' sagte.
Page me42.478
†a H.E. Roscoe, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie... Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer.
Page me42.478
†b S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve (German edition: Meine Perle vor dem Genfer Congress).
Page me42.478
†c Moses Hess
Page me42.478
†d the first volume of Capital
Page me42.479
†a F. von Gentz, Vertrauliche Bemerkungen über den Stand und die nächste Zukunft der russisch-türkischen Angelegenheiten.
Page me42.479
†b of 25 November 1867
Page me42.479
†c W. Liebknecht, Was ich im Berliner 'Reichstag' sagte.'
Page me42.480
†a H.E. Roscoe, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie... Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer.
Page me42.481
†a Anton and Gottfried Ermen
Page me42.481
†b Elisabeth Engels'
Page me42.482
†a Les États-Unis d'Europe
Page me42.482
†b Hampstead Heath
Page me42.483
†a Moses Hess (olle — Low German for 'old')
Page me42.483
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.483
†c See this volume, pp. 478-79.
Page me42.483
†d i.e., colours symbolising mourning and the struggle for the emancipation of Ireland
Page me42.483
†e William Allen and Michael O'Brien
Page me42.484
†a See this volume, pp. 479, 481-82.
Page me42.484
†b Ibid., p. 478.
Page me42.484
†c Deutsches Museum

Page me42.484
†d See this volume, pp. 463-64.
Page me42.484
†e Moses Hess (see this volume, p. 484).
Page me42.485
†a Internationale Revue
Page me42.485
†b H.E. Roscoe, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie... Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer.
Page me42.485
†c 19 November
Page me42.485
†d 'London Meetings', The Times, No. 25974, 21 November 1867.
Page me42.485
†e 26 November
Page me42.485
†f K. Marx, 'Notes for an Undelivered Speech on Ireland'.
Page me42.485
†g meeting
Page me42.486
†a manifesto
Page me42.487
†a Moses Hess
Page me42.487
†b A pun on the name Hirsch which also means stag.
Page me42.487
†c Marx wrote this postscript at the top of the first page.
Page me42.487
†d the first volume of Capital
Page me42.488
†a prime cost
Page me42.488
†b Otto Meissner
Page me42.488
†c W. Liebknecht, Was ich im Berliner 'Reichstag' sagte.
Page me42.488
†d Democratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.488
†e Liebknecht's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.489
†a Marx's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.489
†b the first volume of Capital.
Page me42.490
†a Taucher — literally: diver; Faucher — name of an economist.
Page me42.490

†b Deutsche Volkszeitung, 10 November 1867 (see this volume, p. 473).
Page me42.490
†c The name Faucher originates from the verb fauchen meaning 'to spit, snarl, hiss, puff, explode with anger or passion'. In Vol. I of Capital Marx makes a pun on the name and derives the words vorfauchen and lügenfauchendsten from it.
Page me42.490
†d Gertruda Kugelmann
Page me42.490
†e Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.491
†a concerning the first volume of Capital
Page me42.491
†b See this volume, pp. 475 and 476.
Page me42.492
†a Der Beobachter
Page me42.492
†b 'Adresse an den Wiener Gemeinderat', Neue Preußische Zeitung, 1 December 1867.
Page me42.492
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.493
†a who voted against Bürgers at the elections to the North German Reichstag
Page me42.493
†b See this volume, pp. 220-21.
Page me42.493
†c Der Beobachter
Page me42.493
†d First
Page me42.493
†e the first volume of Capital
Page me42.494
†a that's Mayer to a tee
Page me42.494
†b despite himself
Page me42.494
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, “To the Editor of the Social-Demokrat'.
Page me42.495
†a spontaneously
Page me42.495
†b K. Marx, 'Plagiarism'.
Page me42.495
†c See this volume, pp. 328-29.
Page me42.495
†d H.E. Roscoe, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie... Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer.
Page me42.496

†a [G.P.] Cluseret, 'Mentana', Le Courrier français, No. 173, 7 December 1867.
Page me42.496
†b But we shall have to wait and see!
Page me42.497
†a Joseph Dietzgen
Page me42.497
†b See this volume, p. 476.
Page me42.497
†c F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Zukunft'.
Page me42.497
†d Gertruda Kugelmann
Page me42.497
†e Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger (see this volume, p. 202)
Page me42.497
†f Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.498
†a See this volume, pp. 493-95.
Page me42.498
†b F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Rheinische Zeitung'.
Page me42.498
†c Hence these tears! (Terence, Andria, Act I, Scene 1, 99).
Page me42.498
†d See this volume, p. 495.
Page me42.498
†e K. Marx, 'Plagiarism'.
Page me42.499
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.499
†b Les États-Unis d'Europe
Page me42.499
†c Gustav Vogt
Page me42.499
†d W. Liebknecht, Was ich im Berliner 'Reichstag' sagte.
Page me42.499
†e literally: at full length; figuratively: in print.
Page me42.500
†a Adolf Friedrich Seubert
Page me42.500
†b F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Beobachter'.
Page me42.500
†c F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Staats-Anzeiger fur Württemberg'.
Page me42.501
†a Schwäbischer Merkur
Page me42.501
†b pain in the nerve

Page me42.501
†c by civil ceremony
Page me42.502
†a See this volume, pp. 495 and 498.
Page me42.502
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.502
†c misunderstanding
Page me42.502
†d Bürgers
Page me42.502
†e See this volume, p. 498.
Page me42.503
†a F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Beobachter'.
Page me42.503
†b F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg'.
Page me42.503
†c F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Neue Badische Landeszeitung'.
Page me42.503
†d K. Marx, 'Plagiarism'.
Page me42.504
†a Liebknecht
Page me42.504
†b Anger makes the poet (Juvenal, Satires, I, 79).
Page me42.504
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.504
†d when it published Marx's article 'Plagiarism'
Page me42.504
†e J.W. Goethe, 'Totalität'.
Page me42.505
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.505
†b See this volume, p. 456.
Page me42.505
†c W. Liebknecht, Was ich im Berliner 'Reichstag' sagte.
Page me42.505
†d Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.505
†e See this volume, pp. 492, 503.
Page me42.506
†a Russkïj invalid, No. 336, 5 December 1867, an anonymous item in the 'Unofficial Section' datelined 'St. Petersburg, 4 December'.
Page me42.506

†b deposed rulers
Page me42.506
†c George V, King of Hanover, and Adolf, Duke of Nassau
Page me42.507
†a F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Beobachter'.
Page me42.507
†b Barmer Zeitung
Page me42.507
†c K. Marx, 'Plagiarism'.
Page me42.507
†d K. Fraas, Die Natur der Landwirthschaft.
Page me42.508
†a probably two numbers of The Diplomatic Review
Page me42.508
†b Eleanor's jocular nickname. The words “the grim dwarf” are in German.
Page me42.509
†a 'Father, I have sinned' (Luke 15:21)
Page me42.509
†b See this volume, p. 529.
Page me42.509
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.509
†d See this volume, p. 499.
Page me42.510
†a See this volume, p. 508.
Page me42.510
†b F. Engels' reviews of Volume One of Capital for the Beobachter and for the Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg.
Page me42.510
†c K. Fraas, Die Natur der Landwirthschaft.
Page me42.510
†d Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me42.510
†e Österreichs Kämpfe im Jahre 1866..., Bd. I, S. 60-61.
Page me42.510
†f Der Feldzug von 1866 in Deutschland... (appeared in instalments)
Page me42.510
†g of June
Page me42.510
†h Frederick William
Page me42.511
†a E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867', Ergänzungsblätter zur Kenntniß der Gegenwart, Bd. 3, Hildburghausen, 1867, S. 182-86.
Page me42.511
†b F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Beobachter'.

Page me42.511
†c cut to the quick
Page me42.511
†d sort
Page me42.511
†e H.D. Macleod, The Theory and Practice of Banking....
Page me42.511
†f Engels has in mind the critique of Roscher's views in Vol. One of Capital.
Page me42.511
†g Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.512
†a Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.512
†b Paul Lafargue
Page me42.512
†c F. Engels' reviews of Volume One of Capital for the Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg and for the Beobachter.
Page me42.512
†d Adolf Friedrich Seubert
Page me42.512
†e reviews of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.513
†a Liebknecht
Page me42.513
†b E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867'.
Page me42.513
†c A reference to L. Stein's System der Staatswissenschaft and Die Verwaltungslehre.
Page me42.513
†d S. Borkheim, Ma perle devant le congrés de Genéve.
Page me42.513
†e Wolfgang and Otto
Page me42.513
†f Eleanor Marx
Page me42.514
†a With regard to
Page me42.514
†b E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867'.
Page me42.514
†c See this volume, p. 511.
Page me42.514
†d without more ado
Page me42.515
†a F. Engels, 'Outlines of a Critique of Political Economy'.

Page me42.515
†b the first volume of Capital in the Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me42.515
†c K. Marx, 'Plagiarism' (see this volume, p. 495).
Page me42.515
†d of the Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.516
†a See this volume, p. 512.
Page me42.516
†b Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me42.516
†c Neue Oder-Zeitung
Page me42.516
†d F. Pyat, 'Adresse des Démocrates Français á leur Fréres d'Irlande et d'Angleterre. Paris, 2 décembre 1867', The Times, No. 26015, 8 January 1868 (The French Democrats and the Fenians).
Page me42.516
†e searches
Page me42.516
†f illegal society
Page me42.517
†a Österreichs Kämpfe im Jahre 1866..., Bd. 1 (see this volume, pp. 510-11).
Page me42.518
†a See this volume, p. 516.
Page me42.518
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.518
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.519
†a Amand Goegg. In German 'Geck' means a 'dandy' or 'fop'.
Page me42.519
†b Lausanne Congress of the International
Page me42.519
†c presumably the committee of the London branch of the League of Peace and Freedom
Page me42.519
†d J.G. Eccarius, 'The Geneva Peace Congress', The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 325, 4 January 1868.
Page me42.520
†a Hence these tears! (Terence, Andria, Act I, Scene 1).
Page me42.520
†b illegal society (see this volume, p. 517)
Page me42.520
†c seat of the British Cabinet
Page me42.520

†d A. Prokesch-Osten, Geschichte des Abfalls der Griechen vom Türkischen Reiche im Jahre 1821 und der Gründung des Hellenischen Königreiches; Fr. von Gentz, Aus dem Nachlasse Friedrichs von Gentz; G.H. Münster, Politische Skizzen über die Lage Europas vom Wiener Congress bis zur Gegenwart (1815-1867).
Page me42.520
†e H.K.B. Moltke, Der russisch-türkische Feldzug in der europäischen Türkei 1828 und 1829.
Page me42.521
†a First of all
Page me42.521
†b Gertruda and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.521
†c A reference to Kugelmann's assistance in having Engels' reviews of Volume One of Capital published in the bourgeois press.
Page me42.521
†d G. Weerth, 'Es gibt nichts Schönres auf der Welt'.
Page me42.522
†a literally: for the King of Prussia; figuratively: all for nothing.
Page me42.522
†b E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867'.
Page me42.522
†c With regard to
Page me42.522
†d would-be great man
Page me42.522
†e Everything will be for the best in the best of all possible worlds (F.M.A. Voltaire, Candide).
Page me42.522
†f presumably Karl Schapper
Page me42.522
†g G.W.F. Hegel, Werke, Bd. II, Phänomenologie des Geistes, 2. Aufl., Bd. 2, Berlin, 1841, S. 251-71.
Page me42.523
†a Laura Marx (see this volume, p. 583)
Page me42.523
†b Der Feldzug von 1866 in Deutschland...
Page me42.523
†c Frederick William
Page me42.523
†d after which
Page me42.524
†a See this volume, pp. 512, 515.
Page me42.525
†a Eleanor Marx (see this volume, pp. 520-21)
Page me42.525

†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.525
†c See this volume, pp. 515-16.
Page me42.526
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.526
†b See this volume, p. 520.
Page me42.526
†c It is not worth the trouble.
Page me42.527
†a A review of Volume One of Capital in The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art, 18 January 1868.
Page me42.527
†b if needs be we shall do our business without him and despite him
Page me42.527
†c of Capital
Page me42.528
†a Moses Hess
Page me42.528
†b according to all the rules of the art
Page me42.529
†a between ourselves
Page me42.529
†b regarding
Page me42.529
†c [C. Siebel,] 'Carl Marx: Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie', Barmer Zeitung, No. 291, 6 December 1867.
Page me42.529
†d F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Elberfelder Zeitung'.
Page me42.529
†e F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Düsseldorfer Zeitung'.
Page me42.529
†f The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art, 18 January 1868.
Page me42.529
†g Gertruda and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.530
†a editor-in-chief
Page me42.530
†b District President
Page me42.530
†c Inaccuracy in the original: December 1844.
Page me42.530
†d Ditto: 1846
Page me42.531
†a Ditto: September
Page me42.531

†b Ditto: 1851-1860.
Page me42.531
†c New-York Daily Tribune
Page me42.531
†d Inaccuracy in the original: 1865.
Page me42.531
†e K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.531
†f the British Museum Library
Page me42.532
†a Moses Hess
Page me42.532
†b Joseph Card
Page me42.532
†c Hermann Schulze-Delitzsch
Page me42.532
†d i.e., champion of Austria's annexation to united Germany
Page me42.532
†e Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me42.533
†a A reference to the notice on the first volume of Capital published in The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art, 18 January 1868.
Page me42.533
†b See this volume, p. 52.
Page me42.533
†c Moses Hess
Page me42.533
†d author's rights
Page me42.534
†a Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me42.534
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.536
†a See this volume, pp. 526 and 533.
Page me42.536
†b Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me42.536
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.536
†d E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867' (see this volume, p. 514).
Page me42.536
†e the British Museum Library
Page me42.536
†f George V
Page me42.536

†g See this volume, pp. 507-08 and 510.
Page me42.537
†a Laura Marx
Page me42.537
†b Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me42.537
†c E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867'.
Page me42.537
†d E. Dühring, Die Verkleinerer Carey's und die Krisis der Nationalökonomie.
Page me42.537
†e Furz in German, rhyming with Schurz.
Page me42.538
†a to the Philipses
Page me42.538
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt edited by Liebknecht
Page me42.538
†c Neues Wiener Tagblatt
Page me42.539
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.539
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.539
†c S. B[orkheim], 'Russische politische Flüchtlinge in West-Europa', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nos. 5 and 6, 1 and 8 February 1868 (the end of the article was published in Nos. 17 and 20, 25 April and 16 May 1868).
Page me42.539
†d under the patronage of
Page me42.540
†a See this volume, p. 534.
Page me42.540
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.540
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.540
†d Ernscht in the original; Engels is punning on the Saxon pronunciation of ernst.
Page me42.541
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.541
†b See this volume, pp. 534, 540.
Page me42.542
†a Moses Hess
Page me42.542
†b fines
Page me42.542
†c Albert Eichhoff

Page me42.542
†d urgent
Page me42.542
†e François Lafargue
Page me42.543
†a H.D. Macleod, The Theory and Practice of Banking.
Page me42.543
†b K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy.
Page me42.543
†c After, not because.
Page me42.543
†d J.H. Thünen, Der isolirte Staat in Beziehung auf Landwirtschaft und Nationalökonomie.
Page me42.543
†e E. Dühring, 'Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, 1. Band, Hamburg 1867'.
Page me42.544
†a As for
Page me42.544
†b bad faith
Page me42.544
†c Laura Marx
Page me42.545
†a See this volume, pp. 534, 540.
Page me42.545
†b the Philipses
Page me42.545
†c Albert Eichhoff
Page me42.546
†a See this volume, pp. 534, 540.
Page me42.546
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.546
†c F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Demokratisches Wochenblatt'.
Page me42.546
†d Indian berries
Page me42.547
†a 14 November in the original
Page me42.547
†b the British Museum Library
Page me42.547
†c Presumably a reference to G.L. Maurer's Einleitung zur Geschichte der Mark-, Hof-, Dorf- und Stadt-Verfassung und der öffentlichen Gewalt; Geschichte der Markenverfassung in Deutschland; Geschichte der Fronhöfe, der Bauernhöfe und der Hofverfassung in Deutschland; Geschichte der Dorfverfassung in Deutschland.

Page me42.547
†d J. Möser, Osnabrückische Geschichte.
Page me42.548
†a in fact, not words
Page me42.548
†b J. Grimm, Deutsche Rechtsalterthümer.
Page me42.548
†c Presumably a reference to K. Fraas' Klima und Pflanzenwelt in der Zeit; Historisch-encyklopädischer Grundriß der Landwirthschaftslehre; Geschichte der Landwirthschaft; Die Natur der Landwirthschaft; Die Ackerbaukrisen und ihre Heilmittel.
Page me42.548
†d E. Dühring, Die Verkleinerer Carey's und die Krisis der Nationalökonomie.
Page me42.548
†e the first volume of Capital
Page me42.548
†f it suffices
Page me42.548
†g See previous letter.
Page me42.548
†h i.e. the Philipses
Page me42.549
†a Bruno Bauer
Page me42.549
†b Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales.
Page me42.549
†c Gustav Meyer (see this volume, p. 552)
Page me42.550
†a private life which should be surrounded by walls
Page me42.550
†b Weekly News
Page me42.551
†a of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.551
†b E. Dühring, Die Verkleinerer Carey's und die Krisis der Nationalökonomie.
Page me42.551
†c of 13 March 1868
Page me42.551
†d Laura Marx
Page me42.551
†e Capital
Page me42.552
†a As for
Page me42.552
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me42.552

†c F. Engels, 'Review of Volume One of Capital for the Demokratisches Wochenblatt'.
Page me42.552
†d S. B[orkheim], 'Russische politische Flüchtlinge in West-Europa', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nos. 5 and 6, 1 and 8 February 1868 (the end of the article was published in Nos. 17 and 20, 25 April and 16 May 1868).
Page me42.552
†e Gustav Meyer (see this volume, p. 549)
Page me42.553
†a private life should be surrounded by walls
Page me42.553
†b Gertruda Kugelmann
Page me42.553
†c [J.B. Schweitzer,] 'Das Werk von Carl Marx', Der Social-Demokrat, Nos. 10-12, 14, 15 and 24; 22, 24, 26 and 31 January, 2 and 23 February 1868.
Page me42.553
†d Hampstead Heath
Page me42.553
†e François Lafargue
Page me42.553
†f hida is also the name in English for the land that can be cultivated sufficiently with one plough (see also this volume, pp. 560-61).
Page me42.554
†a Here a sign to declare the land defended
Page me42.554
†b is erected, this sign we call Wiffa
Page me42.554
†c Laura Marx
Page me42.554
†d See this volume, pp. 547-49.
Page me42.554
†e Ibid., pp. 553-54.
Page me42.554
†f J. Grimm, Deutsche Rechtsalterthümer.
Page me42.555
†a since I have promised
Page me42.555
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.555
†c The Times, No. 26074, 17 March 1868, 'Prussia (From our own Correspondent). Berlin, March 14'.
Page me42.555
†d of the first volume of Capital
Page me42.555
†e E. Dühring, Die Verkleinerer Carey's und die Krisis der Nationalökonomie.
Page me42.556

†a the British Museum Library
Page me42.556
†b a misunderstanding
Page me42.556
†c [J.B. Schweitzer,] 'Das Werk von Carl Marx', Der Social-Demokrat, Nos. 10-12, 14, 15 and 24; 22, 24, 26 and 31 January, 2 and 23 February 1868.
Page me42.556
†d What stupidity!
Page me42.556
†e Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.556
†f See G.W.F. Hegel, Phänomenologie des Geistes, Abt. 'Die Bildung und ihr Reich der Wirklichkeit'.
Page me42.556
†g on various topics
Page me42.557
†a the British Museum Library
Page me42.557
†b Regarding
Page me42.557
†c See this volume, pp. 547-49, and 554-55.
Page me42.557
†d mountains in the Rhine Province, Prussia
Page me42.557
†e Heinrich Marx
Page me42.558
†a facts
Page me42.558
†b importance
Page me42.558
†c J. Möser, Patriotische Phantasien, Th. 3, S. 329. 'Luft macht eigen' — part of a medieval German saying, 'Stadtluft macht frei, Landluft macht eigen', literally: 'town air brings freedom, country air brings serfdom'. In medieval times a serf who moved to a town became free.
Page me42.558
†d Tacitus, Germania, 26.
Page me42.558
†e lot
Page me42.558
†f communal land
Page me42.558
†g Die Geschichtschreiber der deutschen Vorzeit, Bd. 1. S. 661.
Page me42.558
†h they till separately and scattered
Page me42.558

†i 'They do not lay out villages in our fashion, with adjacent buildings one next to the other; each surrounds his dwelling with a free space'.
Page me42.558
†j 'according to gentes and kinships, which settled together' (Gaius Julius Caesar, Commentarii de bello Gallico, Lib. VI, 22).
Page me42.559
†a C. Fraas, Geschichte der Landwirthschaft, S. 12.
Page me42.559
†b K. Fraas, Klima und Pflanzenwelt in der Zeit, S. XVI.
Page me42.559
†c Gustav Meyer (see this volume, p. 549)
Page me42.559
†d Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.559
†e Lizzy Burns
Page me42.560
†a C. Schorlemmer, 'Researches on the Hydrocarbons of the Series CnH2n+2', Proceedings of the Royal Society, No. 94, 1867 and No. 102, 1868.
Page me42.560
†b See this volume, pp. 553-54.
Page me42.565
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.565
†b presumably Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 24 November 1864
Page me42.565
†c See this volume, pp. 43-45.
Page me42.565
†d Edgar von Westphalen
Page me42.566
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me42.566
†b Bernhard Becker
Page me42.567
†a See present edition, Vol. 20, p. 25.
Page me42.567
†b Moses Hess
Page me42.567
†c Nannette Philips. In Jenny Marx's album: 'Bookworming'.
Page me42.568
†a In the album this query and the one above remained unanswered.
Page me42.568
†b In the album: 'Martin Tupper, Violet powder'.
Page me42.568
†c In the album: 'Dante, Aeschylus, Shakespeare, Goethe'.
Page me42.568
†d In the album: 'Diderot, Lessing, Hegel, Balsac'.

Page me42.568
†e In the album there are three more queries and replies here; 'Favourite colour ... Red; Colour of eyes & heir ... Black; Names ... Jenny, Laura.'
Page me42.568
†f In the album the query 'The character in history you most dislike' is left unanswered.
Page me42.568
†g Nothing human is alien to me (Terence, Heautontimorumenos, I, 1, 25)
Page me42.568
†h Doubt everything
Page me42.568
†i written on a sheet of paper bearing the stamp: 'International Working Men's Association / Central Council / London'
Page me42.568
†j the first volume of Capital
Page me42.571
†a See this volume, p. 224.
Page me42.571
†b ibid., p. 150.
Page me42.571
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me42.572
†a Eleanor Marx
Page me42.572
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me42.572
†c See this volume, p. 216.
Page me42.572
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me42.572
†e K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me42.573
†a August Vogt
Page me42.573
†b Marx's conspiratorial pseudonym
Page me42.573
†c The date is written in by Kugelmann.
Page me42.573
†d the first volume of Capital
Page me42.574
†a of 23 February 1866
Page me42.574
†b the Reform League (see Note 155)
Page me42.574
†c Probably Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 30 March 1866.
Page me42.575

†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.576
†a Paul Lafargue
Page me42.576
†b Otto Meissner
Page me42.576
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.576
†d in rosy colours
Page me42.576
†e This between ourselves.
Page me42.577
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.578
†a Jupiter the Thunderer
Page me42.578
†b Matthew 6:9, 10
Page me42.578
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me42.579
†a Franziska Kugelmann
Page me42.579
†b François and Virginie Lafargue
Page me42.580
†a of Capital
Page me42.580
†b symbol of revolutionary action in the Peasant War in Germany
Page me42.580
†c Der Vorbote
Page me42.580
†d The title of a German magazine
Page me42.580
†e sounding balloons
Page me42.581
†a [J. Ph. Becker,] 'Zur Friedens- und Freiheitsliga', Der Vorbote, No. 12, December 1867.
Page me42.581
†b willy nilly
Page me42.581
†c Amand Goegg
Page me42.581
†d See this volume, pp. 517-18.
Page me42.582
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me42.582

†b A play on words: Väterchen, father, little father, meaning here 'the Tsar', and Herzens Väterchen, meaning 'dear father', a reference to the name Herzen (Jenny Marx alludes to Bakunin's connections with Alexander Herzen).
Page me42.582
†c old name of Ireland
Page me42.582
†d The manuscript breaks off here.
Page me42.583
†a See this volume, pp. 508, 520 and 523.
Page me42.736
†a Documents written by Marx see in Section 'Works by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels; Marx, Karl'.

Page Break me43.i

VOLUME 43

Page Break me43.ii
Page me43.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me43.iii

FRONTMATTER Titlepage

Page me43.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
43

MARX AND ENGELS: 1868-70

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me43.iv

Copyright page

Page me43.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:

GREAT BRITAIN: Eric Hobsbawm, John Hoffman, Nicholas Jacobs, Monty Johnstone, Martin Milligan, Jeff Skelley, Ernst Wangermann.
USA: Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, James E. Jackson, Leonard B. Levenson, Victor Perlo, Betty Smith, Dirk J. Struik.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — A.K. Avelichev, N.P. Karmanova, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, V.N. Pospelova, G.L. Smirnov.

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1988

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.
Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX 39. 5. A 16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0543-3 (v. 43)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me43.v

Contents

Page me43.v
Prefacexix

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
LETTERS
April 1868-July 1870

Page me43.v
1868

1. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 6 April 3
2. Engels to Marx. 10 April 5
3. Marx to Engels. 11 April 7
4. Marx to Laura and Paul Lafargue. 11 April 9
5. Engels to Marx. 17 April 11
6. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 17 April 12
7. Marx to Engels. 18 April 13
8. Engels to Marx. 20 April 14
9. Marx to Engels. 21 April 15
10. Marx to Engels. 22 April 16
11. Engels to Marx. 26 April 19
12. Marx to Engels. 30 April 20
13. Marx to Engels. 4 May 26
14. Engels to Marx. 6 May 28
15. Marx to Engels. 7 May 30
16. Marx to Joseph Dietzgen. 9 May 31
17. Engels to Marx. 10 May 32

Page Break me43.vi
18. Engels to Marx. 15 May 34
19. Marx to Engels. 16 May 35
20. Engels to Marx. 22 May 37
21. Marx to Engels. 23 May 38
22. Engels to Marx. 25 May 41
23. Marx to Engels. 27 May 42
24. Marx to Engels. 20 June 42
25. Engels to Marx. 22 June 44
26. Marx to Engels. 23 June 45
27. Engels to Marx. 24 June 46
28. Marx to Engels. 24 June 47
29. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 24 June 48

30. Engels to Marx. 25 June 48
31. Marx to Engels. 26 June 49
32. Engels to Marx. 26 June 50
33. Marx to Engels. 27 June 51
34. Engels to Marx. 28 June 52
35. Marx to Engels. 29 June 53
36. Marx to Engels. 2 July 54
37. Engels to Marx. 2 July 55
38. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 2 July 56
39. Marx to Engels. 4 July 57
40. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 4 July 58
41. Marx to Engels. 7 July 62
42. Engels to Marx. 10 July 63
43. Marx to Engels. 11 July 65
44. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 11 July 67
45. Engels to Marx. 14 July 70
46. Engels to Marx. 21 July 71
47. Marx to Engels. 23 July 72
48. Engels to Marx. 29 July 73
49. Marx to Engels. 29 July 74
50. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 31 July 77
51. Marx to Engels. 4 August 78
52. Engels to Marx. 6 August 80
53. Marx to Engels. 10 August 81
54. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 10 August 82
55. Marx to Friedrich Lessner. 11 August 83
56. Engels to Marx. 12 August 84

Page Break me43.vii

57. Marx to Engels. 13 August 85
58. Engels to Marx. About 14 August 86
59. Marx to Engels. 21 August 87
60. Engels to Marx. 22 August 87
61. Marx to Engels. 26 August 89
62. Engels to Marx. 28 August 90
63. Marx to Engels. 29 August 91
64. Engels to Marx. 1 September 92
65. Marx to Engels. 9 September 93
66. Marx to Georg Eccarius and Friedrich Lessner. 10 September 93
67. Marx to Engels. 12 September 95
68. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 14 September 96
69. Marx to Hermann Jung. 14 September 98
70. Engels to Marx. 16 September 99
71. Marx to Engels. 16 September 100
72. Engels to Marx. 18 September 103
73. Marx to Engels. 19 September 105

74. Engels to Marx. 21 September 107
75. Marx to Engels. 23 September 109
76. Engels to Marx. 24 September 110
Page me43.vii
77. Marx to Engels. 25 September 111
78. Marx to Engels. 25 September 112
79. Engels to Marx. 25 September 113
80. Marx to Engels. 26 September 114
81. Marx to Engels. 29 September 116
82. Engels to Marx. 30 September 117
83. Engels to Marx. 2 October 119
84. Marx to Engels. 4 October 120
85. Engels to Marx. 6 October 122
86. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 7 October 123
87. Engels to Marx. 8 October 125
88. Marx to Engels. 10 October 127
89. Engels to Marx. 12 October 129
90. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 October 130
91. Marx to Johann Baptist von Schweitzer. 13 October 132
92. Engels to Marx. 14 October 136
93. Marx to Engels. 15 October 137
94. Marx to Hermann Jung. 19 October 139
95. Engels to Marx. 22 October 140

Page Break me43.viii
96. Marx to Engels. 24 October 142
97. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 26 October 144
98. Engels to Marx. 28 October 144
99. Marx to William Jessup. 28 October 147
100. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt. 28 October 148
101. Marx to Bassot. 30 October 150
102. Marx to Engels. 4 November 150
103. Engels to Marx. 4 November 151
104. Engels to Marx. 6 November 152
105. Marx to Engels. 7 November 154
106. Marx to Engels. 8 November 155
107. Engels to Marx. 10 November 156
108. Engels to Marx. 13 November 157
109. Marx to Engels. 14 November 158
110. Marx to Engels. 14 November 160
111. Marx to Hermann Jung. 14 November 160
112. Marx to Engels. 18 November 161
113. Engels to Marx. 18 November 163
114. Engels to Marx. 20 November 164
115. Marx to Engels. 23 November 165
116. Engels to Marx. 23 November 167

117. Engels to Marx. 25 November 168
118. Engels to W. Holzenhauer. 26 November 169
119. Engels to Marx. 29 November 169
120. Marx to Engels. 30 November 171
121. Marx to Engels. 5 December 172
122. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 5 December 173
123. Marx to Engels. 6 December 176
124. Engels to Marx. 8 December 176
125. Marx to Engels. 9 December 177
126. Marx to Engels. 10 December 180
127. Engels to Marx. 11 December 181
128. Marx to Engels. 12 December 182
129. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 December 184
130. Marx to Asher & Co. Not before 12 December 185
131. Engels to Marx. 13 December 186
132. Marx to Engels. 14 December 188
133. Marx to Engels. 15 December 190
134. Engels to Marx. 18 December 191

Page Break me43.ix
135. Engels to Hermann Engels. 18 December 194
136. Marx to Engels. 19 December 195
137. Marx to Laura Lafargue. 22 December 196
138. Marx to Engels. 23 December 197
139. Marx to Hermann Jung. 28 December 198

Page me43.ix
1869

140. Marx to Engels. 1 January 199
141. Engels to Marx. 3 January 200
142. Marx to Engels. 13 January 201
143. Engels to Marx. 19 January 204
144. Marx to Engels. 23 January 205
145. Engels to Marx. 25 January 206
146. Engels to Marx. 26 January 207
147. Marx to Engels. 28 January 207
148. Engels to Marx. 29 January 209
149. Marx to Engels. 29 January 211
150. Engels to Emil Blank. 4 February 212
151. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 11 February 213
152. Marx to Engels. 13 February 214
153. Marx to Engels. 15 February 215
154. Marx to Paul and Laura Lafargue. 15 February 216
155. Engels to Marx. 17 February 219
156. Marx to Hermann Jung. 17 February 220

157. Engels to Marx. 21 February 220
158. Marx to Engels. 24 February 221
159. Engels to Marx. 25 February 222
160. Marx to Engels. 1 March 224
161. Marx to Engels. 2 March 227
162. Marx to Engels. 3 March 228
163. Engels to Marx. 3 March 229
164. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 3 March 231
165. Marx to Heinrich Oberwinder. 3 March 233
166. Engels to Marx. 4 March 234
167. Marx to Engels. 5 March 235
168. Engels to Marx. 7 March 237
169. Marx to Engels. 14 March 239
170. Engels to Marx. 15 March 241

Page Break me43.x
171. Engels to Marx. 18 March 241
172. Marx to Engels. 20 March 243
173. Engels to Marx. 21 March 245
174. Engels to Marx. 28 March 247
175. Marx to Engels. 29 March 248
176. Engels to Marx. 2 April 250
177. Engels to Marx. 4 April 251
178. Engels to Friedrich Lessner. 4 April 252
179. Marx to Engels. 5 April 253
180. Engels to Marx. 6 April 255
181. Marx to Engels. 7 April 256
182. Engels to Marx. 7 April 256
183. Marx to Engels. 8 April 258
184. Marx to John Malcolm Ludlow. 10 April 259
185. Engels to Marx. 14 April 260
186. Marx to Engels. 15 April 262
187. Engels to Marx. 16 April 264
188. Marx to Engels. 16 April 266
189. Engels to Marx. 19 April 267
190. Marx to Engels. 24 April 268
191. Engels to Marx. 25 April 269
192. Marx to Engels. 26 April 269
193. Marx to Eleanor Marx. 26 April 270
194. Marx to Engels. 1 May 272
195. Engels to Marx. 2 May 272
196. Engels to Marx. 7 May 273
197. Marx to Engels. 8 May 274
198. Engels to Marx. 10 May 277
199. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 11 May 278
200. Engels to Hermann Engels. 13 May 280

201. Marx to Engels. 14 May 282
202. Engels to Marx. 19 May 283
203. Marx to Engels. 21 May 284
204. Engels to Marx. 23 May 286
205. Marx to P. Le Neve Foster, Esq. 28 May 287
206. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 2 June 287
207. Marx to His Daughter Jenny. 2 June 290
208. Marx to His Daughter Jenny. 10 June 291
209. Marx to Engels. 16 June 294

Page Break me43.xi
Page me43.xi

210. Engels to Marx. 22 June 295
211. Marx to Engels. 26 June 296
212. Engels to Marx. 27 June 298
213. Engels to Marx. 1 July 299
214. Engels to Elisabeth Engels. 1 July 300
215. Marx to Engels. 3 July 303
216. Marx to P. St. King. 3 July 306
217. Engels to Marx. 6 July 306
218. Marx to François Lafargue. 7 July 309
219. Engels to Jenny Marx (daughter). 9 July 310
220. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 10 July 312
221. Marx to François Lafargue. 10 July 314
222. Marx to Engels. 14 July 315
223. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 15 July 317
224. Engels to Hermann Engels. 15 July 318
225. Marx to Engels. 17 July 322
226. Engels to Marx. 18 July 323
227. Engels to Marx. 21 July 324
228. Marx to Engels. 22 July 326
229. Marx to Engels. 24 July 328
230. Engels to Marx. 25 July 329
231. Marx to Engels. 27 July 332
232. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 28 July 333
233. Marx to Engels. 29 July 334
234. Engels to Marx. 30 July 335
235. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 30 July 337
236. Marx to Engels. 2 August 338
237. Engels to Marx. 3 August 339
238. Marx to Engels. 4 August 340
239. Engels to Jenny Marx (daughter). 8 August 341
240. Marx to Engels. 10 August 342
241. Engels to Marx. 12 August 345
242. Marx to Hermann Jung. 13 August 346
243. Engels to Marx. 16 August 347

244. Engels to Marx. 16 August 348
245. Marx to Engels. 17 August 349
246. Marx to Engels. 18 August 349
247. Engels to Marx. 5 September 351
248. Marx to Engels. 25 September 353

Page Break me43.xii
249. Marx to Laura Lafargue. 25 September 355
250. Engels to Marx. 27 September 356
251. Marx to Engels. 30 September 358
252. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 October 359
253. Marx to Paul and Laura Lafargue. 18 October 359
254. Engels to Marx. 22 October 361
255. Marx to Engels. 23 October 361
256. Engels to Marx. 24 October 362
257. Marx to Engels. 30 October 363
258. Engels to Marx. 1 November 365
259. Marx to Engels. 6 November 367
260. Engels to Marx. 9 November 369
261. Marx to Engels. 12 November 370
262. Marx to Samuel Davenport. 12 November 372
263. Engels to Marx. 17 November 372
264. Marx to Engels. 18 November 375
265. Engels to Marx. 19 November 377
266. Marx to Engels. 26 November 383
267. Engels to Marx. 29 November 387
268. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 29 November 389
269. Marx to Engels. 4 December 392
270. Engels to Marx. 9 December 394
271. Marx to Engels. 10 December 396
272. Marx to Engels. 12 December 400
273. Engels to Marx. 13 December 400
274. Engels to Marx. 16 December 401
275. Marx to Engels. 17 December 403

Page me43.xii
1870

276. Marx to Hermann Jung. 8 January 406
277. Engels to Marx. 9 January 407
278. Engels to Marx. 19 January 408
279. Marx to Engels. 22 January 410
280. Marx to César De Paepe. 24 January 411
281. Engels to Marx. 25 January 415
282. Marx to Engels. 27 January 416
283. Engels to Marx. 1 February 418

284. Engels to Karl Klein and Friedrich Moll. 8 February 420

Page Break me43.xiii
285. Engels to Marx. 9 February 422
286. Marx to Engels. 10 February 422
287. Engels to Marx. 11 February 425
288. Marx to Engels. 12 February 428
289. Engels to Marx. 17 February 431
290. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 17 February 433
291. Marx to Engels. 19 February 436
292. Marx to Charles Dobson Collet. 19 February 438
293. Marx to Engels. 21 February 440
294. Engels to Marx. 22 February 440
295. Marx to Peter Imandt. 23 February 443
296. Marx to Engels. 5 March 444
297. Marx to Laura and Paul Lafargue. 5 March 446
298. Engels to Marx. 7 March 451
299. Engels to Rudolf Engels. 8 March 452
300. Marx to Engels. 9 March 453
301. Marx to Engels. 10 March 454
302. Engels to Marx. 13 March 455
303. Engels to Jenny Marx (daughter). 17 March 457
304. Marx to Engels. 19 March 458
305. Engels to Marx. 21 March 460
306. Marx to Engels. 24 March 462
307. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 24 March 464
308. Marx to Philippe Coenen. 24 March 464
309. Marx to Engels. 26 March 465
310. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 26 March 466
311. Engels to Marx. 27 March 467
312. Engels to Marx. 28 March 469
313. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 28 March 470
314. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt. 9 April 471
315. Engels to Marx. 13 April 477
316. Marx to Engels. 14 April 478
317. Engels to Marx. 15 April 482
318. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 18 April 485
319. Engels to Marx. 19 April 487
320. Marx to Engels. 19 April 488
321. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 19 April 489
322. Engels to Marx. 21 April 494
323. Marx to Engels. 28 April 495

Page Break me43.xiv
324. Engels to Wilhelm Bracke. 28 April 498
325. Engels to Marx. 29 April 499

326. Marx to Engels. 29 April 501
327. Engels to Marx. 1 May 502
328. Marx to Engels. 7 May 504
329. Engels to Marx. 8 May 508
330. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. About 8 May 510
331. Marx to Engels. 10 May 511
332. Engels to Marx. 11 May 513
333. Marx to Engels. 11 May 515
334. Engels to Marx. 15 May 517
335. Marx to Engels. 16 May 519
336. Engels to Marx. 17 May 521
337. Marx to Engels. 18 May 522
338. Engels to Marx. 19 May 523
339. Marx to His Daughter Jenny. 31 May 524
340. Marx to Victor Le Lubez. 14 June 526
341. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 27 June 527
342. Marx to Engels. 5 July 529
343. Engels to Marx. 6 July 532
344. Marx to Hermann Lopatin. 6 July 535
345. Engels to Marx. 7 July 535
346. Marx to Engels. 8 July 536
347. Marx to Hermann Jung. 14 July 537

Page me43.xiv
APPENDICES

1. Frederick Engels. Confession. Early April 1868 541
2. Arnold Ruge to Steinthal. 25 January 1869 542
3. Jenny Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 15 September 1869 543
4. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 30 October 1869 545
5. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 27 December 1869 547
6. Jenny Marx to Engels. About 17 January 1870 550
7. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 30 January 1870 552
8. Paul Lafargue to Marx. 18 April 1870 555

Page Break me43.xv
9. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig and Gertrud Kugelmann.
8 May 1870 558
10. Jenny Marx to Engels. 12 July 1870 560
11. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 17 July 1870 562

Page me43.xv
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 565
Name Index 662

Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 705
Index of Periodicals 735
Subject Index 745

Page me43.xv
ILLUSTRATIONS

Frederick Engels. 1860s 40-41
Credentials of the General Council of the International written in Friedrich Sorge's name (in Marx's hand) 59
Marx's and Engels' correspondents: Paul Lafargue, Johann Philipp Becker, Friedrich Lessner, Ludwig Kugelmann, Georg Eccarius, Robert Applegarth, Nikolai Danielson 104-105
A sketch of Lizzie Burns by Frederick Engels (after 4 May 1869) 145
Karl Marx with his elder daughter Jenny (end of December 1868-beginning of January 1869) 200-01
Marx's membership card of Land and Labour League (30 November 1869) 376-77
First page of Marx's letter to Laura and Paul Lafargue of 5 March 1870 447
A page from the album of Marx's daughter Jenny with Frederick Engels' 'Confession' 540-41

Page Break me43.xvi
Page Break me43.xvii

Page me43.xvii
TRANSLATORS:

JOHN PEET: Letters 1-100, 102-17, 119-215, 217, 219-20, 222-42, 244-79, 281-307, 309-43, 345-46; Appendices: Letters 1-7, 9-11
MICHAEL SLATTERY: Letters 118, 216, 243; Appendices: Letter 8
SERGEI SYROVATKIN: Letters 101, 218, 221, 280, 308, 344, 347

Page Break me43.xviii
Page Break me43.xix

Preface

Page me43.xix

Volume 43 of the Collected Works of Karl Marx and Frederick Engels contains their correspondence from April 1868 to July 1870. Chronologically it completes the period from 1864 to 1870, an important one in the history of Marxism and the international working-class movement, which laid the basis for Marxism's great influence on the mass working-class movement. The years 1868-1870 witnessed the formation of the first workers' parties in a number of countries and the establishment of socialist principles in the programme documents of the International Working Men's Association (the First International). The Association's activity during these years took place against the background of the growing class struggle, the aggravation of economic and social contradictions in Europe, the upsurge in the national liberation struggle of the Irish people, the crisis of the Second Empire and the imminent military conflict between Bonapartist France and Bismarck's Prussia. The international situation was also made more tense as a result of the bourgeois revolution which began in Spain in 1868.

Page me43.xix

The material in this volume, like that of the preceding one, reflects the remarkably varied activity of Marx and the General Council of the International led by him, activity aimed at strengthening the unity of the working class and educating it in the spirit of proletarian internationalism. The letters illustrate Marx's active participation in all the theoretical discussions which took place in the Council, in drafting the resolutions of the General Council and in preparing the congresses of the International Working Men's Association. They also throw light on Marx's and Engels's work on the drafting and writing of documents for the International in 1868-1870 (published in vols 20 and 21 of the present edition). The correspondence makes clear the great extent to which Engels assisted Marx in leading the International. Marx systematically discussed all important questions with him, kept him informed of the course of discussions in the Council, and of its draft resolutions, and made use of his recommendations. Engels took an active part in working out the International's tactics, explaining it in letters to eminent members of the working-class movement, in particular the Germans (Wilhelm Liebknecht and Wilhelm Bracke) and frequently defended the position of the International Working Men's Association on various questions in the press.

Page Break me43.xx
Page me43.xx

In the history of the International, the 1868-1870 period was a time of ideological and organisational strengthening. The Association's federations and sections were active in many European countries and the USA. In Britain it was the trade unions which provided its mass base. Trade unions as class organisations of the workers also began to take shape in other countries. 'The International Association..., as a result of conditions on the continent, ... is beginning to become a serious power,' Marx wrote in a letter to Engels of 7 July 1868 (see this volume, p. 63). After the adoption, in November 1864, of the 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association' and the 'Provisional Rules of the Association', Marx was faced with the task of drawing up a united theoretical programme for the international working-class movement and substantiating and openly proclaiming the principles of scientific socialism in the International's programme. At the same time he saw clearly that before these principles could be assimilated by the various working-class national organisations a great deal of preparatory work in the press, at congresses and in the local sections would have to be done. 'As the stage of development reached by different sections of the workers in the same country and by the working class in different countries necessarily varies considerably, the actual movement also necessarily expresses itself in very diverse theoretical forms,' Marx wrote to Engels on 5 March 1869. 'The community of action the International Working Men's Association is calling into being, the exchange of ideas by means of the different organs of the sections in all countries and, finally, the direct discussions at the general congresses would also gradually create a common theoretical programme for the general workers' movement' (pp. 235-36). Marx was guided by the fact that the ideological and organisational unity of action of the working class should be formed on the basis of the real class struggle. He saw this as the way to overcome reformism and sectarianism in the working-class movement.

Page Break me43.xxi
Page me43.xxi

The correspondence shows that the Association's success in this direction was due largely to Marx's organisational talent, his ability in the course of everyday struggle to stimulate the class consciousness of the workers and lead them to an understanding of common theoretical and practical tasks. These tactics of Marx's were a sure pledge of the victory of scientific communism over the sectarian trends in the working-class movement.
Page me43.xxi

As the correspondence in this volume shows, in 1868-1870 the General Council of the Association continued as before to give material assistance and moral support to those taking part in the strike movement, which embraced broad sections of the working class in Britain, France, Germany, Belgium and Switzerland (pp. 82, 203-04, and 209-10). During these years international solidarity became a most important factor in the economic struggle of the working class. The organisation of help to strikers promoted the growth of the authority and popularity of the International Working Men's Association among the masses (pp. 8, 350).
Page me43.xxi

As before, Marx participated directly in the preparation of the congresses of the International and had a decisive influence on their work. He wrote the reports of the General Council to the Brussels (September 1868) and Basle (September 1869) congresses. Particularly noteworthy is Marx's letter of 10 September 1868 to Johann Georg Eccarius and Friedrich Lessner, in which he outlined the tactics to be adopted by the General Council's delegates to the Brussels Congress. Here Marx also explains the position of the working class on the question of war in the concrete historical situation at the end of the 1860s in connection with the imminent war between France and Prussia. Noting the insufficient organisation of the workers, Marx nevertheless considered it necessary to state clearly in the resolution to be adopted that 'the congress protests in the name of the working class, and denounces those who instigate war' (p. 94). The campaign for peace was becoming one of the programme aims of the international working-class movement, and its success depended largely on the international unity of the workers.
Page me43.xxi

As the letters show, Marx and Engels expressed their complete satisfaction with the success of the struggle against Proudhonism at the Brussels Congress (p. 102). The adoption by the Congress of resolutions on the need to turn the land, mines, etc., into common property was a convincing victory for socialist principles over the petty-bourgeois views of the Proudhonists. Thus, the inclusion of the demand for the socialist reorganisation of society in the programme of the International became possible only as a result of progressive workers overcoming the petty-bourgeois world outlook. It is no accident that the bourgeois press began panic-stricken talk about the communist nature of the Congress's decisions on property (pp. 101, 107).

Page Break me43.xxii

Page me43.xxii

As can be seen from the correspondence, Marx and Engels linked the demand to abolish private ownership of land very closely with the question of the workers' ally in the countryside, the question of the attitude to small peasant property. It was precisely from this angle that the question was considered at the Basle Congress. On 30 October 1869 Marx wrote to Engels about the need for a differentiated approach by the working class to big and small land ownership (p. 364). In his reply to Marx of 1 November 1869 Engels agreed with his point of view and paid special attention to the heterogeneity of the peasantry, the existence, alongside the big peasant proprietors who exploit day labourers and peasant tenants, of middle and small peasant proprietors. Engels pointed out that the working class should adopt a flexible policy in relation to the poor sections of the peasantry, taking their interests into account (p. 365). These ideas of Engels' were elaborated by him in greater detail in his preface to the second edition of The Peasant War in Germany at the beginning of February 1870 (see present edition, Vol. 21).

Page me43.xxii

A number of letters published in this volume reflect the struggle waged by Marx, Engels and the General Council of the International against the disorganising activity of Bakunin and his supporters in the International, against Bakunin's anarchist views on major questions of the theory and tactics of the workers' movement. Bakuninism, a form of anarchism, expressed the protest of the petty bourgeoisie against capitalist exploitation and ruin. It reflected the mood of petty proprietors unable to find a real way of freeing themselves from capitalist oppression. In their works and letters Marx and Engels roundly criticised the theory and practice of Bakuninism, pointing out the harm which sectarianism caused to the working-class movement.

Page me43.xxii

The International Alliance of Socialist Democracy set up in the autumn of 1868 in Geneva by Bakunin claimed ideological leadership of the International and at the same time an autonomous existence within it. The leaders of the Alliance hoped to use the International to propagate anarchist ideas and establish their influence throughout the working-class movement.

Page Break me43.xxiii

Page me43.xxiii

Bakunin's plans encountered strong opposition from the General Council. After receiving the documents of the Alliance and its request for membership of the International Working Men's Association, Marx deemed it necessary to refuse this request. In a letter to Marx of 18 December 1868 Engels also expressed his strong opposition to allowing the Alliance to join the Association. 'This would be a state within the state,' he wrote to Marx (p. 192). Engels' proposals contained in this letter were included by Marx in the reply compiled by him on behalf of the General Council and entitled The International Working Men's Association and the Alliance of Socialist Democracy in which he defended the principles of setting up workers' organisations which ensured their unity and solidarity. In this 'elaborate document the General Council declared the 'Alliance' to be an instrument of disorganisation, and rejected every connexion with it' (p. 491).

Page me43.xxiii

In reply to the Alliance's repeated request, Marx drew up a circular letter, The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy. This document was actually based on Marx's letter to Engels of 5 March 1869. It contains criticism of the basic precept of the Bakuninist programme — the demand for 'the political, economic and social equalisation of the classes'. Marx showed convincingly that the demand for the 'equalisation of the classes' was equivalent to the bourgeois socialists' slogan about 'harmony of capital and labour' and fundamentally opposed to 'the general tendency of the International Working Men's Association — the complete emancipation of the working classes' (p. 236).
Page me43.xxiii

The history of the General Council's struggle against subsequent attempts by Bakunin and his supporters to disorganise the International Working Men's Association and also lengthy criticism of the main points of Bakunin's programme are to be found in Marx's letter to Lafargue of 19 April 1870. Describing Bakuninism as a sectarian tendency alien to the working-class movement, Marx focuses his criticism mainly on two of Bakunin's demands: the demand to abolish the right of inheritance, which was declared to be the point of departure of social revolution and the only way to abolish private property, and the renunciation of the political activity of the working class.
Page me43.xxiii

The theoretical weakness of Bakunin's recipe, Marx pointed out, lay in the fact that he did not understand the objective link between the basis and the superstructure of capitalist society. 'The whole thing rests on a superannuated idealism, which considers the actual jurisprudence as the basis of our economical state, instead of seeing that our economical state is the basis and source of our jurisprudence!' (p. 490). Marx also stressed the political and tactical harm of Bakunin's thesis. Proclaiming the abolition of the right of inheritance, Marx believed, would inevitably alienate the working class from its ally, the peasantry. This demand would be 'not a serious act, but a foolish menace, rallying the whole peasantry and the whole small middle-class round the reaction' (ibid.).

Page Break me43.xxiv
Page me43.xxiv

Marx also showed how mistaken was Bakunin's demand that the working class should be restrained from taking any part in the political struggle. It misled the workers and prevented the adoption of an independent working-class policy, the growth of class consciousness and the formation of political parties of the working class (pp. 490-91).
Page me43.xxiv

As their correspondence shows, Marx and Engels focused their attention on the destiny of the international working-class movement.
Page me43.xxiv

With the creation of the North German Confederation in 1867 the German working class was faced with the task of closing its ranks and setting up an independent proletarian party. Its ties with the International were of great importance for the ideological and organisational development of the German working-class movement in the latter half of the 1860s. Marx, who performed the duties of the Corresponding Secretary for Germany from the moment of the founding of the International Working Men's Association, was very closely linked with the German workers. Certain aspects of the activity of one of the German sections, that of Solingen, are revealed by Engels' letter of 8 February 1870 to Karl Klein and Friedrich Moll.

Page me43.xxiv

A serious obstacle to educating the German workers in the spirit of scientific communism and proletarian internationalism was Lassalleanism. The correspondence published in this volume enables us to trace the way in which Marx, Engels and their supporters Wilhelm Liebknecht and August Bebel, who led the revolutionary wing of the German working-class movement, opposed the Lassallean programme and tactics. In his letter of 13 October 1868 to the President of the General Association of German Workers, J. B. Schweitzer, Marx gave an objective appraisal of Lassalle's role in the German working-class movement. It was to Lassalle's credit, Marx wrote, that he had revived 'after fifteen years of slumber' an independent working-class movement in Germany free from the influence of the liberal bourgeoisie

Page Break me43.xxv
(p. 132). But Lassalle's essentially reformist programme was an eclectic one. His overestimation of setting up workers' co-operatives with state assistance as a means to the social transformation of society (he viewed universal suffrage as the chief way of attaining this aim), his political orientation towards an alliance with Bismarck's government in the matter of German unification, and the sectarian nature of the organisation created by him, were at variance with the aims of the German working-class movement and laid the foundations for the opportunist trend within it (pp. 132-34).
Page me43.xxv

Marx noted that the leaders of the General Association of German Workers, afraid of losing their influence with the masses, had been forced to make important additions to Lassalle's agitational demands. In particular, the programme adopted at the Hamburg Congress (August 1868) included the following points: 'agitation for complete political freedom, regulation of the working day and international co-operation of the working class', i.e. 'the starting points of any “serious” workers' movement' (see Marx's letter to Engels of 26 August 1868). The questions concerning the economic struggle, which Lassalle ignored (the staging of strikes, organisation of trade unions), were considered at the general German workers' congress in Berlin, called by the leaders of the General Association of German Workers in September 1868. However, only representatives of the Lassallean trade unions were admitted to the Berlin Congress, which testified to a continuation of the former sectarian course. In the above-mentioned letter to Schweitzer of 13 October 1868, and many other letters, Marx criticised him strongly for these tactics which led to a split in the trade-union movement and for anti-democratic methods of leadership, as well as criticising the anti-democratic way he set up trade associations. Marx told Schweitzer that the organisation created by him, 'suitable as it is for secret societies and sect movements, contradicts the nature of the trade unions' (p. 134).
Page me43.xxv

From the letters it is clear how carefully Marx and Engels followed the activity of Bebel and Liebknecht at this time, giving them constant advice and supporting their struggle against the Lassalleans to unite the proletarian masses. While he fully understood the need for co-operation with the petty-bourgeois German People's Party against Prussian reaction, Liebknecht on a number of occasions conceded too much to this party; it was precisely this that provoked the strong criticism of Liebknecht's actions by Marx and Engels (pp. 15-16, 38, 141).
Page me43.xxv
Thanks to tireless agitation by Liebknecht and Bebel there was a shift to the left in the Union of German Workers' Associations, which gradually freed itself from bourgeois influence and drew increasingly close to the International. In a letter to Engels of 29 July 1868 Marx noted with satisfaction that at the forthcoming Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations in Nuremberg in September 1868 it was certain to join the International Working Men's Association and adopt its programme (p. 75). Marx and Engels believed that this success should be consolidated and the prerequisites created for the formation of a proletarian party in Germany by a further break with Lassalleanism and the complete overcoming by the German workers of their ideological dependence on non-proletarian elements alien to them. 'The dissolution of the Lassallean sect and, on the other hand, the severence of the Saxon and South German workers from the leading-strings of the 'People's Party' are the two fundamental conditions for the new formation of a genuine German workers' party,' Marx wrote to Ludwig Kugelmann on 10 July 1869 (p. 313).

Page Break me43.xxvi
Page me43.xxvi
In their correspondence Marx and Engels recorded the rapid 'process of the disintegration of specific Lassalleanism', which speeded up the withdrawal of progressive workers from the General Association of German Workers (pp. 255, 304). A number of former Lassalle's supporters (Wilhelm Bracke, Theodor York and others) agreed to the proposal made by Bebel and Liebknecht to call a general congress of German Social-Democrats. At this Congress, which took place in Eisenach from 7 to 9 August 1869, the Social-Democratic Workers' Party was founded. The creation of an independent workers' party in Germany was a great victory for Marxism and for the ideas of the International in the German working-class movement (see Engels' letter to Wilhelm Bracke of 28 April 1870, pp. 498-99). As Lenin pointed out later, in Eisenach a firm foundation was laid for 'a genuinely Social-Democratic workers' party. And in those days the essential thing was the basis of the party'. (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 19, p. 298.)
Page me43.xxvi
A number of letters published in this volume reflect the desire of Marx and Engels to raise the level of the theoretical awareness of members of the German working-class movement by means of propagating in the press the ideas of scientific communism and their criticism of Lassalleanism.
Page me43.xxvi
This volume also contains material concerning the preparation for publication of a short biography of Marx written by Engels (p. 76) and a new edition of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte and The Peasant War in Germany, which Marx and Engels supplied with new prefaces. Marx had a very high opinion of Engels' Preface to The Peasant War in Germany, which was published in Der Volksstaat:

Page Break me43.xxvii
'Your introduction is very good. I know of nothing that should be altered or added...' (p. 428).
Page me43.xxvii

The letters in this volume show how closely Marx and Engels followed the development of the working-class movement in France on the eve of the Franco-Prussian war and the Paris Commune. The deepening crisis of the Second Empire and the growth of revolutionary activity among the masses helped to extend the influence of the International in France. Within the French working class the characteristic Proudhonist renunciation of active forms of organising workers (economic and political) was gradually being overcome. There was a growing trend towards the emergence of a workers' party. Alarmed by the growing influence of the International in the country, the French government tried to check the revolutionary movement with mass reprisals, and also to provoke premature action by the masses in order to strike a blow at the working class. Marx wrote to Engels on 18 November 1868: 'In France things look very serious... The government wants to force the lads on to the streets so that chassepot and rifled cannon may then laisser “faire merveille”' (p. 162).
Page me43.xxvii

In March and May of 1868 and June-July of 1870 the Bonapartist government organised three trials against the French sections of the International Working Men's Association. Leaders of sections of the Association were arrested and accused of plotting against the Emperor. Noting the provocative character of the victimisation of French members of the International, Marx wrote to his daughter Jenny on 31 May 1870 in connection with the third trial, that the Bonapartist officials were busying themselves in Paris 'to hatch a new complot, in which the “Intern. W. Ass.” is to play the principal part and where I, as ... “wirklicher geheimer Oberhauptchef” must of course put in my appearance' (p. 525). He stressed that all the repressive acts of the Bonapartist government were merely leading to a growth in the International's influence in France. 'Our French members are demonstrating ad oculos the French Government the difference between a political secret society and a genuine workers' association. No sooner had the government jailed all the members of the Paris, Lyons, Rouen, Marseilles etc., committees ... than committees twice as numerous announced themselves in the newspapers as their successors with the most daring and defiant declarations (and, as an added touch, with their private addresses as well). The French Government has finally done what we so long wanted it to do: transform the political question — Empire or Republic — into a question de vie ou de mort for the working class!' (pp. 522-23).

Page Break me43.xxviii
Page me43.xxviii

As leader of the International Marx attached great importance to the consolidation of the truly proletarian elements in France, to their ideological and organisational strengthening. With his direct help and support the official founding of the Paris Federation of the International took place in Paris on 18 April 1870. In his letters to Paul Lafargue of 18 and 19 April 1870 Marx advised the leaders of the Federation to adopt firm class positions, not to allow sectarian tendencies and not to give way to the influence of the various petty-bourgeois Proudhonist and Bakuninist doctrines. 'Il faut éviter les “étiquettes” sectaires dans l'Association Internationale, he wrote. 'Those who interpret best the hidden sense of the class struggle going on before our eyes — the Communists are the last to commit the blunder of affecting or fostering sectarianism' (p. 485).

Page me43.xxviii

Marx's and Engels' letters about France included in this volume are full of hopes for a new outburst of the emancipation struggle of the working class, full of revolutionary optimism based on their belief in the inevitability of a crisis of the Bonapartist regime and major social changes, and full of the awareness that 'the whole historic witches' brew is simmering' (p. 233).
Page me43.xxviii

The correspondence shows the deep and constant interest which Marx and Engels took in the problems of the British working-class movement. In this period, as before, Marx made use of the experience of the mass organisations of the British working class — the trade unions. Under his leadership the General Council of the International maintained constant connections with a number of the largest trade unions in Manchester, Birmingham and Salford, particularly during their struggle for the full legalisation of trade unions and their national unification. Marx linked the successful solution of these questions first and foremost with active struggle by rank-and-file trade-union members. 'The squabble among the authorities of the trades unions, which in fact paralysed them for years, has at last been settled...,' Marx wrote to Engels on 26 September 1868 in connection with the formation of the British Trades Union Congress, when the trade unions 'have finally agreed on joint action' (p. 114).
Page me43.xxviii

Some of the letters also contain criticism of the reformist leaders of the British trade unions who sought to solve social problems by means of reforms and compromises with the ruling classes (pp. 3-4, 253 and 394-95). However, the very course of the class struggle (strikes and the mass movement for electoral reform, etc.), and also the influence of the International, sometimes encouraged British trade unionists in practice to go beyond their socially pacifist and reformist ideas. This gave Marx a basis for collaborating with the trade-union leaders in the International Working Men's Association up to the time of the Paris Commune. Simultaneously Marx fought uncompromisingly against their reformist views, urging them to rely on the masses.

Page Break me43.xxix
Page me43.xxix

However, the revolutionary tendencies which continued to exist in the British mass working-class movement were challenged as before by the strong reformist influence of the trade-union leaders. Explaining the failure of the first working-class candidates at the parliamentary elections in 1868, Marx and Engels pointed above all to the ideological and political dependence of the working class on liberal bourgeois leaders, to the fact that the working class did not have its own political party and its own programme. 'Everywhere the proletariat are the rag, tag and bobtail of the official parties...,' Engels wrote on 18 November 1868 (p. 163). Marx's letters clearly show that the electoral defeat forced some of the London trade-union leaders who were members of the General Council to admit the soundness of his criticism and, to a certain extent, to agree with his view of the need for workers to act independently, to fight against them being turned into an appendage of the liberal bourgeoisie. '...the English too late but unanimously acknowledged that I had forecast literally for them, the ... highly amusing upshot of the elections,' he wrote to Engels on 18 November 1868 (p. 161).

Page me43.xxix

The letters tell the story of the International Working Men's Association's break with the trade-unionist newspaper The Bee-Hive, which had been the official organ of the General Council since 22 November 1864. Under the leadership of bourgeois liberals the newspaper adopted a conciliatory position, ignoring and distorting the documents of the International. On Marx's initiative the General Council discussed the situation with The Bee-Hive in April 1870 and the newspaper ceased to be the International's organ. 'I denounced the paper as being sold to the bourgeois (S. Morley, etc.), mentioned particularly its treatment of our Irish resolutions and debates, etc.,' Marx wrote to Engels on 28 April 1870 (pp. 497-98).
Page me43.xxix

After the Basle Congress of the International the question of the abolition of large-scale land-ownership as an effective means of fighting poverty, a very topical question for Britain, was actively discussed in democratic circles and among the workers. Marx saw this as an opportunity to create in Britain an independent political workers' organisation of a non-trade-union nature, an organisation whose programme would be originally based on the resolutions of the International's congresses. Thus, the Land and Labour

Page Break me43.xxx
League was founded on 27 October 1869. Marx became an active member. Concerning the actual fact of the founding of the League Marx wrote to Engels on 30 October 1869: 'The creation of the Land and Labour League (incidentally, directly inspired by the General Council) should be regarded as an outcome of the Basle Congress; here, the workers' party makes a clean break with the bourgeoisie, nationalisation of land [being] the starting point' (p. 364).
Page me43.xxx

In the second half of the 1860s the growing national liberation movement in Ireland began to have a great influence on British social and political life.
Page me43.xxx

Some of the letters in this volume give a detailed account of the course of the discussion on the Irish question which took place in autumn 1869 in the General Council on Marx's initiative (pp. 371-72, 375-76, 386-87, 392-93) and was connected with the widespread campaign launched at that time in Britain for an amnesty for imprisoned Fenians. Marx was hoping in the course of this discussion to state in a resolution of the General Council the British working class's internationalist attitude to its ally, the fighters for the national liberation of Ireland. Illness prevented him from realising this intention, however. Nevertheless, his point of view was reflected in other General Council documents, in particular, the 'Confidential Communication' (see present edition, Vol. 21) and in letters to active members of the working-class movement in Germany, France and the USA (see this volume, pp. 390-91, 449, 472-76). In these letters Marx elaborated the thesis that the abolition of the Irish people's colonial enslavement and the granting to the Irish themselves of the right to decide their own fate was the most important condition for the emancipation of the working class in Britain. Thus he used the example of Anglo-Irish relations to illustrate a most important thesis in the national colonial question, namely, the community of interests between the participants in the national liberation struggle in the colonies and the workers' movement in the metropolis, and their interaction as a major prerequisite for the emancipation of the working people both in the metropolis and in the colonies.

Page me43.xxx

Ireland, a British colony, Marx explained in his correspondence, was the citadel of British landlordism. The landed aristocracy mercilessly exploited the Irish peasants. The colonial enslavement of Ireland was also an important source of the strength of the British bourgeoisie. Irish workers in Britain were forced to agree to any wage, thereby lowering the standard of living of British workers. This brought about a split in the working class of Great Britain and strengthened the position of the capitalists (pp. 473-75). To destroy the foundations of the rule of the British landed magnates and the financial and industrial bourgeoisie in Ireland would be to weaken the power of these classes in England itself. Consequently the liberation of Ireland would help the English working class considerably to attain its class aims (pp. 473-75). In this connection Marx wrote: 'For a long time I believed it would be possible to overthrow the Irish regime by English working class ascendancy... Deeper study has now convinced me of the opposite. The English working class will never accomplish anything before it has got rid of Ireland. The lever must be applied in Ireland. This is why the Irish question is so important for the social movement in general' (p. 398).

Page Break me43.xxxi

Page me43.xxxi

Marx emphasised that the English working class 'will never be able to do anything decisive here in England before they separate their attitude towards Ireland quite definitely from that of the ruling classes, and not only make common cause with the Irish, but even take the initiative in dissolving the Union established in 1801, and substituting a free federal relationship for it' (p. 390). 'Only by putting forward this demand was Marx really educating the English workers in the spirit of internationalism,' stressed Lenin (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 22, pp. 149-50).

Page me43.xxxi

The internationalist ideas of Marx and Engels on the Irish question were the result of their deep study of the historical past and present condition of this country and the long history of Anglo-Irish relations. Engels wrote: 'Irish history shows what a misfortune it is for one nation to subjugate another' (p. 363).

Page me43.xxxi

The correspondence throws light on Engels' work on his book on Irish history. The Franco-Prussian war which began in the summer of 1870 and the revolution which followed in Paris did not, however, allow him to complete this work.

Page me43.xxxi

A number of letters in this volume show Marx's constant and profound interest in the development of the American working-class movement. As the General Council's Corresponding Secretary for the German language sections in the USA, Marx corresponded with representatives of the German workers in America. He urged them to struggle to overcome sectarianism and strive for the international unity of the American working-class movement and to draw it into the sphere of activity of the International. 'A coalition of the German workers with the Irish workers (naturally, also, with the English and American workers who wish to join in) is the greatest thing you could undertake now. This must be done in the name of the “International”', he wrote to Sigfrid

Page Break me43.xxxii

Meyer and August Vogt on 9 April 1870 (p. 476). Marx wrote with profound regret of the sudden death of William Sylvis, the President of the National Labor Union of the USA, of whose achievements he thought highly, particularly of his struggle to overcome national and local separatism in the American working-class movement (p. 351).

Page me43.xxxii

Some of the letters in this volume also indicate the constant interest with which Marx and Engels followed the growth of the revolutionary movement in Russia. Marx's letter to N. F. Danielson of 7 October, 1868 marked the beginning of regular correspondence between the founders of Marxism and the leaders of the Russian revolutionary democratic movement. During this period Marx was strongly aware of the need for more detailed knowledge of life inside Russia after the abolition of serfdom in 1861. A study of the socio-economic relations of this huge peasant country which had embarked on the path of capitalist development led Marx to feel 'deeply convinced that a ... social revolution ... is irrepressible in Russia and near at hand' (see Marx's letter to Laura and Paul Lafargue of 5 March 1870). Marx was convinced that the victory of a popular revolution and the overthrow of tsarism in Russia would provide a powerful impetus for the development of the revolutionary movement throughout the world. In the concrete historical conditions of the late 1860s Marx regarded the victory of the revolutionary forces in Britain and Russia as one of the main and decisive conditions for the overthrow of capitalist society and the social reorganisation of Europe.

Page me43.xxxii

During this period Marx and Engels also established contact with the Russian revolutionary youth educated on the ideals of the great Russian revolutionary democrats N. G. Chernyshevsky and N. A. Dobrolyubov. Early in 1870 a Russian section of the International was set up in Geneva. Concerning this Marx informed Engels on 12 February 1870: 'In Geneva, by the by, a new colony of exiled Russian students has grown up with a programme proclaiming opposition to pan-Slavism, which should be replaced by the “International”' (p. 430). On 12 March 1870 the members of the Russian section, one of the organisers of which was N. Utin, sent a letter to London announcing its constitution. Inviting Marx to represent their section on the General Council, they declared themselves to be in full agreement with the principles of the International (pp. 480, 493). He readily agreed to their request. 'Enclosed, a letter from the Russian colony in Geneva,' he wrote to Engels on 24 March 1870. 'We have admitted them; I have accepted their commission to be their representative on the General Council, and have also sent them a short reply...' (p. 462).

Page Break me43.xxxiii
Page me43.xxxiii
The propagation and dissemination of Marxism and the overcoming of petty-bourgeois utopias in the working class were greatly assisted by the publication in September 1867 of Volume I of Marx's Capital. After it came out Marx continued to work on its second and third books, which he intended should form Volume II. In spite of his bad health and constant financial difficulties, Marx nevertheless believed that for him 'there could never, from the outset, have been any question of ... taking over a business before ...' the 'book was finished' (p. 185).
Page me43.xxxiii
In the summer of 1868 Marx embarked upon further intensive study in the British Museum library. Resuming his work on Volume II of Capital, he decided first and foremost to rewrite and expand the preliminary draft of the second book (Manuscript I). From the end of 1868 to the middle of 1870 he wrote a new version of the whole of second book of Capital, which he later called Manuscript II. In the Preface to Volume II Engels subsequently evaluated it as 'the only somewhat complete elaboration of Book II...' (see present edition, Vol. 36). It was at this time that Marx made use of The Position of the Working Class in Russia by V. V. Bervi (Flerovsky), published in 1869, for his work on Volume II of Capital. Marx considered Flerovsky's work to be the most important socio-economic study of the condition of the workers after Engels' book The Condition of the Working-Class in England (pp. 423-24). In this connection Marx began 'to study Russian hammer and tongs' (p. 551) and by the beginning of February 1870 had made considerable progress in the language.
Page me43.xxxiii
Alongside his work on Book II of Capital, Marx paid considerable attention during this period to the study of problems relating to Book III. In his letter to Engels of 30 April 1868 Marx outlined his plan for the structure and main contents of the whole of Book III (pp. 21-25).
Page me43.xxxiii
To be well-equipped with facts Marx continued to study world economic literature. Thus, in his letter of 7 October 1868 to N. F. Danielson he wrote that he could not prepare Volume II of Capital for the press 'until certain official enquêtes, instituted during last year (and 1866) in France, the United States and England, have been completed or published' (p. 123).
Page me43.xxxiii
Marx made an intensive study of new material on agricultural development and agrarian relations in a number of countries. He sent various requests for the necessary literature to his comrades and his daughter Laura, who had moved to Paris after her marriage (pp. 9 and 97). Thus, Marx requested De Paepe to let him have the titles of the main works on the structure of land holding in Belgium and Belgian agriculture (p. 412). He wrote to Sigfrid Meyer, one of the leaders of the German and American working-class movement, on 4 July 1868 asking him to send him American newspapers from time to time. 'In particular, it would be of great value to me,' Marx wrote, 'if you could dig up some anti-bourgeois material about land-ownership and agrarian relations in the United States.' Marx needed this material, inter alia, for his polemic with the American economist H. Ch. Carey on the question of land rent. Engels' letters of 9 and 19 November to Marx and Marx's letter to Engels of 26 November 1869 contain a critical examination of Carey's mistaken ideas, and also point out errors in Ricardo's theory of land rent. Marx and Engels substantiate their views on the emergence of land rent, quoting convincing examples and facts in support of their theory.

Page Break me43.xxxiv

Page me43.xxxiv

As can be seen from Marx's letters, the agrarian system in Russia was of considerable interest to him in his treatment of the genesis of capitalist land rent in Book III of Capital. In the middle of 1868 Marx embarked upon a careful study of Russian sources, in the belief that in 'dealing with the land question, it has become essential to study Russian land-owning relationships from primary sources' (Marx to Kugelmann, 27 June 1870).

Page me43.xxxiv

Describing Marx's studies of a large number of Russian sources in the 1870s, Engels noted later in the Preface to Volume III of Capital that according to Marx's plan Russia 'was to play the same role in the part dealing with rent in land that England played in Book I in connection with industrial wage-labour' (see present edition, Vol. 37).

Page me43.xxxiv

As well as continuing to elaborate economic theory Marx and Engels devoted considerable attention in this period to circulating Volume I of Capital and propagating its ideas. Some of the letters in this volume refer to the steps taken by Marx and Engels to popularise the work. Engels rendered great service in this respect. Thus, besides some reviews of the volume for German newspapers, in 1868 Engels also wrote a review for the English bourgeois journal The Fortnightly Review (see present edition, Vol. 20).

Page me43.xxxiv

In a number of letters Marx and Engels touch upon reviews and comments by bourgeois economists on Volume I of Capital. Here, alongside a critical appraisal of the views expressed by the authors of these reviews ('specialist mandarins', as Marx so aptly puts it) (p. 213), they set out in clear and concise form the most important theses of Marx's economic theory (see, for example, Marx's letter to Ludwig Kugelmann of 11 July 1868).

Page Break me43.xxxv

Page me43.xxxv

The main aim behind the efforts by Marx and Engels to disseminate the ideas of Capital was to equip the working class with a scientific revolutionary economic theory in its struggle to free itself from capitalist exploitation. Linking the elaboration of an economic theory very closely with practical aims, Marx attached great importance to the propagation of his views to a working-class audience. He delivered a lecture on wages for German workers in London, about which he wrote to Engels on 23 May 1868 (see p. 40). Engels constantly showed genuine concern for the fate of the working-class movement and the practical application of the conclusions of Marx's political economy. He intended to write a popular brochure on the contents of Volume I of Capital for the workers (see Engels' letter to Marx of 16 September 1868, this volume, p. 100).

Page me43.xxxv

The correspondence of Marx and Engels in this period also illustrates the great importance they attached to the publication of Capital in different languages (French, Russian and English). In October 1869 Charles Keller, a member of the Paris section of the First International, began work on a translation of Capital (pp. 399, 546), greatly assisted by Marx (p. 359). The work was not completed, however. One of the leaders of revolutionary Chartism, George Harney, a companion-in-arms and friend of Marx and Engels, offered his services for the publication of Volume I of Capital in English in New York (p. 276).
Page me43.xxxv

Marx was delighted to hear that his book was being translated into Russian (p. 130), and wrote on 7 October 1868 to one of the translators, N. F. Danielson. It was the first translation of Capital, and appeared in 1872.
Page me43.xxxv

The letters indicate the truly encyclopaedic knowledge possessed by Marx and Engels, the breadth and variety of their scholarly interests. During this period they devoted considerable attention to philosophical problems. In a number of letters Marx criticises Eugen Dühring and F. A. Lange for their deprecatory attitude to Hegelian dialectics.
Page me43.xxxv

In October-November 1868 Marx and Engels read and discussed in detail the manuscript of the book entitled Das Wesen der menschlichen Kopfarbeit by the German leather-worker Joseph Dietzgen. They stressed Dietzgen's considerable learning and his independent discovery of the laws of the materialist theory of knowledge. On 28 October 1868, in direct response to the impression which the manuscript had made upon him, Marx wrote:

Page Break me43.xxxvi
'He is one of the most gifted workers I know' (p. 149).
Page me43.xxxvi

The correspondence also bears witness to the constant interest which Marx and Engels took in the development of the natural sciences, physics, chemistry and biology, and their study of the most important discoveries in these areas (pp. 33 and 246). As can be seen from Marx's letter to Engels of 18 November 1868, Marx was interested in the problem of the origin of life on earth in connection with research by the Viennese Professor Gustav Jäger and the German scientist Ernst Haeckel, followers of Darwin's theory of evolution (p. 162).
Page me43.xxxvi

In his letter to Kugelmann of 27 June 1870, Marx sharply criticised the book On the Workers' Question by one of the so-called social Darwinists, F. A. Lange, who automatically transferred the law of the struggle for existence discovered by Darwin in the animal and plant world to the history of mankind. There is also sharp criticism of 'social Darwinism' in Marx's letter to Paul and Laura Lafargue of 15 February 1869.
Page me43.xxxvi

As before, linguistics remained the special sphere of Engels' scientific interests. In spring 1869 he resumed his studies of the Friesian and Old Irish languages (pp. 247, 257, 410, 501, 514, 517-18).
Page me43.xxxvi
The correspondence published in this volume contains extensive biographical material on Marx and Engels and gives a clear picture of their everyday life and struggle, their process of creation and their practical activity during this period, when they were in effect leading the mass international working-class movement. The letters fully reflect the growing friendship between the two men over the years, their constant collaboration both in the elaboration of theory and in leading the workers' revolutionary struggle, and their touching affection for each other. For Marx Engels was the person with whom he shared his most intimate thoughts and new scientific ideas. Engels' attachment to Marx extended to the members of his family, especially his daughters for whom he showed a truly paternal concern.
Page me43.xxxvi
As the correspondence shows, Marx and Engels devoted considerable attention to the training and ideological education of progressive fighters from the working class. In the General Council and the administrative bodies of the International in the various countries Marx sought to create a firm backbone of proletarian revolutionaries. Under the direct influence of Marx, with the assistance of veterans of the working-class movement who had been members of the Communist League and taken part in the Revolution of 1848-49, such as Johann Becker, Johann Georg

Page Break me43.xxxvii
Eccarius, Friedrich Lessner, Karl Pfänder, Wilhelm Liebknecht and Victor Schily, young members of the working-class movement, such as César de Paepe, Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt, were introduced to scientific socialism. The letters published show how patiently and determinedly Marx and Engels sought to educate their comrades-in-arms, helping them with advice, responding to their requests and criticising their errors and shortcomings.
Page me43.xxxvii
An example of the considerate and comradely attitude of Marx and Engels to their friends and comrades-in-arms is the help which they gave to Eugene Dupont, a General Council member, when he was in great need after his wife died and he lost his job (p. 481). Marx also gave financial assistance to the German worker Eccarius (pp. 284-85).
Page me43.xxxvii
The correspondence presents us with vivid portraits of Marx's and Engels' comrades-in-arms and friends, active members of the working-class movement, such as Friedrich Lessner, Wilhelm Liebknecht and Ernest Jones.
Page me43.xxxvii
It also shows us the new generation of revolutionaries — Paul Lafargue; the French ethnographer Gustave Flourens, a man of unusual bravery and courage; the Russian naturalist and revolutionary Hermann Lopatin, whom Marx considered as 'a very wide-awake critical brain' (p. 530), and the young August Bebel. Marx and Engels spoke with affection and respect of the German chemist and Social-Democrat Carl Schorlemmer; of the English lawyer, member of the International and future translator of Volume I of Capital, Samuel Moore; the English geologist Dakyns, who joined the socialist movement under the influence of Marx and Engels; the German doctor Ludwig Kugelmann and others.

Page me43.xxxvii
In addition to the correspondence there is Engels' 'Confession' (answers to questions on a semi-humorous questionnaire) which reveals his personal merits, his warm sense of humour and his well-balanced personality.

* * *
Page me43.xxxvii
Volume 43 contains 347 letters by Marx and Engels. The majority were written in German, 21 in English, 6 in French and several in a combination of two or three languages. Most of the letters are published in English for the first time; 125 letters have been published in English before, 87 of these in part only. All previous publications are indicated in the notes. Engels' letter of 26 November 1868 to W. Holzenhauer is published here for the first time. The Appendices contain 11 letters and documents, which are published in English for the first time.

Page Break me43.xxxviii
Page me43.xxxviii
During work on the text and other sections of this volume the dating of certain letters was established more accurately as a result of additional research.
Page me43.xxxviii
The text of earlier English publications has been checked and verified against the originals. Obvious errors have been silently corrected. Abbreviated proper names, geographical names and individual words are given in full, except when these abbreviations were made for conspiratorial reasons or cannot be deciphered. Defects in the manuscript are indicated in the footnotes, and passages where the text is lost or illegible are indicated by dots. If the context makes it possible to provide a hypothetical reconstruction of the lost or illegible passages, this is given in square brackets. Passages deleted by the authors are reproduced at the bottom of the page in cases where there is a significant discrepancy. The special nature of certain letters which were drafts or fragments reproduced in other documents is indicated either in the text itself or in the notes.
Page me43.xxxviii
Foreign words and expressions in the text of the letters are retained in the form in which they were used by the authors, with a translation where necessary in the footnotes and italicised (if they were underlined by the authors they are italicised and spaced out).
Page me43.xxxviii
English words and expressions used by Marx and Engels in texts originally written in German, French or other languages are printed in small caps. Whole passages originally written in English are marked by asterisks. Some of the words are now somewhat archaic or have undergone changes in usage. For example, the term 'nigger', which has acquired generally — but especially in the USA — a more profane and unacceptable status than it had in Europe during the 19th century.

Page me43.xxxviii
The numbering of the notes relating to one and the same fact or event in the texts of different letters is duplicated.
Page me43.xxxviii
The volume was compiled, the texts of the letters and notes prepared by Irina Shikanyan (letters from April 1868 to April 1869 inclusive) and Alexander Vatutin (letters from May 1869 to July 1870). The Preface was written by Irina Shikanyan and Alexander Vatutin. The volume was edited by Velta Pospelova. The name index and the index of periodicals were prepared by Alexander Vatutin, the index of quoted and mentioned literature jointly by Irina Shikanyan and Alexander Vatutin (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).
Page me43.xxxviii
The translations were done by John Peet (Lawrence & Wishart),

Page Break me43.xxxix
Michael Slattery and Sergei Syrovatkin (Progress Publishers) and edited by Eric Hobsbawm, Nicholas Jacobs (Lawrence & Wishart) and Glenys Ann Kozlov, Jane Sayer, Svetlana Gerasimenko, Yelena Kalinina, Natalia Karmanova, Mzia Pitskhelauri, Viktor Schnittke (Progress Publishers), and Norire Ter-Akopyan, scientific editor (USSR Academy of Sciences).
Page me43.xxxix
The volume was prepared for the press by Yelena Vorotnikova and Nadezhda Rudenko (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me43.xl
Page Break me43.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
April 1868-July 1870

Page Break 2
Page Break me43.3

1868

1
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†1
IN HANOVER
Page me43.3
London, 6 April 1868

Dear Kugelmann,

The young pair†a were registered at a civil ceremony last Thursday†b (since a church wedding is not legally necessary here), and have left for France to celebrate their HONEYMOON. They send their best greetings to you and Mrs Gertrud.
Page me43.3
Coppel paid a call on me here. Unfortunately, I could not receive him, since I was wrapped in cataplasms. Engels was here during the wedding, and left again yesterday.†2 In response to his urgings, I have decided to take the arsenic cure, since an end must at last be put to this state of affairs. One of his friends in Manchester†c was completely cured by this method in a relatively short time. I had certain prejudices against arsenic after reading in the Gazette médicale about a discussion among French doctors.†d
Page me43.3
The Irish question predominates here just now. It has naturally only been exploited by Gladstone and consorts to take over the helm again, and particularly to have an ELECTORAL CRY†e at the next elections, which will be based on HOUSEHOLD SUFFRAGE.†3 At the moment, this turn of affairs is detrimental to the workers' party, because the intriguers among the workers, such as Odger, Potter, etc., who want to get into the next Parliament, have now found a new excuse for attaching themselves to the bourgeois liberals.†4
Page me43.3
This is, however, only a penalty that England — and thus, also, the English working class — is paying for the great centuries-old crime against Ireland. IN THE LONG RUN it will benefit the English working class itself. You see, the ENGLISH ESTABLISHED CHURCH IN IRELAND — OR WHAT THEY USE TO CALL HERE THE IRISH CHURCH — is the religious bulwark of English LANDLORDISM IN IRELAND and, at the same time, the outpost of the Established Church in England itself (I am speaking here of the Established Church as a landowner). The overthrow of the Established Church in Ireland would mean its fall in England, and the two will be followed (in their downfall) by LANDLORDISM, first in Ireland and then in England. And I have always been convinced that the social revolution must begin seriously from the ground, i.e. from landed property.

Page Break me43.4
Page me43.4
In addition, the whole thing will have the very useful result that, once the IRISH CHURCH is dead, the PROTESTANT IRISH TENANTS in the province of Ulster will make common cause with the Catholic TENANTS and their movement in the 3 other provinces of Ireland, whereas so far LANDLORDISM has been able to exploit this religious antagonism.
Page me43.4
The day before yesterday I received a letter from Freiligrath (wedding cards were, of course, sent to him), containing the following curious sentence.†5 — It will perhaps amuse you more, however, if I enclose the letter itself, which I now do. But you must return it to me. So that you understand the letter properly, the following: In Berlin, shortly before my book†a came out, there appeared Zwölf Streiter der Revolution von G. Struve und Gustav Rasch. In this publication, Freiligrath is acclaimed as 'one' of the 12 apostles and, at the same time, it is proved in great detail that he never was a communist, in fact that it was only through TOO GREAT A CONDESCENSION that he became associated with such monsters as Marx, Engels, Wolff, etc.†b Since Wolff was slandered here too, I wrote to Freiligrath for an explanation, particularly since I knew that G. Rasch (a scoundrel) headed his begging committee in Berlin.†6 He replied very dryly, and with evasive philistine cunning. Later I sent him my book without, however, as was formerly our mutual custom, signing it. He appears to have taken the HINT.

Page me43.4
My best regards to your dear wife and Fränzchen. If at all feasible, I shall come UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES and pay you a visit.

Yours
K. Marx

Page Break me43.5
Page me43.5
Apropos. Borkheim will visit you IN A FEW DAYS. Don't forget that, despite all comradeship with him, I always observe reserve!
Page me43.5
Liebknecht's paper†a is much too narrow-mindedly 'southern'.†b (He has not enough dialectic to strike out on two sides at once.)

Page me43.5
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 6, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

2
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.5
Manchester, 10 April 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed letters from Wilhelmchen†7 and Siebel, please return the former to me. Poor Siebel seems to be having a bad time indeed. I shall see him in about 10 days.
Page me43.5
Further, the draft of an advertisement for Meissner†8; what do you think of it? So far it has not been pressing, since he could not advertise because of the Easter Fair anyway.
Page me43.5
Yesterday I sent you Nos. 4 to 14 of Wilhelmchen's rag.†c It is dreadfully stupid. One who was in England for such a long time and who has your book and mine†d should really know how to put the material supplied to him by the workers to other use than simply reproducing it at full length. Some anti-federalist passages with us in mind are rather comical in connection with the whole federalist-Struveist nature of the sheet.†e†9

Page me43.5
When I got back here†2 I found such a pile of work waiting that I could only see Gumpert yesterday. Enclosed the prescription: on the first 4-5 days you should take it only twice daily, then 3 times, always 1½-2 hours after a meal. And also live well and get plenty of exercise. Gumpert laughs at your assertion that arsenic makes you stupid.

Page Break me43.6
Page me43.6
The vote on parliamentary freedom of speech is explained by the fact that Bismarck had stated previously that for Prussia, for the sake of peace, he would concede this point. So it was not even, as we thought, proof of the courage of the philistines.
Page me43.6
What Wilhelm says about the American treaty is of course nonsense from beginning to end.†10
Page me43.6
Unfortunately, I have a death to announce to Tussy. The poor hedgehog ate a round hole in his blanket, put his head through it, and got so stuck in it that he was found strangled yesterday morning. Peace to his ashes, and BETTER LUCK TO THE NEXT ONE.
Page me43.6
During the 3 days of my absence, the fellows in Liverpool swindled cotton up by no less than 3d., from 10d. to 13d. Hence so much work. Luckily the holidays intervene, which I am using to complete the extracts for the Beesly article.†11 I am starting right away, and thus close for today. Best greetings to your wife and the girls.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.6
The wedding was celebrated here with great festivity: the dogs had green collars, a TEA PARTY for 6 children, Lafargue's glass basin served as a punch-bowl, and the poor hedgehog was made drunk for the last time.

Page me43.6
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.7

3
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.7
London, 11 April 1868

DEAR FRED,

D'abord†a the GENERAL CONDOLATIONS, and especially from Tussychen, about the departed RIGHT HONOURABLE HEDGEHOG.

Page me43.7

It is a good thing that the opium prescription arrived today.†b The affairs under my arm have become very vexatious since your departure.†2

Page me43.7

From the young couple,†c who are now in Paris, the most satisfying news.†12 They are obviously very happy. Lafargue has sent me Horn's pamphlet†d and another one on French finance. The second is twaddle, the first I shall send you soon. I wrote to Lafargue†e that the fact that he finds time 'AT SUCH A CRITICAL JUNCTURE' to think of me and send me printed matter goes a long way to prove 'THAT HE MUST BELONG TO A BETTER THAN THE EUROPEAN RACE'.†f WE ARE ALWAYS 'CHAFFING' AT EACH OTHER.

Page me43.7

I have read the Histoire du Crédit mobilier.†g As far as the real essence of the matter is concerned, I really wrote better stuff on it years ago in the Tribune.†13 The author knows the business. He is himself a Paris banker. But he has in fact nothing to draw on except the official material, provided by the Crédit itself in its reports, and the facts noted in the stock market quotations. The secret material could only be obtained by legal steps. What astonishes me particularly is this: the actual TRICKS all reduce themselves to stock-jobbing on the exchange,†h and in this department au fond†i there has been nothing new since Law,†14 whatever the disguise. Neither on this side of the Channel, nor on the other. The interesting aspect of these things is the practice, not the theory.

Page me43.7

I enclose a letter from Kugelmann (à renvoyer†j). After you had left, I wrote to him.†k But since writing is a nuisance for me at the moment because of my left arm, I enclosed Freiligrath's letter to me,†5 so that Kugelmann should receive the SUFFICIENT quantum of written matter. I told him also, in reply to a previous enquiry, that I would visit him in any case for A FEW DAYS. However, he 'erred' about the date. It is not so close.

Page Break me43.8

Page me43.8

Do not forget to send me the Schweitzer†15 BY NEXT POST.

Page me43.8

From The Times of today (telegraphic dispatch)†a you will see that we have won a complete victory in Geneva, working day reduced from 12 to 11 hours, wages increased by 10%.†16 The matter went like this. Scarcely had you left when a deputy arrived from Geneva.†17 This FACT, that the workers sent an envoy to London, to the fearsome secret tribunal, was decisive, as earlier in the STRIKE of the bronze workers of Paris.†18 The MASTERS believe in the power and the fighting fund in London. This should show the' workers in England and on the continent the power they would possess in us if they really put at our disposal the appropriate means, etc.

Page me43.8
Enclosed returned Wilhelm,†7 Siebel. Your draft†b is not written in your EASYGOING style. Today I have particular pain in my left arm. As soon as this has passed, I shall return your draft with my probable emendations.
Page me43.8
The children send their best greetings. In fact, if only for their sake, I wish you lived in London instead of Manchester.
Page me43.8
MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.8
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.9

4
MARX TO LAURA AND PAUL LAFARGUE†19
IN PARIS
Page me43.9
London, 11 April 1868

My dear Cacadou,
You know I am a slow hand at writing, but this time the shortcomings of my left arm are responsible for the sins of my right hand. Under those circumstances I missed the more my secretary who might have addressed to himself, on my behalf, the most charming letters.†20
Page me43.9
I am happy to see from your scribblings (you excuse the 'term', Borkheim with his 'scribaille' is still dinning my ears†21) and those of your helpmate†12 that you are thoroughly enjoying your Brautfahrt,†a and that all the outer circumstances, spring and sun and air and Paris jollities, conjure in your favour. As to that said helpmate, his sending books to me, at such a critical juncture, speaks volumes for the innate kindness of the 'young man'. This simple fact would go far to prove that he must belong to a better than the European race.†b By the by, as we have just touched the chapter of books, you might pay a visit to Guillaumin (14, rue Richelieu)†22 and get his (economical) bulletins de librairie for 1866-1868. You might also wend your steps to the Librairie Internationale (15, Boulevard Montmartre) and ask for their catalogues (1865-68). Of course, if you get these desiderata, you will not send them, but bring them on your return to this dreary place.

Page me43.9

I am expecting, from Meissner, 3 copies of my book.†c On their arrival, I shall send two to Caesar de Paepe, one for himself, the other for Altmayer.†d Meanwhile, if you should find the time to see Schily (that is to say if you write to him 4, rue St. Quentin to come and see you) be so kind to ask him what has become of the 3 copies, 1 I sent for Jacquelard,†e 1 for Taine, 1 for Réclus. If Jacquelard was not to be found, you might give his copy to Altmayer, since Meissner is very slow in forwarding the copies. In that case, however, I ought to be informed. You'll certainly fancy, my dear child, that I am very fond of books, because I trouble you with them at so unseasonable a time. But you would be quite mistaken. I am a machine, condemned to devour them and, then, throw them, in a changed form, on the dunghill of history. A rather dreary task, too, but still better than that of Gladstone's, who is obliged, at a day's notice, to work himself into states of mind', yclept 'earnestness'.

Page Break me43.10

Page me43.10

We feel here rather somewhat lonely. First you disappeared together with the meridional 'silent man', and then Engels left us.†2 In lieu of an 'excitement' we had the Lormiers yesterday evening. I played with Louis two parties of chess and allowed him to win one. What do you think the strange Caliban boy told me, in the most solemn manner of the world, on taking leave? 'Sans rancune, j'espère!'†a

Page me43.10

And now, my dear Cacadou, Adio.

Old Nick

Page me43.10

Dear Lafargue,†23

Do you not find that staying in Paris WITH A YOUNG LOVABLE WIFE is much pleasanter than with politics? When your father†b arrives in Paris, give him my best regards, and, in particular, you and Laura should not forget to make his stay so PLEASANT as possible. Given the state of his eyes, he needs diversion, and nothing will divert him more than that the young pair should devote to him completely the short time they have with the old gentleman. I am writing to you in German so that you may, or may not, as you wish, inform the private secretary†c of the contents of these lines. And now, with heartiest greetings.

Yours faithfully,
K. M.

Page me43.10
First published in Annali dell'Istituto Giangiacomo Feltrinelli, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.11

5
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.11
Manchester, 17 April 1868

Dear Moor,

Horn†a 'awaits receipt', as commercial style puts it.

Page me43.11

It is certain that there is theoretically nothing of interest and nothing new to be said about agiotage. It all comes down to fraud under false pretences and nothing can change here except the manner. The secret material about the history of the Crédit mobilier†13 can, by the way, and probably will, reach the light of day by itself on the fall of the Empire, even if there is no intervention by the courts.

Page me43.11

I had already seen about the glorious victory in Geneva†16 in the newspapers on Saturday†b morning. The business is all the better since the stupid philistines had made out the International Association to be the real motive force of the affair, and it now receives all the glory. You will have seen that the intermediaries in the business were Police Prefect Camperio and the noble and serious Amand Goegg. This will have instilled new respect for our power in Mr Amand. Incidentally, I should like to know how long — following this business — they will leave the International Association unmolested in Germany.

Page me43.11

BY THE BY, the workers' affairs are proceeding famously. First Belgium, then Geneva, now Bologna†24 — I am only surprised that the International has not yet been blamed for this — it keeps going everywhere.

Page me43.11

You will have received the Schweitzer.†15

Page me43.11

Tomorrow I shall send you — I have forgotten it at the office — 1. a new copy of Wilhelmchen's rag,†c 2. Eichhoff's further jeremiad,†25 3. a section of an editorial declaration from the Zukunft about the curious article ad vocem†d Vogt, from which you will see what shits they are.

Page me43.11

Making extracts from your book is, with my limited time, giving me more work than I expected, car enfin†e if this job is to be done, it must be done properly and not just for this special purpose.†26

Page Break me43.12
Next week I expect to have more time, there is a pause in business, and if I can get away between 4 and 5 in the evening, this gives the whole evening a different character for working.
Page me43.12
Kugelmann returned enclosed.†27 I was very interested in his uterine polyp removed by splitting and compressed sponge; he will have to tell me about it personally in more detail in good time. But the attempt to turn Virchow into a communist with the aid of this polyp looks very much like an extra-uterine pregnancy. Even if Virchow had knowledge and theoretical interest in politics or political economy, this upright citizen is after all much too deeply engaged.†28
Page me43.12
Incidentally, you will come here before you leave for the continent, cela est entendu,†a and bring Tussy with you as promised.
Page me43.12
Your arm must surely have settled down by now? The fact that Kugelmann recommends arsenic will certainly have allayed some of your anxieties. Schorlemmer took a lot of it in his time, and never noted the slightest ill effects.
Page me43.12
Heartiest greetings to the ladies.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.12
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.12
London, 17 April 1868

Dear Kugelmann,
You must regard me as a great criminal for taking so long to reply to the friendly letter from your dear wife†b and yourself.†27 The situation is simply this. The old sanguinary herpes (to express myself poetically) attacked me with such tactical dexterity that I could not adopt the posture necessary for writing. I could, of course, have dictated, but you know that in such cases one always hopes to be ALL RIGHT next morning. Thus the delay, and thus, also, the brevity of these lines.

Page Break me43.13
Page me43.13
It is still quite uncertain when I shall be travelling to Germany for a few days; in any case, it won't be soon. At all events, I shall come at a time when I know that you will not be away.
Page me43.13
You have done me a great service with your lines to Virchow, though I doubt whether he will have the patience and the time to immerse himself in a subject out of his line.†a I know it cost me a great effort to read his Cellularpathologie in Manchester, particularly because of the way it was written.
Page me43.13
The issues of Social-Demokrat hitherto concerned with my book are: No. 10 (22 Jan. 1868), No. 11 (24 Jan.), No. 12 (26 Jan.), No. 14 (31 Jan.), No. 15 (2 Feb.), No. 24 (23 Feb.), No. 25 (26 Feb.), No. 30 (8 March),†15 and another number, which I don't have at the moment, but which contains only extracts.†b
Page me43.13
With heartiest greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen

Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.13
Meyer†c paid me a visit here.

Page me43.13
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 7, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

7
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.13
[London,] 18 April 1868

DEAR FRED,

I have been lying fallow until today and could not leave the house. My arm was so inflamed, and there was so much suppuration, that I could wear nothing on that arm and movement was upsetting, too. The suppuration has stopped completely this morning. The wounds themselves heal rapidly. I shall go out again today. With the help of arsenic I now hope that this disgusting muck is finished.

Page Break me43.14
Page me43.14
The Viennese affairs enclosed were sent by Fox, who is also responsible for the pencil marks.
Page me43.14
On Tuesday†a I have to pay £5 for school and £1 5s. for gymnastic classes for Tussy. If it is possible for you to send this by return, I would appreciate it very much, for the sake of the child.
Page me43.14
The departure is still a good way off. Kugelmann jumps to conclusions too rapidly. I only wrote to him that I would be coming SOME TIME OR OTHER.†b
Page me43.14
Becker's appeal,†30 which is enclosed, demonstrates again the great lack of discipline. We stopped the collections in the London UNIONS, and the Parisians did the same, because it is only now that we are informed that further money is needed. If they had telegraphed from Geneva on the same day, it would have been ALL RIGHT.
Page me43.14
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.14
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

8
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.14
Manchester, 20 April 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed two fivers to satisfy the schoolmasters.
Page me43.14

Just like the Geneva people to dawdle. It is a naïve presumption too that, now that the STRIKE†16 is over, the world should help the Genevans to pay the debts contracted during the STRIKE. I have never seen anything like that in this country. Here they only ask for support as long as the STRIKE lasts.

Page Break me43.15
Page me43.15
The Vienna paper†a appears to contribute to a deliberate confusion created by the industrial interests, which is obviously grafted on to the spontaneous naive-helpless confusion. In the end, you always encounter a distinctly bourgeois tendency — accordingly, the paper no longer reports the workers' meetings, but instructs them.
Page me43.15
With best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.15
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

9
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.15
[London,] 21 April 1868

DEAR FRED,
BEST THANKS FOR THE £10.
Page me43.15
Yesterday I went out for a walk again, and now here comes Jennychen to drive me out again on the pretext that you entrusted her with supervision over me.
Page me43.15
My arm is in order again, there is just the healing itch. For some years now I have made the curious observation that my urine, which in my normal state deposits chalk or whatever it is, becomes quite clear when I have carbuncles. And in fact the mineral deposit is now appearing again. Perhaps Gumpert knows something about it.
Page me43.15
Apropos. Wilhelm is now sending me his rag, too.†b How loyal it is of the man to call my Herr Vogt a 'deserving book' instead of saying that there are many bad jokes in it.†31 And then: the Prussians persecute Hanoverians who were 'loyal to their king'! Then: regarding Edgar Bauer on the paying of the South German press, that, if things go on like that, 'all' men of honour (country squires, priests, democrats, the Elector of Hesse,†a etc.) will combine against Prussia.†32 POOR Wilhelm!

Page Break me43.16
Page me43.16
Blind has again made one of his great coups. With the aid of a servile message he has squeezed a reply from Juárez, which is in the Courrier français today.†b It is time this clown got a bang on the head for his buffoonery.
Page me43.16
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.16
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

10
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.16
London, 22 April 1868

Dear FRED,
I have resumed work, and it's going well. Only I have to limit the working time, for after ABOUT 3 hours my head starts to buzz and prickle. I shall now tell you briefly a 'morsel' which occurred to me when I was just glancing at the part of my manuscript about the rate of profit.†c It provides a simple solution to one of the most difficult questions. The question is how it can happen that as the value of money, or gold, falls, the rate of profit rises; and that it falls with the rise in the value of money.
Page me43.16
Let us assume the value of money falls by 1/10. Then, other things remaining equal, the price of commodities rises by 1/10.
Page me43.16
If, on the other hand, the value of money rises by 1/10, then the price of commodities falls by 1/10, other things remaining equal.
Page me43.16

Given a fall in the value of money, the price of labour, unless it rises in the same proportion, falls, the rate of surplus value rises, and therefore, ALL OTHER THINGS REMAINING THE SAME, the rate of profit rises too. This rise of the latter — as long as the DESCENDANT OSCILLATION in the value of money continues — is due solely to the fall in wages, and this fall is due to the fact that the change in wages is slow to match the change in the value of money. (As was the case at the end of the 16th and in the 17th century.) Conversely, if, with the value of money rising, wages do not fall in the same proportion, the rate of surplus value falls, and therefore, caeteris paribus,†a the rate of profit.

Page Break me43.17
Page me43.17
These two movements, the rise in the rate of profit when money falls in value, and its fall when the value of money rises, are, under these circumstances, both due solely to the FACT that the price of labour has not yet been adjusted to the new value of money. These phenomena (and how they are explained has long been known) cease after the adjustment of the price of labour to the value of money.
Page me43.17
This is where the difficulty begins. The so-called theorists say: As soon as the price of labour corresponds to the new value of money, e.g. has risen with the falling value of money, both profit and wages are expressed in so much more money. Their relation thus remains the same. Therefore there can be no change in the rate of profit. The specialists who concern themselves with the history of prices reply to this with FACTS. Their explanations are mere phrases.
Page me43.17
The whole difficulty arises from confusing the rate of surplus value with the rate of profit. Let us assume that the rate of surplus value remains the same, e.g. 100%. Then, if the value of money falls by 1/10, wages of £100 (say for 100 men) rise to 110 and surplus value likewise to 110. The same total quantity of labour, formerly expressed in 200, is now expressed in £220. If the price of labour is adjusted to the value of money, the rate of surplus value can neither rise nor fall as the result of any change in the value of money. Assume, however, that the elements, or some elements, of the constant part of capital were to fall in value owing to the growing productivity of labour, whose products they are. If the fall in their value is greater than the fall in the value of money, their price will fall, despite the drop in the value of money. If the fall in their value only corresponded to the fall in the value of money, then their price would remain unchanged. Let us assume the latter case.
Page me43.17
For instance, in a certain branch of industry the capital of 500 is composed of 400c + 100v, so with a rate of surplus value of 100% we have: 400c + 100v | + 100m = 100/500 = 20% rate of profit†a (in Volume II I intend to use 400c, etc., instead of c/400, etc., as it is less complicated. Qu'en penses tu?†b). If the value of money falls by 1/10, then wages rise to 110 and ditto surplus value. If the money price of the constant capital remains the same because the value of its component parts has fallen by 1/10 as a result of the increased productivity of labour, then now: 400c + 100v | + 110m or 110/510 = 21 29/50% rate of profit, which would therefore have risen by ABOUT 1 ½%, while the rate of surplus value, 110m/110v, remains as before 100%.

Page Break me43.18

Page me43.18

The rise in the rate of profit would be greater if the value of the constant capital sank faster than the value of money, and less if it sank more slowly. It will continue as long as any fall in the value of the constant capital is taking place, i.e. as long as the same quantity of means of production does not cost £440 where it formerly cost £400.
Page me43.18

And it is an historical fact, and can be specially demonstrated from the years 1850-1860, that the productivity of labour, especially in industry proper, receives an impetus from the falling value of money, the mere inflation of money prices, and the general international rush for the increased quantity of money.
Page me43.18

The opposite case can be developed in an analogous manner.
Page me43.18

The extent to which, in one case, the rise of the rate of profit with the sinking value of money, and, in the other, the sinking of the rate of profit with the rising value of money, affect the general rate of profit will depend partly upon the relative size of the particular branch of production in which the change takes place, and partly upon the length of the change, for the rise and fall of the rate of profit in particular branches of industry takes time to infect the other branches. If the oscillation lasts a relatively short time, it remains local.
Page me43.18

I am sending you the Courrier†c and Nain jaune which Lafargue sent me.

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.18
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.19

11
ENGELS TO MARX†34
IN LONDON
Page me43.19
Manchester, 26 April 1868

Dear Moor,

The business with the rate of profit and the value of money is very neat and very clear. The only thing that is unclear to me is how you can assume as rate of profit, for m does not flow solely into the pockets of the industrialist who produces it, but has to be shared with the merchant, etc.; unless you are taking the whole branch of business together here, therefore disregarding how m is divided up between manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, etc. In general, I am very keen to see your exposition of this point.

Page me43.19

Wilhelmchen, as you will have seen, is now also singing the praises of the honourable Jakobus Venedey! And they resemble one another just like one jackass resembles another. I have had enough of it now, I shall not write to him any more. Let him make a fool of himself on his own account.

Page me43.19

To write 400c+100v+100m is quite acceptable, just as is £400 3s. 4d.

Page me43.19

You have seen that the comfortable relationship between the honest Bismarck and his Reichstagers is beginning to come to an end; the latter want to make the officials of the debt administration legally answerable, and Otto the Great†a cannot stand that, naturally. He'll not build them no fleet for that.†35

Page me43.19

To give full expression to the hangover affecting handsome William†b because he confiscated the lands and property of his cousin Georg,†c†36 the Prussian commission to administer King Georg's property is composed of General von Kotze and Regierungsrat Sauerhering (literally).†d

Page me43.19

It is very nice of Jenny that she dutifully drags you out to go for walks. I hope that she does not allow herself to be scared off by your physical indolence disguised as your need to work; in the present fine weather it would be shameful if you stayed at home. I hope that no traces of new carbuncles have shown themselves.

Page Break me43.20

Page me43.20

In the Customs Parliament†37 old Rothschild sits right near to Wilhelmchen, and behind them the bunch of jackasses called the 'People's Party'.†38

Page me43.20

Could you not collect some of the mineral stuff and send it here for analysis?†a I have not yet seen Gumpert.

Page me43.20

The recent WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE MEETING here†39 was of course attended by the whole Borchardt family, male and female (only Mama Borchardt absent). Gumpert has a nice row with Borchardt. Borchardt had accused him of an infringement NOT ONLY OF MEDICAL PROFESSIONAL ETIQUETTE, BUT OF ALL ETHICS (because in the house of friends, where Borchardt is the doctor and a child had died of scarlet fever, Gumpert had expressed his surprise and astonishment that Borchardt should have allowed the other children and their friends to view the body — Borchardt has 'grounds' for declaring scarlet fever non-contagious) — and Gumpert has brought the case before the medical society here, whereby he has little to gain, however, since the committee consists of nothing but jackasses, a fact which he should, of course, have considered earlier.

Page me43.20
When will the young married couple†b return, and have you found an apartment?†40
Page me43.20
Best greetings to all.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.20
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

12
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.20
London, 30 April 1868

DEAR FRED,
For the CASE under discussion it is immaterial whether m (the surplus value) is quantitatively> or < than the surplus value created in the given branch of production itself. E.g., if = 20%, and this becomes, owing to a fall in the value of money by 1/10, = (assuming that the value of the constant capital sinks), it is immaterial if the capitalist producer pockets only half of the surplus value which he himself produces. For the rate of profit for him then = > than the former . I retain m here in order to show qualitatively in the expression itself where the profit comes from.

Page Break me43.21
Page me43.21
But it is proper that you should know the method by which the rate of profit is developed. I shall therefore give you the process in the most general outline. In Book II,†41 as you know, the process of circulation of capital is presented on the basis of the premisses developed in Book I. I.e. the new determinations of form which arise from the process of circulation, such as fixed and circulating capital, turnover of capital, etc. Finally, in Book I we content ourselves with the assumption that when, in the valorisation process,†a £100 becomes £110, it finds the elements into which it is converted anew already in existence in the market. But now we investigate the conditions under which these elements are to be found in existence, that is to say, the social intertwining of the different capitals, of parts of capital and of REVENUE (= m).

Page me43.21

In Book III†41 we then come to the conversion of surplus value into its different forms and separate component parts.
Page me43.21

I. Profit is for us, for the time being, only another name for or another category of surplus value. As, owing to the form of wages, the whole of labour appears to be paid for, the unpaid part of it seems necessarily to come not from labour but from capital, and not from the variable part of capital but from the total capital. As a result, surplus value assumes the form of profit, without there being any quantitative difference between the one and the other. It is only an illusory manifestation of surplus value.
Page me43.21

Further, the part of capital consumed in the production of a commodity (the capital, constant and variable, advanced for its production, minus the utilised but not consumed part of fixed capital) now appears as the cost price of the commodity, since for the capitalist that part of the value of the commodity that it costs him is its cost price, while the unpaid labour contained in the commodity does not enter into its cost price, from his point of view. The surplus value = profit now appears as the excess of the selling price of the commodity over its cost price. Let us call the value of the commodity W and its cost price K; then W= K + m, therefore W - m = K, therefore W > K. This new category, cost price, is very necessary for the details of the later analysis. It is evident from the outset that the capitalist can sell a commodity at a profit below its value (as long as he sells it above its cost price), and this is the fundamental law for comprehending the equalisations effected by competition.

Page Break me43.22
Page me43.22

Therefore, while profit is at first only formally different from surplus value, the rate of profit is, by contrast, at once really different from the rate of surplus value, for in one case we have and in the other , from which it follows from the outset, since , that the rate of profit < than the rate of surplus value, unless c = 0.
Page me43.22

In view of what has been developed in Book II, it follows, however, that we cannot compute the rate of profit on the commodity product of any period we select, e.g. that of a week, but that denotes here the surplus value produced during the year in relation to the capital advanced during the year (as distinct from the capital turned over). Therefore, stands here for the annual rate of profit.
Page me43.22

Then we shall first examine how variations in the turnover of capital (partly depending on the relation of the circulating to the fixed portions of capital, partly on the number of times the circulating capital turns over in a year, etc., etc.) modify the rate of profit while the rate of surplus value remains the same.
Page me43.22

Now, taking the turnover as given, and as the annual rate of profit, we examine how the latter can change, independently of changes in the rate of surplus value, and even of its total amount.

Page me43.22

Since m, the total amount of surplus value, = the rate of surplus value multiplied by the variable capital, then, if we call the rate of surplus value r†a and the rate of profit p', p' = . Here we have the 4 quantities p', r, v, c, with any 3 of which we can work, always seeking the 4th as unknown. This covers all possible cases of movements in the rate of profit, in so far as they are distinct from the movements in the rate of surplus value and, TO A CERTAIN EXTENT, even in its total amount. This has, of course, hitherto been inexplicable to everybody.

Page Break me43.23

Page me43.23

The laws thus found — very important, e.g., for understanding how the price of the raw material influences the rate of profit — hold good no matter how the surplus value is later divided among the producer, etc. This can only change the form of appearance. Moreover, they remain directly applicable if is treated as the relation of the socially produced surplus value to the social capital.

Page me43.23

II. What were treated in I as movements, whether of capital in a particular branch of production or of social capital — movements changing its composition, etc. — are now conceived as differences of the various masses of capital invested in the different branches of production.

Page me43.23

Then it turns out that, assuming the rate of surplus value, i.e. the exploitation of labour, as equal, the production of value and therefore the production of surplus value and therefore the rate of profit are different in different branches of production. But from these varying rates of profit a mean or general rate of profit is formed by competition. This rate of profit, expressed absolutely, can be nothing but the surplus value produced (annually) by the capitalist class in relation to the total of social capital advanced. E.g., if the social capital = 400c + 100v, and the surplus value annually produced by it = 100m, the composition of the social capital = 80c + 20v, and that of the product (in percentages) = 80c + 20v | + 20m = 20% rate of profit. This is the general rate of profit.

Page me43.23

What the competition among the various masses of capital — invested in different spheres of production and differently composed — is striving for is capitalist communism, namely that the mass of capital employed in each sphere of production should get a fractional part of the total surplus value proportionate to the part of the total social capital that it forms.

Page me43.23

This can only be achieved if in each sphere of production (assuming as above that the total capital = 80c + 20v and the social rate of profit =) the annual commodity product is sold at cost price + 20% profit on the value of the capital advanced (it is immaterial how much of the advanced fixed capital enters into the annual cost price or not). But this means that the price determination of the commodities must deviate from their values.

Page Break me43.24
Only in those branches of production where the percentual composition of capital is 80c + 20v will the price K (cost price) + 20% on the capital advanced coincide with the value of the commodities. Where the composition is higher (e.g. 90c + 10v), the price is above their value; where the composition is lower (e.g. 70c + 30v), the price is below their value.
Page me43.24
The price thus equalised, which divides up the social surplus value equally among the various masses of capital in proportion to their sizes, is the price of production of commodities, the centre around which the oscillation of the market prices moves.
Page me43.24
Those branches of production which constitute a natural monopoly are exempted from this equalisation process, even if their rate of profit is higher than the social rate. This is important later for the development of rent.†a
Page me43.24
In this chapter,†42 there must be further developed the various causes of equalisation of the various capital investments, which appear to the vulgar conception as so many sources of profit.
Page me43.24
Also to be developed: the changed form of manifestation that the previously developed and still valid laws of value and surplus value assume now, after the transformation of values into prices of production.
Page me43.24
III. The tendency of the rate of profit to fall as society progresses. This already follows from what was developed in Book I on the change in the composition of capital with the development of the social productive power.†43 This is one of the greatest triumphs over the pons asini†b of all previous political economy.
Page me43.24
IV. Until now we have only dealt with productive capital.†44 Now there enters modification through merchant capital.
Page me43.24
According to our previous assumption the productive capital of society = 500 (millions or billions, n'importe†c). And the formula was 400c + 100v | + 100m. The general rate of profit, p', = 20%. Now let the merchant capital = 100.
Page me43.24
So, the 100m has now to be calculated on 600 instead of 500. The general rate of profit is thus reduced from 20% to 16 2/3% The price of production (for the sake of simplicity we will assume here that all of the 400c, i.e. the whole fixed capital, enters into the cost price of the annual output of commodities) now = 583 1/3. The merchant sells at 600 and therefore realises, if we ignore the fixed portion of his capital, 16 2/3% on his 100, as much as the productive capitalists; or, in other words, he appropriates 1/6 of the social surplus value. The commodities — en masse and on a social scale — are sold at their value. His £100 (apart from the fixed portion) only serve him as circulating money capital. Whatever the merchant swallows over and above that, he gets either simply by trickery, or by speculation on the oscillation of commodity prices, or, in the case of the actual retailer, as wages for labour — wretched unproductive labour that it is — in the form of profit.

Page Break me43.25
Page me43.25
V. We have now reduced profit to the form in which it appears in practice, according to our assumptions 16 2/3%. Next comes the division of this profit into entrepreneur's gain and interest. Interest-bearing capital. The credit system.
Page me43.25
VI. Transformation of surplus profit into rent.
Page me43.25
VII. At last we have arrived at the forms of manifestation which serve as the starting point in the vulgar conception: rent, coming from the land; profit (interest), from capital; wages, from labour. But from our standpoint things now look different. The apparent movement is explained. Furthermore, A. Smith's nonsense, which has become the main pillar of all political economy hitherto, the contention that the price of the commodity consists of those three revenues, i.e. only of variable capital (wages) and surplus value (rent, profit (interest)), is overthrown.†45 The entire movement in this apparent form. Finally, since those 3 items (wages, rent, profit (interest)) constitute the sources of income of the 3 classes of landowners, capitalists and wage labourers, we have the class struggle, as the conclusion in which the movement and disintegration of the whole shit resolves itself.

Page me43.25
Our young couple†a back again since last week, very love-SICK. Apartment for them near Primrose Hill, where they moved in this evening.
Page me43.25
Enclosed letters from Kugelmann, etc. I have sent Schily what he wanted,†46 but not in the childish way he requested. In a few days I shall be 50. As that Prussian lieutenant said to you: '20 years of service and still lieutenant', I can say: half a century on my shoulders, and still a pauper. How right my mother was: 'If only Karell had made capital instead of etc.'
Page me43.25
Salut.
Your
K. Marx

Page me43.25
Of carbuncles only a very small trace on the right thigh, but will probably vanish without trace.

Page Break me43.26

Page me43.26

Ernest Jones has made a fool of himself by his lukewarm and nisi prius†a way of defending Burke.†47 Burke has at least won a victory in forcing the old jackass Bramwell to abandon the hypocrisy of TEMPER, and allowing his mean dog's soul to rampage free of carrière.†b

Page me43.26

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

13

MARX TO ENGELS†48

IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.26

London, 4 May 1868

DEAR FRED,

This morning I received enclosed letter and cutting from Schweitzer. Since he addresses himself to me as workers' representative of one of the most industrial districts, I must naturally reply.†49

Page me43.26

My view is that the Germans can stand a reduction of the protective tariff on pig iron and that the manufacturers of other articles are also exaggerating their howls. This view is based upon a comparison of the English and German exports to neutral markets. Enclosed, by way of example, a note on exports to Belgium.†c

Page me43.26

At the same time, in my opinion, the point is to exploit this question in the interests of the party, without, however, procuring any new reliefs to the English.

Page me43.26

My proposal would therefore be:

1. No reduction of tariffs before a parliamentary enquête†d into the state of the German iron-mining production and iron manufacture. This enquête should not, however, be confined, as the bourgeois gentlemen desire, simply to chambers of commerce and 'experts' but should, at the same time, include the workers'

Page Break me43.27

†a

Click here to view object in scalable window

Page Break me43.28
conditions in these branches; all the more so since Messrs manufacturers are 'demanding' the protective tariffs solely 'for the protection' of the workers, and have in addition discovered that 'the value of iron' consists only 'of wages and freight'.
Page me43.28
2. No reduction of tariffs before an enquête into how the railways misuse their monopoly, and before their freight (and passenger) tariffs are controlled by legal regulations.
Page me43.28
I would like your view immediately, and also immediate return of the enclosures.
Page me43.28
Very nice that your home-town chamber of commerce should bemoan the growing power and menace of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me43.28
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.28
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931. Marx's note appended to the letter was first published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

14
ENGELS TO MARX†48
IN LONDON
Page me43.28
Manchester, 6 May 1868

Dear Moor,
I congratulate ANYHOW on the half saeculum,†a from which, incidentally, I am also only a short span away. Indeed, what juvenile enthusiasts we were 25 years ago when we boasted that by this time we would long have been beheaded.
Page me43.28
Enclosed returning Kugelmann, Büchner, Schily, Reclus,†46 Schweitzer†49 and the Elberfelder Zeitung, and additionally something on your book which Siebel's wife sent me†50; he appears to be a century no longer capable of writing, is in Barmen and going to Godesberg.

Page Break me43.29

Page me43.29

The profit story is very nice,†a but I shall have to think it over further in order to grasp the portée†b in all its aspects.

Page me43.29

Ad vocem†c Schweitzer. The rascal is utilising this business simply as an inducement to make us take the bait again. Of course, it does not matter that you give him information this time, but principiis obsta†d! Don't let the fellow catch your little finger lest he make an attempt on your whole hand. On the subject itself, I have no doubt at all that the German iron industry could dispense with the protective tariff, a majore,†e therefore, could also stand the reduction of the tariff on pig iron from 7½ groschen to 5 groschen per hundredweight (from 15s. to 10s. per ton), and the other reductions likewise. The export of iron is increasing every year, and not only to Belgium. This would bring ruin to a few ironworks established during the wave of speculation in the 50s, situated a long way from the coal and otherwise based on insufficient, poor pits. But these are for the most part already kaputt, and the vicinity of a railway would be more use to them than any protective tariff if they should ever become viable again. (There is one like this in Engelskirchen, 500 paces from my brothers' factory — the coal has to be brought from Siegburg, 2½ German miles,†f by wagon — no wonder it lies idle. This sort of works cries out for protective tariff, and is cited as proof that it is necessary.)

Page me43.29

The Elberfeld-Barmen Chamber of Commerce is the nastiest protective tariff institution there is, and notorious for it. Even though the main industry of the district is aimed at export. However, there are always a lot of trades in decline there, hence the lamentations.

Page me43.29

For the rest, your plan about the enquête†g is rather good, and I like it very much. As far as railways go, the freight charges in Germany are lower than elsewhere, and, since goods traffic is the main thing in Germany, this could not be otherwise. They could be pushed still lower, and the governments have the power to do it, but what is most necessary is greater centralisation and equalisation in administration and freight charges, and constitutionally this is a matter for the Reichstag. By and large, the iron-chaps have no cause to yell about high freights.

Page Break me43.30

Page me43.30

Liebknecht has sent me the trades regulations, on which I have promised him some critical comments.†51 Progress compared to the regression under Frederick William IV, but what bureaucratic confusion. I am sending you the stuff for the fun of it.

Page me43.30

Yesterday the inevitable Leibel Choras arrived and prevented me writing. I asked him about the persecution of Jews in Moldavia; he wailed a bit, but it does not appear to be all that bad: we have to bear it, we Jews do not have the power; he would like to be Russian or Austrian, but it does not occur to him to leave. The Hohenzollern is a stupid boy, and the government in the hands of the 'clerks' (boyars in reduced circumstances playing at bureaucracy) and they squeeze the Jews so.

Page me43.30

Many greetings to your wife, the girls and Monsieur and Madame Lafargue.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.30
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

15
MARX TO ENGELS†48
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.30
[London,] 7 May 1868

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS for your marginal notes. I have included them in the letter to Schweitzer as far as necessary. My letter is so coolly phrased that it will not be 'shown around'.†49
Page me43.30

Now I would like to ask you for information on another subject. However, you can postpone this if it should interrupt the work for the Fortnightly, which is urgent."
Page me43.30

The point is that I would like to link up with Volume I in the examples given in Volume II.†41
Page me43.30

In order to use the data on your factory given on p. 186†52 — completely sufficient to illustrate the rate of surplus value — for the rate of profit, the following would be necessary:

Page Break me43.31
Page me43.31

1. The missing data on the capital advanced for the factory building and the percentage of the SINKING FUND for this. Ditto WAREHOUSE. In both cases, the RENT should be given, if paid. Also the office costs and costs of staff for the WAREHOUSE.
Page me43.31

With regard to the steam engine, no data is given on the percentage at which the weekly wear and tear is calculated, and therefore the capital advanced for the steam engine is not visible either.
Page me43.31

2. Now the real question. How do you calculate the turnover of the circulating part of capital (i.e. raw material, auxiliary materials, wages)? How great then is the circulating capital advanced? I would like to receive this answered in detail, even illustrated, particularly the turnover calculation of the circulating capital advanced.
Page me43.31

Tomorrow I shall send you the crazy Urquhart for your amusement.
Page me43.31

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.31
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

16
MARX TO JOSEPH DIETZGEN†53
IN PETERSBURG
Page me43.31
[London, 9 May 1868]

...When I have cast off the burden of political economy, I shall write a 'Dialectic'. The true laws of dialectics are already contained in Hegel, though in a mystical form. What is needed is to strip away this form...

Page me43.31
First published in Der Volksstaat, Nr. 3, 9 January 1876

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.32

17
ENGELS TO MARX†48
IN LONDON
Page me43.32
Manchester, 10 May 1868

Dear Moor,

You received the information about the factory at that time direct from Henry Ermen — it is G. Ermen's spinning mill, with which I have nothing to do, and about which the young Ermens have been specifically forbidden to tell me anything. If you write to Henry Ermen, Bridgewater Mill, Pendlebury (private), he will probably tell you what you want to know. But you will have to tell him that he should give you the data as they were in 1860, since much has been built since then. I would say, approximately, that a factory building for 10,000 spindles, including cost of land, will come to £4,000 à £5,000 (in the given case a bit less is probably to be assumed, since it was only a one-storey SHED, and land up there, unless containing coal, costs almost nothing). Rate of wear and tear on the building (£500-600 to be subtracted as ground price) 7½% including interest. At £3,600 therefore £18 ground rent (à 3%) + (7½% on 3,000 =) 225 = £243 rent for the building.

Page me43.32

WAREHOUSE does not exist for this factory, since G. Ermen only sells through or to us or through an agent to other people, and pays 2% commission on the turnover for this. Assuming the turnover à £13,000, we get £260 as substitute for WAREHOUSE costs.

Page me43.32

As far as calculating the turnover of the circulating capital is concerned, I do not really know what you mean by this. We calculate only the total turnover, that is the total of annual sales. If I understand rightly, you want to know how many times a year the circulating part of capital is turned over, or, in other words, how much circulating capital is in business. This, however, differs in almost all cases. A prosperous owner of a spinning mill has almost always (that is except when he is expanding, or immediately afterwards) some spare capital that he invests in some other way, but uses, when the chance offers itself, to buy cotton cheaply, etc. Or he uses credit, if he can and it is worthwhile. It may be assumed that a mill-owner who invests £10,000 in machines (apart from the building, which he can and mostly will rent) can get along with 1/5 à 1/4 of the fixed capital in circulating capital; that is for £10,000 fixed capital put into machines, £2,000 à £2,500 circulating capital will do. This is the average assumption here.

Page Break me43.33

Page me43.33

Here I leave out of account the steam engines. On this score H. Ermen has obviously provided you, from memory, a completely absurd story. Weekly wear and tear of the steam engine £20, that is £1,040 a year! At a 12½% rate the steam engine will cost £8,320, ce qui est absurde.†a The entire machine cannot have cost more than £1,500 à £2,000, and that G. Ermen wanted to write off his whole machine in 2 years is just like him, but not businesslike. You can ask him about this, too. But I fear that Monsieur Gottfried†b has long taken these old account books into his own custody, and then Henry Ermen will not be able to help you either.

Page me43.33

Schorlemmer will probably visit you on Wednesday or Thursday.†c The Royal Society†54 has invited him to read his PAPER on the boiling points of CnH2n + 2' on Thursday and to take part in the debate.†d Since the main chemist there is Frankland, whom Schorlemmer has attacked in all his works, this is a great triumph, and a few more invitations like this WILL BE THE MAKING OF HIM. I am very happy for the fellow, who has only stayed at his rather pitiful position here because it places at his disposal the laboratory and thus the means of doing theoretical work. He is really one of the best fellows I have got to know for a long time; he is so totally free of prejudices this freedom appears to be almost spontaneous, but must in fact be based upon much thought. At the same time, the notable modesty. Incidentally, he has again made a handsome discovery. On pages 264 and 297 of his book you will find that propyl alcohol and isopropyl alcohol are two isomeric combinations.†e It had hitherto been impossible to obtain pure propyl alcohol, so the Russians had already claimed that it did not exist, there was only isopropyl alcohol. Last autumn at the meeting of natural scientists Schorlemmer replied to them: by next autumn he would have obtained it, and he has really done it.

Page me43.33

This week I do at last have no more meetings and similar calls upon my time, and will be able to get down to the Fortnightly.†11 But I still do not know how to start. It is clear to me that I will begin with the conversion of money into capital, but how is still quite unclear. What do you think about this?

Page Break me43.34
Page me43.34

With best greetings,
Your
F. E.

Page me43.34
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

18
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.34
Manchester, 15 May 1868

Dear Moor,

You will probably have heard that Siebel died on the 9th inst. My mother wrote me that shortly before he had told his wife she should go to bed, which she did; suddenly she could no longer hear his breath, jumped up and found him dead. I am sending you 2 notices from his wife, one of which I ask you to send to Freiligrath.
Page me43.34

Enclosed 6 prints of Lupus'†a photograph.
Page me43.34
Further something about Kobes'†b present activities. Have you read about the Ebergenyi trial?†55 Chorinsky's letters are in fact unparalleled. One can see that the Austrians are still awaiting their 1789. I shall send you the relevant Zukunft this evening. The Ebergenyi woman is said to receive masses of visitors in her 'convict prison' with a cigarette in her mouth and as merry as a cricket.
Page me43.34
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.34
Apropos. The articles in the Fortnightly are all signed. If this is the rule, it would be most unfortunate, since then it would be easy to see through the business. In any case, I would have to know if the article must be signed, for this would change the formulation a lot, and know right away for I have reached the stage where I can start.†a What is your answer to these questions?

Page Break me43.35

Page me43.35
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

19
MARX TO ENGELS†56
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.35
[London,] 16 May 1868

DEAR FRED,
My silence for a week has perhaps already been explained to you by Schorlemmer.†b Two carbuncles on the scrotum would perhaps have made even Sulla peevish. How greatly that man, despite his more-than-Palmerstonian TEMPER, was affected by his mythical but anyway lousy sickness, is shown by the fact that just 10 days before his death he had the decurion seized in a neighbouring city, and 1 day before he himself croaked had him strangled in his own house.†57
Page me43.35

In addition, I have all sorts of trouble. For example, on the 28th of this month a bill for £15 due at the butcher's, etc. To my urgent petitions to Holland no answer.†58
Page me43.35

Finally I had cajoled myself with the illusion that by this time I would have a 2nd edition,†c and thus see money for the first. But I had added up the bill without the host — I do not mean the Volkswirt,†d but the Germans in general.
Page me43.35

POOR Siebel! In a way he had himself prepared his premature death. But WITH ALL THAT he was a good fellow. We are unlucky — Daniels, Wolff, Schramm, Weydemeyer, Siebel, Weerth! Not to speak of the living dead.
Page me43.35

As regards The Fortnightly Review,†11 I had long considered this point, and had long arranged with Lafargue (the actual negotiator with Beesly) that you should appear under any old nom de guerre, which you must let us know. Beesly himself will not be informed who the man is. And it is all the same to him. Apart from other considerations, the impact in Germany would be greatly lessened if the stuff appeared under your name.

Page Break me43.36
Page me43.36

In your last letter†a you made a mistake on one point. The notes used on p. 186†52 you yourself wrote late one evening in my notebook, which still exists.†59 The notes of the Russian Ermen,†b on the other hand, referred mainly to technical things.
Page me43.36

Incidentally, the main thing for me was to ascertain the magnitude of the advanced circulating capital, i.e. advanced in raw material, etc., and wages, as against the circulating capital turned over. I have enough STATEMENTS, part of them from manufacturers, handed in either to the COMMISSIONERS†c or to private economists. But everywhere only the annual accounts. The devil of the thing is that there is a wide divergence in political economy between what is of practical interest and what is theoretically necessary, so that one cannot even find the necessary material, as in other sciences.
Page me43.36

I have received cuttings from Berlin newspapers from Eichhoff and sent him cuttings from here in RETURN. We have also exchanged two letters.†60 But now the enclosed shows, what Borkheim half guessed on his last visit to Berlin, that Eichhoff has let himself into concessions quoad†d Stieber. Probably from sheer stupidity. For this reason he has taken up political economy as a neutral field.†61 For the rest, it appears that he feels uneasy, and he told Borkheim that, after swotting up properly on economy, he will exchange Berlin for Vienna, IN ABOUT 6 MONTHS.
Page me43.36

In the Essener Zeitung a pompous denunciation of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me43.36

Did you read the warlike SPEECH by Failly when taking over the command of Châlons? I have once again worked through the finances of the Empire. And only one thing appears clear to me, that Badinguet†e must make war.
Page me43.36
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.36
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.37

20
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.37
Manchester, 22 May 1868

Dear Moor,
Schorlemmer had told me about one carbuncle, but two a tempo,†a and in addition in that place where, it is true, everything exists in pairs, c'est vraiment trop.†b I hope they have gone, and that the arsenic will hold back further ones.
Page me43.37
I shall send you the money for the bill.
Page me43.37
Have you heard anything from Meissner? If not, the time would have come to ask how sales have been going; on this point he owes you an accounting after the Easter Fair as associé in the business. Then you could also refer to the advertisement asked for by Meissner,†8 the man is still waiting for a reply from me.
Page me43.37
The Fortnightly article†11 will thus be written as though by an Englishman — that is how I understand you. Incidentally, I still cannot get past the beginning. It is damned difficult to make clear the dialectical method to the English who read the reviews, and I surely cannot approach the crowd with the equations C — M — C, etc.
Page me43.37
Did my last letter give you the data you need?†c If not, formulate your questions and I shall see what can be done.
Page me43.37
Schorlemmer says that you spoke of coming here soon, which would be very desirable. The change of air will do you more good than anything else. This week and the beginning of next our house is in a revolution because of CLEANING AND WHITEWASHING, but if you can come at the end of next week, that would be very nice; you know that in the Whit week I always have plenty of time to spare. Don't forget that you promised to bring Tussy with you.

Page me43.37

Eichhoff has finally terminated his lectures on crises.†25 As was to be expected, the mortgage crisis in Berlin was the core and finale of the whole thing. But the poor devil appears finally to have bored even the reporter of the Zukunft so much that he only reported on it quite briefly and incomprehensibly.†d

Page Break me43.38
Page me43.38

Liebknecht has this time committed great folly. First he has completely identified himself with the South German federalists, ultramontanes, etc., by signing their protest,†62 and always votes with them, and in addition has so lost all fruitfulness in his speechifying that the impertinent Lasker could tell him — and rightly so — that he was making the same speech once again which he had delivered for weeks past in all popular meetings.†63 The cunning Schweitzer, who confines himself simply to workers' representation, has quite overshadowed him.
Page me43.38

The rag,†a too, as you will have seen, is achieving the impossible: it is getting even more stupid.
Page me43.38

Enclosed Borkheim returned.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.38
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

21
MARX TO ENGELS†48
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.38
London, 23 May 1868

DEAR FRED,

It appears to me that you are on the wrong track with your fear of presenting such simple formulas as M — C — M, etc.†11 to the English review philistines. On the contrary. If you were forced, as I am, to read the economic articles of Messrs Lalor, Herbert Spencer, Macleod, etc., in The Westminster Review, etc., you would see that all of them are fed up with the economic trivialities — and know their readers are fed up, too — so they try to give their scribblings some flavour through PSEUDOPHILOSOPHICAL or PSEUDOSCIENTIFIC SLANG. The pseudocharacter in no way makes the writing (content = 0) easy to understand. On the contrary. The trick lies in so mystifying the reader and causing him to rack his brain, that he may finally be relieved to discover that these HARD WORDS are only fancy dress for loci communes.†a Add to this that the readers of the Fortnightly and The Westminster Review flatter themselves that they are the LONGEST HEADS OF ENGLAND (let alone the rest of the world, naturally). Even apart from that, if you had seen what MR James Hutchinson Stirling dares to present to the public as The Secret of Hegel,†b not only in books but also in REVIEWS, — Hegel himself would not understand it — you would realise — Mr J. H. Stirling is regarded as a great thinker — that you are really being too timid. People demand something new, new in form and content.

Page Break me43.39

Page me43.39

Since you want to start with Chapter II†64 (you must not, however, forget to draw the reader's attention somewhere to the fact that in Chapter I he will find a new treatment of that value and money stuff†65) the following should, in my opinion, be used for the beginning, naturally in the form agreeable to you.

Page me43.39

In his investigations into CURRENCY Th. Tooke†c underlines that money in its function as capital flows back to its starting point (REFLUX OF MONEY TO ITS POINT OF ISSUE), but in its function simply as CURRENCY does not flow back. This distinction, noted by Sir James Steuart,†d among others, long before Tooke, serves the latter simply for a polemic against what the preachers of the CURRENCY PRINCIPLE claim to be the influence the issue of credit money (BANKNOTES, etc.) exercises upon commodity prices. Our author, however, makes this peculiar form of circulation of money which functions as capital ('SERVE IN THE FUNCTION OF CAPITAL', A. Smith†e) the starting point for his investigation into the nature of capital itself, and in the first place for an answer to the question: How is money, this independent form of value, converted into capital? ('CONVERSION INTO CAPITAL' the official expression.)

Page me43.39

All sorts of businessmen, says Turgot, 'ont cela de commun qu'ils achètent pour vendre... leurs achats sont une avance qui leur rentre'.†f Buying to sell, this is in fact the transaction in which money functions as capital, and which conditions its reflux to ITS POINT OF ISSUE, in distinction to selling to buy, where it need only function as CURRENCY. The differing sequence of the acts of SELLING and BUYING imposes upon money two different circulation movements. What is hidden behind this is the different behaviour of the value itself expressed in money form. To illustrate this, the author gives the following formulas, etc., etc., for the two different circulation movements.

Page Break me43.40

Page me43.40
I believe that you will make the matter easier for yourself and the reader by quoting the formulas.
Page me43.40
I shall reply later to the other points of your letter. Of the carbuncles there remains only one, also soon finished. Last Wednesday I gave a lecture (ABOUT 5/4 of an hour) on wages (especially the form of the same) to about 100 German PICKED workers.†67 I was very unwell that day, and I was advised to telegraph that I could not come. However, this was impossible, since some of the people had come from very distant parts of London. So I went there. The business went off very well, and after the lecture I felt better than before.
Page me43.40
I have made concessions to my family doctor Lafargue in that I have not yet visited the Museum†a again. But I have perhaps, during the past weeks, meditated too much AT HOME.
Page me43.40
I shall, IF POSSIBLE, come to Manchester with Tussychen at the end of next week (SAY SATURDAY†b). But you will have to send me the money for the fares and SOME SHILLINGS which I shall leave for my wife.
Page me43.40
Tussychen, OF COURSE, has reminded me of the trip ABOUT every day.
Page me43.40
Enclosed new Liebknecht stuff.
Page me43.40
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.40
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.40a

Frederick Engels. 1860s

Page Break me43.40b
Page Break me43.41

22
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.41
Manchester, 25 May 1868

Dear Moor,

You must come on Friday,†a because I have the afternoon free on Saturday and by then we shall be finished with everything in the house.

Page me43.41

Enclosed ½ £20 and ½ £5 notes, the two other halves follow in another envelope. Till Friday then, let me know which train you are taking. You can travel from King's Cross by the new (Midland) line, which passes through the most beautiful part of Derbyshire.

9.10 from London			2.15 in Manchester
11.30	”	”	5.45	”	”
3.	”	”	8.5	”	”

Your
F. E.

Page me43.41
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.42

23
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.42
London, 27 May 1868

DEAR FRED,

THANKS FOR £25.

Page me43.42

Departure: Friday†a from King's Cross 11.30.

Page me43.42

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page me43.42
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

24
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.42
[London,] 20 JUNE 1868

DEAR FRED,

Immediately after my return to London†68 — our trip was marvelous — I found whole bundles of dunning and threatening letters. 'The people had been turned away with the excuse that I was 'travelling'. But one might think the electric telegraph had announced my return to these fellows. Si licet parva componere magnis,†b OLD Niebuhr (the father of the HISTORIAN) relates with what speed the FACTS of the SILESIAN WAR†69 travelled from Europe to Asia IN NO TIME simply through the telegraphy of people's tongues. And among creditors this form of natural telegraphy appears to work even more efficiently. Among the bills there are various ones that can scarcely be delayed for one week; the worst, however, is the enclosed scrawl payable on Tuesday,†a for, if the GAS SUPPLY is publicly cut off, things will get quite out of control.

Page Break me43.43
Page me43.43

Last Tuesday†b there was a meeting of the International. In the meantime, papers have come into my hands which have made unavoidable a RESCINDING of the RESOLUTIONS AS TO THE CONGRESS.†70 D'abord,†c the declaration by Minister of Justice Bara that the Congress is not permitted to take place in Brussels.†d Secondly, a printed manifesto of the COMMITTEES of Brussels and Verviers in which they throw down the gauntlet to the Minister.†e Thirdly, letters from De Paepe and Vandenhouten that we would ruin the Association in Belgium by transferring the Congress. This would be interpreted as a concession to the government, etc.
Page me43.43

I do not even mention the lousy intrigues of Vésinier, who is now here, and also Pyat, etc. Naturally they have been spreading the rumour that we are working at the dictation of Bonaparte.
Page me43.43

They believed that a big scandal was to be expected at this last meeting and therefore sent guests to us. They were very désappointés when I withdrew my RESOLUTIONS after reading and referring to the documents, etc. I put the matter thus: The law against the FOREIGNERS was in no way a special threat against the International. It was general. The International would, however, have made a concession to the Belgian government if, under such legislation, it had selected Brussels as its MEETING PLACE. Now the matter was the other way round. Now that the Belgian government had directly threatened and provoked us we would be making a concession to it if we moved the Congress away from Brussels, etc. At the same time, I made a few very contemptuous jokes about the heroic tone adopted by those who attacked my RESOLUTIONS (Odger, etc.) before they knew the CHANGED STATE OF CIRCUMSTANCES. THE ONLY DANGER THAT COULD HAVE BEEN INCURRED, WAS THAT OF CHEAP MARTYRDOM AND RIDICULE. MRS Law shouted 'HEAR, HEAR' for me several times, and showed her support by drumming on the table. Anyhow I managed things so that the laughter turned against Odger, etc., and that the RESCINDING of the RESOLUTIONS did not appear as a victory on their part.
Page me43.43

The heat is very nasty for me. I shall have Gumpert's medicine made up for me, since I have 'puked' (as Mrs Blind would say) for several consecutive days, despite exemplary abstention from food and drink.

Page Break me43.44
Page me43.44

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.44

Apropos. Tussychen generated something approaching bad blood here in the house with her dithyrambic praise of the Manchester HOME and her openly declared wish to return there as soon as possible.

Page me43.44
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

25
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.44
Manchester, 22 June 1868

Dear Moor,

In great haste enclosed £10 in one note. Tomorrow I shall send you a further £10, which should help to meet the most urgent and most pressing needs.

Page me43.44

The article†11 is coming along well and will certainly be finished this week; I am, however, much more satisfied with the quantitative aspect than the qualitative.†a A 2nd article†71 will then, I think, complete the whole thing. What do you think of the idea that Lafargue should put his name to it?

Page me43.44

More tomorrow.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.44

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.45

26
MARX TO ENGELS†48
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.45

London, 23 JUNE 1868

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR THE £10.

Page me43.45

Tussychen and Jennychen are both unfortunately very unwell — sore throats and vomiting. If things do not get better TODAY, I shall have to call a doctor. Our Allen suddenly became paralysed a week ago, so he cannot leave his house.

Page me43.45

Vésinier is wrangling here in the FRENCH BRANCH†72 against Dupont and Jung, both of whom he brands 'as Bonapartists'. During my absence†68 he attended a meeting of the CENTRAL COUNCIL†73 (which he has no right to do) and has written a fantastic report in the Cigale (Brussels paper).†74 The venue of the Congress was just being discussed.†70

Page me43.45

Lafargue cannot possibly sign,†a since he is a FRENCHMAN, and in addition, my SON-IN-LAW. Sign it A. Williams or SOMETHING OF THE SORT. It would be best if Sam Moore signed.

Page me43.45

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page me43.45

Yesterday BY ACCIDENT I came across a fine passage in A. Smith. After he had explained that LABOUR the PRIME COST, etc., and nearly said the right things though with constant contradictions; after he had ditto declared:

'THE PROFITS OF STOCK, IT MAY PERHAPS BE THOUGHT, ARE ONLY A DIFFERENT NAME FOR THE WAGES OF A PARTICULAR SORT OF LABOUR, THE LABOUR OF INSPECTION AND DIRECTION. THEY ARE, HOWEVER, ALTOGETHER DIFFERENT, ARE REGULATED BY QUITE DIFFERENT PRINCIPLES, AND BEAR NO PROPORTION TO THE QUANTITY, THE HARDSHIP, OR THE INGENUITY OF THIS SUPPOSED LABOUR OF INSPECTION AND DIRECTION,†b after that he suddently does an about turn and wants to develop WAGES, PROFIT, RENT, as the 'COMPONENT PARTS OF NATURAL PRICE' (with him = VALUE). Among other things, there is the following fine passage:

Page Break me43.46

'WHEN THE PRICE OF ANY COMMODITY IS NEITHER MORE NOR LESS THAN WHAT IS SUFFICIENT TO PAY THE RENT OF THE LAND, THE WAGES OF THE LABOUR, AND THE PROFITS OF THE STOCK EMPLOYED IN RAISING, PREPARING AND BRINGING IT TO MARKET, ACCORDING TO THEIR NATURAL RATES, THE COMMODITY IS THEN SOLD FOR WHAT MAY BE CALLED ITS NATURAL PRICE. THE COMMODITY IS THEN SOLD PRECISELY FOR WHAT IT IS WORTH, OR FOR WHAT IT REALLY COSTS THE PERSON WHO BRINGS IT TO MARKET; FOR THOUGH IN COMMON LANGUAGE THE PRIME COST OF ANY COMMODITY DOES NOT COMPREHEND THE PROFIT OF THE PERSON WHO IS TO SELL IT AGAIN, YET, IF HE SELLS IT AT A PRICE WHICH DOES NOT ALLOW HIM THE ORDINARY RATE OF PROFIT IN HIS NEIGHBOURHOOD, HE IS EVIDENTLY A LOSER BY THE TRADE; SINCE, BY EMPLOYING HIS STOCK IN SOME OTHER WAY, HE MIGHT HAVE MADE THAT PROFIT.' (The existence of profit in the 'neighbourhood' as an explanation for the same!) 'HIS PROFIT, BESIDES, IS HIS REVENUE, THE PROPER FUND OF HIS SUBSISTENCE. AS, WHILE HE IS PREPARING AND BRINGING THE GOODS TO MARKET, HE ADVANCES TO HIS WORKMEN THEIR WAGES, OR THEIR SUBSISTENCE; SO HE ADVANCES TO HIMSELF, IN THE SAME MANNER, HIS OWN SUBSISTENCE; WHICH IS GENERALLY SUITABLE TO THE PROFIT WHICH HE MAY REASONABLY EXPECT FROM THE SALE OF HIS GOODS. UNLESS THEY YIELD HIM THIS PROFIT, THEREFORE, THEY DO NOT REPAY HIM WHAT THEY MAY VERY PROPERLY BE SAID TO HAVE COST HIM.'†a

Page me43.46
This second manner of pressing the profit into the PRIME COST — because already consumed — is really fine.
Page me43.46
The same man, in whom the organs of pissing and generation also coincide mentally,†75 stated previously:

'AS SOON AS STOCK HAS ACCUMULATED IN THE HANDS OF PARTICULAR PERSONS... THE VALUE WHICH THE WORKMEN ADD TO THE MATERIALS... RESOLVES ITSELF INTO TWO PARTS, OF WHICH THE ONE PAYS THEIR WAGES, THE OTHER THE PROFITS OF THEIR EMPLOYER UPON THE WHOLE STOCK OF MATERIALS AND WAGES WHICH HE ADVANCED.'†b

Page me43.46
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

27
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.46
Manchester, 24 June 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed S/K 60 115 and 60 116 — two fivers. Yesterday I had such a fuss because of the building work in the Schiller Institute†76 that I left the WAREHOUSE without sending them to you and had not a moment until it was too late. Today again all sorts of things are preventing me from writing to you more fully, if I am not to sacrifice the time which should be devoted to the article†11 this evening; in any case yesterday nothing was done on it.

Page Break me43.47
Page me43.47
Regarding the sore throats, be careful.†a Of course, they are now epidemic and mostly innocent, but since the time when diphtheria became epidemic here it has always been better to consult a doctor quickly so that you know where you are.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.47

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

28
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.47
London, 24 JUNE 1868

Dear FRED,
Unfortunately, the sickness of both girls turns out to be SCARLATINA and Tussychen has it in a very malignant form.
Page me43.47
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.47
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.48

29
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.48
London, 24 June 1868

Dear Friend,
All sorts of incidents have prevented me from writing to you.
Page me43.48
Now, too, only a few lines.
Page me43.48
My eldest and youngest daughters†a both have SCARLATINA. I now recall that you spoke to me in Hanover†77 about a method of treatment as soon as the crisis has passed and the scaling process commences. Please be so kind as to explain this to me by return.

Page me43.48
With best greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen,

Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.48
Liebknecht is growing increasingly dull under the impact of the South German stupidity. He is not enough of a dialectician to criticise both sides at once.†b

Page me43.48
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original 30

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.48
Manchester, 25 June 1868

Dear Moor,
We were never so shocked here as this morning when your news arrived that your girls have scarlet fever. The thing has been on my mind all day; I hope everything goes well, and here, as I see from a medical report, all cases of that sort this year have passed off remarkably benignly. What sort of a doctor have you got, for you cannot take risks in such cases; my means are at your disposal, write or telegraph if you need anything, and you will have it immediately if it is at all possible.

Page Break me43.49
Page me43.49
Yesterday I sent you two five-pound notes S/K 60 115 and 60 116 unregistered.
Page me43.49
Let me know very frequently how things are going. Lizzie was terribly upset when I read this out to her; she has a tremendous affection for Tussy and talks about her all day long.†68 And now good little Jenny has to get the sickness, too. You have really been terribly unlucky.
Page me43.49
Under these circumstances, I do not wish to write about other things, and they would not interest you as long as the present state of affairs continues. I enclose a few lines to Tussy to entertain her, and on the orders of Lizzie.†78 On no account leave us without news.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.49
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

31
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.49
London, 26 June 1868†a

DEAR FRED,
BEST THANKS FOR £10.
Page me43.49
The business with the children is going relatively well. (Tussychen was very pleased with your letter.†78) Our doctor is our neighbour, the Irishman Dr Korklow, who is known in the neighbourhood particularly as a scarlet-fever doctor (also in the school which my children attended). In case of need, i.e. as soon as there is the slightest disquieting change, Lafargue will bring a doctor from his hospital. So far this has not been necessary.

Page Break me43.50
Page me43.50
I would appreciate it if you could send me a bit more money, since the major part of the £20 had to be spent to partly pay off the most urgent small debts.
Page me43.50
Lafargue has told Beesly that 1 article is pending.†11 Beesly says it must come in good time to find a place in the August number.†a
Page me43.50
My head is naturally IN TURMOIL. Since I can do nothing serious, I am writing up the stuff for Eichhoff.†79 It will go off tomorrow.
Page me43.50
Salut.
Your Moor (verte†b)

Page me43.50

Jennychen told Tussy that she had turned from her former higher Chinese character into a LOCALISED (IRISH) BEING and was therefore no longer showing due respect to the EMPEROR.†c Tussy replied: FORMERLY I CLUNG TO A MAN, NOW I CLING TO A NATION.

Page me43.50
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

32
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.50
Manchester, 26 June 1868

Dear Moor,

Yesterday evening, after I had written to you, I went to Gumpert to ask him about SCARLATINA, but found his house so full of patients and Solomonic persons that I couldn't really approach him. I therefore saw him again today and asked him whether he could recommend a doctor, since Allen was sick. He said the main thing was to have a man who, even if not excessively CLEVER, should really live nearby, should come 3-4 times a day at critical times, and always be on call. In his opinion, Lafargue is quite capable of handling this case properly, and if you want further assistance,

Page Break me43.51
Allen would be the best man to recommend one of the doctors in the vicinity. Apart from this, fresh air and PLENTY OF IT is the main thing; he himself usually prescribes washing with vinegar and water and disinfection of the house with chloride of lime; all this cannot, however, be decreed from a distance. In such acute sicknesses medicines are not really much use.
Page me43.51

You will have received the second ten pounds in 2 fivers which I sent you the day before yesterday. Enclosed a further five pounds S/K 46 795, and next week I shall send you some more.
Page me43.51

Incidentally, Gumpert did comfort me greatly and he confirmed that this year this sickness occurs in an exceptionally mild form.
Page me43.51

Lizzie is afraid that you might think that Tussy could have caught the germ of the sickness here and she has urged me to write that everybody here is healthy.
Page me43.51

Sincere greetings to your wife, the two patients,†a Laura and Lafargue.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.51
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

33
MARX TO ENGELS†80
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.51
London, 27 June 1868

DEAR FRED,
£5 received with THANKS.
Page me43.51
The children are getting along very well. The suppuration and swelling of the throat has improved so much that today the doctor prescribed a hearty DINNER for them (hitherto they had only port and Liebig†b). They consumed the DINNER with ZEST. From the beginning Korklow prescribed air. Instead of the CHLORIDE OF LIME another (newer) disinfectant, since he regards the former as injurious to the lungs. Luckily our house is built in such a way, and in particular the children's rooms are so situated, that they are plentifully provided with ventilation coming from every side.

Page Break me43.52
Page me43.52
Tell MRS LIZZY (TO WHOM TUSSY SENDS HER LOVE) that Manchester was not for a moment held responsible here. SCARLATINA and MEASLES are now epidemic in London. Tussy probably CAUGHT THE INFECTION FROM THE DAUGHTER OF PROFESSOR FRANKLAND.
Page me43.52
Best greetings to Lizzy from me..

Your
Moor

Page me43.52
Today I received a curious document. I have been summoned to appear next Wednesday†a before the VESTRY of St. Pancras TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MY GOODS AND CHATTELS SHOULD NOT BE DISTRAINED. For the accursed VESTRY elected me bon gré mal gré†b as 'CONSTABLE OF THE VESTRY OF ST. PANCRAS', and I went to Manchester†68 instead of taking over the office and swearing the appropriate oath of office. Dr Korklow, to whom I showed the SUMMONS today, said that it WAS AN HONOUR MUCH VALUED BY THE PHILISTINES OF ST. PANCRAS. I SHOULD TELL THEM THAT I WAS A FOREIGNER AND THAT THEY SHOULD KISS ME ON THE ARSE.

Page me43.52
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

34
ENGELS TO MARX†56
IN LONDON
Page me43.52
Manchester, 28 June 1868

Dear Moor,

You lifted a heavy stone from all our hearts with your letter of yesterday. The day before yesterday and even yesterday everybody here in the house was very depressed, but today everybody is merry as a cricket again, and I myself feel quite different.
Page me43.52

The article is finished.†11 You are quite right, Sam†c is the man to sign it. I shall tell him today and at the same time give him the article to look through and to note possible Germanisms. But let me know by return whether I can keep it for a few days more, say, till Wednesday†a evening; if not, I can send it off on Monday. The second and final article†71 (the first goes up to the conclusion of absolute surplus value) can then be finished by the end of this inst., since I am unlikely to leave here before then, so the two articles can directly follow one another. First I shall send the Zukunft the article about Prussian military nomenclature.†81

Page Break me43.53
Page me43.53

Salut, ô connétable de Saint Pancrace!†b Now you should get yourself a worthy outfit: a red nightshirt, white nightcap, down-at-the-heel slippers, white pants, a long clay pipe and a POT OF PORTER. Lafargue, as your squire, can invent his uniform himself. As you see, the Pancratian philistines insist that you should sacrifice yourself for the common good. And this year-long, touching attachment which nothing could shake — this you intend to reciprocate with the cold negation of KISS MY — ? But 'that's just like the communists'.
Page me43.53

Give Jennychen my heartiest greetings and tell her that since she has now finally had a fever, I would like to have heard her speaking in delirium; there would have been more sense and poetry in it than fat Freiligrath will ever develop. Ditto best greetings to your wife and the two Lafargues.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.53
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

35
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.53
London, 29 JUNE 1868

DEAR FRED,
BEST COMPLIMENTS FROM Tussy and Jennychen. The doctor†c is very satisfied although POOR Jenny is suffering from SLEEPLESSNESS and also from coughing. He said today: as soon as the children are over their illness, they should leave London immediately and be sent to the seaside. (Perhaps they could go together with Lizzie?)

Page Break me43.54
Page me43.54
Enclosed copies of Elberfelder Zeitung which reached me today from Germany. Dr. Fr. Schnacke is named on the ENVELOPE as the author†a and sender; I remember his name from 1848, but do not know him personally. THERE IS MUCH MUDDLING IN HIS ARTICLES.
Page me43.54
There is time enough if you send me the ARTICLE by the end of this week.†11
Page me43.54
I am very TIRED as the anxiety of the recent period completely prevented me from sleeping.
Page me43.54
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.54
Today a letter from Kugelmann. 4 pages about the treatment of SCARLATINA.†b Dietzgen from Petersburg visited him at Whitsun on his way to the Rhine.

Page me43.54
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

36
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.54
London, 2 July 1868

DEAR FRED,
D'abord†c best thanks for the article.†11
Page me43.54
And secondly for the 2 5-pound halves. At the same time, I received a dunning letter from the LANDLORD, whom tomorrow (on arrival of the second halves) I shall first pay the remainder for the quarter which ended on March 25th.

Page Break me43.55
Page me43.55
Enclosed a letter from Eichhoff.†82 Meissner should have sent me the scrawl from Faucher.†83 It is a good thing that the fellows are beginning to give vent to their annoyance.
Page me43.55
The children are progressing well. Naturally very weak. Tussychen also still has a little suppuration in the throat. The doctor is on the whole very satisfied. He will only know in a few days when they will be well enough to go out.
Page me43.55
Yesterday, when buying a pencil, I found upon it Russian letters in golden script. Russkij Grafit.†a But behind the Russian there appears to be a German named Theodor Stal (Schtal), namely Teodor Wtal. This is the first time that I found something like that in a small local shop here. Borkheim would smell treason behind this.
Page me43.55
Best greetings to Lizzy and the little one.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me43.55
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

37
ENGELS TO MARX†48
IN LONDON
Page me43.55
[Manchester,] 2 July 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed the two second halves of the two fivers, S/K 11 185 Manchester, 14 January 1867, S/K 79 542 Manchester, 12 January 1867.

Page me43.55

I have written to Borkheim†84 to get himself a new Russian book: Zemlya i volya, Land and Freedom, in which a German Russian, a landowner,†c shows that since the emancipation of the peasants†85

Page Break me43.56
the Russian peasant is being ruined through communal property, and ditto Russian agriculture — small and large. The book is said to contain much statistical proof. Exchange value has already penetrated too deeply into these primitive communities, so that after the abolition of serfdom the situation no longer appears to be viable.

Page me43.56

Tomorrow I hope to receive good news from you again. In the meantime, best greetings for the patients,†a your wife and the Lafargues.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.56
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

38
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29

IN HANOVER
Page me43.56
London, 2 July 1868

Dear Kugelmann,

Many thanks for your letter.†b The children are getting along well, though (today is the 9th day) they are not yet fit to go out.

Page me43.56

With regard to my book,†c the day before yesterday I received 5 issues of the Elberfelder Zeitung containing a very well-disposed review by Dr Schnacke.†d (I recall the name from 1848, but do not know him personally.) There is a lot of confusion in his presentation of the matter. On the other hand, I have received information from Berlin that that clown Faucher made fun of my book in the June issue of his magazine.†83 It's a good thing these gentry are at last blurting out their annoyance.

Page Break me43.57

Page me43.57

When and if I shall come to Germany, I do not yet know. I am finally rid of my carbuncles.

Page me43.57

Engels will certainly come here in August or September.

Page me43.57

Salut! and MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS KUGELMANN AND THE LITTLE ONE.†a

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.57
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 7, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original 39

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.57
[London,] 4 July 1868

DEAR FRED,

I am acknowledging the receipt (yesterday) of both second halves.

Page me43.57

THANKS, ditto, FOR THE TWO little books of Schorlemmer.†b

Page me43.57

The children are getting along well. Yesterday they were up for part of the day, and Jennychen was even downstairs in the PARLOUR. The doctor†c is now coming only every second day. Therefore he was not here yesterday, and I still await him today.

Page me43.57

In today's Hermann the reception for Freiligrath in Cologne. Cups, etc. Nothing better than the quid pro quo to the effect that Freiligrath changed his seat 9 times, with the hint that this change was politically motivated!

Page me43.57

Orsini's brother†d is here again. He is accused of having betrayed the Fenians,†86 whose agent he was. His accuser is COLONEL Nagle and the French landlady in whose house he lived here at that time (at the time of the Fenian unrest and before he left for the UNITED STATES). His methods of exonerating himself are reminiscent of Bangya and he will clear out of London as soon as possible.

Page Break me43.58

Page me43.58

Beust's action with the Czechs does not appear clear.†a

Page me43.58

Salut.

Your
Moor

Page me43.58

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

40

MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER†87
IN NEW YORK

Page me43.58

London, 4 July 1868
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Friend,

Your letter of 20 May arrived while I was away from London, a fairly long absence.†68 Hence the delay in replying.

Page me43.58

Concerning Liebknecht's connections with New York, I know nothing, but will write to him on the subject.
Page me43.58
For Sorge I enclose the following credentials.†b Our direct connection is with Whaley, Sylvis AND Jessup.
Page me43.58
The Commonwealth has long ceased to exist. The weekly reports on the proceedings of the CENTRAL COUNCIL appear in The Bee-Hive. This far from means, however, that this paper, a narrow-minded TRADES-UNION-ORGAN, represents our views.
Page me43.58
In the German press, my book†c has hitherto been reviewed — and mostly very favourably — in the Zukunft, the Stuttgart Beobachter,†d the Württemberg Staatszeitung,†e the Frankfurt Börsenzeitung,†f ditto the Hamburger Börsenzeitung,†g the Hamburg Anzeiger, etc., in various papers in Hanover and Rhine Province-Westphalia, particularly extensively in a series of articles in Schweitzer's

Page Break me43.59

Credentials of the General Council of the International written in Friedrich Sorge's name (in Marx' hand)

Page Break me43.60
Page Break me43.61
Social-Demokrat (Berlin)†15 and the Elberfelder Zeitung.†a The last two papers, although the latter is liberal bourgeois, are openly partisan.
Page me43.61
The big bourgeois and reactionary papers like the Kölnische, the Augsburger, the Neue Preussische, the Vossische, etc., are carefully keeping their mouths shut.
Page me43.61
From the ranks of the official economists, to date only in the Hildburghausen Ergänzungsblätter at the beginning of this year the review by Dr Dühring†b (privatdozent at the University of Berlin, supporter of Carey) (this review was timid but, on the whole, appreciative) — and in the June issue of the economic magazine published by Faucher and Michaelis.†c Mr Faucher naturally provides nothing except such remarks as one might expect from the comedian and hired jester of the German Bastiatites.
Page me43.61
I would be grateful if you would send me a few newspapers from time to time. In particular, it would be of great value to me if you could dig up some anti-bourgeois material about landownership and agrarian relations in the United States. Since I shall be dealing with rent in my 2nd volume,†41 material against H. Carey's 'harmonies'†d would be especially welcome.
Page me43.61
Salut.

Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.61
[Appendix]
London, 4 JULY 1868

WE RECOMMEND MR SORGE TO ALL THE FRIENDS OF THE INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION, AND, AT THE SAME TIME, EMPOWER HIM TO ACT IN THE NAME, AND ON BEHALF, OF THAT ASSOCIATION.
Page me43.61
BY ORDER OF THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE INTERN. W. ASSOC.
Karl Marx,
SECRETARY FOR GERMANY

Page me43.61
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.62

41
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.62
London, 7 July 1868

DEAR FRED,
The children are progressing well. Yesterday for the first time they were outside for half an hour. The peeling is still very pronounced. Only when this is finished will they be MOVABLE.
Page me43.62
During the past few days I have been pressed very hard by the baker, CHEESEMONGER, ASSESSED TAXES, God and the Devil.
Page me43.62
You will recall that the German Workers' Educational Society here has celebrated the June Insurrection†88 for ABOUT 18 years now. Only in the last few years have the French (their society here now exists as the FRENCH BRANCH of the International†72) taken part. And the old meneurs†a always stayed away. I mean the petits grands hommes.†b
Page me43.62

But this year, IN PUBLIC MEETING, along came Mr Pyat and read out an alleged address of the Paris Commune (this is a euphemism for the IDENTICAL Pyat, who is in no way inferior to Blind in this LINE) in which the assassinat of Bonaparte was preached, as it was years ago in his Lettre aux étudians.†c The FRENCH BRANCH, reinforced by other bawlers, acclaimed this. Vésinier had it printed in Cigale†d and Espiègle,†e Belgian PAPERS, and presents Pyat as giving his direction to the 'International'.†89

Page me43.62

As a result, we get a letter from the Brussels committee,†90 which just at the moment is making great propaganda, under difficult circumstances (Charleroi affair†24). Contents: This demonstration threatens to wreck the entire Association on the continent. Will the FRENCH BRANCH never move forward from the old demagogic phrases, etc.? etc., etc. It should be remembered that, at this very time, our people are behind bars in Paris.†91 We yesterday issued a declaration (to be printed in Brussels), disavowing any connection between the above-mentioned Pyat and the International.†f

Page me43.62

Indeed I regard the whole affair (naturally based upon the background of the enormous stupidity of the FRENCH BRANCH) as an intrigue of the old parties, the republican jackasses of 1848, especially the petits grands hommes who represent them in London. Our Association is a thorn in their flesh. After trying in vain to work against the Association, THE NEXT BEST THING, of course, is to compromise it. Pyat is just the man to do this de bonne foi.†a The cleverer ones therefore push him forward.

Page Break me43.63

Page me43.63

What could be funnier than this squint-eyed melodrama-writer and Charivari man before 1848, this TOASTMASTER of 1848 who now plays Brutus, but from a safe distance!

Page me43.63

The FRENCH BRANCH here will have to be thrown out of the International if it does not put a stop to its asininity. One cannot allow 50 unprincipled louts, round whom loudmouths of all nationalities gather at such public opportunities, to endanger the International Association at a moment when, as a result of conditions on the continent, it is beginning to become a serious power.

Page me43.63

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page me43.63

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

42
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.63
Manchester, 10 July 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed 2 fivers, S/K 93 518 and 19, Manchester, 14 January 1867, to pacify the CHEESEMONGER and other Manicheans.

Page me43.63

Everybody here was overjoyed by your good news about the patients.†b

Page me43.63

Hopefully you will really be able to calm down the FRENCH BRANCH.†72 Once again there appears to be sufficient confusion in that nation to guarantee the mess-up of any revolution that may break out. Wherever you look among these fellows, nothing but stupidity.

Page Break me43.64

Page me43.64

Ad vocem†a Pyat, Blind must not be forgotten. I believe I told you that the Bradford Schiller Society (id est Dr Bronner) approached the Schiller Institute†76 here, in order to organise there, here, and in Liverpool 'Readings by famous Germans living in England'. I told the people right away that the whole thing revolved round Karl Blind; all the same they should, as far as I was concerned, agree to the plan sous réserve†b in order to see for themselves. So, last week a letter arrived from Bradford with further information. It said approaches had been made to Prof. Goldstücker, Max Müller, K. Blind and A. Ruge! The first two had accepted, yet only sous réserve with regard to their time and health; but the latter two had accepted immediately and unconditionally, and Ruge had immediately asked whether an historical or philosophical theme would be preferred. In short, the bomb had burst, and the gentlemen received the reply that Goldstücker and Max Müller would be quite acceptable here, but there could be no question of Blind and Ruge. And this puts paid to the attempt.

Page me43.64

Beust†c has once again made himself suspicious in my eyes. The serious attempt of the Russians to have the Eastern business explode this spring, in spite of the fact that their railway was not yet finished, only appears explicable in that they wished to exploit the presence of a Palmerston as Austrian Prime Minister as long as it lasted. According to one version, he told the Czechs, incidentally, that he was in possession of plans which had been agreed between Prussia and Russia for the eventuality of the dissolution of Austria, and that under these plans Bohemia would not become Russian, but would be sacrificed by the Russians.

Page me43.64

I have read the conclusion of the Prussian war of 1866 (Main campaign).†d According to it, the South Germans were even more stupid than one had thought and known; the blame is, incidentally, distributed more evenly, so that Charlemagne of Bavaria†e appears as at least as great an ass as Alexander the Great of Hesse.†f
Page me43.64
Best greetings to your wife, the girls and the Lafargues.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.64
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.65

43
MARX TO ENGELS†92
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.65
London, 11 July 1868

DEAR FRED,
The £10 received with BEST THANKS. I immediately paid £3 5s. for taxes, £3 to the CHEESEMONGER (whom, by the way, I have been paying cash for weeks, since he, just like the TEA-GROCER, no longer puts it on the slate), £1 10s. to the chemist. I owe the baker about £17 and the man, who was always very friendly with us, is in great difficulties. It is awful for me that I have to press you like this. If I only knew how to find any direct way out!
Page me43.65
The children†a are doing fairly well, though Jennychen is still very weak. The ruling TEMPER here in the house is not exactly made for convalescents. My wife is not in the best of shape either, and therefore unnecessarily IRRITABLE.
Page me43.65
Enclosed:
1. Kugelmann: I answered him right away†b saying he should be sure not to loose the intended letter upon Faucher, the Mannequin Pisse.†93
Page me43.65
2. The review by the worthy Faucher†83; another in the Literarisches Zentralblatt.†c Both to be returned to me.
Page me43.65
3. Letter from Dietzgen, who has also written an article on my book for me.†94

Page me43.65

You cannot fully appreciate the farce Mannequin Pisse Faucher is putting on in making me a pupil of Bastiat. Bastiat states in his Harmonies†d:

'If anybody were to explain to him, on the basis of the determination of value by labour time, why air has no value and a diamond a high value, he would throw his book into the fire.'

Page me43.65

Since I have now accomplished this terrible trick, Faucher must prove that I, in fact, accept Bastiat, who declares that there exists 'no measure' of value.

Page me43.65

The manner in which Mr Bastiat derives the value of the diamond is given in the following truly commercial-traveller-type conversation:

Page Break me43.66

'Monsieur, cédez-moi votre diamant. — Monsieur, je veux bien; cédez-moi en échange votre travail de toute une année.'†a

Page me43.66

Instead of the business friend answering: 'Mon cher, si j'étais condamné à travailler, vous comprenez bien que j'aurai autre chose à acheter que des diamants',†b he says:

'Mais, monsieur, vous n'avez pas sacrifié à votre acquisition une minute. — Eh bien, monsieur, tâchez de rencontrer une minute semblable. — Mais, en bonne justice, nous devrions échanger à travail égal. — Non, en bonne justice, vous appréciez vos services et moi les miens. Je ne vous force pas; pourquoi me forceriez-vous? Donnez-moi un an tout entier, ou cherchez vous même un diamant. — Mais cela m'en entraînerait à dix ans de pénibles recherches, sans compter une déception probable au bout. Je trouve plus sage, plus profitable d'employer ces dix ans d'une autre manière. — C'est justement pour cela que je crois vous rendre encore service en ne vous demandant qu'un an. Je vous en épargne neuf, et voilà pourquoi j'attache beaucoup de valeur à ce service.'†c

Page me43.66

Is it not a wine salesman to the very life?

Page me43.66

Incidentally — and the German Bastiatites do not know this — that unhappy assertion that the value of commodities is determined, not by the labour they cost, but by the labour which they spare the buyer (the babbling about the connection between exchange and the division of labour is childish talk) is just as little Bastiat's discovery as any of the other of his wine-salesman categories.

Page me43.66

The old jackass Schmalz, the Prussian demagogue-catcher,†95 says (German edition 1818, French 1826):

'Le travail d'autrui en général ne produit jamais pour nous qu'une économie de temps, et cette économie de temps est tout ce qui constitue sa valeur et son prix. Le menuisier, par exemple, qui me fait une table, et le domestique qui porte mes lettres à la poste, qui bat mes habits, ou qui cherche pour moi les choses qui me sont nécessaires, me rendent l'un et l'autre un service absolument de même nature: l'un et l'autre m'épargne et le temps que je serais obligé d'employer moi-même à mes [ces] occupations, et celui qu'il m'aurait fallu consacrer à m'acquérir l'aptitude et les talents qu'elles exigent.'†d

Page Break me43.67
Page me43.67

Old Schmalz was an epigone of the physiocrats.†96 He says this in a polemic directed against A. Smith's travail productif and improductif,†a and proceeds from their thesis that only agriculture produces real value. He found that in Garnier.†b Similar stuff, on the other hand, in Ganilh,†c epigone of the mercantilists. Ditto in polemics against the same differentiation made by A. Smith. Thus, polemics by epigones representing two standpoints, with neither having the slightest conception of value, — and Bastiat copies them! And this is the latest discovery in Germany! A pity that no paper exists in which one can expose this plagiarism by Bastiat.†97
Page me43.67

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.67
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

44
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.67
London, 11 July 1868

Dear Friend,

The children are getting on well, though still weak.
Page me43.67

Thank you very much for the things you sent. Definitely do not write to Faucher,†98 otherwise this mannequin pisse will feel too important.†93 All he has achieved is that, if a second edition appears, I shall aim a few necessary blows at Bastiat where I speak about the magnitude of value.†99 This wasn't done before, since the 3rd volume†41 will contain a separate and extensive chapter about the 'vulgar economy' gentry.†100 Incidentally, you will find it quite natural that Faucher and consorts derive the 'exchange value' of their own scribblings not from the amount of labour power expended, but from the absence of such expenditure, that is from 'saved labour'. Moreover, the worthy Bastiat did not even himself make this 'discovery', so welcome to these gentry, but just 'cribbed' it, in his usual manner, from much earlier authors. His sources are of course unknown to Faucher and consorts.

Page Break me43.68
Page me43.68
As for the Centralblatt, the man is making the greatest concession possible by admitting that, if value means anything at all, then my conclusions must be conceded.†a The unfortunate fellow does not see that, even if there were no chapter on 'value' at all in my book,†65 the analysis I give of the real relations would contain the proof and demonstration of the real value relation. The chatter about the need to prove the concept of value arises only from complete ignorance both of the subject under discussion and of the method of science. Every child knows that any nation that stopped working, not for a year, but let us say, just for a few weeks, would perish. And every child knows, too, that the amounts of products corresponding to the differing amounts of needs demand differing and quantitatively determined amounts of society's aggregate labour. It is SELF-EVIDENT that this necessity of the distribution of social labour in specific proportions is certainly not abolished by the specific form of social production; it can only change its form of manifestation. Natural laws cannot be abolished at all. The only thing that can change, under historically differing conditions, is the form in which those laws assert themselves. And the form in which this proportional distribution of labour asserts itself in a state of society in which the interconnection of social labour expresses itself as the private exchange of the individual products of labour, is precisely the exchange value of these products.
Page me43.68
Where science comes in is to show how the law of value asserts itself. So, if one wanted to 'explain' from the outset all phenomena that apparently contradict the law, one would have to provide the science before the science. It is precisely Ricardo's mistake that in his first chapter, on value,†a all sorts of categories that still have to be arrived at are assumed as given, in order to prove their harmony with the law of value.

Page Break me43.69
Page me43.69
On the other hand, as you correctly believe, the history of the theory of course demonstrates that the understanding of the value relation has always been the same, clearer or less clear, hedged with illusions or scientifically more precise. Since the reasoning process itself arises from the existing conditions and is itself a natural process, really comprehending thinking can always only be the same, and can vary only gradually, in accordance with the maturity of development, hence also the maturity of the organ that does the thinking. Anything else is drivel.

Page me43.69

The vulgar economist has not the slightest idea that the actual, everyday exchange relations and the value magnitudes cannot be directly identical. The point of bourgeois society is precisely that, a priori, no conscious social regulation of production takes place. What is reasonable and necessary by nature asserts itself only as a blindly operating average. The vulgar economist thinks he has made a great discovery when, faced with the disclosure of the intrinsic interconnection, he insists that things look different in appearance. In fact, he prides himself in his clinging to appearances and believing them to be the ultimate. Why then have science at all?

Page me43.69

But there is also something else behind it. Once interconnection has been revealed, all theoretical belief in the perpetual necessity of the existing conditions collapses, even before the collapse takes place in practice. Here, therefore, it is completely in the interests of the ruling classes to perpetuate the unthinking confusion. And for what other reason are the sycophantic babblers paid who have no other scientific trump to play except that, in political economy, one may not think at all!

Page me43.69

But satis superque.†b In any case, it shows the depth of degradation reached by these priests of the bourgeoisie: while workers and even manufacturers and merchants have understood my book and made sense of it, these 'learned scribes' (!) complain that I make excessive demands on their comprehension.

Page me43.69

I would not advise reprinting Schweitzer's articles, though Schweitzer has made a good job of them for his paper.†101

Page Break me43.70

Page me43.70

You would oblige me if you sent me a few issues of the Staats-Anzeiger.

Page me43.70

You should be able to get Schnacke's address by enquiring at the Elberfelder.

Page me43.70

Best greetings to your wife and Fränzchen.

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.70

Apropos. I have received an article by Dietzgen about my book†94; I am sending it to Liebknecht.

Page me43.70

First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 7, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

45
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.70
Manchester, 14 July†a 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed another two fivers, S/K 92 566 and 93 517. Manchester, 14 January [18]67.

Page me43.70

I do not know whether I shall manage to finish the article. On Sunday during a meal a small blood-vessel burst in the conjunctiva of my left eye and since then this eye has been very sensitive, so that it is at present quite impossible for me to write with a light; I think, however, it will soon pass.

Page me43.70

Do not forget to order 40-50 separate reprints of the article in the Fortnightly†11 so that we can distribute them.

Page me43.70

Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.70
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.71

46
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.71
Manchester, 21 July 1868

Dear Moor,

I concluded from Tussy's letter the receipt of the £10, and also that both patients†a must have reached the point at which they should be sent to the SEASIDE, the sooner the better. So that there shall be no delay I enclose £25 (1 of 20 and 1 of 5). It is still uncertain when I shall get away from here, and it will therefore be better for the time being to drop the attempt at a combined SEASIDE operation, so that the girls' health may not suffer.

Page me43.71
I believe you said recently that Borkheim himself would be inclined to advance the £150 if he was not at the moment short of money. Is he now perhaps in a position to provide the sum, or at least £100? It would be absolute folly to toss into the maw of this miserable society 20% interest per annum against the finest security. Even if Borkheim can get us only £100, of which £50 might be repaid in case of need in January or February and the rest on 10/20 July 1869 (though it would be best if the whole sum need not be repaid until next July), everything could be fixed up easily. He really only needs to commit himself to pay £100 on the loan in September, so that I would then only need to send him the remainder. This would free £100 for me, which I could send you right now. If nothing of this sort happens, you will understand that I am very tied, as long as the heavy load of £175 is hanging over my head, and especially as long as I do not know how the balance has come out, and I probably won't know for another 3-4 weeks.
Page me43.71
Think over the business with Borkheim. Maybe something can be done; if so we would be, at least for the time being, out of all our troubles, and would once again have gained time.
Page me43.71
The pamphlets and journals I sent back to you yesterday. Who is this sultry Dr Boruttau, who displays such a sensitive organ for sexual love?†b
Page me43.71
Jones is hard put to it whether to stand for Manchester or for Dewsbury.†102 The Dewsburyans have sent him a requisition signed by 2,000 voters; he wants 1,000 more since there will be 6,000 voters. Now they are pressing here in Manchester whether he will accept or not.

Page Break me43.72
Page me43.72
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.72
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

47
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.72
London, 23 July 1868

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS for the £25. The children will probably go to the sea next week together with MR and MRS Lafargue. Since yesterday Lafargue has been 'MEMBER OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS' and has received his patent for the KILLING OF MEN AND BEASTS. Then, in 4-5 weeks, he will go to Paris. As a result, we are in a very embarrassing position, since my wife still has to buy linen for Laura for at least £20.
Page me43.72

I do not think we can do any business with Borkheim. Yesterday he told me that 'money was very tight' in his case, etc. The Dutchmen, of whom I can, in fact, only use August Philips, are travelling. But I shall use my head to see how and where to get a loan, since it is absolutely necessary. The practice of borrowing at 20% can in fact only happen with institutions like those utilised by Borkheim, where people lose the capital advanced if one kicks the bucket before the date of maturity.
Page me43.72

About Dr Boruttau, the man with the sultry prick, I know nothing except that he also 'runs with' the Lassalleans (Schweitzer FRACTION). The funniest thing is the 'French' of his dedication to a sympathetic soul in Moscow.†103
Page me43.72

You will have seen that my book†a forms a point of discussion in

Page Break me43.73
the programme of the General Association of German Workers.†a†104
Page me43.73

I have sent you a scrawl by Dühring which despite the heat you might read. You could also tell me your impressions of it, since it is certainly not overtaxing. But all the more boring, to be sure.
Page me43.73

I saw Prof. Beesly last week at Lafargue's. Beesly was absent when your article†11 arrived. Immediately after his return he received it and sent it to Henry Morley†b (CHIEF EDITOR of The Fortnightly Review) in Scotland, from whence we have received no further NEWS as yet.
Page me43.73

How do you live in this heat? I lose all capacity for thought, and without Gumpert's medicine I COULD NOT STAND IT AT ALL.
Page me43.73

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.73
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

48
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.73
Manchester, 29 July 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed Liebknecht returned.†105 What a feeble business with Schweitzer. He should recognise 1. you and 2. the International Working Men's Association! Wilhelmchen appears to me to have once again failed to control his tendency to stupidities. Incidentally, you see that Schweitzer did, after all, show off with your letters.†c

Page me43.73

As regards Liebknecht's promises about Nuremberg and the Swiss workers, I SHALL WAIT FOR PERFORMANCE BEFORE GIVING AN OPINION.

Page me43.73

Now enclosed a letter from Kugelmann.†106 The business with Keil is splendid — if Kertbény is not in fact inventing a bit. Just in case, I sat down and scribbled in great haste the enclosed scrawl, trying to make it as Beta-like as possible†107 — as is suitable for that miserable rag†a; kindly let me have your comments on it by return so that we may send the stuff off without delay and strike while the iron is hot. We may not despise this bit of humbug, any more than we despise the stratagems through Siebel's mediation.†50 And the Kinkels, Freiligraths and Blinds, etc., will be badly annoyed; the philistine, however, as you know, trusts his Gartenlaube, and it will greatly impress Meissner. Your wife will also enjoy it very much — I think it would be best if you keep it secret for the time being, because of possible disappointment, and then you will surprise her when the paper comes out.

Page Break me43.74

Page me43.74

It is a good thing that owing to the delay of the article†11 caused by Beesly's absence I get some time for the second one.†71 Working at night still affects my eye slightly, and it then hurts all the next day.

Page me43.74

Best greetings to your wife, the girls and Lafargue and his spouse. In haste.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.74

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

49
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.74
[London,] 29 July 1868

DEAR FRED,

I hope that the business with your eye is nothing serious. Small blood vessels will burst now and then, without any particular consequence. Have you consulted Gumpert about it?

Page me43.74

Unfortunately, the household will only go to the sea next week. And that is because of the Lafargue family, who wanted to join in and rent a LODGING, etc., together. Because of Lafargue's ties with his hospital (where he has been operating for weeks as house SURGEON) the departure has been delayed from day to day, despite my curses, threats and shouts, so that now it is to take place at the beginning of next week, when my wife will go OFF with the rest, and Laura of course arguing that she will soon part completely from the FAMILY, etc. Tussy (highly delighted by your letter, I believe, she knows par coeur†a your 6 letters to her†78) is hale and hearty again. Not so Jennychen, who is also worrying about all sorts of things, etc. If I HAD MADE UP MY MIND where on the continent I could just now depend with certainty upon a LOAN (especially since I would, if necessary, have your guarantee), I would cross over and take Jennychen with me. But this is perhaps the best time of the year to find nobody at home.

Page Break me43.75

Page me43.75

There have been all sorts of scandals here RELATING TO Pyat, FRENCH BRANCH†72 and GENERAL COUNCIL. On this tomorrow.†b Today only this. Schweitzer in his 2nd programme for the congress of the General Association of German Workers in Hamburg has an item about the International Working Men's Association and another about my book.†c The programme was printed in the Zukunft†d†104 and elsewhere. On the other hand, A. Bebel, as president of the Workers' Union meeting in Nuremberg, has sent an invitation to the General Council.†108 We should send a delegate (Eccarius will go). That they will join the International Working Men's Association and adopt our programme is already certain, he says. Finally, we have received an invitation from Vienna where the Austrian workers' fraternal festival will be held, also at the beginning of September.†109 We have sent to Fox, who is in Vienna, the authorisation to represent us there.

Page me43.75

About the private negotiations between Wilhelmchen and Schweitzer†e I know no more than the former writes. Yet I know from another source that the influence of that cunning fox Schweitzer has grown to the same extent as Wilhelmchen has discredited himself among the workers by his over-close alliance with the South German provincial pettifoggers. It was evidently for this reason that Wilhelm found it necessary to set up a sort of cartel with Schweitzer, who is at present inside and who, moreover, was clever enough to have his title of nobility revoked by the Prussian court 'for lèse-majesté'.†110 As far as I am concerned — I mean as MEMBER of the GENERAL COUNCIL — I must conduct myself impartially between the various organised groups of workers. It is their business and not mine whom they have as leader. As SECRETARY FOR GERMANY I must answer all those who apply to me in their official capacity as presidents, etc., of workers' groups. In this sense, I have also written to Schweitzer (always WITH AN EYE to the possible publication of the entire correspondence).†111 Faced with the intrigues of the old '48 democrats here, it was, however, high time to be able to display influence among the German workers in Germany.

Page Break me43.76
Page me43.76

That you, poor devil, with your sore eye, should also have to water the Gartenlaube — and in this weather, too — really cries to the heavens.†a
Page me43.76

My comments are confined to:

Page 2 where I have put 1 x).†112 The FACT was actually this! For us the government sent, instead of the city censor, a special fellow from Berlin (Mr von St. Paul, etc.). When even this did not help, yet another tier of censorship, that of the Regierungspräsident of Cologne,†b was added. Finally, the Berlin cabinet, driven wild, issued a sort of manifesto against us, apprising the world of all our offences, and concluding with the announcement that at the end of the quarter they would shut up our shop. I resigned because the shareholders — even if in vain, as it later turned out — tried to negotiate with the Prussian government.
Page me43.76

Page 3 (2x). It would perhaps be good to add here for the benefit of the philistines that the provisional government had invited me in writing to return to France.†c
Page me43.76

Ditto page 3 (x3). You might add for the benefit of the democratic philistines that the Prussians expelled me par ordre du Muphti,†d after they had failed in the law courts.†113
Page me43.76

Finally, would it not be better, instead of the title: 'A German Political Economist', to have: 'A German Socialist'? Both are 'hideous', but the former probably more so.
Page me43.76

More tomorrow about affairs here.
Page me43.76
Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me43.76
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.77

50
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.77
York, 31 July 1868

Dear Kugelmann,
This scrawl must be excused by the fact that I am on my way for a few days to bring my dear spouse†a to the seaside resort at Bridlington (I bet you couldn't guess how this name is pronounced), and by the haste in which I send you the enclosed composition.†106 The business is splendid, that is, if it can be done and Kertbény is not bragging.†b The enclosed scribble has been composed, as far as possible, in the spirit of the rag,†c but it should possibly be made milder here and there. Marx thinks the title 'A German Socialist'†d would be better, which would be very nice, if Monsieur Kertbény did not object; but this must be prevented above all, so I find your suggestion, being the 'milder' one, is better.†114
Page me43.77
Marx has, for the time being, kept your letter with him, and since it is already late today anyway, and everybody in the hotel is hurrying to bed, I shall have to answer it next week. I put Lupus' photogram aside for you some time ago; luckily it is still one of the old good prints; recently I had another 24 prints made, but in the meantime the negative had faded so much that they turned out very badly. As for me, a blood vessel burst in the conjunctiva of my left eye a fortnight ago, and left behind a red patch on the apple (south-west side) which has not yet vanished, and with which I would not like to be eternised. So you will just have to wait for a while.
Page me43.77
N.B. There are two corrections, marked A and B, written here later; please insert them in the right place.†e It would be desirable for Kertbény neither to know the author of the article, nor see the original handwriting.
Page me43.77

So until next week.
Yours
F. E.

Page me43.77
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.78

51
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.78
[London,] 4 August 1868

DEAR FRED,
How is your eye?
Page me43.78
You will probably have received the Eichhoff stuff.†a In the Zukunft there are 'Economic Letters'†b singing the praises of my book.†c In fact these letters are largely cribbed from the book. In the Social-Demokrat the Executive of the General Association of German Workers is urged by the presidium to invite me as a guest of honour to the congress at Hamburg at the end of August.†d
Page me43.78
A few days ago I wrote to Meissner†84 to find out at last where and how.
Page me43.78
Kugelmann has written me a few lines saying that the chamber of commerce and the polytechnical school in Hanover have ordered a number of copies of my book.
Page me43.78
In the meantime, I am really more BOTHERED by PRIVATE ECONOMY or, as the English say, DOMESTIC ECONOMY, than by political economy. My LANDLORD has dunned me and, unfortunately for me, is staying FOR SOME TIME AT London. I have also been forced to sign diverse smaller bills of exchange, etc.
Page me43.78
The filthy French branch†72 has created a fine scandal for us. The Pyatists have published a blâme†e of the conseil général in the Cigale. Their channel was the infamous Vésinier. We ignored this VOTE OF CENSURE and simply passed à l'ordre du jour.'†f There followed a MEETING of the FRENCH BRANCH where there were fisticuffs. Dupont, Jung, Lafargue, Johannard, Lassassie and various others have quit this gang of scoundrels. This rabble now amounts to a total of perhaps 15 persons, although they confront us as the 'souveraineté du peuple'.†g We are 'des endormeurs', 'des ambitieux',†h etc. Apart from the little bit of scandal which these Spiegelbergs are making in that obscure Belgian paper, they are naturally NOWHERE. Nothing is more grotesque than the way in which this mob play Jacobin Club.†115

Page Break me43.79
Page me43.79
Apropos. Moses' article†116 has, after all, turned up. It is in the hands of Massol, who will print it shortly in his Morale indépendante, now that this has changed its skin to become a political journal. Reclus will ditto wade in with his Coopération, now that this ditto has be-butterflied itself into a political paper.
Page me43.79
My wife went to Ramsgate in advance on Monday†a to prepare the quarters. The gang will follow tomorrow.
Page me43.79
Lafargue is only free from tomorrow. In the meantime, he has been operating like mad as assistant to the HOME SURGEON of St. Bartholomew's. Yesterday, e.g., from 9 in the morning until 11 in the evening. Woe to the corpus vile†b of male or female kind on which he gets his practice.
Page me43.79
Best greetings from Tussy to you and Lizzy. The child declares to all and sundry that she is READY to emigrate to Manchester. MEANWHILE she is teased here with the NICKNAME 'THE POOR NEGLECTED NATION'.†c
Page me43.79
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.79
How do you translate GRAVEL as distinct from SAND and FLINT? And how PEAT as distinct from BOG? Incidentally, there are perhaps 6 further different names for what are, more or less, nuances of peat-ground in the 'POOR NEGLECTED COUNTRY'.
Page me43.79
Finally, how do you manage to live in this heat? I would like best to hang on a tree in the air.
Page me43.79
P. S. Now, when the Germans will join the 'INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION' en masse, with the Association, for the time being, filling out at least the boundaries of its main territory — though it is still thin on the ground — my plan is that the GENERAL COUNCIL should move to Geneva for the next year†117 and that we should function here only as the BRITANNIC COUNCIL. It appears a shrewd move to me if the proposal comes from us. At the same time, it will show the jackasses in Paris, etc., that we are in no way anxious for this pleasant dictatorship. Qu'en penses tu?†a

Page Break me43.80

Page me43.80
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

52
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.80
[Manchester,] 6 August 1868

Dear Moor,

What do I do in this heat? Languish and drink. Today it is raining, the air is muggy and saturated with humidity, it is therefore doubly horrible, the sweat does not evaporate and you are damp all over.
Page me43.80

Last Friday†b I took Lizzie and M. Ellen†c to Bridlington Quay and returned on Monday; tomorrow I shall return there with Moore, and I would take my HOLIDAY and stay the week, but Charles†d has gout and is all in, so I must do his work as well as my own, and there can be no question of going away.
Page me43.80

Eichhoff's pamphlet†e proves something which I had scarcely credited him with — that he is capable of reporting facts objectively. Of course, you had also made it easy for him.†79 The thing will have a very good effect. Now as regards the transfer to Geneva, it reminds me of the Central Authority's move to Cologne.†118 I would think this coup over very thoroughly. First, are the few jackasses worth it that you should take this step for their sake and hand over responsibility for the whole thing to people who, for all their good will, and also probably instinct, just do not have the stuff to lead a movement like this? Second, once we start moving house, and the holy respect for London, which is still the Medina of the emigration, has been replaced by a very doubtful respect for Geneva — what is the guarantee that the Proudhonists will not succeed in one fine day having the Council transferred, if only as a matter of international courtoisie,†a to Brussels or Paris? Finally: such centres should never be put in places where deportation is possible, as long as we have a spot free from this risk.

Page Break me43.81
Page me43.81

The more splendidly things go, the more important it is that you should keep them in your hands, and now that the business is also beginning to get under way in Germany, I do not believe that Becker†b has the stuff to manage it.
Page me43.81
I sent Kugelmann the biographical stuff on Friday from York.†106 It is a very good thing that something about your book†c should now simultaneously appear in French papers, too. Nota bene, have at least 20-30 reprints made of my article in the Fortnightly†11 (for which we will naturally pay, s'il le faut†d), they can be used very well. ANYHOW, the conspiracy of silence is now over, and if the thing is only blazing a path slowly, it is now doing it surely. GRAVEL is Kies. For the various stages of the Irish peat-ground I have no expressions, you will have to ask an East Frisian.
Page me43.81
Borkheim has already reminded me of the 'date of maturity'.
Page me43.81
Best greetings to the entire sea-bathing company.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.81
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

53
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.81
London, 10 August 1868

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed letter from J. Morley, the CHIEF EDITOR of the Fortnightly. Beesly did everything he could, but Mr Morley found the matter not to his taste.†119 NEVER MIND!
Page me43.81
The family is fortunately at the SEASIDE, which they all needed very much.

Page Break me43.82
Page me43.82
What you say about the transfer of the CENTRAL COUNCIL†73 to Geneva is very correct. It remains possible that in Brussels, malgré nous et contre nous,†a they will propose a CHANGE in order to document their heroic resistance to the principe autoritaire.†b At least in this case our delegates will have to vote for Geneva as pis aller.†c

Page me43.82
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.82
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

54
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.82
London, 10 August 1868

Dear Kugelmann,
On receipt of your letter, I asked around, but in vain. At the moment it is impossible to get money from the UNIONS here for foreign STRIKES.†120 The various data about the Linden factory contained in the latest Hanoverian papers sent me are of great interest to me.
Page me43.82
My family is, at present, at the seaside, which was all the more necessary since both GIRLS†d seemed very delicate after their illness. Lafargue, after passing his SURGEON examinations here in London, will operate as assistant at his hospital for a few weeks, and then move to Paris where, however, he will still have to pass the French medical examinations.†121
Page me43.82
At the moment I am more occupied with PRIVATE than with PUBLIC ECONOMY. Engels has offered to be my guarantor for a loan of £100-150 at 5% interest, the first half payable in January, the second in July. So far, however, I have not been able to find a creditor.
Page me43.82
I hope 'verry' much that the state of my work will allow me to abandon London for good and all and move to the continent next year, at the end of September. I shall strike my tents as soon as I can dispense with the Museum†a here. The high cost of living here is becoming increasingly burdensome as time goes on. It is true that the pettiness of conditions over there is not much to my taste, but 'tranquillity is the first duty of citizens',†122 and this is the only way to achieve tranquillity. There have been all sorts of rows here, in and with the so-called FRENCH BRANCH†72 of the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION, about which I shall report in my next letter.†b

Page Break me43.83

Page me43.83
I am at present solus,†c and I feel strange, missing all the children's noise.
Page me43.83
Salut.
Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.83
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 7, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

55
MARX TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER†123
IN LONDON
Page me43.83
London, 11 August 1868

Dear Lessner,
Because of the orthographic mistakes, I have re-written the whole appeal, enclosed herewith. Now you should copy it in your own handwriting.
Page me43.83
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.83
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.84

56
ENGELS TO MARX†48
IN LONDON

Page me43.84
[Manchester,] 12 August 1868

Dear Moor,

It would be worth the trouble to find out more about Mr Morley's motives,†a even if this only leads to the conclusion that the petty, lousy cliquishness, which we used to assume only existed in Germany, also flourishes here. If Morley refuses the piece†119 despite Beesly's influence, then he has his reasons. These men are, au fond,†b bourgeois, and MR Morley has all the reasons in the world to prevent giving publicity to things like those you have presented in your analysis. These are no isms; THAT KNOCKS HIM ON THE HEAD, and hence the lack of space. Still, I have no fear that we shall therefore be unable to present the book†c to the English public, but the easiest and simplest way is cut off, and we shall have to search until we find a new one. In the meantime, the French articles will produce their effect,†116 and it would be a good thing if they could be shown to the gentlemen of the Fortnightly; it would be very nice if Mr Morley could still be forced to accept the piece.
Page me43.84

The day after tomorrow I shall probably go for 10 days to Bridlington Quay (address: Mr Burns, 3 Burlington Place, Bridlington Quay, Yorkshire), since Charles†d is recovering; but, of course, something may still crop up, in which case I shall write to you. I was there with Moore from Friday till Monday†e; we made quite interesting geological studies.
Page me43.84

Best greetings from Lizzie.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.84
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.85

57
MARX TO ENGELS†124
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.85
[London,] 13 August 1868

DEAR FRED,

I hope that these lines will reach you before your departure, for there is periculum in mora.†a
Page me43.85
Firstly, I must send money to Ramsgate, so they can stay there another week. As their departure was delayed for weeks after your last remittance, smaller domestic debts were paid; on the other hand, my wife had to retrieve watches and other things from the pawnshop so that they could appear RESPECTABLE at the watering place.
Page me43.85
Secondly, one of the épiciers,†b who is owed £6 and a few shillings, must be paid this week, since the man is shutting up shop.
Page me43.85
Thirdly, I have already received 2 SUMMONS for QUEEN'S TAXES (about £8). The LOCAL TAXES are paid, as you know. I absolutely cannot put off these sums.
Page me43.85
For two further pressing items — the LANDLORD, who is unfortunately in London now, and a bill of exchange for £12 payable on the 25th of this month — I shall still perhaps receive money in time from Germany.
Page me43.85
I have written to my cousins August and Karl Philips in Amsterdam and Aachen in order to find out whether they are back.†125 It would be a sheer waste of money to go to the continent in order to borrow, before one is sure that the people are there.
Page me43.85
For the past week I have not had a wink of sleep and l'illustre Gaudissart†c Borkheim, who visited me the day before yesterday to take leave, said I really should get rid of my jaundice. He entertained me with the story of the £1,000 he is trying to blackmail out of Oppenheim.
Page me43.85
In great haste.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.85
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.86

58
ENGELS TO MARX†124
IN LONDON
Page me43.86
[Manchester, about 14 August 1868]

Dear Moor,

I shall send you money tomorrow, our cashier had no more notes this afternoon. Do not feel awkward about 'pressing', I only wish there were more there to be pressed out; but bear in mind as well that in 6 weeks we shall have to pay the £150 with interest, and Borkheim says that the interest will bring the total up to 165! I think you will have to make up your mind to go to Holland; we cannot 'afford' to borrow at such interest.
Page me43.86

Faucher made me laugh very much.†83 Absolutely the noble arrogance of this fellow. The patronising introduction and then criticism (and what criticism!) of a very elementary thing in which you present the views of the economists, thus only make a resumé; he wisely keeps his fingers off your own things. Also very good is his admission that the present generation, including Faucher, knows nothing of either Jacob or Joseph, thus confirming your opinion that they 'really have learned nothing'. Incidentally, the impudence of the fellow is comic. He really assumes that his public knows nothing, will learn nothing, and even wishes to read nothing except such Faucherist piss. And the man is right about it.
Page me43.86

Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.86
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.87

59
MARX TO ENGELS
IN BRIDLINGTON QUAY
Page me43.87
London, 21 August 1868

DEAR FRED,

My wife returned from Ramsgate yesterday, but the children are still there. Since I have been puking gall for about 1 week, and, in addition, cholera is developing here, my wife insists that I should also go to the sea at Ramsgate for at least 2-3 days. So I shall be leaving today.†126
Page me43.87

The £25 received with many thanks: the bill of exchange for £12, as I assured myself today, falls due on 28 August. So far I have not yet received anything from the continental side.
Page me43.87
It would be best if you send the money for the LIFE INSURANCE to me myself, on the date due, when I can pay the people. For they must, after all, hand over to me the promissory note that I signed. Dealing with this via Schyler would in fact compromise me.
Page me43.87
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.87
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

60
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.87
Bridlington Quay, 22 August 1868

Dear Moor,
Best thanks for the Lanterne and the B. Becker.†a The closer one comes to see the details of the Lassalle tragicomedy, the more the comical side emerges. This man was ruined by his IRREPRESSIBLE reflection upon himself, his permanent self-contemplation. 'How do I appear to myself?' was the eternal refrain. Poor Baron Izzy! Comic at that exalted moment when he commissioned his alter ego, Rüstow, to bed the beautiful Helen†a per procura†b if necessary — he well knew how little danger this involved — as at that other moment when the Wallachian†c shot away his genitals. Poor Izzy! To be gelded by a shot from a Wallachian.†d You always found it so comical that his gob had been stopped, but now this as well.

Page Break me43.88
Page me43.88
Seiler! That is the impression of the whole story. Sebastian Seiler, the only worthy historiographer of this tragicomedy — he will hang himself that he missed this putrid scene. En attendant†e it is quite amusing that the 'testamentary successor of Lassalle'†127 declares him an aristocrat, traitor and cad, and is forced to appropriate all those things that we formerly had published against him himself and against Schweitzer.†128 Bastards!

Page me43.88
On Wednesday or Thursday†f I shall go back to Manchester from here and shall then visit my mother for a week — probably in Ostend. I am still waiting for a letter from her, and have no idea where I stand in the meantime.†129
Page me43.88
Naturally I would have sent the money for the loan from the insurance company only to you, if you had not from the start shoved the whole affair away from you and onto Borkheim, so that I had to turn to him simply to find out how much had to be paid. That I could, of course, only do with the simultaneous remark that I would send the sum to him, since he was indeed standing surety for the money. As I already wrote to you, it would never have occurred to me to send the money to that jackass Schyler.†g But I expect to see you before then, in London at the end of next week.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.88
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.89

61
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.89
London, 26 August 1868

DEAR FRED,
Still no 'SUPPLIES' from Germany. It is, of course, idiotic to depend completely upon half-promises. But if you are drowning you clutch at every straw. On Friday†a the bill of exchange for £12, about which I wrote to you,†b is due. Since nothing had arrived by today, and to have no protest in the house, I just visited my baker, who told me he could 'perhaps' get the money by tomorrow evening, but only for a few days. At the same time, I have received the enclosed scrawl from my LANDLORD. That everything should happen to one just at this time. It is enough to drive one mad.
Page me43.89
Bring me back or send me the screed by Becker.†c His theoretical-political-economic criticisms of Lassalle have been copied from your pamphlet on the military question.†d
Page me43.89

This Becker has done us a great service with his Seileriana. He deserves to be Lassalle's 'testamentary successor'.†127
Page me43.89
The invitation which I received to the congress of the General Association of German Workers (Hamburg, 22-25 August)†130 is signed by Schweitzer as President and by more than 20 workers from different districts of Germany (members of the Executive Committee). I had to take the latter into consideration in my reply.†e I explained that I could not come because of the work of the Central Council of the International Working Men's Association, and said I was glad to see that the starting points of any 'serious' workers' movement — agitation for complete political freedom, regulation of the working day and international co-operation of the working class — were emphasised in their programme for the congress.†f That is to say, in other words, I congratulated them on having abandoned Lassalle's programme.†a Whether they will notice the point remains to be seen. Schweitzer, the only man with brains in the whole Lassalle gang, will certainly detect it. But whether he will think it advisable to show this or to pretend to be dense, nous verrons.†b

Page Break me43.90

Your
K. M.

Page me43.90
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

62
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.90
Manchester, 28 August 1868

Dear Moor,
I found your letter of the 25th†c waiting for me here, and as promised yesterday,†131 I enclose 2 fivers and 1 tenner, with which his lordship the LANDLORD will have to content himself for the time being.
Page me43.90
I expect a letter from my mother any day that she has arrived in Ostend, and I will immediately dash there†129; I shall see you in London in any case, but it is doubtful whether I shall be able to stay there for a day on my outward journey.

Page me43.90
In haste.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.90
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.91

63
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.91
London, 29 August 1868

DEAR FRED,
The £20 received with BEST THANKS.
Page me43.91
Tussy had a great shock today. She found Dicky dead in his cage although he was still singing merrily yesterday. He has been buried with full honours.
Page me43.91
Dupont has received the mandate from Naples to represent the Neapolitan branch.†132 Since the Mentana business, as we see from Italian reports, there has been a general reactionary trend in domestic affairs, and in particular the workers' right to meet and form societies has almost been done away with.†133
Page me43.91
In Paris, happily, we still have our old people, behind bars. The committee there will send a délégué to Brussels, but against that the various corps de métier†a will send 8-9.†134 Our people have written to us from prison suggesting that these corps de métier MEN should be 'compromised politically' so that there should be no way back for them. Just to show the sort of methods to which the Paris police have recourse: A gentleman calling himself 'Eugène Dupont' from London visited the wives of several of the prisoners to pump them. He was a police agent, but his play-acting did not work anywhere.
Page me43.91
Eccarius left for Nuremberg as our délégué today.†135 From there he will go to Brussels. He is correspondent of The Times in both cases.†136
Page me43.91
The so-called branche française,†72 under the leadership of Messrs Pyat and Vésinier, is sending a delegate to Brussels in order — horribile dictu†b — to put us in the dock!
Page me43.91

Apropos. If Moore is still there, tell him it would be good if he could pay to me his USUAL CONTRIBUTION to the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION by Tuesday.†c We are weakly represented in Brussels, and every shilling that we can raise now will be used to send one MEMBER MORE there. TUESDAY NEXT IS OUR LAST SITTING this year before the congress.†137

Page Break me43.92
Page me43.92
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.92
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

64
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.92
Manchester, 1 September 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed the £5 for Moore's SUBSCRIPTION to the INTERNATIONAL. So get me the receipt for him.
Page me43.92
I am waiting on tenterhooks for a letter from my mother informing me of her arrival in Ostend and of her address. I am to go there for a few days,†129 and hear and see nothing. If there is no news by the day after tomorrow, hardly anything will come of it, since good old Gottfried†a wishes to go away next week. As soon as I have news, I shall notify you by telegraph of my forthcoming arrival†b in London.
Page me43.92
I shall bring the Lassalle swindle†c with me, or Schorlemmer, who has it, will send it to you as soon as he's read it.
Page me43.92
Jones is holding OPEN AIR MEETINGS here for the workers,†102 but acts so tamely that he is already being attacked for it by his rival Henry. On Saturday†d evening he called Gladstone 'THAT GREAT LEADER OF THE WORKING CLASSES!' I heard this myself. He is being too clever once again.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.92
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.93

65
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.93
London, 9 September 1868

DEAR FRED,
The £167 paid on 8 September, RECEIPT received and BOND received back.
Page me43.93
I am sending you enclosed The Times and 2 issues of The Daily News about the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S CONGRESS.†a†138 You must send back the 2 'Daily News' by return.
Page me43.93
You see from the FIRST LEADER of The Times†b what a good policy it was to send our report†c to it alone, with a few words TO THAT EFFECT.
Page me43.93
In great haste.
Page me43.93
Salut.
Your
K. Marx

Page me43.93
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

66
MARX TO GEORG ECCARIUS

AND FRIEDRICH LESSNER†139
IN BRUSSELS
Page me43.93
London, 10 September 1868

Dear Eccarius and Lessner,

FIRST MY THANKS TO LESSNER FOR HIS LONG AND INTERESTING LETTER.†140
Page me43.93

You must not allow the congress†138 to last beyond this week.

Page Break me43.94
Until now — AS FAR AS ENGLAND IS CONCERNED — there has been nothing to discredit it.
Page me43.94

If the Belgians and French should once again place masses of new stuff on the agenda, let them know it will not do,†141 since
Page me43.94

1. the Germans are very poorly represented, as their congresses are being held almost simultaneously in Germany†142;
Page me43.94

2. England is almost not represented because of the suffrage movement;
Page me43.94

3. the German Swiss are not yet represented at all, since they have only just affiliated, and those branches long in existence have exhausted their funds in the Geneva strike†16;
Page me43.94

4. the discussions are being conducted one-sidedly, in French;
Page me43.94

5. therefore, decisions on general theoretical questions must be avoided, since this can only lead to protests later from the non-Belgians and non-French.
Page me43.94

The public is naturally interested mainly in the question of war. Pompous declamations and high-faluting phrases do no HARM here. The decision to be taken in this connection would seem to be simply that the working class is not yet sufficiently organised to throw any decisive weight onto the scales; that, however, the congress protests in the name of the working class, and denounces those who instigate war; that a war between France and Germany is a civil war, ruinous for both countries and for Europe as a whole. A statement that war could only benefit the Russian government can hardly be made acceptable to the French and Belgian gentlemen.†a
Page me43.94

Greetings to friend Becker.†b
K. Marx

Page me43.94

If the question of crédit mutuel is raised, Eccarius should simply declare that the workers in England, Germany and the United States have nothing to do with Proudhonist dogmas and consider the credit question to be of secondary importance.
Page me43.94
The resolutions of the congress should be telegraphed to the London newspapers. So don't do anything discreditable.

K. M.

Page me43.94
First published in Deutsche Worte, Nr. 5, Jg. XVIII, 1898

Printed according to the journal

Page Break me43.95

67
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.95
London, 12 September 1868

DEAR FRED,
Luckily the congress†138 ends today and up to Thursday†a — that is as far as the news goes — it had only compromised itself tolerably. But one must always fear some public disgrace, since the Belgians form the enormous majority. Mr Tolain and other Parisians want to have the GENERAL COUNCIL moved to Brussels. They are very JEALOUS OF London. It is a great step forward that the Proudhonist 'braves Belges'†b and French, who dogmatically declaimed against TRADES UNIONS, etc., in Geneva (1866) and Lausanne (1867),†143 are now most fanatically in favour. In spite of all their boasting, the 'braves Belges' had made no preparations. For example, the correspondent of The Daily News hunted in vain for 3 days for the possible meeting place until he accidentally ran into Jung and Stepney. In fact, the premises had not been booked in advance, and the 'braves Belges' wanted to charge the expenses (among others, those for their 250 participants) to the London GENERAL COUNCIL, to which they and the French owe about 3,000 frs. The sum is now being raised by private collections among the delegates.
Page me43.95
I am in a bad scrape. Laura has fallen sick since you were here,†129 and my wife was forced to borrow £10 from her simply to meet the extra expenses, as we are absolutely broke.
Page me43.95
I have heard nothing at all from Holland†c and must therefore regard the silence as intentional. I really do not know what to do.
Page me43.95

Apropos. It was a good thing that we changed the word CONVICTS into VICTIMS.†d

Page Break me43.96
Page me43.96
On the return of Shaw — who was sent at Moore's expense†a — the latter will receive his RECEIPT.
Page me43.96
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.96
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

68
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER
IN NEW YORK
Page me43.96
London, 14 September 1868
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Meyer,
Enclosed the issue of The Times containing the 4th ANNUAL REPORT of the GENERAL COUNCIL (written by me), and the very interesting Times FIRST LEADER on this document.†b This is the first time that it has abandoned its tone of moquerie about the working class, and taken it 'verry' au sérieux. Spread this around. Inform Jessup of this.
Page me43.96
I must reply to both your letters, the first to me and the 2nd to Eccarius, which was handed me in his absence (he has not yet returned from Brussels).
Page me43.96
As far as the first letter is concerned, it is your fault if Sorge (who is completely unknown to me) has received credentials.†144 If you wanted simply to give him a recommendation for a particular purpose, you should have written so clearly. The way you put it in your letter, I believed that Sorge was your and A. Vogt's man. So be more careful in future. Then you made the second mistake of giving the credentials to Sorge, instead of writing to me first about the misunderstanding!
Page me43.96

The mistake has been made, but it is not irreparable.
Page me43.96
The Brussels Congress†138 has once again allotted the General

Page Break me43.97
Council to London. But it is now to be regarded as a new COUNCIL, which revises all old credentials. So write to me whether you and A. Vogt want credentials. Write, too, in which manner we should withdraw Sorge's credentials or, alternatively, inform him that the new General Council has changed the credentials.†145
Page me43.97
Drury was here for a while. Recently, shortly before the Brussels Congress, he was proposed as authorised agent of the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION to the AMERICAN LABOR UNION†146 and its congress. We did not agree to this at the time, since the source of the suggestion†a appeared suspicious to us. Please observe the man more closely first, either yourself or through friends.
Page me43.97
No COPIES remain of the Commonwealth PAPER. For the past few years there have not been any agitational writings in our sense in England. My book†b has not yet been translated into English.†147 Eccarius, otherwise very capable, but at the same time very AMBITIOUS, has intentionally not mentioned it in The Commonwealth or at other opportunities. He likes to appropriate my propositions for himself. At the congress in Brussels, Lessner mentioned my book in his speech about machinery. The correspondent of The Daily News reported this.†c Eccarius, who reported the congress sessions for The Times, suppressed it.†136 His conduct is all the more absurd since he owes me not only his knowledge, but also his post as general secretary on the GENERAL COUNCIL. I alone supported him (at The Commonwealth too) against attacks by the English and French.†148 He relies upon the experience he already has with me, that I am only concerned with the cause, and ignore personal stupidities!
Page me43.97
I shall not give him your letter.
Page me43.97
The more English excerpts from my book you can get into the American press the better.†149
Page me43.97
Send them to me!
Page me43.97
I attach the enclosed card. It was sent to us, with a letter, to establish contact with us. Address: G. W. Randall, SECRETARY, WORKINGMEN'S INSTITUTE, 3 Tremont Row, ROOM 52, Boston N. E.
Page me43.97
I lost contact years ago with all my acquaintances in America. I am still in touch only with Meyer†d in St. Louis, the friend of our J. Weydemeyer (deceased last year).
Page me43.97
Write me all you can find out about the relationship between the railways and real estate.

Page Break me43.98
Page me43.98
You may have seen that, at its congress in Hamburg, the General Association of German Workers passed a special resolution giving recognition to my book.†104
Page me43.98
Write to Randall on my behalf as GERMAN SECRETARY of the GENERAL COUNCIL.
Page me43.98
Best greetings to A. Vogt and yourself.

Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.98
I am sending 2 copies of The Times, one for you, the other for Jessup.†a

Page me43.98
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

69
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me43.98
London, 14 September 1868

Dear Jung,
The Times today carries Eccarius' reports of the 9th and 10th.†b
Page me43.98
In the debate on machinery, he makes Lessner's SPEECH worse; it was much better in The Daily News. Lessner quoted my book,†c as you have seen in The Daily News.†d Eccarius suppresses the quotation.
Page me43.98
Yet even better. In The Daily News the resolution about machines, etc., was noted as a proposal from the GENERAL COUNCIL.†e In The Times, Mr Eccarius converts this into his personal proposal.†f

Page Break me43.99
This is a point on which you must collar him. His egotism needs a cuff TO SET HIM RIGHT AGAIN.

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.99
First published in: G. Jaeckh, Die Internationale, Leipzig, 1904

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

70
ENGELS TO MARX†34
IN LONDON
Page me43.99
Manchester, 16 September 1868

Dear Moor,

I can only write briefly and badly, I have rheumatism in my right hand and have been writing all the afternoon.

Page me43.99

Enclosed a ten-pound note. When Borkheim returns, you absolutely must force him to undertake some sort of coup, if nothing else can be done. You will understand that I myself find things rather tight at the moment. Did you ever write to Meissner asking for a settling of accounts? With the workers bombarding from all sides now, the burking will soon come to an end, and the second edition†a will not have to be awaited for long. Now is the time to insert a new advertisement for the book. Think one out, I shall send it to Meissner, whom I owe an answer anyway. But don't put it off. Furthermore, Meissner should be sent The Times with the resolution of the Germans in Brussels, the Demokratisches Wochenblatt of yesterday,†150 etc., the man must be kept happy. If you have not done it, do it (I can no longer get that No. of The Times here). And then the exchange value, too, will gradually come into effect for you.

Page me43.99

The things in The Times in Eccarius' report†b will be a big help to you here, and MR Morley will be amazed.†c The papers here also carry fairly full extracts from the report (but most in The Daily News).

Page Break me43.100
Page me43.100

The congress went well after all. The method of conducting the babble in public and the BUSINESS on the quiet has worked splendidly. So, the COUNCIL will remain in London, and once again the Proudhonists have only the satisfaction of having resolved that they are Proudhonists, and nobody else is.

Page me43.100

One might also send Meissner the No. of the Zukunft about Lloyd, etc., in which you are mentioned twice. I can do all this, if you want.

Page me43.100
Moses Hess amused me greatly.†151
Page me43.100
But the question now arises: Has not a popular short presentation of the content of your book for workers become an urgent necessity? If it is not written, some Moses or other will come along and do it and botch it up. What do you think of it?
Page me43.100
Enclosed also Eichhoff back.†a
Page me43.100
It is impossible to leave without stupidities being committed. While I was away,†129 the fellows on the comité of the Schiller Institute,†76 acting on the suggestion of the Bradfordians, invited that swine Vogt to give a lecture here. I naturally announced my resignation at once, 'in order not to give an indirect vote of confidence to a man who, I considered it proved, was a paid Bonapartist agent in 1859'.†b The swine is coming tomorrow.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.100
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

71
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.100
London, 16 September 1868

Dear Engels,
THANKS FOR THE £10. At the end of the letter I shall say more about money matters. First about 'general items'.

Page Break me43.101
Page me43.101
The policy of sending the report solely to The Times has proved itself.†136 It has forced all London newspapers to speak, with the exception of the deeply-indignant Levy.†a The Times did not accept Eccarius' reports from Nuremberg. It only took the bait after it had received the report from me.†b The Morning Advertiser of yesterday carried (upsetting Blind) A FIRST LEADER in favour of the International against The Times.†c The Star declares the congress to have been a 'SUCCESS'.†d The Standard, which first attacked us, SNEAKS before the WORKING CLASS in a leading article yesterday.†e It knocks the capitalists and will now even pull grimaces about the LAND QUESTION. The Journal des Débats regrets that the English and the Germans and the Belgians, as shown by the resolution on the land,†152 belong to the 'secte communiste' and that the French, on the other hand, keep on reproducing 'les déclamations ridicules de Proudhon'.†f

Page me43.101

People are very dissatisfied with Eccarius and next Tuesday†g a storm will break that will do him good.†153 The points of the indictment are as follows:

Page me43.101

He took almost no part at all in the congress and afterwards posed in The Times as the LEADING MIND. Also in The Times, he took over the proposals of the GENERAL COUNCIL as his private property, and ditto the applause for them as due to him. He suppressed as far as possible the speeches of the others and, to flatter The Times, falsified Dupont's concluding speech. Apart from this, Lessner has the GRIEVANCE that when he (Lessner) read from my book, Eccarius suppressed this in The Times,†154 ditto that he only included the resolution on the book†150 in his correspondence under HIGH PRESSURE, and finally that he falsified the German resolution on war.†155 He said that a European war would be a civil war, instead of saying, as the German resolution stated, THAT 'A WAR BETWEEN FRANCE AND GERMANY WAS A CIVIL WAR FOR THE PROFIT OF RUSSIA'. He completely omits the latter point. On the other hand, he attributes to the Germans and the English the Belgian nonsense that it was necessary TO STRIKE AGAINST WAR.

Page me43.101

On the other hand, as a reporter he has done us some service. The long and the short of it is that he will be told that he should figure only as reporter in future, with the COUNCIL paying his travelling expenses and The Times paying for the articles. But he will never again be named as DELEGATE. Thus preserved from the CONFLICT OF FRACTIONS.

Page Break me43.102

Page me43.102

Lessner says that we accomplished so much despite being so little represented at the congress, which was almost entirely Belgian (with the addition of FRENCHMEN), because on all decisive points the Belgian workers, notwithstanding their Brussels LEADERS, voted with London. Moses is said to have made the best SPEECH against the Proudhonists.†151 Tolain was so furious that he did not appear at the banquet. Not only has the Central Council†73 here been appointed once again, but the list of members, purified by us, was accepted. Within four weeks Vésinier is to submit to a commission in Brussels proof of his suspicions regarding Tolain.†156 In case these are baseless (and they are), the congress has already conditionally expelled him from the Association as a slanderer. The delegate of the FRENCH BRANCH tabled a bill of indictment against the GENERAL COUNCIL which, among other things, contained the modeste demand that the French member of the GENERAL COUNCIL should be named by the FRENCH BRANCH. In response, the congress simply proceeded with the agenda (exactly as we have treated the GRIEVANCES of these fellows in the GENERAL COUNCIL).

Page me43.102

At Nuremberg,†135 Liebknecht committed a completely useless stupidity (even one contrary to the Rules) by forcing upon the people Becker's confused wishy-washy stuff as the Programme of the International Working Men's Association.†157 Sonnemann remarked correctly that this was a quid pro quo.†a But Mr Wilhelm wanted to have democratic babble for the 'People's Party'!†38

Page me43.102

Meissner wrote a few lines some weeks ago. He would only be able to render an account in some weeks. It appeared to him that up to the present no profit had been made. I am sending him The Times and Liebknecht†b and the Zukunft†c today. The advertisement will have to be done by you. I cannot advertise my own book.†d And it would be a very good thing if you yourself wrote a small popular explanatory pamphlet. Let us hope that things will now get going.

Page me43.102

As regards money matters, I simply cannot go on in this way. It makes all work impossible. I believe it would be best if you would write to Borkheim and ask him whether it was not possible to raise money for me somehow since, after paying off the LOAN SOCIETY and other accumulated debts, I was now in great difficulties because of extra expenses, including trousseau for Laura, who was soon going to Paris. (And this is in fact an aggravating circumstance!) I have studied Borkheim enough to know that he must believe that I have, WITHIN CERTAIN LIMITS, A SETTLED INCOME, but that I am in particular difficulties because there is as yet no income from the book, etc. He should think that you are writing to him behind my back. Of course, you must give him your guarantee, or rather promise it.

Page Break me43.103

Page me43.103

It is a very good thing that Vogt is in England†a just when the INTERNATIONAL is arousing such interest. He can put two and two together.

Page me43.103

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.103

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

72
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me43.103
Manchester, 18 September 1868

Dear Moor,

I think you will not be able to enforce the intended exclusion of Eccarius from the congress; he will be indispensable, as a delegate too. Apart from this, it is very good, however, that he does not get away with this, and that there are various people WHO WILL WASH HIS HEAD, as Lafargue says.

Page me43.103

As regards the advertisement (annonce) about your book,†b it is absurd to claim that you could not write it yourself. You even wanted to write it yourself when I sent you one that you did not like.†c Be so kind as to return to this matter, and send me the advertisement you promised me then. I shall then pass it on to

Page Break me43.104

Meissner. But we shall have to support him somewhat so that his good will does not weaken.

Page me43.104

In puncto†a money I shall write to Borkheim willingly as soon as you inform me that he is back. Apropos this matter, you must, however, let me know what happened when you drew the loan. For how much did you insure your life, at what premium, and is the policy still valid? Because it might still be possible to get a new loan or an advance on the policy itself from the same society. But how am I to raise money for you if you leave me quite in the dark about all these matters? If I can reach agreement with Gottfried Ermen, who will scarcely return before the end of October, I shall immediately be able to raise some funds once again, but everything depends on this. If I can not reach agreement with him, my own position will become very uncertain. It can, however, take until the end of this year before the matter is settled, and this means another 3 1/2 months.†158

Page me43.104

William the Handsome†b is getting exuberant now that his Bismarck has left him.†159 The drive towards war is becoming ever clearer. For all that, I believe it is now too late for this year. Purchasing horses and the actual mobilisation still require more time in France than in Prussia, and despite all the preparations and bragging I do not believe that the French need less than 6 weeks for this. As the domestic supply of horses is insufficient, the beginning of the actual mobilisation, that is to say, now, the firm decision to strike, will inevitably be marked by large purchases of horses abroad, which immediately becomes public knowledge. Even now it will be a long time before they can have the entire number of horses necessary for war. Little Louis†c will have to give 5-6 weeks NOTICE, and this brings us to the end of October; and especially with the enormous masses now involved, a winter campaign would certainly only be waged in an extreme emergency. If there are not quite special reasons, we are pretty safe until March-April, and all sorts of things can happen before then.

Page me43.104

In addition, Louis still does not have anything like the number of men he needs. He will hardly be able to raise more than 650,000 troops of the line (gendarmerie, garde municipale and all sorts of other police troops figure in the army budget), and much of the garde mobile does not even exist on paper. It takes at least 6/7 years to fully implement a changed military system, and his is only one year old. I do not believe that Louis wants a war precisely at this moment, if he can avoid it, since every month of delay

Page Break me43.104a

Marx's and Engels' correspondents:
Paul Lafargue, Johann Philipp Becker, Friedrich Lessner, Ludwig Kugelmann

Page Break me43.104b

Georg Eccarius, Robert Applegarth, Nikolai Danielson

Page Break me43.105
brings stronger reinforcement to his forces than to those of Prussia.
Page me43.105
I hope Laura is well again? Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.105
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

73
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.105
London, 19 September 1868

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed a letter from Schweitzer,†160 ditto one from Essen and also 6 numbers of the Social-Demokrat. I must have all this stuff back by Tuesday.†a What answer should I give the cunning Schweitzer? You will see from the debates of the General Association of German Workers congress†104 (in the Social-Demokrat) that the 'true-blue' Lassalleans smelt that their president was leaving Lassalle's course in proposing a congress for the establishment of TRADES UNIONS and settlement of STRIKES.†161 He only received permission to launch this agitation independently of the Association of German Workers by threatening to resign. His purpose, of course, is to get in ahead of Liebknecht, etc. He was also aware that, with the development of a real workers' organisation in Germany based on TRADES UNIONS, his artificial sectarian Association WOULD SOON BE NOWHERE. What he now describes in a LEADER (No. 104)†b as the summa of Lassalle's discoveries: 'state credit for the foundation of productive associations', is literally copied from the programme of French Catholic socialism, duce†c Buchez, in the Atelier at the time of Louis Philippe.†162 I must answer diplomatically and would like to know your view.

Page Break me43.106
Page me43.106

Vogt is no longer available here.†a But yesterday I wrote to Liebknecht and categorically requested information about the copies (perhaps 150) sent to him.†163
Page me43.106

Next Tuesday†b at the first session of the GENERAL COUNCIL there will be stormy weather. Dupont is also furious about Eccarius because he took as good as no part in the congress.†153 I shall try to protect Eccarius against 'positive' measures,†c but this time I shall not be able to take sides for him so strongly as I did last year against Fox, Carter, etc.†148
Page me43.106

A Bordelais,†d merchant, friend of Lafargue, English-speaking, passed through here after a journey through Sweden and Denmark. He told Lafargue that in higher circles there they speak much about my book,†e which does not sound very likely to me.
Page me43.106

Laurachen is somewhat better. Her SUFFERINGS are connected with certain natural processes of development. They want to leave at the beginning of October, and this is awkward because the linen part of the trousseau is still incomplete.
Page me43.106

L'illustre Gaudissart†f returned today.
Page me43.106

The loan was like this: You borrow money FOR A CERTAIN TERM. If you die before maturity, the sum need not be paid back. On the other hand, in the contrary case repayment must be made on the date of maturity with the STIPULATED interest. The transaction is then at an end. It is thus no life insurance. You do not receive a policy, but the money, for which you make out a BOND. This was naturally returned to me. It is the peculiar form that makes the whole business so expensive — certainly the worst and the dearest way to borrow money.
Page me43.106

The sole circumstance which would, in my opinion, favour Bonaparte in a belated campaign is that Russia would then be more paralysed, at least for military action. One thing is certain. The whole of France believes that war is IMMINENT.
Page me43.106

As for the advertisement, I shall d'abord†g see what Meissner answers. I have asked him about it.†h
Page me43.106
How did things go with fat Vogt?†i
Page me43.106
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.106
The report on the Brussels Congress in the Opinion nationale states, inter alia:

Page Break me43.107
'Je dois mentionner ici le rapport général de l'Association, rédigé par le conseil de Londres. Mentionner, c'est bien le seui mot que je puisse employer, car, je ne suis point assez fort légiste pour trier et élaguer les phrases incriminables par les lois de France, et il s'en pourrait trouver quelques-unes de ce genre.'†a

Page me43.107
Speaks then of the PASSAGES dealing with 'le gouvernement français'.

'La critique y est verte parfois, et souvent ironique. Je le répète, je ne puis m'en faire juge; mais je dois avouer que le public a été moins timide que votre correspondant; il a couvert d'applaudissements frénétiques tous les passages que je m'abstiens de citer.'†b

Page me43.107
There were 12 REPORTERS from France there.
Page me43.107
The Émancipation†c and the Journal de Bruxelles†d attacked the congress in exactly the same way as they attacked us 20 years ago.
Page me43.107
One Russian was there as a journalist. He said he would send the General Council the Russian papers that wrote about the congress.

Page me43.107
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

74
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me43.107
Manchester, 21 September 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed returned the Schweitzer stuff.†160 The man is an idiot to believe that he can bribe you with such a letter. In making you chief of 'Europe' in general, he hints delicately that your kingdom is, for this very reason, not in any country in particular, i.e., strictly speaking, not of this world. He appoints you Pope so that you may anoint him Kaiser of Germany, and thus give a kick to Wilhelm.†a In any case, it is worth much that you have this letter in your hands.

Page Break me43.108

Page me43.108

I think you should, above all, point out to the philistine that his workers' congress†164 only makes sense if it is a genuine workers' congress, not merely a feeble imitation of his Hamburg congress; i.e. if Schweitzer sees to it that non-Lassallean elements are also represented. So far, there is no sign of this, and Schweitzer does not appear to have taken any steps in this direction. Whether he 'can make friends' with Wilhelm and others or not, is completely immaterial; in a matter like this he must go along with them. Then, regarding the statutes, you could write to him that what counts is less what is in them than how they are handled.

Page me43.108

The fellow obviously wishes to push out Wilhelmchen, Bebel and consorts, and be able to appeal to something in writing from you for this purpose. That must be very important to him, otherwise he would never have written you this letter, which delivers him absolutely into your hands for ever. You are quite right that he sees that a few Lassallean phrases will no longer do and that he must expand.

Page me43.108

If I am not mistaken you also gave Wilhelmchen copies of the 18th Brumaire.†b Some of them should be brought here, I no longer have a copy.

Page me43.108

I shall write to Gaudissart.†c

Page me43.108

The Spanish business†165 could end all the war clamour. La innocente Isabel†d was the only reliable ally that Louis†e had, and if a revolution should be victorious in Spain, the whole constellation will assume a different character. The affair will probably be decided very quickly; I believe the Innocent Lady is foutue.†f

Your
F. E.

Page me43.108
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.109

75
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.109
London, 23 September 1868

DEAR FRED,

From the enclosed you will see that Liebknecht wants to get rid of Schweitzer through me, just as Schweitzer wants to get rid of Liebknecht.†166 I have replied to Wilhelm†84: No overhastiness! If he acts with tact, Schweitzer will himself SETTLE DOWN TO MORE MODERATE 'PROPORTIONS' or ruin himself. The dissolution of the General Association of German Workers†167 brings Lassalleanism qua†a such to a forcible end, although it still may carry on for SOME TIME A LINGERING SECT LIFE.
Page me43.109

I enclose Schweitzer's report in the Social-Demokrat on the catastrophe.†b
Page me43.109

I completely share your view that the Spanish revolution (it has the same significance as the Neapolitan revolution of 1848†168) gives a new turn to European history and, in particular, like a deus ex machina, cuts the Gordian knot of the repulsive German-French war.
Page me43.109

Strohn has just arrived from the continent. So, more next time.

Your
Moor

Page me43.109

The Times paid Eccarius 2½ GUINEAS per column, sang hymns of praise to him, and made him advantageous proposals. Send Wilhelm†c back to me.

Page me43.109
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.110

76
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.110
Manchester, 24 September 1868

Dear Moor,

So that is the reason for the sycophantic letter from Schweitzer!†a The fellow obviously knew what was in store for him when he wrote to you. On the one hand, it may not be altogether unwelcome to him that he can drop the strict Lassallean religion, but fundamentally the loss of the 'tight' organisation and of the possibility to play at dictator is certainly fatal to him. Of course, this is the end of the Lassallean sect's self-important pretence that it is 'the party' in Germany, and the sect will gradually expire; it will continue to twitch the longest in the Bergisches Land, the real home of sects.
Page me43.110

Incidentally, as Wilhelm†b rightly guesses, his associations will also come under attack.†169 So much the better. The petty-bourgeois-people's-party-federalist fad of these fellows is not worth a penny. And it is a good thing that the government really stirs up the workers, once it sees that the workers won't let themselves be used by it against the bourgeoisie. Some form or another will surely be found.
Page me43.110

But what a comrade Wilhelm is! Less than 4 months since he entered into a 'sort of alliance' with Schweitzer,†105 and today they are again at loggerheads, and he is too SLIPPERY for him. He knew that before, didn't he — but what about the fine lads he had 'assigned to watch him'!
Page me43.110

What is this proclamation that you are supposed to issue by all means?†166 And these fine phrases in it about 'persons' which Wilhelm might construe against Baptist†c and Baptist against Wilhelm! The South German democrat is impossible to get rid of, once you have him in your system. One might think Wilhelm was writing to Struve.
Page me43.110

Schlöffel (the elder) has turned up again in Silesia. I am folding into the returned Social-Demokrat some curiosa from the Zukunft.
Page me43.110

If you had only gone to Nuremberg! You would have been compensated and afterwards been able to start again from the beginning with the SUFFERINGS. I tell you the fellow still can't distinguish you from Struve.

Page Break me43.111
Page me43.111

Apropos the dissolution of the General Association of German Workers†167 Wilhelm could now reprint the pertinent passages from my pamphlet,†a in which all this was predicted for the Lassallean gentlemen. What do you think about it? I could prepare the muck for him, as I still have a few copies here.†170

Your

F. E.

Page me43.111
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx. Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

77
MARX TO ENGELS†80
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.111
London, 25 September 1868

Dear FRED,

Can you send me £5 by Saturday†b morning? One of the TRADESMEN just called and told me he was on the verge of bankruptcy and would have great expenses if he had not raised A CERTAIN SUM from HIS CREDITORS by Saturday.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.111
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.112

78
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.112
London, 25 September 1868

DEAR FRED,

BY ALL MEANS do the stuff for Liebknecht†170 as quickly as feasible. Otherwise, the fellow will do it himself and, you may depend upon it, do it badly. It appears to me it would be a good thing if you were also to draw attention to what Bernhard Becker stole from your pamphlet†a and endorsed, after bitter experience, in his shitty pamphlet.†b (He cursed us so horribly when he was still 'President of Humanity'.†171) You can have the pamphlet right away if you write immediately to Strohn, who took it with him to Bradford.

Page me43.112

The time has now come to KICK this 'Lassalleanism' 'just for a start'. And there is no need at all to allow B. Becker's shitty pamphlet to be buried in silence.†172

Page me43.112

The 'appeal' the fiery Wilhelmchen speaks of†166 is this: I (i. e. in the name of the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, as its SECRETARY FOR GERMANY) must naturally address SOME GENERAL LINES to the German workers, now that their relationship to us has changed as a result of their various congress decisions. But no undue haste is necessary in so doing. In all these things 'more haste, less speed', and, as we know, our Wilhelmchen has shown no 'haste' with the matter for 6-7 years.

Page me43.112

Quant à†c Schweitzer, I had a sort of presentiment that some turning point WAS LOOMING SOMEWHERE. Although my reply to him had therefore been ready for some days†d — (in which I with schoolmasterly reserve point out to him, in particular, the difference in conditions between a sectarian movement and a real class movement) — I have, nevertheless, held the stuff back. And I will now only answer him after the results are available of his fresh attempt to call a congress in Berlin for forming TRADES UNIONS.†164 In any case, Schweitzer has learned one thing about me, that the promptness with which I answer his letters is always in inverse proportion to their 'warmth of feeling'.

Page Break me43.113

Page me43.113

Wilhelm has only ONE COPY left of The 18th Brumaire.

Page me43.113

How did things go with Vogt's LECTURES in the Schiller Institute†76?

Your
K. M.

Page me43.113

Blanqui was in constant attendance during the Brussels Congress.

Page me43.113

In a BLUE BOOK†173 about the crisis of 1857,†a Cardwell, CHAIRMAN of the COMMITTEE of Inquiry and the most disgusting washerwoman in the Peelite clique of old women, asks Dixon (MANAGING DIRECTOR of a bank which had failed in Liverpool) whether the SHAREHOLDERS of the bank had consisted largely of women, parsons and other persons with no knowledge of banking. BY NO MEANS, Dixon replied, they were mainly 'MERCANTILE MEN' but, he added very KNOWINGLY:

'THE MAJORITY OF THEM ARE PEOPLE IN BUSINESS, MERCANTILE MEN; BUT HOW FAR MERCANTILE MEN CAN BE CONSIDERED COMPETENT TO FORM AN OPINION ON ANY OTHER BUSINESS THAN THEIR OWN, IS RATHER A QUESTION.' Is that not nice?

Page me43.113

Apropos!
Moore should send me Foster's On Exchange from his lending library, since it is not in the library here. I shall send it back immediately.

Page me43.113
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

79
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.113
Manchester, 25 September 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed the desired five pounds in one bank note.
Page me43.113
The business in Spain†165 must be going well, since the government has so little good news to announce. Still, it is surprising that the telegraphs to the frontiers have not yet been cut. This proves that the Innocent Lady†a could very well go to Madrid if she really wanted to.

Page Break me43.114

Your
F. E.

Page me43.114
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

80
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.114
London, 26 September 1868

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR £5. These lousy little SHOPKEEPERS are a wretched class. My wife immediately took the money to the house of the dun. The man himself had 'made himself scarce' for the time being (and he is in his way quite a decent fellow); his wife, dripping with tears, accepted the money for him. Many, in fact most, of these SHOPKEEPERS experience all the misery of the proletariat, plus the 'fear' and 'serfdom of respectability', and without the COMPENSATING self-esteem of the better workers.
Page me43.114

Apropos. The squabble among the authorities of the TRADES UNIONS, which in fact paralysed them for years, has at last been settled. THE LONDON TRADES' COUNCIL (Odger et Co.), London WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION (Potter et Co.) and the AMALGAMATED TRADES UNIONS (I believe the main office is at present Sheffield, it changes annually) have finally agreed on joint action.†175 This is the outcome of the bourgeois CAMPAIGN aganist the TRADES UNIONS.
Page me43.114

I return the last numbers of Schweitzer,†b since you may need them in the article for Wilhelm.†170 Keep them in Manchester, but in such a way that they can be found again if needed. I do not believe that Schweitzer had an idea of the impending blow. Had this been the case he would scarcely have clucked so triumphantly about the 'tight organisation'.†c I believe it was the 'INTERNATIONAL

Page Break me43.115
WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION' that moved the Prussian government to this decisive blow. As for the 'warm fraternal' letter from Schweitzer to me,†160 this is explained simply by his fear that following the Nuremberg decision†135 I might now publicly speak up for Wilhelm†a and against him. Such a polemic would certainly be awkward after the Hamburg affair†104 (le bonhomme†b had written to me requesting me kindly to come to Hamburg in person, 'to have the well-earned laurels placed upon my brow'!).
Page me43.115

The most essential thing for the German working class is that it should cease to agitate by permission of the high government authorities. Such a bureaucratically schooled RACE must undergo a complete course of 'self help'. On the other hand, they undoubtedly have the advantage that they are starting the movement at a period when conditions are much further developed than they were for the English and that, as Germans, they have heads on their shoulders capable of generalising. Eccarius is full of praise for the parliamentary propriety and tact that reigned at the Nuremberg congress, particularly compared with the French at Brussels.†138
Page me43.115

In Spain things still look doubtful; but it appears to me that the movement can be suppressed only for a short time at the most.†165 One thing I do not understand is that the LEADERS did not wait until the 'Innocent Lady'†c had left Spain and was visiting Bonaparte. Could it be that the latter himself had a hand in the game?
Page me43.115

Salut.
Your

K. M.

Page me43.115

One of Schweitzer's most ridiculous operations — to which, however, he is absolutely forced by the prejudices of his army and as the president of the General Association of German Workers — is that he regularly pledges himself in verba magistri,†d and each time he makes a new concession to the needs of the real workers' movement he argues timidly that this does not contradict the dogmas of the Lassallean faith, the only guarantee of eternal salvation. The Hamburg Congress instinctively and quite correctly recognised that the General Association of German Workers, as the specific organisation of the Lassallean sect, was endangered by the real workers' movement operating through TRADES UNIONS, etc.,

Page Break me43.116

and that by participating in these officially it would forfeit the distinctiveness that constitutes its point d'honneur and raison d'être.

Page me43.116

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

81

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.116

London, 29 September 1868

Dear FRED,

Enclosed and attached letter from Eichhoff†176 together with 2 issues of the Social-Demokrat†a and the Staatsbürger-Zeitung.

Page me43.116

You will see from them that 'boozy' Schulze-Delitzsch has succeeded in giving momentary importance to Schweitzer's stage-trick; that Schweitzer's whole congress consists only (minus 12 men) of Lassalleans†177; and that Schweitzer believes that he can in a very simple way replace his dictatorship over the General Association of German Workers by the dictatorship over the German working class. That is very naive.

Page me43.116

The sole practical question for us is: Should I or should I not issue an appeal at this moment? In view of its position, the General Council must maintain an impartial stand. Would it not therefore be better to wait until 1. the nullity of the results of Schweitzer's game has become more apparent and, 2. Liebknecht and Co. have really organised something?

Page me43.116
It appears to me that the power of the General Council greatly depends upon its not tying itself down prematurely and never doing so without certainty of success; it should, rather, practise Russian diplomacy in its operations.
Page me43.116
If you share this view (and you must declare yourself in 2-3 days), I can simply write to Wilhelm and Eichhoff that the majority of the General Council has declared itself against any public proclamation until the elements that have joined the

Page Break me43.117
International Working Men's Association are sufficiently organised to provide the necessary backing.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.117
In the meantime Lassalleanism, which is already crumbling, can be further subverted UNDERHAND as, e.g., by your article.†a

Page me43.117
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

82
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.117
Manchester, 30 September 1868

Dear Moor,
Once you have entered into contact with Schweitzer in your capacity as Secretary FOR GERMANY,†b I do not see how you could do anything except observe complete neutrality between him and Wilhelmchen — at least in official conduct. As far as I know, the Lassalleans accepted your programme in Hamburg,†104 so more cannot be expected. One must simply leave it to Schweitzer to destroy himself; if we ourselves were in Germany, things would be different.
Page me43.117

Even from the previous Social-Demokrat I saw that he wanted to transfer his 'tight organisation' to the TRADES UNIONS†c; now we have to wait and see whether he succeeds, which I do not believe. TRADES BUSINESS is money business, and there dictatorship ends of itself. And the substitution won't work as easily as the bonhomme†d believes.
Page me43.117
The COUNCIL can and may only take sides when it is itself attacked directly or indirectly, or when the principles of the

Page Break me43.118
Association are infringed. This is precisely how it acted at the time with regard to the Parisians.†178
Page me43.118
Moreover, what is Wilhelmchen's organisation†169 so far, what has been the effect of the Nuremberg decision?†135 Have societies really affiliated, paid subscriptions, etc.? I know nothing about it. And what does Wilhelm want to do in relation to Schweitzer's STRIKE organisation?†164 What else does he want to organise? All this is still very unclear to me.
Page me43.118
Furthermore: What practical effect would it have if you and the General Council issued a declaration against the Lassalleans? I believe very little, at most the sect as such would stick together the more firmly. And what can they be reproached with? That they do not follow W. Liebknecht? As long as the fellows have trust in Schweitzer, and as long as Liebknecht and Schweitzer squabble, all sermonising about unity is sheer folly.
Page me43.118
To attack the Lassalle stuff in literary form is quite another matter. But to proscribe him, so to speak, would only consolidate a sect which is otherwise in disintegration.
Page me43.118
I suggest you also find occasion to give Schweitzer a piece of your mind concerning his dictatorial ambitions, if you write to him at all. After all, he wanted to send you the drafts first.†160
Page me43.118
Apropos. The letter from Eichhoff†176 was not enclosed.
Page me43.118
Vogt.†179 I could not write to you about this since Schorlemmer was in the LAKES, and I myself naturally asked no questions. So far, I only heard yesterday that the lecture did not cover the expenses, that Vogt, though he has always given the same lecture for the past year, nevertheless spoke very stumblingly and sloppily, often repeated himself, etc. After the lecture some people sat with him in the dining room, where the good Vogt was, however, so pressed with questions about the monkey trial by the Unitarian preacher Steinthal (brother of Weerth's†a), by Kalisch, an old boring language teacher, and by yet another fellow, that he was absolutely overwhelmed and sneaked off at the first opportunity. He is said to have felt altogether very uneasy and uncomfortable here, while in Bradford he was very fêted and buoyant. He made a few remarks to Davisson which caused the latter to note afterwards that he must be quite a nasty fellow, capable of anything. I shall be hearing more. In any case, he will not come here again.

Your
F. E.

Page Break me43.119
Page me43.119
You will probably be hearing from Borkheim shortly, otherwise from me in re nervi rerum.†a

Page me43.119
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

83
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.119
Manchester, 2 October 1868

Dear Moor,
Borkheim has done his business excellently. At the end of last month the sum of £72 was due for wine which Charles,†b Gumpert and I had received from him. It was only at the beginning of this month, however, that I could lay my hands on the cash. So I sent it to him yesterday and asked whether he knew how to raise £100 for you or whether he could leave the wine unpaid until February. He agreed to the latter and advanced the other £28 himself. So we have, I think, peace and quiet at least for the immediate future.
Page me43.119
But now you must get on with the 2nd volume,†41 and give your liver some exercise.
Page me43.119
The Spanish business†165 has gone brilliantly so far. The 'dynasty' had already been wrecked in the vagina of the Innocent Lady.†c So the minimum consequence: a change in dynasty and an elected king, plus a constituent assembly. All very nice things, even in themselves, on MR Bonaparte's frontier. It may get better yet.
Page me43.119
Schweitzeriana†d back this evening, forgotten yesterday by mistake. His manner of establishing a few nice little posts for life for himself and Fritzsche is priceless. But the whole story is impracticable. In the 'Union' 3 independent powers of different origin! 1. The committee, elected by the trades. 2. The presidium, elected by a general vote. 3. The congress, elected by the local organisations. This means collisions everywhere, and that is supposed to make for 'rapid action'. To be sure, the elú du suffrage universel,†a as everybody's trusted agent, is in the best position. Childish of Lassalle to have taken over these idiocies from the French Constitution,†181 and of Schweitzer to treat them as eternal models to be used everywhere.†b However it may be, the whole business will get nowhere so long as only the Lassalleans are in it, and as soon as others participate, too, the stuff will come to an end.

Page Break me43.120
Page me43.120
Have to catch the last post.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.120
Enclosed the ceremonial RECEIPT which the illustrious Gaudissart†c has accepted from you to prove that he is a serious businessman.

Page me43.120
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

84
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.120
London, 4 October 1868

DEAR FRED,
In the package which you will receive simultaneously there are:
1. Two letters from Eichhoff, the forgotten one and one which arrived today†182;
2. Letter from Liebknecht†183;
3. Letter from Borkheim†184;
4. Manuscript and letter from J. Dietzgen†185;
5. Letter from the Russian Danielson in Petersburg†186;
6. Letter from Lessner.
Page me43.120
Since most of these letters (which you must return with the exception of the manuscript) have only just arrived, in all haste the following:

Page Break me43.121
Page me43.121

Ad No. 5. I am naturally extraordinarily pleased to hear that my book will appear in Petersburg in Russian translation. I shall immediately send the people what they requested†a (as far as I can) as soon as you have returned the letter.

Page me43.121

Ad 4. Read through the manuscript. My view is that J. Dietzgen would do best if he condensed all his ideas into 2 printed sheets and had them printed in his name as a tanner. If he publishes them at the intended length, he will make a fool of himself because of the lack of dialectical development and the running in circles. Read it through and write your opinion.

Page me43.121

Ad 3. To understand Gaudissart's†b letter, briefly the following: He wanted to write about the Pan-Slav democratic movement; for this I gave him your articles about Bakunin in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung.†c His plan to appear with you before the public is excellent, but there is no hurry because he has not turned out his 25 printed sheets by a long way yet.

Page me43.121

Secondly, he maintained a certain correspondence, despite my warning, with Dr Crapper, alias Elard Biscamp. Now that the latter has directly attacked me and the International in the Weser-Zeitung and the Augsburgerin,†d he proposes, as you see, to publish in Liebknecht's paper his latest exchange of letters with Biscamp. Ce brave†e Gaudissart! In these letters he presents himself as my patron, and lets Biscamp flatter him. I wrote to him by return that I would have to protest tooth and nail against this sort of thing.†84 For greater security I immediately wrote to Liebknecht that he must not print the Borkheim-Biscamp correspondence under any circumstances.†84

Page me43.121

Ad 1 and 2. I have sent to Liebknecht for his political review an entrefilet†f about M. Hirsch (because of the 'International'), and, at the same time, a few blows at Biscamp as correspondent of the Weser-Zeitung and the Augsburger.†g

Page me43.121

Ad 6. The £100 (of which ABOUT £35 for Laura) I have used to pay off the most urgent things and only kept as much on hand as is necessary in order not to be absolutely penniless. I still have about £100 of debts and will soon send you a list of the ITEMS SO that you can see that there are no useless expenditures on my part. Now I received the enclosed note from Lessner today. His wife is mortally ill, and it would be very kind of you to enable me to pay him off something.

Page Break me43.122

Page me43.122

IN ALL HASTE.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.122
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

85
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.122
Manchester, 6 October 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed Lessner's letter and bill and five pounds. I shall see to it that at least this bill will be paid off bit by bit.

Page me43.122

I have scarcely been able to have a look at the other things, for I was so horribly busy today. Tomorrow I shall send you back the letters.

Page me43.122

Best greetings to your wife and the girls, including Lafargue.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.122
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.123

86
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†34
IN PETERSBURG
Page me43.123
London, 7 October 1868
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park, N. W.

Dear Sir,

In reply to your esteemed letter,†186 the following:

1. You must not wait for the second volume, the publication of which will be delayed by perhaps another 6 months.†187 I cannot finish it, until certain official enquêtes,†a instituted during last year (and 1866) in France, the UNITED STATES and England, have been completed or published. In any case, Volume I constitutes a whole, complete in itself.
Page me43.123
2. Enclosed is my photogram.
Page me43.123
3. Socialist literature does not exist in the UNITED STATES. There are only workers' papers.
Page me43.123
4. I myself possess no collection of my works, which were written in various languages and published in various places. Most of them are out of print.
Page me43.123
Since I am unable to meet your request in this respect — la plus belle fille de France ne peut donner que ce qu'elle a†b — I shall have to confine myself to giving you some brief notes on my literary-political activity, which you might be able to use in the preface to your translation.†188
Page me43.123
Dr K. Marx, born 1818 in Trier (Rhenish Prussia).
Page me43.123
1842-43: Redacteur en chef†c of the Rheinische Zeitung (Cologne). This newspaper is forcibly suppressed by the Prussian government. Marx goes to Paris; publishes there, together with Arnold Ruge, the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher (Paris, 1844). At the end of 1844, Marx is expelled from France by Guizot; proceeds to Brussels. Together with Friedrich Engels publishes Die heilige Familie, oder Kritik der kritischen Kritik. Gegen Bruno Bauer und Consorten (Frankfort on the Main, 1845). (This work, like the essays by Marx in the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher,†d are directed against the ideological mysticism of Hegelian and, in general, speculative philosophy.) Also published during the stay in Brussels: Misère de la philosophie. Réponse à la Philosophie de la misère de M. Proudhon (Brussels and Paris, 1847).

Page Break me43.124
Page me43.124
Discours sur le libre Echange (Brussels, 1848†189). Finally, at the beginning of 1848, together with Friedrich Engels: Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei (London).
Page me43.124
Shortly after the outbreak of the February revolution, Marx is expelled from Belgium; receives at the same time from the French provisional government an invitation to return to France†a; proceeds to Paris and, in April 1848, to Cologne (Germany), publishing there:
Page me43.124
Neue Rheinische Zeitung (from June 1848 to May 1849). Also there:
Page me43.124

Zwei Politische Prozesse (Cologne, 1849). (Containing the trial proceedings and Marx's defence speeches at the Assizes.†b Marx charged on one occasion with insulting the procureur du roi,†c and on the other, after the Prussian coup d'état (Manteuffel), with inciting rebellion. In both cases Marx acquitted by the jury.)
Page me43.124
In the course of May 1849, the Neue Rheinische Zeitung is suppressed by the Prussian government and Marx expelled from Prussia.†d Proceeds once more to Paris. Again expelled from France†e; proceeds at the end of October 1849 to London, where he still resides. During his stay there, publishes:

Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue (1850, Hamburg and New York).

Der 18te Brumaire des Louis Bonaparte (New York, 1852).

Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozess zu Köln (1853, two editions, one in Basle, one in Boston, UNITED STATES).

FLY-SHEETS AGAINST LORD PALMERSTON†f (London, Birmingham, Glasgow, 1853-1854).

Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie (Berlin, 1859).

Herr Vogt (London, 1860).

1851-1861, continuous contributions in English to the New-York Tribune, Putnam's Revue†190 and The New American Cyclopedia.†g

1864: The foundation programme of the 'INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION', that is: ADDRESS TO THE WORKING PEOPLE OF EUROPE†h and the Rules of the Association,†a later (1866) definitively sanctioned at the congress of the International Working Men's Association at Geneva. Marx continuously, up to the present, MEMBER OF THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION, AND ITS SECRETARY FOR GERMANY.

Page Break me43.125

1867: Das Kapital etc.

Yours faithfully,
Karl Marx

Page me43.125
First published in Minuvshiye gody (Bygone Years), No. 1, St. Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

87
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.125
Manchester, 8 October 1868

Dear Moor,

I have been terribly plagued with COMMERCE these days, so I can only return the letters today.†b

Page me43.125

Schweitzer is a special case. The fellow is more cunning and more active than all his opponents together, although this time he has certainly been too cunning — according to the Kölnische Zeitung the real workers' assemblies which are now appearing are everywhere repudiating the presidents imposed upon them by the 'Congress',†164 and these SELF-ELECTED fellows, up to and including Schweitzer, will realise that, as soon as there is real BUSINESS, these tricks and attempts to impose their sect upon the real movement as a leadership are no longer effective.

Page me43.125

As Secretary for Germany you will of course have to correspond with the UNIONS that might be formed, as long as counter-UNIONS are not formed within the individual trades, when a choice would have to be made between the two — or could they both affiliate? In this respect, you will have English PRECEDENTS.†191 Of importance is only the point that Schweitzer and his people should always be reminded that they are corresponding with the Secretary for Germany, not with Karl Marx, and you will see to this.

Page Break me43.126

Page me43.126

The Russian translation†a is very gratifying; as soon as the matter has gone a little further, this should be got into the press.

Page me43.126

I have not yet been able to look at the manuscript by Dietzgen.†185

Page me43.126

Gaudissart†b becomes increasingly amusing. The 30 printed sheets are not dangerous for the time being; since they are supposed to appear simultaneously in 4 languages it will probably still take an eternity. As a Jew he simply cannot stop cheating, and it serves him right that he has burnt his fingers on Biscamp.

Page me43.126

Wilhelmchen†c is not bad either. Regarding the Swabians, it thus appears to be money matters that bind him and his people to the federalists. This should be investigated more closely, afterwards all this will fall on our shoulders. I had drawn his attention to the fact that at a moment when revolutionary action came nearer, it was absolutely against the interests of our Party that our people should be too closely committed to one party in the basically rotten antagonism between Greater Prussia and Austrian-Federalist Greater Germany. The unfortunate fool still cannot see that the entire antithesis with its two sides is a case of narrow-mindedness pure and simple. I thought the Spanish revolution†165 would have made him see some light, but NO GO.

Page me43.126

I have seen no details yet about the course of the Schweitzer congress and its effects, since I only receive the Zukunft late.

Page me43.126
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.126
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.127

88
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.127
London, 10 October 1868

DEAR FRED,
THANKS FOR THE £5. I have given Lessner £8.†a There is, incidentally, a fairly important mistake in his bill which he had, however, corrected before the intervention of my wife.
Page me43.127
Enclosed letter from Schweitzer†192 together with a number of the Social-Demokrat which he sent me in the letter. You must return the letter to me by Tuesday,†b together with your ADVICE. We cannot TEMPORISE any longer. So that you knew exactly how matters stand, the following:
Page me43.127
For the time being, I have written to Liebknecht†84 that I COULD TAKE NO ACTION, that Schweitzer had hitherto given no official occasion, that an intervention on my part could only consolidate Lassalleanism, etc.
Page me43.127
AS TO Schweitzer, I have not yet answered his previous letter,†160 the dispatch of which he is probably now cursing. Since his TRADES UNIONS CONGRESS†164 was so near, I thought it better to await 'the course of events', and TO WATCH HIS OPERATIONS. Now I must, of course, break my silence.
Page me43.127
As regards the letter from Schweitzer, it is clear that he does not feel quite happy in his boots. His threat of 'open war' is silly, though the phrase is 'OSTENSIBLY' only aimed against Liebknecht et Co. His claim that Mr Nobody started it, is in no way correct. His alleged identification with the International Working Men's Association stands in a certain contradiction to his HINTS in the Social-Demokrat after the Nuremberg affair that his association had 'not' joined the IWA. Above all it emerges from the whole letter that Schweitzer still cannot drop his fixed idea that he has 'his own workers' movement'. On the other hand, he is unquestionably the most intelligent and most energetic of all the present workers' leaders in Germany, while Liebknecht IN POINT OF FACT was only forced by Schweitzer to recall that there existed a workers' movement independent of the petty-bourgeois democratic movement.

Page me43.127

My plan is not to use diplomacy but to tell Schweitzer the unvarnished truth about my view of his dealings, and make it clear to him that he must choose between the 'sect' and the 'class'. If he wishes to come to a rational understanding with the 'Nuremberg majority',†135 I am ready as 'Secretary for Germany' to be of aid on TERMS which appear reasonable to me. If he does not desire this, I can only promise to maintain the necessary objective impartiality vis-à-vis his agitation. What I cannot promise, however, is that I will not, in my private capacity, publicly attack the Lassallean superstition as soon as I regard this as useful.†a Pretty and truly Lassallean is Schweitzer's notion that 'two organisations can only be harmful' and hence, since he preceded the others, they are, if not legally, then in a way morally, obliged to 'dissolve' themselves in him.

Page Break me43.128
Page me43.128

Page me43.128

As you know, Mr Odger is standing for Chelsea, but I believe he has no chance of success. Odger has shown us the COLD SHOULDER for the whole of last year since, on my proposal, 'the president of the IWA' and thus also 'President' Odger were abolished once and for all.†193 Now he gives thanks for his re-election by the Brussels Congress and wishes us to support his election with a letter to his ELECTIONEERING COMMITTEE. We are only meeting his request because it is a step that is useful to the International and that recommends it in the eyes of the London WORKMEN.†194
Page me43.128

When you were here last,†129 you saw the Blue Book†173 on the Irish land question 1844-1845. BY ACCIDENT I found the REPORT and EVIDENCE on IRISH TENANT RIGHT 1867 (HOUSE OF LORDS) in a small second-hand bookSHOP. This was a real find. The economist gentlemen regard it purely as a question of conflicting dogmas whether rent is payment for natural differences in land, or on the other hand merely interest on the capital invested in the land; but here we have a real life and death struggle between FARMER and LANDLORD as to how far rent should include, apart from the payment for land differences, also the interest on the capital invested in the land not by the LANDLORD but by the tenant. Political economy can only be turned into a positive science by replacing the CONFLICTING DOGMAS by the CONFLICTING FACTS, and by the real antagonisms which form their concealed background.
Page me43.128

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.128

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.129

89
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.129
Manchester, 12 October 1868

Dear Moor,

Enclosed the Schweitzeriana returned with thanks.†a I completely share your view on the therapy in this case. But he will scarcely be ready to part with 'his own workers' movement'. His ambitions exceed his strength, or, as the Italians put it, vuol petare più alto del culo,†b and on this inner contradiction he will work himself to death.
Page me43.129

In my view, the statutes†c are absurd for this purpose, but it is immaterial in the end.
Page me43.129

And please do not omit the final sentence about the attack on the Lassallean superstition; this will be effective with the fellow, who is well aware that the whole stuff is HUMBUG.
Page me43.129

I was unable to write to you while I was in town, and now it is nearly 8 o'clock, when the post closes out here, so I cannot add anything.
Page me43.129

The picture of Lizzie is horrible, but still the least bad after five sittings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.129
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.130

90
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.130
London, 12 October 1868
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

My dear Friend,

Your obstinate silence is quite incomprehensible to me. Did I perhaps give cause for it in my last letter?†a I hope not. In any case — unintentional. I need not explain to you explicitly, you know that you are my most intimate friend in Germany, and I really cannot understand how, inter amicos,†b people can keep such a sharp lookout, all because of some trifle. Least of all have you such a right with regard to me, for you know how much I owe you. Apart from everything personal, you have done more for my book†c than all Germany put together.†195
Page me43.130

Yet perhaps you are so energetically silent in order to prove to me that you are not like that set of so-called friends, who are silent when things go badly, and speak when they go well. But there is no need for such a demonstration on your part.
Page me43.130

By speaking about the 'good state of affairs' I mean, first, the propaganda made by my book and the recognition it has received from the German workers SINCE YOU WROTE ME LAST. Second, however, the wonderful progress made by the International Working Men's Association, particularly in England, too.
Page me43.130

A few days ago a Petersburg publisher†d surprised me with the news that a Russian translation of Capital is now at the printers.†196 He asked for my photogram as a vignette for the title page, and I could not deny this trifle to 'my good friends' the Russians. It is an irony of fate that the Russians, against whom I have been fighting incessantly for 25 years, not only in German, but also in French and English, have always been my 'patrons'. In 1843-1844 in Paris, the Russian aristocrats there waited on me hand and foot.†197 My book against Proudhon (1847), ditto that published by Duncker (1859),†e have nowhere had such good sales as in Russia. And the first foreign nation to translate Capital is Russia. Yet not too much should be made of all this. The Russian aristocracy are educated, in their youth, at German universities and in Paris.

Page Break me43.131
They always yearn for the most extreme the West has to offer. It is pure gourmandise, like that practised by part of the French aristocracy during the 18th century. Ce n'est pas pour les tailleurs et les bottiers,†a as Voltaire said at the time about his own Enlightenment. It does not hinder the very same Russians from becoming scoundrels as soon as they enter government service.
Page me43.131

I am having plenty of 'BOTHER' JUST NOW in Germany with the leaders' squabbles, as you will see from the enclosed letters, which you will please return. On one side Schweitzer, who is appointing me Pope in partibus infidelium,†b so that I can proclaim him the workers' emperor in Germany. On the other side Liebknecht, who forgets that it was, IN POINT OF FACT, Schweitzer who forced him to recall that there is a movement of the proletariat that is different from the petty-bourgeois democratic movement.

Page me43.131
I hope you and your family are well. I hope I have not fallen into disfavour with your dear wife.†c Apropos. The International Ladies' Association, duce†d Mrs Goegg (READ Geck†e), has sent an epistle to the Brussels Congress,†138 asking whether the ladies might join us.†198 The answer, of course, was a courteous affirmative. Should you, therefore, continue in your silence, I shall send your wife credentials as correspondent of the General Council.
Page me43.131
I have been suffering rather a lot from the heat, on account of my liver, but am, at the moment, well.
Page me43.131
Salut.
Yours
Karl Marx

Page me43.131
P.S. I. The Spanish revolution†165 came like a deus ex machina to prevent the otherwise unavoidable and DISASTROUS Prussian-French war.
Page me43.131
P.S. II. You once wrote to me that I would be receiving a book by Büchner.†f When and how?

Page me43.131
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 7, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.132

91
MARX TO JOHANN BAPTIST VON SCHWEITZER†199
IN BERLIN
Page me43.132
[Draft]
To von Schweitzer

London, 13 October 1868

Dear Sir,

A misunderstanding on my part accounts for your having received no reply to your letter of 15 September. I interpreted the letter as meaning that you would submit your 'proposals' to me for examination.†160 So I waited for them. Then came your congress,†164 and (BEING MUCH OVERWORKED) I regarded a reply as no longer urgent. Before the arrival of your letter dated 8 October, I had already repeatedly appealed for peace, in my capacity as secretary of the International for Germany. I received the answer (and with it relevant quotations from the Social-Demokrat) that you yourself were provoking war. I declared that my role must necessarily be confined to that of 'impartial referee' at a duel.†a

Page me43.132

In your letters you express great trust in me, and I believe I cannot respond better than to give you my opinion of the present state of affairs quite openly, without any diplomatic circumlocution. In doing so, I assume that, for you, as for myself, the cause is all that matters.

Page me43.132

I recognise, without reserve, the intelligence and energy with which you are active in the workers' movement. I have concealed this view from none of my friends. Wherever I have to express my views in public — in the General Council of the International Working Men's Association and in the German Communist Association here†b — I have always treated you as a man of our party, and never let drop a word about points of difference.

Page me43.132

However, such points of difference do exist.

Page me43.132

D'abord,†c as regards the Lassallean Association,†104 it was formed in a period of reaction. After fifteen years of slumber, Lassalle — and this remains his immortal service — re-awakened the workers' movement in Germany. But he made great mistakes. He allowed himself to be influenced too much by the immediate circumstances of the time. He made the minor starting point, his opposition to the dwarf-like Schulze-Delitzsch, the central point of his agitation — state aid versus self-help.†200 In this, he merely re-adopted the slogan circulated in 1843 sqq. by Buchez, the leader of Catholic socialism, against the genuine workers' movement in France.†162 Being far too intelligent to regard this slogan as anything but a transitory pis-aller,†a Lassalle was only able to justify its use on the grounds of its immediate (alleged!) PRACTICABILITY. To this end, he had to claim that it was feasible in the immediate future. The 'state' was, therefore, transformed into the Prussian state. He was thus forced to make concessions to the Prussian monarchy, to Prussian reaction (the feudal party) and even to the clericals. He linked Buchez's state aid for associations with the Chartist call for universal suffrage.†201 He overlooked the difference between conditions in Germany and England. He overlooked the lessons of the bas-empire,†b with regard to universal suffrage in France. In addition, like everyone who claims to have in his pocket a panacea for the sufferings of the masses, he gave his agitation, from the very start, a religious, sectarian character. In fact, every sect is religious. And just because he was the founder of a sect, he denied all natural connection with the earlier movement, both in Germany and abroad.

Page Break me43.133

He fell into Proudhon's mistake of not seeking the real basis of his agitation in the actual elements of the class movement, but of wishing, instead, to prescribe for that movement a course determined by a certain doctrinaire recipe.
Page me43.133

Most of what I am stating here post factum I predicted to Lassalle when he came to London in 1862 and called upon me to place myself, with him, at the head of the new movement.
Page me43.133

You yourself know the difference between a sect movement and a class movement from personal experience. The sect seeks its raison d'être and its point d'honneur not in what it has in common with the class movement, but in the particular shibboleth distinguishing it from that movement. Thus when, in Hamburg, you proposed convening a congress to found TRADES UNIONS,†164 you could only suppress the opposition of the sectarians by threatening to resign as president. You were also forced to assume a dual personality, to state that, in one case, you were acting as the leader of the sect and, in the other, as the representative of the class movement.
Page me43.133

The dissolution of the General Association of German

Page Break me43.134
Workers†167 provided you with an opportunity to take a big step forward and to declare, to prove s'il le fallait,†a that a new stage of development had been reached and the sect movement was now ripe to merge into the class movement and end all 'eanisms'. With regard to the true content of the sect, it would, like all former workers' sects, carry this as an enriching element into the general movement. Yet instead you, in fact, demanded that the class movement subordinate itself to a particular sect movement. Your non-friends concluded from this that you wished to conserve your 'own workers' movement' under all circumstances.
Page me43.134

Regarding the Berlin Congress,†164 the time was d'abord not pressing, since the Combination Law has not yet been voted.†202 You ought, therefore, to have reached an agreement with the leaders outside the Lassallean circle, worked out the plan together with them, and convoked the congress. Instead of this, you left them only the alternative of either publicly joining you, or lining up against you. The congress itself appeared to be only an extended edition of the Hamburg Congress.†104
Page me43.134

As for the draft statutes,†b I regard them as unsuitable in principle, and I believe I have as much experience as any of my contemporaries in the field of TRADES UNIONS. Without going further into detail here, I shall merely remark that a centralist organisation, suitable as it is for secret societies and sect movements, contradicts the nature of the TRADE UNIONS. Were it possible — I declare it tout bonnement†c to be impossible — it would not be desirable, least of all in Germany. Here, where the worker is regulated bureaucratically from childhood onwards, where he believes in authority, in those set over him, the main thing is to teach him to walk by himself.
Page me43.134

Your plan is also impracticable in other ways. In the 'Union' there are to be three independent authorities of differing origin: 1. The Committee, elected by the trades; 2. the President (here a completely superfluous personage) (In the Rules of the International Working Men's Association there also figures a President of the Association.†d In reality his only function was to preside at the sessions of the General Council. On my proposal, this office — which I had refused in 1866 — was completely abolished in 1867, and was replaced by that of a CHAIRMAN, who is elected at each weekly session of the General Council.†193 The LONDON TRADES' COUNCIL†175 also has simply a CHAIRMAN. Its sole permanent official is the Secretary, as he has a continuous business function to exercise.} {NB. This passage follows in the copy of the letter to Schweitzer after the end of this sentence), elected by a general vote; 3. the Congress, elected by the local branches. Thus — collisions everywhere, and this is supposed to promote 'rapid action'! (At this point the inserted sentence.) Lassalle committed a bad mistake in borrowing the 'président élu du suffrage universel'†a from the French Constitution of 1852. And now this in a TRADES UNIONS movement! The latter is mostly concerned with financial issues, and you will soon discover that all dictatorialism finds its end here.

Page Break me43.135
Page me43.135

Yet whatever the shortcomings of the organisation, they can perhaps be cancelled out, to a greater or lesser degree, by rational application. As secretary of the International I am ready to act — naturally on a rational basis — as mediator between you and the Nuremberg majority,†b which has adhered to the International directly.†135 I have written in the same vein to Leipzig.†c I understand the difficulties of your position, and never forget that each of us depends more upon circumstances than upon his own will.
Page me43.135

I promise you, under all circumstances, the impartiality that is my duty. On the other hand, I cannot promise that I shall not, some day, acting as a private author, — as soon as I feel it to be absolutely dictated by the interests of the labour movement — publicly criticise the Lassallean superstition, in the same way as I dealt, in its time, with the Proudhonist superstition.†d
Page me43.135

With the assurance of my best wishes to you personally,

I remain
K. M.

Page me43.135
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 1, Stuttgart, 1896

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.136

92
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.136
Manchester, 14 October 1868

Dear Moor,

Today the Kölnische Zeitung states that the workers (COLLIERS) in Essen, who have just ended the STRIKE successfully,†203 have revolted against Schweitzerism and its supporters, the local bigwigs, and are demanding strict accounting of the STRIKE funds.†a The source is suspect, but the symptom is significant. This whole agitation breaks down on money matters; the Lassallean leaders are too scoundrelly in this respect.
Page me43.136

Further, it reports that in Gladbach the cotton manufacturers have recognised that the working day is too long, and are forming an association among themselves to reduce the day from 13 hours to 12 for the time being (issue of 12 October). You see that your book†b is also having a practical effect on the bourgeoisie.
Page me43.136

Yet another stupid issue of Wilhelm's sheet†c this week! He interrupts your stuff about Hirsch†d in order to publish a rubbishy article which amounts to saying that bourgeois society, or 'the social', as he puts it, is determined by 'the political' and not vice versa.†e Naturam si furca expellas,†f etc. Nearly every article is crawling with nonsense.
Page me43.136

Ernest the Fox now seems to be a certainty here if you can trust the cheers with which he, in particular, is honoured everywhere among the 3 liberal candidates.†102 If things go well, this will be due neither to his cunning, nor to his STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS, but only to the instinct of the masses. The Tories can find no candidate, it is said they wish to put up here one of the Hoares (London bankers); but the man will have to have a lot of money to throw away for nothing if he lets himself in for it.

Page Break me43.137
Page me43.137

In Berlin, as a result of the great heat last summer, afternoon lessons were completely abandoned in a number of high schools and morning lessons extended by one period. The results were quite unexpected, the boys made enormously rapid progress, and the business is now going to be tried out on a larger scale.
Page me43.137

In Spain the rule of the generals appears to be wearing out rapidly.†165 The abolition of the Jesuits and the partial abolition of the monasteries had been long in coming and only seem to have been forced, at least in part, by financial difficulties; on the other hand, the reward for the officers and NCOs for joining the insurrectionary side came quickly enough. The disarmament of the people also appears to be only a question of time. All the same, in a movement like this the little tricks are not enough with which, after a coup, a general could edge his way through as Isabella's minister.

Page me43.137
With best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.137
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

93
MARX TO ENGELS†34
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.137
London, 15 October 1868

Tomorrow or the day after tomorrow the Lafargue FAMILY is leaving for Paris. This will greatly reduce our HOUSEHOLD EXPENSES.
Page me43.137
I have written to A. Frank et Co. in Paris. Since I know that he has sold COPIES OF MY Anti-Proudhon†204 as recently as in the past few weeks, I asked in my letter for accounts of the whole affair, REMINDING MR Frank that he and Vogler were only my agents de vente†a and that I had paid all the printing costs. Thereupon I received, a few days ago, the following reply:

Page Break me43.138
'J'ai l'honneur, Monsieur, de vous informer que j'ai racheté la Maison A. Frank le 21 Oct. 1865, sans actifs et passifs. — Il y avait à cette époque 92 exemplaires de votre brochure Misère de la philosophie en magasin que je tiens à votre disposition. — Quant à ce qui pourrait vous revenir de solde, il faudra vous adresser soit à Mr Vogler soit au curateur de la succession de mon prédécesseur, Mr Bassot, 58 rue de Bondy, Paris, etc. per F. Vieweg, propriétaire actuel de la maison A. Frank.'†a

Page me43.138
I shall now grant Lafargue power of attorney to collect the 92 exemplaires, which he will sell amongst his friends. For the remainder (there were 1,500 exemplaires), I am granting Schily power of attorney to start legal proceedings. I do not know Vogler's whereabouts, but his former associé Shee still has a librairie†b in Brussels, where I can mobilise a handful of young lawyers belonging to our Association. It would be nice if I could still squeeze out some cash.
Page me43.138

Attached packet of the Social-Demokrat, upon which you should please write me a few marginal notes (regarding the TRADES UNIONS stories) since I did not have the time to read the stuff. The letter to Schweitzer has gone off.†c Enclosed also the latest number of Lanterne and a pamphlet about Plon-Plon, said to be written by Charras.†d
Page me43.138

Apropos. I had a meeting with Beesly. The SUB-EDITOR of Morley (the EDITOR for the SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT) declared that the argument was irrefutable. However, the article†11 was too 'DRY' for A MAGAZINE. Beesly asked me to put it in a more popular form, without sacrificing the SCIENTIFIC POINTS. This is RATHER DIFFICULT. However, I'll try. In particular, he wants a longer introduction, including personalia about MY PAST and the book's impact in Germany. This, OF COURSE, you must write. But there is time for this until I send you the BULK of the article. The whole shit is then to go into The Westminster Review.
Page me43.138

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page Break me43.139
Page me43.139

Have you read A. Slade: 'Turkey and the Crimean War'? It appears that 'Bosh' is a Turkish word, since Slade says: 'bosh lakerdeh' (empty words).†a

Page me43.139
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

94
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me43.139
[London,] 19 October 1868

Dear Jung,

As long as there is no scandal that could implicate the International. You can be insulting if your heart demands so. But no fisticuffs.
Page me43.139

The best thing would be to give the appearance of bringing a suit against the fellows (Besson and Le Lubez) for LIBEL because of the letter.†205 This joke could be fixed up with Merriman. You would see how the COWARDS would grovel, besides they would face the danger of being examined publicly in court about their fine gang.

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.139
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.140

95
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.140
Manchester, 22 October 1868

Dear Moor,

The little Russian Ermen,†a whose fate you can see from the enclosed paper, has, on the pretext that he must now settle down, been living in our office for a week now, and has only emerged rather drunk to visit his betrothed. Since the whole office was turned into a pub, no sort of work could be done, and that is why I have only now got around to writing to you.
Page me43.140

I have not yet been able to read the Congress†164 reports in the Social-Demokrat, which are also very boring.†b Apart from this, Schweitzer shows that he is very serious about his sect. Not only has the General Association of German Workers been reformed, with its headquarters in Berlin†167 and with new statutes,†c the only alterations having been made, compared to the old statutes, with an eye to the Law on Association,†206 but every detail shows that in the new TRADES UNIONS GAGW aims to play (but openly) the same role as our old secret league†118 did in the legal associations. The TRADES UNIONS are only to form an exoteric party of the Lassallean church of sole salvation, but only the latter remains the one of sole salvation. If Eichhoff forms a separate association in Berlin,†207 he is promised gracious toleration on the condition that his association takes a 'friendly' attitude towards GAGW. But Schweitzer and his Association remain the party", and the others may come and join it; or else remain heretics and DISSENTERS.
Page me43.140

Apart from this, the fellow has a much clearer grasp than all the others of the general political situation and a much clearer attitude to the other parties; and he is cleverer in his presentation than all the others. He calls 'all old parties facing us, one single reactionary mass, and their differences are scarcely of any significance for us'. He recognises that 1866 and its results are ruining the system of petty principalities, undermining the principle of legitimacy, shaking reaction, and have set the people in motion, but he has — now — also come out against the other results, the burden of taxes, etc., and his attitude to Bismarck is more 'correct', as the Berliners say, than e.g. Liebknecht's is, with regard to the ex-princes. You will have seen that he cites the Elector of Hesse†a as a historical authority — on the all-too-familiar subjects — and in his last number he allows a true Hanoverian to strike up a Guelphic whimpering.†b On this last point, couldn't you for once tell Wilhelm what is what? It is really asking a lot to expect us to support a paper in which he allows such dirty tricks.

Page Break me43.141
Page me43.141
Have at least a part of the anti-Proudhons†c sent to London; these few remaining copies cannot be replaced. I myself have none. Vieweg should be asked to account for the copies sold since 1865. It is, in addition, certainly a good thing that you are following the matter up, even though only now. There is always the possibility that something may still come out of it.
Page me43.141
The business with the Westminster†d is very good. Do not allow time to slip by; the article should appear in the January issue; so send me the stuff as soon as possible, so I may do my part. It is very good that these fellows would not use a simple presentation of a new scientific development without the phraseology of their 'ESSAYS', which make the matter not only less clear, but also drier. I would, however, also ask Mr Beesly how many printed sheets would be available. The stuff I sent you would have made I sheet in the Fortnightly, but about 1½ in the Westminster. According to space — and since only one article is possible here — we should consider whether and which parts of the book should be left out completely — for instance I do not believe it will be possible to include the chapter on accumulation†208 without cutting down the space for the main subject too much.
Page me43.141
I've read Darwin's first volume on DOMESTICATION.†e Only details are new, and then not much of importance.
Page me43.141
With best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.141
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx. Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.142

96
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.142
[London,] 24 October 1868

Dear Fred,

Enclosed:

1. Letter from Kugelmann. Some interesting things in it.†209 In any case, I shall write to tell him that I forbid pour l'avenir†a all his eccentric respectful outbreaks OF ESTEEM.

Page me43.142

2. Letter from Liebknecht. The brute seems quite mad. Weeks ago he wrote to me saying he would let me have COPIES OF Vogt. And, as always with Liebknecht, there the matter rests. Not another word about it. A mass of stupid suggestions instead. I, he says, should reply to Faucher,†b since Liebknecht cannot answer him, and Faucher has ADMIRERS in several Leipzig tap-rooms. He will refrain 'for the present', and against his will, from attacks on Schweitzer. As if he had not, on the other hand, asked me, in his honour, kindly to attack Schweitzer 'for the present'. I am to place at his disposal a 'selection of choice passages' from Miquel's private correspondence with me, since he fancies that Miquel is 'dangerous'. I am to send him Freiligrath's poem against Kinkel,†c so he can rehabilitate Freiligrath at Kinkel's expense. Finally, I am to make a certain Stromeyer — (he means Strohn) — in Bradford the agent for Ernst Stehfest et Co., Crimmitschau (spinning and weaving partnership). WHAT ELSE? Luckily this time he has not done me the honour of asking me to purchase here, in the City, ENGLISH MUSTARD SPECIMENS for an alleged consumer society in Leipzig, and to establish a 'connection' with the firm. The UPSHOT of the whole business was — IN RETURN for the MUSTARD and the business information — the sentence: The MUSTARD is excellent! This is in fact what the English economists call 'CONSUMPTIVE DEMAND' par excellence.

Page me43.142

Borkheim's Russophobia (with which I inoculated him as the mildest sickness for the diversion of his superfluous vital spirits) is assuming dangerous dimensions; he now has a row with OLD Philipp Becker, since the latter is on good terms with Bakunin and has written to Borkheim that he should not attack Bakunin in his letters. Borkheim regards this as a dangerous Muscovite conspiracy. He believes that his 'masterly invectives' in Wilhelm's Wochenblatt†d are causing Byzantium — and therefore also Bakunin — to shake. In a stern letter to Becker, he has declared with his usual delicacy that he will maintain his friendship for him and his (BY THE BY negligible) pecuniary support, but — politics should now be excluded from their correspondence!

Page Break me43.143

Page me43.143

The 12 RAGAMUFFINS of the so-called FRENCH BRANCH held a PUBLIC MEETING in London last Tuesday, again under Pyat's chairmanship†210 and with the reading of one of his melodramatic PUFFS for the revolution. There were big placards on the walls AS FOLLOWS:

Page me43.143
République Française

La Branche française de l'Association Internationale, etc., etc. Then Félix Pyat in huge letters. The points for discussion, listed in French, included: 3. Vote d'adhésion au manifeste†a (the manifesto of the Commune de Paris, which exists only on the moon, which was to be read by Pyat and had been fabricated by him) et protestation, contre l'indifférence en matière politique professée à Bruxelles au dernier Congrès de l'Association Internationale.†b138
Page me43.143
Under this, however, was the English notice (also distributed as a HANDBILL): DEMOCRATS OF ALL NATIONS ARE INVITED, etc. 'FOR THE PURPOSE OF DECIDING WHETHER THE WORKINGMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION IS TO BE A POLITICAL ASSOCIATION.'
Page me43.143
Last Tuesday†c I was empowered to disavow the fellows immediately and publicly if the London daily newspapers should treat or mention this as a demonstration of ours. Luckily, NO NOTICE WAS TAKEN OF THEM.
Page me43.143
This evening there is, however, to be a SUBCOMMITTEE at which witnesses are to be heard that one of this dozen was formerly a marchand d'hommes†d and a brothel keeper,†e another a gambler, a third a SPY for the MASTERS in the TAILORS' STRIKE here,†211 etc., etc. On the basis of the 'morals paragraph' of the Rules, these gentlemen will probably be kicked out. They are naturally doubly annoyed that all politics are left out in dealing with fellows like them.
Page me43.143
Salut to MRS Burns, Jollymayer†f and King Cole.†g

Your
K. M.

Page me43.143
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx. Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.144

97
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29

IN HANOVER
Page me43.144
London, 26 October 1868

My dear Friend,

Only these few lines in reply to your letter,†212 which arrived at a moment when I am burdened with a visitor.

Page me43.144

Kertbény's address: No. 11/III (what the III means I don't know, perhaps the floor) Behrenstrasse.

Page me43.144

Now, permit me a word. Since you and Engels were of the opinion that it would be useful, I gave in on the question of the advertisement in the Gartenlaube.†a My conviction was decisively against it. And now I request you urgently finally to abandon this joke. The only result is that fellows like Keil and the Daheim sort believe one to belong to the tribe of great men, literary or other, and to need or seek their protection.

Page me43.144

I believe this sort of thing is harmful rather than helpful and beneath the dignity of a man of science. For instance, Meyer's Konversationslexikon wrote a long time ago asking me for a biography. Not only did I not send one; I did not even reply to the letter. Everybody must work out his own salvation.

Page me43.144

As for Kertbény, he is a pompous, confused, importunate literary idler, and the less one has to do with him the better.

Page me43.144

Salut.

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.144
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 7, Stuttgart, 1901-1902, and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

98
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.144
Manchester, 28 October 1868

Dear Moor,

In all haste, I return the enclosures from Kugelmann†209 and Wilhelm.†b Congratulations on the professorship. The letter from

Page Break me43.145

A sketch of Lizzie Burns by Frederick Engels (after 4 May 1869)

Page Break me43.146
Page Break me43.147
Wilhelm is indeed amusing. This omnium-gatherum of instructions to you, so that you might do something too. I also congratulate Strohn on the agency for the Stehfest firm of whose commercial stability I am far from convinced.†a
Page me43.147
Lizzy has rushed off with her friend MRS Chorlton (the fatty) to her relations in Lincolnshire and will return only on Friday or Saturday.†b Naturally the maid had to pick this precise moment to fall ill, but Ellen†c is helping us out.
Page me43.147
Best greetings to all.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.147
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

99
MARX TO WILLIAM JESSUP†213
IN NEW YORK
Page me43.147
London, 28 October 1868
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sir,
Your letter to Mr Eccarius, d.d. 3 curt. has been duly communicated by him to the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. He has been reappointed as our corresponding Secretary for America, but is at present too ill to fulfil his functions.
Page me43.147
The General Council has appointed Mr S. Meyer and Mr August Vogt as its German-American correspondents and Mr Pelletier as its French-American correspondent. I beg to recommend you these citizens.

Page me43.147

The General Council being itself yearly elected by the General Congress, it is self-understood that all its nominations can only be valid for the current year, if they be not renewed.

Yours fraternally
Karl Marx

Page Break me43.148
Page me43.148

Wm. J. Jessup, Corresponding Representative for State of New York, National Labour Union, 11 Norfolk Street, New York City

Page me43.148
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to S. Meyer's copy of the original

Published in English for the first time

100
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER AND AUGUST VOGT
IN NEW YORK
Page me43.148
London, 28 October 1868

Dear Meyer and Vogt,

The enclosed credentials for Meyer (I have added the same for you†214) will show you that your wish had already been met by 13 October. Meyer's appointment was printed in The Bee-Hive†a on 3 October.†b The GENERAL COUNCIL has resolved that the German correspondents shall correspond with me, Pelletier (for the French) with Dupont, and Eccarius with Jessup. I myself suggested the latter, as I have no time for more correspondence. You can hand the enclosed lines to Jessup†c and, at the same time, show him your credentials.
Page me43.148

With regard to Eccarius there is some misunderstanding. I have never quarrelled with him; on the contrary I have supported him to this day against the ATTACKS by the English, etc.†148 But he — his preponderant and often narrow-minded egoism perhaps developed as a result of his circumstances — commits unpleasant tomfooleries from time to time. I generally take no notice of this. Now and then my patience is exhausted. I give him a brain washing, and ALL IS RIGHT AGAIN for the time being. The poor devil is, at present, very ill, and he always utilises such moments to say his pater peccavi.†d To what Liebknecht is referring, according to Vogt's letter, I have absolutely no idea. I, at least, have never written a word to anybody against Eccarius EXCEPT in my letter to Meyer, at a moment when I was upset by letters from our other delegates to the Brussels Congress in which they denounced Eccarius.†a But it is quite possible that Eccarius wrote to Liebknecht without my knowledge in such a way that moved the latter to make his remarks to Vogt. This would be peculiar, since just at that time I had a big dispute with the English about and for Eccarius.

Page Break me43.149
Page me43.149
As far as Sorge†b is concerned, no further action. My lines to Jessup explain the TEMPORARY character of the credentials.
Page me43.149
Cards for members are no longer available, must be reprinted. Liebknecht is dabbling too much in south German patriotism, and he should not print such nonsense about 'state and society'†c containing the exact opposite of our opinions. Salut. In all haste.

Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.149
Apropos. Do you know Dietzgen? He has now returned from Petersburg to the Rhine to establish himself as a small tanner. He is one of the most gifted workers I know, I mean by correspondence. I don't know him personally.
Page me43.149
A translation of my book is now appearing in Russian in St. Petersburg.†186 Or did I already inform you of this?

Page me43.149
[Enclosure]
[London,] 256 High Holborn, W. C.

Citizen A. Vogt is appointed on 13 October 1868 by the General Council of the International Working Men's Association as corresponding Secretary for the year 1868-69 for the International Working Men's Association (German section in America).

13 October 1868
On behalf of the General Council
Karl Marx
SECRETARY FOR GERMANY

Page me43.149
First published abridged in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.150

101
MARX TO BASSOT
IN PARIS
Page me43.150
London, 30 October 1868
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park
Haverstock Hill

Monsieur,

I have written to the Maison A. Frank for my royalties. The new proprietor, M. Vieweg, directed me to you as the successor of M. Frank.†a Will you please hand over to M. Paul Lafargue, bearer of this letter, my share of the proceeds from the sale of my brochure Philosophie de la misère etc. contre M. Proudhon due to me at the moment when M. Frank or the House of M. Frank were disposed of.

I have the honour to salute you,
Karl Marx

M. Bassot
58, rue de Bondy, Paris

Page me43.150
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

102
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.150
[London,] 4 November 1868

DEAR FRED,

On Friday†b I have to pay the water rates and, further, Tussy's re-subscriptions with Winterbottom (gymnastics), etc. I would be grateful if you could send me SOME £ by the day after tomorrow.

Page Break me43.151
Page me43.151
How are things with the Russian's manuscript?†185 Have a look at it and then let me have your opinion. The poor fellow is certainly waiting anxiously for my reply.
Page me43.151
Pyat has had a stroke of good luck. He has now got hold of his own German — Herr Weber†a from the Palatinate.
Page me43.151
In all haste.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.151
Enclosed letters from Eichhoff.†215 He believes Schweitzer has denounced him here. NOTHING OF THE SORT. His denouncer (which he should not know) is Borkheim. In order to get rid of him ON THIS POINT and, at the same time, to elucidate the suspicion that could, in fact, be aroused by Eichhoff's reference to Bismarck (in his speech reported in Wilhelm's Wochenblatt), I have written to Eichhoff†84 that he has been denounced to the General Council here and should send me his DEFENCE.

Page me43.151
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

103
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.151
Manchester, 4 November 1868

Dear Moor,
You must excuse me if I do not write much now. For some time I have had nasty rheumatism not only in my right arm, but also in the 3 first fingers of my right hand; as a result, after a certain time writing becomes very burdensome for me, and in the evening almost impossible. I hope the trouble disappears; I use alcohol against it — externally that is.
Page me43.151

If the Spaniards even now do not know where they stand, following Wilhelmchen's address, they are beyond hope.†216 Unity between bourgeois and worker — the bourgeois must, however, realise that he has to concede this and that to the worker — anything to avoid a June battle, for this is followed by 2 December.†217 It is really the crowning point of all confusion. If now the bourgeois will not 'understand', the worker will have to realise that he will have to make concessions to the bourgeois. This is the sole possible sense which the thing can have. Hence, the ridiculousness of measuring Spanish conditions, with the enormous beggar-proletariat, both clerical and lay, against the yardstick of conditions in Saxony. There is naturally not a single mention of the peasants.

Page Break me43.152
Page me43.152
Many greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.152
Moore tells me that nearly all factory workers in Vienna are Moravians and Bohemians, mainly Czechs. This explains much about the movement there. The real Viennese do not go into factories, they become coachmen, domestics or something like that.

Page me43.152
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

104
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.152
Manchester, 6 November 1868

Dear Moor,
Herewith return back Eichhoff's letters†215 and Dietzgen's manuscript.†185 The latter I had placed in a safe place, away from the tidying females, and there it was completely forgotten.
Page me43.152
It is difficult to pass absolutely definite judgement on the thing; the man is not a born philosopher and, in addition, half self-taught. Some of his sources (e. g., Feuerbach, your book†a and various trashy publications on the natural sciences) can be immediately traced partly from his terminology, but one cannot tell what else he has read. The terminology is, of course, still very confused, hence the lack of precision and frequent reiterations in new TERMS. There is also dialectics in it, but appearing more in the form of flashes than in any connected way. The presentation of the thing-in-itself as a conceivable thing [Gedankending] would be very nice and even brilliant if one could be certain that he himself had discovered it. There is plenty of wit in it and, despite the poor grammar, a marked talent for style. All in all, however, a remarkable instinct to think out so much that is correct on the basis of such inadequate studies.

Page Break me43.153
Page me43.153
The repetitions are, as I said, partly a result of the shortcomings in terminology, partly due to his lack of logical schooling. It will be a hard job to get rid of them all. If the man definitely wants to print his stuff, I do not know if the reduction to 2 printed sheets would be the best for him; in any case, it would be a frightful job for him, since he is not aware of his repetitions. In addition, I do not know whether 2 sheets would get any attention at all. 6-8 sheets would be more likely to do this. But he will never get it into a magazine.
Page me43.153
Borkheim has written to ask whether I would agree that he should reprint my Bakunin article from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung†a in Liebknecht's paper†b and says, in this connection, that this article 'fits, for him, most excellently in his framework'. I replied†84 that we planned to publish our earlier articles, etc., jointly, that we were already negotiating with a book-dealer, but that I did not know how things stood at the moment and had therefore written to you. I don't know though which article he means; there are several and he speaks of one. Besides, he repeats his nonsense about Bakunin, Eichhoff, etc.
Page me43.153
Eichhoff's thorough defence†c made me laugh.
Page me43.153
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.153
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.154

105
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.154
London, 7 November 1868†a

DEAR FRED,

THANKS FOR THE £5.

Page me43.154

I (and the whole household here) are very worried because of the typhus raging in your parts. It is so contagious. Please report again soon on the status rerum.†b

Page me43.154

It will be impossible to stop that damned Borkheim, whom I shall be seeing today, printing your 2 articles†c (those about Bakunin's manifesto to the Slavs†d). However, I shall only tell him that you are an old personal friend of Bakunin, so that the business may under no circumstances appear in a context insulting to the latter. Borkheim takes himself completely au sérieux†e and really believes he has a political mission to fulfil. He is translating for me the main passages from a Russian book about agrarian disintegration,†f and has also given me a French book on the subject by the Russian Schédo-Ferroti.†g The latter is very much mistaken — he is altogether a very superficial fellow — in saying that the Russian communal system came into existence only as a result of the ban on peasants leaving the land. The whole business, down to the smallest detail, is absolutely identical with the primaeval Germanic communal system. Add to this, in the Russian case (and this may be found also amongst a part of the Indian communal systems, not in the Punjab, but in the South), (1) the non-democratic, but patriarchal character of the commune leadership and (2) the collective responsibility for taxes to the state, etc. It follows from the second point that the more industrious a Russian peasant is, the more he is exploited by the state, not only in terms of taxes, but also for supplying provisions and horses, etc. for the constant passage of troops, for government couriers, etc. The whole shit is breaking down.

Page me43.154

I regard Dietzgen's exposition,†185 in so far as Feuerbach, etc., in short his sources, do not peep through, as entirely his own independent achievement. For the rest, I agree with everything you say. I shall have something to say to him about the repetitions; it is his bad luck that it was precisely Hegel that he did not study.

Page Break me43.155

Page me43.155

The great Weber†a on behalf of 'German Association for Revolutionary Agitation, etc.' has held a meeting together with the French Mayers under Pyat's chairmanship and with other vagabonds, at which they instructed the Yankees in an address†218 to intervene in favour of the Spanish Republic.

Page me43.155

Our Negro, Paul Lafargue, had the misfortune that the French would not recognise his English diploma; they want to make him run the gauntlet of five new examinations, instead of the maximum 1 or 2 as he expected.†121 MRS LAURA SENDS YOU HER COMPLIMENTS.

Page me43.155

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.155
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

106
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.155
[London,] 8 November 1868

SECOND LETTER.
Postscriptum.
Page me43.155
I have just come from Borkheim's. To my surprise I have managed to get him not to print your 2 articles†b under his patronage.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.155
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.156

107
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.156
Manchester, 10 November 1868

Dear Moor,
Many thanks for settling things with Borkheim. From the enclosed letter, which he wrote me, you can see what a 'nincompoop' the man is.†219

Page me43.156

Sarah's†a sickness is taking a very favourable course; it is a simple typhoid fever, vulgo gastric fever; Gumpert expects no more relapses and, by the end of this week, she should be cured. Against the contagion, which Gumpert also does not regard as dangerous, disinfection is a help.

Page me43.156

Lizzie was in Lincolnshire, visiting a patriarchal variety of AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS who do well — they have gardens and potato land, the right of gleaning, which brings in a lot and, in addition, PASSABLE WAGES. Parallel to this, however, the GANG SYSTEM is on the increase; she described it literally as you depicted it in your book.†220 These patriarchal FARM LABOURERS with land are naturally a declining remnant, and are already sending their children into the GANG, while they, for their part, provide the nurseries for the babies of the women working on neighbouring GANGS.

Page me43.156

In Jacob Grimm's Spanish romances there is one in which Conde Claros de Montalban, son of Reinolt (Rinaldo) of the Haimon family, has a love affair with the Infanta, Charlemagne's daughter; the count takes her into a thicket in the garden, where they lie down†b:

de la cintura en arriba (upwards) muchos abrazos se dan, de la cintura en abajo como hombre y mujer se han.†c

Page me43.156

Old Jacob selected a lot of naïve passages like that.

Page me43.156

With many greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.156

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.157

108

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me43.157

Manchester, 13 November 1868

Dear Moor,

I was really ashamed recently to send you a mere trifle of £5, but at that time I was really unable to squeeze out more; today a further five pounds follow enclosed; it was clear to me that just £5 would not help you out.

Page me43.157

Amicus†a Ernest Jones is now really catching it for becoming the obedient servant of Bright and Gladstone and identifying himself completely here with Bazley and Jacob Bright. This afternoon, two large posters blazed on all the walls, one black and one red, presenting a passage from The People's Paper, recently reprinted in the Democrat (WHAT IS THAT?), in which he rejects the cursing and baiting of aristocrats as a bourgeois dodge, proclaims LABOUR AGAINST CAPITAL, and slates the Manchester Liberals as the workers' worst enemies, but all in his old style, you know. This affair, so shortly before the election, can overthrow him.†b

Page me43.157

Have you got the book: Ténot, Paris en Décembre 1851, and can you send me it? If not, I shall order it. Everything is well at home.

Page me43.157

Many greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.157

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.158

109
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.158

London, 14 November 1868

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR £5.

Page me43.158

For the past few days I have had once again the beginning of carbunculosem. Since this muck always starts at this time, I immediately began again with the arsenic. This should cut off further EVOLUTION.

Page me43.158

I am sending you subsequently (RATHER simultaneously) amusing cuttings from the Paris press, supplied by Lafargue. You must send them back, since Jennychen collects the stuff.

Page me43.158

Enclosed also a jolly cutting from Figaro on the people's economic conferences†221 under the LEADERSHIP of Rabbi A. Einhorn, GENERALLY KNOWN BY THE NAME OF I. E. Horn. This idiot (who is, incidentally, skilled in the practice of agiotage) published SOME TIME SINCE a book on the banks,†a of which even the Economist said it was obviously written only for children (although the Times reviewed it ceremoniously).

Page me43.158

Apropos the Economist, you would be surprised to hear that, following the example of Thornton in the Fortnightly Review,†b the Economist declared†c verbatim: 'No LAW" OF DEMAND AND SUPPLY, IN ANY SENSE WHICH HAS YET BEEN ASSIGNED TO THESE WORDS, EXISTS; NEITHER IN FACT, NOR IN TENDENCY, DO MARKET PRICES CONFORM TO THE RULE COMMONLY SUPPOSED TO GOVERN THEM.'

Page me43.158

The great Büchner has sent me his 'Sechs Vorlesungen etc. über die Darwin'sche Theorie, etc.' The book was not yet out when I was visiting Kugelmann.†77 And he (Büchner) has now already sent me the second edition! The way such books are made is NICE. Büchner, for instance (as everybody who has read Lange's balderdash†d knows anyway), states that his CHAPTER on materialist philosophy has been copied mainly from this very Lange. And this same Büchner looks down pityingly on Aristotle, whom he obviously only knows by hearsay! What really amused me, however, was the following passage with regard to the works of Cabanis†a (1798):

Page Break me43.159

'You might almost be listening to Karl Vogt when you read (in Cabanis) expressions like these: The brain is intended for thinking, as the stomach is meant for digestion or the liver for secreting the bile from the blood", etc.'†b

Page me43.159

Büchner obviously believes that Cabanis has copied from K. Vogt. Even to imagine the opposite exceeds the critical faculties of the worthy Büchner. He appears to have first learned of Cabanis from Lange! Ce sont des savants sérieux!†c

Page me43.159

Paris is haunted. The Baudin affair is really reminiscent of the banquet movement under Louis Philippe.†222 Only today there is no National Guard, and Bugeaud (as far as brutality comes into play) is READY from the first day, while in February he was the last to be called upon and at a moment when there existed no ministry, that is to say, under the conditions at that time, no government. Moreover, barricade-building is useless. Leaving aside the Weber†d Pyat bulls of excommunication, I cannot see how a revolution in Paris could be SUCCESSFUL, apart from treason and defection or division in the army.

Page me43.159
I have put a new bee into the bonnets of the Urquhartites (since Collet invited me and my family to visit him last Sunday week†e: I had not seen him personally for years), a bee that is now being very seriously debated between Collet and Urquhart, namely that Peel's Bank Act of 1844†223 makes it possible for the Russian Government, under CERTAIN CONJUNCTURES OF THE MONEY-MARKET, to force the Bank of England into bankruptcy.†f Despite my diplomacy with Collet, I could not keep silent as he driveled on about Ireland, and told him MOST DECIDEDLY, to his face, my VIEWS ON THIS QUESTION.
Page me43.159
Tussy is attending private gymnastic classes. HER COMPLIMENTS TO MRS BURNS.
Page me43.159
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.159
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels and K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.160

110
MARX TO ENGELS†48
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.160
London, 14 November 1868

SECOND LETTER. P. S.

DEAR FRED,
Since practice is better than all theory, I would ask you to describe to me very precisely (with examples) how you run your BUSINESS quant à banquier, etc.†a
Page me43.160
So. 1. The method in purchasing (cotton, etc.). With regard ONLY TO THE MONETARY WAY OF DOING THE THINGS; THE BILLS; TIME FOR DRAWING THEM ETC.
Page me43.160

2. In sales. Bill settlement with your customers and your London CORRESPONDENT.
Page me43.160
3. Settlements and OPERATIONS (CURRENT ACCOUNT etc.) with regard to your BANKER in Manchester.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.160
Since the 2ND VOLUME†187 is largely too theoretical, I shall use the CHAPTER on credit†224 for an ACTUAL DENUNCIATION of this swindle and of COMMERCIAL morals.

Page me43.160
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

111
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me43.160
London, 14 November 1868

Dear Jung,
Before you went to Brussels I gave you the secret circular (that of Stepney) of the 'États-Unis de l'Europe', which speaks of the need to make common cause with the INTERNATIONAL WORKINGMEN'S ASSOCIATION.†225 Since Gustav Vogt — i.e., that sheet — is now taking great liberties with respect to us, please send me the thing back. I shall use it in Liebknecht's paper†a against G. Vogt.

Page Break me43.161
Page me43.161
How did it happen that, in the 2 last issues of The Bee-Hive, there is no word of the resolutions of the GENEVA AND BRUSSELS CONGRESS?†226
Page me43.161
Salut to you and FAMILY.
Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.161
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

112
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.161
[London,] 18 November†b 1868

DEAR FRED,

The LANDLORD (unfortunately he is living pro tempore†c in London), wrote me the enclosed letter some time ago. Yesterday he called, but was not, of course, admitted, since I was allegedly absent. The devil of it is that, because of the OVEREND AFFAIR,†227 this fellow lives on his house rents; in addition, he will not accept bills of exchange. At other times the PRESSURE for the house has never been SO IMMEDIATE, since I only owe him for 1 QUARTER. Lessner, too, is kicking me for THE REMAINDER OF MY DEBT, his wife is DESPERATELY SICK. GENERALLY the SITUATION is bad.
Page me43.161

Yesterday evening, on the CENTRAL COUNCIL†73 the ENGLISH TOO LATE but UNANIMOUSLY acknowledged that I had forecast literally for them, the, for me, HIGHLY AMUSING UPSHOT of the elections, with a criticism of the incorrect policy of the REFORM-LEAGUE.†228 The present HOUSE is the worst since the election under Pam's†d command. The LONG PURSES have never had such an exclusive preponderance. E. Jones

Page Break me43.162
deserved his tumble OVER AND OVER.†102 With regard to Bradlaugh, he had boasted in too Lassallean a manner. At the last Sunday meeting of his congregation in CLEVELAND HALL, there was displayed a placard TO THIS EFFECT: FAREWELL TO THE GREAT ICONOCLAST, THE PEOPLE'S REDEEMER. LONG LIVE TO MR BRADLAUGH, THE DREAD NAUGHT OF ST STEPHEN'S!†229
Page me43.162

In France things look very serious, according to Lafargue's last letters too. The government wants to force the lads on to the streets so that chassepot†230 and RIFLED CANNON may then laisser 'faire merveille'†a! Can you see any CHANCE of successful street conflicts? Defection of the army without a previous thrashing appears to me scarcely credible.
Page me43.162

Büchner's clumsy work†b is of interest to me in as much as it quotes most of the German research in the field of Darwinism — Prof. Jäger (Vienna) and Prof. Haeckel. According to them, the cell has been abandoned as the primaeval form; instead a formless but contractile particle of albumen is taken as STARTING POINT. This hypothesis was later confirmed by the discoveries in Canada (later also in Bavaria and SOME OTHER PLACES). The primaeval form must naturally be traced down to the point at which it may be produced chemically. And it appears that the way to this point has been found.
Page me43.162

The conscientiousness with which Büchner has acquainted himself with the English stuff is also shown by the fact that he classifies Owen as one of Darwin's supporters.
Page me43.162

Borkheim's letter to you,†c which you sent me, I had the pleasure to have read to me for A SECOND TIME by him in person. This nincompoop now accuses Eichhoff of being a 'BUSYBODY'(!) and of 'writing long letters'. What self-knowledge!
Page me43.162

Apropos the Irish elections, the only interesting POINT is Dungarvan, where Burry is presenting himself under the protection of the defector O'Donovan. (Ditto under the protection of the priest.) There is a GENERAL CRY against him amongst the Irish Nationalists since this blackguard, as government prosecutor during the first trial of the Fenians in Dublin, hurled such slanders (à la Constitutionnel against the June insurgents)†231 that even the London papers gave him a wigging.
Page me43.162

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page Break me43.163
Page me43.163

I believe Nincompoop†a has gone to Bordeaux! Such a business trip is certainly necessary to cool his brain fever.

Page me43.163
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

113
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.163
Manchester, 18 November 1868

Dear Moor,

What do you say about the elections in the factory districts? The proletariat has once again made an awful fool of itself. Manchester and Salford return 3 Tories†b against 2 Liberals,†c including the MILK-AND-WATER Bazley, Bolton, Preston, Blackburn, etc., almost all Tories. In Ashton it looks as if Milner Gibson has gone TO THE WALL. Ernest Jones NOWHERE, despite the CHEERING. Everywhere the proletariat are the RAG, TAG AND BOBTAIL of the official parties, and if any party has gained strength from the new VOTERS, it is the Tories. The small towns, the HALF ROTTEN BOROUGHS†232 are the salvation of bourgeois Liberalism, and roles will be reversed: the Tories will favour more members for the big towns and the Liberals will favour unequal representation.

Page me43.163

Here the electors have increased from 24,000 to not quite 48,000, and the Tories have increased their VOTERS from 6,000 to 14-15,000. The Liberals have let slip a lot, and M. Henry did a lot of harm, but it cannot be denied that the increase in working-class VOTES has brought the Tories more than their simple percentage, and has improved their relative position. On the whole this is a good thing. As things look now, Gladstone should have a narrow majority and will be compelled to change the Reform Bill to stop the rolling stone; with a large majority, he would have let things take their course, as usual.

Page me43.163

But it remains an appalling display of weakness by the English proletariat. The parson has shown unexpected power, and also the cringing before RESPECTABILITY. Not a single working-class candidate had A GHOST OF A CHANCE, but MYLORD TOM NODDY or any parvenu snob could have the workers' votes with pleasure.

Page Break me43.164

Page me43.164

The howls of the Liberal bourgeois would amuse me very much were it not for this accompanying experience. To cheer myself up properly, yesterday I made Borchardt's son-in-law, who had dutifully drudged for the Liberals, as drunk as a lord.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.164

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.164
Manchester, 20 November 1868

Dear Moor,

I shall send you some money on Sunday so that you will receive it Monday morning. The stupidity of our cashier is responsible for the fact that it did not already come today. I am sending you £20.

Page me43.164

Militairement parlant,†a the fellows in Paris have NOT THE GHOST OF A CHANCE, if they launch their attack at present. It is not so easy to get out of this Bonapartism. Without a military revolt, nothing can be done. In my opinion, a coup can only be attempted when at least the garde mobile†233 once again stands between the people and the army. It is certain and obvious that Bonaparte wants an attempt, and the revolutionaries would be jackasses if they gave him the satisfaction. In addition, the new rifles (1) can very easily be rendered useless (by extracting the pin) and (2) even if they fall into the hands of the insurgents in a usable state, they are valueless if you do not have the specific ammunition, which you cannot make like the old cartridges. And why, in fact, should they launch their attack just at this moment? The continuation of this state of affairs injures Bonaparte more every day; in addition, there is no special reason for attacking. Bonaparte will also take care not to give the sort of reason that only the revolutionaries need.

Page Break me43.165

Page me43.165

The secret of the elections in Lancashire is the English workers' hatred of the Irish. The damned Murphy cleared the way for the Tories. In the meantime, the Irish state church is finished no matter what. Otherwise things have happened as I said.†a The Morning Herald has already explained that, though the Tories seemed to be in the minority, they were really in the majority, since they represent the majority of the people.†b

Page me43.165

If you have not received the £20 by Monday morning, telegraph me immediately. On Sunday I cannot register and would not consider even a registered letter safe in the hands of the post from Saturday evening to Monday morning.

Page me43.165

Many greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.165

Send me back the letter from Nincompoop.†c As you know I have to show him what grammatical blunders he makes.

Page me43.165

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

115
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.165
London, 23 November 1868

DEAR FRED,
The FIRST HALF arrived this morning.
Page me43.165
Enclosed 2 letters, ONE from Collet and the other from Jones.
Page me43.165
As regards Collet, I have burnt my fingers with these blasted Urquhartites†d. You know — at least I think I wrote to you about it — that, purely for the joy of MISCHIEF-MONGERING, I set new bees in their bonnets about the Peel Act of 1844†223 and its useful effect for Russia. (Incidentally the matter is correct WITHIN CERTAIN LIMITS.) Now Urquhart wants to print one of these letters over my name in his NEXT Diplomatic Review.†234 If I refused 'my name', I would make them mistrustful. So I am IN FOR IT. It is a consolation that not a soul reads the Diplomatic Review (EXCEPT A SMALL CLIQUE). The Urquhartites, however, are burning their fingers too. In order to give the affair more weight, they obviously intend to cite me as the author of Capital, which would be AN ABOMINATION in their eyes if they knew it.

Page Break me43.166
Page me43.166
As regards Ernest Jones, I find him EXCEEDINGLY COOL. I should act for him as ELECTIONEERING AGENT (for Greenwich)! I have replied†84 that I see not a GHOST OF A CHANCE for him:
Page me43.166
1. Baxter Langley is the local candidate, and neither Mill nor Beales COULD STAND without his PERMISSION.
Page me43.166
2. The GENERAL COUNCIL of the 'International' does not get mixed up in ELECTIONEERING. In no case could we act against B. Langley because — and this is a fact — since the Brussels Congress†138 B. Langley and his SUNDAY LEAGUE†235 have concluded an amicable agreement with us. (In fact, our sessions take place in their hall.)
Page me43.166

3. He (Jones) is at present unpopular in London (and this is true). Reynolds's ARTICLES: 'TRAITORS IN THE CAMP', etc., had damaged him.†236
Page me43.166
I have just received the enclosed letter from the secretary†a of the Workers' Educational Society here.†67 This shows that the Lassalleans imported from Paris and Germany, who maintain secret contacts with Schweitzer, have made use of Lessner's absence due to his wife's sickness in order fraudulently to obtain from here a vote of confidence for Schweitzer against the Nurembergers.†135 As a well-known member of the Society, I would be made responsible for this — and this appears to me to be the aim of the whole operation. Thus I am writing to Speyer without delay explaining the reasons that, under these circumstances, I must announce my resignation from the Society.†b

Your
K. M.

Page Break me43.167
Page me43.167
That damned Schweitzer is still too young to pull the wool over my eyes.

Page me43.167
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

116
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.167
V/J 71 968 — Manchester, 7 January 1868 £10.
T/N 14 065 — London, 26 February 1868 £10.
Second halves.
First sent with preceding post.
[Manchester,] 23 November 1868

Dear Moor,
I can send you the above only today, but give you the good news that, after a conversation today with Calico Gottfried,†a it will probably be possible to prolong the contract with him for a few years.†158 I intend, if all goes well, to take 3 years, the last of which would be without any obligation on my part to work. If all this is successful, which must be more or less decided by the end of February at the latest, we are over the hill, and I shall be able without difficulty to pay off the £100 debt you still have, and in general to establish the affair properly and on a solid basis, so that this load of debts will not return, at least for the period of the contract.

Page me43.167
Lizzie suddenly became very unwell yesterday; I thought at first it was serious, but she has slept a lot, so is now much better. She had congestions to the head. Tussy's letter gave her much pleasure, and as soon as she is better again she will answer it.
Page me43.167
The wonderful primeval mass of the respected Büchner is still a great mystery to me. Couldn't you send us the book†b here some time?

Page Break me43.168
Page me43.168
How ABOUT Ténot, Paris, le 2 décembre?
Page me43.168
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.168
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

117
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.168
Manchester, 25 November 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed returned the letters.†a Jones is COOL INDEED, and in every sense he has counted his chickens before they are hatched. He will scarcely find another place to elect him. LIBERALS OF HIS CALIBRE there are enough, and more than enough, ever since he identified himself with this variety. Even the great Dr Borchardt asked him (if one can believe Dr Borchardt) how he could identify himself in such a way with Bright and Gladstone, since he would certainly have to attack them in 5 years time.
Page me43.168
Nothing else new here. I have finally prevailed on Lizzie to let Gumpert treat her; so far she resisted, and said there was nothing wrong with her. He will probably have been there today. Incidentally, she was better today.

Your

F. E.

Page me43.168
Büchner†b received with thanks.

Page me43.168
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.169

118
ENGELS TO W. HOLZENHAUER†237
IN COLOGNE
Page me43.169
[Draft]

[Manchester,] 26 November 1868

Following receipt of your letter dated 18 August I inquired at home†84 about the circumstances in which you had left my brothers'†238 business and also sought to find out whether there was any prospect of your obtaining employment there again.
Page me43.169
Now I have received the relevant information, and unfortunately it is such that I can offer you no hope whatsoever of obtaining employment there again. I am therefore returning to you enclosed the false, as you say, testimony of my brother-in-law.†a In view of the information received, I must, it is true, assume this testimony does not wholly correspond to reality, a fact on which you may congratulate yourself, to be sure.

Respectfully yours,
F. E.

Page me43.169
Published for the first time

Printed according to the original

119
ENGELS TO MARX†239
IN LONDON
Page me43.169
Manchester, 29 November 1868

Dear Moor,

Consider very precisely the answers to the enclosed questions, and answer them for me by return, so that I may have your reply on Tuesday morning.

Page me43.169

1. How much money do you need to pay all your debts, SO AS TO HAVE A CLEAR START?

Page me43.169

2. Can you manage with £350 for your usual regular needs for a year (from this I exclude extra expenses caused by sickness and unforeseen events), i.e., so that you do not need to get into debt. If not, tell me the sum required for it. All on the assumption that all the old debts have previously been paid off. This question is naturally the main one.

Page Break me43.170

Page me43.170

My negotiations with Gottfried Ermen†a are taking the turn that, on the termination of my contract, — June 30 — he wishes to buy me out, i.e., he offers me a sum of money if I undertake not to enter into any competing business for 5 years, and allow him to continue to manage the firm. This is exactly where I wanted to get the man. However, since in the past few years the balances have been poor, it is questionable whether this offer will place us in a position to live for a number of years without money troubles, even if we assume the probable case that all sorts of events will cause us to move again to the continent, and hence get us involved in extra expenses. The sum offered me by Gottfried Ermen (which, long before he offered it to me, I was determined to devote, if need be exclusively, to covering the necessary support for you) would put me in a position to provide you certainly with £350 annually for 5-6 years, and in special cases even with some more. You will, however, understand that all my arrangements would be upset if, from time to time, a sum of debts accumulated that would have to be covered out of further capital. My calculations have to be based upon the fact that our living expenses must be met not solely from revenue, but also — from the beginning — partly from capital, and for this very reason they are rather complicated and must be adhered to strictly, or we shall come to grief.

Page me43.170

I would ask you to tell me quite frankly how these matters really stand, and your reply will determine how I conduct myself in the future vis-à-vis Gottfried Ermen. So, name yourself the sum you need regularly per annum, and we shall see what can be done.

Page me43.170

What will happen after the 5-6 years mentioned above is not clear to me either. If everything remains as at present, I would no longer be in a position to send you £350 a year or even more, but still at least £150. Yet much may change by then, and your literary work will be capable of bringing something in for you.

Page me43.170

Best greetings to your wife and the girls. Send one of the enclosed photograms to Laura.

Your

F. E.

Page me43.170
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.171

120
MARX TO ENGELS†80
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.171
London, 30 November 1868

DEAR FRED,

I am quite KNOCKED DOWN by your too great kindness.
Page me43.171

I had my wife show me all the BILLS, and the amount of the debts is much greater than I thought, £210 (of which ABOUT £75 for the pawnshop and interest). This does not include the doctor's BILL for attendance during the SCARLATINA, which he has not yet submitted.
Page me43.171

During the past few years we have used more than £350, but the sum is absolutely sufficient, since 1. during the past few years Lafargue was living with us, and expenses were much increased by his presence in the house; and 2., owing to the debt system, everything cost much too much. With a complete CLEARANCE of the debts, I would be able for the first time to enforce a STRICT ADMINISTRATION.
Page me43.171

You can imagine how unpleasant conditions have been here at home over the past few months from the fact that Jennychen — behind my back — got an engagement for herself as private governess with an English family. The business is not due to begin until January 1869. I gave permission, after the event, on the proviso (the lady of the house, her husband is Dr Monroe, visited my wife in this connection) that the engagement should only be binding for I month, and both sides, after the month had passed, would have the right to cancel. Though the matter was extremely embarrassing to me (the child would have to teach small children almost all day long) — I do not need to emphasise this — I consented on this condition, since I found it favourable that Jennychen would be diverted by some sort of occupation and, in particular, get outside these 4 walls. For years now my wife has quite lost her TEMPER — understandable under the circumstances, but not thereby made pleasanter — and tortures the children mortally with her complaints and irritability and BAD HUMOUR, though no children could bear it all IN A MORE JOLLY WAY. But sunt certi denique fines.†a It is naturally UNPLEASANT to write to you about this. It is easier to speak of such things. But it is necessary in order to explain to you why I did not absolutely reverse Jennychen's step.

Page Break me43.172

Your
K. M.

Page me43.172
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

121
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.172
London, 5 December 1868

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed:

1. Letter from Schweitzer,
2. Mineworkers of Lugau,
3. Russe Serno-Solovyevich (author of the pamphlet against Goegg†a).

Page me43.172

So Schweitzer is determined to become king of the tailors in Germany! Good luck to him. On one point he is right — Wilhelm's†b incapability! His claim that the Nurembergers†135 — on pain of high treason — should enroll under his leadership IS VERY COOL INDEED.†240

Page me43.172

Wilhelm becomes stupider every day. What a lousy paper!†c From the letter from Lugau†241 it emerges that he has so far done nothing with reference to the International. At the same time, he plays fine tricks on us. In his 'cosy' way, he announces that the 'International Working Men's Association' costs nothing, so that all and sundry may join without paying. From Switzerland Becker complains about this absurdity.†242

Page me43.172

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.172
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.173

122
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.173
London, 5 December 1868

Dear Kugelmann,

Have you got Dietzgen's address? Quite a while ago he sent me a fragment of a manuscript on 'intellectual capacity',†185 which, despite a certain confusion and too frequent repetitions, contained much that was excellent, and — as the independent product of a worker — even admirable. I did not reply immediately after reading it through, since I wanted to hear Engels' opinion.†a So I sent him the manuscript. A long time passed before I got it back. And now I cannot find Dietzgen's letter with his new address. He wrote me, to wit, in his last letter from Petersburg, that he would return to the Rhine and settle there. Have you perhaps received his address from him? If so, be so kind as to send it to me by return. My conscience — one never becomes completely free of this sort of thing — is pricking me for leaving Dietzgen so long without a reply. You also promised to tell me something about his personality.
Page me43.173

I have received Büchner's lectures on Darwinism. He is obviously a 'book-maker' and probably for this reason is called 'Büchner'.†b His superficial babble about the history of materialism is obviously copied from Lange.†c The way such a whipper-snapper disposes of, e.g., Aristotle — quite a different sort of natural philosopher from Büchner — is really astonishing. It is also very naïve of him to say, referring to Cabanis, 'you might almost be listening to Karl Vogt'.†d As if Cabanis copied Vogt!
Page me43.173

Some time ago I promised to write you a few words about the FRENCH BRANCH.†72 These RAGAMUFFINS are, a half or 2/3 of them, maquereaux†e and such-like rabble, and all of them — after our people had withdrawn — heroes of the revolutionary phrase, who, FROM A SAFE DISTANCE, OF COURSE, kill kings and emperors, in particular Louis Napoleon. In their eyes we are, naturally, reactionaries, and they drew up, in all due form, an indictment against us, which was, in fact, submitted to the Brussels Congress — in the closed sessions. The fury of these BLACKLEGS was heightened by the fact that they had been taken over by Felix Pyat, a failed French fourth-class author of melodramas, who, in the revolution of '48, was only used as a TOASTMASTER — (the name given by the English to the men paid to announce the TOASTS at public banquets, or to supervise the order of the TOASTS) — a man who has a perfect monomania 'TO SHOUT IN A WHISPER' and to play the dangerous conspirator. Pyat wanted to use this gang to convert the 'International Working Men's Association' into his following. In particular, the aim was to compromise us. Thus, at a public MEETING which the FRENCH BRANCH announced and trumpeted by poster as a meeting of the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, Louis Napoleon, alias Badinguet,†a was in all due form sentenced to death, the execution naturally being left to the nameless Brutuses of Paris.†b Since the English press paid no attention to this farce, we also would have passed it over in silence. But one of the gang — a certain Vésinier, a circulator of chantage†c literature — spread the whole muck in the Belgian paper La Cigale, which claims to be an organ of the 'International', a sort of 'comic' paper, the like of which certainly cannot be found anywhere else in Europe. There is, you see, nothing comic about it except its seriousness. From the Cigale the stuff found its way into the Pays, Journal de l'Empire. It was naturally grist to the mill of Paul de Cassagnac. Thereupon we — i.e. THE GENERAL COUNCIL — officially announced, in 6 lines in the Cigale, that F. Pyat had absolutely no connection with the 'International', of which he was not even a member.†d Hinc illae irae!†e This frog-and-mouse war†f ended when the FRENCH BRANCH rancorously withdrew from us, and it now goes about its business on its own, under Pyat's auspices. They have established here, in London, as a succursale,†g a so-called German Agitational Association, consisting of a dozen and a half, headed by an old refugee from the Palatinate, the half-crazy watchmaker Weber.†h Now you know all there is to know about this solemn, highfalutin and important event. Just one thing more. We had the satisfaction that Blanqui, through one of his friends, writing ditto in the Cigale, made Pyat absolutely ridiculous, leaving him only the alternative of being either a MONOMANIAC or a police agent.†a

Page Break me43.174

Page Break me43.175
Page me43.175

Yesterday evening I received a letter from Schweitzer†240 announcing that he was off to the cachot†b again, and that the outbreak of civil war — that is war between him and W. Liebknecht — is unavoidable. I must say that Schweitzer is right on one point, that is, Liebknecht's incompetence. His sheet†c is really wretched. How can a man whom I crammed orally for 15 years (he was always too lazy to read) have such things published as, for instance, Society and State, in which 'the social' (and that's a fine category too!) is treated as the secondary, and 'the political' as the essential?†d This would be incomprehensible were it not that Liebknecht is a South German, and seems always to have confused me with his old superior, the 'noble' Gustav Struve.
Page me43.175

Lafargue and wife have been in Paris for 2 months. There, however, — they don't want to recognise the medical qualifications he achieved in London, and demand that he take 5 new 'Paris' exams!
Page me43.175

As the result of a SETTLEMENT, my 'economic' (not politicoeconomic) circumstances will take a satisfactory form from next year.†e With best greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen.

Yours
Karl Marx

Page me43.175

Is your wife also active in the German ladies' great emancipation campaign? I think that German women should begin by driving their husbands to self-emancipation.

Page me43.175
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 12, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.176

123
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.176
[London,] 6 December 1868

DEAR FRED,
Please send me £3 by this Wednesday†a (the day after tomorrow), since the gas bill, etc., are due, and I have promised to pay by then.
Page me43.176
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.176
So it is Lowe and Bright Co.!†243

Page me43.176
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

124
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.176
Manchester, 8 December 1868

Dear Moor,
Enclosed five pounds and the letters from Lugau†241 and Schweitzer†240 returned. That things would come to this pass with Schweitzer was fairly clear to me from previous practical experience. This honourable gentleman was not inclined to hand over his 'strict' organisation, headed by the nominal king of the tailors; for him the only question was whether good old Wilhelm†b would subordinate himself to him or not. I don't exactly mind his assessing Wilhelm correctly, but he forgets that he himself, with much more brain, is, in his LINE, just such a twopenny-halfpenny character as Wilhelm. His confidence that he can regularly be given ticket of leave from the cachot†a also has an unpleasant ring; he should not have written this to you after using this method so often, and precisely during his Bismarck era, with such success.

Page Break me43.177
Page me43.177
The Lugau lads' letter does them great honour. That jackass Liebknecht has described the conditions of these workers in his sheet†b in more than 20 articles, yet only here does one see clearly where the infamy lies. Incidentally, Moore says that similar conditions — though not so bureaucratically intricate ones — obtain in English coalmines.
Page me43.177
The letter from Serno-Solovyevich†c was not enclosed.
Page me43.177
In haste.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.177
Today in the office I was overrun, without a break, from twelve-thirty until five.

Page me43.177
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

125
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER†244
Page me43.177
London, 9 December 1868

DEAR FRED,
BEST THANKS FOR £5.
Page me43.177
I forgot to enclose the Russian.†d Follows herewith. In addition Sigfrid Meyer.†245 (The Drury of whom he speaks is a fishy customer who was formerly in London and who wished to push himself onto the CENTRAL COUNCIL. He impressed S. Meyer by his public appearances in New York. Meyer wrote to us that we should really appoint Drury as our agent. I replied to him†e that Mr Drury had already had himself 'recommended' to us in this capacity by Cremer, Huleck, etc. We did not want him.)

Page Break me43.178
Page me43.178

Finally a reappearance CARD from Nincompoop.†a This letter is very characteristic of him. Schily took him to Lafargue et Co. You know that in Paris you can only move in on the terme.†b Lafargue and Laura thus lived in a chambre garnie,†c high up, until about a fortnight ago (when they found lodgings, and we sent them their chests and boxes). The first thing Borkheim said when he came to visit them with Schily: 'This has put me quite out of breath. I would not like often to climb so high!' And now his marginal notes, which he sends to me! Incidentally, he has kept his promise about 'not-climbing'. Lafargue had bought the Ténot,†d but since the postage to London is dear, Borkheim was supposed to bring the book here on his return journey to Bordeaux. But he was not seen again.
Page me43.178

And this reminds me of another anecdote concerning Borkheim. Shortly before Lafargue left, Borkheim invited him and my family to dinner (Laura did not go). After the 'gentlemen' had retired to Borkheim's STUDY — the gentlemen were Lafargue, Borkheim and myself — Borkheim related all sorts of gossip told or published by one person or another about me. I let him have his head for a time, while Lafargue rocked crossly backwards and forwards in his chair. Finally I interrupted him and said: It was altogether extraordinary what gossip went round in the world. Engels and I could tell the best stories about this, because we possessed proper archives about the refugees. For instance, when he — Borkheim — came from Switzerland to England, we received a report that he was an agent of the Prussian Count X†e (I cannot JUST NOW recall the name), who was himself a Prussian spy, and that it had been this count that had sent him to Switzerland, etc. Borkheim exploded like a bomb. 'He had never thought that anybody at all in London knew anything about this story, etc.' He then started to tell the story at great length and in great detail and, in his excitement, pumped too much HOT WATER and even more BRANDY into himself. In this OVERWORKED condition we then returned to the ladies for tea, and Borkheim at once burst out with the announcement that I had given him THE MOST STRANGE SURPRISE of his life. He then told the same story three times in succession, to the great annoyance of his wife, since all sorts of females play a role in it. Later he wrote to me twice: I had obviously been joking, he had probably himself told me the gossip about him, etc. I, however, remained serious. (We had learned about the business from Schily, in one of his letters from Paris, at the time of the Vogt affair.) There must be punishment!

Page Break me43.179
Page me43.179

Apropos. Something that remained a mystery to me for a long time was this: during the 3 years of the cotton FAMINE, where did the English get all that cotton, even for the DIMINISHED SCALE OF PRODUCTION?†246 It was impossible to explain this from the official statistics. Despite all the imports from India, etc., there was seen to be quite an enormous deficit if you calculated the exports to the Continent (and even the occasional ones to New England). Nothing, or almost nothing, remained for HOME CONSUMPTION. The business was easily solved. It has now been proved (a fact perhaps known to you, but new to me) that, at the outbreak of the Civil War, the English had verbotenus†a approximately 3 years' stock (naturally for a DIMINISHED SCALE OF PRODUCTION). What a fine crash that would have produced if the Civil War had not broken out!
Page me43.179
The EXPORTS OF YARN and MANUFACTURED GOODS in 1862, 1863 and 1864 were = 1,208,920,000 lbs (REDUCED TO YARN) and the SUPPLIES (IMPORTS) (REDUCED TO EQUIVALENT WEIGHT IN YARN) = 1,187,369,000 lbs.†b In the first figure, the surplus of baryta hidden in the MANUFACTURED GOODS has probably been overlooked. Even so, the result roughly emerges that the entire HOME SUPPLY was met from existing stocks.
Page me43.179
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.179
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.180

126
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.180
[London,] 10 December 1868

DEAR FRED,
You must return the enclosed letter to me immediately after reading it, since I must send it back to Kugelmann.†247
Page me43.180
Kugelmann (there is nothing else worthy of notice in his letter, which I am not sending, as I wish to reply to him) has this to say about Dr Freund, the 'author' of the letter:

'Recently, in Dresden, I recruited a promising pupil for you in the shape of a very intelligent colleague, a university teacher in Breslau. He told me he had written a small study on the worker question. I recommended him to read your book†a before publishing his study. His own reflections had led him to Malthusian ideas. — I would like to have the enclosed letter returned quite soon, since I still have to reply to it. — Freund is now engaged in an epoch-making work dealing with the development of the normal and pathological pelvis, in particular, and of the skeleton, in general. In Dresden he gave a lecture on this that created a sensation. The professors and privy councillors received his brilliant discoveries with a dignified air of superiority, which vexed me. At the close of our section meeting I said a few words in order to emphasise Freund's achievements in a complimentary manner and I asked those who agreed with me to rise. The entire section rose, but — they were perfidious enough to omit this ovation from the minutes of the meeting. When I wanted to insist on its inclusion, Freund intervened himself and said he did not wish it. I believe he now regrets this. This is to make his letter understandable. When his work appears, Engels will, in any case, have to plough through it'.

Page me43.180

(It appears you have to plough through everything.)

Your
K. M.

Page me43.180
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.181

127
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.181
[Manchester,] 11 December 1868

Dear Moor,

I return you 2 letters, the most the ENVELOPE can hold, in all haste; I wanted to write to you from the office, but was held up, and the last post will be leaving soon out here.

Page me43.181

Nincompoop†a is extremely charming and tactful. This honourable gentleman appears to need to apply the SNOB-standard everywhere. When you see him, just ask him sometime if he is related to Mr Hersch Kriminand, and where the man lives. (This gentleman exists and signs himself exactly thus; he lives in Lemberg.) Then you can ask him what Lemberg is called. Polish Lwow, Little Russian and Great Russian L'vov, that is to say Lvov or Löwenstadt from lev†b = lion. The Jews translate that as Löwenberg, abbreviated Lemberg.

Page me43.181

Here we have the finest crisis, and this time pure (though only relative) overproduction. The spinners and manufacturers have, for nearly 2 years now, on their own account, been consigning goods unsaleable here to India and China, thus doubly overloading the overloaded markets. This is no longer possible, and they are failing right and left. One of the first victims was Knowles, our fatty, who failed not so much because of consignments, but through general corporeal weakness — the 4 brothers had simply gobbled up the money.
Page me43.181

I call this overproduction relative because it only becomes overproduction as a result of the cotton prices, which are still high. Two pence difference would and will suffice to absorb the whole lot lying around. Cotton Middling Orleans today 11d., before the war 6½ d., 7d., 8d., according to season. Thus still 60 to 80% above the old price.
Page me43.181

What you say about cotton 1860-61 is not quite so bad.†c The harvest of 1860 was the largest ever, and the STOCK at the outbreak of the war greater than ever before. We lived on this in 1861 and even 1862, and the highest prices came only in 1863. But this also depended on other things — the effective blockade of the Southern harbours, etc., etc. But there was never any question of 3 years' reserve, that is enormously exaggerated. If you like, I can compile the things for you from the official report (i. e., the LIVERPOOL BROKER ASSOCIATION'S report), and I shall do it in any case before I abandon COMMERCE. Incidentally, you will find a lot in Watts.†a

Page Break me43.182
Page me43.182

I expect any day to receive the draft contract with Gottfried Ermen.†b

Your
F. E.

Page me43.182
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.182
London, 12 December 1868†c

DEAR FRED,

You will have seen that the ESTIMATE about COTTON relics on a comparison between exports and imports for 1862, 1863, and 1864. The conclusion regarding the stocks of RAW COTTON + COTTON MANUFACTURES (I believe I forgot the latter addition in the letter to you†d) available in the UNITED KINGDOM ON 1 JANUARY 1862 thus depends entirely on the correctness of the premisses. The data are based on the report by Messrs ELLISON AND HAYWOOD. The bare figures are as follows:

Page Break me43.183
Statistics of Cotton in the United Kingdom 1862, 1863, 1864†a

	1862	1863	1864	For 3 years
Import thousand of lbs
Cotton Imported	533,176	691,847	896,770
Ditto Exported	216,963	260,934	247,194
Available to Consumption	316,213	430,913	649,576
Waste in Spinning	53,756	64,637	90,940
Equal to Production in Yarn	262,457	366,276	558,636
Total		1,187,369
Export [thousand of lbs]
Yarn	88,554	70,678	71,951†b
Piece goods etc.	324,128	321,561	332,048
Total	412,682	392,239	403,999†c	1,208,320†d

Page me43.183

The arsenic works excellently. You know that, ABOUT 6 weeks ago, I felt something carbuncular and then re-started imbibing arsenic, and I am still at it. In fact, nothing has appeared except constant small preliminaries, which just as constantly disappear again. For years the business always began in October, and by January was in full bloom. Now it looks as though I shall escape it this year, and that only enough traces of the sickness reappeared and are reappearing as were necessary to induce me to take arsenic.

Page me43.183

In his latest speech in Edinburgh, in which Huxley again took a more materialist stand than in recent years, he opened up another loophole for himself.†248 As long as we really observe and think, we can never escape materialism. But all this is reduced to the relationship between cause and effect, and 'your great compatriot Hume' has already proved that these categories have nothing in common with the things in themselves. Ergo, it is up to you to believe what you will. Q.E.D.

Page Break me43.184

Page me43.184

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page me43.184

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 3, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

129

MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29

IN HANOVER

Page me43.184

London, 12 December 1868

Dear Friend,

I wanted to write to you at greater length, but am prevented from doing so by unforeseen external 'business'. But do not let this keep you from taking up your pen again soon.

Page me43.184

The letter from Freund (returned enclosed, with thanks) interested me greatly.†a It is high time for other people to come forward in Germany than the present 'pillars' of science.

Page me43.184

I also return the portrait of Dietzgen.†249 His biography is not quite what I had thought. But I always had a feeling he was 'not a worker like Eccarius'. In fact, the sort of philosophical outlook he has worked out for himself demands a certain calmness and disposable time that the EVERYDAY WORKMAN does not enjoy. I have two very good workers living in New York, A. Vogt, a shoemaker, and Sigfrid Meyer, a mining engineer, both formerly from Berlin. A third worker who could give lectures on my book†b is Lochner, a joiner (COMMON WORKING MAN), who has been here in London ABOUT 15 years.

Page me43.184
Tell your dear wife that I never 'suspected' her of serving under Madame General Geck.†c I queried only in jest.†d Incidentally, the ladies cannot complain about the 'International', since it has appointed a lady, Madame Law, as a member of the General Council. Joking aside, very great progress was demonstrated at the last congress of the American 'LABOR UNION',†146 inter alia, by the fact that it treated the women workers with full parity; by contrast, the English, and to an even greater extent the gallant French, are displaying a marked narrowness of spirit in this respect. Everyone who knows anything of history also knows that great social revolutions are impossible without the feminine ferment. Social progress may be measured precisely by the social position of the fair sex (plain ones included).

Page Break me43.185
Page me43.185
As far as the 'SETTLEMENT' is concerned, there could never, from the outset, have been any question of my taking over a business before my book was finished. Otherwise I could long have extricated myself from any embarrassing situation. The fact is simply this — but strictly between us — that, on the one hand, I made an arrangement with my family; on the other, Engels, without my knowledge, through agreement with his PARTNER about his own income (he is leaving the business in June), has made a SETTLEMENT for me, as a result of which, from next year, I shall be able to work in peace.†a
Page me43.185
With best greetings.
Yours
K. M.

Page me43.185
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 11, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

130
MARX TO ASHER & CO.†250
IN LONDON
Page me43.185
[Draft]

[London, not before 12 December 1868]

The only place where a few copies of Herr Vogt are still obtainable, is Berlin. At least, there were some to be had a few weeks ago. I shall write there and if a copy can be got, it will be forwarded to 11, Unter den Linden.

Yours truly
K. M.

Page me43.185
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.186

131
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.186
Manchester, 13 December 1868

Dear Moor,

If the envelope holds them, I shall send back Meyer and Serno,†251 otherwise tomorrow from the office, where I have larger envelopes.

Page me43.186

In Meyer's letter, the juxtaposition of Bohemians and Chinese amused me. Otherwise, his false Jacob-Grimm style is a bit much for me, the art of saying as little as possible with secretive circumlocutions, and putting that little unclearly.

Page me43.186

For a Russian, Serno writes remarkably poor French; for his pamphlet†a he must have had a lot of help. If Nincompoop†b knew you were corresponding with a Russian! You can then tell him 1. that the name Serno, as a masculine, is impossible in Great Russian since o is a neuter ending, whereas in Little Russian male names ending in o are very frequent, thus the man is no Muscovite but a Ruthenian, a Maloross†c; 2. that he is a born member of the Brimstone Gang†252; serny — syernyj — means sulphurous, from sera, sulphur; Solovyevich means son of the nightingale. I am eager to see the sheet published by these people,†d particularly what sort of a science he, Serno, will propound, since he so curses the ignorance of the French. However, such a French journal is always very good, much better than the Belgian Proudhonist sheets.

Page me43.186

The story about Nincompoop is very neat.†e

Page me43.186

Only now do I understand what you meant with the cotton business†f, however, you had omitted that this also included the stocks of yarn and fabrics. But then it must be noted that, to explain things rationally, you must include 1861, when the collosal 4 million crop of 1860 gradually arrived here. How ELLISON & HAYWOOD could omit this†g is incomprehensible to me, unless the people had a particular business purpose in their statistics. The big

Page Break me43.187
American crop of 1860, which came to England in [18]61, at the time of the PAPER BLOCKADE†253 is the basis of all the later production. I shall see to it that I send you the necessary data on the subject, at least regarding raw cotton. Of course, this in no way changes the fact that, without the American War, there would certainly have been, in 1861-62, an absolutely colossal collapse, this time as the result of pure, unalloyed and unconcealed overproduction.
Page me43.187
Weighting with CHINA CLAY (this CHINA lies in Derbyshire and Staffordshire; it is fine potter's earth, and CHINA here means porcelain) has only gained ground since 1863-64. For some years it was the secret of a comparative few. Recently, somebody was sentenced to £1,060 DAMAGES because of this, and I hope that, as soon as I am out of the firm, they will also tackle Gottfried on account of the talc-stone he sells as cotton yarn. Tussy may well curse about the yarn when 25 to 30% of it consists of sour meal sweetened with talc-stone.
Page me43.187
I am very glad the arsenic was and continues to be so effective.
Page me43.187
I wish I were through with the murky business with Gottfried Ermen.†a I cannot trust the rogue further than I can see him, and have to take all possible precautions. I still haven't even received the draft agreement; he puts the blame on the lawyer, but I blame it on the fact that he himself is still mulling over what additional chicanery for me he can get included in it. Luckily, I possess an epistle from him in which he himself makes the relevant proposal to me, and I myself drafted the memorandum given to the lawyer as a basis. But I already note that he is keen for me to take money out of the firm before I am quite in the clear with him — then he would have me in his hand and could squeeze me. But as soon as I have the draft, and find it to be FAIRLY DRAWN UP, I shall send you enough for you to pay off your debts and have some CASH IN HAND, and from the New Year the new arrangement will begin. I may come to visit you for a few days myself, but Nincompoop and his consorts must not know of this.
Page me43.187
Best greetings to your wife and the girls.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.187
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.188

132
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.188
[London,] 14 December 1868

DEAR FRED,

On Saturday evening†a Ténot (Paris and Provinces)†b and the proceedings of the Baudin trial†222 arrived. I am sending you Ténot (Paris) and Baudin today. The Ténot (Provinces) you will receive in a few days. You can bring the whole lot back yourself, for nobody in the house except me has yet read the things.
Page me43.188

In the Ténot (Paris) I find little new, except a few details — I have not yet read the Provinces. The enormous sensation created by the book in Paris, and in France as a whole, proves a very interesting FACT, namely that the generation that has grown up under Badinguet†c knew nothing at all about the history of the regime under which it is living. Now the fellows are rubbing their eyes and are quite thunderstruck. If one may parva componere magnis,†d have we not had precisely the same experience in our own way? In Germany the story is spreading, as a remarkable novelty, that Lassalle was only one of our satellites, and that he did not discover the 'class struggle'.
Page me43.188

I can discover nothing special in the speech by Gambetta,†e who is now being lionised in France. His manner reminds me strikingly of Michel de Bourges. This Michel also made his name through a political trial. A few months before the February revolution he declared that he had abandoned his belief in 'democracy', since it always turned into 'demagogy'. Of course, this did not prevent him from shining as a républicain de la veille†f after February, and rendering excellent service to Bonaparte, nolens or volens,†g particularly in the question of quaestors.†254 He was also MORE OR LESS in contact with the republican 'Plon-Plon'.
Page me43.188

I was really delighted to read again IN FULL the deliberations of the 'républicains modérés', i. e., those seated in the législative, in the 10th Arrondissement-Mairie.†255 I believe no similar tragicomedy can be found anywhere in world history, at least not carried out in this pure form. The Frankfurt-Stuttgart Parliament†256 is nothing in comparison. The French alone understand how to put on a show, whether it be a convention or a rump parliament of thorough scoundrels.

Page Break me43.189
Page me43.189

As for the cotton, I have the import and export lists for 1861, etc., in the RETURNS of the BOARD OF TRADE.†a The only FACT of importance to me was — and this is certainly unprecedented — that for 3 years nothing was manufactured for the home market (I mean from the freshly-imported raw materials during those 3 years, or those only intended to make up stock).

Page me43.189
Asher, the booksellers here (a BRANCH of the Berlin one, Unter den Linden) have written to me that they need a few COPIES of Herr Vogt in Berlin.†b That infernal Wilhelm,†c as you know, never answered a very pressing letter I sent him months ago,†84 except to say that he had frittered away the 300 copies turned over to him, but that a few still existed in Berlin. I shall give him another kick today.†84
Page me43.189
Tussychen is enraptured at the prospect of having you here with us, and so is the WHOLE FAMILY. TUSSY IS A FANATICAL PARTISAN OF YOURS, MRS LIZZIE, AND THE 'CONVICTED' NATION.†d But you must write when.
Page me43.189
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.189
In Balzac's Le Curé de Village there is this passage:

'Si le produit industriel n'était pas le double en valeur de son prix de revient en argent, le commerce n'existerait pas.'

Page me43.189
Qu'en dis-tu?†e
Page me43.189
Since Nincompoop†f discovered Serno, he does not treat him so severely. He is only astonished that Serno turned to me instead of to him.

Page me43.189
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.190

133
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.190
London, 15 December 1868
Evening, after midnight

DEAR FRED,

Would you please study the enclosed document†257 seriously, despite its fadaise.†a Your marginal notes should be written for me in French, and the stuff itself returned to me at the latest by SATURDAY NEXT†b!

Page me43.190

Mr Bakunin — in the background of this business — is condescending enough to wish to take the workers' movement under Russian leadership.

Page me43.190

This shit has been in existence for 2 months. Only this evening did OLD Becker inform the General Council about it in writing. This time Nincompoop†c is right. As OLD Becker writes, this association should make up for the deficient 'idealism' of our Association. L'idéalisme Russe!

Page me43.190

There was great anger about the document this evening at the meeting of our Conseil Général, particularly among the French. I had known about the shit for a long time. I regarded it as stillborn, and out of consideration for OLD Becker, wanted to let it die a quiet death.

Page me43.190

But the business has become more serious than I expected. And consideration for OLD Becker is no longer admissible. This evening the COUNCIL decided to repudiate this INTERLOPING SOCIETY publicly — in Paris, New York, Germany and Switzerland. I have been commissioned with drafting the decree of repudiation†d (for next Tuesday†e). I regret the whole thing, because of OLD Becker. Mais†f our Association cannot commit SUICIDE because of OLD Becker.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.190

Strohn writes to me from Düsseldorf that his brother Eugen has died suddenly in Hamburg.

Page Break me43.191

Page me43.191

About the COTTON BANKRUPTCIES in Manchester, etc., can you send me The Guardian?

Page me43.191

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

134
ENGELS TO MARX†174
IN LONDON
Page me43.191
Manchester, 18 December 1868

Dear Moor,

Best thanks for the Ténot†a and the Baudin trial.†222 As soon as I have read the latter I shall send them both back. You can keep Province there; I have ordered them both at the bookshop; one really must have things of this sort. The complete oblivion of revolutionary-counterrevolutionary causality is a necessary result of every victorious reaction; in Germany the younger generation knows absolutely nothing about '48, except the wretched howls of the Kreuzzeitung, which echoed in '49-52 in all the papers; history comes to an abrupt stop there at the end of '47. — The deliberations of the 10th Mairie are really exquisite; I had never read such a complete version.†255
Page me43.191

By chance I read E. Strohn's obituary in the Kölnische Zeitung. He died of articular rheumatism.
Page me43.191

The Geneva document†257 is very naïve. Old man Becker has never been able to refrain from cliquish agitation; wherever 2 or 3 get together, he must be amongst them; yet if you had warned him in good time, he would probably have steered clear of it. Now he will be astonished by the bad effects of his well-meant efforts. It is as clear as daylight that the International cannot get involved in this fraud. Il y aurait deux conseils généraux et même deux congrès; c'est l'Etat dans l'Etat, et dès le premier moment le conflit éclaterait entre le conseil pratique à Londres et le conseil théorique, 'idéaliste', à Genève. Il ne peut y avoir deux corps internationaux (par profession) dans l'Internationale, pas plus que deux conseils généraux. Du reste, qui vous donne le droit de reconnaître un soi-disant bureau central sans mandataires dont les membres appartenants à la même nationalité se constituent (§ 3 du règlement on omet le 'se' et pour cause!) en bureau national de leur pays! Ces messieurs, n'ayant pas de constituants, eux-mêmes exceptés, veulent que l'Internationale se constituât en mandataire pour eux. Si l'Internationale refuse de le faire, qui reconnaîtrait 'le groupe initiateur' autrement dit le 'bureau central' pour ses représentants? Le conseil central de l'Internationale au moins a passé par trois élections successives et tout le monde sait qu'il représente des myriades d'ouvriers; mais ces 'initiateurs'?

Page Break me43.192
Page me43.192

Et puis si nous voulons bien faire abstraction de la formalité d'élection, que représentent les noms qui forment ce groupe initiateur? ce groupe qui prétend de se donner 'pour mission spéciale d'étudier les questions politiques et philosophiques etc.'? Ce sera sans doute la science qu'ils représenteront. Nous trouverons parmi eux des hommes dont il est notoire qu'ils ont passé leur vie entière à l'étude de ces questions? Au contraire. Pas un nom dont le porteur ait, jusqu'ici, même osé prétendre à passer pour un homme de science. S'ils sont sans mandats comme représentants de la démocratie sociale, ils le sont encore mille fois plus comme représentants de la science.†a

Page me43.192
The rest you remarked upon in your notes. Like you, I regard the business as a stillborn, purely Genevan local growth. It would only be viable if you were to oppose it too violently, and thus gave it importance. I think it would be best calmly but firmly to rebuff these people with their pretensions to sneaking into the International. Apart from this, we should say that they had selected a special field and one would have to wait to see what they make of it and, we should also say that, for the present, there was nothing to stop members of one association from being members of the other. Since the fellows, to put it bluntly, have no other field of activity than chatter, they will soon enough bore one another to death, and since it may be expected that they will have no new adherents from outside (given such conditions), the whole concern will certainly soon collapse. But if you violently oppose this Russian intrigue, you will unnecessarily arouse the very numerous — particularly in Switzerland — political philistines among the journeymen, and harm the International. With a Russian (and in this case there are 4,†a not counting the females), with a Russian one must never lose one's TEMPER.

Page Break me43.193
Page me43.193
I have never read anything more wretched than the theoretical programme. Siberia, his stomach, and the young Polish woman†b have made Bakunin a perfect blockhead.
Page me43.193
My trip will probably not come to anything before the New Year, the damned draft contract†c is still not ready.
Page me43.193
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.193
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.194

135
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me43.194

Manchester, 18 December 1868†a

Dear Hermann,

F. Ris in Mittlöden set himself up as N. Dürst Söhne (sons of the Cologner), and moved from there to Zurich. I believe he was formerly with Dürst, and young Dürst, who was here at the time, spoke quite well of him. According to bank information from Glarus, Ris is good for credit of 10,000 frs.

Page me43.194

E. Burghardt is the nephew and son-in-law of the Burghardt of Burghardt, Krenels & Co. (former associé of Burghardt, Aders & Co.), whom you will know. He set himself up here and went bankrupt certainly once, if not twice, and virtually nothing came of it. Many years ago I sometimes met him at an inn in the evening; since he married I have scarcely seen him at all, and I know absolutely nothing of what he has been doing since then. But what do you want an agent in Munich for?

Page me43.194

Tell Mother I still haven't received the draft contract from G. Ermen; he blames the lawyers.†b The point is that he would like to have me withdraw large sums of money from the business at this moment; then he would have me at his mercy, but we are not as green in the eye as that.

Page me43.194

Be so kind as to send me my current account in the course of January, since I would like to pay off the sum owed as soon as I am clear with G. Ermen. You could also say whether I should remit to Funke or there.

Page me43.194

If I had wished to drive things with G. Ermen to extremes, that is, risk a breach, and had then had to start something else, I think I could have squeezed out about £750 more. But I had absolutely no interest in being tied to jolly old commerce for about another 10 years — and it wouldn't have been worth starting a new business again for a shorter period.

Page me43.194

Enclosed — a pile of photographs, of which you could send 2 to Engelskirchen and distribute the remainder there. One of each sort is intended for Mother.

Page Break me43.195

Page me43.195

Heartiest greetings to Mother, your wife and all my brothers and sisters, and have a good time over the holidays.

Page me43.195

With best greetings

Your

Friedrich

Page me43.195

First published abridged in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

136
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.195
London, 19 December 1868†244

DEAR FRED,

THANKS for your marginal notes!†a When I wrote to you that evening I was excited. But the next morning there was already a reaction and the decision to treat the matter diplomatically, quite as you advise.

Page me43.195

Ténot's Province is much better. It contains many new details for us. Had the Parisians held out a couple of days longer, the Empire would have been foutu.†b The movement (republican) among the rural population was much bigger than we knew.

Page me43.195

Enclosed Réveil, the organ of Ledru-Rollin. Delescluze his âme damnée, républicain de vieille roche, asinus.†c He is the provisional government's commissioner who led the Belgians into the guetàpens†d of Risquons Tout.†258 Thus traitor or arch-ASS. Probably the latter.

Page me43.195

The stupid idea of the workers who wanted to give a banquet for R. Johnson has been blocked by us.†259 Coningsby, whose initiative it was, is a blackguard. This character was on a PLEASURE TRIP TO THE UNITED STATES and was paid by Seward for this London reception for R. Johnson. He is the same WORKMAN who wrote to The Times years ago, stating that the workers were politically satisfied and DID NOT WANT THE SUFFRAGE.

Page Break me43.196
Page me43.196

If you could send me a few £ for the Christmas week now beginning, it would be very welcome.

Page me43.196

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.196
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

137
MARX TO LAURA LAFARGUE†260
IN PARIS
Page me43.196
London, 22 December 1868

My dear child,

I wanted to send you together with Rückert†261 a truly delicious book — Blüthen Morgenländischer Mystik by Tholuck.†a Mais la plus belle fille de France ne peut donner que ce qu'elle a.†b The book was not to be had in all London. I have ordered it from Germany. You will get it in about 3 weeks.
Page me43.196

Tell Lafargue that he must excuse my silence. I was really overworked during the last months, as I wanted to have done with certain studies before the beginning of the New Year. However, aufgeschoben ist nicht aufgehoben.†c Meanwhile tell him that Dr Hunter, excellent as his report†d is, knows as little as most Englishmen do of the past (social) history of his own country. The degradation of the rural labourers has nothing whatever to do with the Corn Laws of 1815.†262 If he wants to know the real causes which have brought them down to the zero of their present position, you must translate him Ch. VI, Section II (Ursprüngliche Accumulation†a) of my book.†263

Page Break me43.197
Page me43.197

Happy New Year.
Page me43.197

Your most devoted 'Old One'

K. Marx

Page me43.197
First published abridged in Sotheby Parke Bernet und Co., 19 April 1977 and in full, in Russian, in Kommunist, No. 17, Moscow, 1980

Reproduced from the original in full for the first time

138
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.197
[London,] 23 December 1868

DEAR FRED,

I simply acknowledge — since I must go to the City right away — the receipt of your brilliant CHRISTMAS present. You can imagine what jubilation there was in the house.

Page me43.197

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.197

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.198

139

MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON

Page me43.198

[London,] 28 December 1868

Dear Jung,

Scarcely had you gone when I received a letter from Bakunin†264 assuring me of his special friendship.

Page me43.198

From his letter I see that he has once again written at length to De Paepe, in order to lure him into the Alliance Internationale.†265 To prevent later MISCHIEF or later complaints about the lack of timely information, you must dispatch to De Paepe as soon as possible a COPY of our resolution on the Alliance.†a Of course, you must tell him, at the same time, that, because of the present state of affairs in Switzerland†266 and in order to avoid any appearance of SCISSION, we do not wish to have the resolution published, but are confining ourselves to communicating it confidentially to the respective central councils in the various countries.

Page me43.198

Do not forget to invite Applegarth to the Saturday session in good time.†267 It would probably be good to do the same with Odger.

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.198

First published in: G. Jaeckh, Die Internationale, Leipzig, 1904

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.199

1869

140
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.199
[London,] 1 January 1869

DEAR FRED,
HAPPY NEW YEAR!
Page me43.199
From the enclosed letter from Lafargue you will see that I have received a special NEW YEAR'S GIFT — THE DIGNITY OF GRANDFATHER.†a
Page me43.199
From the attached 2 numbers printed in Paris — Cloche and Diable à quatre — you can see what an arrogant tone prevails there. It should be compared to the language used by the opposition in Prussia! This petite presse†b — and its men included even Rochefort — was the Bonaparte regime's very own product. Now it is the most dangerous weapon against it.
Page me43.199
From the enclosed issues of the Vorbote†c you can learn about the scandal in Basle.†266 These bloody fellows — I mean our spokesmen over there — have a talent all their own for making the International Working Men's Association responsible for every local QUARREL between MASTER and MEN. At the same time, they neglect to take any measures for the event of war, i.e., establishing TRADES UNIONS. Instead they shout the more loudly. The petty cantonal government intervenes. The smallest incident thus becomes important. Then comes an appeal to the International Working Men's Association in general and the London General Council in particular to pay, ON THE SHORTEST NOTICE, the Swiss war costs. And then 'old man' Becker writes†d that we should not 'compromise' ourselves again, as in the Geneva affair,†16 etc. Soon more about this and the Russian-International intermezzo.†e

Page Break me43.200
Page me43.200
The whole FAMILY sends the COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON. Tussy says POOR FRED, HE MUST FEEL RATHER SEEDY BY THIS TIME OF THE YEAR.
Page me43.200
Addio.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.200
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

141
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.200
[Manchester,] 3 January 1869

Caro Moro,†a

Happy New Year! and my best wishes on the occasion of the Paris New Year gift. I expect you and your wife cannot look at each other without laughing about the new dignity.
Page me43.200

The Basle business is not quite clear to me from the Vorbote,†b so I am waiting anxiously for the promised additions, and also the further course of the Bakuniad. Bakunin's speeches in the Kolokol are very stupid.†c The fellow does not appear to have learned anything for donkey's years. I was interested to learn from the above that he and Herzen are still in collusion with each other. Hence Herzen must be completely done for, otherwise he would not give up Kolokol.†d†268 Incidentally, the fellow now writes un français à lui,†e which is quite appalling — and this although the chap lives in a French-speaking country! Bakunin's French is much better.
Page me43.200

Thanks for Cloche and Diable à 4; the arrogance is indeed very

Page Break me43.200a

Karl Marx with his elder daughter Jenny (end of December 1868-beginning of January 1869)

Page Break me43.200b
Page Break me43.201
great. A few Orleanist millions scattered among the generals would now be very desirable.
Page me43.201

Best greetings and congratulations to the whole FAMILY.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.201
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

142
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.201
London, 13 January 1869

DEAR FRED,
THANKS for the numbers of Zukunft. (Thesmar and Georgios Jung!)
Page me43.201
I put off writing to you from day to day because of a frightful cold which, for ABOUT 2 WEEKS, has been absolutely besieging my eyes, ears, nose and entire head. Since, however, this damned foggy weather still gives no hope of an early delivery from the evil, I shall wait no longer. Is it so pleasant at your place in Manchester too? Little wonder that SUICIDES are in full blossom here now. Only an Irishman, even in Seven Dials,†269 says THAT 'HE WOULD RATHER COMMIT SUICIDE ON ANY ONE THAN HIMSELF'.
Page me43.201
Did the young Th. von Gimborn from Emmerich, manufacturer in nuce,†a present himself to you? It is not quite clear to me what he wants. First, he told me he wanted to go into a factory as a technician for a certain period, SAY half a year, or as a simple worker, in order to study the organisation, etc., of English factory work. Now it is only a question of a 14-day stay in a factory supplying agricultural machinery. Does Gimborn, AFTER ALL, simply wish to discover English factory secrets? He won't find it easy.
Page me43.201
Now a short report about the 'international incidents'.
Page me43.201
a) 'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste'†257: On

Page Break me43.202
22 December 1868, a unanimous decision of the General Council which stated: 1. Tous les articles du Règlement de l'Alliance, etc. statuant sur les relations avec l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs, sont déclarés nuls et de nul effet; 2. l'Alliance etc. n'est pas admise comme branche de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs.†a The reasoning behind this decision (which I edited), is stated completely in legal form, and shows the conflict between the statutes of the planned Alliance and our Rules,†270 etc. A final considérant,†b which must show old Becker,†c in particular, his asininity, is that the Brussels Congress†138 already set a precedent with respect to the Ligue de la Paix et de la Liberté.†271 With regard to this organisation, which wanted to be recognised by the International Association, the Congress declared: Since the League claims to follow the same principles and to pursue the same aims as the International Association, it has no 'raison d'être' and, considérant this, stated finally, 'plusieurs membres du groupe initiateur de Genève'†d also voted in this sense in Brussels.

Page me43.202

In the meantime, we have received letters from Brussels, Rouen, Lyon, etc., declaring unconditional support for the General Council decision. Not one voice has been raised in support of le groupe initiateur de Genève. That this group did not act quite honestly is clear from the fact they only informed us of their establishment and their activities after they had already tried to win over the Brussels people, etc. I regard the matter as closed, though we have not yet received an answer to our 'judgement' from Geneva. The attempt has, in any case, failed.
Page me43.202

b) Ad vocem†e Bakunin:

To understand his enclosed letter,†264 you must know the following: D'abord,†f this letter crossed our 'MESSAGE' regarding the 'Alliance'. Bakunin is thus still under the pleasant misapprehension that he will be allowed to go his own way. Further: The Russian Serno was, in his earlier correspondence with Borkheim, decidedly against Bakunin. In my reply to Serno†84 I wished to use this young man as an informant about Bakunin. Since I trust no Russian, I did it in this form: 'What is my old friend (I don't know if he still is) Bakunin doing, etc., etc.' The Russian Serno immediately informed Bakunin of this letter, and Bakunin used it for a sentimental entrée!

Page Break me43.203
Page me43.203

c) Ad vocem OLD Becker:

He has got himself badly stuck. D'abord he sends us, dated Geneva, 21 December, a 4-page letter about the Basle business,†a but without a single fait précis.†b We should, however, act immediately. At the same time, he writes to Lessner that we (the General Council) had already 'compromised' ourselves in the Geneva affair, and this should not happen again. Or, he says in these precise words (in his letter to Lessner),

'does the General Council, like God, exist only in the faith of fools?' In Geneva, people only speak of us with a shrug of the shoulders, etc.

Page me43.203

Thereupon Becker received the reply from Jung that his 4-page epistle contained nothing. How can he expect to receive money in London on the basis of such a vacuum?
Page me43.203

In his letter of 21 December, Becker announced a further ELABORATE REPORT. Instead of this we receive the Vorbote. You saw for yourself that the Vorbote in fact only reported†c on the 'concluded' LOCKOUT of the RIBBON WEAVERS,†266 and certainly did not make clear how the conflict has developed since. In short, TO THIS VERY MOMENT we know no more than is reported in Vorbote. Not only can no step be taken with the TRADES UNIONS on this basis, but it is impossible to publish anything about the affair on behalf of the General Council. We cannot expose ourselves to a reply from the usurers of Basle that we are shouting to the world without knowing the facts.
Page me43.203

Summa summarum, a week ago the General Council decided to reprimand both Becker and Perret (the French correspondent for Geneva) for not providing us to date with the necessary information on the Basle affair. The matter will rest there for the time being. I'm sorry for OLD Becker. But he must realise that we hold the reins, although we refrain from direct intervention as long as possible.
Page me43.203

d) STRIKES IN ROUEN, VIENNE, ETC. (COTTONSPINNING†272):

Are ABOUT 6-7 WEEKS OLD. The interesting thing about the case is that, some time ago, the MASTER-MANUFACTURERS (and SPINNERS) in Amiens held a GENERAL CONGRESS under the chairmanship of the maire†d of Amiens. Here it was decided — on the suggestion of a certain faiseur†e named Vidal, who had hung out in England for a considerable time — that competition should be offered to the English in England, etc. Namely, by establishing dépôts for French yarn, etc., in England, both for sale there and to overseas merchants who trade directly with England. And this should be brought about by a further reduction of WAGES, after it had already been admitted that, in France itself, assuming the present tariffs, English competition was only being withstood through the low WAGES (relative to the English ones). In fact, after this Amiens congress, they began with wage reductions in Rouen, Vienne, etc. HENCE the STRIKES. We have let the people know, through Dupont, about the bad state of business here (especially also the COTTON TRADE), and thus the difficulty of raising money at this time. MEANWHILE, as you will see from the enclosed letter (Vienne), the STRIKE in Vienne has come to an end. For the present we have sent to those in Rouen, where the conflict is still going on, a draft for £20 on the Paris bronze-workers, who still owe us this money from their LOCKOUT.†18 Incidentally, these French workers act much more rationally than the Swiss and are, at the same time, much more modest in their demands.

Page Break me43.204

Page me43.204

Hoping that your head is not so sneezily and villainously idiotised as mine,

Your
K. Moro†a

Page me43.204
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

143
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.204
Manchester, 19 January 1869

Dear Moor,

You must excuse me for replying so late and so briefly, but recently we have had nothing but misfortune at home. Scarcely is Sarah†b better, than Lizzie gets violent gastric catarrh, which I treated for a long while, and scarcely is this over, and she gets, as the result of an injury to her toe, an inflammation of the lymph ducts in her foot and leg, which could have become very unpleasant, but is now nearly over — and before she could get up, Mary Ellen†a returns sick from her parents, where she had spent a few days. What it is I shall only find out tomorrow, since Gumpert will be coming only then: he fears scarlet fever; but, up till now, there has been no sign of a rash. In addition, there have been all sorts of stupid invitations that could not be refused — a lot of work at the office, and you will grasp that I have enough going on.

Page Break me43.205
Page me43.205

With best greetings to the ladies.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.205

Did you get the wine that time, and also the Social-Demokrat and Ténot,†b etc.?

Page me43.205
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

144
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.205

London, 23 January 1869

DEAR FRED,

We all hope that things are better at 86 Mornington STREET. Scarlet fever is apparently raging throughout England. But perhaps Gumpert has made a mistake with Mary Ellen.†a TUSSY SENDS HER BEST COMPLIMENTS TO HER AND MRS BURNS.

Page me43.205

Here there is a preponderance of coughs and colds. In my case, things were so bad that, for nearly 2 weeks, I was 'puking' regularly, to use the elegant language of Frau Blind. I went out again yesterday for the first time, and today I am smoking A CIGAR as a test.

Page Break me43.206

Page me43.206

The enclosed photogram is sent to you by Jennychen, who is also coughing nastily. She asks for the return of Büchner,†a since she has studied Darwin†b and now wishes to get acquainted with the great Büchner. The cross (on the photogram of Jenny) is the Polish 1864 Insurrection Cross.†273

Page me43.206

Tussy has taken over sending receipts for the wine, and believes that to date she has done so.

Page me43.206

Enclosed are 2 Borkheimiana. So that he can deposit his 'super intellect' somewhere, and not buzz my ears full, I have recommended that he write 'Russian Letters' for Zukunft.†274 Nous verrons.†c

Page me43.206

I have seen from The Money Market Review that Knowles is paying 7s.6d. in the £.†d How is the old boy doing?

Page me43.206

With best greetings to the whole household.

Your
Moor

Page me43.206

First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

145

ENGELS TO MARX†275
IN LONDON

Page me43.206
Manchester, 25 January 1869
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

In all haste, just an announcement that we are all on our feet again, and that, luckily, Gumpert raised a false alarm about scarlet fever. Today I must look carefully through the draft contract with G. Ermen, which I am now getting, so that things may be settled as soon as possible†e; for this reason, only these few lines today. As soon as I see the way clear and everything has gone so far that no miscarriage may be feared, I shall come to London for a few days.
Page me43.206

Best greetings to you all.

Your
F. E.

Page Break me43.207
Page me43.207

Since Jenny has been coughing, you must have cancelled immediately the arrangement about giving lessons?†a

Page me43.207
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

146
ENGELS TO MARX†275
IN LONDON
Page me43.207
Manchester, 26 January 1869
7 Southgate

Dear Moor,

Today, at 2 o'clock midday, Ernest Jones died of pneumonia. He had been sick since Thursday†b and given up by the doctors since Friday.
Page me43.207

Another of the old gang!

Your
F. E.

Page me43.207
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

147
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.207
[London,] 28 January 1869

DEAR FRED,

The news about E. Jones naturally caused deep dismay in our household, since he was one of our few old friends.

Page Break me43.208
Page me43.208

I am sending you 1 Vorbote and a small pamphlet I received today from Berlin. The author, who sent it, describes himself on the envelope as a university lecturer in agricultural management.
Page me43.208

Jennychen's cough has nearly disappeared. In the past few days I have had another bad attack, but today the business appears to me to have changed into a running cold, and thus be coming to an end.
Page me43.208

Liebknecht writes to me that, in Switzerland and Germany, revolts are pending against Becker (OUR OLD ONE†a) and that a public scandal can only be avoided if Becker breaks with Bakunin and abandons his dictatorial behaviour. People are very dissatisfied with his financial management, and his reports on it. Liebknecht wishes me to write privatim to Becker, since he is very STUBBORN. But the business is tricky. Wilhelm will go to Vienna in May. The last fifty copies of Herr Vogt have been deposited with Kugelmann, on my instructions.
Page me43.208

The Gurney affair†227 AMUSES me immensely. I have studied this damned CASE in all the DETAILS, so I found nothing new in the PROCEEDINGS in Mansion House,†b EXCEPT GREAT Edwards.†c You must notify me several days in advance when you are coming here, so I can invite Prof. Beesly for one evening.
Page me43.208

Salut.
Your Karlo Moro†d

Page me43.208
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.209

148
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.209
Manchester, 29 January 1869

Dear Moor,

I at last have a chance to write to you at greater length.

Page me43.209

Herr, etc. Gimborn†a has not presented himself. According to your description, the fellow obviously wants nothing but to indulge in spying industrially.

Page me43.209

The Bakunin group of both male and female sex (which difference Bakunin also wants to abolish, i.e., that of the sexes) has probably quietly passed away. The business was of Russian cunning, but still started stupidly; the fox tail showed too clearly and workers, in particular, cannot be caught in this way. Old Becker†b simply cannot keep his fingers off 'organising', and was just the man to walk into the trap. I am quite ready to believe that he commits other idiocies, but I wish we had a better source than Wilhelm,†c who simply cannot see FACTS as they really are. Apropos, Wilhelm has not sent me his sheet†d any more since New Year; if he thinks I'm going to pay for it, he is making a big mistake. I am really glad not to be instructed every week that we may not make a revolution until the Federal Diet, the blind Guelph†e and the honorable Elector of Hesse†f are restored, and terrible and legitimate revenge wreaked upon Bismarck the godless.

Page me43.209

The Basle story is very nice.†266 Altogether things are marching ahead well in Switzerland. Of course, the affair is significant only because everything which is more or less suppressed on the rest of the Continent appears there in the light of day. But that is in itself very good. And direct legislation by the people makes sense there, because the direct or indirect domination of the bourgeoisie should be countered on the legislative councils.†276 Since the Swiss workers virtually did not exist as a political party of their own until the Geneva STRIKE,†16 but were simply the tail of the radical bourgeoisie, they elected only radical bourgeois to the councils. On the other hand, the elected peasants could also be managed easily by the educated bourgeois. For small cantons, this may be quite satisfactory, but it naturally immediately becomes superfluous and a hindrance as soon as the proletariat enters the movement en masse and begins to dominate it.

Page Break me43.210
Page me43.210
A nice feature of the Basle strike is the contributions from Austria as far as Temesvár. It is inexcusable how old Becker has squandered this business with his wild declarations.†a
Page me43.210
Have only glanced at the Vogt pamphlet,†b seen that he has the horse descended from the flea. If this is so, from whom is the jackass who wrote this pamphlet descended?
Page me43.210
Today I am sending you back the copies of Social-Demokrat, etc., together with some copies of Zukunft.
Page me43.210
It is very good that there are still 50 copies of Herr Vogt with Kugelmann. When Vogt lectures again in Berlin, Kugelmann must send some there, and advertise it in the newspapers. I bet that will drive him away.
Page me43.210
Sam Moore is now busily studying the first part of your Duncker,†c and he understands it quite well. He has completely grasped the dialectical stuff on money theory, etc., and declares it the best thing in the whole book, THEORETICALLY SPEAKING.
Page me43.210
The business with good old Gottfried†d is dragging on and on.†e If I can manage it somehow, I shall come to London next Thursday†f evening and stay until Sunday evening.
Page me43.210
The photograph gave great pleasure.†g
Page me43.210
Gumpert has the Büchner†h; I shall pick it up in the next few days; I fight shy of his wife, who is becoming increasingly philistine.
Page me43.210
You must give it to the Lassalleans that they understand agitation in quite a different way from our good old Wilhelm and his boors of the People's Party.†277 This is very disagreeable, since they appear to outflank Wilhelm and Bebel completely, and the masses are so enormously stupid, and the leaders a bunch of blackguards.
Page me43.210
Tomorrow Jones will be buried with an enormous procession in the same churchyard where Lupus lies. It is a real pity about the man. After all, his bourgeois phrases were simply hypocrisy, and here in Manchester there is nobody who can replace him with the workers. The people here will break up completely and trail more than ever behind the bourgeoisie. Furthermore, amongst the politicians, he was the only educated Englishman who was, au fond,†a completely on our side.

Page Break me43.211

Page me43.211
Apropos Beesly: How are things regarding the article for the Westminster?†b Strike while the iron is hot.
Page me43.211
I still have something of a cold. With weather like this, there is no end to it. I hope you are better now, too.
Page me43.211
Best greetings to your wife and the girls. How is MRS LAFARGUE AND BABY?†c

Your
F. E.

Page me43.211
That the Russian†d from the start announces 'Marx, K., Works, Volume I',†e, is also good.

Page me43.211
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

149
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.211
[London,] 29 January 1869

DEAR FRED,
Eichhoff's brother†f wanted to reprint my '18th Brumaire' (and pay for it).
Page me43.211
Accordingly, I thought it necessary to write to Meissner,†84 to ask, as it were, for his authorisation for this (he does not like pamphlets). He writes that nobody but he may print the pamphlet, since he is my publisher ex officio,†g and wishes to remain such. The stuff should be sent to him direct, after minor alterations.†278
Page me43.211
QUESTION: can you get me a COPY of Louis Bonaparte? Wasn't there a copy amongst Lupus' estate?†279

Your
K. M.

Page me43.211
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.212

150
ENGELS TO EMIL BLANK
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me43.212
Manchester, 4 February 1869

Dear Emil,

I have just received from Mother the sad news that our dear Marie Bartels died of scarlet fever on Monday†a evening. The news moved and shocked me deeply. I had watched her, and all your children, growing up from the start more than the children of my other brothers and sisters, accordingly my attachment to her was livelier and warmer; I saw her last at her wedding, when she was so extremely happy and could look forward to a long succession of happy years; and now all this has come to an end. What must be the feelings of you and Marien,†b of poor Robert†c with his two small children! For twenty years you and Marie have been so blessed by happiness, have had so little opportunity to taste the tragic face of life, that such a stroke out of a clear sky must hit you doubly hard. In such cases words of consolation are no help; one must weep oneself dry like a child, till time heals the wounds. I am not writing to console you, but only because I know that it is a comfort to receive expressions of sympathy from those from whom one may expect them. And this sympathy and this compassion I send you, please believe me, with all my heart.
Page me43.212

Greet Marie, poor Robert, and all your children most heartily from me.
Page me43.212

From my heart
Your Friedrich

Page me43.212
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.213

151
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.213
London, 11 February 1869

Dear Friend,

The delay in this letter may be ascribed to two circumstances. First, the damned foggy weather here — NOTHING BUT MIST — has loaded me with a nearly four-week quite extraordinarily vicious influenza. Second, I had the enclosed photograms†a taken at least 7 weeks ago but, as a result of this very weather and atmospheric darkness, the things could only be printed from the plate very recently.
Page me43.213

The enclosed letter from A. Ruge†b has been received by my friend Strohn in Bradford, from one of his business friends. Ruge obviously could not resist the 'negation of the negation'. You must return the letter to me immediately, since Strohn must return it to the addressee.
Page me43.213

The TREASURER of our GENERAL COUNCIL here — Cowell Stepney, a very rich and distinguished man, but completely devoted to the workers' cause, though in a somewhat eccentric way — enquired of a friend in Bonn about literature (German) on the labour question and socialism. He sent him, en réponse,†c a summary (written) made by Dr Held, Professor of Political Economy at Bonn. His comments show the tremendous narrow-mindedness of these learned mandarins. Writing about me and Engels, he (Held) states:

'Engels. The Condition of the Working Class" etc., the best product of German socialist-communist literature.' 'Closely connected with Engels is Karl Marx. He is the author of the most scientific and learned work which socialism as a whole has to show, Capital etc. Although only recently published, this book is still an echo (!) of the movement before 1848. That is why I mention it here in connection with Engels. The work is, at the same time, (!) of great interest for the present since (!!) one may study here the source from which Lassalle drew his basic ideas.'

Page me43.213

A nice place to find oneself!
Page me43.213

A lecturer of political economy at a German university writes to me that I have thoroughly convinced him, but — but his position enjoins him, 'like other colleagues', not to express his conviction.
Page me43.213

This cowardice on the part of the specialist mandarins, on the one hand, and the conspiracy of silence of the bourgeois and reactionary press, on the other, is doing me great damage. Meissner writes that the accounts at the autumn fair are unfavourable. He is still 200 thalers below his costs. He adds: If only half that which Kugelmann has done for Hanover had been done in a few larger places like Berlin, we should already have a second edition.

Page Break me43.214

Page me43.214
I became a grandfather on 1 January; A LITTLE BOY†a was the New Year gift. Lafargue has finally managed it to have himself excused 3 examinations and only has to take another two in France.
Page me43.214
With best greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen,

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.214
The cross my eldest daughter Jenny is wearing in the photogram is a Polish Insurrection Cross of 1864.†273

Page me43.214
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 12, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

152
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.214
[London,] 13 February 1869

DEAR FRED,
THANKS for the copies of Zukunft.
Page me43.214
Enclosed is a letter from Lugau,†280 together with the fellows' statutes, etc.†b Since I am, at the moment, very occupied with my book,†c and have actually started work again after a feverish-cold interruption of several weeks, it would be very good — supposing your time is not completely taken up either — if you could make me a short report on the enclosed documents†281 (if possible in English, for communication to the GENERAL COUNCIL). These good mineworkers in Lugau are the first in Germany to communicate with us directly, and we must take a public stand on their behalf.

Page Break me43.215

Page me43.215
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.215
Send me the stuff back as soon you no longer need it.
Page me43.215
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

153
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.215
[London,] 15 February 1869

DEAR FRED,
Herewith the story about the LOANS under Westbury, etc. You can keep the booklet, but you must send me back the enclosed English letter. I told Borkheim I needed the information for an acquaintance in Holland.
Page me43.215
Don't forget to let me have Foster's FOREIGN EXCHANGES†a AS SOON AS POSSIBLE. I shall return it immediately after reading it. The book cannot be obtained here.
Page me43.215
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.215
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.216

154
MARX TO PAUL AND LAURA LAFARGUE

IN PARIS
Page me43.216
London, 15 February 1869

Dear Paul and beloved Cacadou,

You know Falstaff's opinion of old men. They are all of them cynics.†a So you will not be astonished at my passing over that stubborn fact — my prolonged silence. I jump at once into medias res,†b turning the back to the sins of the past.

Page me43.216

In the first instance, I must frankly tell you that I feel much anxiety as to Laura's health. Her prolonged sequestration I know not how to account for.†c Her invisibility to my friends, such as Dupont, stimulates my misgivings. So soon as certain arrangements permit, I shall come over for the single purpose of having a look at my child. After the publication of The 18th Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte,†d I might not be quite safe at Paris. Do not, in your letters, drop any hint as to my secret plan.

Page me43.216

I feel much obliged to little Fouchtra†e who tries his best at keeping his Grandfather up in the literature of the day. Vermorel's book†f has much amused me. I generally concur in his appreciation of the persons that played in 1848 a part natural selection had not meant them for. Some men he treats too seriously, f.i. Odilon Barrot, la nullité grave.†g What he lacks, is the knowledge of the finer nuances de classe represented, more or less unconsciously, as in the case of Ledru-Rollin, by those provisional,†h but not providential men. Il y a quelque chose qui cloche†i — his continuous attempt at revindicating, and in a very clever way too, that strange mixture of the chevalier d'industrie,†j the utopian, and the critic. I have named E. Girardin. As to his criticism, not of men, but of measures, l'ignorance et l'arrogance Proudhoniennes peep out at every instant.

Page me43.216

As to the ouvrier artiste, he is not my man. The only thing I like, is the portrait of Blanqui which I have sent to Beesly, to cure him of the strange prejudices he has imbibed in the book of that vieille cocotte, Daniel Stern.†a When we had him at dinner, he naively asked me whether Blanqui was not one of those irrespectable men, like Bradlaugh. I could not but chuckle in my sleeves at this truly John Bullian appreciation of revolutionary characters. I asked him, whether his hero, Catiline,†b had been a 'respectable' man?

Page Break me43.217

Page me43.217

The thing that amuses me most in Le Peuple is the circumstance — a good sample of historical irony — that these learned Proudhonians are forced to come out as gens de lettre,†c a part which they despise so much, and which, nevertheless, is their only true rôle, the only thing they are fit for.

Page me43.217

As to Paul's lively narration of his adventure with Mlle Royer,†282 it has tickled Engels and my humble self. I was not at all astonished at his failure. He will remember that, having read her preface to Darwin,†d I told him at once she was a bourgeois.

Darwin was led by the struggle for life in English society — the competition of all with all, bellum omnium contra omnes†e — to discover competition to [...] as the ruling law of 'bestial' and vegetative life. The Darwinism,†f conversely, considers this a conclusive reason for human society never to emancipate itself from its bestiality.
Page me43.217

As to La Misère de la Philosophie, I do really not see what I can further do in this affair. The mass has been spoilt from the beginning. The books ought to have been thankfully received at once, but it is now too late to mend. I have written to Meissner†84 to look after Vogler, but we will hardly gain anything by finding out that vagabond. The worst is that Vieweg not only keeps, but sequestrates the book. If he advertises it anew, at 2 fcs per piece, he might sell it — perhaps. Lafargue ought to speak with him in that sense.†204
Page me43.217

I fear I cannot do much for the new paper contemplated.†283 At all events, I shall try my best. Cowell Stepney will never advance £12,000. He is a well-meaning fool who fritters away his means in a most grotesque way. The Social Economist, a most stupid publication by old Holyoake, who is his own Cromwell — lives upon Stepney's pocket. There is no sham philanthropical pie he has not his hand, or rather his pocket, in. So, if you want him to come out on a larger scale, he has neither the will nor the power to do so.

Page Break me43.218
Page me43.218

Our International makes great strides in Germany. Our new plan, proposed by myself, to allow only individual membership, and sell at 1d the cards, on whose back our principles are printed in German, French and English — works well. Jung becomes every day more and more a little master. The unction, affectation, and self-importance with which he drops his golden words and spins his long narrative yarn, grow really insupportable. So Dupont told him, adding that he (Jung) was even given, while speaking, to the habitude of putting his hands in his pockets and making jingle his purse. But he is really not so bad as that.
Page me43.218

The old acquaintance of mine — the Russian Bakunin — had started a little nice conspiracy against the International. Having fallen out with and seceded from, the Ligue de la Paix et de la Liberté, on their last Berne Congress,†284 he entered the Romande Section of our Association at Geneva. He very soon inveigled brave old Becker,†a always anxious for action, for something stirring, but of no very critical cast of mind, an enthusiast like Garibaldi, easily led away. Well, Bakunin hatched the plan of L'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste, which was to form at the same time a branch of our International, and a new independent International Association 'with the special mission to elaborate the higher philosophical etc. principles'†b of the proletarian movement, and, in point of fact, would, by a clever trick, have placed our society under the guidance and supreme initiative of the Russian Bakunin. The way in which they set to business, was quite characteristic. They sent their new programme,†257 with old Becker's name at the head of the signatures — and they sent emissaries too — behind our back, to Paris, Brussels, etc. Only in the last moment, they communicated the documents to the London General Council. By a formal judgment†c we annulled and stifled the Muscovite nursling. All our branches approved the decision. Of course, old Becker bears me now a grudge (and so does Schily on his account), but with all my personal friendship for Becker I could not allow this first attempt at disorganising our society to succeed.

Page me43.218
Has Dupont told you that gallant Vésinier has been expulsed from the illustrious French Branch as a calumniator vile and base?†a En revanche,†b he has become the acknowledged hero of La Cigale, which has openly turned against 'l'équivoque Conseil Général à Londres et ses acolytes à Bruxelles'.†c

Page Break me43.219
Page me43.219
And now, my dear children, farewell, kiss little Fouchtra†d in my name, and remember

Old Nick

Page me43.219
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

155
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.219
[Manchester,] 17 February 1869

Dear Moor,
I shall have the report†281 READY for you by next Tuesday,†e though I don't know what interests you mainly. Enclosed is a letter from Lugau.†280
Page me43.219
Best thanks for the Westbury story.†f I return, enclosed, the letter to Borkheim. I shall ask my SHAREBROKER about it.
Page me43.219
Enclosed is the extract made by the illustrious Gaudissart†g about Bakunin,†285 together with annotations. You see that the main strong passages, which he quoted to us in Russian, only exist in his imagination. Still, the Pan-Slavism is really spread rather too thickly, in particular the threats against the Poles are significant. And the dissolution of the Russian Empire is qualified by the fact that Great Russia should still become the centre of the Slav confederation.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.219
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.220

156
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me43.220
[London,] 17 February 1869

Dear Jung,
Enclosed — the German.†a
Page me43.220
The letter from Lafargue to you, and letter to Stepney. I think it would be better not to deliver the latter, but do send Stepney enclosed Programme.†b He will probably contribute something.†283
Page me43.220
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.220
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

157
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.220
Manchester, 21 February 1869

Dear Moor,

Thanks very much for the pipe, which will be tried out right away this evening.
Page me43.220

Here is the report.†281 The things themselves I shall return to you tomorrow. Such miners' guilds, taken over from mediaeval times — the humbug of the Middle Ages still clings to them in their 'accoutrements and parade rules, mining festivals and church parades' — still operate in all German mines.
Page me43.220

Since Liebknecht's sheet†c is, after all, the gazette for these Lugauans, you might send the report on to Wilhelm for translation, once you have read it, but on the explicit condition that it is not spread over more than 2 nos. Otherwise it is no use. He can send the original back to you if you need it again.

Page Break me43.221
Page me43.221

I hear from Wehner that the bad behaviour of the Prussian police in Hanover is becoming steadily worse; letters opened every day, particularly those of Hanoverian officers who have entered the service of Saxony. But, of course, what does one expect Stieber to do with the 400,000 thalers of secret funds that the Prussian Chamber voted him from the ex-princes' income!†36

Your
F. E.

Page me43.221
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

158
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.221
[London,] 24 February 1869

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS for the REPORT.†281 It is transparently clear. I have changed nothing, except to strike out the final sentence (or rather some words of it). Yesterday read out in the Central Council.†73 Adopted. Will be sent first to The Times (or rather taken there by Eccarius). If they don't take it, then to The Daily News. Then the English press cutting will be sent to Zukunft, Social-Demokrat and Wilhelm.†a The POOR DEVILS of Lugau will have the great satisfaction of being mentioned in the English press.

Page me43.221
Enclosed RESOLUTIONS,†b etc., 6 in all. The circumstances are as follows. The resolution of the Congress (Brussels)†138 obliged us to have the Brussels resolutions printed.†226 Using the excuse that the Geneva resolutions form part of the PLATFORM, we have printed, at the same time, part of what was tabled at the Geneva congress†143 by the London Central Council and adopted by the Geneva congress, omitting the amendments, etc., proposed by the French in Geneva and also adopted — rubbishy stuff. Thus, this portion is written by me. On the other hand, I had no part in drafting the 1868 RESOLUTIONS. The only phrase from me verbatim is the FIRST CONSIDERING 'ON THE EFFECTS OF MACHINERY'.†a

Page Break me43.222
Page me43.222
That Bakunin should lay claim to the 'Slav' brothers in Courland and Livonia is great. Neither are his CLAIMS ON Silesia bad.†b
Page me43.222
What about Foster, EXCHANGES?†c
Page me43.222
Meissner is a fine fellow; I sent him, a few days before your visit to London,†286 a copy of Louis Bonaparte.†d Asked for immediate notification.†84 No word yet.
Page me43.222
Wilhelm remains unchangeably the same. He wrote to me that he had sent 50 or 60 copies†e to Kugelmann, but Kugelmann in fact has received only 6 copies!
Page me43.222
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.222
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

159
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.222
Manchester, 25 February 1869

Dear Moor,

I have just sent Borkheim a CHEQUE for £162.10, of which £100 is to pay off his advance and £62.10 is for you, which makes, together with the £25 brought to you, the sum of £87.10 = 1/4 of £350. At the beginning of March, or as soon as I possibly can in March, you will get a further £87.10, then again at the beginning of July, etc.

Page Break me43.223
Page me43.223
I hope the English press will take the report,†281 but I am firmly convinced that it will not, and that, in the last resort, only The Bee-Hive will remain. At best the fellows will make huge cuts.
Page me43.223
I have not yet read the resolutions.†226 But at first glance one is surprised that the 1867 Lausanne resolutions are not reprinted also.
Page me43.223
NB. about the money: I only had the choice of sending it through Borkheim or else in some other way, which would cause gossip here in the office; I preferred the lesser evil. In future this will naturally not happen again.
Page me43.223
The final sentence in the report†a was, of course, aimed only at Liebknecht's sheet†b and the public.
Page me43.223
Foster ON EXCHANGES is being sent to you today by GLOBE PARCEL EXPRESS, since the BOOKPOST is not certain enough for an irreplaceable book. If you have not received it by Saturday†c morning, you must immediately complain to GLOBE PARCEL EXPRESS, 150 Cheapside or 150 Leadenhall STREET. Best you should return it the same way. Even by MAIL TRAIN, the GLOBE is much the cheapest way to send larger consignments of books.
Page me43.223
Regarding the copies, I would immediately haul Wilhelm over the coals, and categorically demand information. The same with Meissner. The fellow has obviously had second thoughts, but since Eichhoff is ready to print, he must decide oui ou non.†d
Page me43.223
Nothing but rain here.
Page me43.223
Apropos, I have written to Borkheim about Bakunin†84 that he should raise the question as to whether it is in any way possible for us Westerners to cooperate with this Pan-Slav pack while the fellows preach their Slav supremacy; he will probably read this to you tomorrow†285 when you collect the money — but, in addition, I told him he should discuss the matter with you.
Page me43.223
Best greetings to the household.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.223

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.224

160
MARX TO ENGELS†34
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.224
London, 1 March 1869
Enclosed 2 Lanternes and 1 Réveil

DEAR FRED,

THANKS for the MONEY. Paid out by Borkheim on Saturday.†a He read me your letter†84 and then his answer. He is very proud supposedly to have been able to prove that you muddle up genders (which apparently often happens with you).
Page me43.224

Ditto received Foster on Saturday evening. The book is indeed important for its time. First, because Ricardo's theory is fully developed in it, and better than in Ricardo — on money, rate of exchange, etc.†b Second, because you can see here how those jackasses, BANK OF ENGLAND, COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY,†287 the theoreticians racked their brains over the problem: ENGLAND DEBTOR TO IRELAND. Despite the fact that the rate of exchange is always against Ireland, and money is exported from Ireland to England. Foster solves the puzzle for them: it is the depreciation of Irish paper money. In fact, two years earlier than him (1802), Blake had fully explained this difference between the nominal and the real rate of exchange, about which, incidentally, Petty†288 had said everything necessary — but after him this business was forgotten once again.
Page me43.224

The Irish amnesty†289 is the paltriest of its kind ever seen. D'abord,†c most of those amnestied had almost served the term after which all PENAL SERVITUDE MEN are released on TICKETS OF LEAVE. And second, the chief ringleaders have been kept inside 'because' Fenianism†86 is of 'American' origin, and thus all the more criminal. It is precisely for this reason that YANKEE-IRISHMEN like Costello are released and the ANGLO-IRISH are kept under lock and key.
Page me43.224

If ever a mountain gave birth to a mouse, it was this ministry OF ALL TALENTS,†290 indeed in every respect.
Page me43.224

I sent you earlier the report of Pollock and Knox†d (the same lousy London police magistrate, a former Times man, who so distinguished himself in the Hyde Park affair) on the treatment of Irish 'CONVICTS' in England. One of the 'CONVICTS' has exposed, in The Irishman, John Bull's unprecedented infamies and the lies of that blockhead Knox.

Page Break me43.225
Page me43.225
Since Laura's health is not quite as good as we thought, I had intended to go to Paris for a few days next week. I had written to Lafargue about it.†a As a result, an unknown man, i.e., a police agent, asked him whether Monsieur Marx had arrived yet. He had for him 'une communication à faire'.†b How well the inviolability of the post is preserved in Paris — still! Now I am not going.
Page me43.225
Lafargue has been excused 3 of the 5 examinations (French), and received permission, or rather instructions, to take the 2 remaining ones in Strasbourg. Meanwhile, he appears to me to be too absorbed in POLITICS, which can become nasty, since his friends are a lot of Blanquists. I shall warn him. He should pass his examinations first.
Page me43.225
The coterie†c he keeps you can see from the enclosed prospectus.†283 What they lack is £250 security. This has a good side to it. It has emancipated Lafargue from Moilin, AS FOLLOWS:

'J'avais parlé à Moilin pour le cautionnement; il avait promis de le donner, mais au dernier moment il a refusé, si on ne voulait le nommer rédacteur en chef. Il n'a pas dit la chose, mais il l'a laissé entrevoir. Tridon m'a dit: Moilin est un diplomate, il a d'ailleurs la tête de Fouché; ainsi il [ne] faut jamais se fâcher avec lui: il faut le sonder, savoir ce qu'il veut, pour se tenir toujours en garde envers lui.'†d

Page me43.225
With regard to my book against Proudhon,†e Lafargue writes:

'Blanqui en a un exemplaire et le prête à tous ses amis. Ainsi Tridon, l'a lu et a été heureux de voir de quelle façon il Moro a roulé Proudhon. Blanqui a la plus grande estime pour vous... Il a trouvé pour Proudhon le mot le plus joli que je connaisse, il l'appelle un hygromètre.'†f

Page me43.225
After John Bull had compromised himself so nicely with the concessions he made in the Alabama Treaty,†291 Uncle Sam has now kicked him in the behind. This is entirely the work of the Irish in America, as I have convinced myself from the Yankee papers.

Page Break me43.226
Perhaps Prof. Beesly will realise that the Irish in the United States are not = 0.
Page me43.226
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.226

As a comparative philologist, you may find forms of interest to you in the following extract from an early 16th†a-century Scottish chronicle†292 about the death of the DUKE OF Rothesay (son OF KING Robert III):

'Be quhais deith, succedit gret displeseir to hir son, David Duk of Rothesay: for, during hir life, he wes haldin in virtews and honest occupatioun: eftir hir deith' (namely Queen Annabella) 'he began to rage in all maner of insolence: and fulyeit virginis, matronis, and nunnis, be his unbridillit lust. At last, King Robert, informit of his young and insolent maneris, send letteris to his brothir, the Duk of Albany, to intertene his said son, the Duk of Rothesay, and to leir him honest and civill maneris. The Duk of Albany, glaid of thir writtingis, tuk the Duk of Rothesay betwix Dunde and Sanct Androis, and brocht him to Falkland, and inclusit him in the tour theirof, but ony meit or drink. It is said, ane woman, havand commiseratioun on this Duk, leit meill fall daun throw the loftis of the toure: be quhilkis, his life wes certane dayis savit. This woman, fra it wes knawin, wes put to deith. On the same maner, ane othir woman gaif him milk of hir paup, throw ane lang reid; and wes slane with gret cruelte, fra it wes knawin. Than wes the Duk destitute of all mortall supplie; and brocht, finalie, to sa miserable and hungry appetite, that he eit, nocht allanerlie the filth of the toure quhare he wes, bot his awin fingaris: to his gret marterdome. His body wes beryit in Lundonis, and kithit miraklis mony yeris eftir; quhil, at last, King James the First began to punis his slayaris: and fra that time furth, the miraklis ceissit.'

Page me43.226

The Times does not seem to be publishing the REPORT.†281 But as dernière instance†b there is The Morning Advertiser, which publishes everything out of stupidity.

Page me43.226

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.227

161

MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.227

[London,] 2 March 1869

DEAR FRED,

You must either send me the booklet from Lugau — or, better still, send me in German the paragraphs of the rules that you quote.†281
Page me43.227
I shall translate the stuff myself, since I do not regard Wilhelm†a as competent and also because I do not wish to hand over the affair to him alone.†b

Your
K. M.

Page me43.227
Apropos. A PAMPHLET, WRITTEN BY A PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT, ADDRESSED TO MR Gladstone†c states that at least 1/10 of the LIFE ASSURANCE CO'S (the whole BUSINESS IN LIFE ASSURANCE has a nominal capital of £100 million) is bankrupt and is NOT WORTH THE PAPER UPON WHICH THEY PRINT THEIR ADVERTISEMENTS.
Page me43.227
What will the bourgeois gentlemen say to this, those gentlemen who were so very very delighted about the PROSPECTIVE BANKRUPTCY (in 20 years or so) of the TRADES UNIONS?
Page me43.227
They will keep their mouths shut.

Page me43.227
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.228

162
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.228
London, 3 March 1869

DEAR FRED,
Iterum Crispinus!†a
Page me43.228
Our valued Wilhelm†b has his own PROCEEDINGS.
Page me43.228
First, he reprints from the Revue der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung Eccarius' article about 'Tailoring in London',†c without asking Eccarius and without quoting the Revue as his source. Then he writes to Eccarius that he would like to print the article as a pamphlet. Therewith Eccarius replies that, in this case, a 2nd CHAPTER is necessary, since the conditions have changed completely over the last 19 years, something that Wilhelm had absolutely overlooked in his copying craze.

Page me43.228
Then a second move by Wilhelm:
He writes to Eccarius: he should send him the issue of the Revue containing your article on the 'German Peasant War'.
Page me43.228
So Wilhelm wanted to reprint your article without your prior knowledge and once again without citing the Revue.
Page me43.228
Luckily, Eccarius informed me yesterday evening at the Central Council. I told him I would write to you about the case and, in the meantime, Eccarius should send him nothing.
Page me43.228
With regards to the stuff itself, I have a SPARE COPY I could send to Wilhelm. And I believe — even supposing we should later publish our assorted articles together — that publication in Wilhelm's sheet would do us no harm and the immediate effect of the publication would be very good.
Page me43.228
But, UNDER ALL CIRCUMSTANCES, Wilhelm should not be allowed to publish the article as an original contribution for him, instead of as a reprint from the Revue.
Page me43.228
Write me without delay your arbitrium.†d
Page me43.228
Another curiosity. You may have seen in the Augsburg

Page Break me43.229
Allgemeine Zeitung that both of us figure as contributors to a workers' paper to be published by Oberwinder in Vienna.†a
Page me43.229
The facts are as follows:
About 4 weeks before New Year's Day, Oberwinder had Wilhelm write to me that he wanted to publish an almanac and needed my biography for it. I should send what was necessary to Oberwinder. I sent simplement†b the FACTS and a few DOCUMENTS (Cologne Trial,†c etc.).†84 Heard nothing further of the matter.
Page me43.229
Now, SOME WEEKS SINCE, Oberwinder writes to me that nothing has come of the almanac, but he will place the stuff in a paper he is going to publish. About 6-7,000 subscribers are already assured. Requested me as contributor. I forgot to answer him; shall do it today.†d
Page me43.229
Incidentally I would regard it as a good thing if we had a footing in Vienna.
Page me43.229
Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.229

Apropos. What do the German commercial oxen understand by:

1. PRIMAGE?
2. Courtage for the rembours?†e

Page me43.229

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

163

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.229
Manchester, 3 March 1869

Dear Moor,

You see how right I was to dissuade you from taking a trip to Paris under any circumstances. It would be madness to put oneself in the hands of those scoundrels, particularly since nobody enquires about you and the lois de sûreté†293 are still in force. Let Lafargue go to Strasbourg as soon as possible and take his examinations; once that is over, he will be able to take some liberties. The fact that he has emancipated himself from Moilin is of enormous value; this Jesuit would certainly have got him into trouble. What Lafargue writes about Blanqui is very nice.†a

Page Break me43.230

Page me43.230

Moore tells me that Beesly has written an article on the social question in the new Fortnightly which reaches the maximum confusion.†b

Page me43.230

The only thing linguistically new for me in the old Scottish passage†292 was the participium praesentis havand, having, — showing that this form still existed in Scotland at the beginning of the 16th†c century, when it had long disappeared in England.

Page me43.230

I really did make the blunder in Russian. I have pretty well forgotten the Russian declensions.†d

Page me43.230

The Lugau material†281 will be returned today by BOOK POST. Since I no longer know which passages I quoted, I cannot indicate them for you; however, I made a sort of index to the pamphlets, which is attached, and you may be able to see from this where the passages might be.
Page me43.230
What is the pamphlet against the LIFE ASSURANCE CO., called?†e We really must get hold of it.
Page me43.230
So Wilhelmchen appealed to you against Schweitzer.†294 This will make a fine story, since Schweitzer cannot be caught so easily. The row is going to be fun; don't you get the Social-Demokrat any more? Just now, Eichhoff should keep us properly au courant.†f In the next few days I shall send you some articles that he (certainly nobody else) wrote in the Zukunft.†g
Page me43.230
In the meantime, in Essen the Social-Democrat Hasenclever, also supported by Liebknecht, has been elected with a majority of 960 votes over what the Landrat†h and the National-Liberal candidate†i received together, and in Hanover (I believe Celle) there are also prospects for getting someone in.†295
Page me43.230
Incidentally, Wilhelm appears to be bestirring himself more and to be having some success in Saxony. If the jackass would only abandon his stupid South-German-federalist and his Guelphic concerns,†j he could accomplish something despite his thick-headedness, in view of the mistrust of Schweitzer that rules amongst the leaders of the Lassalleans; for Schweitzer's bad conscience disarms him too, when things come to a climax. But with his People's Party†38 and his mania for restoring thrones, he'll have no success in dangling carrots before north German workers.

Page Break me43.231
Page me43.231
The odd thing is that he suddenly wants to go to Berlin, that is to say, admits that he can, without danger.
Page me43.231
Incidentally, I cannot see how you, as the GENERAL COUNCIL, could declare yourselves competent on this question — even if both parties agreed — unless they both also declared themselves willing to subject themselves to the arbitration verdict against the organisation and management of the TRADES UNIONS, etc.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.231
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

164
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.231
London, 3 March 1869

Dear Kugelmann,

The damned photographer†a has once again been leading me by the nose for weeks, and has still not supplied additional COPIES. But I shall not delay this reply longer because of this.

Page me43.231

With regard to Herr Vogt, I wished to make sure of those copies which could still be saved from Liebknecht's hands (I had sent him 300 from London to Berlin, i.e., all those still left) in case they were needed. I therefore took the liberty of ordering them to be stored at your place. But Örindur, solve for me this mystery of nature!†b

Page me43.231

Liebknecht sent you just 6 COPIES, but announced to me that he had sent 50 COPIES. Will you please ask him for the answer to this riddle!†c

Page Break me43.232

Page me43.232

Quételet is now too old for one still to make any sort of experiment with him.†296 He rendered great services in the past by demonstrating that even the apparently casual incidents of social life possess an inner necessity through their periodic recurrence and their periodic average incidence. But he was never successful in interpreting this necessity.†297 And he made no progress, but simply extended the material for his observations and calculations. He is today no further on than he was before 1830.

Page me43.232

It will probably take until the summer before I am finished with Vol. II.†41 Then — with the manuscript — I shall come to Germany with my daughter†a and see you then. Or, to be more precise, shall descend on you.

Page me43.232

In France — a very interesting movement in progress.

Page me43.232

The Parisians are once again really studying their recent revolutionary past, to prepare themselves for the pending new revolutionary business. First, the origin of the Empire — then the coup d'état of December. This had been entirely forgotten, just as the reaction in Germany has been able to wipe out memories of 1848/49 completely.

Page me43.232

That is why Ténot's books about the coup d'état in Paris and the provinces†b aroused such enormous interest that they rapidly went through 10 editions. They were followed by dozens of other books on the same period. C'était la rage,†c and this soon became a speculative business for the publishers.

Page me43.232

These writings came from the opposition — Ténot is an homme du Siècle (I mean the liberal bourgeois paper, not our century). All the liberal and illiberal rogues belonging to the official opposition promoted this mouvement. Also the republican democrats, people like Delescluze, for example, who was formerly Ledru-Rollin's adjutant and now, as republican patriarch, edits Réveil in Paris.

Page me43.232

Until now everybody has been indulging in these posthumous revelations, or rather reminiscences — everybody who was not Bonapartist.

Page me43.232

But then came le revers de la medaille.†d

Page me43.232

First, the French Government itself got the renegade Hippolyte Castille to publish Les Massacres de Juin 1848. This was a blow in the face for Thiers, Falloux, Marie, Jules Favre, Jules Simon, Pelletan, etc., in short, the chiefs of what is called in France 'l'Union Libérale',†298 who wish to perform a sleight of hand with the next elections, the infamous old rogues.

Page Break me43.233

Page me43.233

Then came the Socialist Party, which 'unmasked' the opposition and the old-style republican democrats.

Page me43.233

Including Vermorel: Les Hommes de 1848 and L'Opposition.

Page me43.233

Vermorel is a Proudhonist.

Page me43.233

Last came the Blanquists, for example, G. Tridon: Gironde et Girondins.

Page me43.233

So the whole historic witches' brew is simmering.

Page me43.233

When shall we have got this far?

Page me43.233

To show you how well the French police are served:

I intended to go to Paris next week to see my daughter.

Page me43.233

Last Saturday†a a police agent enquired of Lafargue whether Mons. Marx had arrived yet. He had a commission for him.†b FOREWARNED!

Page me43.233

My heartiest greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen.

Page me43.233

How is Madame Tenge?

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.233
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 13, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

165
MARX TO HEINRICH OBERWINDER IN VIENNA
Page me43.233
[Draft]
London, 3 MARCH 1869
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.†c

Dear Sir,

You must forgive my delayed reply to your letter of 14 February, resulting from my indisposition.†d
Page me43.233

I do not need to assure you that I am greatly interested in the workers' movement in Vienna.†e If I could dispose freely of my time and my strength, I would immediately stand at your disposal as a contributor to your paper. My ability to work is, however, continually interrupted by illness. The little leisure left me after completing the second volume of my work Capital†41 is absorbed by the business of the International Working Men's Association.

Page Break me43.234
Page me43.234

Thus, I cannot offer the prospect of contributions from me in the near future.
Page me43.234

I remain, with best respects†a

Karl Marx

Page me43.234
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

166

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.234
Manchester, 4 March 1869

Dear Moor,

I must leave it quite up to you to do what you think best about the article.†b For my part, I do not think that the article would have any sort of effect in Liebknecht's paper†c in instalments of 1 or 2 columns, since it would thus be spread over two years. On the other hand, if he wanted to print it cheaply for the workers, this would be different and could have an impact. Since he is now involved in a row with Schweitzer,†294 I would suggest to him that he publish the last section of my pamphlet on military questions†d in his sheet, or ask Meissner the price at which he would allow him to sell the remainder (he once asked me about this through Moore, but as I have had no occasion to write to him since, this too has remained unanswered). If, however, he should reprint the article, he must indicate the source. I myself have not got a copy and you cannot part with yours either; we must keep one, after all!

Page Break me43.235

Your
F. E.

Page me43.235
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

167
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.235
[London,] 5 March 1869

DEAR FRED,

The enclosed little document arrived yesterday (though dated 27 February).†299 You must send it back as soon as you have read it, since I have to lay it before the COUNCIL on TUESDAY NEXT.†a The gentlemen of the 'Alliance' have taken a long time to produce this opus.
Page me43.235

In fact, we would rather they had kept their 'unnumbered legions' in France, Spain and Italy to themselves.
Page me43.235
Bakunin thinks: if we approve his 'programme radical' he can trumpet it forth and compromise us tant soit peu.†b If we declare ourselves against it, we shall be denounced as counterrevolutionaries. Moreover: If we admit it, he will see to it that, at the Congress in Basle, he is seconded by some RIFF-RAFF. I think the answer should be along the following LINES:†300
Page me43.235
According to para. 1 of the Rules, every workers' society that is 'AIMING AT THE SAME END; VIZ., THE PROTECTION, ADVANCEMENT AND COMPLETE EMANCIPATION OF THE WORKING CLASSES', is to be admitted.†c
Page me43.235
As the stage of development reached by different sections of the workers in the same country and by the working class in different countries necessarily varies considerably, the actual movement also necessarily expresses itself in very diverse theoretical forms.

Page Break me43.236
Page me43.236
The community of action the International Working Men's Association is calling into being, the exchange of ideas by means of the different organs of the sections in all countries and, finally, the direct discussions at the general congresses would also gradually create a common theoretical programme for the general workers' movement.
Page me43.236
With regard to the programme of the 'Alliance', therefore, it is not necessary for the General Council to submit it to an examen critique.†a The Council does not need to examine whether it is an adequate scientific expression of the workers' movement. It has only to ask whether the general tendency of the programme is in opposition to the general tendency of the International Working Men's Association — the COMPLETE EMANCIPATION OF THE WORKING CLASSES!
Page me43.236
This reproach might apply to only one phrase in the programme, para. 2: 'elle veut avant tout l'égalisation politique, économique et sociale des classes.†b 'L'égalisation des classes', interpreted literally, is simply another way of saying the 'Harmonie du capital et du travail'†c preached by bourgeois socialists. The final aim of the International Working Men's Association is not the logically impossible 'égalisation des classes', but the historically necessary 'abolition des classes'. From the context in which this phrase appears in the programme, however, it seems to be merely A SLIP OF THE PEN. The General Council has little doubt, therefore, that this phrase, which might lead to serious misunderstanding, will be deleted from the programme.†301
Page me43.236
On this assumption, it is the principle of the International Working Men's Association to leave each section the responsibility for its own programme. There is, therefore, no obstacle to the transformation of the sections of the Alliance into sections of the International Working Men's Association.

Page me43.236

As soon as this has taken place, the General Council must, in accordance with the Rules, be supplied with a dénombrement†d of the newly adhering sections, according to country, residence and numbers.

Page me43.236

This last point — the census of their legions — will, of course, upset the gentlemen. When you return the letter, tell me what you want changed in this draft reply.

Page me43.236

Quoad†e Liebknecht, I have given further thought to the matter†f. Publication in the lousy little sheet must not be allowed.

Page Break me43.237

Publication as a pamphlet by Wilhelm is a DELUSION. Should I write to Eichhoff asking whether his brother†a would publish it at a reasonable price? Could you, in this case, bestow your fee upon the GENERAL COUNCIL, which is greatly in need of money? I still have a copy of the 6th issue containing the Peasant War (apart from my bound Revue,†b which is complete). I could send this to Berlin.†302 Please reply by return.

Page me43.237

Moreover, Wilhelm should reprint the last section of the pamphlet on military questions.†c The transaction with Meissner (in which Wilhelm would have to show his cash! — anyway Meissner is very TICKLISH UPON SUCH POINTS) is impossible.

Page me43.237

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.237

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

168
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.237
Manchester, 7 March 1869

Dear Moor,

The answer†300 for the Russian†d and his retinue is exactly as it should be. Even in their own sommation,†e the fellows do not dare to call upon you to make the programme your own; they simply wish indirectly to induce you to make a theoretical criticism. A stupid Russian trap into which people in this country will surely not fall. Apart from this, the people's retreat is complete, and nothing more could be desired. The about-face by which the fellows are being compelled to allow you to review their forces is very amusing, and will act like a bucket of cold water over their phrase-mongering heads.

Page me43.237

As for the Peasant War it must, I believe, be offered first to Meissner†f for decency's sake; and if he is not interested in printing it as a popular, cheap pamphlet, there will still be time with Eichhoff. You will have to write to him about The 18th Brumaire, which you could do at the same time. If Meissner does not get on with The 18th Brumaire, or is scared, then steps must be taken and the thing given to Eichhoff.†a Otherwise time will be wasted and the opportunity lost.

Page Break me43.238

Page me43.238

I discovered a copy of The 18th Brumaire at Charles',†b and immediately confiscated it. I read it through again and immediately saw that the book must appear in French without delay.†303 That will have quite a different effect from just German, and will immediately make you a name amongst the French, which will at once ensure the translation of your book.†c See who you might get to do this and, in any case, take steps along these LINES. Printed in Brussels, it would get to France en masse.

Page me43.238

Before the Peasant War is sent off, send me the copy so that I can correct the misprints, see whether a preface, etc., is necessary, or some notes for the philistines. I am not quite sure whether the Spanish Bergenroth is Frau Jung's Bergenroth. I think I heard the latter had gone to America.

Page me43.238

Ad vocem†d Oberwinder†e: did you ever write to the Angerstein who approached us previously?†304 The fellow still has some sort of paper†f in Vienna. It would be good to avoid an unnecessary squabble with Oberwinder; Wilhelm will have to inform us of the relations between these two and what Angerstein, who was also recommended by him, is now doing.

Page me43.238

PRIMAGE is unknown to me in exchange rates and exchange practice. In freightage, it is a supplement to the usual freight, i.e., you pay 36s. — per ton freight and 10% PRIMAGE, that means 39s.6d. If you quote me the context, I can probably explain.

Page me43.238

Courtage for the rembours is also a very sloppily-worded phrase, so the whole passage would be useful here, too. It probably means courtage, i.e., BROKERAGE for calling in from the drawer the sum of a bill that has gone to protest.†g

Page me43.238

The Augsburg [Allgemeine Zeitung] is again full of the information on the International in Geneva. Clossmann appears to have approached Becker.†h Quite useful.

Page me43.238

How are things in Basle? Becker has written 3-4 pamphlets about all these things, but apparently never sends any here.†305

Page Break me43.239
Page me43.239
For a change, Schorlemmer has once again burned his face; a bottle of bromic-phosphorus he was preparing exploded in front of his nose. He looks good, but has otherwise suffered no damage.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.239
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

169
MARX TO ENGELS†180
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.239
London, 14 MARCH 1869

DEAR FRED,
From the enclosed letter from Meissner you can see how things look with the Louis Bonaparte.†306 Since Meissner told me directly (personally) that he only publishes pamphlets occasionally, now and then, in order to oblige, something of which you need not be aware, I would prefer you to write to him direct about the Peasant War. If nothing emerges, I shall write to Eichhoff†a, with whom I maintain 'international' relations.
Page me43.239
Liebknecht has the gift of gathering the stupidest people in Germany around him. Exempli causa†b the author of 'Die demokratischen Ziele und die deutschen Arbeiter'†c. This stuff can only be read, even to oneself, in south German patois. This dunderhead requests the workers to rid him of Bismarck and then promises to provide them with 'full freedom of movement' and other socialist achievements! Horreur!†d
Page me43.239
The man from Zukunft†e is infinitely more cunning and sharp in the north German way. But with him, too, the UPSHOT is that the workers should pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the democratic gentlemen and should not, for the time being, indulge in such pursuits as TRADES UNIONS. If these gentlemen are such hot-headed friends of direct revolutionary action, why don't they set the example, instead of writing careful and reserved articles for Zukunft! Do they expect such stuff to awaken revolutionary passion? That won't catch anybody!

Page Break me43.240

Page me43.240

The reply to the Genevans†a has been sent off. In the French text I kept the tone still icier and passablement ironique.†b Luckily, this was not noticed by the English, who naturally only know my English translation.
Page me43.240

Apart from the official communication†299 about which I told you, the gentlemen also sent a 4-page private letter to Eccarius, according to which a direct breach had only been avoided thanks to the EFFORTS of Becker, Bakunin, and Perret, author of the document. Their 'revolutionary' programme had had more effect in some weeks in Italy, Spain, etc., than that of the International Working Men's Association had in years. If we should reject their 'revolutionary programme', we would [produce] a separation between the countries with a 'revolutionary' workers' movement (these are listed as France, where they have all of 2 correspondents, Switzerland(!), Italy — where the workers, apart from those who belong to us, are simply a tail to Mazzini — and Spain, where there are more clerics than workers) and those with a more gradual development of the working class (viz., England, Germany, the United States and Belgium). Thus, a separation between the volcanic and plutonic workers' movement on the one hand, and the AQUEOUS movement on the other.
Page me43.240

That the Swiss should represent the revolutionary type is really amusing.
Page me43.240

Old Becker must have become very stupid if he really believes that Bakunin has invented a 'programme'.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.240
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.241

170
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.241

[Manchester,] 15 March 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed, Meissner returned.†306 Today only the following:

Page me43.241

Even in the past I considered that Bonaparte†a really ought to be printed together with your 3 articles in the Revue about the period from February 1848 to 1850†307; but I thought that it would cause too much loss of time. Since, however, Meissner himself is delaying, I would still do this now. This will make the whole thing more voluminous — ca. 10-12 printed sheets — and more complete.

Page me43.241

If you write to Meissner right away, I am sure there will be enough time.

Page me43.241

More tomorrow.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.241

Lizzie is in bed with bronchitis and a bad cold; somewhat better today.

Page me43.241

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

171
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.241
Manchester, 18 March 1869

Dear Moor,

I am writing to Meissner about the Peasant War.†b

Page me43.241

Even according to Social-Demokrat (which I'll send you back in a couple of days), Wilhelm†a appears to have kept ahead in Saxony.†b On the other hand, you have to grant the Lassalleans that they are developing quite a different sort of activity and know how to make ten times more out of the limited means than the People's Party does.†38 Even when Schweitzer was imprisoned, the Social-Demokrat did not publish such idiocies as Wilhelm does.

Page Break me43.242

Page me43.242

I wonder what Wilhelm will say about the fact that, in Celle the Hanoverian particularists, defeated in the first round of polling, voted in the second round for Planck, the National-Liberal Bismarckian, and thus got him into the Reichstag instead OF Yorck, the worker. But that does not matter to Wilhelm.
Page me43.242

Huxley's famous article in the Fortnightly†248 in fact contains almost nothing except the joke about Comtism. The Comtists are said to be very furious about this, and intend to publish a thunderous reply, as a geological friend†c in London writes to Moore.
Page me43.242

What do you think of my suggestion about printing the articles from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung†307 before Bonaparte? And about the French version?†d
Page me43.242

Many thanks for the Castille.†e Only yesterday was I able to start reading it. Clearly a crypto-Bonapartist factional publication. However, it is enormous progress that the June insurrection is now generally seen for what it was.†217
Page me43.242

Tony Moilin†f is really charming. This homme de†g 1869, who cheerfully declares that nobody should earn less than 2,400 fr.! I laughed myself half sick over this naïve doctor with extraordinary pretensions. If Lafargue were still to think anything of him, his wife would laugh at him.
Page me43.242

I wanted to write to you about quite a long story, but can't recollect it at the moment. I have to go home now to hear what Gumpert has said about Lizzie, who has been in bed since Sunday.†h Your F. E.

Page me43.242
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.243

172
MARX TO ENGELS†56
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.243
[London,] 20 March 1869

DEAR FRED,

We all hope that, in your next letter, you will be sending us better news about MRS Lizzie's state of health. Tussy especially asks you to extend our deepest sympathy to her. It's damned awful weather. Jennychen can't get rid of her cold, and for the past few days I have been cold-wild and cough-confused.
Page me43.243
Next week (Friday or Saturday†a) the children are going to Paris to the Lafargues. The business with Laura was this: she had a fall 2 or 3 weeks before her accouchement. As a result of this fall, she had to keep to her bed until 1-2 weeks ago and only with difficulty avoided danger.
Page me43.243
I intend to have myself naturalised as an Englishman,†308 so I can travel to Paris safely. Without such a journey the French edition of my book†309 will never materialise. My presence there is absolutely necessary. Under Palmerston's law you can, if you wish, slough off the Englishman again after 6 months. The law provides no protection for the naturalised person with regard to illegalities committed in his country of birth before naturalisation, if he should return to that country. With this exception, a naturalised person is on the same footing as any Englishman vis-à-vis foreign GOVERNMENTS. I really cannot see why I should not visit Paris without the permission of M. Bonaparte, if I have the means to do so.
Page me43.243
My best thanks to Schorlemmer for the 2ND EDITION of Chemie.†b Tomorrow, as a Sunday recreation, I shall start re-reading the 2nd part, the organic chemistry (and assume that this is where the changes are to be sought).
Page me43.243
As regards Louis Bonaparte, I am not in favour of printing the series from the Revue up to 1850 as an introduction†c. On the one hand, I don't wish to give Meissner new excuses for delay. On the other, it would be very easy, by patching in FACTS that emerged later, to revise this section, but there is no hurry. In Brussels, De

Page Break me43.244
Paepe has sought in vain for a French publisher for Louis Bonaparte. For such operations, these gentlemen demand money from the author.
Page me43.244
Blanqui, who is now in Paris, made very good jokes at Lafargue's about Moilin's†a real QUACK NOSTRUM. France, he said, is always ungrateful to its great men. Moilin, for instance, has solved the problem of the century in an unprecedentedly simple manner — and Paris goes about its business as though nothing had happened.
Page me43.244
Castille was a June insurgent, was transported as such to Cayenne, and returned after the general amnesty. He wrote the first edition of his book†b de bonne foi.†c In the meantime, the government bought him, and staged this second edition as the antithesis to Ténot's writings. The changes made are: 1. the tone has become more bourgeois, sometimes smart-alecky. 2. Passages against the men of December†d have been removed. 3. A few quietly apologetic phrases for Bonaparte have been patched in. Despite all this, the fonds†e unchanged, and it remains as you say, a very satisfactory work. It is a very good thing when M. Bonaparte pushes back the writing of history to the period before 2

December. The struggle of the various parties, their mutual: Et tu Brute!†f will help put a stop to the 'revolutionism' of the old scoundrels of 1848 and earlier.
Page me43.244

I sent to Beesly, by city post, WITH A FEW RANDOM NOTES for him to read, Vermorel's pamphlet†g that I also sent you (with the Castille). He sent it back to me with the enclosed note, which is as stupid as it is MAGISTERIAL and arrogant. It appears to me that positive philosophy may be equated with ignorance about everything positive. The other sheet enclosed was sent me by Borkheim for my 'DUTCH RELATIONS'.†h
Page me43.244

Yesterday I found the report on the 'miners' guilds',†i printed in full in the Social-Demokrat of last Wednesday. Whether the Zukunft has taken it I do not know.†281 Possibly the report does not stand at that lofty stage of wisdom that alone can satisfy social policy. I have not yet received Wilhelm for this week.†j
Page me43.244

Apropos. In the very near future there will be a demonstration here for E. Jones. The business is sponsored by the Clerkenwell branch of the quondam REFORM LEAGUE.†228 Their leaders, Weston, Lucraft, etc. are MEMBERS of our GENERAL COUNCIL. The festival committee offered me one of the 5 presidential chairs in Trafalgar Square, from which the masses are to be harangued. I refused the courtesy very politely. What I could not refuse, however, was to promise a small contribution to the demonstration costs ON BEHALF OF MYSELF AND FRIENDS. It must be paid Tuesday NEXT†a If you and Moore want to take a share, it must be done by then.

Page Break me43.245
Page me43.245

Addio.
Your
Moor

who every day resembles more a 'white' washed Moor.

Page me43.245
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

173
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.245
Manchester, 21 March 1869

Dear Moor,

Lizzie's case was pleurisy, which, however, took a remarkably quick course — not till last Tuesday†b was the exudation on the right lung evident, and by this morning it had already vanished completely. She is getting up again today for the first time. Through a remarkable piece of DIVINATION, I diagnosed pleurisy for Gumpert on Sunday,†c he examined her, found nothing, declared it was bronchitis (which was also present), in addition to catarrh in the lungs, and it was naturally rather annoying for him when the pleurisy declared itself after all. I naturally do not claim that it was present when he could not find it.

Page me43.245

POOR Löhrchen†d MUST HAVE HAD A HARD TIME OF IT. Ten weeks in childbed is no joke, and it is good that it is over. When they get there, Tussy and Jenny must give her and Lafargue too my hearty greetings.

Page Break me43.246

Page me43.246

The explanation about Castille was very useful to me. The wisdom of Solomon Beesly returned herewith.†a It is the greatest nonsense. In time, this Comtism will confirm an even stronger version of that remark made by that man from Bonn about the Hegelians: they do not need to know about anything in order to write about everything.

Page me43.246

